Suit To Be Filed If Senate Approves Election Proposal

By MARY C. SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer
A lawyer for the NAACP says his office is waiting for N.C. Senate approval of a bill changing Pitt County's method of election before filing a lawsuit charging the County Commissioners with discriminatory voting practices.
"My office is drafting the lawsuit at this time and hope to have it ready to file by the end of June," Kinston Lawyer Paul Jones, who represents the Pitt County branch of the NAACP, said.
"We are waiting for the Senate to take final action, and once that occurs, we will notify the Justice Department of our vigorous opposition to the legislation," Jones said.

The Senate Election Laws Committee Wednesday approved a bill recommending a "six-three" method of election for Pitt County. The bill is expected to go before the full Senate for consideration Friday or Monday, according to Sen. Tom Taft, D-Pitt, sponsor of the legislation. The bill, which differs from a House bill passed May 26, would then return to the N.C. House for its concurrence.
The six-three plan, which was recommended by the Pitt County Commissioners, allows for six members of the county board to be elected by districts and three representatives to be elected at-large.

Minority groups voiced opposition to any at-large seats, saying it would be impossible for a minority commissioner to be elected at-large. The NAACP, the Concerned Citizens for Justice, a local civil rights group, and the SCLC voiced support for a straight six-district method of election.
The House passed a compromise bill which also calls for six of Pitt's commissioners to be elected by district and three elected at-large, but only after the three are nominated by party primaries in three regions created by collapsing the six districts.

Minorities said they accepted the compromise, which was proposed by the County Commissioners' lawyer. Commissioners, however, withdrew support for the compromise June 1 when the bill reached a Senate subcommittee, saying they offered the measure only to keep the issue alive in the Legislature.
According to Jones, the commissioners ignored the minorities' wishes when devising the original

LATEST RESCUE — A helpless, not-yet-feathered baby blue jay is the latest rescue effort of brothers Sheldon and Dennis Steele. The brothers keep watch for injured or deserted birds and animals which they take home to Dana, Shelton's wife, who they say has a high success rate of restoring them to health. Brothers Stand Ready To Help

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer
They are brothers, both outdoor workers who live in rural Pitt County on Route 2, Greenville. And they share a common specialty, a concern for wild creatures whose lives are endangered.
Sheldon and Dennis Steele, in their work travels, stay on the alert for any wildlife in danger — whether it's a bird fallen from a nest, an injured baby squirrel, a frightened small rabbit abandoned along the roadside.
"We are on the lookout for any bird of animal that needs help," said Sheldon. "I think both of us have developed sharp eyesight for these small creatures."
"We take them home to Mama Dana," said Dennis. "She really enjoys taking care of these foundlings, whatever they are."
Mama Dana is Sheldon's wife. "Dana has saved lots of birds and animals from dying. She's usually successful at it. I couldn't count the number of birds, other wild creatures as well as cats and dogs that Dennis and I have brought home for her to nurse back to health."
Their most recent rescue was a fallen baby bird they discovered while driving along Cotanche Street in front of The Daily Reflector Building.
"Dennis spotted him, heard his cries," Sheldon said. "We stopped, got out and found it."
"It's a young jay bird," Dennis said. "He most likely fell from a nest there (he indicated a river birch tree). I heard his cries. He was trying to hop away. Already ants had started crawling over him, ready to do him in."
The brothers brushed the ants off and took the frightened bird into the newspaper building to give it water through a straw. The wobbly, featherless little bird greedily accepted the water and gave signs of feeling comforted in Sheldon's cupped hands.
"I hope we can report to you soon that this little fellow has been saved by Mama Dana," Sheldon said.

Officers Appeal For Help

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer
More than 50 people attended a community meeting Wednesday night to discuss a new problem-oriented policing program initiated by the Greenville Police Department and to help find ways to curb crime in an area centered around the intersections of Fifth and Ford streets and Fifth and Tyson streets.
Though no all-encompassing solutions to the problems were voiced, police officials said another meeting of residents of the community will be held in the near future in an attempt to implement some of the suggestions voiced at the session — such as a community clean-up campaign to give area residents more pride in the neighborhood, and a Community Watch program to encourage residents to report illegal activity in the area to police.

Sgt. C.J. Hardy, who presided at the meeting at the St. Gabriel Catholic Church school hall, said police, for almost a year, have been concentrating on ways to reduce illegal activity in the area — buying and selling drugs and stolen goods, alcohol use, break-ins, prostitution.
Officers first used the high visibility approach — placing a uniformed officer and police vehicle in the middle of the activities — and then began stopping individuals, questioning them, and arresting those found violating the law.
The latest move, Hardy said, has been to ask property owners and businessmen in the area to sign forms giving police the right to search all exterior property and porches and making officers the agent of the property owner, with the power to arrest people who are on the property without authorization and who refuse to leave.
But these efforts have all met with limited success and "right now we are at a standstill," Hardy said, suggesting that more community involvement is needed if criminal activity in the area is ended.

Quake Illinois Temblor Rocks 16 States

By The Associated Press
Illinois' strongest earthquake in 19 years shook residents of 16 states from Kansas to South Carolina and parts of Canada, breaking windows, tumbling chimneys and forcing hundreds to flee swaying buildings up to 700 miles away.
Wednesday's temblor, registering 5.0 on the Richter scale, cracked a bell tower, triggered an alarm at a Minnesota nuclear plant and cut telephone service in three Illinois counties, but only minor damage and one minor injury were reported.
"It felt like somebody with big shoes was walking overhead, but nobody lives overhead — we're on the fourth floor," said Richard Horwitz of Chicago. "Our parakeet was chattering away, and it just stopped."

The quake, at 6:49 p.m. CDT, was centered near Lawrenceville, Ill., 55 miles north of Evansville, Ind., the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo., said. Shaking was felt from 10 seconds to nearly a minute.
Loretta Eubanks, a nurse at Bridgeway, an alcohol and drug abuse treatment center that's part of Transylvania County Hospital in Brevard, N.C., said she and three patients heard a low, rumbling noise about 8 p.m. and felt a slight movement in the floor.
"My ears perked up and I looked around to see what was going on. I thought at first it was the heating system turning on, but it was too much for that," she said.

The sound lasted five to 10 seconds and the vibration for two to three seconds.
"It wasn't violently shaking, but just a creaking sound, and then I felt it in the floor," Ms. Eubanks said.
She asked around, but no one else in the hospital felt the tremor, she said. She was sitting down at the time, but said people walking around probably wouldn't have felt it.
Hundreds of students ran screaming from a building at a vocational college in Indianapolis, and about 70

First Union Donation Announced

First Union National Bank, which will enter the banking field in Greenville in August, will contribute $50,000 to the East Carolina University School of Business Golden Anniversary Fund, company and school officials announced today.
The official announcement was to be made by Evelyn "Evie" Roberts, vice president and First Union's Greenville city executive, ECU Chancellor Richard R. Eakin and Dr. Ernest B. Uhr, school of business dean, at a luncheon at the Greenville Hilton.
"First Union is pleased to help in maintaining the high level of academic excellence at East Carolina's School of Business," Ms. Roberts said. "Many East Carolina graduates are First Union professionals who have contributed significantly to our success."
First Union National Bank of North Carolina is a principal subsidiary of the Charlotte-based First Union Corp. bank holding company.

Reagan: Arms Accord Is Nearer

VENICE, Italy (AP) — President Reagan said today he sees an "increased opportunity" for a nuclear arms agreement this year as well as a third meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.
Reagan also said that he feels a congressional ban against aid to the Contra rebels did not apply to him personally, and added that in any event, "I don't think the law was broken."
The president gave a lukewarm endorsement to assistant secretary of state Elliot Abrams, who apparently misled Congress concerning aid to the Contras. Asked about an alleged $200,000 fund to benefit Lt. Col. Oliver North, the former National Security Council aide whom he fired and then called a national hero, Reagan said, "I'm going to wait until he has his day in court."
And Reagan repeated that he never gave anyone orders to assist the rebels during the cut-off in aid, despite the impression left by some witnesses at Congress' televised hearings. He acknowledged that he was aware of efforts by private individuals to raise funds for the Contras but said he did not solicitations himself.

Reagan stumbled on one of the few questions that came his way on economic issues, the chief topic on the summit agenda with Japan, Canada and four European industrialized democracies.
Asked about current developments in which the value of the American dollar has dropped over several months, Reagan said, "Well, frankly most of us believe the dollar should remain stable. It could be within reason that there could still be some lowering of the value in relation to other currencies."

Less than 15 minutes after Reagan had left the news conference, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president did not mean to suggest that he wanted a further decline in the dollar. "He wants stability in the dollar," the spokesman said.
The president fielded questions in a garden on the island of Guidecca, his home during the Venice summit. He was meeting with European businessmen later in the day. Friday he was heading for West Germany, where he planned a foreign policy address within sight of the Berlin Wall.
Reagan's question and answer session was televised live in the United States during the Eastern breakfast hour. The president thus began a media blitz to put his imprint on the outcome of the summit and promote the pending superpower arms agreement.

He opened with a statement claiming success at the summit, but the questions turned immediately to superpower relations, the tensions in the Persian Gulf and the Iran-Contra hearings that have competed with the summit for headlines.
He was asked whether the economic summit and a NATO meeting beginning today would advance prospects for a Reagan-Gorbachev summit to conclude a new arms pact. He said he was like a ballplayer during a no-hitter, suspicious of speculating on good news to come. Nonetheless, he added:
"I can't deny that I believe there is an increased opportunity for a summit conference and an increased opportunity for an actual reduction of armaments, particularly of the nuclear kind."

In The Area

New Unity Pastor

The Rev. Bobby Aycock has accepted the pastorate of Unity Free Will Baptist Church at 2125 E. 14th St in Greenville.

A native of North Carolina, Aycock has served in Brazil, South America as a Free Will Baptist Missionary Church planter for over 22 years. He helped establish three churches and other preaching points, and conducted a radio ministry during 13 years of his tenure.

Since his return to the United States in 1962, Aycock has taught missions and Bible at Free Will Baptist Bible College, Nashville, Tenn.

He is a graduate of Free Will Baptist Bible College, an alumnus of Bob Jones University, and a candidate for a master's degree in missiology at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in Deerfield, Ill.

Before his missionary work, Aycock pastored churches in Beaufort and Washington counties.

He is married to the former Edith Sue Aycock of Warren, Ark., and is the father of two daughters, Debra Roach of Fayetteville, Ark., and Rebecca of Nashville, Tenn., and a son David of Arlington, Va.

Multiple Charges

Lonnie Dynell Smith, 23, of Route 2, Box 237-A1, Greenville, has been turned over to Beaufort County authorities following his arrest by Pitt County deputies in connection with a Monday night stabbing incident in Washington, N.C., according to Sheriff Ralph Tyson.

Tyson said Smith has been charged with second degree kidnapping, unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, assault on a female, resisting arrest, assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury with intent to murder, and damage to personal property.

Deputies arrested Smith at the Greenville bus station after an incident involving a 19-year-old Greenville woman was reported at about 11 p.m. Monday, Tyson said.

Rural Home Burned

The home of L.C. Mills on County Road 1796 near Shelmerdine burned Wednesday.

Black Jack and Gardnersville fire departments answered the 10:38 a.m. call.

According to Bobby Joyner, county fire marshal, the house was a total loss.

Education Workshop

The Pitt County Board of Education will have a workshop session Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the third floor conference room of the Pitt County Office Building, 1717 W. Fifth St.

Topics of discussion will include instructional fees, lunchroom prices and construction management.

For further information call the office of the superintendent, 830-4202.

Break-In Arrests

Pitt County deputies have arrested two Greenville residents in connection with an early morning break-in at Bailey's Convenient Mart on U.S. 264, one-half mile east of Greenville, Sheriff Ralph Tyson said.

Tyson said Jeffrey L. Haddock, 23, of Lot 10, Bland's Trailer Park has been charged with breaking, entering, and larceny, possession of marijuana, and possession of drug paraphernalia in connection with the incident reported at about 4 a.m. today.

Christina Sewell, 20, of 325 Circle Drive has been charged with possession of stolen property, possession of marijuana, and possession of drug paraphernalia, according to Tyson.

Deputies recovered several hundred dollars, cartons of cigarettes and food stamps, according to Tyson, who said the investigation is continuing.

'Family Swim Night'

The Greenville Recreation and Parks Department will open the city pool Friday for "Family Swim Night."

The program is planned for each Friday from 5:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. until Aug. 15. A child must be accompanied by a parent or guardian.

For more information call the pool at 830-4563.

ECU Schedules Summer Math-Science Program

A special two-week program to encourage interest in science and mathematics careers among women and minorities will be held June 14 through 26 at East Carolina University.

Twenty rising ninth-grade students will participate in the Science Track Enhancement Program (STEP). In the program the students will be placed under the mentorship of an ECU faculty or staff member and assigned to work in a university department. They will assist with various science projects.

Local students participating in the program are: AYDEN MIDDLE SCHOOL — Tracy Blount and Allyson Norris; E.B. AYCOCK JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL — Demetrius Carter, Devondir Corbett and Barry Kang; BETHEL ELEMENTARY SCHOOL — Keisha Clemmons, Benjamin Council, Shaun Howard and William Wilkins; CHICOD ELEMENTARY SCHOOL — Lynn Dixon; A.G. COX SCHOOL — Stephanie Felton and Maria Smith; FARMVILLE MIDDLE SCHOOL — Vikki Mercer; GRIFTON SCHOOL — Lori McClaine and Lynnette Payton; WELLCOME MIDDLE SCHOOL — Christopher Cogdell and Carlton Taylor, and G.R. WHITFIELD SCHOOL — Kathryn Dail, Quincy Hawkins and Letecia Moye.

Students chosen for the program were selected from RECAST, a community-based group that encourages minority youths to choose careers in math and science. RECAST clubs in Pitt County schools submitted names of up to six students from their clubs to participate in the program.

Dr. Mary Ann Rose, assistant to the chancellor for special projects, said the students will be assigned to work with a mentor with the idea that "a caring and inspiring individual can often make the difference between pursuing or abandoning a career choice."

"When mentors adopt students for the two-week period, we believe that there is greater likelihood of their pursuing science and mathematics careers," said Dr. Rose, who initiated the program at ECU last year.

The students will spend six to seven hours a day in their assigned duties and they will receive pay for their work.

Dr. Christine Fitch, grants officer for the ECU School of Education, will serve as the STEP director. She said the program is designed to introduce students to science careers while also raising their aspirations for college by exposing them to a university setting.

"One thing that's different about this program is that we're not looking for gifted and talented students," she said. "We're looking for the average student who has potential."

In addition to working at jobs on campus the students will also attend evening seminars on topics dealing with career choices, job expectations, job performance and behavior, and money management.

A steering committee for the program includes Dr. Rose; Dr. Charles Coble, dean of the school of education; Dr. Paul Cunningham, an assistant professor in the department of surgery; David McDonald, director of institutional advancement, and Dr. William Queen, director of the Institute for Coastal and Marine Resources.

REFLECTOR HOTLINE

Hotline gets things done. Write and tell us about the problem or issue into which you'd like for Hotline to look. Enclose photostatic copies of any pertinent information. Our address is The Daily Reflector, Box 1967, Greenville, N.C., 27835. Because of the large numbers received, Hotline cannot answer or publish every item we receive, but we deal with all of those for which we have staff time. Names must be given, but only initials will be published.

ASSISTANCE WITH SNAKES?

We are members of the Elmhurst School Snake Club. We have been doing research on snakes. We know that there are several kinds of poisonous and non-poisonous snakes in our area. We called the police station and the animal control office. People in neither place can answer calls to pick up poisonous snakes. Who can people call when they need help with poisonous snakes? We know a lot about snakes and can share information, but we cannot pick them up. We think someone should provide this service.

Hotline knows of no agency nor group which takes responsibility for helping people deal with poisonous snakes. If anyone has any helpful information, we invite them to call your teacher, Mary Holt Kitchin, 756-0180.

Wille Elected

Dr. Carl Wille was elected chairman and Dr. Robert Dayton vice chairman of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Commission Wednesday night.

The election took place at a brief meeting business meeting during the department's annual facility tour and dinner. This year, commissioners made a tour of the Aquatics and Fitness Center, guided by Bill Twine.

The department's executive director, Boyd Lee, gave a rundown on the status of various ongoing projects under the auspices of the Recreation and Parks Department.

Plaques of appreciation were presented to outgoing commission chairman Mrs. Sydney Womack and to Traci Irwin, who has been the representative to the commission for the Greenville Youth Council during the past year.

Pitt Schools To Hold Graduation Rites Friday

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer
High School seniors from throughout Pitt County will don caps and gowns to receive diplomas Friday. Each graduation ceremony will be held at 8 p.m.
The 375 graduating seniors at J.H. Rose High School will participate in commencement exercises at Ficklin Stadium on the campus of East Carolina University, where the Rampants also play football. Ceremonies at the other four schools will be held on their athletic fields.
Approximately 123 students will graduate from Ayden-Grifton High School, according to figures provided by the Pitt County schools. An estimated 225 students will receive diplomas at D.H. Conley High School. A total of 113 students will turn their tassels at Farmville Central High School, and 120 students will march across the stage at North Pitt High School.

Students speakers at Ayden-Grifton will be Melissa Rose and Mike Shafer. Their respective topics will be "Perceptions" and "Recollections." D.H. Conley's speakers will be valedictorian Brian Joyner and salutatorian Amy Verreault.

David McKnight is the valedictorian at Farmville Central, and Tracey Walston is salutatorian. North Pitt's valedictorian is Lisa Pollard, and salutatorian is Kelly Noble.
"From the Heart" will be the subject of a speech by Rose's Jamie Moore. Adonica Smith will discuss "The End of the Beginning" and Bella Kang will speak about "Rainbows."

Bill Norris and Joyce Dixon, Ayden-Grifton Advisory Council members, will assist in the distribution of diplomas at the Ayden-Grifton graduation.
Diplomas at Conley will be handed out by D.H. Conley, former superintendent for whom the school was named.
Farmville Central's diplomas will be distributed by John Williams, a member of the Farmville Area Advisory Council, and John McKnight, deputy superintendent of the Pitt County schools.

North Pitt Principal Josh Potter and Assistant Principal Ernest McNair will distribute diplomas at the school's commencement.
George Williams, vice chairman of the Pitt County Board of Education, will present diplomas to Rose graduates.

In the event of rain, the commencement exercises will be moved into the school gymnasiums.

NATO Ministers Likely To Back Drastic Cuts In Nuclear Missiles

By ROBERT J. WIELAARD
Associated Press Writer
REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — NATO foreign ministers met today at the site of the most recent superpower summit for two days of talks expected to produce support for drastic cuts in nuclear missile arsenals in Europe.
"It is now within reach that we get an agreement on the elimination of all or most" of medium- and short-range nuclear missiles, NATO Secretary General Lord Carrington of Britain told reporters before the meeting.
President Reagan is set to announce next week that he will have his first nuclear arms control agreement with Moscow later in the year. Such an accord was first proposed by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev last April.

But in a speech at the meeting's opening session, Carrington warned the allies of the implications of a sweeping nuclear arms deal. He urged them to remain "alert to the continuing expansion and upgrading of (the Soviet Union's) conventional forces."
"The Soviet military threat has not diminished, even if the Soviet voice has become softer and more peaceful," Carrington said.
Carrington said the 16 NATO ministers, including Secretary of State George P. Shultz, would also discuss ways to safeguard navigation in the Persian Gulf.

The foreign ministers' meeting included a luncheon today at Hofdi House, site of last October's summit meeting between Reagan and Gorbachev.
At that meeting, Reagan and Gorbachev agreed in principle to eliminate European-based superpower medium-range missiles — those with a range of 600 to 1,500 miles.
Gorbachev followed up the offer two months ago with a proposal to eliminate shorter-range missiles, with a range of 300 to 600 miles. The United States says the Soviets have a huge advantage in such missiles.
The United States has delayed a response on the offers while it consults with the allies. West Germany had expressed concern the proposals would leave it vulnerable to superior Soviet conventional forces.
Last week, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said his country would endorse the proposals as long as they excluded the 72 short-range Pershing IAs that are controlled by West Germany. The United States controls the nuclear warheads on the missiles, which have a range of 450 miles.
Carrington said that America's allies will back the arms negotiations and renew calls for East-West talks to cut conventional arms in which "there is an imbalance in the Warsaw Pact's favor."
A superpower medium-range agreement would focus on the 441 Soviet SS-20 missiles and the 316 U.S. cruise and Pershing II missiles deployed in four West European nations. These missiles carry a total of 1,639 nuclear warheads.
On shorter-range missiles, the Soviets offered to remove SS-12 and SS-23 rockets in East Germany and Czechoslovakia. The United States would abandon the right to install such missiles in Western Europe.

