Local Room Occupancy Tax Approved

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners Monday approved a proposed local bill that would create a 3 percent motel and hotel occupancy tax.

The proposed bill, to be forwarded to the county's legislative delegation in Raleigh for passage by the General Assembly, had been approved by the Greenville City Council.

The revenue from the tax, estimated at $200,000 a year, will be used to promote travel, tourism and conventions.

In other action Monday, the board adopted a revised flood damage prevention ordinance and approved changes in the county's building permit fee schedule.

Changes in the flood damage prevention ordinance, among other things, will allow mobile homes to be placed in the floodway — something not now permitted, set standards for flood-proofing curtain walls and require that utility services be elevated above the 100-year flood level.

Changes in the building permit fee schedule result from a revision of the method the inspections department uses to compute the cost of buildings for permit purposes.

Under the new method, heated areas of buildings will be valued at $40 a square foot instead of the old $25 per square foot, while non-heated areas will be valued at $20 per square foot, rather than the old $12.50 per square foot.

By computing the cost of construction on a more realistic basis, building permit fees are reduced from $2.50 per $1,000 value to about $1.60 per $1,000.

The board also adopted a county-wide noise control ordinance and an ordinance regulating massage businesses.

But commissioners delayed action on adopting a dog leash ordinance that would make it illegal for dog owners in the Brook Valley subdivision to let their dogs run loose.

Commissioners approved the acceptance of a Federal Aviation Administration grant for the purchase of a crash fire-rescue vehicle and building to house the truck for Pitt Greenville Airport. The $229,025 federal grant will be matched with local and state funds to pay the cost of the $254,000 project.

Sue Taylor of Farmville and Catherine Creech of Route 1, Winterville, were reappointed members of the Sheppard Memorial Library board of trustees, while Jennifer Congleton, Susan Nobles and Gail Meeks were appointed to the Pitt County Women's Commission. Majorie Dunn, Rosalie Trotman, Nina B. Redditt, Gretchen Weeks, Mildren Council and Charla Davis were reappointed members of the women's commission.

TRAIN-CAR COLLISION — This car and an eastbound Southern Railway train collided Monday night on rural paved road 1726 in the Eastern Pines community. The train was pulling 94 cars as it approached the marked crossing. The car was headed west and struck the side of the engine, causing some damage to the engine, according to train officials at the scene. Witnesses identified the driver of the car as Jennifer Wing of Greenville and the passenger as her younger brother, Jason. Both were taken to Pitt County Memorial Hospital by the Eastern Pines Rescue Squad. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrester)

Council Confirms Meeks Dismissal

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville City Council has invited a management specialist with the N.C. League of Municipalities to assist in hiring a new city manager.

After an executive session Monday night, the council unanimously agreed to meet with Woody Underwood, N.C. League of Municipalities director of services, to discuss approaches on hiring a new city manager.

The action came after the board formally agreed to dismiss Gail Meeks, who was asked to resign following an executive session on March 16.

"I move that we ratify the action of Monday March 16, 1987, of the City Council terminating the employment of the city manager," Council member Ed Carter said. "The effective date of the termination of employment is March 18, 1987. I move that Mrs. Meeks be paid three months severance pay and accumulated vacation and longevity."

Council members Lorraine Shinn and Janice Buck, who seconded the motion, voted in favor of the action, while Council members Inez Fridley, Nancy Jenkins, and Bill Hadden opposed the motion. Mayor Les Garner, who broke an identical tie in the executive session on March 16, voted for the dismissal.

City Attorney Mac McCarley said the public vote was a technicality.

Meanwhile, council members — by a 4-3 vote with Garner breaking the tie — decided to reduce the amount of a contract with Talbert, Cox and Associates Inc. to an amount not to exceed $3,500 for a community needs assessment and a three-year community development plan.

A community needs assessment and community development plan would provide information to identify and prioritize needs, according to Garner.

"This information would be helpful to many departments and agencies and would provide resource information to support future grant applications," Garner said.

Council members Shinn, Carter, and Buck voted in favor of the move, while council members Hadden, Fridley and Jenkins opposed the move.

According to the original agreement, which was approved by the council on March 12, Talbert, Cox & Associates was to prepare and file a Community Development Block Grant application for the city along

Legislators Hear Local Concerns

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Two local legislators Monday discussed with Pitt County citizens the state governmental action during this legislative session and listened to concerns expressed by members of the local chamber of commerce.

State Reps. Walter B. Jones Jr. and Eugene Rogers attended the "Coffee With the Legislators" sponsored by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce at the Humber House. Invited legislators unable to attend included Rep. Ed Warren and Sens. Tom Taft and Bob Martin.

Jones represents the 9th District and is a native of Farmville. Rogers, from Williamston, was elected from the 6th District.

Chamber President Ed Walker discussed with the legislators the chamber's bid to levy hotel occupancy taxes in Pitt County.

Walker said a chamber resolution had been prepared in support of a "room occupancy tax of no more than 3 percent of the gross receipts" from rental of lodgings at county hotels and motels. The occupancy tax was approved by the county commissioners Monday.

Walker asked that the legislators assist the county in passing legislation in the General Assembly.

Proceeds from the tax will be used to establish a Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Authority to promote activities and programs encouraging travel, tourism and conventions in the county.

Two chamber committees, the Public and Governmental Affairs Division and the Small Business Council, drew up positions on such issues as shoplifting, repeal of the North Carolina intangibles tax, closing out sales, opening dates on checks and retail credit cards.

Grady Strickland, chairman of the State Concerns Committee of the chamber, presented the legislators a resolution for the repeal of the state intangibles tax. The resolution "calls the intangibles assessment 'a counterproductive tax which has a

County Agrees To Allow City Control On 140 Acres

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The city of Greenville gained control of an additional 140 acres in a proposed 5,300-acre medical park district Monday, thanks to action by the Pitt County Board of Commissioners.

Commissioners Monday agreed with a county planning board recommendation to give the city planning and zoning control over the 140 acres in three tracts split by the city's extraterritorial jurisdiction.

But the city may not get control of an additional 2,800 acres of land outside its extraterritorial jurisdiction that the medical park plan recommends.

Commissioners adopted a list of recommendations from the planning board.

One of those recommends that "extraterritorial jurisdiction not be granted to Greenville, or other municipalities in Pitt County, beyond the one-mile (limit) granted by state statutes."

However, the planning board's list included recommendations: that the county hire a full-time planner "immediately;" that commissioners "continue to explore positive ways to work cooperatively with all municipalities to ensure joint municipal-county planning efforts, including the area of the medical park district in Greenville's jurisdiction; that the county provide for the planning of the medical park district outside the city of Greenville's one-mile extraterritorial limit and that the county establish a medical park district commission to oversee the district, with membership having county geographical representation."

A council-appointed committee spent a year studying how best to preserve the integrity of the medical district and to ensure that enough land is available in the future for expansion, before making its recommendations to the council late in 1985.

During 1986, the council and city staff studied the recommendations and in November, the council adopted the report and rezoned 1,800 acres as a first step in creating the East Carolina Medical Park.

To ensure planned and orderly growth of the area, the medical district study group recommended that the medical arts district around Pitt County Memorial Hospital and the East Carolina University School of Medicine — then 1,800 acres — be expanded to 5,300 acres to create the park.

Most of the 3,500 acres included in the recommended expansion is outside the Greenville city limits, although the city has extraterritorial jurisdiction over about 700 of the acres outside the city.

Pentagon Says Soviets Building Military Power

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union expanded virtually every part of its military arsenal last year, in the process deploying increasingly advanced weaponry that undercuts the West's ability to deter war, the Pentagon said today.

From nuclear missiles and submarines to jet aircraft and attack helicopters, the Russian build-up throughout 1986 was unrelenting and went "far beyond legitimate requirements for defense," the Pentagon asserted in its annual written assessment.

The assessment provides "the objective evidence of the continuing increase in Soviet strategic offensive, defensive and conventional military capability year after year, no matter who is general secretary, no matter what proposals are made, no matter what public relations activities are undertaken," Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said this morning.

The Soviets continue to outspend the United States on strategic defensive systems, or "Star Wars" weaponry, and have actually fired laser beams against aircraft and ground equipment over the past year capable of blinding individuals.

The Pentagon said the Russians also have increased to more than 100 the number of mobile, single-warhead SS-25 intercontinental ballistic missiles aimed at the United States; will soon deploy the large, rail-mobile SS-X-24 ICBM, which carries 10 warheads; have placed in operation the first Delta IV-class ballistic missile submarine; and will soon deploy potent new ground- and sea-launched variants of nuclear-tipped cruise missiles.

The Soviets are also in the midst of improving the accuracy and "lethality" of the SS-20 intermediate-range missiles deployed against Europe — the missiles the Reagan administration hopes to eliminate under a new arms control agreement.

"These technical improvements are already being integrated in a new, improved version of the SS-20 that could become operational in 1987," the Pentagon said.

The new military assessment is contained in the sixth edition of "Soviet Military Power," a slick booklet that has become the Reagan administration's primary vehicle for releasing information about Soviet force developments.

The 1987 version of the publication was formally unveiled today by Weinberger at a Pentagon briefing

Funding For Hooker Road Bridge Inserted In Budget

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

A request for $914,175 in proposed capital improvements, containing $215,000 designated for replacement of the Hooker Road Bridge, has been included in Greenville's 1987-88 budget.

A $381,000 request in Powell Bill funding includes the bridge replacement, $25,000 for a Transportation Improvement Program, $125,000 in street resurfacing, and $16,000 for video sign and signal inventory.

The City Council reviewed line items in budget requests for capital improvements, fire-rescue, airport and library salaries, personnel and fringe benefits, non-departmental, intradepartmental transfers, contingencies, Powell Bill funds, the Group Benefit Plan Trust Fund, and the Capital Reserve Fund at a budget workshop Monday night.

Council members were given an overview of preliminary expenses expected in each department. Acting City Manager Mayo Allen is expected to make recommendations after studying all the city's needs.

"Starting Monday morning, we're going to go back and start reviewing everybody's budget," Allen said.

In November 1983, the N.C. Department of Transportation agreed to participate through the Federal Aid Highway Bridge Replacement Program in the construction of a new bridge on Hooker Road over Green Mill Run, according to the proposal, which said the project was estimated at $169,000 in 1985.

"In accordance with the state's policy, the cost for the project will be shared by the municipality and the state by paying 20 percent and 80 percent respectively," the proposal said.

"The state's payment procedure requires that all contracted services be paid initially by the city with state reimbursement to follow upon their approval of submitted invoices. This requires the city to establish a fund insuring sufficient cash flow throughout the project."

The proposal said construction is scheduled to begin in fiscal year 1986-87 and continue into fiscal year 1987-88.

Based on preliminary engineering estimates, it appears the construction cost will be $215,000, which includes a 10 percent contingency, the proposal said.

A $492,175 request for the General Fund would designate $144,000 for Phase II of the city's radio system project, $150,000 for headquarters fire station land and $20,875 for thoroughfare plan and mapping update.

The General Fund request also includes $177,320 in improvement and repairs to recreation and parks department equipment.

A request for $21,000 by the Engineering and Inspection Department from the Parking Authority Fund for parking lot resurfacing and $20,000 by the Recreation and Parks Department for resurfacing the Greenville Aquatics and Fitness Center parking lot were included among capital improvements.

A request of $2,021,094 from the Fire-Rescue Department includes $1,824,530 in salaries, $154,208 in operating expenses, and $42,356 in capital outlay.

"During the 1987-88 budget year, the goal of the Fire-Rescue Department will be to continue to provide the citizens with the very best possible service, with a minimal response time and with well-trained personnel," Fire-Rescue Chief Jenness S. Allen said.

"I do not foresee any major new programs, as the Fire-Rescue Department is providing good services at a peak with the number of employees assigned Fire-Rescue duties at this time," he said.

"During the budget year, we will be moving into the new station on Red Banks Road and (N.C.) 43. We anticipate, at that time, to make some changes in personnel location (with our present staff) to increase service in this area."

A $144,820 non-departmental request includes $10,000 in salaries, and $134,820 in operating expenses, while intradepartmental transfers amount to $1,658,730.

The Personnel and Fringe Benefits Department request of $2,060,718 is up $302,218 from $1,658,500 estimated for this year. A request of $100,000 has been included for contingencies, and $381,000 is being sought for street improvements.

