Salvage Crews Begin Righting Capsized Ferry

By ROBERT J. WIELAARD
Associated Press Writer

ZEEBRUGGE, Belgium (AP) — After a month of preparation, barges and huge floating cranes today began righting the British ferry that capsized off this North Sea port, killing an estimated 195 people.

Salvage officer Geert Koffeman said the operation, the first step in the recovery of up to 134 bodies still inside the vessel 4½ weeks after it capsized, was proceeding smoothly.

"We are past the critical phase," he said shortly after midday. Righting the ferry was expected to take most of the day.

Tugboats and other small salvage craft were sent to the scene to retrieve any bodies that might be flushed out of the 7,951-ton ferry Herald of Free Enterprise.

The corpses of 61 victims were recovered in the days after the March 6 disaster. Officials said 348 people survived.

With the lifting of an early morning haze, two big barges began tugging at heavy steel cables attached to 32 points along the ferry's exposed starboard side.

The barges, aided by enormous floating cranes on the other side of the ferry, were to roll the ferry back onto its keel as they winched their way toward 16 steel pilings hammered into the seabed 150 yards from the vessel.

At first, three cranes took part, but Koffeman said one was withdrawn shortly after midday because it was not needed.

Officials said it would take up to eight hours to right the ferry, which before the operation began lay at a 100-degree angle on its port side.

"Everything is going according to schedule," Marcel Rutjens, a salvaging officer, said as the ferry's starboard funnel broke through the surface.

Officials reported later that oil was leaking from the stern of the ferry, possibly from trucks on board. Salvage craft stretched a rubber boom along the surface of the water in an attempt to contain the oil spill.

Twenty divers were standing by to enter the ferry in search of bodies as soon as the ship was steady on its keel. The bodies were to be taken to the Zeebrugge naval base for identification.

In Dover, England, a ferry steward who survived the accident was quoted Monday night as saying he warned the assistant purser that water was pouring into the vessel minutes before the ship capsized.

The British news agency Press Association quoted the steward, John Butler, as saying he thought the water came from a burst pipe, and that he was told not to worry.

Earlier Monday, Press Association quoted a confidential report being prepared by Zeebrugge Maritime Police Chief Jose van den Bussche as saying a ferry steward twice warned senior crew members of water surging through the ship. The report did not give the name of the steward, and it was not clear if it was Butler. Butler said he only gave one warning.

The ferry capsized in less than a minute about 1,000 yards offshore. The cause is being investigated in Belgium and Britain.

Study Of Park Expenses Urged

By DON REUTER

The Greenville City Council needs to seriously consider increased expenses connected with River Park North before appropriating funds to the proposed science and nature center, according to council member Lorraine Shinn.

"I went back and researched this a great deal," Mrs. Shinn told council members at a workshop Monday night. "We need to seriously look at these issues."

The City Council, which originally set aside $250,000 for construction and installation of a planetarium, delayed decisions on the bid award and budget amendment on construction of the science and nature buildings at a March 23 meeting until spending questions could be resolved.

A negotiated bid of $283,895 for the facility came in $33,895 over budget for the project, according to Boyd Lee, director of recreation and parks.

According to a proposed budget ordinance, unspent funds designated

Road Work Package OK'd By Pitt Board

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners Monday gave their approval to a state Department of Transportation-proposed $809,100 secondary roads improvement program for the county for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Randy Doub, a member of the Board of Transportation, told commissioners that it is anticipated that Pitt County will receive $747,000 in secondary road construction funds in the coming fiscal year. The new allocation, added to $62,100 in unallocated funds on hand will give the DOT just $809,100 to spend on paving and upgrading secondary roads in the county.

Saying the anticipated $747,000 allocation is $102,240 or 15 percent more than the secondary road allocation for the county this fiscal year, which began July 1, 1986.

The county's allocation is based on a formula which takes into account the number of unpaved miles of secondary roads in North Carolina, Doub said, adding that Pitt County has 238.44 miles of unpaved secondary roads and 539.6 miles of paved secondary roads.

The secondary road program in Pitt for the coming year proposes to pave 8 roads totaling 6.4 miles, and improving other roads.

Ottis Potter, district engineer for the DOT, in presenting the secondary road program to commissioners, said roads included for paving in the coming fiscal year include: .3 mile of SR 1202, from end of pavement on SR 1202 to N.C. 43, at an estimated cost of $25,800; .24 mile of SR 1534A, the Old Pactolus Road, from end of pavement to N.C. 33 at a cost of $25,500; .9 mile of SR 1524, the Brown Road, from N.C. 903 to SR 1523, at a cost of $41,600 and 1 mile of SR 1124A, the Pollard Road, from U.S. 264 to SR 1207.

Other paving projects include: .8 mile of SR 1104, the Pat Dawson Road, from N.C. 11 to SR 1105, for $83,800; .5 mile of SR 1741 from N.C. 43 to SR 1774 for $51,000; 1 mile of SR 1724A, the Emma Cannon Road, from N.C. 102 to SR 1723, for $45,000 and 1.7 miles of SR 1123, from N.C. 903 to SR 1114 at a cost of $77,800.

Other projects included in the secondary road improvement program for the coming fiscal year include: acquire right-of-way for paving .7 mile of SR 1729, Bells Fork Road, from end of pavement to N.C. 43 at a cost of $1,000; widen the existing 18 feet pavement on 2.7 miles of SR 1551, the Robersonville Road, to 22 feet from SR 1551 to SR 1552 at a cost of $144,100; widen the existing 18 feet pavement on 1.2 miles of SR 1552, the Robersonville Road, to 22 feet from SR 1551 to SR 1549 at a cost of $50,300 and stabilize soil roads, including SR 1208, 1240, 1242, 1283, 1534, 1536, 1564, 1565, 1739, 1743, 1905 at a cost of $127,100.

Potter said the average cost per mile of paved secondary roads in the Pitt County area is about $100,000, while the cost per mile in the mountains of western North Carolina is between $150,000 and $200,000.

Doub told the board that "1987 is the year" that the 4-lane U.S. 264 will

Elections Paper Action Delayed

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County commissioners — for the second time in a week — postponed action Monday on adopting a position paper on a proposed new method of electing members of the board.

Commissioners said the delay would provide more time to negotiate for black support for at-large representatives on the board.

The board was scheduled to take action on the position paper at a meeting March 30, but delayed action to give time for negotiations.

According to the proposal the commissioners are considering, six members of the board would be elected from six new districts — two of which are predominantly black. Three commissioners would be elected by at-large voting and could live in any part of the county.

At a meeting earlier last month, Raleigh lawyer Michael Crowell, hired to help develop a new method of electing the board which would conform to requirements of the federal Voting Rights Act and give blacks an opportunity to be elected, suggested that the U.S. Justice Department is unlikely to approve a six-three plan unless it has support from the black community.

"They (the Justice Department) generally have a bias against at-large seats," Crowell said.

So the board asked Crowell to meet with representatives of black organizations in the county in an effort to gain their support for three at-large seats.

The paper, read at Monday's meeting, says in part that, "The position of the Pitt County Board of Commissioners is to implement a plan which will benefit all of the citizens of the county," by enlarging the board from its present six members to nine members.

"The minority has the opportunity to elect one of their group in both (predominately black districts), but also ... by creating" three at-large seats, the chances of black citizens electing a candidate to one of the seats "is greatly improved," the position paper suggests.

"The board is genuinely concerned with the rights of all the citizens of Pitt County," according to the position paper.

Rather than deny black citizens who reside outside the two predominantly black districts "the same opportunity to have a representative on the board as is afforded residents within (the two predominantly black districts), the commissioners have provided for three at-large positions, which opens the avenue for those citizens outside the predominantly black districts to have an opportunity to be elected to office."

"Evidence indicates that such offices on the City Council of Greenville have been filled by minorities since 1969, even though the population of Greenville is predominantly white (and) there is reason to believe that one-third or more of the compliment of the board of commissioners can be filled by members of the minority population" under the proposed six-three plan.

"The board further believes," according to the position paper, "that for the sake of representative government in Pitt County each citizen should be able to not only vote but directly hold accountable four commissioners rather than one," as would be the case if only one commissioner is elected from each of the six proposed districts.

Commissioner Tom Johnson, after the reading of the position paper, said "I do not want members of the county commissioners to just represent specific districts ... but represent the entire county. I believe it's in the best interest (of the county) to accept a compromise of some sort."

"We want to do what's best for Pitt County," Eugene James said.

"This is a very serious matter to us," Commissioner Kenneth Dews suggested. "I place great weight and priority (on the proposition that) every man, every woman be allowed to run for any office in this county."

"In this county the six districts are necessary. The three at-large will

Equipment Bid Defended

By DON REUTER

Specifications for Greenville's proposed communications system were not designed to favor any company despite the submission of only one bid on the equipment, the president of the city's consulting firm says.

"We are not affiliated with any vendors or manufacturers of communications equipment and our primary responsibility is to provide our clients with objective and unbiased technical assistance to optimize their communications goals," Gene A. Buzzi, president of Omnicom Inc., said.

Buzzi met with members of the Greenville City Council and the in-house committee on radio communications Monday to discuss questions raised in connection with the proposed $651,720 system. The council is expected to vote on the bid proposal by Motorola Thursday night.

"Omnicom's principal activity is the provision of communications and related system engineering and consulting services to state, county, and municipal government agencies for public safety and public service communications requirements," Buzzi said.

"Omnicom's technical staff possess the broad experience, extensive knowledge and academic and professional credentials that assures our clients that we are second to none in the field of public safety and public service communications engineering and consulting."

Buzzi, and Philip Y. Byrd, treasurer and chief engineer for Omnicom, attempted to answer questions raised by the Mayor's Communications Ad Hoc Committee.

"The purpose of the meeting is to shed additional light on the radio system that has been in the works for about two and a half years now," said Ron Kimble, finance director and chairman of the in-house committee on radio communications.

"We're coming down to a point where a decision is going to have to be made."

Omnicom held a pre-bid conference with representatives of both General Electric and Motorola at which time each company was allowed to suggest revisions in order to compete for the bid, according to Buzzi, who said his company didn't design a system to be comprised of a variety of vendors.

"The specifications are not slanted towards Motorola," he said. "The specifications are written for a 'turnkey' system so that one vendor provides all the equipment in the spec plan. The only time we write a specification that is not 'turnkey' is when our client has an engineering and technician staff that can handle multiple member systems."

"In a city the size of Greenville, with limited technical capability, the turnkey system is the only option available."

Buzzi said the primary goal of the project was to enable all city departments to communicate with each other. Presently, the police department is on VHF (very high frequency) high band, while the fire department, recreation and parks, public works and engineering and inspections are on VHF low band.

"Our main theme was to address the issue of compatibility among city agencies," Buzzi said, "and to enhance the city's capability not only to perform routine public safety functions with this communications system, but also to be capable of operating in an emergency environment in such cases of natural disaster or anything of that sort."

Buzzi said a duplex operation was

Back In Hospital

Malcolm Huffman, Pitt County Memorial Hospital's first heart transplant patient, is back in the hospital, but hospital officials say there's no cause for alarm.

According to Art Schneider, hospital transplant coordinator, Huffman, a Washington resident, was experiencing slight dehydration and was readmitted to Pitt Memorial for adjustment of his medication to alleviate the hydration problem. He said a regularly scheduled biopsy to check for signs of rejection of his new heart has been postponed. The biopsy would have been done on an outpatient basis, but now may be done before he leaves the hospital.

Huffman, 58, a retired auto mechanic, had a heart transplant Feb. 17 and left the hospital March 31. Doctors say he is recovering remarkably well.

Drug Arrests

Pitt County deputies have arrested two more local men in connection with a drug investigation which uncovered just over two pounds of cocaine last week, Sheriff Ralph Tyson said today.

Tyson said Kite was charged seven counts of trafficking, sale and delivery and possession of cocaine, while Taylor was charged with 15 counts of similar charges in connection with a May 1986 drug sale.

The men were placed in Pitt County Jail under $250,000 bond each, Tyson said.

Deputies also arrested an Ayden woman early today in connection with the investigation, according to Tyson who was unable to provide additional details.

Tyson said the State Bureau of Investigation assisted in the arrests.

But before action to approve the position paper was taken, Ernest Brown, representing the Concerned Citizens for Justice, a local civil rights group, said "we oppose the six-three plan."

But Arlee Griffin, representing the Black Ministers Conference in the county, said "I don't think we've had an opportunity to respond to the position paper."

"We're not in support of this particular plan," Griffin said. We'd like to see some further negotiating done."

Leslie Winner, a Charlotte lawyer representing the Concerned Citizens for Justice then told commissioners "I don't want the board to have any wrong illusions," but agreed to continue negotiations.

"There will not be a compromise as long as this board wants three at-large seats," she said, but suggested that her clients might agree to one at-large seat.

The board scheduled a meeting for 8 a.m. Wednesday to once again consider the election change.

In a meeting with members of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board Monday, commissioners were told that Pitt's nine ABC stores ranked fourth in the state in the percent of profit for the fiscal year, which ended June 30, 1986, on net sales of $2.7 million.

Davenport noted that Pitt's gross sales of just over $5 million ranked "10th or 11th" in the state during the same period.

Commissioners also met in executive session to discuss property matters.

Housing Units Sought

The Greenville Housing Authority has adopted a resolution authorizing the submission of an application to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development for 32 new units of conventional housing.

"Initial planning is to place them in Meadowbrook and Newtown projects," GHA Executive Director Kenneth E. Noland said. "The waiting list dictates the need."

The authority also approved a revision to both the conventional admission policy and the Section 8 admission plan to incorporate new federally mandated income levels.

Under the Section 8 program, tenants apply for assistance certificates from the GHA and then look at the housing market, according to Noland, who said the GHA assists tenants with rent and utilities after both sides agree upon conditions.

Members of the authority were also told that a utility allowance study would be ready for the next meeting if the contactors are on time, according to Noland.

James E. Barnhill, director of operations, reported the average rent at authority developments in March totaled $124.74. Rent at Meadowbrook was $111.58; Kearney Park, $134.19; Moyewood I, $128.41; Moyewood II, $118.80; Hopkins Park, $127.62; Newtown, $120.33, and West Meadowbrook, $97.55.

Body Search In Rain-Swollen Creek Continues

By MARY ESCH
Associated Press Writer

AMSTERDAM, N.Y. (AP) — The raging creek beneath the wreck of an interstate highway bridge rose again today, hampering both the search for more bodies and the investigation of why the span collapsed.

A tractor-trailer and at least three cars plunged 80 feet into the swollen Schoharie Creek on Sunday when about 400 feet of the New York State Thruway bridge collapsed.

The water had receded Monday, after as much as 9 inches of rain fell in the previous 48 hours, allowing searchers to recover three bodies.

But the rain resumed Monday afternoon and fell through the night. At 6 a.m. today, the National Weather Service said the Schoharie was back at flood stage.

"The water really hasn't gone down at all," State Trooper Robert Armet said at the scene this morning. "In fact, it's on the upgrade." He said it was too risky to send divers into the churning brown water.

