Nation Enjoys Festive Fourth

By The Associated Press

The Fourth of July inspired parades, picnics, clanging bells and summer festivals across the land, starting with fireworks by dawn's early light on the Pacific Coast.

It was a day for watching the USS Constitution, "Old Ironsides," take its annual tour around Boston Harbor, to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Abraham Lincoln face at Mount Rushmore, to race turtles in Neligh, Neb., or bag a rattlesnake in Warden, Wash.

Big events included the Boston Pops concert and fireworks show along the Charles River, a triathlon from the Statue of Liberty in New York to the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia, a "welcome home" concert for Vietnam veterans near the nation's capital, and lavish displays of fireworks in dozens of cities.

At country singer Willie Nelson's picnic in Carl's Corner, Texas, about 100 people had to be treated for heat-related illnesses as temperatures rose into the 90s.

For those who couldn't get out, the HBO channel on cable television planned to carry later the "welcome home" concert held Saturday afternoon in Largo, Md., starring James Brown, Neil Diamond, Linda Ronstadt and Kris Kristofferson. Public television offered the Boston Pops concert, featuring Johnny Cash reading the Gettysburg Address.

For some, the day was clouded by reminders of violence and prejudice.

In Murfreesboro, Tenn., Ku Klux Klansmen gathered for a rally to celebrate the original U.S. Constitution, which did not permit blacks to vote, and Klan members handed out candy from a float in Cumming, Ga., seat of mostly white Forsyth County, scene of civil rights protests earlier this year.

In Santa Monica, Calif., 20,000 people were up at dawn to watch fireworks in a plan intended to discourage the rowdiness which marred the Fourth of July celebration there a year ago and resulted in one death.

And around the Los Angeles area, police were giving priority to stopping those who celebrate the holiday by firing guns into the air. At the Shelter Isle Mobile Home Estates in Pacoima, 20 miles north of downtown Los Angeles, residents planned to end their Independence Day barbecue early so they can be indoors before dark, when the shooting starts.

"This is the only way we old people can get together," said Laurette Bineau, 65, a resident of the park. "Then at 9 p.m. we have to come home and we have to stay inside. What else can we do?"

There are bullet holes in the awnings, doors and walls of nearly every trailer from past holidays.

One death was reported in connection with the festivities. A 20-year-old woman who was watching fireworks in Springdale, Pa., was struck by a train and died Friday night.

Neighbors Continue July Fourth Tradition

The residents of the Forest Hills neighborhood celebrated the nation's independence Saturday evening the same way they have for 25 years. They congregated in a wooded area in the neighborhood for food and fellowship.

The annual Forest Hills picnic has been held in a wooded lot adjacent to Elmhurst Elementary School each July Fourth since 1962.

Charlie Horne, known as the honorary "Mayor of Forest Hills," said the event began in the backyard of former Forest Hills resident Dave Whichard. "It grew and grew until we had to find a bigger place to hold the picnic," Horne said. "It expanded to include the whole neighborhood."

Horne said permission to use the school property was granted by the Pitt County Board of Education. At one time, city employees cleared the underbrush in preparation for the picnic.

A committee composed of Horne, J.B. Spilman, Ken Hite and Bob Ramey planned this year's event, as they have for many years.

Ramey called the event "the yearly meeting of the Forest Hills family."

"Nobody has to let us know who's coming," Spilman said. "It's impromptu. Everyone in the neighborhood who's in town comes and brings some food."

Education Leaders Say Strides Made

(This is the second article in a two-part series on the Pitt County school system, one year after consolidation.)

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

The first year of merger of the Pitt County and Greenville City school systems has been a year of ups and downs.

However, in recent interviews, the superintendent of the Pitt County Schools and several board members looked back on the first year of merger with positive memories, seeing the accomplishments of the consolidated Pitt County school board rather than the problems.

Superintendent Eddie West said that the controversial decisions that the board has been involved with this year, such as redrawing attendance lines and establishing an election policy, are "the normal issues that accompany consolidation."

West said that his goals for the year have been met. His goals at the outset of the merger were a child-centered focus, communication, cohesion, comprehensive planning and career development.

"As a result of the hard work and dilligence of the teachers and support staff, we have been able to implement curriculum programs throughout the system to enhance and enrich the curriculum; and at the same time begin the implementation of equalizing programs among all schools throughout the systems.

Eakin Sees 'New Era' For ECU

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

East Carolina University is stepping up efforts to offer additional graduate programs, according to ECU Chancellor Richard Eakin, who says recent regional growth has created pools of untapped resources.

"The university is centrally poised to enter into a new era," said Eakin, who replaced John Howell as chancellor on March 1. "I think of that new era in terms of faculty interests and ... some expansion in areas of graduate programs.

"Our latest planning document sent forward before my arrival at East Carolina suggested to the (University of North Carolina System's) General Administration that we have some further development in the doctoral level and the masters level."

Eakin, who served as vice president for planning and budgeting at Bowling Green State University in Ohio before coming to ECU, said North Carolina will benefit from the programs.

"I think we can simply be of a lot better service to the state by going into those programs simply because we seem to have the talent available to do it right at this moment, and, in some cases, easily available to us in the future," he said.

East Carolina, which originated as a teacher's college, will continue its efforts to produce qualified educators, Eakin said.

"East Carolina has throughout its history been known as an excellent institution for a young person to attend to become a teacher to learn the

ED ROSE

HERBERT A. GARDNER JR.

Two Greenville residents have filed as candidates for the City Council in the Nov. 3 municipal elections.

Ed Rose, an employee at Honeycutt, Inc., filed Friday as a District 4 candidate, while Herbert A. Gardner Jr., managing partner of Gardner's Bail Bonding Co., filed for the District 2 seat.

Rose, who resides at 1009 Forbes Street with his 12-year-old son, is also self-employed as the principal real estate broker for AHOME Corp., Wilmington.

Rose graduated from Admiral Farragut Naval Academy, St. Petersburg, Fla. He received a bachelor's degree in business administration from East Carolina University and a second bachelor's degree in liberal arts, concentrating in sociology and industrial management, from the University of the State of New York at Albany. He is pursuing a master's degree in business administration.

A Vietnam War veteran, Rose is a member of the Select Naval Reserve attached to the destroyer U.S.S. Stump, homeported in Norfolk, Va. He was appointed as a Navy counselor to enlisted personnel in 1986.

Four File For Education Seats

Three members of the Pitt County Board of Education filed for re-election Friday, as well as one first-time candidate.

Members seeking re-election are Anne McGaughey of Farmville and Robert A. Halstead Sr. and Stephen Wayne Tripp, both of Ayden, while Jack Collins has filed for a seat in Ayden.

As outlined in the new election plan, there will be two seats for the board in each of six districts. Seat A will be for an initial term of December 1987 through December 1992, while Seat B will have a shorter term of December 1987 through December 1990. After 1990, all terms will be for six years.

The board of education election method has not been precleared by the Justice Department. Elections supervisor Margaret Hardee said she expects preclearance "any day."

"We do not anticipate any problems because there is no at-large voting," Mrs. Hardee said. "When preclearance comes in, we will extend the filing period to make sure everyone has an opportunity to file."

Collins, former president of the Ayden PTA, filed as a candidate for Seat A in District 6.

Collins, 41, who resides on East Second Street in Ayden, is president of Bank Search Inc. He graduated from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 1975 with a bachelor's degree in industrial relations.

He served as a captain in the U.S. Army during the Vietnam War.

Collins, a member of the Ayden-Grifton Advisory Council, served as president of the Ayden PTA from 1984 to 1986.

Four File As Candidates For School Board

The Ayden High School graduate has two children in the local public schools and has volunteered as a coach for community sports programs.

Collins is a member of the Ayden United Methodist Church and served as chairman of the administrative board of the church.

"As a former PTA president in Ayden, a resident of Ayden with two children in the county school system, and as a member of the Ayden-Grifton Advisory Board, I have been asked to represent concerned parents and citizens in District 6," Collins said after filing with the Pitt County Board of Elections.

Collins said problems associated with the consolidated school system prompted him to run.

"As most people in District 6 will remember, when the merger of the city and county schools was announced, a major outgrowth of that merger was to be that children, countywide, would be provided equal programs and facilities," he said.

"In reality, the changes made have only increased some of the inequities. Inequities have been established in student population, boundary lines and capital outlay."

The board should work on behalf of all Pitt County children, Collins said.

"My concerns are for the children and providing the best education for all children in the county, not just District 6. I would want to strive for equal access to all educational programs for each student countywide," he said.

Mrs. McGaughey, executive director of the Farmville Economic Council and Farmville Area Chamber of Commerce, has filed for seat A, representing voting District 4 (Farmville).

She has served the Pitt County Board of Education since January 1981, when she was named to fill the unexpired term of Dr. Thomas Patterson. In June 1982, she was elected to that seat.

"Representing Farmville and Pitt county in the school system have been most important to me for many years," Mrs. McGaughey said.

She has served as chairman of the Farmville Area Schools Advisory Council, president of the Farmville Band Boosters, community representative for Project Promise and a member of the School Based Guidance Committee for accreditation.

She has been a participant in the Sam Bundy School tutorial program, a sponsor of the Career Day program, an English award donor at Farmville Central High School and a member of the Farmville Athletic Boosters Club.

"As executive director of the Farmville Economic Council and Farmville Chamber of Commerce, I am very interested and attuned to the vital role of education to the economic stability and growth of Pitt County and its citizens," Mrs. McGaughey.

Mrs. McGaughey is a lifelong resident of the Farmville United Methodist Church and a member of the Farmville Chamber of Commerce.

She is married to Robert T. McGaughey and they have two daughters.

Halstead, who has been a member of the board for nine years, resides at Route 2, Ayden with his wife, Lennie.

He has filed for Seat A in voting District 6, representing Ayden, Grifton, Swift Creek and Chicod townships and the portion of the Winterville township east of N.C. 43 (Cherry Oaks).

A lifelong resident of Pitt County, Halstead is a self-employed tobacconist. He served on the board of Planters' Bank in Ayden.

He and his wife have three children and seven grandchildren, all residing in the Ayden area.

"Education has come a long way in Pitt County and I am proud of the progress this school system has made in recent years, particularly in the areas of capital improvements and curriculum program offerings," Halstead said.

"In addition to these two areas, we have witnessed many other significant and positive accomplishments with the consolidation of our two school systems into one, but there is a great deal more planned to ensure continued educational quality for the boys and girls of Pitt County," he said. "I want to follow through in seeing those goals achieved."

Halstead is a member and elder of the Timothy Christian Church in Garnersville.

Tripp, 30, is a 1975 graduate of Ayden-Grifton High School. He received a bachelor's degree in pharmacy from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, where he received the Rho Chi Achievement Award and was a member of the Phi Delta Chi fraternity.

He has filed for re-election to fill Seat B in District 6.

Tripp is married to the former Susan Ange of Williamston and they have two children.

He is a pharmacist at Hollowell's Drug Store, Inc., where he serves on the board of directors and as secretary to the board.

He has represented Ayden on the board of education for five years.

A member of Ayden Christian Church, he is a deacon and serves on the church board. He also teaches the high school Sunday school class.

He is the 1987 Pitt County crusade chairman for the American Cancer Society and is a member of the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Association. He is a member of the Ayden Council of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commercec and has served on the Governor's Committee for Excellence in Education.

Tripp said his goals as a board member are "to meet the commitments of physical improvements of the Pitt County schools and to complete program enrichment in various curriculum areas such as accelerated math and science, orchestra and Gifted and Talented." Another major goal, he said, is "to equalize the curriculum offerings between high schools."

He said he is committed to "continued economical efficiency and effective measures which have been initated while I was on the board, such as preventive maintenance, computer maintenance, computer technology and other quality control measures."

Eakin Sees A New Era For East Carolina

skills that are necessary to be an effective teacher," he said. "That's going to continue because it is as present today as it was at the outset."

Eakin said statewide concern about teacher recruitment has made producing educators a priority.

"The state of North Carolina is beginning to give a lot of attention to the need to make sure that we are producing teachers of the quality necessary for our schools," Eakin said. "We've already got a whole legion of teachers out there that are doing an excellent job, but what we must be sure we do is to continue to produce teachers that will do an excellent job.

"With the interest the state has taken, with the strong history that we have of excellence and with what I see as a commitment on the part of the people in the (ECU) School of Education and across the curriculum of the university to make that kind of excellence, I think education and the preparation of teachers is going to be a very strong and important part of our mission."

State lawmakers have passed legislation which will assist the teacher recruitment process, according to Eakin, who applauded the measures.

"There are exciting things happening in North Carolina when you look at the efforts that are being taken to improve the curriculum the teachers will take," he said.

"When you look at the new programs that will be in place this fall for the scholarship students who are outstanding prospects as teachers, these are progressive moves that many states are only beginning to think about, and here in North Carolina we're beginning to put them in place."

Despite national predictions of declining enrollment, Eakin said ECU expects continued increases in the student population.

"I foresee a steady pattern of growth. We should have some growth this fall again," he said. "If you look at the graph of the enrollment at East Carolina University over the years you can see a very steady growth pattern. I think that will continue.

"It continues remarkably in the face of some national predictions and projections that suggest that we wouldn't have that."

The development of eastern North Carolina dictates ECU's expansion, according to Eakin.

"With the growth that I see of Greenville and of the opportunities for eastern North Carolina, I think East Carolina University will continue to grow because the population base is going to continue to grow. I believe we are going to see increasing numbers of new industries, new business opportunities and an infusion of population in the area."

Another priority will be keeping tutition costs down, Eakin said.

"Tuition fees that are charged at East Carolina University are quite low compared to most states, and that's good," he said. "That's something that I hope the people of North Carolina will take pride in. It reflects the interest in making higher education available to virtually everyone.

"That access phoneomenon and that ability for people to gain an education is truly important to not only the present economy and welfare of this state but the future as well."

Four months after taking the helm, Eakin says he's learned a great deal about ECU students.

"I've learned that I kind of have a feeling for the students now," he said. "It's a very good feeling. They seem to me to be hard-working students who are here with a very definite objective in mind. They have a reason for getting an education. Many of them are quite aware of what it is they want to do with their education.

"They are highly directed. They are a very pleasant group of students. As you walk across the campus, there is a friendliness that you see here that you don't see at every university."

Meanwhile, community support for the university is evident at every turn, Eakin said.

"The 'town-gown' relationship, as it is often referred to, seems to be excellent," he said. "I sense that the community is well served by the university.

"There are a lot of cultural, social and recreational opportunities that are made available by the university, and people are taking advantage of it. People in the community really participate and turn out for the events which is great."

Higher education is an important aspect of life in North Carolina, according to Eakin, who moved to Greenville with his wife, Jo Ann, in February.

"In North Carolina, I sense that there's simply a higher level of interest on the part of the media and the public in terms of what is going on in higher education," he said.

Eakin has also made numerous trips to Raleigh to meet with UNC system officials, members of the N.C. General Assembly and the representatives of the governor's office to discuss appropriations.

"I've learned a great deal about how the university relates to the General Administration, and how the legislature's role and the governor's role affect higher education in this state," Eakin said.

"I have found the area legislators to be extremely helpful in terms of education, making themselves available to me and expressing their strong interest in support of East Carolina University."

Eastern North Carolina lawmakers make a strong commitment when it comes to education, Eakin said.

"I've had some experience dealing with the Legislature in Ohio — much more limited than I'm finding my experiences now," he said.

"I find that the legislators here in this area seem to take a much stronger interest in the institution than I think you would find in Ohio. Certainly they are supportive there, but not with the same level of genuine enthusiasm. As you look at this state, look at the history and look at the level of support the state gives to higher education, you can't feel anything but good about it."

Eakin said he appreciates ECU more with each passing day.

"I came to the university thinking it was a fine university, but virtually every day that I'm here I discover something more about the university that makes me realize that it is a better institution than I thought it was the day before."

Residents Seek Seats

Rose is a member of the American Institute of Industrial Engineers, manufacturing systems division.

"We need caring and intelligent individuals to serve on the City Council in order to maintain public tranquility," Rose said in his filing statement. "We must remember that Greenville is a city of people."

Areas of interest include concern for the natural beauty of Greenville, local economic development and government accountability, Rose said.

Gardner, a native of Greenville and graduate of Rose High School, served as a student representative during the integration of the high school in 1970. He worked for the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce before moving to Raleigh in 1971. He moved back to Greenville in 1983.

Gardner, 35, and his wife, Jacqueline, have three children and reside at 600 Vance St.

"Greenville is a vibrant, growing city fast becoming a regional metropolis with diversified industry, and one of the finest medical communities in the Southeast," Gardner said after filing with the Pitt County Board of Elections.

"My goal is to encourage beautification of the city, particularly District 2, and work toward establishing some sort of city-sponsored job assistance for our neighborhood youth with the help of the private sector."

Gardner said he would work to appoint qualified people to serve on the city's boards and commissions.

"Other goals include the encouragement of appointments to our various committees and authorities of persons who have a vision for the future growth and well-being of Greenville," he said.

"Above all, I commit to voicing and voting the desires of my constituency in District 2."

Pier Falls

TOPSAIL BEACH, N.C. (AP) — A pier jammed with July Fourth revelers watching a fireworks show collapsed Saturday, plunging as many as 300 people into the ocean and injuring at least 16 people, officials and eyewitnesses said.

Everyone on the pier apparently was accounted for, Coast Guard Master Chief Ronald Winslow said.

The pier at Topsail Beach, about 25 miles northeast of Wilmington, collapsed about 9:20 p.m. just after the annual July Fourth fireworks celebration had begun.

"It went right out from everybody," said Jane Ausley, a reporter for the Durham Morning Herald, who was at the pier. "It just collapsed." There were between 200 and 300 people on the pier at the time, she said.

PSYCHOLOGICAL IMPLICATIONS

Psychologists tell us that there are two important, and related factors, in coping with personal loss. One is the encouragement and facilitation of the normal mourning process. The other is the prevention of delayed and/or distorted grief responses.

Though there is no definitive scientific study which proves this, there is every indication that the funeral service is important in this area. For one thing, the funeral possesses the potential to compel the individual to acknowledge his loss. The ritual of the funeral can also, if it is fitting with the beliefs and attitudes of the family, do a great deal to normalize grief.

This is important for the adult, and especially for the child. The presence of a child at a funeral permits the child to recognize that death has occurred. He sees that there are others who are experiencing the loss. While there, he can receive comfort, support, and expressions of love which he might otherwise miss.

The presentations will continue Monday through Wednesday. The discussions are open to the general public.

MEETING THE CHANCELLOR — Dr. E.L. Henderson, right, has known every chancellor of East Carolina University since 1923 when he began his career at what was then East Carolina Teachers College. The 102-year-old professor emeritus recently visited the ECU campus to meet the university's newest chancellor, Dr. Richard R. Eakin, center. During his 21 years at ECU, Henderson served as director of student teaching, chairman of the Department of Administration and Supervision and chairman of the Graduate Committee. Under his leadership, the graduate program was then only one of six accredited in the state. Dr. Charles R. Coble, dean of the School of Education, accompanied Henderson on his campus visit. VIP Blood Donors

The Pitt County chapter of the American Red Cross will begin a VIP Blood Donor program Monday.

In order to enroll, a donor must give blood at any Pitt County collection site and pledge to donate at least four times in the next 12 months.

VIP donors will be recognized at each bloodmobile with a VIP sticker and also will receive a VIP record of donations to be placed on the back of the donor card. Upon completion of four donations, the donor will receive a VIP pin and certificate.

The purpose of the program is to recognize people who give blood at least four times a year and to encourage all eligible donors to donate more frequently.

Most donors do not realize that they can give blood every 56 days, a Red Cross spokesman said. The average Pitt County donor gives only 1.4 times per year.

Funding for the project is provided by Blood Services, Tidewater Region. Of the 63 chapters in the region, only Pitt County offers the VIP program.

The first opportunity to enroll in the program will be Monday at the Liberty Bloodmobile at Walh-Coates School auditorium from noon until 6 p.m. The drive has a goal of 150 units of bdood.

Panel OKs Jones' Bill On Spending

A state House Committee has approved a bill sponsored by Rep. Walter B. Jones Jr., D-Pitt, which would set volunteer limits on spending and authorize public financing of state campaigns.

The measure, which was approved by the House Judiciary II Committee Thursday, will be sent to an appropriations committee before returning to the House floor.

"Our ultimate goal was to get to the House floor for debate, and I think we have a good chance," Jones said. "This is the only bill of major consequence that speaks to campaign reform in the last few years. I think the (sentiment) is to go ahead and let it get debated.

Essentially, the bill would establish limits through a formula based on the number of votes cast in the preceding election. General election candidates who chose to participate would raise half the limit on their own and tap a public fund for the rest.

Jones said public money would be raised through individual income tax checkoffs, as in presidential races. For participating candidates, the bill would also cut maximum contributions from political action committees in half, to $2,000.

After Jones' original proposal met with some skepticism, a subcommittee of the Judiciary II Committee made several changes before endorsing the bill to the full committee. Among other things, it raised spending limits.

For example, the initial proposal would limit spending for House seats to 70 cents for each vote cast in the previous election. Under the revised version, the formula would be $1 per vote.

Education

which is one of the purposes of consolidation," West said.

Cohesion was a crucial goal for the two combined school systems, West said. "We are trying to create something new out of two former institutions. We have been working dilligently at that all year and have made tremendous strides, he said.

"I am confident that in the future, you will see even more unanimity as we go through the cycle that affects any type of change," he added.

In the area of comprehensive planning, "We have undertaken a planning process that involved a cross section of the educational community and included viewpoints of citizens through various task forces to plan for the future of education in Pitt County," the superintendent said. "This comprehensive planning process will serve us well for many years to come.

"We attempted through expanded efforts such as a video newsletter, speaker's bureau, radio shows, presentations to civic groups, to try to share information about the consoldated school system," West said he attended over 100 area meetings to share information.

"Tied to the comprehensive planning and the chiid-centered focus has been the planning for improvements to our facilities," the superintendent said. "As of sometime in July or August, we will be beginning to let projects on several additions and modifications to school facilities throughout the system.

"All in all, it has been educationally an excellent year," the superintendent said.

"The first year of merger is the most difficult, I think," said board member Frank Grooms, who represents Greenville. "I think the board was faced with four critical issues that caused a lot of conflict among the board members and the community: minority representation on the board, school attendance lines, Affirmative Action and capital outlay.

"In the end, the board did what was in the interest of the boys and girls of Pitt County in the areas of attendance lines, Affirmative Action and minority representation," he said. "There is still a lot of work that needs to be done in the area of capital outlay."

Grooms continued, "I think as a result of the attendance line issue which affected individual students and their parents, we generated a lot of interest from the public in education this year. But where we really need the public support for education is in the area of the school budget.

"Our county commissioners need to know that excellent schools are an investment in our future and that it is embarrassing for our teachers to be ranked 71 in the state in teacher supplements," he said.

"We can't ever attain excellence unless we are able to recruit and retain the best teachers, and somehow the county commissioners have to be aware; that's only going to come through public support and people speaking to them about education," Grooms said.

"I think the election in November for the school board is the most cricial election that Pitt County will ever face," he said. "What we need are people on the board that can anticipate problems and resolve them through a process related to the end results expected instead of emotionalism or parochialism.

Board member Anne McGaughey of Farmville said, "Recognizing that education of the child of Pitt County is the purpose for which the Pitt County schools exists, I believe the first year of merger was an excellent one.

"Through what I consider to be outstanding planning to begin this first year, much academic growth has taken place," she said. "I credit the dedication and willingness of the administration and staff for this.

"I look forward to being a part of this continuing process, knowing that the long-range plans for our system will help lead us to that pinacle of academic excellence we wish to achieve for our county," Mrs. McGaughey said.

Ayden representative Steve Tripp said, "It has been an excellent year. We have done a lot of work this year.

"It has been like building a house," Tripp said. "We this year have laid the foundation for a great school system and I look forward to continuing to build on that foundation.

"What we have done this year — consolidation — has enabled us to not only have one of the best school systems in the eastern part of North Carolina but also in the state; that has been one of mu goals since I have been on the board," Tripp said.

"It has been a year where two different groups of people have been able to come together and work for the good of the Pitt County Schools, with an excellent staff coming from both sides," said Ayden board member Robert Halstead. "I would like to see that these things continue to go in this direction."

"The main thing I think we have accomplished this year is to improve the relationships between the board members so that they could go about making the decisions for the system. With the two systems there, we had difference priorities," said board member Erma Carr. Mrs. Carr represents Greenville.

Eppes Alumni Gather For Weekend Reunion

Former students of C.M. Eppes High School converged in Greenville over the weekend for a reunion celebration, according to Johnny Wooten, Eppes alumnus and coordinator of several reunion events.

In 1969 the last class graduated from Eppes High, marking the end of an era as Greenville schools moved towards desegregation. Since then the Eppes Alumni Association has been formed, and members meet each year for a reunion and a celebration of the old school.

Events began Friday night with a "Sip and Chat" and Alumni King and Queen Pageant at the Moose Lodge, Wooten said.

According to Wooten, Saturday began with a breakfast at the Sheraton, followed by a business meeting. A parade, scheduled for 4 p.m., ran down Albemarle Street to West Fifth to the corner of Fifth and Nash, where each marching unit stopped for a performance break.

Eppes High School was located at Fifth and Nash, the current location of the Thomas Foreman Park, before most of the school burned down. All that's left of the old school is a building which serves as the recreation center for the park.

Jean Darden, president of the alumni association, said the group has paved the way for that building to be renamed the Eppes Recreation Center in honor of the school.

Wooten said the grounds of Foreman Park was also the scene of a picnic Saturday for all the alumni. In the evening they were to return to the Moose Lodge for the alumni dance, he said.

The reunion weekend closed Sunday morning with an 11 a.m. worship at St. Gabriel's Church, Wooten said.

Mrs. Darden said the Eppes Alumni Association has remained active in the Greenville area supporting high school academics and maintaining the history of the western part of the city.

The association gives an annual academic scholarship to a graduating senior at Rose High and has just begun giving an award named after Percy Daniels to the top female athlete at the school, she said.

The group has commissioned a history of Eppes school to be written, she said, and is opening two archive rooms at the Eppes center to preserve the history of the school.

Mrs. Darden said the association's futue plans include opening a library in the center where students can come learn about the western section of Greenville through seminars and independent study.

Fourth Rated A Success

The 15th Annual Fourth of July Celebration sposored by the Greenville Jaycees was a success according to Tom Bullard, project chairman for the group.

Bullard said over 1,000 people attended the festivities, participating in activities such as Laser Tag, a dunking booth, bingo and a water slide. Other games included a popsicle eating contest sponsored by Today's Women of Greenville and two tricycle races.

According to Bullard, the Pepsi sky divers performed at 1:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. He also said that the regular performance of Sunday in the Park had been changed to Saturday evening, bringing Group Sax and the Suziki Violinists to perform for the crowds before the fireworks exhibition.

Charges Changed

Officials investigating an accident that occurred on N.C. 43 south of Greenville Thursday morning reported that new details of the accident have surfaced, causing charges to be placed on a different driver.

N.C. Highway Patrol Trooper B.J. Jones said Saturday that charges of failing to reduce speed to avoid an accident have been filed against Alexander Bass of Tarboro, a 28-year-old graduate student at East Carolina University.

Jones said charges filed Thursday against Elvira Johnson of Vanceboro will be dropped when the courts open after the July Fourth holidays.

The patrolman said it was originally thought that Ms. Johnson hit the last vehicle in a three-car line stopped in the southbound lane of the highway, causing a chain of events that injured a pedestrian and damaged six cars, a tractor-trailer, a house trailer and a pick up truck.

Jones said Saturday that an eyewitness led investigators to reassess the accident and it is now known that Ms. Johnson's car was the third in the line of stopped cars. According to Jones, the Bass car struck Ms. Johnson's car, causing it to hit a vehicle driven by Michael St. Angelo of Patchogue, N.Y., before careening into a ditch.

The St. Angelo car was thrown into the northbound lane, where it was struck by a Heilig-Meyer tractor-trailer driven by Warren Harrison. The tractor-trailer swerved into the parking lot of Handleman's Groceries, hitting a parked station wagon, Jones said. The station wagon then struck Jimmy Allen of Greenville, who was getting into his car, before running into a travel-trailer. Allen's car bumped a pick-up truck parked next to it.

The car driven by Alexander, Jones said, stopped behind the first vehicle after making slight contact with it. This made it look like the second car in the line and lead to the confusion that caused the wrong charges to be filed, Jones said.

St. Angelo was trapped inside his car until rescue workers could free him. He and a passenger in the car, his wife, May, suffered minor injuries, according to Jones.

FOURTH OF JULY FEAST — Residents of the Forest Hills neighborhood in Greenville celebrate Independence Day by filling up their plates for a picnic. The event has been held on July Fourth for the past 25 years. Neighbors bring dishes for the pot-luck dinner. (Reflector Photo By Jane Welborn) saw horses covered with boards. A blue tarpaulin stretched in the trees to cover the serving area was purchased this year after the event was rained out three straight years in a row. Resident Mac Simpson collected money from the neighbors in order to purchase the rainproof cover.

U.S. flags hang in the trees throughout the area. One of the flags was donated by an assistant to Rep. Walter Jones, D-Pitt, and a North Carolina flag was obtained by Rep. Ed Warren, D-Pitt, according to Ramey.

A bucket hangs on the tree for contributions to pay for incidentals such as cups and ice. A keg of beer is available.

"It's a warm, friendly neighborhood affair we've been enjoying for 25 years," Hite said. "Everybody brings the kids and a little food."

"Back in the olden days, we had big band music, but someone complained about the noise, so we had to stop that," he said.

Horne, former Greenville Utilities director, said that on several occasions he would have the fire hydrant on the corner of Forest Hills and Berkley roads turned on so that the neighborhood children could cool off.

Residents attending the picnic had warm memories of past events.

Former residents of the neighborhood return to see old friends, and parents who attended the event when they were young bring their children.

When the neighborhood was filled with children, they would play in a sandy lot on the school property until it was time for the dinner. They would then parade through the woods to the picnic site, often led by neighborhood resident Harry Allen.

When the fireworks were held in Ficklen Stadium, the residents would linger in the picnic area until dark before walking over to view the display in the nearby stadium.

"When the Fourth is in the middle of the week we have a larger turnout," Horne said. "People can't go out of town, so we always have a larger crowd."

Duke Talks

DURHAM (AP) — Duke University officials plan to meet Monday with members of a union that represents about 950 school employees to resume negotiations for a new contract.

Members of Local 77 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees voted Tuesday night to reject the university's offer on a contract that expired at midnight Tuesday.

Reagan: Keep Politics Out Of Confirmation Process

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, opening his campaign to put Judge Robert H. Bork on the Supreme Court by October, asked the Senate Saturday to expedite his confirmation hearings and avoid a drawn-out, partisan battle.

"To maintain the independence of the judiciary, I hope we can keep politics out of the confirmation process and promptly schedule hearings," Reagan said in his weekly radio address to the nation.

Reagan made no mention of the storm his nomination has caused among liberal opponents to Bork, a committed conservative who could provide a crucial fifth vote that could overturn the court's decision guaranteeing a woman's legal right to an abortion. Bork also would likely take a harder line against affirmative action when those cases come to the court.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., announced on Friday that he will filibuster Bork's nomination unless the judge drops his opposition to the court's 1973 decision ensuring the right to an abortion.

And Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said Saturday he did not expect hearings on the nomination to begin before Sept. 15. He predicted that the court would begin its term in October with eight justices instead of nine.

"I think he could either be confirmed or rejected if it goes to the full Senate by, perhaps, maybe Nov. 1, or maybe even Thanksgiving," Heflin said on Cable News Network's "Newsmaker Saturday" program.

Major civil rights organizations have given notice that defeat of the nomination is their overriding priority for the balance of the year.

Reagan used his radio address to laud the U.S. Court of Appeals judge as a highly respected intellectual and an advocate of judicial restraint, avoiding any mention of the impact the conservative jurist could have on controversial subjects.

"Judge Bork is recognized by his colleagues and peers as a brilliant legal scholar and a fair-minded jurist who believes his role is to interpret the law, not make it," Reagan said.

"As a member of the U.S. Court of Appeals, Judge Bork has always heard each case with an open mind, following the law and legal precedent, not his personal preferences," the president argued.

Reagan took note of the fact that controversy over the nomination could leave a vacancy when the court convenes in October, arguing, "The American people deserve a Supreme Court with nine justices operating at full strength."

While White House officials have acknowledged that the president's nomination of Bork has set the stage for a heated debate in the Senate over the nominee, they have expressed confidence that the judge will be confirmed.

Reagan named Bork on Wednesday as his choice to replace Associate Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr., who is retiring for reasons of health and age.

The president began his address by wishing the nation a "Happy Fourth of July," and said it was "a time to enjoy ourselves with friends and family, watch the fireworks, and perhaps to reflect a bit on the meaning of it all."

The president and his wife Nancy were to spend the holiday weekend at Camp David, the retreat in the Catoctin Mountains, not far from Washington.

Aides said the couple planned a quiet holiday, and would celebrate the first lady's July 6 birthday by watching movies starring the late Fred Astaire.

Although Mrs. Reagan's birthday is officially given as July 6, 1923, in her high school and college records, the year of her birth is listed as 1921.

Low Profile

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Eight years ago, five Outlaw motorcycle gang members and associates were killed in what was dubbed the "July 4th Massacre" — the worst mass murder in Charlotte history.

Today, city officials say the Outlaws are keeping a low profile. But they say that doesn't mean that Charlotte has no motorcycle gangs.

There are no signs of the shooting at the Outlaw's ramshackle clubhouse, where four bodies, sprayed with bullets from a .223-caliber semiautomatic rifle, were found in the living room. On the porch, a guard apparently had been surprised, and he was shot repeatedly.

Despite an intensive initial investigation and a reinvestigation two years ago, Charlotte police have never arrested anyone for the July 4 killings. Now the Outlaws, whose ranks have been depleted by death and desertion, have few active members in Charlotte.

"If you are looking strictly at numbers," said one Charlotte police officer, "the sun is setting on the Outlaws."

But motorcycle gangs remain in the area, officials say. Police say they suspect the Outlaws, while few in numbers, are exerting their influence through three clubs: the Rogues and Southern Cross, both of Charlotte, and the Down Timers of Huntersville.

Charges Revealed

HIGH POINT (AP) — A man accused of wounding nine people with a shotgun last month in High Point was charged with murder four years ago, but the charges later were dropped, court records show.

John Andrew Gill, 36, of High Point, was charged with murder and assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, inflicting serious injury, in the Feb. 3, 1983, killing of Benton Pierce, 41, and the wounding of Pierce's brother, John Pierce, 34, both of High Point.

The Pierces were shot after an argument outside what High Point police called a drink house on Clay Street in High Point.

Police said Gill had been at the Clay Street house about half an hour before the shootings took place and had argued with Benton Pierce. Gill reportedly ran away, leaving his car, after someone shot at him.

Police said when Gill returned, he found his windshield broken and three tires cut. He left to get ammunition for his gun and to call a tow truck for his car, police said.

When he returned to Clay Street, police said, he and the Pierce brothers resumed arguing and the brothers were shot.

Gill was indicted a month after the shootings, and his trial was scheduled for July 1983. But after an investigation by the office of then-District Attorney Lamar Dowda, the shootings were ruled self-defense and Gill was never tried.

Court records show the charges against Gill were not formally dropped until August 1986, but Robert Johnston, then one of Dowda's assistants and now a private attorney, said the delay resulted from a clerical error.

Crash Probed

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Two survivors of Wednesday's fiery crash of an Air Force airplane remain in very serious condition as plans continue for memorial services for five servicemen who died when the plane went down during a demonstration at Fort Bragg, authorities said.

Meanwhile, an investigative board led by an unidentified colonel assembled at Pope Air Force Friday for the grim task of piecing together information that could shed light on why the C-130 Hercules transport plane struck the ground and burst into flames. The plane crashed as its six-man crew attempted a low-altitude maneuver designed to deliver heavy military equipment without landing.

The crash occurred before more than 4,000 stunned spectators at the Sicily Drop Zone.

Sgt. Robert Fortenberry, an Air Force spokesman at Pope, said identities of the colonel, two majors and two captains who are on the investigative team will not be released to protect them from undue pressure.

"They come from different units from the Military Airlift Command," he said. "We are not releasing their names because the investigation is for official use only."

Fortenberry said the five-person team may call on other experts as advisors in the investigation.

They are expected to be on Pope for at least two weeks, and then it may be months before the results are revealed, he said.

Funds Running Out

RALEIGH (AP) — Six state health systems agencies could continue to operate under a $1.5 million measure now being considered by the General Assembly, but agency officials say they can't function longer past the end of the month without more money.

"We have enough money to get us through July," said Elmer M. Johnson, executive director of Capital Health Systems Agency Inc. "After that, we'll close out. The assumption is that without state support, we wouldn't be able to make it in the long run."

CHSA is a non-profit agency based in Durham that provides long-range health care planning for Wake, Orange, Chatham, Durham, Franklin, Granville, Johnston, Lee, Person, Vance and Warren counties.

The bill that would provide funding for CHSA and five other agencies is being reviewed in a Senate Appropriations Committee. The legislature is expected to vote on the bill before the end of the month.

The health planning groups opened in 1970s as part of a federal program to contain health-care costs by having local boards analyze health needs to prevent unnecessary duplication of services. The regional boards then made recommendations to the state, which made final decisions.

But with the Reagan administration came a shift in philosophy to a free-market approach and reduced funding for health planning. Congress cut the last federal dollars to support the regional agencies in September 1986.

Since then, CHSA has relied on state and county support.

"If you remove the HSAs ... then costs will rise," said G. Herbert Stout, a Wake County commissioner and member of the CHSA. "All of the hospitals will purchase all the expensive equipment and adopt the procedures which are popular regardless of if they have sufficient population to support it."

The agencies serving areas around Greensboro and Charlotte have already closed. Their boards of directors have said they will start up again if the state appropriates funding. The other three groups — in Lumberton, Morganton and Greenville — still are operating but are down to two-person staffs.

Quality In Doubt

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — An unwillingness to recognize and act on new needs in education will leave the country's next leaders unprepared, former U.S. Rep. Shirley Chisholm says.

"Recent studies have been unanimous in their conclusions that the quality of education is declining, but there's been no follow-through" in reforms, she said Thursday.

"Above all, we need to make education a respected pillar of our society once again," Ms. Chisholm said in the second of a series of lectures for Fayetteville State University's Shirley Chisholm Interdisciplinary Summer Institute. "I have come to the basic conclusion that 'leadership' is the key word, and often it is the missing link."

Young teachers who are enthusiastic to try new techniques become disheartened when their ideas are dismissed by their superiors. This causes young professionals to leave education for the private sector, where creativity and innovation are encouraged and rewarded, Ms. Chisholm said.

PTL Partners Stage March For Independence

By G.G. RIGSBY
Associated Press Writer

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — About 500 PTL partners chanted, prayed and sang as they marched peacefully at Heritage USA Saturday, proclaiming an independence day of their own on the nation's birthday.

"Today we want a revolution at PTL," George Trakas, treasurer of the Association of PTL Partners, told the cheering crowd before the mile-long march.

Partners are people who have given money to the PTL ministry based at Heritage USA near Fort Mill. Defrocked evangelist Jim Bakker turned the ministry over to the Rev. Jerry Falwell and a new board of directors after admitting to a sexual liaison with a church secretary in 1980.

The ministry has filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 in U.S. Bankruptcy Court to seek protection from creditors and has listed $72 million in debts.

The partners are divided on whether they would like to see Falwell or Bakker run the ministry. The group's official position is that it does not support any particular leader.

However, a majority of the people marching Saturday seemed to favor the ouster of Falwell, and some chanted "Farewell, Falwell."

Trakas said the group's first priority is representation on the board of directors, and the association is ready to take the battle to court.

"It's a shame we have to fight legally... but we have no other recourse," he told the crowd.

The group also will fight to maintain the charismatic nature of the ministry and will urge PTL supporters to withhold their donations, he said.

"We must withhold contributions to PTL so that we will have some force behind us," he said to shouts of "Amen," "Praise the Lord" and "Hallelujah."

"Put it in a box, put it in a bank, save it for the new day that will begin," said Trakas, who is from nearby Charlotte, N.C.

Bob Zanesky, a partner from Bridgeport, Conn., and the group's lawyer, said a lawsuit will be filed soon seeking dismissal of the present board.

"We're going to ask that they (the present board) be removed and be replaced by a committee seated by the court to run PTL until Chapter 11 is straightened out," Zanesky said.

The partners sang hymns, held hands and carried signs as they walked for a time in the rain from the World Outreach Center, PTL's corporate headquarters, to the Heritage Grand Hotel and then around a lake.

Some of the marchers said the brief but heavy rainshower that drenched them was the work of the devil.

"Falwell go home," one of their signs read. "Jesus First," and "Let the partners vote," were others.

PTL officials had agreed that the group could hold a rally on the grounds but had asked them not to march.

Harry Hargrave, chief operating officer of PTL, told the group the restrictions were to benefit "public safety and welfare," but he said in an interview Saturday that he didn't want the group to get publicity.

"I'm not going to allow this to become a publicity ploy for some minority group," he said.

But the marchers got plenty of publicity from the local and national news media watching them. PTL officials made no effort to stop the marchers, and safety officers even held traffic so the group could pass

The Bakkers Will Pack Up Tuesday

GATLINBURG, Tenn. (AP) — Jim and Tammy Bakker plan to leave Tuesday for Tega Cay, S.C., to pack their belongings at a PTL parsonage for the return trip to this mountain resort that will be the embattled evangelists' new home.

Bill Stevens, a family friend and spokesman, said Bakker didn't want to fight the Fourth of July weekend traffic on the six-hour drive from east Tennessee to Heritage USA, headquarters of the PTL television ministry.

The Bakkers have spent recent nights at the mountainside home that Bakker said the couple is buying from Roe Messner, a PTL creditor who added $300,000 in renovations to the $148,000 home.

The home has given the couple a chance to escape the constant media glare they have experienced since Bakker handed PTL to the Rev. Jerry Falwell amid a sex scandal involving Bakker and church secretary Jessica Hahn.

Their rare public appearances have included a ceremony at the Gatlinburg Chamber of Commerce, where they signed a replica of the U.S. Constitution and revealed they are seeking a new ministry while fighting for PTL.

The Bakkers also granted a lengthy interview to ABC's "Good Morning America,' which is broadcasting the conversation in a three-part series ending Monday morning.

In the first part, Bakker said any investigation of his stewardship at PTL should be expanded to include the way Falwell came to control the ministry.

In the second part, broadcast Friday, Bakker said he had been assured by Assemblies of God officials in North Carolina that the charges of homosexuality against him were unfounded and that he could return to the pulpit in six months.

But officials of the Springfield, Mo.-based denomination have denied Bakker's claims, saying he must still face a hearing on the charges.

Bakker said he spoke a week ago to the superintendent of the North Carolina district of the Assemblies of God church, the Rev. Charles Cookman.

Parents Brave Obstacles To Reach Son's Wedding

ROBBINSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — James and Carol Zoerner made small jokes about the circumstances of their son's wedding this week, but their comments left no doubt that they would have liked it to be different.

"There's no end," Mrs. Zoerner told the Winston-Salem Journal, "to what parents will do for their children."

The couple had driven from Walled Lake, Mich., and had arrived Thursday evening in Robbinsville at the site of the Rainbow Family gathering. The wedding was to be in a clearing somewhere near the central camp.

A reporter offered the Zoerners a ride up the mountain, and they accepted. The Forest Service road is closed to outside traffic except for emergency vehicles and reporters. The couple had left their car parked, with hundreds of others, on the edge of the highway. The walk would have been four miles or more.

The Rainbow family, 7,000 or more of them by Forest Service estimate, are encamped in tents, under tarpaulins, and in old buses and vans over 1,000 acres of mountainside spreading beneath Big Fat Gap. The reporter wondered how on earth the Zoerners would find their son and his bride-to-be.

Halfway to the camp the road became increasingly congested with Rainbows' buses and vans. The Zoerners and their driver had to park and walk the rest of the way. Mrs. Zoerner soon began breathing hard on the steep road, and she grudgingly accepted an offer of help carrying the cake. It was a single layer, with white icing decorated with a rainbow of pastel colors and the names Cahan and Jenny.

She said she had made it herself. Cahan had told her that if she wanted to bring a cake it had to be homemade and with natural ingredients.

Cahan is 23, Mrs. Zoerner said. He and Jenny met a month ago while helping to organize the gathering. Mrs. Zoerner said that she and her husband had not met Jenny.

It started raining heavily as the Zoerners reached the camp and struck off up a muddy trail toward where somebody said they would find the kids' camp, a sheltered place where the Rainbow children are tented.

That is where they had arranged to meet their son. He saw them first and shouted. There were no hugs.

Cahan is thin and blond, with stringy long hair and beard. He said his name is Leprechaun.

Leprechaun took a melon his father had carried up the mountain and began cutting it into slices beneath a nearby lean-to. He told his parents that Jenny — her Rainbow name is Sprite — was sick and that the wedding might have to be put off until Saturday or Sunday.

"If you wait until Sunday," his mother said, "we can't be here. We have to be back at work on Monday."

Winds Cause Damages

RALEIGH (AP) — High winds in the area of Holly Springs and Fuquay-Varina uprooted trees and damaged crops and houses, but officials said the damage was likely caused by straight-line winds rather than a tornado.

Residents said the winds, which hit about 4 p.m. Friday, had blown out windows and pulled the columns from one front porch along a half-mile path roughly between the two towns. A tree in the yard of James Jones of Holly Springs toppled on his house.

Power also was out for several hours for almost 500 residents. No injuries were reported.

"It tore tin off a metal roof, tore shingles off roofs, blew mailboxes off posts and blew windows out of houses," said North Carolina Highway Patrol Capt. Tony H. Spainhour. "There is a lot of damage out here. One man had 29 acres of tobacco destroyed. Some trees were twisted off halfway up, and others were taken up by their roots. It came through my yard and took up lots of trees."

Michael E. Sabones, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service at the Raleigh-Durham Airport, said officials were investigating whether the storm was a tornado.

"There are several reports of a funnel cloud from Holly Springs-Fuquay-Varina," Sabones said.

But after hearing reports of the damage, he said there probably had been no tornado. "There appears to be no evidence of circular winds," Sabones said. "These were probably just straight-line winds."

Lightning Detection Network Helps Utilities

GREENSBORO (AP) — Duke Power Company and a handful of other utilities can now find out where lightning is striking in their coverage area and how numerous the strikes are — and practice also provides illuminating facts for forecasters.

"It's certainly a very popular and effective tool for anybody interested in knowing where lightning is striking," said Jim Mitsche, a senior project manager for the utility-supported Electric Power Research Institute in Palo Alto, Calif.

The lightning detection network began in 1982, and now blankets the East Coast, instantly feeding data on lightning strikes to eager weather forecasters and electric utilities.

The information, beamed to the utilities by satellite within 10 seconds of the strikes, is proving useful in planning storm coverage as well as attacking more long-term problems such as the reliability of power transmission systems.

The National Weather Service office at the Greensboro-Winston-Salem-High Point Regional Airport has begun using the information, fed to it by the weather service office in Albany, N.Y., as an aid in determining the intensity of thunderstorms that pop up.

The State University of New York at Albany devised and operates the system.

"We wanted to do nothing more than locate where lightning came to the ground," Richard Orville, a professor of atmospheric science at the university, told the Greensboro News & Record. "We found out a lot of other people wanted that question answered, too. Things just kind of took off. We never planned it that way."

The system, which operates round-the-clock, has grown into a network that spans virtually the entire East Coast and extends beyond the Mississippi River. Its million-dollar annual budget is funded by the Electric Power Research Institute, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the National Science Foundation and the state of New York.

Eight IBM desk-top computers in Albany control a series of 30 direction finders — antennas located at various points along the Eastern Seaboard that scan a 200-mile area. These detect lightning strikes reaching the ground by measuring fluctuations in the magnetic field. Two direction finders are in North Carolina — one at Raleigh and the other at Manteo.

The antennas automatically relay findings to the Albany computers. The computers sort the intelligence, locating and counting strikes and noting other key characteristics of the lightning.

From there, the information goes to a West Coast company that beams it to a satellite for broadcast to anyone who has invested $11,000 for a 24-inch satellite dish and the appropriate display equipment.

"The whole thing takes about 10 seconds," Orville said.

Duke Power, which started using the lightning detection network in January, has three receiving stations — at Greenville, S.C., Hickory and Huntersville, just north of Charlotte. Carolina Power & Light Co. is testing the system at an Aberdeen facility.

Duke officials have found the system useful in determining whether to hold repair crews after hours when threatening weather is approaching. The information also is helping the utility determine what causes outages and what can be done to prevent or minimize them.

