Protesters Block Entrances To CIA Offices

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 400 protesters, many chanting the 60s-style slogan "the whole world is watching," were arrested today as they sat down in front of entrances to CIA headquarters during the morning rush hour.

The non-violent protest was a major event in three days of demonstrations against Reagan administration policies in Central America and Southern Africa.

U.S. Park Police, with jurisdiction over the north gate of the facility in nearby Langley, Va., arrested 175 people. Fairfax County, Va., police, with jurisdiction over the south gate, arrested more than 200.

The demonstrators succeeded in closing the main gate to the headquarters for at least three hours.

Among those arrested were antiwar activists Daniel Ellsberg and Philip Berrigan. One protester was John Stockwell, former CIA official involved in Angola operations, who subsequently turned against the CIA.

"This building is filled with people who know what they're doing is wrong," said Ellsberg, who was detained only briefly and returned to the main gate. He praised police for being efficient and polite.

"We're releasing some on summons, but a lot are refusing to give their identities so we're having to detain them," said Dave Mulvey, a spokesman for the county police department.

Most of those arrested were charged with obstruction of passage, a misdemeanor carrying a $50 fine. Park Police spokesman K.C. Perry said those who scuffled with police would be charged with disorderly conduct and disobeying a police officer, as well as demonstrating without a permit.

Police had warned the protesters over loudspeakers, "This is an illegal demonstration. If you do not leave now, all of you will be subject to arrest."

As CIA employees passed by, the demonstrators shouted "join us, join us." But none did. Some workers parked away from the grounds and walked, passing the protesters without acknowledging their presence. One man formed his fingers into the V-for-victory sign.

The demonstration created a huge traffic jam throughout the area, which is on the route many Virginia commuters take to work in Washington, six miles away. Several busloads of demonstrators, who sought to block a second gate, became enmeshed themselves. Some abandoned buses and walked to the gate, creating a second and larger wave of protesters.

"The whole world is watching," the demonstrators chanted. One held up a picture of a Central American child, whose legs were missing. The legend read "A small CIA crime."

One placard said "No Pasaran," Spanish for "they shall not pass." Another said in Spanish "the people united will never be defeated." That slogan is popular among Latin American leftists.

Inside, the CIA's Kathy Pherson said "it is business as usual," at the CIA headquarters. She said all employees were expected to work, but it was known that some who do covert work were told to stay home.

TRAFFIC BLOCKED — Demonstrators blocked traffic in front of the CIA headquarters at Langley, Va., this morning as Fairfax County police move in to break up the protest. More than 400 people were arrested in an effort to keep traffic flowing on streets leading to the CIA offices. (AP Laserphoto)

Weather Dampens Spirits As River Flooding Recedes

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Unseasonably cold and wet weather dampened more than the ground over the weekend as special events scheduled in Pitt County were hampered by an unpredictable Mother Nature.

"There's no question weather is one thing we can't control," said Dave Hart, an organizer of Saturday's fourth annual Great Pirate Purple-Gold Pigskin Pig-Out Party.

Hart, East Carolina University's associate athletic director for external relations, said organizers anticipated a crowd of up to 13,000 people at the event under ideal circumstances, but only about 2,500 braved the inclement weather.

"The fact that we still had that many people is a credit to the event. The weather drastically affected attendance," Hart said. "I really feel for the families and kids because we had planned so many activities for the kids. We had added new rides for the carnival. It's a shame that those things had to be cancelled."

"I think we made the best of a bad situation, and that's a credit to the many, many people involved. It was a February day in April. It was a miserable day."

Despite the low attendance, Hart said all of the barbeque from 41 pigs was sold.

Officials at the Greenville Utilities Commission water plant said 0.4 inches of rain fell Saturday while temperatures reached a high of 62 degrees and a low of 46 degrees.

Meanwhile, Bud Greer, chief water plant operator, said the swollen Tar River, which had forced the evacuation of six families last week, began to recede over the weekend.

The river crested at about 19.1 feet elevation around midday Thursday and began to recede at about 4 p.m. Friday, according to Greer, who said the river had dropped to 15.6 feet about 9:30 a.m. today.

County and city emergency personnel said people are returning to their homes to begin clean-up efforts. "I'm sure there is debris and some damage to a few apartments," Mayo Allen, Greenville's interim city manager, said.

"We had six families we had to evacuate, and some that went to stay

Charlotte's Teacher Plan Draws National Attention

By D'VERA COHN
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

CHARLOTTE — The class bell rang at 8:50 a.m. and two dozen Harry P. Harding High School ninth graders pulled out their notebooks. English teacher Allison Jensen launched into the day's lesson on poetry.

"It's a chance to broaden yourself," she urged her somewhat doubtful students. "Write your own poetry. Use your emotions."

As Ms. Jensen worked in front of the classroom promoting the charms of rhyme, former English teacher Linda Hayes wrote down everything she heard and saw from her seat in the last row. Ms. Hayes was doing her job, too: Observing and evaluating the third-year teacher's performance that hour.

Ms. Jensen, 26, was hired the same year that the Charlotte-Mecklenburg city-county school system began a bold program of intensive on-the-job evaluation and skills training designed to reward superior teachers and improve classroom instruction in the 73,000-student school system, the nation's 30th largest.

The Charlotte effort is one of the nation's most closely watched experiments in teacher pay-for-performance, a challenge to the entrenched seniority-based salary system in which virtually all teachers are deemed satisfactory — no better, no worse — and classroom doors are closed to outside evaluators.

The intention was to raise the prestige of the teaching profession through higher salaries and to answer public demands for better schools. The results here have implications for scores of jurisdictions that are considering similar programs.

Charlotte-Mecklenburg had an advantage over many school systems. The teacher lobby groups in this non-union city supported the program, partly because the tougher evaluations were voluntary for veteran teachers and because ineffective teachers were not to be punished. The program emphasized continuous career development rather than a one-shot bonus. And the state so far has picked up the tab, which will be about $4 million next year, although legislators must decide whether to renew it in 1989.

Opinions are decidedly mixed. Many teachers complain that morale has plunged, and they question whether the program really rewards good teaching. School officials, conceding that there still are bugs to be worked out, boast that the program has sharpened the quality of instruction in this growing city, whose education program previously had been better known for its massive busing effort.

The career development program, as it is called, is mandatory for beginning teachers and for experienced teachers new to the city-county school system. Beginning teachers, formerly eligible for tenure after three years, now spend four to six years undergoing intensive training and evaluation, helped by an assigned mentor teacher and a school support team, before having a chance at job security and a $2,000-a-year raise.

Experienced teachers who sign up for the merit program undergo on-the-job observations over the course of a year, attend workshops and write a professional development plan before being eligible for a $2,000 pay increase.

Average teacher pay is $25,700 a year. Two-thirds of the system's 4,200 teachers signed up the first year, and there were bad feelings when school officials held a lottery to determine who could go first because not all could be accommodated at once.)

Teachers are graded on a six-point scale using a classroom checklist, written at the University of North Carolina, that is based on recent research demonstrating common qualities in all effective teaching, regardless of subject. It includes five broad areas: Time management, student behavior management, lesson presentation, instructional monitoring and feedback to students.

With those categories in mind, Ms. Hayes came away impressed with Ms. Jensen's poetry lesson that day. Class began promptly, and all students had notebooks and pencils

Two Bodies Found In Refloated Ferry

ZEEBRUGGE, Belgium (AP) — Salvagers today refloated and towed back to port a British ferry that capsized March 6 off this North Sea port. Officials said divers found two more bodies before Saturday, when two more bodies washed ashore, said Capt. Mark van de Wal, a spokesman for Zeebrugge naval base.

Four tugboats and three floating cranes were used to tow the 7,951-ton Herald of Free Enterprise 1,000 yards into Zeebrugge harbor. Public health officials then boarded the vessel and declared it safe for five British and 13 Belgian navy divers to enter and resume the search for 10 bodies believed to be on the lower decks.

Hans van de Wal, a spokesman for Zeebrugge naval base, said divers found two bodies shortly after entering the vessel.

The divers also planned to remove cargo and dozens of cars and trucks from inside the vessel.

The salvagers pumped water out of the half-submerged ferry for about three hours until it came afloat at 9:35 a.m., said Karen Martin, a spokeswoman for ferry owner Townsend Thoresen.

The ferry capsized with 543 people on board as it left Zeebrugge for Dover, England, about 85 miles away. Salvagers had recovered 176 bodies before Saturday, when two more bodies washed ashore, said Capt. Mark van de Wal, a spokesman for Zeebrugge naval base.

Investigators believe the ferry capsized when water rushed into the car decks through the open bow loading doors.

A British official said in London today that the seaman responsible for shutting the bow doors had fallen asleep in his cabin before the disaster.

The official, David Steel, who is in charge of investigating the wreck for Britain, told a British inquiry panel that seaman Marc Stanley thought he was off duty and went to sleep. Steel criticized the ferry owners, Townsend Thoresen, and the crew for following "sloppy procedures."

Salvagers attempted unsuccessfully to float the ferry Friday, lifting its stern but not its bow. As a result, water inside the ship rushed forward and to the left, causing the ship to list again.

Waldheim Put On 'Watch' List

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has decided to put Austrian President Kurt Waldheim, accused by Jewish groups of participating in Nazi war crimes, on a "watch list," a move that could make his entry into the United States more difficult, U.S. officials said today.

The decision was taken by Attorney General Edwin Meese III on the advice of the State Department's legal affairs bureau. It does not mean the former U.N. secretary-general cannot obtain a visa to enter the United States, but if he applied he would get one only after an investigation into the accusations.

Waldheim has not sought to come here, but as Austria's president it would be customary for him to make a visit at some point.

Until a year ago, Waldheim had maintained that he was discharged from the German army after suffering a war wound on the Russian front in 1941.

Actually, Waldheim spent the remainder of the war as a Germany Army intelligence officer in the Balkans, according to records uncovered in 1986 by the World Jewish Congress.

Austria was an ally of the Nazis and Austrians served in the German forces.

Thousands See Graham Crusade

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Billy Graham, untouched by the scandals and feuds that have tainted the television evangelists, opened his first U.S. crusade of the year using the same simple methods for saving souls he used here 37 years ago.

About 33,000 people from South Carolina, North Carolina and Georgia came Saturday to the first of eight revivals at the University of South Carolina's football stadium despite a threat of rain and unusually cold weather. On Sunday, 38,500 attended the worship service.

The massive outdoor church service came to life Saturday with "Amazing Grace." Even a section of people who could not hear or speak joined in, singing with their hands.

The temperature was 56 degrees, but a brisk, swirling wind and deep overcast sky forced people to raise their collars and some to leave early as Graham, a 68-year-old from the mountains of North Carolina, continued to preach in a blue blazer.

Backed by a 4,700-member choir, the Southern Baptist minister began the crusade with his traditional first sermon on John 3:16 — "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believe in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

After the songs and sermon Graham asked people to walk down to the mid-field stage if they wanted to dedicate or rededicate their lives to Christ.

Hundreds streamed from the stands — Baptists, Methodists, Lutherans and Pentecostals.

In his sermon Sunday, Graham preached from the book of Acts. He told the story of Paul's speech before the Council of the Areopagus in Athens, alluding to current conditions in American culture that parallel the lifestyles of the ancient Greeks.

The Graham organization estimates 260,000 will come to the revivals at Williams-Brice stadium through next Saturday. During the next several nights, there will be boxes where people can donate canned goods and other food for nine church-assisted charity programs in the area.

Graham, who was born just across the border in North Carolina, will speak to the General Assembly on Wednesday and Gov. Carroll Campbell, who welcomed him Saturday, has proclaimed this Billy Graham Crusade Week in the state.

'Church Of The Exceptional' Offers Love To Handicapped

By MARTHA WAGGONER
Associated Press Writer
HENRIETTA, N.C. (AP) — The name on the outside says this church is different from other churches, but the love inside shows how similar it is.

The Church of the Exceptional in Rutherford County has grown from a meeting of three people in a Methodist Church to 57 members who meet in their own building and want to construct a $25,000 addition.

But those are only the numbers behind a church for the physically and mentally handicapped that's run on donations from individuals, civic groups and other churches. The real story is the members and the people who work at the church.

People such as Mattie Lackey, who had the idea to start the interdenominational and interracial church.

"I knew this little boy and they were making fun of him in school," she said. "His mother got him in a special class, but I knew if they would make fun of him at school, they would make fun of him at church. We like to think they're little angels at church, but they're not. The idea wouldn't go away."

She spoke with a friend, whose husband belonged to a Methodist men's club. The club suggested that church services for handicapped people be held at Cliffside United Methodist Church.

The first service of the Church of the Exceptional was held in 1974. At that time, the church was one of six like it in the country. In 1982, the church purchased a building from the United Methodist Church for $3,000.

A ramp and two large bathrooms have been added to the building, but Mrs. Lackey and the church's volunteers have more ideas. They hope to add two more classrooms and a multi-purpose room to accommodate the burgeoning congregation. They will break ground on those buildings May 3, when the church celebrates its 13th anniversary.

