Sanford Gets Trapped In Thick Of Senate's Traffic

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was 4:45 p.m., Wednesday, April 1, 1987, and the Senate was voting on a motion to table the minority leader's motion to postpone the majority leader's motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate voted to sustain President Reagan's veto of the $88 billion highway bill.

Whoosh!

There were those who thought it an entirely appropriate activity for April Fool's Day.

The situation was this:

Sen. Terry Sanford, the 69-year-old freshman Democrat from North Carolina, had become the only member of his party to vote to sustain the Reagan veto after first voting "present." He complained the bill shortchanged his state, gave it "a raw deal."

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., the leader of the 54-46 majority Democrats, changed his vote in a parliamentary quickstep to side with those wishing to sustain the Reagan veto.

The Reagan position appeared to have prevailed. A two-thirds vote is required to override a presidential veto. The vote was 65-35. Two votes short of the elusive two-thirds.

But wait.

Under the Senate rules, Byrd, having voted with the prevailing side, had standing to move that the Senate reconsider the vote.

He did so.

That opened a window for the Democrats to talk to Sanford.

And talk they did.

And after a few hours Sanford was back on the Senate floor explaining that he had done his duty to his state in his first vote and that even though North Carolina was still shortchanged he would vote to reconsider.

"I think I have done my duty. I think I have kept my word," Sanford said.

Sanford said his first vote had given Reagan a victory, helped show the president was in command despite the battering he has taken in the Iran-Contra affair.

"We have proven that the president is going to be an effective president for the rest of this term if that, indeed, was the purpose and whether it was the purpose or not," he said.

And as a senator he said he had other considerations to take into account, such as the hundreds of thousands of jobs the bill would create, the spurt the bill could give the national economy.

Seated at Sanford's side as he spoke was Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, the deputy president pro tempore of the Senate. Mitchell was chairman of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee last year and was widely credited with playing a major role in the fund-raising and support activities which gave the Democrats majority control and made Sanford a senator.

Then Sen. Bob Dole, the minority leader, stepped in, saying he understood the "immense pressure" Sanford was under.

Dole moved to postpone indefinitely Byrd's motion to reconsider the veto vote.

And Byrd, moving to table the Dole motion, prevailed, 61-39.

Dole fell back to an up-or-down motion to table and thus kill the motion to reconsider.

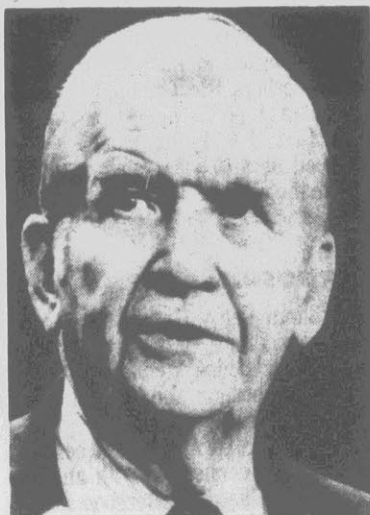

That failed, 64-36.

By now it was clear the Republican strategy could be summed up in just two words — delaying tactics.

President Reagan was airborne, returning from a speech in Philadelphia.

"We may need his help when he touches down," Dole said.

He got it.

Trade Fair Opens

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Over 200 booths displaying the goods and services of Pitt County were unveiled this morning when Expo '87 opened at 10 a.m.

Local dignitaries and members of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, sponsors of the event, participated in a ribbon-cutting ceremony opening the trade fair.

Expo '87 is being held in the New Greenville Warehouse on N.C. 33. The show will be open until 9 p.m. today. Hours Friday will be from 10 a.m. until 9 p.m. and Saturday from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m.

Expo Co-chairman Wayne Dempsey said crowds of 20,000 to 25,000 persons from eastern North Carolina are anticipated this year. He said that all 202 booths were rented.

"Walking around and looking at the booths, everything looks just great," said Co-chairman Mark Garner. "We are ready for a big crowd of people. We think it is even better than last year."

Mavis Butts, vice chairman of the chamber's Special Projects Division, said, "All the booths are really outstanding. A lot of work has gone into the booths to promote the goods and services of Pitt County."

Greenville Mayor Les Garner said, "The Expo is exciting for the city of Greenville and for Pitt County. This third one is the biggest ever and it should be a success."

The Embers will entertain with two shows of beach music tonight, from 6:30 p.m. until 7:30 p.m. and from 8 p.m. until 9 p.m. The Super Grit Cowboy Band will perform Friday night and Atlantis will be featured Saturday afternoon.

Children's entertainment will include the East Carolina University Pirate mascot and the Fitness Bears, mascots of the U.S. Olympic Festival.

Food will be sold by local restaurants.

Free parking is available around the warehouse. An admission fee will be charged to enter Expo '87.

Kremlin Grants Asylum To U.S. Soldier, Wife

MOSCOW (AP) — A U.S. Army soldier and his wife have been granted asylum by the Kremlin, a Soviet official said today, in the first known defection of an American serviceman to the Soviet Union since the Vietnam War.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Genady Gerasimov identified the soldier as William E. Roberts, and his West German wife as P. Neumann, and said Roberts had been based in West Germany.

Gerasimov told reporters at a news briefing that both Roberts and his wife were granted asylum by the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet because "they were afraid of being victimized for their progressive views."

He said Roberts "had been persecuted" while stationed in West Germany in the U.S. Army, but gave no details. Gerasimov did not give Roberts' rank and hometown.

The Soviet official gave no details of when the couple entered the Soviet Union or how they had arrived.

"They have chosen for their honeymoon the Turkmenian U.S.S.R.," Gerasimov said, referring to the Central Asian Soviet republic that borders Afghanistan, Pakistan and China.

In Washington, Pentagon officials declined immediate comment, saying they were attempting to learn further details. And Rex Gribble, a spokesman for the U.S. Army's European Headquarters in Heidelberg, West Germany, said: "I've just seen the report. I've done some checking around. We have nothing on it at this time."

The reported defections came amid an espionage scandal at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow that U.S. authorities say may have compromised its communications.

Three former Marine guards at the embassy have been arrested in the United States, two charged with espionage. The third Marine is being investigated for allegedly breaking the rule barring contact with Soviets by having an affair with a Soviet woman and lying about it.

The 28 Marine guards now at the embassy are to be sent home within the next month.

Although other U.S. citizens have asked for and received asylum in the Soviet Union in recent years, Roberts' reported defection was the first by a member of the U.S. armed forces since the Vietnam War.

The last known American defector was Arnold Lockshin, an American cancer specialist who was granted political asylum in the Soviet Union last year after charging he had been persecuted and hounded out of his job because of his opposition to U.S. defense policies.

Lockshin, 47, formerly Houston, Texas, arrived in Moscow on Oct. 8 with his wife, Lauren, and their three children.

New Ambassador Settles In Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — U.S. Ambassador Jack S. Matlock arrived today to take up his post and said he assumed embassy communications, feared compromised in the Marines-KGB espionage case, will be secure by the time Secretary of State George Shultz arrives.

Matlock, 57, told reporters at the airport he did not wish to comment on the sex-and-spy scandal that resulted in the arrest of three Marine Corps security guards and the recall of the 28 guards posted here now.

He said his first priority is to prepare for the Shultz visit on April 12-14.

"We assume we will have secure communications when he's here," Matlock said. He added: "I'm not going to comment on any condition of the embassy before I see it."

Matlock replaces Arthur A. Hartman, who left Feb. 19 after five years — the longest-serving U.S. ambassador to Moscow since World War II.

The new ambassador is considered one of the United States' top experts on Soviet languages, cultures and history and most recently was President Reagan's special assistant for Soviet and European affairs.

Reagan Makes Personal Pitch To Save Veto

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan made an extraordinary personal appeal to Republican senators today to sustain his veto of an $88 billion highway bill and spare him from defeat in a showdown with the Democratic majorities of Congress.

With aides and GOP Senate allies unable to find the votes needed to sustain the veto, Reagan's journey from the White House to the Capitol represented a decision to place his political prestige clearly on the line.

"I advised the president I wasn't sure it would succeed," said Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas.

The Senate voted narrowly to sustain the veto on Wednesday, but freshman Sen. Terry Sanford of North Carolina — the lone Democrat to support Reagan — announced he was prepared to switch his vote.

Sanford's announcement set off a scramble by administration officials and Senate GOP leaders to find an offsetting Republican vote.

Their targets included 13 Republicans who voted to override the veto on the first roll call.

The House, with a large Democratic majority, voted 350-73 on Tuesday to override the veto. It takes a two-thirds vote by both houses to override a veto.

Reagan has been overridden on vetoes previously — most recently on a clean water measure that Congress enacted into law over his objections earlier in the year.

The White House decided to turn the highway bill veto into a test of Reagan's political standing after months of controversy caused by the Iran-Contra affair. Reagan's decision to address Republicans was an indication of the political importance of the vote.

In a concession that Democrats have rounded up the 67 votes needed to join the House in overriding the veto, Dole said he could see "no ray of hope out there" for finding the vote Republicans need to save the president from defeat.

Reagan's decision to meet with Republican senators was reminiscent of a session on Capitol Hill with House Republicans in December 1985, at a time Officer J.A. Felton said a stereo valued at $160 was reported taken from the vehicle.

Exposure Arrest

William Leroy Green, 17, of 414C Bonners Lane was arrested by Greenville police Wednesday on indecent exposure and assault on a female charges.

Officer M.J. Nobles said Green was charged in connection with an incident late Tuesday afternoon at the Minges Building at Evans and Third streets. Nobles said a woman reported that a man exposed himself to her and then grabbed her buttocks.

Green was taken into custody about 6:56 p.m. Wednesday, Nobles said.

Recycling Sites

Aluminum cans, glass and newspapers will be accepted for recycling at three Greenville sites from 8 a.m. to noon Saturday.

Shiny inserts should be removed from newspapers and glass should be separated by color. Brown corrugated cardboard will also be collected.

Manned drop-off points are at West End Shopping Center on Memorial Drive, in the parking lot of Overton's Supermarket on Jarvis Street and at Rivergate Shopping Center on East 10th Street extension.

The recyclable acceptance project is held the first Saturday of each month through the cooperation of several public and private organizations in Greenville. Funds received through the sale of materials are used by the East Carolina Vocational Center and the Pitt County Mental Health Center, two of the agencies participating in the project.

REFLECTOR HOTLINE

Hotline gets things done. Write and tell us about the problem or issue into which you'd like for Hotline to look. Enclose photostatic copies of any pertinent information. Our address is The Daily Reflector, Box 1967, Greenville, N.C., 27835. Because of the large numbers received, Hotline cannot answer or publish every item we receive, but we deal with all of those for which we have staff time. Names must be given, but only initials will be published.

TELETHON VOLUNTEERS REQUESTED

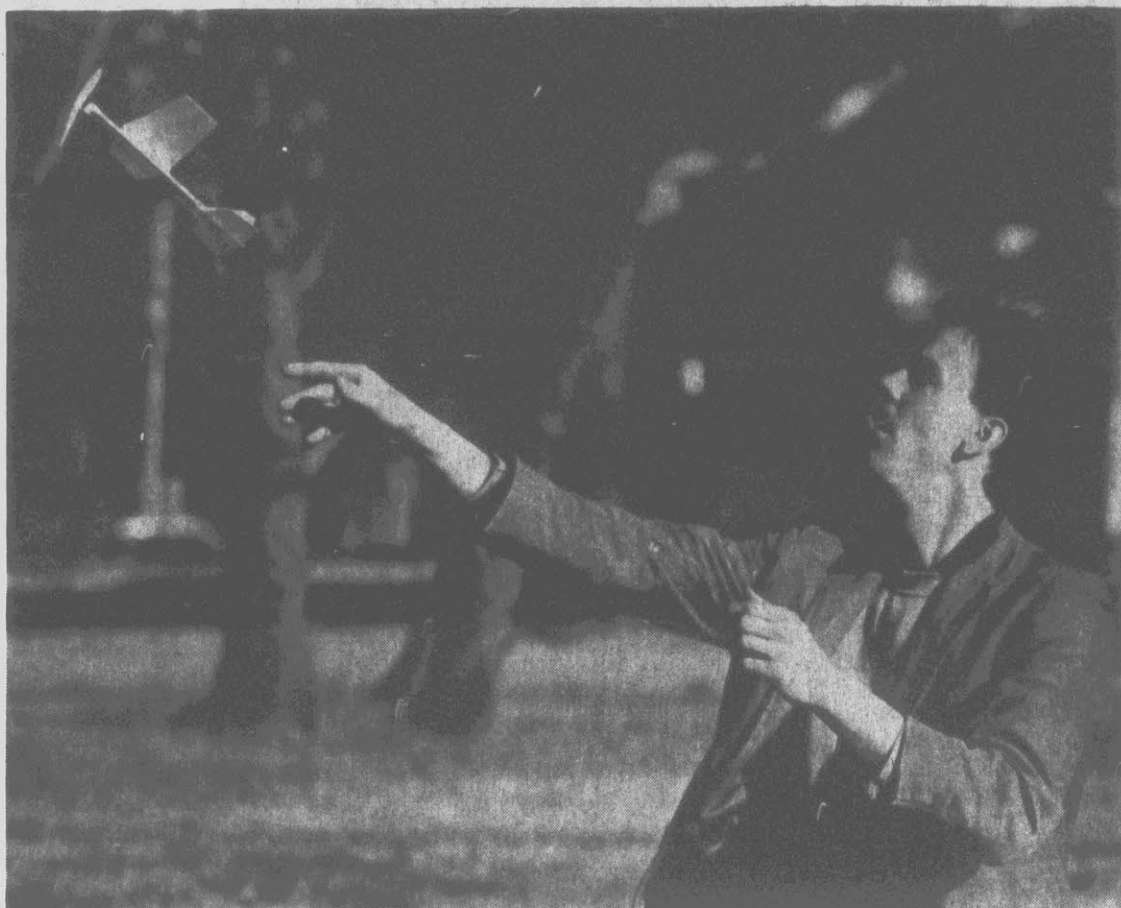

About 400 volunteers are being sought by the Children's Hospital of Eastern North Carolina to participate in the Children's Miracle Network Telethon, say Kathleen Leonard and Glyn York, volunteer co-chairman.

Volunteers are being registered at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

The telethon will be aired for 21 hours May 30-31 and will benefit the Children's Hospital of Eastern North Carolina, a component of Pitt County Memorial Hospital, and other pediatric hospitals throughout the United States and Canada. Local programming will originate live from the auditorium of the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

Volunteers are needed to answer telephones, record pledges and provide other assistance during portions of the telethon. Short training sessions will be offered at various times in May.

To register as a telethon volunteer, call PCMH day or night, 757-4526.

Not Affordable

Conditions are not good for indulging in an all-out trade war even though Japan and the United States appear headed in that direction. The economies of both countries are feared too fragile for that kind of luxury.

Friction between the two countries on the trade front is not new. It has appeared with every expansion of the Japanese industrial base. They play hard ball.

That was underlined only a few years ago in the automobile market. Not only did they briefly dominate U.S. car sales with a flood of exports but undermined efforts to restrain them by building their own auto plants in this country.

The present computer chip dispute carries major implications. Last August Japan promised to quit dumping its cheaper semiconductors in this country and other markets at prices U.S. makers say severely undercut them and threatened survival of American production.

Frustrations have grown with Japan selling its chips at below-market prices in places like Hong Kong and Singapore where in turn they could be imported into the U.S.

Reagan administration officials also accuse Japan of not living up to another part of the semiconductor agreement: a promise to open more Japanese markets to computer chips manufactured in this country.

Retaliation has been sought and agreed to. A cabinet panel targeted electronic products made by the same Japanese companies that make computer chips. They are threatened by tariffs that would make these products too costly for the American market.

Japan's government... which works hand in hand with its manufacturers ... in turn hints a gesture of appeasing U.S. frustrations by the possible purchase of American-made super-computers.

Development of the supercomputer in this country has been seen as a sort of ace-in-the-hole for becoming a future economic asset. Japan would have been almost compelled to invest in it; so in essence, Tokyo was offering little or nothing in that bid to soothe its "trading partner". (Last year, Japanese sales in the U.S. exceeded U.S. sales in Japan by $58 billion, according to government figures.)

Meanwhile, ripples from the present weakness of the dollar on world exchanges are having their effect and no one is willing or able to forecast the outcome.

It makes a trade war one of the least likely alternatives anybody would want.

Outmaneuvered again?

'Mo' Returns

"Mo Shad" will become an endangered species once again this weekend as Grifton celebrates the 17th annual Shad Festival on the banks of Contentnea Creek.

"Mo," usually found flopping in shallow, still tributaries of remote streams, will wind up in hot grease and bubbling stew pots in the form of fried fish and fish stew Saturday and Sunday.

Now before chuckling at the exaltation of this bony, saltwater fish native to eastern North Carolina creeks, consider the fact Grifton has celebrated the return of the shad for 17 years. That longevity qualifies the event as Pitt County's longest-running festival — a distinction that hardly merits mirth.

The Shad Festival has been around long enough to gain statewide and national attention with its Fishy Tales storytelling contest — alias the Grifton Liars' Club — and its good cooking. The event has drawn notoriety for its Gizzard Shad Pageant, which pits the ugliest local men-dressed-up-as-ladies against each other for the title of Miss Gizzard Shad. Contest searches for annual themes have tested the imagination of the community and prompted chuckles at their cleverness. This year's theme, "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Shad," is no exception.

But despite these comical-sounding aspects of the celebration of this spring delicacy, the festival commands respect. In 17 years, it's grown from a three-day to a week-long event. Throughout the year, the festival has remained true to its stated purpose — to have fun while benefitting the community. There's something for everybody in Grifton this weekend, from kiddie rides to crafts to a mudbog.

Attendance has increased steadily through the years, attesting to the fact that the Grifton shad shenanigans have come into their own. Not bad for an event born out of a casual remark made 17 years ago in a Grifton Resources Improvement program meeting.

So look out, "Mo Shad," you'll get no sympathy for your timely demise in Grifton this weekend. Your temporary extinction is for a good cause — "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Shad."

Today's Thought

The Jim Bakker debacle has certainly raised a host of voices from television evangelists. Now the question is will it all end like the Tower of Babel?

The Play's The Thing

'For Reagan, the highway bill fight was a means of regaining political ground lost in the Iran-Contra affair. To Gorbachev, "glasnost" offered a means of convincing the world he was leading the Soviet Union into a new era.'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The highway bill fight is not about money or paving roads or raising the speed limit. Likewise, the shift toward more openness in the Soviet Union is not about freedom as it is understood in the West.

Thus it was ironic that on Tuesday, while President Reagan was engaging in a largely symbolic battle with Congress over a highway bill, Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov was having lunch in Moscow with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Both events were elements of larger goals being pursued by Reagan and Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

For Reagan, the highway bill fight was a means of regaining political ground lost in the Iran-Contra affair. To Gorbachev, "glasnost" offered a means of convincing the world he was leading the Soviet Union into a new era.

Not only are they leaders of the world's two most powerful nations, Reagan and Gorbachev also are masters of the politics of symbolism.

Under criticism for his detached management style, the U.S. president became a hands-on manager, discovered his little-used veto pen, confronted the media and rallied his troops.

The House on Tuesday resoundingly overrode Reagan's veto of the $88 billion highway bill as Republican leaders joined the Democratic majority. The Senate was the real battleground and the White House was fighting for the 34 votes needed to sustain the veto.

But this was a case in which fighting the battle was more important than the outcome. Far more important to the president than the budgetary issue in the highway bill was the need to reassert his leadership.

Half a world away, the Sakharov-Thatcher lunch, unthinkable only months ago when the physicist was in internal exile in Gorki, was the latest element of a fast-moving campaign that also has included word that thousands of Soviet Jews would receive permission to emigrate, and even talk about contested elections.

The question in Moscow and Washington was whether the substance would outlast the immediate stylistic goal.

If the president's standing in opinion polls is restored, will he return to his more accustomed style of avoiding confrontation and of leaving the details of policy implementation to others?

Those suspicious of Gorbachev's motives predict the current shift in policy is only a temporary ploy designed to help the Soviets in their campaign to kill the U.S. "Star Wars" missile defense program.

"Anything that makes the Soviet Union a more open society will help to strengthen trust and confidence," Mrs. Thatcher told reporters in Moscow. The British leader also said, however, that while she was impressed by Gorbachev's new domestic policies, he had failed to convince her to yield on arms control issues.

"I made it clear that we were not prepared to accept the denuclearization of Europe," she said. Reagan opened the week with some political theater in Constitution Hall at a rally of administration officials. The president, Vice President George Bush, Attorney General Ed win Meese III, Secretary of State George Shultz, Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger stood shoulder to shoulder and sang "God Bless America."

"We're going to have the greatest fourth quarter in presidential history," Reagan told his cheering aides.

He called the highway bill a boondoggle that "gives me a case of heartburn. How do I spell relief? V-E-T-O."

"How many jobs do we have to lose to show that the president is rehabilitated from the wounds that were partly dealt by his own inattentiveness," Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd said in a reference to White House efforts to shore up Reagan's standing in the wake of the Iran-Contra affair.