For weather forecasters, the information is useful in determining how violent approaching storms are. At the Greensboro airport, the weather service office began factoring the lightning information into forecasts this year.

"The number of cloud-to-ground strikes correlates with the severity of the storm," meteorologist Rich Kane said. "The more you have, the severer the storm is.

"Radar will tip us off as to where the cell is. This will give us an idea how active it is," Kane said.

Probe Of State Legislator Started By SBI, Paper Says

RALEIGH (AP) — The State Bureau of Investigations is investigating an Avery County legislator at the request of the Joint Legislative Ethic Committee, an Asheville newspaper has reported.

Sugar Mountain Planning Board member Richard Unrath has charged that state Rep. James F. Hughes wanted the town to annex land where a friend would run one of only two package stores authorized in a bill Hughes introduced.

Hughes, Unrath said, also wanted the town to promise to give the ABC license on the package store to Serenity Farm, a Watauga County alcoholic rehabilitation center run by New River Mental Health in Boone.

Hughes, a Republican, is chairman of a non-profit corporation that leases property to Serenity Farm.

Richard Barnes, a Winston-Salem businessman who lobbied for Sugar Mountain's ABC bill in the General Assembly, told The Asheville Citizen Friday that SBI agent Bill Dowdy had questioned him in the bureau's Greensboro office Thursday morning about contacts with Hughes.

"There's an ongoing investigation," Barnes said. "They wanted the details of how I was involved, how I was brought into this thing, and any conversation I had with Representative Hughes and my client. (Dowdy) mentioned they had been talking with other people."

Unrath could not be reached for comment. Telephone calls to Hughes' Linville home went unanswered Saturday.

Barnes told The Asheville Citizen last month that Hughes let the ABC bill die in the House ABC Committee when the town refused to meet his demands.

Sources told the newspaper SBI agents have also questioned Rep. Charles F. "Monroe" Buchanan, R-Mitchell, who refused to support Hughes' bill because of the restrictions on the number of package stores. Buchanan declined comment.

Buchanan, Hughes and Rep. Edgar V. Starnes, R-Caldwell, represent Sugar Mountain.

Hughes has previously denied all charges made by Barnes and Unrath and Sugar Mountain Resort owner B. Dale Stancil.

Stancil has said that Hughes sought a lease on some property for a package store, and mentioned introducing a bill to tax ski lift tickets when Stancil didn't offer a lease price to Hughes' liking.

Bill Sponsor Says Make Criminals Pay

By JODY TAYLOR
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Victims of crimes should be compensated by the people who are caught and punished for their offenses, says the sponsor of a bill that would raise money for a victims fund.

For several sessions, lawmakers have been seeking ways to put money into the victims compensation fund. A bill sponsored by Rep. Bob Hunter, D-McDowell, would raise approximately $1.3 million.

The bill would increase probation and parole supervision fees from $10 to $15 a month. With that in mind, Hunter also has introduced another bill that calls for $1 million to be placed in the victims compensation fund for the 1987-88 biennium.

"The criminals would be paying for victims compensation fund instead of all tax payers," Hunter said. "And I think that's the way it should be."

The bill to raise probation and parole supervision fees was approved Friday by the Senate, and will be sent to the House for concurrence on a technical amendment.

The money from Hunter's bill would go directly into the General Fund and is not earmarked for the fund. But Hunter and Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, chairman of the Base Budget Committee and a proponent of victims compensation, say they believe the money will get to the fund anyway.

"It's always easier to get an appropriation when you can show where the money is coming from," Hunter said. "The money raised by the bill would be enough for the victims compensation bill."

"Since it comes from the criminal justice system budget, I would think we would use it for that (fund)," Rand said. "It would have to be in the budget, but I don't see a problem (getting it into the fund.)"

Carrier Set For 37-Month Overhaul

By DON BEMAN
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The USS Kitty Hawk, the first in the super carrier ever commissioned, pulled into the Philadelphia Naval Shipyard Friday for a 37-month, $750 million overhaul.

Launched May 21, 1960, at Camden, N.J., the 80,000-ton Kitty Hawk will have its life expectancy extended by 15 years by the overhaul, according to the Navy. The Navy said the ship's normal life span, without overhaul, would be about 30 years.

Al Peterson, shipyard spokesman, said the overhaul cost is about one-third of the cost of a new ship.

The ship drew six combat tours off Vietnam after it was commissioned April 29, 1961. The ship's home port, until now, has been San Diego. It has just returned from a six-month tour of duty that began in January.

The ship was supposed to go around the world and put in at 11 ports of call. But the ship's orders were changed when it reached the Philippines, where a five-day stop was cut to eight hours.

The carrier was sent to the Persian Gulf because of the increased tensions between Iran and Iraq.

"Kitty Hawk's very presence was a stabilizing influence" in the Gulf, a Navy statement said.

Navy journalist Mike Hoffler, 33, a native of Elizabeth City, N.C., has been assigned to the Kitty Hawk since November 1984 and said the last cruise was "better and more interesting" because the ship was called to keep peace and not just cruise the seas.

The carrier has a crew of 5,000. That number has been cut to about 2,500 because the ship will be out of service during the overhaul. It was scheduled to dock at 3:30 p.m. Friday. Waiting at Pier 6 were about 3,400 family members and friends, many who had not seen their Kitty Hawk crewmen for six months.

But the difficulty in maneuvering the 1,065-foot craft into its berth took longer than expected and it wasn't until 5 p.m. that crew members were able to leave. All of its 87 aircraft, except one, had been removed.

The Kitty Hawk's berth in Philadelphia is within a few hundred yards of where workmen are overhauling the carrier USS Independence, which is about halfway through the same kind of overhaul the Kitty Hawk will get.

The Kitty Hawk was the first Navy ship ever to be armed with guided missiles as well as aircraft and thus became the first in the Navy to be known as a "super carrier."

In official naval terminology, the Kitty Hawk was the fifth carrier in the Forrestal Class, a designation determined by hull design.

"It is with great honor that we bring the Kitty Hawk into her new home port" for an overhaul that will extend the ship's useful life, said Capt. F. Lee Tillotson.

The Diet With Lasting Results

Anyone who has ever tried losing weight knows that the hardest part is not losing weight, but keeping it off. The staff of Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers knows that keeping those unwanted pounds off is where many dieters have difficulty.

With behavioral guidance classes and an ideal weight maintenance program, Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers clients realize that weight loss can finally be a long term proposition.

Many people are overweight because of poor eating habits which have become second nature over the years. They eat to soothe anger, depression or boredom or they eat just because food is available. These are the sort of behavior patterns that inevitably lead to a weight problem.

The Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers staff members realize that being overweight is a symptom of these behavior patterns. Before lasting results can be achieved, the behaviors must be identified and modified. Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers behavioral guidance classes are designed to accomplish this objective.

Many diet programs abandon their clients after the goal weight is reached, but at Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers, the job isn't finished until the ideal weight is maintained. Clients may enroll in a one year maintenance program, during which they gradually become more independent until they can maintain the ideal weight on their own.

Clients are urged to continue attending behavioral guidance during the year and center staff members are always available to help during any difficulty.

If a maintenance client should gain as much as six pounds during the year following their goal date, the staff provides weight loss services at no charge. If losing weight and keeping it off is part of your plan for the future, call the center nearest you to schedule a free weight loss consultation. Enroll during the 8th anniversary celebration and get an eight week program for only $88!*

Balloonists Probably Make Guinness Listing

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Richard Branson and Per Lindstrand will go into the Guinness Book of Records as the first hot-air balloonists to cross the Atlantic, despite their crash landing at sea, an official said Saturday.

Whether their Thursday-Friday flight meets the more exacting standards of the International Aeronautics Federation is another matter.

"They are the first to cross. It was a phenomenal feat," said Guinness marketing executive Anna Nicolson. She said they also broke three other records that would go in the book: for the largest hot-air balloon, the fastest hot-air balloon, and the longest distance for a hot-air balloon.

"They have undoubtedly flown across the Atlantic in a hot-air balloon and I don't think there's any question about that," agreed Nigel Tasker, secretary of the International Ballooning Committee of the Paris-based International Aeronautics Federation, which decides aviation records.

But Tasker said the federation has no record for crossing the Atlantic, only a world distance record that has two specific rules: No one may leave the craft until final landing and the balloon must remain under control until final landing.

The 21-story-high Virgin Atlantic Flyer made an out-of-control touchdown into the North Channel, between Ireland and Scotland, a mile off Scotland on Friday. The Swedish-born Lindstrand jumped from the gondola an hour before the crash and Branson, a 36-year-old British millionaire, moments before impact. Both were plucked from the water, suffering shock but not seriously injured.

Spokesmen for Branson said the balloon flew 2,789.6 miles to a brief touchdown in Ireland before crashing into the sea, with an average speed of 87.7 mph. They said the flight, begun in Maine, took 31 hours and 38 minutes.

Tasker said Lindstrand as senior pilot must first file a claim for the British distance record. He said the federation will then decide if he broke the hot-air balloon world distance record of 913.8 miles "and that will take weeks."

Branson's press office said Saturday papers will be filed Monday with the federation for the official distance record.

Miss Nicholson said as far as Guinness is concerned, the records would stand providing the balloonists filed verification of the times, distances, and the fact that they touched down briefly before crashing.

But rival British balloonists Don Cameron and Jim Howard said the circumstances of the ditching just off Mull of Kintyre peninsula on Scotland's west coast could keep Branson and Lindstrand from claiming the title.

"The rules require that you land the aircraft safely at the end of the flight, and they haven't been able to do that," said Howard.

Cameron and Howard on Saturday called off their own attempt to cross the Atlantic in a hot-air balloon after an accident with propane fuel tanks at their Canadian launch site in St. John's, Newfoundland.

Relaxing on Saturday after their two-day journey and brush with death, Branson and Lindstrand chatted with reporters at a luxury hotel at Irvine in Strathclyde, Scotland, where they were reunited with their families.

Lindstrand, 38, said he still didn't know why a button that should have released the balloon from the capsule failed to work, making it impossible to land properly.

"It's always these small percentages that are going to catch you out," he said before leaving to attend a wedding.

Branson, head of the Virgin Atlantic airline and recording empire and one of Britain's richest men, said that as the balloon was plummeting out of control above the Irish Sea, he scrawled a note to his girlfriend, Joan Templeman, saying: "Love you."

Death Toll Reaches 125 After Accident In Zaire

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — A trailer-truck crashed into a train at an unguarded crossing in southeastern Zaire, killing 125 people and injuring an unknown number of others, officials said Saturday.

The vehicles collided Thursday at Kasumbalesa Shaba, near the Zambian border, about 60 miles southeast of Lubumbashi and about 250 miles north of Lusaka, Zambia, the national Zaire Press Agency reported.

It quoted witnesses as saying the truck hit the train when its Zambian driver failed to stop at the crossing or see the approaching train.

"The truck hit the train full on at the crossing," a French-speaking diplomat in Harare, Zimbabwe, who spoke on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press.

"It struck the first car behind the engine. The car overturned, pulling the second car off the rails as well. I understand the dead and injured were mostly in those cars."

The diplomat also said 125 people were killed, but he didn't know how many were injured, how many survived or whether the truck driver was killed.

On Saturday, the government declared a national two-day period of mourning, and three government ministers visited the injured at La Gecamines hospital in Lubumbashi, the press agency reported.

The ministers also were to help identify and bury the victims, the state-run Voice of Zaire radio reported.

The Zaire Press Agency quoted witnesses as saying the truck was towing a trailer loaded with merchandise from Zambia.

It quoted National Railway officials as blaming an unprotected railroad crossing for the accident and saying it was the third accident in recent months.

The worst previous train accident in Africa killed up to 120 people when a train derailed in Algeria on Jan. 26, 1982, according to the Information Please Almanac.

The worst train accident in history killed 543 people when a train derailed in Modane, France, on Dec. 12, 1917, according to the World Almanac.

Zaire, a former Belgian colony of 905,000 square miles, has 3,211 miles of railroad track. Railroad lines are concentrated in the southeastern part of the country, near the border with Angola and Zambia.

In 1980, the railroad carried 1.3 million passengers.

Throughout the decade, Zaire, one of black Africa's largest debtor nations, has labored under rigid austerity programs demanded by creditors such as the World Bank and International Monetary Fund.

The steep and continuing economic decline has left in shambles much of the infrastructure remaining after independence from Belgium in 1960, including many roads and railroads.

Man Missing From Ship

NEW YORK (AP) — A man apparently fell or jumped from his private balcony on the Queen Elizabeth 2 cruise ship and remains missing, the Coast Guard said Saturday.

The man, who is from Chicago but was not otherwise identified, was last seen by a steward entering his private room at 9:30 p.m. Thursday when the ship was about 315 miles south of Bermuda, said Petty Officer Mike Milan.

The steward said the man had been drinking, according to Milan.

The crew realized he was missing late the next morning when a maid called his room to find out when he wanted his room cleaned and she received no answer.

The ship, which was returning to New York after a Caribbean cruise, had traveled 450 miles between the time the passenger was last seen and when he was reported missing, Milan said.

The Coast Guard was notified shortly after noon Friday when the ship was 340 miles west of Bermuda.

"An urgent broadcast was issued to all ships transiting the area to keep an eye out. As of this time, we've had no sights," Milan said.

When crew members entered the passenger's room they found that the bed had not been slept in. A damaged life jacket and two sets of keys to the room were in the cabin.

A door to the man's private balony on the side of ship was shut but unlocked, Milan said.

The luxury liner docked Saturday in New York.

Calls to Cunard Lines Ltd., which owns the QE2, were not answered Saturday morning.

Wounded Girl Rescued

INDIO, Calif. (AP) — A 13-year-old girl with several bullet wounds scrambled up a freeway embankment and flagged down a motorist after being left to die in the desert with her raped and murdered cousin, authorities said Friday.

About 12 hours after the child stumbled to Interstate 10 a few miles east of here and 120 miles southeast of Los Angeles, deputies arrested Marcus Garcia Martinez, 23, of Coachella, Riverside County sheriff's Sgt. Ron Dye said.

The bullet-riddled body of Helen Hernandez, also 13, was found in the desert near the Coachella Canal five miles northeast of Coachella, investigators said. Both girls are from Glendale, Ariz., and were visiting relatives in Coachella.

The surviving girl was listed in satisfactory condition Friday evening at Desert Hospital in Palm Springs, a nursing supervisor said.

The sheriff's department was called about 2:20 a.m. Friday. "She was conscious and gave them a description of the guy," and other information, Dye said.

The man apparently befriended the girls at a Coachella convenience store Thursday and they accepted a ride in his car, investigators said.

Martinez, a construction worker employed by a lumber company, was booked for investigation on charges of murder, attempted murder and two counts of rape, Dye said. He was held at Riverside County Jail in lieu of $250,000 bail.

Deputies, requesting assistance from the U.S. Border Patrol, had trailed the gunman's footprints from the crime scene about six miles south to Thermal, Border Patrol Agent Dave Lindemann said.

Investigators used information from the surviving girl and from the abandoned car they found stuck in sand at the crime scene to locate him, officials said.

Martinez was arrested at his sister's home in nearby Desert Hot Springs around 2:40 p.m., Dye said.

Just Another Day In July

INDEPENDENCE, Miss. (AP) — Despite the name, the 500 residents of this town don't make a fuss over the Fourth of July.

The last parade was four years ago, when an elderly Chicago man drove through the town. He stopped his station wagon and banged his antique drum in celebration of Independence Day.

"It was a little strange," recalled Postmaster Jean Walker, 62. "On the Fourth of July he goes to patriotic towns."

Nonetheless, she and other Independence residents joined the visitor by playing the nearest instrument they could find. "We rang the church bell," she said.

No one seems to recall just how the town acquired its name.

"I've talked to all the older people here and no one can remember," Walker said, but she says it was probably a question of image.

The town used to be called Bucksnort.

"They needed something more dignified, didn't they?" she said.

Barbie Gets Life On War Crimes Conviction

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

LYON, France (AP) — Former Lyon Gestapo chief Klaus Barbie found it incredible that he was convicted on Saturday of crimes against humanity and sentenced to life in prison, a defense lawyer said.

The three judges and nine jurors deliberated 6½ hours after an eight-week trial and then found Barbie, the man called the "Butcher of Lyon," guilty of deporting hundreds of Jews and Resistance members to Nazi death camps.

Both verdict and sentence had to be approved by at least eight of the 12 judges and jurors, who deliberated together until just after midnight Friday. The precise vote was not disclosed.

"It's incredible," Barbie defense lawyer Nabil Bouaita quoted the 73-year-old defendant as saying in a brief meeting before he was taken back to prison.

Bouaita did not elaborate or pass on other remarks from Barbie, but said the meeting was short and unemotional.

The death penalty was outlawed in France in 1981.

The Barbie trial — once thought to have the potential to divide France and open wounds going back more than 40 years — was hailed Saturday for reminding the old and teaching the young about the suffering the Nazis inflicted during the World War II occupation of France.

"This trial had to take place," Andre Frossard, a journalist who was imprisoned by the Nazis and who testified at Barbie's trial, wrote Saturday in the Paris newspaper Le Figaro.

"It was of direct interest to the conscience of humanity, which was, in truth, the silent judge."

Hundreds of observers in the courtroom burst into applause and cheered when the verdict was announced. Judge Andre Cerdini quickly hushed them.

Outdoors, where hundreds more waited on the street along the Saone River, the reaction was less restrained. When Barbie's chief lawyer, Jacques Verges, stepped outside he was jostled and jeered. Police officers drew batons and scuffled with demonstrators before Verges reentered the building by another door. He left the courthouse complex later in a police car.

Verges said he would appeal the verdict.

Bouaita told The Associated Press that Verges was hit on the head but not injured during the melee. Bouaita received anonymous death threats himself, two of them in telephone calls Saturday morning, he said.

"I'm very upset by the atmosphere. There was a terrible hate," he said.

Bouaita, arguing for the defense Wednesday, compared Nazi wartime crimes to acts by American troops in Vietnam and Israelis in Lebanon, sparking outrage among many spectators.

Barbie faces another trial, possibly next year, on new charges of crimes against humanity which allege that he deported two men he arrested with Resistance hero Jean Moulin in June 1943.

Before this trial opened May 11, Verges said revelations about the collaboration of France's Vichy government with Nazi Germany from 1940 to 1944 would overshadow the details of Barbie's case.

"The French, as we all know, retain an immense shame from the disaster of 1940 and all that followed," Verges said in closing arguments Friday.

Nothing new about French collaborators emerged from the trial. Attention remained fixed on the succession of poignant accounts by witnesses of what they suffered under torture or in Nazi camps.

Many of the 105 men and women who testified said they were telling things they always considered too painful to mention, even among family, and were glad their stories would be recorded for history.

"We needed this trial and we needed it for the memories," Lionel Collet, a leader of the Coordinating Committee of Lyon Jewish groups, said shortly before the verdict. "In France a lot of young people don't know about what happened during the last war."

Lea Katz, who testified about her narrow escape from the Feb. 9, 1943, roundup at a Jewish organization's offices in Lyon, said the trial's educational benefit was crucial.

"I've learned things myself," said Mrs. Katz, who attended nearly every day of the trial. "I understand better what I escaped."

The Coordinating Committee of Lyon Jewish groups said the Jewish community welcomed the sentence as "an act of justice and charity toward all those who died."

Under French law, Barbie would have to serve at least 17 years of his life sentence.

Barbie lived in Bolivia for more than 30 years before being expelled and brought to France in 1983.

French courts twice convicted him in absentia of war crimes and sentenced him to death, but the convictions expired under the statute of limitations. There is no statute of limitations for crimes against humanity.

Barbie became an anti-communist agent in Germany for U.S. Army Intelligence after the war, and through his American contacts was spirited to Bolivia in 1951 under the name Klaus Altmann.

LaRouche Says He'll Return

BONN, West Germany (AP) — American political extremist Lyndon LaRouche on Saturday called his indictment by a U.S. grand jury a "political dirty trick" but said he will surrender to authorities in the United States this week.

In a telephone interview, LaRouche denied allegations by a Boston grand jury that he ordered subordinates in his political organization to stall a grand jury investigation of purported fraud by his followers.

LaRouche, 64, telephoned The Associated Press in Bonn after the AP called the Wiesbaden office of the Executive Intelligence Review, a U.S. magazine published by LaRouche, and requested an interview with him.

"There's nothing to it, it's a lot of hot air, a political indictment" he said of the charges. "This is what politicians call a political dirty trick."

He refused to say where he was calling from, saying only that he was staying as a guest of friends "on the Rhine River." He also refused to provide his telephone number, citing security reasons.

"A lot of people want to get me," he said, naming the Soviet Union and "a group of Colombian drug pushers" as among his pursuers.

LaRouche, a one-time Marxist, now espouses far-right views and theories of world conspiracy. He claims prominent Americans and world leaders are involved in drug-dealing or are Soviet-influenced.

He says he is a candidate for U.S. president, an office he has run for three previous times.

The indictment against him on one charge of conspiring to obstruct justice was handed up Thursday by a grand jury in Boston. It accused LaRouche of plotting to "fix" and "quash" the grand jury investigation of his followers.

More than two dozen followers face state or federal charges of fraud in fund-raising for his 1984 presidential campaign.

Prosecutors in the United States said LaRouche's attorney, Odin T. Anderson, told the government the candidate will surrender to federal authorities this week.

LaRouche has been abroad since December, returning briefly to the United States a week ago to testify before the grand jury. His wife is West German, and his followers here have campaigned unsuccessfully in West German elections under the banner of the European Workers' Party.

LaRouche told the AP his attorney and U.S. authorities arranged for him to surrender to authorities in Boston this week, but refused to say which day he will travel.

He said he would hold a news conference on arrival in Boston. He said he still intends to campaign for president despite the indictment.

He charged that the Democratic Party pressured U.S. authorities to investigate him.

If convicted, LaRouche could receive up to five years in prison and be fined $250,000.

MISSED DEATH TRAIN — Jose Martinez Pena, 40, is shown after he identified the remains of three friends at the El Paso, Texas, Mortuary, who died of asphyxiation after being locked in a railroad boxcar. Pena couldn't run fast enough to keep up with his friends who piled into the boxcar Wednesday near El Paso. His comrades were discovered dead Thursday in Sierra Blanca. Authorities Facing Difficulties Identifying Dead Illegal Aliens

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Dozens of Mexicans were allowed to cross the border Saturday to see if their relatives were among the 18 illegal aliens who died in a sealed boxcar, but mortuary workers said there were few solid leads.

The deaths did not deter other illegal aliens from hiding in boxcars to hitch train rides to cities farther north, border officials said.

Many anxious families were from towns nowhere near those of the victims, said Jim Weatherly, director of the El Paso Mortuary where the bodies were being held pending identification and release to Mexico.

"After initial discussions, there are just a couple of people who hold a real strong maybe," Weatherly said.

He said dozens of people had been allowed to cross the border to go to the mortuary even if they did not have papers, and the mortuary had received dozens of calls from others.

The Border Patrol planned to show pictures of the dead to those who inquired at the mortuary, and would take the photographs to the border bridges between El Paso and Ciudad Juarez upon request, said William G. Harrington, assistant chief of the El Paso sector of the Border Patrol.

The victims had stripped off much of their clothing in the heat of the sealed boxcar, meaning identification papers were not with the bodies.

Officials tentatively identified six victims Friday. On Saturday, agents confirmed three of the six, and said they were almost certain of the identities of two others, said Harrington.

Six of the victims were from the same town in the central Mexican state of Aguascalientes, while authorities believe another group of men in the boxcar was from the state of Zacatecas.

The only man who survived said two of the victims were alien smugglers, one of whom recruited him and his group of friends from their home in Pabellon de Arteaga in Aguascalientes.

The men crawled into the boxcar Wednesday night at an El Paso freight yard and were locked in by a third smuggler, who tossed them two railroad spikes to break through the floor when the train arrived in Dallas.

They were locked inside the foam-insulated, virtually airtight car, designed to carry beer, for 14 hours while the temperature inside soared to 130 degrees.

Authorities have identified the smuggler who locked the boxcar only by his nickname, "el Chapulin" or "the Grasshopper," Harrington said.

With the publication of that name Saturday, "they've probably got him run all the way into Guatemala by now," Harrington said. "If he was still in Juarez (before Saturday), you can bet your boots he's not right now."

Harrington said the deaths did not affect aliens' use of boxcars for the clandestine trip away from the border and into the interior of the United States. Fourteen percent of all aliens apprehended in the El Paso sector are aboard trains.

"It won't change, I don't know why it should. Until there is a better reason than a few fellows getting locked in, I don't see it slowing down," he said. "Smuggling may be down in El Paso because they know the heat's on, but it's only a temporary thing."

The men in the boxcar had been fearful they would be caught if they made noise, and put off chipping a hole for air until after the train left the rail yard, authorities said.

They didn't begin the work until four hours after being locked in, and the survivor, Miguel Tostado Rodriguez, said the lack of oxygen and water had already begun affecting them by then.

The two smugglers were the first to die during the sweltering night. Some of the men scuffled while they tried desperately to pick a hole in the car for air. Tostado was the only one able to break through the wooden floor.

A Border Patrol agent on a routine patrol in Sierra Blanca, 90 miles east of El Paso, opened the boxcar Thursday morning and found the men.

Mass Held For 38 Accident Victims

ORENSE, Spain (AP) — Families of 38 people killed when a bus veered off a mountain road arrived in the nearby town of Verin on Saturday to identify the bodies and attend a joint funeral Mass, Spanish national radio reported.

Police said mechanical failure apparently caused the bus to leave the road Friday and tumble 500 feet down a mountainside. Most of the 45 people aboard were vacationing retirees.

The crash killed 23 women and 15 men, including the bus driver and a 24-year-old tour guide, and seriously injured the seven remaining passengers, the radio said. Most of the dead ranged from in age from 50 to 80, it said.

Hospital officials in this northwestern city said one woman remained in critical condition Saturday and the six others were listed in serious condition.

Most of the passengers were retired Spaniards from the northeastern province of Huesca who were on a bus tour of the northwestern region of Galicia and northern Portugal, the radio said.

Police told the radio an initial investigation indicated the bus' clutch and transmission failed.

Early Saturday, family members helped police and a local judge identify the bodies, which were laid out in caskets at the sports pavilion of Verin, near the crash site and about 40 miles south of Orense, the radio said.

All victims were identified by noon. A Roman Catholic priest then said a Mass for the dead.

Spain's worst bus accident occurred in 1979, when a passenger bus plunged into a river in northern Zamora province, killing 44 children and four adults.

Novel's Readers Denounce Stalin

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — The publication of a decades-old novel based on life under Josef V. Stalin has prompted an outpouring of letters from Soviet citizens criticizing the late Soviet dictator and praising the author's honesty.

The weekly news magazine Ogonyok printed 15 of the letters in its issue released Saturday. Their publication appeared to be a sign of official sanction for public involvement in what has become a broad reevaluation of Stalin's influence on Soviet society.

The monthly magazine Druzhba Narodov (Friendship of Peoples), serialized Anatoly N. Rybakov's novel, "Children of the Arbat," in its April, May and June issues. The work of fiction traces the fate of a student in the 1930s who is expelled and exiled for what then was considered the defiant act of expressing independent views.

Millions of Soviet citizens died in the 1930s when Stalin purged political and military ranks of real and imagined enemies and when the government forcibly collectivized agriculture.

The letters published by Ogonyok (Little Flame) praised the author for his honest description of life in the 1930s and Stalin's excesses.

"History will not stand for this hole in our memory — it's too dangerous," wrote Lev Anninsky. "I only ask fate that we have enough strength to listen to the truth."

"People who are too young to have lived through all the tragedies of the past should know and understand what the reasons were, their roots, and the far-reaching consequences," wrote Grigory Baklanov.

Ogonyok said most of the writers were artists and writers who read the novel years ago when it circulated underground in manuscript form.

Rybakov began writing the book in the 1950s and said he made changes in the novel up until 1982, but versions of it were prepared for publication at least 20 years ago.

"The book was difficult. Those years were difficult," the author said in an interview with Ogonyok. "To write about everything that occurred then is psychologically complex, but it's necessary. Once you tell the truth, you must tell it to the end."

Rybakov also told the magazine he plans another book about Stalin's rule, to be titled, "1935 and Other Years."

Rybakov indirectly credited Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev for the release of "Children of the Arbat."

Gorbachev became Communist Party general secretary in March 1985, and shortly afterward launched a series of social and economic reforms that have led to publication of several long-banned works.

"It goes without saying that publication of 'Children of the Arbat' is a sign of the times," Rybakov said. "If it wasn't for March 1985, this book still wouldn't be among the readers."

Ogonyok last week also published a series of letters from Fyodor F. Raskolnikov, a Soviet diplomat who defied Stalin in the late 1930s and died under mysterious circumstances in 1939.

Some officials, like historian Yuri Afanasyev and economist Nikolai Shmelev, have written recent articles blaming Stalin for fostering the excessive bureaucracy and economic stagnation that still plague Soviet society.

The magazine Druzhba Naradov announced on the back cover of its June edition that it would publish another Rybakov novel next year, but it gave no details.

Bulgaria Reports First AIDS Death

By KERIN HOPE
Associated Press Writer

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — Health authorities have reported Bulgaria's first death from AIDS and launched a public awareness campaign intended to prevent the disease from spreading in this Balkan Communist country.

One person died of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in December 1986, Deputy Health Minister Professor I. Shindarov told the official labor movement newspaper Trud in an interview published last week.

Shindarov identified the victim as a foreign resident but didn't specify the victim's sex or nationality.

He said screening for AIDS revealed 34 cases of exposure to the AIDS virus, 24 foreigners and 10 Bulgarians. A total of 42,172 people were tested, he said.

There is no known cure for AIDS, which attacks the body's immune system and leaves victims vulnerable to a wide variety of infections and cancers. By current medical estimates, more than 30 percent of those exposed to the virus eventually will develop the disease.

Under a recent law, all foreigners found to be infected with AIDS face mandatory expulsion from Bulgaria, the deputy health minister said.

Bulgarian authorities last month started distributing leaflets on AIDS to homes in Sofia, a city of 1.2 million with a large foreign student population that Western diplomats say includes hundreds from African countries with a high incidence of AIDS.

State-run television screened a program on AIDS in June that surprised many Bulgarians with frank references to homosexuality, prostitution and narcotics — problems rarely acknowledged officially in Soviet bloc nations.

AIDS is most often transmitted through sexual contact. Other means of transmission include the sharing of contaminated hypodermic needles and the transfusion of tainted blood.

AIDS can also be passed from mother to child at or before birth.

Unity Important Goal For Schools

Just over a year ago, Pitt County and Greenville schools became one entity.

One year later is an appropriate time to reflect on the impact of the merger of the two systems and consider the future of education in Pitt County. It is also a proper time to contemplate perspective — or the lack of it.

The school system's goal is excellence, and for the most part, that goal was approached in the first year of consolidation. Serious problems were addressed — perhaps not as boldly as they should have been, but progress was made.

School attendance lines were redrawn. Strong affirmative action and leadership programs for minorities were implemented. Scholastic Aptitude Test scores rose. A long-term plan for the school system's growth and capital outlay needs was adopted.

These items can positively affect the quality of education in the county. Revising attendance lines can, in time, improve racial balance in classrooms. An affirmative action-minority leadership program ensures potential within the school system is developed and utilized. Improving test scores are tangible proof that instruction is working. Long range planning means needs are recognized and addressed systematically through fact-based management.

But the effectiveness of these strides is limited by a lack of perspective. A "we-they" mentality still exists not only on the board that governs the merged school system, but among citizens. Excellence cannot be reached with a provincial point of view.

That mentality and the emotionalism it fosters has hindered decision making on important issues. From affirmative action to redrawing attendance lines, divisiveness has hampered the cogency of the school system's first year.

Removing this stumbling block of disunity is the challenge facing the school system in its second year of consolidation. Politics and emotionalism must not overshadow the importance of quality education for Pitt County's children and young adults. Those students and the education they receive are the county's most important product.

It would be naive to indicate that politics should be removed from the realm of edcuation. Controversy is often good for a school system. In the case of Pitt County, it is hopeful the debate of the past year will serve as a catharsis.

It would be realistic, however, to suggest the focus of education in the coming year shift perceptibly to the child sitting in the classroom. That perspective is the correct one if the school system is to move closer to its goal of excellence.

Keep College Tuition Low

State lawmakers were correct to back away from a 15 percent tuition hike for North Carolina residents who attend the state university system.

No increase tuition would be preferable. A proposed 5 percent rise, however, is at least reasonable. A 15 percent increase could easily put the price of a college education at one of North Carolina's universities out of reach of struggling students and families.

The state has an obligation to keep its colleges affordable to its citizens. Granted, it also has a responsibility to feasibly fund the university system with a balanced budget. But no student should be closed out of a chance to get an education at a state college because tuition is too steep.

An increase might seem modest to the average person but not to the young person who's trying to figure out where his money for the fall semester is going to come from. Neither is it modest to the family who must budget carefully, counting every dollar, to pay for a child's education. Besides, residents already fund the university system through tax dollars. With that fact in mind, tuition should be kept as low as possible.

There is the temptation to make out-of-state students provide necessary additional monies through sharp rises in non-resident tutition, but lawmakers should approach that issue with caution. Increasing non-resident tuition is preferable to escalating resident fees, but the state's colleges need the diversity that out-of-state students provide. It would be detrimental for the university system to become too homogenous. Drastic increases in out-of-state tuition could concurrently cut the number of students opting to go to school here, negatively affecting the student mix.

North Carolina has a duty to keep its colleges affordable to a majority of the citizens. A 15 percent increase in tuition is a drastic move away from this obligation. A 5 percent increase is a regrettable start.

Dog-Gone Situation Finds A Cure

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

The dog outside McDonald's at 10th and Cotanche streets was friendly enough.

It obviously was a hunting dog and a well-cared for animal.

Still, there it was hanging around the drive-in window carefully approaching everyone who walked by.

Inside, the employees said the dog had jumped out of an auto window when its owner stopped for the traffic light. The owner didn't realize the dog was gone and drove off when the light changed green.

That left the dog, which had no identifying collar, stranded in a strange part of town and without a familiar face around. The dog realized its predicament and got off the busy street. It made its way to the walk surrounding the restaurant where it had sense enough to stay out of the way of cars which circulate around the building. As each new person approached the dog would run to them, tail wagging, sniff and reject them as not being its owner.

Finally a car pulled into the parking lot and the driver asked an employee if she had seen the dog. The employee reunited the dog and its owner. A happy dog rejoined its happy owner and the interrupted trip continued.

The month of weddings has concluded with the passing of June. It was not unusual on a Saturday or Sunday afternoon to see a car decorated with the traditional wedding signs, tissue paper and cow bells speeding down a local thoroughfare. As the lettering said, the occupants were "Just Married."

Dressing up the newlywed's cars doesn't seem to be quite the art form it once was. There is less lettering done on the vehicles, perhaps because the message was finally gotten across that a paint job can be ruined.

If the decorating is carefully done most people don't seem to mind.

Anyway the decorated cars, often followed by well wishers, never fail to attract attention as the newly married couple seeks to get out of town.

One such car was seen last Sunday on Greenville Boulevard at Charles Boulevard.

The vehicle attracted a number of friendly horn toots from other motorists.

Then it pulled up to the stop light at the intersection.

The couple looked at the vehicle in the lane next to them and did a double take.

That car, too, was decorated and carried another "just married" couple. The windows were rolled down and the two couples exchanged pleasantries. Then the light changed and one car went straight while the other turned.

It is one of those memories of the wedding day, however. Perhaps their paths had only briefly crossed but the incident will be remembered as surely as the pictures in the photo album.

Poll-Watchers Line Up For Their Sides

Paul T. O'Connor

RALEIGH — Whose poll do you believe? Who's number one?

No, it's not time for the AP and UPI pre-season college football polls. This is a political debate over North Carolina's place among her 49 counterparts in terms of economic development.

Various magazines and business groups have taken to ranking states in such a fashion and, like the wire service football polls, these business polls often vary widely.

That's why they're so valuable to politicians. Both parties use them as propaganda. Gov. Jim Martin and the Republicans want North Carolina to believe that his administration has brought unprecedented prosperity to the state all on its own. So they cite a Business Week magazine poll that calls North Carolina the number one state for locating new businesses.

The Democrats want the voters to think the Great Depression returned the day after Martin was sworn into office, and solely because he was sworn into office. So they trot out a poll by "Inc." magazine which says the state is 15th among the 50, a tremendously low ranking for a state used to being up there in the running for the national basketball championship, er, for number one in economic development.

But the Republicans could stick out their tongues on the Democrats on this one. In the last year of the past Democratic administration, they noted, Inc. magazine ranked North Carolina 26th.

The Wall Street Journal's regional affairs reporter Eugene Carlson recently dedicated his weekly column to the Grant Thornton survey of state hospitality to manufacturing. North Dakota, which usually sits at the bottom in these polls, came in first. North Carolina was ninth.

Carlson shows that each of the surveys is based on different assumptions. One survey may give precedence to low wage labor availability while another wants cheap land and a third wants a skilled workforce, no matter what it costs. Therefore, almost every state ought to be able to find a survey which thinks its strong points are the strong points for relocation.

But don't expect such an explanation from the Democrats and Republicans. You've never heard the Penn State football coaches saying that an explosive passing offense was a requirement for the national football title.

Debate Over Arms Shifts To Washington

Jim Hoagland

Democrats who expected arms control to be their issue in 1988 are instead bracing for the Reagan peace offensive that a U.S.-Soviet arms control treaty and a Washington summit will bring.

As the negotiations on an intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) treaty reach their climactic phase this month, the political debate over this controversial accord is gradually shifting from Europe to Washington and is becoming entwined in the positioning for 1988's presidential election.

It is certainly no accident, as they say in Moscow, that the Soviet Union has chosen this exact moment to offer President Reagan a particularly difficult choice on the final shape of the agreement that would secure Reagan's place in diplomatic history.

The Russians are now dangling the possibility that they will also give up 100 SS20 missile warheads they had earlier insisted on keeping in Asia — if the United States will acquiesce in a tacit phasing out of 72 Pershing IA rockets stationed in West Germany under nominal dual German-American control.

Such an agreement would mean that Reagan would have succeeded in ridding the world of the triple-warhead SS20. It would also remove serious verification problems that would be posed for the United States in letting the Russians keep 100 SS20s, their maintenance facilities and probably some limited production capability.

But West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl has made retention of the aging Pershing IAs a point of honor. Britain and France would also be extremely unhappy about the precedent implied by Washington throwing a "third-country" force into a U.S.-Soviet deal.

Under the terms of their original deployment, the IAs are scheduled to go out of service in 1989. A commitment not to replace them would probably result in the Soviets giving up the Asian SS20s, U.S. negotiators have been led to believe.

This is likely to be the last detail of the draft treaty to be settled when Secretary of State Shultz and Foreign Minister Shevardnadze meet in Washington later this month.

The treaty is close enough for Democrats on Capitol Hill to have begun describing it as a "modest and flawed agreement" that should not be allowed to overshadow six years of U.S.-Soviet deadlock under Reagan.

Presidential hopeful Sen. Joseph Biden predicts that voters will understand that the INF agreement is "a sideshow" that "does not address the real issues of strategic arms and of defensive systems."

But Biden acknowledges that he and other Democrats will almost certainly vote to ratify an arms treaty negotiated by Reagan and sent to the Senate.

"I would not have negotiated it that way," Biden said. But "it establishes a climate for the next president to make genuine progress" since Republican conservatives "will have cashed in their card of opposing arms control by supporting this questionable agreement."

The single most influential voice in the Senate on the treaty will be Sam Nunn, who is set to turn the debate into a more general confrontation over the administration's approach to the 1972 U.S.-Soviet Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty.

In an effort to reinterpret the ABM treaty to give the administration more latitude to pursue Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, the State Department has argued that testimony before the Senate on the 1972 treaty should be disregarded in favor of an examination of the lengthy negotiating history of the treaty.

"According to the State Department's position on ABM, we are not to really believe what they tell us up here, but have to rely on the negotiating history," Nunn said with more cold calculation than irony in his voice. "We will have to examine carloads of documents and information."

While planning to hoist the administration on its own petard, Nunn says of the INF treaty that "the probability is that it will be ratified." For one thing, the Georgia Democrat thinks that an INF agreement is likely to force NATO to do more in conventional defense.

However much it may complicate their efforts to paint Republicans as anti-arms control, the Democrats are not likely to oppose this agreement. As they note, it is flawed. But as they concede, it is workable and heads Soviet-American relations in the right direction.

Korea And Democracy: A Lesson In Things That Can Go Right

Stephen S. Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON — How thoughtful of the Koreans to time their new surge toward democracy to our Fourth of July. Assuming it comes off, the Korean passage is happy proof of an article of American faith — that our principles are applicable universally. This is the American secular religion. No president since Woodrow Wilson has believed so deeply in it as Ronald Reagan.

Still, eager as we are to bask in the glory of the Koreans' achievement, we need to come to terms with the startling unexpectedness of it all. Neither those who warned trouble was brewing nor those more sanguine figured it would come out this way.

The idea had taken wide hold that Korea was not ready for democracy. Yes, some said, democracy would be nice and in the American interest. But Korean society could not support an early transition. The generals were too rigid, wouldn't allow it. The politicians were divided and flaky. The students could be isolated.

On June 17, a week into the big demonstrations, Secretary of State George Shultz offered the typical view, describing Korea as a country without a real "democratic tradition" and as a place where a bent for political confrontation — the condition always distinguished from the capacity for restraint and compromise deemed essential to build democracy — was "part of the Korean character."

Jeane Kirkpatrick, in her justly famous article of 1979 on "Dictatorships and Double Standards," had identified and devastated the liberal tendency to accept as right and natural left-trending Third World historical "forces." She juxtaposed this tendency to a readiness to see unhinged Third World situations as ones in which humans could make political choices and affect the outcome. On June 17, Shultz was endorsing a way of looking at things that made a virtue of American reserve and that excused Washington from responsibility for any undemocratic result.

As the demonstrations progressed, however, the administration as a practical matter started reconsidering its assumptions. The inside story of American bumps and nudges remains to be told, but the visible signs indicate that the administration started tackling what Shultz calls the "extremely tricky" problem of managing a transition from an autocratic government to a more democratic one.

This was a gutsy thing for the president and Shultz to do. First there were the plain risks of ending up not with progress toward democracy but with destabilization in Seoul or with a North Korean security provocation. Then, the Carter failures in Iran and Nicaragua made the management of Third World transitions a permanently hot political issue, especially among American conservatives. Shultz is under steady fire from Reaganites to his right, including Kirkpatrick, for the excessive pragmatism they believe he has brought to Third World trouble spots.

The suggestions that Shultz made on June 17 — that Korea is not prepared for the rigors of democracy and that there are prudent limits to American intervention — had guided American policy not just in this administration but also in the time of all previous administrations.

It is the bipartisan conventional wisdom, powerfully reinforced by awareness of Korea's exposed security position. That Koreans are now trying to move beyond it, furthermore, does not necessarily mean it was wrong.

Here is the crunch: it is very well — brave, humanistic, patriotic, generous — to say that everyone should enjoy the benefits of democracy, and it can be patronizing to say otherwise. But Reagan, when he is in his ideological mode, is one of the few of us who really believes it. Most of us believe, with Kirkpatrick, that there is such a limiting thing as a "requisite political culture," a set of institutions, attitudes and habits needed to make democracy work.

Once you grant that, however, you must entertain the perilous question of which place has such a tolerant and encouraging culture and which does not. Our understanding is necessarily imprecise. One does not want to sell a given country short, but one does not want to take foolish risks, either.

What I am saying is that wise policy-makers will be aware of ideology but will not get hung up on it. Rather, they will try to see things as they are and exercise good judgment. Perhaps that's what happened to American policy toward Korea.

Was U.S. Influence Minimal?

Sam Jameson

SEOUL, South Korea — In May 1980, Lt. Gen. Chun Doo Hwan took power by means of a coup carried out over U.S. objections. Seven years later, Wednesday, President Chun Doo Hwan embraced everything that the United States had been advocating and proclaimed the beginning of an era of democracy in South Korea.

U.S. policy-makers rejoiced at the turnabout but took no credit for it.

At first, there were indications that U.S. influence might have been a factor. Over the last few weeks, as public disturbances mounted across South Korea, there was an accompanying crescendo of U.S. diplomatic activity.

And when Chun declared after 18 days of violence in the streets that democracy must function through "dialogue and compromise," he used the same words Washington had been using. He said Korea's political development had been out of step with the level of its economic development, and that too was something the United States had been saying.

But none of that had much bearing on the outcome.

All the signs point to two decisive factors: the students of South Korea and the Olympic Games scheduled to take place here next year.

South Korea's students, who were given no sign of public support when they took to the streets in 1980, had it this time. They were applauded from the sidewalks by Koreans who believed that they were about to be deprived again of a voice in the selection of a national leader. The last time they had such a choice was in 1971.

But most of all there was the matter of the 1988 Olympic Games, which promised to give this nation, with its 5,000-year history, its first moment in the world spotlight.

Chun and Roh Tae Woo, the chairman of the ruling Democratic Justice Party, joined a host of Korean and foreign analysts in citing the Olympics as an important reason for their overnight change of heart. To Roh, loss of the Games would have brought national humiliation to a nation that looks on "saving face" as vital.

Just how little the United States influenced the three-week revolution was underscored by a U.S. diplomat who said two days after it began, "We do not expect any breakthroughs."

"Nor are we hopeless," he added. "Nor are we responsible for what happens. We grasp at straws."

Indeed, U.S. diplomats at the highest level here saw their role as essentially that of cheerleaders on the sidelines. They had been warned by former Ambassador William Gleysteen that there was little they could do. Gleysteen had experienced bitter failure in his effort to encourage Korea to choose democracy after President Park Chung Hee was assassinated in 1979.

Chun carried out his coup d'etat the following year, and a dejected Gleysteen said, "It was so, so wrong."

U.S. diplomats were informed in advance of what Chun planned to say in his speech Wednesday, but there is no sign that they had any inkling of the bombshell Roh exploded Monday, when he accepted every demand the opposition had made.

Indeed, the American reading of the Chun government on the eve of Roh's announcement, like everyone else's, pointed in the opposite direction.

A Western diplomat, insisting on anonymity, said then: "They are not going to leave the process (of selecting a leader) absolutely to the citizenry. There's going to be some role in taking the results of what the citizens do and making that conform to the reality of maintaining power. ... They have no commitment to the democratic process and feel that any concessions would be seen as a sign of weakness which the opposition would take advantage of to be disruptive and force the government into a repressive reaction."

But Wednesday Chun promised a free and open direct presidential election, which is expected before the end of the year, and it now appears that the opposition has nothing left to seize on.

Clearly there is still a possibility of subterfuge from a government whose commitment to democratic ideals is just three days old. But only one word in Chun's speech suggests such a possibility. That word is if, and he used it to qualify his acceptance of a direct election to choose his successor — "if (the constitution) is expeditiously revised and enacted following agreement between the government party and the opposition."

Such agreement is expected, now that Chun has accepted the opposition's demand for a direct presidential election.

U.S. diplomats here detected in mid-June what they perceived to be growing recognition in the ruling party that Chun had made mistakes. His decree April 13 ordering an end to talks on revising the constitution until after the Olympic Games topped the list. But no one had any hint that Roh would embrace democracy completely, as he did Monday.

On the contrary, one Western diplomat said that Chun and his group were firmly committed to a Confucius-like view that ordinary Koreans cannot be trusted with a role in the decision-making process.

What it was that turned Chun and Roh around is still not clear. But all the signs point to persuasion by Koreans, not Americans.

Chun spent all last week calling in leaders from every segment of society, and nearly everyone told him, according to a member of the Korean Establishment, that the people wanted direct elections to choose a new leader and they wanted a free press and an open society. Roh spent many days at home, making phone calls and meeting people.

Only Gaston Sigur, the U.S. assistant secretary of state for East Asia and the Pacific, met both Chun and Roh during this time. He said he advised Chun and other leaders that the United States favored democratic reform and believed that the use of troops to quell demonstrations could not be justified.

Tuesday, in Washington, Sigur gave credit for the outcome to "the Korean people (who) have a just right to be extremely proud of what they accomplished."

What they accomplished, however, they accomplished without the "dialogue and compromise" the Americans had advocated. There was little dialogue and, as Chun said Wednesday, "not one iota of compromise" from the opposition.

As happy as the outcome has proved to be, the process that led to it bodes ill for the future. As one diplomat said: "It was a sign of the lack of development of the political process. The political process failed. The two sides failed to agree on what the people wanted."

