Schools Change 'Grandfather' Policy

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Education changed its "grandfather" policy Thursday at a special meeting to alleviate imbalances the policy caused in the racial make-up of several Greenville schools.

The board, by a vote of 7-6, revised the grandfather policy to extend only to students in grades nine through 12 grades in the 1988-1989 school year. Fifth-grade students who were slated to move from A.G. Cox to W.H. Robinson will remain at Cox for an additional school year before being moved in 1989-1990.

Board members voting in favor of the changes were representatives of the city: Donovan Phillips, Frank Grooms, George Williams, Jack Wall, Erma Carr, David Shackleford, Alfreda Parker. Board member Anne McGaughey of Farmville did not attend the meeting due to a death in the family.

The amended policy, effective with the 1988-1989 school year, states, "Only students residing in neighborhoods, subdivisions, communities, and on streets and roads reassigned from one high school attendance area to another high school attendance area and enrolled in grades 9-12 during the 1988-1989 (grades eight through 11 in 1987-1988) school year are eligible for grandfathering. Students in grades nine through 12 in the 1988-1989 will be allowed to complete all grades in the high school attendance area in which they are enrolled in the 1987-1988 school year, if they desire to do so."

Students approved for grandfathering in the upcoming school year will be allowed for one year to continue attending the school they had been enrolled in prior to the attendance line changes. In the four subsequent years, only students in high school will be allowed to continue attending the same school.

The policy changes were necessitated when figures compiled by the school system on the number of students who had chosen to grandfather showed unacceptable racial imbalances at Sadie Saulter and Third Street schools, board spokesmen said.

"Grandfathering seriously negates the impact of the new attendance lines and prevents the ability to accomplish the goals set forth by the board," School Superintendent Eddie West said.

"Neither those factions already dissatisfied with the grandfather policy nor the agencies who monitor federal regulations will allow this situation to continue unaddressed," he added.

According to a report read by West, "A total of 363 applications were received requesting grandfa-

Reagan: America Isn't Too Unhappy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said today he's seen no evidence "that I've been mortally wounded" by the Iran-Contra affair and that Americans do not "seem to be unhappy about what we've been doing here."

The president also declared anew that he was unaware of the alleged diversion of funds from arms sales to Iran to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

At the same time, Reagan said he was kept briefed about efforts to support the freedom fighters. "There is no question about my being informed," Reagan said. "I was very definitely involved in the decisions about support to the freedom fighters."

Reagan made his comments in a question and answer session with out-of-town editors and reporters.

Asked whether he had been damaged by the Iran-Contra affair, Reagan recalled a Scottish ballad, saying, "Yes, I've been wounded. I'll lie me down and rest a bit and then I'll fight again."

Moments later, he returned to the question and said that he travels extensively around the country, meeting with different types of people.

"I haven't seen any evidence that I've been mortally wounded nor do the people seem to be unhappy about what we've been doing here," Reagan said. Previously, he has acknowleged that he has been hurt by the affair.

Asked about his drop in public opinion polls, Reagan said his own pollster, Richard Wirthlin, reports that his overall approval rating "stays at 53." He said that was the same standing that Dwight Eisenhower enjoyed in the sixth year of his presidency.

The president also was asked about a claim by his former national security adviser, Robert C. McFarlane, that Reagan had approved paying $2 million in bribes and ransom in an effort to free American hostages in Lebanon.

"I am having some trouble remembering that," Reagan said. "I don't recall ever anything being suggested in the line of ransom."

He said the administration was constantly seeking ways to win the

City Will Buy Own Computer

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Members of the Greenville City Council have unanimously accepted a bid on its own computer, ending months of debate over the feasibility of operating a joint data processing system with the Greenville Utilities Commission.

The IBM System 38 Model 200, which was approved by the City Council at its monthly meeting Thursday night, will have a five-year cost of $296,399, according to Finance Director Ron Kimble, who said the city will begin making preparations for the system

"Within 45 to 60 days, the hardware will hopefully be installed," said Kimble, who served on the city's data processing evaluation committee. "We have to make room modifications and upgrading to accommodate the power requirements and air conditioning requirements for the machine."

Thursday night's decision culminates about four months of discussions between consultants, the council, members of the city staff, and GUC officials over the possibility of sharing the mainframe of the computer.

GUC officials had maintained the joint system, proposed by the city, would lead to priority conflicts and no cost savings, while members of the city staff felt some money could be saved in a joint operation.

The new data processing system will enable Greenville to make strides in improving its operations, according to Kimble.

"The decision that the council made last night is going to go a long way in making up some of the lost ground over the past 10 years," he said. "We are extremely excited about the next couple of years."

In other business, the council approved a request to delete a portion of Third Street, west of Reade Circle, from the city's Thoroughfare Plan.

William McGeorge, whose wife, Margaret, owns property in line with the proposed extension, asked for the decision to facilitate development plans.

The proposed Third Street extension was included in the Thoroughfare Plan as an additional east-west traffic route, according to Tom Tysinger, director of engineering and inspections.

Building costs, hospital traffic, and the presence of Moyewood housing units along the street were reasons cited for the request.

City Balks At Bill Regulating Utility Rates

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville City Council has unanimously approved a resolution expressing opposition to a bill in the N.C. House of Representatives which would prohibit municipalities from charging a higher rate for utility services to customers outside corporate limits.

House Bill 1248, which was submitted by Rep. Gerald Anderson, D-Craven, would "prohibit municipalities from charging different rates for in-city and out-of-city services provided by public enterprises, including electricity, water or sewer service, natural gas, public transportation, and solid waste collection and disposal," the resolution said.

House Bill 1248 would also require that revenues collected by the city for the use of any public enterprise could only be used for the purpose of operating, maintaining or expanding that particular public enterprise, according to the resolution, which was approved by council members at their monthly meeting Thursday night.

"House Bill 1248 would prohibit the city from serving new electric customers from outside the corporate limits except in cases where investor-owned utilities or electric membership corporations refuse to serve the potential customer, even in cases where the city has existing service lines available to the potential customer," the resolution said.

City officials believe the proposed legislation interferes with local government authority and will have an adverse effect on municipalities, according to the resolution.

"House Bill 1248 is unwarranted and unnecessarily interferes with local government operations which would severely hamper present operations in the city of Greenville and would restrict potential for future growth and industrial recruitment," the resolution said.

"There has been no study or thorough investigation of municipal utility and enterprise fund operation which would indicate any necessity for the changes embodied in House Bill 1248."

In addition, the council approved a letter to members of the Pitt County legislative delegation urging them to vote to defeat the bill.

The letter, which is to be sent to Rep. Walter Jones Jr., D-Pitt, Rep. Ed Warren, D-Pitt, Sen. Tom Taft, D-Pitt, Sen. Bob Martin, D-Pitt, Rep. Anderson, and Rep. David W. Bumgartner Jr., D-Gaston, chairman of the House Public Utilities Committee, says the bill would have a far-reaching impact on municipalities when there is no clearly demonstrated need.

"The provisions of this bill have a crippling effect on the operations of the city of Greenville," the letter said.

The city charges a higher rate for water to out-of-city residences than the rate for in-city residences.

"This higher rate is justified because of an increased cost to provide this service outside the corporate limits," the letter said. "Utility service lines outside the corporate limits must generally run a longer distance to serve each customer.

"In addition, there are fewer customers per mile of line in the less densely populated areas outside corporate limits. These factors increase the cost of providing this service to any individual and justify a higher rate."

Electric, natural gas and sewer services cost the same for in-city and out-of-city users, according to the letter, which said the bill would stymie growth.

"The city has a strong interest in being able to offer these services outside the corporate limits," the letter said. "Industrial recruitment (or expansion of existing industry) and commercial and residential growth require the provision of city services.

"In areas which are near the present corporate limits of the city, it is reasonable to anticipate that these areas will be urban in character, and will eventually be within the city limits. It is beneficial to both the city and the developing area for the city to provide the necessary urban services to sustain a growing economy."

Du Pont Chief Says Manufacturers Optimistic Over Trade Imbalance

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

America cannot count much on the government in the manufacturing sector's effort to curb the huge trade deficit and in taking effective steps to become more competitive in world markets, according to Edgar S. Woolard Jr., president and chief operating office of E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Woolard, native of Washington, N.C., and former plant manager of Du Pont at Kinston, was guest speaker Thursday night at the Eastern North Carolina Industrial Council's meeting and spring rally held at Hilton Inn.

EDGAR S. WOOLARD JR.

"Within a few years, America has gone from a trade surplus to its biggest deficit in history. Companies are going under, many jobs have been lost. People are worried about this, and rightly so," Woolard said.

This situation, Woolard maintains, need not result in apathy on the part of manufacturers and their employees. "We are, and can even more so, put American ingenuity to work. We need to wake up, to recognize our problems and at the same time to be aware of our opportunities. They are there."

Woolard said that for some time the American dollar exchange rate created real difficulties for American businessmen, and that this continues to be a problem. "However, the dollar rate is now back to a more realistic level. This will help us sell more goods, become more competitive in world markets."

Throughout his talk, Woolard expressed a growing attitude of optimism among American manufacturers, despite inaction on the part of government. "U.S. manufacturers are far from throwing in the towel," he said. "The manufacturing sector of the American economy accounts for one-fifth of the gross national product. Since the beginning of the 1980s, we have become more competitive, seen a rise of 4 percent yearly."

Brunswick Files Cocaine Charges

Two Greenville men arrested here Tuesday night on sale and delivery and conspiracy to traffic in cocaine charges have been charged with conspiracy to traffic in cocaine in Brunswick County.

District Attorney Mike Easley said in a telephone interview this morning from his Southport home that Fotios Kamtsiklis, 37, of 420 Green Mill Run Apartments and Petros Tholiotis, 27, of 111 E. 9th St. have been charged with conspiracy to traffic more than 400 grams of cocaine.

He described the Brunswick County charges against the two as "the highest level of cocaine trafficking" and said the manditory 35-year sentence if convicted could be accompanied by a $200,000 fine.

Bond for Kamtsiklis and Tholiotis on the Brunswick County charge has been set at $1 million each, Easley said.

According to Easley, the warrants issued Wednesday resulted from a six-months-long investigation of the two in the coastal county south of Wilmington. And he said additional charges are expected.

A State Bureau of Investigation spokesman said Thursday that the arrest of Tholiotis, Kamtsiklis and a third man — William Anderson Noble, 23, of 402 Lewis St. — in Greenville, followed a year-long undercover probe he described as a "major trafficking investigation."

The 28 ounces of cocaine seized when the three were taken into custody had a street value of about $80,000.

Federal Prisoner Stabs Kinston Jailer

By The Associated Press

A Lenoir County jailer was stabbed three times Thursday by a prisoner who tried to escape, authorities said. The prisoner was shot during his attempt.

The jailer, Joe Clark, was in stable condition at Lenoir Memorial Hospital, a hospital spokeswoman said. Clark was stabbed in the back and shoulder.

The federal prisoner, who was not identified, was taken to Pitt Memorial Hospital. Lenoir County Sheriff Leo Harper said he could not release the prisoner's name without the permission of U.S. marshals, and a spokeswoman at the hospital said she could not release a condition without a name.

The prisoner, who was being held temporarily at the jail, had been charged with robbery, Sheriff Leo Harper said.

The prisoner was shot by a deputy sheriff, who also was not identified, Harper said. The attempt occurred about 7:15 p.m., he said.

The prisoner jumped Clark when Clark took another inmate out to make a phone call, Harper said. He took Clark's keys and attempted to leave but was shot once by the deputy, Harper said.

County Enjoined

A temporary restraining order — to keep the county from enforcing a recently passed ordinance to control massage businesses — was issued by Superior Court Judge David Reid Wednesday afternoon.

The action followed a hearing on a complaint filed earlier this month by owners of the Misty Blue Relaxation Studio, located on N.C. 43 about eight miles south of Greenville, which alleges the ordinance is unconstitutional.

The ordinance, adopted March 23, gives 60 days for businesses already in operation to comply. The 60-day period ends May 23.

At the hearing Wednesday, Judge Reid issued the temporary restraining order and gave the plaintiffs 90 days to file additional papers in connection with their complaint.

County Attorney W.H. Watson said the next hearing of the complaint would probably be heard about the first of September.

DANGEROUS PRACTICE

I saw, with mixed feelings, a picture of a farmer riding a little boy on a tractor while discing a piece of land near Durham. It was on the front page of Wednesday's edition of The Daily Reflector. While it was a nice picture, I fear that its publication might tend to promote such action. Instead, because of the danger of injuries to or deaths of children from falling from tractors and being run over by plows or other equipment, the practice of allowing children in the vicinity of heavy work equipment should be discouraged. Prime Lending Rates Climbing

NEW YORK (AP) — Three of the nation's biggest banks today raised their prime lending rate by a quarter percentage point to 8¼ percent, the highest level in 10 months and second time in two weeks that the key interest rate has jumped.

The moves by Chase Manhattan Bank, Manufacturers Hanover Trust and Chemical Bank, all of New York, were expected to be followed by other major banks.

The banks last raised their prime rates on May 1 to 8 percent from 7¾ percent. On March 31, major banks raised the prime rate to 7¾ percent from 7½ percent, where it had held since late August 1986.

The increases reflect the broader pressure pushing up interest rates nationwide. Economists have linked the upward movement to efforts by the Federal Reserve Board to tighten credit conditions, largely to stem the dollar's declining value and reduce prospects of inflation.

Major banks have raised their prime rates three times this year in response to rises in market rates, which over the past six months have increased the banks' costs of borrowing money and paying interest on deposit accounts.

The prime is a benchmark used to set interest on a range of corporate and consumer credit. In recent years, the rate has taken on greater significance for consumers because is is used for setting interest on credit on variable rate credit cards, home equity loans and other consumer debt.

Today's increases pushed the base lending rate to its highest level since July 1986, when the rate was changed from 8½ percent to 8 percent. The prime rate peaked at 20.5 percent in 1981.

GOP Blocks Star Wars Debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans, fighting Democratic-sponsored limits on President Reagan's "Star Wars" missile defense program, succeeded today in blocking consideration of a Pentagon budget bill.

By a vote of 52-36, the Democratic-controlled chamber failed to choke off the GOP filibuster. Senate rules require a three-fifths vote, or 60 votes, to win what is known as a cloture motion and shut off the debate blockade.

The Republicans were fighting an amendment written chiefly by Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. The language would ban spending money for Star Wars tests that violate the existing, or narrow, interpretation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty unless both houses of Congress approved.

"The president can't negotiate with the Soviets and the Congress at the same time," said Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas, who promised to continue the filibuster indefinitely. If the Democrats' language were allowed, he said, Reagan should call his negotiators home from Geneva and "send Senate people over in their place."

But Nunn said the Pentagon needed the legislation and Republicans were eventually going to have to allow action on the Star Wars amendment.

"There will be a debate on this measure this year. There will be a vote on this measure this year. The only question is when," said Nunn.

The Republicans, he said, want lawmakers to tell Reagan, "Go out there and test anything you want to, don't worry about our allies, don't worry about the Senate."

Reagan has asserted that he has the constitutional right to move to a broad intepretation of the ABM pact. The broad view would allow Star Wars tests, while the narrow view would ban tests of the Strategic Defense Initiative, as Star Wars is formally known.

Republicans want the Democrats to drop the amendment and consider the Star Wars-ABM issue as a separate bill. But Nunn and other Democrats have refused to do that because they say attaching the issue to the Pentagon budget bill gives them leverage with the White House.

Byrd said he would call a second vote early next week. Should the cloture attempt fail again next week, Nunn said he would recommend that the entire issue be delayed until later in the year.

The measure which eventually passes the Senate will have to be reconciled with the separate measure that is making its way through the Democratic-led House. That chamber has been working on its bill for two weeks and is likely to finish next week.

Overall, the Senate bill proposes $303 billion for defense in fiscal 1988, compared with $288 billion in the House measure. Both figures are reductions from the $312 billion Reagan sought. The current defense budget is $289 billion.

Star Wars has been a major point of contention in both bills. Reagan originally wanted $5.8 billion next year for Star Wars, compared with the current $3.6 billion budget. The House bill proposes $3.1 billion, while the Senate measure would authorize $4.5 billion, a figure that could be reduced on the Senate floor.

If the ABM-Star Wars amendment remains in the final version of the bill, Reagan has said he would veto it, and 34 Republicans have signed a letter promising to uphold his veto. That means his veto would stand because a successful veto override requires 67 votes should all senators votes.

If no authorization bill is approved, defense spending would eventually be made part of a congressional device known as a continuing resolution.

Bus Hijacker Captured

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Soldiers stormed a bus and freed seven hostages after a young man with a grenade seized the vehicle and demanded a plane to fly him to West Berlin, witnesses reported.

Police led away the hijacker, and several people were seen being taken away in ambulances, but it was not clear whether there were any injuries in the four-hour standoff.

A woman who was on the bus and managed to jump off described the hijacker as a Polish man about 18 or 19 years old.

"He sat at the back of the bus holding something. He was acting as if he was mentally ill. He was behaving strangely," the woman, who did not want her name used, told a Western reporter at the scene.

"At one point the bus slowed down and about 20 people who seemed to know that something was going on jumped off the bus. I was among them."

Krzysztof Jaskot, assistant general manager of LOT Polish Airlines, was contacted by telephone at Warsaw's Okecie Airport and reported, "A man terrorized a bus outside the airport with seven passengers inside.

"The man is threatening people with a grenade and demanded that he be given a plane to fly to West Berlin."

The woman said she thought there were about 20 other people left on the bus when she fled. Jaskot mentioned only seven hostages, however.

The woman said the bus left from Staszow, near Kielce, about 90 miles south of Warsaw, and was on its way to the capital's main bus terminal.

Western reporters at the airport said the bus was parked on the tarmac, about halfway between international and domestic terminals.

Scores of helmeted police with automatic weapons sealed off Okecie Airport.

A Warsaw police official said the man seized the bus shortly before noon and made several demands.

Wholesale Prices Climb In April

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices, driven by steep increases in prices for meats, automobiles and energy, jumped 0.7 percent in April, at an annual rate of 8.9 percent, the government reported today.

Food prices, which had risen 0.5 percent in March after five months of decline, shot up 1.5 percent in April, largely because of accelerating meat prices, the Labor Department said.

Beef and veal prices rose 8.3 percent over the month and prices for pork skyrocketed by 13 percent. Processed poultry prices rose 3.1 percent.

Meat prices had been declining in recent months.

Car prices shot up 2.4 percent after declining since December, largely due to rebates during the first quarter of the year by auto manufacturers. Prices for light trucks rose by 2.9 percent over March, following declines of 1.0 percent and 1.3 percent the previous two months.

Energy prices shot up 2.1 percent in April, with gasoline rising by 2.3 percent and home heating oil by 1.8 percent. The increases were much larger than in March, but smaller than those in January and February.

Prices for consumer goods other than food and energy rose just 0.2 percent, one-fourth the 0.8 percent increase in March.

The April increase left the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Producer Price Index at 295.0. That means an array of goods costing $10 in 1967 would have cost $29.50 last month. That is 78 cents more than the same assortment would have cost in April 1986.

The bureau said wholesale prices have risen 2.7 percent over the year, with an average annual increase of 5.1 percent since January.

Despite the recent increases, energy prices are still 1.1 percent below what they were a year ago, when the world oil market was just beginning to recover from a collapse that had pushed the price of oil to a decade-low $11 to $12 a barrel.

Crude oil prices are now back in the range of $18 to $19 a barrel.

Overall food prices are 4.2 percent above what they were a year ago.

The large April increases for meats were somewhat offset by lower prices for fruits, vegetables, fish and coffee.

Fresh fruit prices dropped 11.1 percent after rising 7.7 percent in March. Fish continued to fall, dropping 6.7 percent last month following a 4.6 percent decline the previous month.

Fresh and dried vegetables declined 1.2 percent after leaping nearly 21 percent in March. Coffee prices continued their year-long decline and are 18.8 percent below what they were a year ago.

The effects of the falling dollar on prices for imported goods are beginning to create upward pressure on prices for capital equipment. Higher prices for X-ray equipment and commercial furniture more than offset declines for heavy trucks, transformers and oil-filled machinery, sending capital equipment prices up 0.3 percent in April, following a 0.1 percent increase in March.

Paper Says Gorbachev Plans Visit

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) - Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev plans to travel to the United States in September for a summit meeting with President Reagan, the mass-circulation Bild newspaper said today.

Bild, without citing sources, said the Kremlin informed U.S. officials of Gorbachev's willingness to travel to the United States for a two-day visit.

Soviet Embassy officials were not immediately available for comment on the report. Their U.S. counterparts declined to give a reaction.

"Any comment on such a report would have to come out of Washington," U.S. Embassy spokesman Robert Heath said in a telephone interview.

Bild said Gorbachev plans to visit the United States during the last week of September and address the United Nations in New York.

The newspaper said Gorbachev hopes to be able to sign an agreement on medium-range nuclear missiles while in Washington and make a further arms control proposal.

"During his talk (before the United Nations) Gorbachev will make new far-reaching disarmament proposals, which will include conventional forces," Bild said without elaboration.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and other ranking Bonn officials have objected to the Kremlin's current proposals to withdraw medium- and shorter-range nuclear missiles from Europe.

Kohl says the proposals do not take into account Soviet superiority in conventional weapons in Europe.

The Bild report, which was slated to appear in the newspaper's Saturday editions, was telexed to Bonn-based news agencies in advance.

Reagan To 'Rest'

release of the hostages. "It is possible that what we were talking about was the use of money to pay people in higher (places) — individuals who could effect a rescue of our people there, but I have never thought of that as ransom."

Reagan added, "I would suggest that never would it be termed ransom."

Reagan opened the session, held in the Old Executive Office Building next to the White House, by reading a statement chastising Congress over the budget and for approving arms-control legislation that he said would give the Soviets prizes they could not win at the bargaining table.

Singling out measures to restrict nuclear testing and his "Star Wars" missile defense system, Reagan said the legislation would undermine U.S. negotiators at arms talks.

On the budget, Reagan said that when the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law was passed last year, there were "all sorts of pious declarations from Congress about living up to its deficit targets."

However, he said, that commitment is "rapidly disintegrating" and "Congress is back to doing what comes natural, playing to the special interests."

NCRMA Meeting

Edward M. Walker of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce and Rep. Ed Warren of Greenville attended the annual meeting of the North Carolina Retail Merchants Association in Raleigh.

Both men are on the board of directors of the association.

Attorney General Lacy Thornburg was the keynote speaker at a dinner Monday night. Participants visited with members of their legislative delegation Tuesday morning.

Utilities

The letter also questions the reasons why the bill was submitted.

"We believe that we have acted responsibly in the operation and expansion of our municipal utility system and other enterprise services in the past," the letter said. Therefore, we do not understand why the General Assembly would consider abandoning the principle of partnership which the state and local governments have successfully operated under for many years.

"We believe that we are responsive to the needs of our citizens and to the growth in our county. In the absence of any claim that we have not responsibly managed our public trust, we cannot understand why restrictions as crippling as those of House Bill 1248 would be considered."

Downtown

There's considerable commiserating over downtown Greenville. The concern is that it's not what it used to be.

That is correct. Downtown Greenville clearly is not the retailing center it once was before the advent of shopping centers drew the large department stores to the outskirts of the city.

