Senator Says Israel To Provide 'Significant' Iran-Contra Data

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Israeli government has agreed to provide congressional investigators with "significant new information," including financial data, about its role in the Iran-Contra affair, Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, announced today.

Inouye, chairman of the Senate committee exploring the affair, said investigators already had gained access to some of the Israeli information and "we are satisfied that it reveals important facts."

He made the announcement at the outset of today's nationally televised hearing, before the Senate and House panels began questioning Justice Department official Charles Cooper about his role in the early phase of the government's internal investigation into the diversion of proceeds from secret U.S. arms sales to Iran to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Cooper testified that Attorney General Edwin Meese III warned him nearly three weeks before Meese publicly disclosed the diversion last Nov. 25 that Cooper should brace himself to investigate unfolding reports of the arms sales.

Cooper said Meese told him to keep his inquiry confidential, and use a limited staff, in obtaining details about a matter of "the greatest sensitivity and greatest importance." As assistant attorney general in charge of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel, Cooper was a primary figure in the department's initial investigation.

The inquiry has been criticized as too slow to prevent former National Security Council aide Lt. Col. Oliver North from shredding documents relating to the arms profits diversion. Critics also have suggested that the investigation was intended to protect President Reagan rather than get to the facts.

In his announcement, Inouye said the Israelis had agreed to make available for interrogation Gen. Rafael Vardi, who has been assigned to compile a report for the Tel Aviv government on Israel's role in the arms deal with Iran.

Inouye said the only restriction the Israelis had placed on the information was that material relating to its national security not be made public.

But the Senate chairman made no mention of whether Israelis would make available for interrogation many of the present and former government officials who were involved in Iran arms sales, as congressional investigators once hoped.

According to some accounts, it was Israelis who first proposed the sale of weapons to the Iranians.

Inouye thanked the Israelis for their cooperation with the investigation, even though it fell short of what officials had initially hoped.

"Without such voluntary assistance, relevant facts would not be available to us or to the public and without these facts our investigation could not be considered complete," he said.

Pitt Board Approves $41.6 Million Budget

BY STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

A budget totaling $41.6 million for the 1987-88 fiscal year was approved Wednesday by the Pitt County Board of Commissioners.

The new budget — 8 percent higher than this year's $38.46 million — is based on a 64 cents per $100 value property tax rate — the same rate in effect this year — which is expected to generate $16.29 million in local revenue.

Estimated sales tax receipts of $6.95 million and state and federal funds combine to provide most of the other money needed to finance the county's operations.

As approved, the new budget includes some $35.55 million to keep county departments and agencies operating at the same level as this year.

It also includes $6.12 million to give county employees a 5 percent pay increase, expand programs and provide for capital outlay needs.

Because $4.68 million included in the expansion budget had already been committed — such things as $3 million for school capital outlay needs and money to pay for property being purchased by the county — only $1.44 million, was available to meet other supplementary requests.

In addition to the pay raises ($189,553), money for land ($1.34 million) and school capital needs, the budget approved Wednesday includes a 5 percent increase in money for public school current expense needs ($119,000 in new county money) — $9.6 million compared to $9.49 million this year.

Jackson told the board earlier that the amount of money for schools "is equivalent to 50 percent of the two half-cent sales taxes and 67 percent of the county ad valorem property tax."

Other expansion items in the budget include: $289,668 to complete implementation of an employees' salary plan, the first phase of which was started this year; $192,000 for new vehicles; more than $138,000 in improvements at Pitt-Greenville Airport; $249,000 for landfill equipment and personnel; $104,000 for improvements in the Sheriff's Department, including a new ad-

Chrysler Denies Federal Odometer Fraud Counts

By R.B. FALLSTROM
Associated Press Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Federal officials should investigate all automakers, Chrysler Motors said after it was charged with what it called an industry-wide practice of letting employees drive cars that are later sold as new.

The Chrysler Corp. division and two executives were accused of letting employees drive more than 60,000 vehicles in an 18-month period beginning in July 1985 with disconnected odometers before selling them. Some of the cars had been wrecked and repaired before they were sold, the indictment said. It said the practice actually goes back to 1949, involving millions of cars.

"The U.S. attorney's office is attacking a legitimate quality assurance program, beneficial to consumers, by attempting to apply to the quality testing of new vehicles a federal statute designed to preclude the rolling back of odometers on used cars," the Chrysler Corp. division said.

"The law has never previously been applied in such a circumstance, or to an automobile manufacturer."

Chrysler Motors pleaded innocent Wednesday to a 16-count federal indictment charging conspiracy to commit mail, wire and odometer fraud. A company attorney said the two executives had been merely carrying out company policy.

Chrysler attorney Charles Newman said the quality assurance program was comparable to those used by other carmakers, and urged federal authorities to investigate them also.

But U.S. Attorney Thomas E. Dittmeier, who brought the indictment, said he had no evidence that other carmakers were letting their executives drive cars with disconnected odometers.

If convicted on all counts, 15 of which are felonies, the company could face a maximum fine of $120 million on the felony charges.

Executives Allen F. Scudder and Frank J. O'Reilly, who each were charged with a misdemeanor count of conspiracy to commit odometer fraud, could each face up to one year in prison if convicted.

Chrysler Motors, the nation's third-largest automaker, flatly denied "that the company or any of its employees had done anything illegal or improper."

Dittmeier said the cars, trucks and

Waldheim, Pope Meet

By JENNIFER PARMELEE
Associated Press Writer

ROME (AP) — As about 100 protesters shouted "Shame!" and "Assassin!" outside, Austrian President Kurt Waldheim met for 30 minutes in the Vatican today with Pope John Paul II.

The papal audience, Waldheim's first official trip abroad since becoming president last July, has prompted harsh criticism because of his alleged involvement in Nazi war crimes during World War II.

Some of the protesters outside the Vatican erected a replica of a gallows.

John Paul and Waldheim, speaking in German, exchanged speeches in the papal library, discussing disarmament and their hopes for world peace.

The official Vatican texts showed no direct mention of the controversy that has surrounded Waldheim's visit.

John Paul, speaking first, lauded Waldheim's work as former U.N. secretary-general and recalled his first visit to the United Nations in 1979 at Waldheim's invitation.

"The activity that you have carried out in the international field as a diplomat and as foreign minister of your country, as well as during your term — filled with responsibility — as secretary of the United Nations, has always been devoted to ensuring peace among peoples."

"You can now put into action in the service of your country your lifetime and professional experiences... after your election as the highest representative of the Austrian people, whom I treasure very much."

In response, Waldheim thanked the pope for receiving him and praised him as "a renowned moral authority."

"You, Holy Father, have never stopped to raise your voice tirelessly all over the world for the great aim of peace between peoples," Waldheim said.

Waldheim expressed his wishes for progress in the field of nuclear disarmament, but added, "We have long known that the world does not become safer and more peaceful solely by disarmament measures — however vital they are."

"What matters is spiritual disarmament that leads to the reduction of preconceived enmity between peoples, races and religions," Waldheim continued. "Christianity has outlined for us a clear path: the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount."

On the fringes of St. Peter's Square facing the Vatican, up to 100 demonstrators from Jewish activist and political groups from Italy, Austria and the United States shouted slogans denouncing the Waldheim audience.

Their voices would not have car-

Repaired Frigate Makes Test Run

By ALY MAHMOUD
Associated Press Writer

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The USS Stark took to sea on a test run today, its first cruise since the May 17 Iraqi missile attack that killed 37 crewmen aboard the frigate.

Initial repairs were completed ahead of schedule, and the warship looked "ship-shape" as she inched out of the Bahrain harbor area, marine salvage executives reported.

They said the Stark set out at mid-morning for a cruise of a few hours.

Her scars patched and holes plugged, the Stark looked "wholesome and as good as new" as she left Bahrain's territorial waters and entered the gulf, an executive said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

A tarpaulin that had looked like bandage on a wound was taken off the repaired spots near the bridge on the left side of the frigate, they said.

Said one maritime shipping expert who had seen the vessel: "She will have to be further repaired, possibly rearmend, but she is now as healthy as any new warship can be."

The Stark sailed out without escort, apparently with instruction not to stray far from Bahrain.

The frigate is part of the seven-unit U.S. Middle East Force, commanded by the USS LaSalle. The other units are currently patrolling the waters of the Persian Gulf.

The force is to be joined shortly by another three ships to help escort Kuwaiti oil tankers that are to sail as of July 1 under the U.S. flag. President Reagan announced the reflagging plan as part of an effort to safeguard oil sent through the gulf.

The Stark had been hit with two missiles fired by an Iraqi warplane. Iraq apologized for the attack, saying the pilot believed he was raiding an Iranian warship.

Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980. They have been raiding commercial ships in the gulf waters in an attempt to choke off each other's economy and curtail war efforts. Iran attacks Kuwait's tankers because it claims Kuwait aids Iraq's war effort.

The U.S. ambassador to Bahrain, Sam Zakhem, told The Associated Press that American warships will not hesitate to shoot down any plane that shows hostile intentions.

"God help any plane, any pilot, regardless of (to) what nation he belongs... if they come in a pattern that may show hostile intent," he said.

The Stark sailed under her new

House Panel To Consider Plan For Prescription Drug Benefit

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The fight for a new prescription drug benefit under Medicare is moving to the House Rules Committee, which will consider plans adopted by two different committees and decide what will reach the floor.

The panel will take up a Ways and Means Committee proposal, approved Wednesday, to cover 80 percent of outpatient drug costs over $800 a year as well as an Energy and Commerce Committee plan to cover all outpatient drug costs over $500. Both programs would be financed by premium hikes.

To complicate matters further, rules chairman Claude Pepper, D-Fla., introduced his own bill to provide Medicare coverage of drug costs over $250 a year.

Before the Ways and Means panel approved its plan, 24-12, committee Republicans complained about wildly varying cost estimates from different agencies. They suggested scrapping the new benefit in favor of a one-year study of its cost.

"Wouldn't it be better to have the information before we make a final decision that is politically irreversible?" said Rep. Willis Gradison, R-Ohio, sponsor of the substitute.

Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., said he would like to "deliberate and write good law." But he cited "the pressure of another committee" already having approved a drug benefit some consider too expensive and added, "We want to have some input."

The Rules Committee will decide which plan or compromise will be offered as a floor amendment to a major Medicare expansion bill aimed at easing the cost of catastrophic, acute illness among the elderly and disabled.

The Reagan administration, which initially proposed a modest catastrophic health plan, has threatened to veto any bill that contains a drug benefit or a requirement that states help the low-income elderly pay their Medicare premiums.

The Ways and Means plan would begin in 1990 and, according to the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office, would cost less than $500 million in its first year and rise to $1.3 billion in 1992. To pay for it, monthly premiums would rise $1.10 above the level in current law in the first year and $2.40 in 1992.

The Reagan administration has projected the cost of the program at four to five times more than the CBO estimate, with correspondingly higher premium increases.

Rep. Phil Crane, R-Ill., proposed an unsuccessful amendment Wednesday to bar Medicare coverage of drugs purchased by people under 65 with AIDS. Victims of the disease now are eligible for Medicare under the same terms as others with disabilities: they must be disabled as defined by the government for two years before they qualify for benefits.

Crane said the exclusion would give Congress time to see if the AIDS problem is "an inconsequential threat" or a serious potential burden on the elderly paying premiums to finance the drug benefit.

His proposal was defeated 26-10 after a CBO representative said the amendment would set a precedent of denying Medicare coverage on the basis of a diagnosis.

The committee adopted amendments to eliminate a requirement that generic drugs automatically be substituted for name brands unless a doctor specifies otherwise, and scrap a formulary or list of drugs to be included in the program. A CBO aide estimated the two amendments would add 6 percent to 8 percent to the cost of the drug plan, bringing the total cost to about $1.4 billion in 1992, by CBO projections.

Impeachment Steps Taken

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer
AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Two state legislators have filed a resolution calling for an impeachment investigation of Gov. Bill Clements, who has said he was aware of improper payments to Southern Methodist University football players.

The resolution filed Wednesday by Reps. Paul Moreno and Rep. Al Edwards is the first step in the lengthy impeachment process.

"I feel that the governor deceived the voters of the state when he was seeking election. Had this thing come into being (during the 1986 campaign), Governor Clements would not be Governor Clements right now," said Moreno.

Clements has said he knew of payments to football players when he served as chairman of the SMU board before taking office in January.

A Methodist bishops' report released last Friday indicated Clements participated in a cover-up of the payments that led the National Collegiate Athletic Association to ban football at SMU this year.

The Republican governor has dismissed impeachment talk as political rhetoric.

The resolution introduced by Moreno and Edwards, both Democrats, for a seven-member House committee to look into Clements' role in the scandal and determine whether impeachment proceedings should be filed.

It would take a majority vote of the Democratic-controlled House to create the special committee, which, in turn, could make recommendations to the House, which brings charges in impeachment proceedings. The Senate then acts as a jury.

Reggie Bashur, Clements' press secretary, Wednesday said there is no foundation for impeachment.

"It's ridiculous. It's absurd. It's preposterous. It's a two-bit publicity stunt," he said.

But Moreno said the evidence indicates, "The governor of the state of Texas conspired to break rules and make a mockery of ethical behavior."

Democratic Attorney General Jim Mattox is conducting his own investigation of Clements' role in the SMU affair.

Is there a support group in Greenville for people with bulimia or other eating disorders?

The East Carolina University School of Medicine has recently established a support group for people having bulimia and other eating disorders. The group meets weekly under the supervision of Drs. The group exists for people with any type of eating disorder, but especially for those with bulimia, a behavior in which the individual eats to excess and then purges the ingested food. Through group interaction and support, the group attempts to help the participating individuals uncover the reasons underlying their behavior and to develop other ways of coping.

Senator Says Israel To Provide Key Iran-Contra Data

On Wednesday, the committees announced that North, the central player in the affair, would testify publicly starting July 7.

The testimony of North, the fired White House aide who appears to be behind virtually every move in the complex Iran-Contra affair, was ensured when his lawyer accepted a letter of intent from the congressional investigating committees' top counsel.

Conclusion of the agreement, which lays out terms for North's appearance before the committees, ended a week-long standoff that had raised fears the panels might never hear from the man who apparently has the broadest and deepest knowledge of the affair.

"I'm delighted an agreement has been struck," said Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., chairman of the House investigating committee. "I look forward to Colonel North's testimony."

In other developments: —Former CIA general counsel Stanley Sporkin, in testimony before the committees, defended the decision not to notify Congress of a Jan. 17, 1986, presidential intelligence "finding" authorizing the arms-for-hostages swap with Iran.

But Sporkin's testimony about his understanding of the law governing notification of Congress about such findings clearly troubled some panel members.

"This testimony of yours makes clear that we have to completely revisit this act," said Rep. George Mitchell, D-Maine. Sporkin is a federal judge.

The House Intelligence Committee is considering legislation that would clamp stronger requirements on the administration for reporting covert actions to congressional oversight committees.

—Sporkin also said his Nov. 25 first draft of the intelligence finding said the rationale for the arms sales was to win the release of U.S. hostages in Lebanon. But in early January 1986, he said, North asked for the finding to be redrafted to focus on a rationale of forging an opening to moderate elements in Iran, which was President Reagan's subsequent defense for the arms deal.

—The committees released a summary of depositions and documents showing two senior U.S. officials in Portugal have contradicted the sworn testimony of CIA counterterrorism chief Duane Clarridge about the contents of a 1985 airplane shipment destined for Iran.

Clarridge contended he believed the November 1985 flight was carrying oil drilling equipment, rather than U.S.-made HAWK missiles coming from Israel and being traded for U.S. hostages, according to the summary.

Senior officials of the agency and the State Department in a European country, identified by sources requesting anonymity as Portugal, testified that cables had been sent to Clarridge, who then was head of covert operations for the CIA's European division. The cables specified that the shipment was HAWKS and that it was for the release of hostages. At least two of the cables are reported missing from Clarridge's CIA files.

—A magazine says North, working with a French businessman who had contacts with the Solidarity union, engineered the theft of Soviet weapons from Poland to give to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

With false documents provided by North and the CIA, a train loaded with Soviet arms intended for the Polish army was diverted to East Germany, according to an article in July editions of The Washingtonian.

From East Germany, the arms were smuggled into West Germany and subsequently shipped to Contra warehouses in Honduras, said the article, which gave no date for the operation.

—Prosecutors in Miami said Jorge "George" Morales Garcia, who is serving a 16-year federal prison term for drug trafficking, has refused to provide details of alleged guns-for-drugs shipments to aid the Contras.

Garcia has said the CIA and the Drug Enforcement Administration were "very aware" of flights that took arms to the Nicaraguan rebels and brought back cocaine and marijuana. Both agencies deny the allegation.

Under a contempt order, Morales' prison sentence will be extended one day for every day he refuses to tell a federal grand jury what he knows about the shipments, Ana Barnett, spokeswoman for the U.S. attorney's office in Miami, said Wednesday.

Morales' attorney, Sheldon Yavitz, said his client balked at providing the information to the grand jury in Miami because he feared its investigation could compromise his coming testimony before the congressional Iran-Contra committees.

—The committees on Wednesday released copies of a Dec. 9, 1985, memo written by North in which he suggested what later became the thrust of the arms-for-hostages deal.

North suggested, as an option to the proposed arms shipments to Iran from Israel, direct shipments of U.S. arms to Iran, using retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord as the conduit in the operation.

Man Surrenders In Paperboy Shooting

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A 60-year-old man was behind bars today in connection with the shooting of a teen-age violinist who was delivering newspapers to earn money for an orchestra trip abroad, authorities said.

Homer H. Hubbard, who lives on the street where 17-year-old Keith Edward Hurn was shot in the head early Sunday, surrendered Wednesday after a warrant was issued for his arrest, said police Lt. Dennis Atkins.

Hubbard was being held in the city jail on bond of $100,000.

The warrant on a complaint of shooting with intent to kill was approved Wednesday by Assistant District Attorney Fred Morgan, said police Lt. Randy Orndorff.

No formal charges have been filed and police did not speculate about a motive in the shooting.

Police questioned Hubbard earlier after a shotgun cartridge was found near his house.

Hurn, who was hit by one of two shotgun blasts, was in fair condition at St. Francis Hospital today.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Debonaire Astaire

The world will now have to struggle along with only memories of Fred Astaire, coupled, of course, with what amounts to a library of movies in which he appeared over several decades and a number of television specials.

Aside from being everything his admirers credited him with, Astaire came on the scene when he was needed by most of the American public. The Depression was underway and it was not merely an economic disaster (tobacco, mainstay of eastern North Carolina's economy, was selling at a daily average of from $20 to $23 in the mid '30s) but there was a depth of mental depression that mantled our 48 states with dull desperation.

The debonair song-and-dance man emerged as an epitome of class and style, charm and grace ... portraying a way of life that swept moviegoers away from reality and into another world of dreams, beauty and elegance.

At that time, he helped make movies the biggest bargain in town. Children aged 12-and-under were admitted for a dime; adults could attend the matinee for a quarter and the evening shows were priced at thirty-five cents. There was no other magic quite like it.

Astaire's flawless choreography was the result of his own work habits. When he devised a step, a gesture, a pose ... something he saw as being "just right" for what he was seeking to convey ... he practiced it and rehearsed it over and over until it became intrinsically woven into the very fabric of his being.

He always said his achievements were the result of hard work and rehearsal. It always showed.

The years were filled with awards and recognition of his talents in the musical entertainment field. His voice was untrained but true and the songs he did sing often became songs America sang. Having a friend like Irving Berlin in his corner did not hurt, either.

He ventured outside the musical field to portray the doomed scientist in a movie with Gregory Peck, "On The Beach". Astaire gained considerable attention for his contribution but he ventured no further in that direction.

He leaves many pleasant memories in his wake. It was nice to have known Fred Astaire if only on a screen.

Ancient Ties

Today an event occurs in Pitt County which has its ties with ancient Greece.

The Olympic torch will pass through on its way throughout the entire state symbolizing the opening of the United States Olympic Festival in North Carolina on July 17.

The torch will come to Greenville by way of Pitt County Memorial Hospital and it will travel to the Burroughs-Wellcome plant at the intersection of Memorial Drive and Greenville Boulevard. Burroughs-Wellcome is a grand patron sponsor of the Olympics.

It is an exciting, joyful and at the same time solemn occasion for our area. We are participating in one of the great sporting events of our time and one which has its roots in the Olympics of Greece. In an era of super big professional sports the Olympics is strictly amateur. Everywhere the events go, they draw huge crowds. North Carolina, with no population center comparable to the great cities of the world, is fortunate to be the site for the Olympics Festival.

