Farm Chemicals Burn In Warehouse

Thousands Flee Toxic Cloud

MINOT, N.D. (AP) — A fire ignited toxic chemicals in an agricultural warehouse Saturday, spewing a black, pungent cloud that injured at least 15 people and forced an estimated 10,000 people to flee their homes.

Winds blew the cloud over the middle of the city of 32,800 people and across the Canadian border, 50 miles to the north.

At least 15 emergency workers and other people who became ill from the fumes were taken to hospitals, said police Sgt. Steve Kukowski.

The Westchem Agricultural Chemicals Inc. warehouse contained parathion, an insecticide, and other farm chemicals, said Lt. Dennis Smetena.

Residents in the path of the cloud were advised to leave their homes, said Kukowski.

They were directed toward small towns east and west of Minot and to a state Highway Department building on the eastern edge of town, said Kukowski.

"We did not force them to evacuate, we only asked them to evacuate," he said, adding that 10,000 was a rough guess of the number who left.

The fire was brought under control about 4 p.m. after it was doused with a layer of foam, but it was still smoldering, said Kukowski.

The cloud had traveled about 50 miles north into Canada about four hours after the fire started, at 11:05 a.m., he said. Authorities in affected areas were advising residents to stay indoors and shower if they came into contact with the cloud, he said.

Gov. George Sinner arrived by helicopter in Minot late Saturday afternoon to survey the situation and meet with the City Council.

Before dousing the blaze with foam, firefighers ran water on the building, directing chemicals that leaked out toward a large drainage ditch, officials said.

The blaze apparently started in a truck parked inside the warehouse, officials said.

Traffic was snarled as spectators tried to get a closer look at the blaze, but Kukowski said later that traffic was being routed away from the area.

Residents who began to feel nauseated were told to call the hospital, as the emergency rooms were crowded, said Smetana.

Ten or 11 people were treated at Trinity Medical Center and released, a hospital official said. The condition of those treated elsewhere was not immediately known.

Democrats Re-Elect Spilman

By ELIZABETH GORDEN

Pitt County Democrats re-elected J.B. Spilman as their chairman Saturday at the Pitt County Democratic Convention held at the courthouse in Greenville.

Others re-elected on the same slate as Spilman were Betty Lewis, first vice chair; D.D. Garrett, second vice chair; Wayne Harris, secretary, and John Ball, treasurer.

Eloise McCain was elected for a first term as third vice chair. Betsy Leech, who had held that position, was ineligable for re-election because of her position as president of Pitt County Democratic Women.

Election of five representatives to the State Executive Committee was also held at the convention. Receiving positions on that committee were Willie Mae Carney, Artemis C. Kares, Judy Sadler, Ruffis Huggins and Jim Young. As chairman, Spilman will also serve on the committee.

All of the elected officials were elected by acclamation.

Betty Speir, a Democratic National Committee Woman, introduced the keynote speaker, state Insurance Commissioner James E. Long.

In his address, Long spoke of a need for Democrats to provide leadership for this country.

"Our work is not completed yet. In 1987 and 1988 North Carolina Democrats and Democrats all across this great country of ours will have the opportunity to do what the other crowd has not been able to do, provide leadership to the future of this great country and this great state of ours."

Long outlined Republican leadership as a leadership that is "asleep at the wheel."

"I'm not going to spend all afternoon talking about Ronald Reagan and the Republican party. Although

Expo Attendance Set At 23,000

By JANE WELBORN

Over 23,000 people from eastern North Carolina got a first-hand look at the products and services available in Pitt County during the three-day Expo '87 trade fair that ran through Saturday in Geenville.

This was the third year for the show, which is sponsored by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce. Local business and industry set up promotional booths. Other participants included physicians, Pitt County Memorial Hospital, the Pitt County school system and several local municipalities, including Ayden, Farmville and Greenville.

Expo co-chairman Mark Garner of Rivers and Associates said 23,600 persons attended the show.

"It was a first-rate show," he said. "I enjoyed doing it very much. The chamber staff was great to work with."

Wayne Dempsey of Wachovia, co-chairman of the event, said "We are all very pleased with the Expo. The attendance was exceptionally good and most all of the comments from the exhibitors were good.

"The primary purpose, in addition to showing the community the goods and services that are available in Pitt County, is giving the exhibitors a good opportunity for exposure," Dempsey said.

Greenville Obstetrics and Gynecology PA participated in the trade fair for the first time this year. Dr. Ed Clement of Greenville OB-Gyn said, "We are never too busy to be concerned about our patients. We want them to know we're interested in them always.

"We wanted to let people know we are in business," he added. "And we are members of the chamber, so we decided to participate to support the chamber. Very few physicians support the chamber."

By Friday afternoon, Pitt County Memorial Hospital had conducted over 300 free blood pressure checks in the hospital's booth at Expo.

Exhibitor Amy Crawford of Ferguson Enterprises said the exposure gained at the trade fair is important to her company. "We don't do much advertising. We mostly get business from word-of-mouth.

"About 50 percent of the people who talk to us at the Expo and act like they're interested never contact us," she said. "A couple of people have seemed like they really were serious. But sometimes a person who saw us at Expo won't contact us for six months after the show, but they remember they saw us here."

This was the third year Ferguson Enterprises has participated in the trade fair.

Council Now Stressing Unity In Manager Hunt

By DON REUTER

Although the dismissal of Gail Meeks as city manager sharply divided the Greenville City Council, members of the board say they hope for unity and cooperation when selecting her replacement.

"I think we've gone about (the selection process) in a very academic fashion, and we're moving very quickly, which I think is most important," Council member Nancy Jenkins said of efforts to recruit a new city manager.

"We also agreed on the kind of things we're looking for in a city manager. I would certainly hope that this is a bright new day, and I look at this very positively. I feel very good about the procedure we're going with."

Members of the Greenville City Council met with E.H. "Woody" Underwood, N.C. League of Municipalities director of services, Thursday night to discuss the job description and selection process for the new administrator.

Mayor Les Garner said he was pleased with progress made during the meeting.

"I think it was good meeting, and I came away with a positive attitude. I believe the whole council is 100 percent behind the way we're going about it with the prepared items from Mr. Underwood and using his services," Garner said. "I really feel we can look at it in a positive attitude."

Other members of the City Council echoed Garner's sentiments.

"I felt the meeting was good," Council member Inez Fridley said. "I think Underwood helped us a great deal to sort through the issues in a non-partial way."

"I think Woody gave us some excellent leadership and I believe helped us set up a good solid program for our search committee," Council member Bill Hadden said.

"I was real pleased with the guy from the league," Council member Lorraine Shinn said. "He seemed to be right on target. I felt good about the process to be used to select the manager."

"I thought it was excellent," Council member Janice Buck said. "I feel very, very positive that we will find a

Sixteen state records were set in the Pitt County Senior Games held Friday and Saturday in Greenville.

Athletes aged 55 to 85 competed by age groups in 16 different events. The activities, ranging from archery to swimming, were held on the campus of East Carolina University, Greenville Golf and Country Club, E.B. Aycock Junior High School track, Greenville Recreation and Parks facilities and the Hillcrest Bowling Lanes.

The Senior Games are sponsored by the Pitt County Community Schools, the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department and East Carolina University.

John Montgomery set four state records in the 65-69 age group. He threw the discus 85 feet and 1/4-inch, besting the old record of 54-1 1/2. He also walked a mile in 9 minutes and 29 seconds (breaking the record of 10:53) and ran the 100-meter dash in 15:33 seconds (breaking the record of 16:1 seconds). Montgomery set the new 65-69 age group record by putting the shot 36-6 1/2; the old record was 34-9.

Soviets Expelling Four French Diplomats In Retaliatory Move

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union said Saturday it would expel four French diplomats and two French businessmen in retaliation for the expulsion of three Soviets from France after an alleged high-technology spy ring was uncovered there.

The Foreign Ministry said in a statement the six were being expelled for activities inconsistent with their status — a diplomatic euphemism for spying.

It said three Frenchmen would have to leave within eight days and the other three within an unspecified time.

Tass, the official news agency, said the Foreign Ministry on Saturday summoned the French ambassador to Moscow, Yves Pagniez, and handed him a note protesting the earlier expulsion of three Soviet diplomats from France.

It reported the note said the Soviets were expelled "without any proof of the accusation of activity not corresponding to their function and status."

"The Soviet side judged this action as an open unfriendly action having a clear political coloring and having the goal of poisoning Soviet-French relations," Tass said.

The expulsions came a month before French Premier Jacques Chirac is scheduled to visit the Soviet Union.

One of those orderd expelled, Embassy Counselor Pierre de Bruchard, said when contacted at home: "I have no reaction. I am a civil servant and the reaction will come from my government."

In Paris, the French Foreign Ministry declined comment on the Soviet action.

France ordered the three Soviets expelled Thursday, but did not give their names or say why they were ordered to leave.

However, the expulsion order was assumed to be linked to the recent arrests of seven people in Franch accused of gathering information on Europe's Ariane space rocket and other advanced technology for an East bloc country.

French mews reports have said that the group's contact with the Soviet bloc was Valery Konorev, a deputy air attache in the Soviet Embassy in Paris. They also have said Konorev was one of the three Soviets ordered expelled, and that seven Soviets altogether were implicated in the spy ring.

Soviet officials have denied involvement in any spying activity, and said the French must bear responsibility for the retaliatory expulsions.

"It was pointed out to the French side on more than one occasion that a number of French workers in Moscow did not observe the rules of conduct of foreign representatives in the U.S.S.R, that they had engaged in activities incompatible with their status," the Soviet Foreign Ministry said.

"In these conditions, the Soviet side deems it necessary to demand that a number of French representatives leave the Soviet Union," it said.

The French citizens ordered expelled were identified as Bruchard; Yves Delaunay, a second secretary at the embassy; Anita Pinhas Davidenkoff, a cultural affairs attache; Capt. Pierre Lapernet, an aide to the air force attache, and businessmen Serge Berlot and Patrick Chebroux.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has engaged in blow-for-blow expulsions with the United States, Britain and France since coming to power in March 1985.

In April 1983, France expelled 47 Soviet diplomats and other officials in what was portrayed as a mass clean-out of KGB secret police agents.

The Soviet Union, then under the leadership of the late Yuri V. Andropov, who had headed the KGB for 15 years, did not retaliate.

In February 1986, France expelled four more Soviets after a former French soldier was arrested on espionage charges. The Soviets respondewd by expelling four French.

Among the seven people arrested in France on charges of spying for an East bloc country is Ludmilla Varyguine Verdier, 31, a Soviet woman married to a Frenchman.

Mrs. Verdier was released from jail last week pending the outcome of her case. She had been in prison for 18 days.

Lightning Strikes Plane, Killing 34

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — A passenger jet of the Indonesian airline Garuda exploded while trying to land at Sumatra's Medan airport Saturday, killing 34 people, an airport official said.

He said the plane was hit by lightning, which made a drop in its altitude, and that the jet struck a high-voltage wire near the end of the runway.

Eleven of the 45 people aboard the DC-9 jet survived, the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

It was raining and heavily overcast at the time of the accident, about 2:45 p.m., the official said.

He said three Japanese, including one of those killed, and a Singaporean were among foreigners aboard. The official said the Singaporean, Ng Chong Sen, was among the survivors.

The pilot, Sumirat, also survived, the official said.

Medan, with a population of about 500,000, is in northern Sumatra.

The flight originated from Banda Aceh, on the northern tip of Sumatra, one of Indonesia's main islands. The plane was scheduled to stop in Medan and then fly on to Jakarta, 875 miles away.

No further details were available.

American Adviser's Body Returns From El Salvador

MIAMI (AP) — The body of the first U.S. military adviser killed in combat in El Salvador arrived in the United States on Saturday accompanied by his wife.

Sgt. 1st Class Gregory A. Fronius, 27, of Connellsville, Pa., was among a group of 55 U.S. advisers working with the Salvadoran armed forces when he was killed in a pre-dawn rebel attack Tuesday on the nation's second-largest military base.

Forty-three Salvadoran government troops also were killed in the raid, said U.S. Army spokesman John Smith.

Fronius' Panamanian wife, Celinda, accompanied the coffin on Eastern Airlines Flight 505 from their home in Panama to Miami International Airport and was scheduled to fly on to Pittsburgh later Saturday evening.

"On behalf of my family and myself, I would like to express my deepest appreciation for the support provided during this tragic loss of my husband Gregory," said Mrs. Fronius in a prepared statement read by her military escort, Maj. Michael Wood.

"He believed in his work and support he was providing to the United States Army, and more importantly in his training mission in El Salvador," the statement said.

She also gave her condolences to the families of the Salvadoran soldiers who were killed or wounded with her husband.

Mrs. Fronius had said she did not want to talk to reporters.

A private funeral with full military honors was scheduled for Tuesday in Scottdale, Pa., where Fronius' mother lives, said Smith.

The family's two children stayed behind in Panama, said Smith.

Fronius was a weapons instructor working with civilians at the time of his death, said Smith. He was promoted posthumously to sergeant 1st class.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman in El Salvador who requested anonymity for security reasons said earlier that guerrillas shot Fronius while he was fleeing from his room for cover and that his body then was hit by mortar fire.

The spokesman said it was "very obvious" Fronius was not the target of the attack.

The armed forces press office said major operations were under way in the provinces of Chalatenango, site of Tuesday's attack, and in Morazan, a traditional rebel stronghold.

The Roman Catholic Church and human rights groups say more than 62,000 people, many of them civilians, have been killed since the civil war began in 1979.

Deficit Budget OK'd

BEIJING (AP) — The leadership of China's supreme legislative body approved in principle on Saturday a national economic report that projects a $2.16 billion budget deficit for 1987.

The presidium of the National People's Congress also approved a draft list of appointments and removals of government ministers. The names were not made public.

At the meeting, reported by the official Xinhua news agency, leading conservative Peng Zhen said the legislative body's standing committee was considering ways to strengthen Congress' supervisory role over government.

Peng, chairman of the standing committee, also said China must stick to socialism to become powerful and prosperous. He urged expanded production along with cuts in expenditures.

The National People's Congress has power to elect and remove from office the highest state dignitaries. Xinhua said the meeting approved a draft list of people who would be named to or removed from ministerial posts, and another draft list of candidates to be added to the National People's Congress standing committee.

Xinhua said a report by Congress' financial and economic committee on the 1987 state budget was approved in principle.

It did not describe the draft budget, but quoted Wang Renzhong, chairman of the financial committee, as saying it included a projected $2.16 billion deficit for 1987.

Sierra Club Trips

The Cypress Group of the Sierra Club sponsored bicycle and canoe/camping outings recently.

Tom Moore led a 10-mile bicycle tour in the Winterville area. Peddlers observed the spring blooms along Pitt County roadways.

Mary and Bion Schulken led a camping and canoeing trip to Lake Waccamaw in Columbus County. The outing included exploring Big Creek by canoe, then paddling the lake to camp overnight at Lake Waccamaw State Park. The 11 canoeists/campers also participated in stargazing, fishing and hiking.

The Cypress Group meets the second Monday of each month at the First Presbyterian Church, 14th and Elm streets. April 13 is the next meeting, which will feature a presentation by Vince and Ann Bellis of Greenville on challenges faced by small countries attempting to preserve natural resources.

Seniors Set Records

Two other Pitt County athletes broke state records in the men's shot put event. In the 55-59 category, Jim Blocker putted the shot 36-8 1/2; the state record in that age group was 30-3 1/2. William Waugh broke the state record for men aged 60-64 by 3 inches with a put of 36 feet.

At the bowling lanes, two state records were set. Herman Weilenmann, competing in the 80-84 age group for men, bowled a 522 series, breaking the record of 418. Eleanor Ford, in the 65-69 women's group, bowled a 570 series, 40 more than the state record.

A softball throw of 166-feet, 9-inches earned Lee Alcorn a state record in the 60-64 men's age group; the state record was 158-7.

On the links, golfer Alcorn's 80 broke the state record for men aged 60-64 by three strokes.

In the women's 65-69 category, Gertie Andrews had a standing broad jump of 4-9, breaking the record of 4-7 1/2.

Margaret Barnhill set a record of four baskets in basketball shooting for women aged 80-84. No baskets had been scored in that competition on the state level.

Pitt Countians also set three new football throwing records. Dexter Wasson, in the 55-59 age group for men, scored 60 points, breaking the state record by 10 points. For men aged 65-69, Pete Carraway tied the state mark with 60 points, and Lola Smith set the new ladies mark in the 70-74 age group with 70 points; the state record had been 60 points.

Clayton Whitehurst broke a swimming record by 1.52 seconds in the men's 55-59 age group.

Local first place winners will compete in the state Senior Games competition in the fall.

Sevick, Paul Snider, Della Stubbs, W.W. Tice, Helen Turner, Dennis Warren, Francis Whelihan, Irene Whelihan, Joseph Whitaker, Jeanie C. Whitehurst, Eligah Whitfield, Arleta Woods, Henry Woods, Ed Wolcott, Sadie Worthington and Warren Yoder.

Volunteers assisting with the games included students at ECU, D.H. Conley Army ROTC cadets and five local Boy Scout troops.

Expo Attracts 23,000

Joyce Boykin, a broker associate for Century 21-Bass Realty, said, "I have several gotten perspective buyers" from the realty company's participation in the trade fair. "I am very pleased."

Peggy Briley of East Coast Coffee Distributors, said, "We gave away 800 cups of coffee Thursday. In (the recent trade show at) Rocky Mount, we only gave away 600 cups in three days.

"The three of us (manning the booth) have been making and pouring coffee as fast as we can," she added.

Ronnie Weeks, publisher of Adlib magazine, said, "I primarily did this as exposure to other businesses — that is a great or greater reason than exposure to the public. The major way of making money for us is through advertising, so businesses need to know about us."

The Shirt Printery sold Expo '87 T-shirts from their booth. Gretchen Maloney said she sold of out of the youth-sized shirts she had with her at the show, and she went back to the printery to get some more.

"We've been in business three years and many people did not know about us," she said. "We have gotten good exposure at the Expo."

Don Edwards of University Book Exchange said, "Everything has gone great. We have been satisfied with the amount of exposure we have gotten. Our participation in Expo has been valuable to us."

UBE sold items bearing the East Caroling University emblems at the Expo.

"We are university-related but we are interested in selling to the community," he added. "At the Expo, we have sold things to people from throughout Pitt County and the closer eastern North Carolina towns like Kinston."

CATHARSIS

Our modern Western civilization is said to have begun with the flowering of Greece. Many of our present concepts are based on the teachings of the philosophers: Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, and on the plays of Aeshylus, Sophocles and Euripides.

It was the Greeks who understood and described a phenomenon known as "Catharsius", the purifying or relieving of the emotions through art or communal ceremony. Emotions were brought to a crisis pitch, there was a flood of grief, and then soothing relief.

Psychiatry has borrowed the term catharsis to mean the alleviation of fears, problems and complexes by bringing them to consciousness and giving them expression.

One of the purposes of the funeral ceremony is to provide such catharsis for the mourners. We express our thoughts, emotions. We share our grief. Hopefully, we come away with a sense of peace and understanding.

District 97 of the State Employees Association of North Carolina increased its membership by nearly 50 percent during a month-long campaign in March, according to District Chairman Margaret Sullivan.

The district, which represents state employees at East Carolina University, added 185 members during the campaign. Total membership now stands at 523.

The 50,000-member State Employees Association of North Carolina is dedicated to advancing employee professionalism in state government.

Flushing

Greenville Utilities will continue its water distribution system flushing program Sunday through Friday in the area north of Fifth Street, east of Evans Street and south of the Tar River.

The flushing is done nightly between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m. Although there is no health risk, GUC advises customers to avoid using water when their lines are being flushed. Water may be discolored, and clothes washed in discolored water may stain.

The program began March 22 and ends May 29. Weekly schedules will be published in the Daily Reflector. For more information call 752-7166, ext. 453, from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m., or ext. 352 after hours.

School Video

The Pitt County schools has made available a videotape that gives an overview of people, programs and the progress involved in the recent school year.

The tape is available on request for any group or club that would like a program for their meetings.

For information call Barry Gaskins, public information director for the schools, at 830-4258.

Recast Club

The J.H. Rose High School Recast quiz bowl team earned second place in competition at the fourth annual state convention of the N.C. Council for the Advancement of Minorities.

Team members Crystal Dillard, Roger Brunson, Kahamele Youssef and Sean Lyles won second place in the math and writing contest.

Sean Lyles and Edward Moore won summer scholarships to N.C. State University.

Adult Classes

Pitt Community College will have registration for PLATO Computer Adult Basic Education and Adult High School classes this week.

Monday and Wednesday classes from 12:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. and from 3:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m., will have registration Monday; Tuesday and Thursday classes from 12:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. and from 3:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m., Tuesday; and Friday 9 a.m. to noon classes, Friday.

Scholarship

Rebecca Britt of Greenville has been awarded a $1,200 Special Merit Scholarship for the 1987-88 and 1988-89 academic years at Peace College.

Miss Britt is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth W. Britt of 3203 Tucker Drive and is a student at J.H. Rose High School.

Special Merit Scholarships are awarded to students who maintain above average grades in high school, who possess leadership characteristics or who make outstanding contributions to their communities.

The scholarship will be applied toward tuition, room and board for both years at the two-year college for women.

Tutoring

Tutoring services are being offered every Saturday morning from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Little Creek Free Will Baptist Church in Ayden. Tutoring is available for grades 1 through 12.

Sunday Opinion

Legislators Should Avoid State Lottery

North Carolina's legislators should again steer clear of creating a state lottery or legalizing paramutual betting in 1987.

As the N.C. General Assembly begins its budget-making process, lawmakers should carefully consider the unfairness and objectionable nature of a practice like a state lottery.

Since the issue is bound to come up, the state's leaders should also take a careful look at the undesireable effects — both economic and aesthetic — paramutual betting has on communities which allow it.

A lottery is an easy way to raise a sizeable chunk of revenue, proponents claim. Only people that want to participate do and the state benefits financially from these willing contributions, they say.

What supporters don't talk about, however, is the fact that a lottery amounts to essentially a tax on the poor. Its prey are those citizens least able to afford being victimized. A lottery promises riches it seldom delivers — a cruel proposition.

Consider this: who is most likely to spend $2 or $5 or whatever on a chance to win $1 million? An affluent person or an unemployed, disadvantaged, uneducated individual unable to make a reasonable living? Who would buy a ticket first, a successful person or an up-to-his-or-her-ears in debt farmer? The answer to both questions is obvious. Economics would motivate a poorer person to take a chance on winning a bundle.

Besides this victimization of the less fortunate, a lottery is unfair because it takes a disproportionate share of the poorer person's income. If tickets are $2, that $2 is a lot larger amount of a $8,000 or $12,000 a year income than a $30,000 or $40,000 a year salary.

There are sounder ways to raise revenue for the state's coffers, and the lawmakers should make sure they find them. A state lottery is a quick-fix approach to fundraising, and won't provide a permanent solution to locating needed dollars.

In addition, paramutual betting has proved disappointing to areas that have allowed it, and North Carolina's lawmakers should recognize this reality. Proponents cite increased economic prosperity from tourist dollars, but ignore the fact that most paramutual betting establishments suck these dollars from local pockets by providing the visitor with all his needs — from lodging to food to transportation.

By no means should North Carolina be saddled with a practice as grossly unfair as a state lottery. Neither should the state open the door to a practice as potentially detrimental as paramutual betting. State legislators should put the lid on any proposal that would allow the two pursuits.

Poor Strategy

Sen. Terry Sanford could only come across one way in his flip flop voting on the presidential veto of the highway bill — looking bad.

When the vote was taken Wednesday he answered present. Then he voted no to the veto override and became the swing vote in sustaining the veto. Only some quick parliamentary maneuvering by the Democratic leadership saved the day and opened the way to a second vote on Thursday. The unhappy Democratic leaders went to work on Sen. Sanford and later he announced he had made his point and would vote to override the veto on Thursday.

While all that left time for the administration forces to work on Republican senators they were not able to sway a single vote. When the new vote was taken on Thursday, Sanford voted to override. The switched vote was enough and the highway bill became law.

By then the Republicans who supported the president were furious and Sen. Helms and Gov. Martin had their say about Sanford. Even worse from a Democratic freshman senator's standpoint, it is likely that Sanford had lost clout with his own party leadership, as well as with his constiuency. The veteran senators can't imagine getting caught in such a position.

There was, of course, plenty to be unhappy about in the highway bill. North Carolina receives too little in relation to what it pays. We had objections to the 65 mile per hour speed limit provision which is included. Even if the bill were redrawn, however, nothing might have been done to correct these objections.

Sen. Sanford was caught in a poor strategic position from which there was no escape. He shouldn't have allowed himself to be backed into a corner. Granted he is a freshman senator, but he also has been governor of North Carolina and president of Duke University. He is not a freshman politician.

There can be little doubt that the incident has reduced Sen. Sanford's standing with his fellow senators. It is, however, still early in his six year term. In the months ahead if Sen. Sanford can show himself to be effective in the United States Senate he can erase the memories of the highway bill.

An Update On The Narcissistic Redbird

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

Last week I wrote about the cardinal which had discovered its reflection in the bumper of my auto. The bird appeared early one morning and pranced up and down in front of the car, occasionally flying up to bumper height to admire its reflection in the chrome bumper.

It turned out it wasn't a one-time occasion. The bird was back the next morning and has been at the car virtually everyday since. Now it has discovered a handy perch underneath the headlight. It peers and pecks at the headlight lens either admiring itself, or else falling in love with the image it sees, thinking it is another bird.

So far it has been harmless to the car. I can't say the same for the bird.

The compulsion is worsening. Now the bird is in the area awaiting the car's arrival home each day. Once the humans clear the area the cardinal flies to the headlight of the vehicle where it admires itself until dark — and starting today there is even more time in the afternoon for self admiration.

I really don't mind the bird being there ... I just wonder if it needs a pyschiatrist.

The traffic control lights proliferate around the city — and they become more complex.

Installations are under way at the intersection of U.S. 13-North Greene Street and Greenfield Terrace. There is also a new light on Memorial Drive at the intersection with County Club Drive.

A number of traffic controls have been upgraded along Tenth Street to provide for left turns and a traffic control has been revised at Hooker Road to provide controls for the new Hilton entrance.

Since most of the controls are on multi-laned roads a light is required for each lane along with left turn signals which sometimes include yellow caution lights.

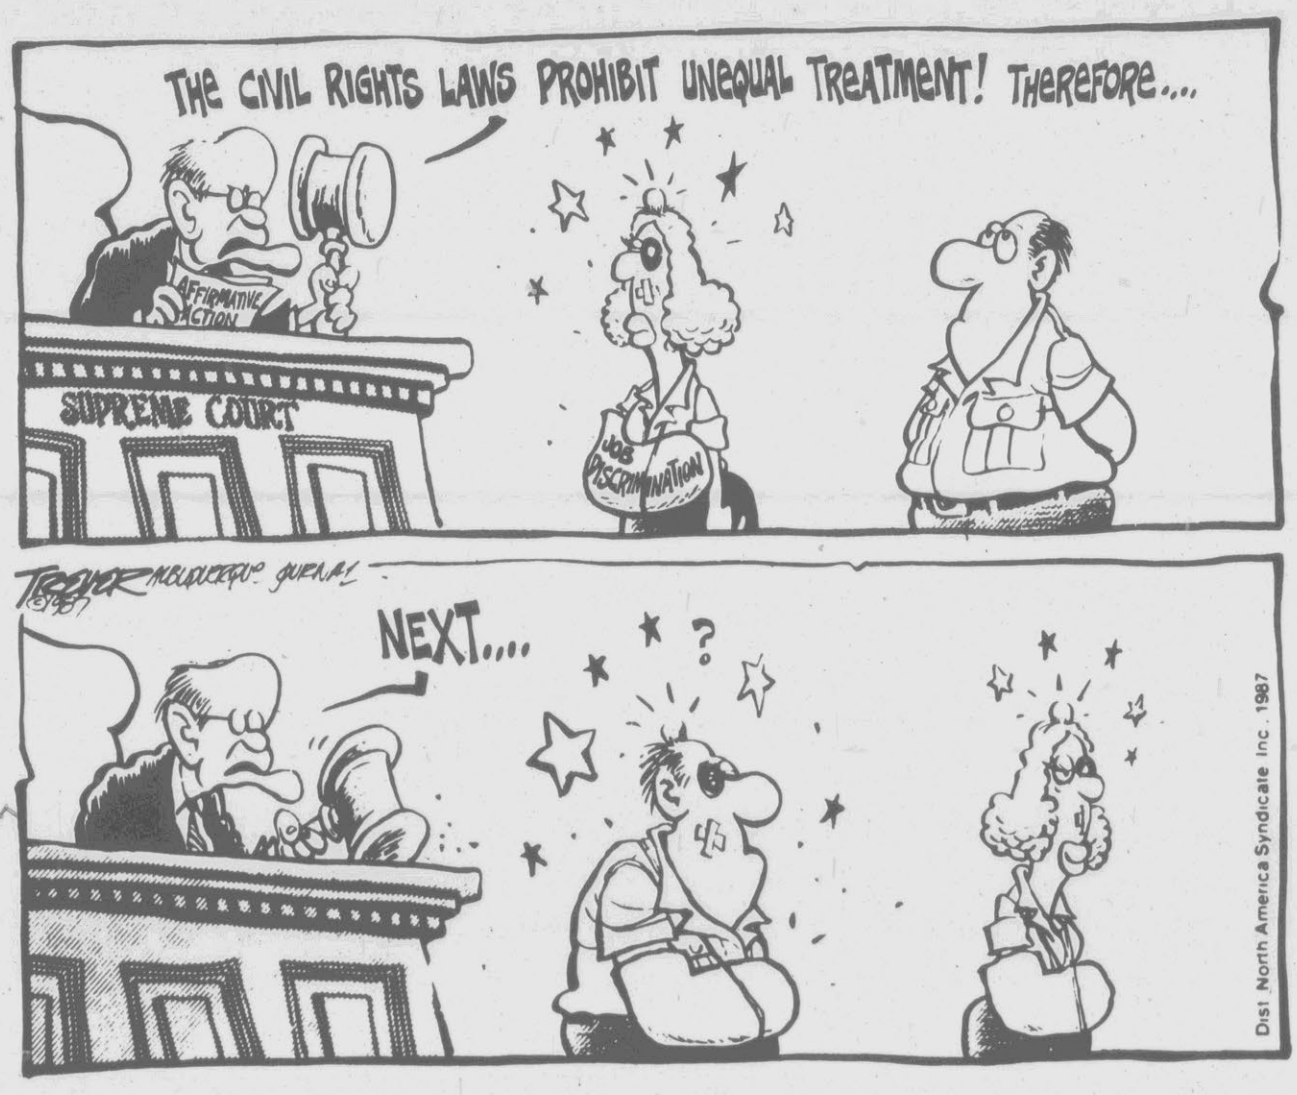
On North Greene and North Memorial Drive there are even electronic signs which flash on to warn that a turn cannot be made because a train is approaching. And, of course the traffic controls now range out as far as Bells Fork, and the Tar Road intersection at Cannons Cross Roads.

Traffic builds and the number of traffic light controlled intersections just increase, too.

The city's newest fire station continues to take shape at the intersection of Red Banks Road and Charles Boulevard.

The building will be impressive enough and at such a busy intersection, it will obviously be seen by most motorists over a period of time.

City officials say that getting the fire engines out at peak traffic times won't be a problem. Nevertheless, some sidewalk superintendents still wonder how the trucks will get out when traffic backs up in all four directions.



Thatcher's Visit Tested Limits Of Glasnost

William J. Eaton & Tyler Marshall

MOSCOW — At home she's been called Attila the Hen, the Witch of Westminister and the Iron Lady. Now, in the wake of a five-day trip that smashed the usual protocol for visiting dignitaries, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has some startled Soviet officials ready to agree with those labels.

Even so, her visit set a new standard for Western leaders to follow on future Moscow trips and certainly delighted her host, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

While Thatcher helped her own reelection chances by campaigning from the Kremlin, she also gave a strong blessing to the changes Gorbachev has introduced — in contrast to more guarded appraisals in Washington.

Gorbachev, for his part, extended the concept of glasnost, or openness, by allowing Thatcher to express on Soviet television one of the toughest critiques of Moscow's nuclear policy ever heard here.

He and Thatcher spent nine hours in conversation during her visit, or as much time as he talked with President Reagan at the summit meeting in Reykjavik, Iceland, last October.

Both British and Soviet aides said the 56-year-old Communist and the 61-year-old shopkeeper's daughter have a special "chemistry" that keeps their strong opinions from turning into rancor.

Ironically, the concrete results of her trip were minimal. A London-Moscow hotline was upgraded, bilateral cultural agreements were signed and it was noted that Anglo-Soviet trade may expand somewhat.

But the style and content of her talks with Gorbachev and the itinerary she fashioned may make Thatcher's approach a model for any Western leader's future dealings with Moscow.

These were notable elements of her trip:

—Instead of smoothing over differences in classic diplomatic style, Thatcher made it plain in a banquet speech, a news conference and an extraordinary appearance on Soviet television that she, and other Western leaders, have basic differences with Soviet policy and then explained why.

—Lunching with Andrei D. Sakharov, a human rights champion, and Josef Begun, a leading Jewish dissident, she dramatized Western concern for those who have been jailed or exiled for their beliefs. Sakharov recently was released from seven years in internal exile, and Begun was let out of prison in late February.

—While visiting the spiritual center of the Russian Orthodox Church at nearby Zagorsk, another site chosen for its symbolic importance, Thatcher lit a candle for "peace, with justice and freedom." It was a theme she sounded often during her trip.

—Finally, she attempted without complete success to break through the protective shell that Soviet officials try to provide for visiting leaders. She waded into crowds, visited a grocery store and paid a call on a Soviet household, although the store and the family were carefully chosen in advance.

For his part, Gorbachev demonstrated that he is willing to listen — and allow the Soviet people to listen — to differing views on such vital topics as nuclear deterrence, space-based defense systems and medium-range missiles in Europe.

Georgi Arbatov, director of the Institute for U.S.A. and Canada, appeared almost stunned as he described to a British television station his impressions on Thatcher's performance.

"She was welcomed, generally, and she's bright and clever, but I have heard from simple people that they were appalled by her nuclear (deterrence) policies," Arbatov said. "She believes in them fanatically, like a religious person. If we were to think in the same way, it would open up the way to a holocaust."

Arbatov, known for his drumfire of denunciations of Reagan, contended that Thatcher is even more hawkish than the American leader.

"I thought I would never have to say it, but I think Reagan is more forward-looking and more realistic than Mrs. Thatcher," Arbatov added. "He has an understanding that humanity and America can't live forever under nuclear weapons." The senior Kremlin adviser said, however, that Thatcher's long talks with Gorbachev might prove helpful, noting: "Maybe what she has heard here will change her mind."

There were other signs, however, that unofficial Soviet reaction was not quite so harsh. A large, friendly crowd turned out to see Thatcher in Tbilisi on the final day of her trip. Her appearance on Soviet television was widely discussed, and ordinary citizens seemed to respect her forceful, even blunt, way of speaking.

"I do not think there has ever been such a thorough discussion between two leaders," Thatcher said after her seven hours of formal talks and two hours of dinner conversation with Gorbachev.

"Sometimes when you are talking to leaders, you get rather stilted or formal discussions — we did not." But it was Thatcher's remarks on Soviet military power — usually a taboo subject in the controlled media here — that must have startled regular TV viewers.

"There are more nuclear weapons in the Soviet Union than in any other country in the world," she said. "You have more intercontinental ballistic missiles and warheads than the West. You started intermediate (range) nuclear weapons — we did not have any. You have more short-range (weapons) than we have. You have more than anyone else, and you say there is a risk of a nuclear accident."

Thatcher, who still retains the mannerisms of a schoolmarm, hushed her Soviet interrogators as they tried to object to her statements. She was providing Soviet citizens with the kind of information that Moscow usually jams if it is broadcast by Western radio stations, such as the Voice of America.

On the subject of chemical weapons, which the Soviet Union has said it is trying to eliminate, she also spoke bluntly:

"We in Great Britain abolished our chemical weapons — we destroyed them towards the end of the 1950s — so we have not got any.

"The United States did not modernize hers, but the Soviet Union not only has them but has modernized them and has a large stockpile," she said. "You can imagine this gives us cause for great concern."

As for Gorbachev's drive to abolish nuclear weapons by the year 2000, Thatcher said she sympathized with the idea but found it impractical.

To the editor:

Ann Simo and Becky Davis presented a letter to the editor concerning the County Position Statement which they say "promised" them family grandfathering as a condition of merger. They pointed out that the position paper stated: "That, in anticipation of consolidation of the two school systems, attendance lines would be Grandfathered for current students and future children of families in the Winterville and Belvoir schools until graduation." They suggested that the citizens of Greenville "either were misinformed" or "did not comprehend the fact" that there would not be merger unless these conditions were met.

"Due to space allowed," they did not include the second half the above paragraph, which continues: "However, beginning with the 1985-86 school year, attendance lines for students moving into existing subdivisions would be changed as follows: Tucker Estates, Westhaven, Club Pines, Belvedere, Lynndale, Cambridge, Pinewood Forest, Yorktown Square, and Courtney Square to Greenville Township Attendance Area." Also, "Assign students moving into future subdivisions, trailer parks or residences North of Secondary Road 1708 (Cannon's Crossroads) between N.C. 13 and N.C. 43- as well as "East of Secondary Roads 1440 to 1415 to N.C. 13 to the Greenville Township schools."

The grandfathering "promised" Winterville has been extended to cover not only "students and future children of families in ... school," but now also families "currently residing in reassigned attendance areas," adding many families not originally covered. In addition, students residing in rapidly developing areas, which it was "promised" would be added to Greenville beginning in 85-86, have remained in Winterville's district and will now also be grandfathered, furthering the racial imbalance between Greenville and Winterville — which merger was supposed to reduce.

How can anyone justify extending the "promises" to Winterville, while denying and diluting the "promises" to Greenville? The blatant favoritism exhibited in our new grandfathering clause and the selective "promise keeping" that it represents are neither fair nor ethical and should not exist!

Lane Hartley

To the editor:

In reference to the recent upset victory by local concerned citizens for conservative leadership within our Republican Party, I say, "Thanks, Silent Majority, for standing up and being counted. Your voice was indeed heard, as evidenced by the ousted leadership's groans, of late, in this press."

In view of this, thoughts come to mind like, "poor losers," and "if I can't play the game by my rules, I'll take my ball and go home," or "you cheated." All are feelings that just reflect one thing — somebody didn't get what they wanted.

Disappointments are interesting little blocks along the road of life. Depending on our attitude (or motive), they are either stumbling blocks which lead to our fall, or they are stepping stones which bring us to greater heights of achievement.

The real question here is motive. Who wants what for whom and for what reason? For whatever reasons, in view of the recent negative statements made by the previous leadership, it's quite evident that the area that needs the most work is party unity. For example, Mr. Zallen in Tuesday's paper certainly added a new definition to the words, "political extremists" by calling the conservative majority who were there to vote and win on a conservative platform, extremists. I think this gives us all a pretty good idea of just how far to the left our party has drifted in the past two years.

I say it's time to bury the hatchet, stand behind and work with our new elected leadership. We need to get on with party business, to provide the people of Pitt County an active, positive and unified Republican Party. We must put forth conservative candidates who will stand on the issues and give the voters a genuine alternative in the next election.

Richard Jennings,
GOP Executive Committee member

Fur Flies As Tuitions Rise

Lee Mitgang

NEW YORK (AP) — As Education Secretary William J. Bennett recently put it, many of the nation's colleges are "at it again."

The "it" in question is the trend, six years long and counting, of colleges announcing tuition increases way above the overall inflation rate.

What makes this year's tuition debate different, and more bitter, is Bennett entering the fray, railing about how higher education "is not underfunded. It is under-accountable and under-productive."

Fueling Bennett's skepticism was a Carnegie Foundation report last fall concluding, in sum, that colleges like our grade schools are "troubled" institutions, "more successful in credentialing than in providing a quality education."

The University of Chicago has announced that next fall's tuition and fees, room and board will increase 6.1 percent to $17,034. Harvard announced a 5.9 percent hike to $17,100, while Cornell will charge $16,320, a 6 percent increase. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology's costs will rise 5.1 percent to $16,970. Rollins College in Winter Park, Fla., upped its rate by 11 percent to $13,295. Washington University in St. Louis boosted its fees by 7 percent to $15,568.

Bennington College, perennially the nation's tuition pacesetter, will increase its total bill by $1,000 to $17,990 for next fall's freshmen.

The increases are the smallest in years, averaging around 6 percent, and colleges say that's good news.

But tuition increases are still running far ahead of the nation's inflation rate, a mere 1.1 percent as measured by the Consumer Price Index in 1986, and less than 2 percent the year before.

"Here's my bottom line," Bennett said in a telephone interview. "If I felt better about what we were getting for the (tuition) dollar, I wouldn't complain so much."

Deputy Under Secretary Bruce M. Carnes expanded his boss's charge:

"If colleges could prove that you get more value for the higher tuitions, fine," he said. "But very few places are willing to prove that. They just keep raising prices because they can. And when you question it, they come back with a superior and belittling response, like, 'Your question just proves how ignorant you are. You can't put a price tag on knowledge. No expense is too great.'"

"In that sense," said Carnes, "they intimidate people."

In reply, college presidents have lately written innumerable letters to editor and op-ed columns reiterating that (1) faculty salaries lost ground in the inflationary 1970s, (2) buildings are crumbling, (3) library books cost more than ever, (4) tuition isn't taking a bigger percentage bite out of disposable income than in years past, and (5) it is naive to suggest that colleges could do more to cut costs.

"Why don't we produce a more cost-effective budget?" asked Washington College president Douglass Cater in a March 16 op-ed piece in The New York Times. "To ask this question is slightly equivalent to asking why Chopin did not pare his 'Minute Waltz' to 50 seconds or so."

Bennett's criticisms have rattled even his supporters.

"I'm a Republican from the word go, but what Bennett is saying just isn't so," said George M. Harmon, president of Millsaps College in Jackson, Miss., one of the top liberal arts colleges in the South and often cited as a "best buy" with a total student tab of less than $10,000 for next fall.

"The price of college has gone up," he said, "because more is demanded of them than 20 years ago. We have air-conditioned dorms that we wouldn't have dreamed of. We have job placement centers. We have career counseling."

Shortly after announcing a 5.9 percent rise in student costs to $16,918 for the 1987-88 academic year, Princeton University officials invited a small group of education reporters for an extraordinary, day-long explanation of their tuition decisions.

The Princetonians were indeed persuasive on one point: excellence costs. Still, one might quibble over whether full Princeton professors, already paid an average of $63,000, would really flee for greener corporate pastures if they didn't receive subsidized housing, or whether all Princeton employees from the janitors on up should get $4,000 per year for any child attending any college.

Such quibbles aside, even some college officials themselves concede that market forces are at least as important as institutional costs in understanding why tuitions have soared.

The questions that often count most are: what is our competition doing, what does our tuition say about our image, and what will the market bear?

"Premise: the more expensive we get, the more popular we are," crowed a press release from Bowdoin College of Brunswick, Me., which stated that freshman applications were up 31 percent despite student fee increases of 32 percent over the last four years.

"Coincidence?" it continued. "Probably. Oversimplification? Certainly. But at a time when Secretary Bennett contradictorily calls for an increase in quality and an end to tuition increases, those figures may say something about what's going on out there. And that is, simply, that the American public cares about quality and is willing to pay for it (even to go into debt for it)."

Tigris, Euphrates, And All That

James Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — Let us hear it for Bill Bradley, the senior senator from New Jersey! The hooray is not for his prospective candidacy for the White House, though the Democrats couldn't do much better. Neither is this a cheer for his uncommon good sense in matters of taxation. Let's hear it for Bradley's resolution to declare "Geography Awareness Week."

That's right. The long tall gentleman from Denville wants to set aside the week of November 15-21 to direct national attention toward the revival of a subject that has all but disappeared from most of our public schools. He came to the floor of the Senate on March 17 loaded with depressing news.

He cited, by way of example, a survey taken in January of 5,000 high school seniors in eight major cities. Brace yourself. Twenty-five percent of the students tested in Dallas could not identify the country that borders the United States on the south. In Boston, 39 percent of the students could not name the six New England states.

Brace yourself again. In Baltimore, 45 percent of those tested could not respond correctly to this instruction: "On the attached map, shade in the area where the United States is located." Nearly half of the students in Hartford could not name even three countries in Africa. Forty percent of those in Kansas City could not name three countries in South America.

Bradley had another survey, this one taken by the University of North Carolina in 1984. This was a survey not of high school seniors, but of college students. Fewer than half of them, when asked to identify the two largest states, could name Texas and Alaska. Almost 80 percent couldn't think of the two smallest states.

The senator had even gloomier tidings to report. He cited two surveys by The New York Times, one taken in 1950, the other in 1984. Thirty-seven years ago, 84 percent of the college students knew that Manila was the capital of the Philippines. In 1984, only 27 percent responded correctly. Almost 70 percent of these students could not name even one country in Africa between the Sahara and South Africa. The situation grows worse, not better.

Said Bradley: "This news is not only shocking; it is frightening. We depend on a well-informed populace to maintain the democratic ideals which have made our country great. When 95 percent of some of our brightest college students cannot locate Vietnam on a world map, we must sound the alarm. We cannot expect to be a world leader if our populace doesn't even know who the rest of the world is!"

Amen to all that, and again, amen. Fifty or 60 years ago, when some of us were ploughing through the public schools, we got great chunks of geography. We had whole books on the subject — fascinating books, filled with pictures of exotic lands. We learned about the Tigris and the Euphrates, about rice in China and coffee in Brazil and windmills in the Netherlands. We colored maps. For some reason, France was always blue. The first time I flew to Paris, and looked out the window, I confidently expected to see an azure landscape down below. It was mostly green, which was the color for Peru.

As I recall, we concentrated at one point on North America. This must have been about the fifth grade. The textbook offered Mexicans in serapes and sombreros, Eskimos in fur hats beside improbable igloos. We had to memorize the state capitals, and some of these were tough. Remembering the capitals of Washington, Kentucky and North Dakota wasn't easy.

Geography was a wonderful subject! I don't know that we ever got deeply into economic geography, but we learned a good deal about people and places. Some of it was trivial: Name a mountainous country famed for yodeling. Some of it made an impact: Why is the Mississippi muddy, and what does this tell us of soil erosion?

Bradley is right when he warns that the decline of geography in our schools will have serious consequences in years to come. The globe dwindles. The planet shrinks. I was 6 years old when Lindbergh flew to France. It seemed an unbelievable adventure. Now the unbelievable becomes routine. Satellites and supersonic planes have turned strangers into neighbors. Our children and grandchildren ought to get to know them better.

Bradley's awareness week may gut no more attention than most of the special weeks beloved of Congress, but if his resolution prompm evena few sxates into restoring geography to its old eminence, the effort will be worthwhile. What are the principal crops of Mexico? If our kids don't know, they ought to find out.

Egypt's Displeasure With United States Is Growing

Robert E. Hunter

CAIRO, Egypt — The eighth anniversary of the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel passed last week with barely a murmur in Cairo, and that is bad news for the Reagan administration.

Many Egyptians, in and out of government, are still sore about the price that they paid to get the Sinai back from Israel. They blame the United States for ignoring the peace process, for not controlling Israel, for not giving Egypt a sufficient "peace dividend" — for, instead, loading the country with debt — and for showing contempt for Egyptian feelings. The U.S.-Egyptian honeymoon is over, and America's primacy in the region is no longer assured.

Those harsh judgments are seldom heard in Washington. But they are expressed here frequently and intensely, even by the most pro-American Egyptians.

Some of the criticisms have a long history and must be placed in perspective. A constant theme, that Israel has undue influence on the United States, is exaggerated. It is also easier to cite Israel's failings than to chastise fellow Arabs for lack of courage and initiative in trying to break the Middle East logjam. There is, however, substance to Egypt's indictment of the United States for failing to take an active role in peacemaking in the region during most of the last six years.

It is not only that the United States has failed to help redeem the moral debt that Egypt incurred to other Arabs by making a separate peace with Israel. There is also the practical fact of Egypt's continuing political and economic isolation in the Arab world, although some Arab states have begun to relent because of the need to have Egypt in the balance against Iran.

The economic pinch is particularly acute because of the fall in oil prices. Remittances sent home by Egyptian workers in the Persian Gulf area have dropped, several hundred thousand workers have returned to Egypt and unemployment, and Suez Canal revenues are down. Terrorism, meanwhile, has cost Egypt critical tourism dollars.

In Egypt's view, reward has turned to burden, the euphoria of making peace has turned to dust. Cairo is now pressing Washington to reduce the crippling debt incurred when U.S. economic and military aid shot up in the wake of the peace treaty. But, under Gramm-Rudman restraints, Washington reached its limit just as Egypt was making new demands.

The last straw for the Egyptians was discovering the insensitivity of their new-found American friends. No one here has forgotten that the United States forced down an Egyptian airliner carrying the Achille Lauro hijackers. Egypt expected to be thanked for ending the hostage crisis aboard the cruise ship; instead, it was humiliated for U.S. domestic reasons. More recently, the sale of U.S. arms to Iran undercut Egyptian faith in U.S. probity. Last week, Egypt's foreign minister, Esmat Abdel Meguid, took the diplomatically unusual step of expressing satisfaction that John M. Poindexter and Oliver L. North have been replaced by more able officials.

Much of the Egyptian grumbling can be put down to the development of a relationship with the United States that is close enough to focus on talk about problems rather then ritualistic confessions of friendship. And leaders in Washington can argue that Egypt has nowhere else to go. They are right, in the sense that no one here wants Egypt again to be a client of the Soviet Union. But they are wrong in believing that Egypt can be taken for granted or its frustrations ignored.

Now there are two ominous portents. The United States is deeply dependent on the use of Egyptian military bases to move forces, if need be, to the Persian Gulf area. Officials in Cairo are making pointed statements about national sovereignty, and are suggesting that military facilities might not always be available.

More important, Egypt is pressing for an international conference on the Arab-Israel conflict. On the surface, the conference is represented as a way to break the diplomatic standoff. Egypt is working with Israel's Labor Party and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres against the Likud bloc and Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, for whom such a conference is anathema.

Washington represents the conference as a cosmetic cover for direct talks between Israel and both Jordan and the Palestinians. By that theory, the Syrians and the Soviets would be invited to the opening ceremonies and then quietly shunted aside. A senior Egyptian official is much more candid: The conference is designed precisely to bring the Soviet Union back into the Arab-Israeli diplomatic game. Egypt's reasoning is simple. The United States has had eight years to follow up on the peace treaty, and has failed to do so. For Cairo to try playing the superpowers against one another probably would not work the way it did in the 1950s and '60s, but being in the embrace of the United States has certainly proved stifling.

Perhaps the Reagan administration is comfortable with Moscow's being invited to the Middle East bargaining table. Perhaps it sees Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev as committed to helping resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict. Perhaps it will prove able to manage the complex diplomatic maneuvering that would attend an international peace conference. Perhaps.

More likely, the administration is waking up to what its six years of neglecting the pursuit of peace in the Middle East have done to the United States' long-term interests in the region.

Ceramics Study

Art enrichment students at Third Street School recently completed a unit on ceramics.

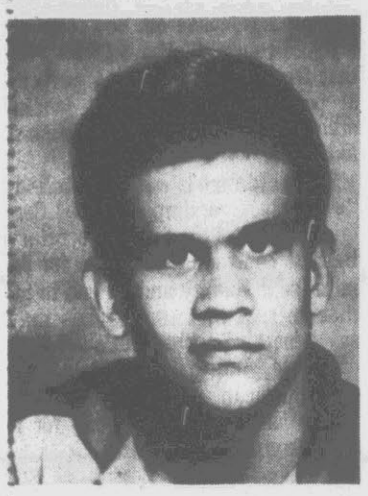
The kindergarten students made pinch pots. The first-grade students studied farm animals, then drew them and formed them of clay. The second- and third-grade classes chose dinosaurs as their subjects. They first drew them, then created three-dimensional models and then formed them of clay. All students' work was fired and glazed.

The art enrichment classes give the students the opportunity to explore a medium such as clay that they would be unable to use in a regular class period. The class is under the direction of art teacher Kim Stokes.

First Place

Kyle Hudson, a senior at D.H. Conley High School, recently won first place in the state Dickens Disciples essay contest. He is the son of Susan Drye and J.H. Hudson.

In May, he will be honored at a banquet in Raleigh. The contest is sponsored by the Dickens Disciples of Raleigh.



KYLE HUDSON

District Meeting

The board of supervisors, Pitt Soil and Water Conservation District, will meet at 9 a.m. Monday at the district office located in the Federal Building, 215 S. Evans St., Greenville.

Authority Meets

The Greenville Parking Authority will hold its regularly scheduled monthly meeting Wednesday at 9:15 a.m. in the third floor conference room of City Hall, at 201 W. 5th Street.

Seniors Meet

The Southside Senior Citizens Club will meet Monday at 2 p.m. at The South Greenville Recreation Center.

Scholarship

Mary Jo Harris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C.J. Harris of Greenville, has been awarded a Scott-Ellis Scholarship by Campbell University.

Bank Gift

Planters Bank has presented a $1,000 check to Dr. Angelo A. Volpe, vice chancellor of academic affairs at East Carolina University, for the school's Center of Applied Technology.

The total gift is $3,000 and will be paid in yearly installments.

Circus Visit

The kindergarten and first-grade classes at Stokes Elementary School recently attended the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus in Raleigh.

Finalist

Angela Wilson of Ayden, a senior at Ayden-Grifton High School, is one of 500 finalists in The Jostens Foundation Leader Scholarship program.

A total of 250 scholarships worth $1,000 each will be given. Selection of the winners is based on achievement in school and community activities, leadership experience and academic excellence.

Leadership

Jennifer Tripp, a student at the N.C. School of Science and Math, recently attended the Converse Leadership Program at Converse College, Spartanburg, S.C.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Graydon W. Tripp of Winterville.

The weekend conference featured leadership skills training and personal development workshops for 150 high school juniors from nine southeastern states. Program participants were nominated by their school principals based on proven leadership ability and strong academic performance.

Auto Contest

William Everett and Stacy Bowen, both students at Roanoke High School in Robersonville, will compete in the finals of the North Carolina Plymouth-AAA Trouble Shooting Contest in Charlotte April 29.

Teams will be scored on the length of time it takes them to correctly diagnose and repair deliberately induced mechanical problems in 10 automobiles.

The 10 finalist teams defeated teams from 51 other schools across the state in order to compete in the contest. Winning teams and their instructors will compete in the national finals in Washington in June.

Second Place

Michelle Gray, a sophomore at J.H. Rose High School, received second place in the District I Future Homemakers of America Proficiency Event held recently in Belhaven.

Other district winners from Rose were junior Renee Edison and sophomore Tissaupuella White, who earned third-place awards.

Workshop

The Greenville City Council will conduct a workshop at 5:45 p.m. Monday in the third floor conference room of City Hall to discuss the agenda for Thursday night's meeting.

The council will also discuss an amended budget request by the Greenville Museum of Art Inc.

Quarterly Meeting

Quarterly Meeting Services will begin at the Little Creek United American Free Will Baptist Church, Route 1, Ayden, Friday and Saturday.

Saturday night the Rev. Willie Joyner from Moye's Chapel will be the speaker. Sunday services will begin at 10:45 a.m. with Elder Tyrone Turnage in charge.

At 3 p.m. Bishop Steven Jones and the Haddock Chapel Church will close out the services.

Fund-Raiser

A fund-raising project, "The Magic Circle," for the Greenville Exchange Club will be held May 22 at 7 p.m. at J.H. Rose High School.

Bob Kenney and Nikki, a husband and wife magic act, and Ricki Dunn, comic and "pickpocket," are scheduled to perform at the fund-raiser.

Census Survey

The Census Bureau will collect data on labor force status and housing vacancies from area residents April 20-25, according to William Hill, director of the bureau's Charlotte regional office.

The Census Bureau's monthly Current Population Survey includes a national sample of some 57,000 households and is sponsored by the Bureau of Labor Statistics primarily to gather employment and unemployment data.

The local labor force data will contribute to April's employment and unemployment picture to be released May 8 by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The Housing Vacancy Survey, which is conducted in conjunction with the Current Population Survey, is sponsored by the Census Bureau. Second quarter housing vacancy data will be released by the bureau on July 28.

Three Pitt Students Named ECU University Scholars

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Three Pitt County high school students have been named University Scholars at East Carolina University.

Jamie Moore and Lynn Worley, both seniors at J.H. Rose High School, and Melilssa Rose, a senior at Ayden-Grifton High School, were selected to receive scholarships for four years of study at the university.

Other students selected as University Scholars are Jennifer Bennett of Fuquay-Varina, Patricia Jones of Kinston, Scotty Law of Graham and Wendy Watts of Rocky Mount.

The seven students were selected from nearly 120 applicants from across the nation who were nominated for the full tuition and expense scholarships recognizing academic scholarship and leadership potential.

Miss Moore, the daughter of Marsha T. More of Greenville, is ranked first in her class of 375 at Rose. She wants to pursue a career in pediatric medicine.

She served as a class marshal and is a member of the National Honor Society. She is president of the National Honorary Spanish Society and is president of the Rose High Spanish Club.

JAMIE MOORE

She attended Tar Heel Girls State and Governor's School West, where she received the Top 10 athletic trophy. She was the recipient of the Woodmen of the World American History Trophy and received a Spanish medal as a junior.

A participant in Executive Internship at Rose, she works 10 hours to 15 hours a week after class for Dr. David Porretta in adapted physical education at ECU.

A member of St. Peter's Catholic Church, she is an assistant teacher of junior class religious education and plays the guitar in a church folk group.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Scott Worley, Miss Worley is a member of the National Honor Society and served as a class marshal.

She is secretary of the Mu Alpha Theta Math Club and is a member of the school Quiz Bowl team and International Club. She is a member of the Rose High Academic Decathlon Team which took state honors.

She was elected a senator at Girl's State and has been listed in "Who's Who Among American High School Students" for two years. She received the Woodmen of the World American History Trophy and the Danforth Leadership Award.

She has served as a teen leader and club president of 4-H. She was the junior director of the State 4-H Clothing Camp. She was the 1984 State Sewing Demonstration winner and the 1986 National 4-H Clothing Project winner. She was a delegate to the National 4-H Congress and was tapped into the North Carolina 4-Honor Club.

She is a member of St. James Methodist Church.

Miss Rose, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Rose of Grifton, was chief academic marshal and is a member of the National Honor Society. She participated in Project Exodus, Governor's School, the Broyhill Leadership Conference and the ECU Scholars Weekend.

She was valedictorian of the eigth-grade graduating class and was vice president of the National Junior Honor Society.

She earned first-place awards in the district Future Business Leaders of American Typing I and Typing II competitions and received second-place awards on the state level in those competitions. She has received Certificates of Merit for Scholastic Achievement in geometry, advanced math, accounting, typewriting, English and biology and Certiciates of Merit for Personal Achievement in health and physical education, algebra and chemistry.

She was included on the state honor roll for the annual High School Mathematics Examination and was awarded a University of North Carolina at Greensboro Alumni Scholarship.

She has served as president of the Future Business Leaders of America and is a member of National Honor Society, the Math Team, the Key Club, the Quiz Bowl team. She has served as secretary and vice president of the Ayden-Grifton Task Force and is editor of the school yearbook.

She has served as a volunteer with the Pitt County Bloodmobile, Special Olympics, Lenoir Memorial Hospital and the Ayden-Grifton Horse Show. She has participated in the March of Dimes Type-a-thon.

She was selected as the outstanding teen-ager by the faculty of Ayden-Grifton.

Warren Bill Seeks Funding For Teacher Education Plan

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Rep. Ed Warren, D-Pitt, has filed a bill in the state House of Representatives asking for funding to implement the recommendations from a task force of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors to strengthen teacher education.

"I feel that this is a good start for improving the teacher education program in North Carolina," Warren said. "Hopefully, it will also encourage more high caliber college students to choose teaching as a vocation."

A companion bill has been introduced in the Senate by Sen. Marvin Ward, D-Forsyth. Warren and Ward both served on the task force.

Warren's bill, which was submitted Thursday, directs the Board of Governors and the constituent institutions of the UNC system and the State Board of Education to implement the 1987-89 plans for the preparation of teachers as identified in the report titled "The Education of North Carolina Teachers."

The study was completed by the task force and the report was given to the members of the 1987 N.C. General Assembly.

The 1985 General Assembly created the task force and directed its members to study ways of upgrading teacher preparation programs to make the course of study more rigorous and effective, and standards for institution-based innovative and experimental programs.

The task force was also asked to study standards for implementing consortium-based teacher education, standards for improved efficiencies in the administration of teacher education programs and areas of potential teacher shortage and oversupply in the next 10 years.

The 1985 General Assembly directed that the recommendations in the final report include a proposed plan for phasing in the implementation of the teacher preparation program over three fiscal bienniums.

Under Warren's bill, $2,000,500 would be appropriated from the General Fund to the State Board of Education for the 1987-88 fiscal year and $5,330,000 for the 1988-89 fiscal year.

The appropriations would be used to fund task force recommendations of reforming of teacher education programs, quality assurance program improvements, teacher certification and program approval, continuing professional education and coordination, incentive programs to attract and retain teachers, and a school-college partnership.

The bill also calls for the appropriation of $1,435,000 from the General Fund to the Board of Governors of the University of North Carolina for 1987-88 fiscal year and $2,485,000 for the 1988-89 fiscal year.

From the amounts, the Board of Governors would allocate to the constituent institutions of the University of North Carolina $1,030,000 in the 1987-88 fiscal year and $1,530,000 in the 1988-89 fiscal year, according to the bill.

The Board of Governors would be directed to use $405,000 in 1987-88 and $955,000 in 1988-89 for program implementation.

House Passes Jones' Truth In Labeling Bill

The N.C. House of Representatives — by a margin of 105-3 — has passed a Truth in Labeling for Political Committees bill introduced by Rep. Walter B. Jones Jr., D-Pitt.

Jones' bill requires that political action committees clearly identify their economic interests in both their names and in any political advertising they sponsor. Current law requires only that media ads bear the name of the sponsor.

The legislation will hopefully be seen by the public as an effort to promote integrity in political campaigns, according to Jones, who said he was pleased with the vote and the support of his colleagues in the House.

"This bill will ensure that the voting public is fully aware of the economic interest of PACs contributing to political candidates," Jones said. "This openness will strengthen the democratic process."

Furthermore, the bill would require that PACs make all contributions using a name that reveals their economic interest or their parent organization and anyone receiving a PAC gift would report the gift using the PACs revealing name.

The Best Way To Raise Some Money Is To Raise The Roof.

You've been pouring money into it for years, so it should come as no surprise — a great place to find some cash is under your own roof. The surprise is that it's money you can use right now.

With an equity line of credit from Barclays Bank, you could qualify for a credit line from $5,000 to as much as $100,000 or more, secured by the equity in your home. And you get it with no origination fee, with monthly payments as low as $50, and a minimum advance as small as $100. Some other closing costs may apply.

That's the good news. Now here's the great news! To the IRS, a home equity loan is a mortgage. So unlike your credit cards and car loans, the interest may still be deductible under the new tax law. And if that doesn't make the roof over your head look like money in the bank, nothing will. Equal Housing Lender

Counties Banding Together To Ease Federal Order

MONROE, N.C. (AP) — Twenty North Carolina counties — including Pitt, Greene and Martin — that are subject to the 1965 Voting Rights Act have joined in an effort to ease what they call the federal law's irritating requirements.

The law requires counties and municipalities to get the approval of the U.S. Justice Department before making changes, such as annexing land, changing the number or term of elected officials and moving precinct lines, polling places or elections offices.

"It's really a pain in the neck to be subject to that," said Union County Elections Board member Ligon Bundy, a Democrat. "We have to get approval before we can sneeze or anything."

The Union County Elections Board on Friday joined the group, which includes Anson, Cumberland, Hoke and 16 eastern counties. Forty North Carolina counties, including Gaston, Edgecombe and Scotland, are under the law. The Justice Department has sued 22 counties, including Anson, Cleveland and Scotland, for making changes in school board voting without getting approval. Justice Department officials expect to settle the case Monday.

Cleveland County Elections Board Chairman Tony Eastman and Secretary Ruth Wilson, both Republicans, launched the push to get Congress to change the rules.

"We decided that the only way to end this injustice of reporting everything to the Justice Department was to make other counties in this similar situation aware that perhaps, together, we could make the necessary 'waves' to change our present position," Eastman wrote to the counties in January.

"We feel that obtaining congressional support to modify some of these overzealous requirements is a reachable goal," he wrote in February.

The group plans to meet in Raleigh in August with Justice Department officials and North Carolina congressmen.

"If we all get together and kind of pool our resources, we might have a little more help with this," Ms. Wilson said.

She said Cleveland County came under the law because fewer than half the registered residents voted in the 1964 election.

"We've paid 20 years for that one election," Wilson said. "It seems like each year we have to clear more. They seem to have been groping out and looking for every little thing."

One county, Swain, got out of the Voting Rights Act's jurisdiction under "bailout" provisions in the 1982 extension of the act.

Justice Department spokeswoman Deborah Burstion-Wade said counties can get out if they have not used discriminatory tests, violated preclearance requirements, required federal observers or lost discrimination suits, and if they have taken steps to increase minority voting in the last 10 years.

The 40 N.C. counties under the Voting Rights Act are Anson, Beaufort, Bertie, Bladen, Caswell, Camden, Chowan, Cleveland, Craven, Cumberland, Edgecombe, Franklin, Gaston, Gates, Granville, Greene, Guilford, Halifax, Hertford, Harnett, Hoke, Jackson, Lee, Lenoir, Martin, Nash, Northampton, Onslow, Pasquotank, Perquimans, Person, Pitt, Robeson, Rockingham, Scotland, Union, Vance, Washington, Wayne and Wilson.

The 22 sued are Anson, Beaufort, Bertie, Camden, Chowan, Cleveland, Craven, Edgecombe, Franklin, Gates, Halifax, Hertford, Hoke, Lee, Nash, Northampton, Perquimans, Rockingham, Scotland, Vance, Washington and Wayne.

The 21 working for change are Anson, Beaufort, Bertie, Caswell, Cleveland, Craven, Cumberland, Edgecombe, Franklin, Gates, Greene, Hertford, Hoke, Lee, Lenoir, Martin, Northampton, Pasquotank, Perquimans, Pitt and Union.

city manager that can help us go from where we are to where we need to be."

"I think Mr. Underwood has quite a bit of experience in organizing such groups for such a decision," Council member Ed Carter said. "I thought the criteria we came up with is quite realistic for our needs in a city manager."

In composing an advertisement for the city manager's job, council members agreed to require "at least five years of experience of local government manager or assistant manager experience" from the new city manager. A preference for candidates with masters' degrees in public administration or related degrees was to be included in the ad.

Following Underwood's recommendation, the council has agreed to begin searching for a staff-resource person from outside city government to facilitate the recruitment process. The volunteer would be used to acknowledge the receipt of each application and assist in eliminating applicants who don't meet minimum requirements.

The council plans to meet with Underwood again on Thursday at 6:30 p.m. to discuss prospective staff-resource candidates.

The full council, with the assistance of the staff-resource person, would then review applications and screen down to five or seven top candidates before initiating interviews.