Still, while downtown Greenville has its problems, the situation is not one of dispair. Many of the big stores and some of the smaller ones have moved to The Plaza, Carolina East Mall and Arlington Boulevard. However, Evergreen Inc. officials say there are some 2,100 people working in the larger area known as downtown. To be sure there are empty buildings, but the county is raising its horizons for downtown with the purchase of a city block north of the courthouse. Both Greenville city government and Greenville Utilities are committed to downtown as are a number of banks and other financial institutions. And if you are looking to buy property downtown, just try. Branch Bank officials said they looked the area over for property to expand the headquarters before deciding to move to a new building near Memorial Drive and Statonsburg Road. Even at that the bank still plans to keep a branch downtown.

It becomes obvious that downtown Greenville is in a transition. It has parking, good street access and a large population around it when one considers the residential areas nearby and the large number of students on the university campus.

Development of government offices will mean the need for more private office space for concerns which need to be near the courthouse or other governmental services.

If one is looking for the downtown of old with Belks, Penneys and Roses anchoring the commercial area we can be sure it will never be that way again. At the same time there is no reason for the downtown area to become a slum, considering all it has to offer. In a growing community, downtown will have all the opportunities in the world to be an important part of Greenville's and Pitt County's business future.

Speed Limits

True, the General Assembly has approved legislation opening the door for a 65 mph speed limit on rural sections of Interstate highways in North Carolina ... but anyone going out to exercise that right anytime soon could wind up in a heap o' trouble.

The law did not raise the speed limit. It did give the state Department of Transportation the authority to determine which sections of the Interstate can handle higher speeds.

Slightly more than half of the state's 662 miles of eligible Interstates were expected to be approved for speeds up to 65 mph.

Cynics, on the other hand, anticipate many motorists will see the new speed limit as greenlighting 75 mph on the if-you-don't-get-caught premise. We count ourselves as among those convinced speeds of 75 are not "new" in North Carolina.

We are certain that over the years most of our 55 mph drivers have been frequently passed on the highways in a manner that suggested they were standing still. There was really no pressing need for a 65 mph speed limit in our state. Now that we have it, the new limit is open to abuse, too.

To the editor:

This is an open letter to the nursing staff of Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

For too long the board of trustees and their subordinates in administration have made growth and specialization their greatest goals for our hospital. While the medical school is a definite asset and will eventually bring notoriety to East Carolina University, it is a fledgling school and will need a great deal of support from the community-at-large. A great deal of research is in progress at the medical complex, no small part of which is nursing-related.

My position and that of many others is that research and growth (especially for the sake of being bigger in and of itself), even education must take a back seat to the care of our patients. As Mary Mallison asked in the May issue of "The American Journal of Nursing," "How many patients enter the hospital because they want to be subjects for researchers?"

I would say darn few. As a student nurse, I was cognizant of this and sought to treat my patients as people, not subjects.

Hospital administrators everywhere need to look at the business they are supposed to be in — then at the business they are about. The contrast is startling, disheartening. Please read Ms. Mallison's editorial referred to above. I couldn't have said it better myself.

P.S. If you (nurses) are offended by attempts to quantify your worth with nickel and dime raises, there is still hope for you.

To the editor:

The good news is that the state Senate approved the toxic waste dump cleanup bill by 48-1 on Tuesday. Tom Taft's ammendment to exempt firms that used "due care" when abandoning hazardous wastes failed both in committee and on the Senate floor. Taft is to be commended for voting for the bill.

The bad news is that the billboard bill passed the State House Tuesday by 61-43. Rep. Walter B. Jones Jr. deserves praise for voting against this bad proposal that sailed through the House Committee in record time. Ed Warren voted for the bill.

If approved by the Senate, the bill will negate Greenville's city sign ordinance which requires eventual removal of non-conforming off-premise signs through amortization — a process that the courts, including the Supreme Court traditionally have upheld. The fact that sign companies easily can reassemble non-conforming displays in other locations is often ignored when the question of just compensation arises. The Senate will vote soon; the sign lobby is well-financed and hard at work. There are over 17,000 billboards across the state. It's time to convince Senator Taft that 17,000 is more than enough and that Greenville, Raleigh and other local governments should retain the right to regulate outdoor advertising as their residents see fit.

Outburst Changes Tone Of Hearing

WASHINGTON — For nearly 14 hours, during three wearying days on the Iran-contra witness stand, Robert C. McFarlane had been a tightly controlled, impassive, almost somnambulant witness. He was fulfilling perfectly the advice of his counsel to be "supplicatory" when appearing before congressional investigators.

When his emotional break came, at 2:50 p.m. Wednesday, it was as unexpected as it was explosive. What had been a passive House hearing room became one charged with tension and emotion.

His angry outburst also dramatically changed the tone of the day and perhaps of others to come. From then until the hearing recessed shortly after 5 p.m. the atmosphere was marked by increasing displays of resentment, recrimination and rising political partisanship by members of the select House and Senate committees investigating the Iran-contra affair.

McFarlane had just finished answering a series of mildly expressed but pointed questions from Senate Chairman Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, and far more gentle handling from Rep. Dick Cheney, R-Wyo., when the ranking Republican senator, Warren B. Rudman, N.H., took over the interrogator's role.

Rudman, a former prosecutor, had been brisk but not harsh or confrontational for the first 7½ minutes of his alloted 10-minute turn at questioning President Reagan's former national security adviser.

Then he turned to what he called "the DEA caper" — the plan revealed in last week's testimony to use U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency employees to bribe people involved in holding two American hostages in Lebanon and ultimately ransom them for $1 million apiece.

McFarlane acknowledged that he had approved the plan, and so had Attorney General Edwin Meese III. He also conceded that it was an intelligence activity which fell within the scope of the 1947 law creating the Central Intelligence Agency. In answer to another question, he said his National Security Council deputy, Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, had tried to carry out the policy and that $200,000 had been used "to try to start the process."

Nothing in the line of questioning, or in the demeanor of McFarlane and Rudman, prepared those in the hearing room and millions watching on television for what came next.

"To your knowledge," Rudman asked, "was a finding (legally required for a president to begin a covert intelligence operation) ever signed for this activity?"

"No, sir," McFarlane replied, his voice still low and his manner laconic.

"Or congressional committees — House or Senate intelligence committees ever notified of this activity?"

"No, sir," McFarlane said, still low-keyed.

"Should they have been?"

Suddenly, McFarlane erupted. His face flushed, his voice rising, he fairly shouted out: "No sir!"

Inside the hearing room, it became deadly silent. All eyes were riveted on the normally impassive McFarlane.

When invited by Rudman to "tell me why," McFarlane's words poured out emotionally as he delivered an impassioned lecture about the United States being hamstrung in dealing with terrorists.

"It is more than passing strange to me that we cannot aspire to a policy which is more effective to deal with terrorism," he said. "Now, it is undeniable that some countries are good at it. And they are good because terrorists know that whenever they commit terrorism against Israel, something, somehow, somewhere is going to happen. Now, it may not always be arms. It may not be preemptive attack. It may be negotiation. It may be bribing. But you can be goddamn sure if any Israeli's caught, he's going to have his government going after the people who did it!"

That wasn't the first time McFarlane appeared to break Wednesday, but it was the one captured by the pitilessly revealing TV cameras. The other occasion came just after the lunch break.

As reporters clustered around him when he was about to take the witness stand, he was asked about earlier remarks that indicated he had been prepared to commit suicide if captured and about to be tortured on his secret mission to Iran.

McFarlane turned visibly angry at the question. "Don't write about it!" he said sharply.

Then, after muttering, "Outrageous! Irresponsible!" he stalked out of the room, returning several minutes later after composing himself.

But the strain was evident. After his angry, emotional exchange with Sen. Rudman, during which his voice kept rising and seemed at times in danger of breaking, his answers to critical questions became far more caustic and defiant.

At one point, Rep. Peter Rodino, D-N.J., recalled McFarlane's earlier testimony that Oliver North told him he planned a "shredding party" last November after the diversion of Iranian arms sales proceeds to the contras became known. "You did say that you did not, if I recall, in any way advise Col. North that that was not the proper thing to do, that that was illegal. Is that right?" Rodino asked.

"That's right, and I deserve responsibility, and I ought to be prosecuted to the full extent of the law and sent away."

It was an attempt at bravado, but it seemed to fall short. Hearing Day Seven, that had begun placidly, ended with unusual rancor.

Adelman Finds Hot Seat

WASHINGTON — A security dispute that has bubbled within the Reagan administration for nearly two years neared the surface May 7 when Deputy Defense Secretary William H. Taft IV wrote Kenneth L. Adelman, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA).

Taft crossed out "Dear Mr. Adelman" in the salutation and wrote in "Ken," but there all camaraderie ended. Citing "disturbing reports" on ACDA's handling of classified material, he noted that its continued reception of intelligence from the Pentagon is "predicated" on obeying "strict security standards." The scarcely veiled threat amid the great Moscow security scare: Clean up your act, or we'll cut you off.

The point at issue is Adelman's refusal to fire an ACDA employee accused of mishandling hundreds of top secret intelligence documents about alleged Pakistani nuclear development and handing over material to either South Korea or Japan. That has caused not only the Pentagon-ACDA rift, but evoked an aura of mystery about what the U.S. government is doing in the shadowy regions of nuclear proliferation.

It also has energized right-wing discontent with Adelman, a neoconservative and hard-line spokesman on arms control policy who was confirmed by the Senate in 1983 only after bitter opposition from liberals. The struggle reflects a dying administration where Republicans are eating their own.

The right grumbles that Adelman failed to clean house at ACDA, retaining the likes of arms control stalwart Thomas Graham as general counsel. Graham was author of a memorandum whose leaking this year turned the tide against early deployment of the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Graham also is a key player in events triggered in July 1985 when a "codeword" document — containing communications intelligence information from the Pentagon's National Security Agency (NSA) — was found on the desk of an ACDA employee, Kathleen Strang. An "audit" was made of her safe, which was found to contain 450 pages of codeword material that should have been in the agency vault.

The thorough investigation by Berne Indahl, ACDA security officer, ran into heat from Graham and other key officials at the agency and defense of Strang from Arthur Hartman, then ambassador to the Soviet Union and since a center of the Mosocw embassy security scandal. Based on Indahl's report and the recommendation by an outside panel, ACDA administrative officer William Montgomery recommended that Strang should be stripped of her clearance and fired.

Adelman overruled that recommendation, instead suspending Strang for six months without pay after which she could return to ACDA with top secret, but not codeword, clearance. "There is no evidence of any compromise of material," Adelman told us, contending she had a previous record of "12 years with no security violation."

But ACDA sources say the Indahl investigation turned up a long record of past violations. Lt. Gen. William E. Odom, NSA director, has threatened to cut off ACDA from his agency's communications intelligence. Rep. Robert Dornan, a hot-tempered conservative Republican, has tangled with what he has described to friends as "unbelievable arrogance" by the wise-cracking Adelman.

Dornan's complaints were cited in Taft's remarkable letter to Adelman last week. Taft disagreed with Adelman's position, represented by Graham in an internal document as striking "an appropriate balance" between protecting national security information and "the basic fairness to the employe."

The Pentagon deputy argued "that we should err on the side of caution" when it comes to safeguarding "our intelligence sources." As for Strang's clearance, Taft said: "Employes whose past conduct renders questionable their ability or willingness to adhere rigorously to security controls should not retain eligibility for secret or top secret clearance." He specifically asked "what actions" Adelman contemplates as a result of a CIA review of ACDA security procedure.

If the Pentagon considers this matter serious enough to hint at depriving ACDA of intelligence, why is ACDA so adamant on this point? There are hints from insiders that perhaps Kathleen Strang knows so much about clandestine policies on nuclear proliferation that it is risky to discipline her. Adelman thinks it is the case of the Moscow-spawned security hysteria infecting his right-wing critics.

Less than four years ago, Kenny Adelman was the toast of the conservative movement — winning an uphill battle for Senate confirmation. Today, he not only is assailed by the right but is admonished by the Pentagon to clean up his act. That symbolizes the descent of Republicans in the Reagan administration's last days.

Strength For Today

Genuine love for humanity cannot be measured by the amount people give to charity or the interest they take in uplifting movements.

For many people giving to charity is a pleasant indulgence which brings feelings of self-importance. We have all seen that type of person who becomes involved in good causes primarily to express his own ego and satisfy a need to dominate other people.

Count Leo Tolstoi once wrote that "the rich are willing to do everything for the poor except get off their backs."

Charity means first of all giving of ourselves, specifically, identifying our neighbors' interests with our own. This is what is meant by the phrase which is so often repeated — that we are to love our neighbors as ourselves. Our efforts should be to make our help effective and not to ensure a pleasant feedback for ourselves.

Senate Panel Delays Action On Extending Career Ladder

By JODY TAYLOR
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A bill to expand pilot programs on career ladders and give local school boards more flexibility was criticized and postponed when some Senate committee members equated flexibility with vagueness.

"I don't think we have the privilege of transferring money somewhere else," Sen. Marvin Ward, D-Forsyth, told the Senate Education Committee. He said the bill should aim a specific amount of money to the career ladder program or the number of programs to be eligible.

"We've got to determine what and how much and get it appropriated..." he added.

The career ladder program has been implemented in 16 pilot systems, and Gov. Jim Martin's proposed budget calls for funding experimental programs in 12 additional systems.

Sen. Bob Warren, D-Johnston, is sponsoring the bill to allow differential pay in certain school districts.

"Some states have come full circle and come back to a local-option plan," he said. "This bill would allow local units to set up their own criteria and try a new approach to the career ladder."

The bill has been endorsed by the North Carolina School Boards Association, and the state Principals Association.

Gene Causby, school boards association spokesman, said there appeared to be little to be gained by duplicating efforts in the original 16 pilots.

"We'd just like to do that a little differently," Causby said. "It's not intended to try to compete with the career ladder."

Sen. Bill Martin, D-Guilford, won adoption of an amendment to have the state Board of Education choose up to 12 systems for the pilot program, but Ward said that didn't go far enough.

"We still have to have a compromise bill to spell out how much it will cost," Ward said.

Sen. Helen Marvin, D-Gaston, said there should be some way to gather the best information from the pilot programs so it could be shared.

"We need an evaluation procedure so we'll have some way of looking at these pilot units ... and decide if we'll continue to have them," Mrs. Marvin said.

Warren, the committee chairman, asked Ward, Bill Martin and Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, to rework the bill and present the results at the next meeting.

Tim Pittman, Gov. Jim Martin's press secretary, said Martin would wait to see the final product from the committee before passing judgment on the bill.

In other legislative action, the Senate voted 50-0 for a bill that would make it clear that the state will pay for public school programs and leave local governments to fund buildings.

"This responsibility has become intertwined. Consequently, nobody knows who is responsible for what or who is accountable," Warren said.

Warren said the bill has been debated and studied for four years.

Barge Owner Says Trash Going Home

HARVEY, La. (AP) — A barge load of 3,100 tons of unwanted garbage will be hauled back to Long Island, where it came from, for unloading and burial, towboat operators announced Thursday.

The barge, which has been on a seven-week, 6,000-mile search for a site to dump its contents only to be rejected by at least six states and three foreign countries, was just off Hatteras, N.C., Thursday afternoon.

"We decided it would be in the best interest of all concerned to return the barge to Long Island City, N.Y., where it was originally loaded, for offloading and disposition of the garbage," Robert Guidry, president of Harvey Gulf International Marine, which owns the tug pulling the barge, told a news conference.

Plans for the garbage's disposal had been worked out with Henry G. Williams, commissioner of the New York state Department of Environmental Conservation, Guidry said.

"We've been informed by Mr. Williams that permits enabling us to dock the barge and landfill space for the disposal of the garbage are now in place," Guidry said.

The barge apparently would dock some time Monday, said Guidry, adding that he did not know where the refuse would be buried.

Asked if he was sure everything was in order, Guidry said, "We're not sure of anything at this point."

However, he said he talked to Williams shortly before talking to reporters. "We don't expect any problems this time," Guidry said.

The garbage came from from New York City, Nassau County and the Town of Islip, officials have said.

Guidry called the odyssey the result of an honest mistake and said federal and New York inspectors had assured him the garbage was first class — that is, non-toxic, non-radioactive and non-hazardous to people or the environment.

The barge, loaded with tightly packed bales, has been at sea since March 22, when it left New York headed for a landfill in North Carolina.

However, permits were not in order, and North Carolina refused to allow the vessel to dock. Five other states followed suit, as did Mexico, Belize and the Bahamas.

Guidry said his company had nothing to do with the routing or the contents, since it was simply under contract to tow the load.

Asked about reports that the haul cost $6,000 a day, Guidry said that was too high but would not give a more precise figure.

Judicial Bill Wins Approval

RALEIGH (AP) — A bill to change North Carolina's system of electing Superior Court judges, filed in response to racial discrimination claims, won a Senate committee's approval after it was amended to reply to some of Gov. Jim Martin's concerns.

The Senate Judiciary IV Committee agreed Thursday to retain four of eight special judgeships filled by the governor that would have been abolished under the bill. The only Republican Superior Court judges are special judges.

However, J. Ward Purrington, Martin's chief lobbyist, said the amendment would not satisfy the governor.

"Four judges (are) not going to provide the same coverage as the eight specials did that they abolished," Purrington said. "It will lead to a more chaotic and a less efficiently operated judicial system."

Getting rid of the special judges, he said, is "stripping the governor. It's purely political."

The bill, which has cleared the House, was sent to the Appropriations Committee, which will decide whether to fund nine judgeships in majority-black districts that the measure would establish.

In addition to creating the predominantly black districts, the bill would have all Superior Court judges seek election in the same years, eliminating the "staggered terms" that two lawsuits say make it harder to elect minorities.

House Committee Rejects GOP Bills Banning Ads For Alcohol

RALEIGH (AP) — A Republican legislator and longtime foe of alcoholic beverages says he'll continue his crusade against booze despite a committee's rejection of two of his bills.

"After a while, their conscience is going to prick them and they're going to have to respond to the people," Rep. Coy Privette, R-Cabarrus, said of his fellow lawmakers.

Privette spoke after the House Alcoholic Beverage Control Committee defeated measures Thursday to ban alcohol advertising in North Carolina and to require that businesses that sell alcohol post signs warning of health risks.

A Baptist minister and director of the conservative Christian Action League, which long has taken interest in alcohol-related issues, Privette complained that the panel was weighted in favor of alcoholic beverage producers and sellers.

"There's never been a bill come out of the ABC Committee that's gone contrary to the industry," he said.

Last week, the committee killed two other bills in Privette's "six-pack" of anti-booze legislation. Those measures called for bans on brown bagging and sales of cold beer.

The committee chairman, Rep. David Redwine, D-Brunswick, said the panel had given Privette's bills fair consideration. Redwine said another Privette bill that would outlaw open alcoholic beverage containers in motor vehicles had a good chance of winning committee approval.

Speaking in a committee room packed with broadcasters who opposed the advertising ban, Privette said the alcoholic beverage industry spent over $1 billion per year on commercials.

"Something is wrong with a society that seeks to glamorize this particular product," he said. "It's high time to say that we're not going to let our number-one addictive drug to be promoted as if it was as harmless as lemonade."

He charged that the advertisements fostered teen alcoholism by featuring sports and rock music stars.

Wade Hargrove, spokesman for the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters, said his clients had spent millions of dollars on public service advertising aimed at combating drunken driving and alcohol abuse.

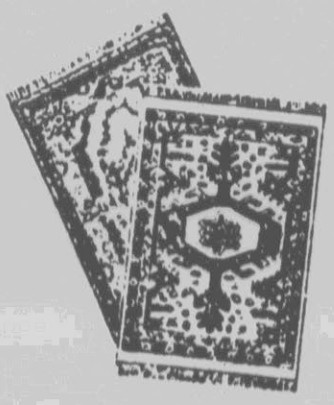

The real causes of teen drinking are peer pressure and the influence of family members, Hargrove said, noting that marijuana and cocaine use is increasing although those drugs are not advertised.

"There is no evidence of any linkage between advertising and alcohol consumption," he said.

Hugh Stevens of the North Carolina Press Association said some of the state's newspapers use alcohol ads and some don't. Either way, it should be up to the newspapers to make that decision, he said.

Scott Long, a lobbyist for Miller Brewing Co., said his company's ads were designed to get drinkers of other brands to switch to Miller and not to get non-drinkers to imbibe.

Watchdog Unit Says State Passive On Equality

By JODY TAYLOR
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Federal law enforcement officials have taken a more active interest in racial and religious violence in North Carolina than state authorities, an official of a watchdog group says.

"The social climate in North Carolina is a racial climate," said Leah Wise, spokeswoman for Southerners for Economic Justice. "The state has given a clear signal of passivity at best ... When equality is a meaningful goal, the climate will change."

Ms. Wise told the Governor's Task Force on Racial, religious and Ethnic Violence Thursday that the state has left the job of investigating incidents of racial and religious violence to local law enforcement officials, and she said the job has not been done effectively.

"Cross burnings, though they are felonies, are considered pranks by local law enforcement officers," Ms. Wise said. "In the case of Glenn Miller, it took the federal government to enforce state law. The federal investigation did more than the state."

Miller was convicted in federal court of violating a federal decree prohibiting the White Patriot Party from conducting paramilitary operations. Miller was arrested earlier this month in Missouri, after he allegedly threatened to ignite a race war if a list of 17 demands was not met by the federal government.

Ms. Wise said groups like the White Patriot Party and the Christian Knights of the Ku Klux Klan have flourished in economically depressed areas, particularly those where there have been plant closings.

"People are involved in economic turmoil that they don't understand," Ms. Wise said. "They are vulnerable to simple answers. These groups offer them something they can hate.

"(The state) fosters a racist economic policy that fosters discrimination," Ms. Wise said.

Mab Segrest of the Durham-based North Carolinians Against Religious and Racial Violence told the task force it should pay special attention to the Christian Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

"This is the last one (Klan group) that is operating pretty much unbridled," Ms. Segrest said. (CKKKK leader Virgil Griffin) says he's going to march in every little town."

Ms. Segrest said Griffin also planned a march in Greensboro, where in 1979, five Communist Workers Party members were shot to death during a confrontation with Klansmen and Nazis. Griffin was at the rally.

"We should stop these rallies or severely limit them," Ms. Segrest said. "Control the time and place (of them march). They don't have to be given free play."

But Charles Dunn, deputy director of the State Bureau of Investigation, told the panel that the SBI lent support to local law enforcement agencies, but its help had to be requested by those agencies.

"The SBI is not the state police," Dunn said. "We lend support and assistance to local law enforcement officers. We offer suggestions for needs and response, and we help local officials better use their resources."

Committee chairman Eddie Knox asked Dunn if the SBI's role should be changed so agents could take a more aggressive stance in racial investigations.

"Whatever the General Assembly tells us to do, we'll try to do," Dunn said. "But (the role) needs to be defined, narrowed down."

Wayne Truax, an SBI agent who monitors hate-group activity, said agents monitor the activities of Klan groups when they are aware of scheduled marches. He showed the panel a map where a group of colored pins, placed mostly in the central portions of the state, which marked the locations of Klan marches over the past 17 months.

"The point is publicity," Knox said. "They get more publicity out of Winston-Salem than out of Okracoke."

Ms. Segrest also recommended that the task force pay more attention to the public school system, which is "the most integrated institution."

"Children are being asked to solve human relations problems that adults haven't solved," Ms. Segrest said. "And (the children) are doing it with little help."

School Officials Contend No Increase In Violence

RALEIGH (AP) — Educators describe as coincidental the shooting injuries this week of two students at high schools in Wilmington and Charlotte, and they say the incidents do not reflect a trend of increasing violence in public schools.

