Pitt Election Plan Faces Review

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

RALEIGH — The N.C. House Local Government II Committee today voted unanimously to send a bill changing Pitt County's method of election to a subcommittee for additonal review.

Pitt County's proposed "six-three" plan calls for six members to be elected from districts, with voters in the districts — two of which are predominately black — voting only on the representative from their district.

Three other board members, who could live anywhere in the county, would be elected by countywide vote. Minority groups in Pitt County have voiced opposition to the inclusion of any at-large seats in the method of election.

In referring the bill to a subcommittee, members of the Local Government II Committee asked that a compromise be worked out between the "six-three" plan supported by the County Commissioners and the six-district plan backed by the minority groups.

The chairwoman of the Local Government II Committee, Rep. Edith Lutz, D-Cleveland, is expected to appoint the members of the subcommittee which will meet with both sides and report its findings to the House committee Wednesday.

Before agreeing to send the bill to a subcommittee, Rep. Annie Brown Kennedy, D-Forsyth, made a motion to pass the legislation without the three at-large seats.

Rep. John J. Hunt, D-Cleveland, followed by making a motion to send the bill to the subcommittee, superseding Kennedy's motion.

Rep. Walter Jones, D-Pitt, who serves on the Local Government II Committee, applauded the decision to send the bill to a subcommittee.

"Hunt's motion was a good one because it will send the bill to a subcommittee of impartial people," Jones said.

Jones said he was confident a decision would be made on the method of election before May 28, the deadline for a bill to pass at least the first House.

Meanwhile, D.D. Garrett, president of the Pitt County Chapter of the NAACP said he hoped the move would lead to a more suitable method of election.

"Hopefully„the subcommittee will do something in our favor," Garrett said. "We would like for it to be killed in the subcommittee and sent back to Pitt County to be worked on."

Michael Crowell, a Raleigh attorney representing the County Commissioners, said the proposed "six-three" plan is the most suitable election system.

"We have discussed all the compromises in the book," Crowell said. "The position of the County Commissioners is that the 'six-three' is the best method of election for Pitt County not only for racial balance but for balanced government."

The Senate Local Government I Committee was scheduled to meet to consider a companion bill today.

Members of the Pitt County legislative delegation, which includes Rep. Ed Warren, Jones, Sen. Tom Taft, and Sen. Bob Martin, voiced unanimous support for the legislation submitted by the Councy Commissioners at today's meeting.

The delegation had asked County Commissioners to meet with representatives of the minority groups earlier this week to attempt to reach a compromise before the bill was presented to the Local Government II Committee.

But the Pitt County Board of Commissioners — for the second time in a month — unanimously approved the "six-three" method after black leaders rejected offers to change the method of electing three proposed at-large members at a Monday afternoon meeting.

Commissioners worked for more than a year on changing the method of electing members of the board to give minorities an equal opportunity to be represented before adopting the six-three plan in mid-April.

The six-three plan was approved after a compromise proposal, using mandatory single-shot voting for the three at-large members (each voter would be able to vote for only one of the at-large seats), was rejected by black leaders who voiced support for having only six districts and no at-large seats.

But in light of statements by Warren that the proposed six-three method of election has been met with opposition in the General Assembly, commissioners met again with black leaders Monday in another effort to compromise.

Navy Opens Investigation Into Stark's Response Lapse

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — A team led by a U.S. admiral began an investigation today into why the USS Stark was taken by surprise in an Iraqi missile attack that killed 37 men.

American diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the team is led by Rear Adm. Grant Sharp, who arrived Wednesday for a ceremony honoring the crewmen who died in Sunday night's mistaken air raid.

The diplomats refused to provide details of the investigation, some of which was being conducted aboard the crippled frigate anchored three miles off Manama.

U.S. Embassy and Navy officials, commenting privately, said reporters would not be allowed to interview crewmen from the Stark.

One of the key questions from the attack is why the ship's sophisticated radar systems failed to detect the separation of the missiles from the warplane that fired them.

On Wednesday, weapons experts disarmed a missile lodged in the frigate, which was devastated by the explosion of another missile.

Tales of heroism and an example of supreme forgiveness emerged Wednesday.

Capt. Glenn Brindel, the Stark's skipper, said he was warned only seconds before the missile strike, which also wounded 21 sailors. He said that gave him no time to activate the frigate's defense system, which was not on automatic.

Brindel, at a Wednesday news conference, conceded the ship's Phalanx anti-missile battery would have fired on its own if it had been on automatic. But he said the crew intentionally kept the system on manual to avoid shooting down the wrong target.

"I don't know all the facts. I feel grief and a lot of sorrow. I don't know if it's my fault ... an operator's fault ... or an act of God," he said.

In his first public comments on the attack, Brindel said a lookout telephoned the warning after seeing the trail of a surface-skimming Exocet missile streaking through the darkness.

"It was only a matter of a couple of seconds, as we started to take action, that the missile actually hit the ship," he said.

"We did not detect the separation on the radar of the missile from the aircraft, which would be one means of determining hostile intent," Brindel said.

It was the deadliest attack on shipping in the Persian Gulf since Iran and Iraq went to war in September 1980. The combatants have attacked more than 200 commercial ships in the gulf in an effort to damage each other's economies.

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Chris Baumann said an unexploded Exocet warhead was found aboard the Stark on Wednesday and disarmed by Navy specialists. He said the warhead was crated and put aboard the USS LaSalle, the flagship of the U.S. Persian Gulf task force.

Recovered wreckage made clear that one missile was a French-made Exocet, Brindel said, but the other may have been a laser-guided missile. They are much harder to detect because they do not emit radar beams.

Tariq Aziz, the Iraqi foreign Minister, said in Baghdad that the Iraqi fighter pilot thought he was attacking an Iranian target. Iraqi President Saddam Hussein earlier sent President Reagan a letter expressing "deepest regret over the painful incident."

Burlington Industries Signs Sale Agreement

GREENSBORO (AP) — Burlington Industries Inc., trying to avoid a hostile takeover, has agreed to a leveraged buyout which will make the country's largest textile manufacturer a private company, Burlington officials said today.

The company said it had signed an agreement with BI-MS Holdings Inc., a company formed for the buyout, to purchase all outstanding stock for $76 a share. The $2.4 billion cash tender offer is scheduled to begin before May 28.

The $76 buyout price is $4 more than the latest offer from an investment group led by New York financier Asher B. Edelman and Dominion Textile Inc. of Montreal, Canada.

"He has no comment until he has time to analyze the offer and make the decisions," a spokeswoman for Edelman said today.

BI-MS Holdings is jointly owned by the New York investment banking firm of Morgan Stanley Group Inc. and other financial investors, the company said. Burlington's senior management will remain in place after the buyout.

"We believe that we have fulfilled our commitment to maximize value to our shareholders," Burlington chairman Frank Greenberg said. "Our board is proud to have completed a process which has produced this result for our shareholders."

"Burlington is just beginning to reap the benefits of its billion-dollar modernization and restructuring program," said Robert Greenhill, head of investment banking for Morgan Stanley. "It is not only the biggest textile company in the coun-

Arson Suspected In Mandela Fire

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A clinic established by black activist Winnie Mandela was gutted by fire, and police said today that arson was suspected.

Mrs. Mandela, wife of jailed African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, was quoted by The Star newspaper of Johannesburg as saying the fire was set in retaliation for two car bombings Wednesday.

The government blamed the congress for the blasts, which killed three white policemen and injured 15 people outside a Johannesburg courthouse. The outlawed congress is the main guerrilla group fighting to end apartheid, South Africa's system of racial separation.

Police said the clinic "was apparently set alight by unknown persons."

The clinic is in Brandfort in the Orange Free State province, where Mrs. Mandela was banished from 1977 to 1985.

Mrs. Mandela returned to her home in Soweto, outside Johannesburg, in early 1986. Friends said she headed to Brandfort early today after learning about the fire that burned the clinic during the night.

In August 1985, both the clinic and Mrs. Mandela's house in Brandfort were damaged in a firebomb attack that she blamed on security police.

Under apartheid, South Africa's 24 million blacks have no voice in national affairs, while the 5 million whites control the government and economy and maintain separate residential districts, schools and health facilities.

Soviets Claim U.S. Warship Intrudes In U.S.S.R. Waters

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet official today accused a U.S. nuclear-powered warship of intruding into Soviet waters in Asia twice this week, and warned the actions could have "serious consequences."

Yuri Gremitskikh, a Foreign Ministry spokesman, said the guided missile cruiser Arkansas violated "the state border of the Soviet Union" in Avacha Bay off the Kamchatka peninsula in the Bering Sea last Sunday and today.

He told a news briefing that he did not know how close the vessel had come to the coast, or whether Soviet armed forces had forced the Arkansas to leave waters claimed by the Soviet Union.

Gremitskikh did not say why the Arkansas had been sailing near Kamchatka, but Avacha Bay is offshore from Petropavlovsk-Kamchatsky, one of the Soviet military's biggest bases in the Far East.

The foreign ministry official said the Soviets had delivered a "strong protest" to the United States over the incident.

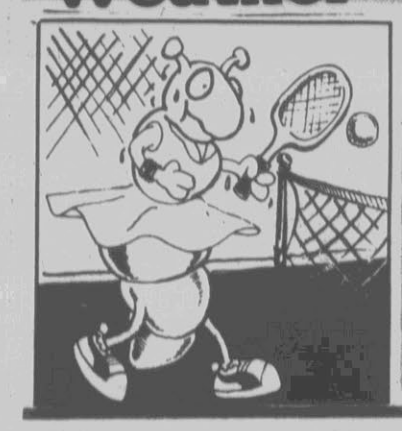

"The American side was told that such violations could have most serious consequences, all responsibility for which would be squarely on the United States," Gremitskikh said, without elaborating.

He said the Soviets had also demanded that the United States "take every essential measure" to prevent such incidents from happening in the future.

According to Jane's Fighting Ships 1986-87, the 585-foot-long Arkansas is equipped with harpoon anti-ship missiles, Tomahawk cruise missiles, anti-aircraft rockets, two 5-inch guns and torpedoes.

The American warship, commissioned in October 1980, carries a crew of 35 officers and 438 enlisted men, according to Jane's. It is powered by two pressurized water-cooled nuclear reactors.

Perry Speaks Out About Drugs

By CLAY DEANHARDT
Reflector Staff Writer

"I played 25 years in professional baseball and was never approached to buy drugs," said Gaylord Perry of Williamston, former major league pitcher, two-time Cy Young Award winner and safe bet to eventually make Baseball Hall's Hall of Fame.

Perry was speaking in front of a small crowd of about 100 people Wednesday night at Wahl-Coates Elementary School about the dangers of using drugs and alcohol.

He said he was never approached to buy drugs because everyone knew he loved the game and his family, and that he would never do anything to hurt either one.

People who put themselves in places where drugs are available are going to try drugs, Perry said. "They don't go around selling drugs at the Hilton or the Marriott or the coffee shops. So if you stay away from the places that will provide this for you, then you won't have to say 'no' as much."

Commenting on the differences between the drug pressures of his generation and those that are on the youth today, Perry said that when he was growing up, he really only had two things to worry about — smoking and beer. Today's youth, he said, has many more problems. "Now the kids have a great deal more responsibility. They have the marijuana. They have the coke. They have the crack. They have many other drugs that they have to say no to. They have many more temptations than we did."

Perry said he favors stricter punishment for people that sell drugs. "The police do a good job catching them (drug dealers), and then before long they are back out on the street again, selling to our kids."

It's not just the parents that are worried about drug use, either. In

Retired Teacher Endows Scholarship

R. Janie Barber, retired public school teacher from Charlotte, will endow one of East Carolina University's prestigious University Scholars Awards.

"In my 42 years of teaching, I saw many students who deserved an opportunity to go to college, yet had no financial hope of going on with their education. I believe so strongly in rewarding those who deserve help that I wanted to establish this scholarship," Miss Barber said.

"The Barber scholarship is a wonderful gift to the university. It demonstrates Miss Barber's love for and dedication to academic excellence," said James L. Lanier Jr., ECU vice chancellor for institutional advancement.

Born in Harnett County in 1910, Miss Barber always knew that she wanted to be a teacher, and in 1928 began to pursue that dream at East Carolina Teachers College. At that time two program tracks were offered, the normal degree requiring two years of study or an "A" teaching certificate requiring four years. Because of the Depression and because she had three younger siblings who deserved the opportunity for a college education, Miss Barber left school with the two-year degree in 1930.

After several summers of extension work at Appalachian State University and on-campus work in Greenville, Miss Barber received her bachelor's degree from East Carolina Teachers College in August 1938.

She first taught as a substitute during the summer for vacationing teachers at Samarcand Manor near Pinehurst. Her first full-time teaching position was in Montgomery County, and during her career she taught in such diverse places as Oriental im Pamlico County, Bisco in Montgomery County, and Salisbury in Rowan County. Miss Barber retired from the Charlotte-Mecklenburg public school system in July 1975, after having taught in that area for 24 years.

Under the umbrella of the University Scholars program, the R. Janie Barber scholarship will be awarded annually for the entire four years of a recipient's undergraduate education. Regional screening committees will review applications and invite area finalists for personal interviews. The finalists will be invited to submit a writing sample and will be interviewed on campus by a selection committee comprised of trustees, award donors, alumni, and other distinguished members of the ECU community.

With the start of the 1987-88 fall semester 22 University Scholars Award recipients will be enrolled at East Carolina University.

Battle Brewing Over Postage Rates for Advertising Industry

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A behind-the-scenes battle is brewing over postage rates for the multimillion dollar advertising industry, while public attention focuses on the proposed 3-cent increase in the price of a first-class stamp.

On one side is the Postal Service, which wants the third-class business, and the direct-mail industry, which wants to keep rates down. On the other are people like newspaper publishers, who complain that direct-mail advertisers have an unfair advantage because their third-class mail rates are, in effect, subsidized by more expensive first-class mail.

Postal officials, with their tax subsidy gone, are required to operate more like a normal business these days. And that means competing with newspapers, television, radio and other media for dollars spent to bring advertising messages into homes — a competition hightened by the rapid growth of direct-mail advertisers using third-class mail.

The Postal Service argues that advertising mail carries its own weight, but the publishers aren't so sure.

Most classes of mail will face an increase in the new rates, which are expected to go into effect next year.

First class is to go up about 15 percent, to 25 cents, and third-class rates are to rise 23 percent, an increase that Gene Del Polito of the Third Class Mail Association says is excessive.

For many direct-mail advertisers, that will be "tough to swallow," said Del Polito.

Questioning those rates is the American Newspaper Publishers Association, which says the third-class rate doesn't actually cover its own costs.

"We are looking for a fair and level playing field, and that's what we feel doesn't exist at this particular time," said Sandra C. Hardy, vice president of Calkins Newspapers of Levittown, Pa., and head of the ANPA committee overseeing postal matters.

These and other arguments will be considered by the independent Postal Rate Commission, an agency charged with reviewing postal pricing. That process is expected to take about 10 months.

The commission will then issue a ruling on the rates proposed last month by the Postal Service. If it approves, the new charges can go into effect immediately. If it disagrees they can compromise, start the process over or the Postal Service can impose the new rates on its own, if its board of governors acts unanimously.

When the old U.S. Post Office became the U.S. Postal Service, Congress eliminated its tax subsidy and instructed the new agency to set postage rates that would result in each class of mail paying its own way.

That sounds simple. It isn't.

The price of each stamp includes two factors: the so-called institutional costs and the attributable costs.

Institutional costs are what other businesses call overhead, the expense of having buildings, employees, trucks and so forth. Attributable costs are the direct cost of handling each type of mail.

Currently, first-class mail — letters to grandma, bills and other such individual messages — makes up nearly 52 percent of all mail, but pays more than 70 percent of overhead costs. Advertising mail, nearly 40 percent of volume, carries less than 15 percent of overhead.

That means, says Hardy, that other classes of mail are subsidizing third class.

Not so, responds Don Allen, director of the office of rates for the Postal Service.

The basic postal system has to be there to deliver any mail at all, so you can't attribute shares of the overhead among types of mail, he says.

Allen believes that the publishers' use of percentages to compare classes confuses the issue. Instead, he talks about the actual charges for each kind of mail.

As long as each class pays for its actual cost of delivery and makes some contribution to overhead, "there is no subsidy," he says.

Under the law, he says, rates for each kind of mail vary for many reasons, such as value and competition.

While Postal officials refuse to call advertising "junk mail," they recognize it has less value than first-class letters.

The rates also recognize competition, he says, with prices helping draw in business from advertisers who can choose some other method of delivery — newspapers for instance.

That same argument is cited by the publishers, who contend that lowering rates for competitive service penalizes the public, which is forced to pay more for letters it can't send by any other method.

Using statistics for 1985, Allen reported that for regular rate third-class mail, delivery cost the Postal Service 7.1 cents per item, and income was 10.1 cents — leaving 3.0 cents for overhead costs.

For first class, the delivery cost was 14.2 cents and income was 23.1 cents per item, leaving 8.9 cents for overhead. And for second-class items — newspapers and magazines — the overhead contribution was 2.6 cents, with delivery costing 11 cents and revenue totaling 13.6 cents each, he said.

As long as a type of mail covers its actual costs of delivery and makes a contribution to overhead, there isn't any subsidy, he said.

If advertising mail didn't contribute to paying overhead, rates would have to go up for other classes, Allen added.

On the other hand, says Hardy, if third class contributed a larger share — in proportion to its volume — rates for other classes could come down.

First-class rates are higher because service is better, Allen says.

It costs the agency more to handle and deliver this mail than third class, which is often sorted by the mailer and brought to the Postal Service in large volume.

DOT Warns Airlines To Cut Complaints

L.A. Times-Washington Post

NEW YORK — The Department of Transportation warned the nation's airlines Wednesday that they face stiff penalties unless there is a reduction in the number of complaints being received about them from the traveling public.

In a letter to 36 airlines, Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Hanford Dole warned that the department will "not hesitate to refer a matter to our enforcement office for action," adding that "that there are steps that carriers can take to reduce the level of passenger dissatisfaction."

She said that some of the practices that result in passenger complaints "could be actionable under DOT regulations or statutory prohibitions." However, she added that her agency would "be more than happy to work with you to resolve these problems."

Dole listed a number of passengers' most-common complaints: the boarding of flights that the airlines know will take off late, making the passengers wait in the plane on the ground; last-minute revision of flight schedules; delayed ticket refunds (which, regulations say, must be made within seven days) and overbooking. Flight delays, lost and mislaid baggage and flight cancellations are also the source of many complaints, she added.

A department spokesman said Wednesday that the agency has received an avalanche of consumer complaints in recent months.

In April alone, it got 2,103 complaints against airlines, including U.S. and foreign carriers, cargo carriers and tour operators. This compares with 1,050 complaints in April 1986, the spokesman said. Of the complaints this April, 1,903 were against U.S. carriers; that figure was 876 in April 1986.

The two airlines owned by the Texas Air Corp. holding company — Continental and Eastern — dominated the statistics, with Continental having the worst record of any airline. According to the statistics for April, there were 25.40 complaints about Continental per 100,000 passengers. Its total was 767.

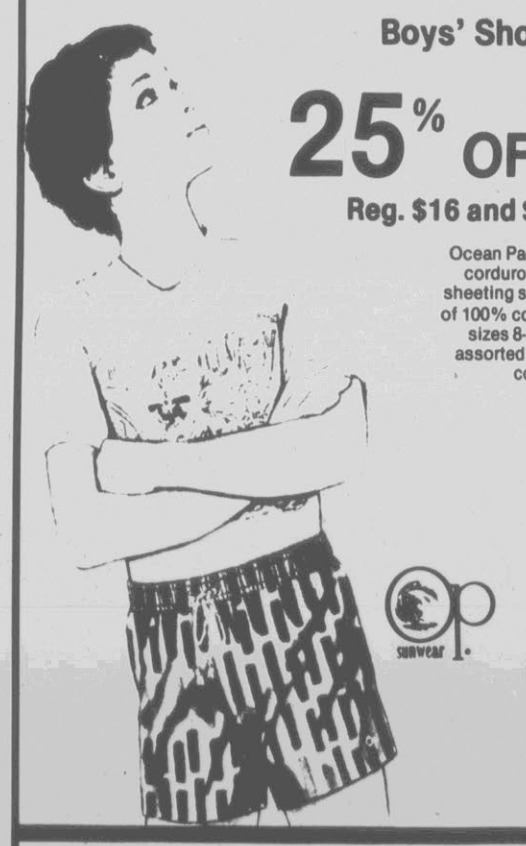

Eastern was third with a rate of 6.98 per 100,000 — or 216 complaints. Continental is being investigated by the department's enforcement arm to determine how extensive its violations are.

Second in terms of complaints per 100,000 passengers was a small airline named American TransAir, based in Indianapolis. Only eight complaints about it were received, but that translated into 7.27 complaints per 100,000 passengers.

Speaking at the Texas Air annual meeting Wednesday in Los Angeles, Frank Lorenzo, Texas Air's chairman, said that most of the company's passenger-service problems have been solved. He conceded that Continental had been slow in making ticket refunds because it inherited a four-month backlog when it acquired troubled People Express.

Plan Is Sound

Pitt County's state legislative delegation should accept the six-three method of election proposed by the Pitt County Commissioners and see that it passes the North Carolina House by the May 28 deadline.

The plan utilizes a soundly balanced combination of six commissioners elected by district and three commissioners elected at-large. A county commission selected by this method could produce a board with a beneficially broad scope.

In Pitt County the issue has been thoroughly heard. Input from citizens, minorities included, was considered when the six-three plan was formulated. The Pitt County Commission acted in the best interest of the county when it opted for a plan that provides citizens with sound representation.

Now, the legislators should support this carefully conceived plan with the same assurance that it is the most beneficial plan for effective government.

The county's state lawmakers should be reminded of the strengths of the six-three method of election.

First, six-three responsibly addresses the important issue of minority representation. The six district-elected seats — along with the three at-large seats — will clearly allow minorities an opportunity for visible voting power on the board without polarizing voters.

Second, the plan provides true at-large voting that is imperative for a balanced county commission. Without at-large voting, the board's perspective could become perilously narrow. It would be easy for commissioners to adopt an attitude of provincialism and disunity.

Clearly, neither district nor at-large voting is adequate for sound leadership. When the facts are examined, a balanced combination of both methods of election — which six-three provides — creates the type of representation that precipitates effective government.

The commissioners approved a strong method of electing Pitt County's leadership. The county's legislative delegation should accept the plan with the knowledge it works to benefit the citizens through sound election of officials.

Accepting the six-three may be a tough decision for the legislators, but it is a sound decision for the county. They should promptly put their support behind this plan.

Poorly Thought Out

The Greenville City Council is on firm ground in its resolution opposing a legislative bill which would prohibit municipalities from charging higher utilities rates outside the municipal limits.

The bill, submitted by Rep. Gerald An derson, D-Craven, would ban different out-of-city rates for electricity, water, sewer service, natural gas, public transportation and solid waste collection and disposal. The bill would also require that revenues collected for any public enterprise be used only for operating, maintaining and expanding that particular public enterprise.

The city answers this bill very well with its resolution. It says passage of the bill would "severely hamper present operations in the city of Greenville and would restrict potential for future growth and industrial recruitment."

While Greenville charges a higher rate for water service outside the city, the resolution says this is justified because of the higher cost of providing this service outside the city. Electric, natural gas and sewer services cost in-city and out-of-city users the same.

Rep. Anderson has introduced a poorly thought out bill in this case. Frequently extension of water and sewer lines into rural areas is done ahead of annexation of the areas. In a low density development area the cost of these lines can be quite major, although it might be to the municipality's interest to begin serving the area in anticipation of future annexation. It is basic to utilities service that the cost of service should be borne by the area served. If that were not so we would not see the wide variation of utilities costs throughout the nation.

This bill attempts to short circuit proper cost accounting in utilities service by proposing sweeping restrictions on locally owned utilities. The bill should quickly be shown the waste basket by the Legislature.

A New Currency For Revolution

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Iran-Contra hearings are sounding like a variation on the American Express commercial in which Karl Malden holds up a traveler's check and advises, "Don't leave home without them."

In this case it is, "Don't finance the revolution without them."

