Admiral Says Reagan OK'd Swap Of Arms For Hostages

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former National Security Adviser John Poindexter, breaking months of silence, told the Iran-Contra committees today that President Reagan initially approved weapons sales to Iran as a straight arms-for-hostages deal.

But in dramatic, nationally televised testimony, Poindexter said he later destroyed the document bearing Reagan's signature to spare him political embarrassment. "I tore it up and put it in the burn bag behind my desk," he said.

In words that undercut Reagan's own statements, Poindexter said Reagan signed a secret document authorizing the sales on December 5, 1985. He said it made no mention of a broader diplomatic initiative that Reagan frequently has cited to explain his decision to sell arms to Tehran.

Poindexter, a Navy rear admiral, said he tore up the document as the arms-to-Iran scheme came unraveled last fall because "I thought it was a significant political embarrassment to the president and I wanted to protect him from possible disclosure of this."

Poindexter said he and former National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane also had broader diplomatic purposes in mind for the arms sale. But he said the document, prepared by CIA officials, did not reflect their thinking.

Under questioning from Senate counsel Arthur Liman, Poindexter said he decided on his own to detroy the document, and Reagan didn't know.

"We did not, repeat, did not, trade weapons or anything else for hostages, nor will we," the president said in a televised speech to the nation in November 1986.

Later, in March 1987, Reagan conceded after receiving the Tower commission report that the deal had "deteriorated" into one that was tantamount to trading arms for hostages.

At the outset of the hearing, Poindexter's lawyer, Richard Beckler, revealed that the former national security adviser had become the target of a criminal investigation.

Beckler tried but failed to persuade the Iran-Contra committees to withdraw a subpoena demanding testimony from the former top White House aide.

"We have recently been informed that Adm. Poindexter is the target of a grand jury investigation" by independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh, Beckler said as he futilely tried to get the committees to withdraw its subpoena or to order the televisionlights turned off in the committee room.

The request to have the subpoena withdrawn was rejected by Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., chairman of the House committee conducting the investigation.

GUC Will Continue Building Renovation

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Greenville Utilities Commission board members — faced with the problem of disposing of asbestos discovered in the ceiling plaster in the utilities' office building at the intersection of Fifth and Washington streets — voted Tuesday night to continue with a planned $380,000 renovation of the building.

But the price, according to architect James G. Hite, will be increased by the amount it costs to have the asbestos removed — an estimated $165,500 — and the cost of replacing duct work and ceilings affected by the asbestos removal process ($36,880).

Construction workers were removing ceiling plaster from the building's third floor last month — as part of a $180,000 contract to renovate the second and third floors — when it was discovered that the plaster contained asbestos.

Asbestos fiber is considered a cancer-causing material and removal is covered by stringent state and federal laws.

So work on the renovation was stopped and a contract awarded to South Insulation Co. of Wilson for $65,500 to remove the asbestos and clean the third floor.

Tuesday night, Hite, who said removal of the asbestos on the third floor is nearly complete, outlined three alternatives: complete the renovation of the third floor ($177,700 plus the $65,500 for asbestos removal) and leave the first and second floors as are; complete the third floor renovation and remove asbestos from the first and second floors ($465,000 including $65,500 to remove the asbestos from the third floor and an estimated $50,000 to remove the asbestos from the second floor, or move ahead with plans to renovate the entire building ($582,700, including an estimated $165,500 for removal of asbestos from all three floors.)

GUC General Manager Malcolm Green reported to the board last month that, as soon as the asbestos was found in the ceiling material, officials with the air quality section of the state's Division of Environmental Management were notified and a certified industrial hygienist was called in.

Green said the hygienist sealed off the third floor and took air samples and wipe samples from throughout the building.

But the samples, Green said, indicated no asbestos contamination of the first and second floors. Air samples taken in the third floor board room contained only .005 fiber per cubic centimeter (regulations allow normal breathing without a respirator at .01 fiber per cubic centimeter), while wipe samples taken from a dedge in the board room indicated no asbestos fibers.

The sampling, Green said, indicated "our employees and the general public had not been exposed to the material."

Green said the original specifications for the building called for the ceilings to be made of Portland cement vermiculite plaster — a non-asbestos material.

Hite said Tuesday that specifications have been written to secure firm bids for removal of the asbestos from the first and second floors.

Power Bill Beats Peak

Alan J. Grier of Greenville has learned just how much it takes to operate electricity in a new home — $18,670.66.

Grier recently received his electricity bill in the mail for his new home on Speight Drive. In 19 days of service from June 19 to July 8, the bill says he used 469 kilowatts of electricity for a charge of $18,118.47. An additional $558.52 was added to the bill for sales tax, area lighting and the connection charge.

But, Grier did save $6.33 on Beat-the-Peak.

"It's the first bill on my new house," he said. "I wonder what the rest of them would be like. That's only 19 days."

"He may not want to keep that home if it's going to run those kind of bills," said Malcolm Green, general manager at Greenville Utilities Commission. "It has been hot, but it hadn't been quite that hot."

Green said the misprint probably was caused by a transposition of numbers. "Computers can do some strange things."

Errors in computing usage of customers with previous credits usually are caught by the computer, he said.

Dam Pours Flood On French Campers

ANNECY, France (AP) — An earthen dam collapsed, and a wave of mud and water from a rain-swollen river swept into a campground filled with Bastille Day vacationers, leaving 50 people dead or missing, authorities said today.

Hundreds of rescue workers digging through dirt and rocks in the French Alpine village of Grand Bourand found the bodies of 19 people, and 31 others were feared dead in the flood and mudslide, said police spokesman Jean Jouandet. Ten people were seriously injured and dozens were treated for shock.

Other estimates said as many as 40 people were missing.

The dam of rocks holding back the Arve River beside the village broke in a storm on Tuesday, Bastille Day, at the end of the long holiday weekend. The water cascaded over tents, trailers and recreation vehicles, and pushed mud and huge rocks into the campsite, leaving no time for escape, witnesses said.

More than 250 rescue workers searched for the missing until about midnight Tuesday. Another 250 joined the effort at first light today, lifting fallen trees, opening flooded vehicles buried under more than three feet of mud, and searching door-to-door among villagers for those reported missing by their families.

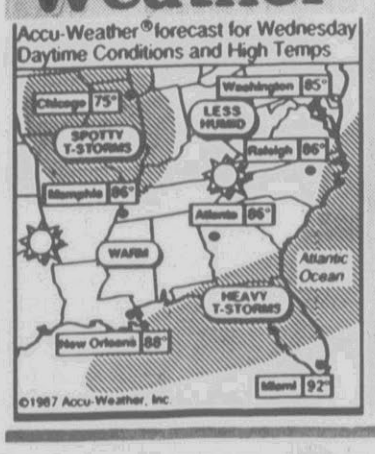

Officials said there were about 150 campers and 70 trailers at the time the dam broke in the flat, grassy valley between two forested mountains. It was not known how many foreigners were among the campers at Grand Bournand, a winter ski resort popular with French tourists.

Three bodies were discovered immediately after the flood, and 16 more were found by midday today. A mortuary was set up in Grand Bornand today and authorities began trying to identify the dead.

According to witnesses, five or six of the missing people were buried in the mud.

Evangelist Says He's Forgiven

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Evangelist John Wesley Fletcher told a gathering here that God has forgiven him for the part he played in an encounter seven years ago that led to the downfall of PTL founder Jim Bakker earlier this year.

A Durham native now living in Oklahoma City, Fletcher was the "resident evangelist at PTL in Charlotte" when he arranged Jessica Hahn's Dec. 6, 1980, trip to Florida that led to her alleged sexual tryst with Bakker.

The Charlotte Observer, which had closely scrutinized Bakker's television ministry for 10 years, broke the story of his affair with Ms. Hahn in March. And Fletcher told the newspaper that he told former PTL President Richard Dortch in February 1985 that he had arranged for Ms. Hahn — then a 21-year-old secretary at a Pentecostal church — to meet Bakker.

Ms. Hahn, now 27 and living in Massapequa, N.Y., said she had baby-sat with Fletcher's children and that Fletcher knew she idolized Bakker.

At the Florida hotel where she met Bakker, Ms. Hahn said, she was given drugged wine and, even though she resisted, was unable to fight off Bakker's advances.

Because of the scandal, Bakker resigned as PTL's chairman on March 19.

Fletcher, who has been conducting services at the Foursquare Christian Center on North Memorial Drive since Sunday, has declined to be interviewed. (The last service in the series is scheduled for 7:30 tonight.)

But during the service Sunday night, Fletcher said "all the news that's been reported has been old news to me and my family. Seven years ago I lived through this privately.

"I lived for seven years wondering if the day would ever come that the dark hand lurking in the corner would reach out and grab some of us," Fletcher said.

Fletcher told his audiance that, after the encounter in Florida, he left the PTL — for "Praise The Lord" and "People That Love" — and even left the ministry for seven months.

"I was dismissed from the Assemblies of God for ministerial misconduct. I sinned against God. I sinned against the church.

"I feel very sorry and feel ashamed," he said, and "I can't blame anybody for anything I've participated in but myself."

But Fletcher said "I've asked God to forgive me ... I repented of this (and) I intend to serve Jesus, no matter what.

"What more can I do but go on with God ... say the Lord is my shepherd?"

Fletcher added, "If you get out of line, what you sow you're gonna reap."

"Because it has become public and is public knowledge," Fletcher said, "if the media is looking for me to point my finger and get on television and say who did what, they're looking toward the wrong person to accuse anybody.

"To those of you who believe, no explanation is needed. To those of you who do not believe, no explanation is possible."

Students Gave Funds

East Carolina University's journalism program will receive new equipment this fall, thanks to six students who donated $100 to purchase a paste-up table and waxer.

The students were part of a copy editing and make-up class which emphasizes the layout and design of newspapers.

Each semester the class is required to produce a newspaper. Students use a recently purchased computer and printer to produce columns of copy in the journalism lab, but have had to go elsewhere to put the paper together.

The lighted table, which allows students to see through a layout sheet, and waxer, which is used to attach copy to a page, will help save time during production.

Rob Powell, a Greenville student, realized the program's need and set the project in motion. "We realized that it was an inconvenience to do the paste-up work elsewhere," he said. "The group saw no reason why we couldn't donate some money toward the equipment. Now other students won't have to deal with the problem."

Writing Fellows

Two Greenville teachers were among 18 classroom teachers selected as Writing Fellows to participate in the sixth North Carolina Writing Project held recently at Atlantic Christian College, Wilson.

Frankie Brunson of Third Street School and Edith Jendrasiak of St. Peter's School attended the workshop, which dealt with superior techniques of teaching writing in the classroom for teachers in kindergarten through 12th grades.

Similar workshops are scheduled at seven other campus sites across the state.

The project is funded through a grant from the North Carolina Legislature. Special funding allowed a few private school teachers to participate.

Fellows received six hours of graduate credit in the teaching of writing.

Following workshop completion, participants become teacher consultants who will present writing techniques during in-service sessions within their regions.

Phone System Ailing

The phone system in the Employment Security Commission office in Greenville has been hampered by lightning, according to Jim Hannan, office manager.

Hannan said lightning struck the system Sunday night and only four of the 26 lines into the office are now working. He asked to public to "please bear with us." He said he is having someone watch the switchboard, which lights up, but does not make a sound.

As many calls as possible are being answered, Hannan said. To a person calling into the office when more than four calls at a time are in progress, it sounds as if the phone is ringing, but the call is actually not getting through, he said.

Initiation Saturday

The Wilson Odd Fellows Lodge No. 11988 of Ayden will have initiation Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in the Masonic Hall.

A native of Greenville, she received her undergraduate degree from ECU in 1975 and completed her master's in education degree in 1986.

Ms. Allen previously taught English for 10 years at J.H. Rose High School. She served as cheerleader advisor for nine yeas and was on the fund-raising committee for the Rose High stadium, currently under construction.

Ms. Allen is the daughter of Tommy and Martha Snowden of Greenville and is the mother of a 10-year-old daughter, Emily.

"We now have 34 (ECU alumni) chapters, including out-of-state chapters in Georgia, Florida, Virginia, Washington, D.C., New Jersey/New York and California," she said. "I'd like to bring together alumni in other areas to form more chapters in more states."

GUC Cites Electrical Savings

The Greenville Utilities Commission saved $132,816 in electric power costs during the month of June through load management operations Roger Jones, GUC's director of electric systems, told board members Tuesday night.

According to Jones' report, $29,453 of the savings resulted from operation of radio-controlled load management switches on water heaters, while the savings resulting from operation of load management switches on central air conditioning units amounted to $25,641.

Voltage adjustments accounted for a savings of $73,689, while operation of generators at the commission's water plant accounted for $2,857 and operation of generators at Procter and Gamble Paper Products accounted for $1,177.

Since January 1985, load management operations have resulted in a savings of some $3.74 million in wholesale power costs.

At the end of June there were 8,487 load management switches in service on water heaters throughout the GUC system and 8,771 switches in service on central air conditioning units.

The GUC board was also told Tuesday night that the Arthur Young Co. is now completing the formal evaluation of bids received for a new computer system and should make a recommendation on the purchase of a system — including hardware and software — in September.

Sandy Slider, an Arthur Young Co. spokesman, said the five bids received ranged from a low of $395,000 to $560,000.

In other business, the board awarded contracts for the purchase and installation of equipment for the Wellcome substation, including: $11,321 for a remote terminal unit from QET, Inc.; $110,851 for installation of equipment to C.W. Wright Construction; and $6,000 for a group operated air break switch from Siemens Engineering and Automation.

Contracts for the purchase of other items that were approved included: 40,000 feet of cable from Eastern Electric Supply Inc. for $29,200; 50 padmount transformers from Westinghouse Electric Supply Co. for $52,850; one padmount transformer from Eastern Electric Supply Inc. for $10,207; 550,000 pounds of aluminum sulfate from American Cyanamid Co. for $31,350;330,000 pounds of caustic soda from Southchem, Inc. for $31,057; 216,000 pounds of clorine from Van, Waters & Rogers for $58,000; and 100 electric meters from Rigby Electric Supply Co. for $23,670.

Other bids approved were: $26,100 for 100 electric meters from Rigby Electric Supply Co.; $24,726 for 100 electgric meters from Westinghouse Electric Supply Co.; $51,840 for 1,800 electric meters from Westinghouse Electric Supply Co.; $23,130 for 200 electric meters from Rigby Electric Supply Co.; and $24,131 for a four-wheel drive trencher with options from Ditch Witch of N.C. Inc.

The board scheduled a workshop meeting for 7:30 p.m. July 21.

S.C. Boosts Speed Limit To 65 MPH

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — It's official — South Carolina motorists can begin driving 65 mph.

Maintenance workers with the South Carolina Department of Highways and Public Transportation began installing new speed limit signs today across the state.

"They started putting them up at about 7:30 this morning," said Frank Braddock, a department spokesman. "They should be done by tomorrow."

The first signs were put up on Interstate 95 in Jasper County near Hardeeville, Braddock said.

"We're doing it on a county-by-county basis," he said. "So far, we haven't had any problems. I think everything's going real smooth."

Braddock emphasized motorists can only drive 65 mph where the new signs are installed.

"Whenever you see a speed limit sign that says 65 mph, that's what the speed limit is. By the same token, if you pass a 55 mph sign, that's what the speed is. We want folks to understand that."

Col. J.H. Lanier, state Highway Patrol commander, said troopers will be strictly enforcing the new speed limit.

Virginia Reactor Shut Down

MINERAL, Va. (AP) — An internal leak of radioactive water forced the shutdown today of one of two reactors at the North Anna nuclear power plant, Virginia Power officials said.

The utility declared an alert, the second-lowest of four emergency classifications.

"There appears to have been no significant release of radioactive material to the atmosphere," said utility spokesman Charles Carmichael.

He said the alert was declared after the leak was discovered between two cooling systems in the Unit 1 reactor. He described the leak as internal.

Asked about the amount of radioactive material that might mave been released, Carmichael said, "We're not sure. There may have been a minor release but we're really not certain at this point."

Carmichael said the cause of the leak was not immediately known.

The plant, one of two nuclear power stations operated by the utility, is in Louisa County, northwest of Richmond. Its two units, which went on line in June 1978, generate 1,830 megawatts.

In February 1984, radioactive rubidium gas contaminated the protective clothing of about 30 construction workers at North Anna. Virginia Power officials said the workers were isolated for about 40 minutes until the short-lived element decayed.

In June 1986, Virginia Power was fined $25,000 for a security breach at North Anna in which the Nuclear Regulatory Commission said a contract employee had entered a protected area. The NRC said the incident was the result of "inadequate attention to security-related responsibilities."

The following month, eight painters at North Anna were denied access to the plant after the company received a tip that they allegedly used marijuana and cocaine.

Four people were killed Dec. 9 when a hot water pipe burst at Virginia Power's second nuclear power plant, in Surry County southeast of Richmond. The victims were employees of an outside contractor.

The four nuclear emergency classifications, from lowest to highest severity, are: unusual event, alert, site emergency and general emergency.

Senate Committee Begins Hearings On How To Increase Tax Revenues

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate committee is starting hearings on tax increases, while the full Senate considers imposing automatic spending cuts unless the White House agrees to tax hikes and other deficit-reduction steps.

Finance Committee chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, today opens three days of hearings on how Congress should meet the mandate of its budget to raise $19.3 billion in taxes in fiscal 1988.

Democratic lawmakers contend the taxes are necessary to reduce the deficit and are pushing ahead despite Reagan's repeated veto threats.

To push the president and Congress toward compromise, the Senate is braced for action on restoring automatic spending cuts to the Gramm-Rudman budget balancing law.

The law originally used across-the-board cuts to enforce its deficit cutting program, but the Supreme Court ruled the cutting mechanism unconstitutional. Reviving those cuts with a constitutional mechanism would force the president to choose between negotiating taxes and cuts with the Democrats, or facing arbitrary cuts divided between defense and domestic programs.

"I hope we get the president to sit down at the table" to find a compromise deficit-reduction plan, said Bentsen. The president says taxes would be off the table, but Bentsen says "that would be part of it."

The Senate's new Gramm-Rudman would reinstate the cuts, but also ease the deficit targets that must be met to avoid triggering the cuts. Instead of a $108 billion deficit target next year, the new goal would be about $145 billion. And instead of reaching a balanced budget in fiscal 1991, that would be postponed until fiscal 1992.

"I think what we're doing is being truthful" about what can actually be accomplished, said Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., the House Budget Committee chairman who has been working on a House version of the Gramm-Rudman fix.

Gray released a study Tuesday to show the impact of the automatic spending cuts.

It said the defense budget would be reduced 14.8 percent, and domestic programs not protected from Gramm-Rudman would be cut 21.2 percent, if the original $108 billion target were kept for fiscal 1988. A $36 billion annual cut, as envisioned by the revised deficit reduction schedule, would trim the military side 5.8 percent and domestic 7.5 percent.

A large portion of domestic spending, including Social Security, poverty programs and veterans benefits, are exempt from Gramm-Rudman cutbacks.

President Reagan's budget director, James C. Miller III, said Tuesday the White House would go along with easing the budget-balancing schedule. But he said the president also wanted changes in the law so the automatic cuts would shift toward the administration's priorities.

Instead of a 50-50 split between military and domestic programs, the president wants the Pentagon to absorb less of the hit. Congress should also give the White House more power to decide which domestic programs are cut when the across-the-board reductions are made, he said.

"We don't want to find ourselves in a box where the president doesn't have the tools," Miller said. "Simply a clean fix (of Gramm-Rudman) without budget process reform is unwise."

Senate Budget Committee Chairman Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., told reporters after the hearing there was "no chance" of those changes being adopted by the Democratic-controlled Congress.

The bipartisan plan to restore the Gramm-Rudman cuts is being drafted as an amendment to an emergency bill increasing the national debt ceiling, which is expected to come before the Senate as early as Wednesday.

The current ceiling of $2.32 trillion expires this week, and the Treasury by month's end will be out of cash to cover the government's operations. If new borrowing is not approved by Congress, the government would default on its obligations — a financial catastrophe.

The House has approved a debt ceiling increase without any amendments. The two chambers will have to approve identical legislation before it is sent to the president.

World's Elderly Increasing Faster Than Other Ages

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of old people in the world is growing faster than the general population, with 23 nations now coping with more than 2 million elderly apiece, the Census Bureau reports.

"Rapidly expanding numbers of older people represent a social phenomenon without historical precedent, and one that is bound to alter previously held stereotypes of older persons," says a report issued Tuesday.

In forty years, the report "An Aging World" predicts, the number of nations with elderly populations of over 2 million will more than double to 50.

The trend "is an extraordinary testimony to the improvement of our lives," the report says, noting that better health care has helped extend human lifespans.

But, it adds, "the growth of older populations poses a considerable challenge to public policy."

Worldwide, the number of people aged 65 and over is growing at 2.4 percent annually, much faster than the global population as a whole. This group is expected to grow from 290 million people currently to 410 million by the year 2000, says the study by Barbara Boyle Torrey, Kevin G. Kinsella and Cynthia M. Taeuber.

The world's population, which has just topped the 5 billion mark, according population experts, is growing by an estimated 1.7 percent annually.

In many nations, the new study says, the elderly population is itself growing older, because of higher rates of increase of people aged 75 and over.

Indeed, people aged 80 and over constitute 14 percent of the world's elderly today, and in many nations these people could constitute the fastest growing segment of the elderly through the middle of the next century, the study reports.

"The stunning growth of the elderly population has various economic implications for individuals, families and public policymakers and planners throughout the world, particularly in terms of meeting the relatively greater health needs of the older population," the report observes.

Long-term debilitating illness could become an acute problem in many developing nations where preventive health measures are less common, the study says. It notes that resources already are less available in these nations to help the chronically ill elderly.

"All countries of the world will require enormous investments just to maintain current levels of services," the report concludes.

While the study does not detail the elderly populations of every nation, it does single out several for mention:

—Sweden, with 17 percent of its population 65 and over in 1985, has the largest share of elderly of any major country. That's about the same proportion of elderly as in Florida, a favorite haven for retirees.

