Garner Apologizes For Watermelon Remarks

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer
Greenville Mayor Les Garner apologized today for a remark made during an April 9 City Council meeting that drew charges of racial belittling.

After presenting plaques to three black employees of the Public Works Department at the April 9 meeting recognizing their efforts in the successful rescue of a little girl who fell in a pond, Garner said to the men and their wives as they were leaving:

"Why don't you stick around. We may cut a watermelon later, or eat some ice cream."

Garner said today people who took exception to the statement misinterpreted what he was trying to say.

"I made a mistake. I was not making any slur remarks," Garner said at a news conference at City Hall today. "I'm proud of these men. They are Greenville heroes."

Garner said he has used the statement on numerous occasions with members of all races as a social amenity.

"My dad long ago in the 1920s was a sharecropper, and I lived on a farm," he said. "Black people lived next door to us. They ate dinner at our house. We grew up together."

"At the meeting, I made a statement I have used many times. In fact, I learned it from my dad. I apologize if I hurt any feelings in any way. I apologize to the men, their families, and to blacks for saying anything derogatory to their feelings."

Garner, who also announced plans to seek re-election in November, said he regretted the statement almost immediately.

"I realized I made a mistake as soon as I made the statement. I didn't say it because they were black," he said. "I realized from the reaction of the audience that I had made a mistake. I say that (remark) to white people."

The apology comes a day after a letter from Judith L. Kornegay of Greenville chastising the mayor appeared in the Public Forum section of Wednesday's edition of The Daily Reflector.

"It is appalling that the mayor of Greenville continues to make public statements that should embarrass us all," the letter said. "The latest example of Mr. Garner's foul quips is a highly inflammatory remark that he made at the April 9th City Council meeting."

"No apologies were offered. And none would be sufficient. Three heroes have been publically demeaned by the mayor of Greenville."

Meanwhile, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference called for the resignation of Mayor Garner in response to the remark, according to SCLC President Bennie Rountree. "We accept the apology but are asking for his resignation because of the statement, a racial slur concerning eating a watermelon, that he made to

Social Services Budget Accepted

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer
The Pitt County Board of Social Services approved a total budget of $32,573,035 for the county Department of Social Services at a meeting Wednesday.

Board members Jo Ball, Randy Horton and Sam Carson approved the budget prepared by the staff with no revisions.

The budget will be presented to Pitt County Manager Kramer Jackson and will then be reviewed by the Pitt County Board of Commissioners. The budget may be amended by Jackson and the commissioners before final approval.

The fiscal year begins in July. State and federal appropriations for DSS programs will be added to the budget as the funds are approved.

The 1987-1988 fiscal year budget shows an increase of $2,457,032.

The budget requests additional county appropriations of $361,420 over the department's county appropriations for this fiscal year. Of that increase, $200,000 of the funds are for mandated public assistance programs the department is legally responsible for providing.

"I am very pleased that the board could approve the budget and I am looking forward to going through the remaining process of submitting it to the county manager and the commissioners making a decision on it," DSS Director Edward Garrison said. "I feel upbeat about the department and what we're trying to do. I hope the commissioners and the people of the county will feel the same way."

The budget item with the largest increase, according to Garrison, is for Medicaid programs. A total of $17,020,373 has been set aside in the budget for the medical assistance program.

Garrison noted that most of the operational revenue of Pitt County Memorial Hospital is collected through the Medicaid and Medicare programs. "Pitt County Memorial Hospital will receive almost $15 million from the programs this fiscal year," the director said. "That is almost the whole Medicaid budget."

The supplemental budget is requesting an additional $72,120 in county money for additional programs and five new staff members.

Rose High Students Will Compete In Dallas In Academic Decathlon

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer
Skilled students from J.H. Rose High School will journey to Texas Friday to compete in a national decathlon with high school students from throughout the United States and Canada.

However, instead of putting a shot, throwing a discus, vaulting a pole or sprinting around a track, the students will show their academic strengths in 10 competitive events.

The 11 Rose students are participating in the national finals of the U.S. Academic Decathlon in Irving, Texas, near Dallas, this weekend. They will return to Greenville Tuesday.

The written competition will include questions about such topics as economics, mathematics, science, fine arts, social science and language and literature. The team members also must each give a planned speech and an impromptu speech, be interviewed and write an essay.

The teams also compete in an oral competition called the Super Quiz. This year's topic is the U.S. Constitution.

The Rose team took first place in the state competition held in February in Thomasville to qualify for the national competition. They won seven of 10 areas including the Super Quiz.

Each academic decathlon team is composed of six full-time students — two A students, two B students and two C students — in the 11th-grade or 12th grade at the same school. Every team member competes in all 10 areas, so the students must be well versed in all of the subjects in the competition.

Members of the Rose High team are Lara Perry, Eugene Lao, Shay Daniels, Lynn Worley, Stephanie Hewett and Melissa Monroe. Alternates are James Bloyd, Elizabeth Warren, Justen Hix, Jay Carawan and Bill Carroll.

"It is a team effort," said Billie Lennon, a Rose High teacher who is coach for the team. "There is so much stress today on academics in school. Now students are competing against each other for rank to get in college."

"The academic decathlon competition is a cooperative effort," the coach added. "It is the whole team score, the total points earned by the team, that counts in who wins the competition."

"The competition took 11 people and pulled them together as a team," said team member Justen Hix.

The Academic Decathlon is the brainchild of Dr. Robert Peterson, superintendent of schools in Orange County, Calif. It began as a local competition in 1968 and blossomed into a national event in 1982. The event is held in association with World Book Encyclopedia.

The teams compete on the local level, the state level, and if they are successful in fending off the competition, on the national level. Last year, a total of 3,000 teams participated in the competition.

"This is the second year Rose has participated in the competition," Mrs. Lennon said. Rose High Principal Pat "Austin helped involve us last year."

The team was responsible for pay-

Boesky Pleads Guilty

NEW YORK (AP) — Ivan F. Boesky, a key figure in Wall Street's insider trading scandal, pleaded guilty today to one count of violating federal securities laws.

He faces a penalty of up to five years in prison and up to a $250,000 fine.

The 50-year-old financier, looking subdued and exhausted, entered his plea in U.S. District Court in Manhattan before Judge Morris E. Lasker, who scheduled sentencing for Aug. 21.

Boesky was released on his own recognizance.

Nearly 200 people packed the courtroom for the pleading by Boesky, once one of the nation's richest and most admired stock speculators whose career was shattered by the multimillion-dollar insider trading scandal.

It was the first court appearance for Boesky since he agreed six months ago to cooperate with federal investigators in implicating others in the snowballing scandal, which deeply embarrassed Wall Street and led to congressional demands for reform in the securities industry.

Boesky agreed in November to pay the Securities and Exchange Commission an unprecedented $100 million penalty to settle its charges that he illegally used non-public information to profit from securities trades. He also agreed to plead guilty to the previously unspecified criminal charge.

Boesky also has been banished from the securities business for life and faces at least six civil lawsuits from investors who claim they lost money because of his alleged insider trading activities.

Insider trading cases involve the sale or purchase of securities on the basis of confidential information, such as advance word on mergers or takeovers. Because people with such information have an unfair advantage over other stock speculators, it

Tar Expected To Crest Today

Related Photos On A-2

Although the Tar River continued to rise early today, local emergency coordinators said they expected the water level to peak in the afternoon, leaving only a handful of residents inconvenienced.

"We think it's beginning to crest at its present height," Bobby Joyner, Pitt County's emergency management coordinator, said. "They (the National Weather Service) were predicting we would crest today."

A spokesman at the Greenville Utility Commission water plant said the river had reached 19.1 feet elevation at 10 a.m.

Shady Knoll Trailer Park and areas of River Road in Greenville experienced some flooding, according to Joyner.

Meanwhile, Tom Tysinger, who is serving as Greenville emergency coordinator, said the river had risen seven-tenths of a foot since Wednesday.

"It's still going up," Tysinger said. "I checked the (Greene Street) bridge this morning at 8 a.m. and it was 16.24 feet above the mean sea level."

If National Weather Service predictions are correct, the river could rise an additional five inches, according to Tysinger, who said some residences could receive water damage.

"There are some apartment complexes in the Tar River area that will be on the borderline of getting their floors wet," said Tysinger, the city's director of engineering and inspections. "It's not a life-threatening situation. It'll either reach the floors or backyards."

In The Area

Wednesday Thefts

Police said three thefts were reported to the Greenville department Wednesday.

Officer M.R. Benton said a can of beer was taken from the Dodge Store on Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 2:56 a.m., while Officer R.J. Brewington said a riding lawn mower was taken from 104 College Court Drive in an incident reported at 7:50 a.m.

According to Officer B.W. Lewis, 24 cans of beer were taken from the Fuel Dock at 500 S. Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 10:43 p.m.

Robbery Probed

A robbery involving the theft of a purse from a woman was reported to Greenville police early Wednesday.

Officer C.J. Melvin said a woman reported that after she entered her car — parked at the Fast Fare on Hooker Road — a man opened the passenger-side door, hit her several times in her face, then grabbed her purse and left.

Melvin, who said the incident occurred about 12:46 a.m., said the purse contained $20 worth of U.S. postage stamps, several credit cards and a checkbook.

Possession Charge

James Earl Spellman, 26, of 404 Roundtree Drive was arrested by Greenville officers early this morning on a charge of possession of drug paraphernalia about 1:30 a.m.

Officer J.A. Felton said Spellman was taken into custody at the intersection of Fifth and Tyson streets on a charge of possession of drug paraphernalia about 1:30 a.m. Felton said Spellman was also charged with being intoxicated and disruptive.

Two hypodermic needles and two syringes were confiscated at the time Spellman was taken into custody, Felton said.

Break-In Arrest

Greenville police arrested Jimmy Riley Heath Jr., 22, of B-28 Glendale Court on breaking, entering and larceny charges early today.

Officer C.A. Elks said Heath was charged in connection with a 2:10 a.m. incident at Susie's Tree House Restaurant on Fifth Street at the Cotanche Street intersection.

Falwell Discloses Finances

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — Of the $84.1 million taken in last year by the Rev. Jerry Falwell's ministries, more than $27.6 million was spent on salaries and benefits, according to the ministries' combined financial statement.

The ministries, which include Thomas Road Baptist Church, Liberty University, Liberty Godparent Home and the Old-Time Gospel Hour, spent $82.5 million for the year ending June 30, 1986, including more than $14.5 million on radio and television time, the statement showed.

Contributions to the Gospel Hour have dropped from a peak of $53.6 million in 1983 to $44.3 million in 1986 and an expert on television evangelist attributed the decline in part to Falwell's declining television audience.

Jeffrey Hadden, a professor of sociology at the University of Virginia, said he does not know why Falwell's television audience is declining.

"I don't know whether it is that he had neglected duties at home or whether he's saturated his particular market, or whether there is a share of his audience who doesn't really approve of his involvement in politics," Hadden said.

Falwell, who until recently refused to release copies of his 1986 financial statement, said he was going to be more open because of the turmoil and distrust caused by the departure of evangelist Jim Bakker from the PTL ministry.

Bakker, who admitted to a 1980 sexual encounter with a church secretary, turned the PTL over to Falwell last month. Falwell has promised to disclose information on PTL's executive salaries and the results of an internal investigation regarding Bakker's resignation.

Falwell's financial statement shows his combined ministries took in $50.8 million in gifts, offerings and bequests. Of that amount, the Old-Time Gospel Hour brought in $44.3 million and $28 million came from the tuition and fees of students at Liberty University and Lynchburg Christian Academy.

The statement showed the ministry contributed more than $6.5 million in scholarships and the Gospel Hour contributed more than $9 million to the schools.

Falwell's ministry said it has $91.5 million in assets, including $81.3 million in property, buildings and equipment. It owes more than $41.9 million on mortgages, notes and other debts.

The balance statement lists $12.1 million in accounts payable and accrued liabilities.

Norma Rae Joins Rally

DALLAS (AP) — The woman whose struggle to organize workers at a North Carolina textile mill inspired the movie "Norma Rae" rallied with American Airlines flight attendants who want an end to a two-tiered wage plan.

"I've seen enough people throw up their hands in despair," said Crystal Lee Sutton, whose efforts in the 1970s to organize a J.P. Stevens plant were portrayed by actress Sally Field. "I think it's time to throw up our hands and say as working people we've had enough."

"Textile workers and airline workers have a common end. ... An injury to one is an injury to all."

Between 200 and 300 people gathered Wednesday at the Dallas Civic Center to protest the wage plan American imposed after the flight attendants' contract expired in December.

Twenty union members were fired in March after handing out leaflets at the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport denouncing the way newly hired attendants make less than attendants who have been with the company since before November 1983, said officials of the Association of Professional Flight Attendants.

New flight attendants earn as little as $972 a month, but most make $13,600 a year, said airline spokesman Al Becker.

Taiwanese Seeking Textile Investment

CHARLOTTE (AP) — In a new twist to the textile-import battle, a Taiwanese textile company wants to invest in a factory in the heart of enemy territory: North Carolina or South Carolina.

Top executives of Taiyuen Textile Co. of Taiwan will visit textile manufacturers in the two states next week, said Jim Hinkle, director of the North Carolina Commerce Department's international division. He declined to name the companies.

Hinkle said Wednesday that the Taiwan company is looking for a joint venture partner or to invest in an existing or new plant in North Carolina or South Carolina. The company plans an investment of $20 million in a plant to produce yarn and cloth, a spokesman for the Taiwanese government said.

"I would be very surprised if they did find a lot of willing partners," said Dennis Julian, executive vice president of the North Carolina Textile Manufacturers Association.

"I think they're going to find resistance and people who would view them not as partners, but as people who have taken advantage of us," Julian said.

Taiwan, the largest exporter of clothing and textiles to the United States last year, has been a target of frequent criticism from the import-battered textile industry. Textile officials contend that Taiwan unfairly has flooded the U.S. market with low-cost imports that have cost many American jobs.

ing its way to the competition in Dallas. The money, over $3,000, was raised through the Rose High Academic Boosters Club and from community donations.

"Everyone is excited about going to Dallas," Lynn Worley said. "We worked hard, but we didn't expect to win" the state competition.

The six team members, along with five alternates, have been training for the contest throughout the school year.

A study guide for the competition lists the topics of which the students must have general knowledge, but not the specific questions which will be on the test.

Therefore the high school students must have general and specific knowledge of such varied subjects as international trade and microeconomics, differential calculus, astronomy and the Catholic Reformation. The students must be familiar with Donatello, Bramante, Cervantes and Titian and many other Renaissance artists, composers and writers. They must be adept at identifying music terms such as texture and color and art terms such as harmony and voice. Most high school students are not exposed to this type of material in the classroom.

"They have to have such diverse knowledge beyond the normal curriculum," Mrs. Lennon said.

"Everyone on the team knew that we had to be ready" for the competition, said Elizabeth Warren. "You had to do it out of class and take the responsibility" to be prepared.

The students have been working in an independent study class and after school to prepare presentations on topics included in the competition. The students present their research to the other team members to familiarize them with items on which they all will be tested.

"Other Rose High faculty members and East Carolina University people have assisted," Mrs. Lennon said. "It has been an effort by the entire community."

Rose High teachers helping with the training sessions were Barbara Mallory, Linda Shaw, Nancy Wynne, Leslie Brinson, Judy Carowan and Judy Coulter. ECU professors assisting were Dr. Ed Seykora, Dr. James Hix and Dr. Umesh Gulati.

"The experience of competition with the decathlon has been good for everyone involved," team member Lara Perry said. "We have been exposed to areas we wouldn't have known about before, like astronomy. I had had no exposure to that before, and now I would like to take it in college."

"The interview competition has a lot of practical use," said Eugene Lao. "Since I am going to need to interview for different things soon, it is a good experience."

"The competition has helped build by self-confidence," team member Shay Daniels said. "Now I'm not so worried about doing well in school."

"If I could do it again, I would," she added. "It is hard work, but it will help me later in college."

"The competition has taught me responsibility and that will help me in later life," James Bloyd said. "Being with everybody on the team has a family has helped, too. The sharing of knowledge and having someone your age helping you learn was nice."

Physicists Urge Cautious Approach To 'Star Wars'

WASHINGTON (AP) — "A decade or more" of research is needed to determine whether lasers or other high energy devices can work in a "Star Wars" anti-missile defense, so deployment plans shouldn't be accelerated, a group of leading American physicists says.

Going too fast "would freeze the technology at levels inadequate for its ultimate goals and absorb resources that could otherwise be used for research on more promising approaches," said the 422-page study issued Wednesday by the American Physical Society.

The Pentagon called the study outdated, subjective and too pessimistic.

The power and quality of even the most promising weapons needs to be improved at least 100 times before they could be used in an anti-missile defense system, said the report.

"Even in the best of circumstances, a decade or more of intensive research would be required just to provide the technical knowledge needed for an informed decision about the potential effectiveness and survivability" of lasers and other "directed energy weapons," the report said.

The report appeared to undercut recent statements by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and other administration officials pushing for a decision soon to deploy the fruits of Star Wars research by the early 1990s, rather than the mid-1990s, as announced previously.

The Pentagon office running Star Wars, the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization, questioned the report, saying that recent breakthroughs have brought some of the lasers, especially the free-electron laser, closer to the weapons stage.

"We find the conclusions to be subjective and unduly pessimistic about our capability to bring to fruition the specific technologies needed for a full-scale development decision in the 1990s," said Lt. Col. Terry Monrad, an SDIO spokesman.

"The report was a snapshot in time that dates to the preparation of the report. We have made significant progress in the intervening period," said Monrad, reading a prepared statement.

The physicists' report also said that even if the directed energy weapons under research are inadequate for anti-missile defense, they could be very effective against satellites such as those needed for a space-based Star Wars system.

The study did not address arms control or strategic aspects of Star Wars, nor did it examine the feasibility of an early deployment of weapons designed to collide with enemy missiles and warheads.

Former Defense Secretary Harold Brown, a physicist, has written that although collision devices could be deployed sooner, they would provide a far less effective defense than lasers and other high energy weapons which appear to be decades away from becoming weapons.

The APS report found that "although significant progress has been made in many technologies of (directed energy weapons) over the last two decades, the study group finds significant gaps in the scientific and engineering understanding of many issues associated with the development of these technologies."

Garner Apologizes

The three black men who saved the life of a child," Rountree said today.

"Greenville has made too much progress for its top official to make a racially motivated remark of that type. He is not serving the needs of the people here," he said.

According to Rountree, the SCLC felt the statement damaged the public's concept of the city. "If a person makes those types of jokes, it causes too much of a setback to the city's image, the leaders, its forefathers," he said. "We don't need that kind of backward movement."

The three city employees, Curtis Moore, Bennie Corbitt and John Best, and Council member Ed Carter, who is also black, attended the news conference along with Garner.

Carter said he believed the mayor was trying to be funny, but made a mistake in judgment.

"I was at the meeting, and I know Mayor Garner. He always tries to be a little humorous," Carter said. "He made a statement and, unfortunately, he didn't think about it. We're all going to make mistakes, and the mayor is no exception."

is illegal for them to use it in securities deals.

The son of a Detroit delicatessen owner, Boesky was considered one of Wall Street's most gregarious and powerful personalities, whose entities controlled more than $1 billion in securities. Last year Forbes magazine ranked him as among the 400 wealthiest Americans, with an estimated fortune of $200 million.

Federal investigators were led to Boesky by former Wall Street merger specialist Dennis B. Levine, who was charged in a separate insider trading case nearly one year ago. Levine was sentenced Feb. 20 to two years in prison and fined $362,000.