Byrd's Republican counterpart, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, made it clear what the fight was about:

"Some people are saying the president's no longer effective, that he doesn't have any clout, doesn't have any influence," Dole told a Republican audience in Iowa last weekend. "And I think the president has to win this vote ... and if he does, it will be a signal to the American people that Ronald Reagan is in charge. ... That's also important. It's pretty hard to translate that to highways."

"ORAL ROBERTS HOLDING HIMSELF FOR RANSOM. ... JIM BAKKER BLACKMAILED. ... SIR, COULD IT BE YOUR MANAGEMENT STYLE IS TOO DETACHED? ..."

Public Forum

To the editor:

Ann Simo and Becky Davis presented a letter to the editor concerning the County Position Statement which they say "promised" them family grandfathering as a condition of merger. They pointed out that the position paper stated: "That, in anticipation of consolidation of the two school systems, attendance lines would be Grandfathered for current students until graduation." They suggested that the citizens of Greenville "either were misinformed" or "did not comprehend the fact" that there would not be merger unless these conditions were met.

"Due to space allowed," they did not include the second half the above paragraph, which continues: "However, beginning with the 1985-86 school year, attendance lines for students moving into existing subdivisions would be changed as follows: Tucker Estates, Westhaven, Club Pines, Belvedere, Lyndale, Cambridge, Pinewood Forest, Yorktown Square, and Courtney Square to Greenville Township Attendance Area." Also, "Assign students moving into future subdivisions, trailer parks or residences North of Secondary Road 1708 (Cannon's Crossroads) between N.C. 13 and N.C. 43- as well as "East of Secondary Roads 1440 to 1415 to N.C. 13 to the Greenville Township schools."

The grandfathering "promised" Winterville has been extended to cover not only "students and future children of families in ... school," but now also families "currently residing in reassigned attendance areas," adding many families not originally covered. In addition, students residing in rapidly developing areas, which it was "promised" would be added to Greenville beginning in 85-86, have remained in Winterville's district and will not also be grandfathered, furthering the racial imbalance between Greenville and Winterville — which merger was supposed to reduce.

How can anyone justify extending the "promises" to Winterville, while denying and diluting the "promises" to Greenville? The blatant favoritism exhibited in our new grandfathering clause and the selective "promise keeping" that it represents are neither fair nor ethical and should not exist!

To the editor:

During the last election campaign, a group promoting the incumbent Chief Justice of the North Carolina Supreme Court Rhoda Billings attempted to inform the people of our state that her opponent, James Exum, was a strong opponent of the death penalty, verified by his dissent on some 50 of some 60 cases going before the Court during his tenure as a Justice.

Our state newspaper cried character assassination while the candidate repeatedly stated he would administer the laws of the state of North Carolina as they are written, regardless of his personal opinion. Due to our current Judicial Code, as concocted by the prevailing Party for almost a century, judicial candidates are prohibited from launching any meaningful campaign to inform the population on their positions concerning the administering of justice per the written laws.

Even though the incumbent polled a record number of votes throughout the State, the Party coattails were still long enough to prevail. Thus, Justice Exum was sworn in as our new Chief Justice in early January, 1987.

In early February, some 30 days later, his court overturned a death penalty given to a convicted murderer, beyond any shadow of doubt, not by one jury, but by two juries in two different counties.

My question and concern is, if a political party's "select seven" can sit and nitpick the unanimous decision of 24 jurors from two different counties, then why do we need Superior Courts? Just let the seven make the decision. The State would then have enough revenue to build and maintain enough prison space to incarcerate the few they deem prison-worthy.

Strength For Today

Meditation is one of the rarest of modern practices. Do you at stated times sit down, divest your mind of all troublesome or conflicting thoughts and concentrate on meditation pure and simple? When we meditate we keep the mind or attention fixed definitely on one single thing. There is evil meditation, of course, which comes when we turn over hateful or lustful thoughts in our minds. But meditation is transformed into a beneficent practice, however, when people thoughtfully contemplate the issues of their lives and try to reach conclusions in a detached and logical fashion.

Meditation is most beneficial when there is a high object upon which one fixes attention. The highest object, of course, is God. It is not easy to keep one's thoughts for even a few minutes every day on heavenly and divine realities. But it pays off. Furthermore, the capacity to meditate grows by practice.

Baby M Decision Anything But 'Routine' Custody Decision

Bergen County (N.J.) Superior Court Judge Harvey R. Sorkow once described the dispute over "Baby M" as a "routine custody case." But the legal reasoning behind his ruling in the first test of a surrogate mother's right to change her mind made it anything but a run-of-the-mill family court opinion.

His 121-page decision, "In the Matter of Baby 'M,' a pseudonym for an actual person," concluded that the child's best interests — the normal standard in custody cases — were served by giving custody to her father. En route to that result, however, Sorkow weighed not only the fitness of her biological parents but also public policy, contract law and constitutional principles.

Baby M, now Melissa Stern, was born March 27, 1986, after Mary Beth Whitehead was artificially inseminated with the sperm of William Stern, whose wife feared that pregnancy would aggravate her mild case of multiple sclerosis. Tuesday's ruling first addressed arguments against surrogacy arrangements.

Sorkow dismissed the criticism that such arrangements may exploit the surrogate mother, saying the risk is greater in regular adoptions. While a woman already pregnant "may want to keep the child but cannot do so for financial reasons," he said, the surrogate "has an opportunity to consult, take advice and consider her act and is not forced into the relationship."

Likewise, he said, surrogacy contracts do not "denigrate human dignity" by arranging the production of a child for money because "the surrogate is not being paid for the surrender of the child" but rather for "her willingness to be impregnated and carry his child to term.... He cannot purchase what is already his."

Sorkow also rejected the argument that surrogacy arrangements permit an "elite economic group to use a poorer group of people." That position, he said, "is insensitive and offensive to the intense drive to procreate.... It is within the soul of all men and women regardless of economic status."

New Jersey's adoption law — which provides a period after birth when the mother can change her mind — does not apply to surrogacy contracts, Sorkow said, because the idea of such contracts "was unknown when the laws of adoption were passed."

Sorkow then applied hornbook doctrines of contract law, first upholding the validity of the contract between Stern and Whitehead, then ordering Whitehead to fulfill it.

"The male gave his sperm; the female gave her egg in their pre-planned effort to create a child — thus, a valid contract," Sorkow said. He rejected Whitehead's plea that she should be excused from the contract on various grounds, including the claim that it was "unconscionable." Whitehead "knew just what she was bargaining for," he said.

"Unconscionability claims (usually) arise... in consumer contracts for products or services," he noted. "The seller is in the dominant position, and the buyer must comply or there is no deal. Not so here — either party could have walked away.... Indeed, it might even be said (that Whitehead) had the dominant bargaining position, for without her, Mr. Stern had no other immediate source available."

Sorkow said constitutional privacy rights also were implicated in such an agreement. He cited U.S. Supreme Court decisions holding that procreation is among the constitutional rights of privacy guaranteed by the 14th Amendment's "due process" protections.

Although those decisions do not address non-coital reproduction, Sorkow said, "it must be reasoned that if one has a right to procreate coitally, then one has the right to reproduce non-coitally. If it is the reproduction that is protected, then the means of reproduction are also to be protected.... This court holds that the protected means extends to the use of surrogates."

"It might even be argued," Sorkow said, "that refusal to enforce such contracts and prohibition of money payments would constitute unconstitutional interference with procreative liberty" by the states.

In addition, Sorkow said, permitting men to sell their sperm as donors but barring women from serving as surrogates would violate constitutional guarantees of equal protection.

After establishing that Whitehead breached a valid contract when she changed her mind, Sorkow considered whether to require the unusual remedy of "specific performance" — that is, fulfilling the contract.

The normal remedy for a broken contract, monetary damages, would not be adequate in the Baby M case, Sorkow said, because money "cannot possibly compensate" the loss Stern would suffer as a result of Whitehead's breach. "If specific performance is ordered," he said, "the result will be just what the parties bargained for and the contract contemplated."

At this stage, Sorkow returned to the baby's best interests, saying they were crucial in determining the contractual remedy. He then reviewed the personalities, attitudes and financial and emotional stability of the Sterns and Whiteheads, as a judge would do in a normal custody case.

"We find by clear and convincing evidence..." he concluded, "that Melissa's best interest will be served by being placed in her father's sole custody."

Bears, Bulls And Wolves On Wall Street

"This isn't the death knell of the bull market. Instead, it looks suspiciously like a typical bull market decline — short and terrifying."

— A money manager, quoted in The New York Times Tuesday.

WASHINGTON — On Wall Street, they were proclaiming it the "bluest of Blue Mondays." Those with long memories or acquaintance with historical accounts will instantly recognize the terminology: an evocation of other single-day market disasters, such as the infamous "Black Thursday" preceding the crash on "Black Tuesday" in 1929, that have been seared into the collective memory of America's financial capital.

Not to worry. Last Monday, in which markets plunged in the wake of the dollar's dramatic fall, represents only a temporary pause in the inevitable upward cycle of the American boom of the '80s. At least, that's how the big player cited above sees it. There are many like him, and with good reason.

The country is becoming accustomed to these extraordinarily volatile trading days that regularly shatter records for falling stock prices before the market again surges upward. In the last nine months, for example, Wall Street has experienced the five greatest single-day point declines in the history of the Dow Jones industrial averages. Two have occurred in the last two months yet have been followed by astounding advances. Record after record has fallen as the Dow soared to its all-time high. Again Tuesday, the market rose, while the dollar remained unstable.

Whether this week's market turmoil indicates only another pause on the way up, or signals the start of a long-feared downward spiral, no one can say. For years in this Reagan era of rising deficits and stock prices, alternating forecasts of optimism and pessimism have come from so-called experts, of whom almost none seems worthy of the term. Some see unprecedented prosperity ahead. Others darkly cite the adage that in economics, as in physics, what goes up must come down.

But the latest tremors from Wall Street do provide evidence of something else about the state of the nation this spring. The United States is experiencing unusual uncertainty, with unusually high stakes attached to the outcome.

The president promises his supporters that they're about to watch the greatest fourth quarter in the history of the presidency, but no one can say with certainty whether his greatest troubles are finally behind him or only beginning. The same is so for many unresolved questions about U.S. foreign policy and trade problems, the nation's ability to compete in a tougher world environment and how it can finance the guns, butter and social services Americans say they want without raising taxes, which they say they won't pay.

Nor can anyone say which of many claimants will succeed Ronald Reagan next year, which political party is in the ascendancy or even whether winning the White House will be worth much, considering the exceedingly complex problems at home and abroad that will confront the next president.

Of all these, the greatest uncertainty concerns the economy. There's something chillingly uncomfortable, and familiar, about recent market volatility.

It is reminiscent of the period preceding the crash that ushered in the Great Depression, especially because respected analysts are predicting a new spiral of inflation.

Consider how Frederick Lewis Allen described the end of the 1920s boom in his classic, "Only Yesterday":

"As people in the summer of 1929 looked back for precedents, they were comforted by the recollection that every crash of the past few years had been followed by a recovery and that every recovery had ultimately brought prices to a new high point. Two steps up, one step down, two steps up again — that was how the market went. If you sold, you had only to wait for the next crash (they came every few months) and buy in again...."

"Time and again, the economists and forecasters had cried wolf, wolf, and the wolf had made only the most fleeting of visits. Time and again, the Federal Reserve Board had expressed fear of inflation, and inflation had failed to bring hard times. Business in danger? Why, nonsense! ... What the bull operators had long been saying must be true after all. This was a new era. Prosperity was coming into full and perfect flower."

Reading those words of 1931, written in the depths of the Depression after the great boom, makes this in-expert observer feel exceedingly uneasy, if not plain scared.

Martin Administration Stands Behind School Board Nominees

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — The Martin administration is standing behind the Republican governor's appointees to the state Board of Education and his commitment to industrial recruitment in the face of Democratic attacks.

Jim Van Hecke, state Democratic Party chairman, said at a news conference Wednesday that at least two Martin appointees knew little about state priorities in education.

"The only conclusion we can draw is that the governor's appointments reflect his own commitment to public education — lukewarm and passive," Van Hecke said.

He added that Martin dropped opposition to the Basic Education Program because he is facing re-election.

But Phil Kirk, Martin's chief of staff, said Van Hecke "as usual is not telling the truth."

"Governor Martin has never fought the Basic Education Program," Kirk said. "However, he did raise some questions about it as any responsible and intelligent manager would."

Kirk said Martin fully supports his board appointees.

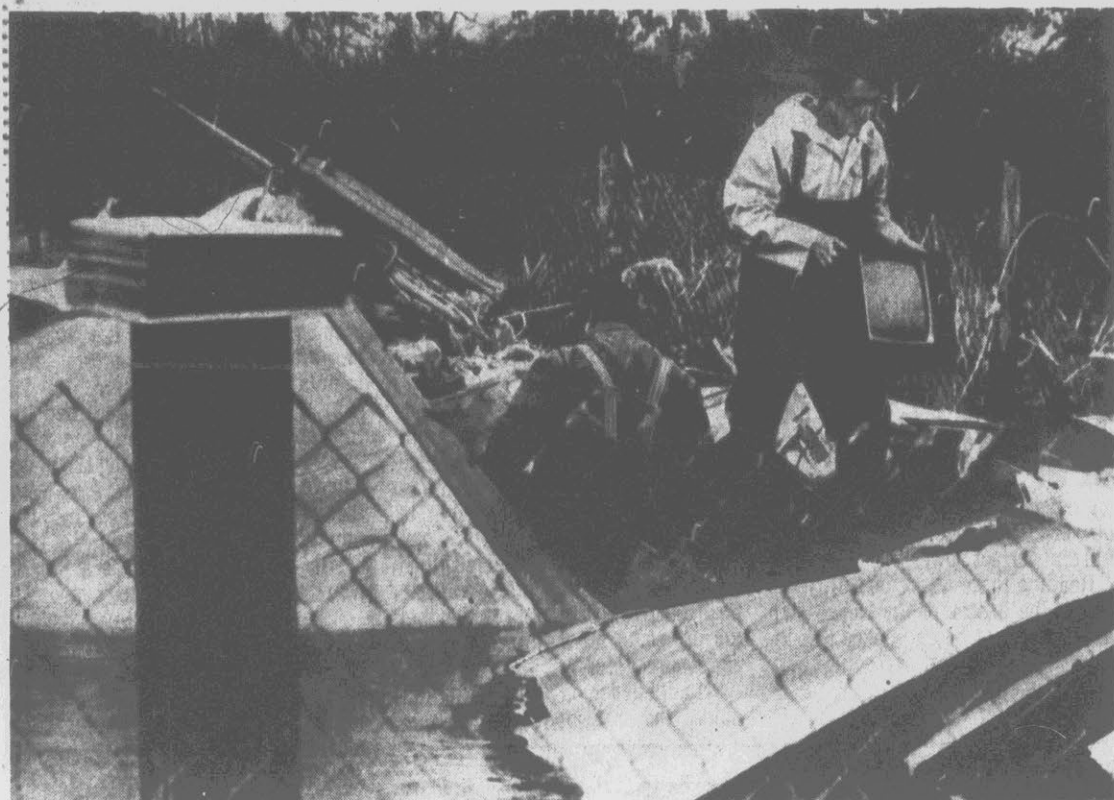

"The opposition is based on politics rather than sound reasoning," Kirk said. He added that the percentage of the general fund going to education has increased under Martin after going down in 22 of the previous 24 years.

On another topic, Van Hecke questioned Martin's commitment to recruiting industry, saying the state's share of new businesses in the Southeast has fallen from one in three during former Gov. Jim Hunt's administration to one in seven under Martin.

Kirk, however, countered, "The governor is more interested in results than media hype and his work on this issue reflects that personal style."

"I find it ironic that Van Hecke would bring up the governor's role while he (Martin) was en route to three plant dedications in Halifax County," he added.

Kirk said Democrats are quick to point out the loss of 16,000 manufacturing jobs but overlook North Carolina's net gain of 123,000 new jobs or the fact that unemployment is at its lowest point in eight years.

Damage In Outer Banks Tornado Set At $800,000

By ERICA JOHNSTON
Associated Press Writer
Crews began cleaning up two Outer Banks fishing communities Wednesday, a day after a tornado injured four people and tore up about $800,000 worth of mobile homes, boats and homes in Buxton and Avon.

"Mainly, they're cleaning out Buxton harbor," said Dare County Commissioner Chairman Bobby Owens. "It's a mess. There's wood from boats that look like they exploded, metal, torn-apart engines, everything."

County Manager Jack Cahoon said the tornado, which blew through Buxton without warning about 6:30 a.m. Tuesday, caused about $500,000 damage in that community, which is about 50 miles south of Manteo. Two mobile homes, a restaurant and at least 12 boats were destroyed, and two homes were damaged.

"Some trailers were just completely demolished," Owens said. "It looked like someone had been through there with a meat grinder."

In Avon, where the twister touched down about eight minutes later, three mobile homes and two homes were destroyed. Eleven homes and one trailer were damaged, causing about $300,000 in damage, Cahoon said.

"I was born and raised here," Owens said. "I'm used to hurricanes and storms. But my God, I'm not used to tornadoes. I'll take a hurricane any time."

"I can't imagine anything more powerful," he said. "It came so fast, and left so fast. At least hurricanes give you warning."

Owens said the Buxton marina where the destroyed boats were moored was insured, except for a crane.

"(Owner) Mike Scott figured he didn't have to insure that, because there was no way he'd lose it. But he sure did lose it," Owens said.

Two people were treated for injuries at Albemarle Hospital in Elizabeth City, and at least two others were treated on the scene for cuts and bruises.

Pam Rak, 27, of Buxton, was released from the hospital Wednesday after treatment for a hip injury, a hospital spokeswoman said. Her husband, Michael A. Rak, 31, was treated and released Tuesday for a shoulder injury after the twister hit the family's mobile home while they were sleeping, flattening it and sending pieces flying hundreds of yards.

Rak was thrown into the grass 10 feet away, and his wife was trapped nearby under the couple's water bed. Their son, Michael J. Rak, 7, was not hurt.

"The next thing I knew, I was sitting outside in the sand, right where the trailer used to be," the boy said.

About eight families were left without homes by the twister, Owens said.

"They've all been taken in by local people. And we're sending social services people around to assess needs like food and clothing," he said.

The cleanup probably will take one to two weeks, Owens said.

House Sidelines Efforts To Cut State Ties With Waste Compact

RALEIGH (AP) — Efforts to pull North Carolina out of a Southeast compact for handling low-level radioactive waste and to limit potential waste sites to counties with nuclear power plants were temporarily sidelined in the House.

The House Water and Air Resources Committee approved sending Rep. Joe Mavretic's bill to abolish the eight-state compact to a subcommittee after he agreed more information is needed on the cost to the state of handling its own waste.

Later, on the House floor, Mavretic bowed to dwindling support and agreed to postpone debate on his proposal to allow a radioactive waste facility to be located only in Mecklenburg, Wake or Brunswick counties. The bill he tried to amend, which sets out a list of criteria for such a facility, was returned to the Water and Air Resources Committee.

Mavretic told the committee that cost estimates for handling radioactive waste have ranged from $17 per cubic foot to more than $600.

"I don't think we ought to overlook the connection here, at least from the utilities' point of view, that the people who are being protected (from wastes) are the same people who are paying the costs," he said. "The law requires utility operating charges to be put in the rate base which is paid by everybody who uses electricity in North Carolina."

However, Linda Little, executive director of the Governor's Waste Management Board, said the extra expense of leaving the compact would be more wide ranging.

"Our research universities, who have to compete for funding, would be penalized because they would be paying more than those in other states," she said. "Businesses would be penalized. They don't have to stay in North Carolina."

Mavretic said a higher cost may be "an acceptable price to pay for keeping that waste close to facilities and also for keeping the waste load to just that generated in North Carolina."

But Ms. Little said there were health and safety arguments against leaving the compact.

"There would be a tendency, if we go it alone, to go with the lowest way to meet the requirements for a facility," she said.

DeVane said addressing the cost issue could at least defuse opposition in the industry-sensitive Senate.

Hardison Says He Supports His Own Plan For Schools

RALEIGH (AP) — Veteran Democratic Sen. Harold Hardison does not disagree with Republican Gov. Jim Martin's assertion that they both are pushing essentially the same school construction proposal, but Hardison insists he is backing his own bill, not Martin's.

"It's a matter of playing with words as far as I'm concerned," Hardison said Wednesday, the day after Martin announced Hardison would co-sponsor his program to issue $1.5 billion in bonds to create a fund for building schools.

Martin told reporters Tuesday his plan, unveiled last fall, was ready for introduction in the Legislature and would be sponsored by Hardison and Sen. Paul Smith, R-Rowan. He said the bipartisan support for his plan demonstrated its merit.

But Hardison later told reporters he didn't know what Martin was talking about, saying he planned to offer his own program.

After a late-afternoon meeting with Hardison, Martin issued a statement saying he and Hardison "are shoulder to shoulder in support of school bond legislation he will introduce this week..."

Martin said that at Hardison's request, he had altered his bill to allow it to fund community college building projects as well as those for elementary and secondary schools.