—"The speed of Japan's aging is almost breathtaking," the report says. It will take just 26 years for Japan to double its proportion of elderly from 7 percent to 14 percent, compared to 66 years for the United States.

—Efforts to lower the birth rate in China, if successful, could result in 40 percent of the people in that nation being 65 and older by the middle of the next century.

—Nine countries currently have more than 1 million residents aged 80 and over. They are the United States, China, Soviet Union, India, Japan, West Germany, France, United Kingdom and Italy.

Here is a list of the 23 nations that have more than 2 million people aged 65 and over, according to the study:

China, 52.9 million; India, 32.7 million; United States, 28.6 million; Soviet Union, 25.9 million; Japan, 12.1 million; West Germany, 8.8 million; United Kingdom, 8.5 million;

Italy, 7.4 million; France, 6.7 million; Indonesia, 5.9 million; Brazil, 5.8 million; Spain, 4.3 million; Poland, 3.5 million; Bangladesh, 3.1 million; Pakistan, 2.8 million;

Mexico, 2.8 million; Canada, 2.6 million; Argentina, 2.6 million; Vietnam, 2.4 million; Nigeria, 2.3 million; East Germany, 2.2 million; Romania, 2.2 million, and Turkey, 2.1 million.

Expected to join this group by the year 2025 are Thailand, Philippines, South Korea, Egypt, Iran, Burma, Yugoslavia, Colombia, South Africa, Ethiopia, Australia, Zaire, North Korea, Netherlands, Morocco, Peru, Czechoslovakia, Venezuela, Algeria, Sri Lanka, Malaysia, Sudan, Tanzania, Chile, Kenya, Iraq and Hungary.

Panel Considering Subsidizing Jobs

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House committee that added $150 million for child care services to a major new welfare-to-work program is weighing other changes including the addition of subsidized jobs for some participants.

The Education and Labor Committee version of the welfare plan also would authorize $500 million next year for the existing Work Incentive — WIN — program for welfare mothers.

The provisions are part of a "Fair Work Opportunities Act" proposed by committee chairman Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., as a substitute to the National Education, Training and Work, or NETWork, program approved by the House Ways and Means Committee as part of a larger welfare reform measure.

The Hawkins substitute would authorize transitional, government-subsidized employment for up to one year if participants could not get jobs after education, job search and training.

The substitute also bars unpaid work in exchange for welfare benefits, known as workfare, but permits "work experience" programs of up to three months and 30 hours a week if they are designed to provide marketable skills.

Under the Ways and Means Committee's NETWork program, mothers of children under 3 would be exempt from mandatory participation and those with children aged 3-6 could only be required to take part if day care were guaranteed.

But the Hawkins committee voted 20-14 on Tuesday to make guaranteed care or supervision of children up to age 14 a condition of requiring participation by mothers. The amendment was adopted despite heated argument over its wisdom and necessity.

"If you exempt everyone with children under 14, you've destroyed the bill and you've destroyed those people and their children," said Rep. Steve Bartlett, R-Texas.

"There is a great deal of temptation and problems for children that age," countered Rep. Dale Kildee, D-Mich., sponsor of the provision. He and others said after-school programs could help prevent drug abuse, keep kids in school and find after-school jobs.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Excitement Begins

On your mark, get set, go. After months of media hoopla, the U.S. Olympic Festival began this week in North Carolina.

Hype aside, the competition that occurs in the scheduled sports events is exciting for both the state and the nation. For the state, the festival is significant in two respects.

First, it means more pocket money for the five-city area hosting the festival. Those attending events will pump money into the local economy as they pay for gas, hotel rooms, food, souvenirs. Hopefully they will also visit shopping areas and leave retail dollars with merchants, then go home and tell friends what a wonderful place North Carolina is.

Second, hosting an event of this magnitude proves the state has the capability to successfully handle national occurrences. It can open the door for more broadly-focused happenings to move to the state. North Carolina has the support services needed to become a regional, even national center for special events. The Olympic Festival will expand that capacity and improve the state's chances for luring future attractions.

This economic significance is secondary, however, to the importance the festival has for the nation's young competitors. The festival will be a stepping stone to the Pan American games and the 1988 Olympics in Calgary and Seoul. The arena in North Carolina will be a consequential proving ground for many who have worked a lifetime to be there. The festival will make some competitors; it will break others. It will directly influence the quality of athletes that represent the nation to the world in 1988 and identify many of the nation's top newcomers.

The Olympic Festival is also important to the spectators, those who endured the media blitz promoting it and bought tickets. For that group, the sidelines will be an opportunity to see an event they won't get a chance to see again. The fans will see new talent whose names could become household words by 1988 or 1992. The festival is a one-time shot for spectators to see some of the greatest athletes in amateur sports in the United States.

As the festival unfolds and the competitions heat up, the state should watch with excitement. The events are both one-of-a-kind and the first of their kind. They thrust North Carolina into the national sporting spectrum in a way the state has never before been spotlighted.

Last Effort

The Beirut terrorists may be expert at seizing and holding innocent citizens of other nations but obviously they are not very good at extracting much propaganda value for their escapades.

Last week the captors of Charles Glass, the former ABC correspondent grabbed by the terrorists, displayed him on a video tape proclaiming that his "main job" was with the CIA (the United States' Counter Intelligence Agency).

The script that Glass was ordered to read would have been laughable if this had not been such a tragic situation.

"Many of you know me as a journalist, but few know the truth," the statement said. "I used the press as a cover for my main job with the CIA. I collect information for the benefit of the CIA. For that I made secret missions, they ordered me to do that."

The videotape included a typewritten statement in Arabic claiming, "America was and still is trying to exploit us."

The kidnappers said they were revealing "some facts from the outcome of the preliminary interrogation of American spy Charles Glass."

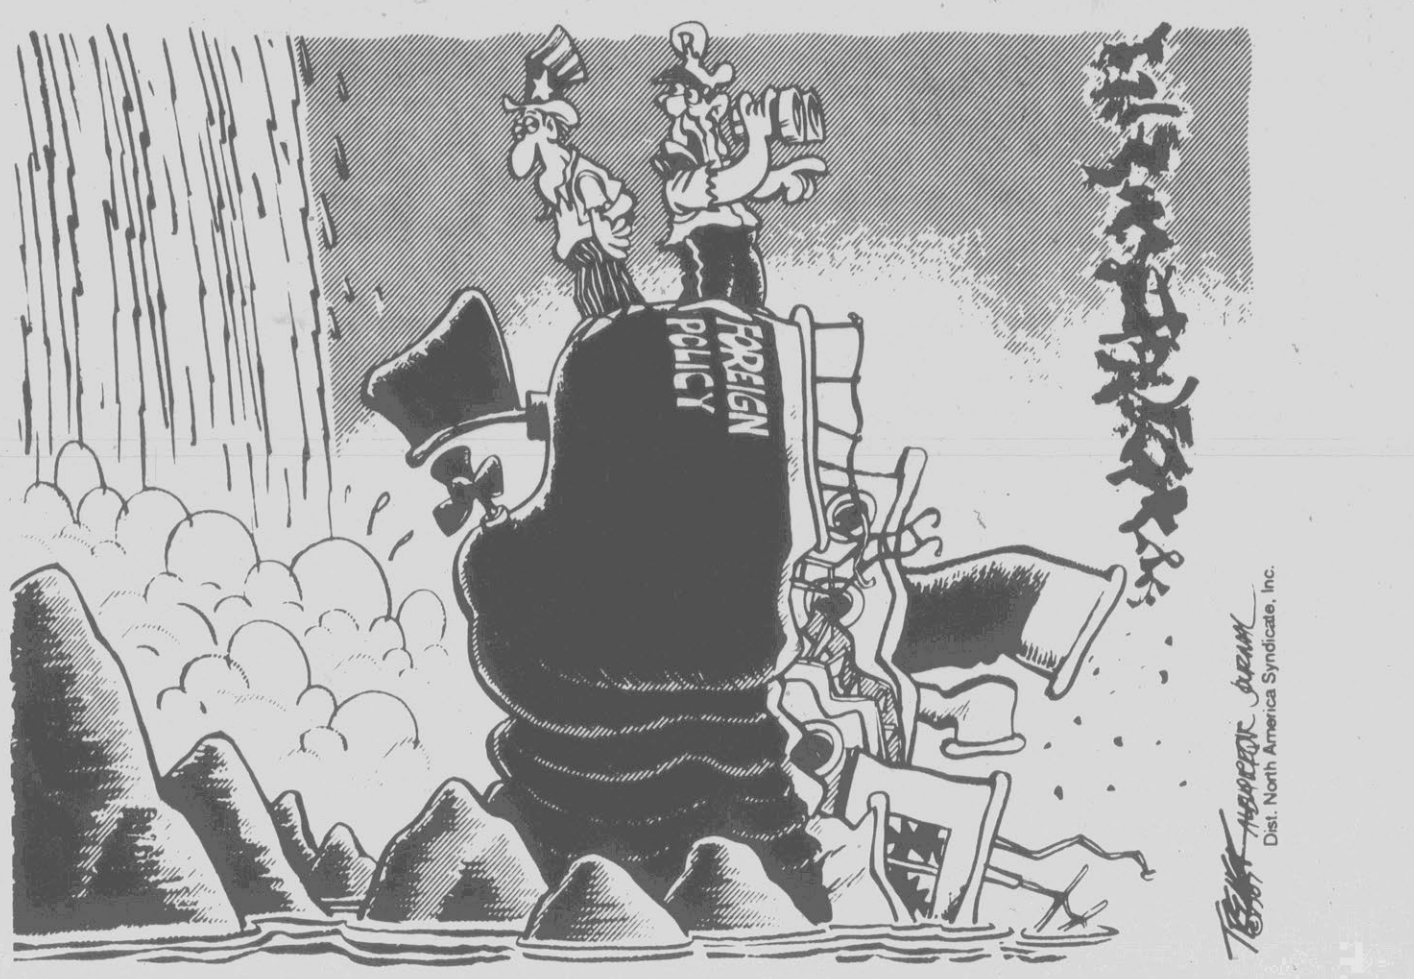

"Interrogations will gradually reveal all the Zionist plots according to which he (Glass) was acting and will also reveal all the agents operating with him in this mission. We shall place all this information in the hands of the people who will judge those traitors."

Those who studied the video tapes closely said Glass looked broken and choked several times as he read the words. Glass was in Beirut working on a book concerning the Middle East when he was kidnapped on south Beirut. A group called the Organization for the Free People's Defense claimed responsibility.

Virtually no one sees the tape as anything more than a gun-at-the-head recital of words put in front of Glass by his captors. It seems likely, too, that he has been made to suffer through physical or mental abuse.

All this is simply one more example of what can occur when civilization breaks down. Glass and a number of Americans and other nationals have been kidnapped off the streets of Beirut. Usually the motive has been to use the captives as bargaining chips. In this case, however, propaganda value seems to be the aim of the group which kidnapped Glass.

If this was designed to convince the civilized world it was a total failure. This was obviously a tortured man speaking and doing so as a last resort to save his life.

Ted Kennedy's Cruel Kindness

WASHINGTON — Joann Peters, 18, is an attractive young woman, not overly endowed in the brains department, who was graduated a few weeks ago from her small-town high school. She has no great interest in college and no funds for tuition. She is living at home with her mother and a younger brother. Her mother earns $9,360 a year as an ironer in a local laundry.

James Kennon, 41, is manager of the Steamboat restaurant at 23rd and Main streets. His franchised fast-food operation is in heavy competition with the Sizzlin' Steak and the Happy Crab. Kennon works seven days a week, but his food costs are rising and his rent just went up. In slow weeks he has a tough time meeting his payroll.

The Steamboat now employs 10 persons per shift at the minimum wage of $3.35 an hour and two others at $4 an hour. This figures out to labor costs of $41.50 an hour or $332 for an eight-hour shift. He really could use an 11th worker to clear tables and wash dishes, but he hesitates to add to his payroll when his margin of profit is so small.

Very well. Joann Peters and James Kennon, meet Sen. Edward Kennedy. The gentleman from Massachusetts is about to complicate your lives. He and Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., are pushing hard for a bill that would increase the minimum hourly wage in 1988 from $3.35 to $3.85. Their bill would mandate a minimum of $4.65 in 1990.

Joann would like to work at the Steamboat. Jim Kennon would like to hire Joann. This would be her first job, and there's an opening on the floor. She's good-hearted but a little careless; she needs the experience of holding a job and showing up on time. All of us know such Joanns.

But this is how Jim Kennon looks at the situation: The Kennedy-Hawkins bill would require him to pay his 10 lowest-level employees $3.85 an hour, or $38.50 per hour. The two cooks would have to be raised to $4.50 an hour to preserve a reasonable differential. If he keeps everyone employed, he is now looking at labor costs of $380 a shift, two shifts a day, compared to his present $332 a shift. He is looking at added labor costs of $35,000 a year, with no increase in productivity or service.

Goodbye, Joann, and tough luck, kid. Instead of 10 full-time hired hands at $3.35, Kennon will hire eight persons full-time and one to work six hours a shift at the required $3.85. Assuming the raise of 50 cents an hour for the cooks, the Steamboat will now have labor costs of $341.50 per shift. The manager will be spending roughly $7,000 more a year for labor; he will have nothing to show for it, and Joann will be just kind of, you know, hanging around home.

The example is hypothetical, of course, but this is how the real world works. In the idealistic world of Messrs. Kennedy and Hawkins, an increase in the statutory minimum wage is a great thing for the poor folks. Don't you believe it. Every study that has been made of the economic "benefits" of a higher minimum wage demonstrates that an increase harms the very class of unskilled workers it is intended to help.

Who are these workers on minimum wage? The Department of Labor says there are about 5 million of them, of whom 3 million are in the 16-to-24 age bracket. Nearly 40 percent are teen-agers. One third are men, two-thirds women. Only about 1.7 million work full time; the other 3.3 million work part time.

For the great majority, a minimum wage job is their first job. It's the bottom rung of the ladder for persons who lack higher education and sophisticated skills. Clearing tables at the Steamboat may not sound like much, but it marks the beginning of real-world responsibility. Here the willing Joanns have an opportunity to earn an honest wage, to acquire experience, and to demonstrate to the Jim Kennons that they have the ambition and the personality to move up.

Kennedy and Hawkins, with the very best intentions, suppose that a higher minimum wage will reduce welfare costs and lower the number of families at the so-called poverty level. No evidence supports this surmise. On the contrary, for every increase of 10 percent in the minimum wage, we may anticipate a loss of 80,000 to 240,000 jobs for teen-agers. To the extent that higher labor costs result in higher prices to consumers, we get into the kind of inflation that nullifies the increase in hourly wages.

Grammarians define an "oxymoron" as a combination of contradictory words. The example usually given is "cruel kindness." That says all that needs to be said of the Kennedy-Hawkins bill.

Bad Ole Dole Is Back

WASHINGTON — Sen. Robert J. Dole, the biggest ground-gainer of all presidential candidates this past year, shows signs of reverting to the form that so stunted his previous national ambitions: nastiness and trimming.

Nastiness reared its head at an Iowa Republican affair when Dole threatened Vice President George Bush's state chairman with retaliation if he did not stop criticizing him. Trimming exposed itself when Dole backed away from President Reagan's Central American policy in an interview.

Two small incidents, even though buttressed by other shreds of evidence, will not arrest the Senate Republican leader's high flight. But they suggest difficulty sticking with advice he has rigorously followed of late: Be nice and court the party's dominant conservative wing.

Threatened recidivism to Dole's ugly 1976 vice- presidential campaign and hapless 1980 try for the presidential nomination exposed habitual trepidation by his advisers at bearding the boss. Senior campaign strategists are worried, but somehow have not found the time to remonstrate with Dole over either incident.

The Iowa incident occurred at the Polk County (Des Moines) Republican picnic June 27. Dole spotted George Witgraff, who led Bush to his 1980 triumph in Iowa and heads the vice president's 1988 campaign there. Witgraff earlier issued a puerile charge, prepared in Bush's Washington headquarters, that Dole sold out Midwestern farmers to favor tobacco growers.

That singed Dole but not so much as Witgraff's accusation June 23 that "his campaign staffers," by spreading unsubstantiated personal rumors about Bush, reinforced Dole's "unfortunate image of the past — a mean and nasty image." Four days later, an unsmiling Bob Dole fixed on Bush's chairman the hard-eyed glare that aides, a few reporters and even fellow senators have come to dread. He spoke softly so that only a discomfited Witgraff, wearing a sheepish grin, could hear. Unknown to the senator, a CNN camera recorded it all.

"I'm tired of being stabbed by you every time I come out here," he told Witgraff. "If you want to play that game, I'll be glad to play it with you." Dole softened this slightly with his next words: "But we don't need to play the game. We got other things to do." Still, the threat — smacking a bit of gangland language — was palpable.

What business would a presidential candidate have down in the dirt with a a mere state campaign chairman? None, replied all Dole advisers we asked, who added it was no use nagging the senator about it. "He saw everybody else slugging," a Dole insider told us, "and didn't want to be left out."

At the same time, the July Atlantic Monthly published an article by political analyst William Schneider. He asked Dole whether he supported the Reagan administration's "commitment to supporting anti-communist revolutions, including the overthrow of the Sandinista government of Nicaragua." The response: "I wouldn't say yes or no. Generally ... no, I don't think so."

The answer is unfathomable, considering Dole's sterling leadership for contra aid. His aides first told us the answer was out of context. In fact, the quote was tape-recorded in a July 16, 1986, interview with Dole and passed the Atlantic fact-checkers. Dole's men later said the controlling word was "overthrow," which — after calling the White House — they said was not Reagan policy.

The contras might be surprised that they are not fighting to drive the communists from power. The unpleasant conclusion of conservatives, who had been warming to Dole, was that he could not resist saying what he thought a liberal interviewer wanted to hear -- an ill omen for post-nomination trimming.

Campaign advisers, explaining that they had not gotten around to discussing it with their champion, suggested we try the senator himself. He told us he was echoing the administration's position against "overthrow," but added: "I go further. I would break diplomatic relations .... There's no question where I stand on contra aid."

These incidents are not isolated. On nastiness, Dole is reported to have spread the word that Bush's recent peace-making telephone call was a sign of "weakness."

Strength For Today

"Build thee more stately mansions,
O my soul
As the swift seasons roll,
Leave the low vaulted past leaving thine outgrown shell
By life's unresting sea."

If the learning process is what it ought to be, we leave the "low vaulted past" and push on to something higher. We learn some new skill out of every failure, some new truth out of every mistake; and we gain some new insight into a larger body of knowledge every time we can be candidly critical of ourselves rather than of others.

White House Pessimistic About Fall Summit With Soviets

WASHINGTON — White House officials have suddenly become pessimistic that a summit meeting between President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev will be held here this fall, as the United States had expected, to sign an agreement to eliminate intermediate-range nuclear forces from Europe.

As American and Soviet officials accused each other of holding up an agreement, senior officials told Newsday that there are growing doubts within the administration that such a summit can be scheduled before early next year, if then.

"My sense is that the negotiations have become more protracted than some had hoped," said one of the officials. "The negotiations have become tougher than expected. It's not going to be easy to get an agreement. The hope for a fall summit has not completely faded, but it now looks like it will slip to early next year and maybe later."

Another official said, "There doesn't seem to be anyone who has a firm idea of what is happening, or where things stand. But there is no doubt the timetable has slipped, and unless things suddenly change, the summit may not be possible until next year."

American officials blame sudden, unexplained Soviet "stalling" for the screeching halt in progress towards an INF agreement in the current Geneva negotiations, and caution that the Soviets could just as quickly end their stall and break the deadlock. One White House expert suggested that political changes and bureaucratic battles within the Soviet Union have preoccupied Gorbachev.

Arms control experts outside the administration suggest, however, that the Soviets may have toughened their negotiating stance as a consequence of the Iran-Contra affair and their perception that Reagan has been weakened and needs an agreement for political purposes.

White House officials concede that signing an agreement to eliminate nuclear arms from Europe would help the president politically, but they insist that Reagan won't sign an agreement unless it is clearly to the advantage of the United States.

Analysis

"It will be a substantial political accomplishment if the president gets an agreement," said one presidential aide, "but it's got to be a good one, an agreement that will be to our advantage."

White House chief of staff Howard Baker has told interviewers that "this president is equally able to walk away from a bad agreement as he is to celebrate a good agreement ... He's no patsy in the final 18 months of this term."

While attending the Economic Summit in Venice last month, Reagan spoke hopefully of his efforts to conclude a treaty with the Soviets, and he acknowledged that preliminary talks were under way to fix a summit date.

Only two weeks ago, White House aides were so optimistic about the prospects for a fall summit that their private, tentative schedule for the president left October and November open for a meeting between Reagan and Gorbachev.

Since then, however, the Soviets have delayed scheduling a crucial meeting between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze to iron out major difficulties concerning the proposed treaty and to agree on a date for the summit. That meeting had been scheduled to take place this week or next, said an official, who added, "It now looks like it may not take place until September. That means a fall summit is unlikely."

Although it was obscured by the Iran-Contra hearings, Baker signaled the doubts about a fall summit when he told an interviewer July 5 that "there have been indications that the Soviet Union may or may not think kindly of our proposals." He said that Shultz and Shevardnadze would not meet this month, as expected, adding that they "will get together on some basis and talk ... but I do not have a prediction to make about when that will be."

On July 10, State Department spokesman Charles Redman said that Soviet Ambassador Yuri Dubinin, after returning to Washington from Moscow, met with Shultz but was unable to suggest to him a date for the critical meeting with Shevardnadze. And Redman added that "the Soviet Union seems to be drawing back" from efforts to make progress in the arms talks.

For their part, the Soviets charge that the United States has jeopardized an agreement by insisting on the right to convert the outlawed intermediate-range weapons, the Pershing 2 missiles, to shorter-range Pershing 1Bs, which would be capable of reaching the Soviet Union. In addition, according to Deputy Soviet Foreign Minister Yuli M. Vorontsov, while the Soviets would move to Asia the SS-20 missiles it would be permitted to retain, the United States wishes to re-deploy its remaining Pershing 2 missiles to Alaska, within range of the Soviet Union.