The collapse of the Interstate 90 bridge, about 35 miles west of Albany, prompted immediate inspection of the 819 bridges along the 559-mile highway, said Thruway Authority deputy executive director James A. Martin.

As the reddish-brown water retreated Monday from nearby farmland, wrecked vehicles became visible in the stream.

One body, identified by state police as Douglas Lee Shive, 68, of Manchester, N.H., was removed from a crushed white Cadillac on a sand bar about three-quarters of a mile downstream from the bridge Sunday night.

The bodies of two other men were removed from a gray Cadillac about a half-mile from the bridge Monday morning. The two, who had not been identified late Monday, were from Ontario, Canada, said trooper Edward Dyer.

State police had said Monday a fourth body was spotted downstream in the Mohawk River from a police helicopter, but later in the day officials said that was only a rumor.

Three missing Niagara Mohawk Power Corp. employees who had been returning to Albany on Sunday from an overnight stay in Syracuse may be among the bridge's victims, said the utility and the families of two of the men. Thomas Wetmiller, another Niagara Mohawk employee, said he was driving a few minutes behind the missing men's car, and got to the bridge a few minutes after it collapsed.

The trailer of a truck was pulled from the rushing current with cables and winches Monday afternoon, but searchers could not locate the cab. The truck was from Wisconsin, said state police Lt. Mike Wright.

"There are other cars missing, but I won't comment on how many or on how many people may be in them," said Montgomery County Sheriff Ronald Emery.

At least one other car was believed to have plunged into the creek.

"In this kind of current, it's impossible to do an underwater search," said Trooper Michael Brosnan, one of four state police divers who helped recover the trailer.

By Monday, the water had receded 12 to 15 feet from Sunday's level, but persistent rain forced the floodwaters higher Monday night.

State workers, aided by floodlights, planned to stay on the scene overnight to secure the area, Wright said.

A man who helped design the 31-year-old girder bridge said erosion of the supports was probably the best explanation. "A bridge that is in good service for so many years does not simply fall down," said Lionel Pavlo, head of Pavlo Engineering Co. of New York City.

National Weather Service meteorologist Bob Thomas said Saturday's flow was the largest recorded on the Schoharie since 1955.

Gov. Mario Cuomo appointed state Health Commissioner David Axelrod to head a task force to investigate the collapse.

The National Transportation Safety Board also promised a thorough investigation, and Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., a member of the Senate's Environmental and Public Works panel said after visiting the site Monday that he wanted to open hearings on the collapse.

The bridge was last inspected in April 1986. Axelrod said it was given an overall rating of five on a scale of one to seven, with one being the worst. The inspectors, however, were unable to check the foundation of two of four piers or concrete and steel columns supporting the roadway because they were under water, Axelrod said.

Highway officials said the fallen bridge went through extensive rehabilitation about two years ago.

The state will get a replacement bridge up as soon as possible, Cuomo said.

Thruway spokesman Raymond Makay said such a job usually takes two years but that authorities would try to speed up work.

This weekend, before the bridge collapse, state police made a visual inspection of the bridge and decided it was safe, Cuomo said.

The collapse, which forced the closing of about 25 miles of the highway, is expected to have a major impact on the area's trucking industry. Drivers will have to take detours of up to 20 miles on secondary roads.

About 25,000 vehicles crossed the bridge in a typical 24-hour period of heavy traffic, a Thruway official said. The highway runs from the New York City area north to Albany, then west to the Buffalo area.

Koop Says Children With AIDS Might Face More Than Disease

By JEFF BARKER
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Thousands of American children with AIDS could be abandoned by a society unwilling to provide them with the care and "just plain hugging" they need, said Surgeon General C. Everett Koop.

Koop told 150 AIDS experts at a conference continuing through Wednesday that the infection is most often found in children of economic classes that "have the least capacity and resources to cope."

Children with AIDS "suffer abandonment by the mother and society," Koop said Monday. The stigma of the disease means that few foster homes are available, and the children miss opportunities to be nurtured and interact with peers, Koop said.

"Such pregnancies are most likely to occur among black women under the age of 19, who are poor, who are not ready for the world of work, who may not even have a high school diploma and who do not have ready access, for whatever reasons, to good prenatal and perinatal health care," he said.

Koop invited physicians, social scientists and government health care officials to the conference and asked them for recommendations for preventing and coping with AIDS in children.

As of last week, 471 cases of AIDS were reported among children under age 13, Koop said. As many as 2,000 other children have symptoms of the infection, but are not counted because their conditions don't fit narrow federal guidelines, he added.

The Public Health Service estimates that 3,000 children will have the fatal disease within the next five years, Koop said.

AIDS attacks the body's immune system, leaving it unable to resist disease. There is no known cure.

Nearly two-thirds of pediatric AIDS cases are the result of transmission from infected mother to child before, during or shortly after birth. Although estimates vary, up to 65 percent of babies born to infected mothers will contract the disease, according to Koop.

More than half the babies born with AIDS are black and 25 percent are Hispanic, according to federal statistics.

Gwendolyn Scott, associate professor at the University of Miami School of Medicine, told the conferees of a Florida woman with AIDS who gave birth to four babies infected with the virus. The mother found out she had AIDS after the second birth, but continued to have children.

"But some women have delivered both infected and non-infected babies," she said, adding that scientists are still trying to learn what factors were at work.

Koop criticized those who he said would deny the growing number of children with AIDS "a normal and dignified life."

Pediatric units are overwhelmed by the social and medical demands of children with the virus, and there are not enough health-care personnel to provide outpatient, inpatient and community care "and just plan hugging and playing with these children," Koop said.

AIDS children "must be nurtured, helped to grow and develop, allowed to interact with peers, attend school and encouraged to participate in all activities of childhood despite shortened lives," he said.

Panel Ponders Sub Funding

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee wants to be sure a new $1 billion Seawolf attack submarine is going to be a lot better than its Soviet counterparts before it gets any more federal funds, The Washington Post reported today.

The newspaper said concern over Soviet submarine advances caused House Armed Services research subcommittee to delay money for the program.

The full committee is to discuss this week the subcommittee's proposal that the Navy try to improve the SSN688 class submarines while attempting to design a sub that would be much better than the planned SSN21 Seawolf, the Post said, quoting unidentified Navy and congressional sources.

In a closed session, the subcommittee last Thursday delayed money for the Seawolf amid speculation that the Soviet attack submarine Akula and its successors may be quieter and faster with the capability of diving deeper than the Seawolf, the Post reported.

Adm. Kinnaird R. McKee, director of naval nuclear propulsion, and Vice Adm. Bruce DeMars, head of submarine warfare, asked lawmakers Monday to save the Seawolf, the newspaper reported. They testified at a closed-door hearing of the committee's seapower subcommittee, the report said.

A factsheet presented by the two and obtained by the newspaper said scrapping the Seawolf would waste the $1.4 billion already spent on the sub. It also said that weight limitations would prevent any further improvements on the 688 class submarines.

Last month, Navy assistant secretary Melvyn R. Paisley acknowledged a crisis in U.S. anti-submarine warfare capability. He said that a 1984 intelligence review of Soviet subs caused assessment of U.S. capability to take a "nosedive."

If a crash effort is not mounted, his report said, "We will be confronted with a severe deficiency in our ability to counter Soviet submarines."

The administration's two-year defense budget requests $470.8 million for the Seawolf for fiscal 1988, starting Oct. 1, and $1.676 billion in fiscal 1989. The first sub, to be ready in 1995, would cost $1.7 billion, with later ones costing $1 billion or less.

Since the days of the Indians, tobacco has been a major crop for the Pitt County area. However, it was not until 1891 that the Greenville tobacco market opened with the completion of the first of several local tobacco warehouses.

Security Essential

Comments by spokesmen for county police departments and the sheriffs department indicate that evidence being held by the agencies for use in future trials is well protected.

That is reassuring but it is also correct to reiterate the need for careful protection of evidence to assure a proper trial.

Greenville police say evidence is kept in jail cells which are no longer used for prisoners. It is behind two locked doors and the supervisor in charge of identification and evidence is the only one who can get in.

The sheriff's department says its identification department stores evidence in a vault or behind locked doors.

Bethel police use a vault, while Farmville police say each officer has a locker assigned to him to which only the officer has a key. Ayden police are in the process of revamping their method of storing evidence using two remodeled cells.

Law enforcement officers are taught early in their training to gather evidence promptly at a crime scene and then secure it in a safe place to maintain the chain of evidence. When the time comes to present the evidence in court it can be shown that the evidence has not been open to tampering or theft.

All the precautions are necessary if the evidence is to be properly used in court — and evidence that has been shown to have been out of the custody of responsible officers can be thrown out in court. Evidence that has disappeared is a matter of extreme embarrassment to any law enforcement agency.

It appears that area law enforcement agencies are well aware of their responsibility to protect evidence. However, the procedures should be reviewed frequently to make certain the safeguards are working.

Difficult Task

Motorists on Greenville Boulevard and Memorial Drive are seeing something new these days.

A machine is chewing away the surface of Greenville Boulevard from Charles Boulevard to Memorial Drive, and Memorial Drive from Greenville Boulevard to Sylvan Drive.

The stripped away surface is being recycled and the reconstituted asphalt will be used to put a new surface on the two thoroughfares. While the process is not new is the first time it has been done in the Greenville area.

The reason the $246,000 project is being carried out is obvious. The increasing traffic load on the two thoroughfares has pulverized the surfaces to the point where patching is no longer feasible.

Anyone who traveled the roads during December doesn't have to be told that traffic is heavier and more traffic means more wear on roadways.

That all brings us to the point of noting that highway maintenance is a steadily increasing cost that the highway fund has to bear. As we build more roads then we have that much more highway mileage to maintain. It would be ideal if highways, once built, were there to stay and would cost no more. It isn't that way, however. Highway maintenance is extremely expensive and the cost of that maintenance must come from road funds. Is it any wonder that it is becoming more difficult to finance the cost of new highway projects?

Major Parties Never Unified

RALEIGH — Senate debate on a statewide phosphate ban appeared evenly divided between pros and cons. Amendment votes, in which alliances shifted, gave only one clue of the ban's prospects: It was close.

Then Sen. Bob Shaw took the floor to plead for the environment so eloquently that James Watt, had he been there, might have cried. A few minutes later, the ban easily passed the Senate on second reading.

Whether Shaw's speech changed any votes will never be known, but it certainly surprised people. Shaw, R-Guilford, is a strong advocate of business interests, and the ban was strongly opposed by business lobbies.

While peculiar, Shaw's vote was part of a pattern for the 1987 General Assembly. Republican legislators have departed with their governor, and with Republican conservative doctrine, on several key issues and sided with Democrats and liberals.

Shaw, for example, was one of four GOP senators to back the original comparative fault bill, support that was absolutely essential on the closely contested Senate vote. Rep. Ray Warren, R-Mecklenburg, House minority whip, broke ranks with his party and supported the Martin Luther King Jr. Holiday.

"I'm very much pro-business, and pro-environment," Shaw said in a later interview. He said he chose long term protection for the environment over short term gain for business. Shaw is a fisherman who said he's seen numerous species disappear from North Carolina waters over the years due to pollution.

About his vote for comparative fault, defeat of which was business's main lobbying goal for 1987, Shaw said, "I was saying, 'Let's take a stand and send a message to the insurance companies that you are not going to control this legislature anymore' ... The insurance industry will suck the lifeblood out of industry if we let them."

Warren said he voted counter to

Gov. Jim Martin's stand; and those of other Republican legislators, "because (the holiday) is right." In the future, however, he feels he'll have to adjust his stands on bills to accommodate the governor. Speaking about comparative fault and the phosphate ban, both of which are not before the House, Warren said, "My initial position was to vote for both of them. But since I'm the minority whip, I feel obligated to try to adjust my positions to his (Martin's)." Shaw said Martin's office never contacted him about the phosphate ban, although it wouldn't have made any difference.

The legislature has always had Republican gadflies. For the past six terms, Rep. Maggie Keesee-Forester, R-Guilford, for example, has been one of the House's most liberal members, despite her GOP affiliation. Last session, she and Rep. Anne Duncan, R-Forsyth, voted for abortion funding.

The difference this year may be that more conservative Republicans like Shaw and Warren, and Sens. Dan Simpson, R-Burke, and Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, who support comparative fault, are crossing over. Cobb, Simpson and Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, a moderate, are all lawyers and comparative fault is a bill which almost all lawyer-legislators support.

Warren says, "The crossovers come from the urban Republicans, the kind of Republican with a constituency different from those of rural Republicans. We're elected by suburban, upper middle class voters who have a more cosmopolitan view of the world. (The rural Republicans) are elected by small town, more conservative Republicans."

As the Republican Party grows in North Carolina, it will discover what Democrats have known for years. A major party is never 100 percent unified.

All Is Fair In Trade War

I didn't know how serious the Japanese trade war was until I turned on the shortwave radio and heard Tokyo Rose. For those of you who missed World War II, Tokyo Rose was an outstanding enemy disc jockey who broadcast propaganda for the Japanese. Some believe that World War II would not have been as much fun without her.

Rose's voice had hardly changed over the years. She said, "Hello, Mr. and Mrs. American Consumer. Your brainless leaders have started a trade war with Nippon that they cannot win. Before it's over they will rue the day they thought they could challenge the productive might of the sacred Imperial Empire.

"Your leaders started this war, Americans, but it is you who must suffer. Just let me tell you what the Japanese Joint Chiefs of Hitachi plan to do to defend their exports. We are going to fire our 25-inch TV sets across the bow of every American living room.

"Our super VCRs are now programmed to intercept and scramble all NFL football games. No one will be safe from our high-speed laser CDs. How does that grab you, American dogs? If you want war we'll give you war. For every tariff you lay on Japanese goods we will retaliate with a duty of our own.

"To show we mean business, Japan will no longer honor its green warranty cards. Yes, you will be stuck with billions of dollars of Japanese products, and your warranties will be useless. We are also talking about the 90-day, no-questions-asked, money-back guarantees. The Geneva Convention says all green warranty cards are void in time of a trade war.

"American consumers, you cannot dump on the Japanese without facing the consequences. What if I were to tell you a fleet of our ships is now headed for San Francisco, and our salesmen will sweep across the Silicon Valley with hundreds of thousands of semiconductor chips? In one week there won't be an intelligible American chip left on the West Coast. Tell your mad leaders to give up their futile war against the Japanese nation before we unleash our elite Seiko brigades and bring Timex to its knees.

"American fools, we possess many billions of yen. If you continue your trade policy there is nothing to prevent a Japan Air Lines 747 from dropping them out of the sky down Paul Volcker's chimney in the Federal Reserve Bank building."

Strength For Today

When suffering comes upon us, we invariably begin to search for the reason. We feel that we have done some evil which causes us to deserve the misfortune or that we have failed to do some good thing.

The Bible teaches that much suffering in life comes through no fault of the sufferer himself. The great Swiss theologian Vinet has written: "Perhaps to suffer is nothing else than to live deeply. Love and sorrow are the conditions of a profound life."

