TRUTH IN PREFERENCE TO FICTION

AIRPORT CONSTRUCTION — A worker uses heavy machinery to flatten the ground at Pitt-Greenville Airport, where contractors are making $130,000 worth of improvements to the facility's parking lot. Airport Parking Lot Expansion To Be Completed In 3 Weeks

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Paved parking spaces at Pitt-Greenville Airport will be increased from 64 to 271 spots when a $130,000 construction project at the facility is completed in about three weeks, according to James G. Turcotte, airport manager.

"The first thing the contractors did was to cut in a new access road," Turcotte said of the project which began on June 22. "It'll take approximately 30 days.

"It is a pretty short duration, and so far it looks like we're going to get a good job out of it."

The airport is providing temporary parking while the work is under way, according to Turcotte, who said some minor problems have arisen.

"We know and understand we have a parking problem, but we're trying to leave as many spaces open for as long as we can," he said. "We have a temporary lot on the left, and we're trying to work around the contractors.

"The problem that we encounter is when the contractors get to a point and they want some cars moved. We don't know the owners and they may be gone for three or four weeks. Then I have to get someone to relocate the cars on the field. It's going to be a real hassle for the next few weeks. I just hope people will be patient with us."

The $130,000 project will allow for additional growth when it is completed, according to Turcotte, who said airport officials have been using the money economically.

"Once we're finished then we'll be in real good shape," he said. "We've been able to keep the cost down. The city of Greenville is doing the engineering for us. The $130,000 includes utility relocation, relocating some fencing and adding new fencing."

The new parking facilities separate general aviation — the business, corporate and private flyers — parking from the air carrier parking, Turcotte said.

Meanwhile, Turcotte said the airport still has no immediate plans to implement parking fees.

"There will be no fees until it is economically feasible," he said. "Our posture is we're going to hold off as long as we can just so people will be acclimated to flying out of this airport."

While construction is under way, drivers should be prepared for the inconvenience, Turcotte said.

"I would advise them to leave their cars in the temporary lot and not leave it on the existing asphalt because all of the existing asphalt we have except for a very small section will be reworked," Turcotte said.

"We know it is going to be an inconvenience, but if they could just drive up and drop their bags off and then go park the car, the temporary parking will be no problem at all. But if they're parked on the asphalt, I've got a real problem because we've got to get in there."

The demand for increased parking is indicative of the airport's recent growth, according to Turcotte.

"We apologize for the inconvenience, but after it all we'll be better off. That's just the price of progress," he said. "The area in which we've got temporary parking would be no farther to walk than (passengers) did if they drove to Raleigh or some place else.

"We're just used to parking and walking maybe 10 feet to the building. We've been a little bit spoiled out here, and I think that's good. We want to spoil our passengers. We want them to feel good about us. I'm just asking them to bear with us. It won't be too long."

Chun Ally Backs Direct Elections

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The head of the ruling party, in a stunning turnabout, demanded today that President Chun Doo-hwan accept the "people's will" and agree to direct presidential elections to end huge anti-government protests.

Roh Tae-woo, head of the Democratic Justice Party and Chun's main political ally, said he would resign his chairmanship and candidacy for president if his demands for reforms were not met.

The oppositon immediately hailed the statement, and leading dissident Kim Dae-jung called for formation of an interim government to oversee national affairs until Chun steps down in February.

A presidential spokesman said Chun would make a decision "soon" on Roh's demands, after they are adopted by the Democratic Justice Party as its official platform. The party immediately issued a statement saying its lawmakers fully supported Roh.

Twenty-eight members of the party's Central Executive Council later tendered their resignations to show their support for Roh and give him a free hand in reorganizing the party. Officials said a reshuffle of party posts was expected.

"The people are the masters of their country and the people's will must come before everything else," Roh said in an announcement to the nation released after a party meeting.

He said he backed other key opposition demands, such as press freedom, greater autonomy for local governments, restoration of rights for Kim Dae-jung, who is barred from taking part in politics, and the release of people arrested in the protests that have swept the country since June 10.

Reacting to the news, Kim Dae-jung called for a new Cabinet representing the government, the opposition and independent.

"President Chun cannot but accept the proposal," he said of Roh's statement. "Otherwise, he would face a serious catastrophe."

The National Coalition for a Democratic Constitution said Roh's announcement "has opened a new bright chapter in our national history."

The coalition launched an anti-government campaign on June 10, the day the Democratic Justice Party nominated Roh, Chun's hand-picked successor, to be its presidential candidate.

Riots broke out on that day in Seoul and other cities as people poured into the streets to demand the fall of the Chun government and direct presidential elections. Sunday was the first day of peace in 2½ weeks of demonstrations.

The government had repeatedly ruled out accepting demands for direct presidential elections and other major political reforms, and Roh's announcement was greeted with astonishment.

People stood on street corners today reading extra newspaper editions announcing the statement. Others listened to special bulletins on portable radios and car radios.

Gaston J. Sigur Jr., the U.S. assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific Affairs, told ABC's Good Morning America today: "I think this is extremely encouraging, and I think it is a kind of a breakthrough."

High-Rise Fire Kills 3 In India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Fire raged through a high-rise office building in New Delhi today, trapping more than 300 people on upper floors for several hours. Hospital officials said three people were killed and 80 injured.

Firefighters rigged a rope and bamboo bridge between the burning building and a partially built high-rise nearby and led some people to safety. Others were guided down the burning building's staircases. Many emerged crying and choking from smoke.

Hospital officials said three people were killed in the blaze, including one person who burned to death and another that witnesses said fell from a fire ladder.

Fifteen people were hospitalized, most because of smoke inhalation, the hospital officials said. Another 65 people were treated for minor injuries and released, the officials reported.

The fire in the 11-story Ansal Bhavan building began at about 10:30 a.m. It was declared under control about five hours later.

H.K.L. Kapur, New Delhi's lieutenant government, told reporters at the scene that between 300 and 400 people were rescued from the roof and upper stories of the building. Kapur said it was believed that no one else was inside the building, but that firefighters and police began a room-by-room search after the fire was brought under control.

Six women were lifted off the roof by air force helicopters before operations were suspended for fear the rotors would fan the flames.

Asked what caused the fire, Kapur said: "At this point I don't rule out anything ... But it most probably was caused by an electrical short-circuit."

The fire apparently started on the sixth floor and worked its way upwards.

"There was a power failure and I saw smoke coming out just after that," Said G.S. Gill, an office worker rescued from the sixth floor.

Pradeep Gupta, 25, who worked on the sixth floor, said: "I saw the smoke, and there was panic. All of us ran to the top floor, to the roof."

U.S. Steps Out With French Fries

By CARL HARTMAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — After creating a world market for pizza, the U.S. government is now taking a major role in the international promotion of french-fried potatoes.

Neither the Italians nor the French, who also make a pizza-like dish called pissaladiere, seem to offer much competition. For the Americans, the Far East is the big target.

"Fast food restaurants in Japan like to sell and promote french fries," reports Jonathan Gressel, a marketing specialist in the U.S. Agriculture Department.

"They are inexpensive to serve and they carry a high mark-up which has increased with the value of the yen. Restaurants can offer specials or discounts at little or no expense," Gressel said in an interview last week.

Both U.S. and Japanese franchise restaurants such as McDonald's and Japan's own Lotteria group have promoted them. The main raw material is American frozen potatoes.

These are russet Burbank potatoes, which produce a long, gold-colored french fry. Gressel said the Japanese prefer them to french fries from other types of potato, which are often shorter and dark brown because of a high sugar content.

Japan grows potatoes, too, and im-

Speakers commended the professional and educational leadership efforts of Clifton W. Everett, chairman of the board of trustees of Pitt Community College, at the dedication ceremony of the Clifton W. Everett Building on the campus Sunday.

The dedicatory speaker, retired N.C. Supreme Court Justice Joseph W. Branch, said of Everett, "His every educational endeavor and his actions as a lawyer reflect an inquiring mind, a quest for excellence, a sense of duty to the state and to his fellow man ... (which have) stamped his life an accomplishment and a success.

"To all the students who come here, he should be an inspiration," Branch said.

Everett has served as a member of the board of trustees at PCC since 1962 and as chairman of the board since 1977.

The $2.2 million Everett Building will serve as a Learning Resources Center for PCC, housing the college's library, learning center and small business center. The 34,747-square-foot building opened in April.

Charles McLawhorn, chairman of the Pitt County commissioners, said the commissioners "were happy to be able to assist in the funding and are pleased to celebrate the dedication of this building" in Everett's name.

Pro-Israeli Funds Favor Sanford

By The Associated Press

Sen. Terry Sanford received more contributions from pro-Israel groups during the 1986 election than any other member of the North Carolina congressional delegation, an analysis shows.

The analysis of federal election records shows that Sanford accepted $80,000 in campaign gifts from groups that support Israel. Only 12 other members of the Senate raised more money from supporters of Israel than Sanford in their last campaigns.

In the 1986 election, Sanford's Republican opponent, Jim Broyhill, received no money from pro-Israel groups.

"Political contributions have never affected Terry Sanford's position on issues," said Sanford's press secretary Tom Lawton. "He's been a supporter of the state of Israel since Harry Truman recognized it in 1948."

Republican U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms has accepted $3,500 from Israel backers in the last six years, and ranks 72nd among the 100 senators.

On the House side, 6th District Rep. Howard Coble of Greensboro accepted $7,750 from the Israel lobby, while his Democratic opponent, Robin Britt, collected $2,350.

In the 5th District, Winston-Salem Democrat Steve Neal accepted $6,000 from Israel supporters, while his GOP opponent, Stuart Epperson, got no such gifts.

Former Republican Rep. Bill Cobey of Chapel Hill received $12,000 from groups that support Israel, compared with $4,150 received by Rep. David Price, the Democrat who won the 4th District seat last year.

The other members of the North Carolina congressional delegation who received money last year from PACS that support Israel are: Rep. Alex McMillan, R-9th, $16,000; Rep. Cass Ballenger, R-10th, $9,250; Rep. Martin Lancaster, D-3rd, $9,500; and Rep. Charlie Rose, D-7th, $6,800.

Fireworks Demand Safety

The Fourth of July brings thoughts of fireworks. And fireworks often cause eye injuries.

The American Academy of Ophthalmology has established a national reporting system to collect information on fireworks eye injuries.

Of the 659 cases reported in 1985, more than 40 percent caused permanent eye damage. Almost 25 percent of the injured, mostly children, either had an eye destroyed or lost some sight.

The National Society to Prevent Blindness, North Carolina affiliate, warns against the use of fireworks. It reminds that the state of North Carolina bans all fireworks, but points out that almost as many injuries occur in states with fireworks laws as without.

It recommends the following guidelines for those who insist on using fireworks:

- Allow only adults to discharge fireworks. Even "safe" fireworks like sparklers can be a danger to children.
- Read and follow all instructions and warning labels.
- Use fireworks only outdoors in a clear area away from homes, buildings and combustible materials.
- Be sure that other people are all out of range before lighting fireworks.
- Keep water nearby for emergencies and for dousing malfunctioning fireworks.
- Never handle or attempt to relight a firework that does not go off. Soak it thoroughly before discarding.
- Never ignite fireworks in a container. Glass or metal containers can easily be shattered.
- Anyone using fireworks should wear eye protection — safety goggles or spectacles with sideshields.
- Store fireworks only in cool dry places.
- Should an eye injury occur, call for emergency assistance as quickly as possible. A physician should check all eye injuries.

Lawyer Says East Family Still Considering Possibility Of Suit

By The Associated Press

A year after Sen. John East, apparently depressed over medical treatment he received from Navy doctors, killed himself in his Greenville home, family members still are considering legal action in connection with his death, a lawyer for the family says.

James A. Hourihan, a lawyer with the Washington firm of Hogan and Hartson, said East's family and lawyers in his firm were reviewing the circumstances of East's death and possible courses of action.

"No decisions have been made," he said.

He declined to discuss the family's feelings about legal action or who might be named as possible defendants. East's wife, Priscilla, was not available for comment.

Sources in Washington and Greenville said Mrs. East sought legal advice last year about the possibility of a lawsuit, the News and Observer of Raleigh reported.

East's death by carbon monoxide poisoning last June 29 followed his hospitalization in April 1985 at the Bethesda Naval Hospital near Washington for treatment of a thyroid condition.

Former associates said East had complained that the condition, hypothyroidism, had not been diagnosed earlier. The condition, in which the thyroid gland fails to produce enough hormones that regulate metabolism, could cause modest depression if untreated, specialists on thyroid conditions said.

The Washington Post reported last year that in a handwritten note left for his family, East, 55, had complained about his poor health and had blamed Dr. Freeman H. Cary, a rear admiral in the Navy reserves and the attending physician for Congress. East had announced earlier that he would not seek a second term in the Senate because of his health.

The Washington Post said that several people who had seen the note quoted East as writing: "Dr. Cary and Bethesda Hospital failed to diagnose my hypothyroidism (as they should have). They ruined my health."

Cary, who had been attending physician for Congress for 13 years, was released from the Capitol Hill position last summer. The Navy had said the action was routine because Cary would reach the usual retirement age of 60 in September of last year.

East was admitted to Bethesda in February 1985 and underwent surgery for a blockage of the urinary tract. He returned to the hospital on April 20, 1985, for what was diagnosed as an acute case of hypothyroidism. Doctors reported at the time that the principal thyroid hormone in East's body was so low it was undetectable when he was admitted. He was released on May 23, 1985.

In late 1985, East switched doctors and sought treatment at Georgetown University Hospital.

Bethesda officials have maintained that East's problems were properly diagnosed and treated.

Amy Brown, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Justice Department, said that under federal law, a person who intends to file a civil action against a federal agency first must file an administrative claim with the agency involved. This must be done within two years of the incident on which the claim is based.

The agency then has six months to decide how it will handle the claim, she said.

Raynor Gets Writers' Award

Jerry Raynor of Greenville was presented the Golden Script Award of the Southeastern Playwrights' Conference Saturday night.

The conference, which drew participants from North Carolina, South Carolina, New York, Kentucky, New Jersey, Georgia, New Mexico and Florida, was held in Greenville Friday and Saturday.

Raynor is arts editor and staff writer for The Daily Reflector. He was honored for "his outstanding support and assistance in connection with the success of the Playwrights' Fund."

"Through public announcements, photographs, and personal encouragement, Jerry has, for six years, been instrumental in helping develop more than 60 playwrights' in works for the stage," Christine Rusch, artistic director for the Playwrights' Fund, said. Nancy Distefano, chairwoman for the Playwrights' Conference, presented the award.

Raynor, a Martin County native, has been a Reflector news staff member since 1968. Prior to that time he spent 23 years in the U.S. Army, serving in the Intelligence Division in Europe, Japan and Vietnam.

Mill Burns

SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — A former knitting mill was destroyed in a three-alarm blaze over the weekend.

The old Wormser Mill, which was vacant, was worth more than $250,0000 and was insured, said Salisbury attorney Robert Saunders, who owned the building.

Because the building couldn't be saved, Battalion Fire Chief Todd Kidd said, firefighters tried Saturday night to keep the blaze from spreading.

Views On Dental Health

CAVITY - TOOTH LOSS MYTH

Are cavities the greatest threat to dental health? Far from it. Untreated decay takes its greatest toll in children and young people, but the largest single cause of tooth loss in adults is pyorrhea or gum disease (dentists call it periodontal disease).

Gum disease not only attacks the gums, but the supporting structure of your teeth. In advanced cases, the gums actually detach from the tooth and the tooth becomes loose and falls out.

Irritating deposits formed from substances normally found in the mouth, cling tenaciously to the teeth, and if they aren't removed by careful and frequent cleaning at home, they can lead to gum disease. Eventually this plaque hardens (calculus) and can then be removed only by regular tooth cleaning by your dentist or dental hygienist. The sooner treatment begins, the better your chances of stopping gum disease and tooth loss.

Whether it is either of the anti-tooth villians, gum disease or dental decay, they can both be combatted by a combination of good home dental care and regular visits to our office. It's up to you!

Note: We invite all participants of the Blue Cross/Blue Shield personal care plan to come by our office. We are a member of Cost Care.

Prepared as a public service to promote better dental health. From the office of Kenneth T. Perkins, D.D.S., P.A., Evans St., Family and General Dentistry.

Legislative Session May Be Longer Than Usual

A News Analysis

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — It was supposed to begin a trend toward shorter legislative sessions. Instead, the 1987 version of the General Assembly may adjourn later than any before it.

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan admitted last week that the Legislature would not meet his goal of concluding its business by July 4. House leaders were predicting that the assembly would remain in Raleigh most, if not all, of next month. The latest-ever adjournment date was July 22, 1983.

It should come as no surprise that the Legislature is having trouble shortening its sessions. As the federal government relinquishes responsibility for an increasing number of programs and services, state governments find themselves with more to do.

From helping local governments extend water and sewer lines to setting up a trust fund to house the poor, the General Assembly is deeply involved in areas that until recently were regarded largely as Washington's domain.

Even so, lawmakers say the delay in this year's adjournment has little to do with New Federalism. "It's just been an odd session," said Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville.