The selection of a neutral staff-resource person from the private sector is imperative for the search process to be effective, according to Mrs. Fridley.

"The person we work with should be someone all of us can work with and agree upon," she said. "I would hate for that to turn into a partisan issue. I hope that person would be a forward thinking individual who understands the city and its future needs.

"I think we have to have that with a staff person as well as a manager. I think that staff person is a key individual. I'm hoping we select someone that doesn't have any ties to any of us but is recognized as a community leader by a broad segment of population."

Council members must work together for the screening process to work, Hadden said.

"Frankly, Greenville's track record in city managers as far as amount of time served has not been too good," Hadden said. "In my work of 10 years with the city, we've had three city managers.

"It's my hope that our council will show cooperation with the man or woman who will come and a sensitivity not only to his qualities but his needs as a person. The debacle of the last month or so has indeed been distressing to me, and I hope we turn the corner in the council's attitude toward our chief administrator."

Mrs. Shinn said the controversy and heated debate created by Mrs. Meeks' dismissal has left a rift within the council.

"I still sense some hostility, and that's something we've really got to work through," she said.

Meanwhile, Carter said he has no doubt that qualified city manager candidates will want to come to Greenville.

"I feel very confident," Carter said. "I'm quite optimistic that there are capable individuals available and willing to come in and assume the responsibility.

"By virtue of the fact that we are a progressive university and medical community with a diversified economy, that will enhance the attractiveness of the offer. I think we're on our way."

Hardison Deplores 'Partisan Issue'

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Veteran Democratic Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, says he hopes partisan politics which have cropped up over school construction proposals do not interfere with the ratification of the best possible bill.

"I had hoped that this would not get into a partisan fight, but the thing about it is that it looks like it's gotten to that," Hardison said. "This issue is more important than a partisan issue."

Gov. Jim Martin told reporters Tuesday his plan to issue $1.5 billion in bonds to create a fund for building schools, which was unveiled last fall, was ready for introduction into the Legislature and would be sponsored by Hardison and Sen. Paul Smith, R-Rowan. He said the bipartisan support for his plan demonstrated its merit.

However, Hardison, who was attending the Eastern Regional Conference of Teachers of Exceptional Children at the Sheraton Greenville Saturday, said he had not been approached by Martin before the announcement and still planned to file his own bill.

"The governor hadn't spoken to me — nor had any of his people," said Hardison, a possible candidate for lieutenent governor in 1990. "His bill and my bill are similar with two major exceptions — my bill calls for more money and my bill includes community colleges."

Hardison said the inclusion of community colleges in the package is a logical move.

"My theory is if we're going to go with this massive finance program, then we might as well finance all schools," he said. "We appropriate money directly to the (University of North Carolina) Board of Governors to fund and finance higher education like the university system.

"That's a lump sum budget, but for the community colleges and public schools we piecemeal it and it gets some funding from the locals and some funds from the state for capital construction."

After meeting with Hardison Wednesday afternoon, Martin issued a statement saying he and Hardison are "shoulder to shoulder in support of school bond legislation he will introduce this week ..."

Martin said that at Hardison's request, he had altered his bill to allow it to fund community college building projects as well as those for secondary and elementary schools.

Hardison acknowledged that he met with Martin, but said his bill had been ready for introduction for over two weeks.

Meanwhile, Hardison said working together for a strong school construction bill is still essential.

"North Carolina has got to do something about school construction. No question about that," he said. "It is such a massive program and such an expensive program too.

"We need all the help and all the best minds together to accomplish what we need for the children of North Carolina.

"We don't need to get into a political battle," he said. "It's amazing what you can accomplish if you aren't concerned with who gets credit.

it is a tempting topic, it would be like kicking a sick humming bird right now."

Long described a high level of enthusiasm by Democrats across the state. "With work and team efforts we can make '88 our year," he said.

In closing, Long referred to the Democratic Party as "the party of the future." He asked for an increase in Democratic involvement.

"Come home to the party of confidence and unity, come home to the Democratic Party. This state deserves a Democratic governor and this country deserves a Democratic president."

A resolution was brought before the convention to support the increase of the speed limit to 65 mph on some rural North Carolina highways. By a narrow margin, the resolution was approved.

After the resolution the Pitt County Democratic Women, Pitt County Young Democrats, and Pitt County Teen Democrats reported on the year's activities.

Grifton Shad Festival Brings Fun Despite Weather Threat

LIBERTY SHAD — The float illustrating the 1987 Shad Festival's motto "Liberty Shad stands tall for everyone to see. This float was judged the best 1987 theme unit.

LARGE CROWD — A large crowd was on hand for the fun Saturday in Grifton at the Shad Festival despite the cold temperatures. Here young and old alike await eagerly for the next float to come down the street.

Senate Backs English-Only Bill

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Amid jokes and one lawmaker's half-serious effort to debate in Spanish, the state Senate tentatively passed a bill that would make English the official language of North Carolina.

Despite the jocularity, Sen. Franklin Block, D-New Hanover, said Friday his bill was serious and was not intended to make foreigners who don't speak English feel unwelcome in North Carolina.

"Quite the contrary," Block said. "The intent of the bill is to get those people who do come to the state and who are not particularly proficient in the language to learn it as quickly as possible so they can participate in the good things the state has to offer and truly become functioning members of our society."

The bill is not designed to make immigrants forget their native cultures and habits, but "is intended to prevent ... the creation of what has been referred to in other states as the 'linguistics ghetto,'" Block said.

"There exists in this country right now opportunities for children to speak a foreign language in their home, go to school, be taught in that same language ... and never learn to speak English," he said.

"America has always been the great melting pot, but the spoon that has stirred the melting pot into a homogenous whole has been the English language."

Laughter filled the chamber when Sen. William Barker, D-Pamlico, called on Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, who is president of the Senate, for permission to speak.

"Senor presidente," Barker called. He then asked in broken Spanish if Block would accept a question. Block played along, replying "Si," the Spanish word for yes.

Switching to English, Barker noted that in his coastal district, many people speak with an accent influenced by British settlers from the Elizabethan era. "Would your bill affect our cultures and mores?"

Block replied, "I would hope it would not ... although I'm not quite sure what mores they have down there."

On a more serious note, Sen. Bill Martin, D-Guilford, said he wanted time to research any effect the bill might have on education in North Carolina. It was approved tentatively 41-0, but a final vote was postponed until Tuesday.

In other legislative action, the Senate approved 38-0 and sent to the House a bill that would apply the state's laws on cocaine to "crack" and other derivatives of the drug made with synthetic materials such as salt.

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, said the bill was needed because existing law does not apply to all the forms and uses of cocaine that have developed in recent years.

Crack is a highly potent and dangerous, crystalline form of cocaine that is smoked. Law enforcement officials say it appeared on the scene only recently, but has spread rapidly, especially in urban centers.

The bill "is an effort for our law to keep up with science, that's what it boils down to," Barnes said.

It would not change existing prohibitions or penalties involving cocaine use, he said.

A bill that would require health inspections of restaurants at least four times a year was approved by the Senate 37-0 and sent to the House.

The bill was amended to stipulate that the inspections must be on a quarterly basis — at least one every three months.

Sen. Aaron Plyler, D-Union, said the bill would not prevent health department officials from making return inspections to restaurants that are given a grade other than "A" and want a second chance.

Any candidate who loses an election by 1 percent of the vote or less would be granted an automatic recount if he or she wishes under a bill filed by Rep. Bob Hunter, D-McDowell.

The bill, recommended by the Legislature's study commission on election laws, was inspired partly by the 6th District House race between Rep. Howard Coble, R-N.C., and Democrat Robin Britt.

Coble was declared the winner by 79 votes. Britt, claiming that the election was tainted by irregularities, asked for a full recount. The Guilford County Board of Elections and the State Board of Elections granted only a partial recount that did not alter the outcome.

Banks in North Carolina would be closed on Good Friday instead of Easter Monday under a bill filed by Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham.

Western N.C. Hit By Two-Foot Snowfall

By DAVID DROSCHAK
Associated Press Writer

Residents in the North Carolina mountains started digging out from a record spring snowfall that dumped as much as 2 feet of snow in some spots, while 6-foot drifts at Grandfather Mountain closed the gates to nature lovers Saturday.

More than 100 cars were stranded on the road leading to the mountain, where people this time of year usually flock to see rhododendrons, Mildred the bear and the mile-high swinging bridge, said mountain manager Tom Huskins.

Huskins said 19 inches of snow had fallen and drifts at the top of the mountain reached 8 to 10 feet high. He said drifts at the park's entrance were about 6 feet.

"Twelve inches is the most we have ever had in the entire month of April," Huskins said.

Meanwhile, Interstate 40 was still blocked by snow Saturday at the North Carolina-Tennessee border. The state Highway Patrol division in Asheville said the highway may not be opened again until early Sunday as the National Guard has been called in to help clear the road.

About 1,000 motorists were stranded between Asheville and the Tennessee line on I-40, where truckers set up a citizens band hookup that helped a diabetic child get medical attention, said Karen Rotterman, a spokeswoman for Gov. Jim Martin.

Roads in all of the mountain counties were snow-covered and icy, troopers said, but no snow-related traffic deaths have been reported.

The National Weather Service in Raleigh said flurries will continue through Saturday night, along with below-normal temperatures.

"I think when this thing started we knew it would be a major storm," said meteorologist Wayne Jones. "I don't think it was a surprise. Being in April — that part is a surprise. It is certainly a record snowfall in the locations over the mountains."

Jones said most of the stations in the mountains are reporting 12 to 18 inches of snow on the ground, but he said some areas have reported as much as 2 feet on the ground. He said the snow may take some time to melt because temperatures have been running 10 to 20 degrees below normal.

Meanwhile, the Concorde, the world's fastest passenger jet, finally took off Saturday morning after being snowed in Friday at the Asheville Regional Airport, officials said. The airliner's flight to London was delayed more than 24 hours.

About 200 people are still without power after more than 1,200 outages were reported when the storm hit Friday, said Duke Power spokesman Andy Thompson.

The rest of the state was pelted with hard rain Friday night. More than 2 inches of rain fell at Cape Hatteras.

Also along the coast Saturday, gale warnings were posted south of Virginia Beach, Va., to the Albemarle and Pamlico sounds. Southwest winds were reported at 25 to 35 knots and waves near 5 feet, the weather service said.

Bill Makes Records Available To Public

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The biggest problem facing a bill designed to give all North Carolina residents access to state documents may be that few people know about it, officials say.

The bill to establish a depository library system for government publications, sponsored by Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham, and signed by 16 other senators, breezed through the Senate and is in the Appropriations Committee. Royall said it is likely to be incorporated in the spending bill approved at the end of the session.

The depository system will clear up what has been a convoluted and frustrating procedure for getting government information, said Stuart Basefsky, documents librarian at Duke University and a member of the North Carolina Library Association, which pressed for the bill. The wealth of information funneled into local libraries could help everyone from developers to people wondering when a nearby highway will be paved, he said.

"Really, this brings Raleigh to their community," Basefsky said. "That's never been possible before. They've been missing something they never even realized they'd been missing.

"Local governments will be able to compete more effectively economically," he said. "Even large cities like Charlotte have found they are handicapped because they don't get the tourism brochures, the marketing publications produced in Raleigh."

North Carolina is one of only nine states without a working depository and distribution system, Basefsky said.

"Our system is not working," he said. "In 1983-84, 75 percent of state publications were never sent. Eighty percent of state agencies in North Carolina do not comply with the law that asks them to send copies of documents to the state library. Nobody knows what has been published in the state as a result of that."

The bill could help spread the commodity that helped make Research Triangle Park a success — information.

"There you have almost as much information publicly available as you would have in Washington, D.C., but you have fewer people competing for it," Basefsky said.

Mississippi Court Case May Affect N.C. Judicial Elections

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A federal court ruling in Mississippi this week could help the cause of those who are suing North Carolina over the way the state elects its Superior Court judges, a lawyer who is helping with the suit says.

Judge William Barbour ruled in U.S. District Court in Jackson, Miss., that Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 applies to elected judges.

Barbour's ruling came as a result of two lawsuits in Mississippi seeking to abolish at-large elections of judges in multimember districts. Large, multimember districts dilute black voting strength, the suit says.

The Mississippi suit is identical to one filed last fall in North Carolina by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and will very likley help the case made by North Carolina blacks, said C. Allen Foster, their attorney.

"That judge has given us a real boost," Foster said "It's going to have a dramatic impact on our case."

In January, attorneys representing North Carolina filed a motion with U.S. District Judge W. Earl Britt in Raleigh asking that the suit be dismissed. They argued that Section 2 does not apply to judges.

Britt has not yet ruled on the motion. But Foster said that the Mississippi ruling sets a precedent that Britt will likely follow. "Obviously," he said, "we're happy."

Andrew Vanore Jr., a senior deputy attorney general for North Carolina, said that he had not seen the Mississippi ruling and could not comment on it until he had.

The NAACP filed the class-action lawsuit against the state and its Board of Elections on Oct. 2. The suit says that the state's method of electing Superior Court judges is discriminatory and unconstitutional.

Although the state is divided into 30 judicial districts, the election of the Superior Court judges to serve those districts is held statewide. Some of the districts have only one judge; others have as many as five.

The NAACP is asking that districts with moe than one judge be subdivided and that only voters in each district be allowed to vote on the judges serving their district.

Speed Limit Will Hold For Now

RALEIGH (AP) — In North Carolina, at least three bills aimed at raising the speed limit to 65 mph on some highways have been introduced in the General Assembly, but officials say motorists shouldn't count on putting the pedal to the metal soon.

House Speaker Liston Ramsey said he favors letting the state Department of Transportation decide which, if any, North Carolina interstates should have higher speeds.

"I don't feel like we (legislators) are capable ... of deciding which roads are safe," Ramsey said in an interview.

Transportation department spokesman Jim Sughrue said the department "doesn't object to be given the authority" to study the issue. But he added that speed limits "shouldn't be set by the Legislature."

Sughrue said he did not know how long a study would take, but the department would "need to evaluate the whole system."

Although state Transportation Secretary James Harrington has objected in the past to raising the speed limit, Sughrue said, the department would take an objective look at the issue if given the authority.

The federal highway and mass transit bill gives states the option of raising the speed limit on rural interstates to 65 mph. In anticipation of the bill, North Carolina legislators filed bills that would set the wheels in motion.

Two bills, one each in the House and Senate, would give the transportation department authority to decide which to raise.

A third bill, in the Senate, would designate which roads would have the higher speed limit, but that bill faces a tough road since it has neither the support of Ramsey or the Departemnt of Transportation.

Gov. Jim Martin also has opposed raising the speed limit. But his communications director, Karen Hayes Rotterman, said, "I'm sure they will be looking hard at it now."

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan is leaning toward raising the speed limit. But he has not taken a stand on how it should be done, said his policy assistant, Laura Bingham.

Trooper Promoted

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A state Highway Patrol trooper who seized some 10 kilos of cocaine, 500 pounds of marijuana and $600,000 in drug money during drug busts last year has been promoted, officials say.

Terry Lee Isaacs, 33, will report Monday morning for duty as a line sergeant with the Mecklenburg County District of Troop H. Issacs, who joined the Highway Patrol in 1977, received his sergeant's stripes in a promotion ceremony Friday in Raleigh before Secretary of State Thad Eure.

"Isaacs' reputation has spread up and down the busy interstate, and intelligence reports indicate the word among drug dealers from Miami to New York is to either bypass Fayetteville or exercise extreme caution moving narcotics on Interstate 95," Eure said..

Isaacs left the ceremony to out on Interstate 95 for his last tour of duty as a member of the Fayetteville District of Troop B.

Isaacs not only leads the state Highway Patrol in drug seizures, but his confiscations place him above records set by most federal and state drug agents.

Isaacs attended a federal Drug Enforcement Agency training session in early 1986 along with a select group of other troopers and law enforcement officers to learn more about the heavy drug traffic along the East Coast.

Burlington Teacher Best In Nation

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — From a small Southern mill town in the heart of North Carolina, a teacher that students fondly call ''Miss Biology'' has been honored as the National Teacher of the Year.

OLIVER

Donna Hill Oliver, a 13-year veteran of Hugh M. Cummings High School in Burlington, will be recognized in a White House ceremony in late April.

President Reagan will present her with a crystal apple, the traditional symbol of teaching excellence. The awards program is the oldest and most prestigious of its kind to focus public attention on excellence in teaching.

The selection, which was scheduled for a formal announcement in Washington, was released Friday in Good Housekeeping, which sponsored the program along with the Encyclopedia Britannica Companies and the Council of Chief State School Officers.

The other three finalists, selected from all of the elementary and secondary teachers in the United States, were Lois Distad, an elementary teacher from Wyoming; Eliot Wigginton, an English teacher from Georgia, and Susan Leach, a middle school science teacher from Ohio.

Sentence

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A federal court jury has convicted four prisoners for plotting to escape from the Mecklenburg County Jail last summer — an attempt which was foiled when authorities were tipped off.

One of the prisoners, Crescencio Velazquez, also was convicted of bribing a sheriff's deputy to help in the escape. U.S. District Judge Robert Potter sentenced Velazquez to 20 years in prison.

Potter sentenced George Paul Drinkwine, 37, and William Fisk Crutchley, 48, each to eight years in prison. Armando Luis Santieste ban, 33, was sentenced to six years.

Federal and local officers found two hacksaw blades and three bars nearly severed when they cleared a 12-man second-floor cell, after the July 3 attempted jailbreak was discovered.

Meningitis

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The Mecklenburg County medical examiner says an 11-year-old boy who was thought to have been suffering from a case of the flu died from the effects of bacterial meningitis.

Stephone Rodgers died Thursday afternoon after he had been home all week with what appeared to be the flu. His parents, Carolyn and Thomas Rodgers, said they hadn't taken him to a doctor.

"I just took it for the flu," Carolyn Rodgers said.

Mecklenburg County Health Director Basil Delta said he wouldn't know until Monday what specific bacteria caused Stephone's illness. Until then, he said, he is assuming it was spinal meningitis, which is contagious.

On Friday, health department officials gave antibiotics to Stephone's family and others who came into contact with him during the week. The Rodgers' have four other children: Thomas Jr., 16; Diane, 14; Coshorn, 13; and Christopher, 12.

Resignation

LEXINGTON, N.C. (AP) — The superintendent of the Lexington city school system has announced he will resign this summer to begin work as superintendent in Tupelo, Miss.

Richard Lewis Thompson, 45, has served as the system's superintendent since July 1, 1980. His resignation is effective July 2.

Charges Dropped Against Faircloth

RALEIGH (AP) — Charges of hit and run and resisting arrest were dropped Friday against former state Commerce Secretary D.M. "Lauch" Faircloth, who had argued with a Raleigh-Durham Airport policeman over whether he should pay a $10 fee for a tow truck that was prepared to haul his car away.

Wake County District Attorney C. Colon Willoughby Jr., said Friday he thought airport police officer A.G. Kelly should not have tried to collect the tow fee at the scene of the accident last weekend. He also said that Faircloth had agreed to pay the towing company for the damage he caused to the truck as he drove away — a broken belt costing less than $20.

"I talked to the witnesses and did a little research on the ordinances at the airport," Willoughby said. He said dismissing the charges "seemed like the appropriate thing to do."

Edwin B. Hatch, assistant administrative director at RDU, said he thought towing fees should not be collected at curbside. Fees should be paid to the attendant at the lot to which overparked cars are towed, he said.

Faircloth, 59, who had taken his daughter to the airport to see her off to college, said he had parked his car in a a 15-minute zone and left it there for more than half an hour. When he returned, a Morrisville Gulf and Wrecker Service truck was getting ready to tow it, under the supervision of Kelly.

After an argument, Kelly told Faircloth he had to pay $10 because the truck already had been called out. Faircloth left the scene without paying.

Faircloth said he received about 40 sympathetic telephone calls after being arrested Sunday in the dispute. He is a Clinton businessman and Democratic politician who heads RDU's "Land Us In London" campaign to persuade the U.S. Department of Transportation to give RDU its first trans-Atlantic flight.

Sanford Blames Vote On Miscalculation

RALEIGH (AP) — Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C., said the Senate's Democratic leadership miscalculated when they told him they wouldn't need his vote to overrride President Reagan's veto of an $88 billion highway construction bill.

That miscalcuation — discovered midway through a Senate roll-call vote Wednesday — helped thrust Sanford into an unfavorable spotlight when he first cast the deciding vote to sustain the veto, and later cast the deciding vote to overrride it, giving Democrats a significant victory.

"Yes, they thought they had the votes, not just that morning but for two or three days before," Sanford said in a telephone interview from Washington. He said Senate leaders wanted his vote, "but they didn't think they needed it."

But as Wednesday's vote progressed, three or four Republicans surprised Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., and Majority Whip Alan Cranston, D-Calif., by voting to sustain the veto, Sanford said. Either Byrd or Cranston then asked Sanford to wait until the other senators had voted so they would know whether his vote was essential, he said.

"I began to feel we were getting in trouble," Sanford said. "Not we, I."

When it became apparent that Sanford's vote was needed, Byrd approached him. "Can't you do it, Terry?" Sanford quoted Byrd as asking.

Sanford said Byrd then advised him to vote "present" on the override question, essentially a non-vote that would have given the Democrats their victory. On Wednesday, Sanford had said he didn't know who had advised him to cast the "present" vote, and that it had been "bad advice."

He said Friday, "it was good advice. It just turned out that the lines didn't hold."

Sanford said he had voted "present" in hopes of forcing Sen Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., the only other senator who had not voted, to cast his ballot. Simpson wanted to override the veto because the highway bill was popular in his state, Sanford said, but he eventually voted to sustain.

Sanford told Byrd he was "honor bound" to sustain the veto, at least at first, but that he understood the matter could be reconsidered. "My strategy at that point was, 'I'll go ahead and vote the way I had indicated and then we can reconsider,'" he said. "I knew I'd be accused of flipping and flopping.

"I had told the White House I would vote that way (to sustain the veto), but I didn't promise to live and die with them," Sanford added. "I think I saved the bill, which ought to be saved. I think what I did was precisely what ought to have been done."

Croatan Site Dropped

HAVELOCK, N.C. (AP) — The Marine Corps has dropped a plan to build training sites in Croatan National Forst for AV-8B Harrier jets, after vocal public opposition was voiced to the plan.

The proposal called for construction of forward Harrier sites west of the Three Lake area and east of N.C. 58. The $9.8 million project had a possible completion date of 1991.

Plans called for a 1,800-foot runway and six Harrier "hides," areas where the light-attack jets could taxi off the runway and be hidden by trees.

Harriers from the 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing are currently using Oak Grove, Atlantic Field in Atlantic and Bogue Auxiliary Landing Field in Carteret County. When Cherry Point's first AV-8B became operational in January 1984, the Corps began a five-year plan to nearly double the number of Harriers based at Cherry Point.

Plans call for 120 Harriers to be based at Cherry Point by 1989.

I-95: Begins In French, Ends In Spanish

By CHRISTOPHER SULLIVAN
Associated Press Writer

The Interstate Highway System is 30 years old and has changed the way Americans get around. An AP reporter drove one link in the network, Interstate 95, for this report.

HOULTON, Maine (AP) — A mile of interstate highway is 9,000 cubic yards of chewing-gum colored concrete, striped with 1,000 gallons of paint that reflects like cats' eyes in the dark.

Take Interstate 95, which stretches 1,836 miles from the Canadian border at this northern Maine potato town to Miami and blue-green Biscayne Bay.

Without a closer look, it can seem just a couple of double lanes, long and gray and mute.

And yet this road speaks: road signs are in French where it begins, Spanish where it ends. At the top, one points "Aux Etats-Unis" — To the United States.

Along its miles and miles, Yankee country changes tune to Dixie; New York, Philadelphia and other industrial centers and old ports give way to the little tobacco farms of North Carolina. Paper-white birch woods in New England become the sensuous wetland plains of coastal Georgia. Ringing Washington, D.C., it's The Beltway, beyond which, in the bureaucrat's geography, lies "real-life" America.

I-95 travels a path of history, following a colonial mail route at some northern points and touching what was called the King's Road in Florida. Near Lexington, Mass., a plaque within earshot of the oblivious traffic marks where Paul Revere's ride was ended by a picket of English troops.

After a drive from its start to its finish, it's clear this is both an artery giving life to legitimate commerce and a "cocaine lane" watched by 15 states' troopers. It's a route home to tearful retirees and runaways. It's been a landing strip, a laboratory, a morgue and even a place to be born.

"A highway is a dynamic thing," Federal Highway Administrator Ray Barnhart said in an interview in his Washington office. "It changes with society."

There are longer roads; there may be more scenic ones. But I-95, arguably the busiest link in the 30-year-old interstate system, may come as close as any to being Everyroad, illustrating how much more a highway is than so much aggregate rock and Portland cement.

That message becomes manifest within the first mile or so, at Houlton.

In the star-pocked blackness of 2 in the morning here, a glow pulsed on a ridge a mile off to the west from I-95. It was a trailer on fire.

It stood adjacent to Wilbur and Gladys Estabrook's house, where they and their grandson were sleeping. The flames would consume the trailer, their daughter's, and scorch the walls of the house. But a drowsy passerby veered off the highway and raised the alarm.

In the Estabrooks' kitchen, over the scratchy repartee of a police scanner that the family listens to for entertainment, Wilbur talked about the close call. "If it hadn't been for 95," he said, "we'd have been burned."

The highway wasn't always there, of course. Houlton people used to fish in a big frog pond where I-95 is now.

"We went up there when they were cutting the right of way," Gladys Estabrook said, shaking her head, remembering the tree stumps everywhere. "You couldn't comprehend it."

Floyd Munroe still can't. From the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service checkpoint at the border, he watches a young moose that hangs around what's left of the swamp, he watches Canadians enter Maine and he watches Americans pass the other way.

"That was a real boondoggle," he says of the roadway planners' decision to locate I-95's northern terminus just halfway up the Maine-New Brunswick border, instead of at the furthest point north in the state. Doing so, he says, would have kept travelers in the United States a little longer, long enough to buy lunch, say, or stay in a motel.

"That cost those towns north of here money," he said.

Munroe sighed, then leaned into the window of a recreational vehicle whose windshield bore the hot-breath clouds of two coffee mugs on the dashboard and whose bundled-up occupants were headed for a vacation in warm South Carolina.

Climbing aboard, Munroe glanced in the refrigerator, found what he expected — nothing amiss — and waved the couple on their way as he and other agents do with 500 to 1,000 cars a day. "They're like the birds, the snowbirds. They go where it's warm."

Sometimes, Munroe said, they're heading for retirement far down I-95, and at the border they cry.

The downstream run toward Florida starts through rocky Maine farmland where the schoolkids get a potato-harvesting vacation, then through a corridor of birches that glow at sunset, over the brooding Argyle peat bog and finally past the myriad outlet shops.

Then it's out of Maine, via the Piscatauqua River bridge, which gives a gull's-eye view of the 17th century seaport town of Portsmouth, N.H.

New Hampshire's stretch of I-95 is among the shortest, and yet the road hazards there have sometimes been as bizarre as those in any state. The northbound lanes were blocked by a load of fish a few years back when a truck flipped, and more recently a fleeing cocaine suspect threw so much of a powdery substance out the window that a highway patrolman said it looked "like a snowstorm."

"Cocaine lane" is the nickname given I-95 by a grand jury in Georgia, and it has taken on other monikers. One stretch in Massachusetts is "Silicon East," for all its high-technology companies.

Not far from there, where the highway shares the overburdened pavement of old U.S. Route 1, Tom Daley runs a clothing shop, Jeans for 'U.' Once, an accident just outside diverted Interstate 95 through his parking lot.

Cars careen past, giving fits to drivers trying to turn into little stores like his. "They white-knuckle it all the way," he growled. Lots of faint-hearted customers just drive on, he figures, adding that when a bypassing section of I-95 is completed he ought to do half again as much business — "if I last that long."

Not far below Daley's store, at Lexington, Mass., I-95 finds a far more tranquil place, Minute Man National Park.

"At this well, April 19, 1775," reads a plaque by the ruins of a house there, "James Hayward of Acton met a British soldier, who, raising his gun, said, 'You are a dead man.' 'And so are you,' replied Hayward. Both fired. The soldier was instantly killed and Hayward mortally wounded."

The day they died, Paul Revere was intercepted by Redcoats after galloping across what is now I-95. "He definitely crossed down there," said Gardner Lane, a park ranger.

News of the Revolution's start was announced in following days with the tolling of the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia, again within earshot of what would become the highway's right of way. Further south, the road glimpses the fort that inspired "The Star-Spangled Banner" in the War of 1812, and later rolls over campgrounds of the Civil War.

But back to the pavement.

It skirts Boston, and splits Rhode Island's capital, Providence.

After intersecting the road that the old rich take to mansions in Newport, (far to the south, it will see their wintering grounds at Palm Beach, Fla.), I-95 sweeps into Connecticut, glimpsing the slums of New Haven and Bridgeport, as well as the enclaves of movie stars and millionaire executives, approaching New York.

One such blueblood town, Greenwich, with its yachts docked along the Mianus River, could be a setting for "Scenic New England" postcards.

The peace there was broken by a series of jarring noises one rainy June morning four years ago: a screech of concrete against metal, a scream of tires, a scrape of axles on pavement.

The sounds of a 100-foot section of the Mianus bridge collapsing echoed cross the country. At least 24 states ordered emergency bridge inspections. In the collapse, two tractor-trailers and two cars nosedived 70 feet into the river. Three people died.

Crossing the Mianus River bridge now makes one think. Maybe that has as much to do with the perspective a bridge gives as with this one's history. Just 20 or so miles south on I-95, the George Washington Bridge presents drivers with the spiky skyline of Manhattan, which can set a tourist tingling or solidify the glaze over a commuter carpool.

I-95 glances off upper Manhattan, then quickly becomes the New Jersey Turnpike, heading south. Awash in cars and trucks, it floods past the Meadowlands, a shrinking swamp where concrete has been formed into Giants Stadium, into hotels and warehouses and, they say, into cement shoes for unlucky gangsters.

After that come Bayonne and Elizabeth, from whose landscape of smokestacks emanate news briefs in the New York papers headlined: "Foul Odors Reported in Jersey."

Just south of Elizabeth, Stephen Zawatski was collecting tolls at Interchange 12 when Evelyn Garcia drove up in a car spewing smoke.

As she told his supervisor in a letter, "Mr. Zawatski not only checked my car and drove me to buy necessary parts, but he also installed the parts in my car. He gave up his break even though he was working a double shift. I consider myself very lucky."

No big deal, Zawatski shrugged. But maybe it was, if only by smashing the cast of the stone-faced tolltaker. "People don't really have a very nice image of us," he said.

It's easier to stay on the turnpike, but a section of I-95 glides through Pennsylvania, slipping between Philadelphia's dockyards and the old brick neighborhoods dominated by Independence Hall, where the Constitution was written, then enters Delaware, the first state to ratify it.

Delaware presents a corporate face, with logos of DuPont and other companies marking buildings lining the road. Business looks good. Jobs were the elusive dream of 38 Salvadorans huddling in the back of a rented truck stopped by police at Newark, Del., three years ago; the thousands the undocumented aliens had paid for passage to New York City were wasted.

Driving at night just below the Delaware line, travelers are arrested by a glowing vision on a hillside. There stands a floodlit madonna next to a floodlit sign: "Shrine of Our Lady of the Highways."

The statue, explained Brother Thomas Brophy, who helps run the Roman Catholic retreat house on the hilltop, faces the spot on I-95 where 17 vehicles collided in a fatal crash in 1969. A witness, the late Rev. John J. Fuqua, conceived the shrine as a "prayer in stone."

Daily, the religious community prays for highway safety, and at least once a month a Mass is dedicated to all drivers. "It must help," Brophy said.

After the highway jumps the wide, lazy Susquehanna River, catching a first glimpse of the Chesapeake Bay, it plows toward Baltimore Harbor. For years, travelers complained about the bottleneck there. Something had to be done: the feds first proposed a bridge, but eventually built a tunnel. In between, they met A. Shirley Doda.

"All we were doing was trying to save the fort. The fort was very sacred to us as children. You'd go in and you'd lower your voice," said Mrs. Doda, speaking of Fort McHenry, which held off a British naval onslaught in a pivotal battle, witnessed by Francis Scott Key, in the War of 1812. A replica of the 32-by-40-foot star-spangled banner he watched still flies.

The bridge would have "overpowered" the fort, said Mrs. Doda. So, for five years, she and her neighbors fought it — picketing the White House, camping out in front of City Hall.

"If you don't have historic sites for your children to visit, what do you have? Just highways?" Mrs. Doda said. "I know we were a nuisance. But when they held the ceremony opening the tunnel, the mayor said we were right."

The $825 million tunnel was the most expensive single project in the interstate system.

Highway administrator Barnhart said that sort of thing — along with an increase in road travel, up 35 percent since 1974, to 1.7 trillion vehicle-miles a year — has him worried. "What are we going to do at the turn of the century?"

People want the convenience and economic benefits of four-lane divided highways, but more and more limitations are placed on where they can be built, Barnhart complained.

"You can't touch usable farmland.

"You can't believe the extremes to

ATTENTION GREENVILLE RESIDENT
BECOME INVOLVED IN CITY GOVERNMENT

The Mayor and City Council will consider appointments to the following boards/commissions of the City of Greenville in May, 1987.

HOUSING AUTHORITY

If you are a Greenville resident and would like to be considered for an appointment, please call or write the City Clerk's Office, P.O. Box 7207, Greenville, N.C. 27834, Telephone 752-4137, Ext. 219, and complete a resume form to indicate your interest in the event you have not already done so.

"YOU ARE ENCOURAGED TO VOLUNTEER YOUR PARTICIPATION IN CITY GOVERNMENT"

"NOTICE"
SUBJECT: CITY OF GREENVILLE SIGN ORDINANCE

On November 13, 1986, the City Council adopted a new Sign Ordinance (Ordinance No. 1667) affecting all signs within City of Greenville corporate limits and extraterritorial jurisdiction. Ordinance No. 1667 stipulates that all temporary signs must be removed within six (6) months of the effective date but no later than May 13, 1987. Temporary signs defined by this Ordinance include but are not limited to:

1. Signs made of paper, cloth, polyethylene film or other similar material
2. Signs which are not permanently affixed to the ground or a building surface in a manner approved by the Building Inspector
3. Trailer signs
4. Portable signs
5. Banners, flags or similar devices

The Ordinance does, however, allow the use of one temporary sign per lot not exceeding six (6) square feet, provided it violates no other applicable regulations.

This notice has been prepared by the Engineering and Inspections Department to allow you ample time to remove the above-mentioned temporary signs on or before the applicable date of May 13, 1987 so as to come into compliance with the new City of Greenville Sign Ordinance. Failure to do so may result in enforcement action including the issuance of Civil Citations of $50 per day, each day being a separate offense in the matter. Should you have any questions, please contact the Engineering and Inspections Department at 752-4137, extension 221.

which the environmental movement dictates policy. If it were up to the parks departments, we'd have camouflage-painted stop signs."

Barnhart's office, a few miles off the arc of I-95 called the Capital Beltway, is decorated with a giant pair of scissors cutting a giant red tape. Yet he growls over boondoggles — including a wall to shield highway noise from a cemetery.

"It burns you," he said, "to see money spent in non-productive ways for transportation."

Still, when President Eisenhower signed the bill creating the Interstate Highway system in 1956, the gross national product was $421 billion. Today, it is $4.27 trillion. "The country has been opened up to economic development," Barnhart said.

Of the 3.9 million miles of roads in the United States, fewer than 42,500 miles, or roughly 1 percent, are interstate highways; but those carry 20 percent of America's daily traffic. The system, 97 percent complete, will cost $120 billion ($107 billion the federal share, the rest from the states) when finished in the early 1990s.

Among its payoffs is safety. In 1925, more than 18 people died for every 100 million vehicle-miles traveled; nowadays, the comparable average is fewer than three deaths, and for interstate highways it's less than half that.

"Certainly," agreed Richard Hebert of the American Automobile Association, "the interstates generally are the safest roads." He credited breakaway light standards and other engineering improvements, but said road signs could be made clearer.

AAA advises its members on the best route to take on trips — say, from New York to Miami. "If you want the fastest, most direct route ... it'll probably be I-95."

But some people don't. They shun the "cruise-control" speeds, the limited access, the sameness of the broad thoroughfares that have made travel, for better and worse, less of an adventure than 30 years ago.

You won't hear nostalgia about the pre-interstate roads from truckers along I-95. It used to take twice as long, Boyd Godfrey said, to cover the ground he was covering, hauling citrus from Fort Pierce, Fla., to near Washington. He was resting before dropping off the rest of his oranges and grapefruits, $8,223 worth wholesale, and be on his way home to South Carolina.

At 72, Godfrey's been driving a truck for more than 40 years, easily a couple million miles. "Ain't got sense enough to quit."

He did quit once. "Got myself a job in a factory. Right alongside a highway. I could hear every kind of truck going by, by the sound of the engine. There's a Detroit, and a Cummins, and a Caterpillar. The sound of 'em whipping by me, that sure did it to me.

"So," he said, "I just quit and went back to trucking."

It's a fine job, if you have an urge to be moving, and Godfrey said he always did — though he complained about regulation, traffic and other pressures. Trucking can strain a family. "I've known several split up over it," he said. "My wife, she never did mind. She used to ride with me. She loved it."

Sometimes he took his young son. "I put cushions on the seat to where he could see out over the wheel and drive. That was the mistake I made." Godfrey smiled. Boyd Jr. became a trucker, too, and now owns six rigs.

If a highway is a community, the truckers are its citizens. They live there, every day including Christmas, and pay the mortgage with their road taxes. Other citizens were there before, it's worth remembering: some of whom paid other dues for passage along routes like that followed by I-95. In the Civil War, this was a campaign trail, and many paid with blood.

Forty or so miles south of Washington, I-95 skirts a cemetery whose rows and rows of simple headstones commemorate a bitter battle. A New York Times correspondent traveling with the Union troops wrote in December 1862:

"The nation will stand aghast at the terrible price which has been paid for its life when the realities of the battlefield of Fredericksburg are spread before it. ... The result thus far leaves us with a loss of from ten to fifteen thousand men, and absolutely nothing gained. Along the whole line the rebels hold their own.

"Again and again we have hurled forward our masses on their position. At each time the hammer was broken on the anvil!"

Fredericksburg is calm now, and Lee Sanzo runs a shop in the old town, buying and selling relics of the war, some from people who comb the area with metal detectors.

Mississippi buttons, U.S. buckles, artillery fuses and bullets came from the right-of-way of I-95 as it was under construction.

"The whole war was right there," Sanzo said. "There's asphalt and rock over it now ... (but) the campfires were everywhere, up and down the interstate."

From Fredericksburg, the highway races to the Confederate capital, Richmond, then past the battle site of Petersburg, where last year a pilot, out of fuel, landed his crop-duster on I-95, was refueled on the median and took off again as troopers held back rush-hour traffic.

It's largely rural country in that stretch, small farms in southern Virginia and northern North Carolina where for centuries tobacco has been cultivated and where some farmers have begun to diversify, just as the big tobacco companies have. Some are planting broccoli instead. Nonetheless, said Ken Bateman, an extension agent in Johnston County, N.C., "Tobacco's still very much of a money-making crop in this county."

Billboards advertise cheap smoke shops like Charlie's Cigarettes. The Carolinas can claim the most colorful signs along I-95.

"When you Dine, Make it Swine." At tiny Weldon, N.C., you have to go inside Ralph's Barbecue to see that embroidered sign. Most of its advertising is by word of mouth.

Every month, about 40,000 pounds of meat goes into the smoker at Ralph's, where eager diners don't necessarily take off their coats and where the heaps of minced pork and chicken have a tart taste.

"My granddaddy was born around Emporia. This whole area uses a vinegar base," explained Kim Franks, granddaughter of the founder, Ralph Woodruff, who started out simple along the road. "He would sit out there underneath this tree and if he'd sell, you know, $15 or $20 worth, that would be a good day."

Alan Schafer's extraordinary enterprise just below the North Carolina-South Carolina line began as a hot dog and beer stand.

Now, "South of the Border" has 550 employees in peak season and gets a place of distinction in any compendium of roadside curiosities. Dominated by a restaurant under a huge sombrero roof, it has a 300-room motel, eight restaurants and a dozen shops decorated like ersatz haciendas and selling everything from rubber tarantulas and busts of Elvis Presley to plates imprinted with prayers or saucy sayings.

That's not to mention the statuary, apparently molded from plastic. "Everybody wants their picture taken being hugged by the big gorilla," personnel manager W.E. Vereen said, pleading no contest to a charge of tackiness at S.O.B., as it calls itself on the water tower.

S.O.B.'s pun-laden billboards entertain I-95 drivers for more than 200 miles. "You Never Sausage a Place," says one adorned with a massive hotdog. "Pedro's Fireworks! (Does Yours?)" asks another.

A quieter enterprise, an insidious one, is at work along the long road: the transport of cocaine and other drugs. State troopers have been taught "profiles" of drivers and vehicles most likely to be involved.

Prowling I-95 near Fayetteville, N.C., Trooper Terry Isaacs has made several drug seizures, though once he searched a truck and came up with only a poisonous coral snake. Another time, he stopped a speeding car and discovered $225,000 in cash hidden in stereo speakers. The driver dared not claim it was to cover tolls, and the money was turned over to the Drug Enforcement Administration.

"He looked shocked," Isaacs understated.

South Carolina Trooper Garry Rozier, too, makes drug busts, but at times he feels a chill approaching cars. Last year, a patrolman he'd been talking with hours earlier was shot dead on I-95. Nothing in the training manual prepares you to break the news to the widow, he said, recalling driving up to her house with another trooper and her pastor.

"It lingers in your mind," Rozier said. "When you walk up to a car, you don't know if it's full of drugs and if the guy inside figures you've been looking for him."

From Rozier's headquarters in Ridgeland, S.C., it's an easy run down I-95 to Savannah, Ga., where cab driver James Driggers' meter clicked as he talked about the community of the road. Hitchhikers get stopped by troopers, who call cabbies, who transport them to motels in town at no charge. It saves a trip for the cops.

"We do it as a courtesy. I'm sure we get paid back," Driggers said. "You know, they see us speeding a little bit, and they don't notice."

Now 47, he's always liked to meet people and chat. That's one reason he accepts long fares — for example, from Savannah to Okeechobee in central Florida; charging $200 each for two people, he says, he saves them money over the airfare.

Besides, "People just like to talk. If I pick up two people — you know, a man and wife — and drive 'em to Jacksonville, I know pretty much all there is to know about 'em by the time we get there. But they know the same about me."

The ride he described follows I-95 across the marshes of Georgia's coast, "candid and simple and nothing-withholding and free," as the poet Sidney Lanier described them. There might be a glimpse of shrimp boats churning toward packing houses at Brunswick. Before long there's Jacksonville, Fla., where speedboats ply the St. Johns River under a toll bridge cursed by travelers.

It was near Jacksonville two years ago that a head-on I-95 crash had a different ending than might have been expected.

RIVER RISING — Boat owners row into a marine in Portland, Conn., Saturday to check on their boats. Heavy Snow Strands Public From Dixie To New England

By ROGER PETTERSON
Associated Press Writer

Travelers were stranded Saturday as unseasonably heavy snow continued to fall from North Carolina into New York state, with 2 feet in places and drifts up to 10 feet atop one mountain, and temperatures again plummeted to record lows from Texas to Florida.

"It's like a white out," said Dee Allen, a police dispatcher in the Cleveland suburb of Brooklyn, where it was the second major snow storm in less than a week. "There's a lot of blowing and drifting snow. I guess I'm going to have to ski home."

Two West Virginia ski areas hurriedly reopened, one week after dogwoods, magnolias and peach trees bloomed in temperatures in the 70s and 80s.

Some highways were closed and horse racing was canceled at tracks in Ohio, West Virginia and upstate New York.

Even the Concorde supersonic jetliner got snowbound. The plane, on a promotional visit to Asheville, N.C., took off for London on Saturday after being delayed more than 24 hours.

Rivers receded in Maine after the worst flooding on record, and residents of low-lying areas of New Jersey, New Hampshire and Connecticut were warned of possible flooding as new heavy rain moved into the Northeast.

Temperatures again fell to record lows from Texas to Florida, with readings in the 20s in Alabama, Arkansas, Indiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri. Daytona Beach, Fla., bottomed out at 37, and the only part of Mississippi spared freezing temperatures was the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, with a chilly 36 at Biloxi.

Alabama's peach crop, already scarred by a week of record cold, suffered further casualties early Saturday and growers expected to tend fires in their orchards again during the night, said extension service agent Dan Mims in Chilton County.

Richard Mullenax, director of the horticulture department at Mississippi State University, said 95 percent of the state's peach crop and 40 percent to 50 percent of the blueberry crop had been destroyed.

Interstate 40 was blocked by snow most of Saturday at the North Carolina-Tennessee border.

About 1,000 motorists were stranded between Asheville, N.C., and the Tennessee line on I-40, whereTruckers set up a citizens band hookup that helped a diabetic child get medical attention, said Karen Rotterman, a spokeswoman for North Carolina Gov. Jim Martin.

More than 100 cars were stranded on the road leading to North Carolina's Grandfather Mountain, which stands more than 5,900 feet high, where people this time of year usually flock to see blooming rhododendrons, said mountain manager Tom Huskins.

Huskins said 19 inches of snow had fallen and drifts at the top of the mountain reached 8 to 10 feet high. He said drifts at the park's entrance were about 6 feet.

In southwestern Virginia, "we have 24-25 inches in most places," Russell County sheriff's dispatcher Annette Phillips said Saturday afternoon. "It's still snowing, it hasn't slowed down." Bristol also reported about 2 feet of snow.

Parts of southeastern and east-central Ohio had up to 15 inches of snow, some of it driven by wind gusting to 20 to 30 mph, reducing visibility to near zero. A section of I-70 near downtown Columbus was briefly closed by police early Saturday. I-64 in South Charleston, W.Va., was briefly closed after a Saturday morning pile-up but was reopened by noon.

At Wheeling, W.Va., a tent being used for an auto show collapsed when its main pole cracked under the weight of the snow. No one was injured but some cars were damaged, officials said. Officials canceled a garden and sports show at the city's Civic Center out of concern for snow on its roof.

All major rivers in Maine were receding Saturday, but not all of them were below flood stage, the National Weather Service said. More rain was expected Sunday, but it wasn't expected to cause any more flooding.

At Wayne, N.J., emergency officials advised residents of low-lying areas to leave their homes Saturday because the Passaic, Pompton, Ramapo and Pequannoc rivers were expected to rise as much as 4 feet above flood stage Sunday.

Reagan, Mulroney Meet In Cross-Border Summit

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The political woes of President Reagan and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney threaten to overshadow environmental and trade issues when the two meet Sunday in Ottawa for a "summit without drama."

At the top of the formal agenda are free trade talks between Canada and the United States, acid rain that Canadians say is drifting across the international border and poisoning their lakes and forests, and access to Canada's Arctic waters.

The two countries differ on each issue.

Canada complains that even while negotiators seek agreement by the end of the year on a U.S.-Canadian duty-free trade area, Reagan has imposed a 35 percent duty on Canadian cedar shingles and has taken other actions against Canadian exports including softwood lumber.

Canada seeks an agreement incorporating a timetable for reducing the toxic U.S. emissions from coal-fired generators and smelters that cross the border as acid rain. The Reagan administration maintains more research is needed before a timetable can be established, and for now the policy is "go slow."

Canada claims sovereignty over the Northwest passage, the avenue of access to the Canadian Arctic. The United States claims access under international rules of transit passage, and heightened Canadian concerns by sending an icebreaker, the Polar Sea, through the passageway two years ago.

Mulroney, whose Progressive Conservatives have the lowest standing ever recorded by a Canadian party while in power, is accused by his opponents of kowtowing to Reagan and is expected to take a tougher stance than in their two previous summits.

"There will be some plain talk," Canadian embassy spokesman John Fieldhouse told reporters last week.

Canadian Ambassador Alan Gotlieb added that when Mulroney has made his case, "we hope the Canadian people will see that he is an effective prime minister."

A recent poll by Environics Research of Canada put the Progressive Conservatives in third place among Canadian political parties with 24 percent support, compared with 40 percent for the Liberals and 34 for the New Democrats. Mulroney's personal popularity was down to 23 percent, a drop of 47 points from his standing two months after coming to power in 1984.

Mulroney must call national elections by September 1989.

Reagan, buffeted by disclosures that secret arms sales to Iran were plotted in the White House and money diverted without his knowledge to aid Nicaraguan rebels, is also down sharply in opinion polls. The Ottawa trip will be his first out of the country since the scandal broke in November.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater denied that the trip is any test of Reagan's stature on the international stage.

"I don't think the president needs a test," Fitzwater said. "His stature is conferred by six years of activity."

Nevertheless, although long scheduled, the trip fits in neatly with the new White House strategy of exposing Reagan in situations where he is seen as an active, aggressive executive.

That strategy hit a snag last week when the president made an unusual personal pilgrimage to Capitol Hill to stave off a Senate vote to override his veto of a highway bill, and lost.

No major announcements or agreements are expected in the two days of talks.

Marines Have Isolated Lifestyles In Moscow

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — The ramrod-straight Marine Corps guards who check all visitors to the U.S. Embassy here now are under scrutiny themselves as a growing sex-and-spying scandal zeroes in on their 28-man contingent.

With their "high-and-tight" haircuts and martial bearing, the Marines stand out. Yet they are perhaps the most isolated foreigners in the Soviet capital.

The espionage case has prompted changes in embassy procedures and fueled fears that the nine-story building may have been thoroughly bugged.

It also has led the U.S. government to reconsider how it trains and assigns Marine guards abroad, and to look more closely at the restricted and sometimes lonely existence led by the men it sends to the Soviet Union.

Two former embassy guards, Marine Sgt. Clayton J. Lonetree and Cpl. Arnold Bracy, were arrested after both allegedly were lured by young Soviet women into helping KGB agents enter highly sensitive embassy areas.

The Marine who commanded Lonetree and Bracy, Staff Sgt. Robert Stanley Stufflebeam, is accused of failing to report contacts with Soviets.

Rep. Dan Mica, D-Fla., said Friday in Washington that the scandal "is widening."

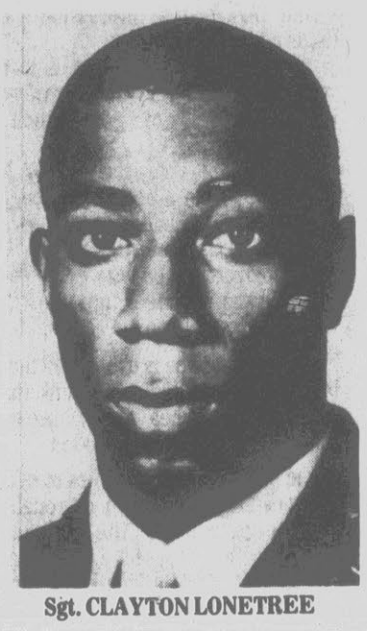
The charges trained a spotlight on the guards who patrol the mustard-colored U.S. Embassy on Moscow's Garden Ring Road. The Marines are young, unmarried soldiers with little or no knowledge of the Russian language. Their movements are highly restricted by security regulations.

The Marines themselves have declined to speak to reporters.

But some diplomatic sources and Western friends of the Marines agreed to speak about the guards and their life in Moscow. The sources demanded anonymity.

Several said the guards' isolation leaves some of them lonely and perhaps vulnerable to compromising situations.

"To have 28 young men sitting around, not being able to go anywhere or do anything, it seems to me that you're inviting mischief," said a diplomatic source. "There are only so many days that you can sit around and watch videos or go swimming."



Sgt. CLAYTON LONETREE

All Marines now in Moscow are scheduled to be transferred back to the United States within the month as a "precautionary" measure, officials have said.

The replacement of the current Moscow contingent, none of whose members is accused of wrongdoing, apparently won't affect the six Marine guards at the U.S. Consulate in Leningrad. Asked if the guards there would be replaced, a consular official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, said: "We've heard nothing about it and no one has suggested it."

Once home, the Moscow Marines will be given polygraph tests, which U.S. officials say are aimed at furthering the espionage investigation. But the lie detector tests have increased bitterness in the already demoralized contingent, said friends, who noted that several Moscow Marines were sent home earlier this year for their involvement in black market money changing.

"The emotion that they're experiencing is anger," said an American friend of some of the Marines.

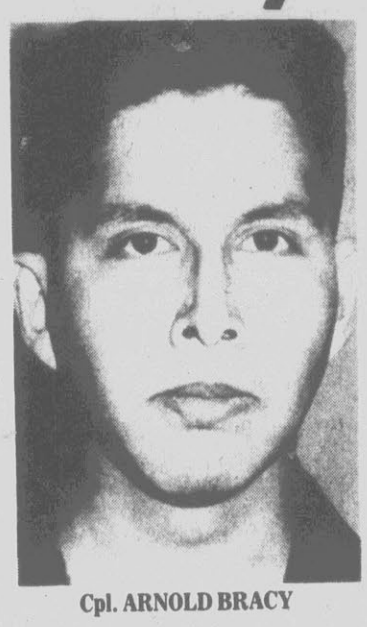
Friends of the Marines in Moscow say those who decide to join the Corps' guard service choose it as a way to see the world.

"They always say they did it because they could travel," said one friend.

But those chosen to serve an 18-month tour in Moscow find themselves in a closed world, their friends say.

They are allowed no visitors, either Western or Soviet, in their one-man rooms inside the chancellery or at the new red-brick embassy compound still under construction, sources and friends say.

Fraternization between Marines and Soviet citizens is prohibited and regulations require that all contact with Soviets be reported.



Cpl. ARNOLD BRACY

The Marines are not allowed to leave the enclosed compound alone — a rule that was laxly enforced until recently, according to one Westerner. A midnight curfew, also largely igred in the past, is much more strictly observed since the spy scandal, said a friend.

The Marines, most of whom are in their early to mid-20s, cope with their isolation in part by making their own social life. The common area of their living quarters is the setting for occasional Saturday night parties for other Westerners, and on Friday nights, the marines can be found in "Uncle Sam's" discotheque in the embassy snack bar.

Groups of Marines often visit similarbars at other Western embassies, as well as the Saturday night disco in the hard currency bar at the Kosmos Hotel in northern Moscow.

"They mostly hang out with each other. It's a strange scene," a friend said.

The guards' social circle is likely to include the clientele at Uncle Sam's — younger embassy employees, students and "nannies," young Western women who care for children of diplomats and foreign journalists in the Soviet capital.

Most of the Marines have little interest in Russian culture, and few spend much time seeing the sights of Moscow, according to friends.

The sex-and-espionage scandal, the first in Marine Corps history, has been a major embarrasment to the elite fighting force that dates back to 1775, one year before U.S. independence.

The case drew ridicule from Soviet spokesman Gennady Gerasimov, who said last week that, according to the reports, the Marines had met their match at the hands of Soviet women.

"We can only smile at what is said about the story that 28 staunch Marines are being withdrawn because they were allegedly unable to withstand the charms of blonde spies," said Gerasimov.

The Kremlin official also suggested that because of the scandal, an expression linked to the 1950s anti-communist campaign in the United States — "a red under every bed" — could be altered to "a red in every bed."

CIA Chief Proposed Lie Tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stansfield Turner, who headed the CIA under President Carter, says he tried in vain to require lie detector tests for Marines sent to guard the new U.S. Embassy in Moscow, but was overruled by other Cabinet members.

"The secretaries of state and defense talked the president out of it and he cancelled the order on the grounds that the Marines were too honorable to be put through this ignominious, disagreeable policy of polygraphing," Turner said in a telephone interview.

Marines guarding the Moscow embassy still are not subjected to lie detector tests as a matter of routine, said corps spokesman Lt. Col. John Shotwell. Other administration officials say the issue is coming under fresh review following allegations that two of the guards were seduced by Soviet women and allowed KGB agents to prowl secure areas of the building.

Administration officials describe the intelligence loss from the incident as enormous, and fear that the Russians have obtained the names of Soviets who cooperated with U.S. intelligence and have compromised American codes used in transmitting sensitive information.

One administration official said the CIA has been "unhappy for years" with the screening given to the Marines who guard U.S. embassies, and favored the use of regular polygraphs and other techniques used to test employees of U.S. intelligence agencies. The official spoke on condition he remain anonymous.

In addition to the criminal investigations against the two Marines, the Pentagon is conducting its own review of the training given to guards and the State Department is studying how to improve embassy security.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ONE IRA AND THE NEXT IS ALL IN THE PACKAGING.

The truth is, anybody's IRA is almost as good as ours. They all require about the same minimum. They all have the same maximum. And the interest rate differences are minimal, to say the least. So when you shop for an IRA, you're really shopping for a bank. You're deciding where to invest your life savings. And that's where we have the edge.

You see, First Citizens Bank really is different. We're the statewide bank in North Carolina that's staying in North Carolina. We don't own any banks in Florida. We're not buying any banks in Georgia. And we're not for sale.

If you deposit your money with us, we'll invest it in North Carolina. That's a good investment. It's made us the soundest three billion dollar bank in the United States.

And the fact that we aren't for sale isn't just a psychological benefit. It means that if you deposit your IRA funds here, we'll be around when it's time to withdraw them.

Lawmakers Say Reagan Boosted Fighting Image

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan may have lost a bitter veto battle with the Democratic-controlled Congress over an $88 billion highway bill last week, but he polished his image as a fighter, lawmakers say.

He entered the fray with his prestige eroded by his lame-duck status, the loss in elections last fall of a GOP majority in the Senate and revelations from the still-unfolding Iran-Contra affair, and he came out vowing to be an aggressive leader.

"The old sports saying is still true, and it is especially applicable for the Gipper — 'It doesn't matter whether you win or lose, but how you play the game,'" said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. The Gipper was the nickname of a football star who Reagan portrayed in the movies.

"And on this day, on this issue, in this battle, President Reagan played the game very well indeed, as the leader he is and can be," Kennedy said.

Reagan declared Friday, "It was a battle well worth waging, and there will be more."

Reagan suffered in that battle. He failed to persuade even one of 13 Republican senators to switch their vote and support him. If he had, he would have won. The Senate vote was 67-33, exactly the two-thirds majority necessary to override his veto.

He begged the 13 Republicans for a vote, but they were faced with a reality that transcended loyalty to Reagan — home state interest in the public works projects the bill will pay for. Several of them had warned White House strategists weeks in advance that they could not be counted on to vote to override a veto.

"I voted to improve the terrible road and highway conditions in Mississippi," said Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., one of the 13. "I didn't vote against the president."

"It was a sad victory as far as I was concerned," said Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato, R-N.Y., another of the 13. But he had to vote as he did because of some "very unique situations in New York."

In a slightly tongue-in-cheek summary of the situation, Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia said, "There are no Republican highways in this country; there are no Democratic highways in this country. Potholes know no party."

The 13 also saw the flood of publicity about the public change-of-heart by Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C. He voted to sustain the president's veto, but the next day, under intense pressure from fellow Democrats, he voted to override it.

The recalcitrant Republicans did not want to be placed in the same position.

"It just added to the inevitabilility of the 13 staying where they were," D'Amato said.

Hours before the vote on Thursday, Reagan decided to make a highly visible attempt to sway GOP senators with a personal plea on Capitol Hill.

"When he (Reagan) called ... I said I think the odds are 10-1 or 100-1 that nothing's going to change," Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said.

Nothing changed after Reagan's visit, but the president no longer appeared on the defensive.

White House officials made a point of telling reporters that the president boldly pressed his case.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Reagan quoted an old Scottish ballad to the Republican senators before the vote: "I am wounded but not slain. I will rest awhile, but I will rise and fight again."

And that is the impression that lingered after the battle.

"I think the president demonstrated that he's very much involved in the process of government," Cochran said.

"He lost the vote, but I think he won some points ... because he fought so hard," Cochran added.

Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., who voted to override the veto, said some Republicans may feel they must go with the president on the next fight.

Danforth said he is usually inclined to support presidents. "I think that weight is a little heavier because of" the vote on Thursday, he added.

The new law permits states to raise the speed limit to 65 mph on roughly three-quarters of the nation's 43,000-mile interstate highway system. It also allocates federal highway and mass transit aid for the next five years.

Reagan had argued the legislation contained too much needless spending.

The outcome in the House was never in doubt as 102 of the chamber's 177 Republicans — including virtually all of the GOP leadership — joined with Democrats in voting to override the veto.

Thus, the battleground became the more closely divided Senate, where Democrats hold a 54-46 edge.

In an initial test last Wednesday, the Senate voted 65-35, with one vote the spare, to sustain the president's veto. On the next test, Sanford switched his vote, allowing the Senate to override the veto.

The next test of the president's authority could come on a multibillion-dollar omnibus housing bill, passed by the Senate last week on a 71-27 vote. House action on a similar measure is expected soon.

Such legislation has not been passed in six years and the desire for the measure could be as strong as that for the highway bill.

But Reagan administration officials have expressed concern about the legislation, indicating that it may become the next veto target.

Kemp Poised To Announce His Candidacy For '88 Republican Presidential Nomination

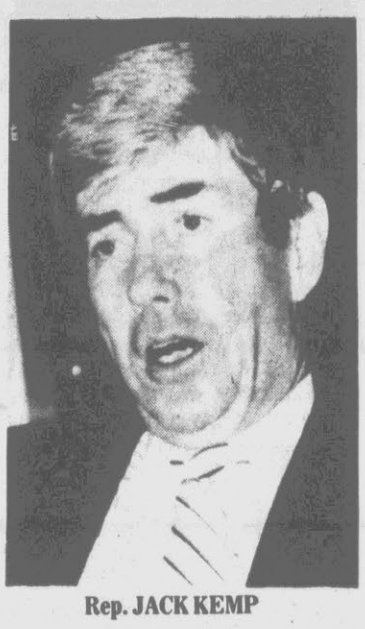
By KIM I. MILLS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, the football player turned politician, is making another switch — from teacher of "progressive conservatism" to Republican candidate for president.

He also is seeking to change his one-issue — economics — image. "There are really few in the party who are talking about as broad a vision of our country as Jack Kemp, from defense to the economy to world trade to the global economy to family issues," he says.

Kemp has been on the campaign trail since 1985, and on Monday will officially announce that he is seeking the 1988 Republican presidential nomination. After declaring his candidacy in the Capitol's Statutory Hall, Kemp embarks on a four-day, 12-state announcement trip.

Although he's represented his Buffalo, N.Y., district for nearly 17 years, Kemp still appeared as nervous as a freshman when he discussed his political philosophy in a recent interview.



Rep. JACK KEMP

Twirling his glasses, crossing and uncrossing his legs, and playing with his wedding band and a championship football ring the size of a walnut, Kemp talked about the need to shore up the economy, defend the West and end abortion.

He portrayed himself as the Republican who is the heir to the conservative legacy.

"Up until now," he said, "I have been less a candidate than a teacher. I don't mean in an intellectual sense but I have been trying to change my party and I have gone against the orthodoxy in many instances. I do not represent the old guard of the Republican Party. I represent a progressive conservatism in the party, and that has taken, I think, everything from trying to shake up the party to shake up some of my colleagues."

In 1985-86, he gave more than 500 speeches. Since October, Kemp has traveled to about 20 different cities a month, according to John Buckley, his campaign spokesman. His exploratory committee has been in place for months, and he has lined up more than 800 volunteer workers all over the country.

Kemp still scores only in the single-digits in the polls, trailing Vice President George Bush and Senate Republican leader Bob Dole, the early front-runners in the Republican race.

When Angela Jackson tried to convince her brother, former White House aide Patrick J. Buchanan, to carry the conservative banner in the Republican contest, she noted, "Jack Kemp's been out there for two years. He's gone from 7 percent to 7 percent."

The Rev. Pat Robertson, another unannounced contender for the Republican nomination, proposed a Robertson-Kemp ticket. But Kemp says he's not campaigning for the vice presidential nomination.

"I'm not looking to make a leap in the polls," Kemp said. "I don't have any opportunity to do so. I'm not on television on the evening news, I'm not on the Sunday talk shows. It's probably amazing that I am probably in the top two or three of my party for the nomination in 1988 just being in the House of Representatives."

How did a pro football player get elected to Congress from Buffalo, and how did he become a presidential contender?

Reaganomics is part of the answer. Kemp pioneered most of the concepts that became President Reagan's credo. "Supply-side," "enterprise zones," "social safety net," and "flat tax" are all Kemp coinages. Indeed, today Kemp proclaims himself more Reagan than Reagan, the only man who can continue the "revolution."

He has very specific ideas about the economy and what's wrong with it.

The three fastest growing Pitt County townships from 1980 to 1984 other than Greenville were Ayden, Grifton and Grimesland. Ayden's population grew 2.7 percent, Grifton, 2.51 percent, and Grimesland, 1.88 percent.

Miami Boy Receives 2nd Kidney

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The mother of 7-year-old Ronnie DeSillers said she firmly believes positive thoughts helped her son pull through a second, far more complicated liver transplant that ended early Saturday.

"I told the doctors that no matter what they said, I knew what the outcome would be," Maria DeSillers said, less than a day after her son received his second liver. "I had an inner peace that everything would be all right."

Surgeons at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh transplanted a liver into the Miami boy in a 14-hour operation that ended at 12:20 a.m. Saturday, said hospital spokeswoman Lynn McMahon. He was in critical condition in the intensive care unit, considered normal following a transplant operation.

Ms. DeSillers said although Ronnie looked swollen and puffy when he emerged from the operation, he was "a beautiful sight."

"The doctors told me the surgery had been very complicated," she said. "They had problems with the bleeding ... and there were a lot of lesions around that area. It was hard for them to suture anything and have it hold."

Jose Castillo, a family friend, said Ronnie required 25 units of blood during surgery, exhausting the hospital's supply of AB-negative blood. He said Ronnie was given A-negative blood Saturday afternoon because he was bleeding slightly through the mouth and his platelet count was down.

Ronnie's second liver came from an unidentified child of comparable size but with type A blood. Surgeons decided to proceed with the transplant, preferring the slight risk of crossing blood types over the greater risk of waiting for another donor with the rare AB blood.

Ms. McMahon said Ronnie would be watched closely, particularly in the first 72 hours after surgery, the most critical period, to make sure he shows no signs of rejecting the new liver.

Ronnie's quest for a liver transplant made national news after $4,000 raised by classmates at his school in Fort Lauderdale was stolen in early February.

After the theft, contributions poured in from around the country, including a $1,000 check from President Reagan and $32,000 from 5,000 sailors on the aircraft carrier USS John F. Kennedy. Donations exceeded $400,000 by the time Ronnie arrived in Pittsburgh with his mother Feb. 17. He received his first liver transplant a week later.

U.S. OK'd Sale Of Computers To Iran

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration officials said Saturday about $70 million in American computers were sold to Iran through U.S. contracts over the last three years.

The officials stressed, however, that the computers do not have military significance and involve elementary technology. "My kid has more sophisticated stuff in his room," said an official, who demanded anonymity.

The contracts were approved by the Commerce Department. The Pentagon tried to prevent computer sales to Iran, but was overruled, the official said.

The State Department, meanwhile, rejected reports that U.S. weapons were still being sold to Tehran. The disclosure last November that there had been seven secret shipments and some of the profits from the sales were diverted to the Nicaraguan rebels rocked the Reagan administration.

U.S. policy had called for an arms embargo, and allies were urged to join it under a program known as "Operation Staunch."