Other diplomats, among them Tomas Padillo, the Philippine ambassador here, said that the Americans, particularly Ambassador James R. Lilley, were "very active" in the days of crisis. He said he believed that the Americans exerted an influence here, just as they did in the Philippines last year when President Ferdinand E. Marcos was deposed.

The Americans tried. President Reagan sent a letter to Chun. Lilley, delivering it, spent two hours with Chun. In Washington, there was a new administration pronouncement almost every day.

Yet one of the most important American declarations, made in testimony to a House subcommittee by William Clark, deputy assistant secretary of state, went unnoticed here.

Clark put the Reagan administration on record as agreeing with the Korean perception that the plan for an indirect election was rigged to favor the government party.

A diplomat who kept in touch with dozens of Korean leaders through the crisis said that no Korean ever mentioned Clark's statement.

In the past, U.S. appeals for respect for human rights have succeeded not because they came from the United States but because "that is the consensus of Korean society," the diplomat said.

Bork Has The Qualifications

James J. Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — Edward Kennedy is having hysterics. Joe Biden is scuttling for cover. Along the left-field foul line the banshees are howling to high heaven. What's the commotion? President Reagan has nominated a superlatively qualified jurist, Robert Bork, to the U.S. Supreme Court, and Bork is — ugh! gasp! aargh! — a conservative.

Listen, if you please, to Senator Kennedy. Bork, he says, wants an America "in which women would be forced into back-alley abortions, blacks would sit at segregated lunch counters, rogue police could break down citizens' doors in midnight raids, schoolchildren would not be taught about evolution, writers and artists could be censored at the whim of government, and the doors of the federal courts would be shut on the fingers of millions of citizens."

What bilge! What absolute rubbish! The senator's fountains of hyperbole erupt from puddles of wild surmise. True, Bork has criticized the Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, the famed abortion case. So have scores of other scholars. It was a terrible piece of constitutional law. But to assume that Bork is fairly slavering to overrule that piece of judicial activism is to rely on a doubtful assumption. And if Roe v. Wade were overturned, the effect would be to restore the abortion issue to state legislatures where it had reposed for a hundred years before six members of the high court rewrote the Constitution in 1973.

What else? The senator says that Bork favors "rogue police" who could break down our doors at midnight. Kennedy cannot possibly believe any such thing. The genesis of this ridiculous charge is that Bork takes a strict view of the "exclusionary rule." He has little use for some of the metaphysical divinations in which the court has engaged in recent years. He would admit probative evidence unless there were truly good reasons for excluding it.

Senator Biden, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, was quite prepared last year to vote to confirm Bork for a seat on the Supreme Court. Now the gentleman from Delaware is waffling, backing up, flip-flopping. He is bidding for the political support of the anti-Bork loonies, and he is losing his image of integrity in the process.

We ought to understand what these two influential senators are up to. They seem determined to destroy a system of constitutional checks and balances that has worked from the very beginning of the Republic. Under the Constitution, presidents have the power to nominate; senators have the power to confirm. The unwritten rule is that even the most controversial nominees, provided they are judicially qualified, will be confirmed.

Twice in this century the Senate has abandoned that rule, and in both instances — with the nominations of John J. Parker in 1930 and Clement Haynsworth in 1969 — the Senate disgraced itself by capitulating to the demands of organized labor.

Is Bork an "extremist"? If so, then surely the same pejorative tag could have been hung on Thurgood Marshall when he was nominated in 1967 to succeed Tom Clark. Marshall had spent 20 years as head of the NAACP's Legal Defense Fund; he was far more ardent in support of the Civil Rights Act than Bork ever has been eloquent in criticizing it. But Marshall was confirmed 69-11.

Remember Felix Frankfurter? He was a founder of the American Civil Liberties Union, a flaming liberal who never drew a conservative breath. He was confirmed in 1939 by voice vote after only 12 days of protest from the right wing.

Critics called Louis Brandeis an anarchist; he was confirmed 47-22. Harlan Stone in 1925 was about as rock-ribbed a Republican as Coolidge could have found; only six votes were cast against his confirmation. Harding named Pierce Butler to the court in 1922 for one reason: He wanted one more conservative to vote with Van Devanter, McReynolds and Sutherland. The nomination caused the same kind of uproar we are hearing now. Butler was denounced as a reactionary who had throttled dissent as regent of the University of Minnesota, but less than a month after his nomination the Senate confirmed him, 61-8.

Bork's qualifications are impressive. In the almost unbroken tradition of this century, he deserves confirmation by a lopsided vote. If the junior senator from Delaware should win the White House next year, which a merciful heaven should forfend, he will have at least three predictable vacancies to fill. I hereby promise that if President Biden nominates judges as qualified as Bob Bork, I will not complain at his liberal choices. I would say, as I say of Reagan, he's entitled.

Ideology Is The Issue

David Lauter

WASHINGTON — The forthcoming battle over the nomination of Robert H. Bork to the Supreme Court will focus on an issue that has been often debated but never finally resolved: Can the Senate reject a judicial choice solely because of ideology?

In the six years since Ronald Reagan entered the White House, the question has arisen frequently as the president sought to put his conservative stamp on the federal courts. And so far, both the debate and the outcome have been one-sided. The Reagan administration has been determined and successful, the Democrats torn by indecision.

While the administration has employed sophisticated screening procedures to find philosophically compatible nominees for federal judgeships, Democratic Senators have been unable to decide whether it is proper to use their own ideological tests in rejecting or confirming them.

The Bork fight — which already has begun in the Senate although confirmation hearings are not expected to begin until September — may at last force them to decide.

Because Bork's vote could reverse the balance of power on the court on many of the most contentious issues of the day, both the administration and a host of major Democratic constituency groups opposing Bork plan all-out efforts. With two Democratic members of the Senate Judiciary committee — Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware and Paul Simon of Illinois — running for their party's presidential nomination, the political pressures will be even more intense.

At a meeting Tuesday, the day before the nomination was announced, representatives of more than 40 groups — civil rights organizations, abortion rights advocates, civil liberties groups and liberal political caucuses — began organizing letter-writing campaigns, drafting memoranda to the editorial boards of major newspapers and engaging investigators to probe Bork's background and lawyers to analyze his writings.

Bork's opponents already have raised his role in the Nixon administration's firing of Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox, and they hope to find other vulnerable points. Yet Bork already has been confirmed by the Senate twice — as an appeals court judge and as Solicitor General — and both sides are proceeding on the assumption that no new issues are likely to arise that will take attention away from the ideological arguments.

"It's not a matter of Bork, it's not the personality, not the qualifications, not the credentials, its the issue. That's the way the battle is being fought," said Arthur J. Kropp, executive director of People for the American Way, a liberal organization that helped lead an unsuccessful effort last year against William H. Rehnquist's nomination to be Chief Justice. Kropp's organization already has put together more than $300,000 for a campaign to sway public opinion against the nomination and plans to spend up to $1 million, he said.

Administration officials are no less determined. "Last time I looked, Ronald Reagan carried 49 states. It was in all the papers," said one official. "How many states did Joe Biden carry?"

The opponents would seem to be in a strong position. Democrats hold a 54-46 Senate edge, and under one parliamentary maneuver, opponents of Bork's nomination could win with as few as 41 votes — the number needed to sustain a Senate filibuster to kill the nomination. Last year, with Republicans holding the majority, 33 senators voted against Rehnquist, whose nomination was not subject to a campaign that even approaches the intensity of what Bork's opponents plan.

Nonetheless, blocking the nomination, particularly on grounds of judicial ideology, will be difficult, aides to Democratic Senators and officials of groups opposing the nomination concede.

"Democrats are squeamish, period," said Joseph L. Rauh Jr., a long-time liberal activist here who participated in successful efforts to block Nixon's Supreme Court nominations of Clement F. Haynsworth and G. Harold Carswell. "There certainly has never been a more unified opposition than there is now," he added. "Whether that will be enough to make the Democrats stand up and take notice, we'll have to see."

To the editor:

Martin Kilcoyne is distressed because his neighbor, Carroll Webber, sees hope in the present efforts of the Soviet Union to open its society.

Mr. Kilcoyne is right in that the glass is at least half empty. Gorbachev may not be sincere or, if sincere, may not be successful. His recently feudal nation has a long way to go. In any case, the interests of the Soviet Union will not be identical with those of the United States.

So what? We have many common interests. And the wildly proclaimed interests of the United States, for that matter, are not necessarily the interests of Jane and Joe Citizen.

There is currently no shortage of suspicion in the relations between our two nations. What we need more of is neighborly helpfulness. We must share the same planet, willy nilly.

Koreans Say Reform Battle Still Not Won

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Koreans facing the end of decades of authoritarian rule say the struggle for a democratic government is far from over and that hope may quickly give way to chaos.

President Chun Doo-hwan's promise of sweeping reforms to end nationwide turmoil is seen as the first step in building a stable democratic system. But few people are willing to predict smooth sailing in a nation that has never had a peaceful transfer of power.

Leaders on both sides say the nation must end its tradition of coups and riots and build a political system based on compromise, discussion and elections.

No one is saying how it can be done.

Already there are problems, including signs of division within the opposition, restlessness among students and other radical groups and the unknown intentions of the powerful Korean military. In addition, the governing Democratic Justice Party is still strong and says it intends to stay in power after Chun stops down in February.

In an editorial, the Korea Herald said the nation still faces a "thorny search for political maturity."

Chun last Wednesday accepted opposition demands for direct presidential elections and broad reforms to end the stringent political controls his government imposed on many aspects of Korean life.

Direct elections to replace the electoral college system were a key demand of protesters who staged 18 straight days of demonstrations throughout the nation last month.

"I believe that the intrinsic function of politics is to carry out the public will," Chun told the nation.

The government and its opponents face long talks on revising the constitution to clear the way for elections. Difficult negotiations are expected after years of bitter divisions between the two sides in a country where compromise is regarded as a sign of weakness.

Under a governnment timetable, the election would be held this year.

The governing party has a powerful political machine that won National Assembly elections in 1985 in what was considered a relatively fair contest and says it intends to win this election.

Both sides already are campaigning.

Democratic Justice Party chief Roh Tae-woo, Chun's hand-picked successor who suddenly demanded Chun give in to the opposition at a crucial point, is being portrayed as the hero who saved the nation and cleared the way for democracy. Political observers say he could win the election.

The opposition Reunification Democratic Party is grappling with internal divisions that have torn it apart before. The key issue will be selecting a presidential candidate, with party leader Kim Young-sam facing a possible threat from his older rival, Kim Dae-jung.

Kim Dae-jung insisted in the past he would not run for the presidency, but he has started to back off from those statements, saying his supporters are pleading for him to reconsider.

The opposition admits it lacks comprehensive political, social and economic programs to present to the nation, and an election platform must be quickly worked out.

"This is a weakness we recognize and are working hard to correct," Kim Young-sam told The Associated Press in a recent interview.

Roh and the Democratic Justice Party are claiming credit for the "economic miracle" that transformed South Korea into a major economic power in recent years. Their election platform is a promise to increase national prosperity, and some political observers say it could be a potent theme with the country's middle classes.

"People want democracy, but they also want to keep the economy going and go on with the good life," said a Western diplomat, who refused to be identified.

For years, the middle classes shunned politics, but that changed last month when businessmen in suits, housewives and shopkeepers poured into the streets to denounce the government. They played a key role in forcing the government to accept reforms.

Opposition officials admit privately they are concerned about the university students and other radical groups who played also a key role in the anti-government movement.

"We have little control over the students," one official said.

Many students detest the two Kims and say the opposition leaders are opportunists who won't tackle problems such as poverty, slums and sex discrimination.

Student violence has long been part of Korean politics, and many observers doubt the students will be silent when schools reopen after the summer vacation.

The Korea Herald appealed in an editorial for students and others not to wreck the hopes for democracy.

"The ... students as well as politicians in the opposing camps ought to display the spirit of harmony and mutual accommodation to make the best of the rare opportunity for ushering in an era of democracy," it said.

Many Koreans are concerned about the powerful armed forces. The army has repeatedly intervened in Korean politics, and military-backed governments have ruled the country for much of its history.

"Korea is likely to remain a military-oriented society for some time. That's not good for democracy," said another Western diplomat, who also demanded anonymity.

The army did not intervene in last month's political crisis, but there have been numerous reports that senior generals are unhappy and do not want to see an end to strict political controls.

More Unrest Feared In Panama City

By REID G. MILLER
Associated Press Writer

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — More demonstrations by Panamanians against the military-backed government were planned in this tense capital Saturday as thousands of American citizens celebrated Independence Day in the Canal Zone with a parade and picnics.

Opposition political parties scheduled a march by women through downtown Panama City in their continuing show of displeasure with the government.

President Eric Delvalle met for more than nine hours Friday with advisers and politicians to discuss the burgeoning political crisis. He denied persistent rumors he would soon resign.

Forces for and against the government have taken to the streets since June 8, when a retired top military officer accused strongman Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega of corruption, election fraud and conspiracy to commit murder.

On June 11, the government suspended constitutional guarantees to try to quell the violence. It restored the guarantees 19 days later, after the U.S. Senate passed a non-binding resolution calling on Noriega, the defense force chief, to step down. The resolution also asked the military to stay out of politics.

Ricardo Arias Calderon, head of the opposition Christian Democratic Party, said Saturday the National Civic Crusade anti-government coalition would pursue demonstrations and economic measures aimed at forcing new elections in Panama. Elections are not scheduled until 1989.

The party has been urging people to honk car horns, wave white handkerchiefs and bang pots and pans at specified hours to protest military involvement in politics.

Demonstrations occasionally turned violent. On Thursday, a pro-government mob attacked and burned a posh department store owned by the family that publishes the leading opposition daily newspaer, La Prensa.

On Wednesday, pro-government demonstrators, led by at least eight Cabinet ministers, attacked buildings in the U.S. Embassy complex with rocks and bottles of paint. The U.S Consulate and U.S. Information Agency shut down after the attack.

In the Canal Zone, which flanks the western edge of the capital, U.S. military personnel, canal employees and their spouses and children celebrated a typical Fourth of July without incident.

U.S. citizens living in the Canal Zone were cautioned not to venture into the downtown area but were not confined to the zone, which contains several U.S. military installations.

Noriega has accused the United States of instigating unrest to undermine agreements that will turn the Panama Canal over to Panama in the year 2000.

U.S. Ambassador Arthur Davis arranged a dinner for invited government officials and other diplomats, but — unlike previous years — the embassy did not schedule any public functions for the celebration.

Much of Panama City has been shut down by a general strike called Friday by the Chamber of Commerce. About half of the businesses heeded the strike call.

The chamber called the strike to protest alleged government involvement in the damage done to privately owned companies last week.

Sixth Straight Title For Martina

Navratilova Whips Graf

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — It was perfect theater — a two-character drama with sub plots worthy of Shakespeare.

There was Martina Navratilova, still without a tournament victory in 1987, seeking a special place in the record books. Her opponent was Steffi Graf, the 18-year-old West German ready to topple the queen from her throne. Graf had not lost this year, her 45-match winning streak including the French Open where she defeated Navratilova in the final.

A victory would make Graf No. 1 in the world, an honor Navratilova had held since the autumn of 1985.

The setting was Wimbledon, the grass-courts championship Navratilova has ruled since 1982. And that was the inspiration the American needed.

"If it's time to win a tournament, this is the one to win. The place has always been very special," said Navratilova.

She defeated Graf 7-5, 6-3 to capture a record sixth straight and a record-tying eighth overall Wimbledon singles title.

The victory also quieted talk that Graf's success had gotten to Navratilova, and that the iron woman of tennis was not as strong-willed as she used to be. Even Navratilova had thought that.

"I had beaten myself a couple of times (this year) and that was just not going to happen here," Navratilova said. "There was no doubt in my mind that if somebody beat me it would be with better shots and not because I let down mentally or got upset or didn't make the shot or whatever.

"I had my focus tunnel-visioned and didn't let anything get to me."

At the French Open last month, Navratilova held match point when she double-faulted twice, and Graf eventually broke. A third double-fault, in the third set, gave Graf the victory.

On Saturday, she broke Graf in the eighth game of the second set and found herself serving for the match.

"When I broke, it happened so quickly and winning was within reach," Navratilova said. "At 30-love I missed my first serve and thought about Paris."

But this was the grass-courts of Wimbledon, not the clay of Paris.

"Martina on grass is a different player from other surfaces," Graf said. "She was playing a great match, she was serving really well and she didn't miss any volleys at all. ... I don't think I was playing really bad or anything, but she really played well."

By winning for the sixth consecutive year, Navratilova broke the record she shared with Suzanne Lenglen of France and Sweden's Bjorn Borg. And she did it with a perfect grass-court serve-and-volley game.

"I haven't forgotten how to win," Navratilova said. "I haven't forgotten how to win Wimbledon. I'd rather win this and nothing else than the other way around."

The men's title will be decided Sunday when Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia meets Australia's Pat Cash.

Graf's serves and groundstrokes held off six set points in the first set. There were only two service breaks in the 69-minute final and Navratilova had them both, in the 12th game of the first set and the eighth game of the second.

Navratilova neutralized Graf's booming serve and rocket forehand by taking the pace off the ball, both on her serve and her groundstrokes.

"It seemed that my spin bothered her more than the pace on the serve, which enabled me to get a high percentage of my first serves in," the winner said. "I didn't have to go for big serves. I was just trying to make the serve count and put a lot of spin on it."

And she rushed to the net at every opportunity, the classic grass-court strategy. In all, Navratilova went to net 61 times, winning 34 points. By contrast, Graf ventured to the net only 12 times, winning eight points.

The two battled evenly and brilliantly through the first nine games of the match. Then Navratilova reached triple set point on Graf's serve at love-40.

But Graf cranked out a service winner, boomed an ace and found a passing lane with a running forehand cross-court to pull to deuce. She needed two more aces and a surprising trip to the net for a forehand volley before she held serve.

On her next service game, she wasn't as fortunate.

Wearing on her ankle a miniature tennis racket given to her as a good-luck present by world middleweight champion Sugar Ray Leonard, Navratilova reached her fourth set point at 15-40 with a backhand volley. Graf took the next two points with big serves to take the game to deuce.

A double-fault, Graf's only one of the match, gave Navratilova another set point. And again the West German teen-ager fought it off, this time whipping a backhand cross-court.

But when Navratilova reached her seventh set point with a forehand down the line that caromed off Graf's racket, she closed it out with a backhand passing shot down the line.

Bobby Allison Rockets To Victory In Firecracker

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Bobby Allison, playing catch-up, gambled on a four-tire change during the last caution period Saturday in the Firecracker 400 and won.

Allison, who had to overcome a lost lap early in the race, was 12th in line and last on the lead lap when the green flag waved five laps from the end of the 400-mile, 160-lap race at Daytona International Speedway.

He set sail toward the lead, wheeling his Buick LeSabre to the top less than two laps from the end and holding off Buddy Baker at the crash-marred finish of the race.

"I was the only driver who stopped and put on four fresh tires (during the final caution period), and it made an incredible difference," Allison said.

"On the restart, one of the cars — I don't know which one — put us with all four tires in the grass on the backstretch. But I was able to get it back onto the pavement and the car just ran great the rest of the way.

"I felt that without that caution (flag), we didn't have much of a chance," Allison added.

As Allison crossed the finish line 1.5 seconds ahead of Baker's Oldsmobile, Ken Schrader and Harry Gant, both of whom were running with the leaders, crashed hard.

Schrader, who wrested the lead from Dave Marcis only three laps from the end of the holiday race, felt himself losing control in turn four on the last lap after both Allison and Baker got by.

Schrader's car got tapped in the rear by Marcis, who was unable to avoid him. Schrader then went low on the fourth-turn banking, got sideways and started up the banking, did a complete barrel roll, slammed into Gant and knocked both of them into the wall. Both cars slid to a stop just past the finish line and neither driver was injured.

"That's not exactly how we had the finish planned," Schrader said. "Our car wasn't working real well when it was between two cars. The front end

Linebacking Appears Strong Point

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

(Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of articles on the position areas for the 1987 East Carolina football team.)

There will be a slightly different look to the East Carolina University defense this fall when it comes to the linebacking positions.

The "bandit" position is being dropped and the Pirates are going more to a 3-4-4 alignment with a nose guard, two tackles, two inside and two outside linebackers and four defensive backs.

The key reason for this, according to defensive end coach Ellis Johnson, is to counter some of the movement of offensive players who go in motion, and to gain better pass coverage when teams send out a number of receivers.

"Last year, we were more of a 4-3-4 type team," Johnson said. "But changing doesn't mean that we've abandoned the whole scheme. We'll still have the bandit look from time to time and we'll maintain part of the old scheme.

"We didn't make the change just to be making a change, but for the benefits we'll gain from the scheme. It's something we like, but it also takes some time to work on it. So we'll probably play this type of defense about 60 percent of the time," Johnson said.

"Things get trendy in football, and right now this seems to be the trend," he added.

Under the old "bandit" defense, motion caused a problem. The bandit usually had to chase the motion man across the field on every play. Under the new scheme, Johnson pointed out, there will be times when he will chase, as usual, while on other plays, another linebacker will simply take over that duty in a switch.

"With two outside linebackers, we have the option of chasing the motion man or shifting coverages."

For the outside linebackers, coached by Johnson, it will mean better coverage.

"We lost two guys from my group who were there last year," Johnson said, "but it's only because they've moved to down lineman positions." Those two were Mike Donahue (6-3, 237, Sr.) and Rodney Glover (6-6, 251, Jr.).

However, Johnson feels that he has quality players in those who will return as outside linebackers.

"Two deep, I think we can be as good as any position we have," Johnson said. "I've been pleased with the adjustment they made in the spring."

The two top returnees — both of whom saw starting duty last year — are John Williamson (6-2, 230, Sr.) and Willie Powell (6-3, 224, Jr.).

"John has the most experience, but it's going to be a challenge for him because the position is not tailor-made for him," Johnson said. Williamson is a three-year starter while Powell has started for two years.

Two others who will see a lot of action are Ernie Logan (6-4, 225, So.) and Junior Johnson (6-4, 230, So.). "Both of them, at some point, have started at the bandit spot," Johnson said. "Ernie probably had the best spring of any of our players at the position, being a freshman. We're excited about what he can do.

"Powell is probably the best player in the group because he is so talented, but he's not as intense as I'd like for him to be. But if he wants to be, he can be as good as any player in the program," the coach said.

Overall, Johnson thinks that Williamson, Powell and Logan will get the most playing time on the outside spots. Depth will be provided by Johnson, William Pretty (6-1, 220, Jr.) and Barnie Gyant (5-11, 203, Jr.). "Gyant has seen right much action," Johnson said. "Really, I think we're pretty decent three-deep."

Another possibility might be James Singletary (6-3, 215, So.) who split duty between the inside and outside positions during spring drills. He is among a group of five players who will be involved in a battle for one of the two-deep spots at inside linebacker when falls drills open.

"The change in defense won't really affect the inside linebackers that much," inside linebacker coach Les Herrin said. "Where is does affect us is in the amount of flexibility that it gives us with the way the kids work into it."

At the inside positions, both starters will be back this fall, making it another strong slot. Returning are Vinson Smith (6-1, 221, Sr.) and Bubba Waters (6-1, 208, Sr.). Waters missed the spring, but Herrin thinks that his experience will more than offset that.

"Their job will be pretty much the same — to stop the run first but also to protect underneath in (pass) coverage. That's why it's so tough to play the position. You have to be able to stop the run, but if you can't read patterns and know your zones, you can't be effective," Herrin said.

Both Smith and Waters have the experience it takes and Herrin anticipates both having an outstanding year. "They work at it and want to play. They work and try to get better during the off-season. I couldn't be happier to have them playing. They are very coachable kids," Herrin said.

"But the bottom line is that they want to be good. That's the big step to actually being good."

But depth could be a problem for the Pirates on the inside. Glen Willis (6-4, 223, Jr.) had an outstanding spring, according to Herrin. "He's banged around a lot. He was a tight end and an offensive guard who walked on. But we got him last spring and he really came on. He worked hard and earned a grant in the spring. I've really been pleased with him. He's worked and struggled and pushed and it's paid off for him."

But — and there's the rub — no one has stepped forward as the fourth man to give the Pirates a two-deep situation. "We're just waiting to see who wants it the most. Whoever looks the best in the first few weeks this fall is going to get the job."

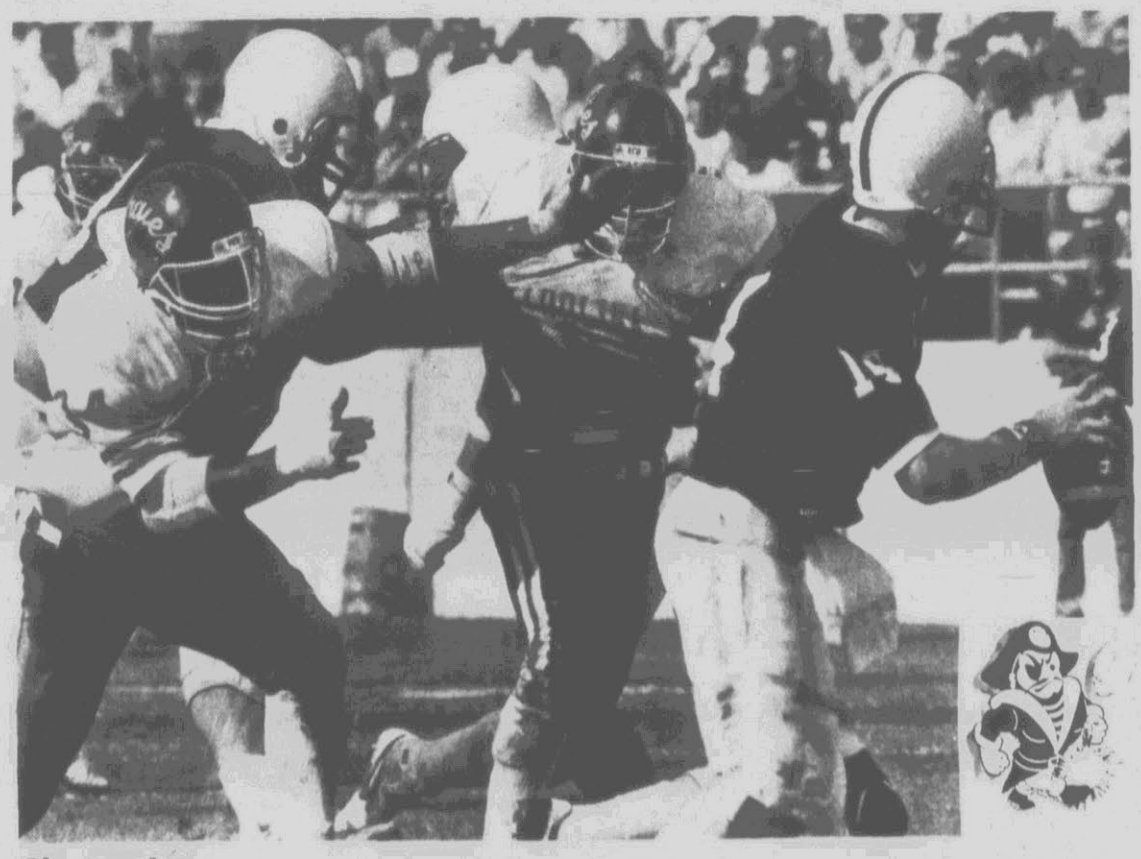
Those in line for the position include Singletary, Compton McCurry (6-1, 230, So.), Essary Taliaferro (5-11, 209, Sr.), Ken Taylor (5-11, 235, Jr.) and Mike Leggett (6-3, 210, So.).

"Ron Gilliard (6-2, 249, Sr.), who has played here, has moved to the down line," Herrin added.

Looming on the horizon is one more candidate at linebacker — former Wilson Fike star Anthony Thompson, who sat out this past year as a Proposition 48 entrant. Thompson (6-2, 235, So.) still hasn't been placed for the fall. He actually could play at a number of positions.

"We'd like to have him on defense," Herrin said. "He is a natural outside linebacker. We'd also like to have Brian McPhatter (6-3, 202, So.), who is another outside linebacker." McPhatter, however, is slated for offensive backfield duty.

Nevertheless, if the Pirates stay healthy and find one more inside man, the linebacker position could be its strongest in years.



Closing In

Allison Claims Firecracker...

wanted to lift; that made it hard to turn. It was either hit the wall or slow down. Marcis bumped me ... I saw the wall, I saw the infield — then I knew things were bad. I knew we were in the ol' spin cycle."

Meanwhile, Allison, 49, came up with his third Firecracker 400 victory and the 83rd triumph of his NASCAR stock car career.

It was the first victory for Allison since he became the oldest man to win a Winston Cup race at 48 last May in the Winston 500 at Talladega, Ala. The winner got $57,375.

He averaged 161.056 mph in the race slowed by four caution flags, including one with just 10 laps remaining that allowed Allison to regain the lap he lost midway through the race. He fell behind when Sterling Marlin skidded coming off pit road, hitting Cale Yarborough, who tagged Allison and did some body damage to the Buick that cost Allison a long stop.

Allison, who had not finished better than sixth in 14 previous starts this season, had to play catch-up the rest of the day.

He was the last of 12 leaders, who traded the lead 24 times, in the first race since NASCAR mandated smaller carburetors for the July races here and at Talladega, its two fastest superspeedways. Green flag laps Saturday were about 10 mph slower than the 200-plus mph laps in the Daytona 500 in February.

Dave Marcis, who was trying to win his first race since February 1982, was leading Rick Wilson by more than 3 seconds when Wilson lost control in the fourth turn and hit the wall, bringing out the final yellow flag.

The leaders stayed on the track, but Allison, who was just ahead of Marcis when the caution flag came out, was the only driver who chose to pit for a four-tire change during the slowdown. He was running 11th when the green flag came back out on lap 156.

As Marcis battled with Schrader at the front of the pack, Allison came charging through the field, finally moving right behind the two leaders as they came through turn four on the 1.5-mile oval side-by-side on lap 158.

Schrader held the lead over Marcis' Chevrolet by the nose of his Ford at the end of that lap, but Allison moved on top on the backstretch of lap 159 and led to the finish.

Marcis finished third, followed by Darrell Waltrip, Morgan Shepherd and Dale Earnhardt. Schrader was sixth, while Gant wound up eighth.

Earnhardt, the defending Winston Cup champion and runaway point leader at the halfway mark of the season, led early and was running second to Bill Elliott before a broken transmission cost him all but his high gear and ended any hope of his winning for the eighth time this season.

Elliott remained among the leaders until the restart on lap 156 when he had to pit for a flat tire.

Rookie Davey Allison, Bobby's son and the pole winner, led the first 32 laps but quickly fell out of contention with a carburetor problem.

The race was slowed on the sixth lap when Lake Speed skidded along the fourth-turn wall. Tim Richmond, defending race champion, was right behind Speed and got sideways trying to avoid him. As Richmond spun, he tagged the car driven by Brad Teague, which hit the wall hard. None of the drivers was injured.

The second and third caution flags were brought out by a blown engine and debris on the track.

The 90-degree heat and high humidity took their toll on the drivers Saturday. Richard Petty, who turned 50 on Thursday, felt the fatigue and was relieved by Speed on lap 132.

A crowd estimated at 75,000 was on hand for the July 4 race, which track officials announced Saturday will be run in the future on the Saturday closest to the holiday, rather than on July 4 itself.

Top Runners Win, But Miss Records

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Said Aouita and Steve Cram, the fastest middle distance runners in history, won their resepctive races but failed to come close to their world records during Saturday's Bislett Games track and field meet.

Aouita took the 1,500 meters in 3 minutes, 30.69 seconds, more than a second off his world record of 3:29.46.

A short time later, Cram won the "Dream Mile", the final event of the meet, in 3:50.08, 3.76 seconds slower than the world record he set here two years ago.

Each man was helped by excellent pacemaking and were under world-record pace in their races. But neither could maintain the pace in the final lap.

Aouita, who came within .44 seconds of Cram's mile record in a race at Helsinki on Thursday, was more than a second ahead of his world-record split time at the 800-meter mark Saturday, but ran out of gas a lap later.

"I really tried to beat the world record, but the conditions were not very good," said Aouita, whose time was the seventh-fastest ever.

"I think it was too windy and cold. Still, I'm happy with my time. It was good preparation for the 5,000 meters," which he will run in the World Championships at Rome later this summer.

Cram's split-time after 1,200 meters in the mile was more than two seconds faster than his time in 1985, when he was chased in the final lap. This time, he was all alone in front after American James Mays had paced the first two laps.

"The last 200 meters were awfully slow," Cram said. "The first 1,200 were wonderful."

Abdil Bile of Somalia was second in the 1,500 in 3:32.73. Third went to Steve Crabb of Britain in 3:33.34. Charles Marsala of the United States was seventh in 3:38.61.

Jim Spivey, who won the 1,500 in the USA Championships last week, finished second in the mile in 3:51.91 and Marcus O'Sullivan of Ireland was third in 3:54.29.

Steve Scott, the American record-holder, was fifth in 3:57.33.

Navratilova...

She gave a little jump and pumped her clenched fists.

Then came another key game to open the second set.

Navratilova took a 40-love lead only to have Graf battle back and win four straight points to reach break point. Navratilova spun a serve to Graf's backhand, which she netted.

A forehand volley gave Navratilova the ad point, and she held her service when Graf again sent a backhand service return into the net.

In the seventh game, Navratilova got a big break when her forehand volley hit the net, crawled over the top and fell on Graf's side.

"I thought, 'The gods are really with me today. Thanks, Zeus, or whoever's up there.' If it didn't go over then, it would have been 15-40. Instead it was 30-all and I could see it was frustating her," Navratilova said. "It would frustrate anyone. I said to myself, 'This is meant to be because you are just getting those breaks that you have not been getting.'"

Graf agreed the net cords were frustrating, "especially at 3-all, 30-15. She served and she just made it over that stupid net."

In the next game, Navratilova took a Graf second serve and sent it down the line, a return that Graf got her racket on but couldn't control. That made it 30-all. When Graf ran around her backhand, only to pull a forehand down the line wide, Navratilova had another break point. A forehand volley, that most basic grass-court shot, closed out the break.

Three minutes later, Navratilova was champion once again. Fittingly, perhaps, the final point came on a forehand service return by Graf that hit the top of the net and fell back.

"I'm thrilled," Navratilova said. "I made the shots when I had to."

Americans Ken Flach and Robert Seguso celebrated the Fourth of July by coming from two sets down to capture the men's doubles title, 3-6, 6-7, 7-6, 6-1, 6-4 over the Spanish pair of Sergio Casal and Emilio Sanchez.

Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany and Czechoslovakia's Helena Sukova won the women's doubles crown, downing American Betsy Nagelsen and Australia's Elizabeth Smylie 7-5, 7-5.

The men's final pits the tournament's No. 2 and No. 11 seeds.

Lendl, trying to add a first Wimbledon victory to three French Open and two U.S. Open championships, made it to his second consecutive final here with a 3-6, 6-4, 7-6, 6-4 victory Friday over fourth-seeded Stefan Edberg of Sweden.

Cash, the first Australian finalist since Ken Rosewall in 1974, gained his first Wimbledon championship appearance with a 6-4, 6-4, 6-1 victory over Jimmy Connors, ending the 34-year-old American's dream of a third Wimbledon championship.

Powell In Race Win

Rob Powell captured the "Flat Out" 5-kilometer run held in Greenville Saturday morning.

Powell finished the course in a time of 15:03 while Mark Davis of Rocky Mount took second place with a 15:51 finish.

Pete Gibson of Murfreesboro was the third-place overall finisher, crossing the finish line at 15:55.

The 85-degree heat and humidity failed to deter more than 90 runners who participated in the event.

Peggy Kinney of Sumter, S.C., won the women's division, crossing the line in 19:00. Second place went to Susan Gray of Raleigh in 19:40, while Greenville's Nancy Eichner took third in 19:49.

The Greenville-based Team Tiger dominated the race, taking six of the top seven spots.

Age group winners included: male, 20-29, Wayne Broadhead, 16:01; 30-39, John Vinson, 17:23; 40-49, Cecil Davis, 16:55; and 50 plus, Al Calik, 20:15; female, 20-29, Donna Praigg, 22:22; 30-39, Susan Sutton, 21:00; 40-49, Salley Bremley, 27:31.

The race benefited the Eastern Carolina Children's Hospital of Pitt Memorial Hospital. It is hoped to become an annual affair.

Righetti Saves Day For Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) — Dennis Ramussen won his fourth straight decision, but it was Dave Righetti and ninth inning defense that made it happen.

"Those double plays, they're the ones you have to have," said Willie Randolph, who was the middle man on a ninth-inning double play that extinguished a Texas rally Saturday and preserved the New York Yankees' 4-3 victory over the Rangers.

With one run in, Righetti, who earned his league-leading 17th save, got Ruben Sierra to ground to shortstop Wayne Tolleson, who started the game-ending double play.

"It wasn't a classic, the ball bounced too high," said Tolleson, who scored a run on Randolph's eighth-inning single to give the Yankees a 4-2 lead going into the ninth.

Scott Fletcher singled in one run off Righetti and Jerry Browne was at second, representing the tying run when the double play began.

Righetti's thoughts may have been elsewhere since the date marked the fourth anniversary of his no-hitter against the Boston Red Sox before he became one of the American League's best relievers.

"There's no way I could get around it," Righetti said when asked about the anniversary of the Yankees only regular season no-hitter since 1951.

"I get a lot of ticket stubs and paper clippings from around the world,' Righetti said, "and I guess if people forgot about it, it would be disapponting."

Rasmussen, 7-4, allowed three hits over the first five innings and the Rangers managed four hits off three Yankees relievers.

"I thought we were going to score a lot of runs," Rangers Manager Bobby Valentine said, "because we were swinging the bats good and he (Rasmussen) didn't have his good stuff. But I was wrong. Three is not a lot."

Gary Ward's pinch-hit single drove in Don Mattingly with the tiebreaking run in the fifth inning.

With Texas leading 2-1, Randolph singled with one out and moved to third on Mattingly's single before Dave Winfield's sacrifice fly scored Randolph to tie the score.

Claudell Washington then singled to move Mattingly to second and knock out Rangers starter Greg Harris, 2-8, before Ward greeted reliever Paul Kilgus with a line-drive single to left.

Both teams scored in the first, with the Rangers taking a 1-0 lead on Sierra's sacrifice fly before the Yankees tied the score on Washington's RBI single.

Pete Incaviglia's RBI double in the fifth following walks to Bob Brower and Sierra put the Rangers ahead 2-1, but Rasmussen struck out Pete O'Brien with runners at second and third to end the inning.

New York has now won five of its last six games and is 28-12 at Yankee Stadium, the best home record in the major leagues.

Chicago 3
Cleveland 2

CLEVELAND (AP) — Richard Dotson of the Chicago White Sox has made a complete recovery from health problems that plagued him the past two seasons.

"This year, in my 17 starts, I've gotten into the eighth inning in most of them. This is my best pitching since 1984," Dotson said after blanking the Cleveland Indians on three hits over the first eight innings before settling for a 3-2 victory.

Dotson allowed five hits in 8 2-3 innings as the White Sox fought off a Cleveland rally in the ninth.

Dotson won a total of 36 games in 1983 and 1984 before falling prey to a freak physical ailment.

"I have an overly developed upper chest muscle which cut off the circulation to my arm and in turn caused my arm and shoulder muscles to atrophy," Dotson said. "My arm would be dead tired, my shoulder numb and my elbow kept blowing out."

Dotson had the muscle removed in July of 1985 and missed the remainder of that campaign. Last season he struggled to a 10-17 record while trying to regain his arm strength.

The right-handed Dotson has bounced back with a 6-5 record this season and a 4.05 earned run average, and has won five of his last six decisions.

"My arm feels better now and I'm concentrating better because things are not on my mind as much concerning how healthy my arm is," Dotson said.

Cleveland's Joe Carter said Dotson took advantage of home plate umpire Drew Coble "giving him the outside corner all day. When you widen the strike zone he's going to be tough."

Jerry Hairston snapped a scoreless tie with a two-run double as the White Sox scored their three runs in the seventh inning.

Dotson, who struck out four and walked four, took a three-hit shutout into the ninth, but Tony Bernazard walked with one out, went to third on a single by Julio Franco and scored on a groundout. When Pat Tabler singled, putting the tying runs on base, Bryan Clark relieved Dotson and surrendered a run-scoring double to pinch-hitter Carmen Castillo, with pinch-runner Junior Noboa stopping at third.

Bob James then picked up his ninth save by getting Brook Jacoby to ground out to shortstop.

Scott Bailes, making his first start since May 2, fell to 2-2 with the defeat, Cleveland's 12th in its last 14 games. Bailes struck out six and walked none and allowed only two singles in the first six innings.

With one out in the seventh, Harold Baines reached first on an infield hit and went to second when Ivan Calderon singled.

Hairston then bounced his two-run double inside the third base bag to knock out Bailes. After an out, Ken Williams singled off Mark Huisman to score Hairston.

While still in last place in the American League West, Chicago has won five of its last six games.

Oakland starter Jose Rijo gained his first victory after four losses. Rijo allowed 11 hits and five runs over 7 1-3 innings and Dennis Eckersley finished for his fourth save.

Luis Polonia doubled to open Oakland's four-run first inning against Bruce Hurst, 9-6. Carney Lansford's bunt single moved Polonia to third and Mike Davis walked to load the bases.

Taylor Holds Lead; Crampton Blazes

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — LPGA Tour rookie Nancy Taylor shot a 1-over-par 73 on Saturday and maintained a two-stroke lead through three rounds of the $225,000 Jamie Farr Toledo Classic golf tournament.

Taylor, a graduate of Arizona State University who had never led an LPGA event before this week, held the lead for the third consecutive day. She stood at 210, six under par for three rounds over the 6,202-yard, par-72 Glengarry Country Club course.

Two shots back at 212 were were Jill Briles, Sherri Turner, Julie Cole and Cindy Hill. Cole, a native of nearby Findlay, matched the day's low round with a 4-under-par 68. Briles shot 69, Hill 72 and Turner 73.

A non-winner in her short time on the LPGA Tour, Taylor came into the Farr having made the cut in only four of the 16 events she had entered. She ranks 129th on the money list with $5,205.

She began the day with a two-stroke lead over Turner, then used birdies on the fifth and sixth holes to increase the margin to four shots. The lead was still three when she bogied the 18th hole.

At 3-under-par 213 were Laurie Rinker, Nancy Scranton Brown and Jane Geddes, the U.S. Women's Open and LPGA Championship winner. Rinker shot a 72, Brown a 68 and Geddes a 69.

Sandra Palmer, with a 72, and Kathy Postlewait, who shot 73, were at 214 heading into the final round.

Crampton added. "Everybody's been walking on them. The ball didn't roll as smoothly as it did early in the week."

Nagle made the strongest run at Crampton on Saturday. He began the day eight strokes back and remained that far behind after six holes, but by the 12th hole, he was just three strokes back.

Crampton birdied the first and fifth holes to move to 11-under-par, but lost strokes when he two-putted after landing in a bunker on the par-3 seventh hole and bogeyed the ninth hole. Nagle birdied four holes on the front nine and No. 12.

"It was my best round of the year. I was trying to shoot my age, but I missed by one shot," the 66-year-old Nagel said after his round of 67.

The second round has always been the best round for January since the tournament began in 1985. After a 70 on Friday, the only player ever to win the Greenbrier shot a 4-under-par 68.

"I had a lot of chances today. I made some of them, but not all of them," January said, adding that a 65 in Sunday's round would probably be necessary for anyone in the group five strokes back to catch Crampton.

"But you still might miss by two or three," January said. "He (Crampton) is in control of it."

Billy Maxwell, who with Moody started the second round four strokes behind Crampton, remained at 5-under-par 139. Bill Casper, Gardner Dickinson, Lee Elder, George Lanning and Don Massengale each were at 4-under-par.

Lanning started the day even and finished at 4-under after getting one eagle, five birdies and three bogeys.

In the super seniors competition for a group of 10 players over 60, Art Wall defeated Mike Souchak and Howie Johnson in a playoff after Souchak double-bogeyed No. 18. The three had tied at par-144 for 36 holes.

They will continue to play Sunday in the regular tournament.

Wall parred the 588-yard playoff hole, Wall three-putted and Johnson was assessed a two-stroke penalty after arriving late for the tee-off.

"I've been laying in bed sleeping for a couple of hours," Johnson said after picking up the ball after his second shot. He criticized the tournament officials for not calling him, but Wall, who won $8,000, criticized Johnson.

"We're grown men, you can't have someone babysitting for you," Wall said.

Johnson and Souchak were declared tied for second despite the penalty against Johnson, and both picked upp$5,250.

Seniors Tour

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va. (AP) — Bruce Crampton birdied three of five par-5s Saturday and increased his lead to five strokes after two rounds of the $225,000 Greenbrier Championship.

His four-foot putt for another birdie on the par-5 18th hole lipped the cup and Crampton finished the day at 2-under-par 70 to go to 11-under-par 133 for the tournament.

Two-time defending champion Don January, Orville Moody, Kel Nagle and Bobby Nichols each finished the first 36 holes at 6-under-par 138. The winner of the 54-hole PGA Seniors Tour event earns $34,000.

Crampton was 9-under-par in Friday's first round, but was troubled Saturday by wet grounds and his own mistakes.

"I didn't strike the ball," Crampton said. "I made mistakes and the pin placement was much more demanding than they were yesterday."

Cox Struggles, But Cards Win

ATLANTA (AP) — St. Louis right-hander Danny Cox said his Fourth of July performance in winning his 50th career game was "a worthwhile struggle."

Cox and relievers Rick Horton and Todd Worrell scattered nine hits while Cardinals' speedster Vince Coleman had a pair of singles, scored twice and knocked in another run in the 3-0 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

Cox, 8-3, struggled with his control in scattering six hits and walking seven Braves in seven innings. He worked out of three separate bases-loaded, two-out jams, getting Craig Nettles each time.

Each time, Cox walked Ken Griffey — the hitter ahead of Nettles — to load the bases.

"The last time I faced Griffey, he got three hits," Cox said. "I wasn't going to pitch to him in that situation and hopefully I could get Nettles out. I was lucky. He hit the ball hard twice."

"The name of the game is to hit it where they aren't standing," Nettles said. "I didn't do that today."

"Getting Nettles three times with the bases loaded isn't going to happen too often," Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog said. "It wasn't going to happen a fourth time today."

Worrell got the last five outs for his 17th save despite allowing two hits in the ninth.

Coleman was responsible for the Cardinals' first run in the first inning off loser Zane Smith, 8-5, when he hit the left-hander's first pitch of the game for a single. After stealing his 52nd base, Coleman scored from second on Tommy Herr's infield hit.

The Cardinals added two more runs in the fifth after two were out. Cox tripled and scored on a single by Coleman, who then came home on Ozzie Smith's double.

Cox got the first two hitters in the first inning before Gerald Perry's infield hit. The right-hander then walked Dale Murphy and Ken Griffey to load the bases before Nettles lined to right field to end that threat.

Atlanta loaded the bases again in the third on a walk to Dion James, an infield single by Perry and another walk to Griffey. Nettles then flied out to left.

In the fifth, Cox walked James to open the inning and Andres Thomas singled James to second. Perry then lined a single off the wall in right-center, but James was thrown out at the plate.

Murphy struck out, but Griffey walked to load the bases again for Nettles, who bounced out to second.

Pittsburgh.....4
Los Angeles.....2

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Bob Kipper limited Los Angeles to a run and four hits over 6 1-3 innings, and Andy Van Slyke had three extra-base hits as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Dodgers 4-2 Saturday.

The Dodgers ended a streak of 21 scoreless innings on Phil Garner's second-inning sacrifice fly, and Pedro Guerrero drove in a run with a single in the Dodgers ninth. The Dodgers have scored just two runs in their last 29 innings.

Kipper, 5-6, was taken from the game with one out in the seventh after walking Guerrero and Mickey Hatcher. Barry Jones replaced Kipper and got pinch-hitter Dan Heep to ground into a double play.

Don Robinson pitched the final two innings for his 11th save, driving in the Pirates fourth run with a single in the eighth.

With the Dodgers leading 1-0, Van Slyke doubled to lead off the Pirates fourth. He moved to third on the play when Guerrero mishandled the ball as it came out of the left-field corner. Second baseman Steve Sax then booted Johnny Ray's grounder, allowing Van Slyke to score and Ray to reach first.

Sid Bream followed with a double to left, advancing Ray to third, and R.J. Reynolds made it 2-1 with a sacrifice fly.

After losing pitcher Bob Welch, 8-5, retired the first two batters in the fifth, Van Slyke tripled over the head of center fielder John Shelby and Ray singled him home.

Van Slyke also doubled in the seventh for his fourth extra-base hit in two games.