Life's tragedies often can be very creative experiences. For example, out of the sorrow of the artist has come much of the world's finest music, poetry and literature.

Many people never know how much God can mean to their souls until they feel the millstone of calamity about their necks. There is meaning in everything in life, including our sorrows.

To the editor:

I want to thank all my fellow Republicans of Pitt County for the recent honor of "Most Outstanding Republican of the Year" which they saw fit to bestow on me at the Pitt County Convention. I placed the plaque on my office wall with much pride and humility, remembering that it was given in memory of the late John East, a great Senator and Republican whom I highly admire.

The events and letters which have followed that convention have been less than honorable. I devoted much time and effort to the campaigns of Ed Griffith and Harold Zallen, but I also did the same for Mary Lou Suggs and Howard Moya. I highly respect them all, consider them my friends and hope the opportunity will arise that I may again work with them.

Speaking only for myself, I know that Carlton Smith, Mike Karachun and Nita Raspberry have done much to promote the Republican Party in Pitt County and are not extremist nor do they represent any extremist group. They have supported Governor Martin and Senator Helms. Carlton Smith has promised fair representation of all Republicans and is a highly confident leader.

As a member of the Republican Executive Committee, I invite the views, comments and participation of every Republican in Pitt County in the organization and operation of our Party. We meet the first Tuesday of every month with the time and location published in the preceding Sunday "Daily Reflector." The meeting is open to all Republicans or anyone interested in our Party.

Let's address the issues of wasteful spending, high taxes, moral decay, weak national defense and other issues which affect our lives. May both factions of our party put aside their personal differences and unite to achieve our ideals for a better tomorrow in Pitt County.

Many lawmakers are on record as saying they welcome letters from home, and usually heed them, for they do like their jobs and the perks and want to hang onto them. Had Americans flooded Washington with five million letters against this raise, there would have been no raise! To the editor:

I'd like to thank the following for placing yet another traffic signal on Memorial Drive at the corner of Country Club Drive. First, I'll thank Ed Warren who lives on Country Club Drive. Second would have to be Highway Commissioner Randy Doub, who seems to find unlimited funds for these worthwhile projects. Third would be those at the Department of Transportation who are always willing to go along with anything. And, of course, the citizens of North Carolina, who'll pay the $25,000-plus for the installation and maintenance of the signals.

Come on, Guys, this is not even a cross intersection. Country Club Drive is a short dead-end street. If you can justify a signal here, then surely we need a signal in front of Parker's Barbecue. They generate more traffic than the Country Club. I guess the people of Greenville won't be happy until their automobiles stop shifting out of first gear.

Broadened Latin American Policy Needed For Aiding Contras

WASHINGTON — The Nicaraguan contras have been placed on a life-support system that is likely to be withdrawn by October unless some fundamental changes in policy and practice occur.

A year ago we proposed an approach aimed at helping to define a long-term U.S. policy toward Nicaragua and the region. It called for a multitrack effort to promote the democratic aspirations of the Nicaraguan people and support efforts by our Latin American neighbors to ensure regional stability. The approach was incorporated in legislation that has now been in effect for five months.

Our package was premised on a recognition that there are no short-term solutions to the difficulties in Central America. Our specific concerns centered on the large Soviet and Cuban military presence in Nicaragua, tampering by the Sandinistas in the internal affairs of their neighbors and the anti-democratic character of Sandinista rule.

We also raised serious concerns about the contra forces, in particular their ill-defined goals, sometimes bleak record on human rights, and inability to unify behind an agreed set of objectives or to coordinate their efforts.

In the five months since the legislation was enacted, the record of implementation has been mixed. On contra reform, although efforts have been made, the disarray and fractiousness in the contra leadership leave grave doubts about the future.

The United States has not yet developed a diplomatic policy for the region. A great deal of emphasis has, instead, been placed on military action by the contras. Disproportionate emphasis on this aspect of U.S. policy is counterproductive. It casts doubt on the objectives of U.S. policy, generates international sympathy for the Sandinistas and undermines domestic support for U.S. policy.

The recent discussions among the Central American democracies, culminating in the draft proposal by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, are encouraging. While concerns regarding some elements of the proposal need to be addressed, the concept of an indigenous Central American settlement has raised hopes for peace in the hemisphere. The administration's attitude, however, has been — once again — mixed, ranging from reported efforts to forestall Central American support for the Arias proposal to the endorsement of the thrust of the initiative on the eve of the recent congressional debate on aid to the contras.

U.S. policy must also include the provision of sustained economic assistance to the Central American democracies. No matter what happens to the contras or Nicaragua, economic development is essential to promote the long-term stability of the region.

In addressing our Central America policy, we must, of course, take account of the actions of the Sandinista government. Nicaragua continues to pose a threat to its neighbors and has maintained its repressive domestic policies. This underscores, in our view, the need for a sustained and balanced policy to deal with the security concerns of the United States and our Latin American neighbors.

Analysis

At this critical juncture, we believe that only through a balanced, multidimensional policy can the United States achieve its objective of ensuring regional security and promoting national reconciliation in Nicaragua. Consequently, we have made clear that in weighing the merits of future requests for assistance in Nicaragua we will consider as key factors the implementation of such a program. The following elements are basic to the development of this policy:

— A more active and consistent role for the United States in support of regional diplomatic initiatives. In order to make it clear that our objective is a negotiated settlement, it is essential for the United States to formulate a consistent diplomatic strategy that will support and complement the efforts of the Central American democracies and meet our security concerns.

In the near term, there are opportunities for progress that we must not let slip by. Foremost is the Arias proposal. We should lend our general support to this new effort which gives the Central Americans the chance to take the lead in resolving regional problems. The United States has legitimate concerns about the specific provisions. The agreement should, for example, address the question of Soviet military support for the Sandinistas, the timing of elections and the need to make the declaration of a cease-fire coincide with a lifting of the state of emergency in Nicaragua. But these should be addressed within the context of our overall support for the regional diplomatic process, not as a way of stopping it dead in its tracks.

There may also be an opportunity for progress on the issue of U.S. willingness to negotiate bilaterally with the Sandinistas, but only if the Sandinistas talk directly with the contras. Members of the Nicaraguan resistance have indicated that they are willing to be flexible on this issue and perhaps accept dialogue through intermediaries. We should be exploring the options for overcoming this diplomatic stumbling block.

•Further support for contra reform and coordination. To strengthen contra claims to legitimacy and better position them to play a role in negotiations, the contras must demonstrate significant progress toward broadening their leadership base, defining a clear program for democracy, subordinating the military forces to civilian leadership, eliminating human rights abuses and coordinating their military and political efforts. Unless the contras present a clear political and moral alternative to the Sandinistas, they will not win the support of the Nicaraguan people.

•An accounting of funds previously made available to the contras. The recent revelations concerning the sale of arms to Iran and the diversion of funds to the contras have understandably contributed to the public's skepticism regarding the administration's policies toward Nicaragua. The public, as well as Congress, deserves an accounting.

•A sustained program for regional economic and security assistance. It is essential for the United States to continue to use its leverage to support efforts to reduce economic disparities, human rights violations and political injustice in countries that receive U.S. assistance. We have to address the threat Nicaragua poses to the region, but we must also face the problems of poverty and political oppression that give rise to insurgent movements. We in Congress must work with the administration on proposals for economic aid as well as proposals for spurring investment in the region and promoting fair trade.

In sum, if the administration has any hope of broadening the appeal of the contra program, it will have to broaden its approach.

Silent Doctors

As Pope John Paul II arrived in Santiago last week, a young doctor awaited trial in a prison cell downtown. He is accused of terrorism. His supposed "crime" is treating a man with a bullet injury. His real "crime" is that he is medical director of the Vicariate of Solidarity (the Vicaria), the human rights arm of the Catholic Church in the Chilean capital.

Concerned with this case, I waited last Jan. 26 in the crowded, hot, state-ly corridor outside a chamber of the Chilean Supreme Court. Several Chilean reporters approached with questions. I explained that I represented a U.S. organization, Physicians for Human Rights. I was in Santiago at the request of the Vicaria and the Chilean Medical Association because the Chilean government had arrested and sought to charge three doctors and a lawyer, the defendants of this hearing, under anti-terrorist laws.

The defendants had cared for a wounded man who was later alleged by the government to be a terrorist. The Vicaria and the Chilean Medical Association were convinced that these professionals had been following their codes of ethics, which clearly state that doctors must aid the sick or injured regardless of political or other considerations. I began to explain that codes of medical ethics have governed and humanized medicine since the time of Hippocrates and mentioned the horrors that result when such ethical codes are neglected — horrors such as those perpetrated by the Nazi doctors. The reporters, intent at first, now stopped writing. Plainly embarrassed, one of them explained: "We can't publish that. The papers are controlled."

The massive doors to the court chamber opened; the hours-long hearings began. Two of the defendants were not present: Dr. Ramiro Olivares, a young doctor who serves as medical director for the Vicaria, had been imprisoned for six months;