Raising $25,000 is quite a task, but the people at the Church of the Exceptional seem to have no doubts that they and the community are up to the task.

"If everybody would come one time, we wouldn't have any trouble raising the money," said Gertrude Smith, who has taught the crafts class at the church almost since the day it opened.

Mrs. Lackey is the church's only paid staffer. "The salary's part-time. Sometimes it's a little more than a part-time job," she said.

The service begins with a craft time for half the members and Sunday school for the other half because

WHAT TO DO WITH WISDOM TEETH

If any of your wisdom teeth are beginning to erupt or have erupted, the question to be answered by your dentist is, "What to do with them?" He may not recommend that they be extracted unless they have become impacted or are crowding other teeth. If that's the case, they should be removed as soon as possible.

Wisdom teeth are a throwback to an age when man's jaws were larger and could accommodate third molars without creating dental problems. Today, however, in many cases wisdom teeth do not break through the gum or are only partially visible. They become "impacted," causing damage to second molars and the jawbone, especially when they begin crowding other teeth.

However, if any of your wisdom teeth grow in straight and can be maintained in a healthy condition, your dentist may not recommend that they be removed. Call my office for a thorough examination and let's decide the best solution to how your wisdom teeth should be treated.

Note: We invite all participants of the Blue Cross/Blue Shield personal care plan to come by our office. We are a member of Cost Care.

Man Arrested

Alfred Bernard Ross, 22, of 408B W. Fourth St. was arrested on robbery and assault charges by Greenville police Friday.

Officers M.R. Benton and T.L. Forrest said Ross was taken into custody about 5:12 a.m. on charges of robbery with a dangerous weapon and assault inflicting serious injury in connection with a January incident on Pamlico Avenue.

Detective J.E. Nichols said Ross was charged about 8:40 a.m. Friday with robbery and assault with a deadly weapon in connection with an incident that occurred on Cherry Street in November 1986.

Mosquito Search

Entomologists from the state division of Health Services and N.C. State University will be searching for the Asian tiger mosquito in sites throughout the state where tires have accumulated.

"This is an aggressive, biting mosquito that has shown up in some mid-western state from Texas to Ohio and as far east as Georgia. To date, none have been found in North Carolina," said Dr. Barry Engler, an entomologist with the Vector Control Branch of the N.C. Department of Human Resources' Division of Health Services.

"We suspect that the mosquito came to the United States in tire casings imported from some of the Far Eastern countries," continued Engler. "It's distribution has been related to the inter- and intrastate movement of used tires casings. The mosquito has been frequently recovered from accumulations of used tires in other states."

He noted that local health departments have been requested to provide the Division of Health Services with a list of sites, such as businesses or county landfills, where there are accumulations of 100 or more tires. The site check will begin in June.

Traffic Death

A Grifton area woman died in a traffic accident on a rural road near Kinston Saturday when she lost control of her car and ran into the path of a tractor-trailer truck.

Hattie Turnage Manning, 56, of Route 2, Grifton, was pronounced dead at Lenoir County Memorial Hospital, the result of a 12:45 p.m. collision.

According to Trooper P.A. Coombs of the N.C. Highway patrol, Mrs. Manning was traveling south on rural paved road 1004 2.2 miles north of Kinston when she braked for southbound traffic ahead of her, lost traction and traveled into the path of a Tull Hill Farms-owned tractor-trailer. The truck struck the car on the passenger side, Coombs said.

Larry M. Gardner, 44, driver of the truck, was not injured.

Damage to the Manning car was estimated at $1,500. The truck sustained approximately $10,000 damage.

No charges have been filed.

In his proclamation, he praised the state's social service employees for providing assistance to the poor, elderly, young and handicapped citizens of North Carolina.

Martin also praised the "tireless efforts" of social services workers that resulted in a reduction of error rates in the AFDC program, and an increase in permanent placements for foster children.

Heros Sought

The Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation is looking for three state heroes to receive the Nancy Susan Reynolds Award of $25,000 each to benefit the individuals and their favorite charities.

The awards were established last year to recognize "North Carolina's Mother Therasas ... people whose courage and hard work are sometimes more important and more deserving than those of well-known and well-recognized leaders," said foundation president Smith Bagley.

Nominations for the 1987 awards to be presented during a November ceremony in Charlotte must be submitted by June 15 to the foundation, 101 Reynolda Village, Winston-Salem, N.C. 27106.

Shortage Felt

It has to be clear now that there is a potential nurse shortage. It is being felt at Pitt County Memorial Hospital where it was reported the nursing staff was short 75.

There are about 1,250 nursing staff employees. Among the 750 registered nurse positions there are a number of vacancies.

Most hospitals are being affected by the national reduction in the pool of nurses. Hospital authorities say they are monitoring that situation and developing plans for coping with it.

One result was immediately visible last week when the hospital's board of trustees authorized general increasing of the salary scale for nurses. That, of course, could bring only temporary relief as other hospitals adjust scales upward to compete.

Even though PCMH is looking for nurses, authorities say the situation is not much different from other years. What is of more concern is the drop in enrollment in nursing schools nationally. Emilie Henning, dean of the ECU School of Nursing, says that is due to other fields opening to women. And that is coupled with a greater demand for registered nurses.

Judy Kuykendall, head of nursing at Pitt Community College, also sees a decline in nursing applications.

Efforts are under way to make nurse work conditions more attractive, as well as to improve salaries. It is such efforts that will make nursing more attractive to women and men and head off what could be a serious shortage of these invaluable professionals in future years.

Not Simple

The state House of Representatives has voted the Department of Transportation authority to raise the speed limit to 65 miles per hour on some rural interstates. It was a step that was made possible when Congress overrode President Reagan's veto of a highway funding bill that included a provision for limited 65 mph driving.

North Carolina has 641 miles of rural interstate that could be designated for the 65 mph limit. House approval came on a 77-29 vote with opponents getting in some final licks.

There were legislators questioning whether a driver would have to be caught exceeding 80 mph before points would be assessed against his driver's license; and at least one legislator warned "we're voting on 75 miles per hour"; Rep. Richard Wright (D-Columbus) joined the chorus, to warn "I think you are hastening the next gasoline crisis. Going 75 and 80 you're going to wear the interstate out faster and where is that money going to come from?"

They were all points that had to be raised and will be ultimately addressed when the lawmakers put their heads together for the final legislation.

On the surface it was a very ordinary item of legislation but not even ordinary legislation can be as simple as it so often appears.

Lost County Request Sparks Fight

RALEIGH — A citizens group that is angry about their utility rates may have ignited a legislative battle that will pit cities against rural areas and private power companies against municipal utilities.

Lost County Residents of Pasquotank County has come before the House Public Utilities Committee twice to ask for state regulation of municipal utilities. The residents say that Elizabeth City is charging them exorbitant electric and water rates and using the excess to keep city customers, but pay twice the fees for water and sewer. Lost County Residents want the right to tap onto the power lines of North Carolina Power Company, whose rates are lower. They also complain that the city is not justified in charging them a doubled fee for water and sewer.

The debate takes on statewide significance because the same concerns exist in other suburban areas, those where the municipality provides electricity and water to non-city customers. The residents say that an impartial regulator, like the utilities commission, would not allow their electricity rates to be used as a substitute for city taxes. They also charge that the city's arguments for higher water and sewer rates would not be accepted by the commission.

Rep. Gerald Anderson, D-Craven, said he's frustrated by what he calls the injustice of the situation, and he promised the Lost County Residents that he'd file a bill correcting it. (He does not represent their area.)

Anderson also noted that the city's actions may be hurting Pasquotank County's chances for recruiting a new industry — the H&W Plastics Company. The company is looking at a plantsite outside the city, but within the city's service area. H&W wants to buy its electricity from N.C. Power — whose rates are lower than the city's — but the city refuses to permit that.

That situation highlights another debate of statewide significance. Hap Chalmers, N.C. Power lobbyist, said that the municipal electric companies, like that owned by Elizabeth City, are creeping out into non-city areas, and taking away some of his company's best potential new customers. Yet his company is barred by state law from competing in areas reserved for municipal power companies. As Anderson said, "That's monopoly."

Chalmers insists that by skimming off the concentrations of population found in suburban areas, municipal power companies are actually driving up the rates the private companies must charge their rural customers.

Hopefuls Avoid Regional Appeals

RALEIGH (AP) — Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., marched to the beat of a different drummer over the weekend when he joined the parade of would-be Democratic presidential nominees who have visited North Carolina.

Gore, who worked the crowds at Jefferson-Jackson festivities in Raleigh, said North Carolina Democrats should support him because he's a fellow Southerner and shares the region's "values and outlook."

"I will be campaigning extensively throughout the South, here in my native region," Gore said. "In order to win ... we must have a candidate at the top of the ticket who can carry the South."

It was the most overt appeal to regionalism that any presidential hopeful of either party has made in North Carolina since the quest to succeed Ronald Reagan began in earnest.

Small wonder, one might think. Gore and the Rev. Jesse Jackson likely will be the only Southerners to seek the presidency in 1988. The South may play a bigger role in choosing the nominees than ever before; 14 of the region's states will hold presidential primaries on "Super Tuesday," March 8. Why not exploit regional pride?

State Democratic leaders have mixed feelings about whether such a strategy will — or should — work.

Some, including Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, the party's titular leader, have said flatly that either the Democratic presidential or vice presidential nominee should be a Southerner.

Others, most notably Sen. Terry Sanford, say where the nominees hail from is less important than whether North Carolinians and other Southerners feel comfortable with them.

"It would be demeaning if not insulting for (presidential candidates) to think they can come and appeal to us on strictly local and regional issues," Sanford said. "Beyond that, the South is not going to vote from a regional point of view. It's going to vote from a national point of view."

Aside from Gore, the other Democratic and Republican contenders appear to hope Sanford is right. During their visits, they have spoken chiefly about national issues, usually dealing with such local concerns as textile imports and the federal tobacco program only when asked their views.

The Democratic front-runner, Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, even went so far as to say he might include a tax increase on tobacco products in a package to reduce the federal deficit. Remarkably, Hart made the remark on a swing through eastern North Carolina — the heart of leaf growing country.

"We think the days of trying to pit one state against another or one region against another are over," Jim Dorsey, press secretary to Democratic hopeful Michael Dukakis, said during the Massachusetts governor's recent stopover in Raleigh.

Dukakis, the son of Greek immigrants, laughed off suggestions that Tar Heels might shun an ethnic Northeasterner. He portrayed his state and North Carolina as economic neighbors, with booming urban centers and struggling rural areas.

And he argued that North Carolinians are as concerned as other Americans about better schools, the environment, the nuclear arms race and competitiveness in the international marketplace.

Former Gov. Jim Hunt, who has been besieged for support by virtually all of the Democratic contenders, says it's too early for them to discuss regional issues. "Later on, you'll see them get more specific," he said. "But they have to be careful because I don't think people like pandering."

That the South no longer is viewed by many politicians as an entirely different animal demonstrates the region's progress over the past 25 years, Sanford says. He calls it a sign that the South is taking its place alongside such historically powerful regions as the Northeast in setting the national agenda.

"For a long time, Southern leaders ... were burdened down with the race issue, over which they had very little control," Sanford said. "I think that as that burden was lifted, the political sights of the South were lifted. The South now sees itself as being in a position to help decide who can lead the nation."

"It doesn't have to be a Southerner but it could be a Southerner. We're not looking at this from a parochial point of view."

Reagan Makes A Nuclear U-Turn On European Missiles

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The Reagan administration's clear determination to withdraw U.S. nuclear missiles from Europe as the price for a superpower arms control agreement and a Washington summit is upsetting America's junior partner in strategic affairs.

On schedule, Pecksniffian Europe is muttering ever so audibly about having to practice "damage control" on a wounded and amateurish U.S. administration that just doesn't understand these matters of grand strategy and history. The echoes of Watergate days and the Carter administration's high points of ineptness abound.

It is easy to dismiss much of this as Old World condescension, jealousy or wishfulness. But it hurts that there is also some validity in these criticisms. In its rush to sign the medium-range missile accord in its twilight days, the Reagan administration is reviving serious doubts about the reliability and competence of American leadership of the Western alliance over the long haul.

The growing debate over the missile deal bothers Europeans far more than does Irangate, which is viewed here as a domestic affair, one of those incomprehensible morality plays that intrude into American politics from time to time and do not directly affect them. But the wild swings they perceive in the Reagan administration's dealing with the Russians and with them on nuclear weapons is a far more serious matter.

The challenge Ronald Reagan and George Shultz now face is not to get European agreement to go along with their startling U-turn away from the emotionalism of the "evil empire" pronouncements toward the emotionalism of vowing to do away with nuclear weapons. The Europeans have to go along eventually with any U.S.-Soviet arms-control agreement that Reagan will sign, and everyone knows it.

Instead, Reagan and Secretary of State Shultz have to persuade the allies that they are not pursuing this agreement primarily as a way to restore Reagan's standing after Irangate and to give Shultz a foreign policy triumph, something he now lacks after five years on the job.

