Argentine Leader Halts Military Mutiny

By WILLIAM H. HEATH
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Raul Alfonsin flew to an army base and talked dozens of officers into ending a three-day mutiny, bringing a dramatic and peaceful end to the worst crisis of Argentina's fledgling democracy.

"Today we can give thanks to God," Alfonsin told 400,000 cheering Argentines upon his return to the capital Sunday. "Our house is in order and no blood has run in Argentina. I ask all of you to go home, to kiss your children and celebrate Easter in peace."

There was no immediate indication whether Alfonsin made any concessions in his meeting with the officer who led Argentina's second military rebellion in four days. Both groups of rebels demanded amnesty for officers accused of human rights abuses during the military regime that ended with Alfonsin's 1983 election.

Alfonsin said the rebels would be "arrested and turned over to justice." But he said some were heroes of Argentina's 1982 Falkland Islands war with Britain who had taken a "mistaken position" and who assured him they were not trying to provoke a coup.

The rebels had held nearly 2,000 troops at bay after occupying an infantry school Thursday at the Campo de Mayo army base 19 miles west of Buenos Aires. They declared their support for about 130 soldiers who rebelled Wednesday in Cordoba, 438 miles northwest of Buenos Aires. That mutiny failed Friday.

Sen. Adolfo Gass said there were 57 rebels at Campo de Mayo, but rebels said they numbered about 150.

The mutineers occupied the school's two-story main building and four barracks behind it, deploying light tanks and machine-gun positions around the building.

Troops loyal to the government dug in about 150 yards from the school. There were no reports of shots being fired by either side.

Sunday afternoon, Alfonsin appeared before about 400,000 people in a plaza beside Government House, announced his intention to negotiate with the mutineers and boarded an army helicopter for Argentina's largest army base. Returning to Government House a few hours later, the beaming president stepped to a balcony and told the crowd: "Happy Easter, fellow countrymen. The mutineers have changed their attitude."

He said rebel leader Lt. Co. Aldo Rico agreed to surrender in a meeting at a neutral site within the wooded compound. Details of the meeting were not available.

The crowd, waving banners supporting democracy, broke into wild cheers. Celebrations continued into the night across the country.

Political leaders, including several in the opposition, hailed the surrender as a victory for democracy in Argentina, where the military has seized power six times in the last 57 years.

"There will never be another coup in Argentina," said Adolfo Rodriguez Saa, the opposition Peronist governor of the province of San Luis.

President Reagan, on vacation in California, said in a statement that the United States was "pleased that the siege is over ... and confident that the government of President Alfonsin will continue on the path of democracy."

Before the rebels were taken into custody, Rico, 41, told reporters he had achieved "objectives that will aid national reconciliation" and "affect the armed forces and the police."

He did not elaborate. But his statement raised speculations that the gov-

Villagers Reported Murdered By Rebels In Eastern Sri Lanka

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Tamil rebels today shot and killed at least 18 Sinhalese villagers in the same area of eastern Sri Lanka where the militants massacred 127 people last week, government sources said.

The government announced this morning that Tamil rebels raided the Trincomalee district village of Vannela, killing at least 10 people. However, government sources said later the death toll had risen to at least 18. The sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

Tilak Ratnwara, chairman of the government media center, confirmed the deaths of 10 civilians, half of them women, in the village 18 miles southwest of the port of Trincomalee. He said the attackers were driven off by Home Guards, local youths armed by the government.

Vannela is about 10 miles from Aluth Oya, where Tamil rebels on Friday ambushed three buses, two trucks and a car and killed 127 people. The government said almost all the victims were Sinhalese, the island's predominant ethnic group.

The latest violence in the Tamil rebels' 4-year-old civil war prompted the government to cancel a unilateral cease-fire. The government said Sunday it would arm and train about 5,000 Sinhalese and resettle them in the predominantly Tamil eastern province.

Tamils, most of whom are Hindus, make up 18 percent of Sri Lanka's 16 million people. They maintain they are discriminated against by the predominantly Buddhist Sinhalese, and want to establish an autonomous state in the island's north and east, which they consider their ancient homeland. More than 5,000 people have been killed in the fighting.

A senior military officer said Sunday that 5,000 troops were searching on the ground and in helicopter gunships for the rebels who carried out the massacre. The troops concentrated south of Trincomalee, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The government says the largest Tamil rebel group, the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, was responsible for Friday's massacre. "Eelam" is an ancient Tamil name for Sri Lanka.

A government statement Sunday said radio messages intercepted by police intelligence just after the slayings revealed that about 40 Tiger fighters led by a man identified as Pullendran, the Tiger commander in Trincomalee district, carried out the massacre.

But the group, based in Madras in southern India, said it was not involved. Tamil-language newspapers published a statement by the group Sunday saying, "We condemn this act, and we have nothing to do with it."

Spokesmen for Tamil militant groups said they feared the government would use the massacre as an excuse to launch an all-out campaign against Tamils.

President Junius R. Jayewardene said he could wipe out the insurgents easily if he didn't have to worry about high civilian casualties.

Churches In Area Celebrate Easter

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Despite solemn skies, eastern North Carolinians turned out with enthusiasm this weekend to observe the Easter holiday with church services, according to area ministers.

Easter sunrise services and a drama illustrating the last week of Christ's life were just two of the highlights of the religious holiday in eastern North Carolina.

The Easter story is being brought to life for the final performance of the season tonight in the Farm Life community of Martin County.

"The Message of Easter" is being performed for the eighth year by the Piney Grove Baptist Church, according to director E.T. Taylor. The performances take place in an outdoor amphitheater which seats 1,600. Tonight's show will begin at 8:15 p.m.

Approximately 12,000 persons have attended the performances, which began April 10 and were held each night.

"We began the performances in 1980 to witness to the community and it has grown into what is today," said Taylor, who wrote the script of the drama.

"Well, I wouldn't call myself the playwright" since the drama is taken directly from the Bible stories of the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, the crucifixion and the resurrection, Taylor said. "Maybe I should call myself the editor."

"Everyone associated with it is a member of Piney Grove Baptist Church," Taylor said. "No professional theater people are associated with it. There are 130 people in the cast this year, and another group of 30 or 40 church members are ushers, parking attendants and members of the technical crew."

"There are people from 400 or 500 miles away who drive to see the drama," Taylor said. "This year we have had people attend from all over North Carolina and from West Virginia, New York, Virginia and eastern Tennessee."

Taylor said that a story about the drama production was carried by the Associated Press News Service two years ago, and since that time several magazines have printed stories about the Easter presentation.

"The word (of the drama) is really spreading," Taylor said. "The best publicity is word of mouth."

PLO Meeting Sees Walkout By Council

By MONA ZIADE
Associated Press Writer

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Followers of terrorist Abu Nidal walked out of a meeting of Palestinian leaders today shortly before the opening of a session aimed at unifying the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The withdrawal by the Fatah Revolutionary Council appeared to improve the chances of agreement among the seven main PLO factions and strengthen the hand of PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat. Shortly after the walkout, six hardline Palestinian groups announced they were dissolving the Palestine National Salvation Front, a two-year-old Syrian-based coalition that opposed Arafat.

A statement issued in the name of Abu Nidal said his group was pulling out of the Palestine National Council, the Palestinian parliament-in-exile, because the council's leaders rejected efforts to restrict Arafat's "unlimited prerogatives."

Abu Nidal, whose real name is Sabri al-Banna, was believed to have come to Algiers for the session, but he made no public appearance.

Nayef Hawatmeh, leader of the hard-line Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, hinted to reporters that the Fatah Revolutionary Council was actually pushed out.

Officials Express Cautious Optimism For Arms Pact

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet and American officials are warning that although there has been dramatic progress in the search for an arms control agreement, last-minute problems could endanger the disarmament process.

Despite those notes of caution, expressed on two television programs Sunday, one Soviet official said he believed that at last week's visit to Moscow by Secretary of State George Shultz, groundwork was laid for a summit meeting this year between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

"We suggested to Mr. Shultz, in fact, an exact deal that would lead to the meeting of Mr. President with our general secretary, in the autumn or at the end of the year," Viktor Karpov, the chief Soviet arms control official, said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley."

Karpov added: "I think that there is a possibility now to reach an agreement, if there is a real willingness to do so without raising any artificial obstacles. We are removing on our part ... any obstacles."

On NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," Richard Perle, the assistant defense secretary who oversees Pentagon arms control matters, expressed similar guarded optimism.

"I would think the chances are quite good for a summit ... provided we settle the issue of verification, and provided we get a satisfactory solution to the short-range missile problem," Perle said. He said that as negotiators come closer to solutions, they have to be very careful because "the details can go horribly wrong."

The United States is considering a proposal discussed last week by Shultz and Gorbachev under which each country would eliminate their medium-range missiles in Europe, while keeping up to 100 of the weapons on their own respective territories. So far, the two sides have not agreed on how each would verify that the other is abiding by the agreement.

Break-In Reported

Police said a break-in at the Goodyear Tire Center at the Buyer's Market at West End Circle was reported at 1:30 a.m. today.

Officer C.J. Melvin said thieves, who gained entrance to the building through the front door, took two video cassette recorders with a combined value of $1,200 and a color television set valued at $500.

B&E Charges

Jimmy Spencer Jr., 45, of 203 Ford St. was arrested on breaking and entering charges by Greenville police Sunday.

Officer C.G. Alphin said Spencer was charged in connection with a break-in at 1300 W. Third St. that was reported at 12:22 a.m.

Embezzlement

Greenville police arrested Robert Paul Brazel, 34, of Grimesland, on charges of auto larceny and three counts of embezzlement Friday.

Sgt. T.V. Woolard said Brazel was charged with embezzling about $4,000 from Rent America at Greenville Square Shopping Center and taking the company's 1983 model van.

Woolard said the embezzlement and van theft were reported March 16.

Confederate Vessel On National Roster

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — The CSS Georgia, a 10-gun Confederate ironclad that helped guard Savannah from the Union Navy, is now on the National Register of Historic Places.

The warship lies underwater in the mud of the Savannah River off Fort Jackson.

"The Georgia is one of the few underwater resources placed on the register," said Scott W. Smith, head of the Fort Jackson-based Coastal Heritage Society, which is seeking to save at least part of the Civil War vessel.

"We're very pleased that it made the register," Corps spokesman Jim Parker said Sunday. The corps' Savannah District "considers it has great historical significance, particularly to Savannah."

The vessel was scuttled in the Savannah River in 1864 when Gen. William T. Sherman's troops captured Savannah, ending their march across Georgia. It now lies on the edge of the shipping channel from the ocean to the busy harbor.

The worst fear is the vessel could slip into the shipping channel, Parker said. "It seems to be stable right now."

If the ship slipped into the channel it would block at least one shipping lane. The corps has a contingency plan to save as much of the Georgia as possible if that happens, "but the primary concern would be to reopen the shipping channel," Parker said.

The listing came Feb. 10, after two decades of work by the Savannah District of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and local preservationists. Two cannons, shells and fragments of the casement, armored with railroad rails, have been brought up.

"The listing gives us credibility. That's the important thing," Smith said. "We are able to say this is one of the recognized historic places in the United States. There are more than 200,000 historic places on the register."

Getting the Georgia included was difficult because guidelines for the register are designed to list buildings, which have specific dimensions and locations, and can be photographed.

The Georgia is about 30 feet deep in water so muddy that divers working on the wreck can't see their hands six inches from their face masks. The vessel's specific dimensions aren't known and there are no photographs.

The Georgia's ironclad casement has been severely damaged and has collapsed, but the hull is believed to be intact. A volunteer group meets once a month to work on various problems involving salvaging the Georgia.

"We're beginning to plug in little pieces of the picture of those who served on the Georgia," he said, adding that those "little pieces" are probably in small private collections of Civil War mementoes.

"We're asking people to look at what they have, and if it bears on Savannah at all, we would be interested in copying it. We don't want to own it," he said.

Farm Scene

By SAM UZZELL
Agriculture Extension Agent

Everyone is familiar with the old maxim, "The grass always looks greener on the other side of the fence." This statement is not only true in a philosophical sense, but any unsuccessful lawn grower certainly thinks more of his neighbor's grass than his own. If your lawn-keeping efforts have been all for nothing, maybe there's a good reason why.

In the Coastal Plain of North Carolina, we are situated too far north to grow warm season grasses comparable to our neighbors in Georgia or Florida. At the same time, we are too far south to grow cool-season grasses like fescue or Kentucky bluegrass, red fescue or ryegrass without having some problems. So even if conditions in this area are not optimum for several types of lawns, we can do fairly well if proper grasses are selected for a particular site and the commitment to maintain proper conditions year-round is made.

What are factors that limit the establishment of many lawns in our country? Shade, summer heat, drought during the growing season, improperly fertilized lawns, and too much soil acidity are the most frequently encountered troubles. Grass will not grow in an area where there is 50 percent or more shade. Ground covers will add much to a lawn if planted in such an area where shade from trees or buildings prevent grass from growing.

Drought stress is a common malady in Coastal North Carolina. The lack of moisture and moisture-holding capacity of some of our sandy soils can kill lawns outright or weaken them to the point of unattractiveness and susceptibility to insects or disease. Many people will plant grass underneath a shade tree such as dogwoods or oak and wonder why they do so poorly. Many trees shade out directly, but perhaps a bigger impediment to the grass is the effect of many roots close to the soil surface competing for moisture and fertility. Grass cannot stand up to this kind of disadvantage.

Summer heat will cripple the cool-season grasses in this area. Red fescue (Pennlawn) commonly planted in shady areas in the Piedmont and Mountains of North Carolina will be killed in the Coastal Plain. Ryegrass will do fairly well in winter but will die out with the onset of warm weather. Tall fescue, which many of us know as "Kentucky 31," will grow well in the Coastal Plain up until the heat of mid-summer causes it to go into dormancy. If you have a fescue lawn and notice it languishing in summer heat, do not force it to grow by applying fertilizer and irrigation. This only weakens the grass and makes it much more susceptible to disease.

The warm season grasses, bermuda, centipede, zoysia, and St. Augustine grass all require full sun to grow best. Bermudagrass cannot tolerate shade as well as centipede or zoysia. Bermuda has an advantage however, in that it is very aggressive, established itself rapidly and does well in dry conditions.

Zoysiagrass is one of the most beautiful of all lawns. It is slower growing than Bermuda and must be started from sprigs (stem sections) or plugs. Once established, it is a dense, wear-resistant lawn that requires little mowing.

Centipedegrass is another favorite lawn grass in our area. It grows well on acidic soils (pH range 5.2-5.8) and is a low maintenance type lawn. Too much fertilization or lime will cause centipede to yellow and this condition may be corrected with a spray containing an iron compound. Centipede requires less fertilizer and less mowing than Bermudagrass or zoysia and grows better in shade than either of these.

So what is the lawn to establish in Pitt County? This decision is up to you and your individual tastes. Talk with your local nursery man or golf course superintendent for a few suggestions. Keep in mind your situation with respect to shade, irrigation and maintenance plans. You can, in all likelihood, have a good lawn if you are willing to devote the time and effort to it. Doing a soil test to begin with is the best way to begin a lawn. Without a soil test you do not know how much lime or fertilizer to put out and an improperly fertilized or limed lawn is doomed to a sod demise.

You may wish to contact the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service and ask for a pamphlet entitled, "Carolina Lawns." You may call 752-2934 or visit at 1717 W. Fifth St., Greenville for more information.

Annexations Top Agenda For P&Z

Six annexation requests head the list of items to be discussed by the Greenville Planning and Zoning Commission at its monthly meeting Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the third floor council chambers of City Hall.

The board will consider a request by Joseph D. Speight to annex Mumford Park, 3.0774 acres located off the southern right-of-way of Mumford Park and south of the Powell Street intersection.

Commissioners will discuss a request by Mqrton Associates Inc. to annex 23.7 acres located in the west side of State Road 1704, south of Windy Ridge, north of Tuckahoe, and east of Mattie Mercer property.

The board will also discuss a request by Bill Clark Construction Co. to annex Willoughby Park Condominiums, 20.2 acres located off Victoria Court, and a request by H.T. Chapin Jr. to annex Treetops subdivision, 40.8 acres located west of Fork Swamp Canal and south of White Road.

Requests by the city of Greenville to annex three acres, formerly the Greenville Elks Lodge, located off the northern right-of-way of the Norfolk-Southern Railroad and east of 14th Street Extension and 7.75 acres in Oakdale subdivision will also be considered.

Meanwhile, the board will consider a request by the commission and the department of planning and development to rezone property in Belvedere, Club Pines and Westhaven subdivisions from residential/agricultural to high density residential.

The property has frontage on Greenville Boulevard and is adjacent to Nichols Shopping Center, Whichport development, and the rear portion of the commercial development fronting on N.C. 11.

The commission will also discuss a request by Grace T. Pate, Mimi T. Denton and Jarvis Thomas Tripp Jr. to rezone about 3.73 acres from residential/agricultural to high density residential. The property is located approximately 318 feet south of the intersection of U.S. 264 Business and State Road 1135.

In other business, commissioners will discuss a new definition of a "wellness center, a request by Tom Chapin for water/sewer extension and the approval of street design and other standards by the city for Treetops, and the removal of a section in the Code of Ordinances for clarification.

PLEASE RETURN FILM

E. Lynn Hudson of Route 9, Greenville, took pictures during the birth of his son in Pitt County Memorial Hospital Thursday. Minutes later as he and some friends and relatives looked through the window of the newborn nursery at the baby, he set his camera bag down for a minute. It was stolen.

Hudson said he is distressed about losing the camera, flash attachment and bag, but most upset about losing the two rolls of film that show irreplaceable scenes during his son's delivery. He would like to hear from anyone who knows the whereabouts of the film and see if he can arrange to get it back. His phone number is 756-6408.

TIPS ON USING DENTURES

If you wear dentures, you want to make the best possible use of them in chewing food and maintaining the shape of your face. When you chew food, for example, chew straight up and down and place equal weight on both sides of your jaw. If you chew sideways or only on one side of your mouth, this can cause your dentures to slip. It can also injure the supporting tissues and result in abnormal wear on the supporting bone.