Despite the slippage in the timetable, White House officials expressed cautious confidence that there would be an agreement on intermediate range nuclear forces. The president has expressed hope that he and Gorbachev could sign an agreement that, as Reagan has said, would reduce the number of nuclear weapons for the first time. Baker has pressed for such an agreement, according to officials, in part because he favors arms reduction and in part because he believes it would help revive Reagan's presidency. And Shultz hopes for such an arms agreement before his tenure ends.

But one official conceded that "the more things slip, the more the possibility that we will lose an arms agreement." And he pointed out that most European allies, especially West Germany, have been cool towards the proposed treaty. And its opponents here include former President Nixon and former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, both of whom have personally appealed to the president to toughen his bargaining position.

Missile Technology Must Be Difficult, Expensive To Obtain

WASHINGTON — Not all military threats are created equal. Some are publicized but unlikely. Others get scant attention but are quite real.

Take missile proliferation. Its most recent manifestations-the cruise missile attack against the USS Stark and the Chinese sale of Silkworm cruise missiles to Iran-are bad enough.

Yet worse may be in store: smaller nations are developing ballistic missiles, and some will soon export them.

The Senate Armed Services Committee got an early warning about this when it held hearings in April 1986 on the emerging tactical ballistic missile threat in Europe, Asia and the Middle East. At that session, I released a Congressional Research Service report detailing the spread of missile technology to the Third World. The report examined missile development programs in India, Brazil, Pakistan, Argentina, Israel, South Korea and Taiwan, as well as existing missile arsenals in Syria, Egypt, Iraq, Libya and North Korea.

That was a year ago. Now no fewer than six new, large military ballistic missile programs are under way — and Libya and South Africa have programs of their own. Specifically, since April 1986:

Argentina has successfully tested its first solid-fuel rocket and announced plans to mass produce a longer-range version in late 1987 capable of reaching the Falklands.

Brazil has revealed plans to flight test a theater ballistic missile in mid-1988. Developed for export by the firm Avibras, this missile would have characteristics identical to Soviet missiles now deployed in Europe and in the Middle East. A rival Brazilian firm, Engesa, has announced it will compete by extending the range of the ballistic missile it is now testing.

Libya has begun development of a tactical ballistic missile to replace the Soviet missiles it actually fired against Italy last year.

South Africa has announced plans to develop long-range military missiles by the firm Armscor.

Taiwan has begun development of a ballistic missile that could reach Canton, Shanghai and Nanking.

India has announced it will test a variety of tactical missiles and intercontinental-range rockets in 1987. Meanwhile, our exports of supercomputers and antenna equipment have been held up for fear that they might be used in India's military missile effort.

Pakistan has begun a rocket program of its own in response to India's activity.

These are the facts. The question is, what are we going to do about them?

Much was made earlier this year of the missile technology export control agreement President Reagan reached with Canada, France, Germany, Japan, Italy and Great Britain. In fact, this ban on specific dangerous missile technology exports was generally praised.

There's been silence, however, on just how far we intend to promote it diplomatically. Merely controlling the missile exports of our closest allies is hardly going to do the trick. The problem is much bigger. For starters, none of the smaller nations now developing military ballistic missiles is even covered by the accord. Nor are the two largest missile technology suppliers-the People's Republic of China and the Soviet Union. Getting all of these nations signed on should be priority No. 1.

Our second priority should be to implement the obligations we've taken on. Right now the United States has only two experienced full-time government people working missile proliferation export control issues. Yet at least 80 full-time people work on nuclear export controls and well over 250 on East-West technology export control. If we are serious about enforcing missile exports controls, comparable numbers of experienced staff must be hired to monitor missile activities.

These steps should buy us time. With time, three other things can be accomplished.

First, we need to renew our security assurances to some of the problem nations listed above. Taiwan, South Korea, Pakistan and Israel, in particular, need to recognize that they have more to gain from maintaining their security ties with the United States than from developing offensive ballistic missiles of their own. Second, we need to make it expensive for fledgling nations to have missile forces. We should make it very clear that their emerging missile forces will remain extremely vulnerable to highly precise, stealthy, conventional long-range cruise missiles unless they spend heavily for air defenses, missile hardening and mobile basing to protect them.

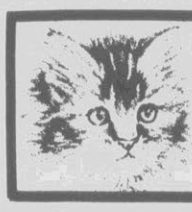

Finally, we need to develop anti-tactical missile defenses to protect our forces and allies abroad. The better these defenses are, the stronger we can make our alliances and the further we can reduce other nations' attraction to cruise or ballistic missiles as a quick, cheap way to increase their regional influence.

This last point is critical. So long as nations think they can make a quantum jump in military power easily by acquiring missiles, many will try. What we've got to do is make sure that missile technology is difficult, expensive and militarily counterproductive for them. If we don't, this technology will spread faster than we can cope with it — so fast that it will make our current crisis in the Persian Gulf the least of our missile woes.

Greenies Show Clout Down Under

HOBART, Australia — The environmental movement arrived in Australia relatively late, but now that it has made its appearance it has done so with a vengeance. I believe it is no accident that the Labor Party, which has courted the environmental vote at the same time that the Liberal (conservative) Party has alienated it, has had its greatest success during the 1980s, when the Greenies have become politically active. In Saturday's election we targeted 12 swing seats and won 11 of them. It was a significant number in a contest in which Prime Minister Bob Hawke will have a margin of approximately 24 seats to become the first Australian Labor Party leader to govern during three terms in succession.

The result is even more impressive when one considers that the election took place in an economy of high inflation, unemployment and climbing home-mortgage rates. Liberal Party leader John Howard offered voters hip-pocket bait — a program of tax cuts that had worked for his party in 1977 and 1980. To balance the cuts, Howard proposed reductions in public spending that would have included elimination of the federal environmental protection department, leaving Australia as the only Western democracy without such an agency. Along with this came plans for wide-open economic development in the continent's remaining pristine wilderness areas, five of which are included on UNESCO's 200 "world heritage" list. Tasmania's primeval forests were to see unrestricted logging. The wetlands of Kakadu National Park, the setting of "Crocodile Dundee," were to have been pockmarked with uranium, gold and platinum mines. The Great Barrier Reef was to be opened for possible oil exploration. The Franklin River, Australia's last wild river and the focus of the largest-ever citizen protest here a few years ago, was again threatened with a hydroelectric project.

We had learned our lesson during the early 1970s, when Tasmania lost the incomparable white quartzite beach of Lake Tedder — the only one of its kind in the world — to the dammed waters of an unneeded hydroelectric project. Lake Tedder was deep in the heart of the southwest Tasmanian wilderness area, one of only three such remaining in all the world's temperate zones, and the dam destroyed that heart.

When, two years later, in 1976, the Tasmanian state administration announced plans to dam the Franklin River, the Tasmanian Wilderness Society was hastily organized. During the next seven years the society grew into a national organization battling the country's 17 largest corporations, both of the state's political parties, and the unions. When the government refused to hold a national referendum on the Franklin River project, instead offering voters only a choice between a "big dam" and a "little dam," the ensuing Wilderness Society campaign resulted in 48 percent of voters writing in "No dam" on the ballot. In 1983 the incoming Labor government canceled the project after concrete had already started to be poured.

For much of their history, Australians have felt that their environment is inferior, and have had a nostalgia for the European countryside from which most of their ancestors came. But in recent times a new sense of national pride has gone hand in hand with a rising appreciation for the beauties of the land.

Six weeks ago, as the election campaign got under way, the gains made by the Wilderness Society were jeopardized once more. Voting is mandatory in Australia, but politics is looked on by many as an evil to be tolerated rather than as a democratic process, and we discovered that voters had no clear conception of the divergent positions on the environment held by the political parties. People did not believe the political sloganeering. Market research that we conducted found that traditional techniques of newspaper appeals, street marches and "letter-boxing" of leaflets were unlikely to be enough. Only an extensive television campaign, far beyond anything that we had ever conducted and beyond our financial means, would get the message across.

What to do? Thousands of volunteers were mobilized. Money began to flow in as the consequences of failure became clearer. We approached one of the nation's leading advertising agencies — Chandler, Hambleton — which agreed to handle the campaign free of charge, asking only seven Wilderness Society T-shirts for the people working on the ads. They prepared a spot, "The forests can't vote but you can," that was deemed by Australian advertising-agency executives as the single most effective message of the campaign.

Jonathan West is director of the Wilderness Society.

Senate Backs Automatic Recount In Close Races

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Any election with a victory margin of 1 percentage point or less deserves a recount even if there is no evidence or fraud or other irregularities, the state Senate has decided.

The Senate approved a bill 48-1 Tuesday granting automatic recounts upon request to second-place finishers in such races. The bill was returned to the House, which approved it earlier, for consideration of a technical amendment.

"Compared with what we currently have, this bill is a thousand times better," Sen. Ted Kaplan, D-Forsyth, said. "You ... can stay in court for months before you can get permission to have a recount depending on who's sitting on the board of elections in your local county or statewide."

Sen. Howard Bryan, R-Iredell, cast the lone vote against the bill. He said he feared it would be abused and contended that recounts are needed when there was a problem in counting the votes.

"There's nothing whatsoever in the bill to keep every person who finishes in second place by 1 percent or less from calling a recount," Bryan said.

He also complained that the bill didn't provide for additional recounts if a candidate was unsatisfied after one recount.

"I don't think there's any greater reason to believe that there would be an accurate count the second time than the first time," Bryan said.

He offered an amendment under which recounts would be granted automatically in races with margins of one-half of one percentage point instead of 1 percent, saying that would still allow recounts in razor-thin races such as the 1986 Coble-Britt matchup but would prevent frivolous recounts.

But Sen. George Daniel, D-Caswell, disagreed. He said only four U.S. House races had been decided by 1 percentage point or less in the past 15 years.

"I submit that the 1 percent figure is a good round figure, it does not unduly burden our system," he said. Making recounts easier to obtain would reduce the number of appeals and lawsuits stemming from disputed elections, Daniel said.

The amendment was defeated, 9-38.

The bill was introduced in the wake of last year's disputed 6th District congressional race between Republican Rep. Howard Coble and Democrat Robin Britt, who was trying to recapture the seat Coble won from him in 1984.

Coble defeated Britt by 79 votes. Britt called for a recount, claiming that numerous irregularities had tainted the vote tabulation in the three-county district. The State Board of Elections voted to order a recount of absentee ballots and some other ballots but refused to order a complete recount.

House Says 'Yes' To Fuel Adjustments For Utilities

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A bill strongly sought by electric utilities to help defray unexpected fuel expenses won tentative House approval despite objections it would pose a double penalty to consumers.

Rep. Richard Wright, D-Columbus, said giving utilities the right to adjust rates up or down to make up for fuel cost fluctuations would mean higher bills and fewer incentives for operating nuclear power plants efficiently. He compared the Senate-passed bill to laws allowing utilities to recover some costs for ongoing construction of nuclear plants.

"As somebody said, we've butchered the hog, the hams are smoked in the smokehouse but we're still being asked to pay for the feed," Wright said during debate on the bill Tuesday.

The measure was tentatively approved 68-40 after the House voted 60-46 to defeat an amendment offered by Wright to subject all utility fuel costs to general rate reviews before the state Utilities Commission. A final House vote was scheduled for today and the bill, if passed could be enacted if the Senate goes along with House amendments.

Most of the lengthy debate centered on how the bill and amendment would affect consumers.

"The reason the utility companies want the fuel adjustment is their nuclear performance has been poor," said Wright. He said power companies were offering a $65 million refund as an incentive to get legislation that would eventually bring in much more while removing incentives for efficiency.

"I don't want us to subsidize them to the extent that they do not become concerned and careful about the operation of the power plants," he said. "This so-called true-up becomes an insurance policy against mismanagement by the power companies."

Wright said a wide-ranging coalition supported his amendment, including Attorney General Lacy Thornburg, consumer groups, manufacturing companies, the Conservation Council of North Carolina and newspaper editorial writers.

Rep. Herman Gist, D-Guilford, said utilities should not be rewarded when they operate nuclear plants at 70 percent efficiency, comparing that to getting 70 percent of a pound of sugar at the grocery.

"If he only gives you 70 percent of what you bought, aren't you going to question him?" Gist asked. "You'd raise Cain."

But Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance, said 70 percent is 10 percentage points higher than the national average for nuclear plants.

"It's easy to kick your power companies and it's easy to be against them and if you just want a political vote you can vote against them," he said.

Rep. Jim Crawford, D-Granville, who chaired a House subcommittee on the Senate-passed bill, noted it would authorize the Utilities Commission to set "prudent" regulations on efficiency to be met before true-ups would be allowed. He said Wright's amendment would add "a great deal of cost to the public" by requiring full rate hearings more often.

But Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, said the amendment would give everyone a chance to see how utilities perform without arbitrary adjustments that "continually muddy the water."

House Panel Backs Testing For Schools Run In Homes

RALEIGH (AP) — Home school supporters have failed to convince a House committee to ease standardized testing requirements in a bill to more closely regulate home education.

John Taylor, a testing specialist from Andrews University in Michigan appearing for the North Carolina Association for Home Educators, said home schools should not be forced to use the same standardized tests as public schools.

"You do not need to compare home schooling children to the public schooling children in the state," he told the Education Committee on Tuesday. "Our concern is that education is occurring and that the achievement of the home schoolers is satisfactory. ... We can compare the home school child directly to the national norms on whatever test they take.

"Home schoolers in research studies across the nation have displayed on a variety of achievement tests superior achievement ranking in the 70th and 80th percentiles," Taylor added.

Forcing children educated at home to take tests elsewhere would hurt the validity of the scores, he said.

"It is very important for a standardized test to be taken in the instructional setting where that child goes to school and given by the instructor which that child is familiar with," he said.

Taylor dismissed arguments that parents might deliberately alter scores to help their children, saying they are not as worried about scores as paid educators might be.

"Public school teachers, classroom teachers, private school teachers are more concerned," he said, noting that a high failure rate might hurt their chances for promotions or raises. "If we are trusting the home parent to teach the children we should also trust them to administer the test."

Rep. Dave Diamont, D-Surry, who chaired a subcommittee on the issue, argued against changing a much-discussed compromise.

"We've worked like crazy to get some kind of compromise," he said, adding that the remaining debate is over philosophical issues.

"You can't change the philosophy on either side," he said.

Rep. Richard Chalk, R-Guilford, offered a proposal that would have treated home schools like private schools with the exception that they would be required to report test scores to the state. He argued that even the state Board of Education was having second thoughts about regulations it requested for home schools.

"I have been told by a member of the state board that the information that was presented was one-sided and they were given horror stories about what was going on in home schools in North Carolina," Chalk said.

But the committee voted 21-16 to back the recommendations of Diamont's subcommittee. The bill, which calls for $50,000 a year to pay for overseeing home schools, next goes to the Appropriations Committee.

The bill would require anyone operating a home school to notify the Division of Non-Public Education and keep attendance records for each student to show compliance with compulsory attendance laws. Home schools would be required to file educational plans showing the hours of instruction proposed for each subject area, a list of textbooks and a tentative daily schedule.

The bill calls for every child age 8 to 16 being taught in a home school to receive each year the nationally standardized test in use in the public school district in which the home school is located. The test may be administered by public or private school officials, a licensed psychologist or a teacher, but "in no event shall a parent or guardian, or other close relative, or any person residing in the same household as the child administeror score the test."

Home schools would be required to keep permanent records on each child that would be filed with the state when the home school stops operating.

Life Term Ordered In Saratoga Rape

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — A Wilson man was sentenced to life in prison after he pleaded guilty or no contest to a series of charges stemming from the gang rape of a Saratoga woman and her daughter last January.

The charges resulted from an incident in which four men broke into the woman's house Jan. 5, assaulted her and her boyfriend and attacked her 12-year-old daughter.

Eric Grant Blount, 21, changed his plea on 10 charges after a jury was selected for his trial in Wilson County Superior Court Tuesday. He had pleaded innocent. As part of a plea bargain agreement, Blount pleaded no contest to five counts of first-degree rape and one count of first-degree sexual offense. He pleaded guilty to two assault charges, one count of first-degree burglary and one count of armed robbery.

Judge Henry L. Stevens III of Kenansville consolidated the cases into groups and imposed three life sentences to be served at the same time. Had Blount been tried and convicted on the 10 charges, he could have been sentenced to six life terms plus 120 years in prison.

Investigators said one man, Plumer Ruffin Jr., 46, had hired four others to beat up the woman and her boyfriend. Ruffin faces charges of aiding and abetting robbery with a ddeadly weapon. The other three defendants — Ervin Barnes, 19; Willie Ray Ruffin, 21; and David Howard, 21 — face rape charges.

'Supersub' Panel Meets Openly, But Quietly

RALEIGH (AP) — Seven months after legislative leaders promised that meetings of the "supersub," a powerful group of House and Senate Democrats who make preliminary budget decisions, would be held in public, the meetings remain unannounced.

"It won't be announced," Sen. Aaron Plyler, D-Union, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said Tuesday. "It was announced in here."

Seven members of the supersub met unannounced Tuesday but said the meeting was open after two reporters stumbled onto the session.

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, who spearheaded efforts earlier this year to expand the "supersub" to 20 members and open its meetings to the public, was the only member of the regular eight-man group missing Tuesday.

Jordan had named additional Senate members to the panel and instructed them to meet in public, but House leaders refused to go along and a 20-member "supersub" never emerged.

Jordan told reporters Tuesday to "earn your money" by learning where and when the meetings are conducted, rather than relying on official announcements.

"I can't have them announce every time Billy Watkins and Aaron Plyler sit down," Jordan said. "I probably envisioned it working a little differently from this. But you have to work with the other house. The Senate understands that it has to be open. But if I go back and say it has to be done exactly the way the Senate wants it done, we'll be here with Santa Claus."

The supersub is scheduled to meet again Wednesday.

Martin Appoints Art Chairman

RALEIGH (AP) — A former press secretary to Gov. Jim Martin who is now a Winston-Salem businessman has been named the new chairman of the North Carolina Museum of Art board of trustees.

Charles Sutton, who owns a small furniture firm that makes antique reproductions, was named Tuesday by Martin to a two-year term as chairman of the state museum in Raleigh. He has served on the museum's 22-member board since December 1985.

He replaces Gordon Hanes, 71, of Winston-Salem, the textile executive, philanthropist and former state senator, who resigned Tuesday because of his age.

Sutton, 41, said his expertise in the art world was limited, but pledged to represent the interests of the general public. "The board is meant to give the perspective of citizens," he said.

Prison Guard

RALEIGH (AP) — A former Alabama prison guard who was sentenced to nine years in prison for suffocating a federal inmate last year was scheduled to go behind bars today, but his sentence makes him eligible for parole immediately.

Although most federal inmates must complete one-third of their sentences before being considered for parole, Gerry A. Dale can be released whenever the U.S. Parole Commission decides to parole him, officials said Tuesday. The commission must give Dale his first hearing within 120 days.

"He is eligible immediately, but that does not necessarily mean he will be released," said Linda W. Marble, director of case management and training for the U.S. Parole Commission in Maryland. "He may be released on parole at any time, but that is at the discretion of the committee."

Dale pleaded guilty in connection with the March 1986 suffocation death of Vinson P. Harris on a federal prison bus that had stopped in Butner. While Harris, a convicted bank robber from Charlotte, was handcuffed and chained to his seat, Dale wrapped his head with a bandage and duct tape.

Cates Trial

BELAIR, Md. (AP) — Truck driver Carl Douglas Cates of High Point, N.C., faces a possible 12 years in prison and a $5,500 fine for his conviction on two counts of manslaughter by motor vehicle in the deaths of two Maryland state troopers and one count of driving while intoxicated.

Circuit Judge William O. Carr took less than half an hour to return his verdict on Tuesday night. He also found Cates, 35, guilty of five lesser traffic violations.

The judge, saying he didn't trust Cates to remain in the area until sentencing, revoked his $35,000 bail and ordered him held in the custody of the county sheriff's department. No date was set for sentencing.

Theft Ring

EDEN, N.C. (AP) — A Virginia man's arrest in a Ruffin house break-in may be a crack in a two-state antiques theft ring, Rockingham County Sheriff C.D. "Bobby" Vernon said.

Leonard Wayne Alston, 37, of Danville, Va., was arrested July 4 in Ponchatoula, La., on charges of breaking and entering and larceny. He is accused of breaking into a Ruffin house from which $150,000 worth of antiques was reported stolen last month.

Alston was released Monday after posting a $100,000 bond.

Rockingham County deputies and N.C. State Bureau of Investigation agents located Alston with two truckloads of antiques at a Louisiana auction. Most of the furniture from the trucks has been identified as having been taken June 6 from the Ruffin home of Annyce L. Worsham.

Wildlife

RALEIGH (AP) — Eugene Price, editor of the Goldsboro News-Argus, has been elected to a two-year term as chairman of the North Carolina Wildlife Commission.

Robert E. Barnhill Jr. of Tarboro was elected vice chairman.

During the meeting, Gov. Jim Martin introduced his four new appointees to the commission, including Barnhill. Other new members of the commission are Robert Hester of Fairfield, Reed Allen Jr. of Lake Waccamaw and Howell Woltz of Advance.

Price was appointed to the commission by Martin in 1985.

Candidate

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Former Delaware Gov. Pierre S. duPont has become the second Republican to accept an invitation to a presidential candidates forum on education issues at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill Sept. 11.

Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., had previously announced he would participate in the forum sponsored by the UNC System.

Democrats who have accepted invitations include former Gov. Bruce Babbitt of Arizona, Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee, the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois.

The forum will be divided into two sessions, one for Democrats and the other for Republicans. The UNC Center for Public Television will broadcast the forum live and tape it for rebroadcast on public television stations nationwide.

Fish Kill

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Using canoes, gloves and masks, Wilmington workers spent about seven hours removing 1,500 to 2,000 dead fish floating on city recreation lake.