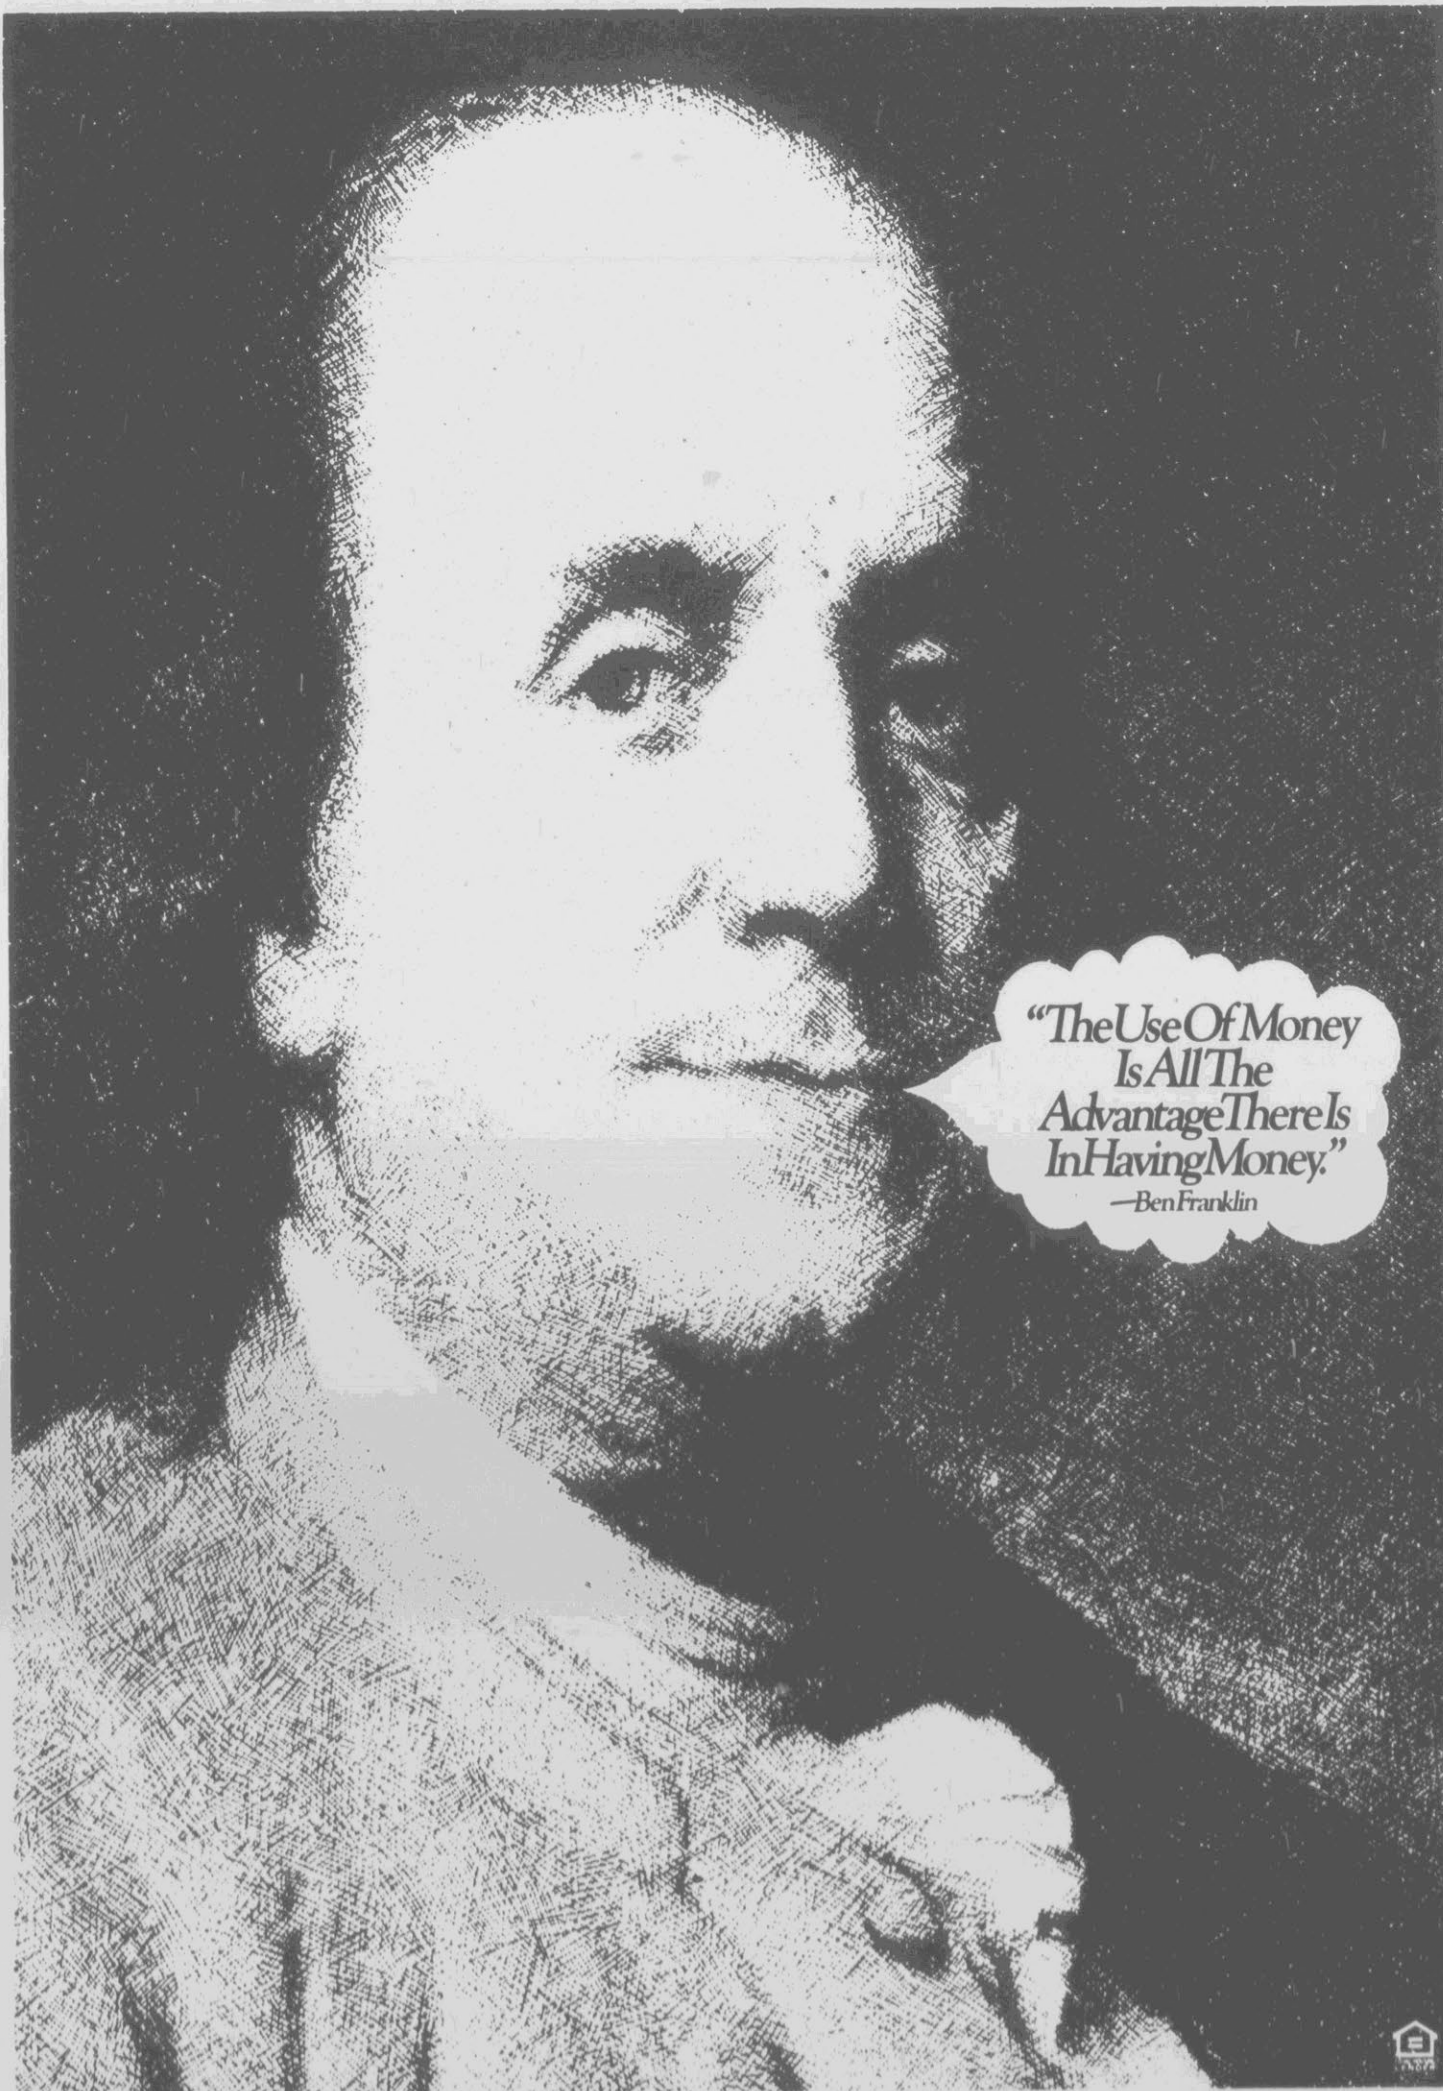

Dr. Juan Macaya, a veteran in pediatrics and public health, for eight months. The third doctor, Ramon Rojas, a slightly built orthopedic surgeon was free on bail and got in front of me next to his daughter. I was wedged in next to Ana Macaya, wife of Dr. Macaya.

Two prosecutors spoke brutally for the government about enemies of the regime, weaving a web of intrigue linking the defendants and the Vicaria to terrorism. Their silent witnesses included Dr. Alejandro Aravena, whose confession was cited as evidence against the Vicaria. Dr. Aravena could not be questioned; he was in prison. After four hours, the court adjourned.

The next day, as I emerged from an appointment, a sad handsome woman thrust several rough handwritten pages of notes into my hands. She was Dr. Aravena's mother. She told me of her son, a recent honor graduate in medicine of the University of Chile. In mid-December, he and his wife, a teacher, disappeared. The mother learned that they were being held incommunicado by the Centro Nacional de Informaciones, Chile's secret police. It is well documented that incommunicado detention in Chile is frequently accompanied by torture and the extraction of confessions. His mother said that Dr. Aravena was held incommunicado for 16 days and had in fact signed a confession that implicated the Vicaria in terrorism. When the mother visited her son in prison after his ordeal, she found him "like a different person, confused, he didn't realize what had happened."

TOO TOUGH TO PLOW — A 26-inch snowfall at Grandfather Mountain, with drifts up to 10 feet deep caused by high winds, made it impossible for a snow plow to clear the mountain's summit road in western North Carolina. A large front loader had to be called in to clear the road so animals at the environmental habitat could be fed. The snowfall was over three times the previous April record of eight inches. (AP Laserphoto)

IN THE STATE

Garbage Leaves

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — A barged laden with 3,186 tons of New York City garbage has returned to sea after authorities refused an Alabama contractor permission to leave it in North Carolina.

State officials on Friday got a temporary restraining order to keep Lowell Harrelson from unloading the trash and ordered him to move it from its mooring on Radio Island off the Carteret County coast. Bad weather prevented the barge from being moved until Monday.

Earlier Monday, the Jones County Board of Commissioners decided that county had no interest in opening a landfill for the garbage. Harrelson had said it would be a good business venture for embattled farmers to take the trash for a landfill that would eventually create methanol.

The Right Place

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin, dismissing a recent report giving North Carolina poor grades for its economic performance, has told a group of relocation consultants that the Tar Heel state is the place for new investment.

Speaking to about 40 consultants from across the nation Monday, Martin emphasized North Carolina's growing service industry and bragged about the state's education, telecommunications, transportation and utility systems.

The consultants screen perspective locations for companies wishing to move their business operations. The four-day conference is intended to show off North Carolina in general and the Triad in particular and is sponsored by the Greensboro and Winston-Salem chambers of commerce, the High Point Economic Development Commission and the N.C. Department of Commerce.

A report released last week said that North Carolina and other Southeastern states did poorly because they chased outside companies instead of investing in education and infrastructure. The report said 80 percent of new jobs come from homegrown companies, not corporate relocations.

Bakker Discussed

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina leaders of the Assemblies of God are meeting in Dunn to discuss the denomination's handling of sexual misconduct charges against TV evangelist Jim Bakker.

Jessica Hahn, 27, has said she had one sexual encounter with Bakker seven years ago in Clearwater, Fla. Bakker resigned from PTL and the Assemblies of God last month, saying he had been blackmailed over an extramarital tryst. He later said he resigned to prevent a hostile takeover of his PTL empire.

Denominational leaders in Springfield, Mo., said March 26 they had found evidence not of blackmail or a takeover, but of money that had been paid to cover up a "moral failure." They then returned the case back to North Carolina for further investigation.

A 16-member state governing board in Dunn was to review his case today and decide whether to accept his resignation, revoke his credentials or suspend him for rehabilitation and restoration.

Meeting Canceled

CHADBOURN, N.C. (AP) — The Chadbourn Town Council canceled a meeting at which it was to consider naming a new mayor after the wife of one of the council members was killed in a traffic accident.

Jeanette Tedder, wife of council member Bobby Tedder, died about 12:40 p.m. Monday in an accident on U.S. 74 near Lumberton, authorities said. North Carolina Highway Patrol Trooper William Norris said Mrs. Tedder was headed west on U.S. 74 when her car went over the center line and hit a mobile home being pulled by a truck.

The decision to cancel the Monday night meeting was made by Mayor Pro Tem Ruby Spivey, according to Town Clerk Lois Hope. It has not been rescheduled.

Planted Acreage Off

RALEIGH (AP) — Lower market prices have encouraged farmers to put more of their land in federal programs, cutting the amount of planted acreage this year in North Carolina by about 4 percent, the state Crop and Livestock Reporting Service says.

"The drop includes decreased planting in feed grains, wheat, corn, oats, barley, sorghum and soybeans, with declines ranging from 3 percent for corn to 18 percent for sorghum."

Karl Gross, an agricultural statistician with Crop and Livestock Reporting, said the figures need to be seen in perspective. For example, he said, the expected 3 percent decline in corn acreage does not appear so grim when compared to an expected 12 percent decrease in corn plantings among all U.S. farmers.

Obscenity Charges

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Maryland man suspected of managing more than a dozen adult bookstores in North Carolina has been charged with 41 counts of disseminating obscenity and one count of conspiracy.

Mecklenburg County prosecutors and police identified Stephen Winick, 40, of Woodstock, Md., as the boss of Roger Griggs, a Charlotte man they believe supervises five Charlotte bookstores.

Griggs, 47, was charged in February in a 42-count indictment with conspiracy and disseminating obscenity.

He is also supervisor of the Shelby III, an X-rated Cleveland County bookstore where three men were killed and two wounded in January.

Counties, Justice Department Settle On Elections Violations

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Twenty-two North Carolina counties have admitted they violated the 1965 Voting Rights Act by not submitting changes in school board elections to the U.S. Justice Department in a settlement that could lead to new elections in some counties.

Under a settlement of a voting rights suit announced Monday, the N.C. attorney general's office will submit the election changes for federal clearance within the next 45 days. The Justice Department then has 60 days to approve or reject the changes.

If the Justice Department decides the changes dilute minority voting strength, school districts could be forced to hold special elections and reduce the terms of current members.

"Until past changes have been cleared, the agreement prohibits the defendants from qualifying candidates or holding elections," Justice Department officials said in a statement. "The agreement recognizes the possibility that a special election or the shortening of terms of incumbents may be required."

Justice Department officials, who sued the 22 counties' boards of education and boards of election Dec. 9, said Monday's settlement was the most comprehensive of its kind, The Charlotte Observer reported.

The agreement means the 22 counties cannot apply to "bail out" of the Voting Rights Act requirements before 1997, because bailout provisions that took effect in 1984 require consistent preclearance for 10 years.

The Voting Rights Act requires nine states and portions of seven others, including 40 counties in North Carolina, to obtain clearance from the Justice Department or U.S. District Court in Washington before changing election methods.

The 22 counties had made more than 100 voting changes without required federal approval.

Cleveland County, for instance, got special legislation to exclude Shelby and Kings Mountain residents from voting in county school board elections.

"There's no question in my mind we are guilty of not preclearing," said Tony Eastman, Cleveland County Elections Board chairman. "I think it was just an unfortunate oversight."

Eastman has asked Justice Department officials to explain preclearance requirements to N.C. elections officials at an August seminar in Raleigh. He also is leading an effort to get Congress to ease the requirements.

"We tell our counties, 'If you change the color of your tissue paper, submit it to the Justice Department for approval,'" said N.C. Elections Supervisor Alex Brock, who said some past changes won't be cleared.

"I'm sure out of all them, there will be a minimal number that will have to have an adjustment," he said.

"Boards of education rank at the top of the list of the most emotional elections we conduct. They are highly emotional," Brock said. "They are probably those elections that cause the most local interest."

The counties that agreed to the settlement are Anson, Beaufort, Bertie, Camden, Chowan, Cleveland, Craven, Edgecombe, Franklin, Gates, Halifax, Hertford, Hoke, Lee, Nash, Northampton, Perquimans, Rockingham, Scotland, Vance, Washington and Wayne.

RALEIGH — Janet Ann Lucas of Lucama and Jeffery Wayne Boswell of Greenville were united in marriage Saturday in the James Dinwiddie Chapel at Peace College.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Rudolph Hodge at 3 p.m. Mrs. John Marshall Lucas and the late Mr. Lucas of Lucama and Mr. and Mrs. Guy Willard Boswell of

MRS. BOSWELL

Wilson are parents of the bridal couple.

Miss Lucas was given in marriage by her uncle, James Caesar Lucas Sr. Sara Lou Byrd of Morganton was the maid of honor. Melody Anne Boswell, sister of the bridegroom, of Wilmington; Brooks Batchelor of Wilson, and Shelby Vaughan of Wendell were the bridesmaids.

Allison Lucas, niece of the bride, of Lucama was the flower girl. Ricemaidens were Katherine Buck, cousin of the bride, of Kernersville and Shannon Pipkin, cousin of the bridegroom, of Black Creek.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers included Harold C. Lucas, brother of the bride, of Lucama; Edward Pipkin Jr., uncle of the bridegroom, of Wilson; Gerald Pipkin, uncle of the bridegroom, of Black Creek; James Watson of Raleigh. John Lucas, nephew of the bride, of Lucama was a junior usher.

Virginia Vance of Raleigh played the organ and the harpsicord at the ceremony. Robin Lee of Raleigh played the flute.

The bride wore a formal gown of candlelight satin with re-embroidered alencon lace accented with seed pearls. The lace bodice featured a sabrina neckline and a dropped waistline, fitted at the natural waist. The bodice V-back was accented with three satin bows. The semi-full skirt had a border of re-embroidered alencon lace creating a pyramid effect in front. The lace border extended into a chapel train. The bride's mantilla was two tiered chapel length silk illusion scattered with seed pearls and rolled edge borders. The veil was attached to a wreath of pearls and silk apple blossoms. The bride carried a formal cascading bouquet of stephanotis and gardenias with fern and ivy.

The attendants wore floor length gowns of beauty moire faille. The princess style gowns featured sweetheart necklines, short sleeves, and bows on the shoulders. They carried European cluster bouquets of happiness roses, ivory dendrobium orchids and pinks with mixed greenery.

The flower girl wore a floor length gown of beauty moire faille featuring a sweetheart neckline, dropped waistline, and puffed sleeves. The bodice V-back featured a large bow at the waistline. She carried an ivory basket filled with flowers matching those of the bridesmaids, and wore a cluster of flowers with cascading ribbons in her hair.

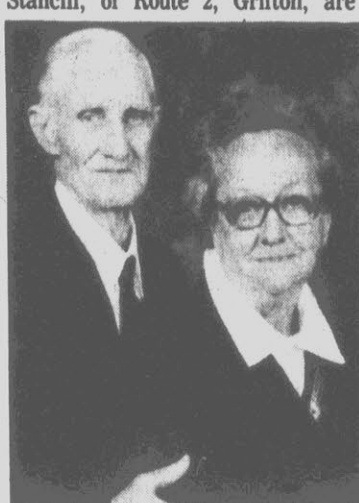

The ricemaidens carried ivory baskets filled with birdseed bags. Their dresses of ivory moire taffeta were styled like that of the flower girl.