Thus far, they have failed in this vital task. Shultz's presentation to NATO Foreign Ministers in the Belgian capital last week reinforced European concern that, like Reagan, Shultz has not paid much attention to the history and purpose of nuclear deterrence in Europe. He also has not absorbed how deeply the sloppy and impulsive bargaining sessions at the Reykjavik summit frightened Europeans.

Despite the outward form of consultation here, European officials came away from the NATO meeting feeling that the runaway horses set loose at Reykjavik are on the gallop again.

Consider how the topsy-turvy U.S. scene looks from Europe:

Six years after taking office and refusing to give policy jobs to detente-mongering Republicans like Henry Kissinger and Brent Scowcroft, the Reagan administration is rejecting appeals from these same dangerous detentists to go slow in signing the zero medium-range agreement. Shultz meanwhile joins the Russians in hectoring the Europeans to make their decision rapidly.

Indeed, the American foreign-policy and nuclear-weapons experts that Europeans know best and more or less trust, such as Kissinger, Scowcroft, Sam Nunn and Zbigniew Brzezinski, are opposing the deal Shultz has brought back. Its advocates are the officials who were in the room with Reagan at Reykjavik.

In his memoirs, Kissinger pays glowing tribute to Shultz's performance as Treasury Secretary in the Nixon administration. Shultz did not have to worry about bureaucratic gambits such as chairing meetings in order to dominate them, Kissinger noted. Authority flowed to him because of his expertise in monetary and financial matters.

— Elisha Douglas — Strength For Today

The yellow traffic lanes on the streets of our towns and cities have to be renewed from time to time. Constant traffic wears away the painted lines. In the same way, our good resolves have to be renewed from time to time because of the pressure of life's traffic, which can be heavy at times.

One way in which we renew these personal traffic lanes is by going to church. Every time we read the Bible we have an opportunity to redefine the sharp lines of moral law.

It would be gratifying if, once we drew these spiritual traffic lanes, they would last forever. But, unfortunately, they must constantly be redrawn, sometimes with considerable trouble and pain. But peace comes to the soul when we recognize that all this is a part of God's providence.

Domestic Politics Frustrate Nakasone's Global Ambitions

TOKYO — Uniquely among Japan's postwar leaders, Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone aspired for his country to become not just an affluent power, but a great one. That's why he is flying to Washington to see President Reagan Wednesday.

It's also why, soon after he returns to Tokyo next week, he could find himself out of a job.

After four and a half years in office, Nakasone is suddenly seeing his ambition of global greatness frustrated by the traditional politics of Japan Inc.

His latest domestic initiative, a comprehensive tax reform designed to eliminate wide-scale evasion by business, suffered a mortifying defeat in parliament last week. The prime minister's own conservative supporters deserted him, and political commentators were predicting he might be forced to resign within weeks.

The experts were also saying that only if he wins major trade concessions from Reagan could Nakasone hope to restore his leadership. In particular, they cited the $300 million in punitive tariffs imposed on certain Japanese electronic products. Nakasone hopes to get the sanctions lifted.

The chances of that were not rated very high in the current U.S. political climate. Still, even the possibility gave this heretofore-routine annual visit the flavor of history.

The pressure on Reagan will be considerable since Nakasone, along with Britain's Margaret Thatcher, is a fellow conservative, an important ally on defense policy and a particular friend after nine previous meetings.

"In these talks he (Nakasone) hopes to ease the economic tension between Japan and the United States," wrote political analyst Kenzo Uchida in the Japan Times, "and should he fail there are likely to arise demands that he retire in May or June without waiting for his term to expire in late October."

"The prime minister's back is against the wall," was the way columnist Yoshiteru Kato put it in the Yomiuri Shimbun, Japan's biggest daily and a firm supporter of the prime minister.

Nakasone himself insisted he'd come back from Thursday's setback in parliament. Borrowing language from the just-opened baseball season, he told reporters his government is used to playing with no outs and the bases loaded against it.

Only nine months ago, Nakasone led his Liberal Democratic Party (which is actually a coalition of conservatives) to its landslide victory in the parliamentary election. His personal popularity rose to above 50 percent in the opinion polls, a postwar record.

Nakasone had promised during last July's election campaign to forgo any "broad-based indirect tax" in his forthcoming reform package. But when it was introduced, the program included a 5 percent value-added tax on operations of all but smaller business.

He also proposed to repeal — in response to American demands — the income tax exemption on personal savings accounts. The exemption had been cited as one of the key factors in Japan's exceptional savings rate, the chief source of investment in the country's aggressive industry.

The reform package set off a firestorm of opposition, not least from businesses that traditionally dodged corporate income taxes by one means or another. The European-style, value-added tax is structured to defy evasion. Since business is one of the pillars of the ruling LDP, Nakasone was faced with the revolt among his own nominal supporters.

He lost other support during the year by ordering a 25 percent cut-back in rice acreage, the prelude to opening Japanese markets to imports. At present the government buys up huge surpluses and bars foreign rice even though it would cost consumers about one-sixth of what they pay for domestic rice.

When more than 100 LDP candidates lost in an election for prefectural legislatures early this month, Nakasone's position crumbled. Finally, opposition parties tied up Parliament, threatening to deny Nakasone the passage of his annual budget before he left for Washington. To avoid that, the government gave up on the value-added tax Thursday.

Nakasone has never been popular with his fellow conservative politicians, in part because they considered him a "weather vane" to popular opinion and also because he eschewed the tradition of backroom wheeling and dealing. He bypassed the party machinery by skillful use of the media, particularly TV.

Like Reagan, Nakasone set about cutting the national government's budget, deregulating business and selling off the government-operated railway and telephone systems to private investors. He had hoped to launch comprehensive reform of the highly centralized public education system, too, before his second and final term, already extended by one year, comes to an end this fall.

"For Japanese, who have felt inferior since World War II, Nakasone is restoring a taste of pride, a sense of living in a good, sometimes supreme nation," the English-language Tokyo Journal said a year ago. "It is in a way what Japan tried to achieve through war: become a first-class nation, catch up with the European and American power, and beat them."

How much he has achieved will probably be debated a long time. The major media, still atoning for Japanese militarism in the 1930s, are generally antigovernment and particularly anti-Nakasone. "Other than the self-defense issue," political writer Masumi Ishikawa told the Tokyo Journal, "I don't think Nakasone's philosophy or political ideas would survive."

Nathaniel Thayer, director of Asian Studies at the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced Studies, had a more positive assessment. Nakasone, he says, "may come to be seen as the prime minister who gave his nation a new nationalism — popularly based, outwardly oriented and concerned with the future."

DESTROYED HOUSE — This one-story, four-bedroom vacation house was destroyed Sunday by the pounding surf at Nags Head. The house, which earlier had been condemned because of erosion under its pilings, fell off the foundation posts Sunday and slid down the steep dune toward the beach. (AP Laserphoto)

Erosion Claims Second House On Outer Banks

NAGS HEAD, N.C. (AP) — The Atlantic Ocean claimed another house on the Outer Banks when heavy seas scooped the support from under a four-bedroom vacation cottage, toppling it into the surf.

The collapse of the house Sunday was the second in a week, authorities say, and at least one other house appears threatened by coastal erosion.

The house toppled into the ocean around 6:30 a.m. Sunday, Nags Head Police say. There was no estimate on what the one-story house, which was unoccupied, was worth.

The house had been condemned as structurally unsound because of continued erosion by storms and high seas, but electricity to the home had not been disconnected. Workers from North Carolina Power were at the house by 9 a.m. to remove live lines, Nags Head Mayor Don Bryan said.

A house about two miles up the beach broke apart and fell into the sea Monday night.

That $150,000 house, with its furniture still intact, fell off a 15-foot cliff into the ocean in the Camelot by the Sea subdivision. Authorities said recent bouts with rainy weather had caused severe erosion which threatened a number of beachfront homes in the area.

Two more beach homes in Camelot by the Sea have been condemned as structurally unsound. Nags Head Police Chief Lonnie Dickens said Sunday he feared the worst for those two cottages.

"We, the town, are sorry we can't do anything, but there is really nothing we can do," Dickens said. "The best thing for the owners of the endangered cottages to do is move them back on a timely basis before they are threatened."

One of the subdivision homes had been pulled off its moorings, but had not reached the surf. The cement slab supporting the other building had broken and washed partly into the ocean, but the house remained intact.

Bryan said police and rescue personnel are monitoring the situation along the stretch where the houses are threatened. He said authorities were having problems with sightseers and traffic in the area.

On Sunday, rain pelted the coast, and winds gusting up to 45 mph were recorded in the Nags Head area.

State Revenues Uncertain As Public Spending Stalls

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Legislative leaders say they are still in the dark about how much money they can spend for new and expanded programs in the next two years, but they warn a sluggish economy could generate less money than normal.

In December 1986 and January, revenue collections were 21 percent above those of the same months the previous year. February collections were 3 percent below the previous February. Official March figures haven't been released but sources say they'll show a decline of around 10 percent.

David Crotts, the Legislature's senior fiscal analyst, has attributed the wild fluctuations to enactment of the landmark federal tax reform of 1986, which spurred many businesses to pay their taxes early.

"If you take the figures for the four months as a whole, they average slightly over 6 percent, which was our target" for fiscal 1986-87, Crotts said. "We're still pretty much on track for bringing in what we've been forecasting since last year."

Crotts said he had not revised a March 5 forecast that predicted around $525 million would be available for new spending next year. Much of that likely will fund public school improvements called for under the 1985 Basic Education Program.

Within a couple of weeks, Crotts said, figures on April revenue collections will be available. They will be crucial in reflecting the condition of the state's economy because collections over the past several months were inconclusive.

"I've heard nothing from any reputable source one way or another," Butch Gunnells, executive director of the State Employees Association of North Carolina Inc., said in an interview. "The silence is deafening."

Gunnells and other lobbyists whose clients seek state funding nervously await the latest figures on state revenue collections, which lawmakers will use in deciding by how much to increase spending in the next biennium.

SEANC has asked for a 10 percent across-the-board pay raise for state workers. Martin's budget seeks a 4.5 percent raise and would pump more money into education, prisons, and capital projects.

Legislative budget leaders are cautious about revenue prospects.

"I'm just afraid to guess at this point," Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Aaron Plyler, D-Union, said. "The March revenue figures weren't as good as I'd expected. I'm afraid we might come up short."

Once the money picture clears, budget subcommittees will begin reviewing requests by Martin and others for funding increases — the "expansion budget." In the meantime, the five panels are rushing to complete work on the "base budget" — expenditures Martin proposes to continue from the previous year.

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan and House Speaker Liston Ramsey say the subcommittees are behind and may have to meet twice daily this week.

Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, co-chairman of the Base Budget Committee, said he hoped the subcommittees would be finished by week's end and would propose around $50 million in spending cuts.

Subcommittee chairmen say both goals are long shots.

Sen. Helen Marvin, D-Gaston, co-chairman of the Subcommittee on Justice and Public Safety, said the panel still had not begun work on the budgets of two departments — Crime Control and Public Safety and the Administrative Office of the Courts. "I don't think there's any way we can finish (this) week," she said.

The co-chairman of the Human Resources subcommittee, Sen. Russell Walker, D-Randolph, said it had come up with no substantial savings.

"We've done some cutting in previous years, and ... with Gramm-Rudman and the other funding reductions in the Reagan years, human services have been cut to the bare bones," Walker said.

Colleges To Survey Students' Habits

GREENSBORO (AP) — College officials say they have been using a shotgun approach to drug and alcohol use on campuses, but they hope a survey on student habits this fall will help them narrow their aim.

"A rifle approach is more effective," said David McIntire, vice chancellor for student affairs at ASU. "If students have no interest in crack, we should spend our emphasis in other areas. If they are interested in marijuana, that is where we should rifle our efforts."

The N.C. Housing Officers Association, a statewide campus organization, plans to submit an alcohol and drug survey to the state's 54 public and private four-year institutions.

"We want to know for sure what is happening on the individual campuses," said Bettina Shuford, assistant dean of students at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and former chairman of the housing group's task force on alcohol. "You get a lot of speculation, (but) I don't think we know what the problem is."

Ms. Shuford said the housing officers also wanted to see how drinking patterns might have changed since the legal drinking age was raised to 21 in the fall. A follow-up survey is planned in three or four years.

Participation by campuses will be voluntary, and the students will remain anonymous, she said.

About 80 percent of the survey will deal with alcohol, the most serious substance abuse problem on the state's campuses, administrators say. The rest of the questions will deal with drugs.

"We want to know if students are using other types of drugs and their usage patterns," Ms. Shuford said. "Are they using them daily or weekly or is it just a one-time event?"

Officials on a number of campuses said they plan to use the housing group's survey or are considering one of their own that looks more closely at substances other than alcohol.

They include Duke University, Wake Forest University, UNC-G, N.C. A&T State University, UNC-Wilmington and Appalachian State University.