Hardison acknowledged Wednesday that he had met with Martin, but said his bill had been ready for introduction for over two weeks.

Tim Pittman, Martin's press secretary, said: "They met, they talked, and they're shoulder to shoulder on the governor's bill."

Health Agencies Are Swamped By Requests For AIDS Testing

By ERICA JOHNSTON
Associated Press Writer

DURHAM (AP) — Reports that heterosexuals and some blood transfusion recipients could get AIDS have sparked so many requests for blood tests that some North Carolina county health department are being forced to book appointments for AIDS tests six weeks in advance.

"What's happening is that people in high-risk categories sometimes can't get an appointment ... so we encourage them to see their private physician," said Kathy Kerr, an AIDS educator in the state health department.

But some doctors, feeling they don't know enough to counsel their patients about AIDS, refer them back to county health departments, she said.

"It really puts the health departments in a double-bind," Ms. Kerr said. "They can't refuse to see anyone, but sometimes they can't handle the load. ... People just feel like they're being tossed around. No one's really able to provide the service that we're saying is available."

Officials at some county health departments and the American Red Cross said they had been swamped with questions from anxious callers in the last two weeks, especially since a federal health agency recommended that some blood transfusion recipients consider tests to determine if they had been exposed to the AIDS virus.

"It's a big question mark for an awful lot of people," said Jean Gorman, an AIDS educator at the Durham County health department. "Everybody's getting more calls now. Everyone who deals in this field is feeling the crunch."

Ninety-five of the 98 county health departments in the state perform the antibody test for acquired immune deficiency syndrome free-of-charge, and patients are registered by number instead of name to insure confidentiality. But each department has its own way of administering the test.

In Durham County, no appointments are necessary and testing is performed five days a week. From July 1985, when the department started giving the tests, through the end of 1986, 310 people were tested.

Since Jan. 1, another 100 people have been tested at the Durham County health department, said clinic director Dr. Janice Stratton. An undetermined number of people were tested at other centers and through their private doctors.

"Six months ago, we were getting one or two people a day," Ms. Stratton said. "Now, it's anywhere from six to 10. And it could go up."

In Wake County, the health department administers the test one day a week, by appointment. The department has tested about 800 people since Spring 1985, and currently tests about 20 to 25 people a week, said nursing supervisor Giang Le.

The department's calendar for AIDS-antibody tests is full for the next six weeks, she said.

"That's all we can do now," she said. "We don't just draw the blood. It takes a lot of time. We counsel, both before the test and afterward."

But people who are at high risk of contracting the disease, particularly gay men and intravenous drug users, do not have to wait in line, she said.

"Now when anybody calls, we screen the calls first. We'll ask if they're low-risk or high-risk. We'll take their word for it, and make provisions for them to get (tested) right away," Ms. Le said.

Many, if not most, of the people who have requested AIDS-antibody tests in recent weeks have been in the low-risk categories for contracting the disease, officials said.

"Most of the people we're getting, they maybe can relate to one episode" in which they thought they may have been exposed to the AIDS virus, Ms. Stratton said. "They get worried, and they want to get it checked out."

Four percent of the 33,000 AIDS cases that have been recorded in the United States were transmitted heterosexually. But federal officials estimate that will increase to 10 percent by 1991, and the risk of contracting the deadly disease rises with the number of sexual partners a person has had.

But most North Carolinians who are concerned that they may have been exposed to AIDS virus through blood transfusions needn't worry, said Martha Sellers, communications director of the American Red Cross in Durham.

The federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta recommended two weeks ago that physicians consider suggesting the AIDS-antibody test for some patients who received blood transfusions from 1978 to spring 1985, when the Red Cross started testing all its blood donations for the presence of the AIDS virus.

But a preliminary draft of the report, which was publicized widely, did not mention the word "some." Some officials interpreted it to imply that all blood transfusion recipients in those years should be urged to seek the test, which federal officials since have stressed they are not recommending.

"There was a lot of confusion," Ms. Sellers said. "But since then, the recommendation has been clarified, and it comes out that the chance of someone turning up positive (for the AIDS antibody) is extremely, extremely small."

Factors affecting the possibility of contracting the AIDS virus through blood transfusion include geography, the number of transfusions received and the date of the transfusion, Ms. Sellers said.

"A guy who got 100 units of blood in San Francisco in 1984 (when AIDS was more common than in earlier years) might have something to worry about," she said. "But the guy who got one transfusion in 1977 in the Carolinas shouldn't really worry."

Paraplegic Drug Dealer Sentenced

KING, N.C. (AP) — Convicted drug dealer Lacy Beck says his two-year prison term will become a death sentence.

Beck, 37, of King, pleaded guilty to three drug charges Monday. He has been paralyzed since he was 19 and almost died in a car wreck. He has no control of his bladder and bowels and needs to be turned every two hours.

"The only thing I can do is run my mouth — and that's what I'm doing now," Beck said. He is waiting at his home until he begins his sentence next Wednesday.

"I can't leave my wife and kids," he said. "If they take me to jail I'm going to die. I don't mean to be laying out a sad story, but they gave me this two-year sentence — and I won't last two days in that place."

"It takes a lot to take care of me. I've had my wife looking after me for 18 years. How are they going to give me the treatment I need?"

According to the warrant for his arrest, Stokes County deputies raided Beck's home in 1986 and found two grocery bags of marijuana and a small amount of cocaine.

Beck pleaded guilty to felonious possession of marijuana and possession with the intent to sell. He also pleaded guilty to simple possession of cocaine, a misdemeanor.

His wife Linda pleaded guilty to simple possession of marijuana, a misdemeanor. She had been charged with possession of cocaine and possession of marijuana with the intent to sell, but those charges were dismissed.

Officers at the sentencing hearing testified that Beck and his wife are well-known drug dealers.

Superior Court Judge Joseph John fined Mrs. Beck $300 and gave her a two-year suspended sentence. But he sentenced Beck to two years in prison — the presumptive sentence for the charges against him.

"I did the best I could," John said Wednesday. "But a dope dealer is a dope dealer." Beck could have been sentenced to 12 years in prison.

Thomas A. Fagerli, the Beck's attorney, said that he didn't think that the judge was going to be so tough.

"I felt like somebody had stuck a ... knife in me when he said two years," Fagerli said Wednesday. "I didn't think he (Beck) would get any active time. It really shook me up, but the judge had to do what he had to do."

Beck collects disability and supplements his income by renting trailers and an apartment building. He and his wife have three children.

IN THE STATE

Faircloth

MORRISVILLE, N.C. (AP) — D.M. "Lauch" Faircloth, a former state commerce secretary, was charged with leaving the scene of a minor accident and resisting arrest following an incident at Raleigh-Durham Airport.

The hit-and-run charge stemmed from allegations that Faircloth drove away Sunday after damaging a tow truck with his car, according to court records. He was charged with resisting, and with delaying and obstructing RDU police officer A.G. Kelly while trying to collect a tow fee.

Faircloth, a Clinton businessman, is chairman of a lobbying campaign to win a London gateway for American Airlines and RDU. He went to the airport Sunday afternoon to see his daughter off to college, he said Wednesday. He had left his 1987 Pontiac parked in a 15-minute zone in front of one of the airport terminals.

"It was just an unfortunate misunderstanding," Faircloth said Wednesday. "It's something I don't want to get into. It was a minor incident."

Nominee

WASHINGTON (AP) — A judge from North Carolina who has been nominated to be a U.S. district judge in the District of Columbia says that while he shouldn't be a member of any organization that discriminates against blacks, he will not quit a Masonic lodge that has no black or female members.

David Sentelle, a U.S. district judge for the Western District of North Carolina, said women are forbidden to join the Masons because it is a fraternal order. He said the secret society has no policy against admitting blacks.

However, he said Wednesday under questioning by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary that his lodge has no black members and that he had never attended a Masons' meeting in North Carolina where black members were present.

Concorde

ASHEVILLE (AP) — A British Airways Concorde was to land at Asheville Regional Airport Thursday, making the Buncombe County city the 125th visited by Concorde.

After an overnight stop in Asheville, the aircraft will depart at 9 a.m. Friday with 100 passengers bound for London.

Back To School

MORGANTON, N.C. (AP) — Salem Junior High students will be back in the classroom Friday for the first time since their school was destroyed in an explosion and fire March 17.

Burke Schools Superintendent James D. Wilson said students and teachers will move into part of the North Carolina School for the Deaf, which may house the school for up to two years while a new school is built.

Salem will use a cafeteria and more than 20 rooms in Hoffmeyer Hall and the Hoey Building. The cafeteria and most of the classrooms in the two buildings have been vacant for several years because of a decline in enrollment at NCSD.

Oregon Inlet

WANCHESE, N.C. (AP) — Commercial fishermen, many of whom have squabbled amongst themselves, have united in a renewed plea aimed at opening and stabilizing Oregon Inlet.

The Oregon Inlet Users' Association, at one time an active group of businessmen, supporters and fishermen lobbying to stabilize Oregon Inlet, reorganized this week.

That move came on the heels of the closing of the inlet to navigation by the U.S. Coast Guard because of shoaling. The inlet has been closed for three weeks, marking the first time it has been closed to all boat traffic.

The group sent a telegram to Gov. Jim Martin and North Carolina congressmen to plead for help in reopening the inlet and resolving the stabilization stalemate.

Wilson Editor

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — The Wilson Daily Times announced Wednesday that Hal Tarleton has been promoted to editor of the newspaper, replacing Roy Taylor, who retired.

Tarleton has been managing editor of the Daily Times since January 1980, when he moved to Wilson from Danville, Va., where he was editor of The Danville Register, a 10,000 circulation morning daily.

Taylor, who served as wire editor of the Daily Times for 21 years, retired after nearly six years as editor. Taylor published two collections of his editorial page columns, "Sharecroppers" and "Down a Country Road."

Tarleton, 38, was editor of the Danville paper for two years and was editor of The News, a weekly in Hamlet, for two years. During his tenure on those papers, he received 18 journalism awards, including two first-place awards for editorial writing and a first place award for column writing from the N.C. Press Association. He also won a first-place award for feature writing from the National Newspaper Association.

N.Y. Garbage Piles Up As Hauler Tries To Find Tar Heel Dumpsite

By The Associated Press

A barge loaded with about 3,500 tons of compacted New York City garbage — enough trash to fill about 1,500 roadside dumpsters — is anchored near the port of Morehead City while the operator hunts for a place to dump it.

County officials for Jones and Carteret counties say the barge operator, Lowell Harrelson of Bay Minette, Ala., is looking for a disposal site for that load and future hauls of compacted and baled refuse from New York City.

"I have never seen it piled up so wide, so high or so long," Bill Aiken, health director for Carteret County, said in an interview. "Apparently they have a garbage problem in New York City."

For years, New York City has been paying private contractors to have trash hauled away. The city, which used to dump mountains of trash into the ocean, has been prevented from doing that for environmental reasons.

Pasquotank County Manager W. David Harris said Harrelson had offered to pay $600,000 for space in the Elizabeth City-Pasquotank landfill where he hoped to dump 100,000 cubic yards of out-of-state trash over a six-month period.

Harris said the committee that oversees operation of the landfill voted Tuesday not to accept the proposal.

"They say it is household garbage and trash, but it is not inspected by federal people," Harris said. "We have no assurances on hazardous or dangerous products not being in it."

And, he said, "it would reduce the life expectancy of our landfill, and we need all the space we have. It could cost us in the long run."

Harrelson, who was reached by telephone at a Morehead City motel, refused to be interviewed Wednesday.

Larry P. Meadows, administrator for Jones County, said Harrelson also has talked to county officials and private landowners in Pender and Washington counties about disposal sites for New York City garbage.

But Jones County officials had the same concerns as their counterparts in Pasquotank.

"The money looks good," Meadows said, "but I really feel like our county commission would not accept it."

Meadows said he does not think any county has agreed to take the New York garbage, but both he and Harris said they believe that Harrelson is talking with private landowners as well.

J. Gordon Layton of the state Division of Human Service's Environmental Health Section said the state is "checking into the possibility" of getting an injunction to prohibit Harrelson from unloading the garbage in this state.

Landfill operators "have to get a permit from our office to put any waste on a site in North Carolina," Layton said, but no law permits accepting out-of-state garbage.

State rules require that a person who intends to operate a landfill have a letter of approval from the local authority that has zoning authority for the area, he said.

Meanwhile, Bernard Biermann, who says he is associated with firm called Natural Environmental Solutions being organized in Charlotte, says he has talked with Hertford County officials about opening a regional landfill there.

Biermann, in a telephone interview Tuesday, said he is looking at privately-owned sites in two or three counties and that the landfill "may even be a multi-state deal with Virginia. We have talked about a recycling industry — that would help any area."

Biermann said he would take out-of-state waste only if the recycling operation is launched, but admitted that "you can put a lot of garbage on 1,000 acres — about 10,000 tons a day for 15 to 20 years."

Hertford County industrial developer, Richard Carlin, said Biermann told him that he had "potential contracts with cities of some large nature" for garbage disposal. "They would probably be barging it in through the Intercoastal Waterway and up the Chowan River."

Howard Hunter Jr., chairman of the Hertford County Board of Commissioners, said he has been told the landfill would accept garbage from the Washington-Baltimore area.

"We are concerned about it," Hunter said. "We don't know what kind of garbage he will put in."

Hunter said he was not reassured by the proposed recycling operation.

"Suppose they decide to heck with it and lock up," he said. "We would not know what is out there. We are worried they might leave us with something we cannot handle."

Reidsville Wins Kugel Judgment

REIDSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A Pennsylvania court has awarded a group of Reidsville investors a $35,000 default judgement against developer Owen Kugel, but the investors' lawyer says Kugel's assets are heavily encumbered.

James H. Thomas, the investors' lawyer, told the Greensboro News and Record in a telephone interview Wednesday that the next step is to find and seize Kugel's assets to pay the $35,000 judgement.

Kugel, a Pennsylvania developer, did not fulfill a contract to bring $2 million of development to downtown Reidsville by mid-1986 in exchange for 12 monthly payments of $5,000.

Former Envoy Says Guards 'Immature'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arthur Hartman, who was U.S. ambassador to Moscow when female Soviet spies allegedly seduced American Marines there, says the incident shows the Marine guards are too immature to be entrusted with security at the mission.

"I've been driven to the conclusion that they are too young and lack a certain maturity," said Hartman, 61, who retired from the State Department last month after serving as ambassador to Moscow for five years.

Hartman, a 39-year veteran of the State Department, expressed dismay at what he called the "tragedy" of three Marines accused of involvement with Soviet women believed to be agents of the Soviet KGB security service.

Military investigators said Wednesday it was likely other cases of fraternization between Marines and Soviet women would be disclosed soon. The investigators also have been authorized to interrogate the guards with lie-detector machines, according to Pentagon sources who said the investigation may be expanded to focus on the security of other American embassies in communist countries.

Two of the Marines, Sgt. Clayton Lonetree and Cpl. Arnold Bracy, are charged with allowing KGB agents to prowl through secure areas in the Moscow embassy, where they allegedly saw the names of Soviet citizens who cooperated with the CIA and codes used in the transmission of secret communications.

The third Marine, Staff Sgt. Robert Stanley Stufflebeam, is not accused of espionage, but is being investigated for allegedly breaking the rule barring contact with Soviets by having an affair with a Russian woman and then lying about it.

The incident caused enormous damage to U.S. intelligence and security interests, according to American officials, and one Pentagon source said investigators would interview guards who served earlier tours in Moscow and other Soviet bloc posts, seeking to uncover similar cases.

The entire contingent of 28 Marines is being withdrawn as a "precautionary" measure, Pentagon officials say. American diplomats said the transfers would begin late this week and be completed within a month.

For the time being, all sensitive communications are being hand-carried to the American consulate in Frankfurt to avoid Soviet intercept, State Department officials said. And according to published reports, Soviet ability to read coded traffic gave them an advantage in the superpower summit last October in Iceland.

Israel Blocks U.S. Questions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel is blocking U.S. efforts to question an American attorney whose name has surfaced in the Pollard espionage case, an administration source says.

The lawyer, Harold Katz, who holds dual U.S.-Israeli citizenship, denied any involvement in the case when contacted today at his Tel Aviv home.

But, the administration source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said U.S. investigators believe Katz' Washington apartment was used to photocopy classified military documents obtained by Navy analyst Jonathan Jay Pollard.

In addition, U.S. authorities suspect Katz, who took Israeli citizenship in 1972, of being involved in payments to Pollard, said a diplomatic source, who also demanded anonymity.

Pollard, 32, was arrested in November 1985, pleaded guilty to espionage last June and was sentenced March 4 in Washington to life in prison for selling Israel hundreds of classified military documents in 1984-85.

His wife, Anne Henderson Pollard, 26, received a five-year term for conspiring to receive embezzled government property and being an accessory after the fact to possession of defense secrets.

Israel is resisting U.S. efforts to question Katz and does not want him to leave Israel, the administration source said. Questions about Katz' involvement in the Pollard affair were developed by U.S. investigators.

IRS Focuses On Tax-Cheating Home Sellers, Buyers

By JIM LUTHER AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you're buying or selling a home, you may be affected by the federal government's newest effort to catch tax cheats.

Anyone who sells a home after Dec. 31, 1986, is required to file a report with the Internal Revenue Service. Any cost of filing the simple form — and there are reports some lawyers are charging as much as $150 — would have to be absorbed by the buyer or seller.

The IRS will match the form against the seller's tax return to determine if any taxable profit from the sale was reported as income.

The report was required by Congress as part of the tax overhaul enacted last year. The provision was approved after lawmakers were told the government is losing an estimated $700 million a year because many people who sell their homes never report the profits as taxable income.

The IRS issued temporary regulations Wednesday spelling out how the reports are to be filed. The agency said that at least for the time being, the reports will be required only on the sale of residential real estate involving four or fewer units.

That includes any sale involving a single house, townhouse, condominium unit, duplex, triplex or fourplex, as well as stock in a cooperative housing corporation.

Don Rocken, assistant to the IRS commissioner, said the agency is studying whether to extend the requirement to other real estate transactions. Smaller residential units are affected first because that is where the greatest potential for abuse lies, he said.

The home sale report must be made on a Form 1099, similar to those used by banks to report interest paid to a taxpayer. And the forms will be checked against tax returns, just as reports of interest and dividends have been for several years.

The new Form 1099 must contain the names of the seller and buyer; the seller's Social Security number, the sales price and date of the transaction.

As a rule, the report must be filed by the person responsible for closing the sale, usually a broker, title company or attorney. But in a case when no agent or broker is involved, the buyer could be liable for the report.

The penalty for failing to file the report is $50; there is an additional $50 penalty for failing to give the seller a copy.

Because of the delay in preparing regulations, the IRS will waive penalties for not reporting any sale closed before May 4, 1987.

Rocken indicated many taxpayers apparently are unaware of their obligation to pay tax on profits — capital gains — they make when they sell their homes.

The law permits a person to avoid taxation on up to $125,000 in gain on the sale of a principal home if a new home costing at least as much as the old one was sold for is built within two years. In many cases, Rocken said, a seller fails to acquire a replacement home within two years and never pays tax on the gain.

The new reporting requirement does not apply to transactions involving only the refinancing of a home mortgage.

15 Miners Missing In Fire

MURDOCHVILLE, Quebec (AP)

— A fire broke out in a copper mine in the Gaspé area of eastern Quebec, trapping about 40 miners underground, and mine officials said today 15 of the workers were unaccounted for.

About 25 other miners were in an underground cafeteria, where they have enough fresh water and pressurized air to remain for days, said mine spokesman Lionel Gleanon.

The fire began Wednesday night in the Noranda Copper Co. mine. The cause of the blaze was not known.

Telephone contact was established with the trapped miners, but officials said the workers could not immediately be brought to the surface.

The fire reportedly diminished today, but smoke continued to hamper rescue operations.

Gleanon, a spokesman for Noranda Copper, said the workers in the cafeteria were safe.

POPE AND PINOCHET — Pope John Paul II gestures while talking with Chilean President Augusto Pinochet at the Santiago airport Wednesday. John Paul met privately with Pinochet, whose rightist military government has been labeled 'dictatorial' by the pontiff, today but details of their meeting were not released. Police said 16 civilians and seven policemen were injured in anti-Pinochet demonstrations Wednesday. (AP Laserphoto)

Windsor Jewels Going To Auction

GENEVA (AP) — Half a century after King Edward VIII gave up the British throne to marry "the woman I love," the valuables he showered her with are being auctioned in a decidedly unromantic two-day sale beginning tonight.

The mementos of one of history's most celebrated love stories go on sale in a 12,840-square-foot red-and-white striped lakeside tent expected to hold 1,000 potential buyers and a media crowd of about 300.

On sale by Sotheby's are more than 200 pieces belonging to the late Duchess of Windsor, ranging from stunning pieces of jewelry to sentimental trinkets, all retracing Edward's romance with the twice-divorced American commoner, Wallis Warfield Simpson.

The jewels — diamonds, rubies, sapphires and emeralds — were bought by Edward over three decades, beginning in the early 1930s, including during his brief 325-day reign, Sotheby's said.

