S. Korean Leader Agrees To Seek Settlements

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — In a major turnaround, President Chun Doo-hwan agreed to meet with the opposition to try to end fierce anti-government protests, a top official said today.

The statement came as thousands of students clashed with riot police near college campuses in Seoul in the 13th day of large-scale protests. Scattered violence was reported elsewhere in the country, but most protests were peaceful.

Yonhap, the Korean news agency, reported that about 20,000 students took part in demonstrations at 58 universities throughout the country.

Roh Tae-woo, chairman of the governing Democratic Justice Party, said after a meeting with Chun that the president agreed to meet with Kim Young-sam, head of the Reunification Democratic Party. Chun also promised to consider the release of political detainees, Roh said.

He didn't say when the meeting would take place.

"I recommended it is desirable that the president meet political elders and opposition leaders to work out settlements," Roh told reporters.

Kim has said he would meet with Chun if all those detained since nationwide protests began June 10 are released. Police say more than 8,000 people have been arrested. Most have been freed or sentenced to brief terms, but at least 300 face trial on major charges.

Kim has also demanded freedom for fellow opposition leader Kim Dae-jung, who has been under house arrest in Seoul since April 8.

Students hurled firebombs and rocks at police in vicious street battles around at least four major Seoul colleges. Police fired volley after volley of tear gas.

About 2,500 students clashed with police in the central city of Chonju and stormed a police station. Hundreds of students clashed with police in the streets of the southern city of Kwangju and about 1,000 students briefly seized part of a highway on Cheju Island off the south coast.

Pusan, the country's second largest city and scene of some of the worst anti-government protests in recent days, was largely quiet.

In recent days, the opposition has demanded direct talks between Kim and Chun as a precondition to negotiations on calling off the protests that have swept the country since June 10.

That was the day the Democratic Justice Party nominated Roh as its presidential candidate, and the opposition began a drive to force direct elections.

Roh said nothing today about the key opposition demand that the government repeal its April 13 decision to suspend talks on political reform until after the 1988 Seoul Olympics. Chun contends the delay is necessary to safeguard national stability and the games. He has said elections later this year will be held under the electoral college system, which opponents charge favors the government party.

"The president also promised to give maximum consideration to preconditions set by the Reunification Democratic Party including the release of im-

Ronald McDonald House Dedication Helps Spark Celebration In Greenville

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Sunday afternoon was a time of celebration in Greenville — the world's 105th Ronald McDonald House opened.

Ronald McDonald and musicians from the community set the tone for the festivities. The redheaded clown skipped at the head of the crowd which tramped from the dedication site in the Brody Medical Sciences Building, to the house itself for the ribbon cutting and public tour.

Strains of "Onward Christian Soldiers," played by three trumpet players from the First Pentecostal Holiness Church, rang through the medical complex to which the house has been added by way of community effort sustained over several years.

The dedication, ribbon-cutting and tour were the culmination of work begun the late 1970's. It was then that some people in the community started talking about bringing a house to Greenville to serve families of children having medical treatment at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. Similar houses had been built at major medical complexes around the country since 1973.

Dr. Tate Holbrook, a pediatric hematologist and oncologist associated with the hospital and the East Carolina University Medical School, briefly told the history of the effort. Though work was begun long before, he said the non-profit corporation which built the house and will operate it was formed in 1984. This agency is called Children's Services of Eastern Carolina Inc.

Bill Hagerman, regional manager of the McDonald's Restaurants which have backed the building of the houses throughout the country, pointed out that there are 35 more now in various stages of design and construction. Houses are located in major medical centers throughout

Syrian Chief Vows To Free Hostage

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syria's military intelligence chief in Lebanon was quoted today as vowing to free kidnapped American journalist Charles Glass and the son of Lebanon's defense minister "at all costs."

"I am here in Beirut to free them," Brig. Gen. Ghazi Kenaan was quoted as saying by the state-run Beirut Radio. "The problem will be resolved at all costs, and I believe that will be accomplished soon."

But the Christian-controlled Voice of Lebanon radio said the kidnappers were demanding a guarantee that West Germany would not extradite Mohammed Ali Hamadi to the United States. Hamadi, a Lebanese, is accused of hijacking a TWA jet to Beirut in 1985 and killing a U.S. Navy diver.

The broadcast said the Hamadi guarantee was the kidnappers' main condition. But Lebanese police and sources close to the Syrian command in west Beirut denied that such a demand had been made.

Hamadi, who was arrested at the Frankfurt airport on Jan. 13, is wanted in the United States on charges of murder and air piracy.

West Germany has not announced its decision on the extradition, but se-

Reagan Fires Taxation Blast At Democrats

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer

MELBOURNE, Fla. (AP) — President Reagan, beginning a summer-long series of trips to the people, today accused congressional Democrats of trying to "destroy our economic expansion and send us right back into the malaise and stagflation of the 1970s."

Appealing for pressure on Congress to rein in deficits and hold the line on taxes, Reagan traveled to this city on Florida's Atlantic coast to declare that any tax-hike bill that makes it to the Oval Office "won't make it out alive."

"No way are the American people going to be made to foot the bill for the tax-and-spend crew on Capitol Hill," Reagan said in remarks prepared for delivery to the managers, employees and families of the Dictaphone Corp. plant here.

Reagan was to tour the plant's assembly line and then attend a picnic.

The president is feuding with congressional Democrats over a fiscal 1988 spending plan. Both have proposed budgets with total spending of more than $1 trillion, but the similarities end there.

A plan agreed to by congressional Democrats last week would increase taxes by $64.3 billion over three years

U.S. 264 Section Opens

WILSON — Gov. Jim Martin was scheduled to open a 3.4-mile section of U.S. 264 just east of Wilson in a 1:30 p.m. ceremony today.

The section of highway — from the N.C. 58 intersection east of Wilson to the old U.S. 264 west of Pinetops — is part of the $52.5 million, 31.7 mile relocation of U.S. 264 between Wilson and Greenville.

Board of Transportation members Randy Doub of Greenville and John Bishop of Rocky Mount, as well as Transportation Secretary James L. Harrington, were to participate in the ceremony.

The Farmville East Thoroughfare, has already been completed. The remainder of the relocation project — with the exception of the Farmville bypass and the northwest Greenville bypass — is expected to be open to traffic by mid-October.

Completion of the entire project, including the Farmville and Greenville bypasses, is expected by November 1991.

Former Official Denies Accusation

By The Associated Press A former Burlington Industries executive accused of breaching a confidentiality agreement says Burlington's case against him is based on innuendo, but a judge says evidence indicates that the executive "dipped ... into the realm of illegality."

"I didn't take that information and give it to anybody," James Ammeen told the Charlotte Observer. "I didn't take documents when I left and Burlington knows that. I did not pass information I had in my head of that nature to anybody."

Ammeen, 47, who resigned his $240,000-a-year job as Burlington's executive vice president in November 1985, is accused of providing illegal inside information to PaineWebber, financier Asher Edelman and Dominion Textiles of Montreal, which have launched a bid to takeover the Greensboro-based textile giant.

U.S. District Court Judge Eugene Gordon earlier this month said evidence indicates Ammeen "dipped below the line into the realm of illegality." Ruling on a lawsuit brought by Burlington, the Greensboro judge issued a preliminary injunction — now under appeal — that bars Edelman and Dominion's $77-per-share offer for Burlington stock.

Attorneys for Edelman and Dominion will press today for a federal appeals judge in Richmond, Va., on a motion to expedite the appeal of the injunction.

After graduation from Columbia University in 1962, Ammeen joined Burlington as a salesman. He rose up the company's ranks quickly, becoming vice president of apparel fabrics by 1974. He is credited by former associates with having been largely responsible for building Burlington's dominant position in menswear fabrics.

Ammeen was named an executive vice president in 1980, a position he held until he resigned in November 1985. At least 12 Burlington divisions accounting for roughly 50 percent of company revenues reported to Ammeen, the court found. He had access to confidential information including reports detailing financial results of each of the Burlington divisions under his control.

Upon his resignation, Ammeen received $200,000 in return for agreeing to not "disclose to any person, unless authorized to do so by the company, any of the company's trade secrets or other information which is confidential or secret."

Ammeen says he had access to confidential information for only 25 percent of Burlington's operations when he left the company. He denies violating his confidentiality agreements.

According to the court opinion, in the summer of 1986, PaineWebber and Ammeen had identified Burlington as a potential acquisition target. In August, PaineWebber presented a takeover plan for Burlington at a meeting with Cone Mills chairman Dewey Trogdon and other Cone executives. Cone is a leading competitor of Burlington in the denim business.

Ammeen denies helping PaineWebber present its takeover plan to the company.

"I did not participate in any meeting that they had," Ammeen said, "and I did not identify Burlington as any target."

According to Ammeen, it was Cone that initiated the idea about taking over Burlington. Ammeen said he met twice last summer over dinner with Trogdon to discuss possible employment with Cone. Trogdon, according to an attorney familiar with the depositions, told Ammeen at their second dinner meeting that Cone officials had discussed the idea of taking over Burlington Industries. Trogdon referred to Cone as a "cruiser" and Burlington as a "battleship."

In a statement from Trogdon cited during court testimony, Trogdon said Ammeen never provided any confidential information about Burlington and was "emphatically disinclined" to talk about the company even when Trogdon brought it up.

Trogdon, in his deposition, acknowledged seeking information about Burlington. But Cone decided against Burlington.

In the fall of 1986, PaineWebber and Ammeen took their plan to Dominion and Edelman, neither of whom had previously considered acquiring Burlington, according to Gordon's ruling.

On Dec. 17, 1986, Dominion's management presented a plan to its board for a hostile takeover of Burlington codenamed "Project Battleship." The board rejected the proposal, partly because the plan didn't have "reliable" estimates of what Burlington's assets were worth, the court wrote.

The next day, Charles McCrae, Dominion's executive vice president, traveled to New York to meet with PaineWebber and Ammeen at PaineWebber's office, the court opinion says. McCrae and Ammeen discussed Dominion's concerns about Burlington's asset values and how many potential buyers existed for some of Burlington's businesses, according to McCrae's deposition. McCrae, in meetings with Dominion's lawyers, also questioned Ammeen's participation.

Ammeen disputes the court findings. He said he wasn't in New York Dec. 18, but was visiting manufacturing plants in Illinois, Kentucky and North Carolina for a business deal unrelated to Burlington.

During December and January, PaineWebber did a detailed analysis of Burlington, creating a report entitled "Battleship Preliminary Valuation Estimates." The document included estimated profits and losses, assets and liabilities and potential sale prices of Burlington divisions for fiscal year 1985.

With new information in hand, Dominion's board met again on Feb. 19. Dominion chairman Thomas Bell, in a deposition, testified that the meeting's agenda called for Ammeen to discuss which Burlington businesses to retain and which to sell. The board asked Ammeen questions "in terms of specific numbers" about the operating results and valuations of certain divisions, Bell said.

Ammeen, according to Bell, said the numbers prepared by PaineWebber "were in the ballpark." But Ammeen says he attended the meeting at Dominion's invitation and because he was interested in working for the firm if the company made an acquisition in the United States. His remarks at the meeting dealt with "management style, philosophy and leadership I didn't get into numbers," Ammeen said. Dominion's board voted Feb. 24 to proceed with the takeover plan.

Soil testing is the key to producing high quality, high yielding forage crops. Forage crops, just as other field crops, grow best when fertilized and limed according to soil test results. When any crop is fertilized or limed without prior knowledge of the fertility status, potential problems can develop. These problems can be due to over application or to and inadequate supply of a given lime or fertilizer material. For example, fertilizer applied to an extremely acid soil cannot perform to its maximum potential because of the adverse effects of soil acidity on root growth and nutrient uptake.

In addition to reducing soil acidity, lime supplies the essential nutrients calcium and magnesium. Lime also increases the efficiency of nutrient uptake of other elements.

Leguminous forage crops require a higher pH for optimum nodulation and nitrogen fixation. Soil testing is a very useful tool for determining soil nutrient depletion by hay and silage crops. Testing can also help monitor soil magnesium levels for the prevention of grass tetany. On high producing hay crops that require much nitrogen, more frequent assessment of lime needs may be needed due to an increased generation of acidity in the soil.

In short, soil is an indispensable tool for maintaining adequate lime and nutrient levels for optimizing yield and quality of forage crops. Further information can be obtained by contacting your Agricultural Extension Office. In Pitt County, the number is 752-2934. Soil testing is a free service through the N.C. Department of Agriculture.

One more tragic accident has occurred on state road 1726 at the train crossing in the Eastern Pines Community.

The driver of a car was killed in a collision with a train there Wednesday morning.

There have been several vehicle-train wrecks at the crossing as road traffic has increased because of the residential development in the area.

The situation has not gone without notice. The N.C. Department of Transportation has funded crossing guards and the equipment is soon to be installed. In the meantime stop signs were installed at the site the day following the fatality.

In this case the decision has been made to install the needed safety devices and the work will proceed as rapidly as possible.

In the meantime motorists must exercise caution as they approach this crossing. It is difficult to see trains approaching and the trains are traveling faster than they do closer to Greenville. The law, as well as this particular situation, calls for vehicles to come to a full stop before proceeding across the tracks. While stopping on an open highway is inconvenient, the alternative may be injury or even death. Avoiding such is certainly worth the inconvenience.

The advice applies to all railroad crossings in the county. It will be impossible to install signals at all of them and it is in the motorists' interest to avoid a collision with a train.

We would hope, also in the future that authorities will monitor railroad crossings as highway traffic counts increase. Then planning can get under way sooner for installation of signals.

As always, however, highway safety is everybody's business. Safety devices can and should be installed, but it first depends on the drivers to exercise proper care.

Always Changing

What ever problems the Pitt County Schools may have, stagnation is not one of them.

Pitt County is growth oriented and our schools are sharing in the changes that general growth brings. That means changes, but it also means opportunity to develop better schools, improve faculty and motivate students to accomplish the best they can. A growing county economy can mean more financial resources to pay for the needs of improving the schools.

To cope with the changes that are buffeting our schools we have seen the merger of the Pitt County and Greenville city schools and the inevitable spirited public debate that followed concerning just how the new unified school system should be developed.

We haven't completed the final product and certainly we never will. Debate over the public schools will continue and it will help to build a system which meets the needs of all our people.

Through it all we have never lost our faith in one thing — that is that all who entered in public school debate sincerely had as their first interest the development of the finest school system possible. We believe that is what we will have.

A symbol of the joining of the old and the new in Pitt County public education appeared in a picture in Friday's Daily Reflector.

A 200-pound bell was being installed in the new Pitt County elementary school near Bell's Fork. The bell was donated by the architect James Hite and was mounted in an opening above the front entrance.

The school building will serve families from both the old Greenville and Pitt school districts when it opens next fall. It is characteristic of the new school system we expect to have.

The school bell as a symbol is as old as public schools. It gives us pause to look back on what we have accomplished even as we look forward to a potentially shining era in public education.

Summer Revelry

The summer solstice is past.

Summer's Eve is the day of Shakespeare's mid-summer night's dream, the time when make believe creatures perform revelry too small, too quiet to see — except in the human imagination.

There's something in the solstice for everyone. For sun worshippers, the solstice is the ultimate — the longest day of the year. For summer-lovers it's the onset of the best season of the year. For others it is simply a reason to celebrate in a month otherwise devoid of ceremony.

Until September, when summer slips into fall, the celebration will continue — especially in the hearts of those who appreciate hot weather and endless days.

Thatcher: A Lesson For The Left

LONDON — After Margaret Thatcher's decisive third-term victory, there is wide agreement here that Labor's demand for unilateral nuclear disarmament not only lost the June 11 election but bars it from power far into the future.

Excited Conservatives are now fantasizing on Prime Minister Thatcher or a hand-picked successor holding power into the mid-1990s. "Neil Kinnock has managed to lose not just one but two elections," a senior Labor M.P. told us. Calmer heads than politicians agree. A London bookie set odds favoring a Tory victory in the next general election at 7-to-2.

That gives a salutary lesson to Britain's beleaguered Labor Party and to the Democratic Left everywhere. Labor posed an alternative to the Conservatives unacceptable to British voters, who crave a nuclear deterrent against the Soviet Union. Kinnock's unilateralism is not Labor's only problem. London's "Loony Left" elected new members to Parliament. Rising prosperity coincides with revived energy by the Thatcher government, which belatedly will cut income tax rates.

But the enormity of Labor's loss was disguised by Kinnock's charisma and his campaign's technical proficiency. Despite minor gains (concentrated in Scotland), Labor remains 147 seats behind the Conservatives — requiring an unprecedented leap forward next time to capture the government.

What's more, Labor in 1987 enjoyed assets unlikely to be duplicated. A relatively unknown Kinnock soared past Thatcher in approval polls after a brilliant biographical commercial on television (produced by Hugh Hudson of "Chariots of Fire" fame). That effect cannot be repeated. Nor is it likely the Socialists would outdo the Tories in technical proficiency two campaigns in a row.

Neither can Labor expect a slump from the prime minister. She does not enter her third term, as Ronald Reagan did his second, with an impoverished agenda. She may not be bold enough to suit the Right in dismantling the welfare state, but she will be more radical in her third term than her second. That means pursuing privatization and at long last bringing Britain's growth-depressing top tax rate below 50 percent.

None of this gives hope to the Socialists. But even long-range aspirations will stay dim if nuclear unilateralism persists as Labor policy. That is the private view of a substantial minority of the parliamentary party and perhaps one-third of the shadow Cabinet. The notion that defense means nothing to any Briton born after Dunkirk was exploded by the June 11 vote, cutting across age (and class) lines.

Moderate labor unions, who pay the party's bill, want a change. Union leaders are conferring with John Gilbert, a Labor back-bench defense and arms control expert who has been a lonely figure in his party, preaching against unilateralist idiocy. Although he gagged himself during the recent campaign, he is talking sense again.

But Roy Hattersley, Labor's moderate deputy leader, has not renewed his post-1983 election stand against unilateral disarmament. After this election, he said abandonment of the Kinnock position would do "almost irrevocable" damage to the party.

Indeed, able and combative doctrinaire leftists are included in newcomers to Labor ranks in the House of Commons.

Boland Does Not Apply To The President

President Reagan did not violate the Boland Amendment when he asked the leaders of foreign governments to contribute funds to help the Nicaraguan Contras.

The relevant language of the amendment during the period at issue prohibited "direct or indirect" support for the Contras from any funds available to "the CIA, the Department of Defense, any intelligence agency, or any other agency of the United States."

Very simply, the Boland Amendment does not apply to the president because he is not an "agency of the United States."

The Federal Trade Commission, the Internal Revenue Service and the Coast Guard are agencies of the United States. Few if any Americans, if asked to give a comprehensive list of all agencies of the United States, would include the president. The president is not an agency of anything. He is the president of the United States, the person in whom the Constitution vests all executive authority.

If Congress had intended the Boland Amendment's prohibitions to apply to the president, it could have said so. In the absence of a clear expression, Congress should not be assumed to have limited the president's ability to exercise his best judgment as to what is in the best interest of the United States. Whether the same considerations would apply to the president's subordinates would depend on whether they acted at his direction or on their own.

In some areas it may be all right for Congress to express its will in ambiguous terms and then leave it to the courts and others to decide what it really meant. But congressional fuzziness followed by expansive judicial interpretation is not acceptable in cases in which Congress attempts to regulate the head of another coordinate branch of government.

Under our separation-of-powers system, the dividing line between the responsibilities of Congress and the president is not always clear and bright. This is especially true in the area of foreign relations. It is quite clear that the Constitution contemplates a foreign-affairs role for both Congress and the president.

Tax Talk Will Likely Fade

RALEIGH — Someone must be slipping extra spikes into the punch served at legislative receptions.

There is so much tax-related legislation moving through the General Assembly this year that seats in finance committee meeting rooms are becoming extremely hard to find. In all, 215 different bills have been filed in the two houses and some significant tax increases remain alive. For example:

Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, chairman of the House Finance Committee, has proposed a statewide land conveyance increase that would double the existing $1 per $1,000 tax on the sale of real estate and add a tax to mortgages. It would raise $16 to $20 million a year.