Kipper struck out seven and walked three in winning for the first time since he received the decision in the Pirates' 4-1 victory over the Atlanta Braves on June 3. He didn't allow a hit after Dave Anderson's one-out single in the third.

The holiday game, which had an unusual 10:35 a.m. EDT starting time, attracted only 12,935.

Philadelphia.....9
Houston.....3

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Von Hayes drove in four runs with two homers and a double and Ron Roenicke climaxed a four-run fifth inning with a two-run double Saturday as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated Houston 9-3 for their seventh victory in eight games.

Hayes hit his 10th homer in the seventh inning and added a two-run shot in the eighth after doubling in a run in the first.

Tom Hume, 1-0, appearing in his 29th game but starting for only the second time, gave up eight hits and three earned runs in six innings. Mike Jackson pitched the final three innings for his first major-league save.

Jim Deshaies, 8-3, was the loser, snapping a streak of six straight victories.

Houston scored in the first on Glenn Davis' RBI single, but the Phillies tied it in the bottom of the inning when Hayes doubled in Juan Samuel, who walked.

In the second, with Houston runners on first and third with one out, Deshaies grounded to second baseman Samuel, who attempted to tag Ronn Reynolds, but missed. Samuel threw to first to retire Deshaies and Reynolds was thrown out at second to complete the double play, but not before Cruz had scored.

In the fifth, after a 50-minute rain delay, the Phillies scored four runs for a 5-2 lead. Mike Schmidt and Glenn Wilson hit RBI singles and Roenicke doubled home two more runs.

The Astros added a run in the fourth on Reynolds' RBI single, but Hayes made it 6-3 off reliever Ron Mathis. Samuel hit his 15th homer in the eighth before Hayes' second homer of the game.

CHICAGO (AP) — Rick Sutcliffe became the first National League pitcher with 11 wins and Bob Dernier went 3-for-4, including a homer, as the Chicago Cubs beat the San Francisco Giants 5-3 Saturday.

Sutcliffe, 11-4, gave up eight hits, including a two-run homer by Chris Brown and a solo shot by Chili Davis as 20 mph winds at Wrigley Field were blowing from center to left field.

Sutcliffe struck out a season-high 10 and walked two in eight innings. After a leadoff single by Davis in the ninth, Lee Smith relieved Sutcliffe and got the last three outs for his 21st save.

The Cubs, while handling the Giants their 14th loss in 20 games, had 14 hits, but were hampered by four inning-ending double plays.

Dernier led off the first inning with his fourth homer and the Cubs extended their margin to 3-0 in the third. Sutcliffe singled and Dernier walked before Manny Trillo and Andre Dawson hit consecutive RBI singles to chase starter Atlee Hammaker, 4-6.

Will Clark led off the fourth with a single and Brown hit his sixth homer to make it 3-2.

In the bottom of the inning, Paul Noce bunted for a hit, went to third on Mike Brumley's single and scored on a wild pitch. Singles by Dernier and Trillo brought Brumley home to put Chicago ahead 5-2.

Davis hit his 12th homer leading off the San Francisco seventh.

McCullough's Double Bogey Leaves Three Tied For Lead

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Mike McCullough, two shots ahead of the field, double bogeyed his final hole and dropped back into a three-way tie for the lead Saturday after three rounds of the $600,000 Canadian Open Golf Tournament.

McCullough's disaster enabled Curtis Strange and Canadian Dick Zokol to move into a share of the top spot at 207 going into Sunday's final round.

"I'd really like to have that 2-shot lead going into tomorrow," McCullough said after he finished a 4-under-par 68 with a shot into the water.

"I'd like to have two more shots to play around with. That's two that you wouldn't have to make up," said McCullough, 42, who has yet to score an official victory in a 16-year PGA Tour career.

"I know it's going to be a very special feeling when I do win. I just hope it happens tomorrow," he said.

Zokol, attempting to become the first Canadian to win this national championship in 33 years, had a 3-under-par 69 in the third round.

He was among the 78 players who were forced to return to the Glen Abbey Golf Club at 7 a.m. after a series of thunderstorms washed out play Friday afternoon.

Zokol put on a birdie-birdie-eagle finish for a 68 in his second round, took a share of the lead at that point, then regained a tie for the top when McCullough's second shot found the lake on his 18th hole.

"A long day," he said. "I'm just trying to keep the anxiety down, remain calm, keep it simple.

"A tournament is a tournament. But this is the national championship, and it's important to me.

"Even if it's not me, I think it'd be super for a Canadian to win this tournament," he said.

Strange, a former winner of this national title, birdied his last hole to complete a 66, the best round of the day.

South African Nick Price was two strokes back of the leaders at 209 after a 70.

Another South African, David Frost, along with Ernie Gonzalez and Craig Stadler, followed at 210, six under par. Gonzalez, a left-hander, had a 67, Stadler a 68 and Frost matched par 72.

Jack Nicklaus, seven times a runner-up but not yet a winner of this event, couldn't get anything going and had a 72 that left him well back at 214.

McCullough, who got into the tournament field only as a last-minute replacement when Jim Colbert withdrew, played his first nine holes at four under par and pulled away from the field with 15-foot birdie putts on his 13th and 16th holes.

But he drove into the trees on the last hole and then watched his 5-iron second shot take the ball — and the lead — into the lake.

"Nobody expects me to do well," McCullough said. "But I expect me to do well.

Third-round scores Saturday in the $600,000 Canadian Open Golf Tournament on the 7,102-yard, par-72 Glen Abbey Golf Club course:

Clark Guides Cards By Atlanta

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Imagine how well Jack Clark will hit once he gets into a groove.

Clark continued his torrid pace Friday night, hitting a three-run homer and an RBI single in powering the St. Louis Cardinals over the Atlanta Braves 9-1.

The St. Louis first baseman leads the majors with 77 runs batted in and is tied with Atlanta's Dale Murphy for the National League lead with 24 home runs. He is batting .309.

"Everybody says I'm hitting well because I have a lot of RBIs," said Clark, who has accumulated big numbers in just 76 games. "People don't understand that at this level, just because you've got a lot of wins or home runs, that you're not really comfortable with yourself."

Bob Forsch won his 150th career game as he combined with Ken Dayley on a three-hitter. The Cardinals lead the NL East by six games over the New York Mets.

In other NL games, Cincinnati beat New York 8-3, Montreal defeated San Diego 2-1, Philadelphia downed Houston 2-1, San Francisco beat Chicago 3-1 and Pittsburgh stopped Los Angeles 6-0.

Forsch, 7-3, shut out the host Braves on three hits before leaving with the bases loaded and one out in the eighth inning. Dayley walked Dion James, forcing home Atlanta's only run, but did not allow a hit the rest of the way.

The Cardinals scored three times in the fourth against Charlie Puleo, 2-2. Clark walked with two outs, Willie McGee and Terry Pendleton followed with RBI doubles and Curt Ford had a run-scoring single.

In the fifth, Vince Coleman singled with one out, stole his 51st base and Ozzie Smith walked. Clark then hit a two-out drive into the left-field seats.

Clark added an RBI single in the seventh. John Morris hit a solo home run in the ninth.

"You know when you're hitting the ball well. I know when I'm hitting the ball well, even when I'm not getting any hits," Clark said. "All that gets washed aside when you win."

Pirates 6, Dodgers 0

Rick Reuschel blanked Los Angeles on five hits for his second straight shutout and Bobby Bonilla became the first Pittsburgh player ever to hit home runs from both sides of the plate in the same game.

Bonilla drove in five runs. He hit a three-run homer during a four-run third against Fernando Valenzuela, 7-6, and hit a solo home run from the left side against Ken Howell in the seventh. Bonilla also had an RBI grounder.

Reuschel, 7-4, lowered his league-leading ERA to 2.17. He was won three of his last four decisions. His previous victory was a four-hitter against Chicago, marking the first time he has pitched consecutive shutouts since July 22-26, 1977.

Reuschel leads the NL with seven complete games. The host Pirates, who ended a four-game losing streak, have beaten Valenzuela twice this season.

Phillies 2, Astros 1

Bruce Ruffin pitched eight strong innings and outdueled Nolan Ryan as the Phillies edged Houston for their sixth vctory in seven games. The game in Philadelphia drew a Fireworks Night crowd of 56,825, the largest in the NL this season.

Ruffin, 5-6, gave up six hits and got 18 groundball outs. Steve Bedrosian, who streak of saves in 13 straight games ended Thursday night against the Astros, pitched the ninth inning for his 21st save.

Ryan, 4-9, lost his fourth straight decision as he allowed seven hits in seven innings. Ryan struck out 10 and passed J.R. Richard as Houston's all-time strikeout leader with 1,502. Ryan has fanned 134 batters in 103 2-3 innings this year.

The Phillies broke a 1-1 tie in the third inning when Milt Thompson and Von Hayes drew one-out walks and Lance Parrish hit a two-out, RBI single.

Houston's Glenn Davis hit a drive off the fence in left-center field with two outs in the sixth, but was thrown out at the plate when he tried for an inside-the-park homer.

Reds 8, Mets 3

Bo Diaz homered and drove in four runs, helping Guy Hoffman and Cincinnati over New York. Diaz hit a two-run homer in the sixth inning and a two-run triple in the eighth.

Hoffman, 7-2, gave up one run on five hits in winning for the seventh time in eight decisions. Bill Landrum worked the final 1 1-3 innings for his second save.

Hoffman's RBI single snapped a 1-1 tie in the fifth inning against Ron Darling, 2-6. Darling lost his career-high sixth straight decision and has not won in 14 starts since April 22. He allowed five runs in six innings.

Buddy Bell had a pair of run-scoring singles for the Reds, who ended the visiting Mets' three-game winning string.

Expos 2, Padres 1

Floyd Youmans checked San Diego on four hits for 6 2-3 innings and hit a two-run double that led Montreal.

Youmans, 5-3, won in his first start since coming off the disabled list. He was put out of action for the second time this year because of a strained back muscle on June 10.

Jeff Parrett pitched two-hit relief for his third save.

The Expos scored in the second inning against Andy Hawkins, 3-8. Hubie Brooks led off with a single, Mike Fitzgerald drew a two-out walk and Youmans doubled off the fence in left-center field.

Giants 3, Cubs 1

Robby Thompson's RBI single broke a 1-1 tie in the eighth inning and San Francisco won in Chicago.

Bob Brenly drew a leadoff walk from Jamie Moyer, 8-6, in the eighth and a pair of groundouts moved pinch-runner Mark Wasinger to third base. Thompson single put the Giants ahead.

Kelly Down, 7-4, gave up one run on seven hits in seven innings. Jeff Robinson got his ninth save.

Jeffrey Leonard stole home for the Giants in the first inning after two errors and a wild pitch.

Strawberry Wants Out

CINCINNATI (AP) — New York Mets outfielder Darryl Strawberry, stung by public criticism from two of his teammates, said he planned to leave the club when his contract expires at the end of the 1989 season, according to a published report.

The New York Daily News reported Saturday that Manager Davey Johnson had to call a closed-door meeting before the team's 8-3 loss to the Cincinnati Reds Friday night to prevent a possible fistfight.

Infielder Wally Backman and outfielder Lee Mazzilli both publicly criticized Strawberry for missing a pair of key games against St. Louis earlier this week because of the flu. The Mets won both games, but still trail the Cardinals by six games in the NL East race.

"I feel like I want to get out of here," Strawberry said before the meeting. "I'm not asking to be traded because I know they won't trade me, but I'm leaving when my contract's up. I don't want to play with a bunch of backstabbers. ... Mazzilli. ... Backman. Next time, they should tell me and not the press."

Mets captain Keith Hernandez said "the principals talked to one another" at the meeting, after which "everything was channeled toward the team. One of our strengths is that we've always been together as a unit. We need to avoid things that are self-destructive."

"Statements made about teammates should be constructive, not destructive," said Johnson. "These situations can be healthy, but they can get carried too far sometimes."

Wimbledon Officials Still Catching It

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Just because John McEnroe and his temper stayed home doesn't mean Wimbledon's officials have been in the clear.

Both Pat Cash and Ivan Lendl, who will meet for the men's singles championship on Sunday, had bitter complaints in the course of their semifinal victories over Jimmy Connors and Stefan Edberg, respectively.

Cash stalked over to umpire G.C.W. Armstrong, demanding that he overrule a questionable line call.

"Don't be so gutless," Cash bristled, in a voice loud enough to be picked up by courtside microphones.

Tennis umpires are permitted to overrule lines calls in a case of a clear mistake. Armstrong ignored Cash's complaint and ordered play to continue.

Lendl paid a number of visits to umpire Ken Slye's chair and was still bitter about them after the match.

"Don't remind me of the conversations with the umpire," he said. "He did an awful job. He opened his mouth twice for no reason on two serves. Then he interpreted the rules wrong.

"At 5-2 and 15-0, I hit a forehand volley winner on the line. The linesman called it out and the umpire would not overrule.

"Then, in the last game, at 30-0 to me, Stefan hit the ball on the line and the same linesman felt, 'Well, I made a mistake. Let's make it up.' It was like ice hockey. The referee makes a mistake, then compensates for it three minutes later."

This time, though, the compensation, like the original call, went against Lendl.

"The umpire had no guts to overrule either way," he said. "Once, he overruled the machine, which is ridiculous, because once the ball hits the line, you can see the mark, and the mark was about half a foot inside the service line. I feel I had a bad call and I'm going to complain about it. I'm not going to just let it run."

During World War II, King Christian X of Denmark was interned by the Nazis in 1943 as the Danes rebelled against occupation forces.

Moose, Barrett Shut Out Coke

Montez Barrett tossed a one-hit shutout as the Moose won the opening game of the City Little League championship series, 6-0, over Coca-Cola Friday.

The series, a best-of-three event, will continue on Monday at 5:30 p.m. at Elm Street Park. A third game, if needed, would be played on Tuesday.

Barrett overpowered Coke in the game, striking out 17 batters. He walked eight, however.

Adam Charlton got the lone hit off Barrett, that coming in the first inning of the game.

Coke, the North State regular season and tournament winner, did have several scoring opportunities in the contest, but failed to cash in on them.

The Moose, champions of the Tar Heel Little League both in regular season and tournament play, scored twice in the second inning to put the game away. Barrett provided the game-winning RBI by hitting a leadoff homer in the inning. Jimmy Rouse kept it going with a single, scoring on a triple by Jason Krause.

The Moose then added four more in the third. With one out, Todd Mitchum reached on an error, as did Mark Clark. Michael Howard then singled to load the bases. Barrett's grounder was relayed home to force Mitchum, but Rouse tripled to drive in all three baserunners. Buddy Foley then singled over Rouse with the final run of the game.

Rouse and Krause each had two hits to lead the Moose.

Jacoby's 3 Homers Not Enough

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Brook Jacoby just about did it all for the Cleveland Indians. But as it turned out, even three home runs weren't enough.

"This was unbelievable, unbelievable," Chicago Manager Jim Fregosi said after the White Sox blew an 8-3 lead in a six-run Cleveland eighth, only to bounce back with a six-run ninth inning of their own for a 14-9 victory Friday night.

"I am exhausted. It's just like I came out of one of those amusement park rides that whip you around," Fregosi said of the rain-delayed contest that took over five hours to complete.

Before the White Sox won it in the ninth, Jacoby had practically carried the Indians on his back with three home runs — the last one capping their eighth-inning rally that provided them with a 9-8 lead.

In other American League action, Texas beat New York 9-0 in the opener of a doubleheader before the Yankees won the nightcap 3-1; Kansas City took a doubleheader from Toronto 6-4 and 5-4; Minnesota edged Baltimore 6-5; Boston blanked Oakland 2-0; Detroit defeated Seattle 5-2, and Milwaukee turned back California 6-4.

Joe Carter had hit a three-run homer and Cory Snyder a two-run job before Jacoby hit his third bases-empty homer of the game and 16th of the season in the Cleveland eighth.

But the rest of the game belonged to the White Sox. They tied it in the ninth on a wild pitch by Sammy Stewart and took the lead as Carlton Fisk drew a bases-loaded walk. Donnie Hill then hit a two-run single before Steve Lyons drilled his fourth hit, a run-scoring single, and another run scored on Julio Franco's error.

"The fireworks started a little early. We don't have a bad record because of a lack of effort. Everybody tries," Lyons said.

Jacoby, like most of the Indians, left the lockerroom immediately to beat the crowd watching the post-game holiday fireworks. Pat Tabler, one of the few Indians who chose to stick around long enough to shower, said, "This one really stinks. What do you say?"

The loss dropped Cleveland's record to 27-51, the worst in the major leagues.

Rangers 9, Yankees 0
Yankees 3, Rangers 1

Mike Stanley hit his second grand slam in a week and three Texas pitchers combined on a five-hitter to lift the Rangers over New York in the first game of a doubleheader.

Mike Pagliarulo's two-run homer capped a three-run second inning and Rick Rhoden pitched five-hit ball for eight innings to help New York win the second game.

Stanley hit his third homer of the season in the sixth inning off reliever Cecilio Guante to give the Rangers a 7-0 lead after Texas had knocked out starter Bob Tewksbury, 1-3. Stanley's first grand slam came last Saturday in the second game of a doubleheader.

Bobby Witt, 4-3, allowed three hits over 5 1-3 innings but issued five walks.

Pagliarulo's 13th homer of the season was one of only three hits by the Yankees off Jose Guzman, 6-7, and all three hits came in the second inning.

Rhoden, 10-5, allowed an RBI single by Bob Brower in the fifth for the Rangers' only run, did not issue a walk, and struck out five before getting relief help in the ninth from Dave Righetti, who gained his 16th save.

Royals 6, Blue Jays 4
Royals 5, Blue Jays 4

George Brett and Frank White drove in two runs apiece and Mark Gubicza won his fourth straight game as Kansas City beat Toronto in the first game of a doubleheader.

In the nightcap, White singled with two out in the bottom of the ninth to score Brett after Kansas City had tied the game on a wild pitch.

Gubicza, 7-8, gave up nine hits before getting one-out relief help in the ninth from Jerry Don Gleaton, who gained his fourth save.

Toronto starter Jim Clancy, 8-6, left in the fifth inning after giving up five of the Kansas City runs.

Willie Wilson scored on Tom Henke's wild pitch to tie the game, 4-4. Wilson was running for Juan Beniquez, who singled with one out. Wilson stole second, and Henke, 0-4, walked Brett intentionally and then walked Danny Tartabull to load the bases.

Steve Farr, 3-2, picked up the win with two innings of scoreless relief.

The loss was the sixth straight for the Blue Jays.

Twins 6, Orioles 5

Steve Lombardozzi, benched because of an 0-17 batting slump, hit an RBI single with two outs in the 11th inning to lift Minnesota over Baltimore.

Tom Brunansky led off the 11th with a double and Tim Laudner walked against Tom Niedenfuer, 1-1. Niedenfuer retired the next two batters before Lombardozzi, who entered the game as a defensive replacement in the 10th inning, sent the first pitch passed diving shortstop Cal Ripken into center field to score Brunansky.

Lombardozzi's hit gave the Twins their second victory in nine games and made a winner of Jeff Reardon, 5-4.

Red Sox 2, Athletics 0

Jeff Sellers hurled a six-hitter for his first major-league shutout as Boston defeated Oakland.

Sellers, 3-1, was making his third start since being recalled from the Red Sox' Triple-A team at Pawtucket. Winning for the first time since May 12, Sellers walked two and struck out eight, to outduel Oakland pitcher Steve Ontiveros, 5-2, and give the Red Sox their fifth win in six games.

With the victory, the Red Sox broke a six-game losing streak at Oakland Coliseum, dating back to last season.

Spike Owen singled with one out in the third, advanced to second on Marc Sullivan's groundout and scored on an RBI single by Ellis Burks to give the Red Sox a 1-0 lead. Ontiveros, the AL Pitcher of the Month for June, had retired 23 consecutive batters over two games before the single by Owen, whose run snapped a 16 2-3-inning scoreless inning streak.

Tigers 5, Mariners 2

Bill Madlock hit a two-run homer and rookie Jeff Robinson pitched one-hit ball through five innings to lead Detroit over Seattle.

Brewers 6, Angels 4

Mike Felder's fourth-inning single snapped a 3-3 tie and Milwaukee went on to beat California behind Teddy Higuera. Felder's RBI single capped a three-run rally against Willie Fraser, 5-6.

No Comeback For 'The Old Man'

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — This time, there was no way back for the old man of tennis.

Jimmy Connors, who turned the second week of Wimbledon into a one-man show with a series of battling performances, finally ran out of magic in the semifinals on Friday, beaten by a stronger, quicker, younger man.

Australia's Pat Cash, 22, used an array of powerful serves and reflex volleys to crush the 34-year-old Connors 6-4, 6-4, 6-1 to gain his first Wimbledon final.

"I'll probably savor this week more when I'm finished," Connors said. "It'll mean more to me then."

In Sunday's championship match, Cash will play Ivan Lendl, last year's beaten finalist who also is seeking his first title in the famed Grand Slam event.

Lendl, the world's No. 1 player, came from behind to wear down Stefan Edberg of Sweden 3-6, 6-4, 7-6, 6-4 in three hours.

The Greenwich, Conn-based Czechoslovak has won three French Opens and two U.S. Opens. But beating Cash on Sunday, he said, "would mean so much to me I wouldn't even try to describe it."

Cash and Lendl rested Saturday while top-seeded Martina Navratilova and No. 2 Steffi Graf met in the women's final, with the world's No. 1 ranking in the balance.

Connors produced the second greatest comeback in Wimbledon history when he came from two sets and 4-1 down to beat Sweden's Mikael Pernfors in round four.

The only player to climb out of a deeper hole in Wimbledon's 101 years was Frenchman Henri Cochet, who, in 1927, was two sets down and trailed 1-5, 0-30 in the third to Bill Tilden, yet still won.

Just to show that beating Pernfors was no fluke, Connors ripped past Slobodan Zivojinovic of Yugoslavia in straight sets in the quarterfinals.

But his hopes of adding a Wimbledon title to those he won in 1974 and 1982 vanished as he was roasted by Cash on a hot afternoon.

The Australian dropped only one point on serve in the first set, in the seventh game, as he smashed through Connors' fragile defenses.

The veteran American fared slightly better in the second set until Cash broke him for a 5-3 lead. Connors broke straight back but again dropped serve to lose the set.

In addition to struggling with the sheer speed of Cash's game, Connors simply couldn't get the ball past the Australian, whose anticipation at the net was uncanny.

As the third set began, the crowd willed the American towards another sensational comeback. Their hopes were short-lived, however, as Cash ripped off the first five games.

Connors averted a whitewash when he held serve in the sixth game, but Cash's electrifying volleying made sure the match was won in the next game.

In all, Cash dropped only 16 points on serve, had 10 aces, made 47 placement winners and won 49 points at the net.

"I could never get into the meat of the match at any time," Connors said. "I could get a bite out it. Anything I put over the net, he was ready for. What he got back to me I was not ready for."

Connors, without a tournament title for almost three years, said that even at his age, getting to the last four was no reward.

"Getting to the semifinals does not do me any good," he said. "Winning the tournament would have."

Then, after reflection, he explained further what he meant.

"I think it would be better for me to look back on this Wimbledon when I'm finished," he said. "To look back now would be bad for me as long as I am still in there to win tournaments."

Cash is the first Australian to reach the final since Ken Rosewall in 1974. Ironically, Rosewall, then 39, was thrashed 6-1, 6-1, 6-4 by Connors, then 21, and failed in a last-ditch bid to win the Wimbledon title.

Cash described Connors as "an amazing player."

"You never know what to expect from him," Cash said. "I hope I'm not playing at 34."

Lendl, who has won four of five matches from Cash, would be a different proposition, the Australian said.

"I'm pretty confident going into the final. I've got to play the No. 1 player in the world. It's a big step."

While Connors and Cash provided the excitement, Lendl and Edberg played a predicable, tedious match.

The turning point, both players said, came in the last game of the second set. Edberg, a set up, led 40-0 on his serve and had three points to tie the score at 5-5 and exert the pressure.

But Lendl broke him, took the set, and won a third-set tiebreaker 10-8 to go ahead. By the middle of the fourth set, he had squeezed all the confidence out of Edberg.

"I don't know if it was convincing but I take it any way I can," Lendl said. "I'm in the final, and last year was an important experience. Not everyone can win it first time."

Lendl, who tried hard to keep his concentration during the match, spoke several times to American umpire, Ken Slye, about line calls.

One of Edberg's shots, ruled a fault by the electronic eye, particularly riled Lendl.

Snow Hill Wins Again

SNOW HILL — Snow Hill's American Legion baseball team stayed in the running for a share of the 1987 conference title Friday night with an 8-2 victory over Kinston.

But the victory may have proven costly to the team as its leading pitcher, Anthony Jones, went out of the game with an arm injury. Coach Jim Fulghum said that Jones, who started the game, looked strong for an inning plus before complaining of pain in his arm. "We'll have it checked by the doctor on Monday," Fulghum said, "but I'm not expecting him to be ready for the first round of the playoffs."

Those playoffs begin on Wednesday, and Wayne County has already clinched the top seeding and a first round bye for that. Snow Hill could — by winning a Saturday night doubleheader against Wilson and a Sunday contest against Wayne — finish tied for first, but would have lost two of three to Wayne.

Snow Hill broke open a scoreless game in the third inning, scoring two runs. With two outs, Roger Smith and Barry Ginn both drew walks. Shay Beamon then cracked a double, driving in both runners.

Snow Hill added two more in the fourth. Again, it all came with two away. Ginn singled and Chris Hooker got a hit. T.J. Johnson followed with a double, scoring both runners.

The host team finished it off in the sixth with three more runs. Uly Russo walked and Ginn cracked a two-run homer. Then, an out later, Johnson hit a solo shot out of the park.

The final run crossed in the eighth. Kinston picked up single runs in the sixth and ninth frames.

Johnson led the Snow Hill hitting with three while Smith and Ginn each had two. No one had more than one hit for Snow Hill.

The win boosted the Snow Hill record to 9-6 on the year, while Kinston falls to 6-11.

Weather Seen As Big Factor

By The Associated Press

With overflow crowds expected for the holiday weekend, pier operators along the North Carolina coast say they have broken out their lucky charms hoping that the recently unpredictable weather will cooperate.

"We've got our fingers crossed," said John Dudley of Dudley's Marina in Swansboro. "We've got the fish — we just need a pretty day to get out there and catch them."

Holiday anglers will be looking to pick up on the ever-improving flounder action, Jim Ratcliffe of the Long Beach Pier in Southport said.

"Anything that feeds off of live bait is ready to really start biting," Ratcliffe said. "I expect flounder fishing to really start booming in the next week or so."

Here are reports from seven locations along the North Carolina coast:

SWANSBORO

"Fishing is good, but we've been having some problems with the weather," Dudley said. Thundershowers and heavy winds held up action all day Wednesday.

"On Tuesday, the boats that went out caught some nice kings, some dolphin, barracuda and one 33-pound tuna," he said. "I think all the boats had their limit on the king mackerel.

"Spanish are doing real good too, they're getting close, we even caught some in the intercoastal waters."

HATTERAS

Steve Hissey of Pelican's Roost reports that his "aluminum fleet" of small fishing boats pulled in 22 king and 36 Spanish mackerel Tuesday.

Hissey said that fishermen are still pulling in a fair amount of fish off of the the pier, including croaker, small spot and some nice summer flounder.

"We've also had some Spanish pulled in off the beach when the water is clean. There's also been trout in the Cape channel and offshore has been great for tuna."

SOUTHPORT

"We've been doing pretty well with flounder, spot and bluefish, and the pompano have come into shore, some as big as 10 pounds," Ratcliffe said.

The weather has been partly cloudy with no rainfall as of Wednesday, Ratcliffe said.

Outdoor News

"Flounder and spots and pompano are our main thing right now. They're catching the flounder on live shrimp, and we've also caught a few puppy drum using (shrimp)."

Big crowds have turned out all week long and Ratcliffe believes the weekend should bring in a full house.

TOPSAIL ISLAND

Hollis Whitley of the Jolly Roger Pier reports good catches of flounder, Virginia mullet, pompano and spot.

"We caught a 22-pound barracuda on Monday," Whitley said, "and Jack Drum of Mount Olive was here for three days and pulled in 45 flounder."

Whitley expects a packed pier this weekend if the weather is decent. Most, he expects, will be fishing for flounder but when the pier is alive with vacationers one can never guess what will be pulled in.

"That's why we call it fishing," Whitley said.

CAROLINA BEACH

"We've been catching king mackerel every day this week," said Fred Phelps of the Carolina Beach Fishing Pier Northern Extension.

"Spots have been real good day and night," he said, "and we've also had a good amount of flounder and Spanish. The weather has been pretty and we're looking forward to a big weekend. We've had a pier-full every night."

WRIGHTSVILLE BEACH

George Fokakis says Crystal Pier is ready for a big weekend.

"We've been catching some king mackerel, a few bluefish and Spanish mackerel and spot at night," Fokakis said.

Weather has been hot, with intermittent thundershowers.

NAGS HEAD

"We've slowed up a little bit recently," said David Grana. "We've caught quite a few spot and flounder."

"The blues and tout are not as good as they were before ut they've been coming and going."

Thundershowers have held the crowds back somewhat but Grana says they can expect their biggest crowds of the year this weekend.

King Catch

Debbie Brown of Rt. 1, Ayden, shows off this 40-pound, 58-inch king mackerel she caught three miles off Hatteras Inlet on a live pinfish. The big fish took 20 minutes to land. Johnny Brown was driving the boat, a 19-footer. (Reflector Photo)

Wilson Says Not Using Drugs Again

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Bengals fullback Stanley Wilson, who underwent four drug rehabilitation programs during an 18-month suspension for cocaine use, has denied he resumed use of the drug, despite evidence to the contrary.

National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle announced Thursday that Wilson has been suspended until at least next June for "reinvolvement with cocaine."

"I have not done coke since sometime back in 1985," Wilson said. "There's a lot more to this than what was stated in the commissioner's announcement."

Wilson is the only NFL player to come back from a drug-related suspension and be suspended again.

Bengals General Manager Paul Brown said he was not surprised by Rozelle's decision. Brown said the Bengals had been confidentially informed about two months ago by NFL security personnel that Wilson had tested positive for cocaine use on more than one occasion between January and May.

Wilson said that he would not exercise his right to appeal Rozelle's decision in a bid to regain eligibility for the 1987 season.

"I'm upset about the decision, but sometimes you find yourself in situations you can't control," he said.

Coastal Fishing

Fishing citation applications are pouring in from North Carolina's Outer Banks, according to Jim Tyler, coordinator of the state's saltwater fishing citation program.

"Things were a bit slow this spring due to some rough waters," Tyler said from his Division of Marine Fisheries office, "but we're receiving a lot of applications now. Tuna and the Outer Banks are leading the way."

Indeed, excellent summer catches of bigeye, bluefin and yellowfin tuna are being reported by area marine operators. Meanwhile, variety is the word from headboats and piers.

Several headboats are reportedly having good success with grouper, flounder, sea bass, Spanish mackerel, croaker, spot and trout.

Spokesmen for eight Outer Banks piers said steady catches of sea mullet, croacker, spot, flounder, cobia and blues have been reported. Occasional catches of Spanish and king mackerel have been reported.

Action along the surf looks promising after the annual spring visit of big blues and red drum.

In addition to tuna, charters making daily runs through Oregon and Hatteras inlets to the Gulf Stream, just 30 miles offshore, are returning to home port with blue and white marlin (the latter usually taken in greater numbers in late August and into September). They are also catching wahoo and dolphin.

Officials Are Opposed to TEDs

North Carolina Marine Fisheries officials voiced strong opposition to new sea turtle protection regulations announced June 23 by the National Marine Fisheries Service.

The new regulation, scheduled to go into effect in May 1988, would put an unnecessary burden on the thousands of commercial fishermen in the state that catch shrimp, officials said.

Shrimpers in the ocean and inside the Outer Banks, in boats 25 feet or longer, would be required to use TEDs (Turtle Excluder Devices) in their shrimp nets. TEDs allow turtles accidentally caught while shrimping to escape. TEDs will not be required if tow times are limited to 90 minutes, which gives shrimpers time to remove the turtles before they drown. William T. Hogarth, director of the N.C. Division of Marine Fisheries, said North Carolina was not a part of the negotiations leading up to the regulation, nor was North Carolina involved in the testing.

He said the state has a different shrimp fishery than in areas tested further south. North Carolina shrimpers mostly use a net that fishes close to the bottom, and sea turtles are not often on the bottom.

Hogarth said available data indicates a sea turtle problem with state shrimpers is not a problem.

"Data for the past seven years show that 88 percent of the sea turtle strandings in North Carolina were reported from ocean beaches, while only 14 percent of the shrimp harvest comes from the ocean."

Hogarth added that "we are not at all opposed to saving turtles, but data here shows it is not necessary to put a needless burden on North Carolina shrimpers. The devices cost about $200 each and could reduce shrimp catches."

N.C. Marine Fisheries officials are working with congressional leaders and National Marine Fisheries Service officials about the problem.

"We are looking at all options," Hogarth said, "including legal, to have the restrictions dropped for at least the inside waters where most North Carolina shrimping occurs."

He added that "we want to make it clear that the Division of Marine Fisheries and the North Carolina Marine Fisheries Commission have, and will continue to implement, necessary regulations to protect total resources including rare an endangered species.

Canada Geese Released

Waterfowl biologists and wildlife technicians with the N.C. Wildlife Commission recently released 700 Canada geese in Hyde County in an effort to restore North Carolina's Canada goose population and to introduce a non-migratory flock to the state.

On June 21, biologists went to New York to catch Canada geese and bring them back to North Carolina for stocking. The project is a joint effort between the commission and the Hyde County Waterfowl Committee, and Rep. Howard Chapin, D-Beaufort, was instrumental in obtaining legislative funding for the project.

The geese were first taken to the commission's Edenton depot to be aged, sexed and banded. After that, different groups were delivered to several sites in Hyde County, where they were released to establish a resident population.

The geese are currently in a molting state and cannot fly. As they begin to grow feathers, wildlife technicians will clip them to make sure the geese's residence in the state is maintained.

Area Is Cleared For Hungry Bears

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

Grizzly bears have been given the right of way for their rites of spring in part of Montana's Flathead National Forest.

The U.S. Forest Service ruled motorized off-road vehicles must stay out of a 4,000-acre tract of the 2 million-acre Flathead in May and June.

Known as the Krause Creek-Peters Ridge area of the forest, it has been the site of off-road races for several years.

The area is important to the grizzly because it is where local bears get their first meal after hibernation, said Tom France, lawyer for the National Wildlife Federation at its Northern Rockies Natural Resource Center in Missoula, Mont.

"The bears start moving into this area as soon as they're out of hibernation," France said. "They basically starve themselves for four to six months in a den. The first thing a grizzly thinks about when out of the den is dinner."

An easy dinner is what's available in those 4,000 acres.

The land is low, about 3,500 feet, and rolling, compared to most surrounding land which is much steeper. It also faces south-southwest, meaning the snow melts and plants grow sooner each spring.

"They're feeding on all sorts of plants, roots and tubers, as well as carrion if they can find it," France said. "They really key on avalanche chutes and creek bottoms. That's where they're at as soon as it starts to green up.

"The bears are in a basic energy crisis in the spring. With a three-wheeler racing in there, the bear's going to be scared and move out of the area" and not get the easy food it needs, France said in explaining the lawsuit which prompted the Forest Service decision.

Although grizzlies are basically solitary, wide-ranging animals, they congregate at key places in the food cycle during parts of the year — warmer slopes in early spring, streams where fish spawn in the early summer, high-country berry patches in late summer.

If man and grizzly are to coexist, the bear is going to have to be left alone in some of those places at certain times of the year, France said in a telephone interview. It's already being done in part of Glacier and Yellowstone national parks.

"There are going to have to be tradeoffs if you're going to have grizzlies around where there are a lot of people," he said. "It's small areas for short periods of time."

The problem is that some of the key areas for bears are also popular with man. These are the lower mountain slopes, where the bears feed heavily in the spring and again in the fall in a final feast to build fat to survive the winter.

"It's the low-elevation habitats where the animals are going to be won or lost," France said, "and those are the areas with the most people pressure, subdivisions and other types of development." The big, powerful bears, which once inhabitated muchof the western United States, are making a last stand in the northern Rockies.

"We've got to make decisions to benefit the grizzly if we're going to have an animal like this in Montana and in the lower 48," France said.

Moving Firm Has Come Long Way From 1-Man Operation Of Early 50s

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

When W.C. (Bill) Taylor Jr. started his moving business in the early 1950s with a jeep and a used truck, he was relocating an average of two families a week.

Today, Taylor's company, ABC Moving & Storage Inc., relocates 600 to 700 families a year, whether it be across town or across the globe.

"Anything pertaining to the movement of people and their possessions, we handle it," said Taylor, the company's president. "We also handle office moves. If you're going overseas, we'll crate you up and send you overseas.

"We do anything — heavy equipment, light equipment — it doesn't make any difference."

ABC Moving & Storage, which began as a one-man operation and has grown to include 10 climate-controlled storage warehouses and seven moving vans, employs about 25 people.

"I was in business with my father," said Taylor, a lifelong Greenville native. "He was in the general hauling business. They'd haul anything. In the 1950s, I decided to branch out into the moving business. I was strictly in moving because it takes a different type of van.

"I operated in the moving business for five or six years and then decided to go into the moving and storage business."

The company was located on Evans Street originally, then it was moved to the corner of Dickinson Avenue and 10th Street before Taylor set up shop at ABC's present location on Stantonsburg Road in 1962.

"Nothing was out here then," Taylor, 61, who attended Greenville High School, said. "It was in the country. There was nothing but pigs and cows and corn around us."

Since then, the area has seen its share of development, including Pitt County Memorial Hospital and related businesses.

"Our exposure here to the hospital is unreal," said Taylor. "You don't realize how many nurses come into town to work. Professional people and people that are associated with selling things to the hospital move here, and they ride by and they see us.

"About 40 percent of our business is generated by medical-related income. It's worked out great for us. We have a good relationship with the hospital. We store a lot of stuff for them. We handle heavy shipments coming in that they can't handle."

While storage is an integral part of the business, ABC is still concerned with taking care of families during a difficult time, according to Taylor, who has turned over most of the company's operations to his twin sons, Donald and Ronald, who serve as vice presidents.

"The most traumatic thing in a man's life if he's married and has children is to pull them out of school and go to another town," he said. "There's an emotional problem when you're moving people."

However, most people appreciate ABC employees, Taylor said.

"People are fascinating," he said. "You get people who are looking forward to moving and that type of thing. They enjoy our drivers. It's amazing how long they are able to remember. They'll call a year or two later, and I'm amazed that people will remember a particular driver by name."

ABC Moving & Storage offers its customers a variety of moving services, according to the Taylors.

"We have several accounts that we ship to different countries throughout the world, and that's picked up the last 10 years," Donald Taylor said. "We've got accounts all over the United States.

"We can do as much or as little as our customer wants. If they want to go all the way, we can do it. It's just like buying a car. You can get the options if you want to but you don't have to."

"We'll go in and pack up your dishes, hang your clothes in wardrobes, pack up all the mirrors," Bill Taylor said. "We'll do everything so that the shipper can sit back and not do anything if they don't want to."

The company has also initiated some new projects, according to the elder Taylor, who said the moving and storage industry is a 12-hour a day job.

"We just started two new programs out here — one's a record storage," he said. "People have to store government records for withholdings for years and years, and we've just started into that.

"We also started a system of storing forms for companies. We distribute forms when they're ready for us."

According to Bill Taylor, the new programs are a little more complex than storing property.

"It's a lot more detailed," he said. "You have to keep a computer record of every box by number. You have to put your hand on any box within 10 minutes of them calling. It's not like when you store furniture and you go back to get it, and it takes a day to dig it out. This has got to be accessable to the customer within 10 or 15 minutes of when they call.

"A lot of them are medical records, x-rays, things like that. They'll call from the doctor's offices around here and want an x-ray box. It has not been done anywhere in eastern North Carolina to my knowledge."

Resignations Not Enough

By MONIKA JAIN
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — U.S. congressional leaders say the resignations of two top Toshiba Corp. executives were a token apology for the illegal sale of secret technology they say will make Soviet submarines harder to detect.

But to the Japanese, the resignations were nearly as drastic as hara-kiri, the ritual form of suicide that was the ultimate way of acknowledging responsibility in feudal Japan.

"I'd like the American people to understand ... (that last week's resignations were) the strongest expression of apology of the Japanese people to the U.S. Senate," Toshiba Corp.'s chief spokesman Yuji Wakayama said. "I hope it would meet the requirements of the U.S Senate."

But the resignations did not impress Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif.

"In light of what's occurred, resignations are expected. But they hardly meet the severity of the crime," he said in Washington.

Toshiba President Sugiichiro Watari and Chairman Shoichi Saba announced their resignations at a hastily called news conference Wednesday to take responsibility for subsidiary Toshiba Machine's illegal sales of high-tech machinery to the Soviet Union.

The announcement came hours after the U.S. Senate voted Tuesday to ban imports of Toshiba products into the United States for two years.

Toshiba Machine and Kongsberg Vaapenfabrikk, Norway's state-owned arms manufacturer, sold the Soviets computerized propeller machines worth $17 million from 1982 through 1984. U.S. officials said the technology will enable the Soviet Union to make its submarines much quieter and limit the ability of American forces to track them.

Saba strongly denied any links between Toshiba Corp. and the illegal sales, but said that as executives of the parent company of Toshiba Machine, the two must step down to take responsibility.

"We feel responsible for having troubled society," he said.

Saba denied the decision to resign was connected in any way to the U.S. ban, but said the two "feel gravely responsible for straining the already strained Japan-U.S. relations further."

The resignations were "a combination of a Japanese custom and a way to solve the bilateral problem" said Motoo Kaji, economics professor emeritus at Tokyo University.

"It was unfortunate the U.S. enlarged the problem to include the whole of the Toshiba group instead of just the subsidiary," Kaji said. "The chief had to show some dramatic action."

Toshiba Corp. owns 50.1 percent of Toshiba Machine.

Many Japanese chief executives have resigned, or even committed suicide, to accept responsibility for a company disaster or scandal.

Japan Air Lines President Yasumoto Takagi resigned after a JAL jetliner crashed into a remote mountaintop Aug. 12, 1985, killing all but four of the 524 people aboard in the world's worst single-plane disaster.

The same day as the crash, Toshio Komoto, founder and ex-president of Sanko Kisen, the world's largest tanker operator, resigned as Cabinet minister without portfolio to take blame for the company's bankruptcy.

Hisashi Shinto resigned as president of Japan's second-largest shipbuilding company, Ishikawajima-Harima Heavy Industries, as the company's performance lagged in June 1979.

"By attracting responsibility to themselves, they can absolve the collective from guilt," said Gregory Clark, professor of international business and sociology at Sophia University in Tokyo. "It's the modern equivalent of hara-kiri."

Hara-kiri, a ritual of self-disembowelment also known as seppuku, is considered the supreme act of responsibility in a country where individual behavior takes second place to the needs of a cohesive society.

"In Western eyes, the guilt remains. But in Japanese eyes, Toshiba has been absolved," Clark said.

Wakayama maintained that the resignations were "irregular" even in Japan, because Toshiba Corp. and Toshiba Machine are "separate" entities.

"They did nothing wrong. But they resigned," he said.

Despite the public shame, many of the Japanese officials continue to be involved in the company operations while maintaining a low profile.

Increases in the Northeast and Midwest were not enough to offset declines in the South and West, according to the publication. A total of 351,900 building permits were issued during the first quarter of 1987, compared to 381,200 in 1986.

First Union Mortgage operates 134 offices in 32 states. It is a subsidiary of Charlotte-based First Union Corp., the nation's 17th largest bank holding company with a branch in Greenville.

Business Level Rose

The level of business activity in North Carolina registered a 0.6 percent increase in May, according to the First Wachovia Business Index, which measures the level of economic activity in the state on a monthly basis.

Wachovia said the May figure represents an annualized growth rate of 7.2 percent over April.

The rise in the Index, according to Wachovia, was due to a drop of 9.9 percent in new claims for unemployment insurance as well as gains in nonagricultural employment and residential building permits. However, the average manufacturing workweek was off slightly in May.

Non-agricultural employment in North Carolina rose 0.2 percent in May, while for the nation as a whole, it was up 0.1 percent. Over the past 12 months, the Index indicated, nonagricultural employment in the state has increased 3.2 percent, while national growth has averaged 2.4 percent.

Manufacturing employment in the state was up 0.3 percent in May, according to the Index.

Rolex Pawn Business Booming

By STEWART TAGGART
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Pawnbroker Jean Davis twirled a diamond-fringed, 18-karat gold men's Rolex watch, one of dozens left at his store by the oil patch's newly poor.

"They hate to see that Rolex go," he said. "But the last thing to go is the wife's Rolex, because that could cost a divorce."

Once a status symbol of high-flying, money-making good times, Rolex watches have become a common sight in Houston pawnshops, some of which have posted signs offering to buy or pawn the high-status timepieces.

Most pawnshop owners say the boom in second-hand watches began about 18 months to two years ago and shows few signs of letting up.

"This was a guy in the oil business," said Davis, waving the newly acquired, diamond-decorated "President's" watch that sold new for nearly $15,000. Another watch belonged to a stockbroker, yet another to a real estate agent, he said.

Each one came with a tale of financial downfall, Davis said.

"Nobody wants to come in and just borrow money, they want to come in and tell you how they got poor," he said.

"They all come in with a story, and if I don't hear the story, they won't sell the watch," said Anthony Petkas, who runs A&P Pawn & Jewelry. "If they would just come in and not give me any stories, I'd give them more money."

The pawnshop operators have observed a ripple effect in the area's economic downturn.

"First you saw the executives, then you saw their bosses," said Davis, whose firm is called Diamond Liquidators. "We're now seeing a lot of real estate people come in, since the oil people have already gone bad."

Berle Landow, who opened his pawnshop about a year ago, says his Rolex business has been strong.

"The day I opened they started coming in with them" Landow said. "Usually it's the same story — oil industry."

"I think people are going back to the real life," said Gary Morgan, owner of Morgan Pawn Shop. "Right now, there is no flash, no cash, no work."

Most Houston shops prefer to buy the Rolex watches and limit loans to $300.

Pawnshops usually offer sellers about 30 to 40 percent of the watches' original value, and resell them for about 50 percent of their original value, shop owners say.

The most common Rolex watches sell new for between $1,000 to $10,000, although they can sell for much more with diamonds and other options, according to John Flaherty, attorney for Rolex in New York.

Landow, who buys three to four Rolexes a week, said he has a waiting list of "average lay people" eager to buy a second-hand watch — "the guy who still has the $4-an-hour job."

Bankruptcy Petition

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Oil heir Cullen Davis has filed for bankruptcy because he is several hundred million dollars in debt, not because of civil lawsuits filed against him in the death of his stepdaughter, his attorneys say.

The bankruptcy petition nevertheless blocks civil action against Davis, who recently won a mistrial in the wrongful death suit, said Steve Sumner, who represented him in that case.

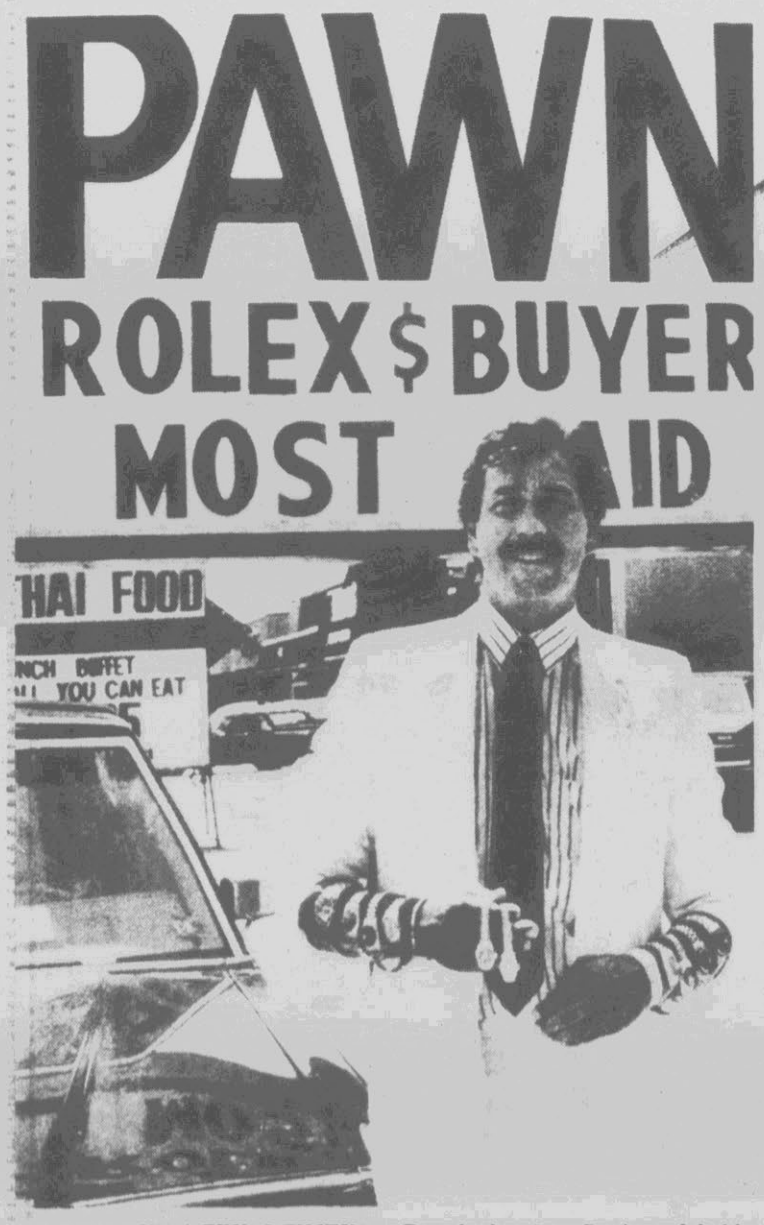
Another of Davis' attorneys, Edward W. Roush Jr., filed for his client Thursday under Chapter 7 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, which calls for voluntary liquidation of assets.