As foot soldier Robert W. Owen described it during two days of testimony before the Senate-House investigating committee, traveler's checks, maybe as many as $100,000 worth, were common currency in the secret dealings designed to help the Nicaraguan rebels.

Watergate had its cash and now the Iran-Contra affair has traveler's checks.

At last, the Iran-Contra scandal is beginning to sound like Watergate, the third-rate burglary that drove Richard M. Nixon from the presidency.

Until Owen began telling of the stash of cash and traveler's checks in Lt. Col. Oliver L. North's White House safe, the Iran-Contra story lacked examples of people acting like they knew they were doing something wrong.

Even now, President Reagan refers to the rebels as "freedom fighters," opposing a left-wing government providing a communist beachhead in Central America.

And, however misguided it now may look, officials defend the secret sale of arms to Iran as being motivated in part by a desire to free Americans held hostage in Lebanon.

By contrast, Nixon could hardly justify the burglary of Democratic Party headquarters and the subsequent attempt to cover up the involvement of administration and campaign officials.

For two weeks, the testimony about the sale of arms to Iran and the diversion of payments to the Contras focused on vague recollections of this meeting and that conversation. It often sounded like the testimony in an antitrust suit; it bordered on the boring.

The casual afternoon watcher of the televised hearings would be hard-pressed to recall the details of the testimony of retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord or former National Security Adviser Robert C. McFarlane.

McFarlane did recall North telling him it was time for a "shredding party" but it was only a brief reference that wasn't followed up.

Finally, Owen showed up and the testimony took on some of the qualities that delighted Watergate addicts.

He described himself as a "foot soldier" in the covert effort to the help the Contras and recalled joking with North about the prospect that if they were caught, they could end up in jail.

"There were a couple of occasions when we would laugh about it and joke," he testified.

The currency of Watergate was the $100 bill. Crisp packets of cash, invariably in $100 denominations, turned up everywhere during Watergate as Nixon's White House and campaign aides strove to cover up the burglary.

Other batches of bills were received in illegal campaign contributions from contractors doing business with the government.

Bundles of cash also turned up in the dealings Owen described.

There was his trip to New York, a story worthy of the Watergate hearings of 13 years ago.

"I took a cab down to the lower West Side and I was instructed to go to a Chinese market," Owen said.

The person in the market "walked behind the counter. I believe he pulled his pant leg up and ... I know he pulled out a wad of hundred dollar bills. ... He gave the whole wad to me," Owen went on.

He said the wad contained $9,500.

Owen kept insisting he was acting only out of a sense of patriotism and commitment to the cause of the anti-communist rebels.

He made this point over and over again, supported by conservative Republicans such as Rep. Henry Hyde of Illinois and Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah.

Finally Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, who lost his right arm fighting for his country in World War II, asked the witness if he considered him a patriot despite his opposition to aiding the Contras.

Owen said he considered the senator a patriot, after which Inouye said, "Somehow I felt like something less than a patriot all day long."

U.S. Posture Sags Under Deficiencies

The Iraqi attack on the U.S. frigate Stark raises questions that go far beyond those of why the attack took place and how it could have succeeded.

Pentagon spokesmen are already attempting to explain away this latest and tragic American military embarrassment by receding into the arcane world of narrow and irrelevant legalisms.

Primary among them is the fact that the United States is not a belligerent in the Persian Gulf war, as if this explains how a U.S. warship — one capable of shooting down not only the Iraqi Mirage fighter plane that attacked it but also the Exocet missile that did the actual damage — was nevertheless surprised, at the cost of 37 American lives. The suggestion is that a legal state of nonbelligerence could or should have been taken as immunity against attack.

It is further noted that the Stark was operating in international waters when it was attacked. So, too, was the Maddox in 1964, when it was attacked by North Vietnamese torpedo boats in the Gulf of Tonkin; Pueblo in 1968, when it was seized by the North Koreans; and the American merchant ship Mayaguez in 1975, when it was captured by Cambodian Communists in the Gulf of Thailand. Does being in international waters excuse the need for constant and effective vigilance?

Perhaps the most absurd claim of all is that the Persian Gulf is not a war zone. One wonders what has been going on in those waters since 1980, when an attempted Iraqi invasion of Iran prompted what has become one of the longest and bloodiest wars in the world since 1945. More to the point, during the past seven years both Iraqi and Iranian aircraft have launched almost 100 attacks on "non-belligerent" shipping in the gulf, with many of the Iraqi attacks being delivered in the form of Exocet missile strikes. If the Persian Gulf is not a war zone, then the term has no meaning.

Far more disturbing, however, than the Stark's as-yet inexplicable failure to defend itself is what the success of the attack says about the professional confidence of the U.S. military, whose $300 billion annual cost represents more than 6 percent of our gross national product.

The broad question of whether the United States is capable of competently employing military power is an admittedly unpleasant one. Yet the recurrent failure of American arms since Gen. Douglas MacArthur's spectacular landing at Inchon, Korea, in 1950 — the U.S. military's last major unqualified success — has undoubtedly raised this question in the minds of allies and adversaries alike.

In a world where force remains the final arbiter of international disputes, proven military prowess is an essential component of national defense. A reputation for the ability to use force effectively is indispensable to the United States, whose interests abroad are in fact being threatened and to whom others look for protection. Manifest incapacity to use force effectively tempts adversaries and discourages allies.

It is therefore important to recognize the assault on the Stark as but the latest page in a dismal chapter in American military history.

Item: In late 1950, following the Inchon landing, U.S. forces advancing northward toward the Yalu River are surprised by a massive Chinese attack that results in the longest retreat in American military history.

Item: In 1965 U.S. ground combat forces begin a seven-year intervention in Vietnam's war and fail to defeat an enemy vastly inferior in numbers, technology and firepower.

Item: In 1968 the U.S. Navy intelligence-gathering ship Pueblo, inexplicably unescorted even though operating close to North Korea, is seized by the North Koreans.

Item: In 1970 a U.S. commando force attempts to rescue American POWs at North Vietnam's Son Tay prison camp, only to find the camp empty.

Item: In 1975 U.S. Marines assault Koh Tang Island in search of the crew of the hijacked merchant ship Mayaguez, only to encounter strong resistance that results in heavy casualties — and to discover later that the ship's crew was being released elsewhere at the time of the assault.

Item: In 1980 an operation to rescue American diplomatic personnel held hostage in Iran disintegrates in the desert even before coming into contact with hostile forces. A Pentagon commission of inquiry concludes that both the planning and execution of the operation were faulty.

Item: In 1983 a lone terrorist behind the wheel of a truck full of explosives blows up the headquarters of the Marine "peace-keeping" force in Beirut, killing 241 Marines. This prompts another Pentagon commission of inquiry, which concludes that the success of the attack was attributable in large measure to a faulty U.S. military chain of command and to professional negligence of Marine officers on the spot.

Item: Two days after the Beirut disaster, a U.S. invasion of tiny Grenada succeeds against an inherently doomed Cuban resistance, but post-invasion assessments reveal inexcusably poor intelligence and tactics, wretched planning and an absence of cross-service communication and coordination that could have spelled disaster against a larger, better armed and more competent enemy.

To be sure, there have been exceptions to this dreary list of U.S. military defeats, miscarriages and flawed victories: Gen. Matthew Ridgway's Korean counteroffensives in 1952-53, the interventions in Lebanon in 1958 and the Dominican Republic in 1965 (though no combat was involved in the former, and very little in the latter), and the air strikes against Libya last year. Moreover, the U.S. military cannot be held fully responsible for its losses in such places as Vietnam and Lebanon, where its operational and even tactical flexibility were severely inhibited by White House and other civilian micromanagement.

Nevertheless, the U.S. military's record from the Yalu to the Stark is not a professionally admirable or enviable one. It is a record that suggests the presence within the military of profound institutional and organizational deformities, of deficiencies in planning, training and doctrine. If this situation is allowed to go uncorrected, it not only will condemn the United States to further military failure; it also will saddle this nation with the incalculable political penalties imposed by a sagging military reputation.

Strength For Today

Every person who drives an automobile is irritated and alarmed by the way in which children, intent on their play, sometimes run suddenly out into the street oblivious of the traffic. If they pay any attention to it at all, they usually look one way and fail to note the traffic coming from the opposite direction.

This habit of looking only one way is not only characteristic of youth, but can often be seen in older people well. For example, how many businessmen have been equally hasty and ill-advised in starting a business without adequate preparation.

Standing on the curb and looking carefully at dangers and problems coming from all directions might take a little more time, but it is the only way to ensure a safe passage across the street.

Senate Panel Kills Lottery Bill

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Sen. Bill Martin has decided all bets are off on a statewide lottery bill, but he hopes to cash in his legislative chips for a two-year study of the issue.

Martin, D-Guilford, told the Senate State Government Committee Wednesday to sideline his proposed public referendum on a lottery due to lack of support.

"It is opposed by the lieutenant governor and the governor and I'm not sure of the speaker's position on it," he said after the meeting. "There is generally opposition to the concept of the lottery still lingering. My feeling is that a lot of that is because you have unanswered questions and also there is a lot of emotion in the issue."

To answer those questions, Martin said he would introduce a bill to set up a Legislative Research Commission study of the merits of a lottery.

"Although the lottery issue is one that has been talked about a lot in North Carolina, there's never really been a study of the matter," he said.

Sen. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland, who cheerfully moved to kill Martin's bill, spoke against a study as well.

"We've been studying this thing for six years," he said. "I can't see any use of having any type of study."

Killing the Senate bill effectively stopped a similar House measure sponsored by Rep. Frank Rhodes, R-Forsyth because the Senate can't consider a proposal from either house once it has been killed. But Martin admitted there was little chance for either bill this session.

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said he did not lobby directly against the lottery, although he opposes it. He said stronger Senate support in previous sessions may have hinged on the leadership of former Majority Leader Ken Royall, D-Durham.

"This time you didn't have anyone as powerful as Senator Royall having it introduced as well as carrying it to their own committee," he said.

Martin had proposed that $60 million of the expected $220 million of annual income from the lottery go to local governments to pay for sewer and water projects or other infrastructure needs. Another $30 million would have been earmarked for renovating state buildings, with $20 million a year going to school construction and $25 million for highway repairs.

Legislature Appears Split On Bill To Overhaul Schools' Leadership

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The House and Senate are far apart on how best to overhaul the leadership structure of the state's public schools, despite a general consensus that the existing system is "broke," lawmakers say.

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan conceded Wednesday he faced an uphill battle to win House approval of a Senate plan under which the state superintendent of public instruction, now elected statewide, would be appointed by the State Board of Education.

"My sense is that the bill will have a very difficult time getting out" of the House Constitutional Amendments Committee, he said. "It would have a better chance on the floor."

But Jordan said it probably would have no chance if House Speaker Liston Ramsey maintained his opposition to it. He said he had spoken with Ramsey and would continue working for the bill, which needs three-fifths majority support because it would amend the Constitution.

Rep. Bob Hunter, D-McDowell, said "the majority of the House does not support" the Senate bill. He is co-sponsor of a rival plan that would retain an elected superintendent and make him chairman of the State Board of Education. That bill is scheduled for a hearing Friday before the House Education Committee.

The Constitutional Amendments Committee held its first hearing on the Senate bill Wednesday. Sen. Bob Warren, D-Johnston, told the panel an appointed superintendent had been recommended by every committee that has studied the issue since 1947.

Under the current system, with an elected superintendent and board whose members elect their chairman and consist primarily of gubernatorial appointees, there are no clear lines of authority and no single, coherent voice for schools, he said.

"I haven't talked with anyone that disagrees that governance of education in North Carolina is not broke," Warren said. "The question ... is how to fix it."

He acknowledged that many lawmakers oppose taking away the right of the state's voters to elect the superintendent, but noted that his amendment would not become effective without majority approval in a statewide referendum.

Warren said the decision of the incumbent superintendent, Craig Phillips, not to seek re-election in 1988 offered a rare chance to change the status of a constitutional office without affecting the officeholder.

"It's not something that you'll have the same opportunity to do next year or the next year," Warren said. "I think if we miss now, the opportunity to really fix educational governance will slip from our grasp for many years to come."

The committee took no vote on the bill, which is supported by Gov. Jim Martin and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan. Martin, a Republican, recently dropped his opposition to the bill after private negotiations with Jordan, a Democrat and Martin's likely opponent in next year's gubernatorial race.

Martin has voiced displeasure that the Senate bill would allow the Legislature to appoint four members of the State Board of Education and allow the governor to appoint 10 members. Martin favors the existing arrangement under which the board consists of 11 gubernatorial appointees plus the state treasurer and lieutenant governor.

Vietnam Memorial To Be Dedicated On Saturday

By The Associated Press

Rocky Williamson was eating at a fast-food restaurant in Greensboro about 18 months ago when a stranger approached him and gave him the name of a sculptor.

Because of that meeting, Williamson and two other men served as the inspiration for the Vietnam Memorial Monument for North Carolina.

That stranger told Williamson, then 17, that he looked amazingly like a wartime buddy of his, Sam Johnson of Chicago. Johnson, he explained, had died in his arms nearly 20 years ago, seconds after being shot in a Vietnam rice paddy.

The stranger handed Williamson a business card with the name of Greensboro sculptor Abbe Godwin. She was working on the official monument and was looking for models.

Williamson telephoned Ms. Godwin, and he and two other men who served as monument models, Terry Jacobs of High Point and Jim Minish of Greensboro, will be present in bronze and in person Saturday when the Vietnam Memorial is dedicated during ceremonies at 2 p.m. Saturday on the Capitol grounds in Raleigh.

The statue — paid for with $300,000 that is being raised by Vietnam veterans — will be the first new Capitol monument since 1948, when President Harry Truman presided at the unveiling of a memorial honoring North Carolina-born presidents Andrew Jackson, James K. Polk and Andrew Johnson.

The Vietnam memorial will honor the 206,000 North Carolinians who served in the Southeast Asia nation, including 1,600 who lost their lives.

"It makes me very proud to a part of this and to know I got to participate in something that is going to be there so long and will mean so much to so many," said Williamson, a former E.E. Smith High School football player who now attends East Carolina University.

"If I do nothing else in my life, I feel like I have done something this time," said the 21-year-old Jacobs, a plant manager at a furniture company. "My uncle and father were both in Vietnam and I feel I am giving something back to them for what they did for me."

"What I like best is Abbe," said Minish, who served two years in Vietnam and is now a 40-year-old telephone installer for Southern Bell. "She got to know the feeling and the depth of the war. She is as close to being a Vietnam veteran as you can be without being one."

Ms. Godwin, who lives and works in a studio near Colfax, has been consumed with the Vietnam War since she was selected in 1982 to do the memorial.

"I'm a little numb now," she says of the completed project. "I can't believe it is all together. I haven't realized yet that I pulled it off."

Once commissioned to do the monument, Ms. Godwin interviewed more than 30 men to find models. She used about eight, with Minish, Williamson and Jacobs the main three. None had ever worked with an artist before.

"It was not something I was used to, having someone watching me and me having to keep still," Jacobs says. "But Abbe became like a friend instead of an employee or sculptor."

He and the others suited up in full combat gear and held poses for long stretches. Ms. Godwin insisted on absolute realism, even with the canteens. They were filled with water, tugging on the cartridge belts.

When Jacobs saw the statue take its final form, 'It sort of scared me at first because it looks just like me. It shows how good she is," he says.

Minish, commander of the local Veterans of the Vietnam War organization, is also astonished at the realistic detail Ms. Godwin achieved. Unlike so many monuments to war, he says, "This recognizes the fighting man and the togetherness in battle. This brings out the suffering of war more than other statues."

Williamson, meanwhile, remains amazed about what that chance encounter with the stranger at the fast food restaurant has led to. The stranger, former Green Beret Gene Williamson — no relation to Rocky — is glad it happened: for Rocky's sake and for the memory of Sam Johnson.

"When I saw Rocky..." he says, "I felt like an old man looking back in the past."

Wiretap Bill OK'd

RALEIGH (AP) — A bill that would allow wiretapping and other electronic surveillance in drug trafficking investigations has enough safeguards to prevent abuse, its sponsor said before the Senate passed the measure.

"I just don't believe any possibility for abuse exists," Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, said. His bill was approved 38-7 and sent to the House.

The bill would allow local law enforcement officials who need electronic surveillance to gather evidence in such cases to make a request of the state attorney general.

If he supports the plan, the attorney general would consult with the chief justice of the state Supreme Court, who would appoint a three-judge panel to review it. The panel would have the final say.

The surveillance could last no longer than 30 days, and the person subjected to it would have to be informed within 90 days after it was completed.

"There is no excuse for not giving this authority," Rand said. "I don't believe there's any greater problem in our society today than drug trafficking."

Some senators were leery, however. Sen. Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, who voted against the bill, said in an interview he wanted more time to consider its implications. "There's always the potential for abuse," he said.

Senate Committee Kills Veto Proposal

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina remains the only state without gubernatorial veto, but another defeat of a plan to let citizens vote on the issue hasn't dampened the enthusiasm of veto supporters.

"I don't think it is a dead horse," J. Ward Purrington, chief lobbyist for Gov. Jim Martin, said after the Senate Committee on the Constitution killed the proposed constitutional amendment 4-2 Wednesday. "The polls indicate that there's a lot of support for it in the state."

Senate Minority Leader Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, said the veto likely would be an issue in the 1988 campaign. Joyce Glass, president of the North Carolina Federation of Republican Women, said her group had collected 25,000 signatures on petitions seeking a veto referendum and that the effort would continue.

Martin's call for the veto fell victim once more to a centuries-old mistrust of a powerful chief executive.

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, an outspoken veto foe, said North Carolina's tradition of limiting the governor's power stemmed from pre-Revolutionary War days when the colony was governed by "the worst of all possible royal governors."

Cobb said the veto was an essential tool in balancing authority between the executive and legislative branches on the federal and state levels.

Marine Veterans Plan Memorial On Tarawa

ATLANTA (AP) — Even the youngest men who fought Japanese troops on the tiny Pacific island of Tarawa are now in their sixties. Many who were there have seen 43 anniversaries of one of the shortest battles of World War II.

But this year, on the 44th anniversary of the Battle of Tarawa, some of them will see several years of work come to fruition when they dedicate a memorial to the Marines who died in that short, furious exchange.

A Nov. 20 memorial service has been planned at Camp Lejeune, N.C., to dedicate a new nine-foot monument, made of Georgia blue granite, to veterans of the 2nd Marine Division.

After the ceremony, the monument will be placed in a peace park on Tarawa, now the nation of Kiribati, said Roy Thaxton, chairman of the memorials committee for the division.

The battle at Tarawa lasted 76 hours during November 1943. More than 1,000 Marines were killed and nearly 3,000 wounded.

Thaxton said the gathering to dedicate the memorial will be a special one, since it may be the last for several of the veterans.

"Practically all of the men who landed on Tarawa are in their late 60s, 70s and 80s," Thaxton said in a phone interview. "They're going away kind of fast now. This may be the last chance for us to get together to do this kind of thing."

Bakkers Less Visible In California Resort City

By JAY MATHEWS
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. — The hard hot winds sweep down the eastern slope of the San Jacinto Mountains into a nearly empty town these days. The playful rich have deserted their estates here for cooler climates. Hotels are so deserted a lonely guest must run his faucets for 10 minutes before the long idle pumps can pull hot water from some distant receptacle.

Everyone has gone except Jim and Tammy Faye Bakker, the beleaguered evangelists, and even they — or, at least, he — are very hard to find.

On East Vereda Sur, a one-block swatch of blacktop in the northern end of the resort, most of the houses are empty. A maid in a white sweat suit, cleaning up after her employer's heavy winter socializing, declines comment on the reclusive couple still living across the street at No. 688.

At other homes the swimming pools sit unattended, the wind creating small blue wavelets. Workers bang away at remodeling projects at two houses. The heavy oleander bushes, a favorite screening device for privacy-loving residents, put forth huge white blossoms only weekend visitors might see. The white Lincoln Continental that usually takes Tammy Faye around town is parked inside.

Several rings of the bell at the decorative Spanish arched door wall that guards the outer walkways and gardens of the Bakker property produce no response. The door has no knob or other opening device. A messenger arrived at midday in a Cadillac and rang another signaling device at the driveway entrance, the only other break in the oleander-screened wall. When no one appeared, he retreated to his car with a nervous look.

"They have retreated into a rather insular existence," says John Conte, owner of KMIR-TV, the local NBC outlet that still broadcasts the "PTL Club" program the Bakkers hosted until scandal brought them down.

Conte and his wife Sirpuhe became friends with the Bakkers when the televangelist and his wife bought a vacation home here in 1984 and explored setting up a western center for their Fort Mill, S.C.-based PTL (for Praise the Lord or People That Love) ministry. They saw each other often over the years, but when Tammy Faye's addiction to prescription drugs and revelations of Jim's sexual encounter with a church secretary forced them into exile here in March, the Bakkers cut off all contact with the Contes. "As Will Rogers used to say," says Conte, a Presbyterian who never shared the Bakker's evangelical faith, "all I know about them now is what I read in the newspapers."

A small cadre of Bakker-watchers here, mostly journalists and local gossips, report seeing him only at two brief press conferences and a visit to a hair stylist. He is thought to be frequently out of town, conferring with advisers on his troubles, which now include a potential federal investigation of alleged financial irregularities at PTL.

Tammy Faye sightings, however, are frequent, and suggest that she has completed her rehabilitation program at the nearby Betty Ford Center for drug dependency and has returned to a favorite pastime, shopping. Veterans say she regularly appears in the town's stores and restaurants and seems friendly, alert and unembarrassed by questions about her family's troubles.

Desert Sun editor James M. Lycett, who has lived here since 1980, wonders if the Bakkers, like nearly every Palm Springs resident with at least $1 million, will eventually leave the place for the summer. "I guess it will depend on if they are in hiding and all the other places they have turn out to be places they can't go," he says.

Greenville's first public library was established in 1904.

Committee Backs Ban On Tobacco

RALEIGH (AP) — A bill to snuff out the use of all tobacco products by public school students easily passed the Senate Children and Youth Committee after the penalty for violations was dropped from $100 to $25.

"I think it's fine for somebody 18 years old to smoke or drink if they choose to do so because we are in the home of the free and the brave," said Sen. R.P. "Bo" Thomas, D-Henderson, who sponsored the bill. "But somebody 6 or 8 or 9 years old is not really far enough along to make that kind of decision."

Thomas said his bill is intended to send a message to the young that chewing tobacco and snuff pose significant health threats. He said the Senate is likely to approve the bill because even the tobacco industry has few objections.

"This is just something to effectively emphasize that this stuff will get you," he said.

Thomas said his bill would also make it clear that it is illegal to sell any tobacco products to those under 18. The law now prohibits cigarette sales to those under 17.

Thomas said he was concerned about new varieties of snuff "that these cowboys and race drivers and baseball players use and promote."

Educators have asked that local school boards remain responsible for tobacco policies, but Thomas said only 33 or 34 school systems have used that responsibility to date.

"And the other 90 or so should be ashamed they haven't adopted this policy," he added.

Sen. Charles Hipps, D-Haywood, sparked sharp objections when he proposed extending the ban to everyone in public schools.

"Wouldn't it also be a good idea to prohibit the adults that are around those students from using these products while in view of the students?" he asked.

Sen. Jim Johnson, D-Cabarrus, said he supported the bill, but would not back an effort to tell adults what to do.

Hipps agreed not to offer an amendment to include adults but chided committee members, reminding them that the state motto is, "To be, rather than to seem."

Checks Increase

ATLANTA (AP) — The U.S. Department of Labor said Southern workers took home paychecks for the year ending in March 1987 that were an average of 2.6 percent higher than the same period of 1986.

The department's Bureau of Labor Statistics reported highest yearly wage and salary increases in the Northeast region of the United States, with an increase of 4.8 percent.

Wages increased by 2.6 percent in the Midwest region and 2.4 percent in the West. Wages were up across the nation by 3.2 percent for the year.

Above-average wage increases were reported for service industry employees and clerical and administrative support workers, the department said. Employees in finance, insurance and real estate had decreases for the quarter.

The employment cost index for the South increased 0.5 percent for the first three months of 1987, the Labor Department also said. Compensation costs, which include wages, salaries and employer costs for employee benefits, were up by the same amount for the quarter and year.