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, had promised that his tax reform bill would not raise taxes. Now he and some friends have reconfigured the bill to eliminate the intangibles and inventory taxes, raise the corporate and individual income taxes and, in all, raise collections by $68 million a year.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, won House support for a one cent sales tax increase. The bill has been sidetracked in the Senate, but isn't dead.

Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham, has proposed a bill that would add sales tax to liquor sales. It would raise $10 million.

In both houses, occupancy taxes are being created for almost every hamlet with a motel and land transfer taxes are becoming the hottest rage since the hoola hoop.

What has happened to the normally cautious and conservative General Assembly? Don't these folks realize that they're elected to two-year terms and that there's an election next year? Have the gods gone crazy?

The chairmen of the two finance committees say there's nothing to worry about. This is all very normal. By the time the assembly breaks up in mid-July, maybe even by the time this column gets into print, they say, many of these tax bills will have been buried.

"We're in an ebb and flow," Miller said. "In the end, there will be a very fine grinding. Right now, everything is being put out on the table ... but they'll all be reviewed very carefully before you see any final action."

Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, Senate Finance chairman, said, "Sure we've seen a lot of wild bills but that's no different from any other year." By the time legislators leave town, he said, the wildest bills will be dead.

For example, Rauch said a sales tax increase will not pass in the Senate, and his committee backed that up the next day by defeating Watkins' bill. (But given the strife between Watkins and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan on school finance, it would be simplistic to say that any tax increase is dead before a compromise on schools is announced.)

Rauch also predicted that the Winner tax reform bill "will be revenue neutral. We don't need the money, regardless of what people say," Rauch said about the new money which Winner's bill would raise.

Miller agreed that the wilder bills would not become law, and he warned of the importance of a wide tax base. Speaking about Winner's bill, Miller said, "We can't affect the long standing stability of our revenue base." By that he means that the greater variety of taxes which the state collects, the less chance the state will get caught in a future revenue crunch.

In the end, the chairmen are probably right. While there appears to be a great deal of tax increase talk, most of the changes are probably doomed.

Strength For Today

Who owns this beautiful landscape over which you look. You do. Who owns the sunset, the beauty of the twilight, the quiet of the sunrise? The answer is of course the same — you do. Every man who has two eyes owns the landscape he looks upon, for the man who holds title to it and pays taxes on it cannot enjoy it more fully than does the stranger who pauses to drink in its beauty.

"Objects we ardently pursue," said the English philosopher, Herbert Spencer, "bring little happiness when gained. Most of our pleasures come from unexpected sources." Happiness is a condition of the heart.

All the possessions in the world will not make one happy if his mind is not at peace, and the man without a penny in his pocket can be happy if he has the qualities of heart upon which happiness is built.

South Africa: Will The Nation Have Repression Forever?

WASHINGTON — Last week South African President Botha laid bare the details of the Draconian security laws that he has approved to keep white South Africa safe from revolution for at least another year.

Beyond renewing the State of Emergency for a second year, Botha plugged a few loopholes in his regulations while confirming the overwhelming powers that have been exercised by the security forces in the last year. The longest document published last week concerned, inevitably, the press. By reissuing the full battery of censorship laws, some in slightly amended form, the government has succeeded in circumventing recent rulings by the Natal Supreme Court striking down various curbs on the media.

President Botha's decision to renew the State of Emergency and tighten its screws is a stark reminder that the struggle against apartheid is going to be a depressingly long fight. The black majority in South Africa is not only pitted against whites but it is also divided against itself.

The Pretoria government rationalizes its security measures on the grounds that the sweeping powers it took a year ago are responsible for the decline of unrest in African townships. Unfortunately, the record suggests otherwise. When the second nationwide state of emergency was announced 12 months ago, disorder rose to new heights and lasted at a fever pitch until declining in recent months. What is remarkable about it is not that it has faded recently but that it went on for so long despite 100 killings per month by security forces. The longest cycle of sustained insurrection in South African history may be subsiding but the spirit of resistance continues.

Any deduction that this inevitable exhaustion means the majority has conceded defeat is crazy. Rent strikes in black townships continue along with the intensification of black labor strikes. The black unions, which are ironically the product of Mr. Botha's only major reform, are becoming the vanguard of resistance against apartheid.

These facts alone are enough to demolish the argument that state of emergency is the answer to black unrest. Repression alone is no solution.

Just because some blacks have tired of throwing their lives away in the streets should not send a signal to those who oppose apartheid outside of South Africa that the gig is up. The majority of blacks in South Africa are simmering and organizing. They know their time will come. In this country, pressure must be applied to the next administration to dismantle all forms of American support for apartheid. The comfortable world in which we live has no right to consign the black majority in South Africa to oblivion.

The U.S. trade embargo against Libya has barely affected the North African state but has harmed the long-term interests of American companies, according to a recently-released General Accounting office (GAO) report.

Since President Reagan took office, a series of sanctions have been imposed against Tripoli in response to alleged Libyan involvement in terrorism. In January 1986, Reagan banned all trade between the two countries and ordered U.S. oil companies in Libya to leave. Despite intense pressure from Washington, however, other countries have refused to participate in America's trade war.

The sanctions' main impact has been on the five U.S. oil companies that were ordered to leave, says the report. They have suffered "a loss of revenue while Libya continues to reap the full benefit of their oilfield operations." The companies estimate their annual losses at between $2 million and $3 million.

The minimum wage, which once provided a family of three with enough income to escape poverty, now falls $2,100 short, according to a report issued recently by the Washington-based Center on Budget and Policy Priorities. While the current minimum wage of $3.35 an hour has remained unchanged since 1981, consumer prices have risen by 30 percent. After adjusting for inflation, the value of the current minimum wage is at its lowest level since 1955.

A full-time, year-round worker earning the current minimum wage will bring home $6,968 a year, only 77 percent of the estimated 1987 poverty threshold of $9,044 for a family of three. This contrasts with the 1960s and 1970s when the minimum wage generally provided enough income for a three-person family to escape poverty.

Democrats Wind Up Primary Strategy Session

By JOSEPH B. FRAZIER
Associated Press Writer
ATLANTA (AP) — The Democratic Party must avoid being labeled again as a captive of special interests if it hopes to win the presidency in 1988, former Virginia Gov. Charles Robb said today at a party strategy session on next year's Super Tuesday primaries.

Robb, a founder of the Democratic Leadership Council, which is sponsoring the two-day summit ending today, said he hopes the council will "shift the political debate from more parochial issues to those issues of central concern to all Americans."

"If our party's platform becomes a hodgepodge of special pleading ... then we will almost certainly be very disappointed next November 9th," he said.

While Robb emphasized the need to appeal to moderate voters, Republican observers outside the meeting were eager to publicize statements made Sunday by Americans for Democratic Action.

ADA leader Rep. Ted Weiss of New York said at a meeting in Washington that all Democratic the presidential candidates "are to the left of center sufficiently that there are some supporters of all" in his group of liberals.

"When we see messages like liberals are happy, that's what we want, because if they liberalize the primary, we've got no problem in the general election," said Marty Connors, secretary of the Southern Republican Exchange, which closely parallels the Democratic Leadership Council.

Robb today described the Democratic presidential contenders as "an attractive field of principled and progressive leaders."

The council has billed Super Tuesday as a chance to increase moderate and conservative influence in the party. On March 8, 1988, there will be presidential primaries or caucuses in 20 states, most of them in the South.

The Democrats' two-day discussion of Super Tuesday was to urge party officials to get the Democratic vote out March 8, but it grew as candidates made time for appearances.

Robb said Sunday that the interest demonstrated the importance of the batch of primaries after the departure of the one-time front-runner, former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart.

The question of what Hart's backers will do has been much discussed at the meeting, often privately.

One Hart national co-chairman, Jon Mills, speaker of the Florida House of Representatives, said Sunday night that that decision probably won't come until early September.

"We're realizing we don't know that much about some of the candidates," said Mills, who has been leading an effort to keep much of the Southeastern Hart organization intact. "We've been doing more listening than talking."

"We have to make sure we make the right decision for the party," he said. The possibilities "are wide open."

The heads of the Hart organizations from 14 states attended the conference.

Some members of Hart's national staff now work in the campaign of Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, while Will Cheek, formerly Hart's Tennessee coordinator, is working for Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn.

One member of the Hart group who spoke on condition of anonymity said some are leaning toward Robb, who has shown little public interest in a candidacy, and for Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn if Robb doesn't run. Both Robb and Nunn are attending.

Robb said, "It is the world's worse-kept secret that I have been trying to get Senator Nunn to join the race, but not yet."

He said he thinks Nunn should wait until the last minute to declare. Nunn has not ruled out running.

In Nunn doesn't run, would Robb? "Let's not address that one quite yet," he said.

Dukakis, who has declared his candidacy, was less evasive and frequently points out that he has balanced nine state budgets in a row.

He said that Hart people had contacted him and that he believed they would be "a real boost."

Gore said he would announce his candidacy June 29 in his hometown of Carthage.

Missouri U.S. Rep. Richard Gephardt, a declared candidate, said, "We will win in 1988 because we bring a message of hope and opportunity."

Hattie Babbitt, speaking for her husband, declared candidate and former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, said he "governed in the progressive tradition in a conservative state" and could win Republican votes.

Arkansas Gov. William Clinton, who has not declared whether he will run, said Democrats would lose unless the party nominee gets at least half of the South's electoral votes.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, another possible candidate, said the country needed "a foreign policy that is not foreign to our values."

Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois, who campaigned in Georgia on Saturday, said he would send representatives to the conference.

Debonaire Fred Astaire Dies In Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fred Astaire, whose debonaire elegance and flowing, graceful style made him the most acclaimed dancer in movie history, died today of pneumonia. He was 88.

He died at Century City Hospital, said spokesman Stan Otake.

As a dancer, Astaire was a perfectionist who prided himself in never repeating a number in his films. In "Holiday Inn," he danced around exploding firecrackers. In "Royal Wedding," a trick of photography made it appear that Astaire was dancing up the walls and across the ceiling.

He disliked the big production numbers that were much in vogue in the 1930s, and some of his most memorable dances were on rooftops and balconies, in gardens and living rooms. His entire 5-foot-9 frame flowed to the music.

Audiences knew that the excellence on the screen was the real thing, with no fancy editing touches to embellish or detract. Astaire insisted that during his numbers, cameras show him full-length, and preferably capture the scene without any cuts.

"I figure if I'm going to do something, it's got to be the best I know how," he said. "Otherwise there's no point in doing it."

Astaire's best was unsurpassed, said Balanchine: "He is the most interesting, the most inventive, the most elegant dancer of our times ... You see a little bit of Astaire in everybody's dancing — a pause here, a move there. It was all Astaire's originally."

In 1948, the Motion Picture Academy presented him with an honorary award for his "unique artistry and his contributions to the technique of musical pictures."

In 1961, the American Film Institute presented him with its Lifetime Achievement Award on national television. Baryshnikov, speaking for fellow dancers with mock seriousness, said: "We hate him, you know. He gives us complexes because he's too perfect. His perfection is almost an absurdity."

Emcee David Niven described Astaire as "a kind, modest, quiet-living man with an aversion to parties; I'm sure at this moment he is suffering immensely." In his response, Astaire remained modest, giving credit to his show business start to Adele, who had died a few weeks before.

"I went along for the ride. She was the whole show."

Astaire made his television debut in 1958, and "An Evening with Fred Astaire" won nine Emmys. He made three more television specials, all with Barrie Chase as his partner, by 1968. Then, almost 70, he decided it was time to stop dancing.

"It's a helluva strenuous life, the way I do a show," he explained. "You beat the floor for eight weeks of rehearsal, then you tape it. That's not for this fellow, not anymore."

He told The Times, "I don't want to be the oldest performer in captivity. I don't know why anybody should expect a dancer to go on forever. No athletic career goes on forever."

But he remained trim, playing golf and tennis, going to bed early and taking an interest in horses.

Astaire played his first non-dancing role as a scientist in "On the Beach," in 1959, to critical acclaim. His other straight roles included "The Pleasure of His Company," "Midas Run," "The Amazing Dobermans" and the 1981 chiller "Ghost Story."

He was nominated for an Oscar as a supporting actor for "The Towering Inferno" in 1975 and won an Emmy in 1978 for "A Family Upside Down."

For the 1976 "That's Entertainment, Part II," Gene Kelly talked him into doing a brief number. Astaire remarked, "Gene and I didn't dance. We did half a minute here, half a minute there. Dancing is a whole other thing."

Astaire's first wife, New York socialite Phyllis Baker Potter, died of cancer in 1954, after 21 years of marriage and two children — Fred Jr., born in 1936, and Ava, born in 1942. The family also included Peter Hoffer, Mrs. Astaire's son from a previous marriage.

After her death, Astaire remained unmarried until his surprise wedding June 28, 1980, to 35-year-old Robyn Smith. They shared an interest in horses — Miss Smith was a jockey, and Astaire had long been a successful owner of race horses, including the champion Triplecote.

Reagan Blasts Democrats

and limit increases in defense spending to the rate of inflation.

Reagan, who has said that America's allies raised complaints at the recent Venice summit about the U.S. budget deficits "with some justification," said today that the more-than-50-month recovery from the recession of 1981-82 is now in danger.

He cited two dangers: deficit spending and a trade-sanction bill that he said would launch the United States into a trade war.

"There are some people up in Washington who seem determined to destroy our economic expansion and send us right back into the malaise and stagflation of the 1970s," he said.

In the use of the word stagflation, Reagan was alluding to a condition that economists describe as a period of high inflation and relatively low business growth.

In a later speech to a Melbourne Chamber of Commerce luncheon, Reagan blamed "special interests" for high deficits.

Without identifying those groups, the president said that "last year we got the special interests out of the tax code. Now, it's time to get them out of the budget."

The problem, he said, is a federal government that "over-taxes, over-spends, over-borrows and over-regulates."

Reagan's summer trip series, with a trip expected each week through mid-August, is aimed at garnering public support for two longtime goals: a balanced-budget amendment and line-item veto authority.

In his weekly radio address to the nation Saturday, Reagan lashed out against the Democratic budget plan.

In his more than six years in office, Reagan said, his alternatives on congressionally approved budget legislation have been to "take it, pork and all, or veto it."

"This is no way to run a country," he said. "This is why, in the coming weeks, I'll be taking my case to you, the American people, asking for your support to bring fiscal sanity back to our government."

The budget deficit in 1986 hit a record $220.7 billion, and the administration is forecasting it will decline to $173.2 billion this year. But figures released by the Treasury Department last week showed the government amassed a $35.7 billion deficit in May, the largest imbalance in a year.

Reagan's own budget proposals for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 call for about the same amount of total spending as the $1 trillion plan now before Congress, but major differences remain on priorities.

The Democratic members of Congress would spend more on domestic programs, Reagan more on the military, and they are far apart on the question of tax increases, with the president opposing any significant levies.

Dictaphone, which employs about 600 people, produces nearly all of the parts for its recording equipment in-house, Peterson said.

Eight Reported Dead In Crash

FORT HOOD, Texas (AP) — A military helicopter crashed at Fort Hood today during training exercises, killing at least eight people, authorities said.

There was one survivor in the crash which occurred shortly after 10 a.m., Fort Hood spokeswoman Jeanie Kitchens said.

The victims were believed to be reserves from an Oklahoma unit, Ms. Kitchens said.

The aircraft was participating in a military training exercise called Starburst '87, she said.

Falwell: God Will Handle PTL 'Monkey Business'

By WILLIAM STRACENER
Associated Press Writer
TEGA CAY, S.C. (AP) — Lawyer Melvin Belli today said a "caretaker" should run PTL while he helps Jim and Tammy Bakker fight to regain the ministry, but the Rev. Jerry Falwell called their efforts "un-Christian shenanigans" and said God would decide the battle.

Pat Boone would be a good choice for the temporary leader of the 518,000-member ministry, Belli said.

"I think we ought to get Pat Boone as sort of a caretaker in this and let him sit in," Belli said. Boone "has no axe to grind. Reverend Falwell said he would like Pat Boone to be somewhat of a caretaker."

Boone knows Falwell and has been a guest on the "PTL Club" television program. "Both Falwell and Bakker seem to like Pat Boone and have endorsed him. Definitely Bakker would go along with him," Belli said minutes before stepping onto an airport and flying back to San Francisco.

Boone was not available to comment to reporters. A message on his telephone answering machine was not immediately returned.

On Sunday, Belli told reporters "the odds are very, very much in favor" of the Bakkers returning to the TV ministry. Belli met with the couple for four hours Sunday in the PTL-owned home they are occupying on Lake Wylie.

Bakker said Sunday for the first time that he wants to regain control of the ministry he handed over to Falwell in March amid a sex scandal.

Falwell said in a telephone interview Sunday from his home in Lynchburg, Va., that the fate of PTL, which owes $72 million, is in the hands of the bankruptcy court.

"I am sure the federal court will take into consideration that it was under Reverend Bakker's leadership that the terrible violations which brought about the virtual collapse of the ministry occurred," he said.

"Most of us who who love Reverend Bakker and who love the PTL ministry are saddened that he would put himself ahead of the survival of the ministry," he said. "However, I believe that God will overrule all this monkey business and will recover this ministry."

Falwell added that Bakker had a full week to reconsider turning the ministry over to its present board.

"It was not until some of his dissident friends encouraged him to resume leadership at PTL that all of these un-Christian shenanigans began," Falwell said.

Belli said Sunday that Bakker wasn't properly advised when he gave up the ministry he founded to Falwell. "Had we been in at the beginning of this, Jimmy never would have resigned," he said.

Calling Bakker his "finest client" in 53 years of practicing law, Belli said the defrocked Pentecostal minister's side has not been told. "We're going to tell it without venom" over the next two to three days, he said.

Belli, an Episcopalian, said he wants to meet with PTL officials and the old board of directors. He also said he would like to set up a meeting between the Bakkers and Falwell.

Belli, 79, has represented Jack Ruby, who killed John F. Kennedy's assassin, Lee Harvey Oswald; victims of the Bhopal, India, chemical leak in 1984; and families of those killed when the Soviets shot down a Korean Air Lines jet in 1983.

Bakker said Sunday he wanted to make peace but had to seek legal counsel when the ministry's new leaders filed for reorganization.

"Our desires and goal is that the ministry continue, that all creditors be paid 100 percent and that all the partners have fulfilled the vision that we gave them to have a place for retreat," Bakker said.

When asked if he expected to resume control of the ministry despite recent allegations concerning his sex life and spending practices, Bakker said, "They accused Jesus Christ of the same thing. They said he was a wine-bibber, that he went out with publicans and sinners and prostitutes. Just because people accuse you doesn't change the call of God on your life."

Mrs. Bakker added, "And that doesn't make you guilty, either."

Meanwhile, contractor Roe Messner said Saturday that he and other PTL creditors are working on a plan to reorganize the ministry in case Falwell's plan in federal bankruptcy court does not call for full payment of debts.

Messner, in a telephone interview from Wichita, Kan., said he does not care who runs PTL as long as he gets the money he is due. Messner said the ministry owes him $14 million for work he did at Heritage USA while Bakker was in charge.

PTL's business managers were given 120 days in which to present their reorganization plan to the bankruptcy court in Columbia. The plan must be accepted by a majority of the creditors, which include contractors and the TV stations that carry the ministry's program. PTL, which stands for People That Love, or Praise the Lord, listed 1,400 creditors.

Today, Jessica Hahn, the former church secretary with whom Bakker had a sexual encounter seven years ago, told ABC's "Good Morning America" program she never had been paid "hush money" because of the encounter.

Ms. Hahn said she was paid $20,000 plus monthly interest "for damages," but did not specify what the damages were.

Belli said Ms. Hahn "demeaned herself" by appearing on television.

Miss N.C. Will Praise State

By MARGARET BELL
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Lori Wrenn Boggs, newly crowned Miss North Carolina, says she will tout North Carolina as one of the friendliest states when she takes part in the Miss America competition.

"We've got the beaches; we've got the mountains; we've got the flatlands," said Miss Boggs, who won the 1987 title Saturday night. "We've got anything you want, and I really feel that people here are down to earth. They're very friendly people."

"I think that's a real positive attribute for North Carolina, and I hope I come across that way too," she said.

