North: Reagan Said, I Didn't Know

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lt. Col. Oliver North, ending months of silence, testified today that he "never personally discussed" the diversion of Iranian arms sales profits to Contra rebels with President Reagan. He said he assumed — without being told — that Reagan had approved.

But in dramatic testimony before congressional committees, North said Reagan told him in a telephone conversation on Nov. 25: "I just didn't know."

Testifying in a generally calm, even voice, but with some moments of contentiousness, he admitted shredding documents as the Iran-Contra affair began unraveling last October when a plane carrying an American mercenary crashed in Nicaragua.

The 43-year-old North, wearing his Marine officer's dress uniform with six rows of ribbons, testified under a grant of immunity that prevents his words from being used against him in court.

He said the shredding continued through last November, as Justice Department officials began investigating the affair.

"I think I shredded most of that," he said in response to a question about memos on the diversion of funds. "Did I get them all? I'm not trying to be flippant. I tried to destroy all references to covert operations."

In other comments, North:

— Said he told the Iranians a "bald-faced lie" last October when he told them that Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger had advised the president he faced impeachment if the American public found out about the arms sales to Tehran. "I would have offered the Iranians a trip to Disneyland if we could have gotten the hostages home," North said.

— Disputed the use of the term "diversion" to describe the funneling of funds from Iranian arms sales to the Contra rebels. "The only thing we did was divert money out of Mr. Ghorbanifar's pocket and put it to better use," he said of Manucher Ghorbanifar, the Iranian who was middleman in the arms-for-hostages negotiations.

— Said he began shredding documents "in earnest" last October after former CIA Director William J. Casey told him that Canadian businessman Roy Furmark had visited him and had reported that funds had been diverted from Iran to the Contras.

— Said he mistakenly assured then-national security adviser John Poindexter last Nov. 21, when warned that Attorney General Edwin Meese was beginning an inquiry, that "all those documents were destroyed." That was a reference to papers in North's files mentioning the diversion of funds.

North's first day in the witness chair was marked by a running battle between his attorney, Brendan Sullivan, and congressional officials. Again and again, Sullivan stated his objections to the proceedings, and again and again, he was overruled by Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, chairman of the Senate committee.

But the day was not without its humor. "My memory has been shredded," North said at one point as he said he had forgotten a question and wanted it repeated.

North first raised his hand and swore to tell the truth, then vowed to tell congressional investigators "the good, the bad and the ugly" about his role as point man in the Iran-Contra affair and the cover-up that followed.

North began his long-awaited testimony after his attorney made a futile last-minute effort to block the appearance.

His testimony, carried live by the major television networks, was delayed by wrangling between Sullivan and the House and Senate Iran-Contra investigating committees.

North said that in all he did, he sought the approval of his superiors. He said he prepared five separate memoranda seeking formal approval for the diversion of arms sales profits to the Contras, beginning in January 1986.

But as for direct contact with the president, North said, "I never raised it with him, and he never raised it with me during my entire tenure. Throughout the conduct of my entire tenure I assumed that the president was aware of what I was doing and had, through my superiors, approved it."

North also said, however, none of his superiors at the National Security Council told him that Reagan had approved the diversion.

The three national security directors for whom he worked include Poindexter, Robert McFarlane and William Clark. North said that on Nov. 21, Poindexter told him that Reagan did not know of the diversion.

Responding to a request by Sullivan that North be allowed to deliver an opening statement, Inouye said, "Here once again the witness is asking us to bend the law and to suggest that he may be above the law." Inouye said North would be permitted to read his statement on Thursday morning, which is 48 hours after he submitted it to the committee.

Other witnesses have been required to submit their statements 48 hours in advance of reading them.

County Stiffens Penalty For Violating Waste Law

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners Monday approved revisions stiffening the penalty for violations of the solid waste ordinance and voted to fine a developer $2,940 for violations of the sedimentation and erosion control ordinance.

County Engineer Phil Dickerson, who recommended the increased penalties for violations of the solid waste ordinance, said increasing the minimum civil penalties should improve the county's enforcement effort.

As approved the new penalties for scavenging would be $25 for the first offense ($15 in the past), $50 for the second offense (was $30) and $100 for each subsequent offense (was $50), while penalties for illegal dumping (including dumping prohibited materials or quantities of materials in solid waste containers or the landfill or dumping in unapproved areas) will be $100 for the first offense (was $25), $200 for the second offense (was $50) and $400 for each subsequent offense (was $100).

Civil fines for improper transportation, improper vehicles or improv-er license by contract haulers of solid waste will be $100 for the first offense (was $50), $200 for the second offense (was $100) and $400 for each subsequent offense (was $200), while violations of any other provision of the ordinance or the N.C. Division of Health Services Waste Management rules will remain at $25 for the first offense, $50 for the second offense and $100 for each subsequent violation.

38 Die In Sikh Ambush

CHANDIGARH, India (AP) — Sikh terrorists ambushed a bus carrying Hindu pilgrims and massacred 38 people, including four children, in the worst single attack in the history of troubled Punjab state, police reported today.

In New Delhi, security was tightened today to prevent a backlash by Hindus, the majority in India. Authorities banned public assembly, erected road blocks and sealed the border between Punjab and neighboring Haryana state, just north of New Delhi.

Police officials said five to seven Sikh gunmen were involved in the well-planned attack late Monday near Chandigarh, capital of the northern state where Sikh radicals are fighting for a separate homeland.

One of the terrorists died in the crossfire as the attackers fired from inside and outside the bus, police said. At least 32 people were wounded, police said.

Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi issued a statement calling the massacre an "evil deed."

"The inhuman butchery of bus passengers should redouble our resolve to fight the extremists," Gandhi said.

President Zail Singh, a Sikh, called the killings "inhuman and ghastly." He canceled a visit to Punjab scheduled for Wednesday.

MARK W. OWENS JR.

DONOVAN PHILLIPS

Owens, Phillips Seek New Terms

Two current members of the Pitt County Board of Education have filed for re-election to the panel in the Nov. 3 municipal election.

The two candidates are Mark W. Owens Jr., who has served as chairman of Pitt County Board of Education for 17 years, and M. Donovan Phillips, who was appointed to the board in 1985.

A 21-year veteran of the board, Owens has filed as a candidate for seat B in District 4. Owens and his wife, Barbara, reside in Fountain. They have three children.

During Owens' tenure on the board, the school system desegregated, consolidated several tax levied districts into one, held a bond referendum for school construction and consolidated the school systems in Pitt County.

"It has been my privilege to serve on the school board through critical periods in its history, including the integration and consolidation of schools," Owens said after filing Friday. "I believe this historical perspective is important as we continue to face the challenges necessary to meet the needs of Pitt County youth."

"The children of Pitt County are the greatest resource that the citizens of Pitt County have, and it is our duty and responsibility to provide them with the needs to insure a happy and productive life."

In addition to his law practices in Farmville and Greenville, he is a member and elder of the Fountain Presbyterian Church. Owens was the 1986 recipient of the N.C. School Board Association's All State Board.

District 4 includes everything inside the city west of Memorial Drive and south of Fifth Street, including the county offices, Westwood, the Greenville Country Club, Rollingwood and Oakdale. Outside the city the district includes Falkland, Bruce, Rock Spring, Fountain, Farmville, Bell Arthur, Frog Level and Ballards Crossroads.

Phillips, 46, filed this morning for seat A in Greenville's District 1, bounded by Evans Street, Hooker Drive, Memorial Drive, Fifth Street and Latham Street. He resides on Sir Walter Drive in the Cambridge subdivision.

He was appointed to the board by the N.C. General Assembly in 1985 in an effort to provide minority representation on the board.

Phillips said he would like to remain on the board because "I feel a mindset needs to be developed on the board to let the community know there is only one board."

Commissioners Set Guides For Appointed Pitt Panels

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County commissioners adopted a set of policies and procedures for appointments to county boards, commissions and authorities at a meeting Monday, but not before filling vacancies on the Juvenile Task Force and the Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority.

The board reappointed Mary Lehman to a three-year term on the Juvenile Task Force and Garrie Wright Moore to the airport authority for a four-year term.

But appointments to fill vacancies on the Greenville Planning & Zoning Commission and the Greenville Board of Adjustments were delayed and are to be filled in accordance with the new plan.

The new policy and procedures for appointments — recommended by County Manager Kramer Jackson — prohibits anyone from serving in more than two appointed positions and limits all terms of office (unless otherwise regulated by statute) to three-years. Appointees will also be limited to two consecutive terms in any one position.

The policy also calls for appointees who have unexcused absences amounting to more than 25 percent of the meetings in any calendar year to resign.

Appointed position vacancies will be filled after a notice of available appointments is published 30 days prior to the time the appointments are made. And persons interested in the appointment will be required to submit a resume as an indication of their interest to serve.

In other business Monday, the board adopted a resolution requesting the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to clear trees and other debris from the Tar River; awarded a contract for the purchase of office supplies for the coming year to Taff Office Equipment Co. which submitted a bid of $13,328; and approved a list of firemen in Pitt County certifying their eligibility to participate in the state's $25,000 line-of-duty death benefit program and the voluntary Firemen's Pension Fund.

Commissioners also presented cash awards ranging from $25 to $100 — based on a random selection process — for participation in safety meetings over the past year to Health Department employees Marjorie Everett and Nan Rogers, to Joyce Norville of the Department of Social Services and to Glenn Cutrell of the tax assessor's office.

Heart Transplant

A surgical team at Pitt County Memorial Hospital completed its second heart transplant Monday, according to Sallie Whelan, information specialist at the hospital.

The patient, a 42-year-old Martin County man, was in "critical but stable condition" after the six and one-half hour operation, she said.

The family of the patient does not want him identified, Ms. Whelan said. And, "we're not identifying the donor."

The patient was disabled with idiopathic cardiomyopathy, a condition which diminishes the heart's pumping ability, she said.

The transplant was led by cardiac surgeons W. Randolph Chitwood and J. Mark Williams, both with the East Carolina University School of Medicine. They also led the first heart transplant at PCMH on Malcolm Huffman of Beaufort County Feb. 17.

Glass Says He Worked For CIA

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Kidnapped American journalist Charles Glass said in a videotape released today by his captors that his "main job" was with the CIA.

"I am Charles Glass. Many of you know me as a journalist, but few know the truth," Glass, who was reading from a text, said in the videotape delivered to the west Beirut office of a Western news agency.

The tape did not show Glass' captors and it was not clear if the statement had been prepared for him. In an accompanying statement, the kidnappers said they were interrogating Glass and that the "people ... will judge those traitors."

"I used the press as a cover for my main job with the CIA," said the unshaven Glass, who looked broken and choked several times while speaking. "I collect information for the benefit of the CIA. For that I made secret missions, they ordered me to do that," he said.

Glass, 36, of Los Angeles, a former ABC correspondent who was working on a book about the Middle East, was kidnapped June 17 in south Beirut. A previously unknown group calling itself the Organization for the Free People's Defense claimed to be holding him.

Glass was shown from the waist up and wore a dark blue track suit.

The videotape was accompanied by a statement nine-line, typewritten statement in Arabic that claimed "America was and still is trying to exploit us."

The kidnappers said they were revealing "some facts from the outcome of the preliminary interrogation of American spy Charles Glass."

Commissioners Meet

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners will meet Wednesday at 9 a.m. at the county office building at 1717 W. Fifth St.

Commissioners will continue discussion which began at a Monday meeting on the allocation of space in the newly-acquired Shore Drive Plaza office building at the intersection of Second and Evans streets in Greenville and in the court house.

The board is also expected to take action authorizing lawyers to submit the county's new plan for electing commissioners — six from districts and three at-large — for preclearance as required by the federal Voting Rights Act.

The legislation creating the new election method was passed by the General Assembly last month.

At Monday's meeting the board's court house planning committee recommended that the offices of the tax supervisor, tax collector, the public defender and juvenile court counselor move to the new building.

The committee also recommended that the clerk of court be given the offices vacated by the tax departments and that a new courtroom be created on the fourth floor of the courthouse annex.

Housing Authority OKs $1.75 Million '88 Budget

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer
Greenville Housing Authority commissioners have unanimously approved a $1.75 million operating budget for fiscal year 1988.

The $1,755,550 budget, which was accepted by commissioners at their monthly meeting Monday night, marks an increase of $141,550 over last year's budget of $1.6 million.

The 1988 budget includes $1,128,060 in revenue and a $629,938 subsidy from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, according to Kenneth E. Noland, GHA executive director.

According to the new budget, the authority is expected to pay $762,440 for utilities and $266,500 in administrative costs.

The authority has budgeted $401,000 for maintenance operations, which includes salaries, according to Noland, who said a roofing project is a major expense in the 1988 fiscal year.

"Under extraordinary maintenance, we're going to pay $62,500 for 13 new roofs in Newtown," Noland said.

Finishes Program

Eileen F. Cleary of Greenville recently was awarded a Certificate of Advanced Graduate Study from Lesley College, Cambridge, Mass.

New Leader

Congregation Bayt Shalom has announced Cantor Michael Weisser is its new spiritual leader. Weisser is an honor graduate of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in New York City. He is certified by the Board of Cantor Certification.