Boesky, in turn, provided information leading to charges against Boyd L. Jefferies, founder of a major stock trading house in Los Angeles that bears his name; Michael Davidoff, formerly Boesky's head trader; and Martin Siegel, a former senior investment banker at Kidder, Peabody & Co.

Siegel's cooperation led to the arrests and indictments of three other top Wall Street professionals accused of insider trading: Robert M. Freeman, partner and head of arbitrage at Goldman, Sachs & Co.; Richard B. Wigton, former arbitrage head at Kidder Peabody; and Timothy L. Tabor, also formerly of Kidder Peabody.

Last Thursday, Jefferies pleaded guilty in Manhattan federal court to two securities law violations, and Freeman, Wigton and Tabor all pleaded innocent to four felony counts each.

U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani, a central prosecutor in the Wall Street scandals, on Wednesday urged Congress to double the penalty for insider trading and impose a mandatory jail sentence on brokers who lie to investigators.

Giuliani told the Senate Banking Committee that most of those accused in the scandals analyzed their risk of jail and found it trifling in comparison with the millions in illicit profits they could make.

Preparedness

The waters of the Tar reached flood stage this week and observers were looking for a 19 foot flood crest on Thursday.

Fortunately here there is adequate flood plain so that the high waters don't affect much property. Still when the Tar reaches that stage there are some residences and buildings which are flooded and action is needed to provide for people and protect property.

Again we are fortunate that there is public concern and machinery in place to handle such emergencies.

Tuesday Greenville Acting City Manager Mayo Allen met with 10 city departments to review emergency management plan responsibilities.

Bobby Joyner, coordinator of Pitt County emergency services, was observing the situation with plans to open shelters for any families who might have to leave their homes.

The flooding river was not expected to cause major problems but planning was done to handle emergency situations and that is as it should be.

There have been natural disasters — tornados and hurricanes — when all the public resources that could be mustered were needed to handle the situation. We need for the system to work when it is essential and the flood preparation is a good test.

It should also be mentioned that, even though the Tar becomes a raging torrent of flood waters at such a high level, it affects little property simply because most of its flood plain at Greenville has been kept free of development. The flood plain should continue to be kept free from construction. It is a natural area in which the water can rise and fall, and it is also a perfect green belt for Greenville.

We can thank past generations for leaving the area undeveloped, probably because there was inexpensive land available elsewhere. Future generations will thank us for preserving the Tar flood plain because it was the right thing to do.

Soviet Connection

A North Carolina firm involved in a major industrial development project with the Soviet Union? It's shaping up that way.

Osmon Soyer, president of Sterling Manufactured Homes in Albemarle will be the first U.S. manufacturer in that field to display its product in Moscow during an international construction fair that begins in May.

Americans are so accustomed to the mobile home as being part of the landscape it is not easy to visualize a modern society in which they have no role. For reasons yet unclear the Soviet Union never did get into the mobile home scene and only now is taking steps in that direction. That country's housing shortage has been a long-term problem but only now is it doing something about it.

Somebody familiar with the manufactured housing concept apparently convinced others it may be the answer to the longstanding problem; and once the idea caught on, it inspired action.

A $35,000 three-bedroom (two-bath), 900-square-foot manufactured home will be shipped to Moscow for the exhibit. The manufacturer says the model, with all the amenities and a few of the luxury items could be built in the USSR for about $15,000. Quite a bargain compared with the one-bedroom home in Russia which sells for about $25,000 with few of the U.S. features, Soyer said.

The host government is apparently so confident of the exhibit's popular reception at the construction fair that the N.C. firm has already been asked to discuss building a plant in Siberia. If an agreement is reached, the Albemarle business expects to be involved in building a factory there by the spring of 1988.

Discussions began in 1986, a display in Moscow in 1987 and looking to possibility of building a factory by spring 1988.

That is really moving.

If the venture goes as anticipated, Mr. Soyer might write a new textbook for other businesses on what to expect when involved in dealings with Moscow today. The old book might well be discarded.

Presidential Campaign Slams Japanese

WASHINGTON (AP) — Japanese officials who come to the United States in an effort to defuse tensions over trade ought to spend some of their time on the presidential campaign trail.

Let them spend a few days listening to the applause lines delivered by the politicians who hope to succeed President Reagan.

"I don't want to compete," Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., told a cheering union audience. "I want to win — just flat out win. The Japanese and the Europeans are trying to beat our brains out."

In the political business, that is what is called red meat, the stuff that brings audiences to their feet, gets their blood flowing a little faster.

The people who are aroused by rhetoric like that aren't worried about abstractions like "protectionism" or the threat of a trans-Pacific trade war. They are worried about their jobs and not even the most ardent free-traders among politicians are prepared to ignore their concerns.

Reagan still talks of free trade. When he slapped 100 percent tariffs on $300 million worth of Japanese products imported by the United States, the president said he was acting "to enforce the principles of free and fair trade."

It was not a move likely to shift significantly the trade balance which now stands $58.6 billion in favor of Japan.

Former Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe met with the president Tuesday in an effort to soothe the situation in advance of next week's visit by Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone.

Throughout his presidency, Reagan has taken a free market approach to trade, condemning what he calls protectionism, arguing sanctions would only touch off a trade war. But the time came when Reagan had to act.

When the 1984 campaign was heating up four years ago, Walter F. Mondale tried unsuccessfully to make trade an issue by pointing out that the U.S. trade deficit in 1983 was $70 billion, the highest in history.

The U.S. trade deficit for 1986 dwarfed that record as it hit $170 billion. The imbalance in dealings between the United States and Japan alone is fast approaching the figure Mondale condemned when it was the entire U.S. trade deficit.

Those numbers and the history of the trade relationship between the two countries make it a lot harder to be a free-trader.

"It seems unlikely to us that we will be able to make a change in the sanctions before the prime minister's visit," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said after Abe's meeting with Reagan.

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas, who is getting ready to enter the 1988 presidential race, said he agreed with the administration approach, but, he added, "It comes a little late."

Dole has been out in the country trying to win support among people who feel threatened by the trade deficit.

"I think this has been brewing ... for two or three years," he said.

The sanctions imposed by Reagan were intended to send a message to the Japanese but also to head off tougher steps by Congress — namely legislation pushed by another presidential contender, Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo.

Gephardt wants to force the government to retaliate against countries that run up excessive trade surpluses with the United States through unfair competitive practices.

The Missouri congressman's get-tough approach has strong support among unions. But there are free-traders among the Democrats who think it is a bad idea.

Foremost among them is Gary Hart, the former Colorado senator.

Hart warned against dark horse candidates being willing to "sell your soul for support on one issue. ... You'll get people who are concerned about protectionism, but what about everybody else?"

Gephardt shot back that he didn't know what Hart's trade policy was and added that "sometimes some of my friends need a backbone transplant."

Blame An Unmade Bed

Time magazine devoted a recent cover to the breakdown of service in the United States. Nobody seems to be able to get anyone to help them anymore.

"There is a simple reason for this," Frankie Melnick told me as we stood in line at the airport watching an airline attendant take 32 minutes to prepare one luggage tag.

"What is that?"

"All the trouble started a generation ago when the youth of America were permitted to grow up without making their beds."

"Why did we allow it?"

Melnick said, "It had to do with the wars. Men went off to fight and when they were asked what they were fighting for they couldn't think of anything so they said, 'I am fighting so my children will never have to clean up their rooms again. Our kids are going to become doctors and lawyers and investment bankers, and paid-up members of the Democratic and Republican parties, and they are not going to be distracted by household chores.'"

"I recall saying the same thing to my kids," I said as we inched slowly toward the ticket counter. "I remember years ago holding one of my children in my arms and saying to him, 'I will see to it that you will never have to stoop over for your clothes as long as you live. I kept that vow — or let's say my son kept it for me. Whenever his mother or I yelled at him he replied, 'If I have to think about my room I won't have time to think about the human condition.'"

"We did it because we thought we loved them," said Melnick. "The message we sent out was 'When you lie down in your bed, there is always a dear person in your life who will make it up for you. This is not because that person necessarily loves you, but she can't stand walking by every day looking at your room.'"

"So you think," I asked, "that service has broken down in the United States since we let the kids have a free ride in their bedrooms?"

Melnick said, "You could make a case for it. The non-bed-makers are screwing up the entire government because they never used a laundry hamper. The retail business is filled with people who spent their childhood dumping their pants and skirts on the floor. There are millions of men and women in their prime who have never figured out what to do with a hanger."

We moved up a foot in line. "I assume that attendant trying to issue an airline ticket never had to make up his bed."

"It's worse than that," Melnick said. "The pilot of our plane didn't have to either."

I told Melnick, "I'm happy to say that we have been very strict parents in our family. Neither my wife nor I will tolerate a dirty room."

"How do you do it?" Melnick asked.

"We make the kids keep their doors closed so we can't see what is on the other side."

The man standing behind us said, "You don't necessarily have to be neat to do well in your profession. My son is a surgeon and he never made a bed in his life."

"Who adjusts the sheets for him before he operates?"

"His mother."

Strength For Today

In 1701, a distinguished Englishman wrote to Samuel Pepys — famous for his diaries — that the nation had never been "so atheistical, false, luxurious, self-interested and uncharitable" as at the time he was writing. And he felt that without "a miraculous undeserved providence" there would be a total dissolution of the government and constitution.

The miracle occurred two years later. In 1703, John Wesley was born. He organized the Methodist Societies which became the denomination which bears that name today. In part because of these societies, the moral and spiritual life of England improved.

The need for another John Wesley is great. Let us hope that God will be as good to America in the latter twentieth century as He was to England in the eighteenth century.

Public Forum

To The Editor:

Are we currently experiencing in Pitt County a return to the segregated public schools of the '60s? Since merger, Winterville has increasingly been established as a predominately white school district, withholding rapidly developing land between highways 43 and 11 slated to be moved into the Greenville attendance area beginning 1985-86, causing some city schools to become increasingly black beyond minimum federal requirements. One major purpose of merger was to alleviate racial imbalance, not accelerate it!

Now Dr. West has decided to maintain this segregated system with the adoption of such an "unlimited" family grandfathering clause that even the State Attorney General's Office strongly discouraged its use.

Why then did he propose such a highly controversial policy? In a paper on "Grandfathering" presented in February, Dr. West stated that the only 2 advantages to grandfathering were: "(1) Fulfills intent of RTI Study in which grandfathering was recommended for Winterville and Belvoir areas. (2) politically attractive." In this paper he, also, listed numerous disadvantages for grandfathering, the foremost being that it invalidated the new attendance line data.

Since the RTI Study's sole "intent" with regard to grandfathering involved "approximately 30 children" in grades 9-12, obviously grandfathering "children and future children of families...until graduation" was a flagrant misrepresentation of RTI's "intent"! Therefore, grandfathering must have been "politically attractive"! It is widely rumored that Dr. West intends to run for state superintendent.

Whatever Dr. West's reason for this grandfathering plan, it has created a segregated system, discord, and distrust; wasted taxpayers' money; and has not improved the education of our children. Had he dealt fairly with all of us, there would be no frightened people demanding grandfathering to a white school, since all schools would be racially balanced and quality education could be provided to all children. Quality education should have been his goal — not politics!

New Year's Proposed For Swap

RALEIGH (AP) — New Year's Day would be a good holiday to swap for the new state-paid day off to honor the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., state personnel director Richard Lee said.

Lee said Tuesday he expected some of the 68,000 state employees who were surveyed on the new holiday to share his view, since New Year's Day and the new King holiday both fall in January.

"New Year's Day is not really a special day, and you'd just be swapping one cold January day for another cold January day," Lee said. "It's sort of anti-climatic, after all the Thanksgiving and Christmas festivities, and it really doesn't mean much other than just being a day off."

Lee's comments were made as state workers Tuesday began tallying thousands of surveys that started to pour into the state personnel office. The results — to be analyzed in the next few weeks — are expected to vary widely.

"I wouldn't want to have to put my 10 bucks one way or the other," D.F. "Butch" Gunnells III, executive director of the State Employees Association of North Carolina, said Wednesday. "I've heard everything from A to Z about which day to give up."

The surveys were sent recently to state workers by the administration of Republican Gov. Jim Martin. Employees were asked which of the holidays observed last year should be dropped and whether the King day off should be optional.

Lee said the survey results will be presented as a recommendation to the State Personnel Commission, based on the consensus.

House Takes Up Trailer Zoning Bill

RALEIGH (AP) — Supporters and opponents of a bill that would override some local mobile-home zoning ordinances swapped charges of discrimination as a House committee took up the controversial bill.

"I think manufactured housing has been vigorously discriminated against," Ron Johnson, president of the North Carolina Manufactured Housing Association, said Wednesday.

He urged the House Committee on Housing to approve a bill that would bar cities from relegating mobile homes to trailer parks and special districts.

But Alfred M. Johnson, mayor of Fuquay-Varina, said putting manufactured homes alongside "stick-built" houses would reduce the latter's value. The bill, he said, "discriminates against me. It discriminates against a whole town."

An identical version of the bill won 5-4 approval of the Senate Judiciary IV Committee last week and has been referred to the Finance Committee for further study.

That's because the measure would require local governments to classify manufactured homes as real property instead of personal property for taxation purposes.

Rep. Milton Fitch, D-Wilson, chairman of the House committee, said he expected his panel to vote next week.

The bill would prohibit local ordinances requiring that manufactured homes be located only in trailer parks or specially zoned districts. But it would allow local governments to develop appearance standards that supporters of the bill say would prevent location of a mobile home where it would be out of place.

Local government officials pressed their case against the measure, contending that it would rob them of jurisdiction over zoning and land-use planning.

"It is, in current terms, a hostile takeover of land-use decisions at the local level," Lucy Allen, mayor of Louisburg.

Spokesmen for mobile home manufacturers, local governments and the interested groups repeated many of the same arguments put forward during two Senate committee hearings.

Supporters complained that many local officials were biased against manufactured homes and refused to acknowledge their improvements in quality and appearance in recent years.

Hester Sams, an Asheville housing official and member of the Citizens Committee for Fair Zoning, told of "horror stories" in which a blind man, a woman whose house burned down, and other hardship victims were denied requests to put mobile homes near people who could care for them.

"I appeal to you ... to support this bill so that our young people, our low-income people and the senior citizens of this state can realize the American dream of owning a home of their choice," Ms. Sams said.

North Carolina's first Baptist Conference was organized in Greenville in 1830.

Collard Vs. Yam Contest Grows Bitter Sweet

By ERICA JOHNSTON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A collard-loving state legislator wants the lowly green named the official vegetable of North Carolina, but the proposal has left a bitter taste in the mouths of Tar Heel sweet-potato growers.

"National surveys have clearly indicated that the collard may be the most wonderful vegetable on earth," said Rep. Joe Mavretic, who introduced the bill in the state House last month.

"As a matter of fact, a lot of people believe that hot-pepper vinegar was invented to pour on collards," said Mavretic, an Edgecombe County Democrat.

But Billy Yeargin of the North Carolina Yam Commission begs to differ.

"We will admit that the collard, when it is cooked, is a good fly repellent," he said. "But beyond that, we feel like it would be a sad mistake not to name the sweet potato the state vegetable."

State Sen. Bob Martin of Pitt County, who introduced a version of Mavretic's collard bill in the upper chamber, said people who speak poorly of collards "just don't know how to cook them right."

But Yeargin says New Guinea natives survived for centuries on a diet whose main staple was sweet potatoes. And sweet-potato aficionados point out that North Carolina farmers grow about $64 million of the orange tubers annually on 35,000 acres of Tar Heel soil, more than any other state.

Similar figures aren't even kept for collards. "We don't really keep any figures on them," said Robert L. Griffith of the N.C. Crop and Livestock Reporting Service. "We keep statistics on a lot of things, but collards... I don't know."

Thumbing through a state census of agriculture, Griffith finally located a few figures on the much-maligned collard, which actually is a kind of cabbage.

"There were 191 farms that grew collards commercially in 1982, and they grew 756 acres of them," Griffith said. "As far as we're concerned, that's not much... The value of it just isn't up to the level of some of the other vegetables."

But Mavretic counters that collards are grown in all of the state's 100 counties, mostly for home consumption. "They're probably the most versatile vegetable we've got in the state," he said. "They grow in all kinds of weather, and they don't even reach their peak until the first frost. They're good for you. And they really did sustain a whole lot of folks through the lean years."

And besides, he says, other contenders for the official state-vegetable crown have a serious problem — they're the wrong color.

"Obviously, you don't want a vegetable that's yellow, for instance," he said. "It has connotations having to do with courage and moral fiber. We don't want a vegetable that doesn't have a pleasing appearance."

Collards? Pleasing to the eye?

"People who don't think collards aren't pretty must be biased," Mavretic said. "They probably have an unusual heritage. Somewhere along the line, there must have been a Yankee in the heritage. Or maybe a Yugoslavian."

But what's wrong with an orange state vegetable?

"Sweet potatoes grow underground," Mavretic said. "You couldn't make any vegetable that grows underground the state vegetable. That's subversive, to some extent."

Collard lovers might not have an organization to sing

the praises of their favorite green, as sweet-potato fans do. But they're not fazed — the people who grow those funny-looking tubers aren't even sure what to call them.

"It's called the North Carolina Yam Commission, but they're not yams," said Fred Cumbo, superintendent of North Carolina State University's horticultural crops research station in Clinton.

"They're actually sweet potatoes," Cumbo said. "They're botanically different. Yams are grown in South America. They're not grown commercially in the United States. But some people call what we grow 'yams' to distinguish them from sweet potatoes with dry flesh. Ours are nice and moist."

But whatever the fate of the collard and the sweet potato in the state Legislature, Mavretic said his bill already has succeeded in lightening up the mood in the often somber chambers of state government.

"We deal in very serious issues down here," said Mavretic, who also has introduced bills concerning the handling of hazardous and low-level radioactive wastes, and legislation supporting the Basic Education Program. "Every once in a while, we ought to have something that's a little fun to play with."

Martin Asks To Speak On Judiciary Changes

RALEIGH (AP) — In an unusual move, Gov. Jim Martin has asked to appear before a legislative committee to speak against a bill that would eliminate eight Superior Court judgeships filled by gubernatorial appointment.

"I don't view this bill as a conspiracy," Jim Trotter, the governor's executive assistant and special counsel, said Wednesday. "But there can't be any question but that taking away the eight special judges is stripping that away from the governor."

Trotter said Martin wanted to discuss the bill with the Senate Judiciary IV Committee, where it is pending. The measure, sponsored by

Rep. H.M. "Mickey" Michaux, D-Durham, won House approval last week.

"The governor has very strong views on this bill and I am sure the committee will want to give him a chance to be heard," Trotter said.

It is extremely rare for a governor to appear before a legislative committee, although Martin personally briefed the Joint Appropriations Committee in 1985 on his budget proposals.

Sen. R.C. Soles, D-Columbus, told reporters Wednesday afternoon he had received a letter from Sen. Dan Simpson, R-Burke, seeking permission for Martin to address the committee today. Soles said Martin would be welcome.

Later, however, Trotter said Martin would not appear at today's 10 a.m. meeting because that was the time for his weekly news conference. Trotter said Senate Minority Leader Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, would try to arrange another time for Martin to appear.

The bill is designed to address complaints raised by blacks and the U.S. Justice Department in lawsuits pending in federal courts in Washington, D.C., and Raleigh.

The suits, one of which North Carolina Republicans have joined, contends that the existing system of electing Superior Court judgeships discriminates against minorities by diluting their voting strength.