The Southern region includes Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia.

CHIEF EXECUTIVE — American Airlines' chief executive, Robert Crandall, briefs news reporters after Wednesday's stockholders meeting in the Research Triangle Park. The meeting was picketed by members of a union representing airline employees. (AP Laserphoto)

American Airlines Rejects Comparable Worth Study

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — The chairman of the board of American Airlines said his company opposes a comparable worth study because it implied that a different opinion was of more credence than current standards.

The company's opposition, expressed by chairman Robert Crandall, might have been the basis for the decision by stockholders Wednesday to reject a union-backed resolution for a comparable worth study that would compare the wages female- and minority-dominated jobs with similar work done predominantly by males and whites.

Crandall said he opposed the notion because it seemed to try "to set aside the judgment of the marketplace in favor of some other judgment." He said the company could not remain competitive if it did not let the marketplace determine wages.

"I would remind you that market factors for many years said the work of black people was worth nothing," one employee said.

Only 7.7 percent of the shares voted for the study.

The meeting of stockholders was held at the Sheraton Imperial Center in Research Triangle Park, only a few miles away from American's new $120 million hub at Raleigh-Durham Airport, which is scheduled to open in three weeks.

While members of American's flight attendants' union questioned Crandall inside the meeting, a group of about 35 flight attendants, most of them in uniform, picketed outside the hotel.

About 20 uninformed employees were among the 100 stockholders at the meeting. They questioned the selection of the Research Triangle Park for the annual meeting and asked if the company was trying to avoid the large number of union workers at its Dallas-Fort Worth headquarters.

The employees also questioned "the honesty and credibility of American," in saying that 1,000 new jobs would be created by the hub. They said many of those jobs would go to company employees seeking transfers to the new hub.

Crandall said he did not know how many jobs would go to North Carolina residents because it would depend on the number of current employees who decide to transfer. He also said the Triangle was one of a half-dozen sites under consideration for a reservations center.

Negotiations to revise the contract with flight attendants began in August 1986 and went under federal mediation earlier this spring. After a 30-day cooling off period that ended April 24, American implemented the provisions of its last contract proposal.

The company has operated a "two-tier" payroll plan that paid older American employees more than workers who joined the company after 1983 when cost-cutting forced by deregulation was imposed.

American's new pay plan, to take effect July 1, would increase the starting pay of flight attendants from $972 to $1,250 a month. But the union wants the starting pay returned to $1,340 a month, the amount paid in 1983.

Pickets Wednesday chanted "Two-tier must go" as they marched in front of the hotel.

"I take no special pride in paying people less than they want to make," Crandall said. "It is the level of compensation established by the marketplace which you would like to have higher and I would not object to have higher."

Crandall said American had chosen after deregulation not to take the approach used by Continental and other airlines, which reorganized under federal bankruptcy laws and cut its employees wages.

He said American decided it would be better for long-time employees to leave their pay and benefits alone and give them greater job security in exchange for being allowed to hire new employees at lower wages.

"We'd like to have a ratified agreement," Crandall told union president Pat Gibbs, who was at the meeting. "We hear senior attendants saying things are pretty good and they want their wages, benefits and lifestyle left alone, while at the same time we hear junior attendants saying they want more money."

During a stockholder question session, Crandall was asked if American would consider banning smoking on its flights.

"We have looked seriously on other occasions to see if we could move ahead of other airlines in prohibiting smoking on some of our flights," Crandall said. "But a survey of our customers showed that non-smoking passengers are not willing to delay very long to get on a non-smoking plane. Smokers, on the other hand, will resist vigorously getting on a non-smoking plane."

Crandall also reminded stockholders they were meeting in the heart of tobacco country.

"Such a smoking ban in this new hub in this part of the world would be seen as American moving adversely on people's ability to make a living," Crandall said.

Workers Reinstated, Then Fired

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Eleven employees of Mayland Technical College who say they lost their jobs because of partisan politics and personal reasons were reinstated to their jobs, then dismissed again after action by the school's trustees.

The Avery County college's trustees voted to rescind the earlier dismissals only to fix a procedural problem, trustee attorney Garrett Bailey said Tuesday night.

Through letters Tuesday and Wednesday, they learned they again were dismissed.

Though the trustees' chairman and the college president have declined to comment on the latest moves, the trustees have said their dismissals stemmed from budget cuts and reorganization.

Many staff members and students said the dismissals were an attempt to rid the school of Democrats.

All but one of the 11 are Democrats. The lone Republican is Barbara McKinney, an English professor and director of the school's general education division who spoke against selecting Mayland President Virginia Foxx.

Ms. Foxx recommended the nonrenewals and said earlier this month that politics had nothing to do with her decision. Ms. Foxx, who until December worked in Republican Gov. Jim Martin's administration, declined comment Wednesday. Trustee Chairman Richard Muri also declined comment, according to The Charlotte Observer.

Three of the 11 say morale at the school, which serves Avery, Mitchell and Yancey counties, is at an all-time low and that they feel crushed and betrayed by the board and the newly installed president.

"There is a great deal of fear and wonder among the remaining people as to who will be next" to be dismissed, according to Mayland's admissions and registration director Pat Phillips, who lost her job.

Charlotte lawyer John Gresham represents the group and said he will pursue their claims of wrongful discharge.

The 11 represent about one-fourth of the college's full-time professional staff.

Missionary Killed In Car-Bike Wreck

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A 21-year-old Mormon missionary was killed and another missionary was injured Tuesday when their bicycles were struck by a pickup truck, and a Fayetteville man was charged Wednesday with hit and run, the Highway Patrol said.

The patrol identified the man killed as Don A. Duplessis of Gonzalez, La. The injured man, Todd Ivan Andrus, 20, an Idaho native, was treated at Cape Fear Valley Medical Center and released.

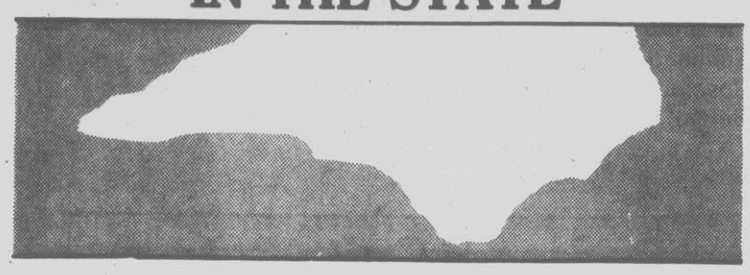

Trooper J.A. Stiles said John Albert Puczylowski, 31, was charged with hit and run driving.

The two missionaries, who carried the title of elders, had been assigned to the Raleigh Mission of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for a two-year period, working in cities and communities in eastern North Carolina.

A church official said the men had been in the Fayetteville area for about month.

Sale of electricity today generally is based on kilowatt hours. A kilowatt hour is the amount of electrical energy needed to operate a 100-watt lightbulb for 10 hours.

IN THE STATE

CP&L Protest

RALEIGH (AP) — The United Mine Workers of America Wednesday picketed outside the Carolina Power & Light Co.'s annual stockholders' meeting, saying that CP&L sold its interest in two Kentucky coal mines in violation of a contract agreement and cost workers their job.

Sherwood Smith, CP&L president and chief executive officer, responded to the charges from two United Mine Workers representatives, saying CP&L never fully owned or operated the two mines, the Leslie and McInnis coal mines in eastern Kentucky.

Smith said CP&L bought part interest in the two mines to ensure a source of low-sulfur coal but sold the mines in 1984 when regulatory agencies would not allow CP&L to recover its assets from the mining operation.

Murder-Suicide

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A Statesville man shot and killed his estranged wife, then killed himself Wednesday, authorities said.

Dairel Dugger, 49, of Rt. 14, shot his wife, Josephine, at an automobile dealership were she worked, said Sgt. Jack Zimmerman of the Statesville Police Department. Police said Dugger then shot himself.

Mrs. Dugger, who had been working at the dealership for two years, separated from her husband two months ago, friends said.

Sentenced

RALEIGH (AP) — A Willow Springs man who pleaded guilty to trying to hire an undercover policeman to kill his wife was sentenced Wednesday to six months in prison while his wife watched from the spectator's section of a Wake Superior courtroom.

Inlet Reopens

HATTERAS, N.C. (AP) — The U.S. Coast Guard has reopened Oregon Inlet, clearing the way for commercial fishing trawlers to resume using the gateway to the Atlantic as spring fishing season begins.

Dredges cleared a navigable channel as much as 18 feet deep and more than 100 feet wide.

The inlet was closed to all navigation on March 11 because of severe shoaling problems triggered by a series of bad northeaster storms. It remained closed for 28 days during the height of the winter season.

When it was reopened in early April another storm hit, closing the inlet again until after Easter.

Election Suit

ELIZABETH CITY, N.C. (AP) — One of North Carolina's longest and most expensive voting rights suits reached a final settlement Wednesday, when the Elizabeth City City Council agreed to pay $80,000 in legal fees to two lawyers representing the NAACP.

After a 45-minute closed session, the council voted 8-0 to make the payments to local attorneys Ronald Penny and Harold Barnes, concluding a four-year legal battle that began nearly four years ago to change over changing electoral procedures in the city.

The decision concludes a dispute that began in August 1983, when the two lawyers filed suit in U.S. District Court, charging that the city's at-large voting procedure discriminated against minority candidates. At that time, no black had ever served on the City Council, even though blacks constituted 47 percent of the electorate.

Investigation

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — A Randolph County Grand Jury report presented in Superior Court has cited unsanitary conditions and overcrowding at the county jail.

The report, which followed an inspection of the facility by the grand jury, says the jail should be replaced or a new one built.

Randolph County Sheriff Robert Mason said county and sheriff's officials are doing all they can to help alleviate problems including studying the construction of another facility. Mason insists the county is doing all it can to keep the jail clean and safe while keeping within state and federal guidelines.

IVF Pregnancy

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — Officials with the North Carolina Reproductive Center at Moses Cone Memorial Hospital in Greensboro announced Wednesday the center's first "viable pregnancy" has been achieved.

Dr. Howard Mezer, spokesman for center, said the pregnancy had been accomplished through the center's in vitro fertilization program.

Mezer said the expectant mother is a 28-year-old Greensboro resident who had not been able to conceive because of blocked Fallopian tubes. The names of the parents were withheld at their request.

In vitro fertilization is the process whereby mature human eggs are removed from a woman's ovaries, placed in a Petri dish and then fertilized with the husband's sperm. Once an egg is fertilized, the embryo is implanted in the woman's uterus to deelop.

Carter Visit

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter will be in Charlotte July 27-31 to help the city build more housing for its low-income residents.

Carter's visit will be an effort to help the Habitat for Humanity organization, which is part of an international organization that builds low-cost housing for people who can't afford housing.

Telescope

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is planning a fund drive for an expensive new telescope that would be located on a mountain in Chile.

The proposed reflecting telescope would be among the world's most powerful and would cost between $10 million and $12 million. Its mirror, about 150 inches across, would collect enough light for scientists to see bright celestial objects as far as 15 billion light-years away.

Firm Announces a Prescription-Free Solution For Thinning Hair

Minneapolis — Robert Taylor, Chief Executive Officer of MINNETONKA CORP., said the personal care product firm has agreed to distribute and market Foltene® Treatment for Thinning Hair in the U.S. This product makes hair look fuller, thicker and healthier.

Foltene treatment was developed by an Italian pharmaceutical company when research scientists noticed that special compounds they were testing had a beneficial side effect. When used in topical hair treatments, condition of thinning hair significantly improved. The researchers then mixed a number of these biological extracts together to create a unique Tricosaccaride® compound which is the basis for Foltene treatment.

Foltene treatment has been marketed in European countries for more than five years and has been acclaimed for its unique process of enhancing the look of thinning hair.

Taylor said the product will be available, without prescription, in department stores throughout the United States.

Motorists Face Maze Of Confusing Speed Limits

By KATHY EYRE
Associated Press Writer

Motorists' excuses about not understanding the varying 55-mph and 65 mph speed limits on America's interstates won't save most of them from speeding tickets this Memorial Day weekend, say officials around the nation.

"There will not be speed traps, but we're going to be visible and let motorists know we mean what we say," Tennessee Safety Commissioner Robert Lawson said, noting switches from 55 mph to 65 mph will be clearly marked.

Tennessee is one of 25 states that have increased the limit to 65 mph on rural portions of their interstates.

On April 2, Congress gave states the option of boosting their speed limits on all interstate stretches except those running through cities with populations over 50,000. Fourteen states still are considering the option.

Although states have been converting to 65 mph for almost two months, widespread confusion about the change is expected this weekend, the traditional start of the summer vacation season, said Mike Right, national spokesman for the American Automobile Association.

"As people begin to make their outings outside of the urban areas and cross state lines, they're going to encounter a real hopscotch of various speed laws," Right said by telephone from his St. Louis office. "We expect to hear some grumbling."

The grumbling already has begun in some states like Washington, which has had a 65 mph limit since April 28 on 512 of its 719 interstate miles.

Several motorists caught speeding on parts of the Interstate 5 corridor through urban areas have told officers they believed the 65 mph limit applied to all interstates, said Washington State Patrol spokesman Bill Burkett.

"There's a learning curve included in any new change in the law," he said. "Some people are unbelievably confused. Some think, 'If I don't see skyscrapers, I'm not in an urban area.'"

Minnesota Gov. Rudy Perpich has said confusion about varying speed limits is a major reason he refuses to adopt the 65 mph option in his state.

"I think it's going to be a mess," Perpich said.

The confusion has gone beyond the interstates. For example, Nevada reports more speeding on the state's U.S. highways since it increased the speed limit to 65 mph for rural interstates last month.

"People didn't understand it applied only to the interstates and not to other roads," said Nevada Transportation Director Garth Dull.

Dull noted that Nevada has hundreds of miles of straight-as-a-shot highway through empty desert, and was the last state to post any speed limit on outlying highways.

Dull and officials in several other states said problems should fade as drivers become educated about the new speed limits.

Several officials said they backed the 65 mph limit partly because they felt it would leave a better impression on tourists and other visitors who like the higher limit in other states.

"We would prefer to be in line with neighboring states," said Capt. Larry Overby, director of research and planning for the North Carolina Highway Patrol. "It creates problems for the motoring public when they come out of 65 and come into a reduced speed zone. And it would eliminate the idea in the minds of a lot of the motoring people that you have speed traps."

North Carolina lawmakers passed a bill this month to let state Department of Transportation officials raise the speed limit on rural sections. Department officials say new limits will be posted in 60 to 90 days on sections deemed safe at the higher speed.

Other states, particularly in the East, seem determined to retain the 55 mph speed limit on all interstates.

New York Gov. Mario Cuomo has said he would veto legislation increasing the speed limit, even though the state has 920 miles of interstate eligible for the 65 mph designation.

Cuomo says the lower limit and a mandatory seat belt law passed during his first term in office have dramatically reduced highway fatalities.

Two Crewmen Killed In Crash

STUMPY POINT, N.C. (AP) — Two Navy crewmen were killed Wednesday night when their A-6E Intruder fighter jet crashed at the Navy's bombing range here.

The victims were identified as the pilot, Lt. Bruce E. Pommer, 25, of Merritt Island, Fla., and the bombadier-navigator, Lt. James D. Hicks, 25, of Staten Island, N.Y., said Ensign Scott Miller, a Navy spokesman in Norfolk, Va.

"The crash crews and the Navy investigation teams are now at the scene. The area has been sealed off," Miller said.

He did not know if the bodies of the victims had been recovered.

Harry Mann, bombing range supervisor, said rescue crews had reached the scene early this morning.

"We're still working on it," Mann said in a telephone interview early this morning. "We've been looking all night."

Cmdr. Jolene Keefer, a Navy spokeswoman in Norfolk, said rescue crews started toward the crash site after the Navy jet went down at about 8:15 p.m.

Mann said the jet went down in a heavily wooded area, and was spotted by a helicopter about two hours after it crashed.

The search for the victims was called off at 1 a.m. and resumed at daylight.

Ms. Keefer said it was not unusual for the bomber to be flying night runs.

"Sometimes we do it at night," she said. "This is the main bombing range for this part of the coast."

The jet was part of Attack Squadron 85, based at Oceana Naval Air Station in Virginia Beach, Va., she said.

Where It's 65

By The Associated Press

Motorists can now drive 65 mph on sections of interstates in 24 states, according to a 50-state survey by The Associated Press.

Three states have passed legislation opting for 65 mph but their new speed limit has yet to become effective, 15 states are still considering the 65 mph option, six appear to have rejected the proposal and two states don't have the option.

Here is a list of the status of the 65 mph option in states in the Southeast, plus the number of "rural" interstate miles eligible for the higher speed limit and the total number of interstate miles within each state:

—FLORIDA: 65 mph limit in effect since April for 829 of 1,338 miles.

—GEORGIA: The Legislature doesn't meet until January, which would be the earliest a 65 mph proposal could be considered; 900 of 1,225 miles could qualify.

—NORTH CAROLINA: Lawmakers enacted legislation this month to raise the speed limit to 65 mph on only about half of the 650 eligible miles out of 850 miles of interstate. The new speed limit won't be posted for 60 to 90 days because state officials are still evaluating which stretches of highway can handle it.

—SOUTH CAROLINA: The House has passed a bill raising the speed limit to 65 mph but the legislation is bogged down in the Senate. The earliest it could come up in Senate is May 26. There are approximately 800 miles of interstate in South Carolina, but state officials won't estimate how many miles they'll recommend be raised to 65 mph.

—TENNESSEE: 65 mph signed into law May 8 and state crews plan to finish posting new speed limit signs before Memorial Day on about 800 of 1,069 miles.

—VIRGINIA: The Legislature probably won't consider the issue until its next regular session in January; 832 of 1,044 miles are eligible.

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes during the week ending May 15.

House

THE NATIONAL DEBT — The House voted 296 for and 124 against to extend the current national debt ceiling of $2.32 trillion until July 17, so that the government can issue securities, pay its bills and stay out of default.

The measure (HR 2360) was sent to the Senate.

Supporter Bob Michel, R-Ill., said the borrowing authority is needed "to keep our government financially afloat."

Opponent Arthur Ravenal, R-S.C., a freshman, said "I just got here. I did not make this mess, and I am not going to vote for any extensions of the debt ceiling."

Members voting yes wanted to extend the debt ceiling.

North Carolina members voting yes were Valentine, Lancaster, Price, Coble, Rose, Hefner, McMillan and Clarke.

Voting no were Neal and Ballenger.

Jones did not vote.

STAR WARS FUNDING — The House voted 219 for and 199 against to lower missile defense research and development funding in fiscal 1988 to $3.1 billion, $420 million under this year's level and far below the $5.7 billion requested by the Reagan administration for its "Star Wars" Strategic Defense Initiative.

The allocation is part of the $289 billion 1988 defense authorization bill (HR 1748) that remains under debate pending votes on dozens of amendments. Final spending authority will be set later in a House-Senate conference.

Supporters of the cut said it sets the stage for a compromise with the Senate that will result in 1988 Star Wars spending at about this year's level.

Opponent John Kasich, R-Ohio said the move "mortally wounds the whole SDI program."

Voting no were Lancaster, Coble, McMillan and Ballenger.

Jones did not vote.

THE MX MISSILE — By a vote of 184 for and 239 against, the House failed to block the basing of MX nuclear missiles on special railroad trains. The vote rejected an amendment to the defense authorization bill (above) to delete the $250 million allocated for the rail project in fiscal 1988.

The trains are to be kept on military bases except during crises, when they would be dispersed to be made less vulnerable to attack. The MX, the most powerful U.S. weapon, now is deployed in hard silos.

Dennis Hertel, D-Mich., a supporter of blocking the mobile MX said rail basing is the "back door to having additional MX missiles."

Members voting yes opposed putting the MX on rails.

Representatives from North Carolina voting yes were Price, Rose, and Clarke.

Those voting no were Valentine, Lancaster, Neal, Coble, Hefner, McMillan, and Ballenger.

Jones did not vote.

Senate

NEW DEBT LIMIT — By a vote of 58 for and 36 against, the Senate gave final Congressional approval of legislation (HR 2360) raising the Treasury's borrowing authority to $2.32 trillion through July 17. This followed House passage of the bill (above).

Not only did this head off major problems when the old debt ceiling expired May 15, it gave President Reagan and leaders of both parties on Capitol Hill time to negotiate improvements in the federal budget process and a toughening of the imperiled Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction law.

Senators voting yes favored higher federal borrowing authority.

FSLIC BAIL-OUT— By a vote of 37 for and 62 against, the Senate rejected an amendment to streamline a pending bail-out of the insolvent Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., which insures $900 billion in savings and loans deposits.

The amendment sought to limit the bill (HR 27) to a $7.5 billion, two-year recapitalization of FSLIC. Its rejection left the rescue coupled with legislation to close the banking law loophole that permits so-called "non-bank banks" to flourish, and to deny expanded authority for traditional banks.

The bill was sent to conference with House legislation dealing only FSLIC.

Amendment sponsor Jake Garn, R-Utah, said "every day we delay, we tread closer to a disastrous situation" regarding FSLIC and those it protects.

Opponent William Proxmire, D-Wis., said Congress should not squander "a chance to act now on the non-bank bank loophole."

Senotors voting yes wanted to strip the FSLIC bail-out of extraneous provisions.

Hong Kong Becomes Major Farm Patron

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tiny Hong Kong, a total area of 412 square miles, has 6 million inhabitants who are turning into some of the best customers of the American farmer.

And one of their big U.S. imports is a product usually identified with the Orient: $29.8 million worth of ginseng.

According to Michael L. Humphrey, who is the Agriculture Department's chief representative there, Hong Kong serves another function as "a conduit to introduce U.S. products and technology to potential buyers" in China, its neighbor, historical homeland and future administrator.

Hong Kong was a market for nearly $396 million worth of U.S. agricultural products last year. In addition to ginseng, a root used medicinally by the Chinese, other U.S. exports to Hong Kong include oranges, $70.4 million; poultry meat, $38.1 million; tobacco, $28.9 million; grapes, $14.5 million; and wheat, $14 million.

Still others includes apples, beer, beef, mink skins, lettuce, melons, cattle hides, eggs, poultry feed, poultry feed, cotton, lemons, soups and refined corn oil.

"It is important to recognize that China was Hong Kong's main trading partner in 1986, with two-way trade totaling more than $18 billion (U.S.), a 17 percent increase over 1985, Humphrey said.

Additionally, Hong Kong is the world's fourth largest financial center and the 10th largest trading partner of the United States, he said. About 800 U.S. companies have offices and representatives there.

Humphrey's report is included in a forthcoming June issue of Foreign Agriculture magazine published by the department's Foreign Agricultural Service. Most of the issue is about Hong Kong and its agricultural trade.

In another article, M. Kathryn Ting, who is assistant agricultural officer in Hong Kong, said U.S. agricultural sales to the British crown colony have almost doubled in the last 10 years. But there have been sharp changes in the mix of commodities sold.

For example, she said, U.S. sales of cotton to Hong Kong, which totaled $150 million in 1980, dropped to only $1.7 million in 1986. Grain and feed exports also have declined in recent years.

"One the other hand, U.S. exports of food items have grown by 17 percent since 1980," Ms. Ting said. "U.S. exports of poultry and poultry products increased by over 60 percent."

Last year's U.S. shipments included about $130 million worth of fresh produce, a 45 percent share of the overall Hong Kong market for produce.

Automatic Controls Proposed For Trains

WASHINGTON (AP) — Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole is proposing that all passenger and freight trains in the Northeast Corridor carry sophisticated devices to automatically stop trains moving at unsafe speeds.

If the plan had been in effect in January, it might have averted the Amtrak-Conrail collision that killed 16 people near Chase, Md., Mrs. Dole said in announcing the plan Wednesday.

The proposal, unless modified during a 30-day comment period, means Conrail, the Delaware and Hudson, Providence and Worcester and the Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority must fit their locomotives with special receivers.

The receivers decode a signal emitted by the rail. If the engineer ignores a signal to reduce speed, the train's brakes are applied automatically.

"A fatal collision between an Amtrak train and a Conrail train might have been avoided with automatic train control," Mrs. Dole said, noting "the critical need for improved safety devices on trains operating in the heavily traveled Northeast Corridor."