Miss Boggs, 26, who had competed for the state title two times previously, was the oldest contestant in the pageant.

"I believe strongly in the Miss America program," she said. "In fact, the last five or six years I've been involved with it. And indirectly it's helped me gain my job that I had and also helped pay for over half of my education."

"I really wanted to go back and repay what they had given to me," she said Sunday at her first news conference.

Miss Boggs, a Kannapolis native, first entered the Miss North Carolina Pageant in 1983, and was representing Cabarrus County for the second time. She was named the second runner-up as Miss Western Piedmont in 1985. Along with the title, Miss Boggs won a $5,000 scholarship.

This was the last year that Miss Boggs was eligible for the pageant. She said her age probably gave her an advantage over the other, younger contestants.

"I feel like what it did was put an advantage for me because (with) maturity and experience — getting out in the world and being able to interact with people — you gain more insight as to how you should approach people," she said. "So I think that was more of an advantage for me."

"I don't think I look 26," she said.

Miss Boggs won the talent competition in preliminaries by singing "You Don't Have To Say You Love Me," a 1967 hit she chose after she heard it played on a radio in a doctor's office. She says she hasn't decided whether to use it in the upcoming Miss America Pageant, slated for September in Atlantic City, N.J.

Miss Boggs resigned from her job as pharmaceutical company representative after winning the title.

BAKKER BANNER — Vicki Goodman Meadows, president of a new group called the Bring Bakkers Back Club, has set up her organization in a Holiday Inn suite near Carowinds, about a mile from Heritage USA at Fort

Mill, S.C. The 15-foot banner than hangs outside the hotel asks people to call if they want to join a crusade to put Jim and Tammy Bakker back at the helm of the ailing PTL ministry. (AP Laserphoto)

Tobacco Coalition In N.C. Crosses Party Lines

By The Associated Press
The North Carolina Congressional delegation — Republican and Democrat — stands together on the issue of tobacco, but observers say that building a coalition to protect what some consider a killer is tricky business.
“We’ve made somewhat of an art form out of tobacco politics,” said Rep. Charlie Rose, a Democrat and chairman of the Tobacco and Peanuts subcommittee of the House Agriculture Committee and the House’s leading tobacco spokesman.
The delegation — with 11 House members and two senators — is not big, like those from California, Texas and New York. It is not the most senior. Its members head few important committees, and rarely make lists of the most influential members of Congress.
But only six other states are major tobacco producers. North Carolina produces the most.

“The North Carolinians tend to vote together, and cohesiveness enhances the power of a delegation exponentially when it’s not one of the largest states,” John Brademas, a former House member who is now president of New York University, told the Charlotte Observer.
Former House Speaker Tip O’Neill, D-Mass., used to view the North Carolina House delegation as something of a bellwether, said Kirk O’Donnell, former counsel to O’Neill.
“People would be very interested in where the North Carolina delegation was going on a vote, because oftentimes that would determine whether Democrats would be in a majority or a minority,” O’Donnell said.
Party differences can still be strong, and the delegation remains moderate to conservative. But over the past 10 years, despite increasing competitiveness of Republicans, the North Carolina House delegation has become more liberal, moving from resistance to civil rights laws and strong support for defense to majority support for extending the Voting Rights Act and serious questioning of President Reagan’s defense budget.

From 1965 to 1974, North Carolina House members voted with the chamber’s conservative coalition 85 percent of the time, according to a study by Merle Black, associate professor of political science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. But from 1975 through 1986, the delegation sided with the conservative coalition 72 percent of the time, according to a Charlotte Observer study.
Liberal or conservative, observers say North Carolina tobacco politics seems to be constantly at work.
“You can’t walk through the cloakroom when one of them isn’t laying in wait for you,” said Rep. Brian Donnelly, D-Mass.

But tobacco is not a key issue to all North Carolinians.
“I haven’t made any deals on tobacco,” said Rep. Alex McMillan. Charlotte dominates his district, and there are few tobacco farms there. And as a Republican he has limited leverage with the Democrats who control the House. But McMillan still lines up behind tobacco when the call comes.
Former Rep. Eugene Johnston of Greensboro thinks defending tobacco is a burden that sometimes leads to bad votes.
“The victories on tobacco, we paid too dear a price for them,” Johnston said. “We would trade off our daddy’s gold watch or anything else precious for tobacco, and that’s an awful position to be in If we didn’t have that cross to bear we would be effective, but that is a heavy cross to bear, and everybody knows how to jerk your chain.”

Protecting tobacco sometimes leaves the North Carolinians little leverage and scant remaining trade power as other issues confront Congress. They must often promise their votes up front and early.
“When you do that you give away some independence, both as individuals and as a delegation,” says a veteran Washington political adviser.
But Rose, lumping textiles with tobacco, says the problems of protecting them can be exaggerated.
“Sure, if those two commodities’ problem areas weren’t out there in front of us, we could save our bullets for other things,” Rose said. “But I think we’ve done pretty good on all fronts, and the discipline, and this is very important, that comes from having to double your power through coalition building has made us better legislators.”

That coalition building sometimes means North Carolinians vote to spend federal money in other states. Often, instead of asking for money for North Carolina, they request support for tobacco. Nevertheless, many observers see no direct connection between protecting tobacco and being 50th in per capita federal income.
Federal money is “related to other factors, demographics and the like,” such as big defense contractors, said Alan Ehrenhalt, political editor of Congressional Quarterly. “What you really need is Lockheed, or something like that.”
Others say the figures reflect traditional North Carolina distrust of Uncle Sam’s largesse. One lobbyist says the low rating reflects the delegation’s low seniority. The delegation is the current 100th Congress is one of the most junior the state has sent in recent years.

Insurance Costs Pinching Small Businesses

GREENSBORO (AP) — Insurance costs have helped drain the water slide business, ground hang gliders at Grandfather Mountain, thrown horseback riding near Linville, beached sailboard lessons at Belews Lake and generally have put a crimp in recreation and leisure business in the state.

"Insurance certainly was a factor. Economically, it was not feasible," said John Blackburn, general manager of Linville Resort-The Eseeola Lodge, which did not offer horseback riding this season for the first time in 50 years, partly because of the high cost of insurance.

At Grandfather Mountain resort, owner Hugh Morton discontinued daily hang gliding exhibitions because of problems with organizing a full-time team of pilots and because of concern about insurance coverage.

"That's part of the whole complex picture," Morton said of the insurance. He said resort officials worried about using the U.S. Hang Gliding Association coverage because it is provided by a Bahamas-based company not recognized by the North Carolina Department of Insurance.

Morton said recently that hang gliding exhibitions would resume for weekends only and that he would try to get additional coverage.

Ski and Tennis Station of Greensboro and Winston-Salem discontinued sailboard lessons at Belews Lake because of trouble finding insurance. Despite a clean record, the insurance carrier that covered lessons nationally decided to drop the coverage.

The company still rents out sailboards at the lake, but the only insurance it could find for lessons was through an off-shore company.

"It was not what we considered adequate coverage," Ski and Tennis owner Doug Roberts said.

A Wake County water slide operator decided it was cheaper to get insurance by running just one of his two slides.

State officials say it is all part of the settling-out that amusement businesses are going through after the General Assembly last session required amusement businesses to carry at least $1 million liability coverage.

That requirement was sparked by studies which showed that few amusement operators had any coverage.

"When we started surveying, we discovered many of these people hadn't carried a nickel of insurance their whole lives," said state Labor Commissioner John Brooks. "Both they and the public were taking a big chance."

The law caught water park operators unaware, Brooks said.

"They're deciding in some cases not to operate in the same way or as many facilities," Brooks said. "It is my understanding that it's a combination of the cost of insurance and, increasingly, the liability if you don't have insurance. What they're doing is adjusting to that law and what it requires."

"Water slides are your biggest problem right now," said William Young, administrator of the state marketing assistant program, the state insurance department's program that tries to find coverage for commercial ventures that are having trouble finding it.

"You can get water slide coverage on the open market, but the expense is prohibitive," Young said.

At Emerald Pointe in Greensboro, "in excess" of $200,000 was spent to get $1 million coverage, said Terry Henson, president of Emerald Pointe Co. "It is a squeeze."

"It wasn't so much that it was hard to get. It was there," Henson said. But "the insurance today is expensive."

Umbrella coverage has "almost become totally cost prohibitive," Henson said.

Young said the 1986 federal Risk Retention Act has loosened up the insurance market by allowing groups, such as water park operators, to get together and purchase insurance. The purchasing groups are exempted from state regulations such as having to submit policies for approval.

Two water park associations, an amusement company cooperative and one for a horse association have filed with the state, Young said. He said a water slide operator could pay $25,000 on the open market for $1 million coverage for a single slide but, as part of a purchasing group under the Risk Retention Act, can pay about $4,000 for the same coverage.

Drug Lawsuit

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — The Tennessee Valley Authority has asked a federal judge to dismiss a $3 million lawsuit filed by 10 employees over drug testing of some nuclear plant workers.

TVA said the employees have not gone through all available employee grievance procedures. Only three of the workers have started the process and none have completed it, the federal agency said.

Wedding Vows Said Sunday

Judy Gail Lynch and David Morris Carraway were united in marriage Sunday at 3 p.m. in St. James United Methodist Church. The Rev. Caswell

MRS. CARRAWAY

E. Shaw officiated at the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the foster daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Holland Garner Sr. of Greenville and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Carraway of Plymouth.

A program of nuptial music was presented by Francis Cain, organist. Susie Pair, cousin of the bride, sang "Doubly Good to You," "The Irish Blessing" and "The Lord's Prayer."

The bride was given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father. She wore her aunt's original gown by Miriam of ivory slipper satin fashioned with a fitted bodice and sweetheart neckline with a yoke insert of Venice-type lace. The long fitted sleeves ended with Venice lace cuffs. The full skirt featured knise pleated peplum that fell into a cathedral train. She wore an ivory laced hat with a veil of illusion. She carried a cascade bouquet of cymbidium orchids and white roses.

Frankie Lynch Sutton of Clearfield, Utah, sister of the bride, was the honor attendant. Bridesmaids included Elaine Garner Denton of Greenville, sister of the bride, Tammy Lawson Duggins of Winston-Salem, cousin of the bride, Beth Carraway Price and Susie Carraway Peele, both of Plymouth and sisters of the bridegroom. The attendants wore tea length gowns of imported apricot French latticework lace bordered in a floral patterned chantilly lace motif over matching satin. The gowns were fashioned with a sheer yoke with the scalloped lace defining the sabrina neckline. The short caplet sleeves were enhanced with the patterned lace. The waistline of the gathered skirt was accentuated with a satin cummerbund and bow. A scalloped border of lace edged the hemline. Each carried a garden cluster of ivory gerbera daisies tied with satin ribbons and greenery.

Honorary attendants were Jane Maloney of New Bern, Gwen Casey and Kathy Watson of Greenville, Molly Rogerson and Kathy Hicks of Raleigh. They each carried a long-stemmed white rose with peach and ivory ribbons.

The father of the bridegroom was the best man. Ushers were Barry Lynch of Pilot Mountain, brother of the bride, Carroll Carraway of Raleigh, brother of the bridegroom, Ike Williams of Greenville and Robert Rasberry of Grifton.

The mother of the bride selected a formal length blue silk dress and a white orchid corsage. The mother of the bridegroom chose a formal gown of mauve chiffon over taffeta and a white orchid corsage. The grandmothers, Mrs. W.O. Griffin Sr. and Mrs. B.F. Britton, wore carnation corsages.

The wedding was directed by Christy Priestly Garner, sister-in-law of the bride.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall and guests were greeted by Dr. and Leslie Holland Garner Jr. of Chapel Hill, brother of the bride. Others assisting were Louise Hill, Ernestine Garner, Katie Lawson, Beth Everette, Elizabeth Ramsaur, Lisa Mills, Selma Rogers, Terry Bryant, Cindy Wiseman, Sharon Porterfield, Kim Daniels and Marsha McLawhorn.

A rehearsal pig-picking dinner was held Saturday evening at the home of the bride's parents and hosted by the family of the bridegroom.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to Florida.

The bride is a graduate of East Carolina University and is employed as a teacher with Pitt County Schools.

The bridegroom attended Louisburg College, is a graduate of Pitt Community College and is employed with Garner Wholesale Merchandisers Inc.

Double Ring Vows Said On Saturday

KINSTON — The Northwest Christian Church was the scene of the Saturday wedding of Sheryl Ann Cummings of Kinston and William H. Clifton Jr. of Greenville. The Rev. Donald W. McKinney of Greenville conducted the 3 p.m. double ring ceremony.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd F. Cummings Jr. of Kinston and Ruth H. Clifton of Greenville and the late William H. Clifton Sr.

Wedding music was performed by organist Johnnie Rice, pianist Edwin Bradbury, soloist Susan Carson and cellist Nancy B. Kosteck.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father. She wore a formal gown of white silk organza over taffeta featuring a sweetheart neckline. The short sleeves and elongated waist were embellished with alencon lace. The full skirt and semi cathedral train were bordered with alencon lace. The single tiered veil of silk illusion was attached to a halo of alencon lace accented with pearl sprays. It had a pouf of silk illusion in back. Her bouquet was of white orchids and pink bridal rosebuds interspersed with ivy and mixed greenery.

Frankie Louise Wood of Raleigh was honor attendant. She wore a floor length gown of pink print polished cotton designed with a scooped neckline and pinafore sleeves. The long dirndl skirt fell from a basque waistline and V-back.

The bridesmaids were attired like the honor attendant. They were Marla Faye Boone, cousin of the bride, Joy Fowler Wiley and Chrys Bridwell, all of Kinston, and Ginger M. Clark of Rocky Mount.

David Clifton of New Bern, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Ushers included Don Edwards, Edgar Taft, Benji Doughtie, Charles Young, and Clint James, all of Greenville, and Taylor Carson of Bethel.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the church fellowship hall. Guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Roger Lee, Charles Radford Sr. and Charles Radford Jr. Punch was poured by Mrs. Warren Creech and Mrs. Douglas Noble. Cake was served by Mrs. Harold Mazingo and Mrs. William Croom. Birdseed roses were distributed by Murry Stroud, David Heath and Kelly Heath, nephews and niece of the bride, and Ashley Hale, niece of the bridegroom. Goodbyes were said by Mr. and Mrs. James H. Fields and Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Howard.

A rehearsal dinner was held at the Baron and Bee given by the mother of the bridegroom. An outdoor wedding breakfast given by Mr. and Mrs. Chuck Wiley and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fowler was held at the Fowler home in Kinston.

Other parties and showers honoring the couple included a bridesmaids luncheon, a bachelor party, bachelorette party, several showers, dinner party, and cocktail party.

The bride graduated from Kinston High School, Louisburg College and East Carolina University. She is employed with the Lenoir County school system.

The bridegroom, a graduate of J.H. Rose High School, attended Wayne Community College. He is self-employed with Bill Clifton Insurance Agency in Greenville.

VACUUM FREQUENCY

It's true! Most homeowners aren't interested in carpet maintenance because their busy schedules leave little time to worry about those abrasive soils slowly accumulating—that is, until carpet replacement time arrives! Then, like new year's resolutions never kept, we vow to "do it differently this time!"

But what if the job could be accomplished with better results in less time?! Janitorial contractors must vacuum quantities of carpet nightly. If we used their techniques, time spent vacuuming would be cut by half...OK, one third!

First, how often? I'm tempted to suggest daily vacuuming, hoping that some will be accomplished every other day. I'll be practical, however, recognizing that your home's as active as ours, and you're lucky to get to the carpet twice a week without your teenager accusing you of "getting carried away with this vacuuming thing!" Point is, you're better off doing a thorough job bi-weekly than a "half-way" job more frequently. Traffic lanes should be vacuumed twice and entry areas four or five times. Semi-annually, you should consider hand-vacuuming entry areas with a crevice tool. It's amazing how this will improve the appearance of the carpet and greatly extend its life.

Here's How

To save time, select a vacuum with a 30-foot electrical cord and plug it into an outlet near the center of the area being vacuumed. Begin near that outlet, constantly working away so the cord never gets in front of your vacuum. Develop a procedure, and you'll be surprised how efficiently the job can be completed.

Finally, clip sprouting tufts as soon as they appear, particularly on loop-pile carpet. This avoids pulling out an entire row (similar to a run in your stockings). Raking or combing the nap of shags or Saxons in traffic areas is essential to prevent the formation of hard, matted rows of yarn (corn-rowing).

The average carpet contains 79% gritty soil which, at least in theory, can be vacuumed out. Let's concentrate on keeping the sand box in the back yard—not in the carpet where it cuts life expectancy in half! ©FCF 1987

Family Shuts Him Out After Closing Door On Wife

DEAR ABBY: I recently married a lovely woman I'll call Carole. My mother did not approve of her because she was a divorcee with two children. (We are both in our late 20s.) My brother was my best man. My family came to the church but did not go to the reception. In fact, they walked out the side door immediately following the ceremony.

My brother is getting married soon and I had already agreed to be his best man. When the wedding invitation arrived, I was shocked to see that it was addressed to me only! I asked my brother if it was some kind of oversight and he said no, Carole was not invited because Mother didn't want her there.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

I sat down and wrote my brother a letter because I couldn't tell him face to face how hurt I was. I also told him that unless my wife was invited, I could not be his best man. I asked him to please come to see me so we could talk things over. I heard nothing from him, so I called and asked if he wanted to talk, and he hung up on me. I haven't heard from him since.

The last line of my letter was:

"When Carole and I took our marriage vows, we two were made one, and I cannot send half of me to your wedding."

Was I wrong? Should I have gone and left my wife at home? (She told me it was my decision.) — HURT IN LYNN, MASS.

DEAR HURT: You were not wrong. I applaud your loyalty. Please greet your lucky wife for me.

DEAR ABBY: A while back you answered a woman's query about the comparison of a man's eating habits to his lovemaking. She was in love with a man who ate fast and she was concerned that his quick satisfaction of his physical need for food might prophesy a similar quick satisfaction of his physical need for sex.

You advised her not to be concerned — if she loved him, she should marry him.

At the time, I wasn't sure of your advice. Now I am, Abby, you were right on the nose. I now know what great sex is, and it's with this man who eats like he hasn't eaten in six weeks. Please print this as validation of your advice to others, who, like me, put your advice on hold. Sign me ... YUM

P.S. On what did you base your conclusion?

DEAR YUM: Just common sense and good manners. A gentleman never keeps a lady waiting.

Leader Will Talk

prisoned people and the lifting of house arrest order for Kim Dae-jong," said Roh.

The government has said more than 8,000 people have been arrested since disturbances erupted June 10, with many sentenced to brief jail terms by summary courts.

Roh said he and Chun also discussed other reforms, including increased freedom of the press. He said the government would assemble a package of reforms to be released after talks with the opposition. He gave no details.

The latest developments came as the United States stepped up its efforts to help restore political calm in South Korea.

U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Gaston J. Sigur, the top Asian policy official, is due to arrive in Seoul on Tuesday to spearhead American efforts at helping restore calm. The United States has some 40,000 troops based in South Korea under a mutual defense pact.

Thomas Dunlop, political counselor of the U.S. Embassy, paid a call on Kim Dae-jung at his home, where the men discussed the political situation.

American diplomats routinely visit opposition leaders as part of U.S. policy of maintaining contact with different political groups.

Chun and Roh are former generals and have been close associates since they were cadets at the Korean Military Academy. Roh played a key role in Chun's rise to power in 1980 following the assassination of President Park Chung-hee.

Ronald McDonald House Opens the United States and in Australia, Austria, Germany and England.

Bill Freelove, owner of local McDonald's franchises, pointed out the thoroughness of the effort. He gave special acknowledgement to his wife, Sallie, and to Judy Morgan, who worked hard on the interior design of the house. He said "Judy and her group have given the house a personality. It's a happy home, not an institution."

Reynolds May, conceiver of the idea of having a annual golf tournament to benefit the house, was acknowledged by several of the dedication speakers. At the dedication it was pointed out that the golf tournament is likely to be, in future years, the major fund-raiser for continuing operation of the house.