Even though you no longer have natural teeth, you should still be brushing at least once a day. Brush the soft tissues on which your dentures rest so you can stimulate the blood supply and help keep your gums healthy. Particular attention should also be paid to keeping your dentures clean and free of food particles.

If your dentures should become loose after several years' wear or if they become damaged, don't try to fix them yourself. Call my office and let me examine them to see if the dentures need repair or replacement.

Note: We invite all participants of the Blue Cross/Blue Shield personal care plan to come by our office. We are a member of Cost Care.

CAT GOT YOUR CARPET?

Pets are great, but let's face it—sooner or later every pet has his "accident", and now your carpet has a problem. Within hours, germs and bacteria begin to grow, especially when a jute backing is involved. The problem compounds as the urine forms a gummy residue which attracts soil, while spreading unsanitary contamination.

If you can live with that, consider that a by-product of bacterial growth is ammonia (remember the baby-diaper pail?). Ammonia eventually results in permanent color loss. And if that weren't enough, the urine also creates substantial odor which begins in the carpet but, with time, spreads to the pad, subfloor, baseboard, walls, and air currents within your home. Contamination of upholstery and drapery fabrics soon follows. You may become accustomed to the odor; but when your guests begin making excuses to leave hastily (especially during periods of high humidity, when the odor is magnified), you know you have a problem!

The Best Solution
The best solution, short of the local animal shelter, is to contain the problem with immediate action. When fresh urine is discovered, your best alternative is to blot the excess with towels and cover the spot with salt—yes, common table or, for Southerners, ice cream salt. This has several desirable effects: first, salt absorbs the urine which remains after blotting. Second, salt is a preservative and greatly reduces bacterial growth along with odor. Third, salt is a color stabilizer, and it prevents discoloration of carpet yarns. Of course, when the salt dries, forming a crust, it can be broken up with a dull instrument and easily vacuumed out of the carpet.

Next, the contaminated area should be soaked with a detergent solution safe for fine fabrics, followed by blotting of the excess with a sponge. Finally, absorb the remaining moisture with paper towels and dry overnight with air circulation. With older urine and odor problems, a professional cleaner who uses enzyme disinfectants should be called for treatment. Otherwise, odor may be a recurring problem for years to come.

Richmond Faces Cleanup Tasks As River Drops

By JOE MACENKA
Associated Press Writer
RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The James River dropped more than 2 feet Sunday after inundating 1.5 square miles of the city at nearly 16 feet above flood stage, and merchants were allowed back into a low-lying area of restored downtown businesses.

Officials credited a network of huge pumps with helping prevent water damage beyond the commercial area.

"It's been a moderate flood," William W. Costin, chief of emergency communications for the Department of Public Safety, said as city workers started clearing away the muck and debris.

Costin said damage couldn't be estimated until after the water fully recedes.

The James River surged over its banks in many areas of the state after a three-day storm brought 3.36 inches of rain to Richmond and more than 4 inches to parts of western Virginia. One boy drowned and one woman was missing elsewhere in the state. Many rural roads had been blocked by water.

When the water began to rise Thursday, many merchants moved their goods out of businesses in Shockoe Bottom, a low-lying section on the river's north side where old factory buildings are being renovated into nightclubs, restaurants and shops.

When the river crested at 24.91 feet at 4 a.m. Sunday, water was about 4 feet deep in parts of the Shockoe Bottom area. Costin said the water was deeper in the flooded area on the river's south side, the site of a grain mill, a fuel tank farm and warehouses.

Authorities estimated the water covered an area of 1½ square miles on the north and south sides of the James River.

The water began dropping slowly about 8:30 a.m. and the National Weather Service predicted the river would return below its 9-foot flood stage late Monday. It had fallen to 22.30 feet by 8 p.m. Sunday.

Merchants were allowed back into Shockoe Bottom as the flood ebbed Sunday. Workers filled trash bins with debris and used sweepers and fire hoses to clean streets and buildings.

"It's best to follow the water as it goes back to the banks," Costin said. "We are hosing the debris back immediately as the water recedes."

Only one of the city's seven bridges over the James was closed by high water and it will be reopened Monday, Costin said.

Costin said a network of large pumps installed in Shockoe Bottom several years ago to pull water out of the area and direct it to a point downstream of the city did a good job. The pumps kept water from backing up into the sewer system and causing worse flooding.

Workers piled sandbags around the pump house Saturday, and even though some water seeped into the station, it was not enough to harm the equipment.

"The pumps are still pumping," Costin said. "They never cut down."

When heavy rain in November 1985 sent the James above the 30-foot mark, the pumps failed when the water passed 22 feet.

City Manager Robert C. Bobb declared a state of emergency Friday. About 150 National Guardsmen were called in to help police with security and traffic control and about 1,000 city employees were kept on call through the weekend. No injuries or arrests were reported.

The National Guardsmen probably would remain on duty through Sunday to help direct traffic, Costin said.

In the western part of the state, water levels were returning to normal, but crews in Shenandoah County continued their search Sunday for a 74-year-old woman who disappeared Thursday night when her car was swept off a road near Mount Jackson.

A 7-year-old Botetourt County boy drowned Wednesday when he was swept into a swirling creek.

Public Confidence Is Shattered By Collapse Of Thruway Bridge

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press Writer
ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — When a New York State Thruway bridge collapsed without warning into a heap of steel and concrete, it also shattered confidence.

"It will create waves of public awareness throughout the country," said Gerard F. Fox, an engineer who also teaches bridge design at Columbia University. "I think a disaster... focuses people's minds on things. We always make great strides in bridge design from a collapse."

The failure of the Schoharie Creek bridge on April 5, killing at least six people, shook public confidence in the bridges people use every day.

"This thing here is a special circumstance liable to make a guy look every time he goes over a bridge," said Ralph Burkins, owner of a shipping company whose 80,000-pound rigs rumble daily along the thruway.

The National Transportation Safety Board has begun an investigation of the disaster, only the fifth investigation of a bridge accident in the agency's 20-year history, said board spokesman Ted Lopatkiewicz.

The first followed the collapse of the Silver Bridge between Gallipolis, Ohio, and Point Pleasant, W. Va., into the Ohio River on Dec. 15, 1967, killing 46 people.

That disaster led to congressional hearings, a presidential commission, and finally a national standard requiring inspection of all public bridges at least once every two years.

The accident 35 miles west of Albany also may shape public policy governing bridges. This accident, like the 1983 collapse of the Mianus River bridge on Interstate 95 in Connecticut, struck a major regional arterial and involved loss of life.

It's also a significant accident because of the reputation of the New York State Thruway Authority.

"The Department of Transportation and the Thruway Authority in New York state are generally viewed around this country as of the highest level of competence," says Dwight Sangrey, dean of engineering and a specialist in risk assessment at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy.

Sangrey says major bridge failures stem from disparate causes: structural deterioration, such as weakening of poorly maintained or aging supports; unforeseen events, like the freight ship that rammed the Sunshine Skyway near St. Petersburg, Fla., in May 1980; and acts of God, such as the rains that forced Schoharie Creek out of its banks.

What links the failures, says Sangrey, is a question: "Is the inspection and maintenance of those bridges really up to snuff?"

It generally is, according to John Ahlskog, who runs the bridge inspection program of the Federal Highway Administration in Washington, D.C.

He said about 40 percent of the nation's 576,000 public bridges are considered either "structurally" or "functionally" deficient. They may require load restrictions or otherwise limited use.

But Ahlskog says plainly dangerous bridges are closed quickly. "The states are doing a pretty good job. The risk is minimal," he said.

A similar percentage of New York's 19,592 state and local bridges — 45 percent — is deemed deficient. DOT spokesman David Murray says only 393 of those are "severely" deficient.

The history of the 31-year-old Schoharie bridge demonstrates that neither inspections nor maintenance necessarily prevent accidents. The state extensively refurbished the 540-foot-long concrete and steel bridge, including replacement of concrete on support piers, in 1982.

State officials say the bridge passed inspection in April 1986. A further check of the structure's footings for erosion, also suspected in the collapse, showed nothing unsettling. State police even say the bridge was checked and looked sound the morning it crumbled into the river.

Gordon Batson, who teaches bridge design at Clarkson University in Potsdam, says even the most conscientious inspectors can be fooled by nature. He said surging flood waters from two straight days of rain could have flushed soil from beneath the bridge's underpinnings without any visible sign.

"If erosion of that riverbed takes place, it takes place very quickly," he said.

Batson said the inquiries into the Schoharie accident may eventually show a need for more underwater inspection. Indeed, Ahlskog said the federal government is already pushing the states that way.

Graham Crusade Might Be Last S. Carolina Stop

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Billy Graham's crusade that starts here Saturday could be the evangelist's last in South Carolina, some crusade officials say.

"Him being here again (for a crusade) isn't likely, but this one is unique because we don't do whole-state crusades," said Jim Gallogly, administrative assistant to crusade director Elwyn Cutler. Crusade chairman Harry Dent agreed.

"He's 68 now, and there comes a time to retire," Dent told The Greenville News. Dent was a former senior aide in the Nixon administration who now devotes much of his time to religious activities.

Dent said he expects the possibility that the crusade will be Graham's last in the state to push the average nightly attendance at Williams-Brice Stadium beyond the 25,000 to 30,000 now projected. The crusade will last through May 2.

"I'm looking for a lot more because this is the whole state, one that's almost his home state, and the last time he'll be in South Carolina," Dent said.

Graham, who was born near Charlotte, N.C., conducted a Columbia crusade in 1950, and one in Greenville in 1966.

Despite attendance expected to be in the 200,000-plus range over the eight-day period, the crusade's economic impact on the Columbia area may be hard to measure.

Judy Noechell of the Greater Columbia Convention and Visitors' Bureau said that "it's a little premature to put an economic impact on it because so many (of those attending) are transient people.

They're mainly from South Carolina and they're driving back afterward."

However, service stations, restaurants and some hotels are expected to see their daily volumes increase because of the crusade, she said.

Crusade services will begin at 5 p.m. on weekends and at 7:30 p.m. on week nights. Each is scheduled to last 90 minutes. Parking lots will open at 3 p.m. on weekends and at 5:30 on week nights.

Parking will be free, and admission to the services will be free, although a collection will be taken each night.

"I just don't understand it," said Daniel Garvey, chief Thruway Authority engineer. "The bridge has not been without maintenance and care, but obviously there's something we missed."

Dent said he expects the possibility that the crusade will be Graham's last in the state to push the average nightly attendance at Williams-Brice Stadium beyond the 25,000 to 30,000 now projected. The crusade will last through May 2.

"I'm looking for a lot more because this is the whole state, one that's almost his home state, and the last time he'll be in South Carolina," Dent said.

The Reagan administration is wringing its hands over the embarrassment of the allegations concerning Marine guards compromising Moscow embassy security for sexual favors.

The controversy has spread to include charges aimed at the Soviets over bugging the embassy. There is particular concern for the new embassy under construction which, it is believed, may include surveillance devices which will make the building unusable.

Maybe so, and certainly it is difficult to control construction in a foreign country which is bent on obtaining the information it wants for our diplomats.

Spying, after all, is nothing new in international relations. Modern electronics have only meant more sophisticated means of snooping.

Using beautiful female secret agents to wheedle secrets out of the enemy is as old as time, however. It was done in Greek and Roman and even ancient Biblical times.

It would seem that modern military training and the careful choosing of the guards who are stationed at our most important foreign embassy should preclude the sex for secrets situation from ever happening.

One has to wonder where the State Department, the U.S. Marines or the military in general fell down if these allegations prove out. Certainly there are a few good men in the military who can be trusted to guard our embassies in foreign countries. That, after all is their sole purpose for being there.

Perhaps more mature soldiers should be assigned to these posts. Perhaps more preparation for the possibility of sexual exploitation is needed. The State Department and the military should consider these measures.

We can rant about the electronic bugging of embassies, but it won't stop it. Surely the State Department knows by now that no embassy can be considered safe for highly confidential information. Indeed smart diplomats can use foreign bugging to convey false information, if they choose.

Surely, however, we can find people who can be trusted to guard our embassies in Moscow and other communist countries. There must be some honor left in such an assignment.

Struck Gold

Medical research all over the world seeks answers to health problems in a broad range of fields. The seekers mostly encounter disappointment, but in what has been called "daring experimental brain surgery in Mexico" may have struck gold.

A professor of neurology at New York University says "I think I witnessed history" in his visit south of the border. Dr. Abraham Lieberman is chairman of the medical advisory board of the American Parkinson Disease Association and describes the surgical process for Parkinson's as a dramatic advance over existing methods and is hopeful the surgery may lead to better treatments for several brain disorders (such as Alzheimer's disease, spinal cord injuries and strokes as well as Parkinson disease).

Lieberman's primary interest is in Parkinson's disease but he sees great implications in transplanting nerve-like cells into the patient's brain to replace degenerating brain tissues.

The procedure has already been used at Vanderbilt University Medical Center but it's too soon to determine results. New York University is preparing for its first such transplant in May; others will soon follow.

When breakthroughs appear in the medical fields you can count on it that specialists and institutions in the U.S. are poised to leap at the opportunities to explore and perhaps make reality out of hope. It's ironic that while many labor to preserve, protect and improve physical well-being; even greater efforts are expended to cripple, damage and destroy other lives.

The Hart Campaign: Episodic And Quirky

A presidential campaign is a mosaic of episodes. Voters tune in fleetingly, take what information is to be had, tune out. Winning candidates tend to be masters of these episodes; losing candidates tend to be at the mercy of them.

Last week, Gary Hart launched his second bid for the presidency with a cross-country campaign swing notable for the way the episodes seemed to be in charge, not the candidate.

From Monday's iconoclastic staging of his announcement speech against a barren Rocky Mountain backdrop, to Tuesday's mini-flap over reports of gossip about his personal life that Hart appeared to blame temporarily on his Democratic rivals, to Wednesday's seizure by federal marshals of contributions at a Hollywood fund-raiser, Hart spent his opening week discovering that even front-runners (sometimes, especially front-runners) have trouble controlling the story lines of their campaigns.

"Until now, I'd thought he'd had a good grip on his political situation," said David Garth, a veteran Democratic media consultant not aligned with any of the 1988 presidential campaigns. "But for him to upstage his own announcement speech by hollering that people are out to get him... it just didn't bode well."

Hart's top campaign staff said he did nothing of the sort, and they saw the whole week differently. "We got a clean shot at setting forth the major thrust of the campaign, that is, regaining a sense of national interest," political director Paul Tully said at week's end. "All the rest," campaign manager William Dixon said, "is background noise. I don't pay much attention to it."

But it was "all the rest" that attracted nearly as much coverage as the announcement message. The three episodes:

The announcement staging. Hart had originally wanted to give his announcement speech a homey touch by delivering it at his stone-and-log cabin in Evergreen, Colo., outside Denver. But the site would not accommodate the more than 100 reporters and camera crews who wanted to attend. Instead, as a fallback, he gave the speech at a nearby national park. It was a setting that, to many viewers, reinforced his image as distant and aloof, especially since, by design, no supporters were present. Many news accounts noted this unusual aspect of the staging.

Why did not Hart choose a more conventional setting? "The setting said, 'It ain't just bunting and politics as usual.' This is a serious effort to deal with ideas," Tully said. "When you give a rally speech, you tend to go for applause lines," Dixon said. "He didn't want that kind of tone."

But as it turned out, the sound was not good on the rock, and some television coverage used visuals of him there, and took their sound bites from a rally later in the day.

The gossip. In the days preceding and on the day after his announcement, several publications, including The Washington Post, noted that Hart was dogged by rumors of womanizing. There was no substantiation of the rumors. The stories annoyed Hart. "Sure this stuff bothered him," Dixon said. "His wife and his daughter read it. That's not fun." Hart and Lee, his wife of 28 years, were separated for two periods before Hart's 1984 bid.

On his chartered campaign plane on Tuesday, Hart was asked by a reporter how he could keep the campaign focused on issues in light of the gossip. He responded that if other campaigns were circulating such stories, that in itself would become a story. After reporters jumped on this, Hart said he intended no accusation, he was merely recounting what reporters had told him. (At least one reporter had told Hart that other campaigns were spreading rumors about him.)

By commenting at all, Hart all but assured that the story would have more life than he wanted. "You can always kick yourself and say why did we have a comment that leads to a lot of follow-up and creates its own noise level," Tully said. "But every campaign has days like that."

The debt. Hart's 1984 presidential campaign has a $1.3 million debt, and when federal marshals walked into a Hollywood fund-raiser set up by Hart's friend Warren Beatty and seized $29,500 to satisfy a judgment obtained by a 1984 creditor, they produced painful publicity spotlighting Hart as a man who cannot pay his bills.

The legal raid may also have scared away other potential contributors, and emboldened other 1984 creditors to use equally direct methods to get money they are owed.

Issues And Errors: Hart's First Week

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Gary Hart went up to the red cliffs of the Rocky Mountains on Monday to announce his 1988 bid for the White House. (But it was downhill from there during the first week of the Democratic front-runner's campaign.)

Hart talked about issues, experience and the lessons he has learned.

But the headlines focused on rumors about his personal life and the legal brawling over debts remaining from his 1984 campaign — with U.S. marshals seizing nearly $30,000 from a Hart fund-raiser in Hollywood last week.

The week was particularly troublesome for Hart, for he is far and away the front-runner in the race for the 1988 Democratic nomination. A good beginning would have helped convince doubters that he could go the distance, that his high standing in the polls is matched by his performance on the road.

A good start also would have put the focus on the issues — which Hart thinks is his strongest point. And it would have helped to dim the memories of Hart's stunning 1984 presidential bid that was eventually undermined by embarrassing gaffes and doubts about the candidate.

"As a candidate, I can almost guarantee that I'm going to make some mistakes," Hart said as he announced his candidacy standing in front of the snow-capped cliffs of Red Rocks Park just outside of Denver.

His prediction was accurate. Just as his 1988 campaign was getting started, the questions and doubts that dogged his 1984 bid were raised all over again.

On Tuesday, Hart discussed with a reporter on board the campaign charter reports that other presidential campaigns were spreading rumors about his personal life. As questions about his comments increased, his aides first tried to explain away his comments.