In the accident, investigators said the Conrail train slid through signals telling it to slow down or stop and went into the path of the 12-car Amtrak train.

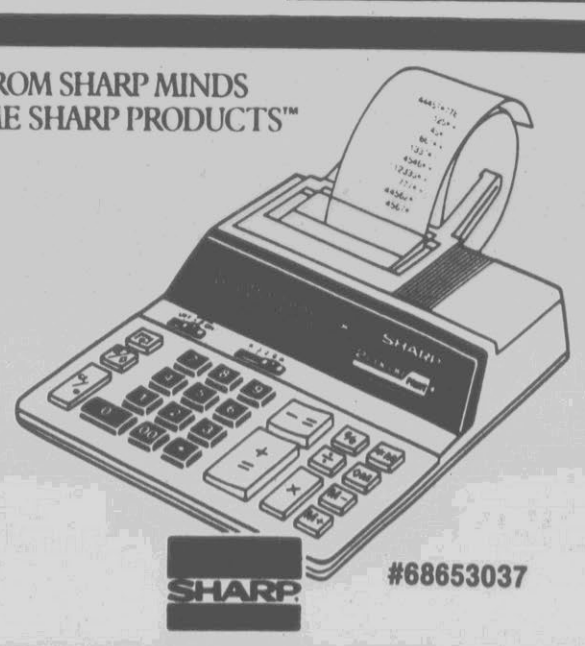

Amtrak locomotives already are equipped with Automatic Train Control devices, but Conrail locomotives are not.

MILLIONS — Contra leader Adolfo Calero gestures while testifying before the joint House-Senate panels investigating the Iran-Contral affair in Washington on Wednesday. Calero said Lt. Col. Oliver North, as an aide with the National Security Council, helped the rebels obtain more than $33 million in contributions and weapons. (AP Laserphoto)

Senator Says Contras Cut Off When They Bypassed North

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Contra leader Adolfo Calero was shut out of the money pipeline for his rebel fighters after he sought to buy arms outside the channel set up by Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, according to testimony presented to congressional investigators.

"This man (Calero) was kept mostly in the dark" after he arranged independently to buy $5.3 million worth of weapons through retired Army Maj. Gen. John K. Singlaub in June 1985 at a lower price than Calero had been paying, Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, said Wednesday.

The House-Senate investigating committees are focusing in increasing detail on the Nicaraguan rebels' sources and spending of money, and they planned to call as witnesses today a panel of three Americans who have donated to the cause of the Contras: Joseph Coors, Ellen Garwood and William O'Boyle.

Calero, leader of the largest rebel fighting force, had been receiving a steady flow of $1 million or more per month from Saudi Arabia. Calero at first used the money to buy weapons through retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord. The Secord connection had been made by North, who was coordinating Contra aid from his office at the National Security Council.

Singlaub contacted Calero in the spring of 1985 and worked out a virtual half-price deal for small arms and ammunition.

"He got no new equipment from the summer of 1985 on," Cohen said. "It's very clear that as of August 1985 he's no longer receiving that money."

At that point, Cohen said, arrangements were being made to sell U.S. arms to Iran, and payments from those sales later were channeled to Secord, who used some of the money to set up an air resupply effort for the Contras.

But Calero on Wednesday told the House-Senate panels investigating the Iran-Contra affair that he knew little of the airlift effort, and at one point complained to North that the service "was lousy."

"I expected it to be a lot more efficient," he said.

Singlaub, also appearing before the committee on Wednesday, portrayed Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, as having a far larer role in the Contra aid effort than Abrams has acknowledged. By the spring of 1986, during the congressional ban on U.S. military aid to the Contras, Abrams became Singlaub's chief government contact in efforts to solicit Contra aid money from other countries, Singlaub said.

In other testimony, Calero said:

—North asked him in the spring of 1985 for money to use in a covert effort to free U.S. hostages in Lebanon, and Calero ultimately gave him $90,000 in traveler's checks. Committee investigators received the canceled checks over the weekend, and found that North personally signed checks worth $2,440, cashing some at food and other retail stores and using one to buy two snow tires.

—He had more than 50 meetings with North over a two-year period to keep him advised of Nicaraguan military developments and the Contras' needs. "I used to tell Colonel North practically everything," he said. He also met five or six times with former CIA Director William J. Casey, whom he referred to as "Uncle Bill," and met with President Reagan three or four times. He said he did not discuss Contra aid with Reagan.

—The Contras' intent has always been overthrow of the Sandinista government, and not the interdiction of arms to Salvadoran leftists, as the U.S. government said during the early stages of military aid.

—North once told him he was "out on a limb" in his Contra support activities. Asked to elaborate, Calero said, "Well, that he was so dedicated, you know, that he could, in his enthusiasm he could, he had to be very careful, or something like that."

—"It was a revelation" when Secord testified last week that he had charged a 20 percent to 30 percent markup. He said he was able to get some weapons from Singlaub for half the price he had been paying Secord.

—He had approached a country — identified by sources as Taiwan — for a contribution after Congress cut off military aid to his army in October 1984. That country later gave $2 million to the Contras, but deposited it into an account controlled by Secord, and it is unclear whether the money ever was used to help the Contras, Cohen said.

Secord, his business partner Albert Hakim and Iranian arms dealer Manucher Ghorbanifar filed a motion in the highest court in Switzerland on Wednesday seeking to block release of bank records to U.S. investigators.

"That is not the act of a man who's seeking to be cooperative," said Senate committee member Warren Rudman, R-N.H.

Secord had told the congressional committees he probably would waive any objections to release of the records and would help return $8 million to the U.S. government.

Secord had told the committees two weeks ago that some $3.5 million from the Iran arms sales had gone to the Contras, but Calero's records show virtually all the money the Contras received directly came from a foreign government identified by sources as Saudi Arabia.

Secord also had testified that North had been concerned about reports of corruption among Contra leaders and routed some of the aid money through contractors such as himself in order to make the money more accountable.

After Wednesday's hearing, the Senate investigating committee voted to grant limited immunity from prosecution to three more witnesses: Carl R. "Spitz" Channell, Richard Miller and a third person associated with their private, conservative fund-raising network.

North Spent Contra Money On Tires, Food, Hosiery

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some of the money that was collected for the Nicaraguan Contra war was spent by Lt. Col. Oliver North on snow tires and in grocery stores and hosiery shops, according to documents and testimony.

North asked Contra leader Adolfo Calero for $90,000 in the spring of 1985, and personally signed checks worth $2,440, documents released by the congressional select committee on the Iran-Contra affair show.

Aside from the small number of checks signed by North himself, the lion's share of the money went to a project to rescue Americans held hostage in Lebanon and in payments to other Contra leaders, committee investigators indicated.

Calero told the committee that North, then a White House aide, had told him he needed money for a project to rescue Americans held hostage in Lebanon.

Calero said he never asked how the money was spent, but assumed it was for the hostage effort and to support Contra leaders from other Nicaraguan factions, as he and North had once discussed.

But the checks North signed included $340 that was cashed for $118.15 worth of purchases at grocery stores, and $220 spent at retail stores in suburban Washington, including $100 at National Tire Wholesalers in Tyson's Corner, Va., and $20 at Parklane Hosiery, also in Tyson's Corner, the committee documents show.

Another $1,880 went for hotels, airfare and other miscellany including: $1,000 for Pan American Airways, $20 to Delta Airways, $500 to Financial America at Miami Airport and $50 to the Sheraton Carlton Hotel.

"I'm sure there is an explanation for that," Calero said of the snow tire purchase, noting that it never snows in Nicaragua where his forces are fighting to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government.

Any expenditure of the traveler's checks by North or other government officials for personal use could raise questions about violation of a federal statute against government employees supplementing their income with money from private sources.

Calero said he trusted North to spend the money on a good cause, but said the only specifics North had mentioned was the hostage effort.

"The way he explained to me the necessity, I considered it necessary for me to make a decision. My decision was to give this money," Calero said. "I felt deeply for these people who had been kidnapped."

North did give $25,000 of the Contra money to Drug Enforcement Administration operatives involved in a hostage-rescue program, committee investigators said.

Another $30,000 was spent in payments to a handful of Contra leaders who were not part of Calero's Nicaraguan Democratic Force.

Calero, who as head of the largest rebel army had total control of Contra finances, said traveler's checks were used for convenience.

Of $33 million the Contras raised from mid-1984 to the beginning of this year, some $3 million was spent in the form of traveler's checks.

He said he "imagined" North was making payments to leaders of other Contra factions, because he and North had discussed the idea that the FDN should help out those individuals.

But it would not have been "politically sound" for Calero to make those payments himself because the other leaders "would think they were dependent on us." So he gave North the money and assumed he was dispensing it to other Contra leaders.

North's associate, Robert Owen, has testified he delivered money from North to as many as 10 Contra leaders.

Some of the traveler's checks Calero gave North were cashed by people Calero had never heard of, said his attorney Joseph Portuondo.

Among others, North's secretary, Fawn Hall, spent a small amount at a fast-food store; Capitol Hill lobbyist Dan Kuykendall was reimbursed for the airfare of a French dignitary who met with members of Congress before a vote on Contra aid; and funds were received by Richard Miller, a public relations consultant who has pleaded guilty to conspiracy to defraud the U.S. government by using a tax-exempt foundation to solicit weapons funds for the Contras.

Hearings To Recess For Summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The congressional investigation into the Iran-Contra affair will be interrupted for at least a week in early June when President Reagan attends a seven-nation economic summit.

"It's not good form to be doing anything derogatory while he's out of the country," said one committee staff member, speaking only on condition of anonymity.

The House and Senate committees announced the break will begin sometime after completion of the first phase of hearings, which deals with aid to the Nicaraguan Contras. Hearings are scheduled to resume June 16.

The president is leaving June 3 for Venice, Italy, where he will prepare for the June 8-10 summit. He will return to Washington June 12 after stops in Berlin and Bonn. He will be meeting on trade and monetary issues with the leaders of Canada, France, Great Britain, Germany, Italy and Japan.

The committees will use the time to prepare for the second phase of hearings, on the Iran arms sales, and the expected testimony of Adm. John M. Poindexter, a former National Security Adviser.

A previous inquiry that was potentially embarrassing to a president was similarly suspended. The Watergate hearings were halted for a week in June 1973 when Soviet Leader Leonid I. Brezhnev was in Washington to meet with President Nixon.

American Motors Accepts Higher Chrysler Proposal

By JAMES RISEN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

DETROIT — After more than two months delay, American Motors finally agreed to be acquired by Chrysler after the No. 3 automaker upped its offer, AMC announced Wednesday.

AMC's board of directors, which had been studying Chrysler's takeover proposal since March, said Wednesday that it approved a deal under which Chrysler will buy all of AMC's outstanding shares not held by Renault, the French automaker, for $4.50 per share.

Originally, Chrysler had offered non-Renault shareholders $4.00 worth of Chrysler stock for each AMC share. The higher price, which will also come in the form of Chrysler stock, will increase the value of the non-Renault portion of the deal from $522 million to $595 million, according to John Guiniven, a Chrysler spokesman.

Meanwhile, Chrysler also increased the yield on $200 million worth of notes it agreed in March to pay Renault in exchange for its 46.1 percent stake in AMC. Chrysler said the interest rate on the 8-year notes it will pay to Renault in exchange for its 46.1 percent stake in AMC has been increased to 9.75 percent from 8 percent.

Chrysler's board of directors met late Wednesday and approved the final agreement with AMC and Renault.

Chrysler shareholders do not need to approve the acquisition, but it must be voted on by AMC stockholders. AMC said it planned to hold its annual meeting, which was delayed while the board studied Chrysler's offer, within 90 days. The U.S. government must also study the merger for possible antitrust violations, while the French government, which owns Renault, and Canada, which has provided subsidies for an AMC plant in Ontario, also must pass on the deal.

"We hope that final approvals can be obtained quickly," Chrysler Chairman Lee A. Iacocca said Wednesday.

Industry observers have given mixed reviews to Chrysler's plan to acquire AMC ever since the deal was announced March 9.

While Chrysler will obtain AMC's profitable Jeep division and a new assembly plant in Canada, it will be saddled with $767 million in AMC debt and a passenger car lineup that is so weak that AMC is now in danger of being driven out of the U.S. car market.

A new report from J.D. Power & Associates, a respected automotive market research company, labels AMC's car lineup "suspect," saying that AMC's few attractive passenger car models compete directly with existing Chrysler products.

Meanwhile, Chrysler will almost certainly have to try to renegotiate AMC's labor agreements with the United Auto Workers, which have left the struggling company with some of the highest labor costs anywhere in the auto industry.

Enough Arrests

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Abbie Hoffman, returning to his hometown to mark the 20th anniversary of Prospect House, a social service agency they helped found here, says he's not interested in getting arrested anytime soon.

Hoffman, 50, a former member of the Chicago Seven and chief spokesman for the Yippie movement, said he has been arrested 42 times. "That's enough for now," said Hoffman.

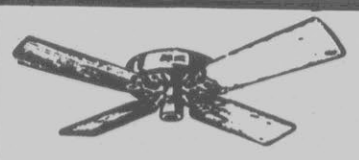

His latest arrest was at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst during a November protest against recruiters for the Central Intelligence Agency.

The three fastest growing Pitt County townships from 1980 to 1984 other than Greenville were Ayden, Grifton and Grimesland. Ayden's population grew 2.7 percent, Grifton, 2.51 percent, and Grimesland, 1.88 percent.

Investment Barriers Block U.S.-Canada Accord

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

TORONTO (AP) — Canadian restrictions on foreign investment have emerged as a major obstacle to a landmark free-trade agreement with the United States.

During three days of talks that ended Wednesday at Meech Lake, Quebec, chief U.S. negotiator Peter Murphy told reporters there will be no accord unless Canada agrees to put the investment issue on the table.

"We're making some progress, but I must tell you it's tough," he said at the end of the session. "There are a lot of major difficulties."

Canadian negotiator Simon Reisman said it was unlikely the two sides could complete a draft treaty by the end of June, as originally hoped.

The United States wants Canada to drop most, if not all, of its investment review procedures and restrictions on American investors.

But at a time when Canada plans to acquire nuclear-powered submarines to assert its sovereignty over Arctic waters disputed by Washington, foreign ownership of Canadian business is a politically sensitive topic.

Opposition members of Parliament accused Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's Conservative government of planning to cave in to the U.S. demands, but ministers in charge denied it.

"Canadians want to know when the government will stop selling out Canada," said New Democratic Party leader Ed Broadbent, who opposes free trade and wants Mulroney to block U.S.-based Amoco Corp.'s planned $3.8 billion takeover of debt-ridden Dome Petroleum, based in Calgary.

The investment issue has been simmering for months but made headlines when Bruce Smart, U.S. undersecretary of commerce, said in a recent Toronto speech that "trade cannot be free if investment is restricted."

Mulroney's government has agreed to discuss trade-related investment questions but not the complete abolition of investment controls.

Reisman said Wednesday the two sides have set up a working group on trade-related investment issues, such as export conditions, local hiring and procurement.

But Murphy said that did not go far enough. "Working groups don't move things forward. You have to have some results," he said.

Ironically, Canada already has a relatively open investment climate, as Trade Minister Pat Carney told Parliament. "We have attracted record-breaking levels of foreign investment that have created jobs in this country," she said.

Mulroney has replaced the previous government's Foreign Investment Review Agency with Investment Canada, which encourages capital to enter the country.

Already, many of Canada's biggest companies are U.S. subsidiaries, and Americans account for three-quarters of foreign investment, which reached a record $5.1 billion last year.

Canadians account for 9 percent of foreign investment in the United States.

Nevertheless, Investment Canada is required to review acquisitions worth $3.75 million or more, and the government restricts takeovers in the energy, publishing, film and other cultural industries.

The American side wants to establish the principle of free flow of investment in an accord with Canada that will serve as a beacon against protectionism worldwide.

Mulroney first proposed the bilteral trade talks as a means of preserving and creating jobs in Canada, where unemployment outside prosperous Ontario ranges from 10 to 20 percent.

About 80 percent of the annual $132 billion in trade between the two countries is duty-free, but both have extensive non-tariff barriers.

Another major sticking point in the talks is Canada's demand for a dispute settlement mechanism bypassing U.S. countervailing and anti-dumping penalties.

The talks began in May 1986 under a Congressional fast-track timetable that expires next January. After that, Reagan would have to return to Congress for a new mandate.

Atlanta Is Top Choice For Business

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Atlanta is the best major metropolitan area in which to locate a business, and Detroit the worst, according to a national survey of corporate leaders.

Atlanta received an "excellent" rating from 33 percent of the executives surveyed who were familiar with the area as a business location, the highest percentage of the 30 cities surveyed. It received a "poor" rating of only 3 percent, less than any other city.

San Diego came in second with a 19 percent excellent grade and a 4 percent poor grade, followed by Tampa, 19 percent excellent and 5 percent poor; Los Angeles, 19 percent excellent and 5 percent poor; Boston, 18 percent excellent and 6 percent poor; and Chicago, 18 percent excellent and 7 percent poor. At the bottom of the scale, Detroit was rated excellent by 5 percent of those questioned and poor by 23 percent. The other of the five least-desirable areas in which to locate a business were said to be Cleveland, Miami, New Orleans and Milwaukee.

Corporate leadership appears to have a love-hate relationship with New York, with 18 percent of the executives rating it excellent and an equal percentage rating it poor. The city ranked seventh overall.

Houston, boom city of the 1970s, was rated 22nd overall, with an 8 percent excellent grade and a 27 percent poor grade. But it joined Dallas-Fort Worth as one of the top two places where business was thought most likely to improve.

Executives rated access to domestic markets as the most important factor in deciding where to locate an office, and access to international customers or clients as the least important.

Other criteria cited in ranking the cities included quality of public schools, affordable housing, and a low crime rate.

UNC Protest

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP)— About 500 secretaries and clerical workers at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill turned out for a midday protest Wednesday.

The workers want the school to come up with the $2 million in wages granted them last fall by the State Personnel Office.

But UNC administration officials told the workers that although the State Personnel Office granted the raises, it didn't tell the university where to get the money to actually pay for the raises.

Guilty Plea

YANCEYVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The former general manager of the Caswell Messenger has pleaded guilty to 18 counts of embezzlement from the weekly newspaper.

Under a plea bargain arrangement, Melinda M. Dodson, 32, of Ruffin pleaded guilty to embezzling approximately $12,000 from the Messenger between February 1986 and February 1987.

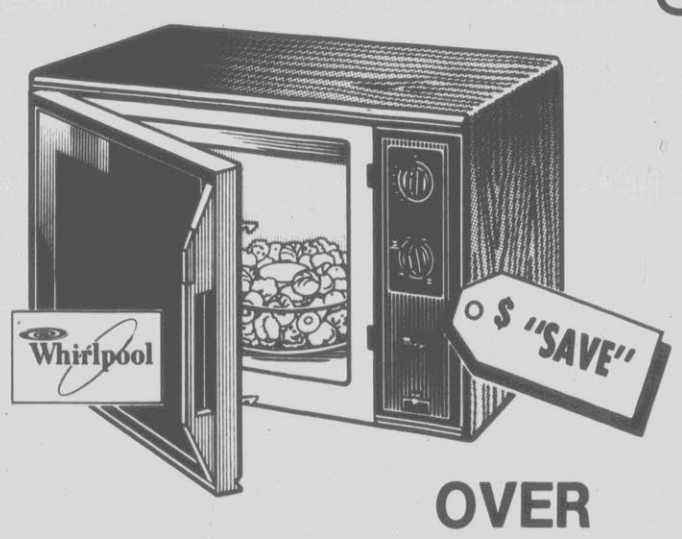

She was sentenced in Caswell County Superior Court to 150 days in prison and five years probation. She was ordered to pay restitution of $12,297 to Womack Publishing Co. and Wachovia Bank.

License Check

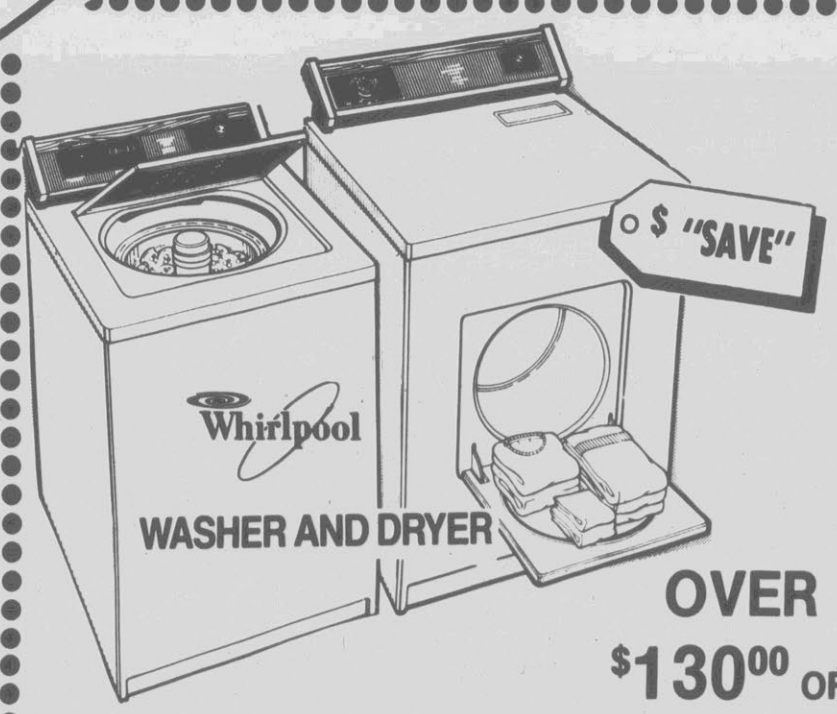

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — State officials say 25 percent of the commercial clam fishermen checked during a recent enforcement effort did not have valid shellfishing licenses available.

And 50 percent of those without a license with them had no record of purchase of a license at the Morehead City office, said Edward McCoy, deputy director of the North Carolina Division of Marine Fisheries.

NASA Announces Pared Down 1988 Schedule

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA says it can't put the space shuttle back into orbit again until June 1988 and that the new delay means only three flights next year instead of six.

The new launch target date, the exact day to be announced later, extends the post-Challenger shuttle grounding by about four months. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration had announced target dates twice before — July 1987 and Feb. 18, 1988 — but was forced by shuttle modification delays to abandon them.

"This new target date reflects the decision, announced in April, to perform two major systems tests prior to flight," the space agency said Wednesday.

One of the tests involves filling the external tank with fuel for a simulated launch countdown; the other is a flight readiness exercise in which the shuttle's three main engines are fired for 20 seconds while the ship is held to the pad.

"We would like to get back into space sooner, but I believe that this is a prudent thing to do," said Rick Hauck, who will command the five-man crew on the first flight, aboard the shuttle Discovery.

The new delay is a reflection of the difficulties the United States is having re-entering the international competition in space. There have been no U.S. manned flights since the Challenger exploded shortly after liftoff on Jan. 28, 1986, killing the seven crew members.

Because of the shortage of launch capacity the accident caused, the space agency last October knocked 25 commercial payloads from its shuttle cargo schedule, announcing it would honor only 19 contracts.

Since then, the Soviet Union and China have begun aggressively to market their rockets for satellite deliveries, the European consortium Ariane is booked for years ahead, and the Japanese are preparing to enter the market.

NASA also issued a cargo manifest in October that dedicated 41 percent of shuttle capacity for the next seven years to military use; 47 percent for NASA's scientific and in-house work, and only 12 percent for commercial, foreign government and other U.S. government civil space needs, such as weather satellites.

The new schedule calls for three launches next year and seven in 1989, instead of eight.

"Safely returning the space shuttle to flight is NASA's highest priority," said the space agency's administrator, James C. Fletcher. "Our revised plan for space shuttle recovery is ambitious and assumes that we will successfully complete our test and processing objectives."

Hauck said the additional time will also allow testing of a tractor rocket escape system that he hopes will be aboard the spacecraft. Such a system could only be used if the shuttle were in stable, low-level flight — such as just before a ditching in the ocean. It would not have helped the crew of the Challenger, which blew up shortly after liftoff when a rocket booster ruptured.