"My impression is that they have been decreasing rather than increasing," said William Peek, senior associate state superintendent of public education. "In terms of overt violence, it's my impression that there's less of that now than there was 20 years ago."

Shootings also have occurred at high schools in Charlotte, Durham and Fayetteville in the past 18 months, resulting in one death and five injuries, according to news reports.

And at Charlotte's Myers Park High School Thursday, a female student was cut on the face with a knife Thursday during a struggle with a male student in a hallway. The girl had taken the knife to school, said Principal Joe Peel, who refused to name the students involved.

The girl received first aid at the school. She was suspended and will be recommended for expulsion, Peel said.

The North Carolina Department of Public Education does not keep statewide records of incidents of violence or weapons in schools, officials said. But educators said in telephone interviews that recent shootings had been out of the ordinary.

"I don't think that this is any great increase," said Henry L. Johnson, director of policy and research for the North Carolina School Boards Association.

"I don't have data to support an opinion one way or the other," Johnson said. "But I haven't heard in conversations with superintendents, board members and school principals that this sort of thing is getting out of hand."

Neither student was seriously injured in the shootings Tuesday.

Police in Wilmington still were still looking for a suspect Thursday in the shooting of Heather Hoyle, 17, a cheerleader at New Hanover County High School. Miss Hoyle was standing in a stairwell crowded with other students when she was shot in the leg. She was treated and released from a local hospital.

In Charlotte, a gun that a student brought to Myers Park High School accidentally discharged, wounding Tyrone Carter, 18. He also was treated and released.

School officials said they would hold a hearing for the student who brought the gun to school. They would not release his name.

"The principal is recommending that the student who carried the gun be excluded, which is our equivalent of expulsion," said Myra Joines, public information director for Charlotte-Mecklenburg Schools. "In the meantime, the young man is out of school and suspended."

The gun, a .22-caliber pistol, was in an athletic bag that had been placed on a shelf. The bag fell to the floor when some students were playing around, and the gun went off, shooting Carter.

Another shooting Feb. 6 at North Mecklenburg County High School left two men injured, neither of them students. Two students were arrested and charged with possessing a firearm on school property. Both students were expelled.

"We find that a lot of our problems with weapons come from conflicts that might come up in their neighborhoods or communities," Ms. Joines said. "We think we're pretty good at keeping conflicts calmed down and under control at school, but we can't always control what goes on outside of school."

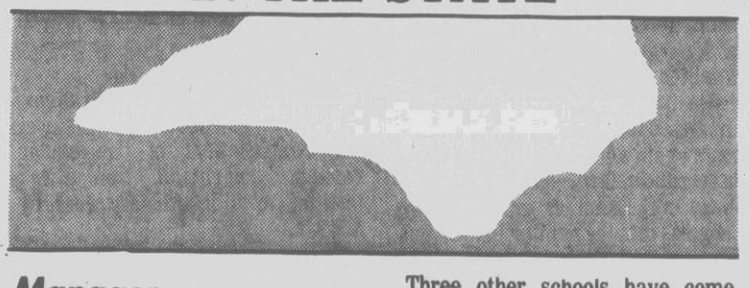

"Generally our schools are safe places, particularly when it comes to violent weapons," she said. "What happened (Tuesday) was very much out of character for Myers Park."

School administrators have confiscated 89 weapons, including eight guns, from Charlotte students this year, despite strict policies against weapons at school, Ms. Joines said.

The state department of public education has no statewide policy on weapons, Peek said, but most school systems automatically suspend or expel students who bring knives or guns to school.

There are no state regulations or policies because "when violence occurs, you're operating under the criminal laws rather than the school laws," he said. "It's against state law for student to have weapons in school. That's a matter of state law, not policy."

IN THE STATE

Manager

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — For the second time in two months, Chadbourn Town Manager Steve Wyatt is packing his bags and clearing out of Town Hall — this time by his own choice.

Wyatt, who was fired amid allegations of racial discrimination and then reinstated, has resigned the post to become Polk County manager.

Wyatt told Chadbourn Town Council members by letter Wednesday night that he would work his last day June 1, the date his new city budget is due for consideration.

The resignation comes almost two months after he was fired March 18 and one month since his April 13 reinstatement to the post. He was fired amid charges that white council members wanted to let him go before he could appoint the town's first black police chief. Before it was all over, the mayor decided to resign, the black police chief was appointed and the mayor reconsidered and withdrew his resignation.

College Probe

GREENSBORO (AP) — The State Bureau of Investigation has expanded its probe of possible fraud within the state's community college system to four additional schools, including Guilford Technical Community College, officials say.

The state auditor's office asked the SBI to look into the possibility that enrollments have been padded and at least one phantom class formed in GTCC's extension program.

Three other schools have come under SBI scrutiny for padding enrollments. They are Richmond Technical College in Hamlet, Nash Technical College in Rocky Mount and Anson Technical College in Ansonville.

Police Chief

DURHAM (AP) — Durham Police Chief Talmadge Lassiter is one of six finalists for the job of police chief of Corpus Christi, Texas, officials say.

Lassiter and five other finalists were chosen from a field of 116 applications, according to a spokeswoman for the Corpus Christi Human Resources Department.

The new chief for the city of 260,000 near the Gulf of Mexico will replace Bill Banner, 61, who retired at the end of March after 10 years as chief and 35 years with the Corpus Christi Police Department. The new chief is expected to be selected next week.

Baby Dies

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — An 11-month-old baby injured in a Burlington traffic accident Wednesday morning died at N.C. Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill Wednesday afternoon.

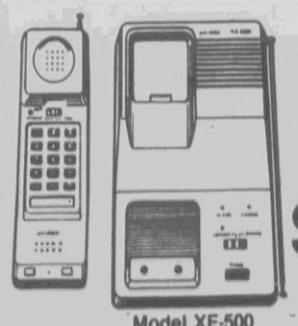

Terry Hopkins of Burlington suffered a fractured skull after he was thrown out of his parents' car in the accident. Authorities said the child was restrained in a car seat when his parents' car was struck by a truck.

Testimony Prompts Resignation At White House

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A key operative in the Iran-Contra affair, in testimony that prompted the resignation of a White House official, says he funneled money and intelligence information straight from Oliver L. North's safe to a leader of Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

Thursday's testimony by Robert Owen was followed in short order by the resignation of Johnathan S. Miller, director of the White House office of administration, who Owen said was involved in the money transfer.

Owen appeared at the end of two weeks of hearings by House and Senate committees that so far have shown deeper and broader Reagan administration involvement in the Central American conflict than previously admitted.

Owen was the first witness to testify under a grant of limited immunity from prosecution. He told how he went to work for Contra leader Adolfo Calero for $2,500 a month and became a go-between with North at a time when Congress had prohibited aid to the Contras, "directly or indirectly."

At one point, Owen testified that he and Miller were handed stacks of traveler's checks by North at his office in the White House complex and asked to go cash them. Owen said he later turned over the cash — about $6,000 — at his apartment to a Contra leader he did not name.

Miller resigned a few hours after Owen made the revelation on Capitol Hill.

In other developments:

—The White House denied former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane's testimony that Reagan had approved the use of Drug Enforcement Administration agents to seek the release of hostages in Beirut by paying $2 million ransom. Presidential spokesman Marvin Fitzwater told The Washington Post that the president "did not know there was ever a plan for ransoming hostages," and had never discussed the matter.

McFarlane said both Reagan and Attorney General Edwin Meese III approved the plan, but that he did not know whether they were aware that some of the funds for that enterprise came from money raised for the Contras.

Senate committee member Paul S. Trible Jr., R-Va., said the CIA contributed $50,000 to keep the DEA operation going.

—Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee and a member of the investigating committee, said the evidence collected so far "shows the president was not a passive, uninterested bystander" in the secret sale of weapons to Iran and the diversion of payments to the Contras.

—Owen told the committees of a trip he made in June 1985 to meet near Denver with retired Army Maj. Gen. John Singlaub, who was trying to put together a $5 million weapons deal for the Contras. Owen took the weapons list to Calero, in San Francisco for a speech, to confirm its details, and Calero discussed the list with North by telephone, he said.

—Committee sources said the panels are investigating whether retired Air Force Maj. General Richard V. Secord, who testified under oath last week that he was in "precarious" financial condition, is attempting with his business partner Albert Hakim to buy a large tract of land in the state of Washington.

CBS News reported Thursday night that Secord and Hakim have formed a company, SRH Corp., based in Seattle, that expressed interest as recently as a week ago in buying a 10,000-acre tract in the Quinault Indian Reservation.

—A review of Vice President George Bush's office records turned up a previously undisclosed meeting between a Bush aide and Felix Rodriguez, a onetime CIA operative involved in the private support network for the Contras.

A statement from the vice president's office said Samuel J. Watson, a national security aide to Bush, met with Rodriguez on June 25, 1986, and acknowledged the meeting "was not indicated in our original chronology," released last Dec. 15. The statement said the review "confirms that the vice president's contacts with Felix Rodriquez dealt entirely with the insurgency in El Salvador and there was no discussion, direct or indirect, on the Contra aid network."

— The Baltimore Sun reported today that White House officials, expecting help in freeing U.S. hostages held in Lebanon, tried unsuccessfully in 1985 to get the U.S. Embassy in Switzerland to issue travel documents to an Iranian posing as a Saudi prince.

The newspaper quoted unidentified congressional sources as saying the imposter, who is serving time for bank fraud, is the same man whom North reportedly sought large contributions for the Contras. He was identified as Mousalreza Ebrahim Zadeh.

In the summer of 1985, Edward V. Hickey, then a deputy assistant to the president, tried to obtain travel documents — sources said a passport — through the U.S. Embassy in Bern for a foreign national who he had been told could help in discovering where the hostages were held, the newspaper said. Two sources identified the foreigner as Zadeh. —Just before the conclusion of McFarlane's testimony Thursday, Rep. Lee H. Hamilton, D-Ind., chairman of the House committee, said, "I've been impressed as I've sat here for these hours again and again with the clear discrepancies between what you and others in the administration told the Congress that the administration was or was not doing and what, in fact, was done. ...

"As the national security adviser, you are the spokesman for the president of the United States. ... You cannot, it seems to me, accept responsibility for mistakes, as admirable as that may be, and thereby absolve the president of responsibility."

McFarlane responded quietly, "There is no rebuttal."

—Gaston Sigur Jr., assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific affairs, testified that North, then a National Security Council aide, asked him to approach officials of three nations in 1984 and 1985 to help obtain "humanitarian" assistance for the Contras. At the time, Sigur also worked for the NSC.

One of the nations ultimately made a $2 million contribution. The countries have not been identified, but two of them are believed to be Taiwan and South Korea.

Owen, who along with Calero is to return Tuesday for more questioning, said North told him maps and photographs he took to Calero had come from "across the river," a phrase Owen took to mean the Pentagon or CIA. Both agencies are across the Potomac River from Washington.

A congressional source said investigators have determined the intelligence came from the CIA. Next week's questioning likely will be aimed at determining what other government officials were involved in the aid network.

The committees also released a February 1985 letter from North to Calero, carried to Central America by Owen, informing the Contra leader that $20 million was being deposited into "the usual account" for the rebels. It suggested some of the money be used to hire a British mercenary to carry out sabotage in Managua. The letter further stated the money should be kept secret.

"We need to make sure that this new financing does NOT become known," said the letter, signed by "Steelhammer," a North code name. "The Congress must believe that there continues to be an urgent need for funding."

The letter also offers Calero advice about troop placement and speaks of the establishment of "a regular resupply operation," an effort testified to at length last week by Secord.

U.S. Drug Agents Carried Out Plan To Rescue Hostages

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration may have jeopardized its sensitive overseas narcotics operations when it used federal drug agents in a CIA-backed scheme to rescue hostages in Lebanon, according to congressional overseers.

Lawmakers who monitor the Drug Enforcement Administration said Thursday they were concerned that goodwill between DEA agents abroad and their host countries could be ruined if the agents are perceived as U.S. intelligence operatives.

Sen. Paul Trible, R-Va., a member of the Senate Iran-Contra committee, disclosed Thursday that the White House made the initial request for use of DEA agents in the unsuccessful 1985-86 operation, and the CIA provided $50,000 to get it under way.

"These actions cost our international drug efforts the trust of other nations," Rep. Charles B. Rangel, D-N.Y., and chairman of the House select committee on narcotics, said Thursday.

Last week, when sketchy reports of the $2 million operation first surfaced during the Iran-Contra hearings, Rangel wrote DEA administrator John Lawn that drug agents' success overseas "in large part depends on them not being viewed as foreign intelligence operatives."

Rep. William J. Hughes, D-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on crime, said, "It concerns me that we would be using DEA agents operationally for something other than a drug operation."

And Rep. Ben Gilman, R-N.Y., ranking Republican on the narcotics committee, joined Rangel in calling for hearings by the panel unless all the facts become public in the Iran-Contra sessions.

The DEA agents were given large sums of money, much of it private donations, to operate out of Cyprus in an attempt to bribe captors of Americans held in Lebanon, Trible said.

"The show was run by North in the main," Trible said, referring to former National Security Council deputy Oliver L. North, the key White House figure in the secret sale of U.S. weapons to Iran and the diversion of payments to the Nicaraguan Contras.

"It was another Casey-to-North operation," Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., added, speaking of the late CIA director, William Casey.

Trible told reporters the first request for the DEA mission came from a White House assistant for military support services named Hickey. White House officials identified the man as Ed Hickey.

"Hickey asked if the DEA might help with the hostage problem in Lebanon," Trible said. The DEA agreed, a fund was established and agents were assigned, according to the Virginia senator.

The DEA has refused all comment on the operation.

The project extended from January 1985 to the summer of 1986, said Trible, adding that his information came from "the agents involved in this enterprise." The CIA contribution, made in the spring of 1985, paid for such items as day-to-day expenses and travel to Europe, Trible said.

Last week, Contra leader Adolfo Calero confirmed in interviews that he contributed at least $50,000 to the operation at the suggestion of North.

Thursday, Calero attorney Joseph Portuondo said a review of bank records showed at least $75,000 in traveler's checks went to North in the spring and summer of 1985.

Trible said the CIA's involvement should have triggered an administration report to Congress on the operation. The Intelligence Act requires that the president notify Congress in a "timely fashion" of any covert action he authorizes.

Former National Security Adviser Robert C. McFarlane has testified that President Reagan approved the operation.

"This is the kind of activity — because of CIA involvement — that Congress should have been told about. It was not," Trible said.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president said he "did not know there was ever a plan for ransoming hostages," and had never discussed the matter, The Washington Post reported in today's editions.

Miller's Resignation Was 'Surprise'

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater says there was no indication that presidential aide Johnathan S. Miller was going to resign when the White House learned his name would come up in the Iran-Contra hearings.

Miller quit on Thursday as director of the White House office of administration, after former State Department consultant Robert Owen told the congressional panels that Miller helped cash travelers checks so money could be given to Nicaraguan Contra leaders.

In announcing Miller's resignation, Fitzwater said he did not know the reason for it. "We advised him privately to see a lawyer," Fitzwater said. He said the White House had not been informed Miller was under investigation but was told Tuesday that information about him was to come up at the Senate-House hearings.

He said White House officials had no information at that time that Miller intended to resign. Asked whether the resignation had anything to do with Owen's testimony, Fitzwater said, "I won't have any comment."

Efforts to reach Miller by telephone were unsuccessful.

Owen testified that he believed Miller was either on loan to the National Security Council or working out of the State Department when the cash allegedly was transferred from then-NSC aide Lt. Col. Oliver North's safe to a Nicaraguan rebel leader in March 1985.

Asked whether anyone else was present at the time he received the checks from North, Owen said, "Yes ... it was an individual by the name of Johnathan Miller."

Owen said Miller helped him cash the checks because "it was felt that there were probably too many checks for me to cash in the amount of time that I had."

"I think he may have done three thousand and I did four thousand or we both did thirty-five hundred or three thousand and three thousand," Owen said.

"In any event, Mr. Miller gave you the cash and you then made the appointment to pay the money to the Contra leader?" Owen was asked.

"Yes," he said.

The Contra leader was not named.

North was fired in November after disclosure that funds from secret sales of arms to Iran had been diverted to aid the Nicaraguan rebels, known as Contras.

Meeting Disclosed

WASHINGTON (AP) — An aide to Vice President George Bush met with onetime CIA operative Felix Rodriguez in a session that Bush's office failed to disclose in a chronology released last December in connection with the Iran-Contra affair.

Bush's office announced Thursday night it had discovered that a national security aide, Samuel J. Watson, met with Rodriguez, a key figure in the private aid network to support the Nicaraguan Contras, last June 26.

The statement by Bush's press office said "The vice president was neither in the meeting nor aware it had taken place."

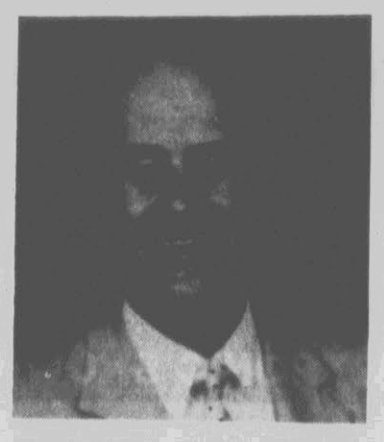

It said the meeting "was short and involved the counterinsurgency operations in El Salvador." The session dealt with the need for helicopter parts to support the counterinsurgency, it said.

Bush's office said Watson's meeting with Rodriguez "was not scheduled ahead of time." Because of this, it said, the meeting did not appear on Watson's schedule, which had been reviewed as the Dec. 15 chronology was being prepared.

"It was discovered when Watson's personal notes were reviewed," the statement said.

'Animal Crackers' Reaches 85th Year

By KILEY ARMSTRONG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The man who wrote "Animal Crackers in My Soup" led a lively children's singalong Thursday to mark the 85th birthday of the enduring cookie in the string-handled box.

Broadway lyricist Irving Caesar, who's even older than the cookies, belted out the song Shirley Temple made famous and captivated 40 nursery school pupils with tunes and tales at the F.A.O. Schwarz toy store.

"Animal crackers in my soup, monkeys and rabbits loop the loop!" the 91-year-old Caesar sang in a gravelly baritone, blowing kisses to the children. The song was written in 1935 for the movie "Curly Top."

The white-haired songwriter remained in his chair, but his feet kept time with a soft-shoe shuffle.

"It makes me so happy to hear you sing my songs," he told the children. "I love all of you very, very much."

Mindful of his sponsor, Caesar gobbled Nabisco's "Barnum's Animals" throughout his performance.

Nabisco introduced the cookies, modeled on English animal cookies that had been imported since the 1870s, in 1902. The box, which depicts a P.T. Barnum circus wagon, was designed to be hung on Christmas trees.

A Nabisco spokeswoman, Arlene Gross, said company officials were unsure how the product became known as "animal crackers," but noted two possibilities: They originated in England, where the word "cookie" was not used, and they are not as sweet as other American cookies.

They were a nickel a box then. Now — 35 billion crackers later — they sell for around 59 cents. The recipe has stayed the same.

Although 37 animals have been used over the years, there are 18 in use today: tiger, cougar, camel, rhinoceros, kangaroo, zebra, sheep, bear (standing and sitting), hippopotamus, bison, lion, hyena, monkey, gorilla, seal, giraffe and elephant.

The discontinued animals include the alligator, goat, ram, reindeer, bull and even the musk ox, beasts that have become extinct as cookies either because they broke easily or because they were hard to recognize, Ms. Gross said.

The list of songs for which Caesar wrote the lyrics is longer than the animal list, and he told the crowd, "I'm an old man. I can't sing as much as you can." But then he launched into a dozen more choruses.

First, there were children's songs, like "Remember Your Name and Address."

Then, for the parents and teachers, came some of his popular tunes: "Tea for Two" and "I Want to Be Happy" from the 1924 Broadway show "No No Nanette"; "Swanee," co-written in 1918 with George Gershwin and made famous by Al Jolson; and "Just a Gigolo," written in 1930.

The lyricist has at least 2,000 songs to his credit and still is writing.

"I'm a joy addict. I'm always having a good time," he said.

Chicago Officials Face Indictments

CHICAGO (AP) — A second wave of federal indictments has broken on Chicago government, accusing the powerful Circuit Court clerk and eight others of pocketing thousands of dollars in an influence-peddling scheme.

The 67-count federal indictment charged "a wide-ranging conspiracy" among the nine defendants to assist a New York bill collection agency, Systematic Recovery Services Inc., in its effort to obtain Chicago city contracts, U.S. Attorney Anton Valukas said.

Valukas stressed at a news conference that Mayor Harold Washington "is not now, nor has he been, a suspect in this investigation."

But the prosecutor said Washington and his administration "ought to be considering how and why these problems occur, and passing legislation to see it doesn't happen again."

"The law will follow its course," Washington said later. "We've done a good deal over the last few years to stave off any form of corruption."

Among those indicted Thursday in the inquiry dubbed Operation Incubator were Morgan Finley, 61, clerk of the Cook County Circuit Court; former mayoral adviser Clarence McClain, 45; and former Aldermen Perry Hutchinson, 43; and Marian Humes, 52.

"Mr. Finley has already made his statement, and it still stands," said Peter M. Duel, a spokesman for the clerk, referring to a January 1986 statement in which Finley said he did not take payoffs.

Hutchinson said he was innocent of any wrongdoing. McClain said he would have no comment on the charges, and Ms. Humes could not be located for comment because there is no phone listing in her name.

The latest charges, which outline a scheme extending over two years, include conspiracy, mail and wire fraud, extortion and tax violations.

Hunt Panel Announces Creation Of National Teachers' Board

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Carnegie Corp. panel today announced the creation of the first national board to set standards for teachers and to offer them professional certification similar to that given medical specialists.

The board, to be composed primarily of classroom teachers, will certify teachers who pass its muster after defining what those in various fields "should know and be able to do."

Leaders of the Carnegie Forum on Education and the Economy were scheduled to announce details of the creation of the new National Board for Professional Teaching Standards today in San Diego.

The board, consisting of as many as 64 members, will have to decide how it will judge teachers and in what subject areas and grade levels it will offer certification.

The idea is to give America's 2 million elementary and secondary school teachers a pathway for professional development and recognition similar to the board certification that physicians can gain in their medical specialities.

It will be three years to five years before the board awards its first certificates, and it may cost as much as $50 million to develop the methods of assessment and get the board started, a spokesman, Scott Widmeyer, said.

Widmeyer said in a telephone interview that teachers would have to pay as-yet undetermined fees for the certification process, which likely would include oral examinations, written testing and possibly internships.

"The door is not closed to any teacher in America," he said, describing the certification as a kind of "special badge" that states and school districts would recognize as enhancing a teacher's value to the education system.

Certified teachers, Widmeyer said, would be screened for skills in both their subject matter and in education, including the writing of curriculum, working with other teachers and relating to students.

The national certification board was the centerpiece of a series of recommendations a Carnegie task force made last May in a report aimed at triggering radical changes in U.S. schools and bringing bigger paychecks, better working conditions and greater responsibility for outstanding teachers.

The nucleus of the new board will be 33 educators, politicians and others who have served since last year on a planning board.

Former North Carolina Gov. James B. Hunt, chairman of the planning group, said the key to educational excellence is "attracting and keeping high quality teachers in our schools."

By giving teachers a path "to professional achievement and public esteem," Hunt said, the board will make teaching "more attractive to our best and brightest."

The board includes both teacher union presidents, Mary Hatwood Futrell of the National Education Association and Albert Shanker of the American Federation of Teachers, as well as New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean.