Weisser also is certified as principal of Hebrew education from the National Association of Temple Educators, and is certified as a teacher of music and Judaica from the New York Federation of Reform Synagogues.

He was the recipient of the Sylvia Davidson Memorial Prize for mastery of Traditional Hazzanut, the Norman Summers Prize for Excellence in Judaic Studies and the A.W. Binder Award for master of the Cantorial Art. He is a member of the American Conference of Cantors and the National Association of Temple Educators and is recognized by the Cantor's Assembly.

Noland said the capital reserve level for 1988 is estimated at $587,448. In other action, the board unanimously approved a $365,760 University Towers operating budget for fiscal year 1988.

The budget includes $141,300 in operating expenses, $192,600 for the annual debt service mortgage and $31,860 to be held in reserve, according to Noland, who said insurance expenses skyrocketed for the University Towers development.

"Insurance costs increased 1,200 percent," Noland said. "All companies seem to be concerned that we were over five floors."

Noland said fire truck ladders usually reach only four floors.

During an executive session, the commissioners, who received a final report on a wage study by Arthur Young, decided to hold off until the City Council acts upon the citywide study conducted by the consultants.

The board also voted to move the authority's longevity schedule in line with the city's time policy. Noland said the change would go into effect on Oct. 1.

The commission tabled a discussion on overtime compensation until a later date.

In regular session, James E. Barnhill, director of GHA operations, told commissioners a house at 401 Roundtree Dr., which was damaged in a fire, is 70 percent repaired and should be ready for occupancy by July 17.

A 147-units painting project is about 19 percent completed, Barnhill said.

"We expect 34 units in the Meadowbrook development to be completed by the end of this week," Barnhill said.

Meanwhile, commissioners voted unanimously to write off $1,575 in accounts receivable.

Director of Resident Affairs Sallye Streeter reported average rent at authority developments in August totaled $125.41. Rent at Meadowbrook was $111.06; Kearney Park, $129.97; Moyewood I, $129.75; Moyewood II, $126.08; Hopkins Park, $128.91; Newtown, $119.01; West Meadowbrook, $112.78.

Officers Injured In Family Feud

DURHAM (AP) — Five members of a family were arrested and several Durham police officers suffered minor injuries during a fracas that included a flying car battery and an elderly family member who attempted to club officers with his cane, authorities say.

Police reports say officers Sunday tried to arrest Curly Burnette, 40, who threatened officers when they arrived to check out a disturbance call. But Burnette ran inside a house.

A 15-year-old girl identified as Burnette's daughter then punched Officer J.M. Morris twice in the face when he tried to enter the house, the reports said.

Meanwhile, the teen-ager's grandmother, identified as Mary McDonald, 57, threw a car battery at Morris and the girl's uncle, Tony McDonald, shoved him, police said. The grandmother then tossed the battery at another officer and beat on him with her fists, the reports said.

Officer H.D. Alexander, who was trying to subdue the girl, said the teen-ager's mother, Vanessa Burnette, 33, then began screaming at him to let her daughter go and struck him several times in the back.

Police say as many as 12 officers were called to the scene.

LEAD IN TEAPOTS, PITCHERS

The Food and Drug Administration has announced a Class I recall of ceramic teapots and pitchers found to contain levels of lead high enough to cause irreversible damage to the central nervous systems of children.

The teapots and pitchers are in the Delft blue mill and flower patterns and are manufactured by M. Dewit Keramische Industrie of Gouda, The Netherlands. They are not coded, but may have stick-on tags on their bases with catalog numbers 0535511 and 0535512 for the teapots and numbers 0530671 and 0530672 for the pitchers.

The teapots may also be labeled "Delft Holland Hanajes Childred," with a symbol on the base. The teapots contain a little more than a quart, while the pitchers hold nearly two quarts.

The recall was begun after FDA analysis of samples revealed levels of leachable lead as high as 11.4 parts per million in pitchers and 24.3 parts per million in teapots. The lead comes from improperly treated glaze.

The FDA is monitoring the recall to ensure that all these products are removed from the marketplace. Consumers should return the teapots and pitchers to the places they were purchased. Anyone who keeps one should be sure it is not used to hold food.

Soviets Begin Trial Of Chernobyl Workers

CHERNOBYL, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Six Chernobyl nuclear plant workers charged with safety violations that caused the world's worst nuclear accident believe they are innocent of most criminal charges, according to a report read today at their trial.

The trial opened today in a makeshift courtroom in the still-evacuated town of Chernobyl in the Soviet Ukraine, less than 20 miles from the plant.

The power plant's former director and five men who worked for him are accused of violating "the rules of technical security" at the plant, according to the presiding judge.

Only the former head of Chernobyl, Viktor P. Bryukhanov, ex-chief engineer Nikolai M. Fomin and his assistant, Anatoly S. Dyatlov, had been named earlier as defendants. The three have been jailed for a year pending judicial proceedings.

The other three defendants, who were not accused publicly until today, still are working at the power plant and live in Zelyony Mys, a town created to house Chernobyl plant workers after the accident. They are Alexander P. Kovalenko, chief of Chernobyl reactor No. 4, where the explosion occurred; Boris V. Rogozhin, the reactor's shift chief; and Yuri Laushkin, senior engineer of the industrial-technical department.

A massive explosion and fire at the No. 4 reactor on April 26, 1986, spewed radiation into the atmosphere and killed 31 people. More than 200 other Soviets suffered acute radiation sickness and 135,000 people were evacuated from the northern Ukraine and southern Byelorussia.

The cloud of radiation eventually spread around the world, but Soviet authorities did not publicize the accident for three days.

The trial began at 1:30 p.m. local time in an improvised courtroom at Chernobyl's House of Culture, a squat white and brown building in the center of town.

The official news agency Tass said the six defendants were charged with violations of safety regulations at explosion-prone plants that resulted in death and "other grave consequences."

Ukrainian officials said the defendants could face up to 12 years in prison.

The defendants sat quietly behind a table at the judge's right and were guarded by a handful of soldiers from the internal security forces.

An investigative commission's report that was read aloud said the defendants generally accept professional responsibility for the accident but believe they are innocent of most criminal charges.

Bryukhanov, the report said, was not at the plant when the explosion occurred and arrived there at 2 a.m. Fomin, who arrived three hours later, blames the design of the plant and technical problems for the accident, the report said.

Dyatlov, who was present at the time of the accident, was said to blame the explosion on a construction fault, and Rogozhin, who was supervising the shift at the time, maintained he did not know details of the experiments going on at the time and believes he carried out his duties correctly.

Dyatlov is accused of sending four men to inspect the reactor without telling them of the danger. He was the only defendant to display any emotion during the proceedings, leaning forward with his fists on the table and closing his eyes when answering questions from the judge.

Relatives of people who died in the accident and plant workers were among those attending the trial. Some foreign reporters also were invited in what was seen as part of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's campaign to hold all officials publicly accountable for their actions.

Presiding Judge Raimond Brize, a deputy chairman of the Soviet Supreme Court, said there would be a second proceeding to determine personal losses suffered by Soviet citizens.

As people arrived in the courtroom, white-gowned technicians checked their clothing for traces of radiation. The town of Chernobyl, 80 miles north of the Ukrainian capital of Kiev, is within a designated "danger zone" extending 18 miles around the plant. Everyone entering the zone is supposed to be inspected for radiation levels.

Alexander P. Kovalenko, information director at the plant, told reporters that radiation levels in the town now are one-tenth of a milliroentgen, four times higher than the area's background level before the accident but still within international safety levels.

The information director has the same name as one of the defendants, but has not been charged with any wrongdoing.

The investigative commission's report that said experiments similar to the one that caused the disaster had been conducted in 1982 and 1985. It said none of the experiments had required permission from supervisors. The report criticized plant officials for failing to fulfill safety rules. It said personnel training was weak, workers were given bad instructions and the plant's technical log was riddled with mistakes.

The seriousness of the situation was made worse by the failure of those in charge to alert their superiors at the time of the accident, the investigators said.

Sixty-seven Communist party members already have been expelled or given stern reprimands for failing to demonstrate leadership and responsibility early in the Chernobyl crisis.

Airliner Lands At Wrong City

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — A Delta Air Lines jet landed at Frankfort's municipal airport during a storm early today because crew members thought they were in Lexington, officials said.

The Boeing 737 jet landed without difficulty, and its 27 passengers and five crew members were bused the 30 miles to Lexington, said Delta spokesman Dick Jones in Atlanta.

The unidentified pilots were relieved of duty pending an inquiry by company officials, Jones said.

Flight 699 originated in Dallas-Fort Worth, made a scheduled stop in Louisville and was to end its trip at Bluegrass Field near Lexington, Jones said. It landed at Capital City Airport in Frankfort about 12:10 a.m.

Don Zochert of the Federal Aviation Administration in Chicago said the Delta pilot was operating under the direction of an air traffic controller in Indianapolis shortly before midnight when he was cleared to land in Lexington.

Shortly after midnight, Zochert said, the controller reported he lost radar and radio contact with the airliner. At 12:10 a.m., another aircraft in the area contacted the Delta jet.

"The (Delta) pilot stated he was on the ground, but did not know where," Zochert said.

The air traffic control tower at Lexington is closed from midnight to 6 a.m.

Zochert said the 5,000-foot runway at the Capital City Airport in Frankfort was considered too short for the jet to take off last night. Jones said a different crew ferried the plane from Frankfort to Lexington this morning without incident.

Candidates Agree To 4 Debates

By SANDY JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The eight Democratic presidential hopefuls and seven Republicans have agreed to four dates for debates during the fall of 1988 if they win their parties' nominations, party leaders said today.

The candidates' promise to the four dates would appear to be a major coup for the parties, which announced last year that they would hold their own general election debates. The League of Women Voters have sponsored presidential debates since 1976.

The dates are Wednesday, Sept. 14; Sunday, Sept. 25; Tuesday, Oct. 11; and Thursday, Oct. 27.

"All the major party candidates on both sides have agreed to set aside these dates," Republican National Committee Chairman Frank J. Fahrenkopf said.

"I think the statement of agreement on these dates takes this commission a long way toward permanent establishment of party-sponsored debates," Democratic National Committee Chairman Paul G. Kirk said.

As for the league, which has said it will go forward with its own plans for debates, Kirk said, "The league filled a void in the past."

Kirk used the analogy of "a little boy whose sister did his homework. ... That can't go on forever."

Fahrenkopf made it clear that the parties' Commission on Presidential Debates does not plan to get involved in primary debates.

Teen-Agers Raped At Barricade

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Three teen-age girls were robbed and raped and two of them were shot today by a group of young men who stopped their car with a makeshift barricade, police said.

The girls, two aged 15 and one 16, were stopped on a street in Northwest Jacksonville at about 1:45 a.m. by a barricade of two 55-gallon drums and a shopping cart, said police Sgt. Steven Richardson.

"At least three boys, maybe four," believed to be aged 16 to 19, rushed to the car from a wood, he said.

"We believe the barricade was put up by the suspects because the obstacle had been removed when officers returned to the scene," Richardson said.

The attackers, two armed with handguns, forced the girls into the back seat and drove to a park, where the girls were robbed and raped, he said.

One of the 15-year-olds was shot in the chest and the other in the arm, he said.

The girl with the chest wound was listed in stable condition at Methodist Hospital and the one shot in the arm was listed in good condition at University Hospital.

After the attack, the young men fled in the car, which was found abandoned a mile from the park.

"Truth In Preference To Fiction"

Bork's Flaw

President Ronald Reagan already had a double-handful of foreign and domestic "essential items" of business to deal with in the weeks that lay ahead.

Then Lewis Powell announced his retirement from the U.S. Supreme Court, setting the stage for one more field of presidential problems he promptly intensified by nominating Appeals Court Judge Robert Bork to fill Powell's seat.

Observers just as quickly saw the choice at worst irresponsible and at best, one that might be overturned.

Liberals, and others who defy pigeon-holing, declare Bork would have an exceptional impact on the court's interpretations and see hard-won causes undermined by Bork's impact. To read their collective assayal, Robert Bork comes across as an ideologue rather than as a Constitutional scholar.

At times like these, it is just as well consent of the Senate is required.

Reagan praises the Bork advocacy of judicial restraint, a doctrine emphasizing judges are to interpret the laws, not to establish new law through their rulings.

The problem is, in Bork's view, "restraint" confers upon a judge the right to ignore principles laid down in past decisions because he dislikes their consequences. In other words, he is free to limit the value of precedent in the specific set of conditions that triggered the case.

We agree the various implications of that viewpoint are filled with portent; and endanger the fabric of opinions in past cases through which the Supreme Court has protected and assured progress of the United States in individual and civil rights. Too, it would represent a radical departure from the standard of consensus in constitutional law.

Justice Powell was seen as representing the "swing vote" in the court he served and Powell proved to be a moderating influence on its rulings. With Bork in that position, that quality would presumably be lost.

Robert Bork would not be the first Supreme Court nominee to be declined by the Senate. If he were rejected, it might open the door to a nominee with a more even-handed philosophy than Bork is seen capable of displaying.

Planning Needed

Growth. There is no question it is with us in Pitt County. One only has to take an auto tour to see it.

