Burroughs Wellcome Ready For AZT Work

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Federal approval for prescription use of the first drug shown to prolong the lives of AIDS sufferers was expected and should not lead to any significant changes at the Burroughs Wellcome plant in Greenville that manufactures the pharmaceutical, an official says.

"We had already made some changes," Jim Goes, Greenville plant manager for Burroughs Wellcome, said in an interview today. "Some of this requires special equipment and facilities and that was done some time back in expectation of this approval."

Azidothymidine, better known as AZT, is not represented as a cure for the deadly disease but clinical trials last fall convinced officials it does prolong life and reduce symptoms among some AIDS patients.

Noting that it is the only treatment proven to offer that relief, a Food and Drug Administration advisory panel concluded in January that AZT should be approved despite some serious side effects.

Friday's final FDA approval had been expected for several weeks. The drug, developed by Burroughs Wellcome Co. in the Research Triangle Park, is already being given to 4,500 patients under a special treatment plan approved by the FDA after the clinical trials were so promising.

Company officials scheduled a news conference on the decision for today in Research Triangle Park.

The Greenville plant doesn't expect to hire any new employees despite the FDA approval, according to Goes, who said the decision is the product of long hours and hard work.

"We did add some people awhile back because we've been growing flat out for some time now so there is no need to add any additional people," he said.

"It's something we've all worked toward for a long period of time. It is the culmination of a lot of work. Our people have been working, in many cases, around the clock seven days a week so we're pleased by the approval."

Medical experts are careful to emphasize that AZT is not a cure for AIDS because tests have shown it does not kill the AIDS virus.

How long it may prolong the lives of AIDS sufferers is unknown because no one started taking it until last year. Some people have died even while taking AZT, but a majority have shown marked improvement — to the point of some seriously ill patients being able to return to work and resume other daily activities.

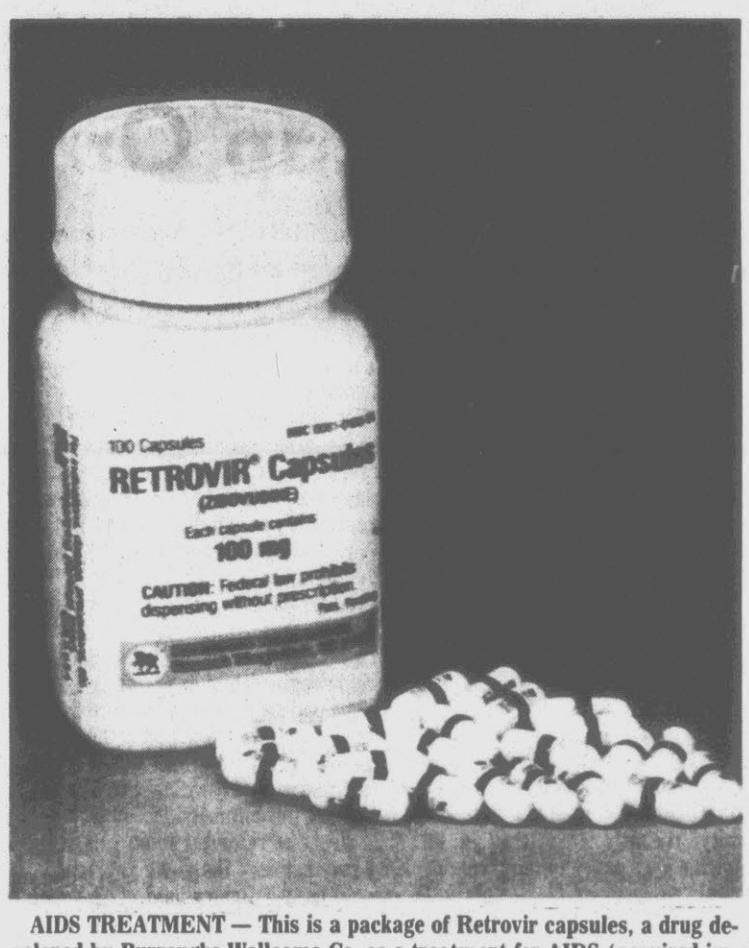

One of the arguments for approving AZT, even though it is not a cure, is that it might keep thousands of patients alive until a cure is found.

Burroughs Wellcome Co. officials told a House subcommittee earlier this month they expect the annual cost of AZT — to be sold under the trade name Retrovir — for a typical patient to range between $7,000 and $10,000.

Company officials have declined to provide details of how they arrived at the price, but said the drug is so expensive mainly because of large costs incurred in developing it and because both the raw materials and the laboratory procedures for refining AZT are very costly.

While acknowledging that AZT is expensive, the company has pointed out that some other rare drugs — including one used to fight rejection of transplanted organs — also are quite costly.

Moreover, they suggest, the annual cost of the drug will be less in many cases than the cost of expensive hospitilization.

AIDS TREATMENT — This is a package of Retrovir capsules, a drug developed by Burroughs Wellcome Co. as a treatment for AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome). Retrovir, also known as ATZ, is not considered a cure for AIDS, but has been shown in tests to prolong the lives of some AIDS victims. (AP Laserphoto)

Iraq Steps Up Air Blitz

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq said its planes bombed two of Iran's offshore oilfields today, stepping up its air blitz against Iran's economic lifeline.

The raids came as alarm grew over Iran's deployment of Chinese-built, anti-ship missiles in the southern end of the Persian Gulf.

President Ali Khamenei of Iran accused the United States today of creating insecurity in the area by sending warships to counter Iran's siting of the missiles at the mouth of the gulf in the Strait of Hormuz.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency quoted Khamenei as saying in Mashhad, northeast Iran: "If we have missiles in our possession this does not means we intend to create insecurity in the region.

"Rather, it is the U.S. presence in the Persian Gulf region which creates insecurity."

Baghdad Radio quoted an Iraqi military spokesman as saying scores of fighter-bombers "shattered" oil platforms at Nowrouz field 35 miles off Iran in two raids at 9 a.m.

A half-hour later, more Iraqi jets set rigs afire in "a destructive raid" on Cyrus field 20 miles south of Nowrouz, the radio reported.

There was no comment from the Tehran government.

Baghdad Radio and IRNA were monitored in Nicosia. Neither side as a rule allows foreign observers into combat zones and independent confirmation is rarely possible of claims made in the 6½-year-old Iran-Iraq war.

Iraqi warplanes attacked Ardeshir oilfield 10 miles south of Nowrouz on Sunday, the first Iraqi air raid on Iranian oil centers this year after an

Eakin To Present Budget Request

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

East Carolina University Chancellor Dr. Richard R. Eakin, who is scheduled to present the school's $202 million 1987-89 budget request to the N.C. General Assembly's Joint Base Budget Committee Thursday, says he's looking forward to the event.

"I'm expected to make a presentation relative to the base budget," Eakin said. "I'm looking forward to the opportunity to meet with members of the Legislature and to share with them some thoughts I have about ECU and the budget for the next biennium."

Chancellors from each of the University of North Carolina system's 16 campuses are expected to go before the committee. Eakin, who became ECU's chancellor March 1, is scheduled to speak to the panel at 8:30 a.m. Thursday.

"I look at it as a special opportunity for me to get to know various people in the Legislature," Eakin said. "I believe it will be an excellent opportunity for me to learn more about the governance of the state of North Carolina."

East Carolina, with recommended appropriations of $100,388,418 for 1987-88 and $101,585,879 for 1988-89, ranked third among the University of North Carolina system's 16 campuses. The UNC Board of Governors approved the system's $2.4 billion budget in October 1986.

Eakin said Gov. Jim Martin, who has reviewed the budget, will issue additional recommendations.

Rep. Ed Warren, D-Pitt, a member of the Base Budget Committee, said

Conley Celebrates Victory In 3-A Basketball Tourney

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

D.H. Conley High School is going to "savor" this year as the 3-A State basketball champions, said Principal Nelson Baldree as he cited the accomplishments and struggles of the team during the season.

He remembers them all.

"I went to every game," Baldree said. And "we can see the turning points" from a team with a 4-5 season after Christmas break to a team that won the state championship by beating North Gaston 64-55 Saturday.

Some games were not symbolic of what was to come, he said. "We lost to North Pitt on the last-second shot. We lost to Rose by two points and to Havelock on the last shot," Baldree said.

"We felt like the talent was there, but the chemistry wasn't quite right" in th beginning, he said. But, "it's not important how you start the game, it's how you finish it."

Students at Conley, whose team finished with a 22-8 record, want a recognition rally for the team to celebrate the victory, Baldree said, which is being considered. Six buses transported about 240 students to the victory game in Chapel Hill.

"It's fantastic to have the kids get that kind of experience," Baldree said. "It's not only an athletic experience, it's a cultural experience."

The faculty also wants to honor the players by taking them out to eat.

This has been a good year for Conley in other areas, too, Baldree said. The volleyball team also won a state championship.

"It's unusual to have one state championship, much less two," he said. "There won't be many schools in the state to have two in one year."

The school's Quiz Bowl team also was runner-up in district competiton, Baldree said.

This season also was a dream for the Farmville Cental baskeball team, but the end was not as successful.

"Obviously we are very disappointed that the boys were not successful but at the same time that we

MILLION DOLLAR GIFT — Jerry Collins, right, displays a check for $1.3 million which he presented to the Oral Roberts ministry in Tulsa, Okla., today. Dog Track Owner Rescues Roberts

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A Florida dog-track owner presented a check for $1.3 million today to the son of evangelist Oral Roberts after plans for him to give the money to Roberts in the preacher's prayer tower fell through.

The money could put Roberts' $8 million fund drive over the top eight days before what the evangelist has called a do-or-die deadline from God.

Jerry Collins of Sarasota, Fla., was to have presented the check to Roberts today on "Richard Roberts Live," a daily TV program featuring Roberts' son.

But problems with a hookup that linked Roberts and Collins in the prayer tower to the show prevented the on-air presentation.

Instead, Collins raced through the rain from the tower to the TV stage, about 200 yards away. He arrived moments after the show ended, and gave the check to Richard Roberts while videotape cameras recorded the scene. Richard Roberts said the tape would be shown on his show Tuesday.

Collins left for Tulsa on Sunday as Roberts went into seclusion in his gleaming, 200-foot-high prayer tower on the Oral Roberts University campus to begin praying and fasting as the fund drive draws to a close.

Roberts has been criticized since a nationwide appeal on his weekly "Expect A Miracle" program Jan. 4 claiming God would "call him home" if he failed to raise $8 million for medical missionary scholarships by March 31.

"I think he (Roberts) has done a good job," Collins said Sunday. "It's not necessary to criticize him. That's what bothered me. I'm helping him

Raleigh Meeting

The Greenville City Council has scheduled a luncheon meeting with the Pitt County Legislators Tuesday at noon at the City Club in Raleigh to discuss legislative issues.

Meeting Set

The Greenville-Pitt County Chapter of the North Carolina Retired School Personnel will meet at Greenville Golf and Country Club Wednesday at 11:30 a.m. Dr. Charles Russell, president of Pitt Community College, will be the speaker.

Choir Rehearsal

The Voices of Zion of York Memorial will rehearse Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the church.

Mass Choir Tour

The Pitt County Mass Choir is sponsoring a worship service tour and concert to The Tenth Memorial Baptist Church in Philadelphia May 1-3. To attend, contact a choir member or the Wooten School of Music.

Reading Clinic

An East Carolina University Reading Clinic is being held at Falkland Elementary School, with 13 students in grades two thorough five participating.

The clinic provides field experience for university tutors and individual instruction in reading for the elementary school participants.

Individual testing is done at the beginning of the clinic, and then remedial or enrichment instruction is provided as indicated by the diagnosis. Each child receives from 12 hours to 15 hours of individual instruction.

The university conducts several on-campus clinics each semester. Parents interested in having their children enrolled in a reading clinic in the fall should contact the Department of Elementary and Middle Grades Education at ECU.

St. Pat's Party

The Student Council for Exceptional Children at East Carolina University recently sponsored a St. Patrick's Day party for the developmental kindergarten classes of Cindy Vainright from Falkland School and Emalyn Colardo of Eastern School.

Thefts Probed

Investigators said nine thefts were reported to Greenville police over the weekend.

Officer W.E. Davis said a radio, a pair of sunglasses and $20 in cash were taken from a coat at the Elbo Room on Cotanche Street in an incident reported at 12:18 a.m. Saturday, while Officer C.A. Elks said a coat, a radar detector, a power booster and six cassette tapes, with a combined value of about $728, were taken from a car parked at the intersection of Fourth and Reade streets in an incident reported at 1:20 a.m.

OfficerC.G. Alphin said a radar detector and $2 in cash was taken from a car parked at 1601 E. First St. in an incident reported at 5:54 p.m., while Officer K.M. Smeltzer said a bicycle was taken from 112 Wade St. in an incident reported at 6:35 p.m.

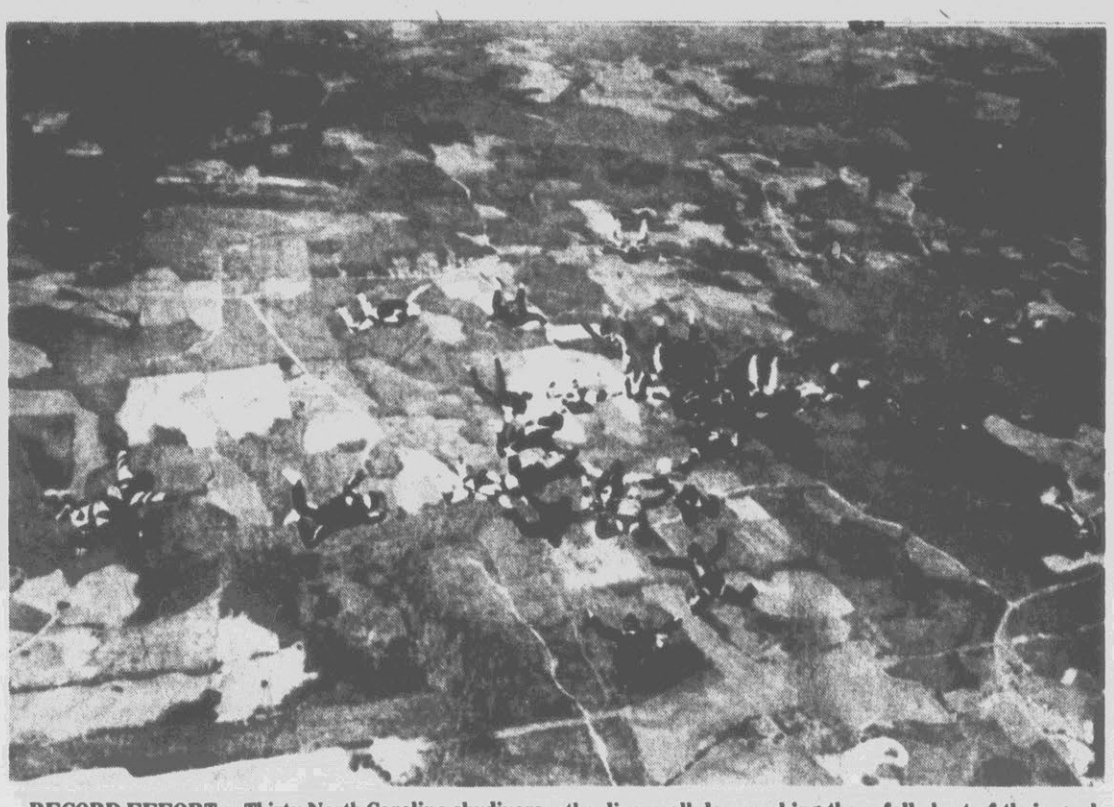

Elks said a bicycle was taken from 101F Lakeview Terrace in an incident reported at 12:'12 a.m. Sunday, while Officer W.E. Davis said a purse was taken from a vehicle parked near the intersection of Fourth and Evans streets in an incident reported at 12:23 a.m.

Officer J.G. Bridges said letters valued at $100 were taken from a sign at Family Medical Care at 602 E. 10th St. in an incident reported at 11:36 a.m., while Officer M.A. Jordan said a portable console, $5 in cash and several keys were taken from a car parked at 308 Raleigh Ave. in an incident reported at 6:07 p.m.

According to Officer C.S. Candler, a purse containing $65 in cash was taken from the Car Brite carwash at 509 E. 14th St. in an incident reported at 7:31 p.m.

Parole Board Will Enforce Cap On Prison Population

RALEIGH (AP) — Parole officials say a new cap on the state's prison population is already having an effect on their practices and may have a greater impact this week unless the number of prisoners drops dramatically.

The new cap, passed this month by the General Assembly, requires that a series of emergency measures be triggered when the prison population exceeds 97 percent of the 18,000 limit — or 17,460 inmates — for more than 15 consecutive days.

The Parole Commission then has 60 days to reduce the population to 17,280 prisoners. That 60-day period could begin Thursday, unless the prison population drops this week.

Bruce Briggs, chairman of the N.C. Parole Commission, says the crackdown on crowding already is affecting the commission.

"We have released some ... a few weeks earlier than we normally would have," Briggs said. "We hope that we're not releasing anyone who is a threat to society, but you have to consider that we're dealing with a prison population that has a track record of violating the law."

Although parole officials said they would use the same criteria they always have in determining who is to be paroled, they already are quickening the pace. Last month about 1,100 inmates were paroled, about 200 more than normal, said Sam F. Boyd, administrator of the commission. The additional parolees generally were serving time for nonviolent misdemeanors, he said.

The legislature included in the new law a provision making all offenders serving time for non-assaultive misdemeanors eligible for parole when the 97 percent figure is reached.

Correction officials estimate that the provision added 330 inmates to the pool of about 6,500 inmates already eligible for parole. While some of those already eligible are within a few months of completing their sentences, many are felons with long sentences who repeatedly have been denied parole in the past.

Exactly who will be released under the new law is not clear. Briggs said the Parole Commission would consider for parole all inmates who are eligible. But he said he would not target a particular group in an effort to reduce the population.

"We are going to look at all categories of people who are eligible and we will try to reduce from the population of eligible inmates a number sufficient to comply," Briggs said.

Just how the cap will play in the commission's deliberations, Briggs said, is difficult to tell.

"We are making judgements in a crisis situation, and whether or not that influences your judgement I can't say for the other commissioners," Briggs said. "You are always mindful of the problem."

Like the other commissioners, Briggs declined to comment about the cap. Asked whether he thought the Legislature was using the commission by ordering it to reduce crowding in the absence of a longer-term solution, he said:

"It's not a question of being used, it's a question of our trying to carry out the laws. Our job is to implement the laws that the Legislature passed. ... We realize we are in a crisis situation and we are going to do our best to implement the law and not in any manner reduce or compromise the standards that we have tried to establish to protect the public. We hope the integrity of the Parole Commission can be maintained during this period."

Annual paroles in North Carolina have fluctuated in recent years, rising from 7,829 in 1980 to 10,415 in 1983, and falling to 7,692 the following year. They have risen steadily since then, increasing from 7,983 in 1985 to 10,041 last year.

The drop in 1984 resulted from the termination of an accelerated release program and the addition of two new prisons to the state system. Recently, parole and correction officials have been given expanded powers to release inmates. The new law also gives Correction Secretary Aaron J. Johnson the power to refuse to accept inmates being transferred to the state system from county jails and to return to jail most county inmates already in the state system.

U.S. Plans Major Military Exercise In Caribbean Area

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. military is going to hold a major exercise in Central America, but it is not connected with the expected start of an offensive by American-backed rebels in Nicaragua, a military official says.

The official, who spoke only on condition he not be identified, confirmed Sunday that an exercise involving thousands of American troops would be under way soon in Honduras and other countries in the region.