The reception was held at the Woman's Club of Raleigh after the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Osborne S. Lucas, uncle and aunt of the bride, of Raleigh greeted guests upon arrival. The reception table was decorated with rubrum lilies, happiness roses, white freesia and ivory dendrobium orchids in epergnettes in silver candlebras. Mrs. H.R. Griffin of Wilson and Mrs. J.C. Lucas Sr. of Lucama, aunts of the bride, cut and served the wedding cake. Mrs. Dale Anderson of Wendell and Mrs. Edward Pipkin Jr. of Wilson, aunts of the bridegroom, poured punch.

State University. The bridegroom is a realtor with Century 21 Bass Realty in Greenville. The bride is a banking officer in BB&T in Wilson.

GRIFTON — Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Stancill, of Route 2, Grifton, are celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary today.

MR. AND MRS. STANCILL

The couple was honored at a dinner followed by a reception at their home Sunday.

They have three children, J.W. Stancill of Ayden, Pearl McLawhorn of Ayden, and Norman Stancill of Winterville. The couple also has eight grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

The approximately 60 guests attending were greeted by Debbie Stancill, daughter-in-law of the honorees, and their granddaughter, Donna Stancill. Brenda Vandiford assisted in serving.

The honoree wore a white and tan ensemble complemented by a white silk corsage of carnations and stephanotis.

Insignificant Things Also Need Answers

I used to work on a morning newspaper and something strange happened after midnight. The phones would light up with questions from people who could not live through the night without the answers.

How many times did Babe Ruth strike out? Who was Woodrow Wilson's Vice President? Do centipedes have back problems? What was the name of the Lone Ranger's horse? ("There's 20 bucks riding on the answer.")

I used to wonder what happened to all those inquisitive minds. Then I began writing a column and I know. These are burning questions that are still keeping readers up at night.

Why is it that the magazine that was so irresistible in the dentist's office that you felt compelled to steal becomes totally uninteresting once you have subscribed to it?

Who in their infinite wisdom decreed that Little League uniforms be white? Certainly not a mother.

Why is it easier to buy a gun than to get a check cashed?

Networking Group Hears Speaker

The luncheon meeting of Women's Networking was held Thursday at the Greenville Country Club. Bonnie Duld was key speaker.

Ms. Duld is a professor in the East Carolina University School of Nursing and has a consulting firm. Her program topic was "Anger — An Occupational Hazard."

President Evelyn Darden reported on by-law amendments which will be voted on at the May meeting which is scheduled at the country club May 7.

Males Support Teen-Ager

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing in response to "Hurting in Hartford," who wanted to know if she had to have sex in order to make a relationship last.

I am a 20-year-old male who reinforces your advice to keep saying no until you feel you are ready.

I've been dating the same girl for two years. She was a virgin when we started to date, and she still is. I lost my virginity in the eighth grade and I'd be lying if I said I never tried to talk her into going to bed with me. I even dropped her twice, but I went back because I had such strong feelings for her. I appreciated what a prize she was after I had dated the easy girls. I realized that if they'd sleep with me, they'd probably sleep with any guy who asked them.

I have quit trying to wear her down. I am now willing to wait until after we're married. Sex can cheapen a relationship, not make it more valuable. — D.H. IN DALLAS

DEAR ABBY: That 17-year-old girl who's "Hurting in Hartford" should quit hurting and thank her lucky stars she's smart enough to say no.

She's living in the insurance capital of the world, and from where I'm sitting, I'd say a girl with her qualities is a pretty good risk. — G.S. IN MANCHESTER, CONN.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 20-year-old male university student who is not a virgin, although I am celibate now. I'd like to tell "Hurting in Hartford": You are not weird for wanting a relationship with a guy without having sex. There are plenty of attractive, available guys who don't really care about scoring. Trust me. I know. I'm one of them. I've been going steady for two years, and she's the only girl I've ever dated with whom I haven't slept. It's possible to be in love without sleeping together. I agree with Abby: "All relationships do not include sex — many long-standing relationships are based on friendship and mutual interest."

Today, the risks of sex far outweigh the pleasures. — HOWIE ON LONG ISLAND

DEAR ABBY: The guy who marries "Hurting in Hartford" will be a very lucky man. Please tell her she's wrong to think that a relationship won't last without sex. All my relationships have included sex, and none of them have lasted. Hold on to your virginity, "Hurting." Your husband will appreciate it. Sign me ... UNLUCKY IN LOVE IN GASTONIA, N.C.

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing in response to "Hurting in Hartford" who thought she had to have sex with a guy in order to have a lasting relationship. Actually it's just the opposite. If a girl is easy, they'll hang around for a while, but when they want a really solid relationship with marriage in mind, they prefer a girl who's hard (or impossible) to get.

I wish there were more girls who weren't so sex-happy. I'm a 19-year-old male virgin. I'm not ugly and I'm not dumb. There may not be many of us late-teen virgins around, but right now I am in a relationship with one. I agree with you, Abby. That 17-year-old girl should stick to her guns. — CARING IN COLORADO

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Hurting in Hartford": I am a 22-year-old male college senior. I am also a virgin. You are not weird; you are unusual. But the best always is. Be true to yourself. Some men still appreciate the obvious goodness you possess. And lastly, it does not take experience to know that having sex is no substitute for making love. — HEART IN DIXIE

Park Study Urged

for bathroom alterations, a backhoe attachment and leftover funds from a state contract purchase of a truck would be transferred to cover the $33,895 in additional costs.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Shinn said the bid recommended for approval actually totals $373,895 — or 49.5 percent over budget — when all factors are considered.

"Not shown is $15,000 in city labor costs and $75,000 for the planetarium installation," she said.

However, Lee said the facilities could have been constructed within the budgeted amount if the bid process had started when the $250,000 was allocated five years ago.

In addition, Lee said private groups will be used to raise additional money over the $283,895.

"What we're going to do is once this whole center is built the Recreation and Parks Department will appoint an advisory group," he said. "One of the major goals of this committee will be to raise funds for the exhibit, and the primary initial goal is to raise money for the installation of the planetarium."

Members of Adventures in Health, a group affiliated with the East Carolina School of Medicine, voiced concerns over the possible loss of a $65,000 grant if the money is not appropriated.

"The grant is going to be used for staff people and operational money for them to run their building," Lee said.

In other business, Ron Kimble, finance director, informed council members that Data Processing Manager Gary Bressard had submitted his resignation.

Meanwhile, the council agreed to accept a reduced budget request from the Greenville Museum of Art Inc. in exchange for some in-kind services from the city. The request was reduced from $9,000 to $8,000.

"The museum's trustees realize the economic pressures upon the City Council and due to their understanding of the current municipal situation wish at this time to amend the 1987-88 city budget appropriation request for contractual services submitted in January of this year," Mary Anne Pennington, museum executive director, said in a letter to the council.

As part of the agreement, the city would contribute 17 concrete parking spaces bumpers for the museum paved parking lot, museum grounds maintenance (mowing, trimming, and pruning) on a regular basis, and a maintenance agreement for the van used in the "Museum in the Schools program" serving all Pitt County Schools and other educational programs.

Aide Says Sanford Vote Was A Protest

— its a trust fund — than we get back," Vick said.

"There are other states that get more back because they take our surplus, and the original highway bill continued that process based on the formula, and the senator was not pleased with that. However, based on the encouragement of the North Carolina Department of Transportation, he voted to send it forward."

In the meantime, the House passed its own highway construction bill, which utilized a different formula and contained a lot of special projects, according to Vick, who said the bills were sent to conference.

"The conference bill adopted more of the House bill than it did of the Senate bill," he said. "People on the House committee had worked on this bill for three or four years and had an awful lot invested in it. There was a lot of money in it for New York and New Jersey on special projects — not on formula."

"As a result of keeping so much for special projects, the compromise bill came back to the Senate, and it had even less money for North Carolina in it."

Sanford then consulted with members of the NCDOT and the State General Assembly to make sure he had the backing of North Carolina officials, according to Vick, who said Sanford told the Senate Democratic leadership he wouldn't vote for the bill.

The bill passed in the Senate — 83-17 — with Sanford as the only Democrat to vote against it.

"At this point, everything was fine," Vick said. "Had the bill gone to the White House and been signed, it would have moved on forward and he would have made his point."

"What began all this was the veto. When he vetoed it, it headed back to the Senate, and the senator again maintained his position. It was that the bill was still not good for North Carolina."

Vick said Sanford again talked with North Carolina officials and said he planned to maintain his position.

"There were no promises made despite what has been suggested," Vick said. "What was said was 'if I change my position, I will let you know before I make the change.' Unless you hear from me I will stay in this position. That position being to vote to sustain the veto based on the bill, not on the President's position."

There were a number of Republican senators who wanted to vote for the override, but were pressured by the White House to vote to sustain, according to Vick, who said Sanford's "present" vote was used as leverage against those Republicans.

"If they knew it was already over with — that there were going to be 67 votes for the override — the fact that they were going to be 68 didn't make any difference so they could say to the White House it didn't make any difference," Vick said.

"For that reason, Sanford didn't vote early. When it got down to the end, the question of the 'present' vote led to a question of the senator from Wyoming — (Sen. Alan Simpson (R-Wyo.) being in the same position. Wyoming wanted the bill. Simpson would like to be able to vote for the bill, but Simpson is the minority whip so he absolutely can't vote for it unless his vote doesn't count. So we get into playing this game to see which way it's going to go."

Sanford's present vote forced Simpson to vote to sustain the veto, according to Vick, who said Sanford's vote to support the veto reinforced his position on funding for North Carolina.

"By that point, he had done what he set out to do," Vick said, "which was to make clear the question of North Carolina's position being a debtor state and being a negative recipient. It says to the leadership of the House and Senate 'as long as I'm senator im going to fight to change this and here is the way I'm going to do it and make you recognize it.'"

Having made his point, Sanford had to consider the position of the nations other 49 states.

He said work on the four-lane highway will be completed by Oct. 15, with the first contract for work on the Farmville bypass scheduled to be let to bid in November.

Right-of-way acquisition on the Greenville bypass should begin in December, with the first construction contract scheduled to be awarded in January 1989, Doub said.

The transportation board member also told commissioners that the acquisition of right-of-way for widening Evans Street in Greenville to four lanes should begin in February 1988.

proposed to eliminate "talkover" which occurs because departments transmit and receive on the same frequency.

"We searched for suitable frequencies, and we strongly preferred VHF high band, but we couldn't find sufficient frequencies to handle the city's need," he said. "VHF low band does not offer good or even acceptable duplex operation."

Moye, Galloway Pace Rose To 6-0 Win Over Gryphons

By TOM MORRIS

Reflector Sports Writer

Tom Moye shut them down, tossing a three-hit shutout, and Jason Galloway put them away, lashing a three-run homer in the second inning, as Rose blanked Rocky Mount, 6-0, in Big East baseball action Monday.

Moye went the distance in picking up his fourth win of the year against no losses. He struck out five and walked none.

Between the second and seventh innings, he retired 15 consecutive batters.

Galloway was the offensive force for the Rampants, going 3-4 with a home run and two doubles. David Daniels went 3-3 with a double as Rose rapped out 11 hits.

"I was real impressed with Tom Moye," said Rose coach Ronald Vincent. "Tom normally has good control (and today) it was up and down in the strike zone."

Vincent also said Axel Smith's play behind the plate as well as the play of the infield was a big key in Moye's performance.

The second inning was the big inning for Rose.

With two outs, Scott Davis singled and Moye reached on an error on the shortstop. Axel Smith then singled to load the bases.

After Davis came home on an error to make it 1-0, Galloway followed with his shot that cleared the bases and put Rose up 4-0.

"Galloway's home run was really the turning point of the game," Vincent said. "Jason Galloway had an excellent game as he has all year."

Rose added another run in the fourth when Galloway led off with a double and Daniels followed with another double to drive him home and make it 5-0.

Daniels scored the Rampants' final run in the sixth when he singled, stole second and came home on error on the catcher's throw during his steal.

The Rampants squandered several other opportunities to score throughout the game. They had the bases loaded with one out in the first but Robbie McDonald hit into a double play to end the inning.

They loaded the bases again in the third, but came up empty handed again. During the third, the Gryphons removed starting pitcher Jeff Hortman in favor of Ted Landing. Landing faced one batter, Davis, whom he walked. Scott Lewis then replaced Landing and got the final two outs of the inning.

"I felt like we should have scored more runs," Vincent said. "(But) we're glad to beat Rocky Mount anytime you get a chance to."

Rocky Mount never really threatened. Of their three hits, the Gryphons never advanced beyond

Spider Slam Tops Pirates

By WOODY PEELE

Reflector Sports Editor

Andy Malloy slammed two home runs, including a killing grand slam, to pace the University of Richmond to a 9-5 Colonial Athletic Association baseball victory over East Carolina University Monday.

The loss was the second in the league for the Pirates — both coming against the Spiders. East Carolina maintained a slim lead, however, on the basis of having played nine games. The Pirates, 7-2, are three games up in the win column on UNC Wilmington, 4-2, while Richmond is now 6-3.

For the Pirates, it was a story of wasted opportunities. East Carolina left 15 men stranded during the day — 12 of them in scoring position.

Three times during the game, the Pirates loaded the bases and failed to come away with anything.

Both teams cracked three homers in the game. Richmond's first two helped them build up a 5-0 lead, while ECU's three, all in the sixth, helped them rally to tie it at 5-5.

But Malloy's grand slam in the seventh dealt the killing blow and enabled the Spiders to take a 2-1 edge in the three-game series.

"Richmond swung the bats very well," Pirate coach Gary Overton said. "They got timely hits. We had chances to manufacture runs all along but didn't. The big inning helped us to get back in the game, but the big blow came at a bad time for us."

Overton said that anytime a team leaves 15 men on base shows that it has not capitalized on its chances. "We just weren't able to get them in."

East Carolina outthit the Spiders, 12-8, but that wasn't enough.

Richmond grabbed the lead in the second inning, scoring on two solo home runs. Malloy led off the inning with his first, a shot to left, and one out later, Jim Merritt followed with another over the fence in left.

The Spiders went on to load the bases on a hit and two walked before two fly balls ended the threat.

The Spiders then came up with three more in the fifth to take a 5-0 lead. David Boynton opened the inning and was hit by a pitch. Mike Zambo followed with a double and Don Vossler's sacrifice fly scored courtesy runner David Dip. Greg Harding walked and Malloy's grounder was errored at second, with Zambo scoring on the play. Robert Reid then singled in Harding.

The Pirates, meanwhile, had left a runner at second in the first, loaded

Leonard Shakes Off Years Of Inactivity, Captures Title On Split Decision

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — On a magical night in the desert, Sugar Ray Leonard recaptured some of the greatness many had thought was long gone.

Leonard, moving and mugging as he did before an eye injury prompted retirement, shook off three years of inactivity Monday night and dethroned Marvellous Marvin Hagler as World Boxing Council middleweight champion.

Never mind that it was a split decision that divided ringsiders as well as judges. The victory capped an astonishing comeback and firmly established Leonard as one of the sports' leading champions.

"This fight meant the world to me," Leonard said afterward, obviously exhausted after 12 intense rounds. "I did what I was capable of doing. I knew what I was up against but I beat him to the punch."