New shopping centers go up regularly. Subdivisions are opening and new housing soon appears. Some housing areas are being developed miles from Greenville and often on what were once sleepy rural roads.

Construction is under way at the airport and at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. There is not a motorist who hasn't been stopped for a highway or street improvement project as government attempts to keep up with the ever increasing traffic load.

The statistics show it, too. Pitt County, with a population of 73,900 in 1970, 90,146 in 1980, now has an estimated population of 94,407 (1986). Greenville is seen to have a population of 40,279 (1985).

The county's retail sales for 1985-86 were $785.8 million. If we look at past growth of annual retail sales we can surmise that the county's first $1 billion year is not far away.

Construction for 1986 totaled $80.93 million and $51.56 million of this was in residential building.

Greenville Utilities had 21,927 electric customers in the fiscal year 1976-77. At the end of May this year there were 31,315 electric customers.

Carolina Telephone had 28,479 telephone lines in Pitt County at the end of 1977. At the end of May this year there were 46,121 phone lines in service.

The county disposed of 400,000 cubic yards of solid wastes in its landfill in 1977. At the end of the fiscal year on June 30 the county has disposed of 950,000 cubic yards of waste at the Allen Road site.

Clearly growth is every where and it has been controlled growth to this point. The county has a good mix of industry, business and education. Even Pitt County farming is in better financial condition than the farm economies of many areas of the nation.

It is likely that the growth will continue in future years. We will see more construction, more business, more people and even more waste. The key to it all will be continued planning for growth. We want to continue the mix of elements that contribute to our economy. Most important we do not want to lose the style of life which makes Pitt County a pleasant place to live. This means careful planning of roads, schools, recreation and residential areas. We have the unique opportunity to avoid the mistakes of some of the nation's larger cities.

Bork Debate Could Define Senate Role

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's nomination of Robert H. Bork to the Supreme Court, whether confirmed or rejected, likely will help the Senate better define its own role in choosing federal judges.

In recent years, senators have been skittish about opposing judicial nominations based on the "naked politics" of ideology. Some apparently would consider it bad form for a senator to say about Bork: "He's a good man, a competent judge but just too conservative for my taste. I'm voting against him."

Some liberal Democrats will try to convince their colleagues that approach is appropriate.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., set the early tone. Before Bork was nominated to fill the vacancy created by Justice Lewis F. Powell's retirement, Cranston asked, "Is it proper for the Senate to evaluate a nominee's philosophy" rather than merely gauging his or her temperament and credentials?

"The overwhelming weight of reasoned opinion argues that it is," Cranston said.

But Cranston backed away from casting the pending battle as a partisan fight — the word partisan still makes some senators squeamish.

"On this issue of judicial selection we must be, first of all, senators whose central obligation is not to serve our party but to protect the Constitution we are sworn to uphold."

Anyway you cut it, however, the opposition to Bork will focus as much on whom he is to replace as it does on Bork himself.

Powell's name has not appeared in print many times in recent days without the words "pivotal swing vote." The court's philosophical balance is at stake.

Lost in the furor is the fact that the court's balance would be tipped toward conservatism — maybe more so — if any one of four other justices had left instead of Powell.

Those who will oppose Bork in the Senate Judiciary Committee and on the Senate floor if the nomination makes it that far would be as vehement if the high court vacancy were created by the resignation of William J. Brennan, Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun or John Paul Stevens.

All four are more liberal in their political and judicial philosophies than is Powell.

Democrats who say Reagan should appoint another middle-of-the-roader to replace Powell would be hard-pressed to justify the claim that the president ought to appoint another liberal to replace a retired Brennan or Marshall.

In the nation's infancy, the Senate was more robust in carrying out the "advice and consent" role in federal court nominations given it by the Constitution.

In his 1985 book, "God Save This Honorable Court," Harvard law professor Laurence Tribe notes that Senate inquiry into a Supreme Court nominee's political views dates back to 1795, when John Rutledge's nomination was rejected.

"Occasional abuses or periods of acquiescence do not refute the simple truth that the upper house of Congress has been scrutinizing Supreme Court nominees and rejecting them on the basis of their political, judicial and economic philosophies ever since George Washington was president," Tribe wrote.

He added, "There have been times when the Senate's concern over a candidate's position on important issues has focused as much on the net impact of adding the candidate to the court as on the opinions of the nominee himself."

Bork's nomination appears sure to add a new chapter to that history.

The Post Office: Bad But Not That Bad

WASHINGTON — It's legacy time for the Reagan administration. Cabinet officers are trotting out their pet projects and agendas in a final flurry of political stumping.

Education Secretary William Bennett, for example, has gone on the attack for the conservative social agenda, which some true believers feel has been understressed. Donald Hodel, the Secretary of Interior, though once respected as a moderate, has become a staunch proponent of environmental deregulation and development. (He recently suggested hats and sunglasses as defense against the thinning ozone layer.)

Now, Federal Trade Commission Chairman Daniel Oliver, a free-

trader heretofore no tiger on consumer issues, is calling for the introduction of competition in first-class mail delivery.

In a recent speech to direct mail industry executives, Oliver called the U.S. Postal Service "a glaring example of the deficiencies of government monopolies." Oliver's proposals for postal reform, which come at a time when both rate hikes and postal union negotiations are in the works, include repeal of the Private Express Statutes of 1872, under which the Post Office is the only legal carrier of first-class letters.

The Postal Service has its troubles. Three out of every 100 items arrive late or not at all — and more than one in ten consumer catalogues is not delivered, says the Direct Marketing Association. And who hasn't had to wait in long lines at the local post office? But like many strict free-market solutions, the current proposals have a downside which probably outweighs the foreseeable benefits.

Few deny that the Postal Service is a monopoly of sorts. Although Postmaster General Preston Tisch (brother of CBS's Laurence Tisch) claims that the service is "run like a business" and has competitors, the absence of alternative letter carriers allows the Post Office considerable latitude in pricing and other practices.

By contrast, first-class rates are on the rise: a common letter will cost 25 cents to mail by early 1988. Postage for magazines will rise by 10 percent or more. And third-class rates, used by direct mailers and non-profit groups, will rise about a quarter of their current level.

Oliver, Crane and other critics say we'd pay less for better service if postal delivery were divested and privatized as AT&T was, with perhaps five regional carriers and a national parcel and support corporation.

The Tax Debate That Lies Ahead

RALEIGH — Members of the House Finance Committee thought they were scheduled to debate repeal of the sales tax on advertising, but Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, had other ideas.

In a surprise move at a recent committee meeting, Mavretic fired what he calls a warning shot in what may be the state's next major tax battle. Mavretic proposed not to repeal the sales tax on a portion of the advertising industry, but to expand the tax to the entire industry. It would be the first step, he said, in a move towards a sales tax on services.

Sales tax is not now charged on services. North Carolinians do not pay sales tax on services like auto repair, medical care or tax preparation. Mavretic says the sales tax on services would bring an additional $500 million a year, the equivalent of a full one percent increase in the sales tax. He says the state will soon need the money and that such a tax is fair.

"In the economic marketplace, the majority of activity is subjected to the sales tax," Mavretic said in an interview after his proposal was killed by the committee. "Pretty soon that majority is going to start asking why its economic activity should be subject to sales tax while the economic activities of others is not."

Hugh Stevens, a Raleigh lawyer

and lobbyist for the N.C. Press Association, said there are good reasons for keeping the sales tax off services. "A great many services really serve to drive the economic system. They are the fuel for the capitalistic system rather than the end product. A sales tax is a consumer tax on end products."

Stevens also complained that the sales tax is regressive, hitting the poor more heavily than the rich. But Mavretic has an answer to that. With $500 million in new state revenue from a sales tax on services, the state might be able to repeal the food tax. And Mavretic claimed that the poor don't use many of the services which this tax would hit. For example, big accounting and legal fees.

Stevens agreed with Mavretic to a limited degree. He said the poor wouldn't pay a new tax on backyard pool cleaning, but they do drive older cars which require more repair, and that's where they'd get hit by the tax.

Mavretic's claim that those who now collect the sales tax would want it expanded to services got a mixed reaction from lobbyists for retail merchants. Bill Rustin said retail merchants would not be "overly averse" to adding the sales tax to the services they provide, like TV repairs. (Merchants are adamantly opposed to a sales tax on advertising, he added.) Rustin's associate, Fran

Preston, wasn't so certain merchants would support such a "major shift in the policy of taxation of this state."

Mavretic says that the need for a sales tax on services will become clear "as time goes by and we need more revenue." He noted that implementation of the Basic Education Plan will cost the state billions of dollars in coming years. "Where is that money coming from? We're not talking about stretching out the dollars we have now, we're talking about the need for new money."

Macretic said there are three basic taxes. The property tax is out because it is not a state tax. The income tax is already at seven percent, one of the highest in the southeast. The sales tax is five percent, also about the highest in the region. "If the sales tax can't go up, then it has to go out" to cover more sales, he said.

This is the tax debate that lies ahead for North Carolina.

Strength For Today

Do you ever complain about your bad luck and the injustice of the world? If you do, you are not exceptional. Most of us are ready upon the least pretext to assail others for our failures, or to blame circumstances for our unhappiness.

But we should never forget that we are unhappy because of the people we are. Happiness is neither created by the possession of certain things, or denied us because we lack these things. If things made the crucial difference in people's happiness, the rich would all be happy and the poor would all be miserable.

This is not the case, and never was.

Happiness is an inner state of contentment with the world and particularly with ourselves. Abraham Lincoln was close to the truth when he said that people are about as happy as they make up their minds to be.

Runway Excavation Unearths Farmstead

ELIZABETHTOWN, N.C. (AP) — If it weren't for the 20th century innovation of flight, archeologists wouldn't have been afforded a rare glimpse at 19th century farmers in North Carolina.

Archeological sites discovered in the course of building a new airport runway in Elizabethtown yielded some prehistoric Indian sites and early farmsteads with tableware, bowls, buttons and coins, said Steve Claggett, an archeologist with the state Division of Archives and History.

"We have learned that these early 19th century farmsteads are still around, or at least the archeological information is still there, and from that we can learn things that aren't in the history books," he said.

Particularly surprising was the discovery of the coins, which included English pieces from the 1750s and 1760s, a 1791 Spanish silver coin and a number of American copper coins from 1806 and 1807, Claggett said.

"Because money was so hard to come by, people tended to hang onto it for long periods of time, he said. That explains why some of the coins predate the farms by at least 50 years.

From the artifacts and information gathered at the sites, archeologists were able to determine that the people who lived there basically were good, solid, lower-income farmers.

"Due to crop failure or whatever, they just didn't make it," Claggett said. He estimated that the families living on two farms deserted the site about 1820, which coincides with a general exodus from North Carolina.

The excavations gave some idea of the layout of farmsteads and construction techniques of the houses, but the picture remains incomplete, Claggett said.

Claggett said he is disappointed that only a partial excavation was conducted, but the state did not have the staff or funds to undertake a complete excavation. He said the state can only afford two or three full-scale excavations each year.

"Now, all of the sites with one or two exceptions have been disturbed or covered over," said Fred Hobbs, a consulting engineer for the airport construction. He said the airport project was delayed as long as possible to allow the partial excavation.

House Gives OK To School Funds

RALEIGH (AP) — Continuing its rapid march toward likely enactment this week, an $830 million business tax increase to finance school construction won final House approval after Democrats praised their "great compromise," then halted debate.

"It is not only a compromise within these houses, it is a compromise with the people of North Carolina," Rep. Jim Crawford, D-Granville, said.

The House, which tentatively approved the bill last Friday, gave it final passage 78-29 Monday. Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said the Senate Finance Committee would consider the bill Wednesday and that he hoped the full Senate would be ready for a final vote by this Friday.

The bill would raise the corporate income tax from 6 percent to 7 percent, abolish the property tax on business inventories, and stop merchants from keeping 3 percent of the sales taxes they collect for state and local governments.

It also would repeal the inventory tax, "which has been hated by business for years and years," Crawford said.

By tapping existing revenues, including half-cent sales tax increases authorized in 1983 and 1986, as well as the $830 million in new taxes, the bill would generate $3.2 billion over a decade to build and renovate schools, Jordan says.

Jury Gives Dad Death Sentence

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Relatives of a woman who was slain by her son-in-law, who also buried his infant son alive, say they're glad the man has been condemned to die, but his father says he hopes the sentence is overturned so his son's mental illness can be treated.

"I'm glad it was the death penalty," said Bill Strickland, one of Gail Alderson Strickland's two sons. "I really wouldn't have minded if it was life. But I was afraid that he might get out on parole and murder somebody again."

Everett Randolph Huff, 28, of Fayetteville, was sentenced to death Monday for the murder of his 9-month-old son, who was buried alive in a shallow grave.

The same jury of seven women and five men that recommended the death sentence convicted Huff, 28, last Wednesday of two counts of first-degree murder in the October 1984 death of his son, Crigger, and the fatal shooting of Mrs. Strickland, at her Fayetteville home.

Huff, who had pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity, was sentenced to life imprisonment in the death of Mrs. Strickland.

Members of Huff's family, including his parents, were present for the sentencing and wept for several minutes when the death sentence was announced.