Responding to reports of recent sales, spokeswoman Sondra McCarty said "we categorically deny that the United States is selling andor sending any weapons to Iran."

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who had privately recommended to President Reagan that he not authorize the secret shipments, said Feb. 27 "there will be no further exceptions — no more transfers of U.S.-origin military equipment, either directly or through any third party."

Some of the secret shipments were made through Israel. After the disclosure, Reagan said the sales were designed to encourage moderate elements in Tehran. He later acknowledged the deal was a mistake.

Spokeswoman McCarty said Shultz' statement ruling out any military sales "stands as U.S. policy."

Protests Upset Papal Peace Mass

POLICEMAN INJURED — A nurse tries to help an injured Chilean policeman during riots that broke out Friday night at O'Higgins Park in Santiago, Chile. The violence broke out while Pope John Paul II was conducting a Mass for peace nearby. Tear gas used by police to halt the rioting drifting into the area where the Mass was being held. (AP Laserphoto)

PUNTA ARENAS, Chile (AP) — Hours after an anti-government demonstration violently upset his Mass for peace, Pope John Paul II pleaded anew on Saturday for reconciliation in troubled Chile.

"You must eradicate all types of violence. You must find concrete means of creating a true culture of peace and harmony," John Paul told a crowd of tens of thousands in the southern city of Punta Arenas.

Chilean Roman Catholic church leaders labeled as "senseless" the disturbances Friday night in a large park in Santiago, the capital. The violence sent tear gas wafting toward the pontiff and, according to hospital officials, left 260 people injured.

Foes of President Augusto Pinochet's 13½-year-old rightist military rule have been provoking clashes with security forces since the pontiff arrived in Chile Wednesday, but Friday night's clash was the worst so far in the trip.

"We protest against this offense against the Holy Father ... this incredible attack which caused injuries to the police, to papal guards, journalists, priests and the Chilean people," said a note signed by Archbishop Juan Francisco Fresno of Santiago and Archbishop Bernardino Pinera, head of Chile's Conference of Bishops.

National police Gen. Idelberto Duarte said the disturbances were caused by "subversive delinquents and communist extremists." The outlawed Communist Party later delivered a message to reporters saying it had no responsibility related to what it called the "despicable acts" at the Mass.

The message expressed "our total solidarity with Pope John Paul II and the Chilean church" and said accusations of communist participation in the violce were the result of "a malicious attitude of right-wing sectors and the dictatorship."

The pope flew about 1,400 miles Saturday morning from Santiago to Punta Arenas, a windblown city of 113,000 where well-tended wooden houses with brightly colored roofs spill down the treeless hills to the frigid Strait of Magellan.

Vatican officials told reporters accompanying the pontiff that he was not completely surprised by Friday night's violence because he was aware of Chile's tense political climate. They described his reaction as one of dismay.

The officials said the clash reinforced John Paul's conviction that violence is not a solution to the country's problems.

They said the pontiff never felt in personal danger, though some of the disturbances occurred not far from the platform where he was officiating at the Mass.

Punta Arenas is near a formerly disputed section of the border with Argentina. The dispute took the two nations to the brink of war in 1978, but John Paul mediated a solution and the two predominantly Roman Catholic countries signed a treaty restoring calm.

The pope's Punta Arenas speech, delivered in an outdoor stadium and based on the themes of peace and conciliation as they related to the Chile-Argentina question, took on new meaning after the violence in the capital.

Under gray skies, with temperatures in the mid-40s, the pontiff said, "One more time I ask those who use violence and terrorism to stop these inhuman methods that cause so many innocent victims."

Before his address, a boy took the microphone and told the pope, "We beg forgiveness for all the times we have not been the instruments of peace."

The audience included Yugoslav- and Polish-descended families, coal miners and sheep ranchers bundled in bulky sweaters and down jackets.

The crowd applauded and cheered the pope's message. There was no official estimate of the size of the audience.

John Paul also called for an end to the arms race in Latin America, where many countries have acquired sophisticated weapons from the United States, Europe and the Soviet Union. Brazil has become a major arms producer and exporter in its own right.

The pope also turned to the theme of environmental protection.

"From the southern tip of this South American continent, looking out at the endless spaces of Antarctica, I send forth a call to all responsible people on our planet to protect and conserve the nature created by God," he said.

Later Saturday the pope flew 750 miles north to Puerto Montt, a fishing port with a population of 82,000.

With Warm Round Of 69

Simpson Leads Chilly GGO

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

GREENSBORO (AP) — Scott Simpson warmed up on the back nine with a trio of birdies to finish with a 3-under-par 69 and sole possession of first place Saturday after the third round of the Greater Greensboro Open golf tournament.

Simpson, who tied for fourth at last week's Tournament Players Championship, has a three-day total of 4-under-par 212 after watching potential leaders and challengers fade into the pack.

Tom Byrum, starting Saturday's cold round at 3-under-par 141, fired an even-par 72 to go to 3-under-par 213, just one shot back of the leader. Byrum's best effort this year has been a tie for 15th at Pebble Beach.

While the tournament was promoted as North Carolina's spring spectacular, the 77 golfers left for the final two rounds had to deal with a temperature of 39 degrees when they teed off just after noon. With winds gusting to 30 mph, the wind chill factor dropped the temperature to 21 degrees.

The day started with a morning snow shower as golfers attempted to complete a second round delayed by rain.

"I've never hit a golf ball in the snow before," Simpson said. "It was pretty neat for me. Being born and raised in San Diego, we don't get snow — we don't get days this cold."

Simpson started the day at 1-under-par and remained there through his first 10 holes. Ten-foot birdie putts at his 11th and 18th holes, and a five-foot birdie putt at 16 moved him into first.

"When I did hit some bad shots, I made some real good saves," Simpson said. "I'd love to just get out there tomorrow and play a real good round. Anything under par was real good today."

Byrum started on the back nine and had three straight bogeys. He broke the slide with a three-foot birdie putt on his fourth hole. A four-foot birdie putt one hole later sent him out in even-par 36.

On the back side, Byrum had one birdie following a 15-foot putt at No. 12. To complete the round, Byrum saved par on four of his last six holes.

"I haven't played this cold in a long time." Byrum said. "My face was numb the whole last nine holes."

After bolting to 7-under-par with birdies on three of his first six holes, two-time GGO champion and second-round leader Danny Edwards bogeyed his next two holes and finished the front nine at 5-under-par.

Edwards saw his troubles continue as he bogeyed his closing three holes to wind up at 1-under 215 after a 76.

Clarence Rose, a North Carolina native looking for his first victory on the PGA Tour, birdied his first two holes to move to 6-under-par at the start of the round. But as the temperature began to drop, Rose ran into more trouble. A triple-bogey on his 14th hole dropped him back to 215 with a third-round 75.

Also at 215 are Payne Stewart, Brian Claar and Gene Sauers.

The start of Saturday's round was delayed because of heavy rains, thunder and lightning on Friday, which halted the second round and left 75 golfers out on the course. The second round was completed Saturday morning as snow fell on the Forest Oaks Country Club course around 7:30 a.m. EST.

T.C. Chen, the first-round leader with a 68, ballooned to a 76 in the second round and was at even-par 144 at the start of the third round. He shot a 77 Saturday for a three-day total of 221.

Third-round scores Saturday in the $600,000 Greater Greensboro Open golf tournament, played at the 6,958-yard, par-72 Forest Oaks Country Club course (a-denotes amateur):

Umpires, Leagues Meet; Seek To Reach Agreement

NEW YORK (AP) — With the start of the season just two days away, major league umpires met with the two leagues Saturday in an attempt to reach a new collective bargaining agreement.

The meeting began at noon and continued well into the evening. Richie Phillips, chief counsel for the umpires' union, had said he expected the meeting to last at least eight hours.

No early briefings were held, but Phillips reported after Friday's session that some progress had been made in the areas of salary and pension while there still was "real philosophical distance" between the two sides in some areas.

While the union has set no official strike deadline, Phillips has said the umpires would rather strike at the start of the season than work without an agreement. The season begins Monday.

Under the contract that expired at the end of the 1986 season, umpires earned salaries ranging from $30,000 in their first year to $80,000 in their 25th year. They also received $104.50 for daily expenses.

The leagues reportedly have offered a salary range of $33,000-$85,000 while the umpires asked for a minimum of $40,000 to a little more than $100,000.

Responding to questions about the likelihood of a strike, Phillips said Friday: "I can't really predict that because that's for (American League President) Bobby Brown and (National League President) Bartlett Giamatti to determine. They're the ones who hold the purse strings, and in the next 48 hours they'll be able to tell us whether we're going to have this thing completed or not, and that will dictate whether or not we will go to work on Monday."

Brown and Giamatti have instructed all teams to have substitute umpires ready in case of a strike.

One Year Ago...Jack Was Back

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

A year ago, with a Sunday sun slanting through the Georgia pines, Jack Nicklaus provided a watching world with one of the greatest moments in sports history.

At 46, he won his sixth Masters tournament.

A past-his-prime Jack took on the world — Seve Ballesteros of Spain, Greg Norman of Australia, Sandy Lyle of Scotland, among others — and won.

"It had been six years since I'd won a major. I was 46 years old. I'd had such a horrible spring. From the standpoint that I was able to take my game and my body and my level of competition, put it together and then finish it off . . . It was probably the most competitive experience of my life," he said.

Nicklaus was four shots back going into the final round and, really, didn't get anything going until he birdied the ninth hole.

But he followed with a thundering 30 over the back, including an eagle on 15. He left the 18th green with a 65 and tears in his eyes, his arm around the shoulders of his caddy, son Jackie.

But he wasn't a winner quite yet; all the right things still had to happen.

Ballesteros had to make a major mistake. He did, hitting into the water on the 15th. Norman had to blow it on the 18th. He did, missing the green. Tom Kite had to miss an 18th-hole putt. He did.

And Nicklaus became the oldest Masters champion, expanding his record collection of major professional titles to 18, along with two U.S. amateur crowns.

"It was pretty special," Nicklaus said, "probably the most special of them all."

Some of it, he suggested, was done from memory — memories of all the great moments in all the great championships.

"I've been there often enough. I had the experience to control myself and control my emotions," he said. "Once I got myself in position, the memories of how to play came back very quickly. I've played enough that when I was able play well, I was able sustain that level."

It was special for another reason, too.

"It let me go out on top. People were saying I was through. I didn't want to quit like that," he said.

He hasn't really quit, or retired.

"I'm semi-retired. I don't consider myself a regular tour player anymore. I'll play the majors and a few others. That's all," he said.

Can he still win a major?

"Oh, sure," he said, as if surprised by the question.

"Not consistently, but I can still win. I can't play like I used to, but once in a great while I can get it altogether. Look at last year. Nobody gave me a chance in the Masters. That can happen again."

Phil Rodgers and Fred Marti had finished a practice round with Jack Nicklaus just prior to the Hawaiian Open, 10 years ago.

They'd had a little bet going and Fred and Phil got into Jack's pocket.

They were settling up in the locker room at Waialae and Marti was needling Nicklaus: "You're not so good, Jack. You're just riding a 15-year lucky streak."

Nicklaus needed more than luck to win everything worth winning, with one exception — the Canadian Open. He has played so well so consistently that, at one point, he said with sincerity and conviction, "Golf became easy for me."

Though he has won more money than any other professional, he always kept in mind that "golf is a game. I've always played it as a game.".

In the tradition of Bobby Jones, his golfing role-model, Nicklaus built his career and record around the majors.

He redefined them.

In Jones' era, the majors were the U.S. Open and Amateur and the British Open and Amateur. Jones won those tournaments 13 times.

Now, the majors consist of the U.S. and British Opens, the Masters and PGA.

Nicklaus won those tournaments 18 times. (Walter Hagen is next at 11). His collection includes six Masters (a record), five PGAs (ties the record), four U.S. Opens (ties the record) and three British Opens.

"My records will be broken someday," Nicklaus said. "All I could do is make it as difficult as possible for them to be broken."

Nicklaus won his first major — and his first pro tournament — in a playoff against The King, Arnold Palmer, in the 1962 U.S. Open at Oakmont, Pa., about 40 miles from Palmer's hometown of Latrobe.

It was not a popular win. The chubby, crewcut kid wearing a gray sweater and what Nicklaus called "my army refugee pants," beat the game's most popular player. He was jeered by sign-carrying spectators, imploring "Fat Jack" to "Hit It Over Here."

While significant, the victory had other implications for Nicklaus.

"It was important from the standpoint that winning breeds winning. Winning that first one, and winning the way I did, beating Arnold in a playoff in his own backyard, so to speak — that gave me the confidence to build on that win, to take it and go on from there to something else," Nicklaus said.

A year later, he won his first Masters and the PGA.

Nicklaus failed to win a major in 1964, but was second in three of them.

He won the Masters again in 1965, beating Palmer and Gary Player, and became the first to successfully defend the title with a record-breaking 9-shot decision in '66. He completed a career sweep of the Big Four at Muirfield, Scotland, in the British Open.

Nicklaus won a second U.S. Open at Baltusrol in 1967, then went into the first of several declines.

"I was just sort of walking around," he said. "I'd pretty well won everything I played in when I wanted to win it. If I didn't win, it was sort of silly that I didn't and sort of 'Why in the world didn't I win that?' "

"About the middle of '67 I stopped working at it. I got sloppy at my game, didn't work at improving."

Then his father died early in 1970, and the jolt gave Nicklaus his first glimpse of his own mortality.

"You sort of look back and say, 'Good gracious, you're not around here forever.' His whole enjoyment was watching me play and win in golf tournaments. Maybe I just didn't perform, put out like I should have.

"So that got me back to work again.

"After '70 I played pretty well again. I won at St. Andrews. That's where I started coming back and playing majors again."

Between 1970 and 1975, Nicklaus won seven major championships, including the 1973 PGA at Canterbury, Ohio, where he surpassed Jones' record of 13 majors.

He'd proven his point — again. He was No. 1.

"The majors I've won, it seems I've played well and the other guys, well, some of them played well, but they didn't really push me to the nth degree," he said. "When other guys have had the opportunity to win — (Tom) Watson has had the opportunity to win on a few occasions, and (Lee) Trevino has had the opportunity to win, and I've been there — they pushed their game to a level that got them by me.

"Lee beat me down the stretch quite a few times. So did Tom.

"I was the challenge to them to get by to get to the top. I was the guy they had to get over. But I didn't feel the same way about them because I didn't have somebody to climb over. And for some reason, I got beat a few times."

Some of those losses hurt badly; some he shrugged off.

At the 1977 British Open at Turnberry, Nicklaus and Watson engaged in perhaps the greatest two-man show in golf history. From a tie for the 36-hole lead, Nicklaus, partnered with Watson, played the last two rounds 65-66 and lost.

Watson played them 65-65.

"That happens," Nicklaus said.

Twin Bill Scheduled

Wet grounds washed out still another East Carolina baseball game Saturday — but the odds are it will still be gotten in.

The Pirates were to face Richmond in a doubleheader Saturday with a single game set for today.

Now, however, the Pirates and Spiders will meet in a doubleheader at 1 p.m. today, with the single game set for Monday. If the games are again postponed, a twin bill will be scheduled for Monday.

East Carolina currently stands 6-0 in the Colonial Athletic Association while Richmond brings in a 4-2 record.

East Carolina's Lady Pirates, who traveled to Charlottesville, Va., for the Lady Cavalier Invitational Softball Tournament, returned home without lifting a bat when the two-day event, scheduled Friday and Saturday was canceled because of the weather.

Bradley, King Share Shore Lead

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Pat Bradley, who began a sensational LPGA campaign last year with a victory in the Dinah Shore, charged into a share of the lead Saturday with Betsy King after three rounds of the 1987 tournament.

The tournament will be tightly bunched at the top heading into Sunday's final round of the $500,000 event at Mission Hills Country Club as nine other players are within three shots of the co-leaders.

"I expect it to be a tremendous golf tournament tomorrow, the way it's all bunched together," Bradley said after her third-round 69 put her at 1-under-par 215 for the tournament.

"The way everybody's bunched up, anything can happen. Because of it being a major, I don't think anybody will pull out and run away with it.

"If I play the same way I did today, keep in control of my game, I should have no real problems."

King, who carded a par-72 for her third round, said: "'I'm still tied for the lead, didn't lose any ground today. I think it'll take a round in the 60s to win.

"It would be nice to win a major," she added.

Bradley was three shots back of co-leaders King and Amy Alcott heading into the third round.

Alcott had a 74 to drop to 1-over-par for the tournament.

Chris Johnson, with a 66, and Jane Geddes, with a 67, both shot their way into contention and were with Alcott in a group at 217.

Also in that group were Jan Stephenson, with a third-round 73, and Rosie Jones, with a 72.

Conditions were virtually ideal for the third round after winds gusting to 40 mph had made play extremely challenging on Friday. Bradley, who had a 74 on Friday after an opening 72, and King, with 68-75 the first two days, were the only players under-par after three rounds.

Bradley, 36, is trying for her second straight victory, having won the LPGA event in Phoenix last weekend.

That was her first victory of 1987, but she was the tour's dominant player in 1986. She followed her Dinah Shore victory with four other wins, including two more of the LPGA's majors — the du Maurier Classic and the LPGA Championship.

Bradley also earned $492,021 last year, a record for the women's tour that also made her the first LPGA player to top the $2 million in career earnings.

Bradley, who joined the tour in 1974 and had been consistent — but not spectacular — before last year's outstanding campaign, has won 21 events in her career.

Heading into Sunday's final round at Mission Hills, others within striking distance of the leaders included Patty Sheehan, Lisa Young, Cathy Gerring and Ayako Okamoto, all at 218.

King, 31, is looking for her ninth victory since joining the LPGA Tour in 1977. She earned her eighth career triumph last month in the Tucson, Ariz., tournament. King also was runner-up to Kathy Postlewait in the first tournament of the year, in Boca Raton, Fla.

Geddes is the only two-time winner thus far in 1987. She collected consecutive wins at the LPGA's stops in Kauai, Hawaii, and Glendale, Calif., winning each event in a playoff.

The Dinah Shore winner will collect $80,000.

Third-round scores Saturday at the LPGA Dinah Shore Invitational at the 6,292-yard, par-72 Mission Hills Country Club (a-denotes amatuer):

Hagler-Leonard Set Monday

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Sugar Ray Leonard will challenge Marvelous Marvin Hagler on Monday night in what he calls "only a continuation of my career."

The scheduled 12-round match also "is the final chapter," Leonard said. "That's why I'm fighting Hagler."

Hagler also has indicated the bout at Caesars Palace could conclude his career.

"If this is my last fight, it will be my best," the middleweight champion said. "All I learned in boxing will come out that night."

Many boxing people feel the fight has come too late, that Hagler has started to slip and that inactivity has dulled Leonard's skills.

It will only be Leonard's second fight since he knocked out Bruce Finch in the third round of his final defense of the undisputed welterweight title Feb. 15, 1982, at Reno, Nev.

Leonard came out of retirement to stop Kevin Howard in the ninth round May 11, 1984, at Worcester, Mass., then retired again.

Even Hagler has asked, "Why didn't he come get me in 1982 when we were both in our prime?"

It's doubtful the fight could have happened in 1982 because Leonard would have insisted on a 154-pound limit rather than 160-pound middleweight limit. That would have been unacceptable to Hagler.

Leonard, who will be 31 on May 17, feels he has grown into a middleweight and expects to weigh about 157 or 158 pounds for the fight, which has been the subject of tremendous hype.

It also has been the target of criticism because of Leonard's past retinal problem with his left eye, which led to his first retirment in 1982.

"I'm not really thinking about his eye," Hagler said this week. "He's the one that made the choice. I'm going in there to do a job. My job is to defend the world middleweight championship."

Leonard, weary of and irritated by constant questions about his eye, once said, "I'm upset that anyone would think I would take an unreasonable risk of injury."

Before the fight was announced Aug. 18, Leonard was examined by doctors at the request of the Nevada State Athletic Commission. One was Dr. Ronald Michels, who operated on Leonard's eye. Another represented Lloyds of London, the fight insurers.

Both fighters were given physical examinations here Tuesday night. The official weigh-in will be Monday morning.

"This fight is not for money," Hagler said. "This fight is to see who is the best in the world."

But the money is there, as much a part of this as the gloves.

Hagler is guaranteed $12 million. He also is working a percentage deal, and promoter Bob Arum said, "Hagler is assured of $15 million" and could earn much more.

Early in the week, Arum said, "We've taken in more money than any fight in history." He thinks the net revenue will top $30 million and could even approach $40 million.

There are sceptics.

Leonard is guaranteed $11 million and has 50 percent of the closed-circuit television rights to homes in the Baltmore-Washington area. That should earn another $1 million or so for Leonard, who does not have a manager. One-third of Hagler's purse will go to managers Pat and Goody Petronelli.

The fight, at a soldout 15,300-seat outdoor stadium, will start about 8:15 p.m. PST. It will be shown on closed-circuit television at between 1,500 and 1,600 locations, with about 3 million seats, in the United State and Canada, according to Arum.

The promoter also said it will shown on limited pay-per-view television in the United States and will be beamed to about 75 other countries.

Hagler, who will be 33 on May 23, enters the fight with a 62-2-2 record with 52 knockouts. It will be his title defense, just one short of Carlos Monzon's record.

Hagler has an unbeaten streak of 37 fights dating back to a 10-round decision loss to Willie "The Worm" Monroe, March 9, 1976 at Philadelphia.

In that streak, is a 15-round draw against Vito Antuofermo, which enabled Antuofermo to keep the middleweight title on Nov. 30, 1979. On that same card at Caesars Palace, Leonard won the World Boxing Council welterweight title by stopping Wilfred Benitez in the 15th round.

Leonard is 33-1 with 24 knockouts and has won six straight fights since a 15-round decision loss to Robert Duran on June 20, 1980 at Montreal.

Leonard will try to become the seventh welterweight champion to win the middleweight title. The last was Emile Griffith, who scored a 15-round decision over Dick Tiger on April 25, 1966, at New York.

He also could be become the 10th fighter to win titles in three weight divisions.

South Alabama Nixes Driesell

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — With former Maryland basketball coach Lefty Driesell out of the picture, the two-week search for a new coach at South Alabama focused on two leading contenders.

South Alabama officials on Friday withdrew the coaching offer they made to Driesell earlier in the week, citing the possibility he would be named coach of a new National Basketball Association franchise in Charlotte, N.C.

"They called me up and said I had a certain time to make up my mind," Driesell said Friday night. "The time was up. I told them I couldn't make it up, I'd have to reject the offer."

South Alabama Athletic Director Joe Gottfried said "we felt (Driesell) was not in a position to make a decision on a future commitment" to the university because of his involvement with the newly awarded NBA team.

The search to replace Hanks, who was fired on March 19, now has turned to San Jacinto Junior College Coach Ronnie Arrow and Bill Musselman, coach of the Continental Basketball Association's Rapid City, S.D., Thrillers.

"You can say they are the two leading candidates for the job right now," said South Alabama spokesman Al Schultz.

Gottfried said a decision on a successor to Hanks would not be made until at least Monday.

Driesell, who left Maryland last fall following the cocaine-related death of Len Bias, downplayed which side took its offer off the table first.

"What's the difference? I decided not to go there. You know they offered me the job. What have they been talking about? My health?"

When you work 70 hours a week, you don't want to come home to one of these.

Lang Named To All-State Team

By DAVID DROSCHAK
Associated Press Writer

Chapel Hill's Henrik Rodl, a foreign exchange student from West Germany, and North Mecklenburg's Andrea Stinson, one of the nation's top women's players, head this year's Associated Press men's and women's all-state basketball teams for North Carolina.

Farmville Central's Liesa Lang was selected to the second team women's team for the state, the only area player recognized.

Rodl, a 6-foot-6 senior forward from Heusenstamm, West Germany, won the AP men's player of the year award and received 16 votes out of a possible 19 from a panel of sports writers from across the state.

Rodl, who averaged 23 points a game, scored 34 in Chapel Hill's 82-79 victory over North Mecklenburg to win the 4-A state championship and was named the game's most valuable player. He also picked up the MVP award at the Eastern Regionals in Fayetteville where he scored 29 points and grabbed 15 rebounds in the title game against New Bern.

Stinson won the AP women's player of the year award and garnered 19 of a possible 21 votes for the women's all-state team. The 5-10 senior forward averaged 30.2 points a game, twice scoring 49 points in a game.

Stinson has scored 2,128 career points and led her team to the 4-A state championship last year.

Joining Rodl on the men's first team are Swannanoa Owen's Brad Johnson, Jordan-Matthews' Robert Siler, Pittsboro Northwood's Todd Sanders, Cullowhee's Michael Cottrell and Hobbton's Chris King. Cottrell made the AP second team last season.

Johnson, who received 10 votes, averaged 26.7 points and 7.9 rebounds a game. The 6-6, 200-pound senior, played in 104 consecutive games and scored over 2,000 career points.

Siler, a 6-3 senior, was named the AP's football player of the year and has already signed to play college basketball at Wake Forest. He averaged 22.5 point a game before breaking a bone in his foot late in the season.

Sanders, a 6-5, 210-pound forward, averaged 26 points and 14 rebounds per game, while shooting 60.4 percent from the field. Sanders, like Siler, has already signed with Wake Forest.

The 6-1, 180-pound Cottrell averaged 27.8 points this season and scored more than 2,500 points in his career. Led state in scoring last season with a 29.1 average. Has committed to play for Western Carolina where his father, Steve, is the coach.

King is the only junior on the first team. The 6-7 forward averaged 23.3 points and 13.1 rebounds for a team that finished 23-5.

The second team consists of Salisbury's Brian Withers, Charlotte Myers Park's Terry Massey, Lincolnton's Casey Potts, Chapel Hill's Major Geer and Hendersonville's Scott King.

In addition to Stinson, who has made the AP first team three straight seasons, the women's first team is made up of Asheville's Rhonda Mapp, East Burke's Christa Hull, SouthWest Edgecombe's Pam Gorham and Clinton's Danyel Parker.

Mapp, a 6-3 senior forward, averaged 25.0 points and 16.7 rebounds per game this past season in leading her team to the 4-A state crown. Mapp, who made the first team last season, finished her career with 1,788 points and 1,032 rebounds.

Hull is also a returning all-state player who had fine senior season. The 6-2 Hull averaged 26.2 points and 12.8 rebounds this past season.

Gorham averaged 19.1 points, 6.5 rebounds, 4.5 assists and 5.5 steals per game. Gorham ended her high school career with 1,960 points.

Parker is the only sophomore to make the team. The 5-5 guard, who made the second team last season, averaged 31.0 points a game after scoring at a 20.0 clip in her freshman season.

The second team is made up of Newton-Conover's Tisha England, Bandys' Mitzi Yount, Farmville Central's Liesa Lang, East Carteret's Kim Oden and Trinity's LeAnn Kennedy. Both Oden and Lang are seniors, while the other three second-teamers are juniors.

The following is a list of players voted to The Associated Press first- and second-team men's all-state basketball squad as voted on by a panel of 19 sports writers across North Carolina, with players' name, school, height, year and number of votes:

Charlotte's Stinson Picked State's Top Female Player

By DAVID DROSCHAK
Associated Press Writer

The basketball player Andrea Stinson is most often compared to isn't a woman, but the National Basketball Association's top scorer Michael Jordan.

Stinson, considered by some to be the best women's high school basketball player in the country, has been named The Associated Press women's prep player of the year in North Carolina. Stinson, a 5-foot-10 senior forward, received 16 of a possible 21 first-place votes cast of a panel of prep sports writers from across the state.

Farmville Central's Liesa Lang received two votes, while Asheville's Rhonda Mapp, Newton-Conover's Tisha England and High Point Andrews' Shannon Thomas received one vote each.

Stinson averaged 30.2 points a game this past season, scoring 49 points in a game twice. For her career, the three-time first-team all-state player scored 2,128 points.

USA Today, ESPN and Parade Magazine all named Stinson as one of the nation's top players.

"Sometimes I do things I don't ever remember practicing," Stinson said.

Stinson's biggest supporters are her former coach and her coach-to-be.

"Everything in the game of basketball she is good at," said Stinson's high school coach Carroll Mizelle. "That sets her apart. A lot of players are talented, but they don't have the determination that Andrea has.

"I'd hate to even estimate how many people contacted her about college," Mizelle said. "Everybody on the East Coast, some in the Midwest — even as far away as Arizona."

But Stinson has chosen to play her college basketball at N.C. State. And coach-to-be Kay Yow couldn't be happier.

"Because of her great athletic ability, she is able at times to do some incredible things in basketball," Yow said. "She has great potential for the game at all levels."

Yow is a bit worried people may expect too much from Stinson in college.

"I know everybody is expecting a lot and I think she will give a lot," Yow said. "But, she will be a freshman and needs time to adjust."

Jackson To Be Playing

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — Bo Jackson, who won the 1985 Heisman Trophy, was placed on the Kansas City Royals roster Saturday and is expected to play outfield Monday when the Royals meet the Chicago White Sox in the season home opener.

"He will play," John Schuerholz, Royals' executive vice president and general manager, said Saturday at his Florida office. "We're not going to put him on the ballclub and not have him play. That would make no sense at all."

Jackson, who shocked most of the sports world last summer when he spurned a $7 million football offer from the Tampa Bay Buccaneers of the NFL, is hitting .290 this spring.

"This is the first step," Jackson said at the Royals' clubhouse in Florida. "It's like starting to walk again. You've got to take that first step. I've taken it. I can't wait to get to Kansas City."

Schuerholz said Manager Billy Gardner would decide Jackson's position on the team. But Schuerholz said, "It's safe to assume that he will be starting in left field Monday afternoon."

Gardner was attending a weekend wedding in Connecticut and was not available for comment.

After turning down Tampa Bay's offer of guaranteed millions of dollars for a much smaller guaranteed offer from the Royals, Jackson was assigned to the Class AA Memphis Chicks of the Southern League June 27. After a slow start against AA pitching, the 220-pounder with sprinter speed recovered to post a .277 average in 53 games.

In several games with the Royals in September, he flashed signs of brilliance, including a tape-measure homer — an estimated 475-foot blast — that is believed to be the longest ever hit in Royals Stadium.

Jackson, 24, who was born in Bessemer, Ala., was the No. 1 overall pick in the NFL draft last year. He was the all-time leading rusher at Auburn after logging 4,303 yards and won the 51st annual Heisman Trophy his senior year.

Player Of The Year

Chapel Hill's Henrik Rodl, a West German exchange student, has been named as the Associated Press' Male Basketball Player of the Year for North Carolina. Rodl led Chapel Hill to the 4-A state championship this spring. (AP Laserphoto)

Rodl Is Choice As Top Prep Star

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — While other teen-agers in West Germany were on the soccer field, Henrik Rodl spent countless hours shooting basketballs in an empty gym, trying to perfect skills in a game that holds little interest in his country.

However, Rodl's skills did not go to waste. He came to the United States as a foreign exchange student this year and lead Chapel Hill High School to the men's 4-A state championship while averaging 23.3 points a game.

Rodl also was named The Associated Press men's high school basketball player of the year in North Carolina Sunday. The 6-foot-6 guard-forward from Heusenstamm, West Germany, received 12 of a possible 19 first-place votes from a panel of prep sports writers from across the state.

Swannanoa Owen's Brad Johnson and Cullowhee's Michael Cottrell came in second in the balloting with two votes each, while Pittsboro Northwood's Todd Sanders, Hendersonville's Scott King and Charlotte Myers Park's Terry Massey each garnered one vote.

Rodl's "dream season" was capped by scoring 34 points in Chapel Hill's 82-79 victory over North Mecklenburg in the 4-A title game and being named the game's most valuable player. He also picked up the MVP award at the Eastern Regionals in Fayetteville where he scored 29 points and grabbed 15 rebounds in the title game against New Bern.

"It was hard for me to understand the season was over," Rodl said in an interview this week. "There was no practice. I couldn't understand it — it was so muvh fun.

"I never realized it (playing basketball) could be so nice. I just came into the right place — having a great coach and a good environment," he said.

Chapel Hill coach Ken Miller said Rodl's father was an exchange student in the United States, and wanted his son to enjoy the same experiences. But with college recruiters beating down his door and ringing the telephone off the hook, Rodl must return to West Germany in June to complete two more years of high school.

Rodl said he doesn't know if he'll ever return to America to college or professional basketball.

"I can't say now, I'm like a sophomre here," Rodl said. "If you would ask someone out there who is a sophomore, what they wanted to do, they would look at you with a big question mark on their face."

Miller said Rodl and his father will sit down two years from now and made a decision on whether to come back to the United States.

"They (Rodl and his father) seem to be very much aware that two years from now, as important as basketball is to him now, two years from now he may no longer be interested in basketball," Miller said. "Right now it has very much been the center of his life. I think if a decision was made today, he would return to the U.S."

Some Atlantic Coast Conference schools, along with several Top 20 schools have been in contact with Rodl, Miller said. "No, I don't want to get specific. I don't think would be fair."

Rodl, who shot 64.8 percent from the field this past season, said he didn't have much trouble adjusting to high school basketball in America — except for one instance.

"We play with a shot clock over there and there was one game we played against Durham High and it was real close," Rodl recalled. "At the end, I got real nervous and all we wanted to do was keep the ball. I was thinking shot clock. I wanted to pass or shoot — do something with the ball. I took a shot too early and I missed. Coach wasn't too happy."

Elliott Snaps Short Jinx

NORTH WILKESBORO (AP) — Bill Elliott broke the track record at North Wilkesboro Speedway Saturday, earning the top qualifying spot for the First Union 400 NASCAR race and recording the first short-track pole position of his career.

Elliott's Ford Thunderbird was clocked at 116.003 mph in qualifying for Sunday's race scheduled for 1 p.m. That broke the old record of 115.485 mph set by Dave Marcis in April 1981.

"I'm very much surprised at winning the pole," Elliott, suffering from a cold, said after earning his second top starting spot this season. "I'm also surprised at the weather."

Elliott's first short-track pole position came in his 45th attempt on a speedway less than a mile in length. He's finished on the lead lap in only two short-track races since joining NASCAR's Winston Cup circuit.

Qualifying for the top 10 starting positions originally was scheduled for Friday but had to be postponed because of rain and snow. The weather front dumped more than a foot of snow in the North Carolina mountains and a light snow still covered the speedway's grounds when qualifying began Saturday morning.

Joining Elliott on the front row is Benny Parsons in a Chevrolet. Parsons claimed the second starting spot with a lap of 114.673 mph.

"Man, am I ever surprised," Parsons said. "I thought a lot of people would have beaten that time. I never thought it would stand up for second fastest.

"The track's awfully hard to get hold of right now because it's so cold and you can't get the tires heated up like they need to be to get a good adhesion. The track should improve a lot between today and tomorrow, once we get some more rubber back down on it," Parsons added.

Rounding out the top five are Dale Earnhardt, Chevrolet, 114.405 mph; Bobby Allison, Buick, 114.393; and Brett Bodine, Chevrolet, 114.161.

Bodine qualified the Junior Johnson-prepared car normally driven by Terry Labonte, who broke his right shoulder blade last weekend at Darlington, S.C. Bodine will relief drive for Labonte in Sunday's 400-lap race, but because he is a rookie on NASCAR's Winston Cup circuit, he must qualify the car. Labonte will start the race so he can earn points in the battle for the national driving championship, then turn it over to Bodine.

The following is the starting lineup for Sunday's First Union 400 at North Wilkesboro Speedway. The lineup is listed with the driver's name, make of car, and qualifying speed.

1. Bill Elliott, Ford, 116.003 mph
2. Benny Parsons, Chevrolet, 114.673
3. Dale Earnhardt, Chevrolet, 114.405
4. Bobby Allison, Buick, 114.393.

31. Eddie Bierschwale, Oldsmobile, provisional start
32. J.D. McDuffie, Pontiac, provisional start

Pro Franchise Means Big Bucks

CHARLOTTE (AP) — An NBA franchise in Charlotte would shoot the area into the major leagues of the business world as well as the sports community, business leaders say.

"For years, the city of Charlotte has competed against such cities as Richmond, Jacksonville and Birmingham for business," said John Connaughton, an economist at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. "Now with a pro basketball team, we're not in their league any more. We're in there with cities like New Orleans and Atlanta."

George Shinn, the Charlotte businessman who orchestrated the city's bid for an NBA expansion team, said a professional sports team brings an identity to a city that no other business can match.

"When you think of Atlanta you don't think about Coca-Cola. You think about the Braves and the Hawks," he said. "Who's heard of Brooklyn since the Dodgers left?"

On Thursday, the NBA's expansion committee recommended that Charlotte be awarded the first of three new franchises in time for the 1988-89 season.

Shinn said Friday that early projections placed the annual economic impact of an expansion team in Charlotte at about $30 million. But he said the franchise could pump as much as $100 million a year into the area's economy.

"When the study was being put together we asked that it be ultra-conservative," he said in an interview in his downtown office. "We didn't want to paint a false picture when we went to the league."

Connaughton, who made the $30 million projection, agreed that the figure was conservative. And he said Shinn's estimate of $100 million in annual economic benefits was not an impossible goal.

"Depending on how good a job they market this team, the sky's the limit," he said.

Connaughton said the study did not take into account the larger seating capacity of the new coliseum where the team will play its home games. It also used lower ticket prices and concession sales than are now being projected, he added.

Shinn said as of noon Friday, more than 9,000 season tickets had been sold. The league wants 10,000 season tickets to be sold prior to the April 22 meeting of the NBA Board of Governors.

The board will make a final decision on the committee's recommendation at its April 22 meeting in New York.

Connaughton's study said the franchise would generate $13.4 million or more in direct spending each year. The total economic benefit would be more than $30 million, he said.

For every dollar spent in connection with the team, he said, fans would pay 71 cents, area advertisers 9 cents and television networks the other 20 cents.

Most of the money — 72 cents — would be spent at the coliseum and for player salaries, the team's corporation, or the Auditorium-Coliseum Authority, which will operate the building for the city.

The 72 cents includes 39 cents paid by fans for tickets, 10 cents for concessions and 2 cents for parking, the study said. The city's share of the NBA television rights would go to the team.

Of the remaining 28 cents, 16 cents would be spent on food, entertainment and lodging. Area businesses would spend about 9 cents to local radio and TV stations and 3 cents from fans to taxi companies and gasoline stations, Connaughton's study said.

Shinn said he based his $100 million figure on a study by the Wharton School of Business on the impact of professional sports on the city of Philadelphia's economy.

"Philadelphia has four professional teams and they have an annual economic impact of half a billion dollars," he said. "Their baseball team is at the top because of 81 home games. But basketball has to be second, which would be one-fourth of the total. That's about $125 million a year."

Worley Captures Modified Event

NORTH WILKESBORO (AP) — Satch Worley took the lead with 49 laps remaining in Saturday's Lowe's 150 at North Wilkesboro Speedway and held on for a five-car length victory in a NASCAR Modified race.

Worley, who started on the pole position in his Pontiac, led the first 37 laps at the five-eighths mile track but relinquished it during the second caution when he pitted to change a right front tire.

Worley then spent most of the race attempting to catch Frank Fleming of Mount Airy and John Bryant of Bassett, Va., as they battled for the lead.

Fleming's victory hopes ended in the frontstretch wall just as the event's third caution was displayed. Fleming was leading when Philip Smith spun his Cavalier in turn two. As Fleming exited turn four, his Skyhawk hit some oil and crashed into the outside wall.

Bryant then took the lead on lap 55 of the 150-lap event and held it until lap 102 when Worley dove under him coming off turn four after Bryant bobbled.

Billy Middleton finished third, one lap off the pace, while Gary Myers took fourth in a Cavalier. Fifth went to Bobby Hutchens, also in a Cavalier.

Worley led twice for 86 laps and averaged 87.390 mph in the race slowed by four caution flags for 30 laps.

1. Satch Worley, Pontiac, 150 laps, $2,500, 87.390 mph.
2. Johnny Bryant, Cavalier, 150, $1,500.
3. Billy Middleton, EXP, 149, $1,200.
4. Gary Myers, Cavalier, 149, $800.
5. Bobby Hutchens, Cavalier, 147, $600.
6. Melvin Swisher, Arrow, 137, $450.
7. Johnny Johnson, Pontiac, 127, $375.
8. Randy Morrison, Cavalier, 119, $330.
9. Robert Jeffreys, Cavalier, 117, $240.
10. Lanny Wilkins, Pontiac, 113, $200.
11. Thomas Needham, Skyhawk, 94, $185.
12. Junior Miller, Cavalier, 72, $175.
13. Frank Fleming, Skyhawk, 54, $170.
14. Philip Smith, Cavalier, 38, $165.
15. Billy Agee, Pontiac, 32, $160.
16. Ralph Brinkly, Pontiac, 16, $155.
17. Roger Hill, Cavalier, 1, $150.

GGO Like Stroll In Meat Locker

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

GREENSBORO (AP) — It was billed this year as North Carolina's Spring Spectacular, but in the first week of April, the Greater Greensboro Open golf tournament closely resembles a three-hour stroll through a meat locker.

Last year's GGO was blessed with temperatures in the 80s and hardly any precipitation. Through the first three rounds of this year's $600,000 tournament, the 144 players who started have watched the mercury nose dive from the 60s to the 30s, battled gusty and swirling winds and started Saturday morning with snowfall.

The snow came after play was halted on Friday because of thunder and lightning.

At 2:30 Saturday afternoon, the temperature had dropped to 39 degrees with a wind chill factor of 21 degrees. There was a threat of light snow Saturday night.

The weather seems to have had little effect on the gallery, however. While it was not crowded along the Forest Oaks Country Club fairways, the diehard golf fans turned out. Some cited love of the game, some, like Debbie Robinson of Greensboro, just cited love.

"Because Brian wanted to come," said Mrs. Robinson, tightly clutching her husband's arm as the wind whipped down the No. 1 fairway.

Robinson saw the predictions of snow and cold and wind and said he had some second thoughts about watching the pros. But he came anyway.

Dan Russell came up from Chesterfield, S.C., and said he attended for "the thrill of watching the pros play in the cold."

"You get so much more feel for the game when you're out here watching them play. It's not like a fantasy like on TV," Russell said.

Some people had little choice but to show up, like the fairway marshals whose job it is to keep the gallery quiet as players hit their shots. There was no place for them to get warm except when the round ended.

"I've got a bunch of long-sleeved shirts on. It's not too bad," said Todd Edwards of Durham. "It was my choice."

Susan Wrenn, sister of contestant Robert Wrenn, felt obliged to watch her brother play and followed him through the round.

"I think that the weather's not unexpected, but I think that the guys aren't real happy about playing a lot in this kind of weather because it plays games with their swings," Ms. Wrenn said.

Because of Friday's heavy rains, the completion of the second round was delayed until Saturday morning. When the 75 golfers arrived to complete that round, they were greeted with heavy snow which looked threatening but didn't stick.

"It was freezing cold and snowing like crazy," Ms. Wrenn said. "They were supposed to start at 7:30, but they put it back a half-hour. But even when they started at 8, it was still snowing."

Ms. Wrenn said she had never seen snow on a golf course and added "something I hope we never see again."

Beer sales certainly didn't suffer at the GGO. One concession vendor said he had sold out of his allotment of 150 extra-large beer mugs.

"It warms you up," said Lindsay Dilley of High Point, adding that people are going to come to a golf tournament regardless of the weather.

"Weather doesn't mean much to the diehards," he said.

One Year Ago...Jack...

"I got lazy again about '75," he said. "I went through another lull, starting in about '76, '77. Then I started working at it again in the '80s, for a couple of years."

It paid off with victories in the 1980 U.S. Open, again at Baltusrol, and the PGA.

Nicklaus issues an audible sigh when asked about his greatest disappointments.

"Muirfield and Pebble Beach. There's not much to separate them," he said.

He had won the 1972 Masters and U.S. Opens, the first two legs of the Grand Slam — a one-year sweep of all the game's major professional titles. He went to Muirfield in Scotland, perhaps his favorite course, as a strong favorite. Despite a painful neck injury, he kept himself in contention through the first 54 holes.

"That was my opportunity to win the Grand Slam. I had the injury, then I got back in it. Then, in the last round, Trevino chipped in when, basically, he'd given up," Nicklaus said.

Trevino won. Nicklaus was runner-up — one of seven times he did that in the British Open.

Ten years later, another treasured goal — a record fifth U.S. Open championship — was within his grasp at Pebble Beach. Watson's historic chip-in from an impossible position above and behind the 17th green took it from him.

"That was my Open. Or, at least, it was my Open when he hit his tee shot on 17. Then he chips in. I was stunned," Nicklaus said.

Still is to a degree.

"I never have gotten totally back to it again," he said. "I don't know. I tried to, but I just wasn't quite as enthusiastic. I haven't put out the effort since then. Not that I haven't worked at it, it's just that I haven't been able to work at it at the level that I did in my 20's and 30's."

There is an appreciable reduction in the noise level when Nicklaus enters a locker room. Other players may kid around with Palmer, punching, grabbing and playfully wrestling, but they grow quiet around Jack.

It's called reverence.

"He is the absolute best player who ever wore shoes. The best. No question about it," Trevino said.

The son of a Columbus, Ohio, druggist, Jack was 5-foot-10 and an outstanding high school athlete by the time he turned 13. Besides golf, he played center on the basketball team. He was the switch-hitting catcher on the baseball team. He quarterbacked, punted and placekicked for the football team. Goaded by his father, Charlie, Nicklaus even ran the 100- and 220-yard dashes and high jumped in track.

"Dad used to be a great needler," Nicklaus said. "We used to race each other to the movie theater, and even with a bad ankle, he'd still beat me.

"My dad was an 11-letter man in high school. He played football, basketball and baseball at Ohio State. He played pro football under an assumed name.

"What my dad did was introduce me to everything. Get me interested, then let me make up my own mind about what I wanted to do," Nicklaus said.

"If I hadn't gone into golf, I'd probably have played baseball. That probably was my best sport," he said.

Football also held a large attraction.

"Woody Hayes was a customer at the drug store, and a good friend of the family," Nicklaus said. "My dad asked him for advice. But Woody said, 'Keep him away from football. He could be a very good fullback, but he has a very special talent for golf. Let him develop that talent.' So I guess Woody was indirectly responsible for me going into golf."

Even so, Nicklaus was recruited for basketball by Ohio State.

"That was with (Jerry) Lucas, (John) Havlicek, Bobby Knight, that group, so I probably wouldn't have played much," he said. "I guess it was a wise decision."

Nicklaus came to golf by accident — an accident in which his father broke an ankle. After that break, the elder Nicklaus took up golf. His 10-year-old son occasionally tagged along, and eventually became interested.

Young Jack was given a cut-down set of clubs about the same time Jack Grout became the pro at Scioto Country Club in Columbus. Jack enrolled in Grout's junior classes.

"You could tell right away that he was a perfectionist. Everything he's always done has been with a purpose," said Grout, the only teacher Nicklaus ever had.

Nicklaus' biography says he shot 51 over the first nine holes he played.

"I thought that was pretty easy," he later recalled. "So I shot 61 on the second nine I played, and 71 on the third."

Before summer ended, he had an 18-hole score of 81. He first broke 70 in 1953, at age 13. It was that year that he played in his first national tournament, the USGA Junior Championship, and won his first titles — the Columbus Junior Match-Play Championship and the Ohio State Junior Championship.

The national and state titles piled up in the next few years and he began to hear of Bobby Jones.

"The influence of Jones was the amateur influence, the purity of the game. The game for the game itself. I got that ingrained in me. I guess it never left me, because I've always played the game as a game," Nicklaus said. "It was one of the best things that ever happened to me.

"About the same time, I met Joe Dey (former executive director of the USGA and former PGA Tour Commissioner). He's a delightful person, but he also believed in discipline.

"I'd say Bobby Jones and Joe Dey were the two greatest influences on me as far as what the games meant, and my father and Jack Grout from the standpoint of encouragement and teaching and the way to go about the game and your life," Nicklaus said.

With those influences at work, the 17-year-old won his first national title, the 1957 National Jaycees. He also made his first appearance in the U.S. Open, missing the cut.

At 18, he played in his first PGA Tour event. He was one shot off the lead at the halfway point of the Rubber City Open, then faded to 12th. He made the cut and finished 41st in the U.S. Open.

He won the U.S. Amateur Championship two of the next three years — at the Broadmoor in Colorado Springs, Colo., in 1959 and at Pebble Beach in 1961 — and started to draw national attention.

In 1959 he was also named to the U.S. Walker Cup team that defeated Britain's best amateurs.

It was then that he first considered a future in golf, he said. "I thought, hmmm, I must be one of the 10 best amateurs in the country. It was the first time I'd ever really considered my abilities," he said.

Nicklaus finished second to Palmer in the 1960 U.S. Open, and was fourth in 1961.

Later that year, the question of whether he would remain an amateur came to a head because of a persistent newsman.

Nicklaus, by now married and the father of a son, was a senior at Ohio State and making a very good living selling insurance.

First To Sign

Testaverde Signs Large Contract With Tampa Bay

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — This year the Heisman Trophy winner will play pro football.

Quarterback Vinny Testaverde, the 1986 Heisman winner, has signed a multi-year contract with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and will be the club's first pick in this month's NFL draft. Owner Hugh Culverhouse made the announcement Friday at a news conference that was mostly ceremonial.

Reports of a verbal agreement were confirmed early this week and the team, while not disclosing what would be discussed, gave advance notice of who the guests of honor would be.

For anyone who still couldn't figure out what was going on, corporate sponsors and team employees wore "Welcome Vinny," buttons and smiles almost as broad as those of Testaverde and his parents.

"I'm very excited to be here and become a part of the Tampa Bay family," the former University of Miami star said.

Terms of the contract Testaverde signed Thursday were not revealed, but he reportedly will receive $8.2 million over six years. That includes a $2 million signing bonus.

The signing came 25 days before the Bucs will officially make the 23-year-old quarterback the first overall selection in the April 28 draft. Burned a year ago when first-round pick Bo Jackson signed a pro baseball contract after Tampa Bay drafted him, Culverhouse was determined to sign Testaverde early.

"I set a goal because I thought it was in Vinny's best interest as well as the team's best interest," to get it done before draft day, the owner said. "I'm very happy he'll be able to begin working out in the next week or so."

Testaverde, 23, became the first Heisman winner since 1981 recipient Marcus Allen to sign an NFL contract out of college. The next three — Herschel Walker, Mike Rozier and Doug Flutie — played in the United States Football League before moving to the NFL.

Jackson, the 1985 winner, is beginning his second season in the Kansas City Royals' baseball organization.

The Bucs' losing tradition was believed to be one of the factors that swayed Jackson's decision, but Testaverde had no reservations about joining a team that has had only three winning seasons in the franchise's 11-year history.

"There was never a question in my mind that the Bucs wanted Vinny Testaverde and there was no question Vinny Testaverde wanted Tampa," said Bob Woolf, the player's Boston-based attorney.

"It's easy to take the easy road, but you feel a lot better when you have to work for it," Testaverde said in response to the question of why it wasn't important to him to start his career with a playoff contender.

The Bucs have compiled 2-14 records three of the past four years and haven't made the NFL playoffs since the strike-shortened 1982 season.

One of the reasons is instability at quarterback where the club lost Doug Williams to the USFL after a contract dispute in 1983. There have been four different starters since then.

Steve Young, who has four years left on a $5 million contract he signed in 1985, and Steve DeBerg shared the job the last two seasons. Tampa Bay ranked 27th in the NFL in passing and total offense in 1986 when Young threw for 2,382 yards, eight touchdowns and 13 interceptions.

DeBerg passed for 610 yards and five TDs with 12 interceptions.

"I know it's going to take a lot of hard work to take a giant step forward and win. We're all going to put our heads together and try our best," said Testaverde, who led the University of Miami to an 11-1 record in 1986 and a 21-3 mark in two seasons as a starter.

First-year Coach Ray Perkins said a timetable hasn't been set for Testaverde to move into the lineup.

"I said to him that he would come in and work, that he would earn everything he gets and play when we feel like he's ready to play," Perkins said.

Testaverde's deal is said to rival those of quarterbacks Jim Kelly and Dan Marino in total value. The Buffalo Bills are believed to be paying Kelly $8 million over five years, and Marino's contract with the Miami Dolphins reportedly is worth $9 million over six years.

Testaverde didn't become the University of Miami's No. 1 quarterback until his junior season. He made the most of his opportunity, though, and finished with 6,058 career yards passing with 48 touchdowns and 25 interceptions. He threw for 2,557 yards and 26 TDs as a senior.

The Hurricanes challenged for the national championship both years he was a starter. A loss to Tennessee in the 1986 Sugar Bowl crushed Miami's hopes two years ago, and Testaverde threw five interceptions as Penn State defeated the Hurricanes to win the national title in the 1987 Fiesta Bowl.

Carlton Agrees To Relieve; Is Signed By Cleveland

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Steve Carlton would have meant nothing to the Cleveland Indians if he had insisted on being a starter, Manager Pat Corrales says.

The Indians signed Carlton to a major-league contract Friday, two days after Corrales teleponed him in Florida and convinced him to become a middle-inning relief pitcher.

Carlton, who has won 323 games in his career, was scheduled to pitch in relief today in an exhibition game in Buffalo, N.Y., against the Toronto Blue Jays. Phil Niekro, a lifetime 311-game winner, was to start the game for Cleveland.

The Indians are the only team in this century to have two 300-game winners on their roster at the same time. In 1891, the New York Giants had 300-game winners Tim Keefe and Mickey Welch on their roster.

"We needed a middle, left-handed reliever," Corrales said. "If we had said we wanted him as a starter, we wouldn't have signed him. But we got our heads together and said, 'Maybe he'll go for it (being a reliever).'"

The Indians have only one other left-handed reliever, Ed Vande Berg, who will be used almost exclusively against left-handed hitters. Carlton will be used to pitch two to four innings when a starter is ineffective.

Joe Klein, Indians vice president, said the move indicates the Indians believe they can contend for the American League East title this year. They have not won a pennant since 1954.

"When you go from 60 wins (in 1985) to 84 wins (in 1986), you do it because you're a better team," Klein said. "When you go from 84 wins to 94, or whatever is needed, it's because you can match up better with each of the other teams."

Carlton, for instance, will be valuable when the Indians play in Yankee Stadium, Klein said.

"It (signing Carlton) is a gamble, but the alternative is going into Yankee Stadium without the left-hander, and they can beat your brains out," Klein said.

Carlton, 42, a four-time Cy Young Award-winner, attempted a comeback with his old team, the Philadelphia Phillies, earlier this spring, but left March 21 after the club chose not to offer him a contract. He had allowed seven earned runs in five exhibition games over 14 innings.

Carlton has a career record of 323-229 and an ERA of 3.11, and he ranks second to Nolan Ryan on the all-time strikeout list with 4,040. He spent 15 of his 22 years with Philadelphia, where Corrales managed him in 1982 and '83. Carlton's last Cy Young Award came under Corrales in 1982.

Carlton established a major-league record with 512 consecutive starts at one point in his career. After he was on the disabled list for much of the 1985 season, he pitched with Philadelphia, the San Francisco Giants and the Chicago White Sox in three separate comeback attempts last year.

He started a combined 32 games for the three teams, compiling a 9-14 record and 5.10 ERA.

Carlton has often refused to talk to reporters, and he was reluctant to discuss the signing Friday.

"I feel very good about it. I'd rather talk once I'm in uniform," he said by telephone from Florida.

Carlton broke into the majors with the St. Louis Cardinals in 1965 and was traded to the Phillies before the 1972 season.

To make room for Carlton on their roster, the Indians sent rookie outfielder Dave Clark to Class AAA Buffalo.

The Indians have two left-handed starters, Greg Swindell and Scott Bailes. Bailes said he was a little worried about his job when Carlton's signing was announced.

"I had a little twinge or two," Bailes said. "But then they called me in the office and they said if I pitch like I did last year, there's nothing to worry about."

Cleveland designated hitter Andre Thornton said Carlton filled a need on the Indians' pitching staff.

"That (middle relief) is an area we're having problems with," Thornton said. "I'm not a pitching coach, but just from his experience and from the way they plan to use him, I think he can fill that role."

Torch Will Pass Through County

The U.S. Olympic Festival-'87 Torch Run will pass through Greenville and several other Pitt County towns as it winds its way back and forth across the state in June, it has been announced.

The torch will pass through 400 different cities and towns across the state, with a number of special events planned for its passage. The run will begin with the traditional lighting atop Pike's Peak in Colorado Springs, Colo. on Saturday, June 20. It will then begin its 26-day, 2,800-mile run through North Carolina in Wilmington on June 22.

The torch run will reach Greenville on June 25, coming from Kinston, and passing through Grifton, Ayden, and Winterville. It will continue on through Pactolus to Washington, where it will pause for the night.

On the 26th, it will carry on from Washington and head east toward the outer banks. On the return trip westward, it will pass through Jamesville, Williamston, Robersonville and Bethel on June 29.

The torch will advance west as far as Murphy — having completed the Manteo to Murphy swing — and then return to end up in Raleigh for the lighting of the Olympic Festival flame in Carter-Finley Stadium on July 17, signifying the official opening of the festival.

Anyone interested in carrying the torch for a segment may obtain an application from any McDonald's, or by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to USOF-'87 Torch Run Coordinator, P.O. Box 12727, Research Triangle Park, N.C. 27709. A $25 tax-deductible contribution is required and the deadline for signup is May 15.

Rose Girls In 4-2 Win

ELIZABETH CITY — Rose High School's girls' soccer team rolled up a 4-2 victory over Northeastern High School Friday.

Cathy Park scored two of the Rose goals, one in each half.

Lisa Leisten got things started for Rose on a penalty kick 12 minutes into play. Park then got her first goal some five minutes later.

Northeastern got on the scoreboard with a penalty kick by Janet Jackson at the 25 minute mark.

Park scored her second goal eight minutes into the second half, with Jackson adding the second Lady Eagle goal nine minutes later. Kia Hardy then finished off the scoring with Rose's fourth goal at the 30 minute mark.

Rose limited Northeastern to only four shots on goal with goalie Adrienne Harrington having two saves. Rose took 11 shots on goal with Eagle goalie Brenda Tunnell getting seven saves.

Rose is now 3-1 and will play host to Wilson Fike on Tuesday.

Rose Delayed Until Monday

Rain and wet grounds halted play in some area sports activities Friday.

Rose High School's baseball game with Rocky Mount was halted after one inning of play by rain. The game was rescheduled for Monday at 4 p.m. at Guy Smith Stadium.

Ayden-Grifton's baseball game at Greene Central was suspended by rain with the Rams up 10-1 after two innings of play. That game will be resumed on April 30.

A tennis match between High Point College and East Carolina's men's team was canceled.

EC Coaches Set Clinic

The East Carolina football coaching staff will hold its annual spring football clinic on Friday and Saturday. The two-day clinic is open to all coaches, on any level, interested in coaching techniques.

East Carolina head coach Art Baker will head the panel of speakers which includes Mike Smith of Hampton High School in Hampton, Va.; Bobby Poss of 71st High School in Fayetteville; and Jim Garrison of Chowan Junior College in Murfreesboro.

Also, ECU's offensive coordinator Clyde Christensen and defensive coordinator Les Herrin will give overviews of the Pirate strategy.

Clinic participants will have an opportunity to observe the ECU football team during a practice session on Friday and a full scrimmage on Saturday.

Stanley Gets First Bosox Call

By The Associated Press

Steve Carlton is back ... and Roger Clemens may not be far behind.

The Cleveland Indians became the first team this century to boast two 300-game winners when they signed Carlton, 42, on Friday. Baseball's only four-time Cy Young Award winner will be used a middle-inning relief pitcher.

"I talked to him a couple of nights ago and I said I had an opening for a middle, left-handed reliever," said Cleveland Manager Pat Corrales, who once managed Carlton in Philadelphia. "He said, 'I'm a starter.' I told him to talk it over with his wife. He called me back and said okay."

Carlton, who failed to pitch his way back onto the Phillies this spring — he was released March 21 after allowing 13 hits and seven earned runs in 14 innings — has a career record of 323-229 and ranks second to Nolan Ryan on the all-time strikeout list with 4,040.

The Phillies released Carlton last June. He later caught on with the San Francisco Giants and Chicago White Sox and started 32 games for the three teams with a 9-14 record and 5.10 ERA.

Reached by telephone in Florida, Carlton said: "I feel very good about it. I'd rather talk once I'm in uniform."

Carlton was to meet the Indians in Buffalo, N.Y., Friday night and was scheduled to pitch in an exhibition game today against the Toronto Blue Jays. Phil Niekro, the 48-year-old knuckleballer and winner of 311 games, was to start the game.

However, an overnight snowstorm of up to six inches was predicted for Buffalo, which had a seven-inch snowfall on Tuesday.

Meanwhile, Clemens and the Boston Red Sox were reported closer to an agreement and co-owner Haywood Sullivan called a news conference for Saturday to update the situation.

In the first favorable report since Clemens bolted training camp on March 6, General Manager Lou Gorman said Friday night that "some progress" had been made in contract negotiations to get the 1986 American League MVP and Cy Young Award winner back into uniform.

"We've done a lot of creative talking the last couple of days," Gorman said. "We're closer than we were, but there's nothing definite yet."

Asked if Clemens might return before Monday's opener in Milwaukee, Gorman said:

"I would like to think that it might happen. It would be a good opening day gift. But we'll have to wait and see." Gorman said that the break in the stalemate came last Monday when Randy Hendricks, one of Clemens' agents, phoned him with a new proposal.

"We turned down the proposal, but Randy making the call the other day broke down some barriers," Gorman said. "We have both begun to realize it's important for both of us to get it done."

Clemens, who was 24-4 while pitching the Red Sox to the pennant last year, walked out after negotiations broke down 29 days ago. His agents asked for a $2.4 million, two-year contract — $1 million this year and $1.4 for 1988. The Red Sox offered a one-year pact with a base pay of $500,000 and $350,000 in difficult incentives.

Under baseball's basic agreement, and since Clemens is ineligible for salary arbitration, the Red Sox renewed his contract for a "negotiable" figure of $400,000.

In Clemens' absence, the Red Sox named Bob Stanley, returning to a starting role after six years in the bullpen, to start the 1987 opener. Stanley, a 10-year veteran with a 100-76 mark and holder of the club record of 123 saves, was picked to replace Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, who has been suffering from tendinitis in his right shoulder.

In his final tuneup, Stanley allowed four hits and two runs in three innings Friday in the Red Sox' 4-1 loss to the Chicago White Sox. In six exhibition appearances he pitched 23 innings, giving up 23 hits and 11 earned runs for a 4.30 ERA.

Floyd Bannister pitched five shutout innings and Bob James followed with two perfect innings for Chicago.

A one-time Boston pitcher, Dennis Eckersley, changed uniforms Friday when the Chicago Cubs traded him and infielder Dan Rohn to the Oakland Athletics for three minor-leaguers.

Eckersley, 32, came to the Cubs in June 1984 from Boston for first baseman Bill Buckner. He won 20 games for Boston in 1978 and posted a 10-8 record for the Cubs while helping them win the National League East in 1984. He slipped to 6-11 last season with a 4.57 ERA. The Cubs also put pitcher Scott Sanderson on the 15-day disabled list Friday, effective March 29. Sanderson has had problems with his shoulder the past couple of weeks. Jamie Moyer and Greg Maddux moved ahead of Eckersley and Sanderson in the Cubs' starting rotation this spring.

On Chicago's South Side, the White Sox disclosed that Neil Allen will not be one of their starters in the season-opening series in Kansas City, his home town.

"Yes, I'm teed off," said Allen, whose spring ERA is 6.41.

Back in the National League, Houston shortstop Dickie Thon returned to the Astros' camp to avoid being placed on the restricted list. Thon left last month because of a recurring eye problems that began when he was beaned by Mike Torrez of the New York Mets in April, 1984.

Exhibition Results

—Dave Winfield drove in five runs and the New York Yankees hit four of their six homers during a nine-run eighth inning in snapping a seven-game losing streak by crushing the Montreal Expos 23-7. Joel Skinner hit a three-run homer while Winfield, Gary Ward and Ron Kittle all hit two-run shots off Bob McClure in the big inning. Mike Pagliarulo and Dan Pasqua homered earlier in a 24-hit attack.

—Don Carman, Jeff Calhoun and rookie Wally Ritchie combined on a four-hitter as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the New York Mets 2-0. Carman gave up two hits and struck out five in six innings. David Cone, who is expected to replace Dwight Gooden in the Mets' rotation, allowed both runs — one unearned — but only one hit in five innings.

—Charlie Leibrandt allowed five hits in seven innings and Bo Jackson drove in two runs with a pinch single to lead the Kansas City Royals to a 4-0 victory over the Texas Rangers.

—Kent Hrbek drove in four runs, two with a homer, and Gary Gaetti hit a three-run double as the Minnesota Twins beat the Detroit Tigers 10-5. All the Minnesota runs came off Detroit starter Frank Tanana, who lasted 3 1-3 innings.

—Lloyd McClendon led off the bottom of the 10th inning with a home run off Aurelio Lopez to give the Cincinnati Reds an 8-7 victory over the Astros. Ty Gainey hit two homers and Dan Driessen one for Houston.

—Barry Bonds walked with the bases loaded and Junior Ortiz scored on a passed ball as the Pittsburgh Pirates scored two unearned runs in the seventh inning to beat the Toronto Blue Jays 4-3.

—Tony Bernazard scored on a wild pitch by Jay Aldrich in the bottom of the ninth inning to give the Cleveland Indians a 5-4 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers. Cleveland trailed 4-3 but tied the score on singles by Cory Snyder, Bernazard and minor-leaguer Tommy Hinzo.

—A split squad of Brewers downed the Seattle Mariners 12-2 as Juan Nieves pitched six scoreless innings and Dale Sveum hit a three-run homer. Seattle starter Mike Moore gave up eight runs and nine hits in four innings.

—Andres Thomas broke a 2-2 tie with a leadoff home run in the eighth inning as the Atlanta Braves defeated the Baltimore Orioles 4-2.

—Terry Steinbach homered and Jose Tolentino had four hits as the Oakland A's edged the Chicago Cubs 11-10 despite two homers and five RBIs by Chicago's Keith Moreland.

—Jack Howell's two-out, bases-loaded walk in the seventh inning forced in an unearned run Friday night to lift the California Angels to a 1-0 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers. An Anaheim Stadium crowd of 42,473 braved two rain delays totaling one hour, 44 minutes to see the opener of the annual Freeway Series.

Ex-Fiancee Says She Didn't Know

NEW YORK (AP) — After receiving five years probation on a weapons charge, the ex-fiancee of pitcher Dwight Gooden said she was unaware the troubled New York Mets star was a drug user.

"I didn't know about it," Carlene Pearson told reporters Friday before attorney Stuart Cooper cut her off.

"We're not going to talk about it," Cooper interrupted. Miss Pearson climbed into a waiting limousine and left minutes later.

She also delivered a message to Gooden, who checked into a rehabilitation program Thursday after testing positive for cocaine: "Baby, get well soon."

Pearson, wearing a gold necklace with Gooden's number 16 on it, said she had not spoken with the Mets' All-Star right-hander since Wednesday, when the team announced the test results.

Earlier, state Supreme Court Judge Joan O'Dwyer had imposed the probation as part of a plea-bargaining agreement reached between Miss Pearson and the Queens district attorney's office.

"I know what I did is wrong, and it won't happen again," Miss Pearson told the judge.

