Second Airline Service Begins Flights Today

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

American Eagle commuter airline, which began transporting passengers to and from Pitt-Greenville Airport today, should lead to additional growth in the community, as well as the facility, local officials say.

"This is the most exciting thing that's happened to Greenville," Greenville Mayor Les Garner said today during a ceremony at PGV marking the initiation of American Eagle service.

"It's opening up this airport for competition. I expect us to grow and to be bigger than any airport east of Raleigh."

The new service, which includes six incoming and six outgoing flights daily, will benefit all of Pitt County, according to County Commissioners Charles McLawhorn and Kenneth Dews.

"I think it is great to have this additional service coming in here," McLawhorn said. "With American's reputation and worldwide experience, why we hope that we can make Pitt-Greenville known worldwide also. It's a great day for Pitt County and Greenville."

"We have looked forward to the day that we could have two air carriers into Greenville," Dews said. "We think that it is going to be only the beginning of our growth in this area, and we are just tickled pink."

The business community and the local economy will have new opportunities for growth, according to Bill Clark, chairman of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce.

"Any time you have more flights coming in and out of Greenville, it's got to benefit our economic growth," Clark said. "More and more companies will be interested in locating in Greenville because they need to travel."

"The fact that we're becoming more and more of a satellite of Raleigh-Durham and Charlotte hubs is a great benefit."

The continuing growth of the airport is vital to the area, according to Greenville City Council member Nancy Jenkins.

"I happen to think that next to the development of the (East Carolina) medical complex this is the most important area here in Greenville," said Mrs. Jenkins, the council's representative to the Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority.

"I think we've looked at in terms of its bringing industry and business, and certainly that's part of it. I think it's also about the quality of life in Greenville. There are more and more people coming in here who do travel for pleasure as well. The fact that you can go in and out of this airport is tremendous."

An initial passenger who arrived at the airport said he was pleased with the additional service.

"I think it's great," James Burcu, an employee with Burroughs Wellcome in Research Triangle Park, said. "I think competition is always worthwhile."

American Eagle service to the airport began in conjunction with the opening of American Airlines' $120 million connecting hub at Raleigh-Durham Airport. The RDU hub opened today with 95 flights a day to 38 cities operated by American and American Eagle, its commuter airline partner.

By mid-October, when the opening phase of the hub is completed, American and American Eagle will have a combined hub schedule of 139 flights a day to 54 cities, according to airline officials. When the hub is fully developed by 1989, the total schedule will be about 280 flights to 75 cities.

In South Korea

Five-Day Protest Ends

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A holdout band of 200 students left South Korea's main Roman Catholic center today, ending a five-day anti-government protest that had become a rallying point for thousands of other demonstrators.

As the students left aboard five buses, about 500 other people surged onto the compound of Myongdong Cathedral, waving clenched fists in the air, singing protest songs and shouting slogans.

Riot and plainclothes police units moved back and forth on the streets in front of the church complex, forcing crowds to move.

Several Catholic priests accompanied the students in the buses, which were to deliver the students to their schools under an agreement worked out between the church and government authorities.

Before leaving, the students released a statement they said marked the end of the protest that began Wednesday night. The students demanded the government release people seized in recent street demonstrations and refrain from "political suppression" following their protest.

Although the statement said the Myongdong protest was ending, about 10 students remained behind, saying they would conduct a hunger strike until their demands had been met.

A few hours earlier at the cathedral site, a vast lunchtime throng estimated at more than 10,000 people surged into the street in front of the cathedral and chanted slogans in support of the students.

Riot police moved into the area, firing tear gas to drive back the crowd.

Last week's demonstrations, the most violent since President Chun Doo-hwan came to power in 1980, broke out Wednesday in Seoul and a score of provincial cities. Government opponents had called for rallies that day to demand a resumption of debate on constitutional reforms and to denounce the alleged cover-up of the police torture death of a student on Jan. 14.

The rallies were also intended to embarrass Chun's Democratic Justice Party, which was holding its presidential convention to nominate a Chun ally, Roh Tae-woo, to succeed him.

The Myongdong Cathedral compound became the center of protests last week, and police surrounded it until Sunday, when they suddenly withdrew. The student protesters were told they were free to leave.

Church officials urged the students to withdraw, and the students marched out of the area at about noon. Minutes later, however, they returned to the compound and sat down.

Thousands of people, many of them office workers on lunch breaks, gathered on the streets outside to shout encouragement and denunciations of the government.

Pontiff Bids Poland Goodbye

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Pope John Paul II left his native land insisting that truth and freedom are essential for Poland, but leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski stressed that only the Communist authorities can determine Poland's future.

Jaruzelski, in a harshly worded farewell statement to the pontiff, said: "Poland needs the truth. But also the truth about Poland is needed."

"Your Holiness will soon leave the homeland," he added grimly. "He'll take its picture in his heart, but he can't take its real problems ... It has to meet its own challenges."

Jaruzelski spoke Sunday after a hastily arranged airport meeting with the pope, who was returning to Rome after his weeklong visit. There was no word on what the two men discussed, but the tone of their remarks indicated the Roman Catholic Church and the Communist authorities remain divided over Poland's course. The two men also met when the pope arrived in Poland.

Before leaving for the airport, the pope said in Warsaw that the Holy See should have formal ties with Poland, which is overwhelmingly Roman Catholic. John Paul called on the government and the Polish bishops to create the necessary conditions.

He emphasized, however, that "serious work" remained before Poland could become the first Warsaw Pact nation to have such ties. It was the first time the pope had spoken publicly on the issue.

Court Rules Crime Impact Irrelevant

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, in a major setback for the victims' rights movement, ruled today that the impact of a murder on the victim's family may not be considered when a convicted killer faces a possible death sentence.

The 5-4 ruling struck down the death sentence for a Maryland man convicted of brutally killing an elderly couple.

Justice Lewis F. Powell, writing for the court, said allowing the jury to hear about the emotional impact on the family of the victims can only inflame the jurors and deny the defendant a fair sentence.

"One can understand the grief and anger of the family caused by the brutal murders in this case," Powell said. "But the formal presentation of this information by the state can serve no other purpose than to inflame the jury and divert it from deciding the case on the relevant evidence concerning the crime and the defendant."

Introducing the so-called victim impact statement as evidence "creates a constitutionally unacceptable risk that the jury may impose the death penalty in an arbitrary and capricious manner," Powell said.

He added that the impact of the crime on a victim's family may be entirely unrelated to the blameworthiness of the defendant. It could subject someone to the death penalty merely because family members are willing and able to articulate their grief, Powell said.

Moreover, he said, the only way for the defendant to rebut the evidence would be to show the victim "was of dubious moral character or was ostracized from his family."

Such an exercise, Powell continued, could distract the jury from its proper task: Deciding "whether the death penalty is appropriate in light of the background and record of the accused and the particular circumstances of the crime."

Most states permit the impact of a crime on the victim — such as emotional and financial effects — to be considered in determining a defendant's sentence. But only some of those states allow victim impact statements to be introduced when the

Reagan Takes Persian Gulf Case To Public

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, turned down in his bid for allied military help in the Persian Gulf, is taking his case for a strengthened U.S. role in the troubled waterway to Congress and the American people.

White House officials, speaking Sunday on condition they not be identified, said Reagan is expected to touch on the tense situation in the gulf in a report to the nation tonight on the Venice economic summit.

In addition to the nationally broadcast speech from the Oval Office, Reagan will deliver a report on security of U.S. ships in the gulf to Congress early this week. Aides said the bulk of the report will be stamped secret, but portions probably will be public.

The administration plans to fly the U.S. flag on 11 Kuwaiti tankers and escort them with U.S. warships. At the seven-nation summit last week in Venice, Italy, allies offered diplomatic support, but no military help, for the U.S. policy.

The report to Congress is part of a procedure agreed upon before Reagan left for Europe, requiring the White House to keep the lawmakers informed of developments but not demanding that action be deferred until the report was made.

Bipartisan criticism of administration policy continued from both in and out of Congress as the president rested from his 10-day journey.

"From what I know ... I think it's a bad idea to get ourselves militarily involved," Henry A. Kissinger, secretary of state in the Republican administration of President Richard M. Nixon, said Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, appearing on the same program, said, "What we have done here is we have basically taken a strong tilt toward Iraq" in its 6½-year war with Iran in the gulf.

"I think with the lack of consensus we have right now, the administration would be advised to delay it," Nunn said.

Aides said Reagan's agenda as he resumes his Oval Office schedule also includes a trip to Capitol Hill this week to lobby against protectionist trade legislation. In his weekly radio address Saturday, he said such legislation "would damage our own prosperity and that of virtually the entire world."

Administration officials said Reagan will make a series of speeches around the country in ensuing weeks in support of his trade and economic policies.

In his speech tonight, scheduled for delivery at 8 p.m. EDT, Reagan also is expected to renew his pleas for reform in the federal budget process. World leaders in Venice called for stronger action to bring down the staggering U.S. federal budget deficit, which climbed to $220.7 billion in fiscal year 1986.

He also will report on the post-summit meeting of NATO foreign ministers in Reykjavik, Iceland, where they agreed formally to eliminate medium-range and shorter-range nuclear missiles in Europe.

In The Area

Rain Helps

Scattered showers during the weekend should help some Pitt County crops stay on their maturing schedules, said a county agriculture extension agent. But, more saturating rain is needed to produce the maximum yield.

"Those areas that did receive it (rain) will greatly benefit from it," said Mitch Smith, the tobacco agent with the service. "It came at a very opportune time for many growers in the county."

Farmers planting a double crop of soybeans probably benefitted most by the rain, he said. It also aided the growth of tobacco, which will be harvested in July.

The Greenville Utilities Commission water plant recorded .07 inches of rain from midnight Friday to midnight Saturday. There were .32 recorded from midnight Saturday to midnight Sunday.

The Tar River level was at 1.6 feet above sea level this morning.

CAN TEETH LAST A LIFETIME?

Can your teeth last a lifetime? Yes! The deep-rooted belief that you must inevitably lose your teeth as you grow older ranks among the most serious of the old wives' tales. There is no reason to resign yourself to replacing teeth with false ones. With good care, your teeth have an excellent chance of lasting a lifetime.

The greatest single cause of tooth loss in adults is pyorrhea (gum disease) and not, as most people believe, cavities. But deposits that cause this gum disease can be regularly removed through good home hygiene and by the dentist.

It's seldom too late to begin taking really good care of your teeth - and it's obviously well worth the effort. Dentures, efficient as they are, simply don't function as well as your natural teeth. For convenience and performance there are no teeth like your own.

If you want to be a little imaginative - teeth can last more than a lifetime. Full sets of teeth have been found in the skulls of skeletons over a thousand years old. If they can do it - you can do it.

Call our office for a check-up. Let's keep your teeth and gums as healthy as they can be.

Note: We invite all participants of the Blue Cross/Blue Shield personal care plan to come by our office. We are a member of Cost Care.

Wilted Midwest Seeks Relief

By the Associated Press

A heat wave that shattered nearly three dozen temperature records from Arizona to Michigan spread toward Canada today, after over-coming 250 baseball fans in St. Louis, buckling highways and forcing zookeepers in Kansas to hose down their elephants.

Record highs for the date were recorded Sunday in 33 cities, including 101 degrees in Burlington, Iowa; Lincoln, Neb.; and Molene, Ill. Four cities tied records, including Phoenix, Ariz., at 115 degrees and Madison, Wis., at 95.

Thousands crowded Lake Michigan beaches Sunday as the temperature reached 101 degrees in Milwaukee, the hottest temperature there in 32 years.

"People are looking for relief from the heat. Unfortunately, it looks like the whole city went down to the lake," police Sgt. Richard Menzel said.

The mercury hit 97 on Sunday in St. Louis; Green Bay, Wis.; Lansing, Mich.; and Rochester, Minn., and 96 in Helena, Mont.

Triple-digit readings were forecast today in eastern Montana, western North Dakota and the desert Southwest, with 80s and 90s over most of the nation.

Authorities said an Oklahoma man drowned Sunday in the Meramec River at Fenton, Mo.; a 12-year-old Peoria Heights boy drowned in the Illinois River; and three other young men drowned elsewhere in Illinois.

"When the weather's like this, there's always the danger of someone drowning," said Chicago Police Officer Steve McMurdo. "You can't keep them out of the water."