The Insurance Department has requested $605,000, compared to $554,000 estimated for 1986-87.

New AZT Patients Will Get Numbers

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — Burroughs Wellcome Co. says each patient receiving a new anti-AIDS drug will be given a personal number authorizing receipt of the drug, which is expected to cost $7,000 to $10,000 a year.

"That unique number must be on every prescription for that particular patient or a pharmacist cannot honor that prescription," Nancy Thomas, group product manager for the company, said Monday. Supplies should be sufficient to treat at least 30,000 patients by the end of 1987 and the distribution system will be dissolved when supplies are sufficient to meet demand.

The new drug, marketed under the trade name Retrovir, will go first to the most needy patients and should be available to everyone with the deadly disease by the end of the year, company officials said. A panel of doctors will screen patients to determine the most needy while production is gearing up.

"One way or another, we will make sure that all the patients who do qualify will receive the drug," Win Singleton, vice president for medical affairs at Burroughs Wellcome, said at a news conference on azidothymidine, or AZT.

The drug was approved last week to treat acquired immune deficiency syndrome, but is not a cure, officials said. Tests showed AZT prolonged life in certain patients and improved the quality of life in 68 percent of those studied, said Dr. David Barry, vice president of research at Burroughs Wellcome.

Singleton said it would take more than a year of sales to recoup the money spent on developing AZT — a figure he set at "over $100 million." He said that includes $10 million in Retrovir supplied free to 4,800 AIDS patients in recent months.

Despite the expense, Burroughs Wellcome officials said treating AIDS with AZT is up to 25 percent cheaper than previous therapies.

Burroughs Wellcome began its AIDS research in June 1984. The first patient received AZT less than two years ago and clinical trials began slightly more than one year ago.

"I believe all of these milestones constitute a record in clinical development, as does the 3½-month review time by the Food and Drug Administration," Singleton said, noting that drug approval can take up to eight years.

The company's work on AZT has sparked interest in London, where one quarter of the Wellcome Trust, which controls Burroughs Wellcome, is traded on the stock market.

Columbus County Railroad Planned

WILMINGTON (AP) — A Columbus County native has purchased the 75 miles of railroad through Columbus County, and will begin operating a short-line railroad there Saturday, railroad officials announced Monday.

Willard Formyduval, who operates the 14-mile Horry County Railway between Conway and Myrtle Beach, S.C., bought the shortline from CSX Transportation Inc., the new name for the Seaboard System Railroad.

The operation includes the tracks running from Whiteville to Mullins, S.C., and from the Chadbourn railroad yard south through Tabor City to Conway, said Lindsay Leckie, manager of media relations for CSX in Jacksonville, Fla.

Formyduval concluded the deal with CSX late Friday, Leckie said. Formyduval could not be reached for comment Monday.

CSX had been negotiating with Formyduval since September, when the company announced its plans at a meeting of local railroad shippers.

The short-line sale is part of CSX's efforts to sell railroad operations, "which can be more effectively owned and operated by a short-line operator," Leckie said.

"This approach ensures continued rail service for the affected community, shippers and the industry base of the states involved, and is a viable alternative to abandonment," Leckie said.

The railroad has about 15 industrial shippers in Columbus County, moving about 10,000 to 12,000 cars each year.

Haig Launches Bid For White House

By SANDY JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Alexander M. Haig, stressing his decades of service to other presidents, announced his bid for the Republican presidential nomination today and said "what I offer is leadership for America."

Haig acknowledged his candidacy for the 1988 nomination is a long shot, but said he has the ability and the desire to lead the nation into the 1990s.

"The president's pre-eminent task is to lead. To lead, a president must be a driven man, driven by the force of his conviction in the rightness of his cause," Haig said.

At the news conference, Haig roughed in some of his positions.

On the military draft: he opposes its reinstitution, saying it would result in "recreating the controversy of the 1970s."

On aid to the Nicaraguan Contras: he supports continued aid, saying, "The consequences of ending that aid ... would be devastating."

On federal finances: he supports a balanced federal budget, saying, however, he would not back a tax increase to accomplish that goal.

Asked about his lack of a natural constituency, Haig said he counted among his constituents former servicemen and servicewomen, "new-generation" Americans and the business community.

Earlier today, Haig said of his candidacy, "I don't know of an endeavor more honorable."

"It's both momentous and frightening and a little intimidating," Haig said on NBC's "Today" show.

Haig told hundreds of enthusiastic supporters Monday night:

"What I offer is leadership. Leadership to take our country safely into the next decade, to build a more prosperous America, leadership to dedicate America to excellence in all fields, and leadership, above all, of an America willing and able to keep the peace."

Haig, at 62, has come as close to the power of the presidency as any man not occupying the White House.

He was President Reagan's first secretary of state, serving a tumultuous 18 months before resigning after striving to build a reputation as "vicar" of the nation's foreign policy.

His most public moment came shortly after Reagan was felled in an assassination attempt March 30, 1981. He appeared in the White House press room and declared "As of now, I am in control here in the White House pending the return of the vice president."

In the final days of the Nixon administration, he rose to chief of staff and helped prepare the embattled president's defense against Watergate impeachment charges.

It was Haig who recommended to President Ford that Nixon be pardoned.

When Nixon left office, Haig was named supreme commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, serving in that position until he left the military as a four-star general in 1979.

He considered a White House bid that year but backed away after a lengthy exploratory effort. Instead, he became president of a major defense contractor, United Technologies, until Reagan tapped him for secretary of state. Since resigning in June 1982, Haig has set up a consulting firm, lectured and written a book. Haig, who has never held elective office, is undaunted by his minuscule standing in public opinion polls: 3 percent in one recent survey, far behind the GOP front-runner, Vice President George Bush.

Haig becomes the second Republican to formally announce his candidacy; former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont announced his bid in September. Also expected to join the contest are Bush, Senate GO leader Robert Dole, TV evangelist Pat Robertson, U.S. Rep. Jack Kemp of New York and former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld.

In his speech Monday night at a red-white-and-blue festooned hall in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, Haig emphasized his service to seven presidents dating back to Dwight Eisenhower.

"I can tell you that each one of them learned these lessons of leadership sooner or later," he said, listing his definitions of leadership.

"A president leads when he realizes that running for office and running the government are different things and sometimes require different advisers.

"A president leads when he understands that openly communicated policies, even if secretly arrived at, are the only policies that merit enduring support.

"A president leads when he realizes that his popularity is his greatest power but also his greatest temptation."

Haig has said the American public, troubled by the Iran-Contra affair that has clouded Reagan's presidency, wants the next president to be a hands-on manager with experience in foreign affairs. He also criticizes economic policies that have doubled the federal deficit to $2 trillion in the Reagan years.

But he also praised his former boss in his speech Monday night, crediting him for a "renaissance of the American spirit."

As Haig closed his speech, he called his wife, Patricia, and family to the podium and the band struck up "Alexander's Ragtime Band." Then a waiter walked to the stage carrying a tray of champagne-filled glasses, and Haig's son, Alexander P. Haig, called on the audience to toast "the president of the United States, Ronald Reagan."

Doles Say Reagan Will Veto Road Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, defending President Reagan's expected veto of a $87.5 billion highway bill, says the move need not kill the 65 mph speed limit.

"The president supports that change," Mrs. Dole told reporters Monday, saying Reagan objects to money provisions in the legislation, which would cost around $10 billion more than he proposed.

"This is what you call a surgical veto," she said, saying Congress should rework the bill to Reagan's liking and resubmit it. "So there's no reason that the Congress can't act quickly to move to the next piece of legislation. Get it done quickly with 65 (mph) in it."

Mrs. Dole joined her husband, Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas, in describing Reagan's objections to the compromise highway and mass transit bill, while pledging to help get the planned veto upheld on Capitol Hill.

The $87.5 billion bill includes provisions allowing a new 65 mph speed limit for rural interstate highways. The House-approved speed limit provision cleared the Senate after Dole abandoned his plan to strip the highway bill of $890 million in road and bridge "demonstration projects" sought by lawmakers for their home districts.

The measure, which was given final passage by the Senate on a 79-17 vote last Friday, is to arrive at the White House soon for Reagan's consideration. Last week, the president denounced the measure as one that typifies excessive government spending.

Talking to reporters in the White House driveway after talking over veto strategy with Reagan, Mrs. Dole amplified on the president's objections.

"He's very much concerned about the fact that there are 152 special interest projects in this legislation," she said. "That means, to complete those projects, $5.5 billion. This is an end-run around the states."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "I think we have a good chance" to sustain the veto.

Hostage's Father Says Thanks

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The father of French hostage Jean-Louis Normandin today called on a senior Shiite Moslem cleric to thank him for persuading pro-Iranian kidnappers to drop plans to kill his son.

The visit came a day after another pro-Iranian Moslem group said Alann Steen, a 47-year-old American teacher it is holding hostage, is so ill he may die within 10 days, and offered to trade him for 100 Arab prisoners held in Israel.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak

Shamir in Jerusalem today rejected negotiations with the kidnappers, saying, "It is clear that this is blackmail, and we won't enter into talks with these types of organizations."

In Damascus, meanwhile, former President Jimmy Carter said today that Syrian President Hafez Assad assured him Syria is working for the release of 24 foreigners held hostage in Lebanon. Carter spoke at a news conference before flying to Jordan, his fourth stop on a Middle East tour.

Marc Normandin, 58, father of the French hostage, told reporters after calling on Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, "I think the most important objective, which is to save his (Normandin's) life, has been achieved."

Revolutionary Justice included a four-minute videotape of Normandin with its statement.

with the community needs assessment and community development plan for $5,800.

In order to be eligible for another grant, the current CDBG project for the South Evans community must be completed, according to Garner, who consulted with Bobby Roberson, director of Planning and Community Development.

"A major delay to complete the project has been caused by uncertainties pertaining to the required right-of-way for the widening of Evans Street between 10th and 14th streets," Garner said. "A number of housing units along this portion of Evans Street are to be rehabilitated or removed."

"Prudent decisions cannot be made for action on these structures without knowledge of the right-of-way agreements."

The submission deadline for community revitalization application under the CDBG program is May 19, according to a Garner.

"Even if the right-of-way requirements were known today from the N.C. Department of Transportation, we could not complete the acquisition and/or rehabilitation of the subject in order to meet the May deadline," Garner said. "Thus, the city cannot complete the South Evans project in time, and therefore would not be in a position to file a CDBG application."

Roberson told council members the city staff believed it could spend the money in time to meet the deadline but realized it could not after consulting with the NCDOT on Friday.

In other business, council members agreed to accept a grant offer from the Federal Aviation Association to the Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority in the amount of $229,025.

Airport Manager James G. Turcotte said the money represents 90 percent of the project expenses to acquire a crash, fire and rescue vehicle, its associated building, engineering and administrative expenses.

"As with all federal grants, this offer needs to be approved and executed by Pitt County, the city of Greenville and the (Pitt-Greenville) Airport Authority," Turcotte said.

The airport authority approved acceptance of the grant at its regular meeting March 18.

The grant offer has changed from the amount originally budgeted, according to Turcotte, who said bids came in higher than expected.

"The county and city appropriated $5,000 each for a total share of $10,000, and the local amount now needed is $12,724," he said.

"Inasmuch as the authority just closed out a capital project for land acquisition, and we did not use the full amount appropriated, the authority was in agreement to use that unappropriated amount for the additional funding necessary for this project."

The council also unanimously approved an agreement between the city of Greenville and East Carolina Vocational Center Inc. for transit services.

Under the agreement, the city, through the GREAT system, will operate bus service five days per week with the exception of holidays and anytime ECVC is not open for service. Buses will make two trips per day with no services provided on Saturday and Sunday.

ECVC clients may purchase GREAT tickets or pay the current cash fare for a one-way ride to ECVC from any point in Greenville, according to the agreement. ECVC may purchase GREAT passes from the city and resell the passes to ECVC clients.

Those clients of ECVC who qualify will only be required to pay the "handicapped" fare.

The incremental cost for providing service from Greenville city limits to ECVC and returning to city limits is $5 per trip, the agreement says. ECVC has agreed to pay the city $5 per trip, which shall normally account for a total payment of $10 per day.

The City Council agreed to delay decisions on a bid award and budget amendment for the construction of the Science and Nature Center buildings at River Park North until spending questions could be resolved at a meeting of the Recreation and Parks Department.