The superpowers have not signed a nuclear arms accord since 1979.
The NATO ministers are expected to state in a communique that they prefer the elimination of all superpower short- and medium-range nuclear missiles. "This would make verification of compliance with the accord simpler," said one NATO official, who spoke on condition he was not identified.
A tentative deal agreed to in Iceland last year by Reagan and Gorbachev provided for each side keeping 100 medium-range missiles on its territory, with the Soviet missiles in Asia.
The NATO allies, while supporting East-West talks to reduce conventional arms, are divided on how to negotiate such cuts. France wants the talks to be held in the 35-nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. The other allies favor negotiations between the NATO and Warsaw Pact countries.
The discussions on the Persian Gulf come as the Reagan administration seeks to expand the U.S. presence in the area following the May 17 Iraqi attack on the USS Stark, which killed 37 soldiers.
Reagan and the leaders of six other Western economic powers, meeting in Venice this week, said in a statement that freedom of navigation in the gulf "is of paramount importance" to ensure the West's crude oil supply.
Iraq apologized for the attack, calling it a mistake, but Iran has vowed to target U.S. property in the gulf.

ECU Team To Join Excavation Project

An underwater research team from East Carolina University will assist in the excavation of a Revolutionary War vessel that sank at Yorktown, Va. in 1781.
The research will be part of the ECU Summer Field School in Maritime History and Underwater Research from June 24 to July 30. Nine graduate students and four professors will work with archaeologists from Virginia at the Yorktown Shipwreck Project site in the York River. Work there will begin in the second week of July.
The first two weeks of the field school will be held on campus. Students will learn about shipwrecks and will practice on a shipwreck model that was constructed as a training aid for underwater archaeology.
The Yorktown site will provide the students experience with one of the best preserved shipwrecks of the period. It will also allow them to work at one of the most unusual shipwreck excavations ever attempted because the wreck is completely surrounded by a protective cofferdam. Constructed of corrugated metal, the cofferdam lets divers work in a controlled environment.

The ship, an unnamed merchant vessel, was scuttled by Gen. Charles Cornwallis in the final hours of the Revolutionary War.
Excavation of the best preserved of the ships began five years ago. The project is funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities and is managed by the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission.
Virginia archaeologist John Broadwater is director of the project. He is assisted by Billy Ray Morris, a former ECU student.
The ECU field school team will be directed by Gordon Watts and Brad Rodgers, underwater archaeologists; by Dr. William Still, a maritime historian, and by Dr. Richard Stephenson, a geographer.
Headquarters for the field school at Yorktown will be a U.S. Coast Guard station near the wreck site.

Scuba Diver Dies Off N.C. Coast

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — Coast Guard officials say an Ohio man was killed when he apparently ran out of air while scuba diving on a submerged wreck 20 miles offshore from Morehead City.
Leon Geiger of Urbana, Ohio, was diving on a World War I wreck about 115 feet underwater Tuesday when he ran out of air, Coast Guard officials said. Geiger used a "buddy-breathing" technique — sharing air with another diver — for part of the ascent to the surface, but was not breathing when he was pulled aboard a waiting boat.

The Coast Guard dispatched a cutter and an emergency medical technician on board administered oxygen. A search and rescue helicopter from the Cherry Point Marine Air Station in Havelock later flew Geiger to Carteret General Memorial Hospital in Morehead City, where he was declared dead on arrival.
His body has been sent to Onslow Memorial Hospital for an autopsy.

Abolish Fees

The Greenville City Council should abolish the residential garbage collection fee for fiscal year 1987-88 and work toward eliminating the commercial collection fee in 1988-89.

The refuse fee is unfair and never should have been instituted. It is inequitable to ask residents and businesses to pay a second time for a basic public service already paid for by taxes.

Now, while formulating the 1987-88 budget, the City Council can rectify this situation by eliminating the residential fee for the coming year. According to the proposed budget, this can be accomplished without a tax increase. The council would be remiss if it did not take this opportunity to remove a practice that amounts to regressive taxation.

The council should also commit itself to removing the commercial refuse collection fee in fiscal year 1988-89 — without turning the service over to private contractors. The city, for the sake of public health and sanitation, should provide both residences and businesses with garbage pickup.

It appears the commercial fee cannot be abolished without a tax increase in 1987-88, but the council should take positive steps now to remove the fees in 1988-89, as well as continue the service. Privatization of garbage collection represents a reduction of city services. Cutbacks should be instituted only in emergency circumstances, and garbage collection — residential or commercial — should be the last area affected.

Refuse pickup, whether applied to private citizens or commercial concerns, is essential to the health and safety of Greenville. The City Council will be acting soundly if it abolishes user fees for this service — residential in 1987-88 and commercial in 1988-89.

Inept Performance

By lifting a portion of the U.S. economic sanctions on Japanese electronics products President Reagan actually bolstered any suspicions among Japanese officials that the sanctions were a bluff and meaningless.

He didn't strengthen his position at home, either. Mr. Reagan's own data, collected by the U.S. Commerce Department, provided him with no justification for lifting the sanctions.

The data showed Japanese markets were no more open to the U.S. computer chips sales in late May than they had been before. And we're told at best the study showed a slight raising of Japanese prices for just one kind of computer chip and no improvement for other chips monitored in the study.

Those sanctions were imposed just as sharp declines in the value of the dollar against the Japanese yen appeared on the verge of easing trade frictions — and just as an increase in the cost of Japanese products raised the promise of easing the U.S. $60 billion trade deficit with that country.

Such an inept performance by the U.S. at the seven-nation economic conference in Venice could only erode Washington's image abroad as a reliable leader in the economic field. It also damaged the administration's image at home where House Speaker Jim Wright fretted over possibly sending the wrong signals to Japan. In the Senate, Robert Byrd flatly said it was too early to ease sanctions, observing the Japanese had merely cut back on dumping semiconductors for a single month.

Japan's top trade official views the U.S. gesture as insufficient and is urging an early and total lifting of the measures — which sounds as though his reaction was cued by Japanese companies.

We are familiar with that. Our own government spokesmen get plenty of advice from industrial lobbyists, too. Why should the Japanese be different?

Are Journalists' Private Lives Fair Game?

WASHINGTON — Last week, when a Cleveland Plain Dealer reporter asked Ohio Gov. Richard Celeste if he had any "Gary Hart-type problems," the governor, a possible presidential candidate, answered, "No."

Two days later, the Plain Dealer, in a copyrighted story quoting unidentified sources, reported that Celeste's aides were worried that his past extra-marital affairs could harm his chances for next year's Democratic presidential nomination.

The Plain Dealer's decision to pursue Celeste's private life and bare a weakness may have helped boost circulation. But it represents a deplorable abuse of the power of the media. The Plain Dealer's poor judgment may soon trigger a national investigation into the personal and financial lives of journalists, which would be a double tragedy. Anyone who has been in the news business for long knows that journalists are often no purer than the people they cover.

Consider these journalistic indiscretions:

Item — During the final years of the shah of Iran's reign, his excellency invited a top editor at The New York Times to Tehran. The two hit it off famously and the shah asked his big-league guest to see his private gambling casino. Surprise, surprise, The New York Times honcho not only won oodles of money, but he capped off the evening by captivating the intellectual fantasies of a young woman who happened to be on the shah's personal staff. Now who was compromised in this episode?

Item — A well-known reporter for a major newspaper has seen nothing wrong with sleeping with her sources. During a 10-year stint in Washington, this female reporter has managed to have affairs with four members of Congress, two Cabinet officials and at least one foreign leader. Is it news when reporters sleep with their sources — for pleasure or news? Is it news when reporters commit adultery?

Everyone knows that people try to use news gatherers for their own purposes. (Why else should anyone answer one of our questions?) And as a result of this practice, people often give reporters freebees of assorted value. Despite strong restrictions against gift-taking at most newspapers, the practice, in some form or another, still continues.

Other variations of the same theme persist, too. For example, is it appropriate for journalists to charge corporate executives large sums of money to attend small briefings from public officials? In such an arrangement aren't journalists indiscriminately making money off the people they cover?

How can journalists demand honesty and purity of the people they report on if they don't uphold similarly high standards? The New York Times has sent questionnaires to all the presidential candidates, asking if they've had extra-marital affairs. Is the press asking for a similar examination of its own members? Unless the Fourth Estate redefines fairness and its importance, isn't it begging that others will redefine its role for them.

Guidelines Proposed To Protect Public

RALEIGH — Imagine that you're a seemingly healthy 51-year-old with a good salary and good health and disability insurance. All of a sudden you suffer a debilitating stroke. Your health insurance pays your medical bills, and disability gives you a small paycheck to live on.

But the stroke has left you unable to care for yourself. You need "custodial" care — either in a nursing home, or in your own home with visits from someone who will cook your meals, do your shopping or clean up. The cost of that help will have to come out of your rather limited income, or your savings. Medical insurance doesn't cover it.

The insurance industry has begun to market long term care insurance to give people some protection against these non-medical costs. But Insurance Commissioner Jim Long and some legislators worry that people might be buying something of which they have no understanding. A bill moving through the legislature provides standards and regulations for the sale of long term care insurance in North Carolina.

"We're trying to set up guidelines under which these policies could be issued," said Sen. Joe Johnson, D-Wake, sponsor of a bill Long drafted.

"It will put protections in the statutes so that companies can't just issue a wide divergence of products which mislead the public."

Several insurance industry lobbyists whose companies are not currently selling this kind of insurance in North Carolina said they actually favor the bill. It creates a framework around which to design an insurance product, they said. One said his company is moving slowly on this kind of insurance because the company doesn't have any cost experience with it. As long as the state failed to address the standards to which the insurance companies would be held, the companies couldn't adequately plan on their expected costs.

Johnson said he expected that long term care would begin to be included in group policies. But Brad Aycock, lobbyist for N.C. Blue Cross, said it would probably also be available to individuals. The insurance department said long term care insurance would be a wise buy for those who wanted to cover "those costs which aren't covered by Medicare or Medigap."

Aycock said that younger people might be able to lock themselves into a low rate for the insurance. Then, when they got older, they'd continue to be covered even though there was considerably more risk that they needed it.

Continued availability is one of the standards Long wanted put into law. If someone purchased this insurance during the years when he was not very likely to need it, then the insurance company shouldn't be able to drop their business once they aged into a higher risk category. The bill, which had passed the Senate and was headed to the House floor at this writing, specifically states that a policy cannot be cancelled because the insured has become ill or reached a certain age.

The bill also places very restrictive definitions on insurance terms like "pre-existing conditions" and "waiting period."

The bill also lays out exactly what kind of services the insurance would have to pay and then defines them. For example, it defines "chore services" and "homemaker services" and adopts existing legal definitions for other terms like "nursing home, domiciliary care and family care home."

The lobbyists said they thought long term care insurance would soon become popular in North Carolina. When added to a group health plan, it probably wouldn't be very expensive and it would give young and old workers alike a little more protection against a debilitating injury or illness.

Public Forum

To the editor:

All too often we're too quick to criticize and complain. We get caught up in the hectic lives we live and only speak up when we want to find fault. We forget to spread the good news or commend those who truly care about their fellow man.

The Eastern Carolina Vocational Center continually serves our community by providing hope for accident-misfortunate victims who otherwise would be "lost in the crowd." We hear about tragedies daily and the victims they engulf. We don't hear enough about the triumphs over tribulations — triumphs that are realized every day at the ECVC. When we forget about the tragedies and continue with our lives, the ECVC doesn't forget the victims. They help these victims and their families recreate their lives by providing hope, excitement and specialized training.

Because the ECVC continues to grow and expand its educational and specialized training programs, there's no need for life to end with a tragedy! The ECVC recreates a new beginning!

I salute the Eastern Carolina Vocational Center! I commend all who support its efforts.

Strength For Today

Someone has said that there is nothing in the world so hard to live with as a troubled conscience. Many people today who are sick, nervously distraught, restless and unhappy are in this state because down in the bottom of their hearts they know that their lives are not right with God and man.

George Washington once said, "I do not recollect that in the course of my life I have ever forfeited my word or broken a promise to anyone." This knowledge showed itself in his demeanor. All who met him remarked about his calmness, self-possession and quiet sense of purpose. It is down in the depths of people's lives that either quiet or chaos originates.

If there is something troubling your conscience, get it out. If you postpone dealing with it until tomorrow, you may not be able to deal with it at all.

Report Rains On Woodwinds, Trumpets and Strings

WASHINGTON — Trust the auditors, egged on by William Proxmire, to rain all over a national picnic. The General Accounting Office, at the senator's request, recently released an auditor's report on the presidential inaugural of 1985. The ceremonies cost the government a bundle, and the GAO thinks much of the outlay was illegal.

The senior senator from Wisconsin generally is recognized, if not always acclaimed, as the pre-eminent congressional penny-pincher of all time. He is even tighter than the late Sen. Harry F. Byrd of Virginia, which is saying a good deal. Back in January 1985, just before President Reagan's second inaugural, Proxmire asked the GAO to put its eagle eye on every dime of public funds that would be spent on the occasion. Proxmire wanted to know EVERYTHING, right down to "an audit of the use of military photographers, video or motion pictures taken, and a breakdown of the final disposition of all such photographic products."

It took the GAO a considerable time to pull the facts together, but now we know: Through seven different agencies, principally the Department of Defense, the taxpayers spent a net of $15,512,339.59 to get Mr. Reagan suitably reinstated in the White House. It would have been more, but the great parade had to be canceled because of the bitter cold.

Despite that disappointment, the festivities were extensive. The GAO noted that inaugurals tend to get more social all the time. James Madison's inaugural in 1809 saw the first official ball. Martin Van Buren's inaugural in 1837 was highlighted by two inaugural balls. William Henry Harrison in 1841 raised the number to three. The Kennedy inaugural of 1961 saw five, and the Reagan celebration in 1985 raised the number to nine.

In addition to the post-inaugural balls, we now have pre-inaugural galas. State societies sponsor receptions, brunches and breakfasts. In 1985 Arkansas staged a wine and cheese party; Nebraska served champagne. The Teamsters union opened a hospitality suite. American Indians held a ball. These things went on for four days before the actual swearing-in ceremony, and for four days thereafter. And they all had to be coordinated.

As in other years, the task of management fell primarily to a Presidential Inaugural Committee (PIC), and the tasks of execution devolved principally upon the Armed Forces Inaugural Committee (AFIC). What troubled the auditors is that in their view PIC is a private outfit, and under the general law the AFIC had mighty little authority for assisting it with public funds.

Still, tradition must be served, and the Department of Defense dug into its pocket for $10,027,045.11, of which only $52,468.22 was reimbursed by PIC, for a net outlay of $9,974,576.89.

Where did the money go? Mostly for manpower. AFIC assigned 1,826 officers and men to inaugural duties. They put in 81,603 staff days. The corps included 560 drivers, 244 ushers, 180 doctors and corpsmen, 74 public relations people, and two lawyers, presumably assigned to figuring out how to spend the money legally.

Like every auditor's report, the GAO's report to Senator Proxmire is crammed with mystifying details. On Jan. 18, 52 members of the Marine Corps' Drum and Bugle Corps performed at an auditor's cost of $520, or $10 a musician. On the following day 40 members of the same outfit performed at Constitution Hall for $300, or $7.50 per head. Meanwhile, at the Washington Convention Center the Army's Drum and Bugle Corps (26 members) was playing for $390, or $15 per head. Maybe they were louder.

Some color guards cost $5 per member. Some $6.66, some $22.50.

The gun salute on Jan. 21 required 35 cannoners; their time and ammunition went on the books at $1,050. The Marine Corps' seven-man silent drill team cost only $140, which is dirt cheap; those Marines are fantastic.

Ponder the meaning to be read into these figures: The Army provided 16 herald trumpets at $27.50 each and a string quartet at $28.75 per fiddler, but the Coast Guard charged only $23 for each member of a woodwind quintet. What invidious discrimination against the clarinet have the auditors here revealed?

Oh, yes. The photos. Sixty photographers turned out 3,233 prints and slides — the Air Force alone used 160 rolls of film — but the GAO could account for the disposition of only 2,525 of these. Until the missing 708 are fully accounted for, this audit must be regarded as critically flawed. Onward to 1989!

Martin, Jordan Offer Preview Of '88 Styles

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A fiery exchange between Gov. Jim Martin and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan over how to improve North Carolina school buildings offered a sneak preview of their likely 1988 campaign for governor.

"It's the kickoff of great things to come," Sen. Charles Hipps, D-Haywood, said Wednesday after Republican Martin and Democrat Jordan blasted each other in separate news conferences.

Versions of the insults they traded likely will be heard repeatedly over the next 18 months. While Martin and his allies portray Jordan as cowardly and indecisive, the Jordan camp will accuse Martin of incompetence and laziness.

At issue in Wednesday's clash was Jordan's decision last week to withdraw his support for a $1 billion bond issue, which Martin favors, to finance school construction.

The bill likely would be approved by the Senate. But Jordan said it would be a useless exercise because the bill faced certain rejection by the House, which has passed a school construction bill based on a temporary 1-cent sales tax increase.

Instead, Jordan put forward what he billed as a compromise. It would generate $2.9 billion over a decade from several sources, including half-cent sales tax increases authorized in 1983 and 1986, annual $50 million appropriations, local funds and a new timetable for collecting state corporate taxes.

Jordan asked the Senate Finance Committee on Wednesday to approve his bill and defeat the House tax bill.

A News Analysis

The panel will vote on both measures Friday, according to the chairman, Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston.

Shortly thereafter, Martin summoned reporters to accuse Jordan of knuckling under to pressure from House Democrats who want him to draw clearer distinctions between himself and Martin.

"He ought to be strong enough to stand up to that," Martin said. "I am. I don't back away from something just because he's for it."

"He bailed out, quit... gave up," Martin added. "It was like second down and long yardage, and his proposal was 'let's punt.'"

Barely two hours later, Jordan called a news conference at the Legislative Building.

"Rather than work toward a solution that will build new schools for our children, he (Martin) has decided to sit on the sidelines... whining to the press," Jordan said. "Being called ineffective by this governor is like being called ugly by a frog."

The vitriolic exchange brought to the surface mutual hostility over which, for the most part, Martin and Jordan have kept a thin veil during their 2½ years as North Carolina's two top elected officials.

It may signal a halt to the uneasy alliances they occasionally have forged to promote legislation, such as last year's $200 million highway financing package, and to ward off measures they oppose.

Ironically, in attacking Jordan, Martin found himself praising Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville. Watkins and House Speaker Liston Ramsey have been the governor's two most bitter foes in the Legislature. On several occasions, Martin has turned to Jordan to thwart Watkins-sponsored bills to erode executive-branch authority.

While disagreeing with Watkins, "at least I know where he stands," Martin said. "You won't see Billy Watkins indecisive, you won't see him cut and run or pretend that he's come up with a compromise that's not."

Jordan, meanwhile, acknowledged that some House Democrats had accused him of working too closely with Martin. "Maybe the House Democrats were right," he said. "It doesn't mean I'm not going to work with (Martin). But I'm not going to sit here and let him criticize me for doing what I think is right without good cause."

Jordan said Martin's statements indicate that he realizes "his record does not justify re-election. Instead, he apparently has chosen to run a Congressional Club 1984-type campaign of personal attacks, name calling and mudslinging."

"I do not believe the people of North Carolina want a campaign of this type any more than they want a continuation of his do-nothing leadership," Jordan said.

In a written response to Jordan, Martin denied playing dirty. "I have not engaged in name calling and I do not intend to..."

He acknowledged criticizing Jordan's actions and his school proposal, which Martin labeled "a charade" that would build schools with "smoke and mirrors" instead of "bricks and mortar."

The governor insisted the bond plan would have had a chance in the House if he and Jordan had fought for it together. But Jordan "jerked the rug out from under us," Martin said. "We were... up to the point of being ready to have a showdown in the General Assembly, and you need to do that every once in a while."

Jordan said Martin's assessment proved he did not understand the legislative process. "The bond plan had a zero chance..." Jordan said. He said his alternative plan involved neither bonds nor tax increases and occupied "a responsible middle ground."

Legislators Get A Look At Zoo

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — Members of the state Legislature visited the N.C. Zoological Park Wednesday as part of a campaign to convince the state to fund not only the zoo's requested operating budget, but a $31 million expansion to add North American animals to the zoo's collection.

"It's a little early to tell yet," Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said. "Schools need $50 million and we have to find funding for the community colleges and the university system. But this (the tour) will help. You know what they say, the squeaky wheel gets the grease."