Then Hart decided to talk to reporters, raising the visibility of the matter and generating a wave of stories about the rumors and about his personal life. Hart was visibly angry as he explained that he was only repeating what reporters had told him about the rumors.

"Now you see why I like to talk about ideas," Hart deadpanned later.

Then Hart flew to Pittsburgh, where on Wednesday he had a photogenic event at a silent steel mill, emphasizing his concern for workers and highlighting his stance against pure protectionist measures.

Later Wednesday, U.S. marshals in Los Angeles seized nearly $30,000 in receipts from a Hart fund-raiser to satisfy a court order seeking to collect a 1984 Hart campaign debt.

Hart and his aides have repeatedly insisted the $1.3 million debt will be paid off and will not get in the way of the 1988 effort. But the Wednesday night seizure not only took money destined for 1988, it generated another wave of negative stories about Hart's efforts.

Strength For Today

What a terrible thing it is to have a severe physical handicap.

Yet men are mightier than circumstances. Some of the truly great have succeeded, not in spite of their handicaps, but because of them. Milton was blind; Beethoven was deaf. Helen Keller was blind, deaf and unable to speak until she was taught sign language by a faithful teacher. Saint Paul had what he called a thorn in his flesh. He prayed that he might be relieved of it, but the answer God gave him was that His grace was sufficient.

We cannot choose what our circumstances will be, but we can always choose the spirit with which we shall meet them. Handicaps can stimulate our courage and develop hidden capacities.

The really debilitating handicaps which people have are those within their own characteristics.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Judas Iscariot was a disciple of Jesus Christ who, for greed, betrayed Christ. Some of today's televangelists are very reminiscent of Judas — their greed has driven them to betray the true church and the very God they claim to follow.

Every professional has its renegades, rogues and charlatans. Those TV preachers who claim the power to heal and hire people to fake it, who live extravagantly at the expense of poverty-stricken widows, who constantly beg for ever-more money with threats of dying or refusing to pray for the non-givers, who put on lavish television productions to entice a gullible audience are the renegades of religion. Jesus never begged for money, never lived lavishly, never faked a healing, and never did anything for show. Jesus did heal the sick, but he cautioned many times against telling others about it. (Mark 3:12, 5:43; 7:36.)

I hope for two things out of this mess: 1) that gullible people will see these charlatans for what they really are and 2) that the general population will realize that the rogues are not representative of true Christianity. Most ministers, priests and rabbis are honest, loving, caring and giving persons as opposed to those greedy, dishonest, selfish, "gimme" televangelists. Real clergy live modestly, not lavishly; they live with their parishioners, not above them; they rejoice with the happy, weep with the grieving, and hurt with the suffering; they counsel the troubled, comfort the bereaved, and pray for all. So I urge people to attend the church or synagogue of your choice and support its ministries and missions.

To the editor:

I rarely write letters to the editor — I usually wait for someone else to do so. Since no one else has commented on this issue, I shall have to do so.

I attended a City Council meeting last week and witnessed a moving ceremony where three city workers were presented awards for heroism. There was applause and the three acknowledged heroes and their wives left the chambers, awards in hand. Before they got out the door our mayor made a very thoughtless and tasteless remark. I was not the only one who was totally appalled at this lapse, in fact nearly everyone present seemed to be distressed. I feel the mayor owes an apology not only to those to whom the remark was made, but to all of us who heard it. I can only hope those brave men and their wives recall the applause rather than the parting remark.

U.S. Now Has To Sell Arms Control Plan to Congress, Europe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Now that Secretary of State George P. Shultz's talks in Moscow have produced a near-agreement with the Soviet Union on nuclear missiles, the Reagan administration is faced with a double selling job.

It must convince congressional conservatives that Shultz, who is always a little suspect to the far-right, cut a deal with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev that is in the U.S. interest.

And the administration must convince the NATO allies, especially Britain, France and West Germany, that the nuclear defense of Western Europe would not suffer if all U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles were dismantled.

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, has already signaled there will be no trouble with most Democrats. "There is no question whatever that the Congress believes this is our best opportunity since World War II to make real peace," the Texan said Friday.

Like Reagan administration officials, Wright said a missile reduction must be verifiable, to guard against cheating. But he emphasized the agreement Gorbachev and Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze proposed to Shultz could let the two countries divert missile savings "to things like roads, bridges and clean water."

Many conservatives, however, are bound to distrust the missile proposal, and they may find quiet support in the Pentagon, where distrust of Moscow runs strongest in the administration.

While Shultz was winding up more than 20 hours of talks in Moscow, here at home Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger was bluntly accusing the Soviets of ruthless and arrogant behavior in mounting espionage campaigns against the West and suggesting the new policy of Soviet "openness" was nothing but a sham.

Weinberger, in a speech Thursday to the Navy League of the United States that marked his first extensive response to disclosures of a spy scandal at the U.S. embassy, said of the Soviets, "They have stolen, they have seduced and they have bought some of our most sensitive secrets."

Analysis

Shultz's talks in Moscow went beyond dismantling of nuclear missiles. U.S. arms control director Kenneth L. Adelman said the Soviet Union and the United States reached an agreement to detonate underground nuclear explosions at each other's test sites.

The agreement could set the stage for Senate ratification of two treaties arranged in 1974 and 1976 that limited test blasts to no more than 150 kilotons.

"It's a very positive move," Adelman said Friday in an interview. "We've wanted better verification for six years, and they have said yes."

The Soviets had criticized Shultz through their media while he was in Moscow for not readily accepting their offer to eliminate shorter-range missiles in East Germany and Czechoslovakia — as well as other missiles on Soviet territory, provided the details could be worked out.

But they suggested hard-liners in the administration had restricted Shultz's negotiating room and were not eager for an agreement with Moscow.

Skeptical congressional conservatives are especially wary of a deal at this point because of suspicions that President Reagan might be influenced by a need for a public relations boost to disengage himself from the Iran-Contra affair.

Adelman has other concerns, as well.

"This deal will be suspect because the argument will go forth, well we are disrupting the alliance relationship and we're hurting the coupling of the U.S. security interest with that of Western Europe," he said Saturday in a Cable News Network interview.

But Shultz and Adelman are trying to counter the argument by emphasizing that there are other U.S. nuclear weapons to deter a Soviet attack on Western Europe without medium-range American missiles.

U.S. submarine-launched ballistic missiles, bombers and a powerful force of globe-girdling strategic weapons also are targeted on Soviet territory.

The West Germans would retain 72 Pershing missiles, which are under U.S. control. And the French and British could keep their nuclear forces.

Flexible response "will be maintained whether we accept the Soviet short-range offer or not," Shultz said at a news conference in Brussels after briefing NATO foreign ministers on Thursday.

He drew some support, especially from Britain and Italy. "This is good news for all of us in the East and the West," Geoffrey Howe, the British foreign secretary, said. "Mr. Shultz deservedly received the warm congratulations of his fellow ministers," Howe added.

In the past, Britain, France and West Germany have expressed misgivings about eliminating the shorter-range Soviet missiles because the United States would give up the right to match the Soviet total.

The military doctrine of flexible response is based on deterring Soviet attack by threatening to use nuclear weapons if conventional forces are not sufficient to stop aggression.

Nine foreign ministers attended Shultz's briefing. But six foreign ministers, including the French, were not there.

On Monday, a high-level group of NATO officials will begin talks in Washington on the missile proposal and other military problems. Another NATO group will meet April 28. And the North Atlantic Council will meet in May.

By the middle of the month, the Western allies are likely to give the Reagan administration their response. Congress is likely to debate the issue a much longer time.

Barry Schweid, who heads the AP's State Department staff, covered Shultz's talks in Moscow and his report to the allies in Brussels.

— Stephen S. Rosenfeld —

Soviet Leader's Concessions Must Be Examined Carefully

WASHINGTON — Mikhail Gorbachev keeps advertising his bent for "new thinking." His latest new thoughts, on Europe, are more than slightly mind-bending.

Helmut Schmidt, the former West German chancellor, used to look at the confrontation of the two blocs in Europe and say that for real peace either NATO would have to build up or the Warsaw Pact would have to build down. "I prefer the latter," said Schmidt, sighing that it was not in the cards.

Now a Soviet leader hints it may be in the cards. In a well-publicized statement in Moscow during the visit of George Shultz and in a little noted speech in Prague last Friday, Gorbachev indicated he might be ready to, as Schmidt put it, "make the principle of renunciation of force an element of the military balance."

In Moscow, Gorbachev suggested a unilateral cut in Soviet shorter-range nuclear missiles — Americans have none — in order to bring about an agreement on removing all medium-range missiles from Europe. NATO is now chewing on the idea.

In Prague, he brought up chemical weapons, a class of special dread on the continent and one that Moscow did not acknowledge even possessing until last month and then only obliquely. He said that the Soviet Union "has terminated production of chemical weapons," that its allies do not produce or store them on their territory, that the Kremlin has no chemical weapons outside its borders and that it is "constructing a special plant to destroy them" and would do so "following an international convention (agreement)."

Shultz got into chemical weapons in his Moscow talks, and especially in the area of verifying destruction of stocks, it seems, major difficulties remain. Still, Gorbachev's Prague announcement was a stunner, opening up publicly a chemical-free vista that Europe has scarcely begun even to imagine.

At that, it wasn't the big news of the speech. For Gorbachev also offered some new thinking about conventional armed forces, like chemical weapons a subject that has been discussed fruitlessly at international conferences for years.

"The Western side speaks of inequality and imbalance," he said. "Of course, there does exist asymmetry in the armed forces of the two sides in Europe, which is explained by historical, geographic and other factors. We stand for rectifying the inequality in certain elements where it exists, only not through a buildup by the one who lags behind but through reduction by the one who turned out to be ahead."

To which one can say either "Wow!" or, better, its cool diplomatic equivalent: "Mr. Gorbachev, perhaps you are merely making a play for Western opinion at a moment when proposals for nuclear arms control have heightened fears that Europe is being rendered vulnerable to Soviet-bloc superiority in conventional arms. But you may also be suggesting the sort of approach to the European conventional imbalance that Westerners have despaired of ever hearing from Moscow. Tell us more of what you mean."

Sam Nunn, the Georgia senator and an old NATO hand, is one who understood immediately the revolutionary implications of Gorbachev's concession of force superiority in Europe. Nunn, who was in Europe this week precisely to draw attention to the existing conventional imbalance, called for the West to test the Soviet leader's rhetoric by bold arms control proposals.

He would, for instance, abandon NATO's stale failed focus on reducing the military manpower deployed on the central front and turn to the "root of military instability in Europe," which is the Warsaw Pact's capacity for a sudden and potentially decisive attack led by the Soviets' down in areas where the Soviets currently enjoy military advantage. But it would be as foolish not to explore what those new hints may mean.

Gorbachev Pays In Advance

LONDON — The diplomatic action was in Moscow and Brussels this week as the United States virtually wrapped up negotiations with the Soviet Union to remove medium-range nuclear missiles from Europe. But Number 10 Downing Street is perhaps the best place these days to get a clear understanding of the big movements under way in East-West relations.

A satisfied afterglow hovers over Margaret Thatcher's triumphant welcome in Moscow. But it is giving way to hard-nosed analysis of the long-term gains that Mikhail Gorbachev sought by buttering up the Iron Lady two weeks ago, and then ostensibly sweeping aside final obstacles to the medium-range agreement in his meetings with George Shultz this week.

Neither act costs Gorbachev much in real terms. But they also bring him little immediate gain at home and can probably be used against him there by his hard-line opponents. Why do it?

The best hypothesis heard here is that they fit into a determined new effort by Gorbachev to get President Reagan into one final arms-control summit where he hopes to win Reagan's agreement to limit the testing and development of space-based weapons systems.

By offering concessions in advance in the form of the medium-range rocket agreement, and by focusing his highly personalized style of diplomacy on Thatcher and Shultz,

Gorbachev appears to be hoping to build up credit to draw on when he confronts Reagan once again with demands to alter his positions on the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty and the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Domestically, Gorbachev is compared to Lenin. Diplomatically, he increasingly resembles Egypt's Anwar Sadat, who believed that dramatic gestures and "paying in advance" would eventually compel his negotiating adversaries to respond in kind.

In wooing Thatcher, Gorbachev has gained a powerful friend in court in Washington. The British prime minister is seen in London and Moscow as the only leader who has succeeded in reining in the American president on ABM and SDI issues. She would undoubtedly be the most important foreign voice Reagan would listen to before a summit with Gorbachev.

There is no suggestion here that the Moscow welcome will in any way influence her own positions on arms control or other matters of substance. But, as one of her advisers noted, Gorbachev "played fair with her, and it will stand him in good stead."

That is, it has filtered down to officials here that Thatcher came away from Moscow persuaded that Gorbachev is sincerely seeking to lower tensions with the West and that his proposals deserve serious consideration.

That feeling (and the divisions of public opinion at home on nuclear weapons) helped neutralize what could have been a negative British government reaction to the "zero-option" agreement on medium-range rockets that Shultz presented to NATO foreign ministers in Brussels.

Gorbachev's lavish hospitality for Thatcher also underlines a striking rearrangement of Soviet priorities in Western Europe. While warmly embracing Thatcher, he has turned a cold shoulder to French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac, who was due to visit Moscow next month.

Chirac is almost certain now to postpone that trip. The Russians have failed to agree to the dates proposed by the French and made it clear that Chirac would not get anything resembling the triumph staged for Thatcher.

W. Virginia Man Brings Cross Crusade To State

GREENSBORO (AP) — Bernard Coffindaffer has devoted his life and his life savings of more than $3 million to erecting "Crosses of Mercy" across the world — a mission he said came in a message from God.

Coffindaffer said he heard the voice of God one night as he lay in a Duke Medical Center bed recovering from heart surgery. The voice told him to plant crosses.

"I didn't see the Holy Spirit, but I heard Him," Coffindaffer said. "It was 3 in the morning and I copied everything down. I'm just following his commands."

Coffindaffer has been mistaken for a Ku Klux Klan member, chastised by zoning officials and even suspected of being the leader of a cult. But he says he always gets a property owner's permission before workers drive any nails.

"In Antioch, Va., we went to a black church and planted some crosses," Coffindaffer said. "They sang hymns. I'm sure (we) were heard in heaven. The next week, they tore that down and dragged them behind the church — said some people thought they were from the Ku Klux Klan. It's a pity."

Coffindaffer pays unemployed coal miners $6 an hour to erect the pine timbers, which cost between $35 and $100 each.

The crusade started in 1984. Within a year, he had blanketed roadsides near his home in Craigsville, W.Va., with the 30-foot-high ponderosa telephone poles clustered in threes.

At last count, he had 674 clusters sprinkled throughout nine states and the District of Columbia.

Coffindaffer recently began his mission in North Carolina and South Carolina. He started with a base in Asheboro, branching out from Ararat to Zion. He said God wants towns with Biblical names to get top priority.

Major highways are another target. "A lot of lost souls ride down freeways," Coffindaffer said.

Based on traffic estimates from the U.S. Department of Transportation, Coffindaffer projects that 9.1 million people see his crosses every day.

Last week, his crews hit Interstate 77, hoping to plant a cross cluster every 35 miles so they could greet the Rev. Billy Graham when he drives to his Columbia, S.C., crusade that begins Saturday.

"I'm not doing this for myself, I'm doing it for Jesus," said Coffindaffer, the 62-year-old son of coal miner. "The cross is Jesus' arms outstretched to the world. That's something everyone should remember, especially now at Easter."

Fred J. McIntyre, a retired mechanical engineer who runs a small vineyard outside the Stokes County town of King, says a lot of people don't understand the significance of the cross cluster planted in his field.

"This is the Bible Belt, and people don't even know what the crosses stand for," McIntyre said. "Some kids on the school bus asked if we were the Klan."

"I believe in Jesus, and I thought it would make people think about him," McIntyre said.

Coffindaffer left home at 15 when he forged his father's signature on enlistment papers and joined the Marines. After six years in the Pacific, he returned to West Virginia and built a mill producing magnetite, a coal-cleaning material.

His Gauley Industries grew large enough to handle most of the major coal companies, and Coffindaffer grew rich.

In 1967, after 20 years of what he called chasing women and rolling dice, he entered Humphrey's Memorial Methodist Church in Charleston, W.Va., as the choir sang the third stanza of "Have Thine Own Way, Lord." He was born again.

In 1982, he had a heart bypass operation and the first of what he describes as visitations from the Holy Spirit. He sold his business because of his health and started planting crosses because of his inspiration.

Two dollars from dying man is the only money he says he has received for the cross. "I didn't want to take them from him, but my wife insisted," Coffindaffer said. "I took them knowing he would rest easier with his maker."

IN THE STATE

Escapee Caught

GREENSBORO (AP) — A Randolph County man who authorities say escaped from a prison farm more than 10 years ago has been captured after returning to the Guilford County magistrate's office to reclaim a gun he said had been stolen.

Wayne Harmon was charged with escaping from the Guilford County prison unit at Gibsonville on Nov. 3, 1976. He was arrested Oct. 30, 1976, for unlawful concealment and convicted in Guilford District Court. He was sentenced to six months at the prison farm, and he said he escaped his first day as an inmate.

Harmon is being held without bond in the Guilford County Jail pending a court appearance May 4.

According to Greensboro police, Harmon walked into a bar last Monday, set a pistol down and ordered a beer. A man approached Harmon saying he was interested in buying the pistol, and when Harmon handed him the gun, the man took it and Harmon chased him.

A police officer saw the chase and arrested Eric Roshell Warren, 29, on charges of disorderly conduct. The officer found the pistol and also charged Warren with carrying a concealed weapon.

Language Problems

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A Haitian farm worker who speaks little English has testified that he didn't understand his actions when he gave written permission for a state trooper to search his car — where five pounds of cocaine was found.

Jean Nicholas Joseph, 28, said through an interpreter that he signed a search consent form after he was stopped on Interstate 95 in Cumberland County in February.

In Haiti, people do what police tell them or they are beaten, said Joseph, who speaks French Creole, but said he understands some words and phrases common to both French Creole and English.