While the nation's heartland enjoyed sunshine, intense thunderstorms and hail hit scattered sections from Oklahoma to Tennessee and in the southern tip of Texas.

A tornado touched down near McAllen, Texas, on Sunday afternoon, scattering debris, blowing roofs off two sheds and knocking down a billboard and fruit stand as more than 3 inches of rain fell in an hour, authorities said.

Floodwaters from heavy rains, which were blamed for at least six deaths last week in Texas, began receding. The Red Cross estimated Sunday that 446 homes in 15 counties were damaged, including 65 that were destroyed. The count did not include still-inaccessible parts of DeWitt County, east of San Antonio.

While Atlanta got 1.89 inches of rain during the weekend, northeast Georgia continued to suffer the effects of below-normal rainfall. Elbert County Extension Agent Bob Perkins said the late soybean crop there may not get planted this year if there isn't more rain by July 1.

In Kansas, four elephants at the Topeka Zoo were kept in the shade and hosed down frequently with water as the high hit 98 degrees, said assistant director Mike LaRue. "Animals do pretty well adapting to the heat," he said.

The blistering heat cracked pavement in Wisconsin and Iowa. Des Moines police said a lane of Interstate 235 through the city buckled, one of seven highway breakages reported in the state.

Iowa already has experienced the warmest December-through-May period since 1878, and the June heat wave is a sign that the summer will be a scorcher, said Paul Waite, the state climatologist. "About 70 percent of the time, as June goes, so goes the summer," Waite said.

People who may have been waiting for summer's official beginning on June 21 to buy fans and air conditioners left their humid homes, got into cauldron-like cars and swamped stores.

"I'm having a hard time keeping fans in stock," said Rick DeBartelo, manager of a Zayre Department Store in Chicago. He said he sold 400 to 500 fans within two weeks, about 10 percent more than last year.

Humming air conditioners consumed 2,800 megawatts of electricity in Milwaukee, breaking a summer record set in July 1985, Wisconsin Electric Power Co. said. A spokeswoman said the heat also caused power lines to sag and hit trees, knocking out service temporarily to about 470 customers in suburban Brookfield and Menomonee Falls.

Heavy use of air conditioners tripped circuit breakers at Union Electric Co. substations in Missouri, causing outages for about 9,500 customers in southwestern St. Louis County.

Overloaded equipment also denied about 6,000 customers power in Kansas City, and a blown transformer cut off electricity and blacked out the scoreboard at Royals Stadium.

At Busch Stadium in St. Louis, where officials said the artificial surface sizzled to 110 degrees, about 250 fans were treated for mild heat exhaustion.

School Debate Reaches Critical Stage

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
An AP News Analysis

RALEIGH (AP) — Financing a massive public school construction program would not have become the biggest issue of the 1987 General Assembly had not Gov. Jim Martin made it the centerpiece of his legislative program.

Ironically, however, Martin finds himself sitting on the sidelines as the debate over how to raise the money reaches a critical stage.

Unless he re-enters the picture soon, he risks having virtually no input into whatever compromise the Legislature finally reaches — if indeed the House and Senate can find a mutually acceptable plan.

"By his own actions he's pretty well dealt himself out of the game," Senate Majority Leader Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, said. "It's kind of up to him as to whether he gets back in."

J. Ward Purrington, Martin's chief lobbyist, says the Republican governor has no intention of letting the school construction debate pass him by.

"He's been rallying public support for this since last October," Purrington said. "This is his issue, and he wants a bill. But he can't pass it himself and he can't vote."

Nevertheless, Democratic

lawmakers contend that Martin's ability to influence the assembly on the issue — limited to begin with — has slipped even further in the past couple of weeks.

First there was Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan's surprise announcement June 4 that he was dropping his support for a $1 billion bond issue. Until then, both officials supported the same approach to financing school construction.

Jordan's assistance has proven indispensable to Martin in winning enactment of his major initiatives, even though the two are political enemies and likely will face off in the 1988 gubernatorial race.

Last year, for example, Martin's highway financing program appeared doomed to defeat until he and Jordan hammered out a compromise.

Without Jordan's support, Martin's school bond plan has virtually no chance in the Senate. Prospects are even worse in the House, where Speaker Liston Ramsey and his allies are staunchly opposed.

Secondly, his critics say Martin made a bad situation worse by harshly attacking Jordan for his change of heart. Two days after state GOP chairman Jack Hawke called Jordan a "wimp," Martin labeled him a quitter and said he had "messed things up."

"He (Martin) really burned his bridges with that," Rand said. Indeed, a furious Jordan wasted no time calling a news conference to return the fire, calling Martin a "do-nothing" governor.

Martin described his public criticism as a "two-by-four" designed to get Jordan's attention and rally public support for keeping the bond plan alive.

Of course, relations between Jordan and the House leadership are far from rosy. Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, the House Appropriations Committee chairman and Ramsey's right-hand man, bitterly criticized Jordan after the Senate Finance Committee shot down Watkins' proposed sales tax increase.

But despite the animosity, Jordan and the House leaders are fellow Democrats, and they're still talking. Jordan and Ramsey met privately Thursday night, and negotiations are expected to pick up this week.

Asked what role Martin would have in the quest to hammer out an agreement, Jordan said shortly, "I think that with what he did the last couple of days, he pretty well took himself out of the debate."

Martin, meanwhile, appeared no more eager to talk with Jordan. As developments broke in Raleigh last Thursday, Martin journeyed to Burke County where he continued stumping for his bond plan. He told an audience of students, educators and local officials that if the Legislature couldn't decide between bonds and a tax increase, it should hold a statewide referendum.

Trouble is, legislative leaders insist that a bond issue no longer is on the table and scorn the idea of a referendum.

It would be virtually unprecedented for a governor to be shut out of legislative deliberations over his number-one issue. Purrington vowed last week that Martin would get back into the action. Asked how, Purrington replied, "Wait and see."

Several legislators agreed that for Martin to have any chance of putting his stamp on the finished product, he'll have to redouble his lobbying effort, seek to be a mediator between the House and Senate and be willing to accept a program that doesn't include bonds.

Others, however, predicted he'll keep his distance unless the leadership of at least one chamber reconsiders its opposition to a bond issue.

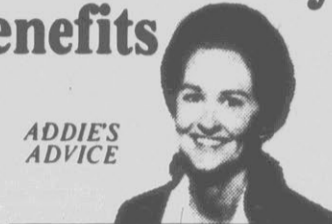

Your Social Security Disability Benefits

BENEFITS DENIED?

Have you been denied benefits under Social Security's disability benefits programs? Do not be discouraged. That happens to most people who apply the first time.

Have you asked for reconsideration of your disability claim and been turned down a second time? Again, don't be discouraged or give up. That's the way the disability system works today.

Take your case one step further and go before a Social Security Administrative Law Judge for a hearing with a qualified representative to present your case. Then the chances of your winning benefits are somewhere between 70% and 80%. The Judge will see you and hear your personal description of your physical or mental illness, and your representative will present your case as it applies to the complex rules of the Social Security Act.

If you have a hearing requested or scheduled before an Administrative Law Judge, call now for an immediate conference. There is no fee for an initial conference to discuss your eligibility for disability.

Think Twice

Just because the Girl Scouts received a permit allowing the discharge of treated sewage from Camp Hardee into the Pamlico River doesn't mean the organization should use this permit.

The Scouts should carefully examine their longtime goal of good environmental citizenship before deciding to pump 25,000 gallons per day of wastewater into the middle of the Pamlico through a pipe.

The organization's dilemma lies in the fact that it wants to expand Camp Hardee to allow more girls to use the facility but cannot do so without a waste disposal system. The land the camp is on isn't suitable for septic tanks, so the treated effluent must be disposed in the river.

It would be difficult to object to expanding a resource that allows young Scouts to experience the beauty and serenity of the Pamlico. But dumping the wastewater in the river raises serious questions of environmental ethics and commitment.

If the organization is true to its founding principles, it will discard both the permit and the idea for this potentially harmful practice. The concept of dumping sewage in the Pamlico is in direct conflict with the long-respected Girl Scout adage to "leave a place better than you find it." If Camp Hardee places effluent in the river, the organization's longstanding environmental stewardship will be broken.

Camp Hardee is an endeavor that teaches youth to enjoy natural resources. Logically, it would be beneficial if more kids experienced this healthy recreation and learned, through this exposure, the value of the environment.

The camp should not be expanded, however, at the expense of a valuable natural resource — the water quality of the Pamlico River. The Girl Scouts, despite receiving the required permit, should abandon the proposal to discharge treated sewage into the river.

Trash Dilemma

"If at first you don't succeed" must be the opening words for the slogan of Islip, New York.

That community spawned the wandering garbage barge that North Carolina did not want some months ago, and still does not want.

Governor Jim Martin received a letter in May from Islip's Supervisor Frank R. Jones asking whether North Carolina could accept "any significant fraction" of the 1,000 tons-per-day of garbage generated at Islip. Jones observed, "as you are probably aware the Town of Islip is in the midst of a severe solid waste disposal crisis."

With typical North Carolina courtesy, Our Man In Raleigh responded to the effect that no, the state could not accept solid waste from the Town of Islip and called attention to state efforts toward establishing alternatives that will minimize landfill disposal of solid waste by the year 2000.

The governor might have said more, but the sad fact is that the United States is running out of space in landfills. More than half the cities will exhaust current landfills in just three years from now.

Recycling is widely held to be the waste management option that holds the greatest potential, but traditionally is given the least attention. Recycling of metals, paper, glass, plastics and organic kitchen waste is slowly increasing but other countries give it much greater attention. Japan, for instance, reputedly recovers half of its discarded paper and is one of the Port of New York's best customers in receiving shipments of waste paper.

As techniques improve, we should expect greater collecting and uses of what we have traditionally viewed as throwaway wastes. It's going to take a lot of cooperation between public and private sectors as well as a national initiative to encourage recycling.

The benefits may well include stronger local economies, lower disposal costs and a cleaner environment.

Reagan And The Irrelevant Summit

VENICE, Italy — The unsatisfying nature of last week's economic summit stems from basic deficiencies of this peculiar institution compounded by the fading vigor of the Reagan administration.

The Venice summit was neither the informal get-together that these conferences were originally supposed to be nor the policy conclave that the international news media has made them out to be. In fact, it was an expensive, ostentatious, boring parade of leaders who, with the exception of the triumphant Margaret Thatcher, probably have seen their best days politically.

That was regrettably true of President Reagan. While, as usual, the dominant summiteer, he had obviously declined since his first such meeting in Ottawa in 1981. His image as leader of an administration in its final months and out of gas fit into the overall irrelevance of Venice.

The summit's most productive accomplishment, taking a modest step toward economic coordination among the seven industrial democracies, was in fact decided weeks ago in private by the finance ministers. The announcement by the heads of government was a mere formality.

But those leaders could have advanced beyond what their Cabinet ministers had agreed upon. Instead, no economic controversy that might prove disagreeable was raised. The economic summit goes the medieval Polish diet one better. If there is one serious objection, a proposal is not even debated, much less adopted.

West Germany would permit no teeth in the statement condemning farm subsidies. The Germans and British balked at policing economic coordination. The Germans and Japanese were not about to ratify all-out economic growth. So, nobody forced any issue.

But what about the heads of government talking over these questions informally, as originally intended, without trying for agreements? The problem is that when the leaders did talk in private, they hardly engaged the serious economic questions confronting the non-communist world.

French President Francois Mitterrand, who has become dependably didactic and garrulous at these meetings, monopolized the time in a debate over free-market economics with Prime Minister Thatcher. Reagan stressed the American record of job creation and urged the Europeans to remove "rigidities" from their systems that hamstring employers. Mitterrand and Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone delivered their obligatory annual complaints against American budget deficits.

Nobody could claim this desultory "debate" advanced the serious business of international economic reform. While Reagan is always eloquent declaiming the merits of the free market, his advisers wince when he ventures into the dangerous terrain of global economics.

The president almost inadvertently upset the clear intent of the G-7 finance ministers to guard against a further drop in the dollar. In his closing press conference, Reagan said absent-mindedly he thought the dollar might yet fall a bit more. The irrelevance of government leaders is demonstrated by the fact that currency markets virtually ignored the president's statement.

The summit was no more productive on non-economic questions. The vanilla-flavored statement on ending the Iraq-Iran war and guaranteeing free navigation in the Persian Gulf was adopted after no debate and could have been opposed by no world leader this side of the Ayatollah Khomeini.