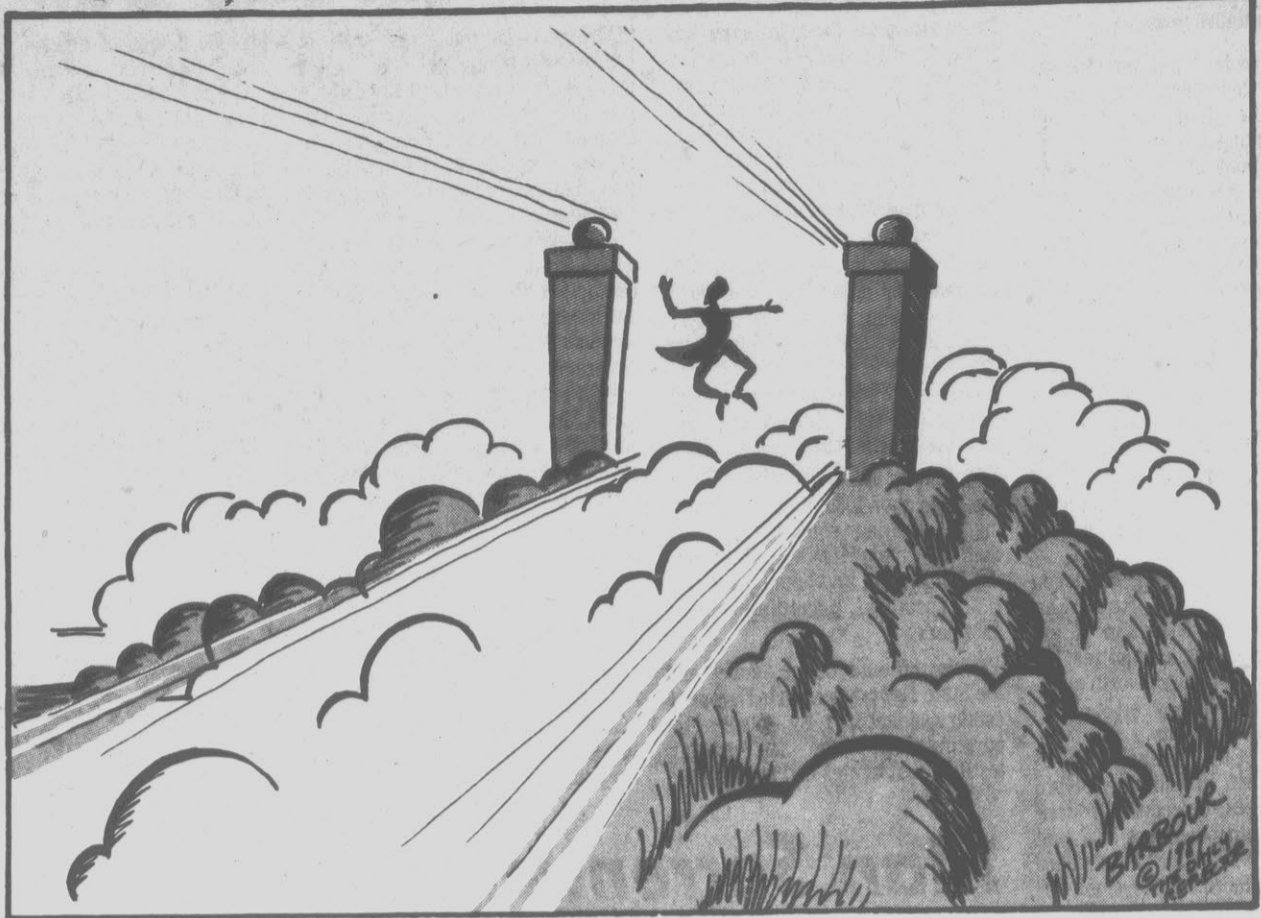

Locally we are sharing in the great honor of hosting an Olympics with the arrival of the Olympic torch today. At Burroughs-Wellcome the activities included the cutting of a huge cake this morning. This evening East Carolina University chancellor Richard Eakin and Burroughs-Wellcome Vice President Gabe Cipau will carry the torch the final segment of the route to the Burroughs-Wellcome facility. After a pause there it will be off to the Outer Banks and then back through Martin and Pitt Counties on its way to Raleigh.

Beginning July 17 there will be competition in 34 Olympic sports at locations in Raleigh, Durham, Chapel Hill, Cary, Greensboro and Kerr Lake. Many people will carry the torch in preparation for the July Olympics. Each, in a sense, is a brother or sister athlete to those who excel in their fields and who will compete in July.

Our area is privileged to be a part of the festivities which launch the United States Olympic Festival.

Today's Thought

Only a few weeks ago people were discussing the approaching summer and how nice it would be for outdoor activities. Now the conversation is about how hot and humid the weather is outside — and how pleasant it is to stay in the air conditioning.

New Bonds Ease College Saving

RALEIGH — Any parents who have given much thought to educating their children have no doubt gotten depressed over the rising cost of college. While general inflation has flattened out in the 1980s, college costs have continued to increase as though the 1970s had never ended.

Federal tax reform only made matters worse. Where parents used to be able to save for their children in low-tax accounts, tax reform made a young child's interest earnings taxable at much higher rates.

Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Caston, has just unveiled legislation which he says will help undo some of the damage of federal tax reform. He's proposing to repackage tax-free state and municipal bonds in small enough increments to make them affordable to parents who are trying to save towards tuition day.

Under Rauch's plan, the state Treasurer's Office would issue a portion of every state bond sale in small increment "zero coupon bonds." These bonds carry a face value of $1,000 but they sell for about one quarter as much. When held to maturity in 15 or 20 years, they are worth $1,000.

Financial investors recommend zero coupons for college saving because they make planning easy. If a parent estimates that he'll need $40,000 to send junior through N.C. State in 2001, then he knows he needs 40 such bonds. Because the bonds can be bought for $200 to $250, it is easier to periodically purchase zero coupons than it would be to buy a $1,000 bond.

Rauch's idea becomes helpful under the new tax law. Any child who earns more than $1,000 a year in interest on these bonds — or any savings plan — is now taxed at the rate his parents pay. Under the old law, children had to pay taxes, but in the very low brackets determined by their own incomes. If Rauch's bonds become available, children who own them would pay no tax at all because these are tax-free bonds.

It appears almost certain that Rauch's idea will become law, but even if it does not, parents can pursue this strategy because other government bodies offer tax free zero coupons. But that doesn't mean that everyone should rush out and do so. There are some pitfalls to it.

Consider the rate of interest returned. Tax-free bonds pay less. For example, comparable zero coupons issued by the federal treasury (not tax free) and the State of New York (tax free) in mid-June varied by a point and one-half in interest. When you project the earnings of a 15-year bond, that 1.5 percent difference can be significant. If the child's savings won't earn more than $1,000 a year then there is no reason to worry about taxes, and the higher yield from the taxable bonds should be taken.

Another factor is the child's age. The federal government will begin taxing his education account at his tax rate once he turns 14. This reduces the concern of losing income to taxes, and thus makes the tax-free bonds with their lower interest rates less attractive.

Rauch admits that he has no idea of how the bonds will sell. "We'll put them out there and if people buy them, fine. If not, we won't issue any more." But he thinks they offer convenience and predictability to parents concerned with rising college costs. They also make for convenient gifts from aunts, uncles, godparents and grandparents, he said.

Rauch and Treasury Department officials said that the simple presence of the bonds on the market, if they are easy to purchase, might spur some parents who might not have otherwise done so to begin saving for that big tuition payday.

Jackson To Avoid 'Snags in the Quilt'

WASHINGTON (AP) — For 20 years, the Rev. Jesse Jackson has been a familiar figure at the flash points in the fight against racism, but the preacher-turned-politician now says his battle has shifted away from the Howard Beaches and Forsyth Counties.

Over and over again this year, the Democratic presidential hopeful has emphasized the fight for economic justice. He plays down the impact of individual incidents that he once would have used to highlight the need for civil rights progress.

This is a significant change, marking Jackson's evolution from civil rights leader to presidential candidate and Democratic party leader.

The second time around on the presidential campaign, Jackson talks less like an outsider attacking the establishment that will not give him the respect he demands. He talks of building consensus and coalitions and refers to his leading position in some national polls.

For Jackson, a coalition evokes a favorite image from the 1984 campaign, a quilt — "many pieces, many colors" — brought together by shared goals — "stitched together by a common thread."

Now the beatings and killing of blacks by whites in Howard Beach in New York City, the subway shootings of four black youths by Bernhard Goetz or the racial confrontations in Forsyth County, Ga., are problems that detract from larger goals.

"One of the most disgusting things that can ever happen is that you take your time to build the coalition and it gets caught on a nail and snags and tears," Jackson told a Washington meeting of Americans for Democratic Action over the weekend.

"That's what Howard Beach is to us — a pizza parlor killing in New York. (It) does not fit in the quilt. That's what the Goetz subway killings is about — another snag. That's what throwing rocks along a road in southern Georgia is all about, another snag," he added. "We cannot let the snags define the quilt. Our fight is not at the pizza parlor or in the subway or along the road in Georgia."

At an eastern regional caucus of the Democratic National Committee last Friday, Jackson declared those incidents are "not the site of our fight in our trek to victory.

"The site of our fight is not built around the symbolic corners of fear and danger and death and destruction," he said.

"The site of our fight is a factory closed down without notice and took their jobs to slave labor markets that undercut organized labor," Jackson said. "The site of our fight is schools where good minds could not enter because they didn't have a scholarship and couldn't make a loan and good teachers couldn't get paid. ... The site of fight is economic common ground."

Fine, Fabulous New York Garbage

Whenever I have nothing else to do I worry about the garbage barge now sitting off Long Island, N.Y., after a journey to the Gulf of Mexico and back. Newspaper reports indicated that absolutely (ital) no one (unital) wanted the 3,000 tons of refuse and that is why the barge returned.

I found out that this information was wrong. When I approached the barge in the Central Islip inlet, a man with a shotgun shouted, "Stand back or I'll shoot you. What are you doing here?"

"I just came to see the garbage."

"That's what everyone says, but we're not fooled. You want this trash for yourself?"

"That's not true. We have all the garbage we need in Washington and we don't want any of this stuff."

"You may have garbage," he said, "but it's not the high grade New York variety."

"What's so special about New York garbage?"

"It contains everything from pickles to forged traffic tickets. We have nuclear waste and MacDonald's coffee cups. People in New York have a very high standard of living and therefore they dispose of only the best in the way of refuse. You couldn't find a better variety of trash than we have on this barge. And we're not giving it up to anyone no matter how much you beg for it."

"I'm not going to beg. New York is entitled to its own rubbish. What kind of landfill will your garbage make?"

The man laughed. "Only the best in America. Did you know Atlantic City would fall into the sea if it weren't for Manhattan trash?"

"What I don't understand is if you have such great slop why no one would take any of it when your barge sailed south."

"That was a good will trip in which we wanted to call on southern ports and Mexico to bring regards from Mayor Koch," the man said. "And it was very successful. When we showed up with the waste in Mexican waters they met us with gunboats, planes and helicopters. Oldtimers said they had never seen a garbage scow given that kind of a greeting by the Mexican navy before."

"That's a real honor."

"The U.S. Navy is talking about bringing us to the Strait of Hormuz to show the people in the area that the United States means business."

"Why would they want you to do that?"

"We could show the American flag, and if the Iranians hit us, how much damage can they do?"

"This garbage scow has really paid for itself. At the rate you're going there is no sense dumping any of the refuse into the sea. You could make more money selling it to tourists."

"We're considering that. There are a lot of people from Greenwich who would give anything for our bilge."

"Did you ever dream when you loaded this scow that its cargo would become so sentimental for so many people?"

"New Yorkers are funny that way. When they are loaded down with trash they keep screaming for someone to take it away, and when it's gone they cry for someone to bring it back."

"Hey, what are you doing?" he yelled.

Strength For Today

The reason we find it so hard to believe in miracles is because they are so common. The whole of life is miraculous, but we have so lost the sense of the miraculousness of the common place that we find it hard to believe in the unusual type of miracles.

Yet there is no greater miracle in all the world than the miracle of birth. That two cells should carry within them centuries of inherited characteristics is miraculous beyond description. How the decision to raise one's arm is transmitted into the muscular action involved in raising it is a miracle which no physiologist can explain.

As soon as we appreciate the miracles of everyday life, the miracles recorded in the Bible become much more credible. We live in an order in which the unseen impinges upon the seen.

Sandinista Custody

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — When stories circulate outside of Nicaragua about human rights violations they are generally disregarded as a complete fabrication, doctored by the U.S.-backed contras. But as the war has intensified, the internal government security apparatus has run amok, triggering arbitrary arrests, psychological and physical torture, disappearances and even mysterious deaths of suspects under detention.

I've just gotten a taste of Sandinista justice. I was detained here against my will last week for five hours in a dark, stuffy, unsanitized room. I was forbidden to speak and even forcibly placed in a chair.

The incident began innocently enough. I'd gone to secure my press credentials at the government press center the morning I arrived here. But because of increasingly rigid bureaucratic procedures — applicants for press credentials practically have to take a blood test to obtain their papers — I was told the process would take 24 hours. Little did I know how dangerous it would be to travel to Nicaragua without "the right papers."

Having been to Nicaragua five times before, I'd always felt secure about traveling around the countryside. So with a 24-year-old American interpreter, whom I'd met that morning at the Managua Intercontinental Hotel, and a driver, I set out for Leon, the former colonial capital of the country, 50 miles northwest of Managua.

Walking the streets of Leon is a moving experience. Its colonial churches are architectural gems in their own right, besides being juxtaposed with buildings that are unrepaired from the heavy fighting in 1979.

As I inspected these historic features, a military officer (they are in abundance throughout Nicaragua) approached and asked what I was doing. My interpreter stepped in and said we had wanted to see the cathedrals. Before I knew it, we were being paraded in single file to an internal security detention center. I protested with the officer repeatedly, telling him that he had journalists in his custody. That line of argument turned out to be totally useless.

On arrival at the detention center, I was separated from my interpreter. I was placed in a dark, unventilated, 4-foot-by-6-foot room. After demanding the reasons for my arrest, I was told to keep quiet. I was then pushed into a chair by an officer who couldn't have been older than 17. In spite of the ungracious reception, I knew I was in better hands than my intrepreter, who'd mentioned to me as we were being marched away that he'd forgotten his passport at the hotel in Managua.

As the minutes of solitude dragged on, the amusing nature of the incident turned serious. Would I have to spend the night in jail? How long would they keep me? A seasoned draft-dodger from the 1960s, I knew I wasn't cut out for this treatment. I became fidgety, hot and thirsty, seated in my wooden chair. But at one point I was handed two works by Lenin in Spanish.

After four hours of incarceration, an Emil Zapata type character in standard green army fatigues marched into my holding room with a serious expression on his face. In English, he asked if I was a supporter of the contras. He then wanted to know if I thought they had the right to run their country as they chose. I did not attempt to argue with my host, who repeatedly told me America was the enemy of the world.

Six hours after I'd been carted away, I was released. No apologies were rendered or explanations given for my detention. But when I inquired about my interpreter I was told he would not be released.

Unable to use my host's phone, I found a public phone and called the U.S. Embassy. A desk officer told me the U.S. would not get involved in such an incident. I then called an acquaintance in the Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry, who said he'd do his best to free my interpreter.

During the course of the next several hours, I was told repeatedly that my interpreter would be released. At around midnight, 10 hours after we'd been taken in for questioning, he was free, too. "We really bent the rules to help you," said my acquaintance at the Foreign Ministry.

Sources here acknowledge that the ever-expanding national security state violates the human rights of Nicaraguan citizens on a regular basis. "During this war I spend a lot of time trying to control human rights abuses," one official told me. "But it's impossible to manage."

Increasingly, Sandinista officials worry in private that their bureaucratic infrastructure is tiring from the war. Thus, it's not surprising that individuals' rights are transgressed.

Nevertheless, the Sandinistas rationalize such behavior on the grounds that the contras, who routinely kidnap young men, are much worse. But who would argue that the contras are an appropriate role model for the Sandinistas.

Shredding Party

WASHINGTON — Washington experienced another shredding party, this one in full public view, when the Iran-contra hearings resumed Tuesday. When it was over, Oliver North's credibility was tattered, perhaps irreparably, and the congressional committees faced a new problem involving the Marine lieutenant colonel who stands at the center of the controversy.

They had been given fresh reason to wonder, as a key member acknowledged, how believable North would be if he finally takes the Iran-contra witness stand after all the clamor for his public appearance. And they also had been given a vivid glimpse into North's bold method of operating.

What unfolded on Capitol Hill Tuesday was damning testimony about a coverup attempt involving backdated "phony bills" sent North, backdated "phony letters" he sent in return and elaborate attempts — including the filing of typewriter keys — designed to provide "an action calculated to deceive," in the characterization of Rep. Ed Jenkins, D-Ga.

It was a real-life story straight out of the spy novels — not with derring-do romantic James Bond characters, but rather the self-effacing, bureaucratic "Smiley's People" types from John LeCarre.

State Leaders Near Agreement On School Construction Plan

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — State House and Senate leaders, working quietly behind the scenes, appear to be nearing agreement on a stop-gap $100 million package for public school construction, but Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said talk of an accord was premature.

The plan would include a corporate income tax increase and abolition of the inventory tax, sources said Wednesday.

"I understand the agreement's pretty much nailed down," said a state senator who insisted on anonymity. "Something's definitely happening."

But Jordan, who has been conducting private negotiations with House Speaker Liston Ramsey and other House leaders for nearly two weeks, said no agreement had been made.

"I really don't see anything being in concrete until next week," Jordan said in an interview at a legislative social Wednesday night. "Somebody's saying more than they know."

Sources said that legislative leaders had decided to use a pending bill calling for eliminating the intangibles and inventory taxes as the vehicle for moving the compromise package through both chambers.

The bill will be rewritten to incorporate the tax changes as well as portions of a school financing package Jordan put forward earlier this month, sources said.

They said the compromise plan would:

- Increase the corporate income tax by 1 percent.
- Eliminate the inventory tax.
- Require businesses to pay employee withholding taxes monthly instead of quarterly, which would generate a one-time windfall of $37.2 million. Under Jordan's plan, this money would be used for a "critical needs fund" to supply grants to poorer counties for immediate school improvements.

It could not be learned how much money the compromise plan would produce. Jordan's proposal, which also seeks annual $50 million appropriations and expenditures by local governments, is designed to generate $2.9 billion over a decade.

The new proposal would be at least the sixth floated by various legislative factions this year. Martin first raised the issue by proposing a $1.5 billion bond issue for construction, but the House instead endorsed a four-year, one-cent increase in the state sales tax. That tax increase would have generated $2 billion over four years, but the Senate killed it.

Ramsey, who has endorsed the 1-cent sales tax increase for schools passed by the House, also has floated the idea of a 10 percent corporate income tax surcharge that would raise some $1.7 billion over four years.

The bill to eliminate the intangibles and inventory taxes is pending in the House Finance Committee, which meets Thursday morning. The sponsor, Rep. Jim Crawford, D-Granville, said the bill would be sent to a subcommittee "that's going to work on it a little bit."

Crawford acknowledged that his bill apparently would be rewritten as the school financing plan, but said he knew little about the leadership's plans.

"I'm glad for them to use (the bill)," he said in an interview. "I understand they're pretty close."

Jordan has called school financing the issue that has brought the process of developing a fiscal 1987-89 budget to a crawl and led some lawmakers to speculate that this year's session might not adjourn until mid- to late July.

Gov. Jim Martin made school construction his top priority for the session, proposing the $1.5 billion bond issue to create a pool from which local governments could borrow to pay for school building and renovation projects.

Jordan originally supported a $1 billion bond issue but later changed his mind and put forward a new plan, saying the House would not accept a bond issue. Martin accused Jordan of "punting on second down" and continues to push for the bond plan.

N.C. Tax Plan Not So Simple

RALEIGH (AP) — At a news conference in March, state Sen. Dennis Winner passed out copies of a bill and told reporters it would make the state tax form so simple you could fill it out in 15 minutes on a postcard-sized return.

But somewhere between the bill's first reading on the Senate floor and the Senate Finance Committee, it has grown to include repeal of the intangibles and inventory taxes, and as much as a $113 million hike in personal and corporate income taxes.

"We've gone from talking about postcards to epistles," said Sen. Charles Hips, D-Haywood, a co-sponsor of the bill. "We started with the idea that we were going to drain swamps, and now we're fighting alligators."

Now it appears that Winner, D-Buncombe, has had enough of alligators and would like to return to postcards.

He asked Wednesday that his bill go to a subcommittee for a second time. And when it returns to the Finance Committee, Winner said, chances are it will be minus a personal income tax hike and, at best, include only partial repeal of intangibles and inventory taxes.

"I wanted to accomplish three things with this bill: simplify the tax system, make it fairer and keep it at least approximately revenue neutral, say in the zero to $25 million range," Winner said. "I never had the intent of raising taxes by this bill."

"We may leave the bill the way it is, but I at least want to take another look at it."

Winner's worked-over bill, now more than 30 pages long, changes the state's sliding 3 percent to 7 percent personal income tax in favor of a flat 7 percent tax rate, and raises the corporate tax rate from 6 to 7 percent.

Lower-income people with several children would end up at the end or out of tax rolls because the bill raises deductions for dependents. But middle-income single people and married couples with no children would bear the brunt of the increase.

Single people earning $20,000 would see a 31 percent tax increase. Childless working couples earning the same would pay 43 percent more.

The lost money from the locally-levied intangibles and inventory taxes would be reimbursed from the extra income tax revenues.

Winner, who thinks the atmosphere of the Senate now favors his measure, said he was worried that it would never survive the populist House, which is not likely to accept repeal of intangibles and inventory taxes at the expense of individual taxpayers.

House Speaker Liston B. Ramsey, D-Madison, has expressed reservations about the measure. And Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, the likely Democratic nominee for governor in 1988, is leary of any kind of tax increase.

Jordan pressured the same Finance Committee reviewing Winner's bill to kill a sales tax increase for school construction proposed by House Appropriations co-chairman Billy Watkins, D-Granville.

But Finance chairman Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, said personal income taxpayers should not be forced to bear the costs of a tax break for business.

"I think that there's a definite move in the General Assembly to repeal some of the intangibles tax, maybe all of them, some of the inventory tax, maybe all of them," Rauch said. "But any reimbursement should probably come from the increase in the corporate income tax."

"We can't raise taxes on lower- and middle-income people," Rauch said. "That's just out. We can't do that."

Winner said the income tax increase proposals came when senators learned that making the state tax codes mimic recent changes in federal tax laws would cause a $250 million deficit.

A tax rate of about 6.7 percent would have made the bill revenue neutral. But Sen. Ted Kaplan, D-Forsyth, suggested that the committee round off the tax rate to 7 percent, Winner said.

Kaplan then suggested repeal of the intangibles and inventory taxes when subcommittee members learned a 7 percent hike in income taxes could bring the state $166 million.

"Some of that may have to go," Winner said of the intangibles and inventory tax repeal. "We may have to go to partial repeals. Obviously we can't do all of that together and keep the income tax revenue neutral."

The General Assembly approved partial repeal of intangibles and inventory taxes in 1985.