The testimony came in a hearing on a defense motion to suppress evidence taken in the search. Judge Coy E. Brewer Jr. delayed a ruling in the case and scheduled another hearing for May 1.

The suppression motion marks one of the first tests of the recent effort to cut the flow of drugs on the I-95 corridor through Cumberland County. Defense lawyer Ronnie Mitchell, who represents Joseph, says the motion will help define a standard for the state Highway Patrol to use in seeking permission to search vehicles.

Easter Fatalities

By The Associated Press
Four people have died on North Carolina roads during the Easter holiday weekend, including two people killed in a single-car accident, the state Highway Patrol says.

Mark Wayne Walker, 19, and James E. Stewart, 19, both of Fort Bragg, were killed Saturday at 10:09 p.m. in Wake County. Troopers said the car in which they were traveling on a Raleigh city street hit a guard rail, struck a tree and pinned them in the vehicle.

Darrell Lynn Oakley, 31, of Roxboro, was killed at 7:20 p.m. Saturday when he lost control of his car on a rural road about six miles south of Roxboro and was thrown from the vehicle.

Louis Hardester Williams, 75, of Louisburg, was killed at 9:20 p.m. Saturday in Franklin County. Troopers said he was walking in the roadway on N.C. 561, about four miles east of Louisburg, when he was struck by a car.

Burning Man Saved

MOUNT OLIVE, N.C. (AP) — A 33-year-old Mount Olive man who set himself on fire with gasoline on a street corner was saved by a fire marshal who was riding by after completing a round of golf.

"When I saw him, at first I thought it was just a fire on the ground. I didn't know it was a person on fire," said Wayne County Fire Marshal Carl Ray Coley, who was returning from Southern Wayne County Club when he spotted the blaze Saturday.

Bobby Harold Cottle was saved when Coley jumped out of his truck, and put out the burning Cottle with a fire extinguisher.

Eyewitnesses told the police Cottle set himself on fire shortly before 4 p.m.

Coley said neither he nor Mount Olive police know why Cottle would have set himself on fire.

Sgt. Ralph Schroder said about 3:30 p.m., Cottle walked into a service station and bought 10 cents worth of gas, using a 16-ounce plastic Mountain Dew bottle as a container. The attendant at the station told Schroder that Cottle told him he needed the gas to mow his lawn.

A half-hour later, Schroder said Cottle sat down on the corner across from the station, poured the gas over his head and set himself ablaze.

Jerry Falwell Criticized For Latest Money Plea

RALEIGH (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell has drawn criticism from the North Carolina chapter of People for the American Way for asking hundreds of thousands of his supporters for a vote of confidence and a $25 donation.

The News and Observer of Raleigh reported in today's editions that the request came in a mass mailing that asks recipients to do three things: tell Falwell whether he made the right decision in taking over the PTL organization in the wake of a sex scandal; pray for him and his ministry, based in Lynchburg, Va.; and, "if at all possible, send a special gift of $25."

"Rev. Falwell on one hand says he cannot believe the amount of salaries the PTL personnel are getting, but yet he turns right around and uses the PTL controversy to have a fund-raiser of his own," said Jim Scarborough, acting executive director of the North Carolina chapter of People for the American Way.

Falwell, who says his annual salary from his Lynchburg ministry is $100,000, has criticized the salaries paid to top PTL officials, which reportedly included $1.6 million last year for Bakker, and $360,000 to Bakker's assistant.

"I think it's just another example of his attempts to use an issue to the financial advantage of his organizations," Scarborough said.

Falwell's four-page letter on stationery bearing only his name does not say specifically how the donations will be used, but indicates they would go toward Falwell's "ministries here in Lynchburg."

Mark DeMoss, Falwell's administrative assistant, said Sunday that the money would be used for general support of the ministry in Lynchburg. DeMoss said Falwell had not yet raised money for PTL.

The letter begins: "Dear Friends, Have I done the right thing? In my nearly 31 years of Christian service, I have never seen such hype in the media and confusion, controversy and tragedy in the Christian community. I am talking of course about the situation at the PTL Television Network and Heritage USA."

The letter refers to Jim Bakker, who resigned last month as head of PTL after admitting having a sexual encounter with a 20-year-old woman in 1980.

In his letter, Falwell says heading PTL is a "mammoth responsibility," and adds, "This ministry here in Lynchburg must not suffer... I do not know what amount of damage we will sustain, as far as financial support goes, because of what I have done."

DeMoss said Falwell "has taken a great deal of risk as far as his own ministry is concerned in stepping into the PTL situation as chairman of the board. It is for that reason that he wrote to our supporters asking for a pledge of support and for prayer as well."

Salaries At PTL Termed 'Horrendous' By Falwell

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — New PTL Chairman Jerry Falwell says large amounts of money PTL has paid to Jim and Tammy Bakker and other top executives could hurt contributions to the South Carolina television ministry in the future.

Salary, bonuses and other compensation figures reported by The Charlotte Observer Saturday appear to be "essentially correct," Falwell said in a telephone interview with the newspaper.

The Observer reported that Jim Bakker, who served as PTL chairman and president before resigning a month ago, and Bakker's wife, received nearly $1.6 million last year and $640,000 more over the past three months.

Richard Dortch, Bakker's top deputy and now PTL's president, received $350,000 last year, The Observer reported. Bakker's personal aide and executive secretary received $360,000 and $160,000 respectively in 1986, according to a source with access to ministry records.

"I personally think that the compensation is horrendous," Falwell said. "I don't think any reasonable person could believe these salaries are acceptable. In my opinion no ministry in America pays pastors and staffs at this level. In my opinion, this information could hurt contributions to PTL substantially."

"Clearly, someone has made some reckless decisions in recent years," Falwell added.

Falwell said his salary from his Lynchburg, Va., ministry is $100,000 a year. He said he is declining to be paid for his work at PTL.

PTL, with about 2,000 employees, reported $129 million in revenues last year.

Falwell said salaries should be the top priority at the April 28 meeting of PTL's new board, named when Falwell took over PTL at Bakker's request.

Falwell revealed that the PTL board met Friday in Palm Beach, Fla., and got information that the Bakkers received $1.2 million in 1985. The figure "stunned" new board members, Falwell said.

Figures obtained by The Observer indicate that Dortch, as well as Bakker's personal aide, David Taggart, received bonuses the first three months of this year approaching the level of their bonuses for all of 1986.

The Bakkers — out of town and off the air for all but a few days in January, February and March — were given bonuses totaling about $470,000 in that period, a source said.

"That's been very shocking to me. There seems to have been an acceleration of bonus payments these first three months of this year, almost in anticipation of some dramatic happening," Falwell said.

"I hope that is not true. That would disturb the board greatly."

Bakker, 47, an Assemblies of God minister, stepped down March 19. He acknowledged to a 1980 extramarital sexual encounter and subsequent payment to quiet complaints from Jessica Hahn, the woman involved.

Falwell said members of the new PTL board, but not himself, will be paid $18,000 a year.

He confirmed Saturday that he had ordered all bonuses and other PTL payments besides regular salaries be halted. Falwell has said PTL will continue to pay the Bakkers, although no figure has been revealed.

Minimum Wage Bill No Simple Matter

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina congressmen say legislation to raise the minimum wage is entangled with international trade problems, unemployment worries and the need to help to working poor reach at least the poverty level.

"That's a very difficult issue," Rep. Martin Lancaster, D-N.C., told the News and Observer of Raleigh. "It has both good and bad to it. One thing I fear is that any significant increase will put a large number of young people out of work. At the same time, it's difficult for anybody to support a family on the minimum wage."

The issue pits business against labor. Business groups argue that increases in the minimum wage could lead to a loss of jobs and higher consumer prices, while labor groups argue that the current level is too low to support a decent standard of living.

Republicans have generally backed the business position and Democrats the labor position.

"If you want to raise the price of hamburgers and put a lot of kids out of work, go ahead" and raise the minimum wage, said Rep. Cass Ballenger, R-N.C.

Ballenger argues that a minimum wage was necessary in the 1940s, 50s and 60s when the only competition a businessman faced was local. But with more competition to American business coming from the low-wage countries of Asia and Central America, raising the minimum wage creates problems, he said.

Many opponents say raising the minimum wage has a domino effect that causes other wages to rise, but Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., says business lobbyists are crying wolf when they predict dire economic conditions stemming from a higher minimum wage.

"That's always the argument," Rose said. "It doesn't appear that in the past it has hurt the economy. Clearly, the minimum wage needs to be raised. There are an awful lot of people out there trying to live off minimum wage."

Rep. Alex McMillan, R-N.C., calls the issue a "sticky situation."

"We don't want to do it in a way that takes away job opportunities," he said.

Rep. David Price, D-N.C., says there is ample evidence the wage needs to be raised, but he is undecided on the amount. A person earning the current minimum wage of $3.35 an hour would make less than $7,000 a year, he said.

"There's no way for a family to live on that," he said. "My question is how far we can safely raise it and how fast. It's going to be a balancing act to raise the minimum wage and not trigger economic difficulties."

"Every time you raise the minimum wage, you destroy an enormous number of jobs," said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C. "The minimum wage is a loser for the free enterprise system."

But Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C., says an increase should be phased in and eventually set at the poverty level for a family of three or four.

"What is the minimum wage if not poverty?" Sanford said. "We've got too many people living in poverty. There's no need for that. I think it's essential that we increase the minimum wage."

Death Penalty Opponents Watch Key Votes

By BRENT LAYMON
Associated Press Writer
HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Capital-punishment opponents who watched state after state restore death penalties over the last decade say the tide may be turning.

"It has appeared to be a losing battle until very recently," said Robert Gross, associate director of the National Coalition Against the Death Penalty. "Now we are in more of a tug of war."

Seventy people have been executed since a 1976 U.S. Supreme Court ruling allowed states to resume the death penalty.

About 1,900 people are on death rows in the 37 states that have capital punishment, which has never been repealed by a state legislature although voided in courts in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and New York.

Connecticut is one of at least three states with bills pending that would abolish the death penalty. Others are Nebraska and Illinois, but observers say bills in those states appear to have little chance of approval.

The Connecticut bill, which cleared the joint Judiciary Committee on April 8 and is expected to be voted upon in the House within three weeks, has near unanimous support among Democratic leaders in the Democratic-controlled legislature. Democratic Gov. William A. O'Neill, however, supports the death penalty.

The bill would substitute the death sentence with life without possibility of parole. Similar measures failed in 1977, 1980, 1981 and 1985.

Foes of the death penalty scored a symbolic victory in New Mexico late last year, when Gov. Toney Anaya commuted to life in prison the sentences of the state's five death-row inmates before he left office.

The Kansas Senate on April 3 narrowly defeated a bill to reintroduce capital punishment. Former Gov. John Carlin vetoed four death-penalty bills, most recently in 1985.

In New York, Gov. Mario Cuomo recently vetoed for the fifth-straight year a bill to restore the death penalty. Cuomo's predecessor, Hugh Carey, vetoed six similar bills.

Indiana this year banned the execution of any convict who was younger than 16 at the time of committing a capital crime; Maryland banned the execution of anyone younger than 18.

Death-penalty advocates failed to collect enough signatures to force a referendum in Alaska in 1985 and in Michigan last year.

"We are beginning to see the tide turning," Diann Rust-Tierney, American Civil Liberties Union legal counsel in Washington, D.C., said last week.

Supporters of the death penalty, like Connecticut Rep. William L. Wollenberg, argue that it deters crime and is just punishment in some cases. "I believe people through the ages have had a right to retribution," Wollenberg said recently.

Opponents say it is not a deterrent, costs more than imprisonment and is disproportionately used on the poor, minority groups and those whose victims were white.

A 1980 study by two Northeastern University professors found that the homicide rate in New York state actually increased an average of between one and two a month following executions.

A 1982 study by the New York State Defenders Association estimated that the average death penalty case cost the state $1.8 million, compared to the $602,000 it costs to keep a 30-year-old inmate in prison for life.

Opponents of the death penalty also warn of the risk of executing an innocent person, pointing to the case of Joseph Green Brown.

Brown spent 12 years on Florida's death row before his conviction in a rape and murder case was overturned by a federal appeals court, which determined a key prosecution witness had lied.

"The Brown case really changed my view of it, principally because it provided such a dramatic illustration of how the system could be fallible and cause the death of an innocent person," said state Rep. Richard Blumenthal, a former U.S. Attorney in Connecticut who once represented Brown.

Some observers believe Brown's testimony before the Judiciary Committee swayed some lawmakers to vote for the abolition bill.

"The system does not work. Mistakes happen," Brown told the committee last month. "I am living proof of that."

POLICE CAR BOMBED — Agents from the U.S. Treasury Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and the FBI inspect the damage done to a Missoula City, Mont., detective's car after a bomb that was planted in the vehicle exploded early Sunday. No one was injured in the blast that also broke out several windows in buildings near the car, including the Missoula City Hall. A man claiming connections to the white-supremacist group, the Aryan Nations Church, claimed credit for the bombing. He has not been located, authorities say. (AP Laser-photo)

West Buried Under More Snow; Winds Blast Utah

By BOB BLACK
Associated Press Writer
A spring storm dumped more snow on the West today after unloading up to 9 inches on Montana, undermining a railroad bed with wind-whipped waves and sinking a boat on Utah Lake. One boater was dead and three were missing.

Snow fell from Wyoming and Utah into Colorado, with up to 6 inches expected. Near-blizzard conditions were reported in Wyoming, with heavy snow driven by gusts to 50 mph.

Rescue workers in Utah were to renew the search today for three people missing since their boat apparently broke up in winds estimated at 40 mph Saturday.

On Sunday, the body of Todd Rasmussen, 24, of Orem, Utah, was spotted from the air and recovered, still wearing a life preserver. Missing were his two brothers and a sister-in-law, authorities said.

During Easter weekend, the storm dumped up to 9 inches of snow on western Montana and struck parts of Idaho and Wyoming.

Winds of nearly 100 mph Saturday blasted a Utah mountainside near Park City, about 30 miles east of Salt Lake City, and 40 mph winds whipped waves on the Great Salt Lake, damaging 11½ miles of Southern Pacific railroad's causeway line and closing the route.

"There are several places where the causeway has been breached," said railroad spokesman Bob Hoppe. "I guess the storm was severe enough in places to push the track out of line, too. Salt water gets pretty powerful when it gets blowing."

Dust, rain and snow caused power outages that left more than 10,000 Salt Lake County residences without electricity early Sunday. Most power was restored by early afternoon, said Utah Power & Light Co. dispatcher Larry Amott.

In Colorado, cold, gusty winds moved into Colorado's Front Range on Sunday night, bringing an abrupt end to springlike weekend weather. Temperatures plunged 24 degrees within an hour in some areas, and snow and ice pellets were reported in the Denver area.

The winds kicked up dust storms and twisters. At Stapleton International Airport in Denver, gusts overturned a medium-sized cargo plane taxiing in shortly before 7 p.m., causing heavy damage to the plane but only slight injuries to the crew of two, an airport spokesman said.

Winds were clocked at 78 mph Fort Morgan on the northeastern plains and about 60 mph at Denver.

The cold front snapped a three days of record warm weather that had sent daytime temperatures into the 80s and 90s in eastern Colorado.

NSC Review Questions Some 'Findings' Signed By Reagan

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — A National Security Council review of all intelligence "findings" signed by President Reagan concludes that

A 25-Cent Stamp?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Postmaster General Preston R. Tisch said today that 25 cents "seems like a logical amount" to charge for a first-class stamp under a rate increase that may take effect in 1988.

"We are thinking of raising our rates in 1988," Tisch said on NBC-TV's "Today" show, adding that "we haven't made the decision yet."

Asked if the rate for a first-class stamp would go from 22 cents to a quarter, Tisch replied, "That seems like a logical amount. It would make it much easier, particularly for those of us who don't like to carry pennies around."

The rate was last increased on Feb. 17, 1985, when the 20-cent rate, which had been in effect more than three years, was raised.

Although the Postal Service finished last year $304 million in the black, it faces some $2 billion in added costs over the next two years because of a change in the federal retirement system's effects on postal workers, officials have said.

Each penny of a first-class rate hike, and concurrent increases in other rates, would generate roughly $1 billion a year, Deputy Postmaster General Michael S. Coughlin has said.

some of them were unnecessary, a White House spokesman says.

NSC adviser Frank Carlucci launched a review of the so-called findings in the wake of the Iran-Contra affair. It was such a finding that Reagan signed to authorize the covert operation in which arms were sold to Iran.

Following the disclosure of the secret weapons sales to Iran and allegations of the diversion of profits to the Nicaraguan Contras, Reagan ordered that the NSC be barred from conducting covert operations.

A White House official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said the review dealt with the presidential findings that authorized operations, and that not all findings result in operations.

The review was recommended in the report by the Tower commission which looked into the White House involvement in the Iran-Contra affair, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

"That review is nearly complete. They found some findings that were unnecessary or duplicative," Fitzwater said. "The number of findings that were found to be unnecessary were minimal, and certainly less than a third."

North Carolina's first Baptist Conference was organized in Greenville in 1830.

Miss Bradley, Mr. Bynum Were Married Saturday

Terry Lynn Bradley and Donald Gray Bynum were united in marriage Saturday at 1 p.m. in Wells Chapel Church. The double-ring ceremony was performed by Elder Jeffrey Wilkes.

The bride is the daughter of Pattie Bradley of Greenville and Robert Williams of Farmville. The bridegroom is the son of Mable Jefferson of Newark, N.J.

Organist Barry Dixon and vocalists Wyna Adams and Linwood Hicks provided music for the ceremony.

The honor attendant was Chandra Bridges of Greenville, sister of the bride. Angela Atkinson, Diedra Brewington and Donita Moore, all of Greenville, and Pamela Spruill of Brooklyn, N.Y. were the bridesmaids. Keonda Bridges of Greenville, niece of the bride, was the flower girl.