Watkins probably has as much say about when the Legislature goes home as anyone. As chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, he and his Senate counterpart, Aaron Plyler, D-Union, set the timetable for handling the assembly's most important and time-consuming task: adopting a biennial state budget.

This year, the budget process has proceeded at a snail's pace.

Normally, the Legislative Building is a beehive of activity the last week of June as the assembly rushes to enact as much of the budget as possible before the new fiscal year starts July 1.

But last week, there were no joint meetings of the House and Senate appropriations committees. The "supersub," the small group of powerful lawmakers who make the key decisions about big-ticket spending items, had yet to meet.

Budget subcommittees, in the dark about how much money they would have to spend, went through the motions of hearing requests from government agencies and departments or simply canceled meetings.

Watkins said it would be another two weeks before the first omnibus spending bill was ready for a Joint Appropriations Committee vote. A bill began moving through the Legislature to continue state spending at current levels for another month, a necessary action to prevent the government from shutting down when the 1986-87 fiscal year ends Tuesday at midnight.

What's going on?

Opinions are varied, but most legislators interviewed last week cited these factors:

— The lengthy debate over financing a school construction program has consumed time and energy that legislative leaders normally would have devoted to the budget.

— Procedural changes implemented this year at Jordan's urging have wrought changes. For example, a May 28 deadline for getting bills passed by at least one chamber to keep them alive brought the budget process to a two-week standstill.

Jordan also has insisted on a revised budget process, with an enlarged supersub that meets in public. He has said this year's Senate delegation, limited to four men last year, would triple in number.

But House Speaker Liston Ramsey has yet to appoint the House delegation and Watkins says he sees no need for a supersub until it's time to dole out "pork barrel" money for local projects. Plyler says the supersub needs to meet to decide how much money will be available for new and expanded programs.

— Personality conflicts between House and Senate leaders, particularly Jordan and Watkins, have disrupted communications and contributed to the slowdown.

The latter factor was the subject of much discussion last week. A hint of the seriousness of the problem came Friday when Plyler announced to the Senate that its supersub members would meet today — without the House side.

"We've been trying for several days to get together with them and haven't gotten a response," Plyler said.

Plyler was tight-lipped when asked why he thought the House was reluctant to meet. Privately, however, some senators charged that Watkins was dragging his feet to delay adjournment and make it appear that Jordan's session-shortening reforms had failed.

"That's the biggest bunch of hogwash I ever heard in my life," Watkins retorted, insisting he had tried as hard as Plyler to expedite the budget process.

Schlesinger Says Moscow Embassy Needs Rebuilding

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Defense Secretary James Schlesinger, asked to study the new but bug-riddled U.S. Embassy in Moscow, said today the top three floors of the unfinished building should be ripped off and rebuilt while an annex should be constructed to house the most sensitive offices.

Schlesinger, who conducted the study at the request of Secretary of State George Shultz, said the Soviets have surpassed the United States in some areas of spying technology.

"We now face a rising curve of Soviet technology with no gap between what we can do and what the Soviets can do," Schlesinger told the Senate Budget Committee. "In fact, in some areas they are ahead of us."

Among other recommendations for the embassy complex, Schlesinger said he believed the United States should try to "neutralize" listening devices hidden in the lower five floors of the eight-story chancery building and put that to use as a consulate, a trade office or for medical services.

And he called for a "new philosophy" to make the State Department more vigilant in its handling of embassies in Iron Curtain countries, where "an unending game of move and countermove is played."

Schlesinger said the 1972 agreement under which each country is building a new embassy in the other's capital should be adjusted to make clear that all new U.S. construction in Moscow will be done with security-cleared American personnel, not with Soviet workers.

But he said that when the new embassy in Moscow finally is completed — in 1990 if the Soviets cooperate — the Soviets should be allowed to occupy their new complex on Mount Alto, one of the highest sites in Washington.

Schlesinger said while much has been made of the advantages of that site as an intelligence-gathering post, "the intelligence potential of Mount Alto is considerably less than popularly assumed."

Schlesinger told the committee that if Soviet cooperation cannot be obtained in salvaging the Moscow embassy, "the traditional functions of an embassy behind the Iron Curtain will no longer" be what they are now.

Much of the difficulty with the building in Moscow stems from U.S. acceptance of a Soviet assertion that concrete building members could not be poured at the embassy site, Schlesinger said. That led to the fabrication of components away from the eyes of U.S. observers and with high-technology listening devices were implanted.

The devices were of a type still not understood by American experts, he said, and were able to elude detection by x-rays.

Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., chairman of the budget committee, was incredulous. "Did we put in that agreement that we believed in the tooth fairy?" he asked.

Chiles laid the blame for the problems on the State Department, which he said is institutionally not equipped to handle building construction and has been guilty of chronic mismanagement, not only in Moscow but in projects in Egypt, Somalia, Hong Kong, India, Syria and elsewhere.

Iran Holds Navy Games In Gulf

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran's Revolutionary Guards conducted naval maneuvers in the Persian Gulf, and the country's parliament speaker said the United States was moving toward an "armed encounter" with Tehran, according to Iran's news agency.

Meanwhile, the latest victims in the Iran-Iraq "tanker war" were towed to ports for repairs, shipping agents said. The Scandinavian ships Mia Margrethe and Stena Concordia, both scheduled to carry Kuwaiti oil, were attacked Saturday by Iranian gunboats. One seaman was seriously injured and seven others suffered minor injuries.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency reported the military maneuvers ending Tuesday were designed to boost Iranian combat readiness in the gulf.

Destroyers, frigates, marines and frogmen participated in the games, which began Saturday. Iranian Prime Minister Hussein Musavi described as "mostly a power representation" as well as a warning to "all those who want to create tension in the Persian Gulf."

Iran television, monitored in Nicosia, carried Musavi's statement and film of the military maneuvers.

The United States has made plans to register 11 Kuwaiti tankers under the American flag to make them eligible for protection by U.S. warships. Kuwaiti tankers have sustained the brunt of Iranian attacks on ships in recent months. Iran accuses Kuwait of aiding Iraq in the 6½-year Iran-Iraq war.

A four-unit U.S. naval force, including the Battleship Missouri, has been ordered to join six other U.S. warships in the gulf next month to protect U.S.-registered vessels. Kuwait also rented three Soviet tankers that will receive protection of Soviet warships.

Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani, meeting Sunday in Tehran with Carlos Nunez Tellez, visiting president of the Nicaraguan council of state, said: "At the moment, the United States is moving towards the brink of an armed encounter with us," according to Tehran Radio.

Hassan Alai, commander of the Revolutionary Guards Navy, said Iran will teach the United States "a bitter and unforgettable lesson" if it intervenes in the gulf, Tehran Radio said Sunday in a broadcast monitored in London.

Alaie also was quoted by Iran's news agency as saying fighters have been dispatched to the island of Abu Musa just outside the mouth of the strategic strait of Hormuz in the southern gulf.

Demjanjuk To Use New Interpreter

JERUSALEM (AP) — Retired Ohio autoworker John Demjanjuk said today he's eager to testify in his defense in his Nazi war crimes trial, but not until he gets a better intepreter to translate the proceedings from Hebrew to Ukrainian.

Presiding Judge Dov Levine granted the request and agreed to a defense motion to recess the trial until July 27, when Demjanjuk is scheduled to be the first defense witness.

"Shalom to the court," said Demjanjuk, using the traditional Hebrew greeting, which means "Peace."

"I want to have my say, but not today," Demjanjuk said in his native Ukrainian when asked by Levine if he intended to testify. "I want to speak out and to prove the whole truth," he said.

The defense opened its arguments today, maintaining the charges should be dropped because of contradictions in the prosecution's case.

Israeli defense attorney Yoram Sheftel, who presented the motion to drop the charges, said the prosecution failed to prove Demjanjuk was "Ivan the Terrible," a guard who operated the gas chambers at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland. About 800,000 Jews were killed at the camp in 1942 and 1943.

Demjanjuk, 67, has said he is a victim of mistaken identity and was never at Treblinka.

"I hope to show that the identifying evidence of the prosecution ... amounts to zero," Sheftel told the three-judge panel.

He said the prosecution's case was based on circumstantial evidence and marred by faulty identification procedures.

Since the trial began Feb. 16, the prosecution has called to the stand five Treblinka survivors who identified Demjanjuk as "Ivan," some after selecting his picture from eight presented to them.

Several expert witness testified to the authenticity of the prosecution's central piece of documentary evidence, an identification card in Demjanjuk's name from Trawniki, an SS training camp for death camp guards.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

New Audience

It was not a good week for fans of former headliners in the entertainment field. Dancer Fred Astaire left the earthly scene and was soon followed by Jackie Gleason, who was singularly talented in making people laugh.

His vehicle was television. After that, Gleason had it all ... movies, Broadway, nightclub comic, composer and conductor. His was not a one-dimension personality.

The future "Great One" was a product of a cold-water Brooklyn flat who knew too much about poverty. He was drawn to show business during a class play and the allure was so strong he quit school and found a job as master of ceremonies at a theater.

The Gleason career included jobs as a carnival barker, a daredevil driver, disc jockey and, for awhile, he hustled money at a pool hall. His big break came in the new medium of television, and after two years playing the lead in a sit-com he was signed to "Cavalcade of Stars" ... which was soon followed by his own show. Gleason quickly became the top male television comedian of the day.

Co-workers both liked and admired him. Milton Berle, no small talent himself in the comedy field, saw Gleason as a master of two essentials in the business: that of improvisation and ad-libbing. "He did everything," in Berle's opinion.

Hopefully, "The Great One" now has a bigger audience than he ever knew in his 71 earth-bound years. They would be laughing, too.

Catfish Imagery

There's probably a catfish in your future.

That conclusion comes from data on the catfish farming industry which has been growing at a spectacular rate. The industry has seen an 11-fold increase in production since 1976.

You'd think no problems could possibly remain; but you'd be wrong.

Promotional activities have put more catfish on dinner plates, but the Agriculture Department says outside the main catfish producing areas, the fish suffers from its old image as a bottom-feeding scavenger.

The commercially raised catfish is something different.

Nobody knows just how many producers there are. A 1981 USDA survey showed almost a thousand such operations but with the passage of time there are probably more today.

Farmers have encountered an "off-flavor" syndrome among their catfish wherein they develop an undesirable taste. So taste-testing is used a week before harvest, again the day before, and finally on the day the fish are to go to the processor.

If the sample has an off-flavor, the entire pond of fish is rejected.

There are about 135,000 acres of catfish ponds currently in production. The annual output of processed catfish has grown to nearly 214 million pounds (that was last year) from less than 19 million pounds in 1976.

Mississippi is believed to be the biggest single producer. Other production is in progress in the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas and on the West Coast. We're told the field is growing; it is said to reflect a trend toward consumption of more fish and poultry.

We are going to be seeing more and more catfish fillets in our homes and at fast food emporiums. Don't bet against it.

From an economic standpoint, there are other off-beat fields North Carolina might investigate. Striped bass could be one. Aside from having a broader base of appreciation among fish-eaters of the coastal states, it is conceivable the sometimes costly losses incurred by the off-flavor syndrome among catfish would not exist in controlled production of striped bass.

There are bound to be other options awaiting a creative inspiration.

Public Forum

To the editor:

I'm well aware that among a significant portion of the Greenville population, the construction of a municipal golf course is neither a high priority nor a matter of particular interest. I recall having read and heard comments by city officials who are in fact opposed to such a project. Presently, the Recreation and Parks Department has 60 acres of land behind Greenwood cemetery, land that has tentatively been earmarked for a nine-hole golf course. However, there have been no significant steps taken to get the project going, due probably to understandable but mistaken concerns about the cost-revenue issue. So, I will be glad to see those thousands and thousands of dollars Greenville people spend elsewhere kept here in the city, and I look forward to the development of an excellent golf course.

I know I'm not the only golfer in this city who is more or less compelled to drive to Ayden or Grifton or Wilson or Raleigh to play a round of golf. And I happen to know that the public course in Wilson (Wedgewood Golf Club) produces considerable revenue for that city. Likewise, a town the size of Greenville deserves a good golf course, a place where students and townspeople alike can enjoy a good game. If there is anyone besides me who is willing to get behind this worthwhile project and push, please let me know.

Candidates, Media Launch New Era

WASHINGTON (AP) — He said it went "beyond the bounds of responsible journalism," and griped, "We're all running for president, not sainthood," but when Sen. Paul Simon received his character questionnaire he reluctantly agreed to terms.

He agreed to waive his right to privacy and allow The New York Times to peruse his raw FBI and CIA files.

The Illinois Democrat agreed to supply his birth certificates, his marriage license and his school records. A list of his closest friends since high school. A copy of his medical records. And more, much more.

The Times questionnaire represents a brief, tentative step into the post-Gary Hart era of political integrity — an uncomfortable period in which politicians and the news media are trying to determine what's relevant about a presidential candidate's character and private life, how to report it and how to make it public.

Simon wasn't alone in agreeing to the Times' request. Another contender for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, concluded, "The public's right to know outweighs a candidate's right to privacy."

Democratic Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri apparently was willing to go along.

Nonetheless, the paper's wholesale request brought whistles of disbelief from several of the candidates, and the Times had second thoughts. On June 19, Times Editor Max Frankel wrote a memo to his staff saying, "In this valid pursuit, we have put some questions to candidates that reach a bit too far."

The Times is not alone in wrestling with the dilemma. Media handling of the George Bush rumors (called a "tempest in a cesspool" by one Iowa supporter) provides another example.

For a week, political reporters were hearing accounts of an alleged affair between Bush and a woman, not his wife. Depending on the source, the details varied. It wasn't clear if anything about the rumors would merit a news story, even if the gossip was true. The Associated Press, among others, published nothing.

However, runaway whispering eventually prompted the Bush campaign to provide denials, published in two news magazines. AP and other news organizations then wrote stories quoting what George Bush Jr. told Newsweek: "The answer to the A question is N.O."

A, for adultery.

Is this sort of thing really necessary? In the wake of the Gary Hart-Donna Rice episode, it isn't clear where to draw the line.

But there's no turning back the clock. In Frankel's words:

"In the nuclear age, when we entrust our presidents with instantaneous powers of life and death, we think we have a duty to report on the essential character and history of every contender for the office.

"As regards their fitness for the office and trustworthiness, they have no 'right' of privacy. Their lives, their personalities, their finances, their families, friends and values are all fair game for fair reporting."

It was an eloquent statement of purpose, but how do you get there from here? Frankel wasn't defending the Times questionnaire; he was scaling it back.

"We will not, in fact, seek raw FBI files that indiscriminately record malicious and unsubstantiated gossip, or similar CIA files," Frankel said in the memo, knowing full well that many files often carry more fiction than fact. Nor, Frankel said, will the Times seek medical records that "do not bear on a person's fitness for the presidency."

His memo quelled the criticism.

Patricia O'Brien, a respected reporter who recently went to work for Michael Dukakis, had said the Massachusetts governor wouldn't go along with the Times request, describing the request for access to FBI files as "beyond the threshhold of professional journalism."

Babbitt, even in acquiescing, said: "The question is, if I ostentatiously sign away my rights and say 'Have at it,' what about the poor guy who has been a Boy Scout all his life that refuses? What kind of inferences are left to be drawn? That's precisely the dilemma."

Simon, speaking to reporters several weeks ago in Great Neck, N.Y., said, "I wrote to The New York Times and said I was complying, but I think they're going beyond the bounds of what is responsible in the field of journalism."

He explained, "I did it ... because of my great respect for the Times," but added, "Let's suppose someone 20 years ago had a social disease. Is that something the public ought to be getting involved in? I don't think so."

Babbitt suggested the media find "some common acceptable process" of obtaining information on candidates' lives. Simon said the boundaries of character examinations should be debated after the 1988 elections.

"I can't say precisely where we are, but I have some fears about where we're headed," he said. "We're too close to all of this right now to make good judgments."

Who Should Come Next?

SEOUL, South Korea — In the Philippines, the demonstrators had Corazon Aquino. In Iran, they had the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. In South Korea today, protesters are flocking to the streets against a deeply unpopular leader too, but they have no real idea of who should come next.

It is not that South Koreans reject the notion of leaders. Their political culture, in both government and opposition camps, is based on concepts of rigid centralized authority. In everyday parlance here, leaders do not take office, they take power.

Rather, the fact is that the long-fragmented and feuding opposition has yet to offer up a political figure capable of generating mass enthusiasm with the new generation of Koreans.

Old-guard opposition politicians Kim Young Sam and Kim Dae Jung are attempting to ride the wave of public sentiment unleashed against the government in three weeks of street protests.

But neither man seems to command widespread enthusiasm or to control the direction the movement will take. They retain strong control of the main opposition party, blocking the rise of younger men.

Ordinary Koreans are placing their faith instead in the ideals of democracy, a system under which they have never lived but that seems to them a political cure-all.

"If change comes, who the leader is will not matter," said a Seoul shopkeeper. That problem will solve itself through the democratic process, he added.

For the time being, the political pot bubbles along, heated by popular hostility toward President Chun Doo Hwan.

"Down with military dictatorship!" has been the trademark chant at virtually every gathering of government opponents here in the past weeks.