Two parents of children who have had serious illness were on the program — Sue Styers Moffitt of Farmville and John A. Allison of Wilson. Each has played a major role in the development of the house. Mrs. Moffitt has served as president of the board of directors of the house, representing the parents' component of the effort. Allison has been chairman of the capital fund-raising campaign.

Mrs. Moffitt, whose daughter Kelly had leukemia nine years ago, told of her and husband's personal awareness of the value of such a house because of having spent weeks in a motel while their daughter was hospitalized there. Allison, whose child was hospitalized in Richmond and who, with his wife, Betty, had use of a Ronald McDonald House there, spoke about "all the goodness in people that a project like this points up." He said working with "the breadth of support" that has come from every part of the region the house serves and from every sector of society has been spiritually uplifting to him and others.

Pitt County was acknowledged for having provided the land so close to the hospital for the house. Charles McLawhorn, chairman of the county commissioners, expressed the county's joy that the house is here available to whoever needs its services.

Norma Van Veld represented the Pitt County Memorial Hospital board of trustees. She expressed delight at the hospital's having the ongoing support of the house. She also told of her thankfulness that children and their parents from throughout the region can have their anxieties relieved by the support they will receive by staying in the house and being with others with similar circumstances.

Syrian Chief Vows Freedom

curity sources in Bonn today told The Associated Press that the government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl decided against extraditing Hamadi. The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the decision was based on fear for the lives of West German hostages Rudolf Cordes and Alfred Schmidt, who were kidnapped in Beirut shortly after Hamadi's arrest.

The sources were confirming a report in today's editions of the Die Welt newspaper in Bonn that said Hamadi would not be extradited. They said the decision will be made official in a Wednesday meeting of the West German Cabinet.

Security sources also said Attorney General Edwin Meese was expected to visit Bonn on Tuesday to try to get West German officials to change their minds about the extradition.

Kanaan was quoted today as saying Syrian President Hafez Assad was "particularly concerned" about the abduction of Glass, Ali Osseiran and their driver in a south Beirut Shiite Moslem district Wednesday.

Kanaan traveled from Damascus to Beirut Sunday and conferred with Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, spiritual guide of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, Lebanon's most militant Shiite Moslem faction.

Brig. Gen. Saeed Bairakdar, commander-in-chief of Syria's 25,000 troops in northern and eastern Lebanon, and Maj. Gen. Izzat Zeidan, commander of the 7,500-strong Syrian army contingent in Moslem west Beirut, attended the meeting.

The three generals then held a 10-minute meeting with Lebanese Defense Minister Adel Osseiran, who said afterwards Assad has ordered Syrian troops in Beirut to "do the utmost" to release his son and the two other captives.

Osseiran, who heads a prominent Shiite conservative clan, has repeatedly accused Hezbollah, or the Party of God, of staging the abduction.

"I am very optimistic," Osseiran told The Associated Press. "I expect the release of Ali, Charles and the driver soon."

Fourteen kidnappers grabbed Glass, 36, Ali Osseiran, 40, and his driver Suleiman Salman, a policeman who doubles as a bodyguard, on a coastal highway in the Shiite suburb of Ouzai, a Hezbollah stronghold in a southern sector of west Beirut.

No group has claimed responsibility for the kidnappings.

Glass, of Los Angeles, is the first foreigner to be kidnapped since Syrian troops moved into west Beirut on Feb. 22 to curb three years of militia anarchy.

ABC quoted Shiite sources in Beirut today as saying two of other eight Americans held hostage in Lebanon are standing trial in Iran. The report didn't identify the Americans. It also said two Lebanese who have been linked to the kidnappers are in Iran to testify against the Americans. It identified the Lebanese as Imad Muniyeh and Abdul Hadi Hamadi.

Simpson Claims U.S. Open Title

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Scott Simpson was surrounded by guys with green jackets, Masters champions all.

But when the 37th U.S. Open ended Sunday, the 31-year-old Californian possessed his first major golf title. His closing round of 2-under-par 68 on the Olympic Club's Lake Course gave him a one-stroke victory over Tom Watson, the two-time Masters winner.

Spain's Seve Ballesteros, another man who has twice worn the traditional green jacket presented to Masters champions, finished five strokes behind Simpson in third.

"I'm actually surprised I won it, to tell the truth," Simpson said. Watson was disappointed but not surprised at the outcome.

"Scott Simpson is a very fine golfer. He's proven he can come from behind and that he can win on tough golf courses. Does it surprise me? No," Watson said.

Simpson made three consecutive birdies starting at the 14th hole, going ahead to stay with his 15-foot putt for a 4 on the 608-yard 16th. He saved a par at No. 17 by coming out of a bunker and making a 10-foot putt, then parred the 18th to complete the tournament with a 3-under total of 277.

Watson had three bogeys on the first five holes but no more in his round of 70, which included three birdies. His 45-foot putt for a birdie on the 18th hole was about two inches short.

"I have to admit I was hoping it wouldn't go in. I didn't want a playoff," Simpson said.

If Watson's putt had dropped, the course would have had its third Open playoff in history today. Jack Fleck beat Ben Hogan in a Monday showdown to settle the 1955 title, and Billy Casper beat Arnold Palmer in 1966.

"It felt good to be back in the hunt again," said Watson, who has gone almost three years without winning a tournament.

"I have nothing to be ashamed about, but I am disappointed," he added.

"To beat Tom is something special. He's beaten a lot of guys down the stretch over the years and he's always aggressive," Simpson said. "He gave it his best shot, I gave it my best shot, and I was fortunate to win."

Simpson won the NCAA golf title twice at the University of Southern California, joined the PGA tour in 1979 and has won three tour events including this spring's Greater Greensboro Open.

The victory Sunday was worth $150,000 and jumped him from No. 9 to No. 1 on the tour's money-winning list, with season earnings of $465,896. Paul Azinger and Payne Stewart, the top two on the list last week, failed to make the cut in the Open.

Ballesteros battled to within one stroke of the lead midway through Sunday's round, but fell back with bogeys at the 12th and 13th and finished with a 71 for his total of 282.

At one point there was a four-way tie for first involving Simpson and three Masters winners — Watson, Ben Crenshaw and current champ Larry Mize.

"I've had a good consistent career and made some money, but I've got a little less recognition than some of the other guys. That's been fine with me," Simpson said. "Maybe I'll get more recognition now."

Mize, Crenshaw and Langer finished at 283, in a five-way tie with Bobby Wadkins and Curtis Strange for fourth place.

Keith Clearwater, who matched the course record with a 64 on Saturday, fell from second place to a 31st finish by shooting a 79.

Defending Open champ Ray Floyd had a 73 for a 290 finish, four-time winner Jack Nicklaus had 77 for a 291, and British Open champ Greg Norman went 77 for 292. On the last three Open holes, Norman went triple bogey-double bogey-birdie.

Simpson's highest round was an opening 71, followed by 68, 70 and 68.

"The strength of my game is consistency," Simpson said.

He said his father, a good amateur golfer from San Diego who has played the Olympic course many times, told him the course "was made for me."

Simpson concluded, "It's made for me if I play well, and I was fortunate enough to play well this week."

"Today was probably the best putting round of my life."

Watson said, "I didn't keep from making mistakes with the putter."

Hot Putter

Scott Simpson raises his putter to the gallery after finishing the 18th hole in the lead of Sunday's final round of the U.S. Open Championship at the San Francisco Olympic Club. Simpson held on to the lead to win the event with a three-under par 277 for the four rounds. (AP Laserphoto)

Reuss Sparkles In His AL Debut

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

On a day when baseballs flew over American League fences at a record-setting pace, supposedly washed-up Jerry Reuss and still wet-behind-the-ears Lee Guetterman showed how to pitch.

Reuss, who turned 38 last Friday and was cut by two National League teams earlier this season, ended a personal 13-game losing streak Sunday — 11 at the major-league level — with a no-walk, six-strikeout eight-hitter in his AL debut as California beat Kansas City 8-0.

It was the left-hander's 196th major-league victory but his first since May 2, 1986, his first complete game since Sept. 21, 1985, and his first shutout since Aug. 11, 1985.

Meanwhile, unbeaten Guetterman pitched a three-hitter for his first shutout and fifth consecutive victory as Seattle defeated Cleveland 5-0. The 28-year-old left-hander struck out two and walked one.

Over-all, though, it wasn't a pitchers' day as 30 home runs were hit, equaling the major-league mark of 30 in the AL on June 10, 1962, and June 14, 1954, and the NL on May 8, 1970.

Detroit hit five homers, two by Chet Lemon, in beating Baltimore 9-3 after the Orioles won the completion of Saturday night's curfew-suspended game 9-5. Minnesota put four balls into orbit in downing Chicago 8-6 and the White Sox hit three. All seven were solo shots, the sixth such occurrence in major-league history, last done by California (6) and Oakland (1) on April 23, 1985.

"They ask if the ball is alive?" Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson said rhetorically.

Olympic Club's Course Created Many Headaches

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — If golf is a cerebral game, a matter of mind over rough and bunker or green and fairway, then the field of the U.S. Open must have one colossal headache today.

The winners of this Open were Scott Simpson, who finished first, Tom Watson, who almost did, and the Olympic Club's tricky Lake Course, which beat everybody else into submission.

After 72 holes, the best score in the Open was Simpson's 3-under par 277. Watson, at 2-under 278, was the only other player to finish the tournament with sub-par red numbers next to his name on the scoreboard.

Ray Floyd finished 10 shots over par. That, however, was much better than Andy North, Fuzzy Zoeller and Larry Nelsop, the three Open champs before Floyd, who all missed the cut.

Jack Nicklaus was 11 over par with 76-77 in the last two rounds. Greg Norman, who led all four majors going into the final rounds last year, was 12 over with a last-round 77 that included a triple bogey and a double bogey.

Seve Ballesteros shot 68 in the first round and 68 in the third round. In between those, though, he shot a 75. His final-round 71 included six bogeys. On Saturday, he shot 68 despite five bogeys.

What is going on here?

These are the best golfers in the world, players who are awfully good at that curious task of putting the little white ball in the hole. They travel the tour, blitzing the country club and condominium courses, routinely winning events with scores 10, 12, 14 strokes under par. Then they get to the U.S. Open and spend a week in golfing purgatory, watching their scores soar.

Simpson's methodical 3-under was the best winning score since Zoeller and Norman finished 72 holes tied at four under in 1984. In the last decade, only Nicklaus (272 in 1980) and David Graham (273 in 1981) have decisively punctured the Open's traditional 280 par.

Each year, officials of the sponsoring U.S. Golf Association, guardians of the game, create monster layouts for their championship and then

Reds Top Braves In Slugfest, 6-5

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

The Cincinnati Reds and Atlanta Braves spent nearly as much time hitting each other as they did hitting home runs this weekend.

"It was a fairly exciting series," Buddy Bell said Sunday after his 10th-inning homer gave the Reds a 6-5 victory in Atlanta.

The teams played basebrawl on Saturday and Sunday, engaging in a pair of bench-clearing incidents. Both melees were triggered by batters being hit by pitches and charging the mound.

The fights may have been the product of pitchers' frustration — 12 home runs were hit in the two games.

"Brawls ... are kind of silly at times, but things like that are going to happen," Bell said.

In other National League games, St. Louis beat Montreal 7-3, New York defeated Philadelphia 8-3, Houston downed Los Angeles 6-1, San Francisco routed San Diego 11-2 and Chicago beat Pittsburgh 6-3.

Bell, who had not hit the ball out of the infield in his previous nine at-bats, homered into the left-field seats with one out in the 10th. His fifth home run of the season came off Gene Garber, 8-5.

Sunday's trouble came in the eighth inning after Atlanta reliever Jim Acker hit Tracy Jones with a pitch. Jones stood around rubbing his arm as Acker came within 25 feet of the plate, and Jones eventually charged.

Jones and Acker wrestled as both benches emptied. No one was hurt and Jones was the only one ejected.

"I went after the wrong person," Jones said. "What am I supposed to do when the catcher says 'go get him if you want him.'"

"I can fight one or the other but I can't fight both. I know he's not trying to hit me in that situation, but that's the second time that happened. I don't want to fight, but I can only take so much."

Names Recommended For Complex

This past week, the Pitt County Board of Education received recommendations as to the names of various facilities of the new athletic complex currently under construction behind Greenville Middle School on Arlington Blvd.

Each of the people who was nominated for honors has given outstanding service to Greenville over the years and is quite worthy of it. The full board, having received the recommendations for the names, will vote at its next meeting.

The overall area, as has been announced in the past, is expected to be named the Minges-Farley Athletic Complex. It will be named for Boley Farley, who served for years as coach and athletic director at Greenville, later Rose, High School. Hundreds of young men passed through the athletic program under him in the years prior to his retirement in 1970.

Dr. Ray Minges, who will share the honor with Farley, died this year after a brief illness. Over the years, Dr. Minges has given of himself for many, many projects, leading the way in fund-raising efforts. He was to have headed the drive to build the new complex but was prevented from doing so by his final illness.

The football stadium itself is expected to be named for the late Percy Daniels, who for many years, guided the C.M. Eppes High School football program and other athletic efforts at that school.

The baseball field — still in the planning stages — has been suggested as the May-Scales Field. It would be named in honor of Reynolds May, another Greenville citizen who has poured countless hours into civic projects, and W.M. "Booger" Scales, who follows in the same pattern. Scales is the current chairman of the drive to build the complex and over $500,000 has already been raised under his leadership, far and away above the goal set for the first phase.

Because of this, other parts of the project are expected to be completed within the next year. The original first phase was only for the construction of the football-track area, with bleachers, a press box, concession stand, lights and rest room facilities.

Now, however, it is likely that a field house will also be built. The baseball facility, a softball field and a soccer field, along with a practice football field are down the line, but are also part of the overall complex.

We applaud the proposal to name each of these facilities for these fine public servants of Greenville.

But perhaps the most fitting tribute will be to the man for whom the street leading to the complex will be named, Marvin Jarman.

In the past 20 years and more, there is NO (emphasis intended) athlete who has gone through Rose High School who has not been touched by Marvin Jarman. There have been few football, basketball and baseball games over that time period that Marvin has not attended, cheering his team on to victory.

When he was a senior at Rose, he was named "Mr. School Spirit," a title that probably should have been retired at that point, for he continues to be "Mr. School Spirit" for Rose.

Marvin is always there at the games, ready with a stick of Juicy Fruit gum for the players, coaches, parents — and yes, the media. A Rose game just isn't the same for us without that stick of Juicy Fruit.

Called "Coach Jarman" by many of the athletes and coaches at Rose, Marvin is also well known across the state, traveling each year to the Coaches' Clinic in Greensboro.

Ask him a question about baseball — he knows! People have tried to catch him in a wrong answer. One local coach thought he'd done it a couple of years ago at the clinic, saying his answer was correct and Marvin's was wrong.

Early the next day, Marvin had another coach drive him to the Greensboro Public Library, found that he was correct and brought back a photo-copy to prove his point.

So he's still 100 percent.

And also ask about Rose. He is a walking computer on the history of Rose athletics in his time.

Try for recognition in Greenville, and we'd be willing to bet that more people know Marvin than know all of the rest honored — as great a group as they are. Marvin has earned his accomplishments and this honor despite the presence of a handicap.

Grant Jarman, Marvin's brother, told us recently that he had sometimes questioned why Marvin is as he is.

"But then, I guess if he was like the rest of us, he wouldn't be the person that he is, but just another guy in the stands," Grant said.

Perhaps. God works in mysterious ways, and for those of us who know Marvin Jarman, we can say we have truly been blessed.

Watson Comes Close In Open

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — "Team Watson" — Tom, his wife, Linda, and his mentor, Byron Nelson — had heard enough of the idea that Tom might be finished.

Even the kind words offered at the U.S. Open, as Tom tried to end three years of frustration, sounded too sweet and sticky.

"Everybody keeps saying they're glad he's back," Linda said Sunday after Tom finished a stroke behind U.S. Open champion Scott Simpson. "He was never away."

Wearing large sunglasses and blending into the gallery, Linda Watson trailed her 37-year-old husband around the course as she had all week.

When she talked about his game, she used the pronoun "we," as in "consistency has been missing and that's what we have been working for."

She said that despite speculation that he had lost some of his intensity and desire to win, he had been working hard to overcome a three-year winning drought.

"He's wanted to win more than anyone's wanted him to win," she said, acknowledging plenty of support from Watson's fans. "The breaks haven't been there for him. We don't know why, but he's been trying and now he's playing beautiful golf."

"I knew he would play well again, and so did Byron and Tom," she said. "This slump just lasted longer than we expected."

Nelson, the PGA Hall of Famer who has long thought of Watson like a son, walked with Linda on Saturday, but had to return home to Dallas on Sunday.

"He called me last night to wish me luck," Watson said. "He just told me to relax and play my game."

Watson's game was just fine, except for bogeys on the first two holes. He finished with par 70 on the treacherous, tree-lined Olympic Club course. It wasn't quite enough to match Simpson's 68, but it was another solid round after posting 72, 65 and 71.

"I felt a little bit of the old magic come back," said Watson, who was the PGA's leading money winner from 1977 to 1980 and again in 1984. "It felt good being back in the hunt again."

Watson had said after leading through three rounds that he had done enough to erase any self-doubts about his ability to play again in the front ranks of golf.

After going to the well and coming up dry on Sunday in a round he had called perhaps the most important of his career, he thirsted for more.

"I have nothing to be ashamed about, but I am disappointed I didn't win," he said. "I have to win to prove that I'm back. I have to win — that's the name of the game. Finishing second is no good."

It was good enough to change Watson's mind about playing in Hartford this week. He was going to pass up the tournament, but he said Sunday he will go there after hosting a charity pro-am at home in Kansas City, Mo.

Watson came up only a few inches short of sending the Open into a playoff.

His curving, 45-foot putt on the 18th hole stopped breathtakingly close to the cup and kept him from tying Simpson at 277.

A couple of other putts, though less dramatic, were even closer. He bogeyed the first hole when he rolled a two-footer just past the lip of the cup. He bogeyed the second hole when a 15-footer did the same thing. On the seventh, a putt for a birdie sat on the cup's edge.

"I was very nervous today ... but I don't think it affected my play," Watson said. "I felt like I was back in control, although not with the putter as much as I would like, and that's what makes or breaks you in a golf tournament."

If Watson can make the final adjustments in his game and keep up the mental toughness he showed this week, the young turks who have been dominating the PGA Tour the past few years may find him a tough challenger.

Watson's Open performance gave him a big boost, he said, and now "the afterburners just have to turn on."

The question, though, is whether Watson's comeback is for real, or just for a one-week blast from the past.

"It has been a hard three years, but I knew that sooner or later it would come to an end," his wife said, casting her vote for a real comeback. "He's just too good a player for it not to happen."

The Watsons haven't exactly starved the past few years, with Tom winning $226,778 on the tour in 1985 and $278,338 last year when he finished in the top 10 nine times. His $75,000 here brings his 1987 winnings to $170,898.

"Right now I have a strange feeling," his wife said. "I feel like Jack Nicklaus did 10 years ago. They said he was all done."

Nicklaus, now 47, recovered from the over-the-hill stories to win the U.S. Open and PGA Championship in 1980, a couple of other tournaments and the Masters last year.

"Come to think of it, that gives us another 10 years to look forward to," she said.

To which her husband added: "There's a lot of golf left in Tom Watson. A lot."

torically after the Tigers and Orioles hit 15 homers in three games. "I can remember that a team hit 200 home runs and it was like, 'My God!'" This year, 10 clubs might hit 200. If you don't hit 200 you're a bad club.

"If you get the ball up on a hot day it's a home run. It gets up there and never comes down. It's like an astronaut; when he gets out of the plane, he just stays there — drifts around."

In other AL games, Toronto outlasted Milwaukee 7-6, Boston defeated New York 4-2 and Oakland split a double-header with Texas, winning 7-3 and losing 13-3.

"There are a lot of emotions to uncover. I'm as happy as I can be," Reuss said of his return to the big leagues. "A week ago, I didn't know if I'd get another opportunity, or where. Now, to go nine innings and pitch a shutout for my first victory in over a year ... what can you say?"

Angels 8, Royals 0

The Angels scored seven runs in the third inning against Bob Stoddard, all unearned after Kansas City shortstop Angel Salazar dropped Mark McLemore's line drive with two out and the bases empty for his first error in 30 games.