A negotiated bid of $283,895 for the facility came in $33,895 over the $250,000 budgeted for the project, according to Boyd Lee, director of recreation and parks.

According to a proposed budget ordinance, unspent funds designated for bathroom alterations, a backhoe attachment and leftover funds from a state contract purchase of a truck would be transferred to cover the additional costs.

The council also agreed to allow a Mayor's Communications Ad Hoc Committee to meet with a representative of Omnicom Inc., a consultant which studied Greenville's radio needs, and the city's Radio-Telephone Committee on April 6 to discuss questions regarding the proposed $651,720 communications system.

Finally, Progress

Just about a year ago President Reagan agreed with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney to do something about acid rain that was killing Canadian lakes just across the border from our manufacturing center in the northeast.

The president said in a statement Wednesday he would seek $2.5 billion over five years to move into commercial use the new technologies that cut the precursor emissions of acid rain.

That $2.5 billion was the amount representatives of Mr. Reagan and Mr. Mulroney called for in early '86 for a program the president and other U.S. officials said they supported but have not sought money to meet the target.

Then, early in '87 the Canadian asked the president to re-examine the funds devoted to the program and asked for a decision prior to this year's summit conference of the two leaders in April. (He must have thought Washington had begun moving.)

Meanwhile, Energy Secretary John Herrington says budget amendments would be submitted to Congress within the next few weeks. His department is still studying requests for $5 billion in projects that would meet a criteria of benefit to Canada, be adaptable to existing plants, and provide maximum emissions reduction for the dollar.

In other words, a year after the U.S. agreed to do something about the acid rain we have reached a point to where it looks as though something may be done; Washington hasn't really gotten around to starting, yet.

The two leaders are scheduled to meet in Ottawa next month and that acid rain problem looms very large among Canada's priorities as well as being a matter of concern among U.S. conservationists.

On the surface it should be a routine matter for digestion by the governmental process. That may be the case in other capitals, but ours is in a class by itself.

Receding Problem

There are probably several causes for baldness which together posed a very real obstacle to "cures".

Even so, since human males began objecting to loss of hair on their scalps there have also been others who offered remedial measures with varying results.

Some have opted for transplants, ointments, potions and hair pieces which covered shining pates. Others simply chose to join The Bald Headed Men of America .. and others considered themselves honorary members.

Now the Upjohn Company, a pharmaceutical firm, has taken its anti-baldness drug to the Food and Drug Administration for its blessing; and emerged with mixed results.

The Upjohn formula, whose main ingredient is the drug Minoxidil, is on sale in Canada and, yes, in a few months it will probably be marketed in the United States because Minoxidil is not known to have serious side effects and has been shown to help some people.

The FDA looked to an outside advisory panel of experts (news reports omit mention if any of the panelists' scalps reflect sunlight). To quote a few of them: "I was not overwhelmed by the pictures"; and another saw some of the photographed results as "wish fulfillment hair". Yet another observed it seemed to have an effect on some people but not to have an effect on a larger number.

We count it unlikely such notables as Telly Savalas, Willard Scott, Lou Gossett or Burt Reynolds were among those testing the product; and the least likely would have been North Carolina's John Capps III, the Morehead City man who founded The Bald Headed Men of America.

Capps has no intention of trying the potion. "What for?", he asks. "To look like everybody else?" He is totally loyal to his brotherhood. If he defected there might be no more bald beauty pageants, Rub-A-Bald-Head Week, nor Bald As A Golf Ball golf tournament. Culture shock would surely set in.

Still, the country is full of men who balk at early warning signals of approaching baldness. The Upjohn Co. may have an answer for some, but for most they can offer only hope. Without hope it would be a sorry world.

How Can Education Handle Incompetents?

RALEIGH — Gene Causby has read every one of the myriad of reform reports that have come out of the education industry in recent years and he's yet to find one that answers an important question: "How do we get rid of that incompetent teacher who is already in the classroom?"

Dr. Causby, executive director of the N.C. School Boards Association, says the education world's inability to answer that one question may be holding back public support for the kind of massive education reforms that are needed.

"There is clearly a need for reasonable job protection for all public school employees," Causby said. "I also believe that there ought to be reasonable assurances to the public that competent people are working with their kids, and I'm afraid that that is now out of balance in the favor of the employee."

Causby is not trying to raise public alarm over the state's teacher corps.

'Dr. Causby, executive director of the N.C. School Boards Association, says the education world's inability to answer that one question may be holding back public support for the kind of massive education reforms that are needed.'

Incompetent teachers, he said, comprise "a very small percentage" of the profession. "But they have a profound effect," he added.

Not only can those teachers seriously undermine the educations of 25 or 30 students every year, they undermine public support for a school. "Every parent knows which teachers are incompetent and they know which ones are excellent," Causby said, and the school's inability to get rid of the bad one can sour the public's support for the whole school.

"I believe that our inability thus far to deal head on with that puts a severe cap on how much improvement we can have in the schools," he said. "A lot of citizens are really ready to have quality schools but they are not willing to invest much more without some assurance that they're going to do something about that small percentage."

While Causby is an advocate of merit pay, he does not see it as the total answer to this problem. Sure, if incompetent teachers are passed over for raises year after year, some might quit, he said. But, that could take a long time, and some might still hang in there.

A broader outlook is needed, he said. The state should reconsider the policy of giving teachers an automatic raise for each additional year of service. That strategy, he said, pays good and bad teachers the same, so long as they've been teaching the same number of years.

Causby said the schools also burn out their best teachers early. Good teachers do all that is asked of them, sometimes more than they should do. The poor ones don't. Good teachers, therefore, get used up more quickly while the bad ones pace themselves for the long haul.

Causby said the teaching profession should devise a fair policy for dealing with incompetents. "The profession should advise us as to how they would police their own ranks, much like doctors and lawyers do," he said.

But Patric Mullen, lobbyist for the N.C. Association of Educators, says that such a policy already exists. "It's called due process," Mullen said.

Jesse Jackson, The Second Time Around

WASHINGTON (AP) — Voters are unlikely to mistake Jesse Jackson for any of the other hopefuls vying for the 1988 presidential nominations, but the Democratic candidate is carefully smoothing some of the rough edges that characterized his 1984 campaign.

The improvements are meant to correct the disorganization that dogged Jackson in his surprisingly strong candidacy three years ago.

"This is the second time around," Jackson's spokesman, Frank Watkins, said last week. This time, "We know what's required. We know deadlines and dates. ... We'll be a more organized campaign."

Jackson is paying attention to the sort of details that eluded the 45-year-old civil rights activist and his advisers in 1984: He's courting party regulars, his speeches are sharper, and his scheduling is less likely to leave an audience waiting two hours for another late arrival.

He is even giving homage to the traditional candidate-on-a-fence image (cultivated most recently, for example, by Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis). Asked if Jackson is running, Watkins will say, "He's simply weighing that decision at this time, taking family considerations and financial support into account."

(Alexander Haig, expected to announce his GOP candidacy Tuesday, has been less tentative. The former secretary of state said in Des Moines last week: "If I wake up on the morning of the 24th and I'm still breathing well, my appetite's all right, I think I'm going to throw my hat in the ring.")

In the meantime, the polishing of the Jackson campaign is under way.

This time around, Jackson isn't orchestrating a fake draft — the "run Jesse run" appearances that preceded his first race. Rather, he is going the professional route, opening an "exploratory committee" last Thursday to raise funds in advance of his official announcement.

Jackson told an Associated Press reporter in Iowa in January that he thought the disarray of 1984 was inevitable.

"We had no money, and we had no one around with campaign experience. We had no one who could coordinate the Secret Service and the press corps. We had no one who could charter an airplane. ...

"You can assume we've learned some things. You can assume growth and maturity, personally and organizationally."

Recently, Jackson — surely one of the best speakers to seek the presidency now or any time in memory — has been tailoring many of his speeches to a specific audience and focusing on a single theme, rather than giving spontaneous versions of the same wide-ranging speech. Many speeches are now delivered from a text, standard for most politicians but eschewed until recently by Jackson.

At West Point, he talked military policy (saying the United States needs a strong military directed by an overall foreign policy strategy). In Atlanta, he urged national spending of $25 billion for education, several billion more than proposed by the administration.

A Domestic Question Of Control

The big question is who holds the power in the average American home. Up until recently the answer was up for grabs. Now this has changed. Dr. Jungfreud, a visiting psychiatrist at Paneful University, told me, "The power in America rests with the person who controls the TV remote unit."

"Zap!" I said. "Studies show the man or woman who has the ability to change a TV channel from bed is the one who will get the respect in the family."

"But all one is doing is selecting programs. That doesn't make you a god."

"It's not just controlling a TV set. The person who has his finger on the clicker is making a powerful statement. He is saying in no uncertain terms, 'You mess with me and you'll never see channel 9 again.'"

I said, "I personally don't care who holds the remote in our family. There are many nights when I've let my wife click it as long as she wants to. We've had no power problem, except on the occasional evening when I have asked her in a very nice way to give the remote back to me and she refused. I got really mad because she knew it was my turn."

"And what did you do when she refused to give back the remote?" Dr. Jungfreud asked.

"I told her she wasn't being fair, and that no marriage can survive if one spouse switches channels more than the other."

"Did your wife keep the remote?" "She did for 'I'll Take Manhattan,' but I took it back when she dozed off during 'People's Court.'"

"Can you tell me how often you've let her use the TV clicker?"

"More than a lot of husbands I know."

"Yet you feel that when she holds the remote she has the upper hand?"

"Not all the time. But I think I should be consulted when she uses the 'mute' button during Dan Rather. She also changes programs without asking me. I'm for women's rights, but how many women in this country do you know who are up to operating a remote button on a 19-inch Sony?"

"On the other hand, they have come a long way since the fine tuner was invented," Dr. Jungfreud said. "Frankly I think you are in a power struggle with your wife. Every time she grabs the clicker and goes by the 'A-Team' you feel emasculated."

"Maybe you're right, but what do I do?"

"You both have to gain equal control of the channels. This can be done either with a remote TV marital agreement, specifying how much time a person will have to hold the clicker, or, if that doesn't work, by purchasing a second remote so each of you will have your own in bed."

"I like the second idea better than the first. This will give me a chance to zap her 'Wheel of Fortune' off the screen."

"And she can do the same to your wrestling. It will become a game, and there is nothing like a game to keep two people happy in the bedroom."

"Are couples all over America experiencing the same problem?"

"I am afraid they are. Most people don't even know they're at war when they're watching TV."

"The whole thing seems sick."

"No one ever told you mixing remote TV with marriage would be easy."

Strength For Today

We read in "Pilgrim's Progress," that great book written by a persecuted dissenting preacher in the middle of the 17th century, that as Christian and Hopeful made their way toward the Celestial City they came to a place where the river and the way parted for some distance.

The river was symbolic of refreshment. The author John Bunyan was here pointing out that during the pilgrimage we must all make along life's pathway we sometimes become separated from the things which refresh, console and inspire us.

But this does not mean that God has forgotten us. For the good of our souls we need sometimes to be separated from the river with its refreshment and inspiration. Then when we come to the end of the journey and look back, we see that it was all plainly a part of God's providence for us and we can rejoice.

Civil Rights And Wrongs Occurring On America's Campuses

Of all the strange and disturbing developments now taking place on American college campuses, surely the strangest and most disturbing is the sudden outburst of racial animosity between white and black students. Primarily at institutions in the Northeast and Midwest, there have in recent months been incidents and confrontations that raise the most serious questions about how well the colleges are discharging their obligation to treat all students equally, about the attitudes the larger society is encouraging in the young and about the disappearance of history from the national consciousness. These incidents were catalogued last week by The Chronicle of Higher Education in a survey that made for discouraging reading: the fight between blacks and whites at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst after the final game of the World Series; the hazing of a black cadet at the Citadel; the harassment by white students of people attempting to hear a speech by Jesse Jackson at Northern Illinois University; the broadcast of antiblack remarks by a student radio station at the University of Michigan; and four less publicized but equally troubling incidents at prestigious private colleges in Massachusetts — Tufts, Wellesley, Mount Holyoke and Smith.

Analysis

Over and again, the common theme in these episodes has been white hostility to blacks: vague, ignorant, racist antipathy that is so out of place within the ostensibly civilized grounds of the campus that its presence there almost defies credulity. Yet there it is, and it is by no means limited to the aforementioned schools; students at other institutions, from every region in the country, have testified to the existence of deep racial antagonisms that make a mockery of the academic tradition of free and open minds. The college campus, which a quarter-century ago became the spawning ground of civil rights activism, now seems to be breeding a new and especially distasteful racism.