Malcolm Moore of Greenville was the best man. Groomsmen were Antonio Bradley, brother of the bride, and William Battle, both of Greenville, Todd Summerville of Connecticut, cousin of the bridegroom, and Calvin Horne of Farmville. Ushers were Ernest Bridges and Milton Freeman, both of Greenville. Richard Ashe of Greenville, cousin of the bride, was the ring bearer.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents and was escorted by her father. She wore a taffeta wedding gown with a sabrina neckline and alencon lace bodice adorned with pearls. The dress featured bonnet sleeves with pearl trim, alencon lace appliques and a basque waist with a large back bow and an alencon lace hem on the chapel train. She wore a taffeta bridal hat with a large brim bordered with alencon lace and simulated pearls. She carried a bouquet of white rosebuds, statice, daisies, pompons and baby's breath.

The honor attendant and the bridesmaids wore daphne rose scalloped edge tea-length gowns of sheer lace over a slip of acetate satin. The gowns were designed with a bateau neck with a V-shaped back and a satin cummerbund with a back bow. They carried silk fans with spring flowers and matching streamers.

The flower girl wore a rose tea-length gown inset with front and back ruffles enhanced with a soft back bow. She carried a basket with flower petals and matching streamers.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall following the ceremony.

The bride is a graduate of J.H. Rose High School and North Carolina Central University, where she received a bachelor's degree in public administration. She is employed at the Credit Bureau Inc. in Raleigh.

The bridegroom is a graduate of University High in Newark, N.J. He served in the United States Marine Corp. and is employed at Uni-Copy in Raleigh.

After a wedding trip, the couple will live in Raleigh.

Patrick Wedding Held

Edna Roundtree Lullen and Charles William Patrick were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at 4 p.m. in the Mount Calvary Free Will Baptist Church. Elder Elmer Jackson performed the double-ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Iceilene Hardy Roundtree of Ayden. The bridegroom is the son of the late Charles Patrick and Byrdia Kilpatrick and the nephew of Helen Burgin of Fletcher.

A program of music was presented by organist Deborah Hall of Greenville. Harold Allen of Greenville sang "What a Difference You've Made in My Life," "My Tribute" and "The Lord's Prayer".

The bride was given in marriage by her mother and escorted by her brother, Jerome Roundtree of New Haven, Conn. She wore an ivory floor-length gown with a chapel train of chiffon and alencon lace over taffeta. The fitted bodice featured a Victorian neckline with an illusion yoke and chiffon bishop sleeves. Alencon lace motifs etched with seed pearls lavishly appliqued the bodice and cuffs of the sleeves. Scalloped schiffli embroidery outlined the cuffs and encircled the natural waistline. The floor-length skirt extended into a chapel train scalloped shiffli embroidery bordered the hemline of the gown. She chose an ivory waltz-length veil of illusion with a fluted edge flowing from a wreath of flowers accented with pearls and crystals for her headpiece. She carried a cascade of white roses, carnations, daisies, baby's breath and statice accented with white streamers.

Patti Sanders Smith, cousin of the bride, served as matron of honor. The maid of honor was Lucretia Wallace. The attendants wore floor-length gowns of royal blue satin featuring sweetheart necklines and lantern sleeves. The skirts were designed with an asymmetrical dropped waistline and a fitted princess bodice. They carried white roses, daisies, baby's breath and statice with royal blue and white streamers.

Janis Marie Lullen, daughter of the bride, was the flower girl. She wore a floor-length royal blue gown featuring a sweetheart neckline, lantern shaped sleeves and a sash that tied into a bow. The skirt was designed with an asymmetrical dropped waistline with the fitted princess bodice. She carried a wicker basket with a mixture of spring flowers.

David McNeil of Richmond, Va. was the best man. Eal Quash of Washington D.C. served as groomsmen. The ushers were Jeffrey May and Omar May, both of Greenville.

Ring bearer Timothy Teel carried a white satin pillow edged in lace and garnished with love knot streamers.

Emma M. McIntyre of Greenville and the Rev. Montrose A. Streater of Jefferson City, Tenn., directed the wedding.

The mother of the bride and the aunt of the bridegroom wore white corsages and were honored with long stemmed roses.

The reception was held in the Education Department of the church. George Joyner was the host. Laverne Pickett, cousin of the bride, and Delores Staton greeted guest and presided at the register. Rosina Roundtree, sister-in-law of the bride, served punch. Brenda Myrick served cake.

The bride was honored with a miscellaneous shower given by friends.

The bride is a graduate of W.H. Robinson High School and the East Carolina University School of Nursing. She is employed as a nurse in the recovery room of Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

The bridegroom is a graduate of Winston-Salem High School and East Carolina University. He is employed with R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. as a sales representative in the Greenville area.

After a wedding trip to Freeport, Bahamas, the couple will live in Greenville.

Saudis Becoming Frugal?

By ALY MAHMOUD
Associated Press Writer

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — With recession upon them, Saudi Arabians are giving up the spendthrift ways of their oil-boom years and relearning frugality — sort of.

Middle-class families no longer buy new furniture twice a year or a new car every year. They are cutting down on foreign vacations and buying smaller cars.

"We got rid of our expatriate driver," said housewife Samira Abdullah.

"Three of our Filipino maids also had to go. In the past we used to slaughter five lambs to feed three guests. Now we slaughter only one."

Shopkeeper Mohammed Isa says that instead of traveling abroad with his family more than once a year "we now travel only once. We have to be rational."

The world oil glut has precipitated a sharp drop in Saudi Arabia's revenues, $18 billion last year compared to $113 billion in 1981.

Seven years ago, Saudi Arabia's oil production averaged more than 11 million barrels a day, with the price reaching $34 a barrel. This year, with the price falling to below $10 a barrel, production is expected to run at 3.85 million barrels a day.

Three years of recession also have had an impact on Saudi Arabia's foreign workers. As many as a million are estimated to have lost their jobs and others forced to take pay cuts.

Saudi Arabia still has 2.6 million to 3 million expatriates — 1.5 million Asians, 1 million Arabs and at least 30,000 Americans.

Saudi graduates who commanded $36,000 a year five years ago are now settling for $18,000, says businessman Abdullah al-Shehri.

Largely because of the recession, the kingdom went without a budget for nine months last year. The government has slashed its spending from $50 billion in 1981 to $20 billion this year.

In Riyadh, the capital, and the Red Sea commercial center of Jidda, more than 40 percent of commercial and residential highrise buildings are empty. Landlords complain that rents have gone down by about 35 percent.

Government sources say some foreign contractors have abandoned projects and left the kingdom.

Some Saudi contracting and trading companies have collapsed, and others are trying to reschedule loans, with banks making little profit or registering losses.

Importers say Saudis are beginning to buy smaller cars. Sales and discount signs are becoming popular at malls and department stores.

The government is urging citizens to vacation in Saudi Arabia, often offering package deals in resort regions in Taif, Abha and Asir.

Nevertheless, poverty is still unknown in Saudi Arabia, a desert kingdom bigger than Western Europe with a population of 11 million.

The kingdom's foreign exchange reserves last year were estimated at more than $90 billion, enough to see it through to the end of the century. Saudi Arabia has no national debt.

During the oil boom, the Saudis spent lavishly on schools, highways, factories, including a $20-billion industrial city at Jubail in the east, and leisure complexes.

Basic necessities are still subsidized. With free education and medical care, the less well-off are cushioned from hardships.

Saudis complain that the upward zoom of oil prices in the 1970s made the economy more reliant on oil revenues, aggravated inflation, made light industries and agriculture more costly and precipitated wasteful consumption.

Optimists say recession will impel private sector companies to contribute to efforts under way to diversify the economy.

Thanks to the recession, they say, private companies with indigenous resources have been sprouting around the kingdom, producing foodstuffs, certain types of building materials and consumer items, and developing expertise in servicing machinery.

"Lucky for us, recession hit the kingdom well after all infrastructural projects had been completed," said Salah Abal-Khail, who runs his own consulting engineering firm.

"Now it's the turn of the private sector to give the economy a shot in the arm."

Khaled Malek, who heads an investment company, also sees favorable facets to recession. He contends that it will make the economy more competitive by eliminating the inefficient and curtailing extravagance.

"Many who had relied on favoritism to win construction contracts will henceforth have to rely on their own business and technical capabilities," he says.

"Easy money is no longer there for the fly-by-nights to grab. Labor and not luck will decide who is to be wealthy or poor."

Professor Is Attempting To Measure Intimacy Need

By VALLI HERMAN
The Gary Post-Tribune

GARY, Ind. (AP) — The elements of love are the subject of poems, songs, books and, now, scientific research.

Gary native Dan McAdams has created what may be the first index that measures a person's need for intimacy.

McAdams, 33, the 1975 Lew Wallace High School valedictorian, began his work at Harvard University and continues it as an associate professor of psychology at Loyola University in Chicago.

McAdams said psychological research on love had been ignored in past decades partly because thought and feeling could not be measured.

"Some would say it isn't good (to study love), because we will demystify it and make it cold and calculated. A lot of people believe scientists are going to wreck it — and we might!"

"My own work on love is more in the line of how individuals think of it, instead of how people do love," he said.

By asking people to write stories about a set of characters, McAdams has been able to uncover recurring themes about intimacy, which he defines as the desire for warm, close, communicative relationships.

By breaking down the components of intimacy, researchers can now understand how it shapes our lives, relationships and identities, he says.

McAdams takes two scores from his tests. One, an "intimacy motivation" score, picks out references to intimacy, according to categories McAdams has created. A similar "power motivation" score is also taken.

"Some of our research does support that people who score high on intimacy motivation are better off. Adult women (who score higher) are somewhat happier with their lives, more satisfied with their roles than are women who are somewhat lower in intimacy motivation."

"For men, intimacy motivation is related to feeling less strain, stress and somewhat less anxiety and uncertainty about the future, though it isn't related to life satisfaction and happiness," he said.

If you are high in power motivation, you are more likely to be concerned with control and with making a contribution to the world, he says.

want both power and intimacy. I think each person tries to merge them in a different way," he said.

Next year, McAdams will take a six-month sabbatical to finish a college textbook on personality psychology, titled "The Person," and to begin a layman's book on the power and intimacy topic called, "The Intimacy Motive." Both will be on bookshelves by 1989.

McAdams' previous findings were published in 1985 in "Power, Intimacy and the Life Story."

Evans-Edwards Wedding Held

Sharon Felise Edwards and Nokomis Jerome Evans were united in marriage Saturday at Cornerstone Missionary Baptist Church. The double-ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. William Davis at 2 p.m.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard McK. Edwards of Snow Hill and Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Evans of Whitakers are the bride's parents.

Angela M. Evans of Greenville, sister of the bridegroom, was the maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Bernadette Rodgers of Williamston and Naomi Roundtree of Greenville. Kara M. Hines of Greenville, niece of the bridegroom, was the flower girl.

S. Dwayne Hayes of Winston-Salem was the best man. Head usher was Leland Newsome of Wilmington, uncle of the bride. Groomsman were Kirby D. Evans of Greenville, brother of the bridegroom, and Keith M. Davis of Raleigh. The honorary usher was Ensign R. McKinney Edwards of Charleston S.C., brother of the bride. Justin C. Fife of Raleigh, son of the bride, served as ringbearer.

Gloria Hines was the organist for the ceremony and Renee Lee performed piano music. Vocalists were Joyce Mitchell and John Ross.

The bride wore a formal-length gown of ivory Seville lace over peau de soie designed with a high neckline encircled with alencon lace beaded with pearls. The fitted bodice, overlaid in Seville lace accented with alencon lace beaded with pearls, extended over the torso to a basque waistline. The Renaissance sleeves also were fashioned of the Seville lace and featured alencon lace extending over the wrists to calla points. The trumpet-styled skirt bordered in silk embroidered Venise lace flowed to a sweep train. Self-closure buttons enhanced the back bodice. A taffeta bow with steamers was featured at the center back of the train. She selected a spray of silk flowers with pearls and sequins.

The maid of honor and bridesmaids wore tea-length peach satin gowns with overlays of ivory schiffi lace. They each carried a silk bouquet of peach and ivory flowers tied with peach and ivory satin ribbon.

The reception was held at Doctor's Park Clubhouse following the ceremony. Hostesses were Cheryl Chance and Teresa Fleming of Greenville and Maxine Thomas and Renee Thomas of Raleigh. The director was Delores W. Evans of Greenville.

A rehearsal dinner was given at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Larry Hines. The bridesmaid's luncheon was held at Annabelle's. A bridal shower was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J.T. Roundtree and was hosted by Naomi Roundtree, Valerie Banks and Delores Evans.

The bride attended North Carolina Central University and East Carolina University. She is employed with the City of Raleigh Planning Department.

The bridegroom attended ECU and Cornell University. He is a chemist and marketing representative for UNISOL Chemical Corporation and is co-owner of K.E.E. Enterprises, Inc.

After a wedding trip to Los Angeles, the couple will reside in Raleigh.

7-Year Study Showed Most People Adjust

By JOHN NOLAN
Associated Press Writer
OXFORD, Ohio (AP) — Adjusting to widowhood often is easier than people expect, and many people appear to eventually adopt a positive outlook despite the loss of a spouse, says Miami University sociologist Sue Kunkel.

Her analysis of a seven-year study found what philosophers have said for ages: time is a great healer.

"That was an encouraging finding," Ms. Kunkel said. "To the extent we can generalize it, it's good news for the people who experience it."

A team of Miami University sociologists, including Ms. Kunkel, studied the experiences of men and women from the Oxford area. She began on the study in 1975 while a graduate student at Miami, whose main campus is in Oxford.

Because the study was limited to a small, rural Midwestern town, it did not consider big-city factors that could make life difficult for the widowed, including crime and lack of easy access to transportation, Ms. Kunkel said.

She points out that the closely knit support systems in a small town can help widows or widowers, as opposed to the problems faced by isolated, big-city counterparts.

"That's why we hesitate to make sweeping generalizations," she said. "I think that small-town feeling makes a difference."

"By no means is there a consensus that people do OK. Not having enough money can be a big deterrent to adjusting. The other concern is health, staying well."

She says the findings are similar to those of other recent studies on the experiences of widowhood. Subjects for the Miami study included men and women, age 50 to 94.

Ms. Kunkel said she had made it a point to include men and women in the study to determine whether one sex had a harder time adjusting to widowhood. Researchers found some differences.

"Widowers see family as often as do widows. They see friends less often," Ms. Kunkel said. "But the biggest difference is how satisfied they are with those visits. Women want to see more of their family and friends than men do."

"A second difference is that widows show more symptoms of stress, particularly when it comes to being able to sleep."

The study did not indicate that men generally fare worse in adjusting to loss of a spouse, she said.

"There is a common assumption that when men become widowed, they become isolated and lonely, withdrawn from family and friends," Ms. Kunkel said. "There is this sad picture of these old men left to fend for themselves and being pretty unhappy and miserable, but this isn't the case at all."

Bob Atchley, director of the Scripps Foundation Gerontology Center at Miami, started the study and enlisted the help of Ms. Kunkel, his assistant. E.W. Scripps Co., a Cincinnati-based newspaper publisher, funded the project to study population problems.

Had Hawaiian Reception, Hawaiian Wedding Trip

Paula Reed Liska of Greenville and Kenneth Earl Adams of Ayden exchanged wedding vows Sunday at 4 p.m. at the Hilton Inn of Greenville.

The double-ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Ellis Jennings Bedworth.

Mr. and Mrs. William Niessen of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, and Mrs. Tommy Adams and the late Tommy Adams are the parents of the couple.

Sue Heath of Vanceboro, niece of the bridegroom, played the piano and sang "Hawaiian Wedding Song".

Carlton Heath, nephew of the bridegroom, of Vanceboro, and Wayland Adams, brother of the bridegroom, of Ayden, were the ushers.

The bride wore a floor-length dress she made of ivory linen and ivory Belgian lace with a scooped neck and bell sleeves. She carried a bouquet of white orchids with greenery.

The reception, with a Hawaiian theme, was held at the Greenville Room of the Hilton Inn immediately following the ceremony. Serving punch, cake and other refreshments were the bride's daughter, Sherry Liska of Atlanta, Ga.; the bride's sister, Tricia Meyers of Indianapolis, Ind.; and Nancy Niessen of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, sister-in-law of the bride. Marie Gaskins of New Bern tended the guest register.

The bride is a senior account executive with Tri Star Communications of Greensboro and Greenville. She is a graduate of Kent State University.

The bridegroom is employed with Greenville Utilities Commission in the accounting department. He is a graduate of Pitt Community College.

After a wedding trip to Hawaii, the couple will live in Greenville.

Insensitivity To Child Is Abusive Parenting

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Recently, when I was in the "cry room" of my church with my children, a man, woman and their two children came in. Their daughter was about 4 years old and wore very thick eyeglasses. Their son was about a year old. They hugged and kissed their son constantly, while completely ignoring their daughter.

About 10 minutes into the Mass, the mother took the little girl's glasses off of her and said, "You look ugly with those glasses; I'll hold them. Do the best you can without them." The little girl started to cry, begging her mom to give her the glasses, but the mother said, "No, you're not getting them. I don't want anyone to see you with them on."

Abby, it was just pitiful. The girl kept begging for her glasses, then she said, "Daddy, please let me go to live with Grandma." This little girl tried to button her own coat and she couldn't even find the buttons. They bundled up their son and left the cry room. The girl literally had to crawl down the two steps while she was crying. (She couldn't see them.) I had tears in my eyes.

I am so upset. My husband says I should call the priest and tell him about it. I don't know what to do. I'm active in church and don't want any trouble. I pray for this girl every night and think of her every day. Is there anything I can do, Abby? -- HELPLESS IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR HELPLESS: Yes. Tell your priest that if he doesn't call in those parents and arrange for parenting counseling, you will report them to the child protective agency. They are guilty of child abuse. Such ignorance and heartlessness must not be permitted to continue.

If you are concerned about "making trouble," please write to me: P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069, and tell me the name of the parents and the church, and I will intervene on that child's behalf. Your identity will be confidential.

DEAR ABBY: Our 20-year-old daughter insists that when one of her friends comes to our house during dinnertime, the friend should sit at the table with the family (my wife, our two teen-agers and myself).

We feel that the friend should wait in the den until we have finished eating. My daughter becomes angry, leaves the table to join her friend in the den, and finishes her dinner after we have finished ours.