Phosphate Ban Passes Close Vote

RALEIGH (AP) — Lobbying intensified in the wake of tentative House passage of a statewide ban on phosphorus in household laundry detergent as opponents hoped to reverse a close vote against limiting the bill to a few counties.

"Who knows what'll happen," said Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, House sponsor of the bill. "Something this close, anything can happen."

The House voted 64-47 Wednesday to tentatively back the statewide ban and was scheduled for a final vote today. But renewed efforts were expected to tie the ban to areas in which phosphorus spawns algae blooms that threaten aquatic life — a proposal voted down 56-54 on Wednesday.

"I'm tired," said Sam Johnson, who represents the Soap and Detergent Association, after the vote.

"I feel we've all gotten a fair shot at the discussions and I certainly would abide by the legislative process," he said, but he added that opponents of the ban would not throw in the towel.

The House also fought off a bid to put the matter up to a statewide referendum in a 54-53 vote and killed an amendment to exempt users of septic tanks 58-50.

The House agreed to an amendment to reduce the proposed penalty for illegally using phosphate detergents from $50 to $10 after Hackney offered no objections. An attempt by Rep. Dave Bumgardner, D-Gaston, to remove all exemptions to the ban failed to win a needed two-thirds majority after opponents said it was an ill-disguised bid to kill the bill.

Former Attorney General Rufus Edmisten, who opposed the bill on behalf of Monsanto Chemicals, said he was encouraged by the tight vote on the regional ban.

"The close vote on the amendment showed our efforts to educate people paid off, but it apparently wasn't enough," he said.

Often during floor debate Hackney referred to lobbying efforts by well-funded industry opponents to the ban.

"New York, where all the opponents of this bill live and wash their clothes, has had it (a ban) since 1972," Hackney said in one jab.

Law Restraining Takeovers Enacted

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The General Assembly has taken barely a week to enact a law that supporters say will make it harder for corporate raiders to pull off hostile takeovers of North Carolina firms.

Backed by heavyweight lobbyists including former Gov. Jim Hunt, the bill glided to final Senate passage Wednesday with no debate, 40-8. The House approved the bill last week.

"The climate is so right for something to happen in North Carolina, and we're without any protection at all," Sen. R.C. Soles, D-Columbus, sponsor of the measure, said in an interview.

He acknowledged that some had raised concerns about the speed with which the bill moved through the Legislature, but said there was time to fix any problems that emerge.

"We would be best to go ahead and enact this bill and ... immediately listen to anybody's concerns," Soles said. "If there are any serious problems ... we would look at another bill."

The bill establishes a formula to protect the value of the average shareholder's stock in case a hostile takeover is attempted. It would prevent corporate raiders from acquiring companies and liquidating their assets without paying shareholders a fair price for their shares.

The raider could avoid paying the "fair price" only if 95 percent of the shareholders voted to override the provision. North Carolina companies have 90 days to exempt themselves from the law.

Soles said the bill combined the best elements of similar laws in 14 states.

He said it was designed to stem a wave of "unfair" hostile takeovers that cost North Carolina jobs, but acknowledged that some firms that have been mentioned as possible takeover targets would not be protected because they don't have corporate headquarters in the state.

Some lawmakers expressed concern during debate Tuesday that the bill might damage North Carolina's reputation for a favorable business climate, noting that the 95 percent requirement is higher than that imposed by other states.

Price Of Hunting

RALEIGH (AP) — Lifetime hunting licenses would go up by as much as $200 under a bill approved by the Senate Finance Committee and sent to the Senate.

The approval came Tuesday despite complaints that the poor might suffer and the higher fees might result in fewer licenses being issued.

The bill calls for an increase in sportsman's licenses from $30 to $40 a year. Hunting and fishing licenses each would increase from $11.50 to $15.50 and the combined hunting-fishing package would go from $15.50 to $20. Lifetime licenses would go from $300 to $500 for adults, from $200 to $350 for youths and from $100 to $200 for infants less than 1 year old. The lifetime fee for non-residents would go from $500 to $1,000.

IN THE STATE

Hardison

RALEIGH (AP) — State Sen. Harold Hardison is scheduled to announce Thursday that he will run for lieutenant governor in 1988.

Hardison, a Democrat from Lenoir County, will be the first candidate to formally enter the Democratic primary for lieutenant governor.

Several potential candidates for lieutenant governor are waiting in the wings, including Reps. Billy Watkins and Jimmy Crawford, both D-Granville, and Republican Rep. Bill Boyd of Randolph County. Senate Majority Leader Tony Rand of Fayetteville also is considering a bid.

Hardison was first elected to the state Senate in 1973 after serving one term in the House. He considered a bid for lieutenant governor in 1984, but dropped out.

Award

GREENSBORO (AP) — Greta Tilley, a senior writer for the Greensboro News & Record, on Tuesday received the Ernie Pyle Award for Human Interest Reporting.

The $2,500 prize is given in memory of the famed World War II correspondent who died while covering combat. It is presented by the Scripps Howard Foundation, founded by and named after one of the nation's largest media communications companies.

Charged

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — A Gaston County man was charged with murder following a shooting which police speculate stemmed from an argument over dating.

Bernis Allen Williamson, 30, of Lowell was being held without bond Wednesday at the Gaston County Jail. Williamson is charged with shooting Warren Eugene Lindsay, 28, who lived with Lindsay's mother.

Officers at the scene said the fight apparently started when Lindsay became upset at Williamson for dating Lindsay's mother.

Water Suit

PILOT MOUNTAIN, N.C. (AP) — A couple has filed suit against this town, saying that more than $44,000 in damage was done to their home when a joint between two town water lines burst on two occasions.

Clarence Rutherford Jessup and Eugenia Martin Jessup contend that the town or its agents improperly built and maintained the water line. The Jessups' lawsuit, filed in Surry County Superior Court, asks for damages of more than $10,000.

New Hearing

RALEIGH (AP) — A Greensboro man who was sentenced to 30 years in prison for stabbing his wife to death with a pair of scissors will get a new sentencing hearing, the North Carolina Court of Appeals has ruled.

A Guilford County trial court erred last May when it found Michael Lee Jennings guilty of second-degree murder with the aggravating factor of premeditation, a three-judge panel ruled.

"The evidence shows simply that the defendant killed his wife during a quarrel, but the circumstances fail to show that he formed the intent to do so in a cool state of blood before the quarrel began and that the killing during the quarrel was the product of this previously formed intent," the court said.

Jennings received a 30-year sentence instead of the more usual 15-year sentence because the court ruled the crime was premeditated.

Data Rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department has rejected a request by The Associated Press for disclosure of the government's settlements with families of four astronauts who died in the space shuttle Challenger explosion and with Morton Thiokol Inc.

The Office of Information and Privacy ruled against the AP's request under the federal Freedom of Information Act for public disclosure of the settlement agreements and any correspondence leading up to the settlement.

Each of the families of four of the astronauts killed in the explosion will receive at least $1 million from the government and Morton Thiokol, manufacturer of the solid rocket boosters used on Challenger, Justice Department sources have said.

Human Aid

RALEIGH (AP) — Church groups from across North Carolina have collected almost $100,000 worth of clothing, medical supplies, medical equipment, seeds and other contributions for the people of Nicaragua, officials say.

The effort is part of the national Quest for Peace campaign, an attempt to counter the $100 million sent by the U.S. government to fund the contra war in Nicaragua.

Collard Vs. Yam Contest Grows Bitter Sweet

By ERICA JOHNSTON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A collard-loving state legislator wants the lowly green named the official vegetable of North Carolina, but the proposal has left a bitter taste in the mouths of Tar Heel sweet-potato growers.

"National surveys have clearly indicated that the collard may be the most wonderful vegetable on earth," said Rep. Joe Mavretic, who introduced the bill in the state House last month.

"As a matter of fact, a lot of people believe that hot-pepper vinegar was invented to pour on collards," said Mavretic, an Edgecombe County Democrat.

But Billy Yeargin of the North Carolina Yam Commission begs to differ.

"We will admit that the collard, when it is cooked, is a good fly repellent," he said. "But beyond that, we feel like it would be a sad mistake not to name the sweet potato the state vegetable."

State Sen. Bob Martin of Pitt County, who introduced a version of Mavretic's collard bill in the upper chamber, said people who speak poorly of collards "just don't know how to cook them right."

But Yeargin says New Guinea natives survived for centuries on a diet whose main staple was sweet potatoes. And sweet-potato aficionados point out that North Carolina farmers grow about $64 million of the orange tubers annually on 35,000 acres of Tar Heel soil, more than any other state.

Similar figures aren't even kept for collards. "We don't really keep any figures on them," said Robert L. Griffith of the N.C. Crop and Livestock Reporting Service. "We keep statistics on a lot of things, but collards ... I don't know."

Thumbing through a state census of agriculture, Griffith finally located a few figures on the much-maligned collard, which actually is a kind of cabbage.

"There were 191 farms that grew collards commercially in 1982, and they grew 756 acres of them," Griffith said. "As far as we're concerned, that's not much ... The value of it just isn't up to the level of some of the other vegetables."

But Mavretic counters that collards are grown in all of the state's 100 counties, mostly for home consumption. "They're probably the most versatile vegetable we've got in the state," he said. "They grow in all kinds of weather, and they don't even reach their peak until the first frost. They're good for you. And they really did sustain a whole lot of folks through the lean years."

And besides, he says, other contenders for the official state-vegetable crown have a serious problem — they're the wrong color.

"Obviously, you don't want a vegetable that's yellow, for instance," he said. "It has connotations having to do with courage and moral fiber. We don't want a vegetable that doesn't have a pleasing appearance."

Collards? Pleading to the eye? "People who don't think collards aren't pretty must be biased," Mavretic said. "They probably have an unusual heritage. Somewhere along the line, there must have been a Yankee in the heritage. Or maybe a Yugoslavian."

But what's wrong with an orange state vegetable? "Sweet potatoes grow underground," Mavretic said.

"You couldn't make any vegetable that grows underground the state vegetable. That's subversive, to some extent."

Collard lovers might not have an organization to sing

the praises of their favorite green, as sweet-potato fans do. But they're not fazed — the people who grow those funny-looking tubers aren't even sure what to call them.

"It's called the North Carolina Yam Commission, but they're not yams," said Fred Cumbo, superintendent of North Carolina State University's horticultural crops research station in Clinton.

"They're actually sweet potatoes," Cumbo said. "They're botanically different. Yams are grown in South America. They're not grown commercially in the United States. But some people call what we grow 'yams' to distinguish them from sweet potatoes with dry flesh. Ours are nice and moist."

But whatever the fate of the collard and the sweet potato in the state Legislature, Mavretic said his bill already has succeeded in lightening up the mood in the often somber chambers of state government.

"We deal in very serious issues down here," said Mavretic, who also has introduced bills concerning the handling of hazardous and low-level radioactive wastes, and legislation supporting the Basic Education Program. "Every once in a while, we ought to have something that's a little fun to play with."

Martin Asks To Speak On Judiciary Changes

RALEIGH (AP) — In an unusual move, Gov. Jim Martin has asked to appear before a legislative committee to speak against a bill that would eliminate eight Superior Court judgeships filled by gubernatorial appointment.

"I don't view this bill as a conspiracy," Jim Trotter, the governor's executive assistant and special counsel, said Wednesday. "But there can't be any question but that taking away the eight special judges is stripping that away from the government."

Trotter said Martin wanted to discuss the bill with the Senate Judiciary IV Committee, where it is pending. The measure, sponsored by

Rep. H.M. "Mickey" Michaux, D-Durham, won House approval last week.

"The governor has very strong views on this bill and I am sure the committee will want to give him a chance to be heard," Trotter said.

It is extremely rare for a governor to appear before a legislative committee, although Martin personally briefed the Joint Appropriations Committee in 1985 on his budget proposals.

Sen. R.C. Soles, D-Columbus, told reporters Wednesday afternoon he had received a letter from Sen. Dan Simpson, R-Burke, seeking permission for Martin to address the committee today. Soles said Martin would be welcome.

Later, however, Trotter said Martin would not appear at today's 10 a.m. meeting because that was the time for his weekly news conference. Trotter said Senate Minority Leader Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, would try to arrange another time for Martin to appear.

The bill is designed to address complaints raised by blacks and the U.S. Justice Department in lawsuits pending in federal courts in Washington, D.C., and Raleigh.

The suits, one of which North Carolina Republicans have joined, contends that the existing system of electing Superior Court judgeships discriminates against minorities by diluting their voting strength.

Phosphate Ban Passes Close Vote

RALEIGH (AP) — Lobbying intensified in the wake of tentative House passage of a statewide ban on phosphorus in household laundry detergent as opponents hoped to reverse a close vote against limiting the bill to a few counties.

"Who knows what'll happen," said Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, House sponsor of the bill. "Something this close, anything can happen."

The House voted 64-47 Wednesday to tentatively back the statewide ban and was scheduled for a final vote today. But renewed efforts were expected to tie the ban to areas in which phosphorus spawns algae blooms that threaten aquatic life — a proposal voted down 56-54 on Wednesday.

"I'm tired," said Sam Johnson, who represents the Soap and Detergent Association, after the vote.

"I feel we've all gotten a fair shot at the discussions and I certainly would abide by the legislative process," he said, but he added that opponents of the ban would not throw in the towel.

The House also fought off a bid to put the matter up to a statewide referendum in a 54-53 vote and killed an amendment to exempt users of septic tanks 58-50.

The House agreed to an amendment to reduce the proposed penalty for illegally using phosphate detergents from $50 to $10 after Hackney offered no objections. An attempt by Rep. Dave Bumgardner, D-Gaston, to remove all exemptions to the ban failed to win a needed two-thirds majority after opponents said it was an ill-disguised bid to kill the bill.

Former Attorney General Rufus Edmisten, who opposed the bill on behalf of Monsanto Chemicals, said he was encouraged by the tight vote on the regional ban.

"The close vote on the amendment showed our efforts to educate people paid off, but it apparently wasn't enough," he said.

Often during floor debate Hackney referred to lobbying efforts by well-funded industry opponents to the ban.

"New York, where all the opponents of this bill live and wash their clothes, has had it (a ban) since 1972," Hackney said in one jab.

Later, he listed some opponents, including Procter & Gamble and Texasgulf Chemical Co.

Water Suit

PILOT MOUNTAIN, N.C. (AP) — A couple has filed suit against this town, saying that more than $44,000 in damage was done to their home when a joint between two town water lines burst on two occasions.

Clarence Rutherford Jessup and Eugenia Martin Jessup contend that the town or its agents improperly built and maintained the water line. The Jessups' lawsuit, filed in Surry County Superior Court, asks for damages of more than $10,000.

New Hearing

RALEIGH (AP) — A Greensboro man who was sentenced to 30 years in prison for stabbing his wife during a quarrel with a pair of scissors will get a new sentencing hearing, the North Carolina Court of Appeals has ruled.

A Guilford County trial court erred last May when it found Michael Lee Jennings guilty of second-degree murder with the aggravating factor of premeditation, a three-judge panel ruled.

"The evidence shows simply that the defendant killed his wife during a quarrel, but the circumstances fail to show that he formed the intent to do so in a cool state of blood before the quarrel began and that the killing during the quarrel was the product of this previously formed intent," the court said.

Jennings received a 30-year sentence instead of the more usual 15-year sentence because the court ruled the crime was premeditated.

Data Rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department has rejected a request by The Associated Press for disclosure of the government's settlements with families of four astronauts who died in the space shuttle Challenger explosion and with Morton Thiokol Inc.

The Office of Information and Privacy ruled against the AP's request under the federal Freedom of Information Act for public disclosure of the settlement agreements and any correspondence leading up to the settlement.

Each of the families of four of the astronauts killed in the explosion will receive at least $1 million from the government and Morton Thiokol, manufacturer of the solid rocket boosters used on Challenger, Justice Department sources have said.

Human Aid

RALEIGH (AP) — Church groups from across North Carolina have collected almost $100,000 worth of clothing, medical supplies, medical equipment, seeds and other contributions for the people of Nicaragua, officials say.

The effort is part of the national Quest for Peace campaign, an attempt to counter the $100 million sent by the U.S. government to fund the contra war in Nicaragua.

Graham Says He'd Rather Quit Than Plead For Funds

By DAVID REED
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Billy Graham says he rarely uses television to promote his teachings and that he would rather quit as a traveling evangelist than have to plead for money on television.

Graham, whose first U.S. crusade this year begins Saturday in Columbia, drew clear distinctions Wednesday between himself and other evangelists who use television to preach and to solicit money.

Graham refused to comment directly about fallen television evangelist Jim Bakker, but walked into a news conference carrying a black Bible and a book he wrote in 1984 called "A Biblical Standard For Evangelists."

When asked about Bakker and PTL, Graham pointed to the evangelist book and said, "It's all in here."

Graham suggested reporters read chapter eight, which says in part: "Peter and Jude warned against false teachers, who are corrupted by sensuality, greed, immorality and ungodliness."

Bakker resigned from the PTL ministry based in Fort Mill last month when the news was about to break that he had a tryst with a church secretary in 1980 and paid $265,000 in hush money.

Graham said he would comment on the controversy when it's over. "Probably not in the next two to three weeks. I'll wait until it's all out. There's something new coming out every day," he said.

The latest news was that three former PTL directors said they do not remember authorizing all of $1.1 million in bonuses Bakker received during his last 15 months as president.

The three expressed surprise that Bakker and his wife, Tammy, drew nearly $1.6 million in 1986 and that Richard Dortch, then PTL's executive director, got more than $350,000 in salary and bonuses, The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer reported Wednesday.

Graham, at the news conference, said his ministry uses television only to promote his books or his crusades.

Graham, who lives in a log house in Montreat, N.C., and makes $59,100 a year with a $19,700 housing allowance, said three or four of his crusades are televised each year to "to extend the effect of the crusades. Television is not our main work."

The Billy Graham Crusade pays for television time about a dozen times a year for less than five minutes each time, he said. "Usually it's about a book we have to offer."

Graham also said, "I've always said if I have to plead for money or beg for money, I would quit."

But Graham predicted the PTL scandal will not hurt efforts by evangelists to spread the word of the Gospel. "The work of the church goes on no matter what happens. God's work is not dependent upon a man."

Graham's crusade at Williams-Brice Stadium begins Saturday and meetings will be held for eight straight nights. Admission is free. The stadium holds 72,000 people, but Graham said they don't expect to fill it.

More than 25,000 people from about 800 churches in South Carolina, North Carolina and Georgia have been participating in the preparation of the crusade during the past 10 months, organizers said.

Graham's last crusade in Columbia was in 1950 at a much smaller Williams-Brice Stadium. He held a crusade in Greenville in 1966.

Graham said his goals for his crusade include: To proclaim the Gospel and to get people to dedicate or rededicate their lives to Christ, to strengthen the churches, to lower ethnic, political and denominational barriers and to call attention to social needs.

ASHES SCATTERED — Ruth White of Charlotte scatters the ashes of her 15-year-old daughter, Lee, into the ocean off the Florida Keys as her husband, Rob, left, watches and another daughter, Margaret, reacts. Lee died of cancer two days after fulfilling her wish to "swim with dolphins." Lee also had asked that her ashes be scattered with dolphins. The family on Tuesday rented a boat and cruised until it found a school of dolphin. (AP Laserphoto)

Appalachia Sees Poverty Continue

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Social programs instituted in the 1960s have reduced the poverty rate in Appalachia by more than half, but the rate is still twice the national average, according to a University of Kentucky study.

"Today almost one person out of four in Central Appalachia is classified as poor, nearly one in three as either poor or near poor," the report said.