Brian Downing walked before Devon White got the Angels' first hit, a run-scoring double that right fielder Danny Tartabull misplayed as Downing also scored. Wally Joyner followed with his 14th homer for a 4-0 lead.

After two walks and a hit batsman loaded the bases, Dick Schofield's two-run single chased Stoddard and Gary Pettis greeted Steve Farr with an RBI double. In the fifth, Boone homered off Farr, his first in 73 games since last Aug. 22.

"There were a lot of factors, and eight runs was one of the biggest," Reuss said. "This game is made up of valleys and peaks. I'm glad to see another peak again. There were always questions — 'Can I still do it?' And the answer I gave myself always was, 'Yes, you can still do it. Be patient. It'll work out.'"

The shutout was the 11th against Kansas City this season, snapped the Royals' four-game winning streak and dropped them three games behind first-place Minnesota in the AL West.

Mariners 5, Indians 0

Gutierrez says the key to his current success is that he has learned to not throw hard.

"That's the key for me, to be sure. I can't emphasize enough the need to stay within yourself as a pitcher," said Gutierrez, who was 0-4 in 44 major-league appearances before this season and was purchased by Seattle from Calgary of the Class AAA Pacific Coast League on May 21. "It's night and day from the way I pitched last year."

Seattle scored in the first inning on singles by Phil Bradley, Scott Bradley and Jim Presley. In the second, Harold Reynolds had an RBI double and scored on Mickey Brantley's single.

Orioles 9-3, Tigers 5-9

Chet Lemon hit two home runs and Kirk Gibson, Matt Nokes and Darrell Evans also homered for Detroit after Baltimore won the completion of Saturday night's game that was suspended by a curfew after eight innings.

Gibson and Nokes hit two-run homers in the third inning and Lemon hit his first homer leading off the fourth. In six starts, loser Ken Dixon has allowed 29 runs and 13 homers in 28 innings for an 8.68 ERA. Overall, including 19 relief appearances, he has allowed 20 homers in 65 1-3 innings.

Twins 8, White Sox 6

Tom Brunansky homered and then broke a 5-5 tie with a run-scoring double in the eighth inning. Brunansky doubled off Chicago reliever Jim Winn after Gary Gaetti reached first on third baseman Tim Hulett's fielding error and went to second on a groundout.

The Twins added two more runs in the eighth on Roy Smalley's single and Greg Gagne's double. Kirby Puckett, Gaetti and Dan Gladden also homered for Minnesota, which hit all four homers off starter Floyd Bannister. Fred Manrique, Gary Redus and Harold Baines connected for Chicago.

Blue Jays 7, Brewers 6

Lloyd Moseby, Willie Upshaw and Fred McGriff homered for Toronto and rookie Jeff Musselman earned his sixth victory with three innings of one-hit relief as Toronto opened a one-game lead over second-place New York in the AL East. All three Toronto homers came off Chuck Crim in the first four innings.

Robin Yount and Rob Deer hit a homers for Milwaukee.

Red Sox 4, Yankees 2

Rookie Ellis Burks hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning after Dwight Evans tied the score with a two-run shot in the seventh. Boston, held to two hits for six innings by Bob Tewksbury, finally caught up with the right-hander who was recalled from the minors on Saturday.

Boston's Wade Boggs went 3-for-4 in raising his major-league-leading batting average to .375 and extending his hitting streak to 22 games, longest this season. Roger Clemens, 6-6, allowed seven hits in pitching his seventh complete game in 15 starts.

Athletics 7-3, Rangers 1-3

Edwin Correa pitched six innings for his first victory since April 28 and Bob Brower homered twice, including a fluke inside-the-park grand slam that keyed a seven-run second inning in the nightcap. Oakland's Mickey Tettleton and Mark McGwire each homered and doubled in the opener, which the Athletics won with a five-run second inning.

Richmond Wins Again

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — Tim Richmond, who overcame a life-threatening illness last winter, is back as a major force in stock car racing.

Richmond, who had capped his outstanding 1986 season with a victory at Riverside, made a triumphant return to win the Budweiser 400.

But between last year's victory and Sunday's win at Riverside International Raceway, his racing record is mostly blank.

The 32-year-old Ashland, Ohio native fought a bout with double pneumonia that began right after the 1986 NASCAR Winston Cup banquet. He didn't get back into a race car until NASCAR's all-star race at Charlotte Motor Speedway on May 17.

Richmond finished third in that event, which doesn't count in the Winston Cup point standings.

"I didn't know whether I'd ever have a chance to drive a car again," Richmond said of his illness. "From what the doctors said, there was a good chance it could go either way."

And the way it went for Richmond was very, very good. His first points race was June 14 at Pocono International Raceway. He won that event, leading the most laps in the process.

Then Richmond came back to Riverside, a track where he won for the first time on the circuit, in 1982.

His Chevrolet Monte Carlo finished two seconds ahead of Ricky Rudd's Ford in Sunday's 95-lap, 400-kilometer race over Riverside's eight-turn road course. Richmond averaged 102.183 mph, taking home $36,450 for the victory.

Rudd, was second ahead of Neil Bonnett, who drove a Pontiac Grand Prix.

"I came in here with a lot of confidence," Richmond said. "The only thing that concerned me was the car itself. It was a brand-spanking-new car and sometimes you can't do that to a brand new car."

Richmond appears to be back to the form that gave him seven victories last season. He led the most laps in the race.

"We were just a little bit short," Rudd said. "I have 8,400 and 8,000 (rpm) rev limiters in the Thunderbird, and I ran on 8,000 all day until the end and I decided it was time to go. I flipped the button and was supposed to have a little more horsepower, but Richmond still ran off and left me."

Terry Labonte, in a Chevrolet, and Bill Elliott, in a Ford, rounded out the top five.

Petty drove the parade lap to earn points for starting the race, then pitted so Ruttman could get in the car.

Wilson Rolls By Post 39 In American Legion Action

WILSON — Wilson Post 13 jumped on Tim Clark early, tagging him for eight hits and five runs in the first two innings as they rolled past Pitt County, 11-6, in an American Legion baseball game Saturday night.

Elliott Hicks opened the game with a walk and stole second. Jay Lamm followed that with a single to score Hicks. Lamm then stole second and scored on a sacrifice by Steve Schmidt.

With two outs in the second, Hicks tripled. Lamm followed with another triple to score Hicks. Schmidt then doubled in Lamm before Doug Flowers drove in Schmidt to make it 5-0.

Pitt County narrowed the gap to 5-3 after three innings as Robbie McDonald and Jason Galloway both reached on walks in the second and later scored on Wilson miscues. David Daniels added a solo homer in the third.

Wilson, though, pushed across three runs in the sixth and the seventh to pu the game away.

Doug Flowers had a three-run homer to key the seventh.

Flowers went 4-5 to lead Wilson. Hicks, Lamm and Schmidt added two hits apiece.

Tom Moye had two hits to lead Pitt County.

Pitt County falls to 5-3 and plays host to Kinston tonight.

The loss broke a three-game winning streak for Pitt County.

Course Created Headaches ...

challenge the players to solve the puzzle.

It doesn't take much to change a golf course from a cozy country club configuration, designed to accommodate the membership, to something far more foreboding. Dry out the greens to make them fast and skating-rink slick. Narrow the fairways. Lengthen the rough. And then, watch the pros squirm.

The Olympic Club with its 18 holes, all uphill, might have been test enough in its traditional setup. It was a real challenge, though, when the USGA got through with it.

"The greens were not very consistent," said Ballesteros, trying to sound diplomatic. "Some greens were very hard, some were not. It was very difficult because it confused the players."

"It gave the fellows fits," was the way Nicklaus put it. "The first two rounds, the course was real soft. The last two, it got faster. One green would be fast, the next one slow. You have a hard time finding the right speed and that causes high scores."

High scores, of course, make the pros seem like your average player.

This is nice for the average player but not so terrific for the pros. Putts went slipping and sliding past the holes and some fairways were faster than the greens.

"We're not trying to embarrass them," he said. "We're trying to identify them."

Just wait until next year and The Country Club at Brookline, Mass.

Johnson And Phillips Win Big At McDonalds

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Both Scott Johnson and Kristie Phillips thought big things might await them at the McDonald's U.S. Gymnastics Championships. But all-around championships and four gold medals?

"It's unbelievable," Johnson said. "I thought I could do well, but I didn't think I could do this well," Phillips said. "This is like a dream."

Phillips and Johnson dominated the four-day championships. Johnson, of Lincoln, Neb., won the men's all-around championship earlier in the competition with 114.70 points, unseating defending champion Tim Daggett. On Saturday, Phillips, 15, of Houston totaled 77.32 points to win the women's all-around title.

Then in the individual events Sunday, Johnson won two titles and finished second for two others. Phillips, after unseating Jennifer Sey as all-around women's champion, had two first-place finishes, one second and one third in four individual events.

Johnson, who competed at the University of Nebraska, took first place in the parallel bars and still rings and was second in the pommel horse and floor exercise.

"Oh, my gosh, I never expected to win two gold medals and two silver medals this weekend," Johnson said. "This is great. Unbelievable."

"The best thing for me is it makes all my hard work seem rewarding," said Phillips, who studies in Houston under famed coach Bela Karolyi. Karolyi coached Mary Lou Retton and Nadia Comeneci to Olympic gold.

Phillips, a native of Baton Rouge, La., won the balance beam and floor exercise, was second in the vault and tied for third in the uneven bars.

Phillips totaled 19.475 points to beat Oklahoma's Kelly Garrison-Stevens in the balance beam and then took the floor exercise title with 19.300 points, sparking a huge ovation from the crowd of about 5,000 with her lively routine. Garrison-Stevens had 19.075 points in the balance beam and was followed by Melissa Marlowe of Salt Lake City, 19.00. Stacey Gunthorpe of Los Angeles finished second in the floor exercise with 19.200 points.

Johnson, a 26-year-old native of Cincinnati, Ohio, captured the individual title in the still rings with a point total of 19.525. He won the parallel bars championship with 19.500 points after a spectacular 9.900 on Sunday.

National League ... Rain Slows First Day Action

Acker hit Jones with a pitch last weekend in Cincinnati. Atlanta catcher Ozzie Virgil admitted he told Jones to get Acker if he wanted to, "but I just said it once."

On Saturday, the benches cleared after Atlanta's Andres Thomas rushed the mound after being hit by a pitch from Bill Gullickson.

Bell's homer was one of five hit Sunday. Virgil hit a solo home run in the second inning and hit a two-run homer — his career-high 20th — in the fifth for a 5-2 lead.

Eric Davis and Dave Parker hit consecutive home runs in the first inning for Cincinnati. Davis, who also had a two-run triple, hit his 22nd homer and Parker got his 17th.

The Reds sent the game into extra innings when Lloyd McClendon doubled in the ninth and scored on a single by Kurt Stillwell.

Bill Landrum, 3-1, pitched two perfect innings for the victory.

Cardinals 7, Expos 3

Unbeaten rookie Joe Magrane pitched seven strong innings and Vince Coleman's two-run triple sparked St. Louis over Montreal.

Magrane, 5-0, allowed three runs on six hits. The left-hander was making his first start since coming off the disabled list with a tender elbow. Bill Dawley pitched the final two innings for his second save.

Jack Clark, leading the major leagues with 66 RBI, hit a run-scoring single in the first off Bob Sebra, 3-8.

Steve Lake drew a two-out walk in the second, Magrane followed with an infield single for his first big-league hit and Coleman then tripled. Coleman, who has reached base in 50 straight games by either a hit or walk, scored on Ozzie Smith's double.

Mets 8, Phillies 3

Dave Magadan drove home three runs and Sid Fernandez pitched four-hit ball for 5-3 innings as New York sent Philadelphia to its sixth straight loss.

The Phillies have lost all four games under new Manager Lee Elia, who replaced the fired John Felske on Thursday. The Mets have won four in a row.

Magadan had an RBI single in the fourth inning against Kevin Gross, 4-7, and a two-run double during a four-run fifth.

Fernandez, 9-3, gave up two runs. He is tied for the league lead in victories. Roger McDowell pitched three innings for his eighth save.

Chris James and John Russell hit consecutive home runs in the sixth for the visiting Phillies.

Astros 6, Dodgers 1

Jim Deshaies won his fifth straight decision and Houston scored four runs in the first inning and went on to defeat visiting Los Angeles.

Deshaies, 7-2, gave up seven hits and one run in eight innings.

A throwing error and a wild pitch by Rick Honeycutt, 2-6, and an error by third baseman Phil Garner helped the Astros in the first inning.

Billy Hatcher hit a solo homer in the Houston fourth.

Cubs 6, Pirates 3

Keith Moreland homered and drove in three runs and Chicago beat Pittsburgh.

Steve Trout, 4-1, won his fourth straight decision and for the second time since coming off the disabled list Tuesday. He yielded three runs on seven hits in 5-3 innings.

Lee Smith pitched the ninth inning for his major league-leading 19th save.

Moreland hit an RBI double during a three-run first and connected for a two-run homer, his 11th, in the fifth.

Doug Drabek, 1-6, took the loss for the visiting Pirates.

Giants 11, Padres 2

Kelly Downs pitched four-hit ball for seven innings and Will Clark, Bob Brenly and Matt Williams hit home runs that led San Francisco over San Diego.

Downs, 6-3, had beaten the Padres twice by 1-0 scores earlier this season.

The visiting Giants scored four times in the first inning against Eric Show, 2-9, who retired just one batter. An error by shortstop Garry Templeton set up RBI doubles by Jeffrey Leonard and Chili Davis.

Brenly hit a solo home run in the fifth and Clark hit his 13th homer in the sixth. Williams connected for a two-run homer in the ninth.

Randy Ready hit a two-run homer, his first in the majors since May 8, 1986, in the San Diego fourth.

Okamoto Wins At Lady Keysone

HERSHEY, Pa. (AP) — A record round at the Lady Keystone Open gave Ayako Okamoto the key to the LPGA's millionaire club.

The 36-year-old native of Hiroshima, Japan, surprised the field Sunday with an 8-under-par 64 on the 6,348-yard West Course of the Hershey Country Club. The previous tournament record was a 65 shot by Amy Alcott in 1984.

Okamoto put together a round that included eight birdies and 10 pars to finish with a 54-hole total of 208.

Okamoto boosted her career earnings to $1,021,300 by winning the $42,500 first-place check in the 54-hole Lady Keystone.

Laurie Rinker had a final round 67 to finish one shot behind Okamoto. Martha Nause's 71 gave her a 210.

Ok-Hee-Ku, who led the first two rounds, had a 75 to drop into a fourth-place tie with Cindy Hill and Cathy Gerring at 211. Val Skinner's 67 enabled her to finished seventh at 212.

Okamoto said the key to her victory was her putting. She had only 24 putts for the round.

"Putting is something I don't practice very much," she said. "I only spend maybe five or 10 minutes a day on it."

Okamoto started the day at even par, eight shots behind Ku, the Korean player who was trying for her first tour victory.

"I didn't think I had a chance to win no matter what I shot," Okamoto said. "I felt one of the leaders would shoot two or three under par."

"I did tell my caddy I would play a lot better."

Okamoto had an opening-round 70 and a second-round 74 to go with her 64.

"I was fortunate to chip into the cup on two holes," Okamoto said. "That gave me the chance to win."

Okamoto used a 9-iron to run a 30-yard chip shot into the cup on the 405-yard starting hole. She followed that with a blast out of the bunker at No. 4.

LONDON (AP) — The start of the 101st Wimbledon tennis championships was held up by rain today and organizers said they were pessimistic about the prospects for much play on the opening day.

Thousands of spectators, clad with umbrellas and raincoats, poured through the wrought iron gates of the All England Club, braving a persistent drizzle and hoping for a prime position to watch the action.

But to their frustration, the 14 famed grass courts stayed under tarpaulins and the scheduled 7:30 a.m. EDT start was delayed.

Play on the two show courts, Centre and No. 1, was not due to begin until 9 a.m., with two-time defending champion Boris Becker playing the first match on Centre against Karel Novacek of Czechoslovakia. But tournament referee Alan Mills said Becker's return to the court where he became a star almost certainly would be held up as well.

"It's disappointing and frustrating, but there's nothing we can do," Mills said. "Even when it stops raining, the courts would have to be deflated and would then need more time to dry out."

Mills said the forecast was showers throughout the day, with brief periods of dry weather in between.

"If that happens, it does not look too promising for the day but as soon as we can get started, even if only for a short time, we will," he said.

Two years ago, only one match took place on the opening day when Ivan Lendl played Mel Purcell. Mills said it was too early to worry about the rain, which has lashed down on most of Britain for the past two weeks. The forecast calls for rain throughout at least Thursday.

"In 1982, we had only two clear days throughout the whole of the tournament and we still finished on time," Mills said.

He said there was no chance of extending play to the middle Sunday of the tournament, traditionally a "dark" day.

"That does not look a possibility. We are just not geared up to it," Mills said. "In any case, the forecast is much better for later this week."

Wimbledon's grass signifies only one thing for Becker and Martina Navratilova — success.

Becker has lifted the men's trophy the past two years, while Navratilova has carried off the women's title the past five years.

Becker was favored to become only the seventh man, and the third in modern times, to win three successive singles titles in the world's most prestigious tournament.

Navratilova, however, looked a bit wobbly after a winless year and a growing confidence crisis.

"If I am not confident now, when will I be?" Becker said after completing his Wimbledon preparation by winning the Queens Club championships last week.

"I won Wimbledon, then I won it again, and I'm a much better player this year," Becker said.

By contrast, Navratilova hasn't gone into Wimbledon in seven years without a tournament title. She is winless this year.

Defeat in the final of the French Open by Steffi Graf, followed by another loss, this to Helena Sukova, in the championship match of the Eastbourne championships on Saturday haven't been the best preparation for the world's top-ranked woman player.

The loss to Sukova was Navratilova's first on British grass in 69 matches stretching back six years.

Wimbledon, she hopes, will put her back on the right track.

"I'm very down and not brimming with confidence but I'm still going to be the favorite to win Wimbledon," she said after losing to Sukova.

Navratilova, like all her leading rivals for the women's title, has until Tuesday, traditionally known as "Ladies Day," to think about her first-round opponent, Claudia Porwik of West Germany.

Some women seeds were on the first-day program, including No. 7

Gabriela Sabatini, No. 8 Manuela Maleeva, No. 11 Lori McNeil and No. 12 Catarina Lindqvist.

But most of the attention Monday focused on the red-haired Becker.

For the second successive year, the 19-year-old West German had the honor of playing the first match of the tournament on Centre Court, this time against Karel Novacek of Czechoslovakia.

After Becker, Australia's Pat Cash, the No. 11 seed, faced Marcel Freeman of the United States.

Today's schedule also included Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, the top-ranked men's player but the No. 2 tournament seed, against Romania's Christian Saceanu. Third-seeded Mats Wilander and No. 4 Stefan Edberg, both of Sweden, and Americans Tim Mayotte and Brad Gilbert, seeded 10th and 12th, respectively, also were in action.

Mayotte, Gilbert and veteran Jimmy Connors, who was not due to play until Tuesday, are the three biggest American hopes for the men's championship in the absence of John McEnroe. McEnroe pulled out earlier this month for the second straight year, this time because of a back injury.

The 27-year-old New Yorker, a three-time Wimbledon champion but now down to No. 8 in the world rankings after a poor spring, said he hadn't been able to train since the French Open, in which he was eliminated in the first round.

Becker, unbeaten at Wimbledon since he retired with an ankle injury in the third round in 1984, is the favorite not only with the British bookmakers but also with the other players.

"Boris will be very confident because he has won here twice," Lendl said. "As soon as he sets foot on grass, his whole world lights up."

Earlier this month, Lendl retained his French Open title after Becker had accused him of lacking mental strength.

"I would like nothing more than to win Wimbledon," said Lendl, who lives in Greenwich, Conn. "I would give up the French title, with last year's thrown in. Wimbledon is my No. 1 priority."

"It's not my best surface because it takes some of the strength of my game away but I have to live with that."