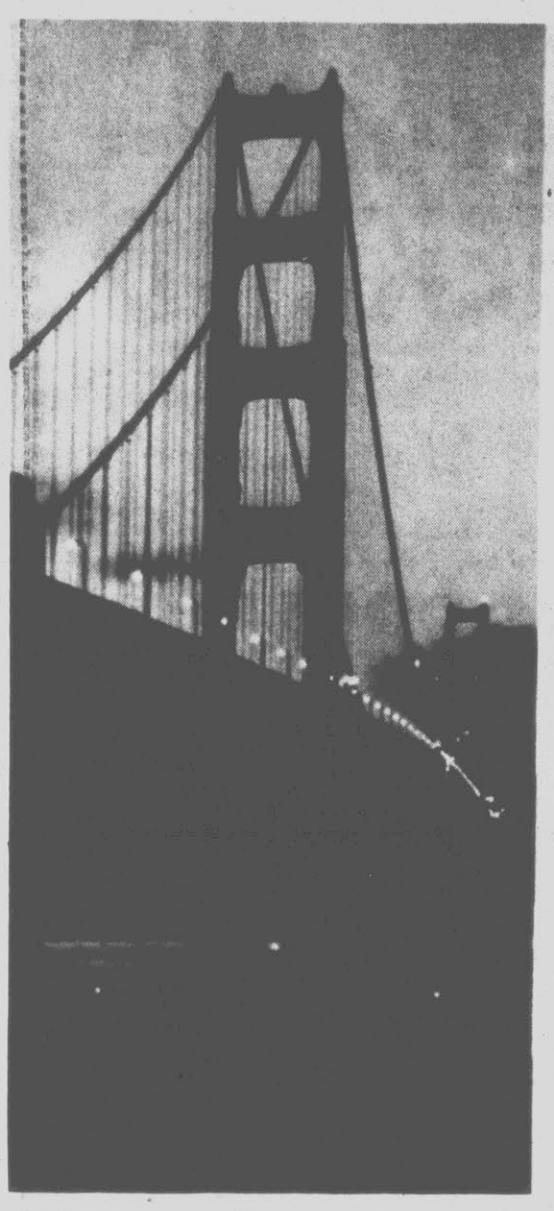

Others scheduled to be on the first flight are pilot Richard O. Covey, and mission specialists John M. Lounge, David C. Hilmers and George "Pinky" Nelson.

NASA said it will announce later which cargoes will be carried under the revised schedule and which ones will be delayed. It is expected that the first flight will carry a giant NASA tracking and data relay satellite called TDRS. The next two missions were to have had military cargoes and the fourth flight another TDRS.

The cargo for the fifth mission was to have been the $1 billion Hubble Space Telescope, the most ambitious scientific instrument ever carried into space.

The possibility of launching one of the TDRS satellites on an expendable rocket, rather than using the shuttle, is under discussion at NASA.

The resumption of space flight has been delayed by problems of redesigning and testing the shuttle's rocket boosters. In another announcement Wednesday, booster builder Morton Thiokol Inc. said it will conduct the first in a series of test firings in Utah on Friday.

Soviets Plan To Gather Rocks On Mars Flights

By LEE DYE
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

PASADENA, Calif. — Soviet space scientists stunned their counterparts from around the world Wednesday when they announced here that the Soviet Union planned to send an armada of unmanned spacecraft to Mars and bring back chunks of the Red Planet.

The ambitious plan, which is to be completed by the end of the next decade, would require launching at least 60,000 pounds of scientific instruments, support equipment and automated rovers that could roam the surface of Mars, according to U.S. space experts.

"That's more mass in orbit than we have launched during the entire U.S. planetary program to date," said California Institute of Technology planetary scientist Bruce Murray.

Although some aspects of the project could change before the first rockets are sent on their way toward Mars in 1992, the fact that top level Soviet scientists described the program in such detail, at an international symposium here, reveals that it has the blessing of the Soviet government, according to U.S. scientists familiar with how the Soviet system works.

Roald Kremnev, director of the Soviet Union's center for unmanned spacecraft and a top official in his country's scientific establishment, said in an interview that he is assured that the project will move ahead.

"This is quite realistic," Kremnev said through an interpreter.

Kremnev unveiled the program during the first International Conference on Solar System Exploration, which continues through Thursday. The conference, which has attracted around 400 scientists and engineers from the United States, Europe, Japan and the Soviet Union, is being sponsored jointly by the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics and the Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

The Soviet announcement was greeted with excitement by U.S. and European scientists, some of whom were still smarting with envy over a more modest Mars exploration program discussed Tuesday by Valeriy Barsukov, director of the Vernadsky Institute of Geochemistry and Analytical Chemistry in Moscow. That program, which does not include returning Martian samples to Earth, now looms as little more than a precursor to the grand plan unveiled Wednesday.

The Soviet program will include one and probably two rovers that will be able to roam the surface of Mars. The larger of the two, possibly powered by a nuclear plant, will be able to venture as far as 250 miles from its landing site, Kremnev said. The rovers will collect samples from a wide area of the planet and return them to a launch vehicle.

Meanwhile, other scientific devices will poke and drill into the planet, collecting information and transmitting it back to scientists in the Soviet Union.

At the end of the surface exploration, which could take several months, the samples will be blasted up to a spacecraft orbiting Mars, and then returned to Earth.

It will require at least six launches of the large Proton rocket — the backbone of the Soviet space program — to carry the heavy payloads to Mars, Kremnev said.

The launches will be conducted in three segments of two launches each, in 1992, 1994 and 1996. The Soviets conduct parallel launches so that they have total backup so that if one rocket fails, the entire mission will not be lost, according to U.S. scientists.

So if all goes according to plan, well before the end of the century Soviet scientists should have collected the first samples from another planet as part of a project many now view as a precursor to even bolder plans, most likely a manned expedition to Mars.

A number of U.S. scientists, who said they learned of the extent of the Soviet Mars program for the first time Wednesday, said the program reveals profound differences between the Soviet approach to space exploration and the approach followed by the United States and Europe.

"They know what a program is," said John Casani, head of JPL's Galileo project which hopes to launch a spacecraft toward Jupiter in 1989. "We still think in terms of single missions, single launches."

Friends Say Hart Will Stay Before Public

By T.R. REID
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

DENVER — Former presidential candidate Gary Hart is making it clear to his friends and supporters that he will not go gentle into that political night.

In meetings here and in telephone conversations with supporters around the country, the candidate whose high-flying campaign came crashing down two weeks ago has laid out an ambitious blueprint designed to maintain his political base and keep himself at the center of national policy debates through the 1988 campaign and beyond.

People who have talked with Hart said his ideas range from releasing a flood of newspaper opinion columns and magazine articles to a national lecture tour and a series of television talk show appearances. The ex-candidate may also revive his non-profit policy foundation to give himself a forum.

In addition, Hart is evidently looking for an appropriate way to do something he conspicuously declined to do in his angry withdrawal speech on May 8: apologize for his conduct.

"I think he's looking for the right place to go on national TV and say to all the Gary Hart people out there, you know, 'I'm sorry that I let you down,' " John Emerson, Hart's deputy campaign manager, said.

Hart's brief, biting speech in a hotel ballroom here when he withdrew from the race for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination had a burning-all-bridges quality. He attacked the media, fellow politicians, ang the system by which the nation chooses its president. For the past week or so, though, Hart has been working the telephones to shore up the bridges linking him to the political world.

Hart has evidently not spoken specifically about the reported extramarital relationships that led to the collapse of his front-running candidacy. But he has offered his apologies in more general terms.

"He told me that he was terribly sorry that he and events had resulted in disappointment of people who had been supportive of him," said Sidney Harman, a Washington industrialist who received a call from Hart last week.

"He called and said he was sorry," said Florida House Speaker Jon L. Mills. "Basically, he was sorry for the entire consequences... . It wasn't a bitter conversation, but I'd characterize as a sad conversation. The positive note was that he would continue to be involved in issues. He said we would work together again in the future."

Five days after the campaign died, Hart paid an emotional visit to his headquarters and spoke to groups of staff workers who were packing away the remnants of his six-year quest for the White House.

"He made it very clear that he felt he had let us down, that we had worked hard for him and he had disappointed us," said press secretary Kevin Sweeney. "It was pretty moving, frankly. He said there was no way Gary Hart would disappear. He said he had a lot to say about national issues and he isn't the type to keep silent."

Hart has declined press interviews but aides said he is trying to decide on the best way to reemerge and move beyond the issue of press coverage of his personal life. "We've had calls from Nightline, from the Donahue show, all those," said an aide who is helping Hart plan his future. "The problem is, what they want is more talk about the press and privacy. What Hart wants is a chance to express his regrets and then have an hour to talk about policy."

From his low-slung house in the foothills west of Denver and from his law office in a gleaming downtown office tower, Hart has been making calls by the dozens each day to his financial backers and other political friends. Hart has left the strong impression that he does not consider his public career over.

"I couldn't say from our conversation whether it's two weeks, two months, or two years before he's back," said Charles T. Manatt, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, who held a top job in Hart's campaign. "But the gist of what he said is that he'll be active in the political world."

Report Criticizes Ads

WASHINGTON (AP) — A report issued today criticizes alcoholic beverage advertising aimed at blacks, who it says suffer higher incidences of alcohol-related problems than whites, and asks Congress to restrict such ads.

The report argues that health warnings about the effects of alcohol are all but lost among intense marketing campaigns that include advertisements, celebrity promotions, concerts, and sponsorship of such things as sporting events.

CAR TALK
From Joe Cullipher Chrysler Plymouth, Dodge, Peugeot
By James Phillips

STEERING FAILURE WARNING

In a recent California study of 409 fatal single-vehicle accidents, almost one-third had one or more mechanical defects. Steering system deficiencies accounted for over 26 percent of these mechanical defects. Fortunately there are warning signs before steering failure. Don't ignore them. Here's what to look for:

Shake, shimmy or bumping felt in the steering wheel when on smooth roads usually indicates improper wheel balance. Out of balance wheels can cause shimmy and even loss of control at highway speeds. This condition also greatly increases wear on tires and suspension points.

Shake, shimmy or steering backlash on rough roads is usually a sign of one of three things: worn tie rods, ball joints or idler arm. The failure of any of the three will result in the complete loss of steering control.

Major Senate Fight Expected On Civil Rights Bill

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The rhetoric and recriminations that preceded Senate committee approval of a 3-year-old civil rights bill offers a preview of what should be a long and bitter fight in the full Senate.

Tempers flared and patience ran short Wednesday as a small cadre of conservatives tried to work their will on the Civil Rights Restoration Act. But their efforts were in vain: the Labor and Human Resources Committee rejected all amendments and voted 12-4 to report the bill to the floor.

The lopsided, bipartisan vote represented a milestone in efforts to overturn a 1984 Supreme Court decision that sharply narrowed federal protection against discrimination.

"It's a tremendous civil rights victory that underscores the strong bipartisan support and momentum behind the restoration act," said Ralph Neas, executive director of the Leadership Council on Civil Rights.

"It's a great impetus and push," said committee chairman Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., adding he was surprised at the margin.

But opponents of the act, contending it goes far beyond restoration, said they intend to pursue amendments on everything from abortion to AIDS when the bill reaches the Senate floor.

"The battle has to be on the floor," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, who as Kennedy's predecessor blocked consideration of the bill for three years.

The bill has 58 cosponsors, two short of the number needed to cut off a filibuster. Senate Democratic leaders are anxious to have those 60 votes firmly in hand before bringing the bill to the floor. Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., has said he hopes to schedule it early this summer.

The Supreme Court ruled in the case of Grove City (Pa.) College that the federal law barring sex discrimination in education covers only specific programs receiving federal aid, such as a college department, and not entire institutions. The Reagan administration interpreted the decision to apply to civil rights laws covering minorities, the aged and the handicapped as well.

Proponents of the restoration act say their bill will merely reinstate the institution-wide coverage meant by Congress. "It's really very simple," Kennedy said. "If you want federal money, you can't discriminate."

Thousands Of Children Marry On Hindu Festival

By SEEMA SIROHI
Associated Press Writer

MOGERA KALAN, India (AP) — Parsi Meghwal sat on her mother's lap in bridal finery and Soora Batiah, at her side near the sacred fire, was resplendent in turban and sword. She was 2, he was 5 and they were about to be married.

Although child marriages are illegal in India, villagers continue the ancient practice, sealing the fates of children before many could say "No" to a small, unknown partner even if they dared.

Sometimes the bride is just a few months old and the groom not much older. She remains with her parents and is sent to the husband's house when she reaches puberty.

Police say they can't stop something so rooted in tradition and have better things to do with their limited manpower.

Mogera Kalan's Hindu priest pronounced Soora and Parsi man and wife along with 11 other child couples in a mass wedding ceremony. Some brides and grooms slept through the proceedings, some chewed candy and others were cantankerous.

Beaming parents and relatives fussed, sang folk songs and offered sweets. Popular music blared from radios in the mud and stone huts of this village in the desert state of Rajasthan, land of exotic forts, brilliantly colored turbans and unremitting hardship.

No one knows exactly how many children are married each year in predominantly Hindu India. A government estimate in 1986 said about 30,000 are wed annually in drought-stricken Rajasthan, where the practice is widespread.

Two ministers in the state government were forced to resign in recent years when it became known that they had married off their daughters as children.

Most of the marriages are timed for the harvest festival of Akah Teej, an auspicious day in the Hindu calendar. It fell on May 1 this year and Mogera Kalan, a village of about 3,000 people near Jodhpur, was filled with wedding feasts.

Some brides and grooms were too young to walk, so their mothers carried them around the fire seven times in the Hindu marriage rite.

Bhanwar Lal, 2-year-old Parsi's father, got all his three daughters married because nine other girls in the extended family also were being wed.

"We are workers," he said. "We haven't had a good crop in years with this drought. I can't afford to organize a wedding feast three times.

"Besides, if you don't get girls married off early, people talk."

The legal ages for marriage in India are 18 for women and 21 for men, but the law is rarely enforced. Police act only on written complaints, which seldom are made.

"If we had time to spare, we would be chasing thieves," said Ashok Bhandari, deputy inspector-general of police in Jodhpur. "The police don't have the manpower to stop child marriages."

Some people say child marriages may be increasing because of the drought and growing poverty. A survey in 1986 indicated about 30 percent of the children in Rajasthan's state-run schools were married.

Increasing deforestation has made water even scarcer for farmers in Rajasthan. They depend on the monsoon for water, but there has been little rain in nine of the past 11 years.

Conditions are so difficult that some children are married when relatives gather for a funeral. To lessen the financial burden of weddings, younger children are wed simultaneously with those who have just attained puberty.

Bhandari said child marriages are primarily a "social wrong, not a legal wrong, and under these trying conditions people find them convenient."

To illiterate, superstitious villagers the birth of a girl is a curse and economic burden, while a son is an asset because he can earn money for the family. Girls in rural areas rarely are sent even to primary school.

"A girl has to do what tradition demands. We do our best to find good grooms, but if he turns out to be a wastrel it is her bad luck," said Bhiku Ram, head man of Mogera Kalan.

He said some parents were fearful of dying in the near-famine conditions and tried to arrange for their children's futures as soon as possible.

If a boy groom later decides not to accept his bride, she is given to a younger brother or an older man, who may be a widower. Tradition does not allow a child widow to remarry, so she may become little more than an unpaid servant for her in-laws.

In Mogera Kalan, village chief Ram's response to questions of legality and morality was: "Our ancestors did it. We don't want to be the first to break the custom."

Get Receipt From Sergeant

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: After three months of marriage, I found out that from the time we were married, my husband had been molesting my 4-year-old son from a previous marriage. Of course, I kicked him out and filed for divorce so he's no longer with us, but I have a question for you: My soon-to-be ex-husband is in the U.S. Army, stationed in Washington state. His first sergeant signed him out of jail and under his custody. This first sergeant came to my apartment and told me that I would have to give my wedding rings back to my ex-husband because he still owes on them. I was told this was the law in Washington state.

I gave the rings to the first sergeant, but I thought that once someone gave you something, it was yours for keeps. Was I dumb to give back the rings? — TACOMA DUMMY

DEAR TACOMA: No. Merchandise is the property of the seller until it's paid for. Apparently your soon-to-be ex-husband defaulted on his payments, so the jeweler demanded the rings. If you didn't ask the first sergeant for a receipt, you should have. It's still not too late.

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Washingtonian" that having an affair because sex isn't good at home isn't what it's cracked up to be! I know.

I am 33. My husband is 45, and a normal sex life for him is twice a year. (My birthday and our anniversary.) I thought it necessary to have an affair to satisfy my sex life, so I got reinvolved with an old boyfriend ("Albert" is 55). It was wonderful until Albert retired, and now I hardly ever see him because his wife keeps close tabs on him.

Now I'm more frustrated than before. I feel guilty when I see Albert and go home to my husband, and there's a terrible letdown when I can't get in touch with Albert.

So, my advice is to forget affairs. Everyone gets burned. I'm lucky I can still save my marriage. I'm trying counseling. Any suggestions? — SORRY I HAD AN AFFAIR

DEAR SORRY: Thanks for pushing for fidelity in marriage even though your husband thinks sex is a biannual celebration. "Affairs" are rarely worth the subterfuge, frustration and guilt. If you're into counseling you're on the right track. If your husband isn't into it with you, he ought to be.

DEAR ABBY: For the past four years I have been dating a wonderful woman. We share many common interests, we love each other and are contemplating marriage. One matter stands in the way. "Greta" is 6 feet tall and I am 5 feet 9. We have come a long way in adjusting to the height difference, but at times we are uncomfortable in public. I've noticed that Greta often wears "flats" on dressy occasions. This bothers me because I know how much she loves to wear heels.

Abby, are there any treatments to alter height? I would like to be about 3 inches taller. Greta has also heard that there is a form of surgery to decrease height. Any information you can provide will be greatly appreciated by both of us. — GRETA'S GUY IN GARDENA

DEAR GUY: I would be very leery of any kind of treatment or surgery that promised to alter one's height. Tell Greta to put her heels back on, and should anyone ask if it bothers you to be seen with a woman who is taller than you, say, "No, I don't mind looking up to the woman I love."

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Mother Goose Book Retains Checkerboard Look Of The Old Days

NEW YORK (AP) — After intriguing generations of children, Mother Goose is still going strong, with a new home and her classic nursery rhymes reissued to fascinate today's youngsters.

This year, Macmillan Publishing Inc. has put out a new edition of the old favorite with its checkerboard border. It is also launching a children's publishing division, Checkerboard Press, named in honor of the "Real Mother Goose," first published in 1916 with a checkerboard cover.

"The 'Real Mother Goose' edition, with over 300 rhymes, has become the best-selling nursery rhyme book in print," says Michael Teitelbaum, editor-in-chief of Checkerboard. "But it should be remembered that Mother Goose herself is very old."

Very old indeed. According to research by Checkerboard, Mother Goose may have been modeled after Charlemagne's mother (8th century), a storyteller of sorts who was often referred to as Queen Goosefoot. Mother Goose was known in France for centuries thereafter as the supposed originator of any incredible tale, especially those intended for children.

She made her way into England with the translation of Perrault's 1697 publication, "Tales of Mother Goose," which consisted of a series of fairy tales. In 1791, the Newberry edition of traditional verses and jingles under the title "Mother Goose's Melody" appeared, each illustrated with a tiny woodcut.

Eventually, more and more nursery rhymes — some very old with roots in folklore — began to be linked with successive editions of Mother Goose.

"The rhymes themselves are based on a wide range of sources: ballads, prayers, rituals, jests, tongue twisters, games and historical facts," explains Teitelbaum. "For example, 'Old King Cole' is supposedly based on a third-century British king, although evidence is rather thin.

"We do know that 'Litle Jack Horner' refers to a man who apparently gained numerous lands in Somersetshire in the 1540s during the reign of King Henry VIII. But whether he also delivered the deeds of 12 manors to the king in a Christmas pie — pulling out one of them, the 'plum,' — is anybody's guess.

"Other rhymes are just as intriguing," he points out. " 'Ride a cockhorse to Banbury Cross' has been identified with Lady Godiva's chilly ride, as well as Queen Elizabeth I's enjoyment of the equestrian sport. Regardless, the actual cross was destroyed in 1601 by zealous Puritans."

The most popular of the nursery rhyme ring games, Teitelbaum notes, was perhaps "Ring a Ring of Roses": "Ring a ring of roses, a pocket full of posies, A-tishoo! a-tishoo!, we all fall down."

"England was hit with three waves of the Great Plague in the mid-14th century," says Teitelbaum. "This poem probably evolved from that horrible experience. The roses referred to a rash associated with the plague. Posies were the herbs used to protect against the disease. The sneezing was the fatal symptom that usually preceded death — or falling down dead."

According to Teitelbaum, the rhymes are as popular as ever today, and are passed on by parents who enjoyed them as children.

"It's no coincidence that the 'Real Mother Goose' is ranked third on the all-time best-selling children's books list," he says. "The rhymes are timeless and the experiences children have in saying them endure throughout their lives. Mother Goose will be with us as long as children hop into bed at night and ask their parents to read them a story."

WORD-OF-MOUTH

A friend tells a friend, who tells a friend. Companies have long recognized the value of word-of-mouth advertising. Thy have also recognized the harm that can be done by an unhappy customer.

"In response to a study of the public relations damage caused by dissatisfied customers, many companies have begun to encourage consumers to give them a chance to resolve the complaint. Over 43 percent of consumer product companies how have toll-free numbers, and they actively promote their use for questions or complaints," says Janice Holm Lloyd, extension family resource management specialist at North Carolina State University.

Along with happy customers, companies have found that the toll-free line enables them to improve quality control by analyzing the complaints they receive.

Graduation Day Is For Parents

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

I opened a college graduation speech one year by saying, "I know all of you are sitting out there today frightened, scared and apprehensive about your future. You're wondering how you're going to fit into the scheme of things and face the challenges that lie ahead for you, but I'm not here to talk to you parents. I'm here to address your children."

Actually, the parents needed the speech more than their offspring. The kids were still under warranty. What did they know? They were still someone's tax deduction until the end of the year, still had their old door key to their old room and enough cuteness and youth to borrow money. They should have gotten the empty nest speech and their parents should have gotten the "Graduation is not the end ... it's the beginning ... you are on the brink of a new horizon ... and beginning today you are in control of your own destiny" number.

Graduation day is tough for adults. They go to the ceremony as parents. They come home as contemporaries. After 22 years of child-raising they are unemployed. They no longer have to have a stocked refrigerator when they go on vacation. They can buy a new car without worrying whether or not their child is going to need tuition for summer school. They can get their own apartment and not feel guilty.

They can come and go as they please and not have to check with their kids. They have the opportunity to put into practice all the things they've learned over the past four years ... that there is a life after children and bread can be frozen.

My heart went out to parents as I saw them sitting there, out of a job and wondering how they would handle their new lifestyle when they no longer had children to tell them what to do.

What was it they did before they had children? Did they speak entire sentences to one another? Did they ever have a social life? Did they ever do things that weren't planned?

They are the ones who should have been told there are rewards for those who finish something they started, and there must have been times when they questioned that.

After the ceremony, I watched the parents as they smiled awkwardly into cameras, embarrassed at the attention they were receiving. Instinctively, mothers settled into their roles. They filed the programs in their purses, carefully folded the graduation gowns to be returned to get the fees back. The fathers began their ritual of lugging stereos, boxes and bedding from the third floor of the dorm to the station wagon for the trip home.

House Passes Defense Spending Bill But Filibuster Blocks Senate

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House approved its version of next year's Pentagon program, but a GOP filibuster over President Reagan's "Star Wars" policy is blocking Senate work on the bill.

The Democratic-run House voted 239-177 along party lines to pass the bill, amid predictions by Republicans that President Reagan would veto the measure because he objects to arms control restrictions added on the floor.

In the Senate, 60 votes, a three-fifths majority, are required to invoke cloture, the parliamentary device used to end the chamber's practice of unlimited debate.

Democrats, holding a 54-46 margin, need some GOP support to win. The latest attempt Wednesday ended with a 59-39 margin as five Republicans joined all Democrats to end the filibuster. The earlier votes ended in 52-36 and 58-41 tallies.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., announced Wednesday night he would not attempt to break the procedural blockade until after the Memorial Day recess. Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said it was up to Reagan to find GOP votes if he wants a defense bill this year.