"Both poverty and near poverty are so prevalent in this region that its cycle of poverty is unlikely to be broken without continued external assistance."

The study, released this week by the university's Appalachian Center, focused on the mountainous counties of Kentucky, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee — counties either dominated by the mining industry or with little local economy at all.

While the federal government's war on poverty has reduced the poverty rate in the area, the study concludes "... the major battles (against poverty) remain to be fought."

Elderly residents have benefited most from anti-poverty programs, which have served them as a minimal safety net, the study said.

But it said younger people are expected to make it on their own after assistance tides them over difficult times, and "unfortunately, the local economy has not come through for many Americans."

New jobs in the region are mostly in the service, retail and light manufacturing areas, with "low pay and negligible opportunity for advancement... (and) provide little chance for people to earn a stable income or to get ahead," according to the study.

It said three major factors lead to continuing poverty in the region:

- Lack of employment due to weak, single-industry labor markets.
- An underskilled, educationally disadvantaged work force.
- Historical and cultural factors relating to economic, political and social development.

White House In Hot Water Over New Exercise Center

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House employees' exercise room used to have some showers and a few weights. The new spruced-up, expanded version has more weights, space for aerobics classes and a hot tub that seats eight.

A hot tub?

That's right. For $5,300, the White House Athletic Center bought both the eight-person hot tub and a dry sauna. The cost, according to Liz Murphy, deputy White House press secretary, will be borne by employees who join the center and pay an annual fee of $148.

The decision to buy the hot tub came after the center's board of directors checked exercise facilities at other federal agencies and found that a hot tub and dry sauna "were two of the things the other agencies had that they kept telling us were a really big draw."

But besides drawing federal employees interested in reducing job-related stress, the hot tub has drawn media attention to the facility.

It was, in fact, the subject of the first questions at presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater's regular news briefing Wednesday.

"Eight-person hot tub?" one reporter called out.

Another urged Fitzwater, a little stocky himself, to put on his Spandex tights and join the other exercisers.

"You just want to see me in those Spandex pants," Fitzwater replied jokingly, later adding, "It's a very spartan room where you'd find old men coming in there and trying to limber up."

The exercise facility opened March 6 in the New Executive Office Building, around the corner from the White House. It is open to all employees of the Executive Office of the President, including people who work for the Office of Management and Budget, the U.S. Trade Representative and anyone who has clearance to work in the White House complex of buildings, including custodians.

"We set up this exercise room for health reasons," said Ben Payne, head of the White House General Services Administration field office. "We're interested in the long-range health benefits, which hopefully will result in lower insurance claims."

That's why, Murphy said, the facility's 12 board members were interested in attracting as many employees as possible.

"We came to the conclusion that we wanted the fee to go no higher than $150 a year," Murphy said. "That way we could attract the low-level and mid-level people who could not normally afford to join a health club."

She said the board settled on a fee of $5.70 a pay period, which translates to $148 a year.

A spot-check of private health clubs in downtown Washington found fees ranging from about $170 a year to $300 a year. Some clubs charge an additional fee for joining.

So far, Murphy said, about 350 employees have signed up, "and the only complaint we've had is that we need more aerobics classes."

Vietnam To Admit U.S. Movie Crew

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam has agreed to allow an American movie crew to shoot a film in the country for the first time since the Communists took power in 1975, director Christopher Crowe said.

"They've agreed to allow us to come to Saigon, to Ho Chi Minh City, and shoot as much or as little of the picture as we want," Crowe said Wednesday night during shooting in Bangkok of the movie "Saigon."

Saigon, formerly the capital of South Vietnam, was renamed Ho Chi Minh City after the Communist victory.

"They've been quite cordial actually and seemed very interested in doing commerce with Americans at this point," Crowe said.

A Vietnamese Embassy official said the crew most likely would go to Vietnam in June, and would be the first American film crew allowed into the country since the U.S.-backed South Vietnam government lost to Communist forces.

"Saigon," among a spate of American movies with Vietnam themes, is described as a murder thriller set during the Communist forces' 1968 Tet offensive. It stars Willem Dafoe, star of the current hit, "Platoon," and Gregory Hines.

Shooting began recently in Bangkok.

Few New Furniture Lines Expected

HIGH POINT (AP) — Furniture executives at the Southern Furniture Market will be pondering imports, distribution and consolidation more than new product lines, an industry analyst says.

When business is healthy, "all of a sudden the import question isn't quite as dramatic as it was when business was terrible," analyst Jerry Epperson said. "New questions come up because the upholstery people can't get the fabric from the mills fast enough and oak prices are going up fairly dramatically. We've got a whole new range of concerns that we talk about among ourselves."

"A lot of companies have been bought out by new players to the game," said Phil Phillips of First Factors. "Some absolutely mind-boggling prices have been paid for furniture manufacturers by these out-of-industry players."

The most recent merger joined The Lane Co. with Intero to form the industry's first potential billion-dollar company. Earlier moves saw Henredon, Drexel-Heritage, Baker, Kittinger and Thomasville Furniture being pulled into larger corporations.

Epperson said he expected the two-week spring market, which opened today, to be strong.

"I think it'll be a healthy market. But let me be blunt," Epperson said. "March retail sales were not strong for a lot of reasons, so a lot of people are coming here looking for value."

Because of a wide range of domestic and foreign issues "this is not going to be a market where you're going to see a tremendous number of new introductions," he said. What retailers will see is price increases and continuation of successful product lines.

"The industry, certainly in the last six months has recovered to a point where a lot of people are very comfortable, if not a little cocky," Epperson said. "It almost seems as if the economy has taken a back seat to what most people are worried about these days."

"... I think it's very clear that High Point can lay claim to being the furniture capital of the entire world," he said.

Death Foes Say Court Ruling 'Simple Racism'

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The future of capital punishment seems to have been assured by the Supreme Court in a decision that death penalty foes call an example of "simple racism."

The court Wednesday ruled that state death penalty laws can be valid despite statistics indicating they are carried out in racially discriminatory ways.

The 5-4 decision upheld Georgia's death penalty system even though killers of white people in that state are far more likely to be condemned to death than those who kill blacks.

The court, led by Justice Lewis F. Powell, said statistics indicating a pattern of racial bias in sentencing not too high a price to pay for a death penalty system that does not discriminate on the basis of race."

Defendants must prove their own sentence was tainted by such bias, the court said.

In previous decisions, the court had allowed statistical evidence to prove illegal discrimination in employment and unlawful racial bias in selecting criminal juries.

The ruling dashed what many death penalty opponents considered to be their best chance of saving hundreds of the nearly 1,900 men and women on death rows nationwide, removing their last legal claim.

Justice William J. Brennan, writing for the court's dissenters, said changing the sentence of some convicted murderers to life in prison "is not too high a price to pay for a death penalty system that does not discriminate on the basis of race."

Powell was joined by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Byron R. White, Sandra Day O'Connor and Antonin Scalia.

Joining Brennan in dissent were Justices Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens. Marshall is the only black on the court.

"It will open the floodgates," Oklahoma public defender Bob Ravitz predicted. "I would not be surprised if we had 100-150 executions between now and the end of the year."

Similar predictions by legal experts over the past decade have proved inaccurate. Since the Supreme Court reinstated capital punishment in 1976, 70 U.S. prison inmates have been put to death by electrocution, poison gas, firing squad or lethal injection.

Numerous procedural safeguards, many of them mandated by the high court, remain in force. Death row inmates often succeed in postponing their executions for years.

"This decision is a throwback to the days of slavery and Jim Crow, when it was murder to kill a white but not murder to kill a black," said Harvard law professor Alan Der-showitz. He called the ruling "simple racism, and a majority of the Supreme Court has become part of a lynch mob."

"What they are saying is that white life can be made more valuable than black life," said Rick Harris, a Montgomery, Ala., lawyer opposed to capital punishment.

Mark Rotert, an Illinois prosecutor, called the ruling "very, very good news." And other law enforcement officials predicted that the decision will help clear some of the chaos in death penalty litigation.

The ruling upheld the death sentence given Warren McCleskey, who is black, for the 1978 murder of a white Atlanta policeman.

McCleskey's legal arguments were entwined with a statistical study by a University of Iowa law professor, David Baldus.

In his study, Baldus examined every Georgia murder conviction from 1973 to 1978 and found that people who killed whites were four to 11 times more likely to receive the death penalty than were those who killed blacks.

Contacted in Iowa City, Baldus said, "The proof that was presented in this case was quite comparable to proof that is presented routinely in employment discrimination cases, and evidence of this type would customarily have been held sufficient to establish a claim of purposeful discrimination."

Since 1984, the high court has rejected two other broad attacks on capital punishment.

It ruled that death sentences may be meted out even if state courts do not try to determine whether others convicted of similar crimes were treated more leniently.

And it ruled that death penalty opponents may be barred from serving as jurors in determining guilt or innocence in capital cases, saying that rights to a fair trial are not violated if such exclusions result in "conviction-prone" juries.

One significant capital punishment case remains on the Supreme Court's docket. The justices agreed last February to use an Oklahoma case to decide whether the death penalty is a valid punishment for convicted murderers who committed their crimes before they were 18 years old.

About 35 current death row inmates were condemned for murders committed as juveniles.

Ruling Means More Executions May Occur, But Opponents Say Their Fight Isn't Over

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer
The Supreme Court's refusal to rule that the death penalty is implemented in a racist way removes the last major argument against capital punishment, but the fight over the practice is not over, opponents and supporters agree.

An Oklahoma public defender predicted the 5-4 decision would unleash a flood of executions, and the California attorney general said it makes it more likely a death sentence will be carried out in that state. Seventy people have been put to death in this country the Supreme Court in 1976 allowed states to resume executions.

While law enforcement officials welcomed Wednesday's ruling, civil rights advocates condemned it as a disturbing return to days of rampant racism.

The nation's highest court rejected the appeal of a black Georgia prisoner who offered evidence that those who kill whites in that state are far more likely to be sentenced to death than those who kill blacks.

Justice Lewis F. Powell, writing for the court, said attorneys for Warren McCleskey had not proved that there was any racial bias in his case.

"That's very, very good news,"

said Mark Rotert, head of criminal appeals for the Illinois attorney general. "We're going to have one less issue to resolve in capital litigation."

"This decision is a throwback to the days of slavery and Jim Crow, when it was murder to kill a white but not murder to kill a black," said Harvard Law Professor Alan Dershowitz. "(A) majority of the Supreme Court has become part of a lynch mob which is encouraging racist injustice."

"It will open the floodgates. I would not be surprised if we had 100 to 150 executions between now and the end of the year," said Bob Ravitz, chief public defender for Oklahoma County, Okla.

"There are now no issues left before the Supreme Court that would hold up executions. So all executions are going to go forward," said Ron Dusek, spokesman for Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox. Texas has 250 prisoners under death sentences.

The Rev. Tim McDonald, coordinator of special projects for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in Atlanta, called for civil disobedience "to totally disrupt the legal system and to put a screeching halt to that machinery that continues to grind up lives as if they're animals."

David Whitmore, legal director for the American Civil Liberties Union in New Orleans, said nearly a dozen of the 47 inmates on Louisiana's death row had staked their hopes for survival on the McCleskey case.

McCleskey, who is black, was convicted of murdering a white Atlanta police officer in 1978.

"This was the last broad-based issue that the court needed to address, but it by no means means that death-penalty opponents will be stymied in finding some other issue to raise," said Jim Coman, a senior deputy attorney general for North Carolina.

"There will be another issue that will replace the white victim issue," Coman said. "I just don't know what it will be."

"It won't speed up anything, but that's one more issue they can't use now," said Jack Morris, who handles death sentence cases for the attorney general's office in Missouri.

In California, Attorney General John Van de Kamp said the court's action "undoubtedly will have an impact on all death penalty cases in California."

N.C. Death Row Inmates Will Shift Appeal Focus

By ERICA JOHNSTON
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — The Supreme Court's decision upholding capital punishment even when there is the possibility of racial bias removes the last major issue raised by death penalty opponents, but a senior deputy attorney general says other issues are bound to come.

"This was the last broad-based issue that the court needed to address, but it by no means means that death-penalty opponents will be stymied in finding some other issue to raise," said Jim Coman, a senior deputy attorney general for North Carolina.

"I have no illusions that my staff can now sit back," he said. "There will be another issue that will replace the white victim issue ... I just don't know what it will be."

The Supreme Court, in a defeat for opponents of capital punishment, upheld Georgia's death penalty Wednesday by a 5-4 vote. Defense attorneys had argued that killers of white victims draw death sentences far more frequently than killers of black victims.

Nine to 12 of the approximately 60 inmates on North Carolina's death row have raised that issue in appealing their sentence, Coman said. After the Supreme Court's decision, those inmates will have to pursue appeals based on other issues.

Death penalty opponents said the ruling means they will have to shift their fight to the Legislature and the public.

"The death penalty will be with us until the majority of the people decide they don't want it," said Raleigh attorney Roger Smith, who represented convicted killer James Hutchins, who was put to death in 1984.

"Polls now show that most people support capital punishment ... but we may get our fill of it as the pace of executions quickens," Smith said.

A study of murder convictions in Georgia from 1973 to 1978 by University of Iowa law professor David Baldus, used by defense attorneys in the case before the Supreme Court, concluded that those who killed whites were 11 times more likely to receive the death penalty than were those who killed blacks.

But Justice Lewis Powell, writing for the court's majority, said the apparent discrepancy was "unexplained," rather than "invidious."

A 1986 study by University of North Carolina law professor Barry Nakell concluded that defendants brought to trial in North Carolina on charges of first-degree murder were more likely to be convicted of first-degree murder if their victims had been white than if their victims had not been white.

"Who gets the death penalty depends as much on where a crime is committed and against whom a crime is committed than it does on what crime is committed," said Bruce G. Cunningham, an attorney from Southern Pines.

But Coman said "statistical inferences" of racism cannot be applied to death penalty cases in North Carolina.

"There are so many variables that go into a decision in a criminal case that statistics (on race) don't lend themselves to any reasonable interpretation of why a given jury determined the appropriate sentence," he said. "I don't see how you could quantify that ... and say that (race) is the reason why this person got the death penalty."

Cunningham is representing David Junior Brown, who faces a death sentence for the 1980 stabbings of a Pinehurst woman and her daughter. Brown was scheduled to be put to death May 8, but his execution was stayed Tuesday by U.S. District Judge James McMillan in Charlotte.

One of the arguments Cunningham used in asking for the stay was that North Carolina's death penalty discriminates against blacks convicted of killing whites, the contention that the Supreme Court rejected Wednesday.

"Obviously, we're disappointed," said Cunningham, who traveled to Washington last October to hear oral arguments in the Georgia case.

Recent Rulings

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court's ruling Wednesday on capital punishment, perhaps its most significant death penalty decision in more than a decade, reinforces an American tradition as old as the nation itself.

Executions have been carried out since Colonial days and were commonplace from the 1930s until the late 1960s. During the 1950s, there were 717 executions.

When the Supreme Court invalidated state death penalty laws in 1972, an informal moratorium already was in effect. The last execution had taken place in 1967.

But six months after the court reinstated capital punishment in 1976, Gary Gilmore was killed by a Utah firing squad, signaling a resumption in executions. There have been 69 more executions since, 68 men and one woman.

Here is a summary of the court's major capital punishment decisions since 1972:

—Furman vs. Georgia, 1972. Barred all states from carrying out executions, ruling that administration of the death penalty had become too "arbitrary and capricious" in violation of the Constitution's ban on cruel and unusual punishment.

—Gregg vs. Georgia, 1976. Reinstated capital punishment.

—Coker vs. Georgia, 1977. Banned use of the death penalty for the crime of rape.

—Lockett vs. Ohio, 1978. Said states must permit consideration of a broad range of mitigating circumstances before a death sentence may be ordered.

—Pulley vs. Harris, 1984. In a California case, permitted death sentences even when state courts do not conduct "proportionality" studies to determine whether others convicted of similar crimes were treated more leniently.

—Spaziano vs. Florida, 1984. Said judges may overrule juries recommending life in prison and impose death sentences for convicted murderers.

—Lockhart vs. McCree, 1986. Said in an Arkansas case death penalty opponents can be barred from serving on capital case juries.

—Ford vs. Wainwright, 1986. Ruled in a Florida case that states may not execute killers who lack the mental competence to understand why they are being put to death, barring executions for murderers who become insane while on death row.

—Tison vs. Arizona, 1987. Said murder accomplices may be sentenced to death if they displayed "reckless indifference" for human life, even if they did not kill anyone or anticipate a killing would occur.

NEW MONUMENT — The newest monument proposed for Washington would ring the Ellipse, center, with a mile of trees, providing a living and blooming memorial behind the White House to slain police officers. Two rows

Police Memorial Proposed For Ellipse At White House

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The architect of a proposal to turn the Ellipse behind the White House into a tree-lined memorial to slain police officers says his design is radical in its simplicity.

Backers of a Law Enforcement Officers Memorial were unveiling their proposal today before the National Capital Memorial Commission, which must agree to any site and design on the park grounds.

"It's very different from most memorials, which are sanctuaries unto themselves," said Davis Buckley, a Washington architect whose firm came up with the plans. "Its simplicity is what's so radical about it."

The designers are seeking approval in concept of the design and site, which is among the most prominent in Washington. Two other federal commissions also would have to approve the design and site as plans are refined.

The design consists of 500 to 600 trees to be planted full-grown in a border around the Ellipse, which now is bordered mainly by parked cars.

The designers say if the concept is approved, they hope to add some element such as a flag pole, marker or design in the pathway to commemorate the officers, 1,500 of whom were killed on duty in the past 10 years.

The blooming trees, of a variety yet to be decided, would be placed in two rows, 10 feet apart and 25 feet tall, their tops and sides trimmed flat.

The limbs would intertwine to form a canopy of foliage over a walkway around the half-mile in circumference lawn that separates the White House and Washington Monument. There would be two breaks for entrances to the grassy center.

Buckley said his design would be in keeping with the plan for the District of Columbia laid out by the French engineer Pierre Charles L'Enfant 200 years ago.

"In many ways, it's a gift to Washington to complete the L'Enfant plan," Buckley said. "It highlights the Ellipse and reinforces the geometry of the area."

The project is planned by the National Law Enforcement Memorial Fund, which won congressional authorization in 1984 for a monument to law officers killed in the line of duty.

The fund, formed by more than a dozen organizations of law enforcement officers, is trying to raise $5 million to construct the memorial.

Jan C. Scruggs, who conceived of the idea for the Vietnam Veterans Memorial and led it to completion through intense controversy over its design, is heading the project.

"It's a brilliant design because it makes a historic part of Washington, the Ellipse, into the beautiful area that city planners intended," he said.

The Ellipse, just below the White House south lawn, is where the national Christmas tree is situated each year. It attracts thousands for baseball and other activities, and is ringed by hundreds of cars and concession vendors.

The design would not remove the road or parking but would shield them, the designers say.

Craig Floyd, executive director of the fund, said the site and design are supported unanimously by the fund's board of directors, which includes police chiefs, officers, police union leaders and families of slain officers.

U.S. Knew Of Soviet Embassy Bugs In '79

By SARA FRITZ
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. officials knew as early as 1979 that the Soviet KGB was systematically bugging the new American Embassy under construction in Moscow, but failed to use an effective means to stop it, a top State Department official acknowledged Wednesday. "I think the supervisory people knew that the embassy was being bugged," Robert E. Lamb, assistant secretary of state for diplomatic security, told a House subcommittee investigating the recent breach of security in Moscow.