Burlington Bid Raised

NEW YORK (AP) — Raising the stakes in an increasingly complicated financial and legal struggle, a New York investment group competing for control of Burlington Industries Inc. has offered $78 a share for the textile giant. A group led by Morgan Stanley & Co. on Wednesday sweetened its friendly bid to acquire Burlington $78 a share, or $2.12 billion, from $76 a share. Morgan Stanley officials "really want to acquire the company," a spokesman for the investment firm to the Greensboro News & Record. The revised proposal tops a rival and hostile $77-a-share offer for Burlington, the nation's biggest textile producer, from New York investor Asher B. Edelman and Canadian textile maker Dominion Textile Inc. Morgan Stanley's latest offer is likely to return the focus of attention in the Burlington battle to Wall Street, after a week of legal maneuvering in U.S. District Court in Greensboro, N.C. However, further court action is likely in Richmond, Va., and New York.

McNair Tribute Planned

GREENSBORO (AP) — Astronaut Ronald McNair may have died in the space shuttle Challenger explosion, but the laser-physicist won't soon be forgotten at North Carolina A&T State University. N.C. A&T will honor McNair Friday when the school dedicates its $8.5 million engineering building. "This will be a magnificent tribute to Dr. McNair, a genuine American hero," Chancellor Edward B. Fort said. "It's a world-class building." McNair was killed when the Challenger exploded Jan. 28, 1986. "The building will be functional for the rest of the century," said Suresh Chandra, dean of the School of Engineering. McNair Hall, 94,000-square-foot, will more than double the space for the engineering school, which is now housed in Cherry and Graham halls. McNair Hall will adjoin those buildings, which have become outdated and overcrowded as A&T's engineering program has grown.

TB Tests Prove Negative

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Tuberculosis test results from 19 infants born at Cape Fear Medical Center show none of the children have the disease, hospital officials said Wednesday. The babies were in the first group of 600 infants who will be tested for TB. Hospital officials said Tuesday they would test the infants, who were born at the hospital in February and March and may have been exposed to tuberculosis from an infected worker. Hospital officials did not identify the worker. Hospital spokesman Clinton Weaver said officials were pleased with the test results so far. He said the tests would continue until all 600 infants are tested.

Town Water Pipe Ruptures

SALUDA, N.C. (AP) — Saluda residents shouldn't be without a continuous water source for long after a massive, aging water pipe ruptured, cutting off water here and killing fish in the Green River, officials said. Hendersonville employees will lay a replacement water main Thursday, said Ezra Allman, assistant director of the city's water and sewer services. The milelong wooden flume carrying water from Lake Summit to Duke Power Co.'s Tuxedo Hydro Plant gave way about 7:10 a.m. Wednesday where the cypress-and-steel pipe passes under the bridge carrying U.S. 176 between Hendersonville and Saluda. The 61-year-old pipe, carrying an estimated 40,000 to 50,000 gallons per minute, fell apart as tons of white water roiled from the splintered boards. The torrent eroded a chasm that devoured a service road and consumed rocks, dirt and trees. The debris careened 80 feet into Green River, killing fish and prompting officials to declare the river off-limits to boaters.

Vote Fraud Witness Sentenced

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Ricky Carver, the key witness in the upcoming vote fraud trial of Robbinsville town alderman Kenneth Carver, has been imprisoned for his role in buying votes in Graham County during the 1982 general election. Ricky Carver, who is no relation to Kenneth Carver, was sentenced Wednesday to six months in prison with the balance of the three-year sentence suspended. U.S. District Judge David Sentelle also fined him $1,000. Carver, now of Gastonia, also agreed to testify against Kenneth Carver. The Robbinsville town official was re-indicted Tuesday on charges of perjury and election fraud. Indictments allege he gave Ricky Carver liquor to give to voters during the 1982 general election in Graham County. Carver, Kenneth Carver and James Henry "Junior" Millsaps were indicted Feb. 12 on a charge of conspiracy to buy votes. Charges against Millsaps were dismissed. Kenneth Carver's trial has not been scheduled.

Church Members Denied Order

GREENSBORO (AP) — Two members of a Reidsville church lost their first battle in a lawsuit against the pastor and others over operation of the congregational Baptist church. Superior Court Judge Melzer Morgan refused to issue an order on Wednesday restraining the Rev. O'Kelley Lawson, pastor of First Baptist Church, from spending church money without prior approval in an authorized congregational meeting. "The plaintiffs have not shown probable cause, and there is no reason why a preliminary injunction is necessary," Morgan said in Rockingham Superior Court. Church members James Griggs Sr. and Sam Nunnally sought the order, saying in their lawsuit that Lawson and four other church officials have improperly spent church money and made other decisions without required approval from the whole congregation.

By DIRK BEVERIDGE
Associated Press Writer

The U.S. Justice Department, the Internal Revenue Service and the Postal Service have launched criminal investigations of the PTL television ministry, the Rev. Jerry Falwell says.

Investigators are looking at actions taken before the Rev. Jim Bakker resigned as leader of PTL and turned control over to Falwell in March, Falwell said Wednesday night after a church service and a closed-door meeting of the PTL board.

"They have all advised us it was prior to our arrival, thank God," Falwell told reporters.

Meanwhile, Bakker, and his wife, Tammy Faye, returned to the Carolinas Wednesday night to claim belongings from the Tega Cay, S.C., mansion they left in January, saying they hope to return to television ministry soon.

"Our goal is to be on the air in 30 days," Bakker told The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer at Dallas-Fort Worth airport while awaiting a connecting flight to Charlotte with his wife and their son, Jamie.

Bakker, who has been living in Palm Springs, Calif., since resigning amid revelations he had a sexual encounter with a secretary, refused to be specific.

It was not clear whether his intentions were related to or independent of PTL, which Bakker has said he wants back. Falwell has said the Bakkers will never be permitted to return to PTL, which Bakker founded.

"I assume he is talking about somewhere else, not on PTL," Falwell spokesman Mark DeMoss said when told of Bakker's comments.

The PTL board gathered at Falwell's Old-Time Gospel Hour headquarters in Lynchburg to discuss the ministry's $70 million debt. During a break in the six-hour meeting, Falwell said that things keep looking worse for PTL.

He has said he wants to rebuild PTL and leave it by next March. Three new directors were added to the board, raising the number of directors to eight.

They are Harry Hargrave, a PTL executive and pastor of Highland Park Presbyterian Church in Dallas; Richard Lee, pastor of Rehobeth Baptist Church in Atlanta; and Jerry Lipps of Lipps Trucking in Cape Girardeau, Mo. "We'll be adding a couple more in the weeks and months ahead," Falwell told the congregation at his Thomas Road Baptist Church later.

Speaking with reporters earlier, Falwell said he and other board members had received a detailed report on PTL finances from the national accounting firm Arthur Anderson and Co.

"We owe 1,400 creditors $70 million," he said. "Twenty-three million is delinquent. We obviously have some problems."

Asked Wednesday night whether any of the debt involved funds that had been misspent or embezzled, Falwell said, "There's no way I can determine the genuineness of the indebtedness."

He said the federal probes were made known Tuesday to PTL attorney Roy Grutman, and it was believed to involve allegations of wire fraud and mail fraud. "It appears that funds apparently were raised under false pretense," Falwell said.

He repeated his hope that no indictments are forthcoming, saying, "I think it would be very hurtful for the overall cause of Christ for criminal charges to be filed."

A civil audit of PTL by the IRS has been under way for several years. Last year, the agency proposed lifting the ministry's tax-exempt status for 1980-83, saying the status was used for the personal benefit of Bakker and other PTL officials.

Falwell said PTL was negotiating with the IRS to try to keep its tax-exempt status.

The Justice Department has said it was conducting a preliminary investigation of PTL.

Farmers Win Court-Ordered Access To Tobacco Co-Op's Record Books

RALEIGH (AP) — A lawyer representing two tobacco farmers called a judge's decision to force the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp. to open its books to them "a victory for the principle of corporate accountability."

Judge B. Craig Ellis of Wake County Superior Court said Wednesday that Dewey Keith and Horace Tart, as shareholders of the cooperative, can inspect the records to investigate the condition of Stabilization's finances and management. The cooperative has 60 days to make the records available to the farmers, Ellis said.

Raleigh lawyer John Butler called the judge's decision "a victory for the 60,000 active flue-cured tobacco farmers in the five flue-cured states."

The two Fuquay-Varina farmers had demanded access to financial and other management records they claim they need to determine whether the grower-owned co-op is poorly managed.

Stabilization, however, plans to appeal the decision, said Fred Bond, general manager, secretary and treasurer of the cooperative. He declined to comment further.

Keith said Bond's plans to appeal "will further discredit his credibility or someone's credibility.... We're not going to back off. We will appeal every time he likes. I think it will be fruitless for him to appeal it."

Tart said an examination of the reords may help the farmers to substantiate charges that were investigated two years ago by the Inspector General's Office.

If an inspection of Stabilization's records indicates that the organization is being run adequately, Tart said, it "will restore farmers' confidence in the co-op."

Carl Patterson, a Raleigh lawyer representing Stabilization, said during the trial last week that the farmers should not be allowed access to the records because they lack evidence of mismanagement. He could not be reached for comment Wednesday, The Morning Star in Wilmington reported.

Butler said during the trial that an investigation by the U.S. Department of Agriculture determined that an employee of Tobacco Growers Services Inc., a subsidiary of the cooperative, spent three months as a housekeeper at a manager's house while on the TGS payroll.

Tart said that rumors of mismanagement prompted some 700 tobacco farmers to sign a petition seeking access to Stabilization records. The farmers were "stonewalled all the way" by the co-op's directors as they attempted to investigate the rumors, he said.

"Now I feel like the board of directors will listen to what we've got to say," Tart said.

Market Opening May Be Delayed

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — The tobacco crop in the five flue-cured tobacco producing states is about two weeks late, and an advisory committee of the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp. says they won't make a decision on market openings until July.

Advisory committee members met last week to establish marketing areas, selling schedules and market openings. But the committee delayed the decision on market openings until July 7, said Fred Bond, general manager of the tobacco co-op.

Unfavorable weather conditions this spring has delayed plant development and farmers were unable to set transplants because the weather was either too wet or too dry in the tobacco producing states. A plant shortage also caused delays in transplanting the crop to fields, Bond said.

Bond said Wednesday that members of USDA's tobacco advisory committee are leaning toward opening markets the last week in July in Georgia and Florida.

Border Belt markets of North Carolina and South Carolina usually open a week later, followed by the opening the next day of Eastern Belt markets. Markets on the Old and Middle belts usually open a week after the Eastern belt, Bond said.

Georgia and Florida markets opened last year on July 29. The Border Belt markets opened Aug. 5, followed by Eastern Belt markets on Aug. 6. Markets on the Old and Middle belts opened Aug. 12.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has not determined the fee producers and buyers will pay to support the no-net-cost tobacco program. The fee was set last year during the last week in July.

State Wants New Trade Offices

RALEIGH (AP) — The N.C. Department of Commerce says it will ask the General Assembly for $560,000 over the next two years to open trade offices in Hong Kong and South Korea.

The move is part of a shift in the state's strategy as the falling dollar makes U.S. exports cheaper abroad, state officials said Wednesday.

"We don't have a real strong program in exporting now," said Sam Taylor, Commerce Department spokesman. "The state didn't contribute as many funds to it in the past because the dollar was so high that it impeded exports."

North Carolina already has trade offices in Dusseldorf, West Germany, and a trade representative in Japan. Those offices had concentrated mostly on recruiting foreign plants, Taylor said, but now are shifting more toward encouraging trade.

The two new offices are slated for Pacific Rim countries because of the potential for growth in trade in that area of the world, Taylor said.

Body Found

ELM CITY, N.C. (AP) — A decomposed body was found Wednesday morning by farm workers in a Wilson County field and was sent to Pitt Memorial Hospital for an autopsy.

Although no positive identification has been made, Wilson County Sheriff Wayne Gay said this morning that officials believe the body is that of a 16-year-old Fike High School student who has been missing since Friday.

Gay said the 16-year-old girl had told her father she was going to spend the weekend with friends in Rocky Mount.

CAR TALK

From Joe Cullipher Chrysler
Plymouth, Dodge, Peugeot

By James Phillips

DON'T GIVE IT AWAY

If you want to give your car away - that's one thing. But if someone is going to attempt to steal it from you, why make it easy?

FBI studies show that one of the main reasons cars are stolen is because owners make it so tempting. Did you know that in almost half of the recorded car thefts in this country that the keys were in the ignition or the ignition left unlocked.

About four out of five automobiles are stolen by young, nonprofessional thieves. Just the act of rolling up the windows and locking the car when you leave it unattended, will discourage most of these amateurs when easier pickings are nearby. Unless a professional is after your car, you stand a very good chance of preventing its theft. It certainly should be worth the money and inconvenience to take the extra minute or so needed.

House Turns Down Comparative Fault Bill

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Confidence turned quickly to dismay when advocates of changing North Carolina's civil justice system watched relatively silent opponents rise up to kill a bill that had passed the House in three previous sessions.

"The wolf ate Little Red Riding Hood," said David Blackwell of the North Carolina Academy of Trial Lawyers after Wednesday's 68-45 vote.

The bill would have repealed a law that bars compensation to accident victims who are partly to blame for their injuries. Supporters blamed stiff lobbying by business and industry for the defeat and vowed to try again in 1989.

"I think the lobbyists had a lot to do with it, and there are a lot of new members of the House that don't understand it and are easily misled by the siren song of special interests," said Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, who got the bill through the Senate for the first time this year.

"They picked a bill and just pounced on it," Blackwell said.

The defeat came only minutes after Rep. Dennis Wicker, D-Lee, told the House that opponents "coming into this session knew they were beaten."

Wicker, one of nine House members to speak in favor of the bill, told the House that industry was more interested in showing its muscle than in its claims the bill would raise insurance premiums.

"I believe they began to oppose this bill because they were more concerned about their image and influence in the General Assembly than they were the issue itself," he said.

The influence seemed negligible when only three people raised objections during House debate. Rep. Don Beard, D-Cumberland, the only opponent to speak for more than a minute, said the bill would result in a 32 percent increase in insurance premiums and would hurt North Carolina's business climate.

"This bill is designed here to where there'll be more people making more claims and recovering more money," he said. "The only place this money can be recovered ... is from the people in the way of premiums."

Wicker said that none of the 44 states with comparative fault had reported problems with high insurance rates. He said the 32 percent figure came from a study by a professor who was a member of the North Carolina Citizens for Business and Industry — a study paid for by defense attorneys, Duke Power Co. and R.J. Reynolds, among others.

"It is not credible," he said.

When the vote was posted, Wicker moved to adjourn in hopes of regrouping and trying to reverse the decision Thursday, but his motion was defeated 64-47 and the House voted 64-48 for a parliamentary maneuver that would require a two-thirds vote to reconsider the bill.

Both Wicker and Barnes said the issue would re-emerge in 1989.

"It is a fair and just system that should be passed," said Barnes. "It will be run again."

The bill passed the Senate only after it was amended, on a tie vote broken by Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, to eliminate a legal concept opposed by industry. That concept, called joint and several liability, lets accident victims seek full compensation from every party responsible for their injuries.

The House Committee on Courts and the Administration of Justice stripped out the amendment. Wicker said it was just "camouflage" offered by industry in the guise of a "great compromise."

Opponents of comparative fault argued that eliminating joint and several liability would be a fair trade, requiring "deep-pocket" defendants to pay only their fair share of an accident.

But Wicker and Rep. Monroe Buchanan, R-Mitchell, said that would pose an impossible burden on people trying to gain compensation for such things as exposure to hazardous chemicals.

Senate OKs Investment Expansion

RALEIGH (AP) — After defeating a final bid to guarantee investments in North Carolina businesses, the state Senate gave final approval to a bill to expand state government's investment portfolio.

The bill, passed 44-3 Wednesday, now goes to the House. If enacted, it would allow State Treasurer Harlan Boyles to put state funds in a variety of investments now off-limits.

Critics assailed provisions allowing overseas investments and use of state dollars as "venture capital" for fledgling companies, calling them too risky. But amendments to outlaw both were defeated Tuesday.

On Wednesday, Sen. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, proposed an amendment to require that at least one-third of the estimated $30 million that could be invested as venture capital be invested in North Carolina companies.

"If this is a good idea and venture capital is the way we want to go ... what's wrong with taking one-third of that and saying we are going to keep that at home, we are going to help North Carolinians with this," Johnson said.

Sen. Bob Somers, R-Rowan, said Johnson had "confused social policy with investing money. The purpose of this entire bill is to enable the treasurer of North Carolina to produce the greatest return on the money we have available to invest." Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, sponsor of the bill, said Boyles and the state's financial advisers would invest as much as they could in North Carolina companies but that their hands shouldn't be tied.

Shooting Victim Is Buried

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A 16-year-old girl shot to death over the weekend at Carowinds theme park was buried at a funeral service in South Carolina, while police still search for the bullet that ripped through the teen-ager.

Michele Ann Sexton was buried Wednesday in Rock Hill. She was killed Sunday when hit in the back with a bullet while floating on a raft in a crowded wave pool at the park, which straddles the North Carolina-South Carolina border. A large-caliber bullet entered her back and exited through her chest, police said.

Another girl, Ahesha Rollins, 6, was shot in the upper left abdomen. She was in fair condition Wednesday at Charlotte Memorial Hospital.

Meanwhile, investigators still have not been able to find the bullet that killed Ms. Sexton, Mecklenburg County Police Capt. Chris Owens said. The pool was drained earlier in the week and police have scanned the area with metal detectors, but have come up empty.

"We've tried to be as open as we can, but we can't bring everyone every step of the way," Owens said. "There have been no significant developments."

Police also have declined to speculate on how the bullets traveled a half mile — apparently over tall pine and oak trees — from the firing range to the wave pool.

Police have theorized that the girls were struck by errant bullets meant for the target. Investigators found about 15 spent shells at the firing range. They said the shells appeared to match up with the bullet taken from the Rollins girl.

Police don't believe the two victims were shot by the same bullet. The girls were at least 50 feet apart in a crowded pool, they said, and Ms. Sexton was lying face-down on a raft when she was hit.

However, police continued to run ballistics tests on an AK47 rifle that was surrendered by one man at the target range, Owens said, trying to determine if a bullet from that weapon matches a bullet taken from the 6-year-old girl.

The owner of the site where the shooting range was located said no one had been given permission to use the land. Miles Boyer, vice president for real estate for Crescent Land & Timber Co., said no one had authorization to enter the undeveloped 88-acre site.

Owens said the case wouldn't be turned over to the district attorney's office until the investigation was complete.

Tiny Teen Gets His Diploma

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — When Kevin Whittum received his high school diploma last weekend from Heritage Academy, it wasn't a milestone but a miracle.

Kevin weighs 20 pounds and is 28 inches tall. The 18-year-old victim of a brittle-bone disease, he's unable to walk and suffers from heart and breathing problems. Medications and an oxygen machine are part of his daily life. The inspiration for Kevin's House, a 13,000-square-foot home for foster children on the grounds of Heritage USA, he now whiles away the hours working on his home computer.

But Kevin's fondness for the PTL ministry and general enthusiasm stand out more than his health problems. It's not uncommon to find him in the Heritage Grand Hotel lobby, traveling about in his motorized wheelchair and visiting PTL Partners.

"I'm not sure when I'm going to college," Kevin said. "But I plan to study business administration and computer science." Eventually, he hopes to open some computer stores.

And Kevin said he has discussed attending Liberty University with Jonathan Falwell, the 21-year-old son of PTL Board Chairman Jerry Falwell.

The mention of Falwell's name evokes little response from Kevin. But any questions about PTL founder Jim Bakker rally a defense from him.

A year ago, a tearful Bakker promised Kevin a house on the grounds of Heritage. The house would be a center for handicapped children.

But there have been snags on the original plan for the house.

PTL was unable to meet the requirements for a residential care facility set down by the state Department of Social Services, according to spokesman Norma Anderson.

However, PTL has received a temporary one-year license from DSS certifying the facility as a foster home that can care for up to six children, Mrs. Anderson said.

Kevin and his family live in the two-story Victorian house today, a house built by Bakker in 32 days.

KEVIN GRADUATES — Kevin Whittum smiles for the photographer as he listens to one of his tapes. Whittum, 18, weighs only 20 pounds and is 28 inches tall. He has a brittle-bone disease that makes it impossible to walk. Despite his physical problems, he received his high school diploma last week from Heritage Academy at PTL's Heritage USA. (AP Laserphoto)

Bakker now lives in exile in California, three months after a stormy resignation and departure from PTL.

"I'd like to see Jim come back," Kevin said. "Yes, I think he should come back even though there's been trouble. He asked for forgiveness and he's just waiting for the (PTL) partners to say come back."

But Kevin still believes in PTL despite the ministry's recent problems.