Campus officials said they are concerned students might be reluctant to provide accurate information about what — in the case of drugs — is illegal activity.

IN THE STATE

Bus Drivers

RALEIGH (AP) — The minimum age for school bus drivers statewide may be raised before next year in response to increasing pressure from the U.S. Labor Department, state education officials and lawmakers say.

The N.C. Board of Education voted in March to raise the minimum age for drivers from 16 to 17, and require at least six months' driving experience. Legislation pending in Raleigh could make that the law.

North Carolina is one of 10 states exempted from a federal law requiring workers in "hazardous" jobs, such as driving school buses, to be adults.

Statewide, about a third of this year's 13,002 bus drivers are teenagers. Of those, 369 are 16 years old.

Camp Closes

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Due to necessary repair work to the entrance road bridge, Smokemont campground will close temporarily for several days starting today, Great Smoky Mountains Park Superintendent Randall Pope said.

National Park maintenance crews will work extended hours to replace deteriorated decking on the bridge by Thursday, Pope said.

The decision to replace the decking was made in late March, but work on the bridge was delayed until after the Easter holiday period to minimize interruption to visitors, Pope said.

Award

RALEIGH (AP) — General Electric's Aircraft Engine Business

Group of Wilmington has received this year's Outstanding Business and Industry award from the North Carolina Human Relations Council.

Gov. Jim Martin's Chief of Staff, Phil Kirk, presented the award to Al Wollerton, manager of employee and community relations at the facility, at a ceremony in Raleigh.

The award recognizes significant contributions to the community by businesses and corporations statewide.

Farmer

RALEIGH (AP) — Rickie Leggett of Bertie County recently became something of a farm celebrity after setting a state record for peanut yields last year.

Leggett, 34, set the record by producing 6,876 pounds per acre in a 9-acre field.

Leggett, who has been farming for 14 years, said he was not sure exactly how he managed the high yields. His entire peanut crop, spread across 175 acres, averaged 3,800 pounds per acre.

Leggett broke A.L. Madre and Sons' record of 6,873 pounds per acre set last year on an Elizabeth City farm.

Bulletin Reissued

RALEIGH (AP) — Authorities say an all-points bulletin has been reissued for former White Patriot Party leader Glenn Miller, who has threatened to start a race war unless the federal government complies with a list of 17 demands.

William H. Dickerson, a U.S. Marshal inspector for the Eastern district of North Carolina, said this was not the first bulletin that had been issued for Miller. An arrest warrant was issued last week for Miller on charges he violated bail rules and allegedly signed a letter declaring "total war" on Jews, blacks and federal officials. Dickerson said a bulletin was issued at the same time as the warrant.

"This is a safety measure," Dickerson said Sunday. "It (the bulletin) was reissued today to re-alert everyone of what we have in the Eastern District of North Carolina. In case someone does run into Mr. Miller, we want them to know what the situation is."

"This isn't indicative of any new leads," Dickerson said. "It's just a follow-up."

Dickerson said all-points bulletins have also been issued for Douglas Sheets, a member of the White Patriot Party who was subpoenaed to testify in the conspiracy trial of Stephen Miller earlier this month in Elizabeth City. An arrest warrant was issued for Sheets after he failed to honor the subpoena, and he was released on bond. But he later disappeared, and another warrant was issued on the bond violation on April 20.

Car Banners Show Mom's Concern For Teen Safety

DEAR ABBY: Please tell me where to write to obtain some "Please Call Police" reflective banners that can be taped on the front and back windows of automobiles in case of a road emergency.

My teen-age daughter and her friends are approaching the age when they will be driving, and I think those banners would make terrific sweet-16 birthday gifts. — MRS. ROBERT SVIHLA, RIVERSIDE, ILL.

DEAR MRS. SVIHLA: Write to: WCIL-BANNERS (Westside Center for Independent Living), P.O. Box 66942, Los Angeles, Calif. 90066. The cost is $4 per banner — postage and handling included. Make your tax-deductible check or money order payable to WCIL-BANNERS. This organization exists to help disabled people live independently. Thank you for suggesting that the banners would make terrific gifts. I agree.

DEAR ABBY: Because of a recent personal experience, I am writing with the hope that you will print this (anonymously, of course) to remind professionals that "confidentiality" is still of vital importance in the nursing profession.

My husband is a recovering alcoholic. He went to a physician for a physical examination. Several nurses in that doctor's office were nursing classmates of mine.

A few weeks after my husband's visit to that doctor's office, the husband of one of the nurses came to me and told me how "proud" he was of my husband because he had quit drinking! He told me that his wife had read my husband's medical history, and told him "everything." I was shocked.

Abby, I, too, am a nurse, and I have always regarded a patient's medical history as privileged information — to be held in the strictest of confidence.

Perhaps other professionals need to be reminded of this. Thank you for letting me air my opinion. — NURSE

DEAR NURSE: And thank you for airing it as a reminder to everyone who, in the line of duty, has access to privileged information. This includes therapists, lawyers, school teachers, hairdressers, housekeepers, telephone operators, hotel (and motel) personnel — the list is endless.

DEAR ABBY: I would like to know how many readers really like these new French-cut swimsuits — which seem to be the only kind one can find nowadays. I used to buy two swimsuits every season. Now I don't buy any — I wear my older ones rather than buy one of those new ones.

At first the slightly larger cutout look was attractive, but they kept cutting out more and more until the bottom of the suit barely covers the crotch! I'll be darned if I am going to start removing hair from yet another area of my body! How anti-feminist can you get?

I am over 40, 5 foot 6, weigh 110, and I am not ashamed of my body, but these new swimsuits are a disgrace. If other women want to expose that much of their bodies, it's all right with me, but I would sure like more styles to choose from. But where do I find them? — L.G. IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR L.G.: Keep looking. If you can't find them in the stores — look in the catalogs. I'm with you all the way.

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Clean Care Chat

By: Glenn F. Corey

LET 'EM HANG!

The subject is care and cleaning of draperies...

Draperies are one of the most misunderstood home decor fabrics, and salespersons have little information on their maintenance. So, with a shrug, they suggest, "Just let 'em hang!" I'm one who believes that a conscientious homeowner is more concerned about the life of her drapery investment than that, so let's discuss drapery maintenance—the money-saving kind!

First, home maintenance. Three things to remember here—vacuum, vacuum, vacuum! Seriously, that's about it, and it is quite significant. Draperies collect airborne soils (dust, lint and pollen), as well as oily vapors. Also, insects love to take up residence in your draperies. This makes vacuuming doubly critical, since they eventually die, leaving spots which are difficult to remove safely, even when cleaned professionally. Again, your best defense is regular (every-other-month) vacuuming.

Now, a word of warning—water-based spotting agents leave circles which can't be removed from drapery fabrics. In addition, fabric delicacy and shrinkage greatly limit the procedures you may use.

"But what about cleaning—is it really necessary, or should I just let 'em hang?" Let me put it this way. If you have a significant investment in your draperies, you'll double their life with regular cleaning (every two or three years)!

"Well, what'd you expect a professional cleaner to say?" Bear with me while I reinforce my credibility.

Let's get a bit technical and consider another type soil. It consists of oily, air-borne vapors deposited on drapery fabrics. These soils combine with humidity and form a dilute acid, which slowly dissolves yarns and eventually causes complete disintegration. Worse still, this destruction is accelerated by sunlight. Regular cleaning neutralizes these soils, thereby preserving the fabric.

"Can I clean my draperies without professional help?" Sorry, but no. Dry-cleaning solvents, which are either flammable or toxic, must be used under carefully controlled conditions. Also, special finishing techniques must be used to achieve that "decorator-folded" look. Remember, if you just "let 'em hang", eventually you'll be guilty of investment execution!!

with their families," said Bobby Joyner, Pitt County's emergency management coordinator. "There was water coming into their houses. All have returned but one (family), and they will return today."

The American Red Cross and the Salvation Army worked in conjunction with Pitt County to provide food and lodging for the families, according to officials, who said the groups will continue to assist the families.

"We're kind of helping and waiting now for families to get back in their homes to see what has been destroyed as far as clothes and shoes and furniture," said Maj. Earl Woodard, local commanding officer of the Salvation Army. "We'll see what we have available, and we'll be helping out with that."

"We'll start working with families that have moved back into their homes to see if they need any up front emergency assistance," Raquel Zimmerman, executive director of the Pitt County chapter of the American Red Cross, said. "We will be working with them until we know they're okay."

Meanwhile, Grimesland officials said flooding from the Tar River covered State Road 1565, making the Seine Beach area inaccessible.

Dotty Sullivan, Grimesland town clerk, said water had begun receding in the area early today.

In addition, the wet weather is being blamed for the death of a Grifton woman who died in a traffic accident on a rural road near Kinston Saturday. Hattie Turnage Manning, 56, of Route 2, Grifton, was pronounced dead at Lenoir Memorial Hospital after she lost control of her car on a rain-slick road and ran into the path of a tractor-trailer truck.

Weekend performances of the Clyde-Beatty-Cole Bros. Circus were moved from Carolina East Mall to the Pitt County Fairgrounds because of wet ground conditions, a circus spokesman said Saturday.

The National Weather Service has predicted clear skies tonight with low temperatures in the mid 40s. There is a chance of rain early Tuesday with a high temperature in the mid 70s.

Teacher Merit Plan Being Watched

ready (time management), Ms. Jensen walked around enough to keep her eye on the entire class (behavior management), and she presented examples of different types of poems to ensure that her students understood what she was talking about (lesson presentation).

Ms. Jensen went from student to student offering help during a five-minute writing exercise (instructional monitoring), and she explained why a student's answer to her question was right or wrong (feedback).

Ms. Hayes detected only one minor problem: Ms. Jensen may have overlooked one student who was not called upon in the discussion and sat idly during the writing exercise.

"That was a very difficult unit, poetry," Ms. Hayes said. "She did a good job."

Ms. Jensen describes herself as an average teacher and said the program has taught her classroom tricks that improve her teaching.

"It's stressful at points," she said, "but sometimes I think stress can be productive."

Not all teachers agree. A recent unscientific survey by the Classroom Teachers Association, responded to by half of the system's teacher-scale employees, including those not enrolled in the program, found that only 10 percent felt "positive" or "extremely positive" about the program, 28 percent were skeptical, 26 percent felt "somewhat negative," and 36 percent felt "negative."

The poll found that most teachers believe that the program hurts morale at their school, damages self-esteem and does not measure the success of instruction. Those who went through the program were doubtful or uncertain that it improved their teaching. Most thought it should be discarded or overhauled. Most are doubtful that the program will bring them "substantial monetary rewards."

"Teachers feel deprived of autonomy in the classroom," said Davis Bingham, president of the Classroom Teachers Association, a 1,500-member teacher lobby group.

"They're setting up this impersonal, rigid bureaucracy that sets up the climate for stress and strain."

For teachers unaccustomed to such explicit judgments, the ratings can be devastating. That occurred even among those who received merit raises, and most who applied so far have. Acting Superintendent Robert Hanes said that even teachers rated 4 or 5 felt hurt.

More strains may lie ahead. This year's evaluations, due in June, are widely expected to grant fewer merit raises because school officials tried to encourage their best candidates to apply the first year. Next year, under state mandate, all teachers will receive more rigorous ratings, even those who do not enroll in the program.

"It's not easy to teach for 15 years and have someone come in and tell you to change something," said Beverly Rounds, a first grade teacher at Hidden Valley Elementary School, which draws students from the surrounding middle-class neighborhood. "Your feelings are just knocked to the floor sometimes," said Jean McClure, a second grade teacher at the same school.

"Change is stressful, no matter what kind of change," said Kay Mitchell, a former French teacher who runs the career development program. As an example of how sweeping that change has been, Ms. Mitchell said that during her 17 years in the classroom she had only one 15-minute on-the-job observation by a principal. Teachers in the career development program have at least 11 a year. First-year teachers have 16.

Ms. Mitchell acknowledged that the program has problems but contends that it is making many schools better than they were. Fewer teachers are being fired, for example, because more are salvaged through training, she said.

Many teachers agree that the feedback from observers helped them hone their skills, particularly in trimming wasted time and planning better lessons.

"I had fewer days where I went by the seat of my pants," said Betsy Pierce, a 20-year English and journalism teacher at Harding High, which draws many of its students from working-class families living near the city's airport.

Pledge

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — The Bowman Gray Baptist Hospital Medical Center has won a pledge of $1.5 million from the RJR Nabisco Foundation to use in creating a comprehensive center on aging.

The center will be named the J. Paul Sticht Center on Aging, in honor of the chairman of the board of RJR Nabisco Inc. — who also chairs both the Medical Center's board of visitors and its fund-raising campaign.

Edward A. Horrigan Jr., vice chairman of RJR Nabisco, said the $1.5 million pledge and a related pledge of $4.5 million made last year to the Bowman Gray School of Medicine were being given over five years.