A bout of the flu and persistent rain that swept across Scotland, where he was practicing, didn't help Lendl's grass-court preparation.

But, he said, he has been building his strength all year to match Becker's raw power. "I am confident I can win. I am not afraid of Boris," he said.

On the eve of Wimbledon, the sports pages of Britain's national newspapers concentrated heavily on Navratilova's defeat at Eastbourne and her inability to win a title since the Virginia Slims championships last November when she beat Graf.

"I still feel I have a lot of good tennis left in me, but I get very disappointed with myself for being able to fall apart at the drop of a hat," said Navratilova, who led Sukova 5-0 in the opening set at Eastbourne yet couldn't finish her off. "I'm sure I'll get that inspiration back from playing the Centre Court."

While Navratilova has been winless since November, Graf has been unbeaten and goes into Wimbledon with 39 successive victories spanning seven tournaments.

The West German, who turned 18 last week, became the youngest-ever French Open champion when she beat Navratilova in the final at Paris to clinch her first Grand Slam title.

Graf has never gotten beyond the fourth round at Wimbledon and admits grass is not her best surface.

"It will be more difficult for me on grass ... and Martina will be much more determined to beat me," Graf, the second seed, said.

But Graf is brimming with confidence.

"I've had my problems at Wimbledon before because I did not have such a good serve or come in so much. But in the last couple of days, I've found in practice that I can play on grass and I'm sure I'm going to do well," she said.

"Wimbledon has much more tradition, much more history than the French Open."

Fireworks Family Plans Comeback

By LAWRENCE NEUMEISTER
Associated Press Writer

BROOKHAVEN, N.Y. (AP) — The Grucci fireworks family, nearly ruined in 1983 by a factory explosion that killed its master craftsman, has been quietly rebuilding while its pyrotechnic magic continues to dazzle the public.

"It's amazed me, the resiliency of the family unit, to come back from what was a death blow," said Phil Butler, son-in-law of patriarch and company founder Felix Grucci Sr.

"Nobody would have criticized us for quitting," Butler said in a recent interview. "It's a dark page in our history, but it's a page we overcame. We conquered it, rising from our own ashes."

Killed in the Nov. 26, 1983, blast that leveled the family's Bellport factory and damaged about 100 houses were Grucci's son, James Grucci, 42, and his 19-year-old cousin, Donna Gruber, who worked at the plant.

The accident claimed most of the family's worth, and legal fees of up to $450,000 have strapped the company, Butler said. "A lot of people think we're wealthy. We're not."

The elder Grucci's grandfather started making fireworks in Sicily in the 1850s. In 1929, the 83-year-old Felix Grucci Sr. set up shop in Bellport, then a remote part of Long Island. He still works every day.

After the explosion came the dream of a bigger and better factory. On May 1, Grucci moved the operation to the 90-acre Brookhaven site, flanked by a fire department training area and a site zoned to be an ashfill.

"The most we'll have here is a very violent fire," Butler said. "Now we own the buffer zones. If houses were built 100 feet from our fence, we still would not cause any damage."

A chain-link fence surrounds the $1 million site, he said. Signs warn visitors of danger, and trailers holding fireworks are separated by tall mounds of dirt to prevent one burning trailer from setting off another during a fire.

"Fireworks are beautiful but inherently dangerous," Butler said. "You have to deal with it (fire potential) on the level that it's not if, it's when. Then you're prepared for it."

Explosions at fireworks factories nationwide have killed about 50 people in this decade.

The factory will not be built for about five years and the offices consist of trailers joined together, but the Gruccis say they now have a home.

The family's success was bolstered in 1979 when it became the first U.S. company to win an international fireworks competition in Monte Carlo.

"That really was the springboard that launched us into the major spectaculars," said company president Felix Grucci Jr.

His brother James had reveled after winning the competition, and the first-place medallion was buried with him, he said. "Jim ran the factory. Fireworks were his love."

On May 29, the Gruccis provided the display for publisher Malcolm Forbes' 70th birthday bash for Forbes magazine, which drew a star-studded crowd of 1,000, including Elizabeth Taylor and Henry Kissinger.

"Millionaire after millionaire stood in Forbes' yard with their mouths open," Butler recalled.

The Gruccis helped plan the fireworks extravaganzas at the Statue of Liberty centennial celebration, the Brooklyn Bridge centennial in 1983 and President Reagan's inaugurations in 1980 and 1984.

This year, Grucci will produce hundreds of shows across the country, including about 185 during the July Fourth weekend, Butler said.

"For years and years, we've been asked, 'Why fireworks,'" he said. "I tell them to watch the audience. You'll see somebody in a wheelchair or a small child or an 80-year-old smiling and laughing. That's why we're there."

Prized Autograph

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan delayed his trip to Florida briefly today, jogging away from his aides to greet and sign an autograph for a youngster whose father died recently.

Ross Berkoff, 7, of Fair Lawn, N.J., was visiting the White House and standing with a crowd of onlookers when Reagan, walking to his helicopter, spotted the lad.

Reagan bolted from the group he was with, jogged across the lawn and signed an autograph pad held by the elated youngster, who hopped from foot to foot as the president stood by him.

Ross' mother, Paula, said that her husband, Steven, had died seven weeks ago after undergoing a liver transplant operation.

She said a friend had arranged the White House visit for her and her two sons.

Shultz Says Libya Has Sowed 'Discord' In The South Pacific

By HENRY GOTTLIEB
Associated Press Writer

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz today accused Libya of sowing "discord and subversion" in the South Pacific and said the Soviet Union is trying to undercut U.S.-Australian interests in the region.

Shultz, in a statement opening talks with Australian leaders, also sought to ease Australian concerns about U.S. agricultural subsidies viewed here as unfair tactics in a fight for world markets.

Shultz and Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger held their annual consultations with their Australian counterparts at a time of growing concern about what Shultz called "outside interference" in a region dominated by the West since World War II.

Australian Foreign Minister Bill Hayden, in his opening remarks, called the region "one of the most volatile" in the world.

In recent months, Australian officials have said Libyan agents have sought to provide financial backing and training to political figures in some of the tiny independent island states in the Pacific. Among steps taken by Australia have been expulsion of Libyan diplomats and the closing of the Libyan embassy.

Shultz signalled his concern, saying: "As your government has been so effective in pointing out, the efforts of Libya to sow discord and subversion within the region should be a cause of concern to regional governments."

He added: "Nor can we forget that the Soviet Union, which has used its support for Vietnamese armed intervention in Cambodia to establish Cam Rahn Bay, the largest Soviet military base outside the Soviet Union, is engaged in a fishing expedition in the South Pacific aimed at increasing its regional presence."

Under an agreement signed with the island nation of Vanuatu, the Soviet Union has secured shore facilities, which Western analysts say can be used by fishing trawlers disguised as intelligence ships.

"What are they fishing for?" Shultz asked. "We can assume that the Soviet Union will go on taking diplomatic, commercial, intelligence and other initiatives in the region aimed in part at undercutting vital alliance interests in the Pacific," he said.

Shultz said the United States and Australia are improving their military co-operation and thanked the Australian government for permitting access of U.S. ships and aircraft "which enables us to play a stabilizing role in the Western Pacific and the Indian Ocean far beyond Australia's shores."

He also said Australia and the United States are keeping intact the framework of the Australia-New Zealand-U.S. pact that New Zealand was dropped from last year in a dispute over nuclear weapons.

New Zealand would have participated in the talks, but the United States severed military relations last year after New Zealand declared itself a nuclear free zone.

That policy conflicted with U.S. refusal to confirm or deny the presence of nuclear weapons aboard its vessels. Since those ships could no longer go to New Zealand, the nations' three-decades old ANZUS military alliance was cut.

Besides the necessity for what he termed "vigilance," powers in the region must deepen their commitment to developing the region economically and socially, the Australian foreign minister said.

Hayden said the most important task facing the United States and Australia is to resolve a dispute over agriculture and suggested that the ill feeling generated in Australia by the issue could mar relations on the security issues.

If the agriculture problem is not solved, "there is the prospect of a trade war which will seriously jeopardize not only global economic well-being but the defense and security of us all," Hayden said.

Australia has complained that payments to U.S. wheat farmers help the Americans compete in markets traditionally served by unsubsidized Australian producers.

With Congress considering additional help for U.S. farmers, Hayden said, "I cannot stress too strongly the damage that would be dealt to the Australian and other non-subsidizing agricultural exporters by some of the protectionist measures now under consideration."

Fight Brewing Over Reagan Veto

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's veto of legislation to write the fairness doctrine into law sets up a protracted fight with Congress, both sides agree.

Reagan said the 38-year-old rule, which authorized the Federal Communications Commission to police the editorial fairness of radio and television broadcasters, is unconstitutional.

In vetoing the legislation over the weekend, the president, once a sportscaster with radio station WHO in Des Moines, Iowa, accepted the arguments of broadcasters who protested that the rule compromised their First Amendment rights.

The doctrine was aimed at ensuring that broadcasters present both sides of controversial issues and air divergent points of view. But a federal appeals court last fall held that the fairness doctrine was not a law and that it could be repealed by the FCC.

What Reagan vetoed was a bill that would have codified the fairness doctrine, putting the rule into the lawbook and stripping from federal regulators any opportunity to kill it.

The measure, sponsored principally by Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., passed the Senate on a 59-31 votes, and 67 votes would be needed to override the veto. A similar bill passed the House 302-103.

Key supporters of the doctrine, including Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., chairman of the House telecommunications subcommittee, and Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., chairman of the Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee, say they will re-offer the measure as an amendment on other bills if the veto is sustained.

Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee and sponsor of the House bill, said he is not going to give up his fight to put the doctrine into law. "We will move forward and will give the president many opportunities to reconsider the misguided judgment shown by this veto," he said.

Supporters and opponents predict a lengthy battle, with a likely veto override attempt and reintroduction of the fairness doctrine proposal on other pieces of legislation. "We will work to sustain" the veto, said Edward O. Fritts, executive director of the National Association of Broadcasters.

"Broadcasters believe in fairness and generally report both sides of controversial issues, but want to do so without Uncle Sam looking over our shoulders," he said.

Mark Fowler, a former Reagan administration FCC chairman now in private law practice, said a battle is certain, but "ultimately, it may be that only the courts can rescue us."

Reagan "struck a huge blow for the freedom of the press, especially the electronic press," Fowler said. He said the doctrine "helps incumbents (members of Congress) on the Hill, and that's what this is all about."

But Andy Schwartzman, executive director of Media Access Project, a public interest law firm, said it is only a matter of time before the veto is overridden.

"Supporters expect that the bill will become law one way or another," he said.

Opponents also say the doctrine is no longer necessary to ensure that all views on an issue be aired because of the large number of alternative information sources available to the public — including more than 10,000 radio stations, nearly 1,600 TV stations and about 7,700 cable TV systems.

But supporters maintain that unlike the print media, which is not subject to the policy, radio and TV stations are using a limited public resource — the electromagnetic spectrum — and the doctrine is necessary to ensure that minority viewpoints are aired.

Reagan actually vetoed the bill Friday, before leaving for a weekend rest at his Camp David, Md., mountaintop retreat. His veto, accompanied by a message to the Senate, was released Saturday by the White House.

"In any other medium besides broadcasting, such federal policing of the editorial judgment of journalists would be unthinkable," Reagan said in his veto message.

"History has shown that the dangers of an overly timid or biased press cannot be averted through bureaucratic regulation, but only through the freedom and competition that the First Amendment sought to guarantee," he said.

Soviets Have A Choice In Regional Elections

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — In a historic move, the Soviet Union allowed some citizens a choice of candidates in regional elections, although the Communist Party closely controlled the nomination procedure.

The government newspaper Izvestia said that in "several thousand" of the country's 52,000 districts, voters were given a choice Sunday.

The Communist Party remains the nation's sole political organization, and most candidates running for local government positions were either party members or individuals whose political activity was approved by the party.

The official Tass news agency reported that Sunday's balloting would elect 2.3 million deputies to city and regional governing councils.

Foreign reporters were barred from viewing the one multicandidate contest in the Moscow region because it took place in a closed area.

Balloting in the Soviet Union is done on paper and the votes are hand-counted, so results in the multicandidate elections will not be known for some time. Soviet media also have not said what, if any, results will be reported or when the outcome will be known.

During the last party Central Committee plenary meeting in January, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev called for multicandidate elections for some government jobs, such as the local positions up for election Sunday.

Despite the predictable outcome of single-candidate elections, balloting is considered mandatory for Soviet citizens.

Most of the multicandidate contests presented voters with a list of candidates slightly larger than the number of seats.

For example, if four deputies were to be chosen for a local governing body, a list of five candidates might have been given to voters, who would cross off one of the names. Even the losers earn a place in the political process, according to the Tass news agency. Those who garner the least number of votes in the multicandidate elections "will remain in the reserve," taking part in the work of the local councils and voting on some advisory matters, Tass said.

After voting in a single-candidate contest in Moscow, Gorbachev accused the West of "a deficit of realistic policy" and called on Western leaders to respond to Soviet disarmament proposals.

"They call upon us in the Soviet Union to do something else, to do more," Gorbachev said, referring to Western leaders.

"But I must say that today the Soviet leadership sees that there are many words from the West, but not many concrete steps," he said.

"We are prepared to cooperate with all forces. But there is a deficit of realistic policy in the West," he told about 50 journalists, mostly from Western countries.

He said disarmament initiatives are needed from the West, but that "the current generation of political leaders, at least in the major capitalist countries, are concerned they may lose in public opinion."

Gorbachev did not provide details and did not take questions.

Soviet and U.S. officials have said the two sides are close to an agreement at arms talks in Geneva that would eliminate medium-range missiles from Europe and pave the way for a third summit between Gorbachev and President Reagan.

ballots in single-candidate elections for local governing bodies. He earlier had called on western leaders to make an initiative toward disarmament. (AP Laserphoto)

Jimmy Swaggart Faces Skimming Allegations

DALLAS (AP) — The Rev. Jimmy Swaggart and his ministry have been accused by tax officials of skimming cash from contributions, but his attorney vehemently denies the allegations.

The television evangelist and his Louisiana-based Jimmy Swaggart Ministries also are accused in court documents of ignoring court orders to produce financial information, the Texas Lawyer reported in today's edition.

The ministry's lawyer denied withholding any relevant material and denounced the allegation that Swaggart had dipped into contributions.

The papers were filed in a tax dispute between officials in South Texas' Montgomery County and Jimmy Swaggart Ministries, the Lawyer reported.

The Conroe Independent School District, the city of Shenandoah and the county say Swaggart's radio station KJOJ owes $157,000 in taxes for three properties.

Swaggart contends the properties are tax-exempt.

Russell R. Graham, an attorney for tax officials, said in a letter to State District Judge John C. Martin that his clients believe Swaggart retained contributions for his personal use.

William D. Treeby, chief lawyer for Swaggart Ministries, denied the allegation.

"If any of that money went into Reverend Swaggart's pocket ... that would be the death penalty," Treeby said. "We're not going to do that."

Treeby said Graham and other lawyers are trying to get publicity by pressing for the financial data.

A hearing is scheduled for July 17 on a motion for sanctions against the church for its alleged reluctance to obey discovery orders.

So far, the newspaper reported, the ministry's financial records have provided these details:

— The ministry collected $455.8 million in contributions and sales of religious materials from 1978-85. Financial statements show contributions have increased about 25 percent annually since 1979.

— The ministry's net worth increased $65.8 million since 1979, while assets tripled between 1982 and 1984, to $112.8 million.

— The ministry contends it does not make a profit, but a 1982 financial statement showed $11.9 million in "excess revenues." Between 1979-83, the ministry collected more than $37 million in excess revenues.

— While the ministry seeks a protective order to prevent disclosure of individual salaries, a ministry lawyer revealed in a May 26 letter the salaries of its highest-paid employees, including $216,000 for Swaggart family members in an unspecified year. The list, including salaries of 57 people paid more than $30,000, totaled nearly $2.3 million.

Swaggart's income, drawn from about $5.5 million in annual royalties from recordings and books, was $17,600 in salary and $34,000 in other compensation for an unspecified year, according to an interview and a letter from Swaggart's lawyers.

Other salaries disclosed in court documents include $52,000 for Swaggart's wife, Frances, who handles the ministry's finances; $51,000 for her brother, Robert Anderson; and $62,100 for the Swaggart's son, Donnie, the ministry's executive vice president.

The Baton Rouge (La.) Morning Advocate reported in May that the ministry's net worth was $111.9 million, with revenue of $128.5 million. The report was based on an audited financial statement provided by the ministry.

Homes owned by Swaggart and his son, and a third owned by the ministry and occupied by Swaggart's brother, were assessed at $2.5 million, the Advocate had reported.

The Internal Revenue Service has not audited the organization since 1976, and has reaffirmed the ministries' tax-exempt status several times as it has grown, the Advocate said.

Recently, Swaggart has reported a sharp drop in contributions, which he blamed on public reaction to the PTL scandal.

Seven million people turned out for a ticker-tape parade in New York for Hughes and his crew after their arrival.

This year's Paris Air Show drew about 400,000 people, up about 15 percent from 1985, organizers said. There were nearly 1,500 exhibitors from 31 countries, and official delegations from 65 countries visited the show.

Runoff For Cherokees

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. (AP) — Wilma Mankiller, the first woman chief of a major Indian tribe, faces a July 18 runoff for a four-year term as head of the 72,000-member Cherokee Nation in Oklahoma.

Complete, unofficial returns tabulated Sunday gave Ms. Mankiller 5,392 votes, or 45 percent, followed by Perry Wheeler with 3,507, or 29 percent; David Whitekiller with 1,731, or 16 percent; and Bill McKee with 1,278, or 10 percent.

There also will be a runoff for deputy chief between incumbent John Ketcher and Barbara Starr-Scott.

Ms. Mankiller became the first woman principal chief of a major tribe when she was appointed in 1985, succeeding Ross Swimmer, who was named to head the federal Bureau of Indian Affairs. She has been hospitalized in Tulsa for the past week with a kidney infection.

Wheeler is the director of a funeral home in Sallisaw.

State and federal employees collected an estimated $2.5 billion in hearing-impaired claims in the past 10 years. Statistics for the private sector were not available.

Aviators Break Hughes' Round-The-World Mark

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — The captain of a four-man crew who re-created the 1938 round-the-world flight by Howard Hughes and cut 2½ hours off the billionaire's record was so happy he couldn't even recall the flight's minor problems.

Champagne flowed and crowds cheered when the 1930s-vintage, twin-prop plane landed at 10 a.m. Sunday under cloudy skies at Le Bourget airfield north of Paris after an 88-hour, 48-minute flight.

The aviators took off Wednesday from the field hosting the biennial Paris Air Show and arrived on the show's 11th and final day.

"I've forgotten the difficult moments," said Patrick Fourtich, the plane's captain. Fourtich said he spent two years searching for an airplane of the same model as Hughes' craft for the re-creation. He finally found such a plane in Miami, where it was being used to transport chickens, he said.

"I discovered a new world," Henri Pescarolo, the co-pilot and navigator, said Sunday. "Finishing the flight was a great moment."

Arthur Powell, 36, did most of the restoration work on the 46-foot plane, which has a 66-foot wingspan and a 225-mph cruising speed. "We did it, it's over, and I'm a happy man," said Powell, a native of New Westminster, British Columbia, who lives in Detroit.

Except for a few minor problems — a heater that failed and spark plugs that needed changing — the Lockheed 18 Lodestar worked perfectly during the journey, flying at a maximum altitude of about 25,000 feet, he said.

Clad in dark-green flight suits, the flyers sat on a wing and waved Sunday as the plane was towed to a display area, where they doused each other with champagne and signed autographs.

Fourtich and Pescarolo, along with fellow crew member Hubert Auriol, all from France, upheld their reputations as daredevils in completing the flight.

Auriol is a race car driver who won the Paris-Dakar rally in 1981 and 1983. This year, he broke both legs in a crash during an automobile race. Pescarolo, also an auto racer, is a four-time winner of the 24-Hours Le Mans race.

He got a pilot's license at 17, before he could drive. He also holds a world record for a trans-Atlantic crossing in a single-engine aircraft.

Fourtich, an Air France captain, won the French microlight aircraft championship in 1984.