Edward's rule ended Dec. 11, 1936, when he broadcast to the nation that he could not reign without "the woman I love." He left the throne as the Duke of Windsor and married Mrs. Simpson the next year.

The royal family never accepted the couple, who spent the rest of their lives in France.

Farm Subsidies May Reach $1 Billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal subsidies for thousands of farmers who have retailored their finances to get around payment limits could top $1 billion by 1989 if the current trend holds, a government projection shows.

"There are a few bad apples — a very few — who unfortunately set up a new structure to evade the payment limit, to in effect farm the farm program for payments," Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., said Wednesday.

Glickman told his House wheat, soybeans and feedgrains subcommittee that the nation needs legislation "to make sure that no one is tarnishing the good name and political support and, I might say, popular support that the farmer so richly deserves."

The Reagan administration has proposed legislation to redefine the word "person" as a means to halt efforts to get around the $50,000 "per person" limit on federal subsidy payments. Thus far officials have been glum about its prospects for approval this year.

At the hearing, the General Accounting Office, a congressional watchdog agency, unveiled a report estimating that financial restructuring by farmers to skirt the payment limit has cost the taxpayer $328 million since 1984. The GAO said the total could reach $1.23 billion by 1989.

The GAO also said the farm program generated $7.7 million in payments to foreign producers using U.S. cropland in 1985, including more than $2 million that went to the Netherlands Antilles, a Caribbean tax haven.

Americans as well as foreigners could hold shares in Antilles corporations drawing such payments, authorities said.

The report said only 31,000 of the nation's 2.2 million farmers are likely to reorganize to skirt the payment limit in the next two years.

Glickman, however, said far more was at stake. He said failure to do something about abuses could bring on an effort by urban lawmakers to dismantle the $26 billion farm program in the name of fiscal restraint.

"Unless we can demonstrate to our colleagues who would cut these programs in favor of their own that our house is in order we must indeed worry about these pressures," Glickman said.

Rep. Arian Stangeland, R-Minn., urged efforts to make sure a few farmers were "not just draining the Treasury."

A number of farmers in any given year will reorganize their finances for normal business reasons.

NASA Seeks New Booster Rocket For Space Shuttle

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer
CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA says it will ask rocket companies to submit designs for a safer, more powerful solid fuel booster rocket for propelling the space shuttle in the mid-1990s.

Five companies will be invited to participate in an open competition for developing a new design for the rocket, National Aeronautics and Space Administration administrator James C. Fletcher said Wednesday. The proposal is separate from the agency's effort to redesign the present booster rocket.

Challenger and its seven-member crew were lost when a joint in one of the shuttle's twin boosters leaked gas and flames and triggered an explosion on Jan. 28, 1986.

The five companies recently completed Phase 1 of the project, in which each submitted design concepts, plans for developing and testing a new booster and cost estimates. Contracts could be awarded as early as June for Phase 2, and the companies would submit more detailed engineering plans.

After a nine-month performance period, NASA would decide whether to build the advanced rocket. If the decision is made to move ahead, a single contractor would be selected, with funding beginning in the fiscal 1989 budget.

Under that timetable, a new rocket could be available by 1993, officials said.

NASA said before it decides to build the advanced version, it must be assured it will have increased reliability, be able to increase the shuttle's weight-lifting capability by up to 10,000 pounds and be produced in a modern, automated facility for maximum quality control and reliability.

The agency said the companies must include both single segment and multi-segment designs. The single segment design would reduce the number of joints like that which led to the Challenger accident, but NASA said this technology still must be proved.

The companies are Aerojet Strategic Propulsion Co., Sacramento, Calif.; Atlantic Research Corp., Alexandria, Va.; Hercules Aerospace Co.'s Aerospace Division, Salt Lake City; Morton Thiokol Co.,

Brigham City, Utah, and United Technologies' Chemical Systems Division, San Jose, Calif.

Morton Thiokol builds the present shuttle boosters and is involved in the redesign with NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Alabama. The shuttle fleet has been grounded until at least next year because of the accident.

NASA also said it also will study alternative space shuttle liquid fuel engines, such as those which carry the spacecraft into orbit after the solid rockets fall away and those which steer the vehicle in orbit.

State Bids On Collider Are Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government has set an Aug. 3 deadline for state governments or others to suggest locations for a massive, $4.4 billion atom smasher.

The U.S. Department of Energy, which formally issued an invitation for proposals for the scientific project Wednesday, said that those submitting proposals can include, but are not limited to, a state government, a group of states, a county, a group of counties and a corporation or other private landowner.

Each proposer can submit more than one site, but each proposed site must be submitted as a separate proposal.

The entire complex for the atom smasher, called the Superconducting Super Collider, is expected to occupy about 16,000 acres. The department said the land must be provided at no cost to the federal government.

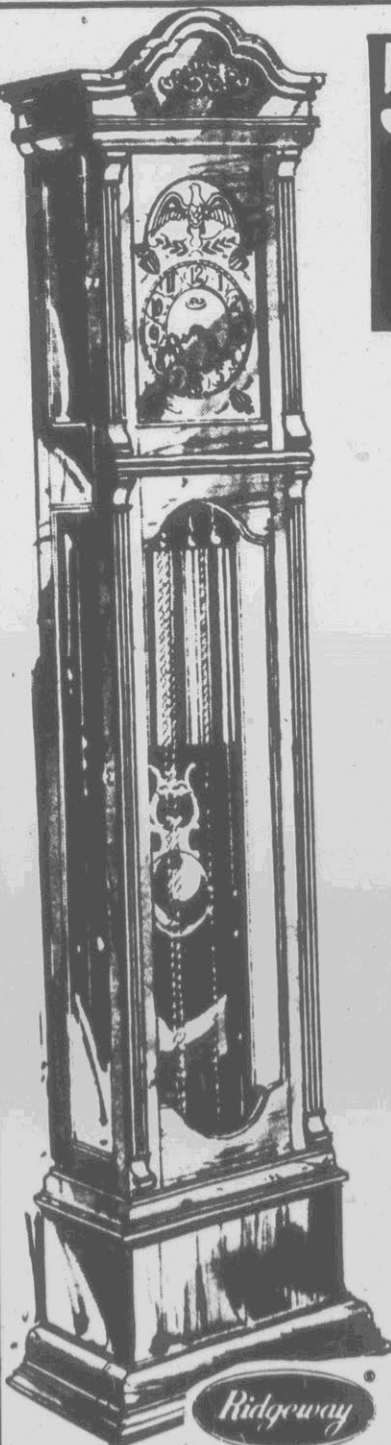

The collider would consist of a circular, 52-mile racetrack-like tunnel 10 feet in diameter in which atomic particles traveling at nearly the speed of light could be studied. It is expected to take six years to build and would create about 3,000 jobs with an operating budget of $200 million a year.

The Reagan administration's decision to support construction of the collider has triggered an intense competition among states to get the project.

The department said its goal is to select a site that will permit the highest level of research productivity at a reasonable cost of construction and operation and minimal adverse impact on the environment.

The department said cost considerations will be considered and that any financial contributions offered by the proposers will be considered as appropriate. However, it said primary emphasis will be placed on the technical criteria.

Following the August deadline, proposals meeting the general requirements will be given to a special panel convened by the National Academy of Sciences and the National Academy of Engineering, which will recommend the best qualified sites by December. The energy secretary will designate a preferred site by July 1988, with the final site selection coming the following January.

More Banks Raise Rates

By The Associated Press
Several big banks have followed Citibank and Chase Manhattan Bank in raising the prime lending rate to 7.75 percent from 7.5 percent.

Wednesday's increases gave another boost to the dollar, which had been weakened earlier in the week by fears of a potential trade war between the United States and Japan. The dollar finished higher Wednesday against most major currencies, including the Japanese yen, in late New York trading.

The Commerce Department, meanwhile, reported that construction spending rose 1 percent in February as strength in the non-residential sector offset a drop in housing construction.

Doing Anything Bad? Disappear

Styles Bring Back Curls And Waves

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

In Russia, when people disappear, no one talks about it. They seem to be caught up in their own lives.

In this country, it's the same. Every day, people vanish, leaving no trace that they ever were.

Haven't you ever wondered where the people are who voted for a President or a public official who screwed up? There was one local politician in Texas who won the election big. Three months later, when it was discovered he had appointed a dead man to a major post, everyone who voted for him disappeared from the face of the earth.

Take Richard M. Nixon. There were 47,165,234 people who voted for him in November, 1972. By Aug. 9, 1974, 46 million had disappeared and the rest of the voters couldn't remember his name.

The man who built our first house is still listed as missing. He vanished the day after we took key inspection and hasn't been heard of since. Some of our neighbors thought they spotted him driving a Good Humor ice cream truck one Saturday, but by the time we got there, he was gone.

And you never hear from the people who, on Jan. 1, make predictions about who is going to win the World Series and whose careers are going to plummet because of scandals. The papers are full of their prophecies on Jan. 1, but after that, they just fade into oblivion.

Mothers have never been able to find the children who say, "Please get a dog. If you do, we'll feed him, give him water, let him in and out when he has to go, and when he drops his calling card, we'll clean up after him." Once the dog is in the house he remains forever, but the children who made the promises are history. You will never see them again.

Another elusive species is the person who said, "I'll help you move. Just call me when you're ready." They press a phone number in your hand and seem sincere enough, but no matter how often you call, the answer is the same, "He's gone and I don't know where."

I am still mourning the loss of a wonderful salesperson I talked with on the phone regarding the return of some merchandise. She told me she understood the problem and to bring it in to her personally and she would take care of the exchange. I should have known it was all too good to be true. By the time I arrived at the store with my package, she had disappeared. Someone said she just went out to lunch and never came back.

Come to think of it, disappearances here are a little different than in Russia. We don't get colds first.

Banished

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Edgar Rosenberg, husband of comedian Joan Rivers and co-executive producer of her late-night talk show, has been told to stay out of the program's daily operations.

"He was told to perform the duties of executive producer and leave the day-to-day operation to the producer," by Fox Broadcasting president Jamie Kellner.

By VERA HALLER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Just as hemlines and shoulder pads change with the seasons, so do hairstyles reflect trends in fashion. Stylists and salons say the newest looks — longer lengths in flowing curls or soft waves — are romantic and feminine.

Longer hair, permed or naturally curly, is cut in layers and styled with mousse or gel for a finished daytime look that requires minimal fuss. For evening wear, hair can be worn up with accessories or twisted into a stylish chignon.

Wispy bangs, tendrils or fringes framing the face further soften the look.

"Fuller, longer-looking hairdos have come back in vogue," says Antoinette Salgado, international artistic director of Cercle des Artes et Technique de la Coiffure, an association of hair designers in 40 countries.

"Generally speaking, a softer style of dressing means a softer way of styling your hair — from Lauren Bacal pageboys that dip over the eye and spill over the shoulders, to sophisticated Marilyn Monroe coils that ripple over the head in waves and nostalgic-looking curls that are swept gently to frame the face," she said.

The prominent color, stylists say, is red — highlights and glossy color washes in shades of auburn and copper.

A listing of trends compiled by Intercoiffure, another association of hair designers, notes that 70 percent of the models at its 1987 spring show in Paris were brunettes who had long or semi-long hair with auburn or golden highlights.

Blondes, however, can also expect to see a red influence. In its 1987 hair color forecast, Clairol predicted more warm, golden blonde coloring, which could include subtle pink champagne highlights framing the face.

Susan Campbell, a stylist for La Coupe salons, explains that salons will stay away from using harsh, peroxide-based colors with the long, curly styles in order to protect hair that has already been treated with a permanent.

The Intercoiffure trend listing said most redheads at its show had long, loose and unruly curls. For brunettes, a common style was a 1950's look with the hair drawn upwards from the temples toward the top of the head with loose strands and curls brushed backwards.

La Coupe salons are introducing a special permanent and cut which results in hundreds of tight, tiny curls that hug the head like a cap then cascade down the back in a rounded "V."

"This means the hair is shorter in the front framing and flattering the face," says Kim Lepine, international design director for La Coupe.

"No more squared-off, cut-across or cut-up napes. Backs are as feminine and pretty as you can get, whether the hair is short, medium or long."

Glemby, which has 1,400 salons worldwide, is showing styles with soft waves permed to move away from the face for a simple, elegant look.

Straight hair was not forgotten entirely. Glemby introduced a new style it calls the panel cut in which hair is cut in chunky, squared-off layers.

Other styles for straight hair include short, sleek hair close to the scalp with spiky fringes on one side of the forehead or tousled fringes.

Hardest Part Is Public's Attitude

By JUDITH FARR
The Meadville Tribune

MEADVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Paralysis is the easiest part of quadriplegia, according to Mark Hanaway. The hardest part is the "head games."

In a recent interview, the 20-year-old Meadville resident described the accident that placed him in a wheelchair for the rest of his life and how he has learned to cope.

On a warm and hazy August afternoon last year, Hanaway and a college roommate met for a swim. They took turns on a rope swinging, soaring out over Allegheny River's watery depths. On his second turn, Hanaway dove into a spot only 6 feet deep. Today he jokingly calls it the most expensive dive of his life.

Hanaway's roommate searched frantically for his pal, finally swinging out on the same threatening rope to spy Hanaway floating just under the water.

Hanaway regained consciousness only briefly after his roommate administered cardio-pulmonary resuscitation and pulled him into a canoe.

"I panicked. I knew my legs didn't work and I couldn't sit up. The next time I woke up I was in the hospital," he recounts.

Life-flighted to Hamot Medical Center at Erie, Hanaway was admitted to the intensive care unit and diagnosed as a C-6 complete injury, which means he had broken the sixth cervical bone in his spinal column.

He was paralyzed from his neck down — a hard pill to swallow for a vigorous athlete and state champion dirt biker.

To complicate matters, when Hanaway hit the floor of the river, he received a gash on his scalp which ran from one ear to the other, measuring nearly 1 inch wide. Doctors worried that bacterial infection would result in brain damage, and worked to keep him stable.

Eight days after the accident, Hanaway was flown to Presbyterian Hospital at Pittsburgh, where doctors continued traction treatment begun at Erie. In September, Hanaway traveled by ambulance to Harmarville Rehabilitation Center, where he progressed from a bedridden state to his current level of recovery. He was released this January.

As a result of the rehabilitation, Hanaway now has some movement in his arms, and has learned to manipulate a hand splint in order to eat, write and even type. But the prognosis is he will never walk again.

"The easiest part is not being able to move," said Hanaway. "The hardest part is dealing with the different people in society and their head games."

"People are sometimes overly eager to help, which is kind, but actually they do more harm than good, and others I find would rather just ignore you and not talk to you because either they can't deal with it or they're afraid of you," he said.

"Unless they've known someone who has been paralyzed, they don't understand what happens in an injury. They're more apt to just stare," he added.

His mother, Eva, agreed. "Some people are even uncomfortable to talk to him, they don't know what to say. But once they do talk to him, they realize he talks very easily about his injury."

But Hanaway's willingness to deal with his injury is hampered by environmental barriers. As a new member of a handicapped minority, he is well aware of the obstacles which prohibit his leading a normal life.

"One of the hardest things to deal with is that people don't see what I see. They don't realize that I can't open doors myself, that the little slopes and hillsides on sidewalks become dangerous for me."

"I wish people would help to understand. There's a big difference between being in a chair and being normal. I think the reason you don't see more handicapped people out in public is because it is so inaccessible," he said.

But the spunky young man refuses to let the injury interfere with his career plans. While an inaccessible campus prohibits him from returning for his junior year at Clarion University, Hanaway is searching for a campus that offers the curriculum and academics he wants as well as the accessibility he needs.

While he plans to continue his communications studies, Hanaway said the injury had inspired him to focus on the hospital administration field "from having lived it for so long."

Hanaway plans to obtain a master's degree and notes he is forced to overeducate in an attempt to compensate for his physical disability.

"Most every job requires certain physical capabilities. It's no longer a matter of what job I can get, but what I can do," he said, adding, "This type of injury forces you to change your goals, your directions and ideals."

Mrs. Savage, Dr. Zallen Receive Honor

Elizabeth Evans Savage and Dr. Eugenia M. Zallen, both of Greenville, were honored as two of 15 Women of Distinction in North Carolina at the 35th anniversary meeting of the N.C. Council of Women's Organizations held in Chapel Hill.

Dr. Zallen was also installed for a two-year term as president of the council at the anniversary meeting.

Mrs. Savage was nominated by the Fidelis Beta and Alpha Iota chapters of N.C. Alpha Delta Kappa. She was a founder and charter member of both chapters having founded Alpha Iota in 1962 and Fidelis Beta in 1982. She has served as president of both chapters.

Mrs. Savage served as a teacher in Greenville for 46 years and as a volunteer after her retirement. She has served on committees and task forces on the city, county, state and national levels.

Dr. Zallen was nominated by the N.C. Dietetic Association. She has served as president-elect of NCCWO for the past year and prior to that time as secretary of the council. She is a member of the NCCWO Task Force to establish the state Women's Resource Center which opened in Raleigh in 1986.

She is active in two of the affiliate organizations which comprise the NCCWO — The N.C. Dietetic Association and the N.C. Home Economics Association.

Dr. Zallen is a professor of food, nutrition and institution management at East Carolina University.

Old Pictures Hurts Present Wife

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I need to get something off my chest that's been bugging me for two years. My mother-in-law keeps a large framed picture of her son and his ex-fiancee prominently displayed in her living room. It's a lovey-dovey pose of the two of them. She has her arms wrapped around him and they're looking at each other — all smiles and goo-goo eyes.

I told my husband it bothered me, so after we were married, he asked "Mom" to please put it away. Maybe he wasn't emphatic enough because it's still there. It hurts my heart to go over there and have to look at it.

I'm sure Mom would rather have had the other girl for her daughter-in-law because I'm a few years older than her son, and I was married before.

Please print this. Maybe Mom will see it and put that picture somewhere else. — HURT

DEAR HURT: And maybe she won't. Ask your husband again to respectfully tell his mother that you hurt when you see that picture, so please remove it. At the same time, present her with a lovely large replacement — one of you and him, framed!

DEAR ABBY: I want to share one good thing that has happened as a result of the AIDS-scare publicity.

My husband of 50 years has been a skirt chaser for 49 of them. Last year he gave up his hobby (women) and I am now "Sweetheart," "Honey" and "Dearie."

After no sex for 20 years, I'm not sure I want to resume sleeping with him again. I find it hard to get accustomed to the feeling that I am really desirable since we have lived like sister and brother for so many years.

Don't use my name. Sign me ... MINNIE HA-HA

DEAR MINNIE: Please, no "ha-ha's" about a subject as serious as AIDS. Considering your husband's fast-track record, should you decide to resume marital relations, first, make sure he is tested to determine whether he has been infected with the AIDS virus. Then wait another six months, because it could take that long for the virus to show up in a test.

DEAR ABBY: Some years ago you wrote something quite beautiful about people who love deeply never growing old. What was it? — RUTH COMSTOCK, SAN DIEGO

DEAR RUTH: "Those who love deeply never grow old; they may die of old age, but they die young." And thanks for asking because I'm one of those people.

DEAR ABBY: I am a normal man of 49, except for the fact that I have never had sex (unless you can count masturbation). I am not gay or anything; it's just that I believe that sex should be reserved for marriage.

Duplicate Winners Named Wednesday

Mrs. Sidney Skinner and Mrs. Stuart Page were first place winners in the Wednesday morning game played at the Senior Center. Their percentage was 59.

Ben Mac Bryde and Mrs. J.W.H. Roberts placed second. Mrs. Roy Hadden and Mrs. Zeb Cummings placed third while fourth place winners were Mrs. C.F. Galloway and Mrs. C.D. Elks.

North-South winners in the afternoon game were Marilyn Bongard and Ed Yauck, first with .60 percent; Kathleen Metz and Mrs. Stuart Page, second; Mrs. J.S. Rhodes Jr. and Mrs. Roger Critcher Jr., third; Mrs. M.H. Bynum and Mrs. Eli Bloom, fourth.

Winners East-West were Mrs. Sol Schechter and Mrs. Max Chused, first with .64 percent; Effie Williams and Mrs. Zeb Cummings, second; Mrs. Robert Barnhill and Mrs. E.J. Poindexter, third; Mrs. W.R. Harris and Dave Proctor, fourth.

I am very much interested in a lady who says she loves me and wants to prove it by going to bed with me — in fact, she has demanded it! I will be 50 soon, and she has given me an ultimatum that if we don't go to bed by the time I am 50, she is breaking up with me.

My church teaches that it is a sin to have sex outside of marriage. What should I do? Am I being old-fashioned? Help me out, please. — A.S. IN NEW YORK

DEAR A.S.: Clinging to one's religious principles is not "old-fashioned." Your reasons for not going to bed with the lady are valid, and if she ends the relationship because you refuse to yield to her demands, you may be better off without her.

Cauble, Brown Pace ECU Win

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Chris Cauble banged out four hits while Calvin Brown slapped a key home run to help lead East Carolina to a 15-8 baseball victory over Atlantic Christian College Wednesday night.

The game was a make-up for an earlier game lost because of a mix-up in the scheduling of umpires.

Cauble, subbing for the injured Jim Riley behind the plate, ripped four singles in the game and added a sacrifice in the eighth inning.