The two-page bankruptcy petition gave no details about Davis' debts, but Roush said most of them stem from Davis' being listed as a personal guarantor on loans that have not been paid.

"One thing this does is it points out the futility of the laintiffs ever being able to recover money from Cullen," said Sumner. "It's simply saying to creditors, we're going to sell all our assets. It's a pretty drastic move, very drastic."

Davis was sued for $16.5 million in damages by his ex-wife, Priscilla Davis, and her former husband, Jack Wilborn, for the death of their 12-year-old daughter, Andrea Wilborn. The girl was killed in a 1976 shooting spree at Davis' mansion.

The case ended in a mistrial last month with jurors deadlocked 8-4 in favor of Mrs. Davis and Wilborn. Since then, both have said they would take Davis to court again.



WANNA BUY A TEXAS TIMEX? — Pawnbroker Jean Davis models his selection of second-hand Rolex watches in front his shop, Diamond Liquidators, in West Houston. Davis says down and out oilmen bringing in their expensive timepieces is not uncommon, but real problems are heralded when the wives bring their lady Rolex watches in for pawn. (AP Laserphoto)

Robins, Rorer OK Tentative Merger Plans

By LARRY O'DELL
Associated Press Writer

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A.H. Robins Co. and Rorer Group Inc. signed a letter of intent to pursue a merger with an indicated value of more than $2 billion, negotiators for the two pharmaceutical companies said Friday.

Arvid Johnson, Robins senior vice president and general counsel, said the letter signed after two days of negotiations was subject to agreement on details of a plan to combine the companies by July 31.

Robins filed for Chapter 11 federal bankruptcy reorganization in August 1985 to protect itself from financial problems arising from more than 300,000 lawsuits by women who claimed injuries from its Dalkon Shield birth control device.

The tentative merger plan announced Friday called for creation of two trust funds totaling $1.75 billion to pay Dalkon Shield claims.

The plan also called for a stock swap in which Robins shareholders would receive one share of Rorer preferred stock with a stated value of $30, or .625 of a share of Rorer common stock if the market value of that stock was $48 or more, for each of their Robins shares.

Based on Robins' 24.1 million common shares outstanding, the stock swap would have an indicated value of at least $723 million.

Robins stock rose $1.25 to $28.75 Thursday in New York Stock Exchange composite trading, while Rorer closed at $46.12½, up $1.75. The stock market was closed Friday for Independence Day.

"In proposing this merger agreement, Rorer is conscious of the social responsibility to resolve as soon as possible the Dalkon Shield claims," said Robert E. Cawthorn, chairman and chief executive of Fort Washington, Pa.-based Rorer.

"By providing $1.75 billion, all legitimate claims can be processed and settled in the shortest possible time while insulating Rorer from such claims," Cawthorn said in a statement.

E. Claiborne Robins Jr., Robins' president and chief executive, said his company was committed to the welfare of both companies' employees and to the Fort Washington and Richmond communities.

Johnson said it was too early to say how the merged company would be organized, what it would be called and how employees would be affected.

Rorer last month had made a $2.6 billion merger offer similar to the proposal unveiled Friday. The offer from Rorer, which earlier this year made and then withdrew a $2.25 billion merger plan, was to have expired Monday but was extended into Friday as discussions continued.

Johnson said the merger was not an easy step for the Robins family, which has controlled the company for 120 years.

He said the Robins board of directors approved the deal without dissent on Friday morning.

The merger plan will be submitted for a vote by shareholders of both companies, Robins creditors and the Dalkon Shield Claimants Committee, which represents women who have filed claims against Robins, Johnson said. The plan also is subject to Federal Trade Commission approval and confirmation by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Richmond.

Johnson said U.S. District Judge Robert R. Merhige Jr., who has been hearing matters related to Robins' bankruptcy, was kept abreast of developments during negotiations.

In addition to the fund for Dalkon Shield claimants, the proposal would settle other Robins debts totaling about $120 million as proposed in the reorganization plan Robins filed in April with the bankruptcy court. Johnson said Robins would amend the reorganization plan to incorporate terms of the merger.

A court-appointed committee of Robins stockholders favored a merger with Rorer, the committee's lawyer, Robert Miller of New York, said Thursday.

"There will be a great number of shareholder lawsuits against the company" Miller said.

In addition to the $2.25 billion merger proposal Rorer made in March, Robins had gotten a buyout offer in February from American Home Products Corp.

Both companies withdrew their offers after Robins indicated it was not interested.

Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals Inc. offered to buy Robins' consumer brands for $840 million in May, but later withdrew the offer after Robins expressed its wish to emerge from reorganization intact.

Rorer had 1986 sales of $845 million. Its best-known products are Maalox antacid and Ascriptin, an aspirin product.

Robins had 1986 sales of $790 million. Its best-known products include Robitussin and Dimetapp cough medicines, Chap Stick and the Sergeant's line of pet care products.

Doctors Boycott Emergency Rooms

MIAMI (AP) — Hospitals scaled back services after doctors protesting spiraling malpractice insurance rates refused to work in emergency rooms during the Fourth of July weekend.

In Broward County, north of Miami, only four of 19 hospitals offered full services for the weekend.

Broward General Medical Center, one of only two county hospitals open or the full range of emergency services, is expected to have no trouble handling its extra holiday load, spokeswoman Louis Maple said Saturday.

"Everything is under control," she said. "Traditionally on the Fourth of July our emergency cases go up 30 or 40 percent. With the situtation now it may go up 50 percent, but we can handle it."

She said the hospital has been receiving five or 10 extra cases a day because of the boycott.

Between 100 and 200 physicians met at a Dade County hotel Wednesday to talk about unionizing, and more than 40 of those signed up to join the Florida Federation of the Union of American Physicians and Dentists, said Dr. Osvaldo Contarini of Jacksonville, who heads the group.

He said worry about possible antitrust action by the Federal Trade Commission against the protesting physicians frightened off many other sympathetic doctors.

"There was a sense of fear that dominated the meeting," said Contarini. "The FTC is there to conduct investigations, but it doesn't mean everybody they investigate is guilty. Everybody has a right to unionize."

His union has 400 members in Florida and more than 40,000 in 17 states, he said.

Its first priority now is to pressure the governor and Legislature to do something about the insurance rates, he said.

"We're not going to declare a strike," said Contarini. "There are legal things we can do. We intend to stay within the law."

South Florida has the nation's highest malpractice insurance rates, and on July 1 they increased up to 42.7 percent for some high-risk specialties such as neurology and obstetrics.

The general counsel of the Florida Medical Association also denied the doctors were breaking the law with their boycott of emergency room work.

"The First Amendment protects the the rights of individuals," said attorney John Thrasher. "The FTC hasn't come out and said anybody has done anything wrong."

Ingram's Music Is Gift For Community

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Sacred music fills Rodger Ingram's life with activity he loves and is his reason for living, he says.

The Ayden resident has been singing and playing musical instruments in church since childhood and in the past few years, he's made music ministry his career. At the present time, he's either directing or accompanying no fewer than 11 singing groups and individuals.

When I'm not working with one of my groups, I'm resting," he said. "Music is pretty much all I do and all I want to do."

One of Ingram's first experiences at singing in public was in Lillie Alexander's first grade at Shiloh Elementary School near Ayden. Ms. Alexander encouraged him to sing "There Will Be Peace in the Valley." She told his mother later that he was so nervous at first that he cried, but he struggled on to finish the song. She got him to do it over and over till his tears and his fears of singing in front of others had dissipated.

His family lived near Elm Grove Free Will Baptist Church southeast of Ayden when he was a child. Like most of their neighbors, they were farmers and the whole family was expected to work in the fields. Daisy Ingram, Ingram's mother, remembers that when chores were caught up, she could expect to find her other children and others from the neighborhood at the nearby baseball field. But Rodger, she always knew, would be at Elm Grove Church, picking out tunes on the piano.

"If I had a free day, I'd get there early and stay all day long," he remembers. "I'd leave only when it got too dark to see."

Music Teacher Remembers

He remembers that he tricked the Rev. Ollie Harris into giving him his first music lesson. She was the accompanist for the choir at his family's church at the time. He said to her one day, "I'll be over to your house at 4 o'clock tomorrow for my music lesson." She told him that she didn't remember promising him any music lesson, but she'd be glad to teach him, and yes, come on over.

Mrs. Harris says, "I don't remember the trickery. But I do remember that Rodger was a determined and a talented student from the start. Frank and Daisy Ingram, his parents didn't have a lot of money, but they got him to my house for lessons and they encouraged him all the way. I taught him the basics of piano and he quickly surpassed anything I could do, because he had so much inborn ability.

"When I listen to him now, it's hard to imagine that I ever had anything to teach him. But then a lot of my students have surpassed me. I'm just thankful I could help them in the beginning."

When he was in the ninth grade, he won a scholarship offered by the women's Home Mission Department of his church. With this scholarship, he continued his private music instruction.

He was active in the school choral club while at South Ayden High School. He graduated in 1962, performing the feature solo for the graduation.

He went to Elizabeth City State University with plans to major in elementary education. But the freshman talent show his first year he was there changed his direction. The chairman of the school's music department, Evelyn Johnson, heard his piano solo of the theme from the movie "Exodus" and informed him his future was in music. She enrolled him in the music program and it was then that he perfected his ability to play the organ and other musical pursuits.

He dropped out of college after two years and went to Washington, D.C., where he worked for a group health association. He served as both organ and piano accompanist and participated in other musical activities in various churches there.

Played For Chapel

In 1965 he was drafted into the U.S. Army. He figured his music would be on hold for a while, but while attending interdenominational worship services in the post chapel at Fort Leonard Wood in Missouri one Sunday, he heard the chaplain issue an appeal for "someone to play the organ."

Immediately after the service, he volunteered. This became his Sunday job for the next year. After his service obligation, first at Leonard Wood and then Aberdeen Proving Grounds in Maryland was over, he came home to eastern North Carolina. He got an associate degree in business from Pitt Community College and worked at several places, including Belk-Tyler's in Rocky Mount and at Grant Buick in Greenville.

But in 1979 he began what was for him the best life possible — full-time work as a minister of music. He serves New Deliverance Free Will Baptist Church as its full-time minister of music, directing two choirs there, but also serves the following other groups and individuals: the St. John's No. 1 Choir of Kinston, Grifton Chapel Free Will Baptist Church Senior Choir, the Gospelaires of Greenville, the Mount Calvary Mass Choir, the 100-voice Tabernacle Choir which meets once a month in Kinston, the Voices of Praise Male Trio of Snow Hill, as accompanist for Rosa Harris' solo concerts, the District Union No. 3 Choir each fifth Sunday afternoon, and as a substitute choir director for Wilson Chapel Free Will Baptist Church in Wilson.

At one time he was part of a group known as Rodger Ingram and the Pugh Sisters. He has participated more than once in the East Carolina University Black Arts Festival.

Said Patient Person

His sister, Linda Ingram, a member of one of his singing groups in the past, said, "As a choir director, Rodger will work your eyeballs out. He gets the best out of every single person he directs. Yet he does it all in an easy-going, patient way. I've never seen another person with so much patience."

Johnny Wooten, operator of Wooten's School of Music in Greenville, said, "Rodger's good. He's better than me and that's good. He's probably one of the most expert musicians I've ever known."

The depth of love that the Pitt-Lenoir-Greene-Wilson county community and the choirs Ingram serves have for him was tested in March. Ingram was hospitalized at Pitt Memorial for the whole month. During that time hundreds of dollars were raised by various Rodger Ingram appreciation concerts and other community collections and fund-raisers to help defray his medical expense. And his hospital room was so filled with balloons and flowers, it looked more like a gift shop than a sick room, his mother said.

"I knew people are good," Ingram said, "but I never knew how good. Everyone was just wonderful to me while I was sick."

Daisy Ingram has kept careful account of everything that was given to Rodger during his illness and by whom. She said, "I've known most of Rodger's life how much he loves music and how hard he's always worked at it. But I never knew how much he would succeed and how much people would love him as a result of his gift and the way he shares it. I'm so proud of him. Our whole family is."

Earhart's Disappearance Is 50-Year Mystery

By CATALINA ORTIZ
Associated Press Writer

HONOLULU (AP) — She was the first lady of the air, a daring, record-setting pilot, and on July 2, 1937, Amelia Earhart was nearing the end of a round-the-world flight, running low on fuel and aiming for a speck of land in the central Pacific.

She never arrived on tiny Howland Island.

A 17-day air and sea search discovered no trace of Earhart, navigator Fred Noonan or their Lockheed Electra. Officially, the plane and its passengers were lost at sea.

But 50 years later, the flier's disappearance still fascinates and puzzles people.

Was she lost and did she run out of fuel? Did she land on another island? Was she imprisoned by the Japanese? Was she executed as a spy?

Whatever the explanation, her disappearance closed a flying career that set more than a dozen records. By the end of 1935, Earhart decided to make what she said would be her last long-distance flight — a 27,000-mile trip around the world at the equator.

She cared less about any new records she might set than about the challenge itself. In articles she wrote about the flight, she looked forward to a "successful, happy adventure."

After a failed attempt flying west from California, Earhart decided to fly eastward and took off from Oakland, Calif., on May 20, 1937. Five weeks later, she and Noonan landed in Lae, New Guinea.

There they faced the next-to-last and most difficult leg of the trip — a 2,550-mile flight over water to Howland Island, a bare and flat piece of land a half-mile wide and less than two miles long.

Without landmarks, Earhart depended on Noonan's skill as a navigator and on the U.S. Coast Guard cutter Itasca. The vessel, anchored at Howland, was to guide her to the island with a then-experimental directional finder.

In transmissions to the Itasca, Earhart asked for bearings but did not broadcast long enough for the Itasca to get a fix on the Electra. She also apparently had trouble with her radio.

In one of her last transmissions, Earhart told the Itasca, "We must be on you but cannot see you, but gas is running low." In her final message, she said she was flying north and south on a line but did not give a reference point.

One pilot who has studied Earhart's last flight, Elgen Long, San Mateo, Calif., believes her disappearance was "just another aircraft accident."

Long, who was a navigator and flier in the Pacific in World War II, thinks many key things that could have gone wrong did.

"When you put it all together it was a tragedy, but it was not a mystery," he said. "They thought they were there, but they weren't."

Working independently, Long and another pilot, Grace McGuire of Rumson, N.J., say they have discovered that Earhart's coordinates put Howland Island nearly seven miles northwest of its true location.

Miss McGuire is restoring a 1930s Electra in which she hopes to retrace and complete Earhart's flight. She believes Earhart and Noonan could not find the tiny island in the glare of the morning sun in the short time her dwindling supply of fuel allowed.

Earhart and Noonan, she thinks, headed for Baker Island, 38 miles to the south, but ran out of gas and went down in the ocean.

Long also believes the Electra ran out of fuel but says a 3¼-degree error in the plane's compass put Earhart and Noonan even farther away from Howland Island.

He says he knows where Earhart and Noonan crashed into the sea — 35 miles west-northwest of Howland. Long and his wife, Marie, are trying to arrange a scan of the ocean floor in an attempt to find the wreckage.

Other researchers, however, believe these ideas are simplistic or a naive acceptance of the official explanation of Earhart's disappearance.

"Sometimes I think people take a button and sew a whole suit on it," Frank Goerner, a San Francisco journalist, says of the wrong-coordinate theory.

In the 1966 book, "The Search for Amelia Earhart," Goerner theorized that Earhart was on a government mission to fly over the Japanese-held island of Truk. He believed she went down in the Marshall Islands, was captured by the Japanese and died on Saipan in the Northern Mariana Islands.

In researching Earhart's disappearance, Goerner talked with natives on Saipan who reported seeing two American fliers — a man and a woman — in Japanese custody on the island in 1937.

Today, however, 21 years after publication of his book and since the release of formerly classified military documents, Goerner says there is no evidence Earhart was on a mission even though she and the government clearly cooperated on the flight.

Goerner no longer believes the Electra diverted from a straight-line flight from Lae. But he thinks Earhart couldn't find Howland Island and flew south to the Phoenix Islands, where she was picked up by the Japanese and was taken to Saipan.

He is currently looking for military files he thinks may document Earhart's death on the island.

However, a retired aviation engineer who began investigating Earhart's disappearance five years ago believes her entire final flight was a military intelligence operation.

Jim Donahue of Inglewood, Calif., says Earhart flew over Jaluit in the Marshall Islands and took night photographs of Japanese operations there. However, Donahue says Earhart blew the mission by failing to maintain radio silence and was ordered to land on Hull in the Phoenix Islands.

He says the U.S. government kept her and Noonan in "protective custody" while the government conducted the search and "put out the pretext that she was lost at sea."

However, he believes Earhart died in custody on American Samoa of dysentery and Noonan succumbed to the effects of alcoholism.

Donahue, who is working on an Earhart book, says documents he's found in military and government archives in the United States and Britain support his theory, although "they never come right out and say it."

But the people closest to Earhart scoff at the theories.

"I think it was a tragedy of the sea," said Earhart's sister, Muriel Earhart Morrissey. "She simply didn't have the fuel in her tank to carry her where she wanted to go."

Mrs. Morrissey, now 86, believes the stories persist because "Americans enjoy a good mystery story."

Earhart's stepson, David Putnam, thinks she "probably would have laughed" at theories of capture and imprisonment.

"If she had been taken prisoner, I think we would have heard eventually," he said.

The International 99s, a worldwide organization of pilots of which Earhart was the first president, does not discuss the theories.

But on July 2, the 99s will hold what it calls an "international flyover," an hour-long period on a certain radio frequency in which members who are airborne will report their name and position.

They will end the message with: "Let the search for Amelia Earhart continue."

Erma Claims Husband Is Walking Vending Machine

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

You know the old adage, "An army travels on its stomach."

Well, it must have impressed my husband because he never travels any other way. Ever since I've known him he has packed more food for a vacation than his toiletries and clothes put together. Tucked in among clean underwear and his tripod is an assortment of granola, crackers, snacks, dried soups and fruits, and candy bars. The man is a walking vending machine.

His theory is that someday that stash may save his life. "You never know," he says, "when you may get into a situation where you're between a meal service on an airline or you arrive in a country and the kitchens are closed." I say he's being dramatic. Kansas City is not exactly a Third World country. They have granola, crackers, assorted snacks, dried soups and fruits, and candy bars like anyone else.

"When will you get the idea that vacations are not an "outward bound' course in survival?" I asked.

"You didn't say that when we flew from Dallas to San Diego and the only thing they served was a packet of honey-flavored nuts. If you weren't so stubborn you'd have eaten the dried apricots I had stuffed in my camera bag."

"I don't eat anything with fur on it," I said.

I wouldn't bring the matter up, but we have traveled together to every part of the world for the last 20 years or so, and there has not been a moment I have not harped on his preoccupation with food. He has not uttered one word in his own defense.

Last year in Spain I was dressed and ready to go to dinner by 6 in the evening. "Aren't you ready?" I asked.

"For what?" he replied.

"For dinner. I'm starved."

"They don't eat dinner here until 9:30 or 10 o'clock."

"Get real! Hamsters eat at 9:30 or 10 o'clock at night."

"I'm telling you, it's the custom."

"I can't wait that long or I'll be too bloated to go."

Without so much as a glance, he went to his suitcase and got a Baggie of raisins. He smacked his lips and went back for a box of crackers shaped like little goldfish and polished them off.

Around 8:30, he sat right in front of me and chewed on a furry apricot and washed it down with a cup of instant bouillon.

"You remind me of someone and I can't put my finger on it," I said.

Ignoring me, he scarfed down a hermetically sealed beef jerky.

"I got it!" I said. "Shelley Winters' husband in "The Diary of Anne Frank' ... the one who stole food at night and refused to share."

"Revenge is sweet," he said.

How would I know?

No Longer 'The San Francisco Treat'

By BRUCE HOROVITZ

c) 1987, Los Angeles Times

The makers of Rice-A-Roni have pulled an end-a-roni on the city of San Francisco.

After nearly three decades of identifying their rice side dish with San Francisco, Golden Grain Macaroni Co. has dropped cable cars and city vistas from its television advertising and dumped the "The San Francisco Treat" line from its familiar jingle.

The slogan will remain on the back of a redesigned package.

Golden Grain executives insist that they have nothing against San Francisco. "It's just that the ad became so familiar that people stopped listening to it," said Sandy Posa, vice president of product management at Golden Grain.

Although annual sales of Rice-A-Roni — which exceed $100 million — spurted 10 percent last year, the company says it is trying to give the product a more contemporary edge.

The tag line on its new television commercials, which began appearing on television last week, says, "Rice-A-Roni: Who Say's You Can't Please Everyone." The new ads show scenes of such hard-to-please groupings as prison inmates and monks in a monastery, happily eating the 93-a-box product. The $12 million campaign was created by the San Francisco office of the company's recently-named ad firm, Chiat-Day.

Although developed in 1958 by Golden Grain's Chairman Vincent DeDomenico in the kitchen of his San Francisco home, Rice-A-Roni is actually produced in San Leandro, Calif., south of Oakland. The is where Golden Grain — recently acquired by Quaker Oats Co. — is headquartered.

Rice-A-Roni will continue to have a place on San Francisco's famed cable cars, but the company is far from the biggest advertiser. Kodak film and Canon cameras both run far more cable car ads, officials say.

Burlington Man Is Cop For Hot Air Balloons

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — Over this Fourth of July Weekend, Randy Cary stops being a Burlington, N.C., banker and starts being a traffic cop for hot air balloons.

During the celebrated Freedom Weekend Aloft celebration, Cary has the title of "balloonmeister."

With nearly 200 of the large, brightly colored hot air balloons in the air over Greenville in the early evenings of July 3, 4 and 5, someone has to be the whistle-blower.

Balloon racing has elements of risk and danger. The balloon pilots must be a disciplined, well-trained group who respond to someone in command — the balloonmeister.

Cary, a balloon pilot himself, briefed the balloonists in Greenville Thursday. When the series of events began the next day, Cary was responsible for deciding if weather conditions are right for flying.

"If there are thunderstorms 15 miles away and moving in our direction," Cary said, "I can call the race and keep the balloons on the ground. The balloonmeister also tells the participants how fast they can climb (not more than 200 feet a minute, for example) and how they should land."

If necessary, Cary, as the balloonmeister, also can ground a balloon after a safety inspection for any perceived infraction of safety or flying rules.

"I don't run after the balloons as they are flying to check for infractions," Cary explained, "but there are on-the-ground inspectors following the course and if they spot anything unusual or illegal, they pass it on to me."

Cary said safety inspections and adherence to prescribed flying rules are necessary, particularly when so many balloons are in the air at one time.

It is not unusual for two balloons to run against each other or 'kiss,' Cary said, but that sort of contact is extremely gentle and not too dangerous. Balloonists have to be alert, however, to obstacles such as power lines.

"And all the balloons entered in Greenville's Freedom Weekend Aloft events carry air-worthy certificates," he said. "The pilots also are licensed by the FAA. Even balloons that obviously are experimental in nature must have an experimental certificate."

Cary said the Launch Director for Freedom Weekend Aloft events wears a striped jersey like a football referee's. Balloons, Cary calls them "envelopes," are launched in two sections, red and blue with some sort of ceremonial signal such as the "Gentlemen Start Your Engines" command at the Indianapolis 500 automobile race.

The balloonmeister also decides with a competition committee what events will be programmed during the Freedom Weekend Aloft. In one possible event a "hare" balloon goes up and away 10 minutes before other balloons give chase.

The "hare" balloon travels somewhere and then on the ground puts out a 30-foot white "X." Following balloons must land as close as possible to the mark.

"I don't anticipate any trouble," Cary said, "but if I see anything at all out of line, I'll blow my whistle."

And if that doesn't work? If there is something amiss and the pilot won't come down as ordered? What then?

"That happened once," Cary admitted. "And I did what anyone else would do under the circumstances. I went after a man wearing a blue suit, a policeman."

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a businesswoman as well as a housewife and homeowner. In the last 10 days I have had to cope with the gas company, the telephone company, drapery cleaners, upholsterers and an appliance repairman.

In each case I could not get them to tell me whether they would come before noon or after noon. Today was the last straw when the drapery cleaners told me that they would pick up my draperies "sometime Thursday or Friday."

I am a working woman and cannot stay home all day Thursday and Friday waiting for something to be picked up. I told them that if they could not tell me within one and a half hours when they will arrive, I would find someone who could.

Abby, if more consumers stand up for their rights, another field of consumer exploitation will fall. Homeowners need to remember that their time has value also. Such a battle cannot be won alone, so I hope you will share this with your readers, and a new grass roots movement will get started. -- HARRIET IN PHOENIX

DEAR HARRIET: Count me in as a charter member. Readers, how many times have you lost time from work to stay at home waiting for a repair person who came three or four hours late -- or not at all? The next time that happens, do not reschedule an appointment with that company. If you have a choice, give a competitor a chance.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were married four months ago. We are both 20. It's that time of year when the grass has to be mowed. "Ron" and I both mow it.

When Ron mows, if he gets hot, he takes off his shirt. If I get hot while mowing, I take off mine. Ron says I could be arrested for indecent exposure.

Why is it acceptable for a man to take off his shirt in public, but not for a woman? None of our neighbors are at home during the daytime, and besides I don't have anything much to see anyway. -- HOT WHILE MOWING

DEAR NOT: Whether you have "anything much" to see or not is not the point. A bare-breasted woman is considered to be "indecently exposed" in public -- so better cover up with an itty-bitty bra.

DEAR ABBY: When that 16-year-old, fairly attractive female asked what to say to people who say, "Did you know you have a mustache?" you advised her to look them squarely in the eye and say, "Yes. And thank you for reminding me."

I think these dumbbells deserve something like this: Look them squarely in the eye and say, "Yes, and did you know you have a big nose?" ("a flat chest?" "a big behind?") -- FIGHT FIRE WITH FIRE

DEAR FIGHT: One who fights fire with fire risks making an ash of himself. Why go down to their level to get even?

DEAR ABBY: My parents say that when my date picks me up, he should come to the door and get me.

The guy I go with doesn't. I watch for him in the window, and as soon as his car pulls up in front of our house, I run out and get in.

I guess I will have to tell him, but I don't know what to say. Please help me. -- STARTING TO DATE

DEAR STARTING: Say, "The next time you pick me up, would you please come to the door and get me?" Explain that it's the courteous and customary thing to do. (P.S. You don't say how old he is, but if he's old enough to drive, it's time he learned one of the elementary rules of dating.)

DEAR ABBY: I have a suggestion for "Motormouth," who asked for hints on how to refrain from talking too much.

I had that problem, and I keep reminding myself of the saying. "Blessed are they who have nothing to say, and the courage not to say it." It has helped me through the years. -- IDA FROM SEQUIM, WASH.

N.C. Conservancy Schedules Series Of Nature Trips

CAMPING GEAR ONLY — A hiker wearing only his pack and hiking shoes was photographed recently arriving at the Nanthahala National Forest near Robbinsville. (AP Laserphoto by Bob Jordan)

CHAPEL HILL — The North Carolina Nature Conservancy has announced a schedule of conservancy field trips to take place in 12 nature sites in North Carolina for the time period July through October.

Each registration for a trip must be accompanied by a $5 per person, non-refundable fee — $3 for children under 12. Checks are to be made payable to the North Carolina Conservancy and mailed to: NCNC, P.O. Box 805, Chapel Hill, N.C., 27514.

Reservations will be held only when a check is received, and no advance reservations will be taken by phone. Complete information on each trip will be sent registrants at least ten days before the trip date.

Pets will be not be permitted on any of the trips.

Since experience has shown that reservations for the limited number of spaces fill quickly, interested persons are advised to register as early as possible.

Unless otherwise noted, the $5 ($3 for children) registration fee covers the cost per person for each trip.

Dates, places to be visited, and a brief description of each conservancy site follows:

• July 11-14 and July 15-18 — Bald Head Island, Brunswick County. Two four day excursions. At night a search for nesting turtles. Daytime, exploration of the maritime forest, marshes, dunes and today zone. A tour of Green Swamp Preserve on the way back. Fee is $120 per person per trip, with registration secured by a $50 deposit.

• July 18, August 15 and September 12 — Bat Cave, Rutherford and Henderson counties. Exploration of lower elevation flora, and plants and animals of the cave's twilght zone. Bat Cave is believed to be the most extensive fissure cave in North America. Moderate to strenuous hiking.

• August 15 — Green Swamp, Brunswick County — Pocosin and savannas include orchids and species of insectivorous plants and is home to red-cockaded woodpeckers and American alligators.

• August 8 and September 12 — Bluff Mountain, Ashe County. The mountain is home of over 400 species of wildflowers and is located on a high plateau with an unusual fen and rock outcrops. Moderate hiking.

• August 15-16 — Hammocks Beach State Park, Onslow County. Overnight camping trip to witness loggerhead turtles deposit eggs on the beach. Easy hiking, although late night walks are a must. Children welcome.

• August 22 — Carolina Bays in Hoke, Robeson and Scotland counties — Elliptical wetland communities of mysterious origin with numerous rare flora and fauna. Bays range from ponds to grasslands to open cyrpess woods. Easy hiking.

• September 19 — Carrot Island/Bird Shaol, Carteret County — Island on marsh complex across from the Beaufort waterfront. A rich habitat for various shore and wading bird, crustaceans, mollusks and coastal vegetation, also wild ponies. An additional fee of $7 per person to cover the expense of a boat trip. Easy hiking.

• September 19 — Green Swamp, Brunswick County — Savannas with colorful array of wildflowers including Blazing Star and gentians as well as Venus flytraps and sundews. An additional fee of $7.50 per person.

• September 26 — Big Yellow Mountain, Avery County. A spectacular view of the Southern Appalachians. Home to numerous rare plants including Robbin's Groundel and Gray's Lily. Moderate hiking over open grassy bald and maple/oak forest areas.

• October 10 — Bonas Defeat Gorge, Jackson County. A rugged trip, an all-day hike tour of Tuckasegee River Gorge with sculptured, water-scoured terrain. Very strenuous hiking for strong people only. Children under 12 should not attempt the hike.

• October 17 — Alligator River Refuge, Dare County — Field biologist Mike Phillips will take the group on a tour of the home of red wolves released earlier in the area. Phillips will explain the research program on the animals. Additional fee of $8.

• October 23-25 — Merchants Millpond, Gates County — Camping and canoeing weekend at the park. Camp set up Fridday evening, followed by moonlight canoeing to see beavers, frogs and owls. Saturday exploration of old growth cypress in Lassiter Swamp and the wildlife of the coastal plain community. Break camp about noon Sunday. Novice canoeing. Indicate when registering whether or not you will need to rent a canoe at the park.

In addition to trips on specific dates to the dozen conservancy areas listed above, the Nags Head Woods in Dare County is open for visitation on a continuing basis. Near Kill Devil Hill on the Outer Banks, this area offers ancient oak and hickory forests, salt marsh and fresh water ponds. Easy to moderate hiking. To arrange a visit call 441-2525.

Studies Being Made To Save Cemeteries In Old New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The dead rest in peace above the ground in this low-lying city, where the ornate tombs of 19th century cemeteries are as much a fixture on many tours as the grand homes of the Garden District and the wrought iron balconies of the French Quarter.

But the cemeteries and tombs arouse more than a tourist's casual interest among four visitors from New York. The staffers from the Columbia University Center for Preservation Research are here to develop cemetery conservation techniques for Louisiana's office of Cultural Development.

Frank Matero, director of the center, is working with staffers Shelley Sass, Amy Galanos and Glen Boornazian on the pilot project at Lafayette Cemetery No. 1 in the Garden District.

The site opened in 1832 and is still used for new entombments, which is one of the reasons it was selected for the project.

"This site shows all the degrees of deterioration," said Sass. "That's what we needed — an overview."

That overview encompasses not only a broad time frame, but also differences in maintenance that each tomb received.

Some of the structures were maintained well, others are near collapse, Sass said. Some tombs show signs that inexperienced caretakers tried to stop the deterioration at the expense of the monument's original design or purpose, she said.

Restoring old cemeteries is important, Sass said, because they are records of an area's history.

For example, she said, many of the burials at Lafayette No. 1 are from yellow fever epidemics that hit the city in 1878 and 1905. Other tombs are for confederate soldiers.

Matero said the state hopes that his group's project will generate more local work in cemetery conservation. "It should be seen as a statewide issue," he said.

Barbara Bacot, who helped coordinate the project through the state's Office of Cultural Development, agreed. "Preserving cemeteries is one of our priorities," she said, adding that the above-ground monuments, found as far away as Opelousas, are rare outside of Louisiana. "We have almost all of them," she said.

Matero said that in addition to their historic and architectural value, Louisiana cemeteries also are aesthetically pleasing and could become bigger tourist attractions.

Since early May, the Columbia group has cataloged the cemetery's 1,100 monuments, recording each tomb's damage and material composition. The next step is collecting samples representing the different materials and weathering conditions of the tombs. The group will chemically treat the samples and then match treatments with specific materials and types of weather damage.

Sass said the Lafayette cemetery has monuments made of the usual brick and stucco with a marble nameplate, as well as rarer styles that are all marble or cast iron.

The monuments show varied effects of weathering, with the shapes and patterns of the marble nameplates affected by factors such as wind, rain, temperature or the way the sunlight hits the tomb.

Save Our Cemeteries, a local private preservation organization, plans to publish results of the Columbia study. Columbia is paying a little more than half of the $32,000 price tag for the study. The state Office of Cultural Development is paying for the rest.

Bacot said the group's work will benefit families or local historical societies that want to save cemeteries but aren't sure what conservation techniques are best for a specific tomb.

That is especially important, she said, at a time when the state is suffering financially.

"Since we no longer have the funds for actual preservation," she said, "we thought a guide on how to do it would be valuable."

Betsy Drake Lewis' Decorating Tips

Today, one can design in almost any fashion one wants. Pieces with a sculptured look are on the leading edge of present furniture design. The strength of the market in upholstery is in three words: Dressy, plush and transitional. The boundaries between styles are not clear cut any more.

For instance, in the past, a skirt translated as a traditional style motif. Now it may be used as part of a contemporary or transitional design. There used to be a quite a difference between contract and residential styling but that gap is narrowing and they are integrating now. "Eclectic" or "Globeclectic" which is combining the motifs of furniture styles from around the world is the way of the future; a little English, French, Italian, Oriental and Scandanavian, for example. The key to the future is revitalizing the purities of the past and transforming them into the present and the future. A prime example is handmade oriental rugs from different countries. American consumers' passion for design details, I feel, will only be enriched with elements from around the globe. This is one of the reasons Betsy Drake Interiors has been so successful and has won wide public acceptance; our store is unique with an individual look from around the world.

Cambodia, A Land Of Contrasts

By DENIS GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Markets bulge with produce, shining mopeds purr along broad boulevards and finishing touches are being put on a satellite ground station.

Phnom Penh is no longer the ghost town it became after the communist Khmer Rouge took over the country in 1975, killing people by the hundreds of thousands and banishing thousands more to the countryside.

More than 700,000 people live in the Cambodian capital now, but not all can afford the produce in the markets or ride a new moped in this city of contrasts.

In alleys behind the tended thoroughfares festers a medieval world of squealing pigs and children scrambling among rotting garbage, where unsanitary conditions breed such deadly diseases as cholera.

Cambodia today also is a country of contrasts — of progress here and poverty and backwardness there.

In the countryside, kilns again are producing bricks for warehouses and schools — among the first solid structures to rise in rural areas in nearly two decades. Villagers pool resources to restore their Buddhist temples, ravaged wholesale by Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge, ousted in 1979 by the Vietnamese who installed a Cambodian communist government of their choosing.

New fields are being put under plow and officials say self-sufficiency in food is in sight. Although yield remains among the lowest in the world, the vital production of rice reportedly has soared from 170,000 tons in 1979 — now known as "Year Zero" — to last year's 2.2 million tons.

But mostly the countryside is a landscape of flimsy thatch huts and skinny cows, pitted roads and useless irrigation canals, provincial towns where the bullet holes of past battles have yet to be patched up. The charming villages of teak houses on stilts have all but vanished, probably never to be replaced.

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) says that of every 1,000 babies born, 216 will die by the age of 5 — the second highest child mortality rate in Asia after Afghanistan and 19th globally.

One reason is malnution. Although it may not lead to death, it can lead to diseases that cause death.

Another reason is the lack of medical care and facilities.

In Takeo province, for example, three doctors care for 580,000 people, said administrators of the provincial hospital, which recently acquired its first ambulance.

Such contrasts of progress and suffering cut across almost all aspects of life in Cambodia eight years after the Vietnamese invaded.

There appears to have been neither "a glorious rebirth," as the regime claims, nor a sinking into impotence and total domination by the Vietnamese as Cambodia's enemies assert.

Cambodia today is still burdened with the vast physical destruction of the 1970-75 war between the Khmer Rouge and the U.S.-backed Lon Nol government, and the ensuing ultra-revolution of the victorious Pol Pot Communists in which hundreds of thousands perished and Phnom Penh was emptied of its citizens.

On the brink of mass famine following the Vietnamese invasion in late 1978, Cambodia since has been plagued by a guerrilla war between the Vietnamese and Cambodian resistance groups, among them the Khmer Rouge.

"We are all amputees," a Cambodian man recently remarked sadly to a Western doctor. The two were watching a group of amputees — victims of Cambodia's latest conflict — but the doctor said the man was conveying the broader feeling that the war and revolution has cut into virtually every family in this country of 7 million people.

In the face of such trauma, ruin and international isolation, some outside observers say they are impressed with the infrastructure the Phnom Penh government has been able to lay down to date.

"I feel this country is committed to moving ahead," said Marcello Bevacqua, the UNICEF chief in Cambodia. "With the little help received, they have performed miracles."

He pointed to a program aimed at immunizing 80 percent of all children under age 1 against six diseases by the year 1990. The campaign, he said, was already well ahead of schedule.

Beginning from scratch in 1979 — the Khmer Rouge had closed all schools — the government has put 2 million students into classrooms staffed by more than 50,000 teachers, according to the Ministry of Education. It adds, however, that instructional materials are in short supply and teacher training is rudimentary.

Although the government holds socialism as its goal, it has left much of the economy and agriculture in private hands.

A wide range of consumer goods is available, much of it smuggled from neighboring Thailand. But not everyone can afford them.

The average monthly salary of civil servants and many other Cambodians is 250 riel, the equivalent of $31 at the official exchange rate, or $2 at the black market rate.

On the free market, where most goods are available and where the value of the riel is pegged to the black market rate, a pair of shoes can cost as much as four months' wages. A kilogram (2.2 pounds) of pork is 100 riel.

Larger-scale infrastructure, which the state controls, remains weak. Restored factories, producing the bare necessities, must cope with daily power outages and lack of spare parts for machines, some of which date back to the 1930s.

With meager exports, the economy as a whole remains on the dole. A Ministry of Planning official, Hul Lim, says exports are equivalent to about 20 percent of the country's imports.

The only major aid projects have come from the Soviet Union and include a satellite ground station that now links Cambodia by telephone to the outside world for the first time since 1975.

The international aid community, which in 1979 rushed in to save a shattered Cambodia from hunger and disease, has whittled its support to some $20 million a year. It is represented in Phnom Penh by 20 international and Western volunteer agencies, which in turn receive little funding for their Cambodian operations since Western governments do not recognize Cambodia's current government.

"A more developed country would probably be down and out if it had gone through the same experiences as Cambodia," one international aid official said. "But Cambodia was and is a sarong and rice bowl society. It can get by on very little."

EDITOR'S NOTE — Denis D. Gray, bureau chief for The Associated Press in Thailand, covered Cambodia during the Indochina War and visits the country from his base in Bangkok from time to time.

Chinese Restore Marco Polo Bridge

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

WANPING, China (AP) — An old bridge with 200 stone lions adorning its sides and acclaimed by Marco Polo 700 years ago as a world marvel is being renovated by the Chinese in hopes that modern-day travelers will add it to their tours.

It is commonly known as the Marco Polo Bridge because of what the Venetian traveler said about it.

"Over this river there is a very fine stone bridge," he wrote. "So fine, indeed, that it has very few equals in the world."

The bridge was completed in 1193 after four years of construction and Marco Polo crossed it a century later on his travels in 13th century China.

But the bridge is a landmark to the Chinese today for another reason: it is the place where the Chinese-Japanese war began 50 years ago on July 7, 1937, in what is known as the Marco Polo Bridge Incident.

The 740-foot-long bridge's renovations were made to coincide with the 50th anniversary of the conflict.

Down the street from the bridge, meanwhile, workmen are completing the People's Anti-Japanese War Museum, a massive 58,320-square-foot structure to be filled later this year with objects documenting the incident and the ensuing struggle against Japan. Museum curator Guo Jingxing maintained that the museum is not intended to be anti-Japanese. "Japanese also had casualties and they should remember it as well," he said.

But for Japan, the anniversary comes at a particularly bad time, because relations with China are at their shakiest in years over economic relations and for what the Chinese call Japan's ambiguous stance toward Taiwan, seat of the rival Nationalist Chinese government.

The Marco Polo Bridge Incident began while Japanese troops were on maneuvers near the bridge, 12 miles west of Beijing and adjacent to the last rail route into the city not controlled by Japan.

(The Japanese had been in northern China since their victory in the 1905 Russo-Japanese War.)

The Japanese, claiming one of their soldiers was missing, tried to enter Wanping to look for him but were resisted by Chinese troops.

The battle, involving about 3,000 men, went on for three days, with Japan failing to take Wanping. Before talks on settling the dispute were completed, Japan's Kwangtung Army poured troops southward through the Great Wall, and reinforcements were sent to north China from Japan.

By the end of July, Beijing and Tianjin in the north were in Japanese hands. By October, Japan had overrun Shanghai after bloody street-fighting, and in December, Japanese troops entered the fallen Nationalist capital of Nanking.

In the next eight years, before the Allied victory in the Pacific in August 1945, more than 1.3 million Chinese died in battle against Japan. Millions more died of disease, hunger and other consequences of war.

Among the trickle of recent tourists to the bridge, however, are many Japanese. Zhang Fenfu, a 36-year-old local photographer whose grandmother witnessed the bridge incident, said the Japanese visitors bear no ill-feelings, particularly the young.

"The Japanese who have come in recent years have expressed friendship, and there is no anti-Japanese sentiment (among Chinese)," he said.

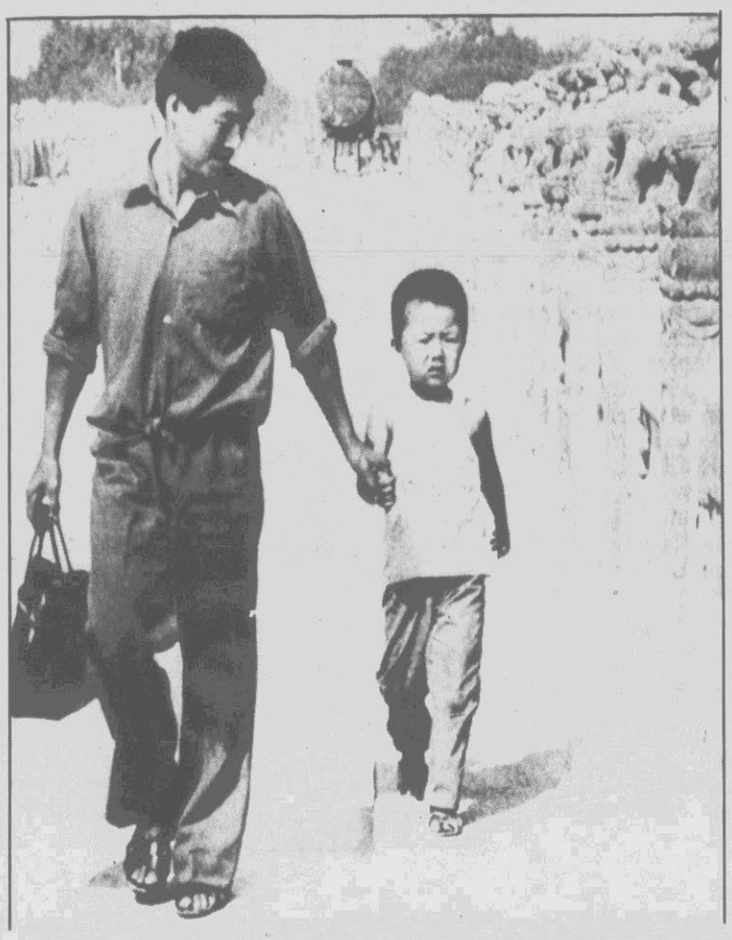
The local district, which has received 20 million yuan ($5.4 million) for the museum and 4 million yuan ($1.1 million) to restore the bridge, is hoping to turn the bridge into a major tourist attraction.

There are plans for forest areas, hotels, an old-style village and even a racetrack in the next decade.

The bridge's 11 arches now span a now-dry Yongding River, which flooded in 1698 and seriously damaged it. It was rebuilt shortly afterward only to be enlarged by the Communists after they took over China in 1949 to a width of 40 feet so it could handle cars and trucks.

Now it is being returned to its original width of 30 feet and limited to pedestrian traffic.

There is one other addition — a stone pedestal at the entrance bearing with the inscription, "Here is the spot where the national struggle against Japan began."



HISTORIC BRIDGE — A Chinese father and his five-year-old son cross the famed Marco Polo Bridge in Wanping, China under the gaze of stone lions similar to the ones Venetian adenturer Marco Polo reported seeing in the 13th century. The Chinese government has recently restored the historic span, which was the site on July 7, 1937 of clashes between Japanese and Chinese forces. China considers the bridge incident the start of the Sino-Japanese war. (AP Laserphoto by Neal Ulevich)

Vanilla Again A Favored Flavor

By DONALD J. FREDERICK
National Geographic News Service

HUNT VALLEY, Md. — "Things are humming these days in vanilla corner," says Gregg Hart of McCormick & Co. Inc., a major producer of spices and flavorings.

He points out a bank of seven large, green, stainless-steel tanks along one wall of the company's extract plant. A murky, dark brown liquid splashes behind the small, porthole-like windows on the front of each tank.

"The tanks function much like home coffee makers," Hart explains. "But what we have percolating is a mixture of crushed vanilla beans, alcohol, and water that will eventually be transformed into vanilla extract. Our tanks operate most of the year."

Importers and manufacturers have been working overtime to satisfy America's growing apetitie for real vanilla. The chemical structure of the vanilla bean is so complex that not all the components that contribute to its distinct flavor and aroma have yet been identified.

The irrestible flavoring comes from a small, yellowish-green orchid, the only one of thousands of orchid species that produces edible fruit. More than 90 percent of the worlds vanilla comes from Madasgascar and the Comoro Islands, in the Indian Ocean, and from Indonesia.

U.S vanilla-bean imports last year totaled 1,100 tons valued at more than $58.5 million, compared with 817 tons valued at $47.5 million in 1985.

Chat Nielsen Jr., president of Nielsen-Massey Vanillas, a manufacturer in Lake Forest, Ill., attributes the surge in imports in recent years to the explosive growth of the gourmet ice cream industry, which uses only real vanilla. "Sales of artificially flavored vanilla products have been flat," he says.

Vanilla accounted for almost a third of the record 924 million gallons of ice cream produced in the United States last year. "We give them all these flavors, and they still prefer vanilla," says Becky Davenport of the International Ice Cream Association. "There are still a lot of purists out there."