Senate OKs Merger Bill

RALEIGH (AP) — Edgemont and Nash counties drew one step closer to finding common ground for a merger of public schools as the Senate tentatively approved a bill that would let voters decide whether to go ahead with a plan.

The action came Wednesday on a compromise unveiled by lawmakers representing both counties. The bill would let voters choose whether to adopt a plan if all four school systems involved agree on one. Otherwise, the voters would choose between two competing proposals in a November 1988 referendum.

A final Senate vote was scheduled for today, and lawmakers the House is virtually certain to accept the compromise and enact the bill.

The two counties have squabbled for at least 15 years over whether to merge their four school systems — Edgemont, Nash, Rocky Mount and Tarboro — which critics say have racial and economic disparities.

The Rocky Mount school system, like the city, straddles the Nash-Edgemont county line.

Edgemont County and Rocky Mount officials want to combine all four systems into one. Nash County favors a "county line" merger, in which each county would absorb the portions of the city school systems existing within its borders.

In May, the House approved a bill calling for merger of all four systems.

Under the compromise, local county boards of commissioners and school boards would have until July 1988 to reach a consensus merger plan that voters in the two counties could vote up or down.

Otherwise, two merger plans could be placed on the ballot — the plan favored by the majority of the local officials and an alternative sought by a minority.

Observers say the two plans most likely to be voted on are total merger and county line merger, although others have been debated, including merging the Rocky Mount system with either the Nash or Edgemont systems.

English Made State Language

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — English became North Carolina's official language Wednesday after an impassioned House debate in which opponents warned that, carried to the extreme, the bill could render illegal the state's Latin motto.

The House approved the measure tentatively 71-29, then overrode opponents' objections to an immediate final vote and passed the bill 74-25. The Senate already has approved the bill, which will become law Thursday when signed by House Speaker Liston Ramsey and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan.

The bill is sponsored by freshman Sen. Franklin Block, D-New Hanover, who told Senate and House committees his grandparents were immigrants from Latvia who realized the importance of learning English despite the difficulty.

Block said the designation of an official language would have a symbolic message for immigrants, inspiring them to learn this nation's language while more fully appreciating their native language and culture.

The House debate was spinkled with humor, as when Rep. Richard Wright, D-Columbus, began his explanation of the bill with a discourse in broken French. But he insisted that the bill had a serious purpose.

"We certainly have (an) obligation ... not to become the melting pot to the extent that we all lose our (cultural) identity," Wright said. "But for political and cultural and a wide variety of reasons, we need to have a common language."

Rep. H.M. "Mickey" Michaux, D-Durham, led the opposition, arguing that pure English is not the common language of the people of the United States.

"If you ask people from England who speak English whether or not Americans speak English, the answer is an emphatic 'no,'" Michaux said.

Rep. Bertha Holt, D-Almance, agreed, reciting the opening line from Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales" to demonstrate the evolution of English over the centuries.

"What do we mean by 'English'? I think we're moving into something very dangerous when we do not know what this means to this day."

IRS Seizures

GREENSBORO (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service made 350 seizures of property in North Carolina last year, but property is confiscated only when all other tactics at recovering unpaid taxes have failed, officials say.

"We don't go in there and say it's seized and it's sold," said IRS spokeswoman Deborah Diamond. "It should not come as a surprise when it happens."

"As long as someone's talking with us, we'll continue to make efforts to work out payment," she said.

Among the seized items in North Carolina last year were the trawler "Miss Hattie," which sold for $10,000; a five-bedroom home in Leland, which sold for $31,677; 66 rings from The House of Gems in Hickory, which sold for $2,900; and a 1973 Jaguar in Charlotte, sale price $1,350.

"It can be anything from a personal home to a beer-mug collection to Arabian horses — anything that's tangible," Ms. Diamond said.

Tax Cuts

RALEIGH (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee has returned to subcommittee a bill designed to simplify state income tax returns and eliminate taxes on intangibles and business inventories.

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, sponsor of the bill, said the panel would consider at least two more amendments to the already complicated measure.

"This bill is so big, does so many things and affects everybody in this state so much that I want to make sure we've got it right," he told the committee.

Winner has said the bill would result in a net gain to North Carolina of about $63 million, mostly due to increasing the corporate income tax from 6 percent to 7 percent. But he admitted that the estimate could be off by as much as $50 million either way.

Winner said his bill will help every taxpayer by simplifying returns and conforming laws to the federal statutes. But he said single people earning more than $20,000 a year would pay $240 more in taxes to offset tax cuts for the poor and people with families.

Missing Child

MORGANTON, N.C. (AP) — Police searched into the night Wednesday for a 4-year-old girl missing from her home since Tuesday evening, according to authorities.

Meanwhile, police officials said they have found no evidence of foul play in the sudden disappearance of Wendy Dawn Swink. Authorities described the child as a white female with shoulder-length brown hair, 3 feet tall and 25 pounds, who was wearing a blue bathing suit with a "Care Bears" motif when she was last seen.

Morganton Department of Public Safety and Burke County Emergency Management officials began organizing search parties at about 8 p.m. after the girl's father and stepmother, Glen and Amanda Swink, telephoned police.

Police officials said that although they do not suspect foul play, they are investigating every lead, which includes questioning relatives, friends or anyone else who may have seen or abducted the girl.

Tobacco Bill

RALEIGH (AP) — An effort to educate children about the dangers of tobacco use and to ban sale of snuff and chewing tobacco to minors may have gone up in smoke Wednesday after a close vote in the Senate Finance Committee.

"It was delivered to the undertaker this morning," Sen. R.P. "Bo" Thomas, D-Henderson, said after the committee voted 11-10 against approving his bill and sent it to a subcommittee. "For the time being, it's just dead as a hammer."

Later, however, Thomas said it was still alive in the subcommittee because committee Chairman Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, told them he could chose the subcommittee members.

Thomas, who had first proposed banning use of tobacco products by public school students, amended his bill in the face of strong objections.

The Finance Committee Wednesday approved an amendment to remove 11 paragraphs listing the health hazards of tobacco use including the statement that female snuff users have a 400 percent higher risk of oral cancer than nonusers and another that "men who started smoking before the age of 15 have a death rate from lung cancer nearly five times higher than those who began after age 25 ..."

Civil War History

Sherman Not An 'Enemy To The South'

CHARLOTTE (AP) — William Tecumseh Sherman, the Civil War Union general whose army torched Atlanta and burned its way across the Carolinas, said he wanted to be remembered differently by history.

"If my name must go to history, I prefer it should not as the enemy to the South," the general wrote in a letter to his foster-father, U.S. Sen. Thomas Ewing.

The letter was included in the July-August issue of American Heritage magazine, in a story by retired Army historian Joseph Ewing, Thomas Ewing's great-grandson.

His fight, Sherman wrote, wasn't against the Southern people, but was against anarchy and secessionists who "have threatened and still endanger the country which our children must inhabit."

But would any proud Southerner consider Sherman a friend? "I think probably not," said Lewis Jones, a retired history professor at Wofford College in Spartanburg, S.C. "And if they did think so, they wouldn't want to say it."

"Most people in Columbia (which allegedly was burned by Sherman's troops) still won't talk about Sherman," Jones said. "He was there only a couple days, but there was a lot of destruction. That has had a searing affect on people's attitudes all along."

"All they can think about is the terrible beast who did all these awful things."

But Jones and other historians say history might have been unfair to Sherman. After all, he had Southern connections before the war, having been stationed at Fort Moultrie on Sullivan's Island, S.C., and Augusta, Ga., and New Orleans. He headed a Louisiana military school from 1859 to 1961, resigning after the state seceded from the union.

"He didn't mean for as much of that plundering to go on as did," Jones said. "He justified — as Americans have in other wars — his destructive policy as a quickest way of ending the war, without tremendous bloodletting."

David Goldfield, a historian at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, agreed. "Sherman's concept of total war meant the destruction of the livelihood and property of the Southern people, but not necessarily loss of life," Goldfield said. "His concept was to destroy the means of carrying on the war to end it as quickly as possible."

After the war, Sherman was a conciliator who worked to put back together a divided country, Goldfield said. Sherman was honored in many Southern cities and attended memorial services for Confederate veterans, Goldfield said. Back North, he plugged the region's economic potential.

"His postwar career is not very well known," Goldfield said. "He created a devastating war machine and that has become synonymous with the type of modern total warfare that we've come to abhor."

"His war exploits overshadow his postwar activities. But I think a reassessment might be in order," Goldfield said.

House Panel Considers Compact Repeal

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — While the public spotlight was on an emerging bill to take North Carolina out of a Southeast compact for handling low-level radioactive waste, the state House quietly approved another measure to make such a waste facility a little safer.

The House Water and Air Resources Committee Wednesday debated a wide-ranging bill that includes repeal of the Southeast Compact, but adjourned without voting. An afternoon meeting at which a vote was expected was cancelled when the House session ran late.

Meanwhile, with little debate, the House voted 73-9 to approve a bill to ban shallow land burial of low-level radioactive waste.

"It's a protection bill for North Carolina," Rep. Foyle Hightower, D-Anson, told the House.

The bill, returned to the Senate for concurrence in House amendments, would require engineered barriers surrounding buried waste, which would have to also be placed in approved containers. The bottom of a disposal facility also would have to be at least 10 feet above the seasonal high water table.

Hightower said the bill would prevent a landfill like the one currently taking low-level radioactive waste in Barnwell, S.C., from locating in North Carolina. He said North Carolina doesn't have the right soil for such a facility.

One of North Carolina's two members of the Southeast Compact Commission, Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, warned the Water and Air Resources Committee not to act precipitously on repealing the compact. He said many questions remain unanswered concerning radioactive waste and that legal authorities are divided on whether one state can exclude radioactive waste from another.

"It will take a court, ultimately, to make that decision," Miller said.

He said the other seven states in the compact are considering legislation to limit the time any state could leave the compact to the first five years of North Carolina's stint as host. If they fail to adopt the legislation, North Carolina would have a reason for dissolving the compact.

Without such a reason, the bill "would represent a breach of the compact agreement and therefore North Carolina would be subject to surcharges and penalties (for using the Barnwell, S.C., facility) until such time as it had a disposal site for disposal of its own waste..." Miller said.

But Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, said North Carolina should place no trust in such laws.

Falwell Says No Negotiation

By BRUCE SMITH
Associated Press Writer

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell says he's willing to talk with Jim Bakker about spiritual matters but any meeting between the two concerning the multimillion dollar PTL empire would be a waste of time.

"As far as I'm concerned, no reconciliation is needed because I never had a falling out with him," Falwell told reporters Wednesday.

Bakker turned PTL over to Falwell in March following disclosures he had a sexual tryst with church secretary Jessica Hahn. Bakker later said the switch was supposed to be temporary.

The PTL founder released a statement Wednesday calling for an end to the so-called evangelical holy war between the two and said the leadership of PTL should be left up to the people.

The statement, distributed at the ministry's $1.3 million lakeside parsonage in nearby Tega Cay, S.C., said "if they want Jerry Falwell to head PTL and Heritage U.S.A. then they should support it in its present form."

"If the people want Jim and Tammy to return to television, then they should support Jim and Tammy," the statement said.

A woman who would not identify herself distributed the statement to reporters outside the Lake Wylie home. The Bakkers were not at Tega Cay Wednesday but it was not immediately clear where they had gone.

Their mountaintop home in Gatlinburg, Tenn., was bedecked with balloons and ringed with reporters in anticipation of their return there.

Vicki Goodman Meadows of the Bring Bakker Back Club, a group working to restore the Bakkers at PTL, confirmed they had left Tega Cay.

"They need some rest," she said, but would not say where they had gone. The couple apparently eluded reporters Tuesday night and did not return to their South Carolina home.

The new PTL administration has sought the return of the home although the Bakkers claim it belongs to them. The couple said through an attorney Tuesday they would move out to put the ministry's health above material gain.

Falwell, speaking with reporters at Heritage U.S.A. about 10 miles away, said the future of PTL is not negotiable with the Bakkers because the matter is in the hands of a federal bankruptcy judge.

PTL filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code earlier this month. The ministry cited $72 million in debts and 1,400 creditors.

Falwell said he has not been contacted by any of Bakker's representatives about a possible meeting.

"If a meeting is needed for spiritual purposes, of course I'm open. If the purpose of the meeting is in any subtle way this ministry, it's a waste of everybody's time," he warned.

PTL fundraising dropped after the Bakkers return to Tega Cay from California June 10 and the ministry filed for reorganization June 12, Falwell said.

The ministry has raised about $700,000 a week this month, but needs $1 million a week to keep going. PTL hopes to raise $5 million in July, Falwell said.

Falwell's staff met with federal bankruptcy court Judge Rufus Reynolds Wednesday to discuss the ground rules for the reorganization. But no specifics of the PTL case were discussed, Falwell said.

He added that because of the reorganization, he's being asked to reconsider plans to step down from the PTL leadership next March.

While he said he has much to do at his own ministry in Lynchburg, Va., "I'm open to the Lord's leading."

Federal Judge Rules POW Lawsuit Has Merit

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A federal judge's ruling that a lawsuit charging that the United States has not done enough to return possible U.S. prisoners of war from Southeast Asia has merit will send some federal officials "heading for the tall grass," a former congressman says.

Former Rep. Bill Hendon of North Carolina, who worked as an advocate of POWs while he was in Congress, said U.S. District Judge Terrace Boyle's ruling "is a very positive development for our POWs. This will help get 'em home."

"I do believe this ruling will have a lot of people here in Washington who have sat on this issue for the past 15 years heading for the tall grass," Hendon added. "There's no question there are people (in southeast Asia) who can be brought back."

Boyle also said in his ruling Tuesday that U.S. courts have the authority to decide the lawsuit, which two former Special Forces soldiers in Fayetteville brought against the government in September 1985.

The suit since has been joined by nearly two dozen family members of U.S. service members missing in action as a result of the Vietnam War and the former soldiers were later removed by the court as plaintiffs.

In February 1986, the government argued before Boyle that the issue involves foreign policy and is not under the judicial jurisdiction. The government also argued that the judicial process would delve into classified information.

Boyle ruled that part of the suit had merit in a court of law, but government attorneys in August asked Boyle to reconsider his ruling.

In the order filed Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Fayetteville, Boyle ruled that after reviewing all oral and written arguments and factual materials, the courts have jurisdiction.

Boyle also said that if American prisoners of war do exist, they have recourse under the U.S. Hostage Act, which requires the president to do all possible to get such people repatriated.

"At the heart of the declaratory judgment action is the question of whether living American servicemen, who are declared missing in action as prisoners of war in Southeast Asia during the 1960s and 1970s, continue to be held captive by unfriendly governments and political sovereignties. ... The plaintiffs allege such a class exists and therefore falls under the Hostage Act," Boyle said in his ruling.

Boyle also ruled that the executive branch was claiming too much power under its constitutional authority in determining the POW issue.

Boyle said that despite all the hearings and investigations of the POW issue by Congress, there seems to have been a deliberate strategy by certain agencies to conceal what the plaintiffs allege.

Fayetteville attorney Mark Waple, who represents the plaintiffs said of the order: "The court has accepted my clients' argument that they should have their day in court."

Burlington Takeover

Stanley Group Gains Control

By BILL MENEZES
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — An investment group led by Morgan Stanley Group Inc. said today it had gained control of Burlington Industries Inc., ending a two-month takeover battle for the textile giant.

Separately, an investment partnership led by New York financier Asher B. Edelman and Montreal-based Dominion Textile Inc. announced it was dropping its rival bid for the company but had not tendered its 3.3 million Burlington shares to Morgan Stanley.

Morgan Stanley said about 78 percent of Burlington's 27.3 million common shares outstanding had been tendered under its $78-a-share, $2.16 billion leveraged buyout offer that expired at 9 a.m. EDT today.

Burlington, which is based in Greensboro, N.C., backed the Morgan Stanley bid over the $77-a-share hostile offer from the Edelman-Dominion partnership, which owns about 12.3 percent of Burlington's outstanding common shares.

In a statement issued late this morning the partnership indicated it would not extend its own tender offer, which has been stalled by a federal injunction since June 5 and expired at midnight Tuesday. The statement also indicated the partnership had not tendered its shares under the Morgan Stanley buyout offer.

A spokesman for the partnership did not immediately return a telephone call seeking further comment.

By failing to gain 90 percent of Burlington's shares in the tender offer Morgan Stanley must get shareholder approval for the merger, which could take months. There has been speculation the Edelman-Dominion partnership might hold on to its shares to pressure Morgan Stanley into paying a premium for the stock.

Attorneys for Burlington and Morgan Stanley have estimated the partnership would reap a profit of about $100 million on its Burlington stake, which it bought at prices ranging from $45 to $58.37 1/2 a share.

Morgan Stanley indicated it expected to begin payment for the tendered shares promptly.

Burlington shares fell 87 1/2 cents to $76.50 Tuesday in New York Stock Exchange composite trading.

Burlington had agreed last month to be acquired by Morgan Stanley for $76 a share to thwart the hostile bid by the Edelman-Dominion partnership, which then was offering $72 a share. The partnership later sweetened its offer to $77 a share, but Morgan Stanley raised its offer to $78.

During that time the parties became embroiled in a series of court actions that stalled the Edelman-Dominion group's tender offer.

The partnership's request to block completion of the Morgan Stanley tender offer on the grounds that Burlington had failed to allow fair bidding for the company was rejected Monday by a federal judge in New York.

Separately, a federal appeals panel Monday in Richmond, Va. upheld a preliminary injunction that barred the partnership from proceeding with its hostile tender offer. That injunction was issued June 5 by District Judge Eugene Gordon in Greensboro, who determined Burlington might be able to prove that the partnership illegally used inside information from a former Burlington executive in preparing its offer.

Burlington indicated it would continue pressing its lawsuit against Edelman and Dominion in federal court in North Carolina. The suit seeks unspecified damages and alleges that the partnership used illegal inside information from PaineWebber Inc. and former Burlington executive James J. Ammeen in making its offer.

The partnership, Ammeen and PaineWebber have denied any wrongdoing.

Textile Dean Retires

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The dean of the School of Textiles at North Carolina State University admits he's excited about retiring after spending half a century in textiles, but he doesn't expect to spend any more time at his beach home.

"I've purchased a laboratory with my son to do fiber evaluation and product development," Dane Hamby said in a telephone interview from his Raleigh office. "And of course I will be involved in the foundation."

The foundation is the N.C. Textiles Foundation, a private organization started in the 1940s to support the students and faculty at the textiles school.

Hamby, whose first job was sweeping floors at a Goodyear cotton fiber plant in Georgia 50 years ago, has been a member of the NCSU faculty since 1948. He has been the dean of the textiles school for the last six years. And he's planning on adding more jobs to his resume.

"I'm looking forward to a second and possibly a third career," said Hamby, who will retire as dean of the textile school on June 30.

Hamby said he's content with his accomplishments, specifically his key role in helping establish the school as one of the top programs in the nation.

"But from a personal point of view the most rewarding part of my career has been my relationship with the students," he said. "It has carried on into the alumni, many of whom are now the leaders in the industry."

Under Hamby's leadership, the school reorganized its curriculum to accommodate technological changes in the textile industry. The school's research budget also was increased during his tenure.

"More money still needs to be spent in research and product development," he said.

Hamby said graduates of the program are prepared to compete in a rapidly-changing industry. One area that needs a lot of attention is how to prosper in the international market, he said.

Oldest Twins Live In Denton

DENTON, N.C. (AP) — Davidson County had dirt roads and mule-drawn plows back when Allie Hill and Maggie Lambeth, still known as the Grubb twins, were growing up in the Cid community.

They remember when airplanes and automobiles were fantasies, and have lived during the terms of 19 presidents and 27 North Carolina governors.

Now 103 years old, the women will be listed in the 1988 edition of the Guinness Book of World Records as the world's oldest twins, and are being featured in a nationwide effort to recognize the country's 24,000 centenarians.

A film featuring the women will be shown in Washington during the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the National Institutes of Health, and Gov. Jim Martin will visit them next week at the Mountain Vista Health Park.

Martin should be glad he's a Republican. The Grubb twins don't think much of Democrats.

Mrs. Hill, who claims to be the older sister, credits her longevity to never smoking or drinking. But she does remember her father having a drink of bootleg whiskey now and again.

"There was so much of it around then," she said.

Mrs. Lambeth recalls the first time she saw an automobile, and remembers her fear at seeing an airplane for the first time.

Not all the changes that time has brought have been for the better, the sisters say. People aren't as nice as they once were, Mrs. Hill said. And she doesn't wholly approve of women wearing pants.

Velez Buie, the activities director at Mountain Vista, said the two are enjoying all the attention they've been getting. "They like having their picture taken," she said.

But the sisters are not entirely alike on that score. Mrs. Hill enjoyed posing for the camera, but her sister had to be coaxed into a smile.

The twins enjoy being together, Mrs. Buie said. They compare hairstyles and jewelry and watch television together, although Mrs. Lambeth likes it better than her sister.

Mrs. Lambeth moved into the nursing home in December, and her sister joined her three months ago. Before that, they lived with their children.

Both are matriarchs of huge families. Mrs. Lambeth had nine children and Mrs. Hill had 11. Together, the sisters have 40 grandchildren, 85 great-grandchildren and 28 great-great-grandchildren.

The twins themselves were the youngest of nine children.

The years have become blurred for the Grubb twins, and sometimes their memories fail. But isolated recollections, some from nearly 100 years ago, still surface.

The twins vividly remember walking the 1½ miles to school down Cedar Springs Road back before the turn of the century.

The school is gone now and the road has been paved. But the Grubb sisters live on.

Despite Holy Wars, Thousands Flock To Park

By BRUCE SMITH
Associated Press Writer
FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Youngsters in fluorescent bathing trunks glide with abandon down a water slide at Heritage USA while a construction crane stands idle over a half-finished, 513-room hotel.