This, mind you, is with neither the encouragement nor the acquiescence of the institutions in question; one after another, the administrations of these colleges have reacted with genuine shock and anger to disclosures of racial prejudice, and most have tried to deal responsibly with it. But overall they seem to have been unwitting accomplices in the creation of an atmosphere in which black students feel uncomfortable and white students feel free to engage in bullying majoritarianism.

Although predominantly white institutions welcome black students — indeed, compete to attract the best of them — they bring these students into a setting where whites are firmly in control. The only ranking black administrator may be a "human relations" vice president; the only black department chairman may be in Afro-American studies, and most of the tenured black professors may be there as well; the campus police force may be overwhelmingly, if not exclusively, white; fraternities and sororities may be closed, however politely, to blacks. In such surroundings, who can blame black students for retreating into black clubs and service organizations? And who can be surprised if white students feel free, in such conditions, to express their own version of the racial fears and animosities now widespread in adult society?

For there can be no mistaking that what is happening on the campuses reflects what is happening in the country. Although facile explanations for racial incidents so widespread and various as Howard Beach and Forsyth County must be resisted, there can be no question that six years of the Reagan presidency have done nothing to encourage the easing of racial tensions. Although this administration has gone through some of the right motions on racial matters, in the larger question of moral leadership its record has been deplorable. The president's indifference toward the black and the unprivileged is too palpable to go unnoticed by the young and impressionable; Ronald Reagan may not be to blame for these specific incidents, but he cannot escape responsibility for the climate he has done so much to create.

According to The Chronicle, racial unrest on the campuses is attributed by university administrators "to a number of factors, including the conservative climate in the country, white frustration with affirmative action, and a lack of historical awareness about the civil-rights movement." The first two explanations make sense, even if they raise uncomfortable questions: Why, for example, does what passes for conservatism in late-20th-century America so often go hand in hand with racism? Why has the white reaction against affirmative action been so wildly out of proportion to the actual dislocations it has caused? But the third explanation, though entirely plausible, is a shocker all the same.

Can it really be true that only a decade and a half after the climax of the civil rights movement, American college students are widely ignorant of the circumstances in which it began and the reforms it brought about? Apparently it can. Only two months ago, upon the celebration of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, report after report made clear that students of all ages had to be educated not merely in the nature of that great man's accomplishments, but in the character of the society he did so much to alter. It is as if America as it existed before the sit-ins has somehow been erased from the national memory, as if overt, systematic public and private discrimination is so far in the past that it has no pertinence to contemporary society — if, indeed, it ever really existed at all.

Such a notion is as dangerous as it is preposterous, for in essence it asserts that history has no meaning beyond itself, that we have nothing of value and importance to learn from it. Yet the evidence that the young are being permitted to luxuriate in this conviction is ample. Surveys of one sort or another repeatedly have shown that the major national traumas of the past quarter-century — civil rights, Vietnam and Watergate — have been reduced to ancient, irrelevant history in the minds of the young. Whether through neglect on the part of adults who allegedly educate them, or through their own willful pursuit of the immediate and sensational, the young are being deprived of the lessons of history — history so recent that it might as well be yesterday.

DELEGATES GATHER FOR FIRST "HELMS FOR PRESIDENT" RALLY

— Milan Svec —

Moscow Is Serious

When Mikhail S. Gorbachev said at the recent international peace gathering in Moscow that Soviet "foreign policy is more than ever determined by domestic policy, by our interest ... to improve our country," some Western observers interpreted it as a signal that the Soviet leader will put greater emphasis on reforming the Soviet Union than on his foreign-policy pursuits. Logic would have it that Moscow's international challenge to Washington would be gradually diminished.

But the picture is much more complicated than that. Gorbachev needs to achieve his first major foreign-policy accomplishment more now than ever before. He has invested too much time and energy in this field (including a number of concrete actions aimed at pleasing U.S. public opinion) to be able to step back empty-handed without an unacceptable loss of prestige at home and abroad.

In a notable speech in Vladivostok last July, Gorbachev made it quite clear where he would look for new opportunities: in Asia and the Pacific area, which he promised to include in "the general process of creating an all-embracing system of international security."

Only a few months ago such plans might have looked more ambitious than practical. It is somewhat different now. After the student demonstrations in China, the dismissal of the "liberal" Hu Yaobang as general secretary and expulsion of other prominent intellectuals from the Communist Party, Beijing is talking again about the fight against Western political ideas and "bourgeois liberalism."

While none of Moscow's recent actions in the region seem very impressive by themselves, they all address three Chinese conditions for improved relations between the two countries:

•The Kremlin recently announced that it plans to withdraw 10,000 soldiers from Mongolia this year. Considering that 40,000 Soviet troops will remain, and more still on the Soviet-Chinese border, that is hardly a major move. But it is a gesture, and more may follow. Last month both countries also resumed the boundary talks that had broken off in 1979.

•Afghan leader Najibullah recently announced, on Moscow's prodding, a program of "national reconciliation." It includes the cease-fire and the pitch for a broad-based coalition government, which are supposed to pave the way for a political settlement of the Afghan war and eventual withdrawal of the 115,000 Soviet troops. The Soviet-fostered plan is obviously inadequate, and the umbrella alliance of the Afghan resistance groups immediately rejected it.

•Moscow has even more problems with China's request that Vietnam withdraw its 140,000 troops from Cambodia. But here, too, Gorbachev has some new cards to play. At the party congress in Hanoi last December, the three top Vietnamese Communist leaders were replaced by more flexible ones. Sweeping changes in the Vietnamese government followed a few weeks later.

The timely visit of Secretary of State George P. Shultz to China was of utmost importance in this situation. It helps both to tame Moscow's ambitions in that area and to create better pre-conditions for countering Soviet moves that might collide with U.S. interests. A multidimensional, active foreign policy is not an option for the Reagan administration. It is an absolute necessity.

Swaggart Denies He Planned PTL Takeover

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Evangelist Jimmy Swaggart said he has never considered a possible takeover of PTL, but is sure he is the unidentified minister Jim Bakker accused of executing a "diabolical plot" to gain control of the television ministry.

The Pentecostal evangelist said Monday suggestions that he schemed to expose allegations of sexual misconduct against Bakker in order to take over PTL are "totally false."

He added, however, that he is confident "beyond a shadow of a doubt" that he is the unidentified minister Bakker referred to in a videotape aired Monday. The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer reported in today's editions.

"I'm totally aghast because nothing like that has ever been considered, thought of or remotely engaged in," Swaggart, president of Jimmy Swaggart Ministries in Baton Rouge, La., told The Observer in a telephone interview from Palm Springs, Calif.

"That would be the last thing in the world I would ever want," he said.

In the videotape made Saturday and broadcast nationwide Monday, Bakker said he resigned last week not because of allegations of sexual misconduct and blackmail he admitted was subsequently paid, but to thwart a "hostile takeover."

Fellow evangelist Oral Roberts of Tulsa, Okla., made the same charge on a broadcast Monday, and Bakker's New York City attorney made similar statements last week.

The Rev. G. Raymond Carlson, general superintendent of the Assemblies of God, PTL's parent church, said Monday he knew of no takeover attempt and didn't know why Bakker would suggest there had been one.

"To the best of my knowledge, Jimmy Swaggart has not intended to do that, nor has there been a struggle to take over PTL," Carlson said from the denomination's headquarters in Springfield, Mo.

Bakker appeared with his wife, Tammy, on the PTL talk show he had hosted for about 13 years. It was their first appearance on the air since Bakker resigned Thursday as president and chairman of PTL.

Bakker revealed Thursday that money was paid to quiet "blackmailers" who he said conspired to lure him into a sexual encounter seven years ago.

But in Monday's broadcast, Bakker said that was not the reason he turned his 500,000-member charismatic ministry over to Moral Majority leader Jerry Falwell, a Baptist fundamentalist.

"Tammy and I did not resign because of the marriage problem," Bakker said in the interview taped from their Palm Springs home. "We resigned for a much larger problem than this. We have learned that there was going to be a hostile takeover of the PTL ministry."

Bakker said unveiling the sexual encounter and blowing it out of proportion was to be the first step of the takeover plot, which included using the news media to plant the information.

"I would have faced you if it was just this problem of seven years ago in our marriage," Bakker said, while his wife, holding a cat and fighting back tears, sat by his side.

"In talking with the attorneys, in talking with our advisors, they advised us that the only way to save PTL from this hostile takeover was for Jim Bakker to resign."

Bakker, who also has submitted his resignation as a Pentecostal minister, said PTL attorneys have obtained documents detailing the alleged takeover plot by a "well-known individual."

The next phase of the takeover plan was to manipulate church leaders by "putting into their hands" the accusations.

"They made a mistake. They contacted too many honest ministers," Bakker said, and "the plan was revealed to us."

New York lawyer Roy Grutman, who represents Bakker, said that Falwell, a fundamentalist Baptist, was one of the "honest ministers" referred to by Bakker.

Bakker said the takeover plan left him and his wife "helpless, but we are not hopeless because we have God on our side."

"We don't know what the future holds, but I can assure you Jim and Tammy will be helping people again because we must help people because God has helped us so very, very much."

Bakker said the sexual encounter was an attempt to make his wife jealous.

"Tammy and I were having difficulty in our marriage, and I got some idea in my hurt that I could make Tammy jealous and somehow win her back to my love. I made a mistake. It was wrong."

"If I cannot receive forgiveness and redemption, then the message I have preached all my life just simply is not true."

Federal Plan Maps Effort To Protect Barrier Islands

By GUY DARST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interior Department is recommending a major increase in protection of barrier islands along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, while saying the Pacific and Great Lakes regions do not need such safeguards.

The National Wildlife Federation says the failure to extend such protection to the other coasts is "a major disappointment."

"Rising water levels in the Great Lakes have poignantly brought home to the people... that they are subject to erosion," federation spokeswoman Sharon Newsome said Monday after the department's draft was released.

Department officials, however, said Congress did not envision such protection for the Pacific coast and Great Lakes shorelines when it set up the Coastal Barrier Resources System in 1982.

Also, "There's not quite the same kind of development going on," and the topography is entirely different, P. Daniel Smith, deputy assistant secretary of interior for fish and wildlife and parks, told a news conference.

The 1982 act bans federal aid for almost any development — roads, bridges, sewers, housing, jetties, airports, channels and water systems — on barrier islands. Affected areas also are ineligible for federal flood insurance.

These bans act as a powerful disincentive for private landowners to build.

The draft recommendations issued Monday call for an increase of 74 percent in the shoreline mileage covered by the act — from 666.4 miles to 1,156.69 miles; an increase in the number of protected places from 186 to 472; and an increase in protected area from 452,834 acres to 1,463,480.

Much of the acreage increase is accounted for by "associated aquatic habitat," typically a marshy bay behind a barrier island.

"I'm sure some of the major conservation organizations will think we haven't gone far enough," Smith said. "I'm sure some developers are going to say... we've gone too far."

The proposals, which will be open to public comment for 90 days, also call for removing military areas from the current system, and the federation said that was a disappointment, too.

At the marine base at Camp Lejeune, N.C., an officers' club was built on the beach — which the government will inevitably have to replace after a big storm someday, Ms. Newsome said in accusing the department of "a complete loss of nerve."

Barrier islands protect the coast from storms, and they shelter important wildlife and marine life. Building on them increases erosion and can destroy the natural protection systems that have evolved on the coast. Storm damage to structures located on such terrain can also be expensive.

The department estimated three years ago that the federal government would save $5.5 billion to $11 billion over 20 years if similar recommendations were adopted.

About 30 percent of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts is classified as "otherwise protected" by state or local governments or conservation organizations such as the Nature Conservancy.

One recommendation is to bring those lands under the anti-aid provisions of the act if they are ever sold.

IN THE STATE

Vets' Hiring

RALEIGH (AP) — Wartime veterans will get preferential consideration for state hiring over equally qualified applicants with no military experience under a plan unveiled by Gov. Jim Martin.

"It puts the veterans on an equal footing with people who may have acquired more actual job experience during the time the veteran was acquiring combat experience," Richard V. Lee, state personnel director, said.