Futrell said in an interview Thursday that her organization has always been concerned that a majority of those on the national standards board be classroom teachers. She said the NEA is "very, very satisfied" that both the board and virtually all of its committees will be made up mostly of teachers.

Huge Non-Nuclear Blast Detonated In New Mexico

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. (AP) — Billed as the biggest non-nuclear blast in the Free World, the desert detonation of more than 4,600 tons of explosives kicked up 2 million cubic feet of dust and shook spectators six miles away.

The test Thursday, dubbed Misty Picture, will give scientists realistic studies of what happens to military equipment and structures close to a large explosion, said Tom Kennedy, chief of the Defense Nuclear Agency's test division in Washington, D.C.

The explosive, 4,685 tons of ammonium nitrate and fuel oil sealed in an 88-foot-wide fiberglass dome, was detonated at a permanent test site near where the first nuclear bomb was tested in 1945.

The experiment simulated a blast equivalent to an 8-kiloton nuclear device, less than half the force of the first nuclear bomb.

Nevertheless, the force was enough to lift an estimated 2 million cubic feet of gray-brown dust from the desert floor, according to officials. Then came a visible shock wave, a semicircular shadow moving across the cloudy sky.

Twenty seconds later, the boom shook spectators on bleachers six miles away.

Kennedy, battened down two miles from ground zero in the closest manned observation post, said the explosion came off perfectly, but knocked a coffee pot on top of him and broke the rear window in his car parked nearby.

The Defense Nuclear Agency, sponsor of the test, and military representatives from Norway, Sweden, Canada and Britain set up nearly 170 experiments to test the combined effects of blast and heat on military equipment, bunkers, specially designed houses and even trees.

Within a minute of the detonation, 24 rockets were fired into the cloud to test the effect of dust and particulates. High speed cameras and pressure gauges recorded the blast and its effects.

Scientists began reviewing the information almost immediately and those involved will meet in about 60 days to discuss preliminary results, Kennedy said.

Atlanta's Mayor Goes Before Jury

ATLANTA (AP) — Mayor Andrew Young ignored advice that he not testify before a federal grand jury investigating city officials' handling of cocaine-use allegations against civil rights veteran Julian Bond, his lawyer said.

"He insisted on testifying, whether it was a trap or not," said former U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell, who represented Young on Thursday. "He went against his lawyer's advice."

Young, a former congressman and U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, testified because of his role as a public official, Bell said. The mayor did not seek advice while answering questions.

Neither Young nor Bell would comment on the content of the mayor's testimony.

The mayor now has been released from his subpoena, said Bell, who served with Young in the Carter administration.

The investigation was prompted by allegations made to police March 19 by Bond's estranged wife, Alice, who accused her husband, Young and others of using cocaine.

Bond, a former state senator, and Young have denied the allegations. Mrs. Bond retracted her charges in a newspaper interview, and her husband blamed the matter on marital tensions.

The grand jury is looking into possible obstruction of justice in city officials' handling of Mrs. Bond's charges. Three police officers on the case were transferred, and Young has acknowledged he telephoned Mrs. Bond after learning through friends about her statements.

"I really am glad I had an opportunity to say what I had to say before the grand jury," said Young. "I hope it's over."

He said appearing before a grand jury "seems like a fearful thing," adding that he did not think his image had been tarnished by being subpoenaed.

Mrs. Bond appeared before the grand jury Wednesday and told the jurors that the March 25 phone call from Young had nothing to do with her decision to stop talking to authorities, her attorney said.

"She explained to the grand jury that when Mayor Young called her, that she did not feel then, and does not feel now, that there was any attempt to influence her testimony or to cause her not to talk to the police," said attorney Bruce Maloy.

"She told the grand jury enough so that there was no uncertainty in their minds that it (her decision to discontinue her talks with police) wasn't because of any outside pressure," he said.

NATO Wants Ban On Medium-Range Missiles

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

STAVANGER, Norway (AP) — NATO defense ministers today called on the Soviet Union to drop its demand to keep some medium-range nuclear missiles and urged worldwide elimination of those weapons from superpower arsenals.

In a communique ending a two-day nuclear strategy session, the 14 defense chiefs welcomed the improved prospects for a U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms reduction accord, but voiced concern over the Warsaw Pact's edge in conventional forces and chemical weapons.

They also failed to decide whether short-range missiles should be abolished in Europe. Some Europeans believe that if they were, Western Europe would be left vulnerable to superior Soviet bloc forces.

The statement was a green light for the United States to shift its formal negotiating position at the Geneva arms talks and to propose a "global zero" goal for missiles with a range of 600 to 3,000 miles.

President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev informally agreed at last year's summit in Iceland to dismantle all but 100 of these missiles on each side. Under that plan, each side would retain 100 missiles on its own territory.

Moscow has said it wants the 100 Soviet-based missiles to protect its Asian flank, both from U.S. Pacific forces and from China.

"No one here wants to have 100 Soviet missiles in (Soviet) Asia," said Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger at a news conference.

The Asian-based missiles, he said, "could be easily moved back to Europe" and would "complicate the process of verification."

"Everybody wants a global zero" on medium range missiles, Weinberger had told reporters Thursday at the end of the first day's session.

The meeting of 14 NATO defense ministers is the highest-level consultation on disarmament proposals made by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev April 14.

By urging the removal of those 200 missiles, NATO could recover lost ground in its war of words with Moscow, which so far has appeared to go farther than the West in exhibiting readiness to disarm.

The West German coalition government is split on the short-range missile issue, with the conservatives contending elimination of those weapons would leave Germany vulnerable to superior Warsaw Pace conventional forces.

British Defense Minister George Younger, also voicing concern at the reduced deterrent level, said Thursday that London could conditionally agree to the so-called "double-zero" option of eliminating all short-and medium-range missiles.

He told a news conference that the arms reductions must leave the allies with "a suitable mix of conventional and nuclear systems to ensure deterrence. Nuclear weapons will remain necessary for European security for the foreseeable future."

"There is an agreement not to go to any denuclearized Europe," said Weinberger on Thursday, rejecting Gorbachev's stated goal of banning all types of atomic weaponry in Europe.

Younger said NATO also had to be satisfied that the removal of all missiles was verifiable.

The closed-door meeting also discussed a range of options for NATO to compensate for the loss of firepower as a result of scrapping the missiles, including deploying more submarine- or air-launched U.S. nuclear weapons, said U.S. and European officials.

Witness Says U.S. Thought Barbie Too Valuable To Lose

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

LYON, France (AP) — A former U.S. Army intelligence officer says he told his superiors he suspected Klaus Barbie was a war criminal, but was told the ex-Gestapo chief was too valuable an agent to lose.

Barbie, 73, is on trial for crimes against humanity stemming from his Gestapo activities in German-occupied France. He refuses to attend the proceedings.

Some of the responses Barbie gave to French investigators who interrogated him about the charges were to be disclosed at today's session.

Normally, Barbie would be asked in court to give detailed replies to the allegations he tortured and deported Jews and French Resistance members. In his absence, court officials said, Presiding Judge Andre Cerdini would pose the questions and read Barbie's answers from the interrogation transcripts.

After the war, Barbie was recruited by the U.S. Army Counterintelligence Corps to gather intelligence about German Communists, among other tasks.

Erhard Dabringhaus, who was Barbie's American control officer, testified Thursday that another German agent told him Barbie was known for his brutal methods as Gestapo chief in Lyon from 1942-44.

"I became convinced that I was working with a real war criminal," Dabringhaus said in accented but fluent French. "That upset me."

He said he informed his superiors of what he knew, but was told Barbie was a valuable agent and a good anti-Communist.

"I was probably the only one in our organization who thought his information was not worth very much," said Dabringhaus, now a university professor in Detroit, Mich.

He said Barbie "said he was the best agent in France, but never talked about atrocities."

In the late 1940s, French authorities became aware Barbie was working for the Americans and asked them to turn him over, without success. Eventually, U.S. agents helped Barbie obtain identity papers under a false name and emigrate to Bolivia.

Dabringhaus said he was questioned once by French officials looking for Barbie, but was told by superiors to pretend to have no idea where he was.

He said he only learned in 1983 after the publication of an American government report that the United States had helped Barbie escape to Bolivia.

"I was really furious. That was unbelievable," Dabringhaus said.

Barbie has decided to stay in his cell at St. Joseph prison rather than attend the trial, contending his expulsion from Bolivia in 1983 was illegal.

The former Bolivian official who handled the expulsion, Gustavo Sanchez, testified Thursday that the procedure was legal, and was necessary because Barbie was a danger to democracy in Bolivia.

Sanchez said Barbie had influence with officials of a former Bolivian military government and was "protected by the military and the drug traffickers."

COUP LEADER — Fiji Army Lt. Col. Sitiveni Rabuka speaks at a news conference Thursday after overthrowing the Pacific island nation's month-old government. Rabuka led troops who stormed the Parliament and placed the etire Cabinet under arrest. (AP Laserphoto)

Colonel Claims Control In Fiji

SUVA, Fiji (AP) — The army colonel who led the South Pacific's first coup shut down Fiji's newspapers today and declared himself in complete control.

At a news conference, Lt. Col. Sitiveni Rabuka also tried to allay business fears about his military takeover, saying that this island nation was about to enter a period of "strong growth."

The 38-year-old career soldier said he expected his government would soon win recognition from other countries, despite regional leaders' widespread condemnation of his bloodless coup. Australia and New Zealand, the two major powers in the South Pacific, have refused to recognize the new regime.

Rabuka and about 10 soldiers burst into Parliament Thursday morning, arrested Prime Minister Timoci Bavadra and his 11 Cabinet ministers and suspended the constitution. Rabuka, the army's third in command, said he was seizing power because of racial violence that broke out following Bavadra's election last month.

Rabuka, a decorated veteran of international peacekeeping duties in the Middle East, has pledged to release Bavadra and his ministers after drafting a new constitution and calling elections, but he has not given any timetable.

According to unconfirmed reports, British Queen Elizabeth II's representative, who had called on mutinous troops to end the rebellion, was detained today. Governor General Ratu Sir Penaia Ganilau, officially the commander-in-chief of the armed forces, serves in a mainly symbolic role.

Rabuka convened a meeting today of his new Cabinet, which includes former Prime Minister Ratu Sir Kamieses Mara as foreign minister. Mara was defeated in national elections last month after 17 years in power.

Rabuka acknowledged his coup would not have succeeded without the 66-year-old Mara, a staunch pro-Western politician who ruled Fiji since independence from Britain in 1970. Several members of the new Cabinet, or Council of Ministers, belong to Mara's Alliance Party.

Rabuka said the takeover was aimed at preventing multiracial Fiji from being torn apart by ethnic unrest.

Bavadra's election last month and his naming of a government with an ethnic Indian majority triggered a wave of violence between the Indian and Fijian communities. Fiji has a population of 715,000 and ethnic Fijians are slightly outnumbered by Indians, who are the descendents of laborers brought to work on sugar plantations in the 19th century.

At the news conference, Rabuka, who wore civilian clothes and was flanked by three soldiers, read from a prepared statement and refused to answer questions.

Sakharov Says Releases Ended

MOSCOW (AP) — Andrei D. Sakharov, the most prominent Soviet dissident, told French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac today that the Soviet Union has stopped releasing political prisoners.

Sakharov, the 1975 Nobel Peace laureate, met Chirac in an antechamber at the Soviet Academy of Sciences. Chirac spoke at the academy before holding four hours of Kremlin talks with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

"We are very preoccupied by the fact that the process of releasing prisoners of conscience has been interrupted," Sakharov, a nuclear physicist and academy member, told Chirac during their 15-minute meeting.

He implored the French leader to press Kremlin officials on human rights issues, including the treatment of people still jailed for political offenses.

Sakharov himself returned to Moscow on Dec. 23 after the Kremlin lifted his internal exile of almost seven years. Sakharov, a nuclear physicist who helped develop the Soviet Union's hydrogen bomb, was exiled without trial to the closed city of Gorky in January 1980, after he publicly opposed the Soviet military presence in Afghanistan.

Sakharov did not say today when or why the Soviets stopped freeing prisoners.

Chirac began his three-day visit to the Soviet Union on Thursday. He was expected to raise humanitarian issues in his discussions with Gorbachev.

Gorbachev received Chirac in a small office decorated with portraits of Karl Marx and Vladimir I. Lenin, founder of the Soviet state.

Asked by reporters if he welcomed the chance to hold talks with Chirac, Gorbachev answered: "Indeed, we are starting the meeting right now."

The talks began at 10:30 a.m., and ended about four hours later. Neither French nor Soviets made any immediate comment on their substance.

At a Kremlin dinner Thursday night, Chirac noted France's attachment to human rights as laid down by the French revolution, and said "much remains to be done" by Moscow to meet its international commitments on human rights.

Five Held In Scheme To Extort $15 Million

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Police arrested a fifth person today in connection with an alleged plot to release deadly gas over Cyprus unless the government paid the extortionists $15 million, police commander Frixous Yiangou announced.

Police arrested Thecla Andrea Challouma, 21, at her home in Nicosia's Strovolos district the day after Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist squad arrested her sister, Keti Koupparis, and three men in London in connection with the plot after a two-month investigation.

Yiangou identified the three men as Mrs. Koupparis' husband, Panos, 35, a London-born company director, and his two younger brothers, Jason and Andreas. He told a news conference in Nicosia that more arrests were possible.

The five suspects, of Greek Cypriot origin, all face charges of demanding money by menace, he said.

The police chief said the threat to unleash clouds of dioxin, a toxic gas, over Nicosia and other parts of this eastern Mediterranean island was first made in a letter signed by "Commander Nemo of Force Majeure," a previously unknown group. The letter was sent from London on March 23 to Cyprus' president, Spyros Kyprianou.

He said the blackmailers claimed the dioxin would be released "by radio-controlled devices operated remotely through satellite and computer links." He did not elaborate.

So far, he said, no dioxin gas has been found on the island, which has been divided into Greek and Turkish Cypriot sectors since 1974, when Turkey invaded and seized the northern part of the island.

In mild doses, dioxin can cause skin problems, but larger amounts can lead to heart, liver and central nervous system damage. Dioxin has been used in chemical warfare, and was the poison released from a disinfectant plant in the northern Italian town of Seveso on July 10, 1976 in the world's first toxic gas disaster. No one was killed in the 1976 disaster.

Yiangou said no money was handed over to the gang.

The silver-haired police chief said the Cypriots initially suspected that the 5-page threat was probably a student hoax.

But "the wording of the letter suggested the involvement of scientific experts and electronic engineers," he said.

Yiangou flew to London in March to coordinate with Scotland Yard, which mounted an investigation codenamed Operation Drifter. Police sources said it involved undercover surveillance and wiretaps.

A man identifying himself as "Commander Nemo" telephoned Kyprianou's presidential palace at 2.a.m. April 1, "but did not get through to anyone in authority," the police chief said. But, without elaborating, he said that a woman, her face masked by a scarf, later left an envelope for "Nemo" at the airport at Larnaca, south of Nicosia.

The envelope contained a round-trip air ticket from Larnaca to Manchester in central England, about $80 and an excess baggage ticket for a package weighing about 200 pounds — about the weight of $15 million in small bills, Yiangou noted.

Buddhism Enlisted To Save Ecology

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Long ago, the "Lord Buddha" forbade monks to cut down trees, set rules for preventing water pollution and urged followers to co-exist peacefully with all living things.

The advice didn't seem particularly urgent when first given 2,500 years ago, but it has taken on a modern relevancy.

Today, Buddhists in several Asian countries are beginning to harness the old environmental messages to halt ravages of forests, wildlife and water resources across the continent.

Thai social critic Sulak Sivaraks says "a kind of Buddhist revolt against the deterioration of nature," has begun, still small in scope but with the potential to influence the religion's 500 million faithful in a dozen countries.

Efforts range from individual monks instructing villagers to plant trees to a regional organization like the Buddhist Perception of Nature, founded in 1984 by Thais, Tibetans and an American to link Buddhism and conservation through education programs.

The Buddhist stirring appears related to worldwide searches for a "conservation ethic" that could be added to the standard environmental arsenal of laws, technology, funds and education.

"A new and powerful alliance has been forged between the forces of religion and the forces of conservation," says Prince Philip, president of the World Wildlife Fund.

The Duke of Edinburgh spoke last year in the Italian town of Assissi where representatives of Christianity, Hinduism, Islam, Judaism and Buddhism each declared that practical care of nature was an important tenet of their faiths.

The Swiss-based WWF has ongoing projects to capitalize on religion's power to sway attitudes.

While Buddhists have been as wanton as any in wreaking environmental destruction, scholars note the religion is well attuned to conservation.

Governments Probing PTL

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Government investigators have contacted PTL about possible criminal violations, including extortion, when the ministry was headed by Jim Bakker and his deputy, Richard Dortch, a North Carolina newspaper reports today.

PTL chief executive officer Jerry Nims confirmed Thursday that federal and state agencies approached the ministry this week. He declined to identify the agencies and said he did not know whether they have begun an investigation, according to The Charlotte Observer.

Spokesmen for the FBI and U.S. attorney's office in South Carolina would not say Thursday whether a broad criminal investigation has begun.

"I'm just not prepared at this point to comment one way or the other," said U.S. Attorney Vinton Lide.

Nims, one of the directors installed when Bakker stepped down in March, said he understood the agencies are interested in events that occurred before the new board and its chairman, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, took control.

"The questions raised were wire fraud, tax fraud, possible extortion, fraud and noncompliance with various state and federal statutes," Nims said.

The purpose of the contact, Nims said, was "to meet and discuss the issues involved. And I can't have any comment beyond that."

An FBI spokesman said the bureau has been evaluating information from the media and others.

"If in our judgment there is a criminal violation, we will investigate," said spokesman Charlie Sheppard in Columbia. "But we do not plan to announce the fact that we have initiated an investigation."

Treatment of Animals Is Farmer's Concern

EDITOR'S NOTE — A Chicago-based animal rights group is recruiting farmers to raise livestock and chickens the old-fashioned way, with plenty of room and disdain of drugs. The meat and eggs taste a little different, but there is a market in a few big cities.

By MARY ESCH
Associated Press Writer

STUYVESANT, N.Y. (AP) — Ken Kleinpeter is an animal-welfare activist mainly concerned about baby bulls that eventually wind up on somebody's dinner plate, perhaps laced with Marsala, mushrooms and a touch of tarragon.

He's not against eating veal, just the way the animals are treated before they are slaughtered.

Until a few years ago, Kleinpeter, 33, was a guitar teacher and aspiring songwriter in New York City. But he grew up on a farm in Louisiana, milking cows by hand, and longed to return to the bucolic life. So he and a friend, Wall Street investment banker Joan Snyder, bought a run-down, 200-acre farm in upstate New York.

"We knew we wanted to be farmers, but we didn't know exactly how to get started," Kleinpeter says. He saw a newspaper article about Food Animals Concerns Trust, or FACT, a Chicago-based group recruiting farmers to produce veal and eggs for upscale markets, and contacted the group's founder and president, Bob Brown.

Now, Kleinpeter is raising veal calves for the non-profit organization.

The goal of FACT, Brown says, is to improve living conditions for American farm animals — in particular, calves and chickens, which are closely confined on modern, mass-production farms.

"It seemed quite hopeless to do anything in terms of legislative reform," says Brown, who was director of Chicago's Anti-Cruelty Society before he founded FACT in 1981. "The farm groups which back the intensive factory methods are very well organized and very powerful.

"We decided that the way to do something about factory farming was to produce an alternative product for the marketplace."

The alternative products, grown on farms in Illinois, Pennsylvania and New York, are Nest Eggs and Rambling Rose veal, from free-range hens and calves.

Brown researches potential markets and finds nearby processing and distribution facilities, including small slaughterhouses that kill the calves with a stunning technique considered more humane. He recruits farmers who will adhere to FACT's strict husbandry guidelines.

The three Nest Egg farms, which have about 10,000 hens, produce nearly 38,000 eggs a week, Brown says. FACT, which owns the chickens and supplies the feed, pays the farmers 21 cents a dozen for the eggs. FACT buys the dressed veal carcasses for $1.75 a pound.

"We do the marketing," Brown says. "That's a unique aspect of what we do. Most farmers don't know how to market a specialty product."

The eggs sell for about twice the price of ordinary eggs in markets in New York, New Jersey and the Chicago area, and the veal is sold at Bread and Circus markets in Massachusetts for prices similar to prime white veal. Stores display pamphlets promoting the products as tastier, healthier and more humanely produced than conventional commodities.

"The Rambling Rose veal doesn't have the eye appeal of the anemic white veal people are used to, so we have to do some salesmanship," says Norman Boudreau, meat coordinator for Bread and Circus, which also sells "organically grown" beef from Colorado and free-range chickens from Arkansas. "Once people taste it, they find the flavor and tenderness are so superior that they keep coming back."

On conventional egg farms, thousands of hens, with beaks cut off to keep them from pecking each other to death, are confined in 12-by-18-inch cages holding three to five birds. Nest Egg chickens are not debeaked and are given no feed additives or routine drugs. They run loose in henhouses equipped with nest boxes and perches.

Most veal calves spend their lives indoors in tiny crates or crowded indoor pens. A liquid diet low in iron keeps their meat fashionably white, but their bodies weak. Their milk buckets are usually laced with antibiotics, which have been linked by government researchers to gastrointestinal illness in humans.

Kleinpeter's calves live in a barn where they can curl up in a bed of straw, suckle milk replacer from latex nipples whenever they feel like it, and wander outside to cavort with their cohorts or nibble on grass. They are given antibiotics only if they are sick. Kleinpeter said that's rare.

Hugh Johnson, a commodities specialist for the American Farm Bureau Federation in Illinois, says that conventional farm methods are not likely to be replaced. He said American veal and egg operations are run according to methods developed through a century of research by agricultural universities and businesses.

"Modern agriculture is also built around what consumers will buy," Johnson says. "In eggs, consumers want a certain color yolk, a white shell. They want white veal, which is produced by a milk-fed diet."

So far, Kleinpeter's Hollow Road Farm in rural Columbia County, about 30 miles south of Albany, is the only producer of Rambling Rose veal. More veal and chicken farms may be started by the end of the year in the Northeast and California, Brown says.

On a recent morning in his ramshackle barn, Kleinpeter talked about his philosophy of humane husbandry as he tended his herd of about 80 calves, ranging in age from one to 20 weeks.

"We get our calves directly from the farmer, the morning after they're born," he says. "They're much healthier than if we got them from auction."

As he worked, thawing nipples and sucking on tubes to get the milk flowing, black-and-white baby Holsteins nuzzled and sucked his fingers. He called some by name: St. Nick, born on Christmas. Frosty, who fell in an icy puddle and had to be blow-dried.

"The hardest thing for me is going to the slaughterhouse," Kleinpeter says. "But you have to resign yourself to the fact that there's no future for little boy bulls."

Unlike milk-fed calves grown for white veal, Rambling Rose calves are weaned at eight weeks and put on a diet of grain and pasture grazing.

Every week, Kleinpeter picks the four biggest ones, 18 to 22 weeks old, and takes them to a local slaughterhouse.

"Factory farms have to move them out at 16 weeks because they can't live any longer under those circumstances," Kleinpeter says.

"I don't really hold big growers to blame. They're squeezed too. My neighbor takes 100 calves to the slaughterhouse and doesn't get a price until they're hanging in the freezer. They may tell him $1.60 a pound beforehand, but then the grader looks at the carcasses and maybe says they're too pink, so he only gets $1.30 a pound."