Although the four had hoped to retrace Hughes' celebrated flight, which included three stops in the Soviet Union, the Soviets denied permission.

So they chose a route that covered the same distance as the Hughes flight — about 14,640 miles — with stops in Spitzberg, Norway; Fairbanks, Alaska; Vancouver, British Columbia; Los Angeles; Miami, and Teterboro, N.J.

Their plane was named the "Spirit of J and B" after the London-based Scotch whiskey company that sponsored the venture.

Hughes' 1938 flight was inspired by a round-the-world record set by aviator Wiley Post in 1933. Flying with a crew of four, Hughes broke Post's record with a time of 91 hours and 17 minutes.

After leaving New York, Hughes' plane made stops in Paris; Moscow, Yakutsk and Omsk in the U.S.S.R.; Fairbanks, Alaska; and Minneapolis.

Indians' Canoe Trip Underlines Bid To Save Islands

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Haida Indians are paddling a war canoe 600 miles up Canada's Pacific coast in a bid to stop loggers from working in their ancestral homeland, regarded by conservationists as one of North America's natural treasures.

"Go forward with your heads held high," Miles Richardson, leader of the 10,000-member Haida nation, told the 20 paddlers as they began their three-week odyssey Sunday at Vancouver's False Creek.

The Haida, supported by environmentalists, are locked in conflict with the British Columbia government over the future of the Queen Charlotte Islands, 60 miles from the mainland on Canada's continental shelf below Alaska.

Premier William Vander Zalm, a Dutch immigrant, last week turned down a federal government offer of $80 million to create a national park reserve at the southern end of the mountainous islands, a region known as South Moresby.

As a repository for unique flora, virgin rain forests and North America's largest black bear, South Moresby is likened by scientists to parts of the Galapagos Islands in the South Pacific.

The Queen Charlotte Islands, an archipelago of 138 islands and 42 lakes, contain such unusual animals as pine marten, deer mouse, ermine, dusky shrew, hairy woodpecker and stickleback fish. In places, flowering plants and mosses grow knee-deep.

The rain-drenched islands, warmed by temperate Pacific winds, also contain the sacred ruins of Haida villages. Anthony Island, protected as a UNESCO World Heritage Cultural Site, has the world's largest array of totem poles.

But in British Columbia, dependent on forestry and recovering from recession, the stands of red and yellow cedar, hemlock and spruce represent jobs and exports.

Vander Zalm is willing to create a park in South Moresby, while permitting logging on forest-rich Lyell Island and other coastal areas. His final decision is expected at a Cabinet meeting Wednesday.

"What's at stake is our survival as a nation, and we can't survive in a land of stumps," Richardson said in an interview.

He said the Haida — who have filed a legal land claim over the islands — would defend their cultural heritage, although they would refrain from violence.

One Indian elder, Thomas Green, told the paddlers "the canoe will serve a great purpose" if the province rejects the wishes of the Haida, because it will spread word of their campaign. The Haida have lived along the Pacific coast for thousands of years.

The Haida blockaded logging roads on Lyell Island after the provincial government approved tree-cutting in 1985. Several Indians received suspended jail terms but they won a moratorium on new felling.

All of Canada's main political parties, led by federal Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's Conservatives, approved a resolution in Parliament last month urging Vander Zalm to accept the national park reserve and halt logging.

But Vander Zalm, who leads the maverick Social Credit Party, has a record of favoring economic interests over the environment.

"We need the jobs," he said last week in rejecting the federal allocation. About 35 men are working on Lyell Island.

Vander Zalm demanded nearly double the federal offer.

Richardson, draped in a ceremonial blanket, said: "I've never seen our people so agitated."

"We're pleased right now that the trees are not falling on Lyell Island and South Moresby and we intend to keep it that way," Richardson said after 1,000 wellwishers, Indian drummers and supporters in 20 canoes gave a send-off to the paddlers, who included four Haida from Alaska.

The 50-foot ocean-going canoe was carved out of a single cedar for Vancouver's Expo '86, reviving an art which lapsed a century ago.

Gandhi Troubles Continue To Multiply In India

By G.G. LaBELLE
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The public sympathy that swept Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi into office after his mother was killed has turned to scorn among many Indians as he grapples with an election defeat, corruption and ethnic violence.

In tradition-bound India, it may be difficult to dislodge Gandhi, the son of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and grandson of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Still, he is attacked almost daily in editorials and ridiculed in cartoons. The opposition howls for his resignation constantly. He and his Congress Party face increasingly vociferous accusations of corruption and policy failures.

Most recent in a long string of woes besieging Gandhi and his government was the Congress Party's crushing defeat in a key Hindu state election, the third major loss for the party this year.

The party won only four of the 87 state assembly seats in Haryana, a small state but one in the Hindi-speaking Ganges plain that is the party's power base.

Opposition leaders called the defeat a turning point in Indian politics and a signal Gandhi has lost the confidence of the people.

The defeat was not a knockout blow for Gandhi, whose party and family have governed India for most of its 40 years of independence.

But even friendly newspapers warned that Gandhi's accumulated troubles were fast adding up to a crisis.

"The message the voters of Haryana have sent is loud and clear: the Congress Party has been alienated from the large segments of the people as never before," said the Patriot, a Communist paper that usually supports the government.

Gandhi won a landslide victory in 1984 amid by public outrage over the assassination of his mother.

Then he was viewed as India's savior, a bright young man with a will and a way to solve the country's many problems. He stepped in during a critical time for his country and emerged looking competent and compassionate.

What has happened since is a clash between excessive expectations — Gandhi's and the people's — and Gandhi's failure to come to grips with the problems.

In 1984, Gandhi pledged to calm the Sikh violence of Punjab, banish corruption from business and politics and transform India into a modern nation finally free of its ancient burden of poverty.

The last promise was ballyhooed as a step into the 21st century, but it quickly ran into an entrenched government bureaucracy riding comfortably on a creaking socialist economy.

Gandhi has made some progress at economic reform. But the business community that backed him now complain he is too slow in acting.

Harsher critics say his policies aid the rich at the expense of the poor.

In Punjab, Sikh militants have killed more than 400 people this year in the deadliest attacks of their campaign to turn the northern state into a separate nation for the minority religious sect.

Gandhi, once known as "Mr. Clean," has failed to rid India of corruption. He repeatedly has denied that foreign weapons firms paid kickbacks to get Indian contracts. But evidence shows Sweden's Bofors company paid $39 million to Indian agents on one contract alone. After much delay, Gandhi has ordered a probe into that and other alleged kickback allegations.

Some critics are now making public accusations that the money went to Gandhi himself. Gandhi's reaction was simply to call the charge "a tissue of lies."

Gandhi's image also was damaged by his handling of former Finance Minister V.P. Singh, who was eased out of government by the Congress Party after he built a reputation as a crusader against corruption.

Singh is being called the "New Mr. Clean" and some newspapers have called him a potential alternative to Gandhi as leader of the Congress Party.

But it will be no easier to oust Gandhi as party leader than it would be to wrest the government from the party.

The last national elections in 1984 gave the party its largest victory ever, and it still holds more than 400 of the 544 seats in the ruling People's House in Parliament.

Between now and the next national election in 1989 there is only one snag — presidential elections next month.

Normally, the Congress candidate would be a shoo-in in the vote by Parliament and the state legislatures.

But there is talk of the opposition parties putting up a unified candidate and drawing dissident Congress Party members. That could split the party and force Gandhi to call midterm elections.

But the opposition parties are fragmented. They have managed to get together to oust Congress only once, and they promptly split again, allowing Congress the next victory.

In an interview last week in the magazine India Today, Gandhi was asked about each of his challenges. He brushed aside virtually every question.

As in his campaign speeches to India's masses, the only problems to which Gandhi admitted were blamed on faceless villains — "anti-nationalists," people out to "destabilize India" and "foreign forces."

U.S. Extradition Request Is Denied

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The government has decided not to extradite to the United States an alleged hijacker of a TWA jetliner, fearing for the lives of two West German hostages kidnapped in Lebanon, a newspaper said Sunday.

And another newspaper reported that Chancellor Helmut Kohl had received the impression from President Reagan that the United States would understand such a decision.

The newspaper Die Welt of Bonn said that Kohl, along with officials in the Justice, Foreign and Interior ministries, made the decision on the U.S. request for the extradition of Mohammed Ali Hamadi, 22.

Hamadi, a Lebanese Moslem, is one of four people indicted in the United States in connection with the June 1985 hijacking of TWA Flight 847 to Beirut, Lebanon, and the killing of a U.S. Navy diver who was a passenger.

Die Welt quoted unidentified government sources in its report, published in its early Monday editions.

Welt am Sonntag, a Hamburg newspaper, said Sunday the United States "would understand the concern that if Hamadi were extradited the two German hostages would be killed."

It gave no sources for its report but said Kohl got that impression in his meetings with Reagan during the recent Venice economic summit of seven free industrial nations.

The West German hostages were kidnapped in Beirut just days after Hamadi's Jan. 13 arrest at the Frankfurt airport where customs agents found explosive materials in his luggage. The hostages are being held by Shiite Moslems, who have demanded Hamadi's freedom.

They hostages are Rudolf Cordes, 53, an executive for a West German chemical company, and Alfred Schmidt, 47, a technician for a West German electronics company.

Government officials have said a Cabinet decision on the extradition will be announced Wednesday, and Die Welt noted that Bonn ministers were to meet Monday.

Publisher Is Released

ASUNCION, Paraguay (AP) — Newspaper publisher Humberto Dominguez Dibb, former son-in-law of President Alfredo Stroessner, has been freed following five days in detention on allegations involving a 1986 shooting incident.

Dominguez Dibb, owner and publisher of the Asuncion morning newspaper Hoy and afternoon paper La Tarde, was freed late Friday after posting bond that was the equivalent of $1,265, police said.

The 43-year-old publisher, formerly married to Gen. Stroessner's only daughter, Graciela, was arrested on Monday in connection with a June, 1986, incident in which he is accused of wounding a policeman.

Dominguez Dibb is accused of shooting a policeman in the leg when the officer and a companion attempted to intervene in a dispute between the publisher and a woman at the woman's home in Asuncion.

The publisher's newspapers claimed, however, that the arrest grew out of political rivalry between Dominguez Dibb and Interior Minister Sabino Montanaro. They belong to different factions of the ruling Colorado political party.

Colorado Party internal elections are scheduled to coincide with a September convention, which will select a presidential candidate for 1988 national elections. The party is expected to chose Stroessner, who has ruled the country since a 1954 coup, to seek an eighth consecutive term.

MORE FAMINE, DISEASE — A young boy in the town of Caia in Mozambique holds corn he collected from the ground after kernels were scattered from a relief shipment. CARE, which distributed 125,000 tons of emergency food rations in Mozambique last year, warns that hundreds of thousands of young children will be ravaged by hunger and disease in the next six months unless the world responds with high protein foods and nutritional and medical assistance. WHAT IS PLAQUE?

If you're looking for a villain in the continuous saga of dental problems - start with "plaque." Plaque is the primary cause of tooth decay and periodontal (gum) disease.

Plaque is a soft, sticky, colorless film of bacteria that is constantly forming on your teeth. The bacteria are most harmful when they become organized into colonies - about every 24 hours. When you eat sugar, it combines with the plaque and produces acids which attack the tooth enamel. The sticky plaque holds these acids on the teeth, prolonging the attack and allowing decay to begin.

The irritants in plaque inflame the gums, making them tender and likely to bleed. If not removed by daily cleaning, plaque builds up, eventually pulling the gums away from the teeth causing pockets that become filled with bacteria and infection. If not treated, healthy teeth may become loose and may be lost.

You can prevent dental disease by controlling plaque. How? Brush and floss thoroughly at least once a day. Avoid sugary foods. Come visit our office for regular checkups and professional cleanings.

The dog days of summer are upon us. You may think that Death Valley is the hottest place on Earth. But in 1922, Al' Aziziyah, Libya, recorded an incredible 136.4 degrees Fahrenheit in the shade. Not surprisingly, the lowest temperature ever recorded, -128.6 degrees, was in Antarctica. If you dislike such extremes, try Saipan, one of the Mariana Islands. Between 1927 and 1935, temperatures there ranged from a low of 67.3 degrees to a high of 88.5.

What action do you take?

A.—Not only is your hand too strong for a two diamond overall, but that action would risk losing the spade suit. Our choice is a takeout double, despite the shortness in clubs. Should partner respond two clubs, we think you are good enough to correct to two diamonds.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

Pass ?

What do you bid now?

A.—Don't be satisfied with a mere raise to two spades. With your honors situated behind the opening bid, we feel your hand is easily worth some 20 points. It's a question of whether you should make a non-forcing jump to three spades or raise to game. Since partner might have a bust, we slightly prefer the more conservative course.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

What action do you take?

A.—Your intermediate cards and prime controls made your hand a whit too good to open one no trump. Now you have an easy invitational raise to two no trump, asking partner to go on to game if he is near maximum for his original response.

What action do you take?

A.—Did you think we were trying to trick you again? Even after the raise you have a minimum opening bid, and while we can think of some hands that partner might have where game would be cold, there are many more where even two spades might not be safe. Pass.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠Q873 ♥95 ♦A10982 ♣63

The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South

1 ♥ Dbl Pass ?

What do you bid now?

A.—In response to partner's take-out double, it is always wiser to prefer a four-card major to a five-card minor. This is particularly true when partner has doubled a major-suit opening bid, for he usually promises at least four cards in the other major or a very strong hand.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠953 ♥QJ952 ♦J63 ♣85

Partner opens the bidding with two no trump. What do you respond?

A.—Even if your range for a two no trump opening bid is 21-22, you would be masterminding the auction were you to pass. The correct action is to bid three hearts, inviting partner to raise to game if he has three-card or better heart support and taking your chances at three no trump if he does not.

London Theater Opens Tuesday With 'Melon'

By MATT WOLF
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Simon Gray says it's his job to write as best as he can, and to many observers, the Cambridge-educated playwright is one of the best British dramatists around. His new play, "Melon," bows Tuesday at the Theatre Royal Haymarket. It's the first big opening of the summer, and promises to enliven a commercial theatrical landscape in London that presently looks fairly dull. Alan Bates stars in the title role as a successful publisher undergoing a psychological collapse. It's the sixth collaboration in theater and television for the actor and author, a pairing which Gray finds productive. "I've always found Alan to be in complete sympathy with the text," Gray said. "He has a sense of the language of my plays. He knows where the jokes are."

Bates, best-known for roles in such films as "An Unmarried Woman," "Women in Love" and "The Rose," won a 1973 Tony award for Gray's "Butley" on Broadway and starred in his plays "Otherwise Engaged" and "Stage Struck" in London.

Both "Butley" and "Otherwise Engaged" showed Gray's mordant humor. In "Melon," that humor is embedded in what its author described as a play about what it was like to go mad.

"The insights are more ferocious," Gray said of "Melon," which was first inspired a decade ago by a book called "Breakdown," about a German psychologist's nervous breakdown.

"Melon goes through a rather passionate journey," he said. "He's a middle-aged man of our time." The character becomes combatively obsessed with his wife's perceived adultery.

Like much of his other work, including his current off-Broadway hit "The Common Pursuit," "Melon" takes place in the upper middle-class world of English publishing, which is, with academia, the preferred Gray milieu.

The playwright said his fondness for these settings amounted to little more than laziness.

"Whatever stories interest me I like to write in a medium I completely understand, so that the details are right," said Gray, a former lecturer in English literature at Queen Mary College, London.

"The familiarity means I'm actually much freer in the environment."

His ability to take the emotional temperature of one stratum of society has led critics to compare him to Anton Chekhov, the Russian author whose plays deal with similarly condensed communities.

"Well, we do both write about a limited universe, but I find (the analogy) deeply flattering, and that's all it is," he said.

"Melon," he said, might prompt comparison to August Strindberg, the noted Swedish chronicler of marital rancor and disgust. "But I hope we don't get too much of that," Gray said with a laugh. "He's not the hottest box office."

Gray is delighted that "The Common Pursuit" has proven such hot box office in New York, where it is now in its ninth month at the Promenade after an unsuccessful London run in 1984.

However, the ill-fated London stint did spawn Gray's entertaining 1985 memoir, "An Unnatural Pursuit, and Other Pieces."

Accordingly, his American success with "The Common Pursuit," which has also been seen in New Haven, Conn., and in Los Angeles, is spawning a book of its own.

Its title: "How's That for Telling Them, Fat Lady?"

Stephen Albert: Rare Breed Among Classical Composers

By JOSEPH McLELLAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — When he won the Pulitzer Prize in 1985, Stephen Albert was able to put his stamps away — at least for a while, perhaps forever.

"Call it an inventory," Albert insists, "not a collection." He was a major dealer in the field of postal history for 10 years and recalls that "it gave me independence for a long time."

Inventory or collection, the Albert stash of stamps includes what has been called the "definitive" set of U.S. Bank Note stamps on covers from the years 1870 to 1890.

But stamps are not what Stephen Albert is about; they are merely what supported him as a composer before he won the prize. He also gives a lot of credit to his wife Marilyn, a neuropsychologist at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Albert is one of those rare birds, a classical composer who does not work at a university. He says he has a "phobic reaction" to institutions: "I feel like I'm in prison: the smell of polished wood, the floors being waxed, all that ..." He has similar trouble with academic systems of composition, and maybe that attitude helped him win a Pulitzer.

It is certainly what wins him loud applause at concerts where the audience really has come to hear Tchaikovsky.

That was what was happening here recently when the National Symphony Orchestra played his "RiverRun," the piece (commissioned by the NSO and the Hechinger Foundation) that won the prize.

At age 46, Stephen Albert is earning his living as a member of a rare and endangered species. Classical music supplies a living to lots of violinists, pianists and conductors, but most composers have to get their money from something else.

So when he stopped being a student and ran out of fellowships (Guggenheim, Prix de Rome, etc.), tried teaching and found it uncongenial, Albert began dealing in rare stamps.

"I did it for 10 years while composing every day," he says, "and I loved it. I had privacy, and I didn't have to worry about institutional questions, committee meetings or academic politics."

His latest composition, "Flower of the Mountain" for soprano and chamber orchestra, came in second for this year's Pulitzer. Like "RiverRun," it is based on the work of James Joyce: the end of Molly Bloom's soliloquy in the final pages of "Ulysses."

Albert finds his inspiration frequently in Joyce. The author "gets beyond my rational powers and strikes something very deep," Albert says. "I try to find a musical metaphor for that emotion."

Albert's success can be attributed directly to the kind of music he writes: straightforward, melodious, unafraid of expressing and evoking emotions and crafted with a sense of form, structure and climax that average music-lovers can grasp.

It's a kind of music that may be easier to write if you are not teaching at a university. Albert's music shares the NSO program with Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony, and it stands up well in that company. Furthermore, Albert — unlike many living composers — welcomes Tchaikovsky as a program partner.

"I love that symphony," he said, still glowing with memories of how well the NSO had played. "I think that Tchaikovsky is a great symphonist. He knows the orchestra, and he doesn't use pure flash the way Rimsky-Korsakov used to do sometimes. He's luminous, like Brahms."

Born in Jamaica, Queens, in 1941, Albert studied piano and trumpet but knew he really wanted to be a composer by the time he was 13 and already writing music.

He is not proud of his abilities as a performing musician: "I play the kind of piano that people actually pay me to stop; they take up a collection for the indigent composer who's forcing himself on them. I hated to practice; I never had the patience to sit down at the piano hour after hour, and I used to feel sicker than I can tell you every time I got in front of an audience playing the piano."

For a while, he had trouble with the idea of being a composer, too. In his formative years, he says, "the most influential attitude favored for composers was one of emotional disengagement. People were composing according to systems, which to my mind were straitjackets. I think there is a temptation to adopt systems and theories to compensate for the lack of creative impulses within you."

In this climate he seriously considered giving up music, but he found his own approach with the help of three composer-teachers — Elie Siegmeister, George Rochberg and Joseph Castaldo — who shared his opposition to abstract, inexpressive systems.

His original reaction to winning the Pulitzer was curious — really a sort of nonreaction. Although he had won quite a few prizes, he had convinced himself that they really didn't matter.