But he insisted the operation was not timed to coincide with what U.S. officials have said is a spring offensive by the Contra rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

"That's a routine exercise," the official said of the American operation, code-named Solid Shield. "Obviously, it's been in the planning stages for a long period of time."

The number of troops involved in the Honduran portion of the exercise "would involve something less than 10,000 U.S. participants, and a majority of those would be forces afloat," he said, declining to elaborate.

Pentagon spokesman Lt. Col. Keith Schneider would not comment on the operation, other than to say he expected an announcement on it soon.

The exercise was reported first in Sunday's editions of The New York Times, which said a May operation would involve 50,000 personnel.

The Times said the exercise was planned as a practice run for an American response to a request from Honduras for help against an invasion by Nicaraguan troops.

As part of the exercise, the United States will simulate the evacuation of the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo in Cuba, the Times said. The assumption for that part of the operation is that Cuba would retaliate for U.S. action against Nicaragua's government.

The exercise would involve the Army, Marines, Navy, Air Force and Coast Guard, and will be conducted in Honduras, the Caribbean and the Camp Lejeune, N.C., Marine base, the Times said.

The president, by law, can authorize units of the Coast Guard, which is part of the Transportation Department, to operate under the Navy's command.

Sponsors Hopeful Funding Available For Victims' Fund

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Supporters of a state fund to compensate crime victims say they may have found the answer to a problem that has kept the fund an empty promise for four years — where the money will come from.

And supporters say there is growing pressure this year to provide money for the fund.

"The main problem is the money and where it's going to come from," Rep. Bob Hunter, D-McDowell, said. "There's been disagreement. Any time you're trying to get $1 million or whatever ... it's tough."

This year, Hunter and other supporters of victim compensation are pushing for an increase in the fee that convicted criminals must pay for their probation or parole supervision.

Boosting the fee from $10 per month to $15 would generate about $1.3 million per year, more than enough to offset the $2 million appropriation Hunter is requesting for fiscal 1987-89 to get the program off the ground.

Revenue from the fee increase would go into the state budget's general fund and could not be earmarked for the victim compensation program. But Hunter said he hopes the two proposals will be linked in lawmakers' minds.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, powerful chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, agreed that the revenue mechanism enhanced the compensation program's prospects. But he stopped short of guaranteeing funding for the program.

"That (fee increase) sort of makes it self-sustaining," Watkins said. "I think it's got a better chance this year. But boy, money's tight."

The House Judiciary IV Committee voted last Thursday to establish a subcommittee to hammer out mechanics of the compensation program. The subcommittee probably will begin work Tuesday, Hunter said.

During a meeting last week, committee members raised questions about how the program would operate. In particular, they were unsure about whether the fund should compensate crime victims for property losses as well as personal injuries.

"My concern is whether we're setting up an alternative homeowners' insurance program," Rep. Ivan Mothershead, R-Mecklenburg, said. "Personal property claims could just eat up the fund."

Hunter said in an interview he agreed, but felt that property losses should not be totally ineligible for compensation. "For some people, especially the elderly, a car or hearing aid or TV can be quite valuable."

Another dilemma: whether to put a cap on benefits per case and, if so, how much. Committee members agreed that some limits were necessary to keep the fund from evaporating with just a few cases.

Attorney General Lacy Thornburg, Crime Control and Public Safety Secretary Joe Dean, and victim rights activists have attended Judiciary IV Committee meetings to plead for action.

Last week, panel members listened grimly as Dr. Joanne Wilson, a Duke University faculty member, described the agony of having two close relatives murdered within a year. Her brother was shot dead this month in a convenience store robbery a few blocks from the Legislative Building. Survivors of both victims are struggling to make ends meet.

"That was very moving testimony," Hunter, a committee member, said. "What we're trying to do is make sure that victims of crime aren't also victims of our criminal justice system.

"I think in the past, the victim felt that no one consulted them, no one really cared. In a lot of instances they saw the investigating officer when the initial report was made, and that may have been the only contact they had with the court system until they found out what happened to the defendant.

"I think now we're telling them they do matter, that they have certain basic rights that they ought to be accorded."

Last year, the Legislature approved the Fair Treatment for Victims and Witnesses Act, including a Victims' Bill of Rights and funds to ensure that all 35 of the state's prosecutorial districts have victim-witness coordinators.

Overboard

OCEAN CITY, N.J. (AP) — A crew member of a commercial fishing boat fell into the ocean today after he was accidently pinned between the side of the vessel and the boat's dredge, the U.S. Coast Guard said.

The member of the 80-foot Pearl O'Neal, a Beaufort, N.C.-scalloper, slipped into the water 13 miles southeast of Ocean City at 2:29 a.m. today, said Petty Officer Alan Dixon of the Coast Guard's Cape May station.

The Coast Guard dispatched a helicopter, patrol boat and two small boats to a five-mile area off Ocean City to look for the man in the 43-degree ocean, Dixon said. He added that private vessels, including the Pearl O'Neal, also assisted in the search.

Dixon said the man, whose identity was not released, was on the deck when another crew member turned on the dredge and caused it to flip over the side of the boat, carrying the man with it and trapping him. A dredge is a basket that rakes the bottom of the ocean for fish.

RESTORING DEEPLY DECAYED TEETH

If you have a badly decayed tooth in which both the enamel and dentin, the bone-like tissue that forms the body of the tooth, have been penetrated, your dentist may recommend a new bonding process to restore the tooth. Instead of an acid etch technique, a ferric oxalate solution is used to attach a composite resin material to the tooth surface. This not only improves adhesion, it also requires less tooth preparation.

The use of plastic bonding materials such as composite resin in restoring a decayed tooth helps to maintain the tooth's natural appearance. This material can also be used to fill in chipped teeth or in reshaping teeth to remove unsightly gaps that may detract from a person's appearance. It is also used to cover discolored teeth and other imperfections.

The bonding technique can also be used in treating cavities along the gumline. Plastic bonding is often preferred by patients to dental amalgam or metal alloys, especially in restoring teeth that are noticeable when they smile.

Your Social Security Disability Benefits

ADDIE'S ADVICE

BENEFITS DENIED?

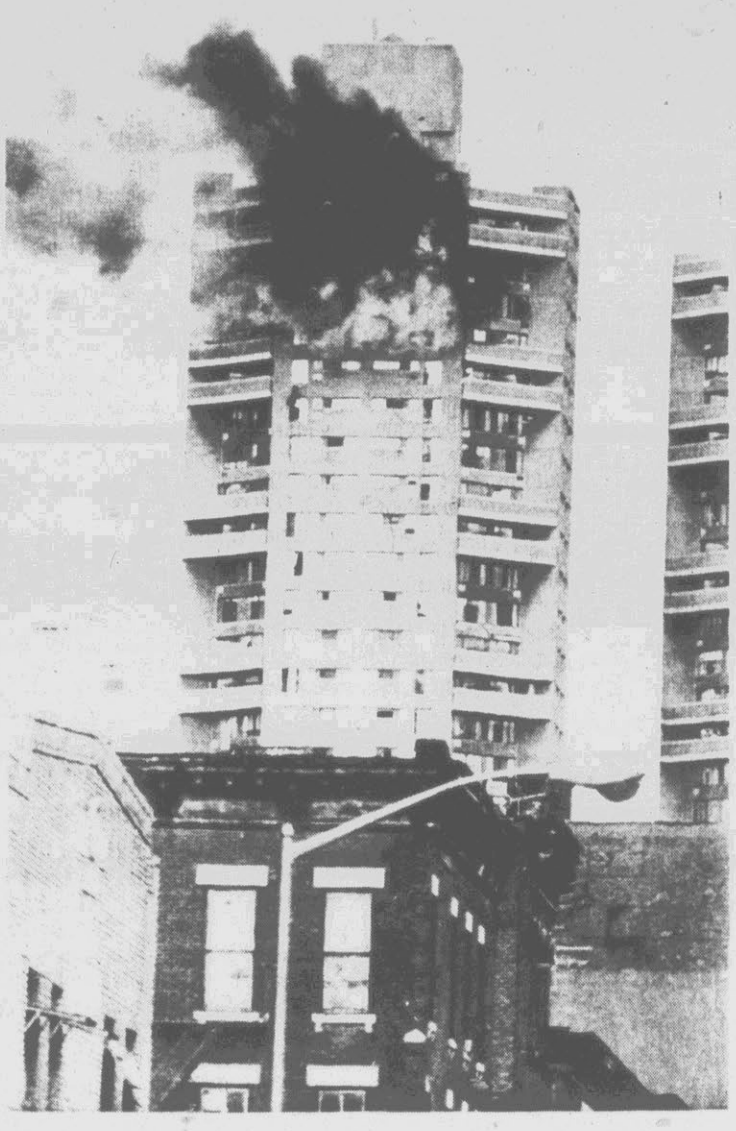

Have you been denied benefits under Social Security's disability benefits programs? Do not be discouraged. That happens to most people who apply the first time.

Have you asked for reconsideration of your disability claim and been turned down a second time? Again, don't be discouraged or give up. That's the way the disability system works today.

Take your case one step further and go before a Social Security Administrative Law Judge for a hearing with a qualified representative to present your case. Then the chances of your winning benefits are somewhere between 70% and 80%. The Judge will see you and hear your personal description of your physical or mental illness, and your representative will present your case as it applies to the complex rules of the Social Security Act.

If you have a hearing requested or scheduled before an Administrative Law Judge, call now for an immediate conference. There is no fee for an initial conference to discuss your eligibility for disability.

SEVEN DIE — Smoke and flames shoot from the top three floors of a 35-story apartment building in upper Manhattan early Sunday. Seven people, including three who jumped, were killed and 25 were injured in the blaze. (AP Laserphoto)

High-Rise Blaze Kills 7 In Harlem

NEW YORK (AP) — Bystanders screamed "Don't jump!" as a young girl and her two brothers, their clothes on fire, leaped 33 floors to their death during a blaze that roared up the trash chute of an apartment house, killing four others.

Sprinklers that could have stopped early Sunday's fire apparently had been shut off, said Fire Commissioner Joseph Spinnato. In addition, a standpipe valve at the base of the 35-story Harlem high-rise was broken, officials said.

"If the systems had been working properly, this wouldn't have happened," said Fire Department Chief Robert Butler.

The blaze, which injured 30 people and was at first thought to be confined to the basement, raced to the top floors, killing Martha Jenkins, 43, in her 33rd-floor apartment and trapping and killing three people in the apartment above, fire officials said.

Seventh-floor resident Eurika Young said she heard screams of "Help me! Help me!" before Mrs. Jenkins' children, Stanley, 23; Robbin, 18, and their sister, Dwana, 12, leaped to their deaths.

"They were burning and nobody would help and they just jumped," she said.

"Everybody was screaming, 'Don't jump! Don't jump!' but they didn't have a choice," an unidentified woman who had run to the scene from her apartment two blocks away told The New York Times.

Spinnato said the siblings' bodies "were sufficiently burned to the point where it would cause people to opt to jump."

"The panic is overwhelming, you just can't fathom it," said Fire Department spokesman Lt. Frank Martinez. "It's overwhelming pain, panic. It just separates the body from the brain and there's no rational thinking."

Leroy Cary said he and his roommate jumped from their 25th floor apartment to a terrace one flight below because of heavy smoke in the hall. There they prayed with a screaming woman with two babies in her arms, he said.

He said he saw what he thought were burning curtains drop in front of them and did not realize until the objects hit the pavement that they were bodies.

In the apartment above the Jenkinses', firefighters found the bodies of Clementine Grensham, 46, Charles Grensham, 28, and Harriet Wynn, 45, officials said. It was not immediately known how they were related.

The fire, reported shortly before 8 a.m., may have been started by a cigarette that ignited trash wedged in the two-foot-square chute, Martinez said.

Firefighters initially responded to a report of a fire in a basement trash compactor and were at the scene for about 20 minutes before discovering the blaze on the upper floors, authorities said.

"The fire started somewhere in the chute. The chute acted like a draft, causing the fire to spread," said Spinnato.

Fire officials said the blaze should have been extinguished in its earliest stages by sprinklers at every other floor along the chute. The city requires sprinklers throughout the chute, and investigators were trying to determine why they were not working,the commissioner said.

The city also requires smoke detectors in every apartment, but inspectors had not found the devices in the debris where the victims died, Martinez said.

Four families were left homeless by the fire, said Charlie Ridgeway of the Red Cross.

Three of the injured were being held for observation, hospital officials said. The others were either treated at hospitals or at the scene, officials said.

RALEIGH (AP) — Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan told a group of high school students Saturday that they had a bright future of they chose teaching as a career.

"Our goal is to see that teaching salaries in North Carolina lead the Southeast," Jordan said while speaking to the annual meeting of the Future Teachers of AmericaStudents in Action for Education.

The state president of the future teachers group, Carolyn Mattocks of Aurora High School, said she was uncertain about whether she wanted to become a teacher.

Pyramid Scheme Snowballs

"Airplane," the newest twist on the age-old illegal pyramid scheme, is turning up in communities around the nation, and authorities are urging unsuspecting players not to be taken for a ride.

"On these pyramid-type schemes, for the most part, the victims are just about as greedy as the promoters," said Spencer Barasch, associate general counsel for the state Securities Commission in Oklahoma, where dozens of "Airplane" games have sprung up.

"'Airplane' is like an Oklahoma tumbleweed drifting down the street."

There are variations, but a typical "Airplane" game is started by a "pilot" who persuades two people to pay him an entry fee to be "co-pilots." The fee reportedly has been as high as $1,500, but typically is $100.

The co-pilots, in turn, recruit two players each. These four, who also pay the fee, become "flight attendants" and each recruits two "passengers," again for $100.

When a plane is full — say, with 14 entries — the pilot has $1,400 and the pyramid splits in half, with the co-pilots becoming pilots, flight attendants becoming co-pilots, and passengers becoming flight attendants. Newly recruited passengers pay the pilot $100 each, and the pyramid continues splitting and growing.

Of course, the longer the pyramid is running, the more difficult it is to find willing players. Those not yet pilots would lose their money when the pyramid collapses.

Such games are called pyramids because a few moneymakers at the top are supported by lots of moneypayers at the bottom.

Where the game got started is a mystery, but it has been reported in Miami; Tampa, Fla.; Oxford, Miss.; Rochester, N.Y.; Toronto; Los Angeles; Montreal; Indiana; Colorado; Tennessee; Georgia; South Carolina and Texas.

"The 'Airplane' differs from other multilevel pyramid deals in that it doesn't have a common promoter," said Barasch. "It's just a lot of little airplanes. It's spreading by word of mouth."

The game grew so popular at the University of Oklahoma that Barasch's commission sent a cease-and-desist order to the inter-fraternity council and asked it to distribute the order to all fraternities.

"The people I talked to said it has been going on in the dorms for a couple of months," said Linda Lynn, a reporter for the Oklahoma Daily, the student newspaper.

One student, a freshman who declined to reveal his name, called the game a rip-off after his airplane folded and he lost his $50 entry fee.

"It's not guaranteed at all, it's totally by chance," the student said. "It was really popular and everyone was doing it. I didn't even think about what I was doing. When I thought about it, I realized I had messed up."

"Airplane" was a rage earlier this month at the University of Florida in Gainesville, where students saw it as a way to make money for spring break.

As many as 1,000 students may have been involved, police said. There were no arrests, although such schemes are punishable by up to a year in prison and a $1,000 fine in Florida.

"It is starting to fizzle," said Gainesville police Lt. Alan Morrow. "It's getting bad publicity and people don't want to lose money. Fads come and go on campus."

But more than just college campuses are involved.

Study Calls For Emphasis On Safety, Not Health Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — Health regulations aimed at preventing cancer are 8,000 times as costly per life saved as those designed to promote safety, according to a White House budget office economist who studied 44 such rules.

A study by economist John F. Morrall III of regulations from six agencies concluded that "safety regulation appears to be far more cost-effective than health regulations" because of the way Congress has written the laws.

Only 26 of the 44 regulations are in effect. The rest were rejected or are still pending.

Morrall, whose work appears in the magazine "Regulation" published by the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative think-tank, said his conclusions were his own and should not be taken as policy of the Office of Management and Budget.

Several other studies have suggested the Occupational Safety and Health Administration should concentrate more on health than safety risks. But Morrall's conclusions contradict those studies, usually on the grounds that people can better protect themselves against accidents than diseases.

Health regulations are almost always targeted against cancer.

"On average, the cancer regulations are 8,000 times more costly per life saved than the safety regulations — $4.8 billion compared to $600,000," Morrall wrote.

Using the median instead of the average to eliminate the influence of extremes, Morrall found that the median cost per life saved for cancer regulations was 75 times that of safety regulations, $37.6 million vs. $500,000.

OSHA is the one agency that issues both kinds of regulations, and Morrall found the median cost per life saved in that agency was 123 times as great for cancer rules compared with safety rules.

"The differences between health and safety regulations really should not be surprising; in large part, they are dictated by statute," he wrote.

Safety laws governing OSHA, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and the Consumer Product Safety Commission "almost invariably speak in terms of regulations that are 'reasonable,' 'practicable,' 'appropriate,' and so forth," Morrall said.

"In contrast, the health statutes, including not only the much-discussed (Food and Drug Administration) Delaney clause (forbidding the use of any food additive that causes cancer in animals) but also the relevant portions of the Clean Air Act and the OSHA statute, speak in terms of absolute or near-absolute protection."

Morrall said the most cost-effective government regulation is the 1967 regulation of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration requiring collapsable steering columns on motor vehicles. This prevents 1,300 deaths a year at a cost of $100,000 each, his study estimated.

The most costly rule in effect is the 1979 regulation governing DES in cattle feed, which Morrall estimated saves 68 lives per year at $132 million each. DES is a hormone used by ranchers to increase weight gain in cattle and decrease the chance of disease.

Seven regulations of the Environmental Protection Agency rejected in the 1984-1986 period would have cost $142 million to $820 million each, with all seven saving in total about one life every other year.

The most costly regulation studied was the pending OSHA rule on exposure to formaldehyde, which Morrall estimates will save one life per century at a cost of $72 billion each.

In an interview, Morrall speculated that health risks are treated differently by Congress in part because "cancer is often more of a terrible ordeal" than an accidental death, in part because risks of accidents are undertaken voluntarily as a rule ("In a car, you can be careful or not.") and in part because, according to poll results, people overestimate environmental risks in general.

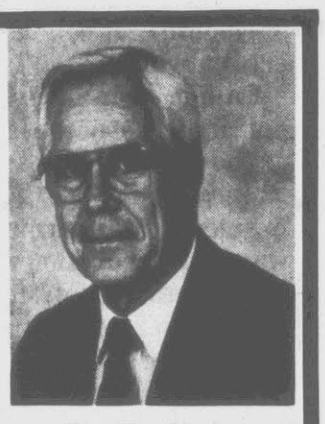

If he had his own way, "I would try to allow balancing risks and benefits," modifying the Delaney clause and the prohibitions in the Clean Air Act against consideration of cost in setting pollution standards.

The most effective safety regulation the government could adopt, he said, probably would be for OSHA "to require employees to wear seat belts" when driving on the job.

Survival Skills

Is the old-time farming operation of the early 1900s obsolete in eastern North Carolina?

Certainly it is. The farming operations of the early days of this century were methods that had changed little from those of our European ancestors. Hand plows were pulled by farm animals — in this area mostly the mule. Crops were planted by hand and harvested with hand labor. This meant that large families were a blessing to the farm operator and the children were used extensively in farming operations. People stayed on the farm and the operation continued from generation to generation. Many farmers owned their small farms and others were tenants, or sharecroppers.