While Jim Bakker and the Rev. Jerry Falwell battle over the PTL television ministry, the faithful still are baptized in the swimming pool at the Heritage Grand Hotel.

And as attorneys prepare bankruptcy court plans to pay off the ministry's $72 million debt, visitors shop for everything from PTL coffee mugs to deli sandwiches along Main Street USA.

Three months of scandal and evangelical holy war since Bakker admitted a sexual affair and turned operations over to Falwell, and attendance has never been better at the Christian theme park Bakker created.

"There's no doubt it's increased public awareness of Heritage USA," said Heritage public relations director Linda Ivey.

The number passing through the park's gates and down an avenue lined with flags of the world is running 17 percent ahead of last year, when 6.1 million visited, she said.

But occupancy at the Heritage Grand Hotel where rooms cost $85 a night is "down a little from last year," says Valerie Wood, the hotel's assistant manager. She gave no specific figures. Ironically, some of the rooms lack Bibles.

"There may have been a few taken by the guests. We have run out of them," she said, adding there's been a hold on buying new copies because of the pending reorganization of PTL in federal bankruptcy court.

One wing of the hotel surrounds Main Street USA, a collection of shops with gingerbread facades selling everything from religious records to women's clothing. One store still sells Tammy Faye cosmetics and Bakker's Bakery and Deli does a brisk business.

Gwen Rhinehardt of Heritage Florist said some of the park's departments stopped ordering flowers because of spending cuts "but as far as people in here, I'm fine."

"Most of us just want this to blow over," she said, adding she didn't think Bakker should return to control.

"We're doing as well as last year and perhaps a little better," agreed Clair McCloud, the manager of Copeland's Drug Store which, among other things, sells blue ties with the legend "Forgiven."

Across the park, there are differences of opinion as to whether Bakker should return to PTL, which stands for People That Love or Praise The Lord.

Joe Joeliff, from Upper Sandusky, Ohio, said Falwell "is God's man for the hour."

"I don't have a problem with whatever sin may have been committed (by Bakker)," said Joeliff, a "PTL partner" who regularly contributes money to the ministry. "It's the finances that concern me."

But across the hotel's red-carpeted atrium with its swimming pool, restaurant and glass elevators, Norm

Bakker said his brother will be coming back.

"I don't know what it's going to take. It will take God," he said. "This is Jim's vision and this is what he wants to finish."

That's a feeling shared by Vicki Goodman Meadows of Collinsville, Ill., who has formed the Bring Bakker Back Club to collect petition signatures to convince the bankruptcy judge that Bakker should be brought back to PTL.

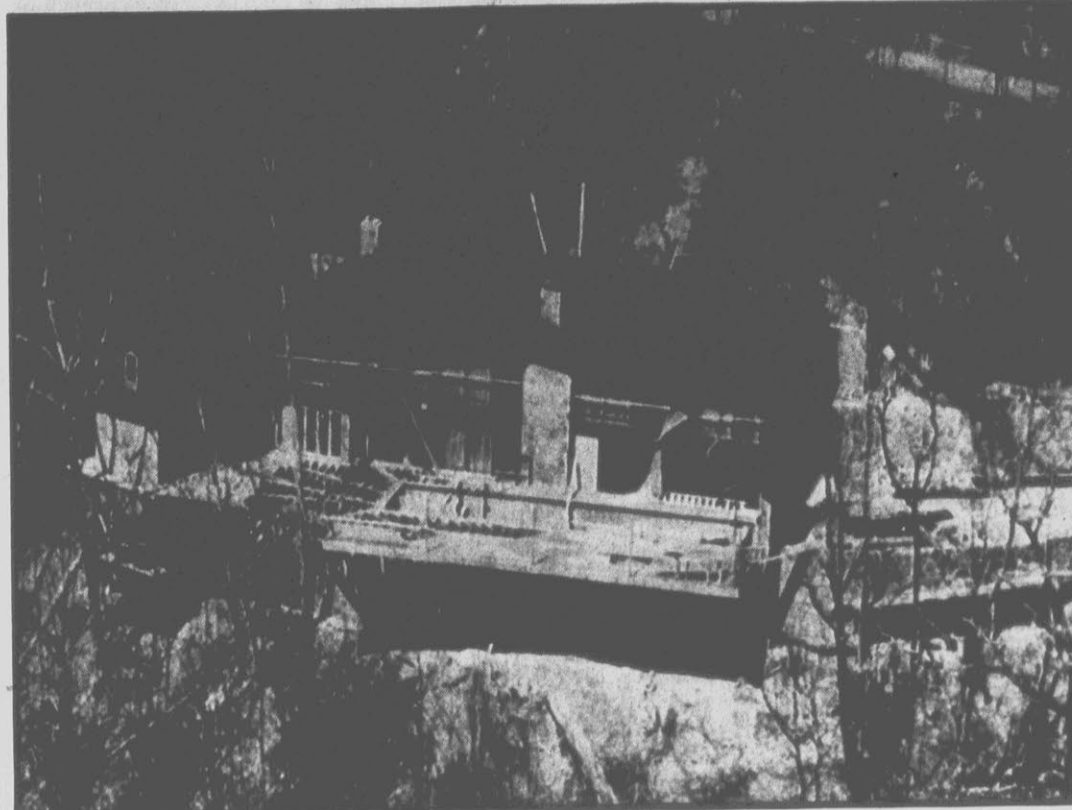

"Whenever you get thousands of people supporting something, people have to listen," Mrs. Meadows said.

However it was Falwell who received a standing ovation Monday at a broadcast of the PTL Club from the TV studio at Heritage USA.

A less-frequented tourist attraction in recent weeks has been the $1.2 million house the Bakkers occupy in Tega Cay, about 10 miles from Heritage USA, where dozens of reporters have kept vigil.

But sightseers from as far as Arizona have driven past, hoping for a glimpse of the Bakkers.

"There hasn't been anything like it since Nixon resigned," said David Lemay of Winston-Salem, N.C.

Show's Ratings Up

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Arsenio Hall will be this week's guest host on "The Late Show," which has jumped 10 percent in the ratings since Joan Rivers was dropped as permanent host, Fox Broadcasting Co. says.

The show had an A.C. Nielsen Co. rating of 2.2 for the week ending June 12, compared with 2.0 for each of the previous three weeks, Fox said Friday.

Ms. Rivers was replaced last month by a series of nightly hosts after the show lost in the ratings to "The Tonight Show" with Johnny Carson on NBC.

Hall's stint as guest host begins tonight, Fox said.

"After three weeks of experimenting with changing the host every night, we feel it's in the show's best interest to establish continuity from one night to the next," said acting executive producer Kevin Wendle.

Tank Mishap Takes Life Of National Guardsman

By WENDY E. LANE
Associated Press Writer

FORT HOOD, Texas (AP) — War-game accidents are inevitable, military officials said after a tank mistakenly fired on another tank, killing a National Guardsman and bringing the death toll during current maneuvers to 11.

Tuesday's tank accident, which also injured seven guardsmen, came one day after a military helicopter flying at tree-top level crashed and burned, killing all 10 reservists and guardsmen aboard.

The accidents occurred during the two-week Starburst '87 training maneuvers. National Guard officials said the games are made as safe as possible.

"In spite of this, we're going to have some accidents," said Maj. Gen. James B. McGoodwin, commander of the 49th Armored Division of the Texas National Guard. "We know this. We minimize this as best we can."

National Guardsmen are aware of the hazards of duty, said Dan Donohue, spokesman for the National Guard Bureau in the Pentagon.

"Yes, we do kill people, but we have an enviable track record," he said.

In Tuesday night's accident, the M-60 tank was firing at a camouflaged target about 1,000 yards away, but the 152mm gun launcher went too far to the left, firing a round at two other tanks that were illuminating the area with infrared searchlights, McGoodwin said.

The guardsman killed in the accident was standing outside the tank when the round was fired, McGoodwin said. The victim's name was withheld pending notification of relatives.

Starburst '87 exercises, training maneuvers that include about 13,000 Texas National Guard soldiers and 5,000 soldiers from Army reserve support units, will continue as planned through the first week of July, said Maj. Bill Coleman.

Investigators are still looking into the helicopter crash that littered 2½ acres with wreckage Monday morning. Officials said the investigation will take at least six weeks.

Federal Indictment Issued

By KAREN McGRATH
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — A defense contractor and a former employee have been charged in a federal indictment with giving liquor, sports tickets and other gifts to government officials in exchange for inside information on defense projects.

Named in the four-count indictment issued Wednesday were the Gilfillan division of International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. and former marketing representative Edward Vicenzi of Wellesley, Mass.

The indictment said they conspired from 1983 to 1986 with an unidentified government employee to obtain information about two Air Force programs at Hanscom Air Force Base near Bedford, Mass.

A second indictment charged Vicenzi with making illegal payments to a government employee while Vicenzi was a consultant to Emerson Electric Co. in St. Louis. He had left IIT.

The first indictment alleged Vicenzi gave government employees gratuities such as payment for meals, golf outings, liquor and tickets to sporting events.

In exchange, he sought confidential documents on cost estimates, business strategy and other matters, prosecutors said.

Vicenzi shared the information with IIT-Gilfillan employees, giving the company an unfair advantage in bidding on contracts, prosecutors said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Gary Crossen refused to say if the company won contracts on the projects, which totaled $180 million and included an anti-radiation missile decoy system.

No government employees were charged in the alleged scheme.

Vicenzi and IIT-Gilfillan, which has offices in Bedford, were charged with conspiracy to defraud the government, conversion of government property, and two counts of aiding and abetting conversion of government property.

Korean Dissident Is Released

By M.H. AHN
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The country's best-known dissident was freed from 11 weeks of house arrest today and met with the top opposition leader to discuss the next moves in the campaign to bring down President Chun Doo-hwan.

The release of dissident Kim Dae-jung was a key demand of the opposition, which is pressing for democratic reform of South Korea's authoritarian government. However, there was no sign the government and opposition were near any political compromise.

"President Chun must stop his unjust ambition to remain in power," Kim said today before his meeting with Kim Young-sam, head of the opposition Reunification Democratic Party.

Authorities have frequently confined Kim Dae-jung to his home — surrounding the house with policemen — since he returned in 1985 from two years of self-imposed exile in the United States.

Opposition leaders, who launched a campaign on June 10 to oust the government and force direct presidential elections, today finalized plans for huge "peace marches" Friday.

The two Kims met for more than two hours this morning at Kim Dae-jung's house. There was no immediate word on the specifics of their discussion, but they both have indicated the intention to proceed with the anti-government campaign.

In Seoul, riot police hurled tear gas grenades and charged a crowd of 1,000 workers, students and dissidents Wednesday when they tried to demonstrate peacefully. Hundreds of students later hurled firebombs and rocks at police in street clashes.

Marches and demonstrations were also reported in five other cities Wednesday.

Chun and Kim Young-sam met Wednesday for the first time in the president's seven years in power. The government said Chun, a former army general, offered major concessions, including resumption of the debate on what form of government South Korea should have. However, Kim said Chun made no significant offers.

Chun indicated today that he would not accede to the demand for direct presidential elections, the Yonhap News Agency reported.

The agency said South Korea's top Roman Catholic prelate, Stephen Cardinal Kim Sou-hwan, met with Chun and urged the president to accept such elections. Chun said he had already accepted many opposition requests, "but I do not think we can accept all demands at once," Yonhap said.

Chun announced on April 13 that he was postponing talks on constitutional reform until after the 1988 Seoul Summer Olympics because of the need for stability. He said the next president would be chosen later this year under the existing electoral college system, which virtually assures that Chun's handpicked successor, fellow former general Roh Tae-woo, will get the job.

A Reagan administration envoy, Gaston Sigur of the State Department, said today he cautioned Chun against using the military, which has traditionally played a prominent role in politics, to quell the protests.

He said he told the president "we oppose martial law, and would hate to see anything like that happen in this situation. Any use of the armed forces in this situation is unwarranted."

Chun had military backing when he became president in 1980 after the assassination of President Park Chung-hee. On June 10, the ruling Democratic Justice Party confirmed Roh to succeed Chun in February.

Defense Minister Lee Kee-baek met with armed forces commanders Wednesday in what officials said were discussions of military affairs. But some Koreans speculated that the meeting focused on the political situation.

Roman Catholic authorities reported the first death of a demonstrator in the two-week-old protests.

They said 27-year-old Lee Tae-choon died Wednesday night in the southern city of Pusan. He had suffered serious head injuries when hit by tear gas canisters fired by police on June 18, the officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Police said Lee was injured when he fell from an overpass. Last Friday, a riot policeman was killed in a protest in Taejon, 85 miles south of Seoul.

The Quebec Bridge on the St. Lawrence River near Quebec City collapsed in 1907 and carried 75 workmen to their deaths. The bridge was started in 1900 and was then the world's largest cantilever bridge. After the accident, construction work was continued and both cantilever sections had been completed when the center span fell into the river, taking the lives of another 13 workmen.

GOP Might Give State Parties More Muscle

By EVANS WITT
AP Political Writer
NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Republican Party leaders are considering new rules that would let state parties "thumb your nose at state laws" that dictate when, where and how the GOP can hold presidential primaries.

"I have no confidence in Democratic-controlled legislatures to do what is good for us," said Republican National Committee member Ernest Angelo of Midland, Texas. "I don't think we can take that risk."

Republicans say Democrats, who control most of the nation's state legislatures, have already imposed their will in scheduling or choosing the presidential selection processes for 1988.

The rules committee of the RNC on Wednesday debated changing procedures to let state parties make their own decisions regarding delegate selection processes regardless of what their state laws say.

"If you have a state that creates a primary ... these new rules would permit you to thumb your nose at state laws," Roger Allan Moore, RNC general counsel, told the committee.

A U.S. Supreme Court ruling in a Connecticut election case in December suggests state parties have great powers over their own elections, Moore said.

The rules committee asked Moore to draw up new drafts of the proposals for a meeting early next year. Any proposals would have to be approved by the 1988 Republican National Convention and go into effect for 1992.

The rules meeting began the preparations for the full RNC session on Friday, held as tradition dictates in the city that will host the party's national convention next summer.

Committee meetings continue today, focusing mostly on housekeeping matters for the party.

Also on Wednesday, the rules committee refused to add the president of the National Federation of Republican Women as a full voting member of the national committee. While federation President Judy Hughes insisted the vote was not a repudiation of women, opponents of adding her to the committee had warned it could be called giving in to "special interests."

"We've seen what the Democrats have done in changing their rules for whatever group lobbies them," said

Grace Boulton of Oklahoma City.

But Lois De Vecchio of Washington, D.C., told the committee the GOP has a problem that this change would help alleviate.

"People are always telling me in Washington, 'Democrats support women. You Republicans are a closed society,'" she argued.

The RNC membership is at least one-third women, while the much larger Democratic National Committee — which has some slots allotted for various groups within the party — is evenly divided between men and women by party rule.

Under the delegate-selection proposal, a national GOP committee would pass on state delegate rules if asked to do so by the state party, and thus give the state party the mandate to override state law. Such an oversight body would be new for the GOP, although Democrats have had one since 1972.

Moore said that national body would be necessary because without it, "What you're going to end up with is total anarchy."

The situation in Virginia was one of those that triggered the debate. The Democratic legislature has mandated a beauty-contest primary on March 8 as part of the Southern regional primary.

The state GOP didn't want the primary, said Bill Stanhagen, GOP national committeeman from Alexandria, Va. But he said the state party could do nothing about it, even though they judged the primary a waste of money and unfair.

"Under national party rules, we have no power to do otherwise," he told the rules committee. "We couldn't change it any way, shape or form."

Stanhagen said the Virginia GOP thought of suing under the new court decision, but decided not to when the Democrats in the legislature changed the nature of the primary.

"They made such public fools of themselves, there wasn't any point in our spending our money to go to court," he said.

Queen Details Thatcher Proposals As New British Parliament Opens

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II opened a new Parliament today, outlining amid glittering pageantry a package of radical legislation drawn up by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

The proposals, ranging from selling the national water industry to imposing new curbs on labor unions, are regarded by observers as the most far-reaching put forth by Mrs. Thatcher in her bid to roll back socialism.

The 17 bills encompass some pledges of the Conservative Party platform on which Mrs. Thatcher was swept to victory June 11. She became the first British leader since 1826 to win three successive terms.

The program includes bills undercutting local councils in big cities — mostly strongholds of the socialist Labor Party — by curbing their powers to raise property taxes and run schools and state-subsidized housing.

speech in the House of Lords, packed with unelected peers in ermine-trimmed scarlet robes and diplomats in formal dress. The members of the House of Commons stood crowded at the back of the chamber.

The Commons' members, headed by Mrs. Thatcher and the Labor Party leader, Neil Kinnock, were summoned to the Lords before the speech by an official dressed in black breeches, known as Black Rod.

Kinnock and Mrs. Thatcher scarcely glanced at each other as they walked side-by-side to hear the queen read the government's program of legislation, which the socialists will bitterly oppose.

Mrs. Thatcher, with a 102-seat overall majority in the 650-member House of Commons, faces little difficulty in winning support for the controversial package. She hopes most of the bills will become law by fall of 1988.

Some of the bills will combine to undermine the power of big city councils, mostly controlled by Labor. The Thatcher administration regards the left-wing councils as having replaced the once-powerful labor unions as the source of what one top aide called "the attack on the established order in Britain."

The proposed measures also include:

- Allowing state schools to opt out of control of local authorities and come under trusts directly financed by the central government, which has accused left-wing councils of mismanaging education.
- Replacing the present system of levying property taxes on homes with a charge on each working adult, and removing from local councils the power to set the level of taxes for businesses. This reflected Tory claims that Labor councils drive out employers.

- Ending unemployment benefits for unemployed young people who refuse to participate in state-funded training programs after leaving high school.
- Easing rent controls and allowing voluntary housing trusts to take over state-subsidized housing, now owned and leased by local authorities.
- Forcing local authorities to put out to tender to private enterprise services such as garbage collection, street cleaning and maintenance of their fleets of vehicles.

Skeleton Find Lead To Charges

BUTLER, Pa. (AP) — A skeleton unearthed in the rubble of a burned-out house proved to be the remains of a 15-year-old girl who disappeared 22 years ago, and police have charged a man with her murder.

Conrad Eugene Miller, 40, of Prospect, who was on parole from a rape conviction, was arrested in Butler on Wednesday, police said.

Miller was held without bail in Butler County Jail after being arraigned on a charge of criminal homicide in the death of Patricia Desmond, who disappeared in December 1965.

Despite evidence that Miss Desmond had been seen with Miller on the day she disappeared, police dropped the case in the early 1970s because they couldn't find her body, said state police Cpl. Danny R. McKnight.

McKnight and his partner reopened the case in May after an informant led them to a house in Slippery Rock Township which burned down about the time Miss Desmond disappeared, McKnight said.

The remains were dug out of the rubble by members of the University of Pittsburgh anthropology department, said McKnight.

"After all those years we all sort of thought she was dead. ... But you always hope she'd come home," said the girl's sister-in-law, Erma Desmond.

"In all these policies, my government will have special regard to the needs of the inner cities," the queen said in the 10-minute speech written by Thatcher and her aides. "Action will be taken to encourage investment and to increase enterprise and employment in those areas."

Mrs. Thatcher had said after her election that inner cities would be the main area of concern for her.

Traffic stalled in parts of central London as the 61-year-old monarch, accompanied by her husband, Prince Philip, rode from Buckingham Palace to the Houses of Parliament in the horse-drawn Irish State Coach.

Small crowds clustered along the route in drizzling rain to watch the magnificent procession escorted by scarlet and gold-jacketed footmen and saber-carrying cavalymen.

The package included a proposed bill to let pubs stay open 12 hours a day, except on Sundays.

That would end restrictions in England and Wales dating back to World War I that stipulated mid-afternoon closing to keep munition factory workers out of pubs.

In Scotland, which has separate licensing laws, the restrictions do not apply.

The queen wore a long white-and-gold gown and the State Imperial Crown encrusted with a giant diamond from South Africa and a ruby worn in the 15th century by King Henry V at the Battle of Agincourt.

In accordance with tradition dating back centuries, the queen read the

Whatever Happened To That Balanced Budget

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) — "And what of the long-promised balanced budget? Well, we are still waiting," Ronald Reagan fumed.

The words sound like part of the verbal rockets Reagan has been firing at Congress recently over its tax and spending policies. However, that was a complaint voiced nearly seven years ago by Reagan as a candidate attacking then-President Jimmy Carter.

Now, after almost seven years in office, President Reagan is guilty of the same failure he pinned on Carter.

The budget is not close to being balanced and the deficit is far bigger under Reagan than it ever was under Carter — or any other president, for that matter.

And for all his rhetoric about the evils of deficit spending, Reagan has never submitted a balanced budget to Congress. The $1 trillion plan he offered last January still would leave a $135 billion deficit next year.

"With the budget deficits that we've had, there is no way that you could balance the budget in a single year without causing great damage and harm to people that you don't want to hurt" such as farmers,

AP News Analysis

Reagan explained in a speech this week.

But back in 1980 when he was running for president, Reagan made it sound like it would be easy to wipe out the red ink quickly.

He said he could balance the budget by 1982, even while pumping up Pentagon spending by billions of dollars and taking revenue from the Treasury in tax cuts. Economic growth would eliminate the deficit, Reagan promised.

"Voodoo economics," chided George Bush, who was then a rival for the GOP nomination. He later joined Reagan's team and converted to Reaganomics.

Back in 1980, Reagan blamed Congress and the White House equally for the deficit.

"Essentially, the Democratic leadership in conjunction with the White House has held off discussions on the real budget so they can hide the awful truth from the American people: once again, they cannot balance the budget. And they aren't even coming close," Reagan said.

Now, he says it's all the fault of Congress, even though Republicans ruled the Senate for the first four years of his presidency and helped enact many of his economic policies.

Campaigning for president, Reagan blamed Carter for running up four straight deficits and said that when Carter left office, he would have "made the greatest single contribution of any president to the national debt."