"I would like to see the the Supreme Court overturn the decision and see him committed to an appropriate institution to treat his mental sickness," Everett Randolph Huff Sr., Huff's father, said after the sentencing.

"After hearing all the psychiatric testimony, I found out how really sick his mind is at this time," Everett Huff said.

The jurors, picked from Bladen County because of pre-trial publicity, apparently deadlocked on Friday over imposing a death sentence. But after an additional two hours and 45 minutes of deliberations Friday and another 45 minutes Monday, they returned the death sentence in the child's slaying.

Landing

GOLDSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Student pilot Sylvania Wilkerson of Goldsboro, an assistant secretary of the N.C. Department of Transportation, made an emergency landing in a cornfield near Williamston Monday night.

Wilkerson said he became "disoriented" while flying out of Goldsboro-Wayne Airport. He was flying a Cessna 152, a single-engine, two-place aircraft owned by Goldsboro-Wayne Aviation.

He had taken off around 4 p.m. and made the landing about 8:20 p.m. He said he had been unable to find an airport and was fearful that the plane would run out of fuel.

Mexico Says Survivor Of Boxcar May Have Been Smuggling Aliens

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The sole survivor among 19 illegal immigrants trapped in a sweltering boxcar while being smuggled across Texas may have been a smuggler himself, a Mexican official says.

Some relatives of the dead told authorities Miguel Tostado Rodriguez had recruited their kin to make the clandestine trip from central Mexico, said Benito Lopez Dominguez, undersecretary for the state of Zacatecas.

"There are indications he was a human smuggler," Lopez said Monday at the Mexican consulate here.

Lopez said relatives' accounts didn't indicate whether Tostado rounded up the men for money, companionship or free passage to Dallas for himself from two smugglers who were among the dead inside the freight train last week.

Tostado, 21, is being held as a material witness at a detention center here, said William Harrington, assistant chief of the U.S. Border Patrol's El Paso sector.

Investigators have not ruled out the possibility Tostado was a recruiter, Harrington said.

The 18 victims, locked inside the boxcar by a smuggler in El Paso, became delirious, went into convulsions and died one by one as the temperature inside climbed to 130 degrees during a 14-hour ordeal, authorities said.

U.S. Border Patrol agents discovered the victims 90 miles east of El Paso during a routine check. Tostado survived by breathing through a hole the men cut in the floor of the boxcar with a railroad spike, officials said.

Authorities have identified all but one of the bodies. Tostado and six of the dead were from Pabellon de Arteaga in the state of Aguascalientes, and a seventh victim was from another part of that state. The others were from neighboring Zacatecas state.

The smuggler who locked the door on the 19 aliens is known to authorities only as the Grasshopper, and officials believe he fled into Mexico.

The aliens' bodies were being embalmed, and could be sent to Mexico today or Wednesday, said Beatriz Lopez of the consulate.

Mummies Returning To Display

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Ancient royal mummies are going on public view for the first time since then-President Anwar Sadat ordered them put behind locked doors seven years ago because he felt gawking tourists violated the dignity of the dead.

Starting in October, visitors to the Egyptian Museum will be allowed to look at the remains of Pharaoh Ramses II, among the grandest monarchs of the 25 centuries of Pharaonic Egypt, and of 14 other kings, queens and princesses.

They will be displayed in a renovated museum chamber across a hallway from the fabulous treasures of the boy Pharaoh Tutankhamun — King Tut.

Although hundreds of mummies of ordinary people have been excavated, only 27 royal mummies dating from 3,000 to 3,800 years ago survived tomb raids by ancient-treasure seekers. They were discovered in a common tomb in 1881 across the Nile River from the southern city of Luxor, where ancient priests had hidden them from grave robbers.

The royal remains were on display from 1958 until 1980, when Sadat decided during a visit to the museum that the display of royal remains violated religious concepts and desecrated the dead.

"Sadat was right in stopping their display under those conditions, which were bad and undignified," said Ahmed Kadry, head of the government's Egyptian Antiquities Organization, "but he had no right to forbid their display forever."

"Tourists and Egyptology-lovers have the right to see an important part of ancient Egyptian life, the fascinating mummification process."

The offhand decision by Sadat, who was assassinated a year later by Islamic fundamentalists, never was put on paper as an official presidential order.

Barbie Trial Serves As Tie To Past For French People

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — As soon as Klaus Barbie was brought back to France in February 1983, there were fears his trial would produce embarrassing disclosures about France's wartime collaboration with Nazi Germany.

But during the eight-week trial, which ended Saturday with the former Lyon Gestapo chief convicted and sentenced to life in prison, the focus never shifted from the heart-rending testimony of Barbie's victims.

Far from reopening old wounds, the trial was widely praised for its educational value, for teaching France's young and reminding its old about the suffering endured under the German occupation.

"We needed this trial and we needed it for the memories," said Lionel Collet, a leader of the Coordinating Committee of Lyon Jewish groups. "In France a lot of young people don't know about what happened during the last war."

When Barbie chose not to participate in the trial, the possibility evaporated that he would spice the proceedings with supposed recollections that important public figures had secretly collaborated with the Nazis.

"All those who were worried about perverse effects of this trial must be largely reassured today," the newspaper Lyon-Liberation said in an editorial after the verdict was announced.

Another widely shared concern was the possibility of division between Barbie's Jewish victims and representatives of French Resistance members who were arrested, tortured and deported by Barbie.

At first, only acts against Jews were included in the case, on the theory that any action, however brutal, against the Resistance was a war crime, not a crime against humanity.

The statute of limitations for war crimes has expired, but there is no statute of limitations in France for crimes against humanity.

An appeals court expanded the charges, ruling that deporting Resistance to Nazi death camps was a crime against humanity, even though arresting and torturing them was not.

"All these crimes constitute crimes against humanity, even if there are different degrees," said Henri Noguera, a lawyer representing Resistance members at the Barbie trial.

Lawyers for Barbie's Jewish victims, in their presentations to the court, focused on the unique evil of the Nazi "Final Solution" which targeted Jews for who they were, rather than what they did.

Not The Colossus

RHODES, Greece (AP) — Culture Minister Melina Mercouri said today that a hunk of stone raised from the seabed off this southern island was not part of the ancient Colossus of Rhodes.

Ms. Mercouri told reporters she and senior Greek archaeologists had examined the huge fist-shaped piece of limestone and that she doubted whether it was even an ancient artwork.

"It's definitely not the Colossus statue. It's a disappointment to everyone, but the archaeologists think it's just an ordinary stone," she said.

Greek archaeologists were skept-tical from the first. They noted that historians recorded the Colossus, one of the seven wonders of the ancient world, was made of bronze, not stone.

The 90-foot Colossus, depicting Helios the Sun God and patron of ancient Rhodes, was erected around 280 B.C. It was toppled in an earthquake in 225 B.C. and eventually dismantled and sold by the island's Muslim rulers in the seventh century A.D.

Birth Dearth Replaces Baby Boom

Population Analyst Warns West Of Falling Birthrate

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The industrialized nations are facing such low birthrates that major economic disruptions could result, analyst Ben J. Wattenberg warns in a new book being published today.

In the last 15 years or so, birth rates have fallen below levels needed to keep populations in the developed nations constant, replacing the post World War II Baby Boom with a Birth Dearth, Wattenberg reports.

Faced with rising populations in the rest of the world, "Western" societies could face a diminished influence, economic and social disruption, pension shortfalls and other major problems, he says.

In his book, "The Birth Dearth," Wattenberg urges pro-natalist policies for industrial nations, including day care services for working mothers, increased tax deductions for children and even financial grants to parents.

Wattenberg is senior fellow at the conservative American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research. His new book's premise has drawn criticism from several quarters, notably from groups warning that overpopulation continues to threaten a world of 5 billion people and that any increases in birth rates are dangerous.

"He is asking white, middle-class America to become involved in competitive breeding, apparently to compete with people of color," says Rupert Cutler of the group Population-Environment Balance.

"We think any suggestion to step up the human fertility rate anywhere is contrary to common sense and concern for the quality of life," Cutler said.

Wattenberg, asked at a press luncheon if his is an "us or them" approach to population, denied any racial considerations.

"It is a pro-Western book.... I don't think it is anti-anybody," he said. A policy "is not bad for them if it is good for us."

"Modern capitalism has always been rooted in the economic fact of vigorously expanding domestic markets. That phase is ending," Wattenberg writes in the book.

Population experts say it necessary for each woman to bear 2.1 children for a population to remain stable. That allows for two offspring to replace the mother and father, plus some to account for the small number of children who do not live out their normal lifespans. Fertility has fallen below that level in recent years in the United States, Western Europe, Japan and other developed nations.

The "missing" babies eventually become "missing producers and consumers, soldiers and sailors, mothers and fathers.... I believe the birth dearth will, in the near future, begin to cause turbulence at every level of our economy, from the counters of fast-food restaurants to major corporate board rooms," writes Wattenberg.

"We in the West have about one generation to first understand, and then, reverse this fertility free-fall we have experienced. Otherwise we will pay for it."

While more people may seem an economic advantage, they also mean more crowding and more consumption of resources, says Leon Bouvier of Old Dominion University.

"By any balanced standards, the overall quality of life would seem to gain, not lose, from an end to population growth in the near future," Bouvier says.

A return to fertility levels above replacement, coupled with continued high immigration, could result in half a billion Americans within the next century, Bouvier says.

In his book, Wattenberg cites several areas he considers potential problems for the developed nations if their populations do indeed begin to decline.

Problems will arise not just in the declining number of consumers to propel the economy, he writes, but in personal and international relations as well. He says the developed nations will have more trouble dealing with the influx of immigrants from rapidly growing countries in the Third World.

The birth dearth, he says, "may turn out to be of great harm to the broadest value we treasure: it will make it difficult to promote and defend liberty in the Western nations and in the rest of the modernizing world."

Fertility declines in the West could eventually mean "the U.S. will no longer be the most important country in the world," Wattenberg says. "It could be a world where the alliance of Western nations will no longer shape the political agenda, the culture or the direction of the global community."

As the U.S. population stabilizes, more and more immigrants from overpopulated nations will seek out the United States, creating pressures for their admission.

While they can be blended into the American population in the long run, he says, these new arrivals will bring different racial and ethnic backgrounds and as a result, "we may face some increased divisiveness and turmoil in America."

In addition, "the birth dearth will leave in its wake tens of millions of unhappy adults who, through no real choice of their own, will end up with no children at all, or fewer children than they really wanted — or many fewer grandchildren than they had hoped for," he writes.

The nations at risk in his assessment, Wattenberg writes, are those generally characterized as modern, industrial and free, including the United States, Canada, all the nations of Western Europe, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Israel and Iceland.

Soviets Conduct N-Test

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union today conducted its ninth underground nuclear test since abandoning a unilateral testing moratorium in February.

The official Soviet news agency Tass said the nuclear explosion, with a yield up to 20 kilotons, "was made in the interests of the people's economy," indicating it was for nonmilitary purposes.

The explosion occurred at 4 a.m. Moscow time in the Yakut autonomous region, Tass said. Yakut is in the rich gold and diamond mining region of Siberia.

The last underground nuclear blast announced by the Soviets was on June 6 at the Semipalatinsk military weapons testing center.

In April, the Soviets announced two explosions in the Perm region of the Ural mountains that were described at the time as experiments to test new oil extraction methods.

The Soviet government began a nuclear testing moratorium on Aug. 6, 1985, the 40th anniversary of the U.S. dropping of the atomic bomb on Hiroshima, Japan in the closing days of World War II.

Children Learn About Aging From Elderly

By PHYLLIS GUTH
The Allentown Morning Call
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Along with the three "R's," the sixth graders in Ann Wolf's language-arts class at the Harrison-Morton School are learning to reach out to the elderly through People Adding Light (PAL), a program run by the Lehigh County Area Agency on Aging.

At the same time, the students are learning how old age sometimes affects the senses.

In a sensitivity session led by Delores Williams, coordinator of volunteers for the agency, the students tried to look up telephone numbers while wearing goggles smeared with Vaseline.

With the fingers on their right hand taped together, they attempted to tie their shoelaces and pick up objects. The students walked with beans in their shoes to simulate arthritis and, while blindfolded, tried to identify common scents.

The youngsters admit to frustration at not being able to perform functions normally taken for granted, but through PAL they also learn that elderly minds can remain sharp despite physical handicaps.

The lesson was driven home when the class competed against senior citizens in a spelling bee at a day care center in Bethlehem, Pa. Client Frances Sullivan spelled "vehicle" correctly to win the event after student Nancy Rodriguez misspelled the word.

The word "love" never came up in the spelling bee, but it showed up in the interaction between generations.

When the students arrived that day, they helped set up chairs and seated themselves next to clients. A white-haired woman reached over to touch and admire a pretty girl's pony tail and the two chatted like old friends. A Hispanic boy sat next to a Spanish-speaking senior citizen and translated for him.

Eileen Trilli Muschlitz, director of the Holy Family Manor adult day care center, said the intergenerational contact is beneficial on both sides. "It's a nice way for the children to meet the elderly" and day care clients get to see kids who are "wholesome looking," she said.