Miss Pearson was arrested at LaGuardia Airport on Jan. 30 after walking through a metal detector with a loaded .38-caliber handgun in her purse. She had arrived at the airport to meet the star 22-year-old pitcher, who was flying into New York from Florida.

She admitted in a February court appearance that she knowingly carried the weapon into the airport. The gun had been reported stolen in Florida in 1982.

During that appearance, she pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of attempted criminal possession of a handgun.

Softball Teams Still Needed

The Greenville Recreation and Parks Department still has opening in its softball leagues for this summer.

The deadline to enter a tam is 5 p.m. on Wednesday.

The following leagues are offered: Industrial (employees of area businesses); Church (members of area churches); Women's (area females 16 and older); City (area males 16 and older); and Coed (may play in other leagues).

Panthers, Vikings Post Wins

FARMVILLE — North Pitt came up with three runs in the final two innings to slip past Farmville Central, 6-4, in Eastern Plains Conference baseball action Friday.

The Panthers gained the early lead with a pair of solo home runs in the first inning. Jarvis Massenburg hit one and Johnny Sherrod followed with another for the 2-0 edge.

Farmville came back to tie it up with two in the second, then took the lead with one in the third. North Pitt tied it again at 3-3 with one in the top of the fourth, but Farmville went back on top, 4-3, with one in the fifth.

Then, in the sixth, North Pitt took the lead for good. Chuck Doak reached on an error and Ashley Sheppard followed with a two-run homer for a 5-4 lead.

The Panthers added an insurance run in the seventh with a fourth homer, that by Chuck Whitehurst.

Massenburg led the North Pitt hitting with two, one of them a triple. George Burnett and Mike Vandiford each had two hits — and each had a double — to pace Farmville.

The Jaguars fall to 2-3 overall and to 1-1 in league play. North Pitt advances to 2-0 in the conference.

Farmville travels to Charles B. Aycock on Tuesday while North Pitt visits Ayden-Grifton on Wednesday.

SNOW HILL — Greene Central scored four times in the fifth inning to defeat Ayden-Grifton, 5-2, Friday in an Eastern Plains Conference softball game.

The Lady Rams had taken the lead in the second inning with a single run. Ayden-Grifton came up with one each in the fourth and fifth, however, to push into a 2-1 lead. The first of those two came on a homer by Michelle Whitfield.

But in the bottom of the fifth, Greene Central rallied for four to win it. Audrey Thomas reached on an error and Joy Albritton tripled her in. Shanna Dunn singled to score Albritton. Sabrina Becton then singled, and an error on the play allowed both runners to come across the plate for the 5-2 lead.

Albritton led the Greene Central hitting with two, while Carter had two hits to pace Ayden-Grifton.

Greene Central is now 7-0 overall and 2-0 in conference play. Ayden-Grifton falls to 1-4 and 1-2. The Lady Rams are back in action on Tuesday, traveling to Pamlico, while Ayden-Grifton hosts North Pitt on Wednesday.

Northampton E.....7

CONWAY — Williamston High School's softball team rolled up a 19-7 victory over hosting Northampton East Friday.

Williamston took the lead in the first with four runs, including a three-run homer by Dana Hardison. But Hall and Herman both hit solo shots for Northampton in the bottom of the frame, sparking a six-run inning. Williamston closed it to 6-5 with one in the second. Northampton, however, countered that with one in the fourth.

Then, in the fifth, Williamston came back with six runs to take an 11-7 lead. Susan Forehand led off with a solo homer. C.J. Lilley then singled and scored the tying run on Dana Hardison's triple. Sharon Whitfield singled in Hardison with the go-ahead run. Keisha Moore singled and CHristy Barber tripled to drive in two more runs. Lynn Cowan then sacrificed in Barber with the sixth run.

Williamston then added eight more in the seventh.

Lilley and Christie Bonner led Williamston with four hits each while Ramsey had three to pace Northampton.

Williamston is now 4-0 overall and 2-0 in Northeastern Conference play. The Lady Tigers play host to Edenton on Tuesday.

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley's girls' softball team collected its seventh straight victory Friday with a 10-0 romp over Washington.

Gayle Cash got the shutout, allowing only three hits by the Lady Pam Pack.

Conley got all it needed in the third inning, scoring six times. Cash doubled and Eileen Evans reached on an error, scoring Cash. Miriam Fulford singled in Evans. Trellaney Boyd singled and Tabatha Dalton singled in Fulford. Rhonda Jackson got a hit to drive in Dalton, but was put out at second on Charlene Davenport's fielder's choice. Rhonda Mills walked and Lynn Keeter singled in Davenport.

Conley added one in the fifth on a solo homer by Jackson, and picked up three more in the sixth.

Dalton and Evans led the Conley hitting with two each.

Conley is now 7-0 overall and 2-0 in Coastal Conference play. Washington drops to 0-4, 00-2.

The Valkyries travel to North Lenoir on Tuesday.

HOLLYWOOD — Sherwood Wilder gave up only two hits as D.H. Conley's baseball Vikings gained a 9-5 victory over Washington on a sloppy field Friday.

Wilder, who went the distance, struck out eight batters, but walked nine. Six of them came in the sixth inning, however, when the rain had turned the mound into a muddy mess, hampering Wilder's abilities.

Both teams scored single runs in the first inning, but Conley came back with three more in the third for a 4-1 lead.

Then, in the fifth, Conley pushed over four more to put the game out of reach. Amzie Hoffner led off with a walk and Butch Mills singled. Both advanced on a wild pitch and Bronswell Patrick was intentionally walked. Brian Joyner followed with a single, driving in Hoffner and Mills. Wilder then reached on an error, scoring Patrick and moving Joyner to third. Joyner then scored on a balk.

Washington got four more in the top of the sixth, while Conley added one more in the bottom of the frame.

Joyner led the Conley hitting with two.

The Vikings are now 4-1 overall and 2-0 in Coastal Conference play. They play host to North Lenoir on Tuesday.

Florida To Ask Testing

NEW YORK (AP) — The Florida Department of Corrections says it will recommend that New York Mets pitcher Dwight Gooden's three-year probation for an altercation with Tampa police last December require him to enter a drug rehabilitation program in Florida and submit to periodic testing.

The probation reportedly would allow Gooden to pitch for the Mets while under supervision and the requirement of frequent urinalysis would meet the terms of the probation, according to Eric Alvarez, an administrator with the Department of Corrections.

Hillsborough County (Fla.) Circuit Judge John Griffin, who placed Gooden on probation in January, has asked for a written report and a recommendation from probation officials.

Meanwhile, the 22-year-old Gooden, who tested positive for cocaine, spent his first full day Friday in the Smithers Alcoholism and Treatment Center in New York.

"I talked to Dwight several times last year when he was having trouble down here (in Tampa, Fla.) with the police and all that," Frank Cashen, the Mets' general manager, said. "I didn't ask about drug use, per se, but it was obvious he was having problems. The underlying problem is now apparent."

Gooden, who asked that a drug-testing clause be included in his 1987 contract, was tested March 26. The Mets received the test results on Monday.

"The amazing thing to me is that it looked like he wanted to get caught," Mets Manager Davey Johnson said.

Gooden's insistence on a drug-testing clause in his contract could have been "a cry for help," according to Dr. Stanley Yancovitz, medical director of the Stuyvesant Square chemical dependency program at New York's Beth Israel Hospital.

"On the other hand, it could be this denial thing, that he doesn't want to admit it's out of control. He might say, 'Put in the clause and I won't use drugs for a month before spring training.' Part of the disease is you think you can control it, you think you can stop."

Charles Ehrlich, an attorney for Gooden, said he asked the pitcher several times whether he was using drugs. Gooden denied it, Ehrlich said.

Mets vice president Al Harazin said Gooden knew the test would be positive, adding, "But he was so insistent. He asked specifically for this. The first thing in my mind is that he was crying out for help. The obvious thing is he wanted to get caught."

"He wanted to dispel the rumors," Cashen said. "I've wrestled with that question ever since I saw the test results. The only thing I can come up with is that he was crying out for help. That's why I think it's best this thing came out now. Dwight obviously needs treatment to turn his life around."

Ehrlich said no specific information would be released on Gooden's progress, adding, "He's being evaluated to determine the extent of the problem and the course of treatment."

What Now For Masters Encore

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — There's a little problem at the Masters this year — what to do for an encore.

Last year's Masters could have won an Oscar for the performace turned in by a 46-year-old Jack Nicklaus, who came from nowhere with a 30 on the back nine, swept past a stunned a cadre of the world's best players and won his sixth title at Augusta.

"Suddenly, my golf game got 15 years younger. All of a sudden, I was playing in yesteryear," he said.

Last year's tournament had high drama, cliff-hanging suspense, an international cast and everything but the screeching tires of a television car chase.

Many of the nation's leading sports writers and broadcasters call it the greatest golf tournament ever played.

But now, going into the 51st Masters, it presents a problem.

How do you top it?

Much of the same cast is assembled: Nicklaus, Seve Ballesteros of Spain, Greg Norman of Australia, Nick Price of South Africa, Sandy Lyle of Scotland, Bernhard Langer of West Germany and Tommy Nakajima of Japan.

The stage, the 6,905 yards of wooded, flowered hills that make up he Augusta National Golf Club, is set and waiting.

The subplot is the same: the potential domination of a very American institution by foreign players who now seem to be taking over the game.

The rest of it will be played out in a four-day engagement, beginning Thursday.

At least at the start, the star will be Nicklaus, 47, and now, he says, semi-retired.

"The Masters last year allowed me to go out on top," said Nicklaus, who plans to restrict his schedule to the majors — the Masters, U.S. and British Opens and PGA — and about six other tournaments a year.

Yes, he said, he has considered retiring, "but darn it, I still like to play golf."

"I don't play like I used to. I never will again. Goodness gracious, I can't beat all these kids on a weekly basis. But once in a while, like last year, it still all comes together," he said.

It hasn't in the four tournaments he has played earlier this season, but that, Nicklaus said, it not significant.

"Last year, coming into Augusta, I'd won $4,000. Nobody gave me a chance then, either," he said.

Realistically, it probably is too much to expect the gallant old Bear to repeat the performance that capped his unequaled career.

The spotlight, therefore, probably will shift to the foreign players, led by Norman, the dashing, white-haired Australian who won the British Open and nine other international titles last year.

He also led both the American and Australian tours in money-winnings, accumulating more than $1.2 million worldwide. Norman led through three rounds of all four of the majors in 1986 and now has his sights set on a one-year sweep of the Big Four.

"I think it can be done," he said. "I think I can do it."

His most formidable challenger may be Ballesteros, a two-time Masters winner and twice the British Open champion. Barred from American play last year, Ballesteros concentrated on the European tour, where he won five in a row at one stretch. He has already won a Spanish tournament this year.

Then, too, there's Langer, a former Masters winner and a consistent challenger on the U.S. tour this season; Price, whose 63 set a Masters record last year; Nakajima, ranked fourth in the world by one international rating system; and Lyle, a former British Open titleholder and recent winner of the Tournament Players Championship.

American hopes are split between a group of young stars and a selection of veterans.

The latter group includes current U.S. Open titleholder Ray Floyd, Ben Crenshaw and Fuzzy Zoeller, all former Masters winners; Curtis Strange, Hal Sutton, Dan Pohl and Tom Kite, a consistent contender in this tournament and twice a runner-up.

And, of course, there's Tom Watson, twice a Masters winner and a five-time British Open champion. But he's still struggling with a balky putter that has prevented him from regaining the form that once made him golf's leading player.

The young stars are led by Bob Tway, the 1986 PGA champion, and Corey Pavin, a two-time winner already this season.

Baby Owl is "Success Story"

Spring is the "orphan season" for many species of birds. During this time of year, the Carolina Raptor Center in Charlotte, a facility for the rehabilitation of injured birds of prey, receives many young "orphaned" owls that have been picked up and carried home by well-meaning, concerned people.

The center recently received its first orphan of the season. A baby great horned owl was found near Snow Hill and taken to Dr. Ivey Smith, a local veterinarian. He contacted the center and the bird was flown to Charlotte by Piedmont Airlines.

Once at the center, the owl, called "Stormtrooper," was given intensive care and feeding and began growing phenomenally. Human contact has been kept to a minimum to prevent either imprinting or habituation (getting used to people). Both processes could prevent Stormtrooper's survival in the wild.

A special hacking-out cage was built by raptor center volunteers in a rural, wooded area. Stormtrooper was placed in the cage, where he is being fed daily until he learns to fly. After he is released from the cage, food will be supplied daily until he is able to hunt for himself and no longer returns to the feeding site.

The center calls Stormtrooper a "success story" because the people who found him did not try to take care of him themselves.

However, the center says people should be aware that most seemingly orphaned owls are not really orphaned. Most baby owls spend several weeks on the ground while learning to fly. The parents are nearby, watching and waiting for people to leave so they can fly down and care for their offspring.

Each year, baby owls are brought to the center that have been picked up and cared for by humans during that crucial time when their brains are being imprinted with their social identity.

According to the center, if a baby owl sees a human taking care of it, it will imprint on humans, not on owls, socially as well as sexually. The owl will "think" it is a person.

This is an irreversible process and prevents owls from ever having a normal social life in the wild. They cannot communicate with their own species and are often attacked by other owls.

People who try to tame the owls find that birds of prey do not make good pets and often end up setting them free. Unfortunately, these birds usually die or are killed in the wild.

Some birds are brought to the Carolina Raptor Center or other raptor rehabilitation groups and spend the rest of their lives in captivity because they cannot survive on their own.

The center stresses that all birds of prey are totally protected by federal law, making it illegal to either kill one or keep one as a pet.

If you find an owl that you think may be orphaned, do not remove it from its location. Mark the exact spot and call the Carolina Raptor Center at 1-800-CAR-HAWK. The center will help you decide whether the baby bird is a true orphan, and will advise you on what to do if it genuinely needs to be rescued.

Unfamiliar Fish Recipes

Before you toss an amberjack, sheepshead, triggerfish or spadefish overboard, make sure it's really not worth eating. According to UNC Sea Grant, an amberjack, for instance, yields thick, white fillets and a mild-tasting meat.

When you reel in an unfamiliar species, be prepared. Sea Grant's "Recipes with a New Catch" explains how to handle 18 species of saltwater fish from South Atlantic and Gulf waters.

The 40-page book shows how to clean and prepare bonito, black drum, pigfish, skates, sea robin and others, and provides 64 recipes for cooking non-traditional fish.

The book was written by Jim Murray, Sea Grant's Marine Advisory Service director. Sea Grant's seafood education specialist Joyce Taylor provided many of the recipes.

For a copy, write Sea Grant, Box 8605, N.C. State University, Raleigh, N.C. 27695-8605. Ask for UNC-SG-86-06. The cost is $2.

Sea Grant is a federal and state program that promotes the wise use of coastal and marine resources through research, education and extension.

Holdout Over, Clemens Is Back

"I know my velocity is there and I'm anxious to get started," the 1986 American League Most Valuable Player and Cy Young Award winner said at a news conference before the Red Sox broke camp.

Clemens, his agent, Randy Hendricks, and Red Sox co-owner Haywood Sullivan and General Manager Lou Gorman disclosed for the first time that a meeting with baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth played a major role in ending the stalemate.

Sullivan said that at the request of the commissioner he met with Clemens and Hendricks, along with Ueberroth, at Phoenix last Tuesday and Wednesday.

No agreement on a new contract was reached. However, Hendricks said that details just have to be worked out "in the next 10 days to two weeks."

Clemens' original demand was for a two-year contract, worth a total of $2.4 million. The Red Sox insisted on a one-year contract with a base salary of $500,000, with incentives.

Clemens walked out of camp March 6, when negotiations broke down and the Red Sox automatically renewed his contract for a "negotiable" $400,000.

The ace right-hander said he has been pitching and throwing "35 minutes of batting practice continuously," adding, "I want to get started right away."

"I want to go north with the club. I don't want to hang around down here.

"I have the desire to pitch and win. All I have to do now is get the ball down in the strike zone and challenge some big league hitters."

However, instead of facing big league hittrs, Clemens was named immediately to pitch for Boston's minor leaguers in an exhibition game against Harvard University today.

"We'll see how he does and go from there," Boston pitching coach Bill Fischer said.

"Now, we're right there," Fischer added. "We've just improved our chances by 24 games."

Referring to his remarkable 14-0 start that ended with a 24-4 record last season, Clemens said, "It's hard to start off 14-0, but I'm sure going to try."

It appeared Friday night that Clemens was ready to rejoin the club, when Gorman disclosed that "some progress" had been made in the contract negotiations to get the pitcher back into uniform.

That triggered unconfirmed reports that Clemens, who has been working out near his home in Katy, Texas, might return before the Red Sox left for nearby Lakeland and the team's final preseason game with the Detroit Tigers.

Gorman said he he talked six times Thursday and three times Friday to Hendricks, who represents Clemens with his brother Alan.

"We've done a lot of creative talking the last couple of days, and we may talk some more tonight," Gorman said Friday evening.

"We're closer than we were, but there's nothing definite yet," Gorman said.

Asked if it was possible that Clemens might return before next week's season opener at Milwaukee, Gorman said: "I would like to think that it might happen. It would be a good opening day gift. But we'll have to wait and see."

"I'm hopeful something will happen, but I've learned in this game not to expect anything," Sullivan said.

Another source, who asked not to be identified, said there have been "two days and nights of sensitive, delicate negotiations."

Gorman said that the break in the stalemate came when Randy Hendricks phoned him with a new proposal last Monday.

"We turned down the proposal, but Randy making the call the other day broke down some barriers," Gorman said.

He added, "We have both begun to realize it's important for both of us to get it done."

Clemens led the major leagues in victories while pitching the Red Sox to the AL pennant in his second full season last year.

After automatically renewing Clemens' contract when negotiations broke down, the club made another offer of $500,000 and $450,000 in altered incentive money. Hendricks rejected that, countering with a proposal that Clemens be paid $950,000 without any incentives.

The Red Sox next revised their incentives, making some more easily attainable, and added $25,000 for a total package worth $975,000. That was rejected.

Then, after an extended silence between the two parties, Randy Hendricks called this week with a proposal for a two-year agreement.

His proposal would have accepted the $500,000 base salary for this year, added incentives of $50,000 for 25 starts, another $50,000 for 28 starts, and another $50,000 for 31 starts in 1987.

In the second year, Hendricks' demands asked for a base salary of $1.5 million, plus all the incentive money in the first year. That was rejected by Gorman the next day.

Mavericks 'Arrive'

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

The Dallas Mavericks have arrived, but the Golden State Warriors will have to wait a while longer.

"Winning 50 games is enough said," Dallas Coach Dick Motta said after the Mavericks defeated Golden State 136-116 Friday night to give the seventh-year franchise its first 50-win season. "It's a goal; once you climb to reach it, it feels really good."

Dallas also clinched its first Midwest Division title when Phoenix beat Utah 112-98. The victory by the Suns and the loss to Dallas also meant that Golden State missed another chance to clinch its first NBA playoff berth in 10 years.

Nets 113, 76ers 109

New Jersey gave Philadelphia's Julius Erving a rude sendoff in his last game against the Nets as Orlando Woolridge scored 33 points.

Erving, who played three seasons with the Nets when they were in the American Basketball Association, had his Nets uniform number retired in ceremonies before the game. Then he scored six points on 2-for-12 field-goal shooting.

With the Nets trailing by one, Woolridge's layup gave the Nets a 108-107 lead. He then hit three straight foul shots, making it 111-107 with 20 seconds remaining.

Celtics 119, Pistons 115, OT

Boston kept Detroit from keeping pace with first-place Atlanta in the Central Division by holding the Pistons without a field goal in overtime.

Robert Parish's short jumper put the Celtics ahead to stay with 31 seconds left in the extra period, and they went on to extend their home winning streak to 26. Boston trailed by as many as 17 points in the first quarter.

Larry Bird led Boston with 31 points, while Kevin McHale had 25 and Dennis Johnson 24. The Pistons were led by Isiah Thomas with 25 points and Adrian Dantley with 20.

Suns 112, Jazz 98

Phoenix defeated Utah as Larry Nance had 28 points and Mike Sanders came off the bench to hit eight of nine shots from the field and score 18 points.

Karl Malone, who had a game-high 34 points and 10 rebounds, cut Utah's deficit to 91-85 on a free throw with 7:40 remaining. Rookie guard Jeff Hornacek's three-point play with 7:04 left and his jumper with 6:35 to go padded the Suns' lead to 96-85.

Lakers 127, Blazers 121

Magic Johnson had 35 points, 11 assists and 10 rebounds as Los Angeles rallied to beat Portland for the 11th time in their last 12 meetings.

The host Blazers, who got 25 points from Clyde Drexler and 23 from Steve Johnson, led by four points after three quarters. But Mychal Thompson scored six of his 22 points as the Lakers started the final period with a 10-0 run for a 103-97 lead.

Los Angeles led by as many as nine points before Portland came back to pull even at 121-121 on Terry Porter's layup with 59 seconds to go. Michael Cooper hit a pair of free throws with 38 seconds to go to give the Lakers the lead for good.

Bullets 122, Bulls 118

Jay Vincent and Jeff Malone scored 33 points each as Washington edged visiting Chicago, knocking the Bulls into eighth place in the Eastern Conference.

Vincent, who had 21 points in the second half, scored nine in the last 3:48 of the game after Chicago had trimmed a 95-86 deficit to 107-106. His three-point play with 1:32 remaining put the Bullets up 116-108.

The Bulls, who have clinched a playoff berth but will have to play Boston in the first round if they finish eighth in the East, were led by Michael Jordan with 32 points. But he failed to score from the 9:13 mark of the fourth period until he hit a 3-point shot with 16 seconds left, trimming Washington's lead to 119-116.

Nuggets 116, Spurs 106

Denver strengthened its hold on the final playoff spot in the West as tAlex English scored 29 points against San Antonio.

New Era Begins In Pro Baseball

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

The New Era of baseball is about to start.

A new way of doing business. A new breed of managers. New stars and new teams on the rise.

Baseball 1987 begins Monday afternoon in Toronto — the first season-opener outside the United States — when Cleveland's Brett Butler steps up against Jimmy Key of the Blue Jays.

But already, this year has a different look.

Tim Raines, Rich Gedman, Bob Horner and Ron Guidry are missing. Dwight Gooden will not pitch Opening Day; he's undergoing treatment for cocaine use.

Future Hall of Famer Tom Seaver is gone, possibly forever. Lance Parrish, Andre Dawson and World Series hero Ray Knight have changed places, along with Kevin McReynolds, Rick Rhoden, Jeff Reardon and Danny Tartabull.

Several teams are wearing new uniforms; the tomahawk returns in Atlanta, the rainbow is over in Houston.

Former Yale President A. Bartlett Giamatti starts his first full year as National League president. He is already being mentioned as Commissioner Peter Ueberroth's eventual successor.

Still, many questions linger. Can the World Series champion New York Mets break the repeat jinx? Will Roger Clemens be the latest victim of the Cy Young trap? Does Mike Scott scuff the ball? Can anything top last October's excitement, when Boston pulled a last-strike escape in the playoffs and then watched the Mets do the same in the World Series?

We will get a few answers this month, some later this year and many never at all. Part of the attraction of baseball, the timeless game, is that it takes awhile to come into focus no matter how hard we look.

One aspect that is clear and most significant is how owners are dealing with players. The days of long-term, big-money contracts are over. One-year pacts tied to performance are the rule with few exceptions, the intent being to stop the salary spiral.

"The players told us for years that we didn't have to keep throwing money at them," Barry Rona, head of the owners' Player Relations Committee, said. "We don't mind reminding them of that once in awhile."

While both sides agree the price of mediocrity — $500,000 for a reserve infielder, for instance — has driven the salary structure out of whack, those most affected by new financial policies are top players.

Raines, Gedman, Horner and Guidry remain unsigned free agents after receiving offers from other teams, all at substantial pay cuts. If no one takes them, they can return to their 1986 clubs on May 1.

Other free agents such as Dawson, Parrish and Knight took reduced salaries to move elsewhere. Parrish, offered $1.2 million this year by Detroit, accepted a base salary of $800,000 with Philadelphia. Dawson turned down $1 million from Montreal and got a guaranteed $500,000 from the Chicago Cubs. Knight, the Most Valuable Player of the World Series, rejected $800,000 from the Mets and took $400,000 in Baltimore. Reggie Jackson, unwanted by California at $900,000, returned to Oakland at half the price.

Parrish's teammate, Jack Morris, also wanted to leave. But the New York Yankees, California, Philadelphia and Minnesota did not want to pay $1.8 million for the winningest pitcher this decade, so Morris stayed in Detroit, went to salary arbitration and was awarded a contract for the same amount.

Clemens, the American League MVP and Cy Young winner, could not go to salary arbitration because he had not played three full years, as stipulated by the 1985 agreement between players and management. Clemens, who made $220,000 last season plus another $120,000 in incentives, wanted $1 million this year and the Boston Red Sox offered a base salary of $500,000.

There was no settlement, just angry words, so Clemens walked out of camp. He stayed out for 29 days, before rejoining the club Saturday. It may be awhile before we learn whether he will be the first AL Cy Young winner to follow with an above-.500 record since Mike Flanagan in 1979.

Seaver turned down Boston's final offer and did not get another from anyone. George Foster, Dave Kingman, John Denny and Lonnie Smith, all with big contracts and declining production, were released and may disappear.

There are, however, new stars waiting to fill the void.

Last season's rookie crop, including Jose Canseco, Wally Joyner, Pete Incaviglia, Cory Snyder and Tartabull, was one of the best ever. Kansas City's Bo Jackson, San Diego's Benito Santiago and California's Devon White are newcomers to watch this year.

Joe Carter, Kirby Puckett and Eric Davis emerged as potential superstars in 1986, joining the youth now dominating the majors. Don Mattingly, whose numbers after three full seasons are better than those of Lou Gehrig and Mickey Mantle, and Gooden head the list.

Gooden will not start the season with the Mets. A week before he was scheduled to pitch the opener, he agreed to begin drug treatment rather than be suspended by Ueberroth. There was no telling when the 1985 NL Cy Young winner, now 22, would rejoin his teammates.

Some of the talent has been shuffled. The Mets, trying to become the first World Series winners to repeat since the 1977-78 New York Yankees, traded several fine prospects to San Diego for McReynolds. The Yankees got Rhoden from Pittsburgh, Kansas City acquired Tartabull from Seattle, Minnesota obtained Reardon from Montreal, St. Louis got Tony Pena from Pittsburgh, Baltimore sent Storm Davis to San Diego for Terry Kennedy, the Cubs got Jim Sundberg from Kansas City and sent Ron Cey to Oakland, Los Angeles got Matt Young from Seattle and Tim Leary from Milwaukee and Atlanta acquired Damaso Garcia from Toronto.

There have also been shakeups in the dugouts. Nine managers begin their first full seasons with teams, with Cal Ripken Sr. of Baltimore and Larry Bowa in San Diego managing in the majors for the first time. In all, 11 managers have made their major-league debuts in the last two years, with Houston's Hal Lanier and Texas' Bobby Valentine getting instant results with youth-laden teams.

Back this season is Lou Piniella, trying to become the first Yankees manager to work two straight full seasons since Billy Martin in 1976-77.

"I hope I'm getting better," Piniella said. "Players should get better each year and so should managers."

One man who would someday like to manage — in Philadelphia, he says — is Mike Schmidt of the Phillies. Schmidt, who has hinted on-and-off that this will be his final season, won his third National League MVP award in 1986. He'll get plenty of attention soon as he approaches his fifth home run of the year, No. 500 of his career.

Sadly missing in 1987 will be Dick Howser, who stepped down as the Kansas City Royals manager last July after learning he had brain cancer. Howser hoped to return this year, but made it through only one day of spring training before stepping down in favor of Billy Gardner. Looking thin and frail, Howser said the heat was too much and three weeks later underwent his third brain surgery.

Also missing this season, sort of, will be Pete Rose. Cincinnati's player-manager is coming off the worst season of his career (.219) and reluctantly gave up his roster spot in the winter so the Reds could protect minor-league pitcher Pat Pacillo.

Rose, 46 next week, is not eligible to activate himself until May 15 and said he may not play until September.

Holdout Over, Clemens Is Back

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — Pronouncing himself "ready to pitch," Roger Clemens rejoined the Boston Red Sox Saturday, ending a 20-day walkout following a salary dispute.

"I know my velocity is there and I'm anxious to get started," the 1986 American League Most Valuable Player and Cy Young Award winner said at a news conference before the Red Sox broke camp.

Clemens, his agent, Randy Hendricks, and Red Sox co-owner Haywood Sullivan and General Manager Lou Gorman disclosed for the first time that a meeting with baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth played a major role in ending the stalemate.

Sullivan said that at the request of the commissioner he met with Clemens and Hendricks, along with Ueberroth, at Phoenix last Tuesday and Wednesday.

No agreement on a new contract was reached. However, Hendricks said that details just have to be worked out "in the next 10 days to two weeks."

Clemens' original demand was for a two-year contract, worth a total of $2.4 million. The Red Sox insisted on a one-year contract with a base salary of $500,000, with incentives.

Clemens walked out of camp March 6, when negotiations broke down and the Red Sox automatically renewed his contract for a "negotiable" $400,000.

The ace right-hander said he has been pitching and throwing "35 minutes of batting practice continuously," adding, "I want to get started right away."

"I want to go north with the club. I don't want to hang around down here.

"I have the desire to pitch and win. All I have to do now is get the ball down in the strike zone and challenge some big league hitters."

However, instead of facing big league hitters, Clemens was named immediately to pitch for Boston's minor leaguers in an exhibition game against Harvard University today.

"We'll see how he does and go from there," Boston pitching coach Bill Fischer said.

"Now, we're right there," Fischer added. "We've just improved our chances by 24 games."

Referring to his remarkable 14-0 start that ended with a 24-4 record last season, Clemens said, "It's hard to start off 14-0, but I'm sure going to try."

It appeared Friday night that Clemens was ready to rejoin the club, when Gorman disclosed that "some progress" had been made in the contract negotiations to get the pitcher back into uniform.

That triggered unconfirmed reports that Clemens, who has been working out near his home in Katy, Texas, might return before the Red Sox left for nearby Lakeland and the team's final preseason game with the Detroit Tigers.

Gorman said he he talked six times Thursday and three times Friday to Hendricks, who represents Clemens with his brother Alan.

"We've done a lot of creative talking the last couple of days, and we may talk some more tonight," Gorman said Friday evening.

"We're closer than we were, but there's nothing definite yet," Gorman said.

Asked if it was possible that Clemens might return before next week's season opener at Milwaukee, Gorman said: "I would like to think that it might happen. It would be a good opening day gift. But we'll have to wait and see."

"I'm hopeful something will happen, but I've learned in this game not to expect anything," Sullivan said.

Another source, who asked not to be identified, said there have been "two days and nights of sensitive, delicate negotiations."

Gorman said that the break in the stalemate came when Randy Hendricks phoned him with a new proposal last Monday.

"We turned down the proposal, but Randy making the call the other day broke down some barriers," Gorman said.

He added, "We have both begun to realize it's important for both of us to get it done."

Clemens led the major leagues in victories while pitching the Red Sox to the AL pennant in his second full season last year.

After automatically renewing Clemens' contract when negotiations broke down, the club made another offer of $500,000 and $450,000 in altered incentive money. Hendricks rejected that, countering with a proposal that Clemens be paid $950,000 without any incentives.

The Red Sox next revised their incentives, making some more easily attainable, and added $25,000 for a total package worth $975,000. That was rejected.

Then, after an extended silence between the two parties, Randy Hendricks called this week with a proposal for a two-year agreement.

His proposal would have accepted the $500,000 base salary for this year, added incentives of $50,000 for 25 starts, another $50,000 for 28 starts, and another $50,000 for 31 starts in 1987.

In the second year, Hendricks' demands asked for a base salary of $1.5 million, plus all the incentive money in the first year. That was rejected by Gorman the next day.

Mavericks 'Arrive'

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

The Dallas Mavericks have arrived, but the Golden State Warriors will have to wait a while longer.

"Winning 50 games is enough said," Dallas Coach Dick Motta said after the Mavericks defeated Golden State 136-116 Friday night to give the seventh-year franchise its first 50-win season. "It's a goal; once you climb to reach it, it feels really good."

Dallas also clinched its first Midwest Division title when Phoenix beat Utah 112-98. The victory by the Suns and the loss to Dallas also meant that Golden State missed another chance to clinch its first NBA playoff berth in 10 years.

Nets 113, 76ers 109

New Jersey gave Philadelphia's Julius Erving a rude sendoff in his last game against the Nets as Orlando Woolridge scored 33 points.

Erving, who played three seasons with the Nets when they were in the American Basketball Association, had his Nets uniform number retired in ceremonies before the game. Then he scored six points on 2-for-12 field-goal shooting.

With the Nets trailing by one, Woolridge's layup gave the Nets a 108-107 lead. He then hit three straight foul shots, making it 111-107 with 20 seconds remaining.

Celtics 119, Pistons 115, OT

Boston kept Detroit from keeping pace with first-place Atlanta in the Central Division by holding the Pistons without a field goal in overtime.

Robert Parish's short jumper put the Celtics ahead to stay with 31 seconds left in the extra period, and they went on to extend their home winning streak to 26. Boston trailed by as many as 17 points in the first quarter.

Larry Bird led Boston with 31 points, while Kevin McHale had 25 and Dennis Johnson 24. The Pistons were led by Isiah Thomas with 25 points and Adrian Dantley with 20.

Suns 112, Jazz 98

Phoenix defeated Utah as Larry Nance had 28 points and Mike Sanders came off the bench to hit eight of nine shots from the field and score 18 points.

Karl Malone, who had a game-high 34 points and 10 rebounds, cut Utah's deficit to 91-85 on a free throw with 7:40 remaining. Rookie guard Jeff Hornacek's three-point play with 7:04 left and his jumper with 6:35 to go padded the Suns' lead to 96-85.

Lakers 127, Blazers 121

Magic Johnson had 35 points, 11 assists and 10 rebounds as Los Angeles rallied to beat Portland for the 11th time in their last 12 meetings.

The host Blazers, who got 25 points from Clyde Drexler and 23 from Steve Johnson, led by four points after three quarters. But Mychal Thompson scored six of his 22 points as the Lakers started the final period with a 10-0 run for a 103-97 lead.

Los Angeles led by as many as nine points before Portland came back to pull even at 121-121 on Terry Porter's layup with 59 seconds to go. Michael Cooper hit a pair of free throws with 38 seconds to go to give the Lakers the lead for good.

Bullets 122, Bulls 118

Jay Vincent and Jeff Malone scored 33 points each as Washington edged visiting Chicago, knocking the Bulls into eighth place in the Eastern Conference.

Vincent, who had 21 points in the second half, scored nine in the last 3:48 of the game after Chicago had trimmed a 95-86 deficit to 107-106. His three-point play with 1:32 remaining put the Bullets up 116-108.

The Bulls, who have clinched a playoff berth but will have to play Boston in the first round if they finish eighth in the East, were led by Michael Jordan with 32 points. But he failed to score from the 9:13 mark of the fourth period until he hit a 3-point shot with 16 seconds left, trimming Washington's lead to 119-116.

Nuggets 116, Spurs 106

Denver strengthened its hold on the final playoff spot in the West as tAlex English scored 29 points against San Antonio.

New Era Begins In Pro Baseball

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

The New Era of baseball is about to start.

A new way of doing business. A new breed of managers. New stars and new teams on the rise.

Baseball 1987 begins Monday afternoon in Toronto — the first season-opener outside the United States — when Cleveland's Brett Butler steps up against Jimmy Key of the Blue Jays.

But already, this year has a different look.

Tim Raines, Rich Gedman, Bob Horner and Ron Guidry are missing. Dwight Gooden will not pitch Opening Day; he's undergoing treatment for cocaine use.

Future Hall of Famer Tom Seaver is gone, possibly forever. Lance Parrish, Andre Dawson and World Series hero Ray Knight have changed places, along with Kevin McReynolds, Rick Rhoden, Jeff Reardon and Danny Tartabull.

Several teams are wearing new uniforms; the tomahawk returns in Atlanta, the rainbow is over in Houston.

Former Yale President A. Bartlett Giamatti starts his first full year as National League president. He is already being mentioned as Commissioner Peter Ueberroth's eventual successor.

Still, many questions linger. Can the World Series champion New York Mets break the repeat jinx? Will Roger Clemens be the latest victim of the Cy Young trap? Does Mike Scott scuff the ball? Can anything top last October's excitement, when Boston pulled a last-strike escape in the playoffs and then watched the Mets do the same in the World Series?

We will get a few answers this month, some later this year and many never at all. Part of the attraction of baseball, the timeless game, is that it takes awhile to come into focus no matter how hard we look.

One aspect that is clear and most significant is how owners are dealing with players. The days of long-term, big-money contracts are over. One-year pacts tied to performance are the rule with few exceptions, the intent being to stop the salary spiral.

"The players told us for years that we didn't have to keep throwing money at them," Barry Rona, head of the owners' Player Relations Committee, said. "We don't mind reminding them of that once in awhile."

While both sides agree the price of mediocrity — $500,000 for a reserve infielder, for instance — has driven the salary structure out of whack, those most affected by new financial policies are top players.

Raines, Gedman, Horner and Guidry remain unsigned free agents after receiving offers from other teams, all at substantial pay cuts. If no one takes them, they can return to their 1986 clubs on May 1.

Other free agents such as Dawson, Parrish and Knight took reduced salaries to move elsewhere. Parrish, offered $1.2 million this year by Detroit, accepted a base salary of $800,000 with Philadelphia. Dawson turned down $1 million from Montreal and got a guaranteed $500,000 from the Chicago Cubs. Knight, the Most Valuable Player of the World Series, rejected $800,000 from the Mets and took $400,000 in Baltimore. Reggie Jackson, unwanted by California at $900,000, returned to Oakland at half the price.

Parrish's teammate, Jack Morris, also wanted to leave. But the New York Yankees, California, Philadelphia and Minnesota did not want to pay $1.8 million for the winningest pitcher this decade, so Morris stayed in Detroit, went to salary arbitration and was awarded a contract for the same amount.

Clemens, the American League MVP and Cy Young winner, could not go to salary arbitration because he had not played three full years, as stipulated by the 1985 agreement between players and management. Clemens, who made $220,000 last season plus another $120,000 in incentives, wanted $1 million this year and the Boston Red Sox offered a base salary of $500,000.

There was no settlement, just angry words, so Clemens walked out of camp. He stayed out for 29 days, before rejoining the club Saturday. It may be awhile before we learn whether he will be the first AL Cy Young winner to follow with an above-.500 record since Mike Flanagan in 1979.

Seaver turned down Boston's final offer and did not get another from anyone. George Foster, Dave Kingman, John Denny and Lonnie Smith, all with big contracts and declining production, were released and may disappear.

There are, however, new stars waiting to fill the void.

Last season's rookie crop, including Jose Canseco, Wally Joyner, Pete Incaviglia, Cory Snyder and Tartabull, was one of the best ever. Kansas City's Bo Jackson, San Diego's Benito Santiago and California's Devon White are newcomers to watch this year.

Joe Carter, Kirby Puckett and Eric Davis emerged as potential superstars in 1986, joining the youth now dominating the majors. Don Mattingly, whose numbers after three full seasons are better than those of Lou Gehrig and Mickey Mantle, and Gooden head the list.

Gooden will not start the season with the Mets. A week before he was scheduled to pitch the opener, he agreed to begin drug treatment rather than be suspended by Ueberroth. There was no telling when the 1985 NL Cy Young winner, now 22, would rejoin his teammates.

Some of the talent has been shuffled. The Mets, trying to become the first World Series winners to repeat since the 1977-78 New York Yankees, traded several fine prospects to San Diego for McReynolds. The Yankees got Rhoden from Pittsburgh, Kansas City acquired Tartabull from Seattle, Minnesota obtained Reardon from Montreal, St. Louis got Tony Pena from Pittsburgh, Baltimore sent Storm Davis to San Diego for Terry Kennedy, the Cubs got Jim Sundberg from Kansas City and sent Ron Cey to Oakland, Los Angeles got Matt Young from Seattle and Tim Leary from Milwaukee and Atlanta acquired Damaso Garcia from Toronto.

There have also been shakeups in the dugouts. Nine managers begin their first full seasons with teams, with Cal Ripken Sr. of Baltimore and Larry Bowa in San Diego managing in the majors for the first time. In all, 11 managers have made their major-league debuts in the last two years, with Houston's Hal Lanier and Texas' Bobby Valentine getting instant results with youth-laden teams.

Back this season is Lou Piniella, trying to become the first Yankees manager to work two straight full seasons since Billy Martin in 1976-77.

"I hope I'm getting better," Piniella said. "Players should get better each year and so should managers."

One man who would someday like to manage — in Philadelphia, he says — is Mike Schmidt of the Phillies. Schmidt, who has hinted on-and-off that this will be his final season, won his third National League MVP award in 1986. He'll get plenty of attention soon as he approaches his fifth home run of the year, No. 500 of his career.

Sadly missing in 1987 will be Dick Howser, who stepped down as the Kansas City Royals manager last July after learning he had brain cancer. Howser hoped to return this year, but made it through only one day of spring training before stepping down in favor of Billy Gardner. Looking thin and frail, Howser said the heat was too much and three weeks later underwent his third brain surgery.

Also missing this season, sort of, will be Pete Rose. Cincinnati's player-manager is coming off the worst season of his career (.219) and reluctantly gave up his roster spot in the winter so the Reds could protect minor-league pitcher Pat Pacillo.

Rose, 46 next week, is not eligible to activate himself until May 15 and said he may not play until September.

Staying On Top Is Hardest Job

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Frank Cashen wrote his New York Mets a letter this winter, warning them it would be tough to repeat as World Series champions.

"It's not just in baseball," the general manager said. "When's the last time a team repeated in the NBA or NFL?"

The hardest job in sports isn't reaching the top; it's staying there.

Not since the New York Yankees won the World Series in 1977-78 has baseball had a repeat champion. The 1984 Detroit Tigers and '85 Kansas City Royals tried and failed.

Now, it's the Mets' turn.

And if any team ever looked ready to repeat, it is the Mets. They seem even bigger and badder than the Mets who won 108 times during the regular season, blowing away the National League East by 21½ games — the biggest margin since divisional play began in 1969.

Dwight Gooden, Ron Darling, Bobby Ojeda, Sid Fernandez, Roger McDowell and Jesse Orosco lead the best pitching staff in the majors ("I think pitching is where you have to look when you talk about winning pennants," Manager Davey Johnson said.

Keith Hernandez, Gary Carter, Darryl Strawberry and Len Dykstra key the best hitting team in the league.

They play with confidence and a cockiness that makes them by far the most hated team in the big leagues ("We don't feel cocky," Strawberry said).

And, in a rare break from previous winners, the Mets made a major trade in the off-season, acquiring Kevin McReynolds. Only Ray Knight is gone.

Yet history says the Mets won't repeat this season. Instead, they are more likely to fall victim not to Philadelphia or St. Louis or Mike Scott, but to themselves.

"It's mental," Detroit pitcher Jack Morris said. "The reason teams don't repeat is a lot mental."

Detroit dispatched all challengers in 1984, winning 104 games, sweeping the American League playoffs and dismantling San Diego in the World Series.

People said the Tigers might become a dynasty, and they made the mistake of believing it. Detroit slipped 20 games the next season and slid into third place in the AL East.

"When we became champs, everything was supposed to happen so easy for us," second baseman Lou Whitaker said. "We took it for granted that we would be there again. We were overconfident."

The Royals also got gobbled up, fading from World Series champions to a below-.500 team.

Bret Saberhagen, who at age 21 won the Cy Young and World Series Most Valuable Player awards, admits he spent more time on the banquet circuit than in the workout room after Kansas City's triumph. He went from 20-6 to 7-12.

"A lot of guys, not just me, had off-years," he said.

Cashen believes everyone will know within the first month of the season whether the Mets have put their off-season troubles — legal and marital — behind them and win it all again this year.

His letter stressed three points:

"One, they can't have the attitude that they can turn it on anytime they want.

"No. 2 involves greed. I've seen where people come in and want all the money and the team goes up in smoke.

"Three is complacency. People say, 'What the heck, we won it last year.'"

Mike Schmidt thinks his Phillies might overtake the Mets, especially after adding Lance Parrish. But Schmidt does not expect New York to let up.

"I'm not counting on the Mets returning to earth because of complacency," he said. "Complacency is not in the Mets' program."

Cashen said the Mets' front office shares the burden of not being complacent "and we have shown definite signals we will not be by the trade we made."

While other World Series winners thought they did not need to make changes or were afraid to make them, the Mets got McReynolds, a power-hitting outfielder, from San Diego in an eight-player deal that sent some of New York's best young talent to the Padres.

The trade marked the first time a champion made a major move in the off-season since Cincinnati sent All-Star first baseman Tony Perez to Montreal for Dan Driessen on Dec. 16, 1976.

Wall Street Dips, Then Soars At Week's End

By JOYCE M. ROSENBERG
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market, which resembled a jazzy sports car tooling down a freeway during the first quarter of 1987, was in the shop for repairs several days over the past week or so — and then came back on all cylinders.

But how far it will go from here is a matter of debate among analysts.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which from Jan. 2 to March 26 soared more than 475 points, dropped 74 points in the two sessions bracketing last weekend and then lurched along the rest of the week before soaring nearly 70 points on Friday.

The average ended the week up 54.54 points at a new high of 2,390.34.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index rose 1.84 to 170.20, while the market value index at the American Stock Exchange was up 2.35 to a record 340.46.

Volume on the Big Board averaged 191.83 million shares a day, against 186.14 million the week before.

Analysts said the brief stall in the 1987 rally was a correction of an overextended market and they generally were upbeat about the future.

But some warned that the glory days may soon come to an end.

Michael Metz, an analyst with Oppenheimer & Co., said the market's euphoria may be at a peak, and, beyond that, the bull market faces some serious obstacles, including an expanding supply of stocks.

An expected increase in initial public offerings and the sale of stock by comapnies that have gone private will mean more places for institutions and individuals to invest their money.

That would mean a less concentrated market, and stocks that are already public are likely to receive less of the available cash and therefore not see the kinds of gains they did in the first quarter.

"There's a fairly good chance most stocks have seen their highs for a while," Metz said.

A.C. Moore, an analyst with Argus Research Corp., agreed that an increase in the supply of issues will bring the market down, and he predicted stocks will reach their high within the next few weeks and then pull back by 5 percent to 10 percent.

However, "In the long term, we think we're still in a favorable bull cycle," he said.

The market's ability to digest negative news — such as the quarter-point increase in the prime lending rate this past week — and keep on going bodes well for its future, said Ralph J. Acampora, an analyst with Kidder, Peabody & Co.

"When you can absorb all that, you're in good shape," said Acampora, who predicted the market would continue to rise, although not at a steady pace.

"We're going to slow down," he said.

Lawrence Wachtel, a market strategist with Prudential-Bache Securities Inc., said, "We're looking for the Dow to reach the 2,500 level by the middle part of the year and then go into that legendary correction."

"By that time, mutual fund money from the IRA (individual retirement account) season will have been introduced into the market" and "the conversion of bonds to stocks will have been completed," he said.

Wachtel predicted the Dow Jones industrials would tumble between 250 and 300 points — about a 10 percent decline — but he did not anticipate any panic on Wall Street.

"They'll live with it, and say, 'What's the big deal?'" he said.

At least one analyst is not looking toward a major pause in the market's upward run.

"We can look forward to corrections of a few percentage points or 5 percent or so. We don't see any big corrections," said Robert Colby, an analyst with Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

"We're still bullish for the long term," Colby said.

Trend Shifts As Loan Rate Hits 9-Year Low

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mortgage rates declined for the ninth consecutive month in March, pushing rates to their lowest level in more than nine years, government statistics show.

But there were indications the trend is changing.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board reported Friday that fixed-rate mortgages averaged 9.48 percent in March, down from 9.52 percent in February.

The latest drop put rates 1.35 percentage points below where they were a year ago, but the March decline was much smaller than decreases in earlier months.

The most popular form of adjustable rate mortgage, one with caps on how much interest rates can rise, fell as well in March to 8.43 percent, down from 8.51 percent in February.

Some analysts said, however, that the March declines are likely to be the last for awhile with mortgage rates starting to rise slightly in the months ahead.

"There is no question that mortgage rates have bottomed out. Just in the past week, we have seen the mortgage market turn around and go up probably a full one-half percentage point," said Warren Lasko, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association.

The average rate from the bank board's survey are for loans on new homes where the mortgages covered at least 75 percent of the purchase price.

The bank board rates include add-on fees, known as points, and reflect mortgage rates in effect in early March.

A more recent survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. showed that rates have indeed started moving up. This survey, released Friday, put the averaged fixed-rate mortgage at 9.27 percent, up from 9.07 percent last week. This mortgage rate does not include add-on fees.

Witnesses Differ On Tobacco Ad Ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation to ban the advertising and promotion of tobacco products was variously described Friday as unconstitutional censorship and the only real way to rid the United States of cigarettes.

"The government should not practice social engineering through censorship," Daniel Oliver, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, told the House Energy and Commerce transportation, tourism and hazardous materials subcommittee.

Joining Oliver in opposing the legislation were representatives of the Justice Department, the American Civil Liberties Union, advertising associations and the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Urging approval of the sweeping ban were its two chief House advocates, Reps. Mike Synar, D-Okla., and Bob Whittaker, R-Kan., and the American Medical Association.

"The elimination of tobacco product advertising and promotion is essential to the achievement of a tobacco-free society," Dr. James Todd said on behalf of the AMA.

"This nation cannot afford to allow cigarettes to remain the heaviest advertised commercial product in our society," Todd said.

Oliver, speaking for himself, not the full FTC, questioned whether a ban would make a dent in the nation's appetite for tobacco.

"Almost all of the large number of studies of cigarette advertising have found changes in total advertising expenditures to have little or no effect on changes in total consumption," he said.

Oliver warned that a ban would not only wipe out ads for cigarettes, but with them the repeated, legally required displays of the U.S. surgeon general's warnings that smoking is harmful to human health.

He said the $2 billion spent each year on tobacco advertising and promotion is intended to build and reinforce brand loyalty, not add to the 50 million people who regularly smoke cigarettes.

Deputy Assistant Attorney General Douglas Kmiec said that while there are conflicting Supreme Court rulings on the ability of government to ban ads for legal products, "we have substantial doubts about the constitutionality of this legislation."

Barry Lynn, legislative counsel for the ACLU, said the proposed ban is "unwise and unconstitutional. ... Instead of limiting speech, Congress could appropriate funds for education on the health consequences of using potentially dangerous products."

Also endorsing this approach was John Seigenthaler, chairman, publisher and editor of The Nashville Tennessean. Speaking for the publishers' association, he called the legislation "wrong" and "misguided."

"Government censorship is addictive," Seigenthaler said. "It will suffocate creative thinking. It will strangle the breath of free speech. It will kill free expression. It is a deadly disease. A dangerous precedent is established for other enthusiasts to champion censorship of products, services and ideas they don't like."

Synar said the constitutional argument "totally ignores the realities of American society" and the estimated annual costs of smoking-related health problems: $4 billion in Medicare payments, $23 billion in added health insurance costs and from $30 billion to $40 billion in lost productivity.

He said that some 5,000 teenagers join the ranks of smokers each day. "To say that advertising doesn't encourage this growth, that's the most amazing statement I've heard," Synar said.

Europeans Supporting Bid To Hold U.S. Dollar

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press Writer

KNOKKE-HEIST, Belgium (AP) — European finance ministers said Saturday that signs of a weakening world economy do not threaten the Paris agreement by six major industrial powers to halt the decline of the U.S. dollar.

Finance ministers and central bank chiefs of the 12 European Economic Community nations discussed the issue in a full day of talks at this North Sea resort. They sought to align their views on key issues to be debated this week in Washington at a series of meetings on international financial problems.

Nigel Lawson, the British chancellor of the exchequer, indicated to reporters that he saw no signs that the Paris agreement of Feb. 22 was in danger. He said all the European ministers believe it is working well.

"I was very glad to see it (the Paris accord) was widely welcomed by all," he said.

The Paris agreement by finance ministers from the United States, Britain, West Germany, France, Japan and Canada commits the six countries to work together to keep international exchange rates near existing levels. It was the first time the Reagan administration had formally agreed to cooperate to keep the dollar steady.

Exchange rates were stable for a month following the Paris deal. But on March 30 the dollar resumed its downward slide — hitting a record low against the Japanese yen — amid concern about heightening trade tensions between Tokyo and Washington.

Financial markets also have been unnerved by signs that world economic expansion this year will be weaker than previously thought, most notably in West Germany and Japan.

But Lawson said the Paris accord was premised on expectations of slowing economic growth in the major industrialized nations.

Edouard Balladur, the French finance minister, told reporters he was pleased with the Paris deal despite the renewed decline of the dollar.

"It's working fine, just fine," he said.

Mark Eyskens, the Belgian finance minister and host of the Knokke-Heist meeting, said that "despite predictions of its failing, the (Paris) accord is working."

A key feature of the Paris deal was West Germany's promise to try to stimulate its imports of U.S. goods by promoting faster economic growth. It promised, for example, to increase the size of individual income tax cuts planned for 1988 as a way of boosting consumer spending.

Private economists, however, have recently trimmed their forecasts for West German economic growth.

Eyskens said the West German finance minister, Gerhard Stoltenberg, told Saturday's meeting that the Bonn government remained confident of keeping economic growth strong this year and next.

"The will remains to promote economic growth ... without accumulating the disadvantages of inflationary growth," Eyskens said his West German counterpart told the meeting.

The Belgian minister also told reporters that a new proposal on relieving the debt problems of sub-Saharan African nations would be put forward at the Washington meetings.

Lawson said the plan called for giving at least some of the sub-Saharan nations an extra 15 years or more to pay back their debt in a rescheduling that would offer more generous terms.

Details of the plan were not available.

Garage Liability

GREENSBORO (AP) — A group of North Carolina auto dealers has formed its own insurance company called Carolina Automobile Dealers Insurance Association and Reciprocal Exchange, which will begin issuing rates for garage liability May 1.

"Our liability insurance was getting prohibitive," said Hubert Parks, president of Parks Chevrolet of Kernersville, the group's chairman.

"Rates were going up and you weren't sure you could get enough. The claims in North Carolina aren't as high as Florida and other states, but we were being judged right along with the rest of the nation," Parks said.

Automobile dealers pay high liability insurance rates because of the large investment in cars they keep on their lots and the risk of accidents during test drives, say insurance agents.

The geographic area composed of Greenville and Pitt County consistently ranks among the top ten centers in dollar volume of construction activity. During the past decade, Greenville construction activity alone exceeded $20 million.

Economists Say Inflation Will Rear Its Head Again In '87, But Only Slightly

By JOHN M. BERRY
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Consumer prices probably will go up about four times as fast in 1987 as in 1986 because of the rising cost of oil and the impact of the falling U.S. dollar on prices of other imported goods.

A number of economic forecasters say inflation will top 4 percent this year, compared with just over 1 percent last year, as rising import prices also open the door to somewhat higher prices for domestically produced products. American businesses generally would like to raise their prices to improve their profit margins, which have been squeezed in many cases by unrelenting competition from foreign goods.

Meanwhile, many workers who face the prospect this year of having their wages increase less than the inflation rate will be pushing harder to fatten their paychecks.

"A striking feature of the 1987 economy will be the return of inflation," said Roger Brinner of Data Resources Inc., an economic consulting firm. "The data for January and February already point to a 5 percent annualized rate of increase in consumer prices for the opening quarter."

But Brinner and most other analysts do not believe the inflation genie is out of the bottle again; the nation is not in for a replay of the late 1970s and early 1980s, they said.

Instead of the high inflation rates of those years, the outlook is for consumer prices to climb at between a 4 percent and 5 percent rate for the next two years even if the value of the dollar keeps falling moderately and economic growth speeds up.

Some forecasters, such as Lawrence Chimerine of Chase Econometrics, who anticipate only a small improvement in growth, predict inflation will stay close to 4 percent through 1988. That would be similar to the rate between 1982 and 1985. As always, a few economists anticipate figures that are substantially lower or substantially higher than the current consensus.

There are three key reasons forecasters are relatively optimistic about prices despite the strong inflationary pressure associated with the dollar's decline:

—Most of the big increase in inflation between 1986 and 1987 will be due to a swing in oil prices, a big drop last year and a smaller increase this year, much of which already has occurred. Excluding energy, the consumer price index rose 3.8 percent in the 12 months ended in December, only slightly less than the 4 percent rise in 1985.

—Even with the falling dollar, American goods producers still face strong competition both from foreign producers who have increased their export prices far less than the change in the dollar's value might imply and from other American companies that have plenty of unused production capacity.

—Business costs, especially the two-thirds of them represented by wages and fringe benefits, are not rising rapidly. For instance, the Labor Department reported Friday that its hourly earnings index, which covers most nonmanagement workers, went up only 2 percent in the year ended in March. If economic growth does pick up, analysts expect compensation costs to begin to rise more rapidly, too, particularly if the unemployment rate continues to fall. However, faster growth likely would also mean better productivity gains, which would offset for employers some of the cost of higher wages.

"Because of the breadth of the U.S. market and its many deregulated industries, U.S. firms are unlikely to boost prices excessively," said DRI's Brinner. "The capacity utilization rate in manufacturing lingers near a weak 80 percent; even the booming service sector has an adequate supply of workers, with the unemployment rate slowly falling from 7 percent to 6.5 percent" in the DRI forecast.

Moreover, there may be a bit of a silver lining in the higher inflation rate for 1987. The decline of the dollar, probably the strongest inflationary force in the economy right now other than oil prices, is a necessary and unavoidable part of any effort to reduce the huge U.S. trade deficits with the rest of the world.

"The types of price increases now working through the economy are in fact beneficial," Brinner argued. "Higher foreign goods prices signal better sales prospects for U.S. producers and more jobs for American workers. In addition, higher energy prices more closely reflect the long-term scarcity of oil, and their arrival should ease the financial pressures on the domestic energy industry."

One important question is how much of the price bulge associated with higher oil and import prices will find its way into wages. If none does, then the dollar's drop would raise the level of prices on a one-time basis rather than raising the inflation rate for an indefinite period. On the other hand, if workers seek and get higher wages to offset the price bulge, then the faster increase in wages, unless reversed for some reason, would likely mean a higher inflation rate for some time to come.

That is one reason that Federal Reserve officials keep emphasizing that they are watching what happens not just to the reported inflation rate but to prices of domestically produced goods and services and wages. As Fed Governor Wayne D. Angell put it a few weeks ago, "Should temporary increases in import and oil prices display any tendency to spill over into a wider range of prices, or for that matter wages, a less accommodative (monetary) policy might be in order."

Another Fed governor, H. Robert Heller, said in an interview, "The inflation outlook will be determined in a crucial sense by our domestic producers' behavior. If they sit down and say Toyota increased their prices 5 percent, so we can increase ours 5 percent instead of holding down prices and seeking a larger share of the market, then we will quickly be in trouble.

"That message really has to be given to American industry as strongly as possible," Heller declared. "If they go ahead and increase prices, then sooner or later we will have to clamp down. Everybody will be better off if they don't. Those price gains that they try to grab will have to be squeezed out of the system. They have to understand the consequences of their actions."

There is no indication that last week's increase in many banks' prime lending rate from 7½ percent to 7¾ percent, or a rise in some long-term rates, was the result of any action by the Fed, according to financial analysts. However, should inflation rates move up more than is now generally expected, it undoubtedly would show up in higher interest rates with or without an explict move by the Fed to tighten its monetary policy.

Economist Robert J. Barbera of E.F. Hutton & Co. expects that nonoil import prices will go up about 8 percent during 1987. Some imported goods prices, such as for autos and photographic equipment, rose between 15 percent and 20 percent in the past year. Prices for apparel, much of which is imported, have gone up at a 4.3 percent annual rate in the past three months. Normally apparel has been one of the most stable parts of the consumer price index.

On the other hand, medical care costs, after shooting up during much of 1986, have risen at a 6.3 percent rate in the past six months, down from an 8 percent rate in the prior half year. Increases in entertainment costs have slowed as well since the first part of last year.

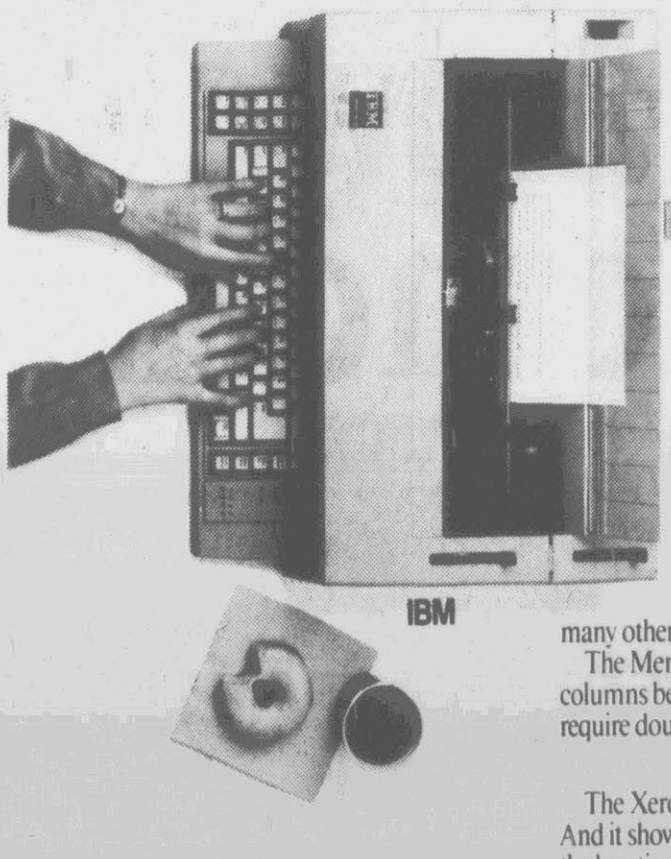
Playing it safe vs. Playing it smart



For years, IBM electrics set the standard for office typewriters. So buying them became a habit. And the safe thing to do.

But today buying an office typewriter out of habit is anything but safe. And for a good reason. Typewriters aren't just electric anymore. They're electronic. And they can do much more than ever before.

It's smart to compare.

So now what's the safe way to select a typewriter? Play it smart, give it the ultimate test. Let the secretaries in your office try it. They'll tell you which one is really the best.

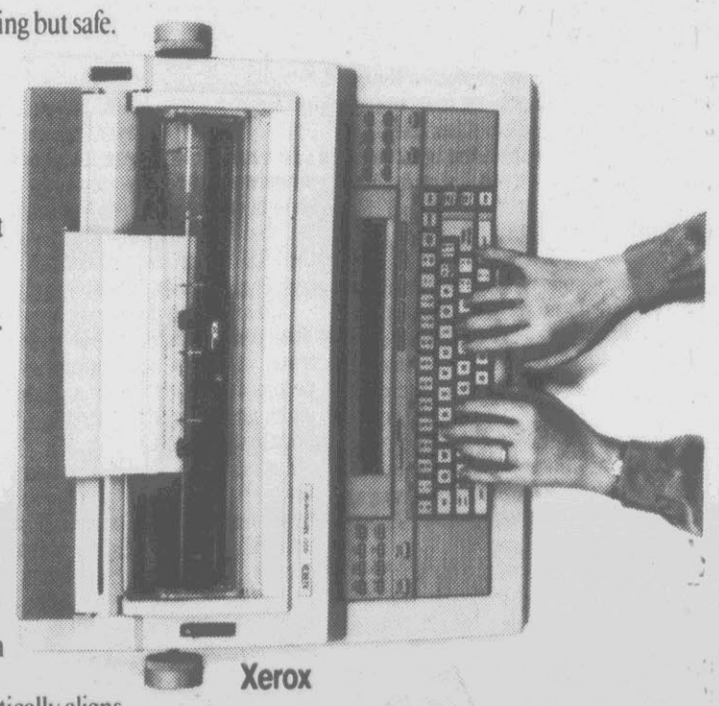
But be sure they try the Xerox Memorywriter. Because at the risk of sounding overconfident, we think they'll prefer it over every electronic they try.

It's smart to edit, rather than re-type.

The Memorywriter puts many more editing capabilities at your secretary's fingertips. Like moving or copying blocks of text from one page, or document, to another.

So it only takes a few keystrokes to make changes that would take significantly longer with many other machines.

The Memorywriter also allows typing in bold, and automatically aligns columns between margins. With other typewriters, such tasks actually require double typing.



It's smart to work more comfortably.

The Xerox Memorywriter was designed with your secretary in mind. And it shows. In the comfortable, responsive and easy-to-use keyboard. In the location and clear, concise labeling of every key and control.

All in all, with a Xerox Memorywriter, your secretary can breeze through documents more quickly and more accurately. And easily give them the professional look that makes you look more professional.

It's smart to get a trade-in bonus of up to $250.

Heyday Of IRAs Will Pass On April 15

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Individual retirement accounts take their last bow this month as the all-American tax shelter.

For five years now, any working American has been eligible to contribute up to $2,000 annually to an IRA and deduct the contribution on his or her tax return.

But after April 15, the deadline for 1986 contributions, the rules will be different. While IRAs will remain widely available, the deduction is gone for millions of higher-income people who are covered by other pension or retirement savings programs.

IRAs, which were introduced in 1975 for employees not covered by pension plans, became big business indeed when they were opened up to all working Americans under a law passed in 1981.

From the start of 1982 through 1986, according to the investment firm First Boston Corp., they attracted about $175 billion in contributions.

By the middle of this month, the firm estimates, the total amount in IRAs will be close to $330 billion, boosted by a buildup of interest, dividends and the bounteous capital gains available in stock and bond investments over the past few years.

Investment advisers have been just about unanimous in hailing IRAs as one of the best financial deals available to the general public.

Banks, savings institutions, brokerage firms, mutual fund sponsors, insurance companies and credit unions all compete fiercely for a share of the business.

From the point of view of government policy, the idea behind "IRAs for all" was to encourage retirement saving and to take some pressure off the Social Security system. IRAs fit squarely with the Reagan administration's themes of self-reliance and reduction of the role of government in people's lives.

However, they also cost the U.S. Treasury a lot of revenue at a time when the federal budget was showing deep deficits. And as a stimulus to saving, they have been a disappointment.

In fact, the personal savings rate in this country has fallen sharply since the 1970s. Apparently, said Neal Soss, economist at First Boston, most IRA money has simply been shifted from elsewhere in the existing pool of savings.

With the sharply progressive system of tax brackets that was in effect before tax reform, the IRA deduction was most appealing to those people with the biggest incomes.

If you were in the 50 percent bracket, the federal government effectively made half of the annual $2,000 contribution for you. If you were in the 22 percent bracket, the tax break was $440.

Observed Soss, "While under one-fifth of all individuals claim an IRA contribution, over half those with incomes above $40,000 (and over two-thirds with incomes above $100,000) have claimed an IRA.

"The weight of evidence is that IRAs did more to raise the after-tax spending power of well-off taxpayers than to encourage net new saving."

A rush to invest in "last chance" IRAs for 1986 seems very likely between now and the April 15 tax deadline. Officials at banks and other institutions say many people may have been unsure, until they consulted with tax preparers, that they could still make deductible contributions for 1986.

Besides, there always seems to be a large contingent of Americans who wait to handle their tax affairs until the last minute. New York's Citibank, for example, says it gets nearly 40 percent of its IRA accounts in the last three days before the filing deadline.