That legacy now belongs to Reagan.

When he moved into the White House in January 1981, the national debt was $935 billion. Six years later, it has more than doubled, standing now at $2.28 trillion.

The debt is projected to reach $2.7 trillion by the time Reagan leaves office.

The record on the deficit is just as bad. In Carter's last full year in office, the fiscal 1981 budget deficit totaled $78.9 billion.

In the next year, under Reagan, it climbed to $127.9 billion and then soared to $207.8 billion the following year. The deficit dropped back to $185.3 billion in fiscal 1984, jumped to $211.9 billion in fiscal 1985 and hit a record $220.7 billion in fiscal 1986.

IRS Develops New Tax Form For Rich Children

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It could become the newest status symbol for Jill and Junior: their very own special tax form. But it won't be good news for their parents.

The Internal Revenue Service, revising its tax forms to meet requirements of the big tax overhaul enacted last year, has come up with a brand new form for children younger than age 14 who have interest, dividends or other investment income of more than $1,000.

The form will be used to compute how much of the children's investment income will be taxed at their parents' tax rate. In almost all cases, the result will be to increase the taxes on a family in which parents have shifted money and investments to their children.

But that's exactly what Congress had in mind last year when it wrote this part of the new tax law. The lawmakers concluded that many well-to-do parents, subject to tax rates as high as 50 percent, were dodging taxes by transferring some investments to their children, who might be taxed at a rate as low as 11 percent.

The change, Congress estimates, will bring in more than $1 billion in new taxes over the next five years.

The new "kiddie" document, labeled Form 8615, was made public by the IRS Wednesday in the second part of a package of new and revised forms required by the 1986 law. The IRS earlier released the basic individual forms — 1040, 1040A and 1040EZ — and as is true with the most-recent batch, little simplification is evident for most people.

Also in the package are six pages of tax tables for 1987 — which look just like the six pages in effect for calculating tax liability in 1986, except the figures have changed.

The new kiddie form is "a very complicated form because it is a complicated area" of tax law, said Arthur Altman, chairman of the IRS tax forms committee. He estimated 600,000 to 800,000 children will have to file the 8615 along with their 1040 or 1040A tax form.

Research indicates that most affected families already hire professionals to prepare their tax returns, he said. The provision is unlikely to affect the typical middle-income child who puts money from a paper route into a passbook savings account.

For example, to generate over $1,000 a year in interest at a 7 percent rate, a child would have to have at least $14,300 in a savings account. If the account paid 5 percent, it would have to be worth at least $20,000.

The kiddie provision could have a significant impact on some families. When the new law's reduced tax rates become fully effective next year, the bottom rate — which is all most people will pay — will be 15 percent; the top rate will be at least 28 percent, and some people will have to pay 33 percent on part of their income.

Assuming a 12-year-old child had $10,000 of interest in 1988, the provision could raise the family's tax bill by as much as $1,800, representing the difference between the 15-percent and 33-percent tax brackets.

Tax effects of the kiddie provision are made greater because of another part of the new law, which says that a child who is claimed as a dependent by a parent may no longer take a personal exemption on his or her own return.

Wednesday's release also included these 1987 forms:

—Form 3903, on which job-related moving expenses are deducted, has been changed to reflect that under the new law, moving expenses may be claimed only by those who itemize deductions. About 1.7 million taxpayers deducted moving expenses last year.

—Schedule C, on which about 11 million taxpayers report profit or loss from a business, and Schedule F, used by about 2 million farmers, have been revised to show new limitations on passive losses — part of the big tax-shelter crackdown.

—Parts of Schedule SE, on which 9 million self-employed people pay Social Security taxes, have been shifted for simplification.

—Schedule R, used by 500,000 to claim a special credit for the elderly and permanently disabled, is unchanged from 1986.

Liberace Property To Be Sold

By BOB THOMAS

Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Most of the trappings of opulence that pianist Liberace accumulated over 30 years of performing is headed for the auction block.

"This will not be your typical auction sale," Hillary A. Holland, vice president of the London-based Christie's, said Wednesday. "It will be an extravaganza, an event just as spectacular and exciting as the man himself."

The sale April 10-13 at the Los Angeles Convention Center will include custom cars, mirrored pianos, a gold candelabrum and Christmas ornaments.

The auction will be managed by Christie's and Butterfield and Butterfield.

"The proceeds will go to the Liberace Foundation for the Performing and Creative Arts," said Joel L. Strote, executor for the Liberace estate. "He considered the foundation his most important achievement."

The foundation, which is also supported by proceeds from the Liberace Museum in Las Vegas, Nev., makes grants for scholarships in the arts at 22 universities.

The auction will include furnishings from Liberace's homes in Las Vegas, Los Angeles, Malibu, New York and Lake Tahoe. Among the 15,000-20,000 items on the block: a 1960 red-and-silver Cadillac limousine with five-inch candelabrum in diamonds; a 10-foot Bluthner piano; an 1850 Baccarat crystal table once owned by a maharajah; and Liberace's personal jewelry and Christmas ornaments.

Besides the Cadillac limousine, which includes a television, stereo and wet bar, cars to be auctioned include a black Eldorado convertible and other Cadillacs, Lincolns, Chryslers and two vans.

Truckers Eye Tax Refunds From States

By PHYLLIS MESSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A court decision overturning two Pennsylvania taxes on interstate truckers marks a first step in getting as much as $750 million in refunds from Pennsylvania and six other states, a truckers group says.

Thomas J. Donohue, president and chief executive officer of the American Trucking Associations, said Wednesday the group now will begin working with officials in Pennsylvania, as well as Arkansas, Vermont, Kentucky, New Jersey, Maryland and Indiana, to make changes in their tax laws and determine how the refunds will be paid.

About 30,000 trucking companies were affected by the taxes, which the states imposed as a way of financing road improvements. Donohue suggested that the states consider imposing "a fair and reasonable registration fee and a fair and reasonable motor fuels tax" as an alternative to the annual fees imposed on out-of-state truckers.

The Supreme Court on Tuesday ruled 5-4 that the two successive Pennsylvania laws imposing the annual fees on trucks unduly discriminated against interstate commerce. The other six states have similar laws.

"We are not crowing about our Supreme Court victory," Donohue said. "We have to live with the states and travel on their roads. But we are pleased."

Daniel R. Barney, director of the associations' litigation center, said a Supreme Court decision on a suit challenging the constitutionality of the Arkansas law is expected within a week, and the court is expected to decide soon whether to hear a case involving the Vermont law.

Donohue said Pennsylvania has agreed that it will refund the money it collected through the two taxes, although specifics of the refund still have to be determined. He estimated the state collected about $500 million in the seven years the taxes were in effect.

However, the truckers have no agreements with the other six states on refunds. Donohue said the truckers expect about $250 million in refunds from the other states.

Soviet Women Said Freer Than Men

Dramatic Dressing

By WILLIAM J. EATON
(c) 1987, Los Angeles Times
MOSCOW — Soviet Leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Tuesday that women in the Soviet Union have even more rights than men but that their burdens as wives and mothers have increased.

He made the statement in a speech opening a World Congress of Women attended by more than 2,250 delegates from 154 countries. The theme of the congress is "peace, justice and equality."

Gorbachev, accompanied by his wife Raisa, delivered an hour-long address in which he praised women as peacemakers in the forefront of anti-war movements around the world.

He said Soviet women "have equal rights with men and in some areas even vaster rights," but he acknowledged indirectly that they are expected to perform a dual role and keep house as well as hold down full-time jobs.

Soviet women have complained that they must do the shopping, cooking and cleaning and then care for their children, while men shun household tasks. Even so, there is no organized feminist movement in the Soviet Union to try to bring about changes.

Gorbachev said women get equal pay for equal work and have equal opportunities for education and employment and equal opportunities to take part in Communist Party and government work.

"Women are working in all sectors of the economy, and they dominate such spheres as public health, education and culture," he said. He did not point out that doctors and school-teachers are among the lowest-paid people in the Soviet Union.

Soviet women, he went on, make up 60 percent of the people with a higher education or a specialized secondary education.

"An active and equal participation of women in social production, in political, scientific and cultural activities has boosted women's authority, their self-respect, sense of dignity and independence from men," he said. "But this has not always been accompanied by changes making any easier the performance of their inherent functions as housewife and mother. Certain problems have become more acute because of shortcomings in the consumer services sector and retail trade. Thus the social load on women has increased."

Soviet housewives say they spend hours in lines every week shopping for groceries and other household needs. Shortages of many items — children's shoes and clothing, for example — add to their burden.

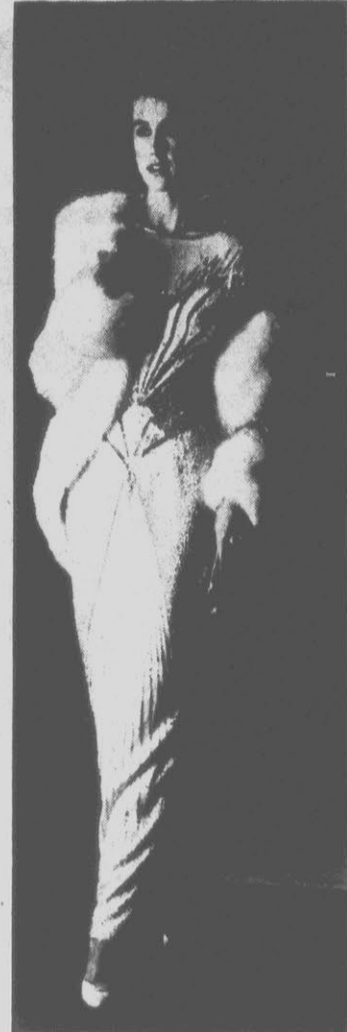

The prominent public role assumed by Raisa Gorbachev has caused a certain amount of controversy here. Many Soviet citizens are reported to disapprove of her accompanying Gorbachev on trips abroad and around the Soviet Union. They argue that because she has no official duties she should stay at home.

Her visibility is a novelty in the Soviet Union. The wives of most Soviet leaders either never or rarely appeared in public. Until a previous leader, Yuri V. Andropov, died and his wife appeared at his funeral, it was not widely known that he was married.

Freda Brown, an Australian who is president of the Women's International Democratic Federation and chairwoman of the congress, said in her opening speech that she expected frank discussion from delegates with differing political and religious views.

The main obstacles to peace, justice and equality, she said, are the waste of money on the arms race and the "ruthless exploitation of women in industry, as well as outdated traditions and customs which still assign to women a subordinate role in society."

SHOW STOPPERS — The current message for evening is unabashed dramatics. At left, a gold and white long-sleeves dress by Stephen Yearick creates made-in-U.S.A. glamour. It's cut snugly to the body and the elaborate beadwork adds glitter and shine. The dress pairs with a fur-trimmed jacket of the same beaded fabric for a dazzling duo. At right, both shoulder and leg are highlighted in this strapless cocktail dress, designed by Carol Horn and made in the U.S.A. It's of shimmering pewter-tone polyester. The cinched waist flares into a full short skirt that's figure-flattering. (AP Newsfeatures Photo)

To Assist Working Moms Is His Focus

By CAROL DEEGAN
AP Newsfeature Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Dr. Sirgar Sanger is a friend of the working mother.

Sanger, a New York City infant and child psychiatrist, said "I have no right to tell women not to work or to work. I don't think that's my job."

More important, he said, with 20 million working mothers in this country, the question is no longer whether or not mothers should work outside the home, but rather how to help them be the best parents they can be.

Sanger specializes in the unique needs of working mothers and their children up to the age of five.

He is critical of what he calls "glib, and in many ways, guilt-inducing advice" about parenting that is directed at working mothers.

Sanger said children of working mothers can be made stronger, more flexible and socially skilled than the children of at-home mothers.

"A mother's work changes her child's development dramatically, by introducing him or her to the real world earlier," he said. "This early introduction to 'real life' can have many advantages for he child, but it creates certain risks and vulnerabilities, too."

"I teach mothers how to minimize the difficulties and maximize the strengths to make their work a positive force in their children's lives," he said. "I want to help them do the best they can for their kids."

Sanger is the author of three books including his latest, "The Woman Who Works, The Parent Who Cares." (Little, Brown and Company)

He founded the Parent-Child Interaction Program at St. Luke's Roosevelt Hospital in New York City in 1971, where he continues to do community work.

He founded the Early Day Care Center, where he maintains his private practice, in 1982.

The Early Care Center explores all the ways parents can promote optimal development and makes recommendations for nurture and play based on each infant's and child's unique emotional characteristics.

Sanger uses a video studio — actually a big playroom with lights and video cameras — to record mothers at play with their infants and children. He reviews the tapes and offers suggestions.

His program for working mothers and their children, called Reality Attuned Parenting (REAP), is meant to reflect what Sanger says he believes to be the defining characteristic of the working mother's child: the real world enters his life earlier.

"We try to introduce reality earlier in the child's life because the working situation pushes the child into the real world earlier. They have to be more resourceful, more independent children; all the things the mothers are in their own lives, that's what their children will have to be as well."

"So we do have many ways of showing parents how to help their children be more in this world without sacrificing their childhood."

REAP is designed to provide a young child with the security, the self-confidence, flexibility, sense of personal competence and capacity to cope with stress and frustration that he needs to operate efficiently and beneficially outside his immediate family circle.

Sanger said working mothers are changing the developmental timetable for the first five years of a child's life.

He said despite the long history women have of working outside the home, today's working mother is being attacked from many sides.

"She is attacked from above by her mother who was one of those postwar mothers who were forced to leave their work and stay home."

"She is attacked by people who tell her that putting her child in day care is tantamount to throwing him on a rubbish heap."

"And she is being attacked by her own sense that she can't do everything."

Sanger said mothers should stop worrying about what possible negative effects their working outside the home might have on their children.

One Shouldn't Fear Having Baby Late

By NYU MEDICAL CENTER

Despite talk of dangers in pregnancy over age 35, healthy women who have postponed having children until that age need not fear an unduly high risk of complications, according to a maternal-fetal medicine specialist at New York University Medical Center.

"Many women are under the impression that age 35 represents a cut-off point for successful pregnancy," says Dr. Bruce K. Young, director of the division of maternal-fetal medicine and professor of obstetrics and gynecology. "In fact, there is no magic number, no age at which pregnancy suddenly becomes hazardous. Risks do increase with age, but they do so on a steady continuum, year by year."

He notes, for example, that there is a 20 percent chance of miscarriage in any pregnancy; by one's late 30s, that possibility may only be 21 or 22 percent.

The risk of chromosomal abnormalities also rises with the mother's age, but on a steeper curve. There are many such conditions, causing a variety of congenital defects, including the form of mental retardation called Down's Syndrome. The risk of having a child with this disorder, says Young, is about 1 in 1000 (0.1 percent) when the mother is 25, rising to about 1 in 300 at age 35, 1 in 150 at age 40, and 1 in 40 or 50 (2.0 to 2.5 percent) at age 45.

Most, though not all, genetic disorders are detectable by amniocentesis, a procedure in which a sample of the fluid surrounding the fetus is withdrawn and analyzed. Amniocentesis itself, however, slightly increases the risk of miscarriage. In addition, since it is usually not performed until at least the 16th week of pregnancy, with a two- to three-week wait for results, a termination of the pregnancy would thus take place at a late, and relatively risky, stage.

Fertility in women drops with age, Young adds, so conception after age 30 may be more difficult. Hence, miscarriage or other complications may carry more emotional impact than in younger women.

But he says the foregoing risks are still minimal, and once a woman is pregnant, her general state of health is probably a more important factor than age. Young characterizes today's women in their 30s as "fitter and healthier" than prior generations, and says that, barring individual medical problems, the prognosis for a healthy outcome in pregnancy is generally quite good.

FRIEND OF WORKING MOMS — Dr. Sirgar Sanger poses with one of his clients. He specializes in children birth to 5, preferably those of working moms.

Woman's Friend's Table Manners Are Threat To Relationship

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The man I'm dating is a widower, mid-60s, who was married for 40 years. I'm 56. The problem is his table manners. He doesn't have any.

He doesn't remove his hat in a restaurant, tucks his napkin into his collar under his chin and eats with both elbows on the table. When he eats steak, he holds his fork tightly in his fist with the handle vertical and cuts up all his meat at once. He eats so fast, he's finished before I'm halfway through. He carries toothpicks in his wallet and thinks nothing of picking his teeth at the table.

On the plus side, he's generous, good-natured and fun to be with. He wants to marry me.

I am wondering if he is hopeless. Should I try to change him now? If so, how do I go about doing it? Apparently his gross table manners never bothered his wife, but they sure do bother me. — NEEDS ADVICE

DEAR NEEDS: Some people can accept constructive criticism and are grateful for it. Some cannot. You will never be happy with this man unless he improves his table manners, so tell him now — gently and lovingly — what he needs to learn. His reaction to your suggestions will tell you all you need to know.

DEAR ABBY: I graduated from Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa, in 1930. Twelve of us were very good friends. We all went in different directions after graduation, but wanted to keep in touch with each other, so we started a round-robin letter, and after 57 years it is still making its rounds with only six of us left!

That letter has had an interesting history. It was censored during the war, dunked in the ocean, and almost everything that could happen to a letter happened to this one.

Can any of your readers beat our record? Would we be eligible for the Guinness Book of Records? — FLORENCE (ZIEGENHORN) BRAYTON, MUSCATINE, IOWA
DEAR FLORENCE: I don't know, but maybe we can find out. Readers?

DEAR ABBY: I was informed that in Scotland, the second-born of twins is considered the senior, and if they are both males and a title is to be handed down, the title will be given to the last-born twin because he is believed to have been the first conceived. This makes no sense to me. Can it be true? — J.S., AUGUSTA, MAINE

DEAR J.S.: I first consulted with an obstetrician who advised me that in the case of twins, it is not necessarily "first in, last out." Twins can be conceived at the same time or consecutively, and the order of birth does not necessarily conform to conception; twins do not necessarily appear on the scene in the inverse order of conception.

With respect to Scottish law, the first twin born is the "older," and that twin would inherit the title.

To be a bit more technical, if there is a title to pass on to the oldest male heir, and if the first-born of twins is a female, she does not receive the title. However, if the twins are both boys, the first on the scene (the older) receives the title.

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Party Invitations Are Coveted

EDITOR'S NOTE — The Bluegrass breeding farm of Preston and Anita Madden is famous for producing fast horses, like this year's celebrated colt, Alysheba. But that's not all the Maddens are known for. An invitation to their annual wild bash is as treasured as a box seat at the Kentucky Derby.

By JULES LOH
AP Special Correspondent
LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Back at the turn of the century, John E. Madden, known among horsemen as The Wizard of the Turf, posted a list of 13 rules for employees of his breeding farm.

Rule 1 was "Visitors must at all times be treated with courtesy."

In the three generations of Maddens who have succeeded the wizard there is no evidence that Rule 1 has ever been broken. Not at Hamburg Place, Hamburg Place, named for a fast horse, has to be one of the most hospitable places in a corner of America where hospitality is as cultivated as a bloodline, the Kentucky Bluegrass.

Rules 2 and 3, and 5 through 13, deal with the loving care of horses and are precise. Hoofs, for example, must be trimmed to an angle of 46 degrees.

These rules, too, are still followed to the letter. Madden-bred horses, including this year's most celebrated colt, Alysheba, live pampered lives on 2,000 lush acres so postcard pretty and peaceful you can hear the honeybees in the next meadow, so idyllic that Rule 4 seems superfluous:

"No noisy and boisterous conduct is permitted on the premises."

Anita Madden laughed. "Isn't that something?" said the hostess of Hamburg Place, tooling around the premises, somewhat boisterously, in a red convertible, sipping champagne. "One weekend a year we permit a small exception."

Small exception? To an army of people who make up a guest list as long as the home stretch at Churchill Downs, Hamburg Place is revered less as the breeding farm of six Kentucky Derby winners as it is the site where, on Derby weekend every year, Rule 4 is utterly and fervently shattered.

"I know people who cherish an invitation to Anita Madden's party more than a box seat at the Derby," said Dan Chandler, an old school chum of Anita's who now runs a Las Vegas resort and knows something about noisy and boisterous.

Consider 1,700 gowned and tuxedoed guests, a seven-pole tent that would cover a football field, or, in this case a polo field, two bands, four bars, a mechanical genie the size of an elephant perched on a throne puffing a pipe and reciting one-liners, a magic carpet, occupied, sweeping above the crowd, harem girls tossing beads down upon the revelers from archways above.

Oh, yes. And a $25 million display of jewelry loaned for the occasion by

New York jeweler Harry Winston. "Something to catch your eye when you walk in," Anita Madden said, winking.

"Anita has the kind of parties they should have in Hollywood, but don't," said Chandler. "You never know what's going to happen, only that it will be outrageous."

The theme for this year's Derby Eve party was "The Three Wishes of Omar Khayyam." No, not a jug of wine, a book of verse and thou, but, at midnight, three chained maidens hauled up to the magic carpet by a great bird in a cloud of smoke. Outrageous.

A celebrated guest, especially to the sorority girls at the University of Kentucky who volunteer their services as waitresses, was TV star Corbin Bernsen, the divorce lawyer in "L.A. Law."

One year the special guest was an elderly matron introduced as Lady Beaverly, very British. That year the theme was "The Fountain of Youth." At midnight, the genteel Lady Beaverly dove in and emerged from the magical fountain as a bikini-clad coed shouting, "It works! It works!"

Another year the hostess got wind of a plot by some UK students to streak her party. Not a bad idea, she thought. She got a message to them: Could they arrange to do it about midnight? They did.

"If you can't stop it, you might as well organize it," Mrs. Madden said.

The Madden party started out, back in the '50s when Preston and Anita were married, as a few dinner guests. "It just kept growing," she said. "Pretty soon we had to move it to the country club. It outgrew that, so we used a tent alongside the polo house."

The polo house is a building built at Hamburg Place to indulge a pastime of Preston Madden's father, John Madden Jr., and provide quarters for his polo-playing guests.