"It makes me think of my school days," client Mary Shoemaker said of the children's visits. Now a Schnecksville resident, Shoemaker used to live across the street from Harrison-Morton.

"I think they're darling. I like to see children," another client, Anna Moroney of Bethlehem, says. "Wonderful," was Allentown client Marvin Weiss's opinion of the kids' visits.

The children's comments were equally positive.

"It's fun to come," said Christine Bartos.

"I like meeting the people," said Juan Solano.

"I like being with older people; they're fun to be with," added Jason Shupp.

"It's fun doing things with them," echoed Aline Sayegh.

Zaida Vega liked the way older people treat her.

Steven Clark said the experience is educational because "they can tell you stuff you don't know about."

Recently the youngsters put on a play at Westminster Village, Allentown, for residents and Holy Family day care clients.

As with the spelling bee, the personal contact was an important factor. The students helped push wheelchairs and serve refreshments and chatted with the elderly.

Westminster resident Verna Charles, who said the students were "well-spoken," said she liked the play very much. Miriam Dunlop, also a resident, noted, "They put a lot of work into it."

Between scheduled visits to nursing homes, the students keep in contact with residents through letters. Now in its fourth year, the program began with daily telephone contact.

Last year, the first in which Wolf was involved, the spelling bee was introduced. The play represented a first for PAL this year. In the near future, Williams wants to put on an intergenerational skit she wrote.

Wolf said she believed PAL made students more aware that the elderly have their own desires and needs as well as experiences from which people of all ages can benefit.

"The children formed many friendships," Wolf said, noting that they also gained "new respect for the elderly." Her students always seemed delighted, she said, to see how "vital and caring many elderly people are."

Williams, too, believed the kids really enjoyed being with the elderly. "Some do not have ce has moved to Los Angeles."

The Rockford Chronicle was published from 1976-77 by Pat Spady. After Spady left the city, Milton Barbee took over the Chronicle until 1979.

The Crusader, Rockford's first black newspaper, was published from 1950-1971, and was founded by Bernice Johnson.

The Rev. James Wade, pastor at Allen Chapel African Methodist Church and host of a local television show, praised The Vital Force for letting youngsters write articles.

He also said the paper's stories "have included coverage on the entire community, not just religious, not just social, but every aspect."

And Frances Walker, president of the local chapter of the National Council of Negro Women, said: "The paper advises me of new businesses and opinions, teaches me about different organizations and their Three black weeklies have published in Rockford since World War II."

Should Reader Call And Ask About Invitation?

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: About five months ago, I ran into a relative of mine at the supermarket. She told me that her son was getting married — she gave me the date, and told me to mark it on my calendar. I did, and was eagerly looking forward to attending this wedding.

Well, the wedding is two weeks away, and I have not as yet received an invitation. Others in my family have received theirs, so I am wondering now if mine got lost in the mail, or perhaps I was never sent one.

I considered phoning this relative to remind her that she had asked me to mark the date of her son's wedding on my calendar, but no invitation was received. Then I thought it would only embarrass her, so why should I rain on her parade?

What do you think I should do? — BAFFLED IN BALTIMORE

DEAR BAFFLED: There would be no harm in calling this relative to remind her that she asked you to save the date, and as yet you've received no invitation. But if you would feel uncomfortable doing so, why not ask a mutual relative to call and ask her?

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "W.F. in Palmyra, Neb.," who wrote about the alcoholic lady who was drunk when he went to pick her up to drive her to a retirement home in Texas. The lady had told him that she had no family and he was concerned about her because she passed out and he didn't know whom to notify about her condition.

Abby, I am a recovering alcoholic woman and I've been sober in A.A. for four years. Please tell "W.F." to waste no time putting that woman in contact with Alcoholics Anonymous. He'll find Alcoholics Anonymous listed in the Yellow Pages of the telephone directory.

Abby, if this woman has no family as she says, she will find a loving, understanding "family" with these people. A.A. saved my life and I pray

Despite the threat to a marriage, do-it-yourselfers have always been. Take Michelangelo. If he had listened to his family, he could have had wallpaper put on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel by a pro... but no, he wanted to lie on his back all those years just to save a few bucks.

And the great statesman, Thomas Jefferson, was the worst. He could have walked into the pages of history just by writing laws and setting up a government for the New World. But no, Mr. Jefferson had to putter around Monticello. Just inside the front door is a clock he invented that has a weight that rises with each second and then continues to go down on the other side. Since he miscalculated the height of the room, he had to cut a hole in the floor to accommodate the clock.

The fact that he stayed married is perhaps his biggest contribution to diplomacy.

Married Couples Should Ask Questions Before

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

Before a married couple makes a decision to "do a little remodeling," they should ask themselves the following questions:

Is this the only alternative to the singles scene?

Is the car in both names?

Can I be trusted to have a razor blade in my hand again?

Is adding a room worth the risk of having custody of three teenagers?

Is there an exorcist for ridding a house of bad taste?

Is there a statute of limitations on an annulment?

Sometimes, there are warnings along the line that couples would be wise to heed. For example, if you ask your husband to fix the leak around the toilet bowl and he shuts off the water for two days and asks where the kids' Play Doh is, don't even consider remodeling.

If you insisted he sleep on the couch since he installed a paper towel holder over the curtain rod to avoid violating a virgin wall with a nail, forget it. To remodel, a couple has to be of the same mind. They both have to want to live like Bedouins without water, convenience, friends or comfort for as long as it takes.

My husband, in his infinite quest for logic, once hired a contractor to redo our kitchen in December. He chose this month because most people don't want their houses torn up for the holidays and the contractor had some free time. As we sat around the breakfast table in bathrobes with parkas over them, I suggested there was another reason why no one had their kitchens redone in December. It was because the wind and snow blowing in where the wall had been

Clark Leads Pitt's Win

EDENTON — Tim Clark scattered six hits over nine innings to lead Pitt County past Edenton, 11-1, in American League Area I baseball action Monday night.

The win gave Pitt County a final regular season record of 11-7 and a second-place finish in the regular season standings behind Wayne County and Snow Hill, which finished tied for first. Pitt County hosts Kingston in the first game of a best of five playoffs series beginning Wednesday.

Edenton jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first when Nash Lang doubled and scored on Woody Stetson's single.

In the second, Pitt County's Tom Moye slapped a two-run homer that also scored Robbie McDonald and put Post 39 ahead to stay.

In the fourth, Pitt scored four more runs. McDonald singled and came home on another homer by Moye. Ty Little followed with a reach on an error. Hunter Clark then singled. An error allowed Little to score and Tim Clark knocked in Hunter Clark to make it 6-1.

Moye also knocked in David Daniels with a RBI double in the fifth.

Pitt added two more runs in the sixth and one more in both the seventh and eighth to complete the scoring.

McDonald and Moye had three hits apiece to pace Pitt. Hunter Clark added two more.

Clark struck out eight and walked none while going the distance.

The Cleveland Indians, outscored 117-42 while losing 12 of their previous 14 games, needed a poor performance by an opposing pitcher to give them a chance to win.

They got it from an unlikely source — Bret Saberhagen.

The Kansas City right-hander took a 14-2 record and a 2.22 earned run average into Monday night's game against the Indians. But he allowed 10 hits and seven runs in seven innings as Cleveland snapped the Royals' six-game winning streak with a 9-7 victory.

"Cleveland's not going that well. Fortunately they were playing against a lousy pitcher," Saberhagen said. "With anybody else pitching adequately we win that ball game hands down. I was lousy."

With Kansas City leading 6-5, Saberhagen allowed two hits to open the eighth inning and was replaced by Steve Farr. A stolen base and an intentional walk loaded the bases for Cory Snyder, who earlier in the game hit a two-run homer.

Snyder connected again, for his 16th homer and second grand slam of the season, giving the Indians a 9-6 lead.

In other American League games, it was Baltimore 4, Chicago 1; Toronto 6, Texas 4; Minnesota 2, New York 0; Oakland 5, Detroit 3; Seattle 3, Milwaukee 2; and California 10, Boston 7 in 12 innings.

Saberhagen, because the Royals played a doubleheader on Friday night, was pitching with three days' rest for the first time this season.

"He's pitched a lot of innings," Royals Manager Billy Gardner said. "He threw nice and loose, but he wasn't popping his fastball like he normally does, and he got his curveball up."

"I don't know if it (the short rest) affected my curveball," Saberhagen said. "I couldn't get it over the plate. What hurt me was my breaking pitch because I couldn't establish it for strikes, and they were able to stand up there and look for the fastball."

Julio Franco, who had given the Indians a short-lived 5-3 lead with a two-run homer in the fifth, agreed with Saberhagen that it was his curveball that let him down.

"He was throwing a lot of fastballs and a lot of good changeups, but he didn't have his breaking ball," Franco said.

Sammy Stewart, 1-1, was the winner despite allowing a three-run homer to Danny Tartabull, which gave the Royals a 6-5 lead in the eighth. Tartabull was the first batter Stewart faced in relief of Steve Carlton, who struck out six, giving him 4,100 career strikeouts.

Ironically, Saberhagen had shut out the Indians on two hits the last time the two teams met on May 9.

"There was a little incentive with Saberhagen out there," Snyder said. "The last time we faced him he was awesome."

But after losing 17-0 to Chicago on Sunday, Indians Manager Pat Corrales wasn't just worried about beating the AL's best pitcher this season.

"It's not just nice to beat Saberhagen," Corrales said. "It's just nice to win, period."

Twins 2, Yankees 0

Minnesota moved back into first place in the West when Tom Brunansky and Kent Hrbek homered and Frank Viola pitched a five-hitter.

Loser Ron Guidry, 1-4, gave up Brunansky's 17th home run in the first and Hrbek's 23rd homer in the seventh and finished with a three-hitter and the Yankees' first complete game since May 10. Hrbek has 20 homers in his last 44 games.

Viola, 7-6, pitched his first shutout of the season and fourth complete game.

The Twins' fourth straight victory, combined with Kansas City's loss, moved Minnesota into first place by one game.

Change Of Scenery Does Wonders For 3 Ex-Padres

By The Associated Press

Trading places has done wonders for Dave Dravecky, Craig Lefferts and Kevin Mitchell.

Dravecky won his first start with San Francisco as the Giants beat Pittsburgh 7-5 in the first game of a two-night doubleheader Monday. The Giants completed the sweep with a 7-4 victory in the nightcap with Lefferts picking up the save.

Dravecky was considered by Giants Manager Roger Craig the key player in Saturday night's seven-player trade with San Diego.

In an unusual intradivision deal, the Giants sent former All-Star third baseman Chris Brown to the Padres along with pitchers Mark Davis, Keith Comstock and Mark Grant.

Mitchell hit two homers Sunday to help the Giants beat Chicago 7-5 and Monday night Dravecky and Lefferts did their part.

Instead of being with a team in last place and 17½ games out, the trade has Dravecky, Lefferts and Mitchell on a third-place team, four games out in the National League West.

"Those are the guys we wanted," Craig said. "We got one of the best pitchers in baseball in Dravecky and a guy who can pitch every day. Mitchell is very versatile. He can play third, the outfield and shortstop. He played 24 games at shortstop for the World Champions (New York Mets) last year."

Dravecky, 4-7, allowed two hits in five innings, but was lifted in the sixth after failing to retire any of the five batters he faced.

"Naturally, I wanted to pitch well," Dravecky said. "I usually have butterflies when I pitch, but these were even bigger butterflies tonight. I think I'm improved 12 games in the standings coming over here ... and I'm happy I was traded to a team that has a chance to win it."

Elsewhere, Chicago blanked San Diego 7-0; Philadelphia outlasted Cincinnati 9-6 and Houston beat Montreal 9-3. New York at Atlanta and Los Angeles at St. Louis were postponed because of rain.

After Mike Diaz hit a three-run homer, Jeff Robinson bailed Dravecky out of a two-on, none-out jam. Scott Garrelts came on for the final 1 1-3 innings and earned his 11th save. The game was delayed by rain for 45 minutes after 8½ innings.

"He (Dravecky) wanted to make a big first impression and he did," Craig said. "I liked what I saw. So far, it's been a heck of a deal for us. Lefferts has pitched in all three games and gotten everybody out and (third baseman) Kevin Mitchell is hitting the ball well."

In the second game, Eddie Milner doubled to start the Giants' fourth and scored when starter Doug Drabek, 1-8, threw the ball into left-center field attempting a pickoff at second base.

Pitcher Mike LaCoss walked and Milner singled in the sixth before Mike Aldrete hit his second homer of the season for a 4-0 lead.

LaCoss, 7-5, added a two-run single and Milner had an RBI single during the Giants' three-run seventh.

Astros 9, Expos 3

Danny Darwin pitched five-hit ball for eight innings and Alan Ashby hit a two-run homer as Houston knocked Montreal starter Dennis Martinez out after 2 1-3 innings.

Martinez, who entered the game at 3-0 with a 2.86 earned run average, allowed six runs on seven hits.

With the score tied 2-2, Ashby led off the second with a single, moved to second on Billy Hatcher's single and scored on Bill Doran's double.

Houston made it 6-2 in the third on an RBI double by Jose Cruz and Ashby's eighth homer of the season. Last season, Ashby hit seven homers and his season-high is 12 in 1982.