Kleinpeter says FACT gives him a set price of $1.75 a pound for his veal, regardless of color — which ranges from milky pink to rosy.

Rambling Rose veal could help small farms compete in an age of giant agribusiness, Kleinpeter says.

However, he says his veal operation, which provides about $300 profit a week from four calves, is too small to support the farm. Kleinpeter and Snyder are building a flock of dairy sheep, with plans to make cheese and yogurt for the Manhattan gourmet market.

"There's going to be more and more of a market for meat raised like this," he says. "People are more and more aware of how animals are treated. But even more than that, they're more aware of what's going into the animals that they're eating. And they're also more aware of the taste of the meat."

DEFECT IN RESALE HOUSING

BOUND BROOK, N.J. (AP) — Two out of five homes for sale this year will have at least one serious defect, according to a study by Housemaster of America, a national home inspection service. A "serious defect" is one that will cost a new homeowner at least $500 to repair, according to the company.

The most common problem found in resale homes is poor plumbing, according to data compiled from mor than 65,000 inspections across the country. Other problems following in frequency include heating and cooling deficiencies, poor roofing, electrical system defects, faulty kitchen appliances and structural deficiencies.

While foundation or "structural" problems are not as common as some of the others cited, they often show up in the form of horizontal cracks or bowing, the study showed. Though less common, the company says, they are often among the most serious and costly to repair.

NEW YORK (AP) — A campaign to help reduce the incidence of lead poisoning among children in the United States has been undertaken by the Children's Television Workshop. At the core of the program is the message to kids: "Wash Your Hands."

Daddy Is Quilter; Mom's Manager

By TINA NOLL
Chambersburg Public Opinion

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Clarence Hummer worked hard all his life; and he didn't think retirement in 1982 should change that.

He took up quilting after he finished the outside work at his modest home in this southcentral Pennsylvania community. His wife, Mary, 77, was working on a quilt and the man she calls "Daddy" was looking for something to do.

"He said, 'Mother, do you think I can do that?' " she said. "He helped me to finish."

"I picked it up myself with her managing," he said.

Hummer, 73, wasn't a natural talent. "It took me a week to make the first patch," he said. "I took them apart no end. We're both pretty precise how we want it."

The mental inventory of his finished quilts is arranged by their owners — two granddaughters, a student nurse who stayed in their home, a niece, a friend in Ohio, their great-grandson, daughter Orlena Kuhn. Future projects are listed by the people who have requested them.

The quilts are geometric patterns of colorful scraps, often arranged on a plain background.

He also makes comforters, by sewing together squares or rectangles of fabric. The top is "knotted," not quilted, to create the finished product. Hummer is working on his 25th comforter top, to be finished by members of an area sewing circle.

He had been a janitor in a Chambersburg office building, then had two part-time jobs simultaneously, as a janitor at the National Guard Armory and the public assistance office.

"I've always been a hard worker and I couldn't see the point in retiring, but my lungs gave out from having pneumonia so often," he said.

Now, the hobby has taken over. The Hummers had a two-room addition built last summer: upstairs, more space for their son, Marvin; on the first floor, a sunny paneled sewing room.

'TIS A PUZZLEMENT!

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Tour manager Will Berg poses a question for passengers as the cruiseship M-S Pearl of Scandinavia passes between Borneo and Java on its way to Bali.

"You're looking at Borneo, the world's third largest island," he says. "New Guinea is the second largest. Can anyone tell me the name of the island that's first in size?"

They also upgraded their storage system, moving fabric scraps from cardboard boxes in the corners into a cupboard that is crammed with material.

Hummer works on quilts every day, sitting on the easy chair he calls his "nest."

Mrs. Hummer hasn't made a quilt on her own since her husband started to make them, but she arranges the colors for his. He sews them together with a fine needle, without a machine or even a thimble.

When the top is done, he uses a pencil to mark the lines that will be stitched during quilting to create a subtle counterpoint to the colorful design. He must have someone else do the quilting, but he binds the edges.

One quilter charges him 30 cents per yard of thread used. For a double-wedding-ring quilt he recently finished, that added up to more than $100.

That's about the only cost estimate he can make accurately. "There's no way you can figure the hours, the way I work at it," he said. He works on a quilt, then a comforter, puts it down to help make a meal or bring Marvin home from work, picks it up while visitors talk.

He watches other quilt prices to set his own, even though they seem high to him. A double-wedding-ring quilt brought $500 at a recent auction.

"My mother was a quilter," he said. "She had me cut patches but I never put any together."

For 53 years the Hummers have slept under a wool comforter his mother made when they were married. When it wore out, he put a new top and bottom on it.

The couple met at a revival meeting, when she was seated in front of him. When songbooks were passed out to be purchased or borrowed, he paid for one and handed it to her over her shoulder. He still carries a picture of the courting couple, standing beside his 1927 Ford, in his wallet.

BUILDING A WARDROBE

NEW YORK (AP) — A man's wardrobe should include at least seven suits, suggests Marvin A. Blumenfeld, head of a merchandising consulting firm that represents men's clothing stores throughout the country.

Four of them should be all-weather suits that can be worn all year long, says Blumenthal, president of April-Marcus Inc. Two of the others should be all-wool winter suits and one should be a lightweight summer suit, he says. A navy blue suit is a must, he adds, because it can be used for both business and more formal occasions.

Chef Michael Foley

Midwest Cuisine's His Art

From MIDWEST LIVING
A Meredith Magazine

It's a safe bet that Chicago chef Michael Foley logged most of his BMW's 48,000 miles foraging for food.

That's a lot of mileage, but then, the 34-year-old chef is driven by a curious obsession — defining a Midwest cuisine.

Almost anything that grazes or grows in the Midwest may land on the menu at his newest Chicago restaurant, Foley's. His commitment to foods of the Heartland is passionate. Friends say he's a one-man crusade.

California kicked off regional cooking with California cuisine, which was nothing more than local foodstuffs, according to Foley. "What's happening in the Midwest now is that there's interest in our inherent foods," he explains.

Food writers and media based on both coasts tend to chatter about trends in New York and California, Foley says. While the coasts trade and trump each other's food fads, "Midwesterners have been sitting here saying, 'What do we have?' That's where I come in."

This is how Foley begins his attack. "The New American Cooking has got to make room for more than meat and potatoes from the Midwest.

"Many of us need to remember that where we live is full of riches."

"Golden cherries from Michigan, sun-dried tomatoes from Ohio — the best you've ever seen."

Foley's "road trips," as he calls his 100- to 500-mile forays, take him out Chicago's back door and along rural routes. He's been known to slam on the brakes just to ogle some likely-looking lamb or roadside patch of wild strawberries. Once, on a hunt-and-pick gambol through a local garden, he spied squash blossoms and was moved to create an inventive entree for them on the spot.

Foley isn't a deep-fried hash-slinger nor a fussy, transplanted continental chef de cuisine. He's a third-generation restaurateur and has a master's degree in restaurant management. He tends to wear his plaids and stripes together, drink his coffee from iced-tea glasses, and maintain close family ties with his 11 brothers and sisters. That Foley is gifted in the kitchen is undisputed. One Chicago restaurant critic dubbed him the city's "reigning culinary monarch."

The kingdom Foley reigns over includes most of the central Midwestern states and their native commodities. Among his favorite state specialties are goat cheese and caviar from Wisconsin, stoneground flour from Iowa, and an award-winning Chardonnay that comes from Michigan.

Despite the abundance of local produce, little of it actually is available to restaurants and cooks. Local purveyors tend to ship their products to canners instead of marketing them fresh. One year, Foley says, Michigan farmers sold almost their entire berry crop to California canning companies, while few fresh berries crossed the state line. "The farmers aren't at fault," he insists. "The Midwest market should be geared toward a fresher product."

"Comfort food," the cozy cachet that's given to rib-stickers like pot roast, isn't really Midwestern cooking, Foley says. At least not just because it's plain and wholesome. But that very food — pot roast and mashed potatoes — can show "imagination with heritage," Foley believes.

"It's about time someone sat back and looked at the great old version of pot roast and updated it to veal pot roast with fresh thyme and caramelized onions. I think we need a little self-assurance that sweet corn and mashed potatoes are a real delight ... especially with herb butter and pimento aioli."

Even when Foley nods to the nouvelle cuisine, the Midwest is represented in every dish. His mussel chowder, for instance, is generously attended by local vegetables, and he is careful to recommend Cincinnati's Moerlin beer as the accompanying beverage.

Still, his real concern is simply getting good ingredients from the start. "As a cook, a restaurateur, your goal should be to give your customers the best product," he says. Especially if that product happens to be only a day's drive away.

Students From 52 Countries Converge At Amsterdam School

By PAUL VERSCHUUR
Associated Press Writer

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Scheduling classes around the holidays of 52 nations isn't easy, but that's what it takes if you're the principal here at Berlage High and have to cope with kids from 52 countries.

For principal Dick Karremans, that means haggling with conservative Moroccan parents over whether their daughters can take physical education, not taking school photographs of Moslem children because of religious prohibitions, and slowing down the teaching pace during the Islamic fasting month of Ramadan.

It means a delicate approach to Dutch colonial history, especially when students come from those former colonies, such as Suriname.

And it also requires extraordinary patience to overcome culture shock and teach refugee children who speak only their native tongues.

Berlage High is one of a dozen Dutch public secondary schools that are specially geared to the needs of immigrant and refugee children in this multicultural society, which prides itself on its racial and ethnic tolerance.

To many of the 1,100 students, of whom 900 belong to ethnic minorities or are non-Dutch nationals, Berlage High is their first encounter with the Dutch educational system.

"They're in Morocco, among the herds of sheep, and then Daddy has them come over," assistant principal Frans Wegdam told The Associated Press.

"Here it's a mixed bag of everything," agreed 13-year-old Gadiza Hafid, who is of Moroccan extraction, as she sat at a table with girlfriends from Pakistan, Suriname and Portugal and puzzled over their assignment: identifying by language a list of sentences in Surinamese, Arabic, English, Turkish, Vietnamese and a few other tongues.

Most of the students, ranging in age from 12 to 25, are from Morocco and Turkey, reflecting the Netherlands' 300,000-strong guest worker community from those Mediterranean nations.

Others hail from nations as far-flung as Zaire, Jamaica, Afghanistan and Albania, Europe's most isolated and backward nation.

The school tries to integrate new arrivals into the Dutch culture, but at the same time teaches languages like Arabic and Turkish, the two most prevalent mother tongues among the students.

New students, who must at least be literate in their native languages, are either placed in a regular first form class or in one of the school's 12 international remedial classes for introductory Dutch language instruction.

"You've got to make a distinction between those students who have been plucked straight from among the cows," in their native countries, and those who have had a more sophisticated education in their home countries, Karremans told the AP.

Berlage High has 300 students in its first form and remedial classes, where young adults sit next to gangly adolescents.

After an intensive six- to eight-week Dutch course, remedial students proceed to a highly individualized program of general subjects designed to ease their entry into mainstream Dutch education.

"Once you admit them to your country, I think you've got the responsibility of offering them a real future," said Wegdam.

Special features of the curriculum include biology class lessons on how to explain health problems to a doctor and history lessons focusing on Amsterdam as the only Dutch locale that's common ground to all the students.

The school has teachers from Morocco, Turkey, Pakistan and Suriname, as well as Vietnamese and Chinese interpreters and about 100 Dutch-born instructors.

The ratio of Berlage teachers to students is about one to 11, compared with a one-to-15 ratio in normal Dutch schools.

One major problem in the school is the differing cultural values placed on education, with Turkish and Moroccan students getting little encouragement from their generally low-income families to pursue higher education, according to Wegdam, who has traveled extensively in Turkey, Iran, Syria and Afghanistan.

At the other end of the spectrum are the school's 40 Iranian students, who had all received Western-oriented educations before their families fled their nation's revolutionary government.

For such a mixed bag of racial, cultural and religious groups, the school corridors are usually peaceful and fights are a rarity.

That apparent harmony even extends to relations between the school's Iranian and Iraqi students, despite the ongoing Gulf War between their two nations.

Engineer Fashions With Computer

By DOUG FISHER
Associated Press Writer

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — When he was tailoring shirts to help put himself through engineering school, Dana B. Rogers never thought that someday he would combine the two disciplines.

But with the help of a new generation of computer programs, Rogers is combining them in hopes of designing tailor-made fashions at off-the-rack prices.

"To me, it's a natural extension of what an engineer does for a living," said Rogers, 52, an associate professor of engineering at the University of Dayton.

His daughter, Beth, 23, who has always had the dream of owning her own B. Marie Dress Shop, sees it as a way to let women enjoy the same benefits men have of getting clothes altered at reasonable prices.

"They don't do it for women. That's the problem. I go to 10 different stores before I find a dress that I like and will fit me," she said. "This gives a personal aspect to it."

When he's not making measurements on the dressmaker's dummy, complete with false nose and mustache, that stands in his office, Rogers designs ways to make computers more efficient.

Fashion designing came by accident about 1½ years ago while the family was eating at a hamburger restaurant.

"I don't remember who said it, but someone said let's make a fast boutique like we have fast food. A couple of french fries later, someone said can we do that?" Rogers recalled.

Armed with his personal computer and a computer-aided design program, the same type used to design cars and airplanes, Rogers set to work finding ways to translate measurements from the dressmaker's dummy to the computer.

"There's no reason you can't have the machine get into the tailor's head and operate how he does when he fits clothes," Rogers said.

Working part time, mostly at home on his personal computer, Rogers developed formulas relating to the body's curves and measurements and fit them into the computer program. It was critical to find reference points that anyone could use to begin measurements.

"It's not an easy problem, but not impossible. Cloth is very forgiving. It's not necessary to be perfect," he said.

Rogers settled for points on the upper and lower back and a point under the arm. From there his measurement grids crisscross the dummy. Eventually, he expects to see machines that scan the body with light, making more precise measurements.

So far he's made simple "slopers," the loose-fitting patterns that people who sew at home use to better fit the final pattern.

Rogers next will take some simple fashions, figure out how to turn their curves into formulas, and then how to have the formulas from his body measurements work on the fashion formulas to produce a tailor-fit garment.

He dreams of a customer who goes into a store, gets measured, then selects clothing from a computer library of designs. The computer combines the two, "stretches" the fashion pattern to the body's measurements, and tells a machine how to cut the cloth. A seamstress or tailor then sews it and within a day the perfect-fit clothing is ready.

"I see the creation of jobs," he said. "The point of sale is the point of manufacture. With ready-to-wear, the point of manufacture is offshore."

Rogers thinks such a B. Marie store could be profitable because what is spent on the computer can be made up by reducing a large inventory of clothes to a much smaller inventory of raw fabric.

"Just dreaming, if you had a new fashion and put it together on a computer, 30 seconds later everyone could have it by telephone," Rogers said.

He isn't looking to become the next Ralph Lauren, however. Rogers said that as long as he's having fun tackling a challenge, he'll stick with it. But when it comes to a business, Rogers loses interest.

"I think once I got it together, had people operating it, I'd probably do something new," he said.

Friendship's Over, Woman Asserts Borrowing Has Been Allowed Last Time

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

"Borrowing" Has Been Allowed Last Time

DEAR ABBY: After 15 years, I am ending a friendship. Why? Because when I go out with my "friend," she is always short of cash, and I end up paying part or all the tab.

Yesterday, my friend was short again. Would I buy the tickets for the movie so she (who had skipped dinner) could buy some food at the concession stand? I paid. Then, short of money at the concession stand, would I give her a couple of dollars so she could eat? I paid. Afterward, her car needed gas. She just sat there waiting for me to offer. I didn't. Her checkbook was in her "other" purse. I was outraged.

Abby, this scenario has repeated itself innumerable times. Yes, I have reminded my friend of how much she owes me, but never — never has she repaid me one cent over the years.

Last night was the last straw. I just made up my mind that I could not afford to treat her every time we were together. She earns as much as I, but she's always "short." I have lost all respect for her. And from now on when she calls and asks if we can "get together" for a movie, lunch, dinner or a night out, I am going to be "busy." Am I wrong? — FED UP IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR FED UP: You are not wrong for being fed up with her constant freeloading. But you would be wrong to say you're "busy" when you're not. She needs to hear the truth. Tell her you are tired of picking up the tab. It might penetrate. And if it doesn't, you haven't lost anything.

DEAR ABBY: I've been married to a Chinese woman for over 15 years. I am not Chinese, and I neither speak the language nor understand it. She, on the other hand, is fluent in Chinese and has many lady friends who come here to visit her. Invariably she and her Chinese friends will carry on conversations in Chinese in front of me, which I find irritating. (They are able to speak English, but Chinese is their first language.) I have told her it bothers me, but she still does it, so I just leave the room.

Your comments, please. — LEFT OUT IN HESPERIA

DEAR LEFT OUT: For two people to converse in Chinese, Italian, French, Spanish, German, Yiddish or Swahili in the presence of one who doesn't understand that language is rude. But consider this: Obviously these women prefer to visit privately, so why not leave the room with no prompting, and allow them to do so?

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I are in the process of having a very expensive house built in a very elite neighborhood. I usually go by our house at least once a day, coming home from work. In an average week, I will encounter five or six people — inside the house — just looking around out of curiosity.

My question: Do I, as a future homeowner, have any rights as to keeping these intruders out of our home? The doors have been installed, but not the locks. I can't be there all day, and neither can my wife. — BUILDING IN TEXAS

DEAR BUILDING: You could install the locks on the doors immediately, or put up signs: "Private property. No trespassing. Violators will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law!" Like chicken soup, it may not do any good, but it can't hurt.

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris. Ill. 61054.)

Board Changes Policy

thering. Of those received, 305 were approved and 58 were denied. Of the total number of applications approved, 206 were for the 1987-1988 school year and included 260 students."

Of the approved applications, according to the figures, 94 percent of the students chose not to move to Sadie Saulter, 78 percent chose not to move to South Greenville and 47 percent chose not to move to Elmhurst.

Sadie Saulter was projected to gain 36 students due to the reassignment of attendance areas; only two students were gained after grandfathering was approved. Instead of the school having a black-white ratio of 67:33, the racial balance with grandfathering is 72:28, a ratio unacceptable to the Justice Department.

With grandfathering, Elmhurst would have a racial balance of 54:46 (rather than 51:49 without the policy) and South Greenville would have a 64:36 ratio (rather than 60:40).

"Sadie Saulter School is the most immediate concern relative to grandfathering for 1987-1988," West said. "Changes in attendance lines render little or no effect on improving racial balances at Sadie Saulter."

Figures for Third Street School were not provided in the report, but West said that the racial balance in that school will "improve in the 1988-1989 school year." However, he said, "Sadie Saulter will not improve to an acceptable ratio."

West said the policy change shows a "'good faith effort' not only to rectify the problem that will exist at Sadie Saulter but also to follow through with improvement goals in racially balancing the J.H. Rose attendance area elementary schools in future years.

Although "due process could not be justified in reversing those approvals for the upcoming year," West said parents and students "should be made aware of future intentions to change the policy now so as to allow them the opportunity to make informed decisions for the 1987-1988 school year."

The school administration had requested that grandfathering be extended to students in grades six through 12 after the 1987-1988 school year. However, the board approved the policy with the stipulation that only students in grades nine through 12 be given the privilege to grandfather.

As with the previous policy, all students attending school outside their attendance area must provide their own transportation, and the decision to surrender the grandfather assignment would be irreversible upon failure to enroll in the designated school. Each year, eligible students will be given the option to surrender their grandfather privilege and enroll in the assigned attendance area. The deadline for making the decision will be April 1 each year.

The policy states, "Any and all grandfather privileges extended to students by means of a prior grandfather policy are revoked" with the approval of this policy.

A second issue addressed in the report overcrowding by 189 students at W.H. Robinson School due to the attendance line changes. The overcrowding is "due to human error" in calculating the enrollment projections.

The board approved delaying the shift of fifth-grade students from A.G. Cox School to Robinson for one year in order to create 142 spaces at Robinson to assist in alleviating the overcrowding.

"By delaying a move of the fifth grade to W.H. Robinson for one year and moving some of the exceptional children students, adequate space will exist to accommodate the enrollment, including grandfathered students, for 1987-1988," West said.

With the policy change for the 1988-1989 school year, grandfathering for students in kindergarten through fifth grades will be eliminated, thus freeing 192 spaces at Robinson and providing adequate accommodations to house the fifth grade students from Cox.

"Changing the approved attendance lines for the W.H. Robinson area are not recommended," West said. "Although the new elementary school currently reflects a below-capacity enrollment projection, the tremendous growth potential with the new school boundaries necessitates that allowances be made to accommodate that growth. To add to the current boundaries of the new elementary school would ultimately prove to create capacity problems for that school similar to that which already exists at W.H. Robinson.

"Additionally, to change the W.H. Robinson attendance boundaries at this point would create considerable confusion, additional turmoil and could not be clear-cut, as the line currently represents the most logical division in the D.H. Conley attendance area," West said.

Board member Ferrell Blount of Bethel requested that the administrative staff ought to "think about 15 percent deviation" rather than the current 20 percent deviation in racial balance in each school currently used as the system guideline. He then was unanimously supported in asking that a "total countywide policy to meet these criteria" be considered.

Following the meeting, West said that to consider a 15 percent variance in racial balance, the administration must develop a "data base and see what type of cause-effect relationship develops. Anytime you lower the ratios, especially when you have extreme variances, you certainly have got to have some sort of change process occur."

The board, after approving the policy changes, went into executive session for approximately one hour to discuss a personnel matter. No action was taken.

Woolard

In moves to combat the enormous trade deficit and in ways to find measures to capture a larger share of current world markets, Woolard cited a number of actions taken by Du Pont in recent years.

"In Du Pont's efforts to become more cost effective in production, part of the action taken was a reduction in personnel. Much of this was done through voluntary early retirement plans.

"Another step taken was a major companywide program to improve efficiency through closer involvement with our employees. We started that concept, that program, at the Kinston plant 12 years ago. It has worked well, and has since been emulated throughout the world."

Another step Woolard touched on was "a cut in levels of management, at the same time involving all employees in self-supervision. We asked for ideas, let those other than management help us decide. This has the advantage of creating a sense of ownership by employees, more satisfaction in their work."

Woolard strongly emphasized two factors — quality and service — as essential for success in the production of American goods.

"At Du Pont," he said, "we have reaffirmed our commitment to quality. We made a decision to move to a new plateau in the design, the manufacture of our products, to use the highest quality ingredients. At all levels we stress quality in everything we do.

"And we have focused on our service to our customers, here and abroad. We all have experienced the long time it sometimes takes to get service, the long delays in getting repairs done, all too often the take-it or leave-it attitude os service personnel. People are more and more looking for suppliers that offers better service. Most markets can choose from several competitors for a product, so relationships in service with customers, large or small, is important in overall effectiveness and success."

Citing the Ford Motor Co. as an avid proponent of quality product and service, Woolard said "their efforts have paid off well. Seven or eight years ago the company was building junk. Now that is different. Ford has sold every car it could produce in the last 18 months, resulting in a turn-around for the company's sales and growth."

The success at Harley-Davidson, he said, has been equally as noticeable as that of Ford.

The recipient of the County Industrialist of the Year award was Paul J. Smith of Washington County, a resident of Plymouth. Smith, a chemical engineer, vice president and mill manager for the Weyerhaeuser firm, has been active in community affairs including work with historical preservation, the United Way and especially with public schools. He is credited in being instrumental in securing Weyerhaeuser Foundation grants for community purposes.

The program of the Eastern North Carolina Industrial Council meeeting and annual spring rally began at noon with a golf tournament.