"The guest list grew larger — 100, 300, 500. Finally, in 1979, the Kentucky Chief Justice asked me to do it for charity, for the heart fund that year. That's when it really began getting bigger each year."

The Madden guest list allows the invitees to bring their own guests, at $250 a ticket. "So I really never know quite who will be there. Somehow they're always interesting people. They like to party."

"People ask me about the knack of having a successful party, but there really is none. The knack is liking to party."

Fast-Fooders Think That Gravy Is Finger Food

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

I hate to keep complaining about television, but I believe the industry has a certain responsibility to either entertain, enlighten or inform its viewers.

I am not entertained watching a commercial where a man has a fajita drooling down his chin.

I am not enlightened by a face buried in a taco up to the ears and talking at the same time.

And I am certainly not informed by a bunch of kids laughing with a mouthful of barbecued beef wrapped around their teeth.

How in the world are parents supposed to instill in their kids some semblance of manners when everyone on television is eating like livestock!

It hasn't been easy trying to teach manners in a fast-food society where gravy is considered a finger food.

There was a time when the family dinner hour was the mecca of manners ... the breeding ground of ambience ... the solemn marriage of the fork to the diner ... the finishing school for those who desired to eat in public without making people sick.

Then silver gave way to plastic sticks two inches long; dinner plates disappeared and in their place came cardboard buckets and napkins, and toothpicks "went public."

We became a society on the move and we took our food with us. You can't climb into a car these days that is not reeking of onion rings and doesn't have a few petrified French fries under the gas pedal.

I'm drifting ... back to the commercials.

Is it possible to have a few ground rules when advertising food on television?

Could we cool it with the ecstasy? I have never seen a person eat a forkful of dietary lasagna and look like she has just seen God. A simple nod would suffice.

Commercials of people eating peanut butter should be without testimonials. Everyone knows you can't speak after eating peanut butter anyway.

Do not choreograph people eating chicken. They always wave the bird's thighs and legs around and look like they're attacking it.

Both hands should be touching the food that is being eaten at all times ... especially pizza.

Snapping food in mid-air should be banned from the airwaves unless the product is dog food.

I'm serious about this. If something is not done to set the standards of manners, we are going to end up with a generation of diners with milk running off their chins like Mary Lou Retton when they eat their cereal, celebrities who turn eating a pizza into an aerobic experience and slob with fajita droppings coming off their elbows.

It will not be a pretty sight.

Chrysler Denies Odometer Fraud Charges

vans were driven by company department heads from days to weeks at a time, with the unregistered mileage varying from 50 to 400 miles. He said his office would try to contact owners of the affected vehicles.

The company said that as part of its quality assurance program, a small number of cars or trucks were picked at random each day at each assembly plant and were test-driven by a "qualified and authorized factory representative." It said the average number of miles put on the test vehicles was 40.

Driving new cars for 30-40 miles to test them for noises and other defects is a common practice in the auto industry, said Thomas O'Grady, analyst with Integrated Automotive Resources Inc. in Wayne, Pa. Plant supervisors and other managers are familiar with the cars and know what to look for, he said in a telephone interview today.

"The thing that's going to be hard on Chrysler is maybe a couple of employees held onto those cars a little too long," O'Grady said.

Disconnecting the odometers for test-drives has been a common industry practice in the past, he said.

After authorities began investigating the practice in 1985, Chrysler put a cap of 65 miles on each test drive, and began putting notices in glove boxes of tested cars notifying buyers that the vehicles have been test driven.

In addition, the odometers are now being left engaged during the test program, although Chrysler said that is not required by law. The company said odometers had been disconnected to prevent accumulation of mileage that would reduce customers' warranty coverage.

The indictment said that in several instances, vehicles were involved in accidents so severe their frames were bent. The company made cosmetic repairs but did not bother to fix the frames, and sold the vehicles without telling customers of their true condition, the government alleged.

The company said that fewer than 40 vehicles were damaged in 10 years of testing, and that they were fully repaired before being sold.

The practice of disconnecting odometers was discovered by Missouri highway patrolmen who reported that Chrysler executives who were stopped for speeding frequently explained that they couldn't tell they were exceeding the limit. Scudder and O'Reilly were general plants managers for Chrysler and managed all Chrysler assembly plants.

They were accused of directing plant managers to ensure that odometers be disconnected on cars to be driven by company managers. The indictment said they directed that if an odometer was left connected and registered more than 10 lies, it was to be replaced with a new odometer.

The Justice Department said Scudder has retired, but is on special assignment for the company in Kenosha, Wis., where he is supervising the conversion of a former American Motors Corp. plant. O'Reilly, a Canadian citizen, is managing Chrysler's Canadian operations, the department said.

Waldheim, Pope John Paul Hold Meeting

ried into the Vatican where the pontiff and Waldheim were meeting.

Waldheim has been accused of aiding the deportation of thousands of Jews and partisans who were killed in concentration camps during World War II. He denies the allegations.

Some protesters, former Nazi prisoners, showed the numbers that had been tattooed on their arms when they arrived at concentration camps during World War II and carried signs bearing the names of several camps. Others wore death camp uniforms and carried protest placards, while another group erected a replica of a gallows with a hangman's noose.

Earlier, under a cloudless sky and amid the din of helicopters circling overhead, Waldheim's motorcade of eight limousines had crossed St. Peter's Square, which in an unusual security measure was completely blocked off by police, and entered a side door of the Vatican shortly before 11 a.m. (5 a.m. EDT).

The United States has barred Waldheim from visiting because of the Nazi allegations, and the Austrian president has been largely shunned diplomatically since taking office.

Dressed in a black cutaway jacket with a scarlet sash, Waldheim and his wife Elisabeth, wearing a long black dress and a black lace mantilla, got out of their limousine in the courtyard of St. Damasus to the strains of the Austrian national anthem played by the Pontifical Band.

ministrative officer, and $126,200 for development commission expansion.

Adoption of the budget followed final decisions Wednesday not to provide $360,000 to buy new voting machines for the county, nor to provide any additional money for school current expenses.

The board also rejected a proposal to buy a new mainframe computer and software for the county's data processing department — $1.5 million or $495,000 a year for five years if financed. Instead, the board included $50,000 for new equipment in the coming year to expand the present computer's capabilities and said consideration would be given to the purchase of a new computer during budget deliberations for 1988-1989.

Additions to the budget Wednesday also included $77,687 to fully fund requests from the Development Commission to implement suggestions made in a study of how to improve industrial recruitment, and $43,000 for a compactor and compactor operator for the Bells Fork solid waste container site.

Greeting them was Archbishop Dino Monduzzi, prefect of the papal household, and two long rows of the Vatican's colorfully uniformed Swiss Guards, who stood at attention and raised their halberds in a salute to the Austrian president.

The Waldheims walked down a long red carpet into the Vatican.

Outside the Vatican meanwhile, Beate Klarsfeld, the Paris-based Nazi hunter who tracked down Klaus Barbie, the so-called Gestapo "Butcher of Lyon," stood beside a large placard reading, "Will Klaus Barbie be the Vatican's next guest?"

Pope John Paul II "has broken the rule accepted by all other countries — not to allow Waldheim in," she told reporters.

Klarsfeld and four American protesters were detained by police for questioning for several hours Wednesday about a fire at Klarsfeld's hotel that apparently was set off by a smoke-producing device.

The demonstrators said they had intended to use the "smoke candles" during their protest today to simulate the smoke from concentration camp gas chambers.

The papal audience angered Jewish leaders around the world, and provoked criticism from the Israeli government.

On Wednesday, Rabbi Avi Weiss of Riverdale, N.Y., led three protesters from the American Coalition for Concern in reading prayers in St. Peter's Square. He said the pope's reception of Waldheim was "morally reprehensible."

Italian government officials will not be meeting with Waldheim, ostensibly because the country is being run by a caretaker government. Italian news media have described this reasoning as an excuse to avoid being embroiled in the controversy.

Seattle Surprised To Select Amaker

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle SuperSonics say they were surprised that 6-foot Duke guard Tommy Amaker was available, when they picked him in the third round of this week's NBA draft.

"We had him pegged to go in the high-to-mid second round," Sonics President Bob Whitsitt said. "We didn't think he would be there."

The Sonics, who reached the Western Conference finals of the playoffs last season, drafted Amaker on Tuesday with the 55th selection.

"I'm surprised he lasted that long," said Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski of Amaker. "Tommy is short, but he does a lot of things most guards don't do."

"I'm glad he went to Seattle. I'd rather he went late where he can be used than go early in a situation in which he didn't fit in."

At Duke, Amaker finished as Duke's all-time leader in assists with 708 and also ended his collegiate career as the Atlantic Coast Conference's all-time leader in games played and games started with 138.

He thinks he can make the Sonics' roster next season.

"It's like a dream come true," said Amaker. "Not only is Seattle an exciting team, but I think it's the perfect team for me."

The Sonics selected forward-center Olden Polynice of Virginia and forward Derrick McKey of Alabama in the first round and didn't have a second-round pick.

Seattle's starting point guard last season was rookie Nate McMillan of North Carolina State, a 1986 second-round draft pick. Veteran Eddie Johnson and third-year pro Danny Young were Seattle's other two point guards.

"We still wanted to select a guard who we felt was capable of pushing the ball up the floor," said Sonics Coach Bernie Bickerstaff.

NEW YORK (AP) — Dwight Gooden says he used cocaine only occasionally for the past three off-seasons and never during a baseball season, according to reports in today's New York Post and Newsday.

But the 22-year-old New York Mets pitcher admitted he was in the early stages of addiction when he tested positive for cocaine in spring training.

"I'm no drug addict, I'm no junkie," Gooden told the Post. He spent 28 days last April in rehabilitation following a positive test for cocaine use.

Gooden, who pitched his first game this season June 5, told both newspapers that he will not talk about his drug use again.

"I was immature," he told Newsday. "I expected people to be kissing my feet. I'm getting back to where I should be now, doing things the right way."

He told the Post he was glad he got caught, adding that he "might have ended up like Len Bias," the basketball star who died from cocaine use a year ago.

The Post quoted the former National League Rookie of the Year and Cy Young Award winner as saying he was "very, very sorry for what I did."

Gooden said he first used cocaine while a high school student in Tampa, Fla., then stayed away from it until after his rookie season of 1984.

"But I was never hooked," Gooden said. "I always used it in the off-season, and always with my friends from Tampa."

"I know some people think I was a junkie. But I never had a problem with it. I did coke the way someone would have a drink with dinner. Go to a party or a club and it'd be there. But once it was gone I never craved more. I let it go."

But Gooden admitted a potential catastrophe was averted when his drug test came up positive. He said he's happy for the support he's received and regrets letting people down.

"I realize how I hurt my family and friends," he told the newspaper. "And the day I came back (his June 5 debut at Shea Stadium) when I heard everyone cheering, I realize I let down all the kids that looked up to me."

Gooden, citing immaturity and peer pressure for his use of the drug, said none of his teammates was aware of his activities. He said he was confronted prior to his failed drug test only once, when baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth's office received a tip late last season that "three black stars on the Mets were using drugs."

"That's when Davey (Manager Johnson) called me into his office and asked me. I said 'No.' That was it," Gooden said.

"No one really knew because when I did it in spring training, I'd always be away from the clubhouse. I never, ever brought any of the stuff near the clubhouse. And I never pulled it out in front of Straw (teammate and friend Darryl Strawberry). He never knew."

Gooden said he was glad he got caught before he wound up spending "all my money ..."

"I never thought I would get caught," he said. "I remember the test was on a Thursday (March 28), and I'd been fooling around with the stuff on Tuesday. I just never thought it would show up."

Gooden said he also had been using cocaine two days prior to his arrest last December following a scuffle he and some companions had with Tampa police officers who had ordered their cars off the road. "They (authorities) tested me for drugs and alcohol, and nothing showed up. So I thought I'd be OK in spring training, too."

Gooden refused to blame the pressures of baseball for his use of the drug.

"Why did I do it? Because I was stupid."

He said he began to worry about it, however.

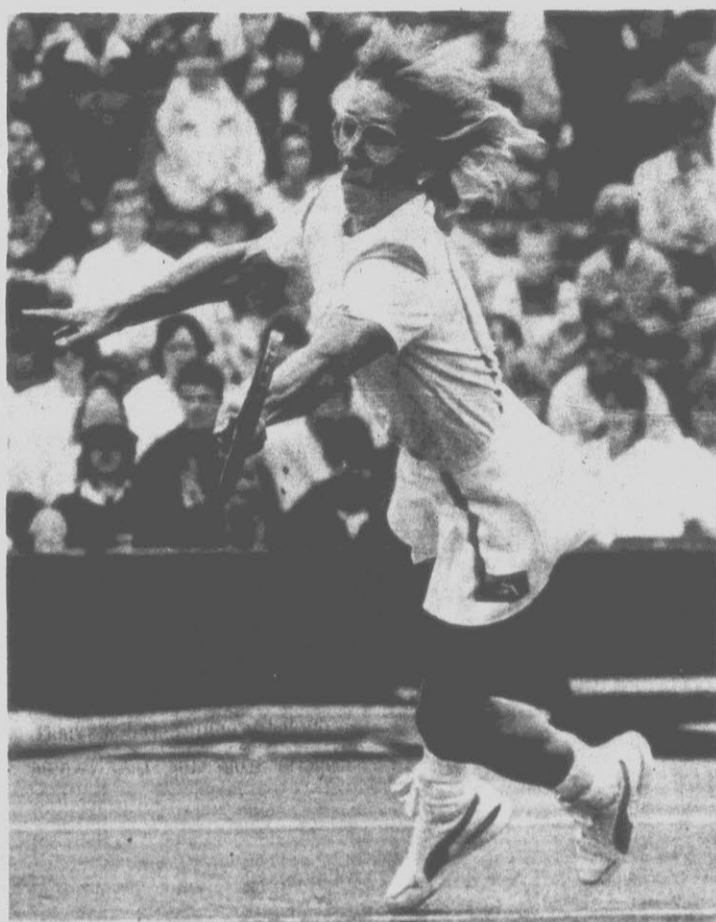

"When you're doing it you think to yourself, 'What am I doing?' I'd wake up the next morning and ask myself, 'What if the police had shown up? What about your family and your career?' But once you start doing it again, you don't think about it anymore. It was OK. I had fun."

Gooden's advice to those considering the use of the drug is "never pick it up the first time."

"You might like it, you might feel good," said Gooden, who admitted he "cried a lot before I went to bed at night" during his rehabilitation.

He said the drug creates an urge for increased use.

"You might do it once a month, then once a week, then twice a week ..."

Starts Defense

Rains Return At Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — After a day of sunshine and plenty of tennis, rain struck again at Wimbledon today just as the second round began.

Two matches started on the showcourts as a fine mist fell, but neither was through its first set when the precipitation picked up and forced groundskeepers to replace the green canvas covers.

On Centre Court, Paolo Cane of Italy, ranked 40th in the world, was leading second-seeded Ivan Lendl 5-2, while on court No. 1 defending women's champion Martina Navratilova was leading Etsuko Inoue of Japan 4-1.

The forecast was calling for steadier rain as the day progressed. Organizers already were facing a backlog of matches from Monday and Tuesday, when the first 1½ days of play were rained out.

The women's second seed, Steffi Graf of West Germany, started what she hopes will be a march to her second successive Grand Slam title in impressive fashion on Wednesday.

Wimbledon's grass courts were supposed to be the ultimate test of Graf's ability to keep on winning, after rolling up 39 consecutive victories on clay and hard courts. She passed the first part of the test in Round One.

"I felt more comfortable today than I did in Paris," Graf said after whipping Argentina's Adriana Villagran 6-0, 6-2.

Boris Becker, the 19-year-old defending men's champion, advanced to the second round Tuesday.

Both West Germans were due on the show courts Thursday, if the rain stopped.

Becker was playing the second match on Court No. 1 against Peter Doohan of Australia, while Graf met Tine Scheuer-Larsen of Denmark on Centre Court.

Navratilova, going for a record sixth consecutive Wimbledon crown, was just as comfortable a first-round winner as Graf.

On a sunny, breezy afternoon that followed two days of rain and gray skies, the top-ranked Navratilova led a procession of seeded players into the second round as results ran true to form on the 18 courts.

Navratilova dropped nine points in the first set and seven in the second as she trounced Claudia Porwick of West Germany 6-1, 6-0.

Her perennial rival, American Chris Evert, was almost as dominant in beating Britain's Sara Gomer by the same score.

American Jimmy Connors started his 17th Wimbledon appearance with a 6-1, 7-6, 7-6 over compatriot Marty Davis.

Post 39 Rolls By Rocky Mount

By TOM MORRIS

Reflector Sports Writer

Pitt County American Legion Post 39 has seen both good and bad times this season but is hoping last night's 14-7 win over Rocky Mount is an indication of good things to come.

Post 39 ended a three-game losing streak and broke out of mistake-prone funk as it pounded out 19 hits on offense and played solid defense behind starting pitcher Robbie McDonald.

The win improves Post 39's record to 6-5 in Area I American Legion baseball action. Pitt had started the season 0-2, then won five straight before losing its next three.

"We just told the guys (that) we're 5-5 and we're starting even," said Pitt County coach Toby Holiday. "It's time to start a new season. I think the guys were up for this. I think they were tired of making mistakes."

McDonald went seven and one-third innings, giving up six runs on seven hits, but only four of the runs were earned. He had pitched only five innings previously but looked strong throughout, getting into trouble only in the eighth. Axel Smith then came on in relief and went the rest of the way, giving up only one run on two hits.

On defense, Pitt committed but one error. At one point, McDonald retired 13 straight batters on a variety of pop ups and ground outs.

"He did a super job," Holiday said of McDonald. "I think he threw 76 pitches in eight innings. He kept them off balance. He was getting ahead (in the count). He didn't have to worry about throwing a lot of pitches. That's what kept him in there."

A strong hitting performance by the entire team didn't hurt either. All but one Post 39 player recorded at least one hit. McDonald aided his own cause with a three-run triple in the third that erased an early deficit and got Pitt started.

Pitt went into the third trailing 2-0 but tallied five runs to take a 5-2 lead. Shane Adams opened the inning with a single. Jason Galloway followed with another single before Axel Smith drove home Adams to make it 2-1.

David Daniels followed that with a fielder's choice that put out Galloway. Eric Jarman then drew a walk before McDonald smashed his triple to make it 4-2. Tom Moye followed that by scoring McDonald on a sacrifice fly.

The lead expanded to 6-2 when David Daniels hit a towering solo homer over the left centerfield fence to open the fifth inning.

After Rocky Mount narrowed the gap to 6-3 in the top of the seventh, Pitt pushed across three runs in the bottom of the inning to stretch it out to a 9-3 advantage.

Tom Moye had a two-run double and Ty Little added a RBI double to key the spurt in the seventh.

Rocky Mount made its move in the eighth, scoring three runs to pull within 9-6.

Tony Jacobs led off the top of the eighth with a single. One out later Mike Davis doubled. Donnie Bobbitt followed that by scoring both runners on a ground-rule double. Tim Wilson then reached on a single and Paul Strickland drew a walk to load the bases.

That ended the night for McDonald. Smith came on and gave up a single to Clint Rouse that scored Bobbitt. He then got two-straight strikeouts to end the threat and the inning.

That was as close as Rocky Mount would get. Pitt scored five runs in the Blue Jays Bang Long Ball

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

George Bell, who is a bona fide power hitter, hit another home run. Rance Mulliniks, who isn't, hit two. That was enough for the Toronto Blue Jays to defeat the Detroit Tigers 5-3 Wednesday night, snapping Jack Morris' nine-game winning streak.

"The home runs surprised me as much as anybody," said Mulliniks, who hit a solo homer to start the scoring in the first inning and a two-run shot in the seventh to give the Blue Jays a 5-2 lead.

"It just felt good to get a couple of hits and help the team win. I'm the kind of guy who hits a homer once in a while. I don't expect to do it on a regular basis."

Bell does. His fourth-inning homer tied the score 2-2 and was his 25th, tops in the majors.

The victory gave Toronto a one-game lead in the American League East over New York, which lost to Baltimore 4-0. Minnesota outslugged Cleveland 14-8 and leads the West by four games over Oakland, which defeated Kansas City 4-2. Elsewhere, it was Seattle 10, Chicago 7; Boston 8, Milwaukee 7; California 4, Texas 1.

Morris, 10-3, had won seven straight starts and hadn't been beaten since April 20. He said he couldn't get breaking pitches over to Mulliniks.

"He was pretty much sitting on the fastball," Morris said. "He's hit me pretty good over my career. You throw him a lousy pitch and he hits it out."

Winner John Cerutti gave up the three Detroit runs and seven hits in 6 2-3 innings, including Terry Harper's solo homer, for his fourth victory in his last five starts.

Toronto went ahead 3-2 in the sixth on Ernie Whitt's RBI single after Jesse Barfield was safe on a throwing error by third baseman Tom Brookers, took second on a wild pitch and went to third on Bell's grounder.

Orioles 4, Yankees 0

Baltimore scored all its runs with two out in the first inning when Cal Ripken, Eddie Murray and Ray Knight homered off Ron Guidry, 0-3. Meanwhile, Dave Schmidt, 8-1, making his fifth consecutive start after 20 relief appearances, pitched a three-hitter for the Orioles' fourth victory in 26 games and their first complete game at home.

Ripken, 1-for-10, hit his first home run in 10 games and 17th of the season. Murray followed with his 14th homer, his second hit in 15 trips — both homers — and his third RBI in 22 games. Knight, in a 1-for-21 slump, hit his eighth homer after Mike Young walked.

"I let them know when I came here that I used to be a starter and I was still interested in starting," said Schmidt, who didn't walk a batter and struck out six in lowering his ERA to 2.24. "But I didn't say, 'Hey, I want to start.' I was happy to have a job. I had just been released by the White Sox.

"The Orioles seemed set with their starters. I came here with one thing in mind — to give them another solid reliever."