North Carolina has a longstanding policy under which veterans are given special consideration for state jobs. But Martin said Monday the current policy, set by the State Personnel Commission, has become outdated.

Under that policy, veterans are given extra points on written examinations during the application process. In recent years, however, state agencies have stopped giving tests for most jobs, Martin said.

The new policy is that an eligible applicant who qualifies for a certain position will be given credit for up to four years of additional experience, depending on the length of his military service, over a non-veteran applicant who also qualifies for the job.

Nominee

RALEIGH (AP) — Democrats who said Ben Tison was too close to the banking industry to serve as its top state regulator won't be able to levy that complaint against Gov. Jim Martin's second choice for banking commissioner, the nominee says.

Martin said Monday he would nominate William T. Graham, a former Superior Court judge and Republican activist from Winston-Salem, for state banking commissioner. Last week, the General Assembly rejected Tison, a former state legislator and a NCB National Bank vice president.

Confirmation requires majority approval of the House and Senate.

"My understanding is they (Tison opponents) didn't want a banker, and in particular a banker from a big, federally chartered bank," Graham said. "They sure haven't got one when they got me, because anyone who tries to tell you I know anything about banking is wrong."

Martin said at a news conference that Graham's "broad experience in the law as judge, federal government counsel and attorney" qualified him for the post.

Farm Credit

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Farmers say the federal tobacco and peanut programs are helping them to make profits, but credit is so scarce and so expensive that even prosperous farmers are having difficulty getting the money to plant crops.

"Today we are in one hell of a mess," Gordon Williams, a Cumberland County tobacco farmer, said Monday at a public hearing with several farm-state congressmen. "In 1970, the farmer was asked to go on full production, and he did. Man, they asked us to borrow money, and we did — we borrowed against the roofs over our heads."

"Since then, with deflation and lower commodity prices, man, we lost," added Williams, who is also county Farm Bureau president. "What it'll take to bring us out, God only knows. But we've got to have some help."

The hearing, which drew about 100 people, was called by Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., a Democrat and chairman of the House Agriculture Committee's tobacco and peanuts subcommittee, to review how the farm economy was affecting tobacco and peanut growers.

RJR Salaries

GREENSBORO (AP) — Retiring RJR Nabisco chairman J. Tylee Wilson took home more than $1.8 million in salary and bonuses last year and will remain on the payroll through the end of this year with full salary and bonuses even though he is leaving the company next month, RJR's new proxy statement says.

In addition, Wilson, 55, will receive severance pay equal to twice his 1987 salary and bonus when he leaves the company — a package worth between $2 million and $3 million.

The retirement package, which includes an annual pension equal to about half of his average compensation over the past five years, is known as a golden parachute — payment to a top executive that eases the burden of unemployment.

Study Shows Elderly Able To Handle Problems

FOREST GROVE, Ore. (AP) — Physical disability, pain and old age may make independent living difficult, but elderly people do manage to deal with all three problems. This is a major finding from a study done by Dr. Ann Williams of the Pacific University physical therapy department.

Williams' research and interest in gerontology is incorporated into many of her classes, so that physical therapists graduating from Pacific have developed an understanding of the unique problems of their future older patients.

One key to independence among the elderly is being mentally competent, she points out.

"If they have their cognitive abilities, many can manage the problems they face," Williams said. "The mentally sharp elderly usually can network more readily with family, friends and community services so that often they can continue living in their homes, relatively independently."

Williams' study was funded by the American Association of Retired Persons and was conducted with Dr. Richard Schulz at the Institute on Aging at Portland State University.

The study took place over a period of 10 months in the greater Portland, Ore., metropolitan area. Williams and her assistants interviewed 114 people, ranging in age from 50 to 82. A few were still working, despite their handicaps, and she went to their places of employment.

"If the spouse is still living and is relatively well, he or she is frequently the key person in providing for the less able partner," says Williams. "This includes personal care, dressing, bathing and managing the home."

Other key providers are children, and sometimes grandchildren will assist in the care. Williams found grandchildren more involved with their elderly grandparents than she had expected. The grandchildren were often 20-30 years old and provided transportation and shopping for their grandparents.

Often, too, an elderly person will have one or two friends who assist them. Others will receive a conglomeration of assistance from family, friends and public services such as meals on wheels, home care services and volunteers from churches and other organizations.

According to the Williams study, the elderly in their own homes as a whole are not discouraged or depressed. Unmodifiable pain does bring discouragement and depressed mood, however, she said. Those in pain, whatever their age, had the hardest time adjusting to their conditions and changes in lifestyle.

Many of the people interviewed suffered from cancer, arthritis, lung disease, heart disease, diabetes or fractured bones.

Age itself was not a major factor in depression and general attitude. But, the middle-aged did find it harder to adjust to their conditions and long-term physical illnesses.

"People appear to compare themselves to their own narrow age group," Williams said. "An 80-year-old can see many others in that age group who are in worse condition. Those who are 65 cannot do this as easily, and they still want and expect to be active."

"People seem to adjust to what they expect in terms of aging and the different stages of life," she added.

At first, Williams was hesitant to mention death to her elderly subjects. But she learned that they did not mind talking of death and told her that they were not offended by the topic. However, again the middle-aged did not respond to the subject as readily as did the older people.

"It was disconcerting to me to realize that many of the sick elderly have very low incomes within their age group," Williams said. "Their material resources were more limited than those of the non-sick elderly."

In general, Williams found that many of the frail elderly, particularly the older ones and those with little family near them, are relatively isolated. They seldom go to movies or to senior centers.

"The public needs to be aware of the isolation of these people," Williams noted.

Reader Takes Issue With Reply

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I must take issue with your reply to "Color-Blind" — she wrote about an acquaintance of hers who had taken her son to the emergency hospital and demanded a white, American doctor. You called that woman a bigot and a racist. Abby, I think you were wrong. With the recent influx of foreign doctors, I'm sure all that woman wanted was a doctor she could communicate with. Some have accents so thick, they can't be understood, and other doctors don't understand the questions they are asked. I don't care what color a doctor's skin is, but if I'm paying the doctor bills, I want one I can communicate with.

One smiling doctor even jokingly said to me, "Your 2-year-old speak more better English than me."

This is no joke, Abby. It's a serious problem when a family member is injured or sick and you need to discuss diagnosis, treatment and prognosis with a doctor who just nods and smiles mutely. Did I make my point, Abby? — NO RACIST

DEAR NO RACIST: You did indeed. And very well. I can understand why a person would insist on having a doctor who could speak English clearly — but what does color have to do with it?

DEAR ABBY: Please print the answer to our problem because I'm sure others will run into this.

With wedding invitation time near, how should we deal with relatives and friends who say, "We will come to the wedding, but our son wants to bring his girlfriend," and so-and-so's daughter won't come unless she can bring her boyfriend — she'll be bored to tears without him. Another friend told us that they will be having friends visiting from out of town on that date, so please include them.

Abby, we are cutting corners as it is to the point of omitting some people who probably expect to be invited. We are already in over our heads, so how do we answer these supposedly intelligent and well-mannered people? Thank you. — MRS. D.

DEAR MRS. D.: Simply say that you are unable to add even one more person to your guest list. You are under no obligation to provide a reason, so respond with conviction and no apologies.

DEAR ABBY: A friend at work kept telling me about a young lady he thought I should take out. I finally called her and invited her out for dinner. We are both mature adults — mid-30s. Well, I selected a very nice (expensive) restaurant, and after we each had a cocktail, the next thing I knew, this lady had one of her shoes off and she started "stroking" my leg with her shoeless foot!

What was she trying to tell me? — JOHNNY

DEAR JOHNNY: Maybe her feet hurt, or she was angling for a foothold on a more intimate relationship — strictly under the table, of course.

DEAR ABBY: You did not need to apologize for saying "doctors AND dentists," even though you pointed out that dentists are also doctors — doctors of dentistry.

However, not to imply that doctors of medicine outrank doctors of dentistry — when someone cries out, "Is there a doctor in the house?" you can be sure they're not looking for a dentist! — JUST ME

The couple is living in Hookerton.

Lingerie Ads Have 'Appeal'

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

We have a strange situation here. I'm old enough to buy lingerie, but I'm not old enough to read the ads for them.

I'm not talking about the ones that appear in a family newspaper where the model wears a chenille robe and a black strip across her eyes to preserve her identity. I'm talking about the intimate apparel that appears in catalogues ... the Penthouse of purchasers everywhere.

Male and female bodies are draped over one another in seductive poses, dotted occasionally with a bikini that wouldn't cover a vaccination and a see-through mesh tank top that will never play in Duluth, Minn., without a zip-in thermal lining.

Pajama tops plunge to the knees, sensuous satins cover nothing, and a stretch lace teddy with a thong back is close to erotic. If any of these lingerie ads had decorated the barracks of the military, all wars would have ended three to five years sooner.

My question is not so much the propriety of these ads (it does cross one's mind), but why do they waste them on women? Do you actually think we're naive enough to believe that we are going to look like the 17-year-old nymph in the ad wearing a demi-cup bra with matching lace garter belt?

I learned a long time ago (four months next Tuesday) that what always looks sensational on a model in the brochure will not necessarily translate that well on me. Month after month, I used to grab a particular catalogue, order anything this one particular striking model wore and wait anxiously for the postman. Every time my order arrived, I tried on the garment, then returned it with the explanation it was the wrong color.

It took me awhile to figure out our petty differences. The clothes were being modeled by a 20-year-old woman, six feet tall, weighing 86 pounds, with long, black hair secured in a bun. She was also a beautiful Hispanic with high cheekbones who could hook a handbag over her hipbone.

In a way, television is responsible for turning lingerie into what used to be referred to as a housedress. Krystle and Alexis and the women on the soaps languish around the house all day in lingerie, drinking white wine. The other night on "Amerika," a Russian sympathizer was wearing a nightgown that could have made the VFW forget that Nebraska ever existed. But then, we're not talking about women who clean the basement and stick their heads in toilets.

A friend of mine who was visiting picked up one of the catalogues the other day, sniffed and said, "Why would you wear these things? Because they dry faster?"

I was never that young.

ANY TURF SERVICE CAN GIVE YOU GREENER GRASS

That doesn't mean you're getting a healthier lawn. In most cases, it means you're getting a turf treatment that promotes "top" growth and color. Which makes your grass look great. But to build a really healthy lawn, you need treatments that get down to the roots and build a hardy, healthy root system as dense and vigorous as your lawn's top growth.

You need a service that works from the roots up. Not from the top down.

Legislators Hear Concerns

negative impact on the economy of North Carolina."

The resolution calls the tax "an added burden on elderly citizens of the state ... living on a fixed income" and "a multiple taxation on investment capital that discourages prudent investment and venture capital formation."

According to the resolution, "the repeal of the intangibles tax would attract more businesses and retirees to the state ... and would thus increase economic activity."

Ed Murphrey, vice chairman of the chamber's Small Business Division, said that his council supports the word "shopstealing" being inserted in the N.C. General Statutes to replace "shoplifting."

The resolution states that "many individuals have not felt shoplifting to be a 'crime'" and that renaming the offense "shopstealing" might make more individuals aware that shoplifting is stealing.

Another resolution presented by the Small Business Council concerned "closing out sales." According to the statement, state guidelines allow a business to hold a 90-day "distress sale" followed by a 90-day "closing out sale" without stipulations being made on the inventory of the store. Also, a principal owner is able to immediately reopen as another corporation in the same general area and the same type of business.

The resolution calls for the Legislature to amend the General Statutes to disallow businesses from conducting "closing out sales" and "distress sales" back-to-back, to require filing of inventory to stop stock replenishment, and to prevent a principal owner from reopening a similar business within a year after a "closing out sale."

Information also was presented to the legislators about the additional costs of retail credit cards. The resolution notes that banks can charge up to a $20 annual fee for credit cards which is not allowed for retail credit cards and that the retail stores must borrow money from banks at an inflated rate. Also, "the average balance for bank cards is three to four times higher than retail cards, thus producing significantly higher revenues per card for the banks."

Other resolutions presented to the legislators concerned allowing credit insurance on revolving accounts and credit cards; adding the opening account date to checks so that businesses can identify new accounts and reduce the number of bad checks they accept, and requiring mandatory restitution of double the amount of the face value of a bad check (with a minimum of $100 and maximum of $500) to be paid to the receiver of the bad check.

The legislators said they would consider the resolutions that were presented by the chamber.