Lamb said that U.S. officials were unable to combat the bugging because they assumed erroneously that they had an effective "strategy" for removing KGB-planted bugs. Instead, he said, they found that the Soviets had integrated eavesdropping capability into materials used to build the embassy.

"Where this strategy was weak was in the sense that the Soviets used parts of the structure itself as the bugging," Lamb said. "These are the kinds of things that are going to be difficult for us to neutralize."

As a result of the bugging, the unoccupied embassy building is, in the words of Rep. Connie Mack, R-Fla., "an eight-story microphone plugged into the Politburo." A commission headed by former Secretary of Defense James R. Schlesinger is looking into whether the $23 million building should be demolished and replaced to eliminate the bugs.

Espionage charges filed recently against two Marine guards who served at the current U.S. embassy, who allegedly were compromised by sexual affairs with Soviet women, have focused attention on security breaches at the construction of the new U.S. embassy building in Moscow.

The building is part of a $190 million complex that is being built under terms of an agreement reached between the United States and the Soviet Union in 1972. The agreement called for the Soviets to provide large prefabricated parts of the building, which were viewed as cheaper than more secure types of construction. "Security was not considered seriously enough in the construction from the earliest stages," Lamb acknowledged. "Security factors took a back seat to costs."

Rep. Doug Bereuter, R-Neb., said that because of the bugs, the building never can be used by U.S. officials to discuss secret information. He suggested that instead of tearing down the building, the United States should construct an annex to house activities that officials want to be kept secret from the Soviets.

Lamb replied that an annex is one of several possibilities being considered. Subcommittee members said that the U.S. government also is considering replacing the top two floors of the building, but the members speculated that that would be as expensive as a whole new building.

Bereuter, who was trained in military counterintelligence, said that U.S. officials simply underestimated the sophistication of Soviet electronic eavesdropping technology.

"It's not a matter of debugging rooms — that's old technology," he said. "The problem is bigger than that."

Members of the subcommittee harshly criticized State Department officials for bungling security in Moscow, both at the existing embassy as well as at the new one. Rep. Chet Atkins, D-Mass., called them "a collection of maggots" and Rep. Larry Smith, D-Fla., charged them with "gross negligence, gross ineptitude, gross stupidity."

Smith noted that until recently the United States had allowed foreign engineers and construction companies without U.S. security clearances to work on construction of overseas missions. "So the Soviets could have the blueprints for everything that was being built for the United States overseas for the last 10 years?" he asked. "Yes, sir," replied Lamb, "that's a possibility."

Rep. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, noted that the United States is still paying benefits to Soviet citizens who have worked at the embassy, at least some of whom are presumed to have been employees of the KGB. "So conceivably," she said, "we're paying retirement benefits to KGB agents."

Subcommittee Chairman Dan Mica, D-Fla., who visited the existing U.S. embassy in Moscow recently along with Snowe, said that the two lawmakers found so much hostility between the Marine guards and U.S. diplomats that one Marine told them he did not know whether he would protect the Americans if the building were under attack.

Mica said that they also found that people entering the U.S. embassy between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. were examined for guns and explosives but that no such search was required for visitors entering at other times of the day — even though traffic through the building was always "like a subway station."

Lamb insisted that U.S. concern for security at the embassies in Moscow and elsewhere has improved in the last two years, largely because of legislation passed by Congress. Among other things, he said, the United States soon will have a civilian guard force with security clearances at all embassy construction sites.

U.S. officials also have filed a multimillion-dollar claim against the Soviet Union over construction problems connected with the new U.S. embassy in Moscow and they are considering expanding the claim to include complaints against the Soviet-planted bugging system. The claims will be heard by a panel of three arbitrators in Stockholm.

Billionaire Boys Club Leader Convicted In Body-Less Death

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Joe Hunt, the man behind the Billionaire Boys Club, expressed shock at his conviction of first-degree murder in a case where there was no body, and insisted the victim would turn up alive.

Hunt, 27, convicted by a state Superior Court jury of first-degree murder and robbery in the shotgun slaying of Ronald Levin of Beverly Hills, faces the death penalty or life in prison without the possibility of parole.

"It's just astonishing," he told reporters after Wednesday's verdict. "I think it's a tragedy because Ron Levin's alive, and I'm sure he'll be found in the next couple of years with the sort of visibility he had recently."

Levin, a self-described con man, vanished June 6, 1984, after tricking Hunt in a commodities hoax. His body has not been found.

Hunt and his attorney, Arthur Barans, claim Levin is alive and perpetrating the ultimate con on Hunt and his band of young investors — prep school buddies who hail from some of Southern California's most socially prominent families.

The case enters the penalty phase May 11, when the same jury will decide Hunt's sentence.

"My only responsibility is to keep my chin up, and that's what I do best," Hunt said before he was ordered held without bond.

Court spectators gasped as the verdicts were read after the jury deliberated for a little over two days. Hunt wiped his face with his hand and looked at jurors, then his girlfriend, who was crying in the first row.

"I was very happy," said Martin Levin, the victim's father, who was in court with his wife, Carol. "He was guilty ... and I'm glad they got him. I wish he would die."

The case was a difficult one for the prosecution, which had to convince the jury Levin was dead even though there was no corpse.

Complicating matters was testimony from two witnesses who claimed to have seen Levin alive after his alleged murder. Last week, a City News Service reporter said he saw Levin in September at a movie.

"When you work so hard and so long for something, obviously you're pleased when you get the result you were looking for," said Deputy District Attorney Fred Wapner.

Wapner said Levin was killed in retaliation for tricking Hunt's group in a commodities investment hoax. He alleged Hunt shot Levin, disfigured his face with shotgun blasts, and then buried his body in remote Soledad Canyon.

An average, 14 cubic-foot, frost-free refrigerator costs approximately $11.63 per month to operate at today's electricity prices; a non-frost free refrigerator costs $7.13 to operate.

"I'm extra-disappointed," Barans said.

The prosecution contends Hunt, who was expelled from the Chicago Mercantile Exchange for misconduct at age 24, bilked investors who were dazzled by his apparent brilliance.

Hunt, who is charged with a related slaying in northern California, founded the Billionaire Boys Club as a way of amassing fast fortunes for himself and his former classmates at the Harvard School, an exclusive prep school.

Levin mixed with club members until, as a practical joke, he led Hunt to believe he had turned a $5 million commodity investment for Hunt into a $13 million profit, prosecutors say. He then admitted the hoax.

The night of the murder, the prosecution argued, Hunt and an accomplice forced Levin to write a check for $1.5 million in compensation before killing Levin. Wapner said Hunt needed the cash to shore up the club's failing reserves.

The prosecution contends Levin was slain by Hunt and Jim Pittman, the club's security chief. Pittman's first trial ended in a jury deadlock. He faces a retrial.

Space Station Role Dispute 'Resolved'

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

COCOA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The National Security Council apparently has settled a dispute about Pentagon use of the U.S. space station that had foreign partners threatening to pull out of the project, a NASA official says.

In agreements being drawn up on operation of the space station, the Defense Department had requested explicit language that would reserve the military's right to use the station for "national security purposes."

Instead, the NSC apparently has gone with wording favored by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the State Department and allies, said Andrew J. Stofan, director of the space station program. This wording would not rule out military research, but would describe the station as being "for peaceful purposes consistent with international law."

"It looks like the differences have been resolved," Stofan told reporters Wednesday at the 24th Space Congress. "I understand agreement has been reached."

Stofan said he didn't have all the details of the NSC settlement and that some additional work might have to be done. But he said he is confident "the problem is going away."

The dispute had reached the top level of government earlier this month when Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger wrote a letter to Secretary of State George Shultz saying the United States should consider excluding its allies from the space station program if they object to having it used for military purposes.

"We must be prepared to go forward alone if the price of cooperation is too high," Weinberger wrote.

The 13-nation European Space Agency, Japan and Canada are contributing work modules and other equipment to the station worth a total of about $4 billion. The station is to be permanently manned starting in 1996.

Stofan said the Pentagon has not specified what it would like to do aboard the station, and probably "just wanted to protect its prerogative."

He said the military could conduct classified research in the space station just as foreign and commercial customers could protect the secrecy of their proprietary experiments on board.

CAR TALK

TWO BELTS BETTER THAN ONE

Your chances of escaping serious injury in an auto crash are much better if you wear both shoulder and lap belts. Auto safety experts who studied 160 accidents in which one or more of the occupants of a car was wearing both shoulder and lap belts found 99 percent of the belted riders escaped with no injury or only minor injuries. Ninety six of the accidents studied were of the horrendous type (almost demolished cars) in which serious injuries would normally be expected.

Who should be more aware of human safety than military aviation experts? Pilots of all combat aircraft are required to wear both lap and shoulder belts for their safety. You'd be amazed at some of the crashes in which pilots have walked safely away from, thanks to these dual life savers. Isn't your life worth the slight inconvenience?

Poindexter May Not Testify Publicly Until May

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Reacting to a personal appeal from independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, congressional investigators have postponed seeking limited immunity for Thomas Clines, described by Walsh as "a principal in the activities" related to the Iran-Contra affair.

While the House panel probing the affair agreed Wednesday to withhold action on Clines, the legislators did vote to compel the testimony of Adm. John M. Poindexter, President Reagan's former national security adviser, by seeking limited immunity for him.

The Senate committee investigating the matter voted Tuesday to grant immunity for Poindexter and was meeting today to discuss whether to grant immunity to others.

So far, the congressional panels have voted for immunity for more than a dozen major and minor players in the controversy over secret sales of arms to Iran and the purported diversion of profits from those sales to Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Under a plan worked out with Walsh last month, Poindexter may not be questioned in private until May 2, and may not be called to testify in public session until mid-June.

Poindexter is a key witness because he had daily access to President Reagan and is thought to be able to say how much Reagan and his top aides knew about the affair. So far, Poindexter, invoking his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, has refused to testify.

Clines, meanwhile, has been linked to the clandestine network which supplied military aid to the rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist government.

Walsh met privately with the House committee Wednesday to make his pitch that immunity not be given to Clines.

Afterwards, Walsh said, "He (Clines) appears to be a principal in the activities that are under investigation, and that others who have received immunity should be able to produce the substance of what Mr. Clines can give."

Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., chairman of the House panel said, "We took no action with regard to Mr. Clines." But he suggested the panel may reconsider later.

As for other witnesses who have been granted immunity, Walsh said he has placed evidence concerning them under seal. Doing so allows him to use the material in any criminal indictments that might result from his investigation.

Limited immunity compels a witness to testify before Congress but guarantees that the testimony cannot be used in any criminal prosecution. However, the witness can be prosecuted on evidence gathered independently.

Walsh did not directly criticize the congressional panels for seeking immunity, but he said it makes it more difficult for him to build criminal cases.

In general, Walsh said, principal witnesses "should not be given immunity unless there is just no other way of getting the picture over to the public."

Hamilton, responding to Walsh's comments, said, "It is not our intention to put obstacles in the way of the independent counsel. ... But our responsibilities in the end are not his responsibilities."

Israel radio and The Washington Post, meanwhile, said Israeli leaders approved a report Wednesday on their government's role in the Iran-Contra matter.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir,

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin approved the initial section of the report detailing Israel's financial transactions in the affair, the radio said, adding that it would be transferred early next week to the U.S. committees investigating the matter.

The board will continue work on the second part of the report, which is based on the testimony of former Foreign Ministry Director General David Kimche, businessmen Al Schwimmer and Yakov Nimrodi, and Amiram Nir, the prime minister's counter-terrorism adviser, the broadcast said. Israel has refused to allow U.S. investigators to question the four.

The report includes an account of the 1985 situation when Israeli officials and arms merchants were middlemen in the attempt to free the American hostages in Lebanon by selling arms to Iran, the Post said today.

On another matter, Walsh was asked about reports that the Defense Department believes a secret Army unit, established in 1983 and swiftly disbanded, opened a secret Swiss bank account that could have been used later to support the Contras.

Walsh said, "Each week brings something new, and this is just this week's new development."

Clines, 59, is a former high-ranking CIA operative who left the agency in 1978 after it was disclosed that he had ties to Edwin Wilson, who has been convicted of illegally shipping weapons to Libya and is serving a 52-year federal prison term.

In addition, Clines is a close friend of retired Air Force Major Gen. Richard V. Secord. The Tower commission appointed by Reagan to investigate White House national security activities said Secord helped White House officials sell weapons to Iran and was involved in obtaining assistance for the Contras.

Clines was not mentioned by name in the Tower report, but the Senate Intelligence Committee said in a separate report that Clines may have helped open or control Swiss bank accounts into which money from the Iran arms sales was deposited.

According to published reports, Clines did business with officials of Defex-Portugal, a Lisbon weapons dealer that supplied weapons to the Contras through Guatemala in early 1985.

Additionally, Clines was a friend of Thomas Parlow, a Danish weapons agent who chartered the Erria, a freighter that delivered weapons to the Contras.

Clines' long-time acquaintance, Rafael Quintero, has been identified as one of the Cuban-Americans who helped run the Contra resupply operation in Central America.

Neither Clines nor his attorney, John E. Stein, has agreed to interviews since the Iran-Contra affair was disclosed last November.

Nakasone Says U.S. Trade Sanctions Are 'Good Lesson'

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone said today the steep U.S. penalty tariffs on selected Japanese products were regrettable but may have provided a "good lesson" for Japanese and Americans alike, a Foreign Ministry official said.

He said Nakasone was responding to U.S. trade representative Clayton Yeutter, who told the prime minister his office was inundated with phone calls from congressmen asking that certain Japanese goods be excluded from the duties.

The U.S. last week imposed 100 percent tariffs on Japanese color televisions, calculators, power drills and small computers after accusing Japan of selling computer chips overseas below cost and failing to open its market to American-made chips.

Japan denied the charge and has urged Washington to lift the sanctions as soon as possible.

Yeutter said many callers to his office supported the sanctions but feared the tariffs would harm constituents who depend on some Japanese products, said the official, who spoke on condition she not be identified.

The U.S. action against Japan thus had the positive effect of driving home how "deeply interdependent" the American and Japanese economies have become, the official quoted Yeutter as saying.

Nakasone replied that the sanctions, while regrettable, "may have offered a good lesson for both Japanese and Americans," the official said. She quoted Nakasone as saying the sanctions showed both nations how important relations between the two nations have become.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Yoshifune Matsuda later told reporters Nakasone told Yeutter that "the Japanese government has been making its utmost efforts to solve the pending issues."

"We are allies, we are friends, and between friends and allies sometimes there are problems. But it is important that the problems be settled through conversations and discussions," he quoted Nakasone as saying.

Yeutter, who joined U.S. Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng in talks this week on agriculture trade, told Nakasone he felt Japanese officials had "overreacted" to the issues he and Lyng had brought up, the official said.

Lyng and Yeutter have asked Japan to end its ban on importing rice and to end quotas on beef and citrus.

Lyng said Wednesday, "I have been given no encouraging words and go home considerably disappointed."

The Foreign Ministry official said Yeutter told Nakasone the United States was not demanding that Japan abolish its food control system, which gives the government the power to control the distribution of farm products.

She said Yeutter also expressed hope that the dispute over computer chips would not hamper Nakasone's visit to Washington next Wednesday.

In Washington, House Democrats were wrestling with a plan to quantify the dollar value of unfair trade practices by Japan and other countries and to penalize them for failure to reduce their surpluses by 10 percent a year. Japan had a $58.6 billion surplus in trade with the United States last year.

Rep. Richard A. Gephardt, a Missouri Democrat, said Wednesday the measure would force Japan and six other countries with "excessive and unwarranted" trade surpluses to end unfair trade practices or face stiff retaliation.

There is concern in Washington that the trade debate could result in an embarrassment for Nakasone.

Matsuda quoted Yeutter as telling Nakasone, "President Reagan is very much looking forward to your visit although we do have challenges before us in trade."

Talks On Missiles Resume In Geneva

GENEVA (AP) — The superpowers resumed talks today on medium-range nuclear missiles and the United States said it planned to propose new protocols on anti-cheating measures in an eventual treaty banning such missiles in Europe.

The talks, which had been recessed for a month, resumed at 10:30 a.m. (4:30 a.m. EDT) with a one-on-one meeting at the Soviet mission between deputy Soviet delegation head Alexei Obukhov and chief U.S. medium-range missile negotiator Maynard Glitman.

The two men shook hands in brilliant sunshine outside the mission and answered a few shouted questions from journalists before beginning their meeting.

Glitman said his delegation would present "some additional protocols during this round ... on verification points." He did not elaborate.

During the last round the U.S. side proposed what it said was a full treaty text, including anti-cheating provisions that it said were agreed to by the NATO allies.

Obukhov reiterated the Soviet intention to present its own draft treaty during the round, but refused to say exactly when. He said the Soviets "expect to have a treaty this year."

As the two men met, a Japanese Buddhist monk dressed in white and yellow robes stood outside the gates of the Soviet mission beating a drum and chanting. He said he was praying for peace.

The talks on intermediate-range nuclear forces, or INF, resumed two weeks ahead of the other groups in the Geneva arms talks — long-range forces and space and defense systems.

The INF headstart is designed to give the two sides more time "for agreeing upon formulations to be included in a joint draft treaty" being prepared, Obukhov said Tuesday.

Glitman said in a statement Wednesday that his delegation is ready for "serious, intensive and expeditious negotiations," but will not be bound by a timetable.

"There are grounds for optimism about the prospects for reaching an INF agreement," he said. "Difficult issues remain, however, and much hard work lies ahead of us."

Obukhov said the Soviet draft treaty would detail recent proposals by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev on medium-range and shorter-range nuclear missiles.

Gorbachev's proposals include a call for eliminating both sides' medium-range nuclear missiles from Europe — a proposal also included in the U.S. draft treaty.

This would apply to U.S. Pershing 2 and cruise missiles and to Soviet triple-warhead SS-20s and single-warhead SS-4s, all of which have a range of up to 3,400 miles. Each side would retain 100 warheads on its own territory.

Gorbachev proposed eliminating from Europe shorter-range missiles with a range of 300-600 miles as part of the INF agreement.

The Soviets have about 130 of those weapons in East Germany and Czechoslovakia, according to Western estimates.

Five More Generals Retire

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Five more generals retired in the shakeup of the restive Argentine armed forces and the Supreme Court delayed military atrocity trials that sparked three mutinies in a week.

Defense Minister Horacio Jaunarena assured the nation Wednesday that "absolute normality reigns" at all army garrisons. He said the drastic reorganization of the service would be completed today with the swearing in of new chief of staff Gen. Jose D. Caridi.

Caridi was named to the army's top post Monday to replace Gen. Hector Rios Erenu, one of 24 high-ranking officers who either retired or were fired since the mutinies began April 15.

Five generals retired Wednesday, joining 10 who left active duty Monday. Among the most recent retirees was Gen. Ernesto Alais, who headed loyalist troops that surrounded a rebel camp near Buenos Aires last Sunday.

Of the 15 generals being replaced, those who were not dismissed retired in keeping with Argentine army tradition because they were senior to Caridi or to his new deputy, Gen. Fausto Gonzalez.

The mutinies — in the western city of Cordoba, in suburban Buenos Aires and in the northern city of Salta — all ended without bloodshed.

Sri Lankan Demonstrators Demand President Resign

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Warplanes bombed more Tamil guerrilla targets today, and a crowd outside the president's house shouted demands for his resignation over a surge of ethnic violence that has killed nearly 400 people.