Twins 14, Indians 8

Kent Hrbek's towering three-run homer capped a four-run fourth inning for Minnesota's 14th victory in 17 games. The Twins are 41-29, the first time they have been 12 games over .500 since May 1979.

Cleveland led 1-0 when loser Greg Swindell walked Al Newman to start the Minnesota fourth. Kirby Puckett's single and a walk loaded the bases. After Tom Brunansky's sacrifice fly tied the game, Hrbek hit his 17th home run into the right-field upper deck.

Mel Hall's two-run triple in the fifth pulled Cleveland within 4-3. But in the bottom of the inning, Puckett's RBI triple and Gary Gaetti's sacrifice fly made it 6-3. Gaetti's two-run double highlighted a three-run seventh and Minnesota broke it open with five runs in the eighth, including a two-run single by Sal Butera and a two-run double by Newman.

Athletics 4, Royals 2

Curt Young and Dennis Eckersley combined on a five-hitter and Mike Davis drove in three runs with two singles. Young, 9-4, pitched seven innings and allowed four hits, losing his shutout on Juan Beniquez' two-run homer in the seventh.

Kansas City's Danny Jackson, 3-10, became the first 10-game loser in the majors. He allowed four runs and eight hits in 5 2-3 innings.

Mark McGwire and Jose Canseco opened the Oakland second with singles. McGwire went to third on Ron Cey's fly ball and scored on Davis' single. McGwire started the sixth with a single and Canseco singled him to third. Davis singled them home and later scored on Stan Javier's suicide squeeze.

Mariners 10, White Sox 7

Alvin Davis led the Seattle attack with a three-run homer and RBI double to back Mark Langston's ninth victory. By winning for the eighth time in their last 10 starts, the Mariners moved into a virtual tie with Kansas City in the AL West, 4 1/2 games behind Minnesota. The White Sox lost for the 19th time in 24 games. Leading 2-1, Ken Phelps and Jim Presley opened the Seattle fourth with singles and Davis hit Richard Dotson's first pitch for his fifth home run of the season. Mike Kingery followed with his fourth homer to make it 6-1 and chase Dotson.

Red Sox 8, Brewers 7

Switch-hitting Todd Benzinger drove in the first four runs of his major-league career with two bases-loaded singles, one from each side of the plate, and Wade Boggs extended his hitting streak to 25 games with a single and a homer.

Angels 4, Rangers 1

Don Sutton held Texas to three hits in seven innings and tied Gaylord Perry for 12th place on baseball's all-time victory list with 314. Pitching in 91-degree heat, the 42-year-old Sutton struck out four and walked one before DeWayne Buice went the last two innings for his fifth save.

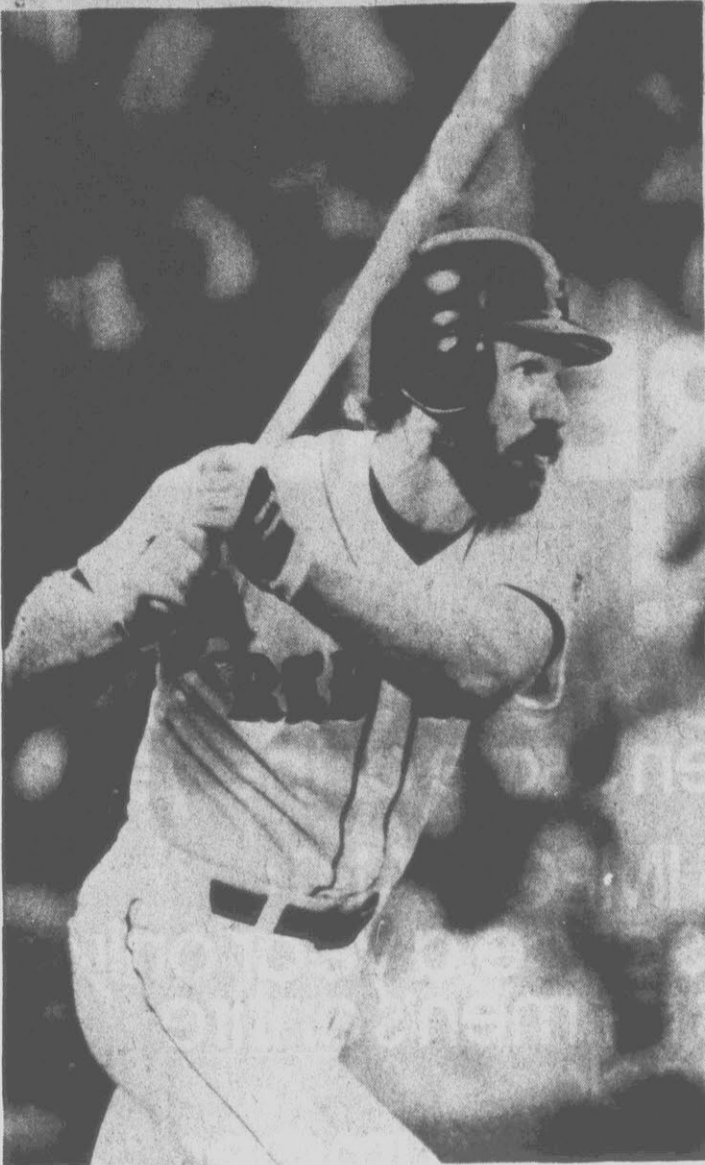

Overtons, Sparkys Post Victories

Overtons and Sparkys took wins in Wednesday action from the Barnhill Summer Basketball League.

Overton's Sports defeated Sam and Dave's Snack Bar by a score of 81-56. Overton's was led by Keyford Langley with 16 points. Sam and Dave's was led by William Morning with 17 points.

In the second game, Sparky's topped Mast Drugs, 88-82. Phil Medlin led Sparky's with 27 while Will Thompson led Mast with 24.

Davis' Speed Keys Reds' Win

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

After burning up the National League with his hitting in the first two months of the season, Cincinnati's Eric Davis is now burning opponents with his speed.

"When you've got speed, a lot of things can happen," San Francisco Manager Roger Craig said Wednesday after watching the fleet-footed outfielder score the winning run in Cincinnati's 5-4, 10-inning victory.

Davis, who has tailed off at the plate powerwise in June with only three homers after hitting a National-League-record 19 in the first two months, scored the winning run after an errant pickoff throw to first base.

It was the second time this month that Davis had beaten the Giants with his legs. On June 8, Davis dashed home with the winning run from first base on a 400-foot single by Dave Parker.

Elsewhere, it was Pittsburgh 9, Montreal 6; New York 2, Chicago 1; St. Louis 5, Philadelphia 3; Houston 12, San Diego 7 and Los Angeles 5, Atlanta 4 in 10 innings.

Davis led off the 10th with a single off reliever Scott Garrelts, 5-5. He went to third when Garrelts threw away a pickoff attempt and scored when first baseman Will Clark bobbled the ball in the right-field bullpen.

"You've got to do what you have to do to win," Davis said. "When the ball got away at first base, I just took off."

"I'm just running in that situation," he said. "There's really no time to think. I can't run and think at the same time, anyway."

The Giants had tied the game in the ninth on Robby Thompson's suicide squeeze, but winner John Franco, 4-1, pitched out of further trouble by getting Jeffrey Leonard on a liner to short and striking out Clark with two runners on base.

Pirates 9, Expos 6

Pitcher Brian Fisher hit a three-run homer and R.J. Reynolds and Barry Bonds added solo home runs as Pittsburgh ended a three-game losing streak with a victory over Montreal.

Fisher, 4-4, allowed nine hits and two runs in five innings as he won his second straight start. His second three-run homer of the season came in the second inning came off Jeff Fischer, 0-1, and gave Pittsburgh a 5-1 lead.

"I'm not a hitter," Fisher said. "He threw it where I was swinging, it hit the bat and went out."

It resulted in Fisher's first career curtain call. He pumped his fist in the air to the cheers of a crowd of 21,564 at Three Rivers Stadium. Reynolds hit his fourth homer off Lary Sorensen in the fifth and Bonds hit Tim Burke's first pitch of the sixth inning over the right-field wall for his 10th.

Andres Galarraga and Tim Wallach led the Expos with two RBI apiece. Galarraga included a solo homer in his night's work while Wallach hit a sacrifice fly in the seventh and an RBI double in a two-run ninth to extend his hitting streak to 12 games.

Mets 2, Cubs 1

Bill Almon's bases-loaded single in the ninth inning lifted New York over Chicago.

The Mets filled the bases against reliever Lee Smith, 2-5, with one out on singles by Kevin McReynolds and Howard Johnson and a walk to Dave Magadan. Almon, acquired from Pittsburgh last month and just 2-for-16 with the Mets, then bounced a 1-2 pitch cleanly up the middle.

Roger McDowell, 4-2, pitched the ninth for the victory. New York was out 12-8, but still ended the Cubs' three-game winning streak.

The Cubs went into the eighth inning with a 1-0 lead but the Mets tied the game on an RBI single by Mookie Wilson.

Cardinals 5, Phillies 3

Terry Pendleton hit a two-run homer with two outs in the eighth inning, powering St. Louis over Philadelphia, despite Mike Schmidt's 512th career homer.

Pendleton's homer, his fifth of the season and second in 10 games, followed Willie McGee's two-out single. The homer off Mike Jackson, 1-6, snapped a tie that Schmidt created in the top of the eighth with his 17th homer of the season. Schmidt's homer moved him into a tie in 11th place on baseball's all-time home run list with Hall of Famers Eddie Matthews and Ernie Banks.

Todd Worrell, 2-3, checked the Phillies after Schmidt homered, to pick up the victory. By winning, St. Louis increased its lead in the NL East to 4 1-2 games over the Chicago Cubs.

Astros 12, Padres 7

Jose Cruz hit a two-out, three-run double in the seventh inning as Houston rallied to beat San Diego.

The Astros trailed 5-0 after two innings but rallied for six runs in the fifth, when they sent 10 men to the plate. San Diego tied the score in the bottom of the sixth on John Kruk's RBI single.

Cruz's double gave the Astros a 9-6 lead, and Houston added three runs in the ninth.

Larry Andersen, 5-3, the fourth Astros' pitcher, pitched the final 3 2-3 innings for the victory. Lance McCullers, 3-5, was the loser.

Dodgers 5, Braves 4

Mike Marshall's third hit of the game, a bases-loaded single in the 10th inning, lifted Los Angeles over Atlanta.

Tournament Winners

Elaine Johnson and Loretta Anderson won the championship flight of the Annual Tennis Member Guest Tournament held at Brook Valley Country Club June 20-21. Other tournament winners included the second place team of Sylvia Briley and Maria Perry.

Central Committee Opens Economic Meeting

By ANDREW KATELL
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party leadership today opened a plenary meeting to discuss Kremlin leader Mikhail Gorbachev's plans to loosen central control over the huge state-run economy.

Gorbachev addressed the plenum of the party's Central Committee, according to the news agency Tass, but there was no word on what he said. Soviet radio and television did not carry the speech live.

Tass said the principal item on the agenda was "the party's tasks in fundamentally restructuring management of the economy."

There have been widespread rumors of high-level resistance to Gorbachev's plans. At the last Central Committee meeting, in January, the Communist Party general secretary ran into opposition on some of his proposals for altering the one-candidate system of national and party elections.

In its session at the Kremlin, the 300-plus members of the Central Committee are also expected to remove Sergei L. Sokolov, the former defense minister, from his non-voting seat on the ruling Politburo.

Sokolov, 75, was retired from his military post on May 30, two days after a West German teen-ager flew through hundreds of miles of Soviet airspace in a light plane, buzzed the Kremlin and landed in Moscow's Red Square.

The announced topics on the meeting's agenda include a draft law that takes into account profit and consumer demand, frees factories to make more decisions and limits interference by ministries in their day-to-day affairs.

Gorbachev said this month that the law is only the first of many proposed measures that include a new pricing system and a revamped role for Gosplan, the state planning commission.

The Central Committee sessions, held twice yearly, normally prompt many rumors on personnel changes. Under the Soviet system, the Central Committee approves policies and names people to the Politburo, the inner circle of Soviet leadership.

The plenum is expected to indicate whether Geidar A. Aliev, a Politburo member who has not been seen publicly in past weeks, has fallen from favor.

The 64-year-old Aliev has served on the Politburo since March 1976, and was the last man to rise to the ruling body under the patronage of Leonid I. Brezhnev.

If Aliev is dropped from the 11-man body, he will become the fifth full, or voting, Politburo member ousted since Gorbachev became Communist Party leader in March 1985.

Another possible top-level change could be the voluntary departure of President Andrei A. Gromyko, the 77-year-old former foreign minister who is rumored to have suffered health problems this year.

Gromyko may still serve as a foreign policy adviser, but his influence has waned since he was moved to the ceremonial post of president two years ago. Some Western diplomats contend he is uncomfortable with some of Gorbachev's reform campaigns.

In recent weeks, state-run Soviet media has devoted considerable attention to the nation's economic problems. But Gorbachev faces a complicated task in trying to change the centralized management practices that date back to the rule of Josef Stalin, according to Vilen Ivanov, director of the Institute for Sociological Research.

"It is one thing to allow a firm to be openly shown throughout the country — only a bold decision is required. It is quite another thing to switch entire branches of the economy to a real self-accounting system," Ivanov wrote in the weekly Moscow News.

Oil Minister Sees No OPEC Role In Keeping Gulf Open

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Iran's oil minister said at the start of an OPEC meeting today that the cartel could play no role in keeping the Persian Gulf open to oil shipping.

Asked by reporters about Western concerns about attacks on commercial shipping by war rivals Iran and Iraq, Gholamreza Aghazadeh said, "In OPEC it doesn't have any impact."

"We are here to discuss (oil prices), not the tanker wars," he said through an interpreter as the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries began its regular summer conference.

His Iraqi counterpart, Issam Abdul Raheem al-Chalabi, also said he saw no role for OPEC in the debate over freedom of gulf shipping.

In reviewing the oil outlook for the rest of the year, the 13 OPEC ministers were expected to reaffirm their current strategy of limiting production in order to keep prices at about $18 dollars a 42-gallon barrel.

"The minimum price of $18 will remain," Aghazadeh said.

After an opening address by Nigerian Oil Minister Rilwanu Lukman, who was quickly reelected OPEC president, the oil chiefs recessed their first session to attend a luncheon hosted by the Austrian government.

Lukman told the other ministers they should be pleased with the return of stability to world oil markets after the cartel's decision last December to reimpose production quotas and set fixed prices for their oil.

"Prices have undergone a strong recovery," he said. "Needless to say this is a deeply satisfying development for OPEC."

Despite what he called "minor problems," the cartel could look forward to continued stability in the months ahead, he added.

Analysts, however, said the oil market was showing some signs of losing confidence in OPEC's ability to stick to its strategy.

Peter Gignoux, an analyst at the London office of the investment firm Shearson Lehman Brothers, said the cartel's unity could be cracked by political disputes such as the Iran-Iraq war.

"The problem in a nutshell is that anytime you get 13 oil ministers together under one roof you're asking for trouble," he said.

The chief point of debate was expected to be whether to permit small increases in members' oil production starting July 1, and whether to sanction further increases in the final three months of this year.

These increases had been planned as part of OPEC's agreement last December to reimpose limits on each member's production. Before that accord, prices had fallen to below $10 a barrel because of OPEC's unrestrained production.

Mana Saeed Oteiba, the oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, said Wednesday he felt sure OPEC would agree to implement the production increases and retain the $18 price.

"We have the December agreement, and we have to stick to it," he said. Some members, including Iran, had said before the Vienna conference that they would like OPEC to delay any production increases in order to boost prices.

Oil analysts said OPEC was unlikely to face any major problems if it increased its output ceiling, as envisioned last December, to 16.6 million barrels a day July 1 from the current limit of 15.8 million barrels daily, even though some members are exceeding their quotas.

"Prices could even firm a little," said Fergus MacLeod, an analyst who was observing the meeting for the investment firm of Barclays de Zoete Wedd of London. He said prices would be supported by a summer rise in oil demand.

Vatican Vigil Held

WASHINGTON (AP) — A vigil by American Jews and supporters outside the Vatican embassy today was timed to coincide with Pope John Paul II's meeting with Austrian President Kurt Waldheim, who has been accused of complicity in Nazi war crimes.

The vigil was organized by the Los Angeles-based Simon Wiesenthal Center, dedicated to the study of the Holocaust and of anti-Semitism.

"The pope is a moral leader," said Rabbi Marvin Hier, dean of the center. "What he has done (in granting an audience to Waldheim) is not an act of morality."

About 50 people, including Reps. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., and Mel Levine, D-Calif., were on hand as the vigil began Wednesday night. Participants lit six candles in memory of the six million Jews who died in the Holocaust.

Waldheim, who denies any involvement in Nazi crimes, was in Rome for what the Vatican described as a legitimate meeting with a democratically elected head of state.

Entertainer Jackie Gleason Dies

By WILL LESTER
Associated Press Writer
LAUDERHILL, Fla. (AP) — Jackie Gleason, the hard-living "Great One" who gilded television's Golden Age with "The Honey-mooners," capturing humor in a blustering bus driver's endless quest for the American Dream, has died of cancer at age 71.

The rotund comedian, who earned an Oscar nomination for his serious role as pool player Minnesota Fats in the 1961 film "The Hustler" but never won an Emmy for television despite his popularity as bus driver Ralph Kramden, died Wednesday at his home in this Fort Lauderdale suburb. He had been released from a Fort Lauderdale hospital last Thursday after a month of treatment for what spokesmen said were complications from medicine taken for his diabetes. "He was feeling in good spirits Monday and Tuesday. He quietly, comfortably passed away," said his wife, Marilyn.

Gleason, whose Falstaffian appetite for food, drink and cigarettes was legendary, was one of television's biggest draws from the 1950s to the 1970s, creating such characters as the Poor Soul, Reggie van Gleason III and Joe the Bartender.

As Ralph Kramden, he won laughs when he blew his stack at nitwit neighbor Ed Norton or turned to his wife, threatening, "Bang, zoom!" "To the moon, Alice" or "One of these days, Alice."

In later years, he had a recurring role as Sheriff Buford T. Justice in the "Smokey and the Bandit" movies and co-starred last year with Tom Hanks in the movie "Nothing in Common."

"I'm devastated," Audrey Meadows, who played caustic Alice Kramden on "The Honeymooners," said at the news of his death. "I feel terribly sad because he was a very close friend and brilliant performer."

"I always felt that somehow Jackie was indestructible, that he would be with us for a long, long time," she said today on the "CBS Morning News." And of course, he will, through the legacy of his work. ...

"He was bigger than life, larger than life. (A) kind, fun, very sensitive man, a dear man, and I shall miss him terribly. And my heart goes out to Marilyn," Meadows said.

Jane Kean, who first worked with Gleason in vaudeville and briefly played Norton's wife, Trixie, said Gleason "was a joy to work with."

"If anything at all happened wrong, if a line was skipped, he always covered for you. He didn't want to go back and tape again. His theory was that an audience would never laugh twice at the same joke."

"Jackie, who named himself 'The Great One,' truly was 'The Great One,'" said comedian Milton Berle.

"He was great on improvisation, impromptu and ad-libbing. He could run the gamut. He did everything. All I can tell you is that the world is going to be less happier, more sorrowful with Jackie gone."

Gleason's capacity for enjoying life was reflected in his trademark lines "How sweet it is!" and "And away we go!" He drove himself hard on and off the set, once breaking a leg on the air.

Producer David Susskind once said Gleason could "put away more scotch per square hour than any man alive," and Gleason's weight at one point ballooned to more than 280 pounds.

He admitted smoking up to six packs of cigarettes a day, and scarcely cut back after triple coronary bypass surgery in 1978. He also underwent artery bypass surgery on his legs in 1983, and suffered from emphysema and diabetes.

"You only live once," Gleason once said. "Let's live it up."

Gleason was born Herbert John Gleason on Feb. 26, 1916, in a cold-water Brooklyn flat, the son of an insurance auditor who vanished one night on the way home from work when Gleason was a child.

Gleason became enamored of show business during a class play, quit high school and got a job as master of ceremonies at a theater, taking home $4 a night.

He also hustled money at a pool hall, developing skills that helped bring him his Academy Award nomination, and worked as a carnival barker, daredevil driver, stunt diver, disc jockey and nightclub comedian.

Gleason appeared in the movies "The Navy Blues" and "Springtime in the Rockies" before taking roles in such Broadway plays as "Hellzapoppin'" and "Artists and Models."

His big break came in the new medium of television. After two years as the lead in "The Life of Riley," he was signed in 1950 to "Cavalcade of Stars," and two years later had his own show.

He became the top male television comedian of the day. In 1954, he signed contracts worth $16 million with CBS and an automobile company, guaranteeing $100,000 a year through 1972.

"The Honeymooners" began as a skit within a show and became a series from 1955 to 1956, with Art Carney as sewer worker Norton and Joyce Randolph as Trixie, the Kramdens' neighbors in a run-down tenement in Brooklyn.

It won raves from critics, and even though only 39 episodes were broadcast, it developed a following that persists three decades later.

"Ralph Kramden is a character that we might be getting from Mr. Dickens if he were writing for TV," novelist John O'Hara once said.

Gleason's Kramden was a bully who never hit, an aspiring big-shot who couldn't make the American dream square with Brooklyn reality. Gleason's face would glow like a jack o'lantern as he spun a new fantasy, inflate like a threatening bullfrog when Alice doubted, and sag like a punctured balloon when fortune eventually turned against him. But at the end he would always tell her, "Baby, you're the greatest."

"If you're doing situation comedy, you have to have the people like you," Gleason said in 1960. "That's what's probably wrong with the sitcoms today. There's no one you can really feel you want to like."

Two years ago, Gleason announced the discovery of 67 black-and-white episodes filmed live as part of "The Jackie Gleason Show" during the 1950s.