"So," he says, "when I got the call from the National Symphony to tell me I had won the Pulitzer, I remember putting down the phone and not really thinking about it. I had an appointment to play a game of squash, and I just put down the phone and went out and played squash."

"When I got home, my son Joshua said, 'Dad, the phone's been ringing a lot; people want to talk to you about winning the Pulitzer Prize.' I hadn't even called my wife to tell her. She was a little surprised."

"I got called by an AP (Associated Press) stringer who started asking me questions. I tried to be as honest as possible; I said, 'A lot of people who won the prize never did much afterward.' And then I said, 'You know, to be honest, a lot of people who won the prize never did much before, either.'"

"My wife was upset with me when that appeared in the newspapers the next day. Marilyn said, 'Boy, you really shot yourself in the foot again; you really look like a misanthrope.' Well, I'm not, and I didn't want to give that impression, but I was trying to say it's hard to keep your eye on essential goals."

"The problem with this country is that we're focused on these instantaneous hit things, these momentary gratifications, and we don't understand there's a continuity involved; there's a continuity to all great art. There's a continuity to our own character development."

Still, he is happy about his Pulitzer. "It does allow you to exist on a more gratifying professional level with other musicians," he says.

Getz Shares Spotlight At Jazz Festival

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Saxophonist Stan Getz was the headline, but the JVC Jazz Festival concert produced three satisfying sets as the more modern Michael Brecker Band and McCoy Tyner Trio also played at Avery Fisher Hall.

Getz came on last in the long concert Sunday night, following density with a thread of clarity. He stepped forward to shine as a soloist less often than he sometimes does, and came across as definitely more a part of his quartet, backed by pianist Kenny Barron, bassist Rufus Reid and drummer Victor Lewis.

When his playing did dominate, they gave understated support behind him. Even when he was emphatic, Getz flowed warmly in and around the tune.

They played Barron's "Voyage," Jimmy Van Heusen's "I Took a Trip on a Train" and Billy Strayhorn's beautiful, pensive "Blood Count." Getz also played "The Wave" for "the old folks" who remember his bossa nova days.

Brecker, generally a recording-session saxophonist, band opened Sunday's concert. His five-piece band has a lot of dissonance and energy, especially from guitarist Mike Stern and 23-year-old pianist Joey Calderazzo.

Brecker also managed to be flowery around one traditional tune, "My One and Only Love." He also played a wind synthesizer, like a futuristic clarinet with squared sides instead of rounded, ending in a cord instead of a bell.

Brecker has humor, too, at one point imitating Miles Davis' stage deportment, dipping his instrument to the floor to hit a low note. He dedicated one tune to the phenomenon of 60 or 70 New York City pizza parlors all called "Original Ray's."

Tyner's piano playing was mesmerizing. There's a strong pulse and the chords nearly repeat. As one listens, it doesn't feel like listening. It feels like you're riding away on the music.

Earlier Sunday evening, at the festival's daily solo piano concert, Weill Hall at Carnegie Hall had been filled with virtuosity — by George Shearing. One of his numbers was "Taking a Chance on Brahms," a solemn beginning that turned playful, combining a popular song, improvisation by Shearing and quotations from "E Major Intermezzo" by Brahms.

Garry Shandling Is Enjoying Creative Freedom On Cable

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Garry Shandling was in trademark furrowed-brow mode, familiar from his befuddled-single-guy standup comedy routine.
Still recovering from a late-night welcome from "Saturday Night Live" — he was that week's guest host — he worried whether he could parody his successful cable sitcom in a sketch on the network show.
"I have two funny parody ideas, but I don't think people know the show well enough that it'll work," he said.
"One of the parody ideas is that every character talks to the camera, and they argue over whose turn it is to talk to the camera. And one is that (producer) Lorne Michaels comes out every time I make a reference to the camera and says, 'Garry, you can't talk to the camera on our show. This isn't your show.'
"I don't think people would get it." The only people who would get it are subscribers to the pay-cable channel Showtime who have discovered "It's Garry Shandling's Show," the comedian's off-the-wall, no-fourth-wall situation comedy.

COMEDY KING OF CABLE — Comedian Garry Shandling jokes with a visitor last month in his New York hotel room. Shandling, who has his own cable television sitcom and who has hosted popular network comedy shows such as "Saturday Night Live" and "The Tonight Show," hopes one day to break with cable, but for the time being accepts that the tradeoff for the creative freedom he now enjoys on his idiosyncratic show is the small size of cable audiences. (AP Laserphoto)

"The next thing is I'll have a show on ham radio, that's the next step from cable," mock-lamented Shandling, who gets plenty of network exposure as a frequent guest host on "The Tonight Show."
On "SNL," as it turned out, Shandling talked to the camera without explanation, and those who had seen "It's Garry Shandling's Show" got the inside joke while those who hadn't thought it was funny anyway.
There's more to Shandling's show than talking to the camera. It's a sitcom with a mission — to constantly remind the audience that they are watching television.
Take the lyrics to the theme song: "This is the theme to Garry's show," "The opening theme to Garry's show."
"This is the music that you hear as you watch the credits..."
Shandling often turns to the camera to explain his relationships to the other characters or to recap the action:
"OK, here's where we are in the story. My stuff has been stolen. You saw some of it earlier in the show, and it's really great stuff. Now it's 20 minutes later, and I have to do this scene where I deal with the cop."

He sometimes asks the studio audience to vote on plot twists, which can be pretty bizarre.
"We're working on an idea where Garry finds God in his closet and actually talks to him. And God becomes kind of a bad roommate; he can't figure how to get him out," Shandling said.
George Burns philosophized to the camera more than 30 years ago on "The George Burns and Gracie Allen Show." Shandling mentions Burns, but says he was influenced instead by "the sensibility of shows like 'Saturday Night Live' and David Letterman, applying those sensibilities to a situation comedy." He said the sitcom idea sprang from a bit on Michael Nesmith's NBC comedy special "Television Parts." After that came specials on Showtime, then the series last year.
NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff was asked not long ago if he regretted turning down "It's Garry Shandling's Show" when it was offered to NBC. Tartikoff said he wished he could have given the show a tryout in the summer instead of having to risk putting it on in prime time.
"I don't blame the network for being hesitant on a project like this," Shandling said. "It's a lot of money and it's something completely different and you don't know if it's going to work until you try it."
In the meantime, Shandling is satisfied enough with cable to have signed a 3-year deal with Showtime.
"I fully realized at the time that the tradeoff for the creative freedom was going to be a smaller audience, which doesn't bother me at all," Shandling said. "I would rather be able to do exactly the kind of show I want than have the wider audience."
The only network show remotely like Shandling's is ABC's "Moonlighting," with its occasional asides to the camera and references to what happened on the commercial break.
"Not only are there similar references, but Bruce Willis and I have very similar hairstyles — or is it Cybill Shepherd and I have very similar hairstyles?" wondered Shandling, who has his own, perfectly nice hairstyle.

Kylian's 'Bewitched Child' Is A Problematical Ballet

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — "The Bewitched Child" is a problematical ballet for Jiri Kylian, artistic director of the Netherlands Dance Theater.
The work to music by Ravel, originally written as an opera by the French writer Colette for her naughty little daughter, will be danced by the Netherlands company's opening night at the Metropolitan Opera House.
"From one side, it's supposed to be a ballet; from the other, an opera," Kylian said. "My concept is visual. The singers are on the side of the stage or in the pit. Dancers are in costumes representing the characters."
"How you make a teapot, teacup and grandfather's clock dance are enormous problems. How to tell the story so you can understand it from the dancing, even without understanding the words, is very difficult. It was very exciting to work on it. ... It is a wonderful trip into childhood."
Kylian choreographed all seven ballets that will be performed by the company at the Met from June 22-27, including another problematical dance, "L'Histoire du Soldat," to music by Igor Stravinsky.
"In 'The Soldier's Tale,' you run into the problem of the spoken word," Kylian said. "We made a tape of the text with three French actors who came to Holland to work with us. It was a problem to decide in which language to do it. English is the most universal language right now. ... Still, French is the original language and it sounded the best to me, so it's in French."

"One of the major reasons I wanted to do this work was that I found an incredible richness in the poetry and in the music, much richer than the way it is most times represented on stage. I thought it would be wonderful to expand it, really make an interpretation of it."
Kylian, 40, studied dance in his native Czechoslovakia and for a year in England. He was in the Stuttgart Ballet for seven years and stopped dancing in 1975 when he went to the Netherlands troupe. His choreography and the 32-member company, acclaimed in Europe and the United States, were last seen here in 1982.
His style has been called "merging of the contemporary streams in dance and the classical style." And when he begins to choreograph, it is usually the music that intrigues him the most.
"I think that for every piece almost a new style or a new vocabulary should be attempted to be created," Kylian said. "To Stravinsky, you cannot use the same patterns as you do for Ravel. One has to experience the music physically and spiritually in a completely different way."

"I made one work, many years ago, 'Symphony in D,' to Haydn, which has an absolutely classical vocabulary. I find it technically very important for the dancers. It gives them stamina and strength, which is very important for my work. I love vitality and energy in dance."
He's currently working on a new full-length ballet he hopes will inaugurate the company's new theater, which is under construction in the Hague. The opening ceremony will be Sept. 9.
"Believe it or not, it is the very first theater built specifically for dance in Europe," Kylian said. "We wanted an intimate theater. It seats 1,000. Its stage is as wide as the Met stage. Its pit is huge. You can do a Wagner opera in there if you like."
The Netherlands Dance Theater attracts dancers from many nations, but more Americans audition than any other nationality.

Simple Stone Marks Grave Of Belushi

By MARYANN MROWCA
Associated Press Writer
CHILMARK, Mass. (AP) — Five years after his death, John Belushi's fans continue to file past his grave, marked by a streaked boulder that says simply, "Belushi."
"It's surprising how many teens come, how many college kids, because they were little when he was big," says Basil Welch, caretaker of the Abel's Hill Cemetery.
Up to 40 Belushi fans travel the quiet, winding road to the cemetery each day in the summer, Welch said. Some leave mementos, others only footprints in the dust and grass.
"Sometimes, they come to have a drink with John," says Welch, who picks up their beer bottles and other tokens. "Someday this novelty will wear off, but it hasn't yet."
Dozens of shells from the beaches on this island of Martha's Vineyard surround the 5-foot gray-blue marker, streaked with green and pink. The stone came from the beach in front of Belushi's home here, Welch said.
The comedian, famous for his antics on NBC-TV's "Saturday Night Live" and in the movies "Animal House" and "The Blues Brothers," died of a drug overdose at age 33 on March 5, 1982. Cathy Evelyn Smith, a former rock backup singer who injected the fatal dose, was sentenced last September to three years in prison.
Belushi's widow, Judy Jacklin Belushi, visits the cemetery often when she is on the island, where she still owns the couple's grey frame house.
"She also has someone who places fresh flowers on the grave for her when she's not here," elch said.
Besides a small bouquet of cut flowers, a faded American flag and a small straw heart recently adorned the grave. A pyramid of smooth stones has graced the grave since Belushi was buried.

Vietnam Waging Battle Against Malnutrition

By PETER ENG
Associated Press Writer
QUAT DONG, Vietnam (AP) — The Vietnamese government has launched a campaign to combat a problem it didn't realize it had until few years ago — serious malnutrition, particularly among children.

A large part of the blame is laid to the Vietnamese all-rice diet and the government's campaign is telling people to "add colors" to their meals. To encourage this, it has revived a traditional concept called VAC, an acronym formed from the Vietnamese words for garden, pond and animal husbandry.

Villagers are advised to transform home gardens into small ecosystems linking fruit and vegetable production with fish culture and the raising of pigs or chickens.

Here in Quat Dong, 15 miles outside Hanoi, the capital, villagers tend a common VAC under the auspices of the National Institute of Nutrition. At the same time, the village health center keeps a growth chart for each child and mothers are given fish powder and vitamin A capsules along with instruction in child care.

Quat Dong is one of 27 villages in northern Vietnam aided in this way by the institute.

While children are the major sufferers, malnutrition also has been detected among soldiers in the Vietnamese army.

Le The Trung, rector of the Military Medical Institute, said that in some military units, nutrition-related diseases like beriberi and neuritis "followed by organic atrophy" occur in "apparently epidemic forms."

Writing in the official Communist Party newspaper Nhan Dan on April 6, Trung said his institute has examined more than 1,000 cases of beriberi. The disease, characterized by nervous and gastrointestinal disorders, is caused by lack of vitamin B1, which is found in whole grains, liver and pork.

UNICEF, the United Nations Childrens Fund, says a 1981-84 Vietnamese government survey of 9,000 children under 5 years old found 30.1 percent seriously malnourished and 6.2 percent categorized as "emergency cases for hospitals."

Using a different measure, Dr. Tu Giay, director of the National Institute of Nutrition, estimates that half of Vietnam's children are malnourished and 1.5 percent are acutely stricken.

Malnutrition, which weakens resistance to disease, has heavily contributed to the high child mortality rate. UNICEF says 98 of every 1,000 children under 5 die in Vietnam, in contrast to 13 in the United States.

One of the problems has been keeping food production at par with population growth and the Communist Party, at its national congress in December, set the production of food for domestic consumption as a top priority.

"One of our most serious problems now is how to reduce the malnutrition rate," Giay said in an interview. With UNICEF's aid, his institute is trying to increase village food production, improve child care and gather critical scientific data on malnutrition.

UNICEF does not regard malnutrition here as great as it is in parts of Africa but of a kind that makes a 4-year-old child look half his age.

Giay said malnutrition rates probably haven't changed in 50 years, the average height and weight of adults having remained constant.

Commonly reported nutrition-related diseases include anemia and xerophthalmia, or blindness due to vitamin A deficiency, which UNICEF says affects eight of every 10,000 Vietnamese children.

Giay said 25 percent of acutely malnourished children at the Swedish-built Children's Hospital in Hanoi die if they contract a disease, and "in worse-equipped hospitals, the rate can reach 40 percent."

The basic problems is that while food output has gone up, the 2.1 percent annual population growth rate, which will add 1.3 million more mouths to feed this year, has meant supplies per person haven't changed in five years.

Vietnam last year harvested a record 18.5 million tons of food crops, but UNICEF says that was 3.5 million to 6.5 million tons below nutritional needs. The average Vietnamese consumes 1,940 calories daily, 15 percent fewer than the minimum the United Nations recommends.

Experts say much malnutrition could be avoided with present resources if Vietnamese relied less on all-rice meals. Vietnamese consume almost no milk, a sixth of the world average in meat, and UNICEF says intake of fats and oils, needed to absorb vitamins, is probably the world's lowest.

Experts say infants grow normally until 4 to 6 months of age because of breast-feeding, but then rapidly decline and succumb to infections since they get little besides rice gruel.

Arctic Summer Is 'Two Weeks Of Poor Sledding' For A Few

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer
RESOLUTE, Northwest Territories (AP) — Up here where the sun doesn't set, the summer of '87 "dawned" at a crisp 36 degrees Fahrenheit, stirring the blood of shortstops, barbecue chefs and Eskimos in search of a suntan.

"I'll do some seal-hunting, some fishing, and maybe get a tan," an eager Elijah Nashook, mayor of the Canadian Eskimo settlement of Pond Inlet, told a visitor Sunday as he readied family, tents and guns for a 50-mile dash by snowmobile across the frozen seas to a favored summer campsite.

Some northerners, though, can still keep an objective southern eye 540 miles above the Arctic Circle.

"What summer?" laughed Hazel Clapperton, a cleaning lady at the remote Polaris lead-zinc mine. "Two weeks of poor sledding — that's all it is."

Even the weatherman's wife is a bit glum as summer allegedly arrives in Canada's High Arctic.

"She's had it," admitted Francois Guay, meteorologist at Frobisher Bay. "After eight, nine months of real winter, you look forward to sitting outside. And then it snows."

In fact, although Sunday was the season's start on the calendar, true summer is unusually late in coming to the far north this year.

In the Arctic summertime, the Earth's crown, like some planetary sunflower, tilts toward the sun, giving this sparsely populated region 24 hours of daylight.

From ground level, the glowing solar disk seems to simply roll around the horizon, in a 360-degree circle every 24 hours. At midnight, you'll find it in the north, hanging just above the Pole.

Because it is always at a relatively low angle, however, the sun doesn't warm the earth and sea as much as in the south.

Here at Resolute, a tiny island outpost of Eskimos, scientists and adventurers, a spot where the thermometer once plunged to minus 62 F, the mercury will reach only into the 40s in July and August.

And this year the climb in temperature is slower than normal. Sunday's summer solstice sun glinted off an Arctic sea that is still a solid gray-white sheet of ice. But "everything is relative," as Nashook explained to a southerner.

For those with the eye and ear, the trademarks of summer already abound in the Arctic: the gurgle of water racing down to the sea, the captivating color of yellow and orange lichens spreading across the treeless land, the mini-blooms of purple saxifrage, the ivory gulls coming home to their rocky perches.

Over at Polaris, the world's northernmost base-metal mine, the boys threw a barbecue Saturday night on the frozen shore. And on Sunday the "Tunnel Rats" were out on the diamond sharpening up for next Sunday's 9 p.m.-5 a.m. softball tournament against the men from Resolute.

In Frobisher Bay, an Arctic gateway, the schoolteachers have flocked south for the summer and the tourists are migrating north — a couple of planeloads arrived this weekend for the thrill of seeing the midnight sun.

one of the world's most northerly greenhouses.

Everywhere the people of the Canadian Arctic watched and listened for "the breakup" — the cracking of the sea ice that will eventually allow supply ships to bring them a year's worth of everything from gasoline to bubble gum.

But any northerner will tell you that only the Eskimos — or Inuit, as they call themselves — can truly treasure the Arctic summer.

Injured Demjanjuk Misses Trial Start

By MARY SEDOR
Associated Press Writer
JERUSALEM (AP) — John Demjanjuk, a retired American autoworker accused of being a notorious Nazi death camp guard, hurt his shoulder in a police van today and was not present as his war crimes trial resumed.

"We are opening this session without the defendant, who was accidentally injured on his way to court. The defendant was checked by a doctor ... and requested that the trial start without him," said presiding Judge Dov Levine.

Israel Army radio said Demjanjuk injured his shoulder when he lost his balance in a police van carrying him from the Ayalon maximum security prison to court. Jerusalem police spokesman Rafi Levy said he had no information about the incident.

Demjanjuk, 67, is accused of being "Ivan the Terrible," a guard who allegedly tortured prisoners and operated the ga chambers at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland during World War II. Some 850,000 Jews were killed at the camp in 1942-43.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk, who lived in the Cleveland suburb of Seven Hills before his extradition in February 1986, says he is a victim of mistaken identity and was never at Treblinka. If convicted, Demjanjuk faces a possible death sentence.

The trial resumed after a recess of more than a month during which prosecution and defense teams travelled to West Germany to question former Nazi SS officers.

The testimonies of Helmut Leonhardt, 71, a former clerk at the Trawniki camp, and of Otto Horn, 83, a former nurse at Treblinka, were heard behind closed doors and are due to be read into the trial record in Israel.

Prosecutors in the nearly 4-month-old trial have presented the court with an SS identity card they say was issued to the defendant at the Trawniki training camp for death camp guards.

Demjanjuk's U.S. attorney Mark O'Connor says the card, which was obtained from Soviet archives, is a Soviet forgery.

We can help you find the money you've been keeping in your home.

First Federal's home equity loans let you use your home equity to secure longer terms, lower payments and, often lower interest rates on an interest deductible loan for most any purpose.

Since First Federal has made more mortgage loans in Pitt County over the past 50 years than any other financial institution, it's only right that we show you how to make your home's equity work for you.

So, if you need a substantial loan for a car, a boat, a vacation, remodeling or even an investment, we can show you how to spread your payback period over a longer term with a home equity loan. Since there are more payment periods available with a home equity loan, your monthly payments will be lower, often at lower interest rates than conventional loans. And with a First Federal home equity loan, you may be able to retain your interest deduction, even under the new tax law.

When it's time to let your home pay you back for all your monthly mortgage payments, talk to the people at First Federal about a home equity loan. You'll be surprised at all the money you've been keeping in your house.