Government spokesman Tilak Ratnakara said air force planes struck four targets on the rebel-dominated Jaffna peninsula. Warplanes hit the same region, at the extreme north of this island nation off India, on Wednesday.

Ratnakara said he had no immediate information on casualties from today's raids. He said the air attacks would continue "as and when necessary."

Parliament was called into emergency session to discuss the week-old escalation of the civil war.

"Old man! If you can't solve this problem, let us do it," shouted the crowd of about 400 people outside the home of President Junius R. Jayewardene, who is 80.

The capital is under a 'round-the-clock curfew, but it was lifted for four hours to allow people to buy necessities.

Many of the demonstrators were Buddhist monks or members of the Sri Lankan Freedom Party, both staunch opponents of the Jayewardene's proposals to grant limited autonomy to the minority Tamils in an effort to end a nearly 4-year-old civil war.

Police pushed back the demonstrators but some were allowed to wait to present a letter demanding Jayewardene's ouster.

Since Friday, Tamil terrorism and combat between Tamil separatists and the mostly Sinhalese government forces has killed at least 374 people.

Dad Brings A Male's Touch To World Of Fluff And Fold

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Mr. Mom slide over. Greenville has another super dad for the team bench. At six-foot two, 196 pounds, Denison Garrett Jr. can cook, potty-train and clean with the best of them.

But becoming a contender wasn't easy. A suit and tie, career-man most of his adult life, Garrett only recently perfected the moves necessary to turn grocery shopping into a science, penny-pinching into an art and bed-making into an exercise in faultlessness.

A year of off-season training made the difference.

It all began as a sort of stop-gap measure, a way to fill the time until Garrett could secure a position in Delaware, where he had just moved with his family.

"I knew that within three months I was going to have a job," he said. "I figured I'd get the house settled while my wife was off at work and then I'd concentrate on my profession."

When planning the move from Connecticut to Delaware, Garrett's hopes for securing employment were high, his ego secure. Who other than a truly liberated male would give up his job as a hospital chaplain and follow his wife across three states to let her advance in her chosen career as a marketing analyst for Dupont?

One month longer than the allotted three later, Denison wasn't so confident. "I guess I started to shift into being a house husband at the point that I became aware that the hospital I just knew I was going to get a job at didn't need a chaplain."

Not one to give up easily, Garrett first tried developing alternative careers, before finally accepting that the house and the children, at least for a time, would be his job.

Once he let go, he said his joy became morning sessions with Donohue and coffee. His challenge? Bread — to have the biscuits hot, browned and buttered when everyone sat down at the dinner table.

Although Garrett's stint as a domestic engineer wasn't all bad, he said his experience did have its tedious moments.

One instance he recalled occurred shortly after he took over the kids and the house.

"This woman I met at a seminar when I was still thinking of opening a book store called me and asked if I'd like to get involved in Green Circle — a group that goes around to schools and works with young people.

"First I told her I didn't have the time. I told her I had two kids out on the streets and two in the house and couldn't get away. When she told me the group provided child care I said where do I sign up, because I was so ready to get out of that house.

"I had cabin fever and was suffering from bouts of depression. There I was over 30 with no career, the point when most people have their futures securely in hand," he said.

At one point, his ego became so fragile that Garrett said he had to stop driving his wife to and from work. "It got to be so painful, just knowing that these people, his wife, were working and I wasn't. My whole identity had been tied up in my work."

Garrett joined Green Circle and Tuesdays and Thursdays became his afternoons off — the days when he did something for himself by doing for others. Sunday, Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday he spent figuring out the nuts and bolts of running a home and taking care of a family.

Braiding hair was high on the agenda of "what must be done activities" as three of the Garretts' children are girls. "If I took the girls out during the winter I could put hats on their heads to cover up their hair. In the summer, I had to learn how to plait," he said.

Garrett said he also had to learn how to dress the children, do the laundry, plan daily menus and shop. "I did it all, I told Thelma that I didn't want her to do anything," he said.

A self-admitted organizer, Garrett applied regiment to his tasks. "I began to use my computer as a grocery shopping aid when I realized I was a compulsive shopper."

After making his weekly shopping list, Garrett would type the name of each needed item into his computer and arrange the list by aisle location. "That way when I was on aisle 22, I knew everything I needed to buy. One pass through the grocery store and I was finished."

Less regimented was his relationship with his kids. He said he loved and played with them before becoming a based-at-home dad, but didn't really appreciate them. "I realized actually how great my kids were and became more attached to my daughters than I ever thought I could. I actually became over-protective.

"I used to sit around and think if I ever got a job, who would I let keep the girls, what kind of screening process I would put potential caretakers through. And I thought about child abuse, issues I really didn't think about before."

He even almost potty-trained his two-year-old, Christina.

"We went through the logical process. Feed, wait 15 minutes and put her on the pot. She'd wait and I'd wait. She'd look at me and I'd look at her. I remember thinking that once she did it, she'd need to get praise so I was ready to bring in the cheering section, the other kids" — Holley, 4, Celinda, 8, and David, 12.

"I'd leave her alone, come back and ask 'have you finished?' She'd say 'uh huh' so I'd take her off and nothing. This must have gone on for six months and just when I thought we'd done it, she'd revert. But when it almost happened or I thought it had happened, it was like my favorite team won the Super Bowl. No more pot. No more $16-a-box Pampers."

His wife later trained the child in about a week.

Cooking was just as much fun, just as frustrating. "One time I made gourmet chicken wings. I had sauteed them the night before, got everything perfect, the colors right on the table — yellow corn, reds and greens. I knew that this was going to be The Meal.

"We sat down and my son said 'What's this.'"

"I said, 'It's chicken.'"

"I don't like it," he said.

"Taste it," I said.

"No," he said.

"That's when I said, 'You are going to eat this chicken today and you are going to like it!'"

"I had really slaved over the stove and was furious. He finally did eat one piece and he liked it."

After a time, Garrett wore his role proudly, except around men he did not know well. "People constantly want to know what you do so at a party or a function I'd say consultant or unattached chaplain, because when I'd say Mr. Mom, the conversation would stop. The men could not identify and they'd melt away. The women were more understanding, saw more humor in the situation."

To friends he was Mr. Mom, to the folks at the grocery store he was Mr. Mom. In fact, he said he always will be a bit of Mr. Mom from now on because it's become a part of him.

"I really don't think men understand what goes on with women. How can they unless they can empathize, unless they know what women actually do," he said. "The stress men feel at work is so very different from what women feel at home or feel when they run both a home and a career."

"Taking care of a home is more draining. At first it's exciting, but after the routine becomes established it's very exhausting. I would actually look forward to 11 at night when it was quiet and when no one was making demands on my time," he said.

Would he recommend that other men try what he did? "Yes, as many men as can should try for say three months to reverse roles as much as possible. I guarantee it will strengthen a relationship and maybe even eradicate the phrase just a housewife."

Now assistant vice president for guest relations at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, Garrett has traded his role of house husband for another — commuting dad. He visits his three older children, wife and now potty-trained three-year-old on weekends, but said he hopes his wife will be transferred to the Greenville area soon so the family can join him. "We'd all like to get back to North Carolina. That's where we're from and that's where we'd like to be," he said.

Garrett is a native Pitt Countian. His wife, Thelma Bowden Garrett, is from Montgomery County.

LOCAL MR. MOM — After spending a year as a homemaker, Denison Garrett Jr. is glad to be back in the work force, but said he values the chance he got to experience a world many men never get to explore. (Reflector Photo)

Would You Do It?

What do you think about house husbands? Could you, would you take over the majority of household and child care responsibilities from your wife if necessary?

These questions were posed to a selection of males at The Daily Reflector and the results, according to ECU sociology professor Dr. David Knox, were far from surprising.

Their answers ranged from "I'd do it if I had to" to "it sounds like a good idea if both parties agree," with answers of the later type being less common.

For example: "If my wife made enough to support us, I'd take care of the house, but I wouldn't tell anybody about it."

"Be just a house husband, no way. If I had outside freelance work, I would. Otherwise, my ego would take too much of a beating."

"Surely you jest, I know what my wife does and I know what little I do to help her. I can't even boil water."

"Other than in cases of necessity, I feel they're (men who are house husbands) lazy, not facing reality and are putting themselves in an artificial situation that neither God nor man intended."

Other responses included:

"I'd love to be one, lay around watch TV, have no responsibility what so ever."

"If it had to be done, I'd do it. I can wash and dry clothes, do the dishes and I know how to clean up and cook."

"It depends upon the individual. I would rather work outside the home than in it. I haven't met many women who would rather work in the home, either. But it's a matter of choice or circumstance."

When the poll results were tallied, 20 percent of the men unreservedly supported the practice of house husbanding. Even fewer still are men who actually become house husbands, according to Knox.

"It's rare, very rare to find a practicing house husband and even more rare to find one who will admit it."

The reason? Knox, a specialist in the field of marital relationships, said it's because "males literally are socialized to view themselves in relation to their work. Take a man's work role away from him and he has few alternatives left through which to interpret his existence."

That, he said, is in part where the "real men are out working, pansies stay at home" attitude comes from. "Our system of socialization is designed to ensure that men keep their shoulders to the grind stone and because of this, men often think of themselves as money machines."

Men that do work in the house, whether it be from necessity or choice, generally have several characteristics in common. According to Knox, these variables include a father that was a positive role model for housework, an extreme sense of fair play in terms of domestic work roles or a profession that allows more scheduling freedom.

Family Heirlooms Shown At Meet

A "show and tell" session highlighted the April meeting of the Susanna Coutanch Evans chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Members displayed family heirlooms including an embroidered baby ensemble, a woolen rug hooked with hand-dyed yarns, a gold monogrammed stickpin made from a mid-19th century cufflink, a wooden sugar bucket, a Victorian silver butter dish with ice compartment and a blown glass punch cup.

Among the most unusual items were a set of three labeled glass milk bottles from a South Carolina dairy and a set of garnet and seed pearl jewelry made about 1890.

Mrs. Roy Carawan was welcomed as a guest.

Dr. Lois Staton was meeting hostess.

Things Everyone Should Know

By CHARLES TRUEHEART
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — You have to know a thing or two to get along in the world, it's true. But E. D. Hirsch Jr. thinks the number is closer to 5,000. What's more — and what's getting him a lot of attention these days — he's prepared to tell you exactly what they are.

Open his new book, "Cultural Literacy: What Every American Needs to Know" (Houghton Mifflin) to the fun part — the list at the back — and plunk your finger down somewhere:

- Crimean War
- critical mass
- Cro-Magnon man
- Crockett, Davy

- crocodile tears
- Croesus, rich as

Feeling culturally literate? Keep scanning the list.

- empiricism
- Empyrean
- encyclical
- endocrine
- enfant terrible
- Engels

If this exercise doesn't draw a little trickle of uncertainty, you're Hirsch's kind of American: the "ideal common reader."

On the other hand, if it begins to make you uneasy, you're getting the message: People may still be learning to read and write, but those skills don't matter much if the words draw a blank. American schools, Hirsch contends, have abandoned their most essential function: the transmission of national culture.

His list is getting him a lot of ink and air time. Hirsch, professor of English at the University of Virginia, isn't used to it, but it is fair to say he is adapting quickly.

A speech he delivered in San Francisco two weeks ago, to a convention of reporters who cover education, put Hirsch's ideas about cultural literacy into the national publicity pipeline. The returns are already coming in: TV coverage, radio spots, magazine interviews and letters.

But his mission is influence, not celebrity, and coming from him, even the mission sounds modest. He wants nothing more — which is to say nothing less — from his fellow citizens than a capacity to say uh-huh confidently and convincingly in encounters with Rorschach test, Rosenberg case and Roses, war of the.

Not everyone says uh-huh to Hirsch's method, however. The avowedly subjective genesis of his list — he and a couple of his colleagues, physicist James Trefil and historian Joseph Kett, consulted fellow professors for suggestions — already has prompted accusations of elitism. On another level, because to some the list smacks of "Trivial Pursuit" (Highbrow Edition), Hirsch has been faulted for fomenting a cult of dilettantism.

Hirsch has a ready answer to the latter charge.

"If you take an educated person," he says, "you will find at the edges of his or her information a lot of vague superficial knowledge, which is nonetheless extremely useful." state.

Hirsch is pleased that he's touched a nerve of national frustration with shoddy, mechanistic teaching. "I'm kind of like John Q. Public with particularly delicate antennae," he says, placing his hands near his receding hairline and wagging his index fingers skyward.

The list, however, is only a device. It forms the appendix to a slender book that attempts to make Hirsch's case for educational reform.

In the years before World War I, "the literate culture was very effectively transmitted by the schools," he says. But the "skills-centered" learning and the "cafeteria-style" curricula that have come to dominate educational theory for most of the last half-century ignored what Hirsch calls "the teaching of commonly shared, traditional information."

He concedes that these "wrong and pernicious ideas" were well intentioned. "Most people didn't realize that reading requires all this constructive activity that's based on specific information. If (educational reformer John) Dewey had realized some of these basic facts... he would have adjusted his theories." As he told the education writers in San Francisco, "literacy can never be separated from the specific information that makes up literate culture."

The list in his new book is only a rough draft. By this time next year, Houghton Mifflin will have published a refined version, amplified as a full-fledged dictionary of cultural literacy, complete with brief need-to-know definitions.

"The dictionary is more ambitious and really more important," Hirsch says, "because it will suggest to people who are outsiders in the literate culture, 'What do these characters really know that I'm being excluded from?'"

Whatever you may think about the value of lists, the one in the appendix to "Cultural Literacy" is hard to resist.

It is full of idioms (pop the question), villains (Qaddafi, Muammar), medical nomenclature (hypothalamus), aphorisms (road to hell is paved with good intentions), The, bureaucratise (Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation), foreign terms (pro rata), places (Dien Bien Phu), legends (Mata Hari), legislation (Volstead Act), songs (John Brown's Body), psycho-babble (role conflict), slogans (Remember the Maine!) and magic (supply side).

As an alphabetical sequence, the list yields provocative combinations (Burr-Hamilton duel and bury the hatchet) and unlikely neighborhoods (Loyola, Saint Ignatius of and Lucifer).

There are odd inclusions and omissions — Norman Mailer is on the list while Saul Bellow, Graham Greene and Vladimir Nabokov are not — but Hirsch seems to enjoy having them pointed out. George McGovern but not Hubert Humphrey? "He should be on there." Alger Hiss but not Whitaker Chambers? "What's your feeling about that?"

There's one other thing about the list that "worries" Hirsch. The terms drawn from the humanities and social science spheres, he says, "describe what literate people tend to know." Those from the natural sciences, on the other hand, are more wishful; they prescribe "what they should know."

Today's Animals Need Stimulation

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

The world is so beset with problems, I am reluctant to focus on a new one, but we're all compassionate adults, so here goes.

Domestic animals are bored. For the most part, the majority of household pets are unemployed, have no appointments scheduled, no parties to attend and no responsibilities.

Once they get up, sniff a tree, eat their breakfast and lick their underside, it's downhill.

Their lives are basically the pits. They can be digging in a flower bed a mile away and when their owner calls them, they break four legs to get back only to hear, "I just wanted to know where you were."

They hang around under the kitchen table for 15 or 20 years waiting for something to drop or press their noses against the door for hours until someone figures they want to go out. To get a car ride, they either have to have a hysterectomy or start scratching vigorously. They never know whom they're supposed to bark at and whom they're supposed to lick.

We had a dog once whose only function was to bite thighs and sleep. Every time the doorbell rang, he would beat us to the door and get in position to nip the leg of anyone standing there. That accomplished, he went back to bed. But after a while, even that wasn't any fun anymore.

People might sit around and say, "So what! Everyone's bored!" if it weren't for the fact that animals in the wild have found a solution to their problem. They are getting high to relieve stress and boredom.

Llamas in Peru and koala bears in Australia get zonked eating coca leaves which contain cocaine. Grasshoppers that eat wild marijuana leaves jump abnormally high. Elephants seek fermented ripe fruit, and I have only to look out my window and see drunken birds by the hundreds nipping at fermented pyracantha bushes. It's not a pretty sight.

Studies have shown that animals escape much the same way some humans do when they have nothing to do. I read where a psychologist at UCLA actually created a singles bar for research rats, complete with a recreational area imitating a park and a lounge where the rats can drink water or an alcohol solution.

Over a period of eight or nine months, a large percentage of the rats opted for the alcohol. They became very depressed.

It was suggested that domestic pets should try to fill their lives with meaning and purpose. So, all of you dogs and cats and birds out there who are dumping and trashing on this column, I beg you to knock over a garbage can, fetch a shoe, take up ballet, chase a ball under the sofa, ring a bell, stage a bark-off, get a job or join the service, but do something! Don't let the rats win.

Christmas Stamp

McADENVILLE, N.C. (AP) — U.S. Postal Service officials say the Gaston County town of McAdenville can have a special cancellation stamp for Christmas-season mail this year to commemorate the annual light display that draws more than one million visitors to the town.

"It has been approved, and it will be used Dec. 1 to Dec. 31," said Paula Emerson, public affairs officer for the U.S. Postal Service office in Charlotte. "I'm sure they will be getting requests from all over the country for cancellations because people want them as mementos."

Employees of Stowe-Pharr Mills have strung lights throughout town each fall for the past 31 years.

Abby Urged To Continue Campaign

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday, a very dear friend of mine died after losing a long and painful battle with lung cancer. Although she would not want anyone to cry over her death, I hope that the flood of tears she caused by leaving us will extinguish more than a few cigarettes.

If my friend's tragic death is to have any meaning, let it be to change our government's idiotic policies toward tobacco: Part of it pays farmers to grow it; another part warns people not to smoke it; yet a third explores ways to make it "safe."

Abby, don't ever relax your campaign to get smokers to stop smoking, and to urge those who don't, never to start! — AL STROHLEIN, SANDIEGO

DEAR AL: You can count on me to carry on my anti-smoking campaign — and that's a promise.

DEAR ABBY: My husband's 24-year-old son, "Clyde," does not live with us — he lives with a young woman. Clyde asked if they could spend the night at our home after attending a reception in our area. At bedtime, I offered the young lady our guest bedroom, Clyde was assigned our 14-year-old son's bedroom, and our son was given a sleeping bag.

Clyde and the lady went upstairs to get ready for bed. Shortly thereafter, my husband and I retired.

At 3 a.m. the lights were still burning in our son's bedroom, which remained unoccupied. (They obviously disregarded our wishes that they occupy separate rooms.)

The following morning at breakfast, our 14-year-old son was aware that this unmarried couple had slept together and made the comment that maybe now he would become an "uncle"!

If my stepson can come into our home and share a bed with his girlfriend, what would prevent our son from assuming that it would be OK for him to do during his courting time?

Neither my husband nor I said anything to Clyde the next morning, but we were certainly upset about his judgment. What do you think? — OLD-FASHIONED AT 50

DEAR OLD-FASHIONED: Your stepson and his live-in ladyfriend should have respected your wishes in your home. You need not label yourself "old-fashioned" for disapproving of an unmarried couple sleeping together in your home.

In your home, you set the rules — in their own home, they can sleep five in a bed if they wish.

You and your husband should have said something the following morning in the presence of your 14-year-old to impress upon him that you do not approve of unmarried couples sleeping together.

DEAR ABBY: With reference to an "indoor multilevel parking facility," I think your description covers it perfectly. Though I have never heard one called such, I immediately knew what you were referring to.

As for the Indianapolis reader who criticized you for it, I think he belongs in an indoor multilevel padded confinement facility, government-managed. Very truly yours, ROBERT H. TRAMMELL, ANDERSON, S.C.