Perch, carp and bass were killed by a low level of oxygen in the lake, possibly caused by a thick layer of algae floating on the surface or a sewage leak into the lake, Ed Beck, an environmental technician with the N.C. Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, said Tuesday.

A sewer line overflowed July 10, spilling wastewater with a high sulfur content into Greenfield Lake, City Public Utilities Director John Bauer said.

The spill, combined with the algae, could have killed the fish, Bauer said. City workers tried to limit the spill, which Bauer said was caused by high demand for water during last week's hot weather and the resulting high flow in sewers.

Jim Smith

WILMINGTON (AP) — Jim Smith is a banker from Australia, a judge from New Jersey, a landscaper from Ohio and a whole lot more.

More than 50 people named Jim Smith are coming to Wilmington this weekend for the annual convention of the Jim Smith Society. The only requirement for membership is having the name Jim Smith.

Beginning Thursday, Jim Smiths will be signing in at the El-Berta Motor Inn in Wilmington. By the time they leave Sunday, they will have held a Jim Smith golf tournament, Jim Smith softball games and a round of "JIMGO," the group's version of bingo.

The Jim Smith Society was founded in 1969 by James H. Smith Jr. of Camp Hill, Pa., who is still the group's president. As of June, 1,422 people belonged to the group, including eight women.

Laid Off Workers Miss Benefits

NEWPORT, N.C. (AP) — About 200 Conner Corp. employees who were put on a temporary layoff status in February have found out they would have been better off if they had been permanently laid off.

Had the Conner employees been permanently laid off four months ago, some would have been eligible for federal retraining and relocation programs no longer available to them, a Craven County Employment Security Commission representative said.

"Most of the laid-off Conner employees have been hanging on and hanging on hoping to go back to work at Conner," said the ESC representative, who asked not to be identified. "We're hurting badly, because construction jobs are down ... there's not that much major going on. We need Conner to recover or somebody to come in."

The mobile home manufacturer has decided to close its manufacturing plant as part of its filing for protection from creditors under bankruptcy laws so the layoffs are now permanent.

For workers who had been hoping since Valentine's Day to be recalled, the news gave them two weeks to find jobs before their unemployment benefits expire. Their jobless benefits expire July 26.

State regulations say the temporary status is supposed to be maintained four weeks. ESC officials in Raleigh and private industry representatives say calling an 18-week layoff temporary was unusual.

The temporary lay-off status meant the employees received state compensation checks but were not required to report to local ESC offices or actively seek work, as are permanently laid-off workers. But the same 26-week benefit period applies to both groups.

ESC Director Preston Johnson said the four-week temporary status can be extended at the discretion of the ESC if the company applies to extend and sets a definite call-back date for the laid-off employees.

But Conner officials said they were not aware of either the four-week regulation or the extension requirements.

Conner filed the temporary lay-off claims directly with the state ESC office by computer. The company described the situation to employees as a two-week temporary lay-off, the sources told the newspaper, then notified them several times that the lay-offs had been extended for two more weeks.

Dr. JAMES DAVIS

Doctors Owe Society, AMA Official Says

DURHAM (AP) — The president-elect of the American Medical Association says that while his new position is an honor, it is not the peak of his career.

"The acme of my career, the height, has been being allowed to practice surgery for 30 years and interact with patients," Dr. James Davis said. "I've received tremendous pleasure and satisfaction out of working with patients, seeing them get well, seeing them relieved of pain, seeing their life extended ... I just can't imagine anything more satisfying."

Davis, 69, founder of Durham's City of Medicine, says doctors should go beyond simply caring for their patients to repay society for all the benefits they enjoy in the medical profession. He says being involved in community or national endeavors is "just the natural thing to do."

"I just have a strong feeling that all of us have an obligation to serve organizations and communities," he said. "And I have a conviction physicians particularly have an obligation to repay society the many benefits that they get."

Davis, who will take office in June 1988, said the AMA has an opportunity to have a great impact on how medicine will be practiced for the next couple of decades.

"We're living in the greatest era of change that medicine has ever known," he said. "Right now things are very dynamic so it's a very exciting time to be active in the American Medical Association."

Davis said he is optimistic that the nation's health care system will survive despite the pressures of escalating costs and government regulation.

Top priorities for Davis as AMA president will be getting more doctors involved in the organization and helping to reduce the cost of medical care.

Traffic Fatalities Down

By The Associated Press

Mandatory seat belts and better patrolling by police are to credit for a 14 percent decline in highway deaths in North Carolina despite an increase in the number of accidents, state officials said.

The Division of Motor Vehicles reported that, as of Sunday, 738 people had died in traffic accidents this year. During the comparable period last year, 855 people were killed. A total of 1,626 people were killed in 1986.

Meanwhile, the number of accidents has increased 11 percent from 60,872 through May of last year to 67,553 in the same period this year, the DMV said.

Sgt. David McLean of the state Highway Patrol said seat-belt use has increased significantly since Jan. 1, when the law started packing a fine. He also said patrolling during the Memorial Day and Fourth of July weekends helped reduce the number of fatal accidents.

An increase in "wolfpack" patrolling — the saturation of busy traffic areas with patrolmen — helped get dangerous drivers off the roads during high-risk times, helping to cut the predicted holiday death toll of 32 to 15 deaths for those two periods, McLean said.

"Wolfpack" patrols resulted in charges against 506 people for driving while intoxicated during the July 4 weekend alone, he said. He said that 1,716 speeders were stopped.

Donald W. Reinfurt, a researcher at the Safety Research Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, said that the reduction in traffic deaths may reflect normal fluctuations in highway statistics.

Last year's total was unusually high, well above the state's average for the past 20 years. The 1,626 deaths capped a three-year trend of increased traffic fatalities, despite tougher drunken-driving laws and a rise in the minimum drinking age.

For just that reason, this year's total was more likely to go down than further up. Statisticians call it "gravitating toward the mean."

Baptist Board President Says Staff Should Reaffirm Beliefs

RALEIGH (AP) — Belief in a conservative intepretation of basic denominational doctrine may be grounds for hiring or not hiring someone for the Southern Baptist Home Mission Board, the board's new president said.

"The convention was explicit that we hire those in accord with the dominant Baptist view — that the Bible has truth without any mixture of error for its matter," Larry Lewis said in a telephone interivew. "I would not say we would not hire someone with a contrary view, but we would be reluctant to do so."

Delegates to the Southern Baptist's yearly convention in St. Louis last month adopted a report by the denomination's peace committee calling on seminary trustees to build their staffs and faculties from people who believe the Bible is completely and literally true in all matters.

Southern Baptist moderates, who argue that there is room for individual interpretation of the Bible, opposed the committee report.

Lewis, president of the Atlanta-based Baptist agency, is asking staff members to affirm their belief in the conservative interpretation. He said Tuesday that the move is in response to recommendations by the Southern Baptist Convention Peace Committee.

Although the report specified only seminary administrators and faculties, Lewis said he thought all Baptist agencies and institutions should comply.

William Poe of Charlotte, president of the North Carolina Baptist State Convention and a member of the committee, said he thought Lewis might be going too far in his interpretation of what the committee intended.

"What he is doing, apparently, is to take it upon himself as an administrator to determine the theological position of his staff," Poe said. "He is doing a bit of pioneering. I believe he is moving in a direction that the peace committee didn't anticipate.

"It seems to me the trustees of the Home Mission Board are the ones who should be making moves in the direction of determining what is theologically acceptable," Poe said.

Lewis, the former president of Hannibal-LaGrange Baptist College in Hannibal, Mo., was elected president of the Home Mission Board in April and assumed office in June.

Professional staff members of the Home Mission Board have received memos with an attached copy of the Baptist Faith and Message Statement — the Southern Baptists' basic statement of beliefs — as interpreted by the peace committee, Lewis said.

"If they have any problem affirming it, they can get in touch with me, but so far there has been a very positive reception," Lewis said.

ALLIGATOR ATTACK — Allen Woodward, a research biologist for the Florida Game and Freshwater Fish Commission, moves an 11-foot long, 415 pound male alligator to an autopsy area at the Wildlife Research Lab in Gainesville, Fla. The gator, killed Monday by game officers at the Wakulla Springs State Park, was believed to be responsible for the death of a Tallahassee man. (AP Laserphoto)

Once-Endangered Alligator Regains Strength In Florida

By ED BIRK
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Alligators, once an endangered species, have crawled back to strength.

Federal officials are reclassifying them across the Southeast, and Florida is making plans to increase gator hunting and farming licenses.

Unbridled hunting and trapping in Florida and other states through World War II depleted the reptile's population severely until regulations were imposed in the 1940s and 1950s.

Alligator hunting in Florida was banned outright in 1962. Soon after, federal officials declared alligators endangered, meaning they were in imminent peril of becoming extinct.

"They were in dire need of protection," said Dennis David, wildlife biologist for the Florida Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission's Gainesville office. He will administer the state's recently enacted program to increase the number of hunting and fishing licenses up to 20 times the current level.

As their numbers increased in Florida in the 1970s, protections for the reptiles were relaxed slightly. In 1978, the state started a program to hunt alligators declared a nuisance to Florida's rapidly growing human population.

In 1985, Florida downgraded the American alligator from endangered to threatened. Texas and Louisiana followed suit.

The federal reclassification July 6 from "threatened" to "threatened due to a similarity of appearance" to crocodiles will cover alligators throughout their range of Alabama, Arkansas, the Carolinas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma and Texas. Officials say the latter designation is mostly to protect crocodile species that could be mistaken for alligators.

"The evidence on the number of 'gators we have does not indicate the alligator is biologically threatened or likely to become so in the foreseeable future," U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologist Wendell Neal said by phone from Jackson, Miss.

One reason the alligator fought off extinction was its ability to adapt. Unlike Florida's dusky sparrow, which was declared extinct two weeks ago, and the Florida panther, which numbers about 30, the alligator can live in almost any environment.

By the mid-1970s, Florida's game commission was receiving more than 5,000 complaints a year about errant alligators. Now, complaints number more than 6,500, and the state's 50 legal alligator hunters kill 3,000 alligators yearly.

They take them from city storm drains, from supermarket parking lots and from residential yards.

"The alligator is right now more prevalent than he has been in many years," said Mike Fagan of Dade City, who has been trapping nuisance alligators full time for several years. The work took up so much of his time that he gave up his 17-year telephone company job and now earns his living from 'gator hunting.

When he or one of his colleagues catches an errant alligator, they get to keep the meat or sell it, for around $5 a pound, but must give the hide to the state, which sells it by sealed bid. The hunter receives 70 percent of the sale price.

Tanneries all over the world send representatives to buy the skins. Hides can bring as much as $350 apiece.

Under the new management program, any qualified Florida resident may buy an annual hunting license or farming license for $250, or a processing license for $50 which requires a hunting or farming license, and pay a tag fee of $15 for hatchlings and $5 for eggs taken from the wild.

Hunting licenses for out-of-state residents would cost $1,000.

The first alligator hunting season is expected to open in fall 1988, and David, the state biologist, said he expects in three years, when the hunting program is in full swing, that up to 1,000 hunting or farming licenses will have been issued.

Hunting will be permitted only in areas where the game commission has documented a strong alligator population. Hunting methods also will be restricted; hunters will have to use a snare, hook or arrow with a line attached. No firearms will be allowed.

Under the new rules, hunters will keep proceeds from the sale of hides, although the state will continue to inspect them.

"By developing a program to permit people to benefit economically from hunting, those individuals that do benefit will form a constituency with a vested interest in conserving alligators and their habitats," said David.

If any area shows signs of alligator depletion, hunting will be stopped there.

Federal biologist Neal says there was little prospect that the alligator would return to the endangered species list.

"In view of how the alligator is being managed now, not only in Florida, but in Louisiana and Texas, I don't think there's much likelihood excessive exploitation will take place," he said.

Drug Maker Told To Pay $95 Million

WASHINGTON (AP) — The makers of the anti-nausea drug Bendectin say they'll fight a "grossly excessive" jury award of $95 million to an 8-year-old boy born with deformed arms and hands.

A U.S. District Court jury on Tuesday ordered Merrell Dow Pharmaceutical Inc. of Cincinnati to pay Sekou Ealy of Washington, D.C., $20 million in compensatory and $75 million in punitive damages.

The jury award came after emotional testimony in which the boy described his anger and embarrassment at having deformed elbows that won't bend and hands that are missing thumbs.

He said schoolmates make fun of his hands and, although he likes football, "I can't throw good."

The company insists that Bendectin, which it stopped manufacturing in 1983, does not cause birth defects. It says the prescription drug was used in 33 million pregnancies over 27 years before it was discontinued because of the cost of litigation.

In 1980, the Food and Drug Administration began requiring warnings advising women to take the drug only for severe nausea or for vomiting that could not be treated without medication.

Merrell Dow, in a statement, said it has prevailed in 13 of 17 trials dealing with the drug, including one in Cincinnati where a jury ruled against 1,150 plaintiffs, saying Bendectin does not cause birth defects.

In the Washington case, "Merrell Dow will take all necessary steps to reverse this verdict," said company spokesman William R. Donaldson.

"It is incredible that the jury found that Bendectin caused the child's problem and awarded the grossly excessive amounts in damages," he said. "We can only conclude that the jury was motivated by emotion and sympathy for the child."

U.S. District Judge June L. Green let the $20 million compensatory award stand and took a motion to overturn the punitive award under advisement.

The six-woman jury found Merrell Dow liable for negligence in marketing and testing the drug as well as failure to warn doctors and patients about the dangers of birth defects.

FAA Plans 'Across Board' Inspection Of Delta Training

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration plans an "across-the-board" inspection of Delta Air Lines training programs after a series of miscues by pilots including one that nearly resulted in a collision over the North Atlantic, agency sources say.

One source, who spoke Tuesday on condition he not be identified by name, said the review is expected to be announced today and will focus on Delta's training procedures, cockpit coordination and navigation techniques.

Training manuals and classroom procedures will be reviewed "across the board" by FAA inspectors, the source said.

During a two-week period, four Delta aircraft have been involved in incidents in which pilots made mistakes. In two of the cases, the errors came close to causing aviation disasters.

On July 8, a Delta Lockheed L-1011 strayed 60 miles off course on a flight from London to Cincinnati and came within 100 feet of colliding with a Continental Airlines Boeing 747 at 31,000 feet over the North Atlantic. The two planes were carrying nearly 600 people combined.

Sources close to the investigation into the incident said Tuesday that the Delta jet likely strayed off course because the flight crew punched the wrong coordinates into the computerized navigation system before takeoff, although other possibilities have not been ruled out.

There also have been these incidents:

—On June 30 a Delta pilot flipped the wrong switches in the cockpit of a Boeing 767 and cut the fuel to both engines after swinging out over the Pacific during a takeoff from Los Angeles. The plane dropped to within 600 feet of the water before the engines were restarted.

The pilot said he thought he was switching off the automatic flight control system. After the incident, the FAA issued an emergency directive ordering a safety guard installed to prevent future mistakes of the same type.

—On July 7, the pilot of a Delta Boeing 737 on a flight from Dallas to Lexington, Ky., became confused when his route was altered because of a thunderstorm and mistakenly landed at Frankfort, Ky., 19 miles from Lexington.

—On July 12, a Delta Boeing 767 on a flight from San Francisco to Boston, landed on the wrong runway at Logan Airport. A controller cleared the pilot to land on runway 22-left, but the pilot landed on 22-right, which an Eastern Airlines jet was about to use.

Delta officials say they are mystified by the rash of incidents.

"There's no connecting thread," said Delta spokesman Jim Ewing. He said the airline will cooperate with the FAA's investigation.

The near collision over the North Atlantic remains under investigation by Canadian as well as U.S. officials. Sources close to the investigation said, however, that a pilot error in entering coordinates into the plane's computerized navigational system is the most likely culprit.

"That's the most logical and that's what probably will be found to have been the case," said one source, who like the others spoke on condition that he not be identified by name.

A similar error has been blamed for a Korean Airlines jetliner straying far off course and into Soviet airspace in 1983. The plane, on a flight from the United States to Korea, was shot down by a Soviet fighter, killing all 269 people aboard.

On long flights such as across the Atlantic or Pacific oceans, jetliners generally are left to fly automatically with computers directing the aircraft along specific routes assigned ahead of time by air traffic control. A flight crew can punch the specific coordinates into the computer before taking off and the aircraft will fly along given waypoints.

If a number is inverted or the wrong coordinates are punched into the system, the plane will fly the course it is given. Over vast stretches of water, the course change may not be noticed because there are no clear ground reference points, aviation experts say.

No Big Mac

SAUGATUCK, Mich. (AP) — McDonald's may sell millions of burgers, but its opponents managed to serve up enough petition signatures to populate this resort town three times over.

Fast-food foes in the Lake Michigan city of 1,100 people presented the City Council 3,566 signatures people opposed to having McDonald's move in.

The petition says: "Because we like downtown Saugatuck the way it is — no McDonald's. Saugatuck is not a proper place for McDonald's or any other fast-food restaurant."

"This is only the tip of the iceberg," said resident Barry Johnson. "If McDonald's has targeted our area, their competitors cannot be far behind."

Airline Complaints Increasing Rapidly

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Transportation Department says it received nearly as many complaints about shoddy airline service last month as it did during the entire first six months of 1986.

Some airline officials attribute the increase — 5,759 complaints last month compared to 6,393 during the first half of last year — to recent publicity about the complaint-reporting system rather than to a decline in service.

But members of Congress are sending clear messages to the airlines that they must find ways to ease customer unrest or the government will provide ways for them.

The new figures were released Tuesday. Over the first six months of this year, the department received 15,621 complaints from air travelers, nearly 2½ times as many as during the same period last year.

The Senate Commerce Committee on Tuesday approved a bill that would require airlines to provide monthly reports on their on-time performance, canceled flights, lost bags and bumped passengers. It also would establish a 24-hour toll-free hotline at the Transportation Department so complaints could be registered more easily.

The House aviation subcommittee is planning to begin work on similar legislation next week.

"Our current airline system is not at all what we bargained for in 1978," said Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., the commerce panel's chairman. "We have gotten lower fares for some, but it appears to have been at the cost of both safety and passenger convenience."

Congress enacted legislation in 1978 that began the process of deregulating the airline industry and resulted in the fierce competition that some critics have blamed for the decline in service.

According to the Transportation Department, about 60 percent of the complaints received by the department between January and June of this year involved such issues as flight delays and cancellations and lost baggage.

The air carriers with the poorest service record during the six-month period were Continental Airlines, Northwest Airlines, Eastern Airlines, Trans World Airlines and Pan American World Airways, according to the department.

The department's figures are believed to represent only a small fraction of complaints by air travelers.

Letters Show North Thanked Donors Of Big Contributions To Contra Fund

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lt. Col. Oliver North steadfastly insists that he never solicited private donations for the Contras, but he wrote letters thanking contributors for their help and encouraging future support.

North sent letters to several wealthy Americans who gave large sums to the Nicaraguan rebel cause.

Copies of the letters were released Tuesday by the congressional committees investigating the Iran-Contra affair.

The contributors were among the individuals who gave money to conservative fund raiser Carl "Spitz" Channell in the private effort to help the Contras during the congressional ban on U.S. military aid.

The documents show North wrote to many of Channell's contributors on Jan. 24, 1986, as Channell and North were gearing up for consideration in Congress of the administration's request for renewed Contra aid.

The form letter speaks of the help Channell's National Endowment for the Preservation of Liberty gave to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua and tells the donors:

"Your support has been essential to those who struggle against the tyranny and oppression of the totalitarian communist regime in Managua. You have given hope where there would otherwise be despair."

The letter concludes: "In the weeks ahead, we will commence a renewed effort to make our assistance to the Democratic resistance forces even more effective. Once again your support will be essential."

North has insisted throughout his testimony that he understood it would be inappropriate for him to solicit money, and that he specifically avoided any such solicitation.

"I understood that there were regulations against government officials soliciting, I do not recall ever asking a single, solitary American citizen for money," he said.

North willingly acknowledged making presentations on Central America to contributors who were being solicited by Channell, however, in what Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., called a "one-two punch."

But he said people gave money because they wanted to, not because he asked for it.

Previously obtained documents show that North met with a Philadelphia contributor, Bruce Hooper, and then wrote to him that President Reagan was gaining momentum in the fight for congressional support of Contra aid.

"I hope you will remain steadfast with the president as he leads this effort. I know personally that he values your help very much," North's May 2, 1986, letter said. "Please maintain your invaluable support."

Hooper gave $100,000 to the Channell operation later that month.

North also has acknowledged providing lists of the weapons the Contras needed to many people. Some Channell contributors have said they gave money with the understanding it would go for military needs.

Reagan To Seek Contra Funding Reaching Into Successor's Term

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The White House, seeking to take advantage of the wave of public affection for Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, is planning to ask Congress to extend government support of Nicaragua's Contra rebels that would reach into the term of the next president.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Tuesday that President Reagan would seek as much as $140 million for the rebels for an 18-month period begining Oct. 1. That would extend U.S. support to April 1, 1989, more than two months after Reagan's successor takes office.

Administration officials were buoyed by a White House poll indicating that North's five and a half days of televised testimony before the congressional Iran-Contra committees may have produced a sudden swell of public support for the Contras.

The president, asked how he would make his views about the Contras known, said during a photo session at the start of a meeting with Republican congressional leaders that he would "stand on the roof and yell."

While the administration has yet to send a specific funding request to Congress, it was understood in recent months to be seeking approximately $105 million in military and nonmilitary aid for fiscal 1988 for the forces seeking to overthrow the Marxist government in Nicaragua. That would equal the appropriation for the current fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30.

However, Fitzwater said that figure might be increased to $140 million — an estimate confirmed by another White House official — and that the funding period would be 18 months, rather than one year.

"The amount has been increasing ... as the situation evolves there and the time changes," Fitzwater said. He added that the administration began its assessment of the Contras' needs before the congressional hearings got underway in May.

At one point in recent months, some administration officials considered requesting as much as $300 million for the Contras next year.

North spent much of his time before the congressional committees urging continued U.S. support of the Contras. He was a key figure in the administration's efforts to aid the contras until he was fired from his post as a National Security Council staff member last Nov. 25 for his role in the sale of arms to Iran and the diversion of profits to the Contras after Congress had cut off government support.