In a negative sense, it is Chun who is the opposition leader, the man who provides focus and keeps together an inherently unstable coalition that includes students, activist clergymen, politicians and a grab bag of other groups.

South Koreans find it easy to dislike the stern-faced man who lives behind mammoth security in the Blue House, as the presidential compound in northern Seoul is known.

He has a reputation for talking rather than listening, running affairs of state in the style he acquired during a military career. He is humorless. Korean class prejudices also works against his standing in the cities. Soldiering has never been a respected occupation here; nor has the farming his parents practiced.

Almost every night, government television news shows broadcast lengthy scenes of Chun touring schools and government offices, surrounded by obsequious aides, lecturing Koreans on the virtues of hard work, vigilance, honesty and other traditional values.

Koreans almost expect presidents to behave in this imperious way. But they are not willing to accept it with Chun. He is deeply resented for demanding that people treat him like a philosopher-king in the Confucian mold when in their eyes he has done nothing to earn it.

Legitimacy is a constant theme in the traditions of government here. Many South Koreans said Chun shot his way into office as an Army general during the 1980 uprising in Kwangju city, where more than 200 people were killed, and has remained there primarily through force.

On June 10, Chun's ruling party nominated his military academy classmate Roh Tae Woo to run for president in an election Chun had planned for late this year. That touched off the current wave of demonstrations, putting Chun's whole succession timetable in jeopardy.

Roh is condemned as being just a stand-in for Chun. He is sometimes called "the bald man with a wig."

But neither do the "two Kims" of the opposition have a pristine image. Professional politicians are regarded as untrustworthy by many Koreans.

For more than two decades, the Kims have been fighting non-stop to get power. While many Koreans admire their fighting spirit, many assume that ambition drives them as much as concern for democracy.

They are recognized as courageous men who have perhaps had all the good will squeezed out of them by oppression they have faced over the years. They run their party as tightly as Chun runs his, making some Koreans wonder whether having one of them in the Blue House would really change anything.

"Since we don't have better leaders for now, we let them speak for us," said a student at Seoul's Yonsei University. "They are politicians. They are very much eager to grab power."

Most South Koreans do want change in their government. Increasingly well educated and affluent, they are aware and a bit ashamed that their country is seen abroad as stunted politically, despite its many impressive achievements in the economic field.

They want a government that is more open and legitimate, that does not try to suppress dissent. Above all, they want the knowledge that freedoms they have do not exist at the sufferance of one individual.

Each step forward in the economy means people have more to risk, however. The middle class, and most people consider themselves a part of it, is in general genuinely fearful of what the government likes to call "social confusion," the breakdown of law and order.

Yet hatred of the Chun government is so strong these days that people are willing to risk a bit. While they may not join the demonstrators, there is near universal sympathy for them and their objectives.

"I have no courage to go out and throw rocks," said the Seoul shopkeeper. "But that may be what is needed to get the government's attention."

Strength For Today

Many of us become bitter if we have to suffer the loss of a loved one. How can this be reconciled with the love of God?

A poet had an answer:

"God nothing does, nor suffers to be done,
But that thou wouldst thyself,
Couldst thou but see through all events of things,
As well as He."

God sees the end of things while we see only the beginning, and very dimly at that. If we can only believe that all things work together for good to them that love God, we can gradually bring ourselves to accept the fact that there is a great plan for the universe which lies far beyond our understanding.

Judicial Candidates Depend On Ideology, Political Kinship

Analysis

Time was running out for the Ronald Ronald and the leading contenders jockeying for top slot on the Department of Justice's "short list" of potential nominees for the next opening on the U.S. Supreme Court.

But when Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. announced Friday that he would step down, the Reagan administration suddenly had its best chance to turn the court around, something it has tried to do, unsuccessfully, with its two previous appointments. Powell has been at the fulcrum of power within the court, casting the pivotal vote on such major issues as abortion, affirmative action and the death penalty. But his decision to leave was the most important of his career. For in so doing he sided not with the liberals or the moderates, but with the Reagan conservatives.

If a vacancy had not come now, Senate confirmation of any nominee would probably have been impossible next year — given Democratic control of the Senate, the president's lame-duck status and his diminished influence after the Iran-Contra affair. Even now, because of the court's ideological balance will shift, Senate confirmation can be expected to be hard won for any nominee.

In their race for the court, these contenders are concerned about never having another shot at an opening. Like others in the past, they waged a quiet campaign. But they know more than the luck of the draw is needed. Ideological kinship and political associations, more than merit, will determine who gets the nomination.

Most of the judicial candidates gathered at a recent conference here, along with Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, Attorney General Edwin Meese III and influential legal scholars. They exchanged views on constitutional interpretation and lamented the court's continued liberal-to-moderate direction. As one leading contender remarked, "The court will be lost if the Democrats win the next election."

A leading contender is California's J. Clifford Wallace, a San Diego-based judge on the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals. He is well-positioned because of his political connections and the efforts he marshalled to gain recognition within Washington legal and political circles.

Lincolnesque in figure and likable in manner, Wallace disclaims running for the court. He said, as early as 1981, that he feels "very strongly the office should seek the man, and not the man the office." Yet, he delights in the attention that comes with being on the short list: "It's nice to be trotted out into the ring with the high grade cattle."

Others know him as a man with a mission, a mission that includes becoming the first Mormon on the Supreme Court. In the words of a fellow judge, "He's definitely got his eyes on the court."

Like another prime contender, Appellate Court Judge Robert H. Bork, Wallace has long been pushed for a Supreme Court appointment. Both were on White House short lists in 1975, when President Ford appointed John Paul Stevens; they were considered again in 1981 and 1985, losing out to Sandra Day O'Connor and then Antonia Scalia.

At 58, Wallace is slightly younger than Bork. Yet, he also faces an age problem; if he is passed over this time, future Republican presidents would probably pick younger jurists. Wallace's advantage lies in his reputation as an amiable team player, more clever than combative. Bork is strongly favored by some Department of Justice officials, even though he is viewed by some as too outspoken, too independent and not ideologically predictable. Moreover, confirmation hearings on Bork might become mired in controversy over his 1973 role as the acting attorney general who fired Archibald Cox, the special Watergate prosecutor. The Administration should be particularly sensitive to reopening the Watergate controversy at a time when it is battling not only Congress but a special prosecutor now investigating the Iran-Contra cover-up.

Appointed to the district court in 1970 and elevated to the appellate bench in 1972 by President Nixon, Wallace has a track-record opposing the Warren Court's liberal jurisprudence. He is more experienced and less controversial than others frequently mentioned. Reagan Appellate Court Judges Richard A. Posner and Frank H. Easterbrook, for example, are highly touted by conservative groups. But they are associated with the University of Chicago Law School's economic theories of law, that sometimes run counter to the strict constructionism of traditional conservatives.

Wallace, increasingly visible in Washington, does not have the political liability of two other leading candidates. Both are also Mormons who helped shape Reagan's legal-policy agenda.

Rex E. Lee was solicitor general in Reagan's first term and enjoys the respect of the old-time Republican legal Establishment. But he is opposed by New Right conservatives for not aggressively pushing their views on abortion, affirmative action and criminal justice.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, by comparison, is a darling of the New Right. His close ties to the Department of Justice and defense of controversial Reagan policies and appointments endear him to the administration. But this could hurt him in winning support from moderate Senate Republicans and liberal Democrats. It could even curb the Senate's proclivity for giving one of its own an appointment. Hatch may already be disqualified because he voted on recent pay increases for the justices. The Constitution forbids any member of Congress from assuming an office for which he voted a salary increase during an elected term. That alone could delay, if not deny, confirmation, something the administration must avoid at all cost.

Given the political liabilities of others in the running, Wallace is a major contender. His record — "solid, not brilliant" — is compatible with Reagan's agenda for judicial reform. With some 450 majority opinions under his belt, Wallace demonstrates little intellectual sympathy for such landmark rulings as Miranda or those barring admission of illegally seized evidence at trial. In criminal justice decisions, Wallace decided for prosecutors about 85+ of the time. He has no truck with rulings favoring abortion, affirmative action or bans on organized school prayer. He is typically pro-government or, as one lawyer comments, "Insensitive to government abuse of power."

His views will trouble moderates and liberals, but the administration can defend his record as mainstream. "In a circuit noted for the number of its reversals by the Supreme Court," University of Santa Clara Law School Dean Gerald E. Uelmen points out, "Judge Wallace has compiled one of the lowest reversal rates in recent years."

What would make Wallace especially attractive to the White House is his attitude toward precedent; he does not share traditional conservatives' reverence for it. He has aligned himself with the Reagan administration's attack on activist liberal judges, including Justice William J. Brennan Jr. Wallace warns: "The activist judge must not assume, particularly in constitutional cases, that judicially restrained successors will let stand every misconstruction of the Constitution."

As an appellate court judge, some who have practiced before Wallace say he can be "result-oriented and stretches — or misconstrues — precedents." But as a Supreme Court justice, unafraid to reverse prior rulings, Wallace could prove to be just what the administration needs to turn the court around.

Concuring with Meese, Wallace's Constitution is rigid and lifeless. Judges, according to him, should read the Constitution narrowly, literally and historically, even if that means sanctioning unwise or unjust laws.

Other factors put Wallace high on the list of potential Reagan nominees. He has a long personal and working relationship with former Chief Justice Warren E. Burger. From that relationship, he received numerous assignments to prestigious committees on judicial administration. And Wallace's expertise in judicial adminstration could prove another asset separating him from the pack. Rehnquist is less interested than his predecessor in such matters and could be aided by someone like Wallace, much as Chief Justice Earl Warren relied on Justice Tom C. Clark to handle many extra-judicial assignments.

Wallace enjoys the support of powerful Senate leaders, like the former chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., who has had him testify on many occasions and has endorsed his appointment to the court. And, like Scalia, Bork and Hatch, Wallace is closely tied to conservative Washington think tanks, notably the American Enterprise Institute. These connections, along with several articles on judicial review published since 1981, buttress Wallace's scholarly credentials.

Wallace and Bork are likely to be the major contenders. The nomination of either, however, will be the result of a calculated campaign. It would also signal a compromise within the Reagan administration accommodating the New Right conservatives and moderate Republicans seeking to secure a Senate confirmation. More controversial, and intellectually formidable, conservatives like Bork would be sacrificed. If the administration still goes ahead with Bork, it takes a greater risk of prolonged confirmation hearings and a potential Senate defeat. The question now is what strategy the White House will adopt in an effort to secure Reagan's most lasting legacy.

Gorbachev Faces Economic Reforms

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev emerges from a Communist Party conclave in clear command and with a mandate for change, but he also faces the daunting task of reforming the giant Soviet economy.

The plenum of the party Central Committee that ended Friday approved Gorbachev's plan to loosen the grip of central planners on industry, force factories to be financially self-sufficient and revamp the cumbersome system of pricing and supply.

It set a deadline of 1990 for full implementation of the sweeping changes, many of which run directly counter to top-heavy economic practices that date from the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution or the rule of Josef V. Stalin.

The committee, with more than 300 members, also elevated three Gorbachev proteges to the ruling Politburo. It raised the number of full members to 14, eight of whom were named since Gorbachev became party chief in March 1985.

Of the new full, or voting, members, two — Nikolai N. Slyunkov and Viktor P. Nikonov — have been involved with the nation's economic technocracy.

The third, party propaganda secretary Alexander N. Yakovlev, is considered one of the chief architects of Gorbachev's liberalization and openness policies.

Gorbachev has spoken in recent speeches of widespread foot-dragging and resistance to reform, even in the top ranks of the party, but he sounded a triumphant note as the two-day plenum ended.

"I believe we have full reason to say that the plenary meeting has justified the hopes of Communists, of all Soviet people," he said in his closing remarks.

Western analysts had predicted some at the meeting would be cool to reforms that threaten state and party jobs, and chief Kremlin economic adviser Abel G. Aganbegyan said later that "emotional" and harsh criticisms were aired.

But he told reporters the committee unanimously endorsed the blueprint for change because no real alternative existed. "Any law is better than the existing lawlessness," he quoted one speaker as saying.

Gorbachev appeared to score another victory when the committee scheduled the first nationwide party conference since 1941 for next June. The last committee plenum in January failed to take up his call for the conference.

The interim party conference is a mechanism for policy change between party congresses, held every five years. Stalin frequently used the conference, but it fell into disuse after World War II. It has broad powers, and can change the makeup of the Central Committee.

The party congress appoints the members of the Central Committee, which includes the most powerful party members and national and regional government officials.

Gorbachev appeared to warn committee members that the conference would judge the performance of all Communists in carrying out the reforms. He called it "a political exam in the main subject of our life — the reorganization."

In a brisk, authoritative tone, he told members to return to their posts throughout the Soviet Union and get to work to ensure that the reform blueprint becomes a reality.

Gorbachev made no secret of the difficulties that lie ahead in implementing rapid changes in the nationwide system of economic management, but said the unwillingness to seek reform was inadmissible.

"We are in for new problems, considerable complexities," he said. "And yet I am confident that the greatest mistake is the fear to err."

By the end of the year, the party and state leadership is to approve 12 documents that prune the powers of Moscow-based bureaucrats and allow 37,000 industrial enterprises to plan their own production targets in accordance with government guidelines.

The first measure, a draft law on state-run enterprises, is to be submitted to the Supreme Soviet, the nation's nominal parliament, at a session that begins Monday.

Western diplomats in Moscow said the task and timetable that Gorbachev set forth were of awesome scale.

"He has over 50 years of the Stalinist model working against him and it's very hard to see how he can turn that around in two or three years," said one diplomat, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

"It's an enormous change to get people who have been taking orders all their lives to become independent, and to face the possibility that their enterprises may be liquidated."

Practices in place for decades, such as price-setting by government decree, will also be revamped.

Aganbegyan said economists recognize that tinkering with some parts of the system could make problems surface elsewhere.

Soviet rents, for example, are very low by world standards, taking up no more than 2.5 precent of the average worker's income, according to official Soviet sources.

Aganbegyan said that to pay for the real costs of housing, rents could be raised.

Like Gorbachev, the Kremlin adviser said the toughest phase of economic reform lies ahead.

Erwin's Fate Lies With New Burlington Owners

ERWIN, N.C. (AP) — Burlington Industries Inc., which was rescued last week from a hostile takeover bid, now faces a Catch-22 dilemma as it decides which assets to sell in order to pay off a mountain of debt.

"They're between a rock and a hard place," said Kay Norwood, an analyst with Interstate Securities Corp. in Charlotte. "Those things that are easy to sell and bring the best price are the very ones you ought to keep."

In the Harnett County town of Erwin, residents of the self-proclaimed "Denim Capital of the World" are afraid they may be the price of Burlington's victory.

"I hear two different rumors," said Burlington spokesman Bryant Haskins. "One is we'll sell denim because it's so profitable. The other is we won't because it's so profitable."

Because the cost of buying the company was so steep — $2.4 billion — the new owners, a group of investors led by New York investment banker Morgan Stanley Group Inc., say they will have to sell parts of the company to repay the loans used to buy it. So far, the firm says it hasn't decided which parts to sell.

Companies that undergo this process, called a leveraged buyout, usually are forced to pare costs dramatically, and often a reduction in headquarters staff is among their first moves. Burlington employs 1,200 at its headquarters in Greensboro and another 700 at its marketing headquarters in New York City.

Haskins said no decision had been made about what assets Burlington would sell or when they would sell them. But that's not calming many nerves in Erwin, which has two giant Burlington Industries Mills produce 1.2 million yards of denim a week.

There was celebration when the takeover offer of New York financier Asher Edelman and Dominion Textile Inc. of Montreal was finally rejected. But the people of Erwin are faced with the sobering possibility that they may be sold in the aftermath of a costly bidding war.

"The Lord has been good to me, and Burlington has, too," said Mary L. Faircloth, who for 27 years has woven denim strands into fabric for Burlington. "You hear a lot of rumors — it'll be sold, it won't be sold. I'll be honest with you. I've just prayed and left it in the Lord's hands."

"I know other mills, and they're not even in a class with Burlington," said 80-year-old Gilbert Woodworth. "People here have a lot to lose if they lose Burlington."

The denim unit is likely to be one of the most salable saleable parts of the whole, business analysts say. While the new owners probably would like to keep the denim business, they may be forced to sell if it commands a high enough price.

"They've got dogs and they've got salable items," analyst Edward F. Johnson of Johnson Redbook Service in New York told the News and Observer of Raleigh. "Obviously they want to keep the good products, but if they try to sell off only the dogs, the question is who's going to want them?"

Johnson estimates Burlington's denim sales at about $400 million last year, or about one-seventh of the $2.8 billion in company sales.

The speculation about an impending sale disturbs many in Erwin, a town of 3,000 an hour's drive south of Raleigh. They fear that if Burlington sells out, the result will be lower pay, less pride, less work — and perhaps no jobs at all.

"What are we going to do with no Burlington?" asked Bertie Matthews, 58, who earns $5.97 an hour taking knots out of denim thread before it is weaved. "We know we've got jobs right now. If Burlington leaves, we might not have them."

The two mills, with roughly 1,200 employees, are the local economy for Erwin.