Plane Crash

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — The pilot of a private plane joked with authorities today after they found him and his aircraft upside down on the top of a pine tree, where he had landed after running out of gas near an airport.

The man, who was not identified, had radioed the Federal Aviation Administration to tell them that his single-engine Cherokee Piper was running out of gas near the Southern Pines-Pinehurst Airport at about 9 p.m. Sunday, said Moore County Sheriff James Wise.

Pistons Win But Worry

By BILL BARNARD AP Basketball Writer The Detroit Pistons' only worry with a 2-0 series lead over Washington is that they might have awakened sleeping giant Moses Malone.

The Pistons set an NBA playoff record by building a 76-36 halftime lead over the Bullets Sunday night before winning the second game of the best-of-5 series 128-85.

Rick Mahorn, who has combined with Bill Laimbeer and Adrian Dantley to put a defensive net on Malone, holding him to 31 points in two games, went out of his way to praise the Bullets' center.

"Moses is the ultimate center," Mahorn said. "Stopping Moses is like trying to stop a rock from going through a window. I expect a dogfight down there (in Game 3 at Landover, Md.). It's like do or die. They're going to come out and play hard, and we've got to play hard also."

Malone said he was embarrassed by the defeat. Washington's 40-point halftime deficit was four points worse than Milwaukee's 77-41 advantage over Philadelphia on March 30, 1970.

"When they come to Washington, we should try to run up 200 on them," Malone said. "But I don't think they rubbed it in. I would have done the same thing."

Pistons Coach Chuck Daly was shocked by the ease of his team's victory over the Bullets.

"Psychologically, it was scary," Daly said. "It was just an unbelievable game. Our shooting took them right out of the game."

The Pistons shot 70.5 percent from the floor the first half while the Bullets hit only 32.7 percent. For the game, Washington committed 23 turnovers that led to 37 Detroit points.

"I look for Wednesday's game to be the toughest of the series," Daly said. "They are professional athletes and we've had a hard time winning down there. As far as I'm concerned, the slate is clean."

"It's a very embarrassing loss in a playoff situation," Bullets Coach Kevin Loughery said. "It's a shocking loss to get beat like that. I thought we were ready, that's the frightening thing."

The Pistons took their largest lead at 99-51 in the third quarter before reserves took over for both teams. It was 105-67 after three quarters.

Dantley, who scored 18 points in the first half, finished with 24 and Isiah Thomas finished with 17.

"We did everything we wanted to do," said Thomas, who scored 34 points in Game 1. "We established the tempo. We set the pace. We controlled it from start to finish. It wasn't easy, although we won by a lot of points."

Hawks 94, Pacers 93 Atlanta again was carried by Dominique Wilkins, who scored 43 points and passed to Kevin Willis for a key basket with 58 seconds left against Indiana.

Willis, who hadn't scored since the second period and finished with only eight points, hit a short hook to give the Hawks a 94-91 lead.

"I was open. I knew I had to put the basket down," Willis said. "I was in the right place at the right time. Dominique saw me and got it to me."

Chuck Person, who led the Pacers with 24 points, hit a pair of free throws with 42 seconds left, getting Indiana within a point. But John Long missed a jumper from the foul line with two seconds left that could have won the game for the Pacers.

Indiana led 69-60 midway through the third period before Wilkins, who had 35 points in Game 1, scored 12 during a 17-2 run that gave the Hawks a 77-71 lead with 1:43 gone in the final period.

Long scored 12 of his 14 points in the fourth period to carry the Pacers to a 90-88 advantage with 2:29 left. Atlanta took the lead for good at 92-91 on a rebound basket by Tree Rollins with 1:24 to go.

Celtics 105, Bulls 96 Boston won its 31st straight game at home and beat Chicago for the 15th consecutive time despite 42 points by Michael Jordan.

The Bulls, trailing by 11 early in the second half, came back to lead 87-85 midway through the fourth period. But Danny Ainge scored six points during a 10-2 run that put the Celtics ahead to stay.

Boston Coach K.C. Jones said the outside shooting of Ainge and Dennis Johnson saved the Celtics.

"The philosophy of all teams is to pack the middle and make our guards take the shots," Jones said. "We've got to make those outside shots. Dennis kept us in the game and then Danny got hot at the end."

Larry Bird, held to just 17 points in the playoff opener, had 29 points and Kevin McHale added 20 for Boston. Ainge and Johnson had 18 apiece, while Charles Oakley had 25 points and 15 rebounds for the Bulls.

Barkley, who also had 15 rebounds, gave the 76ers a 121-120 lead with 39 seconds left in overtime when he stole the ball from Terry Cummings and scored.

A layup by Sidney Moncrief gave the Bucks a one-point lead with 29 seconds to go before Barkley's six-footer from the baseline, which bounced on the rim several times before falling through, made it 123-122.

After Cummings missed a jump shot, Julius Erving hit two free throws with a second remaining for the final points.

Roy Hinson scored 28 points to lead the 76ers, while Erving added 23. Ricky Pierce scored 24 points, Cummings 21 and Moncrief 20 for Milwaukee.

The Rockets led by as many as 12 in the first quarter, but with Akeem Olajuwon on the bench in foul trouble, they scored only 12 points and had 11 turnovers in the second period as the Trail Blazers took the lead for good.

UNCW Uses Long Ball For Sweep

WILMINGTON — UNC-Wilmington banged out nine homers en route to a doubleheader sweep of East Carolina in Colonial Athletic Association baseball Sunday.

The Seahawks took a 8-4 win in the first game and a 12-2 victory in the second.

In the first game, ECU jumped out in front first, tallying two runs in the first inning.

David Ritchie led off with a single and Steve Sides followed with a double. Mike Sullivan followed with a walk to load the bases. Jay McGraw then singled home Ritchie and Sides.

The Pirates failed to take advantage of additional chances in the opening inning. Following McGraw's single, Dean Ehehalt walked before John Adams grounded into a fielder's choice to put Sullivan out at home. John Andrews then popped out to strand three.

UNCW came back to push across three runs in the bottom of the opening inning to take the lead.

Mitch Wells led off with a single and went to second on a sacrifice by John Catalano. Mark Maulsby then grounded out. With two outs, Chuck Jones singled home Wells. Eric Hickman then nailed a two-run homer to make it 3-2. Hickman's runner tripped was his 14th of year, setting a UNCW season mark.

ECU came back to regain the lead in the second inning when John Thomas led off with a walk and came home on David Ritchie home run. It was Ritchie's first extra-base hit of the year.

The lead was shortlived. In the third, Catalano walked, stole second and went to third on Mark Maulsby single. Jones then smashed a three-run homer to make it 6-4.

Jones added a two run homer in the fifth to complete scoring.

ECU left eight runners on base in the first three innings. After the third inning, ECU was held hitless.

Jones went 3-3 along with six RBI for the Seahawks.

Wes Currin went the distance for the run, raising his record to 6-2. Daniel Boone took the loss for ECU, dropping him to 2-3 on the year.

In the second game, Maulsby and Jones each had a pair of home runs to lead the Seahawks 12-2 romp.

UNCW jumped on ECU starter Jim Peterson early for five runs in the first three innings, four of them earned.

In the first Wells led off with a single, stole second and went to third on a passed ball. Catalano followed with a walk. Maulsby then singled home Wells and moved Catalano to second. Catalano and Maulsby pulled off a double steal and Catalano came home on a throwing error on Chris Caudle.

In the third, Catalano led off with a walk. Maulsby hit a two-run homer. Chuck Jones added a solo homer to make it 5-0.

In the fourth, Catalano led off with a single and Maulsby got on an error before Jones hit a three-run homer to make it 8-0.

In the fifth, Maulsby hit a three-run homer of his own and Eric Hickman added a solo homer.

In the sixth, ECU tallied its only two runs against Eric Hickman, who came on in relief of starter Mike Freeman.

Mike Andrews led off with a walk and went to second on David Ritchie's single. Steve Sides then singled home Andrews and Ritchie came home on a single by Calvin Brown.

Maulsby went 3-4 with six RBI to lead UNCW.

ECU fell to 19-10 overall and 7-4 in the CAA, while UNCW improves to 24-17 and 9-2 to take sole possession of first place in the conference. The two squads square off again today in the series finale.

Bodine's Spin Aids Earnhardt Win

MARTINSVILLE, Va. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt, off to the best start in NASCAR stock car history, knows just how quickly things can turn around on a racetrack.

As he crossed the finish line 18 laps from the end of Sunday's Sovran Bank 500, he was making what appeared to be a futile effort to catch leader Geoff Bodine.

By the time he finished his next trip around the half-mile oval at Martinsville Speedway, Earnhardt was leading the race and Bodine was trying frantically to recover after spinning off the track.

Earnhardt went on to earn his fourth straight victory and an unprecedented sixth in eight starts this season.

No one had won four in a row since Darrell Waltrip in 1981, but no NASCAR driver ever had won more than five of the first 10 — a feat accomplished six times.

"I think that was all luck," said Earnhardt, who picked up the 26th victory of his career. "Bodine was leading and I definitely couldn't do anything with him."

Earnhardt said his Chevrolet's tires were knocked out of alignment when he hit a curbing while racing Rusty Wallace for second place at the end of the final caution period, 130 laps from the end.

"It was running all right, but I was doing all I could just to keep Rusty behind me," Earnhardt said.

"We were still working," he added. "I knew there were a few laps remaining and anything could happen. I didn't wish anything bad on Geoff, but it happened."

"After I got the lead, I just had to hold the car straight and keep from making a mistake like he did."

Bodine, trying to end a 26-race victory drought dating to May 1986, moved off to a five-second lead before tangling with Kyle Petty as the leader tried to pass on the 48th of 500 laps.

"I really felt like we had things in good hand," said Bodine, trying hard to keep his emotions in check. "I'm trying to tell myself it's all right. But inside it keeps hurting."

Bodine, who lost the season-opening Daytona 500 to Bill Elliott when he ran out of gas late in the race, said, "This has got to stop. It can't continue."

"I certainly don't think Kyle did anything on purpose. It might have even been my fault," Bodine said. "My crew chief and my family told me not to worry, that I could come back from this next week. If they can feel that way, I can, too."

Asked what he would have said had someone told him before the season that he would win six of the first eight races, Earnhardt replied: "It's possible."

Anything is possible. It's possible we'll win Talladega (next Sunday)."

When it was pointed out that he could tie Richard Petty's 1967 season record of 27 victories by winning the rest of the races this season, the mustachioed driver grinned and repeated, "Anything's possible."

Saberhagen Happy Once Again

By The Associated Press
Bret Saberhagen has always liked pitching in Detroit. But this season, he seems to be enjoying his job no matter where he pitches — because this year, he's healthy again.

Saberhagen, plagued by a sore right shoulder and right foot last season, ran his record to 4-0 Sunday by scattering seven hits as he pitched the Kansas City Royals to a 6-1 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

The victory improved Saberhagen's career record at Tiger Stadium to 7-0 and dropped his earned run average in four games this season to 1.32.

Frank White's second homer of the season gave Kansas City a 2-0 lead in the first inning against Detroit starter Walt Terrell, 1-3.

The Royals added an unearned run in the second when Juan Beniquez walked with one out, moved to second on Argenis Salazar's single and scored when Larry Owen's grounder to shortstop went through Alan Trammell's legs for an error.

Kansas City added two runs in the sixth inning and one in the seventh.

Yankees 14, Indians 2
Tommy John pitched seven shutout innings for the second straight start, this time allowing Cleveland one hit.

The 43-year-old left-hander allowed only an infield single to Julio Franco with two outs in the third inning. John retired 14 Indians on groundouts in improving his career record against Cleveland to 19-12. Last Sunday, John pitched a four-hitter over seven innings against Kansas City.

Rickey Henderson led off the game with his sixth home run — the third time this season Henderson homered leading off — to spark a five-run first inning for New York. Henderson has five homers against Cleveland.

Rangers 5, Red Sox 3
Texas, off to an unexpectedly slow start, might have found the answers with a three-game sweep of Boston.

Pete O'Brien, who entered the game batting .182, completed the sweep with a two-run homer in the bottom of the 13th inning.

Calvin Schiraldi, 0-2, came in to start the 13th and gave up a single to Scott Fletcher before O'Brien hit his second homer of the season for the Rangers, who entered the weekend series with a 3-11 record.

Brewers 5, Orioles 3
During Milwaukee's 13-game winning streak at the start of the season, a new hero seemed to emerge each day. That pattern is continuing.

Juan Castillo hit his first major-league home run as the Brewers improved their record to 16-1 by completing a three-game weekend sweep of Baltimore.

Milwaukee starter Mike Birkbeck, 1-0, limited the Orioles to three hits through the first five innings before yielding two runs in the sixth.

Twins 10, Angels 5
Steve Lombardozzi, not considered a longball threat in the power-packed Minnesota lineup, broke a seventh-inning tie with his first home run of the season.

With the score tied, 5-5, Lombardozzi hit a solo homer off reliever Mike Cook, 1-1, with one out in the seventh. The victory gave Minnesota a one-game lead over second-place California in the AL West.