"This has been the most hectic five or six weeks in Raleigh since I have been there," Jones said. He said that few bills have been passed this session and that he anticipates agenda items to increase in April and May.

He said that this week the House will consider a bill sponsored by Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, calling for the state to pull out of the Southeast Compact. Jones said the bill has a "good chance in the House."

The Southeast Compact is an alliance of eight Southern states which will share a nuclear waste dump. North Carolina has been chosen as the site of the first dump.

Rampants Escape Rams As Sun Sets On Rally

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

In the books, it will go down as a 6-2 Rose win, but were it not for darkness, Greene Central could have just as easily been the winner.

The Rampants got a 6-2 win when the umpires decided it was getting too dark to continue play in the top of the seventh inning. The ruling wiped out a five-run rally by the Rams who had taken a 7-6 lead with two outs in the inning.

However, it all went for naught for the Rams. With the score reverting back to the sixth inning, the rally, in effect, never occurred.

"It isn't that important," said Greene Central Coach James Fulghum. "It isn't worth anybody getting hurt."

The game highlighted a strong pitching performance by the Rampants' Tom Moye, who went six innings, giving up two hits along with nine strikeouts and four walks.

"Tom kept them off balance," said Rose coach Ronald Vincent. "And Axel (Smith) continued to do a real good job behind the plate. We're glad to get the win. I think Moye did a good job. We did a good job of hitting most of the game."

The Rampants took the lead early and never trailed during the official first six innings. In the bottom of the second, Curtis Perkins reached on a walk. Robbie McDonald then reached on a fielder's choice which put out Perkins. McDonald then moved to third on an error on the second baseman. Scott Davis' groundout then scored McDonald.

The Rams left two men on in the second inning and one more in the third.

The Rampants came back with two more runs in the third inning. Jason Galloway started things off when he reached on a walk. He moved to second on a wild pitch.

Axel Smith then reached on a walk and was replaced by courtesy runner Jay Surles. An error on the shortstop advanced both baserunners before Perkins doubled home both of them to give Rose a 3-0 advantage.

That was the end of Ram starter Richie Britt, who went out in favor of Barry Ginn.

Greene Central came back to narrow the gap to 3-1 in the top of the fourth.

Tommy Eason reached on a walk and eventually came home on an error by the second baseman.

Rose had a chance to extend its lead in the bottom of the fourth after putting three men on base and stranding two.

The Rams added a run in the fifth to come within 3-2. Ervin Collins reached on an error on the second baseman, then was sacrificed to second by T.J. Johnson, and went to third on a wild pitch.

Gary Ginn then grounded out to score Eason and bring the Rams within one run.

Rose came right back to score three runs in the bottom of the fifth.

David Daniels started things off with a single and went to second on a ground out by Perkins. McDonald then singled home Daniels to make it 4-2.

McDonald moved to second on a balk and went to second when Scott Davis singled. Greg Jones then singled home McDonald.

Davis stole second and scored on an error by the shortstop to make it 6-2.

"We got things rolling," Vincent said of the fifth-inning spurt. "We hit the ball well. We hit the ball down (in play) better. We did a good job on the bases."

Rose improves to 4-1 while the Rams drop to 5-2. The Rampants return to action next Tuesday against Northern Nash. Greene Central's next game is today at West Craven.

Rose Runners Take Easy Win

Rose High School's boys' track team had little trouble in running away with a three-way meet held at E.B. Aycock Junior High School Monday.

The Rampants finished the afternoon with 111½ points while Eastern Wayne was a distant second with 38½. Greene Central finished third with 27.

Rose won all but five individual events. Eastern took four of the others, while Greene Central came away with one victory.

Rose had one double winner in the day's activities as David Allen won both the 1,600 and 3,200-meter runs. Eastern Wayne's R. Boler won the 400 and 800-meter events.

Rose plays host to Rocky Mount in its next outing on Thursday.

Tarkanian Says Rebels Have Better Chance Than Team Of 10 Years Ago

By The Associated Press

Ten years ago, Nevada-Las Vegas sent a basketball team to the Final Four that was probably the most talented in the school's history. That year, the Runnin' Rebels lost to North Carolina 84-83 in the semifinals before sending eight players into the pros.

This season, the Runnin' Rebels may not have as much talent, according to Coach Jerry Tarkanian, but have a better chance of winning the NCAA championship.

"I think this is without a doubt the best team we've ever had," Tarkanian said, looking ahead to Saturday's semifinal matchup against Indiana at New Orleans. "What makes them so good is their chemistry, their work ethic, their heart. We've had other teams with more raw talent. But these kids just work so hard and want to win so bad."

Big East rivals Syracuse and Providence meet in the other semifinal game at the Louisiana Superdome.

The Runnin' Rebels staged one of the greatest rallies in NCAA Tournament history to make the Final Four, coming from 19 points down to beat Iowa 84-81 in the West Regional final.

"Our kids have just played their hearts out all year," Tarkanian said. "They've got the ability to (play) pressure (defense) and when they get behind, they can revert to that. They've got more mental toughness, more heart, they work harder than any team I've ever had."

The Rebels demonstrated their defensive tenacity in Sunday's comeback, holding Iowa to 23 points in the second half. Iowa scored 58 in the first half because "we got a little tricky, instead of sticking to the basics," Tarkanian said.

The Rebels' record of 37-1 is their best ever and ties the NCAA record for most wins in a season, set last year by NCAA runnerup Duke.

"We were lucky" in Sunday's game, "but most of the season we were just better than most of the teams we played," Tarkanian said.

Assessing Indiana, 28-4 and ranked No. 3, Tarkanian said he is very concerned about All-America guard Steve Alford.

"Alford is such a great shooter, and Dean Garrett is tough inside," Tarkanian said. "They're just a real solid ball club, very well coached."

While Tarkanian is bringing UNLV to the Final Four for the second time in 11 years, it will be the fourth visit in 15 seasons for Indiana's Bob Knight. He won national championships in 1976 and 1981.

Knight still isn't convinced this group is a great team.

"They have found ways to win," Knight said. "They haven't gone out and beaten anyone big, but they have never given up."

Like UNLV, Indiana had to rally to win its Midwest Regional final over Louisiana State. The Hoosiers trailed by 12 points with 12:26 left before pulling out a 77-76 decision.

"We hung together, we'd been through this before," Alford said. "Two years ago, we might have gone in five different directions. Not this year. Coach told us to hang in there and not try to get it all back at once."

Indiana is the first Big Ten team to advance to the Final Four since the Hoosiers won the title in 1981.

"This is an enjoyable team to coach," Knight said. "They like each other, get on each other and respond to each other."

The Providence-Syracuse game will offer some familiar trappings. Not only are the teams from the same conference, but their coaches are close friends.

"It's going to be tough playing against him," Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim said of Providence Coach Rick Pitino. "I think I would rather play anybody else."

"We're close. Our families are real close. We go on vacations together. But we had to play in the regular season and it is just one of the things that has to happen."

Boeheim's friendship with Pitino dates back to 1977 when Pitino was an assistant for Boeheim.

"When game time comes, we both won't know who's down the other end (of the floor). We'll just be coaching our own teams," Boeheim said.

Pitino left Syracuse in 1978 to begin a five-year stint at Boston University, where he compiled a 91-51 record before departing for the NBA and a job as an assistant with the New York Knicks.

In 1985, Pitino took over the Friars and began restoring the college to the prominence it enjoyed in the early 1970s, the heyday of Marvin Barnes and Ernie DiGregorio. Pitino took a team that had been 8-20 and forged a 17-14 record in his first season and hasn't looked back.

"He did a great job for me," Boeheim said. "I knew he could coach."

Against Syracuse, however, Pitino has had no luck. Providence lost twice to Syracuse this season, extending the Friars' Big East record against the Orangemen to 0-15.

That's in the past, Boeheim says.

"They are the hottest team in the tournament," Boeheim said.

"Everybody else has struggled, but their games have been blowouts." Providence has posted double-digit victory margins Alabama-Birmingham, Alabama and Georgetown, the latter two teams the top two seeds in the Southeast Regional.

The only team to challenge the Friars was Austin Peay, which took Providence to overtime before losing a second-round game 90-87.

Both teams were surprise Final Four entrants. Providence upset another Big East rival, Georgetown, 88-73 to bring its record to 25-8. Syracuse, 30-6, knocked off top-seeded North Carolina 79-75 to win the Eastern Regional.

Supreme Court Rejects Player Bid For TV Bucks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court says major league baseball owners, not players, have the rights to the money generated by televising games.

The court Monday rejected an appeal by the players seeking the legal right to millions of dollars in revenue from televised games. In a one-paragraph order, it let stand a ruling last October's ruling by the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that major league baseball's 26 team owners have a copyright on the telecasts.

"Basically we're pleased with the decision, but basically all it does is confirm the status quo," Richard Levin, director of news for major league baseball, said. "It's a money issue. And like all money issues it can be a matter for collective bargaining."

The Major League Baseball Players Association said the players were entitled, based on state laws protecting the publicity rights of performers, to share in all TV revenue.

But the 7th Circuit court said federal copyright law pre-empts those state laws, and that that the dispute over TV revenue was best left to the bargaining table rather than the courts.

"The players ... seek a judicial declaration that they possess a right ... they could not procure in bargaining with the clubs," the appeals court said.

However, the appeals court ruling does not give the clubs "perpetual rights to the players' performances. The players remain free to attain their objective by bargaining," it said.

Total television revenues from baseball were estimated in 1985 to be worth more than $1.1 billion over a six-year period.

The team owners have agreed in the past to devote about one-third of the revenue from nationally televised broadcasts to the players' pension fund. But those agreements did not include the millions generated by local telecasts and cable TV coverage.

Copyright laws are aimed at protecting individual creativity from being reproduced without compensation, the appeals court said. It added that the televising of a sports event demands sufficient creativity — the selection of camera angles and use of instant replays, for example — to be covered by copyright law.

The players argued that their performances were not covered by copyright protection because they lack sufficient artistic merit.

But the appeals court said, "Only a modicum of creativity is required for a work to be copyrightable. Players' performances possess the modest creativity required for copyrightability."

The case could have far-reaching effects. Unions representing players from professional football, basketball, hockey and indoor soccer joined in urging the Supreme Court to overrule the appeals court.

"The copyright law's requirement of 'creative intellectual or aesthetic labor' is clearly not met by the evanescent performance of an athlete in a sporting event — whether it is Dwight Gooden firing a fastball, 'Magic' Johnson driving to the basket for a layup or Walter Payton running off tackle for a touchdown," the unions said.

Texas Being Investigated By NCAA

AUSTIN (AP) — The University of Texas has released a letter from the NCAA detailing numerous allegations of football violations over the past seven years, including some admitted by David McWilliams, a former assistant and now head coach.

The allegations, the result of an 18-month investigation, were made public Monday, the first day of spring football practice. They covered a period from 1980 to 1986.

McWilliams, 44, hired in December from Texas Tech to succeed fired Coach Fred Akers, admitted Monday he made mistakes as an assistant and "was wrong in doing it."

McWilliams is mentioned with others as providing cash for athletes or arranging for athletes to receive money, some of which was repaid.

The NCAA also said McWilliams and others arranged for athletes to receive free use of automobiles and that McWilliams loaned his car to athletes on two occasions — once to drive another athlete to class and another time to conduct personal business.

"On one instance, I did loan an athlete a small amount of money to go home," McWilliams said at a news conference. "On another instance, an athlete who had flunked out of school was not able to get his transcript to try to transfer to another school — I did help him ... and I did loan my car for a period of 20-25 minutes to an athlete for some personal business."

Asked if he considered the acts serious, McWilliams said, "They were certainly serious because they're wrong."

"Certainly I made a mistake on those things, and I was wrong in doing it," he said. "I apologize to the University of Texas, its alumni and anyone else I caused this embarrassment to."

The university received the Letter of Official Inquiry with the NCAA's preliminary findings Friday and released it Monday at a meeting of the University Council.

UT Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds told the council the Longhorns' program "has withstood the scrutiny of this extensive internal and external investigation and has emerged with no major blemish."

Each of the 19 categories of violations listed in the NCAA's Letter of Official Inquiry contains one or more allegations of rules violations, said Houston lawyer Knox Nunnally, who was hired by UT to conduct an internal investigation.