"The mills mean the same thing to Erwin as the food you're eating — it's survival," said Freddie Williford, owner of Sherry's Bakery, a restaurant he and his wife own near the mills. "The mills employ more people around here than everything else put together."

The denim business was one of the major reasons Dominion Textile Inc. of Montreal mounted its hostile takeover attempt of Burlington, Canadian stock analysts said. Dominion already has a smaller denim-manufacturing business in the U.S., but is holding on to its Burlington stock in hopes of forcing Burlington to sell the pieces of the company Dominion wants.

Analysts say it appears likely that Burlington's new owners will keep their bread-winning division and will try to peddle less profitable businesses. Among the candidates are units which make corduroy — now out of fashion — and textured woven fabrics.

Milliken & Co. in Spartanburg, S.C., is said to be interested in Burlington's carpet business, which has not done well recently but which is described by analysts as a basically strong unit.

Burlington's neighbor, Unifi Inc. in Greensboro, has been buying competitors in the business of texturizing polyester fabric, and analysts said it might be interested in that Burlington unit.

Coastal Homeowners Say Erosion Is Making Their Property Worthless

NAGS HEAD, N.C. (AP) — Over the past eight years, attorney David L. Short has watched the ocean erode almost 150 feet of dune frontage near his $100,000, two-story cottage. He has tried bulldozing sand, piling up sandbags and planting artificial seaweed offshore, to no avail.

The house now leans precariously over the edge of a 15-foot dune cliff that was eaten away during a storm last spring.

"It's terrible," Short, of Newport News, Va., said last week in a telephone interview. "I'm paying a mortgage on property I can't even use."

What once were oceanfront dream houses in this coastal resort town have become nightmares for some cottage owners, as severe erosion threatens to send them toppling into the sea.

Edward L. Trotman, a Chesapeake, Va., real estate salesman, has experienced similar erosion to his oceanfront property about a half-mile south of Short's property. The town condemned Trotman's vacation and rental cottage last year when it was damaged by storms.

"I've got a worthless cottage I can't get paid for and I can't use," he said in a telephone interview. "I've never been in a situation like this. I feel like I'm being kicked around."

Nags Head officials last Friday began imposing a $50 a day civil penalty against Short, Trotman and another absentee property owner after declaring the cottages a threat to public safety and welfare. The owners were given a choice to repair, remove or demolish the structures.

Short and Trotman said they may seek a legal injunction against the town penalty, at least until they know whether the National Flood Insurance Program will pay for their losses. The other owner couldn't be reached for comment.

Trotman said the insurance program would not pay the total insured value of his house unless it fell into the ocean and became "unrepairable." The house would not be liveable even if the insurance paid repair bills, Trotman said, because there is not enough land left to place a septic tank.

"I'm in a Catch-22 situation," he said.

Town officials said they plan to remain firm on the fines.

"We've got to proceed somehow," said Mayor Don Bryan. "I'm not insensitive to their dilemma, but that doesn't relieve the town of its responsibility to do something about the threat to public safety. If the homeowners feel caught in the middle, so do we."

The town several years ago adopted a policy of "retreat," or moving back structures from the ocean front to avoid erosion problems. Presently about half of the 12-mile Nags Head beachfront is threatened with serious erosion, Bryan said.

"Homeowners should realize that erosion takes place and retreat rather than try to fight the ocean," he said.

Bryan said he favors proposed legislation in Congress that would allow the National Flood Insurance Program to pay up to 40 percent of the insured value of ocean-front property for relocation. The measure passed the house June 11.

"I think this is a legitimate expense to offset a greater loss," Bryan said.

Piedmont Establishing Name In British Air Travel Market

By The Associated Press

Avoid the hassles of long lines, delays and missed connections at airports in New York, Miami, Boston and Atlanta. Fly into Charlotte instead.

That's the message in which Piedmont is investing $500,000 in British media to establish name recognition now that the Charlotte-Douglas Airport has become a hub for London flights.

To get the U.S. and North Carolina connection firmly established, the campaign started with a series of print and TV ads showing the Wright Brothers' first plane at Kitty Hawk, according to the Greensboro News & Record. The ad headlines beneath the picture proclaimed: "Piedmont brings you another inaugural flight from North Carolina."

Piedmont executive vice president William G. McGee said he thinks the golf courses at Pinehurst in North Carolina and the balmy Florida temperatures and numerous tourist attractions in Florida will appeal to Britishers.

In its ads, Piedmont is guaranteeing prospective passengers they can be through Immigration, baggage control and Customs and be ready for a connecting flight to 58 U.S. cities within an hour.

The ads run on television during business news hours, in most major London newspapers with high business readership and in business magazines.

Jeremy Judge, deputy chairman of the Bartle Bogle Hegarty Limited advertising agency in London that has the Piedmont account, mocks the advertisements of other major airlines that emphasize free drinks, seat comfort in first class, food quality, and the view from 40,000 feet.

Those airlines are promoting their similarities, not their differences, but the real question is whether their audience believes them, Judge said.

"One thing businessmen know is the reality of flight," Judge said. "After 7 or 8 hours, how comfortable can any seat be? What airline has great food? The regular business traveler knows better."

But the other airlines have no choice. They have to promote these things because they have no control over the stacking of planes for landing, the taxiway delays and the long lines at Immigration and Customs when they land in New York, Boston, Atlanta or Miami, Judge said.

Piedmont's campaign is targeted at a business audience because "no one can survive just off tourist traffic and there's a good business market between Europe and the areas served out of our Charlotte hub," McGee said.

But to woo those business travelers, Piedmont must convince them that it can provide them the two things they value most: time and convenience, Judge said.

"Most of them have one or two carriers they use regularly," Judge said. "We want Piedmont to be on that shopping list. We're trying to tell them that, for those not specifically visiting New York, Charlotte is the rest of America. In Charlotte, you can be in touch with 51 percent of U.S. population within one hour's flying time."

Banyan trees usually sprout from seeds that animals have dropped into cracks in the branches of other trees, and their roots grow down from the host branches and into the ground, says National Geographic World.

Colleges Boost Advertising In Effort To Attract Students

By The Associatee Press

North Carolina colleges and universities are becoming more image-conscious as they vie for declining numbers of high school graduates, but officials disagree on whether the competion is healthy or counter-productive.

"Institutions are taking a harder look of themselves, at their dorms, at their academic facilities, the way their campuses are laid out and how their grounds are tended," said David Setzer, Catawba College's vice president for communications.

"They want to present to the prospective student and parents an attractive, exciting place in which the student can spend four years," Setzer said.

At Elon College, that meant digging up a parking lot in the heart of campus and replacing it with a fountain.

"We've done a lot of beautification," said Nan Perkins, Elon's director of publications. "We see that as a part of the marketing effort. It makes a statement about the college."

But Ted Bonus, director of public information at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill was less than enthusiastic.

"I think marketing is entirely suitable if you are selling a car, but if you are selling education it's going too far," Bonus said. "There are connotations with marketing that you are selling something that people don't really want or need."

At Pfeiffer college, the marketing budget — which covers institutional advancement and student recruitment — is more than $500,000 a year, which school officials said was relatively low.

"It's not cheap," said David Joyce, vice president for institutional advancement at the Misenheimer school. "Colleges spend a lot of time and money to position themselves in the market."

To outdo their competition, colleges and universities have turned to videos and slick, color brochures, catchy logos and slogans, toll-free telephone lines, new athletic teams that might attract students from a certain area, summer music and sports camps to get high school students on campus, special programs to attract minority students, recruiting students by telephone, high-powered university relations offices and even television programs.

N.C. A&T State University officials hope to start a weekly television program this fall that goes beyond the traditional coaches' show schools use to highlight their athletic programs.

"It will be almost like an A&T weekly story," said Norman W. Handy Jr., vice chancellor for development and university relations. "A portion will be dedicated to academics and other events that are going on on campus. But the hook will be athletics."

One of the new ways colleges are using to make themselves more visible is the Hollywood-style video.

GOING HOME — Scientists watch as the first of three pilot whales is lifted on a stretcher, top of photo, out of a tank at the New England Aquarium on Sunday. Whales Heading Back To Ocean

By KAREN McGRATH
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Three young pilot whales nursed back to health after they beached in December were headed to sea aboard a ship today for what scientists hoped would be the first multiple adoption by a herd of the marine mammals.

Notch, Baby and Big Brute were rescued in December from a Cape Cod beach and taken to a 60,000-gallon tank at the New England Aquarium. They were put Sunday in a tank on the 187-foot Albatross IV, which set an Atlantic Ocean course for a pod, or herd, of whales near Georges Bank.

"This is the best thing for them," said aquarium spokeswoman Sandra Goldfarb. Pilot whales are social animals and travel in herds, so scientists hope the pod will accept the trio, she said.

By midmorning, the aquarium ship was about 115 miles off Boston, south of Nantucket Island, surrounded by about 100 whales that the three were to join, according to Ms. Goldfarb.

Carrie Vanderstadt, a lab assistant at the New England Aquarium, said the move would cause the whales some stress.

The calves floundered in about 18 inches of water at the aquarium Sunday before 12 scientists lifted them into heavy jackets. A crane hoisted the whales by the jackets onto an 18-wheel truck for the short trip to the Albatross at a pier in Boston Harbor.

All three of the 2-year-old, half-ton calves are outfitted with tracking tags, allowing scientists to track the whales, which relate to and follow each other. The tags were designed to fall off after about six months.

If the pod rejects the whales, scientists hope it will let the calves follow behind. If total rejection occurs, scientists hope the calves can survive on their own, Ms. Goldfarb said.

"We have a lot to learn from this," she said.

If the calves' return to sea is successful, it will be the first time more than one whale was returned its natural habitat after a beaching.

The calves' fate will determine whether scientists should interfere in future beachings, in which whales overheat and suffer severe internal injuries from the crush of their own weight without the buoyancy of water.

Theories abound on why whales beach. Ms. Goldfarb said the December beaching seems to confirm the notion that if whales are feeding in a shallow area and something happens, such as sudden bad weather, they swim instinctively toward shore.

More than 50 whales feeding in shallow water beached in December. More than 25 died; others were guided successfully back into the ocean, but not placed into other pods.

Notch, Baby and Big Brute were nursed back to health, but another calf was given a lethal injection because it wasn't eating enough to survive.

Loblolly Study

GREENSBORO (AP) — Three North Carolina scientists have set up a $4 million, five-year research project in Duke Forest to study the effects of acid rain and ozone on loblolly pines.

"The loblolly pine is a major tree species for forest production in this country," said Lance W. Kress, a plant pathologist with the U.S. Forest Service and one of three major investigators of the project.

The others are Walter W. Heck and H. Lee Allen,, professors of botany at N.C. State University. The research, sponsored by the Forest Service and the Environmental Protection Agency, involves 30 people.

The research will help officials compare the dollar value of crop lost to the cost of cleaning up pollution.

Anti-Klan March

CHARLOTTE (AP) — More than 200 people took part in a march through Charlotte Saturday, and participants said they wanted to show their support for racial harmony.

A coalition organized the march to support justice and freedom and to protest Klan activities, including a Charlotte Klan march planned for July 4. Saturday's march followed the route chosen by the Klan.

Gore Launches Presidential Bid

By EVANS WITT
AP Political Writer

CARTHAGE, Tenn. (AP) — Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee is beginning a dark-horse quest to become the youngest president in the nation's history, hoping a Southern heritage and an appeal to a new generation of Americans are the keys to the 1988 Democratic nomination.

A Vietnam veteran and onetime divinty student, Gore makes his formal announcement of his candidacy today on the steps of the Smith County Courthouse in his family's hometown, just outside Nashville.

His father, long a senator and congressman from Tennesseee, will be at his side, as will his wife, Tipper, a crusader against obscene rock lyrics.

Gore will be the first Southerner to enter the race that some say will be decided in the South on March 8, 1988. That is Super Tuesday, when all the region's states except one will vote in primaries or caucuses.

But he may not be the last Southerner to toss his hat into the ring. Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia is under intense pressure to declare his intentions, while Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton has promised an announcement of his plans soon.

Gore, the second-generation politician from the rolling country of Middle Tennesse, is in his 11th year in Congress, with four terms in the House and two years in the Senate behind him.

He is 39 years old, the youngest of the 1988 presidential candidates by more than five years. Should he win the nomination and the election, Gore would be the youngest person ever to serve as president, taking office in January 1989 just short of his 41st birthday.

Theodore Roosevelt was the youngest man sworn into the highest office, taking his oath at 42 years of age. John Kennedy was next, sworn in at 43.

Gore, the sixth candidate to enter the 1988 Democratic race, has tried to turn his youth to his advantage, saying it is time for the country "to turn to youth, to vigor and to intellectual capacity."

He hopes to appeal to the Baby Boom generation of Americans, as the first of its representatives to enter the 1988 race. The Baby Boom, consisting of Americans born between roughly 1946 and 1964, resulted from the surge of births that followed two wars.

"The so-called Baby Boom generation is by far the largest single genration this country has ever seen. ... American is ready to feel young again," Gore says.

Gore is not alone in his Baby Boom pitch, with Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware making a similar plea in his announcement earlier in the month.

The race for the Democratic nomination is wide open after the departure of front-runner Gary Hart amid controversy over his relationship with a Miami woman.

But Gore is still an unknown to most Americans. An ABC News-Washington Post poll at the start of the month said nearly 7 out of 10 Americans didn't know enough about him to make a judgment, one of the highest levels of unfamiliarity found among all the contenders for the White House.

The junior senator from his state has been an off-again, on-again presidential hopeful. He first said in March he would not run.

But major Democratic fund-raisers asked him to reconsider. With the backing of 17 major donors who promised to raise $250,000 each for him, Gore announced on April 10 he would enter the race.

While Gore has Southern roots, he was born in Washington, D.C., on March 31, 1948, while Albert Sr. was a congressman. He attended the exclusive St. Albans School in Washington and went on to Harvard University.

In the middle of his father's final, bitter campaign for re-election, Gore was drafted at the height of the Vietnam War. Although he opposed the war as his father did, he served in Vietnam during a two-year hitch in the Army from 1969 until 1971.

After the Army, he worked as a reporter on the Nashville Tennessean and spent a year in divinty school and two years in law school at Vanderbilt University.

In 1976, he ran for an open House seat and won the first of four terms.

Gore and his wife have four children.

Drowning

RALEIGH (AP) — A Durham man drowned at Falls Lake during a party celebrating his 26th birthday, authorities say.

Jeffery Whitehead Taylor was pulled from the lake at Sandlin Point about 8:30 p.m. Saturday after family members reported him missing. They had searched for more than an hour before they notified a park ranger.

Taylor had been at Sandlin Point for his birthday party with about 10 family members, Wake County Sheriff's deputy D.E. McGee said.

Your Social Security Disability Benefits

ADDIE'S ADVICE

BENEFITS DENIED?

Have you been denied benefits under Social Security's disability benefits programs? Do not be discouraged. That happens to most people who apply the first time.

Have you asked for reconsideration of your disability claim and been turned down a second time? Again, don't be discouraged or give up. That's the way the disability system works today.

Take your case one step further and go before a Social Security Administrative Law Judge for a hearing with a qualified representative to present your case. Then the chances of your winning benefits are somewhere between 70% and 80%. The Judge will see you and hear your personal description of your physical or mental illness, and your representative will present your case as it applies to the complex rules of the Social Security Act.

If you have a hearing requested or scheduled before an Administrative Law Judge, call now for an immediate conference. There is no fee for an initial conference to discuss your eligibility for disability.

TV Debate Kicks Off Series Of Faceoffs For Contenders

By EVANS WITT
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Voters get a formal introduction this week to the crowded field of Democratic presidential hopefuls in a nationally televised debate kicking off a series of candidate confrontations for the 1988 primary season.

The two-hour special edition of William Buckley's "Firing Line" on Wednesday will be followed by debates sponsored by two major television networks, several newspapers, the Iowa Farm Unity Coalition and others.

The traditional debate sponsor — the League of Women Voters — is weighing in again during the 1988 presidential primary campaigns with strategically placed pairs of debates before the New Hampshire and Super Tuesday primaries. The League will hold two more sets of primary debates later in the season if the contests are still hot.

This rush of debates — with more scheduled than ever before — may turn the crucial two months from Jan. 8 to March 8, 1988, into a carrousel of televised confrontations, stopping only for the actual caucus and primary balloting.

The special edition of "Firing Line" to be broadcast live on the Public Broadcasting Service from Houston will be the earliest nationally televised debate among presidential candidates ever. It will be followed Sept. 2 by a similar show with the Republican candidates.

"I don't think the debate is too early," says "Firing Line" producer Warren Steibel. "It's in the middle of the campaign."

Invited for the "Firing Line" session are Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois, Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

With most of the Democratic candidates little known outside their home states and regions, the debates will start the process of structuring the field.

"The 'Firing Line' shows are meant to be 'Here they are, folks. There is a lot you don't know about these candidates,'" says PBS Vice President Barry Chase. "It's time to get started. ... It's conceivable that someone could be made or broken by this."

Harrison Hickman, a Democratic pollster, says the shows "will help sort the candidates out." He says the news media will start "tiering the field," deciding which candidates are out front, which are in the second tier and which are bringing up the rear.