But if the summiteers would not act decisively, neither were any of them permitted to grandstand. Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, badly in need of a boost back home, was slapped down when he made the mistake of seeking a resolution denouncing South African apartheid.

The one moment of relevance in Venice might have come during the opening-night dinner. The seven leaders talked well past midnight, comparing impressions of Mikhail Gorbachev. How relevant their ideas were may never be known for they dined without Cabinet members or personal aides present. But at the least, here were world leaders talking about serious matters without a predigested communique to be distributed to 3,000 members of the world news media gathered for their exercise in irrelevance.

Back At Home, Reagan Faces Problems

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, winning no major victories nor suffering any big defeats at the Venice summit, now confronts the challenge of a spreading menu of problems likely to shape the way history records the dwindling months of his administration. Even for the ever-optimistic Reagan, the issues are formidable: the explosive Persian Gulf, arms control, the staggering budget deficit, huge trade imbalances and the unknowns of the Iran-Contra hearings in Congress.

In the background are suggestions that Reagan is losing his grip on the presidency and that the new managers at the White House are not as sure-footed as once believed.

Clearly, the president did not pack as much clout in Venice as he did a year earlier in Tokyo, where he won a tough anti-terrorism statement aimed at Libya and an allied commitment — for the first time — to begin work to dismantle agricultural subsidies.

This year, his hand weakened by the secret sale of arms to Iran in violation of an allied embargo, Reagan did not push for much, settling for broadly worded statements on economic issues and diplomatic support — but no military help — in the gulf.

"It's good rhetoric" but "it looks like we're going to get no real commitment from our allies to meet their responsibility ... to defend their own interests," said Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas.

"Why aren't they there, standing beside us? Why aren't they sharing the burden, sharing the risks?" Dole demanded.

What will the United States do if a U.S.-flagged ship is attacked in the gulf? Will America retaliate if a ship is sunk?

— Jim Hoagland —

U.S. Needs To Develop More Realistic Oil Policy

VENICE — The only thing that has been flowing more rapidly than the Reagan administration's cries of alarm about the Persian Gulf in recent weeks has been the supply of oil being shipped from that region.

Production and exports from gulf countries are up, prices are holding steady at $18 a barrel and OPEC is due to meet in two weeks to consider notching upward its 15.8 million barrel a day ceiling on total production.

When the gap between the rhetoric of alarm about oil supplies and their abundance in the market place gets this wide, it is time to start looking for a hidden agenda. The administration acts as if it has seized on a passing moment of tension to accomplish long-held goals that it cannot articulate openly.

My sense is that behind the smokescreen over Iran's Chinese Silkorm missiles lies a tangle of regional and global objectives that this administration will not be able to integrate into a successful policy in its twilight days.

More to the point, that is the sense of our most important allies, who were puzzled by the Reagan team's dramatic presentation of the stakes of the gulf conflict in public in the days before the Venice economic summit and that same team's diffident presentation of the issue in private here.

"It was pure Kabuki," said a senior European official as the summit closed, "all motion, with no clear message, much less a plan of action."

Three elements of the White House's true agenda seem clear. One is a campaign of coercive diplomacy aimed at getting Iran to stop attacking Iraq and to withdraw from Iraqi territory.

Laudable, the goal of ending the gulf war is also probably unattainable by this lame-duck administration. As they waited for Reagan to become president before freeing American hostages, the Iranians will wait for a stronger deal maker in Washington.

Secondly, the driving force behind the Silkorm campaign almost certainly comes from the Pentagon, which has long dreamed of getting basing rights at Dhahran in Saudi Arabia. A fleet of aerial refueling tankers positioned there would allow U.S. carrier-based fighters and attack planes to cover the gulf and the arc stretching past Ethiopia to North Africa that the Carter administration called the "Crescent of Crisis."

Saudi Arabia's royal family has always resisted this demand, fearing the political burden of an open military alliance with Israel's closest friend. Much of the recent banging of the war drum has been to bring the Saudis around on Dhahran.

Finally, modest Soviet gains with Arab states have enabled Middle East experts in Washington to wrap their regional goals into a broader formulation about halting the Russian push into the Middle East.

Again, the result has been the opposite of what is intended. The administration's declarations on the gulf have underscored the reactive, me-too nature of its regional policy and the lack of sustainable independent American goals.

The administration in fact presents itself as being slow to apprehend that the oil trade has become suprisingly resilient in operating under war conditions.

Strength For Today

There are no sharp stones on the sands of the seashore. Even broken bits of glass and shell lose their cutting edge on the beach. Pebbles are rounded.

And why? Attrition does it. Ceaselessly, the waves roll one edge against the other, till all are worn smooth. This is what the strong waves of adversity and experience do to human lives. They round out characters and remove rough edges. Trouble teaches. People who have lived long and known adversity are the easiest to live with. Their obtrusive, cutting edges are gone.

More than pebbles on the beach are involved in this figure. Building stones for the temple of God are similarly rounded out. It takes the rough and tumble life and adversity to smooth and polish human spirits until they are fit to use in God's great building of life.

12 Arrested At Two Klan Marches In State

By The Associated Press
The leader of two Ku Klux Klan marches in Durham and Chapel Hill over the weekend said both walks were aimed at attracting members, but the marches enticed obscenities and jeers from onlookers and produced 12 arrests, authorities said.

Virgil Griffin, Imperial Wizard of the Christian Knights, said the Durham march, in which 63 Klansmen participated in Sunday, was a Klan membership drive. "I'll think we'll get recruits," Griffin said. "If we didn't think we could recruit members, we wouldn't be here."

However, officers confiscated 15 guns, a stun baton and several knives from Klansmen as they attempted to enter a cordoned-off area to prepare for the Durham march.

Durham Police Lt. A. M. Steele said the Klan's parade permit said that no weapons would be permitted at the rally.

At least three of those arrested were Klansmen, authorities said. Two were charged with weapons violations and the third person was cited for an alcohol-related offense, Steele said.

Three people were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct when the march moved to Chapel Hill, Capt. Ralph Pendergraph of the Chapel Hill Police Department.

There were no reports of personal injury, authorities said.

A crowd of white teen-agers shouted "White Power! White Power!" as they walked along the Durham parade route. They were followed by some black teen-agers chanting, "Rednecks, rednecks!"

About 125 protesters stood in silence wearing checkered arm bands, as Klan members marched.

The Rev. Stuart Milton, a Methodist preacher, said it especially hurt him to see one of the Klan members waving a Bible. "He obviously never reads it," Milton said.

Before the parade started, five men were arrested as they tried to enter the cordoned-off area across from Durham City Hall, police said.

About 150 police officers dressed in riot gear maintained order along the 2½-mile parade route on the Durham street and from rooftops.

In Chapel Hill, Pendergraph said one person hit a Klansman with an egg as an estimated 2,000 people lined the parade route and heckled the approximately 40 marchers. It was the first time the KKK had marched in Chapel Hill since 1963.

Pendergraph said about 100 law enforcement officers from local agencies were at the march, along with the SBI, which assisted with crowd control.

Some protesters, carrying signs and banners with anti-Klan slogans, trailed the marchers throughout the half-hour demonstration, shouting insults and obscenities past the uniformed officers who separated the contingents.

Earlier, at a large anti-Klan rally at the First Baptist Church, organizers had urged those in attendance to go home or "go to the beach" rather than attend the march.

"Let the Klan march down our streets," University of North Carolina Student Body President Bryan Bailey told the crowd. "But let the streets be as empty as possible."

Candidates Vying For Posts

RALEIGH (AP) — For the 16 candidates vying for the eight University of North Carolina Board of Governors' seats, this week marks the beginning of the end of months of intense campaigning, and possibly horse-trading.

Although a veneer of refinement surrounds the selection process, candidates and legislators alike concede political considerations often determine selections, something planners of the system 15 years ago say they had hoped to avoid.

Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, a legislative veteran and thoughtful observer of the selection process, says that what's normal for considering individual bills should not carry over into choosing university stewards.

"It should stand separate and apart," he said of the selection process. "But because the legislative process involves negotiation, compromise and reconsideration, it's difficult for them not to become mixed."

The most organized horse-trading involves the legislature's Republican and black caucuses. The two groups interview candidates and, by bloc voting, often can swing elections.

"We can become the margin of victory for a candidate," said House Minority Leader Betsy Cochrane, R-Davie. "That's a lot of power."

The Board of Governors was established in 1972 when the state's public colleges and universities merged into a consolidated, 16-campus system. Eight-year terms were created for board members in an attempt to distance the positions from politics. However, observers say it hasn't worked out that way.

Sam Poole, a Southern Pines lawyer who works as an adviser to Sen. Terry Sanford in Washington, won a seat on the board four years ago. He compares the process to running for county commissioner.

"You try to talk to every voter you can," he said in an interview with the Greensboro News & Record. "You talk about what you can do for the board, what your interests are, what you can contribute — understanding these are all political."

The General Assembly elects eight Board of Governors members every two years with an explicit quota guaranteeing at least one woman, one black and one Republican a seat each round. This quintessentially political process culminates in a secret-ballot vote — the only one left in the legislature.

Formal nominations close Wednesday. The House and Senate committees that screen the candidates are expected to begin meeting next week, and after the committees finish — recommending two candidates for each slot — the final secret-ballot vote in the full House and Senate will be held.

Fishermen Plan Convoy To Save Oregon Inlet

WANCHESE, N.C. (AP) — Some scientists and environmentalists say a project to build a pair of mile-long jetties would not protect Oregon Inlet from shoaling, but instead would dangerously accelerate the erosion of nearby beaches and wildlife preserves.

However, about 100 fishermen whose livelihoods have been threatened by the dangerous shoals that have blocked the inlet for much of the past season disagree. The fishermen say they're organizing a so-called "frustration flotilla" of trawlers to cruise up the Potomac River this fall to lobby for legislation to have the jetties built.

M.P. Daniels, president of the Oregon Inlet Users Association, said the fishermen plan to sail in a convoy from Wanchese to the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay and up the Potomac. They plan to arrive in Washington on Sept. 15 to coincide with committee hearings on the jetty bill.

"We want to show them we are serious about this," Daniels said. "We're going to throw a cookout on the dock for the members of the House and Senate and let them see our boats."

Show Continues After Page's Death

NEW YORK (AP) — The saddened cast of "Blithe Spirit" went on with the show after Geraldine Page's death, dedicating the Broadway comedy to the Oscar-winning actress best known for portraying Tennessee Williams' neurotic heroines.

"Geraldine would probably be saying something like, 'Get on with it — get on with the show,'" said director Brian Murray as he announced Miss Page's death to the audience before the Sunday matinee.

Miss Page, winner of a 1986 Academy Award for her role in the film "A Trip to Bountiful," died of a heart attack Saturday in her townhouse, the city medical examiner's office said. She was 62.

She had been appearing on Broadway as the madcap medium in the revival of Noel Coward's comedy with Richard Chamberlain, Blythe Danner and Judith Ivey.

A spokesman for the show, Josh Ellis, said a memorial service was planned for Wednesday at the Neil Simon Theater.

Miss Page had missed both performances Saturday at the theater, and her understudy, Patricia Conolly, went on. The comedy, which opened in March, will continue its run, scheduled to end July 19, Ellis said.

"Gerry's death is a devastating loss to the theater and film community," the play's producers, Karl Allison, Douglas Urbanski and Sandra Moss, said in a statement. "We have lost a dear member of the 'Blithe Spirit' company and we will miss her gentle manner, sweet disposition and her delicious sense of humor."

Chamberlain called Miss Page's death "a terrible loss to us, to the play, to the world of theater."

"She could be deeply touching, hilariously funny — she could do anything. She was a sweet person, childlike."

"It's a shock to us to have lost one of the greatest actresses the world has ever known," Miss Danner said.

Although Miss Page won an Oscar last year after seven unsuccessful nominations, she was best known as a theater actress. She created a galaxy of unforgettable characters on stage.

Audiences and critics first noticed Miss Page in 1952 in the landmark, off-Broadway revival of Williams' "Summer and Smoke" in which she played Alma Winemiller, a sexually frustrated spinster who succumbs to promiscuity. The drama, which had flopped on Broadway four years before, was one of the earliest successes of the fledgling off-Broadway movement.

The following year, she made her Broadway debut in "Midsummer," a sentimental drama by Vina Delmar. Her performance as Lily, the idealistic, illiterate heroine so impressed theatergoers that the producers raised her to star billing during the 109-performance run.