PTL is a ministry and no matter who is involved with it, there will be a ministry as long as partners back it, he said. And as for PTL surviving a recent financial crisis, Kevin says there was never any doubt. "I think PTL is on the road to recovery," he said.

Kevin's adoptive mother, Ione Whittum, said Kevin's 10 months at PTL have been happy and free of hospital stays.

"He used to spend time in the hospital every six to nine months when we lived in Michigan," she said. "But he has the will to live and he's been healthier since we've been here."

Kevin plans to return to Michigan for a visit later this summer. But he says Heritage USA is now home.

As long as he has the computer and his phone he's happy, his mother says.

Kevin couldn't spend the lazy months of summer better than playing with his computer.

There's always something new and challenging, he said. "Sometimes I spend all day working on my computer."

And he'll carry only pleasant memories of a friendship with Bakker. "We're not here to judge people," Kevin said. "We'll leave that to God."

Report Says Administration Sapping 'Hate' Movement

NEW YORK (AP) — The Reagan administration has been the toughest foe the extreme right has faced in decades, in part because it has provided a mainstream alternative to conservative fanaticism, a report says.

The administration also has brought more right-wing extremists to trial than any other since World War II, said the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, a Jewish service organization.

"The hate movement is weaker today than in many years," the ADL said in Wednesday's report. It gave credit to "the superb job done by the Justice Department and law enforcement agencies" and to "the good sense and decency" of most Americans.

The report, "The Hate Movement Today: A Chronicle of Violence and Disarray," focuses on such groups as the Ku Klux Klan, the Order, Posse Comitatus, the Aryan Nations and various neo-Nazi organizations.

Such groups reached a peak of popularity in 1981 and have been declining since, the report said.

The ADL said the Reagan administration's conservative social and cultural values have "tended to undermine whatever base of popular support the far right had begun to acquire."

"The tendency of extremist groups is to thrive when there are administrations in Washington that represent the opposite of their views," said Irwin Suall, fact-finding director for the ADL.

He said the Reagan administration appeals to the "sympathetic constituency" of the far right — people who might support extremist groups without becoming heavily involved in their activities.

As a result, the far right has been pared down to "hardbitten ideologues and fanatics" who would oppose anyone in the White House, he said. And the federal government has responded harshly to their growing penchant for violence.

The report catalogued a long list of criminal cases against far right groups for such activities as synagogue firebombings, the slaying of Denver radio talk show host Alan Berg, illegal paramilitary training and conspiracies to overthrow the government.

"Not since the Roosevelt administration's wartime indictments of Axis sympathizers on charges of sedition have so many far-right extremists been placed on trial," the report said.

Eighty percent of people 65 and older do not work.

Undercover Store Yields Arrests

GIBSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Police from seven agencies Wednesday began arresting 51 "customers" of Bob's Bargain Mart, a phony Gibsonville store staffed by three undercover police officers who bought stolen property and small amounts of drugs from its patrons.

By late afternoon, 26 people had been arrested on burglary and drug charges in what police called "Operation Clean Sweep."

The store opened last November in an effort to bring charges against people selling drugs and committing burglaries in Alamance and Guilford counties, Charles Dunn, deputy director of the State Bureau of Investigation, said in a news conference Wednesday.

Dunn said law enforcement agencies spent $9,250 to open the store and buy drugs and stolen goods from store customers. Police issued arrest warrants on 186 charges, most of them for sales of marijuana and other drugs.

Presbyterians Elect Professor

By JOHN A. BOLT
Associated Press Writer

ISABEL ROGERS

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — Isabel Rogers, a Christian educator who is the newly elected leader of America's largest Presbyterian denomination, defeated another woman for the post of moderator by just two votes.

Ms. Rogers beat the Rev. Joan SalmonCampbell 325-323 on the fifth ballot Wednesday at the church's 190th General Assembly.

Ms. Rogers, who succeeds the Rev. Benjamin Weir as moderator of the Presbyterian Church (USA), is a professor of ethics at the Presbyterian School of Christian Education in Richmond, Va.

Weir, a former hostage in Lebanon, was not eligible for a second one-year term as the denomination's chief spokesman.

The other candidates — the Rev. Jaime O. Quinones, a denomination executive from Sante Fe, N.M., and the Rev. John D. MacLeod Jr., a denomination executive from Raleigh, N.C. — were dropped from consideration after four ballots.

The prominence of women in the election indicates the church is "beginning to be freed up," Ms. Rogers said. "People will be considered for their abilities."

Ms. Rogers, who is white, said her defeat of Ms. SalmonCampbell, who is black, did not reflect the denomination's attitude about race. But she added, "We need to be aware there are racial-ethnic concerns."

About 2.5 percent of the denomination is black, and several of the questions asked the candidates before the election dealt with the future of minorities in the church.

Rogers is the sixth woman to lead either the United Presbyterian Church (USA) or the Presbyterian Church (US), which were reunited in 1983 after a century-old split.

She said Presbyterians should not back away from their theological positions to stem a four-year drop in membership.

The Assembly was told earlier that the denomination had 3,016,488 members last year, a drop of 40,738 from the previous year and almost 200,000 less than in 1983. That decline, combined with the recent unification of two Lutheran groups, drops the PCUSA to the 10th largest religious group in the nation.

Some of the decrease has been blamed on disagreements over positions taken by past General Assemblies.

The denomination, for example, has taken a position favoring a woman's right to have an abortion,

Lightning Launches 3 Rockets

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is investigating a freak accident in which three small scientific rockets, on a pad and primed for liftoff, were launched accidentally by a lightning strike.

Ironically, the rockets were part of a lightning study.

The same storm knocked the nation's prime weather satellites out of service for several hours, depriving Americans of satellite images from space normally seen on television news.

All launch personnel had been ordered into the blockhouse minutes before the involuntary rocket launching Tuesday night at Wallops Island, Va., and no one was hurt. The total value of rockets and equipment destroyed was less than $50,000, NASA said.

"We have launched more than 13,000 rockets and this is the first occurrence we have had of this type," said John L. Parks Jr., range safety officer of NASA's Wallops Flight Facility, who is heading the investigation.

Experts say such an accident is unlikely in larger rockets, which have more extensive safe-and-arm devices, or in ballistic missiles, which are stored underground.

The accident differed from the one on March 26 when a lightning flash found its way to the computer aboard a huge Atlas-Centaur rocket being launched from Cape Canaveral, Fla. An accident board determined that the jolt caused the computer to send the rocket off course and it had to be destroyed at a loss of $161 million for launcher and cargo.

The three vehicles Tuesday were a 16-foot-long Orion and two 4-foot-long rockets used to test radar and data acquisition before launches such as the Orion's. The Orion was poised to study nighttime thunderstorm effects in the ionosphere.

"When the lightning hit, it ignited both test rockets and the Orion vehicle," Parks said. A fourth rocket, which had not been fitted with ignition devices, was unaffected.

"The Orion essentially destroyed itself," Parks said. The rocket's position on the pad was nearly horizontal. It shot forward and landed in the ocean about 300 feet distant.

The test rockets, set at a 75 degree angle, apparently followed their normal trajectory — rising to 15,000 feet, then hitting the ocean 2½ miles away, Parks said. There is no tracking for those rockets.

The Orion and the test rockets were on pads separated by 150 feet.

At least three lightning bolts hit a satellite ground receiving station at Wallops, overwhelming defensive measures including lightning rods, surge suppressors and a grounding system, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said.

GAO Wants Study of Preparedness

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government has no idea if people who live near nuclear power plants actually know what to do in an emergency, the General Accounting Office says in a new report.

A GAO report released Wednesday urges the Federal Emergency Management Agency to survey people who live within emergency planning zones, the federally designated areas within 10 miles of atomic plants.

FEMA periodically conducts surveys to see if area residents have received basic emergency planning information, but it has never determined whether citizens really know what steps to take in the event of a reactor accident, the report said.

FEMA tried to conduct such a survey in 1981, but the Office of Management and Budget objected. OMB said the proposed questionnaire for people living within the emergency zones was too large and burdensome.

GAO, an investigative arm of Congress, recommended in 1984 that the agency try again to weigh public knowledge of emergency procedures, but FEMA did not address that proposal, the report said.

Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., a leading critic of the nuclear industry, requested the GAO study in September. He said the results show that "the federal government is more concerned about licensing nuclear power plants than it is about protecting public health and safety."

While OMB was willing to cut corners on assessing the public's preparedness to respond to a nuclear emergency, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars trying to develop technical arguments to circumvent federal regulations and expedite full-power operating licenses for the Seabrook and Shoreham nuclear power plants," he said.

The Seabrook plant in southern New Hampshire and the Shoreham reactor on Long Island have been blocked by local governments from obtaining operating licenses. Local officials say the areas cannot be evacuated quickly and safely.

Reagan Denies Reports He Directed Contra Aid

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan denied anew today that he directed private support for the Nicaraguan rebels during a congressional ban on government aid as congressional panels planned closed-door sessions with the Iran-Contra affair's two mystery men, John M. Poindexter and Oliver L. North.

Reagan, holding a news conference in Venice, Italy, following the end of the seven-nation economic summit, was asked about statements by congressional witnesses who indicated they believed they were operating the private program at Reagan's behest.

Asked about such testimony by retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard Secord and Albert Hakim, his business associate, Reagan said, "So much of it was hearsay."

"I told you all the truth that first day after everything hit the fan ... how we had opened the negotiations (with Iran) ... having nothing to do with the Contras," he said. "And, that word had come to me that I had not been kept informed. So, evidently, maybe some people gave the impression they were acting on orders from me, but I wasn't giving orders."

Reagan was referring to his statement of last Nov. 25, in which he announced that Poindexter had resigned and that North had been fired.

During his news conference today, Reagan reiterated that "I don't think the law was broken" in connection with the back-channel support network for the Contras.

"We're talking about a case where people on their own ... sought to send aid to the freedom fighters," Reagan said. "I did not solicit anyone ever to do that. I was aware that it was going on, of course."

Reagan said that under one of five versions of the Boland Amendment, the law which restricted U.S. aid to the Contras, the secretary of state was specifically authorized to "solicit help from friendly countries."

Reagan also said he shared Secretary of State George P. Shultz's view that Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams should remain in his job, despite Abrams' admission during the Iran-Contra hearings that he had misled Congress about U.S. involvement with the Contras.

"He (Abrams) himself volunteered that he had made a misstatement,"

Pool Accident

ZEEWOLDE, Netherlands (AP) — Seventy-four people were hospitalized after toxic chlorine gas escaped into the air near an indoor swimming pool, police said.

Victims were treated for breathing difficulties and "poisoning symptoms," said a Dutch National Police spokesman. None of them were in critical condition, he said.

There was no immediate indication what caused the release of chlorine gas, the spokesman said. Liquid chlorine is used in low concentrations for disinfecting pool water.

Queen Astrid of Belgium died in a 1935 auto accident in Switzerland.

Reagan said. "I accept the secretary's position."

Poindexter is expected to be questioned in a second secret sworn deposition next week, committee sources said Wednesday. His fired aide, North, may be deposed in secret by staff investigators for the first time as early as next week too, they said.

Reagan refused to be drawn into criticism of North today.

The president, who described his ousted aide as a "national hero" not long after North's departure, told reporters that "one cannot quarrel with his military record."

"... I'm going to wait until he's had his day in court," Reagan said of North, "and I'm not going to prejudge on the basis of all that has been going on these countless hours."

Eager to find out which CIA officials authorized field agents to aid the Nicaraguan Contra rebels, the congressional Iran-Contra committees are expanding what has already become the most extensive scrutiny of the CIA by Congress since the Church Commission inquiry in 1974.

Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., a member of the Iran-Contra investigating committees and chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said four or five agency officials would be questioned by committee members in executive session.

Committee staff investigators already have talked to at least 50 CIA officials and have taken sworn depositions from 30 of them, according to committee sources who spoke only on condition of anonymity. They also are reviewing more than 10,000 pages of agency-related documents, the sources said.

In other developments: —The Reagan administration sought to head off one bit of fallout from the Iran-Contra affair: legislation that would tighten controls on when the administration must report covert actions to congressional oversight committees. Administration officials told the House Intelligence Committee on Wednesday that the Iran-Contra affair was an aberration and said new restrictions would be an overreaction.

—Lawyers for Israel appeared at a closed court hearing to contest a subpoena issued to former Israeli official David Kimche by a grand jury investigating Iran arms sales. Kimche, the former Israeli foreign ministry director who helped arrange the first sale of Israeli arms to Iran in 1985, was served with the subpoena last month.

—House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said the hearings so far have "laid bare a sordid trail of arrogance, lawlessness, greed and deliberate attempts to mislead the public and Congress" by the Reagan administration.

—The Washington Post reported today that money from a Swiss bank account controlled by retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard Secord was used to pay for an electronic security system installed last June at North's home. Glenn Robinette, a former CIA employee who supervised the purchase and installation of the system, has been given limited immunity by the investigating committees, the Post said.

—Louis F. Petrillo, 46, the president of Bayshore Bank of Florida has resigned and the bank is being sold following a discovery by federal investigators that $2 million in bank loans to a Contra arms supplier have not been repaid, The Miami Herald reported today.

Records show that Petrillo transferred the funds during 1986 to GeoMiliTech Consultants Corp., which lists retired Maj. Gen. John Singlaub as an adviser, the newspaper said. Singlaub helped the Contras get arms and solicited private support for them when U.S. military aid was cut off by Congress. Petrillo, who resigned three weeks ago, denied any knowledge of bank payments to GeoMiliTech.

Committee members hope to schedule hearings with CIA officials next week, during the public break in the hearings that began Tuesday when Fawn Hall, North's former secretary, finished her testimony. But no date has been set, and sources said the CIA sessions may not be held for another three weeks, when the committees take another public break for Congress' July 4th recess.

Battle Lines Drawn Over Covert Action Notices

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A partisan battle is brewing in the House over legislation that would force a president to notify Congress of covert operations within two days after they begin.

Democrats on a House Intelligence subcommittee say the legislation would prevent administrations from keeping Congress in the dark about operations such as the clandestine arms sales to Iran.

Congress was not told of that operation, which went on for 10 months after President Reagan secretly signed a presidential order authorizing it in January 1986. Current law is vague, calling for notification only in a "timely fashion."

The Reagan administration and Republicans in Congress contend that the Iran case was an exception, and say it was both unconstitutional and unwise to tie the president's hands in foreign policy.

The battle lines were clearly drawn at a hearing conducted Wednesday by the House Intelligence legislation subcommittee, which heard from two administration witnesses: Michael

H. Armacost, State Department undersecretary for political affairs, and David P. Doherty, general counsel for the CIA.

Doherty said the Iran arms operation was the only time the Reagan administration withheld notice of a covert action from Congress, and added that the CIA usually gives "more information to Congress than to those engaged in the action itself."

Armacost said the political price paid for lack of notification in the Iran case should be enough of a deterrent to prevent future abuses.

"The fallout from this case has been extraordinary," he said.

Addressing the same theme, Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., said the administration is "paying such a heavy price I think that future administrations will think a long, long time before thinking about delaying 10 months."

Although Reagan signed a "finding" authorizing the Iran initiative Jan. 17, 1986, Congress and the public didn't learn of it until a story appeared in a Middle East publication.

Rep. Matthew F. McHugh, D-N.Y., panel chairman, said something is wrong with a system in which "merchants of arms knew about this but the speaker of the House cannot be trusted."

He referred to private middlemen whom former National Security Council aide Oliver L. North used as intermediaries in the arms sales to Iran.

McHugh said Reagan used a "wholly unreasonable interpretation of the law" if he believed that notifying Congress 10 months after the fact was timely.

Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier, D-Wis., asked if it weren't possible that a president "would decline increasingly to give notice. If he declines half the time, would that be legally sustainable?"

Armacost answered, "I don't think that's the issue we're confronting. The practice (of notifying Congress) has been established."

In arguing for retaining existing law, which also provides for consultation with lawmakers, Armacost said, "In attempting to fix a system that is not broken, Congress risks impairing the effectiveness of an essential policy tool."

Both administration witnesses emphasized changes Reagan made after the Iran-Contra affair became public, especially a prohibition against the NSC staff undertaking covert actions.

The arms sales to Iran, diversion of some profits to the Nicaraguan Contras and sale of weapons to the rebels when Congress had banned official U.S. aid were directed from the NSC by North, chief White House operative in the Iran-Contra affair.

Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La., said that while a 10-month delay "is a long time, sponsors (of the proposed bills) are going to the opposite extreme."

He called the 48-hour requirement "ludicrous."

Current law provides that in general, the president should notify the two congressional intelligence committees before undertaking a covert operation he has authorized. There are two exceptions.

First, in extraordinary circumstances, the president may limit prior notice to a leadership group of eight members of the House and Senate.

Second, in certain undefined cases, the chief executive may skip prior notice, but must provide the intelligence panels notice in a "timely fashion" along with an explanation of the delay.

Two proposed bills would change the procedure. One, introduced by Rep. Norman Minetta, D-Calif., would require prior notice of all covert operations without exception.

But most discussion was on the second measure, whose lead sponsor is House Intelligence Committee Chairman Louis Stokes, D-Ohio. It would allow a deferred notice under extraordinary circumstances, but limit the delay to 48 hours after the covert action had begun.

Defense Discounts Goetz Confession In Shootings

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernhard Goetz's taped confession about shooting four men on a subway should not be believed because he was traumatized when he made it after nine days on the run, his attorney said in closing arguments.

Defense lawyer Barry Slotnick also told jurors Wednesday that his client acted without thinking when he shot the four on a subway car Dec. 22, 1984, and was fantasizing on the tape when he said shot an extra bullet into one of them.

Prosecutor Gregory Waples "came in here without a case; please let him walk out without a conviction," Slotnick said.

Waples was to give his summation today.

Justice Stephen Crane said he would instruct the jury after that, and the 7-week-old trial could go to the panel late in the day.

Waples has said he would rely heavily on Goetz's videotaped confessions in an effort to convict him with his own words.

But Slotnick said Goetz was a "tired, sick, psychologically upset individual" when he surrendered to police in Concord, N.H. "After nine days of running," he said, "he was psychiatrically traumatized ... an individual in fear."

Slotnick said Waples based his case on "the most unreliable source in the world — the statements of Bernhard Goetz" made after his surrender.

He said Goetz was fantasizing while making the confession, in which he told police he had walked up to Darrell Cabey and said, "You look all right, here's another," before shooting at the youth a second time.

Goetz had acted out of fear, Slotnick said, and was on "automatic pilot" and incapable of remembering what happened after he began firing.

Slotnick said the witnesses in the subway car with Goetz and the four youths could recall no pause between shots, and most agreed with the words "rapid succession" to describe the shooting.

John Paul Says Labor Pact Aided 'Dignity Of Men'

SCZECIN, Poland (AP) — Pope John Paul II today praised the 1980 agreements that led to the independent Solidarity labor union and said they promoted the "dignity of men."

The pontiff, on the fourth day of a pilgrimage to his Communist homeland, addressed a crowd of 300,000 people in this Baltic port city, which was a hotbed of Solidarity activism in the early 1980s.

"In the 1980s, Sczeczyn was the site of momentous events, and momentous accords between the state authorities and representatives of the working class," John Paul said.

"What was the sense behind these accords? Has it not concerned all this which concerns dignity of human toil — and the dignity of men and of work? Man and woman?" the pontiff continued.

He added that "families have the right to living conditions which would guarantee them living standards equal to their dignity."

The Sczeczyn accords, signed on Aug. 30, 1980, guaranteed shipyard and industrial workers pay raises, better working conditions and the right to form their own free trade unions.

The accords also contained reforms aimed at limiting censorship, easing political repression and increasing the church's access to the mass media.

The government insists it continues to implement some parts of the accords, while Solidarity leaders allege there have been widespread violations.

The pope said that progress had been made in improving workers' situations but cautioned, "there are great tasks remaining."

Local officials estimated the crowd at 300,000. Several red-and-white Solidarity banners with their familiar flowing script fluttered in the breeze.

John Paul is on his third trip to Poland since he became leader of the Roman Catholic Church in 1978. Some 94 percent of Poles are Catholic.

Solidarity, the only independent labor movement in the Soviet Bloc, was registered with officials three months after the August 1980 agreements were reached. It was outlawed by Parliament in October 1982.

The pontiff spoke from a raised platform of rough-hewn planks evoking the sailing ships that once plied the nearby Baltic waters. Behind the altar loomed the statue of an eagle, symbol of Poland.

Retail Sales Fall In May

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retail sales dropped 0.6 percent in May, the biggest decline in four months, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that sales totaled a seasonally adjusted $124.0 billion last month following a tiny 0.2 percent increase in April.

The weakness last month was led by a big 3.8 percent drop in auto sales, the largest monthly decline in this category since January.