But vanilla does a lot more than sell ice cream. It flavors baked goods and colas, adds aroma to perfumes, and gives a special taste to some liqueurs. "One of our more offbeat customers is a big tobacco company," says Nielsen. "I think they scent some of their pipe mixtures with vanilla."

Vanilla even finds its way into many products flavored by its major taste competitor, chocolate. The happy marriage of vanilla and chocolate was consummated by the Aztecs of Mexico, who concocted a drink that blended vanilla pods and cocoa beans long before the first Europeans arrived in the New World.

Sixteenth-century Spanish conquistadores returned samples of vanilla to the Old World, where the flavoring eventually became a hit on its own.

England's Queen Elizabeth I doted on vanilla. Other 17th-century Europeans valued it for more than its taste, using the bean to treat indigestion, headaches, and "anemic and exhausted young women."

Thomas Jefferson is credited with beginning America's love affair with vanilla. He was so taken with its fragrance and flavor that he brought a supply of vanilla beans from France in 1789, when he returned to Philadelphia, one of the new nation's temporary capitals. The town was soon abuzz with stories of his exotic desserts.

Europeans hoping to capitalize on the vanilla craze smuggled cuttings out of Mexico in the 18th century, but with little success. Despite the best efforts of horticulturists, the orchids stubbornly refused to bear fruit. Dark rumors of a curse by Montezuma haunted the plant.

The real breakthrough occured in 1841, when a former slave from the French island of Reunion, in the Indian Ocean, perfected a method of hand-pollinating the vanilla-producing orchids. Plantations soon sprang up on Madagascar and other nearby islands.

Hand pollination of thousands of blooms, which open over a two-month period, starts a process that makes vanilla one of the world's most labor-intensive agricultural products. Curing alone takes three to six months.

Giacometti Family, A Dynasty Of Artists

By JAVIER PICHARDINI
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — An exhibition of 200 works by members of the Giacometti family, many never before seen outside of Europe, emphasizes the diverse talents of this artistic dynasty.

The exhibition includes pieces by Giovanni Giacometti, his second cousin, Augusto, and sons Alberto and Diego. Alberto was the sculptor and painter who was known for his bronze sculptures of elongated bodies.

The Giacomettis are possibly the last in what was once a common tradition in art. Perhaps the only comparable 20th-century artistic dynasty is that of the four Duchamp siblings — Marcel Duchamp, Raymond Duchamp-Villon, Jacques Villon and Suzanne Crotti — in France.

Earlier artistic dynasties included Bruegel, the Flemish landscape painters; Tiepolo, the Italian artists headed by the Venetian painter Giovanni Battista Tiepolo who was famous for his frescos; and Guardi, a family headed by the Venetian landscape painter, Francesco Guardi.

Giacometti's surviving son, Bruno, played a key role in the development of the exhibition, put together by French art critic Pierre Schneider for the new Cultural Center of Contemporary Art in Mexico City.

"The family factor sometimes acts as a game of mirrors and other times as a prism that reflects and detours the art they practice, disassociating and reassociating their elements, making them bounce," Schneider wrote in the exhibition catalog.

The exhibition emphasizes the family name as well as the importance of Stampa, the Giacometti home in the Swiss valley of Bregaglia near the Italian border.

"It was very difficult to put together all these works by the Giacomettis, since they are dispersed around the world," said Carlos Mendez, a researcher at the cultural center, in an interview.

The "Giacometti Family" exhibit features photomurals of Bregaglia by the Swiss photographer Ernst Scheidegger. The pictures have pronounced horizontal and vertical views of the place where the Giacomettis kept a summer home.

The most famous Giacometti without a doubt was Alberto, who was born in 1901 and died in 1966 in Coire, Switzerland. His tight and thin vertical figures dominate the exhibition.

He created bronze sculptures in cubist and surrealistic styles in the 1920s and '30s, then returned to figurative forms in the '40s which he emphasized even more in his later years.

"The scenery of Bregaglia plays a deep relationship with Alberto's sculpture," Mendez said.

More than half of the works in the exhibition are his paintings, sculptures and drawings. Also on display are photographs of him taken by Henri Cartier-Bresson, Brassai and Man Ray.

Only 10 paintings by Giovanni are included in the exhibition. They emphasize his artistic sophistication as well as his sense of family and place. Giovanni was born in 1868 and died in 1933.

There are about 50 pieces by Diego, which show strength but also some weakness in the family dynasty in comparison with his successful brother. Diego was most known for the fantasy-oriented furniture he began to design in 1950, incorporating animal and vegetable life into cast iron objects for practical use.

His hat rack with graceful arcs of tree branches and a perch for an owl serves as the logo for the show.

Diego, who was born a year after Alberto, worked with his brother in Paris in 1925. At first, he was an assistant. Later, they collaborated on decorative objects. He died in 1985.

Augusto, who lived from 1877 to 1947, is represented by two abstract paintings suggesting the trends at the turn of the century that reached Stampa and played an early influence on Alberto.

The architecture of Bruno is also discussed in the exhibition.

The Cultural Center of Contemporary Art was opened last year by the private Televisa broadcast and entertainment company in what had been constructed as a press center for the 1986 soccer World Cup.

Televisa previously had operated the Rufino Tamayo Museum of modern art but turned it back over to government control after the artist for which it is named complained that his collection was being shortchanged.

The director of the new cultural center, Robert Littman, ran the Rufino Tamayo Museum and the Grey Art Gallery and Study Center in New York.

Schneider, who represents Televisa in Europe, knew Alberto Giacometti and has appeared in a series of interviews with him.

The Giacometti exhibition moves next to Barcelona, Spain.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By MEREDITH FOLTZ

Many books published in recent years have examined the creation of the United States Constitution in 1787 and the controversies that have arisen from that instrument of government in the subsequent 200 years. Sheppard Memorial Library has a sampling of the literary outpouring which has celebrated the Constitution's bicentennial.

"Are We to Be a Nation?" by Richard Bernstein, is a thorough, well-illustrated examination of the events and circumstances which engendered the Constitution. This book analyzes the shortcomings of the Confederation arrangement, reviews the philosophies of influential American politicians of the time, sets out the issues facing the Constitutional Convention, describes the ratification period and ends with a report of the early days of constitutional government and the addition of the Bill of Rights.

"A More Perfect Union," by William Peters, focuses on the 55 men who crafted the Constitution during the May-September convention. The personal convictions and regional interests of the delegates are presented in the words of their own floor speeches and writings. A postscript chapter sketches the later lives (some of them scandalous) of the convention delegates.

"The Genius of the People," by Charles Mee, also concentrates on the personalities of the Constitution's framers and their lively day-to-day interaction during the summer of 1787. Mee detects, within that assembly of diverse delegates, two loose coalitions which he calls the party of liberty and the party of order.

"How Free Are We?" by John Sexton, looks at the way the Constitution has been used and changed in its 200 years. Much of the book is devoted to discussing what the Constitution says we can and cannnot do. This section addresses the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Constitution regarding such issues as school prayer and the right to die.

Other notable books soon to be in the Sheppard Library collection are Mortimer Adler's "We Hold These Truths: Understanding the Ideas and Ideals of the Constitution" and Michael Kamen's "A Machine That Would Go of Itself: the Constitution in American Culture."

Poet Transforms True Life Into Poetry

By DEB RICHARDSON-MOORE
Greenville Piedmont

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — A special segment of Bettie Sellers' full life is reserved for the coffee room, 7 a.m. weekdays.

And Bettie Sellers definitely counts the conversation. The coffee-fortified dialogue of her colleagues produced tales that under Mrs. Sellers' tutelage have become boldly stroked portraits of the people of the north Georgia mountains. And those portraits are the material from which five books of poetry have been made.

One morning, just for instance, the registrar mentioned that his grandmother's name had been Laura Lenora Queen Victoria Stanfield Brown. Mrs. Sellers had a high old time with that one: When Laura Lenora etc. etc. died, leaving a husband and 12 children, the gravestone carver recorded her name, then wearily laid down his chisel and declared: that name's enough.

"I do reckon
Ever soul
in the county know'd she were a good woman and sore in need of the rest."

In the beginning, she was the quintessential wife and mother of the mid-20th century, marrying at 19, having two babies right off, staying home while her art professor husband moved the family to various colleges around the state. But the bridge games of faculty wives bored her, and she rebelled: She worked in an English degree around diapers and science projects, then a master's degree in nine months of afternoons (during which her college freshman daughter watched over baby No.3)

In those years, when mothering had to come first, Mrs. Sellers would awake each day at 5 a.m. and write until time to rouse the household two hours later. Five books were written that way, five books before 7 a.m. And they were pronounced good.

She became something of a regional celebrity, invited to workshops and readings and schools all over, "a tap-dancing poet," according to Bennie Lee Sinclair, South Carolina's poet laureate and head of the Governor's School writing program in Greenville. By that, she means a poet who is also a performer, who delights in reading her material, who can explain and laugh and bring to exuberant life to her already stirring poems.

Occasionally, her poems are experiences etched very painstakingly, sometimes very painfully, into words.

The title poem of "Liza's Monday," her most recently published book, deals with a 19th-century wife and mother who commits suicide by climbing a mountain in December to freeze to death. Only, as Mrs. Sellers explains, that wasn't based on a long-ago story. It is exactly what a good friend did six years ago.

"I couldn't write about her," Mrs. Sellers says. "I was just too close. ... But then one night I woke up, and she had turned into Liza and had lived 100 years before. I could deal with it that way."

And while it's always dangerous to assume that a narrator's voice is the poet's own, occasionally Mrs. Sellers does draw from her own life. In "Three Women Named Rebecca" (from "Morning of the Red-Tailed Hawk") she deals with the loss of children by her pioneer grandmother, her own mother and herself. It concludes:

"Days I keep busy, but nights I relive two women, one in homespun, one in blue, searching down hospital corridors for my children who flowed out like blood, too small to call by any name.
Two women named Rebecca come at night to hold my hands. They know:
eight years or two was better than no child at all."

Tragedy or comedy, old tale or new pain, she writes them all. Like a Greek scholar. Like a good ol' country gal.

NEH Award To Nischan

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Dr. Bodo Nischan, a professor of history at East Carolina University, is one of 210 American scholars nationally who have received National Endowment for the Humanities stipends for the summer of 1987.

The grant to Nischan will be for continued research work on his project, "The Second Reformation in Brandenburg: Continuity and Change."

The NEH stipends are for $3,500 to each of the recipients, and are to be used for projects in history, literature, philosophy and other humanities disciplines.

The 210 scholars selected for this summer's awards were selected from a field of 1,421 applications received in a nationwide competition.

Nischan is the only scholar from East Carolina University to receive one of the NEH awards.

Eight others in North Carolina colleges and universities were awarded stipends — three from Duke University; two from North Carolina State University, and one each from Mars Hill College, Wake Forest University and UNC-Greensboro.

History Of Theater In Posters

By MARILYN AUGUST
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — A geometric horse, white on black, announced Peter Shaffer's Tony award-winning "Equus." A menacing hand in blood red signaled "Frankenstein." And a pair of gold-rimmed glasses told theatergoers about "Lennon."

These and 100 other arresting images created by American graphic artist Gilbert Lesser are on display at the Decorative Arts Museum. It is a main arts attraction as the tourist season begins in Paris.

For millions of theatergoers across the United States, posters of "The Glass Menagerie," "The Elephant Man" and "Amadeus" evoke some of Broadway's most memorable shows. For the French, the posters are an introduction to the American minimilism that rarely appears in the commercial art they see here.

If Lesser's designs are powerful, it's because they are simple and play on a bold mix of red and blue, such as "FDR," the striking portrait of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Lesser, 52, an art director at Life who was responsible for creating the magazine's new look, made his Broadway debut with "Equus" — a poster done in black and white.

"That was the only poster that ever ran without credits," he said in an interview. "Why? Simply because when I drew it, I didn't know you had to leave room for them. Thank God the producers liked the design just the way it was."

His first Broadway poster was something of an accident. He and Shaffer were old friends and Shaffer asked him to design the billboard for "Equus."

"I'd never done it before," Lesser said. "In fact, I'd never even thought of doing it before."

Lesser, who went to the Maryland Institute, College of Art and Johns Hopkins University, was always fascinated by theater. He played in summer stock and moved to New York where he did costume and set design.

"Poster art combines my love of art and the theater," he said.

Lesser has made more Broadway show posters than any other artist. But he avoids musicals because the light, breezy style doesn't suit him. He also is incapable of making posters for plays he doesn't like.

"The image for the poster comes while I'm reading the script. It's really a gut reaction and it usually comes immediately. Either it's there, or it isn't, and unless I have that one image that sums up the play, I don't do it," he said.

The exception was Arthur Miller's "The Price," a play so complex and rich that he came up with three totally different designs, each one competing in his head.

"The problem was choosing among them. Because the play had so many layers of meaning, they were all right," he said.

If Lesser had listened to his art teachers he might never have become a professional artist. "They all said I was a terrible drawer and they said I'd never be an artist," the Baltimore native recalled.

"I'll never forget, they hung Frankenstein's giant red hand in Times Square. There were thousands of people watching. That was one of the most thrilling moments of my life," he said.

Only a few of his posters are for sale. Some of the originals can be had at prices ranging from $50 to $7,500.

The show runs through August 31.

History Of Ambulance Service Shown On British Issue

By STEVE PEARCE
British Post Office

St. John Ambulance has fulfilled a vital role in caring for Britain's sick and injured during the past 100 years.

It's tasks have been many and varied, from caring for critically-wounded soldiers from the battlefields of France and civilians injured during the blitz, to tending hysterical teen-agers at pop concerts, or spectators overcome at major sports events.

The Royal Mail on June 16 issued four special stamps which capture the essence of the changing role of St. John Ambulance since the brigade was founded in 1887. The stamps are in values of 18 pence, 22 pence, 31 pence and 34 pence. They were designed by freelance illustrator Debbie Cook of Southeast London, England.

The brigade is celebrating its centenary this year, but the origins of the St. John Ambulance service date back to the Most Venerable Order of St. John, founded in Jerusalem more than 800 years ago. Its original task was to care for pilgrims and the sick, but with the start of the Crusades it developed a military role in defense of Christian kingdoms in the Holy Land.

This continued until 1798, first in the Holy Land, and later in Cyprus and Rhodes — which the Order ruled for 200 years — and finally in Malta, which they ruled until its capture by Napoleon. It was then that the Order of St. John returned to its humanitarian work for which it has become acknowledged throughout the world.

A major step forward for the St. John Ambulance movement came with the signing of the first Geneva Convention in 1864, followed by the formation of an international voluntary aid movement. One of the main tasks of this movement was to train a neutral ambulance reserve to provide essential back-up for hard-pressed military medical services.

The first commissioner of this organization, the British Society for Aid to the Sick and Wounded, was Sir John Furley, who witnessed many examples of the appalling suffering endured by servicemen in the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-1871. He was also a member of the British Order of St. John, and his report on the war encouraged the order to reaffirm its traditional role of caring for the sick and wounded, both in war and peacetime.

The St. John Ambulance Association was officially launched in July 1877, with the task of training volunteers from all walks of life in essential first-aid. Despite legislation like the Factories Act, safety standards were often appalling in industry, on the railways and in coal mines, so the risk of civilians suffering serious injury was far higher than today.

The number of training centers mushroomed in the following few years, and by 1881 there were 132, mainly in the industrial areas of northern and central England. The growth continued and soon the association was distributing textbooks and supplies throughout the United Kingdom, as well as to many countries overseas.

In 1887, the St. John Ambulance Brigade was formed to help co-ordinate the growing number of ambulance corps formed by the association's volunteers. The brigade was formed as a civilian organization for civilian needs, and as army and navy reserves. All members had to hold the association's certificate of first aid proficiency and, because of this, the brigade began instruction courses with examinations, and introduced competitions and summer camps to stimulate interest and promote high standards.

The newly enrolled members of the brigade did not have to wait long for their first major public duty. It arrived in the same year with the vast crowds that attended Queen Victoria's jubilee celebrations.

The Boer War of 1899 to 1902 was a more daunting challenge to the St. John Ambulance movement. While the association dispatched vital medical supplies, the brigade provided nearly one in four of all Army Medical Services staff in South Africa. There the St. John members supplemented the AMS orderlies, serving in the overcrowded field hospitals and staffing ambulance trains and hospital ships.

The hard work, skills and patient care of the brigade members won widespread praise. As a result, the Army and Navy Brigade Reserves were formed — at the specific request of the War Office and the Admiralty. The reserves were mobilized at the outbreak of the First World War, and, working with the British Red Cross Society, St. John Ambulance members set up and staffed 245 auxiliary hospitals in France. By the end of the war, some 30,000 brigade personnel had seen service and more than 1,000 had lost their lives.

The movement played an even bigger role in the Second World War. By 1939, some 10,000 brigade instructors were at work, training more than a million people — including civilians, servicemen and women, and even prisoners of war — in first aid and home nursing. Some 50,000 St. John Ambulance volunteers were seconded to the Home Guard, and provided a vital function in covering for the severely-stretched emergency services at the height of the blitz.

The role of the brigade has changed during the last century, and today members are trained to cope with contingencies far beyond that expected of their Victorian counterparts, from drug abuse cases and hysterical pop fans to providing medical care at major football matches.

One of the most recent developments concerns the Aeromedical Service or Air Wing, an entirely voluntary team of pilots, flight controllers, mechanics and other key personnel which has the vital task of transporting urgent medical supplies — such as human organs for transplants or plasma for blood transfusions — from remote parts of the UK and even overseas to wherever in Britain they are needed in an emergency.

As overseas travel has become easier and much more popular, the Air Wing has also taken on the tasks of flying home British holidaymakers and other trippers who are taken ill or injured while abroad, using either scheduled airline flights or specially equipped air ambulances.

The Air Wing is marked by the 34 pence stamp, and as a special service to help the vital work of the life-saving transplant teams, the Royal mail is to distribute nearly one million donor cards in an effort to find more people prepared to become donors. The cards will be inserted into presentation packs of the stamps, available at most post offices in Britain, and also given out with the first day covers over most British post office counters.

By signing the card and carrying it with them at all times, donors will be helping to overcome a severe shortage which prevents many life-saving operations from being carried out.

The stamps were designed by 28-year-old London-based freelance illustrator Debbie Cook. She spent three months researching and working on the designs, which are her first work for the Post Office.

Debbie studied illustration at Maidstone College of Art in Kent, England, and set up he own business seven years ago. Her work to date has included illustrating magazines, books and brochures.

Islamic Iranian Stamps Continues A Tradition

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

The Middle East country of Iran, most commonly known as Persia until 1935, has traditionally honored the nation's and the past Persian Empire's poets, philosophers, writers and artists on postage stamp issues, particularly famous men who achieved notable success several centuries in the past.

Dozens of illustrious personages were philatelically honored during the reigns of the late Mohammed Riza Pahlavi and his father, the Riza Shah Pahlavi.

This practice has been continued to a lesser degree since the overthrow of the Shah of Iran in 1979 and the establishment of the Islamic Republic of Iran.

A large number of stamps issued by the Islamic Republic have, predictably, depicted contemporary political and religious figures. Other stamps commemorate the revolution, Iranian heroes who lost their lives in the revolution, an ongoing campaign to liberate Jerusalem, the take over of the U.S. Embassy in 1983, and several propaganda issues urging the populace to work for victory in the continuing war with Iraq.

Despite the heavy postal concentration on war and political issues, the Islamic Republic of Iran has, on a scaled-down level, carried on the tradition of honoring famous men of the past.

One of the most surprising issue has been the 1982 single stamp depicting the "Glorification of Jesus Christ."

Other persons honored by the Islamic Republic of Iran on single commemorative issues have been the mathematician Ghyath-al-din Jamshid Kashani on the 600th anniversary of his death; the birth centenary of Dehkhoda, editor of the Iranian dictionary; the noted 13th century Persian poet Mosharref od-Din ibn Mosleh od-Din Sa'di, issued in conjunction with an International Sa'di Congress, and the 1000th death anniversary of writer Ash-Sharif Ar-Radi.

Unlike the U.S. ruling against the importation of postal material from Cuba and Vietnam, the stamps of the Islamic Republic of Iran continue to be legally acceptable for import into the United States.

New Stamps In The News

Transportation comes in many forms — from boats to trains — and from automobiles to bicycles.

The theme of "Milestones in Transportation" is aptly portrayed in a new set of 10 commemorative stamps by Antigua and Barbuda, islands in the West Indies that gained independence from Britain in 1981.

First, there are boats:

— The 10-cent stamp depicts the Spirit of Australia, which became the world's fastest powerboat in 1978. The jet-propelled hydroplane hit an official record speed of 319.627 mph.

— The 30-cent illustrates the U.S.S. Triton. In 1960, the Triton became the first submarine to circumnavigate the globe.

— The 60-cent depicts the U.S.S. New Jersey, currently the world's largest battleship. It was commissioned during World War II and also saw action during the Vietnam War.

— The 90-cent shows the S.S. United States. In 1952, the S.S. United States recorded the fastest crossing of the Atlantic Ocean. It covered the 2,942 nautical miles in three days, 10 hours and 40 minutes.

— The highest value, $3.00, depicts the Queen Elizabeth 2, launched in 1969 as the world's most luxurious ocean liner.

Second, there are trains:

— The 15-cent shows the 1879 Siemen's locomotive, the world's first electric locomotive train.

Third, automobiles:

— The 50-cent features the 1801 Treveithick model, claimed to be the first automobile to carry passengers. This steam carriage was demonstrated for the first time in London, England, on Dec. 24, 1801.

Fourth, bicycles:

—The 70-cent pictures the Draisine, built in 1818 as the first steerable bicycle.

Fifth, planes:

— The $1.50 shows the 1923 Cierva C-4, the first autogiro. The autogiro was the forerunner of the helicopter.

— The $2.00 portrays the Curtiss NC.4 which in 1919 completed the first trans-Atlantic flight.

Young Musicians Attending ECU Band Camp In Concert On Campus At 6:30 Today

A concert by music students in the East Carolina University Summer Band Camp will be held Sunday at 6:30 p.m. in front of A.J. Fletcher Music Center just off East Tenth Street.

The program will feature a variety of traditional band music performed by the four camp bands. Among selections to be performed will be part of Richard Rodgers' "Victory At Sea"; a march by a German composer arranged by Bob Watson, a graduate student in the ECU School of Music"; selections from Meredith Wilson's "Music Man" and Bagley's "National Anthem March."

The performance is free and open to the public. Those attending are encourged to bring folding chairs or other items for listening comfort.

The 33rd season of the camp sponsored by East Carolina University, a two-weeks session, began on Monday and continues through Friday.

The camp offers band students an opportunity to meet and perform with other students selected on the basis of ability to attend the camp.

This year's camp includes 300 students from North Carolina and other southeastern states.

The camp is structured to give young musicians an opportunity to perform in a wide variety of musical experiences through studies and in performances with a concert band, jazz band and chamber group.

Music theory, conducting and private instrumental study is also made available to those desiring such additional activities.

The Summer Band Camp is conducted in four sections, represented by four bands named simply by color. The youngest group of musicians are assigned to the Purple Band, directed by Mike Kirby of Great Bridge High School, Chesapeake, Va. The next highest level is the Green Band, directed by Greenville's Dottie Jo Knight, followed by the Red Band, which is directed by David Rockefeller of Enloe High School, Raleigh. The Blue Band, comprised of older, more experienced students, is directed by Harold Jones of the ECU music faculty.

In addition to the music factor of the camp, students sample university campus life by living in dormitories, eating in the cafeteria and using the Mendenhall Center facilities.

Virginia Dare Celebration

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department
Of Cultural Resources

MANTEO — During August, North Carolina will mark a famous woman's birthday with a week-long celebration.

She's famous, byt we know almost nothing about her. We know only that she was born and baptized on Roanoke Island. She's Virginia Dare, whose birth in 1587 made her the first English child born in the new world.

Virginia's 400th birthday, August 1587, will mark the culmination of the observance of the 400th Anniversary of Sir Walter Raleigh's Roanoke Voyages. The celebration, beginning August 13, will conclude the four year commemoration of these beginnings of English America.

Througout the week, the celebration will include such activities as historical lectures, a memorial regatta, an N.C. Symphony concert, fireworks displays and the last day highlight: the cutting of a giant birthday cake.

Virginia's short life story has kept historians and researchers intrigued for four centuries, but her fate is as obscure today as it was in 1590 when her grandfather, John White, returned to the new world seeking the "lost colony.'

The story begins as Virginia's parents, Eleanor and Ananias Dare, set sail from England with their group of 100 men, 17 women and nine children. These would-be settlers were the second of Sir Walter Raleigh's attempts to colonize the new world. An exploratory expedition had reached the Outer Banks in 1584, and a 1585 colony had failed after a year.

The colonists in the third attempt landed July 22, 1587, on Roanoke Island in what is now Dare County. Several weeks later, Eleanor's baby arrived.

John White, governor of the colony and the baby's grandfather, suggested she be named "for this fair land to which she has come, our new home, Virginia." So the following Sunday, the first English child born in the new world was christened "Virginia Dare."

Meanwhile, the colonists were fast realizing they would need far more supplies than they had estimated. White reluctantly prepared to return to England for provisions.

Accounts say that the colonists agreed with White before his departure that if they should leave the island, they would carve the name of their destination on a tree. If they left in danger, the same signal would have a cross carved above it.

White sailed, leaving the tiny band in the wilderness. Arriving just as England faced the powerful Spanish Armada, White's ship was needed in the war effort, delaying his return to the new world.

Finally, in the spring of 1590, White was able to outfit a ship and return to "Roanoak" Island. He arrived off the coast on a night in mid-August, almost three years to the day after he'd left. Seeing only a faint light at the north end of the island, he fired a cannon. After no response, he had the trumpeter play familiar English tunes. Still no answer.

At dawn, White searched the island and found it deserted. Houses were dismantled, but pallisades remained. Buried chests had been dug up and rifled. White later wrote that the agreed-upon signal was carved on a tree "without any sign of distress."

Taking heart at "no sign of distress," White wanted to sail to the mainland camps of the Croatan Indians where he was sure he would find the colonists, but a raging storm drove the vessel out to sea. No amount of entreaty could lure the captain back once his bow pointed toward England.

Back home the grieving governor soon died, never to see his family and friends again.

The baby Virginia disappeared along with the rest of the colonists.

Legends persist. Some believe the English did indeed go to live with the friendly Croatan Indians. Some believe they were annihilated by the Indians or the hostile Spanish from the south. Others insist the settlers built a crude boat, set sail and were lost at sea.

One legend says Virginia grew into young womanhood and was changed by the sorcery of a rejected lover into a white doe. She roamed the lonely island until true love restored her to human form, only to be killed by a silver arrow shot by a cruel chieftan.

The fate of the lost colony is still unknown.

Unknown, perhaps, but eternally fascinating. The saga of Virginia Dare and the "lost colony" has been captured in story and song in Paul Green's symphonic drama, "The Lost Colony," performed every summer on Roanoke Island.

And delving into its mysteries is an important part of the celebration of the quadricentennial of the entire era of Sir Walter Raleigh's "Roanoke Voyages."

Several books and pamphlets published during the 400th Anniversary observance cover the subject — with still no concrete answers.

The 400th Anniversary celebrations began in July, 1984, with the visit of Her Royal Highness Princess Anne to Roanoke Island, and continued in 1985 with the exhibition of Elizabethan artifacts from the British Library at the N.C. Museum of History exhibit, "Great American Indian Leaders." Also, on June 10, 1986, at Hatteras, the reenactment of the lighting of a signal fire commemorated a similar event 400 years ago when weary explorers signalled Sir Francis Drake's ship, seeking passage back to England.

A permanent plaque was unveiled, marking the site.

For details about the 400th Anniversary commemoration and plans for the events of August 13-18, contact America's Four Hundreth Anniversary Committee, 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh, 27611, or telephone 733-4788.

Group Sax, Stinsons Featured In Today's Sunday In The Park

Group Sex, a sextet that specializes in the playing of bepop, the blues and jazz, will be the principal performing act in today's Sunday in the Park concert.

The late Sunday afternoon concert, which begins at 7 p.m. at the amphitheater site on the Town Common north of First Street, is open to the public free of charge. Patrons are encouraged to bring along folding chairs, pillows, etc. to promote listening comfort. Parking is not permitted along First Street, but ample parking space is available in nearby parking lots.

Group Sax has been very much in demand in the past couple of years, performing in many major festivals in the South. They have also been the opening acts for entertainers such as Chuck Mangione, Buddy Rich, Taj Mahal, McCoy Tyner and others.

A local duo, Billy and Sandra Stinson, will be featured in the opening section of today's Sunday in the Park concert.

Both are teachers at Rose High School — Billy teaches art and Sandra teaches Spanish. The two have appeared in local and area performances on numerous occasions. They were a featured act in the first Sunday in the Park concert season, and have performed at places such as the Greenville Museum of Art, at fourth of July festivals, and before civic clubs.

Billy will play guitar and Sandra will be the vocalist in today's program. They will present a selection of folk music and ballads, including a folk rendition of the well-known "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." Other songs on their program will be ones from the repertory of Peter, Paul and Mary and the Kingston Trio.

Sunday in the Park is funded by the City of Greenville and is coordinated and presented under the auspices of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department.

1987 Highland Games And Gathering On July 11-12

LINVILLE — The 32nd Annual Grandfather Mountain Highland Games and Gathering of Scottish Clans will be held this year on Saturday and on Sunday, July 12.

The Celtic activities will really begin on Thursday evening with a torchlight ceremony to invoke the spirit of the clans upon the games. Before the torch lighting, the Grandfather Mountain Highlanders bagpipe and the Grandfather Mountain Brass and Montreat Pipes and Drums brass choir will perform from 7 p.m. until dark.

On Friday the activities continue with a piping concert at William's Gymnasium on the campus of Lees-McRae College in Banner Elk at 7 p.m. with tickets available at the door for $2. A Ceilidh (pronounced Kay-lee) will begin at Hayes Auditorium on the campus at 8 p.m. Tickets, available first come first serve, are $5 for adults and $2 for children. A second Ceilidh is scheduled for Saturday night for the general public, while invited guests may attend the annual black-tie Tartan Ball.

The Scottish Country Dance Gala will begin at 9 p.m. at William's Gymnasium.

On Saturday at 9 a.m. the games begin in earnest at MacRae Meadows, located at the base of Grandfather Mountain on US 221 two miles north of Linville and one mile from the Blue Ridge Parkway.

Traditional highland events will include "turning the Caber," which requires athletes to flip a telephone pole sized tree-trunk end-over-end for accuracy; "tossing the sheaf", lofting a 16-pound sack of hay over a bar [illegible] than 20 feet off the ground; Highland wrestling, and other weight tosses like the Clachneart, the 22 pound hammer, 28 pound and 56 pound weights.

Dancing and piping competitions will take place all day Saturday, including the Atlantic International Open Dancing Championships. Bill Wyatt and his champion border collies will give an exhibition of sheep herding.

In addition to the Gaelic competitions, the games include a track and field meet featuring a 26-mile marathon that climbs 1,049 feet in elevation before finishing at MacRae Meadows.

Sunday activities revolve around the Gathering of the Clans. At 9:30 a.m. a Scottish worship service will begin on the meadow, featuring performances by the Grandfather Mountain Brass and Montreat Pipes and Drums.

Ceremonies will continue with the introduction of the 1987 Guests of Honor, who will be saluted with the Parade of Tartans.

Other Sunday events include professional exhibitions of highland athletics as well as amateur and junior competitions, sheep dog exhibitions, highland dancing competition, Scottish fiddling competition, and clan competitions in the Kilted Mile Run and the tug 'o'war.

Closing ceremonies are scheduled for 4 p.m.

There is no public parking at MacRae Meadows, so shuttle service is provided between the meadow and Linville and other nearby locations. Shuttle bus tickets are $2.

Tickets to the games are $8 for adults and $4 for children under 12. Pets are banned from the games for safety reasons. For more information on travelling in northwest North Carolina call the area travel office, High County Host, at 800/222-7515 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Denver Is A Mecca For Playwrights

By JULIA RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

DENVER (AP) — There was a time when ambitious playwrights, like ambitious actors, left home and went to test their mettle in New York.

In recent years, though, that's changed.

New York, fertile as ever, has become less hospitable to unproven writers. It's the regional theaters that have been luring new talent and offering them the advantages of money, audiences and appreciation.

In its seven years of existence, the Denver Center Theater Company has become a haven for new playwrights, and emerged as a wealthy young cousin to such regional theater giants as Minneapolis and Louisville, Ky.

"We want to develop work that's important enough that it spreads out and impacts the work that's being done around the country," Donovan Marley, artistic director of the company, said. "And I'm delighted that that's happening faster than I ever thought it would."

The Tony-nominated "Quilters" helped put the Center on the map. The musical by Molly Newman and Barbara Damashek premiered with the company in 1981 and went on to Broadway, where it was panned by critics and had a short run. However, it was the most-produced musical in American regional theaters in 1985-86.

"The Immigrant," by Mark Harelik, was staged at the Center in 1984 and, among other subsequent successes, broke attendance records at Los Angeles' Mark Taper Forum last fall.

Marley and Peter Hackett, associate director for new play development, have engineered a program with unparalleled resources available to young playwrights.

The annual PrimaFacie competition, which began in May 1985, calls for new scripts from around the country, and selects up to 10 for staged readings by resident actors. Last season 800 to 900 scripts were received. Playwrights have 30 hours of rehearsal with the actors and directors, giving them the chance to hammer out any kinks in their work. The readings of these works-in-progress regularly draw packed houses in Denver.

Four of those workshop plays are selected for full production by the company and inclusion in a PrimaFacie anthology of new plays.

"The new plays receive equal treatment artistically and financially with the Shaws and Shakespeares, and that makes this program different," Hackett said.

The nucleus of Denver's new play activity is the Playwrights' Unit, which was started by Hackett and playwright Peter Parnell in 1983. It provides a weekly forum for selected Colorado playwrights with the ultimate aim of developing a regional Rocky Mountain "voice."

Unit playwrights each receive a $500 honorarium and the chance to try out their works on actors in the resident company.

Newman, whose "Shooting Stars" had a successful run at the Center and is opening at Houston's Alley Theater in July, said the Playwrights' Unit is important in creating an artistic home for playwrights in Denver.

"It takes playwriting out of the solitary room with the bare bulb and brings you into a much more social situation where you can talk about the problems," she said.

Last year, two of the four new works premiered were by local, Unit members: Newman's "Shooting Stars" and Terry Dodd's "Goodnight, Texas."

But Denver's growing reputation is luring more scripts from playwrights with agents and a track record. PrimaFacie has also snared new plays by such up-and-coming playwrights as Albert Innaurato ("Gemini").

"It's a very seductive thing," said Jeff Carey, a Unit playwright. He is also the first graduate of a fledgling playwriting program offered by the Denver Conservatory which, like the Center, is an arm of the Denver Center for the Performing Arts.

Marley came to Denver in 1984 from the West Coast, attracted by the wealth of such benefactors as the Helen G. Bonfils Foundation. PrimaFacie has been funded by U.S. West.

"Development of new plays has always fascinated me, and Denver had the resources to allow it to happen," Marley said. "Developing new plays is very, very expensive and a high risk situation."

Carey contends that while it's the money that draws playwrights from around the country, when compared to theater centers such as Minneapolis, the Center hasn't really artistically earned its wings.

What it unquestionably has earned, however, is a loyal local following for new works.

UNWORLDLY — Bud Cort, best known for his role opposite Ruth Gordon in "Harold and Maude," pauses with his dog during an interview recently in Los Angeles. Cort stars as a likeable misfit named Alex West who inherits the haunted Bates Motel from the mad killer of 'Psycho" fame when NBC airs "Bates Motel" today. (AP Laserphoto by Lennox McLendon)

World Premiere Of 'The Golden Bowl' Revealed Pilobolus In A New Light

DURHAM — It's one thing to amuse audiences with magical body metaphors and collective choreography. But it's a quite different matter to translate a classic modernist novel to the stage. Yet the ever-creative Pilobolus Dance Theater, at its opening performance Wednesday night at Duke University's Page Auditorium, showed that its group method works superbly with a psychological novel.

The world premiere of "The Golden Bowl," commissioned by a Duke zoology professor and his wife, Steve and Ruth Wainright, was the evening's highlight. Loosely adapted from Henry James' 1904 novel, the new work was as close to theater as dance can get.

At first glance, James' convoluted, heavily psychological novel would seem an odd candidate for the stage. But Piolobolus has a collective genius for translating stories about group situations.

In the Pilobolus' 30-minute version, Charlotte Stant, a wealthy American woman in her late 40s, looked back on the one great love in her life. Dressed in a 1920s black bead shift, Charlotte recalled some 25 years earlier in London, when she and her husband sought the continuous company of another young couple.

Stage left, four dancers vividly dramatized the foursome, Charlotte's affair with her best friend's husband, and the moment she realized that the other three had been mutually aware of the deception all along.

Acress Jill Tanner was the sophisticated and cool yet quietly seething narrator. The two Edwardian gentlemen, played by Felix Blaska and Rick Merrill in Victorian suits, were carefully mismatched in costume color and height with their wives, danced by tiny Lisa Dalton and tall Amy Spencer.

Moments of mime acting gave way to several subtle dance scenes: the four wealthy friends melding together as one group (a typical Pilobolus tack), the supposedly secret affair, and Charlotte's final angry realization of her isolation from the others. Charlotte and her fiance danced part of a moving duet on all fours. The piano accompaniment of Paul Sullivan on stage added just the right balance of easy intimacy and gradual separation.

Pilobolus was founded in 1971 by a group of Dartmouth College classmates, taking its name from a dynamic fungus. The group has prized group choreography more than solos. In its current stage of evolution, the 11-member company has five artistic directors; Robby Barnett, Alison Chase, Michael Tracy, Jonathan Wolken and Moses Pendleton.

For the Wednesday premiere, Barnett and Ms. Chase choreographed and directed in collaboration with the five performers.

The rest of the concert offered dances performed last year by Pilobolus at the American Dance Festival. In "Monkshood's Farewell" (1974), six dancers turned into two magical creatures. To the tune of courtly medieval music, the two figures jousted and courted and slithered in slow motion — like J.R.R. Tolkien's characters.

In "Can't Get Started" (1983), a square college guy and a nerdish 1950 girl fell for one another at a big band dance. Quickly getting over their shyness, the two strangers, danced by Peter Pucci and Carol Parker, jitterbugged to the snappy sounds of Tommy Dorsey and Benny Goodman. The dance was a quick crowd-teaser.

The fourth and last dance was the two-year-old "Carmina Burana, Side 2," the record title for pulsing, highly erotic music inspired by the Middle Ages. Accompanied by hearty male voices singing Latin, bare-chested monks swung man-sized barrels-like tankards in one communal toast. Then the devil appeared in black tights and a carmine-lined cape, and an etching of boy-meets-girl flashed on a black backdrop. After a coy love duet, strange rubbery creatures, each with an extension from the shoulders like the trunk of a second body, suddenly appeared — another part of the medieval imagination. In a riveting climax of dramatic self-surrender, the men banished both the devil and the ambiguous creatures.

Pilobolus remains ever-popular with its inventive costumes, tricky body shapes and large operatic gestures. But with a tender work like "The Golden Bowl," the company proves it can also sustain a deeply private moment shared with others.

The Pilobolus program was repeated at Page Auditorium on Thursday and Friday evenings. Their appearance in Durham is part of the summer season of the American Dance Festival.

Hawaiian Dancers To Present Hula History In Durham This Week

DURHAM — Four of Hawaii's leading dance groups will perform together for the first time on the mainland when they appear at the American Dance Festival at Page Auditorium on the Duke University campus Thursday through Saturday.

Traditional Hawaiian dance is the product of hundreds of years of closely guarded tradition, with roots in religious ceremonies and rites of war.

Evolved into an art form danced by both men and women, the dance takes on the masculinity or femininity of the particular dancer. It is the story/chant of the hula that is of prime importance. The hula is based on an oral tradition and is the embodiment of the Hawaiian culture.

Hula Olapa, one form of the art and originally the providence of men, was used as a form of religious worship and honor.

Among the groups performing at ADF are Na Hula Pahu o Kauai'i, made up of three generations of Hawaiian artists; Kau'i Zuttermeister, the grandmother, was chosen in 1984 as a National Heritage Fellow by the National Endowment for the Arts. Taught her art by her uncle, Sam Pua Haaheo, she in turn has taught it to her daughter, Noe Noe Lani Zuttermeister Lewis and her granddaughter, Hauolionalani Lewis, who perform with her.

Ka Pa Hula Hawai'i, under the direction of Hula Master John Renken Kaha'i Topolinski, is an all male hula group which actively restores the art of male classical hula. He and his dance group, winners for 14 years of hula competitions, are frequently called on to perform for visiting dignitaries.

Halau Hula o Hoakalei performs various sacred and religious chants ranging from Hula Olapa, the most honored, to Hula Mai, the joyful chant which celebrates Hawaiian lovemaking.

Halau o Kekuhi with sister Pualani Kanaha'ole Kanahele and Na Lani Kanaka'ole will conclude the evening with chants telling the stories of the volcano god Pele and two of Hawaii's great rulers, Kamehameha II and Kalakaua.

Prior to Dance Hawaii, the American Dance Festival introduced Hawaiian dance to its audience when it presented the revered classical artist Iolani Luahine in 1975.

All performances are at Page Auditorium and begin at 8 p.m. They will perform the same program on all three nights. Tickets cost $10, $14 and $17 and are on sale at Page Auditorium Box Office. For information call 684-4059.

Lone Indian Congressman Is A Soft-Spoken Advocate

By SANDY JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — On the wall is a portrait of a raven-haired warrior, his profile proud and handsome, clad in the feathers, bones and colored beads of traditional Indian dress.

Sitting on the sofa is a U.S. congressman, distinguished in a gray western-cut suit, close-cropped hair graying at the temples.

The man in the portrait is the man on the sofa: Ben Nighthorse Campbell, a Northern Cheyenne Indian and a member of te House of Representatives from Colorado.

Campbell is the only Indian in the 100th Congress, and only the eighth Indian to ever reach the corridors of the nation's Capitol.

As such, he is a source of pride for the nation's 1.3 million Indians and he feels a responsibility to them.

"Because I'm the only Indian here, I've developed a quiet constituency," Campbell said. "I don't think a day goes by that at least one Indian tribe doesn't come by to see me, from South Dakota or New York or Florida."

"They know I have a special sensitivity, being of the blood you might say, and the moccasin grapevine filters out through the Indian community. They know I'm here."

Last week, leaders of the Sac and Fox tribe of Oklahoma stopped by to talk about gambling, and the Lac Vieux Desert tribe of Michigan talked with Campbell about federal recognition.

He said he won't take the lead on Indian issues nationwide ("My one vote can't fix up all the tragedies they face") but he quietly provides information about Indians to his colleagues and corrects misconceptions when they appear.

At a recent hearing on Indian-sponsored gambling, he listened to a harangue by another House member about rampant crime on Indian reservations and then retorted, "I think there's more crime in this city in one night than there is in Indian country all year long."

A slight exaggeration, but his point was made.

Campbell, born in 1933 to a Portuguese mother and a Cheyenne father, grew up in California. As an adult he moved to Colorado to ranch. But he says his "home" is among his relatives at the Cheyenne agency at Lame Deer, Mont.

"I go back two, three times a year and go Indian. It's called going back to the blanket. It means becoming Indian again," he said.

He often joins tribal ceremonies, resplendent in a 6-foot-long war bonnet with 72 golden eagle feathers, blue paint on his face, a reminder of ancestors that include a warrior named Black Horse who rode with Two Moons at Little Big Horn. There, among the Cheyenne, he is a respected member of the council of chiefs.

Here, in Washington, he is also a member of an elite corps, the U.S. House.

"I'm half white, I'm half Indian. I'm not going to abandon either side," Campbell said. "I am what God made me and I'm not going to be polarized — only the traditional Indian role or only modern role. I used to have trouble with that, a lot of half-breeds do."

Though his background is largely middle-class, he has known discrimination. He recounts an episode in Montana when he booked some motel rooms but when his companions, all Indians, joined him, the clerk suddenly remembered there were no vacancies. In Utah, he was refused service at a restaurant.

"I don't take that lying down. I raised hell and made a scene and I got somebody to serve us," he said. "I won't put up with it, very simply."

He has no love for the Reagan administration, which has cut and then cut again the federal funds that have for decades supported Indian tribes.

"There is no question in Indian country the administration is the enemy. I mean, they have devastated Indian country," he said.

Not that the reservations weren't depressed before. Eighty percent unemployment, alcoholism, drug abuse — Campbell chose to raise his children in Colorado, away from the pull downward.

He was elected twice to the Colorado House before Democratic officials persuaded him last year to take a run at GOP Rep. Mike Strang in the 3rd District. The election promptly was dubbed the "cowboy and Indian" race; one East Coast newspaper even ran photos of Strang, also a rancher, in a tall white cowboy hat and Campbell in full Indian regalia. Campbell won with 52 percent.

He is also an artist, creator of Indian-inspired silver and turquoise jewelry that earned him $20,000 last year. He makes the distinctive scarf rings he wears each day. Campbell doesn't own a tie. Though House rules require members to wear coat and tie, House Speaker Jim Wright gave him permission to wear a scarf in lieu of a tie.

In Congress, he has been struck by the slow legislative process.

"It is a virtual tug-of-war," he said. "I fully understand now why the process is so clumsy and difficult."

Campbell doesn't want to be known as the "Indian congressman."

Lumbee Drama Now Playing

PEMBROKE — "Strike at the Wind!," the outdoor drama presented annually by the Robeson Historical Drama Association, opened for the summer seaon on Saturday.

Performances will be given each Thursday through Saturdayu evening through September 5, at the Lakeside Amphitheater on the grounds of the Riverside Country Club a short distance outside Pembroke.

Seats may be reserved or tickets purchased at the gate. General admission is $5.50 for adults, $4.50 for senior citizens over 65, and $3 for children under 12.

For reservations and for more information, write: Strike at the Wind, P.O. Box 1059, Pembroke, N.C., 28372 or phone 521-2401 between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays.

A musical drama, "Strike at the Wind!" was written by Randolph Umberger, with the musical score composed by Willie F. Lowery. This year's production is directed by Clint Vaught.

The drama follows the adventures and misadventures more than a century ago of a rebellious young Lumbee Indian, Henry Berry Lowrie during the days of the Civil War. Lowrie became a legend in his lifetime, something of a Robin Hood to his fellow Lumbee Indians and an elusive thorn in the side to both Union and Confederate forces, and more especially to the white leaders of Robeson County.

The story is told in dramatic episodes, encompassing the hit and run lives of Lowrie's band as guerrilla-like, they emerged from the swamps of the Lumbee River, to strike at their enemies, gather food and disappear back into the swampland; Lowrie's love affair with a beautiful Lumbee maiden, the suffering of his family and his people, and the spiritual struggle among whites who admired, supported him and those who dispised him.

Contemporary composer Willie F. Lowery's score blends folk songs, Baptist church hymns of the Civil War era, along with his own original music.

Thai Government Faces Problems With Mountain Tribes

By JULIE BELL
National Geographic News Service

CHIANG RAI, Thailand — The village chief lay stretched on his side less than two feet from the flickering flames. His glassy eyes concentrated on the tiny, dark ball of sticky opium that he rolled between his fingers and carefully stuffed into a pipe.

As he performed the routine, one he had repeated many times that day, his two wives hovered in a corner of the hut, eyes downcast, their silver-studded headdresses glinting in the dim light of a cooking fire.

Outside, a nearly full moon cast a bright light over the scattered bamboo huts on the mountaintop, and the night was quiet. But before the sun rose, this Akha village would come alive to the sound of animals' grunts and squeals, and of wooden pounders crushing rice for another day's meals.

Newcomers To Land

The simple, traditional lifestyle of the Akha people gave the impression that theirs was an ancient settlement, but in fact they are newcomers to Thailand. Their first village was established here in 1903. Today the tribe numbers more than 24,000.

The Akhas are one of six major, distinct tribes in the remote hill country of northern Thailand. While five of the major hill tribes were virtually nonexistent here a century ago, the total tribal population is now estimated at 500,000.

The tribes account for less than one percent of Thailand's population, but their numbers have quadrupled in the last 35 years. The Akha population alone increased from about 6,200 in 1964 to more than 24,000 today, owing largely to migration from Burma.

The Akha, Hmong, Yao, Lahu, Lisu and Karen people live in hard country, which they share with guerrillas and bandits. Banana trees grow beside their rice fields on the lush hillside, but the steep grades make planting and harvesting difficult. Delivering crops to market often involves carrying sacks along narrow, winding mountain paths, although some lowland tribes use long, shallow boats on the river.