His testimony prompted a surge of telephone calls, letters and telegrams to the White House and congressional offices indicating support for the rebels, officials have said.

That support has also shown up in public opinion polls.

A survey of 600 people polled for the White House Monday night by Richard B. Wirthlin found that 48+ of those questioned favored funding for the Contras, 46+ opposed it and the remaining 6+ were undecided, an aide to Wirthlin said.

A survey of 1,050 persons on July 27 to 29, before North testified, found 30+ in support of the funding, 64+ opposed and 6+ undecided, the Wirthlin assistant said. Both polls asked, "Do you favor or oppose the U.S. providing additional economic and military aid to the Contras who are fighting the Nicaraguan government?"

A senior White House said, no Wirthlin poll has found support for Contra funding running higher than the high-30+ range in the past.

A Los Angeles Times poll of 2,311 conducted Friday to Monday, after North had testified for four days, found 42+ in favor of Contra aid, 42+ opposed and 16+ undecided. A similar poll last February, as details of the Iran arms sales and diversion of funds to the Contras were becoming better known, found those surveyed opposing such aid by a margin of five to three.

Until North testified, the White House had not been overly optimistic about the likelihood that Congress would approve the funding request, which is not expected to be voted on until after the August congressional recess. It was feared that the controversy surrounding the Iran-Contra affair had doomed the anticipated spending request.

Still, in the face of the White House's new optimism, a source close to the Democratic leadership of the Senate said "it may be a little premature and a misreading of North's popularity" to view the sudden surge of support for the Contras as a signal of a lasting shift in public opinion.

Poll Backs North

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Los Angeles Times poll has found that nearly half the Americans interviewed believe Lt. Col. Oliver L. North was innocent of a crime when he funneled profits from Iran arms sales to the Nicaraguan Contras.

But only a small number of those queried consider the former National Security Council aide to be a hero, according to the poll published today.

North, who ended six days of testimony before a congressional investigating committee Tuesday, achieved high recognition among the 2,311 adults polled nationwide by telephone between last Friday and Monday night. Ninety-four percent of Americans are familiar with his name, the survey found.

Forty-eight percent thought North was not guilty of criminal activity; 17 percent said he was guilty and should be sent to jail; 13 percent believed he was guilty and should be pardoned; and 22 percent were undecided.

Those interviewed were equally divided on whether the United States should give military aid to the Contras fighting a guerrilla war against Nicaragua's Marxist regime. Forty-two percent said yes, 42 percent said no and 16 percent said they were undecided.

The Making Of A Hero

WASHINGTON (AP) — Never in six days of gripping testimony did Lt. Col. Oliver L. North inch back from either his strong convictions or the seemingly precarious balance he held on the edge of the seat from which he faced congressional investigators.

North braced, parade-ground stiff. His back never touched that of the black-leather arm chair, never came within a foot of its support.

Leaning forward, elbows on the witness table, gesturing with both hands, North projected his personality and his cause across the Senate Caucus Room to Americans in the national television audience.

On Tuesday afternoon, when those half-dozen days were over, North's congressional critics sternly summed up what they had heard, speaking in measured terms of the lies North had said he told, of the covert apparatus he had helped erect, free of the checks and balances of the Constitution.

North, motionless, his face stripped of expression, stared straight ahead, his fingers interlaced on the table before him.

Unseen, in a room nearby, lay symbols of support, tributes to North's persuasiveness: thousands of congratulatory telegrams hailing him as a patriot and hero, scores of floral bouquets.

That's how Brendan Sullivan, North's lawyer, wanted to leave it. The American people had spoken. The most important verdict of all was in.

And that's what Sullivan said, in an explosive protest, when Senate Chairman Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, declared in his closing summary that the Nuremberg tribunal after World War II had destroyed forever the defense that the actions of a subordinate can be justified by the orders and authority of a superior.

North had declared repeatedly that in setting in motion the secret sales of arms to Iran in an arms-for-hostage swap, and in promoting the diversion of the prceeds to Nicaragua's Contra rebels he had done nothing without the approval of his superiors.

"I find this offensive," Sullivan shouted, interrupting the senator's closing remarks.

"I find you engaging in a personal attack on Colonel North," he said. "To make reference to the Nuremberg trials, I find personally and professionally distasteful, and I can no longer sit here and listen to this."

"There are 20,000 telegrams in our room outside in the corridor here that came in this morning" Sullivan said. "The American people have spoken and please stop this personal attack against Colonel North."

Inouye, who lost an arm to enemy machine gun fire on a hillside in Italy in World War II and won the nation's second highest decoration for valor, said he was not engaged in personal attack.

"I believe during the past week we have participated in creating and developing very likely a new American hero," Inouye said, perhaps with intended irony.

He quickly made clear he is troubled with the nature of that heroism in light of North's testimony under oath that he had lied, mispreresented and misled in order to protect his secret enterprises from public disclosure, from the risks of congressional leaks.

And he said he is troubled by an attitude, denied by North, that opposition to a president's policies shows a lack of patriotism.

The visible symbol of North's patriotism is the six ribboned rows of military decorations that parade in a flash of color across the olive-green of his Marine Corps jacket.

Inouye made clear to the witness that he shares the experiences those ribbons represent.

"As one who has felt the burning sting of bullet and shrapnel, and heard the unforgettable and frightening sounds of incoming shells, I salute you, sir, as a fellow combat man," Inouye said.

The questions and the speeches ended.

North gave up his edge-of-the-chair perch and marched from the Caucus Room, probably for the last time.

He left behind him the echo of Inouye's words, perhaps also uttered with irony intended.

"I'm certain the life and the burdens of a hero will be difficult and heavy," Inouye had said. "And so, with all sincerity, I wish you well as you begin your journey into a new life."

Anti-Drug Film Spots Scheduled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Moviegoers seeing "Jaws — the Revenge," or "Superman IV" this summer also will see several anti-drug messages from an odd couple — first lady Nancy Reagn and actor Clint Eastwood.

The two have joined forces as part of a series of 11 anti-cocaine film spots that were previewed Tuesday at the White House. The messages will appear in movie theaters across the country through the spring of 1988.

Using stark, harshly lit close-ups, celebrities warn of the deadly dangers of using crack, a potent form of cocaine.

"Crack... It can kill you. And if you gotta die for something, this sure as hell ain't it," Eastwood intones in one of the spots.

"What would I do if someone offered me these drugs?" asks Eastwood, with his best steely-eyed gaze and ominous tone. "I'd tell 'em to take a hike."

Mrs. Reagan, who is seated next to Eastwood in part of one film, adds her own warning: "The thrill can kill ... Say 'no' to drugs and say 'yes' to life."

Singer Bette Middler, who appears in another spot, advises that "crack can kill you and no one knows how much it takes to do you in. Each time you try it could be your last."

Holding up a little vial containing the cocaine crystals, she says, "See this? Crack comes to you in a vial like this. If anyone offers you some — tell them where to shove it."

Other stars who issue similarly sharp warnings include Rosanna Arquette, Rae Dawn Chong, Pee Wee Herman, Olivia Newton-John, Dudley Moore, Roy Scheider, Ally Sheedy and James Woods.

The first lady previewed the spots with several members of Congress, including Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Select Committee on Narcotics and Drug Abuse, and Rep. Benjamin Gilman, R-N.Y., the committee's ranking Republican.

The messages will precede major motion pictures released by Motion Picture Association members, according to MPA president Jack Valenti, who also attended the screening.

The first lady's spot with Eastwood, filmed in California in May, will appear prior to the "Jaws" and "Superman" sequels to be released this month.

The spots were funded by the Motion Picture Association of America, which includes Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc.; Walt Disney Co.; De Laurentiis Entertainment Group; MGMUA Communications, Inc.; Orion Pictures Corp.; Paramount Pictures Corp.; Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp.; Universal City Studios, Inc., and Warner Bros., Inc.

SAVINGS SEIZED — Carmin Fisher, 9, waits at a bank in Eugene, Ore., Monday to deposit the contents of her piggy bank after the $70.76 was returned by the Internal Revenue Service. The IRS seized the money to help pay back income taxes owed by her grandparents, then said it had made a mistake and returned it. (AP Laserphoto)

IRS Seizes, Then Returns Child's $70.76 In Savings

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service has returned $70.76 to a 9-year-old girl, admitting it was a mistake to seize her savings account to pay her grandparents' taxes, a bank official said.

The IRS took the money from the account of Carmin Fisher of Junction City, who for six years had been saving up pennies for deposits, but the agency relented after the seizure was publicized Tuesday, said Larry Zeller, manager of the Key Bank of Oregon's Harrisburg branch.

An IRS representative was dispatched to deliver a notice to Carmin's bank authorizing release of the funds, and the money was back in the account shortly before noon Tuesday, Zeller said.

Carmin's savings actually have doubled, because family friend Fred Morgan had made plans to replace the money Carmin lost, "to try to restore the girl's faith in mankind," and said he would go ahead with his gift anyway.

Asked how it felt to be twice as rich, Carmin said, "I like it."

She said she would add to her account until she's 18, when she might buy a car.

Carmin's grandmother, Bettye Fisher, said that when she received a bank statement Monday showing the IRS withdrawal she and her husband, Charles, were furious. Carmin and her mother, Bette, live with the Fishers.

"I looked at it and screamed and yelled," Bettye Fisher said in a telephone interview.

The account, in which Carmin's grandmother had been depositing the girl's savings for six years, was in Carmin's name but listed Bettye Fisher as guardian.

Fisher is a self-employed salesman who fell behind in his business taxes. Steve Matthews, an IRS spokesman in Portland, said the Fishers owe $21,081.

Fisher drove to Eugene and told his story to The Register-Guard newspaper, which published the account Tuesday morning.

"We thought this must be happening everywhere," Mrs. Fisher said. "We thought we would set the example. She didn't owe this debt. She's 9 years old. It was our debt."

Disposable Contact Lenses Introduced

NEW YORK (AP) — New, disposable contact lenses sold by the six-pack in market testing are more convenient and help keep eyes healthy, but they'll cost more, the manufacturer says.

The lenses, to be worn about a week before being discarded and replaced, go on sale in Florida this week in the marketing test, Hank Green, president of Vistakon Inc., announced at a news conference Tuesday.

Wearers don't have to clean and sterilize the throw-away lenses, treatments they consider "a real hassle," said Green, whose Jacksonville, Fla.-based company is a subsidiary of health-care giant Johnson & Johnson.

He estimated that using disposable lenses would cost an average $520 a year, compared with an average $350 a year for standard, extended-wear lenses. Green called the difference "a small premium to pay for improved eye health and convenience."

The cost disparity increases if considered over two years, said Dr. Perry Binder of the National Vision Research Institute in San Diego.

Standard extended-wear lenses can last two years if well cared for, the ophthalmologist said, so their second-year cost would be about $100 for cleaning solutions. That brings their two-year cost to about $450, in comparison to $1,040 for the disposables, he said.

"For patients who are looking for convenience and want a hassle-free system, I think it's a good idea," said Dr. Wayne Cannon of the American Optometric Association. "For patients who are looking for economics, it's not going to be as viable an option."

Current contact lenses are of two kinds: daily wear, which are removed and treated every night, and extended wear, which most doctors say should be removed and treated every week.

Lens care requires using chemical solutions to remove debris and protein buildup that can irritate the eye and lead to infections. Some infections of the cornea, if not treated early enough, can permanently damage vision.

Dr. Penny Asbell, assistant professor of ophthalmology at Mount Sinai Medical Center in New York and an adviser to Vistakon, said about 90 percent of the eye problems she sees from contact lenses are caused by improper lens care.

Disposable lenses need no cleaning because "before deposits get to be a problem, the lens is thrown away," said Dr. Sheldon Wechsler, Vistakon vice president of professional affairs.

Asbell said that in some cases she would let patients wear disposable lenses up to two weeks before discarding them. The doctor and patient must agree on the proper length of time, she said.

"The jury is still out on how many individuals will in fact remove the lenses when they're supposed to," said Dr. Arthur Giroux, director of the optometric association's contact lens section. He said some may try to stretch their dollar by leaving them in longer, which would raise their risk of eye problems.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved the new lenses as disposable products Tuesday, Green said. They had previously been approved for extended wear.

Spending

WILMINGTON (AP) — An $8 billion military construction bill approved by the U.S. House includes $43.5 million for planned construction at Camp Lejeune and $55 million at Fort Bragg and Pope Air Force Base.

The Military Construction Appropriations Bill, which still must pass the Senate, was approved by the House Tuesday night on a vote of 371-48.

The construction projects for Camp Lejeune include a $7.8 million, 32-building mock city proposed by the Pentagon as a one-of-a-kind facility to train Marines to fight snipers in urban settings. The project recalls the thatched-hut villages the Pentagon had set up at Camp Lejeune and elsewhere during the Vietnam war.

In a larger appropriation for Lejeune, the bill would provide $18.9 million for new quarters for single enlisted men. It includes $8.1 million for a facility to maintain combat vehicles.

A $44 million appropriation for Fort Bragg includes $2.6 million for an aerial gunnery range, $25 million for operations facilities, $2.25 million for a dining hall, $13 million for a tactical equipment shop and $860,000 to upgrade a parachute rigging operation.

Pope Air Force Base would get $11 million in new construction projects, while the Military Ocean Terminal at Sunny Point would receive about $2 million for dock and railway improvements.

U.S. Trade Deficit Widens Gap In May

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The U.S. trade deficit widened to $14.4 billion in May, reversing two consecutive months of improvement, the government said today.Contributing to the worsening of the trade balance was a record $34.8 billion in imports — up from $33.5 billion in April.

The Commerce Department said the May trade imbalance increased from deficits of $13.3 billion in April and $13.6 billion in March.

The report came as a disappointment to economists who had expected continued improvemet in the trade balance under the pressure of a weaker U.S. dollar.

However, Reagan administration analysts contend that the trade picture is improving, if slowly, and caution against reading too much into monthly fluctuations.

The May deficit was the highest since a $15.1 billion deficit in February.

Last year, the United States ran a record trade deficit of $166.3 billion. For the first five months of 1987, the gap between imports and exports was running at an annual rate of $164.8 billion, suggesting only a slight improvement over last year.

Most of the increase in May imports came from manufactured goods and petroleum products.

Automobile imports from Japan, for instance, surged to $2.03 billion in May from $1.71 billion in April — despite price increases for Japanese models due to increases in the value of the yen against the dollar.

Although the dollar has stabilized somewhat on foreign exchange markets in the last month, it has fallen roughly 50 percent against the Japanese yen as well as against some key European currencies over the last two years.

A weaker dollar should make imports more expensive and U.S. goods less expensive abroad. So far, however, the massive U.S. trade deficit has stubbornly refused to yield much ground despite these exchange-rate changes.

Exports also increased in May, although to a lesser degree than imports — up to $20.4 billion from $20.1 billion in April.

Included in the increase was a rise in agricultural exports, to $332.5 million from $278.6 million in April.

The nation's overall deficit with Japan increased to $5.07 billion in May, up from $4.95 billion in April.

The deficit with western Europe also increased, to $2.60 billion from $2.26 billion in April. But the trade deficit with Canada showed a slight improvement — down to $1.26 billion from $1.28 billion in April.

Deaver Jury Choices Being Made Secretly

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most prospective jurors in Michael K. Deaver's perjury trial are being questioned behind closed doors while a federal appeals court considers news media requests for a completely public proceeding.

The appellate court ordered prosecutors and defense lawyers to "show cause" today why U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson's jury selection order "should not be summarily reversed."

Jackson, citing the need to protect jurors' privacy, Tuesday gave prospective panel members the choice of being questioned in open court or in private.

Only a handful of jurors seated in the courtroom chose to be questioned in public.

Jackson resumed jury selection in his chambers, prompting The Washington Post, The New York Times and four television networks to file emergency motions with the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Washington.

Deaver, former deputy White House chief of staff, is accused of lying to a House subcommittee and a grand jury that investigated his lobbying business for possible ethics law violations.

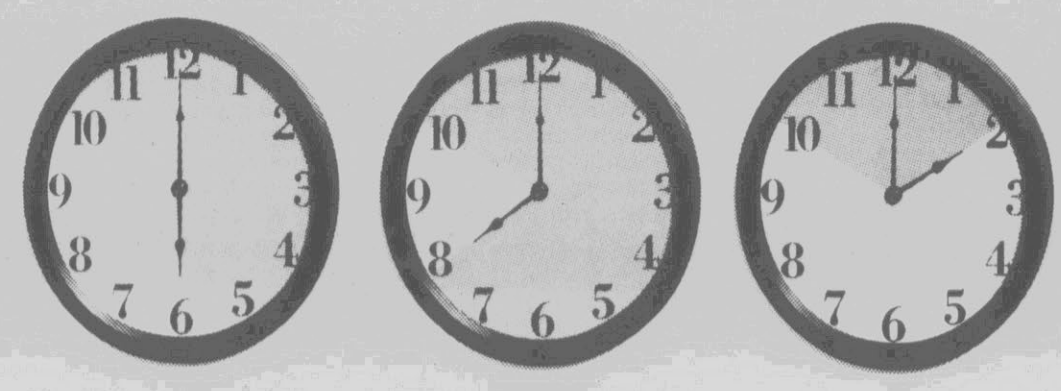

Deaver's attorney and independent counsel Whitney North Seymour Jr. defended the procedure as ensuring candid answers.

"The press has its constitutional right," said Deaver's attorney, Herbert J. Miller Jr. "But my client has his — a constitutional right to a fair trial.

"Because of the sensitivity of this matter, it is only by the process the court has followed that we will be able to get honest and fair answers."

Seymour said one prospective juror had claimed he was a victim of a warrantless search while another said his brother was wrongly convicted of a crime.

Legislators Say Escorts Will Start In Gulf July 22

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy will start escorting U.S.-flagged Kuwaiti tankers through the war-torn Persian Gulf on July 22, according to legislators who met with top Reagan administration officials.

The first tanker will be escorted up the 500-mile-long gulf to be loaded with oil and then back through the Strait of Hormuz at the mouth of the gulf, the legislators said Tuesday.

The first convoy will include only one or two Kuwaiti tankers while later groups will probably be larger, said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee.

Aspin, Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., said they were told that the first Navy mission would be July 22.

Sasser, a leader of congressional attempts to block President Reagan's plan, said Democratic opponents would try again today to win Senate approval of a resolution seeking a delay. Two earlier attempts failed.

Administration officials have refused to announce an exact start-up date for the escorts and Pentagon officials declined to comment on the July 22 date.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater would say only that the Navy's escort mission "will begin soon." He said it "could come as early as next week."

Later, an administration official who demanded anonymity said it was "unfortunate that congressmen have released details from a classified briefing."

But Warren Nelson, a spokesman for Aspin, said it is assumed that nothing in such briefings is classified unless it is identified explicitly as such and a degree of classification is given. He said Aspin told him that no one in the meeting said the information being discussed was classified.

Rep. Larry Hopkins, R-Ky., said he telephoned National Security Adviser Frank Carlucci on Tuesday expressing concern that the date of the operation has been made public and asking that it be changed.

"I'm concerned about telegraphing our adversaries about the exact date we intend to initiate our plans. ... That is a very dangerous part of the world," Hopkins said. He said Carlucci made no comment on his request.

Dole, Sasser and Aspin were among a bipartisan group of about 20 House and Senate leaders who met behind closed Capitol doors for more than hour with Carlucci, Secretary of State George P, Shultz, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Adm. William Crowe Jr., chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Reagan's plan to put U.S. captains and flags aboard 11 Kuwaiti tankers and have the Navy escort the ships has raised congressional fears that the United States might be drawn into the Iran-Iraq war. Kuwait has aided Iraq in the conflict.

Car Bomb Kills 12 At Tripoli Market

TRIPOLI, Lebanon (AP) — A car bomb exploded today outside a supermarket in a residential neighborhood of this Syrian-policed city and police said at least 12 people were killed and 30 wounded.

The explosion occurred at 11 a.m. (4 a.m. EDT) in Tripoli's Azmi Street at the entrance to the supermarket that occupies the first two floors of a seven-story residential building, reporters said.

They said most of the casualties were women and children who were shopping.

The explosion, only 200 yards from a Syrian army checkpont, started a fire that gutted the supermarket and a basement warehouse full of medical supplies, reporters said.

Window glass at a maternity hospital several hundred yards away was shattered. But no casualties were reported at the hospital.

Ambulances, their sirens wailing, evacuated the casualties from the scene to several clinics and hospitals in the city, 53 miles north of Beirut, one reporter said.

The blast demolished three cars parked nearby and badly damaged 20 other vehicles parked on both sides of the street.

There were no casualties among the Syrian soldiers at a nearby checkpoint.

Helmeted Syrian soldiers sealed off the area, firing into the air to make way for ambulances and fire engines.

The bombing came three days after a rally in the predominantly Sunni Moslem city during which pro-Syrian leftist and Moslem leaders called for a showdown with Lebanon's right-wing Christians.

The rally came six weeks after the assassination of Prime Minister Rashid Karami, a native of Tripoli, in a bomb explosion aboard a Lebanese army helicopter that was flying him to Beirut.

Moslems and leftists have blamed the June 1 assassination on the Israeli-backed Lebanese Forces predominantly Christian militia and Lebanese army officers who support them.

Both the army and the Christian militia have denied the charge.

Thirty-five people have been killed and 208 wounded in 10 previous car bombings in Lebanon this year. Four such explosions occurred in Moslem west Beirut, which is controlled by a 7,500-strong Syrian force.

Syria is the main power broker in Lebanon. In addition to the force in west Beirut, it has 25,000 troops deployed in north and east Lebanon under a 1976 peacekeeping mandate from the 22-nation Arab League.

Karachi Bombings Kill At Least 67

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — Two car bombs and two other bombs blew up within moments of each other at rush hour in downtown Karachi, killing at least 67 people and wounding more than 300, officials said.