Gleason remained on television with his variety show from 1957-59. He returned to television in 1962 and broadcast the show under various names from Miami from 1964-70, backed by Sammy Spear's orchestra, the June Taylor Dancers and regular appearances by Frank Fontaine as the barfly Crazy Guggenheim.

He won a Tony Award for his performance in the Broadway musical "Take Me Along" in 1959. Opposite Paul Newman in "The Hustler," he was heaped with acclaim by surprised critics.

"He deserved a Tony and an Oscar and an Emmy, and that's something the industry is going to have to live with," Ms. Kean said.

Other movies included "Gigot," which Gleason also wrote and composed the music for, "Requiem for a Heavyweight," "All Through the Night," and "Don't Drink the Water."

Not everything he touched turned to gold. In 1961, he was host of a game show, "You're In the Picture." Gleason canceled it after just one week and spent the entire half hour the following week apologizing to viewers for "that bomb."

On the show, four celebrity panelists stuck their heads or hands through a big cutout of the sort used in amusement park photography booths and then asked Gleason questions until they could figure out what the picture represented.

Gleason's passions — besides food and drink — included golf and music. Though he couldn't read a note, he wrote the theme for his TV show, composed a ballet and recorded 38 albums with the Jackie Gleason Orchestra.

Gleason was married three times, the last time to Marilyn Taylor, the younger sister of his long-time TV choreographer.

Besides his wife, survivors include two daughters by his first wife, Genevieve Halford, a stepson and four grandchildren.

There will be a public viewing Friday and a private funeral Saturday.

Friends Remember Gleason

Jackie Gleason, the roly-poly bus driver with the get-rich-quick schemes and the heart of gold on "The Honeymooners," was remembered as a pleasure to work with and a huge talent with an appetite for living to match.

"Jackie, who named himself 'The Great One,' truly was 'The Great One,'" Milton Berle said after the comedian's death from cancer Wednesday at age 71.

"He was great on improvisation, impromptu and ad-libbing. He could run the gamut. He did everything. All I can tell you is that the world is going to be less happier, more sorrowful with Jackie gone."

Alice Ghostley, who appeared on "Jackie Gleason and His American Scene Magazine" in the early to mid-1960s, said he sent her a dozen roses every week during the two seasons they did a sketch called "Agnes and Arthur" on the variety show.

"He was the very best person I ever worked with. He was very kind and considerate," said Ms. Ghostley, who also played Esmeralda, the babysitting witch on television's "Bewitched."

Spies And Counterspies Featured In 2 Scheduled British Miniseries

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer
LONDON (AP) — The game is afoot this summer, as television cameras track spies, counterspies and moles from Mexico City's Presidential Palace to Berlin's Checkpoint Charlie.
Two British miniseries, based on spy thrillers by Len Deighton and John Le Carre, are in production for future broadcast.
"Game, Set and Match," a 13-hour series based on a trilogy by Deighton, is filming in Britain, West Germany and Mexico. It will not complete production until October and probably will open the 1988-89 season of "Mystery!" on public television in the United States.
"A Perfect Spy," which combines espionage with Le Carre's remembrances of his father, winds up filming in July. The seven-hour miniseries is expected to be first offering in the 1988-89 season for Mobil's "Masterpiece Theatre."

"By the time we finish 'Game, Set and Match' it will have taken four months longer than the first world war," said Brian Armstrong, who is producing for Granada Television International.
"We met with Deighton while he was still writing the books. It was simply a case of saying the books are marvelous, how about it? He wanted Granada to do it because he admired what we did with 'Jewel in the Crown' and 'Brideshead Revisited.' I believed he turned down a lot of money from Hollywood."
Armstrong said he wanted Deighton to write the screenplay based on his novels, "Berlin Game," "Mexico Set" and "London Match." But Deighton was already into the next trilogy, using the same characters.
Ian Holm stars in this epic story of treachery and betrayal, with much of the action taking place on either side of the Berlin Wall.
"We traveled 100,000 miles," said

Armstrong. "We filmed in the jungle near Acapulco and in Mexico City. We had 48 crewmen, about 10 in the cast and hired 12 to 15 Mexicans. We flew 9 1/2 tons of equipment from Manchester, England, to Mexico."
Armstrong also took his crew into Berlin for scenes at Checkpoint Charlie and along the wall. East German security guards sometimes stood virtually nose-to-nose with the actors doing their scenes. The cameraman had to be careful to keep them out of the picture.
"A Perfect Spy" tells the story of Rick T. Pym, a notorious con man, and his son, Magnus, who grows up to become a British secret agent and practice the deceit he learned from his father. Ray McAnally stars as the father and Peter Egan plays the son from the age of 21 to 53.
"This is the most personal book Le Carre's written," said Colin Rogers, who is producing the series for BBC. "Le Carre has made no secret that the central character is his own father. His father was a professional con man. He died about two or three years ago and he now feels able to write about him as a character."
The "Perfect Spy" series has a structure completely different from the book. The story in the book moves backward and forward, whereas the series progresses chronologically. It was filmed on location in England, Austria, Switzerland and Greece. In Austria, they took over an entire town and turned it into a Czechoslovakian village. "We couldn't very well film it in Czechoslovakia since the Czechs are the baddies," said Collins.
"Pym works for the British Secret Service, but he's also a Czech agent," he continued. "It's about how someone can become a traitor. Pym's father is outwardly charming, but he destroys people. Treachery becomes a way of life for Pym as he grows up. It's what he finds exciting."
Meanwhile, "The Bretts," a 13-hour chronicle of three generations of

Double Celebration

NEW YORK (AP) — Jazz man Dizzy Gillespie's 70th birthday isn't until Oct. 21, but he already has celebrated it twice this year.
Grammy award-winning trumpeter Wynton Marsalis, 25, paid tribute at a Carnegie Hall concert called "Young Master-Old Master: Wynton Marsalis Salutes Dizzy Gillespie on his 70th Birthday."
"Artists such as Dizzy — they reaffirm all the values we hold most high, like integrity, freedom and justice," Marsalis said at the JVC Jazz Festival sponsored by the Japanese electronics manufacturer.
Earlier this month, Gillespie was given a tribute at a Wolf Trap concert in Vienna, Va.
Gillespie, who filled the second half of Tuesday night's concert with his 19-piece big band, said, "It's a great honor and pleasure to be standing in front of such an assemblage of master musicians when I know I should be in the back," referring to the trumpet players in the last row.

Gleason Had Strong Impact On S. Fla.

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Jackie Gleason and his TV show entourage gave Miami Beach six years of showbiz glamour that changed the face of South Florida, tourism and business officials say.
"There was a tremendous impact when he came down here. People came from all over the country to see him," Norm Litz, head of the Miami Beach Convention Center, said after Gleason's death in nearby Lauderdale Wednesday at age 71.
Litz was the center's assistant manager when "The Great One" brought his comedy-variety show from New York before the start of the 1964-65 season.
It remained in Miami Beach for the rest of its run, until September 1970, first as "The Jackie Gleason Show: The American Scene Magazine," and later as simply "The Jackie Gleason Show."
Gleason was backed by Sammy Spear's Orchestra and the June Taylor Dancers, and cast regulars included Art Carney, Sheila MacRae and Frank Fontaine as barfly Crazy Guggenheim.
Each week, the country heard the famous introduction: "From the Fun and Sun Capital of the World, Miami Beach, it's the Jackie Gleason Show."
"People would see the show and think, 'Let's go down, maybe we'll see Jackie Gleason,'" recalled Doc Baker, then and now executive vice president of the Miami Beach Chamber of Commerce.
The stars who appeared on Gleason's show later ended up at local clubs for parties that lasted into the early morning hours. It added luster to the aging resort town, Litz said.

Florida allowed Gleason to indulge his favorite pastime, golf, all year round.
The comedian had visited Lantana on an invitation from golfing buddies, and liked Florida enough to do several segments of his short-lived talk show from the Biltmore Hotel in Palm Beach, said Ron Wayne, producer of "The Jackie Gleason Show."
"He was enamored with the idea of living down here and playing golf every day," Wayne said. "And Jackie's theme was, come on down. He loved Florida."
Gleason wanted to move but would negotiate only with the Miami Beach mayor himself, so then-Mayor Melvin Richard flew to New York.
After four hours of negotiations, the city agreed to spend $250,000 to refurbish the Miami Beach Auditorium. Gleason put in $300,000 more and promised to plug the resort during each show.
To this day, "People that come from out of town ask all the time if this is where Gleason did his show," said Litz.
Two years after Gleason's show left the air he was the host of pros, presidents and movie stars in a nationally televised gold tournament bearing his name at the Inverrary Country Club near here.
Gleason settled into the 14-room Glea Manor on the fringe of the course.

Copyright Violation

NEW YORK (AP) — Columbia Pictures improperly copied a popular poster that whimsically portrayed a New Yorker's parochial view of the world to advertise the movie "Moscow on the Hudson," a federal judge has ruled.
U.S. District Judge Louis L. Stanton said Wednesday the movie advertisement violated the copyright held by artist Saul Steinberg, who drew the work as a cover for the New Yorker magazine and reproduced it as a poster.
Stanton issued a summary judgment in Steinberg's lawsuit over the ad and set a Sept. 11 hearing date for damages.

The gorilla often relieves tension by beating on its chest. But all that this year-old lowland gorilla named Gordy could do was look petrified and hold on tight as a limousine recently speed him from the San Diego Zoo to a new home at the San Diego Wild Animal Park's gorilla enclosure. Gordy was only the second gorilla ever born at the zoo. He had to be hand raised because he didn't know how to nurse. His new home consists of eight other gorillas, including another baby.

made a delicate error in the play of the hand which cost dearly. Can you spot it?
North's rebid of two clubs was artificial and forcing. His heart raise set the suit and was a game force. With a minimum opening, South showed disinterest in slam, but cooperated by cue-bidding his diamond concentration after North ventured beyond game.
West led the eight of clubs and declarer ran it to the queen and king. After a successful heart finesse declarer cashed the ace in the hope of dropping the king. When that failed, he next tried for a 3-3 diamond break by ruffing in dummy. The last string to his bow was a ruffing finesse in spades. That, too, failed, and the result was down one.
Declarer's error came at the very first trick. Both the auction and West's choice of the eight of clubs as the opening lead made it unlikely that the lead was away from the queen. Therefore, declarer should have preserved his entries to hand by winning with the table's ace. Now declarer can come to hand with the king of diamonds for a trump finesse.
When the king of trumps does not drop under the ace, declarer can continue by cashing the ace of diamonds and ruffing a diamond. The 4-2 break doesn't faze him, because he can return to his hand by finessing the jack of clubs. When that holds, he can claim his contract. Another diamond ruff sets up the suit, and declarer can come to hand with a spade ruff to cash his minor-suit winners. West can ruff whenever he pleases, but declarer still has a trump to control matters and the slam is home.

Mother Feels Administration Did Little To Gain Extradition

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The mother of slain Navy diver Robert Stethem says she will be satisfied if West Germany lives up to its promise today not to free accused terrorist Mohammed Ali Hamadi, but she still believes the Reagan administration let her family down.

Patricia Stethem was assured directly today by Karl Paschke, minister of the West German embassy in Washington, that Hamadi will never be given clemency if he is convicted in West German courts of killing her son during the TWA hijacking in June 1985.

But Mrs. Stethem said neither President Reagan's call to her Wednesday nor Attorney General Edwin Meese's protestations today convinced her that the administration did all it could to have Hamadi extradited to face trial in the United States.

"The fact is that he is not extradited," she said on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" program. "They did not do enough."

West Germany on Wednesday rejected Reagan's request to extradite Hamadi, a 23-year-old Lebanese Shiite Moslem indicted in the United States on charges of air piracy and murder.

Meese said today that the administration is "satisfied" with that decision, even though the United States tried for six months to have Hamadi extradited.

"The question of whether Hamadi would be tried in the United States or here in Germany was entirely in the jurisdiction of Germany," he said in an interview from Bonn on NBC-TV's "Today" program. "I think they have the same determination to punish terrorism that we have."

The Stethem family is concerned that West Germany will eventually free Hamadi, as demanded by Lebanese terrorists who have threatened to kill two West German hostages unless he is released.

But Paschke, in an exchange with Mrs. Stethem broadcast today on ABC, said "the question of clemency is not considered."

"Does that mean that it will never happen?" Mrs. Stethem asked.

"That is correct," Paschke replied.

The family's complaints about administration failure to have Hamadi brought to the United States had prompted Reagan to call Mrs. Stethem on Wednesday.

But in an interview afterward with The Associated Press, she said, "I don't feel his effort was strong enough. I feel ... a top-notch effort would have gotten Hamadi here."

Presidential spokesman Marvin Fitzwater quoted Reagan as telling Mrs. Stethem that "we are cooperating with the German government on evidence to see that they get all they need for a conviction. Our prayers are with you."

Fitzwater also said that "I have never heard of any discussion of the (West German) hostages in connection with this case."

He quoted Reagan as saying, "I am confident the German government will fulfill its international legal obligations and Hamadi will get the justice he deserves."

But the murdered serviceman's sister, Sherry Sierralta, said West German interests are too different from those of the United States to ensure that Hamadi will be punished appropriately. And Stethem's brother, Navy Petty Officer 1st Class Kenneth J. Stethem said he was "extremely disappointed" with the developments.

Mrs. Stethem urged the administration to follow Hamadi's West German trial closely to "make sure that there are no deals" to release him.

In an interview in the Cologne Express newspaper, Gabriele Steck-Bromme, Hamadi's attorney in Frankfurt, said he was relieved at the government's decision because he knew West Germany's legal system.

Stethem, a U.S. Navy diver who was a passenger on the TWA airliner, was killed during the hijacking and 39 other Americans were held prisoner for 17 days.

Heavy Tourism Taxing On Soviet Facilities

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — Tourists are coming to Moscow in rising numbers this year and the city is having difficulty finding them places to stay.

"Sometimes the hotel situation is such that a person could travel all around the country but can't stay in Moscow, so we lose a client," said Vladimir B. Lebedev, head of the information department of Intourist, the government travel agency.

With a record number of foreigners choosing to vacation in the Soviet Union and two major Moscow hotels closed for repairs, the city's tourism facilities are booked to capacity.

Visitors who want to extend their stays often are turned down.

Nearly 2 million foreign tourists visited last year, a record number even though the Chernobyl nuclear accident April 26, 1986, discouraged many who feared radiation hazards.

Lebedev said an increase of at least 10 percent is expected this year because of what he called a pent-up interest and comparatively fewer concerns about terrorism in the Soviet Union.

The tourism growth could be higher if Intourist had more space in Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev, which are high on most visitors' lists, Lebedev said.

Irina Vershchova, also of the travel agency's information department, said an ambitious expansion program will increase by nearly 50 percent the number of hotel beds in Moscow over the next four years.

Construction began in early June on the first of four new hotels to be completed by 1990, she said.

However, the room situation may get worse before it gets better as another popular hotel in central Moscow, the National, closes in July for renovation.

The Metropol and Berlin hotels have been closed for more than a year.

Recent media articles have complained about inadequate capacity in the capital even for Soviet citizens.

The newsweekly Ogonyok said in May that Soviets who want to visit Moscow find it almost impossible to book hotel rooms. The labor newspaper Trud reported on June 12 that nearly half the rooms in Moscow are under Intourist or government management and therefore unavailable for ordinary Soviets.

About 60 percent of the foreigners who visit the Soviet Union each year are from Communist-governed countries, but that represents a drop from 80 percent over the past few years as Western interest has increased, said Nikolai N. Donskov, deputy director of Intourist's American department.

U.S. tourism to the Soviet Union took its biggest leap ever in 1985, when the number of visitors jumped 30 percent to about 100,000, he added.

The number of American visitors was down slightly last year because of Chernobyl, but is now rising, according to Lebedev.

Visits by Finns, West Germans, Britons and Japanese are also climbing from year to year, and more consistently than among the Americans whose travel patterns seem to ebb and flow with the political climate, Donskov said.

The number of U.S. tourists neared 100,000 in 1978 and 1979, but the U.S. boycott of the Moscow Olympics in 1980 led to a sharp drop over the following five years, Donskov said.

Some American visitors say that in comparison with the costs of traveling in Western Europe, many Soviet trips are a bargain.

"One reason we came on this trip was that it was quite reasonable," said Carli Richard of Duluth, Minn., who took part in a two-week tour of Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union for less than $1,700 for airfare, hotels and meals.

The cost of Soviet tourism can vary broadly depending on group size and quality of accommodation.

Intourist's style is to have most foreign tourists arrive in large groups that are shuttled around in buses, fed together at restaurants closed to Soviets and housed in spartan hotels.

Soviet Elections See Ties Galore

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union's first test of multiple-candidate elections produced numerous ties, and runoffs will have to be held, according to media reports today.

The Communist Party daily Pravda and the official news agency Tass said that according to results from Sunday's elections for local governing councils, runoffs will have to be held in 59 constituencies because of the ties.

It was not clear how many districts hosted multiple-candidate elections. The government newspaper Izvestia has said that in "several thousand" of the country's 52,000 districts, voters were given a choice.

Even though there was more than one candidate on some ballots, the Communist Party still maintained control of the contenders. The nomination procedure was controlled by the party, the only political organization in the country, and most of the candidates running for local government positions were either party members or people whose political activity was approved by the party.

Most of the multiple-candidate contests presented voters with a list of candidates slightly larger than the number of seats. Even the losers earn a place in the political process. Those who garner the least votes "will remain in the reserve," taking part in the work of the local councils and voting on some advisory matters, Tass said.

During a party Central Committee plenum in January, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev called for multiple-candidate elections for some government posts, such as the local Soviet positions up for election Sunday.

The multiple-candidate races were referred to as experimental but there was no word what criteria would be used to decide if the procedure was a success.

The balloting in the 15 Soviet republics was to elect 2.3 million deputies to 52,000 district, city and regional governing councils.

Tass said 98,081,097 voters, or 99.01 percent of those eligible, cast ballots in the Russian republic, the Soviet Union's largest. Voter turnout was lowest, according to a Tass breakdown, in the Baltic republic of Estonia, where the figure was 97.58 percent.

Pravda said the runoff elections will be held in at least six Soviet republics.

INADVERTENT ENGINE SHAMPOO

In previous columns, we always stressed the importance of using only the recommended solutions in automatic windshield washer containers. The reasons were primarily for keeping the windshield clean as well as ice-free during winter driving. Here's a letter from a non-believer who learned the hard way.

"Tell your readers to NEVER use anything but approved windshield washer fluid in their systems. I used a small amount of dishwasher liquid in mine and after I drove about 100 miles, the engine died. I raised the hood and found the engine compartment full of...would you believe soap suds? The heat and vibration had produced enough suds to wash the dinner dishes and had shorted out the ignition.

I could have been in bad trouble in heavy traffic, but all I got was delayed and irritated at myself. I thought I'd pass this on to others who might have similar bright ideas."

Woman Makes Contest Entries Serious Business

MARYANN MROWCA

Associated Press Writer

WAUSAU, Wis. (AP) — An antiques dealer has turned a phrase into a profitable proposition.

Helen D. Hering, 66, of Wausau, who has been writing jingles and essays for 21 years, on Wednesday accepted the latest of nearly 400 contest awards — a $1,000 check for explaining why tobacco ads should be allowed in magazines.

"I could make a living at it actually, if there were more contests," she said. "But I wouldn't want to depend on it for a living because that would take the joy out of it."

Mrs. Hering began penning jingles, essays and explanations in 25 words or less in 1956, when she found herself pregnant and unable to go to work at the clothing store in which she was a partner.

Her first prize was $10 for completing the last line of a Lipton Tea jingle — "And I was so thrilled that I went out and bought myself a nice leather suitcase."

Mrs. Hering estimated she has won about half the contests she has entered, and collected about $25,000 in cash and prizes over the years.

"It's fun, but you have to take it seriously if you want to get anywhere," she said. "I mainly look at the prizes and if there's anything I like, I go for it."

Her most treasured prize is a yellowed telegram from the late television star Ed Sullivan notifying her that she had won a four-door Mercury Monterey for writing the winning last line — "Trendsetter in Size, Style, Safety" — of a jingle for a new car commercial.

Mrs. Hering said a correspondence course in essay writing for contests taught her "little tricks," like inner rhymes and alliteration to make the words stand out with the judges. She also recommends "sticking to the point" and "being sincere."

In a contest sponsored by Gleem toothpaste, Mrs. Hering completed the phrase "If I win a trip to Hollywood I will pack Gleem, toothpaste for adults, in my suitcase because" with the answer "all star" Gleem's pitching strikes out cavities, yellowcoats, and foulies (bad breath)

— a triple-play scoring the winning hit in my game of self confidence."

Essay and jingle contests were more popular in the 1960s and 1970s, when Mrs. Hering often found herself working on several simultaneously.

"Now, you're lucky if you find three or four a year," said Mrs. Hering, who dislikes sweepstakes drawings.

The prizes, however, have become more expensive than the power lawnmower, perfumes and wrist watches she once collected. Among her recent prizes, Mrs. Hering counted a trip to Washington from Domino sugar, $1,000 from Kellogg's breakfast cereals and $2,500 from Plymouth cars.

She said she put a special, three-week effort into her latest winning entry, a 1,665-word essay for Philip Morris Inc.'s magazine, because she strongly opposes restrictions on magazine advertising.

"I believe so strongly in freedom of press and freedom of expression," she said.

Lots of big-bank bankers think of your deposits as their money. It isn't.

At First Federal, you don't have to jump through hoops for a consumer loan. We're happy to help.

Some of the bigger banks are so big that their consumer loan officers don't remember where the money came from. That's not a problem at First Federal.

Since First Federal offices are located right here in Pitt County, we fully realize that the money we make available for consumer loans comes from the deposits you make with us.

Consequently, when you need a consumer loan for a car, boat, vacation or whatever, we make an extra effort to see that you get the loan you need, the terms you want and the best rates around. As quickly and efficiently as possible. That's our job.