Without the weakness in autos, retail sales would have risen a tiny 0.3 percent as other categories posted either small increases or declines.

The lackluster showing for sales last month continued a pattern in effect since January as American consumers have cut back sharply on discretionary spending in the face of high debt burdens and sluggish growth in personal incomes.

Economists are predicting consumer spending will grow much more slowly this year because of these factors. Since consumers account for about two-thirds of overall economic activity, this weakness has led to fears that the economy could topple into a recession unless the country's huge trade deficit, a major drag on growth in the past two years, starts to improve.

The poor sales performance this year left total sales in May 3.9 percent below their record of $129.0 billion reached last September.

The 0.6 percent May decline was the largest monthly setback since a record 7.1 percent fall in January.

Sales of furniture and other home furnishings fell 0.8 percent last month following a 0.5 percent decline in April while sales at hardware stores edged up 0.3 percent in May following a big 3.2 percent drop in April.

The total category of durable goods, items such as cars designed to last three or more years, fell 2.5 percent in May following a tiny 0.1 percent gain in April.

Sales of non-durable goods were up 0.6 percent in May following a smaller 0.2 percent increase in April.

In this category, sales at department stores and other general merchandise stores rose 0.8 percent in May following a 0.5 percent rise in April.

It is the first time that the pontiff has been allowed to travel to the Baltic Coast, where Solidarity took root in the huge shipyards in 1980.

John Paul drew the loudest applause of the day when he told the crowd to stand firm "against the wind."

"Those who live on the sea have to struggle against the wind to win," he said.

Saying such winds come from "both inside and outside," he added: "Stand like a sailor and reach your destination."

John Paul's comments followed by one day his defense of the farmers' branch of Solidarity, and a clash between Krakow police and union supporters surging forward to see the pontiff. Solidarity supporters said police detained 56 people after the protest.

The crowd applauded as the pope spoke of the rights of workers.

But the pontiff also criticized his fellow Poles, saying they show a "lack of confidence in the sense of honest work, lack of viewing its objectives in the long run."

In Krakow, where John Paul was archbishop before becoming pope, police used clubs, smoke bombs and tear gas to break up a protest by Solidarity supporters trying to see the pontiff.

The 3,000 protesters chanted, "We want to get near the pope!" and "Solidarity will win!" on Wednesday. Officials said one policeman was seriously injured.

John Paul planned to meet later with Lech Walesa, who helped found Solidarity in the Gdansk shipyards in 1980.

Thatcher Poised For Victory

By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, the "Iron Lady" who has crusaded to roll back socialism, was poised to win a historic third term as Britain voted today in a general election, polls showed.

A Conservative victory, forecast by all the major polling agencies, would make the 61-year-old Mrs. Thatcher the first prime minister to triumph in three consecutive elections since the Earl of Liverpool did so 161 years ago, when less than 5 percent of Britons could vote.

But the polls predicted a reduced parliamentary majority for the Conservative Party, and Labor Party leader Neil Kinnock insisted as he voted in Pontllanfraith, his Welsh constituency: "We're going to win the election."

Kinnock has pledged to close U.S. nuclear bases in Britain, pump up the economy and put millions back to work. Thatcher is committed to retaining a nuclear defense.

On the London Stock Exchange, share prices rose in expectation of a victory by the pro-business Conservative Party. The Financial Times index of 100 leading shares was up 20.3 at 2,276.4 by midmorning.

Polls opened at 7 a.m. (2 a.m. EDT), with rain dampening most of Britain. They were to remain open until 10 p.m. (5 p.m. EDT), and substantial results were not expected before early Friday (Thursday night EDT). About 43.2 million people were eligible to vote.

Mrs. Thatcher was smiling and confident as she and her husband Denis, 72, voted at an adult education center in London. "I just hope and believe," she told reporters.

In Northern Ireland, voting at a polling station in Londonderry was delayed for a short time while bomb experts examined a package left by the door. It turned out to be harmless.

A Marplan poll of 1,663 voters published today in the Guardian newspaper projected a 40-seat parliamentary majority for Mrs. Thatcher, with Conservatives winning 42 percent of the vote against 35 percent for Labor and 21 percent for the centrist Social Democratic-Liberal Party Alliance. Several tiny parties or regional parties split the remainder.

A Market and Opinion Research International sounding published in today's London Times put the Tories ahead 106 seats in the 650-seat House of Commons, with 44 percent of the vote, compared to 32 percent for Labor and 22 percent for the Alliance.

Margin of error in both polls was 2.5 percent.

No poll during the month-long campaign put the Tories below the 40-percent level that would give them reasonable assurance of a parliamentary majority. The Conservatives have held a 138-seat majority.

Labor pinned its hopes on the so-called marginals, the roughly one-sixth of the House of Commons seats which could go to either party.

"We have made substantial advances," Kinnock said in a TV interview. "We are in the lead in so many (marginals) and that will provide Labor with victory tomorrow."

David Steel, leader of the Liberal wing of the Alliance, also claimed the polls were missing last-minute shifts in the marginals that would produce a stalemated Parliament and make the Alliance the power broker.

Mrs. Thatcher became Europe's first woman head of government when her party ousted Labor in 1979.

Korea Has Second Day Of Rioting

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Riot police in black-visored helmets battled students and other protesters armed with firebombs and iron bars here today in a second straight day of violent anti-government demonstrations.

A pitched battle continued after dusk at Myundong Cathedral in the heart of the city, around which several hundred students armed with iron and wooden staves had set up barricades. The masked students hurled firebombs and rocks at thousands of riot police, who attacked with volley after volley of tear gas.

Clashes also erupted on at least two college campuses in Seoul, where riot police battled students who tried to break out to "rescue" those besieged at the cathedral.

"Down with the military dictatorship!" screamed the mostly student demonstrators, almost 4,000 of whom the government said it arrested during Wednesday's nationwide clashes.

Protesters tried unsuccessfully to break through police lines to reinforce those demonstrating at the cathedral. Repeated clashes erupted in the surrounding maze of narrow streets.

National Police Chief Kwon Bok-kyung said 708 police officers were injured Wednesday and 4,000 demonstrators arrested. He said 14 police substations, two government office buildings, and 23 police and other vehicles were burned or destroyed.

Police said 24 civilians were injured Wednesday. Dissident sources said the figure was much higher, but had no total.

As fighting surged around the cathedral today, armored cars moved in to blast the students with multiple tear gas launchers. The cathedral, the Roman Catholic Church's national headquarters, is surrounded by skyscrapers and luxury hotels.

A group of about 15 Roman Catholic priests marched out of the cathedral at one point and confronted police, demanding that they pull back to end the fighting. Police officers did not answer as the priests yelled at them.

Inside the cathedral compound, the Rev. Kim Byung-do told The Associated Press the students there were determined to hold out. He said supporters were smuggling food and medical supplies into the building. The priest, terming the police action "intolerable," protested the firing of tear gas into the cathedral.

South Korean police in the past have been reluctant to attack churches harboring anti-government demonstrators.

Students at the cathedral used sledgehammers to break up stones for missiles and carted crates of firebombs up to the barricades. Police hurling tear gas grenades repeatedly charged the barricades, but were driven back by showers of rocks and firebombs.

Hundreds of protesters surged out of sidestreets to attack lines of riot police, who used tear gas and night stick charges against them. Terrified pedestrians ran for cover, choking and coughing as clouds of gas drifted through the streets.

Parents Should Act If Children's Problems Linger

By MARY JO KOCHAKIAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

HARTFORD, Conn. — "Is this normal?" Countless times the question has been asked by parents concerned by children's behavior.

Children are likely to hit snags as they develop. It is not the simple existence of troubling behavior that is significant but its longevity.

"A lot of these symptoms are normal in normal kids — it's the persistence over ... more than a month" that warrants intervention, says Dr. Paul Graffagnino, a West Hartford, Conn., child psychiatrist. He collaborated on a fact sheet published by the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry that lists signs of trouble.

- Intense fear of obesity with no relationship to actual weight.
- Depression shown by sustained, prolonged negative mood and attitude, often accompanied by poor appetite, difficulty sleeping or thoughts of death.
- Frequent outbursts of anger.

Some parents are reluctant to get psychiatric help for a child, considering it somewhat shameful. "It's important for parents to realize that it's not an admission of failure," Graffagnino says.

"A lot of people feel that if something goes wrong with their child, it is a reflection on them and what they've done in the early years, and sometimes that's partially true," he says. "But there are conditions in childhood, just as in adults, that are basically not caused by the environment and are either inherited disorders or temperament problems or physiologic problems like hyperactivity." Parents try to cope but often are frustrated "because ordinary parenting doesn't help those conditions," he says.

Parents whose children exhibit a disturbing behavior but otherwise seem normal often think discipline will solve it, Graffagnino says. "With some kids that works, but if those kinds of things don't work, that attitude shouldn't persist."

Looking outside the family for help may make parents feel incompetent, but they "always have to realize that they are the real experts on their children, because they live with them 24 hours a day, even if they're not certain of what they're seeing," Graffagnino says. If someone outside the family says the child is troubled, parents must consider the source and filter it through their understanding of the child, he says.

Young children, even those of school age, "really don't verbalize the direct source of their worries, fears or depression," he says.

- In younger children, they are:
- Marked change in school performance.
 - Poor grades in school despite trying very hard.
 - Worry or anxiety, as shown by refusing to go to school, to sleep or to take part in activities normal for the child's age.
 - Hyperactivity, fidgeting, constant movement beyond regular playing.
 - Persistent nightmares.
 - Persistent disobedience or aggression (longer than six months) and provocative opposition to authority figures.
 - Frequent, unexplainable temper tantrums.
 - In pre-adolescents and adolescents:
 - Marked change in school performance.
 - Abuse of alcohol or drugs.
 - Inability to cope with problems and daily activities.
 - Marked changes in sleeping or eating habits.
 - Many complaints of ailments.
 - Consistent violation of the rights of others; opposition to authority, truancy, thefts, vandalism.

U.S. Conversation Is Dieting

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

One-third of the world is on a diet. Another third just fell off a diet. And the remaining third is going on one next Monday.

As a leading fashion designer said recently, "At a certain age, you have to choose between your face and your behind." The day I turned around and thought someone was following me and it was me ... I knew what my choice was.

Dieting is all Americans ever talk about. The subject dominates our lives. Barely a day goes by that a new miracle diet doesn't emerge, outlining menus Day I through XIV. Talk shows offer one authority after another. Health spas are replacing amusement parks. Every box of food in the supermarket purports to be "lighter," "less caloric," "packed in natural juices" and "sugar- and fat-free."

I know it's all I ever think about. I refused to discuss the SALT talks with my husband until he referred to them as Low Sodium. When the PTL scandal broke, I thought they were talking about Pita bread, Tomato and Lettuce.

Despite a decade of emphasis on dieting, little is known about dieters. We are just beginning to put together a profile on them in an effort to understand where they are coming from and where they want to go.

What kind of people are they? What do we know about their behavioral habits? Is it possible that one day everyone will be thin enough and dieting will fade into obscurity?

These are some of the findings: Dieters are basically dishonest people who cannot be trusted to measure out two ounces of hamburger on a scale or give their right weight on their driver's license. They will do anything to register less on a scale ... from putting the scale on a shag carpet to removing the fillings from their teeth before stepping on it.

Dieters love to play games. You can tell them anything and they'll believe it because they want to. Tell them they're getting egg salad when it's really tofu and mustard and they'll smack their lips in glee. Feed them brownies made from carob powder, unbleached flour and yogurt as substitutes, and they'll feel guilty for a week. Feed them little balls of cauliflower and tell them it's popcorn and they'll go to sleep happy.

Dieters are weak and can be manipulated. There's a new product on the market that has them believing if they spray chocolate or banana into their mouth out of a breath-o-lizer, they'll believe they've just had a banana sundae or a chocolate bar.

With all of our shortcomings, dieters have a secret weapon: optimism. A friend said to me the other day, "You look awful! You're all drawn and shriveled and you look like you've been sick. If you're dieting, you've gone too far." I could have kissed her.

'First Ladies' Now In Second State Printing

By ROSALIE TROTMAN
Reflector Lifestyle Editor

The book "First Ladies of North Carolina" includes portraits and personality sketches of 25 women who have served as first lady since the Executive Mansion was originally occupied in 1891.

The book also includes a list of the 36 first ladies who served before 1891 and a brief history of the Executive Mansion.

In her preface to the second edition, Secretary of Cultural Resources Patric G. Dorsey, underscores the need for literature on the first ladies. "Much has been written about the governors of the state and their service; however, less is known of the wives of N.C. governors (and their valuable contributions) to the history and culture of the Old North State," she said.

The 91-page book is the first completely devoted to the lives of the state's first ladies. The book is co-authored by Jeanelle C. Moore, former first lady, and Grace Hamrick, a journalist from Shelby.

All revenues from the sale of the book go to the Executive Mansion Fine Arts Committee, an organization set up by Mrs. Moore in 1965 to help furnish and maintain the mansion.

The Executive Mansion Fine Arts Commission was established in 1967 by the General Assembly. The commission was transferred to the Department of Art, Culture and History (now the Department of Cultural Resources) and changed to the Executive Mansion Fine Arts Committee.

The major functions of the committee are to advise the secretary of cultural resources on the preservation and maintenance of the executive mansion and to encourage gifts of money and objects of art, furniture and articles of historical value for furnishing the mansion.

Nancy Jenkins of Greenville is a member of the committee.

"The executive mansion belongs to all people of the state. It is gratifying to know that the first family is giving that wonderful house such loving attention. Gov. and Mrs. Holshouser lived outside the mansion for eight months while renovations were made. They wanted to maintain the pristine quality that N.C. people expect," said Secretary Dorsey.

SECRETARY PATRIC DORSEY

"The Executive Mansion is the only governor's mansion in the U.S. that reflects the Victorian Eastlake cottage and gingerbread style, which make it very unique," she said.

On May 27 a ribbon cutting was held on the grounds of the mansion for a Victorian garden. "The garden is a personal project of Dottie Martin. Work is continued to improve the quality and luster of the mansion. I am proud of that house and what it represents," said Secretary Dorsey.

"First Ladies of North Carolina" will be available in bookstores throughout the state and from the Department of Cultural Resources in Raleigh.

"A few years down the road, we are hoping to have a N.C. women's exhibit in our N.C. History Museum (to be built). It would include inaugural gowns of the first ladies as well as photographs, portraits and memorabilia," said Secretary Dorsey.

Religious Views Clash With Rider

DEAR ABBY: I was riding the local transit bus today when the bus driver (a woman) struck up a conversation with me. I was sitting near her and there was nobody else on the bus. I don't know why, but she asked me what church I went to. I told her that I was a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, which is also known as the Mormon Church.

She then said that SHE was a Christian! I replied, "Well, so am I." Then she told me that I was not a Christian because my religion teaches that Jesus was not the son of God. I tried to keep my cool and tried to explain that I was as Christian as she was, but she insisted that I was not.

Abby, I have learned to accept this kind of ridicule from people I go to high school with, but I didn't expect this kind of talk from an adult. When I got off the bus, I was sorry I didn't just tell her I was a Catholic or something.

If that bus driver was right, I must have missed something in my own religious training. Please let me know. — L.D.S. IN ASHLAND, ORE.

DEAR L.D.S.: You are correct. When that issue was raised years ago, the Prophet Joseph Smith, founder of the Mormon Church, responded: "We believe in God the eternal father, and in his son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost." That should settle it.

DEAR ABBY: A few years ago, my husband removed his wedding ring from his finger, saying it could be a hazard on his job. (He works in the construction field.) Finally he stopped wearing it altogether.

Last Christmas, he came home from the company Christmas party wearing a very expensive gold initial ring, which he said was a gift from "Lyn," a young woman who works for the company. That ring has not been off his finger since the day he got it.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Yes, I asked him how come this ring isn't hazardous on his job. He said in case he ran into Lyn, he didn't want to offend her by not wearing her gift. How does this strike you, Abby? — FUMING IN FLUSHING

DEAR FUMING: The same way it strikes you. Your husband's wedding ring may have been hazardous on his job, but this new "replacement" is definitely hazardous to his marriage. It's time for you and your construction man to assess your marriage. Methinks the foundation is crumbling.

DEAR ABBY: I think you were in error when you stated that when introducing a stepmother, one should say, "This is my dad's wife." To me, that seems cold and distant.

For 10 years my stepson introduced me as "my dad's wife." I felt like an outsider and not a part of the family. About a year ago he apologized, and started referring to me as his stepmother. I was elated and felt he had finally accepted me. Then out comes your column with that statement, and now he's back to calling me his dad's wife. Sign me ... OUTSIDE LOOKING IN

DEAR OUTSIDE: Thanks to the Cinderella fairy tale, "stepmother" has taken on a less-than-lovely connotation. You are entitled to your opinion, but I personally think "my dad's wife" would be preferred by most over "stepmother."

DEAR ABBY: Please settle an argument: What is the fairest way for our inheritance to be divided? We have two sons. Son No. 1 has two children, and Son No. 2 has three children. — J., HARRISBURG, PA.

DEAR J.: Leave the same amount to each of your children. And the same amount to each of your grandchildren.

DEAR READERS: I need your cooperation for an important survey.

Question: Have you ever cheated on your mate? How long have you been together?

You need not sign your name, but please state your age and indicate whether you are male or female.

Please send your letter or postcard to: Abby's Survey, P.O. Box 68440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069.

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

BROILERS: The North Carolina fob dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 43.25 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2 1/2 to 3 pounds birds. Too few percent of the loads offered have been confirmed for a final weighted average. The market is fully steady and the live supply is adequate for a good demand. Average weights desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Thursday was 2,009,000, compared to 1,876,000 last Thursday.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn steady to 3 cents lower at mostly 1.84-2.00 in East and mostly 2.15-2.22 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans mostly 2 to 3 cents higher at mostly 5.48-5.65 in East and mostly 5.49-5.60 in the Piedmont; new crop corn 1.68-2.03; new crop soybeans 5.30-5.65, new crop wheat 2.41-2.51. Exchange rates for P.I.K. certificates were steady to 1/2 percent higher and ranged from 101 to 106 percent of face value.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed higher today, recovering from the jolt of a late selloff Wednesday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 6.83 to 2,360.44 in the first half hour of trading.

Gainers outnumbered losers by more than 3 to 2 in the overall tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 641 up, 413 down and 466 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 22.70 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

One plus today was a drop in open market interest rates. Prices of long-term government bonds, which move in the opposite direction from rates, rose about $5 for each $1,000 in face value.

The government reported today that retail sales dropped 0.6 percent in May, the biggest decline in four months. The Commerce Department said that sales totaled a seasonally adjusted $124.0 billion last month following a tiny 0.2 percent increase in April. The weakness last month was led by a big 3.8 percent drop in auto sales, the largest monthly decline in this category since January.

Japanese stocks were strong after the Tokyo stock market reached a new record high. Honda Motor gained 8% to 113 1/4, Kyocera 4 to 75 1/4, and Matsushita 4 to 133.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks rose .35 to 167.88. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .47 at 332.81.

On Wednesday the Dow Jones industrial average, up about 30 points and down about 15 at its midsession extremes, closed with a gain of .91 at 2,353.61.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 to 4 on the NYSE, with 857 up, 687 down and 433 unchanged. Big Board volume totaled 197.44 million shares, up from 164.18 million in the previous session.

Adjoining the First Union Bank branch will be newly relocated offices for First Union Mortgage Corp. and First Union Home Equity Corp. Both are First Union Mortgage lending subsidiaries and have been located in Greenville at 201A Commerce St.

"We want our new office and the people who work here to become an integral part of the Greenville community," First Union National Bank President John Georgius said.

"First Union is delighted that you have already shown confidence in us by establishing a solid loan and deposit base before we have officially opened our doors."

In his announcement, Georges cited Greenville's population growth, healthy economy, and East Carolina

Barn Fire

CLEMMONS, N.C. (AP) — A flash fire destroyed a $400,000 barn at Cedar Hollow Farm, killing six horses and injuring two others. Farm workers were able to save 31 horses.

Joe Sykes, 19, who had an apartment in the barn, said the injured horses, a filly and a gelding, were not hurt badly enough to be destroyed.

Minnesota Rallies Back To Topple Royals In 11 And Take Over 1st Place

By BRIAN TRUDELL
Associated Press Writer

Two weeks ago they were five games out. But the Minnesota Twins, one of the pre-season favorites, have climbed back on top.

The Twins seem to cover their mistakes well. Bert Blyleven has given up a homer in 20 straight games, and his 24 homers is well ahead of last year's pace when he allowed a record 50.

He gave up another Wednesday night to Bo Jackson in the sixth inning, which gave Kansas City a 3-0 lead. But Steve Balboni committed a three-run error in the eighth and Gene Larkin hit a one-out, RBI single in the 10th, enabling Minnesota to win its fifth straight game 4-3 and take the American League West lead by one game over the Royals.