The allegations include loans and gifts of small amounts of cash to athletes, the loan of automobiles, the employment of a prospective recruit by a UT alumnus while the athlete still was in high school, free auto transportation between an athlete's home and his future employer's business, and entertainment cash in excess of that allowed by NCAA rules for athletes who host recruits during visits to the campus.

The NCAA also contends that extra benefits were provided to athletes in the form of free meals, free dental and legal services, and the sale of complimentary football tickets in violation of NCAA rules.

UT President William Cunningham said he wanted to apologize to students, faculty and staff at the school, as well as the public, "for any violations of the NCAA rules that may have occurred in the football program."

He said violation of NCAA rules "is simply unacceptable."

Cunningham said he met Monday with Dodds, McWilliams, assistant athletic directors and football coaches.

"My message was and is a simple and direct one: Anyone who knowingly violates NCAA rules, or who is involved in a coverup of NCAA violations, will be terminated from the university," Cunningham said.

The allegations follow disclosures that players at Southern Methodist University received cash payments from a booster slush fund and that some officials — including Gov. Bill Clements, then chairman of SMU's

Board of Governors — decided to continue the payments even after SMU was placed on its sixth probation in August 1985.

On Feb. 25, the NCAA instituted the first use of its "death penalty" by suspending SMU's football program for 1987 and limiting the Mustangs to seven road games in 1988.

The football programs at Texas Christian and Texas Tech also are on NCAA probation, and the NCAA is investigating alleged violations by the football programs of Texas A&M and Houston.

To put the NCAA allegations against Texas in "proper perspective in light of the intense publicity focused on Southwest Conference athletic programs," Nunnally said it was important to note what he and the

Jamesville Rocks Creswell, 17-6

JAMESVILLE — Jamesville's Bullets shot down Creswell Monday, 17-6, in a Tobacco Belt Conference baseball game.

Jamesville charged into the lead with four runs in the bottom of the first inning, but Creswell came back with four in the second to tie it up.

But in the third, Jamesville exploded for seven big runs to put the game away and take an 11-4 lead. Jeff Phelps led off with a walk and Kelby Moore also drew one as did Henry Barber, loading the bases. Michael Cox singled, driving in both Phelps and Moore. Doug Jones walked and Ernie Gardner singled in Barber. Eric Spruill doubled to drive in all three baserunners. Phelps, back up, walked and Craig Dickerson singled in Spruill with the seventh run of the inning.

Jamesville added one in the fourth and five in the fifth before the game was called. Creswell had scored single runs in the fourth and fifth.

Jamesville's hitting was led by Gardner, Dickerson and Jones, each with two. Gardner had six rbi for the day. Sam Williams had two to pace Creswell.

Jamesville is now 2-3 overall and 2-1 in league play. The Bullets play host to Bear Grass today.

CHOCOWINITY — Jamie Stokes went the distance to pick up his second win of the season as Chocowinity rolled past Bear Grass, 8-2, in high school baseball action Monday.

The Indians drew first blood in their first at bat. Mike Jones led off with a walk. Brad Tyson reached on an error, allowing Jones to move to second. Both runners moved up on a passed ball before Jones scored on a fielder's choice by Jonathan Hawley. The Tribe added four more runs in the second inning. With two outs, Dale Cole, Keith Mills and Mike Jones reached on walks. Stokes then hit a two run double to make it 3-0. Tyson added a two run single that stretched the lead to 5-0 and Chocowinity never looked back.

Bear Grass pitchers walked 12 batters. The Bears scored their only runs in the fifth and sixth innings. Chocowinity added one run in the third and two in the fourth to complete the Tribe's scoring.

With the win, Chocowinity improved to 2-3 overall and 2-2 in the Tobacco Belt.

Rampants Claim Track Victory

WINDSOR — Rose High School's girls came away with an easy victory over hosting Bertie and two other schools Monday in a four-way track meet.

The Rampettes finished the day with 74 points while Bertie had 51. Edenton followed with 37 while Roanoke Rapids had only 13.

Rose and Bertie each won five individual events with the Rampettes taking all three relays. Edenton added the other three individual events.

Each of the three had one double winner. Edenton's Linda Jones won the shot put and high jump while Bertie's Carol Williams took the 800 and 3,200-meter runs.

Rose's Karen Dixon took the triple and long jumps.

Rose returns to action on Monday, hosting Eastern Wayne and Conley.

Summary:

Shot put: Jones (E) 28-3; Darden (R) 26-11; Johnson (E) 26-10; Sutton (R) 25-6.
Discus: Harris (R) 76-0; Sutton (R) 74-2½; Johnson (E) 72-5½; Goodman (R) 69-6.

Andy Silverthorn led Pamlico with an 81, low for the day for all golfers. Henry Rice had 94, Blake Harrell had 101 and Laura Purser had a 102.

Ayden-Grifton is now 2-1 on the year while Farmville Central is now 1-3.

The Jaguars return to action today, traveling to Tarboro. Ayden-Grifton is back in action on Thursday at Rose.

Greene Central Rolls By Rose For Softball Win

Greene Central rolled up an 8-1 softball win over Rose High School Monday.

The win was the fourth in a row this spring for the Lady Rams, who now have a 26-game winning streak.

Greene Central got all it needed in the third, scoring twice. Shanna Dunn singled and Laticia Warren doubled. Chanel Hooker grounded back to the mound, scoring Dunn, and an error on the play allowed Warren to score also.

Greene Central added three in the fourth, two in the sixth and one in the seventh.

Rose's only runs came in the bottom of the fourth. Tammy Smith reached on an error and Kim Bridges singled. Joanne Brown reached on an error, loading the bases. Jenny Carroll then sacrificed in Smith.

Harrell led the Lady Ram hitting with two while Nicole Maxon, Bridges, Brown and Shannon Perry each had two for Rose.

Rose is now 0-2 on the year and plays host to Eastern Wayne on Thursday. Greene Central plays host to West Craven today.

JAMESVILLE — Jamesville High School romped to an 11-5 softball victory over Creswell Monday in Tobacco Belt Conference action.

The victory was the third in four games this year by the Lady Bullets and evened their TBC record at 1-1.

Creswell took the initial lead in the first with a run, but Jamesville countered that with four in the bottom of the first, then added one in the second.

But what proved the killer came in the third when Jamesville again scored four times. Rochelle Rodgers reached on an error as did Amanda Barber. Penny Price then singled in Rodgers and Senita Rodgers followed with a three-run homer for a 9-1 lead.

Jamesville added two more in the fourth while Creswell got one in the fourth and three in the fifth.

Price and Sherri Lilley each had two hits to pace the Jamesville attack. No one had more than one hit for Creswell.

MLB Umps To Strike?

NEW YORK (AP) — The presidents of the National and American Leagues have notified clubs to have substitute umpires available in case major league umpires strike at the start of the season, according to a published report.

"What I did is alert the clubs that negotiations are in progress, they haven't been resolved and with the season coming up, they had to find out who is available and who isn't," American League President Bobby Brown said in Tuesday's editions of The New York Times.

The major league umpires contract has expired and negotiations have made little progress thus far. To this point, however, the umpires have not threatened a walkout.

"I hope we can avert a strike," Richie Phillips, the umpires' lawyer, told The Times. "I'm willing to sit down and negotiate 24 hours around the clock in an attempt to bring about a fair and equitable agreement."

Sources told The Times the parties were far apart on salary and per diem payments.

The umpires walked out the first seven weeks of the 1979 season and they struck a total of seven league championship series games in 1984.

Local amateur umpires or minor league umpires have been used during past strikes.

The expired contract called for $30,000 for rookie umpires to $80,000 for umpires in their 25th year.

The owners have proposed a raise for $33,000 to $85,000. The umpires have asked for a starting salary of $40,000 ranging to just over $100,000.

had been provided with free automobiles or cash bonuses to sign with UT, Nunnally said.

Nunnally said UT's response to the NCAA allegations should be filed by April 13.

UT officials will meet with the NCAA Committee on Infractions during its April 24-27 meeting at Hilton Head, S.C., and should receive the committee's decision on punishment within a month of that meeting, he said.

UT would have the option of accepting the decision or appealing to the NCAA Council.

Earnhardt Is Leader

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt might be leading the NASCAR Winston Cup stock car racing standings by 61 points but with Darlington (S.C.) International Raceway looming ahead this week, he said he isn't exactly jumping for joy.

Darlington, which opened in 1950 as the first asphalt superspeedway in the United States, traditionally has been difficult and unpredictable for NASCAR drivers and teams. Sunday's TransSouth 500 isn't expected to be any different.

'Nightline' Marks Seventh Anniversary In Late Night

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In the realm of late-night television, amid wrestling, stupid pet tricks and R-rated movies, the award-winning news show "Nightline" has endured for seven years, as of today.

Why do viewers keep tuning in? "Because we try to focus on that subject every day that we believe people will be most interested in, or are presumptuous enough to think they should be interested in, and presumably we guess right most of the time," anchor Ted Koppel said in a telephone interview from Washington, D.C., where the show originates.

Every weeknight, at 11:30 p.m. EST, "Nightline," is broadcast live in most markets for a half-hour of discussion of world events. Sometimes a late-breaking story means last-minute scrambling for a new set of guests.

Executive producer Rick Kaplan admits the schedule can be a "real grind." He comes in at about 4 p.m. and doesn't go home until the wee hours.

"You have a great deal of pride in the program, and that keeps you coming back every day," Kaplan said. "But that's not enough. You really keep trying to expand the envelope."

Kaplan and Koppel hope to expand the envelope within the next month by producing an extra-long show on one of the most talked-about but perhaps least understood problems of the 1980s, AIDS.

"It may even be an open-ended program. What we want to do is try to respond to all the questions there are," said Koppel. "We want to be able to go anywhere electronically to do it, bring in whatever experts we need."

"I think 'Nightline' has established for itself the kind of reputation that enables us to handle a delicate subject like that."

AIDS is an incurable virus that attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims vulnerable to disease. AIDS is spread through sexual contact or contact with blood or blood products.

AIDS has been associated in the public mind with male homosexuals and intravenous drug abusers, but it is now spreading in the general population.

The show might involve use of telephone hookups to radio call-in shows around the country so viewers can ask the experts questions about AIDS.

"What we hope people will see is another progression of what 'Nightline' can do," Kaplan said. "We have a flexible enough format that we can do and in fact have done anything with it," said Koppel. "We have done formats where had the Washington Ballet come in and choreograph what cocaine does to the brain."

"Nightline" is the successor of "America Held Hostage," ABC's nightly update on the Iranian hostage crisis in 1979.

In its seven years, "Nightline" has won every major broadcast journalism award, some several times over. The show has featured exclusive interviews with world newsmakers like former Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos and Libyan leader Col. Moammar Qadhafi, and has traveled to such places as Johannesburg and China.

Much of the show's popularity is attributable to Koppel, who has established himself as a smart, poised, quick-witted, and unflappable interviewer.

"He's almost irreplaceable," says ABC colleague Barbara Walters.

"They say no one is irreplaceable, but I think Ted is almost irreplaceable."

Kaplan can't imagine "Nightline" without Koppel either, whom he calls "the finest anchor in the business."

"Someday there is going to be a metamorphosis where there will be a different producer and a different anchor," Kaplan said. "What I hope we would accomplish is to solidify a news half-hour that the networks will want to maintain."

New Mike Hammer Cares About Clients

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tough private eye Mike Hammer used to eat hoods for breakfast, but he has mellowed now that CBS has moved his show to an earlier hour.

"It's a different show now," said executive producer Jay Bernstein. "Originally it was a 10 o'clock show, then it was moved to 9 and now it's on at 8. You might say it's 'The Equalizer' with humor."

"It used to be that someone would come to Hammer for help. Five minutes later that person would be dead, and Hammer was out solving the murder. But the new line is that Hammer cares."

Hammer cares? In the books by Mickey Spillane, Mike Hammer punched and blasted his way to a solution. Even in the hardboiled world of detective fiction, Hammer was something of a Neanderthal. His idea of crime prevention was a bullet in the gut.

"The New Mike Hammer," which originally was "Mickey Spillane's Mike Hammer," has gone through many gyrations since it first joined CBS as a weekly series in January 1984. CBS frequently moved the show, from night to night and from time period to time period. This season alone CBS has moved the show twice, from Saturday to Wednesday and back to Saturday.