Stock And Market Reports

By The Associated Press
HOGS: Trend is 50 cents lower at N.C. buying stations. Kinston, Spivey's Corner, Murfreesboro, Siler City and Robersonville, 50.50; Clinton, Fayetteville, Dunn, Pink Hill, Pine Level, Chadbourne, Ayden, Laurinburg and Benson 50.50; Wilson 50.50; Rowland 50.00. Sows: (500 pounds up) Fayetteville 45.00; Wallace 46.00; Spivey's Corner 46.00; Rowland 46.00.

BROILERS: The North Carolina fob dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 44.50 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A percent 2 1/2 to 3 pounds birds. Too few sized of the loads offered have been confirmed with a preliminary weighted average of too few cents. The market is steady and the live supply is adequate for a moderate to good demand. Average weights desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Thursday was 1,922,000, compared to 1,801,000 last Thursday.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn 1 cent lower at mostly 1.84-1.93 in East and mostly 1.96-2.06 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans steady at mostly 5.05-5.24 in East and mostly 5.09-5.15 in the Piedmont; new crop wheat 2.43-2.79. Exchange rates for P.I.K. certificates were steady and ranged from 101 to 104 percent of face value.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was mixed today in an atmosphere of caution after the wide swings of the past two sessions. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial rose 9.65 to 2,295.59 in the first half hour of trading. But losers outnumbered gainers by about 8 to 7 in the overall tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues. Volume on the Big Board came to 13.10 million shares in the first half hour of trading. Before the market opened, the Commerce Department reported that the gross national product grew at a 4.3 percent annual rate, after adjustment for inflation, in the first quarter of the year.

Phone Bills

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Several hundred Sam Houston State University students who used codes uncovered by computer buffs to make free long-distance telephone calls have promised to pay under an amnesty agreement. About 300 of more than 1,000 students who used the codes have agreed to the amnesty plan. The students are suspected of making at least $150,000 in calls since Aug. 1 without paying for them, said Marvin Thomas, chief investigator with Star Tel of Bryan-College Station.

Drug Dog

TAZEWELL, Tenn. (AP) — A drug-sniffing dog on its way to a school anti-drug demonstration nosed out a bag of marijuana, leading to the arrest of a man across the street from the school, police said. Claiborne County Sheriff George Malone said he wants to buy a dog to combat drugs and arranged for Charlie, a German shepherd from the Scott County Sheriff's Department, to show his stuff. The dog was brought to Claiborne County High School for an anti-drug program earlier this month, but as officers led him toward the school they noticed two men in a car across the street and decided to question them, Malone said. "The officer asked them if they'd care if the dog sniffed their car and they said no," Malone said. The dog sniffed out a small bag of marijuana in a man's right hip pocket, he said. The 28-year-old man was charged with possession of less than one ounce of marijuana, Malone said.

with 565 up, 1,043 down and 334 unchanged. Big Board volume totaled 185.93 million shares, against 191.34 million in the previous session.

Hello, NBA!

NBA Board Okays Charlotte, Three Other Cities For League

NEW YORK (AP) — The NBA will have four more teams before the end of the decade, and rotating them among divisions might make even devoted fans dizzy.

The NBA Board of Governors on Wednesday accepted the recommendation of its Expansion Committee and accepted Charlotte, N.C., into the league for the 1988-89 season and Minneapolis in 1989-90. The board then went beyond the committee's suggestion that it choose between two Florida cities and invited both, Miami in 1988 and Orlando in 1989.

Commissioner David Stern immediately had to field questions about diluted talent, odd numbers and division lineups with no regard for geography.

Stern said that, even with expansion, the NBA would have fewer teams than the 28 fielded by the NBA and the American Basketball Association before merger in 1976.

"Twenty-seven teams might sound like an illogical number, but it's certainly no more illogical than 23," Stern said.

The location of three of the four new teams in the East complicated the divisional alignments, so the governors adopted a rotating system that has every new team spending at least one season in both the Eastern and Western conferences.

In 1988-89, Charlotte will compete in the Atlantic Division and Miami in the Midwest, with Sacramento moving permanently to the Pacific.

In 1989-90, Charlotte and Minneapolis will compete in the Midwest, Orlando in the Central and Miami in the Atlantic.

In 1990-91, Minneapolis and Orlando will move to the Midwest, Charlotte to the Central and Miami will stay in the Atlantic.

In 1991-92, Miami and Orlando will compete in the Atlantic, Charlotte in the Central and Minneapolis in the Midwest.

"This system will give fans in these new franchise cities a chance to see all the stars of the NBA several times in the first three years," Stern said. "In 1991, the teams will settle into their most logical geographical divisions, which we hope will enable them to build rivalries with existing teams in the same area."

The surprise of the day was the decision by the governors to accept both Florida teams.

"It just wouldn't have been fair to choose between two equal Florida applicants," Stern said. "We decided that the only proper thing to do was take both."

Stern said the governors' vote to take the four teams into the league with a $32.5 million entry fee was unanimous, although only an 18-5 majority was required.

"The dilemma between Miami and Orlando simply was that they are in the same state," said Phoenix Suns owner Richard Bloch, chairman of the NBA Expansion Committee.

Explaining why only Charlotte and Minneapolis were in the original recommendation, Bloch said, "If we were limited to three expansion teams, we didn't feel that two of them could be in the same state."

"I don't know what did the trick, frankly," Miami Mayor Xavier Suarez said. "I'm just happy that it happened. We're extremely excited. We think it's just what Miami needs."

"The earmark of a great rivalry has already been started. Orlando and Miami do not need a lot to spark a rivalry," Orlando General Manager Pat Williams said at a party celebrating the NBA decision. "It's going to be one of the classic rivalries in all of pro sports."

Before any rivalries can begin, the teams first will need players.

Two expansion drafts, one in 1988 for Charlotte and Miami and another in 1989 for Minneapolis and Orlando, and college drafts will be used to man the new teams.

Each of the 23 existing teams will protect eight players in each expansion draft and each will lose one player each year. In the college drafts of 1988 and 1989, the new teams will choose eighth and ninth.

The Charlotte team is tentatively known as the Spirit. The others will be the Minnesota Timberwolves, the Orlando Magic and the Miami Heat.

"All the pro teams in Minnesota are called Minnesota," said Marv Wolfenson, who shares ownership of the Timberwolves with Harvey Ratner. "Minneapolis and St. Paul are really just one big metropolitan area."

Ratner compared the experience of working for and receiving an expansion franchise to that of having a child.

"Anyone who has children knows the excitement of the time just before and after the birth," Ratner said. "We had a lot of the same emotions and anxieties."

The Timberwolves expect to play in a downtown Minneapolis arena that would seat 18,000. Construction of that arena has not begun. If it is not ready by the start of the 1989-90 season the team will play in the Metrodome, home of baseball's Twins and the NFL Vikings.

"We hope to get construction started this spring," Ratner said. "We are shooting for starting out in the new arena in 1989, but we do have the Metrodome to fall back on."

Charlotte will play in the 23,500-seat Charlotte Coliseum, currently under construction and scheduled to be ready July 1, 1988.

Smith's Arm, McGraw's Bat Pace 10-2 Victory As ECU Downs Carolina

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

CHAPEL HILL — East Carolina pitcher Gary Smith isn't considered the Pirates' ace but he sure looked like it against North Carolina, limiting the Tar Heels to five hits in route to a 10-2 college baseball victory Wednesday.

"That was his longest game of the year," said ECU coach Gary Overton. "We felt like there was a need for a left-handed pitcher against Carolina. They have strong left-handed hitters."

"I think today he pitched. He didn't throw. He picked his spots."

Smith struck out four and walked five. He scattered the five hits over nine innings.

Meanwhile, he was getting offensive support from his teammates, who rapped out 17 hits and went through five Tar Heel pitchers.

Jay McGraw led the way, going 3-5 with two homers and five RBI. Steve Sides also collected three hits and Calvin Brown had a solo home run.

John Thomas was the only Pirate who didn't get a hit but he more than made up for it with a great fielding play, robbing Jesse Levis of a two-run homer with an over-the-fence catch in the sixth inning.

McGraw got ECU going in the sixth when he knocked a three-run homer that broke a 2-2 tie.

David Ritchie had opened the sixth with a single, his first hit in nine games. John Adams followed that up by reaching on a walk. Both runners advanced on a sacrifice by Sides. McGraw then came up and cleared the bases with his fifth home run of the year.

"I've been seeing the ball pretty good at the plate," McGraw said. "I've been hitting the ball pretty good (but) I was looking forward to seeing somebody who threw harder."

McGraw got his wish in UNC starter David Trautwein, who gave up 10 hits in five innings.

McGraw was far from finished. He added a two-run home run in the eighth off reliever Doug Torborg. He drove home Mike Sullivan with the shot to make it 7-2.

ECU went on to add three more runs in the ninth.

With two outs, David Ritchie and John Adams each singled and came home on Sides' double. Sullivan then came up and singled home Sides to complete the Pirates' scoring.

"It was a big win in that it came against a quality club on the road," Overton said. "When we took the lead we didn't die. We kept coming."

ECU surprised the Tar Heels early by jumping on Trautwein for 10 hits in the first five innings, but still had only two runs to show for it.

"Trautwein started the season as their number one pitcher," Overton said. "I was surprised when we saw him today. I wasn't surprised at the way we hit him. We were swinging the bats well (but) we couldn't get the timely hit and that is a credit to Carolina."

It was McGraw who then provided the timely hits.

"I feel like we can hit with anybody," he said. "I feel like, overall, we played a great game. We never really did give up. Some games we've gotten down (but this time) we kept our intensity."

The Pirates took the early lead in the third when Sullivan doubled, went to third on an error and scored on a single by Brown.

UNC came right back to tie it on Devy Bell's solo homer. It was the 53rd of his career, an Atlantic Coast Conference record.

The Tar Heels took their only lead of the game shortly after that when Howard Freiling singled, stole second and went to third on an error before coming home on Tom Nevin's ground out.

In the sixth, UNC had a chance to draw within 5-4 but Thomas came up with his run-saving catch.

With two outs, Paul Devlin had singled and Levis was at the plate. He ripped a long shot to the right field fence. Thomas leaped up and caught the ball behind the fence and quickly killed the Tar Heels' rally.

"If he didn't make that catch, they score two runs and it changes the whole complexion of the game," Overton said.

From that point on, Smith allowed only two hits and kept UNC from getting runners in scoring position.

ECU improves to 19-8 heading into this weekend's series with UNC-Wilmington which could decide the Colonial Athletic Association title.

"I think this is a boost going into the UNCW series," Overton added.

Benetti Added To Steele's Staff

Chris Benetti, a part-time assistant coach at the University of Wisconsin last season, has been named as a full-time assistant at East Carolina by newly-named basketball coach Mike Steele, it was announced Wednesday.

The naming of Benetti, 29, completes Steele's staff, which also includes Dan Bell, a former assistant coach at Marshall University.

Benetti worked this past season with the Big Ten Wisconsin program for head coach Steve Yoder. Prior to joining the Badgers, he was an assistant coach for two seasons at Laredo (Texas) Junior College.

The Clinton, Ind., native's association with Steele dates back to 1982 when he served as an assistant coach for the new Pirate coach at DePauw University for two seasons.

"Chris worked for me for two years at DePauw and was by far the hardest working and most organized assistant I had during my time there," Steele said.

"He has an excellent background of working on the junior college level and also in the Big Ten. But the biggest plus is that we are familiar with each other since we had the opportunity to work together at DePauw."

Benetti received his undergraduate degree from MacMurray College in Jacksonville, Ill., in 1980. He earned his master's degree from DePauw in 1984.

Benetti and his wife, Shawn, had one child, Meagan.

Former Cowboy Bethea Is Dead

HAMPTON, Va. (AP) — Larry Bethea, a former first-round draft choice of the Dallas Cowboys, has died of a gunshot wound to the head, a Hampton General Hospital official said today.

The 30-year-old Bethea, a defensive lineman for the Cowboys from 1978-83, was pronounced dead on arrival at the hospital at 2 a.m. EDT, the official said.

Police did not immediately release any information concerning Bethea, who earlier this year received a four-year suspended prison sentence for stealing $64,000 from his mother.

Newport News Circuit Judge J. Warren Stephens also ordered Bethea on Jan. 23 to serve two years on probation and repay the money took from an attic safe in the Newport News home he shared with his mother Alice. The money represented her life's savings.

Bethea was arrested Aug. 4 by Dallas police with $61,375 in cash in his pockets after he allegedly accosted his estranged wife, Gloria. Dallas police, summoned by Gloria Bethea, found her bruised and her lip bloodied.

Bethea's mother reported the next day that $64,000 was missing.

"I feel grateful to the Commonwealth that it understood some of my total background and situation, and that I'm not a person to cause problems," Bethea said after the sentencing.

"I got a little confused in the big picture, and I hurt my family," he said.

Bethea pleaded guilty in 1985 to setting three fires in Mount Rainer National Park in Paradise, Wash. He was ordered to pay $1,000 to the park to cover the cost of fighting the fires.

Rose, A-G Pace Trophy Races

J.R. Rose and Ayden-Grifton lead their respective conferences following winter sports program completion in the Wachovia Trophy standings.

The trophy is given annually to the top school in each of the athletic conferences across the state. Points are generally awarded based on the finish of the various teams in each sport, but each conference determines its own method for awarding points.

Rose leads the Big East 4-A Conference race with a total of 60.5 points. Rose had first place finishes in both boys' and girls' basketball during the 1986-87 season.

Northern Nash is second with 50 followed by Wilson Fike with 44 and Elizabeth City Northeastern with 41.5, Wilson Hunt with 40.5, Rocky Mount with 37, Kinston with 18.5 and Wilson Beddingfield with 18.

Ayden-Grifton leads the 2-A Eastern Plains Conference race with 28.5 points after earning 15 points in the winter. The Chargers placed first in boys' basketball to help it along the way.

North Pitt ranks second with 25.75 followed by Farmville Central with 24.25, Greene Central and 16.25, Charles B. Aycock with 14.25, Pamlico with 13.25 and South Lenoir with 7.25.

In the 2-A Northeastern Conference, Plymouth, which took first place in wrestling and boys' basketball, leads the way with 63 points. Plymouth earned 34 points in the winter season.

Edenton Holmes is second with 59, closely followed by Northampton East with 58, Roanoke with 51, Roanoke Rapids with 46, Ahoskie with 38 and Williamston with 29.

North Edgemore heads the 1-A Tobacco Belt Conference standings with 34.5 points. The Warriors picked up 14.5 points in the winter with a first place tie in boys' basketball.

Belhaven is second with 31.5 followed by Chocowinity with 29.5, Aurora with 23.5, Columbia with 21, Bath with 16.5, Creswell with 15, Jamesville with 11, Mattamuskeet with seven and Bear Grass with five.

Standings in the Coastal 3-A Conference were turned in, according to Wachovia officials.

Trevino's Hit Is Even Sweeter

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

One night earlier, Alex Trevino had come to the plate as a pinch-hitter after Mike Marshall had homered, then circled the bases while taunting opposing Manager Roger Craig of San Francisco.

The pitcher was reliever Scott Garrelts, and his first pitch sent Trevino sprawling to the ground and the two teams rushing onto the field.

Wednesday night, Trevino again was pinch-hitting against Garrelts. This time he swung at the first pitch, hitting a game-winning two-run double as the Los Angeles Dodgers defeated the Giants 5-3.

"That made the hit even sweeter," Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda said, referring to Tuesday night's incident.

Trevino said it didn't come to his mind.

"I don't think of things like that," he said. "I just know we won two games, two come-from-behind games."

Mike Krukow, the Giants' 20-game winner last season but 0-3 this year, got himself into trouble with a two-base throwing error to open the ninth.

"It's very difficult to get that far in a game and lose it because of an error," he said. "It's a very bitter loss. Because of what happened last night (Tuesday), we really wanted to win this game and the series."

The Dodgers, who lost their first five games of the season, went over .500 for the first time, raising their record to 9-8.

Krukow fielded a grounder and threw wildly to first trying to get pinch-hitter Len Matuszek, who went to second on the play. Steve Sax singled bringing on both Garrelts and Trevino.

After Trevino's double into the right field corner scored both runners, he went to third on a sacrifice by Mariano Duncan and scored on a wild pitch.

Fernando Valenzuela allowed seven hits, including three by Candy Maldonado, and struck out 12 while walking only one in running his record to 3-0. Tom Niedenfuer pitched the ninth and got his first save.

Padres 6, Reds 3

Kevin Mitchell drove in a career-high four runs to lead San Diego over Cincinnati. Mitchell knocked in a pair of runs with a third-inning double and hit a two-run homer in the sixth.

The third baseman came into the game with just one homer and three RBI.

It was San Diego's second straight victory, the first time this season the 4-12 Padres have won consecutive games.

Starter Ed Whitson, 2-2, got the victory despite giving up home runs to Sal Butera and Kal Daniels. It was the Reds' fifth defeat in 15 games. Expos 7, Phillies 3

Tim Wallach's leadoff homer and Mitch Webster's bases-loaded triple highlighted a six-run sixth inning and Montreal went on to defeat Philadelphia.

Neal Heaton, 2-1, overcame a shaky first inning to get the win, allowing four hits, striking out five and walking one in 7 2-3 innings before being relieved by Andy McGaffigan.

Wallach led off the sixth by hitting a 3-2 pitch from Joe Cowley, 0-3, over the left field fence. Alonzo Powell had a two-run single and Webster's triple capped the inning. Juan Samuel had a two-run homer for Philadelphia in the eighth.

Mets 8, Pirates 7

Tim Teufel drove in New York's first three runs, and Mookie Wilson and Kevin McReynolds homered before the Mets held on to edge Pittsburgh.

The Mets led 7-1 before Pittsburgh made a run for the lead, capped by ninth-inning home runs by Sid Bream and Barry Bonds.

Ron Darling, 2-0, contributed a run-scoring double and was credited with the victory after allowing four runs and seven hits over 6 2-3 innings. Gene Walter, David Cone and Jesse Orosco followed Darling, with Orosco earning his fifth save as the Mets downed the Pirates for the 17th time in their last 18 meetings.

Cubs 5, Cardinals 4

Hitting only .157 going into the game, Andre Dawson connected for his third career grand slam to cap a five-run seventh inning and power Chicago over St. Louis. Dawson's home run, his third of the year, came off St. Louis relief ace Todd Worrell.

"I hit it good," Dawson said. "I knew that the ball would either leave the park or would be up against the wall. I didn't really swing that hard, but I hit it in the right place."

The Cards, with Jack Clark hitting the first of his two solo home runs, had built a 3-0 lead after four innings.

But in the Cubs' seventh, Leon Durham and Gary Matthews, pinch-hitting for winner Rick Sutcliffe, 3-1, both singled. Bill Dawley, 0-2, relieved St. Louis starter Tim Conroy after Bob Dernier walked to load the bases. Dawley then walked Ryne Sandberg to force home Durham before Worrell relieved and gave up Dawson's bases-loaded homer.

Astros 6, Braves 0

Left-hander Jim Deshaies gave up four hits and struck out a career-high 11 in seven innings as Houston defeated Atlanta to remain undefeated at home this season. Deshaies, 1-0, walked two in his first start of the season, while Larry Anderson and Dave Smith finished up.

Bill Doran led off the first with an inside-the-park home run. It was the first inside-the-park home run in the Astrodome since July 3, 1983.

Glenn Davis led off the Astros' two-run fourth with his second homer of the season. Singles by Kevin Bass and Jose Cruz, and a walk to Craig Reynolds loaded the bases. Palmer then walked Deshaies, forcing in Bass.