Republicans, including Reagan, object to an amendment added by the Senate Armed Services Committee that would ban spending any money for "Star Wars" tests that violate the existing, narrow interpretation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty.

Reagan has asserted that he has the authority to unilaterally move to a "broad" view of the pact. That interpretation would permit trials of the Strategic Defense Initiative, the formal name of Reagan's 4-year-old plan to find a high-tech shield against Soviet nuclear attack.

Reagan's defense program would fare better in the Senate than the House, even though Democrats control both chambers. For example, the Senate version proposes $303 billion for the Pentagon in fiscal 1988, compared with the $288 billion in the House measure. Reagan sought $312 billion. The current Pentagon budget is $289 billion.

The House split sharply over the bill. On final passage, Democrats favored it by a 227-18 margin while Republicans voted against it by a 159-12 tally.

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said, "I think it's a pretty good bill."

But Rep. William Dickinson, R-Ala., ranking Republican on the same comittee, said: "This is a bad bill. I will ask the president to veto it and I believe he will."

The House added several arms control amendments, which Reagan says may cause him to veto the bill if they remain in the final version. The amendments were proposed by Democrats and approved in votes that went largely along party lines. They would:

—Require continued U.S. compliance with the SALT II treaty, the unratified 1979 pact that Reagan says will no longer guide his decisions on which nuclear weapons to build.

—Require the United States to adhere to the existing, narrow interpretation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty, a dispute which is also at the heart of the Senate fight. The narrow interpretation would ban most tests of Star Wars.

—Halt all but the smallest tests of U.S. nuclear weapons, part of a long-sought goal of arms control advocates who want a comprehensive nuclear test ban. Currently, open-air tests are prohibited but both superpowers conduct extensive underground test programs.

—Ban for another year final tests of the U.S. anti-satellite (ASAT) weapon. Congress has blocked those tests for the past 18 months over the administration's objections.

Another amendment, added Wednesday by voice vote, would ban U.S. combat troops from Nicaragua, unless an American ally such as Honduras or Costa Rica is attacked or unless U.S. citizens are taken hostage. Reagan has said repeatedly he has no intention of sending combat troops to fight Nicaragua, where U.S.-backed rebels battle the leftist Sandinista government.

The measure passed by the House includes money for thousands of ships, planes, and tanks. One provision allows $660 million as a down payment for two new aircraft carriers and another provides a 3 percent pay hike for America's 2.1 million uniformed military personnel.

The House measure also includes $3.1 billion for Star Wars, compared with the current $3.6 billion SDI budget.

Sale Plan Signed

try, it is also the market leader and low-cost producer in most of its businesses at a time when the textile industry is enjoying a strong operating environment."

In a leveraged buyout, a company is acquired with mostly borrowed money that is repaid with funds from the target company's cash flow or the sale of its assets. Burlington said Bankers Trust Co. will lead a syndicate of banks to provide up to $1.85 billion in senior financing, and Morgan Stanley, which oorganized the acquisition, will arrange additional financing for the tender offer.

Company spokesman Bryant Haskins said he did not know the total price of the buyout, or the effect the debt wouuld have on Burlington operations.

"We don't have any idea yet (how the debt will affect operations)," Haskins said.

"They're buying the company to operate it," said a BI-MS Holdings official in New York, who asked not to be named. "I think there are probably going to be some asset sales (because of the debt), but it's not a bust-up type of thing.

The Edelman group started the takeover battle last month when it offered the company board of directors $60 a share for all Burlington stock. The board responded by filing suit against Edelman and Dominion.

The investment group then made a tender offer directly to stockholders at $67 a share. The tender offer was increased to $72 a share after the Burlington board announced it would pay $80 a share for up to 29 percent of its outstanding shares.

Burlington rejected the tender offer and said Friday it had begun preliminary discussions with third parties interested in a possible restructuring of the company.

The General Assembly has enacted three laws in the past several weeks aimed at helping Burlington fight the takeover, one of which allows shareholders in North Carolina companies to veto hostile takeovers.

Gov. Jim Martin said today that company officials had not advised him of the leveraged buyout but that it appeared a shrewd move and that state government should support it.

"What Burlington is facing here is the prospect here that if they don't ... engage in the leveraged buyout, then an acquisition will take place by people who may ... be more of an unknown quantity," Martin said. "I guess this is their way of saying they would like to control the company's destiny through the existing management team."

Perry

meeting earlier Wednesday with the Boy's Club, Perry was approached by a child with a problem. The boy's parents smoked and drank a lot, and he wanted to know what he could do about it.

"The best thing I could tell that kid was to go to your dad and say 'Hey, Dad, let's have a boy to man talk' and tell him how much you love him and to try to cut it out. I'm hoping this kid will do that."

If drug testing is ever made 100 percent accurate and fool proof, Perry said he would be in favor of testing athletes, and that the players' associations probably would be too.

Now, he says, it's too easy to mix up samples, or make a mistake in some other way and ruin a reputation or a career.

Athletes that love their sport, he said, would never use drugs. "If you think drugs are going to help you (you're wrong) — it's only going to create a bigger problem for you."

Integon Insurance is sponsoring Perry as he goes to schools across the nation to warn the kids about drugs. Wednesday night's speech was co-sponsored by the Pitt County Mental Health Association — in observance of May as Mental Health Month — and the Pitt County Community Schools Program.

Meeting

The Greenville City Council conducted an executive session Wednesday night to review and discuss applications for the city managar.

Council members met with Dick Farris, who is serving as the city's staff resource person in the city manager search, during the meeting. Mayor Les Garner said no decisions were made in the session.

The search for a new city manager began following the March 16 dismissal of Gail Meeks.

House Panel Backs Ban On Open Beer

RALEIGH (AP) — The House Alcoholic Beverage Control Committee today unanimously approved a bill to ban open containers of beer in motor vehicles after approving an amendment to exempt buses.

Rep. Coy Privette, R-Cabarrus, said the current law that lets everyone but the driver drink beer in automobiles is contributing to drunken driving and littering.

"When you stop a car on suspicion of this, they just hand the beer to a sweetheart," he said.

Lt. Fred Patton of the state Highway Patrol said the law is needed more than ever since the drinking age increased to 21 because more young people have nowhere to drink except in cars.

The bus amendment was offered by Rep. Howard Chapin, D-Beaufort, after several lawmakers raised concerns that the bill might affect legislative junkets like the trip for a special session in Tarboro last month. Another amendment was adopted to make it clear the driver would not be charged for an open beer in the possession of a passenger.

Rep. Bertha Holt, D-Alamance, raised some objections about the intention of the bill, saying the law as it stands was approved in an effort to encourage designated drivers who remain sober while passengers can drink.

But Rep. Dan Lilley, D-Lenoir, said the vast majority of problems did not involve those situations.

After voting to approve the bill, the committee took less than a minute to unanimously defeat a bill that would have changed North Carolina's drinking age from 21 to 19.

Post Office Schedule

Happy Pole Winner
Driver Bill Elliott is a happy man as he prepares to climb from his car at the Charlotte Motor Speedway Wednesday, after he won the pole for Sunday's Coca-Cola 600 with a speed of 170.901 mph. (AP Laserphoto)

Sneva Says Indy 500 Could Be 'Pretty Wild'

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Tom Sneva is only half-kidding when he says Sunday's Indianapolis 500 may not be safe for the front-row spectators.

"It could be pretty wild," says the two-time winner, who has crashed four times during his 13 previous races at the Speedway and has crashed twice this month in practice.

Crashes, in fact, are on everybody's mind.

"I hope everybody uses his head and realizes his limitations," says Sneva, who will start from the inside of the eighth row. "The driver will have to be more on his toes. You'll see more brake pedal used than anytime since I've been here."

Track and weather conditions have cut speeds a bit, but the number of accidents has increased. In 13 days of practice and four days of time trials, there were 21 crashes and two wild, though harmless, spins.

Four drivers already have spent time in the hospital, including Dennis Firestone twice. Danny Ongais had an overnight stay in the hospital because of a concussion, while Firestone, Jim Crawford of Scotland and Johnny Parsons all remain in hospital beds recovering from a variety of fractures.

The final pre-race practice period was today, a testing session that also knocked Firestone out of the lineup a year ago.

Asked how he was preparing himself between qualifying last weekend and Sunday's race, Sneva said, "Plenty of cardiovascular exercise to get my heart ready."

Does that mean it's going to be a wide-open race?

"I think they'd better move the women and children back away from the front rows," said Sneva, joking but still serious.

There were only eight crashes, involving 10 cars, and one serious injury last year before the race. The race itself was very clean, with only a few minor incidents and no injuries.

It seems as if everyone has a different reason for the high number of crashes this month.

Some have attributed it to a combination of continuing hot weather and the amount of rubber laid down by the cars on the 2½-mile oval, making it more slippery than usual.

Others say it is a problem some teams have had combining the chassis setup with the radial tires brought to the Speedway this year for the first time.

Still others insist that most, if not all, the crashes are brought on by driver error, drivers trying too hard to get speed that isn't there out of the cars.

Finally, there is equipment failure, caused in many cases by the extreme demands put on pieces of a car traveling at straightaway speeds in excess of 220 mph and through turns above 200. Firestone's latest crash has now been blamed on a broken wheel.

Whatever the actual reason, everyone is wary.

"The handling characteristics of the cars change constantly," said Kevin Cogan, who was second to winner Bobby Rahal last May. "Even in last year's race, my car was never really right. We have controls in the cockpit for some adjustments to aerodynamics and I altered something on the car on every single green flag lap last year.

"It's even worse this year," added Cogan, who also crashed in practice this month. "On the day I qualified, I went out to practice in the hottest part of the afternoon and did two laps pretty comfortably at 207. We put the car in line, went through tech and when I got back onto the track, in cooler air, and the car had serious understeer coming out the turns. As far as we can tell, the only difference was the air temperature."

Cogan pointed out that even pole-winner Mario Andretti, who is the favorite to win Sunday's race, has had his problems.

"Mario really knows what he's doing. He's better than a lot of guys out there. But I was out there watching in practice one day and saw him do one lap at 215, then a few minutes later, he was doing about 202 and was having problems getting past a slower car.

Stung Bill Elliott Stings Field By Grabbing Pole

HARRISBURG (AP) — Although Bill Elliott was stung by a fine, he compensated for that disappointment by taking the pole for Sunday's NASCAR Coca Cola 600 with a record-breaking qualifying run.

Elliott, driving a Ford Thunderbird, posted a four-lap average speed of 170.901 mph Wednesday at Charlotte Motor Speedway. The Georgian led an all-out assault in which 19 drivers unofficially surpassed the speedway's four-lap qualifying record of 167.078 set last October by Tim Richmond in a Chevrolet.

The fastest 28 exceeded the World 600 time trial record of 165.194, set in 1980 by Cale Yarborough.

Elliott's run enabled him to pass Bobby Allison, who qualified second in a Buick at 170.160.

"I love it, I love it!" Elliott said as perhaps the biggest qualifying day crowd in the 1.5-mile track's history roared approval. "No doubt about it."

Earlier, Elliott and Dale Earnhardt had been fined $2,500 for fender-banging incidents in last Sunday's running of The Winston special event at the speedway. Geoff Bodine was fined $1,000 for his part in the incidents.

"I really wanted this pole bad to sort of offset all that other stuff that went on," Elliott said. "Everything felt good and went just right during the qualifying run. I couldn't ask for anything better."

Because of a power surge that momentarily disrupted electrical devices at the track, NASCAR officials had to sort out the qualifying order behind Elliott and Allison. Causing the most confusion was uncertainty about who had taken third place, Earnhardt in his Chevrolet or Ken Schrader in a Ford. Both had four-lap averages in the 169.7 mph bracket.

Harry Gant was unofficially listed in fifth starting position for Sunday's 400-lap, $726,675 race with a speed of 168.562 in a Chevrolet. In positions 6 through 10 were Larry Pearson, Kyle Petty, Phil Parsons, Brett Bodine and Alan Kulwicki.

The top 20 spots were decided with the remainder of the 40-car field to be filled today.

Among those failing to qualify in the first round was Geoff Bodine, whose Chevrolet spun out between turns 3-4 on the second lap. He figured to be among Elliott's top challengers.

Allison's son, Davey, in contention with Elliott for the Winston Million Bonus going to a winner of three of the sport's Big Four races — the Daytona 500, Winston 500, Coca Cola 600 and Southern 500 — qualified at 167.465 mph.

Qualifiers for Sunday's Coca-Cola 600 NASCAR Winston Cup race at the Charlotte Motor Speedway, with starting position, driver, type of car and qualifying speed. Positions 21-40 will be determined Thursday:

1. Bill Elliott, Ford, 170.901
2. Bobby Allison, Buick, 170.160
3. Dale Earnhardt, Chevrolet, 169.733

Bill, Dale, Geoff Fined

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Drivers Bill Elliott and Dale Earnhardt were fined $2,500 apiece and Geoff Bodine was fined $1,000 because of several altercations during last week's running of The Winston, NASCAR officials said Wednesday.

"We feel the penalties imposed will serve notice we are not going to condone this kind of activity," NASCAR Winston Cup director Dick Beaty told a news conference at the Charlotte Motor Speedway, where the three drivers are practicing for Sunday's Coca-Cola 600.

"We have to preserve our integrity, and we're prepared to take additional steps if necessary to maintain our professional posture," Beaty said. "Incidents of this nature are simply not going to be tolerated."

Earnhardt and Elliott also were ordered to post $7,500 bond each. The bond will be returned to each driver over the next seven races if no other incidents occur, officials said.

Bodine was required to post a $4,000 bond to be returned over then next four races should no further incidents occur.

The three drivers were invited to appear at the news conference but Elliott was the only one who showed up. Track officials said Earnhardt turned down the invitation, while Bodine had indicated he might appear but did not.

NASCAR officials met with representatives of five driving teams Tuesday night, two days after Earnhardt, of Kannapolis, N.C., won the $200,000 race by taking the final 10-lap sprint at the Charlotte speedway.

The first altercation came when front-row starters Elliott and Bodine collided in the first turn after the start of the race's final 10-lap segment. The race's format called for three segments of 75, 50 and 10 laps, for a total of 202.5 miles.

The second confrontation occurred when Elliott, who cut a tire in a collision with Earnhardt in turn four on the fourth lap, hit Earnhardt's car on

Pirates Won't Face Lewis

Mike Martin, coach of the Seminoles, said that he would throw Chris Pollack or Jerry Nielsen, both lefthanders. He said he learned that the Pirates had only four lefthanded batters and would not use Lewis because he was a righty.

The Pirates and Seminoles collide in the 7 p.m. game of the Atlantic NCAA Regionals tonight. The game will be broadcast locally over WRQR-FM.

Lewis, the ace of the Seminole staff, was expected to get the call earlier. He opened the championship game at the NCAA finals last year for Florida State.

"After the 1984 regional, when we sat out and watched them play after being eliminated by them," Martin said, "there is no way we will overlook (East Carolina). They are traditionally strong. Year after year, they play good baseball. The only edge that we will have is playing in our own stadium and sleeping in our own beds."

The Seminoles' leading hitter, Steve Taddeo, may not play in the game. He is suffering from an iron deficiency and is in weak condition. Taddeo was hitting .361 coming into the tournament.

"We will have to play at our very best," Pirate coach Gary Overton said, "to beat a team like Florida State. I think it's important for us not to get down early in the game."

In other news, the first two games of the day have been switched. South Alabama and Central Michigan collided at 11 a.m. and Miami was to go against Georgia Southern at 3 p.m., a reverse of the original schedule.

Milwaukee Ends Losing String

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The Milwaukee Brewers have finally struck a happy medium between 13 consecutive wins and 12 straight losses.

"One in a row is very exciting," Manager Tom Trebelhorn said after the Brewers snapped their 12-game tailspin Wednesday by defeating the Chicago Sox 5-1 as Cecil Cooper, Greg Brock and Robin Yount homered.

The Brewers opened the season with a record-tying 13 victories but Wednesday's triumph was their first since May 2.

"It's a big load off our backs," second baseman Jim Gantner said. "Hopefully, we can stay more consistent instead of being a streaky team. I wouldn't mind another winning streak, though."

And proving that the Brewers are starting to think big again, relief ace Dan Plesac, who pitched a scoreless ninth inning, pointed out that "we lost 12 in a row and we're only two games back (in the American League East)."

Milwaukee picked up a game on New York, which lost to Oakland 7-5, and slipped into second place by four percentage points over Toronto, a 5-4 loser in 10 innings to California. In other AL games, it was Boston 7, Kansas City 1; Seattle 6, Baltimore 2; Minnesota 8, Cleveland 2, and Detroit 6, Texas 4.

Ironically, Milwaukee beat Joel Davis, whose only victory of the season ended the Brewers' 13-0 start last month. Davis allowed one hit until the fourth when Yount walked and Cooper, who failed to get back from his Houston home in time for Tuesday night's game, hit his first home run of the season.

"Cooper was the key," Trebelhorn said. "That homer woke everyone up. His tardiness had put him in the doghouse. There's no way you can define a punishment for that. It's how he repays the ballclub — and he repaid the ballclub."

Winning pitcher Juan Nieves held the White Sox to one run and five hits and struck out 11 in eight innings.

"During the streak, everyone has felt distraught, angry and frustrated at times," Trebelhorn said. "But they handled it very well. Every day the guys came back ready to play. The ballclub never got too up or too down. The main thing is we stayed together. We didn't have a clubhouse brawl. I didn't kick one can over."

Athletics 7, Yankees 5

Rookie Mark McGwire's 14th home run of the season, a two-run drive in the second inning, helped Oakland hand Charles Hudson his first setback after six victories. McGwire, the AL home run leader, homered for the third game in a row. The A's had four other hits, including a triple by Alfredo Griffin and an RBI double by Mike Davis, in their four-run second.

Hudson's 2.02 ERA soared to 2.68. He gave up five runs before leaving with one out in the third. Winner Gene Nelson replaced starter Eric Plunk with the bases loaded in the third, struck out Dan Pasqua, retired Gary Ward on a grounder to get out of trouble and pitched 5 2-3 scoreless innings. New York's Willie Randolph hit a three-run homer off Jay Howell in the ninth.

Angels 5, Blue Jays 4

Wally Joyner hit his ninth home run with one out in the bottom of the 10th inning, the first run off Toronto relief ace Tom Henke, 0-1, in 21 2-3 innings and 19 appearances.

The Blue Jays rallied for three runs in the ninth to tie the game 4-4 and spoil 31-year-old Jack Lazorko's bid for his first major-league victory.

Sportsworld scored early for a 5-2 lead and then held off Eveready to take a 5-4 victory in the North State Little League Wednesday.

Eveready scored twice in the top of the first inning to take the lead, but Sportsworld came back in the bottom of the frame to score three. Two of those crossed when Shea Harper hit an inside-the-park home run.

In the second, Sportsworld put it away with two more runs for the 5-2 lead. Garry Haddock walked and moved up on two wild pitches, scoring on Joel Fickling's single. Fickling took second on a passed ball and scored on Russell Oats' single.

Eveready rallied for two in the fourth, but fell short.

Oats led the Sportsworld hitting with two while Jay Moye and Danny Via each had two for Eveready. Moye drove in three of the four Eveready runs.

Exchange scored all six of its runs in the fourth inning.

To The Sports Editor:

I was elated when I heard that a bill was introduced in the State House calling for the "Big 4" to play ECU each year in football. If the bill passes, it could be the most significant plus for the Pirates in 15 years.

UNC ranks first at.....49,386
State ranks second at.....42,443
ECU ranks third at.....28,616
Wake ranks fourth at.....24,512
Duke ranks fifth at.....21,577

State vs. ECU, ave. 53,777 (27 percent over average attendance)
Duke vs. ECU, ave. 30,600 (42 percent over average attendance)

As anyone can see, the fans in North Carolina want to see the Pirates play! Of the 10 largest crowds in our state's history, ECU has been involved in six of them.

Some opponents of the bill claim that the "Big 4" should not venture to Greenville to play before only 35,000 people. Well, what happened in 1978 when UNC went to Richmond and played before 9,700 and in '83 when Wake went to Richmond and performed for 6,923. These are just two of the examples where the "Big 4" has ventured to smaller surroundings. Not to mention the fact that ECU has pledged to expand Ficklen Stadium to 50,000 by 1989.

In order to allow all the citizens of North Carolina to participate in the excitement of in-state rivalries, the "Big 4" must play ECU and must come to Greenville!

John Moses' two-run double in the sixth inning broke a 2-2 tie and Alvin Davis and Ken Phelps hit solo home runs while Mike Morgan allowed eight hits. One of them was Jim Dwyer's two-run homer in the third inning, the 13th consecutive game in which the Orioles have hit at least one home run. It wasn't enough to prevent an end to Baltimore's four-game winning streak.

The Mariners scored three runs in the sixth off Ken Dixon, who started the inning in relief of starter John Habyan. Davis led off with a double and took third on Mike Kingery's single. Both runners scored on Moses' double and Moses scored on Phil Bradley's single.

Twins 8, Indians 2

Tom Brunansky hit his third career grand slam with two out in the sixth inning to break a 2-2 tie and Juan Berenguer struck out eight in 6 1-3 innings. Brunansky hit a 3-2 fastball from knuckleballer Tom Candiotti, 1-6, for his seventh home run of the season after Kirby Puckett singled and Kent Hrbek and Roy Smalley walked. Moments earlier, Brunansky lined a 2-2 pitch just inside the foul pole.

Tigers 6, Rangers 4

Darrell Evans hit a three-run homer and Dan Petry pitched seven strong innings as Detroit won for the seventh time in eight games. After allowing three runs in the first inning on homers by Scott Fletcher and Pete O'Brien, Petry settled down until the eighth.

Loser Bobby Witt allowed four runs and five hits while walking five and striking out eight in 5 2-3 innings. After the game, the Rangers placed Witt on the 15-day disabled list with a strained muscle in his right shoulder.

Pirates Finally Win For Dorn

By BILL BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

His first four starts this season resulted in three Pittsburgh victories, but no decisions for Taylor, who was recalled by the Pirates on April 23 after he was the last player cut in spring training by Manager Jim Leyland.

Taylor tried again Wednesday night and got his first major-league victory, a 5-3 decision over the Houston Astros.

"It's about time," said Taylor, who was backed by homers from Sid Bream, Barry Bonds and Andy Van Slyke for all of Pittsburgh's runs. "This feels almost as good as it did when I first got called up."

The Pirates also got outstanding relief work from Hipolito Pena, who pitched hitless ball for the last 2 2-3 innings for his first save. Taylor allowed six hits, including solo homers by Jose Cruz and Alan Ashby, in 6 1-3 innings.

"I watched the last two outs of the seventh inning on the bench, then I figured I'd better get in here and get some ice on my arm," Taylor said. "Hipolito did a great job."

In other National League games, Cincinnati beat Chicago 6-2, San Francisco outscored Montreal 9-7, St. Louis edged Atlanta 5-4 and New York defeated San Diego 10-3. Los Angeles at Philadelphia was rained out.

Bream hit a two-run homer in the third and Bonds added another two-run shot in the sixth. The Pirates won two of three against Houston and finished 6-3 on the homestand, their most successful since they posted the same record between Aug. 16-25, 1985.

"We're playing good aggressive baseball," Bonds said. "Sid Bream's having an outstanding year. He's doing everything he's been expected to do. We're battling. It's a much better atmosphere."

"Different people are doing it every night," Leyland said. "That's what I like. I know these guys (the Astros) just got swept by the Cubs, but they're the Western Division champs. It was a quality homestand and a quality series."

The Astros, meanwhile, have lost five of their last six and are tied with Atlanta for third place, 3½ games behind first-place San Francisco.

"We have to start hitting better," Manager Hal Lanier said. "You're not going to win too many games getting five or six hits. Our pitching has generally been good, but only one or two guys are hitting the way their record says they're capable. We haven't hit over a period of time."

Cardinals 5, Braves 4

St. Louis took over first place in the East, .006 ahead of Chicago, when Ozzie Smith singled home the tie-breaking run in the ninth inning against Atlanta.