All of that changed in this century. While some families held on to their small farms economics dictated that larger farming operations were more efficient. Newly developed equipment could do the job better but the equipment required large investments. Use of chemicals and fertilizers meant higher yields.

Dr. William D. Eickhoff, an extension economist farm management and income specialist at North Carolina State University, said farmers who make it through the 1980s will be better business managers and will operate the farms more efficiently.

Dr. Eickhoff spoke at the Farmers Appreciation Dinner held at Ayden-Grifton School last week. He said farmers have the productive ability but will have to know how to manage their businesses. "The profits are there," he said. "I'm optimistic about agriculture. It can be done, but there's no luxury for error anymore."

Falling farm land values and increased debt have put 20 percent of the farmers in financial trouble.

The message is that farming is a business as much as any retail store, wholesale operation or any other business. Thus farms will have to be operated that way. Debt reduction will be important to many farming operations. Careful cost control will be necessary to provide a profit margin. Farmers as a group can also look to promotional activities to make their products more desired by the consumer.

Early 20th century farming in North Carolina holds great charm. The lifestyle it provided for farm families of that era is to be envied today. Sadly it just doesn't work today. Farming is a business with a huge investment and it requires sophisticated management. Those who provide such management are the ones who will survive.

Approach Problems

Anybody and everybody interested in helping along the legal processes would also be interested in Supreme Court Associate Justice Harry C. Martin's proposal calling for construction of a "judicial center" in Raleigh.

He headed an eight-member commission that sought answers to resolving a severe space shortage and furthering the cause of efficiency with advocacy of a single complex housing the state's judicial bureaucracy (which is scattered all over Raleigh).

The panel's findings were recently made public and (in brief) advised construction of a big (243,000 square foot) building for the state's court systems which have been suffering growing pains.

The Supreme Court is housed in the state Justice Building south of the Capitol; and that building is shared with the Administrative Office of the Courts but both have to rent additional space in other buildings.

The Court of Appeals is located in still another building, just west of the Justice Building. The Justice Department also uses some space in that building.

We're told the study took into account more than the growth of North Carolina's population in pondering space needs reaching into the future, but also recognized litigation is increasing, as well as becoming more complex.

Martin says anticipating needs of the court until the year 2050 was part of the process; and the body concluded a new court structure good for 30 or 40 years would be shortsighted because they would be back and "doing this all over again".

When the Court of Appeals was created some 20 years ago it had six judges; it now has 12. Projections indicate adding six judges about every 10 years is in store. The addition of judges also requires spaces for secretaries, law clerks and other needs.

So the report takes into account the growth of state population as well as increasing litigation. It looks to remedying not only the present situation but also to avoiding an early recurrence.

This would be a good year for the Legislature to work toward dealing with those needs. Past experience tells us procrastination is not always the best way to meet a problem. Problems often require an easier solution when dealt with before they grow into overwhelming crises.

Democrats Attack Martin On Economics

RALEIGH (AP) — As the likely 1988 gubernatorial showdown between Gov. Jim Martin and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan draws nearer, North Carolinians can expect a crossfire of statistics like these:

•Last year, 106 plants closed in the state, costing 15,849 people their jobs.

•During former Gov. Jim Hunt's administration in the early 1980s, one company in three that located in the Southeast came to North Carolina. Last year, with Martin in the Executive Mansion, the ratio was one in seven.

•During the Hunt years of 1982-83, North Carolina's unemployment rate hovered around 9 percent. The jobless rate has been 5 percent or lower since Martin took office.

•Despite the plant closings and job losses, net employment in North Carolina rose by 123,000 jobs last year — including an increase of 4,800 positions in the troubled textile industry.

What do these numbers prove, if anything?

Jordan supporters, starting early in their bid to erode what polls suggest is Martin's considerable popularity, charge that the Republican governor is sitting idly as the North Carolina economy loses steam.

"Under the sitting governor, we've seen the state's business climate go from sunny and bright to dark and ominous," Ken Eudy, executive director of the state Democratic Party, said last week. "We hope the sitting governor will get off his seat and get to work for North Carolina workers."

The Martin camp says the Democrats are distorting the state's economic picture and accuses them of engaging in self-serving tactics that could backfire on the state.

"The fact is that our economy is strong and growing and vibrant," state GOP Chairman Jack Hawke said. "But if they persist in muddying the waters and resorting to such demagoguery, they might damage the state's image ... and that can only hurt the people of North Carolina."

Economic growth is an issue in virtually any gubernatorial race, of course. What makes it especially important in the Martin-Jordan clash is that both men see it as their strong suit.

"I'm for business — big business, small business and everything in between. That's where the jobs come from," Martin repeatedly says. His 1984 campaign platform was built on cutting the intangibles and inventory taxes, which he called major barriers to development — especially in the state's rural border counties.

Jordan, owner of a Mount Gilead lumber business, has crafted his own 1987 legislative agenda centered on a report issued by the Commission on Jobs and Economic Growth, whose members he appointed. He says the key to growth is not cutting taxes, but building the state's "infrastructure" — schools, roads, water and sewer systems.

Jordan says the Martin administration has provided little leadership on the economy, criticizing the administration's Blueprint for Economic Growth as vague and inadequate, but Martin says the two reports have more similarities than differences.

Democrats have turned up the heat on Martin in recent months, blaming him for a number of highly publicized plant closings and corporate moves such as RJR Nabisco's transfer of its headquarters from Winston-Salem to Atlanta.

"He could have mounted a public relations campaign from the governor's office on it," Jim Van Hecke, state Democratic chairman, said. "It seems to me he didn't do anything. It might have been a foregone conclusion but a part of it is the perception ... that the governor is doing all he can."

Hawke, who was director of policy and planning in the Martin administration when the RJR move was announced, said, "It's my impression he (Martin) was in personal contact with the Reynolds people and did his best to sell them on staying in North Carolina. I don't think any governor cold have done better."

The 106 plant closings in 1986, while unfortunate, are a normal phenomenon, Hawke added, quoting the Commerce Department statistics on shutdown totals in other recent years: 118 in 1983, 101 in 1984, and 119 in 1985. "It's a fairly level figure from year to year," he said.

Richard E. Sylla, professor of economics and business at North Carolina State University, says the rhetoric on both sides contains some truth and much hyperbole.

"The governor and the administration of a state can have only a small impact on the economy of the state," Sylla said. "The main determinant of economic conditions in North Carolina is the national economy and ... the world economy."

To the editor: It appears to me that the lack of experience and professional management competence is at the very top of City Government, the Mayor's office, as indicated by the events leading to the forced resignation of the City Manager. What surprised me even more was that my former business colleague, Mr. Ed Carter, who studied and teaches performance appraising at Burroughs Wellcome Co., would be a party to such proceedings.

During my attendance at City Council meetings and workshops, I found Gail Meeks to be extremely competent and the best prepared official in attendance. It is hard for me to comprehend how the Mayor and members of the City Council who voted for her ouster could come up during the past several months with reasons compelling enough to negate her entire past performance record. The reasons for her forced resignation as reported in the press have been wishy-washy. I have suspicions that the enactment of recent legislation and ordinances may be involved. I doubt if the real truth will ever come out.

Does the Mayor really think that bringing in a so-called professional can correct the problems created by past administrations and lead us into a new era for Greenville? It is a nice dream.

It is up to the Mayor and the City Council to provide leadership, motivation, challenges, opportunities for growth, job enrichment, etc. to City employees, not hasty dismissals. Only then can Greenville grow and prosper.

If I was to prepare a performance appraisal for the Mayor, the best grade I could give would be somewhere between needs improvement and fails to meet standards.

To the editor: We who have chosen to educate our children in our homes are concerned that legislation might be passed to increase the regulation of our home schools by state agencies. At present we are supervised for enrollment, attendance, testing, fire and health requirements. While this is more rigorous scrutiny than is true in many other states, we are willing to comply in deference to the state's interest in the protection of our children.

The additional requirements, however, that may be passed concern more fundamental aspects of the educative process. If the state elects to regulate how and what we teach our children (through curriculum approval, teacher certification or other direct supervision of our classrooms), this could seriously hinder the true value of home education.

Our forefathers ordained the separation of church and state not to expunge religion from our society but to insure that no one religion could have political dominance. In a real sense the same threat to ideological pluralism exists today in governmental efforts to standardize education.

There is a prevailing notion that home education is an adjunct of Christian fundamentalism. It is true that Christians often carry a strong sense of responsibility for their children's training. However, the issue is not religious but philosophical. Our country cannot afford to have any government, whether liberal or conservative, impose its ideology with unilateral strength into our educational mechanism. Home education is one alternative that preserves our heterogeneity.

It will probably always be a small minority who take on the significant added cost of educating their children at home. But from these brave few may well come the innovative leadership that will keep our nation healthy in its appreciation for and support of diversity, freedom and creative growth.

Thank you for your support of home education in North Carolina.

To the editor: During my service to the city there was one thing I came to realize; people will say things on the phone and in newspaper tirades that they wouldn't dare get in your face with. It takes a certain amount of guts to get in an arms-length conversation. It is a characteristic of these non-confronters to avoid running for public office. Maybe it's genetic. Too many "U" chromosomes and not enough "I's."

It is also a tendency in this type of person to elect themselves as representative of organizations such as the University. I don't know, maybe they live there, maybe they live in a desk. Often these people are uninformed, so they tend to write with their mouth open; nevertheless I appreciate the compliments on my noise ordinance; you would be surprised at which councilman wanted to weaken it.

I also noted during my tenure as a councilman, three types of members: those who make things happen, those that watch things happen and those who wonder what happened. Greenville has too much money at stake to elect any more of the last two groups. City government is serious business, big business, and the taxpayers are not paying for pie-in-sky acceptance of everything given them.

I can tell you one more big hard fact — you can't leave the workers to run the factory. When this happens, difficult and painful decisions must be made by those capable of recognizing the problem in time. There must be an end to paying for excessive budgets with the world people's sweat.

Incidently, the Board of Elections will open the filing in July for elections Nov. 3 — be there and bring your mouth.

To the editor: The way in which Gail Meeks was asked to resign, as city manager of Greenville, is in my mind deplorable!

While a candidate for Pitt County Clerk of Superior Court in last year's election, many of my close supporters knew of my interest in running for Greenville City Council. Recently I have been approached and encouraged to commit myself to the municipal election this year. My plan for now is to file for the county election in 1988.

But as a citizen of Greenville, I call for the City Council to move in the direction of rehiring Gail Meeks, abrogating the garbage use fee which is disliked by many local citizens, and abstaining from any more half-baked ideas in the future.

Strength For Today

A number of architects were invited, some years ago, to submit plans for a large cathedral. One of the architects, a devout Christian and a pronounced mystic, arranged his drawing table in such a way that he would always be on his knees as he worked on his design. He felt his work to be such a religious significance that he wanted to maintain the posture of devotion as he worked out his plans.

How much better life would be if people could look upon its everyday tasks as sacred duties toward which they must maintain a reverent devotion. When people look upon their jobs as a means of serving God and practice them with a deep sense of responsibility to the Most High, they get a real happiness out of their work and do a real service for the world.

Any task worth doing is worth doing on one's knees.

Day By Day, Iran Society Continues Defining Its Future

Analysis

TEHRAN, Iran — "In the 1970s, I was one of those students in the streets with his fist in the air," the young professional explained. For him, those were the days of sloganeering — "Death to the shah" — and a young leftist's dream of a socialized republic in Iran.

This young professional, call him Amir, had been away from Iran eight years by the time Shah Mohamed Reza Pahlavi was overthrown. When Amir returned in 1980 to participate in the triumph of building a new nation, his buoyant expectations collided with the reality of what Iran was becoming: a revolutionary Islamic state.

Today, Amir makes a living and he makes do under a government he considers foreign to his interests. He distills his own moonshine for small and private cocktail hours and he trades intelligence and rumors in a clandestine circle of friends about politics, the economy and religion in this overwhelmingly religious society.

Most of all, Amir and his circle of friends debate the future of Iran.

A walk along the crowded sidewalks of Tehran turns up not only fervent backers of the Islamic state but monarchists who yearn for the days of the shah, socialists like Amir and others who yearn for a Western-oriented democracy.

For this reporter, who has traveled to both Iran and Iraq in this critical season of the six-year-old war, the most striking feature of the Iranian society is that it is still in a dynamic state of defining its future.

There appears to be no monolithic Islamic state, but rather a factional society of liberals and conservatives, radicals and reactionaries, often realigning when the topic shifts from domestic to foreign policy.

Modern Iran is at the same time a two-tiered society. One tier is organized around the Islamic-based revolution and controls the government, communications and the public sector of the economy. The second tier, of formidable proportions, appears either neutral to or against the revolution and is absorbed in the private sector of the economy.

The most graphic example of the two-tiered structure is Iran's currency system: the governmental sector's exchange rate is 72 rials to the dollar, while the private sector, or free-market rate, is 800 rials to the dollar.

Unlike Iraq, where a pervasive state security apparatus has chilled most political expression, Iranians remain irrepressibly interested in discussing the war, mullah politics and relations with the West.

"How long do you think the war will go on?" is the question many Iranians want an American visitor to answer. "America could stop this war if it wanted to," one airport traveler asserts.

"The Islamic republic is very bad," complained a taxi driver.

"We like Americans," said a man in line at a bank. "Tehran used to be full of night life and music and it will be that way again."

Amir, who foresaw a secular state in Iran, blames his naivete for not understanding the forces that shaped the revolution, yet he has stayed on despite the fact that dozens of his friends and colleagues have given up and returned to Europe or America.

It is not necessarily hope that keeps Amir and his young wife, a student, in Tehran. He admitted that he still is "disappointed" about what Iran has become and "confused" about the country's future potential.

He compared himself to a young American who might dream of moving to Alaska to live an idyllic life in the northern woods among the gentle and peace-loving Alaskan natives.

"Of course, when you get there and expect a certain way of life, the people laugh at you," said Amir to a handful of foreign journalists at his northwest Tehran apartment last week.

"When I came home, the Islamic influence was much greater than I expected and the intellectuals had lost out during the revolution," said Amir. "So I spent the next few years casting off my preconceptions and learning everything about this country from the ground up."

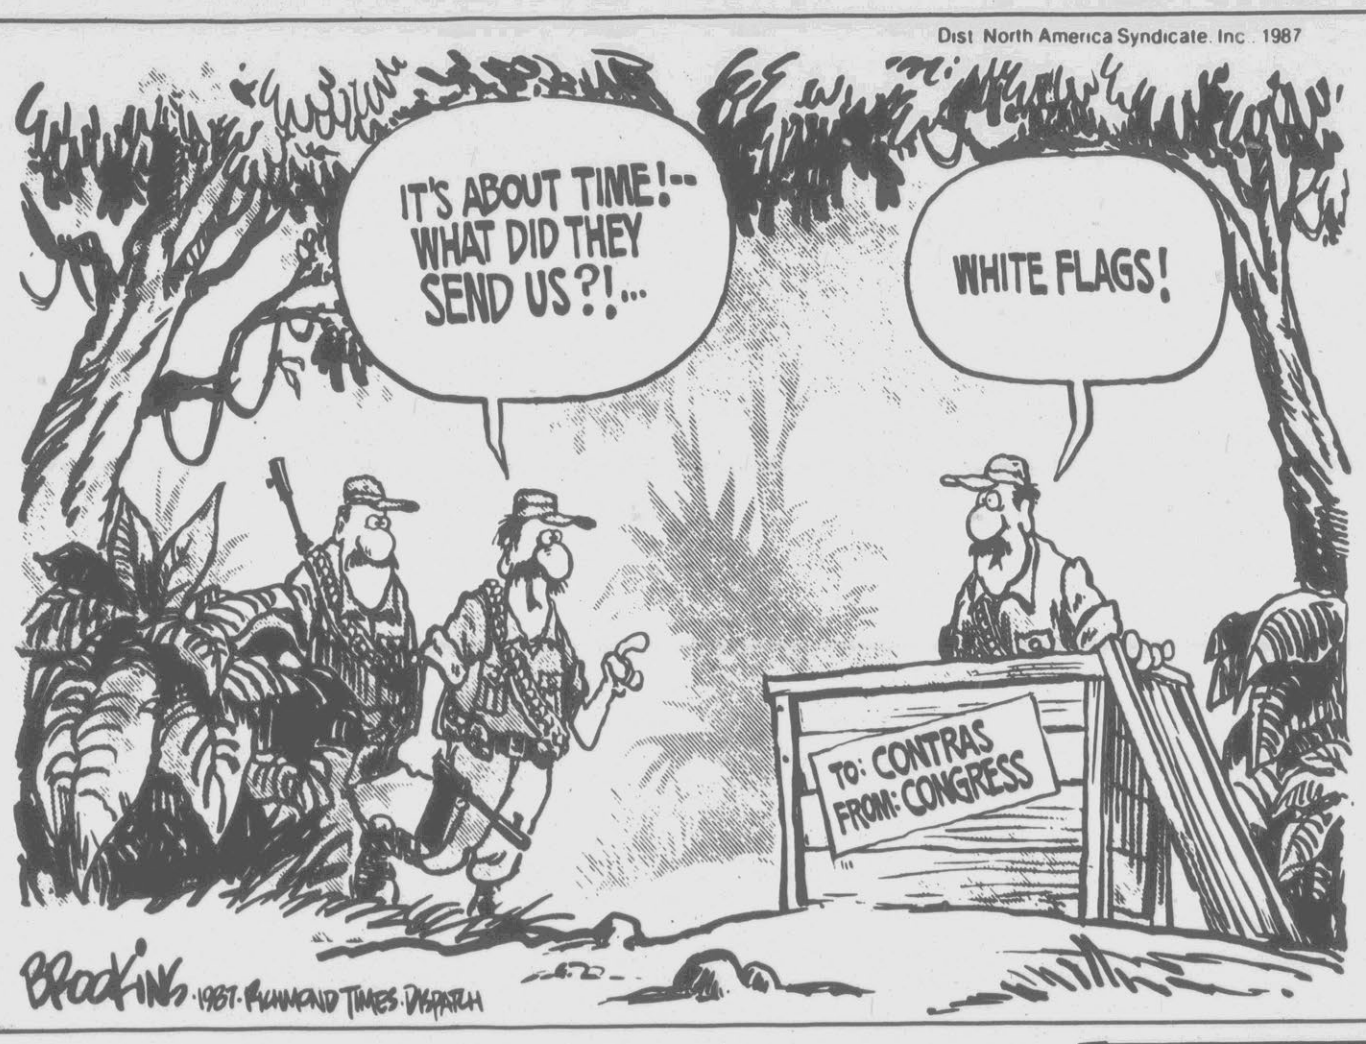

In what many here see as the waning days of the aging Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, many Iranians spend their time trying to envision the power structure in Iran after his death.

Even well-informed Iranians seem to know little about the mullahs and technocrats who now wield power in a government structure that is difficult to fathom from the outside.

On the two principal contenders for power, the parliamentary speaker, Hojatoleslam Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani, 52, and Ayatollah Hossein Ali Montazeri, 63, one finds young Iranians — even those who would prefer a secular government — aligning with one camp or the other.

"I like Rafsanjani," said a young woman, a professional who chafes at religious requirements that make her wear a head scarf in public and go swimming fully clothed. "He is intelligent, clever and charming," she said, adding that she senses a pragmatism in Rafsanjani that might eventually tolerate some semblance of the "good life" once again in Tehran.

Amir, meanwhile, defends Rafsanjani's purported rival, Montazeri. "Everyone says he's a good-hearted man," said Amir, challenging assertions that Montazeri is anti-western and radical on economic issues. "He supports the peasants and he's against the bureaucracy.