The single brief business item was the nomination of county committee chairmen in eastern North Carolina counties. The nominations, presented by E. Graham Flanagan Jr., were accepted by acclamation.

City Council OKs Computer Purchase

Council members approved a request by the Planning and Zoning Commission to rezone approximately 220 acres in the Belvedere, Club Pines, and Westhaven subdivisions from residential-agricultural and medium density residential to single-family residential.

The board approved an amendment to the Zoning Ordinance defining a Wellness Center.

"A wellness center is a facility designed to promote health awareness and maintenence through a variety of programs and services tailored to a range of individual needs, including but not limited to physical fitness and nutrition education," the definition said.

"The programs shall be coordinated by a physical consultant, who shall oversee the content and conduct of each program. A variety of facilities shall be provided, such as indoor-outdoor swimming pools, jogging tracks, walking-cycling trails and may include seminar rooms and exercise rooms. All improved outdoor exercise facilities shall comply with setbacks for the zone where the facility is located and must be visually screened from adjoining property lines and street rights-of-way."

Council members approved resolutions scheduling public hearings on the annexations of Scarborough subdivision, Mumford Park, Willoughby Park condominiums, Oakdale and Treetops subdivisions, and property located off 14th Street Extension (formerly Elks Lodge).

Bobby Roberson, director of planning and community development, said the annexation of Scarborough subdivision, located on the west side of state road 1704, south of Windy Ridge, north of Tuckahoe, would include 94 lots, while Willoughby Park condominiums, located off Evans Street extension, would add 228 units.

Mumford Park, located off the southern right-of-way of Mumford Road and south of Powell Street intersection, includes eight light industrial lots, while Treetops subdivision, Section 5, located west of Fork Swamp Canal and south of White Road, includes 89 lots, Roberson said.

The council continued a request by Grace T. Pate to rezone approximately 3.73 acres from residential-agricultural to high density residential until Bill Miller, an adjoining property owner could learn more about development plans. The property is located on state road 1135, about 318 feet south of the U.S. 264 intersection.

Meanwhile, council members awarded a bid of $95,623 to Greenville Paving for a 1987 street and downtown parking lot resurfacing project, and accepted a bid of $19,878 from Signal Engineering Co. of Jacksonville, Fla., for traffic control equipment.

The panel also accepted a $286,123 bid from Lee Fire Equipment and Supply Co. of Kinston for two fire pumper trucks.

Since only $240,000 had been allotted for the trucks, council members approved a budget ordinance amendment designating $46,123 from monies currently available in the 1986-87 General Fund capital improvements budget from the delay on the master plan contract for the headquarters fire station.

A municipal agreement between the city and the N.C. Department of Transportation to allow NCDOT to perform road work on a reimbursable basis and an amendment to the Subdivision Ordinance deleting sections on planned residential developments were approved.

The council also approved a request to close a portion of Hill Top Avenue, a request to establish a controlled residential parking area on the west side of South Elm Street, north of East 10th Street and south of East Sixth Street, an ordinance establishing school zones on Ward and Fourth streets, a request by Edward Earl Aldridge for a privilege license to operate a pawn shop, Coastal Jewelry and Pawn Shop, and accepted Hartford Street for permanent city maintenence.

Akeem Cannot Prevent A Sweep

SEATTLE (AP) — In defeat, the sweat-glistening former soccer goalkeeper from Nigeria was truly magnificent.

But even Akeem "The Dream" Olajuwon, at his brilliant best on the basketball court, wasn't enough to prevent the improbable Seattle SuperSonics from eliminating the Houston Rockets from the NBA playoffs 128-125 in double overtime Thursday night.

"I went up to Akeem after the game and told him he was one of the greatest players I've ever played against," Seattle's Maurice Lucas said. "He was phenomenal.

"We play with a lot of heart. But I can't imagine anyone wanting to win as much as Akeem did."

"We played very well as a team but so did they," Olajuwon said modestly. "That's the name of the game. It was a very tough loss."

Despite a 49-point, 25-rebound performance that also featured six blocked shots in 53 emotion-charged minutes by the 7-foot Olajuwon, the Sonics ousted the Rockets four games to two in the teams' second-round playoff series and earned the dubious right to face the powerful Los Angeles Lakers in the Western Conference finals.

The Magic Johnson-led Lakers, favored to win it all in the NBA this season, will host the underdog Sonics, a 39-43 regular-season club, at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif., Saturday at 12:30 p.m. PDT and Tuesday and 7:30 p.m.

Games 3 and 4 will be played in the Seattle Coliseum, but the NBA won't set those dates until Friday, Sonics spokesman Jim Rupp said.

The Lakers, who dispatched Denver 3-0 and Golden State 4-1 in their first two playoff series, were 4-2 against Seattle during the regular season. Los Angeles finished 26 games ahead of Seattle in the Pacific Division during the regular season.

But even the prospect of having to play the Lakers could not diminish the ecstasy of knocking off the favored Rockets and their Twin Towers of Olajuwon and 7-4 Ralph Sampson.

"This is the happiest moment of my life," said Dale Ellis, who scored 36 points and put Seattle ahead with 52 seconds remaining in the second overtime period. "I think we're going to go all the way."

On his field goal that turned out to be the game-winner, Ellis got the ball after Olajuwon blocked his shot and scored from under the basket to break a 125-125 tie. Ellis had tied the game for Seattle with a baseline jumper with 1:47 remaining.

Ellis also made a big play on defense at the end, partially blocking a long 3-point attempt by Richard Anderson, necessitated because Clemen Johnson scored the final Seattle point — his only of the night — on a free throw with five second remaining. Anderson's shot fell short and the buzzer sounded.

Houston led 107-102 with 55 seconds remaining in regulation play and it appeared likely the Sonics were going back to The Summit in Houston for a seventh game Saturday instead of going to Los Angeles.

"There was a lot of doubt at that point," said Tom Chambers, who led the Sonics with 37 points.

But Ellis insisted he was not concerned about his team's five-point deficit.

"Our team has shown character all year in coming back from adversity," he said. "We did it again tonight. No one expected us to be here but we're still here."

Coach Bernie Bickerstaff of the Sonics thought his team's ability to come back from five points from behind inside the last minute of regulation play was the key to the victory.

"With 55 seconds to go and us down by five, I called a timeout and told the guys in the huddle, 'It's gut check time,' " he said. "The guys came through."

Ralph Sampson, who scored 19 points and missed a key jump shot in the final minute, had sent the game into a second overtime when he hit a free throw with five seconds left after being fouled by Chambers. Sampson missed the second free throw but Olajuwon got the rebound. He then missed an eight-foot baseline jumper at the buzzer.

"There's some guys who made some crucial errors who are going to have a tough time sleeping," Houston Coach Bill Fitch said. "It was a heart-breaking way for us to end the season."

It will be a long summer for Houston, which was a finalist against Boston in the NBA playoffs last season, and especially for Sampson. Sampson said he was willing to take all the blame for the devastating defeat.

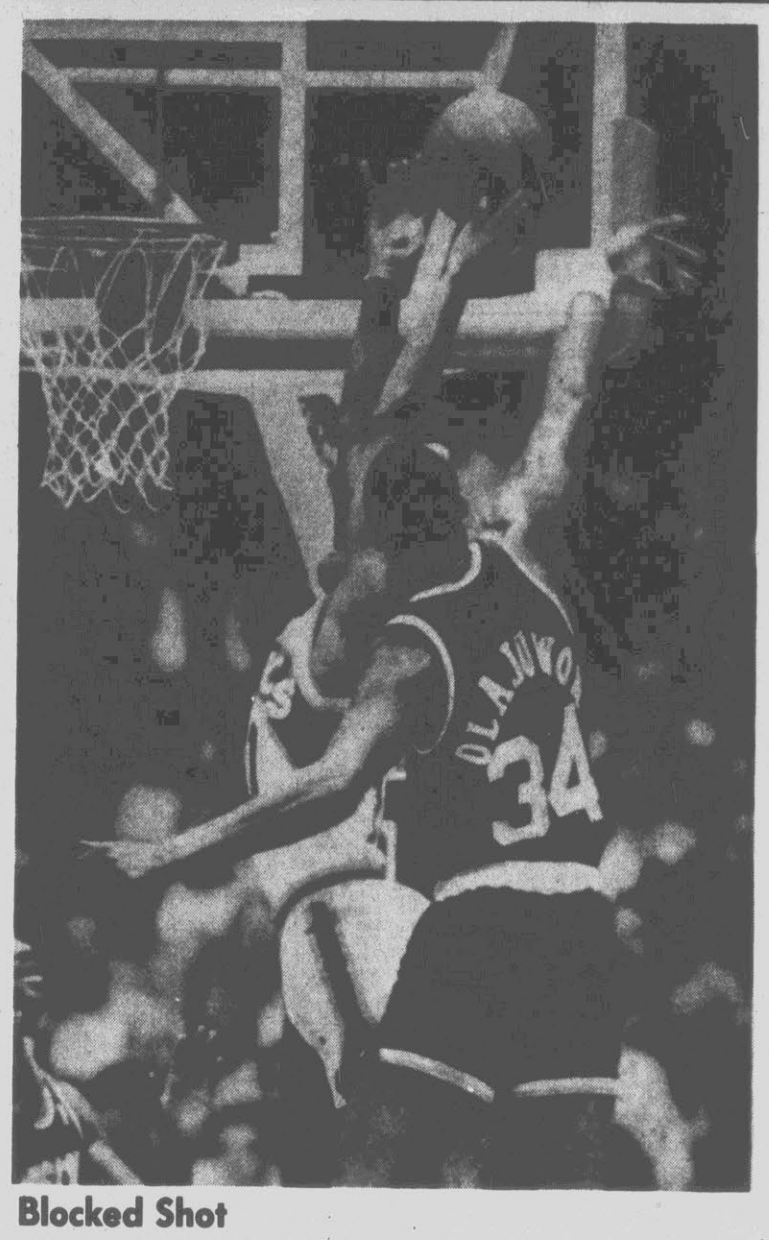

"Both teams played hard but it comes down to who makes the last shot," he said. "It was a hard game to play in and play hard and lose.

"But I can take it. I'm big enough to take the blame. I took the shot and I didn't make it. I had an opportunity to win the game. It's something I'll have to live with for a long, long time."

Chambers had scored on a three-point play with 15 seconds left in the first overtime to put the Sonics ahead 115-114. He drove in for stuff off a long pass from Nate McMillan and was fouled by Robert Reid. He converted the free throw.

Seattle had sent the game into overtime by scoring the last five points in regulation on a basket by Xavier McDaniel, who finished with 24 points, from the key with 46 seconds to go and a three-point play by Ellis with 25 seconds to go.

McGraw's Shot Carries Pirates

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

RICHMOND, Va. — Jay McGraw drilled a tape-measure home run in the ninth inning Wednesday to power East Carolina to a 5-3 win over George Mason at Richmond's The Diamond.

The blow lifted East Carolina into the winners' bracket of the Colonial Athletic Association's baseball tournament, a double elimination affair.

The fourth-seeded Pirates will face James Madison tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the final game of the second round of play. William & Mary, a 5-2 loser to UNC- Wilmington in the opening game, faced George Mason in an 11 a.m. game today, while the Seahawks take on Richmond, a 6-1 loser to the Dukes, at 3 p.m.

The tournament, which awards an automatic berth into the NCAA Regionals to the winner, continues through Sunday.

The Pirates twice struggled back from behind against the Patriots, who had swept them in three games during the regular season. The Bucs trailed 1-0 before taking a 2-1 lead. The Patriots, however, rallied for a 3-2 lead before a bases-loaded walk tied it in the eighth for ECU.

That set the stage for McGraw in the ninth inning. With two away, Calvin Brown fought off GMU relief pitcher John Styles for a walk. McGraw then greeted Brian Davidson, GMU's next pitcher, with a shot that cleared the top of the double-height wall in left center, some 385 feet from home.

"He hung a curve ball up in the strike zone and I just got all of it," McGraw said. "He had thrown two good curves prior to that, down and away, but he threw that last one right over and it sure felt good."

Coach Gary Overton agreed. "He hit it a long way. He's a clutch performer and came through at the right time today.

"We played an error-free game today and that was one of our goals. But what really impressed me was our falling behind twice and coming back both times. I thought it was evident early that it would be a low-scoring game, despite the number of hits (a total of 21)."

Overton felt that ECU made only one mistake and that was on the basepaths in the first inning. John Adams led off with a single to left and moved up when Steve Sides beat out a bunt. Both were sacrificed up and McGraw then lifted a fly to middle center.

Adams, off third, came back to tag up, headed home, then stopped before running on. The relay was then in time to get him.

"We wanted to get more aggressive both offensively and defensively," Overton said. "We were sending him all the way. I don't know why he hesitated."

Mason suffered from a few baserunning mistakes itself. In the second, ECU starter Gary Smith picked off Scott Toelle, whom he had just walked. That was fortuitous in that Ralph Schmidt followed with a solo home run to left, staking the Pats to a 1-0 lead.

Then, in the fifth, Jim Brown was picked off second on a routine fly to left as he failed to get back to the base in time.

Trailing 1-0, the Pirates came back with two in the fourth to take the lead. With one out, McGraw singled and stole second. He scored on Mike Sullivan's single to left. Mike Andrews followed with a Texas League single to center and Dean Ehehalt reached on a fielder's choice, putting Andrews out. John Thomas then followed with a double, scoring Sullivan.

Mason tied it up in the fifth with a run. The Pats missed a major opportunity when Andrews made an outstanding play in the fourth to throw a runner out from behind second base. Chris Lawrence followed that up with a double.

In the fifth, Mike Ginn led off with a walk and with one away, Brown singled. Ryan Johnston, the CAA's Player of the Year, followed with a single, scoring Ginn.

Mason moved into the lead in the seventh. Brown reached on a fielder's choice that left two away. Johnson hit a sharp liner off Smith's shoulder into right field. Ed Walowac followed with an infield hit, scoring Brown.

"Gary took a shot to the shoulder of his pitching arm, but seemed to be okay after a couple of warmup tosses," Overton said. "Of course, we don't know how it might affect him the rest of the way."

East Carolina then came back to tie it up in the top of the eighth. Sullivan reached on a fielder's choice that left two away. Andrews walked, and GMU went to Styles for relief. However, he proceeded to walk both Ehehalt and Thomas, forcing in Sullivan with the tying run.

After getting one out in the bottom of the inning, Smith gave up a walk and a double, the latter to Schmidt. After a chat with Overton, he got Ginn to ground back to Sullivan at third, who made a fine play on the ball to check the runners and get the batter out.

Overton then brought on Jake Jacobs, who got the next batter on a fly ball, ending the threat.

"We wanted Gary to pitch to their lefthanded hitter and try and get him out. He did, so we brought on Jake, and he got the job done. Both pitchers did a remarkable job for us."

Jacobs put the side down in order in the bottom of the ninth after McGraw put the Pirates on top, earning the victory. It was his sixth straight this year, and his 10th in a

Expos Tiring Of Reds' Comebacks

By The Associated Press

If the Montreal Expos are getting that rundown feeling, it's understandable.

For the second straight night and third time this season, the Cincinnati Reds surged back from a deep hole to beat the Expos. This time, the Reds scored five runs with two outs in the ninth inning for a 10-9 victory Thursday night.

The Reds broke down the door when Kal Daniels led off against Andy McGaffigan with a single. One out later, Dave Parker singled and Eric Davis walked to load the bases.

Randy St. Clair, 2-2, relieved and gave up a sacrifice fly to Kurt Stillwell, making it 9-6. Terry Francona singled to load the bases again before Ron Oester delivered a two-run double.

Pinch hitter Lloyd McClendon then came through with a game-winning, two-run single to right.

The Expos' bullpen is ready for some rest, if only the starters would provide a night off.

"I don't think the bullpen is tired, but it wouldn't hurt them to have a little rest," Rodgers said. Montreal is the only club in the league whose starters have not pitched a complete game.

Herm Winningham homered for the Expos.

Pirates 10, Padres 3

Pittsburgh continued its torrid hitting against the Padres, who have lost eight of their last nine games despite averaging 5½ runs a game over that span. San Diego is 8-28, the worst record in the majors, and 3-15 on the road.

The host Pirates scored 31 runs in the series. This time, Mike Lavalliere led the way with three RBI and reliever John Smiley got his first save and first hit in the majors. Smiley, who pitched three scoreless innings, had an RBI double in the Pirates' five-run seventh.

Leading 4-3, the Pirates scored all five of their runs in the seventh before starter Eric Show and reliever Lance McCullers retired a batter.

First baseman Carmelo Martinez's error scored one run before LaValliere had a two-run single to right and Rafael Belliard hit an RBI single. Smiley followed with his double down the right-field line.

"What's great about this team is we're scoring a lot of runs in the sixth, seventh, eighth innings and it's giving the pitchers a lot of confidence," winning pitcher Brian Fisher said.

Phillies 5, Braves 4

Mike Schmidt and Juan Samuel had two-run homers and Jeff Stone singled in the winning run in the seventh inning.

Samuel homered in the third, getting his fifth in the last five games. Schmidt homered in the fifth, his 12th this year and 506th lifetime.

Astros 5, Mets 4

Glenn Davis' RBI groundout broke the tie in the seventh inning and rookie Dave Meads won his third straight decision with 2 2-3 innings of hitless relief.

ECU Inks Hoopers

East Carolina basketball coach Mike Steele has announced the signing of two players to grants-in-aid for the 1987-88 season.

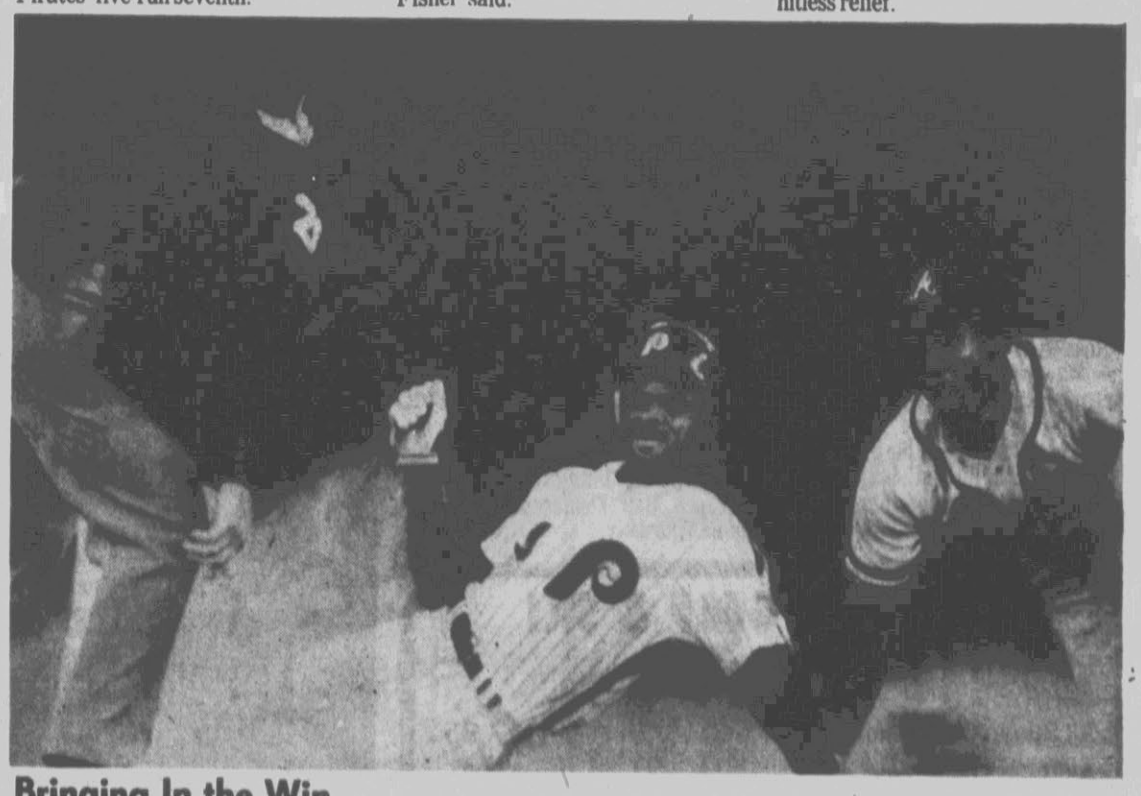

The first is Mark Lacey, a 6-5, 190-pounder from Huntsville, Ala. Lacey was the player of the year in Hunstville, averaging 18 points a game along with nine rebounds per outing for Butler High School.

The other signee is Tehern Harvey, a 6-2 guard from Nashville, Tenn.

Harvey was a three-year starter at Glencliff High School, averaging 14 points a contest.

"These players come from winning programs," Steele said. "They have unbelievable work habits and their best years are definitely ahead of them. Lacey has gotten better each season and Harvey is a great athlete and a defensive stopper."

The two will join recently signed Stanley Love, a 6-5 forward from Decatur, Ala.

Andretti Set, Others Are Not

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Mario Andretti's pole position for the Indianapolis 500 is safe. Big-name drivers like Al Unser or Tom Sneva or Pancho Carter are not so secure, though.

Fifteen spots in the 33-car field for the May 24 race must be filled in the final rounds of qualifications Saturday and Sunday. Then, the slowest cars face elimination when the bumping process begins.

It all adds up to more uncertainty than usual at Indy.

The 18 cars already qualified represent the lowest number for the first weekend of time trials since 1974, barring four times when rain interrupted one or both days. The last two years, only three spots remained for the last weekend.

Even the bumping promises to be harder to figure.

For the first time this decade, speeds were down last weekend as drivers and mechanics puzzled over delicate adjustments to the cars and struggled with a track turned slick by hot, dry weather.

But how much are speeds down? A week ago, almost no one would have thought a 203.781 mph qualifying average would make the starting field — let alone be acceptable to the driver. Yet that's the speed, by former pole-winner and track record-holder Carter, that's now on the bubble and would be the first to go once bumping begins.

In theory, not even Andretti's starting position on the inside of the front row — via his 215.390 mph qualifying speed — is secure until qualifications end at 6 p.m. EST Sunday. But there would have to be 33 subsequently faster qualifiers for that to happen.

It's never happened and likely never will.

In the modern racing era, the record number of cars ousted from the lineup by faster qualifiers is 11 in both 1979 and 1981. This year, already with a heavy toll on equipment and drivers in crashes during practice and with considerably lower speeds turned in by the remaining non-qualified cars, there doesn't figure to be anywhere near that many.

"I feel for these guys" who haven't qualified yet, three-time winner Johnny Rutherford said Thursday.

"All the eyes of the world are on this place. The cars are so twitchy out there now. You can blink an eye and you're in trouble. It's a funny game out there now. It's hard to figure out."