"I'd love to make the All-Star team, I make no bones about it," Ashby said. "This is the best I've ever performed over a stretch like this."

Cubs 7, Padres 0

Andre Dawson hit a pair of homers to drive in four runs and Steve Trout pitched a four-hitter for Chicago.

Dawson had gone nearly a month without a home run before breaking the spell Sunday against San Francisco.

He homered to lead off the second inning, doubled and scored on a single by Keith Moreland in the fourth and capped a four-run fifth with a three-run homer, his 23rd. Moreland homered in the sixth, his 14th.

"I watched some films of when I was going good and I noticed I was opening my hips too much," Dawson said. "So I closed up a little bit and it helped."

Trout, 5-3, allowed four singles, getting his first shutout in two years and the eighth of his career. Mark Grant, 1-3, was the loser in his first start for the Padres.

losing streak as George Bell and Ernie Whitt hit consecutive homers in the third inning and Jimmy Key pitched a six-hitter for seven innings.

Key, 9-5, gave up Pete Incaviglia's 17th homer, in the second, but the left-hander gave up only two other hits until the eighth, when Texas scored three runs to narrow a 6-1 deficit.

Toronto scored four runs off Charlie Hough, 9-4, in the second when Fred McGriff, Garth Iorg and Tony Fernandez had RBI singles and Kelly Gruber had a sacrifice fly. Bell's 28th homer and Whitt's sixth made it 6-1 in the third.

Few Rookies Expected At Camp

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

Despite the signing of D.J. Dozier by the Minnesota Vikings, it's unlikely that many more top NFL draft choices will reach agreement until training camps open later this month.

Dozier, the Penn State running back who signed Sunday night, was just the second of 28 first-round picks to reach agreement. That led Minnesota General Manager Mike Lynn to predict: "I think you'll see a lot of picks signing in the next week to 10 days."

But Lynn's opinion is the exception among the participants in the three-way negotiations game involving teams, agents and the NFL Players Association. Minnesota is seen as traditionally falling outside what has been a relatively orderly game of falling dominoes, in which the signing of the sixth pick leads to the signing of the seventh and so on.

"The Vikings are traditionally the lowest-paying team for rookies in the NFL," Leigh Steinberg, who represents three first-rounders, said. "Mike Lynn may think this breaks the logjam, but their log has traditionally grown alone, separated from the NFL forest."

"What Mike Lynn does isn't necessarily what other teams do," George Young, general manager of the New York Giants, said. "The Vikings have usually gone their own way."

One reason for the delay in signings is that negotiations are now a form of collective bargaining with continual consultation between agents and the NFLPA. Because the union is too short-staffed to handle all the negotiations, one agent has been designated for each of the 28 teams to clear offers from that team to the players.

"We're negotiating as a league now," Young says. "We're not negotiating individually with a player. The players don't understand that's what going on for them depends on everybody else."

The result is that with two weeks until the opening of training camps, NFLPA figures show just 19 of the 335 drafted players are signed. Five of those are 12th rounders and just four were picked in the first five rounds.

Dozier and Heisman Trophy winner Vinny Testaverde of Miami, signed as the first pick by Tampa Bay before the draft, are the only first-rounders signed.

Baylor quarterback Cody Carlson, by Houston, and defensive end Skip McClendon of Arizona State, by Cincinnati, are the only other players taken before the sixth round to sign contracts. Both were selected in the third round.

Last season, just two of 28 first-rounders and 80 of 333 choices overall had been signed by July 16, when the first camp opened.

According to agents and the union, offers this year are 10-15 percent lower than last season. That's about the same decrease as last year, the first time since 1983 the NFL did not have competition from the now-dormant United States Football League.

Agents say the keys players this year are linebackers Cornelius Bennett, taken by Indianapolis with the second pick of the draft, and Brian Bosworth, selected by Seattle with the top pick in the supplemental draft lottery.

Little League

Coca-Cola 13 Moose 10

Coca-Cola built up an early lead and then held off a late rally by Moose to take a 13-10 win Monday and even the City Little League Championship series at one game apiece.

The two teams meet again today for a third game to decide the winner.

Coke pushed across eight runs in the second-inning to break open 1-1 tie.

With one out, Ron Clemons drew a walk. He advanced to third on consecutive wild pitches. Lee Jordan followed with another walk to put men on the corners. Ken Coward then singled in Clemons. Adam Charlton reached on a fielder's choice. Hays Lambert followed with a three-run triple that made it 5-1.

Alex Darden then reached on a walk. James Ebron followed by reaching after being hit by a pitch. An error allowed Lambert and Darden to score and Robert Barnes to reach. Jacob Zonn then singled in Ebron and Barnes to complete the scoring.

Moose tried to rally, scoring one run in the second, two more in the third and two more in the fourth to pull within 9-4 but Coke scored four more runs in the fourth to make it 13-4.

Moose attempted one more rally, scoring two in the fourth to make it 13-6 and then pushed across four more in the sixth, keyed by Jason Krause's three-run homer.

Charlton, Lambert and Zonn had two hits apiece for Coke. Michael Howard had three hits to lead Moose. Krause and Mark Clark added two hits apiece.

Babe Ruth League

Pepsi-Cola 16 Computerland 6

Abram Lang collected three hits, including a two-run homer as Pepsi-Cola topped Computerland, 16-6, in Babe Ruth Tournament action Monday.

Lang's homer keyed a five-run first inning for Pepsi and gave it an early 5-0 advantage.

Pepsi countered Computerland's one run in the second with three more in the bottom of the inning to make it 8-1. Troy Clemons led the way for Pepsi in the second with an RBI single.

Lang struck again in the third, hitting a one-run single that scored Matthew Cagle and gave Pepsi a 9-3 lead.

Kirk Welch and Kendall Hardee added RBI singles in the fifth as Pepsi pushed across six more runs to provide the final margin.

Hardee added two hits for Pepsi while Jon West had two hits for Computerland, including a two-run homer in the fourth.

Everette's 5 Coca-Cola 2

Everette's topped Coca-Cola, 5-2, in a Babe Ruth League baseball game forfeit due to injury.

The game was forfeited after Chad Adams' injury reduced Coke's roster to eighth players. Coke played the fourth with eight players but then ended the game. Everette's advances in the loser's bracket against Pepsi, a 16-6 winner over Computerland.

Everette's forged out to a 5-0 lead after four and a half innings. Pat Joyner and Bill Jenkins had RBI singles to key a four run fourth for Everette's.

The North State and Tar Heel Little Leagues selected All-Star teams for competition in the State Little League baseball tournament.

Leading the way for the North State All-Stars are Sportsworld's Shea Harper, Russell Oats and Dante Daniels. Other selections include Coca-Cola's Adam Charlton and Hays Lambert; Kiwanis' Jarrett McCalliard; Optimist's Michael Beland and Dyron Langle; the Lions' Brian Fields and Deke Herrin; Eveready's Jay Moye and Sam Jennings and Bryan Hill and Barndon Moore of the Jaycees. The alternates were Alex Darden of Coke; Shep Skinner of Sportsworld; Kevin Strickland of Optimist and Kory Welch of the Jaycees.

Moose and Jarman's Auto led the way on the Tar Heel All-Stars with four selections. Montez Barrett, Michael Howard, Jonathon Forey and Jimmie Rouse were the four Moose choices. The rest of the team was comprised of Pepsi-Cola's Josh Burns, Richie Grimsley and Will MacKenzie; Cole Yarbrough of Mackenzie; Henry Clark of True Value; Will Pleasants of Wellcome along with Omar Jordan, Russell Williamson and Nicky Phillips of Jarman's Auto.

The alternates are Jason Krause of Moose, Wilbert Lovett of First Federal, Danielle Daniels of Exchange and Dru Lewis of Jarman's Auto.

Carter Offers Strawberry Advice

ATLANTA (AP) — New York Mets catcher Gary Carter says right fielder Darryl Strawberry should ignore criticism and try to play every day.

"It's really the best way to handle it," said Carter, who had been criticized for his attitude by his Montreal teammates prior to a 1985 trade to the Mets. "You never gain anything by commenting about it. Just play." Strawberry was criticized last week for sitting out two games against the St. Louis Cardinals because of the flu. He responded in part by threatening teammates Lee Mazzilli and Wally Backman.

"Darryl has to understand that his teammates only want the best for him," Carter said Monday. "If he goes out and plays hard and does the things we all know he's capable of, he'll have no problems here."

Heavy media coverage of the Strawberry incident led the Mets to clear the clubhouse prior to Monday night's game.

"Is this the clubhouse or the press lounge?" captain Keith Hernandez asked.

Johnson said the media has "escalated" tensions on the Mets.

"If the tensions persist, then I'll bar the media from the clubhouse," he said.

Meanwhile, the Mets now have two center fielders upset over a time-sharing arrangement.

"I'm not a part-time player," left-handed hitting Len Dykstra said Monday night after learning he would not be in the starting lineup against Atlanta Braves right-hander Rick Mahler.

Instead, the Mets listed switch-hitting Mookie Wilson as the starter in the game, which was postponed by rain after one inning. Wilson asked the Mets to trade him last week, saying he felt he should be an every-day player.

"I definitely want to play every day," Dykstra said. "If I did I might hit 20 homers." "I have seven already."

"I don't want to sit on the bench. I've done a lot of it lately," said Dykstra, batting .286 with 20 runs batted in. "I'm rusting away on the bench."

Dykstra, who usually starts against right-handers, said Johnson told him he "wanted to get Mookie one start against the Braves," who were starting three right-handers in the series.

"I'm just going by the numbers," Johnson said.

Wilson, hitting .312 with six homers and 22 RBI, has a career average of .375 against Mahler. Dykstra has hit .333 against the Atlanta pitcher.

Their unhappiness is bound to continue because General Manager Frank Cashen has said he has no plans to trade either player.

Blazers Want To Call Off Trade

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The Portland Trail Blazers want to call off the trade that sent veteran guard Jim Paxson to the Cleveland Cavaliers in exchange for power forward Keith Lee, whose health is being questioned.

But the Cavaliers say the deal is done. The Trail Blazers' announcement Monday that they have taken steps to rescind the trade left the Cavaliers simmering.

"We are unhappy about it, and we will contest it," Cleveland General Manager Wayne Embry said. Bucky Buckwalter, the Blazers' vice president for basketball operations, said the team decided to call off the deal on the recommendation of physician Robert Cook.

Cook said after examining Lee last week that he believed there was "a high risk" that the former Memphis State star would suffer serious knee problems in his NBA career.

"When the final recommendation was given from Bob Cook that we not consummate the trade, we decided to rescind it," Buckwalter said. "It never was really completed."

"It's always contingent on the physical and Jim Paxson hasn't even taken his yet."

Buckwalter said the Cavaliers could appeal the action to the NBA hierarchy, but he said he was confident the decision to call off the deal would be upheld.

After Cook's comments on Lee's physical were made public last week, Cavaliers' Coach Lenny Wilkens said the Trail Blazers were trying to back out of the deal because they had changed their minds.

"They obviously don't like the deal," Wilkens said. "They're doing whatever they can to get out of it."

But Buckwalter said the decision to call off the trade was made solely on the basis of Cook's recommendation.

"He (Lee) has never missed a game because of his knees, but we have to go with what (Cook) says now," Buckwalter said.

"We're disappointed," Buckwalter said, "because I think he (Lee) could have helped."

The trade was announced on draft day, June 15, sending Paxson, the Blazers' all-time leading scorer, to the Cavs for the seldom-used, 6-foot-10 Lee, who would bolster a thin and injury-plagued Blazer front line.

USFL Founder Trying Again

NEW YORK (AP) — The founder of the United States Football League is trying to start a new spring football league that would permit the drafting of high school seniors.

David Dixon, who left the USFL shortly after it began play in 1983, said each team in the American Football Federation would be allowed to sign a limited number of high school players each year.

"If you ask any coach or trainer or doctor when a player reaches his physical peak, they'll say about 20 years old," Dixon said Monday. "He may be smarter at 25, but he's not better physically."

Dixon said the league would hire special tutors to help the young players continue their education while playing professional football.

"They'll take real courses, too, not basket weaving and theory of volleyball and those other junk courses that so many athletes take in college," he said.

To be eligible for the National Football League draft, a player must either graduate from college or wait for his college class to graduate. Major league baseball and the National Basketball Association both permit the drafting of high school seniors.

Dixon said the AFF hopes to start play with 10 teams in 1988, but must obtain a television contract first.

"We have the owners and we have the cities," Dixon said in a telephone interview from New Orleans, where he is an art and antiques dealer. "It's really just a question of television."

Dixon said he has submitted a proposal to the Fox Broadcasting Co. under which the network would pay $10 million to televise 20 regular-season games in prime time from late February through June.

"We feel Fox is our natural ally," he said. "They need programming and we need a network."

Brad Turell, a Fox spokesman in Los Angeles, said the company had no comment on the matter.

Fox, a fledgling network owned by communications magnate Rupert Murdoch, tried last winter to obtain the rights to a special package of NFL games. The NFL awarded the Sunday night games to the ESPN cable network.