Once that crunch is past, many observers expect the growth of IRAs to slow, but by no means to stop.

The No-Load Mutual Fund Association, a trade group whose members compete eagerly for individual retirement accounts, points out that about three of every four working Americans will still be permitted to make deductible contributions in 1987 and beyond.

Nevertheless, many institutions that market IRAs are hedging their bets a bit for the future. On the one hand, they are striving to make the case that even non-deductible IRA contributions offer the generous benefits of tax-free compounding.

On the other hand, some of these institutions have also begun to promote alternatives to IRAs, such as tax-free municipal bonds, annuities and new life insurance products.

They are hoping that many people, having gained an awareness of the benefits of retirement saving, will want to keep building up their nest eggs, either inside or outside IRAs. They face a challenging selling job, however, with less help from Uncle Sam.

Some Investors Find Shelters Too Good To Be True

By JOHN M. BRODER
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

NEW YORK — As the April 15 tax-filing deadline nears, millions of Americans wish they could find some shelter from the Internal Revenue Service's biting winds.

But scores of taxpayers, including many prominent wealthy figures who invested millions of dollars in exotic tax shelter programs sold by an imaginative New York promoter, wish they had not tried.

Over the past six years, the investors bought shelters based on Picasso prints and postage stamps from the uninhabited Scottish islands of Eynhallow and Grunay. They bought pieces of a run-down Arizona tree farm and the rights to the "Terra Drill," an unorthodox oil drilling tool that has yet to prove its commercial worth. One investor, looking for a equipment depreciation writeoff, ended up the unhappy owner of an $80,000 Peterbilt truck.

Participants in these programs stand to lose their investments, which by one estimate total more than $100 million, plus back taxes, interest and IRS penalties. All these investment programs are the subject of past or current court action and close IRS scrutiny.

The 1986 tax reform law and an IRS crackdown on "abusive" shelters have taken most of the fun out of the tax shelter game as it was played in the early and mid-1980s. Rich taxpayers sank tens of thousands of dollars — and sometimes much more — into programs that promised them writeoffs of as much as four times their cash outlay. Belatedly, the IRS is catching up with dozens of these schemes, retroactively wiping out the huge deductions and hitting the taxpayers with stiff penalties and fines.

The IRS and federal prosecutors are now also vigorously pursuing the promoters of such tax-avoidance schemes. Last month, a federal grand jury in New York indicted three promoters of an allegedly fraudulent tax shelter that generated more than $350 million in writeoffs for more than 400 wealthy investors, including many prominent business and Hollywood figures.

The IRS is also seeking back taxes, interest and penalties from the investors, who include CBS Chairman Laurence A. Tisch, television producer Norman Lear, actors Sidney Poitier and Lorne Green, the late artist Andy Warhol and three top executives of the Wall Street investment bank of Lazard Freres.

The painful experience of investors in all these schemes offers a cautionary tale with two simple but oft-forgotten lessons: If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is. And don't get greedy.

The tax programs involving the artwork, the stamps, the nursery, the drill and the trucks were all the handiwork of Herman Finesod, a New York financial innovator described by one courtroom opponent as "The King of Tax Shelters." The tax men have disallowed deductions from several of his deals, including the Terra Drill, the trucks and the artwork. A federal appeals court halted the stamp program, describing it as "a simple conspiracy ... to perpetrate a tax fraud." An Arizona state court found that Finesod's syndication of the rights to reproduce artwork was a violation of that state's anti-racketeering law.

Nevertheless, associates said, Finesod is not giving up his quest for new investment opportunities in the U.S. Tax Code.

"Prohibition is to the barkeep as the tax laws are to the tax shelter promoter," one of Finesod's lawyers said when asked about Finesod's current ventures. He added, however, that most of Finesod's energies today are devoted to designing investments for profit rather than for tax savings.

A former employee described Finesod as "smooth, charming, an art collector, very worldly. He has some notoriety in the art world because of the Picasso deals. ... He's sincere and enthusiastic. He could sell you the Brooklyn Bridge."

Although most of Finesod's business entities operate under his New York umbrella company, Worldco, he also maintains an office and keeps an apartment in Los Angeles, according to Worldco documents and Finesod associates.

Finesod declined repeated requests to be interviewed for this article. One of his attorneys, William B. Wachtel of the New York law firm of Gold & Wachtel, did consent to discuss some aspects of Finesod's wide-ranging enterprise.

"In the tax shelter business, there are two kinds (of operators)," Wachtel said. "There are the fraudsters, who put a product on the street and head for the hills. There are others, and I for one believe Finesod falls into this category, who are creative, novel, who put out a tax product in a Rolls Royce fashion."

In response to questions about the numerous investor lawsuits that have been filed against Finesod over tax shelters that were disallowed by the IRS or that did not deliver other expected benefits, Wachtel said:

"Enough with the crying investors. They're disappointed. But there's no fraud. There's no impropriety. If people feel they have a righteous claim and want to litigate, fine. We'll litigate with them."

Among those suing Finesod over deals that allegedly went sour are three former professional baseball players who live in California: relief pitcher Ed Farmer, catcher Bill Fahey and utility player Mike Ivie. Each sank $90,000 into a tax shelter deal involving the Terra Drill and lost it all, according to the complaint in a lawsuit filed last year in federal court. They still face adverse action by the IRS, which disallowed deductions taken for losses from the drill deals.

In their suit, the ballplayers and 55 other Terra Drill investors accused Finesod and various other entities of fraud, concealment of critical information and racketeering.

Said Wachtel: "The Terra Drill is a fascinating product. If one of these deals turns around, you'll have a lot of instant millionaires."

Finesod's chief antagonist in the courts over the coming months and years will be Herbert Beigel, a Chicago attorney specializing in tax shelter litigation. He represents 175 investors, including the ballplayers, in suits against three Finesod programs — the Terra Drill deal, the Arizona nursery and the truck-leasing program.

"There never was a chance of any profit from these deals," Beigel said, echoing a charge central to his legal challenges to Finesod's programs. His lawsuits, filed last year in U.S. District Court in New York, allege that Finesod and his associates cheated investors through fraud, securities violations, misrepresentation and racketeering.

Finesod's marketing program is like that of many other investment and tax shelter promoters. He employs a network of salesmen around the country who call on accountants, tax lawyers and business managers for wealthy individuals.

These tax advisers look over the slick color brochures and fat prospectuses and then decide whether to recommend them to their clients. In the Arizona nursery deal, which a former salesman said was structured as a typical Finesod deal, the sales agents and the accountants who passed it on to their clients split a commission of 10 percent of the sales price.

Several tax advisers who put their clients into these deals said they studied the offerings and they looked as if they had a reasonable chance of making a profit and surviving IRS scrutiny. They all noted that they are under tremendous pressure from rich clients to shield their income from the government's clutches.

"We get three to 15 prospectuses every week, maybe more," said a partner in a Los Angeles accounting firm that advised a client to invest $25,000 in the Arizona tree farm. "We are pressured by a lot of clients in high income brackets who want to shelter their income. I won't say we're hounded, but we were pushed by them to find these things. We knew they were high-risk. We were reluctant, but we did it."

"Investors in these programs are not naive," Wachtel, Finesod's attorney, said. "They all know what they're getting into."

Perhaps. If they had read the private placement memorandum on the nursery deal, which runs 228 single-spaced pages, they would have learned that Finesod and several of his associates had been identified by the IRS as promoters of tax shelters that will be subject to special IRS review. They would have learned of several potential conflicts of interest between various Finesod entities involved in the nursery syndication.

They would have learned that just by investing in the Arizona program they would be flagging themselves as taxpayers who deserve close attention from IRS auditors. They would have learned that there was a good chance that their writeoffs would be disallowed if the IRS took a strict view of the deductibility of nursery stock.

Given this information, investors who sink $50,000 or $100,000 into such programs seldom get much sympathy. But their experience should serve as a warning to any investor, whether he is looking for a tax savings or a straight economic return.

Robert A. Stanger, publisher of The Stanger Report, a tax shelter newsletter, offers the following observations and advice after years of studying hundreds of tax shelter gimmicks:

"Beware of the esoteric or offbeat deal," Stanger wrote a few years ago. "The odds are strong that by the time it gets to you, it's well known to the IRS or the SEC (Securities and Exchange Commission). And an adverse revenue ruling is probably seconds away. ..."

If you want deductible interest at a low cost, we can deliver.

Wachovia Equity BankLine® puts low cost, tax-deductible interest right on your doorstep.

A new tactic on taxes.
Equity BankLine is one of the few types of credit on which the interest is still fully tax deductible. That's because your line is secured by the equity in your home. (Certain limitations may apply.)

Save on interest.
The interest rate on Equity BankLine is based on Wachovia's Prime Rate.* So it may be substantially lower than on other types of credit you may have, such as charge cards, installment loans, etc.

Your Credit Line	Your Interest Rate	Annual Percentage Rate for April, 1987
$50,000 or more	Prime + ½%	8%
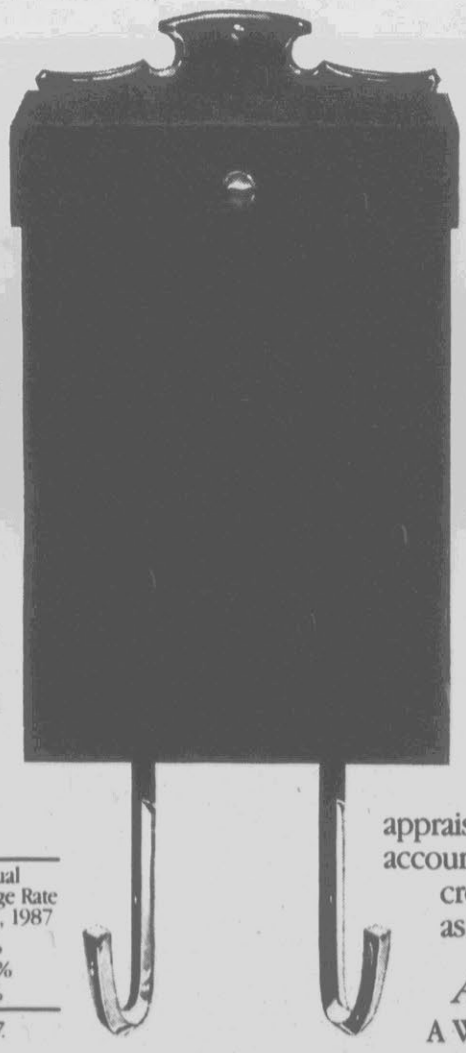
$15,000 to $49,999	Prime + 1%	8½%
$10,000 to $14,999	Prime + 1½%	9%

Rate for $50,000 or more effective April 1, 1987.

A money-wise move.
You can use Equity BankLine to pay off your balances on more expensive types of credit. And you can use it for any future borrowing needs. How you use your line of credit is up to you. When you need money, you simply write an Equity BankLine check.



No strings attached.
Unlike some other institutions, Wachovia does not require you to place large deposits with us to get a low rate. Your rate is based only on the amount of your line of credit.

Pay less to close.
We do everything possible to keep your closing costs to a minimum. We charge no origination fee, no points and no annual fee. While other mortgage loan closing costs will apply, we may not require an outside appraisal. If you have a Wachovia BankLine account, or can qualify for your line of credit unsecured, closing costs could be as little as $10.

A Personal Banker℠ can help.
A Wachovia Personal Banker will be glad to answer your questions about Equity BankLine and make it easy for you to open your account. Call or stop by any Wachovia office.

Wachovia Equity BankLine®

"Prime Rate" refers to that interest rate set by Wachovia from time to time as an interest rate basis for commercial and consumer borrowings. The Prime Rate is one of several interest rate bases used by Wachovia. Wachovia lends at interest rates above and below the Prime Rate. Your annual percentage rate may vary monthly.
This information does not constitute a complete or conclusive interpretation of the new tax law. Before making your decisions it would be wise to consult your tax advisor.

Business Notes

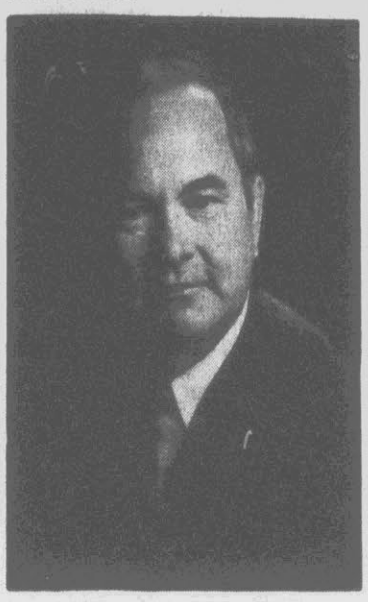
Area Executive

NCNB Corp. has announced that E. Hugh Daughtry Jr., senior vice president, has been named east central area executive for the Charlotte headquartered bank.

Daughtry, a 27-year veteran with NCNB, served as city executive in Jacksonville, Henderson and Wilmington before moving to Florida in 1983 as southwest area executive.

A native of Mount Olive, Daughtry is a graduate of North Carolina State University and the School of Consumer Banking at the University of Virginia.

Daughtry and his wife, the former Dorothy Regan of Oxford, will reside in Greenville.



E. HUGH DAUGHTRY

Account Executive

Studio 86, an Ayden firm specializing in screen printing of T-shirts, jackets and hats, has announced that Gregory Alan Watkins is associated with the business as account executive.

The firm, located at 105 West Ave., said Watkins will serve businesses and organizations in the Greenville area.

A Roanoke Rapids native, Watkins attended East Carolina University where he majored in English and history. He is a member of several national honor societies and has been active in drama, including two seasons as "Blackbeard" in the outdoor drama at Bath.

News Director

Gene Gray, president of WRQR-FM, has announced the appointment of Jeff Diamond to news director for the Greenville-Pitt County area.

Gray said that as news director, Diamond will coordinate local news stories from WRQR's mobile news van and supervise field reporters. Diamond will also deliver 8 a.m., noon and 5 p.m. newscasts.

A native of Chicago, Diamond attended East Carolina University and has five years of radio broadcasting experience, according to Gray.

Award Earned

Wesley E. Singleton, Greenville representative for Edward D. Jones and Co., received the firm's sales manager award recently for "excellence in sales and service during 1986."

John Backmann, managing partner of the St. Louis based investment firm, announced that Singleton earned the honor in recognition of his work on behalf of company clients in the Greenville area.

Singleton, whose office is located at 3219 Landmark St., joined the firm in 1982. He has a degree in finance and is a member of Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church.

The Jones company, founded in 1871, has 1,150 offices in 36 states.

Satellite Services

Bob Barbour Honda, a Greenville automobile dealership, will soon begin receiving various industry-related programming via satellite, according to Automotive Satellite Television Network of Dallas.

ASTN said the satellite network allows dealerships to take advantage of the new programming, which includes sales seminars, technical training and industry news.

The network transmits via a special satellite network and broadcasts 40 hours of original programming each month. Over 1,500 automobile dealers throughout the United States are receiving the programming, according to ASTN.

Courses Completed

Mike Aldridge of Aldridge and Southerland Realtors Inc. has announced that Jeff Aldridge, Katherine Vinson, Sue Dunn, June Wyrick and Terry Hathaway have completed GRI (Graduate, Realtors Institute) courses at the Realtors Institute in Chapel Hill.

The courses are designed to increase knowledge and professionalism in the real estate business.

State Ranks First In Nation As Choice For Plant Locations

A national survey of corporate real estate directors ranks North Carolina first in the nation as the choice for new plant locations, a national manufacturing business newspaper has reported.

In the national poll of manufacturing companies, Manufacturing Week found that 22.7 percent of real estate decision-makers surveyed ranked North Carolina as the most attractive location in the continental United States for a new manufacturing facility.

North Carolina edged out California and Texas, each of which were mentioned by 21.2 percent of respondents as good manufacturing locations. Other states rated highly in the survey were Georgia (16.7 percent), Arizona (12.9 percent), Illinois (12.1 percent), and Ohio (7.6 percent).

The newspaper's report was based on a survey of industry executive throughout the United States. Of the 132 survey respondents, 30 picked North Carolina.

"This report confirms North Carolina's continuing leadership position in the field of economic development," said state Commerce Secretary Claude E. Pope.

"Our state has traditionally ranked among the top five states in the country when it comes to corporate executives' location preferences. We ranked first in a survey by Business Week in 1984 and second in a survey by Fortune in 1982.

"This survey confirms our state's continued momentum in this field and actually indicates some increase in our position," Pope said.

The 1984 Business Week survey found 20 percent of corporate executives surveyed named North Carolina as their first choice for a new manufacturing facility. In a similar survey in 1980, North Carolina tied with Texas for first place.

Chatham Opposes Coal Mine

GOLDSTON, N.C. (AP) — Coal company executives say there's coal in the hills around this Chatham County town and they want to return coal production to North Carolina after a 35-year absence, but many community residents oppose the move.

"Chatham County won't benefit from this, and yet will sustain the damage of water, air and land," resident Catherine Cameron said at a public hearing on the issue Thursday night.

Town residents have asked the North Carolina Environmental Management Commission to refuse to grant a permit to a coal mining company to Chatham Coal Co. The company began test boring last September in Gulf, less than two miles south of Goldston, after what coal officials said was years of study.

Chatham Coal has been issued by the federal Office of Surface Mining a permit that would allow strip mining of 2,000 tons of coal for test burning at unidentified area industries and power companies.

That amount would require mining six acres and would fill 111 dump trucks, the company's permit application says.

But the permit is conditional on the Environmental Management Commission's water quality division awarding another permit that would allow discharge of up to 10,000 gallons a day of water that collects in the proposed mine pits into a tributary that enters the Deep River.

The state has 90 days to reach a decision on the application, said Larry Coble, regional supervisor with the N.C. Division of Environmental Management, who directed the hearing.

Tests from water monitoring at the proposed site is not complete, so a decision is unlikely for several weeks, Coble said.

James Morgan of Sanford, president of the company, said at the hearing that Chatham Coal would do any treatment of water necessary to prevent adverse affects to the river.

"The fact that the river already is polluted shouldn't say a little more won't hurt," Ms. Cameron said. "It should say, 'enough is enough.'"

"I'm not sure this is the thing we need to get ourselves into," Chatham County Planning Board member William Dow said.

If the coal is found to be of a quality good enough to mine, Chatham Coal intends to seek a full scale permit that would extract 50,000 to 60,000 tons of coal from 10 to 12 acres a year, Morgan said.

That would bring jobs to the area and pump about $1 million to $2 million a year into the local economy, he said.

The coal company has argued that federal requirements force them to demonstrate that air and water qualities would not be distrubed by the mining.

But Chatham County residents are unconvinced. The county commissioners, the Goldston Town Board and the Goldston-Gulf Water Board all have adopted resolutions opposing the mine, and have asked the state not to grant the permits.

Greenville 13th In January Construction

Greenville authorized over $3 million in construction in January to rank 13th among 45 North Carolina cities, according to a study released by the State Department of Labor.

Raleigh took the number one spot in value of construction authorized for the month with $31,751,042; Durham was second with $19,572,237; followed by High Point, $15,116,243; Winston-Salem, $14,188,629; Greensboro, $11,952,074; Cary $10,611,475; Charlotte, $10,043,142; Wilmington, $5,750,359; Hickory, $4,111,83, and Fayetteville, $4,105,095. Greenville authorized $3,076,795.

The N.C. Labor Department's Division of Research and Statistics monitors building activity in 45 selected cities in North Carolina each month.

Greenville authorized $1,066,042 in non-residential construction to rank 16th.

Raleigh authorized $16,116,468 in non-residential construction to rank first, followed by Durham, $14,500,609; High Point, $14,108,797; Cary, $6,690,275; Charlotte, $6,086,199; Greensboro, $5,794,797; Winston-Salem, $4,761,493; Hickory, $3,149,938; New Bern, $3,025,004, and Fayetteville, $2,757,806.

Greenville ranked ninth in value of residential construction with $2,010,753.

Raleigh authorized $15,634,574 to rank first in residential construction, followed by Winston-Salem, $9,427,136; Greensboro $6,157,277; Durham, $5,071,628; Wilmington, $4,348,686; Charlotte, $3,956,943; Cary, $3,921,200, and Gastonia, $2,227,695.

Meanwhile, Pitt County authorized $4,514,905 in total construction to rank 15th among 70 North Carolina counties. Greene County authorized $5,200 in total construction to rank 69th.

Wake County ranked first with $66,491,638 in total construction, followed by Mecklenburg, $40,164,558; Guilford, $34,787,367; Durham, $27,488,477; Forsyth, $19,843,839; Cumberland, $8,709,168; Gaston, $7,869,008; Union, $6,495,086; Catawba, $6,307,511, and Craven, $6,168,831.

Pitt County authorized 1,209,640 in non-residential construction to rank 24th, while Greene County authorized $5,200 to rank 65th.

Wake County took the top spot with $30,901,821 in non-residential construction, followed by Guilford, $20,280,824; Durham, $20,059,403; Mecklenburg, $14,393,780; Forsyth, $6,332,183; Catawba, $3,919,938; Gaston, $3,718,176; Nash, $3,539,063; Craven, $3266,603, and Cumberland, $3,044,806.

Pitt County authorized $3,305,265 in residential construction in January to rank 11th. Greene County didn't authorize any residential construction during th month.

Wake County authorized $35,589,817 to rank first in residential construction, followed by Mecklenburg, $25,770,778; Guilford, $14,506,543, Forsyth, $13,511,656; Durham, $7,429,074; Cumberland, $5,664,362; New Hanover, $4,429,086; Gaston, $4,150,832; Henderson, $3,594,900, and Union, $3,534,704.

Building activity in the state's 45 largest cities and towns for January dropped 39.1 percent below the activity recorded for January 1986, State Labor Commissioner John C. Brooks said.

There were permits recorded for 2,857 units in January compared to 4,612 units in January 1986. The January 1987 figure was 8.2 percent above the 2,577 units recorded in December 1986.

Estimated value of this activity in January — $166,434,290 — dropped 21.1 percent from the $210,954,304 recorded in January 1986, and 13.1 percent below the $191,622,826 recorded in December 1986.

Total residential construction (including additions and alterations), at 1,972 units, dropped 45.1 percent from January 1986's 3,660, but rose 22.6 percent from December 1986's 1,608 units. Value, at $70,035,697, dropped 38.9 percent from January 1986's $114,678,139, but rose 2.3 percent from December 1986's $68,444,367.

The average construction cost of a single-family home in January — $60,479 — was up 11.8 percent from $54,115 in January 1986, but down 8.8 percent from $66,288 in December 1986.

Non-residential permits for totally new construction dropped with permits for 386 units issued, a 0.3 percent decrease.

Workers Protest Cutbacks

HENDERSON, N.C. (AP) — About 200 people lined up Saturday at the Burkhardt Carolina plant in Henderson and marched in a non-violent protest of wage and benefit cuts at the local automotive insulation factory.

The marchers set out from the plant shortly after 10 a.m. and were escorted by Henderson police toward their destination at the Vance County courthourse, where a crowd addressed labor leaders.

Members of United Furniture Workers Union Local 265 have been working without a contract sicne November 1986 when its agreement with Burkhardt expired.

A chant of, "We want a contract, we want a contract," could be heard several blocks away from the march.

Many of those marching with the workers claimed to have traveled long distances to be part of the event, saying they came from Washington, D.C., South Carolina, Tennessee, Arkansas and Mississippi. All indicated they wanted to lend their support to the Burkhardt workers, whose salaries have been cut by 95 cents per hour.

Printed material distributed earlier this week by union members claimed pay cuts added up to an annual loss of $2,600 per worker. The president of the local union said, that although workers would strike if they had to, such a measure is considered a "last-resort tactic" for now.

"We feel a strike would be detrimental to the community. If we go on stirke we will be doing the same thing as Burkhardt is doing — taking away from the community," John Leonard said.

Women's Aglow Is Ecumenical Group

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Women's Aglow Fellow International is the name of a Greenville-area Christian women's fellowship organization Carol Lee Gentile serves as president.

And "aglow" aptly describes the exuberant mother of six. She radiates enthusiasm for the ecumenical organization she's leading for the next two years and for the Lord she and the group serve.

Mrs. Gentile, a Pitt County resident for the past 20 years, was born into a Swedish family on Long Island, N.Y. She married an Italian businessman and quickly had six children. One — a daughter named Pamela — died of cancer at age 3.

She moved to Pitt County when her husband, Rocco, opened a tire and auto parts business in Grimesland.

Those early years in Pitt County were prosperous ones for her husband's business and good ones in terms of lovingly raising children, but they were difficult ones for her spiritually. "We had a big tall wall around our house in Grimesland," she said. "and, thinking back, I know that that wall symbolized the wall I had around my heart. I was a Yankee, an outsider, and I felt very alone and isolated from my neighbors. And I was empty inside in other ways, too, because I had not yet found the Lord."

When Mrs. Gentile was 39 years old, her husband died. "I was crushed," she said. "I didn't know how I'd manage raising children on my own. I knew nothing about the operation of Rocco's major business nor of his sideline interests — like his race horses. I was presented from many directions huge decisions to be made, and it was all very hard. But thank heavens, my husband had made a will the month before he died and the children and I were well taken care of. I sometimes speak to women's groups now about how they need to inform themselves before, not after, they become widows. I know whereof I speak."

And her feelings of helplessness as a new widow were accentuated when she discovered that she was pregnant. Mike, her youngest child at the time, was 10 years old. Having another baby, especially one born after the death of his father, was definitely not in her plans.

With the guidance and support of Dr. E.S. Douglas, her obstetrician, and Joan Tyson, a neighbor at the time who has since become a close friend, she worked through the fear related to her pregnancy and went forward with it. Her baby's delivery was an emergency Caesarean section, and both he and she almost died.

Son's Birth, A Turning Point

The birth of Ryan, now 10, was her turning point, however — her awareness that she could not continue to live without the acknowledgement of God in her life. While in the hospital, she accepted Christ as her saviour, put aside a longtime drinking habit that she had never before acknowledged as anything beyond ordinary social drinking, and let go of a three-pack-a-day cigarette habit. She brought home from the hospital to her family a new brother and a new mother.

Within a short time, she began to study at Pitt Community College, working on a human services degree there. "It was wonderful," she said, "to learn that I could do well academically. I had long before given up on doing anything with my mind beyond raising children. I remember a speech-making course there as one of the most frightening things I ever had to undertake, yet now I wouldn't take anything for what I learned in it. It's been invaluable to me."

Her first church activity was in the Grimesland United Methodist Church, where she volunteered to play the organ, even though she had no experience and could not read music. She had been told by God, she said, that he wanted her to play the organ, so based on this conviction, she did for several months. "It was a wonderful experience," she said. "in going beyond yourself, knowing for sure that what you're doing is not of yourself but of God and that, if you look to yourself even for a moment, you'll fall on your face."

All was not rosy from the time she became a Christian, however. There were still tough decisions to be made. She sold the house in Grimesland, sold her husband's business there and moved to Greenville. She tried one enterprise — commercial fishing — without the true guidance of the Lord, she sees as she looks back. "I lost a lot of money," she said. "It had looked like a lovely way for our family to work together in a business, but it just wasn't what the Lord wanted us to be doing."

An experiencer of the spiritual gift of speaking in tongues, she gradually began meeting other Christians thorughout the area who believe in "the baptism of the Holy Spirit," as the speaking in tongues phenomenon is often called.

She soon began to accept some speaking engagements. "Like my playing the organ," she said. "Speaking to groups wasn't something I felt or yet feel I can do on my own. But when I open myself to do it for the Lord, He gives me the words. Mostly I just speak from the heart about the peace I've seen in my own life since I've let Him lead me."

She also shares herself through work in the Church Ministries United effort to provide for the financially needy of the Greenville area.

She now lives in a Greenville neighborhood with her youngest sons, Mike and Ryan. Her other children, Glenn, Rocko, Michelle, Lorri Boyd, and her two granddaughters, Jennipher Boyd and Renita Gentile, all live in this area.

An active member of the First Pentecostal Holiness Church of Greenville, she now uses the Women's Aglow Fellowship as well as her church for support for her faith and as her vehicles for expressing her love for God and other people.

Aglow — A Praise Organization

"The Women's Aglow Fellowship" she said, "is a worldwide organization of women from many different churches who come together to praise the Lord."

The Greenville chapter meets the second Saturday of each month at 9:30 a.m. at the American Legion Building on St. Andrews Street. A coffee hour precedes meeting at 9 a.m.

"We have had all ages — from 14 to 84, I know — attend," she said. "And while we wouldn't exclude men who would like to join us and even have some male advisers, we are mostly women."

She said the group never seeks to compete with churches for the women's participation. In fact one of the organization's statements of purpose is "to encourage women to be members of and to participate in their local churches. The fellowship is not a subsitute for, nor in competition with, any local church or denominational group."

Women from both predominantly black and predominantly black churches take part.

The organization stresses evangelism and offers programs for ministering, when requested, to people in hospitals, nursing homes and prisons. The group is in the early stages of setting up an Aglow fellowship at the Fountain Correction Center for Women in Rocky Mount.

.The local chapter has area and national affiliates. The president and a vice president of the area affiliate are from Greenville. They are Clara Williams and Judy Jennings, both former Greenville chapter presidents.

Area retreats are held once a year. This year's will be held May 29-31 at Chowan College in Murfreesboro.

Several members also plan to attend a national Women's Aglow gathering in New Orleans later this year. Last year several participated in one in Milwaukee.

Mrs. Williams has scheduled speaking engagements at Aglow chapters in Haiti later this month.

On the second Thursday of each months — two days before the meeting — the group presents a 30-minute program on WBZO, the local Christian radio station.

Mrs. Gentile said she and the other members of the local Aglow board have promised the Lord that they will keep themselves out of the way and seek and follow his guidance to make the organization "soar."

Aglow now has a flourishing Saturday morning gathering and has plans to start a night group and possibly still another group, with babysitting provided, especially for young mothers. A Teen Aglow group for teen-age girls is also contemplated. These are offered in some other places.

"We want to be there for everyone who needs us," Mrs. Gentile said. "We believe very strongly that the Lord wants Christian women to work together inside and outside their churches and we offer ourselves as one way for women to join other women in praising the Lord and sharing their love of Him with each other."

Television Drama On Expectant Teen Father

By BOB ELDRIDGE
Special to Newsday

Lots of teen-agers have gotten pregnant on television before, but ABC's "Daddy," airing Sunday night, effectively breaks new ground, because it deals with the subject from a boy's point of view.

At a time when teen pregnancy has reached epidemic proportions — an estimated 1 million unmarried teenagers became pregnant last year — families should sit down together and watch "Daddy."

Because of its frank discussion of the issues of birth control and teen parenthood, the film can provide a jumping-off point for both parents and youngsters who might otherwise be too embarrassed to bring up these matters.

"Daddy" is a gripping and believable story about two high-school students who aren't as knowledgeable about birth control as they think they are.

Set in a middle-class suburban community where kids work after school and plan for college, the two-hour telefilm shows the consequences of an unplanned pregnancy.

A baby is the last thing Bobby and Stacey think of when they go to bed together. Marriage isn't on their minds either.

In fact, Bobby is in the process of pursuing another girl when Stacey breaks the news to him that she is pregnant. He is concerned enough to offer her money for an abortion. But she declines, insisting, "This is my baby. It's the only thing in the world that's mine."

Bobby doesn't want to be involved. "Don't count on me," he tells her. "I'll be 3,000 miles away." A talented cellist and classical guitarist, he continues with his plans to study music at college. But when he sees a picture of the unborn baby on a hospital ultrasound screen, he becomes intrigued.

Bobby's parents (played by John Karlen and Tess Harper) make him realize what becoming a father really means: "You can't just walk away. It's your child. It's always going to be yours."

Bobby agrees to take on the responsibility of fatherhood, but he has great difficulty coping. He never imagined how much a baby could complicate his life.

The second half of "Daddy" deals at length with the compromises Bobby has to make. At one point, on the verge of a breakdown, he cries, "I'm just a kid. I want to have a good time with my friends."

"Daddy" does not paint any rosy pictures. Nor is it a one-sided horror story. According to the director, producers and the network, the film's aim is to inform through entertainment. And for the most part, "Daddy" does just that.

Information about contraception arrives onscreen in a manner that teen-agers are likely to take note of. For instance, in a party scene after Stacey tells Bobby she's pregnant, a friend of Bobby confides to him that he's going to make moves on a girl that night.

Bobby asks him, "Have you got protection? You want a rubber?" Bobby then opens his wallet and hands his friend a condom in a bright red wrapper. "You gotta be careful," he adds.

In another scene,in which Bobby and Stacey are discussing her pregnancy, Bobby says to her, "I pulled out. I pulled out every time. How can you be pregnant?"

Stacey answers bitterly, "One must have got away."

Although the frankness of the language might shock some viewers, it will sound natural to many others. "If the words are coming from a 17-year-old's mouth, they've got to be said like a kid says them," insists Dermot Mulroney, 23, who plays Bobby. "If I sound like a textbook, it will ruin the whole tone of the piece. Viewers will say, 'Let's watch "Family Ties.'"

"None of this is news to anyone," Mulroney continues. "Maybe some of the information about reliable forms of contraception will be news. It seemed so simple for us to get together and do. Teen pregnancy is something everyone knows about. It's on the front page and the back stoop. It's surprising it's taken so long to get on TV."

Patricia Arquette, 18, who plays Stacey, says, "All the other times when I've watched a show about pregnancy, there were so many words I didn't understand. A lot of times, when people write things about teen-agers, they seemto hate teen-agers. They use words that were cool 20 years ago. I hate shows like that."

John Herzfeld, who wrote and directed "Daddy," fought hard to retain the candid language: "I explained so often to Standards & Practices (the network censors) that we're doing the things we're doing because it's the way it is in real life. I wouldn't say we've had to compromise — although, we have made certain adjustments."

According to "Daddy" producer Heidi Frey, ABC was initially reluctant to allow the words "pull out." The network suggested "withdraw," saying that "pull out" was "too graphic and offensive."

"No way is Bobby going to say 'withdraw' or any three-syllable word," Herzfeld insisted. And his view prevailed.

"With teen-agers, it's very difficult to satisfy Standards & Practices all the time," Frey notes. "Standards & Practices is more comfortable with information coming from an authority figure.

"And we do have scenes in a sex-education class where the coach (played by Danny Aiello) dispels some of the myths about getting pregnant. The whole point of the story is that this kid got a girl pregnant because of a myth."

"Someone once told me the way to get pregnant is to swallow a watermelon seed," recalls Arquette, younger sister of film actress Rosanna Arquette.

Couple Marries On Saturday Afternoon

Pamela DeNise Davis and Edwin Dwight Ellis were united in marriage Saturday at 3 p.m. in a single ring ceremony performed in St. Paul Free Will Baptist Church by Elder Joe Dixon.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Otis Bullock of Farmville and Helen Ellis of Route 4, Greenville.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her honor attendant was her sister, Diane Bullock of Farmville. Anita Joyner, cousin of the bride, Blondie Tyson and Pamela Williams, all of Farmville, Mary Joyner of Ayden, sister of the bridegroom, and Sara Belcher of Snow Hill were bridesmaids.

Thremene Bullock of Farmville was miniature bride for her sister.

The best man was Joe Ebron of Farmville, brother of the bridegroom. Ushers included Tony Bullock of Farmville, brother of the bride, Tony Barnes and Carl Joyner, both of Greenville, Bennie Joyner of Greenville and Donald Joyner of Ayden, both brothers-in-law of the bridegroom. The ring bearer was Durell Shoulders of Farmville.

The Rev. Jessie Jones and Dewayne Maye were organists for the ceremony. Mary Streeter and Tonya Parker were vocalists. Carolyn Streeter Jones directed the wedding.

The bride wore a gown of white organza over an organza ruffled slip. The gown was styled with an empire waistline with apron front, Queen Anne neckline accented with pearls and tapered sleeves. The full skirt had a lace border hemline and chapel train. Her Juliet cap was attached to a waltz length veil of silk illusion accented with Venise lace. She carried a cascade bouquet of miniature burgundy and white mums with baby's breath.

The honor attendant was dressed in a tea length gown of carnation pink styled with a jewelry neckline and deep V-back. It was accented with a lace bow and puffed lace sleeves. She carried a double mum with baby's breath, greenery and white satin streamers.

MRS. ELLIS

Each of the attendants wore a burgundy taffeta gown styled like that of the honor attendant. They carried a single mum with baby's breath and greenery with burgundy and white satin ribbon streamers. The flower girl and miniature bride were dressed in white taffeta full length gowns with a lace stand-up collar, lace tapered sleeves and self-fabric sash. Each wore a pearl crown with silk illusion accented with Venise lace.

The mother of the bride wore a full length burgundy gown of taffeta with a white lace coat. The mother of the bridegroom wore a full length white gown of taffeta with a burgundy lace coat. The mothers and grandmothers of the couple were remembered with corsages.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall. Linda Ross, cousin of the bride, greeted guests. Kim Bullock, sister of the bride, presided at the register. Adell Ford, godmother of the bride, served wedding cake.

The couple will live in Farmville after a wedding trip.

The bride is attending Pitt Community College and is employed through Pitt County schools. The bridegroom graduated from PCC and is employed at Craft Steel Industries.

A wedding breakfast was given by relatives of the bride at Shoneys of Greenville. A bridal shower, luncheon and bachelorette party were held prior to the wedding.

Seventy-five percent of the bankruptcies filed in North Carolina's Middle District in 1986 were Chapter 13 (wage-earner reorganization) cases.

Bridesmaids were Kelly Wooten of High Point; Minda Vaughn of Winston-Salem; Kim Shelton of Charlotte; Mary Lindsley of Redlands, Calif.; Stella Ritch, Ginny Smith and Shannan Quigg, all of Fayetteville; Tiffany Benfield of Greenville, and Susan Tollefsen of Hilton Head, S.C.

The best man was Tom Brown of Greenville, the bridegroom's brother.

Ushers were Bob Brown, Bill Brown, Don Brown of Greenville, Leslie Robinson, and Lee Hardee, all of Greenville; Jay Wooten of High Point; David Hughes of Chattanooga, Tenn.; David Brownlow, Hal McRainey, and Allan Tucker, all of Fayetteville. Lee Hardee of Greenville.

The bride wore a formal candlelight satin styled with a portrait neckline and long tapered sleeves. The bodice was trimmed with embroidered alencon lace with seed pearls. The gown had a basque waist with a gathered skirt with a court train hemmed with lace. She wore a cathedral length mantilla veil of imported Brussel lace. The bride carried a cascade of auratum lilies, orchids and stephanotis.

The bridsmaids wore candlelight formal dresses with lace bodices and satin bows at the waist. They carried European hand bouquets of rubrum lilies tied with candlelight lace and dusty rose satin.

The reception was held at Highland Country Club in Fayetteville. Southern plantation arrangements in silver wine coolors on colonial pedestals graced either side of the cake table. Arrangements consisted of rose rubrum, lilies, pink snapdragons, pink gerberas, purple statice, blue iris, mauve tulips, gypsophilia, lavender freesia, and Queen Anne's lace.

The rehearsal dinner was held Friday at the Highland County Club and was given by the mother of the bridegroom. The after-rehearsal dinner party was hosted by Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Black at their home for the wedding party and out of town guests.

The bride received a master's degree in special education at East Carolina University and is a special education teacher for Cumberland County Schools.

The bridegroom received a B.S. degree in political science at ECU and is employed by Tom Rehm Commercial Realty in Fayetteville.

After a wedding trip to Charleston, S.C. the couple will live in Fayetteville.

MRS. BROWN

Patient Circle Meeting Planned

The Patient Circle of the Kings Daughters and Sons will meet Thursday starting at 2:30 p.m. at the home of Mrs. Ralph Tucker.

Couple Speaks Vows Saturday

FARMVILLE — Rosalind Page Britt and Mitchell Scott Cartledge was united in marriage in the First Baptist Church Saturday at 7:30 p.m. The double ring ceremony was performed by Dr. Ronald Lee Davis, the bride's pastor.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Russell Britt Sr. of Farmville and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Pierce Lyndal Cartledge of Batesburg, S.C.

The bride, who entered the church unattended, wore a formal gown of white moire taffeta. The semi-fitted gown was fashioned with a stand-up collar fastened in back with pearl buttons. Leg-o'mutton sleeves ended in bridal points and fastened at the wrist with pearl buttons. An oversized bow with ties accented the godet in the center back skirt that extended into a chapel train. Her fingertip length veil of silk illusion was attached to a pointed bridal cap covered in white faille and lace. She carried a bouquet of white roses accented with dusty rose colored roses and eucalyptus.

The bride's niece, Dannie Sue Bowen, of Virginia Beach, Va., was maid of honor. She wore an emerald green moire taffeta dress which featured a boat neckline, shirred dropped waist, short puffed sleeves and a full gathered tea length skirt.

Angela Denise Bowen of Sterling, Va., niece of the bride, was bridesmaid. Her tea length gown of emerald green moire taffeta was styled with short bouffant sleeves, fitted bodice and full gathered skirt. A bow in back accented the natural waistline. Each wore bows of matching material in their hair, pearl necklaces and carried informal bouquets of multicolored flowers.

The father of the bridegroom was best man and ushers included Christopher Lee Cartledge of Batesburg, S.C., brother of the bridegroom, and Russell Allen Bowen of Sterling, Va., nephew of the bride.

Parents of the bride and bridegroom gave them in marriage to each other.

Music was presented by organist Kathy Howell and Mary Sue Ball, sister of the bride, directed the wedding.

Following the ceremony the bride's parents gave a reception in the church fellowship hall. The parents of the bridegroom gave an after-rehearsal dinner Friday night at the Southern Sportsman.

The bride graduated from Farmville Central High School and King's Business College. The bridegroom graduated from Franklinton High School and N.C. State University. Both are employed at Collins and Aikman in Farmville.

The couple will live in Farmville.

Surgeon Cuts Daughter's Funds

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Dad is a very successful plastic surgeon. When my parents divorced seven years ago, I was in high school. At that time I told my dad I wanted to go to college and might need his help financially. Dad said he had enormous legal fees (from the divorce), but after they were paid, he'd see what he could do. Shortly after this conversation, he married his girlfriend — 30 years his junior — and they started a new family.

Once again I approached him. He said his new family (one child) was expensive, and besides, what did I need college for? His young wife never went to college. I could not believe a so-called educated man uttered those words.

Every time I visit Dad's home, it's obvious where his money goes — a live-in nanny, new cars, massive home improvements, expensive clothes and jewels for the young wife, etc. Don't misunderstand. I am glad to see my hardworking father enjoying the good life that he has earned, but it still hurts me to think my education means nothing to him. Perhaps after he reads this he will better understand why I have chosen to keep my distance.

Oh, during a recent visit, his wife proudly told me they had established a trust fund for their child's college education. How can I deal with this hurtful situation? — DISILLUSIONED DOCTOR'S DAUGHTER

DEAR DISILLUSIONED: If you were in high school seven years ago, you should have been out for a number of years. You don't say what you've been doing in the meantime, but if you're determined to get a college education, you can get one without your father's help. Get a part-time job and a college loan; many have.

Forgive your father for failing you when you were fresh out of high school. Get on with your life, and you'll be all the stronger for having made it on your own. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: I have a distant relative who is running for U.S. senator in another state. I just received a letter asking for a political contribution. Am I nuts or something to think that someone running for the U.S. Senate should stick to sending such letters to people in his own state?

I am not a wealthy person, and I think this man is out of line even to put me on the spot by asking me for a contribution to help finance his campaign, especially when both he and his wife are very well-off.

I feel like I'm stuck between a rock and a hard place. If I don't send something, I will never hear the end of it, yet I will feel like a hypocrite if I do.

How do you feel about this? Do you think people running for public office should ask for money from out-of-staters? — KEEP ME ANONYMOUS

DEAR ANONYMOUS: It's neither unusual nor inappropriate for a person who's running for the U.S. Senate to solicit funds from out-of-state prospects. Because running for the U.S. Senate is very expensive, if the candidates didn't solicit out-of-state campaign contributions, they could never make it. If you think your distant relative would make a good U.S. senator, support him — even if it's only a token. If you think he wouldn't make a good senator, then don't contribute — and don't feel like a hypocrite.

DEAR ABBY: I see nothing wrong with asking who's going to be at a party, especially if it's a small one. There are a few friends of friends of mine whom I don't care to be around. I never make ultimatums such as, "Choose between me and so-and-so" — I just prefer to stay home and read a good book than be in the company of persons who make me uncomfortable. I am fortunate to have friends who respect my point of view. I may not go to parties as often as others, but when I do, I enjoy them. — JOHN D. IN L.A.

DEAR JOHN: Congratulations on two fronts: Having the courage to avoid uncomfortable situations, and having friends who respect your point of view.

DEAR ABBY: "Mortified in Minneapolis" complained because her otherwise masculine-looking husband insists on drinking through a straw in public. Thanks for saying that drinking through a straw has nothing to do with a man's masculinity.

My macho man always carries a straw in his pocket. He has a beautiful walrus moustache, and that straw is the perfect solution for keeping his moustache nice and clean. — CONTENT IN COLUMBUS

Donna Tripp, J.C. Adams Jr. Marry

MRS. ADAMS

Donna Lynne Tripp and James Cecil Adams Jr., both of Hickory, were united in marraige Saturday at 4 p.m. in Immanuel Baptist Church in Greenville.

The Rev. Hugh Burlington performed the double ring ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Reid Tripp of Greenville and Mr. and Mrs. James Cecil Adams of Concord are the bridal couples' parents.

Rebecca A. Hill, sister of the bridegroom, of Statesville served as matron of honor. The maid of honor was Sally D. Dunn of Durham. Bridesmaids were Catherine B. Robbins of Boone and Kim M. Rogers of Raleigh.

Honorary bridesmaids were Terry T. Campbell of Chapel Hill; Lou D. Hill of Greenville; Penney B. Harward of Cary; Lesa S. Howard of Cary; Pam W. Icard of Mooresville; Suzanne McGee of Newport News, Va., and Jamie H. Robbins of Cary.

The junior bridesmaid was Katherine Hill, niece of the bridegroom, of Statesville.

Serving as best men were James Cecil Adams, father of the bridegroom, and Michael Lewis Adams, brother of the bridegroom, both of Concord.

Ushers were Dr. Jerry Hill Jr. of Statesville; David Marlow of Hickory; Chris Robbins of Boone; and Reid Tripp Jr., brother of the bride, of Greenville. The ring bearer was Adam Hill of Statesville, nephew of the bridegroom.

Sylvia McCreary played the organ and Alice Medlin sang, "God, A Woman and A Man," "He Has Chosen You for Me," and "The Wedding Prayer."

The bride wore the wedding gown that belonged to the bridegroom's mother. It was slightly modified with alencon lace and seeded pearls. The 18th century period formal gown of ivory duchess satin was fashioned with a sweetheart neckline of alencon lace and seeded pearls. The fitted bodice was accented with appliqued alencon lace and clusters of seeded pearls. The long tapered sleeves of ivory duchess satin were highlighted with alencon lace appliques at points over the hands. The skirt with a polonaise drape and bustle back, extended in a cathedral train. She chose a cathedral length veil of ivory illusion flowing from a headpiece of French waxed orange blossoms and stephanotis. She carried a prayerbook that belonged to the bridegroom's father in WWII and a cascade of silk stephanotis and English ivey centered with a mauve lily.

The attendants were dressed in tea length ivory satin gowns with overlays of ivory schiffli lace. The collars laced in ivory Venise lace trim were rounded in the front and dropped to a V-back. The schiffli lace sleeves were accented with Venise trim which draped elbow length. The fitted bodice with a gathered waist was accented in the back with an organza bow.

The maid of honor and matron of honor each carried a silk bouquet of blue hibscus centered with an ivory tiger lilly. Each bridesmaid carried a silk bouquet of mauve camellias centered with an ivory tiger lilly. The junior bridesmaids carried a silk bouquet of mauve day lilies. The honorary bridesmaids each carried a silk long-stemmed ivory lily.

The mother of the bride wore a mauve tea length gown and the mother of the bridegroom wore a mint green tea length gown.

A reception was given by the bride's family and friends at the church. In the evening, a dance was given by the bride's family and friends honoring the couple.

The rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's family at the Beef Barn. Friends of the bride's family gave a bridesmaids brunch Saturday morning.

The bride is assistant vice president with BB&T in Hickory. She received a B.S. degree from Meredith College in business administration.

The bridegroom is a professional photographer and is in association with Mecklinberg Design Center of Charlotte. He is a graduate of The Citidel in Charleston, S.C. He received a B.S. science degree in education.

After a wedding trip to Jamaica the couple will live in Hickory.

The couple was honored at a shower held prior to the ceremony.

Do Families Need Money Or Legacies?

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

It's hard to imagine that television's "Dallas" and "Dynasty" provide a message of any substance, but they both have focused attention on a truism: Where there's a will ... there's a family.

These dramas may just be responsible for the current crop of millionaires who are taking a good look at what money does to people who haven't earned it. The trend among the super rich is definitely turning. They are leaving the bulk of their estates to charity, the arts and family pets.

One titan who had in excess of $1.5 billion was quoted as saying, "A lifetime supply of food stamps just because they came out of the right womb can be harmful."

Can money buy happiness? It hasn't done it for the bunch on "Falcon Crest" who squeeze every grape they can put their hands on.

What you hope will happen to your kids is what happened to Valerie Bertinelli when she got down to her last million on the miniseries, "I'll Take Manhattan." She realized that all her life she had played, and now it was time to pull herself up by her Gucci bootstraps and create her own success. Did she sit around waiting to win the New York lottery? She did not. She floated a loan on her apartment from Donald Trump. That's the kind of sacrifice and Yankee ingenuity you don't want your kids to miss.

Every parent I know considers legacies, big or small, a world-class guilt trip. Is money a nest egg upon which your child can build an empire after you are gone, or does it spawn laziness, a lack of self-worth, squandering and waste, and eventually a kid who goes from Indian reservation to Indian reservation looking for a big bingo win?

As we told our children, "We want you to love us for ourselves and try to understand that what we do may seem harsh and selfish, but it is for your own good. Money of any substance would corrupt your ideals and compromise your ambitions."

One of them thought awhile after that speech and said, "How do you feel about tipping?"

My late mother-in-law was always worried about living more years than she had money to cover them. She also worried about leaving her children an "estate." It's all she talked about ... how she was using up "their money" to live.

The day after she died, we all sat around the kitchen table in Florida and my sister-in-law said, "Let's all go to Disney World ... on Mom." Her daughter and son, her in-laws and her grandchildren rode every ride that day from the time the park opened until it closed. We laughed with one another. We thought about her and the joy she gave. We closed ranks and were a family again. It was a legacy I will never forget.

Miss Ellie can't say that.

LIDDIE B. ANDERSON — and Willie C. Hendrix Jr. of Greenville announce their engagement. She is the daughter of the late Simon J. and Dollie C. Braxton. The bridegroom is the son of Lillian C. Hendrix of Greenville and the late Willie C. Hendrix Sr. The wedding will take place May 2.

SHELLY JEAN SHEWBRIDGE — is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis W. Shewbridge of Reisterstown, Md., who announce her engagement to Rudolf Dirk van't Riet, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bart van't Riet of Richmond, Va. A May wedding is being planned.

Double Ring Ceremony Performed Saturday

GRIFTON — Riverside Christian Church was the scene of the wedding ceremony of Barbara Gail Nobles and Harold Douglas White Saturday at 2 p.m. Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Wiley Ray Nobles of Route 1, Grifton, and Ruth White of Cove City and the late Carl White.

Dr. Ben Hobgood conducted the double ring ceremony. Frances Carraway of Grifton was pianist.

The maid of honor for her sister was Patricia Nobles of Grifton. Bridesmaids included Angela Nobles and Rhonda Barwick, sisters of the bride, Nyoki Poythress, all of Grifton, and Carla White of Cove City, sister of the bridegroom. Tracy Roach of Grifton was junior bridesmaid.

Amanda Roach of Grifton was flower girl and Angela Roach of Grifton was miniature bride.

The best man was Curtis Hawkins of Cove City. Ushers included Mark Davis of New Bern, James Hawkins and John Hawkins, both of Cove City, and Robert Barwick of Grifton, brother-in-law of the bride.

The bride wore a gown of white knit chiffon over taffeta fashioned with a Victorian neckline accented with Venise lace and seed pearls. The full skirt featured a panel of satin and lace and extended to a chapel length train. Her fingertip length veil was edged in lace. She carried a round bouquet of mixed spring flowers with greenery, gypsophilia with white streamers.

The honor attendant wore a formal gown of matte taffeta in lilac styled with an open sweetheart neckline featuring off-shoulder French pouf sleeves. The fitted torso bodice was finished with a modified basque waistline and demi-bell silhouette skirt. She carried an arm bouquet of pastel carnations and gypsophilia tied with spring ribbon.

The bridesmaids wore dresses like the honor attendant in yellow, powder blue, cantaloupe and pink. Their bouquets matched their gowns. The flower girl was dressed similar to the other attendants. Her dress had an overlay of flowered lace. She carried a basket of spring flowers. The junior bridesmaid wore a peach colored dress styled similar and carried long-stemmed carnations with matching streamers. The miniature bride wore a long white dress accented with pearls, lace and ribbon. She carried a bouquet like that of the bride.

A reception was given by the parents of the bride in the church fellowship hall.

The couple will live in New Bern.

The bride attended Ayden-Grifton High School and Pitt Community College. She is employed by Craven County ASCS Office. The bridegroom attended West Craven High School and is a student at Craven Community College. He is employed by Robert Bosch Powel Tools.

The couple was also honored at a pig picking and several showers.

Anti-Aging Preparations: Drugs Or Not?

By DAVID STREITFELD
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

Beauty may be only skin deep, but that's quite far enough for the cosmetic industry. The hottest new wrinkle in the billion-dollar appearance business: anti-aging preparations. Manufacturers assert these treatments not only cover up the marks of age, but actually are revolutionary new ways of rejuvenating skin.

Some dermatologists, however, are doubtful about these claimed new advances in technology. They say they have seen no proof, and find the statements in the ads difficult to believe. Furthermore, "if the products work the way they claim in their ads, then they should be considered drugs," says Gary Grove, a skin physiologist and the director of the Skin Study Center in Philadelphia. Two manufacturers disagree on both counts, saying that because of the way their products work, they are not drugs.

If anti-aging products were regulated as drugs, they would need pre-market approval by the Food and Drug Administration, and would have to prove safety and effectiveness.

"When a product makes a claim that it affects the structure or the function of the body, then the law says it may also be classified as a drug," says Heinz Eiermann, director of the FDA's Division of Colors and Cosmetics. Determining whether these products are drugs is a low priority, he says, adding, "They're in an enforcement no man's land."

The ads promoting these treatments aren't shy in trumpeting their value. Three of the leading brands and their copy:

— Christian Dior's Capture promises "spectacular" results: "Your complexion possesses a new glow and luminosity while fine lines are smoothed away and wrinkles reduced. Your skin regains its youthful firmness." The treatment uses "micro-capsules of select ingredients of natural origin which fuse with the membrane restoring fluidity, promoting the reactivation of cells." Cost: $65 for two months.

— Lancome's Niosome Systeme Anti-Age: "Re-creates the structure of a young skin ...Each Niosome sphere mimics the support structure of younger skin and carries active anti-age agents into the skin's intercellular structure." Price: $30 for three months.

— Estee Lauder's Eyzone Repair Gel uses "Tissue Matrix Fluid to help restructurize the deepest epidermal layers of the vulnerable skin around your eyes... And your skin looks and feels younger — from the inside out." Cost: $35 for four months.

All this adds up to big business. Christian Dior plans to sell $10 million worth of Capture this year in the United States alone. Not bad for a product introduced only last month.

Natalie Salek, a senior consultant at the consulting firm of Charles H. Kline & Co., says anti-aging sales are expected to outpace the general cosmetics market for the next five years. "There's a very large clientele out there — women in the work force, aging baby boomers — who have the money to spend for this," she says.

While the companies expect big sales, some dermatologists say generally they have yet to be convinced that anti-aging products do more than moisturize the skin and screen out the sun — both of which have acknowledged benefits.

"The main word to summarize me is skeptical," says Bryan Davis, associate director of dermatology at Cleveland Metropolitan General Hospital and a researcher on skin aging. "I've seen nothing published that supports that any of these products are of any value... They are unproven." He adds that "based on what I know, I find it hard to believe these cosmetics are going to rejuvenate the skin."

Says Kenneth Arndt, dermatologist-in-chief at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston: "I've seen (anti-aging) ads, and I'm not aware of any data, articles, studies or decent information" about the products' efficacy. "To the best of my knowledge, none of these products or their ingredients have been shown in any peer review. There's no data... It's all anecdotal."

Arndt, editor of the Archives of Dermatology, said he can't read everything, and that maybe the articles exist without his knowledge. "But I don't think my colleagues or I are aware of any studies saying these things reverse or retard aging — which is the implication of the ads."

For a product to affect the skin directly, Arndt says, it has to penetrate — and the skin is quite impermeable to most substances. "Any cream will be absorbed a little into the skin, cause it to swell a bit and become smooth. The skin absorbs the water in the cream. If you have fine wrinkles, the skin will look smoother. The real question is, is there more to it than that?"

With regard to publication, a Christian Dior spokeswoman says there's "nothing published in this country" because "all research was done in Europe." Lancome said there was at least one paper detailing its product's procedures, but the spokesman couldn't immediately identify its place of publication. Estee Lauder said the only spokesman who could speak about the research side of its product was unavailable.

"Most of these things are not patented, and the only way you can protect yourself is by keeping everything secret," explains Grove of the Skin Stuay Center. "But that's not saying some of these companies don't have very good scientists" and aren't producing impressive results.

There is a drug that many experts agree could be useful in slowing premature aging of the skin. Called Retin-A, it is available by prescription for its original purpose, clearing up acne. Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp. is seeking approval to market it as an anti-aging prescription drug.

Generally, life is much easier in terms of regulatory requirements if a product is a cosmetic instead of a prescription or even an over-the-counter drug: A cosmetic doesn't have to be demonstrated effective or safe with the FDA. In fact, it doesn't have to be registered with the FDA at all.

"If you boil down the FDA definition of what is a drug, it's something that alters skin structure or function," says Grove. His Skin Study Center, an independent testing lab, worked on Retin-A, Niosome, Capture and other anti-aging products. "Obviously, if you eliminate the wrinkles, you've altered skin function."

Says dermatologist Davis: "If I took some chemical and modified my body, I would think that's a drug."

The cosmetic industry doesn't see it that way. Says Susan Biehn, senior vice president of advertising at Christian Dior: "We're not changing anything. We're stimulating a natural function. A drug is if you're sick, and you need to get well."

John Penicnak, senior vice president of Lancome's corporate scientific department, says that with "a product that functions in the epidermis — the upper layers of the skin — I believe as long as the (company's efficacy) dossier is sufficient, this leaves the product in the realm of a cosmetic."

Based on his work on anti-aging products for a dozen firms, Grove says "there's no question some cosmetic companies are doing basic research, and are coming up with cosmetic formulations that do do things." But he adds that "not all companies are doing advanced research, and some of the claims being made aren't well founded... Sometimes when I see ads for products I've worked on, I don't recognize them." The upshot: The average person "doesn't stand a chance" of knowing which product is any good.

"If you were to ask me to recommend a sunscreen lotion," he points out, "you could go down to the drugstore and see that the bottles have numbers on them labeled 'SPF' — the Sun Protection Factor. The higher the number, the more protection it's providing... I could easily envision there could be a certain standard for anti-aging products, but right now there's no regulation to require us to do this."

He notes that calling something a drug does not necessarily mean it is a prescription item. Anti-perspirants, cough syrups and antacids are all drugs, for instance; if you wish to manufacture them, they and you will have to be registered with the FDA. "Somewhere along the line the FDA has to address the drug-cosmetic issue," says Grove. "They've been ducking it, avoiding it."

The FDA's position is that it assigns top priority to products where the safety of the consumers is involved.

"If an anti-wrinkle preparation doesn't cause any harm, but also doesn't cure the wrinkles, then it has less priority," says the FDA's Eiermann. "Then the only harm that may be done is to the pocketbook."

With sun-damaged skin, says Lancome's Penicnak, you "know darn well... you're not going to turn back the clock or become a 2-year-old." Instead, a good anti-aging product will "make the skin look better from the standpoint of smoothness, softness, clarity. You're going to temporarily minimize the wrinkles — not take the big crevices and eliminate them."

Dermatologist Davis is more cautious. If consumers want to try these products, he says, "they're welcome to do that. There's no evidence they're not effective," even if "chances are small there's any benefit."

Concludes researcher Grove: "No one should be anticipating a spectacular rejuvenation... It's far better to avoid having the problem in the first place." The best way to do that: Avoid overexposure to sunlight.

Study Program

JERUSALEM, Israel (AP) — The Hebrew University of Jerusalem has instituted a new specialty leading to a B.A. degree in Christian studies.

The new program, emphasizing development of Christianity from its Jewish basis into an independent religion and its central role in Western culture, seeks to give students a solid foundation in Christian history and philosophy.

Pitt County is located approximately 30 miles inland from the coastal sounds, 80 miles from the Atlantic Ocean and roughly 150 miles from the Appalachian Mountains.

Recent Excavations In Bikini Indicates Early Presence Of Man In Micronesia

By STEWART TAGGART
Associated Press Writer

HONOLULU (AP) — An archaeologist studying Bikini Atoll as part of preparations for returning the former atomic bomb test site to its displaced residents has found evidence man may have inhabited eastern Micronesia thousands of years earlier than previously thought.

Bits of charcoal, fish bones, shells and other artifacts from a cooking fire were found buried beneath 3 feet of sand, said U.S. Army Corps of Engineers archaeologist Charles F. Streck Jr.

Carbon-dating placed the age of the artifacts between 1960 B.C. and 1650 B.C., he said.

Previously, archaeologists and anthropologists believed Bikini, located about 2,500 miles southwest of Hawaii, was settled no more than a few hundred years ago, with most estimates ranging in the 1700s or 1800s.

"I have four or five radiocarbon dates that are hundreds of years too old to fit the prevailing migration and settlement theories for the Micronesian area," said Streck. "The atolls could be more productive for archaeology than we thought."

"If those dates prove to be correct, it will prove to be a major, major find," said Dr. Robert Kiste, director of the Pacific Island Studies program at the University of Hawaii, whose own studies have been considered the most extensive historical work on Bikini.

Kiste said Bikinians, through oral genealogies, trace their presence on the island back only 10 or 12 generations.

"I don't know exactly how this is going to force us to alter our ideas, but we wonder where these people are coming from so early in the Pacific," said Stephen Athens, general manager of International Archaeological Research Institute, a non-profit archaeological consulting firm based in Honolulu.

Streck visited Bikini in November 1985 and May 1986 to help prepare an environmental impact statement, part of the U.S. government's program to make the island habitable again so people can return.

Bikini's 167 residents were evacuated in 1946 so the U.S. military could use the atoll for nuclear testing. The last of 23 tests was conducted in 1958.

The islanders have since lived in several locations around the Marshall Islands. Their current home is Kili Island, 425 miles south of Bikini.

Cleanup efforts may take 10 years or longer, depending on what methods are used, according to Jonathan M. Weisgall, a Washington, D.C., attorney representing the islanders.

Micronesia covers about 1 million square miles of the Pacific Ocean between Hawaii and the Philippines along the equator and just north of it.

Current migration theories of how the region was settled have been based on limited archaeology and oral histories gathered from islanders.

Western Micronesia, which includes Guam, Palau and the Northern Marianas, was believed to have been settled through an eastward movement of people from the Philippines and eastern Indonesia sometime before 3000 B.C., Streck said.

Eastern Micronesia, which includes the Marshall Islands where Bikini is located and most of the Federated States of Micronesia, was believed to have been settled by a northward migration of people sometime between 500 B.C. and the time of Christ.

"What the finding indicates is the extreme eastern part of Micronesia has the same time depth as western Micronesia, which goes against the traditional theories of settlement," Streck said.

For his survey, Streck sampled 25 sites on Bikini and nearby Eneu, while seven of the sites underwent extensive digs.

"What seemed to be indicated is that the island shows almost continuous occupation for up to 4,000 years," Streck said.

Streck said evidence of such a long continuous period of habitation is curious because Bikini has little rainfall and is located far from what were believed to have been traditional population centers such as Arno and Majuro atolls, roughly 2,300 miles southwest of Hawaii. Those islands were believed to have been settled about the time of Christ.

Streck said nuclear tests can affect readings given by carbon-dating testing techniques, but that the effects of such tests usually make dates appear later in time than they actually were, not earlier.

Zen Archery Is Termed An Art Of Meditation

By LOIS TAYLOR
Star-Bulletin

HONOLULU (AP) — Where the deep green valley ends at the base of the Koolaus, after Kalihi Street rambles into a rutted one-lane road, is Chozen-ji School of Kyudo. In its elegantly spare wood and paper buildings, 20 students of Koun Suhara learn the Way of "kyudo," the ancient Japanese art of Zen archery.

Zen archery, Suhara explained through an interpreter, is not a sport. It is a form of meditation, the Way to the reality within the individual. Jackson Morisawa, acting as interpreter for Suhara, pointed out that this concept is not easily understood in an hour-long encounter. Suhara, the master, when asked how long it takes to learn the Way, said, "Forever."

The elements of Zen archery, he said, are the same as those of meditation — to control the inner energy through breathing techniques and concentration on the proper mental and physical attitude. Already a Zen priest when he began the study of kyudo at the age of 50, Suhara found the training to be an extension of what he already knew.

And what he knew, according to Morisawa, is that the target is not the goal.

"The shooting must be pure, and not a preoccupation with hitting the target," he said. "Kyudo transcends the shooting of the arrow. Beginners shoot into the 'makiwara,' a bundle of straw, so that they concentrate on breathing and posture, rather than aiming at a target.

"When they are proficient, I put them on the target, and the mind changes. The eagle (target) comes out and they say, 'I must hit the target' and the mind is no longer focused."

Kyudo was introduced to the West by a German professor, Eugen Herrigal, who persuaded a master in Japan to teach him the art. Master Awa, proud of his student, gave Herrigal his favorite bow. He told him, however, that if he were ever to retire, the bow was to be destroyed.

When the time came, Herrigal was unable to bring himself do this, and instead returned it to Awa's "dojo," or school. The bow was sent to Master Anazawa, one of Awa's students, and Anazawa in turn gave it to his most promising student, Koun Suhara.

With the full circle, itself a Zen concept, Suhara later founded his own school in Kamakura, Japan. He spends part of the year here at the Chozen-ji School, the only Zen kyudo training school outside Asia.

The movements of kyudo are flowing, slow and deliberate — much like "tai chi." The laminated bamboo bow, which is about 10 feet long, is held in the left hand, and in the right hand the archers hold two arrows. One is pointed away from the body, the other toward it.

Walking with a sliding motion, barely lifting the feet from the floor, the archers move one at a time to a point about 35 yards from the target. The notch in the arrow pointing toward the target is slipped into the string of the bow and, with vast concentration and ease of movement, the string is drawn and the arrow flies. Then the process is repeated with the second arrow.

In Herrigal's book, "The Way of the Arrow," he explains, "The arrow that penetrates in such a state is not the arrow itself, but a living arrow which is the spirit of kyudo. He (the archer) must turn his eyes inward in search of his soul and transcend all external preoccupation with hitting the target. When his spiritual growth allows him to 'shoot without shooting,' his character will blend harmoniously with life."