No group claimed responsibility for Tuesday's bombings, the worst terrorist attack in Pakistan's 40-year history. The municipal government issued a statement saying: "The explosions appeared to be the work of saboteurs of foreign origin." It did not elaborate.

Officials at two hospitals said they had received a total of 67 bodies. But Sattar Edhi, who runs the city's largest private ambulance service, said his workers were still removing charred bodies from cars this morning, and that the death toll could rise to 75.

The bombs exploded at about 6:30 p.m. in the fashionable Saddar shopping district, which was crowded with shoppers, commuters and street vendors.

Dozens of bystanders were killed instantly, and flames leapt from nearby cars and buildings. Witnesses said terrified people ran screaming down the broad boulevard where the car bombs exploded, as glass from shattered windows rained onto the street.

Ghulam Qadir, Pakistan's deputy principal information officer, said in the capital, Islamabad, that the explosions were "the worst bombing ever in Pakistan."

Karachi, a bustling seaport of 7 million people on the warm waters of the Arabian Sea, has a history of ethnic and political unrest. But until Tuesday it had been spared the terrorist bombings that have plagued four other Pakistani cities this year.

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes in the week ending July 10.

House

PERSIAN GULF POLICY — By a vote of 126 for and 283 against, the House refused to outlaw President Reagan's plan to put Kuwaiti oil tankers in the Persian Gulf under the American flag and U.S. naval protection.

This killed an amendment to a fiscal 1988 Coast Guard budget bill (HR 2342) that was sent to the Senate. The House later approved a symbolic gesture (below) against the "reflagging" initiative, which is set to begin in mid-July.

Supporter Brian Donnelly, D-Mass., called the reflagging "a wrong-headed policy ... not worth losing one single American young man or woman over ..."

Amendment foe Tommy Robinson, R-Ark., endorsed the policy and said, "It is time to stand up for your country and quit playing politics."

Members voting yes wanted to prevent the Kuwaiti reflagging operation.

North Carolina Rep. Walter Jones, D-1, voted yes.

North Carolina representatives voting no were Tim Valentine, D-2; Martin Lancaster, D-3; David Price, D-4; Stephen Neal, D-5; Howard Coble, R-6; Charles Rose, D-7; W.G. Hefner, D-8; Alex McMillan, R-9; Cass Ballenger, R-10, and James Clarke, D-11.

TO DELAY REFLAGGING — The House adopted, 222 for and 184 against, an amendment to the Coast Guard authorization bill (above) delaying until Sept. 30 the start of American reflagging of Kuwaiti oil tankers in the Persian Gulf.

This was only symbolic because the legislation stood no chance of becoming law before July 16, the date by which President Reagan wants to begin the policy.

By contrast, the amendment to outlaw the plan (see previous vote) had teeth because it prohibited the Coast Guard from issuing American flag certificates to the tankers during a 16-month period beginning June 1, 1987.

Supporter Les Aspin, D-Wis., called the delay amendment "a shot across the bow" in protest of the president's policy.

Opponent Larry Hopkins, R-Ky., denounced it as "political opportunism and rhetoric."

Members voting yes supported the delay amendment.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were Jones, Lancaster, Price, Neal, Rose, Hefner and Clarke.

Those voting no were Valentine, Coble, McMillan and Ballenger.

NASA BUDGET CUT — By a vote of 148 for and 257 against, the House rejected an amendment to cut $155 million from a bill (HR 2782) authorizing nearly $9.5 billion for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in fiscal 1988.

Supporters said the cut was necessary to bring NASA spending in line with limits set by the Congressional Budget Resolution, while opponents said it would impede the agency's rebuilding of the space shuttle program.

Members voting yes favored the budget cut.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were Lancaster, Price, Neal, Coble and McMillan.

Those voting no were Jones, Valentine, Rose, Hefner, Ballenger and Clarke.

Senate

TRADE BILL — The Senate rejected, 41 for and 55 against, an amendment making it easier for a president to overrule protectionist findings sent to him by the International Trade Commission, which is a U.S. government agency that investigates and rules on trade complaints.

The vote occurred during debate on a sweeping trade bill (S 1420) that remained in debate. It preserved language in the bill diminishing presidential authority to disregard ITC calls for tariffs or import quotas to protect a domestic industry against imports.

Senators voting yes wanted presidents to have more power to refuse to implement tariffs or import quotas.

North Carolina Sens. Terry Sanford, D, and Jesse Helms, R, both voted no.

PLANT CLOSINGS — By a vote of 40 for and 60 against, the Senate defeated an amendment to remove "plant closing" provisions sought by organized labor from the omnibus trade bill (above).

This kept language in the bill requiring companies with more than 100 employees to give workers and communities 60 days notice of plans to close plants or inflict major layoffs.

Exemptions are provided, in part, for faltering companies seeking new business and financing, relocations within a community, and layoffs resulting from the sale of a corporation or a labor dispute.

Amendment sponsor Dan Quayle, R-Ind., called the notification requirement "a very intrusive interference into the private sector."

Babara Mikulski, D-Md., said loyal workers "cannot be treated like a paper bag or a Styrofoam cup, just to be tossed away" when plants close abruptly.

Senators voting yes were opposed to requiring notice of plant closings.

Sanford voted no and Helms voted yes.

Characters Tell Stories For History Teacher

By ROSS GERSTEN
Mankato Free Press

ST. PETER, Minn. (AP) — Princeton graduate R. Pugsly Billingham, class of 1928, strolls into the Gustavus Adolphus College classroom.

With a straw hat, full-length raccoon coat, spectacles, pullover sweater, plaid bow tie and affected Boston accent, he is the personification of the Roaring '20s, with an eye for "Fords, flappers and bathtub gin."

Amid the students' frequent outbursts of laughter, Billingham engages in a lively dialogue about the world of April 1929, expounding on prohibition, the jazz clubs of Harlem and the politics of prosperity as embodied by President Herbert Hoover.

The fictional Billingham, Thomas Jefferson, John D. Rockefeller and a 1960s radical have one thing in common: They're all characters used by Kevin Byrne, an associate history professor at Gustavus, to make American history come alive in the classroom.

Throughout his two-semester American history class, Byrne dons both the costumes and personas of characters and lectures to his students to give greater clarity to the periods of history they represent.

He also uses this method to dig beneath the stereotypical images of those eras.

"I try to develop the students' ability to think," Byrne says. "These lectures are more than just information which will come flowing back (in tests)."

The interaction brings students into contact with history.

"Oftentime, students will find it humorous to see me dress up, but then they get into the act, posing serious and difficult questions," he says.

For example, he said, students often ask Jefferson, an advocate of freedom, about his role as a slave owner.

Business tycoon Rockefeller often is quizzed about labor relations.

Byrne, who has taught at Gustavus since 1971, has performed in class since 1979. "I was intrigued with exploring a more concrete way of getting their perspectives across."

Originally he planned simply to dress up and deliver his standard lecture. "Then I hit upon being that character and having the class interact with him," he says.

Byrne chose Jefferson because he was a personal hero. "I would have loved to meet him and talk to him. I get to meet him in doing this role," he says.

Rockefeller was chosen as a way to explain the complexity of the robber-baron era of the late 19th century.

In Billingham, Bryne laces the light-hearted and exciting 1920s with painful irony. "My father gave me a seat on the stock exchange. My future is secure," Billingham boasts, unaware that the stock market is about to crash.

The character of the 1960s radical is representative of Byrne's own past, although he said his involvement in political activity at that time was minimal.

Broken Plans Break Her Bank As Well As Heart

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I became engaged last Christmas. We set our wedding date for June. When Joe (not his real name) proposed to me, he revealed that he had lived with a girl before I knew him. She became pregnant; he didn't want to marry her; she didn't want an abortion, so she had the baby. Joe convinced me, and my mother and father, that he had no obligation whatsoever to this woman or the child — that his attorney had settled it with her and her attorney. Joe is 29 and I am 24.

Two weeks before our wedding date, Joe told me that he had been "suddenly" served with papers for child support, and he decided to support this child, and ask for visiting rights as well!

Because our life together would be changed drastically, and because I think Joe lied to me about his obligation to his child, I called the wedding off.

My parents spent thousands of dollars preparing for our wedding — the deposit on the hall (not refundable), my gown and trousseau, engraved invitations, deposit for flowers, etc. I think Joe should repay my parents for all this. Joe disagrees because I'm the one who called the wedding off. (I called it off because he misrepresented himself and his intentions.)

I need your opinion. — BROKENHEARTED IN N.J.

DEAR BROKENHEARTED: I'm in your corner. Retain an attorney and have him work it out with Joe's attorney. (I hope that Joe has his attorney on a retainer. If he hasn't, he should.)

Rejoice. You could have married this man. I think you (and your parents) got off cheap.

DEAR ABBY: I am surprised at the number of men who tell me dirty jokes, then act annoyed when I don't react with a giggle, smirk or wink.

Frankly, I find this kind of talk embarrassing. Am I a prude? If you say I should loosen up, I'll try, but I was taught to be ... A LADY

DEAR LADY: Loosen up? No way! Let the offenders know you don't appreciate that kind of talk. If you don't object at the onset, the "jokes" will get dirtier and dirtier.

DEAR ABBY: In reply to "Pro-Grammar of Keane, N.H.," I submit the following:

"Pro-Grammar" of Keane, Noo Hamshah, with huh mimiquay of Southen pwonunciation, appeahs to be unable to distinguish between cowect gwammah and pwopah pwonunication, unless it happens to be huh own Nawthen dialect, the only thing she considahs pwopah.

"What does this got" and "we is" ah examples of incowect grammah, but "we ah" is not. It is the pwopah expwession of English, as it is spoken south of the Mason-Dixon line, as extended.

"Pro" would probably tell us blithely about a place called "Bouston," and would likely swell with pwide at such Kennedyesque speech as "Cuber" and "Aficker." If she would like to learn about Dixieland phonetics, I suggest she study Mock Twain.

Let us all lowah ouah pwoboscises. (1) It might wain (rain), and (2) the militahy phase of the Wah between the States was ovah in 1865! Remembah? — JOHNNY, WINNEMUCCA, NEV.

DEAR JOHNNY: The New Hampshire reader was attempting to write in Northeastern dialect — not Southern. However, your letter was entertaining, and you-ah sense of humah is stellah, fellah!

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Names Are Important

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

Well, the current list of favorite names for babies is out, and it's interesting to note that in the year 2057, nursing homes will be inhabited by the likes of Nicole, Megan, Lauren, Jason, Ryan and Lindsay.

It will seem weird having a retired handyman named Ashley, a nun named Freedom and a doctor with the first name of Amiracle, but those are the current choices.

Names are really important. In fact, there's something I've never been able to figure out. When a child gets an unusual name, does he or she unconsciously try to live up to it? Or is a name a destiny over which he or she has no control?

Did little Fawn shred paper dolls instead of cutting them out with scissors? Did Tammy like to play dress-up and get into Mama's makeup when she was 3? Did Imelda exchange credit cards as a little girl like some boys exchanged baseball cards?

It's my theory that the unusual name was deliberate because mothers thought it would take their offspring out of the realm of the ordinary and set them on a path bound for fame.

While everyone else was learning their ABCs, I visualize little Vanna at her mother's knee listening to her explain, "Success does not come without a price, Vanna. Just when you think you have arrived, some big-shot producer will throw the words "facetious' and "abstemious' at you. Each one has FIVE VOWELS, Vanna. For that you need great legs. Let's get to work. Remember, you weren't named Vanna for nothing."

I also have a suspicion that some parents think by naming a child after someone who has brought fame to a name it will perpetuate itself. Think what a shock it must have been to name a child after Wolfgang Mozart and instead of a composer get Wolfgang Puck, a cook.

Or to call your child Ronald and prime him toward the White House only to have him turn out in a clown suit at McDonald's.

It's a fact. Names come "in" and go "out" again. The Johns and Marys, Barbaras and Georges, Dorothys and Charleses have enjoyed a good run. We liked them so much, we used to give our dogs human names like Harry, Kate and Jack. I suppose now we can expect to hear, "Come on in, Brandon, I'm getting cold." "Heel, Jessica." "Stay, Melissa." "Don't drink out of the toilet, Jonathan."

If parents really thought how much a name can influence a child's entire life, maybe they'd come up with better ones. Think about it. Is there a sex symbol named Erma? There is not! Is there a cheerleader in the Western world who answers to the name of Erma? Get real. Are there any love songs, "Once in Love with Erma"? Get outta here. In the annals of Miss America pageants, was there ever a contestant named Erma who played classical music on her nose? Hah!

Maybe I don't want to know what Mom had in mind for me.

Former Worker Has His Own New Frontier

By T.J. SIMONEAUX
Associated Press Writer

FAIRMONT, W.Va. (AP) — Twenty years ago, Ronnie Utt was helping to forge the "New Frontier." Today, he's returned to the forge to help children understand frontier ways.

Utt, 53, a former technician at NASA's Johnson Space Center in Houston, is a bespectacled musician who doubles as blacksmith at Prickett's Fort State Park in Marion County, W.Va.

He helps to recreate for school tours the West Virginia life of the late 1700s — including old Appalachian and British ballads and Irish lullabies that have been passed down through the generations.

"It's the first time my machinist and music interests have come together" in one job, says Utt, who speaks and sings in a drawl that's reminiscent of country singer Willie Nelson.

"It's great," he says. "And to think, I found it only eight miles from where I was born."

The job calls for "showing the old and the new" to help children comprehend how pioneers lived, he says. For example, he tells his young visitors that chores they do at home are much the same as those performed by frontier children — such as taking out the garbage.

He also leads sing-alongs of the ballads and Irish lullabies that some of the children's parents still sing.

"People don't understand the importance of music on West Virginia society," says Utt, who plays guitar in a trio with his banjo-picking wife, Nancy, and a local fiddler.

"Now, we're starting to see it, with Mountain Stage and Vandalia, the music festivals," he adds. "And these children, they sing real good."

Utt grew up on a farm outside Morgantown, W.Va., and the rural life fostered in him a passion for both tinkering with machines and traditional Appalachian music.

"My stepmother sang the old songs," he says. "I'd sit up and sing far into the night with her."

His father had a hand-cranked forge, which young Ronnie ran when his father made tools and farm equipment — including a tractor built from scratch.

Utt joined the Air Force shortly after high school and became a machinist. He was stationed in central Louisiana, where he sang in a gospel group, and then Texas, where he worked in the oil fields after leaving the service.

Then Utt "went looking for greener fields" and joined Philco — now Ford Aerospace — in 1965. He helped design and install the Johnson Center's control-room consoles — "that room you see on TV with the green lights" — between 1965 and 1980, from Gemini 3 to the first Columbia space shuttle flight.

"It was a new frontier. We were pioneers in space," he says. "We knew we were going to the moon. I didn't go, of course, but I helped put those there that went."

But the job entailed chemically treating the circuitry and consoles to prevent corrosion. "After 13 years of spray painting and working with chemicals, it was affecting my health," Utt says.

He developed allergies and sinus problems. He also had a 40 percent hearing loss due to the chemicals — "a scary thing for a musician," Utt says. The chemicals, combined with the high humidity and pollution of Houston, drove him behind a desk.

"But by then, the damage was done. So I moved home," he said.

His health cleared up once he returned to West Virginia and the outdoors, he says — ironic in view of his current job, since frontier blacksmiths usually died young because they breathed so much hot coal dust.

Utt says he's devoted to his new state government-paid job. He insists upon dressing correctly for the part, including hand-sewn linen frontiersman britches and blouses.

His wife sewed one of the shirts from "synthetic material, and I won't wear it," he said. He bought his brass-rimmed specs in an antique store.

Utt even lives in a log cabin dating from the 1830s. It has electricity and running water, but other facets — including a well-used cooking hearth — retain the frontier feeling.

"It took me years to find the right kind of windows for it," he said. "I wanted it to look old."

At the end of the day, however, when the school buses full of children have departed, Utt slips out of his leather moccasins and into his work boots for the trip home. He replaces his specs with black horn-rims, then drives to a gas station to tank up his battered car with the Pittsburgh Steelers decal on the rear window.

"I've got to get back to the 20th century now," he says.

Fringes Add Fun To Loose-Fitting Vest

Pat's Pointers
Pat Trexler

Quite possibly the most unique sweater you'll ever knit is this loose-fitting sweater vest. Its boat neck and soft cap sleeves are designed to be worn over a shirt or turtleneck.

The fringes on the front are tied on after the vest has been knit, from side to side in a beginner-easy pattern stitch. Two types of yarn are used — one for the garter stitch ridges and the other for the stockinette stitch panels.

Easy-to-follow directions are given for small, medium and large sizes with finished bust measurements of 36, 40, and 44 inches respectively. The sweater works up quickly on large needles with a gauge of three stitches to the inch.

To obtain directions for making the "Fringe Benefit" vest, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-071287 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. K-071287 by sending a check or money order for $14.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and yarn in your choice of peach, lilac or white.

Dear Pat: The sweater pattern I am sending you is one I fell in love with, but it is for a knitting machine. Is it possible to knit it by hand? — Debbie T. Mountlake, Terrace, Wash.

Not all machine knit patterns would be easy for the average knitter to convert to hand knitting, but the one Debbie sent me can. If an involved pattern stitch is used, directions may not be so easily transposed.

As a general rule, converting a pattern is usually a matter of ignoring the details that refer specifically to the knitting machine. Before you start on such a venture, carefully read the pattern to see if the details you need for hand knitting are included, for the most part.

You will not be given a recommendation for needle size. However, just as in hand knitting instructions, you should be given a stitch and row gauge. With this information, you can determine the size needle you need.

The gauge will also tell you whether this will be a quick-knit or a long-term project. Many knitting machine patterns are designed for fine yarn that would have to be worked on very small knitting needles and would require a fairly long time to complete by hand. This type of pattern would not be particularly appealing to many of today's hand knitters.

The sweater pattern Debbie sent to me, however, was designed for a machine that will take a bulky yarn, and the four-stitch-per-inch gauge given means she can work at a comfortable speed by hand.

The first step will be to find the correct needle size by making sample swatches with her chosen yarn — a bulky type. I suggest that she make her first swatch with medium-large needles in the size 10 to 10-1/2 range, casting on 20 stitches and working in stockinette stitch until the piece is five inches long.

Twenty stitches at four stitches per inch should yield a swatch five inches wide. If her swatch is wider than that, she should try again with smaller needles. If her swatch is narrower, larger needles will be needed.

The row gauge given for the machine pattern is 4.8 rows per inch. Multiplying that gauge by five inches equals 24 rows. So, if Debbie reaches the five inches over a span of 24 rows, she is matching the row gauge and can follow the pattern directions exactly for number of rows needed in each section of the sweater.

While you can always match the stitch gauge in these cases, it is sometimes difficult to match the row gauge at the same time. Don't worry about that, even though the machine instructions will almost always be given in number of rows to be worked instead of inches.

In Debbie's pattern, which is worked in stockinette except for ribbings, therer are 36 rows to be worked in a three-color Fair Isle pattern stitch following the chart. The remainder of the sweater is worked above the chart for a total of 82 rows from ribbing to armhole shaping. Dividing 82 by the row gauge of 4.8 rows per inch results in a 17-inch measurement over the same span — obviously a long-length fashion. So, she could work to that measurement or to any desired length.

The same formula for converting rows to inches would be used to find the armhole and neck depths as well as the sleeve lengths.

Other than that, this particular pattern uses the same terminology as for hand knitting; it refers to binding off, decreasing, increasing and so on. So for the knitter with some experience, who has a fair understanding of basic knitting principles, this should pose no particular problem.

Volume on the Big Board came to 31.55 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Before the market opened, the Commerce Department reported that the trade deficit widened in May to $14.49 billion from $13.32 billion the month before.

The dollar fell in foreign exchange, and interest rates climbed in the credit markets. Prices of long-term government bonds, which move in the opposite direction from interest rates, fell more than $10 for every $1,000 in face value.

ITT Corp. rose ¼ to 61⅝. The company reported second-quarter earnings of $1.73 a share, up from $1.05 in the comparable period last year.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .48 to 174.19. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .11 at 349.61.

Admiral Says Reagan OK'd Trade

The request to have the television cameras turned off was rejected on a 13-1 vote by the House committee and a 10-0 vote by the Senate panel. Rep. Henry Hyde R-Ill., was the only lawmaker to support Beckler's request.

Hamilton took exception to suggestions by Beckler that there was a connection between the congressional investigation and the probe by Walsh.

"We have not been in collusion with the independent counsel in any way," Hamilton said. "We have respected his role."

Beckler said Poindexter "has nothing to hide," and has "committed no crimes....We'll fight it every step of the way."

But he said the tandem investigations conducted by the congressional committees and the independent counsel's office placed an unfair burden on Poindexter.

"The national broadcast, with the hot lights beaming down and the cameras blaring away, is a violation of his due process rights," Beckler said of Poindexter.

"If there is an indictment in this case, it will not read the president of the United States versus John Poindexter, it will not read the Congress versus John Poindexter," the lawyer said. "It will say the United States of America versus John Poindexter ... and I say ... if that should happen, the Congress or Mr. Walsh should have gone one way or another."

Said Beckler: "I have never seen a situation where a primary target of a criminal investigation has been forced to testify before a nationwide audience and have that testimony dissected over and over."

Beckler's disclosure that Poindexter is a target of Walsh's investigation was a surprise. Lt. Col. Oliver North, who concluded his testimony on Tuesday, had earlier been identified as a target of Walsh's probe.

Poindexter had been subpoenaed to appear after receiving a grant of limited immunity that compels his testimony. It also means his words cannot be used against him in court except in a perjury case.

Beckler volunteered to have the transcript of Poindexter's private interrogation released to the public.

Poindexter sat silently at the witness table as his lawyer made his case.

His testimony has been long awaited at the public sessions, since he was in frequent contact with President Reagan during the period under investigation.

Poindexter, who resigned his White House post when the affair's cover was blown last Nov. 25, is in a position to give investigators their clearest picture yet of how much Reagan knew about the use of Iran arms sale proceeds to aid Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

Reagan has repeatedly said that he did not know of any diversion scheme.