In other games, an earthquake that rattled 16 states from South Carolina to Canada shook Tigers Stadium during the Milwaukee Brewers 8-5, 10th inning victory over Detroit.

The players said they did not feel the tremor that occurred in the first inning, but the press box rattled for over a minute.

"You could look through the glass in front across the other side of the press box and seek a kind of shaking," Tiger spokesman Craig Shea said. "It was swaying even."

Elsewhere, it was Oakland 5, Chicago 2; Toronto 4, New York 1; Boston 15, Baltimore 4; California 10, Cleveland 7; and Texas 9, Seattle 5.

Larkin, who felt like a goat in the eighth inning when he struck out with a chance to win the game, said he wanted revenge.

"He beat me that time, so I wanted to beat him next time," said Larkin, who faced Jerry Gleaton, 1-2, in the 10th after Gary Gaetti was intentionally walked. "They've been (intentionally walking batters) to get to me a lot. Since I'm a rookie, they've been trying to put me in some tough spots."

It apparently hasn't worked. Larkin is hitting .353 (18-for-51) and hit a seventh-inning, bases-loaded triple to win the first of this three-game series.

"We call him 'Gene, Gene, The Hitting Machine,'" said teammate Greg Gagne. "He's gotten some big hits for us."

Gagne started the 10th-inning rally with a single and stole second. He raced around third on Larkin's single and his slide just beat Jackson's throw from left field.

Charlie Leibrandt had a two-hit shutout entering the eighth, but Mark Davidson singled and Dan Gladden and Tim Laudner drew two-out walks. Dan Qusenberry got Kirby Puckett to ground to first, but the ball bounced off Balboni into right field, allowing all three runners to score.

Jorge Orta's two-out double in the first and a wild pickoff throw by Blyleven in the third spotted Kansas City a 2-0 lead.

Jeff Reardon pitched two shutout innings for the victory.

Brewers 8, Tigers 5
B.J. Surhoff hit a three-run homer in the 10th inning, snapping Detroit's four-game winning streak.

Homers Power Rams By Hawks

MILLERS CREEK — Greene Central unloaded a pair of back-to-back home runs in the sixth inning, then held off West Wilkes for a 3-2 victory Wednesday afternoon in the first game of the North Carolina High School Athletic Association's 2-A baseball championship series.

The two teams play again today at 4 p.m. in game two, and a Greene Central victory would give them their third championship since 1972. The Rams won that year and in 1980. Should a third game be needed, it will be played Saturday at 2 p.m.

Anthony Jones went the first six and a third inning, but needed help from Eddie Honrine in the final frame. "Anthony had been complaining of his back bothering him late in the game," Coach Jim Fulghum said. "He got one man out in the bottom of the seventh, then walked one, and we brought in Honrine after that. He hadn't pitched since the last game before the playoffs and he did a super job, including picking the runner off first base."

"Jones wasn't as sharp as he was against Whiteville, but he did a good job," Fulghum added. Jones struck out six, walked five and gave up three hits. Honrine allowed a bunt single in the bottom of the seventh, but nothing came of it.

Scott Waddell, one of the two Black Hawk pitchers already signed for college baseball, went the distance against the Rams, scattering five hits. "Their pitching was good, but I thought we played a good game," Fulghum said. "Our defense did a super job. They got the bases loaded with only one out in the fifth inning, and Anthony struck out the next batter and we got the next guy on a fly ball. In the sixth, Tommy Eason picked off a runner too."

Greene Central pushed into the lead in the third inning, getting a run. Vance Head walked and Jake Barrow reached on an error on his sacrifice bunt. Both moved up on another sacrifice and T.J. Johnson grounded out, allowing Head to score.

West Wilkes, however, came right back to tie it up in the bottom of the inning.

With one out, Randall Parsons reached on an error and Greg Blevins singled him to third. Greg Church's sacrifice fly scored Parsons.

It remained that way until the sixth. Johnson opened the sixth with a home run that stayed just fair down the left field line. Gary Ginn then cracked his 10th homer of the season, knocking the ball over the 350-foot mark in right center to make it 3-1.

Shay Beaman followed with a single, but the Rams could get nothing else in the inning.

The Black Hawks tried to rally, scoring once in the bottom of the frame. David Parsons walked and moved to third on two wild pitches. He scored on Andy Pierce's ground out.

"Getting them out without their scoring in the fifth was the turning point of the game," Fulghum said.

Junior Richie Britt, 4-1 on the year, will be on the mound for today's game.

Greene Central boosts its record to 23-4 while West Wilkes is now 21-5.

Overstepping The Run
Atlanta Brave Albert Hall slides to the plate under the foot of Los Angeles Dodgers catcher Alex Trevino (29) to score for the Braves on a second inning double by Dale Murphy Wednesday in their game in Atlanta. (AP Laserphoto)

Alexander 'Cuffs Dodgers As Braves Take 7-1 Win

By The Associated Press
Doyle Alexander was one of those free agents who couldn't find a home during the off-season. If he keeps finding home plate with regularity, he'll make the Atlanta Braves glad they welcomed him back.

Alexander held the Dodgers to four hits and Dale Murphy hit a two-run homer as the Braves beat Los Angeles 7-1 Wednesday night.

Alexander finished the 1986 season with the Braves, but became a free agent and found little interest in a 36-year-old pitcher who had been with seven different major league teams. He didn't re-sign with the Braves until after the May 1 embargo on free agents negotiating with their former teams. He made his first start on May 26 and his victory against the Dodgers gave the 17-year veteran a 2-1 record.

"I threw everything I had except no knuckleballs or curves," Alexander said. "Mostly it was the fastball, change and slider."

And, he claims, the best is yet to come.

"Throughout my career I've always been a better second-half pitcher," Alexander said. "But I feel good right now."

He looked plenty good to Ozzie Virgil, his catcher, and Atlanta Manager Chuck Tanner.

"That's what happens when you throw strikes," Virgil said after Alexander threw only 95 pitches, 66 of those for strikes. "He was on today. He put the ball where he wanted most of the time."

"He's been around a long time and knows how to pitch. He doesn't have the blazing fastball to throw by them. He kept 'em off-stride all night. He just mixed everything up."

"He has the weapons and controls all of them," Tanner said. "He's like a surgeon... a sculptor."

Elsewhere Wednesday, it was Montreal 4, Pittsburgh 3 in 11 innings; Houston 10, San Diego 1; New York 13, Chicago 2; and San Francisco 9, Cincinnati 4.

Braves 7, Dodgers 1
The Braves built a 5-1 lead after two innings and then coasted, handing Rick Honeycutt his fourth straight loss.

Murphy hit his 18th homer in the sixth, a 425-foot shot on a 3-0 pitch from reliever Ken Howell.

Atlanta scored twice in the first on a two-run double by Ted Simmons and never looked back.

Expos 4, Pirates 3
At Montreal, Tim Lincecum had three hits, including a home run and a two-run double, and scored the winning run on Herm Winningham's 11th-inning single.

The Expos held a 3-2 lead until Barry Bonds hit his seventh homer, tying it in the eighth inning.

Perhaps the most encouraging development for Montreal was the pitching of starter Dennis Martinez, making his first major league appearance since Sept. 28, 1986. Martinez rejected an off-season offer by the Expos, became a free agent and went unsigned by any other team. He re-signed with the Expos on May 4.

"We may not have expected him to do what he did tonight, but we knew he was throwing well at (Class AAA) Indianapolis, so it's not surprising he was effective," Expos Manager Buck Rodgers said after Martinez went seven innings, allowing just three hits. "We're not talking about a 23-year-old rookie, but a veteran who's been around and knows how to pitch."

Astros 10, Padres 1
At Houston, Alan Ashby drove in five runs with a grand slam and an RBI single. Denny Walling started the fourth inning with a single, Glenn Davis was hit by a Storm Davis pitch and Jose Cruz walked to load the bases.

Ashby hit a 3-2 pitch over the center field barrier for the third grand slam of his 12-year major league career. It was Ashby's fourth home run of the season.

Lefty Says He Was Misunderstood

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Lefty Driesell says he feels misunderstood but he has no misgivings about calling cocaine "performance enhancing" during a seminar on drugs in sports.

"Why should I regret it? I didn't say anything wrong," the former Maryland basketball coach said Wednesday.

Seeking to clarify a statement he made during a Rhode Island conference on the use of drugs in athletics, Driesell said his comment had been misinterpreted to mean he condones cocaine.

"Anyone who knows me knows I abhor drugs," he said in a prepared statement, "and I don't want anyone thinking otherwise."

University of Maryland officials and coaches across the country said they were surprised by last week's remark attributed to Driesell that "if you know how to use cocaine and use it properly, it can make you play better... I really believe cocaine can be performance enhancing."

Driesell, who resigned in the aftermath of the cocaine death of Maryland All-American Len Bias last year, said the statement was extracted from a two-hour discussion. When used alone, it misrepresented his purpose for attending the conference, he said.

"I was not there endorsing drug use," said Driesell, who is at The Associated Press Sports Editors Convention to participate today in a panel discussion.

"I am very upset that my efforts to fight drug problems among young people and athletes could be misunderstood in any way," Driesell's prepared statement began. "I'm violently opposed to anyone using drugs in general and cocaine in particular."

Driesell said he was surprised by the reaction of coaches and others who felt his comment was out of line. He said he learned cocaine is performance enhancing while writing a master's thesis on ergogenic or energy-producing aids from vitamins to dangerous drugs, including cocaine, 30 years ago.

"My conclusion even then is the use of drugs to extend any physical capacity is indefensible and that the use of drugs should be outlawed by athletes and coaches," Driesell said.

"In 1957, I wrote that cocaine is a habit-forming, highly toxic and dangerous drug and its use in athletics should not be condoned," he added.

Driesell said he appeared at the Rhode Island seminar on his own behalf and was not representing the University of Maryland.

"When I was asked if I supported testing for athletes, I said yes," Driesell said. "Obviously some athletes at least think cocaine or other drugs may enhance their performance and that's what we've got to fight. We've got a huge problem and I'm trying to face it head-on."

"My intent is to save athletes the agony they are facing with cocaine and to wipe it out of athletics and our lives to the greatest extent possible," Driesell added.

Rozelle And NFL Talking Expansion

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Commissioner Pete Rozelle says the National Football League will begin screening cities for expansion next year and eventually would like to award two new franchises for the 1990 season.

Rozelle told a group of journalists attending The Associated Press Sports Editors Convention Wednesday that the league will appoint an expansion committee in March 1988. The target date for selecting cities will be some time in early 1989.

"I think the whole country wants it," Rozelle said, adding that the climate for adding teams has improved since the NFL emerged from lengthy and complicated litigation with the defunct United States Football League, the Los Angeles Raiders and Los Angeles Coliseum.

"It's not a political move," he said, listing a number of cities, including Phoenix, Jacksonville, Baltimore and Oakland, as potential candidates. "Anywhere we go, we're going to insult some politicians," seeking a franchise for their area.

Rozelle said the criteria used to evaluate cities for expansion would include stadium, population, football interest, weather and the availability of a domed stadium, plus geography if the NFL decides to realign its divisions.

The commissioner also spoke of the need for solid ownership and said he wishes Chicago Bears star Walter Payton the best in his effort to become an NFL owner.

Payton, the NFL's all-time leading rusher, reportedly will meet soon with officials in Oakland who are interested in pursuing a franchise to replace the Raiders, who moved to Los Angeles five years ago.

"Walter's chances are as good as anybody else, maybe better because he's a player," Rozelle said.

Another topic of discussion during a luncheon speech was the recruitment of blacks for coaching and front-office jobs in the NFL.

"We have a long way to go on minority hiring," Rozelle said, adding he feels a recent decision to start a minority intern program for assistant coaches from major colleges is a step in the right direction.

"I'm certain we'll have a black head coach when an owner thinks that coach will help him win," Rozelle said. "Until that, there's nothing I can do about it."

"While we can't make black coaches," the commissioner added, "we can provide the opportunity for them to rise up through the organizations."

Barbour Wildcats..... 13

Chicod Hornets..... 0

PACTOLUS — The Bob Barbour Wildcats stormed to a 13-0 victory over the Chicod Hornets in the Southern Pitt Little League Wednesday night.

Richard Robinson got the win, going the distance, allowing only one hit, that by Chris Braxton. He struck out 10 and walked four in the game, called after four frames.

Barbour's offense was led by Lewis Fernandez and Rico Hines, each with two hits. Fernandez drove in three runs while Hines had two RBI. Moses Ward had a run-scoring triple.

Bethel Phillies..... 11

Red & White..... 3

BETHEL — The Bethel Phillies rolled up an 11-3 victory over Grifton Red & White Wednesday in the Southern Pitt Little League.

The Phillies were led by Thomas Howard with three hits while Dwayne Hines added two. Hines also went the distance on the mound, striking out 14 while scattering five hits.

Danny Moore had two of the five Grifton hits.

Bethel has clinched second place in the league standings.

Bethel Mets..... 18

Grifton Red & White.... 8

GRIFTON — Donte Bunn smacked a two-run homer that keyed a five-run second inning as the Bethel Mets topped Grifton Red and White in Southern Pitt Little League action Wednesday.

The win capped an unbeaten 14-0 season for Bethel and clinched the regular season title.

William Perkins led the Mets with a 3-3 performance that included a triple. Bunn had two hits and also combined with Jeff Wilson and Brad White for the win.

Scouter Mitchell and Danny Moore had two hits apiece to lead Grifton.

Little League

Pepsi-Cola..... 2

Jarman's Auto..... 1

David Wilbourne got a run-scoring single in the bottom of the sixth inning to lift Pepsi-Cola to a 2-1 Tar Heel Little League victory over Jarman's Auto Wednesday.

Pepsi took the lead in the bottom of the third with a single run, but Jarman's came back to tie it up with one in the top of the fourth.

Then, in the sixth, Jon Gavigan reached on a one-out double. Geoff Stallings was hit by a pitch and John Savage walked, loading the bases. With two outs, Wilbourne delivered the base hit that scored Gavigan with the game-winner.

Will Mackenzie tossed the win for Pepsi, allowing only one hit on the day, that, a third inning single by Patric Porter. No one had more than one for Pepsi, which got only four hits off Omar Jordan.

Jaycees..... 10

Kiwanis..... 9

Jennifer McAllister hit a two-run double then scored the winning run in the bottom of the seventh inning as the Jaycees outlasted the Kiwanis, 10-9, in the North State Little League Wednesday.

After three scoreless innings, the Jaycees came up with two runs in the fourth with the Jaycees rallying for four in their half of the frame. Jarrett McGalliard slapped a two-run homer for the Kiwanis in the fifth to tie it at 4-4, but the Jaycees immediately went back out with two in their half of the inning. The Kiwanis scored three times in the top of the sixth for a 7-6 lead, but the Jaycees came up with one to tie it once more.

In the top of the seventh, the Kiwanis scored twice for a 9-7 lead but the Jaycees would not fold.

After two men went down, Reggie Boyd walked, as did Robbie Burlington. McAllister followed with a double, driving in both runners. She then scored on Brandon Moore's single with the game-winning run.

McAllister and Moore each collected three hits to pace the Jaycees. Demetrius Morgan and Brett Taylor each had three while Giyan Operario, McGalliard and Andre Richardson each had two for the Kiwanis.

Pitt Babe Ruth

Chicod..... 10

1st Citizens..... 5

WINTERVILLE — Chicod rolled up a 10-5 victory over First Citizens in the Pitt County Babe Ruth League Wednesday night.

Chicod's attack was led by Paul Jackson and Brent Elks each of whom collected two hits. First Citizens was paced by Clifton Bryant and Stacy Hodges, each with two also.

Jackson went the distance for Chicod on the mound to pick up the victory.

Babe Ruth League

Everette's..... 13

Computerland..... 6

Travis Williamson and William Gibbs each picked up three hits as Everette's Pest Control rolled up a 13-6 Babe Ruth League victory over Computerland Wednesday night.

Everette's took the lead in the first, scoring twice, but Computerland matched that in its half of the frame. Everette's went back out with one in the third, for a 3-2 lead.

Then, in the fifth, Everette's exploded for seven big runs to move out to a 10-2 advantage, putting the game on ice. Williamson opened up with a single and Jamie Brewington reached on an error. Patrick Joyner singled to load the bases. Billy Gorham walked, forcing in Williamson. Gibbs singled, driving in both Brewington and Joyner. Bill Jenkins walked, and Hank Thompson singled in Gorham and Gibbs. Mike Cardin walked and Williamson singled, driving in Jenkins, but Thompson was cut down trying to score. Brewington got a hit to drive in Cardin with the final run of the inning.

Everette's added two in the sixth and one in the seventh. Computerland picked up two in the fifth, one in the sixth and one in the seventh.

Brewington and Joyner each added two hits for Everette's while no one had more than one for Computerland, which got only three off Brewington.

The game between Brown & Wood and Coca-Cola was suspended after six innings because of the park curfew and will be completed when the two teams meet again on June 19.

National League Action...

Mike Scott, 7-3, gave up one run on three hits in seven innings, and struck out seven to move past teammate Nolan Ryan into the National League strikeout lead with 102.

Mets 13, Cubs 2
The Mets snapped out of a three-game funk as Dwight Gooden won his second straight start since returning from drug rehabilitation. Gooden went eight innings, giving up eight hits and two runs, striking out 10 and walking none.

He was supported by two home runs from Keith Hernandez and one each by Gary Carter and Tim Lincecum in a season-high 19-hit attack.

The visiting Mets jumped to an 8-0 lead in the first three innings, with Carter homering in a three-run second, and Hernandez and Lincecum connecting in a five-run third. Teufel's was a three-run shot.

Carter also had a double and a pair of singles and scored three times, Kevin McReynolds had four hits, including a pair of doubles, and Rafael Santana drove in three runs with a double and single.

"I felt great, I had my control early and got the breaking ball over," Gooden said. "With the lead I was able to experiment more and I threw a lot more curves and changes."

As for the crowd reaction, Gooden said he didn't hear anything but "noise between the lines."

"But there were some negative things said on the side," he said.

Giants 9, Reds 4
At Cincinnati, Candy Maldonado hit three doubles and the Giants scored all their runs in the last five innings, including six runs in the last two. San Francisco climbed within a game of first-place Cincinnati in the NL West and won two of the three games in the series.

Trailing 4-3 entering the eighth, the Giants rallied for four runs. Eddie Milner and Chris Speier singled to start the inning. Jeffrey Leonard's pinch-hit sacrifice fly tied the game 4-4 before Maldonado doubled to right, driving home Speier with the go-ahead run. Harry Spilman's sacrifice fly and Ivan DeJesus' RBI single capped the rally.

Kal Daniels hit a pair of solo home runs and Dave Parker also homered for the Reds. Will Clark and Bob Melvin hit solo shots for the Giants.

"A lot of people thought we were down and out, but this club doesn't quit," Giants Manager Roger Craig said.

American League...

singled off Eric King, 3-5, in the 10th. After Paul Molitor struck out, Mark Thurmond relieved King and Surhoff hit the second pitch to center for his third homer. Dan Plesac, 2-0, pitched the last three innings for the victory.

Red Sox 15, Orioles 4
Rookie Ellis Burks and Marty Barrett both hit grand slams and Jim

Rice had three RBI as part of an 18-hit attack for Boston, who won its fourth in a row and gave Baltimore its seventh straight loss.

Burks also hit a two-run homer and drove in seven runs and Barrett went 4-for-5. Al Nipper, 5-5, pitched a seven-hitter.

Burks and Barrett were part of record-setting night in the American League. With Tony Bernazard's grand slam for Cleveland Wednesday night, the three tied an AL record for most grand slams in one day, which had occurred 13 times before, the last on Aug. 10, 1986.

Alan Ashby of the Houston Astros also hit a grand slam, tying a major league record of four set nine times before, including last Aug. 10.

Blue Jays 4, Yankees 1
George Bell hit his 21st home run, best in the majors, and Jimmy Key and Tom Henke combined on a seven-inning as Toronto closed within one win of a club-record nine straight victories.

Bell hit a three-run homer in the third inning, giving him an AL-leading 54 RBI. Bell went 7-for-13 with three homers, two doubles and eight RBI in the three-game series. Key, 8-3, gave up one run on five hits in 7 2/3 innings. Henke finished for his 10th save.

Angels 10, Indians 7
Devon White's seventh-inning two-run homer snapped a 7-7 tie and Greg Minton pitched four shutout innings to win his first AL game.

Minton, 1-0, who was signed as a free agent on June 2, replaced starter John Candelaria to start the sixth inning. He allowed two hits, struck out four and walked one. White's 11th homer came with one out off Scott Bailes, 2-1, the fourth Cleveland pitcher.