Houston increased its lead to 4-0 in the sixth on a double by Bass and an RBI single by Alan Ashby, then added two more in the seventh on an RBI single by Bass and an RBI grounder by Ashby.

Gant Says Dale Is Driving OK

SPARTANBURG, S.C. (AP) — NASCAR driver Harry Gant says he doesn't have any problems with the way Dale Earnhardt drives, but he says Earnhardt could do himself a favor by banging a few less fenders.

"The only thing I'd say about Earnhardt, in regard to the way he drives, is that the way his car is running and handling, as fast as he is every race, he can win just as easy without hitting anybody," Gant said.

"I guess, the way his car is handling, he just gets impatient and wants to get on around," Gant said. "He could win anyway, and could make more fans, if he'd just win straight out, without hitting anybody."

But neither Gant nor Ken Schrader, who were in Spartanburg on Tuesday to promote the Winston and Winston Open at Charlotte on May 17, said they felt Earnhardt was reckless.

"I don't have much of a problem with Dale," Gant said. "Really, I don't give him much thought at all."

Schrader said Earnhardt is a good driver who is riding a hot streak.

"By no means do I think he has everyone under control. ... But I'll tell you one thing. I don't know what the other drivers would say, but that guy is just super tough."

"He's just plain 'ol out-driving 'em. When the race track goes away, and nothing's right, he still drives hard," Schrader said. "Just plain 'ol out-driving 'em."

Earnhardt has won five of the first seven races on the NASCAR circuit this season, the best start in Winston Cup history. But his hard-driving has been criticized by former driver Coe Marlin, whose son, Sterling, was knocked out of a race at Bristol, Tenn., after being hit by Earnhardt.

The elder Marlin suggested that had Earnhardt been around in the old days, someone would have taught him a lesson — either on the track or off it.

Yankees Post Ninth Straight Win

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

The New York Yankees were determined to play better at home this year. So far, they couldn't be doing any better.

Rickey Henderson and Ron Kittle hit two-run homers Wednesday night and the Yankees won their ninth straight game by beating the Detroit Tigers 4-1.

All nine victories came at Yankee Stadium as New York went 9-0 on its first homestand of the season. The Yankees are 12-3 overall, their best start since 1949.

The Yankees, who were just 41-39 at home last year, are only 1 1/2 games behind Milwaukee in the American League East despite the Brewers' season-opening 13-game winning streak.

"We're playing well," said Manager Lou Piniella, whose team is on the road for 22 of its next 29 games. "We're getting good pitching, we're playing well defensively and tonight we got two timely home runs."

In other AL games, Boston shaded Kansas City 1-0, Oakland edged California 7-6, Baltimore beat Texas 3-2 in 10 innings, Toronto downed Cleveland 6-3, Seattle defeated Minnesota 4-3 and the Milwaukee at Chicago game was rained out.

The Yankees won despite getting just three hits, the homers by Henderson and Kittle and a bloop single by Willie Randolph. New York again played mistake-free ball, having committed only six errors this season.

Bob Shirley won his first game since Sept. 6, 1985. He pitched 5 1-3 innings and allowed four hits, including a home run by Terry Harper, his first hit in 14 at-bats this season.

"I felt a little rusty out there, but that's nothing new," said Shirley, 1-0, a long reliever and spot starter in the past. Since coming to the AL in 1983, Shirley has a 1.79 earned run average in 50 1-3 innings against Detroit.

Reliever Tim Stoddard, making his 1987 debut after being on the disabled list with bursitis, shut out the Tigers on one hit for 2 2-3 innings and Dave Righthetti worked the ninth for his fifth save.

Henderson, who missed three games with a groin pull, hit his second home run of the season in the third inning. Harper homered in the fourth, and Kittle connected in the bottom of the fourth against Frank Tanana, 2-1.

"We're struggling right now and the Yankees are playing great," Tanana said after Detroit's fourth straight loss. "They played great defense in this series and that prevented us from scoring."

"If they play like they played in this series, they're going to be tough to beat."

Red Sox 1, Royals 0
Bob Stanley pitched a four-hitter and Dwight Evans had an RBI single in the fourth inning as Boston beat visiting Kansas City.

The Royals have been shut out in four of their last five games. The Red Sox have won four of five.

Stanley, 2-2, retired the first 13 batters before Bo Jackson doubled. Stanley struck out four and walked none.

Danny Jackson, 0-2, walked Jim Rice leading off the fourth. Rice took third on a single by Don Baylor, who was tagged out in a rundown between first and second. Evans followed with his run-scoring single.

Athletics 7, Angels 6
Stan Javier's first major-league homer, a three-run blow, helped Oakland open up a 7-0 lead, enough to hold off host California.

The Athletics scored twice in the first inning against Mike Witt, 2-2, on Mark McGwire's RBI single and a bases-loaded walk to Mickey Tettleton. Tettleton singled home a run in the third and Javier followed with his homer.

The Angels started their comeback against Curt Young, 2-1, on an RBI single by Brian Downing and a solo homer by Wally Joyner.

Gary Pettis got an inside-the-park homer in the fifth when Oakland center fielder Dwayne Murphy and right fielder Mike Davis collided. Davis was carried off on a stretcher after suffering a concussion and Murphy's right knee, which hit Davis' head, was to be X-rayed.

Darrell Miller hit a solo homer in the Angels in sixth and Downing hit a

Orioles 3, Rangers 2
Ray Knight, the AL's top hitter, walked with the bases loaded in the 10th inning, leading Baltimore over Texas.

The visiting Orioles loaded the bases on a single by Alan Wiggins and a walk to Rick Burleson off Matt Williams, 0-1. Greg Harris retired Cal Ripken Jr. on a line drive, walked Eddie Murray and then struck out Fred Lynn. Knight, batting .423 and 3-for-7 in his career against Harris, walked on a 3-1 pitch.

Net Tourney Set Friday
The Greenville Open Tennis Tournament will get underway Friday at the River Birch Tennis Center.

The men's single draw is the largest ever with 44 players entered. Among those entered is Keith Richardson of Rocky Mount, the top seed, who was ranked among the top 70 in the world a few years ago. The second seed is Fred Robinson of Charlotte, currently ranked first in the state in Men's 30 and over.

Richardson will team up with local pro Allen Farfour, who is ranked fourth in the state in men's singles. They are the top seed. Second seeded is the team of Dean Channel and Randy Bailey, the current state doubles champions in the 25 and over division.

The women's draw is also strong. The number one seed is Susan McDonald of Charlotte. She is currently ranked third in both the state and the south.

Tournament play begins Friday at 10 a.m. and continues through Sunday. The finals are scheduled for 2 p.m. Sunday.

For more information, contact the River Birch Tennis Center at 756-9343.

Steve Carlton and Toronto won in Cleveland.

Singles by Ernie Whitt and Kelly Gruber, a sacrifice and an intentional walk loaded the bases for Iorg. Carlton, 1-2, then left after walking Lloyd Moseby, and George Bell hit a grounder that skipped between third baseman Brook Jacoby's legs, allowing two runs to score.

Hurt Finger Not Expected To Slow Jordan Down

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

Beating the Celtics in Boston Garden is a tough chore even for Michael Jordan, who seems capable of just about anything.

Jordan, who led the NBA in scoring and became only the second player ever to score 3,000 points in a season, averaging 37.1, went on a rampage in the final weeks of the campaign. But he has not had the same kind of success against Boston as against the rest of the league, managing ONLY 29.7 points a game against the Celtics.

And he knows the Celtics, who had the NBA's second-best record at 59-23, hardly ever lose at home. Boston has been beaten only twice in the last 76 home games. In last year's playoff win over the Bulls, Jordan had 63 points in one of the losses.

"I'll go in Thursday and try to get everyone involved," the 6-foot-6 guard said. "I know with a double-team on me, we're going to have to move the ball."

And his teammates, people such as Charles Oakley, Brad Sellers and John Paxson will have to score.

"When they double Michael, I've got to knock the shot down to keep them honest," Sellers said. "Right now, they should be hesitant to double off me. I've been shooting the jumper pretty well lately."

You have to do things better than pretty well to beat the Celtics.

"Every team is confident about their home court," Celtics Coach K.C. Jones said. "Figuring out why we've been so successful is impossible to explain."

Jordan doesn't want an explanation. He wants a cure. If anyone can find one, he's probably the guy.

"He's a very good all-around player," Boston guard Dennis Johnson said before his impending matchup with 'Air Jordan.'

"There's no question when you come into this league, like Michael has, he's only considered one dimensional. The guy can score. But he can do a lot of other things. Hopefully not one guy is going to beat us."

Jordan sprained the middle finger on his right hand at practice Wednesday, but said he did not expect the injury to affect his play. He caught the finger in the net.

In other games tonight, it's Seattle at Dallas, Denver at the Los Angeles Lakers and Golden State at Utah.

On Friday, it's Indiana at Atlanta, Washington at Detroit, Philadelphia at Milwaukee and Houston at Portland.

SuperSonics-Mavericks

The Mavericks won all five meetings with the SuperSonics this year. But both teams need not look farther back than 1984 to see what that can mean.

Seattle had a 4-1 regular season against Dallas that year, then the Mavericks won the playoff series 3-2.

"It was an exciting series and now the Sonics could do the same thing to us that we did to them," Coach Dick Motta said.

Three Students Join Symphony

ECU News Bureau
Three students in the East Carolina University School of Music will appear with the East Carolina Symphony Orchestra in a campus concert set for 3:15 p.m. Sunday in Wright Auditorium.

The three students — soprano Susan Forbes Boykin of Wilson, cellist Robert Byron O'Brien of Columbus, Ga., and pianist David Langevin of New Bedford, Mass. — were selected to perform in the ECU music school's annual concerto competition held earlier this year. Winners were selected in preliminary and final segments by the music faculty.

Ms. Boykin will sing the Rachmaninoff "Vocalise" and the Queen of the Night Aria from Mozart's opera, "The Magic Flute." O'Brien will be featured in Tchaikovsky's "Variations on a Rocooco Theme." Langevin will perform the third movement of Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 for Piano and Orchestra.

The remainder of the program will consist of the orchestra's renditions of the Overture to Richard Wagner's "Rienzi" and the Mendelssohn "Reformation" Symphony, No. 5.

Robert Hause of the ECU School of Music faculty is the orchestra's conductor.

The concert is free and open to the public.

Susan Boykin, a senior and a voice student of Gladys White, has been active in the ECU Opera Theater and has appeared in other music programs at ECU, including the annual Christmas Madrigal Dinner series. She has been a winner in a voice competition sponsored by the National Association of Teachers of Singing, a Young Artist Competition finalist and a member of Sigma Alpha Iota music society. She has also been a Farmville Patrons scholar. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L.H. Boyking of 1504 Woodside Drive, Wilson, Ms. Boykin graduated from James B. Hunt Jr. High School in Wilson. She plans to continue her voice studies at the master's degree level this fall. Ms. Boykin is a candidate for Bachelor of Music degrees in vocal performance and vocal pedagogy.

Robert O'Brien, a graduate student in the ECU School of Music, is the son of John and Edith O'Brien of 1664 Carter Ave., Columbus, Ga., and a student of Selma Gokcen. He holds a bachelor's degree from Peabody Conservatory, where he was a scholarship student with Stephen Kates.

O'Brien was principal cello of the Peabody Chamber Orchestra and assistant principal cello in the Peabody Symphony. He was also first cellist with the contemporary music ensemble at Peabody and appeared as soloist with the Columbus Symphony, the Goshen College Orchestra and the Southeastern Music Center Summer Festival Orchestra.

David Langevin, a junior and candidate for Bachelor of Music degrees in piano performance and piano pedagogy, is a student of Dr. Henry Doskey.

At the age of 12 he was a scholarship winner for studies at the Julliard School of Music in New York and later studied at the New England Conservatory and at Southeastern Massachusetts University.

His parents are Mrs. E.S. Langevin of New Bedford, Mass., and the late Arthur Langevin. Earlier this year Langevin was a winner in the ECU Young Artist Competition sponsored by the music school's Student Forum and was featured soloist with the ECU Symphony at the fifth annual scholarship gala of the Friends of the School of Music.

In March, he returned to New Bedford to perform with the local symphony in a bicentennial concert.

DREAM TRIO — Country music vocalists Linda Ronstadt, left, Emmylou Harris and Dolly Parton, right, take a break as they met recently with reporters in Universal City, Calif., to talk about their collaboration on the album "Trio." The album, which made Billboard's Top 20 in just three weeks, ended a decade of frustrating attempts to unite the three singers. (AP Laserphoto)

Country Music Stars Join Forces For 'Trio' Album

By JEFF WILSON
Associated Press Writer
UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. (AP) — The musical union of Dolly Parton, Linda Ronstadt and Emmylou Harris is finally in harmony after bickering managers, busy schedules and other pressures stalled the collaboration for a decade.

Few albums have been as eagerly awaited by fans as "Trio," a delicately balanced blend of three of the most popular artists in both pop and country music circles. The Warner Bros. LP was in Billboard magazine's Top 20 after three weeks of release.

The three singing stars recently talked about their careers and the 11-song LP in an interview with The Associated Press at the Sheraton Premiere Hotel.

Q: Was there any arguing about who would sing lead?

Parton: We just knew what songs we should do and 99 percent of the time we were in total agreement on what we should and shouldn't do. ... The fact that we are all strong-willed was really good because we all agreed on the music. The music was the boss. We didn't let our personalities or our egos ... get in the way.

Harris: We've got real similar tastes when it comes to this kind of music. We decided we wanted to do an acoustic album. As far as singing lead, the only problem we had was convincing Linda that she had to sing lead on more than one song. We talked her into it.

Ronstadt: We all wanted to do exactly what we pleased, and we were all pleased to do the same thing. We were dreaming the same dream. It was actually Dolly that sort of insisted finally that we sort of divide it up because she felt that it would be perceived ... as one of us hogging it over the other one.

Q: The "Trio" idea has been knocking around for 10 years, reportedly due to infighting among the three record companies representing each of you. What took so long?

Parton: That was part of it, and managers bickering on who was going to be able to work this out. But the big part of it was we didn't have the time to do it properly. When we said we were going to do this project everybody got so excited. ... It put so much pressure on us it scared us to death. ... It is just perfect now. Our careers are in a slight lull right now. ... Linda's last two albums weren't as great as the ones before and Emmylou ain't really settin' the woods on fire and I damn sure ain't, as far as record sales.

Harris: It would be real hard to say what the true reason was because I think time was the biggest enemy. We didn't have a focus at that time. We were so excited. You have to understand that when we heard each other sing together it was like a new toy. It took us awhile to decide we needed to focus on one particular kind of music.

Ronstadt: It wasn't really any of those things. Our lives weren't very well organized. Mine and Emmy's lives were bouncing off the moon. All three of us were amazingly busy with careers that seemed to have taken their own lives. ... So we just decided we wouldn't be in a hurry and we wouldn't feel any pressure from anybody or anything.

Two-Horse Tulip
 For many gardeners, colorful tulips are one of the most welcome signs of spring. The tulip is native to Asia. The first cultivated varieties appeared in the Eastern Mediterranean. In 1554, an Austrian diplomat visiting Turkey brought bulbs back to Europe. By the 1630s, "tulipomania" struck. In Germany and Holland, tulip prices soared. People even speculated in tulip "futures." One tulip dealer reportedly sold a single bulb in exchange for a carriage and two horses.

DO YOU KNOW — What do gardeners mean by the term "forcing"?

WEDNESDAY'S ANSWER — Myopia is commonly called nearsightedness.

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY April 24
GENERAL TENDENCIES: You start out the day with very good business judgment. Push ahead with whatever you have in mind, but put your best effort into it so that it works smoothly.
ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Use good judgment and you can increase production at this time. Don't run off on any tangents.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Be energetic in trying to gain your personal wishes. Your friends can be helpful to you now.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Don't argue with a talkative associate. Make a good impression on an influential person.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Listen to the ideas of one whose experience is different from your own. Follow the suggestions you get.
LEO (July 22 to August 21): Go to an expert for advice and follow it instead of listening to that scatter-brained acquaintance.
VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Listen carefully to the suggestions of a wise partner and follow them. Don't argue with your family now.
LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): You can labor harmoniously with fellow workers today, but trying to communicate with outsiders is hard.
SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): It's a good day to plan some pleasure that you will enjoy, but count the cost first. Express your finest talents.
SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Find the articles that can make your home more functional. Don't force your ideas on kin.
CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Plan the meetings you want to have with other individuals so that mutual benefits can be gained.
AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Financial affairs are most important to you now. You can gain knowledge about investments.
PISCES (February 20 to March 20): You can easily handle whatever requires your undivided attention. Try to keep your temper under control.
IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will require much study of the right principles since this child is quite sensitive. There is an artistic ability here as well as the understanding of practical affairs. Schooling should combine these two talents for the greatest success in life.

 Dear Charlie:
 I have often seen hands in team matches where both North-South and East-West have played in the same strain. In a match between two of the top teams in France, a new record was set on this deal—one team reached the same from different sides of the table!

At the first table, Michel Lebel elected to gamble on three no trump after his partner had preempted with three diamonds in first seat. West led his fourth-best heart, and everything hinged on the diamond finesse. Declarer had high hopes when he ran the ten of diamonds and it held, but these were soon dashed when West showed out on the second round of the suit. He eventually went down three tricks.

At the other table, South passed his partner's preempt and West reopened with a double. My favorite partner, Paul Chémala, chose to bid three no trump with the East cards, and that became the final contract.

After the ten of diamonds was allowed to hold the first trick, North won the second diamond and continued the suit. Even though Paul played the heart suit correctly to lose only one trick in setting up the suit, he had to concede five tricks—two spades, a heart and two diamonds—for down one.

Purists might observe that the high cards were split evenly between the two sides, and with only 20 points neither side should be in game. However, North-South needed only to find the king of diamonds right to romp home with nine tricks, so I wouldn't fault them greatly. As ever, Omar

Handyman Charged

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A handyman charged in six slayings in the last year was in custody today after two bodies were found buried in the back yard of his former home, and police said there may be more victims.

Morris Solomon Jr., 43, a specialist in home renovation, was charged with six counts of homicide after authorities found the two unidentified bodies Wednesday, said police Sgt. Bob Burns.

Two counts were in connection with the bodies found Wednesday. The others were in the deaths of four young women, including three described as prostitutes, whose bodies were found in the same neighborhood between June and Monday, Burns said.

Police found out about the first body when Solomon reported it to them, the sergeant said.

The bodies found Wednesday were in shallow graves. Their sex had not been determined. Police dug in the yard in the city's Oak Park section after noticing unusual indentations in the earth.

"There are indications of further burial sites at locations where Solomon may have worked as a handyman," Burns said. "We are asking for help from the public in locating evidence linking Solomon to these crimes or as yet unidentified burial sites and/or victims."

Solomon was being questioned early today, police said. Police said they expected to resume digging in back yards in the neighborhood later today.

Charles Lueras, the owner of the house where the bodies were found Wednesday, said Solomon helped to remodel it and later lived in it as a renter in late 1985 and early 1986 before being evicted for failing to pay his rent.

"He was one of the most easygoing and nicest people," Lueras said.

The house now is occupied by two young women whom police do not believe are connected to the slayings, Burns said.

Investigators spent more than four hours Wednesday digging up the bodies from the yard, carefully sifting the earth with shovels and scanning each scoop with metal detectors. A crowd of several hundred people gathered behind barriers to watch, and police had to restrict traffic for several hours.