Brown, who had a single, double and a homer, got the latter in the fifth inning to put the Pirates ahead for good.

John Adams and David Ritchie added three hits apiece while Mike Sullivan, John Thomas and Mike Andrews each collected two for the Bucs.

One of the more key hits came in the eighth inning, however, when Steve Sides slipped a single into right field to extend his consecutive game hitting streak to 20. The Pirates had to send seven men to the plate before him to give him that one last chance.

Overall, East Carolina banged out 20 hits, including a pair of doubles by Andrews and others by Adams and Brown.

"I thought we did a really fine job of swinging the bats," ECU Coach Gary Overton said. "Our offensive game was in its true form tonight and that was the character of the game."

Overton used five pitchers in the game — by plan — changing every inning or so. "We had a number of pitchers get their work in and I thought all of them did a fine job."

Gary Smith got his seventh win in the game (against one loss), but for him it was a question of being in the right place at the right time. He was, perhaps, the least effective of the five, giving up seven hits and six runs — four earned — in three full innings.

But he was the pitcher of record when Brown slapped his homer to put the Pirates ahead for good.

"It was good to get in a win before playing Richmond this weekend," Overton added.

The Bulldogs took the initial lead, scoring once in the top of the first. Mark Mauldin doubled down the left field line and moved to third on an infield out. He then scored when Bruce Ellis' fly ball was dropped in center.

East Carolina tied it up in the bottom of the inning. Adams opened with a double and was sacrificed to third. He scored on Mike Sullivan's single to right.

In the second, the Pirates scored three times for a 4-1 lead. Cauble beat out a chopper just over the mound and Thomas followed with a single. Andrews walked to load the bases. Ritchie then singled in courtesy runner Tommy Yarborough and Adams' single to right plated both Thomas and Andrews.

Atlantic Christian pulled back into the lead with four in the fourth. Rich Thach reached on an infield hit and courtesy runner Wayne Barbour was safe at second when the relay on Chuck Moore's grounder was dropped. Wayne Murphy then followed with a three-run homer, knotting it at 4-4.

Mauldin followed with his second double of the night and John Mello walked. Mauldin moved up on a passed ball and scored on Ellis' groundout.

The Pirates moved back up, 6-5, on two runs in their half of the fourth. Thomas singled and Ritchie walked. After a walk to Adams, Sides hit a grounder to second, getting Adams, but scoring Thomas. Ritchie then came home when the attempted doubleplay was booted.

The Bulldogs returned to the lead in the top of the sixth with two, making it 7-5. Moore reached on a two-out single and Murphy banged his second homer of the night.

Brown then led a four-run fifth that put the Pirates ahead for good, 9-7. Jay McGraw led off with a walk and Brown then crushed the ball out in right. The right fielder took only a half-step before realizing there was no way to get to that one.

Cauble followed with a single and runner Yarborough was safe at second on a late throw on Thomas' sacrifice bunt, leaving both men safe.

Both were then sacrificed up and Yarborough scored on Ritchie's grounder that hit the bag at first and bounced away from the fielder. Adams then grounded out, scoring Thomas.

ECU added five more in the eighth. McGraw walked and stole second, scoring on a hit by Brown. Brown was sacrificed up and took third on an out. He scored on Andrews' second double of the night. Ritchie's sharp grounder through the mound hit the umpire on the leg — a dead ball hit. Adams then beat out an infield grounder loading the bases.

That set the stage for Sides, who responded with a single to right, driving in Andrews and Ritchie. Sullivan singled to deep short, scoring Adams with the 15th ECU run.

The Bulldogs got one more in the ninth. Cabral led off with a single and moved up on a passed ball. He scored when Chris Sliwka reached on a two-out error.

The win boosted the Pirates to 14-2 overall — and it was their ninth win in a row. Atlantic Christian, which had a 14-game winning streak broken earlier this week, fell to 21-10.

East Carolina plays host to Colonial Athletic Association rival Richmond in a doubleheader Saturday at 1 p.m. and a single game Sunday, also at 1 p.m.

Panthers Slip Past Pamlico

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

BETHEL — North Pitt baseball coach Gerald Garner was happy enough just to get out and be able to play a game without fear of rain, but the Panthers made things even better by squeezing in one run in each of the final two innings to take a 2-0 win over Pamlico County in Eastern Plains Conference baseball action Wednesday.

"I'm just thankful we could get it in," Garner said. "I'm very happy with the win. Anytime we can win this early in the season with the adverse weather conditions we've had, I'm happy."

The two teams were supposed to play Tuesday but were rained out and the game was postponed until Wednesday. Rain outs have altered the schedules of most area teams since the season has started. Pamlico had only played one game prior to Wednesday.

The Panthers broke open a scoreless defensive struggle in the fifth inning when Calvin Hunter reached on a walk with two outs. He was replaced by courtesy runner Steve Strickland, who promptly stole second and went to third on an error by the second baseman.

Pamlico catcher William Respass then let a pitch get away from him and Strickland came home on the passed ball and Darrell Moore reached first to make it 1-0. The Hurricanes then put out Mike Brown to end the inning.

Garner said scoring first was a key because it put the Panthers in the driver's seat. "The second run took the bunt away from them," he added.

That second run came in the following inning.

Lee Eakes reached on an error and then stole second. Johnny Sherrod reached on an error by the first baseman on a bunt play that put runners at first and third. Roosevelt Hines was then intentionally walked to load the bases. Chuck Whitehurst drove home Eakes on a sacrifice fly to make it 2-0.

The bases were still loaded with two outs when Jarvis Massenburg came up to the plate. Massenburg had the Panthers' only hit of the day, that coming in the second inning. He tried to lay down a bunt but the ball popped straight up to the catcher who fielded it and threw to third for the double play, ending the threat and stranding two Panther batters on base.

Massenburg quickly atoned by replacing starter Darrell Moore, who had walked the first batter of the seventh, on the mound for the final inning and pitching a scoreless seventh inning to end the game. He gave up a single but also recorded a strikeout and a put-out at first. With men on first and third, Massenburg struck out Sawyer to end the game and record the save.

"They're a better defensive team than we are," Garner said. "I'm just glad Massenburg was able to come in and put out the fire. Massenburg's a senior and he's our most consistent returning starter."

Moore went six innings and started the seventh before giving way to Massenburg. Along the way, Moore had a one-hitter going with eight strikeouts and four walks.

"He's just a sophomore," Garner said of Moore. "He had only four innings (pitching in one game) to date. I think he responded well."

Moore did get in trouble in the top of the fifth, loading the bases with two outs before striking out Charlie Lewis to end the inning.

With one out in the fifth, Moore walked John Prescott, then gave up a single to Respass. Jamie Gibbs then reached on an error on the third baseman to load the bases. Prescott was then put out on a fielder's choice that allowed James Mason to reach. Moore struck out Lewis to end the inning and the threat.

"I think our kids got a little tight and I think that comes from youth and inexperience," Garner said of the early, scoreless innings.

Galloway Homer Sparks Rose

RED OAK — Jason Galloway slapped a two-run homer in the first inning to get things started as Rose High School rolled up a 14-5 Big East baseball victory over Northern Nash Wednesday.

Rose opened the first inning and quickly got on the board. Axel Smith walked and Galloway followed with the homer.

Northern Nash came back to score once in the bottom of the inning. Curtis Jones singled and Tim Marshman walked. Paul Strickland reached on a fielder's choice that got Marshman, and was then put out himself on Lee Boone's grounder. Jones, however, scored on the latter play to make it 2-1.

Rose added two more in the third. David Daniels led off with a walk and stole second. A pair of errors allowed him to score. Curtis Perkins walked and also stole up, moving on to third on the play. A passed ball allowed him to score for a 4-1 lead.

Northern cut it back to 4-3 with two in its half of the inning. Strickland singled as did Boone. A wild pitch moved both up, and Turner singled in Strickland and Johnny Whitley singled to score Boone.

The Rampants broke it open in the fourth, scoring five times. Hunter Clark singled and Smith got a hit. Galloway doubled in Clark and Daniels grounded out, scoring Smith. Earl Hines walked and Robbie McDonald slapped a three-run homer to climax the scoring and give Rose a 9-3 lead.

Northern got two more in the fourth. Jones and Marshman both singled. A passed ball scored Jones and Marshman scored on a wild pitch.

Rose added three more in the fifth. Tim Moore singled and Clark walked. Smith doubled in Moore and Galloway grounded out scoring Clark.

The final two came in the seventh. Brian Wille reached on a third-strike passed ball and with two away, Daniels homered.

Smith, Galloway, Daniels, Moore and Clark each had two hits to lead the Rampant attack. Jones had and Boone each had three hits to pace Northern while Strickland added two.

Rose, 1-0 in Big East play, is scheduled to host Rocky Mount at Guy Smith Stadium at 4 p.m. Friday in its next outing.

DEEP RUN — Mark Wooten went 3-4 with two doubles and a triple as Farmville Central rapped out 10 hits and rolled by South Lenoir 5-1 in its Eastern Plains Conference baseball opener Wednesday.

The Jaguars went ahead first when Chris Ross led off with a triple in the third inning and came home on Brian Huber's single.

In the fourth, Shea Terrell led off with a single, stole second and scored on Mike Vandiford's single to make it 2-0.

The Jaguars added two more runs in the fifth. Eddie Little started things off when he reached on an error on the third baseman. Huber reached on an error on the pitcher and George Burnette singled to score Little. Mark Wooten then doubled, scoring Huber and giving the Jags a 4-0 advantage.

South Lenoir scored its only run in the sixth inning.

Farmville added another run in the seventh to complete the scoring.

Ross went 2-3 with a triple and Burnette also collected two hits to support the Jaguar hitting attack.

Mike Vandiford went the distance for Farmville, giving up five hits.

Farmville is 2-2 overall and 1-0 in EPC, with its next game at home Friday against North Pitt.

LEGGETT — North Edgecombe took advantage of five consecutive errors by Jamesville to push home the winning run in the fourth inning and take a 1-0 victory over the Lady Bullets in high school softball action Wednesday.

In the key fourth inning, North Edgecombe's Conyers and Nix reached on consecutive errors and moved to second and third on consecutive errors. Martin hit a grounder to the second baseman who mishandled the ball allowing Conyers to score the game's only run.

In the seventh, Jamesville started the inning on first and second with one out but couldn't move its runners home. They later loaded the bases with two outs in the same inning but still could not take advantage.

Senita Rodgers went 2-3 to lead the Lady Bullets. K. Nix went 2-3 to lead North Edgecombe.

Jamesville, 5-2 overall and 3-2 in the Northeastern, returns to action today against Aurora.

L. League Registers

Late registration for additional candidates for the Greenville Little Leagues will be held Saturday from 9 a.m. until noon and from 1 p.m. until 4 p.m. at the Elm Street Center.

Candidates must have been born between Aug. 1, 1974 and July 31, 1978 to be eligible and must live within the established borders of the leagues — a six-mile radius from Greenville — "Five Points."

Candidates must be accompanied by a parent or guardian and must present a valid birth certificate.

Tryouts also begin Saturday from 9 a.m. to noon for 9-10-year-olds; and from 1 to 4 p.m. for 11-12-year-olds.

Tryouts will continued Monday through Thursday from 4 to 7 p.m., with Monday and Wednesday for 9-10, and Tuesday and Thursday for 11-12.

Friday will be used as a rain date, if needed. Candidates must attend at least half of the tryout sessions to be eligible for the league draft. Candidates must also supply their own shoes and glove.

North Pitt Slams Ayden-Grifton

BETHEL — Keisha Pilgreen went 3-4 and led off the game with a home run as North Pitt romped by Ayden-Grifton 10-0 in girl's high school softball action Wednesday.

The Pant-Hers scored all the runs they would need in the first inning.

Following Pilgreen's game opening homer, Mel Harrington and Esther Witherspoon hit singles. Maggie Blount then doubled home Harrington and Witherspoon to make it 3-0.

Gwen Pilgreen singled home Blount. Wendy Parker followed with a single that drove home Pilgreen and made it 5-0. North Pitt never looked back.

The Pant-Hers added three more runs in the second inning and two more in the sixth to complete the scoring.

Harrington collected three hits, with two doubles and two RBI. Parker also had three hits with one RBI while Witherspoon and Gwen Pilgreen had two hits apiece.

North Pitt improves to 2-3 and returns to action Friday at Farmville.

DEEP RUN — South Lenoir rolled up a 12-6 softball victory over Farmville Central in the initial Eastern Plains Conference game of the year for the Lady Jaguars Wednesday.

Farmville took the initial lead with a run in the first, but South Lenoir countered with two in the first, then added one in the second.

In the third, the Lady Devils added five more runs to put it away. Two

Evert Lloyd Asks For A Divorce

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Tennis star Chris Evert Lloyd has filed for divorce from her husband, John Lloyd, it was reported Wednesday.

In papers filed in Broward County, Evert listed irreconcilable differences as grounds to end their eight-year marriage.

Neither Evert nor Lloyd were immediately available for comment.

The two were separated for a second time late last year, the Fort Lauderdale News & Sun Sentinel reported.

The New York Post quoted a spokesman at the Broward County Court House as saying: "They have made an agreement as to the division of property, but the agreement is not attached to the petition. They want to keep that private."

It had been reported that John, once Britain's No. 1 player, was to receive a cash settlement of $2 million.

The Lloyds were married April 17, 1979, in Fort Lauderdale, her hometown, where a member of the crowd held up a sign saying, "Love Match: Chris Evert and John Lloyd, A Perfect Set."

Less than a month after her marriage, Chris helped lead the United States to its fourth consecutive Federation Cup title. Then, two months later, she won the French Open women's singles title for the third time.

She finished 1979 ranked second in the world for the second straight year, but regained the No. 1 ranking in 1980 and 1981 as she became the first woman tennis player to reach $1 million in career tournament earnings.

But while her game reached new heights — she won her third Wimbledon singles crown in 1981, her sixth U.S. Open singles title in 1982 and her seventh French Open championship in 1986 — John's tennis fortunes tumbled.

John was ranked 23rd in the world in July 1978 and was runnerup to Vitas Gerulaitis in the Australian each scored on doubles by D. Mitchell and K. Thompson.

Four more crossed in the fourth.

Farmville picked up one more in the fourth and four in the sixth.

Thompson led South Lenoir's hitting with three while Mitchell and S. Outlaw each had two. Diane Hudson had two hits to lead Farmville.

Open men's singles in December 1977. But he has fallen to 426th on the Hewlett-Packard-ATP computer rankings of March 23.

In 1982, playing with a new midsize racket given to him by his wife, Lloyd won his first Grand Slam title, teaming with Australia's Wendy Turnbull to capture the French Open mixed doubles. They won the mixed at the French again in 1984 and the mixed doubles at Wimbledon in 1983 and 1984.

Chris currently is ranked third in the world behind Martina Navratilova and West Germany's Steffi Graf. On March 22, she won the Virginia Slims of Dallas, her 149th career title.

"I really wanted a tournament win under my belt," she said. "I kept hearing 'she hasn't won anything since the French.'"

E.B. Aycock Gets Win

E.B. Aycock Junior High School rolled up a 9-6 baseball victory over Nash Central in its first game of the season Wednesday.

Walt Gatlin hurried the win, allowing only five hits.

Dwayne Williams led Aycock at the plate with two hits, one a homer, driving in four runs. Keith Clark, Chris Christopher and Grant Harmon each added a double for Aycock.

J. Bonner had two hits, one a homer, and drove in fourth RBI for Nash.

Now 1-0, Aycock travels to New Bern Barber today.

Greenville's first public library was established in 1904.

ECU Men Get Win

East Carolina's men's tennis team rolled up a 9-0 tennis victory over Mt. Olive Wednesday.

The Pirates had little trouble in the match, never losing more than three games in a set and only a total of 15 on the day.

East Carolina is now 11-10 on the year and returns to action on Friday, hosting High Point.

Zoeller, After Fishing Break, Fishes For Pay

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

GREENSBORO (AP) — Fuzzy Zoeller finished the pro-am portion of the Greater Greensboro Open golf tournament and went looking for a fishing hole. Today, Zoeller starts fishing for a first-place check.

Zoeller was among the early contestants teeing off in the first round of the $600,000 tournament, and while he is waiting for all facets of his game to come together, he is aware of the source of the problem.

"In my mind, I'm playing 14 good holes," Zoeller says. "There are four putts you've got to make for pars and I haven't been making a lot of birdies."

Zoeller has been pacing himself on the 1987 PGA Tour because of his chronically bad back and tendonitis in his left shoulder. He has played in seven of the 11 events this season and says the occasional rests have been good for him.

"It's a little stone you have to step over," Zoeller said. "My back has no conscience. It's a matter of the pace I keep."

"I never know when it's going. I'm trying to play a little less and spread it out a little more so I don't tire myself. All you can do is try something different."

The pace quickened a little this week. After finishing the Tournament Players Championship in Florida, Zoeller, a Jeffersonville, Ind., native, went to New Orleans to watch Indiana defeat Syracuse for the NCAA basketball championship. From there, Zoeller came to the Forest Oaks Country Club for pro-am events on Tuesday and Wednesday.

"I'd like for (Indiana's victory) to carry over, but those 3-footers have a mind of their own. Either they go in or they don't."

Now starts the chase for the $108,000 given to the GGO winner. Zoeller's best finish at Forest Oaks has been a tie for second in 1978, his fourth year on the tour.

3-Point Shot Will Stay The Same

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The NCAA basketball rules committee says the 3-point shot will remain at the same distance for next year, although conferences have the option of experimenting by moving the bonus line back nine inches.

"The 3-point rule did exactly what it was intended to do," rules committee secretary Ed Steitz said Wednesday in announcing the decision. He said the 3-point shot increased scoring, opened up the game and reduced rough play under the boards.

The decision to keep the line at 19 feet, 9 inches from the basket was reached in an all-day session of the rules committee on Tuesday. Committee members left before Wednesday's announcement, and Steitz would not disclose the vote breakdown on any of the decisions.

One of the coaches most outspoken in his opposition to the 3-point rule was Indiana's Bobby Knight. He said he didn't like the rule when it was implemented and still didn't like it even after the decisive role the 3-point shot played in his team's victory over Syracuse in college basketball's championship game Monday night.

"I'll bet that if Steve Alford had four more years, Bobby would like it," Steitz said Wednesday.

Alford, a 50 percent shooter from beyond the 3-point line for the season, hit seven of 10 from 3-point range in Indiana's 74-73 victory over Syracuse.

Nationally, Steitz said, teams made 38.6 percent of the 3-point shots attempted this season. In five previous seasons before the rule was implemented nationwide this season, teams in conferences which experimented with the 3-pointer had a 38.5 percent success rate.

Steitz said that support for the 3-pointer was overwhelming, according to a late-season poll of coaches. Of the 1,448 coaches who returned their questionnaires, 80 percent favored keeping the 3-point shot. Of those in favor, 35 percent wanted it kept at its present distance, and 36 percent preferred moving it back nine inches, to the distance used in international play.

"As coaches become more familiar with it, learn how to incorporate it into their offense and learn how to defend it, they'll become happier with it," Steitz said.

He would not predict how many conferences might decide to experiment with moving the 3-point line back to the Olympic distance, but speculated that "The Big East might play with that."

Providence fired its way into the Final Four with extraordinary 3-point shooting, then bowed to Big East rival Syracuse in the semifinals when the long-range shooters went cold. In beating Georgetown, another Big East rival, in its regional championship, Providence used the threat of the 3-pointer to open up its inside game.

Conferences experimenting with proposed rules changes must collect data on the effects and make their findings available to the rules committee. Use of the 45-second shot clock and the current 3-point rule grew out of such experiments.

Three changes were voted in for next season, Steitz said. The most obvious change involves intentional fouls.

"All intentional fouls will carry a two-shot penalty plus possession of the ball," he said. Currently, an intentional foul carries a two-shot penalty, but the offending team gains possession of the ball.

That rule, Steitz said, would not have changed the outcome of Monday night's Indiana-Syracuse championship game. Derrick Coleman of Syracuse was fouled by Indiana's Keith Smart with 28 seconds left in the game. Coleman missed the front end of a 1-and-1, and Smart wound up scoring the winning basket in a 74-73 Indiana victory.

Steitz agreed that few of the 64,959 people in the stands would believe the foul an accident, but that's not the way intentional fouls are determined. "He played the ball directly. When you go through a player or wrap your arms around him, that's when the intentional foul is called," he said.

He said there was some discussion about implementing a rule in effect 35 years ago that permitted a team to waive the foul shot and elect to retain possession by taking the ball out of bounds.

Another change permits calling a technical foul on the coach if any of his players leave the bench to take part in a fight on the court.

The third change reduces the penalty for erroneously questioning a scoring or timing decision.

Other proposed changes with which conferences may experiment this year, Steitz said, are:

— Making all substitutes report to the scorer from a box drawn directly in front of the scorer's table.

— Cutting off the bottom foot of the backboard for safety.

SSS Hands Rose Its First Loss

Smithfield-Selma, the defending regional champions, handed Rose High School its first dual meet loss in girls' track after 24 consecutive wins dating back to 1985.