Orioles Hand Saberhagen 1st Loss

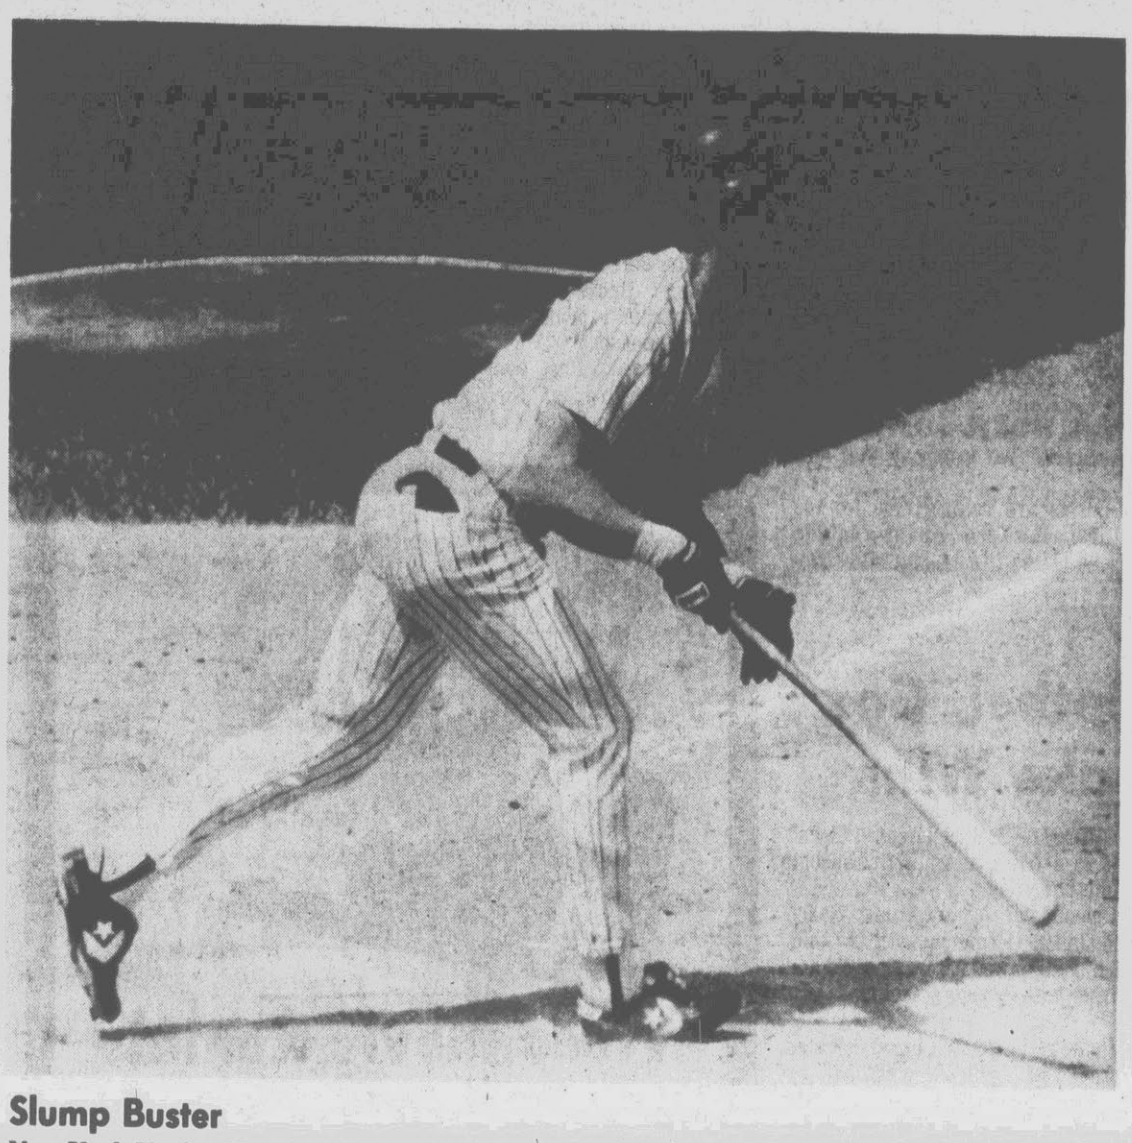

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Bret Saberhagen knows which major-league stadium has the shortest distance down the lines. Just ask him.

"I know why the Orioles lead in home runs. If I played here, I could hit 10 home runs," Saberhagen said after getting his first loss of the season Thursday night as Baltimore, playing at home in Memorial Stadium, beat the Kansas City Royals 4-3.

Terry Kennedy won it for the Orioles by leading off the eighth inning with an opposite-field homer to left, just 309 feet from home plate.

"It wasn't that bad of a pitch. In any other ballpark, maybe it's a single, double or it might be an out," said Saberhagen, 6-1 and leading the American League with a 1.86 earned run average.

Slump Buster

New York Yankee Don Mattingly watches the flight of the ball as he connected for a grand slam in the fourth inning against the Texas Rangers in New York, Thursday. The home run was the first career grand slam for the slumping Mattingly. (AP Laserphoto)

In other AL games, New York beat Texas 9-1, Toronto trounced Minnesota 16-4 and Chicago defeated Cleveland 4-3.

Kennedy connected for his fourth home run of the season.

"I was just glad I made contact. I wasn't thinking home run on 3-2," Kennedy said. "I was just looking to make contact and get on base. I got lucky because I hit it off the end of the bat."

Saberhagen, accustomed to pitching at Royals Stadium where it is 330 feet down the lines, has allowed only four homers in 58 innings this year, including a two-run shot to Cal Ripken Jr. in the first inning.

"I think this ballpark is the worst ballpark to pitch in. I got hurt twice last year here. I can't see how anyone likes this park."

Well, the Orioles' hitters love it — especially the 309-foot marks in the right- and left-field corners.

They lead the majors with 52 home runs and have hit 24 in their last seven games, two short of the AL record set by Boston in 1977.

"This club has gotten more confidence because of all the runs it has been scoring. Everyone here knew our hitting would start to come around and the way we've been hitting home runs has only added to the confidence level," said Baltimore Manager Cal Ripken Sr., whose team has won six of its last eight games.

Dave Schmidt, 4-1, pitched 2 1-3 scoreless innings in relief and got the victory. Ken Dixon, recently demoted to the Baltimore bullpen, struck out the side in the ninth for his second save.

"I basically threw all heat. When you are a relief pitcher, that's all you can throw. You can't try to pinch corners," Dixon said.

Ripken Jr., who leads the league with 34 RBI and is tied with 11 home runs, gave Baltimore a quick a lead, and an error by Royals second baseman Frank White made it 3-0 in the fifth.

Kansas City tied it in the sixth against Jeff Ballard, who was making his second major-league appearance. Angel Salazar hit his first big-league homer, a two-run shot in his 599th career at-bat, and Juan Beniquez had an RBI grounder.

Yankees 9, Rangers 1

Don Mattingly hit his first career grand slam and Rickey Henderson and Claudell Washington also homered as New York beat Texas and took over first place in the AL East.

The Yankees moved two percentage points ahead of Milwaukee.

Henderson opened the New York first with a home run, his eighth of the season and the fourth time he has led off a game with a homer. Washington, who drove in three runs, hit a leadoff homer in the third against Ed Correa, 1-4.

Mattingly, batting just .240 entering the game, connected for his slam in the fourth off reliever Mike Mason. Mattingly's fourth homer came after a single by Joel Skinner and walks to Henderson and Willie Randolph.

Dennis Rasmussen, 3-2, gave up five hits in 7 2-3 innings as the Yankees won for the 14th time in 16 home games. New York begins a 10-game West Coast trip tonight in Seattle.

Blue Jays 16, Twins 4

Lloyd Moseby and Tony Fernandez drove in four runs each and Toronto ripped 20 hits in routing Minnesota.

The Blue Jays ripped four pitchers for season highs in runs and hits and beat the Twins for the ninth straight time.

White Sox 4, Indians 3

Carlton Fisk singled home the winning run with one out in the ninth inning as host Chicago defeated Cleveland and ended a seven-game losing streak.

Donnie Hill drew a leadoff walk in the ninth from Rich Yett, 1-2, and Ozzie Guillen sacrificed. Fisk then singled off Ernie Camacho.

Bucks Look For Bird Explosion

MILWAUKEE (AP) — With Boston center Robert Parish out with a sprained ankle, the Milwaukee Bucks are expecting Celtics star Larry Bird to come out firing tonight in Game 6 of the NBA Eastern Conference semifinals.

"That's been the characteristic of Larry when they lose or don't play as well," Milwaukee guard Sidney Moncrief said. "He usually comes out and takes the initiative to get the ball club going.

"That means he's usually more aggressive and takes a lot more shots early."

The Bucks narrowed Boston's series lead to 3-2 Wednesday night with a 129-124 victory to snap the Celtics' 33-game home winning streak. It was Milwaukee's first victory in the Boston Garden in two years.

"To extend the season in that fashion, the fact that we won in Boston, which is something we have to do (again) to win the series, should be a confidence builder for our club," Moncrief said.

If the Celtics don't win tonight in the Milwaukee Arena, Game 7 will be Sunday in Boston.

Parish had 30 points, 16 rebounds and four blocked shots Wednesday but he fell with four minutes left and hurt his ankle. He stayed in the game until five seconds remained.

Bird, meanwhile, scored 26 points on an 8 of 22 shooting performance — subpar for him.

"I think we can still win the game without Robert. It's going to be that much tougher," Boston guard Danny Ainge said.

"The Celtics will try to turn it up a notch," Bucks guard John Lucas said, agreeing with Moncrief that Bird will be looking for his shot from the outset. "We just pray that he's off."

Injuries are nothing new for the Celtics. Forward Kevin McHale missed Game 1, a 111-98 Celtics victory, with a stress fracture and sprained ankle. Bird took up the slack with 40 points. Backup center Bill Walton has also missed the entire series with a foot injury.

The Celtics hope Parish "will be ready for the next series," Boston team physician Thomas Silva said after the club arrived in Milwaukee Thursday without Parish.

Bird is aware of what he and his teammates need to do.

"Injuries play a big part in this game. You just have to overcome them. When you lose, you've always got to come back and play a little bit better, a little bit harder," he said.

Bird said the Celtics would have to play better defense, especially late in the game. Bucks forward Terry Cummings had 14 points in the fourth quarter Wednesday.

"They were getting every loose ball. It was frustrating," Bird said.

With Parish out, the Celtics can move McHale to center and bring Fred Roberts back into the starting lineup at forward. It is a lineup that Parish predicted would last only one game.

"See everyone on Sunday. Yep, I'll be out there Sunday," he said as the Celtics left for Milwaukee.

The Celtics will be back in Boston Garden Sunday, win or lose tonight. If they lose, it's Game 7 against the Bucks. If they win, they begin the Eastern Conference finals against the Detroit Pistons.

"Boston will come out more determined," said Moncrief, whose career playoff-high 33 points Wednesday led the Bucks. "They probably sense that they let one get away they shouldn't have, playing at home. They'll be ready to play."

Coach Don Nelson's career in Milwaukee was extended for at least one more game with Wednesday's victory.

Leader In Colonial Golf Looks Familiar To Rogers

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Bill Rogers says the player leading after the first round of the Colonial National Invitation "looks like somebody we knew from the past."

It's someone, he said, who "resembles that guy who used to shoot some low scores."

Sure enough, the lanky blond who carved up Colonial Country Club's proud acreage Thursday was the same Bill Rogers who in 1981 captured seven international titles, including the British Open, and then slipped into a long and torturous slump.

"I don't even like to talk about it," Rogers said after shooting a 5-under-par 65 that gave him a one-shot lead in the $600,000 tournament over Chip Beck, Bill Sander and Clarence Rose.

With the usually brutal Texas winds reduced to a gentle breeze, Rogers stung the treacherous Trinity River course for six birdies and one bogey.

Former Colonial champion Ben Crenshaw led a group of seven golfers at 67. Also at three under were local favorite Mark Brooks, Tom Byrum, Keith Clearwater, Dan Forsman, Bobby Wadkins and Scott Simpson.

A record 65 players broke or matched par, among them Bob Tway and Curtis Strange, 68, Tom Kite and Lee Trevino, 69, Tom Watson and leading money-winner Paul Azinger, 70.

Fred Couples, the winner of last week's Byron Nelson Classic in a three-hole playoff, was at 72.

Watson, struggling to end a three-year non-winning streak, triggered a mild burst of excitement when he birdied three of the first eight holes but he hit into the water at the par-4 ninth, took a double bogey and never mounted a new charge.

For Rogers, 35, the Colonial represents a homecoming of sorts. He is a native of Waco, lived much of his life in Texarkana and is a resident now of San Antonio. His best finish of 1986 was a tie for third here.

"It's just good to be home, really," he said, dodging questions about the miseries that befell his once pristine swing that won him 1981's "Player of the Year" honors.

"I've beaten that dog to death."

UNC-Wilmington scored three times in the seventh inning to overcome a 2-0 William & Mary lead in the first game of the day.

The victory enabled the top-seeded Seahawks to move on in the winners' bracket. William & Mary was seeded sixth.

Kevin Davidson, who got the win in eight innings of work, gave up only two hits to the Indians to lead the way for the Seahawks.

In the third game of the day, fifth-seeded Madison upset Richmond, 5-1, to move up in the winners' bracket.

Madison led early, 1-0, before Scott Mackie drove the ball out of the park in deep center to drive in three Duke runs and put the game out of reach.

The German physicist Wilhelm Konrad Roentgen discovered X-rays in 1895. In a spirit of altruism, he refused to apply for any patents or to try to gain financially from his discovery. Other scientists have occasionally done the same thing. Marie Curie refused to patent radium, saying that it belonged to the world and no one had the right to profit from it. Likewise, John Walker, who gave the world the match, never took out a patent on his invention.

Old bridge players never die—they simply draw on their experience and continue to be a threat to the Young Turks. The hero of this hand from the Hoechst international team tournament in The Hague was Dutch grandmaster Hans Kreijns, who won the World Olympiad Open Pairs back in 1966, sitting East here.

The Polish North-South pair were using a five-card major system. Their auction would have been duplicated at almost any game in this country.

West attacked with the queen of hearts, which was allowed to hold the trick. He shifted to the seven of diamonds, taken by Kreijns with the king, and a diamond was returned to the queen. Declarer continued with the seven of hearts to the ten and ace, and East exited with a low club. Declarer's finesse of the ten lost to the queen, and back came a club to the king and ace.

Declarer cashed the jack of clubs and now had to tackle the spades. Since East was marked with trump length, declarer tried a low spade to dummy's ten. Kreijns won with the king!

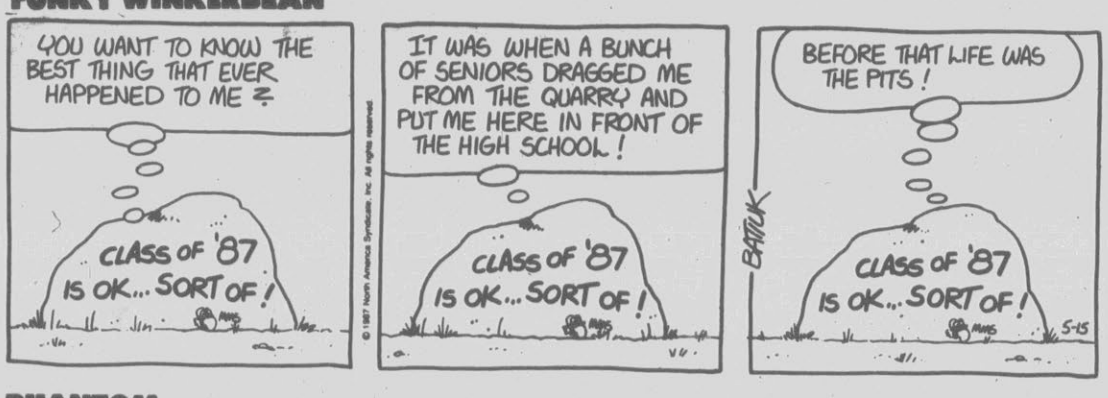

After sluffing a club on the diamond return to dummy's ace, declarer led the nine of trumps from the table. When East played low, declarer not surprisingly rose with a high honor from hand. Since he now had no entry to the board, he had to concede a second trump trick for down one.

Note that, had East routinely taken the first trump trick with the jack, declarer could not have gone wrong. His only hope in trumps would have been to take a finesse for the king, and when that succeeded the contract would have been home.

To Cut Costs, Night 'Soaps' Are Trimming Their Casts For Next Fall

By DIANE HAITHMAN
(c) 1987, Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — "We're talking some deaths," Jeff Freilich said. "We're talking some deaths, we're talking some disappearances, we're talking some escapes. And we're talking some happy endings."

Freilich is executive producer of CBS' prime-time soap opera "Falcon Crest." Like other nighttime soap producers, Freilich has had to think about death more than usual these days. And elopements, relocations to remote islands, irreversible comas and that popular, all-purpose favorite, the mysterious disappearance.

Although the season-ending cliffhanger is a staple of such series, a few more characters than usual will be falling over the cliff this year. And the reason is not to make things more exciting, but to save money.

In an effort to keep production costs from climbing, three prime-time serials produced by Lorimar Telepictures for CBS are reducing their number of actors. As the shows headed for their season finales this week, cast lists were being trimmed at "Falcon Crest," "Dallas" and "Knots Landing."

"With other costs going up, the most logical place to make cuts is the cast," Freilich said. "You're talking about a high-budget show (the budget for a one-hour prime-time soap is about $1 million), and at least one-third of that budget is cast."

With the three shows already in production for next fall — they started filming more than two months early due to the possibility of a Directors Guild strike at the end of June — scriptwriters are at work pondering the most intriguing ways to terminate their characters' glamorous lives.

The other two prime-time soaps, ABC's "Dynasty" and "The Colbys," produced by Richard and Esther Shapiro Productions in association with Aaron Spelling Productions, have made no decisions along these lines. "With 'Dynasty' just beginning to develop story lines for next season, it would be premature to discuss just what changes will be made," said a spokeswoman for the Shapiros. As for "The Colbys," the staff does not know yet if the low-rated show will be renewed.

While the Lorimar producers are generally remaining secretive about what actors will be departing in order to maintain suspense for next season, viewers can expect them to come from the ranks of minor characters. Core characters are not written out unless their contracts expire and they refuse to sign, or they are unable to come to terms on new ones, as happened on "Dallas" this season with Victoria Principal.

Lesser players, however, may be eliminated to save the cost of their salaries, to avoid using an extra set or to refocus audience attention on the stars. And the night-time soap is one of few places where an individual may simply die because he is boring.

Lorimar shows have announced some additions to their casts for fall: Red Buttons joins "Knots Landing," Eddie Albert turns up on "Falcon Crest" and Andrew Stevens and Jack Scalia will appear in "Dallas." But even these high-priced stars usually cost less than regular characters in the long run because they will appear in a limited number of episodes. And, because their presence is temporary, the company does not have to provide the annual salary increases afforded to a regular cast member.

"We have lost some people in our regular cast; several of them will be missing in the fall," said Freilich of "Falcon Crest," the steamy saga of two rival factions of a wealthy family of Northern California vintners. He would not disclose which characters are getting the ax, however.

The decision stems from a desire by CBS and Lorimar to avoid increasing 1986-87 production costs next season, he said.

Barbara Brogliatti, senior vice president of corporate communications for Lorimar, confirmed that the company has asked producers of all of its shows to watch costs for the upcoming season, although "each case is different," she said.

Ken Horton, vice president of programming for Lorimar, said that looking closely at production costs, including the price of cast members, is an ongoing issue in TV production, but added that "this year we may have looked a little more closely than before." He stressed, however, that decisions to get rid of some characters and add new ones are made to "preserve the freshness" of the shows as well as for financial reasons.

Kasha Lawrence, producer of "Knots Landing," began arranging for the demise of a host of minor characters as much as two years ago. Like Freilich, he discovered that the "Knots Landing" cast, at that time the largest prime-time soap with 17 players, had grown unwieldy. The cast has since been pared to 10 core characters.

"The financial issue is coincidental," Lawrence said. "They never said to us: 'You must cut.'"

Still, untimely exits represent a financial boon for Lorimar. "Actors are very expensive," he said. "When you have fewer cast members to deal with, you also have less houses, less sets to build, less places to go. Building is very expensive."

Lawrence has planned ahead; a believable TV death takes time. He said the two actors (he would not disclose which ones) who will be written out in the fall already know how many episodes they have left.

"You can't just put everybody in a building and blow it up," he said.

There is a new commandment among "Dallas" writers, however: Thou shalt not kill a character and then, a year later, have this character pop out of the shower and tell the world it was all a dream.

Executive producer Leonard Katzman learned this the hard way last fall when "Dallas" brought back Bobby Ewing (Patrick Duffy), nice-guy brother of the infamous J.R. Ewing (Larry Hagman), in this less-than-satisfying — and wildly expensive — way.

Because the preceding year was declared to have been a dream, those episodes cannot be sold in syndication.

"After Bobby's magic return, we're very leery of killing anybody off," Katzman said. "It is always better to have disasters happen off screen, if possible. If the body hasn't been discovered or stuck in the ground, it's easier to have them come back someday."

"Dallas" has one of the smallest, though most expensive, casts among prime-time soaps. Cast salaries constitute 45 percent of the budget. Although Katzman said "Dallas" staffers were concerned about costs, they had less to worry about than the other Lorimar shows because several core characters either left the show during the current season or were due to be written out of the fall season.

Katzman believes that mass murder of minor characters is not the long-term solution to financial problems, however. "They're still going to find they need some new people this season," he said. But, he added, "new people are cheaper to hire."

CBS Axes Three Veteran Shows

LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS will add nine shows to its fall schedule, including a "Platoon"-like Vietnam war drama, five new police shows and a fantasy about a half-man, half-beast who lives under New York City.

The new schedule for the second-place network, released Thursday, includes seven dramas, two half-hour comedies and the permanent addition of "West 57th Street" news magazine.

"This is an aggressive and exciting schedule," said B. Donald Grant, president of CBS Entertainment. "We had more good shows than we had time periods for them."

CBS canceled 17 series, some of which haven't been seen on the network in months, plus the Tuesday Night Movie. Only three new shows survived the cut: "Designing Women," "My Sister Sam" and "Houston Knights." Among the casualties were three veteran series, "Scarecrow and Mrs. King" and "The New Mike Hammer" and "Simon and Simon."

The shows that will not return include "Better Days," "The Cavenaughs," "Downtown," "Hard Copy," "Kay O'Brien," "Nothing Is Easy," "Outlaws," "The Popcorn Kid," "Roxie," "Shell Game," "Spies," "Take Five," "Twilight Zone," and "The Wizard."

"Tour of Duty," with a large cast headed by Terence Knox, follows a platoon of young soldiers during a one-year tour in Vietnam in the late 1960s. The show, similar to the Academy Award-winning "Platoon," will be television's first Vietnam war series.

The most unusual show on the schedule is "Beauty and the Beast," a fantasy drama about a man-beast who lives beneath New York City and shares an ideal love with a beautiful woman attorney who lives in the city above. Ron Perlman, the caveman in "Quest for Fire," stars as Vincent the Beast, Linda Hamilton is the lawyer and Roy Dotrice is a recluse who raised Vincent.

Five of the new series are police dramas, which will give the network nine police shows. CBS, which used comedies to dominate the ratings for more than 20 years, has only six comedy series, all on Monday and Saturday nights.

NBC, first in the Nielsen ratings, has 12 comedies and only five police shows. Traditionally, the network with the strongest comedies has been first in the ratings. NBC announced a fall schedule Wednesday that will return 21 shows and add only five new series. Three other series will appear once a month. ABC is expected to release its fall schedule on Monday.

William Conrad returns to the network as a tough prosecutor in "Jake and the Fat Man," which also stars Joe Penny, Alan Campbell and Anne Francis.

Jerry Orbach, who perfected his role as a seedy Boston private eye on "Murder She Wrote," stars in "The Law and Harry McGraw."

Fox Removing Rivers As Host?

NEW YORK (AP) — Joan Rivers is being removed as the permanent host of her late-night talk show, but will continue to appear several weeks a year in rotation with other hosts, according to a report published today.

The change in the show, which has suffered a sharp ratings decline since its debut in October, could come as early as next week, the New York Post said, citing unidentified advertising sources.