The Cardinals took advantage of shaky relief pitching by the Braves to overcome a 4-2 deficit. St. Louis tied it 4-4 with two runs on only one hit in the seventh, when reliever Jim Acker walked Jack Clark, forcing in one run, then hit Willie McGee with a pitch.

In the ninth, with Gene Garber, 5-3, pitching for Atlanta, Vince Coleman singled, stole his 26th base of the season and scored on Smith's single. Smith failed to bunt twice before Coleman's steal, then said he tried to hit the ball to the right side of the infield to advance Coleman to third.

"Lo and behold, I tried to hit it there, and I hit it where nobody was," Smith said. "I was just trying to get the runner over and it went in the hole."

Ozzie Virgil hit a solo homer for Atlanta in the second inning, giving him eight homers in his last eight games. He has failed to homer in only one of those eight games.

Giants 9, Expos 7

San Francisco used 15 hits to rally from a 3-0 deficit against Montreal, with Chili Davis' fourth single of the game driving in the go-ahead run in the eighth inning.

Jose Uribe led off the eighth with a single against Randy St. Claire, 2-3, and stole second before scoring on the single by Davis, who later scored on a wild pitch.

The Giants, trailing by three, scored six runs in the fourth, when Matt Williams and Jeffrey Leonard each hit two-run doubles and Mike Aldrete and Mike Krukow added RBI singles.

Montreal tied it with three runs in its half of the fourth when Herm Winningham, who had three RBI, singled home two and then scored the tying run on Casey Candaele's single.

Andres Galarraga's homer gave Montreal a 7-6 lead in the fifth, but the Giants tied it on Candy Maldonado's single.

Reds 6, Cubs 2

Cincinnati snapped a four-game losing streak as Barry Larkin, Nick Esasky and Dave Parker homered and Bill Gullickson pitched a seven-hit complete game against Chicago, which had won five straight.

Larkin's solo homer off loser Greg Maddux, 3-3, made it 1-0 in the third and Esasky followed with a two-run homer in the fourth.

Mets 10, Padres 3

Rafael Santana, hitting .351 in the last 12 games, hit a two-run double in a six-run fourth inning that carried New York over San Diego.

"Frankly, I'm surprised he's hitting that well," Mets Manager Dave Johnson said of his usually light-hitting shortstop. "He always gets into trouble early in the season for whatever reason. He always seems to eventually come around."

Mets catcher Gary Carter, who also had two RBI, started the fourth off with an RBI single off Padres starter Ed Whitson, 4-6, that center fielder Stan Jefferson misplayed, allowing a second run to score. After a walk, Santana's two-run double gave the Mets a 4-2 lead.

Lenny Dykstra added an RBI single and the final run scored on shortstop Luis Salazar's error.

Rick Aguilera, 4-2, worked six innings for the victory.

Oilers Take Second Win

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Overtime seems to bring out the best in the Edmonton Oilers, and they have the record to prove it.

"We knew we could score if we kept playing the same type of hockey we did in the last 10 minutes of the third period," said right wing Jarri Kurri, who got the winning goal in Wednesday night's 3-2 overtime victory over the Philadelphia Flyers in Game 2 of the NHL's Stanley Cup final series.

The victory was Edmonton's fifth straight in overtime dating back to the regular season. In the last three years, they have won their last six overtime playoff games.

The dramatic victory before 17,502 roaring fans at the Northlands Coliseum gave the Oilers a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven series which resumes with Game 3 in Philadelphia on Friday night.

"We have a very good record in overtime, so we felt good going into overtime," Kurri said. "We felt pumped up."

The Oilers got a big lift from Glenn Anderson's third-period goal that tied the game and set the stage for Kurri's textbook goal 6:50 into overtime. Anderson had the game-winning goal in Edmonton's previous three overtime victories.

"He swooped in and made that play," Edmonton Coach Glen Sather said. "He's a great skater; he can do things out of control. I don't think anyone else could have made that play."

But Derrick Smith tied it for Philadelphia with a goal at 13:20 and then the Flyers went ahead on a goal by Brian Propp at 16:23.

The Flyers continued to play well throughout the second period and wound up with a 2-1 lead after 40 minutes. At that point, they were outshooting the Oilers 27-16.

"We took over and (Edmonton goaltender) Grant Fuhr kept them in the game," Flyers defenseman Mark Howe said.

Fuhr was also there in the third period for the Oilers, only this time he didn't have to work as hard. The Oilers outshot the Flyers 15-5 and finally got Anderson's spectacular goal to tie it at 2-2.

"I thought we had to play a better forechecking game and we did, except for the first 15 minutes of the third period," Flyers Coach Mike Keenan said. "We let down and gave them too many scoring opportunities then and they got a goal out of it."

Hextall, meanwhile, was strong in goal for the Flyers.

"I thought he did an outstanding job for us," Keenan said after watching the rookie make 14 saves in the third period. "He came up big for us in spite of all their offensive opportunities. He played a strong game. He played extremely strong in the overtime period."

Had Coffey thought of taking the shot himself?

"I did, but then their defenseman went down and I couldn't see the goaltender," Coffey said.

So he passed over to Kurri, as he had done so often in the past.

"Wayne made a hell of a play there and a hell of a pass to Coffey," Kurri said. "Coffey held onto it and took his time and Hextall came out and Coffey came out, too.

"I was standing by the net and waiting and waiting and Paul made a nice pass and I had a half-open net to shoot into."

The participants, as well as the coaches, generally agreed that they had been involved in a classic hockey game.

"I think both the goaltenders played well," Gretzky said. "I don't think there were any bad goals. We just got lucky and put one more in than they did. It was as simple as that."

Motta Quits Mav Post

DALLAS (AP) — Dick Motta refused to apologize for considering head coaching jobs elsewhere in the NBA, then stepped down as head coach of the Dallas Mavericks.

"Friendship is never having to say you're sorry," Motta said in a terse, one-minute, 43-second statement at a news conference Wednesday.

After reading a prepared statement, Motta said, "Thank you," and walked out of the room, refusing to answer questions.

Motta had an 808-750 regular-season record in 19 seasons in the NBA with Chicago, Washington and Dallas. He was named NBA Coach of the Year with the Bulls in 1970-71 and won the NBA title with Washington in 1978.

Motta directed the Mavericks to a franchise-high 55 victories and the Midwest Division championship in his seventh and final season with the club. But the team's playoff hopes ended quickly when the Seattle SuperSonics beat Dallas in four games.

Motta was upset at the criticism directed at him by Mavericks fans, and occasionally by the front office, because he turned his thoughts to other coaching jobs once Dallas was ousted from the playoffs. He removed himself from consideration by the Los Angeles Clippers but was still interviewing with the New York Knicks.

Motta has been quoted as saying he was not sure the Mavericks could win a championship and that the Mavericks had not acquired the center they needed to compete for the title.

The team received phone calls and mail protesting Motta's statements and some fans threatened to cancel their season tickets, Dallas General Manager Norm Sonju said.

Motta's statement Wednesday made it clear he did not plan to apologize.

"I cannot apologize for any of my actions or quotes. There never will be a job or position important enough in my lifetime to compromise my values or give up any part of my integrity. So, therefore, I am retiring as coach of the Dallas Mavericks," Motta said.

Although he used the word "retiring," his remarks were generally interpreted as a resignation from the Mavericks rather than a retirement from coaching.

the back stretch during the cool-down lap, then moved in front of him on pit road as Earnhardt drove toward victory lane. The crews of the two drivers exchanged heated words as well.

The third was when Kyle Petty and Rusty Wallace got into a shoving match in the garage area after the race and the two had to be separated by Kyle's father, Richard Petty.

NASCAR officials said Earnhardt was penalized for unsportsmanlike conduct during the incident with Elliott between the third and fourth turns. Elliott was fined for ramming Earnhardt's car on the back stretch following the checkered flag, they said.

Bodine was fined for trying to ram Earnhardt's car following the checkered flag, officials said.

Elliott said he felt his penalty was a little stiff. But he said he would not fight it.

"I did something wrong and I'm willing to pay for it," he said. "Yes, I do think the fine is a little stiff, especially since it's my first incident."

Elliott also said he felt that NASCAR officials needed to do something to stop the recent problems.

"I think this is something that has been building up over a long period of time and something needed to be done to put a stop to it," he said.

He added that he has apologized to Earnhardt for his part in the incident, but hinted that Earnhardt's fine may not have been high enough.

"I'd put up $10,000 to win $200,000 anytime," he said.

Earnhardt could not be reached for comment about the penalties.

Beaty said the drivers can appeal the fines, but added, "I think they'll be wasting their time."

"This is something that has been going on and we've got to stop it and now's the time to stop," he said. "It's not just these three drivers. There are others. Everyone will be dealt with in the future, appropriately."

CBS Encourages Affiliates To Put On Smiley Faces For New Season

By DIANE HAITHMAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — CBS News has put its recent and much-publicized financial difficulties out of sight and out of mind, and its leaders advised the network's affiliated stations Wednesday to do the same.

In the final speech of the 1987 CBS Television Network Affiliates Convention at the Century Plaza Hotel here, CBS News President Howard Stringer told the gathered representatives that he did not want to talk about the recent financial problems.

"Sometimes the sounds of our past reverberate around the (CBS') Broadcast Center like the chains of Marley's Ghost, so loud they threaten to drown put the future," he said.

Still, the chain-rattling spirit to whom Stringer referred — the recent cost reductions in the CBS News operation that led to 215 layoffs and a 10 percent cut in its $300 million budget — haunted the affiliates' three-day conference.

But, Stringer chose to downplay the cuts, trumpeting the high quality of the network's "Evening News," "60 Minutes," the revival of "Person to Person" with Diane Sawyer and "Seven Days in Moscow," a documentary that takes a look into Soviet life and goes into production this week.

Stringer said the network's low-rated "West 57th" news magazine program is on its way up, and that Charles Kuralt and Robert "Shad" Northshield, former producer of the "CBS Sunday Morning" show Kuralt anchors, will team up on "Try to Remember," a new venture and prime-time pilot.

Although quicker than Stringer to acknowledge CBS News' troubles, veteran anchorman Dan Rather, who appeared after his boss' speech, echoed the reassurance that CBS News has not been paralyzed by financial woes.

"Paralysis? Bull! We're too busy running to be paralyzed by anything," Rather said, noting that he planned to rush from the Century Plaza to hop a plane for the Soviet Union to begin work on "Seven Days in Moscow."

"Yes, we are all concerned in one way or another (about finances), but you can bank on it — you will have the best damn newscasts ever made," Rather offered as a rallying cry before striding off the stage.

Stringer's decision not to address financial issues directly was just fine with the station representatives, most of whom were in an ebullient mood Wednesday after a look at CBS' nine new entertainment shows Tuesday.

"I don't know why he should address (the cutbacks)," said George Lyons of WWMT-TV in Kalamazoo, Mich. "It's an inside issue within the company, and it's up to them to run it as they see fit. And they're doing a hell of a fine job."

Dan Bates of KSLA-TV in Shreveport, La., said, "The issue has been addressed so much, there's nothing else to say. The past is the past. I don't think this was the proper forum for it."

Gregory Peck Plays President In Film

By JOSEPH GELMIS
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

At 71, Gregory Peck looks every bit the elder statesman — so it's not really surprising, in his last two roles, to find him playing American presidents.

Four years ago, as Abraham Lincoln in the TV mini-series "The Blue and the Gray," Peck freed the slaves and saved the Union. And, as the president in "Amazing Grace and Chuck," Peck negotiates nuclear disarmament with the Soviet premier.

Peck looks as much the stalwart hero today as he did 25 years ago, when he earned his Oscar for "To Kill a Mockingbird" as a defender of justice in a racial trial. His hair is gray, but abundant. His memory is keen. And he has fervent moral convictions that he expresses eloquently, in that rich baritone of his — calm, kindly and reasonable. One of the things he believes in is giving peace a chance.

"We hope," says Peck, "that people will walk out of this little movie with the idea that they don't have to be totally helpless; that they won't go on thinking, 'It's in the hands of those bunglers in Washington and Moscow and sooner or later they're going to bungle us into a nuclear exchange and there's nothing we can do about it.'"

Peck is an outspoken liberal. He attended a Latin American Film Festival in Havana last December and a Soviet disarmament forum in Moscow in February. He has also received the highest honor the United States of America bestows on a civilian, the Medal of Freedom Award, for his work in movies.

According to Mike Newell, who directed him in "Amazing Grace and Chuck," Peck "is a huge presence ... the sort of man you believe would do things for altruistic reasons."

"Amazing Grace and Chuck" is a modest-budget ($4.4 million) fable about a 12-year-old Montana boy named Chuck (Joshua Zuehlke) who is spooked by a class visit to a Minuteman-3 ICBM missile silo. In protest against nuclear weapons, he gives up the thing he does best, Little League pitching for a top state team.

Chuck's gesture inspires similar responses from professional athletes, beginning with Amazing Grace, high-scorer of the Boston Celtics. Their friendship escalates into a global crusade that teams athletes and kids against the military-industrial cliques on both sides of the Iron Curtain.

Lorne Greene To Return In Syndicated 'Bonanza'

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lorne Greene returns to the Ponderosa in his role as patriarch Ben Cartwright in a new and updated version of "Bonanza," the hit Western series that had a historic 14-year run on NBC.

"Bonanza — The Next Generation," a two-hour syndicated movie, goes into production this summer for showing in January 1988, with Greene the only member of the original cast in the film.

"If it's successful we'll do more," said David Dortort, creator and executive producer of the 1959-73 series, which was the first TV Western made in color.

"I've been waiting a long time to bring this show back," said Dortort. "We were waiting for an appropriate time, and now everyone says it's time to bring back the Western. There's a whole generation out there that's never seen a television Western."

The movie will be set on the Ponderosa Ranch, in the Sierra Nevada near Lake Tahoe. Little Joe is missing in the Spanish-American War, but his wife, Annabelle, and son Joshua are on the ranch.

Other characters are Mr. Mack, the cook, Charley Poke, the ranch foreman, and Hunk, the son of Hoss Cartwright.

Cartwright discovers in the story that Hoss had a son and that he is wanted for murder. He must find the real killer to free his grandson.

Dortort said the movie would be set a generation after the original "Bonanza."

"We'll have a few innovations," he said. "It'll be the turn of the century and we'll relate to the times as well as to the contemporary audience. This will not be an old-fashioned Western."

"Bonanza" during its run on NBC was heavily promoted by the network and its parent company at the time, RCA, which had just developed the first TV set to show both color and black and white.

Greene was the patriarch of the vast Ponderosa Ranch and his sons were Adam, played by Pernell Roberts, Little Joe, played by Michael Landon, and Hoss, played by Dan Blocker.

Hugh Downs Has 'Serious' Thoughts About Quitting

L.A. Times-Washington Post

NEW YORK — Hugh Downs, co-anchor of "20-20" since its second broadcast in June 1978, says he was so angry when ABC said it would shift the series from Thursday to Friday nights this fall that he began thinking of leaving.

"I'm not happy about it," Downs said Wednesday of the shift. "My contract will be up in October, and I've had some serious thoughts about whether I want to go in some other direction."

But he will stay with the durable newsmagazine at least until then, partly to see how "20-20" fares in its new time slot, partly to see what ABC offers him in a new contract, he said. He wants more time off, not more money, he said.

Barbara Walters, his co-anchor on the ABC News magazine series, said that she was not happy with the move to Friday nights either, preferring that it remain scheduled Thursday nights, where it has survived the competition and prospered for seven seasons.

"But on the other hand," she said Wednesday, "I don't think this is the kiss of death .... I think we'll be OK. I don't feel any panic here."

There has been considerable uproar, however, as some ABC News staffers believe "20-20's" new home Friday nights is a graveyard. They do not regard Friday as a good night for serious news, and the program will be competing against NBC's new "Private Eye" and CBS' still-chirping "Falcon Crest" (which is produced by Lorimar Telepictures, the company headed by Walters' husband, Merv Adelson).

Downs said that he realized many complex factors went into ABC's decision to move "20-20." But he said he agreed with ABC News President Roone Arledge, who, in a staff memo, praised the program but pilloried ABC programmers, whose prime-time schedule last season was third in the ratings for the third consecutive season.

Regardless of the program's strength, importance and success, Arledge wrote, it "simply could not prevail against those seeking a way of out a historic entertainment failure." An ABC spokeswoman responded to Arledge's remarks by saying that the network appreciates his concern and that, while the "20-20" move was "a tough decision," it nonetheless was in "the best interests of the company as whole."

Since 1960, Pitt County's population has increased from 69,942 to approximately 95,000.

Joan Rivers Talks, But Not Of Fox

L.A. Times-Washington Post

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — "First of all," said Joan Rivers, opening her spit-and-fire routine at Caesars Palace, "you are looking at a woman who has finally been able to make Johnny Carson happy."

It was the embattled comedian's first public appearance outside Hollywood since she was forced to leave last Friday night as permanent guest host of "The Late Show Starring Joan Rivers" for Fox Broadcasting Co.

Was she indirectly poking fun at Carson's love life? Was she perhaps conceding defeat, saying Johnny really did have all the late-night ratings marbles? Or was Rivers, whose face and voice was supposed to have launched a full-scale competitive fourth network, but did not, simply delivering a good line?

No matter. It was just about Rivers' only, however oblique, reference to her tense, unsettled situation with Fox as she performed a pair of 40-minute monologues pre- and post-midnight Tuesday. The word "Fox," in any context, never crossed her lips.

As for her future in television, the queen of "Can we talk?" adroitly clammed up. She was so successful that at another point, when, chatting with a woman in the audience, she said, "I guess it's not my week," there was hardly a ripple of laughter.

Better To Give

On this day in 1881, Clara Barton organized the first American chapter of the Red Cross. There are now more than 3,000 Red Cross chapters in this country. The Red Cross was established in 1863 by Swiss philanthropist Henri Dunant. He gave so much of his time and money to the organization that his business ventures failed. For 15 years, no one knew his whereabouts. In 1890, he was finally located in an almshouse. In 1901, he was a co-winner of the first Nobel Peace Prize.

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY May 22

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Today finds you able to get to those who have the knowledge or the power to make your dreams come true. But wait for more specific plans before taking action.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Get your tasks well organized. Curb that tendency to go after your personal aims too quickly.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): A fine pal is helpful with your personal goals. Try not to be too demanding with your mate.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You have an opportunity to get a worldly matter infine order. Not a good day to push your personal wishes.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You get a sudden inspiration! Get a good start on your activities. Venture out and be social tonight.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Find the proper way to keep any promises you have made. Don't go off on any tangents that could prove dangerous.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): A long talk with an outside partner may bring good results. Be patient with your mate and don't criticize.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): You know how to handle present tasks more efficiently. Don't permit an associate to bother you.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Plan time for the recreations you like. Be most conscientious in handling your work load.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Make everything at home as you want it to be, then handle difficult problems in creative matters.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Study every phase of the messages you get, then answer them. Be PP

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): You can handle your practical affairs well. Be careful in your correspondence or telephone calls.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): You can gain your personal ambitions now. Don't do anything that could endanger your security.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, will be most capable at understanding idealistic ideas and carry through with them to a successful conclusion, but the adulthood is apt to be unstable in this area. Self control will soon be learned, however, and then much success is possible here.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	6 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♠

The simple approach to hands such as today's is to take every finesse in sight. The intelligent way is to decide which you need and which you don't.

The ability to add is all that was required during the auction. North took South's announced 16–18 points, threw in his own 18, and came up with enough for a small slam but too little for a grand. So he bid what he expected to make.

West made the safe lead of the top of his spade sequence, and declarer could count eight top tricks. Therefore, he would have to develop tricks in both minor suits to bring his total to the required 12. How should he tackle clubs? How should he play the diamonds?

The decision in clubs is easy. Since you are going to need at least two tricks in the suit, you might as well finesse. The diamond answer is equally simple. You don't know how to play the suit until you know how many club tricks you are going to make.

Win the first trick in hand and try the club finesse. If it loses, you are going to need four tricks from the diamonds, so you will need to take two finessses. The club finesse wins, though. What now?

You still don't know—East could be holding up the king of clubs. So you return to hand and repeat the the club finesse. When it wins again, you need only three diamond tricks. The percentage way to play the suit is to lead a diamond to the ace. If the king drops, you have three tricks. If it doesn't, cross to the table, twice if necessary, to lead diamonds toward your hand. That guarantees three tricks against any holding xcept four diamonds to the king in he West hand, and you could never do anything about that.

States Actively Compete For Super Collider

By MARK A. STEIN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

BERKELEY, Calif. — Rarely have the arcane workings of high-energy physics captured the fancy of so many people as they have this spring, as quarks, leptons and other esoterica have joined highway projects and school budgets on political agendas in statehouses from Sacramento to Albany and from Olympia to Tallahassee.

That is what the federal government has wrought with its proposal to spend $4.4 billion to build the latest, biggest and most powerful atom smasher ever — the superconducting super collider.

No fewer than 31 states are studying at least 52 possible sites for the project, which promises to generate billions of dollars of new business activity, hundreds of millions of dollars in added tax revenue, thousands of high-paying jobs, plus the prospects of the spinoff of related local industries.

Considered the world's largest and costliest scientific instrument, the huge machine, an oval-shaped atom smasher that would measure 53 miles in circumference, would more than earn the double superlatives in its name. For one thing, it would include 10,000 exotic superconducting magnets buried in a tunnel long enough to encircle Manhattan and San Francisco side-by-side.

For another, it would be 20 times more powerful than the most powerful such collider working today. And, proponents assert, if authorized by Congress this year as expected, it could be opening new vistas in science by 1996.

"The super collider holds the potential for a ... revolution in science, education, technology and commerce," Secretary of Energy John S. Herrington said when he announced the federal government's decision to build the machine. "It will have spinoffs, discoveries and innovations that will profoundly touch every human being."

States hoping to land the super-collider project are busy conducting soil tests, preparing a list of assets for federal decision-makers to consider, and trying to stir up public support. In some states, this job is handled out of the governor's office or state economic development agency.

California, one of the top two or three contenders, has established a special super-conductor executive steering committee headed by University of California Vice President William B. Baker. Winning the super collider, Baker contends, will make a tremendous difference — in terms of economics, education and prestige — for whatever state is chosen.

"You can't be economically strong if you aren't technologically strong," said Baker, who usually manages budget matters for the nine-campus university system. "The SSC (superconducting super collider) ... is a remarkable economic base from which to grow and prosper."

With so much at stake, selecting a site for the collider could have posed a tough political problem for the federal Deparment of Energy, which administers federal physics research programs. The solution was a competition open to everyone, even large private landholders who would agree to donate at least the 16,000 acres of land the machine requires.

The project has been discussed since 1983, but the competition formally opened in February, after President Reagan approved the project. States must file their complex applications by August, and a panel of independent scientists will select a set of finalists by the end of the year. A site will be chosen in 1988.

State officials consider the competition a shrewd way to select the winner, because it gives every state a chance to be chosen, and thus gives every state an incentive to support federal financing of the project, which still is pending in Congress.

At the same time, the competition encourages states to add to their offers additional cost-sharing proposals, or "sweeteners" — subsidized electricity in California, subsidized tunneling in Illinois, and subsidized financing in New York have been mentioned, for example.

Small states complain that this provision favors wealthier and more populous states, and some have mobilized their senior congressional representatives to try to skew the selection process back in their favor.

"While it is in one sense in the best budgetary interests of the United States government to seek bids which reduce federal budget costs," Kansas Lt. Gov. Jack Walker recently told a congressional committee, "such a provision would be shortsighted if it acted as a bar to states which have technically superb sites, but lack the resources to outbid more affluent neighbors."

Nonsense, argue congressmen faced with cutting the federal deficit. Major cost-sharing by states may be the only way to shoehorn this project into the already overburdened budget.

Other states have sought to change deadlines or rewrite technical criteria, calling them unfair. Some states also have tried to form regional coalitions to support a single candidate — but no one can agree which state to support.