Impossible Becomes Possible

PARIS — Thirty-two years ago, in the spring of 1955, the Soviet Union suddenly decided to unblock negotiations on a peace treaty for Austria. Sixteen years later, in 1971, the Soviets decided it was time to settle the Berlin question with the Western Allies. Today, after 16 more years, the door is suddenly open for agreement to rid Europe of medium-range nuclear missiles.

There can only be speculation about the reasoning or political pressure in Moscow that produced each of these spectacular shifts in Soviet positions that previously had seemed embedded in concrete. But there are similarities in each case that are worth noting, and a lesson to be drawn for American negotiators.

In each case, the leader in the Kremlin liquidated a policy inherited from his predecessor, a policy that was not working, was up against a dead end and was no longer of any benefit to the Soviet Union.

In the case of Austria, it was Nikita S. Khrushchev who abruptly decided to change a policy inherited from the Stalin Era. Ten years after World War II, there was not the slightest chance of a communist takeover in Austria, despite the intimidating presence of Soviet occupation forces surrounding Vienna. Khrushchev badly wanted a meeting with President Dwight D. Eisenhower, and Secretary of State John Foster Dulles had made an Austrian peace treaty a condition.

Suddenly the green light began to flicker in Moscow, and in May of 1955, after five years of deadlock, the text of a treaty was produced in barely a month's time.

In the case of Berlin, Leonid I. Brezhnev was liquidating a dead-end policy inherited from Khrushchev, along with the Berlin Wall. A quarter of a century after the end of the war, after blockade and bluster, it was clear that nothing would ever force the Western Allies out of Berlin. Brezhnev wanted the Helsinki conference, and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger had said there would be no Helsinki negotiations until Berlin was settled first.

After a year of desultory negotiations, Brezhnev decided to settle, and it was done in a rush at the end of August 1971.

Today, Mikhail S. Gorbachev is liquidating a policy inherited from Brezhnev, of stationing medium-range nuclear missiles in Western Europe. It is a policy that no longer benefits the Soviet Union; on the contrary, it has increased the nuclear threat to the Soviet homeland by attracting a flock of new American missiles to Europe.

For military and political reasons, Gorbachev has decided to go back to a "missile free" Europe, liquidating at the same time the "package deal" policy inherited from Andrei A. Gromyko that linked medium-range missiles and strategic missiles and curtailment of the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, the space-based system commonly known as "Star Wars."

The second common denominator in these three strategic moves by the Soviet Union is the fact that they all involve relations with Europe. In each case there has been a definite diminution of military and political pressure against Europe, a gradual normalization of Soviet relations with Europe in place of the relentless confrontation that has been going on ever since the Red Army reached the Elbe River in the closing days of World War II.

Of course, after every relaxation of Soviet pressure, new pressure has been applied. But, looking back, the ultimate threat of war against Europe has gradually but steadily faded since Josef Stalin abruptly decided to give up on the Berlin blockade in 1949.

As it happened, I was on the first train into Berlin when the blockade was lifted. And in 1955, when signals on the Austrian treaty began to flicker from Moscow, I was sent to Vienna by the New York Herald Tribune.

The man to see was Llewelyn E. Thompson, the U.S. high commissioner. He was a Soviet specialist who had served in Moscow during the war and returned twice as ambassador in the 1960s, once during the Cuban missile crisis and later to lay the groundwork for what became the first strategic arms limitation talks in Helsinki. Thompson, with George Kennan and Charles E. Bohlen, was one of the gifted trio of our wartime and postwar Soviet experts — and probably the most effective diplomat of the three.

"Well, where do we go from here?"

Thompson offered an extraordinarily revealing reply:

"Dulles is shell-shocked — he never expected this," he said. "I've had no instructions but I've cabled him to let me handle it. If I understand the Soviets correctly, when they make a strategic decision like this to go for a treaty, tactical problems will not be allowed to hold things up. I am going back in there tomorrow and ask for everything that we have been asking for for the last five years. It's all here in this file drawer.

"I know that the Austrians are in a hurry right now, and I'll probably take a lot of flak here from them when the negotiations slow down. But just because the Austrians are in a hurry, I'm not going to see them saddled with a bad treaty."

So this quiet, low-key American from Colorado hung in, often to the unease of his British and French counterparts — and of Dulles, who at one crucial point, was afraid that Thompson might be overplaying the hand. But Thompson was a great poker player; he knew when to check and when to raise. Austria got a good treaty, and Austrians like Bruno Kreisky, the former chancellor, know well their debt to Thompson.

The lesson is that when the Soviets make a strategic decision, many things that seemed impossible suddenly become possible. Whatever lies behind their sudden decision to offer to do business with President Reagan in his hour of greatest need, removing missiles from Europe is a historic strategic decision, ranking with the Soviet withdrawal from Austria and the settlement in Berlin.

'The lesson is that when the Soviets make a strategic decision, many things that seemed impossible suddenly become possible. Whatever lies behind their sudden decision to offer to do business with President Reagan in his hour of greatest need, removing missiles from Europe is a historic strategic decision ... .'

New PTL President's Conduct Under Scrutiny

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — New PTL President Richard Dortch was personally involved in the ministry's responses to allegations of sexual misconduct against his former boss, Jim Bakker, according to published reports.

Accusations by a church secretary from Massapequa, N.Y., that Bakker had sexual relations with her in 1980 are likely to draw scrutiny to Dortch's role in handling the matter, The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer reported Sunday.

PTL's new board chairman, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, said he had little "hard information" on the allegations and PTL's handling of the complaint early last week when he decided to name Dortch, 55, to PTL's new board.

"The board will have to discuss" Dortch's future, Falwell said. The board meets Thursday at PTL's Heritage USA headquarters.

Falwell said Friday that Dortch was needed in part as a "transition person." Dortch is the only former PTL board member asked to join Falwell's new board.

"We clearly need a transition person in such a traumatic change," Falwell said.

Dortch, a veteran Assemblies of God official, became a PTL board member about eight years ago and joined the staff as executive director in 1983.

Bakker resigned as president and board chairman of the TV ministry Thursday, acknowledging money was paid to quiet "blackmailers" he said had sought to lure him into a "sexual encounter" seven years ago.

The New York lawyer representing Bakker, Dortch and PTL said Dortch's motives were to "protect the ministry and other interests involved."

Dortch made no comment.

As Bakker announced his departure Thursday, he said he also had resigned from the Assemblies of God denomination.

And the New York lawyer, Norman Roy Grutman, said Dortch had resigned and PTL's church had withdrawn from the Pentecostal denomination.

Dortch didn't work at PTL at the time of the 1980 encounter between Bakker and Jessica Hahn, then a 21-year-old secretary at a Pentecostal church.

But in 1984, his first year at PTL, Dortch met twice in New York with Ms. Hahn, according to Ms. Hahn, now 27.

In those meetings in March and November 1984, Ms. Hahn said, Dortch tried to dissuade her from pursuing the complaint and persuaded her to sign a document recanting the charges.

Ms. Hahn later renounced the document. In early 1985, a California businessman acting on her behalf sent PTL a draft lawsuit renewing her complaint and seeking damages.

The suit, never filed, identified Oklahoma City evangelist John Wesley Fletcher as the person who set up Ms. Hahn's Dec. 6, 1980, trip to Florida and her alleged meeting with Bakker.

In a meeting with Dortch in early February 1985, Fletcher confirmed he had arranged for the woman to meet Bakker, Fletcher told The Observer last month.

Dortch next flew to Southern California and met with Ms. Hahn's representative, Paul Roper of Anaheim, Calif.

Dortch told him he didn't believe the woman's account, Roper says.

Roper says he was put in contact with Los Angeles lawyer Howard Weitzman and his partner, Scott Furstman.

On Feb. 27, 1985, in a meeting at Weitzman's office, Roper got a $115,000 check on the woman's behalf, he says. Roper says the money was used to pay the woman's expenses.

PTL officials have refused to identify the source or give the amount of the 2oney Bakker said was paid.

Roper said he told Dortch and the lawyers that, if her allegations were true, a trust fund should be set up for Ms. Hahn.

Grutman, who declined to discuss details of any payments, said the money was paid "under a covenant of confidentiality."

Roper said PTL's California lawyer told him a trust was under discussion and he would be contacted with an answer.

He says he never got that answer and the matter was left unresolved.

Discussion of a trust continued inside PTL after Roper received the $115,000 check in February.

In a July 1985 letter, lawyer Furstman wrote Dortch seeking final decisions on structuring a trust.

"I would appreciate you contacting me at your earliest convenience so we can discuss who to designate as the Trustor of the Jessica Hahn Trust," he wrote.

"I believe the trust agreement can be structured whereas the purpose is to discharge an obligation or a debt as opposed to a gift. If the trust is structured as discharging an obligation or in settlement thereof, there will be no gift tax consequences."

Major Legislative Fight Lies Ahead Over Coast's Future

RALEIGH (AP) — Like a beach tug-of-war, developers and environmentalists are digging in their heels for what promises to be a major fight in the General Assembly over beach development, a battle that has been escalated by this month's reorganization of the Division of Coastal Management.

"The future of the coast is going to be fought out this session," says John Runkle, a lobbyist for the N.C. Conservation Council. "It's going to be the developers versus the rest of us."

Douglas Boykin, president of the N.C. Alliance for Balanced Coastal Management, a Wilmington-based developers organization, agrees that this session is critical for the coast, and says that his group has hired a lobbyist to make sure the developers' point of view is heard.

"I'm afraid the (coastal) program has gotten out of balance, out of hand," he says. "Regulations have gotten so prohibitive that even good developers are complaining."

Boykin said developers called S. Thomas Rhodes, secretary of the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, a few months ago when they heard reorganization proposals for the coastal management division were being discussed.

"The secretary was very receptive to our comments," Boykin said.

Environmentalists, who were caught by surprise when the bureaucratic shuffle was announced two weeks ago, are furious that they weren't let in on the decision-making.

Also miffed are several members of the Coastal Resources Commission, the board that sets coastal management policy.

"I didn't get consulted until I screamed," said commission member Karen Gottovi, questioning why the reorganization wasn't discussed at a regular commission meeting. "I hope the secretary will have a good explanation for us."

The division's 40 employees administer the Coastal Area Management Act, North Carolina's pioneering land management law. Designed to protect environmentally sensitive coastal areas and ensure balanced, orderly growth, the 1974 act requires permits and land-use planning in 20 coastal counties.

The act also establishes a Coastal Resources Commission, with 15 members appointed by the governor, as the primary policy-setting authority for the program.

Because of this structure, division employees have two masters — the commission, which sets policy, and the secretary of Natural Resources and Community Development, who is charged with administering that policy.

PTL Worshipers Urged To Dig Deep To Help TV Ministry 'Stay Strong'

By ROGER BRYANT
Associated Press Writer

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — PTL's new chief evangelist urged tearful followers to dig deeper for donations in his first sermon since a sex scandal forced Jim Bakker to resign as spiritual leader of the 500,000-member TV ministry.

"Let the world know this ministry is going to stay strong," the Rev. Richard Dortch told the congregation at PTL's home church at its sprawling complex Sunday as a PTL television crew taped the two-hour service.

Bakker last week handed over control of the traditionally Pentecostal PTL ministry to the Rev. Jerry Falwell, fundamentalist Baptist founder of the Moral Majority, after admitting being blackmailed over a sexual encounter seven years ago.

Two weeks earlier, Bakker, who spent 13 years building PTL into a $172 million empire, disclosed that his wife, Tammy Faye, was being treated for drug dependency at a clinic near their home in Palm Springs, Calif. Falwell said she was at the Betty Ford Center.

Dortch, who had been executive director of PTL under Bakker, was elevated to PTL president and host of its TV program, "The PTL Club." PTL stands for "People That Love" and "Praise The Lord."

"We will not be defeated," Dortch said during Sunday's service, which had members standing, clapping, stretching out their arms, weeping and embracing. "We will move forward, and we will see our God walk us through the storm."

Dortch drew a standing ovation when he praised Falwell's rescue of PTL, and he urged the faithful to keep donations coming. "I'm saying that all of us are going to have to dig a little deeper," he said.

The service was at Heritage Village Church on PTL's sprawling Heritage USA complex, which includes a 500-room hotel, shopping mall, cafeteria, convention center, water-amusement park, a TV studio and several real-estate developments. PTL employs about 2,000 people.

Falwell, who gave a sermon at his own ministry's headquarters in Lynchburg, Va., said that he was unsure how long he would remain chairman of PTL and that he had no intention of changing his fundamentalist views.

"I've worked with Mormons, Catholics, Jews, Presbyterians and 57 varieties of Baptists" since founding the Moral Majority, he said. "And eight years later, I'm still preaching the same thing I preached ... 31 years ago."

After a particularly upbeat song on Sunday, Dortch exclaimed, "We Bapticostals really love that."

"We have come together with hearts that are wounded," Dortch said in Sunday's sermon. "Without any reluctance, we say in our spirits that we love our pastor and his wife."

Dortch prayed for the "restorative ministry" of the Bakkers.

"I'm saying that I have to acknowledge that all have sinned and fallen short of the glory of God," he said. "Today we're going to stand not in our righteousness, because we have none."

He urged the congregation to "have a little faith" about learning "the real story" behind Bakker's departure. "In God's time, it will all come out," he said.

Don Hardister, who described himself as Bakker's security guard, was quoted Saturday by the Los Angeles Times as saying the Bakkers are secluded in a Spanish-style home protected by closed-circuit television and guards.

In Warren, Mich., meanwhile, former TV evangelist and Republican presidential hopeful Pat Robertson said Sunday of the scandal: "I think the Lord is housecleaning a little bit. ... I'm glad to see it happen."

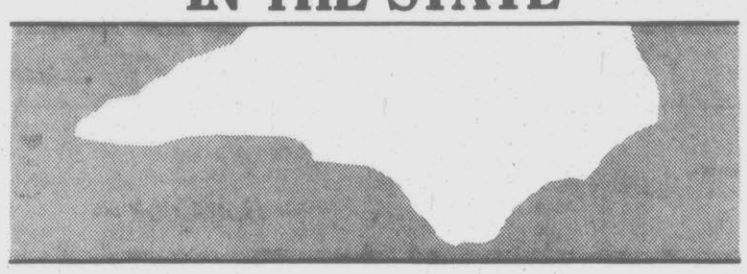

A Wilmington, Del., preacher said Falwell's takeover forced him to break his ministry's affiliation with PTL because, in his view, Falwell is unsympathetic to blacks.

"As a black man and as a member of a PTL center in Wilmington, I can no longer justly go on," said Clayton C. Cooper, who earns his living as an insurance salesman.

"Brother Falwell has, in the past, spoken out on some of the problems in South Africa unjustly and unfairly, saying there is no problem," Cooper said. "If he can't see the problem in South Africa, I cannot see him seeing the problems in America."

Falwell, after an August 1985 visit to South Africa, expressed his support for the apartheid nation and denounced Bishop Desmond Tutu as "a phony as far as representing the blacks is concerned."

IN THE STATE

Dealer Sues

RALEIGH (AP) — A Greensboro Toyota dealer has sued his distributor for at least $35 million, saying the distributor's system of allocating cars forces some North Carolina dealers to lie about how many cars they sell.

The suit accuses Southeast Toyota Distributors Inc., which is based in Florida, of dividing imports in a way that encourages North Carolina dealers to make false reports. The suit, filed by Rice's Toyota World Inc., also says the distribution system coerces dealers to sell cars to a leasing company owned by the distributor.

At issue is a system that ties the number of cars a particular dealership receives to its past sales record. The more cars sold, the theory goes, the more cars the dealer gets the next month.

Ecology Study

DURHAM (AP) — North Carolina State University zoologists in cooperation with the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission will begin a study this spring of the ecology of Jordan Lake.

The 14,000-acre man-made lake in which water was impounded in 1981, lies mostly in Chatham County. It has become a popular recreational attraction for the Research Triangle area.

Dr. James Rice, assistant professor and extension fisheries specialist at N.C. State, said that scientists from the university's zoology department will probe the ecology of Jordan Lake over a four-year period.

Arts Center

RALEIGH (AP) — NCNB officials and Charlotte civic leaders are asking the state to contrubute $15 million to $20 million toward a performing arts center developers hope to include in a $300 million complex in uptown Charlotte.

NCNB Corp. chairman Hugh McColl, likening the project to the N.C. School of Science and Mathematics, said a performing arts center would serve an educational purpose.

"Young people would have the opportunity to learn participation and observation, so that the facility would have lasting benefit to the state," he said.

College Applications Rise Unexpectedly

RALEIGH (AP) — College applications had been expected to decrease as the number of graduating high school students across the state began to decline in the early 1980s, but admissions officials at some University of North Carolina schools say they are swamped.

"We would like to have a free weekend during the spring instead of sitting here reading applications," said Anthony R. Strickland, an associate director of undergraduate admissions at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

North Carolina's high school class of 1987 is expected to number 65,800 students, 5,346 fewer than the class of 1977. The number of graduates increased slightly to 71,210 in 1982 but has dropped since then.

Campus admissions officials attribute the rise in applications in part to favorable national publicity about some campuses and to high school students who apply to five or six colleges instead of two or three.

Admissions officials at nine schools in the UNC system said last week that they had received more applications so far this year than they had last year. Two UNC schools reported decreases, and figures were not available for the other four schools.

"Frankly, we're a little surprised at the increases," Gary T. Barnes, UNC system associate vice president for planning, said. "We may have had some population increases we just haven't accounted for."

Growth at Appalachian State University in Boone — which reported a 17 percent increase in applicants from 5,325 last year to 6,233 this year — was attributed to the school's recent national news coverage.

At East Carolina University, which U.S. News & World Report ranked eighth for large, comprehensive schools in southern and border states, applications rose 6.5 percent to 7,068.

4-Year-Old Jessica Plays 2 Instruments

RICHMOND (AP) — Like any other just-turned-4-year-old, Jessica Lee leans toward Sesame Street and Mister Rogers' Neighborhood. But this youngster can also tell time, speak Korean, her parents' native tongue, as well as English and play the violin.

Woojung Lee, her mother, says Jessica at 2 was enthralled by an older friend's violin playing, and after she "begged for seven months," her parents bought her a small instrument of her own.

PRACTICE PRACTICE — Four-year-old Jessica Lee practices on her violin in her room in Richmond. She started playing the violin one year ago.

Jessica took to it immediately and played her first recognizable note on the way home from the store in the family car. Her continuing interest prompted her parents to sign her up for lessons with Anne Bakker Stokes, an instructor at St. Catherine's School, and a teacher of the Suzuki method.

"I thought maybe she'd quit after a month or two," said Mrs. Lee. After nearly a year of practice, and two recitals, Jessica had advanced to volume two of the program and can play dozens of songs.

"If she hears a note, she can play it on the violin," said Mrs. Lee, who accompanies Jessica on the piano when she practices.

Jessica also plays some songs on the piano and can even whip out tunes on her Mickey Mouse saxophone, one of her Christmas gifts.

HAPPY TUNES — Jessice Lee shares a laugh with her instructor Anne Bakker Stokes after a sour note.

MOVING MUSIC — Jessica Lee with violin and music book in hand walks to her lessons in Richmond.

Simple Bathroom Labels Are Best

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is regarding the letter in your column from "Proud Texan," who had asked for suggestions on how to label men's and women's washrooms in his new country-western club.

The hotel school in San Francisco (City College) makes a very strong point of stating that public rest rooms should be labeled "Men" and "Women." Their second choice is simply "Ladies" and "Gentlemen," but not recommended.