Blue Jays 5, White Sox 2
Toronto's power hitters broke out of their slump as George Bell hit two homers and Jesse Barfield added a solo shot to help beat Chicago.

Bell homered with two outs in the first inning after Lloyd Moseby drew a walk off Jose DeLeon, 2-2. Bell hit his fourth homer in the eighth off reliever Bobby Thigpen and Barfield followed with his fifth homer three pitches later.

Jimmy Key, 4-1, gave up seven hits, walked five and struck out three before being knocked out in the eighth. Tom Henke finished to earn his fourth save.

Mariners 8, Athletics 5

Harold Reynolds drove in the go-ahead run with a triple in the fourth inning and Jim Presley added a two-run homer in the ninth to overcome Reggie Jackson's 550th career home run.

With the score tied 2-2 in the fourth, Rey Quinones got a two-out double and Reynolds tripled into the right-field corner. The Mariners added two runs in the fifth on an RBI double by Ken Phelps and a bases-loaded walk to John Moses, and Alvin Davis' sacrifice fly in the sixth made it 6-3. Jackson's two-run homer brought the Athletics within 6-5.

Dawson Pounds Old Teammates

By The Associated Press
One reason Andre Dawson left Montreal after 10 years was that his tender knees couldn't take the constant pounding on the artificial turf. This weekend, the Expos couldn't take Dawson's constant pounding for the Chicago Cubs.

The former Montreal right fielder had two home runs Sunday to lead the Cubs to a 7-1 victory over the Expos and a sweep of their three-game series. It capped a weekend in which Dawson was 7-for-12 with those two homers, six runs batted in and six runs scored.

"I don't want to think I was beating up on my ex-teammates," said Dawson, who turned down a $1 million offer from the Expos to sign for $500,000 with the Cubs. "I was just trying to concentrate on my job. I knew if I came in here trying to do too much, I wouldn't get much done."

Dawson wasn't the only big basher for Chicago — Leon Durham hit his third homer in three games to give Chicago a 1-0 lead in the second off Larry Sorensen, 1-1. The Cubs added three runs in the third, Dawson hit a two-run, 450-foot homer to center in the fourth, and then added a solo shot in the ninth.

Reds 11, Astros 3
Dave Parker hit two homers, good for five runs, as the Reds completed their sweep. Dave Concepcion had four hits and Eric Davis, who entered the game having struck out nine straight times, added three hits and scored three as the Reds completed their sweep.

Cardinals 7, Mets 4
Jack Clark homered and singled twice as the Cardinals, playing with a substitute-filled lineup, got 15 hits. Pitcher Bob Forsch added two singles and a suicide-squeeze bunt, Jose Oquendo had three hits and Steve Lake a pair of RBI singles for St. Louis.

The Mets got three runs in the sixth off Forsch, 2-1, with Kevin McReynolds, Keith Hernandez and Howard Johnson getting RBI singles. Mets Rookie Barry Lyons pinch-hit his first major-league homer in the ninth, but Todd Worrell retired Gary Carter, the tying run, for his third save.

Giants 6, Braves 4
Jeffrey Leonard had a homer and an RBI single, but the highlight was the Giants' four double plays, which gave them a major-league record 13 in three games against the Braves.

Leonard singled in a run in a two-run fifth and got his fourth homer of the year on an 0-2 pitch from Jim Acker leading off the ninth. The victory went to Mark Davis, 3-0, who allowed five hits before leaving with two out in the sixth.

Phillies 6, Pirates 4
Lance Parrish, whose slow start had got him nothing but derision from the Philadelphia fans, got a standing ovation after his first-inning grand slam led the Phillies to a 6-4 win over the Pirates.

Parrish's homer capped a six-run first inning, then the Phils had to hang on.

The Pirates, who have lost four straight, scored a run in the second on Mike Diaz' fourth homer of the season and Johnny Ray singled home two more in the fifth. But after Dan Schatzeder walked in a run with none out in the seventh — a play on which Parrish was ejected for protesting the call — Tekulve struck out Jim Morrison and got Diaz to hit into a double play.

Padres 4, Dodgers 0
Mark Parent had a two-run single in a four-run fourth as the Padres ended a four-game Dodgers winning streak.

Show, 1-1, surrendered a first-inning single by Pedro Guerrero, then retired 18 in a row before Franklin Stubbs' seventh-inning double. He struck out four, walked none and hit a batter while recording his first shutout since Sept. 1, 1985.

Swaggart Sees Trouble For Other Evangelists

By SCOTT MCCARTNEY
Associated Press Writer
BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Donations this month are down $2 million, mostly because of the "spiritual war." He's had to borrow $5 million. Charges are still traded almost weekly. There's more dirty linen in the evangelical closet, he says, but he won't be the one to make it public.

JIMMY SWAGGART

And yet Jimmy Lee Swaggart, perhaps the fiercest of the fiery fundamentalists and one of the nation's most-watched television evangelists, sits back in his office dotted with antiques and smiles calmly these days. Some of his brethren have been shaken, and others will fall, he predicts. His profession is under attack, and he personally is under scrutiny after throwing himself into the evangelical scandal by passing rumors to church leaders about rival televangelist Jim Bakker.

But the high school dropout with the golden voice, who says these days are no tougher than his teen-age days when he ran loose with his wild cousin, rock 'n' roll legend Jerry Lee Lewis, is confident of his future, sure that his house is in order.

And now Swaggart, who says he battled the temptation to join Lewis' band and Lewis' lifestyle years ago, appears ready to battle other preachers.

"There's some that need to be off the air and some that need to be bigger because they've got a good message, and I won't say who's what.

But I believe some are going to have terrible problems in the future because of gimmicks and dishonesty, and I know that sounds awfully pious," Swaggart said in an interview.

Swaggart, who generates about $150 million a year in donations to his ministry, stepped into the evangelical cauldron by telling the Assemblies of God leadership that Bakker, head of the PTL, had big troubles. Bakker gave up his ministry after admitting an extramarital sexual encounter seven years ago, and Bakker's lawyer accused Swaggart of plotting to take over PTL, a rival Assemblies of God ministry. PTL is also called Praise the Lord and People That Love.

That allegation "was a smokescreen to try to get people's minds off what was happening," Swaggart said.

It's the same Swaggart who riles Jews and infuriates Catholics with attacks on their beliefs, who in the past has found himself the target of court battles over tax exemptions and contested wills — battles he usually wins.

And it's the same Swaggart, through and through, who grew up playing the piano with rock wild man Lewis and country star Mickey Gilley, another cousin.

"The gene pool had to be very strange," Swaggart says now, chuckling.

The three remain close, especially Swaggart and Lewis. The difference between the two and the paths they chose, he says, was probably parents.

"My parents were very strict with me and his very lenient. My Dad did not believe too much in Dr. Spock," said Swaggart referring to Benjamin Spock, author of a widely read childcare manual. "He believed in 'Dr. Spank.'"

From Ferriday, La., Swaggart set out on tent revivals and camp meetings. He stuck to fundamentalist preaching and played the piano with Lewis' same energy, and before long he launched a radio program that grew into a worldwide communications network.

Today, Swaggart lives in a white, columned house on a 20-acre estate. His salary is a little more than $100,000 a year, he says. Five trucks carry his equipment to crusades. He pays to have his telecasts carried on 3,200 stations and over 6,500 cable outlets in 15 languages, and reaches 3.6 million American viewers. He's sold 16 million copies of his 50 albums.

Swaggart's operation includes a Bible college at his Baton Rouge headquarters, a children's ministry that helps feed, clothe and educate 450,000 needy children around the world, and 20 school buses that pick up poor children on Saturdays for a hot meal and worship.

"It's my responsibility to do what God tells me to do. Whenever we take certain positions, it raises hackles in some places and causes hallelujahs in others," Swaggart said.

"When a preacher of the Gospel falls, and he is known quite well, then it's naturally a scandal and it really ought to be because the minister of God is a moral yardstick."

On the PTL scandal, Swaggart says, "There's more that the public does not know, and I pray never knows. I'm not going to tell them, but it will probably come out."

Still, he said, he's been trying to call Bakker these days "just to tell him we love him."

To meet costs, Swaggart says his mailbag needs to bring in $12 million a month. In April, he's down $2 million, and PTL is probably the reason.

"In the narrow scope, yes, it has hurt. We have suffered some financially," Swaggart said. "In the long run, I don't think it will."

The "house-cleaning" under way among evangelists will make those remaining stronger, he says.

Within five years, he predicts, his ministry will double in size.

"I think we are a tremendous growth industry," Swaggart says.

"If we walk a straight line and live for God, I don't see any reason why it won't be twice or three times as large as it presently is."

Falwell May Step Down As Bakker's PTL Successor

NEW YORK (AP) — The Rev. Jim Bakker's denomination will bar him permanently from ministry if allegations of homosexuality prove true, says the Rev. Jerry Falwell.

Meanwhile, Falwell said he could step down as early as Tuesday when the new PTL directors meet. Falwell succeeded Bakker as leader of the PTL television ministry after Bakker admitted having an extramarital sexual liaison with former church secretary Jessica Hahn.

Falwell said in an interview broadcast Sunday on the CBS program "Face the Nation" that ministers around the country are pressuring him to cut his ties to the scandal-plagued organization.

He also said the board would discuss allegations by the Rev. John Ankerberg, a Southern Baptist minister who has a weekly TV show based in Chattanooga, Tenn. Ankerberg said Friday he had evidence that Bakker had used prostitutes and engaged in homosexual acts.

Falwell limited his comments on the allegations to saying that Ankerberg "is a very highly respected church leader in America and we do take seriously what he is saying."

He said the Assemblies of God, of which Bakker is a member, have provisions for restoring the ministry of a fallen pastor whose troubles were brought on by alcohol or family problems.

However, he said, "they allow no recovery" for those who engage in homosexual acts. Bakker resigned his ministry in the Assemblies of God earlier.

Falwell declined to comment about reports that Bakker wrote him last week asking to be reinstated. However, he said, "If Jim Bakker were to return to PTL ... it would guarantee, in my opinion, the doom of the ministry."

Bakker, in a statement read Saturday by his wife, Tammy, said, "I have never been to a prostitute, and I am not or have ever been a homosexual." Bakker challenged his accusers to come forward with proof.

Ankerberg said his evidence consisted of tape recordings of interviews with witnesses to the sexual indiscretions. The Washington Post reported Sunday that one of the recordings was of a woman identified as a prostitute who told Charlotte, N.C., TV station WSOC that she had had three $40 sexual encounters with Bakker.

Evangelist Jimmy Swaggart said on "Face the Nation," "I have seen some of the proof myself, and I don't know all of the charges ... but I do know about some of them, and I do believe that they are true."

The Rev. Oral Roberts on Sunday defended Bakker, saying: "I stand by that man who sinned and said 'I sinned and now I repent.' I stand by those who want to forgive him, that's where I stand."

Diet Pill System Sweeping U.S.

Super Dream Pill Guaranteed Weight Loss

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH — According to a review of customers' files, here's what people are saying about the amazing, vastly improved "new version" of the world famous Dream Pill System for fast, guaranteed weight loss featuring Super Lite Dreams tablets:

"I lost 25 lbs. with a 30 day supply," Mrs. J.N.S., Ft. Payne, AL.

"Losing 1 lb. per day," Mr. J.G., Pineville, KY.

"I've lost 34 lbs. and I'm still losing," Mrs. J.K., Garden Grove, CA.

"I have been on Dream Pill for one month and feel great ... have lost 27 lbs." Mr. A.D., Anadarko, OK.

The System's Dream Pill combines two natural substances called L-arginine and L-ornithine which can stimulate the body's production of growth hormone. Diet researchers believe that growth hormone may be what's responsible for allowing teenagers to down thousands of calories in hamburgers and other foods and still be thin as a rail.

Growth Hormone is present in people up through the teenage years, then slowly diminishes with age. But L-arginine and L-ornithine make the body 'think' it belongs to a teenager again, allowing adults to eat as much as they want — and still be thin and wiry.

Life Extension Authors Confirm Results

Durk Pearson and Sandy Shaw, graduates of MIT and UCLA respectively, introduced these miracle substances to the public in their runaway best selling book, Life Extension. Much to her amazement, while taking L-arginine for its healing effects on a broken foot, Sandy lost 25 pounds of fat and put on 5 pounds of firm-toned muscle in six weeks. According to Durk's calculations, the pill caused Sandy to lose 400 times as much fat as she would otherwise have lost — without dieting!

NBC Looks Ahead After Successes

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — NBC, just coming off its second straight winning season, is already looking to the future with a programming strategy that pays tribute to the successes of the present and past.

"Hill Street Blues" is gone after this season, but two potential new shows feature actors from the innovative police drama that gave NBC a reputation for quality programming back when it was in third place.

Three other shows are derived from NBC's current top-rated comedies, "The Cosby Show," "Family Ties" and "Golden Girls."

Still others come from the producers or creators of "Miami Vice," "Remington Steele," "The A-Team" and "Knight Rider."

NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff, in a telephone news conference from Burbank, Calif., last week, described "Mama's Boy" as an "updated 'Marty.'" It stars Bruce Weitz and Nancy Walker as a middle-aged guy and the mother who moves in with him. Weitz was Belker the Biter on "Hill Street," the ferocious cop who melted when he got on the phone with "Ma." The pilot is "the funniest script we've got," Tartikoff said.

"Beverly Hill Buntz," a half-hour comedy-drama stars Dennis Franz in a reprise of his hard-bitten cop on "Hill Street."

Lisa Bonet, daughter Denise on "Cosby," goes to college next season in "A Different World."

Scott Valentine, Mallory's conceptual-artist boyfriend Nick on "Family Ties," is doing a pilot for a spinoff.

"Empty Nest" features a middle-aged couple who live next door to the "Golden Girls," and is from that show's creator, Susan Harris.

"Highwayman," stars Sam Jones as a guy with a truck that turns into a helicopter. It's from Glen Larson, the creator of "Knight Rider" and "Manimal."

"J.J. Starbuck" is from Stephen Cannell, the producer of "The A-Team." Dale Robertson plays an eccentric Texas oilman who goes around solving other people's problems as a hobby.

"Carly's Web" is a pilot for a series about a clerk in the Justice Department who, with the help of a bunch of technical whizzes, helps those in need. It comes from the producers of "Remington Steele."

"Private Eye" is the working title of a new series from Anthony Yerkovich, creator of "Miami Vice." The homage to the 1940s detective genre "will hit a bulls-eye with 'Miami Vice' fans," Tartikoff predicted.

After the end-of-season ratings came out, CBS Vice President David Poltrack predicted that NBC would return to more traditional programming to build on its older audience now that it has captured the youth market.

Not so, said Tartikoff, citing upcoming youth-oriented series like "Highwayman," "Private Eye," "Cheech" and "A Year in the Life," the miniseries of last season about Yuppies in search of happiness that will return in the fall as a series.

Though sitcoms have been the network's top-10 shows, Tartikoff said NBC is not interested in adding too many more.

"We would be hard-pressed to add more than three or four comedies to the mix," he said.

Holocaust Series Beginning

NEW YORK (AP) — "Shoah" may be the most demanding programming to appear on American television this year.

The 9½-hour remembrance of the Holocaust, which begins tonight on public television, demands a four-night commitment of time and its story demands close attention as it slowly unfolds.

There are no pictures of corpses, no grainy black-and-white film shot by advancing Allied troops.

"Shoah" is entirely a work of memory, composed of the recollections of people who survived the camps, those who lived in the nearby villages and even a former SS officer who worked in the camp at Treblinka.

The words of Simon Srebnik, one of two survivors of the camp at Chelmno, Poland, are a good explanation of the film's indirect approach.

"No one can describe it. No one can re-create what happened here," Srebnik says, walking in a green clearing where the camp once stood.

"It was always this peaceful here. Always. When they burned 2,000 people — Jews — every day, it was just peaceful. No one shouted. Everyone went about his work. It was silent. Peaceful. Just as it is now."

Claude Lanzmann, a French journalist and a fighter in the Resistance, worked 11 years on "Shoah," taking his title from the Hebrew word for annihilation. The film premiered in 1985, and has been seen on television in Germany, Holland, Austria, Italy, Poland and most recently in Denmark.

The presentation on public television marks National Holocaust Remembrance Week.

Lanzmann, who visited New York last week, said he had resisted putting "Shoah" on television.

"Two years ago, I thought I preferred the film being seen in movie theaters. I thought it was important to have people gathering together," he said. However, he said that many people who saw the film on television said they found solitude more conducive to appreciating the film.

"Shoah" will be shown in four parts, tonight through Thursday.

Maid Roles Bring Public Comments

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Actress Esther Rolle, who has made a career portraying maids, says she gets lots of favorable comment about the strong-willed characters she plays.

She starred as Florida on TV's "Maude" and its spinoff, "Good Times," won an Emmy for her performance as a Southern maid in the TV movie "Summer of My German Soldier," and is on stage as the matriarch, a retired domestic worker, in Lorraine Hansberry's "A Raisin in the Sun."

The production, which broke box-office records at the Kennedy Center in Washington, concluded a run Sunday at the Wilshire Theater.

"I'm very proud of the image of the black domestic that evolved," said Miss Rolle, 64.

"And I have mailbags of letters from blacks (and) interestingly enough, a lot from Europeans, those newly arrived. Those had to do domestic work until they got the swing of things."

Rambo Delay

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A delay in filming Sylvester Stallone's "Rambo III" saw the production company's stock dip to a new low, but a different shooting location may save millions of dollars, the company says.

FOCUS

"Vail Code"

Samuel Morse, inventor of the telegraph, was born on this day in 1791. Morse is often credited with devising the pattern of dots and dashes known as Morse Code. But some say his partner, Alfred Vail, deserves the credit. Morse wanted to assign every English word a different number and use a space to separate each number-word during transmission. An apprentice claimed that it was Vail who developed the "dash" to be used along with dots in an alphabet code.

DO YOU KNOW — What do "three dots-three dashes-three dots" mean in Morse Code?

FRIDAY'S ANSWER — Moths are more likely than butterflies to have hair-like antennae.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠QJ7 ♥KQ865 ♦K105 ♣52
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 1 ♥ Pass
 1 NT Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—If you rebid two hearts, you are showing at least a six-card suit and a weakish hand. On the contrary, your hand is balanced with stoppers in the unbid suits, so it is eminently suitable for no trump. Since you don't have quite enough for game, make the invitational raise to two no trump.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠95 ♥AK87632 ♣AQ105
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 Pass Pass 1 ♥ Pass
 3 ♥ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Even though partner is a passed hand, you could make a grand slam if his holding includes the ace of spades and the king or a singleton club. Blackwood won't help. Start cue-bidding with four clubs. If partner cooperates with four diamonds, invite slam by jumping to five hearts. This bid asks him specifically to continue only if he has spades controlled.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠KJ76 ♥Q95 ♥KQ3 ♣KJ8
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—If you play that a jump to three spades is forcing, that clearly should be your choice. If that is a limit raise in your methods, make whatever artificial forcing raise you have available. And if you do not have one, make the temporizing bid of two clubs and then jump to game in spades at your next turn.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠KJ76 ♥Q95 ♦KQ3 ♣KJ8
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ 2 ♥ ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Should partner have some length in hearts, four spades could be defeated by opposing heart ruffs. Therefore, we suggest a cue-bid of three hearts. If partner can bid three no trump, we'll play there; otherwise we'll go on to four spades.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠874 ♥Q10652 ♦AJ5 ♣72
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 1 ♥ Pass
 2 NT Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Since partner is showing 19–20 points, you want to be in game. But it would be a mistake to bid three hearts, which would suggest an unbalanced hand with a six-card heart suit. With your balanced 7 points, the correct bid is three no trump.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠J6 ♥AQ872 ♦KJ6 ♣Q109
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♥ Pass 1 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—This situation is analogous to the one above. Many feel constrained to bid two hearts to make it clear that they hold a five-card suit. However, in this sequence a bid of two hearts would promise a six-card suit. The correct action with your balanced minimum is to rebid one no trump.

Widespread Protests Mark Anniversary Of Chernobyl

LONDON (AP) — Tens of thousands of demonstrators from Mexico City to Tokyo staged mock funerals, lit memorial bonfires, marched and picketed nuclear plants to mark the first anniversary of the Chernobyl nuclear accident that spewed radiation over much of the world.

In the Netherlands, protesters clashed with police after tearing through a security fence at a nuclear plant. In Communist Czechoslovakia, police arrested five protesting Westerners.

Firefighters and nurses in London threw 31 wreaths into the Thames river to commemorate the 31 Soviets killed in the April 26, 1986, explosion and fire at the Chernobyl nuclear plant in the Ukraine. Hundreds more were injured and about 135,000 were evacuated from nearby areas.

There was no official commemoration in the Soviet Union on Sunday.

But eight members of a small dissident organization, the Group for the Establishment of Trust Between East and West, held a 90-minute protest in central Moscow.

Five people from Western Europe were arrested by Czech police in Prague — three for draping an anti-nuclear banner across the front of the National Museum and two for trying to hand out pamphlets charging the Soviet-designed WWER 440 reactor is a bigger risk than the Chernobyl plant.

Thirty-four WWER 440 reactors are operating in Eastern Europe and Finland.

An anti-nuclear group in Hong Kong submitted a petition against the building of a Chinese nuclear plant near the border with the British colony. It was addressed to China's Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang and handed to Beijing's Xinhua News Agency office.

In Japan, the only country hit by atomic weapons in war, demonstrations were held in several cities, including Tokyo and Osaka.

Rallies also were held in the United States, France, West Germany, Spain, the Netherlands and Italy. Fifty thousand Italians formed a 15½-mile human chain between a nuclear power plant at Caorso, southeast of Milan, to the San Damiano military airport.

In the southern Netherlands, about 2,000 demonstrators blockaded the Borssele nuclear plant and 39 people were injured in clashes between riot police and baseball bat-swinging protesters who tore through a security fence.

Farmers lit fires along the northeast coast of Sweden, where radiation from Chernobyl was first detected.

"We are not demonstrating, but we have not forgotten," a Swedish farmer said in Ytterharnas, 60 miles north of Stockholm.

Hundreds of Swedes, some carrying white coffins and crosses, joined in mock funerals outside nuclear power plants. At the Barseback nuclear plant in southern Sweden, police arrested six demonstrators who tried to climb over the perimeter fence.

In Denmark, which has no nuclear industry, protesters began a three-day vigil outside the Soviet Embassy in Copenhagen, marking the 67 hours between the Chernobyl explosion and the first Soviet official acknowledgment of it.

British police arrested three members of the Greenpeace environmental organization who handcuffed themselves to a locomotive taking 350 sightseers on a special train from London to the Sellafield nuclear plant in northwest England. They were charged with obstruction and trespassing.

State-owned British Nuclear Fuels, which arranged the visit to show that "nuclear power belongs to the future," said it forgot Sunday was the first anniversary of Chernobyl.

In Mexico City, about 100 members of the Mexican Ecology Movement gathered for about an hour in front of the Soviet Embassy and observed a minute of silence for Chernobyl's victims.

They also carried banners urging the Mexican government to scrap a nuclear plant that has been under construction in Veracruz state for more than a decade. Opponents say it is located near an earthquake fault line and an active volcano.

ANNIVERSARY MARCH — Protesters marched to the Seabrook nuclear power plant in New Hampshire Sunday and observed 30 minutes of silence to mark the first anniversary of the Chernobyl atomic plant disaster in the Soviet Union. Organizers plan civil disobedience at Seabrook and other locations later this week to protest nuclear power. (AP Laserphoto)

TRIBUTE — Flowers are spread on a grave at the Mitino Cemetery in Moscow Sunday to pay tribute to a victim of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant disaster last year. Arafat's Concessions May Dim Mideast Peace Hopes

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer
ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Chairman Yasser Arafat's concessions to hard-line leaders reunited the Palestine Liberation Organization but appeared to dim prospects for a Middle East peace settlement.

The Palestine National Council, which the Palestinians call their parliament-in-exile, ended a stormy five-day session Sunday after Arafat agreed to abandon ties with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and drop all attempts to negotiate a peace settlement in coordination with Jordan.

Virtually all Arab states severed relations with Egypt after it signed a peace treaty with Israel in 1979.

For the first time since they split four years ago, Arafat and his leading Marxist rivals, Nayef Hawatme and George Habash, appeared hand-in-hand and smiling Sunday as council delegates applauded.

But earlier arguments between the radicals and Arafat-led moderates suggested the PLO's new-found unity is fragile.

In Jerusalem, Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin said the PLO's embrace of radical factions, coupled with recent guerrilla attacks against Israel, exposed "the PLO's real face ... as one of the main stumbling blocks on the road to peace."

But he said this may have improved the climate for talks between Israel and Jordan and Palestinians who are not PLO members.

The council adopted a resolution reiterating all the PLO's most radical positions, including the demand for a sovereign Palestinian state with Jerusalem as its capital.

Arafat's right-hand man, deputy PLO commander Khalil Wazir, told reporters Arafat felt Palestinian unity took priority over relations with Egypt.

"Our priority was our unity, and now it's been restored," he said.

Wazir said the newly appointed PLO executive committee, dominated by Arafat loyalists, will determine future relations with Egypt. This leaves Arafat a possible loophole for discreetly continuing contacts with Mubarak under cover of the executive committee's approval.

Mubarak, who had warned Arafat that the radicals' position could lead "to a total break in all PLO-Egyptian relations," angrily withdrew his observer delegation from the council to protest the radicals' maneuvering.

At a news conference after the "unity session," Arafat showed no sign that the concessions disappointed him, but refused to answer questions about them.

When one Palestinian journalist asked whether his friendly relations with Mubarak could threaten the PLO unity, Arafat replied "Don't provoke me."