Athletics 5, White Sox 2
Dennis Eckersley pitched a two-hitter over five innings and Stan Javier, Mike Gallego and Luis Polonia had RBI hits in a three-run second to give Oakland its 10th victory in its last 14 games.

Eckersley, 5-4, relieved Joaquin Andujar, who suffered a pulled hamstring with two outs in the second. The right-hander struck out six and walked two.

Rangers 9, Mariners 5
Darrell Porter hit his third pinch-hit homer of the season, a three-run shot, to cap a five-run eighth as Texas beat Seattle. Trailing 5-2, the Rangers loaded the bases with one out in the eighth on three consecutive singles off Bill Wilkinson, 0-2. Oddibe McDowell hit a two-run double and Steve Shields gave up Porter's homer to left field.

Mitch Williams, 4-3, pitched the seventh inning for the victory. Dale Mohorcic pitched the final two innings for his sixth save.

trouble

When you're buying a new cooling system for your home, you're really buying freedom. Freedom from summer's scorching heat. And freedom from worry about your family's comfort and safety.

That's why we work so hard at Heil to make our cooling products dependable and trouble-free. Before any Heil product goes to market, it goes through our product testing lab—one of the toughest in the industry. If it doesn't measure up in the lab, it doesn't go to market.

Your Heil dealer offers a full line of Heil residential cooling products, including energy-efficient heat pumps and the super-advanced Hermitage Elite air conditioner. All with Heil dependability built-in.

History Must Be Rewritten If Celtics Are To Repeat

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics must do what's never been done if they are to keep their NBA title. And they must do it against the league's best team.

No club has overcome a 3-1 deficit in the championship series. The Los Angeles Lakers hold that advantage over the Celtics and would claim the crown by winning tonight's fifth game of the best-of-seven series.

"There's no question it's hard as the devil," Boston guard Dennis Johnson said. "Seeing as how we're playing L.A., it's probably three or four times as hard."

The Celtics must beat Los Angeles three straight times, twice on the Lakers' home floor at the Inglewood Forum, to become the first repeat champion since Boston in 1968-69.

The Lakers never lost three straight games in compiling a 65-17 record this season or two in a row at home. They are 46-4 there, including a 9-0 playoff mark, and romped over the Celtics in the first two playoff games at the Forum. Boston is 4-16 in its last 20 road games.

"Sure, it could be done," Los Angeles forward James Worthy said about Boston winning three consecutive games, "but I think we'll have a lot to do with that."

"I think it's possible," Lakers forward Mychal Thompson said, "if we get above ourselves and think we're better than we are and think we have it all wrapped up."

How can they avoid that trap? "We just have to think how sweet it's going to be" to win their second championship in three years, Thompson said.

Boston knows the feeling, having won a league-high 16 titles. But things turned sour for the Celtics Tuesday night when they blew an eight-point lead in the final 3:20 and lost 107-106 on Magic Johnson's hook shot with two seconds left.

"If we could have won Game 4, it would have been very special because the Lakers have been the best team in the league all year and we would have been tied with Game 5 at home," Boston forward Larry Bird said.

"From past experience, when we've been up 3-1, I've always thought we had it won," he added.

The Lakers may not be voicing that opinion, but they are confident, knowing they have three chances to win one game. The Celtics have no room for error.

"It's just a little bit more relaxing," Magic Johnson said.

Worthy said Tuesday night's victory "was the most emotional game I've played in."

"It takes a lot out of a losing team and adds adrenaline to the winning team. Last night we were able to rest peacefully and I'm sure it was a tough night for the Celtics," he said. "We still have pressure to win, but the basket's not going to get any tighter for us. We don't have pressure to do anything. We just have to play our game."

The Lakers resumed doing that Tuesday night. They had an effective fast break, outrebounded the Celtics for the first time since Game 1 and used an aggressive trapping defense to cut a 16-point Boston lead to seven in the final five minutes of the third quarter.

But Los Angeles did shoot poorly in the first half and trailed for most of the game.

"We can't be pleased with our overall performance," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "We're pleased with the win. But we'll do some fine tuning, make some adjustments."

One thing Boston seems to have on its side tonight is the homecourt advantage. It is 103-6 at Boston Garden since the 1985 playoffs began. But during that span, the Lakers have done better than the Celtics there, winning four of the seven meetings.

"There are other places I'd prefer to play, but it happens to be the only game in town," Riley said. "We've lost enough in here, but I think after we beat them here in 1985 (to win the title) the mystery, the mystique is out the window."

In 1981, Boston did come back from a 3-1 deficit to beat Philadelphia in the Eastern Conference finals and go on to the NBA title.

"It hasn't been done very often in history," Celtics guard Danny Ainge said. "It has been done and this team has done it before."

But Bird, forward Kevin McHale and center Robert Parish are the only current Celtics who were on that team.

"We're not in 1981 right now," Dennis Johnson said, "We're in 1987."

With a comfortable 3-1 cushion, Riley is hoping complacency doesn't set in, since the Lakers can afford to lose tonight and still be favored heavily to win the championship.

"We have to fight that feeling of security and fight it hard," he said.

Los Angeles guard Michael Cooper didn't think that would be a problem.

"We want to end it here," he said. "We're going after the kill."

Bird, who rarely concedes defeat before the final buzzer, faced reality and acknowledged the probability that Los Angeles would reclaim the title it won in 1985.

"Our chances of winning it are tough," he said. "There's no way of getting around it."

TV Actors Are Also Directing

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Linda Gray and Larry Hagman do it. William Daniels does it. Ted Lange does it. Alan Alda does it. Georg Stanford Brown does it a lot. Probably no other actor does it more than Michael Landon.

They are among the growing number of actors who direct. Many direct only their own shows, but some gain enough experience to seek other assignments.

Many actors would like to direct. Frequently, it takes the clout of having a television series to get the opportunity.

"It wasn't in my contract," said Robert Hays, star of ABC's "Starman." "It was something I told them I'd like to do, and both Columbia and the production company liked the idea that I was interested. They got behind me and it was very helpful."

Hays directed the final episode of "Starman" for the season, which turned out to be the last show of the series. ABC did not renew it.

For Debbie Allen, star and choreographer of "Fame," the NBC series that later went into first-run syndication, it was a natural progression to directing the show. Later, she was given the opportunity to direct "Family Ties" and "The Bronx Zoo."

Ted Lange, who was Isaac Washington, the bartender on ABC's "The Love Boat," recently directed episodes of CBS' "The New Mike Hammer" and the syndicated "Gidget."

Lange has had wide experience directing stage productions and won the James Cagney Award for directing at the American Film Institute in 1974. After writing several episodes of "The Love Boat," he got to direct his first show in the 1982-1983 season.

Michael Landon and Victor French star in NBC's "Highway to Heaven" and share directing duties. French directs every third show and Landon directs the other two. "It's very time-consuming, but it's amazing how easy it becomes when you do something you love and with people you love," French said.

Landon began directing when he played Little Joe on "Bonanza," and he directed many episodes of his series, "Little House on the Prairie," that ran for nine years on NBC.

Two of the most prolific directors are Georg Stanford Brown, who began as an actor on "The Rookies," and Thomas Carter, who was an actor on "The White Shadow." Brown has directed numerous television shows, including CBS' "Cagney & Lacey," which stars his wife, Tyne Daly.

Carter has directed episodes of CBS' "The White Shadow" and NBC's "St. Elsewhere," "Hill Street Blues" and "Fame." He directed several pilots, including the 2-hour pilot of NBC's "Miami Vice" and the pilot of NBC's new series, "Beverly Hills Buntz." Last year he directed the NBC miniseries "A Year in the Life" and is currently scheduled to direct a feature film for Zanuck-Brown Productions.

Other stars who have directed episodes of their series include Don Johnson and Edward James Olmos of "Miami Vice," Larry Hagman and Linda Gray of "Dallas," Stacy Keach of "The New Mike Hammer," William Daniels and Eric Laneville of "St. Elsewhere," and Al Waxman of "Cagney & Lacey."

"It's good to start on your own show because everyone knows you, and you know the show and the characters," said Hays. "It's very hard, though. Your concentration becomes scattered. I had to work harder at learning lines and focusing on my character."

Hays said he paid his own $5,000 initiation dues to join the Directors Guild of America. "It means more if you pay it yourself," he said.

Not every show allows its actors to direct. "Hill Street Blues" had an unwritten rule prohibiting it, as does NBC's "L.A. Law."

The efforts of the directing actors has not gone unrecognized. Actors from Noam Pitlik to Jackie Cooper to Alan Alda have won Emmys for directing. Alda won for "M-A-S-H" and went on to direct motion pictures.

Satellites Give Aussies U.S. View

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If Australians think of the United States in terms of sun and sand, it might be due to satellite orbit paths that give Aussies a California-eye view on the news from "the states."

"You can come out of here with a single satellite hop to Australia," Bob Tarlau, Nine Network Australia bureau chief, said in his Hollywood office. "You cannot uplink in New York and come down on Australia without coming down on the West Coast of the U.S."

The three Australian TV networks base their news staffs in Los Angeles. The satellite transmission paths make it cheaper to base news operations in Los Angeles instead of on the East Coast, site of many major stories. Only Network Ten has an East Coast bureau.

Along with reports on major U.S. events and stories with an Australian angle, they beam features with a California angle on U.S. trends and events.

"We always look for a local angle," said Ken Burslem, West Coast bureau chief for Network Ten Australia. "It's becoming easier, particularly in California, because of the similarities between the lifestyles and mixture of people between Australia and California."

Australians, their newspeople say, like American stories.

"The 'gee-whiz' stories make an Australian say 'Wow!'" said John Mangos, Nine Network correspondent. "They're the 'only-in-America' stories."

He cites his piece on Photon, a laser-like tag game popular across the United States. "There's an interest in this at home, because it just hit America," Mangos said. "It means it will eventually hit Australia."

A story on a U.S. radar-detector that makes police think a motorist is traveling within the speed limit triggered a flood of phone calls and letters from Australia.

"People wanted to know more about it and where to get it, even though we said it was illegal," said Tarlau.

The Australian networks do send news crews to other parts of the United States, and they use footage from U.S. networks. But the Los Angeles base means that what happens in California is mixed with major news.

"Yesterday I did three stories," said Ian Hyslop, Seven Network bureau chief. "I did a piece on the Beverly Hills smoking ban. We did a feature on Ian Murray, the skipper of the defeated Australian yacht in the America's Cup, skiing at Mammoth Mountain. I did a piece on Ronald Reagan's address to the nation."

Shortly after putting together a live report on a speech by President Reagan, with taped reactions from Alexander Haig, Jesse Jackson, Jerry Falwell and Oliver North, Tarlau notes, "It was a combination of CBS and NBC stuff."

"Because we can see ABC and CBS, oftentimes the package we put together can be better than any of those," he said. "We can use the best."

The language compatibility makes it easy for Australians to cover the United States and use U.S. news reports. But language problems do occasionally crop up.

"I think Americans have more difficulty with our accents than we do with theirs, but there are difficulties," said Burslem. "I did a story on a rodeo in Texas, and we really should have used captions for the broadest of Texas accents."

FOCUS

Amelia the Aviatix
 On this day in 1935, Amelia Earhart became the first woman to fly across the Pacific from Hawaii to California. Despite Earhart's accomplishments, some sources say she was a poor pilot who often flirted with death. She had several crash landings and lost her way more than once. But some of Amelia's biographers insist that she was a coolheaded, confident pilot. Earhart disappeared in 1937, while attempting to make a round-the-world flight.
DO YOU KNOW — Who made the first solo flight across the Atlantic Ocean?
WEDNESDAY'S ANSWER — The Sears Tower is 110 stories tall.

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY June 12
GENERAL TENDENCIES: Look into new ways to accomplish and achieve your aims. If you get into practical and wordy aspects from a new angle, you will be able to organize your mundane interests.
ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Study the ideas that will help you in the future. Get the aid of an influential person who supports you.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You can delight the one you love now. Be off to new sites where you can expand and get ahead faster.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): See what it is that a long-time partner expects from you and please this person. Show more affection at home.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You can do some interesting work today. Try to surround yourself with experts who can be of help.
LEO (July 22 to August 21): Get busy and do what is expected for you by your mate. Make the needed changes in business matters.
VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Try to improve the conditions at home. Invite pals over that your mate will also enjoy. Show your fine hospitality.
LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Try a new angle at correspondence. Do whatever will cheer your family up and be happier together.
SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Plan how to inflate your bank account. Later get your budget organized. Tonight is best for seeing friends.
SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Make a list of your private needs in case you should forget. Enjoy family and friends tonight.
CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Study your private aims seriously and know how best to gain them before you get into outside activities.
AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Today is best for contacting long-time and trusted friends. Make time for the one you love so much.
PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Take care of an outside obligation to its fullest advantage. A prominent older person gives you needed backing.
IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, will be one of those delightful young people who will be rather slow during the early life but thorough in learning. The adult years will be very successful and happy due to the ability to retain knowledge better than most. Sports are a must here.
 "The Stars impel; they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

Opening lead: Six of ♣
 Don't play bridge by rote. The bromides you learned at your mother's knee cover general situations, and they should never be allowed to replace common sense.

Since North's double promised both major suits, South judged his hand as being too good for three hearts, which might sound as if it were only competitive. His jump to game ended the auction.
 West led his singleton club, East won the king and declarer shrewdly dropped the ten. Since a diamond ruff seemed like a good idea, East cashed the ace of diamonds, then had to decide how to continue. Since he did not know who held the deuce of clubs, East led the ace. West discarded a diamond, and declarer was in control. When the queen of trumps appeared on the second lead of the suit, declarer claimed the balance.
 Now we, too, were taught that you should never trump your partner's ace. However, West could be reasonably certain his partner held a singleton ace of diamonds, and he also knew he had no fast entry to his hand in a side suit. Yet the only way he could defeat the contract was by giving his partner a ruff. Even though West had the deepest respect for his mother and the advice she tendered, this was the time to ignore it. The simple and sure way to gain the lead was to trump his partner's ace of clubs. That, and the diamond ruff at the next trick, would have garnered the four tricks necessary to defeat the game.

Cosmetic Surgery Comes Now With Full Disclosure

Kathryn Klinger couldn't believe what she was hearing the other day at a luncheon.

"Everyone was saying that they had had their eyes done, and who had done them," said the owner of the Georgette Klinger Salon in Beverly Hills, Calif. "It was really shocking. These women were very free about it. And they weren't old — I'd say they were in their late 30s."

The number of elective facial cosmetic surgeries has doubled over the last five years, according to the American Academy of Facial Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery. And cosmetic surgery has come a long way from the days when women smiled serenely and lied that their new face was the result of a week at the health spa.

This is the age of full disclosure. Men and women proudly jut out their newly reconstructed chins and gladly report where the work was done and who did it. These days it's not uncommon to see men and women on the street wearing a nose splint or sunglasses that barely hide bruised eyes and stitches, the residue of plastic surgery.

Fashion magazines and health publications keep a curious public informed on the latest techniques, while the trendy New York-based Details magazine allows plastic surgery veterans to spill their guts in a regular feature, "Knifestyles of the Rich and Famous."

Meanwhile, the number of procedures performed continues to rise. According to the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons, there were 477,700 surgeries done in 1984 and 590,580 in 1986. The most popular was suction-assisted lipectomy, where fat is suctioned out of the body; followed by breast augmentation, eyelid lifts, nose jobs, face lifts and tummy tucks. Men account for 12 percent of all plastic surgeries, most of them nose jobs.

This increase in elective cosmetic surgeries has led to more awareness and acceptance. It's no longer a sin to be nipped and tucked and then blab about it.

Maryjo Price, a 51-year-old skin-care salon owner, is "very open" about the face lift she had two years ago. She was back at work a week after her surgery, covering up remaining bruises with makeup.

Price had the surgery done the same year she became a grandmother (not merely a coincidence, she said), convinced she needed it after looking at family pictures. "I'd see in the pictures that I was looking worse. It's one of the better things I've done for myself. I'd rather have this than a new car."

Dr. Edward Stainbrook, professor emeritus of psychiatry and behavioral science at University of Southern California's School of Medicine, sees a link between an increased awareness of our bodies and the push for more plastic surgery. "If you look at the whole social and cultural trend over the last 30, 40 years, it's going toward fitness and wellness. There is much less guilt about altering the body, making it as attractive as we can. To be physically well means to be physically attractive. And this affects people's willingness to use plastic surgery."

Plastic surgery has gotten boosts over the years from celebrities who tout its merits. When former First Lady Betty Ford admitted to having a face lift in 1978, it gave thousands of women carte blanche to do the same. And when the svelte Joan Rivers had her tummy tucked last summer, even skinny women realized there were improvements that could be made.

Comedian Phyllis Diller was one of the first to come forth with tales of her nips and tucks; her biography includes a full page listing all of her repair work since 1971 (including two face lifts, two nose jobs, cheek implants and eyeliner tattoo). Since Diller, who turns 70 in July, practically owes her body to science, it's no surprise she was given an award from the American Academy of Cosmetic Surgery last year for her "courage ... to proclaim her surgery and show her results, nationwide and worldwide."

"My first face was nothing gradual, believe me," Diller said in a telephone interview from New York. "It was a drastic change. But it was such a wonderful change. I was thrilled. It's no different than getting a manicure. It's upkeep. It does so much for your psyche. Your whole attitude toward yourself changes."

As plastic surgery becomes more commonplace, it's not unusual for a patient to start with one procedure and go back for several more as fears subside. Most plastic surgeons will oblige, as long as the patient has a good mental attitude and does not, for instance, believe a face lift will rejuvenate a sagging marriage.

Dr. Donald Weissman has sent many patients with unrealistic expectations out of his Sunset Boulevard office. "They're searching for perfection," he said. "Perfection does not exist. Plastic surgery is an enhancement of natural beauty, bringing out a more beautiful you — not creating a new you."

"Sure," he said, grabbing the nose of the person sitting across from him. "I could trim this for you. But if you're a healthy person I'd say, 'Go read a book, go worry about baby seals being clubbed to death.' When your house is in order, it's great to have cosmetic surgery. I don't think cosmetic surgery puts your house in order."

FACE LIFT — Skin-care salon owner Maryjo Price, 51, of Los Angeles, shown with friend Robert Gaston, had a face lift two years ago — the same year she became a grandmother. At left is a videotape made before her face lift. Cosmetic surgery has increased drastically in the last two years, and most people openly acknowledge they have sought surgical assistance. (L.A. Times-Washington Post Photo)

Study Shows Blood Clots More Easily Soon After Awakening

BOSTON (AP) — Potentially lethal heart attacks may be partly due to a morning spurt of hormones and other changes that gave prehistoric people a better chance of surviving a fight, a researcher says.

People's blood clots more readily soon after they climb out of bed in the morning, according to a study published today in the New England Journal of Medicine.

In the primeval past, this would have been an advantage for human ancestors because it improved their chances of surviving cuts, said Dr. James E. Muller of Harvard Medical School.

But for 20th century men and women, it could be a killer if it causes clots to form in blood vessels already narrowed by hardening of the arteries.

The new research was conducted by Dr. Geoffrey H. Tofler, a Harvard colleague of Muller, and dovetails with an earlier report by Muller showing that heart attacks are most common in the morning. He found that the attacks are three times more likely to occur at 9 a.m. than at 11 a.m.

The study found that the tendency of blood to form clots, known as platelet aggregability, is highest between 6 a.m. and 9 a.m.

Platelets are blood cells that clump together to plug holes in blood vessels. The work supports the researchers' theory that platelets play some role in the morning occurrence of heart attacks.

"We have, I think, at least part of the explanation" for the morning peak, said Muller. "This may not be the only event in the morning that predisposes to thrombosis (clotting), but it's likely to be one of them."

Finding the underlying cause of morning heart attacks is important, said Muller. "If we can understand why they are increased in the morning, we have a much better shot at preventing these disorders."

He said the findings reinforce the belief that a daily aspirin tablet can ward off heart attacks by slowing the blood's tendency to clot.

The study was conducted on 15 healthy men. The doctors measured the activity of their platelets at three-hour intervals throughout the day and night. The men got up at 8 a.m., and shortly after that, their blood became most likely to form clots.

Marrow Transplants Useful Against Cancer

L.A. Times-Washington Post

Highly promising results using bone marrow transplants against an often deadly form of cancer were reported Wednesday by researchers in Boston.

According to Dr. Lee Nadler at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, by first identifying lymphoma patients who can still respond to treatment — and who also have certain markers on their cancer cells — "we are beginning to get very good results; we are making a difference."