The "Firing Line" debate will feature an innovative format with two moderators and film clips of seven Democratic hopefuls to spur the discussions. Buckley, a conservative Republican columnist, will be joined by prominent Democratic activist Robert Strauss in the moderator's role.

Steibel said the show will feature brief autobiographical pieces to introudce each candidate and also short clips from the candidates on the stump to help structure the debate and to break up the question-answer routine.

Buckley and Strauss will pose a question to each candidate in turn, with 90 seconds allotted for the answer. Then each of the other candidates will have 45 seconds to comment, rebut or give his views. Each will have a two-minute closing statement.

Steibel said "the really serious candidates were invited" when the show was put together earlier this year.

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton and Rep. Patricia Schroeder of Colorado — both seriously considering entering the race — were not invited.

The Republican version of the Buckley show with the six GOP contenders is scheduled for Sept. 2, also from Houston.

That show — originally scheduled for July 1 — was delayed when Vice President George Bush and Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, the two leaders in the GOP race, refused to attend a July 1 debate.

After the Sept. 2 debate, NBC News has scheduled a debate Dec. 1 with all the contenders, both Democratic and Republican. NBC anchorman Tom Brokaw will moderate that two-hour debate from the Kennedy Center in Washington.

CBS News promises two debates before the February 1988 Iowa caucuses.

The Des Moines Register wants to hold a Republican debate Jan. 8 and Democratic debate Jan. 15. The Iowa Farm Unity Coalition has one on Jan. 23. The Iowa Brown and Black Coalition would like to hear from Democrats on Jan. 20 and Republicans on Jan. 27.

The League of Women Voters has a Democratic debate Feb. 13 and a Republican debate Feb. 14 in New Hampshire before that state's first-in-the-nation primary. The league has another pair scheduled — Republicans on March 5 and Democrats on March 6 — just before the March 8 Super Tuesday primaries. The Democratic Leadership Council also wants to hold a debate before Super Tuesday, since it played a role in scheduling all the southern primaries on that date.

The Dallas Morning News, KERA-TV and Texas Monthly have promised debates Feb. 18-19 in Dallas.

The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution are sponsoring two debates: Feb. 27 for Democrats and Feb. 28 for Republicans.

Angolans Release U.S. Pilot

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — An American pilot held for two months in Angola as a suspected spy was turned over to a U.S. congressional delegation as an act of goodwill toward the United States, Angola's state-run news agency said.

The pilot, Joseph Frank Longo, 33, of Greensburg, Pa., told Angolan authorities he was flying a light plane to South Africa for delivery there when he strayed accidentally into Angolan airspace and was shot down in April.

In an elaborate ceremony Sunday during a special session of Angola's People's Assembly in Luanda, Longo was handed over to a U.S. congressional delegation, said Angola's official ANGOP news agency.

The delegation was to fly back to the United States with Longo today.

Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich, chairman of the House African Affairs subcommittee and head of the delegation, was quoted by ANGOP as saying: "Longo's release is a demonstration of the Angolan government's interest in establishing better relations with the United States."

In addition to Wolpe, the delegation included Reps. Mickey Leland, D-Texas, and John P. Murtha, D-Pa.

The news report, monitored in Lisbon, quoted Longo as saying: "I was very well treated in Angola." The report made no mention of the Marxist-ruled government's earlier suspicions that Longo was acting as a spy for South Africa.

Andre Passy, a member of the Angola's foreign affairs committee, was quoted as saying: "The release of this pilot once again shows Angola's marked humanitarianism."

Longo's father, Bernie, said Sunday night he was happy to hear of his son's release.

"The one word that comes through to me is relieved. Just relieved that he's on his way home ... We got a lot of help from everybody," Longo, 66, a retired draftsman, said from his home near Ligonier, Pa.

The past two months have been "a nightmare," the elder Longo said.

Training Blast Kills 3 Soldiers

HOHENFELS, West Germany (AP) — A team of U.S. military experts has been sent to West Germany to investigate an explosion that killed three American soldiers and injured up to 30 others during a training exercise, officials said.

U.S. military authorities said 12 soldiers were hospitalized and West German police said up to 30 servicemen were injured, some seriously, in the accident Sunday at the U.S. Army's largest maneuver area in West Germany, about 35 miles southeast of Nuremberg.

The accident occurred when a cratering charge, used to blow holes in the ground, detonated during routine demolition training Sunday morning, according to a statement issued by the Army's 5th Corps headquarters in Frankfurt.

The cratering device probably contained several pounds of explosives, West German police experts said.

The names of the victims were withheld pending notification of relatives, the statement said. The soldiers were members of the 58th Combat Engineer Company, part of the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment headquartered in Fulda, West Germany.

The accident was the most serious involving the U.S. military in West Germany since an unarmed Pershing-2 missile caught fire Jan. 11, 1985, killing three soldiers and injuring 16 others.

U.S. military authorities said a team from the Army Safety Center at Fort Rucker, Ala., was flown to West Germany to head the investigation. The cause of the blast was not known, they said.

The Army statement said two soldiers were pronounced dead upon arrival Sunday and another died shortly after being admitted to a hospital.

The Army said the hospitalized soldiers suffered a variety of injuries.

Florida Services Tax Brings Suits, Boycott Threats

By ED BIRK
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Florida's 5 percent sales tax on services goes into effect Wednesday amid lawsuits, threats of boycotts, canceled conventions and gloomy predictions about the state's usually sunny economy.

Passed by the Legislature and signed into law by Gov. Bob Martinez in April, the tax has caused revolt among industries across the state and nation.

Hundreds of businesses, including advertising, construction, newspaper sales, pest control, and fees charged by professionals such as lawyers, engineers and architects, are subject to the tax. Exempted are doctors' bills and medicines.

Many of the loudest opponents have been advertising and broadcasting interests. Several have pledged boycotts of Florida markets and have canceled conventions and other business in the state.

About 60 companies and organizations that had scheduled meetings or conventions in Florida through 1991 have pulled out, according to the state Department of Commerce.

Other groups, including lawyers, newspaper and magazine publishers, television networks, contractors and financial organizations, have gone to court against the tax.

Martinez, a Republican, and the Democratic-controlled Legislature pushed hard for the tax to help pay for the public construction and services needed to cope with Florida's rapid population growth.

It is expected to generate some $750 million over the next fiscal year, and more than $1 billion is expected in the second year.

Randy Miller, director of the state Department of Revenue, isn't impressed by predictions of economic doom.

"I think all the speculation at this point is just that; speculation. We won't know for quite a while whether it will impact the economy. We don't think it will," Miller said Friday.

The first payments to Miller's agency are due in August from 120,000 companies. Since last week, an automated phone system has been calling businesses across the state, notifying whoever answers of their obligation to register with the department.

Although the department was receiving several thousand registration letters daily, fewer than 100,000 had registered toward the end of last week.

From the day the tax law was enacted, it has been the target of lawsuits and promises of retaliation at the polls.

A Miami attorney announced plans last week for a petition drive to place a referendum on November's statewide ballot, asking voters to decide whether to keep the tax.

Even Martinez's predecessor, U.S. Sen. Bob Graham, who sometimes was accused of being a tax-and-spend Democrat, questioned the tax, saying lawmakers did not assess Florida's needs before hammering the measure into law.

On Friday, a federal judge refused to consider arguments from a Tallahassee lawyer who charged the tax would place an unfair burden on litigants in federal court cases because of its effect on lawyers' fees. The plaintiff promised to appeal.

An advisory opinion is still pending from the Florida Supreme Court on the tax's constitutionality. Martinez, seeking to head off a flurry of lower court suits, asked for a non-binding ruling. The court heard an unusual six hours of oral arguments in the case last week.

Supporters of the tax say any political fallout will settle by the time elections roll around, when politicians have had enough time to spend the revenue and show voters the money was well spent.

Martinez, who campaigned as a fiscal conservative, says his support of the tax doesn't clash with those pledges.

"I've come here to do a job, and I've got the long view for Florida," he said last week. "I'm a native here, and I have a great deal of concern for the quality of life we have."

"All those who feel they want to be governor in 1990, the field is open, and I'll be there waiting," Martinez said.

Divers Eye Shipwreck

BOSTON (AP) — When the RMS Republic struck another ship and sank off Nantucket Island in 1909, the 450 millionaires who were among those saved left behind a treasure trove that some say is now worth more than $1.6 billion.

Sometime this week, divers hope to begin recovering the jewelry, gold coins and other valuables, said salvor Robert Polackwich of Tampa, Fla.

"It's potentially one of the greatest treasures ever recovered," he said.

By comparison, the Spanish galleon Nuestra Senora de Atocha, which was discovered off the Florida Keys by Mel Fisher, has yielded an estimated $250 million worth of treasure and is expected to give up $100 million more.

The salvage of the 600-foot-long Republic began last week with preliminary work at the ship's resting place 280 feet below the Atlantic Ocean's surface and 55 miles southeast of Nantucket.

The Republic, described as "the grand hotel of the seas," was owned by tycoon J.P. Morgan's White Star Shipping Lines, which also owned the ill-fated Titanic, which sank three years later after hitting an iceberg.

Court Weddings Judged Unworthy Of Family Gifts

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Here's a question I'll bet you've never been asked: Why do friends and relatives think gifts need not be given to newlyweds unless they have a wedding?

Due to my husband's serious illness, surgery and subsequent early retirement, our thoughtful and considerate daughter and her fiance were married by a judge at the courthouse in order to eliminate the expense of a church wedding. Like all brides, our daughter had dreamed of a beautiful white gown, attendants, etc., but she knew we couldn't afford to give her one without going into debt. This was not a "have to" wedding — both have good jobs and are mature individuals. She's 22 and he's 28.

They've been married for a year and a half, and not one wedding gift was received from either our side or his! This hurts them and angers me, especially since my daughter and we have spent a small fortune on wedding gifts for others. Any comments? — GREATLY DISAPPOINTED

DEAR DISAPPOINTED: There are those who give a wedding gift to express their love and friendship for the newlyweds. This is pure, unselfish giving when nothing is expected in return.

Then there are those who regard a wedding gift as fair exchange for an invitation to a wedding that includes food, drink, music, dancing and all the hoopla that costly weddings offer.

Unfortunately, your friends and relatives — and those of your new son-in-law — belong to the latter group.

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for printing "In Memory of Beau" — that comforting piece about putting an old and feeble dog to sleep.

I knew that Lady, my Siamese cat of 18 years, could not last much longer, so I cut that article out of your column. Lady had been my friend and my "baby" for 18 years — an inside cat who took every step I took and slept next to me with her head tucked into my hand. My husband had given Lady to me on our 22nd anniversary. It was the best gift he ever gave me. Last night was the first night she couldn't make it to the bed with me. She had eaten no food or water for days and could hardly move.

I sat for several hours today rereading the last paragraph of your article: "Please see that my trusting life is taken gently. I shall leave this earth knowing with the last breath I draw that my fate was always safest in your hands." Then I picked up the phone and called the vet to come.

I told the vet that because she trusted me, I wanted to hold Lady as she was put to sleep, so that she would have no knowledge of what was going to happen. So I held her in my arms as he gave her one quick injection. And within seconds, without pain or fear, my Lady died with my tears and kisses on her sweet face.

The vet lovingly helped me wrap her in a blanket and put her in a box. Then my husband and I buried her in our rose garden where she will be near me always.

Dear God in heaven, if it hurts this much to lose a beloved pet, what devastation it must be to lose a beloved child. Thank you, Abby. — JEANNE IN ANNA, TEXAS

Garden Ceremony Performed Friday

The bride was given in marriage by her father, Wayne Howell of Snow Hill. She chose a candlelight tea-length dress and a bouquet of pink miniature carnations, aalstromeria, stephanotis and gypsophilia, tied with white bridal ribbon.

Jean King served as the matron of honor and Jerry McGalliard was the best man. Both are from Greenville.

Laura Hess, the bridegroom's daughter, and Crissy Howell of Snow Hill, the bride's niece, were flower girls.

A program of music for the ceremony was presented by pianist George Mewborn of Snow Hill and soloist Reynold Taylor of Raleigh.

The matron of honor wore a mauve tea-length dress and carried a bouquet of pink alstromeria, pink miniature carnations, baby's breath and picot ribbon. The flower girls wore white eyelet dresses with short pouf sleeves and dropped waistlines accented with pink ribbons. Each carried a basket adorned with pink ribbons holding miniature pink and white carnations and baby's breath.

A reception given by family and friends was held following the ceremony at the the Wade home.

The bride and bridegroom are both graduates of East Carolina University. She has a bachelor's degree in early childhood education and is currently employed with Dr. Jasper Lewis. He has a master's degree in physical education from the university and is employed by Pitt County schools.

Building Dedicated

Superior Court Judge David Reid, who introduced Branch, said of Everett, "He is an example of the type of professional a young man should seek to emulate."

Kay V. Whichard, vice chairman of the PCC Board of Trustees, unveiled a portrait of Everett which will hang in the entrance hall of the building. She was assisted by Everett's son, Clifton W. Everett Jr.

Mrs. Whichard said that she has served on the board with Everett for 25 years, during which time the institution has expanded dramatically. "Much of this growth is due to his leadership," she said of Everett. "His timely advice and counsel have been exemplary.

"He is a scholar who understands the importance of an education for all people of Pitt County," she added.

Everett responded, "To say that I am honored to have this beautiful and essential building on the campus of Pitt Community College named for me is an understatement. This is one of the highest compliments that one can receive.

"This has been a high experience for me — one which I may not deserve but am glad to get," he added.

A native of Robersonville, Everett was valedictorian of his class at Robersonville High School. He received his bachelor of arts degree magna cum laude from Wake Forest University, and also graduated magna cum laude from the Wake Forest University School of Law.

Everett is a licensed attorney and has practiced law in Bethel and Greenville for many years. He is presently a counsel in the law firm of Everett, Everett, Warren & Harper of Bethel and Greenville.

He has served as president of the Pitt County Bar Association, president of the 3rd Judicial District Bar Association and a member of the board of governors of the North Carolina Bar Association.

He was elected councilor of the N.C. State Bar in 1983-1984. During his term as president, the N.C. State Bar "Client Security Fund" and "Interest on Lawyers' Trust Accounts" were established.

He is a member of the American Bar Association and currently is serving as a delegate from North Carolina on the ABA House of Delegates. He served as a member of the Governor's Judicial Nominating Committee and chairman of the drafting committee on eminent domain of the General Statute Commission.

He was mayor of Bethel from 1956-1961 and served in the N.C. House of Representatives during the 1961 session. He was a member of the Bethel school board from 1954-1970.

He is a member of the board of directors of Home Federal Savings and Loan Association of Eastern North Carolina, serving as its general counsel and a member of the advisory board of Wachovia Band and Trust Co.

He has served as a member of the Alumni Executive Committee of the Wake Forest University School of Law and is a member of the board of visitors of the school. In 1987 he was honored by the law school as the outstanding alumnus for service.

He has been active in civic organizations, including the Bethel Rotary Club, the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, the Pitt County Mental Health Association, the Red Cross and the United Fund. He is past master of Bethel Masonic Lodge No. 589 and is a member of the New Bern Scottish Rite Sudan Temple. He served as counsel to the grand master of North Carolina Masons during 1981-1982 and is a member of the committee on jurisprudence of the Grand Lodge of North Carolina.

Fries

ports some from Canada and The Netherlands, but much more from the United States. Gressel said Japan gets only a negligible amount from Belgium, which many people have considered the french-fries capital of the world. In his opinion, that's changed.

"We are now," he said.

Glenn Samson, in charge of overseas promotion for U.S. Wheat Associates, said pizza is doing very well, with the support of the federal government.

"That's been going on for 10 years," he said. "(South) Korea has opened up, the Philippines, Taiwan and even India."

Writing in the July issue of the department's "Foreign Agriculture," Gressel describes potential for a big increase in sales of french fries. In the United States, 85 out of every 100 fast-food customers order a side dish of french fries. So far only 40 out of every 100 Japanese do the same.

U.S. producers have adapted their frozen potatoes for use in Japanese homes, which often have toaster ovens but not deep fryers. Japanese traditionally have not bought large quantities of frozen products, so the potatoes have been pre-fried and sold in smaller packages, 10.5 ounces to 17.5 ounces.

Producers are looking to expand the market to potato patties and shredded potato balls that also are deep fried.

The National Potato Promotion Board, a private organization, has been hard at work in the Far East, according to Gressler. In 1986-7 it received $2 million from the U.S. government's Targeted Export Assistance Program, almost all of which it spent in Japan.

There now is a Japan Potato Committee made up of a Japanese representative of the U.S. board, and marketing managers from McDonald's and Kentucky Fried Chicken as well as from the Japanese divisions of Lamb-Weston and Ore-Ida, which sell frozen potatoes.

U.S. exports of frozen potatoes to Japan rose from 14,874 tons in 1978 to 62,391 tons in 1986, Gressel reported.

Graf Wins

Navratilova, Shriver Get Wins, Advance

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Defending women's champion Martina Navratilova and fifth-seeded Pam Shriver advanced to the fourth round at Wimbledon today with straight-set victories in all-American matches.