Never, never should they be "Cows" and "Bulls," "Senores" and "Senoritas," "Boys" and "Girls," "His" and "Hers," "Guys" and "Dolls," and on and on. I've been told that there are no hotel schools in Texas, so the "Heifers" and "Bulls" have to go to Stillwater, Okla., to learn these things. — SOONER IN ARIZONA

DEAR SOONER: The letter concerning what to put on rest room doors flushed out several interesting letters. For example:

DEAR ABBY: As an alternative for "Men" and "Women" on the doors of one club's rest rooms, it was handled this way in an Annapolis, Md., restaurant: "Buoys" and "Gulls." — DENNIS GORDON, LAGUNA HILLS, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I just read the column stating that females were offended to see "Cows" on the ladies' room door, but after it was changed to "Heifers," not one lady complained.

The Big Spur in Springdale, Utah, solved that problem with signs that say "Does" and "Bulls." — LYNN BORNHOLDT

DEAR ABBY: "Proud Texan's" letter reminded me of an embarrassing incident I experienced when I was in college a long time ago. My date took me to a brand-new country-western nightclub where the rest rooms were labeled "Fillies" and "Stallions."

Being a city girl, I knew nothing about horses, so I gambled, figuring I had a 50 percent chance of being right. Well, as luck would have it, I walked in on several "stallions." I don't know who was more embarrassed — the stallions, me, or my date who saw me going into the wrong bathroom!

Since then, I've seen some cutesy names for country-western rest rooms. For example: "Studs" and "Belles" and "Dudes" and "Dames," but I still prefer just plain "Men" and "Women." — CITY GIRL IN ALABAMA

CONFIDENTIAL TO YOU: If you want to see Dear Abby on TV, watch "Hollywood Squares" tonight. I'm on it — Monday through Friday — all this week.

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Color Association Makes Worldwide Predictions

By NANCY SHULINS
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A sleet storm is pelting Manhattan, painting its streets, sidewalks and skyscrapers a relentless gray, transforming the city into a monochrome broken only by the occasional streak of a yellow cab.

On the top floor of an office building in the center of a gray midtown block is a wall of clear plastic bins, each containing a fabric swatch of a different hue. At first glance, they all seem to be here — all the rich, vibrant colors that are missing on this colorless Tuesday. But look again.

These are not today's colors at all, says Margaret Walch, whose tweedy gray trousers echo the view from her windows. That's 1929's camel. This is the red of World War II.

Ms. Walch is director of the Color Association of the United States. Here at its world headquarters, shades of the past — the somber palette of the Depression, the sugary pastels of Eisenhower years, the avocado greens and harvest golds of '60s refrigerators — are labeled and stored in a library of sorts.

It's also a laboratory. Shades of the future — the four new pinks of '87, the colored neutrals of '88, the sleek, industrial tones of '89 — are here, too, already created by panels of experts who come together in a periodic exercise that is part sociology, part fashion, part hunch.

To the average consumer, fashion magazine headlines announcing the return of green or the departure of blue often seem puzzling and arbitrary. Says WHO, consumers ask, somewhat indignantly. Says Ellen Alpert of Macy's and Elaine Flowers of Echo Scarves, to name just two members of the Women's Color Committee of 1986.

To trained colorists like these, such pronouncements are logical progressions in a world where the color wheel is constantly spinning to reflect our rapidly shifting preferences.

It is the association's job to pinpoint — nearly two years in advance, for a clientele that ranges from the largest department store to the tiniest florist — those spokes that will best capture the colors we'll hunger for in the future.

The forecasts are delivered to fashion designers, textile mills, paint manufacturers and others who use them as guidelines for new products.

Twice a year, since 1917, CAUS has issued these forecasts for men's clothing, women's clothing and children's clothing; once a year for interior shades.

The extent to which the association's members rely on the forecasts depends upon several factors, Ms. Walch says. Among them, she says, is regionalism.

"It's a fact of life that the sun shines more in Albuquerque than it does in New York. As a result, colors can be more intense in the West and the Southwest than they are in the East."

And some designers — Alexander Julian, for example, whose menswear is marketed under the trade name "Colours" — are so strongly associated with rich hues that a forecast of neutrals, no matter how trendy, is apt to be shunned.

In the years since World War II, the association's job has gotten tougher. The wheel has been spinning ever faster to reflect our growing restlessness as well as our increased appetites for color.

Invariably, from time to time, history repeats itself.

"My generation grew up with a good deal of black and white," says Ms. Walch. "Our movies, slides, photographs, appliances and television all were black and white. But it takes little effort to make these things in color. Today's generation expects it."

So much so that today's color-saturated youth now equates black and white with innovation. Some of America's hottest clothing designers have rediscovered the black-and-white advertisement to capture the youth market's attention.

To Ms. Walch, a social historian whose credentials include authorship of a history of color, there is more to our national mood swings than meets the eye.

"Colors are a mirror of our times," she says. "We tend to view history in terms of words or symbols. It is possible to look back in terms of colors, too."

It's no coincidence to Ms. Walch that Americans favored black automobiles during the dark '30s, and pastel convertibles during the carefree '50s.

The patriotic years of World War II were reflected by an abundance of reds — the blued red of Old Glory, the regal red of the American Beauty rose. The '50s brought color conservatism — "wimpy pastels, sweet little pink sweaters sets, powder blues," says Ms. Walch.

The fashion revolution of the '60s changed all that with a decade of colored brights, what Ms. Walch calls "the Carnaby Street colors — royal blue, canary or lemon yellow, or true reds, all used together." The colors of youth.

Last year Amercans dressed down, favoring athletic wear punctuated by neon colors — "escapism," Ms. Walch says matter-of-factly.

For the most part, that escape was short-lived. Today's somber shades echo the dark tones of the '30s.

"There is something frightening out there. There's a lot of uncertainty," Ms. Walch says. "We've had some of the same kinds of shake-ups as we did during the Depression. And during the height of the Depression, the leading color was black."

Black, as in the dominant color of 1986.

The current preference for pink and yellow is equally predictable, Ms. Walch says. "There are two ways to respond to hard times," she explains. "First, there's the direct response. In a threatening environment, we tend to cover ourselves up or disappear in blacks and grays.

"The other response, when things are bad, is to do the opposite. A woman who feels exhausted does one of two things: Either she puts on red lipstick, a typical response, or she goes to the other extreme and wears no makeup at all.

"We're wearing black, yes, but we're also wearing pinks and yellows to express hope for a future that we're not quite so sure will exist."

That contradiction was neatly summed up recently in the Fifth Avenue windows of Bergdorf Goodman. The department store featured a display of yellow-and-black swimwear, a significant pairing to Ms. Walch.

"A poisonous combination in nature," she notes. "The colors of bumblebees and rattlesnakes."

We are, Ms. Walch says, right on schedule. Americans are getting tired of brights just in time for the colored neutrals that are starting to emerge.

"We want to give up color. We're tired of it — we're saturated with it. We've been purpled to death. But these neutrals will be different from the '40s neutrals, which were mostly beiges and grays.

"We're going to start seeing neutrals with a richness of color — pinky grays, blued pinks, greenish grays." The thyme gray, chamomile green and bronze moss forecast for spring and summer will provide us with a much-needed transition — ("You cannot move people violently!") — to 1988's new colors, sophisticated off-tones that will translate into dressier, more adult clothing.

Escapism is out. Coping is in.

"In '88, we'll be coming into more secure times. We are more capable of dealing with them. We'll have brightened up. There will be fewer protective colors and a very assured, sophisticated palette.

"This is highly speculative, but I read these colors as meaning we are coming of age in the 20th century. We have problems, but we're going to deal with them in a very adult manner."

Ms. Walch acknowledges that when it comes to analyzing color choices, it's easier to look backward than forward. Members of the selection committees do not, for the most part, choose colors on the basis of projected socio-economic or political conditions.

"They are cognizant of the issues; members of the men's committee discussed the new tax law and agreed that it's likely to mean change. But, like the rest of us, they don't really know what will happen," says Ms. Walch.

"For the most part, they're relying on highly intuitive, subjective feelings." That committee members tend to agree on their choices "isn't so surprising, considering these people are all living in the same time and place, they're all working in visual fields, and they're all looking around and paying attention."

Economic conditions are a factor in determining how much money consumers will have to spend on clothing in a given season. "When people have less money to spend, it's generally a good time to be in accessories, and accessories tend to take on high fashion colors," says Ms. Walch.

One welcome constant in the somewhat iffy area of color forecasting is the eye's frequent desire for change. If you doubt it, try wearing your favorite color for a week. Ms. Walch, who owns an abundance of blue man-tailored shirts, conducted just such an experiment. "After three days," she reports, "I felt very bad."

In time, of course, blue will be back. By the fall and winter of '88, neutrals will deepen into machine bronze, petroleum blue, locomotive green, airliner claret and streamlined gray — complex colors for a complex time. High-tech colors for a generation that has grown up with computers.

Perhaps the biggest news of all, says Ms. Walch, will be the return of green — the color of growth, change and youth.

No, not the rich forest green or the spruce green that looks just right to 1986 eyes. Not even what Ms. Walch calls "the likable greens" — the teals and aquas that are coming next year to help us get used to the idea.

The greens she's talking about, the ones due to arrive by 1989-90, are the yellowish greens and the greenish yellows — dead ringers for the harvest golds and avocado greens of '60s refrigerators.

Tell Ms. Walch that you don't like harvest gold and avocado green and she smiles indulgently and looks almost pleased. "Of course you don't," she agrees calmly. "But you will."

It helps to know that these colors won't show up on refrigerators, which Ms. Walch predicts are more likely to be gray. These greens will be more apt to appear on living room walls. (The application of old colors in new, unexpected places — pink sneakers, say, or bright red tape players — is very much an '80s phenomenon.)

"When a color doesn't look right to you, it's usually because it's too far ahead or too far behind. It's on one or the other extreme of a bell curve," says Ms. Walch.

"Keep in mind, too, that we all carry a lot of baggage from our particular generation. In the '60s, harvest gold and avocado green appliances represented choice. Today, those of us who grew up with them look at those colors and see only limitation. But trend-setters are going to like them again."

In the next several years, the past will continue to haunt us. Cotton slips. Art deco. Black tie. They're all coming back.

So, says Ms. Walch, is polyester.

Not to worry, however. We aren't due to love it until '89.

New Bern Spring Historic Tour Set For Early April

NEW BERN — The New Bern spring historic homes and garden tour will be held April 3 and 4 followed by the Tryon Palace Gardeners Sunday April 5.

Approximately 15 privately restored homes and historic landmarks from the mid-18th century through the early 20th century will be open to the public from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The tour is sponsored by the New Bern Historical Society and the New Bern Preservation Foundation. Events include guilting, spinning, weaving demonstrations and an antique car display.

Homes on the tour include the Palmer-Tisdale House, ca. 1769, the Coor-Bishop House, ca. 1768, the Kafer-Read House, a 1905 Victorian row house; the Christian Science Reading Room, ca. 1850, the St. Peter's AME Zion Church, ca. 1922, and St. Cyprian's Episcopal Church, a brick Gothic Revival structure built 1907-13.

A workshop on bulbs will be held April 4 at 10 a.m. in the Tryon Palace Reception Center auditorium. Tryon Palace Horticulturist Herb Rea will conduct the workshop.

On April 3, from 7 to 10 p.m. a street dance will be held and a formal tea will be held from 2 to 4 p.m. at the Coor-Gaston house April 5.

The North Carolina State University Pipes and Drums will play Scottish music on the Palace South Lawn.

Tickets for the tour are available by writing to: New Bern Historic Homes and Garden Tour, P.O. Box 207, New Bern, N.C. 28560 or by calling 633-6448.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market turned downward today, giving up some of Friday's late gains.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had hit record highs in each of the last four sessions, slipped 1.42 to 2,332.10 in the first half hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by more than 2 to 1 in the overall tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 373 up, 851 down and 399 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 26.76 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Among actively traded blue chips, General Electric rose ⅞ to 108⅛; Coca-Cola ⅜ to 47¾, and American Telephone & Telegraph ⅝ to 24⅝. But American Express dropped ⅝ to 76⅝.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks ost .26 to 169.11. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .36 at 338.16.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average soared 33.95 to 2,333.52, stretching its gain for the week to 74.86 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 5 to 2 on the NYSE, with 1,182 up, 456 down and 333 unchanged. Big Board volume came to 234.01 million shares, up from 166.12 million Thursday and the eighth largest total on record.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Bessie Hopkins of the home; three sons, Robert Jack Spell of Philadelphia, Calvin Bullock of Pinetops and Robert Lee Hopkins Jr. of Tarboro; two stepdaughters, Mrs. Carolyn Massenburg and Ms. Yvonne Jones, both of Conetoe; one stepson, Forest Andrews III of Conetoe; six sisters, Mrs. Josephine Lynch and Mrs. Estella Bell, both of Tarboro, Mrs Mamie Staton and Mrs. Vina Smith, both of Washington, Mrs. Annie Staton of Bronx, N.Y., and Mrs. Louise Billip of Virginia; eight brothers, Walter Hopkins of Conetoe, the Rev. David Tyson, Clarence Tyson, Joe Tyson and Elijah Howard, all of Tarboro, Henry Tyson of Bethel, the Rev. Jesse Tyson and Charlie Tyson, both of Washington, and six grandchildren.

The family receive friends Tuesday from 8 p.m. to 9 p.m. in Hemby-Willoughby Mortuary in Tarboro. At other times, the family will be at the home.

King

FARMVILLE — A funeral for Mrs. Rosa (Jack) Smith King will be conducted Tuesday from Lewis' Chapel Free Will Baptist Church at 1 p.m. by Bishop J.H. Vines.

She was a native of Pitt County and attended the public schools. She was a member of Lewis' Chapel Church and served on the Senior Usher Board. She belonged to American Legion Auxiliary No. 372 of Farmville.

Surviving are one son, Edward King of Farmville; one daughter, Mrs. Annie Mae Carmon of Baltimore; four sisters, Mrs. Beatrice Streeter of Farmville, Mrs. Helen Johnson of Greenville, Mrs. Mary Lee Chance and Ms. Delores Smith, both of Stanford, Conn.; four brothers, Willie Smith of Bronx, N.Y., David Smith of New Haven, Conn., Jessie Smith of Raleigh and the Rev. Eddie Alonzo Smith Jr. of Farmville, seven grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

The family will receive friends today from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. in Joyner's Memorial Chapel.

Rouse

Mrs. Bonnie Williams Rouse, 72, of Route 3, Greenville, died Sunday in Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Her graveside service will be conducted Tuesday at 2 p.m. in Pinewood Memorial Park by the Rev. Dan Rivers.

A native of Pitt County, she spent all her life in the Black Jack community. She was a retired farmer and attended Hopewell Pentecostal Holiness Church.

Surviving are three sons, Ned H. Rouse, Woodie M. Rouse and Michael E. Rouse, all of Greenville; a foster daughter, Mrs. Libby Smith of Greenville; three brothers, Charlie Williams and Wilbur Williams, both of Greenville, and John Williams of Hampton, Va.; one sister, Mrs. Leona Tripp of Greenville, five grandchildren and one great-grandson.

The family will receive friends at Wilkerson Funeral Home from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. today.

Staton

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Miss Ruby Lee Staton, 45, formerly of Greenville, died Saturday at Howard University Hospital. Funeral arrangements will be announced by Phillips Brothers Mortuary, Greenville.

Tyson

Archie Reid Tyson, 68, of Stokes, died Friday in Amsterdam, Holland. Funeral arrangements will be announced by Wilkerson Funeral Home.

so he can rest and then get on with what he has always done."

However, a fellow clergyman, the Rev. Charles Bergstrom, director of the office for governmental affairs for the Lutheran Council, criticized Roberts' tactics.

"I think many of us are embarrassed by the fact that someone would use encounters with God or the devil or both to raise funds," he said today on ABC's "Good Morning America" program.

Ministry officials have failed to acknowledge whether the donation would put Roberts over the $8 million goal, although officials said last week the fund drive was about $1 million short.

Collins, 79, a former state legislator who owns two greyhound tracks, told The Orlando Sentinel on Saturday that he was not specifically moved by Roberts' claim that he would die without the money, but added, "To be sure, he doesn't have to commit hari-kari now."

were able to go and play," said Principal Charles Long.

Farmville Central lost to Salisbury in the 2-A basketball championship 63-45 in Chapel Hill Saturday.

But the school came from the blow of having two players removed from the team for disciplinary reasons to "a long winning streak and a desire to excel," Long said. Farmville Central had a 23-6 season.

"Everything worked beautifully except the results of the game," he said. "We sold 420 advance tickets to the game," at a school that has 690 students enrolled. "We're real proud of that," he said.

"Coach Mike Terrell has done a super job with those boys. I can't find anything negative" about the basketball program," Long said.

Long also said,"We at Farmville Central are also very proud of D.H. Conley. People of Pitt County should be very proud" of both schools.

Demjanjuk Judges Reject Demand They Leave Case

JERUSALEM (AP) — The judges hearing the trial of retired Ohio autoworker John Demjanjuk rejected a defense request today that they disqualify themselves from the Nazi war crimes case and ordered the trial resumed immediately.

"Let us state unequivocally. The court has had no hostility either towards Mr. Sheftel, the defense, or the defendant they represent," Presiding Judge Dov Levine told the court.

"We have acted with unusual leniency in this case," said Levine. "Because of the gravity of the charges hanging over the accused, we have been unusually patient."

Yoram Sheftel, the Israeli lawyer who made the request claiming the judges were biased against his client, replied that he would appeal the decision to the Supreme Court and asked that the trial be suspended until then.

Levine turned down this request as well, saying that a postponement would harm the proceedings and constitute "a miscarriage of justice to the defendant himself, who has already been in detention an extensive amount of time."

Demjanjuk, 66, a former autoworker for Ford Motor Co., was brought to Israel in February 1986.

Sheftel and American attorneys Mark O'Connor and John Gill are defending Demjanjuk, who is charged with being a sadistic guard at the Treblinka death camp known as "Ivan the Terrible."

The guard Ivan beat and stabbed victims before switching on the gas chambers at Treblinka in Nazi-occupied Poland, where 850,000 Jews died.

Demjanjuk claims he is the victim of mistaken identity and says he was an inmate at two prisoner-of-war camps after being captured by the Nazis while serving in the Soviet Red Army.

Sheftel accused the judges of interrupting defense cross-examination 34 times last week, saying 21 of the interruptions were "unjustified."

In many of these cases, Sheftel said, the judges overruled the defense questions even though the prosecution raised no objection.

He was particularly angry over a court decision rejecting as evidence a ruling by a Florida court in a 1978 hearing against another accused Nazi criminal, Fedor Federenko.

The Florida judgment showed that Eugen Turowski, a former Treblinka inmate who has since died, was unable to identify Fedorenko in the U.S. proceedings.

Miriam Radiwker, an 80-year-old former Israeli police investigator, told the Demjanjuk court last Wednesday that Turowski had positively identified both Fedorenko and Demjanjuk as Treblinka guards.

The three judges refused to accept the Florida judgment because it included conclusions which could affect the current trial. They told the defense to bring the judge or another court official to testify in Israel.

Sheftel said it would cost the defense $3,000 to $5,000 to bring a court official from Florida to Israel. He said the ruling showed "an attitude of incredible hostility to the defense" which "was merely the (last) straw."

A prosecuting attorney said Sheftel's arguments had not succeeded in pointing to any real bias.

"We are seeing things here that happen every day in any court room," said attorney Michael Shaked.

Former Justice Minister Yitzhak Modai attended the morning session, held in a movie theater which has been converted into a courtroom. Standing-room-only crowds have attended the trial since it opened on Feb. 16.

Brandt Resigns

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Willy Brandt, former West German chancellor and a Nobel Peace Prize laureate, resigned today as chairman of the opposition Social Democrats.

Brandt, who had led Germany's oldest political party since 1964, quit amid a party uproar over his selection of a Greek woman and non-party member, Margarita Mathiopoulos, as the Social Democrats' chief spokeswoman.