Even more attention was shifted to Poindexter by his former subordinate, Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, who ended six days of testimony Tuesday insisting that "every single thing I did, I sought approval for. And if I didn't get approval, I didn't do it."

"Colonel North has pushed the problem up, in a sense," said Hamilton. "He has clearly indicated he thought he was authorized to do all that he did. If that is true, the question becomes: 'Who authorized it?'"

Poindexter became Reagan's national security adviser in December 1985, just before the idea of diverting money from the Iran arms sales to aid the Contras was born. He held the position through the rest of the time the covert aid program was in effect and had frequent, almost daily, access to Reagan.

Poindexter's testimony followed a day that saw his predecessor, Robert C. McFarlane, dispute North over the authority for the former National Security Council aide's actions. McFarlane directly contradicted North's testimony on several key points.

McFarlane said he never had concurred in, or even heard of, a plan for a wide-ranging covert action organization outside the CIA which North said he was helping set up at the behest of the late CIA Director William J. Casey. He also said he knew of no plan to make North a "fall guy" should the operation become public.

McFarlane said he believed the NSC, contrary to North's belief, was subject to a congressional restriction on aiding the Contras; that he had directly told North not to solicit funds, either from private parties or from third countries; and that he had never authorized wholesale changes in sensitive NSC documents related to the affair.

He also said North — not himself — had been the source of a falsified report in a chronology contending that officials believed the November 1985 Hawk shipment to have been oil drilling equipment.

Documents released by the congressional committees Tuesday showed that $1.5 million from the Swiss bank accounts in the Iran-Contra financial network went to a man believed to be an associate of terrorist Abu Nidal. The documents, computer printouts from businessman Albert Hakim, who handled the accounts, showed a $1 million payment on Aug. 30, 1985 and a $500,000 payment on June 20, 1986 to "Monzer Alkassar," which investigators believe is an alias for Bansar Al Kasar, a Syrian arms merchant and close associate of Nidal.

The two debits on a Lake Resources account used in the Iran-Contra network were specified as "arms" payments and designated "Purpose: Contra," apparently indicating the money was for weapons to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Fired Worker Kills Father, Son, Self

WEST SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A man dismissed from his factory job over a fistfight on a picket line opened fire on former co-workers with a shotgun and pistol, fatally wounding a father and son before killing himself, police said.

Daniel Darrington, 40, of Sacramento, pumped several rounds into the victims as they lay wounded on the ground, then "casually walked to his car" and shot himself in the head, said Sgt. Mike Perdum.

"He just appeared to have been in an emotional frenzy and just took care of business," Perdum said.

Darrington entered the office at Clough Equipment Co. and disabled the telephones before opening fire on employees taking their lunch break in the yard, said Police Chief Barry Kaler.

Slain were Floyd Ballinger, 60, and his son Wayne, both of Sacramento. Darrington apparently tried to shoot two other workers, but they escaped unhurt, Kaler said.

Floyd Ballinger died at the scene; his son died at University Medical Center, the Sacramento County coroner's office said.

Kaler said Darrington was fired from his job as a supervisor June 26 over a fight with the elder Ballinger during a strike at the plant, which assembles petroleum tanks.

Darrington also had sued Floyd Ballinger for $160 in damage he claimed was done to his car when he crossed picket lines, Kaler said.

Alan Darrington, the gunman's brother, said there were hard feelings between some workers and Daniel Darrington.

"A couple of people hassled him. Most of it was verbal abuse," he said. "They once hit his Mustang on the hood with a picket sign and damaged it."

Cockfight Arrests

HANOVER COURTHOUSE, Va. (AP) — Officers raided a barn where a cockfight was under way and arrested about 40 people, authorities said.

"They've been operating for quite a while," said Hanover Sheriff's Capt. W.C. Wickham.

The property owner, Clyde Melvin Walsh, 48, a brick contractor from Doswell, was charged with illegal cockfighting and killing, maiming or poisoning of animals, both misdemeanors, Wickham said.

Wickham said 49 charges were placed against about 40 participants and spectators.

Clinton Says 'No' To Race

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Gov. Bill Clinton counted himself out of the race for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination, saying he and his wife want to spend more time with their daughter and take a breather from campaigning.

"For the past six months, my head has told me to enter this race. But my heart says no," he said in the statement Tuesday.

The 40-year-old governor said he might consider running in 1992.

Clinton would have been the second-youngest candidate in the Democratic race and the second Southerner — behind, in both cases, Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, who is 39.

Wounded Driver

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Police say a Wilmington driver who was shot in the head by a passenger, drove his car three blocks before wrecking the vehicle and jumping out of it.

John Robinson, who was listed in in fair condition Tuesday night, was conscious and talking to police at the scene after he was shot, police said.

Can't Dance For Double

Raines' Hit Lifts NL All- Stars

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — The All-Star Game ventured into the twilight zone again to boost television ratings and found itself back in the dead-ball era.

A string of zeros stretched across the scoreboard until the 13th inning Tuesday night when Tim Raines tripled home two runs to give the National League a 2-0 victory over the American League.

More than a dozen pitchers, part of a beleaguered brotherhood victimized by so-called "juiced-up" balls this year, took the sluggers back to a time of low scores and earned homers.

It was a brand of baseball rarely seen this year, a mound duel spiced with some spectacular defense that perhaps only a true baseball fan could really enjoy.

They played in a squinty twilight in which pitcher Jack Morris said he could hardly see the plate and .375 hitter Wade Boggs said he could barely see the ball.

Bret Saberhagen threw the first pitch at 5:40 p.m. PDT, prime time in the East. The starting time was chosen to please NBC-TV, but not the batters.

"It's frustrating when you play in twilight," said Boggs, who went hitless in three at-bats. "It wasn't too easy to see the ball."

"I just couldn't follow the ball at all," said Darryl Strawberry. "It kind of snuck up on you. It was almost impossible to see."

"You couldn't pick up the spin or the rotation," said Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt.

While home runs are up 22 percent in the majors this year, the only balls that came close were fly ball outs in the 10th by Kevin Seitzer and the seventh by Mark McGwire, the major league leader with 33 homers.

McGwire said he didn't hit his fly ball well, but thought it might fall in the right field corner.

"So much for the lively ball, right?" he said.

The pitchers, of course, didn't mind seeing the batters struggle.

"It was nice to see the pitchers do well, especially with all the talk about the juiced-up ball," Saberhagen said. "It goes to show that maybe the ball isn't as juiced up as everybody thinks. It's just some bad pitches that guys have been hitting out."

Saberhagen, pitching with the shadows creeping over the front of the infield, threw three innings of one-hit ball against a lineup that boasted 140 homers among its first seven batters.

"If every game is played in twilight, the pitchers will have their way all the time," Boggs said.

One of the heroes, NL catcher Ozzie Virgil, said the game proved again that "good pitching will shut down good hitting any day."

It was the third-longest All-Star Game in history, exceeded only by 15 innings in 1967 and 14 in 1950, and it kept the Nationals unbeaten in eight extra-inning games.

The NL now leads the series 37-20-1 and has won 14 of the last 16, 22 of 25. The AL, which was trying to win two in a row for the first time since 1957-58, instead was shut out for the fourth time.

In 1984, when the game was last played in twilight in San Francisco's Candlestick Park, pitchers notched 21 strikeouts. This time, they struck out 17.

Meanwhile the batters cursed the semi-darkness and marched meekly from the plate. The Nationals managed only eight hits, the Americans six in the first All-Star Game to go scoreless for more than five innings.

The Americans nearly won the game in the ninth, but the winning run was cut down at home plate after NL reliever Steve Bedrosian made a diving save of a wide throw to first base by shortstop Hubie Brooks. Bedrosian threw home where Virgil withstood a collision with Dave Winfield for an inning-ending double play.

"It was just full extension, one of those Ozzie Smith-type catches," Bedrosian said. "I just went for it. You either do it or you don't."

Bedrosian walked Winfield. After a sacrifice bunt by Tony Fernandez, Dwight Evans drew another walk to put runners at first and second.

Harold Reynolds followed with a grounder to the right side. It was fielded by first baseman Keith Hernandez, who threw to second to force Evans. Bedrosian was covering first when he made his saving game-saving dive.

"You saved the game," Brooks told Bedrosian.

"I thought I was going to have a little more time," Virgil said. "I looked up and he (Winfield) was there. All I saw was his shirt. He's like a Mack truck."

The only batter to solve the pitchers was Raines, who had three hits after entering the game in the seventh. He said he promised his wife one hit, but the last one was for the guys in the dugout.

"A couple of guys told me they were about to go to sleep on the bench," Raines said.

The Montreal speedster, 0-for-7 in six previous All-Star Games, jumped up and down when he reached third base after driving home Virgil and Brooks with the winning runs off Oakland's Jay Howell.

Morton Hopes To Emulate Caulkins

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Chas Morton hated swimming at an early age. Now, he has grown up trying to emulate the accomplishments of Tracy Caulkins, one of the best women's swimmers in history.

"I learned to swim at about 4 or 5 years old," Morton, 16, said Tuesday night after winning the men's 200-meter individual medley in two minutes, seven seconds — a national record for the 15-16 age group category — at the U.S. Olympic Festival. "I took lessons, but I despised them. My mom made me take them.

"As a kid, I always had a lot of energy. At first, I just paddled away, and I wasn't getting anywhere. I was getting frustrated."

It wasn't long before Morton's frustrations ended.

By age 7, he was swimming in the "country club circuit." Shortly before he was 9, he was swimming competitively, and by 10, he was swimming "seriously."

Now, he owns more than 30 age group records, including the one he set Tuesday night in becoming the Festival's first gold medalist this year.

"I've tried to emulate Tracy Caulkins," Morton, of Franklin, Tenn., said. "She grew up in the Nashville (Tenn.) Swim Club."

Morton, a high school junior, swims for the Nashville Aquatic Club.

"I admire Tracy," Morton said. "She was a tremendous swimmer."

Swimming and wrestling were the only two of the Festival's 34 sports contested Tuesday. And they were the only sports on today's schedule.

In wrestling, fourth seeds Jack Cuvo of Easton, Pa., and Kirk Trost of Ann Arbor, Mich., scored tie-breaking victories in their best-of-three matches at the Walker Center.

Cuvo, a 114.5-pounder, rallied from a 9-0 deficit in the first period in earning an 18-15 decision over third-seeded Jim Sanchez of Lincoln, Neb., during the afternoon session.

Cuvo trailed 11-6 at the end of the first period, but tied the score at 15 in the final minute of regulation, then scored a takedown to grab the lead.

Sanchez, wrestling despite injuries to his right arm and left shoulder, scored an 11-9 victory at night.

Nearly an hour later, Cuvo breezed to a 14-3 triumph and advanced to a match today against second-seeded Jeffrey Henderson.

Trost outpointed Wayne Cole of Davenport, Iowa, 8-5 in their opening match in the 220-pound class. At night, Cole won 9-5, before Trost took the third match 8-4.

For Trost, a 1986 NCAA champion at Michigan, the three matches Tuesday gave him seven in two days.

"I think I've had the most matches of anyone here," he said. "I was glad of the way I came back in the last match."

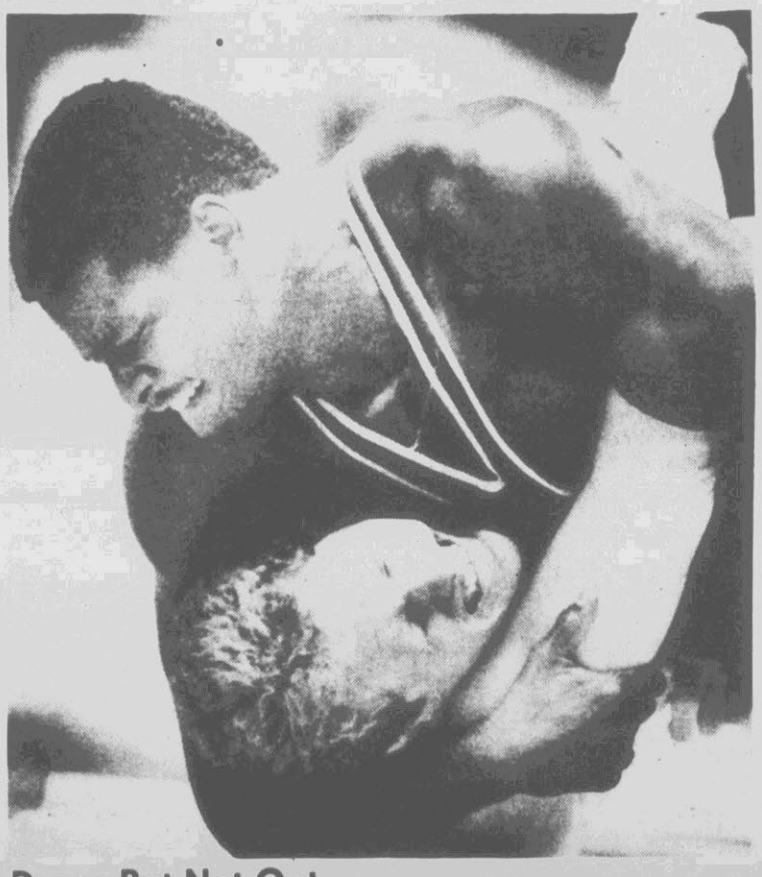

In swimming, Morton was not the only record-breaker in Koury Natatorium at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

Sarah Anderson, 17, of Moreno Valley, Calif., shattered the Festival record in the women's 200 freestyle, clocking 2:03.67, and swam on the North A team that smashed the meet record in the women's 800 freestyle relay, with a time of 8:22.03.

Lefty Enjoying His Sabbatical

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Lefty Driesell thinks that not being the basketball coach at Maryland after 17 years is a blessing in disguise.

"Truthfully, I've felt that coaches should get a sabbatical, just like teachers," Driesell said Tuesday.

Driesell was not afforded a sabbatical last year, following the cocaine-related death of Maryland All-American Len Bias.

Instead, he was pressured into resigning before the 1986-87 season.

"This way, I'll probably be much more enthusiastic if I get a job next season," Driesell said, adding that he would like to coach again, but would not actively pursue a collegiate or professional job.

At present, Driesell, 55, is assistant athletic director at Maryland, a color commentator for Atlantic Coast Conference basketball games, and this week, is coaching the East team in the U.S. Olympic Festival.

It's the first coaching assignment for Driesell, except for coaching at his summer camp, since he quit at Maryland.

The job was offered last year before his resignation, and before his controversial comments this year that cocaine enhanced a player's performance. Driesell later retracted the cocaine statement.

Driesell said he was excited about his first practice Sunday with the East team, but quickly became dismayed because of the poor physical condition of his players.

"Those guys were so out of shape, they could hardly run," Driesell, a taskmaster, said. "It was awful.

"I was going to try and teach them some plays and picks and fundamentals, but they couldn't run. I try to be thorough. But here, where you have only a few practices, it's a waste of time."

Driesell didn't like what he saw of his East team either during a practice against the North Tuesday. Afterward, he gave the players a "tonuge-lashing."

It was obvious that Driesell had not lost his zest for coaching, even though he had coached for more than 25 years, including 9 years at Davidson.

Pitt's Early Lead Keys Win

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

Pitt County American Legion baseball coach Toby Holliday said the key to his team's 9-4 win over Snow Hill was getting ahead early in the game so as to put the pressure on the opposition.

"We went out in the beginning and scored a couple of runs and put the pressure on them," Holliday said. "That's one thing we stressed, not letting them jump on us. They're the type team that holds on to a lead well. We told the kids we had to come in and put pressure on them."

The Post 39 players learned their lesson from a 17-1 lashing suffered at the hands of Snow Hill Monday night. In that game, Snow Hill jumped ahead 4-0 after three innings and never looked back.

This time, though, Pitt got the offense it needed.

Tom Moye, Shane Adams and Hunter Clark led the way for Pitt at the plate with two hits apiece.

Moye started things off by driving in Adams to tie the game at 1-1 midway through the first. David Daniels later scored on an error on the shortstop to give Pitt the lead it would never relinquish.

Pitt added to that advantage in the third when Eric Jarman opened with a single. Daniels followed by drawing a walk. Moye then drove in Jarman before Moye and Daniels later scored on errors. Clark later drove in Bronswell Patrick, who had reached on an error, to give Pitt a 6-2 advantage.

"We had too many errors in that inning," said Snow Hill coach Jim Fulghum, "Then the bats went sour. (But) you have to give their pitcher credit."

That pitcher was Bronswell Patrick. He went nine and a third innings, giving up six hits and four runs. He had a two-hitter going into the final inning and was bailed out by Moye, who got the final two outs to end the game.

Snow Hill started Anthony Jones, but he was gone after two and a third innings in favor of Mike Vandiford. Jones gave up four runs on four hits but had only two earned runs charged to him. Richie Britt later replaced Vandiford and went the final one and two-thirds innings.

The game was a complete reversal of Monday night's game. In the playoff opener played at Snow Hill, it was Pitt that committed the errors and got behind early.

"That helps the score get out of hand and it makes it hard to come back," Fulghum said of the mistakes which have plagued both teams so far in the best-of-three series.

For Pitt, it was a positive turnaround.

"We didn't make the errors we made last night," Holliday said. "We played sound defense and we hit the ball like we should. We got the hits when we needed them. I guess the key was tonight we got people on base."

Pitt expanded its lead to 9-3 with a three-run spurt in the seventh.

Robbie McDonald started things off with a walk and went to second on a passed ball. Patrick then doubled him in to make it 7-3. Clark followed that by scoring Patrick with a single

Ali Denies That He Will Undergo Brain Surgery

NEW YORK (AP) — Muhammad Ali denied today that he was considering brain surgery, saying that while he was "happy I'm shaking up the world again ... no doctor's going to touch me."

Ali, the former heavyweight champion who was diagnosed as having Parkinson's Syndrome in 1984, left Mexico City this morning, where reports originated that he would undergo surgery. Ali was in Mexico for a World Boxing Council meeting at the request of WBC President Jose Suliman.

Dr. Ignacio Madrazo, a Mexican neurosurgeon, told ABC's Monday Sportsnite that there is a "great chance" he will perform the operation on Ali.

In Mexico City, a spokeswoman at Humana Hospital told The Associated Press Monday night that the 45-year-old Ali would be tested this week and surgery would depend on the results of those examinations.

Ali, however, telephoned his family Monday night and told his brother, Rachman, "I just want all my friends and family to know I'm OK. I'm leaving Mexico City and nobody is going to touch me."

Ali also spoke Monday night and this morning by telephone with business associate Larry Kolb, president of the New York-based company Gulf and Pacific. Ali is a spokesman for and partner in the production of a milk powder called Primo, manufactured and sold overseas by Gulf and Pacific.

"He has not undergone any tests," Kolb said. "He left Mexico City to stop the speculation. He doesn't plan to undergo any tests ... anytime in the future unless he gets enough indication the procedure is safe."

The surgery involves taking cells from the adrenal glands, which produce dopamine, and placing them in the brain. Ali has been taking dopamine for the past three years in an effort to control his condition.

Madrazo told ABC that he has performed the operation on 18 patients severly afflicted with the disease.

ABC News' medical expert Timothy Johnson, who also appeared on the show, said there are serious questions about the operation's long-term effectiveness.

Parkinson's Syndrome is a mild form of Parkinson's disease, which is a degenerative affliction of later life characterized by a rhythmic tremor and muscular rigidity.

"It's been tried in various forms and places over the years, but it has been refined in Mexico," Johnson said. "It's new. We don't know how effective it will be in the long run. The surgeons from Mexico, in reporting their results, have said it probably is more effective in more mild or moderate forms of the disease."

Kolb said Ali told him he "wanted to get a lot of other opinons, wanted to know what the longterm success rates were and wanted all his other doctors to verify what this surgeon was saying. He was in close contact with his doctor in Los Angeles, who advised him not to do this. It was too speculative at this point."

"While he listened to this surgeon," Kolb said, "it was totally inaccurate to say there was a great likelihood he would have the operation. He was never considering undergoing surgery this week. If, after a year or two, he saw it was successful in other people, then he would consider it."

Spokeswoman Lourdes Ortiz said in Mexico City that Madrazo would not speak to reporters at Ali's request.

All-Star MVP

National League All-Star Tim Raines of the Montreal Expos hoists his Most Valuable Player award aloft after the All-Star game Tuesday in Oakland. Raines had three hits and drove in the tie-breaking run to give the NL a 2-0 victory. (AP Laserphoto)

Save Leader Tries Out A New Method

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — The major league leader in saves got one in the 58th All-Star Game — with his glove, not his arm.

And it took a head-long dive at that.

"It was just full extension, one of those Ozzie Smith-type catches," a smiling Steve Bedrosian said Tuesday night. "I just went for it. You either do it or you don't."

Bedrosian did. Had he not, the National League wouldn't have been able to beat the American League 2-0 in 13 innings for its 22nd win in the last 26 All-Star Games and eighth in as many extra-inning games.

There were only 14 hits in the game, just six of them by the AL, which was unable to score against all eight pitchers on the NL roster.

Bedrosian, who has 24 saves for the Philadelphia Phillies, entered the game to start the bottom of the ninth inning, and immediately walked Dave Winfield. After a sacrifice bunt by Tony Fernandez, Dwight Evans drew another walk to put runners at first and second.

Harold Reynolds followed with a grounder to the right side. It was fielded by first baseman Keith Hernandez, who threw to second to force Evans. Shortstop Hubie Brooks fired toward first in an attempt to complete an inning-ending double play, but his throw was late and, more significantly, wide of the bag.

Bedrosian needed to leave his feet to catch the ball. Then, with almost no hesitation, he got to his feet and threw home, where catcher Ozzie Virgil was waiting for Winfield.

Virgil held onto the ball despite a violent collision to send the game into extra innings.

Ironically, Bedrosian and Virgil were the key players in a four-man trade between the Phillies and Atlanta Braves prior to the 1986 season.

Tim Raines finally won the game with a two-out, two-run triple in the 13th.

"Man, what a save," Brooks told Bedrosian in the NL dressing room. "You saved the game."

Bedrosian said his play shouldn't have been so difficult.