Navratilova, aiming for a record sixth consecutive singles title, defeated Peanut Harper 6-2, 6-2, while Shriver, who plays doubles with the top seed, beat Beth Herr, also 6-2, 6-2.

Women's seeds who won on Saturday included No. 2 Steffi Graf, who beat Laura Gildemeister of Peru, 6-2, 6-1 in 50 minutes, and No. 5 Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia, who beat Britain's Jo Durie 6-1, 6-3.

For the 12th time in the tournament, a seed was eliminated. Ros Fairbank of South Africa ousted women's ninth-seeded Bettina Bunge of West Germany 7-6, 6-4, closing the match with an ace.

The second week of the grass-court Grand Slam tournament opened under decidedly different conditions than the first.

A week ago, the opening day was rained out, and bad weather claimed another 1½ days of the next five.

But British summer was in force Monday, with hazy sunshine, high humidity and temperatures expected in the mid-80s.

Not much had changed, however, for Navratilova and Shriver. Both moved into the final 16 without having lost a set.

Harper used well-placed groundstrokes to take as many games from Navratilova as the defending champion had lost in her two matches combined.

But Navratilova's serves and volleys were too strong and she wrapped up match in 47 minutes, losing just five points on her serve on Court No. 2.

She served seven aces, including match point, and just three faults, meaning she had to make a second serve just three times, as she stretched her Wimbledon winning streak to 38 matches.

Shriver, playing on Court No. 1, also used a strong serve-and-volley game to beat Herr.

Also winning in the women's draw was Mary Joe Fernandez of the United States, beating another American, Alycia Moulton, 7-6, 6-2. Fernandez, a 16-year-old from Miami, Fla., ousted 13th-seeded Barbara Potter on Friday.

The men's field was wide open as the second week started, following the ouster last Friday of defending champion Boris Becker of West Germany.

It also has seen the emergence of a "Yankee killer," Alexander Volkov of the Soviet Union.

Ranked 503rd in the world, the 20-year-old left-hander from Moscow made the men's field through the qualifying rounds, beating Americans Brian Teacher and Bud Cox in the final two rounds.

Since the 101st grass-court championships began one week ago, Volkov has kept up the attack on U.S. players become the first from the Soviet Union to reach the fourth round at Wimbledon since Alex Metrevelli was a finalist in 1973.

The latest Yank to fall was Brad Gilbert, the 12th seed, beaten on Saturday by Volkov 4-6, 0-6, 6-3, 6-4.

Volkov's victory over Gilbert added to the withering presence of U.S. men at Wimbledon this year.

America had the most players, 41, in the men's draw when the tournament began. By the start of today's play, with the third round less than half finished, that number had been cut to five — Jimmy Connors, Tim Mayotte, Lief Shiras, Paul Annacone and Johan Kriek.

Annacone was to play Guy Forget of France in the third round today and Shiras, along with Volkov the only qualifiers left in the field, was to meet Peter Doohan, the Australian who eliminated Becker.

Police Find No Game Fixing

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Local police were tipped two days before the Feb. 21 Phoenix Suns-Milwaukee Bucks NBA game that a bar manager traded cocaine for a promise from players to "assure a certain point total" for a bet on the game, according to investigative reports police have kept secret for two months.

But in an intensive investigation after that tip, police found no drugs or evidence that NBA players agreed to fix games for gamblers, according to the 1,128-page report obtained by the Mesa Tribune and reported by the paper in a copyright story for its Sunday editions.

What they did find was a collection of allegations that players and others used small quantities of drugs on a recreational basis for nearly a decade — allegations used to indict some players and to induce others to testify against their teammates before a Maricopa County grand jury.

The report, which police and prosecutors have refused to make public, details surveillance of two restaurants, a nightclub, a golf course and Phoenix homes, as police tried to photograph drug and gambling suspects.

When compared with transcripts of grand jury proceedings, the report also raises questions about how accurately Phoenix detective Gary Ball summarized the information gathered in the investigation.

When capsulizing the statements for the grand jury, Ball said there was no uncertainty about when, where and with whom the players said they used drugs. But transcripts of the players' interviews with police show they were frequently vague or could not remember specifics about their drug use.

The prosecutor, blocked by a gag order from commenting on the case, has in court documents denied defense attorney's allegations that Ball misled the grand jury.

Thirteen people were indicted in the case, including Suns center James Edwards and guards Grant Gondrezick and Jay Humphries plus former Phoenix players Garfield Heard and Mike Bratz.

Winning Form

Earnhardt Avoids Allison Charge

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Davey Allison is expected to become a star someday on the Winston Cup NASCAR racing circuit.

The 26-year-old rookie got what could prove to be a valuable driving lesson on Sunday as he finished second to Dale Earnhardt in the Miller American 400.

As a record crowd of 78,000 watched at the Michigan International Speedway, Allison mounted a last-ditch effort on the last turn of the last lap only to come up short by .29 seconds.

Earnhardt, the defending NASCAR champion and this year's points leader, successfully held off the stubborn Allison to win his first race at the speedway and seventh of the season.

Earnhardt averaged 148.454 mph over the 200-lap event.

Allison is the son of Bobby Allison who has 85 career victories and is third on the all-time list of winners.

Earnhardt, driving the Richard Childress Chevrolet, took the checkered flag to collect $60,250 while Allison claimed $27,575 for second in his Halvoline Ford.

Allison's father finished 27th and won $9,360. That gave Davey earnings of $211,285 in 10 starts while his father has won $203,940 in 14 outings.

Davey Allison wiped out a deficit of two seconds in the last 12 laps and caught Earnhardt with a lap to go.

In turn four, Allison went high and Earnhardt low. Earnhardt dove lower still coming out of the turn and held on for the victory.

"I think inexperience had something to do with it," Allison said. "If I had been on the circuit longer maybe I could have passed him.

"I knew I was catching him on every lap and I was planning out what I was going to try to do. I had to come up with something.

"I might have had him in turn three but I drifted up to the wall and couldn't get the car to turn. I knew Dale would never give up the inside (line). When I went up outside of him, I couldn't turn the car. It pushed and he beat me to the line."

Earnhardt agreed that his experience helped pave the way to his 27th career victory.

"We were having a problem with the fuel pickup system so I was running low to keep the fuel on the right side," Earnhardt said.

"I lost some time to him on those last few laps and probably, if we'd had a couple more laps, he would have caught us.

"But the race was over when it was over and Davey just ran out of time."

Tillman Paces Wayne County By Pitt

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

Wayne County pitcher Tony Tillman overcame a shaky fourth inning to shackle Pitt County on four hits as Post 11 took a 9-6 Area I American Legion baseball win Sunday night.

The loss snapped a three-game winning streak for Post 39 and left Wayne County alone atop the Area I standings with a 10-5 mark.

"He threw a good ballgame," said Pitt County coach Toby Holliday of Tillman's effort. "We didn't hit him. He was getting behind (in the count) a couple of times but didn't wait on him."

The only time Post 39 got Tillman in trouble was in the fourth, pushing across five of its six runs.

Tillman struck out seven of the first nine batters he faced before his forgettable fourth.

With one out, Jason Galloway drew a walk and went to second on a wild pitch. Axel Smith then singled him home to make it 5-1. David Daniels followed with a walk and went to second on Robbie McDonald's fielder's choice which scored Smith.

Eric Jarman then came up and slapped an RBI single to score Daniels. An error on the play allowed McDonald to score and put Jarman at third. Bronswell Patrick followed with a single to score Jarman and make it 5-5.

"We did a good job battling back," Holliday said. "We had our chances."

Disaster struck for Post 39 in the seventh. Allan Battle opened with a single, one of his three hits on the night. He went to third on a passed ball and scored on a Randy Hood's reach on an error. Hood then scored on another error on the subsequent throw to third to give Post 11 all the cushion it would need.

Pitt County pulled within one run in the seventh when Ty Little walked, went to second on a wild pitch, stole third and scored on an errant throw.

That was as close as Pitt would get. Wayne County had two more runs in the ninth when Battle opened the inning with a double. Two outs later, Mike Lanier singled in Battle and Dexter Evans followed with a single that knocked in Lanier.

Tillman gave up a single to Bronswell Patrick in the bottom of the ninth but got the final three batters to fly out and ground out twice.

Tillman had 15 strikeouts on the night while raising his record to 3-0. Patrick had two of the hits off of him.

"There was just a mental letdown when we got a five-run lead," said Wayne County coach Dee Glover. "He (Tillman) did a good job after that holding them to one run."

With the win, Wayne County took a sweep over Pitt in the Area I regular season. Post 11 won the first game 3-2 and the second by a count of 8-2.

"We've beaten them three times," Glover said. "But, the league is really balanced. You can take all seven teams and there is really no difference."

Sherwood Wilder started the game for Pitt but lasted only three and one third innings. He gave up five hits and four runs, only two of which were earned. He was replaced by Patrick in the third.

Patrick, who suffered his first loss of the season against two wins, gave up five hits and five runs.

Pitt committed six errors on the day while Post 11 had three.

"We cut down on our mental mistakes and it's a whole different ball game," Holliday said. "He (Tillman) was pitching well. Bronswell was pitching well. They didn't kill us with the bats."

Pitt County falls to 8-6 and loses an

Jordan And Perkins Pace UNC Alums

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michael Jordan scored 18 points and Sam Perkins added 14 to pace a University of North Carolina alumni team to a 116-111 victory over UCLA alumni in Collegiate Legends Classic basketball Sunday at Pauley Pavilion.

Jack Haley had 18 points and Reggie Miller contributed 17 for UCLA, which led 68-56 at halftime.

The game featured players from the schools' teams of the past 30 years and the squads were coached by UCLA's John Wooden and North Carolina's Dean Smith.

The game was tied 23-23 after eight minutes and then UCLA went on a 10-2 spurt with Haley scoring seven to take a 33-25 advantage. The Bruins built their lead to 12 points at halftime.

In the first four minutes of the second half, the Bruins outscored the Tar Heels 13-7 to take an 81-63 lead.

But the Tar Heels slowly whittled away at UCLA and finally took the lead, 98-97, on a free throw by Matt Doherty with 6:51 remaining.

The lead went back and forth, with UCLA taking it, 108-107, with 1:23 remaining on a jumper by Andre McCarter.

But the Tar Heels scored nine of the game's last 12 points to win.

The proceeds from the game will inaugurate the John Wooden Scholarship Fund at UCLA and also benefit North Carolina's University Fund.

Azinger Wins Despite Jitters

CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) — Even though he had a three-stroke lead, Paul Azinger felt jittery when he awakened to play the final round of the Sammy Davis Jr.-Greater Hartford Open.

Considering the harrowing round of golf he was to play, he had good reason to be uneasy.

"I told my wife I was probably the only one in the field who was nervous," Azinger said. "Wayne Levi was three shots behind. I knew he needed to charge, and I know when I'm three shots back I'm not nervous."

Azinger had broken out of a slump to shoot rounds of 69 and 65, respectively, on the first two days of the tournament.

On Saturday, the 27-year-old shot what he called the round of his life, a bogey-free 63, to pull away from Levi and the rest of the field.

On Sunday, he needed every bit of that three-stroke margin to hold on and win the $700,000 tournament by one stroke over Dan Forsman and Levi and retake the PGA's earnings lead.

"With a three-shot lead at the start of the day I really felt a little defensive, like the other guys really had to come and get it," he said. "I didn't hit well at all. I was incredibly lucky to win."

Nonetheless, he finished at 15-under 269, tying Peter Jacobsen and Mac O'Grady for the 72-hole record over the par-71, 6,786-yard Tournament Players Club of Connecticut course.

Azinger's round of 72 included one birdie, two bogeys and a lot of scary moments.

Forsman, who shot a 67, and Levi, with a 70, couldn't make up the necessary ground and fell one stroke short.

The victory made Azinger the first three tournament winner on the PGA Tour this year. Scott Simpson and Corey Pavin, neither of whom played this week, each have two.

The $126,000 winner's check puts him ahead of Simpson for first place on the tour's earnings list. Azinger had been first until Simpson overtook him last week in the Open.

"Every day is different, especially when there's a lot of pressure on. It always feels a little bit different," said Azinger, who finished in a tie for third in last year's GHO.

He missed a six-foot putt for par on the 12th hole, but made a shorter one for birdie on the next hole.

Then he hit his drive into the large lake along the right side of the fairway on No. 17.

He hit his next shot about 15 feet over the green, but was able to chip back within two feet and make the putt to salvage a bogey.

Azinger's drive on the 18th hole went right again, but it bounded back out of the crowd and into the fairway.

He hit his second shot on the par-4 hole on the fringe of the green, about 20 feet from the flag then rolled the ball past the cup, leaving himself a seven-foot putt coming back to win.

"Boy did I take a long time before that second putt," he said. "When I put the putter head down it was quivering in my hand.

"I'm just thankful it went in."

Athletic/Academic Debate To Begin

DALLAS (AP) — A national debate on the delicate balance between intercollegiate athletics and academics at America's schools of higher education was to begin today at the President's Commission special NCAA Convention.

NCAA President Wilford S. Bailey of Auburn said Sunday that his idea of a successful convention would be "to have reasoned debate without acrimony; to make a beginning of coming to grips with cost containment."

Today's four-hour forum was to start an 18-month discussion of how mushrooming costs in intercollegiate athletics can be trimmed along with other more philosophical arguments such as honor and honesty in athletics.

The session was to open with a debate between Ira Michael Heyman, chancellor of California-Berkley, and Frank E. Horton, president of the University of Oklahoma.

Heyman believes college athletics should be de-emphasized while Horton advocates the benefits of major-college athletics.

Scheduled to follow were Anthony F. Ceddie, president of Shippensburg University of Pennsylvania (Division II), and Richard Warch, president of Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis. (Division III).

Baylor Gets Record

NEW YORK (AP) — Don Baylor has taken a lot of inside pitches in stride — on the arm, on the shoulder and on the back.

"I can think of other ways to get a birthday present," said Baylor, who turned 38 Sunday and broke Ron Hunt's major league record by being hit with a pitch for the 244th time. "You can always think of something else to break a record.

"I've always stood close. If I backed off, I'd be giving away some of the plate. I guess I don't know how to get out of the way. That's my secret."

Baylor broke the record when he was hit in the sixth inning by Rick Rhoden of the New York Yankees. The Boston Red Sox kept the record-setting ball and gave it to Baylor after their 6-2 victory.

Leading 3-2, Wade Boggs led off the Boston sixth with a single and Jim Rice followed with an RBI double to center before Baylor was hit to break the record. It was the 17th time he was hit this season.

Saturday night, Pitt County's Tom Moye scattered five hits over nine innings to help Post 39 roll by Snow Hill, 8-2.

Post 13 scored its only runs in the fifth and the ninth. Anthony Jones singled in Jamie Southerland for the first run while Barry Ginn's base hit in the ninth scored Shay Beaman.

The rest of the game it was all Pitt.

Shane Adams opened the first with a reach on an error, stole second and scored on a ground out by Axel Smith.

David Daniels then hit a solo homer, his third in as many games.

Adams added a solo homer of his own in the third inning and drove in Ty Little with a run in the fourth to make it 4-0 earlu on.

Eric Jarman sacrificed in David Daniels with another run in the fifth before Pitt scored three runs in the eighth to complete its scoring.

Ty Little opened with a double and later scored on an error. Tim Clark then reached on a sacrifice and scored on a ground out by Adams. Jason Galloway then singled and later scored on an error for the final run for Pitt.

Little went 3-4 to lead Pitt. Adams, Galloway and Daniels had two hits apiece.

Darling Loses No Hitter And Game

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

First, Ron Darling lost his no-hitter. Then, the New York Mets lost their most frustrating game of the season.

Darling held Philadelphia hitless for seven innings Sunday and had a 4-0 lead. But pinch-hitter Greg Gross lined a leadoff triple that started a three-run eighth and Mike Schmidt's RBI single capped a two-run rally in the ninth as the Phillies roughed up relievers Jesse Orosco and Roger McDowell for a 5-4 victory.

"The Mets don't like to give credit when they lose, but they have to do it today," Schmidt said.

The Mets hoped Darling would be able to end the worst slump of his career and give them some momentum entering the start of tonight's three-game series at home against National League East-leading St. Louis.

"I could see he wasn't going to make it by the first hit," Mets Manager Davey Johnson said of Gross' hit. "It would have been a big win for Darling and the team if we held on, but it's tough."

But what appeared to be exactly what Darling and the Mets needed suddenly turned to disaster. Darling threw more than 140 pitches and wound up with another no-decision. He has lost five straight decisions and not won in 13 starts since April 22.

"I would have loved to have gotten it," Darling said of a possible no-hitter, which would have been the first in the Mets' 26-year history. "I had thrown a lot of pitches, had walked a lot and had a lot of full counts. It was the right decision to bring a fresh arm in."

The Cardinals, meanwhile, beat Montreal 7-6 in 11 innings. The Mets and Expos are tied for second place, 6½ games behind St. Louis.

In other NL games Sunday, Los Angeles beat Cincinnati 4-2, San Francisco defeated Houston 8-4, Atlanta downed San Diego 5-2 and Pittsburgh beat Chicago 6-2.