The Rampants last lost to Big East Conference foe Wilson Fike.

Smithfield-Selma finished the afternoon with 83 points while Rose had 52.

"The key was their superior depth in the relays," Coach Dennis Gibson said. "I don't recall ever losing all three relays. We ran some good times but SSS was well-prepared."

Rose, now 5-1, plays host to D.H. Conley on Monday, then travels to Fike on Wednesday.

FARMVILLE — SouthWest Edgecombe ran away with a four-way track meet held Wednesday at Farmville Central.

The Lady Cougars finished with 137 points while Farmville Central was a distant second with 61. Ayden-Grifton finished with 11 while Pamlico County had nine.

Farmville Central had one double winner as Beverly Vines won the 100- and 220-yard dashes. Farmville won one other individual event and then took two of the relays.

SouthWest was paced by Harris, who won the triple jump, 440 and 880. Farmville is now 2-1 on the year and travels to SouthWest for another meet on Monday.

NL East Race For Second

Baseball '87
By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

The only race in the National League East this season is for second place.

If any World Series champion is capable of breaking the repeat jinx and winning again, it's the New York Mets.

They still have the best pitching — even minus Dwight Gooden and Roger McDowell — in the majors ("That is where you have to look when you talk about winning pennants," Manager Dave Johnson says), and they have added Kevin McReynolds to the most potent offense in the league.

The Mets also possess something that often escapes World Series winners the following season — a hunger to keep winning.

The Mets are the most hated team in baseball. Their confidence and cockiness produces an endless stream of curtain calls, high-fives and scrapes, all glorified on highlight videos flashed across the Shea Stadium scoreboard between innings.

It also produced a team that took over first place on April 23, went on to win 108 games and left the rest of the NL East behind in a cloud of dust — back 21½ games, the largest margin since divisional play started in 1969.

The Philadelphia Phillies improved, finally signing free agent catcher Lance Parrish, and so did the St. Louis Cardinals, acquiring catcher Tony Pena. But the Phillies, like the Cardinals, who went flat after winning the World Series, must rely on shaky pitching.

There will be one other race in the NL East this season — last place. The candidates: Montreal, Chicago and Pittsburgh.

In 1987, it looks like New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Montreal, Pittsburgh, Chicago.

New York Mets

The Mets continue to have more trouble off the field than on, prompting General Manager Frank Cashen to write his players during the winter and tell them to cool it.

Gooden, involved in a scuffle with Tampa police in December, is being treated for cocaine use; Ron Darling and Tim Lincecum were placed on one year's probation for their part in a fight with Houston police; Gary Carter's name was connected to an alleged vitamin scheme and Darryl Strawberry's marital problems hit the papers.

How will this affect the Mets? It might reinforce their "us vs. everyone else" syndrome.

While the outlook for Gooden (17-6, 2.84 in an inconsistent season) is uncertain, the Mets still have Bobby Ojeda (18-5, 2.57 earned run average), Darling (15-6, 2.81) and Sid Fernandez (16-6, 3.52). Rick Aguilera (10-7) will step into the rotation, and McDowell (14-9, 2.22 saves) and Jesse Orosco (8-6, 2.1 saves) form a righty-lefty bullpen team, although McDowell may be out until June because of a hernia operation. David Cone, obtained from Kansas City, or Doug Sisk may fill-in for McDowell, and the Mets acquired Gene Walter (57 games) for middle relief.

World Series MVP Ray Knight (.298, 11 home runs, 76 RBI) talked himself into being a disgruntled free agent and went to Baltimore. Howard Johnson and rookie Dave Magadan will fill third base, and McReynolds (.288, 26 home runs, 96 RBI, all career bests) was acquired from San Diego to replace Knight.

Keith Hernandez (.310, 83 RBI), sparkplugs Wally Backman and Lenny Dykstra (the so-called "Wanny Backstra" combination batted over .300 with 44 stolen bases), Carter (24 HR, 105 RBI) and Strawberry (27 HR, 93 RBI) power the offense.

Philadelphia Phillies

Mike Schmidt, the 1986 NL Most Valuable Player, says the Phillies have five MVP candidates this season — himself, Parrish, Von Hayes, Juan Samuel and Glenn Wilson. Unfortunately for Philadelphia, none of them are pitchers.

Give the Phillies credit. When most teams were avoiding high-priced free agents, Philadelphia identified its biggest need and signed Parrish (22 HR, 62 RBI with Detroit). He'll help cut the Phillies' league-leading 23 passed balls and inability to stop runners from stealing.

Schmidt, at age 37 (.290, 37 HR, 119 RBI) had been saying this would be his final season, but now says he won't decide until Sept. 1. The decision will depend on how well his knees and the Phillies do.

Hayes (.305, 19 HR, 98 RBI), Wilson (15 HR, 84 RBI) and Samuel (16 HR, 78 RBI, 42 stolen bases) can hit and so can Mike Easler (a .300 hitter). The Phillies got DH Easler from the New York Yankees for Charles Hudson and hope he can get more balls in left field than get him.

Ah, but pitching. The Phillies ranked seventh in the league and even invited former ace Steve Carlton to camp hoping he could help. He couldn't.

Shane Rawley (11-7) is trying to come back from surgery, Bruce Ruffin did well as a rookie (9-4) and Don Carman was 10-5 with a 3.22 as a starter-reliever. The Phillies also got Joe Cawley (11-11 with a no-hitter) from the Chicago White Sox for Gary Redus. Steve Bedrosian was best in the bullpen with 29 saves.

St. Louis Cardinals

In 1985, St. Louis streaked around the bases bragging that "speed never slumps." Last season, the Cards discovered that you can't steal first base.

Willie McGee, Tommy Herr, Vince Coleman and Jack Clark all struggled as St. Louis sunk to 79-82. McGee, the 1985 NL MVP when he batted .353 with 56 stolen bases, faded to .256 with 19 steals. Herr declined from .302 and 110 RBI to .252 with 61 RBI. Coleman dipped from .267 to .232 and Clark was injured for more than half the season.

John Tudor (21-8, 1.93 ERA) pitched well (13-7, 2.92) but did not get run support. Danny Cox (12-13) needs more consistency and 6-foot-6 rookie Joe Magrane may make the lefty-dominated rotation. Todd Worrell (36 saves, 2.08) was NL Rookie of the Year, but Jeff Lahti, part of St. Louis' bullpen-by-committee in 1985, has not recovered from arm problems that limited him to four appearances.

The Cardinals filled their biggest need a week before the season opened, getting Pena (.288, 10 HR, 52 RBI) from Pittsburgh for Andy Van Slyke and Mike LaValliere.

Montreal Expos

The Expos, once projected as the Team Of The 1990's, could become the club of the '90s — as in 90 or more losses.

Andre Dawson and Jeff Reardon are gone, and Tim Lincecum may leave.

The pitching staff is in shambles. Injuries may keep Bryn Smith, Charlie Lea and Joe Hesketh out of action. Floyd Youmans, 22 (13-12) and Neal Heaton (7-15), acquired from Minnesota for Reardon, are the only two sure starters. Tim Burke (9-7) will try to make up some of Reardon's 35 saves.

Montreal cannot replace free agents Dawson (.284, 20 HR, 78 RBI), who signed with the Cubs, and Raines (.332, 70 stolen bases), who is unsigned and had said he would not return, a stance he has since softened.

The Expos do have the hardest-hitting left side of the infield, shortstop Hubie Brooks (.340, 14 HR, 58 RBI before being injured halfway through 1986) and third baseman Tim Wallach (18 HR, 71 RBI).

Another bright spot — the retractable roof over Olympic Stadium is almost ready. One reason for the dome was to block out cold weather in case the Expos reached the World Series — using that logic, Montreal could have waited another decade.

Pittsburgh Pirates

Last season, under enthusiastic new Manager Jim Leyland, Pittsburgh compiled the best record in spring training, fueling some misguided optimism. When the season started, the Pirates went 64-98, the worst in the majors.

Pittsburgh may be getting younger, but not necessarily better.

Ace Rick Rhoden (15-12, 2.84) was traded to the Yankees for Brian Fisher, Doug Drabek and Logan Easley, a trio of young pitchers for a patchwork pitching staff anchored by soon-to-be 38-year-old Rick Reuschel (9-16).

Johnny Ray (.301) and Tony Pena (.288) hit well and Jim Morrison (23 HR, 88 RBI) was a major surprise. The Pirates could have an exciting outfield, having acquired John Cangelosi (50 SB) from the Chicago White Sox and Andy Van Slyke (.270, 13 HR, 61 RBI) from St. Louis to join Barry Bonds (16 HR, 36 SB).

Chicago Cubs

Since winning the NL East in 1984, the Cubs have added Dawson and Shawon Dunston to their lineup. Then, why is Chicago so bad?

Rick Sutcliffe (5-14), Dennis Eckersley (6-11), Steve Trout (5-7) and Scott Sanderson (9-11), were all signed to big-money, multi-year contracts after 1984. General Manager Dallas Green admits that was a mistake.

Age has caught up with Cubs. Ron Cey was traded away, and Chicago is looking to deal Gary Matthews (21 HR).

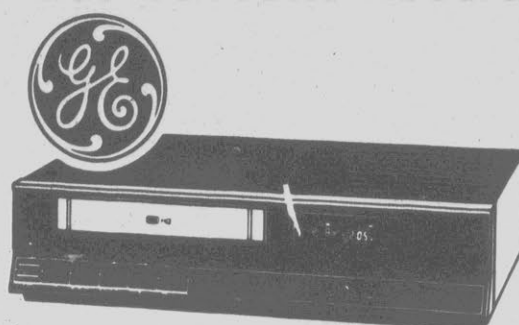

Ryne Sandberg (.284, 14 HR, 76 RBI, 34 SB) and Dunston (17 HR, 68 RBI) are solid. Leon Durham (20 HR) needs to be more aggressive and Keith Moreland (79 RBI) will struggle at third base.

The Cubs hope an injection of youth, including pitchers Jamie Moyer, Drew Hall and Greg Maddux and outfielders Rafael Palmeiro, Dave Martinez and Chico Walker will help. Maybe, but not for a long time.

Former NBC Chief Forms New Company In Tie-Up With CBS

By DENNIS MCDUGAL
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

HOLLYWOOD — There is no grudge involved, Grant Tinker said. He is no Benedict Arnold.

When Tinker exited as NBC's chairman of the board last summer, he left the network at the top of the Nielsen. He was a satisfied man. NBC was a satisfied network.

But six months later, Tinker has joined forces with the Gannett Co. to begin producing shows for CBS next year, and his avowed purpose is to "blow right by" NBC in the ratings.

"People thought that was strange that I didn't go right back to NBC," Tinker said in an interview here. "But NBC is doing so well that there just is not enough potential business to do there. There are not only a lot of shows that are working and, therefore, less failure and replacement need. I also know something about what they've got on the shelf, and they've got a lot of good stuff in development."

Besides, he asks wryly, does General Electric (the new owner of NBC) really need the money?

"The CBS deal removes a whole potential distraction (in worrying about where to sell a show)," he said. "They came to us very aggressively to say, 'What are you going to do? Who are you going to sell to?' And I said, 'Anybody. Who wants to buy?'"

CBS did, as it turned out.

Tinker will not say how much the network agreed to pay or what it is getting for its money beyond a "multi-series deal" that involves both exclusive rights to some projects and first-refusal rights to others. He said that the new Grant Tinker-Gannett Entertainment will probably produce about five shows — two or three sitcoms and one or two dramatic series.

The first episodes of the new programs, he said, will definitely be ready for the CBS airwaves by the fall season of 1988. "If everything came together on a comedy, we might have it ready by February of 1988, but I think that's unlikely," he said.

That the man who engineered NBC's prime-time climb from third to first place should now be comfortable working with CBS is not as surprising as it may appear. Before taking the helm of NBC in 1981, he was president of MTM Enterprises, an independent production company that sold most of its shows ("The Mary Tyler Moore Show," "Rhoda," "Lou Grant") to CBS.

During his five-year NBC stint, Tinker flew to New York every Monday and flew back to Hollywood every Thursday. He wore suits and ties and observed the "custom and ritual" of Manhattan board meetings.

But Tinker is convinced that the energy is on the West Coast, not the East, and he is hoping not only to tap into it but to generate some of his own.

Tinker has nearly everything ready to go for his new GTG venture: money ($40 million), a network commitment and a studio with 12 sound stages, a guard gate and a glitzy antebellum-style mansion out front.

While other executives have been predicting grim times ahead for production companies that depend on the networks for program development money, Tinker says he is not worried. All three networks depend as much on the production companies to fill their prime-time lineups as the production companies depend on the networks to fill their bank accounts.

"Cost cutting is mostly in the news divisions," and all the networks are getting around to that," Tinker said. "But five or six years ago, when we were the odd man out at NBC and we were on the floor and really panting ... gasping would be a better word ... we still had to spend the same amount of money for shows as did CBS and ABC, which were doing very well."

High production costs are "a fact of life" that can only be checked by networks and production companies working together to keep unions, guilds and independent contractors from hiking fees, Tinker said.

"These outrageous fees that creative people get they will tell you they deserve, and perhaps they do," he said. "And there's all of those guilds and unions that represent the various parts that go to make up the whole of a show. It's just not going to be reversed. I don't mean you can't arrest it, and I think there is arrest in the air. But you're not going to roll it back in my lifetime."

To hear Tinker tell it, he is going to run his new sitcom factory here the same way Ronald Reagan runs the White House.

The former chief executive of NBC and the chief executive of the United States might not share much in common, but they do have the same delegation-management style.

"I heard him just a couple of days ago enunciating exactly the way I feel about it (management)," Tinker said. "A lot of people have said this long before Mr. Reagan or I were in office: You get good people and you let them do their work."

The trick is getting the right people for the job.

Gannett has deferred everything to Tinker — a certified legend in the short, often bleak, history of television programming. While other executives take the blame for disasters like "Manimal," "My Mother the Car" and "Captain Nice," Tinker's reputation from MTM as the godfather of "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," "The Bob Newhart Show" and "Hill Street Blues" assures him a place in the television Hall of Fame.

He has hired Jay Sandrich as his supervising director. Sandrich, who directed 130 of the 168 episodes of "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," is currently committed to "The Cosby Show" but he will reduce his "Cosby" presence to 10 episodes next year so he can concentrate on new GTG shows.

Stu Erwin Jr., another MTM graduate, is creative director. Jack Clements is production chief and an as-yet unannounced network executive will act as head of business affairs. In fact, Tinker has a whole GTG management team steeped in the Tinker tradition of management-by-delegation.

Now all they need are some writers to whom they can delegate things — things like creating television shows.

"We've hung out our shingle and announced our intention," he said. "I don't know how else to do it. Without them, the actors have nothing to say and the directors have nothing to direct."

Dining comments from Bob;

to our tempting combinations. Pair up your favorites like Lump Backfin Crabmeat broiled in butter and seasoned to perfection, served with your favorite cut of tender Rib Eye Steak.

Add a fresh garden salad, your choice of vegetable, and a loaf of freshly baked bread, all for only $14.50. A temptation that makes it fun to give in..."

TV 'Liar' To Have Guest Spot As Bookie On 'Alf'

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — David Leisure may be the only actor who's been caught lying so often on television that it could make him a star.

Leisure is the one who tells those whoppers as Joe Isuzu on the Isuzu automobile commercials. He declares with snake-oil sincerity that the Isuzu "gets 94 miles per gallon city, 112 highway" as a disclaimer flashes, "He's lying."

"There's sort of a delayed reaction," said Leisure. "You hear what he says, but in the back of your mind you say, 'Wait a minute. I get a free house and they're selling the cars for $6?'"

He's also known in the East for his Joe Friday parody for Bell Atlantic Yellow Pages commercials. And as the bald-headed Krishna in the movie "Airplane."

NBC has Leisure under contract and you can see him this Monday as a bookie named Nick the Fish on "ALF." ALF runs up a big gambling debt trying to help his friends pay off their mortgage. When Nick comes to collect, ALF panics.

He also stars in "The Empty Nest," a spinoff pilot from "The Golden Girls."

Leisure's not the only actor whose career has gotten a boost from commercials. Sandy Duncan, Pamela Austin, Eugene Roche, Rodney Allen Rippey and Mason Reese have all been noticed while doing commercials.

"This is like a second career for me," said Leisure. His first acting career went nowhere. "When I was about 23 I moved to Los Angeles to become a movie star and disappeared. That was in 1973. I didn't get an acting job until 1979. That was in 'Airplane.' The next thing after that was a commercial in 1983."

His first commercial was for a chain of pizza parlors.

"I got tired of starving," said Leisure. "I said, who do I know who's making a living as an actor? And what are they doing? So I took a commercials workshop. They wanted me to be animated and goofy. I'd been doing that since I was 15."

"Everyone in a commercial is a character. It's very technical work because you have 25 seconds to do what you have to do. And you have to be interesting, hit your mark and look like you're having a great time doing it. Then do it a hundred times in a row."

For the Isuzu commercials, he must also pause so they can insert the "He's lying" disclaimer after each remark.

"The hardest commercial I ever had to do was one I did backwards," he said. "They had no special effects. It was about a man and his wife doing taxes. Some papers had to fly up and I grabbed one page out of all of them. I palmed the paper. They filmed it backwards, then ran the film the other way."

Leisure has no idea why he's suddenly attracting interest after so many years of nearly starving as an actor.

"If I could figure it out I would do a seminar, a videotape and a book," he said. "But I guess it's the writing, the way I look and the way I act on the Isuzu commercials. It's the perfect thing, to have a car salesman who lies. Everyone thinks they lie anyway."

Leisure got the job at a regular audition, and said it looked like just another job, since it was for two local spots. "They did give me a great compliment," he said. "They said, 'We never thought it was going to be funny again.' I guess they had been looking at guys all day. I said, 'Thank you, you made my year.'"

After that, Isuzu decided it wanted more commercials. By that time Leisure had broken an ankle ice skating with his 7-year-old daughter, Maya. He is now divorced. He did the next commercials with his foot in a cast, including the one atop the 1,800-foot Castle Rock near Moab, Utah, in which he insists he drove the car there.

GARRETT MORRIS

SNL Actor Will Advise Dodgers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Garrett Morris, whose line about baseball was "berry, berry good" on "Saturday Night Live," plans a pep talk to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"I'm going to tell them to keep their eye on the ball," Morris said Wednesday. "They had a bad year last year. Pedro Guerrero was injured. I hear he was carrying a bag of money to the bank and he sprained his leg."

"Baseball's been berry, berry good to me" is what most people seem to remember about my five years on 'Saturday Night Live,'" Morris said.

He said he will revive his impression of Chico Escuela for the pep talk before the Dodgers play the California Angels on Sunday.

Morris now appears regularly on NBC-TV's "Hunter" series. "I play the street character Sporty James, an information broker, some call him a snitch, but he's not an evil character," he said.

Brainchild

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The new NBC series "Roomies," which depicts a retired Marine sergeant paired up in a college dormitory with a 14-year-old genius, was the brainchild of Burt Young, who plays the former leatherneck.

Young played a similar character in "Back to School," which starred Rodney Dangerfield. He took his idea to Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment, who gave him a commitment for seven episodes and suggested he work with producer-writer Sy Rosen.

"Roomies" made its debut March 19 in second place in ratings by the A.C. Nielsen Co.

TV Debut

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Maxim Shostakovich, son of the Russian composer Dmitri Shostakovich, is making his debut in TV commercials and says it's for a good cause.

He said Wednesday that he filmed grocery ads to help raise money for the financially strapped New Orleans Symphony, where he is conducting and his son, Dmitri, is playing the piano in a four-night "Shostakovich Times Three" series.

FOCUS

The Red Planet

It has been more than a decade since NASA's Viking 2 transmitted this photo from the surface of Mars. Officials recently put the next Mars mission off until 1992. Experts say the red planet gets its color from iron-oxide dust, which gives Mars its beautiful pink skies. Like Earth, Mars has deserts, drifting white clouds and polar ice caps. The tallest known mountain on Mars is a volcano 15 miles high — nearly three times the height of Mt. Everest.

DO YOU KNOW — What are the names of the two moons of Mars?

WEDNESDAY'S ANSWER — Baseball begins in April.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY April 3

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Today brings the opportunity to get those of influence to go along with the ideas you most want to put across. Watch for tension, delays and obstacles in your pursuits.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Communicating with those you want to do business with in the future is wise, but later others can deter your progress.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Confer with an adviser about financial matters. You have good judgment today, so use it wisely.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): A clever friend can pave the way to gaining some cherished wish. A co-worker could be disturbing to you.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Study whatever arrangements can be made with an influential person. Focus on home affairs later.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): A good friend should accompany you to some new site where you can make progress. Be careful in motion today.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Try a new tact where some important relationship is concerned and get better results.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Change your attitude toward an associate who has fine ideas. Confer with several experts in your field.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): You are able to gain more income from regular sources. Buy a nice gift for your mate and delight this person.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Seek a recreational outlet that an associate can also enjoy and improve the relationship.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Study the duties ahead of you, and gain assistance from your family. Don't ask bigwigs for favors.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Discuss a recreation with a good friend and make arrangements to get together and enjoy it.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Focus your attention on family affairs, even while out in the business world. Steer clear of a bigwig.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she is apt to have a very happy childhood and will have a fine mentality. Be sure to give this one many subjects at school and teach him, or her, not to be so restless. One who can become a philanthropist during the senior years, whether male or female.