Among her other major roles were Marcelline, the wife of a homosexual in "The Immoralist" (1954), an adaptation of the Andre Gide novel; Lizzy Curry, the forlorn spinster whose life is transformed.

Hollings Gets Weak Response

WASHINGTON (AP) — South Carolina Sen. Ernest F. Hollings is getting a skeptical reception to his deliberations about another run at the Democratic presidential nomination.

"Why he would want to subject himself to that abuse all over again is hard to explain," said former New Hampshire party chairman George Bruno.

"I cannot imagine why he would go through another presidential campaign," said the Democrats' national party spokesman, Terry Michael.

But Fritz Hollings, who finished far back in the pack in the early 1984 contests, is indeed contemplating a 1988 race, lured by the Super Tuesday cluster of primaries and caucuses in his native South and also by a playing field leveled by the political demise of Gary Hart.

Hollings himself says only, "I've been looking at it." This acknowledgement is a giant step forward from his reaction a few weeks earlier when press secretary Mike Fernandez allowed that his boss was considering 1988. "What?" Hollings said, "Mike's crazy as hell."

Hollings' longtime friend, Don Fowler, said, "I don't think he's playing games with anybody. ... He is thinking about it and I'm reasonably certain he hasn't made any decision nor is he in any hurry to make a decision."

Fowler said many former Hart supporters are encouraging Hollings to join the race. He said Hollings would bring with him name identity from 1984 so he wouldn't "have to go around beating the bushes for two years."

Hollings poured his time and money in 1984 into New Hampshire, site of the nation's first primary. Despite spending 70 days campaigning there, he finished sixth out of eight. That followed a last-place finish in Iowa's caucuses.

Not that he wasn't a serious candidate.

"I thought he was one of the most thoughtful and entertaining candidates in the race. In fact, I voted for him," Bruno said. "But his accent certainly had an unusual ring in the ears of many New Hampshire Yankees."

Manchester lawyer Joseph Millmet, who served as Hollings' New Hampshire campaign director, said the wide-open Democratic field sans Hart must be a temptation to Hollings. And he pointed out that the issues on which Hollings ran in 1984 — the national deficit and trade problems — are emerging as major themes for 1988.

Indeed, Hollings' call for an across-the-board budget cut to reduce the deficit eventually became a law, popularly known as Gramm-Rudman.

Mixed Bag For The Baby Boomers

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the rapidly maturing members of the Baby Boom generation, a comfortable income may well depend on marriage, but it won't be all wedded bliss with half divorcing and one-third marrying twice, a population expert predicts.

"Marriage will polarize the lifestyles of the middle-aged in the next few decades," Cheryl Russell reports in the new book "100 Predictions for the Baby Boom: The Next 50 Years."

"The married and remarried will be comfortable, and many will have money to spare; the single or divorced will find it hard to make ends meet because one person's income is no longer enough to pay for the most important trapping of a middle-class lifestyle — a home of one's own," she writes.

Government and private studies have documented the growing importance of the two-earner family in recent years, with at least one study concluding that marriage is more important to a person's wallet than education or job skills.

"The best insurance for affluence is a marriage certificate," concludes Russell, editor of American Demographics magazine, a publication specializing in population topics.

The magazine, published by Dow Jones & Co. Inc., pays close attention to how population changes affect business. As a result, Russell has tracked closely that massive group of Americans born in the 15 years after World War II.

The group first overwhelmed makers of baby goods and then the nation's schools, while creating a giant new market for toys and then teen-ager's goods. It swept into young adulthood by swamping high schools and colleges and now is standing on the verge of middle age.

Baby boomers have not followed the traditional pattern of marriage and family, preferring to pursue educations and careers and confounding statisticians and population experts.

Now Russell, drawing on her work as an editor and student of population, looks at what these millions of young people have done so far and projects their actions into the future.

Her report that marriage will be an important factor in financial well-being, already occurring, is extended in the book with other marital predictions, including:

- Baby-boom men will be as dependent on marriage as baby-boom women.
- Fewer than one-fifth of baby-boom women will spend their lives as housewives.
- A baby-boom marriage will last 23 years, on average.
- One baby-boomer in six will have to children. One baby-boomer in 10 will wish she had children.
- Record numbers of baby-boom women will have children without a husband.
- Most of the baby boom's children will see their parents divorce.
- In addition to predicting family life and income conditions, Russell takes on a variety of other issues.

For example, she predicts that by 1995, some 80 percent of baby-boom women will have jobs outside the home. In 20 years, one-third of the nation's doctors, lawyers and business managers will be women, she says.

But by the year 2000, women still will earn only about three-quarters of men's income.

As baby boomers hunt for jobs, fringe benefits will be as important as salary, she says, and on average, members of this generation will have 10 different jobs during their working lives.

Most baby boomers will fall into the middle class, she anticipates, with one family in four making $50,000 or more by 1995. Forty percent of baby boom households will have money to spend on luxuries, she says.

The baby boom will keep the stock market volatile for the rest of this century, Russell predicts, but the affluent boomers will be those who get out of debt.

Baby boom vacations will be shorter, but more frequent than is common now. They will do a lot of shopping by mail and this will hurt shopping malls. Boomers will buy imports and will help create a new industry that will sell them "experiences," Russell reports.

In middle age, the boomers will become more conservative and will polarize into two camps — the fundamentalists and the non-religious. But most will wind up somewhere in between.

Eight out of 10 boomers will live to age 65, but most will retire before then, she says. Like many Americans, Social Security will account for the largest share of their retirement income, although two-thirds will get some pension benefits.

Baby boomers will not be able to save enough on their own for a comfortable retirement, she predicts, but those who live only for today will wind up elderly paupers.

Most boomers will feel fat in middle age and they will create a boom in plastic surgery as they spend the rest of their lives trying to look young, Russell says.

In old age, medical bills will be their largest single expense, many will buy nursing home insurance and 1 million boomers will live to age 100 or more.

"The baby boom will not grow old gracefully," Russell concludes, "The hysteria has already begun."

Two Die In Shootout

PLEASANT VALLEY, N.Y. (AP) — A shootout between a shotgun-wielding man and two state troopers has left the gunman and one officer dead and the other officer critically wounded, authorities said today.

The man opened fire late Sunday after Trooper Robert Dunning and Sgt. Robert Garzetta responded to a call about a man driving around with a shotgun, said Lt. Michael T. Wright, a police spokesman.

The troopers spoke to him briefly about 30 feet away from his pickup, and he then apparently got out of the truck, authorities said.

"They attempted to talk to him to get him to put the gun down," said another spokesman, Sgt. Dennis Cody, but the man opened fire.

The first shot hit Dunning in the chest, Cody said, quoting Garzetta, who was struck in the leg.

Couple Marries Sunday

The wedding ceremony of Alisha Dai McLawhorn of Greenville and Thomas Nathaniel Boggess of White Stone, Va., was held Sunday at 3 p.m. in The Memorial Baptist Church.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Jesse G. McLawhorn of Greenville and Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Boggess of Wrightstown, N.J. The father of the bridegroom conducted the ceremony.

Best man was Robert Boggess Jr. of Loma Linda, Calif., brother of the bridegroom. Maid of honor was Marilyn Ann Blake of Raeford.

Bridesmaids were Marianne Boggess of Praireville, La., sister of the bridegroom, Alice Harrison and Jill Harrison, both cousins of the bride from Greenville. Dori Beth Boggess of Loma Linda, Calif., niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl.

Groomsmen were Chris Juhl of Calhoun, Ga.; Shawn McLawhorn of Greenville, brother of the bride, and John David Boggess of Trenton, N.J., brother of the bridegroom. Bible boy was James Matthew Bunzey of Bracey, Va.

The wedding was directed by Katherine Vinson.

Organist was John Goodwin and soloist was Wendy Pega. Selections included "I Need Thee Every Hour," "God Knew My Need" and "The Lord's Prayer."

Given in marriage by her parents, the bride wore a gown accented with ruffles and lace. The close-fitting bodice had a lace-trimmed ruffled neckline with a stand-up collar and sheer illusion net front and back yokes. Schiffl embroidery, sequins and simulated pearls accented the front yoke. The puffed sleeves had elasticized lace-trimmed flounces and Venise lace accented the waistline. Small ruffles of chantilly-type lace trimmed the skirt and chapel length train. She wore a floral bridal headpiece accented with polyester flowers and simulated pearls to which was attached a nylon net fingertip veil and blusher accented with chantilly-type lace.

The attendants each wore a yellow satin tea length dress accented with a yellow cummerbund and trimmed in white lace. The dress was enhanced with a lace jacket. The main of honor carried three long-stemmed yellow roses with baby's breath, greenery and ribbons. The bridesmaids carried a single long-stemmed yellow rose with baby's breath, greenery and ribbon.

The flower girl wore a gown of yellow dotted Swiss with a high ruffled yoke accented with lace at the neckline, full puffed sleeves, a double tiered full skirt and a yellow satin bow at the waistline.

A reception was given by the bride's parents in the church reception hall. Merrilee Harrison poured punch and Kathy Gray cut cake. Elsie and Bob Tyson greeted guests.

The bride is a senior elementary education major at Columbia Union College, Tacoma Park, Md. The bridegroom, a graduate of Columbia Union College, is a minister of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church at Gloucester and Kilmarnock, Va.

MRS. BOGCESS

An after-rehearsal dinner was hosted by the parents of the bridegroom at the Pizza Inn. Several showers were given in honor of the couple.

Street-Skating Duo Gives New Meaning To Rock, Roll

By MICHEL MARRIOTT Philadelphia Daily News PHILADELPHIA (AP) — He works in houseworking at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania. She's a litigations attorney for a distinguished Center City law firm.

He grew up in the rowhouse ravines of South Philadelphia, she in a rambling Philadelphia suburb cradled by lush lawns and shade trees.

He's black. She's white. Together, their differences blur into a whirl of roller-skating mastery, show biz sparkle and style.

Clyde "Ice" McCoy and Lisa Campolo are High Energy, a street-skating duo whose dance moves on wheels are giving new meaning to rock and roll.

For more than a year, they have glided, hopped and high-stepped side by side at Center City parades, festivals, nightclubs and, just for fun, along the smooth concrete plains of Penns Landing, where they met on skates.

Last year, Campolo made a cameo appearance in a "Webster" television special while skating in New York's Central Park. "Unfortunately," McCoy explained, "I had to work that day."

Recently, Campolo and McCoy set their oversized tape player on a nearby park bench in Rittenhouse Square, turned up the music, and click-clacked out a 15-minute dance routine on the brick walk.

Within seconds, the curious edged closer. A few stopped to take pictures. A half-dozen lurching workers gawked in wonderment and surprise at McCoy and Campolo's spins, toe-taps, flips and splits.

"All we need is a box (portable cassette tape player) and a flat area," said Campolo, 26, dressed in black spandex tights and a torch-red top. "The people will gather around."

Campolo said she enjoyed the attention and the physical discipline skating required.

When she's not in tights and skates, she is usually dressed in business clothes and low heels and toiling in the law offices of Drinker, Biddle & Reath.

Long interested in modern dance, she said she had discovered roller-skating in a dance class 2 1/2 years ago while a student at the University of Pennsylvania Law School. At first it was simply a novelty, a way to translate dance movements to skates.

"They know I skate," Campolo said of her law firm colleagues. "They see me with my roller skates and they see me do my thing. They never put any pressure on me."

McCoy, the youngest in a family of four sons and a daughter, has a slightly different story.

Also interested in dance, he was never formally trained, but danced with several neighborhood groups. A good skater most of his life, McCoy said he had started putting dance moves to wheels about seven years ago when he saw a friend doing it.

He and his girlfriend at the time worked up an act. But when they broke up, he said, so did the act.

Through skating and sharing a skill and a determination to perfect it, the hospital worker and the lawyer say they have found commonality. They say they know that when they skate, the laws of physics treat them the same. Color, income, background and job titles are meaningless.

McCoy and Campolo say because of their busy work schedules they usually get to skate together only once a week. He works at night and she works during the day.

Because their skate-dancing depends so much on their movements in unison, Campolo said the two of them had worked out a "vocabulary of moves." What that means, said McCoy, is that he calls out names of skate movements while they skate.

Since all the moves are done to an eight-count beat, McCoy and Campolo say they usually are able to move like one body.