In a demonstration, Suhara's first arrow went into the mound of clay, cork and earth that supports the target, his second went directly into the eye of the eagle, as the target is called.

It didn't matter.

Studies Irving's Smudged Manuscripts

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer

DAVIDSON, N.C. (AP) — Sue Ross compares her work poring over dusty manuscripts in the archives of libraries to that of a homicide detective.

But the Davidson College researcher says she hasn't gotten much recognition despite 13 years of exploring the more obscure works of 19th century author Washington Irving.

Ross is known in her trade as a textual critic — a researcher who diciphers the smudged and almost illegible words on a writer's manuscript.

"Textual critics are a breed apart," she said. "The one thing you have to have when you do this work is perspective. Most people would respond, 'So what?'

"But it's the little things that make it worth it," she said. "It's like being a detective. You may go down a hundred dead ends before you can come up with an answer."

Ross recently published a book on the journals and notebooks that Irving wrote between 1832 and 1859. Irving is best known for his short stories, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" and "Rip Van Winkle" from his 1817 Sketch Book.

Ross has given up a lot of her free time for her research. She has spent her own money on air fare to check out a manuscript.

"Even my closest friends pity me and ask me why I'm so impulsive," she said. "Part of it is the task. It's like the old story that there's a mountain so I have to climb it.

"Also, I love and care passionately about literature," she said. "Anything I can do to help someone else understand about Irving and his times is worth it."

Ross, who works as registrar and lectures on English literature at the North Carolina school, admits her job is a difficult and tedious one that requires great concentration.

"There are times when I don't know what keeps me going," she said. "There were times when I've had to drag myself back to the library."

When she gets especially frustrated, she returns to the New York Public Library, where most of Irving's works are kept under lock and key.

"To build momentum, I get my hands on one of his journals and I look at it and feel it," she said. "Just doing that and then walking the same streets that he loved rejuvenates me."

There are also other ways to get motivated, she said.

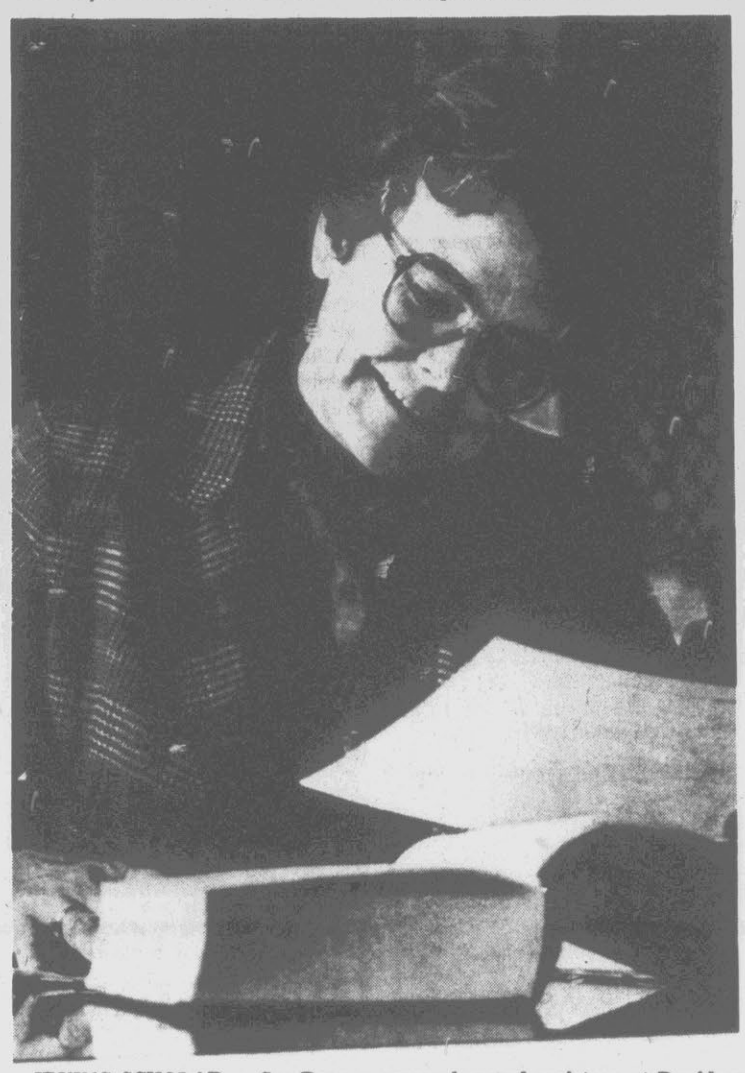
"My editor at the publishing company is always pushing me," she said.

When Ross' 617-page book was released in December, all she got for her work was 10 copies of the book and a complete set of a series on American authors that includes her book.

"I don't get a cent of royalties," she said.

The primary source material was Irving's original manuscripts. Most of the notebooks written in pencil were located in the New York Public Library. Others were found at the University of Virginia, Yale and the Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington D.C.

Ross acknowledged there was a lot of responsibility in her work.



IRVING SCHOLAR — Sue Ross, a researcher and registrar at Davidson College, has spent the last 13 years deciphering the smudged words of American author Washington Irving contained in his notebooks and journals. (AP Laserphoto)

"The textual critic has a great obligation to the writer to present his or her work in the most honest way," she said. "But there will always be questions. When you have to make a decision, you have to give the writer the benefit of the doubt.

"There comes a great sense of satisfaction when a discovery is made," she said.

"There was a marking I thought was his abbreviation for the word expenses," she said. "For 10 years I puzzled over what it was exactly until one day I realized it was Esopus, the name of a town in New York where he began a journey.

"Things like that could drive you crazy if those moments of discovery weren't such a thrill," she said.

Ross admits she has shunned her friends because of her long hours of research.

"My friends are more relieved that it's done than I am," she said. "They come up to me and say things like, 'Where's the part you were working on back in the summer of '80 that kept you from coming to the beach with us?'"

Another friend, upon hearing the news that the book was done, sent Ross a bouquet of flowers with an inscription: "Free at last, free at last."

But to a textual critic like Ross, there's always another mountain to climb. She hopes to get started soon on a book about the works of Thomas Wolfe and other 20th century Southern writers.

A Craze For Real Cajun Beer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — You can't get Dixie Beer in all New Orleans bars, but if you know where to go, you can find it in places like London and New York.

The little New Orleans brewery that produces the beer is cashing in on the Cajun craze and is going everywhere that hot south Louisiana cooking goes.

"Paul Prudhomme (the Cajun chef) takes us with him everywhere," said Kendra Elliott Bruno, owner of Dixie Brewery.

The brew is now sold in 18 states and is getting repeat orders from London, she said.

As it expands, the company is replacing its unpopular Dixie Light brand with a new brew called Dixie Amber Light, a slightly darker light beer that began appearing last week in bars and on grocery shelves.

It is made to the recipe of Joe Owades, the chemist who concocted the world's first light recipe and has made 11 more lights and a variety of specialty beers since then.

That first experiment, made for Rheingold in 1967, was a failure, but the formula worked its way through the system until it ended up at Miller. It is still used for Lite Beer, one of the great success stories of the beverage industry.

Bruno said she hopes the new light will help her tiny operation pick up New Orleans sales, which have dropped to 1 percent from a high of 26 percent in the early 1960's.

The new light uses premium select roasted malt which Bruno says produces a crisper smoother flavor and unique European style, Louisiana cypress fermentors that allow more robust flavors to develop.

"Dixie has a certain mystique and a rapidly growing national following," Bruno said. "Now that the most flavorful, best tasting Light Beer is made right here in New Orleans, we are confident of capturing yet another generation of Dixie Beer drinkers."

Owades, an independent beer design consultant, contacted Bruno last year after reading that she had bought Dixie from Neil Kaye Jr. She jumped at the chance and told him to come up with a light beer that would be distinctive.

Arizona Center Helps Indians

By GUY WEBSTER
The Arizona Republic

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — A year-old program at Northern Arizona University is helping Arizona Indians with business ventures, including plans to sell firewood in Los Angeles and to use a high school dormitory for motel-management vocational education.

The NAU Center for American Indian Economic Development, which opened in late 1985, has advisory projects with tribes or individual Indian businesses and has sponsored 12 workshops in reservation communities on business-management skills.

"They have been a major assistance," said Kyril Colsoyas, director of support services for the Tuba City High School Board, on the Navajo Reservation.

Colsoyas, school principal Andrew Tah and the school board are planning to use the Indian school's 200-room dormitory as an inn during the summer.

Wayne Fox, coordinator of the NAU center, and other members of the NAU business faculty have provided economic forecasting, including assessment of the feasibility of attracting foreign tour groups, Colsoyas said.

The dormitory project would provide job training for high school and Navajo Community College students in motel and restaurant management, he said.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs owns the school facilities. Colsoyas expects to secure the bureau's OK for the project in time to start on a limited scale this summer.

Fox says the project has good potential: "It's low capitalization, it's educational and it's job creating."

The center's mission is to make the expertise of NAU faculty members available to assist Indian business ventures.

The center has assisted about 30 Indian businesses or prospective businesses involving 10 different Arizona tribes. Other projects have included obtaining contracts for electronics assembly work and marketing of vegetables.

Most NAU faculty involvement has come from the College of Business Administration, but other specialists are brought in when appropriate, Fox said.

Robert Larson, a forestry professor, is working with Fox on a project the center has begun with the Hualapai Tribe to begin a fuel-wood marketing business.

Several individual members of the Hualapai Tribe cut and sell firewood, but a tribal enterprise to buy the wood from members and sell it in cities could improve the marketing and encourage more cutters, said Marty Watsonome, economic-development manager for the tribal government at Peach Springs.

"The potential is good, and we are working up a plan of operation," Watsonome said. "We have made contacts in the Los Angeles area."

He expects the new business to be operating this spring, because the pinon and juniper firewood should dry for several months between cutting and burning.

Most of the projects that the center has assisted are individually owned businesses rather than tribal enterprises.

"We like to find the person with an entrepreneurial gleam in his eye, even if he does not have much money in his pocket," said Dr. John Walka, director of the center and acting dean of the College of Business Administration. "Small business is really the source of economic growth and new jobs."

The United Indian Development Association, based in Los Angeles, provides some of the same advisory services to small businesses as NAU center does, said Ralph Honhongva of the association's Flagstaff office. It is supported by grants from the Small Business Administration and Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Honhongva says that the association devotes most of its attention to businesses already in operation, and has referred some prospective entrepreneurs to the NAU center for help with feasibility studies.

Town Creek Anniversary

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department
Of Cultural Resources

MOUNT GILEAD — A golden anniversary, a new exhibit unveiling and native American dancers and demonstrations will be highlights of the 50th anniversary observance of Town Creek Indian Mound State Historic Site on April 12.

From 2-5 p.m., Town Creek Indian Mound near Mount Gilead will mark its 50th year with a celebration honoring the work of Joffre L. Coe who spearheaded the development of the area.

In 1937, Coe, an undergraduate student at UNC-CH began archaeological excavations at what was then known as the Frutchey Indian Mound in Montgomery County. The owner of the land planned to level the mound to ease his plowing.

Coe, recognizing the enormous archaeological significance of the mound, was instrumental in persuading the farmer to donate the parcel to the state for excavation.

For the entire half century following, archaeology at Town Creek has been carried out under Joffre Coe's direction through the Research Laboratories of Anthropology at UNC-CH.

During these years, a temple and other buildings were reconstructed and today the site is a classic example of the use of archaeological data for interpreting past lifestyles. It also provides a glimpse into North Carolina's prehistory for thousands of visitors each year.

Among activities scheduled for the April 12 anniversary celebration is the unveiling of a new exhibit for further interpreting the lives of the people who inhabited the area some 500 years ago.

Also, visitors can see native American dance groups and native American crafts and demonstrations throughout the afternoon.

Secretary of Cultural Resources Patric Dorsey will welcome guests. Among special guests will be the many people who have been involved with the development of Town Creek who have been invited for an anniversary reunion and will be present for the annual awards presentation.

Admission is free to all events, and the public is invited. Soft drinks and Indian refreshments will be available for purchase.

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

WASHINGTON (AP) — The independent nation of Papua New Guinea occupies the eastern half of the South Pacific island of New Guinea, which it shares with Irian Jaya, a province of Indonesia.

Two New Guinea territories administered by Australia merged in 1949 and became independent in 1975. Although well embarked on democratic self-rule, Papua New Guinea still depends on Australia for much of its budget, according to National Geographic.

An unruly landscape in Papua New Guinea, with knife-like ridges, swampland and thick interior jungle, splinters more than 750 tribes of Melanesian stock, each with its own language and little sense of national identity. Tribal warfare has been a way of life for centuries.

S.C. Landscape Reveals The Human Touch

By MIKE HEMBREE
The Greenville News

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Spread across the landscape of South Carolina are sand dunes in Columbia, monadnocks in Greenville, crumbling tenant houses almost everywhere and mustard-based barbecue sauce in the Midlands.

These are among the conclusions of Charles Kovacik and John Winberry, geography professors at the University of South Carolina and authors of a recently published geography of the state.

Kovacik and Winberry chose to examine the state of the state from a perspective above climate, soils, vegetation, land forms and other geographical purities

"Almost all the landscape patterns we deal with have been affected by humans," Kovacik said. "We refer to it as the dynamic landscape. It's an attempt to make people realize that, in looking at the geography of South Carolina, one must have a sensitivity about what's happened over time."

Over time, South Carolina has seen the coming of the railroad, the boll weevil, the shopping mall, the interstate highway, the urban center, kudzu. All have held the brush, at least one time, in putting together the scenes that roll past today's car windows.

The result, although South Carolina is a small state, is one of the nation's most diverse landscapes: mountains, beaches, rolling foothills, flat plateaus, thick woodlands, sprawling coastal plains and, in all locales. the human touch.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

The chronological study of wall materials starts with the use of wood as a wall treatment.

By 1700, refinements were being made with the wood being divided into rectangular panels, and in larger homes, these panels were sometimes painted. Around 1735, pine paneling was used and trim was now painted in a variety of colors; 1737, wallpaper was first imported to America; 1739, wallpaper was first printed in America; 1750, Chinese scenic paper was brought to this country. American homes in the second half of the century featured smooth plastered walls between the dado and cornice. In smaller farmhouses, plaster walls were whitewashed, painted, or papered. Stencilling sometimes decorated walls. In more elaborate homes, pilasters divided the walls into panels which were painted in decorative, classical landscapes. Colorful frescoes were often painted on the plaster walls while they were still wet.

By the turn of the century, with printing of wallpaper already begun, paper consisted mainly of scenic designs. Paper of the Greek Revival Period had classical motifs and often mythological figures. Around 1840, machine printing on cheap paper was begun and less thought was put into the design of the patterns. Imitation marble and leather were used and some wall stencilling.

In the Federal Period, the chair rail was used almost exclusively, and walls were plastered above and below. Walls were painted in light tints and pastels. Scenic papers continued to be popular. In the South, walls were sometimes hung with silk fabrics.

At Betsy Drake Interiors, we offer a wide range of interior design services for both residential and commercial clientele. It would be our privilege to serve you.

Retired Ballerina Lives On Cattle Ranch

By ELOY O. AGUILAR
Associated Press Writer

EL HIGO, Panama (AP) — The warm Panamanian evening was filled with the cacophony of chirping crickets, as Dame Margot Fonteyn, whose infectious smile and magical body once thrilled the ballet world, reflected on the career that made her a prima ballerina assoluta.

She is still as trim as she was when she performed her lightning fast pirouettes and delicate adagios with her famed partner, Rudolf Nureyev. But she doesn't miss ballet and is content with her life on a cattle ranch.

She greets visitors with her husband, Roberto Arias, on the large veranda of their house on the crest of a hill near the sea. She pushes his wheelchair and invites her guests to join them under an open thatched hut.

A guest comments on the art of aging.

"I have no feeling about age at all," she says. "It is not something I consider important, perhaps because I never spent much time with people of my age during my years as a dancer.

"I joined the ballet when I was 14. For a while I was the youngest, and there were people older. I stayed on and on until I got to be the oldest. So I never really had a sense of age.

"I do not feel that there has been a drastic change in my life," she said. "I am happy here. This is home. I do not really miss the past. I do not wish I were back there."

She retired from the stage in 1979.

The 68-year-old Dame Commander of the British Empire lives with her husband of 32 years just off the village of El Higo, about 60 miles southwest of Panama City. She met Arias when she was 17 and dancing with the Vic-Wells and he was a student at Cambridge. He came back into her life 14 years later when she was dancing at the old Metropolitan Opera house and he headed Panama's delegation to the United Nations.

In 1964, a political opponent shot Arias in the spine. He was left partly paralyzed. He also has difficulty speaking and Dame Margot must listen carefully to what he says and then relay it to others.

However, Arias, a member of a Panamanian family long intertwined with the country's history and politics, actively joins conversations if they deal with international and national politics. He is the son and nephew of Panamanian presidents, and former ambassador to the United Nations and to England.

The village of El Higo (The Fig) is reached by driving for more than one hour from Panama City on the Pacific coastal highway.

It is the dry season, but even now the hills display a light green dotted by palm trees. Fruit trees and bougainvillea as well as smaller flower bushes surround the house. There are also 235 head of cattle on the land.

Power is provided by an old generator that runs a few hours each day. A telephone is located in a shack where the electrical power ends, about half a mile away from the 500-acre "Quinta Pata" farm.

"We go to Panama City, and I travel to England to see the family," she says. But taking care of the farm uses up a lot of their time.

La Quinta Pata means either "The Duck Villa" or "The Fifth Leg"

OLDEST TREATY

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States this year marks its oldest continuing treaty with a foreign government.

The U.S. turned to Morocco 200 years ago for protection from Libyan pirates threatening American merchantmen sailing off the North African coast. To mark the bicentennial of the Treaty of Marrakesh, both countries plan a series of cultural and educational events.

According to Angier Biddle Duke, former U.S. ambassador to Morocco, it is the oldest continuing treaty of the U.S. with a foreign government.

depending on how one wishes to translate it.

"This is a cattle farm," Dame Margot says. As if on cue, a bull appeared on the side of a hill. "We sell the cattle for beef. I have to keep track of it. Once in a while we have a roll call."

Roll call?

"Yes," she says with a laugh. "When you count them."

Arias laughs at his wife's unconventional description of a roundup.

Chickens, hens and dogs also romp freely on the farm.

Dame Margot reaches into a low-hanging flower pot and pulls out three eggs. "This is Millicent's favorite place," she says. Millicent is one of the hens.

In her spare time, Dame Margot advises the National Ballet Company of Panama. It was through her efforts that Nureyev agreed to bring his group to Panama for a one-night benefit performance in March.

Dame Margot first landed on her toes as a snow flake in the Vic-Wells Ballet's production of "The Nutcracker." Two years later, at the age of 16, she was asked to take over Alicia Markova's role in "Les Rendezvous."

By 19, she had danced Odette in "Swan Lake" (the most difficult role in ballet, she says), the title role of "Giselle" and Aurora in "Sleeping Beauty." The dancer who had been born Margaret Hookham in Surrey, England, quickly became prima ballerina assoluta with the Royal Ballet and remained so until 1959 when the company listed her as a guest artist.

In 1962, she teamed with Nureyev. With her versatility and liquid grace, and his strong personality and sensational leaps, they performed some of the most beautiful ballets ever seen.

FROM LONDON BALLET TO PANAMA FARM — Margot Fonteyn, former prima ballerina of Britain's Royal Ballet, is shown in her home, a cattle farm in Panama. "I am not a person to look back. I do not wish I were there," she said. She lives in Panama with her husband of 33 years, Roberto Arias. (AP Laserphoto)

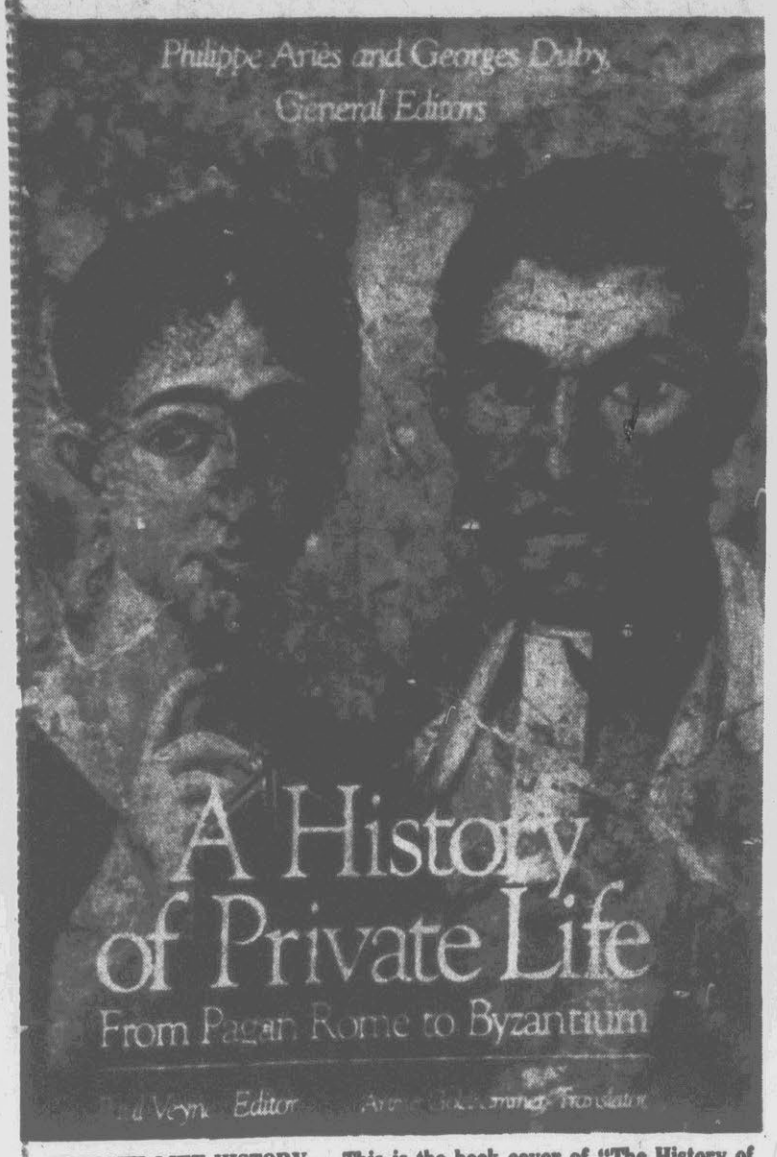
First English Language Volume On Private Lives Published



PRIVATE LIFE HISTORY — This is the book cover of "The History of Private Life," translated by Arthur Goldhammer, a book on the lives and relations of people from the past. (AP Laserphoto)

By MICHAEL BEZDEK
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The significance of hunting in the early Middle Ages was made clear by a law holding that someone caught stealing a hunting dog had to pay a hefty fine or suffer the public humiliation of kissing the animal's backside in public.

Among the Franks, the importance of procreation was made clear by the penalties for murder: the killing of a woman of child-bearing age would cost 600 solidi, but the slaying of a woman after menopause brought a fine of 200.

These are examples of a way of looking at history in which leaders, dates, literature and war take a back seat to essays on the way people lived, thought, worked and died. It is the historical procedure of the "annales" school of the French.

With "A History of Private Life" (Harvard University Press, $29.50), a five-volume set now being translated from the French, a wider, English-speaking audience will get a comprehensive look at what series translator Arthur Goldhammer calls an aproach to "history from the bottom up."

The first volume is on bookstands in some Eastern cities and will be more widely available in early April. The general editors were French historians Philippe Aries, who helped outline the work prior to his death, and Georges Duby.

Goldhammer views the work as a culmination of several decades of work begun by historians Marc Bloch and Lucien Febvre, who launched the journal, Annales, and the movement by that name around 1930.

He conceded such writing "probably will get some criticism in academic circles that it already is old hat, and some might say it is too limited to France."

However, most of the writing avoids the annales tendency of dwelling on trivialities and abstractions. The series is likely to engage many a serious student of history outside of academia, especially as a supplement and stimulant to more traditional histories.

The first volume begins forcefully with a chapter by Paul Veyne of the College de France, who also edited the remainder of the initial book that takes the reader through Byzantium.

Veyne and the other authors have called upon often overlooked sources to provide original material and to elaborate on and sometimes counter works of the past.

For example, in his chapter on early Rome, Veyne writes that the Romans, for all the accounts of their orderly society, were a pretty lawless lot. Soldiers were called in only to handle major disturbances, and the law often had to be taken into one's own hands. The easiest way to collect from a debtor, for example, was to convene an "escort," people who would follow the delinquent about, mocking him with phrases and songs. The law specified only that the taunts could not be obscene and the person could not be stripped.

In the Roman Empire, some of the most significant commentary was done on the tombstones that made the roads outside of the cities look "like some Broadway of the beyond." The epitaphs, a favored form of reading material, were composed prior to death for a variety of reasons, such as the hope of being remembered for good deeds or as a parting shot at some adversary.

The reader is often taken inside the home, where in pagan Rome people lived without much furniture and no heat but with colorful interiors adorned with mosaics and sculptures. Women spent most of their time there with the slaves, who did just about everything for their wealthy masters except brush their teeth.

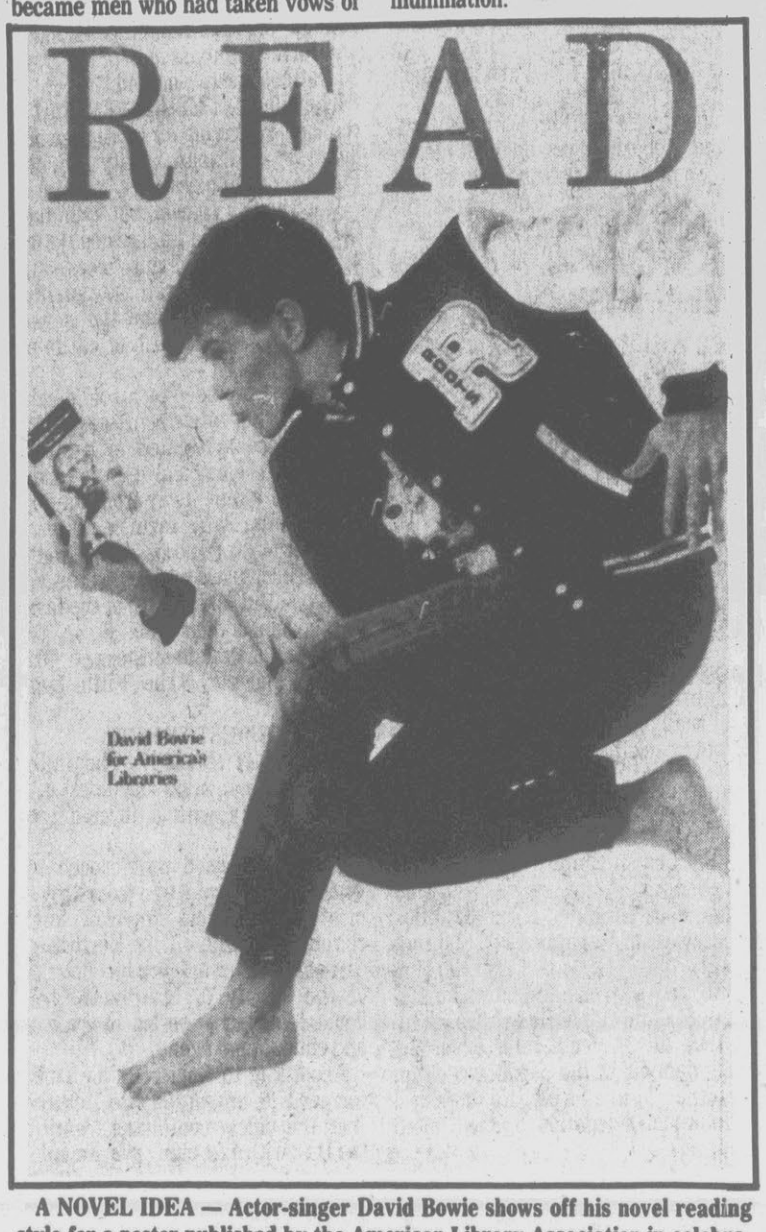
The cities were the centers of life. Gradually, though, first with monasteries and then with the villages of the German invaders, life moved to the countryside.

From the history of ideas, the moderate concern the early Romans had about an afterlife changed to full-blown anxiety by the 7th century, so much so that religious leaders allowed cemeteries to be moved from village outskirts to the churchyard.

Meanwhile, with the growth of Christianity, anxieties about the ways of the flesh also were increasing.

The leaders of the church soon became men who had taken vows of celibacy after marriage. And to soothe the sexual apprehensions of newlyweds, an elixir was concocted from fermented honey — hence the tradition of a "honeymoon."

The importance and complexity of private life was growing. However, the end of the first book from "A History of Private Life" leaves us in the dark age of 12th century Byzantium, awaiting the second volume for more illumination.



A NOVEL IDEA — Actor-singer David Bowie shows off his novel reading style for a poster published by the American Library Association in celebration of National Libry Week, April 5-11. Bowie says he reads 50 to 100 books a year and tends to "buy books on the run and then give them to friends when he has read them. (AP Laserphoto)

GETS LINCOLN AWARD

NEW YORK (AP) — Ralph Geoffrey Newman, author of many books and articles on Abraham Lincoln, has been named the recipient of the 1987 Barondess-Lincoln Award of The Civil War Round Table of New York.

The award is for "contribution to the greater appreciation of the life and works of Abraham Lincoln."

A Seminar For Customs

G.G. RIGSBY
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Flashing the hand gesture for "OK" may get you a punch in the face in Rio de Janeiro.

Although Americans widely accept a circle made with the fingers as the signal for "OK," the gesture is considered vulgar in Brazil and impolite in Greece and the Soviet Union. In Japan, the gesture signifies "money," and in southern France, it means "zero" or "worthless."

That's the type of knowledge the U.S. Department of Commerce would like South Carolinians to get before they go overseas.

The department is organizing a seminar to be held April 8 at Greenville Technical College to tell business executives, travelers and travel agents the "do's and taboos" they need to know when they travel.

Edgar Rojas, director of the department's U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service in Columbia, says it's not that South Carolinians in particular are unaware of the ways of the world.

Many Americans could stand to become more aware of international customs, he says.

"We all have to become more conscious of behavior patterns," he said. "It's a fairly new thrust, but it's got to be recognized by the United States."

Among the things he'd like more people to know are that wearing purple in Peru signifies death, it is proper to use your fork in your left hand in European countries and it shouldn't be surprising if an Arab businessman wants to hold an American businessman's hand as they walk down the street.

All too often, he said, "An American will talk loud and will emphasize words" to try to communicate in another country. But wearing Bermuda shorts and a worn shirt and asking "Do you understand?" loudly and slowly as if spoken to a dolt won't get you far in Paris, he said.

Great Lakes Indian Atlas Records The History Of 'Ignored' People

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Long before skyscrapers and smokestacks poked the horizon, this was open prairie. The white man traded and traveled here, but he was the outsider. The Potawatomi lived here.

This was Indian country. So was the entire Great Lakes territory. Dozens of tribes lived on the virgin lands and voyaged in canoes along the shimmering waters. This was their home.

It is still.

That's one point of the new Atlas of Great Lakes Indian History, a book that uses maps to trace more than 200 years of treaties and trade rivalries, disease and destruction, war and peace — and survival.

"The principal myth that needs to be dispelled is that Indian people left this part of the country or were entirely absorbed by the white population," said Helen Hornbeck Tanner, the atlas' chief editor. "Neither of these things is true."

About 300,000 Indians from 15 major tribes now live in the Great Lakes area that stretches from Montreal, Quebec, to Minnesota and down to the borders of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers.

Some tribes, Tanner said, have lived in the same places for more than a thousand years: the Menominee of Green Bay, Wis.; the Potawatomi of southern Michigan; the Miami of the Wabash River region of Indiana.

Despite their stability and numbers, "the Great Lakes Indians have been an ignored part of history," said Tanner, 70, a research associate at the private Newberry Library who devoted 10 years to the atlas.

"Anthropologists are mainly interested in Indian people not affected by white contact," she said. "These people have been (affected) ... since 1620."

"They're treated as part of the landscape," added Tanner, a Michigan resident and former member of the state Commission on Indian Affairs. Some people, she said, think "pioneers moving westward moved onto vacant land."

The atlas sets the record straight, following the movement of Indian communities from 1640, the era of the Iroquois wars, to 1871, when the U.S. government and Indian tribes stopped making treaties.

It pinpoints 1,500 Indian villages that existed over those years, inhabited by such tribes as the Dakota, Delaware, Sauk, Shawnee, Oneida, Ottawa, Mohawk, Wyandot, Winnebago and Ojibwa, sometimes known as the Chippewa.

Many of these tribes were forced from their homes and cheated out of their land. Some were decimated by epidemics carried by Europeans protected by immunities. Tanner said smallpox wiped out two-thirds of the Saginaw-Chippewa tribe in Michigan 150 years ago.

Tanner's intense interest comes from her Ph.D. work in history on Indians in the southeastern United States. In 1963, she agreed to find out what Indians were living around her home base in Ann Arbor, Mich., at the time of the American Revolution. That was at the request of lawyers representing Indian tribes in litigation. That drew her, in turn, into the history of Indians of the Ohio region.

To piece together Indian migratory history, Tanner and three other editors called on more than 100 experts including historians, linguists, geologists, cartographers and archeologists.

They also sorted through thousands of documents including journals, ship logs, military dispatches, trading company records, missionary reports, diaries of people held captive by Indians and 19th century tribal council meetings.

Some Indians recorded their history on birchbark parchment.

Tanner said she discovered Great Lakes Indians "were extremely sagacious. They knew very well what factors they were up against. They were powerless in the face of having as many as 100 times more people moved in on them."

She also learned about their lifestyles and tastes, shaped, in part, by French and English traders. Some tribes lived in tepees; others in multiple-family houses. Many were well traveled, heavily dependent on the waters bordering them. The Ojibwa were known for their birchbark canoes.

Tanner said maps — the atlas has 33 — best tell the Indian history. For example, before the American Revolution, the Delaware were forced westward from what is now New Jersey into the territories of five other states before they reached Oklahoma. "By counting the number of times they moved, you can see how harassed they are," she said.

But maps also pose problems. Towns inhabited by the Delaware frequently changed names when they changed leaders. A town near Lancaster, Ohio, was successively known as French Margaret's, Hockhocking, Beaver's New Town, Assinink or Standing Stone and Captain Johnny's Town.

The atlas also outlines clear patterns. Whites forced Indians out of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois because it was good farmland, Tanner said, but some tribes never left parts of upper Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Ontario.

Despite all the resources, Tanner said the editors' task was difficult because Indians "hid out for a long time in the 19th century.

"Indian people kept a low profile and didn't let people know they were there," she said. "A lot of Indian people just took white names, bought land and tried to be extremely inconspicuous."

"It's not easy to ... locate a thread of history when the Indians try to conceal their own identity for self-protection."

The sentiments are far different today. Indians are intensely interested in their heritage. "Now they're all hunting for it," Tanner said.

And she said Indians she met in her research emphasized the importance of documenting the tragedies of the past.

"They wanted to show how much they'd lost and still make it clear Indians are still here," she said. "They're not part of the past, but part of the present."

L.A.'s Los Lobos A Big Hit In Spain

By FRANCISCO CONDE
Associated Press Writer

MADRID, Spain (AP) — The press billed the the rock band from East Los Angeles as "wetbacks" who must constantly look over their shoulders for the U.S. immigration agent.

The raucous show Los Lobos gave here to kick off their European tour left no doubts about the quintet's status as one of the most exciting bands currently on the rock scene.

However, the members of the group — all of whom are in there mid-30's — hardly rate the outlaw status the Spanish press gave them.

"None of us are wetbacks," said bassist Conrad Lorenzo. "We are second-generation Americans. Only (guitarist and frontman) Cesar Rosas was born in Mexico and immigrated, but he arrived legally in Los Angeles with his parents at age 6."

Despite the confusion, the 1,200 fans on hand at Madrid's Astoria Club reveled in Los Lobos' stunning mastery of American pop styles: rock, blues, country and western, soul, rhythm and blues, ballads, rockabilly and Tex-Mex waltzes.

"It's the combination of all these things that makes what we do interesting," drummer Luis Perez said.

Though Los Lobos — which means the wolves — started out as a copy band of Top 40 hits in 1974, it slowly began to define itself through American and Mexican folk music. Its greatest influence has been country and western.

The group's European tour comes as it's second LP, "By the Light of the Moon," has begun to shoot up the U.S. music charts. It is a record that combines personal vignettes of American life with a country-rock sound.

The tour will take Los Lobos to France, Denmark, Sweden, Norway and England.

Los Lobos first attracted national attention in 1983 when their acordion-laced Mexican love ballad, "Anselma," won a Grammy award. Their 1984 LP, "How Will the Wolf Survive?," brought them critical acclaim and a national following.

They also won respect for their insightful lyrics on the trials and tribulations of working-class Mexican Americans in their hometown of East Los Angeles struggling to maintain a foothold in the land of the American dream.

A recent Rolling Stone music critics poll named them band of the year along with Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band.

Chief songwriter David Hidalgo, the group's lead guitarist, said the band "loves all the music — border music — played from southern California to south Texas. We mainly play rock'n'roll, but we'll never stop playing the Mexican folk music that is a part of our roots."

During their crackling two-hour set in Madrid, Hidalgo and Rosas mixed brilliant, searing guitar work on such rockers as "Shakin', Shakin' Shakes" and "Is This All There Is?" with sweet gentle playing on the Mexican folk song, "Prenda del Alma."

The veteran rockers Hidalgo, Rosas, Perez and Lozano formed Los Lobos in 1974 to abandon the rock club circuit in East Los Angeles and concentrate on acoustical Mexican folklore music.

For six years the four alumni of Garfield High School played weddings and social gatherings that attracted Mexican Americans young and old and studied Mexican folk music.

"We grew up with 1960s rock music," Lozano said. "But in the early 1970s rock music kind of died for us."

Los Lobos returned to electrified rock with renewed faith in the early '80s when the emergence of punk rock and New Wave groups reinvigorated the Los Angeles music scene.

Their foot-stomping stage shows and exotic mesh of styles drew large local audiences and earned them a recording contract from the small music label, Slash, which was known for signing punk bands.

They took on saxophone player Steve Bell from the respected L.A. rock band, The Blasters, for added punch and have never looked back.

"We're not worried about our audiences being limited to ethnic music lovers," Lozano said. "We've gotten pretty far playing the music we have wanted to play."

HAPPY WITH SONG'S RETURN — Songwritr Otis Blackwell, who wrote the 1956 Elvis Presley hit, "Don't Be Cruel" and sold the song for $25, says he's happy with the recent release of the classic by The Judds. (AP Laserphoto by Mark Humphrey)

Hammond To Lecture At ECU

Feminist artist Harmony Hammond of Santa Fe, New Mexico, will visit East Carolina University April 13 to present an illustrated lecture and lead a class discussion in the ECU School of Art.

Ms. Hammond will lecture on her work at 7:30 p.m. in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center Auditorium. On April 14, she will lead student discussions of the topic, "Feminist Abstract Art: A Political Viewpoint." The class is scheduled from noon until 2 p.m. in 1327 Jenkins Center.

Awarded a New York State Council Grant in Painting earlier this year, Ms. Hammond is also a National Endowment for the Arts grant recipient in graphics and sculpture, and has held fellowships from the Money for Women Fund, the MacDowell Colony and Yaddo.

Ms. Hammond is on the board of "Heresies" magazine and is the author of "Wrappings," a book about feminism, art and the martial arts. She has exhibited her work at galleries in New York, Minneapolis and Berlin, and is represented in such public collections as the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Chicago Institute of Art.

At present she teaches painting at the Vermont Studio School.

Further information about her visit is available by telephoning 355-6881.

Art Lectures

By SHARON BROOM
N.C. MUSEUM OF ART

RALEIGH — Three lectures at the North Carolina Museum of Art will explore the work of Scottish painter Sir David Wilkie (1785-1841), subject of a major exhibition at the museum, and the historical and artistic developments of early 19th-century Britain.

The free lecture series "Sir David Wilkie and His Times" will be presented on Wednesdays, April 15, 22 and 29 at 8 p.m.

Charles Carlton of North Carolina State University will begin the series with "Wilkie's Britain," a discussion of the Industrial Revolution and other historical developments that shaped life in Britain during Wilkie's era.

On April 22, Arthur Marks of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill will speak on "The Grandiose and the Commonplace: Wilkie's Contemporaries." Marks will present Wilkie in the artistic context of the Romantic period, which produced the painters J.M.W. Turner and John Constable, along with poets such as William Wordsworth, John Keats and Percy Bysshe Shelley.

William J. Chiego, former chief curator at the museum and organizer of the Wilkie exhibition, will conclude the series on April 29 with a lecture on "Sir David Wilkie of Scotland." Chiego, now the director of the Allen Memorial Art Museum in Oberlin, Ohio, will discuss the remarkable career of Wilkie, who rose from modest beginnings to become a favorite painter of three British monarchs.

For more information on the lectures and other museum programs, call 833-1935.

A Shift Of Focus At Humana Festival

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The annual March madness at Actors Theater of Louisville has always focused on unknown American plays by unknown American writers. That honorable intention may be disappearing.

Each spring, the theater is a place where visiting critics, scholars, producers, actors, directors and interested theatergoers can view untested work in a three-day orgy of concentrated theatergoing. The focus shifted slightly with this year's Humana Festival of New American Plays, which ended March 28, and will change even more in 1988.

One reason is that the festival no longer accepts unsolicited, full-length manuscripts, although it will look at one-act works by untried writers.

This year, artistic director Jon Jory also inaugurated a policy of including in the festival second productions of plays that had had their premieres elsewhere. He reasons that second chances are pretty hard to come by in life, let alone the theater.

He also has commissioned new plays by a trio of well-known diverse writers: social critic and novelist Susan Sontag, journalist Jimmy Breslin, and playwright Marsha Norman, a festival alumna with her drama, "Getting Out." Whether they will get on stage next year, pushing out work by lesser known literary lights, is another matter.

Whatever the results, the 1987 Humana Festival recovered some of the momentum lost in the last two years. The over-all quality of the work — five full-length plays, three one-acts and one work-in-progress — was higher. There were fewer outright clinkers, plays that make you want to dash from the theater five minutes after the house lights go down.

Admittedly, the festival's biggest turkey, "Glimmerglass," based on James Fenimore Cooper's "Leatherstocking Tales," never was seen by most of the critics. Jory and its author, Jonathan Bolt, agreed to close the play before the visitors arrived.

What most of the audiences saw were works of uneven quality, more interesting for what they promised than what they actually produced. However, there were some original voices present on the theater company's two stages.

The most accomplished was "Elaine Daughter," a funny, rueful generational comedy by Mayo Simon. The combatants are a sweet, sexy, worldly-wise widow and her intellectual, argumentative 26-year-old unmarried daughter.

Over two long acts, the playwright's ultimate message of mother-daughter accommodation is never heavy handed. A delightful Marilyn Rockafellow as the mother and an endearing Jill Holden as her belligerent offspring make the sparring worthwhile. Jules Aaron supplied the expert direction.

A pair of fine performances by Doug Hutchinson and Tim Ransom dominate Howard Korder's "Fun," a one-act drama that tries to answer a perennial teen-age question, "What do we do now?"

Korder, a story editor for television's "Kate and Allie," follows two youths after they play hooky from school. The adventurers visit a shopping mall, kill time at the local hamburger heaven, get mixed up with a middle-aged drunk and end up spending the night under a bridge in the rain. The two youths have a miserable time, but the audience doesn't, thanks to Korder's fine ear for dialogue that alternates between heartbreak and hilarity.

The same sure sense of dialogue is present in Grace McKeaney's "Deadfall," a three-act comedy-drama, set in 1938 and overstuffed with at least three different plots.

"Deadfall" presents a strong central female character, Bay Brewer, the tomboyish owner of a Georgia roadhouse, and details her love for a passing truck driver. Their relationship is affecting, but it is sidetracked by the cartoon cutups of the woman's butter-brained sister who supposedly has shot her husband and a goofy, would-be journalist who wants to write about the crime.

"Water Hole," written by South African-born Kendrew Lascelles, had serious intentions marred by unbelievable characters. The most astonishing is a glamorous actress stranded in the African bush. The woman is willing to sacrifice her honor to save the life of a young girl being sold into slavery. Far more interesting is a jaded bush trader played by Frederic Major with the right amount of sass and cynicism.

Jon Klein's episodic "T Bone n Weasel" follows two South Carolina con men — one black, the other white — as they stumble across a Southern landscape populated by assorted weirdos, bigots and just plain folk.

Frank Lloyd Wright Designs In Furnishings Remain Fresh

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

If the name of one architect could be chosen to personify the American preoccupation with the family home, that name would be Frank Lloyd Wright.

His career spanned many decades from the early 1890s to 1959 when he died at the height of his fame. During that time, he built many homes and was an eloquent spokesman for the point of view that the home whose design and furnishings are integrated is an environment for personal happiness.

Ironically, the furnishings Wright designed to enhance the homes he built now command such high prices they are being removed from the buildings and sold at auction.

Recently, for example, a high-backed dining chair was sold for $190,000, a record price for 20th-century furniture.

High prices for the furnishings are one indication of new interest in the man who has been called America's greatest architect. Another is the reproduction of some of his furniture, as well as fabrics, wallcoverings and other decorative accessories. The home furnishings were introduced this past summer by several manufacturers under a licensing arrangement with the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation.

Though he died almost 30 years ago, Wright's ideas about residential architecture and design are as fresh today and even more acceptable than they were when he promulgated them during the early and middle part of the 20th century.

Central among them was the belief that home furnishings should be consistent with the building in which they were placed and should be, in his own words, "an extension of the sense of the building which they furnish."

The architect would specify exactly where the furnishings and architectural embellishments (such as stained glass windows) that he designed were to be placed, according to Edgar Tafel, an architect who was once one of his assistants. But, he also was interested in designing furnishings for the marketplace, as another licensed home furnishings collection from the 1950s indicates.

This new licensed furnishings collection is the result of collaboration between the Wright Foundation at Taliesin West in Scottsdale, Ariz., and a number of manufacturers.

The foundation oversees all aspects of the Wright legacy, which include his voluminous archives, a school of architecture, an architecture practice and a development and building subsidiary. All the activities are administered by a dedicated group of enthusiasts, some of whom came to Taliesin to study with the architect while in their youth and have remained for virtually their entire working life.

One of those is Richard Carney, now managing trustee of the foundation, who arrived in 1948 as a student. Carney said the new interest in Wright's work was gratifying.

But it is painful to see houses destroyed to retrieve the now quite valuable architectural elements sought by museums and collectors.

"We do feel bad that a house might be destroyed to sell a stained glass window for $150,000. It should stay in the house, especially since we could license production of the window exactly as Wright designed it for $1,000," he said.

As a means of raising funds for its work and satisfying what it is believed is a public demand for Wright designs, the foundation began licensing production of some of the architect's designs in 1986. Licensees include Cassina and Atelier International for furniture, F. Schumacher & Co. for fabrics, rugs and wallcoverings, and Tiffany & Co. for tableware. The foundation's marketing adviser, Stevens-Fields Design of Chicago, is also negotiating with lighting and leaded-glass producers for additional products, according to Carney.

In the meantime, it's possible to buy through designers and architects furniture designs by Wright that include the Robie chair designed in 1908 for a home in Chicago (now a museum), the Midway chair and table (1914), the Allen table (1917) and the Barrel chair (1937), as well as the Taliesin Chair designed in 1949. (Prices for the furniture range from $860 for a small chair to $12,195 for the large Allen table.)

There are also eight designs for printed fabrics, five wovens suitable for upholstery, and sheers and panels for widows as well as wallpaper and borders and rug designs based on Wright motifs. (Prices for the fabrics range from $31 to $92 a yard; wallcoverings are $26 to $50 a roll and borders $3 to $11 a yard.)

Garden Clinic

Q. When will "Almanac Gardener" be back on television?

A. "Almanac Gardener" returns Saturday at 4:30 p.m. on North Carolina Public Television. The series will run for 12 weeks. Features covered this season include growing and cooking with herbs, planting and pruning fruit trees, controlling harmful insects and diseases, growing warm season grasses and using compost in the vegetable garden. The series will also include ways to prepare new varieties of vegetables and will have other cooking segments on peach dishes, fruit pies and ways to use fresh strawberries. Agricultural extension agents featured this season include Erv Evans, Wake County; Ted Caudle, Mecklenburg County, and David Barkley, New Hanover County. Horticultural specialists Kim Powell and Larry Bass will answer gardening questions. Mike Gray is "Almanac Gardener" host and producer. As a special "Almanac Gardener" bonus this season, the show will take a trip to Disneyworld for a behind-the-scenes look at horticulture at the resort.

Q. What are some nest-building materials I can put out for birds?

A. Providing nesting materials may induce birds to nest in your garden. String, yarn, hair from your comb or hair combed from pets and strips of cloth are materials some species use for nest building. Cut stringly material into lengths no longer than eight inches. Longer pieces could cause the birds to become entangled. Don't place materials directly in birdhouses — they will look as if already occupied. Materials can be placed in empty suet feeders, draped across the clothesline or in the crotch of tree branches. Since some birds use twigs, grass or plant fibers to construct nests, removing all these from the garden is not helpful.

Q. What are some plants for attracting butterflies?

A. Butterfly-weed, butterfly bush, abelia, sedums, annual phlox, thrift and perennial phloxes, lantana, stock, marigolds, chives, purple coneflower, coreopsis, dianthus and pinks, verbena, goldenrod, joe-pye weed and native asters. The following plants provide food for caterpillars of one or more species of butterflies: wild indigo or baptisia, clovers, Queen Anne's lace, parsley, tulip poplar, milkweeds, sweet bay, sassafras, pawpaw, alfalfa, spicebush, native asters, thistles, passionflower or mollypop, violets, elms, willows, wild cherry, mistletoe, plantain and burdock.

Cone, Bush Fruits Make Good Use Of Odd Space

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS
A Meredith Magazine

Cane and bush fruits are a tasty solution for gardeners who don't have the space for fruit trees, says Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

When grown against a fence, berry plants make use of otherwise unused space. Before making any selections, ask a local nurseryowner which varieties are suitable for the local climate.

Raspberries: Just note the high price of fresh raspberries at the grocery store, and be convinced that this cane fruit will be as good as gold in a garden. Originally confined to cold-winter regions, varieties now are available that thrive in warm areas.

Raspberry varieties fall into two groups: summer-fruiting and everbearing. The summer-fruiting raspberry produces berries on the previous season's canes in early to midsummer. The newer everbearing types bear fruit twice, once in early summer on the previous season's growth, and again in the fall on the current season's growth.

Red and black are the two most common types of raspberries, but purple and yellow varieties also exist.

Plant raspberries in the early spring (fall in milder climates), in a sunny area with well-drained soil.

Blackberries: Though frequently confused with black raspberries, blackberries are larger (1 to 2 inches long) and more elongated. Blackberries grow in one of two ways: on 4-foot-tall, erect canes, or on trailing vines. Cane varieties thrive everywhere except in extremely cold or extrmely warm regions, and vine types are limited to warmer climates. Trailing varieties produce smaller fruit clusters than the erect types, and they ripen earlier.

Boysenberries, loganberries and dewberries are popular trailing varieties in the blackberry family. Dewberries bear large, near-black berries; loganberries and boysenberries are more red.

Gooseberries: One of the most popular bush fruits is the gooseberry. Ready to harvest in midsummer, these tart, ¾-inch berries grow on thorny, 4-foot bushes in regions where winter temperatures drop below zero. Berries are green, yellow, pink or red. Because the gooseberry is an alternative host for white pine blister rust, its cultivation is banned in certain states. Contact county extension offices for information.

Here's The Answer

Q. — We have a bedroom where the door to the clothes closet always seems to be in the way when it is opened. We have been advised that replacing the regular door with a sliding door will solve the problem, but the people who gave us that advice did not know what conditions had to be met. Is there some way to find out? We intend to hire a carpenter.

A. — The simplest way is to let the carpenter decide whether there is sufficient space in the wall to permit the door to slide. The amount of space required is from 33 to 40 inches, depending on the size of the door. Incidentally, should there not be sufficient space, it may be that an accordion folding door will do the job without requiring the extra wall space.

Q. — We have a dent in a bedroom bureau. Can it be removed by wetting the area until it expands enough so that it cannot be seen?

A. — Yes, although not all of the time. However, it works only when done on wood which has no finish on it. If you tried it, you would have to take off the finish first. If it failed to work, as is sometimes the case, you might have to use some kind of wood filler, such as wood putty, water putty, plastic wood or one of the other compounds made especially for the purpose. Whichever method you choose, or regardless of which kind of filler is used, it is a precision job and, if it is an extra fine piece of furniture, might require professional treatment.

Q. — I want to apply enamel to wood paneling with some knots in it. These knots appear to be defects and are not the kind you see in regular knotty woods, such as pine. Will the knots bleed through after a period of time?

A. — You can keep the knots under control if you first coat the wood with a solution of half shellac and half denatured alcohol. After the shellac has been applied, allow it to dry for several hours or overnight, then sand very, very lightly. From there on you have a choice of methods. Some finishers put on a light undercoat (try to get one of the same brand as the enamel), followed with two coats of enamel, spaced about 16 hours apart. Some skip the undercoat and go ahead with a coat of enamel to which 50 percent of thinner has been added, then a final coat of enamel. As with any finish where there is a possibility the final coat will be too glossy, consider the use of pumice powder and oil to cut down the gloss.

Register Helps Preserve Past

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS
A Meredith Magazine

There's a certain cachet to mounting on the side of a house a plaque that reads "This house is listed in the National Register of Historic Places."

Getting a property listed on the National Register takes more than a desire to impress, says Better Homes and Gardens Traditional Home magazine. First, it requires owning a property that meets the register's qualifications, and second, it demands research, patience and a sincere belief the structure should be preserved for posterity.

The National Register was created in 1966 in an effort to halt the mass demolition of historic properties that was a result of the urban renewal programs of the 1960s. This effort, along with other preservation endeavors, helped instill in the public a need and a desire to preserve the past.

As defined by the Department of the Interior, under whose auspices the National Register falls, "The National Register is the official list of the nation's cultural resources worthy of preservation." The list includes not only individual buildings and houses, but also whole sections of cities (one example is the Georgetown area of Washington), structures such as bridges and dams, and archaeological sites.

There are numerous advantages to listing a house in the National Register, not all of which are tangible.

At Work Tagging Bass

TAGGING ROCKFISH—Dr. Roger Rulifson, a marine scientist at East Carolina University, shows how tags are pinned on the fins of striped bass that he captures and releases in the Bay of Fundy, Nova Scotia. Rulifson tags the fish in order to track their ocean migration. Fisherman who later catch a tagged fish can return the tag, with information on where the fish was caught. A reward of $3 is given for a returned tag.

Marine scientist Dr. Roger Rulifson studies migration of striped bass at site in Nova Scotia

ECU Scientist In Research Project

Text By George A. Threewitts, ECU News Bureau

A study of rockfish in Canada by an East Carolina University marine scientist will be getting support this summer from an organization that supplies volunteers and funding for science research.

Dr. Roger Rulifson, a marine scientist with the ECU Institute for Coastal and Marine Resources, will be working with volunteers from Earthwatch.

The organization, based in Watertown, Mass., provides funding for scientific research with contributions from individuals wishing to assist directly with research activities.

Rulifson is studying the ocean migration of striped bass or rockfish in Canadian waters. This summer will be the third year that he has conducted his study in the Bay of Fundy, Nova Scotia, and will be the first time that he has worked with Earthwatch volunteers.

"One of the volunteers is a physician," Rulifson said. Others include a school teacher, a business consultant, a retired Navy officer, an airline engineer, an insurance salesman and a housewife.

Rulifson will direct the Earthwatch volunteers who will catch, weigh, measure and tag striped bass in the Annapolis River which discharges into the huge bay. Scientists from the Canadian Department of Fisheries and Oceans and from Acadia University in Wolfville, Nova Scotia, are also involved with the project.

In addition to learning the migration routes of the fish the study will document the population of striped bass in the river. This data should help scientist know more about how a hydroelectric dam on the river which is powered by the giant tide of the area, and another proposed for the bay may affect the spawning grounds and populations of rockfish. Also being considered in the study is the importance of the striped bass sport fishery to the tourist industry of Nova Scotia.

Mystery Fish

During the past decade in Canada and the U.S. the numbers of striped bass — a prized commercial and recreational fish — have decreased dramatically and mysteriously.

Rulifson has spent the past two summers tagging the fish in an effort to learn their migration routes and their rivers of origin. In the past he has done most of the tagging work himself with the aid of students and a few tourists who volunteer, from time to time, to help pin the small orange tags to the back of stripers.

Fishermen who later catch a tagged fish can return the tag to the address shown on the tag for a reward — usually $3.

So far the return of fish tagged by Rulifson in Nova Scotia in 1985 and 1986 is about 15 percent. "We expect that by the fall of 1987 total tag returns may well be more than 25 percent, which is quite good for ocean-tagged fish," he said.

Tagged fish have been caught in Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Rhode Island while others were caught in the same place in Nova Scotia where they had been tagged a year earlier. "Needless to say, we need many recaptures before we can unravel the mystery of the ocean migration of striped bass," Rulifson said.

High Tides

The Bay of Fundy, where Rulifson is doing his work, is the scene of the world's greatest tidal surge. A tide change occurs twice a day and each time 6.5 million cubic feet of Atlantic Ocean pour into then then out of the bay with the power of 8,000 freight locomotives. Water levels in the bay rise and fall a maximum of 54 feet with each tide change.

Hydroelectric dams that harness the power of this tidal surge have been built on rivers leading into the Bay of Fundy and a proposal has been made to build a giant dam across the bay itself. The proposed $6 billion dam would be 14 stories tall and 5.3 miles long, the largest in the world. Its 128 turbines could produce 4,560 million watts of power.

But environmental scientists contend that such a dam would affect tides as far south as Cape Cod in Massachusetts. They also say the dam would alter a unique habitat for migratory birds from South America and would block the passage of striped bass and other fish to their historical spawning grounds.

Volunteer Teams

"We hope to catch, tag, and release striped bass as they swim upstream from the Bay of Fundy to the spawning grounds in the Annapolis River," Rulifson said.

While Rulifson will begin tagging the fish in May the first team of Earthwatch volunteers will not arrive until July 1. Team members will work for two weeks at the site where they will assist with marking and releasing fish and will catch fish that were released earlier. New teams of volunteers will arrive every two weeks until August 29.

"I am looking forward to working with these people," Rulifson said.

He said that in past years he has relied on student volunteers, interns and summer tourists. Thsi is the first time he has worked with Earthwatch volunteers.

"They are taking two weeks of their vacation to work in Nova Scotia because they are interested and excited by what we are doing," he said.

He said most of the volunteers are professional people who are interested in science and in making a contribution of their time and money to support scientific research.

Volunteers for the striped bass study — "Where Have All The Stripers Gone?" — pay $1,050 each for the opportunity to be a part of the project. The fees are used to support the research. Participants may get a tax deduction or in some cases college credit.

Most of those who will be working with Rulifson are between the ages of 50 and 66. They are from a variety of professions including a medical doctor, insurance salesman, engineer, business consultant, a retired Navy officer and a woman from New Jersey who wrote on her application that she had been a housewife and has raised five children. The only job she had held outside the home was that of a hospital volunteer. She said she would enjoy cooking for the expedition crew. •

Help Wanted

Using volunteers who pay to participate in science research is not a new activity but it is becoming more commonplace as governmental agencies cut back on the money they allocate to research projects. Earthwatch was organized in 1971. It has been involved in more than 829 projects in 75 countries, providing researchers with 14,248 volunteers and more than $7.8 million in funds and equipment.

Rulifson sees Earthwatch as a solid research organization that could take on an even more important role in scientific research.

"If it wasn't for the Earthwatch volunteers who work side by side with us in taking the data, handling the gill nets and cooking, we wouldn't be able to do the kind of job that needs to be done," he said. "It would cost too much to pay professionals to do these jobs.

Various Projects For Earthwatch Volunteers Available Worldwide

Exploring Bahamian beaches in search of the 1492 landing site of Columbus and studying the eating habits of elephants in Zimbabwe are some other projects getting help from Earthwatch volunteers.

A nonprofit, tax-exempt organization, Earthwatch is currently involved with providing money and volunteer help to more than 50 research projects — most of them planned for the summer.

Volunteers pay a share of the costs for a research project and are allowed to participate on the research team. Individual costs can range from a low of $850 to hunt dinosaur fossils in Colorado to $1,950 to study the habitat of elephants in Africa's Sengwa Wildlife Research Area. Travel costs are extra. Before the new tax law went into effect this year all of the costs incurred by an Earthwatch volunteer have been tax deductible.

Projects approved by Earthwatch have been screened by an advisory board to the organization's Center for Field Research. Sites included for current study are in North, Central and South America, Europe, Africa and the Middle East, Asia, Australia and the Pacific Islands.

Earthwatch headquarters are located in Watertown, Mass.

MUD FLATS — Twice a day the Bay of Fundy, Nova Scotia, becomes a huge basin of mud as the change in tide pulls 6.5 million cubic feet of ocean water out to sea. When the ocean rolls back in again the water level in the bay can rise by as much as 54 feet. The wall of wire shown in this photo is a commercial fishing weir which traps fish to be collected later by fisherman at low tide. (Photo by Roger Rulifson)

Azalea Festival Star List

WILMINGTON — Robin Greer, who plays the role of Dina Wells in the CBS-TV series "Falcon Crest," has been named Queen Azalea for the 1987 North Carolina Azalea Festival in Wilmington, which opens Thursday and continues through Sunday.

In making the announcement of the queen's selection, festival president Doug Echols also said that two popular network television actors have been chosen to participate in this 40th annual Azalea Festival.

They are Jerry ver Dorn, a member of the cast of the daytime series, "Guiding Light," and Lorenzo Lamas, who portrays Lance Cumson on "Falcon Crest," a role in which he depicts a character with a love interest with Miss Greer.

Ver Dorn will serve as master of ceremonies for the Queen's Coronation Pageant and Show on Saturday night in Trask Coliseum, and Lamas will participate in the Azalea Festival as a celebrity guest.

As Azalea Queen, Miss Greer will take part in many activities throughout the four-day festival, including appearances and ribbon-cuttings at a number of special events, as well as riding on the queen's float during the Azalea Festival Parade. She will be crowned officially during special ceremonies at the Queen's Coronation Pageant and Show, and will be accompanied by the Queen's Court and escorts, who are cadets from Virginia Military Institute.

Gov. Jim Martin will be on hand to crown the queen.

Headlining the show segment of the coronation pageant is singer Johnny Mathis, returning for the first time since the 1984 Azalea Festival. Tickets are on sale at the Azalea Festival office in Long Leaf Mall, telephone 763-0905.

Veteran movie and television actor Tony Dow, who is starring currently in "The New Leave It to Beaver" series, will visit the festival at Wilmington as a celebrity guest.

Other festival events include the 1987 Azalea Festival Horse Show, one of the largest free horse shows in the world.

The horse show attracts one of the largest fields of entries in the Southeast, competing for trophies and ribbons in each class, plus prizes for high points on horse and rider combination.

The schedule calls for Western Game show events on Friday beginning at 7 p.m., with 15 classes; Western Pleasure horse show on Saturday beginning at 1 p.m., with 21 classes; and Hunter and Driving show on Sunday beginning at 10 a.m., with 25 classes.

Rob Clemmons will serve as referee for the Friday schedule. Saturday's program will have Rossie Rhompson as ringmaster, with Jimmy Johnson as judge. On Sunday, the judge will be Jimmy Wofford.

The horse show location is Hugh MacRae Park on N.C. 132, near its intersection with Oleander Drive.

Other facets of the four-day Azalea Festival are visits to parks and gardens to see azaleas in bloom, the big parade with local, state and area entrants, arts shows along the waterfront, guided tours of historic houses and sites, and other events.

Two Films On Festival To Be Shown

WILMINGTON — The New Hanover County Museum of the Lower Cape Fear will show two vintage Azalea Festival films during this year's festival. The films are free and will be shown Friday through Sunday at 2:30, 3:30 and 4:30 p.m. at the museum. The films are free and open to the public.

"A Million Azaleas," shows the first festival in 1948. This 15 minute color film is narrated by Ted Malone who brought his national radio show to Wilmington for the festival.

Other first-festival highlights captured on film include Jacqueline White, the Azalea Queen, the original Azalea Festival Parade and Mutual Broadcasting's "Queen for a Day."

"A Festival of Azaleas," a 14 minute color film, covers the sixth festival in 1953. The film shows how the festival had evolved and includes footage of the PGA Golf Tournament, a rodeo, craft show and harness racing as well as the traditional parade.

REHASHED TRASH

CROSSETT, Ark. (AP) — About 22 million tons of wastepaper were collected in 1986 for recycling, compared with 19.8 million tons gathered the year before, according to Georgia-Pacific Corp.

Thirty percent of the newspapers distributed in the U.S., 45 percent of the discarded corrugated boxes and 20 percent of office wastepaper were recycled last year and used primarily as packaging.

Novelist Hawkins Writes About Vietnam

By ANDREA LANE
A Press Syndicate
Book Media Service Release

Most young men nearing high school graduation in the early 1970s were devising ways to avoid the draft, but not Jack Hawkins. As soon as he got his diploma, he headed straight for the nearest Army recruiter to enlist. "A cousin of mine returned from duty in Vietnam and wouldn't talk about it. We had been real close before he left, and I wanted to know what silenced him," the author explains. Hawkins has since written numerous articles and 20 novels, published under four different pseudonyms, about his experiences in the Vietnam War. A film based on one of his novels will be released this spring.

His latest book, "Blood Trails" (Ballantine/Ivy Books, $3.95), is the first in a new fiction series, "Chopper 1," about the adventures of the Army's First Air Cavalry Division in Vietnam, a fierce unit of helicopter gunship soldiers to which Hawkins' cousin belonged.

"My characters run the gamut of beliefs and attitudes towards the Army and the war," Hawkins notes. "I try to leave my own political philosophies out of it and concentrate on developing characters with many different viewpoints and from many walks of life, including some from behind enemy lines.

"The success of Rambo-type movies undoubtedly has created the current swell of interest in Vietnam, but Hollywood is glorifying the War," Hawkins continues. "Adventure novels tend to paint a more balanced picture. In my novels at least, one or two of the good guys always gets blown away. One little slug of lead will knock you off your feet no matter who you are."

Hawkins served in South Vietnam's Military Region III and other duty stations in Southeast Asia from 1972 until the fall of Saigon in 1975. He was promoted to the rank of sergeant at age 19 and awarded the Bronze Star Medal and the Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry.

Like many GIs, he opposed what at the time he considered "our abandonment of South Vietnam to the Communists." In protest, Hawkins declined a promotion to warrant officer that would have meant a guaranteed three-year tour of duty in Honolulu and left the Army. "Since then," he says, "I've come to realize there was a lot of corruption and that the people who really needed aid were not getting it anyway."

After a brief stint in Bangkok and Thailand as a private investigator, Hawkins returned home to Colorado, where he entered law enforcement. While at a routine case hearing in Denver, he recognized a Vietnamese interpreter as the daughter of a printer whose home he had often visited in Vietnam to pick up various government forms.