Leonard built up a big lead in the early rounds, then was able to withstand Hagler's pressing attack in a fight that was boxing's richest ever, attracting 15,366 fans to an outdoor arena at Caesars Palace and several million others who watched on closed-circuit television. Hagler was guaranteed $12 million, Leonard $11 million.

It was a fight that showed Leonard close to his vintage best in spurts, but also a fight that many thought Hagler had pulled out by finally slowing Leonard and catching him with some savage combinations in the late rounds.

"At the end of the fight he said, 'You beat me,'" said a bitterly disappointed Hagler. "I was so happy, then they took it away. It's hard to believe."

Leonard's camp said he merely said he would always consider Hagler a champion.

Only judge Lou Fillippo agreed with Hagler, scoring the fight 115-113 for the champion. Judge Dave Moretti had Leonard ahead 115-113, while judge JoJo Guerra had Leonard winning 118-110. The Associated Press had Hagler ahead 117-112.

"It puts a bad feeling in my mouth about boxing," said Hagler, whose last loss came a few months before Leonard won the Olympic gold medal 11 years ago. "There's a bitter taste about the way they did this."

For Leonard, though, it was an especially sweet victory in a fight many thought he couldn't win. A 2½-1 underdog, he rewrote a page of boxing history by beefing up to 158 pounds and coming back after only one fight in five years to win his third world title.

"It wasn't the belt I wanted," Leonard insisted. "It was the fight to beat him. To me, Marvin is still the undisputed middleweight champion."

Leonard, who previous was the undisputed welterweight and WBA junior middleweight champion, is the 10th boxer in history to win three world titles. What made it even more significant is he did it against a dominant middleweight champion who had successfully defended his title 12 times.

"Tonight was a special accomplishment for me," said Leonard, who hinted of future fights but did not commit himself.

Leonard's game plan was nothing that Hagler's camp didn't expect. He made a career based on speed, and even with the heavier weight, his only real chance to win was to keep away from Hagler's relentless onslaught.

Hagler pressed from the outset, but

Henry Captures Top Cage Award

Marchell Henry, one of five graduating seniors on the East Carolina University basketball team, was the top honoree as the team held its awards banquet Monday night.

Henry, who came to East Carolina as a transfer from Division III member St. Andrews two years ago, made the All-Colonial Athletic Association second team as a junior and was a first team selection this year.

Henry came away with two awards during the evening. He was named the most valuable player through a vote of his teammates, and also received the award as the best rebounder for the Pirates this year.

Blue Edwards, who transferred into ECU following a two-year career at Louisburg Junior College, won one award and share another. He took the award as the top free throw shooter on the team and was tied in the vote for the newcomer of the year. Joining him for the latter honor was freshman Reed Lose.

Keith Sledge was named as the team's top defensive player, while Leon Bass was a near unanimous winner of the most improved player award.

For Coach Charlie Harrison, it was his final appearance at the head of the team, having resigned effective the end of the season. Harrison urged the returning players to square themselves academically and do all they can to continue to build a program under the incoming coach Mike Steele.

Wednesday, playing host to strong Old Dominion in a 7 p.m. game at Harrington Field.

Yanks Win Opener Over Tigers

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer
How important is it to win on opening day?
It's all relative ... relative to winning and losing.
"Winning an opener is so important to this ballclub," New York relief ace Dave Righetti said after pitching three scoreless innings Monday in the Yankees' 10-inning 2-1 victory over Detroit. "That's what winning ballclubs do if they want to win the championship. This was a very good ballgame."
"Opening day has never really meant anything," Boston's Dwight Evans said after the defending American League champions lost to Milwaukee 5-1. "It's only one game. Every championship team I've been on, including the minors, has lost the opener."
Elsewhere, Toronto trimmed Cleveland 7-3, Baltimore nipped

Texas 2-1 and Chicago edged Kansas City 5-4. Seattle, California, Oakland and Minnesota open today.
With Roger Clemens just back from a 29-day holdout, Bruce Hurst ailing and Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd on the disabled list, the Red Sox gave their opening day assignment to Bob Stanley, who had made only two starts in the last six years.
Two batters later, the Red Sox trailed 1-0 after Paul Molitor tripled and Robin Yount singled. Stanley lasted 4-2-3 innings, allowing nine hits and three runs. Meanwhile, Milwaukee's Teddy Higuera, a 20-game winner in 1986, blanked Boston on six hits through seven innings.
In the Milwaukee fifth, Jim Gantner singled and scored on a double by Yount. Glenn Braggs' RBI single and a single by Greg Brock chased Stanley.
"We lost the first game last year and I was the losing pitcher," Stanley said. "Hopefully things will turn out the same way this year."

The Brewers scored twice off Steve Crawford in the sixth on Bill Schroeder's double, Gantner's RBI single and Molitor's RBI double.
"If you can score a couple of runs early, it's a good sign with Higuera on the mound," Yount said. "Any time you play in front of 51,000 people and you haven't been here in a while, it's a whole different atmosphere. It gets your adrenalin going. We played well for the first game. We hope it's like 1982 (Milwaukee's pennant-winning year), but we've got a long way to go."
Yankees 2, Tigers 1
If the Yankees had signed free agent pitcher Jack Morris during the off-season they wouldn't have beaten him Monday. Not that they did any heavy hitting, managing only an unearned run over the first nine innings.
But they still came away with their first opening-day victory on the road since they beat the old Washington Senators in 1969. In the interim, the Yankees had lost 10 openers on the road and were 3-15 overall on opening day.
Gary Ward singled with two out in the fourth, the first hit off Morris, and scored when Detroit third baseman Darnell Coles bare-handed Dave Winfield's slow-rolling single and threw wildly past first. Larry Herndon tied it against Dennis Rasmussen leading off the Detroit sixth with a home run off the facing of the second deck in straightaway center field above the 440-foot sign.
The Yankees got the winning run with two out in the 10th on singles by pinch-hitter Claudell Washington and Wayne Tolleson and Rickey Henderson's double.
"Everybody talks about our hitting, but the places where we improved over the winter were pitching and defense," said Righetti, who combined on a six-hitter. "When you're facing a good pitcher like Jack Morris, who's pitching a good game, it's important to do that."
Blue Jays 7, Indians 3
Lloyd Moseby homered and drove in three runs, Willie Upshaw also homered — seven of Toronto's 11 hits went for extra bases — and Jimmy Key pitched three-hit ball for six innings. Tony Fernandez had an RBI triple and Jesse Barfield and rookie Mike Sharperson added run-scoring doubles.
Key gave up a two-run homer to Pat Tabler in the fourth inning while Cleveland's Cory Snyder homered off Mark Eichhorn in the seventh. Cleveland starter Tom Candiotti allowed six runs and eight hits in five innings.
"We showed some power, some speed, some great pitching and some clutch hitting," Moseby said. "But that's our ballclub. Nobody should be surprised."

Orioles 2, Rangers 1
Cal Ripken Sr. joined Milwaukee's Treblehorn as a winner in his major-league managing debut when Larry Sheets' ninth-inning sacrifice fly scored pinch runner Rene Gonzales.
With one out in the bottom of the ninth, Ray Knight singled off reliever Greg Harris and Gonzales ran for him. Gonzales advanced to third when Harris' pickoff throw was wild and Harris walked Terry Kennedy and Jim Dwyer intentionally to load the bases. Sheets then lofted a 3-2 pitch to center field for the winning run.
Texas took a 1-0 lead on the third pitch of the game when Oddibe McDowell hit a home run over the center-field fence off Mike Boddicker. The Orioles tied it in the second inning when Fred Lynn doubled, stole third and scored when catcher Don Slaught was charged with a passed ball as Knight struck out.

That unearned run was the only one allowed by Texas starter Charlie Hough, who went seven innings and allowed four hits. Boddicker gave up one run and five hits in 7-2-3 innings.
White Sox 5, Royals 4
Chicago spoiled Billy Gardner's

debut as Kansas City manager when Harold Baines and Tim Luehlt hit RBI singles during a four-run second inning. Dick Howser, who is battling a cancerous brain tumor and stepped down as manager on Feb. 23, received a standing ovation from the Kansas City crowd 38,000 when he was introduced from the press box in the sixth inning.
Chicago starter Richard Dotson allowed four runs in 6 1-3 innings. Bobby Thigpen pitched 2 1-3 and Bob James got the final out. Loser Danny Jackson gave up five runs, three of them earned, in 6 1-3 innings.
Baines, who also had an RBI double, Luehlt and Ozzie Guillen each had two of Chicago's eight hits. George Brett homered for the Royals and rookie Kevin Seitzer tripled; doubled, singled and drove in two runs.

NFL Strike Possible

SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — NFL Players Association Executive Director Gene Upshaw said Monday that he expects tough negotiations with league owners before the 1987 season begins and doesn't rule out the possibility of a strike.
"It takes a lot of work to fight," the former Oakland Raiders guard told a group of sportswriters and sportscasters of talks resuming April 20 in Washington. "I like having fun. It's a lot easier getting along and trying to work it out."
Mike Kenn, the Atlanta Falcons player representative and a member of the union's bargaining committee, said the issues involved in the upcoming talks were not as complex as the ones that led to the 57-day players' strike five years ago.
"This time the issues are plain and simple and easy to understand," he said.
"I have a very positive outlook on the negotiations," Kenn said. "But I expect this to change as things get closer."
Upshaw, holding in his hand a copy of the union's position dubbed "Game Plan '87," said he didn't expect much movement to occur until the late summer.

Chicod Sweeps

Chicod swept past G.R. Whitfield in junior high baseball and softball action Monday.

Bethel falls to 0-1 and returns to action Thursday at G.R. Whitfield.

Leonard...

was unable to cut off the ring as Leonard danced one way, then another, always keeping just out of Hagler's reach. Leonard dominated the early rounds, fighting in spurts only when he wanted to and frustrating Hagler in the process.
Hagler missed repeatedly with wild punches as Leonard used his quickness to get away.
As the fourth round began, Hagler said to Leonard: "Come on out and slug."
"No chance," Leonard replied.
The brief chat wasn't the only one between the two fighters. Both smiled, glared and talked to each other throughout the fight.
"They were going at it as much verbally as physically," said referee Richard Steele. "There were certainly words I couldn't repeat."
Hagler's futility showed best midway through the fifth round when he lunged at Leonard with a left hook that missed badly and turned him completely around and into the ropes. Leonard was there waiting and dashed a quick left-right to Hagler's head before he could get off the ropes.
Hagler, though, was beginning to figure Leonard out. He hurt Leonard late in the fifth round with a right hook and a left uppercut and, as Leonard slowed in the sixth round, Hagler started cutting off the ring and getting to the challenger with strong combinations.
"From the fifth round on, I dictated," said Hagler. "I took control from there on to make sure I'd retain the title."
In the seventh round, Leonard, tried to showboat by doing a quick shuffle while taunting Hagler. The shuffle wasn't quick enough, however, and ended abruptly when Hagler hit him with a left hook and then pummeled him on the ropes.
Hagler continued applying constant pressure and it finally paid off big in the ninth round. The champion caught Leonard on the ropes with two strong left hooks, then backed Leonard into his own corner and flailed away at his head.
"I felt his punching power late in the fight," Leonard admitted. "I thought he would come on strong late and I was expecting it."

Ruling Leaves Texaco Holding Bankruptcy Card

By JOHN C. GIVEN
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Although the U.S. Supreme Court has handed Texaco Inc. another setback in its multibillion-dollar fight with Pennzoil Co., Texaco still holds one weapon both sides hope it will never use.

That is the possibility that Texaco, the nation's third-largest oil company, might declare bankruptcy.

The high court on Monday threw out a federal judge's ruling that Texaco, the nation's third-largest oil company, need put only $1 billion in security, instead of $11 billion, while appeals was pending.

The decision last January by U.S. District Court Judge Charles Brieant in White Plains, was one of Texaco's few legal victories since a Houston jury determined that Texaco had wrongfully interfered with a 1984 merger agreement between Pennzoil and Getty Oil Co. by trying to acquire Getty.

The Texas jury awarded Pennzoil $10.5 billion, a figure later reduced by the Texas Court of Appeals to $8.5 billion. With interest, Texaco now owes about $11 billion, and is required to post a bond of that size in order to appeal.

Texaco stock plunged $4.25 a share to $33.37½ in consolidated New York Stock Exchange trading Monday, leaving the company's stock market value at $9 billion — or $2 billion less than the judgment it now faces. Texaco was the most actively traded issue on the exchange.

Last January, Brieant agreed with Texaco that filing what was then the full $12 billion could bankrupt the company, thus denying the company its constitutional right to appeal the adverse verdict. The ruling was later upheld on appeal.

But on Monday, the Supreme Court declared that Brieant was wrong to have heard the case before the questions had first been fully aired in the Texas state courts.

The ruling still stopped short of deciding the constitutionality of the bond-posting requirement.

"We express no opinions on the (constitutional) claims Texaco has raised ... nor on the possibility that Texaco now could raise these claims in the Texas courts," said Justice Lewis F. Powell, writing for the court.

Texaco responded by saying it would promptly appeal the Texas bonding law in Texas state courts. The company also pointed out that Pennzoil had repeatedly said it would not force Texaco to ante up the full amount, if Texaco pursued that course of action.

Later, Pennzoil confirmed that position in a statement issued from its Houston headquarters "so long as Texaco proceeds promptly in appropriate manner in the Texas court."

Pennzoil has good reason to go easy on Texaco at this time, analysts said.

"If Pennzoil wanted to drive Texaco into bankruptcy, it could," said Sanford Margoshes, an analyst for Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. "Would they? No. Because they'd then become an unsecured creditor."

Even Texaco Board Chairman Alfred C. DeCrane Jr. said as much at a White Plains press conference, declaring that Pennzoil had no interest in forcing Texaco into bankruptcy.

But there was no question that the Supreme Court decision turned the screw a little tighter.