When Egyptian reporters had to leave to catch their plane to Cairo, Arafat interrupted the news conference to embrace the departing Egyptians one by one.

Arafat reiterated the PLO's demand for an international conference on the Middle East, with the five permanent members of the United Nations and all parties involved in the conflict, including the PLO, participating on an equal basis.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir opposes such a conference and favors one-on-one negotiations with Israel's Arab neighbors. Israel's Foreign Minister Shimon Peres supports a conference but opposes PLO participation.

Panel Calls For Development Plans To Protect Environment

By LARRY THORSON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — The world can and must find new energy sources and strategies for developing poor countries that don't destroy the environment, a panel of world leaders declared.

"The next few decades are crucial. The time has come to break out of past patterns," the World Commission on Environment and Development said in a report released today in London and Washington.

The 383-page report, titled "Our Common Future," calls for a "vast campaign of education, debate and public participation" and says: "This campaign must start now if sustainable human progress is to be achieved."

The 21-member commission was formed by the United Nations in 1984 to examine critical environmental and developmental issues and propose strategies for dealing with them.

Members include prominent citizens from the West, China, Japan, the Soviet bloc and the Third World. Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland is chairwoman, and the U.S. representative is William D. Ruckelshaus, former director of the Environmental Protection Agency.

After a three-year study and hearings on five continents, the commission planned to present copies of the report to young people in a ceremony in London today. The commission says youth have the most to lose if the environment is not carefully protected.

"Our report ... is not a prediction of ever-increasing environmental decay, poverty and hardship in an ever-more polluted world among ever-decreasing resources," the report said.

"We see instead the possibility for a new era of economic growth ... absolutely essential to relieve the great poverty that is deepening in much of the developing world," it said.

The commission will give its report to heads of government and forward it to the U.N. General Assembly this fall with a recommendation to start a "program of sustainable development."

The panel considered population growth, energy strategies, global warming due to atmospheric changes, man-made disasters and economic conditions that cause the destruction of tropical forests.

"Poverty itself pollutes the environment," the panel said. "Those who are poor and hungry will often destroy their immediate environment in order to survive: they will cut down forests; their livestock will overgraze grasslands; they will overuse marginal land and in growing numbers they will crowd into congested cities."

The report said some poor countries have foreign debts that lead to overexploitation of forests, croplands and mineral deposits. Commodity prices dropped 30 percent from 1980 to 1985, so poor countries may earn less even as they deplete their environment to export more.

"Trade barriers in the wealthy nations — and in many developing nations — make it hard for African nations to sell their goods for reasonable returns, putting yet more pressure on ecological systems," it said.

The report also calls for more efficient use of energy to buy time to develop renewable and non-polluting energy sources such as geothermal, solar, biomass and hydroelectric energy.

"The generation of nuclear power is only justifiable if there are solid solutions to the presently unsolved problems to which it gives rise," it said.

The report also admonished, "Present rates of population growth cannot continue. The very possibility of development can be compromised by high population growth rates."

The report said that at present rates, world population would grow from 4.8 billion in 1985 to 6.1 billion in 2000 and 8.2 billion in 2025.

It criticized the world's trillion-dollar weapons expenditure compared with the small sums spent on protecting the environment.

"The recent destruction of much of Africa's dryland agricultural production was more severe than if an invading army had pursued a scorched-earth policy," it said. "Yet most of the affected governments still spend far more to protect their people from invading armies than from the invading desert."

Lloyd Timberlake, a British writer and consultant to the commission, said the panelists were mostly mature politicians who "found their thinking radically changed" during their studies.

"It is precisely because the commissioners are not environmentalists that their report is important," he said.

Soviets Boosting Mideast Influence

By CHARLES P. WALLACE
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

AMMAN, Jordan — Long forced into a subsidiary role behind the United States in the Middle East, the Soviet Union is taking major strides to improve its standing in the region, according to Arab officials and Western diplomats.

The success of a Palestinian reconciliation meeting in Algiers this weekend was carefully brokered with the help of the Soviets and is but the latest Soviet advance in the area, according to Arab officials.

While the overall impact of the reconciliation talks is still hard to gauge, according to Western diplomats, it is clear that the Kremlin will now have far greater influence in the Palestine Liberation Organization than in the recent past.

New signs of the Soviet Union's increasing concern about the Middle East also emerged over the weekend, following a visit to Moscow by Syrian President Hafez Assad.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, while assuring Syria of continuing support in the military field, gave the strongest indication yet that the Soviets are prepared to resume diplomatic relations with Israel, which were severed in 1967 after the Six-Day War.

Speaking about diplomatic ties with Israel, Gorbachev said, "The absence of such relations cannot be considered normal."

Arab officials are predicting that, as early as June, the Soviets will establish consular ties with Israel while at the same time allowing up to 20,000 Soviet Jews to emigrate as part of the bargain.

Another Soviet initiative frequently mentioned by diplomats and Arab officials was the decision by Moscow to forgive debt payments by Egypt on military purchases.

The move was notable because the Soviets are still demanding payments from Syria, which is widely considered to be Moscow's closest Arab ally. By easing Egypt's payments problem, the Soviets have undoubtedly risked strained relations with Damascus, illustrating how much importance Moscow now places on improving relations with Cairo.

The Soviet move was also notable because the United States and Western financial institutions have been unyielding in their demands that Cairo meet its financial obligations, giving the appearance that the Soviet Union is more flexible than Egypt's supposed allies in the West.

On a broader scale, the Soviets have won considerable admiration in the Arab world by consistently supporting the notion of an international conference to settle the Arab-Israeli dispute.

Nakasone, Reagan Want To Restore Harmony

By HENRY GOTTLIEB
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan and Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone meet this week, eager to defuse an explosive trade dispute and demonstrate that relations between the world's commercial giants are fundamentally friendly.

According to U.S. policymakers preparing for Nakasone's three-day visit here, the Reagan administration hopes the talks will depress, not stimulate, Capitol Hill sentiment for tough new economic measures against Japan.

"I think the tune that's going to be played is that we want to resolve our differences with Japan and show that we can't allow trade friction to risk affecting the broader ranges of our relationship," said a U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

This view was shared Sunday by Nobuo Matsunaga, the Japanese ambassador to the United States. Appearing on the ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley," he said relations between Japan and the United States are "basically sound and strong."

And in Hashikojima, Japan, Hajime Tamure, Japan's minister of international trade and industry, said his country must take action if it is to keep world confidence.

"Having confidence is very serious, and if we have a government policy, it must be accompanied by action," he said.

U.S. Special Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter, interviewed from Tokyo on NBC's "Meet the Press," said he's been pleased with talks held with Japanese officials.

"I'm convinced that some things of a very positive vein are beginning to happen in Japan on the trade front, and I hope you will see some evidence of that in the next few days," Yeutter said.

Nakasone arrives in Washington on Wednesday, sees Reagan at the White House on Thursday and Friday, and holds talks with other administration officials and members of Congress before leaving on Saturday.

Never before at the leaders' meetings — this will be their 11th — have tensions between the two countries been so high.

After years of complaints and threats about an imbalance in trade that hit $54.6 billion in Japan's favor last year, Reagan has imposed tariffs on electronic goods that earned $300 million for Japan last year.

Since then, however, the Reagan administration has gone out of its way to portray the sanctions as a specific remedy and not a reversal of a White House disdain for congressional moves toward protectionism.

The administration also was quick to attack a proposal by Rep. Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., to require countries to reduce large trade surpluses with the United States by 10 percent a year.

The New York Times reported today that the Reagan administration will take the conciliatory approach one step further. Reagan, according to the Times, will tell Nakasone the United States may be able to end sanctions by the end of June. The administration had hinted last week at such a possibility.

The newspaper said President Reagan could announce before the June 8-10 economic summit in Venice that he hoped to lift restrictions if Japan was found to be in compliance with a semiconductor agreement the two governments had signed last July.

The United States said the Japanese had violated a 1986 agreement to open their markets to U.S.-made semiconductor chips.

In the meantime, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, called the Gephardt amendment "misguided" and said he thinks "it's destined for a veto."

But Rostenkowski, appearing on NBC, said the Japanese have harmed their own cause by failing to move more quickly to narrow that country's trade surplus.

Gephardt, interviewed on ABC, called his legislation "the stick in the closet" needed to redress trade grievances.

The Japanese parliament added an additional element of interest to Nakasone's Washington visit when it forced the prime minister to set aside plans for a new sales tax.

Some Japanese commentators predicted the prime minister might be forced out of office before the scheduled expiration of his term in October, perhaps even before the annual seven-power summit meeting in June.

The U.S. official who spoke privately said he doubted the visit with Reagan would do much to change Nakasone's standing at home.

FmHA Says Tar Heel Farmers Have Slowed Calls For Loans

By The Associated Press
North Carolina farmers have turned their fortunes around by bringing their soaring debt under control, taking advantage of lower production costs, using government assistance and by diversifying out of unprofitable crops, experts say.

"The farmer out there who is in deep debt in relation to his overall operation is still in deep trouble," said Eddie Miller, special projects representative for the state Farmers' Home Administration. But, he said, few of those farmers are seeking new loans.

Farmers are considered in deep debt if they owe 70 percent or more of the value of their assets.

"Most people in farming would have a difficult time meeting obligations on that size debt," Miller said. "In our case, we've got some farmers in debt beyond 100 percent."

The number of North Carolina's farmers in deep debt is hard to measure because of the number of lending institutions making the loans, Miller said. But 20 to 30 percent are generally in that category, he said, and about 40 percent of the state's farmers owe no money at all.

"We just don't see as many people coming in, filing applications for loans as we have in the past," Miller said.

Fewer than 300, in fact, have applied for emergency loans available to farmers hurt by drought.

"The ones that aren't in trouble are hesitant to go out and buy that extra piece of machinery because they don't know what tomorrow will bring," Miller said. "They see their neighbors going bankrupt."

While the outlook has improved, some experts say the benefits will not be immediate.

"There is light at the end of the tunnel," said Jim Oliver, an agriculture advisor to Gov. Jim Martin, and an agribusiness specialist with the Department of Commerce. But he said the picture won't "get rosy for the next year or two."

In North Carolina, farmers who have diversified will be better off than those who became grain farmers during the 1970s when it was profitable, said Thomas Lawrence, a Randolph County farmer. A worldwide oversupply has since dropped prices so low that grain commodities aren't profitable.

Lawrence has a money-making hog and cattle operation. He also raises corn, wheat and soybeans. But he uses the corn and wheat for feed, and so is affected less by low prices for those commodities.

"By being diversified it's lessened the blow," Lawrence said. "But I still see the effects in it."

County extension agents have heard the encouraging words but haven't seen noticeable improvement for farmers.

"Everything we see says that we're going to start seeing a rebound in the next year or so," said Andy Boyd, Guilford County extension chairman. "In our county, I haven't seen any kind of strong rebound up to this point."

Fueling the optimism in North Carolina are a thriving poultry industry and encouraging signals from the tobacco industry. Tobacco assessments were drastically cut last year, tobacco companies have agreed to buy stockpiles of surplus tobacco, the export market is expected to be strong this year and the federal tobacco program has apparently stabilized after years of uncertainty, Oliver said.

"We have a lot of tobacco in Rockingham County," said county extension chairman Frank Green, "and farmers seem a little more enthusiastic this year than last year."

Together, the state's poultry and tobacco industries make up more than half of North Carolina's $4 billion agricultural economy.

In addition, cotton and peanut farmers did well last year, hog prices are up and it appears beef prices will strengthen, Oliver said.

The weather has also contributed to the renewed optimism. By late April 1986, the entire Southeast was headed into the worst drought in at least 100 years, but this year, farmers have had ample rainfall.

"I see a lot more optimism than I did in mid- to late summer last year," said Talmadge Baker, Randolph County extension chairman.

Computer technology is a part of almost every business today, including farming. Computers can be a very helpful tool in making financial and management decisions.

Many swine producers are aware of the computer program developed by the North Carolina Extension Swine Husbandry which was designed to assist farmers in improving genetics in their swine herd. Currently about 100 swine producers in North Carolina utilize this program. These swine producers account for 30,000 sows.

The sow productivity portion of this computer program is very helpful to the commercial swine producer. Records produced from this program tell a farmer different production statistics that can help him or her improve their selection and culling process. It can also point out weak areas of production and let one know when a problem begins to arise.

Currently, four swine producers in Pitt County utilize this computer program. It can be used by the farmer on his personal computer or the farmer can make use of the computer in the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Office.

Most records necessary for sow productivity are kept by a swine producer on his farrowing barn card. The only figure not kept by most is pig litter weights, which is of vital importance in determining sow productivity. However, scales for weighing weaning pigs are not too expensive and the weights gathered from their use are very helpful in determining many management decisions.

All swine producers who have used this sow productivity computer program have benefited from the data it generates. Many credit the computer and this program with their improved production since they are always measuring current productivity.

For further information about the computer program call the Pitt Extension Office at 752-2934.