Abby, who is right? Should the friend join us or wait in the den? -- CONCERNED FATHER

DEAR FATHER: You are. Since mealtime in some families is the only time the family gets together, it shouldn't be interrupted by drop-in guests. Your daughter is out of line. The friend should be asked not to come at dinnertime. And if the friend ignores the request, said friend should wait in the den. Alone.

DEAR ABBY: Could you explain to me what kind of person enjoys practical jokes? A man who works with my husband is obsessed with playing practical jokes on people.

One of his favorite jokes is to drop a lit cigarette into the hip pocket of his victim's pants. Of course this goes unnoticed until the victim feels it. By that time there's a hole already burned in the victim's pants, and the poor guy also has suffered a burn on his skin.

I like a joke as much as the next person, but this doesn't seem a bit funny to me -- just weird. Does this man have arson tendencies or what? -- NOT AMUSED

DEAR NOT: The man is childish, sadistic and has a perverse sense of humor. He is encouraged in this kind of behavior because onlookers laugh and the victim probably feels compelled to be a good sport and regard it as a harmless joke. It's neither harmless nor a joke. The victim could take legal action against the practical joker. And I hope one does.

Teen Scientists Asked Should Younger Kids Use Calculators?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The California Department of Education ruled last year that "... before the end of the sixth grade, students should have calculators continuously available for use — in class, on homework assignments and on tests."

The question "Is this a good idea and will it stimulate math learning?" was posed to the 40 national winners in the 46th annual Westinghouse Science Talent Search. The students, who are completing high school and range in age from 15 to 18, met here recently to receive $140,000 in scholarships and cash awards for their independent research studies in the sciences and mathematics.

The Search has been administered by Science Service, a non-profit organization, and funded by the Westinghouse Electric Corp. since 1942.

With winning projects often compared to those undertaken at master degree levels, the opinions expressed obviously are not the same as those of the average high school adolescent.

Sixty percent of the 1987 Westinghouse winners clearly vetoed calculator use by preteens. While some predicted such early use would transform the calculator from a "valuable tool" to a "lifetime crutch," others cited potential intellectual, academic and psychological damage to the student.

Underdeveloped brain power concerned the third-place $15,000 scholarship winner, Albert Jun-Wei Wong, 16, Oak Ridge, Tenn., who said, "In sixth grade, students are still developing their minds. If only for the sake of forcing them to use their brain power, calculators should not be a necessity. There is also the danger of using a calculator without knowing the why and how of its function."

Albert's Search project dealt with biological cybernetics. He believes his investigation may provide further insights into the brain's complexities. First in his class at Oak Ridge High, he has received first-place honors for science and mathematics and recognition for his abilities in French, music and soccer. He hopes to attend Princeton University and prepare for a career as a physicist or mathematician.

Loss of potential student capability and self-esteem were cited by Jessica Lynn Jacobson, 18, who lives in Orinda, Calif., and attends Miramonte High School.

"If students are always allowed to use calculators, they will never learn basic arithmetic — adding, subtracting, multiplying and dividing," she said. "They will never be confident without checking their answers with a calculator."

For her project, Jessica studied daphnia, a type of freshwater crustacean (water flea).

The recipient of many science awards, including a first place in the 1986 International Science and Engineering Fair, Jessica is planning a career either in medicine or bio-medical engineering. Scuba diving and snorkeling are favorite activities.

"At the sixth-grade age, students are not doing such complex work that they need calculators to ease the number-crunching," said Andrew Heafitz, 17, Newton, Mass., senior at Newton South High School. "Number-crunching is what they are learning. To use calculators at such an early age produces calculator-dependent invalids."

The first-place winner in the Massachusetts State Science Fair and the Navy National Science Award Program, Andrew developed a rocket-launched motor-driven aerial photography system for his project. Skiing, astronomy and carpentry are among his hobbies. At college, he plans to study mechanical engineering.

Unhealthy student attitudes about mathematics and lower standards are consequences foreseen by Elizabeth Lee Wilmer. At Stuyvesant High School in New York City, this 16-year-old senior is captain of her school's math team, among other activities, but always finds time for cross-country running, bicycling and extensive reading.

Elizabeth received the second-place $15,000 scholarship for a mathematics project relating to three-color theorems and hopes to attend Harvard University to prepare for a career as a mathematician.

"Spend five years teaching the kid arithmetic and then tell him or her, 'Hey, all that was really useless and you don't need it anyway.' That's sure to develop a great attitude toward math," she said.

On the other hand, the 22 percent who favor calculator use by preteens and the 18 percent who were uncertain aren't convinced that most students will react that way. They believe that calculator use at an early age will benefit all students in the long run, and may even inspire more students to enjoy math.

Louise Chang, 17, Westmont, Ill., approves for another reason. "Calculators make it easier for instructors to construct problems and increase the amount of material which can be covered in a given amount of class, testing or homework time," she said. She does favor "some testing to be conducted without calculators to ensure students remember basic arithmetic."

Louise was the recipient of the first-place $20,000 scholarship for a cancer research project in which she isolated three genes that are more active in cancerous cells than in normal cells. A senior at the University of Chicago Laboratory Schools High School, she was chosen from area schools as the outstanding young scientist of 1986 by the Chicago Museum of Science and Industry.

An accomplished violinist, Louise plays with the University of Chicago Symphony Orchestra and enjoys jogging, sewing and gymnastics. After studies at either Harvard or the University of Chicago, she plans to do cancer research.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed higher today, continuing its bid to recover from a selloff earlier this month.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 12.22 points to 2,288.21 in the first half hour of trading.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 4 to 3 in the overall tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 649 up, 495 down and 404 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 19.99 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Gainers among the early volume leaders included General Electric, up 1 at 104 1/4; General Motors, up 3/4 at 87 1/2; American Telephone & Telegraph, up 1/4 at 24 1/2, and Sears Roebuck, up 3/4 at 52 1/4.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained 41 to 163.00. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .86 at 329.80.

On Thursday the Dow Jones industrial average dropped 6.96 to 2,275.99, closing out the holiday-shortened week with a net loss of 62.79 points.

But advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 2 to 1 in the overall tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 1,214 up, 475 down and 309 unchanged. Volume on the Big Board came to 189.57 million shares, against 198.15 million in the previous session.

Military Mutiny Ends

ernment and rebels may have reached an understanding about officers accused of human rights abuses.

About 250 military men now face charges in civilian courts in connection with the "dirty war" that the military governments from 1976 to 1983 waged against leftist guerrillas and alleged sympathizers.

Alfonso has insisted that civil courts handle the human rights cases, but he also has indicated some soldiers may have committed abuses under orders from superiors.

A government investigatory commission says at least 9,000 people died in the military repression. Human rights activists say 30,000 died.

Dressed in combat uniform and beret, Rico said, "The president has understood. We are not coupmoungers. Our reaction was directed against the general command." He did not use the word "surrender."

The rebels also had demanded the government replace army chief of staff Gen. Hector Rios Erenu, who had insisted the military answer court orders in the human rights cases. Erenu dismissed Rico on Friday.

National news agency reports, which could not be immediately confirmed, indicated Erenu had offered to retire and that Defense Minister Horacio Jaunarena would take over his duties temporarily.

Earlier Sunday, government sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said Erenu's retirement was negotiated in secret talks with the rebels, but presidential spokesman Jose I. Lopez denied Erenu was leaving office.

The first army mutiny began Wednesday when Maj. Ernesto Guillermo Barreiro refused to answer a federal court summons to testify on human rights charges.

Erenu dismissed Barreiro, who sought refuge at the 14th Paratroop Regiment, based just outside Cordoba. Rico began his mutiny in support of Barreiro.

Barreiro's rebellion collapsed Friday when his backers laid down their arms and he fled in a car out a back gate. His whereabouts are not known.

Dozens of government supporters kept vigil outside Campo de Mayo throughout the weekend, chanting "Long live democracy!" Early Sunday, police used tear gas to disperse about 100 members of the far-left Humanist Party who tried to cross police barriers as they protested against the mutiny. No injuries were reported.

Officials Cautious

eliminating short-range missiles in Europe, an idea that has raised concerns among some NATO allies and American lawmakers wary of the Soviet conventional force advantage in Europe.

Gen. Bernard Rogers, departing NATO supreme commander, said in a Newsweek magazine interview released Sunday that the Soviet proposal will make Western Europe "safe for conventional war."

"If we end up getting rid of all nuclear weapons and we haven't achieved equity between their conventional forces and ours, we'll wake up one day and find ourselves dancing to the tune of the Soviet pipe," Rogers said.

Georgi Arbatov, director of the Soviet Union's U.S.A. and Canada Institute, said from Moscow that arms control "looks more possible, but I'm tremendously cautious."

Arbatov, interviewed from Moscow on "Meet the Press," said, "All the time ... it looks better and then somebody throws in a monkey wrench and then it goes worse, so I am cautious, but I would say there was never such a chance given to any president of the United States as now."

Three American officials on the programs differed among themselves about the budgetary implications of a removal of some American and Soviet weapons from Europe.

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said on "Meet the Press" that with an arms control agreement, "we can begin to make some dent in these huge deficits" of about $200 billion annually in the federal budget by spending less money on missiles.

But Perle and Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, argued that defense costs could actually increase because there would be a need to balance the current Soviet conventional force advantage.

"The last time I looked at it, I thought that in order to have a credible conventional balance in Europe, we would need another 10 divisions on our side," Aspin said.

He said he was not certain how expensive that would be.

In addition, Wright and Arbatov denied reports that Gorbachev suggested to visiting members of Congress that the United States could solve its racial problems by establishing "separate areas" for blacks and Hispanics.

Easter Is Observed

this year, but we have only cancelled one night so far" due to inclement weather, Taylor said.

"The audience has come prepared for the weather conditions," Taylor said. "It rained a little bit night before last, but people came with raincoats, umbrellas and plastic bags and sat there in the rain to watch" the production.

Meanwhile, in Pitt County, the Farmville Ministerial Association sponsored Holy Week services at noon each day during the week, culminating with a sunrise service at the Farmville Christian Church Sunday morning.

The 30-minute services were held at the First Baptist Church, with ministers of the participating churches conducting the devotions. Leading the services were the Rev. William N. Gordon of the Farmville Presbyterian Church, the Rev. William Hadden of the Farmville Episcopal Church, the Rev. Phillip Bland of the Farmville Pentecostal Church, the Rev. David Morton, chaplain of the Correctional Center at Maury, and the Rev. Dewey Tyson of the Farmville United Methodist Church.

A breakfast was served following the sunrise service in the Christian Church.

The Black Ministers' Alliance held a sunrise service Sunday at 6 a.m. at Cornerstone Missionary Baptist Church.

The Rev. Howard Parker Jr. of Sycamore Hill Baptist Church said approximately 500 persons attended the service.

Rain clouds gathered but no raindrops fell on the participants. "It was cloudy, but around 7 a.m. you could tell it was getting daylight," Parker said.

At the 11 a.m. service at Sycamore Hill, "we had a full house of around 400 to 500 persons," Parker said. The church's band played, accompanying the choir along with the piano and organ. Parker said his sermon was on "The Past as Preparation for the Future."

A sunrise service was held at 7 a.m. Falkland Presbyterian Church, according to the Rev. Rod Pinder. "The weather was nice," he said. Approximately 125 persons attended the 11 a.m. service at the church. New members were received at the sunrise service and Communion was celebrated at 11 a.m.

Pinder said his sermon was that "Easter is not something in the past or something of the future, but something for the way you live your life everyday."

Council Walks Out

He said it was impossible for Abu Nidal's group to remain within the Palestine National Council because "it is a revolutionary splinter faction of Fatah which still has political and organizational difficulties with the mainline Fatah movement."

Fatah is the main component of the PLO and is led by Arafat.

Abu Nidal, 51, advocates a terrorist war against Israel and the West to promote the Palestinian struggle. His followers have been blamed for more than 100 attacks in the last decade, including the massacres at Rome and Vienna airports Dec. 27, 1985.

To heal the split between Fatah and the hard-line movements, Arafat agreed Sunday to formally abrogate his 1985 understanding with Jordan's King Hussein calling for a joint peace effort involving Israel.

Hussein suspended the accord a year ago, saying the PLO had broken a promise to accept a U.N. resolution tacitly recognizing the existence of Israel.

Arafat also reached a compromise on the PLO's relations with Egypt, George Habash, commander of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, said today. Egypt is the only Arab state that has a peace treaty with Israel.

"The rift is over. I would say that 95 percent of all the points of difference have been resolved," said Khalil Wazir, deputy commander of the PLO, at the end of a meeting Sunday of leaders of the eight guerrilla factions.

The 426-member council, opening its first meeting in four years today, is expected to endorse Arafat's moves and map out a new strategy to establish a homeland for the 5 million Palestinians.

Announcing the dissolution of the anti-Arafat front, Habash said: "The Palestine National Salvation Front was formed on March 25, 1985, 14 days after the signing of the Amman (Jordan) accord. The accord was cancelled yesterday and the PNSF has been dismantled."

Habash, a Marxist whose Popular Front is the second largest faction after Fatah, also announced a compromise providing "no official links between the PLO and the Egyptian regime until the cancellation of the Camp David peace treaty."

But Habash said "relations with the Egyptian masses and nationalist fronts in Egypt will continue." He said Arafat's personal relationship with President Hosni Mubarak would be dictated by the PLO's executive committee.

Chief Arrested

AVONDALE, Pa. (AP) — The police chief, accused of shooting out a window of a van carrying five youths, has been placed on an unpaid leave of absence.

State police arrested Chief Mark C. Trimble, 22, on charges of recklessly endangering the youths.

The shooting occurred in the early morning hours of April 5 after Trimble and Matthew E. Henderson, 19, of Elkton, Md., got into an argument, police said.

While chasing Henderson, Trimble fired six shots that hit the back window of the van, police said. The bullets also shattered part of the van's front windshield.

Trimble, who has been police chief for nearly two years, was released on $5,000 bail. Avondale is a town of 900 residents near the Maryland-Delaware border.

Teens Commit Suicide

CARLISLE, Pa. (AP) — Two teen-age boys found dead of carbon monoxide poisoning in a car near a highway committed suicide, authorities say.

The teen-agers had been reported missing early Saturday in Fairfax County, Va., according to state police trooper Ronald Gingrich. A passing motorist found them at 10:54 a.m. Saturday in rural south-central Pennsylvania, Gingrich said.

"We have no idea why they came here," he said. "That's the big question mark."

Cumberland County Coroner Michael Norris pronounced Christopher Paul Kelly, 17, of Vienna, Va., and Duane Adam Rohlfis, 17, of Falls Church, Va., dead at the scene in a rural residential area a half-mile from Interstate 81. They were in the Kelly family car.

Norris said Sunday that he determined the two committed suicide.

The boys, who attended George C. Marshall High School in Fairfax County, outside Washington, D.C., left six notes apologizing to their families, Gingrich said.

The investigation was continuing.

Fairfax County public school officials planned to send a crisis counseling team to the high school to meet with students, said school spokeswoman Delores Bohlen.

Psychologists and counselors met with students in small groups today, the first day after spring break for the school, said Myra Herbert, chief social worker for Fairfax County public schools. "There's been a lot of tragedy here," she said. "It's a matter of letting them go through the grief process."

Love Gets Surprise Win

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — This wasn't the one Davis Love III was supposed to win. And he knew it.

"I'm excited to win on a golf course I really wasn't supposed to win on," Love said after a bizarre two-shot turnaround at the 72nd hole made him a winner in the Heritage Classic on Sunday.

Love went from one shot back to one shot in front while he was signing his scorecard in a tent beside the 18th green at the Harbour Town Golf Links.

The tight little course, which winds through woods and marshes along Calibogue Sound down to the red-and-white striped lighthouse, is known among golf's touring pros as a course that places a premium on accuracy.

A look at the list of former winners — including double-winners Johnny Miller, Tom Watson, Hubert Green and Fuzzy Zoeller — confirms that opinion.

"A veteran, experienced player, someone who has won before, will win," Zoeller said before the tournament.

But the winner turned out to be a 23-year-old tour sophomore who hadn't won before, and the man who is the biggest hitter on the Tour.

Love won it with the driver in his bag. He used it only 17 times in the tournament.

"I was about to scream, looking at it. There's my best club and I can't take it out of the bag," Love said.

And he won the tournament after he thought he'd lost it.

"I thought I had to make birdie on 18 to have a chance," Love said.

But he didn't. So he went to the scorer's tent to sign for a 4-under-par round of 67 that gave him a 271 total, 13 shots under par.

Steve Jones, an obscure journeyman who hadn't finished higher than sixth in a four-year career and who got into the tournament as an alternate, was standing on the 18th tee with a one-shot lead in hand and the biggest upset of the season in sight. He needed a par to win, a bogey to force a playoff.

But Jones blocked his tee shot far to the right.

"A 70-yard fairway and I miss it by 30 yards," Jones said.

The ball was out of bounds.

It led to a double-bogey six. It made Love a winner and left Jones thinking of what might have been.

Love's victory was worth $117,000 from the total purse of $650,000. More than that, the big hitter said it proved he "can play the game the way it was meant to be played."

"People have been coming up to me all week saying, 'How can you be playing this golf course like that? You're supposed to be in the woods.'"

"I know that my short game wasn't supposed to be PGA Tour material," Love said. "But I've worked on it. My short game kept me in there all week."

"This is great for me, to prove I can play golf, period. Not just hit it a long way. I can chip and putt, too. I can play the game the way it's supposed to be played."

Jones, with a closing 72, was second by a single shot at 272. Mark Wiebe, with a 67, and Gene Sauers, who closed with a 73, were next at 273.

The group at 274 included Howard Twitty, Mark Calcavecchia and Bob Murphy.

Yanks' Pitching Keys Win

By The Associated Press

Entering the season, the Yankees' starting pitching presented a few questions marks, but so far New York has gotten some positive answers.

"I think we're good enough to win with what we have," said 43-year-old left-hander Tommy John, whose seven scoreless innings helped the Yankees to a 1-0 victory and a doubleheader sweep Sunday of the Kansas City Royals.