Officials of Fox Broadcasting, the fledgling fourth network on which Miss Rivers' "The Late Show" appears, would not confirm the change, but issued a statement from Fox president Jamie Kellner saying, "Joan will be associated with the show for many years to come."

Fox informed the show's publicity staff Thursday that an announcement would be made about the program late today, Joe Bleedon, Miss Rivers' publicist for the show, told The Associated Press.

"It can go 100 different ways," Bleedon said, adding that Miss Rivers may stay after all. "It's also very possible that tomorrow is going to be her last show."

Bleedon said the comedian would have no comment. "I know she'll have nothing to say," he said.

As a part-time host, Miss Rivers would return to the role that made her famous when she filled in for Johnny Carson on NBC's "The Tonight Show." Carson and Miss Rivers had a public falling-out when she announced she was starting her own show.

HBO Film On Chicago 8 Trial Begins On Saturday

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — At the conclusion of the television movie "Conspiracy: The Trial of the Chicago 8," the real defendants mingle with the actors who play them and reflect on the trial.

"I got married, I have two kids, three dogs, a seat in the state Legislature — and I still miss the old days," says Tom Hayden.

The movie will be a nostalgia trip for many veterans of the '60s, but writer-producer-director Jeremy Kagan is on the cutting edge of 1980s filmmaking with his provocative video techniques. He has turned what could have been a so-what period piece into a meaningful, cinematic event.

"Conspiracy," taken from the transcripts of the 3-month-long 1969 trial, premieres Saturday on HBO and will be shown through June.

Eight defendants were charged under the "Rap Brown law," a federal statute against conspiring to incite riots, for their protest activities during the 1968 Democratic Convention in Chicago. They became the "Chicago Seven" after Bobby Seale was removed for his repeated courtroom outbursts.

Michael Lembeck plays Abbie Hoffman, Barry Miller is Jerry Rubin, Carl Lumbly is Bobby Seale, Peter Boyle is David Dellinger, Robert Carradine is Rennie Davis, Brian Benben is Tom Hayden, David Kagen is John Froines and Robert Fieldsteel is Lee Weiner.

Robert Loggia and Elliott Gould play defense attorneys William Kunstler and Leonard Weinglass. David Clennon and Harris Yulin play U.S. Attorneys Richard Schultz and Thomas Foran.

David Opatoshu gives a standout performance as baffled old Judge Julius Hoffman.

The television audience is the jury. There is no "fourth wall." Kagan makes no attempt to conceal the fact that this is a television dramatization.

"I wanted to make a television show that was about television . .. mainly because the event itself wouldn't have occurred were it not for television," Kagan said in a telephone interview from Los Angeles.

"The war in Vietnam was in our homes, because of television. . .. The riots in the street that happened at the convention were on television. There was that phrase that came out, from the kids, 'The whole world is watching.' The trial was a chance for both sides to use the media to sell their points of view."

The trial itself wasn't televised, but there were almost nightly television news reports about it.

Kagan superimposes present-day interviews with participants over the dramatized scenes, a video technique used on sports programs and in music videos, but never applied in any prominent way to drama.

Only the defense is represented in the interviews. Kagan said prosecution figures declined to participate.

Documentary footage of the riots is also superimposed, on the side of the judge's podium, on the back of a defense lawyer's briefcase, behind the head of a witness on the stand, serving as little, cinematic editorial comments on the proceedings.

A third of the way through the trial, the class-clown tone gives way to the dead-serious duel between Judge Hoffman and Seale over Seale's insistence that he be allowed to represent himself. Their confrontation is the dramatic linchpin of Kagan's film.

When Seale refuses to be quiet, the marshals remove him. While the courtroom waits in silence, Kagan turns his camera 360 degrees, taking in the actors, the spectators, his own equipment and crew. The pause sets the scene for the shocking sight of the marshals returning with Seale, tied to his chair, his mouth covered by a gag. Even Schultz asks that Seale be released if he promises to be quiet. Seale wouldn't be quiet, despite the gag, and eventually he was tried separately.

The prosecution presents a parade of city and law enforcement officials, including Mayor Richard Daley. The defense offers seemingly irrelevant testimony, such as Allen Ginsberg's recitation of his protest poem "Howl," and Judy Collins singing "Where Have All the Flowers Gone?" prompting a marshal to clamp his hand over her mouth.

Abbie Hoffman gives his home address as "Woodstock nation." Asked whether he and the others had an agreement to stir up the demonstrators, he laughs. "An agreement? We couldn't agree on lunch." All seven defendants, plus lawyers Kunstler and Weinglass, are given prison terms ranging up to four-plus years for Kunstler for contempt of court. The jury finds Dellinger, Hoffman, Rubin, Davis and Hayden guilty of the lesser charge of intending to conspire to incite riots. They are sentenced to five years and fined $5,000 each. The verdicts were later overturned by a higher court.

As they are sentenced, the defendants address the court.

"Julie," Rubin tells Judge Hoffman, "You have radicalized more young people than we ever could. This is the happiest day of my life."

"When history is written," the quiet Froines says, "the men who sat at this table, our table here, that's the heroes."

In 1985, Pitt County's average weekly manufacturing wage was $332.98.

Nelson Planning Annual Concert

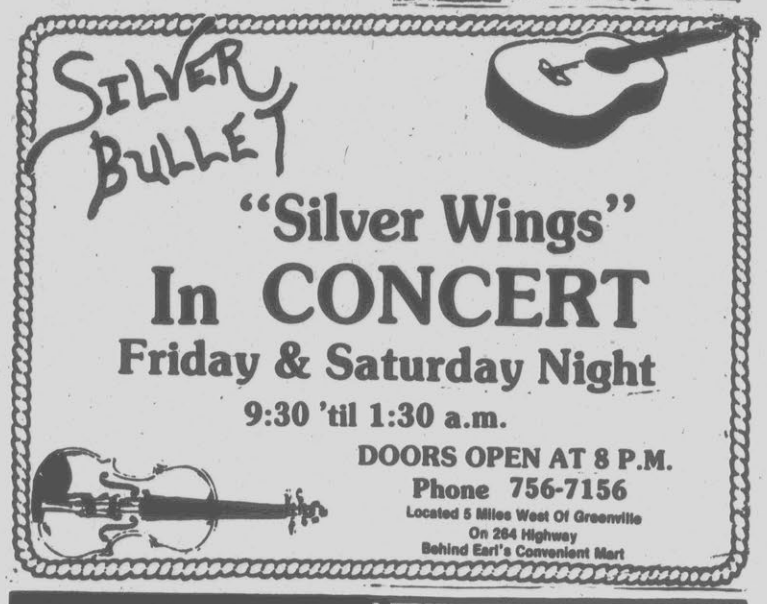

CARL'S CORNER, Texas (AP) — Kris Kristofferson, Emmylou Harris and Waylon Jennings will take the stage at this truck stop-turned-town when Willie Nelson holds his traditional Fourth of July shindig.

"Willie and I are old friends. That's why he's coming here," said Mayor Carl Cornelius.

About 100,000 people are expected to attend the all-day concert dedicated to the American trucker, organizers say.

Most of the 180 residents of Carl's Corner plan to turn out for Nelson's 14th annual party, Cornelius said in a recent interview.

Carl's Corner was a truck stop until Cornelius, who owns most of the town's two square miles, decided to incorporate the site 45 miles south of Dallas. A board of aldermen was chosen and Cornelius became mayor.

Jeff Goldblum stars in this chilling update of the classic horror film that turns a man into an insect. A terrifying nightmare after which nothing will ever be right again.

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes during the week ending May 8.

House

DEFENSE SPENDING — The House voted 249 for and 172 against to lower defense spending next fiscal year from the $306 billion level set by the Armed Services Committee to $289 billion.

The $17 billion cut brought the 1988 defense outlay in line with the Congressional budget resolution, which was approved after the committee had set the $306 billion level.

Facing nearly 200 other amendments, the bill (HR 1748) remained in debate.

Supporter Les Aspin, D-Wis., said fiscal discipline, not military preparedness, was the issue on this vote.

Opponent William Dickinson, R-Ala., said, "We are cutting into the bone and sinew of our defense establishment."

Members voting yes wanted the defense authorization bill to comply with the Congressional budget resolution.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were Walter Jones, D-1; Tim Valentine, D-2; Martin Lancaster, D-3; David Price, D-4; Stephen Neal, D-5; Charles Rose, D-7; W.G. Hefner, D-8, and James Clarke, D-11.

Those voting no were Howard Coble, R-6, Alex McMillan, R-9, and Cass Ballenger, R-10.

SALT II TREATY — By a vote of 245 for and 181 against, the House adopted an amendment denying spending under the fiscal 1988 defense bill (above) on long-range nuclear weapons that violate the unratified SALT II treaty with the Soviet Union.

This would force the Administration to abide by a narrow definition of the treaty if Moscow does the same. It was opposed by President Reagan, who says the Soviets have disregarded SALT II.

Supporter Jim Moody, D-Wisc., said the amendment would require a "return to the stated policies of the Reagan administration for the first six years of that administration."

Opponent Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said that under the amendment "the left wing of the Democratic Party unilaterally cripples America ... appeases the Soviets."

Members voting yes wanted to induce Washington and Moscow to obey SALT II.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were Jones, Price, Neal, Rose, Hefner and Clarke.

Those voting no were Lancaster, Coble, McMillan and Ballenger.

Valentine did not vote.

SAVINGS & LOANS — By a vote of 153 for and 258 against, the House rejected an amendment to raise, from $5 billion over two years to $15 billion over five years, the amount the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. can borrow to make itself solvent again.

This occurred as the House passed and sent to conference with the Senate a bill (HR 27) to shore up the FSLIC, which insures deposits of up to $100,000 in federally backed savings and loans.

Supporters said the $15 billion level is needed because FSLIC's liability may be that great to depositors in about 300 insolvent thrifts it would like to close.

Opponents said Congress could keep a tighter leash on FSLIC if it capped borrowing authority at $5 billion but left renewal as a possibility after two years.

Healthy thrifts, which must collateralize FSLIC borrowing to heal weak ones, generally favored the lower ceiling.

Members voting yes favored $15 billion rather than $5 billion in new borrowing authority for the FSLIC.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were McMillan and Ballenger.

Those voting no were Jones, Valentine, Lancaster, Price, Neal, Coble, Rose, Hefner and Clarke.

Senate

1988 BUDGET — By a vote of 56 for and 42 against, the Senate adopted and sent to conference with the House its version (S Con Res 48) of the Congressional budget plan for fiscal 1988.

The most disputed feature of the $1 trillion blueprint for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 was its stipulation that President Reagan accept substantial new taxes if he is to get higher defense spending.

Congress would approve military spending of $290.6 billion if the president accepts tax hikes of $18.3 billion in 1988 and $118 billion through 1991. Otherwise, defense spending is capped at $283.6 billion.

The resolution virtually ruled out income tax hikes. Many lawmakers are looking at higher alcohol and tobacco taxes, oil import levies and increased user fees.

Although the resolution's projected 1988 deficit of $133.6 billion misses the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law's target of $108 billion, its sponsors said spending restraint and the new taxes would combine to satisfy the law's goal of a balanced budget by 1991.

Supporter Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., referred to the higher 'taxes and called the budget "a pay-as-you-go plan."

Opponent Robert Dole, R-Kans., said it shows the Democratic Party still likes to tax and spend.

Senators voting yes supported the Senate Democrats' 1988 budget plan.

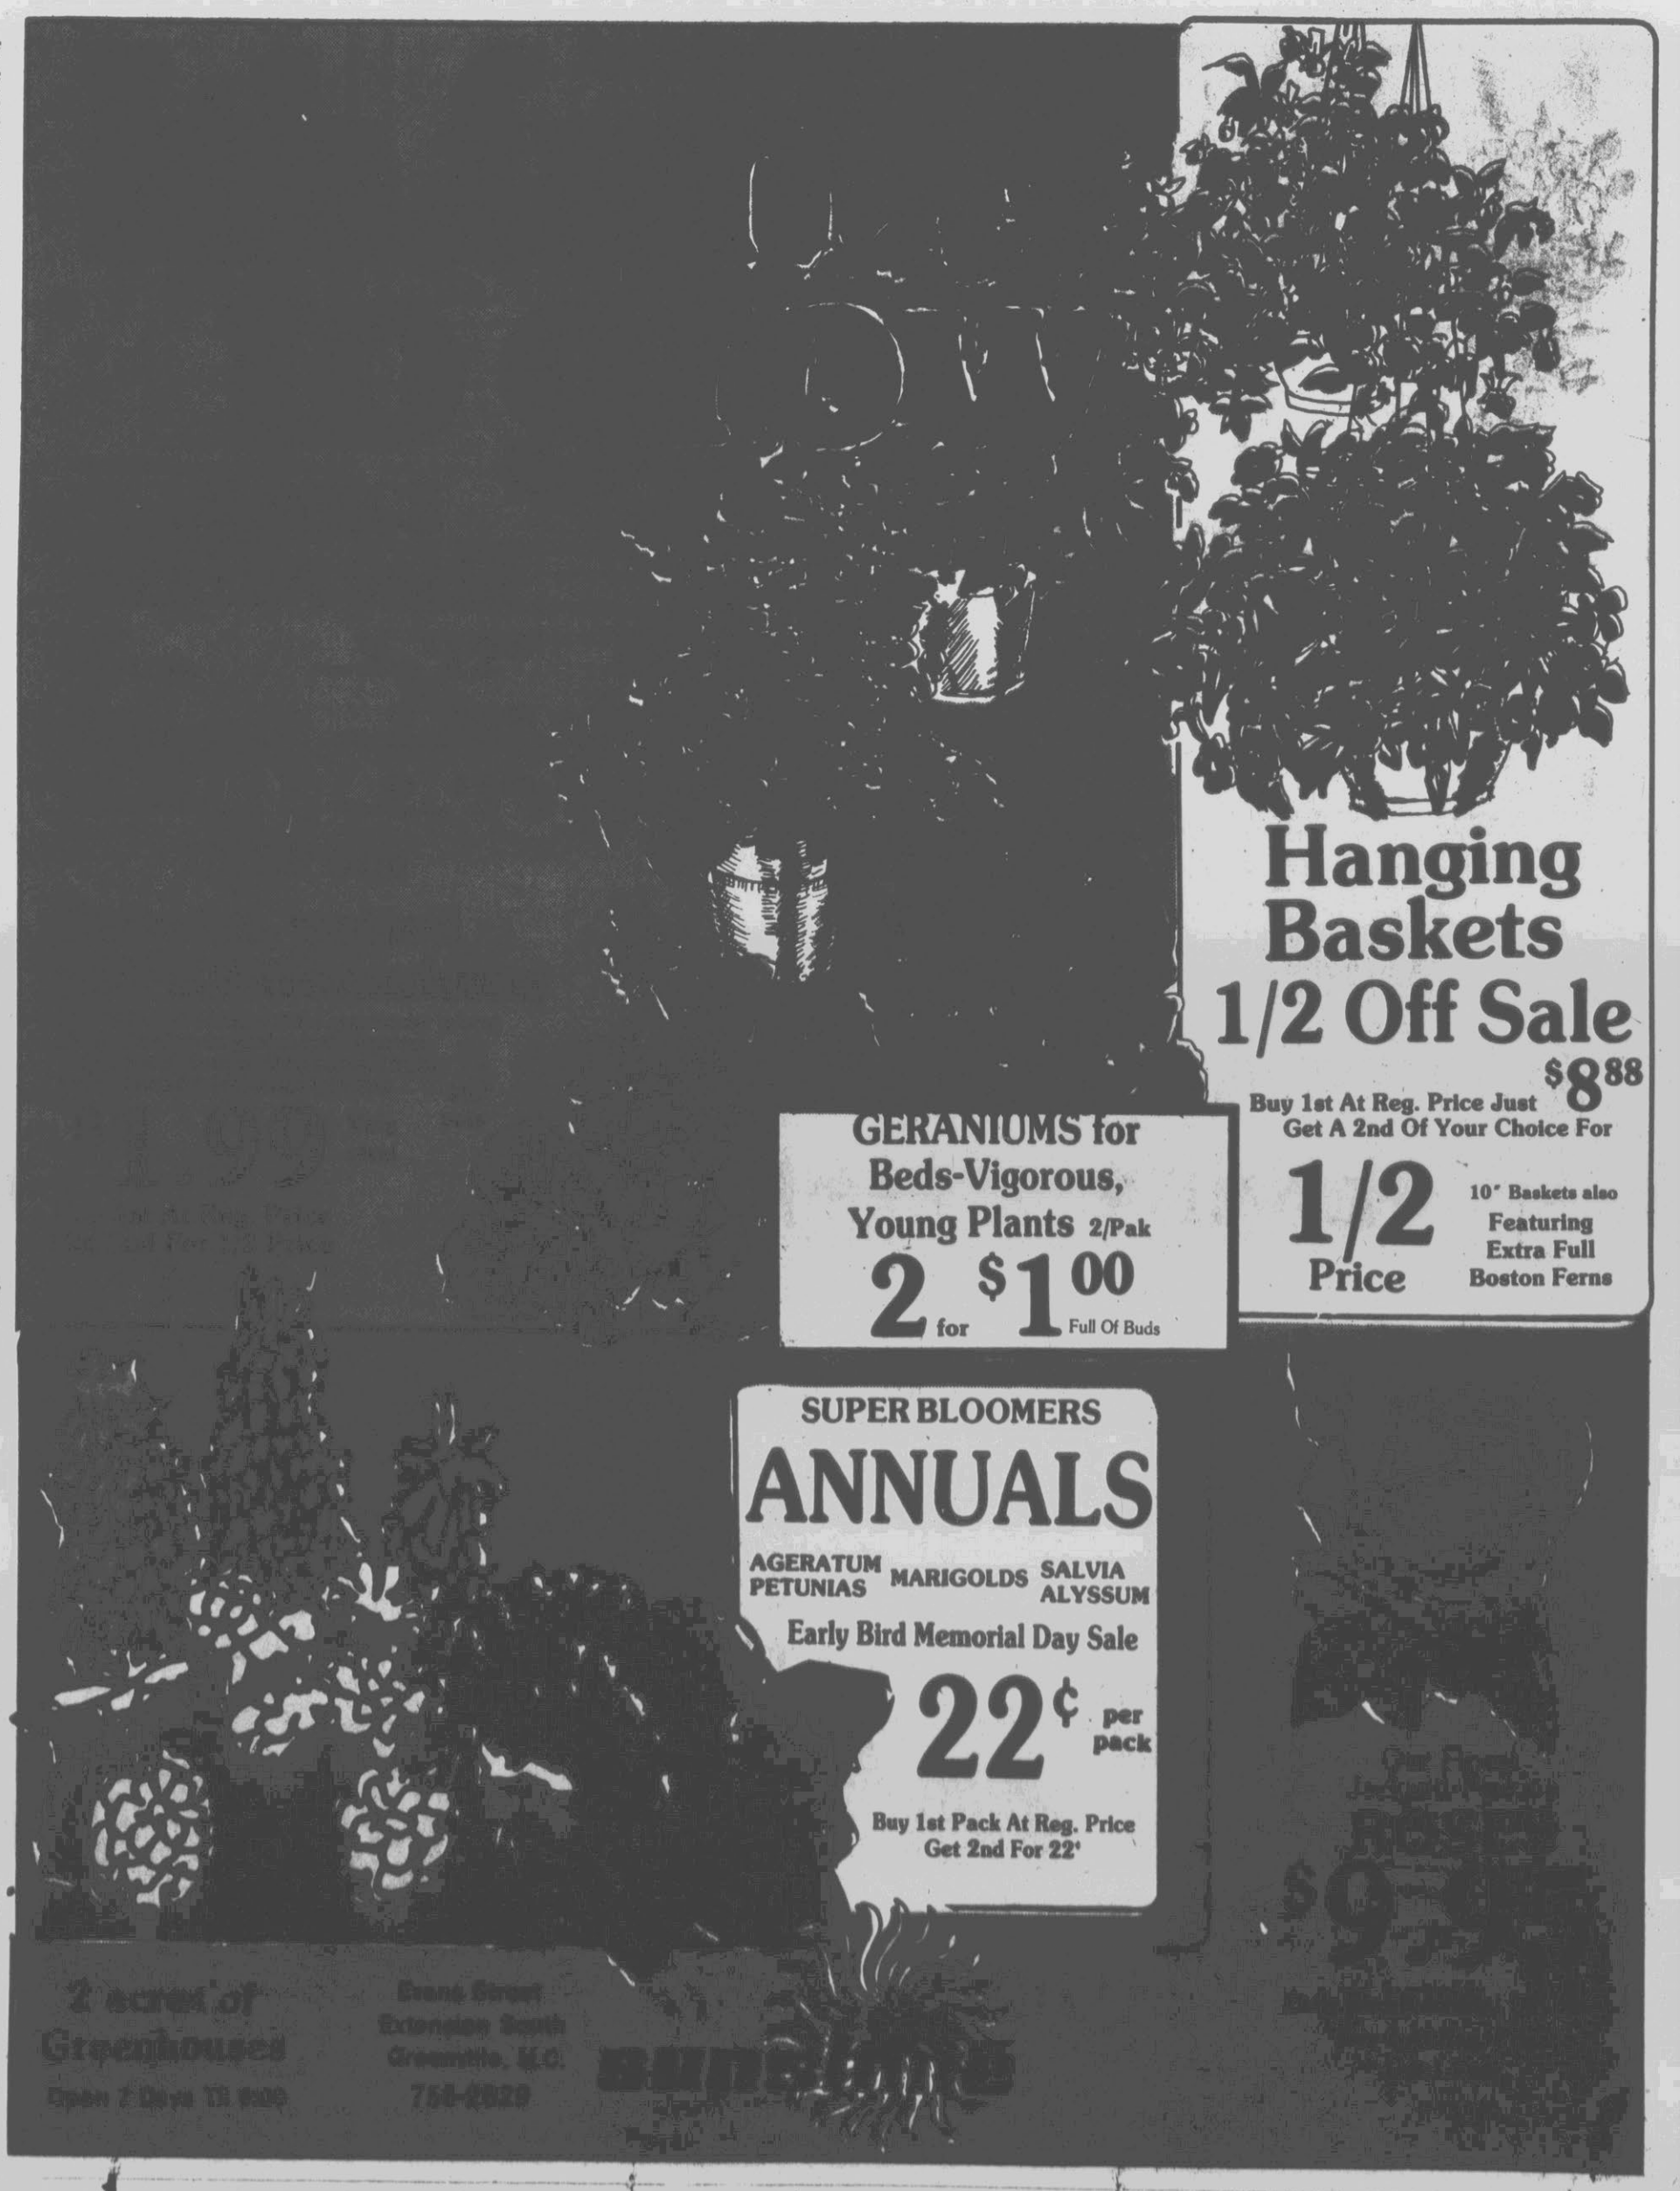

North Carolina Sen. Terry Sanford, D, voted yes. Sen. Jesse Helms, R, voted no.

1987 BUDGET WAIVER — On a tally of 51 for and 48 against, the Senate failed to achieve the three-fifths majority it needed to go beyond fiscal 1987 budget limits it previously had set for itself and the House.

Sponsors sought the waiver so the Senate could pass a $9.4 billion supplemental appropriations bill (HR 1827) for the current fiscal year. The bill remained in debate.

Senators voting yes wanted to waive the spending and deficit ceilings of the 1987 Congressional budget resolution.

Sen. Sanford voted yes and Sen. Helms voted no.