Miss Mathiopoulos, 30, withdrew her candidacy a few hours before Brandt's resignation, which came after a week of internal party controversy over her appointment.

Brandt's resignation was announced this afternoon by deputy party chairman Johannes Rau, the Social Democrats' unsuccessful candidate for chancellor in the Jan. 25 federal election.

Iraq Steps Up Blitz

(See IRAQ, A-10)

Iranian ground offensive ran out of steam.

Iraqi war jets were diverted to counter the Iranian thrusts, but in recent weeks resumed attacks on Iranian tankers.

At least 15 Iranian tankers were hit this year, the latest on Saturday.

Lloyd's of London today identified the vessel as the 162,046-ton Avaj, owned by the state-run National Iranian Tanker Co., and said one crewman was killed.

Baghdad Radio quoted the military spokesman as saying the raids Sunday and today were part of a "continuing effort to deprive Iran's rulers of their oil which they use for aggressive purposes."

Iran's oil exports are its main source of revenue to pay for the costly war.

In Washington, U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said Sunday that America was ready to use force to keep the gulf open to shipping in the face of Iran's deployment of the HY-2 missiles at the Strait of Hormuz.

Tehran Radio quoted an unidentified Foreign Ministry spokesman as saying Sunday that Iran "will decisively counter any foreign powers' presence that leads to increasing instability and tension in the region.

"Iran therefore warns America and other foreign powers that any interference by them ... will be met by a strong response from Iran and other Moslems in the world."

The Middle East Economic Survey, an authoritative oil weekly published in Nicosia, said Washington has warned Tehran through diplomatic channels against using missiles to close the Strait of Hormuz, which is up to 40 miles wide.

U.S. officials said Thursday a U.S. aircraft carrier battle group had moved into the northern Arabian Sea, within range of the Iranian missile batteries.

Florida Boy Needs Another Transplant

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A boy whose need for a new liver generated a nationwide flood of donations, including $1,000 from President Reagan, has deteriorated into critical condition and must undergo a second transplant, officials said.

Seven-year-old Ronnie DeSillers on Sunday was moved into intensive care at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh after doctors learned a virus had irreparably damaged his transplanted organ, said Debbie Lesniak, a nursing supervisor.

The Florida boy has been placed on the waiting list for a donor liver, said spokeswoman Lynn McMahon.

"Ronnie's need is urgent," she said Sunday night. "It's very difficult to predict the course of this virus. ... but with every passing day, his need increases."

Ms. McMahon said the boy's problem was not that his body was rejecting the organ he received during a 12-hour operation Feb. 24, although there had been signs of that last week when he was listed in serious condition.

The virus that attacked Ronnie's system is "affecting the function of the liver. It cannot be corrected through medication," Ms. McMahon said.

Ronnie's condition has deteriorated since last week, when he began to run a fever of 105 to 106 degrees and began vomiting, Ms. DeSillers said.

Driving To Victory

Hoosiers Slip Past LSU For Trip To Final Four

CINCINNATI (AP) — A rebound of an air ball with seven seconds to play has third-ranked Indiana on the way to the Final Four.

Rick Calloway, a sophomore from Cincinnati, gave the Hoosiers their first lead since halftime and the 77-76 victory Sunday, depriving Louisiana State o its second consecutive Final Four appearance, this one 90 miles from campus.

Top-seeded Indiana, 28-4, which is making its fourth Final Four appearance under Coach Bob Knight, will face the West Regional champion Saturday in New Orleans.

Daryl Thomas took the shot in the lane that Calloway converted.

"We wanted to get the ball in Steve's (Alford) hands," Thomas said. "I flashed across the middle and got the ball. I tried to draw a foul but there was no contact. I was looking for contact and I pinched the ball and it was short."

Calloway wasn't.

"I had a clear path to the basket," Calloway said. "Usually you grab the ball, come down and then go back up. But they had bigger guys inside and I thought I might not get off another good shot."

A turnaround jumper by Louisiana State's Nikita Wilson at the buzzer fell off the rim.

Louisiana State, 24-15, the 10th seed in the region, broke from a 47-46 halftime deficit with seven straight points. After Indiana scored four in a row, the Tigers went on a 12-0 run as Indiana went scoreless for 5:10. Wilson scored six of the points in the run that gave Louisiana State a 63-41 lead with 12:26 to play.

"They changed their defense a little at the start of the second half," said Alford, who scored 18 of his 20 points in the first half. "Nikita and (Oliver) Brown came out on me, and we didn't notice that right away."

When Indiana did, things turned the Hoosiers way.

Louisiana State led 75-66 when Calloway missed a dunk with 4:38 to play. Following a televison timeout, the Hoosiers took over.

Dean Garrett, who finished with 17 points and 15 rebounds, dunked a rebound and Joe Hillman, who had been inserted into the game by Knight for the first time at the timeout, converted a three-point play after a steal by Thomas to make it 75-73 with 3:45 to play.

"Hillman made the play of the game," Knight said. "It was like a pinch hitter hitting a tying home run in the ninth inning. He took the ball over a big guy, then had to wait to take the free throw and then made it."

Hillman had replaced Keith Smart, whom Knight wanted to settle down.

"Smart had made some mistakes on the defensive end and on passes, and we wanted to settle him down," Knight said.

Thomas made two free throws with 3:06 to play and the Hoosiers were within two.

The Tigers then went into a delay game with three guards in the lineup. The teams traded turnovers until Darryl Joe of Louisiana State was fouled by Smart with 50 seconds left. He made the front end of the 1-and-1, but Smart answered with two free throws with 40 seconds left when he grabbed a rebound of his own miss.

"I thought the stall was the turning point," Smart said. "It gave us the opportunity to trap, get deflections and go for steals."

"It's good strategy," Louisiana State Coach Dale Brown said of the spread offense. "I'd do it again if I had the opportunity."

Fess Irvin, who scored 14 points for the Tigers as a reserve, went to the foul line with 26 seconds left and missed, setting the stage for Calloway's rebound basket.

"Daryl did a good job getting that last shot off," Knight said. "(Jose) Vargas and (Nikita) Wilson did a good job of not fouling."

Thomas finished with 16 points and Calloway had 11 as the Hoosiers outscored the Tigers 21-4 from the free-throw line.

Alford, who made four of nine shots from the field, made all 10 of his free-throw attempts and handed out seven assists.

Nikita Wilson led the Tigers with 20 points, while Anthony Wilson had 15 and Bernard Woodside 13.

Indiana is the first Big Ten team to advance to the Final Four since the Hoosiers won the 1981 national championship.

Knight has won the title twice, 1976 and 1981, in his three previous appearances.

Louisiana State was the only team from last year's field of eight to reach that stage again this year.

Knight was assessed a technical foul by referee Tom Fraim with 11:39 left in the first half when he walked onto the court during a timeout to clarify a call. Anthony Wilson made one of the two free throws to tie the score 18-18.

Sides Redeems Himself As Pirates Sweep By Dukes

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Sunday afternoon's East Carolina baseball game against James Madison seemed to be a nightmare for Steve Sides, the junior second baseman. He committed a rare double error in a five-error seventh inning that allowed the Dukes to inch back out in front.

Then, on a couple of other occasions, he bobbled the ball and still managed to make the plays in a shaky way.

But, when it finally came down to brass tacks, Sides was there with the key base hit in the bottom of the 11th inning that allowed East Carolina to take a 4-3 victory in the game.

The victory meant a sweep of the team that many considered a prime candidate — along with Richmond — to win the Colonial Athletic Association championship this year.

And, Coach Gary Overton said, it put the Pirates in the driver's seat. "The rest of the conference, for now at least, is in the position of having to chase us."

Sunday's victory came a whole lot harder than did the 9-3 and 8-2 wins in Saturday's doubleheader — yet it was every bit as sweet.

"To get a chance to make the key hit felt good," Sides said. "Twice I came up in key spots and they walked me (intentionally). But to get the chance in the 11th really felt good, especially after the seventh inning. Up until that point, I had gotten nothing to hit until that one pitch."

That one pitch was right where Sides wanted it and he lofted it into left field, driving in John Thomas with the winning run.

"I thought we got another fine pitching performance from Craig Van Deventer and Jake Jacobs," Overton said. "They both threw well. Their pitcher (Mike Linskey) also threw quite well, too.

"I thought James Madison played a lot harder than they did on Saturday," Overton continued. But you have to give credit to our players for coming back like they did."

The Pirates had to dodge bullets from the Dukes on several occasions, as they failed to come up with scores after good threats in the eighth, ninth, 10th and 11th innings. ECU, too, had its opportunities, especially in the seventh and ninth, but got nothing from them.

Madison, just as it did in the first two games, struck first, getting a run in the first inning. Steve Schwartz singled and Jeff Garber beat out a bunt. Both moved up on an out and Schwartz scored on Dave Kennett's ground out.

East Carolina squandered a chance in the second. Jay McGraw walked, stole second and raced on to third on an error on the play. But after a strikeout, he tried to score on a fly to short right and was thrown out at the plate.

The Pirates left a runner at second in the third and again in the fourth.

Van Deventer, who had retired 12 straight batters gave up his only walk in the fifth to Nick DiVincentis, who was sacrificed to second. He then scored on a double by Sam Rose for a 2-0 lead.

But the Pirates rallied for two in the bottom of the inning to tie it up. John Adams opened with a single and Mike Andrews and Thomas both walked, loading the bases. Consecutive groundouts by David Ritchie and Sides brought in Adams and Andrews.

Madison then went back out in a terrible defensive inning for the Pirates in the seventh. Scott Mackie led off and reached on an error. He then dashed all the way to third when a pickoff attempt by Van Deventer went all the way to the bullpen. With two away, Rose grounded back to Sides, who dropped the ball, then threw late and wide to allow Mackie to score and Rose to move on to second. Rich Belanger — son of former Baltimore Oriole shortstop Mark Belanger — reached when Ritchie bobbled his grounder, putting runners at the corner.

"You know, it's lucky that with five errors, they only scored one run," Overton said.

Vikes Heeded Advice And Rolled To Title

CHAPEL HILL — Though D.H. Conley held a 22-20 halftime lead over North Gaston en route to a 64-55 win that gave the Vikings the state 3-A basketball title, it was three halftime adjustments that aided the win, according to Viking Coach Walter Claybrook.

"The guys took to heart what we told them at halftime," Claybrook said. "We had several people forcing things. We told them to let their game come to them. The second thing we told them was we have to help out on defense.

"The third thing, which I think was the most important, I told them we had to hit the boards and be more aggressive."

The Vikings had connected on only 33 percent of their shots in the first half but hit 60 percent in the second half.

A perfect example was senior forward Ricky Farrow. The teams' leading scorer, he had only four points at the half on a 2-6 shooting performance but came back to hit six of his 10 second half shots on the way to a team-high 16 points.

"I think our team played real typical," Claybrook said. "I call them a working class team. We're not real pretty. The biggest thing the guys learned is they don't quit. They keep coming at you."

Conley also benefitted from a strong team performance overall. Sherwood Wilder came off the bench to score nine points, seven in the first half.

"That's one thing we've tried to do all year," Claybrook said. "We've tried to use our bench. I think they did an excellent job. Wilder was extremely loose in the lockerroom. I think he did a good job.

"I think we showed tonight that we're a balanced team. We had other people come forward."

Troy Ebron scored 12 points and Phil Medlin added 11 as the Vikings placed three players in double figures.

North Gaston coach Hal White also felt the Vikings' balance played a big role.

"In the other games (of the playoffs), we only had one or two players we had to stop," he said. "They are well rounded."

Ebron, who took home Most Valuable Player honors, summed it up best.

Tom Morris

"It's playing together as a team and staying together as a team," he said.

□ □ □

North Gaston's loss destroyed a storybook finish for the Wildcats.

They finished the regular season at 10-14, the fifth-place team in the Southwestern 2-A. They then went on a five-game winning streak, culminationg in the trip to the state championship.

White said he hoped the Wildcats' accomplishments will serve as an inspiration to other teams next year.

"I feel every team in North Carolina should feel that if they get to the sectional, they can make it," he said.

□ □ □

Once the Vikings were able to get ahead in the second half, it forced a strategy change for the Wildcats.

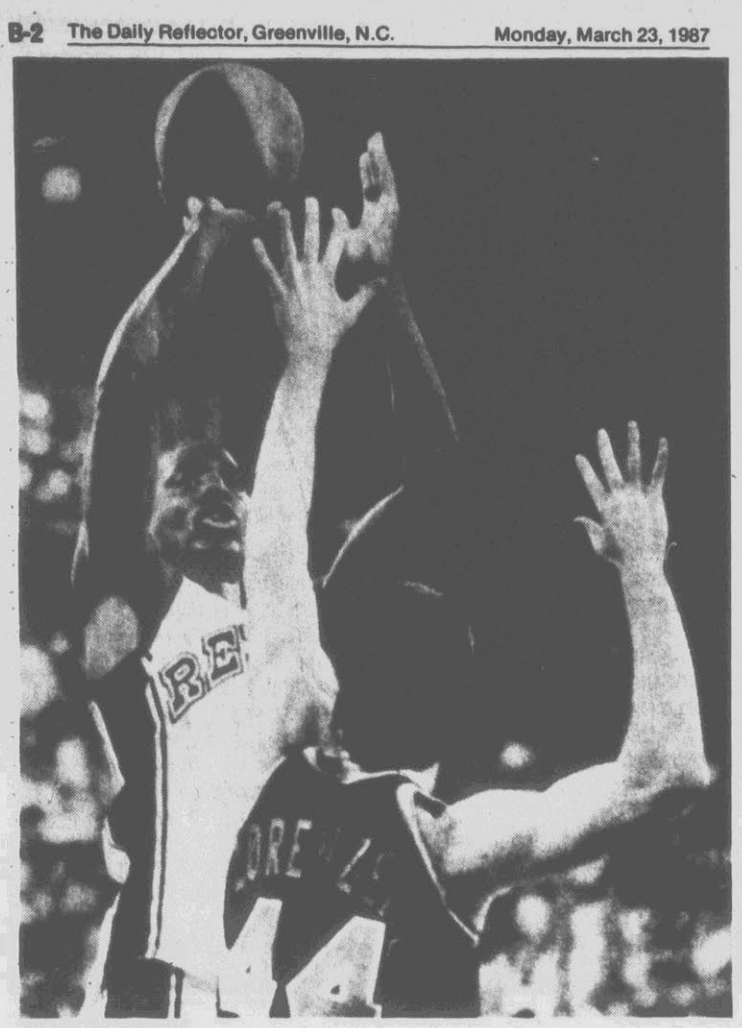

"We really wanted to get ahead and stick in our 2-3 zone," White said. "Our theory was we wanted to make them beat us from outside. We got down and had to go and attack them."

Claybrook said he had hoped to pull the Wildcats out of their zone but instead North Gaston just extended it. By doing so, it created openings for the Vikings underneath.

North Gaston also suffered some defensive break downs on its full-court press.

Last week in the regional final against Bartlett-Yancey, Conley had trouble scoring against full-court pressure. However, this week, Ebron was able to beat the pressure and drive in for layups.

"In practice this week, we worked on it (handling the press) hard," Ebron said. "We worked on a new play to get me open and the basket was open the majority of the time."

UNLV Rallies To Top Iowa

SEATTLE (AP) — It was time to start doing what Nevada-Las Vegas does best — shoot the 3-pointer.

"I knew I was either going to start making the shot or we were going to lose," Paddio said.

Paddio, who missed all five of his first-half 3-pointers, hit four in a row in a 27-4 second-half surge, and teammate Freddie Banks hit three of his as Nevada-Las Vegas rallied to beat sixth-ranked Iowa 84-81 and win a berth in the NCAA Final Four.

The Runnin' Rebels trailed by as many as 19 points in the first half and 18 in the second half before their surge. Paddio and Banks combined for 23 of UNLV's 27 points in the run that wiped out Iowa's big lead.

"God bless Gerald Paddio in the second half," Coach Jerry Tarkanian said.

Paddio, one of three designated UNLV gunners, had been mired in a deep late season slump and hit only one of seven 3-pointers in the semifinals against Wyoming before missing his first five against Iowa.

"I kept telling him to keep going and one of these days he would hit all of them," Tarkanian said. "The worst thing you can do to a shooter is to get his head screwed up."

Iowa took advantage of UNLV's poor shooting and a strong inside game to romp to a 58-42 halftime advantage. But UNLV, which came back from huge deficits to win the preseason NIT, refused to quit.

"We've been down worse than this before," said Gary Graham, who hit two free throws with 10 seconds left to give UNLV its final victory margin. "I don't ever believe we're going to lose. I don't care if we're down by 20."

Iowa Coach Tom Davis said his team was well aware of UNLV's comeback capabilities. Still, there seemed little Iowa could do to stem the onslaught.

"We knew at halftime the game was far form over because they have been that type of ball club all year," said Davis. "We talked about that, but Vegas came out the second half and just took it to us."

The victory moved UNLV into the Final Four for the first time in 10 years and only the second time in the school's history.

"It was to be one of the best (victories) ever," Tarkanian said. "We were not only getting beat, we were getting humiliated. You would have to think our season was going to be pretty much over when that happens."

Iowa had a chance to tie the score at the buzzer, but Kevin Gamble, who threw away a pass with 14 seconds left, missed a 23-footer.

The victory sends UNLV into a Saturday matchup against Indiana in New Orleans and gave the Runnin' Rebels a 37-1 mark, tying the record for most wins in a season set last year by Duke.

With UNLV trailing 62-44 early in the second half, Banks hit a 3-point shot and the Runnin' Rebels were on their way.

After the two teams traded baskets, Paddio, who had missed his first six 3-pointers, hit his first of four. Banks followed that two free throws.

Suddenly, UNLV was within seven points, trailing 66-59. Paddio then hit three straight 3-pointers to give UNLV a lead at 10:07 of the second half, and the Rebels never trailed again. Banks capped a 27-4 run by the Runnin' Rebels with another 3-pointer with 8:26 remaining to make it 71-66.

Iowa refused to fold, however, moving to within 82-78 on a basket by guard B.J. Armstrong with 2:05 remaining. The two teams then exchanged steals before Banks missed a free throw, and Iowa got the ball with about a minute left.

Gamble hit a 3-point shot with 33 seconds left to pull within 82-81 and Iowa used its zone press to keep UNLV from reaching the half-court line within the required 10 seconds, forcing a turnover.

Gamble, on what appeared to be a designed play to 7-foot Brad Lohaus inside, hit the backboard with his pass, giving UNLV the ball with 14 seconds left.

Graham made both his free throws after being fouled with 10 seconds left, setting up the final missed shot by Gamble, who had put Iowa in the West Regional finals by hitting a 3-point basket in overtime to beat Oklahoma on Friday.

Gilliam, who kept UNLV in the game through a miserable first half performance, led all scorers with 27 points while Paddio had 20 and Banks added 17 for the Runnin' Rebels.

Gamble and B.J. Armstrong both had 18 points for Iowa. Lohaus added 12 points, 10 of them in the first half.

The second half was a complete reversal from a first half dominated by Iowa. The Hawkeyes used a strong inside game and UNLV's cold outside shooting to break open a close game and lead 54-35 with 2:09 remaining.

Paddio was 0-5 from behind the 3-point line in the half and Banks was only 1-6. As a team, UNLV shot 38 percent in the first half while Iowa shot 73 percent, mostly from inside.

Those percentages reversed themselves in the second half, however, as UNLV shot 54 percent from the field and hit seven of 13 3-pointers. Iowa grew cold, shooting 36 percent in the second half. Iowa attempted only six 3-point shots during the game, hitting two of them, while UNLV was 11-of-30 for the game.