A few dirt roads serve the fringes of the hill-tribe country, but many villages are accessible only by foot or elephant. Boat travelers on major regional rivers such as the Kok draw stares from naked children and water buffalo.

The low level of education among the tribes has reinforced their isolation by preventing access to Thai society. Many tribal people cannot read or write in their native dialects, and most cannot speak Thai. Ramshackle one-room schoolhouses with open sides, dirt floors and wooden planks for desks are used by the younger children. But by age nine or 10, the children are hauling heavy sacks to market.

Poppies In Abundance

Opium production is a major source of income for tribes at higher elevations. The opium poppy grows at 3,000 feet above sea level. The Thai government first banned the production, sale and consumption of opium in 1958; recently, the government declared renewed efforts to crack down on opium by burning poppy fields.

Nevertheless, it is still possible to find poppy plants in abundance along footpaths. Much of the opium produced in this area, which is part of the notorious Golden Triangle, reaches the West, most of it in the form of heroin. A significantly greater amount of the Golden Triangle's opium is produced in neighboring Burma.

The tribes and their traditional lifestyle have flourished largely because of their remoteness. Much of the region is inaccessible to modern transport, so the tribes move freely across borders without detection. The government has had a hard time keeping track of the hill-tribe population: In the early 1980s, it was estimated that no more than 30 percent had citizenship papers.

The mobile nature of their societies also makes them flexible. The Akha, for instance, move their vilages every 15 to 20 years because their slash-and-burn cultivation methods force them to seek new land.

Villages tend to break up because of lack of good cropland, disputes, harassment by bandits, or a quick succession of deaths. It does not take long to build a new group of huts.

Some of the worst problems in these northern forests — smuggling, banditry, and the sometimes violent opuium trading of former Nationalist Chiense soldiers holed up in the hills — are not created by the tribes.

But the tribes do present problems for the Thai government.

Lack National Identity

Their shifting cultivation methods contribute to deforestaton and deterioration of watersheds. Opium production and addiction persist. Educational and health services are poor. The tribe lacks a sense of national identity.

In 1976, the government said it would integrate the hill tribes into the Thai state, although tribal members would retain the right to practice their religions and maintain their cultures.

Agencies have attempted to work with the tribes. The Tribal Research Institute employs a team of specialists who make regular visits to the villages. In addition to collecting data, the institute recommends ways to improve village life, from creating new educational programs to installing plastic pipe to carry water to mountaintop settlements.

Auctions Becoming Common On The American Scene

By MERCER CROSS
National Geographic News Service

MOOREFIELD, W. Va. — Lottie Lakin would have had a conniption. The street in front of her house was barricaded. Hundreds of people were milling around her yard. A small man with a microphone stood on her porch, making a big racket.

In the course of her 79 years, Miss Lakin had earned a reputation as one of the crankiest citizens of this county-seat town of 2,400. She complained, regularly and profanely, about loudly played radios and anything else that rubbed her the wrong way.

When she died last fall, she had no idea that the yard of the unfinished, unpainted frame house her father was building when he died in the 1920s would be the scene of a memorable auction this spring.

Sold Life's Accumulation

Everything was sold: the house itself (for $29,000); Miss Lakin's 19-year-old Mercury Comet (for $200); her furniture (including a glass-front oak cabinet, for $1,050), and a lifetime accumultion of other possessions, some precious, many of dubious worth.

At the hub of all the commotion stood the veteran auctioneer, 44-year-old H. Junior Wilson, 125 pounds of nervous energy compressed in a 5-foot-5-inch frame.

For five hours, nonstop, Wilson and an assistant, Roscoe Collins, chanted into the microphone, a rhythmic machine-gun litany of words and numbers meaningful to the initiated, mostly unintelligible to the outsider.

"Chest of drawers, chest of drawers," Wilson began one Niagara of staccato verbiage. "Ten-dollar bill ... 5 bid 6 bid 6 bid 6 bid 6 bid 6 ... bid 7 bid 7 bid 7 bid 7 ..." and so on, a dollar at a time, until finally "18, 18, 18, 18! All done 18."

Wilson's sales are just a tiny part of a $100-billion-a-year auction business in the United States. That figure is the estimate of Dean H. Parker of Logan, Utah, president of the National Auctioneers Association.

"The auction business right now is enjoying probably the greatest prosperity it ever has," says Parker, a leading auctioneer of horses. His association, headquartered in Overland Park, Kan., has some 6,000 members among about 32,000 auctioneers, he says.

Parker attributes auctioneering's current boom to the growing realization of Americans that it's a good way to get top dollar for whatever they have to sell.

Peddle Almost Anything

And that covers almost anything these days. Every day, somewhere, auctioneers are peddling livestock, tobacco, used cars, real estate, fine art, antiques, industrial machinery. You name it, somebody's auctioning it.

Some auctions, particularly in rural areas, are more than mere sales. They are, like the one for Lottie Lakin's estate, community events. "This marks the opening of the spring social season," said one Moorefield matron, taking in the scene from the street.

In many states, including West Virginia, auctioneers must be licensed. To qualify for licensing, prospective auctioneers go to auction schools.

The largest of the 10 or 12 schools is the Missouri Auction School in Kansas City. Students — average age 27 in summer and 33 in winter — pay $425 each for a rigorous two-week course that includes long hours of lectures and oral drills.

They emerge with the basic tools of their trade. To succeed, they need more than that. "To be a good auctioneer, you've got to have good product knowledge," says Richard W. Dewees, president of the Missouri school.

"I like a guy that is clean-cut and looks a lot like a businessman, because he is a businessman," Dewees says. "You don't want some hippie out there."

Good ones can make plenty of money from their commissions. Much depends on where they live and the product they sell. "I know lots and lots of auctioneers who make six figures," Dewees says. "And I know lots who make half that."

Junior Wilson, working in the sparsely populated farm country where he was reared, doesn't earn that much from auctioneering. He also raises cattle on a 40-acre farm near Moorefield and sells real estate outside his auction business. He frequently auctions real estate at foreclosure sales on the courthouse steps. In an average year, he says, he conducts 10 or 15 estate sales.

Made $2,000 That Day

"Better than average" was his description of the Lottie Lakin auction. He wouldn't disclose the total amount of the sale. His commission, with a bonus from Miss Lakin's niece, brought him close to $2,000.

Wilson has been auctioneering around Moorefield since he was in high school. He is a 1965 graduate of an auction school in Decatur, Ind. At the Lakin auction he knew most of the people in the crowd, including knowledgeable antique dealers, farmers in bib overalls and feed caps, and modish couples in running shoes and designer jeans.

Wilson, a taciturn fellow when he's not working, quotes a slogan that he says governs his sales: "You can shear a sheep once a year, but you can only skin him once."

Applying his maxim to the Lakin sale, he informed prospective bidders of cracked, chipped or otherwise damaged merchandise. "It worked for just a little bit the other day," he said of an old mantle clock. "It has worked and not worked. But it does have movement occasionally — just like the rest of us." The clock sold for $65.

Some bidders left with bargains. Others, swept up by the excitement of bidding, probably paid too much. Wilson was philosophical. "What you lose on the popcorn you make up on the peanuts," he said.

AMERICAN AUCTION — Microphone in hand, auctioneer H. Junior Wilson stands on the front porch of the late Lottie Lakin's house and hawks one of hundreds of items displayed at her estate sale in Moorefield, W. Va. Several hundred people turned out, some to buy and others just to take in the scene. Wilson is a minor player in the $100-billion-a-year auction business in the United States. A Moorefield native, he knows most of the customers by name. (National Geographic Society Photograph by Jeffrey C. Cross)

TERRA-COTTA SCULPTURES

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ninety terra-cotta sculptures from the Paul F. Walker and Marilyn Walter Grounds collection are on view at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art through Sept. 20.

The works in "Icons of Piety, Images of Whimsy" range in size from a few inches to over four feet. With few exceptions, the assembled objects are made mostly of unglazed terra-cotta, and were either modeled by hand or made from molds, or are a combination of the two methods.

Representing a wide range of dates and geographical distribution, the terra-cottas date from 300 B.C. to the 18th century and come from Pakistan, India, Nepal, Tibet, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Indonesia.

JASPER JOHNS EXHIBITION

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — An exhibition of artist Jasper Johns' prints will be on view at the Fort Worth Art Museum through Aug. 30.

Spanning 25 years of Johns' printmaking, "Jasper Johns: A Print Retrospective" includes 175 lithographs, etchings, silkscreens and monotypes.

The works range from early prints that focus on common objects and popular imagery such as flags, targets, numbers and maps, to later entirely nonobjective prints.

Geologists Search For Minerals In Georgia

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

DARIEN, Ga. (AP) — With the morning sun still low on the horizon, geologist Gregg Bonn and three assistants shove off in a 20-foot boat to collect mineral samples on sand bars along the Georgia coast. Departing from a dock near the mouth of the Altamaha River, the team headed east toward Sapelo Island.

Upon reaching the designated sand bar at low tide, they crawled out of the boat and assembled a large tripod. Then, using the tripod for support, they positioned a 20-foot-long aluminum pipe vertically above the sandbar and connected it to a device that caused it to vibrate. The vibrations caused the pipe to cut through the sand, trapping a 2-inch-diameter sample inside.

Once full, the pipe was hauled out and stored aboard the boat. It would be split open later at an Atlanta laboratory so that scientists could analyze the sediment.

"It's hard work," said Bonn, 31. "You have to deal with the forces of nature — the tides, the winds. But we'll know if there are significant concentrations of heavy minerals in the bars."

Bonn said he is looking primarily for heavy minerals that contain deposits of titanium, a strong, lightweight metal used in jet engines, missiles and surgical instruments.

While Bonn takes 30 samples along the coast this summer, other geologists from the state Department of Natural Resources will work miles from the coast, collecting samples from Georgia's ancient barrier islands.

Land that made up the ancient barrier islands when the ocean covered a large part of southeastern Georgia is now an area 20 to 30 miles inland that extends from Brantley County east of Waycross to Chatham County.

The ancient barrier island search is focusing on titanium, thorium and rare-earth elements, said Earl Shapiro, the assistant state geologist in Atlanta.

Thorium is used in photoelectric cells, X-ray tubes and alloys, while rare-earth elements are used in lasers, electronics, high strength magnets and as catalysts for oil refining.

Information obtained in the studies will be used to create a model charting the location of mineral deposits. If substantial deposits are found, the mining industry could decide to begin digging for the minerals, Shapiro said.

Mining already contributes about $1 billion annually to the state's economy, mostly from the sale of kaolin, a mineral used in paper, paint, porcelain and rubber production.

"There are known heavy mineral deposits in the ancient barrier islands. There is also interest in some of the offshore deposits," said Shapiro.

He emphasized, however, that there are no plans to mine near any of the modern barrier islands, such as Sapelo, Jekyll or St. Simons.

Titanium, thorium and the rare-earth elements are byproducts of granite that decomposed thousands of years ago in Georgia's mountain and Piedmont regions.

Besides locating mineral deposits, Bonn will try to determine how the deposits originated. Ocean currents and coastal rivers such as the Altamaha are believed to be two primary sources.

Bonn said he also will check the thickness of sand bars and study the sand itself to see if it could be used to restore eroded beaches.

"Although there are no plans to develop the mineral sand resources within the three-mile (state coastal) limits, it is interesting to know the composition of the bars in terms of quantity and quality of mineral sands and where they are coming from," he said.

Shapiro said results of the surveys should be available next summer.

ICE AND GREEN CLOUDS

NEW YORK (AP) — A refreshingly titled summer exhibition, "Ice and Green Clouds: Traditions of Chinese Celadon," is on show at the Asia Society July 16-Sept. 6.

The exhibition consists of around 90 key works from 26 leading collections and reflects all the major celadon traditions from more than 3,000 years of Chinese culture.

Following its closing in New York, the exhibition will travel to the Kimbell Art Museum, Fort Worth, Texas, Oct. 17-Jan.3, 1988, and to the Art Institute of Chicago, Feb. 4-March 27, 1988.

PAINTING ACQUIRED

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — The Worcester Art Museum says it recently acquired a painting by Jan Brueghel the Elder (1568-1625).

The work, "Port Scene in Venice," depicts an imagined view of the famous Italian seaport.

The painting was donated by Robert and Mary S. Cushman of Worcester.

John And Mary MacKenna's First Holiday In America Is Being Spent In Greenville

Irish Couple Finds Rewards In The Arts

Text By Jerry Raynor, Photograph By Cliff Hollis

John and Mary MacKenna are fortunate, a couple whose careers have measured up to what they dreamed of and are achieving at an early age. Their related fields often bring them together in the excitement and rewards of individual and joint creative activities.

John's forte is basically literature. Mary's is art. Together, they are involved in theater.

This summer, the two and the oldest of their two children added a new dimension to their lives — their first visit to the United States. Residents of the village of Athy (pronunced "a thigh") in County Kildare, their first look at America has been a visit to Greenville.

"We're on holiday, and have been here for over a month, visiting my brother and his family," John said. His brother is Dr. Jarlath MacKenna of the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

Some Adjustments Necessary

The MacKennas touched on adjustments they found necessary after their arrival in Greenville.

"At first," Mary said in her crisp, lilting Irish accent, "we had a bit of a problem in understanding some people, and some people most certainly had difficulty in understanding us, but we very quickly adjusted to hearing the slow cadence of English in the South. By the way," she added, "it's quite a lovely way of speaking." Both also speak the Irish language.

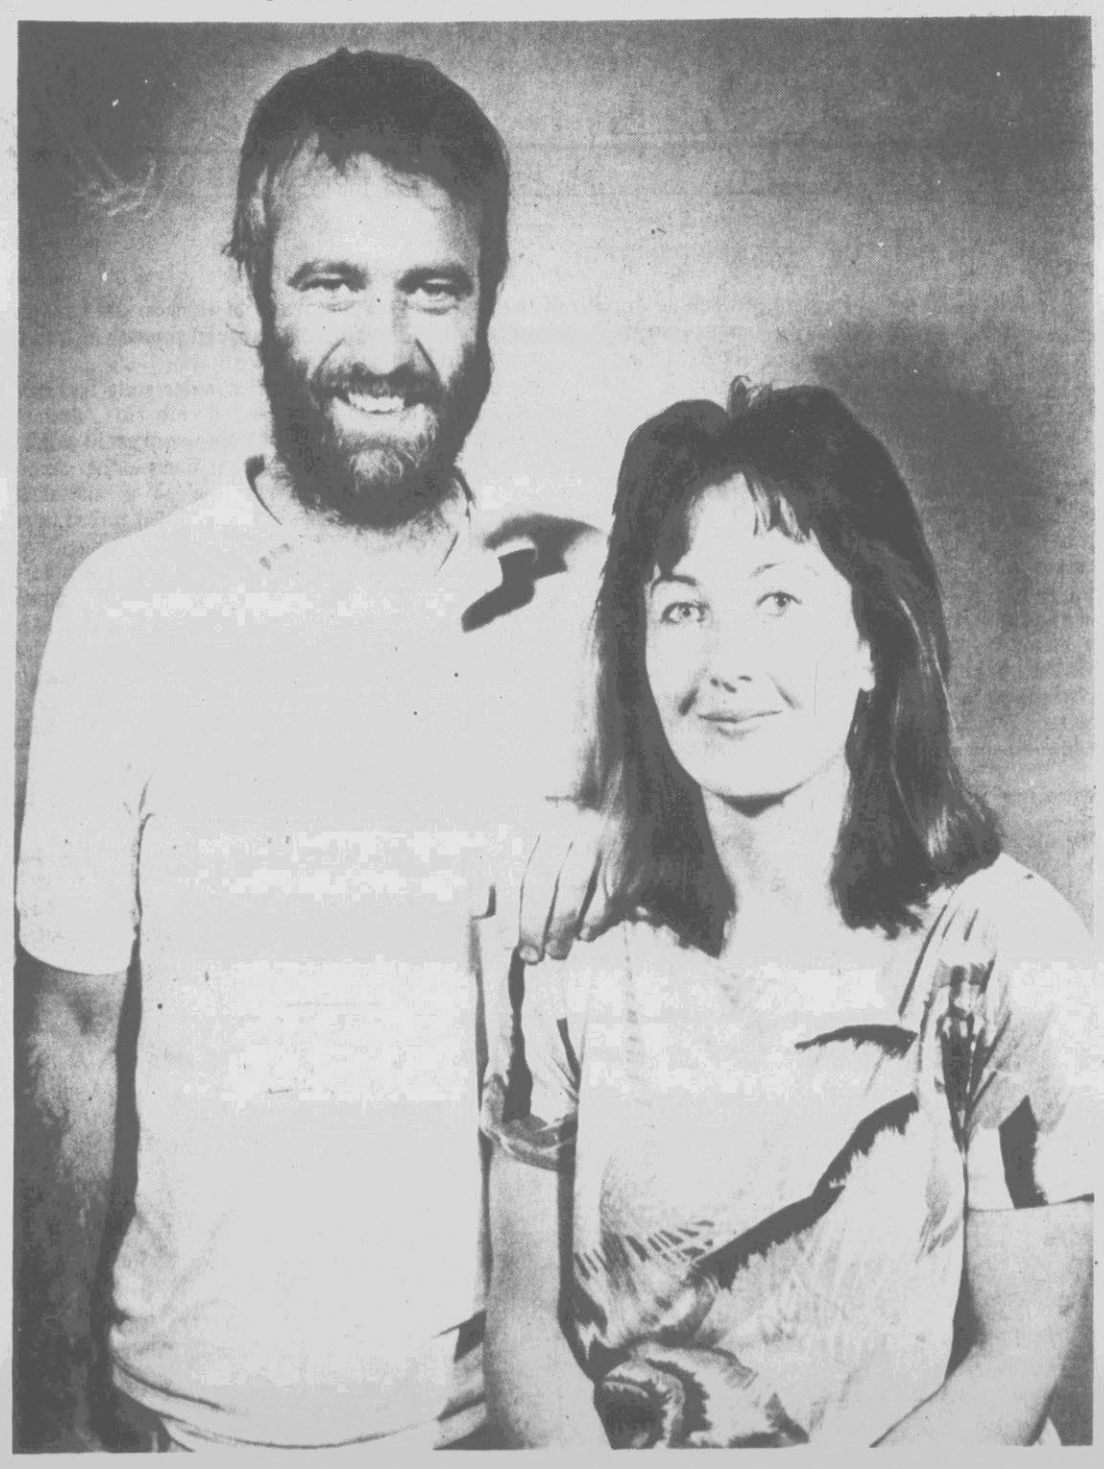
Carolina summer weather understandably called for acclimitization. "It is indeed hot compared to what we are accustomed to in Ireland," John said. "But it certainly has its nicer compensations."

"That's true," Mary said. "Here, you can plan an outing and know that generally you're going to have a warm, sun-filled day. Back home we must always face the prospect of rain for whatever we plan."

Adapting to the summer heat, they agreed, had been made easier "and a great deal of fun" by frequent visits to the beach at Emerald Island.

Eastern North Carolina's bounty of trees came in for praise. "We had a pre-conceived vision of great stretches devoted to concrete and paving," Mary said. "I grant there's a sufficiency of concrete in Greenville, but there's such an abundance of trees everywhere we've been, in town and in rural places. I'm impressed with the greenness, the marvelous variety of trees."

John contrasted the greenery of North Carolina with what he termed the sad turn of events in his area of Ireland. "Saving trees is a real problem back home," he said. "Just recently a forest of centuries old oaks was felled for commercial timber. These were 600-year-old trees, majestic, beautiful. It's so sad to lose something like that."



. . . John and Mary MacKenna pose for a Reflector portrait

A World Of Literature

John, a University College of Dublin graduate with a English teaching degree, "taught for seven years before giving that up. Currently, I produce programs, mostly of news, for RTE, the National Irish Radio Station."

It is when John talks about his role as proprietor of a small publishing press and his own writing that he becomes truly animated.

"It's really a small, selective press," he said. "We named it the Stephens Scropp Press in honor of the first known Irish victim of the Black Plague."

"Goulish, isn't it?" Mary laughed.

"We have established a successful policy of printing a hard cover edition signed by the author and usually limited to about 200 copies of each title we publish," John said. "Following that, we print unlimited numbers of paperback copies, the number depending on the expectation of demand.

"The output of the press is focused to a great extent "on social histories of the Midlands, our area of Ireland."

John attributes much of his publishing success to "my good friend and commercial printer, Paul Roche. He takes great care in selecting the right paper, and together we decide on the type that will best fit the subject and the general design of the book.

"It's a real pleasure," he added, "to be involved in a book all the way from choosing a manuscript, to editing, making preparations for the press and eventually being able to hold in your hands the printed product that looks well."

As time goes by, the output of John's small press accelerates. "We have published ten books in the last four years, not a bad record for a press of our nature," John said. "I'm pleased by our latest project. This involves the work of Mary Shackleton, who died in the early 19th century. She kept a diary and left a large collection of letters. We have recently published the first volume of her work, the diary. We've done very well on that and the second volume, the letters, are in sight now. This is the kind of discovery that makes publishing an exciting venture."

Collecting, Writing

John and Mary both profess to being collectors who find it difficult to resist books and items related to their careers.

"We have traveled to France and go rather frequently to England and Wales," Mary said. "There's one favorite place we visit more than any other. It's in Wales, the tiny village of Hay-on-Wye, with about 200 people. Small as it is, it has the largest second-hand bookshop in Europe. It's a mecca for booklovers and naturally we always come on to books we can't resist."

"I only hope," John said, "that not too many people discover it."

John's own writing encompasses "mostly fiction, short stories in the main. A number of my short stories have been published along the way. A collection of them have been gathered in book form, titled 'Post Mortem.'

"My style of writing is in the contemporary vein, realistic stories about small town Irish life. They don't have happy endings, and that doesn't always endear me to readers." John has two novels completed, "being considered by a Belfast publisher."

Joint Theatrical Efforts

Theater is the facet of cultural activity in which John and Mary are active co-workers. In the field of playwriting and little theater, the two work in collaborative efforts.

"We have authored three or four children's scripts," Mary said. "Most are short plays for performance on the street.

"Our small theater group, Half-Mask, presents plays in in our area and in Galway on the west coast of Ireland." They named the work of Samuel Beckett, Harold Pinter and Frank O'Connor as among their repertory of about 20 plays.

"There's five of us in the troup, we do everything," she added. "Make-up, stage design, selling tickets, directing, and of course, acting. There are three men and two women in our traveling quintet."

"Mary's our guiding genius," John said. "She's a one-person team who somehow manages to take care of whatever needs doing, down to things like designing posters and flyers and taking care of correspondence."

Mary, The Artist

Mary, whose maiden name is Cunningham, was intrigued to hear that the Cunningham name was in earlier years a prominent one in Martin County, and that a few residents of that name now live in Pitt County. "It's a name often come across in Ireland," she said, "but I'd not expected there'd be any here."

She is an honors degree graduate of the National College of Arts and Design in Dublin.

Her days are busy taking care of a range of assignments and personal work in art. "My work in stage design often engages me in designs for the Abbey Theater, Ireland's national theater, in Dublin. I've done designs for plays as diverse as 'Of Mice and Men,' 'A Winter's Tale,' 'She Stoops To Conquer' and 'Waiting for Godot.'" Asked what type of designs she preferred to do for plays, she said "the colors and designs depend on the play and what the director has in mind. I've done both abstract and realistic designs."

She spoke of one a particularly rewarding assignment to do "church art for Our Lady of Africa, a Saint Patrick's Missionary Church in County Wicklow.

"I was shown a large bare room and asked to create everything needed. I was told that whatever I designed need not fit in with already existing pieces in the church. They asked me to design the furniture, the altar, the tabernacle, everything. It was a great experience."

"Mary's our principal illustrator for books that we publish," John said, "and she's good at that."

In art not done on assignment or commission, Mary "works mostly in mixed media, usually large paintings. Fabrics and papers are the materials I prefer to work with."

She recently won third place in the Irish National Art Competition and has an exhibition of her work to be shown in Dublin "this autumn. I'm at work on a large wall hanging for that show and must get back to it as soon as we return home."

Pleasantly Surprised

Aside from the surprises of eastern North Carolina's greenery and summer heat, John and Mary expressed enthusiasm in discovering that Greenville has an active playwrights group.

"My brother, Jarlath, is a member of the board of directors of the local drama group (Playwrights Fund of North Carolina). He invited us to go with him to be in on the conference. It was a revealing experience. I wish we had something going like this in Athay," John said.

"And the play we saw performed Saturday (David Hopes' 'Phantom of the Blue Letters') was excellent. The wonderful performance of the cast was simply astonishing."

Outdoors Oriented

With all the demands on their time for literature and art, John and Mary MacKenna nevertheless find time for their love of being outdoors.

"We have two children, Lydia, who is six and Ewan, our three-year old," Mary said. "Lydia is with us on this holiday and Ewan is back home with his grandmother. We know we shall find him totally spoiled when we get back home."

"Playing cricket is one of our favorite activities," John said. "Ours is a mixed team, which quite often is the case in small Irish communities. We have to play against men's teams. We play every Sunday, even if its raining, which frequently is the case."

"We had our first win ever last year," Mary said.

Bicycling together is another of their loves. "We had thought of doing some cycling here," Mary said, "but very soon decided no way in this weather. I'm amazed to see people cycling or jogging in your summer heat. We'll wait until we're back home for anything that strenuous."

Walking, exploring nature in the forests around Athay is a family affair they named as a favored sparetime venture.

The MacKennas are returning to Ireland on Tuesday. The two emphasized the rewards that have been theirs on this first holiday in America, and say they hope soon to make a return visit here.

Scottish Poet Has Earned Reputation As 'World's Worst Poet'

By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press Writer

DUNDEE, Scotland (AP) — Scotland does its poets proud, and no town is without its statue to Robert Burns, Sir Walter Scott or Robert Louis Stevenson. But mention The Great McGonagall in his home town and reactions range from a fond chuckle to pained silence.

To connoisseurs of ghastly verse, William McGonagall is a national treasure, proclaimed by The Times of London as "a real genius, for he is the only memorable truly bad poet in our language."

A century after his heyday, McGonagall's tortured rhymes and fractured meters have earned him a cult following that ranges from Boise, Idaho, to Manchuria.

The British royal family is among his devotees, and in the ultimate accolade, the Oxford Companion to English Literature mentions him as "the world's worst poet."

Dundee, McGonagall's home town on Scotland's east coast, is divided between those who want to give him the full commemorative treatment and those who fervently wish the muse of poetry had gone someplace else to deliver her most celebrated misfit.

City Hall has blocked attempts by McGonagall fans to put up a statue to him, allowing only the modest gesture of a plaque on a park bench near the Burns statue.

Some Dundonians would say even that is too much for the man who produced this leaden ode to an iceberg:

"And the stranger in amazement stands aghast
"As he beholds the water flowing off the melted ice
"Adown the mountain sides, that he cries out, Oh, how nice!"

Or this galumphing lament at the collapse of Dundee's Tay Bridge under a train:

"Beautiful Railway Bridge of the Silv'ry Tay!
"Alas! I a very sorry to say
"That ninety lives have been taken away
"On the last Sabbath day of 1879,
"Which will be remembered for a very long time."

Says David Tennant, a Dundee municipality spokesman, "There's a love-hate relationship between McGonagall and Dundee. I suppose it's a case of a poet not being recognized on his own native heath."

Jim Mackie, manager of the David Winter publishing house in Dundee, which printed McGonagall's first poems and still puts out best-selling McGonagall anthologies, says: "I suppose Dundonians don't want to be associated with someone who's famous for doing something so badly."

Willie Smith, who recently retired as manager of David Winter, insists McGonagall was a genius.

"Here was a man with just 18 months of schooling who could recite Shakespeare and who wrote 576 poems, all of which are published. His anthologies have sold half a million copies. That's more than Robbie Burns. So who judges genius? Who judges Picasso? Who's to judge McGonagall?"

Rare is the poet, however great, who never drops the occasional clunker. But equally rare is the poet of McGonagall's stature, whose poems, without exception, were "of a magical dreadfulness that reached the sublime," as the late Scottish commentator James Cameron wrote.

From McGonagall's brief autobiography, one learns that he was born in 1825 or 1830, worked as a jute weaver and developed a passion for Shakespeare.

Taking to the stage, his stentorian voice and shoulder-length hair quickly singled him out as a crowd-drawing eccentric.

Playing Macbeth, he once got so carried away that he refused to fall down dead. "Lay doon, McGonagall, lay doon!" hissed the hapless Macduff.

He could not believe the audiences came for the laughs, not the drama, and wrote of his puzzlement at people who would waylay him outside the stage door and pull his hat over his eyes.

Only in his 40s did he take up poetry, describing in his autobiography how one day, sitting lonely in his room and wishing he could afford a vacation, he suddenly imagined he heard a voice crying, "Write! Write!"

His first ode went on sale at a penny a sheet, printed up on leaflets free of charge by David Winter. Reviewers reacted to the new bard with polite amusement which the humorless McGonagall mistook for praise, assuming the title of "William McGonagall, Poet and Tragedian."

He sent a selection of his verse to Queen Victoria. The palace's formula acknowledgment emboldened him to assume the even more impressive title of "William McGonagall, Poet and Tragedian, by Appointment to Her Majesty." He even walked through a rainstorm to her Scottish castle hoping to give a recital, but was threatened by the gatekeeper with arrest.

He imagined a voice crying 'Write!', 'Write' . . . and write he did, undaunted by jeers

Nothing discouraged him. No battle, disaster, celebrity death, or royal event escaped the McGonagall treatment. Every town he visited inspired an ode:

"Bonnie Kilmany in the county of Fife
"Is a healthy spot to reside in to lengthen one's life. ...
"Ye lovers of the picturesque, if ye would drown your grief
"Take my advice and visit the ancient town of Crieff. ..."

His wife and children went hungry and faced eviction from their cottage while Dundee, a hard-drinking, ruffianish sort of town, turned McGonagall-baiting into a sport.

He was pelted with peas, pies and rotten hams, shouted down by hecklers, mocked by street urchins as "Mad McGonagall," and hounded by magistrates for causing the unruliness.

A barman, incensed at McGonagall for having the nerve to recite teetotaling propaganda in his pub, stuffed a wet towel in his mouth.

Soon he was refusing to perform unless a clergyman sat on the stage.

In 1887, fed up with these riotous spectacles, Dundee's elders bought McGonagall a one-way ticket to New York. But he soon returned, unimpressed except by the skyscrapers:

"They were the only thing that seemed to arrest my eye
"Because many of them are thirteen stories high."

Failing health, poverty and ridicule eventually overcame him, and one morning Dundonians were informed in a new poem:

"Welcome, thrice welcome! To the year 1893,
"For it is the year that I intend to leave Dundee
"Owing to the treatment I receive
"Which does my heart sadly grieve.
"Every morning when I go out,
"The ignorant rabble they do shout
" 'There goes Mad McGonagall'
"In derisive shouts as loud as they can bawl."

The next year he moved to Perth, where he died in 1902 and was buried in an unmarked pauper's grave.

But his fame began to spread. The actor Alec Guinness showed interest in his Shakespearean roles. Playwright Noel Coward adapted a McGonagall poem to song. Actor Peter Sellers popularized him on radio.

What lifted his poetry above the simply banal was his indomitable spirit. Each artless line and clumsy rhyme radiated passion — grief over a disaster, pride over a battle won, hatred for intoxicating spirits, love of God and reverence for His creatures.

He would recite his poem about the Battle of Bannockburn brandishing a sword with such exuberance that the front-rows had to duck. McGonagall was, in commentator Cameron's fond tribute, "one of God's clumsy innocents who found his way among the angels."

Smith, at 71 a tireless promoter of The Great McGonagall, says McGonagall societies exist in Los Angeles, New York, Chicago, Seattle, Sacramento, San Francisco, and Boise, Idaho, as well as Toronto, Halifax and Vancouver in Canada.

"Yet here in Dundee," he says, "they won't put up a statue to him. It's a great shame."

Smith has visited Japan at the invitation of the local McGonagall society, and in Manchuria he discovered McGonagall poems translated into Chinese.

"The students told me he translates very well."

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY July 5

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Arguments are likely if you do anything which might make people believe you are reneging on a promise. This evening is a good time for romance and finding needed answers.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Try to remain uninvolved in other people's problems. You may be disappointed by a civic matter you're involved with.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Resolve a matter at work which has been troubling you by discussing it with a superior. Your energy is flowing high.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Forget recreation and focus on matters of importance. You will be wise in handling co-workers this week.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Don't let a home matter which is beyond your control upset you. You may be wasting your talents.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) You will hear something this morning which could make you very angry, but remain calm. Repay social debts.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Avoid arguments which have no basis in fact. Handle important correspondence and make and make visits this evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Getting upset over unfulfilled wishes won't help matters. Get some needed advice from financial experts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) A limitation which you've made on yourself must be overcome. Be more forceful in handling personal matters.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Remaining near a loved one today will put you in better spirits. Show your appreciation for this help.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22 to Jan. 20) An important person may be irate this morning, so avoid this individual. Maintain domestic harmony.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Stick to what you know today. Trying something new would not be fruitful. Be cautious when asking for favors.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Don't rely on your intuition this morning — it's on the blink. Be very cautious while driving or walking today.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she may have a hard time relating to people other than the family while yound, so teach your child to listen more and talk less. This will help develop an interest in others. Research or investigation would be a very good field for your progeny, so gear the education in that direction.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Be more cooperative in planning entertainments with friends. Smooth out creative ideas you have.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): That home situation will require plenty of thought if it is to be resolved. Entertaining could help your career tonight.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): If explanations to others are in order, make them immediately. Tonight is good for relaxing at home and enjoying the kin.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): You can get great advice from an expert on finding a better system for handling your assets if you start early.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Personal happiness is of paramount importance to you right now, so work toward gaining it as soon as possible.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Think more about controlling your own future and stop talking about what could be. Be careful dressing.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): If you stay around those with inquisitive minds today, you could learn a good many things of great importance.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Consider what your valued friends expect of you and deliver on it. Be more kind and more thoughtful at home.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Be conscientious and accurate in completing some far-away matters. Study a plan before going ahead with it.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, will have very definite opinions, but should be taught to listen to what others have to say. It is imperative that this child be kept prejudice-free, or the chance for success will escape. Your progeny will have the capacity to develop quite well intellectually.

Opening lead: Nine of ♣ Finesses are strange creatures. Sometimes they skulk around and have to be uncovered, as this hand illustrates.

South might have opted for a jump shift at his first turn, since he had a fit for his partner's suit. After his simple response, however, his hand became enormous when he received support for his own suit, so he wasted no time in wheeling out Blackwood and settling in six spades when he discovered that two kings were missing.

After a club lead, declarer thought the hand was simple. He tried the ten from dummy, fetching the jack from East. Declarer took his ace and laid down the ace of spades only to learn that he had to lose a trump trick.

He cashed the table's high diamonds, discarding a club from hand, ruffed a club and then fell back on his second chance, the heart finesse. East produced the queen—down one.

Declarer did well enough—up to a point. After discovering that he had to lose a trump trick, he had a line available which would have given him two heart finesses instead of one.

When the minor suits had been cleared with a club ruff, declarer should have thrown West in with his master trump. Since either minor would have yielded a ruff-sluff, West would have been forced to return a heart. The correct play from dummy would have been the nine; if that fetched the queen, as it would have here, the slam was home. And if East had produced the ten, declarer could have won with the ace and then tried the finesse of the jack of hearts. Two for one at the same price!

Group Forecasts Colors For Home Products

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

As a member of the interior forecast committee for the Color Association of the United States, Barbara Schirmeister helped decide more than two years ago what colors you will be painting your walls, hanging at your windows and choosing for bathroom tile this year.

The committee issues color guidelines used by manufacturers to select colors for future home furnishings products. Millions of dollars ride on these forecasts, since it can cost several million to change a color in a product line.

"It's not a matter of newness for newness' sake," Schirmeister says. "When you forecast a color, it has to be based on sound reasoning: what are the socioeconomic conditions, the political climate, the fashion trends here and abroad?"

Information comes from unlikely sources. A grape leaf she found in the Caribbean, a plastic bracelet from a dime store in Paris and a hank of yarn all have figured in her predictions.

The international color currents move quickly these days, Schirmeister says. For example, last fall she brought home to New York four pairs of purple shoes from Milan, all in different hues.

"More significant than the hues themselves was the way purple was used — as a neutral," Schirmeister says. "This was an indication to me this color family would be important. That was less than a year ago and already it is being reflected in American home furnishings.

"Watch heliotrope. I think it may be surprisingly popular, also red-violet."

She says colors she finds in the fashion capitals of the world often prove to have special significance. But when you make color predictions everything goes into the pot, including colors from exotic locales such as Hong Kong. Even the influence of major museum exhibitions plays a role.

"The Metropolitan Museum's show last year of the decorative objects of India, which emphasized brilliant hues, created a tremendous interest in those wonderful colors which became part of our color trends," she says.

The emergence of the yellow power tie a few years ago also was informative to someone who could read the signs. To Schirmeister, it meant corporations were entering a period of strength since "yellow is the color of optimism."

Today, she says "patriotism is dominant and a related romanticism and traditionalism have returned." This is being reflected in the marketplace by success for products in traditional colors. "The consumer of 1988 will be looking for elegance and luxury and colors that convey these attributes."

Success at the cash register is what keeps color forecasters like Schirmeister in business. Their color advice has helped reclaim lackluster performance in sales.

For example, when Ceramica San Lorenzo, a large tile company in Argentina, first introduced its tiles in the American market, there was little interest. After the company recolored its line to blend with bath fixtures popular in the United States, sales picked up, a company representative says.

Sales aside, Schirmeister says: "We know color has a profound influence on physical and emotional well-being, even though we do not know precisely what the effects are. Exposure to every hue in the spectrum is essential for mental health. If you have a deprivation of any of the spectrum, it can cause serious psychological harm."

The requirement for variety is one reason monochromatic color schemes are not comfortable over the long-term.

"An all-white environment is physically and mentally damaging, if one were locked up in it and couldn't look out," Schirmeister says. "And it is almost barbaric to place people in a totally beige Berber (rug) environment. But because of lack of knowledge that can happen."

Perhaps not in the future, however, since the trend in design is to emphasize individual human needs and to take account of them. That's why Schirmeister opposes recent schemes that match a person's skin tone to the supposedly correct colors for the individual.

She decries having one's colors done. "If we are interested in humanism, the last thing we want to do is to make a formula. It offends my sensibilities and gets me upset that a woman could have her colors done and never buy peacock blue again."

Here's The Answer

Q. — I recently have started to do wood finishing as a hobby. Some time ago, I read about something called a tack rag that is useful when you use varnish. As I recall, it is used for cleaning surfaces to be varnished. Could you tell me how to make it, since I understand it is something you can make yourself?

A. — First, the directions, then some advice. Take a piece of clean cloth, preferably cotton, and soak it in warm water. Wring it out, then soak it again, this time with turpentine. Add a little varnish and wring out the cloth so it is almost dry. Put it aside for a day or two, after which it is ready for use. You'll find it remarkably good for cleaning surfaces, especially those with dust on them that might interfere with the spreading of the varnish. The advice is to buy a prepared tack rag at almost any hardware store or establishment that caters to do-it-yourselfers.

Q. — Two rooms in our house get a lot of sun and are always warmer than the rest of the house. We would like to paint them a "cool" color. What colors do you recommend?

A. — It would have been much easier to give a suggestion if you had mentioned the function of the rooms in question. In any case, the cool colors are in the blue-green, yellow, white and gray families, but that's only part of the story. Many colors are cool when they are light-toned, warm when they are not — such as a light blue or a dark blue. Also, no matter how much you want to use cool colors, never lose sight of the need to harmonize the colors with your decor in a particular room.

Q. — I am building a brick wall along one side of our driveway. Can an ordinary sand mix be used between the joints of the bricks?

A. — The mortar used in brickwork differs somewhat depending on the job being done. The kind usually used for brick walls such as you are building contains mortar with hydrated lime in it. If you mix it yourself, the combination is one part portland cement and one part hydrated lime to six parts sand. You can buy ready-mixed mortar for the type of work you will be doing. It requires only the addition of water, the amount of which will be specified on the bag. It should be just enough to make the mixture fairly compressed but workable with a trowel.

Home Restoration Financing Is No Simple Procedure

From COUNTRY HOME
A Meredith Magazine

A firefighter from Jackson, N.J., and his wife hit hard times recently when shopping for help to buy and restore their dream 1850 farmhouse. The family lives in a new house in Jackson and hoped to find an agency or private preservation group willing to make a low-interest restoration loan or grant.

Only five years ago, a slew of private groups and federal agencies offered a broad range of financial programs for fledgling restorers. Now, explains Country Home magazine, hopefuls generally must rely on their own instincts and their bankers' goodwill. Bankers and preservation experts agree that success on this route takes preparation, determination and money.

The specter of termites lurking behind the wallpaper sends shivers up bankers' spines. The house may be worth $50,000, but will the restoration take another $50,000 or $100,000? Will the resale value justify the big mortgage?

Bankers also worry about classic "types" that invite foreclosure: two-career couples who may be straining a marriage to the limit; cash-poor dreamers who lack reserves to cover at least 20 percent more than they plan to spend; naive klutzes with no talent for handiwork.

Frank Gailor, president of First Federal Savings and Loan of Raleigh, N.C., who has restored 20 houses, offers the following tips as a way to put these qualms to rest:

Before starting to search for a dream home, find an architect or reputable building contractor who knows old houses.

Have a consultant help pick the property based on a professional estimate of condition and restoration cost.

When placing a bid, be sure to write a 60-day contingency clause into the contract. This means you can walk away from the deal if, upon professional inspection, the home proves to be beyond help or beyond your budget.

Offer a down payment that is larger than the usual amount.

Put savings, checking and other accounts in the bank where you are seeking the loan.

Stockpile extra cash to handle unforeseen problems. Gailor cites his own restoration that ran $20,000 over budget when he found termites had ruined all of the house's wood.

Meanwhile, the architect or contractor should be drawing up detailed restoration plans and culling cost estimates from qualified electricians, plumbers and roofers.

Learn about the alternatives to a conventional mortgage, including:

— A construction permanent loan. The bank disburses money in stages, as restoration tasks are completed and certified. When the whole job is done, the loan converts to a conventional mortgage and you begin paying the lump sum in monthly installments.

— A second mortgage to cover costs beyond the purchase price. This comes with the disadvantage of extra closing costs, usually $200 to $400, and higher-than-average interest rates.

— A personal line of credit at lower-than-market financing. Sounds great, but you have to be rich to qualify for enough cash to cover a major project.

— Financing through the building contractor. This can save time and hassle but costs extra interest-rate points under a shorter term for payback. In addition, the client loses all leverage over the contractor.

Appraisals present another possible block to a bank loan. Banks require this procedure to ensure you're paying fair market value. Thus, the bank knows it can sell the property to cover the loan in the event of foreclosure.

An appraisal can kill a loan application if the house owner wants a fancy restoration, Gailor said. A bank is unlikely to loan $150,000 to cover costs of replicating crown molding, wrought-iron sconces and heart-pine flooring if the local housing market dictates a resale value of only $50,000.

An alternative to shopping for financing is to buy the place and live with cracking plaster until you can save enough to pay for the redo yourself.

Garden Clinic

Q. Why do mockingbirds periodically spread their wings when they perch or walk across the lawn? They look similar to people flexing their muscles or stretching when they yawn.

A. No one knows for sure what purpose this action serves. It has been suggested that the shadow created by the outstretched wings may make it easier to spot an insect. It is an instinctive action; baby mockingbirds raised away from other mockingbirds exhibit the same trait.

Q. What is a "naturalized" plant?

A. A naturalized plant is a plant from another area that has become established as if it were native. Indeed, some naturalized plants such as kudzu and Japanese honeysuckle fare better than many native species. Some other examples of naturalized plants are dandelion, henbit, moth mullein, johnsongrass, bouncing Bet, Queen Anne's lace, chicory, mimosa, tree-of-heaven, gaillardia, veronica, ox-eye daisy and bermudagrass.

Q. Do moles eat plants?

A. No. They are insectivorous. If you have a mole in your yard, it is a sign that your yard has Japanese beetle grubs and other white grubs for the mole to eat.

Q. How hardy is Agapanthus, the blue-lily-of-the-Nile?

A. I have had letters from gardeners in both Pennsylvania and New York who have had agapanthus in the garden for many years by deep mulching to keep the roots from freezing. I feel agapanthus is definitely worth trying anywhere in Zones 7-10. Unfortunately, there is great confusion as to the taxonomy of many of the agapanthus commercially available. Existing literature emphasizes that they are not hardy above Zone 9 and in colder areas that they must be kept indoors in the winter. We mulch the plants as they die down in the autumn, and they are proving to be excellent landscape plants for us in Raleigh (Zone 7). The deciduous forms are generally hardier than the evergreen types, and the Headbourne Hybrids are often recommended as being the most hardy.

The Prince and Rita on honeymoon: Seven months later...

Q Writing about the late Rita Hayworth, "The New York Times" said of her and third husband, Prince Aly Khan: "When they were married in 1949, the fact that Miss Hayworth was visibly pregnant was widely reported." True? What kind of woman was Rita, really?—Louise S., Reno, Nev.

A When Rita Hayworth wed Prince Aly Khan in France on May 27, 1949, the rumor that she was with child was widely circulated, but she did not look particularly pregnant. Seven months later, however, on Dec. 28, the actress gave birth to a daughter, Yasmin (Arabic for jasmine), in Lausanne, Switzerland. Rita Hayworth's life constitutes one of Hollywood's sadder stories. She was vulnerable, unworldly and insecure. She put her faith and trust in men who used her talent badly. Of the 61 films she made, most were awful. Harry Cohn, head of Columbia Pictures, to which she was under contract, disliked Hayworth because she refused to knuckle under to his orders and desires. At one time, she believed he was secretly in love with her. During World War II, pinups of her face and figure were favorites of GIs everywhere. By 1950, however, Hayworth's career as a glamour queen had peaked and her luck was running out. She was a poor judge of men, and her fourth marriage (to singer Dick Haymes) and fifth (to producer James Hill) each lasted less than three years. For the last decade, she suffered from Alzheimer's disease. It was during this period that her daughter Yasmin looked after her with great care and kindness.

Q Who was the best man at the secret wedding of Tom Cruise and Mimi Rogers? How long does Hollywood give their marriage? And isn't it the third for Cruise?—M. Belk, Bridgeport, Conn.

A Best man at the wedding on May 9 was actor Emilio Estevez. For Cruise, 25, it was his first marriage; for Rogers, 31, her second. Because the newlyweds, unlike many actors, do not appear to be self-obsessed, the word in Hollywood is that their marriage stands a good chance of enduring—especially if it is blessed by the arrival of offspring.

Q Is it a fact that the Roman Catholic authorities in the Philippines turned against Ferdinand Marcos because he's not a Catholic but an Aglipayan, a member of the Independent Church of the Philippines?—M. Moreno, Chicago, Ill.

Q With how many bodyguards does Sylvester Stallone travel? My boyfriend, who was traveling abroad with his parents, said they ran into Stallone in the Jerusalem Hilton hotel, and Stallone was closely guarded by at least half a dozen men. I said he was exaggerating. He assured me he was not. Is Stallone guarded by six men in this country too?—Jessica Y., Washington, D.C.

A Stallone generally is guarded by two men. In Israel, however, where he was scouting for "Rambo" location sites in May, the actor had five bodyguards—two of his own and three assigned by the local authorities.

James Webb, The New Secretary Of The Navy, Faces A Crucial Question:

CAN THE MARINES COME BACK?

ON JULY 10, 1969, IN A BLOOD-SOAKED VALLEY IN THE SHADOW OF VIETNAM'S QUE SON MOUNTAINS, A COMPANY OF AMERICAN MARINES FOUGHT ITS WAY THROUGH AN EXPLODING LABYRINTH OF VIET CONG BUNKERS AND TUNNELS. During the battle, a young platoon commander sacrificed his career as a military officer when, with his own body, he shielded another Marine from the explosion of a Viet Cong grenade.

Today, that same former lieutenant, James Webb, is Secretary of the Navy. In the years since his wartime experience, Webb, still youthful at 41, has established himself as a lawyer and served as Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs. He also has written three books: Fields of Fire, A Sense of Honor and A Country Such As This.

He now faces an extraordinary challenge—sustaining the strength of America's naval forces. On top of that, he inherits a Marine Corps undergoing a crisis of confidence and public trust as a result of recent scandals. Can the new Secretary of the Navy, known for his tenacity and innovative skills, keep up our naval strength and bring the Marine Corps back?