The Chilean ship Itata sank during a 1920 storm off Cipumbo, killing 301 persons.

Friends Seeking Free Advice Forget Time Is Also Money

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to a letter from a police officer's wife regarding neighbors and friends who call her husband while he's off duty, and ask him to come and help when a police officer is needed.

I am a physician's wife (and a nurse), and my husband has the same problem. We have neighbors and friends who phone or come in at all hours of the night and day seeking a free diagnosis or prescriptions. My husband is too nice (or spineless) to refuse, or to ask them to call his office and make an appointment.

He's only mildly annoyed, but I am very resentful of these people. My husband and I have very little time together and his off-duty time should be just that. Most of these "friends" and neighbors have their "regular" doctors (whom they pay), but they wouldn't dare to bother them other than at regular hours.

Maybe some of your readers who are physicians, or in other "people professions," could suggest a way to deal with these inconsiderate boos. Thanks. — THE DOCTOR'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Lawyers have the same problem. A very prominent lawyer (who was also a judge) told me that when friends telephone him at his home seeking free legal advice, he says, "First, I want you to know that I charge $50 a minute." One woman who had called him replied, "Forget it. When I was a call girl I never charged that much."

DEAR ABBY: My 55-year-old sister is slightly retarded. I wonder if

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

I should mention this ahead of time when we're going to be with people who have never met her. Perhaps they would be more understanding. They look so surprised when she interrupts them with childlike remarks unrelated to our conversation. She seems to be treated better when people are aware of her problem.

I have tried to teach her to be a good listener, to act interested in what others say, but like all children, she has her mind only on herself, so I've given up on this. What do you think? — SAD IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR SAD: It would be a kindness to your sister if you "prepared" people ahead of time. And I'm sure those whom you make aware of the problem will also appreciate it.

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for your advice to "Indiana Mother" who objected to giving condoms to teenagers. You were right to remind her that sex with the wrong partner just once could be a death sentence — and better safe than sorry.

But more important, what kind of moral values have these children been taught at home if they can be ignored just because someone hands them a free condom?

Does "Indiana Mother" think that her children are so ignorant they didn't know that condoms existed, and could be bought at the local drug or grocery store? Or does she think that one free condom will cause them to rush out and find a sex partner?

Teaching teen-agers to say "no" to sex is like teaching them to say "no" to food. It'll work until they get hungry. — TYLER SARLOW, FORT WORTH, TEXAS

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Josephine Rawl Entertained

New officers of the Benevolent Circle will be installed in September. The covered-dish luncheon meeting will take place at the home of Kay Moore.

Save Cash While Keeping Cool

Homemaker's Haven

Evelyn Spangler Pitt County Extension Agent

Is there any advantage to letting the air conditioner or heat pump fan run all the time (the "on" setting on the thermostat) instead of periodically (the "auto" or "automatic" setting on the thermostat)?

According to the Air Conditioning and Refrigeration Institute, when you live in a very humid climate, you may not want to run the fan continuously because this reduces dehumidification. Otherwise, there are some potential advantages.

Continuously circulating the air keeps the temperature more even throughout the house by alleviating temperature stratification. It keeps air circulating through the comfort system's air filter, which — depending on filter type and efficiency — can keep the home cleaner and the air fresher to breathe. When the fan is operating continuously, the compressor continues to periodically cycle on and off automatically to cool and dehumidify home just as it does on the "auto" setting.

However, although running the fan alone takes much less energy than when the compressor is also operating, you may want to get a good idea of what it will cost. To estimate the cost, you can check with your comfort system contractor to determine approximately how much energy the fan uses, then multiply that times your estimated hours of separate use, times your local electric rate.

For example, if during the cooling season your compressor runs about six hours a day, that leaves a maximum of 18 hours a day for one month (18 hours x 30 days equals 540 hours), and your local electric rate is seven cents per kilowatt hour, your cost (540 hours x .07 x .75 kw) is $28.35 for one month, or about 95 cents a day.

Obviously you can cut this cost considerably by running the fan alone for shorter periods of time whenever you feel the need for more air circulation independent of the overall cooling and dehumidifying operation.

Should I augment my central air conditioning system with window air conditioners or ceiling fans?

If you need to use window air conditioners with a central air conditioning system, your central system probably is undersized or the air distribution system is imbalanced. However, window air conditioners are sometimes an acceptable supplement if rooms are used infrequently and the cost of correcting central system deficiencies is too high.

Ceiling fans can be a good idea with some indoor comfort systems because they circulate air that tends to stagnate at the top of rooms with high ceilings.

If you use only window air conditioners, be sure all central warm air registers are closed.

SUPERMARKET FOR SPOTTING SUPPLIES

Here's an opportunity to "let your fingers do the walking". Look in the yellow pages under "Janitorial Suppliers", and you should find several who can assist in creating a spotting kit.

While there, look over his other products. You'll discover many items available for home maintenance; and because they're packaged in gallons, they may be less expensive than grocery store products. Basic tools for spotting include a carrying tray, spotting brush, flip-top spotting bottles, an old spoon and some white absorbent towels.

Chemical requirements include: first, a volatile (evaporates completely leaving no residue), dry (as in dry-cleaning) solvent (designed to dissolve oil, grease, tar, asphalt, gums, fresh paints, etc.). This dry-solvent spotter is available at grocery, variety and hardware stores. Second, a neutral detergent solution is needed. This solution can be made from almost any detergent safe for fine fabrics, or specialty spotters are available at your grocer. Forget the general-purpose kitchen cleaners—they're usually too harsh for carpet dyes. General procedures for the use of spotters include: (1). Use only enough chemical to wet contaminated face yarns. Excess dry solvent weakens adhesives used in carpet backings. (2). Tamp (lightly tap, never scrub) the spot with your spotting brush. (3). Blot and observe for transfer to your towel. As long as this transfer takes place, repeat 1-3 patiently. (4). When no more transfer takes place, blot the remaining spotter and proceed with another type if appropriate. (5). Use dry solvents first, followed by water-based spotters. (6). When as much of the spot as possible is removed, place a one-inch-thick layer of towels over it and weight it down with a heavy object. Then allow drying overnight. Excess chemical "wicks" out of the carpet into the towels, and no residue remains to create future spots.

Remember, the best insurance against permanent discolorations on your carpet is a prepared, knowledgeable homemaker....that's you!

Medical Program Grads

Two area residents are recent graduates of a new medical dosimetry program offered by East Carolina University through the ECU School of Medicine.

Connie E. Childress and G. Reid Munford completed the nine-month certificate program, which prepares individuals for work in this subspecialty of radiation oncology.

With the radiation physicist, the dosimetrist is responsible for planning the radiation treatment, calculating and measuring the appropriate radiation dose, and assuring the quality of the treatment.

The medical dosimetry program is conducted by the Department of Radiation Oncology at the School of Medicine in conjunction with the ECU Division of Continuing Medical Education and is one of only seven programs in the United States. It was initiated last fall under the direction of radiation oncology faculty members James L. Naves, Dr.

Charles E. Nelson and Dr. Charles W. Scarantino. Naves explained that applicants to the program must be certified Radiation Therapy Technologists or hold the minimum of a baccalaureate degree in the physical or biologic sciences. Receipt of the ECU certificate acknowledges the completion of a significant level of training in the field, he said, and is recognized as the minimum qualification for certification by the American Association of Medical Dosimetrists.

Pontiff Says Goodbye

when the Communists took power after World War II. Cuba and Yugoslavia are the only Communist countries to have formal ties with the Vatican.

The pope also met in Warsaw Sunday with leaders of Poland's dwindling Jewish community. He told them the Nazi Holocaust should be a warning to all mankind.

The visit marked the first time in his three pilgrimages to Poland that John Paul had held an exclusive audience with Polish Jews.

On Saturday, two senior Polish officials complained to the Vatican about the tone of some of John Paul's speeches in Poland.

The pontiff expressed strong support for the banned Solidarity labor movement throughout his trip. After a Mass in Gdansk on Friday, more than 10,000 people marched in the strongest show of support for Solidarity in two years.

The Solidarity leadership issued a statement after the pope left saying his visit had been a "source of inspiration" for its struggle for freedom and human rights.

Jaruzelski had expressed hope that John Paul's visit would contribute to his program of "national reconciliation," which aims to unite a nation still scarred by the crushing of Solidarity during the 1981-83 martial law period. But the pontiff expressed no support publicly for the government.

"Jaruzelski was looking for some kind of verbal approval from the pope, and he did not get it," said a senior lay Catholic journalist, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Impact Irrelevant

defendant is accused of a crime that carries the death penalty.

Such state laws are intended to examine the impact on both the victim and, particularly in cases in which the victim is killed, on family members. Today's ruling applies only to those cases in which the defendant faces possible execution.

Today's ruling is a victory for civil rights groups who argue that the statements in capital cases are inflammatory and prejudicial.

But victims' rights organizations said society has an important stake in meting out the harshest penalties in retribution for the harm done to families of those killed.

Joining Powell in the majority today were Justices William J. Brennan, Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens.

The dissenters were Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Byron R. White and Antonin Scalia.

"There is nothing aberrant in a juror's inclination to hold a murderer accountable ... for the full extent of the harm he caused," White said in an opinion joined by the other three dissenters.

In the Maryland case, John Booth was sentenced to die for robbing and killing Irvin Bronstein, 78, and his wife, Rose, 75, at their Baltimore home on May 18, 1983.

Each victim was stabbed in the chest 12 times and was bound and gagged. Police said Booth and an accomplice were looking for money to buy heroin.

The jury that sentenced Booth to die heard evidence of the psychological impact the crime had on the Bronsteins' son, daughter, son-in-law and granddaughter.

The son, who discovered his parents' bodies, said he suffers from a lack of sleep and is unable to drive in the neighborhood where his parents lived. He said he feels that his parents were not merely killed,

Lakers Stop Celts, Claim NBA Title

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Although his image of calm confidence never wavered, Pat Riley admitted he had been rattled by a persistent, unnerving thought.

The Los Angeles coach was scared the Lakers were going to let the 1987 NBA title slip away.

"I know I kept saying all the right things, but there's always doubt in your mind that something's going to get stolen from you," Riley said Sunday. "I told the players that what happened to us in 1983 (when the Lakers were swept by Philadelphia in the finals) would be hero worship compared to what would happen if we let this thing get away."

Moments earlier, the Lakers had eased their coach's mind, beating the Boston Celtics 106-93 to win the 1987 Championship Series 4-2.

"I'm glad it's over," said the relieved Riley. "You really begin to feel the pressure. As the favorite, we were in a no-win situation."

"It's a natural phenomenon. The squeeze begins to get to you."

The "squeeze" was a pair of confidence-shaking losses for the Lakers, sandwiched around a one-point win in Boston Garden that let the Celtics fight their way back into the series.

Los Angeles, which had the league's best regular-season record and breezed through the Western Conference playoffs, virtually had been conceded the league title heading into the finals against the weary, wounded Celtics, who were extended to the limit by Detroit in the Eastern Conference finals.

Then, after lopsided victories in the opening two games left them looking invincible, the Lakers traveled to Boston. Suddenly they looked like a team in danger of choking.

Although the Lakers were back home at the Forum for Game 6 and a possible Game 7 by virtue of their 65-17 regular-season record, the first half Sunday resembled the contests at Boston Garden, with the Celtics controlling the tempo.

But, after trailing 56-51 at halftime, the Lakers finally got their fast break working in the third quarter, outscoring the Celtics 30-12 to take command.

Magic Johnson finished the clinching game with 19 assists, 16 points and eight rebounds and collected the Most Valuable Player award — becoming the first player to win it three times since the award's inception in 1969.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the Lakers' 40-year-old center, scored a team-high 32 points and blocked four shots despite being limited to 29 minutes due to foul trouble.

James Worthy broke out of a shooting slump with a 10-of-16 performance and had 22 points. Reserve Mychal Thompson, hailed as the missing piece to the puzzle when he was acquired from San Antonio during the off-season, had 15 points and nine rebounds while spelling Abdul-Jabbar.

The Celtics were led by Dennis Johnson, who had 33 points and 10 rebounds, and Kevin McHale with 20 points and 10 rebounds. However, Larry Bird, a two-time Playoff MVP, was held to 16 points on 6-of-16 shooting.

Boston Coach K.C. Jones, while saying he thought it was a fine accomplishment for the Celtics to make it to the sixth game of the Finals despite their injuries, said, "I was very impressed (by the Lakers). Obviously the best team won."