Dixon said the AFF plans to have teams in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, Dallas, Houston, Tampa, Los Angeles, the San Francisco Bay area and either Orlando or Miami.

Dixon, who has tried to start several football leagues over the past 20 years, said owners won't have to pay a fee to enter the league, but will have to produce letters of credit worth $2.5 million. He said the credit will serve as insurance in case the franchise runs into financial problems.

The league will determine the budget for each team, a move designed to prevent the kind of rampant spending that hurt the USFL. The USFL suspended operations last year after losing a $1.2-billion antitrust suit against the NFL.

Another difference between the new league and the NFL will be the playoffs. In the AFF, the two finalists will play a best-of-three series for the championship.

"We feel that will be a truer test than a one-game championship," Dixon said.

Dixon said he is also considering eliminating the field goal.

"Football has evolved into a field-goal game, but that wasn't the original intent," he said. "I think people want to see passing and running, not some little European trotting on to the field to kick the ball."

Yankee Accountant Sees Some Progress

NEW YORK (AP) — The chief accountant of the New York Yankees says the team is making progress in hiring minorities for front office jobs.

Warren Atkinson, 30, also says he wasn't offended when team owner George Steinbrenner called him a "young black boy" on national television.

Atkinson said Steinbrenner frequently adopted a fatherly tone and often called younger men "son." He added that the Yankees "seem to be making some effort to include minorities, including myself, in management decisions."

"I wouldn't say I have been treated differently," Atkinson said. "I have no gripes over race. I don't think the Yankees are really race oriented."

In a taped interview on CBS' "Face the Nation" on Sunday, Steinbrenner defended his minority hiring policies. He said that "the head accountant that I have in my finance department happens to be a young black boy."

Steinbrenner later defended his use of the word "boy," a description considered offensive by many blacks.

"I have been using the term 'boys and girls' since my parents taught me what it meant on restroom doors in my grammar school," he said. "I've always referred to my team as the 'varsity' and to my players and the younger members of the front office as my 'boys and girls' — and I ain't about to change for nobody."

Appearing with Steinbrenner on "Face the Nation," Frank Robinson, major league baseball's first black manager, noted that former players Ray Burris and Don Buford — both of whom are black — are qualified for front office positions in the big leagues.

Broken Window All That Remains

CINCINNATI (AP) — The house where Pete Rose grew up is for sale. A handyman could buy the place and fix a broken window at the back of the house, but a slice of Americana would be lost.

Rose's first hit — at age 3 — broke a window in the family's house, and the it remains as testimony to the man who later became baseball's most prolific hitmaker.

On a summer's day in 1944, Rose whacked a hard rubber-coated ball across his backyard and into the kitchen window, cracking an upper pane of plate glass. His father, Harry Rose, was impressed.

ry since 1981.

Griffin, 1-2, allowed five hits while making his third start for the Orioles after four years in the minors. Mark Williamson pitched the final two innings for his third save.

Eddie Murray hit his second homer in two games and Alan Wiggins drove in the go-ahead run. Wiggins' hit was one of only three off loser Jose DeLeon, 5-8, in 6 1-3 innings as Baltimore ended Chicago's three-game winning streak.

Angels 10, Red Sox 7

California, trailing 7-0 after six innings, scored four runs in the seventh and three in the eighth before Jack Howell finally won it with a three-run homer in the 12th.

Brian Downing led off the 12th with a double off Wes Gardner, 0-4, the ninth consecutive time he reached base in the last two games. With one out, Wally Joyner was walked intentionally, and upended shortstop Ed Romero to break up a potential inning-ending double play grounded by Doug DeCinces, setting the stage for Howell's 13th homer.

Doug DeCinces and Mark Ryal hit two-run homers to highlight the Angels' surge in the seventh and eighth.

Jim Rice hit a three-run homer and Dwight Evans added a pair of solo homers to helped Boston's Roger Clemens to a 7-0 lead after six innings. Clemens led the New York Yankees 9-0 on June 26 before the Red Sox lost that game 12-11 in 10 innings.

Athletics 5, Tigers 3
Oakland rallied from a 3-0 deficit with Tony Phillips' two-out, two-run double breaking a 3-3 tie in the eighth inning.

Detroit reliever Eric King, 3-7, retired the first two batters in the eighth, but singles to Terry Steinbach and Carney Lansford set up Phillips' game-winner.

The Athletics scored three runs in the seventh to tie the score, climaxed by Mike Davis' two-run homer. Two errors by Oakland shortstop Alfredo Griffin led to three unearned runs in the fourth.

Gene Nelson, 4-1, won in relief.

Mariners 3, Brewers 2
Seattle won when it found an unlikely power source in Rey Quinones.

Quinones had a two-run homer in the second inning off Bill Wegman, 7-8. It was the eighth homer for Quinones, who hit only two in 98 games last season.

The Brewers tied the score 2-2 in the fifth on RBI singles by Ernest Riles and Robin Yount and the Mariners scored the go-ahead run on a bloop RBI single by Mike Kingery.

Seattle's Mike Morgan, 7-9, worked six innings for the victory.

Chrysler Hit By Largest OSHA Fine Ever

By MATT YANCEY
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — An allegation of fraudulent unemployment insurance claims led the Labor Department to an investigation that resulted in the government hitting Chrysler Corp. with the largest job health and safety penalty ever imposed.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration on Monday fined Chrysler $1,576,100 for 811 alleged violations, including willfully exposing 131 auto workers at its Newark, Del., assembly plant to hazardous levels of lead and arsenic in knowing defiance of the law.

Chrysler said it will not contest the fine, but the head of its automobile manufacturing arm said most of the violations were for "relatively minor... discrepancies."

The OSHA fine is the second time in two weeks that Chrysler has run afoul of federal laws.

On June 24, a federal grand jury in St. Louis indicted Chrysler and two of its executives on conspiracy and fraud charges, accusing them of disconnecting odometers on cars driven by company officials and later selling the vehicles as new.

Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca last week apologized to the buyers of those cars and promised to extend the warranties on the vehicles and replace cars that were damaged while driven in a test program and later repaired.

OSHA officials said the fines Monday grew out of a complaint by workers at the Newark plant that the company was keeping fraudulent health and safety records.

In January, Chrysler agreed to pay OSHA a fine of $284,830 — until Monday the largest ever collected by the agency — for alleged health and safety record violations at Newark and at plants in Belvidere, Ill., and Twinsburg, Ohio.

Anthony Rossie, a Labor Department spokesman, said investigators still are examining claims that Chrysler, with the alleged complicity of the United Auto Workers union, defrauded the unemployment insurance system by laying off injured workers at Newark rather than treating them as workmen's compensation cases.

Weekly unemployment insurance benefits, which are financed through premiums levied on virtually all employers, often are much larger than those paid under the workmen's compensation system for job injuries.

"That issue was raised in 1985 by some disgruntled former and current employees and is unfounded as far as we are concerned," Baron Bates, a Chrysler vice president, said late Monday. "We have explained them in detail to Delaware authorities to their satisfaction."

Frank Joyce, a UAW spokesman, said officials at the union's headquarters in Detroit were not aware of the unemployment insurance allegations.

"We've been rather vociferous in raising with Chrysler our concerns about health and safety problems, particularly concerning lead and arsenic," Joyce said. "As far as we know, our local people on the scene fully cooperated with the OSHA investigation."

All of the violations cited Monday, including 338 classified as "willful," were found during an OSHA inspection last January at the Delaware plant, which employs some 4,000 auto workers.

Since then, OSHA also has conducted wall-to-wall inspections at Chrysler's Belvidere auto assembly plant and at its Twinsburg stamping plant, but the results have not been announced yet.

At Newark, 225 of the willful violations were for instances in which workers in the plant and soldering shops were exposed to hazardous levels of lead or arsenic.

Penalties of $8,000 each — or a total of $1,048,000 — were levied for only 131 of those violations, based on the number of employees exposed, said OSHA spokesman Terry Mikelson.

Overexposure to lead can damage the central nervous system and, in sufficient quantities, cause death. Arsenic also is a lethal chemical and a potential carcinogen.

OSHA Administrator John A. Pendergrass called the fine "the only possible response to a totally unacceptable situation" in which Chrysler "put workers in jeopardy, seriously threatening their health and safety."

Gerald Greenwald, chairman of the company's auto manufacturing arm, Chrysler Motors Corp., said it had been caught up in "a new vigor" by OSHA in enforcing the law and its focus on Chrysler as one of the first targets.

"You might say that it's our time in the barrel," Greenwald said.

He called most of the violations "relatively minor electrical and mechanical safeguarding discrepancies" and said "a majority have been addressed."

In addition to 225 instances of exposing workers to arsenic and lead, Chrysler was cited for 48 willful violations of the "employee right to know law" by not telling employees about dangerous chemicals in their work areas.

The company also is accused of 65 willful violations dealing with personal protective equipment and fire and electrical protection. Each willful violation can carry a fine of up to $10,000 on the theory that the company knowingly violated the law or allowed a known hazard to go uncorrected.

Chrysler also was fined $47,500 for 310 separate "serious" violations involving failure to provide workers with protective equipment and to warn them of chemical hazards and noise standards.

In addition, OSHA fined the automaker a total of $600 for what the agency alleged were 163 instances of "other than serious violations."

The largest fine ever assessed previously by OSHA was $1,377,700 against Union Carbide Corp. last year for 221 alleged health and safety violations at its Institute, W.Va., chemical plant. Union Carbide has contested the penalty.

Report Says Space Station Costs Jumping Drastically

WASHINGTON (AP) — An independent research panel says that NASA's projections for the Space Station program greatly underestimate its real cost.

The National Research Council's Space Station Committee, in a report to administration officials, has presented calculations showing that the program would cost $32.8 billion in 1988 dollars. The June 30 report was made public Monday.

When the program was announced in 1984, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said it would cost $8 billion to put a U.S. space station in orbit in the next decade. NASA currently puts the cost at $16 billion in 1984 dollars, or $19 billion in 1988 dollars.

The council, however, said NASA's spending plans cover only the cost of services, hardware and software purchased from contractors and listed in NASA budgets as research and development.

"A number of other costs for services and support required by space station are not included in the space station research and development account," said the panel. "These include costs for such things as launch services, salaries of NASA personnel working on space station, spares and other operational costs and the construction of space station (ground) facilities."

The report did note that the other costs, except for certain modifications to the shuttle, are provided for elsewhere in NASA's financial planning.

"However, this more comprehensive estimate of Space Station Program costs is useful for understanding the full resource commitment to Space Station and for planning and management purposes," the seven-page report said.

The report, signed by committee chairman Robert C. Seamans, Jr., was sent to Frank C. Carlucci, the president's national security adviser; William R. Graham, the White House science adviser; budget director James C. Miller; and NASA administrator James C. Fletcher.

Because of the jump in costs since the original estimate, NASA — with White House concurrence — recently decided to build the station in two phases. Phase 1, which will yield a barebones manned station, will cost $12.2 billion in 1984 dollars. The second block will cost $3.8 billion, bringing the total to $16 billion. Taking inflation into account, that would total $19 billion in 1988 dollars.

Meese Reaped $40,000 Profits

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III reaped nearly $40,000 in profits on speculative stock investments of $54,500 in just 19 months, according to newly released financial information which one Senate critic says raises as many questions as it answers.

The attorney general's profits, minus more than $5,200 in fees to his investment manager, Franklyn Chinn, were disclosed Monday as Meese's personal lawyers attempted to quell some of the controversy surrounding their client's past involvement with scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp.

None of the money which Meese handed over to Chinn was invested in Wedtech, according to Meese's lawyers.

Chinn, a San Francisco businessman, was a Wedtech consultant and sat on the board of directors of the Bronx, N.Y., defense contractor until February of this year, when he was forced to resign. He is under criminal investigation in connection with Wedtech.

Virginia Executes Whitley

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A former house painter, haggard and sweating, had no last words as he went to his death in the electric chair for murdering an elderly neighbor and sexually assaulting her corpse.

Richard Lee Whitley, 41, was put to death at the State Penitentiary on Monday night after the U.S. Supreme Court voted 6-2 to deny a stay of execution. Gov. Gerald L. Baliles had refused a plea for clemency.

Whitley, the first person executed in the state in nearly a year, was pronounced dead at 11:07 p.m. after receiving two 55-second jolts of electricity, said Department of Corrections spokesman Wayne Farrar.

About 30 death-penalty opponents, carrying candles and singing songs, waited outside the prison. Unlike previous executions, there were no demonstrations by supporters of capital punishment.

Whitley was the sixth person executed in Virginia since it reinstituted the death penalty in 1982 and the 81st in the nation since the U.S. Supreme Court reinstated capital punishment in 1976.

As he was led into the chamber, he appeared haggard and was perspiring. A priest prayed softly with the condemned man, and at one point pressed his forehead against Whitley's.

Whitley told a TV station earlier in the day that he regretted killing Phebe Parsons, 63, in 1980.

"I do have remorse for what happened, you know, because I really didn't know the woman all that well," he told WTVR in a telephone interview. "I didn't have nothing against her."

Arizona Group Launches Effort To Recall Governor

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Opponents of Gov. Evan Mecham plan to raffle off the right to sign the first petition to recall the man they say has "embarrassed Arizonans nationally" with his statements and appointments.