We have stressed this principle in the past, but cannot do it often enough: Before committing yourself to a specific line of play, try to learn as much as you can about the hand.

South had a reasonable weak two-bid at any vulnerability. West's overall cannot be faulted and North's jump to game was equally impeccable.

Against four spades West led the king of hearts and continued with the queen before shifting to a trump. East followed up-the-line to the first two tricks. Declarer's problem was obvious. Since there was no way to avoid losing a club trick, he had to bring in the diamond suit without loss. That could be accomplished if West started with a doubleton king or, if West had length in the suit, his diamonds included the K10. What was West's holding in the suit?

After drawing a second trump, ending in dummy, declarer led a low club to his jack and West's king. West returned a club to the ace, and both defenders followed when declarer ruffed a club. A trump to the king provided the entry to ruff dummy's last club, on which West discarded a heart. The crucial point of the hand had been reached. How should declarer play the diamonds?

From the play to the first two tricks, it was probable that West had started with six hearts. He had shown up with exactly one spade and three clubs, so he had to have started with three diamonds. Declarer's course was clear. He led the jack of diamonds, which was covered by the king and taken by the ace. A trump provided the means of returning to hand and the nine of diamonds was finessed hopefully. When it held, 10 tricks were in the bag.

Mexican Nerve Tissue Studies May Help Parkinson's Patients

By SUSAN OKIE
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

Researchers in Mexico, employing an experimental nerve tissue transplantation technique, have produced dramatic improvement in two patients with Parkinson's disease — a severe neurological disorder that has no known cure.

The researchers transplanted nerve cells from the adrenal glands into the brains of the patients, according to a new study published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine. The report appears to represent the first successful use of nerve tissue transplantation to treat a brain disease in humans.

If the preliminary results reported by doctors at Mexico City's Universidad Nacional Autonoma are confirmed in larger, controlled studies, similar surgery may someday benefit many of the estimated 500,000 Americans with the disease.

"The results ... are certainly surprisingly good," said Dr. Robert Y. Moore, chairman of the department of neurology at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, who wrote an accompanying editorial praising the study. "Those patients are reported to be much better than one would have expected ... from any kind of (standard) treatment" for Parkinson's disease.

But he emphasized that the results are preliminary, and that the operation must be evaluated in a large, controlled study to determine which patients with Parkinson's disease might benefit from it. He said the need for such a trial is underscored by the failure in 1985 of a similar treatment that was tried in two Swedish patients who were older and had more advanced Parkinson's disease.

Parkinson's disease is an illness that most often strikes middle-aged or elderly people. Its symptoms include a general slowing of movement, stiffness of limbs and absence of facial expression, rhythmic trembling of the hands and lack of muscle control.

The disease is thought to be caused by destruction of specialized nerve cells in an area of the brainstem called the substantia nigra, with a consequent fall in levels of dopamine, a substance that transmits messages along certain nerve circuits important in muscle control.

Current medical treatment centers on drugs, such as levodopa or L-dopa, that raise brain levels of dopamine. But such drugs can have serious side effects and often stop working after a time.

The transplant technique tried by

Drs. Ignacio Madrazo, Rene Drucker-Colin and their co-workers was based on similar experiments that have worked in animals with a Parkinson's-like disorder. In each patient, they removed fragments of the inner portion of one adrenal gland, which contains nerve cells that manufacture transmitters chemically related to dopamine. The adrenal glands are paired glands located on top of the kidneys.

Then, working through a surgical microscope, they embedded the adrenal fragments onto the surface of a part of the brain called the right caudate nucleus, adjoining one of the brain's fluid-filled chambers. The paired caudate nuclei are part of the nerve circuits affected in Parkinson's disease.

Both patients who received the experimental operation were men in their thirties with severe Parkinson's disease who had had to stop taking standard drugs because of side effects. Before the surgery, both had incapacitating stiffness and trembling. The first patient to receive the transplant was confined to a wheelchair and had trouble speaking and eating. The second could not write, eat, speak clearly, or care for himself.

The report said both men began to improve within fifteen days of the operation. Within a few months, both showed remarkable reduction in their trembling and muscle stiffness.

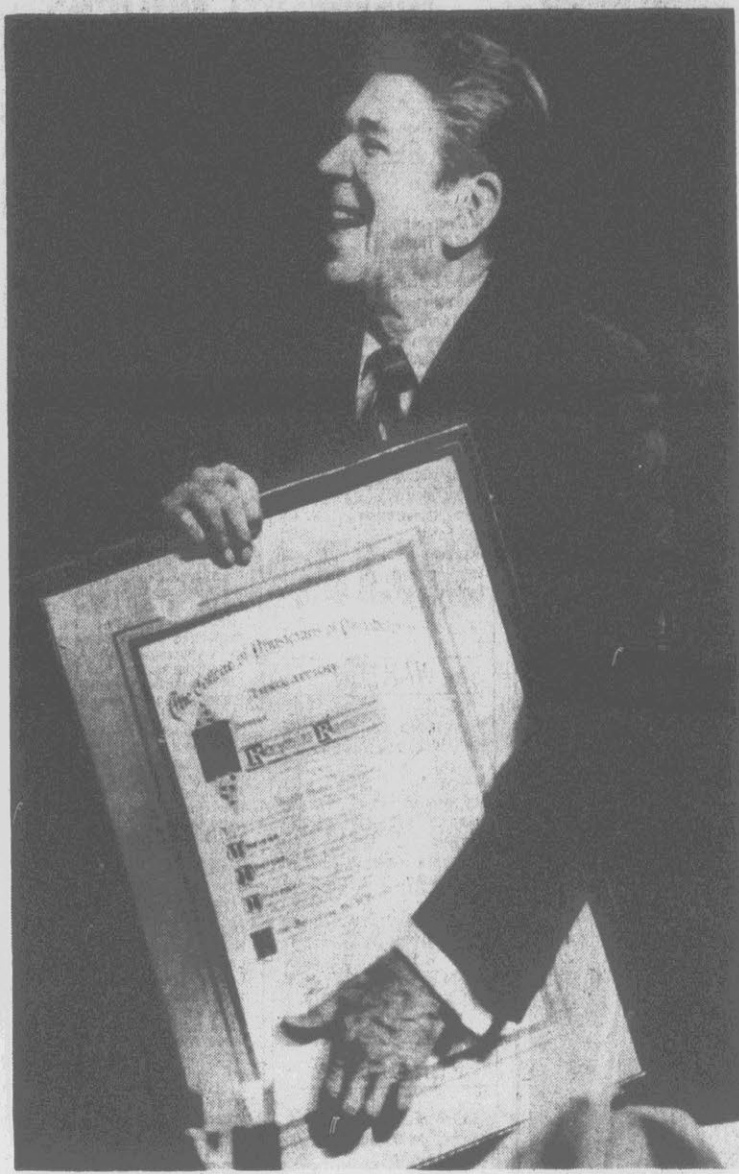

By ten months after the surgery, the first patient could speak clearly, eat without help, and play soccer with his five-year-old son. The second patient, three months after his operation, could speak clearly and walk without help.

Moore said the most puzzling aspect of the study was that in both patients, the treatment improved muscle control on both sides of the body rather than only one side. He said the theory behind the operation was that the transplanted adrenal nerve cells would form connections with nearby brain cells and supply dopamine to circuits on the right side of the brain, which control muscles on the left side of the body.

In their report, the authors suggested that the transplanted cells might instead have released dopamine into the brain fluid, thus supplying the missing transmitter to both sides of the brain.

Alternatively, Moore suggested, the transplants might have released a growth-promoting substance into the fluid, stimulating regeneration of damaged nerve cells on both sides of the brain. He said it may be impossible to find out which theory is correct.

Moore said he had heard that the Mexican researchers had treated six additional patients with transplants, and that a group of scientists in China is performing similar operations using brain tissue from aborted fetuses.

BC-BS Says Tests Should Be Reduced

By The Associated Press

The nation's largest health insurance provider has prepared guidelines for the appropriate use of diagnostic tests in an effort to reduce health-care spending by billions of dollars, newspapers reported today.

The Blue Cross and Blue Shield Association, insurers for an estimated 75 million Americans, planned to announce the guidelines today at the American College of Physicians' annual meeting in New Orleans, according to The New York Times and the Los Angeles Times.

The Chicago-based association developed the guidelines in conjunction with the American College of Physicians, which represents most internists, but other doctors' groups have reservations, according to the newspapers.

Blue Cross and Blue Shield says the guidelines are initially meant to be educational, but eventually will withhold or limit payments for tests deemed inappropriate, the newspapers said.

The guidelines cover 15 common medical tests that account for $30 billion a year of national health-care spending, the newspapers said.

Even before the announcement, the guidelines were attacked by the College of American Pathologists, a 10,000-member group representing the specialists who direct medical testing laboratories.

The guidelines "are simply too restrictive and not workable," said Dr. Jared Schwartz of Presbyterian Hospital in Charlotte, N.C., a spokesman for the organization.

Blue Cross and Blue Shield believes too many physicians indiscriminately order blood tests, chest X-rays, electrocardiograms and other procedures regardless of the patient's age or symptoms.

The nation is "spending $6 billion to $18 billion a year on procedures which do not aid in the diagnosis or treatment of illness," said Bernard R. Tresnowski, the association's president. About 20 percent of present testing is unnecessary, he said.

Among the most widely used tests are blood counts, which are used to detect anemia, tumors and infections, and biochemical profiles, which simultaneously determine cholesterol, blood sugar kidney function and other chemical measurements.

Other common tests include cultures of the blood or urine to diagnose infections, tests for syphilis and measurements of blood clotting.

Reagan Vows That AIDS Cure Can And Will Be Discovered

By MERRILL HARTSON

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is vowing that "we will find a way" to cure AIDS.

For the first time in his more than six years in office, Reagan talked extensively Wednesday about deadly acquired immune deficiency syndrome. He defended his administration's commitment to alleviating the health threat.

"We have increased the spending on that more than anything we've increased in the budget," the president told reporters.

Reminded that Congress actually had approved more than he recommended for AIDS in recent years, Reagan replied, "Well, Congress is made up of spendthrifts."

At wingside of Air Force One upon landing at Philadelphia International Airport and before a conference of physicians, Reagan said AIDS education programs should stress avoidance of sexual intercourse.

On several occasions over the past two days, Reagan has volunteered for reporters' questions, and at each instance he was asked about AIDS.

"I don't quarrel with" Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's advice that youngsters unwilling to remain abstinent should employ other means, such as the use of condoms, to protect themselves, Reagan said.

In his speech to the College of Physicians of Philadelphia, Reagan said schools and parents, rather than the government, should decide what children should be taught about the dangers of AIDS.

"But let's be honest with ourselves," he added. "AIDS information cannot be what some call 'value-neutral.' After all, when it comes to preventing AIDS, don't medicine and morality teach the same lessons?"

At another point on his trip,

Reagan said, "One of the things that's been wrong with too much of our education is that no values of right and wrong are being taught in the educational process."

And he talked optimistically of the chances of finding a cure.

Reagan noted that the AIDS virus has been isolated and identified and that a test has been developed to help ensure that blood transfusions are free of AIDS contamination. He pointed out the recent approval by the Food and Drug Administration of the drug AZT, which "may help" AIDS patients.

"This is unprecedented progress against a major virus," the president said. "It took 40 years of study to learn as much about polio. It took 19 years to develop a vaccine against hepatitis B. But then our battle against AIDS has been like an emergency room operation — we've thrown everything we have into it."

"... When the Carthaginian general Hannibal was preparing to cross the Alps and was told there was no way across, he said, 'We'll find a way, or make one.' And that's the kind of determination we all have about curing AIDS," Reagan said. "We'll find a way or make one."

"We've declared AIDS Public Health Enemy No. 1."

AIDS is a contagious disease that attacks the body's immune system, making it incapable of fending off other diseases and infections.

Health officials estimate that between 1 million and 1.5 million Americans have been exposed to the virus. Through late March, AIDS had been diagnosed in 33,158 Americans, of whom more than half, 19,000, have died since 1979.

In his Philadelphia speech, Reagan said the administration plans to spend $766 million during the current fiscal year, and more than $1 billion in fiscal 1988, which begins Oct. 1.

'Missing Matter'

NEW YORK (AP) — Tiny particles called electron neutrinos apparently have too little mass to be the main component of the mysterious "missing matter" of the universe, according to a report published today.

In fact, John Bahcall of the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton, N.J., said neutrinos may have no mass at all.

Bahcall and a colleague based their report in today's issue of the British journal Nature on new calculations of the mass of the neutrino, which scientists have been trying to determine for 50 years.

A prominent theory holds that the universe contains a certain amount of matter and will eventually stop expanding and collapse back into itself. "Missing matter" refers to the fact that most of that matter has not been detected.

Scientists do not know what the missing matter is, but one theory suggests it is made of neutrinos.

The number of neutrinos in the universe is predicted by theory, so the question of their individual masses is key to whether their collective mass accounts for most of the missing matter.

The individual mass appears to be no more than 11 electron-volts, which is less than one ten-thousandth the mass of an electron, report Bahcall and Sheldon Glashow of Harvard University.

Glashow, who shared the 1979 Nobel prize in physics, and Bahcall based their calculations on observations of the electron neutrinos that streamed toward Earth from the supernova explosion detected in February.

Henry Sobel, a physics professor at the University of California at Irvine, said the upper boundary of 11 electron-volts is "a reasonable number."

Heart Specialists Say Salt Shaker Key To Controlling Blood Pressure

By SALLY SQUIRES

L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

The salt shaker is the place where one of the fiercest battle lines is drawn in the war against high blood pressure.

The American Heart Association along with the National Heart Lung and Blood Institute recommends that all Americans, regardless of blood pressure levels, reduce their salt intake by about half so that they consume no more than 5 grams a day.

At the same time, a number of health leaders point out that no one knows exactly how much of the population is salt-sensitive, although estimates range from a third to a half of Americans.

"Sodium sensitivity is a very complex story," says Dr. Edward D. Frohlich, of the Alton Ochsner Medical Foundation in New Orleans and a member of the High Blood Pressure Education Program at the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute. "It has generated a lot of emotion, not only among the scientific community, but also among consumer advocates."

About half of the 58 million Americans with high blood pressure are sensitive to sodium — the relevant ingredient in salt, or sodium chloride.

"The question then comes as to whether there is any evidence that you prevent hypertension by restricting salt to the degree which is practical in a free-living society," says Dr. Harriet Dustan, Director of the Cardiovascular Research and Training Center at the University of Alabama in Birmingham.

The answer? "Nobody knows," says Dustan.

But it is clear "that sodium restriction will lower high blood pressure among certain people," says Frohlich. Limiting sodium can also "enhance the effectiveness of antihypertensive drugs," he says, so that even people taking high blood pressure drugs are likely to benefit from its restriction.

The most compelling evidence for reducing sodium consumption comes from numerous studies of societies where there is low use of salt. African tribesmen who eat little or no salt in their native environment develop high blood pressure at a rate approaching that of American blacks when they enter military duty and begin eating a high-sodium diet.

Once their military service is finished, their blood pressure goes back to its naturally low level.

Other evidence comes from the pockets of people throughout the world who consume low-sodium, high-potassium diets.

"People who consume less than 60 milliequivalents a day of salt — less than the amount of sodium found in a can of tomato soup — find that their blood pressure does not rise with age," Frohlich says. "Nor do they find a tremendous amount of high blood pressure in their society."

While there is very little direct evidence that sodium restriction will lower and control high blood pressure for all Americans, many experts believe that there is enough scientific data to warrant having most people "modestly limit sodium intake."

The American Heart Association recommends restricting salt to less than 5 grams a day — or less than 100 milliequivalents of sodium.

Air Pollutants Could Strengthen Hurricanes

By MALCOLM RITTER

AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Continued air pollution that increases carbon dioxide levels, already linked to climatic warming, also could make some hurricanes up to 60 percent stronger in the next century, says a study published today.

Kerry Emanuel, associate meteorology professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, reached that projection using a computer simulation of average August conditions. He reported the study in the British journal Nature. If the atmosphere's carbon dioxide content doubles, the maximum possible intensity for hurricanes could rise 40 percent to 50 percent generally and 60 percent in the Gulf of Mexico, the study said.

While only a few percent of hurricanes reach the maximum possible intensity, "we would tend to think if the maximum intensity increases, the average would increase as well," said Emanuel.

The carbon dioxide buildup is caused largely by burning of fossil fuels. Projections of when the atmosphere's carbon dioxide content will double range from about the year 2035 to 2080, according to the National Center for Atmospheric Research.

The buildup has long concerned scientists because it could cause a significant warming of worldwide climate, affecting crop yields and causing long heat waves and coastal flooding from higher seas, scientists say.

Emanuel said his analysis assumes that the doubling of carbon dioxide will raise the temperature of ocean surfaces in tropical regions generally by about 2 degrees to 3 degrees centigrade, or about 4 degrees to 5 degrees Fahrenheit.

In an interview, Emanuel called that assumption "a big if" and said that estimates vary widely on how much ocean temperatures would really rise.

A warming in ocean surfaces increases the amount of heat energy that can be fed into a hurricane through evaporation, he said. Evaporation can occur only until the air becomes saturated, and warmer ocean surfaces allow more heat to be transferred before saturation takes place, he said.

The 40 percent to 50 percent increase in maximum intensity of hurricanes applies to most current hurricane areas, such as the Caribbean Sea, the western Atlantic Ocean, the Indian Ocean and parts of the Pacific Ocean, Emanuel said.

The 60 percent increase is forecast for the Gulf of Mexico, because of higher projected increases in surface temperatures, a result of its being less susceptible to changes in ocean circulation, he said.

Richard Anthes, director of the atmospheric research center, said the assumptions about warming are plausible and that the projections generally are likely to come true if the oceans and atmosphere warm as much as the calculations assume.

But Stephen Schneider, head of the natural systems group at the research center, said Emanuel's calculations should not be taken as forecasts for particular areas at particular times.

"Whether it would apply to Florida or whether it applies to Japan, these kinds of issues are what we can't know at this stage," Schneider said. "It's an indication of quite a plausible outcome that is almost certain to happen at some places in some times."

THE 7th ANNUAL EASTERN CAROLINA
ARTS FESTIVAL

A Look At P-GAC's History

Chartered in 1977 and reorganized in 1979, the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council is a county-wide arts organization created to encourage, coordinate, and support programs and activities of existing arts agencies and to promote the development of new artistic endeavors.

The Arts Council seeks to increase the awareness and interest of the community in the arts, to assist all those who wish to make an artistic contribution, and to bring the artist and community together. In short, P-GAC strives to develop, promote, and coordinate the arts at the community level throughout Pitt County.

The work of the arts council is managed by a 20-member, policy making board of directors. The board is supplemented by a strong sub-committee structure. P-GCA employs a full time executive director, a part time secretary, and a part time festival assistant. The office is maintained in the historic Robert Lee Humber House, 117 West Fifth Street, Greenville. The board meets regularly on the fourth Monday of each month at 7:30 p.m. in the Humber House. The public is welcome.

Programs of the Arts Council include the Annual Eastern Carolina Arts Festival, an Annual Crafts Fair, artists in the schools, and a Youth Art Competition. P-GAC arranges for performances by local and touring individuals, schedules lectures and demonstrations, and coordinates workshops on arts management topics.

The arts council also publishes a community newsletter and calendar, and the Eastern Arts Journal.

P-GAC provides a wide variety of services to local arts groups. The office maintains a library of funding and management books. Grant writing assistance is available from the executive director or the grants committee. Bulk mail services are also available. For arts groups without tax-exempt status, the council can act as their fiscal agent. The most important financial service is the annual allocation of monies from the United Arts Fund Drive to local arts groups.

Membership in the Arts Council is open to everyone who is actively pursuing the arts or wants to contribute to the development of the arts. Membership categories are: individual to include persons and businesses, and affiliate for arts agencies. The Arts Council currently represents the work of 41 community organizations that are committed to providing Greenville and Pitt County with the finest in arts activities. The following is a sampling of the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council Affiliated Member Groups that receive financial support for their activities:

• Orchestra Boosters: The Greenville City Orchestra Booster was formed in 1983 to help promote the highest ideals of orchestral playing in our public school system and to further advance community support of the orchestra program. The association currently has 65 members, most of whom are parents of children in orchestra programs in city schools.

The Orchestra Boosters issues a newsletter to help promote membership and to publicize school orchestra events. It also provides scholarships to local students to help them take advantage of summer music camps for further study. Last year the organization helped finance an in-residence workshop conducted by GOSPEL PERFORMERS — The members of the group, Cornerstone of Greenville, will appear in Gospel Expo '87 as part of the Eastern Carolina Arts Festival. They will be at the Plaza Shopping Center from 7:30 to 9 p.m. on April 7.

Gospel Expo '87 At The Plaza

"Gospel Expo" enters its second year as a part of the annual Eastern Carolina Arts Festival. The "Gospel Expo" program will be presented from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Tuesday at the Plaza Shopping Center.