It was the first time the Yankees won both games of a doubleheader with shutouts since Sept. 25, 1977, against Toronto, and gave New York a 9-3 record.

In the first game, Charles Hudson, 3-0, pitched his second straight complete and first American League shutout for a 5-0 decision.

Dan Pasqua's eighth-inning sacrifice fly in the second game broke a scoreless tie and made a winner of reliever Pat Clements.

"Everybody questions our pitching," said Manager Lou Piniella, "but I think we're better than a lot of people think."

In other American League games, Milwaukee improved its record to 12-0 with a 6-4 victory over Texas, Chicago defeated Detroit 7-2, Boston topped Toronto 4-1, Minnesota edged California 6-5, Seattle downed Oakland 8-1 and Cleveland swept a doubleheader from Baltimore, 3-0 and 8-7.

The Royals were shutout in a doubleheader for the first time since Sept. 9, 1974 but Manager Billy Gardner wasn't worried.

"We've been leaving a lot of people on lately," said Gardner, "But I'm not concerned. We'll score some runs."

They'll have to score for awhile, however, without third baseman George Brett, who pulled a ribcage muscle swinging at a pitch in the first game. Brett was examined by a Yankee doctor and told he could miss three-to-four weeks.

Twins 6, Angels 5

Gary Gaetti snapped an 0-for-11 slump with a three-run homer and Jeff Reardon picked up his league-leading fourth save for Minnesota.

Gaetti's homer came off starter Don Sutton with the Twins trailing 2-1 in the sixth inning. Reardon, acquired from the Montreal Expos in the off-season, pitched the last two innings and earned the save despite allowing Ruppert Jones' two-run single in the ninth.

Sutton, 0-3, has lost five straight games dating back to last September. Mark Portugal pitched the first 5 2-3 innings to win his first decision of the season.

ECU Wins CAA Golf Tournament

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — Defending champion Rob Gai of Richmond birdied two of his last three holes for a final-round 76 to take medalist honors Sunday in the Colonial Athletic Association men's golf tournament, but East Carolina took top honors as a team.

ECU dethroned Richmond for the team title, posting a 929 score on the 6,654-yard, par 72 Fairfield Harbour Golf Course. The Spiders finished second with 936.

Gai closed the tournament with a 9-over-par 225 total, winning by one shot over Carlos DeLuca of American, who was tied with Gai after two rounds.

East Carolina's Mike Bradley was third with a 228, followed by Brett West of James Madison at 229 and Chris Winkel of East Carolina at 232.

Brian Connor and Chris Winkel each shot 76 on Sunday to help ECU hold off the Richmond.

"We played pretty well," said ECU coach Hal Morrison. "I felt good about the tournament that was one of our goals we talked about in our first meeting. One goal I wanted to accomplish was to win the conference. Conditions were not very good. Scores were high but team wise we played well. I think we're beginning to believe that we can play a little better. We just don't have enough depth right now."

ECU has one tournament left, the Vanderbilt Intercollegiate in Nashville, Tenn. May 11-12.

Brewers Continue To Work A Miracle

MILWAUKEE (AP) — 162-0?

The Milwaukee Brewers have only 150 games to go.

Few people believe this season-opening winning streak will last until May, much less October. But the way things are going nowadays, it's going to take something special to beat this bunch.

One brave fan brandished a sign proclaiming "162 & 0" after the Brewers made it 12 & 0 on Sunday with yet another dramatic victory.

"It's like, 'Here it comes, it's going to happen,'" said one of Sunday's heroes, Rob Deer. "The crowd was a big factor. I was just looking for something I could hit out of the ball park."

Hit it he did, some 450 feet to pull the Brewers from a 4-1 deficit to a 4-4 tie in the home half of the ninth. Dale Sveum ended it with a two-run homer, and the crowd danced.

"The fans started getting into it and we started getting into it," Sveum said.

"They're on a high, just flying," Texas catcher Darrell Porter said.

"They're not touching the ground. ... Somebody will zap 'em good."

"But this streak will carry them," he added. "It will be a stepping stone for their season. I'm not saying they're going to win it, but I don't think they'll finish last."

Over the long haul, that would represent a victory or sorts for a team figured to bring up the rear of the tough American League East.

"I did happen to notice in the paper the other day, all the teams that started out quickly finished with better records," infielder Paul Molitor said. "So, a start like this means a lot."

"If nothing else than the mental side of the game, we have to become positive about our team and our chances of staying in the race."

"You don't expect to be 12-0, not in anything," said center fielder Robin Yount, one of four Brewers left from the 1982 team that won the American League pennant.

"We've done what we've had to and made very few mistakes," Yount said. "That's what you need to put a streak together. We just want to keep riding the wave."

Riding the crest is Manager Tom Trebelhorn, the polite, warmly open skipper whose most forceful admonition is "my goodness" and whose avowed intent throughout spring training was to teach his young team how to "manufacture" runs.

"I'm just sitting back and letting them play and having fun watching like everyone else," says Trebelhorn, who is riding a 15-game winning streak dating to last season.

The problem with such a streak is that it takes weeks to build and one day to end. It could, for instance, come to a halt tonight at Chicago against the White Sox.

"Tomorrow comes quickly in this game," Molitor said. Even if it does, and the Brewers fall short of tying Atlanta's major-league record for season-opening victories, the team won't be crushed.

Taking A Bow

Milwaukee's Dale Sveum tips his hat to the crowd at Milwaukee County Stadium after hitting a two-run home run in the bottom of the ninth inning Sunday to give the Brewers a 6-4 win over Texas. The win was the Brewers' 12th in a row against no losses. (AP Laserphoto)

Cards Get Sweep Of Mets

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Make that score St. Louis Cardinals 4, New York Mets 2, John Tudor 0.

Tudor will be shut out for at least three months.

While completing their first three-game sweep of the New York Mets since June 1965, the Cardinals saw Tudor, their ace left-hander, sustain a broken right knee while sitting in the dugout.

Willie McGee and rookie Tom Paganzzi each homered in St. Louis' 4-2 victory over New York on Sunday. But the game became secondary from the Cards' standpoint when Mets catcher Barry Lyons fell on Tudor as he chased a pop foul into the dugout in the third inning.

"Here I was worried about Lyons, and all of a sudden I lose my No. 1 pitcher," Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog said.

In the rest of the National League, San Francisco edged Atlanta 4-3, Los Angeles beat San Diego 9-1, Montreal defeated Chicago 3-1, Pittsburgh downed Philadelphia 5-2 and Houston and Cincinnati split a doubleheader. The Astros won the opener 7-3, the Reds took the nightcap 6-2.

St. Louis' public relations director, Kip Ingle, said Tudor would be in a cast for two months, then undergo a month of rehabilitation.

Herzog said he saw Lyons come barreling into the dugout. Pitchers Danny Cox and Todd Worrell also wound up in a heap on the dugout floor, and second baseman Tommy Herr just barely got out of the way.

"I didn't see that any of them were hurt until I saw them carrying Tudor out," Herzog said.

Lyons, making a rare start in place of Gary Carter, said he started to slide, "but I was already in the dugout. I went back out there, and then I heard some rumbling going on. I saw (Tudor) escorted from the dugout. I realized I must have landed on him. It was very unfortunate."

The McGee and Paganzzi homers came off Sid Fernandez, while Greg Mathews allowed seven hits over 6 2-3 innings for the victory.

The Mets didn't score until Keith Hernandez hit a two-run double off Rick Horton in the seventh. Both runs were credited to Mathews.

Giants 4, Braves 3
Atlanta second baseman Glenn Hubbard let Matt Williams' grounder get past him for an error, allowing Chris Brown to score the winning run from third base with two out in the ninth inning.

The Giants, 8-0 in one-run games, improved to 10-3 for their best start since 1971 when they went 12-2 and won the National League West.

Brown started the ninth with a one-out double, and Bob Melvin was walked intentionally by Paul Assenmacher. Gene Garber came on, and Brown went to third on a flyout, bringing up Williams. Williams had tied the score 3-3 with a seventh-inning homer.

Dodgers 9, Padres 1
Mike Marshall drove in five runs with two homers, and Bob Welch came within one inning of his first shutout of the season as the Dodgers beat San Diego.

Welch took a three-hitter into the ninth, but allowed a single by Steve Garvey and a double by Randy Ready. When Ken Landreaux made a fielding error on Ready's hit, Garvey scored the only San Diego run. The Padres now have scored just 33 runs in 13 games, 11 of them losses.

Marshall hit a three-run homer in Los Angeles' four-run seventh, then added a two-run shot in the seventh. Franklin Stubbs also homered for the Dodgers.

Expos 3, Cubs 1
Vance Law's two-run single highlighted a three-run first inning that carried Larry Sorensen and the Montreal Expos over the Cubs.

The two clubs got into a beanball war in the seventh and eighth innings. Andy McGaffigan, who pitched three perfect innings in relief of Sorensen, twice brushed back Shawn Dunston, prompting a bench-clearing incident in the seventh when Dunston charged the mound.

In the eighth inning, Cubs pitcher Ed Lynch and Manager Gene Michael both were ejected after Lynch hit Mitch Webster with a pitch in retaliation.

Sorensen, a former Cub, allowed four hits and one unearned run in the six innings he worked.

Pirates 5, Phillies 2
Sid Bream hit a solo homer in the seventh inning to break a 2-2 tie, and the Pirates scored twice more in the eighth on an RBI single by Andy Van Slyke and a fielding error by Mike Schmidt.

Doug Drabek, who came to Pittsburgh in the deal that sent Rick Rhoden to the New York Yankees, earned his first NL victory, working seven innings and giving up seven hits. He struck out a career-high eight.

The victory enabled Pittsburgh to salvage the final game of the three-game series.

Astros 7, Reds 3
Reds 6, Astros 2
In the first game, Bill Doran drove in three runs with the first two-home run game of his career, and Mike Scott mastered the Reds over seven innings, allowing just three hits before needing relief help from Larry Andersen.

Celtics Win, Get Homecourt Advantage

The Boston Celtics have not had a season to cherish, at least not by their standards. But the defending NBA champs weren't exactly chumps, either.

The Celtics clinched the second-best record in the league and the homecourt advantage throughout the Eastern Conference playoffs with a 118-107 victory over the Atlanta Hawks Sunday. The win guaranteed the Celtics one extra home game per playoff round until the NBA finals.

How important was the victory? It was the Celtics' 29th straight at home, a streak lasting more than four months, and 75th in their last 76 Garden outings. Boston was 39-2 at home and a mediocre 20-21 on the road this year. Obviously, the more home games, the better for Boston.

"They play great in this building," Hawks Coach Mike Fratello said. "You come out here to try to establish yourself and prove you can win here."

Atlanta couldn't do that because Larry Bird scored 32 points and added 14 assists, while Danny Ainge had 24 points.

"As a young team, you feel like you're on top of the world," Bird said of the upstart Hawks, who finished 57-25, two games worse than the Celtics, "until you get up against the old masters."

The Chicago Bulls get the old masters in the playoffs, beginning Thursday.

Celtics 118, Hawks 107

Boston has been plagued by injuries all year, but it didn't hurt the Celtics at home.

"We worked our way through all our problems this season," Bird said. The Hawks "have young legs, but we've been together a longer time."

Dominique Wilkins led the Hawks with 28 points and Kevin Willis had 21.

76ers 108, Bullets 102

At Landover, Md., Dr. J. made his farewell regular-season appearance and was given a rousing sendoff. Before the game, Erving was named "ambassador of basketball" in a joint House-Senate resolution. Rep. Tom McMillen, D-Md., a former player for the Bullets, presented the framed resolution to Erving and a sellout crowd of 19,411 gave him two 90-second standing ovations.

It was the final stop on a 23-city tour in which every team's fans honored Erving.

"Every city has treated me so warmly that I feel indebted to each because the response has been unparalleled to any other player," Erving said. "I've tried to adhere to the FAT philosophy. Be faithful, available and teachable."

He taught many lessons and gave many thrills, particularly in scoring 38 points Friday night in his final regular-season home game, putting him over the 30,000-point mark for his 16-year professional basketball career.

On Sunday, he brought his total this year to 1,005 points, the 16th

Handicapped Actors To Debut At Kennedy Center

By ROBERT M. ANDREWS
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Before the curtain rises next week at the Kennedy Center's Terrace theater, six young actors will gather backstage in a circle, take a deep breath and "blow out the butterflies" for their professional stage debut.

Then, for the next 70 minutes, they will play their parts in a drama with the sort of verve, polish and easy-going spontaneity that is guaranteed to make audiences quickly forget that each of them suffers a permanent disability.

"Their acting is terrific," says Jeff Church, the 26-year-old playwright. "They're so good that even though the play is fully scripted and rehearsed, we've been accused of improvising the whole thing."

Church's play, "A Child Is Waiting," deals with the relationship between a new teacher and a troubled youth — both are loners — at a school for the developmentally disabled. That is a catchall term, covering such afflictions as Down's syndrome, autism, epilepsy and cerebral palsy, for children once branded as "mentally retarded" in a less enlightened time.

Church says it's not a "soapbox" play pleading the cause of the handicapped, but simply a drama about the human dilemma. If any message is suggested, he says, it's that there aren't any easy answers to finding a place for the handicapped in society.

First performed last June in Denver, in a production by the La Junta Children's Theater that Church founded in southeastern Colorado, "A Child Is Waiting" is an adaptation of an Abby Mann screenplay for a 1962 movie of the same name, starring Judy Garland and Burt Lancaster.

"Imagination Celebration" arts festival for children this year. Excerpts will be presented at a festival gala Tuesday night, with Mann sitting in the audience, and the play will be performed for the rest of the week for thousands of local school children.

The six handicapped actors were selected for their "special spark," says director Deirdre Lavrakas, from more than 40 children who took part in acting workshops that she conducted in local public schools and special education institutes.

The cast of 14, which also includes professional adult actors, began rehearsals in late March. Ms. Lavrakas soon learned that the six disabled youngsters were natural ensemble actors who needed no special coaching.

"They're playing a role, not themselves," she said in an interview. "They're no different from other actors, and I didn't do anything different with them. That would do a disservice to the play, the actors and myself."

The youngsters were quick learners, and some revealed special talents that she picked up and exploited. "My job was to bring out their strengths and make them shine," she said. "Some of them were terrific in mime, so I incorporated some of that in the script."

After a while, the parents of the disabled young actors noticed a marked improvement in their self-esteem. "They were more energized, happier," she said. "They initiated conversations instead of going up to their rooms to listen to the radio."

They blossomed in rehearsals, too. "There's an overwhelming sense of spontaneity that the kids give to an audience," Church said. "They're totally committed," the director agreed. "When they say 'cookies,' for example, they say 'COOKIES.'"

Ms. Lavrakas, a free-lance teacher, director and drama class coordinator for the Kennedy Center's program for children and youth, says her work on the play has been "a very special time" in her career.

"So many people had predicted the cast's disabilities," Church said of the Denver premier. "But when I saw them be able to settle back and celebrate the first performance, it was great to see their ability."

The play is the centerpiece production of the Kennedy Center's annual

Opera Becomes Obsession With Former Rock Musician

By DAVID SPEER
Associated Press Writer
IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — Rob Eckert's roots are in rock 'n' roll, but the aspiring tenor says "Luciano Pavarotti's Greatest Hits" got him all shook up over opera.

The 21-year-old musician said he became obsessed with opera two years ago when listening to the Italian tenor. He quit his job as guitarist in a rock band, learned Italian and studied in Italy for two months.

"It really had a weird effect on me," said Eckert, a sophomore voice student at the University of Iowa. "When I put this tape on, it kind of shook me up."

"It hit him like a thunderbolt," said Beaumont Glass, head of Iowa's Opera Theater, where he is directing Eckert as Don Ottavio in "Don Giovanni." Eckert's enthusiasm for his new love is matched by his talent, Glass said.

"He puts so much love and appreciation into what he does and really is going to have a very fine career," Glass said. "He has what promises to be a first class tenor voice."

Eckert studied violin and piano as a young child. His rock 'n' roll career began in seventh grade, when his parents gave him a guitar.

"I instantly got into rock bands," he said. "When I got to college, I was in a pretty good band."

Eckert's father, Robert, chairs Iowa's voice department. His mother, Doris, teaches voice at Cornell College.

The youth says opera takes most of his energy.

"The other things are things I can do and have fun with," he said. "But opera says, 'if you want to be able to sing me, you better work hard.' Because it's so difficult."

But Eckert confesses that the confines of formal music have led him to resume his old musical interest, writing songs and playing in a rock band.

"Because in rock 'n' roll, there are no rules. You do anything you want. You can sing any way you want."

ROCK TO OPERA — Rob Eckert, a sophomore voice student at the University of Iowa, dropped rock for opera after hearing a friend's tape of Luciano Pavarotti. Eckert is singing the tenor lead in Mozart's "Don Giovanni" this spring at the university and his instructors say he has a promising opera career ahead of him. (AP Laserphoto)

'Alligator' Songwriter Eyes New Fame With French Tune

By CHRIS SEGURA
Associated Press Writer
NEW ORLEANS (AP) — It's later, the alligator has waited and it's been a while for the crocodile.
Songwriter Bobby Charles, who was 14 when he wrote "See You Later Alligator," is attempting a comeback with two new albums. He also has written "On the Champs Elysee," his first song in French, which was once his native language.
"I always wanted to write a French song, but I never knew I could do it until I wrote this one," said the 48-year-old Charles, whose real name is Guidry.
"A French lady from France heard it and she comes to me almost crying. She says she can see the table cloths and smell the wine."
Charles is the descendant of 18th-century refugees from Nova Scotia who were kicked out of Canada because they would not renounce their Gallic cultural allegiance. They, and others from what was then called Arcadia, settled in Louisiana where they became known as Cajuns.