The title was the fourth of the decade for the Lakers, with Boston winning three of the other four years. With the loss, the Celtics became the 18th consecutive NBA champion to fail to defend the crown.

"We found out there are no quitters on this team," Bird said. "But we're still a bunch of guys who lost a championship. I guess that means that we're a bunch of losers ..."

"I think they (the Lakers) have a really great basketball team. I would have loved to play them with a healthy Bill Walton and a Scotty Wedman. They probably would have still beat us ... We would have given them a heckuva try."

The Lakers' Johnson, who averaged 26.2 points, 13 assists and eight rebounds to lead Los Angeles in all three categories in the Finals, capped a memorable season with the Playoff MVP award.

Johnson already had won the regular-season MVP Award, his first, and seemed to underscore that honor when his basket in the waning seconds gave the Lakers a crucial 107-106 victory in Game 4 in Boston as Bird — who beat out Johnson in for the regular-season MVP award in three previous years — missed a shot at the buzzer.

Johnson said this was the best of the four championships the Lakers have won since his arrival in 1979.

That Magic Touch

Los Angeles Laker guard Magic Johnson does a sky hook over the Boston Celtics' Danny Ainge during third period action from game six of the NBA Championship Series at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif., Sunday. The Lakers won the game, 106-93, to claim the best of seven series, 4-2. Johnson was named the series MVP.

L.A. Celebrates 4th

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dodger fans applauded, soccer crowds cheered and other hometown fans popped champagne and celebrated as the Los Angeles Lakers romped to their fourth National Basketball Association title this decade.

While the capacity crowd at the Forum in Inglewood watched the Lakers blow away arch-rival Boston Celtics 106-93 on Sunday, fans at Dodger Stadium turned their attention away from their losing team and to miniature television sets and radios for the latest details of the basketball game. The baseball fans roared as the final minutes of the Lakers' game were shown on a giant screen.

And at the Memorial Coliseum, the Lakers' victory drew two hurrahs from a crowd of 21,800 watching the Gold Cup international soccer match — once when it was announced in English and again when announced in Spanish.

The Forum parking lot was ablaze in purple and gold, the teams' colors worn by jubilant fans, and the Herald Examiner blared "LAKERS!" in bold, 4-inch purple letters across its front page today.

Sore Ribs Don't Affect Schmidt

By BEN WALKER AP Baseball Writer

Even with sore ribs, 37-year-old Mike Schmidt showed he can still turn on an inside pitch.

Schmidt hit three homers, drove in six runs and got his 2,000th major-league hit Sunday in leading the Philadelphia Phillies past the Montreal Expos 11-6.

"All three balls that I hit today were inside or just a little off the inside of the plate," Schmidt said. "I proved to everyone that I can handle the ball inside."

Schmidt strained a muscle below his rib cage a few weeks ago, making it especially tough to hit inside pitches. Schmidt went on the disabled list May 26 and returned to the lineup last Wednesday.

In other National League games, St. Louis held off Chicago 3-2, Houston beat Los Angeles 4-1, New York defeated Pittsburgh 7-3, San Diego downed San Francisco 4-1 and Cincinnati beat Atlanta 4-3.

Schmidt tied Mel Ott for 13th place on the all-time home run list with 511. He matched his single-game career high with six RBI and became the 153rd major-leaguer to reach 2,000 hits.

It marked the second time Schmidt had hit three home runs in a game. He also had a four-homer game at Wrigley Field in extra innings. Schmidt has hit 25 home runs at Olympic Stadium, most among visiting players.

Schmidt hit a three-run homer in the third inning against Lary Sorensen, 3-3, for a 4-0 lead. He conducted for a solo shot in the sixth off Curt Brown — his 2,000th hit — and hit his 16th homer of the season, a two-run shot, in the seventh off Randy St. Claire that made it 11-1.

Schmidt, who grounded out in the second inning, left the game after his third homer. As it turned out, his replacement, Rick Schu, got to bat in the ninth.

"I was kidding with Rick about the fourth homer, but I thought very little about it," Schmidt said.

"The condition of my ribs, the 11-1 score, and the fact that it was a day game after a night game, and my ribs were getting a little sore, it was right that I come out of the game."

Darren Daulton led off the Phillies' seventh with a home run. Two-out singles by Jeff Stone and Juan Saneul preceded Schmidt's homer, and Von Hayes capped the inning with another home run.

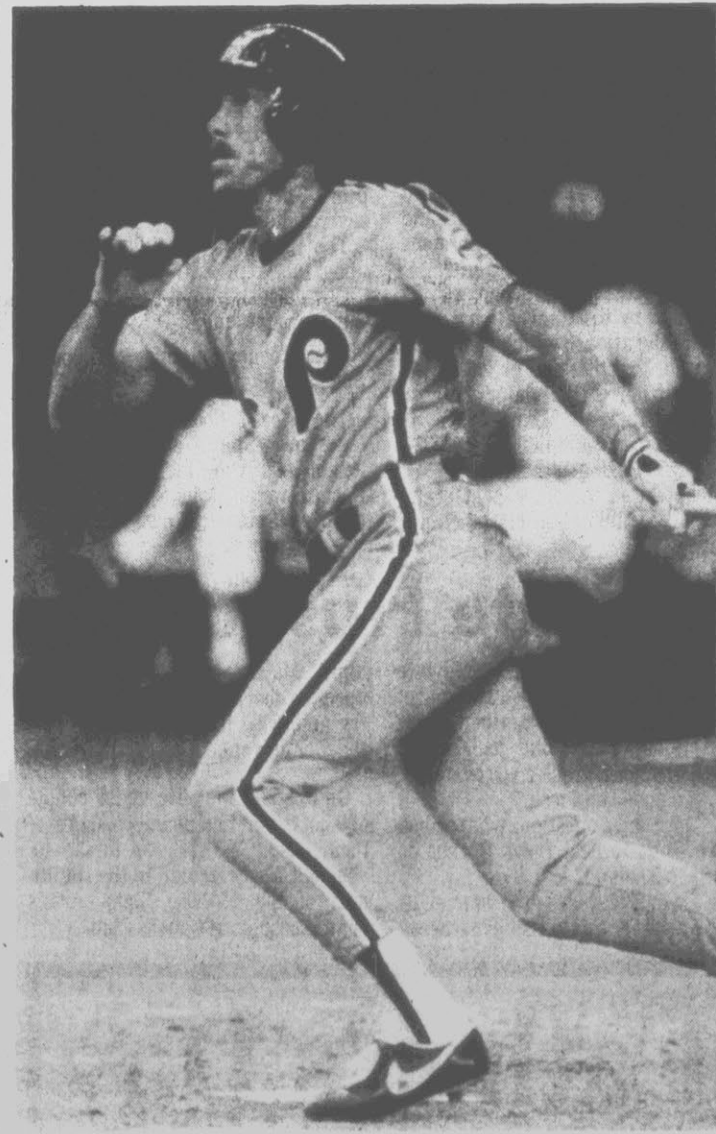

Don Carman, 4-5, left in the eighth after a two-run homer by Reid Nichols and an RBI double by Andres Galarraga.

Cardinals 3, Cubs 2
Danny Cox pitched 8 1-3 innings and beat Chicago for the fourth time this season as St. Louis swept a three-game series from the visiting Cubs.

The Cardinals, who have won four straight, opened up a six-game lead in the NL East, their largest since winning the World Series in 1982. Chicago has lost four straight.

Cox, 7-3, took a four-hitter and 3-0 lead into the ninth. He left after a single and one-out walk, and Todd

Post 39 Gets First Victory

KINSTON — Bronswell Patrick tossed a one-hitter to help Pitt County American Legion Post 39 to its first win of the season, a 2-0 shutout of Kinston Sunday.

Patrick went the distance, striking out eight and walking four. He gave up his only hit in the first inning to Billy Burns.

Pitt County stranded nine runners over the course of the game. Post 39 had a bases-loaded situation in the third when Shane Adams singled, Hunter Clark was hit by a pitch and Eric Jarman drew a walk but left all three stranded. They left two more in the fourth and fifth inning before Patrick helped his own cause in the eighth.

Post 39 scored all the runs it would need in the eighth.

With two outs, Robbie McDonald doubled and Axel Smith drew a walk. Patrick then tripled both runners home to provide all the scoring Post 39 would need.

McDonald, Smith and Patrick had two hits apiece to lead Post 39.

With the win, Pitt County improves to 1-3 on the year.

ROCKY MOUNT — Rocky Mount handed Pitt County a 12-3 thumping Saturday night behind a seven-run fifth inning that broke open the game.

Rocky Mount held a 3-2 edge after four innings of play before taking control in the fifth.

With one out, Grant Shelton walked and stole second. Jeff Carter then singled to score Shelton. Mike Davis followed with another single before Donnie Bobbitt came up and drove in Carter with a base hit. Davis later came home on an error.

Bobbitt added another run when he scored from third on a passed ball. Tony Jacobs followed with a walk and went to second on Clint Rouse's single. Mark Worsley then singled in Jacobs. Shelton was then hit by a pitch and Carter drew a walk to force home Rouse and make it 10-2.

Rocky Mount went through three Pitt County three pitchers, chasing starter Tom Moye midway through the disastrous fifth. Sherwood Wilder came in and promptly gave up two hits and was replaced by Robbie McDonald, who went the rest of the way.

Jason Galloway had three hits to lead Post 39.

Hough, 6-2, struck out eight and walked one. Eric Plunk, 1-3, suffered the loss despite a career-high 11 strikeouts in six innings. He gave up five runs on five hits.

Snead Sneaks By Seve For The Win

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — J.C. Snead was wearing a wry grin and the champion's red jacket when he said, "I must have set golf back 20 years."

He had just defeated Seve Ballesteros on the first hole of a playoff Sunday for the title and the $108,000 winner's check in the Westchester Classic. It was Snead's first victory in six years and the eighth of a 20-year PGA Tour career that has been marked by spots of controversy and occasional feuds with the press.

"I know I'm not very popular with people that don't know me. But there's nothing I can do about that," he said.

His latest victory, he added, may have been his most popular. "It seemed like a lot of people were pulling for me out there in the playoff. Maybe they were just ready to see an American win instead of a foreigner," Snead said.

The playoff went quickly, and with Ballesteros rarely in view. He spent most of the playoff in the woods that line the Westchester Country Club course.

Ballesteros, a flamboyant Spaniard who owns a couple of Masters titles and two British Open victories, tied Snead at 276, eight under par, ending regulation play with a 10-foot birdie putt.

Snead, playing in front of Ballesteros, finished birdie-birdie for a 70 and watched while Ballesteros made the last-hole putt that finished a 72.

On the playoff hole, the 304-yard, par-4 10th, Ballesteros elected to go with a driver. He hit it left into deep rough behind a tree.

Walker Wins 1st Career LPGA Event

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Six years of patience have paid off for Colleen Walker with the first victory of her professional golf career.

"I knew this day was coming as long as I kept working. I've never had any doubts that I could be a winner," the 30-year-old Walker said after Sunday's one-stroke victory in the $350,000 LPGA Mayflower Classic.

"I've been playing steady golf, attacking the golf course and I've been coming close to victory," Walker said.

The 1978 Florida State graduate used birdies on the last two holes to overtake Patti Rizzo and collect the $52,500 winner's share. The purse boosted her 1987 earnings to a career-high $129,602.

Walker had a final-round 3-under-par 69 Sunday, completing the tournament at 278, 10-under for four rounds over the 6,156-yard Country Club of Indianapolis.

"It's hard to describe," Walker said. "It's the greatest feeling in the world right now. It hasn't sunk in yet."

The outcome swung on the last two holes. Rizzo led through 70 holes, then missed birdie opportunities on the 71st and 72nd. Walker drew even with a birdie, then won it on the last hole with a tap-in birdie after just missing an eagle putt.

Rizzo, who held or shared the lead throughout the final round, missed a 15-foot birdie putt at 17, then was just off the green of the par-5 18th hole with her second shot.

Heath Clark keyed a three-run second inning with a two-run single that scored Steve Allena and Derrick Clark. Grant Harmon later knocked in Clark as Brown and Wood took an early 5-0 lead.

Pepsi came back to narrow the gap to 6-3 with three runs in the fourth but Williams singled in the sixth and then came home on a wild pitch to make it 8-4. Clark then singled in Jason Wing to complete the scoring.