The tone for UNLV's first half was set in the opening seconds when Banks missed the first shot of the game and Paddio grabbed the long rebound, only to miss a 3-point attempt.

Iowa ran to a quick 4-0 lead but UNLV came back to take its first lead of the game, 7-6, on a stuff by Jarvis Basnight with 17:35 left in the half.

The Hawkeyes then made a 12-2 run to take an 18-9 lead, but UNLV clawed back on a run led by Gilliam. The Runnin' Rebels took their final lead of the first half when Graham hit a 3-point shot to make it 30-29 with 8:24 left in the half.

Three-Point Shot Helped Rebels Get Back In Game

SEATTLE (AP) — Jerry Tarkanian knew what was coming if his team had lost to Iowa.

"You writers would say we lived by the 3-point shot and died by the 3-point shot," said the Nevada-Las Vegas coach, whose top-ranked Runnin' Rebels led the nation all season in making 3-pointers.

UNLV certainly appeared terminal Sunday, making only four of 17 3-point attempts while falling behind 58-42 at halftime to the sixth-ranked Hawkeyes. UNLV's top gunners, Gerald Paddio and Freddie Banks, were a combined 1-for-11 from 3-point range and to most teams it would have seemed hopeless.

But this wasn't most teams.

This was a UNLV team that was down by 17 points to Temple in the preseason National Invitation Tournament and won the game on a last-second 3-point shot by Paddio.

This was a UNLV team that used the 3-point shot to rally from 21 points down at halftime to beat Western Kentucky in the NIT final at Madison Square Garden.

And, like those early games, this was a Runnin' Rebel team that could force the tempo in the second half and fire 3-pointers without trepidation.

"We encourage our kids to do it," Tarkanian said. "Some day, when we don't hit them, we'll get beat."

In a season where the 3-point basket was introduced to all of college basketball, this was a team that used it best, riding it to a Final Four appearance in New Orleans next Saturday afternoon against No. 3 Indiana.

"We won 36 games by the outside shot, we weren't going to stop now," Tarkanian said.

For Iowa, the slide to an 84-81 defeat started with 17:40 left in the game on a 3-point basket from the right corner by Banks. It was still 62-47, but the shot seemed to inspire the Runnin' Rebels, perhaps telling them that they had not yet run out of miracle finishes, not yet run out of some Vegas luck.

"You gotta be good and you gotta be lucky," said Tarkanian, "today we were lucky."

After Banks' basket, Paddio, who had suffered through a devastating slump in the season's final nine games, came to life.

The same shooter who missed all five of his 3-point attempts in the first half suddenly ignited, hitting his next four 3-point attempts, including three straight, to help put UNLV ahead for good 68-66 with 10:11 left.

"I knew I was either going to start making the shot or we were going to lose," said Paddio, a 6-foot-8 junior.

"I kept telling him to keep going and one of these days he would hit all of them," Tarkanian said.

Banks, a senior guard, hit two more 3-pointers during the 27-4 run that turned a commanding Iowa lead into a margin that UNLV never relinquished.

"They were coming down and sticking in 3-pointers," Iowa guard Kevin Gamble said. "That was the turning point in the game."

That UNLV would shoot 3-pointers was no surprise to Iowa. After all, the Runnin' Rebels put up 716 3-point attempts in their first 37 games, hitting 285 for a 40 percent average. One out of every four shots UNLV put up during the season was from behind the 3-point line.

"We knew as a team that UNLV was capable of hitting 3-pointers," Iowa's Ed Horton said.

Exhibition Doesn't Count For Morris

By The Associated Press

Jack Morris gets paid very well to win baseball games when it counts. And judging from his exhibition record this season, he feels that way, too.

Morris was dismantled Sunday in the Detroit Tigers' 15-3 loss to Houston. The Astros scored their first seven runs off Morris, who suffered his second successive rough outing, falling to 0-3 while raising his spring earned run average to 8.91.

Exhibition Results

Yankees 11, Orioles 5

In Fort Lauderdale, Dave Winfield's three-run homer keyed a five-run New York third inning and Rickey Henderson and Ron Kittle added solo shots to power the Yankees past Baltimore. Don Mattingly was hit on the arm by a pitch and is expected to be sidelined for two or three days.

Cardinals 4, White Sox 2

In Sarasota, Jim Lindeman went 3-for-4 with a homer and to RBI to help St. Louis beat Chicago. Lindeman, the Cardinals' top pick in the 1983 summer draft, is hitting .400 this spring with three home runs.

Red Sox 8, Blue Jays 5

In Winter Haven, Glenn Hoffman drove in four runs with a double and a bases-loaded walk in consecutive innings leading Boston over Toronto.

Dodgers 6, Braves 5

In Vero Beach, pinch-hitter Bill Madlock doubled in the winning run with two outs in the bottom of the eighth inning to lift Los Angeles to over Atlanta. Madlock's double came after pitcher Ed Olwine had allowed the tying run to score on a wild pitch.

Twins 11, Expos 8

In West Palm Beach, Ron Washington hit a grand slam and Randy Bush added a two-run homer to power Minnesota over Montreal. The Expos outhit the Twins 18-11, but stranded nine baserunners.

Royals 4, Pirates 1

In Fort Myers, Danny Jackson, Steve Shirley and Dan Quisenberry combined for a one-hitter as Kansas City defeated Pittsburgh. Tony Pena's sixth-inning ground ball single off Jackson was the only Pirates' hit.

Blue Jays 11, Rangers 2

In Dunedin, Rance Mulliniks went 4-for-4 with five runs batted in to help a Toronto split squad beat Texas. The game also marked the return of Toronto reliever Gary Lavelle, who missed the 1986 season with an injured elbow.

Pirates 11, Phillies 8

In Clearwater, with the Phillies leading 8-7, Sid Bream doubled off Don Carman, who walked three straight batters with two outs to tie the score. R.J. Reynolds followed with a chopper to third that went for a run-scoring single and Junior Ortiz then hit a two-run single.

ECU ...

The Pirates then blew an excellent chance in the bottom of the seventh. Adams led off with an infield hit and was sacrificed up. Thomas hit one up into the wind to left center that finally fell against the fence, but Adams had to hold up on the chance of a catch and got only to third as Thomas pulled into second. With two away, Sides was intentionally walked and a strikeout ended that threat.

In the bottom of the eighth, however, Jim Riley cracked his third homer of the season, knotting it at 3-3.

Madison, however, had the chance to score in the top of the eighth and failed, leaving a runner stranded at second. In the ninth, the Dukes again had a great opportunity and failed, leaving runners at second and third after moving them that far with only one out.

The 10th again saw them put men on second and third with just one away, only to fail to score. And in the 11th, the Dukes saw a double, a walk and a sacrifice go to naught.

The Pirates had an opportunity in the bottom of the ninth but couldn't take advantage of it. Andrews singled and moved up on an error. He was sacrificed to third, but died there after two intentional walks loaded the bases. A strikeout and a grounded ended that threat.

But finally in the 11th, the Pirates got the win. With one out, Thomas walked and stole second. After a second out, Sides finally got the chance to make up for his defensive play, and made the most of it.

His line drive to left didn't make it that far, but the throw to try and get Thomas was just wide of the plate, allowing him to just slide in under the impending tag.

Adams led ECU's hitting with two while Rose had a pair — both doubles — for Madison.

East Carolina climbs to 9-2 with the win, 3-0 in the CAA. Madison slips to 8-9 overall and to 0-3 in the league.

East Carolina returns to action on Tuesday, hosting Rider College in a doubleheader starting at 1 p.m.

Crenshaw Puts It All Together To Win The USF&G Classic

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Curtis Strange could not quite believe it.

"That was Ben? That was Ben who hit it over there on 17? And he made three from there?" Strange asked incredulously.

"Well, that's Ben.

"He scrambles and he fights and he scratches.

"And he putts the eyes out of it," Strange said.

And that is just what Crenshaw did over the final 18 holes Sunday for a 3-stroke victory in the USF&G Classic.

He putted the eyes out of it.

"The hole looked this big," Crenshaw said, sketching with his hands a circle about the size of a basketball hoop.

He one-putted 10 times — four of them for saves of par — and had two other par-saving second putts of 8-10 feet in his closing round of 67.

Crenshaw hit into the driving range. He got one in the water. He hit two trees. He skulled one spectator. He became greatly upset when he was warned for slow play on the ninth hole.

"Dadgummit, it just incenses me," Crenshaw said. And he still got out with a 5-under-par 67.

"You know me. Never a dull moment," Crenshaw said after scoring the 13th victory of his career. It came on a 20-under-par total of 268, one stroke off the Lakewood Country Club record set by Lee Trevino in 1974.

Despite his various adventures, the former Masters champ was never headed, never tied over the last 18 holes.

Strange made one late run, making birdie on two of the last four holes. But his challenge never had a chance. Not with Crenshaw's putting magic.

He one-putted five of the last six holes, once making a 20-footer to save par. He got up and down from behind bleachers — "I could have taken line of sight relief, but the lie was too good," Crenshaw said.

"I just didn't feel comfortable. My swing was quick. But I hit some good shots when I had to. And, I hit some funny ones, too," he said.

"But I got away with it."

He also got away with a $90,000 winner's share of the $500,000 total purse. It pushed Crenshaw's earning for the season to $237,957.

King Comes Back For Tucson Win

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — After completing a reversal in which she began the final round of the $200,000 LPGA Tucson Open five shots behind Jan Stephenson and finished two shots ahead, Betsy King said second place wouldn't have been bad.

The victory was her first this year and the eighth of her career. It also broke her two-year hold on the runner-up spot at the Randolph North golf course.

"I wouldn't mind finishing second every week. That would make me the leading money-winner every year," King said Sunday after persevering through rain, wind, hail and 50-degree temperatures to forge a 4-under-par 68 and a 72-hole total of 7-under 281.

"It was strange," she said of a round during which she had to wait for hail to melt on the 13th green before sinking a 45-foot putt for an eagle-3 to take the lead for good.

"The weather made the course tougher, and the tougher the course is, the better a 68 looks," King said. "On a bad day, a 68 is like a 65 or a 66 on a good day. If the weather is poor and you shoot a good score, you're that much better."

By comparison, Stephenson's 3-over closing round of 75 was a disaster.

It gave her a four-day total of 283 — 5-under on the par-72, 6,214-yard layout — which King said wasn't so bad. But it cost Stephenson her 14th tour victory and second in the tournament.

Stephenson, who started the day three strokes ahead of the field and had led since the opening round, bogeyed Nos. 8, 9 and 11.

She was still ahead at the 13th tee after King birdied the 12th hole with a 20-foot putt. But King went one stroke up on No. 13, a 477-yard, par-5, with her eagle.

"After that, I was just trying to avoid making mistakes and trying to pull out some birdies if I could," King said.

Stephenson lost another shot when she bogeyed the 455-yard 18th hole trying to reach the green in two. Her second shot landed in a water hazard, but Stephenson said she never considered pitching close to the green and trying to one-putt.

"I had been driving the ball perfectly all day, but obviously it was a bad decision. I could have hit an 8-iron and laid up and maybe made birdie that way, but I don't like to lay up," Stephenson said.

Sandra Palmer, seven shots off the pace at the fifth hole, also gobbled up the deficit, closing with a 70 for third place. Her 72-hole total was 4-under 284.

Sally Quinlan and Amy Alcott, the 1985 champion in King's first narrow miss, each shot 70 and finished with totals of 285 and 286, respectively.

Unusually rough weather for late March marked the tournament's final day.

Tucson's high was 56 — nearly 20 degrees colder than normal — and the final round was delayed 2½ hours by rain.

Bucs Get Win, Tie

East Carolina's Lady Pirates took a 7-2 victory from Ohio in softball Sunday, but had to settle for a 3-3 tie in the second game after darkness finally halted play after 12 innings.

East Carolina took the lead in the first inning scoring three times. Ohio came back with one in the top of the fourth, but ECU came right back with four in its half of the inning to put the game away with a 7-1 lead.

Chris Byrne led off with a single and Cheryl Higgins doubled. Eva Hughes doubled to drive in Byrne, and Kim Adams singled to load the bases. Jeannie Murray then brought in all three with a double.

Ohio added one more in the sixth.

Byrne led the ECU hitting with two.

In the second game, Ohio scored once in the second, but ECU struck back with two off a stand-up triple by Leslie Cramer. Both teams scored once in the fourth to leave ECU up, 3-2. Ohio then tied it up with one in the seventh, and neither team was able to score again before the game was finally halted.

The Lady Pirates are now 9-8-1, and will play host to Greensboro College today at 2 p.m.

Ayden Golf and County Club held its first tournament of the year as the team of Tommy Cooke, James Langston, Cecil Hinnant, Jack Foley and Goldie Chapman won on the second playoff hole over the team of John Ham, Bill Barrinton, Alton Woolard, George Moores and Janet Wingate.

The third place team was Rob Congleton, Earl Sessons, Fred Twitty and Beverly Dickens. The Fourth place team was Jamie Shadle, Johnny Speight, Gary Miller, Josh Potter and Mack Gaskins.

ECU Men, Women Place In UNC Meet

CHAPEL HILL — ECU's track team took part in the UNC Invitational this past weekend in Chapel Hill.

In the 100 meter dash, Linda Gillis finished second with a time of 12.0. In the 4X100 relay, ECU's Gillis, Sonya Baldwin, Delphine Mabry and Lisa Poteat were the second place team with a time of 47.6.

In the shot put, ECU's Baldwin took fifth place with a throw of 41.6 feet. In the triple jump, Carolyn Martin of ECU was second with a leap of 37 feet. Dana Raper was fourth in the same event with a jump of 36.6 feet.

In the intermediate hurdles, Dawn Sweeney was second with a time of 1:08.00.

"These style relays do not really give us an opportunity to show what we can do," said ECU track coach Wayne Miller. "The meet is distance oriented and we are a team of sprinters. I do think we put on a good show but we did some things wrong and when you do things wrong you are not going to win. We did have good performances from several girls and I still feel we are progressing extremely well."

In the men's competition, Eugene McNeill took top honors in the 100 meter dash with a time of 10.38.

In the 110 meter high hurdles, David Parker took fifth with a time of 14.66. Walter Southerland took sixth in the event with a time of 14.74.

In the 4X400 relay, ECU's team of Julian Anderson, Phil Estes, Chris Brooks, and Ken Daughtry was the winner with a time of 3:12.70.

The 4X100 relay team was third with a time of 41.80.

ECU sprinter Lee McNeil was held out of the meet with a slight thigh injury.

Richmond Tops ECU

Richmond handed East Carolina a 6-3 loss in men's collegiate tennis action Sunday.

Mabry Honored At Award Dinner

Delphine Mabry, one of two seniors on the East Carolina women's basketball team, was honored with two awards at the annual Lady Pirate Basketball Award banquet Sunday afternoon.

The affair was held at the Pirate Club.

Mabry was the winner of the Daily Reflector's Most Valuable Player trophy and also was honored with the Best Defensive Player award.

Mabry broke all of the school's steal records during the 1986-87 season. She broke the single game mark of nine, set by Rosie Thompson against Appalachian State in 1977 with 11 against William & Mary. She surpassed the single season mark of 78 — set by herself last year — with 110. And she established a new career mark of 264, breaking the mark of 178 held by Lydia Rountree.

She also has 97 assists this year, the seventh best seasonal mark, and a career total of 291, ranking third in that department.

Mabry, who also participates in outdoor track, was participating in a meet and was not present to accept the awards.

Monique Pompili, who led the team in scoring and rebounding, was named as the Most Improved Player. That award, and the two others are chosen by a vote of the members of the team.

Cathy Ellis, who had a 4.0 average this past semester, was named the winner of the Scholar Athlete Award, while Chris O'Connor won the Coaches Award.

Ann Cameron was honored as the Fan of the Year.

For Coach Emily Manwaring, who resigned this year, it was her final official duties at the school. She will be replaced by Pat Pierson, formerly of Northwestern State in Louisiana.

Manwaring did, however, tell the team something of the upcoming schedule which will include Minges visits by both N.C. State and Duke, two of the Atlantic Coast Conference powerhouses, and trips to tournaments at the University of Kentucky and Old Dominion, as well as the traditional Lady Pirate Classic.

UNLV Reportedly Committed At Least 7 Recruiting Violations

NEW YORK (AP) — Nevada-Las Vegas, bound for the Final Four, apparently committed at least seven NCAA violations while recruiting New York City high school basketball star Lloyd Daniels, according to a New York newspaper.

The 6-foot-8 Daniels received cash, clothes, a car, a motorcycle and free housing from UNLV coaches, boosters and other representatives of the school, Newsday reported Sunday. Coach Jerry Tarkanian denied the allegations Sunday night.

"It's just not true," Tarkanian told The Associated Press. "We would never do anything like that — no way. We knew the NCAA would be watching us and we wouldn't do anything of that kind."

The newspaper based its allegations on several interviews and official documents. It said Daniels declined to be interviewed.

Athletic Director Brad Rothermel said last week he knew of no irregularities in his school's dealing with Daniels.

"Based on what you're telling us right now, Lloyd would not be eligible to participate at this institution," he told Newsday.

Regarding the alleged wrongdoings, he said, "I'll guarantee we didn't do one thing."

After dropping out of Andrew Jackson High School in Queens in February 1986, Daniels signed a letter of intent with Nevada-Las Vegas in April and spent the summer in Las Vegas before enrolling at Mount San Antonio College in Walnut, Calif., in the fall.

Daniels, who never received a high school diploma and reportedly has a second-grade reading level after attending four high schools in three states, enrolled at Nevada-Las Vegas as a full-time student in January, planning to play there as a junior college transfer starting next December.

But Daniels' future as a college player was clouded because he was arrested Feb. 9 on a charge of attempting to possess a controlled substance, crack, a cocaine derivative.

Tarkanian has said Daniels would not play for the Runnin' Rebels because of the arrest.

FOCUS

The Passions Of War

Forty-five years ago today, 117,000 Japanese-Americans were sent to relocation camps like this one in Manzanar, California. President Roosevelt ordered all people of Japanese ancestry in California, Oregon and Washington to be interned in such camps, where they could earn $12 to $19 a month for various kinds of labor. Meanwhile, Japanese-Americans in Hawaii were left alone, and 17,600 Japanese-Americans served in the U.S. armed forces during the war.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

By Q.1 – Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ85 ♡KQ76 ◇6 ♣AJ107
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ◇	Dbl	Pass	1 S
Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. – You have a very good hand in support of spades. However, you do not have quite enough to jump to game bear in mind that you have forced partner to bid and he might have little or nothing of value. Make the strongly invitational jump to three spades.

Q.2 – Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK1093 ♡73 ◇954 ♣AJ9
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. – It seems that your most likely contract is three no trump. However, partner could have moderate spade support, in which case the suit contract would be the better bet. A bid of three clubs by you now would give partner the opportunity to show delayed spade support without imperilling any options.

Q.3 – As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK105 ♡AK7 ◇A1083 ♣73
What is your opening bid?

A. – While you have only 18 high-card points, your wealth of aces and kings and fine intermediates make your hand worth more than its count; so it is too strong for one no trump. Also, your hand is suit oriented, so an opening bid of one diamond gets our nod.

Q.4 – As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK105 ♡AK7 ◇A1083 ♣73
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?

A. – If nothing else, your choice of opening bid has resulted in the right hand declaring no trump your hand has no tenaces and partner's club holding might need protection. You are a whisker short of jumping to game, so we recommend a raise to two no trump.

Q.5 – As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠762 ♡Q104 ◇J72 ♣KQ94
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. – Partner has invited you to game if you are better than minimum for your original response. You promised 69 points, so your actual 8 is in the upper range. If you had any doubts about bidding three no trump, your intermediates and honor in partner's suit should convince you of the wisdom in bidding on.