Darling silenced a crowd of 52,206, the largest of the season at Veterans Stadium, by shutting down the Phillies for seven innings. His only problem was with control as he walked five.

Gross, batting for pitcher Don Carman, fouled off a 3-2 pitch and then lined a triple to right-center. Juan Samuel followed with a single that finished Darling.

Schmidt singled off Orosco and a passed ball by Gary Carter allowed Samuel to score. Glenn Wilson's RBI single off McDowell pulled the Phillies within 4-3.

Gross, Samuel and Rick Schu hit one-out singles in the ninth that tied the score. After Von Hayes flied out, Schmidt hit a line drive that center fielder Mookie Wilson barely missed on a backhand try and the ball fell for a game-winning single.

McDowell, 4-3, was the loser and Doug Bair, 1-0, got the victory.

Gross moved past Jerry Lynch into fourth place on the all-time pinch-hit list with 117.

"Basically, I was just trying to get on base, just like I always do," Gross said. "I was aware of the no-hitter, everybody was, but I wanted more to get on base."

Darling said he challenged Gross with a fastball down the middle. "I have to tip my hat to him. He's gotten a lot of pinch hits," Darling said.

There has never been a no-hitter in the 17-year history of Veterans Stadium, but Schmidt said the Phillies may have been ripe to become the first victim. Philadelphia began the game ranked last in the NL with a .245 team average.

"He wasn't no-hitting a juggernaut," Schmidt said.

Cardinals 7, Expos 6

Ozzie Smith atoned for muffing an earlier bunt try with a suicide squeeze in the 11th inning that lifted visiting St. Louis over Montreal.

In the ninth inning with the score 6-6, Smith fouled off a squeeze attempt with Curt Ford on third base and one out. But in the 11th, Ford led off with a double, took third on Vince Coleman's sacrifice bunt and scored on Smith's squeeze.

The Expos missed a chance to win the game in the bottom of the ninth when Todd Worrell struck out Tim Wallach and Hubie Brooks with the bases loaded.

Ken Dayley, 1-0, got the victory with two innings of one-hit relief. Jeff Parrett, 1-2, was the loser.

Dodgers 4, Reds 2

Pedro Guerrero hit a two-run homer during a four-run outburst in the sixth inning and Fernando Valenzuela pitched a five-hitter as Los Angeles beat Cincinnati.

Valenzuela, 7-5, struck out seven and walked one in his sixth complete game.

Guy Hoffman, who had won six straight decisions, shut out the host Dodgers on three singles before they got five consecutive extra-base hits in the sixth. Dave Anderson led off with a triple, Steve Sax and John Shelby had RBI doubles and Guerrero hit his 16th homer. Mike Marshall's double chased Hoffman, 6-2.

Giants 8, Astros 4

Pinch-hitter Harry Spilman hit a three-run homer and Will Clark homered and drove in three runs as San Francisco defeated Houston.

Spilman's sixth career pinch-hit homer capped a four-run fifth inning that made it 8-4 against Nolan Ryan 4-8. Clark hit a two-run homer and RBI single and Mike Aldrete had two run-scoring singles.

Pirates 6, Cubs 2

R.J. Reynolds' two-run single sparked a five-run rally with two outs in the eighth inning that carried Pittsburgh over Chicago.

The Pirates came back against Rick Sutcliffe, 10-4, and Lee Smith and sent the visiting Cubs to their fifth straight loss.

Braves 5, Padres 2

Graig Nettles hit a two-run homer and Gerald Perry hit a solo shot in San Diego as Atlanta broke a six-game losing streak.

Nettles' homer, his fourth of the season and second in two days, capped a three-run sixth inning against Ed Whitson, 8-7. Whitson had won four consecutive decisions.

Charlie Puleo, 2-1, got the victory and Gene Garber recorded the final two outs for his eighth save.

Matlock Finds Cure For Slump As Tigers Win, 8-7

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Bill Madlock found the cure for his slump.

"I got good pitches to hit because I was getting ahead in the count," Madlock said after hitting three home runs to lead the Detroit Tigers to a wild, 8-7 victory over the Baltimore Orioles in 11 innings Sunday.

Until breaking out with a bang, Madlock had been saddled in an 0-for 21 slump and had been generally struggling most of the season.

"During my slump, I had been getting behind 0-2 a lot," Madlock said, "but today it was 2-1, 2-0."

Madlock's splurge highlighted a day of power in the AL Sunday, as the teams combined for 28 home runs to run the total to 48 for the weekend. Included was a record performance by Oakland rookie sensation Mark McGwire, who hit three in Saturday's 13-3 victory and two in Sunday's 10-0 decision over the Cleveland Indians.

There were 28 homers hit in the American League Sunday, breaking the previous AL record for seven games of 27 set on May 28, 1961.

Elsewhere Sunday, it was Boston 6, New York 2; Kansas City 8, Seattle 3; California 13, Chicago 3; Milwaukee 11, Toronto 5, and Texas 6, Minnesota 3.

Madlock hit a two-run homer in the first inning and added a solo shot in the fifth. His third homer, also a solo shot, created a 7-7 tie in the ninth inning and made him the first Tiger to hit that many in one game since Larry Herndon did it on May 18, 1982.

Madlock then added a sacrifice bunt in the 11th to set up Alan Trammell's game-winning single.

"In a situation like that, you're trying to be a hero and I got lucky," said Trammell. "I cracked my bat, but I got just enough behind it."

Rangers 6, Twins 3

Oddibe McDowell broke a fourth-inning tie with a two-run homer and Jose Guzman pitched seven-hit ball over 7 1-3 as Texas beat visiting Minnesota to complete a four-game sweep.

Two of the hits off Guzman, 6-6, were homers by Kent Hrbek and Randy Bush. Reliever Mitch Williams pitched one inning and Dale Mohorcic got the final two outs for his 11th save.

Athletics 10, Indians 0

McGwire hit solo homers in the fourth and seventh innings off Tom Candiotti, 2-9, to give him 27, tying him with Toronto's George Bell for the major-league lead.

McGwire also doubled in the second and had an infield single in the eighth. In the ninth, he went out on a fly ball to the warning track in right field.

Thirteen other players have hit five homers over two games, but McGwire is the first rookie to accomplish the feat. The last player to hit five homers over two games was Gary Carter of the New York Mets on Sept. 3-4, 1985.

McGwire, who scored five runs Saturday, scored four more times Sunday. The nine runs in two games tied a major-league record held by four other players. The last player to do it was Melo Almada of the Washington Senators in 1937.

Jose Canseco also hit two home runs for the Athletics, his 13th and 14th of the season. He hit a three-run homer in the eighth and a solo shot in the ninth in support of Steve Ontiveros' two-hit pitching.

Red Sox 6, Yankees 2

Al Nipper pitched a five-hitter and Jim Rice drove in two runs to lead Boston over New York.

Nipper, 7-6, pitched his third complete game in his last four starts, allowing only one earned run, while striking out eight and walking two. Rice, who has 27 RBI in his last 32 games, knocked in runs with a single in the fourth and a double in the sixth.

In the sixth inning, Boston's Don Baylor was hit by a pitch for the 244th time in his career, breaking the major-league record set by Ron Hunt. Baylor, who followed Rice in the order, was hit by Rick Rhoden on the left shoulder, the 17th time he has been hit this year.

Royals 8, Mariners 3

Bo Jackson and George Brett hit home runs and Mark Gubicza pitched a five-hitter to pace Kansas City over Seattle.

Gubicza, 6-8, who had pitched complete games in his last two outings, recorded his third straight win. His string of 19 straight scoreless innings ended when the Mariners scored twice in the fourth inning.

Jackson's home run, his 15th, came with a man on base off reliever Roy Thomas and capped a six-run fifth inning in which the Royals took a 7-2 lead.

Brett hit Thomas' first pitch of the seventh inning for his fifth homer.

Angels 13, White Sox 3

Wally Joyner hit two home runs to lead a six-homer assault that lifted California over Chicago, giving the Angels their seventh straight victory.

Brian Downing, George Hendrick, Ruppert Jones and Devon White also homered as the Angels tied the club record of six homers in a game. California had accomplished the feat twice before, the last time against Oakland April 23, 1985.

Hendrick and Jones had pinch-hit home runs, equaling a major-league record. It was the 34th time that two pinch home runs have been hit in a game by one team, and the 16th time in the American League.

Willie Fraser, 5-5, pitched a five-hitter for his fourth complete game of the season.

Brewers 11, Blue Jays 5

Robin Yount and Cecil Cooper each homered and drove in three runs as Milwaukee beat Toronto to give left-hander Teddy Higuera his first victory in more than three weeks.

Higuera, 6-7, had won only once in his 12 previous starts before Sunday. He gave up nine hits in seven innings, including George Bell's 27th homer in the first.

Snow Hill Takes Two Wins From Edenton

EDENTON — Snow Hill swept a double header from Edenton Sunday to even its record at 1-1 and jump back into the Area I American Legion baseball race.

Post 13 took the first game by a count of 7-5 and came back and won the second game going away, 13-2.

Snow Hill improves its record to 6-6 in legion play and returns to action Tuesday against Kinston.

In the first game, Edenton moved out to a 5-0 lead after three innings of play before Snow Hill got on the board with a run in the fourth.

Snow Hill then pushed across three runs in the fifth to narrow the gap to one at 5-4.

Tommy Eason started things off in the sixth when he drew a walk. Greg Patterson then reached on a fielder's choice that put no one out because of an error. Jamie Southerland followed with an RBI single to make it 5-2. Uly Russo singled. Anthony Jones followed that with a two-run single that scored Southerland and Patterson.

Snow Hill followed that up with three runs in the seventh as Eason, Patterson and Southerland all had RBI singles.

The leading hitters for Snow Hill were Eason, who went 2-2, and Jamie Southerland, who went 2-3.

In the second game, Snow Hill jumped on top early and never looked back.

Post 13 scored two runs in the first and three more in the third to take an early 5-2 lead.

Anthony Jones had a two-run single in the third that put Snow Hill ahead to stay. Uly Russo had a grand slam in the seventh.

T.J. Johnson led the way for Snow Hill with a 5-6 performance that included four RBI. Roger Smith and Eason added three hits apiece while Patterson, Russo and George Green had two hits apiece.

Green also was the winning pitcher, going the distance while only giving up two hits.

Matt Frewer Plays Opposite Himself In 'Max Headroom'

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It must be weird to be Matt Frewer, walking the streets anonymously while his face looks down at him from posters all over the city.

True, the face has been transformed by 4½ hours' worth of makeup and some clever post-production video techniques into Max Headroom, wiseguy video jockey, soda pop salesman and network television star.

In the ABC series "Max Headroom," Frewer plays the dual roles of Max — an electronic image on a television set — and his human counterpart, ace global-network correspondent Edison Carter.

It is the first continuing, dual-starring role on a network series since Patty Duke played twin sisters in "The Patty Duke Show" in the mid-1960s. In that show, a double was photographed from the back when the sisters were in the same shot.

Max is filmed and played back, putting Frewer, as Edison Carter, in the position of playing opposite himself.

"The way it was put to me was it was in my own best interests to get into the makeup and pre-record Max, because then I can have Max to play with," Frewer said in an interview. "It's very interesting. The first time I did it, I thought, 'God, that guy has great timing.' It's a little on the disconcerting side."

"Max Headroom" made its midseason debut to praise from critics, largely because of its irreverence toward television. Frewer said he originally balked at the idea of a network show because he feared a "gag" on Max, who had been free to say almost anything on cable TV.

"I was worried that there would be a lot of things that we got away with in the past that would be, 'Sorry, can't get away with that on network,'" he said. "Fortunately, they were pretty loose about that. If anything, they kind of said, 'OK, here's the ball, now run with it.' They could have very easily sweetened Max to the point where he was this sort of ineffectual, 'Hi, kids!' And I certainly didn't want him to turn into that kind of gimmick."

Some actors might be concerned about getting stuck in the public's mind in one character — especially an electronic one. Frewer's insouciance might be explained by the fact that when he's playing Max, he's being himself.

Meet Frewer and witness Max's speech patterns, gestures, giggle and good-naturedly off-color sense of humor.

When he signed on to do Max, Frewer said, "I was looking for a vehicle for my own stuff and something that didn't involve kind of standup comedy.

"Although I admire those kinds of guys, I find there's a certain kind of sadness about them. It's so desperate. Please love me. I was looking for something else that would be weird and at the same time accommodate a lot of the things I want to do in front of the camera."

Frewer was born in Washington, D.C., and raised in Canada. He passed up an honors degree program in biology to go to London and study acting.

"It was something I enjoyed in high school, but it wasn't that I had wanted to 'tread those boards since I was knee-high to a grasshopper.' It wasn't that at all."

In London, he met producer Peter Wagg, the creator of Max Headroom. (The name comes from the warning signs that suggest tall people duck.)

Frewer had the "transatlantic" accent that Wagg was looking for, and that elusive quality that became Max's personality. Frewer said his audition consisted of ad-libbing for a half-hour around eight lines of written dialogue.

Before starring in a cable movie that eventually became the premise of the network series, Max was host of a British music video show. At first it was just Max and the music. Then rock stars began to appear on the show.

"The whole thing evolved into this Johnny Carson with an extension cord," Frewer said. He is reprising the talk show format on Cinemax in July.

"The interesting thing I found about it was, for some strange reason people would open up with Max more than with a conventional interviewer," Frewer said.

"It's sort of like this screen-bound psychiatrist. Because there is that screen there, there's one of two reactions. They either clam up completely and they're totally freaked out, or they pour their heart out."

Frewer may not be recognized only inside a television set for long. He'll star on "Max Headroom" next season and has landed the starring role in a serious feature film, "Diary of a Viet Cong," about an American major captured by a lone Vietnamese soldier.

BEHIND THE MAX — Actor Matt Frewer plays the dual roles of Max, an electronic image on a television screen, and his human counterpart, correspndent Edison Carter, in the ABC TV series "Max Headroom." TV Favored

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Martin Short has made three movies back-to-back, including the new release "Innerspace," but the "Saturday Night Live" star says he can take or leave films.

"I'm not like this guy who would sell his soul to do a movie," Short said in a recent interview. "I love television."

Television is more immediate than film and "also doesn't take itself so seriously," he said. "It's tough with films, when the budgets are high and the stakes are high."

Bernstein Honored

LONDON (AP) — Conductor-composer Leonard Bernstein was awarded the Royal Philharmonic Society's 73rd gold medal, joining such musical greats as Johannes Brahms, Jean Sibelius and Sergei Rachmaninoff.

Composer Sir Michael Tibbett presented the award to Bernstein on Sunday after the 68-year-old American conducted the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra in works by Franz Schubert and Gustav Mahler at Barbican concert hall.

Bernstein is touring Europe with the Dutch orchestra.

NBC Hit By Strike

NEW YORK (AP) — The union representing 2,800 producers, writers and technicians in six cities went on strike this morning against NBC in the third and largest strike against a network this year.

NBC implemented its final contract offer at 12:01 a.m. after last-gasp negotiations failed.

Members of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians then calmly walked off the job as promised at NBC headquarters here.

"Everyone went quietly," NBC spokesman Dom Giofre said early this morning from company headquarters.

Picketing also began at network-owned stations in San Francisco, Cleveland, Chicago, Washington and Burbank, Calif.

Those who long for the good old days of strict discipline might choose a slightly more permissive approach to childrearing were they to read some old Puritan laws on the subject. According to one such law, children over 15 who cursed "shall be put to death, unless it can be testified that the Parents have been unchristianly negligent in the education of such Children." Another law imposed the death penalty on children who persistently disobeyed their parents.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠72 ♡AJ83 ◇AJ762 ♣104
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Obviously, you are going to raise hearts, and you can get to the right level by a process of elimination. You do not have quite enough to raise to game, but are too strong for a simple raise. That leaves the invitational jump to three hearts, which fits your hand perfectly.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J762 ♡83 ◇Q543 ♣AQ10
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
3 ♠	Dbl	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner doesn't guarantee four cards in each major suit with this double, so we would rule out three spades in favor of three no trump—after all, the main feature of your hand is your holding in clubs. Had you been sitting behind, rather than under the opener, we would strongly recommend a pass for a sure profit.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK7 ♡KQ6 ◇95 ♣KQ1093
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—It seems automatic to jump to three clubs, but South is too strong for that action. The upper limit for a jump raise is about 16 points, and this hand evaluates to 19 or 20 in support of clubs. To describe this powerful hand properly, South must improvise with his first response. Bid one heart, to be followed by a jump in clubs at the next turn. Once the trump suit has been set, South can conduct a cue-bidding sequence to probe for slam. That is not without risk, because should North hold four hearts, he might keep correcting to the major suit. However, there is no alternative.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J10732 ♡K63 ◇A9543
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 NT	Pass	◦ ?