Magic And Bird Linked By Success

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Magic Johnson and Larry Bird. Larry Bird and Magic Johnson.

It's hard to think of one without the other come playoff time. Ever since they came into the NBA together in 1979, six months after Johnson's Michigan State Spartans beat Bird's Indiana State Sycamores in the NCAA finals, they have been linked by a common bond — the ability to define new standards of basketball excellence.

Johnson's Los Angeles Lakers or Bird's Boston Celtics have won seven of the eight NBA titles contested since their arrival. The fact that Johnson has four championship rings and Bird three takes away little from their collective impact on the game.

After all, a 4-3 edge in championships seems small compared to the Bill Russell-Wilt Chamberlain Era of the 1960s, when Chamberlain always had the edge in individual statistics, but nearly always lost to Russell's Celtics.

Bird has three regular-season Most Valuable Player awards to only one for Johnson, who won this season. Bird is the only player who can boast of winning the regular-season and playoff MVPs in the same year on two occasions.

But Johnson can now boast an unprecedented three playoff MVP honors.

"Give a lot of credit for our success to Magic," Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar said after Sunday's 106-93 victory gave the Lakers their fourth title since Johnson's arrival. "He accepted his role this year as team leader and played with enough intensity to inspire the other four guys on the floor."

"This is the greatest one because of what we did in the regular season," said Johnson, referring to the Lakers' 65-17 record. "This team can run, shoot, rebound and hit from the outside. It can do it all."

No one on the floor ran, scored, rebounded and passed better than

Johnson in the championship series.

He averaged 26.2 points, 13 assists and eight rebounds, leading the Lakers in all three categories and leaving no doubt about who was the series MVP.

"Game 4 is what killed us," said Bird, who missed a last-second desperation shot after Johnson's hook shot put the Lakers ahead. "We had to have that game. I'll remember that game for the rest of my life."

Kuralt Celebrates 20 Years 'On The Road'

NEW YORK (AP) — Spending 20 years in a bus might not be everybody's idea of a great time, but to Charles Kuralt it's "about the best job in television."

"The freedom of it is what's so nice," the CBS "On The Road" correspondent said in a recent interview. "There have been no assignments in all these years. They just let me go and find the stories myself. They literally don't know where I am during the week. I'm just wandering."

After all those segments Kuralt has done out in small-town USA, it's almost startling to see him framed against the Manhattan skyline from his office at CBS.

Indeed, Kuralt is antsy to get back to Dallas where the bus was waiting for him.

But someone at CBS had noticed it had been 20 years since the first "On The Road," so he was in New York putting together a retrospective of the touching, funny and inspiring stories of "juss" folks that have made him a broadcasting institution.

"20 Years on the Road with Charles Kuralt" airs Wednesday on CBS.

Kuralt said picking the best of the segments for the 1-hour special was "maddening."

"I wish we had two or three hours," he said. "I think the result will be lovely, but I'm going to carry around a great regret at all the stories we have to leave out, and all the good people we're not going to be able to mention."

He had already decided to include "Coming Home," the story of the Chandlers, poor, black, Mississippi sharecroppers whose nine children all went to college and got good jobs. All came home for Thanksgiving, and Kuralt and his crew captured a touching moment out of an American dream-come-true.

Another that had to be included was "The North Platte Canteen," a reminiscence by residents of the Nebraska community where every World War II troop train that passed by was met with coffee, baked goods and the town's good wishes. More than 40 years later, the citizens still hear from former soldiers who remember.

Also included is "Small Towns," an interview with Douglas Duncan, the editor of the local paper in Shelton, Neb., who recites his wry observations of life in a small town — "You know you're in a small town when..." For instance, "You know you're in a small town when third street is on the edge of town."

Kuralt said he started "On The Road" 20 years ago thinking of it as a 3-month project that would get him away from the competitive, deadline-oriented reporting that he didn't like anymore after 10 years in the business. The idea for "On The Road" came from his days as a cub reporter at his hometown newspaper in Charlotte, N.C.

"When I was there as a kid, I wrote a little column, a little bit like 'On The Road' — 'People.' 'People' was a little bit more original title for a column in 1955 than it is today. And it was just the same," Kuralt said. "It was about people who weren't well-known. Cops and cab drivers and kids, folks around town. And I'd always thought that might translate to television."

It did. Except for a stint as anchor of the "CBS Morning News" and a continuing job as host of "CBS Sunday Morning," Kuralt has spent most of the last two decades "On The Road."

Once his pieces began appearing on television, viewers started sending in story suggestions. But many stories he would just stumble on, he said.

"The secret is you mustn't be on a deadline," Kuralt said. "It's hard if you're used to covering news, because you're used to being in a hurry all the time. But you just have to force yourself to go slow and not have to get to Omaha tonight. Don't make plans. Don't figure out where you're going to be tonight. Because if you're not careful, you drive right past terrific stories."

After 20 years, he said, even the people way off the main road know who he is. In fact, Kuralt said, "It's almost as if they're expecting us to show up. They don't register much surprise. They're sometimes sort of pleased that CBS has found its way to their small town, but they know it's an interesting place, so they're not so surprised that we're there."

Ron Reagan In Film

NEW YORK (AP) — Ron Reagan, who dangles a condom before the camera in an upcoming AIDS documentary, says the federal government is not doing enough to stop the spread of the fatal disease.

The president's son told Newsweek in its current issue that the right wing views AIDS as a punishment for homosexuality, and in a public service announcement made to accompany the documentary decries the lack of government effort to battle AIDS.

The federal government "is not doing enough to stop the spread of AIDS," says young Reagan, who also narrates the documentary.

"Let somebody in Washington know you don't think enough is being done. Write to your Congressman — or to someone higher up," he says with a smile.

In the documentary, Reagan at one point holds a prophylactic and announces, "This is a condom."

The 30-minute film was produced by AIDS Film, a privately funded organization that did a similar safe-sex documentary for the New York school system.

The group is hoping to air the documentary on network television, but because of its graphic nature it may not ever make it, Newsweek reports.

The Greenville Housing Authority currently manages 742 units of low-rent housing, located in seven projects throughout the city, including a 60-unit mid-rise for elderly citizens.

'Oprah' Dwarfing 'Donahue'

NEW YORK (AP) — After 20 years on television, Phil Donahue is being challenged for the daytime talk-show throne by Oprah Winfrey, whose show has been nationally syndicated less than a year but is dwarfing "Donahue" in the ratings.

"The Oprah Winfrey Show" made its debut nationally in September. By February, it ranked third of more than 400 syndicated programs. "Donahue" was 10th, up a notch from the year before.

In New York, Los Angeles and Atlanta, the three biggest out of about 40 TV markets where the shows are head-to-head, "Oprah" outrates "Donahue" by a wide margin.

According to the most recent A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings available for syndicated shows, Winfrey had an average 10.7 rating for February compared with Donahue's 7.9. Winfrey's victory came even though her show was seen in more than half the markets in the morning when audience levels are lower.

By this fall, the show will air almost exclusively in the afternoon, so the ratings are expected to be even higher.

Michael King, president of King World, the syndicator of Winfrey's show as well as the top-rated "Wheel of Fortune" and "Jeopardy," says advertisers buying time on "Oprah" in markets where it will be on in the afternoon this fall have been guaranteed a record 14.0 rating.

The rating is a percentage of households using television in the markets where the shows air. "Oprah's a natural," King said in a telephone interview from Los Angeles. "Not to knock Phil, but he's been around 20 years. ... You just didn't go up against 'Donahue.' But he's not unbeatable any more."

"It's not that Donahue's so bad, because he's not. His show's been very successful for a long time," he said. "I think we all get peaks and valleys, and I think the best is behind 'Donahue.' He's still got his audience. She's bringing people to television and helping the whole industry."

Voting Concludes In Italy

ROME (AP) — Italians voted today in a national election expected to determine which parties will have the most say in forming the next government.

Polls were opened today from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m. More than two-thirds of the eligible voters cast their ballots Sunday in the beginning of the two-day election.

At stake are the 630 seats in the Chamber of Deputies and 315 in the Senate.

The election pits the long-dominant Christian Democrats against the Communists, Italy's second-largest party and the largest Communist Party in the West.

The elections were called a year early after a two-month political crisis that began in March when Socialist Premier Bettino Craxi stepped down over a dispute with the Christian Democrats in his coalition.

A caretaker government led by Christian Democrat Premier Amintore Fanfani is overseeing the elections.

Opinion polls indicated the third-largest party, the Socialists, would make substantial gains, while the Christian Democrats and Communists would lose ground.

The election outcome probably will not directly determine the next government, because no party is expected to win an outright majority. But the percentage of votes each party gets will affect the leverage it has in forming the next coalition.

Craxi's coalition included the Christian Democrats, the Socialists, the Social Democrats, the Liberals and the Republicans.

The Interior Ministry said 69.8 percent of eligible voters cast ballots on Sunday despite temperatures that soared to 104 F. In the last parliamentary elections in 1983, 68.8 percent voted on the first day of balloting.

There are 45.6 million Italians over 18 who can vote for deputies, while 39 million are over 21 and eligible to vote for the senators.

A survey in Rome's La Repubblica newspaper last week showed 15 percent of the voters were undecided or would abstain. Political analysts said the percentage was large in a country with strong party loyalties and traditionally heavy turnout at the polls.

Newspaper editorials blamed the apparent apathy of voters on a lengthy campaign that featured a lot of mud-slinging, but little debate on substantive issues.

During the 1983 parliamentary elections, 88 percent of voters cast ballots, the lowest level of participation since World War II.

Newspapers, radio and television issued appeals over the weekend urging Italians to go to the polls.

"A call to the polls: It's a duty," headlined the Milanese daily Il Giornale.

No serious problems were reported at the 84,577 polling booths across the country, although there were a few fistfights. A round of fireworks set off a false alarm at a Rome polling station Sunday.

In Palermo, Sicily, meanwhile, a judge announced he had opened an investigation into allegations that the Mafia is using threats and intimidation to influence voting.

Giovanni Spadolini, leader of the Republicans and former defense minister in Craxi's five-party coalition, said after voting in Milan, "It's been the most difficult campaign since the war. ... Let's hope there are not many abstentions, especially among the young."

Craxi, also in Milan, told reporters, "We expect a thoughtful vote and see no need to worry."

Pornography star Iona "Cicciolina" Staller, a candidate for the Chamber of Deputies on the small Radical Party ticket, provided one of the most startling moments in the election.

As she cast her vote in Rome, she pulled her white halter top down to bare a breast for photographers and television cameras, prompting an election worker to try and cover her with a sheet of paper.

According To Report

Stark Not In Proper Position

WASHINGTON (AP) — The commanders of the USS Stark failed to take proper defensive measures before an Iraqi warplane hit the ship with missiles, according to a congressional report that says the Persian Gulf attack resulted from American complacency and Iraqi carelessness.

The Stark's captain had gone to his cabin shortly before the attack that killed 37 seamen on the night of May 17, and another officer didn't order that a radio warning be sent to the Iraqi pilot until the warplane was well within attacking range, the House Armed Services Committee said in a preliminary report on the assault.

The attack "was almost certainly inadvertent," the report said, faulting both the Iraqis and the Americans.

Iraqi pilots habitually fire at blips on radar screens, they fail to check targets visually before shooting and they do not consistently monitor radio warning channels, the report said.

"Because of Iraqi tactics, this was an accident waiting to happen," Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., the committee's chairman, said.

On the American side, personnel seem to have regarded Iraqi aircraft, if not as "friendly, then as less threatening than Iranian planes," the report said.

"You just cannot assume because a plane comes from Iraq that it is therefore benign. ... Because Iraqi planes have flown over before without incident, you cannot assume that's going to happen again," Aspin told a news conference Saturday.

The report, compiled after a trip to the gulf by four committee aides, said there was "no evidence that the (Stark's) equipment doesn't work and no evidence that the people operating the equipment didn't know how to operate it," Aspin said.

However, it faulted ship personnel for failing to warn the Iraqi Mirage F-1 jet until it was 13 miles away and the vessel was well within range of the plane's Exocet missiles. It also said the highly maneuverable frigate should have been turned broadside to the plane to make the most effective use of its radar and weapons.

"They could have done and should have done a lot more," Aspin said.