For another thing, its star, Stacy Keach, was sentenced to prison in England in December 1984 for smuggling 1 1/4 ounces of cocaine. He was released in June 1985 with time off for good behavior, but the show in the meantime had left the air.

Bernstein worked doggedly to get the show back on. While Keach was in prison, he visited 15 cities in 37 days to stir enough interest to prompt CBS to bring the show back.

"Mike Hammer" is currently seen at 8 p.m. EST Wednesday, but on April 11, it will move to Saturday at the same time.

Bernstein has loaded "Mike Hammer" with big names to help attract an audience. Among them have been Monkees drummer Mickey Dolenz, Gloria Loring of "Days of Our Lives," Edward Albert, Caryn Richman of "Gidget," Christopher Hewitt of "Mr. Belvedere," Peter Onorati of "Newhart" and Claude Akins.

In one show, Larry Wilcox played an old friend training for a heavyweight boxing match. Genie Francis played his sister, who was worried about her brother's dizzy spells. Louise Mandrell was the fight promoter, and Theodore Wilson was the trainer. Hammer tracked down the bad guy, but with a minimum of mayhem.

Karen Valentine and Barbara Billingsley ("Leave It to Beaver") played nuns on another show. Tony Dow of "Leave It to Beaver" showed up on another episode.

"We're paying more money for guest stars than any other show," said Bernstein.

The bludgeoning bitterness of the old Mike Hammer lives on in Bernstein's second CBS crime series, "Houston Knights." He calls it a buddy show with a difference.

"This isn't 'Starsky and Hutch' or 'Simon & Simon,'" Bernstein said. "They're not pals. The origins of this are more from motion pictures than television. The most recent example was '48 HRS.' Nick Nolte and Eddie Murphy had nothing in common. They respected each other, but they didn't like each other."

"It's like Clark Gable and Spencer Tracy in 'Boom Town.' People compare it to 'Miami Vice,' but it's not like that at all," Bernstein said.

Michael Pare stars as a former Chicago detective who is arrogant and streetwise, teamed up with Michael Beck as a laidback, good ol' boy.

Dolly Parton Will Star In ABC Show

NEW YORK (AP) — Dolly Parton will star in a weekly variety show premiering in the fall, ABC has announced.

"There are few stars in the world who have the instant recognition and sheer likability of Dolly Parton, and to say we are delighted that she will be part of our weekly series lineup next fall is the understatement of the season," Brandon Stoddard, ABC entertainment president, said Monday.

Miss Parton got her start as a country-western singer and songwriter, crossing over into pop music.

She made her acting debut in the hit "9 to 5" with Jane Fonda and Lily Tomlin and starred in the ABC movie "A Smoky Mountain Christmas" last year.

In 1858, the county's courthouse was destroyed by a blaze supposedly set by a man trying to destroy a will. In 1910, the courthouse burned again.

U.S. Offers Concern For 1,300 Americans Held In Foreign Jails

By HENRY GOTTLIEB
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 1,300 Americans are locked up in foreign jails, and the State Department says it is unable to ensure humane treatment for some of these prisoners.

At the end of last year, 1,388 Americans in 79 nations were serving sentences or awaiting trial on charges ranging from border jumping to murder, according to a recent State Department report. One-third of the prisoners were jailed for drug offenses.

Mexico, with 313 Americans in jail, led the list followed by West Germany with 166, Canada with 163 and Britain with 88.

There was little change from 1985 in the total number of prisoners last year and the number of Americans arrested abroad during the year remained around 2,800.

But according to Secretary of State George P. Shultz, congressional budget cutting is reducing the number of prison visits U.S. consular officers will be able to make to check on foreign compliance with civilized standards of incarceration.

The officers do not try to shield American lawbreakers abroad, many of them hardened criminals. There were, however, 34 confirmed cases of mistreatment of U.S. citizens in foreign custody last year and the State Department is obliged to prevent such occurrences or make sure they aren't repeated.

"We believe frequent visits are necessary to assist with widely-variant judicial systems, sluggish bureaucracies, culture shock and health problems," Shultz told a congressional hearing last week.

"Unfortunately, we simply do not have the travel money at a number of posts to be able to maintain the current schedule of visits where American citizens are incarcerated in prisons which require any long-distance travelling."

Over the past year, the department has announced plans to close 14 consulates, and Shultz said more than 20 more consulates will be shut if cuts are made in the department's request for $2.7 billion for foreign affairs administration.

That would mean longer distances for consular officers in remaining posts to travel to visit prisoners in remote jails. For example, U.S. officers in Toronto or Calgary, Canada, will trek to jails once under the domain of Winnipeg, which was closed last year.

"The task hasn't changed, but the territories have expanded and the number of visits might have to be cut in some areas," said John Adams, director of the State Department's Citizens Emergency Center.

In a recent interview, Adams brushed aside suggestions that, given the department's monumental tasks, a program to aid and comfort lawbreakers might be a good candidate for budget cutting.

"Congress has made clear its concern for Americans in prisons abroad," Adams said. "It's not our job to make value judgments. These are Americans in trouble and it's our right to see that countries adhere to generally acceptable standards of behavior in treatment."

In Thailand, where prisoners' families are expected to provide meals, the United States buys food for American inmates.

In Mexico, Jordan, Nicaragua, South Africa and Yugoslavia, consular officers confirmed two or more cases of mistreatment last year and made appeals to the local governments to correct the alleged abuses.

In the southern African country of Zambia, consular officers succeeded in getting authorities to stop arresting Americans on suspicion of being spies for white-ruled South Africa.

According to Adams, most Americans jailed abroad fit two categories: hardened criminals and "people who have gotten in over their heads and need help."

In the latter category may be hundreds of Americans caught with small quantities of drugs in countries cracking down on narcotics use and trafficking.

Drug offenders in the Caribbean generally faced short terms of confinement, but two developments over the past year indicated this may change in the Dominican Republic and Jamaica, where arrests of Americans increased last year.

The department, meanwhile, is getting ready for its annual pre-vacation campaign to warn American tourists against breaking foreign laws. Passport offices are issuing booklets reminding Americans that being arrested in a foreign country can "ruin your life, not just your vacation."

"Some people feel they can hold up their American passport as some kind of talisman and if they get in trouble, a consular officer will arrive and get them out of jail," Adams said. "It doesn't work that way."

Martin Son, Officer Go Down In Jet

MARCH AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Ground and air searchers combed the snowy, 11,500-foot San Geronimo Mountain without finding Dean Paul Martin, son of the entertainer, and another crewman of a missing National Guard jet.

Martin, 35, a California Air National Guard captain who was piloting the F-4C Phantom, and the fighter's weapons officer, Capt. Ramon Ortiz, 39, of Las Vegas, Nev., disappeared Saturday over the San Bernardino Mountains.

Both men were trained in survival techniques, said National Guard Maj. Steve Mensik.

"If the airplane came down OK, the probability is they could be just fine," he said.

Search aircraft found two other fliers unharmed shortly after their small plane crashed Monday morning, but the F-4 was not sighted. Weather deteriorated during the day and the search was suspended at nightfall with six three-man teams camped on the rugged peak, said Mensik.

The search was to resume at daybreak, weather permitting. San Geronimo Mountain was where a private jet carrying Frank Sinatra's 82-year-old mother, Natalie "Dolly" Sinatra, crashed in January 1977 en route to Las Vegas in a blinding snowstorm. It took several days to find her body.

Dean Martin's publicist, Warren Cowan, said the elder Martin was withholding comment pending the outcome of efforts to find the men.

The search was concentrated between the 6,000-foot level and the peak. "We've encountered a number of canyons that we can't drop a helicopter into," Mensik said. Ground teams were to be guided to those canyons.

Martin's Phantom was one of three jets setting out to practice bombing. It carried no live bombs but did have explosives aboard for the ejection seats and rockets to separate the belly fuel tank, Mensik said.

Martin, who carved out a career as a pop music star and then as an actor, took off Saturday afternoon from March Air Force Base, 70 miles east of Los Angeles. The Air National Guard's 163rd Tactical Fighter Group is based at March. The F-4 disappeared from radar within about 10 minutes.

The flight encountered heavy clouds at about 11,300 feet while under control of flight controllers at Ontario International Airport, Mensik said.

"Ontario control essentially told them to make a left turn," to avoid the mountain, he said. The two other jets acknowledged the order and turned, but no response was heard from Martin's plane.

"Captain Martin was one of the better pilots and an exceptional athlete who handles himself exceptionally well in the cockpit," said Mensik. Martin had more than 400 flight hours in F-4s, he said.

Martin's 12-year-old son, Alex, whose mother is actress Olivia Hussey, had watched his father take off, Mensik said.

Growing up in the shadow of his father, Martin pursued diverse hobbies that helped him develop a separate identity at an early age. He is the eldest of Dean Martin's three children by a former wife, Jeanne.

At age 14, he formed a rock band with Desi Arnaz Jr., son of Lucille Ball and the late Desi Arnaz, and neighbor Billy Hinsche. The group, Dino, Desi and Billy, had a hit single, "I'm a Fool."

The younger Martin developed a reputation as a playboy, dating Candice Bergen, Tina Sinatra and other celebrities while flying private jets and driving race cars.

NASA Scales Back Space Station Plan

By EARL LANE
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — A scaled-down version of NASA's space station is awaiting approval by President Reagan, but there is some concern that the station, in its initial phase, will have insufficient power to allow some of the experiments originally envisioned, sources said Monday.

A congressional aide who was briefed by the National Aeronautical and Space Administration on the plan said that the agency would like to deploy the station in two phases to help stretch out the cost.

The first phase would require a dozen shuttle launches and would cost about $11 billion, the aide said. The original cost estimate for the full space station had been $8 billion in 1984 dollars. More recent estimates have put the cost at $14.5 billion or more in 1984 dollars.

The first phase of the station would include a single "keel," or metal truss, instead of the dual-keel design originally planned. The station would have laboratory and living space for the astronauts, the aide said, and also is expected to include a $1 billion Japanese laboratory "module" and a $2 billion laboratory supplied by the European Space Agency. Solar panels would provide 50 kilowatts of power, he said, instead of the 75 kilowatts envisioned for a fully deployed station.

"There are some questions about the power requirements," a Congressional source said. "It takes 25 kilowatts just to turn the lights on," he said, or maintain a minimum level of operation. Multiple lab experiments, such as those requiring electric furnaces to make materials in space, could put a strain on the power resources, he said. Another congressional aide disputed that view, however, and said he has asked NASA for a thorough analysis of the power issue.

The second phase of station construction would require separate approval by a future administration, sources said. It would include the second keel, they said, as well as an advanced solar dynamic power unit to augment the station's power supplies. Congressional aides were unable to give a firm cost estimate for the second phase of the station deployment.

NASA officials have declined to comment on the revised space station plans until the president takes action. Sources said that the station probably would be permanently manned beginning in late 1995 or early 1996 under the revised plans, rather than in 1994, the original target.

A decision is expected soon.

Chemical Fire Forces Thousands To Flee

NANTICOKE, Pa. (AP) — About 18,000 residents fled their homes as a chemical fire spread a cloud of toxic chemicals over the area, authorities said.

No injuries were reported. The fire broke out about 1 a.m. outside Nanticoke at Spencer Metal Processing, which uses acids and alkaloids in metal plating. It was nearly extinguished within five hours, said Jim Siracuse, executive director of emergency management in Luzerne County.

The chemicals included sulfuric and nitric acids, which cause respiratory problems, he said. "We're not sure the total effects of the chemicals," Siracuse said. "That's why the evacuation was undertaken, as a precaution."

Kevin O'Brien, the county's emergency coordinator, said authorities evacuated roughly 230 people from several hospitals and nursing homes, then began going door to door waking up residents in Nanticoke and Newport Township.

Hospitals in nearby Wilkes-Barre took patients from Nanticoke hospitals and nursing homes and remained on alert to treat respiratory and heart problems, officials said.

The evacuation was virtually complete by 6 a.m. after about 18,000 people had been routed, many going to centers set up in schools in outlying areas, Siracuse said.

The residents will be kept out of the area until at least early afternoon, Siracuse said.

The evacuation proceeded smoothly. "We had several traffic jams initially, but they were cleared up," O'Brien said.

Residents have participated in numerous practice evacuations in connection with the nearby Susquehanna Steam Electric Station, a nuclear power plant in Berwick, Siracuse said.

Nanticoke is about 25 miles southwest of Scranton in northeastern Pennsylvania.