What action do you take?
A.— While you do not like playing no trump with a void in partner's suit, you were not invited back into the auction. In modern methods partner is showing a long, solid club suit with a smattering of outside controls. With what you bring, the no trump game should be a cinch and there is no guarantee that you have a better contract anywhere. That is also true if he has a balanced hand.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ8752 ♡K87 ♣AQ85
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 NT	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—This situation is not analagous to the previous one. Here, partner has promised 16-18 points and 4-3-3-3 distribution. If he does not have too much of his values in diamonds, you could have a slam in one of two suits. Start investigating by bidding your second suit.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q74 ♡853 ◇J872 ♣742
Partner opens the bidding with two no trump. What action do you take?
A.—Even if your range for an opening bid of two no trump is 22-24, you should pass. While 26 points is usually enough for game at no trump, that is so only if there is transportation between the hands. Here you might be entryless, so partner will always have to be leading from his own hand, which greatly lessens its offensive possibilities.

Agent Says Crop Rotation Is Still Best Weapon Against Plant Disease

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Crop rotation is the No. 1 weapon farmers have against disease on plants in Pitt County, said Mitch Smith, tobacco agent with the Pitt County Agriculture Extension Service.

"A monoculture — tobacco, tobacco, tobacco — is bad," he said. "The longer the rotation in the most years, the better you are in combatting disease."

Alternating crops, such as tobacco, corn and soybeans, helps eliminate or control diseases that invade a particular crop, Smith said.

For example, Granville wilt is a menacing disease of tobacco, but it does not harm corn or soybeans because of differing characteristics. Tobacco is in the tomato family, while corn is a grass, and soybeans are legumes, he said. Planting corn and soybeans helps weaken the disease before the next planting of tobacco.

But, plant rotation is not a foolproof method of halting Granville wilt or other plant diseases, Smith said. "It should be noted that although rotation is the an effective means of reducing this disease, the population of the bactericum is seldom completely eradicated. This disease can persist for long periods of time."

Granville wilt "is probably the most devastating disease we have" in the county, he said. It has been nurtured by quick rainfalls and high humidity.

Farmers combat the disease by using resistant varieties of tobacco and by using multipurpose fumigants.

Other tobacco-related diseases invading the county are Mosaic, which is a virus, and peach aphids, which are insects, Smith said.

Mosaic may be controlled in some fields by roguing or removing infected plants, he said. "This may be a practical thing to do up until layby time. After this time roguing is probably not a feasible practice."

In hot, dry weather, mosaic-infected leaves tend to burn, Smith said. Irrigation helps reduce mosaic burn when the environment favors it, and it may reduce losses to mosaic.

Aphids attack the tobacco in two varieties — green and red, he said. The green aphid had been the most common found in county fields, but "diseases and insects have a tendency to modify themselves to survive."

The red aphid "has been observed to be more tolerant of higher temperatures and reproduces more rapidly than the green peach aphid," Smith said. It also has a tolerance to certain insecticides, but Orthene and Thiodan have helped control them.

About 80 percent of peach aphid insects reported have been of the red variety this season as opposed to 50 percent last year, he said.

The diseases do not concentrate in a particular area of the county, Smith said. "There have not been any patterns, but I've seen the most in the mid to southern portions."

Problems in this year's growing season began with a wet spring, causing the growing season to be later than normal, he said.

The wet and cool temperatures stressed plants, causing them to flower prematurely, Smith said. "Growers have to spend more time and money to crop those plants out at a smaller height."

Isolated areas in the county, such as Fountain and certain areas of Farmville, now are suffering from the lack of rainfall, he said. But, "our rainfall has been a little bit more uniform than previous years."

Economist Calls For Government Help In Relocating U.S. Farmers

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Instead of spending billions on commodity programs, the government should buy surplus land and help farmers move into other jobs, economist Lester C. Thurow says.

"Those in farming and related industries should be retrained and relocated, voluntarily, of course, to areas where jobs are available," said Thurow, the newly appointed dean of the Sloan School of Management at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"The sum that we now spend on farm subsidies would go a long way toward paying for such programs."

In areas of marginal production, Thurow said, entire farms should be purchased and permanently retired. The government has been operating a "whole-herd buyout" program for dairy cows in an effort to curb surplus milk production, and "there's no reason why we can't do the same for land," he said.

Thurow made his comments in an article, "Time to Retrain the American Farmers," in the current issue of Technology Review, an MIT publication.

What Thurow recommends would sanction as official policy much of the attrition that has occurred in agriculture over many years. The number of farms has been declining, people have been moving off the land, and small-town America built on local agriculture has been fading since at least World War II.

"To do what we do now — pay farmers not to produce — is to pretend that at some point in the not-too-distant future these farmers and their land will go back into production," Thurow said. "This sort of system discourages the very transitions that must be encouraged."

Thurow said a system of transitional aid for farmers and surrounding communities is the "only one realistic option" available to policymakers.

"This option, of course, is not attractive politically since those who would be aided by such a program don't want to leave farming," he said. "Furthermore, those who represent farmers don't wish to see them leave. As farm states become depopulated, some of the politicians will lose their constituents and their jobs."

Thurow said most of the underdeveloped world has benefited from improved technology used to produce more food. Many of those countries, such as Pakistan, can now feed themselves.

"In nations that are not self-sufficient, such as the Soviet Union and countries just south of the Sahara, the problem is clearly one of efficiently organizing and distributing agricultural products," he said. "It is not a question of knowing how to grow enough food."

Thurow said the wealthy countries also have made large gains, noting that Europe in a decade went from importing 25 million metric tons of grain per year to exporting 16 million tons. Foreign grain production in the 1980s increased by 29 million tons per year, yet global consumption rose by only 19 million tons annually.

"The net result is a worldwide oversupply of food — clearly a good thing for human welfare," he said. "There are still those who cannot afford to buy food, but there is no shortage of food to be bought."

While this has happened, the American farmer has seen his exports shrink from the record levels of the 1970s and early 1980s. Many dream of returning "to the prosperous world of the late 1970s, but that world is gone," Thurow said.

He added: "It is not a question of hanging on until export markets recover. They are not going to recover in the foreseeable future."

According to Thurow, the goal of free trade favored by some countries, including the United States, is not a viable option for American farmers.

"While free trade between the United States and Europe would probably help Kansas farmers export more wheat, it would destroy the Wisconsin farmers' domestic market for dairy products, since European dairy farmers can now undercut American prices," he said. "Opening Japan to rice imports might end up helping Thailand rice farmers and not American rice farmers."

Another option, discounted by Thurow, would be for U.S. taxpayers to continue pouring huge sums into "subsidizing an economically nonviable way of life" on the land.

"However, no one believes such subsidies are politically feasible in the long run," he said. "At some point urban taxpayers will revolt and refuse to pay the sums that are required for farm subsidies."

Last year, the government spent a record $26 billion on price or income supports and another $14 billion for other agricultural programs, Thurow said.

"That $40 billion is a lot of money, yet it essentially contributes nothing to solving the problem," he said. "Next year's farm subsidies will need to be equally large and, as they are now structured, will be equally ineffective."

Farm Scene

All hog operations have areas of mismanagement or areas that need improvement. Often times, correction of problems require more money or more labor. However, a few areas that most often quietly steal profits from a hog producer can be corrected with no added costs. Four of these areas where extra attention can mean extra profit are listed below:

1) Inadequate Nutrition: This is usually a result of inaccurate mill calibrations, poor ingredient quality or improper formulations. One survey revealed that producers on average were adding only 87 percent of recommended levels of protein supplement. Routine feed sampling can help locate nutrient shortages in rations.

2) Not Keeping Farrowing Houses Full: Reproductive efficiency is a must for maximum profits. If farrowing houses are not full, sows and gilts are not being bred properly and maximum use of facilities are not utilized. (Higher fixed costs)

3) Improper Feeder Adjustment: This problem is easy to correct, but requires constant attention. Up to 10 percent of the feed ends up wasted on some farms.

4) Mismanagement of Crossbreeding Systems: Random mating of sows to boars results in low hybrid vigor. A systematic approach to crossbreeding should be followed so that the correct sow is bred to the correct boar to maximize heterosis. Proper identification of sows and good record keeping play an important role in correct crossbreeding.

Swine producers should pay close attention to these four areas. The extra attention may mean extra profits and usually with little or no added costs.

Italians See Drop In Leaf

DURHAM (AP) — Italy is facing tough times with tobacco, and two Italian businessmen visited the Research Triangle last week to find out how North Carolina is coping with the decline of its traditional industries.

The Umbria region of Italy, just north of Rome, has seen its economy change in the last decade. Its tobacco farmers and its steel and chemical industries have fallen on hard times.

The Umbrians will be coming back to North Carolina in late July to set up a four-day trade show, spotlighting their best and fanciest exports — from world-famous ceramics to fashions and even light machinery. They will also set up a complete Umbria restaurant in Hotel Europa.

The information exchange might not be strictly one way. Umbria set up a "super-company" named Sviluppumbria in 1973 that is like a chamber of commerce, except that in addition to helping companies and boosting business, it invests money in new and expanding companies.

Mauro Agostini, senior director of Sviluppumbria, said the Umbria regional government, which is comparable to something between our state and county government, owns 51 percent of Sviluppumbria, while businesses and banks own 49 percent.

He said the company has already directly financed 63 companies and has a success rate of about 80 percent.

Piedmont Tobacco Farmers Optimistic Over 1987 Crop

GREENSBORO (AP) — As July nears, farmers in the North Carolina Piedmont are optimistic that this year's tobacco crop will be both bountiful and profitable.

"I think the overall crop looks pretty good right now," said Rick Apple, who farms 130 acres of tobacco in Guilford County with his father and uncle. "But the next three weeks are critical.

"If we can get some good general rains, I think its going to be an excellent crop," Apple said.

On farms across the Piedmont, green, leafy tobacco plants have risen to heights varying from 6 inches to 2 feet since their April plantings. A cool, wet early spring and hot, parched early summer caused the staggered growth.

Steve Troxler, who farms 65 acres of tobacco in Browns Summit, said the hot weather this month has helped the plants develop sturdy root systems.

"Tobacco loves hot weather," he said. "As long as the showers come along and keep some moisture in the ground, that's what you're looking for this time of season."

Farmers start to harvest some tobacco leaves toward the end of July and step up the process in August and September.

This year, like 1986, tobacco is expected to bring an average price of $1.50 a pound, said Max Sockwell, executive director of the Guilford County Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

"Farmers had a reasonably good year last year despite the bad weather," Stockwell said.

Memories of last summer's severe drought still haunt Troxler.

"Last year there was absolutely no rain and we went on and on and on with no rain," he said. "We pumped water around the clock for weeks.

"We may have to do it again, you never can tell," he said. "Or, it could set in raining around the first of the month and make a bumper crop. When you farm, you take it one day at a time and do what you need to do and go on to the next day."

Compared to growers in other parts of the state, Apple said Piedmont growers were less affected by the drought last summer because, like Troxler, many can irrigate their entire crop when rain doesn't come.

Though the weather has been relatively cooperative thus far, some crops have suffered from a virus that causes leaves to wilt and dry up and minor infestations of hook worms that feed on tobacco leaves, said David Nash, associate agricultural extension agent in Guilford County.

The maladies, however, are well-known to farmers and easily remedied, Nash added.

A more tricky problem for tobacco growers this year is the perception that some may be using an illegal herbicide on their crop. The chemical, Dicamba, makes dried to bacco leaves look more appealing and thus more valuable to buyers than they really are.

Last month, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. of Winston-Salem came under criminal investigation by the Customs Service in Washington for selling large amounts of tobacco to Japan with high levels of Dicamba, an illegal, but non-toxic herbicide.

Apple, who is also president of the North Carolina Tobacco Growers Association, said he doesn't think the issue will threaten the Piedmont's tobacco crop.

"There are some things right now that are in the process of being sent to growers to alert them of the problem and of the consequences if this situation isn't cleared up," he said. "But you're talking about less than 1 percent of your growers that actually use this chemical.

"It's just a scattered few," Apple said. "Hopefully, we've got some things in place that will guarantee our buyers a clean crop of tobacco when it comes time to sell."

New Home

NEW HOLLAND, N.C. (AP) — One hundred Canada geese, who were posing problems to New York property owners a week ago, got a gander at their new home in eastern North Carolina and a taste of southern hospitality.

The new home for the geese is a special pen, 300 feet long and 25 feet wide, near Lake Mattamuskeet, a remote area of Hyde County surrounded by a checkerboard of farm fields, marshes and woods.

Common Market Seeks Solution To Cash Crisis

By MILAN RUZICKA
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Leaders of the 12 European Economic Community nations today began two days of talks to try to chart a way out of the EEC's worst cash crisis since its creation in 1957.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, French President Francois Mitterrand and the nine other EEC leaders opened their twice-yearly summit with a luncheon at the royal palace with King Baudouin and Queen Fabiola.

It appeared unlikely the leaders would make firm decisions about tapping new sources of income. Instead, officials said, they will draw up guidelines for a solution to the financial problems.

Reflecting Mrs. Thatcher's tough stand against new funds for the cash-strapped trade bloc, a British diplomat said as the luncheon began, "You don't pump up a tire that is full of punctures. You mend the holes first ... You don't chuck good money after bad."

Short-term problems include a 1987 deficit of $5.7 billion for a budget of $41.3 billion. More serious is the EEC's fundamental problem of runaway spending on farm subsidies, which will total nearly $31 billion this year.

"The big question at this summit will be the (1987) budget deficit," said Belgian Foreign Minister Leo Tindemans on the summit's eve. "Many states would like a medium-term solution. Others just want to patch things up."

The British diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the summit would not solve the money problems right away. "The job of this council must be to generate the political will to set guidelines ... to find a solution."

The summit marks the end of Belgium's six-month presidency of the EEC. On July 1, Denmark assumes the rotating chairmanship.

Some members had hoped the summit would produce decisions on an EEC Commission proposal to base budget contributions on gross national product until 1992. Currently the EEC's income consists mainly of 1.4 percent of the sales taxes collected in the member states.

The staunchest opponents to a funding change include Great Britain and West Germany, which insist the EEC must first bring its agriculture spending under control.

At an EEC foreign ministers meeting Sunday, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the West German minister, proposed postponing a decision about generating new income until 1988. In the meantime, the EEC would have time to implement "budgetary discipline," sources said.

Farm spending now eats up two-thirds of the annual budget. The Commission proposal to use the GNP funding formula would raise income by 25 percent by 1992, hold farm spending to half of the budget and raise regional and social spending.

EEC sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Spain, Portugal and Greece, which stand to benefit most from the new formula, want it to be implented soon.

On Sunday, Belgian Prime Minister Wilfried Martens warned the EEC leaders it would be "an unforgivable folly" if they did not take action about long-term funding.

"We are convinced that if you do not have the courage to work out solutions which will last for several years, then each year you will sink further into the very concrete problems," he said on Belgian television.

The EEC's cash problems were highlighted in recent months by the failure of the agriculture ministers to agree on a package of farm prices for the 1987-88 marketing year that began April 1. The package includes a proposed tax on domestic and imported vegetable oils and fats which Britain, the Netherlands, Denmark and West Germany oppose.

Before the summit, British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe called the proposed tax "wholly misconceived" and said it could spark a trade war with Washington while doing nothing to reduce farm spending.

The 1987 farm price package seeks an end to a system of border levies and subsidies that shelters West German farmers from the negative trade effects of a strong German mark. The summit leaders are expected to refer the issue to the EEC finance ministers.

Chirac Says Joint Force Major Step

BONN, West Germany (AP) — French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac praised Chancellor Helmut Kohl for proposing a French-West German fighting unit, calling it an important step toward unifying Europe, a Bonn newspaper said today.

But Chirac said France intends to retain exclusive control over its nuclear missiles, the Die Welt newspaper reported today.

"The French nuclear forces will, of course, remain independent and national," Chirac was quoted as saying in an interview.

Kohl proposed on June 19 the creation of a French-West German army brigade as a way of boosting military cooperation between the two countries. He said the command of such a brigade could rotate between French and West German officers, but gave no further details.

Some newspapers here have speculated that the proposal is part of an attempt by Kohl to encourage France to aid West Germany's defense, and possibly share some of its nuclear forces.

But when Chirac was asked whether the French would be interested in stationing part of their nuclear arsenal on West German soil, he said the weapons would remain on French territory, according to Die Welt.

Chirac was very sympathetic to Kohl's proposal for the joint fighting force, the newspaper said. "We (the French government) think that the strengthening of security cooperation between France and Germany would play a decisive role in European defense," Chirac said in the interview.

With growing prospects for a U.S.-Soviet treaty this year on removing short- and medium-range nuclear missiles from Europe, several senior West German politicians have called for closer defense cooperation among West Europeans. Kohl's proposal came after NATO foreign ministers gave support to the U.S. plan.

Iraqi Jet Hits Ship

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq said its warplanes attacked a "large maritime target" in the Persian Gulf off Iran's coast today, Baghdad's official news agency reported.

The raiding jets scored an "accurate and effective hit" on the "large maritime target" at 9:39 a.m., the Iraqi News Agency quoted a military spokesman as saying. The agency was monitored in Nicosia.

In Iraqi military parlance, a "large maritime target" usually means an oil tanker sailing to or from Iranian oil terminals in the northern reaches of the gulf.

There was no independent confirmation of the reported Iraqi attack from gulf-based shipping sources, who monitor marine traffic in the strategic waterway.