In other developments: —The Reagan administration prepared to tell Congress this week how it will defend 11 reflagged Kuwaiti oil tankers in the gulf. Under an agreement reached last month, the administration was to submit reports to the House and Senate on how it would respond to any attack against the tankers or U.S. ships protecting them.

Administration officials have declined to say whether they would launch a pre-emptive strike against an estimated 20 Chinese-made Silkorm anti-ship missiles that are owned by Iran and could hit vessels passing through the mouth of the Persian Gulf.

—Two senior Democratic lawmakers urged the White House to delay or cancel plans to risk American lives and prestige in the gulf.

"In devising a response to the gulf crisis, the administration should focus on ending the Iran-Iraq war and not on a course that risks an American-Iranian clash," Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, wrote in an opinion piece in Sunday's New York Times. "Iran is likely to see assistance tendered to Iraq's ally as provocative."

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said Sunday that "the Kuwaiti flagging is a symbol of the absence of policy." The decision reflag the Kuwaiti tankers and offer them Navy protection signals "that we have basically taken a strong tilt towards Iraq," Nunn said on the NBC-TV program "Meet the Press."

In its report, the committee found no evidence that the Navy's rules of engagement unnecessarily restricted the Stark from defending itself.

Aspin stressed that the report could not "allocate responsibility on board the ship" and must be considered preliminary because the committee did not speak to the frigate's four principal officers. They are being investigated by a Navy review board and refused, on the advice of their attorneys, to be interviewed.

However, Capt. G.R. Brindel did submit a written statement in which he said he left the bridge before the attack "to make a head (toilet) call" even though the ship already had been warned by a U.S. Air Force AWACS surveillance plane that the Iraqi jet was 200 miles away.

In addition to Aspin, the report was signed by William L. Dickinson of Alabama, the senior Republican on the panel, and Bill Nichols, D-Ala., the chairman of the investigations subcommittee.

On other aspects of the incident, the report said:

—The ship's SLQ-32 electronic countermeasures equipment should have detected the lock-on signal from the missiles' radar. However, it said the SLQ-32 audio alarm had been turned off by the operator because it sounded too frequently in the busy gulf. It said the operator probably was distracted in the seconds before the explosion and did not see a video alarm on his screen.

Defense Plans For Persian Gulf Talked

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is preparing to tell Congress how it will defend reflagged Kuwaiti oil tankers as senior Democratic lawmakers urge the White House to delay or cancel plans to risk American lives and prestige in the Persian Gulf.

"In devising a response to the gulf crisis, the administration should focus on ending the Iran-Iraq war and not on a course that risks an American-Iranian clash," said Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

"Iran is likely to see assistance tendered to Iraq's ally as provocative," Pell wrote in a commentary appearing in Sunday's New York Times.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said Sunday that "the Kuwaiti flagging is a symbol of the absence of policy."

The decision to fly the U.S. flag from 11 of Kuwait's 22 oil tankers, and to offer them naval Navy protection in the gulf, signals "that we have basically taken a strong tilt towards Iraq," Nunn said.

Any shift from the official neutrality the United States has observed since the war began in September 1980 "ought to be debated on its own merits and not on the illusion that we are really protecting the free flow of oil," Nunn said on the NBC-TV program "Meet the Press."

Under an agreement reached last month, the administration was to submit reports to the House and Senate this week on how it would respond to any attack against the Kuwaiti tankers or U.S. Navy ships assigned to protect them.

The Persian Gulf issue is likely to dominate the congressional agenda this week. No major actions are scheduled on the floor of either chamber, although the Senate will try again to adopt a campaign spending reform bill.

The Persian Gulf report was requested by both the House and Senate in proposals which have passed each chamber. The administration promised to send the document to Congress as part of the White House effort to improve consultation with Capitol Hill on the controversial issue.

The Senate Foreign Relations will meet Wednesday to discuss, and possibly vote, on a bill that would halt the reflagging plan until Congress votes its approval. The measure is sponsored by Pell.

Despite intense questioning before congressional panels, administration officials have declined to say whether they would launch a pre-emptive strike against an estimated 20 Chinese-made Silkorm anti-ship missiles that are owned by Iran and could hit vessels passing through the mouth of the Persian Gulf.

Concern about administration policy in the gulf sharpened after an Iraqi warplane, apparently by accident, fired two missiles at the Navy frigate USS Stark on May 17, killing 37 U.S. sailors.

A further risk became apparent over the weekend with a Lebanese newspaper report that some of the American hostages taken in Beirut have been moved to Iran and that a leading Iranian religious figure wants them to stand trial there. The Iranian Embassy in Lebanon denied the report Sunday.

Pell and Nunn urged joint action with Moscow to stop the fighting between Iran and Iraq, which has claimed an estimated 1 million casualties and spilled over into the so-called "Tanker War" in the gulf.

"Working with the Soviet Union is likely to contain the war and constrain the Soviet presence in the gulf," Pell said. "By contrast, a United States-Iran military clash could create opportunities for the Soviet Union in Iran and the region."

Nunn said that while "the United States and the Soviet Union may have a convergence of interests" in ending the ground war, "we do not have a convergence of interest in the Persian Gulf itself."

Pell urged lawmakers to back his bill to block the reflagging plan. Nunn and other senators have said the administration simply ought to delay it to avoid losing any more credibility in the region.

Papers Losing Ground

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Despite minority hiring gains, daily newspapers aren't keeping pace with the nation's growing racial diversity. One reason, experts say, is minority reporters apparently are leaving newsrooms faster than whites.

"Unless newsrooms can hold on to more of those being hired, the industry can't expect the total picture to change very much," said Ellis Cose of Columbia University's Gannett Center for Media Studies. "Minorities feel pigeonholed in low priority reporting assignments."

Cose reported that because of widespread frustration "minorities had left the profession at three times the rate of whites" in a 1985 survey conducted while he headed the Institute for Journalism Education in Berkeley, Calif.

In a second study last October, he warned of a "high turnover among minority journalists," noting that in 1985 "more than one-third as many minorities left newsrooms as were hired."

In 1978, the American Society of Newspaper Editors adopted a resolution pledging to employ editors and reporters in numbers reflecting the nation's racial makeup by the year 2000.

"This goal is a moving target," said ASNE Minority Affairs Director Denise Johnson, noting the society is channeling $275,000 into minority efforts in 1986-87. "By the year 2000 it could be as high as 30 percent."

"We have concentrated on the recruitment: persuading editors and publishers to hire (minorities)," said Christian Science Monitor editor Katherine Fanning, president of ASNE. "We haven't done enough on the retention."

Minorities made up 6.5 percent of the reporters and editors on daily newspapers in 1986, according to an ASNE survey released in April. The percentage has inched up from 4.8 percent in 1980, when blacks, Hispanics, Asians and Native Americans were 22 percent of the U.S. population.

But at the same time, factors such as immigration, larger family size and lower median age are causing the minority population to continue growing at a faster pace than the white population.

Members of minority groups were 13.4 percent of the graduating journalism seniors hired by daily newspapers in 1986, according to the Dow Jones Newspaper Fund. But once hired, some minority reporters are soon frustrated by a lack of upward mobility.

Cose found a higher percentage of minority journalists than whites wanted management careers. But he also found a larger proportion of whites than minority journalists had such responsibilities.

The 1985 study found that 13 percent of the experienced minority journalists surveyed had left newspapers and about 40 percent felt they would leave. Among whites only 22 percent said they expected to leave.

After leaving newspapers, minority journalists "tended to go into communication-related fields, like public relations, and some into teaching," Cose said.

Fanning said she didn't know "whether it's stereotyping or whether it's possibly cause they haven't been aggressive enough in promoting themselves" that caused minority journalists to leave. ASNE's Minorities Committee formed an advancement and retention subcommittee at the group's convention in April.

Some news executives say white cynicism works against minorities when it comes to deciding who will move up the newsroom ladder.

"Media in general still operate under the old boy network," said Al Fitzpatrick, director of minority affairs for the Knight-Ridder newspaper group. "They're leaving in alarming numbers because they don't get the opportunity to get promoted to top level positions in management."

"The main thing was getting (minority employees) through the door," said Fitzpatrick, also president of the National Association of Black Journalists. "Then they said, 'All is well.' ... The industry didn't prepare itself on what to do after they were in."

China Battles Deserts

LANZHOU, China (AP) — China planted 5 billion trees in the past five years to halt back encroaching deserts, but while it has had some success it is still losing ground and its 1 billion people are losing arable living space.

Every year for the past 50, some 400 square miles of Chinese land has been lost to desertification, a global problem in which arable land is transformed into waterless, sandy wasteland. One-sixth of China's 3.8 million square miles of land is now desert or semidesert.

China, with its ability to mobilize huge numbers for land reclamation projects, has long been in the forefront in world efforts to slow advancing deserts. "But it's very difficult for people to completely solve the problem," said Li Lie, senior engineer at the Institute of Desert Research in Lanzhou, in west-central China. "It's hard to say when the situation will improve."

Desertification and the related problems of deforestation and soil erosion pose serious threats to China, whose billion people have only a quarter of an acre of arable land apiece, one-third the world average.

Every year the nation loses 50 billion tons of arable soil to erosion. Twenty-three percent of China's vast pastureland has lost much of its grass. Tree cover in northeast Heilongjiang province, scene of a devastating forest fire in May, is down from 52 percent in the 1950s to 35 percent today.

The Lanzhou institute, center of China's efforts to study what causes deserts and how they can be controlled, estimates that the lives of 50 million Chinese are affected by encroaching deserts. Ten million Chinese now lack enough land to support themselves.

China's battle against the desert goes back to ancient times. The secrets of the old Silk Road lie buried under the sands along the southern edge of the far western Taklamakan Desert, China's largest.

In north-central Shaanxi prefecture the Great Wall, built to fend off invaders, lies in ruins before the relentless attack of the Mu Us Desert.

The 14th century Yuan dynasty capital of Heicheng, its irrigation system destroyed in war, has disappeared under the dunes of Inner Mongolia.

The 20th century, however, has accelerated the desert's drift.

Li explained that overcultivation, overgrazing and excessive cutting of trees for firewood, all related to population pressures, are the main causes of desertification today.

The government has also made mistakes, he said, as in the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution when everything, including tree shelters and pastureland, was sacrificed to increased grain production.

Aside from that disastrous decade, planting trees has been a passion of communist China. In 1978 it began its "Green Wall," the natural equivalent of the Great Wall, a 4,340-mile corridor of trees linking Xinjiang in the far northwest with Heilongjiang in the northeast.

More than 14 million acres of barren land were planted with trees by 1985, a feat to be equalled by 1990. By that time 7.5 percent of that desolate sector will be tree-covered, up from zero before.

Peasants, who can be fined for illegal tree-cutting, are being paid to plant new trees, one reason 200 million "volunteers" have planted 5 billion trees in the past five years.

There have been other smaller victories.

Cities like Lanzhou, which is on the Yellow River in the erosion-pitted, yellow-soiled loess plateau, are today surrounded by greenery. Beijing, the capital, has seen a sharp reduction in sandstorms in recent springs because of its shield of trees and cultivated fields.

Under the direction of the research institute, a new oasis has been created in Linze county northwest of Lanzhou, and 128 immigrant families are living where not a blade of grass grew 10 years ago.

More than 2,000 families have moved from poor areas to Nanshanzaizi, a new community on the southern skirts of the Tengger Desert of north-central China, which was irrigated to life partly with funding from the United Nations World Food Program.

A new land management law restricts the unauthorized and illegal use of public land. Local regulations have been enforced, such as limiting Inner Mongolia farmers to 30 sheep a household to prevent overgrazing.

Efforts are also being made to prevent overirrigation resulting in alkaline soil and to educate rural people in the consequences of land abuse.

"People know that what they did in the past was very bad," Li said. He added that the research institute's main task now is conducting experiments to determine how best to combine trees, agriculture and animal husbandry to hold the deserts back.

"But it's not just a problem of man but of nature," Li said. The climate in northwestern China has been getting dryer and colder. The prospect for increasingly dry weather conditions, he said, could continue for another 50 years.

New Duet

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singers Donna Fargo and Billy Joe Royal are country music's newest duet, teaming up on a record titled "Members Only."

Miss Fargo is best known for her country hits in the mid-1970s, including "Happiest Girl in the Whole U.S.A." and "Funny Face."

Royal had several pop hits about 20 years ago, including "Down in the Boondocks," "I Knew You When" and "Cherry Hill Park." For the past year, he has been singing more country music-oriented material.