"In Vietnam, though, it wasn't customary for a young woman to speak to a foreigner," the author recounts, "so I would flirt and get ignored." The same printer's daughter and court interpreter is now his wife. "She didn't remember me," he says, "But she fell for the old line, 'Do you want to come back to my apartment and see my scrapbook from Vietnam?'"

After six years in police work, Hawkins became "disenchanted" with the American judicial system and besides, he says, "after Vietnam, Denver was rather boring."

So he returned to Southeast Asia as a foreign correspondent for the Denver Post, covering the plight of Vietnamese refugees in Indochina and the continued fighting along the Thai-Lao and Thai-Cambodia borders. Then several exploitive incidents by American and European newsmen turned him against journalism as a career.

Once again stateside, Hawkins settled with his wife in Little Saigon in Orange County, Calif., the largest resettlement of Vietnamese in the United States. Since then he has concentrated on writing.

Hawkins first began writing fiction in 1979 while he was still in police work. "I saw the movie "The Deerhunter," and I said 'I can do that.' Vietnam is the only topic that interests me," he adds. "I write about it partly from the urge to be a storyteller and partly as a spokesperson for all the vets who, for one reason or another, can't write about their own experiences."

Student Art Show

ECU News Bureau

Pieces of jewelry and other items designed and handcrafted by Kendall Lee Crafford of Winston-Salem, senior student in the East Carolina University School of Art, will be on display today through Saturday in the upper level display cases in Mendenhall Student Center.

The exhibition includes neck pieces, bracelets, brooches, earrings and rings, along with several metal wallhangings, metal bowls and picture frames fashioned from silver, gold, copper, brass, enamelwork, cut stones and clay.

Miss Kendall is a candidate for the Bachelor of Arts degree in metal design and a member of Craftsmen East, an ECU art students' group. She is currently working for a local jeweler to gain experience in the retail jewelry field and plans to pursue a career in this area upon graduation.

To Award Schweitzer Medals

WILMINGTON — Events at St. Mary's Catholic Church in Wilmington on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday bring together Broadway legend Mary Martin, Oscar winner, best actor for "Amadeus" F. Murray Abraham, television newsman Frank Blair, and pioneer woman attorney Kathrine R. Everett of Durham to receive the Albert Schweitzer Medal of Artistry.

Also being honored posthumously is Paul Green, North Carolina playwright, whose grandson concert pianist Frederick Moyer will perform and accept the medal on his behalf. Young concert pianist Laura Melton, a Wilmington native, will also perform.

In addition to the six receiving Schweitzer Medals, Jim Brown of NBC's "Today" show will serve as master of ceremonies. Giving encore recitals at the 1987 Schweitzer Medals for Artistry Concerts are the 1986 Medal winners, pianist and piano teacher Mary Eunice Troy of Wilmington and violinist Nicholas Kitchen of Durham.

Proceeds from the benefit concerts help to fund the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes, awarded every four years on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

The prizes recognize contributions in music, medicine and the humanities, three areas in which Schweitzer excelled. Prior prize recipients include Mother Teresa, later a Nobel Laureate, Andres Segovia, and Gian Carlo Minotti.

The three days of concerts are reminiscent of the Salzburg, Austria, Music Festivals. St. Mary's Catholic Church, a Spanish Renaissance-style structure designed by Rafael Guastavino, Sr. in 1908, will be illuminated with state-of-the-art lighting equipment provided by the De Laurentiis Entertainment Group Film Studios Inc. of Wilmington. Hundred of candles amidst a garden of spring flowers will complete the setting.

Following their performances, each artist will receive the Albert Schweitzer Medal for Artistry. The medals are cast by Stephen LeQuire, associate professor of art at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, based on a design by Mrs. Susan Lee.

Medal winners will be on the campus of UNCW on Tuesday, to meet with students and at 11:30 a.m. Wednesday, to take part in tree planting ceremonies in front of Randall Library. The tree planting ceremonies have become a tradition during the Schweitzer Medals festivities. Mary Martin will give a special presentation at 4 p.m. Tuesday afternoon at Kenan Auditorium on the campus. Admission is $10.

Tickets for the dress rehearsal 8 p.m. Monday and for Scroll Night Tuesday are available at the Azalea Festival Ticket Office in Long Leaf Mall. All dress rehearsal tickets are $10 with seating on a first-come, first-served basis.

On Scroll Night medal recipients will be presented scrolls in calligraphy outlining why they were selected for the medals. All general admission tickets are $20 each. There will be no reservations and seating will be available on a first come, first served basis.

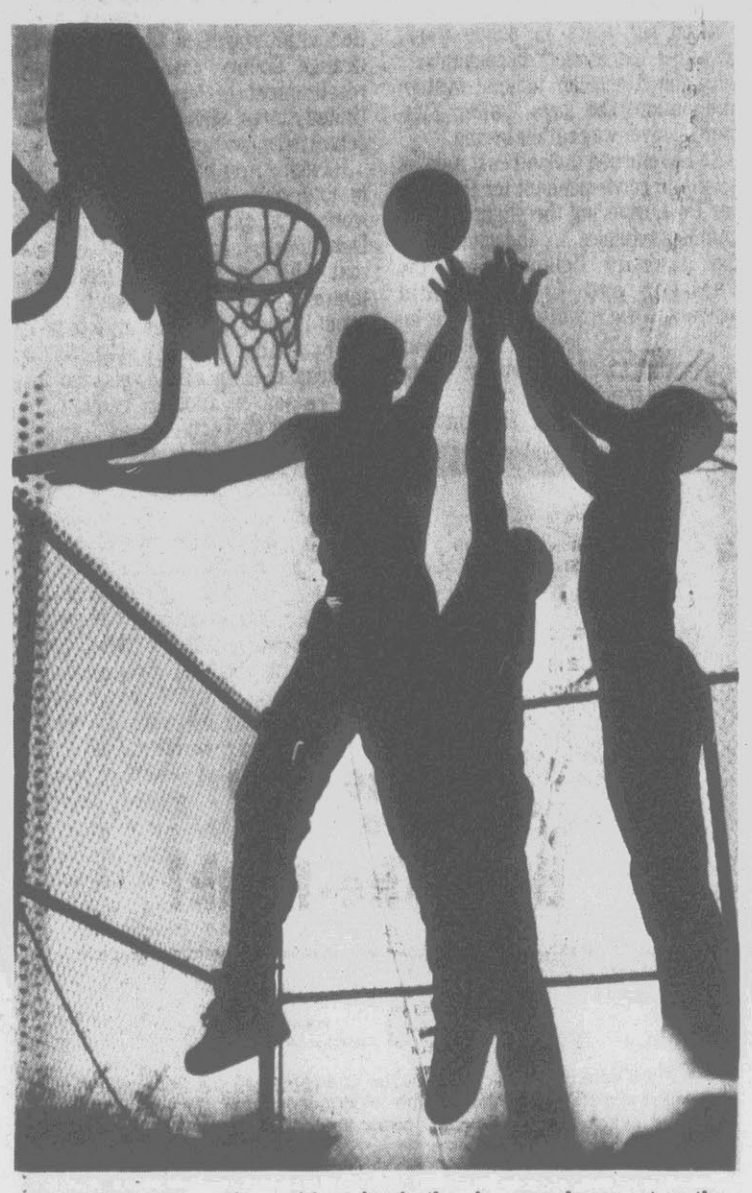
First Effort — 'A Fair Novel That Might Have Been Great'



UP IN THE AIR — Along with spring in the air comes hoops out on the basketball court. Three young men in Asheville try their luck recently in the setting early spring sun. (AP Laserphoto by Dan Maxhimer, Asheville Citizen)

HOME FIRES BURNING. By Robert Inman. Little, Brown and Company, 1987. 392 pages, $17.95.

"Home Fires Burning" is a first novel by Tar Heel Robert Inman of Charlotte, a newscaster for television station WKBTV.

At 390 pages, it is a fair novel. At 250 pages, it might have been great.

Inman's first novel is the story of Jake Tibbetts, editor of a small town's only newspaper, and of Jake's friend, Mayor Roth Benefield.

It's also the story of their families: of Jake's alcoholic son, Henry, who finds and loses himself at the Battle of the Bulge, and of Henry's son, Lonnie, who "lives" in the safety and clarity of the distant past. Of Roth's son, Billy — a fighter pilot (and future mayor) so desperately in lust he risks his military career to buzz his lover's house and, in the process, terrorizes the town, trashes Biscuit Brunson's cafe, and single-handedly gives new meaning to the term cockpit.

The first half of this novel is fast-paced and well balanced, full of rapid-fire changes in perspective and clear-cut action and humor. The descriptions are sensuous; the transitions are smooth.

Inman's picture of a small southern town helplessly waiting its way through World War II is sharp, clear and full of life. The tension between the town's boundless generosity and unflinching narrowness is superbly drawn, and the blanketing sense of its continuity is perfectly layered.

But somewhere, something goes wrong.

Inman stops trusting his characters to tell their own stories, and stops trusting his readers to reach their own conclusions.

The result is a drawn-out sermon full of maddening repetition, and a plot that relies on convenience rather than believability.

For instance, the fact that both Henry and Billy are missing in action and presumed to be dead is believable. But the fact that both survive against incredible odds, apparently for the sole purpose of contrasting Jake's and Roth's reactions, is too convenient to be trusted.

The fact that Jake — a "sawed-off tornado" full of anger and fear — has a stroke is believable. The fact that his father's ghost visits him to sort through the details of Jake's life is disasterously convenient, totally unbelievable, and grossly unfair to character, author and reader.

Smaller details repeat the theme: Henry goes to war an alcoholic; both Henry and Billy return alcoholics. Henry secretly marries; Billy secretly marries. Henry doesn't want to come home; Billy doesn't want to come home. Jake has a stroke; Roth is building to one and knows it.

In his determination to contrast Jake and Roth through convenience and circumstance and to explain (and re-explain) Jake's search for himself, Inman loses most of the characters he so convincingly creates early in the book. They simply fade from the pages, and that's a loss for both the book and the reader — they were characters worth knowing with stories worth telling.

If you have a chance to borrow this book, borrow it and read it for the many things in it that are good. But for the price of the book, invest in a couple of paperbacks and a library card.

And watch for Inman's second novel. He's a good writer, and one day he's going to listen to what his newspaperman, Jake, is saying: Most of the business of writing involves having something worth saying, and the rest depends on saying it simply.

When that happens, Inman is going to be great.

SHEILA TURNAGE

(Editor's Note: Miss Turnage is a member of the Greenville Writers Club, the author of "Trout, The Magnificant," published by Harcourt, Brace and Jovanovich. She is the award-winning author of short stories, has written one-act plays and non-fiction articles.)

NEW YORK (AP) — With a chorus of "There's No Business Like Show Business," Mary Tyler Moore, Lynn Redgrave and the rest of the cast of the Broadway comedy "Sweet Sue" moved across the street to the show's new home.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By SUSANNE HUX LONG

Among the best in non-fiction published recently for children is a thin volume distinguished in both text and illustration. Events surrounding the hatching of a whooping crane egg provide focus for a surprisingly suspenseful story, "Peeping in the Shell" by Faith McNulty.

Beginning on the June morning when ornitholgoist George Archibald invited his writer friend to share his excitement at an impending hatching, McNulty's resultant account of the experience is fascinating.

Children will marvel at the author's detailed moment-by-moment description of a tiny chick's struggle to enter the world — not a simple feat. From the earliest "peeping," when Archibald can hold the egg before a light to see only an outline of the chick's form, to the moment when the yolk is absorbed and the chick becomes an independent being, McNulty invites readers to share in the miracle she witnesses and to acknowledge the complexity of nature which the event recalls.

An enlightening opening chapter describes the whooping crane in its natural environment, problems it encounters with survival, and man's efforts to remove the bird from the list of endangered species.

The story of George Archibald's unusual friendship with Tex, the female crane responsible for producing the eggs, is moving and amusing. This book is both educational and fun to read — a worthwhile way to spend a spring afternoon.

'Lesser God' Opens At ECU April 13

ECU News Bureau

A production of 'Children of a Lesser God' will end the 1986-87 season of the East Carolina University Playhouse with nightly performances scheduled for April 13-16 at 8:15 p.m. at McGinnis Theatre.

The Mark Medoff play is set in a school for the deaf where a teacher, James Leeds, is struggling to instruct the deaf students in speech. One student, Sarah Norman, refuses to be taught, insisting that others speak her language — signing.

During the course of the play, the audience is taken inside the world of the deaf to understand the artful communication — and frustration — of those who cannot hear. When James tries to help bridge the chasm between Sarah and the hearing world, sparks fly between the two.

Playhouse general manager Gary Faircloth noted that the ECU theatre arts department combined with the ECU Program for the Hearing-Impaired to present the play as the "absorbing and interesting play it was meant to be" and to reach both hearing and hearing-impaired audiences.

"This union and director Don Biehn's direct approach to staging the play — similar to that of the original stage version — have been combined to overcome negative reaction to the 'Hollywooded' movie verson of the play, which is geared more toward a hearing audience," he explained.

To enable deaf persons to order tickets to performances of 'Children of a Lesser God' a voice/TDD device will be used in the box office. Also, two sign language interpreters will be part of the cast at each performance to communicate spoken dialogue.

Tickets are $5, and $3 for persons in groups of 10 or more. The box office is located in the Messick Theatre Arts Center, corner of East Fifth and Eastern Streets and is open each weekday from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. Telephone 757-6390. Hours are extended until curtain time on performance dates.

Dance Arts Program

Dance Arts Theatre opens its spring season with an evening of dance with the company's featured performance, "Peter and the Wolf," choreographed by David Wanstreet. Also premiering will be works by Patti Weeks in a modern selection, "Labyrinth"; "Ballerinas"; choregraphed by Sherryl Mercer, and "An Understudy," choreographed by Lynette Johnson and Sherryl Mercer.

Performances are scheduled for Thursday, Friday and Saturday at D.H. Conley High School. Evening performances will be at 7:30 p.m. with a Saturday matinee at 3 p.m.

For ticket information call the Dance Arts Theatre's box office 355-2140 between 11 a.m. and 6 p.m.

The performances encompass character ballet, modern, and jazz types of dance.

"Peter and the Wolf" is a ballet for children and adults. It is a narrated story about Peter, his friends, the bird and cat and their adventure with a wolf. Each character is represented by a musical instrument. For each of these characters and instruments there is a special musical theme that is theirs alone.

Performers are all members of Dance Art Theatre, which was founded by Sherryl Mercer in 1985 as a non-profit dance company.

The faculty of Dance Arts Theatre are Sherryl Mercer, Lynette Johnson, Kim Warlick, Pat Pertallion, and Daune Mills.

The N.C. Academy of Dance Arts in Greenville is the official school of the Dance Arts Theatre.

This evening of dance program is an intregal part of the Eastern Carolina Arts Festival.

St. Andrews Drama Program

LAURINBURG — Two plays will kick off the spring-summer season at St. Andrews Presbyterian College in Laurinburg.

On Thursday, the play is "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead," to be followed on Saturday by "Thriller of the Year." Performances will be in the L.A. Auditorium.

Stoppard's "Rosencrantz" features two players and will be performed also on Friday and again on April 23 at 8 p.m. with a matinee performance at 2 p.m. April 25.

"Thriller," with an all-female cast, will have an 8 p.m. curtain Saturday with additional performances on April 22 and 24. Two special performances will be held, one at the Weymouth House in Southern Pines on Friday; the other, a 5:30 p.m. dinner theater production on April 25 at the Flora Macdonald Academy in Red Springs.

For more details, call 276-3652, extension 258.

Carol Greene Student Recital

E. Carol Greene of Roxboro, a student in the School of Music, East Carolina University and a student of Miss Antonia Dalapas, will present her senior voice recital at 7 p.m. Friday in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall on the ECU campus.

The recital is free and open to the public.

She will be accompanied by Mark Gansor and Anne Jernigan.

The accompanying role by Miss Jernigan will constitute a half recital in piano.

For her program, Miss Greene has chosen three songs by Grieg; "Five Poems by Max Jacob" set to music by Poulence; Massanet's aria, "Je Suis Encore Tout Etourdie" from "Manon," and three "Hermit Songs" by Barber.

'Parsifal' Airs On Saturday

NEW BERN — Richard Wagner's final opera, "Parsifal," will be broadcast live from the Metropolitan Opera on Saturday, beginning at 12:30 p.m. over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network.

It will be heard locally over radio stations WTEB — New Bern and WRRF, Washington, N.C.

Tatiana Troyanos will be heard as Kundry, with Timothy Jenkins in the title role. Other cast members are Simon Estes as Amfortas, Hans Sotin as Gurnemanz, and Donald McIntyre as Klingsor.

James Levine will conduct the Metropolitan Opera orchestra.

Superior Ratings For School Bands

For the fourth consecutive year the J.H. Rose Symphonic Band has received a "Superior" rating at the North Carolina Music Educators Band Contest/Festival. This is the highest rating awarded to bands in the state.

The band also received a "Superior" rating in the sightreading portion for the fourth year in a row.

Rose was performing Grade VII music for the festival. This is the highest degree of difficulty that a high school band can compete in.

The band performed "Strategic Air Command," by Clifton Williams; "An Original Suite," by Gordon Jacobs, and "Beowulf," by Frances McBeth.

This is also the fourth consecutive year the Greenville Elementary Band directed by Dottie Jo Knight, the E.B. Aycock Band directed by Bill Frazier, and the J.H. Rose Symphonic Band directed by Chuck Allen have received the "Superior" rating.

Dance Award Nominations End April 15

RALEIGH — April 15 is the mailing deadline to send in nominations for the North Carolina Dance Alliance Award. Nominations are to be sent to: Pat Pertalion, NCDA Secretry, Theater Arts Department, Messick Theater Arts Center, East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C., 27858.

Eligibility for the North Carolina Dance Alliance Award is open for any individual who has made a lasting contribution to the growth and development of the field of dance in North Carolina.

Nominations, which can be made by any interested North Carolina resident, whether he or she is connected with dance.

Nominations go through a preselection process, with the names of the final top three candidates to go to the NCDA executive committe for final selection of the recipient of the award.

Three Local Young Musicians Winners Of National Honors

ECU News Bureau

Three young people from Greenville, one a student at East Carolina University, the other two students in Greenville schools, are winners in a national competition sponsored by the Music Teachers National Association held in New York March 21-27. The competition was in the form of final auditions held at the Penta Hotel in New York City..

All three were previous winners in competitions at the state level and later at the regional level in Louisville, Ky.

• Daniel Roger Davis, a junior in the ECU School of Music, won first place honors nationwide in the percussion division of the Wurlitzer Collegiate Artist Competition.

Davis, son of Mr. and Mrs. A.L. Davis Sr. of Lexington, studies percussion with Professor Harold A. Jones at ECU. During his 45-minute performance, Davis played J.S. Bach's "Sonata in B Minor"; selections from Tchaikovsky's "Album for the Young"; "Two Movements for Marimba" by Tanaka; the "Concert for Percussion," by Darius Milhaud and selections from "Eight Pieces for Tampani" by Carter.

Along with first place winners in the other six collegiate categories, Davis was presented in recital for a general assembly of the convention on March 24.

Judges for the Wurlitzer Collegiate Artist Competition were Brad Alexander, Aaron Copeland School of Music; Howard van Hyning, Mannes College of Music, and John Leister, Stamford Symphony Orchestra.

• Winners of second place honors nationally in high school and junior high school auditions in the strings category were, respectively, sisters Jennifer Lucht, a student at Rose High, and Shelley Lucht, a student at E.B. Aycock Junior High. The two are daughters of Dr. and Mrs. Richard Lucht of Greenville.

Jennifer is a cello student of ECU professor Selma Gokcen. In New York, she competed in the high school strings category and was accompanied by Dr. Jean Barr, official accompanist for that division.

She also performed in the string quartet featured in a session presented by Luca Di Cecco, cellist and director of the Garth Newek Music Center, Hot Springs, Va. On April 26, she will be soloist with the Winston-Salem Symphony as a winner in the orchestra's statewide talent search.

Shelley studies violin with Joanne Bath. She competed in the Selmer Junior High School instrumental auditions. For her New York performance, she was accompanied by John O'Brien and Richard Lucht, both of the ECU keyboard faculty. O'Brien was official accompanist for all divisions of the junior high auditions. Shelley has been selected for the All-State Symphonic Band.

Judges for the string auditions were Paul Doktor, Julliard School of Music; William Harry, Mannes College of Music, and Michael Rudiakov and Rachmael Weinstock, Manhattan School of Music.

Taggart Work Honors Carter

A new composition by Mark Alan Taggart of the East Carolina University School of Music faculty will be premiered by the ECU Symphonic Wind Ensemble in its April 12 concert, with the composer conducting the premiere.

The concert is free and open to the public.

The work, titled "Angels and Edges," is dedicated to the director of the Wind Ensemble, Herbert L. Carter, "in recognition and appreciation of his tenure as professor of music at East Carolina University, and to the ECU Wind Ensemble."

Carter has announced his plans to retire at the end of this academic year.

He joined the East Carolina music faculty in 1946, will conduct the works other than the premiere piece on the April 12 program, scheduled for 8:15 in Wright Auditorium.

He is chairman of the Instrumental Department of the School of Music and director of bands. He has served as president of the College Band Director National Association, Southern Division, and the North Carolina Bandmaster's Associatoin.

In 1975 he was selected as one of the ten most outstanding music directors in the United States by School Musician Magazine. He is in demand as a clinician in many states and has been adjudicator for numerous music festivals throughout the United States and Mexico.

WILSON CONCERT — Songwriter/storyteller/musician Mike Cross will be in concert at 8 p.m. April 16 at the High school auditorium in Wilson. Tickets for the show are $8 and can be purchased at the Wilson Arts Council, 205 Gray Street, Wilson, N.C., 27893, telephone 291-4329. Tickets at the door, if available, will be $10. Cross' concert is sponsored by the Arts Council of Wilson and is part of a week-long Storytelling Festival being presented by the Wilson County Technical College.

Concert Choir In Thursday Performance

The Concert Choir of East Carolina University, under the direction of Dr. Brett Watson of the ECU School of Music faculty, will perform in concert at 8:15 p.m. Thursday in Wright Auditorium.

The concert is free and open to the public.

This concert is one of several in a series the group has perfomed recently in preparation for their third West Coast tour, scheduled to take place in the month of May.

Thursday evening's program will be a varied one, including early works by composers Josquin des Prez and Giovanni Gabrieli as well as contemporary settings of folk songs of the British Isles arranged by Shaw-Parker, and John Chorbajian's "Three Poems from 'A Shropshire Lad'" set to the poetry of A.E. Housman.

Flute Concert

The East Carolina University Flute Ensemble, directed by Thomas Mease, a graduate teaching assistant in the ECU School of Music, will be in concert at 8:30 p.m. Monday in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall on campus.

The concert is free and open to the public on a first-come, first-seated basis.

The program will open with a performance of J.S. Bach's "Bourree," arranged by Amy Rice-Young, to be followed by "Konzert No. 3" by Joseph Bodin de Boismortier, another 18th century composer. The piece is in three movements.

The third selection on the program is by Antoine Reicha (1770-1836), the "Sinfonico Flute Quartette, Opus 12" in four movements.

Contemporary composers will be featured in the last three compositions to be played. One is Pierre Max Dubois' "Quatuor" in four parts. Dubois was born in 1930. The concluding two works — "Baby Elephant Walk" and "The Pink Panther Suite" are by Henry Mancini, arranged by Amy Rice-Young.

The flute ensemble is comprised of 14 performers, eight flute players — Mimi Brooker, Cathy Callo, Susan Cooperman, Amanda Goodwin, Amy Hazard, Thomas Mease, Kate Mohler and April Ridgely; Joanne Brandt, flue and piccolo; Jennifer Brown, alto flute; Chris Moore, percussion; Amy Norfleet, bass flute; Michele Roelofs, flute and alto flute, and Vince Stout, string bass.

Composers Concert April 12 At GMA

WINSTON-SALEM — The North Carolna Composers Alliance will present its third annual series of concerts of chamber music by North Carolina composers this spring. This year the series will encompass six concerts in six cities across the state.

The first of the concerts is being presented at 3 p.m. today at the Fayetteville Museum of Art, Fayetteville.

The second concert will be at 3 p.m. April 12 at the Greenville Museum of Art, 806 S. Evans St.

The concerts, all in conjunction with art museums, will encompass a wide variety of chamber music styles and performances by some of the leading musicians in North Carolina.

The Greenville "Here and Now" concert will feature instrumental ensembles to include compositions for duo guitars.

At this April 12 event, composers to be featured in Greenville, their compositions and performers are:

Joseph Hoey and Brian Morris have been performing as duo-guitarists since 1985. Both are visiting artists in community colleges, Hoey in Goldsboro and Morris in Kenansville.

Deborah Chodacki and Donna Coleman are faculty members of the school of music, East Carolina University, and Robert O'Brien is a gradate student at ECU.

All the concerts are free and open to the public. After the music, those attending are invited to talk with the composers and the musicians who will be performing the works.

In addition to the first two concerts in Fayetteville and Greenville, other concerts will be presented at St. John's Museum of Art, May 3; the Mint Museum, Charlotte, May 3; Reynolds House Museum of American Art, Winston-Salem, May 17, and the North Carolina Museum of Art, Raleigh, May 31.

Trombone Concert Set

The East Carolina University Trombone Ensemble, directed by George L. Broussard, ECU faculty member, and assisted by Alan Atkinson, a gradaute teaching assistant, will be in concert at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall.

The program is free and open to the public on a first-come, first-served basis.

Compositions listed on the program are two by J.S. Bach, "Chorale: Herzlich thut mich verlangen" and "Contrapunctus I" from the "Art of Fugue," the latter arranged by Smith; Haydn's "Achieved is the Glorious Work"; the allegro energico movement from Brahms' "Symphony No. 4" arranged by Broussard, and scene four from the second act of Wagner's "Die Walkure," arranged by King.

Following an intermission, an arrangement by ECU student Steve Turner of Gabrieli's "Canzon septimi toni No. 2" from the "Sacrae Symphoniae" will be performed. This will be followed by three works — the Smith arrangement of Mendelssohn's "Equale No. 3"; the adagio from "Symphony No. 3" by Camille Saint-Saens, arranged by Murley; "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" arranged by Wagner, and the Lieb arrangment of Hoagy Carmichael's "Star Dust."

Jazz Ensemble Concert At Wright Auditoriuim

The East Carolina University Jazz Ensemble will present its annual spring concert at 8:15 tonight in Wright Auditorium on the ECU campus.

The concert is free and open to the public.

The student ensemble, under the direction of professor George Brousssard, will spotlight the music of such diverse composer/arrangers as George Gershiwn, Horace Silver, Sonny Rollins, Lyle Mays, Sammy Nestico, Mark Taylor, Rob McConnell, and ECU alumnus Loonis McGlohon.

Vocalist Carol Bailey will be featured on Jimmy Van Heusen's classic "Here's That Rainy Day."

In addition, trumpeters Vic Riddick and Rich Edwards, trombonists Mike Pollard and Ledford Wilson, saxophonist Denise D'Addio, Mike Canelle, Kathleen Reed and Amy Miskavage, and guitarist Drew Lile will be featured performers.

Other performers to be featured in the concert are percussionists Dan Davis and Chris Moore and French horn students Stuart Watkins and Kim Dosher, who will bring added orchestra color the the ensemble.

Joint Recital Scheduled

A joint recital by two students in the School of Music, East Carolina University, will be presented at 9 p.m. Friday in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall on campus.

The recital will be held in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall on campus. It is free and open to the public.

• Lois Carol Hawkins, mezzo soprano of Wilson, a student of Gladys White, will present her junior voice recital; and Catherine White of Greenville, a student of Dr. Paul Tardif, will present her senior piano recital.

For her part of the joint program, Miss Hawkins will sing songs by Giussepe Sarti, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, Franz Schubert, Claude Debussy and Camille Saint-Saens. She will also sing varied English song selections.

She will be accompanied by Mark Gansor, piano.

• Miss White, a pianist, will play five works by composers Haydn, Debussy and Brahms.

Symphonic Band To Be In Performance Today

The East Carolina University Symphonic Band, directed by Thomas W. Goolsby, will be in concert at 3:15 this afternoon in Wright Auditorium on the ECU campus.

The concert is free and open to the public.

The 40 plus band will perform music by six composers, including a composition by a professor on the faculty of the ECU School of Music.

The program will open with the "Washington Post March" by John Philip Sousa, and will continue with five songs from Norman Dello Joio's scenes from "The Louvre" and two pieces Billings/Schuman pieces. The two are "When Jesus Wept" a prelude for band and "Chester," an overture for band, both from the "New England Triptych."

The next composer represented on the program is ECU professor James Parnell. The band will play his composition, "Arlington, 1963."

The two final selections to be performed on the Symphonic Band program are Robert E. Jager's "Third Suite" consisting of March, Waltz and Rondo, and "March, Opus 99" by Sergei Prokofief.

Immortal Showboat Spectacular

WILMINGTON — One of the highlights of Wilmington's 1987 Azalea Festival will be two special presentations of the USS North Carolina Battleship Memorial's Sound and Light Spectacular, "The Immortal Showboat."

This 70-minute drama which tells the battleship's history through voice, music, sound effects and lights, will be presented on Friday and Saturday nights at 9 p.m.

"The Immortal Showboat's" story begins with the ship's construction at New York Navy Yard in 1937 and continues through her participation in all 12 major naval campaigns in the Pacific Ocean during World War II. The principal characters in this outdoor drama are two sailors from North Carolina and one from Texas. Through the voices of Walter Abel, Alexander Scourby, 18 actors and such world leaders as President Franklin D. Roosevelt, President Harry S. Truman, Winston Churchill and Adolf Hitler, realism is brought to this presentation.

Spectators sit in a 1,000-seat grandstand just across from the ship's port bow. During the show, over 400 lights of varying color and intensity create the USS North Carolina's many moods.

Admission fees to the Sound and Light Spectacular are $3 for those age 12 and over, and $2 for children ages 6-11. Groups of 20 or more persons will receive a 10 percent discount on admission fees.

Admission fees to the battleship are $4 for adults (ages 12 and over) and $2 for children (ages 6-11).

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY April 5

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You can sleep late today as long as you don't have other obligations or studies to attend to. Be very objective about whatever comes up to test you.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): You can have a fine time at home today if you are more thoughtful of your family. Keep a cheerful manner.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Whatever may arise today requires good common sense. Try not to say anything that will disturb your mate.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Any outside activities are apt to bring some criticism to you, but take this in your stride and profit from it.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Try not to get into confining work today. Discuss the future with some friends, even if by telephone.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Concentrate on the highest concepts possible. Be with the person you love the most instead of casual friends.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Concentrate on how best to gain your personal aims. Make plans to see your friends only in the daytime.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): It's not a good day for serious study. Be on the alert for some good opportunities to get ahead.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Get into more modern philosophies if you want to accomplish more. Steer clear of a financial discussion.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Study ways for operating on a more practical level. Spend no time with grouchy friends.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Don't argue with one who is close to you and your mate. Contact outsiders and learn from them.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Although you usually see pals over the weekend, it is best to plan the coming week's activities instead.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Be with congenials today since you should not have any outside duties to perform. Be happy with your loved one.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she should be taught that it takes time for things to happen. A good family member here, but at the same time will like to have more action and get into public affairs. Be sure to give as fine an education as you can. There is bound to be travel in this lifetime.

"The Stars impel; they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

FORECAST FOR MONDAY April 6

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You will have considerable ingenuity and resourcefulness today. Use it to get out from under any problem facing you. Make progress in home interests and property matters.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Do whatever will most please your family. Wait until evening before you invite friends into your home.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Contact those with whom you have to decide important matters. State your terms, but listen to theirs too.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Get rid of an indebtedness and be free from worry. Use your own good judgment today.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You may find it difficult to get conditions set up as you want them, but persistence brings results.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Go after private aims wisely and they will be easy to attain. Gain your mate's devotion and be happier together.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Do not be depressed because a trusted friend is unable to help you work out a problem at this time.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Get into civic interests and show that you are an A-1 citizen. Show your gratitude to a bigwig if he helps you.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): A delay may occur in some course of action you have started, but this gives you a chance to make needed repairs.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Look into new outlets. Go after the data you need and put it to use. Be enthused and happy.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): If you want to have a better understanding with a nosey partner, be more willing to give explanations.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Study into regular activities and see how to become more efficient. Do something about a troublesome coworker.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): You have doubts about a pleasure you have planned, but as the day passes your enthusiasm returns.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will want everything in fine order and will work hard to attain this, so be encouraging in this so that your progeny will not get discouraged. Although one who will deliberate a good deal, the energy here is great. A most conscientious person in this chart.

"The Stars impel; they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♠

The most common form of suit-preference signal is to play a high card to ask for the higher suit or a low card for the lower suit. However, in some circumstances you can even signal in the suit you are leading. What the two signals have in common is that in each case there is a choice of only two suits.

The auction was routine. South's no trump opening bid meets every textbook requirement, and North has a little to spare for his jump to game.

West led his fourth-best spade. East's queen was allowed to win, and the spade return was won by West's jack as declarer again played low. Now the king of spades forced the ace.

The ten of clubs was run to East's king, and that defender was at the crossroads. If you look at the diagram you will see that if East returns a heart the contract will be defeated; if he shifts to a diamond, declarer will reel off the next eight tricks. Is it all a matter of guesswork?

Definitely not West has asked for a heart return! How? By his selection of the king of spades when he forced out declarer's stopper. At that point West had a choice of spades to return. The fact he selected his highest asked for the higher of the two crucial suits, hearts or diamonds (there was no way he could want a club); had he wanted a diamond, he would have led the four of spades on the third round.

There is a moral to this story. Don't play cards with reckless abandon. Every card can be used to tell partner something.

Discover the Island.

Located oceanside in popular Atlantic Beach — minutes from Morehead City and a broad selection of shops, restaurants and entertainment places — Island Beach & Racquet Club is a resort condominium complex that provides a seaside escape from the ordinary at an extraordinarily affordable price.

Discover the Value!

At Island Beach & Racquet Club, spacious, fully-furnished, 2 and 3-bedroom, 2½-bath condominiums start at just $74,900, with only $7,490 down and $448.48 per month,* and feature a wealth of luxurious amenities, such as: • A balcony off the master bedroom • A screened-in porch • Central heat and air • A wet bar • A modernly-equipped gourmet kitchen • 4 swimming pools • 6 professional quality tennis courts. Visit Island Beach & Racquet Club and discover one of the best resort condominium values in Atlantic Beach. Or, for more information, complete and mail the attached coupon, or call 247-2779. Long distance, in NC only, call 1-800-682-3702. Outside NC, call 1-800-334-3702. Rentals are available. Offer of sale void where prohibited.

*Typical transaction. Total price of $74,900 based on $7,490 down is a loan amount of $67,410. Years 1-3 or 36 mortgage payments are $448.48 each at a fixed interest rate of 7%. Years 4-15 or 144 mortgage payments are adjustable rate mortgage payments. For example: 8¼% simple interest rate for years 4-15 or 144 mortgage payments would be $525.35 each.

Based on the weekly average yield on U.S. Treasury securities adjusted to a constant maturity of one year, with a margin of 300 basis points to the borrower rounded to ⅛ of a point.

Payment at the end of 15 years (payment 180) is a balloon payment of $52,704.91. The APR is 8.38%. Initial rate (7%) is subject to increase. Summey pays all closing costs, except pre-paids. All payments include principal and interest.

"WE WANT OUR HOME TO IMPRESS SOME VERY IMPORTANT PEOPLE."

"US."

We know something about achievement. That's why we were impressed by the achievement that is Planter's Walk.

Just stand inside the custom decorated model, the view is breathtaking.

Cathedral ceilings, wet skylights, masonary fireplaces, groin ceiling, chairrail and more...

Airy and convenient kitchens, wood decks and custom landscaping...

This transitional architecture reflects the location, which is the finest in Greenville, next to the Brook Valley Country Club.

Treetops

A Neighborhood For All Seasons.

TREETOPS

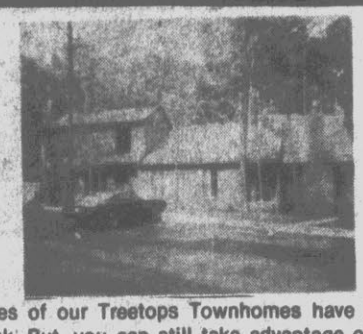
Treetops is a unique community of townhomes, condominium Villas and single family homes. It's rare in the Greenville area to find such prestigious and affordable new homes nestled in a quiet wooded setting. Plus this Spring and Summer enjoy the new swimming and tennis recreation center.

TREETOPS VILLAS

Villas are stylish and spacious new homes. The list of special features is impressive and makes owning your own Villa a pleasure. Also, with today's low interest rates and Villa prices from $45,900, you can't afford to rent these days! Builder pays up to 2½ points and $1,000 closing costs.

Priced From $45,900 To $46,500

TREETOPS TOWNHOMES



Sales of our Treetops Townhomes have been brisk. But, you can still take advantage of the award winning, two bedroom designs since more are under construction. Pre-sale prices are now in effect and the builder pays up to 2½ points and $1,000 towards closing costs. You better hurry - great deals like this don't last forever!

Priced From $58,900 To $66,900

TREETOPS SINGLE FAMILY HOMES

All prices include up to 2 points

All these new homes deliver the space and comfort of individual homes, but offer the convenience of townhome living...a nominal community service fee provides for lawn care and long term maintenance of your home. They're perfect for the busy professional or people who don't want the bother of yard work or tedious exterior maintenance. Sell your lawn mower and extension ladder and join us at Treetops.

Q What has happened to Audrey Hepburn? Is she finished as a screen star? Does she have a man in her life?—Lavinia G., Hartford, Conn.

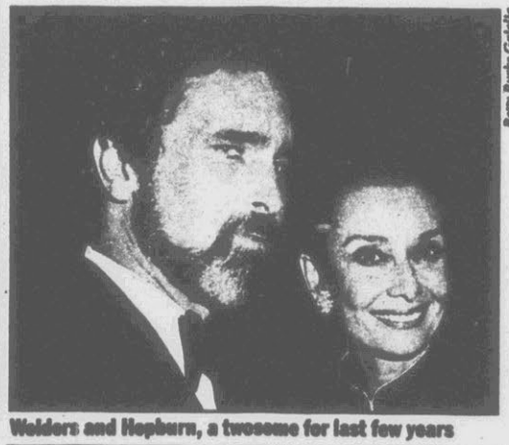
A Audrey Hepburn, 57, recently appeared in a forgettable TV movie, "Love Among Thieves," with Robert Wagner. She is neither the fragile beauty nor the actress-in-demand she was in the 1950s. To date, Hepburn has had two husbands: actor Mel Ferrer and Dr. Andrea Dotti, a psychiatrist. She has a son by each—Sean Ferrer, 27, and Luca Dotti, 17. At this writing, Hepburn lives in Switzerland, where she shares her life with Robert Wolders, the Dutch actor who was married in the 1970s to the late actress Merle Oberon.



Betty Burke Gabella

Wolders and Hepburn, a twosome for last few years

Q Of all the First Ladies in this century, did any have more clout, influence and power than Nancy Reagan?—Jim Elliott, Farmington, N.M.

A Probably the second Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, the former Edith Bolling Galt. After President Wilson suffered a stroke in October 1919, his wife virtually took over the executive branch until he left office in 1921. In her autobiography, "My Memoir," Mrs. Wilson wrote: "I studied every paper sent from the different Secretaries or Senators, and tried to digest and present in tabloid form the things that, despite my vigilance, had to go to the President. I, myself, never made a single decision regarding the disposition of public affairs. The only decision that was mine was what was important and what was not, and the very important decision of when to present matters to my husband."

Barbara: Frank's fourth

Q This concerns Frank Sinatra's fourth and present wife, Barbara. Which one of the Marx Brothers was she married to?—F.X.S., DuBois, Pa.

A The former Barbara Blakely was married to the late Herbert "Zeppo" Marx before becoming Mrs. Sinatra in 1976.

Q Did Clark Gable, the famous film star, have the gay director George Cukor removed from "Gone With the Wind" by producer David O. Selznick because Cukor knew of an affair between Gable and William Haines, the gay actor and interior decorator? I have read about this in several histories of the film business, including "Hollywood Babylon II," by Kenneth Anger. Is it unsubstantiated gossip or true?—G.Y., Key West, Fla.

A Supposedly George Cukor, one of Hollywood's greatest directors ("Dinner at Eight," "My Fair Lady," "Born Yesterday," "The Philadelphia Story," "The Women," "David Copperfield," "Little Women," "Adam's Rib"), was dismissed after directing a portion of "Gone With the Wind" because Clark Gable believed Cukor was basically a woman's director who would ignore him and concentrate on making Vivien Leigh look good. In the late years of his life, however, Cukor (1899-1983) reportedly told friends that in fact Gable had him replaced by director Victor Fleming because he (Cukor) knew about Gable's alleged relationship with William Haines, a homosexual actor at MGM. There are some people who claim to have heard Cukor's explanation. Whether it is a truthful one is open to question: All of the principals involved—Cukor, Gable, Haines, Leigh, Selznick and Fleming—are dead.

Q Is it true that writer Laurence Leamer, author of a biography of Ingrid Bergman titled "As Time Goes By," is now writing a biography of Johnny Carson? When is it scheduled for publication? —Georgia Wilson, Myrtle Beach, S.C.

A Leamer may be writing a biography of the 61-year-old comic, but Carson has no intention of granting him interview time. William Morrow & Co. reportedly is Leamer's publisher, but no publication date has been announced. If anyone comes up with a book on the inside story of Johnny Carson, undoubtedly it will be the comedian himself.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, who says the Teflon is cracking

Q Who is the Congresswoman who first referred to Ronald Reagan as "the Teflonized President," implying that none of his erroneous statements stuck to him? Is she Rep. Beverly Byron of Maryland? Please provide some background on her.—Paula Henry, Chicago, Ill.

A Rep. Patricia Schroeder (D., Colo.) generally is credited with the Teflon metaphor. Born in Portland, Ore., on July 30, 1940, she is a graduate (magna cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa) of the University of Minnesota. She married fellow law student James Schroeder in 1962, and two years later both obtained their degrees from Harvard Law School. They have a son, Scott, 20, a junior at Georgetown University; and a daughter, Jamie, 16, a high school student in Fairfax County, Va. Patricia Schroeder has served in Congress since 1973. She first referred to Mr. Reagan as "the Teflon President" on Aug. 2, 1983.

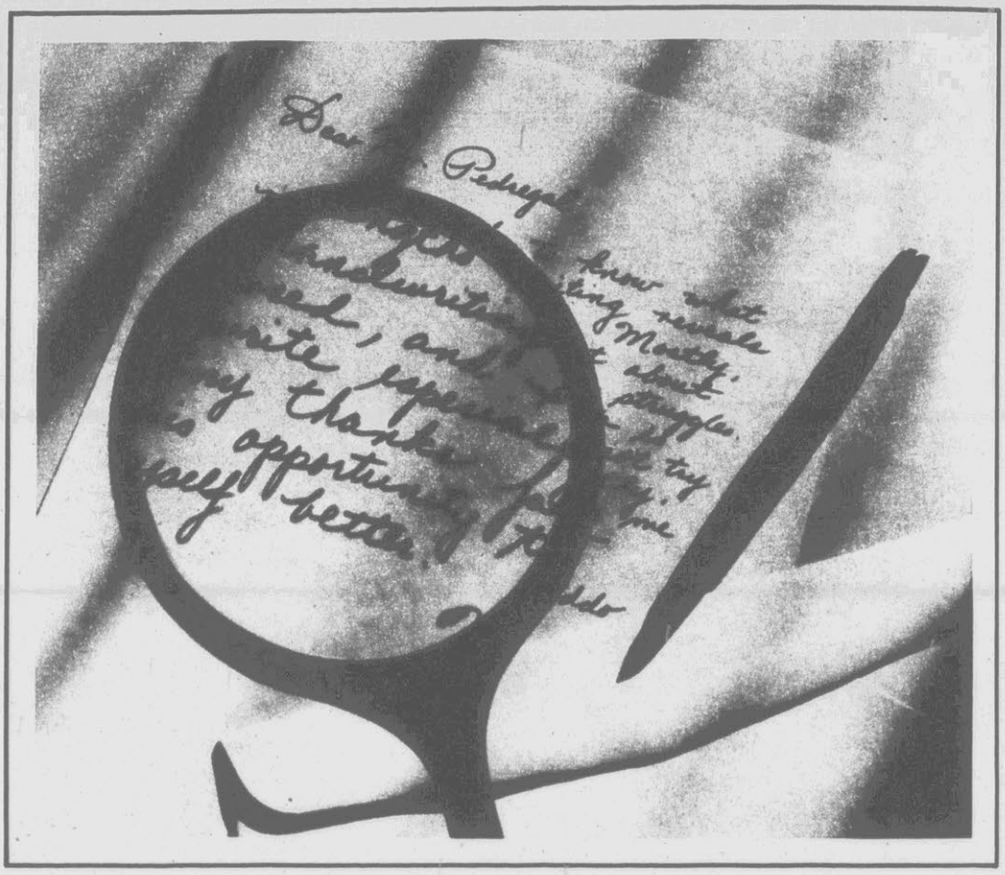
By J. J. Leonard



I seated myself in front of the round dining room table, shifted in the chair until I was quite comfortable, and prepared to copy out the paragraph on the sheet of blank paper in front of me. "Just think of this as a lark," I told myself as I began to scribble. "Just think of the stories you can dine out on when this guy's conclusions are all offbase."

I guess I'm a skeptic at heart. I make it a point not to trust in things like graphology. So I never expected anything to come of having my handwriting analyzed. A few laughs, maybe. But certainly nothing revealing. Nothing of consequence.

I was wrong.

I recognized the truth of most of graphologist Carlos Pedregal's assertions right away. But, when he announced that I was very decisive but often not patient enough, I was sure that I'd caught him in a mistake.

It took me a week to accept the fact that, as much as I didn't want to believe it, signs of my impatience stood out like highway markers in both my professional and personal life. I'd simply chosen to ignore them. I had to confess, Carlos Pedregal knew me—or at least certain aspects of my personality—better than I knew myself.

Had I known more about graphology at the time, I might not have been so surprised. Graphology operates on the same principle as, for example, the Rorschach psychological tests. In putting words on a piece of paper or interpreting inkblots—a person projects her unconscious personality. Where the writer chooses to first place her pen on the page indicates how she situates herself in relation to family and society. The shape and length of the lines reveal other personality traits.

From there the analysis narrows down to looking at specific letters—their size, shape, slant, and how they're grouped. Even the choice of writing implement, the pressure applied and legibility are considered. And of course, the signature is studied—the individual's personal creation that no parent or teacher has had a hand in transforming. "One characteristic, in isolation shows nothing," says Pedregal. "The conjunction of everything is used to analyze a person's handwriting."

In all, a graphologist examines over 300 aspects of a person's script. The result? "Your handwriting will tell an expert things that your best friend or mate wouldn't know after a full 10 years," says Pedregal. Not surprisingly, a handwriting analysis can often provide new insights into yourself, your relationships and your life as well.

Take Mike and Susan (not their real names) as an example. The couple decided they would both have their handwriting analyzed. For the most part, husband and wife were pleased with the results. Each, however, adamantly disagreed with one of the characteristics listed in their respective analyses. Mike's handwriting had revealed that he placed too much importance on himself and his family. "The rest of the world can die so long as we're okay," was the attitude that came through. Though Mike denied that this was true, his wife felt that the analysis was right on target.

Interestingly, Susan's point of contention was about a characteristic that was in direct opposition to the quality Mike had argued about. Her script showed a tendency to put other people's needs first, before her own or her family's, something which Mike had accused her of time and time again. "You don't care enough about our kids," he'd tell her. "You're always taking care of all the other kids in the neighborhood."

The conflicting reactions sparked numerous discussions between the two. Finally, Mike and Susan realized that they—and not the graphologist—were mistaken. Their opposing personality traits had blinded them to each other and fueled their conflict. That awareness allowed them to look at the situation from a new angle and put it in perspective.

Graphology can also reveal character traits that people who've been close most of their lives aren't aware of. For years the 65-year-old Canadian had felt that his five children didn't know who he really was. When he received his handwriting analysis he felt it was so accurate that he ended up mailing a copy to each of his now-adult kids. "For the first time, I felt that somebody understood me," he explained.

For some, the self-discovery that results from having their handwriting analyzed becomes a necessary catalyst for change. "I used to think that I was always right," says Nancy (not her real name). "So I always insisted that my family do things my way." Her handwriting, however, showed that she had become too involved with her family, at the expense of her own identity. The cause: her less than perfect childhood. The result: an overly demanding mother and wife, who only began to step back when the analysis of her handwriting made her aware of the problem and its origins.

Graphology can even shed light on "real life" mysteries. The adoptive mother of a 15-month-old foundling wrote Pedregal asking for help. "All my baby has of her natural mother is the note she was found with. Very possibly she will never have anything else. Could you please see what you can discover about the woman who left her from the note? I would like to be able to tell my daughter something about her mother when she is old enough to question her abandonment."

The note was very short, written on a corner of what looked like a brown paper shopping bag. Though there was not enough written material to be able to do a comprehensive analysis, Pedregal was able to learn a lot about the child's real mother. The writing showed her to be a sad and lonely young woman of about 23 years of age. The characteristics that surfaced in her handwriting included sensitivity, impressionability, generosity and sensuality. They also revealed a woman who was difficult to understand and constantly on the defensive—an outsider who had trouble adapting to society.

The analysis may not have turned up the specific woman who left her baby on the church steps, but it satisfied the child's new mother. "Thank you," she wrote Pedregal. "You've added substance to the shadow of the person who gave us such a wonderful gift."

Occasionally a graphologist can actually foresee the future when examining a person's handwriting. One young couple who'd recently become engaged was told that their marriage would not last more than six months. They'd been high school sweethearts, and their families very much wanted the two to marry. They did, in spite of the graphologist's warning. Five months later they separated. What the expert had concluded based on two handwriting samples unfortunately turned out to be all too true.

These examples may astound you, but they shouldn't. After all, "brain-writing" is what graphologists call handwriting, and they should know.

What Does Your Writing Say About You?

This is your chance to find out what your handwriting reveals about you. Though most experts charge $100 or more, Carlos Pedregal has agreed to a special arrangement for Parade readers. For only $12, your handwriting sample will be analyzed by this internationally renowned graphologist and his staff. You will learn which characteristics surface in your handwriting and you will receive a comprehensive printed explanation of their conclusions. To take advantage of this offer, simply follow the instructions on this page.

GET THE WRITE IDEA

To find out what your writing reveals about your personality, just follow these easy directions.

- Copy the letter on the right, designed to provide Pedregal with the sample he needs for the analysis. Use an ink or ballpoint pen and write in the blank space at the bottom of the page. (You can also use a sheet of unlined writing paper . . . just make sure to attach all the necessary information that's been requested.) And remember, don't try to write neatly. Just relax and write the way you usually do, and then sign your name.
- Be sure to complete the order form below. If you are sending more than one sample, include payment and an order form for each. Anyone over sixteen can participate.
- Send the entire page or clip along dotted line and send order form and sample with a check or money order for $12 plus $2 postage & handling to: GRAPHOLOGY OFFER, 230 Adams Ave., P.O. Box 17089, Hauppauge, NY 11788. Orders must be post-marked by May 30, 1987.

Dear Mr. Pedregal:

I'd like to know what my regular handwriting reveals about my personality. Mostly, I'd like to find out about my strengths and my struggles. My handwriting sample is enclosed, and I did not try to write especially neatly. Many thanks for giving me this opportunity to know myself better.

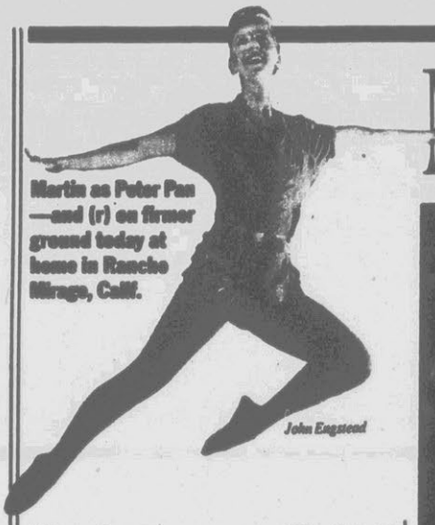
MARY MARTIN'S STILL FLYING HIGH



Martin as Peter Pan —and (r) on firmer ground today at home in Rancho Mirage, Calif.

John Engstead

Theo Westenberger

"Just one more flight,"

Mary Martin pleads, a mischievous twinkle in her eyes. "Across Madison Square Garden. Can you imagine what that flight would be like?"

Every part of her body is in motion as she continues: "The swing is what makes a good flight. You see, the farther you go, the faster you can fly. Wow! I'm ready!"

Mary Martin may be 73, but she's not ready to hang up her wings. Not yet. "Age is a state of mind," says the legendary Broadway actress who immortalized the role of the flying pixie Peter Pan on the stage and brought the fantasy of eternal childhood to generations of youngsters on television. "If you give in to the things that happen to your body, you become old and you die." Her smile broadens as she advises me, "There are ways to stay healthy, you know. Watch what you eat, exercise, don't dwell on the past and keep occupied." Martin does all four.

"You know, I don't feel like 73," she says. "I probably felt older at 30. That terrified me. I thought that was the end." It was 1944, and Martin was starring on Broadway in One Touch of Venus. Over the next two decades, the roles she created—among them the "cockeyed optimist," Nurse Nellie Forbush, in South Pacific (1949), Peter Pan (1954) and the breezy postulant Maria in The Sound of Music (1959)—made her name synonymous with the American musical. Yet, to this day, Mary Martin is uncomfortable whenever she's called a theatrical legend. "I can't conceive that I have reached that period of life that I'm a legend," she says. "Egads! When did that happen? It's all gone very fast."

'I WOULDN'T HAVE MISSED

COVER PHOTOGRAPH BY THEO WESTENBERGER

"I can't bring back the yesterdays," says Martin of her years as a stage star and beloved wife. "I want today—and tomorrow."

MY LIFE FOR ANYTHING'

BY MARVIN SCOTT

Not so fast, however, that she has forgotten wonderful memories, like the time a stagehand became so entranced by Martin's flying during a rehearsal for Peter Pan that he forgot to pull a braking wire. Martin slammed into a brick wall and broke a bone in her arm. The day she returned to the theater, she broke up in laughter. In the exact spot where she had hit the wall, stagehands had put up a huge mattress with a sign that read: "Mary Martin Slapped Here!"

Nor has her life gone so fast that Martin has brushed aside gratitude for the other, truly lucky "breaks" that fate has dealt her. Five years ago in San Francisco, for example, a van slammed into the taxi in which she and some friends were riding. Martin's manager, Ben Washer, was killed; the actress Janet Gaynor, her husband, Paul Gardner, and Martin were all seriously hurt. (Gaynor has since died.)

Martin's pelvis was broken in three places, and she suffered two broken ribs and a punctured lung. Doctors feared that she would never walk again.

Martin credits the medical team at San Francisco General Hospital's trauma center (which now bears her name) with saving her life. She is also a born survivor. "I guess it's my Texas determination," says Martin, who is a native of Weatherford, Tex. "That, good genes, luck and God."

The day she was discharged from the hospital, Martin refused a wheelchair, demanding a walker instead "to prove to everybody, myself included, that I could do it." As she left, doctors and nurses were hanging out the windows of the upper floors—crowing loudly, just the way Peter Pan bade us all to do whenever life gave us something worth cheering about. Martin blew them a kiss in return; she was too emotional to say a word.

But a year later, the tenacious actress returned their love and affection by staging a benefit for the trauma center, at San Francisco's Davies Symphony Hall. Barely recovered, Martin decided, despite her friends' and family's admonitions, that it was time to fly again. So she summoned her wire-puller from Las Vegas and her Peter Pan costume from the Museum of the City of New York and—at the age of 70—this bona fide cockeyed optimist flew all the way to the third balcony, crowing wildly and sprinkling the astonished audience with fairy dust. Admitting to being a little sore afterward, Martin was nevertheless ecstatic. "I had an absolute ball," she recalls. "And I proved that you can overcome anything... if you try."

Curtains have been going up for the spunky lady since the day she was born—Dec. 1, 1913. Anxious neighbors awaited the signal of her arrival—the raising of a curtain in her mother's bedroom. Martin was singing in the crib even before she could talk. At 5, she made her stage debut at the Fireman's Ball in Weatherford, singing "When Apples Grow on the Lilac Tree." And at 10, after seeing the silent-movie version of Peter Pan, she attempted to fly off the family garage and broke her collarbone.

While attending finishing school in Tennessee, the 16-year-old Martin married Ben Hagman, an aspiring attorney. They moved in with Martin's parents and, 11 months after the wedding, Martin gave birth to a son, Larry Martin Hagman. (He grew up to become the villainous J.R. Ewing on TV's Dallas.)

To help make ends meet during the Depression, Martin opened a dancing school. It wasn't long after that she realized the marriage couldn't last. She and Ben were divorced in 1937 but remained close friends until his death in 1965.

A starry-eyed Martin set out for Hollywood with $500 from her family and the promise to return when the money ran out. Determined to succeed, she made the studio rounds so persistently that she earned the nickname "Audition Mary." She was snubbed by agents and directors who said her nose was too round and her neck too long. And when the impresario Billy Rose suggested that she stay out of show business, Martin says, "it only crystallized my desire to get in."

Martin's star began to glimmer during a talent show at a Hollywood nightclub. Lawrence Schwab chose her for a show he was producing in New York. The show never materialized, but it brought Martin to New York, where she was available when Cole Porter needed a singer for Leave It to Me. On Nov. 11, 1938, Martin debuted on Broadway to rave reviews for her saucy rendition of "My Heart Belongs to Daddy." This time, Hollywood took notice—and Paramount offered her a 10-picture contract.

While shooting her first film in 1939 (The Great Victor Herbert, with Alan Jones), the starlet met Richard Halliday, a story editor who, she has said, "didn't like me at all." They met again at a Hollywood party—and married in 1940. Halliday gave up his career in 1942 to manage Martin's. They were inseparable during their 33-year marriage, which produced one daughter, Heller.

Martin says that her husband's death at their ranch in Brazil in 1973 was the most traumatic event in her life and insists that his spirit is ever present. She attributes some unusual occurrences to his aura, such as the time she planted a small hibiscus tree in tribute to him at her home in Palm Springs, Calif. "The gardener insisted it would never grow in the desert sun," she says. "But it sprouted over the roof of the house like in 'Jack in the Beanstalk.' And the beautiful buds of yellow and pink blossomed wide." The housekeepers reported even stranger phenomena: When Martin was on the road for periods of time, the tree did not grow and the buds remained tightly shut. However, just days before she would return, they said, it would come to life again. "I think the spirit of Richard remains forever with all who knew and loved him," Martin says. The tree died as she was preparing to move into a new house.

Martin says that she also has felt Halliday's presence in her dreams. One in particular stands out. "There was a big rolling cloud coming toward me," she recalls. "It looked like curtains and, by the time it got to me, the curtains parted. And there was Richard on a stage, wearing a dinner jacket. He called to me to come see the stage. 'It's unbelievable,' he said, 'the biggest stage you've ever played on.' And behind him I saw Oscar [Hammerstein II] moving forward. Then he faded, and all I saw was Richard beckoning to me to join him on that great stage. As I started toward him, the curtains closed, and I awakened screaming, 'I can't!'" Still mystified by the dream of more than a decade ago, Martin reasons, "I guess I wasn't ready yet. It wasn't my time."

Considered by many fans to be a symbol of perpetual youth, Martin now exults in longevity, in the richness rather than the ravages of time. "Though I can't help thinking I'm still 19, I wouldn't have missed my life for anything," she says. "I am very pleased that I was a child of my time and I am very happy with my entire career." Would she like to recapture any shining moments from her past? "I've had many yesterdays," Martin responds. "I can't bring them back. I want today—and tomorrow. My concept of life is that every day is a new day. Live it to the hilt." Martin halfheartedly believes in reincarnation and says, "If I do get to come back, I want to be a carpenter, an electrician or a plumber." When I look surprised at this unexpected revelation, Martin tells me matter-of-factly, "I want to do all the practical things I didn't get to do in this life." Yet she is steadfast in her belief that, no matter what you do, "as long as you keep the juices going, you will stay young."

Using the story of Peter Pan once again as a metaphor for life, Martin says, "Never Never Land is the way I would like real life to be—timeless, free, mischievous, filled with gaiety, tenderness and magic."

In truth, Martin's otherwise star-

studded, glamorous life was no fairy tale. For many years, her relationship with her son, Larry, was strained, the result of a topsy-turvy childhood during which he was raised first by his maternal grandmother, then his father, while his mother mostly pursued her career.

In her autobiography, My Heart Belongs, Martin wrote, "I have often felt that I cheated my children a little. I was never so totally theirs as most mothers are. I gave to audiences what belonged to my children, got back from audiences the love my children longed to give me." Today, Martin maintains that she has been "blessed by a second chance to know my children and their children."

Larry Hagman says that the separations of years past have brought him and his mother closer: "We're like buddies," he now says. Martin counters: "We're more like brother and sister. The question is who is taking care of whom."

Hagman told me about the time he and his mother were waiting for a cab in Las Vegas en route to a nightclub. "It was at the height of the J.R. hysteria," Hagman recalled, "and this cabbie pulls up and shouts, 'Hey, J.R., get in! I just got room for you!'" Hagman hopped in and, as the cab screeched off, rolled down the window and shouted to his stunned mother, "That's show business!" Later, at the nightclub, Hagman was introduced and received a warm round of applause. Then Martin was introduced, and the audience gave her a five-minute standing ovation. When she sat down, Martin leaned over to her son and declared, "And that's show business too!"

Martin beams as she shows me pictures of her six grandchildren, boasting that she chose many of their names. "I picked names that I thought would look well on a marquee," she quips. She had no influence, however, over the name of her first great-grandchild. Mary Noel Hagman was named for her.

In January, Martin completed a one-year national tour in Legends, a new comedy that marked her return to the stage after a 10-year absence. (Her last Broadway appearance was in So You Turn Somersaults? in 1977.) "I may tire," Martin comments, "but I'll never retire." After only a few hours with this bubbly, vivacious woman, I have no trouble believing that. Yet I am almost timid when I ask her, "Can you still crow?"

"Su-r-r-e," the spry star says as she leaps off the couch, places her hands on her slim hips and belts out a dazzling cock-a-doodle-doo.

"I am crowing about life," Martin says. "I think it's a privilege to be alive. I have a joy of life, and the greatest thing right now is to get on in years, as I am doing, with my health and with fun."

Her tone quickly changes and, in Peter Pan's high-pitched voice, she declares, "I hope as I go out, I'm crowing. When that time comes, I'm ready for it." Then Martin bids me to raise my wine glass with hers and offers this toast: "Here's to us never growing up. Never... never... never."

Why Sugar Ray Can't Win

BY JOSÉ TORRES

Tomorrow night, Sugar Ray Leonard, the former undisputed welterweight champion and the World Boxing Association junior middleweight champion, will challenge Marvelous Marvin Hagler, the reigning middleweight champion, for the boxing title. José Torres, himself a former world light heavyweight champion who is now chairman of the New York State Athletic Commission, has adamantly opposed this fight and refused to allow it in New York. PARADE asked him to explain why.

SUGAR RAY LEONARD will lose tomorrow night—even if he appears to win. I believe this deeply, having given my life to boxing for more than three decades. As boxing commissioner of the State of New York, I would decline to allow this fight to occur because I feel it is genuinely bad for boxing. The very question of Sugar Ray's eyesight—will his eyesight be irreparably damaged by Marvin Hagler's punches?—looms as large as the outcome of the fight itself.

No, I don't believe that Sugar Ray Leonard can win.

I can recall my own 1966 title fight with Eddie Cotton, a former light heavyweight contender who is today a commissioner of the Washington State Boxing Commission. That was one of the toughest fights of my career. Although I would not have argued had Eddie won—it was that close!—I was declared the champion. Later, Eddie said: "I thought I won it, but I was up in age at the time, and that's why I didn't get it. They figured I was getting too old."

Fights can be that close. And neither Eddie nor I was burdened by a torn retina, like Sugar Ray. I asked Eddie Cotton recently about the Leonard-Hagler fight: "Under the circumstances, I would have gone along with New York in its position not to allow Leonard to fight Hagler," he said. "Perhaps up in his head Leonard thinks he can beat Hagler, but his body is not in the condition he thinks it is. Hagler is a competitor who would force a rough fight."

Whether Sugar Ray wins or loses, he will be hurting himself—as well as doing great damage to the sport he loves.

Tomorrow night, the hot parking lot-turned-boxing arena at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas will contain a record number of people who will have come to see the two champions outpunch, outsmart and outwill each other: Marvelous Marvin Hagler—the head-shaven, absolute king of the middleweights (62-2-2, 52 KOs)—defending his title against a great fighter of yesteryear, former welterweight master Ray Charles Leonard (33-1-0, 24 KOs). Tickets for the event were sold out four months ago, with the rich and famous paying as much as $1000 for ringside seats and others having to suffice with $100 seats where they will need binoculars to see.

More than the boxer's physical readiness is at stake

What can we expect from this fight?

Hagler is one of those self-made men who has learned to use his boxing talent with horrible consistency. His left-handed stance allows him to deliver powerful and unpredictable punches on predetermined areas of his rival's anatomy. These talents—and his pride as a champ—have given Hagler great confidence. No one should expect him to "beat himself" by committing the imbecile mistakes that have ruined the fisticuff life of many a prizefighter. In short, anyone who is to deprive this champion of his next triumph must do so without his help.

In the other corner, Sugar Ray will be able to draw on memories of a successful career, but his soul surely will be tormented by three preoccupations: (1) the operation for a torn retina that forced his premature retirement a year after a 14-round come-from-behind KO victory over Thomas Hearns in 1981; (2) the subsequent damage he suffered in his "good eye" while training for a comeback fight on May 11, 1984; and (3) his poor performance in that fight against Kevin Howard, an opponent not of Leonard's caliber. In the Howard match, Leonard had to get up from a sad and humiliating knockdown to win. Immediately afterward, he announced his second "definite" retirement.

Now, as he prepares for his second comeback, the fans who admire and care for him worry. Their concern results from the logical notion that any human being intending to face the likes of Marvelous Marvin Hagler in the ring cannot remain idle for almost 50 months and expect favorable consequences—even if that person is Ray Charles Leonard.

To be sure, if one were to measure only their abilities as boxers, Hagler and Leonard are evenly matched. Both know and understand each and every single punch and move that exists in the sport of flat noses. The difference between them lies in those factors that separate champions from ordinary fighters. These factors have more to do with a particular state of mind than with physical readiness.

Timing, for example—which in boxing constitutes the ability to connect punches with power, conviction and consistent accuracy—is achieved exclusively through genuine confidence. In boxing, winning means confidence.