Based on a new, open air concept, this year's event will attract gospel enthusiasts from the area. Varied styles of gospel music will be featured, including soul, country and contemporary.

Ed Walker, Jr. co-chairman of the Expo, will present the "Cornerstones" of Greenville with their renditions of country gospel. Also in the country gospel vein will be The Anchoermen of Greenville.

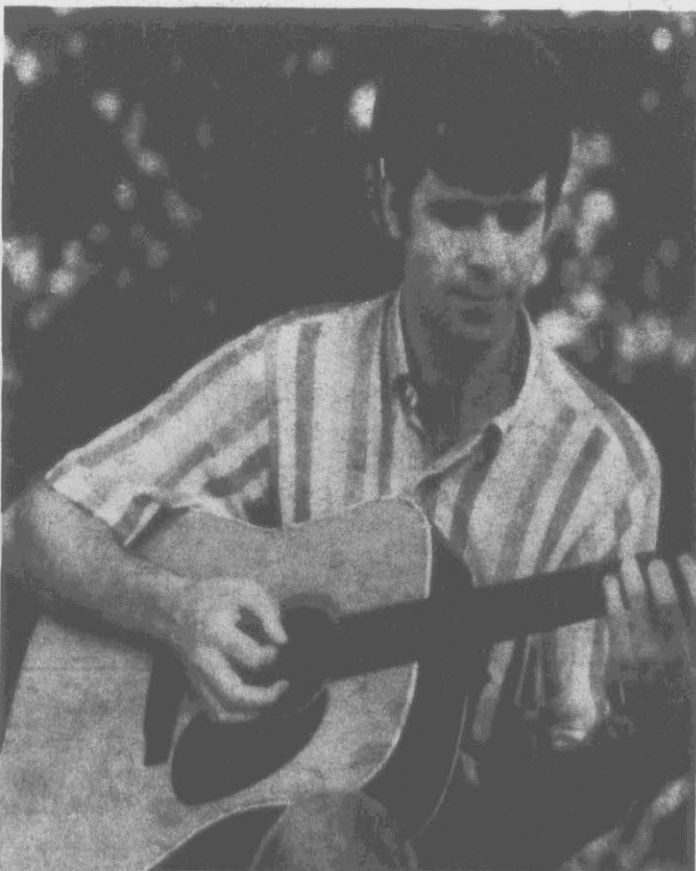

Contemporary gospel music will be provided by Jackie Gardner and Debbie Cowin, both natives of Greenville. Ms. Cowin is a newcomer to "Gospel Expo."

The category of Soul Gospel will be represented by Molly Small and her performing and recording group, The Celestrals.

Another portion of the program will be the Pitt County Massed Choir and the New Bern Massed Choir, both directed by Johnny Wooten, the other co-chairman of "Gospel Expo."

Debra Leathers is a featured soloist with the combined massed choirs.

FOLK PERFORMER — Henry Queen, artist-in-residence at Pitt Community College will present a program of varied music at 3:30 p.m. on Super Sunday.

Henry Queen To Play On Super Sunday

Singer, songwriter and player of various instruments, Henry Queen, is to be the guest performer at 3:30 p.m. today on the Super Sunday opening day of the Eastern Carolina Arts Festival. Queen will perform on the Belk Stage at Carolina East Mall.

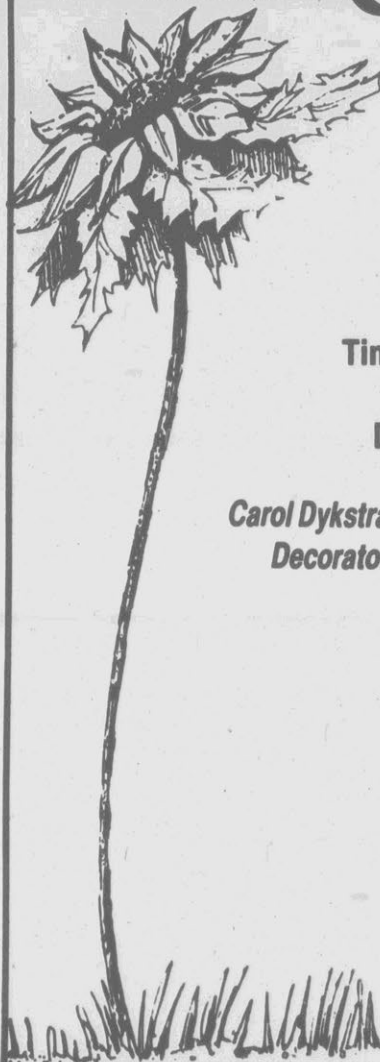

A native of Cullowhee deep in the southwestern mountains of North Carolina, the lanky performer is descended from six generations of singers, performers and preservers of ancient ballads and dance tunes of the rugged people who first inhabited the Tar Heel highlands.

Queen combines songs he heard and lived with in childhood and young manhood, along with original music in which he searches and explores all available avenues of musical sound to formulate his personal version of the continuing mainstream in folk music.

Currently, Queen is artist-in-residence at Pitt Community College.

Playwrights Fund To Present Winning North Carolina Play

The Playwrights Fund of North Carolina, Inc. sponsors an annual competition for North Carolina playwrights and reserves the April slot on its playlog for play adjudged the Best North Carolina Play of the Year.

This year's winner, "Waiters" by David Hopes, will be given the fund's usual two reading performances, both on April 22.

The first reading will be at noon at the Best Lunch Theatre Ever at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street. The second reading will be at 8 p.m. at the Downtown, Downstairs site in the Humber Building, 117 West Fifth Street. Both are open to the public, with the noon production free and the evening production with a suggested (but not mandatory) donation of $2 for non-members of the Playwrights Fund.

"Waiters" is a comedy about a young woman named Anna who has a secret lover. Her over-protective spinster sister, Antonia, wishes to meet him. Anna arranges a rendezvous at a local restaurant. Before Antonia can meet the lover, she has arranged for visits by several "experts" to save her sister's soul. These include a flamboyant mountain visionary; a flower-bedecked Hare-Krishna disciple; a sandwichboard prophet of doom; two anti-heaven evangelists — a female and a child, and finally, a fire and brimstone preacher. A waiter provides unsolicited commentary throughout each encounter.

"Waiters" was chosen for its imaginative use of language and form, and the fresh perspective it provides for a love story. The presentation of the PFNC Competition winning play is traditionally performed in conjunction with the Eastern Carolina Arts Festival.

Beginning Orchestra To Perform

Group I of the Greenville Elementary Beginning Orchestra, composed of 72 fourth year string players from South Greenville Elementary and Wahl-Coates Laboratory schools will be in performance on Super Sunday at Carolina East Mall.

Group I is directed by JoAnn Moore, and Treva Fisher is the accompanist.

The group's program will include traditional dances — "Indian Dance," "Shortnin' Bread," "Hot Cross Buns" and a French folk song; marches — "Three-Note March," "Rosin Bow March," and "Marching Song."

Also to be played are familiar melodies including "Ode to Joy," "Chariots of Fire" and "Star Wars."

The group's program will conclude with a country music suite which will consist of "Mary Had A Little Lamb," "Old MacDonald Had A Farm," "Camptown Races" and "Bile Them Cabbage Down."

The student string orchestra consists of violins, violas, cellos and basses.

Aycock's Show Biz To Give A Performance

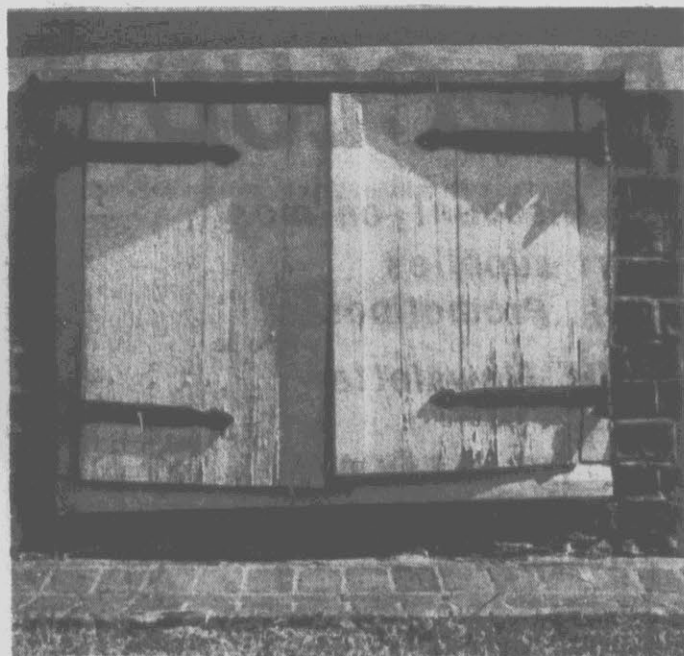

"Show Biz," the entertainment show choir of E.B. Aycock Junior High School, has been honored on several occasions, and this year, they received special recognition. The recognition came from nationally known composers and clinicians Gene Grier and Dan Schwartz, who composed the score of "Scat Is Where Its At!"

and decided it to "Patricia Hiss and her wonderful group, Show Biz." The group, which performs for schools, civic groups, the Tryon Palace Candle Light Tour among other events, will be performing at 4:30 p.m. today on the opening day roster of the Eastern Carolina Arts Festival at Carolina East Mall.

Suzuki Students To Perform At Aycock School April 11

Suzuki students from throughout eastern North Carolina will be performing as a part of the 21st annual Suzuki Festival, at 7:30 p.m. April 10 at E.B. Aycock Junior High School.

Suzuki teachers whose students will perform include Sarah Yarborough, Jon Ward Shaw, Carol Moore, John Livesay, Katherine Jenkins, Mamie Dixon, Margaret Ann Creech, Mary Paul Castelow, Wendy Bissinger, Stephen Bath, and Jo Ann Bath. Charles Bath will be the accompanist.

The basic concept of the Suzuki method is the "Mother Tongue Approach." Language is taught to children beginning the moment they can utter a sound. A child learns from repeating the words and sounds his mother makes, and rapidly learns the mother tongue.

Children are encouraged to play music in the same way, through constant listening and imitating. Dr.

Suzuki, who founded the method says, "cultural sensitivity is not inherited, it is learned. Any child will display highly superior abilities if only the correct methods are used in training and developing these abilities."

The Suzuki method relies heavily on the cooperative relationship of parent, teacher, and child, in a pleasant yet disciplined enterprise. It is not merely a music method, rather it is a combination of philosophy, a technique and program of education.

The Suzuki method is designed to enhance a child's self-esteem by having him thoroughly master each step before he moves on to the next. It is a system based on caring.

MARCHING FORMS—A piece of sculpture by Robbin Barber, titled "Marching Forms" will be shown in the special festival evening of sculpture to be presented at Jefferson Florists on April 8.

An Evening Of Sculpture Is A Special Festival Event

One of the special events of this year's Festival is "An Evening of Sculpture" hosted by Jefferson Florists. This is a new event to the schedule.

The evening will feature the works of Robbie Barber, Susan Tunstall Draughon, Robert Edmiston, Allan Erdmann, and Norman Keller.

These sculptures were selected both for the quality of their work and the variety they represent in the medium. The works will range from realistic portrait sculptures to the exciting works in an abstract vein.

A reception and showing of the work will take place in the Jefferson Floral Gallery, 1720 West Fifth Street, from 7 to 9 p.m. on April 8.

Robert Edmiston is a professor of sculpture at East Carolina, with an emphasis on the abstract. Edmiston received both his BFA and MFA from the University of Oklahoma. He has a particular interest in cast bronze, and has a welding and bronze foundrying shop at his home studio. Edmiston has works on display and in collections throughout N.C.

Norma Keller is a professor of sculpture at East Carolina University School of Art. He currently serves as president of the Tri-State Sculptors Association. Keller received his BFA and MFA from the University of Georgia at Athens. Some of his recent exhibitions include solo shows at Louisburg College and at St. John's Museum at Wilmington. Group exhibits include the "Southern Bronze" Exhibition at Cullowhee, "MOSTRA" at Cortona, Italy, and the Fourth Annual North Carolina Sculpture Exhibition at Northern Telecom, Research Triangle Park.

Keller's work is part of many permanent collections, including Northern Telecom at RTP, RJ Reynolds Industries, the University of Georgia at Athens, and many private collections.

Sculptor Allan Erdman offers a selection of art forms different from most sculpture. His work is an extension of his interest in astronomy, time, and myths of time. He offers his work to the Eastern Carolina Arts Festival to complement the work of the other sculptors.

Zebulon's sculptor Susan Tunstall Draughon sees her portrait sculptures as an opportunity both to express various techniques and as a means of capturing the unique personalities of her subjects.

She achieves this through sessions incorporating physical measurement of the person, photographs and sittings where she gets to know her subject. She works in porcelain and stoneware.

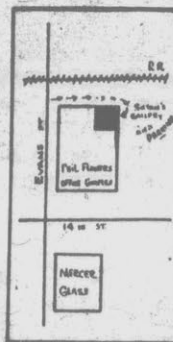

Robbie Barber of Jamesville is a senior in the School of Art, ECU. Although still a student, he is a prolific worker and has exhibited recently at the Southern Bronze Exhibition, Western Carolina University; the 3-D Picture Show, a collaborative installation for the Farmville Arts Council, and in Selected Tri-State Sculptors, Metro Gallery, George Mason University, Arlington, Va.

Barber's sculptures involve to a great extent the transformation of found objects, along with pieces of machinery and artifacts.

... A Look At P-GAC's History

Jackie Dillon, provided students tickets to the ECU Artists Series and purchased achievement plaques and certificates which were presented to students. The orchestra teachers in the school program work closely with boosters officers to advise them of special needs. These could be such items as seasonal scores not budgeted by the school, or equipment not included as part of the lease program. The association plans to continue to help bring the music library up to standard by helping to purchase additional scores.

The overall objective of the Orchestra Boosters is to help create a climate in which the community actively supports and maintains one of the finest public school orchestral programs in the nation. Toward achieving that long-range goal, the organization will help students raise money to pay for transportation to regional or state contests, or to schools in other cities. These extracurricular activities will give students additional performance experience and will help establish the program's reputation outside the community.

• Greenville Choral Society: Since its beginning 15 years ago, the Greenville Choral Society has set its goal to bring the finest choral literature to the singers and listeners of the Greenville area. Originally called the Greenville Community Chorus, the group was formed in 1969 to perform portions of Handel's "Messiah". Selections performed since then include the Bach "Magnificat"; the Brahms "Requiem"; Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony," and Haydn's "The Seasons" and "Theresa Mass".

Anyone interested in performing or supporting fine choral music can be a member of the Choral Society. Performing membership is open, without auditions, to all interested singers. The ensemble's membership currently numbers approximately 75 singers who come from all walks of life.

The Greenville Choral Society Guild was formed in 1983 as an adjunct organization to provide music lovers the opportunity to support the choral society in ways other than singing. Guild membership is open to those wishing to foster musical culture and education.

Membership in the Greenville Choral Society will help it maintain its standard of excellence and make possible the performance of great musical masterworks.

• Greenville Boys Choir — The Greenville Boys Choir was organized to give boys an opportunity to grow in musical and choral knowledge, enjoy an aesthetic experience, have a place to socialize and share in a group activity, and know the joy of performing while sharing their skills and talents. Enrollment in the choir numbers more than 30 young men ages eight to 12 who have completed an audition. The choir holds concerts for the community and works closely with other agencies and education groups.

• Orchestra & Chamber Music Association — The Eastern Carolina Orchestra and Chamber Music Association was formed to encourage orchestral and chamber music performances in the coastal plains area of North Carolina through the establishment of a youth orchestra. ECO/CMA offers advanced level orchestral experience to young strings players, on an audition basis. Young musicians perform in the Eastern Carolina Youth Orchestra, Youth String Quartet, and additional small groups of woodwinds, brass, and piano.

The Association organizes workshops, master clinics, and guest performances. It subsidizes scholarships to the ECU Summer Orchestra Camp and tickets for students to attend orchestral performances. In addition, the association acts as a liaison between amateurs and the community at all levels of education.

• Center Theatre: The Center Theatre is a creative dramatics organizations that works with young people, primarily in schools. The director, Steve Myott, uses the natural creative abilities of the students to develop new and original productions. This process of self-discovery promotes self confidence, discipline, and learning.

• The S & F Playhouse — The Smiles and Frowns Playhouse is one of Greenville's newest arts groups. Its mission is to expose young people, ages five through 18, to all aspects of theatre. Children take part in all production roles from acting, to staging, to makeup and costumes and publicity.

• Ayden Theater Workshop — The Ayden Theatre Workshop, headquartered at Ayden-Grifton High School, has received funding from the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council in order to support the Glimpses project. Glimpses is a small, touring group consisting of 10 or 12 actors. It performs short plays and sketches on the topics of substance abuse, mental illness, marriage, and the family before civic clubs, church groups, PTA's and school groups. The main focus is to draw attention to these issues through the use of creative dramatics. The performances can be utilized to foster discussion and interest, as well as provide information to "groups at risk".

• Greenville Chamber Orchestra — The Greenville Chamber Orchestra consists of 20 talented string musicians which provide back-up music to such groups as the Greenville Choral Society. It also consults with the Eastern Carolina Youth Orchestra, Suzuki Players of Eastern North Carolina, and ECU. It is the only string ensemble east of Raleigh.

P-GAC Annual Dinner Set

The Pitt-Greenville Arts Council Annual Awards Dinner is scheduled for April 11 at the Greenville Country Club.

Tickets are priced at $30 per person. Reservations can be made by calling the arts council office at 757-1785. Cocktails will be served from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., followed by dinner and entertainment to be provided by Ed Glenn and the East Carolina University Men's Ensemble.

This year's dinner will have a new component, a Talent Auction. Many of the affiliated member groups of the arts council will have their talents available "for sale."

In addition to this, the 1987 Outstanding Contributor to the Arts will be announced. This person has given many years of active support to the arts and the entire community.

Individuals and groups comprising the roster of those available for the Talent Auction are:

- Suzuki Violinists/The Davis Children will perform Christmas music at a function during the month of December.

- Joanne and Charles Bath will perform background music for dinner, or for a chamber recital.

- The Farmville Show Choir, directed by Kathryn Sauls, Craig Everett and Dot Dee Moye will give a 20 to 45 minute show featuring patriotic, popular and Broadway tunes.

- The North Carolina Academy of Dance Arts, directed by Sherry Mercer, will provide five dancers as ballerina dolls or clowns to entertain at a child's party; or one month of adult dance classes during April.

- Henry Queen, artist-in-residence at Pitt Community College will give a 20 to 30 minute performance of folk music on guitar and banjo.

- The East Carolina University Mens Chorale Ensemble, directed by Ed Glenn, will give a performance.

- The Greenville Boys Choir will provide a 30 minute show.

- SPEBSQSA, Inc., the barbershop music society, will give a 30 minute show.

- The Greenville Chamber Quartet, directed by Mamie Dixon, will give a show.

- Donna Whitley's Middle Eastern Dance class will give a performance of traditional dances that celebrate important life events.

- Sandra and Billy Stinson will give a 30 to 45 minute show of folk, pop and bluegrass music.

- Nancy Bolen of Now and Then Designs will give a group lecture/demonstration on traditional house design forms.

- Down East Dance Company, directed by Elizabeth Pope, will provide the use of the studio with 20 minutes of dance entertainment for a party.

- Brad Donaldson will give a show of 30 to 30 minutes of gospel or comedy magic for children; he would prefer to be purchased by a civic club or group.

- Ayden Theater Workshop will provide four complimentary tickets and a backstage tour to their spring show (the show to be announced).

- The Eastern Carolina Chapter of the Sweet Adelines will give a 20 to 30 minute show.

The sale of tickets to the annual Pitt-Greenville Arts Council dinner is one of the means of raising funds for the council.

Quilters Guild Show At The Greene Street Center

The Greenville Quilters Guild will present an exhibition of quilts made by members of the guild as an integral part of the annual Eastern Carolina Festival celebration.

Guild members will be displaying their handiwork at the Greene Street Recreation Center located at the corner of Greene and Third streets on two days. On April 11, hours will be from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on April 12, from 1 to 5 p.m.

A special feature of the quilt show is one group of "friendship quilts," with each block constructed and quilted by a different friend.

No formal judging of the quilts on view will be carried out. Instead, the public is welcome to express viewer's choice of the work they like best.

Admission to the show is $1 per person.

Events Related To The Arts Festival

A number of events in art, music, poetry and children's activities, scheduled during April in the Greenville community and at East Carolina University, are related to the annual Festival of Arts.

A selection of these are listed in the brochure for the 1987 Arts Festival and can also be found in detail in the arts and entertainment sections of The Daily Reflector.

Our Steaks Taste Better
Because They Are Better.

In this time of "cut costs," "cut corners," "just make a profit," "give the customer just enough to make him happy," a few people still go to the trouble to do things the right way. The best way.

Only USDA Choice beef. Cut fresh daily. Cooked to order. And served by the best people in the business. That's the way we do things at Golden Corral. Maybe that's why everything tastes better at Golden Corral.