Among 49 patients who had very poor chances of survival, Nadler said, 65 percent are still alive and disease-free. Their survival periods since their transplants range between two months and, for one patient, five years. Only two patients died as a direct result of the bone marrow transplant procedure. Nadler said many of the survivors had lived longer than would have been expected without the transplants.

"The study demonstrates that ... bone marrow transplantation has tolerable toxicity and high efficacy in a subset of patients who are otherwise incurable, but still responsive to ... therapy," the team wrote in the New England Journal of Medicine.

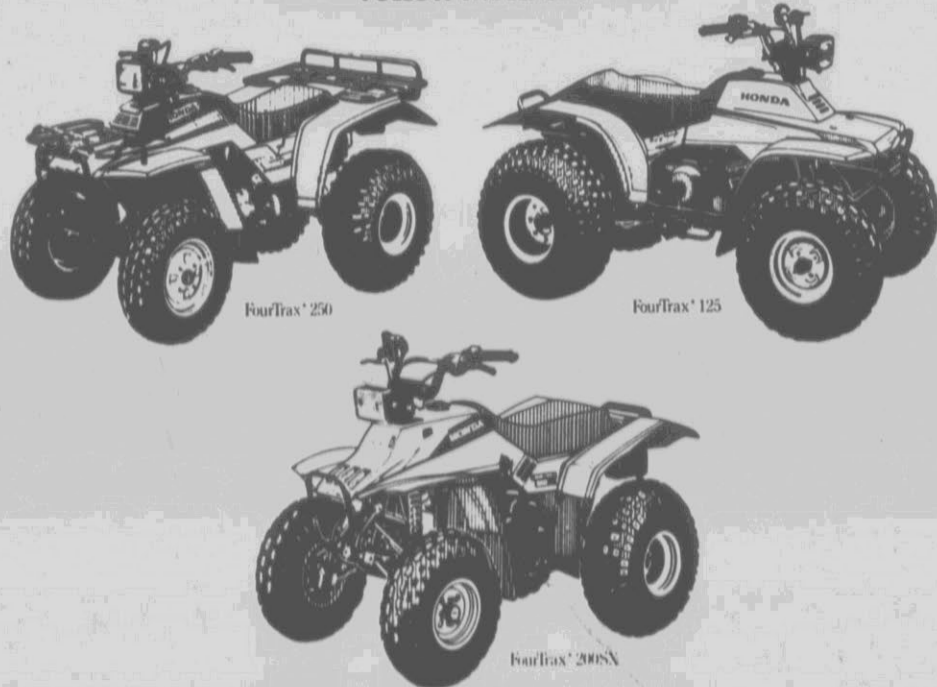

Nadler cautioned, however, that this approach is still experimental. "It is not a proven entity; it is a new approach" and much more study must be done, he said. He is one of 12 members of the Dana-Farber research team.

The team dealt specifically with a type of cancer known as non-Hodgkins B-cell lymphoma, the most common tumor in adults between 20 and 40 years of age. There are between 10,000 and 15,000 lymphoma patients in the United States, and less than 50 percent achieve long-term survival with conventional therapy.

ROCKIN' REBATE

Right now, it's Rockin' Rebate time. And that means it's time to come in and roll up big savings—$100 to $300* on selected Honda ATVs. You can apply these savings to your down payment or get cash back from Honda—the choice is yours. But you'd better hurry, because Honda's ATV Rockin' Rebate ends July 31, 1987.

Your Body Will Tell When It's Time For A Nap

By JAMIE TALAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

Tired after lunch? Downright groggy by 3 p.m.? You are not alone. Researchers have produced scientific evidence that humans — when given the chance — will sleep at least two times a day. The need for a siesta is keyed to the human biological clock, and missing a catnap can put the system out of kilter, experts say.

It makes perfect sense, at least outside of the United States. In many other cultures people return home at midday and eat and nap before they return to work. Even some animals have similar biological clocks.

New studies also suggest that siestas might make people more efficient in their afternoon work, simply because their sleep-wake cycles are in sync. The findings may have some practical applications, especially for people with shift schedules.

Researchers at the Max Planck Institute for Psychiatry in Munich, Germany, have devised an intriguing way to study midday sleep patterns. Jürgen Zulley and Scott Campbell of the institute had test subjects live in an underground bunker for days — with no music, writing, reading, alcohol, coffee or tea. The subjects have no way to judge time outside of their environment.

The subjects were merely asked to fall asleep whenever they felt the urge. Electrodes attached to their bodies helped researchers monitor the depth and length of each sleep cycle.

The German scientists found there were four-hour rhythms — periods of increased readiness to sleep — in addition to night sleep. Daytime sleeping occurred most often at 1 p.m., but shorter naps also took place at 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

People in midday slumber for more than 90 minutes had deeper sleeps, followed by periods of dreaming.

In similar studies, Richard E. Kronauer, professor of mechanical engineering at Harvard University, found that people chose nap times at 5:30 p.m. slept for three hours, stayed up for eight hours and slept another four hours. In essence, their days were split in half.

If daytime snoozing is normal, what is the biological purpose of this short sleep?

According to Dr. Thomas Wehr, chief of the clinical psychobiology branch of the National Institute of Mental Health, the natural sleeping pattern might be the body's way of conserving energy, a form of temperature regulation.

For example, many people take a siesta in hot climates, where the midday sun makes the body use more energy to move about.

At the other extreme, night is the coldest time of day, another period where the body needs more energy to carry out activities. "The reason sleep occurs at certain times of day might have to do with these temperature extremes," Wehr added.

If humans are genetically programmed to take naps, what is stopping us?

Wehr blames industrialization for breaking this natural cycle. "Business interferes with many natural patterns of behavior," he pointed out. Twenty-five percent of Americans work shifts that prevent them from normal sleep. Many suffer mental and physical illnesses that can be linked directly to these erratic schedules.

Wehr says humans should take naps, but in the work-oriented 20th Century, he added, "if everyone went home and took a three-hour break, there would be twice as many commuting hours, and all businesses would run less efficiently."

Virus Complicates Research On AIDS

BOSTON (AP) — A lethal relative of the AIDS virus is likely to spread from Africa to the rest of the world, which could seriously complicate the already difficult job of finding an AIDS vaccine, researchers say.

The microbe, HIV-2, also could raise questions about the accuracy of AIDS tests.

HIV-2, discovered in 1984, genetically resembles HIV-1, the virus that causes AIDS found in the United States, and SIV, the virus that causes an AIDS-like disease in monkeys.

In a recent report in the New England Journal of Medicine, doctors from the Pasteur Institute in Paris showed that HIV-2 can cause acquired immune deficiency syndrome indistinguishable from that triggered by HIV-1.

"It seems to be localized at the moment" in West Africa, said Dr.

Francois Clavel. "But there is no reason why this epidemic would not spread over Africa or Europe or other countries like HIV-1 did, unless we are very vigilant and can detect carriers of the virus."

Earlier, Pasteur researchers reported finding HIV-2 in two AIDS patients. Clavel said the latest study, documenting HIV-2 infection in 30 people, provides strong evidence that the virus actually causes the disease.

The two viruses appear to attack the body in similar ways. Clavel said that while some parts of HIV-1 and HIV-2 are genetically alike, others are different, and the overall genetic similarity is about 40 percent.

Just what this means for finding an AIDS vaccine is unclear. Clavel said drug manufacturers may be able to base a vaccine on parts of the two viruses that are identical, so one vaccine would block both AIDS viruses.

But What Goes Up Still Comes Down College Kid Finds Error In Newton's Arithmetic

By JAMES LITKE
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Now that Sir Isaac Newton isn't around to defend himself, along comes a fresh-faced college kid to find fault with the 300-year-old work in which the master laid out the laws of motion and his theory of gravity.

"What I did is nothing compared to the 'Principia,'" said University of Chicago physics student Robert Garisto, 23. "What's really interesting is not that Newton made a small mistake, but that nobody found and explained this error before."

Which is Garisto's nice way of saying what goes up will still come down. Garisto uncovered the mistake as part of a routine class assignment by Professor Noel Swerdlow, who handed the problem out because he himself had never been able to get the numbers in Proposition Eight of Book Three of the "Philosophiæ Naturalis Principia Mathematica" to agree with each other.

"Principia," published in 1687 and considered one of the greatest single contributions in the history of science, established Newton's brilliance as an astronomer and mathematician.

It offered an explanation about how a unified system of scientific principles — gravity and motion — governed what happened on Earth and in the heavens.

"What I found is that Newton, using his own data, plugged the wrong value into a calculation and came up with a discrepancy of about 15 percent," Garisto said Wednesday. "He simply was inconsistent in how he used his own numbers in an equation."

In Proposition Eight, Newton tried to demonstrate the correctness of his explanation by calculating the mass, surface gravity and density of the known planets.

Garisto found the inconsistency in Newton's calculation of the Earth's mass.

To determine that, Newton needed to know the angle between a line from the Earth's center to the sun and a line from a point on the Earth's surface to the sun.

Modern science has put that number at about 8.8 seconds. A second is one 3,600th of a degree.

Newton's notes indicated he believed the figure to be 10.5 seconds, but he mysteriously used 11 seconds in calculating the Earth's mass. That's the mistake Garisto discovered.

Garisto said he reworked the calculations with the 15 percent change and "bingo, I got what should have been the right number."

"Quite frankly, I just went ahead and finished the paper and turned it in, assuming that the discrepancy is the reason we were assigned to run the numbers in the first place."

That was mid-February. The significance of the find at first eluded even Swerdlow, who gave Garisto an A-plus for his paper.

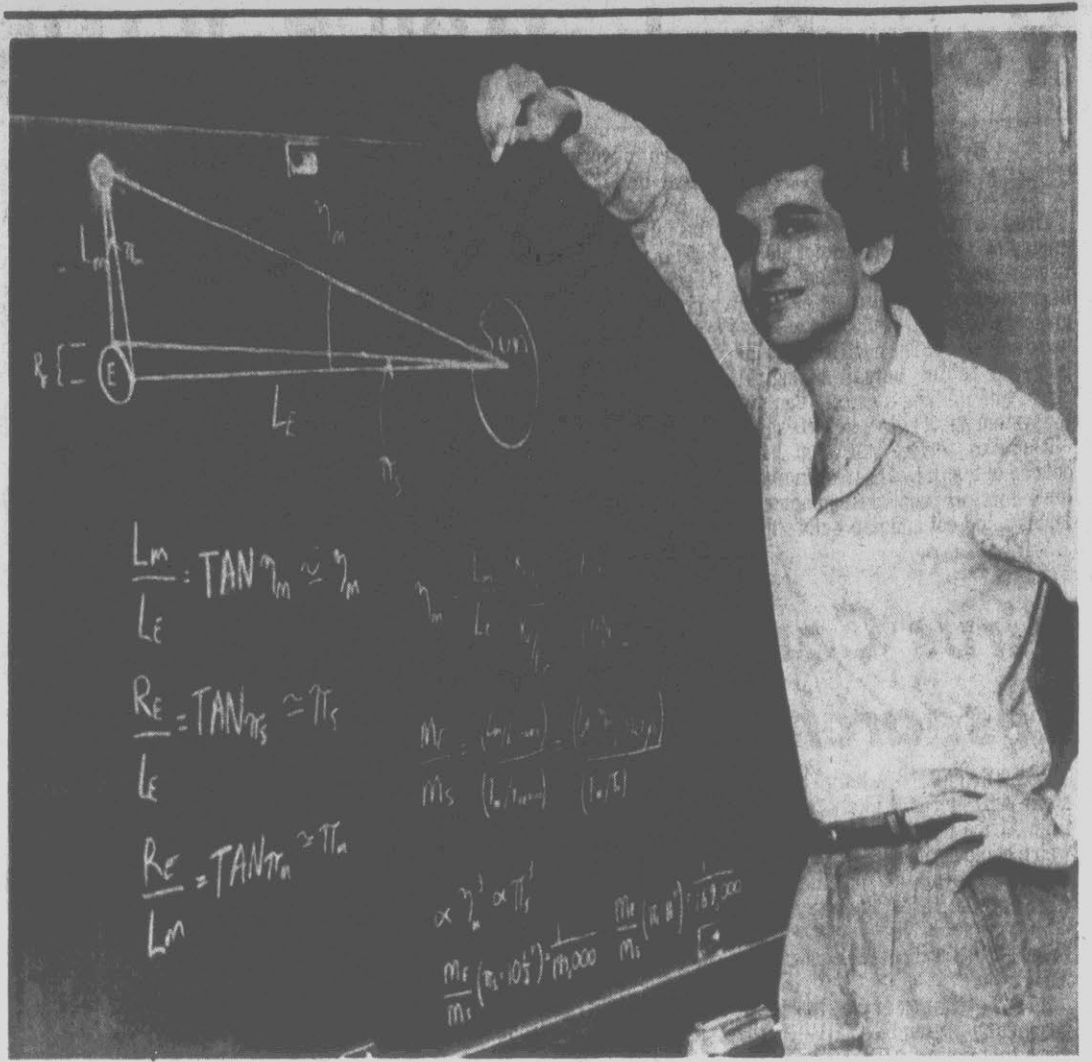

In April, Swerdlow and Garisto attended a lecture on the "Principia" by University of Chicago Nobel laureate S. Chandrasekhar. Both realized what Garisto had uncovered.

"I immediately went to the library and went crazy," said Garisto.

He wrote a more extensive paper, submitted it to the scientific honor society Sigma Xi and won the university chapter's Prize for Excellence in Science, no small feat in a physics department that counts 18 Nobel Prize winners among past or current students and faculty.

Garisto will receive his bachelor's degree in physics Saturday, and begin graduate work next fall at the University of Michigan. He plans to continue his studies in theoretical high-energy physics and Einstein's theory of general relativity.

Asked whether he anticipates finding problems with Einstein's work, Garisto laughed and said, "Give me a break."

CORRECTED VERSION — University of Chicago student Robert Garisto shows some of the equations he used to find an error in Newton's "Principia." The error went undetected for 300 years after Sir Isaac Newton first published the work, which contained his laws of motion and theory of gravity. (AP Laserphoto)

Scientific Team Seeks Evidence Of 'Death Star'

By LEE DYE
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

A team of astrophysicists from Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory is trying to answer a question that many scientists believe may not be answerable for millions of years:

Does the sun have a companion star, known as the Death Star, or the Nemesis, that sweeps past the solar system once every 26 to 30 million years, causing comets and asteroids to rain down upon Earth, wiping out entire species in mass extinctions?

If the answer is yes, the star would be so far away at this time that it would be barely visible from Earth and so seemingly insignificant that its gradual movement across the sky would have escaped detection by the thousands of telescopes that have been turned toward the heavens during nearly four centuries of telescopic research.

The search for the Death Star has taken on new interest because of mounting evidence that many scientists believe indicates that dinosaurs and other lesser species died out millions of years ago because of a cataclysmic collision of the Earth with a foreign body, probably an asteroid or a huge comet. According to the theory, the collision kicked up enough dust to plunge Earth into darkness for months or years, killing the vegetation that sustained the giant beasts that ruled Earth until their 150-million-year reign ended about 65 million years ago.

The Nemesis theory is based on the idea that if another star passed close to the sun, its gravitational field would dislodge comets and possibly asteroids from their normal positions in the solar system and some would likely collide with Earth.

A number of scientists have tried to find the Nemesis, only to be discouraged by the prospect of an endless search of possibly millions of candidates, a search that may never lead to solid results.

"I feel completely agnostic" on the question of whether there is a Death Star, said one scientist who has pondered the question, Robert Harrington of the U.S. Naval Observatory in Washington. "In principle it's perfectly possible for there to be such a thing, but there is no way to know if it is there. I have no reason one way or the other to believe or not believe."

Some others simply dismiss the idea as nonsense, contending that if the sun has a companion that only comes around once every 26 million years or so, it is a rare companion indeed. Most stars in the Milky Way galaxy are paired in binary systems, but generally they revolve around each other quickly, frequently in a matter of weeks or months. There is no known binary system with a period of millions of years.

But scientists from the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory on the campus of the University of California Berkeley think there is reason to believe there is such a star, and they have set out to find it with a 30-inch telescope usually used to train the university's budding astronomers.

Astrophysicist Richard Muller, who is leading the effort, said the team has used previous sky surveys to narrow down the field of candidates in the area of the sky that is visible from the Northern Hemisphere.

"We have eliminated all but 3,000 stars," Muller said, in the belief that the Nemesis would be a small, inconspicuous red star. The stars most visible from Earth are blue or white in color and have a much higher luminosity than the stars that appear reddish because of their cooler temperatures.

"We started with about half a million stars, and we could eliminate them in the following way," Muller said in a telephone interview. "We know this star is very close" in order to orbit the sun, "and if it were intrinsically bright, it would be one of the brightest stars in the sky" because it is so close.

If it were that bright, it would already have attracted so much attention that astronomers would have studied it intensely and "it would have had its distance measured," he said.

"So it must be a red star," which would have escaped serious study because it seemed so like the millions of other stars in the Milky Way galaxy that appear reddish, Muller added. He concluded that even though it would not have been studied individually, it should have been included in one of the numerous sky surveys conducted by astronomers who compile "catalogues" of stars.

"We found a catalogue of red stars, and based on the estimate of how bright it would be, we eliminated all but 3,000," he added.

If the Nemesis is one of those 3,000 stars, its position should change slightly when viewed from Earth as the planet revolves around the sun, because it would be viewed from different positions on Earth's orbit.

Thus over several months, the angle to the star as viewed from Earth, called its parallax, should change noticeably. That would be true only for a star as close as the Death Star, because all other stars are so far away that the Earth's orbit is not large enough to affect the parallax. By photographing the 3,000 suspects repeatedly during the next few months with the computer-driven telescope, the Nemesis should stand out from all the others because its parallax will have changed, but all the other stars will remain the same, Muller said.

Muller is undaunted by the fact that there is no known binary system with a period of 26 million years. He said there could be many such systems, but it would be hard to detect them because the distance between the stars would be so great.

If the search is unsuccessful, it could mean that the Nemesis is only visible from the Southern Hemisphere, and the search there will be far more difficult, he added.

The southern sky has not been studied as extensively as the northern sky because most observatories are in the Northern Hemisphere, so if Muller and his team have to move south, they will have to begin their search from scratch.

There is no catalogue of red stars for the southern sky, he said, so the team will have to first conduct a sky survey, a time-consuming prospect that could delay the search for years.

"I hope we will never have to go down to the Southern Hemisphere," Muller said.

Muller's fate is one he helped create several years ago when he was one of the first to postulate the Nemesis theory as the explanation for periodic mass extinctions on Earth.

Muller, UC Berkeley astronomer Marc Davis and Piet Hut, an astronomer with the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, disclosed their theory in an article in the British scientific journal Nature in 1984 after the scientific world was already abuzz with stories about the work of UC Berkeley geologist Walter Alvarez.

Alvarez was collecting samples from a limestone formation near the Italian village of Gubbio in 1977 when he discovered a layer of clay containing fossilized marine creatures that dated back to the time when the dinosaurs died out. He returned to Berkeley and teamed up with his father, Nobel laureate physicist Luis Alvarez of the Berkeley lab.

Subsequent analysis showed that the clay contained rich samples of iridium, an element that is rare in the Earth's crust. During the following years the father-and-son team postulated that the iridium found in the clay came from a huge comet or asteroid that hit Earth in a collision that had an impact 6 billion times greater than the Hiroshima atomic bomb.

The collision would have sent clouds of debris into the upper atmosphere, including iridium, obscuring the sun and plunging Earth into prolonged darkness. Over the course of months or years the iridium would have rained down upon Earth, leaving a historical record of the cataclysm.

Other geologists took up the banner and searched the world for similar evidence, and last year several teams reported during the San Francisco meeting of the American Geophysical Society that they had also found evidence of the iridium layer in widely separated areas around the world.

Great Lakes See Water Levels Fall

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Beaches not seen in years are emerging along parts of the Great Lakes because of a drop in lake levels since last fall, when the water was at an all-time high.

"Last fall we got 185,000 sandbags from the government to give out to people to protect their personal property," Sheboygan County Sheriff John Webb said Wednesday. "They're stored in an old train depot and more than two-thirds of them are left."

The drop, the result of a long, dry spring and a winter with below-average snowfall in the upper Midwest, was welcome news to people with docks and lakeside cottages, but experts warned the water is still far above normal.

Home Port
 WASHINGTON (AP) — The aircraft carrier Saratoga will temporarily change its home port from Mayport, Fla., to Portsmouth, Va., next January for an overhaul expected to last 12 to 14 months, the Navy said Wednesday.
 The carrier is now steaming across the Atlantic for patrol duties in the Mediterranean Sea.
 The Navy said the carrier's home port would shift back to Mayport once the work was completed. The change in home port status during overhauls allows the families of the sailors assigned to the ship to shift their residences.