On his second day in office, Secretary Webb called for a meeting with 500 officials—senior Navy admirals, Marine Corps generals and civilian executives. Later, back in his Pentagon Office, shirt-sleeves rolled up, Webb detailed his program:

"I've ordered the admirals and generals to report back to me in 60 days their assessments of where the services now stand and where they should be in 10 years. I asked them to examine the balance of their programs—medical care, weapons systems, the promotion and discharge systems—to see whether we're on track or if adjustments need to be done. Every now and then, you have to force the system to stop and look at itself. If not, you will be continuously victimized by the budget process and bureaucracy. By rearticulating our strategy, we can meet our budget by defining priorities and making every dollar count.

"At the meeting, I said that if I had to take one lesson from the battlefield, it is that any decisions I make will be made first on the basis of principle. We too often see people making decisions based on political or special-interest pressures, or for shortsighted financial reasons. They are afraid of criticism, or how decisions will affect their reputation.

"Since I've been here at the Pentagon, there's one thing that drives me: When I was on the bottom end of the ladder, in a rifle platoon, one of the strongest feelings I had was that I was a pawn. The control that I had over what happened to me or the people under me was pretty damn narrow. We had to hope and pray that the people above us making decisions knew what they were doing to us. And as a father with four kids, I've learned that, for their future's sake, you can't grab for short-range solutions. They inherit whatever decisions we make today."

Today Webb's range of responsibilities has expanded tremendously. The Middle East, especially the oil routes in the Persian Gulf, remains an unpredictable killing zone for American servicemen. Reflecting on the recent deaths of 37 sailors on the frigate Stark, Webb said: "Our servicemen on patrol in the Gulf are the quiet heroes of their generation. They risk their lives every day to maintain the cutting edge of our security. The Stark was nearing the end of a six-month deployment as part of continuous naval presence in that region, which began in 1979 during the Iran crisis and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The public realized they were out there only when a tragedy happened."

"But we have to live up to our international obligations," he added. "That inevitably means that our people in uniform are going to be at risk. So it has to be done in a way that allows them to defend themselves. Until now, the military has been plagued by the 'rules of engagement' mentality, as a result of Vietnam. Commanders have been reluctant to use force, even in their own defense, for fear of starting an international incident. A positive result of the Stark tragedy is that the President has made it clear that commanders no longer have to procrastinate before firing when their people are at risk. I definitely will back up any decision necessary to save American lives."

A measure of Webb's character is the strong bond of friendship and loyalty that he still maintains with the men who served under him in combat. For his heroics on July 10, 1969, Webb was recommended for the Navy Cross—not by his superior officers, but by his own men.

In Dallas, Michael McGarvey, a former member of Webb's platoon, said: "I met Jim when he first arrived in the field. He had people's respect almost immediately because he would be up front leading, rather than ordering from behind. And people believed that he genuinely was concerned about their well-being. I'm talking about a guy that, after I got hit with a land mine, sat down beside me and cried."

"We had 56 people hit in an eight-week period," McGarvey added, "so you knew things were rough. But we won virtually every firefight we were in. Jim was in action in Vietnam, where he deservedly received the Navy Cross, a Silver Star and two Bronze Stars. I guarantee that when you face the Tiger, Jim's going to be there with you. He hasn't changed much in the last 17 years."

Webb believes that spirit and cohesion in the military are built on the willingness of its members to sacrifice for their country and fellow servicemen. As one of his first acts, the new Navy Secretary made headlines by reversing the special privileges that had been given to athletes. He ruled that Naval Academy graduates—like the basketball star David Robinson and Napolean McCallum, who played football for the Los Angeles Raiders—had agreed to a commitment to serve the nation in exchange for a free education that cost taxpayers a lot of money. And the duties of a commissioned officer, Webb reflects, "are a full-time responsibility."

U.S. Navy

The Navy frigate Stark lists to port after Iraqi attack in the Persian Gulf. Webb says U.S. servicemen abroad must be empowered to defend themselves at all times.

Marines have always been a proud, close-knit fraternity with a hard-earned reputation for personal and collective honor. A much-publicized series of incidents—from the Beirut bombing, to Oliver North's Fifth Amendment testimony, to the Moscow spy scandal—has shaken the Corps to its roots. Some experts have criticized the Marines as being too preoccupied with image-polishing rather than traditional hard-nosed character-building. They question whether emphasis on recruiting exclusively high school graduates guarantees the heart and dedication expected of Marines.

Marine drill instructors now are prohibited from using their legendary profanity, or mentally harassing or physically challenging new recruits. Ambulances must be present at confidence-building activities. Jogging routes are lined with emergency telephones and water hoses. Old Marines say it's small wonder that some new Marines have discipline and morale problems.

Webb believes that the attitudes it develops have kept the Marine Corps, which is a self-contained force within the Department of the Navy, a strong institution. He reflects that small-unit leadership always has been the strength of the Corps. He feels it is needed more than ever today to keep young Marines from wallowing in self-doubt because of recent events.

On a balmy spring afternoon, I accompanied Secretary Webb on a visit to the Marine training base in Quantico, Va. An auditorium was packed with newly commissioned lieutenants. With close-cropped haircuts and wearing pressed camouflage uniforms, they listened silently as Webb addressed them. Clad in a beige suit and red tie, as solidly built as the instructors at Quantico, Webb reminded the young Marine leaders of their responsibilities:

"There are few honors that this country can bestow that are higher than the trust we place in military officers. A Marine officer should never forget the balance between the authority you command and the humility necessary to take care of your people. It doesn't mean cutting your men slack when they need to do a good job.

"Marine Corps history has always been the same—it's personal courage, both physical and moral. It's a sense of duty and accountability to your comrades, to the Marines who have gone before us and to your country. And if a small number have failed in this area, it should only make the rest of us more determined to live by those standards."

Bringing the Marine Corps back is an immediate challenge. But Secretary Webb has a much larger responsibility: to oversee and sustain the readiness of our navy. The obstacles that must be overcome to staff the revitalized fleet include Congressional budget restrictions and a potential manpower shortage.

"In the last six years," Webb said, "our navy has built back up to nearly 600 ships, from a low point of 479 in the late 1970s. The health of the navy is a direct indicator of the vigor of our nation. The United States has always been a maritime nation. We communicate, trade with and defend our allies along sea-lanes. Our credibility derives from our naval ability to react quickly to global emergencies and, if necessary, to direct our power to any shore.

"Since the mid-1970s, when our 1000-ship fleet was cut in half, the Soviet navy has made quantum leaps in their number of surface combatant ships. Their submarines now outnumber ours by a ratio of 3 to 1. Their main objective is to interdict our trade and transport in times of conflict and to intimidate our allies during peacetime.

"In the last 10 years, the Soviets have gained port facilities in the Middle East, the Indian Ocean, around the Horn of Africa and in southern Africa, and especially in the Pacific through their bases in Vietnam and Cambodia. And more than at any time in history, they are doing maneuvers just a few hundred miles off our Atlantic Coast and in the Caribbean, where two-thirds of our trade and natural resources must pass through."

Among the navy's immediate priorities are: building two new aircraft carriers to replace outdated World War II-era models; developing a new class of submarines to help counter the Soviets' numerical advantage and espionage-acquired technological gains; sustaining manpower, especially in the ranks of ship officers and aviators; and improving medical care for servicemen and their family members.

The major Soviet naval emphasis is on submarine warfare, with 280 submarines to America's 96. Soviet attack subs now operate regularly off our coastline and along the major naval chokepoints around the world. Although they are noisier, the newest Soviet subs are faster, dive deeper and can outshoot American submarines, according to the Department of the Navy. To meet the Soviet challenge, Webb favors immediate construction of a new class of American sub, the SSN 21, or Sea Wolf.

Besides his combat experience, Webb comes into his new office with a unique respect and understanding of the political process. He has been a legal counsel in the House of Representatives and spent three years as Assistant Secretary of Defense, for which he received the Distinguished Public Service Medal.

In contrast to recent events, where gung-ho Marines in political offices overstepped their bounds, Webb understands the need for a well-coordinated relationship between military and political leaders. He believes that a breakdown in planning and a lack of definition of the Marine Corps' role and mission led to the recent debacles. In 1983, Webb did live television reporting from Lebanon after the bombing of the Marine barracks, which took 241 lives.

"Many times in its history, the Marines have been sent on missions with political overtones," he reflected. "But we should never again send them into a war zone as a military show of force without a clearly defined mission.

"One afternoon in Beirut, I was under fire with a Marine platoon. Their restraint and discipline were excellent. But they weren't even allowed to dig in to protect themselves from the violence all around them. The State Department kept saying, 'Don't provoke—this is not a military mission. You're here to calm the Lebanese people. Just show the flag.' The irony was that the average Marine I talked with on the ground understood the complexity of his environment better than the average Congressman. But they were powerless because their orders did not allow them to defend themselves."

Webb said the Marines, traditionally plagued by a limited budget, must make wise decisions on the types of equipment they purchase. For example, he has ordered a review of the expensive V22 Osprey aircraft, which hovers like a helicopter and can fly at 350 mph but which may not be appropriate for troop transport or medical evacuation. He said that for the price of one V22, $23 million, the Marines could buy 10 durable Huey helicopters, which already are proven lifesavers in combat.

Even though technology has become a larger part of every branch of the military, Webb still believes that there is no substitute in the Marine Corps for guts and self-reliance.

In his spacious Pentagon office, Webb is surrounded by relics that reflect American military history and Marine Corps tradition: his grandfather's Civil War diary, metal shards from the World War I battlefield of Verdun, defused grenades from the Pacific beachheads of Tinian and Saipan, a bowl of sand from Iwo Jima. Leaning against a side table is a framed, 3-foot-square, tattered Viet Cong flag that he captured in the battle where he was wounded in 1969. Near the flag is a miniature bronze replica of the infantry statue that overlooks the Vietnam Memorial.

Comparing today's high-tech Corps with the "old Corps" that he served in, Webb poignantly said: "All of this sophisticated gear is tremendous stuff. But troops shouldn't become dependent on it. A conflict will be a different ball game at first, with all this new technology. But after a few weeks, it will be the same as it has always been. A lot of this high-tech gear will be down for maintenance or jammed up with sand or mud. A rifle battalion is going to keep on plugging along."

"That's why we have to keep teaching basics," he added. "Attitudes developed in the training environment have always made the Marine Corps strong. And if you've got guys with enough guts and pride to pick up savvy on the battlefield and use it, you're going to win."

WHAT THE MARINES NEED

This is what Secretary Webb says are the basic needs of the Marine Corps:

- Define its role. "On paper, the Marines are defined as an amphibious force. In reality, they're a complete tactical package, including fixed-wing air support. They must be able to go anywhere on 24 hours' notice."
- Define its mission. "On deployments with political overtones, Marines must be given a clearly stated military mission. We should never again put them in as a military show of force, like Beirut, and not allow them to adequately protect themselves."
- Mobility. "The Marines have bought heavy equipment like the M198 howitzer and M1 tanks, which are difficult to transport. Mobility should be the determining factor in the types of equipment the Marine Corps purchases.
- Training. "Attitude, which is developed in training, has historically sustained the Marines. Small-unit leadership has always been their great strength. Today, instructors turning out young Marines should pump them up about their responsibilities, not wallow in self-doubt because of what a few people did at some embassy."
- Embassy guards. "The guards responsible for the problems in Moscow should be held accountable for their acts. However, there was an obvious lack of oversight by their superiors, including the ambassador. It is very clear that they did not take the sophistication of the KGB very seriously. Guards need to be better educated about the cultures and dangers they face, whether military or espionage."

Where small claims make for big audiences

THEY TELL IT TO THIS JUDGE ON TV

Judge Joseph A. Wapner of The People's Court.

Deborah Feingold

FOR EACH OF THE women, it was a matter of principle. The plaintiff had purchased a horse in good faith. Its original owner, the defendant, had sold the mare when attempts at breeding her had failed. After the sale, the plaintiff discovered that the mare was pregnant. But the defendant refused to hand over the breeding papers, maintaining that the foal belonged to her. Each woman was polite, presentable, articulate and tough as nails, determined not to give an inch. The judge heard them out, then announced, "I'll take a few minutes and come back and give you my decision."

As the women stood at their respective lecterns, the minutes ticked by, inching toward a half hour—an awfully long time for a judge to make a decision in a small-claims court. Unexpectedly, the bailiff appeared and motioned to the women to follow him to the judge's chambers. This was truly unusual. After all, this case was not being tried in an ordinary courtroom but before Judge Joseph A. Wapner in The People's Court, a real court that is also a TV show seen every weekday on stations around the country. There were 10 cases to be heard today. If the camera operators, crew members and technicians stayed on after 6 p.m., they went on double time.

Down the hall, inside his "chambers"—actually an office bestrewn with law books—Judge Wapner closeted himself with the two women. Back in the studio, the audience shifted restlessly, the production executives made small talk, and the pages began an earnest discussion of their respective golf games. Doug Llewelyn, the show's announcer, did a David Letterman imitation. Ralph Edwards, the venerable This Is Your Life host whose production company produces The People's Court, loitered outside with the other executive producer, Stu Billett. "Judge Wapner does this every so often," Billett explained, with remarkable good humor for a man whose money was ticking away. "He takes as much time as he needs to reach the correct judgment."

Court in session. Judge Wapner, with bailiff Rusty Burrell to the right, hears testimony in small-claims case as cameras roll.

The next morning, in his home in the hills of Bel Air, Calif., Joseph Wapner, 67, sat under the skylight in the airy kitchen and talked about his unusual courtroom. "First, last and always, I am a judge," he stressed. "And first, last and always, I am trying a lawsuit."

Although some viewers assume that the silver-haired Wapner is an actor, The People's Court is not theater. California law allows retired judges to preside over cases when both parties consent. The show is taped every Wednesday in a TV studio near Sunset Boulevard, but in the eyes of the law it is every bit as valid as the proceedings in any marble-columned courthouse.

"I won't allow any monkey business," says Judge Wapner. "This is a court, and I'm trying a case."

Judge Wapner never forgets that fact. "I won't allow any monkey business," he said. "This is a court, and I'm trying a case. If somebody comes in chewing gum, Rusty, my bailiff, goes over with a piece of paper and makes him take it out. If somebody is wearing a hat, he makes him take it off."

Even in his striped, short-sleeved shirt, Wapner, who is almost 6 feet tall, has the presence and well-reasoned conversation of a judge. For 18 years, he served on the California Superior Court, for two of them as its presiding judge. He first learned his respect for the court from the other side of the judge's bench. "I received my B.A. degree from USC and became assistant credit manager of a jewelry store," he recalled. "My first assignment was to go to small-claims court with people who didn't pay on their conditional sales contracts. The first case I had involved a lady who had bought a set of silver flatware. I came into court armed with the box of silver and the contract. The judge said, 'Mr. Wapner, you've got the contract, but she can't afford to pay.' I said, 'Yes, but the contract is such that I don't have to take back the silver.' The judge said, 'She can't afford it. You keep that silver, and the contract is at an end.' That was my first defeat—my first case in small-claims court."

"When I was in college, I looked in awe at lawyers," Judge Wapner continued. "I thought they were the best and the brightest. I really didn't think at the time that I was capable of handling it."

BY MICHAEL RYAN

He went from the jewelry store to the Army, where he was assigned to defend soldiers in courts-martial (and where he also, though he never mentions it, received the Purple Heart and the Bronze Star for bravery under fire in World War II). By the time the war had ended, he knew where his career would be. He went to USC law school and hung out his shingle with his father, also a lawyer.

"My father had already decided, before I passed the bar, that it was going to be Wapner & Wapner," the judge remembered. "He had the stationery printed. I was a very obedient young man, so I did it. [Two of Judge Wapner's three children are lawyers.] My father wanted to be a judge, and I watched judges—how they acted, what they did—and thought it would be the kind of life I would like. I like sorting out facts and making decisions. I like being in charge."

Anyone who watches The People's Court—and the viewers reportedly range from high school students and housewives to justices of the Supreme Court—knows that Judge Wapner is in charge. He vigorously examines the parties before him, sometimes joking with them. Occasionally, when a witness is unresponsive or insolent, he lets a bit of his anger show. "I don't rant and rave and shout," he said, "but I might let somebody know how I feel. If a judge is sitting up there stone-faced, people don't know what he is thinking. They don't know how to argue. They don't know what to say to persuade the judge."

Judge Wapner said he has learned a lot about people from his years on the bench: "I see the good and the bad, the selfish and the unselfish, the kind and compassionate and the mean no-goods. What I like about running a court is seeing people, analyzing them to see whether they're telling the truth, whether they're in this for greed or have an honest claim. Sometimes you have documentary proof and prior statements. Sometimes it gets down to a gut feeling; you look at the demeanor of a person. Sometimes you have to distinguish between people who are nervous because they are in court and people who are nervous because they are lying. Sometimes you tell by looking in their eyes."

Joseph Wapner has been seen at work by more people than any other judge in the history of the republic. He takes that fact seriously, but he takes it with equanimity as well. "It puts a tremendous burden on me to try to exemplify what a good judge should be like and to try to enunciate what I consider the law to be," he said. "In most cases, I'm stricter about the law than I might be otherwise. I want to be sure that the public has a perception of someone who's fair and reasonable and understanding—and who follows the law. I can't let visceral reactions influence me. It's a real difficulty, finding for someone you think is a horrible person or finding against someone who is good and sweet and wouldn't harm a fly but just got caught in a horrible situation. You can't let sympathy invade your judgment."

But you can let common sense—and the enormous influence that comes with being the country's best-known judge—help make your judgment fair. Take the case of the pregnant horse. As Judge Wapner saw it, the entire transaction had been based on a mistake: the belief by both parties that the mare was not expecting. "I went back into chambers and started analyzing what I'd heard," he explained. "I started thinking about how I would make my decision, and I realized that, if I could get them to settle the lawsuit, they would both be better off. I could have decided it, of course, but a settlement is always better."

The quizzical looks—and the impatience—grew as the studio audience waited another half hour with no explanation. The production staff gathered outside the chambers door, bursting with curiosity. Finally, the two women emerged and filed back into the courtroom. The Hon. Joseph A. Wapner took the bench and announced, "The parties have reached a settlement." The plaintiff would pay the defendant $850 for the foal; the defendant would turn over the breeding papers.

As they walked out of the courtroom, both women were smiling, apparently satisfied. Justice had been done.

What can we learn from victims of torture and violent crime?

We're Tougher Than We Think

Ricki Rosen

A Salvadoran torture victim is comforted by Nancy Pocock, 76, a Quaker who is a volunteer for an unusual community center in Toronto.

"People recover faster if they can turn their suffering into something new," says Dr. Allodi.

"PEOPLE OFTEN numb themselves to get through something really bad," says Dr. Robert Jay Lifton, a New York City psychiatrist. "You have to be tough to survive a concentration camp or a sexual assault or a hijacking—and in that sense the numbing is life-enhancing, necessary and not to be judged. But once the trauma is over, the therapist has to help the victim to stop."

A new medical specialty, called survivor therapy, is helping victims of extreme trauma to resume normal lives. At the same time, therapists are learning more about the way we all react to and cope with stress during crises and how to speed recovery. For example:

- Anger should be released as quickly as possible.
- The impact of a trauma should never be minimized.
- A survivor who helps others is likely to recover faster than one who tries to put the past behind him.

Survivor therapy involves the rehabilitation of victims of irrational and extreme violence. Specifically, it deals with torture victims. Though, happily, most Americans will never experience political torture, the condition victims suffer from—post-traumatic stress syndrome—is commonplace among Vietnam veterans, former POWs, rape victims, battered wives, hostages, survivors of terrorism and Holocaust survivors.

Says Dr. Lifton, a leading expert on the syndrome: "The symptoms, which can be debilitating, include sleeplessness, nightmares, jumpiness, inability to concentrate. What really defines it is the problem of the survivor who, having experienced a trauma, cannot absorb it or get rid of it."

Leading in the research is the Canadian Center for the Investigation and Prevention of Torture, founded in 1983 in Toronto to treat victims of political violence from around the world. The center is financed by the Canadian government, the United Nations and private donations. Its more than 100 physicians, social workers, lawyers and volunteers combine traditional therapies with an unusual amount of personal contact.

Dr. Federico Allodi, 52, the psychiatrist who is the center's chairman, points to the case of a teacher who had been imprisoned by the military junta in Argentina from 1976 to 1980. The man had been tortured during parts of his confinement and held in isolation for long periods. Soon after his release, he moved to Canada to start a new life. But he could not escape his dark memories and often considered suicide. The Toronto center was his last hope.

Besides therapy—which stressed the need to deal with his anger and irrational guilt—Dr. Allodi invited the teacher to social events and gave him books to read, including those of Elie Wiesel, the 1986 Nobel Prize-winner who writes about his Holocaust experiences. "With Wiesel," explains Allodi, "he could see there were useful ways to deal with extreme suffering—to become a witness."

Within a year, the man was teaching refugee children and had become active in human-rights organizations. Says Allodi: "We say to patients, 'You have a horrible memory that you can't rid yourself of—so you must sublimate it. Use your suffering to help others avoid the same experience.'" He notes that the center has helped nearly 1000 patients return to productive lives; only one has been lost to suicide.

"After trauma," says Allodi, "talking it out quickly is so important. The horror is brought out in the open right away and disposed of—instead of compounded." He warns against minimizing the incident: "Friends often say to a rape victim, 'Be grateful that it wasn't worse—you're still alive!' The statement may be well-meaning, but we find that our people recover better when they can get angry about what happened to them."

People who experienced human kindness in the midst of their trauma also will recover faster. "The assault victim who was helped by a stranger will later feel better about people than the victim who had to do it alone," explains Joan Simalchik, the center's coordinator.

The best news to come out of the Canadian center is how resilient people seem to be. "Our patients have been through hell," says Dr. Philip Berger, one of the founders, "and yet—with the minimum of love, care, decency—they mostly do find ways back." P

SUMMER FLICKS AIM AT NERDS AND JOCKS

20th Century-Fox

Robert Carradine, at wheel, and fellow nerds

What's a true summer flick? A movie like Revenge of the Nerds II: Nerds in Paradise (20th Century-Fox), in which Robert Carradine again plays the leader of a college's brainy misfits, or White Water Summer (Columbia Pictures), starring Kevin Bacon as a gung-ho outdoorsman who takes a group of teenage boys for a wilderness trip. Both are lighthearted, hot-weather adventures positively guaranteed not to strain your brain. Then there's The Squeeze (Tri-Star Pictures), a comedy-thriller that pits Michael Keaton and Rae Dawn Chong against some nasty thugs involved in a big-bucks electronics scam.

BOOKS

A Soldier Tells of His Vietnam "Offering"

Tom Carhart's The Offering (Morrow, $17.95) is a kind of nonfiction equivalent of James Webb's Vietnam novel Fields of Fire—a graphic account of what the war was like in terms of those who fought it.

Carhart is a West Point graduate who went to Vietnam as a lieutenant, fought beside his men, experienced victories and defeats, and tells candidly about his own fears and failures. His belief is that, whatever the nature and outcome of the war, the Americans who fought it made an "offering" which too many of their countrymen still fail to understand and appreciate.

Among the many books that have been written about the conflict in Vietnam, this one leaves the feeling that it speaks with the voice of a true soldier.

AWARD

W. Clement Stone Wants To Endow Your Dream

It's no wonder that the Chicago insurance tycoon W. Clement Stone believes in the power of a "positive mental attitude": Born into poverty, he was left fatherless at 3, and he and his dressmaker mother went to live with an aunt and uncle. He sold newspapers at 6, had his own newsstand at 13, began selling insurance at 16 and saved enough to start his own agency at 20—and to marry his high school sweetheart at 21.

As of today, the 85-year-old Stone has given away more than $275 million. And he particularly likes to offer a hand to people who, like himself, have overcome great difficulties and gone on to help others. Through his Endow a Dream award, he offers $100,000 each year to such a person—the money to be given not to the award-winner but to a charitable organization of the recipient's choice.

In past years, the award has gone to people like Sharon Komlos of Boca Raton, Fla., who, since a violent crime left her blind, has devoted her life to speaking to crime victims and others in need; and Chicago's Marva Collins, who pulled herself out of poverty and then put her savings into a school for ghetto children.

To nominate someone you think deserves this award (people may not suggest themselves), write to the W. Clement & Jessie V. Stone Foundation, Dept. P, 111 E. Wacker Drive, Suite 510, Chicago, Ill. 60601. Deadline for the receipt of applications is July 31.

Rock relaxes at mansion he called "the Castle," purchased in 1962 for $167,000

As we go to press, the Beverly Hills home of the late actor Rock Hudson reportedly has been sold for a sum between $2.2 million and $2.75 million. After the film star died of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome in 1985, his two-story Mediterranean-style house was placed on the market for $7 million. Prospective buyers, nervous about catching the disease, wouldn't even visit the premises. A few months ago, however, as the asking price was slashed to $2.9 million, potential purchasers conquered their fear of AIDS. They began inspecting the Hudson home and making offers.

A popular West German weekly, Bunte, recently polled 2000 men and women, asking them to name their country's most handsome celebrity. President Richard von Weizsäcker, 67, topped the poll. The actor Götz George was voted runner-up, while Boris Becker, the 19-year-old tennis champion, was rated third.

Pact Prospects

Word out of Washington and Moscow has it that prospects for a third summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev—possibly in the fall and most likely in the U.S.—are "very good" and "closer."

White House Chief of Staff Howard H. Baker Jr. used the words "very good" in a May 26 breakfast interview with reporters in Washington, D.C., and Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vladimir Petrovsky used "closer" in a May 15 interview with U.S. correspondents in Moscow.

Tax Tip

The Commerce Clearing House of Chicago, which provides clients with the latest tax information, has a suggestion for those of you in a bona fide (genuine) business or trade. If you're in the market to increase your tax deductions, consider the possibility of hiring your children for the summer.

Salaries, wages and other compensation paid to children are deductible, according to the Chicago firm, provided the compensation "is 1) an ordinary and necessary expense, 2) reasonable in amount, 3) based on actual services rendered and 4) actually paid or incurred."

The firm points out that only taxpayers engaged in a trade or business may deduct as a business expense those wages paid to their children for work performed in the trade or business, which is defined as "an activity carried on for a livelihood or for profit." As an example, it presents the case of Rose Black, fictional owner of a video rental store, who hired her 17-year-old son, home from college for the summer. His duties included helping customers and distributing advertisements, for which he was paid $4 an hour. Rose also paid her son $25 a week for mowing the lawn and taking out the trash at their place of residence. Rose can deduct the amount paid to her son for services performed at the video store but not the amount paid for the work done at home. The latter expenses were personal, since they were not related to Rose's trade or business.

If you're interested in hiring your kids for the summer, we suggest you call the nearest Internal Revenue Service branch and ask for its Federal Tax Information service. Also check with your accountant, lawyer or whoever helps you with tax preparation to make sure you're eligible for the deduction.

Streets of Tokyo—not the place to be for foreigners trying to stretch a buck

Tokyo is the world's most expensive city for foreigners. New York is America's highest-priced city. And Geneva is the most expensive city in Europe, where the decline in the value of the U.S. dollar, relative to major European currencies, has contributed substantially to the rise in the cost of living. These are some of the findings disclosed recently in Geneva by the Business International Index on Executive Living Costs Abroad.

The index is based on the cost of a basket of food, household supplies, utilities, alcoholic drinks, tobacco, clothing, domestic help, transportation, recreation and entertainment.

According to the index, which some corporations use to determine the salaries of their expatriate employees, six of the 10 most expensive cities are in Africa. Herewith the top 15:

1) Tokyo, Japan
2) Osaka/Kobe, Japan

IN STEP WITH:

BY JAMES BRADY

Phyllis Diller

THERE ARE THREE things I didn't know about Phyllis Diller.

First, there never was a Fang. She made him up. She has had a couple of husbands, but neither of them bore the slightest resemblance to Fang.

Second, she didn't start out as a comedienne but as a writer, doing advertising copy. She has been writing ever since—a half-dozen books, most of them best-sellers.

Third, she's smaller, more delicate-looking and a lot prettier than she pretends to be.

Deborah Feingold

I'll get back to pretty in a moment.

Phyllis was born in Lima, Ohio, on July 17, 1917, which means that she'll be 70 this month. Her maiden name was Driver; the Diller derived from her first husband, whom she met in college and married in 1939.

She was doubling as a housewife and mother and writing ads when, in 1955, pals talked her into doing a comedy tryout at the Purple Onion in San Francisco. They thought she was funny; her monologues in the laundromat had convinced them. They were right. The Purple Onion "tryout" lasted 89 weeks.

I've interviewed her a couple of times. The last time she looked, well, prettier than before. I'd heard all the rumors about facelifts, but how do you ask a woman about things like that? I shouldn't have worried. Phyllis told me all about it—how much it cost, how much it hurt, how long it took to heal. (She has had two facelifts, two nose-jobs and many other improvements.) She wasn't just kidding around. On the subject of cosmetic surgery, at least, Phyllis is a very serious person. She thinks if it makes you look and feel better and you can afford it, go ahead. Give it a try. But get the right doctor; don't put yourself in the hands of quacks.

There are two kinds of "insult" comics. One, the Don Rickles type, ridicules the audience. The other, like Phyllis, makes fun of herself. You think this is easy? It takes enormous self-confidence to go out there and make people laugh at you. As small and delicate as she looks, inside Phyllis Diller there is stainless steel.

Still, when you approach her for an interview, she's wary, almost nervous, not sure what you're going to ask, not sure which role she's going to play. If you start off with Fang references, she swings immediately into the flow, firing off hilarious one-liners at a staccato pace. If you want to be serious, she slows down, thinking over each answer before speaking.

That's how she is when she talks about her music. Miss Diller is an accomplished pianist who has performed with some of our best symphony orchestras. She's also a crackerjack businesswoman, with her own production company headquartered in New York. With all this, she still had time to raise five kids.

Oh, yes, long before Clint Eastwood was elected mayor of Carmel-by-the-Sea, Phyllis was honorary mayor of Brentwood, Calif.

BORN: July 17, 1917, in Lima, Ohio. PERSONAL: Married to Sherwood Anderson Diller, 1939-65; five children. Married to Warde Donovan, 1965-75. FILMS: Include Splendor in the Grass (she played Texas Guinan), 1961; The Fat Spy, 1965; Eight on the Lam, 1967; The Sunshine Boys, 1975; The Private Navy of Sergeant O'Farrell, 1968. TV SERIES: Show Street, 1965; The Pruitts of Southampton, 1966-67; The Beautiful Phyllis Diller Show, 1968. BOOKS: Include Phyllis Diller Tells All About Fang, 1963; Phyllis Diller's Marriage Manual, 1967; The Joys of Aging and How to Avoid Them, 1981.

BRADY'S BITS

I knew that Bob Hope and Phyllis often worked together. "I don't make fun of his nose," she cracks, "and he doesn't ridicule my body." I once asked Bob about her. He said she'd gone with him to entertain the troops in Vietnam about 20 Christmases ago. "Here were all these beautiful actresses and showgirls," said Hope, "and when it was over, you know who the guys wanted back onstage? Yup. Our Phyllis. She just knocked them out."

Phyllis Diller turns 70 this month. And looks better than ever. Her secret? Hard work, clean living ...and a facelift.

PBS Highlights 'American Masters'

By Evan Levine

"When I was born, my mother asked the midwife, 'Is it a boy or a girl?' And the midwife said, 'Neither one. It's a writer.'"

With these words, Isaac Bashevis Singer, the 1978 Nobel Prize winner for Literature, begins the documentary that opens PBS's "American Masters" series on Monday, July 6. (Check local listings.) It is an anthology series of documentaries, each of which profiles one of America's native-born and/or adopted "masters" of the creative arts. In addition to Singer, illustrator Maurice Sendak, pianist Artur Rubinstein and film comedian Charlie Chaplin will also be included. William Wyler, who directed such classic films as "Jezebel" and members of the Negro Ensemble Company are also profiled.

Rather than being heavy-handed attempts at pure narrative, the documentaries show the artists working talking, lecturing. Rare footage from Chaplin's films is used (these episodes are rebroadcasts), while Rubinstein and Wyler are each remembered from a unique perspective by their children. The episode on Singer, directed by Amram Nowack, also contains a great deal of humor. He is seen eating in the cafeteria on New York's Lower East Side that inspired many of his stories. He is also seen refusing to clean up his study. "There was chaos before the world was created," says Singer. "Before God said, 'Let there be light,' there was chaos."

Judd Hirsch is occasionally heard throughout the one-hour film on Singer, which was nominated for an Academy Award in 1986. He reads from Singer's work and occasionally adds some narration. But the 83-year-old Singer does much of the talking. "I look for you in Miami but I can never find you," says a fan. "I'm in the book," Singer tells her. "Good," she says. "I'll call you sometime."

Singer speaks passionately and eloquently about his Polish roots, his love for the short story, and his need to write in Yiddish, which he constantly refutes as being a dying language. "They've been saying it's dying for 200 years," he claims.

Nobel Prize Winner Isaac Bashevis Singer is the subject of the first profile on PBS's "American Masters" series. It airs Monday, July 6. (Check local listings.)

The writer is pleased with the documentary. "They used me a lot, and listened to what I said," As to winning the Nobel Prize, Singer said it was "nice." Nice? "It's good that people read me more and are more interested in me because of it," he admits. "I'll say this. It didn't do me any damage."

The "American Masters" series will run through September 28.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: What has happened to Tom Wopat since the demise of "The Dukes of Hazzard"? Is he still acting? — JANE HUMPHREY, BRISTOL, VA.

Wopat has re-teamed with his former "Dukes" cousin John Schneider in an upcoming CBS movie, "Christmas Comes to Willow Creek." In this production, they'll play brothers. Wopat and Schneider are currently filming in the Yukon.

Dear Michele: One of my favorite TV shows was "F Troop." Are there any plans for a reunion show? — BRAD KINCADE, ALTON, ILL.

ABC has had plans since 1985 for an "F Troop" reunion. It looks as if this movie might air during the 1987-88 season. Series stars Ken Berry and Larry Storch will be on hand, and "any other actor who's available," said a studio spokesman. Former stars Forrest Tucker (who played Sgt. Morgan O'Rourke) and Frank deKova (who played Chief Wild Eagle) are now deceased. "F Troop" originally ran on ABC from 1965-67.

Dear Michele: Can you please tell me if "Scarecrow and Mrs. King" has been canceled? I really like this show, and if it has been canceled, who can I write to in protest? — ELSIE M. RITZIUS, NEWARK, OHIO.

Ever since Amanda and Scarecrow got hitched, the show's ratings had been slipping. After CBS announced no plans to bring back the show next season, the network has been deluged with lettersfrom irate fans. I suggest you write to Viewers for Quality Television, PO Box 195, Fairfax Station, VA 22039. This organization will direct you about how to participate in a save-the-show campaign.

Dear Michele: My daughter and I have a disagreement concerning Pee-wee Herman and Madonna. What is Pee-wee's real name? Did he ever go out with Madonna? — A. & M. SANDOVAL, PUEBLO, COLO.

Super-nerd Herman was born Paul Rubenfeld in 1952 in Peekskill, N.Y. He later changed his name to Paul Reubens, and created his alter-ego of Pee-wee Herman. Herman has claimed to be involved with both Madonna and actress Morgan Fairchild. He also claims to be best buddies with rock star Prince. Keep in mind, these are Pee-wee's claims, and we all know what a vivid imagination he has!

Dear Michele: What does the word "sitcom" mean? I've looked it up in my dictionary, and can't find it anywhere! — FRANK C. PEARSON, SANTA ROSA, CALIF.

The word sitcom is a combination of two words: situation and comedy. The entertainment industry has a language of its own, and if you read any of the trade papers, such as Variety, you will see exactly what I mean.

A Job Hunting Tip

If you know a high school or college student who has graduated this spring, here's a tip you should pass along.

Competition for jobs is tougher than it has ever been. A job applicant needs every advantage he or she can bring into play in an interview. Your first impression is critical. And since 90% of what your potential employer sees of you is the clothing you wear. it makes good sense to be very well groomed.

Good grooming reflects good habits. A poor appearance—especially dirty and/or wrinkled clothing—puts an interviewer on guard for other undesirable traits in a candidate.

Be properly prepared for your job search by bringing your good clothes in to us for fine professional cleaning and finishing care.

Anna Maria Horsford Says 'Amen' To Humor

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — The precious few who gave up a night's TV to see a movie called "Street Smart" a few weeks ago were probably amazed to discover that actress Anna Maria Horsford has it in her to play someone other than Thelma, the goofy, gangly — and very unmarried — deacon's daughter in NBC's Saturday-night series "Amen."

But Horsford is used to being underestimated by her audience. Until "Amen" came along to make use of her quick-fire wit and high-volume humor, she feared that she would be forever typecast asa low-life who would sooner stab a stranger than make him smile.

"I accepted the way producers and casting agents saw me," she says, "because I'd rather be working than sitting at home waiting for a job that is in contrast to the last thing I did.

"In fact, I think I've been lucky in the jobs I've done ... but no role I have ever played has been as widely seen as Thelma.

"TV's a fascinating thing, because millions of people out there seem to think that what they see on the screen is real life," Horsford continues. "If you ask them, they say sure, they know it's only acting — but there's some sneaky little thing in all our minds that tells us otherwise when we sit down to watch a show.

"It doesn't matter so much at the movies, because it's all over in a couple of hours. But when people see you playing the same part week after week, they forget you're an actress ... they think that's you on the tube!"

TV Chatter

TV critics are giving Paul Winfield a hard time. They say that the classically trained actor, who received an Oscar nomination for his role as a black sharecropper in "Sounder" (1972), is just too good to be playing a magic mirror on the ABC sitcom "The Charmings." The series, which was renewed for next season, updates the Snow White story. Winfield plays the mirror Snow White's evil stepmother chats with, as in "Mirror, mirror, on the wall, who's the fairest," etc. With some immodesty, Winfield explains why he has stooped to conquer prime-time TV: "World-class actors have to pay the rent, too!" He also feels his participation in a lowbrow effort like "The Charmings" is "much more a comment on the state of American theater. I did four plays back to back three years ago and almost went into bankruptcy. I don't feel that I'm condescending by doing a half-hour sitcom. One has to look toward some kind of security in one's, uh, middle years."

Besides the lure of big bucks, Winfield says he was being pigeonholed as a dramatic actor, and he loves to do comedy. His working conditions aren't particularly onerous either since his supporting role as a garrulous mirror takes only three days a week. "It's like a nine-to-five job. No more late hours. If I have to do TV, why not have it under the best circumstances?" If Winfield has any complaint, it's that he's stuck in a separate room on stage to create the special effect of a man inside a mirror. But even this mirror has a silver lining. "We've been talking about the 'mirror' breaking out, as it were."

This fall, NBC will premiere a comedy with one very risque theme. "My Two Dads" stars Greg Evigan ("B.J. and the Bear") and Paul Reiser ("Beverly Hills Cop") as young bachelors raising a child together. That may sound like typical sitcom fare, but the twist is that the two men both had an affair with the child's mother, and they don't know who the father is. The original title of theseries was "Who's Dad?"

Illegitimacy as a source of humor? That sounds more like fodder for "Hill Street Blues" than a half-hour sitcom. And there is sensitivity about it within the NBC family. At the network's recent affiliates meeting in Los Angeles, a station manager from Iowa came up to Evigan during lunch and said, "I'm glad you changed the title. 'Who's Dad?' just sounds too sleazy.'"

So, who is the dad? "I'm the father, man," Evigan says combatively, jumping into character. Apparently, much of the questionable humor will revolve around each "dad" insisting he's the real father. But Evigan promises that the paternity issue will be downplayed. "We don't want to make the show controversial. It's a sitcom, not a movie of the week." "My Two Dads" will have the super-hit "Family Ties" as its lead-in on Sunday nights.

Marsha Warfield is as sassy in person as Roz Russell, the tart-tongued court matron she plays on "Night Court." A stand-up comedian when she isn't arm-twisting criminals on the NBC sitcom, Warfield offers an explanation for why male comics tend to dominate the comedy clubs. "The same reason there are more male doctors and politicians — 'cause men run the world and won't let women have anything!" So, what's her solution to this dire situation? "It starts with surgical amputation," she says, shrieking and laughing at the same time. Warfield confesses she doesn't know what "Night Court" 's writers plan to do with her character this fall. "Nobody tells me anything, honey." So what direction would she like her character to take? "I'd like her to spinoff!" Again more shrieking and laughing. "I would really like to do a spinoff. I've always wanted to do my own show. I don't care who I play as long as I make lots more money than I do now. I mean, I'm not starving but there's a big difference between star billing and sixth billing in an expendable role."

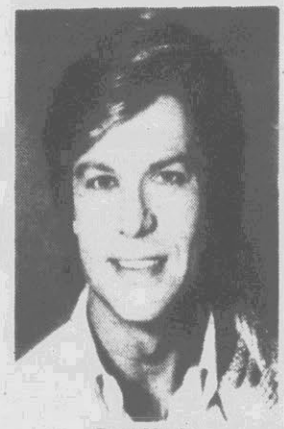
Kirstie Alley, who will be Shelley Long's replacement on "Cheers," describes her character, Rebecca Howe, as "warm and loving in an Imelda Marcos sort of way." Rebecca is named manager of Cheers, when Sam (Ted Danson) sells the bar to a large corporation.

SOAP OPERA WEEK

Why was 'GH' actress written off the show?

By Kimberly Redmond

Can you explain why "General Hospital" had to write Tania Jones (played by Hilary Edson), off the show? – M.S., Sumner, Maine.



Brad Maule

The powers that be on "GH" opted not to renew Edson's contract. One explanation for Tania's demise (she died after being hit by a car) is that the character's death opened up new directions for Edson's on-screen husband, Anthony Jones (played by Brad Maule).

I can't find the real name of the actress who portrayed Myrna Clegg on "Capitol." Can you help? – M.C., Belmont, N.C.

Myrna Clegg was portrayed by film and television actress Marj Dusay, who also originated the role.

Can you tell me what happened to Lynn Loring, who portrayed Patti Tate on "Search for Tomorrow"? – P.H., Brooklyn, Wis.

Loring left "SFT" when she was a teenager, and eventually became a film and television producer. She is currently with MGM.

My friend says that on "Days of Our Lives," Anna DiMera altered the hospital records for Kimberly Donovan's baby so that Victor appeared to be the child's father. I can't remember all the facts. Can you help? – A.P., Outing, Minn.

Emma Marshall (portrayed by Jane Windsor) changed the records so that it would appear that Victor fathered Andrew. Just recently, Shane Donovan (Charles Shaughnessy) learned that he was Andrew's real father.

Charles Shaughnessy

ATTN: Joe Styron - Display Advertising

Dear Joe,

There are many ways for me to spend my advertising dollar. But to find an effective way is an entirely different story.

Last year you gave me an opportunity to advertise in The Daily Reflector's TV Showtime publication. I was, to say the least, hesitant; after all, I rarely sign a 52 week agreement of any sort much less an advertising one.

The program proved however, to be a most effective one. My ad is in the same position every week, all year long. This allows my customers to see what the mall has to offer every day. This consistant form of advertising has proven to be a good performer, therefore I am pleased to renew my position for the 1987/1988 year.

Your continued attention in helping my advertising campaign to be as effective as possible is greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

Lisa V. Tapp-Daughtry

Sean Penn Used To Be A Rather Likable Chap

By Robert DiMatteo

Today, Sean Penn is best known as the surly photographer-punching husband of superstar Madonna, but there was a time when he was genuinely likable.

One of the best teen movies of recent years was Fast Times at Ridgemont High (CBS, July 7). This much-imitated 1982 comedy strikes just the right self-mocking tone. It also features an irresistible performance by Sean Penn before he became such a self-important actor. Penn plays the ultimate Valley boy — a goof-off surfer who thinks nothing of ordering a pizza to be delivered while he's in history class. Amy Heckerling's buoyant direction of Cameron Crowe's astute and witty script, an able supporting cast and a good score complete the fun.

The Fifth Missile (NBC, July 5) offers a contrived scenario — one hopes. Military maneuvers on an American Trident nuclear submarine inadvertently threaten to ignite another world war. Robert Conrad and Sam Waterston star in this 1986 nuke-age nightmare.

Consenting Adult (ABC, July 10) provides a sensitive but whitewashed tale of a family's adjustment to a son's declaration of homosexuality. It is a study of an ideal middle-class family, whose calm is disrupted when the jock son (played by Barry Tubb) reveals that he is gay. Alas, in order to make the drama palatable to the widest possible audience, the makers of this TV movie have avoided controversy at every turn. The gay protagonist is the least threatening guy imaginable.

Shattered Vows (NBC, July 6) stars Valerie Bertinelli as a young nun with a new habit: She has fallen in love with a priest. Should she keep her vows or change her views? Bertinelli acquits herself far more convincingly here than she did in the recent miniseries "I'll Take Manhattan," where her acting was a drain on the trashy fun.

Tolstoy comes to us via the 1985 TV movie Anna Karenina (CBS, July 5). Unfortunately, one of the most passionately conveyed love triangles of all time is rendered here as a period soap opera.

Philece Sampler Gives Donna Another Slant

By Connie Passalacqua

Any way you look at it, the recasting of Donna Love on "Another World" has been the most controversial of the entire soap year. As played by 40ish brunette Anna Stuart, Donna was villainous, vain, neurotic and the mother of 19-year-old twins. When Stuart decided not to renew her contract, her role was eventually taken over by 30ish brunette Philece Sampler. Only a few years earlier, Sampler had played a teen vixen, Renee Dumonde, on "Days of Our Lives."

Somehow though, Sampler has made it work. Intense and multi-dimensional, Sampler was the best performer in the teen glut of the early '80s on soaps. Both the character and actress became audience favorites. "DOOL" is "AW" 's lead-in, and Sampler feels that the adoration of the spill-over audience has helped make her feel comfortable as Donna.

"I'm not a copy of the other person (Stuart) in the role, and I never professed to be," she says. "But I felt very supported and loved coming into this role by the people out there watching. They were glad to see me back, which was heartwarming. I think attitudes about the role have changed, because the writing has." Indeed, Maggie DePriest, who wrote "DOOL" during Sampler's years there, is now writing "AW."

Although Sampler's Donna is more sympathetic, the actress says that Donna will remain a schemer. "The one constant in Donna's life is her love for Michael (played by Kale Browne). There's room for her to go back and forth and get involved with other people's affairs. But Michael will try and keep her grounded."

50th Anniversary Of Great Wimbledon Win

By Adam Beckerman

Of all the Wimbledon men's singles champions, Don Budge, the fiery redhead from Oakland, Calif., surely had the best backhand of them all. This, the year of the 110th All England Tennis Championships from Wimbledon, England, marks the 50th anniversary of Budge's first Wimbledon title. NBC airs live coverage of the men's singles finals Sunday, July 5, at 9 a.m. (ET).

The talented Budge made the semifinals in his first two Wimbledon efforts in 1935 and 1936. In 1937, he came of age. He lost only one set en route to the '37 finals. There, he met Baron Gottfried Von Cramm, a German nobleman who had lost the previous two Wimbledon finals to Englishman Fred Perry. But Von Cramm had exhausted himself in the semifinals. It had taken him a full 56 games to quell Henry Austin 8-6, 6-3, 12-14, 6-1, and he didn't have enough left for the final. Budge, with his elegant strokes and relentless backhand, methodically defeated Von Cramm, 6-3, 6-4, 6-2. That year,he also won the men's doubles with Gene Mako and the mixed doubles with Alice Marble. But Budge wouldn't truly reserve a place for himself in tennis lore until the following year, 1938, when his second consecutive Wimbledon championship catapulted him toward the game's first Grand Slam.

* Last fall, complaining about the excess of NFL games on free TV was a popular pastime. This fall, many of the complainers will be dismayed to discover that a number of first-rate matchups will be available only on cable. Sunday nights on ESPN will feature games involving the last five Super Bowl Champions and all six of last year's divisional winners. The ESPN matchups include Miami at Dallas, Cleveland at San Francisco, Denver at Seattle, Washington at Miami and the Los Angeles Rams at the San Francisco '49ers, a game that has historically decided the NFC West.

* On July 5, ABC will televise the CART Cleveland Grand Prix from Burke Lakefront Airport. The Phoenix 200 and the Indy 500 have proven to ABC that viewers are eager for automobile racing. More is in store. In August, ABC will air the Michigan 500, in September it will air a 200-mile race from the new oval speedway in Nazareth, Pa., and in November it will air the Miami Grand Prix.

DOWN UNDER AGAIN

NBC will rebroadcast "Facts of Life Down Under," a two-hour comedy adventure through Australia featuring the stars of the popular "Facts of Life" series, on Sunday, July 12. The Eastland School graduates (Lisa Whelchel, Nancy McKeon, Kim Fields and Mindy Cohn) and their friend Beverly Ann (Cloris Leachman) are participating in a cultural exchange program with their Australian sister school, and each of them end up in some action-filled or romantic pursuit.