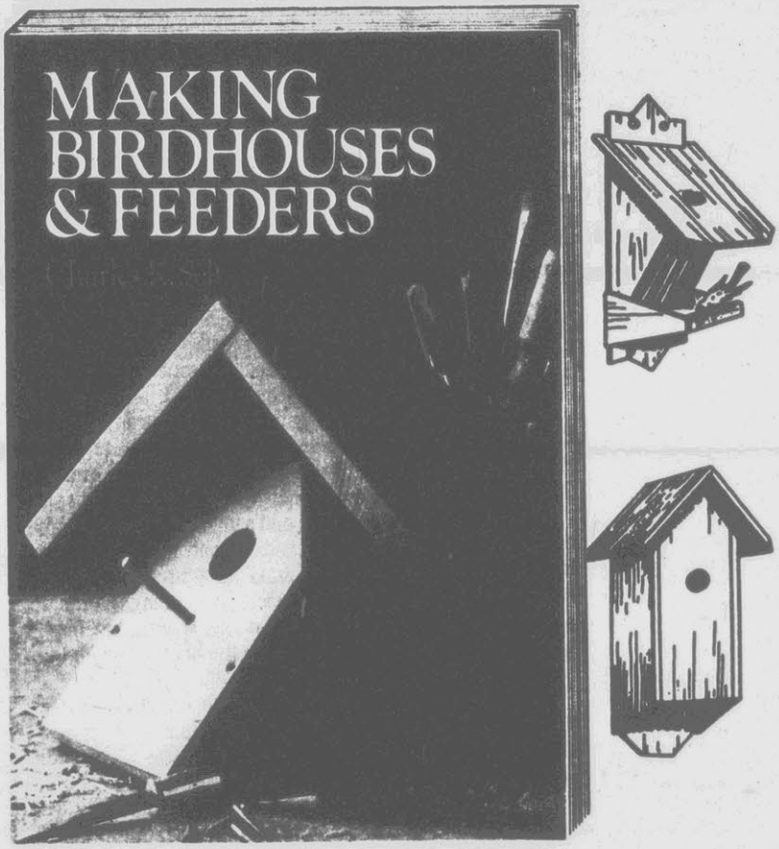
How to make Birdhouses & Feeders



This book covers most everything you need to build quality wooden structures for the birds you want to attract! Even if you are inexperienced in woodworking, you may make more than 40 superbly designed projects—from simple window feeders to three-story nesting boxes and shingled houses, and even a birdbath!

Master woodworker Charles Self gives expert instructions on how to:

- use the best, least-expensive, easiest-to-work-with woods
- choose and work with hand and power tools (most of the projects require hand tools only)
- create structures that are durable, effective, and attractive
- attract specific species of birds
- entice some birds to stay with you year round

Most important, he outlines several strategies for deterring predators: making the entry hole just large enough for the desired species, and rigging an ingenious, yet simple, pulley-and-slide setup to prevent squirrels from reaching the feed.

With specific, detailed information on how to attract, house, and feed the following:

robins	song sparrows
bluebirds	cardinals
phoebes	hummingbirds
martins	owls
chickadees	woodpeckers
warblers	catbirds
thrushes	wrens
nuthatches	and more!

You will be able to immediately attract the birds you want—robins, bluebirds, cardinals, hummingbirds, many more—and protect them from predators with these 41 expertly designed birdhouses, feeders, birdbaths, nesting boxes. Everything you'll need, every instruction, every plan, every step-by-step instruction is so clear and simple that even the beginning woodworker will get perfect results every time, from simple window feeders to 3-story nesting boxes and shingled houses.

Learn how to choose the best wood (and the easiest to work with), construction techniques, joints, adhesives, finishes. How you can build every design with simple hand tools, what size the entry hole must be to attract the birds you want, even how high to hang the birdhouses and how to entice the birds to stay all year long.

Plus—complete instructions on what to feed the birds and where and how to buy it inexpensively. There are even recipes for making your own feed. Order MAKING BIRDHOUSES & FEEDERS today!

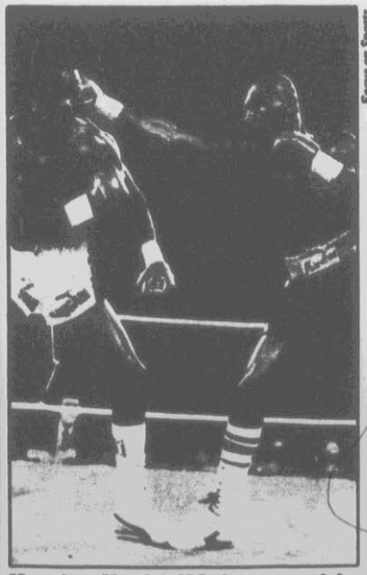
Knowing how to use fear is also vital. Only a champion has, consciously or unconsciously, the ability to manipulate his own fear and to take advantage of an opponent's fear. When a boxer can predict his opponent's every punch, that is anticipation at its best. But this skill is set into motion by sheer control of fear. On the other hand, when a champion senses that his opponent is intimidated, tired or hurt (in most cases, these are one and the same), he knows how to capitalize on that weakness by attacking with will and determination.

Ray Charles Leonard is a proud young man, with the vanities and egocentricities all champions possess. At his best, a few years back, no one could touch him. In his only setback at that time, Leonard gave Roberto Duran, another great one, the fight of his life. Only selfishness—wanting to beat Duran at his own game—provoked Leonard's single defeat, and a unanimous but controversial decision at that. In a return bout, Leonard fought his own fight and redeemed himself by forcing Duran to say the now-famous words "no más," while quitting in the heat of the eighth-round action.

A year later, the Leonard-Hearns welterweight unification battle provided us with a classic. Leonard discouraged Hearns in round six with a combination of nasty body punches followed by an impressive and dramatic defensive maneuver. He took advantage of Hearns' disillusionment and sense of self-betrayal—a state of mind Leonard had cleverly manufactured—and tightened the screws. Hearns succumbed in the 14th round.

But those magnificent fights took place in 1980 and 1981, too long ago to use as a present-day yardstick for the old champ.



Focus on Sports

Marvelous Marvin's '86 victory over John Mugabi (l) was his 12th consecutive defense of the world middleweight title.

If anyone is to deprive Marvin Hagler of his next triumph, he must do so without Hagler's help

It is unrealistic to presume that Leonard can avoid the worries of inactivity, the eye injuries and the lousy performance in his last fight. Add to those concerns the "easy life" of the last several years and the knowledge that he will never suffer from a lack of ready cash, and you come up with a combination of prizefighting negatives that only a major accident could overcome.

Could that accident come from Hagler? This is a scenario constantly discussed in some boxing circles. The theory is that, although Hagler is the best of his time, that era is slowly passing by, while Leonard was not only the best of his time but simply the greatest when he was the ruler. That distinction, some say, may give the handsome former champ an "outside chance" to win, despite the fact that Leonard was a 147-pounder then, while Hagler has always weighed a full 160 pounds.

But whether he loses, as boxing logic would decree, or wins on an "outside chance," boxing itself is sure to suffer irreparably if Leonard winds up with a recurrence of any of his eye injuries. And this, in addition to the fact that a victory over an "old, tired champ" would hardly give him any additional prominence and that the millions earned (Leonard reportedly has been guaranteed $11 million to fight Hagler) could never compensate psychologically for a shameful defeat, suggests a dark, difficult, no-win picture for Ray Charles Leonard.

"I want to fight Hagler because I'm sure I can defeat him," Leonard observed.

I wish him well. I wish him life. I wish he wouldn't fight. TC

Matthew Broderick and Chimp Become an Odd Couple

Ralph Nelson

Broderick and Virgil in Project X

A major dramatic moment in Project X occurs when a young airman (Matthew Broderick) assigned to a top-secret military training program discovers that Virgil, the chimpanzee he has become friends with, has been desperately trying to tell him something—in sign language. "Then, the race against the clock is on," say the movie's producers, Walter Parkes and Lawrence Lasker. "The idea for the movie came from an experience I had when I was 16 years old and made a difficult decision that saved a dog's life," says Lasker, who with Parkes created the very successful WarGames. As you may remember, that movie also starred Matthew Broderick in a race against time. From 20th Century-Fox.

When College Isn't an Enriching Experience

The most expensive college in the nation, says the April Atlantic, is Bennington, where tuition, room and board costs $16,950 a year. LOUIS L'AMOUR Tells Own Story

The best thing about Survival: From My Yondering Days, by Louis L'Amour, is the introduction spoken by the author. In a voice weathered by years at sea, L'Amour tells of his life on a merchant ship before he became a writer. With the wisdom of an old salt and the rhythms of a born storyteller, he speaks of a shipwreck and its aftermath. And then we hear the actor Richard Crenna read the yarn L'Amour spun from this event. What a creative idea—and a real treat. This is the first in a projected series taken from stories by L'Amour. Bantam, $7.95.

MICKEY MOUSE'S TALE TOLD IN DETAIL

Do you know what Mickey Mouse's original name was? Or that there was another creator for Mickey besides Walt Disney? The answers to these questions and other sidelights on the world's most famous rodent may be found in Walt Disney's Mickey Mouse—His Life and Times, by Richard Hollis and Brian Sibley (Harper & Row, $14.95). According to the publisher, no previous book has ever covered all aspects of Mickey's life and career. This one tells the tale through illustrations, many in color, gives a full account of Mickey's creation and development, and includes a complete filmography of the more than 100 movies in which he starred.

BRIGHT IDEAS

BY JANE CIABATTARI

For the Young Artist in Your Family

M. White

MY ONLY SON IS AWAY AT college now, and one of my most cherished mementos from his childhood is a plate he decorated for me with his colorful drawing of a peacock when he was 6. To hold onto the artistic treasures of your child's early years, preserve an original work of his or her art with a Make-A-Plate kit. It comes with special paper mats for the drawings and instructions on how to mail in your favorite one to be molded onto a dishwasher-safe melamine plate. These mementos make terrific gifts for Mother's Day and Father's Day, or for grandparents, and they also can be used as dinner plates. To order, send $6.95 to Makit Products, Dept. P, 4659 Mint Way, Dallas, Tex. 75236.

Teachers interested in making plates as an art project can order information on classroom kits from the same address.

Answers for Your Gardening Questions

NOW'S THE TIME OF YEAR when you might be wondering: How can I keep the pests off my vegetable garden? What's the best new beefsteak-type tomato to try? When is the best time to plant perennials in my region? Can I grow fruit trees in my tiny backyard?

Circle your calendar, because next week you can call a toll-free number set up by Rodale's Organic Gardening magazine for the answers to your questions. It's all to honor the first National Garden Week, established last year by Congress.

The hotline will operate weekdays from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. EST, April 13-17. The phone number is 1-800-542-4769.

We'd like to hear from you. Send your Bright Ideas to make life better to "Bright Ideas," Parade, 750 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017.

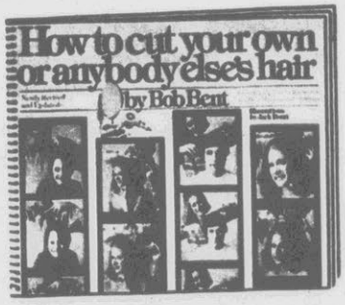
Why pay for expensive haircuts when it's easy to do it yourself?

Cut your family's hair and save!

Now you and your family may have professional-looking haircuts without spending time—or loads of money—at the beauty parlor or barber shop. It's easy to learn with the new book HOW TO CUT YOUR OWN OR ANYBODY ELSE'S HAIR.

Haircutting was never simpler. With this fully illustrated guide to home hairstyling, just about anyone can do it. From simple trims (which give new life to a haircut) and classic coiffs (for women and men) to the newest styles for teens—get a great-looking haircut every time. Everything you need to know is here. And all of the basic tools (scissors, combs and towels) are probably in your home already, so there's nothing to buy.



Trim Your Hair—and Your Budget

Step-by-step instructions and page-after-page of easy-to-follow diagrams tell you what to do and how to do it—from shampooing to drying . . . for short hair or long . . . from the basics to the most fashionable styles. Close-ups show you exactly what it will look like while you're working, so you may proceed with complete assurance. Plus, it's spiral bound to stay open and lie flat for extra convenience.

Not Just Cutting But Styling

The author, a professional hairstylist, lets you in on the tricks of the trade—the techniques the pros use—so you get the most attractive and manageable results possible. You'll find tips on matching hairstyle to the shape and features of a face—with styles to suit, and flatter, every taste and hair texture.

Plus: How to make thin hair look thicker, how to cut children's hair, how to blow-dry for that just-right look, how to keep bangs even (and out of your eyes) and how to trim and shape sideburns.

"Officially Recognized by the Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution"

A PHOTO CONTEST FOR EVERYONE

"We The People"

PARADE SPONSORED BY PARADE AND FUJI FILM

Can you take a picture of "We the People"?

We think you can, better than anyone.

Thus, Parade magazine and Fuji Film, Inc. are sponsoring the official "We the People" Photo Contest, celebrating the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

Your picture, your idea, might be a picture of a family, a friend, an event—anything that seems to you to tell photographically the story of our country and its meaning—an image that, in your view, best captures the theme "We the People."

Your entry can be a black-and-white or color print. Our distinguished judges will select 100 winners, who will each receive $100 and an award certificate. Some of the winning photos will be published in Parade, and all 100 will become part of a permanent photo exhibit honoring the Bicentennial of the Constitution.

The deadline is May 31, 1987, and winners will be announced in the Sept. 13, 1987, issue of Parade.

Now, good luck—and good shooting!

THE RULES

▶ Anyone is eligible, except employees of Parade Publications, Inc. or Fuji Film, Inc. and members of their families.
▶ No purchase is necessary for participation.
▶ All entries must be received no later than May 31, 1987. We cannot accept any postage-due mail.
▶ Send entries to "We the People" Photo Contest, c/o Parade/Fuji, P.O. Box 3591, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163. Each contestant may submit only one photograph. Prints no larger than 8" x 10" may be submitted, made from slides or negatives, in color or black and white. The contestant's name, address and telephone number must be written clearly in ink on the back of the photograph. Contestants should not send original slides or negatives.
▶ All entries become the property of Parade and will not be acknowledged or returned. Parade assumes no responsibility for any photographs.
▶ Late, mutilated or previously published photographs are not eligible and will not be considered. The contest manager's determination as to late, mutilated, lost or previously published entries shall be final.
▶ Contestants must know the names and addresses of any identifiable persons appearing in their photographs.
▶ One hundred photographs shall be selected for awards. The winning photographs shall be determined by a distinguished panel of judges, based on pictorial composition, technical excellence and consistency with the theme of We the People. The decisions of the judges shall be final.
▶ Each winner shall receive a $100 cash prize and an award certificate. If a winner's photograph is published in Parade, the contestant shall then receive an additional $200.
▶ Only contestants formally designated as award-winners will be asked to supply the original negative or transparency of the photograph and a release from each identifiable person in the photograph.
▶ Award-winners agree to the use of their submitted photographs and their names and pictures by Parade for trade or advertising purposes.
▶ Winners may be required to sign and deliver to Parade an affidavit certifying that (a) the submitted photograph is his or her own effort and has not been obtained from any source whatsoever and that (b) he or she has not acted for, or in conjunction or cooperation with, any person not eligible under the rules to compete in this contest.
▶ This contest is void where prohibited.

THE JUDGES

Alex Haley, the distinguished author of Roots

Dr. Joyce Brothers, author and psychologist

Donna M. Alvarado, director of ACTION, the volunteer agency

REMEMBER

▶ Send one color or black-and-white print

▶ Do not send an original slide or negative

▶ Contest deadline is May 31, 1987

▶ No photos will be returned

▶ Please read the rules

Children Who Feel No Pain

Bob Waters, 35, until recently a butcher in the London suburb of Erith, and his wife, Christine, 32, are slowly going out of their minds, they say—with worry. The reason: Their two children, Paul and Victoria, can feel no pain. They are victims of one of the world's rare maladies: congenital insensitivity to pain.

Paul, their blond, curly haired 2-year-old, already has suffered third-degree burns, broken his arm, and sustained contusions and concussions—to all of which he has responded with abnormal indifference instead of tears.

A few weeks ago, after reassuring Mr. and Mrs. Waters that it was highly unlikely for their 6-month-old daughter to have inherited the same condition, physicians at Queen Mary's Hospital in Sidcup agreed she also was immune to pain.

"When I heard that diagnosis," says Bob Waters, "I almost blew my top. For months, when my wife was pregnant, she kept asking the doctors if there was any chance that our next child would be born insensitive to pain. They told her not to worry, that the chance of bearing two such children was about one in a million. But after the baby came, my wife suspected very quickly that Victoria was just like Paul. She never cried, except when she wanted her bottle. Pain seemed foreign to her body.

"Paul, for example, is jealous of Victoria because she's the youngest, and people make a fuss over her. When no one is looking, Paul will slug her in the face or punch her in the stomach or bite her arm. He'll throw her out of her crib and jump on her. And she won't even wince. She just looks up at him and smiles.

Dr. Bauman: Calls case "rare, remarkable"

London Express

Victoria and Paul Waters, sister and brother whose malady makes them dangerous

"I tell you—it's enough to drive a man mad. It's gotten so bad that I quit my job the other day. After 20 years as a butcher, I'm living on the dole. We get 170 pounds ($207) every fortnight. I didn't want to quit, but I was afraid my wife would have a nervous breakdown unless she got some help. I mean, someone has to stay with those two kids all the time, especially Paul. He'll do the craziest things—jump out of a window or play with a knife or hit someone over the head with a plate or light matches. He doesn't understand pain or suffering and what they mean to other children or other people. Which makes him dangerous. He's brave because he doesn't know what fear is. He can't connect pain to punishment."

Doctors in London gave Paul a battery of tests. In one, they stuck 60 fine needles into the back of his neck. "He didn't react at all," his father recalls.

"The way we first found out about Paul," Waters explains, "is that he developed a stomach infection and a lump in his stomach when he was 6 months old. The doctors were afraid to examine him. They said his stomach was too tender, and the pain attached to an examination would be too much for the little fellow. But my wife said to go ahead, because she was sure Paul could feel no pain. She was right, and it was only then that the doctors began to realize that Paul was a very special case."

How many children in the U.S. are born with a congenital indifference to pain? I asked that question of several prominent physicians in this country. Dr. Jack Bauman of St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, Calif., one of the world's outstanding anesthesiologists, said: "Not many. Several cases have been reported in the medical literature, but largely because they are rare and remarkable." Dr. John Bonica of the University of Washington in Seattle, a recognized authority on pain, revealed that he personally had never treated such a child in his lengthy career.

Dr. Lawrence Kruger, a veteran neurobiologist at UCLA, pointed out that pain was a necessary ingredient of life, in that it acted as a "red light, a warning signal of something gone wrong in the body." He added that children born without pain sensors rarely live to a ripe old age: "They burn themselves, or run on a sprained ankle because they can't recognize it. In many cases, they die prematurely because they've never experienced the caution that pain provides. Fortunately, such children are few."

Florida Growing Fast

A recent Census Bureau estimate indicates that Florida passed Illinois last year as our fifth most populous state. It now ranks behind California, New York, Texas and Pennsylvania, in that order. Florida boasts a population of 11,675,000, representing a 19.8% gain since 1980—the fourth largest such gain, following Alaska, with 33%; Arizona, 22%; and Nevada, 20.3%.

A Thought

Under the rule of the fanatical Ayatollah Khomeini, Iran has played havoc with the image and reputation of two U.S. Presidents. Had Jimmy Carter been able to arrange the return of the American hostages from Iran while he was still running for reelection, and had Ronald Reagan not become involved in a policy with Iran of arms for hostages, the public might well be holding both men as heroes.

Coke Moving In

Around May, Coca-Cola will go on sale in the Soviet Union. It's part of a six-year deal signed last December in which the Coke people agreed, in exchange, to help promote European sales of the Lada passenger car and some other Soviet products. For 13 years, Coke's No. 1 rival, Pepsi-Cola, has enjoyed a thriving soft-drink business with the Soviet public—so thriving, in fact, that Pepsi is negotiating to open a chain of Pizza Huts in Russia.

Fitness

BY STUART M. BERGER, M.D. AND MICHAEL O'SHEA, PH.D.

Q There seem to be a lot of opinions on how thin a person should be to be healthy. What do you think?

A Thinner might be better. Evidence is clear that the death rate is lower in people who are at least 10% thinner than the U.S. national average for their age and sex. This was confirmed by a group of doctors reporting in a January issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

But there are considerations in addition to just your weight in pounds. People with a higher ratio of bone and muscle mass to fat in their weight will be healthier than those with more fat. Also, excess fat concentrated in the midsection of the body appears to be more of a hazard than general excess fat.

Q What is the new natural gel that is supposed to lower cholesterol levels?

A There is a natural, gel-forming fiber that recently has become available to doctors. It is called guar gum and comes from the guar bean plant, found mainly in India and Pakistan. For many years, guar gum has been used as a thickening agent in foods. More recently, in a study at the Stanford University School of Medicine, guar gum—when mixed with water to form a gel—was found to be effective in reducing blood cholesterol levels by 15%, thus decreasing the risk of heart disease.

Stanford researchers are still studying the way guar gum lowers cholesterol levels. One theory ties it to the viscosity of the fibers, which "coat" the intestinal mucosa and interfere to a degree with the absorption of fats (lipids), then bind themselves to a form of cholesterol and carry it out of the system.

Guar gum has been found to produce uncomfortable side effects in some cases, and it is not yet known whether it interferes with the absorption of any medications. It is therefore advisable to consult a doctor before using it.

SOME OF THE BEST LAWN EQUIPMENT MONEY CAN BUY FOR NO MONEY AT ALL.

From now until May 31st, your John Deere dealer is giving away free merchandise worth as much as $450 when you purchase a John Deere lawn mower or tractor.

When you buy a riding mower, you'll get a free electric trimmer. With a walk-behind mower, you'll get a free 2-bushel grass bagger.

Buy a lawn tractor and you can choose from these free products: A 6½-bushel grass bagger, a heavy-duty battery charger, a chain saw, a backpack power blower, a gas trimmer, a hedge trimmer or a dump cart.

And when you buy a lawn and garden tractor, the deals are even bigger. You can take home a walk-behind mower, a tiller, a lawn edger, a snow thrower or a heavy-duty gas trimmer. Or you can choose a tractor attachment instead, like a Power-Flow bagger, a lawn sweeper, a dump cart or one of our front blades.

To take advantage of these great offers, just visit your participating John Deere dealer. But do it soon. Because Deere Season doesn't last long, and with deals like these, the Deere won't either.

Q My daughter wants to run cross-country for her high school. I had heard that distance running could be harmful to girls. Is this true?

Frank Micelotta

A After an exhaustive review of the research, the American College of Sports Medicine (ACSM) has determined that "females should not be denied the opportunity to compete in long-distance running." This opinion includes girls at the high school level. Females respond in much the same way as males to endurance exercise training (improved cardiorespiratory functioning, decreased resting pulse and a reduction in body fat), and the frequency of running-related injuries and problems is no higher for women than for men.

However, about one-fifth of females who run experience a disruption of their menstrual cycle (amenorrhea), perhaps due to the loss of body weight and to hormonal changes. The exact role of running in menstrual irregularities is unknown. The ACSM points out that amenorrhea could lead to a loss of bone density (brittle bones) in some cases but says there is "no evidence to indicate that running is harmful to the female reproductive system."

Q Can exercising while under the influence of alcohol be harmful to you?

A Exercise and alcohol don't mix. After reviewing the research, the American College of Sports Medicine has determined that alcohol (1) can hinder accuracy, balance, hand-eye coordination, reaction time and general coordination; (2) may impair body-temperature regulation in cold weather; (3) may decrease strength, power and endurance; and (4) increases the risk of injury. There is no evidence that alcohol improves performance. Alcohol is a depressant and will slow the body's physiological systems, which can only retard performance.

Q Will weight training build my fat into muscle?

A Fat cannot turn into muscle. The only way to reduce your fat is to engage in aerobic (continuous and rhythmic) exercise that burns calories. Weight training will increase muscle size, but only by increasing the size of the individual muscle fibers. The fat around the muscle will remain and cover up the true muscle definition.

Q In a previous issue, you described a calf-stretch exercise that, I believe, places undue stress on the spine and will not allow the calf to stretch if the back or hamstrings are tight. As a physical therapist, I have found that the following exercise is better and safer.

Frank Micelotta

A Thank you for your comments. After consulting with other sports-medicine experts, we realized that our calf-stretch could be improved. Here is the correct technique, as you suggest:

Stand straight, about 3 feet from a wall, your back in a neutral position and your feet flat. Place one foot in front of the other, about 6 inches apart; the back leg should remain straight, the front leg bent at the knee. Slowly lean forward, with the back leg straight and both heels flat; use your arms to support yourself against the wall. Feel the stretch in the calf. You should not feel a strain or tightness in the back, which should remain relaxed and in a neutral position. Hold the stretched position 20 to 30 seconds.

BY JAMES BRADY

Peter Jennings

THIS WAS A YEAR OR TWO AGO. Over a dinner table in Manhattan, Adm. Stansfield Turner, who ran the CIA for Jimmy Carter, was trying to explain to a few of us how the Iran hostage-rescue mission in 1980 was supposed to have worked if the helicopters had gotten through.

Admiral Turner was talking about certain Tehran streets and neighborhoods through which innocent-looking trucks were to have been driven by our commandos. Peter Jennings interrupted. "But Admiral," he said, "that route would have taken the rescue mission right into a marketplace that would have been teeming at that hour. They never would have even gotten through the traffic."

Jennings, anchorman for ABC's World News Tonight, knows stuff like that. He's been there. For six years in the turbulent '60s and '70s, Jennings was a foreign correspondent for ABC and actually established its Beirut news bureau. If he tells you about a one-way street in Tehran or Damascus or Beirut, he has probably got it right. Peter didn't learn his job sitting in a studio wearing makeup.

He is a big, handsome, Canadian-born professional journalist who at age 10 was behind the microphone on a kids' radio show. When he was 26, Jennings got his big break, as host of the ABC evening news. He did it for three years, and it simply didn't work. He was too young, audiences felt. "I looked like a teenager," he confesses and admits that if he hadn't quit, "they would have fired me."

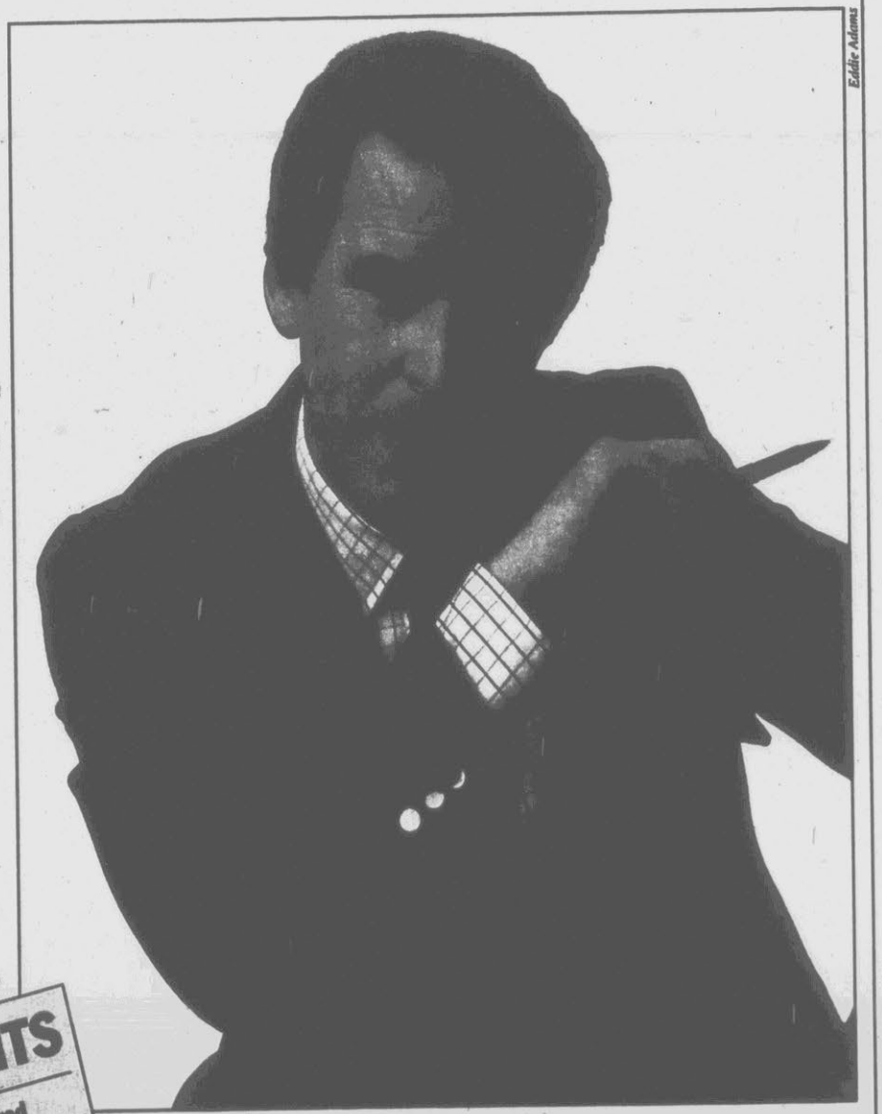
Hard times mature good men. Peter took his licking and went out and really learned his trade. Today, he is one of the three men who tell millions of Americans what's happening in the world every day and why. Right now, Jennings is again on the hot seat. With ABC still running third in the ratings, Jennings' nightly newscast has been moved 30 minutes ahead in some markets. Some critics think this downgrades national news to make room for more game shows. ABC believes it gives the network a head start on hot news. Peter himself admits, "It's a bit of a shock." At the very least, the new schedule has more people talking about Peter Jennings. So far, ratings are up.

He is a thoughtful sort of guy. He recognizes that the network anchormen are often judged not on news-gathering and communication skills, but as a competition between "three pretty faces." If that happens, says Jennings, "we will all have made a mistake."

BORN: July 29, 1938, in Toronto.
PERSONAL: Previous marriages to Valerie Godsoe and the photographer Annie Malouf. Married to the writer Kati Marton since 1979; two children: Elizabeth, 7, and Christopher, 5.
CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: At age 10, had his own radio show, Peter's Program; parliamentary correspondent and anchorman for Canadian TV, 1961-64; anchorman and correspondent for ABC News, 1964-68; London anchorman and chief foreign correspondent for World News Tonight, 1969-75 and 1977-83; Washington correspondent, 1976; anchorman and senior editor at ABC News since 1983.

BRADY'S BITS

Because he looks so tailored and urbane and has that undeniable Canadian accent, I assumed before I met him that Peter Jennings was something of a highbrow. Wrong. He's an amiable, funny, story-telling sort of guy who didn't even graduate from prep school and who admits that in one of his first jobs in Canadian radio, he spent a year "broadcasting to the Eskimos."



Eddie Adams

In some of our big cities, Peter Jennings tells us what's happening 30 minutes before Dan Rather or Tom Brokaw. Is this a good idea? It's the hottest debate in TV news. Stay tuned.

Enhance Your Home with the Beauty and Majesty of the Barn Owl...

Worldwide edition limit: 15,000

Since before recorded history began, man has been fascinated with the mystery, the elusiveness, and the nocturnal nature of owls. These beautiful and majestic creatures have been featured in works of art dating back to the Stone Age.

Now The Hamilton Collection announces a porcelain sculptural masterwork by the world-renowned Maruri Studio, inspired by the barn owl. This hand-painted porcelain work captures one of these handsome birds as he steps out of his roost in a hollow tree and perches on a branch.

This bird's delicate coloring, soft textured plumage, heart-shaped face, and large, expressive eyes are portrayed to perfection by the artists of Maruri. They created an original master sculpture, which served as the basis for nearly 20 separate mold parts. After hand-casting and assembling all components using the finest bisque porcelain, each piece is carefully fired. Then fifteen different, subtle hues are applied by hand, before a final firing.

Because this Maruri original is being offered in a limited edition of just 15,000 worldwide, you are advised to order immediately. This sculpture is the first issue in a series of eight inspired by the world's most beloved owl species: the Majestic Owls of the Night. As the owner of "Barn Owl" you will have the right—but you will never be under any obligation—to acquire all future sculptures as they are issued.

Furthermore, you are guaranteed the right to return any sculpture within 30 days of receipt for a full refund, releasing your series rights.

Each issue in the Majestic Owls of the Night Collection will be priced at just $75.00, payable in three convenient installments. And each will be accompanied by a numbered Certificate of Authenticity attesting to its status within the edition limit.

Considering mankind's universal fascination with owls and the exceptional quality and appeal of this "Barn Owl" original, as well as the international reputation of Maruri Studios, a prompt sell-out of "Barn Owl" could occur. Thus, we cannot guarantee consideration of your application if postmarked after the date shown. To avoid disappointment, order today.

Ask Marilyn

BY MARILYN MACH VOS SAVANT

Which number is the most important?

—Babs Remarque, Toronto, Canada

Romantically, I'd suggest "2." Numerically, however, I'd vote for "1"—the point of reference for our entire numbering system. All numbers greater than 1 refer to multiples of it, and all numbers less than 1 refer to divisions of it. And then, of course, there's zero...

If you had a completely enclosed truck with birds inside, would the truck weigh the same if the birds were in flight?

—Patrick Moretta, Chino, Calif.

The fact that the birds are aloft in no way affects either their weight or that of the truck. The amount of air inside the truck does. If the truck is perfectly sealed—not allowing the escape of even one molecule of air—the flying birds are supported by the air trapped inside, while resting birds are supported by the truck itself. In either case, the weight of the truck and its contents remains exactly the same. If, however, air were allowed to flow into or out of the truck, changing the air mass inside, the weight of the truck would change.

Where does a light go when it goes out?

—Donald E. Chappell Jr., Syracuse, N.Y.

It goes out... and out... and out. When a light bulb is "on," it emits a stream of "light energy." When the bulb is switched off, it stops emitting this energy, but that which has already been released continues to travel, sometimes for a very long period of time, until it encounters something to stop it. It is the light bulb that goes out—not the light.

Should We Have Credit Cards?

CORRIE REILLY of Salt Lake City, Utah, recently was invited to accept a major bank credit card. If she RSVP'd, the invitation said, she would receive a card with an already approved credit limit of $1000. Corrie was 13.

"It started," she said, "when I ordered some stuff out of a catalog my mom gets. Ever since then, I keep getting all these offers for credit. It's kinda neat, but I don't even have a summer job."

"I was shocked that a 13-year-old could be sent such an application," said Corrie's mother, Wendy Reilly. "As a teenager, I didn't have cards of my own, but I did use—and sometimes abuse—my parents' cards. It wasn't real money to me then, and it's not real money to me now. I haven't been able to handle using credit without restraint. Just this year, I gave my husband all my cards. I simply don't want the temptation."

As for Corrie, she adds tolerantly, "I suppose that if a teenager has a job and can keep credit in the right perspective, she could be allowed a credit card."

Keeping credit in perspective has been difficult for many people. "As of late 1985, Americans had paid approximately $12 billion worth of interest on credit cards alone," said Mary Anne Aden of the Aden Analysis Report, a monthly newsletter that focuses on investment research. "It seems that being in debt has become the norm for the American consumer. In 1960, the average debt per person was $3347; in 1986, it was about $30,125. Even considering inflation, this is a huge discrepancy."

"It's too easy to get credit cards these days," said Norman Steinman of Culver City, Calif. "My wife and I both had them when our son was growing up, but we used them conservatively, and we tried to instill in him the same attitude. Everyone has credit cards now. The world is full of credit junkies! We didn't want our son turning into one."

How do you spot a potential "credit junkie"? The problem is that it's hard to know how someone—teen or adult—will handle credit until he or she has it.

"I never had credit until this past year," said Janet (not her real name). "I went to college, got a degree, got married and raised our three children while my husband went to work. All credit cards and bank accounts were essentially handled by him. We were living the Great American Dream. We owned our home, had good credit, the kids were growing up and heading off to school.

"Then the dream turned into a nightmare. Around Christmastime last year, I—not my husband—received an offer to have a Gold MasterCard. I hadn't asked for this card. In fact, because I've never been really employed, I figured I wasn't eligible for a credit card. And this wasn't just any MasterCard. This was a card with an approved limit of $6000! All I had to do was sign on the bottom line. They didn't even want my Social Security number.

"Putting my signature on that application was the biggest mistake of my life. Within a month or so, I had run the card up to its limit. I was out of control but happy that I could give my family great Christmas gifts. I ate in wonderful restaurants. I bought things I would never use and hid them in my closet, just in case I would need them someday.

"But soon I had to start using the grocery money to pay my bill each month. I was paying 22 percent interest, and most months my minimum due was about $120 or more. I used the card to borrow cash for groceries and other household bills—it was a vicious cycle. It became harder and harder to pay the bills.

"My husband knew nothing about my predicament. I hated lying to him and constantly worried about being found out. The stress level was unbearable!

"Finally, my nightmare ended. My husband came home from work early and got the mail before I could go through it first. He opened the MasterCard bill and went through the roof. He called the bank, saying that there must be some mistake. They informed him that the bill was indeed mine and that I had had the card for quite a while. When I got home, he said he was leaving and began to pack a bag. I told him that I was sick and needed help. I was like an alcoholic. I couldn't stop myself."

Fortunately, help was available. "In the back of my mind," Janet recalled, "I remembered having heard about a local organization called 'SpenderMenders' that helps compulsive spenders and credit-card addicts. After my husband walked out the door, perhaps out of my life, I called information and got the hotline number for SpenderMenders. I left a message saying that I was desperate, I saw no way out and was thinking of killing myself. I actually got the gun we kept in the house and was looking for the bullets when Sandi Gostin, the founder of SpenderMenders, called me back. We spoke for a long time, and I honestly believe that Sandi saved my life. She made me understand that I was not alone and that I could get help."

Since that phone call, Janet has been going to weekly group meetings. To pay her bills, she had to cash in her 2-year-old IRA and her money-market account. The climb out of debt will be a slow one, but she is on her way.

Sandi Gostin started SpenderMenders in 1984 after serving a one-year prison term for embezzlement. She had turned to white-collar crime to support her habit as a compulsive spender. Once released, she looked for help but was unable to find an organization that dealt specifically with compulsive spenders and credit addicts. She took matters into her own hands, and the San Francisco-based SpenderMenders was born. After three years, it has more than 10,000

no-longer-card-carrying members. The program directly addresses the questions of why people spend and how they can change their spending habits. It also educates its members in finance and credit, subject matter not often taught in school—one of the main reasons, according to Sandi, that so many people have credit problems. SpenderMenders plans to go nationwide soon.

At the very least, potential credit addicts should know what they're signing up for, and Sen. Christopher Dodd (D., Conn.) thinks card-issuers could do more to help them learn. "Because credit has become more sophisticated," said Dodd, "the consumer must be re-educated on the responsibilities and ramifications of credit." Dodd has proposed a bill in the Senate, co-sponsored by Sen. William Proxmire (D., Wis.), that would require card-issuers to indicate clearly the card's interest rate, any annual fee for cardholders, the length of any grace period for payment without interest and the method used in calculating card balances for interest purposes.

Meanwhile, credit-card defaults are on the rise. The business analyst Spencer Nilson says that more than 4 percent of all charges outstanding were written off as defaults in 1986—nearly twice the rate of 1985—as more and more consumers found themselves unable to pay back what they owed.

It has been argued that the phasing out of consumer-interest payments as a tax deduction, combined with the still pretty hefty credit-card interest rates, will eventually discourage runaway spending on credit. But issuers of credit counter-argue that many card-users who roll over their monthly balances don't itemize anyway and are "interest-rate insensitive"—they just spend and pay, no matter what the rate is.

There are signs that credit-card interest rates are starting to come down—more incentive to spend. Connecticut has enacted a rate ceiling of 15 percent, and other states are considering doing likewise. And some banks are offering variable-rate cards—where the interest rate rises and falls with the prime rate—with attractively low rates at present.

Should we have credit cards? The lures to "buy now, pay later" are not likely to diminish in quantity or ingenuity, and even teens are being invited onto the credit bandwagon. So perhaps the better question is: Can I (and my spouse and children) handle credit?

The best line of defense for potential credit addicts lies in learning what credit is all about, knowing how much it will cost them and finding the discipline to spend within their means. Otherwise, when "later" comes, they'll just have to pay. And pay. And pay. P

Coyote's Fortune Lead To Dramatic TV Role

By Evan Levine

Any actor who counts among his favorite roles that of a "really stupid guy" is not your run-of-the-mill actor. Peter Coyote, who is currently charming/disarming Bette Midler and Shelley Long in "Outrageous Fortune," is just such an actor. Having had big roles in small movies ("Heartbreakers") and small roles in big movies ("E.T."), coyote has recently come into prominence with big roles in big movies ("E.T."), Coyote has recently come into prominence with big roles in big movies ("Jagged Edge"). But the "really stupid guy" he favors was a motorcyclist in the little-seen "Timerider."

On Monday, April 6, Coyote follows his outrageous cad character in "Outrageous Fortune" with a lawyer whose legal and personal morality come under fire in the wake of a murder trial, in ABC's "Sworn to Silence." He co-stars with Dabney Coleman.

"When I got the script, I almost turned it down," says Coyote. The story revolves around the discovery by two lawyers that their client has committed the murder of which he has been accused. They must then decide whether to disclose this information, or legally uphold the suspect's confidence.

Explaining his initial reaction, Coyote says: "I couldn't find a way to tell the victims' parents. Then I realized he had no choice. The law doesn't guarantee that people's hearts won't get broken — it does guarantee a fair trial."

Discounting the notion that he's played mainly dark, intellectual roles (in movies like "Heartbreakers") coyote points to "Sworn to Silence" for a role that this guy wasn't an intellectual. He just got inexorably drawn into the situation.

"We started with a good script, but it was the willingness to experiment, to find truthful and surprising ways to do things, that made this good," says Coyote. "Sometimes it was just a laugh you weren't expecting."

Coyote, who espouses Zen Buddhism, and who took 10 years off from his career to be "on the road," says that even though he was the third choice for "Sworn to Silence," he was glad to play yet another lawyer.

"He acted heroically," asserts Coyote. "As for me, I've played so many lawyers, I should get an honorary membership to the bar."

Sam Fischetti (Peter Coyote, r.) faces a legal and moral dilemma when he discovers that his client (Liam Neeson) is guilty of the murder of which he's been accused. "Sworn to Silence" airs Monday, April 6, on ABC.

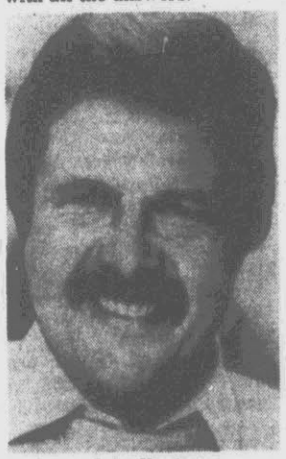
HOLLYWOOD REPORT

John Karlen: An actor with a real message

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — Actor John Karlen has a message for the makers of TV movies-with-a-message, and the message is "Forget it!" Karlen, best known as Harvey Lacey, a rock-like cop's spouse in "Cagney & Lacey," does paternal duty again in "Daddy," an ABC movie airing Sunday, April 5. The movie focuses on a teenager who gets his girlfriend pregnant, and has to rethink his entire future. Karlen has adjusted to the fact that although his background is in Shakespeare and other classics, he has not been out of work since he came to Hollywood, even if he's stuck with an image as a levelheaded dad with all the answers.



John Karlen

"I got this gig because of Harvey Lacey, and I'm thankful for it," says Karlen. "It doesn't matter that I played heavies and hard cases before 'Cagney & Lacey' came along five years ago ... people in the casting business tend to have very short memories. Actors don't, though, and I'll never forget that when it comes to telling a story, messages are for Western Union, as the saying goes.

"I very much doubt that any kid is going to watch 'Daddy' and change the way he behaves with his girlfriend. If we're lucky, it might give him something to think about while we're on the air. I hope he and his family will enjoy the movie. But I don't believe that anyone's life is changed by what he or she sees on TV.

"A TV movie about alcoholism is not, unfortunately, going to stop a drunk from driving home," asserts Karlen. "Assuming that he's sober enough to watch it in the first place. What might stop him is if he or someone he loves is in an accident — but even that isn't certain."

Adds Karlen: "I'm not suggesting that TV should not tackle serious subjects and should only concern itself with the frivolous and unimportant. 'Cagney & Lacey' has a reputation for informing as well as entertaining, but the emphasis has to be on capturing the audience's attention and holding it. I don't think you can do that if you try to use TV solely as a method of putting your ideas across.

"People don't want to be lectured — they want their minds to be distracted from the world's problems," he says. "Writers and actors and producers and directors have been stating their opinions on stage since before Shakespeare ... but it has to be subtle."

SUNDAY
TRADING PLACES

In "Trading Places," street-wise con man Billy Ray Valentine (Eddie Murphy, l.) and financial wizard Louis Winthorpe III (Dan Aykroyd) find their lives turned around by two billionaire brothers who use them as pawns in an elaborate game of greed. The 1983 movie airs Sunday, April 5 on NBC.

MONDAY
COUNTRY MUSIC AWARDS

Host Patrick Duffy holds a trophy called The Hat which will be given to each winner in 11 categories for "The 22nd Annual Academy of Country Music Awards," which NBC airs on Monday, April 6.

TV Chatter

He has been called Johnny Carson with an extension cord. He has also proved himself adept at hustling Coca-Cola. After his success on British TV and Cinemax, network television was the inevitable next step. So, Max Headroom, the computer-generated talk-show host, now has his own adventure series on ABC, which airs Tuesday nights.

At first, it wasn't fun for Matt Frewer, the 29-year-old Canadian actor who plays Max. "For ages they wanted to shroud the whole thing in mystery to preserve the ruse that I was actually a computer-generated image," Frewer says. Frewer was even forbidden to do press interviews. "I got a tougher agent," he says, explaining his many appearances in the press these days. Max Headroom does look like a computer-generated image. To achieve that effect, every 12th frame is removed from the videotape "to create the impression Max is trying to catch up with himself to ask for an autograph," Frewer jokes. But the real magic takes place in the makeup chair, where Frewer has to endure four-and-a-half hours of being turned into Max and 90 minutes more to remove the stuff. "It was easier in England," he says. "It takes more time here because it's hotter, and the makeup tends to turn into the consistency of bubblegum."

After years of portraying the super-honest supercop Eliot Ness on "The Untouchables," Robert Stack is relishing his role as bad guy Roland Saunders on "Falcon Crest." "Clark Gable once said acting is either like getting paid for having a good time or it's like digging your own grave," says Stack. " 'Falcon Crest' is like getting paid for having a good time. It gives me a chance to be kind of mean and rascally, smoke a cigar and pretend I'm (gangster) Frank Nitti." But the real reason Stack took the role is simply that his old buddy Jane Wyman asked him. " 'Falcon Crest' is like going to a cocktail party with old friends," he says. But it wasn't Stack's "Falcon Crest" role that kept him out of the forthcoming feature-film version of "The Untouchables." "Eliot Ness is being played as a 27-year-old, and that locks me out for a good many years," says Stack, 68.

Dabney Coleman insists he hasn't specialized in playing bad guys. He points to roles in "On Golden Pond" as XX and as CBS chairman William S. Paley in HBO's "Murrow" as proof he can play good guys. But ask the dapper actor what his upcoming acting assignments are, and he replies, "I play a porno publisher in 'Dragnet 1987' with Dan Aykroyd, and an evil stockbroker in 'Hot to Trot.' " Both are feature films.

On April 6, Coleman again plays a flawed character — but not a total villain — in "Sworn to Silence," an ABC movie. As an alcoholic attorney on the skids, Coleman defends a psychopath who confesses that he has killed two children whose parents think they are only missing. The community is outraged when the murders are later revealed, along with Coleman's prior knowledge of them. "It's the law, a pledge attorneys take not to reveal privileged information supplied by the client," he says. "My character sacrifices himself and his family to uphold the law."

When asked what historical characters he would like to play most, Coleman replied, "Richard Nixon — he loved his children."

William Converse-Roberts and Hallie Foote fall in love in "Courtship," Episode I of the five-part miniseries "Story of a Marriage." The story, by Horton Foote, traces the history of the author's family in a small Texas community from the turn of the 20th century through the end of WWI. It airs on "American Playhouse" Monday, April 6, on PBS. (Check local listings.)

Play ball! Marv Albert returns as the host of the weekly 15-minute baseball pre-game show "Major League Baseball: An Inside Look." It airs Saturday, April 11, on NBC.

Take the Clara Johnson Test.

In Alamance County, North Carolina, Honda lawn mowers are assembled from the wheels up. Then each mower must pass rigid quality control standards before we ship it.

The final test is a critical performance check to ensure easy starting. We call it the Clara Johnson Test. At the end of the assembly line, each mower is started or it doesn't ship.

Come in and give the whole line of Honda mowers the Clara Johnson Test yourself. Each one will start easily, or it wouldn't be a Honda.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: I haven't seen or heard anything about a new James Bond movie. Is a new one under way starring Roger Moore or Sean Connery? — TODD JONES, DURHAM, N.C.

Moore and Connery are out, and Timothy Dalton ("Sins," "Mistral's Daughter") is in as the newest 007 — a job that almost went to "Remington Steele" star Pierce Brosnan. Look for Dalton, a 41-year-old Welshman, in "The Living Daylights," the 15th of the Bond sagas.

It is scheduled for release this July, and pits 007 against a merciless arms dealer played by Joe Don Baker. Dalton, the fourth actor to play Bond, is said to most resemble the first 007 (Sean Connery), both physically and in his on-screen interpretation of Ian Fleming's character.

Dear Michele: What are Sly Stallone's future professional plans? — DIANE SHEFFIELD, INDEPENDENCE, MO.

Stallone's current film "Over the Top" is a flop — more evidence that he can't produce a hit unless it's an "R and R" (Rocky or Rambo) movie. He's determined his next outing will be big at the box-office. So "Rambo III" is Currently on the agenda. Unfortunately for Stallone, the critical and commercial success of the Vietnam film "Platoon" has ambushed "Rambo." The realism of "Platoon" has made the "Rambo" films look exploitative, so Stallone has been furiously at work rewriting the script.

Dear Michele: Help! What is the name of the boy who appeared with Kelly McGillis and Harrison Ford in the film "Witness"? — MARTIN RUBIN, MATAWAN, N.J.

The role of Samuel, the Amish boy, was portrayed by Lukas Haas, then 11 years old. Since that 1985 film, Lukas has also appeared in "My Dissident Mom," a CBS movie that co-starred Martin Sheen and Annie Potts.

Dear Michele: When was "Kiss Meets the Phantom," the movie starring the rock band Kiss, released? — AMANDA SIMMONS, ESPANOLA, N. M.

A TV movie, "Kiss Meets the Phantom of the Park," was released in 1978, at the height of the band's popularity.

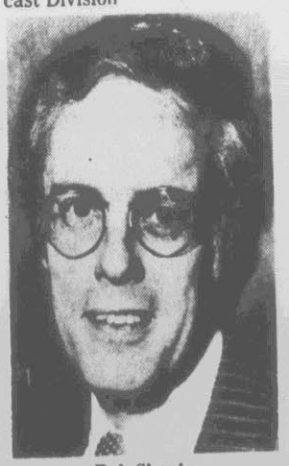
BEHIND THE SCENES

Betting that viewers will wake to humor

By Frank Lovece

For Bob Shanks, no news is good news, sort of.

"It's not a news show," says Shanks, creator and executive producer of CBS' "Morning Program." It airs weekdays at 7:30 a.m. (E.T.), and has been criticized by the press for its on-air hijinks. "However," he adds, "contrary to what's been written, we don't report to the Entertainment Division. We report to the (overall) Broadcast Division."



Bob Shanks

It's said that Shanks wrote the book on TV producing: His 1976 primer, "The Cool Fire," is still respected. In nearly 30 years in TV, he's worked for all three networks and PBS. He helped turn ABC's "A.M. America" into "Good Morning America," which successfully fought NBC's "Today" for a time. Whatever "The Morning Program" is, it's not either of those.

Co-hosted by Mariette Hartley and Rolland Smith, "The Morning Program" is a fluffy, small-town biscuit compared to "GMA" 's suburban buttered toast and "Today" 's urban croissant. If you like biscuits, "The Morning Program" can be tasty. Shanks knew that morning audiences don't change their diet easily — CBS has tried in vain for years to get them to do so.

The network lured the veteran Shanks, an independent producer for the previous six years, by giving him, he says, "a blank page. They'd tried valiantly to do a morning show, there had been some fine manifestations, but all three morning shows were starting to look alike. I thought the difference here could be comedy, a lighter hand."

He knew that move would draw criticism from journalists who argue for the sanctity of news shows: Until recently, news divisions weren't expected to be profitable for fear that putting profits first could jeopardize objectivity.

"I warned my staff that the newspapers would savage us, because they'd feel we were spoiling the news. But I think that shows a kind of conceit," he believes. "That divides the world into news and everything else. I love the juxtapositions on 'The Morning Program,' where you're seeing something serious one moment and laughing the next — just as in life. TV's conditioned us to watching 'Long Day's Journey into Night' one minute, and a Preparation H commercial the next.

"And besides," he adds, "if you want it, 'The CBS Morning News' is on right before us."

A Long Play's Journey

Throughout April Showtime will air "Long Day's Journey into Night," director Jonathan Miller's revival of the classic drama by Eugene O'Neill. Written in 1941, the play won a Pulitzer Prize when it was first produced in 1956. Last year's revival, starring Jack Lemmon as James Tyrone, enjoyed successful runs on Broadway and in London's West End. Lemmon is featured in the Showtime presentation.

More Magnum

CBS has renewed "Magnum, P.I." for the 1987-88 season. Tom Selleck will stay on for an eighth season as Magnum, and John Hillerman will continue as Higgins, his English manservant. The series,set in Hawaii, now airs on Wednesdays.

INSIDE CANADA

Much-hailed '90 Days' makes it to the CBC.

By Bob Remington

An offbeat film that became the toast of the Toronto and Montreal Film Festivals in 1985 gets some well-deserved exposure Sunday, April 5, on the CBC. "90 Days," which had a limited run after its successful festival debut, is charming, mature and worth every viewing minute.

Burt Lancaster

"90 Days" is about two buddies: Blue has trouble finding women; Alex has trouble keeping them. Alex, a philanderer who gets tossed out by his wife, envisions a lively affair when approached by a beautiful woman, only to discover that her interest is limited to his medical history. A $10,000 fee piques his interest, however, even if it means subjecting himself to the possibility of being rejected as a donor if he has "lazy sperm."

Blue, a lumpier sort with not much flair for the ladies, searches for happiness through a catalogue of Korean mail-order brides. After making his selection, he drives to the airport a week later to find the demure Hyang-Sook, who speaks barely a word of English and doesn't know what to make of her new surroundings. If they don't marry within 90 days, her visa expires and she must return to Korea.

The movie is humorous, but director/writer Giles Walker is a sensitive filmmaker who doesn't trivialize the delicate topics. Stefan Wodoslawsky as Blue and Sam Grana as Alex are almost as perfect as the film, which for some strange reason got stiffed at Canada's Oscars, the Genie Awards.

Several rungs down the quality ladder but entertaining nonetheless is "Control," a TV movie airing Monday, April 6, on CTV. Burt Lancaster, Ben Gazzara and Kate Nelligan star in this psycho-drama about 15 strangers who spend 20 days together in a bomb shelter as part of a scientific experiment. Matters take a dramatic turn when a nuclear nightmare is played out before the participants on TV.

"Control" is a Canada/France/Italy co-production with an impressive cast and crew. It ran in February in the United States on Home Box Office.

On the sports beat this week, CBC carries the finals of the Men's World Curling Championships, on Sunday, April 5, from Vancouver. CBC also has the Masters Golf Tournament Saturday, April 11, a simulcast with CBS. And the start of the annual marathon of hockey playoffs is tentatively scheduled for Wednesday, April 8, and Thursday, April 9.

TUESDAY
MOONLIGHTING

Eager young sleuth Herbert Viola (Curtis Armstrong) is a member of the Blue Moon Detective Agency on ABC's "Moonlighting." The series airs Tuesday, April 7.

WEDNESDAY
MAGNUM, P.I.

On "Magnum, P.I." Magnum's (Tom Selleck) former wife, Michelle (guest star Marta DuBois) returns to Hawaii to entrust her young daughter to his care after she is forced to flee the political unrest in Vietnam. The CBS series airs Wednesday, April 8.

Rip Van Winkle brought to new life

By Debra Morgenstern Katz

What's the most wonderful aspect of Shelley Duvall's "Faerie Tale Theatre" on Showtime? It's not simply the stories, which we've all heard countless times from when we were very young — although Duvall's versions are embellished with ironies and witticisms that Hans Christian Andersen and the Brothers Grimm probably never imagined.

Talia Shire

It's the talent that goes into the productions that's so special, making for marvelous directing, writing, set design and acting. In "Rip Van Winkle," the latest installment, airing April 9, Duvall has assembled a stellar cast and crew, starting with director Francis Ford Coppola ("The Godfather," "Apocalypse Now," "Peggy Sue Got Married"), making his television directing debut. Here he collaborated with Japanese designer Eiko Ishioka for a look that's decidedly unreal, and unabashedly make-believe.

Harry Dean Stanton plays the lazy and slow-moving Rip Van Winkle, who whiles away his days sleeping on the porch rocking chair. His shrew of a wife, played by Talia Shire, continually harasses him — though Stanton is a lovable Van Winkle, it's hard to blame her — to get at least one thing done each day. Finally, he goes off into the Catskill mountains to hunt — and doesn't return for 20 years.

Deep in those mountains Van Winkle has met up with the ghosts of Henry Hudson and crew, who have given him a drinking potion that puts him into his long sleep. When Van Winkle awakens, he has missed not only the death of his wife and the maturing of his son, but the entire American Revolution as well.

The Washington Irving tale was adapted for "Faerie Tale Theatre" by Mark Curtiss and Rod Ash. Co-starring in the classic fable are Ed Begley Jr. ("St. Elsewhere"), Christopher Penn, John P. Ryan, Hunter Carson and Tim Conway.

The next two "Faerie Tale Theatre" episodes will be "The Little Mermaid," starring Pam Dawber, and "The Dancing Princess," with Lesley Ann Warren.

For Leonard, Hagler, Payday Has Arrived

By Adam Beckerman

Would you step into the ring against Marvelous Marvin Hagler for $11 million? OK. Then, would you put on the gloves and go against even a one-eyed Sugar Ray Leonard for $12 million?

It's the first week of April, and baseball's opening day and golf's Masters Tournament are being upstaged by the latest Fight of the Century on Monday, April 6. It's the $100 million middleweight prizefight in Las Vegas between Hagler and Leonard. So, who do you like: Sugar Ray, 30, smooth and pretty, or the Marvelous One, 32 (35?), a destroyer of bodies and hearts, 12-time successful defender of his world middleweight belt?

Because of retina problems, Leonard has fought only once since 1982. In that fight he scored an unimpressive ninth-round victory over journeyman Kevin Howard. We remember Sugar Ray's '76 Olympicglory, his love affair with the public, his 15-round loss to Roberto Duran — the only blemish on his 33-1 record — and the vengeance he extracted in their rematch, punctuated by Duran's "no mas" surrender.

What remains is the mystery of why Leonard feels he must face Hagler. Is $11 million worth the risk of blindness?

In Joyce Carol Oates' shrewd, impassioned meditation "On Boxing" (Dolphin/ Doubleday), several passages can be applied to Monday night's spectacle. "Boxing is for men, and is about men, and is men. A celebration of the lost religion of masculinity all the more trenchant for its being lost. ... Just as a boxer is his body, a man's masculinity is his use of his body. But it is also his triumph over another's use of his body. ... Sugar Ray Leonard speaks of coming out of retirement to fight one man, Marvin Hagler. 'I want Hagler. I need that man.'"

Is anybody talking about women's tennis? That's probably why the Ocean Spray Challenge of the Champions has been invented. In a unique doubles competition designed to benefit the Women's Sports Foundation, Martina Navratilova and Billie Jean King will meet Chris Evert Lloyd and Pam Shriver in a three-set match Sunday afternoon, April 5, on ABC.

"Breakaway" is the key word. A specified sum of money will be at stake in each game, to be earned only if service is broken. If serve is held, the money is carried over to the next game. The maximum liability is $235,000.

Assuming the bout with Leonard goes 12 rounds, Hagler will have earned that much in the first 40 seconds.

Winter Is Really Over! Baseball Returns To TV

By Andrew J. Edelstein

The last baseball game most of us saw on network TV was the memorable seventh game of the 1986 World Series in which the miracle New York Mets staged their second consecutive come-from-behind victory to defeat the bedraggled Boston Red Sox.

One hundred and sixty-six days later, baseball returns to the tube — and not a moment too soon. On Saturday, April 11, NBC kicks off its "Game of the Week" and one of the contests features those very same New York Mets.

The Met-Brave matchup marks what will be the first of many times this season we'll see the defending World Series champs on national TV. Rarely in recent years has one team inspired such intense, rabid feelings — pro and con. This game will be from Shea Stadium, so the noise level for Messrs Carter, Strawberry, Hernandez, et al, will most likely drown out the overhead jets from nearby LaGuardia Airport.

The alternate game pits the Los Angeles Dodgers against the San Francisco Giants. This season marks the 30th anniversary of the arrival in California of the Brooklyn Dodgers and New York Giants, an act that broke many New Yorkers' hearts. Although there were times (especially during the early '60s) when the rivalry generated some heat, the West Coast version has never really approximated the intensity of the Dodgers-Giants battles when they both called New York City home.

Easter bunnies. Easter baskets. And precious little kids with chocolate on their faces. Those are images you'll always treasure. So after you take your Easter pictures, take them to Revco. At Revco you not only get top quality film developing, you get to choose how you want your pictures to come back. Thanks to our PhotoOption program.

PhotoOption A. Do you want a single set of quality, glossy prints? And do you want them the day after you bring them in? That's what you get with PhotoOption A, and at a price that's more than reasonable.

PhotoOption B. If you want a set of glossy prints for yourself, and a set to share with a friend, you want our 2 'n 2 program. You get two glossy prints from each negative in two days. And the color is identical on both sets.

PhotoOption C. We call this our Gold Seal 35 Option. And it's for 35mm film only. You get a state of the art, computer controlled set of larger than normal pictures that have quality printed all over them. And to make sure they're as good as we say they are, we double inspect them and safeguard them in special Gold Seal packaging.

Special Offer. We know you'll want to share your Easter pictures with the grandparents. So here's a special offer. Bring your film in before Sunday, April 26, and we'll give you PhotoOption B for the price of PhotoOption A. That way you'll have a set of prints to keep and a set of prints to share. Happy Easter!

"It's pea soup with marshmallows melted in it. Hot cocoa is too fattening!"

"It never fails! Either I don't cook enough or else I cook too much!"

"I almost choked on one of your stupid stale-bread chunks! See you in court!"

"It's an updated version of 'Gone With The Wind.' Rhett and Scarlet just sit and watch TV for 800 pages."

"I'm sorry I trimmed my toenails during dinner, Judge Harriet. May I have a pardon?"

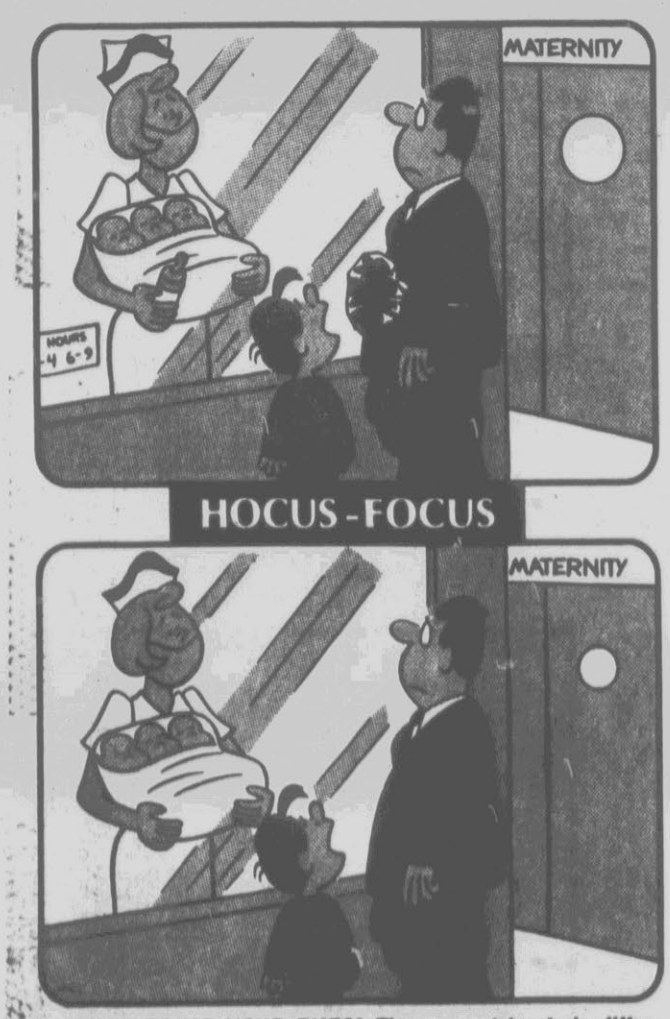
FOR BETTER OR FOR WORSE

BY LYNN JOHNSTON



CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with these below.

Differences: 1. Cap is different. 2. Bottle is missing. 3. Sign is missing. 4. Hand is moved. 5. Bouquet is missing. 6. Door opening is smaller.

Junior Whirl®

by Hal Kaufman

• OVER LIGHTLY! No matter how he looks at it, the young man at right is baffled by this topsy-turvy math problem: A certain two-digit number over 90 is doubled. The result is turned upside-down and divided by three for final total of 327.

With what number did the computation begin?

Worked out by trial and error, the number is 93.

MAGIC YOU CAN DO

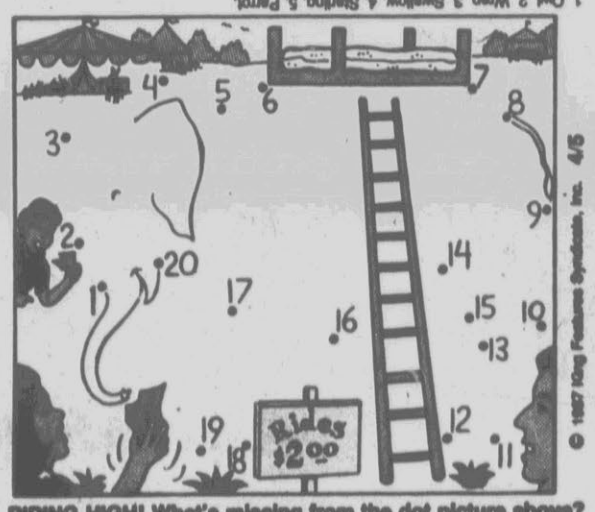
A piece of string is all that's needed to perform this vintage trick. Form a loop in the string by holding ends between thumb and forefinger. Lay the end of the loop on the table and swing the rest of the string across the loop, as in figure 1, above.

Now, invite someone to place a finger at the point indicated by star. Jerk the string and presto, string will pull free.

Should you lay out the string with hand inverted, as in figure 2, a jerk of the string will cause a snag.

• BIRD LAND! Cross out one letter and sub another in each word for the name of a bird: 1. Awl. 2. When. 3. Shallow. 4. Sterling. 5. Carrot. Answer within one minute, if you can.

1. Owl. 2. Wren. 3. Swallow. 4. Starling. 5. Parrot.



RIDING HIGH! What's missing from the dot picture above? To find out, add connecting lines, 1, 2, 3, etc.

SPELLBINDER

SCORE 10 points for using all the letters in the word below to form two complete words:

INSULATE

THEN score 2 points each for all words of four letters or more found among the letters.

Try to score at least 16 points.