Bobby Charles Guidry was Cajun when Cajun wasn't cool.
So he sliced off his last name in the mid-1950s when he signed as the first white singer for Chess records, which produced black entertainers.
In fact, Chess apparently thought Charles was black because Cajun was so foreign from the American mainstream. Accounts have it that Chess officials were shocked at the smiling, white face grinning back at them from publicity photos mailed from the bayou country.
His hit song, which inspired a new hip lingo for a generation in the '50s, came about one night when the teenage musician was leaving a popular club in Abbeville, La. He turned to say good night to his friends, quipping "See you later, alligator."
An inebriated and forever anonymous woman yelled back, "After a while, crocodile." At that moment, poetry was born.
"I said, 'Thank you very much,' and I went home and wrote the song," Charles recalled.
He similarly cranked out "Walkin' to New Orleans" for Fats Domino when Domino suggested he walk from Abbeville because he was broke. And he spent nearly all of one afternoon to create "I Don't Know Why I Love You But I Do" for a Frogman Henry release.

For Chris Kristofferson he did "Tennessee Blues," but it was the alligator song covered by Bill Haley and the Comets that first sent his words soaring to the top of the charts.
One of Charles' newest tunes is an environmental plea called "Clean Water." The song begs for a cleaner world. Charles lives on the banks of the Vermilion River, which was once one of the 10 most polluted rivers in the United States.
Charles listened to a tape of the song, backed by a chorus of untrained children who were pulled in off the street in front of the Nashville recording studio where the record was made.
He has arranged for European distribution for his two LPs — "The Little Cajun" and "Clean Water." However, he is still negotiating for an American release. Charles said he is more appreciated in Europe than in the United States and is especially popular in Germany.

Friends Remember Shawn As A Genius At Comedy

By BARBARA METZLER
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — The death of Dick Shawn as he told his last joke on stage was a fitting end to the career of the innovative comic actor, a friend said after Shawn's funeral.
"The way he died, and how he died, was the way he would have wanted it," said John Francis, chairman of entertainment for the Friars Club and a producer who often worked with Shawn.
Francis and agent Irvin Arthur co-ordinated the funeral Sunday at Hillside Memorial Park.
Shawn, 63, collapsed Friday about 25 minutes into a routine at the University of California at San Diego, and died of an apparent heart attack at Scripps Memorial Hospital.
The comedian, who played Hitler for laughs in the Mel Brooks film, "The Producers," had just delivered a punch line to a joke when he collapsed.
Shawn was eulogized Sunday by comedians Milton Berle and Tom Bosley during the 40-minute service attended by entertainers Jack Carter, Jackie Vernon, Mel Brooks, Jan Murray, Jackie Gayle, Marty Allen, Carl Reiner, Louis Nye, Jesse White, Danny Thomas, Meryl Streep and June Lockhart, Francis said.
"What they said in essence was that he was a comedy genius, an innovator and a creator, and you never knew when he was through because there was never an ending to anything he did," said Francis.
Mourners gathered at the Friars

Club in Beverly Hills after the funeral.
"We're all just sitting around remembering him," Francis said in a telephone interview from the club.
Shawn's family, including his son, Adam, daughters, Amy, Jennifer and Wendy, and brother Robert Schulfand of New York used bananas to say goodbye to Shawn.
They adorned his coffin with a wreath of roses spiked with bananas as a tribute to Shawn's use of the prop in his one-man show "The (2nd) Greatest Entertainer in the Whole Wide World," Francis said.
Shawn's career included roles in "It's a Mad Mad Mad Mad World," "Wake Me When it's Over," "What Did You Do in the War, Daddy?" and "Love at First Bite."
In an October 1985 interview, Shawn said, "I've always been hard to classify. I don't do mother-in-law or ugly girl jokes. In fact, I hardly tell jokes at all. I just stick to my own point of view instead of fitting into any formula."

Audience members who saw Shawn's collapse Friday reportedly felt it was just part of the act, and help was not enlisted until Shawn's son, sitting in the balcony, called stagehands to check his father.
"Finally, after the doctor starting beating his chest... the reaction of the audience was amazement and shock," said reporter Ken Leighton, who was covering the show for the Times-Advocate of Escondido.

Marathon Men — And Women
 Today, a huge crowd of men and women will take part in the 90-year-old Boston Marathon — the oldest race of its kind in the United States. And while several thousand runners now participate in it, the Boston Marathon used to be a much smaller affair. Until the early 1960s, only 200 to 300 runners competed. Women were not officially allowed to take part in the Boston Marathon until 1972. Organizers now limit the field by imposing stiff qualifying standards on entrants.

DO YOU KNOW — Who won last year's Boston Marathon in the women's division?

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY April 21
GENERAL TENDENCIES: You have very good judgment today for looking into some new activities. Arrange the necessary ideas and methods needed to apply them to modern ideas.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Contact those who are progressive and dynamic and you can become more successful. Be original in your activities.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Contact one who is prominent in the community and who can help you put your talents to work profitably.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Get in touch with a recent acquaintance who can give you good ideas about a project that interests you.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Come to a better understanding with your mate. Some quarrel can be easily patched up.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Public matters can be made to benefit you and gain you more prestige. Concentrate on making revisions in contracts.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Study into various sources for better systems and mechanisms that can make you more successful.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Look into new interests that can bring you relief from your worries of a monetary nature. Keep busy.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): The routine at home has become a rut, so add more zip into it and make life more interesting there.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): If you express yourself differently now you can make your life with others more exciting and meaningful.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Get the advice of a bigwig you need to handle a financial matter wisely. Keep alert for best results.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Make the right contacts so that you can gain your personal wishes easily, thus making the future brighter.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): If you get in touch with an expert you can enhance your monetary affairs. Convince your mate of the benefits.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be one of those interesting young people who will be quite serious from the start. This conventional child will also have an inner desire to appear more modern and will be able to combine the two natures so that a harmonious balance is reached.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠83 ♥KQJ10652 ♦93 ♣72
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♦ Dbl ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—While you have a self-sufficient seven-card suit, your weak doubletons in the other three suits represent the worst distribution you could hold. With a singleton somewhere, we would have suggested a leap to four hearts. Under the circumstances, though, we feel that three hearts is sufficient.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠83 ♥KJ762 ♦954 ♣872
 Partner opens the bidding with two no trump. What do you respond?
 A.—With a reasonable five-card major and a ruffing value, you have a chance for game. Bid three hearts, to give partner a choice between four hearts and three no trump. If he has three-card support, he will raise to game in the suit, and that rates to be a fair contract. If he has only a doubleton heart, he will rebid three no trump, and you will have to pass and pray for some breaks.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠83 ♥954 ♦KJ762 ♣872
 Partner opens the bidding with two no trump. What action do you take?
 A.—Regardless of whether your two no trump range is 21-22 or 22-24, we feel it would be cowardly to pass your hand could produce four tricks. Here, however, an 11-trick minor-suit contract cannot be considered for even a moment, so the raise to three no trump is clear.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠QJ93 ♥952 ♦A8 ♣9874
 Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What action do you take?
 A.—It is true that, because of your ruffing value, you might conceivably make four spades if partner has a maximum no trump and a spade suit. However, if you take into account the possibility he might have a minimum with no spade fit, it is clear there is no need to endanger your plus score by bidding. Pass.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠A105 ♥A98 ♦Q976 ♣AK5
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 NT Pass 3 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Despite the lack of a ruffing value, your prime controls make your hand eminently suitable for a spade contract. We feel that all those aces make your hand a maximum, and we would tell partner of this by bidding four clubs to show a concentration of strength in that suit and a willingness to search for slam if partner so desires.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠J652 ♥83 ♦KJ1052 ♣63
 The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 1 ♥ Dbl Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—When partner makes a takeout double of one major, he guarantees support for the other. Therefore, there is no point in introducing your diamond suit into the auction, even though it is far better than your spades. One spade is the only bid that should enter your mind.

Researcher Urges World Leaders Not To Ignore Population Growth

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — If people turn their backs on the overcrowding of the world, their children and grandchildren will face catastrophic consequences, a population researcher warns.

"We will be poorly thought of by future generations" if this threat is not dealt with, said Werner Fornos, president of the private Population Institute. He said overpopulation threatens to cause severe worldwide problems, including starvation and illness when population outruns resources. Other threats include depletion of forests for firewood, increase in deserts from damaged farmland, creation of environmental hazards ranging from acid rain to atmospheric changes and destruction of habitats for plants and animals, Fornos said.

He issued the warning along with a new study, "A Blueprint for World Population Stabilization," released Sunday to mark the beginning of World Population Awareness Week.

More than a billion new people are expected on Earth in the coming decade, he said at a news conference. "If we don't come to grips with this problem we'll face a world in turmoil."

Fornos' warning comes only days after a separate group, the Population Reference Bureau, reported that worldwide births have begun increasing again, after a brief period of decline.

While birthrates have fallen in the more industrial, wealthier countries, growth continues at a rapid pace in the poorer nations least able to contend with explosive increases, Fornos said.

"This is not a liberal or a conservative cause, it is not a Democratic or a Republican cause, it's a humanitarian cause," he said.

In the history of the world, it took until 1830 for the population to reach 1 billion, Fornos explained. That doubled to 2 billion in the following century, by 1930. The third billion was added in 30 years, by 1960, and the 4 billion mark was reached in 1975. Now the total is 5 billion and the next billion could arrive in nine years, he warned, with the world's population growing to 6.2 billion by the year 2000.

Just last year, the world's population grew by 87 million, Fornos said.

That is equivalent to adding 16 countries the size of El Salvador, explained the president of the private, non-profit population research group. But, Fornos added, this "silent explosion" is also one of the few crises of our time that people can do something about.

He called on the United States and other developed nations to immediately increase population planning assistance to developing nations.

The United States should raise its population aid from the current $200 million to $750 million over the next three years, and other nations should follow that example, he said.

In recent years the U.S. has cut off assistance to the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, contending that those groups aided Chinese programs that coerced people into abortions.

That action probably increased abortions around the world, Fornos contended, since the cutoff affected all countries where the agencies helped programs designed to prevent pregnancy, not just the Chinese family planning program.

He called for a restoration of U.S. aid to those agencies, an increase in other population assistance, and a greater effort to develop improved contraceptives. Long-term implants to prevent pregnancy without a daily pill present a good possibility, Fornos said, as well as other injectable contraceptives and even "morning after" contraceptives.

"We need rational and humane policies" to help prevent explosive population growth, Fornos said. Without such efforts nature will take a hand in preventing overpopulation, and when that happens the result is never kind.

Currently the world's infant deaths total 42,000 a day, and 1,400 mothers die in childbirth every day, he said, often simply because they lacked the knowledge to prevent an unwanted pregnancy.

While pro-life advocates complain about reports of coercion in some national population programs, they must remember that "mandatory pregnancy" is also a violation of human rights," said Fornos.

"We can't afford to wait to help these people until our budget is balanced," Fornos commented. He quoted former president Lyndon B. Johnson as estimating that each 5 cents spent on family planning saves a dollar in later disaster aid.

Not all is bad news, Fornos added. Some developing nations have launched very effective family planning campaigns, including Mexico and Zimbabwe, he said.

But the population problem persists, he said, and is particularly severe in 20 nations, some of which are working to limit growth while others are not yet doing so.

Those facing serious growth by the end of this century include Bangladesh, Brazil, Burma, China, Egypt, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, South Korea, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Tanzania, Thailand, Turkey, Vietnam and Zaire.

Services, Marches Mark Easter Around The World

By The Associated Press
 People around the world celebrated Easter with religious services and political protests as tens of thousands gathered for Masses in Rome and Jerusalem and demonstrators rallied in Northern Ireland and West Germany.

"Love is more powerful than death," Pope John Paul II declared Sunday in an Easter Mass for about 150,000 people in Vatican City.

In Jerusalem, where Christians believe Jesus rose from the dead, officials said about 70,000 visitors came for Holy Week, up from 50,000 last year, when fear of terrorism in the Middle East kept many away.

"They (the Easter services) are full of magnificence and splendor to show our love for Christ, the risen Christ," said Rayfield Bonanno, a Franciscan brother from Boston who has lived in Israel for seven years.

In Northern Ireland, several thousand Roman Catholics marched in Belfast and Londonderry to defy new public order laws to commemorate the 1916 Easter Rising against British rule.

West German anti-nuclear demonstrators held peaceful rallies at the U.S. military bases at Mutlangen and Hasselbach to protest against missiles.

There were no reports of disturbances in Jerusalem. At the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, more than 2,000 pilgrims attended Mass, crowding around a 30-foot-high shrine where Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox Christians believe Christ was buried and rose from the dead.

Just outside the Old City, Protestants attended outdoor services at the Garden Tomb, which Protestants believe is the site of Christ's resurrection.

None of the pilgrims seemed particularly concerned about a possible terrorist attack.

"God will protect me," said an elderly woman from Pittsfield, Mass., who did not want to give her name. In Vatican City, the pope, recovering from a cold, wished peace to the world in 51 languages after his sermon in St. Peter's Square.

"The death of Christ is a new beginning. The beginning of life which has no end," the pope said in Italian in his Easter message.

John Paul prayed that God may "grant that the man of the technological age may not reduce himself to a mere object, but may respect, from its very beginning, the unrenounceable dignity that is proper to him."

In Britain, Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie offered an Easter prayer at Canterbury Cathedral for prisoners of conscience and remembered hostage negotiator Terry Waite.

Waite, Runcie's special envoy, disappeared Jan. 20 in Beirut, Lebanon, while trying to negotiate the release of Western hostages.

In Beijing, about 2,500 people wearing dark Mao-style jackets or bright Western dresses attended an Easter Mass at the Cathedral of Our Savior. The Chinese Catholic church is not affiliated with the Vatican.

The official Xinhua News Agency said thousands of Catholics packed Catholic churches in other cities.

China banned religion during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, but now guarantees freedom of worship for state-sanctioned religious groups.

In the Soviet Union, where religious worship is constitutionally guaranteed but highly discouraged, believers attended midnight Easter

Mass late Saturday and early Sunday.

Most of the crowds packing the churches consisted of old people who had to cross police lines and metal barriers to gain entry to the services.

Many of those who did not attend services went to cemeteries to care for graves and leave behind offerings of candy, colored eggs and flowers in what has become an Easter tradition for non-believers.

"It was a religious holiday before. But now it's just a custom of paying respects to the dead," said an elderly man sprucing up a grave at Vagonkovskoye Cemetery in Moscow.

In the Netherlands, a gay rights group had planned to go to the altar in Den Bosch for communion to force a personal confrontation with Roman Catholic Bishop Johannes ter Schure, who has said homosexuals should be denied the sacrament.

Instead, altar boys distributed the host to all worshippers at their pews in what the church explained was a move to better accommodate a capacity audience.

Greek television showed Premier Andreas Papandreu cracking red Easter eggs on the Aegean island of Mytilene with troops whose mission is to defend Greece against its NATO ally Turkey. The island is five miles off Turkey's Aegean coast.

Calling last month's near-clash with Turkey over Aegean seabed oil rights "one of the government's most difficult moments," the premier said that Greece still was braced for possible military action.

The Last Thing This Man Is Going To Do Is Sell You A Birdhouse.

He's a Perdue housing representative. And he's as concerned about your operation as you are. He's not going to waltz in and give you a lot of fast talk or high pressure. The first thing he's going to do is answer your questions, clearly and simply, without a runaround. Answers about cost, cash flow, building specifications, service contracts, legal work, financing alternatives, construction time, and almost anything else connected with a poultry operation. Then he'll help you go over your operation to see what poultry could realistically add. He'll review the growing opportunities Perdue has to offer and outline all your options. He'll make sure you have all the answers and all the facts, then let you decide if you want to talk about investing in a Perdue House.

This man has the know-how you need when you need to know about poultry. Call him, day or night, and get some answers.

Vietnam Chief Said Looking At Retirement

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — President Truong Chinh of Vietnam has indicated he will step down when the newly-elected National Assembly convenes in June, the official Vietnam News Agency said today.

Vietnam's official radio, the Voice of Vietnam, reported Sunday that Prime Minister Pham Van Dong also plans to retire then.

Chinh, 79, and Dong, 80, were among founders of the Indochinese Communist Party in 1930. Their retirements would leave Deputy Premier Pham Hung as the only party co-founder left in the nation's leadership.

The two leaders indicated their retirement plans during Sunday's elections for a 496-seat National Assembly, in which neither was a candidate.

Vietnamese media, monitored in Bangkok, reported a high turnout in the polling but gave no results. A total of 829 candidates were running for five-year terms. All candidates had to be approved by the government.

The Vietnam News Agency, monitored in Bangkok, said a foreign correspondent asked Chinh about his failure to run in the election.

The agency said Chinh replied that he, Dong and Tho would continue to serve the country as advisors to the party Central Committee and added: "We are confident in our country's future and in our younger generations who have shown their energy and talent in shouldering heavy tasks of the country and discharging the noble missions laid down by the Sixth Party Congress."

On Sunday, the Voice of Vietnam quoted Dong, in office since 1954 and the only premier Communist Vietnam has ever had, as saying: "I've been in this post too long. The National Assembly will appoint a worthy person to hold this post."

Japan's Kyodo news agency, reporting from Hanoi, said earlier this month that Deputy Premier Vo Nguyen Giap, a war hero in the struggles against the French and the Americans, also might retire during the new assembly session.

It was not clear who would replace the three leaders. However, top government posts usually go to high-ranking party officials. The party Politburo is headed by Linh, Pham Hung and Vo Chi Cong, who all have been identified as advocates of economic reform.

The retirement of Chinh and Dong from government has been widely expected since they and key power-broker Le Duc Tho turned over their top party posts at the Sixth National Party Congress last December to slightly younger officials identified with economic reforms.

Chinh served as Communist Party chief after former party leader Le Duan died last July. He was replaced in that post by economic reform leader Nguyen Van Linh at the party congress.

Earn Good Money Raising Thoroughbreds

Consumers know a well-bred bird when they see one. That's why Perdue's bigger, meatier, better chicken is Number One. The brisk demand means we need more breeder houses. Which is where you come in.

As a Perdue breeder producer, you're where the whole success story begins. You're the manager of a year-round business. You earn good money, because Perdue pays you weekly for the eggs you produce. For the land it occupies, a Perdue breeder house is one of the best farm investments around. And land may be all you need to get started.

So mail in the coupon, or call us. A Perdue representative will give you all the details of breeding the chickens that are hatched to win.

I'd like to know more about starting my own Perdue breeder operation.