Mecham, a Republican, characterized his opponents as "homosexuals and a few dissident Democrats," and said he would welcome a recall vote.

Organizers filed papers formally beginning the recall campaign Monday but said it would take until Friday to get the petitions printed. They need at least 216,746 voter signatures by Nov. 3 to force a recall election.

Movement founder Ed Buck said his group has spent about $60,000 and has a list of 5,000 volunteers to circulate petitions.

"This is not a situation where we have to convince people," he said. "It's been our experience that we get mobbed with crowds" whenever information tables are set up.

To raise money, Buck said the group would hold a party Friday and ask for donations of $15 a person and $25 a couple at the door. Organizers will hold a drawing from among the partygoers for the right to be the first to sign.

If the petition drive succeeds, the election probably could not be held before next spring, and the process could cost about $2 million, according to Secretary of State Rose Mofford.

The governor "has embarrassed Arizonans nationally through his insensitive and demeaning statements about women and minorities as well as his appointment of individuals who are not qualified," Buck's group said in a statement.

Mecham, who won a three-way race with about 40 percent of the vote last fall, has been at the center of controversy since his January inauguration.

His appointments have included an education lobbyist who said teachers shouldn't argue with students who believe the world is flat, a chief investigator who withdrew when his criminal convictions came to light and an insurance executive whose license had been revoked.

His decision to rescind a Martin Luther King holiday for state employees, which he said had been established illegally, prompted some musicians to cancel concerts in the state. Some organizations, most recently the National Basketball Association, decided to move their conventions elsewhere.

Mecham last month issued a proclamation declaring a King observance day on the third Sunday in January, but opponents say they want a paid weekday off for state employees.

Mecham also has said that working women cause divorce and that he saw nothing wrong with calling black children "pickaninnies."

Arizona's Democratic Party opposes the recall movement, saying it hopes Mecham's continued presence will prompt voters to elect a Democratic Legislature next year.

State GOP Chairman Burton Kruglick described the movement's organizers as a "band of homosexual agitators" and predicted it would fail.

Buck has said he is homosexual but that most of the campaign's officials are not. He accused Mecham and Kruglick of trying to divert attention from Mecham's conduct.

In Utah, where Mecham is attending the annual meeting of the Western Governor's Association, the governor said Monday he isn't bothered by the recall drive and won't campaign against it.

"I don't think the people of Arizona are going to follow the lead of a person who is an avowed homosexual and has been arrested on drug and morals charges," Mecham said.

Buck pleaded guilty to a reduced charge after being arrested in 1983 in an adult theater for alleged morals violations. He was arrested in January on a charge of altering a prescription. The case is pending as Buck undergoes a rehabilitation program.

"The homosexuals are unhappy because I've publicly said I don't approve of their lifestyle and I said I wouldn't hire anybody who was homosexual," Mecham said. "At least a recall election I think would shut them all up."

DOE Eyes Ban On Collider Plans

By GUY DARST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Energy Department is trying to assess the possible impact of a congressional action preventing the department from considering states' financial incentives to land the planned "super collider" atom smasher.

The ban, which would not stop the states from making those offers, was contained in the supplemental appropriations bill approved last week for the current fiscal year. President Reagan is expected to sign the bill.

The measure, originally proposed by Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., was modified to make clear that a state can spend funds to improve a prospective site and the Energy Department still can consider that site.

In addition, a state still can offer direct financial incentives.

Domenici was concerned that small states would be shut out of any realistic chance to land the super collider, one of the biggest scientific plants in years. The $4.4 billion installation with its 52-miles-around tunnel will have a $270 million annual budget, 3,000 scientific jobs and no pollution except slightly radioactive waste similar to what a hospital would generate.

Several states, including Illinois and Texas, are preparing elaborate proposals.

Charles Cook, an aide to Rep. Ralph Hall, D-Texas, said Monday the provisions in the supplemental appropriations bill have "created an ambiguity. Is it fair for a state like Illinois, which has Fermilab, to be able to count Fermilab in its applications when other states can't count dollars?"

Fermilab, at Batavia, Ill., is the most powerful atom-smasher operating in the United States. Illinois officials have been considering a proposal to the Energy Department to modify it for the 20-times-more-powerful super collider.

Cook said he did not see how officials doing the selection could keep from being influenced by particular parts of state proposals. Even if incentives are not put before them formally, "members of the sifting entity read the newspapers," Cook said.

Proposals from the states are due Aug. 3. The selection process is scheduled to end in July 1988 with the choice of the Energy Department's "preferred site" and final designation of that site, barring the unforeseen, in January 1989.

Cook and Vickie Wallen, an aide to Rep. Terry Bruce, D-Ill., said they believed the ban on considering financial incentives would expire with the current fiscal year Sept. 30.

FOCUS

Sacred Rats

Americans care little for rats, even unusual ones like the obese Zucker rat on the right. But in Bikaner, India, rats are beloved. They are welcomed guests in the temple there dedicated to Karai Ma, the goddess of professional poets, called Charans. According to legend, whenever a Charan dies, he returns to the temple as a rat. And any temple rat that dies returns as a poet. It is considered a good omen for a temple rat to crawl over the bowed head of a believer.

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY July 8

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You will require a change of scenery today. Expect some delays and upsets in your plans and use this time to contemplate your actions before you get in over your head.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): A situation which was not resolved in the past will reappear. Get it settled for good this time so it won't pop up again.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Patience will be needed to handle a difficult business situation. Tonight would be fine for enjoying your TV at home.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Don't complain about fulfilling a promise to a partner. Take no risks in public or while driving today.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Something interesting will come up later to add spice to your daily routines. Don't let gripes bother you.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Your mate may be in a difficult mood today, but a smile from you is all that will be required to rectify the situation.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Accept home situations as they are. Arguments could make matters worse. The time is not for having guests in.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Attending to correspondence you've ignored will bring a surprising message. Be more considerate.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Clear up the situation with your debts, and be careful about creating more. Property repairs would be wise at this point.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): You may feel limited by current situations, but there are actually more opportunities than meet the eye.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Don't let your loved one upset you this morning. By the evening everything will have smoothed out well.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): An unexpected matter will develop in the evening. It could be nice, depending on how you react to it.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): A sudden change in present conditions will allow you to get rid of a credit problem. Clear up old projects.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, will love to travel and will constantly crave new experiences. Your child will have to develop a philosophy that helps curb the tendency to get angry about delays. Learning many foreign languages will be easy for this child, and will be very helpful later.

The 13th annual bridge match between Britain's two Chambers of Parliament was won by the House of Lords, who thereby took a 7-6 lead over the Commons. Organized by Rixi Markus, this annual event has proved popular and raises considerable sums for charity.

The award for the best-played hand went to Lord Lever for this effort. In the days before politics began to absorb so much of his time, Lord Lever was a regular at London's bridge clubs. Playing with Lord Dufferin of Ava, Lord Lever found himself declaring five diamonds.

Looking at all four hands, it is easy to see that the lead of the king of hearts would have resulted in a heart ruff for the defense and a one-trick set. However, that lead was far too venturesome, so West made his natural lead of a club.

Declarer won the opening lead in dummy and led the jack of diamonds. The percentage play with ten cards in a suit missing the king is to take the finesse. However, South did not want to lose a trick early and give the defenders the opportunity to find the heart shift. So he rose with the ace and great was the fall thereon.

Obviously, had the king of trumps not dropped under the ace, Lord Lever would have taken the spade finesse in an attempt to get rid of one or more of his heart losers. When the monarch dropped, declarer was able to draw the last trump and lead the jack of spades and make an overtrick when West covered.

Last year saw a match between the Senate and the House of Representatives in Washington. We hope that, too, will become an annual affair with play of a standard as high as that in England.

Actors Find 'Real' Money In Doing TV Commercials

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Cliff Robertson ran through the reading for the third time on Stage 11 at the Culver Studios.
"Let's do it again," said the director. On the fourth try, Robertson stumbled over a word. A woman standing by the director held a stop watch. On the next reading, the director still wasn't satisfied, but agreed that Robertson had the right pace.
Robertson had just flown in from Canada for three long days of filming and sound recording commercials for AT&T. A limousine was waiting outside to take him to the airport for a flight to London.
Several times, people walked onto the stage during recording despite the red warning light. Robertson shook his head in disbelief. "The light doesn't stop them," he said. "It used to be sacrosanct. Everybody kept quiet."
Although Robertson is a major star and appears regularly in motion pictures and television, a substantial part of his income comes from his commercials for AT&T.
In 1985, actors working in film earned $287 million, or approximately half of all their income, from commercials, said Mark Locher, a spokesman for the Screen Actors Guild. A large percentage of the commercials are made in New York, the only area of production where New York is ahead of Los Angeles.
"Commercials are really the bread and butter of the working actor," said Locher.

They are also the caviar of many stars. Figures are hard to come by, but multimillion-dollar contracts are common.
Pop star Michael Jackson has made millions for his commercials for Pepsi Cola. "Moonlighting" star Bruce Willis has a multimillion-dollar contract with Seagrams for wine cooler commercials.
John Wayne reportedly received $2 million for his spots for a savings and loan company. Henry Fonda once said he made more from commercials filmed in five days than from all the rest of his movies that year.
Bill Cosby is probably the star seen most often in current TV commercials. His spots for Jell-O seem to be everywhere, frequently run with his top-rated series on NBC, "The Cosby Show."
Marty Ingels, the first and the biggest of the "celebrity brokers," persuaded stars to do commercials after setting up his company in 1976.
"You see stories about Michael Jackson or Alan Alda signing $5 million contracts, but those are for four or five years, with yearly options," he said. "The big money is there, but it's spread over a number of years."
Ingels said the fees paid to stars are going up for some, but they are falling for others because of an oversupply of celebrities. He also feels that many stars have become overexposed.
Robertson worked through the lunch hour on the voiceover recordings. Later, he moved to another sound stage for a commercial set in an airport terminal. In the background, a model of a Boeing 747 was on an all-but-invisible wire strung at an angle. The model was pulled across the stage and appeared to be taking off.
"We're doing five commercials, plus some voice work," he said. "The great thing is that they go to where I am to film these. I've been doing them for three years and we've done them in London, New York, Florida."
Ingels said the kind of commercials Robertson does are "the best kind."
"There are three categories of commercials at the top and three categories at the bottom," he said. "The best kind is the institutional commercial. You come out and talk about a company's overall policies. Essentially, you are selling yourself as much as the company."

Other best commercials, according to Ingels, are cameo appearances and those in which a person performs. At the bottom are commercials for dog food, deodorants and female products. "Ten years ago nobody would have considered those, but stars are doing them today," he said.
Tom and Dick Smothers have signed to do commercials for Magnavox. "The gimmick is that their machines are smart," said Dick Smothers. "So they could have hired someone who was smart or someone who was dumb. They got the Smothers Brothers and got both."
Tom, who plays the "dumb" brother in their comedy-singing act, said: "One thing that's kept us alive when we haven't had a series has been commercials. It's given us a lot of exposure."

CBS Drops Neilsens

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS, like ABC, has canceled its contract with the A.C. Nielsen Co. over the introduction by the TV ratings service of "people meters" in the fall.
David Poltrack, CBS vice president for research, said Monday the network might still sign with Nielsen before the new season starts in September, but the notification of cancellation was necessary to avoid automatic renewal of the contract.
None of the big three networks has signed with Nielsen for the new season because of concern that people meters, hand-held devices for measuring viewership, will distort ratings when they go into use in the fall.

Jennings Happy To Finish Second

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — For weeks, the big story in the news ratings has been, NBC No. 1, CBS No. 3.
"I think you should pay more attention to No. 2," says Peter Jennings, anchor of ABC's "World News Tonight."
When you've been in last place for almost a year, being second is worth noting.
During the unprecedented five weeks that CBS has been in third place, ABC has been second. The last time ABC was out of third place was the week of Aug. 25, 1986, when CBS was first and NBC was third.
"Even when we were third, I was quite happy with our ratings," Jennings said in a telephone interview.
"Of course, it's nicer to be No. 2 than No. 3, but in this shop for well over a year, we have all been very content with the ratings."
Week after week, Jennings and the "World News" crew have had to read that their newscast was in last place among the three networks in the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings. But staying as close to first as 1½ rating points was an accomplishment, considering that the network's prime-time schedule was 4 points behind the leader at the end of the season.
By the end of the regular season last April, "NBC Nightly News" and the "CBS Evening News" finished in a draw, with a rating of 12.0 and a 22 share. ABC was third with a 10.6 and a 19.

The rating is a percentage of the nation's estimated 87.4 million households with television. The share is a percentage of the audience during a particular time period.
Since there are only three comparable network newscasts, there is a first, a second and a last. But the difference between the ratings is not as significant as the rankings make it sound.
True, the newscasts draw a smaller audience than the top prime-time shows, but as a matter of comparison, the 1½ rating points and 3 share points that separated NBC and ABC at the end of the season was the same as the gap between "The Cosby Show" and "Family Ties," the

No. 1- and No. 2-rated, prime-time shows.
It was news when CBS dropped to third, because it had been in a neck-and-neck race for first with NBC for so long.