Q.6 – Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠65 ♡K97 ◇A9 ♣AQJ987
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?

A. – So far you have promised a minimum opening bid with at least five clubs. Your honors in both of partner's suits improve your hand immeasurably, and it is time to tell him you like your holding. Partner must have five hearts on this auction, so a jump to three hearts is clearcut.

Boeing Wants To Put Robot-Tilled Farm In Space

KENT, Wash. (AP) — Tracy and Harvey the robots would make better farmers than humans on the ground for the astronauts on NASA's proposed space station, an engineering study says.

Although the cost of having the robots grow vegetables in space was projected at more than $740 million, it was less than transporting food from Earth, said the study by Boeing Aerospace Co.

Boeing is competing for a contract to build the living quarters for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's planned space station.

"Visualizing future space farms supporting human populations in orbit and on moons and planets is no longer science fiction," concludes the recent report by the life sciences design team.

Boeing's vision of a space farm would be a tightly packed, school bus-sized space module that uses solar power and fiber optics to grow potatoes, lettuce and other crops in special dirtless trays tended by Tracy and Harvey, nicknamed for their tray-handling and harvesting jobs, respectively.

Astronauts needn't worry about having green thumbs, said team member Mel Oleson, because they wouldn't be welcome on the farm.

"One, you want them doing the most productive things they can," said Oleson, "and growing food is not necessarily the most productive thing they can do, especially if they can have some other automated or robot-type device do the work for them.

"The second thing is humans are disease carriers as far as plants are concerned."

Oleson said the many human-carried funguses and viruses "could easily wipe out your entire food supply in nothing flat."

The robots would perform all the planting, harvesting and plant-tending, notifying their human bosses only when plants are damaged or equipment breaks, Oleson says.

Trace and Harv each would be mounted on a pair of tracks running the 45-foot length of the module and have a set of gardening tools.

NASA hopes to have its station in orbit in the 1990s, but the Boeing team thinks the farm module wouldn't be launched until about 2020.

Before then, portions of the space station's laboratory could have gardens for plant research, team members say.

Despite the cost, growing food in space still could be cheaper than continually hauling it from earth, the researchers say.

"The mass of, say, water is very expensive to haul into space," Oleson said. "You're talking thousands of dollars a pound. Obviously, we want to minimize any weight we can because everything you haul up is expensive."

Boeing Aerospace has teamed with Lockheed Missiles & Space Co. and Teledyne Brown Engineering to compete for the NASA contract to design and build the space station's common modules. The space garden study was conducted by Boeing for NASA's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, Calif.

Radio Report Says Waite Held By Lebanese Group

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Tehran Radio said today Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite was kidnapped in Lebanon by the Revolutionary Justice Organization.

The state-run radio, monitored in Nicosia, said the group seized Waite claiming he was a U.S. spy.

"It is necessary to note that Terry Waite, accused of espionage, was captured by an armed Lebanese group known as Revolutionary Justice," the radio said without elaboration.

There was no independent confirmation of the report, one of a series concerning Waite since he disappeared Jan. 20 while on a mission to free foreign hostages in Lebanon. No group has claimed to hold Waite.

Revolutionary Justice, which claims to hold two Americans and a Frenchman in Lebanon, is believed made up of pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem extremists. It has threatened to kill its French hostage.

Revolutionary Justice last month accused Waite of espionage and charged he had been used to pinpoint suspected terrorist hideouts for an American military attack on Lebanon. The group did not say it was holding Waite.

It was not clear whether the Tehran Radio report was merely interpreting that statement to indicate Revolutionary Justice holds Waite or if the Iranians were disclosing new information. There also has been a series of unconfirmed reports that Waite is being held in Iran's embassy in Beirut. Iran has denied the reports.

Waite was believed headed for a meeting with members of another Shiite faction, Islamic Jihad, when he disappeared. He had been negotiating with Islamic Jihad to free two Americans, Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press and Thomas Sutherland, acting dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut.

Druse militia leader Walid Jumblatt has claimed Waite, 47, was held by the Iranian-backed Shiite Hezbollah, or Party of God, in Lebanon.

Hezbollah has said it holds no foreign hostages. But Western and Lebanese intelligence sources have identified the fundamentalist faction as the parent group for various Shiite kidnap groups in Lebanon, including Islamic Jihad and Revolutionary Justice.

The Tehran Radio report was primarily about three Iranians who have been missing in Lebanon for five years.

The radio said they were kidnapped by right-wing Christian Phalangists during the Israeli siege of west Beirut in 1982.

The missing Iranians, Revolutionary Guard Commander Ahmad Motevaselian, Iranian Charge d'Affaires Mohsen Musavi and Kazem Akhavan, a correspondent for the Islamic Republic News Agency, disappeared in northern Lebanon.

"Recently the Archbishop of Canterbury has suggested that he is prepared to intervene in this respect provided there is an effort in the release of Terry Waite," the radio noted.

Archbishop Robert Runcie offered in January in a letter to the Speaker of Iran's Parliament, Hashemi Rafsanjani, to help find Motevaselian.

Since then, the radio stressed, "there has been no formal report from Israel or the Phalangists on how the hostage-taking took place."

Lebanon's Christian President, Amin Gemayel, expelled Iran's ambassador in Beirut in 1983 for alleged interference in Lebanese affairs, but a new ambassador was appointed to Beirut several weeks ago.

The radio said demonstrators in Iran marking Jerusalem Day on May 22 will carry portraits of the missing Iranians along with those of "martyrs of the Islamic Revolution of Lebanon."

It did not elaborate. But it appeared that Iranian authorities were building a propaganda campaign over the fate of the missing trio as Syria, Tehran's main Arab ally, was reported to be seeking the release of some of the foreigners missing in Lebanon.

Apart from Waite, 24 foreigners are missing in Lebanon in kidnappings dating to March 16, 1985. They are eight Americans, six Frenchmen, two Britons, two West Germans, an Irishman, a South Korean, an Italian, an Indian and two unidentified men.

Italy Dangles Hope For Amnesty Before Foreign Workers

By SARAH DELANEY
Associated Press Writer

ROME (AP) — Filipino maids, Tunisian tomato pickers and Egyptian waiters are among the vast army of illegal foreign workers Italy hopes to coax out of the shadows with an amnesty for those who come forward.

The new law is intended to give the government a grasp on this elusive underground population, as well as guarantee full rights and benefits to a labor force often subjected to exploitation by employers and living under the threat of deportation.

Attracted by the climate, location and Italy's reputation for lax controls, immigrants and refugees from Third World countries have been finding their way into the country at rates that have caught police and labor authorities unprepared.

Police estimate there could be as many as 1.2 million illegal aliens in Italy, with between 100,000 and 200,000 in Rome. After the amnesty period ends April 27, immigrants will be allowed in only if they already have promises of work.

But figures show few foreigners have registered with the government since the new law took effect Jan. 27 because of fear of losing their jobs or of coming to the attention of authorities.

The new law works like this: A Yugoslav who illegally crossed the border near Trieste two years ago can go to the local police station, be given a residence permit and have his name put on a list of foreigners looking for work.

A Ghanian who has been working illegally on a fishing boat in Sicily for the past four years will receive a residence permit while his employer pays back social security contributions.

"For me it is a very good thing," said Boubacar Sow, who arrived eight months ago from Senegal hoping to study medicine here. "They told me I couldn't study or work because I didn't have a proper permit. Now at least I can stay here and look for work or maybe study."

Victor Garcia, consul-general of the Philippine Embassy in Rome, called the measure "positive, very generous," and said Filipinos have begun to take advantage of the amnesty. He said there were about 45,000 Filipinos in Italy, three-quarters of them living here illegally.

Paolo Gianfelici, who works with ITAL, a union-affiliated group that deals with workers' rights, said, "It's not a police law. It's in their (illegals) favor, they have more leverage against exploiting employers."

But Rizalino and Solidad Sebastian, a Filipino couple who work as maid and gardener, said that their Italian employer told them he would have to lower their combined wages because he now had to pay for their benefits.

Some illegals may prefer to stay underground rather than risk losing a job.

"How do they know their employer won't decide that if he has to pay full wages, he might as well hire an Italian, or do without help at all?" said Letizia Masala, a volunteer worker with the foreigner section of Caritas, the Catholic social welfare organization.

"Besides, many people are afraid of the police. It remains to be seen how the law is applied," she said.

But Vito Cerfida, an official of the Rome police headquarters' foreigners section, said employers of illegal foreigners, after the end of the amnesty, "run a very serious risk" of receiving fines and one year in prison.

Foreigners caught without permits risk repatriation.

After one month, the Rome police headquarters had registered 8,200 illegal aliens, mostly Filipinos. Cerfida said registration had since dropped slightly.

CGIL, Italy's largest union, reported that the number of illegal workers it had assisted in the amnesty was much less than expected.

"The undoubted threat of loss of work, even if it is precarious and badly paid, easily explains the fear and lack of trust these workers have about the regularization," according to a statement from the social service arm of the union.

Carter Meets Assad, Then Goes Sight-Seeing In Syria

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter flew to the Mediterranean city of Latakia today for a sight-seeing tour after two meetings with President Hafez Assad on international affairs, the Middle East and Lebanon.

Carter declined to say whether he had discussed with Assad efforts to free American and other foreign hostages held by Moslem extremists in Lebanon.

"I'll have something to say at the airport before I leave (for Jordan on Tuesday)," he told reporters after his talks Sunday with the Syrian leader.

Assad spokesman Jibrane Kourieh said the talks "focused on international relations, the situation in the Middle East and its developments as well as the Lebanese question." He gave no details.

Carter and his wife Rosalynn were accompanied on the flight to Latakia, one of Syria's main ports, by Assad's protocol chief, Hassib Istwani.

They flew in Assad's airliner, a Soviet-built Tu-134B, on the third day of their visit to Syria, the second stop in a tour of the Middle East and North Africa.

Syrian sources said that from Latakia, 140 miles north of Damascus, the Carters will drive to Qardaha, Assad's home village just outside the city.

Carter and his wife were later expected to fly from Latakia 100 miles to the northeast to the historic city of Aleppo that dates from the third century B.C., the sources said.

On Saturday, Carter urged the Syrian leader, the main power broker in Lebanon, to use his influence to secure the release of the hostages.

Eight Americans and 16 other foreigners are believed held by at least four separate radical groups in Lebanon, mostly Shiite Moslems loyal to Iran.

Most of the kidnappings took place in Moslem west Beirut between February 1984 and last January. Syria, the main power broker in Lebanon, dispatched 7,500 troops to west Beirut on Feb. 22 to stop fighting between rival militias.

Carter's visit to Syria was the most controversial stop of his five-nation tour, which already has taken him to Algeria and Egypt. He also plans to go to Jordan and Israel before returning home April 3.

During his presidency, Carter angered the Syrians when he engineered the 1979 Camp David peace accord between Israel and Egypt. It was the first peace treaty between Israel and an Arab nation since the 1948 Middle East war.

Syria is the Soviet Union's main ally in the Middle East. On Oct. 24, Washington recalled Ambassador William Eagleton from Damascus, charging Syria was involved in international terrorism.

Syria's official news media Sunday criticized U.S. policy in the Middle East.

State radio said in a commentary that "successive U.S. governments after World War II have all considered the Middle East as part of its areas of influence while it regards Israel as its partner and ally and provides for the Zionist enemy all the necessary military, economic and political backing."

"At one point, the United States regarded the Camp David accords as the only option left for the Arabs," the commentary said.

The government newspaper Tishrin said in an editorial "the Camp David signatories are launching new moves at the time U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar is preparing for a trip in the region to set the stage for convening an international conference on the Middle East."

Byrd Vows Another Effort To Restrict Aid To Contras

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, beset by a filibuster from supporters of the Nicaraguan Contras, promises a renewed push this week for legislation forcing President Reagan to account for past aid to the rebels.

Byrd, D-W.Va., scheduled a vote for late today on whether to cut off debate and take up the legislation, which is similar to a measure already passed by the House.

It would give the administration six months to provide an accounting of past aid money — including funds diverted from Iranian arms sales or donated by other countries or private parties — and cut off any further aid in the meantime.

But it would take 60 votes to cut off the filibuster, which began last week, and Byrd said he had doubts about whether he could muster that many. The Senate voted 52-48 last week to release $40 million to the Contras, money which became available for spending over the weekend.

The battle, which could continue for days, has by now become largely symbolic. Lawmakers on both sides of the emotional and divisive issue have set their sights on an administration request for $105 million for the rebels for next year, likely to come up later in the year, when Contra opponents likely will have a better shot at blocking further aid.

Both the Senate and House budget committees also will be meeting this week as Congress drifts closer to its April 15 deadline for producing a fiscal 1988 budget.

White House Chief of Staff Howard H. Baker Jr. said Sunday that Reagan's budget for this year calls for $20 billion in new revenue from user fees and sales of assets, and other cuts would come from discretionary domestic spending.

"I think it can be done without smoke and mirrors," Baker said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley."

However, many lawmakers have said taxes must be raised or defense spending reduced to meet the Gramm-Rudman targets, or the targets should be relaxed.

"Those are the choices, and none of them is an attractive one," House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said Sunday on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

"If you can tell me one (way to reduce the deficit) that doesn't involve additional revenues, I will enthrone you and maybe even make you speaker," he added.

The speaker said Reagan's budget would effectively tax college students, homeowners and Medicaid recipients through aid cuts and higher co-payments.

In the House, Democrats and Republicans have been bickering over procedures, but Budget Committee Chairman William H. Gray III said Friday he hoped the panel would return to work by Tuesday. The only decision made publicly by the panel has been to cut more than $23 billion from President Reagan's military budget request of $312 billion.

Full House consideration of a spending plan was originally scheduled for this week, but that timetable has slipped.

Turkey's Movie Industry Fights Strict Censorship

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — The best and the brightest in the Turkish movie industry are lining up against strict government censorship, which they claim is stifling the artistic growth of the film industry in Turkey.

"If the censorship law does not change, the only solution may be unified protest," says award-winning director Akif Yilmaz. "Whatever it is, something absolutely must be done."

Filmmaker Mujde Ar agreed. "We must organize against censorship. We may refuse to make any movies, or we may refuse to send them to the censorship board," she said.

Ar's latest movie, "A Woman to Be Hanged," was rejected by the censorship board, which is composed of six dozen mid-level bureaucrats and only one movie industry representative. Board decisions can be appealed in court, which is what Ar has done.

Also awaiting a court decision for release is Serif Goren's "Alley of Hope." He also directed "Yol" ("The Road"), which won the Cannes Film Festival's Golden Palm award in 1982.

Several other new movies cleared the censorship board only after significant cuts and changes were made.

A watered-down censorship decree passed last year, raising hopes that government vigilance would be relaxed. The decree authorized the Culture Ministry to set up a "supervision committee," or censorship board. In addition, prior approval of film scripts was lifted.

"Police censorship was over; a more civilian control was established," recalled Onat Kutlar, movie critic and manager of Istanbul's annual film festival.

However, hopes quickly crumbled when some of the best productions of the 1986-87 season got the "thumbs down" sign from the board.

Writers and directors claim the better movies usually run into the most trouble because they typically deal with controversial subjects, espouse new views and knock down taboos.

"The Woman to Be Hanged," for instance, is the story of a young female servant who is brought up in a decadent, rich household and eventually ends up sexually serving the men of the family.

"It is the most moral of stories. The movie criticizes sexual abuse of women, repression and use of women as a piece of property," says writer Pinar Kur, who is also a well-known novelist.

Basar Sabuncu, the director of the movie, laments that authorities never even explained exactly what they found objectionable in the film.

"They only implied that they objected to words in the film such as tramp, whore, or lice-infested peasant, as if these are not in everyday use in the language," he said.

The major complaint is that censorship guidelines are extremely vague, generalized and subjective. Article Nine of the censorship code forbids anything that runs against traditions or public morality, that denigrates friendly countries or Turkey's honor or any respectable profession.

"I once asked a board member what he would consider pornographic, and he answered, 'Anything that turns me on,'" says critic Kutlar.

Ironically, cheaply made movies with plenty of explicit sexual scenes are shown in movie houses throughout Turkey. According to industry sources, producers of those movies make two copies — a "clean" one for the censorship board and another for actual screening with pornographic scenes added.

Sometimes a movie house is raided and the show stopped. But Kutlar says these filmmakers often get away with it because officials, aware that they cannot police all movie houses, ignore the problem.

For the ambitious filmmaker who hopes to take his work abroad for competition in international film festivals, there are other obstacles. To legally go out of the country, a movie must get the censorship board's seal of approval. Yilmaz's "Yol" was smuggled out of Turkey, but was then banned from screening in the country.

The movie colony itself is divided on the censorship problem.

Marvin Kalb Takes Job At Harvard

NEW YORK (AP) — Veteran newsman Marvin Kalb is leaving NBC to become the first director of a Harvard University center on the media and public policy, a newspaper reported today.

Kalb will assume his new duties at the Joan Shorenstein Barone Center on the Press, Politics and Public Policy at the John F. Kennedy School of Government on June 1, The New York Times reported.

He also will be simultaneously named a professor of press and public policy, the newspaper said.

Kalb, 56, spent 1½ years as a diplomat after receiving his master's degrees in Russian and Chinese studies at Harvard.

He spent 23 years at CBS and in 1980 was named chief diplomatic correspondent for NBC and moderator of "Meet the Press."

NBC News President Lawrence K. Grossman said Kalb's departure was "bittersweet news."

Among his top priorities at Harvard is a study of how of a new network emphasis on profits is affecting television news. Kalb also said he was interested in a course on "The Presidency and the Press."

"We have now, in our political process, reached a point where the press, politicians and the formulation of policy have become so intertwined that we are dealing with one large process," Kalb said Sunday.

The center, dedicated last September, is endowed by a $5 million grant from Walter Shorenstein of San Francisco. It is named after his daughter, a producer for CBS News who died of cancer two years ago.

Kalb has won George Foster Peabody awards for two documentaries and a Du Pont Columbia Award.

His brother, Bernard, was a veteran CBS correspondent and State Department spokesman during the Reagan administration. He resigned last year.

Fogerty Named Best Musician

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — John Fogerty was named best musician of 1986 and the band Journey took four honors, including best group, at the 10th annual Bay Area Music Awards.

Eddie Money's "Take Me Home Tonight" was named best song, Sheila E. was honored as best female vocalist, and Huey Lewis and the News won for best album, "Fore," at Saturday's awards ceremony.

Nominees are chosen by a local music media committee from artists closely associated with the Bay area, and readers of BAM, a free rock 'n' roll biweekly, cast ballots for their favorites.

Fogerty was a member of the group Creedence Clearwater Revival in the 1960s and early '70s and recently emerged from retirement to embark on a solo career. Last year he won a Bammie for the year's top album.

Journey took awards for best guitarist (Neal Schon), keyboardist (Jonathon Cain) and male vocalist (Steve Perry).

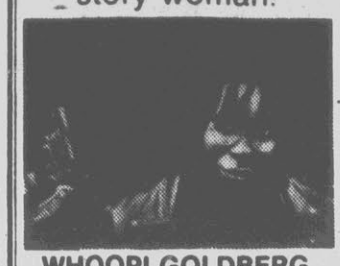

Madden Switches

DANVILLE, Calif. (AP) — CBS football commentator John Madden says he is switching from trains to a custom-built bus to travel from city to city during the football season.

Madden, who began riding trains because planes gave him claustrophobia, said "I still love trains" but that the bus would give him more freedom in his travels.

The bus will include a dinette, queen-size bed, large shower and a kitchen.

A first rate comedy about a second story woman.