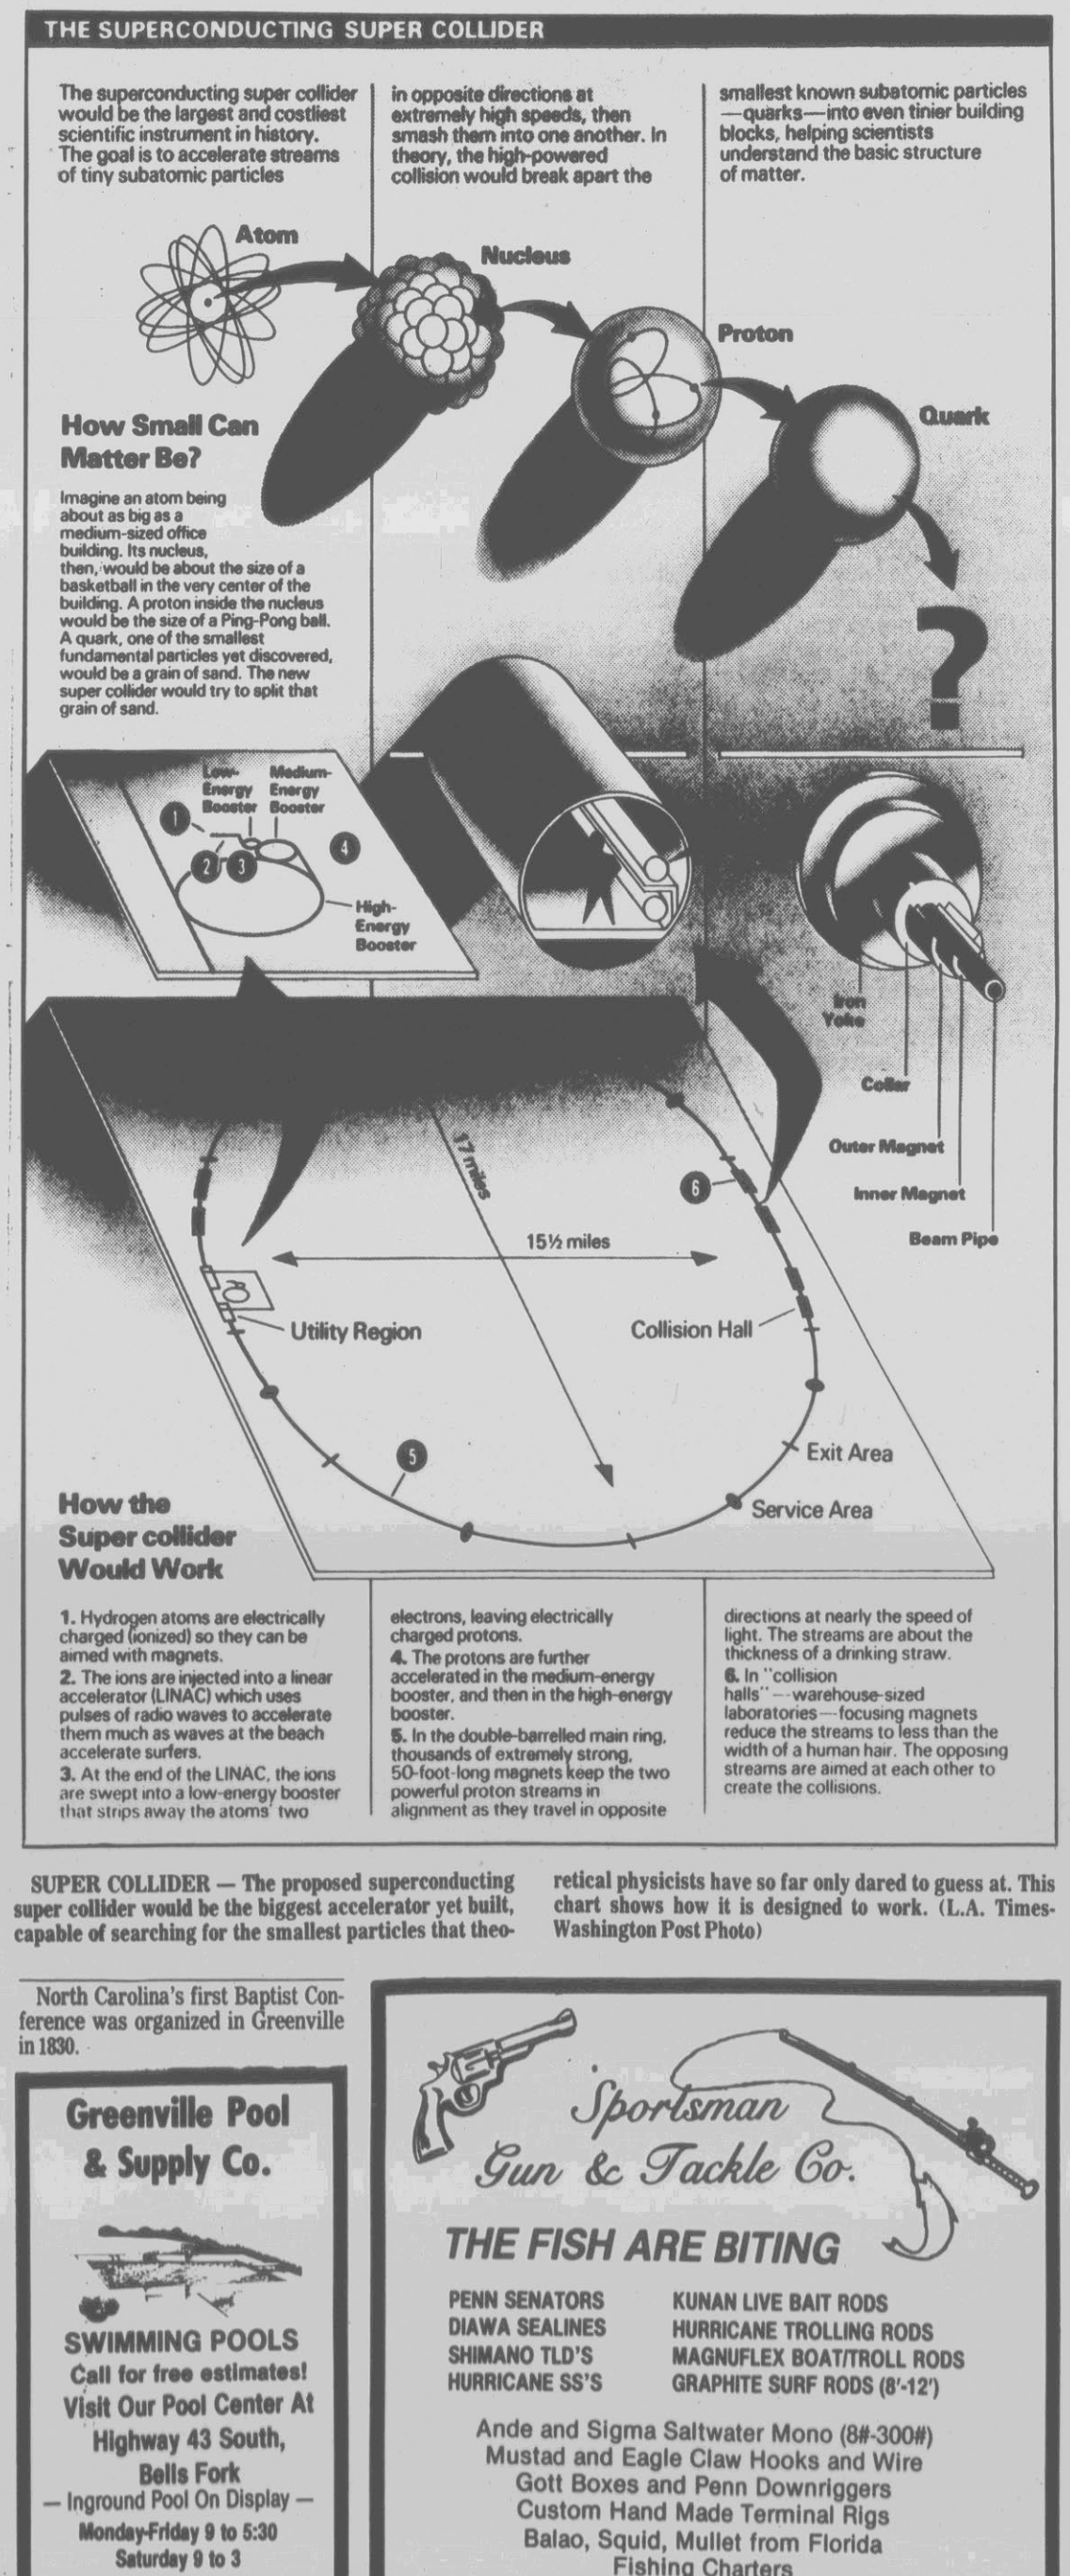

Meanwhile, elected officials from California to the Carolinas scramble to prepare the exhaustive eight-volume bids required by federal officials. Most states will spend at least $1 million on that process, which can involve the preparation of dozens of expensive drill-core samples used to map the geology of the site being considered. California has allotted $2.5 million to prepare bids for two sites. Illinois has budgeted $4.5 million for one.

California, which Baker said already soaks up one-quarter of the country's entire research-and-development spending, is preparing to nominate two sites — one encircling the western Sacramento suburb of Davis and another just east of Stockton, about 70 miles east of San Francisco. Both should be leading contenders for the collider, competing states acknowledge.

But California also was a top contender in the last atom-smasher sweepstakes 20 years ago — until Illinois was awarded what is now Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory. Illinois is now effectively using that facility 30 miles west of Chicago to keep itself among the front-runners in the race for the superconducting super collider.

Texas and New York also are cited by competing states as potentially

Senate Votes End To Collider Bidding

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate has voted to end the bidding war among states for the $4.4 billion superconducting super collider and leave it up to the federal government to determine where the huge nuclear research project should be based.

By voice vote, the Senate approved an amendment by Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., stating that the location of the massive public works project should be based on the quality of the site.

"It ought to be on the best site in the country ... and not on what a state offers as financial compensation," Domenici said Wednesday.

Small-state lawmakers won the amendment over the objections of those from big states like Texas and Illinois.

"The largest and the most wealthy states are the only ones that can win" under the current Department of Energy policy, which takes into account state and local contributions, said Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont.

But Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, whose state is spending lavishly to attract the project, said such competition was the best policy.

"If people are willing to put their own money on the line, what better indication than that is there of local support," said Gramm, saying that would also keep down federal costs.

The Domenici amendment came as the Senate resumed consideration of a bill providing $9.4 billion in additional spending for the remainder of fiscal 1987.

The measure had been delayed because it adds further to outlays that are already above the budget. Final Senate action was in doubt because lawmakers must first vote to waive the budget, and a previous attempt failed.

Report Says Newly Found Bones Show Human Ancestor Had 'Ape'-Like Limbs

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The earliest known direct ancestor of man retained long, ape-like arms from tree-dwelling predecessors 1.8 million years ago, but evolution quickly furnished more human-like limbs, scientists suggested today.

The change may have occurred after ancient creatures began to find more food on the ground and to defend themselves better, abandoning the need for tree-climbing, said Donald Johanson, director of the Institute for Human Origins in Berkeley, Calif.

Johanson co-wrote a report in today's issue of the British journal Nature on the discovery of 302 bony remains of a "homo habilis" in the Olduvai Gorge of northern Tanzania.

The creature had long arms in comparison to its legs rather than the more human-like proportions many scientists had assumed for the species, said co-author William Kimbel of the institute.

"We have a good idea of what a homo habilis skeleton looks like, and it doesn't look like what most people thought it would," Kimbel said in a telephone interview.

The adult female walked on two legs and was surprisingly short, about 3 feet 4 inches tall, he said. Its arms probably dangled down to its knees.

The discovery was the first to firmly link limb bones to a homo habilis skull, providing clear evidence that the limb bones belong to that species, Kimbel said.

Since those bones show ape-like proportions, and more human-like fossils from "homo erectus" are dated only an estimated 200,000 years later, the discovery implies "a fairly rapid transition" to more human-like proportions, Johanson said.

Homo habilis, considered the first tool-user, lived between 2 million and 1.6 million years ago. In the evolutionary family tree, it is the oldest known member of the branch leading to humans, appearing after the split with the dead-end branch of robust "australopithecus" creatures.

Some scientists believe fossils attributed to habilis may actually represent two kinds of creatures. The new specimen may be from the smaller type, said Eric Delson, anthropology professor at Lehman College, part of the City University of New York.

The new discovery was found last July. Remnants of the upper jaw and attached facial bones help establish the creature was a habilis, Kimbel said.

But Bernard Wood, anatomy professor at Liverpool University in England, wrote in a Nature editorial that the identification rests largely on similarities to a previous skull that has not been positively identified as habilis.

Kimbel replied that their study of that skull supports a habilis classification, and that the new find also shows similarities to other specimens attributed to habilis.

Researchers found that the creature's upper arm bone was perhaps 95 percent the length of the thighbone, resembling the almost 100 percent ratio of apes rather than the 70 percent to 75 percent ratio of humans, Johanson said.

So habilis retained the primitive proportions first found in Lucy, a 3.2-million-year old specimen of Australopithecus afarensis, which showed a ratio of about 85 percent, Johanson said.

Long-distance travel on the ground may have played a role in the evolutionary change to more human limb proportions, said William Jungers, anatomy professor at the State University of New York at Stony Brook. The idea of an abrupt shift is "a reasonable working hypothesis," he said.

The swift change, after more than 1 million years of the primitive proportions, suggests "accelerations and decelerations in the rates of evolution," he said.

Kimbel said the new find also challenges the past logic of assigning limb bones to habilis or to australopithecus based on how "modern" they look.

Study Links Rare Gene To Risk For Breast Cancer

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Women who carry a single gene for a rare nerve disorder have a high risk of getting breast cancer, a finding that may help explain why the killer disease appears to run in families, researchers report today.

"Breast cancer shows a great degree of running in families," said Dr. John Mulvihill of the National Cancer Institute. "We would like to have a greater understanding of why. This could be a partial explanation."

The apparent connection between the gene and breast cancer was made by Dr. Michael Swift and colleagues at the University of North Carolina.

People who inherit two copies of the gene — one from each parent — get the disease ataxia-telangiectasia, or AT, which afflicts a few hundred Americans. Many people carry one copy of the gene and suffer no obvious ill effects.

Swift's study of 110 families of AT victims found that women relatives were seven times more likely to get breast cancer than the general female population.

Swift, whose findings were published in today's New England Journal of Medicine, said the research suggests that 7.5 percent of all breast cancer — or about 10,000 cases a year — could be attributable to the AT gene.

This estimate is based on an assumption arrived at by other researchers that 1.4 percent of all Americans carry the gene. However, no one knows the precise figure, so the share of breast cancer caused by the gene "could easily be anywhere from 5 to 20 percent," Swift said in an interview.

Many men and women are thought to have the gene, but there is no way to know who they are unless two of them marry and produce a child with AT. Then doctors can assume both parents have the gene.

Even though women who carry the gene appear to be predisposed to breast cancer, not all carriers get this disease. Swift said this suggests that some other factor may trigger breast cancer in these people.

One trigger could be radiation. AT victims suffer extreme tissue damage if they receive radiation therapy for leukemia. The researchers discovered several AT gene carriers got breast cancer after myelography, diagnostic spinal X-rays.

"What we are suggesting, but not proving, is that women who carry the AT gene and get diagnostic X-rays may have an excess risk of breast cancer," Swift said. "I emphasize the word 'may.'"

Swift said the findings raise questions about whether close female relatives of AT victims should have frequent mammograms, X-rays that provide early warning of breast cancer, because of the chance the X-rays could themselves cause the disease.

AT is a progressive disease that affects the cerebellum, the part of the brain that regulates coordination. Victims have trouble controlling the movement of their arms and legs, and have an increased cancer risk.

Male relatives of AT victims were found to be twice as likely as unrelated spouses to get any kind of cancer, and female relatives had three times the cancer risk.

But the number of people in the study was too small to link the gene clearly with other forms of cancer.

Swift said researchers are trying to locate the AT gene so that they can identify people who carry it.

Pitt County's top five tax values in 1985 included Burroughs Wellcome at $98,272,103; Procter & Gamble, $56,806,086; Carolina Telephone and Telegraph, $39,837,878; Collins & Aikman, $33,463,773, and Yale, $29,383,009.

Robot Will Study Monitor's Wreck

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — An underwater robot will conduct the most detailed study yet of the USS Monitor to determine if all or part of the Civil War ironclad might be salvaged, scientists said Wednesday.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said it will co-sponsor a $1.8 million expedition to the Monitor, located 16 miles off Cape Hatteras, N.C., to get detailed photographs of the historic and determine its level of corrosion.

A team of marine scientists, engineers and archaeologists will use an underwater robot vehicle called Deep Drone to examine the Monitor between May 27 and June 9, and determine if the wreck is in danger of collapsing.

The ironclad, which resembled a cheesebox on a raft during its fighting days, is lying upside down in 220 feet of water. The vessel sank on Dec. 31, 1862, while being towed from Washington to blockade a Southern port.

Dr. Dail W. Brown of NOAA said scientists are concerned that the vessel may be unstable and could collapse onto itself. The studies will determine the structural integrity of the Monitor and could help officials decide whether all or part of the structure should be raised.

Researchers are particularly interested in the vessel's 9-foot-high, 21-foot-diameter turret and the two cannons it contains, which lie underneath the wreck.

The unmanned Deep Drone, operated by Eastport International Inc. of Upper Marlboro, Md., a prime contractor with the Navy for remotely operated vehicles, will take detailed photographs and videotapes of the entire wreck site.

In addition, said Eastport president Craig Mullen, it will do electronic sampling to see how much the structure has corroded after almost 125 years under water. The craft will have instruments aboard that detect the electromagnetic properties of metal and, indirectly, its level of corrosion, he said.

Brown told a briefing that scientists had no plans to retrieve any artifacts from the site during this summer's expedition. However, the remote vehicle is capable of picking up objects if researchers determine that they may be harmed if left where they are.

Although there are no plans to attempt to raise the Monitor, Brown said, information from the uncoming dives should give scientists an idea if it is feasible.

On previous expeditions, divers recovered the Monitor's 1,300-pound anchor, a lantern, bottles and other items from the 170-foot-long vessel.

The Monitor, discovered by a team of Duke University scientists in 1974, was named the nation's first National Marine Sanctuary and has been designated an historical landmark.

The iron vessel is considered the forerunner of all modern metal naval ships. On March 8, 1862, the Union ship Monitor had its famous battle with the Confederate ironclad Virginia, formerly called the Merrimack.

Although both vessels pounded one another relentlessly during a four-hour battle off Hampton Roads, Va., neither was a clear victor. The event is historic because it marked the beginning of the end of the era of wooden fighting ships.

CDC Urges Hospital Workers To Follow AIDS Safety Rules

By ELIZABETH MEHREN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Federal officials, while describing as "rare events" the AIDS infection of three health care workers who had come in contact with contaminated blood, said Wednesday that the cases demonstrate the need for "vigorous adherence" to infection control guidelines.

"If the recommendations and guidelines that existed out there had been followed, these cases wouldn't have occurred," Donald A. Berreth of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, said in interview.

But in New York, the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees issued a statement Wednesday calling for "immediate meetings" with the secretaries of Labor and Health and Human Services to discuss more stringent enforcement of federal health center guidelines for workers who care for AIDS patients.

The three cases are the first documented incidents of on-the-job infections of hospital workers that did not involve accidental needle pricks or prolonged exposure to AIDS contaminated body fluids.

They were described in an an issue of the Centers for Disease Control's Morbidity and Mortality Weeky Report due to be published this week.

One of the workers was in contact with the blood of an AIDS patient for about 20 minutes at a time when her hands were chapped, the report said. She was not wearing gloves. Another worker believed she may have touched a rash on her ear while handling blood that had spilled from a blood separating device. The third was splattered in the face and mouth with infected blood in a laboratory accident.

Officials at the Atlanta centers said the AIDS virus may have invaded their bodies in these ways.

Guidelines issued by the centers in 1985 and 1986 recommended that health-care workers wear gloves in cases where they may be exposed to blood. For "persons with more extensive contact" with blood or "potentially infective body fluids," the centers said goggles, gowns, masks or safety glasses are advisable.

Berreth said each of the cases involved "breaks in technique."

Officials said none of the three workers infected had any other known risk factors for the disease, such as intravenous drug use or sexual relations with an infected person.

After contact with the blood, two of the three workers later suffered flu-like symptoms. All three subsequently tested positive for the AIDS virus.

Hospital worker union officials said that adherence to the guidelines is sometimes lax, and that it must change.

Health-care professionals who care for AIDS patients said they were particularly concerned to learn that recommendations by the federal centers had not been strictly observed.

States Seek Super Collider

strong competitors, partly because of their large congressional delegations and their ability to subsidize the project. Colorado also was named for its site east of Denver, as well as sites in Arizona and Ohio.

That sort of handicapping puts many states out of the running, but even people in the leading states acknowledge that virtually any bid could win when judged by the wide variety of factors being used by federal officials and their blue-ribbon panel of engineering and science advisers.

The cultural advantages of suburban Chicago, for example, could be balanced by reduced construction costs in Utah. The weather and intellectual climate of California could be offset by solid geology in North Carolina. Financial skill demonstrated by New York or Texas might be matched by lower operating costs in Wyoming or Florida.

Most bidders categorize the federal criteria as "hard" and "soft." Hard criteria, competitors believe, will help scientists choose a "short list" of perhaps four to eight finalists. Soft criteria, along with some old-fashioned horse-trading politics, will winnow out the winner, competitors agree.

Hard criteria include such geotechnical considerations as topography, ease of tunneling, water tables, seismic danger, environmental problems, vibration potential and the availability of water, power, sewers and road access.

Soft criteria include proximity to a major airport, to companies capable of providing technical support, to universities and colleges, and to urban areas able to accommodate as many as 10,000 added residents — 3,000 scientists and technicians and their families.

In addition, the Department of Energy said it will consider the quality of local schools, the quantity of social and cultural events and the type of job opportunities for scientists' families. Such factors will help to attract the highly skilled personnel needed to operate the collider, the agency said.

Such soft criteria have unnerved officials in several states, particularly those considering sites in relatively remote locations, such as New Mexico or Montana.

Rep. Joe Barton, D-Texas, for one, notes that Department of Energy guidelines rank cultural resources higher than the availability of utilities. "Should a community with plentiful, low-cost electricity and water give up if it doesn't have a ballet company?" he asked.

Fermilab Director Leon M. Lederman defended the decision to include culture as a siting criterion. "It is not really to coddle the scientists," he said, "but a clear, frank admission that some scientists won't go to a place that's too hard. And if the place does not get the very best, the government's money will not be well-spent. It's a simple as that."

Several states acknowledge that they have active scouting campaigns to learn details about competing bids. As a result, many officials are cordial but close-mouthed.

"I'm not sure that from a strategy standpoint you start telling the world what your incentive package is going to look like," said Galen Reser of the Washington office of Illinois Gov. James Thompson. "That just gives your competition a chance to outbid you (with) a more attractive package."

However, a number of people preparing bids have mentioned $500 million as a competitive sweetener. That would be used to mitigate any problems with a chosen site — such as potential problems with tunneling — as well as build a new college-type campus to give the site an advantage over competitors.

"One way to look at it is, 'What is the net increase in (tax) revenues?'" Baker said. "Well, (according to a report by the University of California, Los Angeles) it is $500 million for the first 12 years and something like $30 million a year after that — new tax revenue into the state — just because the thing's here. You can argue that you can at least offer that. If you don't get it, you don't spend it."

ADVERTISING OF TAX LIENS OF REAL PROPERTY

Under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by Section 105-369 of the North Carolina General Statutes and pursuant to an order of the Pitt County Board of Commissioners, I am hereby advertising tax liens for the year 1986 upon the real estate described below. The amount advertised will be increased by interest and cost, and the omission of interest and cost from the amount advertised will not constitute a waiver of the taxing unit's claim for those items. The real estate that is subject to the lien, the name of the person to whom the property is listed for taxes and the principal amount of the taxes are set out below. At the discretion of the taxing unit, and the governing body, the taxes that remain unpaid will be subject to attachment, garnishment, and foreclosure to satisfy the taxing unit's claim for taxes.

This the 14th day of May, 1987.

W.R. Smith, Tax Collector
County of Pitt