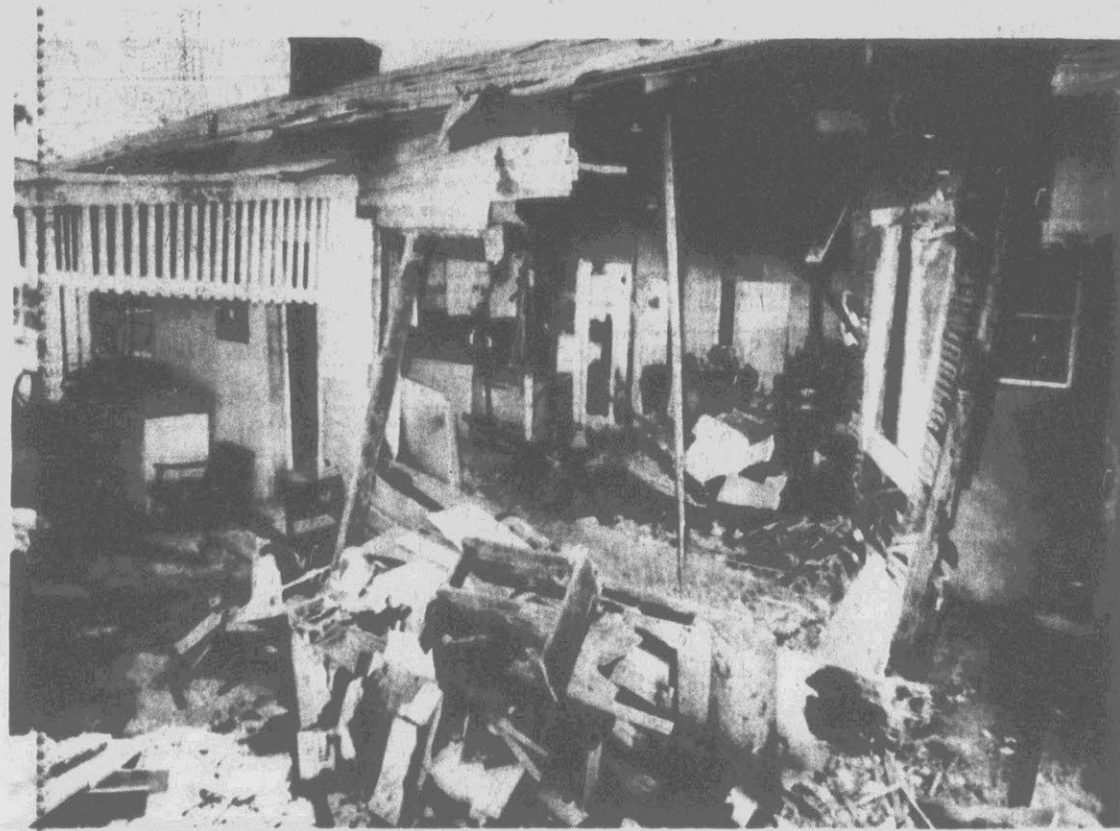

"Every time Pennzoil wins, the ante goes up," said Frank P. Knuetel, an analyst for Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

Margoshes said that despite Pennzoil's claim that it did not want to force Texaco into bankruptcy, the threat was an option.

"They can use it to cajole, persuade or convince or whatever, to bring about an out-of-court settlement," he said.

Texaco's DeCrane stressed the company's willingness to seek a "reasonable and economic" negotiated settlement. But he also said that filing for court protection under federal bankruptcy laws was "still a factor, as we have said, we would consider."

Texaco does not "expect to have to resort to that," he added.

BOMB BLAST SCENE — Rubble is all that remains of a Miami duplex Monday where two teens were killed Sunday by an explosion investigators now believe may have been caused by a land mine the youths were playing with. Police said Monday they couldn't speculate on the origins of the mine, which investigators believe was similar to a Claymore mine, containing 1 1/4 pounds of C-4 plastic explosives. Martin Samson, 14, and David Guerrero, 16, were killed in the explosion. (AP Laserphoto)

Reagan Reaction To Acid Rain, Trade Pacts Caught Most Canadians Off Guard

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

OTTAWA (AP) — Nothing was signed during President Reagan's annual summit with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, but the Canadian government was pleased by Reagan's unexpected openness to agreements on acid rain and free trade.

"There were a lot of surprised people in Ottawa today, in both delegations," a senior Canadian official told a briefing Monday night after Reagan returned home from his first foreign trip since the Iran arms affair.

To the delight of his hosts, Reagan promised to consider Mulroney's proposal for a bilateral accord on reducing the smokestack and vehicle emissions that cause acid rain.

He also acknowledged for the first time Canada's contention that 50 percent of the acid pollution damaging its lakes and forests originates in the United States, Canadian officials said.

But there was little cause for satisfaction in Canada on the third major summit issue: Canada's claim of sovereignty over the Northwest Passage and the U.S. contention that the Arctic waterway is in international waters.

Reagan announced his decision on a possible acid rain accord in a speech to a joint session of Parliament, interrupted 13 times by applause and twice by heckling from the socialist opposition.

He said such a pact might be based on U.S.-Canadian agreements on Great Lakes pollution.

Canadian officials said there was no significance in referring to the proposal as an accord, rather than a treaty as Mulroney did. Both would be binding and call for a timetable and schedule of emission reductions, the officials said.

A working group was set up to begin talks on the possible agreement.

Canadian officials said the president, who once said trees and volcanoes cause air pollution, dramatically changed his position after two hours of talks Monday morning.

Reagan also gave his strongest endorsement of a free-trade pact with Canada, under negotiation for the past year.

The president pledged to negotiate in good faith to turn Mulroney's "visionary proposal" for a bilateral free-trade agreement into a reality this year.

"To those who would hunker down behind barriers to fight a destructive and self-defeating round of trade battles, Canada and the United States will show the positive way," Reagan said.

Chicago Picking Mayor

By JAMES LITKE
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Mayor Harold Washington and Ed Vrdolyak, hard-scrabble products of the once-monolithic Democratic machine, dug at the ballot box today after four years of feuding over everything from City Council control to blame for the Chicago Bears' losses.

Vrdolyak, a third-party spin-off from the machine, acknowledged his chances of staging the third upset of an incumbent Chicago mayor in as many elections depended on a near-record turnout.

The effect of challenger Thomas Hynes' surprise withdrawal Sunday hung over the campaign's final 36 hours as Washington, Vrdolyak and Hynes regarded Republican Don Haner all claimed Hynes' supporters.

Vrdolyak, 49, was running on the Illinois Solidarity Party ticket and had targeted the same constituency as Hynes. On Monday he likened Hynes' departure to a rush of adrenalin for his campaign against Democrat Washington.

"Momentum is vital, and we got it," said Vrdolyak, beginning a whirlwind campaigning day Monday with a radio interview conducted over his car phone.

In other elections today, San Francisco voters were choosing among 14 candidates vying for the late Rep. Sam Burton's congressional seat in an election seen as a test of the political strengths of the city's large homosexual community and a fading Democratic machine.

Mayoral elections also were set in Colorado Springs, Colo.; Gallup and Silver City, N.M.; and in Kansas City, Kan., where Democratic Mayor Jack Reardon, who had a heart transplant this year, was up for reelection.

Wisconsin voters were deciding referendums to amend the state constitution to allow a state lottery or to legalize betting on horse and dog races, while Missourians had before them a 4-cent-a-gallon increase in the gasoline tax.

The Chicago Board of Elections predicted 72 percent of the city's 1.5 million registered voters would go to the polls, 200,000 fewer than in 1983 when Washington became the city's first black mayor.

But Vrdolyak strategists said that prediction was low, especially in the white ethnic strongholds where former Mayor Jane Byrne scored well against Washington in the Feb. 24 Democratic primary.

"We're going to make a change in the mayor's office," Vrdolyak said.

The 65-year-old Washington, favored 3-to-1 in recent polls over his closest pursuer, which had been Hynes, scoffed at the notion that Hynes had enough supporters to make a difference.

He claimed to have picked up 25 percent of Hynes' voters already and said their number "will push us up near what we call the landslide area."

"Clearly, this withdrawal of Mr. Hynes should motivate pro-Washington forces," the mayor said on the same WMAQ radio show that interviewed Vrdolyak. "Now it is Washington versus Vrdolyak. This is it."

A brief battle between the two over whether Hynes' name should remain on the ballot was settled by Cook County Judge Joseph Schneider, who sided with Washington forces and the election commissioners in ruling Hynes' name would appear on the ballot.

Vrdolyak entered the race after grappling with the mayor as head of the City Council's opposition bloc, which held a majority for the first three years of Washington's administration and effectively stymied his programs.

Their battles became so fierce they were dubbed "Council Wars." After the Bears lost their first football game of their 1985 Super Bowl season, Vrdolyak put before the council a measure to blame Washington because he had accompanied the team to a road game.

Washington gained control last year after court-ordered special aldermanic elections.

Haider, a 45-year-old Northwestern University professor and lifelong Democrat until his GOP draft late last year, has failed to generate more than single-digit support in polls.

But he toured the city with four-term Republican Gov. James R. Thompson, saying, "I'm here to stay."

Hynes and Vrdolyak mounted third-party bids to afford Mrs. Byrne a clean shot at Washington in the primary.

Elsewhere, San Francisco Supervisor Harry Britt, 48, a self-described socialist who sought to become the state's first openly homosexual congressman, was one of six Democrats in the 5th Congressional District race.

Britt trailed party favorite Nancy Pelosi 24 percent to 13 percent in a poll taken a week ago. Pelosi, 47, financial chair of the 1986 national Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, was given an endorsement by Mrs. Burton just before her Feb. 1 death.

In Kansas City, three-term incumbent Reardon, 43, was opposed by former city school board member Joseph Steineger, 53.

In non-partisan elections in New Mexico, six candidates sought to replace outgoing Gallup Mayor Robert Allen while in Silver City, Mayor Brandon Beard faced Dan Dunagan and Richard Lopez.

Another non-partisan election was being held in Colorado Springs, where Mayor Bob Isaac, 58, who has held the office since 1979, was opposed by Fred Weber, 33, a painter and home demolition contractor, and Joseph Jones, 38, a landscaper.

Baker Misquoted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III doesn't often forecast action of finance ministers, so when he was quoted predicting the renewal of a 6-nation monetary accord, some eyes were raised at the Treasury Department — Baker's among them.

In an interview on Cable Network News' "Newsmaker Saturday," Baker was asked whether finance officials at a meeting scheduled for Wednesday would extend the agreement, reached in February in Paris, for stabilizing currency rates.

According to a transcript of the show that was distributed by CNN, Baker said that "we will be renewing the agreement."

That remark, repeated in a news report by the Associated Press, surprised Baker, who didn't recall making any such prediction, said a Baker aide.

What Baker actually said on the program, which was taped Friday, was that the group would be "reviewing" the accord, according to spokesman Charles Powers.

Baker's full — and correct — response was: "I obviously can't comment on what we might or might not do at the meeting next week other than to say that clearly we will be reviewing the agreement."

Randy Travis Wins 4 Awards; McEntire Top Female Vocalist

By JEFF WILSON
Associated Press Writer
BUENA PARK, Calif. (AP) — The Academy of Country Music hailed Randy Travis as male vocalist of the year and gave him three other awards, while Hank Williams Jr. was named entertainer of the year.

Reba McEntire collected Hat trophies for best female vocalist and for her video version of "Whoever's In New England" in Monday night's 22nd annual Country Music Awards, broadcast on NBC-TV.

The band Alabama, whose 13 Country Music Awards are the most won by anyone, came away empty-handed.

"It's important to get recognition for what you've done," said Travis, of Marshville, N.C., who was honored for the album "Storms of Life" and the song and single "On The Other Hand." Travis shared the song award with composer Paul Overstreet.

Williams, the son of country music legend Hank Williams, picked up only the second Country Music Award of his career despite numerous nominations.

"I'm as gentle as a lamb and just as sweet as sugar. You don't have to be afraid of me," Williams told the audience at Knott's Berry Farm.

"The music is a gift from heaven," Miss McEntire said backstage after accepting the video award. "I just sing it. I'm thrilled to death."

The Judds, the mother and daughter who were co-hosts of the nationally televised show with "Dallas" star Patrick Duffy, claimed trophies for best vocal duet. The Foresters, four sisters from Rising Fawn, Ga., won the vocal group honor.

Holly Dunn of San Antonio, Texas, who had a country hit with "Daddy's Hands," was best new female vocalist.

"I decided that since I spent the last year singing about my Dad: Mom, I love you, this is for you," Miss Dunn said as she accepted the award.

Dwight Yoakam was honored as best new male vocalist.

"I think there are country artists being honored tonight who are doing traditional, basic country music. And I think that will always be acknowledged. It is a new traditionalism," he said.

The 3,100-member Academy Board of Directors also gave a Career Achievement Award award to country veteran Carl Perkins, whose "Blue Suede Shoes" became an early rock classic.

The Pioneer Award for outstanding achievement in the field of country music went to Grand Ole Opry comedian Minnie Pearl.

The academy previously announced winners in instrumental categories as well as nightclub of the year, the Crazyhorse Steakhouse-Saloon in Santa Ana; country music station of the year, KNIX in Phoenix; and disc jockey of the year, Chris Taylor of radio station KIXZ in Amarillo, Texas.

Monday's hearing had been scheduled by Miss Love's former attorney, Jeffrey Miller on getting Christopher Carson to pay for the cost of taking Johnny Carson's deposition.

The motion was not heard, Rubin said.

"I am going to attempt to get the attorneys for Johnny Carson and Christopher Carson and see if we can't work something out," he said. "I think for the sake of the child it ought to be resolved in that way."

Rubin said that if he was unsuccessful he would try to find out what financial arrangements Carson has with his son.

Christopher Carson, an unemployed golf professional, has testified that he owns a $119,000 Fort Lauderdale home and two cars, and that he has a $35,000 bank account, all given to him by his father.

Broward County Judge Robert C. Abel on March 24 ordered Carson to pay Ms. Love $125 a week until the case was resolved.

Mayor Tom Bradley on Monday presented Autry with a plaque proclaiming "Gene Autry Day."

Carson Woes

MIAMI (AP) — Attorney Ellis Rubin said he would speak with attorneys for entertainer Johnny Carson and his son, Christopher, to try to reach an agreement on child support for Carson's out-of-wedlock granddaughter.

Rubin took over the case Monday, representing Tanena Love of Fort Lauderdale in her attempt to gain money for her 8-month-old daughter, Cristal.

Autry Gets Fifth Star

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — One-time singing cowboy Gene Autry, who received an unprecedented fifth star on Hollywood's Walk of Fame, said the only thing that could make him happier was if his California Angels had won the World Series.

Mayor Tom Bradley on Monday presented Autry with a plaque proclaiming "Gene Autry Day."

Book It

This is National Library Week. Most early libraries were housed in temples and monasteries. Until printing technology developed, books were extremely scare and expensive. The written word was primarily for the wealthy. Today, public libraries flourish. The Library of Congress is the largest in the world, with almost 80 million items, including 20 million books and pamphlets. The building itself contains more than 64 acres of floor space and 532 miles of book shelves.

DO YOU KNOW — What Egyptian city was home to one of the most famous ancient libraries?

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY April 8

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Today finds all sorts of peculiar conditions in effect. Some sudden events will occur as well as some limitations sprouting up in the path of your current desires.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Be sure to work at a measured pace. Show that you are clever and resourceful, especially tonight. TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Don't do anything that can irk those you dwell with. Don't permit strangers to enter your home.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You are undecided on just how to handle correspondence and communication, so do not act hastily now.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Some opportunity to make more money may have a flaw in it. Don't act on impulse.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Stumbling blocks may be in the way of gaining personal wishes. Friends cannot be helpful to you until tonight.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): You have to be more persistent if you want to gain a personal wish. Generosity can be a fine virtue for you.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Consider many ways to show gratitude for a friend's loyal assistance. Be careful in both motion and speech.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Use much care and caution where worldly and civic matters are concerned. An influential person can't help you now.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): A new outlet requires further study before you can get into it successfully.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): You are tempted to go off on a tangent, but it would be wiser to handle business details intelligently.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): You are desirous of getting along better with an associate, but wait until evening when you get the right idea.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): You have excellent ideas for improving your environment. Study what this will cost before doing anything.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will look at everything from an optimistic view. This one, however, is apt to procrastinate too long before arriving at decisions, so teach him, or her, to speed up this process so that big success is attainable. Give as fine an education as you can.

The bidding:

1♥ 1NT Pass 4S

Opening lead: King of ♥

Just because you, as declarer, know that the opponents can take enough tricks to defeat you is no reason to throw in the towel. The defenders might not be aware of your situation, and you might be able to find a play that will divert them from the winning defense.

We have seen better one no trump overcalls than North's. With only 15 points, all in primes, and a single stopper in the enemy suit, he should have passed and awaited developments. Assuming East also passed, South could have reopened with one spade, and the pair would eventually have come to rest in a safe partscore.

West attacked four spades with the top of his heart sequence. Sitting South was Allan Kahn of New York, and he did not like his prospects. It seemed as if he would have to lose two club tricks and one in each red suit. He could perhaps set up dummy's diamonds by ducking a diamond early, but it would then be obvious to the defenders that they would have to cash out their winners in the other suits.

Instead, he tried a little guile. He ducked the opening lead and won the continuation. After cashing the table's top trumps, he calmly led a club to his queen! East played low and West took his ace.

Not surprisingly, West saw no future in a club continuation. He led another heart, ruffed by declarer who proceeded to reel off his trumps to produce this position:

♠ A 9 6
♣ 10 6
♦ Q 3
♠ 3
♥ K 10 5

When declarer led his last trump, he could afford to part with a club from dummy. East had no option but to let go a club. Now East was thrown in with a club and he had to break the diamond suit for declarer. By simply playing for split diamond honors, declarer avoided losing a diamond trick and landed his contract.

Surrogate Mom Seeks Visitation

By JOEL SIEGEL
Associated Press Writer

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — An attorney for Mary Beth Whitehead asked the state Supreme Court on Monday to block the decision in the Baby M case and grant her visitation rights to the daughter she bore under a surrogate contract.

"I will see her at any time and at any place that I am allowed," Mrs. Whitehead said in court papers. "I respectfully request that the court not break or interrupt the bonds between myself and my daughter any more than (they) have already been interrupted."

Attorney Harold Cassidy asked the court to hear directly the appeal of the March 31 decision that upheld the contract under which Baby M was born.

The decision also stripped Mrs. Whitehead of her parental rights and awarded custody to biological father William Stern. The ruling also cleared the way for Stern's wife to quickly adopt the year-old child.

Three days later, a three-judge panel in the Appellate Division of Superior Court denied Mrs. Whitehead's request for a stay.

Cassidy said the public policy issues involved and the interests of the baby require a prompt final ruling by the state's high court.

A Supreme Court spokesman, Earl Josephson, said the court might decide Tuesday whether to take the Baby M case directly on appeal.

However, Josephson said he was less sure the court on Tuesday would rule on Cassidy's request for a stay. One problem, Josephson said, is that the court had not received a brief from Stern's attorney by late Monday afternoon.

Cassidy said a stay of the Baby M decision should be granted because of what he termed his likelihood of success on appeal and the "irreparable harm" that would result by not letting Baby M and Mrs. Whitehead see each other.

It would be acceptable, Cassidy said, to resume the twice-weekly, two-hour visits that occurred before Superior Court Judge Harvey R. Sorkow issued his ruling last week.

The Sterns' attorney, Gary Skoloff, said, "Our central argument is to deny any visitation rights, is to simply affirm Judge Sorkow's decision... What the baby needs is peace and security, and in order to afford peace and security you have to terminate visitation."

The case focused worldwide attention on the issue of surrogate parenting. Mrs. Whitehead had refused to honor the $10,000 contract under which she was artificially inseminated with Stern's sperm.

The 29-year-old Brick Township housewife fled to Florida with the baby after she refused to give her up to Stern and his wife, Elizabeth.

When Mrs. Whitehead was found, the baby was placed in Stern's temporary custody, and the three-month trial began, culminating in Tuesday's decision by Sorkow in Hackensack.

The decision was the first to uphold a disputed surrogate parenting contract. It also had the effect of creating New Jersey law on the issue because no state statute deals with surrogate parenting.

Study Says 240 Million Children Face Death

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Disease and malnutrition will combine to kill more than 240 million children in developing countries by the year 2000 at current child mortality rates, a new study warns.

The report, "Child Survival: Risks and the Road to Health," estimates that between the years 1985 and 2000, some 244 million youngsters under age 5 will die.

Of them, 240 million deaths are expected in the less developed parts of the world. That is nearly as many people as currently live in the United States.

But meeting targets for improved child health could save 65 million of those young lives, according to the analysis prepared for the Agency for International Development.

The report by the Columbia, Md.-based Institute for Resource Development says, "A child born in one of the high-mortality African and Asian countries today is on average 20 times more likely to die before reaching age 5 than a child born in the United States, Japan or Sweden."

In addition, child deaths vary widely even among countries within regions, not just between developed and developing nations, said Alene Gelbard, the Institute's deputy director of population studies.

"This is just really unjust," she commented in an interview. But the differences also offer a glimmer of hope, because if one nation in an area has fewer child deaths, the reasons for its success can be learned and applied elsewhere, she said.

The Institute, a research division of the Westinghouse Electric Co., published the report Monday. The report looks at infant deaths in more than 100 developing nations, and compared them with three developed nations, Sweden, Japan and the United States.

The United Nations estimates that about 2 billion babies will be born during the 15 years, 1.8 billion of them in the so-called developing world. Of the 244.6 billion under-5 children who will die at current mortality rates, 239.7 million will be from the developing nations, the study concludes.

But 65.3 million of those deaths could be prevented by meeting a series of targets for various nations to lower their infant and child mortality rates by the year 2000, the report says.

"We know a lot about what needs to be done" to lower the rates, explained population expert Katrina Galway of the Institute's Demographic Data for Development Project.

The immediate need is for an organized approach to the problem so that national and international policy makers can target the methods to avoid these deaths, she said.

Malnutrition and the spacing of births close together are major contributing factors, helping to weaken many youngsters until they are unable to resist disease.

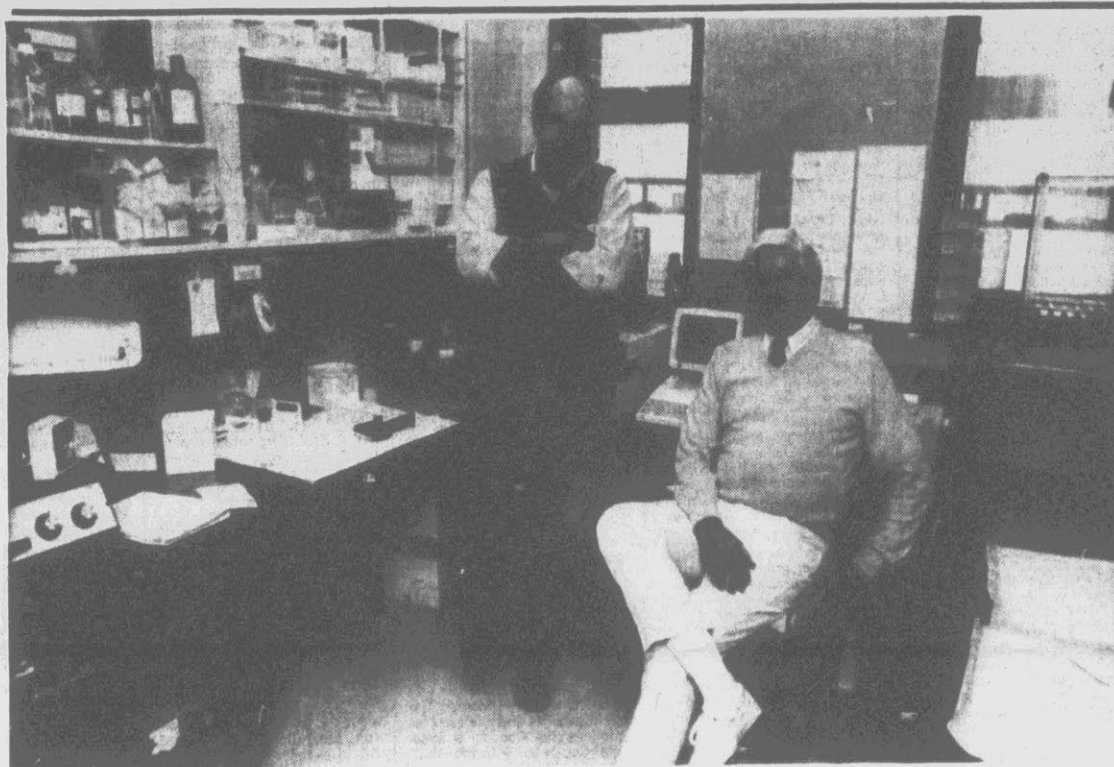

Malnutrition affects as many as 40 percent of children in developing nations today, the report states, and is "in many respects the common denominator of the disease and deprivation process that reduce child survival."

Simple diarrhea is the biggest cause of death among infants and small children, killing most of them through dehydration, the study says.

Of the 15 million youngsters under 5 who die annually worldwide, 5 million succumb to diarrheal diseases, despite the fact that remedies are relatively easily available, Ms. Galway said.

So-called oral rehydration therapy — giving the sick child a salt-sugar solution — can prevent many of these deaths, she said.

A second major weapon in reducing childhood deaths is immunization, she said, noting that an estimated 3.5 million youngsters die annually from such preventable ills as measles, diphtheria, whooping cough, tetanus, polio and tuberculosis.

BREAST CANCER RESEARCH — Dr. Anthony J. Strelkauskas and Dr. Paul H. Aldenderfer of the Medical University of South Carolina at Charleston say they have isolated a pure breast cancer cell antigen from blood serum of patients with the disease. Isolation of the antigen, the biochemical marker on cancer cells that triggers the immune system, may be the first step toward developing a vaccine that may be able to immunize women against breast cancer. (AP Laserphoto)

Senate Report Criticizes Private Medical Plans For Elderly Citizens

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senior citizens who join prepaid private medical plans are in danger of falling victim to unscrupulous marketing techniques, sudden coverage cutoffs and low-quality care, says a Senate report released today.

The investigation by aides to Republican members of the Senate Special Committee on Aging contends there are major deficiencies in the way the Health Care Financing Administration oversees health maintenance organizations (HMOs) with Medicare contracts.

"HCFA has relied far too heavily on the HMOs to monitor and regulate themselves — creating an environment in which the Medicare beneficiary is highly exposed to crass and unethical marketing, substandard care, and unpredictable breaks in health insurance coverage," the report concludes.

"The offending plans are not being sorted out from the good ones," it says. "It is absolutely critical that HCFA, with the help of Congress, institute major reforms before the problems described in this report become widespread."

Health maintenance organizations act as insurers and providers of medical services, financing those services with a pre-determined monthly payment. Medicare recipients have had the option of joining such organizations since April 1985. As of March 1, 1987, the report said, 3 percent of the Medicare population or nearly 870,000 people were enrolled in 151 HMOs in 33 states.

"Medicare and HMOs: A First Look, With Disturbing Findings," was written at the request of Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., former chairman and now senior Republican on the Aging Committee.

The Republican staff investigators said their conclusions, based on examinations of programs in Florida, California, Minnesota, Michigan and Massachusetts, are preliminary but alarming.

Among their findings:

—A number of health maintenance organizations illegally screen out high-risk beneficiaries.

—Dropping beneficiaries out of programs without their knowledge has left them at risk of no care or high out-of-pocket costs.

—Major violations of Medicare laws and regulations designed to protect beneficiaries from false or misleading information are not unusual.

—Some HMOs discourage use of services and access to specialists to cut costs.

—Beneficiaries sometimes experience life-threatening delays in obtaining diagnostic tests and treatment.

—No systematic evaluation of HMO care for Medicare beneficiaries has been conducted.

—The Health Care Financing Administration is either unwilling or unable to commit enough resources to run and monitor this program.

The report recommended that Congress set strict standards for promotion, advertising and sale of Medicare HMO plans, with civil and/or criminal penalties for violators.

Other recommendations included better protection of beneficiaries whose HMO plans are terminated and more stringent oversight of health care quality.

An HCFA spokeswoman said officials there would have no comment on the Heinz report until they had seen it.

In a Wall Street Journal article last Friday, HCFA Administrator William Roper said the administration does not endorse "blind trust in the ability of the market" to meet the health-care needs of older Americans. Under its (Private Health Plan Option) initiative, government policies the market....

But the Heinz report said the administration has been moving quickly to enroll as many people as possible in HMOs while depending on those organizations to police themselves. It said the agency has moved "at a snail's pace" to address sometimes dangerous problems involving substandard or unavailable care.

Most troubling, the investigators said, has been HCFA's sporadic and unaggressive response to complaints.

"Records from the regional offices indicate that most complaints, either from beneficiaries or physicians, triggered little action," they said. For example, they said, the agency contracted for a review of a troubled Florida program in 1986, three years after the first allegations of poor-quality care.

According to the report, an HCFA official said in February that the agency would implement a nationwide complaint review system this month. In addition, the report said, quality-of-care reviews required by a new law should start this summer.

The report cited many specific problems and complaints and said hundreds of people claim they were enrolled in HMOs without their knowledge or consent. They have experienced huge medical bills and harassment by creditors while Medicare loses money by making the monthly HMO payments for beneficiaries who are not being served, the report said.

In the San Francisco area, the report said, HMOs tried to recruit seniors 50 miles from service facilities. One salesman wrongly suggested members could keep their own doctors. Some identify themselves as Medicare specialists and carry cards that look like official government documents. Some senior centers have barred HMO representatives from their premises.

One woman's coverage was discontinued after her first visit to an HMO when it was clear she needed to see several specialists, the report said. Some of the organizations discourage use of services by delaying appointments, intimidating patients, providing insufficient phone lines and delaying payment to pharmacists and other subcontractors.

The report was based on reviews of hundreds of documents and interviews with state and federal officials, Medicare recipients, senior advocates, lawyers and HMO personnel, the investigators said.

Transplant Patient Improves

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Ronnie DeSillers, the 7-year-old liver transplant patient whose plight attracted President Reagan's attention, made steady progress Monday as his second implanted organ began to work, a hospital official said.

Ronnie, who received a $1,000 check from Reagan to help pay for a new liver, was in critical condition on a respirator in the intensive care unit of Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh, said hospital spokeswoman Lynn McMahon.

The Miami boy, who received his second new liver during 14 hours of surgery ending early Saturday, was making "steady progress," said Miss McMahon.

Ronnie received his first liver transplant in a 12-hour operation Feb. 25.

The boy gained national attention in February as thousands sent him contributions after $4,000 was stolen from his medical fund at his school in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Reagan sent an autographed photograph along with his check.