"I hesitated I thought Keith (Hernandez) could get back there, I was late getting there, it was my fault."

Brooks admitted he thought the game was over just after he released his throw.

Brooks and Virgil scored the NL runs after hitting singles off losing pitcher Jay Howell.

All Star Game ...

"It was just a thrill knowing when I rounded second that I had knocked in the winning runs," said Raines, who won the game's Most Valuable Player and made the point he tried to make all winter as an unwanted free agent.

He missed spring training and didn't play until May 2 because he felt he should be paid with the game's best players. With no offers, he finally re-signed with Montreal.

"I've proven myself in the last six years," said Raines. "If people haven't realized that, it's their fault."

Howell, whose 4.96 earned run average was the highest among the 17 All-Star pitchers, heard boos coming and going. The home crowd lustily booed the Oakland reliever during introductions and razzed him after he gave up the winning hit.

Lee Smith pitched three innings of two-hit ball with four strikeouts for the victory, and the New York Mets' Sid Fernandez, the last player left on the NL roster, pitched the 13th for a save.

"I sort of felt like a little kid out there," Smith said.

Three innings is a longer stint than usual for Smith, but he said it didn't bother him.

"I hadn't pitched since Saturday, and the weather was cool, so I felt pretty good out there," he said. "I felt like a little kid, I was really fired up."

Fernandez is normally a starter, but as he pointed out, he appeared in relief three times for the New York Mets in the World Series last fall.

"(Pitching coach) Mel (Stottlemyre) told me I might get nine (innings) in," Fernandez said with a smile, referring to the fact that he was his league's final pitcher. "I was more nervous in this game than in the World Series, I don't know why.

"A save in the All-Star Game, that's a dream. The only thing better is a win."

All-Star Game Solution For Juiced Ball

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

OAKLAND (AP) — At last, we have a solution for the juiced up baseball and the siege of home runs being hit this season.

You start every game in twilight, with shadows creeping across the field, folding half of it in sunlight and the rest of it in shade.

You assemble all of the best pitchers around and march them into the game one after another.

And if you happen to be playing in one of baseball's stingiest home run parks, why that makes it all the better.

OK, all you big shot sluggers, let's see what you can do with that combination.

In a homer-happy season that threatens to shatter all manner of long ball records, the National and American League All-Stars, the finest hitters in the game, came up empty Tuesday night. They played a dozen scoreless innings, by far the longest dry spell in All-Star history, before the NL broke through for a 2-0 victory.

Not in the darkest days of baseball's power shortage two decades ago, when the sport was so desperate for offense that it lowered the mound and began toying with the designated hitter rule, had hitters looked so hapless.

Over one stretch, AL pitchers retired nine straight hitters. Over another, they knocked off 13 of 14. No NL runner made it to third base until the ninth inning. Only one AL runner got that far and that was strictly temporary as Dave Winfield ran right by it, trying to score the winning run in the ninth, only to be thrown out at the plate. It was not a bad play, considering that the AL had managed only four hits to that point.

The irony of all this is that it should happen in this summer when laboratory technicians are busily picking apart baseballs, trying to figure out why they're so full of life and seem to fly out of parks at the slightest provocation.

If the ball is livelier, then they must have been using rocks in the All-Star Game. There was nothing close to a home run. Only two balls caused the crowd to gasp, but if you're gasping at long flies, then things are pretty tough.

"What's the old saying?" Kirby Puckett said. "Good pitching stops good hitting. Well, we were facing the best pitchers in the game."

Keith Hernandez figured the deck was stacked against the hitters from the start.

"Nine out of 10 times, pitchers are going to dominate this game," he said. "You're swinging against the best pitchers, guys you haven't faced before, and you face a different pitcher every time up."

And then, there was the twilight.

A's McGwire Back Trying Chase Baseball's Immortals

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Mark McGwire, who was cheered louder than any of his contemporaries at baseball's 58th All-Star game, now goes back to chasing Babe Ruth, Roger Maris, Frank Robinson and other sluggers of the past.

The Oakland Athletics' rookie first baseman, with 33 home runs at the All-Star break, drew a long, standing ovation from a record Oakland Coliseum crowd of 49,671 during Tuesday night's pregame introductions.

"That was great, the greatest thing I've experienced at this point in my career," McGwire said.

He entered the game in the sixth inning, receiving another big cheer, but was unable to generate more thunderous noise with his play. He was 0-for-3 at bat in a game the National League won 2-0 on Tim Raines' two-run triple in the 13th off Athletics reliever Jay Howell.

McGwire also made an error, the only one by the American League, when he threw the ball into left field in the ninth as he attempted to cut down Raines on a steal of second base.

"When I made that error, it hit me — how many people were watching this game," said the rookie who was playing before minor league crowds a year ago. "I usually make that play. I settled down after that."

The former University of Southern California and U.S. Olympic team star could be the game's biggest gate attraction over the last half of this season. He is ahead of Ruth's home run pace of 1927, when the "Sultan of Swat" established the major league record of 60, and just slightly behind the 1961 pace of Maris, who broke Ruth's mark with 61.

In closer range for McGwire are the league record for homers by a rookie, Al Rosen's 37 for Cleveland in 1950, and the major league rookie record of 38 shared by National Leaguers Robinson and Wally Berger.

All McGwire could do Tuesday night, however, was join in the hitters' head-shaking over the pitching success.

"So much for the lively ball, right? What can you say? There was just great pitching on both sides," he said. "There were a lot of 1-2-3 innings, and if someone got on second base, the pitchers got out of trouble."

On his first at-bat, in the seventh, McGwire brought many fans on their feet by lofting a ball down the right field line to within a few feet of the fence. Dwight Evans, who was on second base with two out, had rounded third and was heading for home when Dale Murphy caught the ball.

"I didn't think it had a chance to go out, but I thought it might drop in the corner," McGwire said.

Harold Reynolds, who was named to the team as a replacement for Detroit second baseman Lou Whitaker, had regrets over a ball he failed to dump on the infield grass.

before coming home himself on an RBI single by Adams.

Snow Hill rallied in the ninth as Greg Patterson opened with a solo homer and T.J. Johnson, Roger Smith and Gary Ginn all singled to load the bases. However Moye put out the fire in relief of Patrick to end the game.

With the win, the three-game series evolves into a one-game series tonight at Snow Hill.

Snow Hill will start Chris Hooker while Pitt will counter with Moye for as long as he is able.

"Pitching is probably going to the most important thing," Holliday said. "Whoever comes out with the strongest pitcher will have the advantage. It's going to be a tough ball game in Snow Hill."

It's Official, Bo Will Play Football Too

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — When Bo Jackson's playing days ended at Auburn University, he couldn't decide whether he wanted to make money hitting holes carrying a football or hitting baseballs over a fence.

After weeks of agonizing over the choice last year, the 1985 Heisman Trophy winner made up his mind to play baseball for the Kansas City Royals and sneered at questions about football, saying he was done forever with that contact sport.

But Tuesday, Jackson announced he would try to do what he secretly always wanted to do — play both professional baseball and football. He said he has agreed to a part-time contract with the Los Angeles Raiders that commences after his rookie season with the Royals ends.

Still, Jackson said at a news conference that baseball takes precedence over football.

"I made my choice last year. I am going to make a career out of baseball," he said. "Baseball is priority number one."

Asked if he thought he might change his mind and devote all his energies to football, Jackson said, "Not in this life."

Neither Jackson nor his agent, Richard Woods, would comment on the terms of the contract with the Raiders, which Woods said would likely be signed later this week.

Sources told The Associated Press that the deal is for $2.6 million over five years, including a $1 million signing bonus, with salaries ranging from $250,000 to $330,000. He also will receive a $1 million loan. Jackson is believed to receive about $300,000 a year from the Royals on a five-year deal.

The 24-year-old Jackson, who combines power and speed in both sports, said he would rest "as long as I need" back home in Alabama after the baseball season before joining the Raiders.

When that would be depends on the success of the Royals, who trail Minnesota by two games in the American League West. If Kansas City fails to win the division title, its season would be over Oct. 4, but if the team is involved in playoffs and World Series, the season could run until November.

If the Royals fail to win their division, Woods said he expected Jackson to be ready for football by early November — which would be about halfway through the regular 16-game NFL season.

Jackson said he anticipated being used on a part-time basis, splitting time with Marcus Allen and other backs.

Raiders Coach Tom Flores said, "Obviously, we would find some ways to use him. We said when we drafted him, we were doing it with the idea of not disrupting his baseball career. We feel that if anybody has the ability to play both, he is the person.

"Since he has decided to play both sports, we are happy with his decision."

Jackson was the No. 1 pick in the 1986 NFL draft, but spurned the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. Since a year had gone by, he was again eligible to be drafted again this year and the Raiders picked him.

He signed with the Royals last year after turning down a $7 million, five-year offer from the Buccaneers and spent the last half of last season in baseball's minor leagues.

This year, he is hitting .254 with a 18 home runs and 45 runs batted in for Kansas City after surprisingly making the big-league club during spring training. He also has 115 strikeouts in 277 at-bats, which is on a pace to break the all-time single-season record of 189 set by San Francisco's Bobby Bonds in 1970.

Jackson said Tuesday that he was not disappointed in his play.

"I'm very happy with my performance," he said. "The more I play, the better I get as a player and a person."

Several players have played both sports on the major-league level — including George Halas, Jim Thorpe, Steve Filipowicz, Carroll Hardy, Ace Parker and Tom Brown — but none in recent times.

As a football player at Auburn, Jackson gained a school record 4,303 yards on 650 carries, good for a per-carry average of 6.6 yards and a per-game average of 113.2. His best season was 1985, when he gained 1,786 yards and scored 17 touchdowns.

Jackson said he always wanted to play both sports at the highest level.

"If I could have done it last year, I would have," he said. "As I've said umpteen times, it's a lifetime goal."

There has been criticism from some of the Royals about Jackson's decision. But he said today he believed most of them now accept his choice and his promise that it won't affect his baseball play.

Jackson said he didn't think some of the Royals knew all the details when his desire to play football first surfaced. "They were just ticked off because they weren't told," he said.

A team meeting has cleared the air in the Royals' clubhouse, he said.

"They've accepted what I've done," Jackson said. "They're glad I'm going to do it."

Avron Fogelman, co-owner of the Royals, said Jackson's contract will be restructured to protect the team if he is injured in football. Fogelman, who met with Jackson over the weekend, said he never considered giving Jackson an ultimatum to choose between the two sports.

Can Bo Do It?

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

Can Bo Jackson have an immediate impact on the NFL?

Yes, say most football experts.

Is he jeopardizing his baseball career by signing a five-year contract with the NFL's Los Angeles Raiders?

Again, the answer is yes.

"I think he can do it for this year. but I just don't see him trying to combine the two sports year after year," said Carroll Hardy, director of scouting for the Denver Broncos and one of the last athletes to combine professional baseball and football careers. Hardy left the San Francisco 49ers after one season to sign with baseball's Cleveland Indians in 1955.

"He could do either one and be a star at either one. But if he's going to play baseball, he's really jeopardizing his career by playing football," Hardy said. "One injury and it could be all over. I love to ski and there's great skiing here in Colorado but I never touched skis while I was playing."

Jackson, the left fielder for the Kansas City Royals, announced Tuesday that he has reached agreement with the Raiders on a contract that sources put at $2.6 million over five years. He was chosen by the Raiders on the seventh round of the April 29 draft after choosing the Royals over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, who had made him the first pick overall in the 1986 draft and offered him $7 million over five years.

The baseball season ends Oct. 4, four weeks into the NFL season.

But the Royals are just two games behind the Minnesota Twins in the American League West. If they win the division, Jackson's arrival would be delayed another two weeks and if they reach the World Series, add on two weeks more, meaning the football season would be half over when Jackson reports.

"Obviously, we would find some ways to use him," Raiders Coach Tom Flores said Tuesday. "When we drafted him, we said we were doing it with the idea of not disrupting his baseball career. We feel that if anybody has the ability to play both, he is the person.

Langer Hopes To Get Win

MUIRFIELD, Scotland (AP) — The last 17 major golf championships have been won by 17 different players.

West Germany's Bernhard Langer thinks he could be the man to end that streak when the 116th British Open begins Thursday.

"I feel extremely confident and pretty good about my game," Langer said Tuesday after his first practice round over the Muirfield links. "I expect good things this week."

Langer, the 1985 Masters champion, is a 6-to-1 co-favorite to win his second major title along with Spain's Seve Ballesteros. Then comes defending champion Greg Norman of Australia at 8-to-1.

Langer has come close to winning the British Open in each of the last three years with two ties for third and one for second.

"Hopefully, I can do better — one or two spots," he said.

At Muirfield, a course which traditionally favors players with an all-around game, Langer is hopeful of being the man in the spotlight on the 18th green on Sunday afternoon.

He has played well in Europe this year, winning the Whyte and Mackay PGA championship at Wentworth, England, and taking the Carrolls Irish Open by 10 strokes.

At the U.S. Open, Langer finished fourth, but Muirfield, he said, will suit his game.

"It's a shotmakers's course because of the severe rough and the many bunkers and the tough greens," Langer said.

On paper, he said, between 50 and 70 players could win the title, "but if it gets windy, that comes down to 10 or 15."

Norman is bidding to become the first player since Tom Watson in 1983 to win consecutive British Open titles.

But the hard-hitting Australian has not won a tournament on the the U.S. circuit this year despite losing in a playoff to Larry Mize at the Masters.

Norman thinks his problem has been trying to emulate his 1986 form.

"I've probably been trying too hard, trying to make 1987 a better year than 1986," he said. "But I'm ready to start at the British Open and forget what has happened earlier."

Norman described Muirfield as "a demanding course, even on a still day." That, he said, might explain why so few underdogs have won the title here.

"One thing about Muirfield ... it's a course that seems to isolate players from other players," Norman said.

Like Norman, Watson has been winless this year. In fact, he has not won a title since the Australian Open in 1984.

But he came within one putt of winning the U.S. Open last month and has the additional incentive of needing one more British Open title to tie Harry Vardon's record of six.

Falcons Have Draft Problem

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Falcons President Rankin Smith Jr., whose team is having a difficult time signing its first-round 1987 draft choice, said the team set a bad precendent by paying too much money for first-round selections in the previous two drafts.

"The two things I'm most unproud of are that we signed the two highest paid contracts (for rookie linemen) in the history of this league," Smith said, referring to 1985 draft choice Bill Fralic and 1986 selectee Tony Casillas.

"I'm disgusted over it. We screwed up. We did what we thought we should have done, but it was not real smart. We just paid too much money for them."

Negotiations have stalled between the Falcons and quarterback Chris Miller of Oregon, their top pick this year.

Fralic and Casillas, each the second player taken in his respective draft, each got a contract for four years worth $2.35 million. Smith said those contracts have been brought up in negotiations with Miller.

Smith said Miller's agents, Mike Blatt and Frank Bauer, asked for about $3 million over four years. The Falcons at first offered $1.41 million for four years, and later raised it to $1.5 million.

Smith said the team got some displeasure from the NFL Management Council, which represents the owners and monitors salaries, over its offers to Fralic and Casillas.

"Unfortunately, that's what happens when you get the first or second pick in the draft," said Smith, who took his turn by criticizing the Tampa Bay Buccaneers for paying this year's top pick, quarterback Vinnie Testaverde, $8.2 million over six years.

Driesell ...

He said he was open to coaching offers, if any were to be offered.

"I'm not going to apply for a job," he said. "People know I'm available ... I haven't thought much about coaching, but if someone wants me, I'll coach."

Driesell said he had talked with owners of the Charlotte team that will begin play in the NBA in the 1988-89 season, before they were awarded the franchise, but has had little discussion with them since then, except for a casual conversation about a week ago.

"I don't know if I could stand losing 50 games," he said about the possibility of coaching the expansionist team.

"I'd probably go nuts. I would have to lose (in the beginning) and I might not be able to handle that.

"But if the money was right ... "

Driesell said it was not his decision to leave the Maryland post.

"I feel I did my job and I did it well," he said. "I miss it.

"I didn't enjoy the circumstances under which I had to give up coaching."

There were other parts of the game he did not miss, however.

"I didn't have to go to high school games for the first time in 30 years," he said. "I didn't have to tell a (possible) recruit that he wasn't as good as he thought. And I didn't have to go scouting all-star games all over the country."

Despite much criticism of Driesell, because of the Bias incident and the cocaine comments, he defended his style.

He also defended accusations that "I don't care about my players or that they don't do well academically."

"That was totally untrue," he said.

"Eighty three percent of those who have played for me for four years at Maryland graduated," he said. "And I'll match that against anyone.

"They said that four players flunked out last year, but that's not true, either," Driesell said. "Two of the players, Herman Veal and Jeff Baxter, have graduated, and Speedy Jones may graduate in August.

"Len Bias was 21 credits short of graduating. And I'm sure if Bias would have have lived, he would have gotten his degree."

Driesell said he has heard "from a lot of people who think I should coach again. Friends have told me I should be an NBA coach because I can motivate."

"They said I would be a good coach.

"But I coached a lot longer than I anticipated. I got the coaching job at Davidson when I was 26 or 27.

"When I got to 30, I said there would be no way I would be coaching when I was 40. When I got to 40, I said there would be no way I would be coaching when I was 50.

"I coached until I was 54.

"I will not have a nervous breakdown if I do not coach again."

With Just A Little Help, Kids Build Their Own 'Instant Wonderland'

It's not unlike an old-fashioned barn raising. But in this case the beneficiaries are kids, not cows. West Roxbury, Mass., is one of the communities in 30 states that have been touched by what one parent calls the "Bob Leathers' magic wand." Leathers directs the building of instant playgrounds.

By JULES LOH
AP Special Correspondent

WEST ROXBURY, Mass. (AP) — The hammering and sawing stopped, at last, and on a signal the invasion began. Like the carpentry, the invasion was an unqualified success.

The invaders, laughing, swarmed over a one-fifth-acre lot which in four days had been made into a wonderland.

They found places to climb on, slide down, peek through, crawl under, swing from, bounce on, jump off and peer over. They found a castle which they stormed, a village which they occupied, a dragon which they slew, or at least subdued, by clambering over its wooden bones with loud and obvious glee.

"They ought to enjoy it," Robert Leathers said. "They designed it. They built it. It's theirs."

True, almost. The playground belongs to the kids, all right, and they certainly did at least help build it, along with their parents, and they had what Leathers claims was the essential say in its design.

But the new playground in West Roxbury, a community on the westernmost fringe of Boston, resembles in a generic way about 360 other instant wonderlands that have materialized in recent years across the nation.

So far, neighborhoods in 30 states have playgrounds that show the touch of what one parent here called "Bob Leathers' magic wand." The magic, spread by word-of-mouth, seems as contagious as chicken pox. Leathers has 65 playgrounds to build this year.

Each one, after the planning is done, takes four days of sweaty labor before the fun begins. But the sweaty labor is fun, too, if you believe the looks on the faces of the people doing it.

"Somebody said it's like an old-fashioned barn raising," Leathers says, raising his voice above the whine of power saws and the pounding of hammers. "I suppose it is. It's a community effort. That's the very essence of it. It's a happening. Happenings are fun."

The happening in West Roxbury happened at the corner of Sturges and LaGrange streets, a city-owned lot of hard-packed dirt with some broken-down swings and an unbalanced seesaw.

The neighborhood is of small frame houses, well kept, occupied by families like Marc and Pamela Seigle, who both work, care about their neighbors, and worry about the upbringing of their two children, Jed and Annie, 10 and 6.

"We have busing here," Pamela Seigle says. "The kids go off to different schools and have no place to be together, no sense of their own neighborhood. That old lot surely didn't offer them anything or attract them.

"I happened to be on a visit to Erie, Pa., and saw a playground that Bob Leathers had built. I wanted one."

Bob Leathers was born outside Bangor, Maine. He was an only child. As a boy, he says, he was sickly and spent many hours alone indoors. He was a dreamer. He drew things, whatever caught his fancy. Outdoors, in the woods, he built what he had drawn, forts, tree houses, things his imagination had designed.

In high school he thought he might like to be a sculptor, or maybe an architect. He decided architects had a more promising future and chose that.

"Now I'm both," he says, surveying the playground at Sturges and LaGrange.

"This place where we're sitting, for example. The kids wanted a place to have birthday parties, picnics. So we put these tables and benches in the plan. But the idea for the overhead trellis came to me on the site. That's like sculpture, creating things in place."

Bob Leathers, at 45, has the enthusiasm of a child and seems to have as much fun building playgrounds as the kids have using them.

Bob Leathers has a red mustache flecked with gray and a permanent smile in a round face. His eyes are those of a child, too, pale blue and as guileless as evening prayers. His step is as though he were always walking on the bouncy bridge. The bridge is a Leathers trademark. This one leads from the maze, past the village, to the castle.

Pamela Seigle, inspired by the playground in Erie, tracked Bob Leathers to his home office in Ithaca, N.Y., and he told her what she had to do.

"What it came down to," she said, "we had to provide all the labor and materials, to his specifications, and raise the money. It cost $55,000, including Bob's fee of $7,000. It would have cost three times that much if we didn't do it ourselves.

"But first Bob came here and interviewed the kids. Design day. We gathered them all together at the library

Good Judgment Can Help Everyone Beat The Heat

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

As summer temperatures soar toward the century mark in Pitt County, people need to practice good judgment when working outdoors or planning outdoor activities, said Dr. Jack Allison, professor and chairman of Emergency Services at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

It is not uncommon for people, especially the elderly and the hyperactive or the "on the move" adults, to experience heat-related diseases during this time of year, he said.

The diseases usually creep up on the elderly during extemely hot conditions, Allison said. For example, a senile, elderly person living in an unairconditioned house with no air movement is "just not as aware of what's going on," he said. Such persons may suffer from heat disease before discovered by relatives or friends.

Those participating in outdoor activities or occupations also are targets for the diseases, Allison said. He suggests planning activities "early in the morning or late in the afternoon" as well as "drop back a little and seek other forms of exercise where it is cool," such as swimming.

Those having to work in the heat should drink plenty of fluids and shade themselves whenever possible, he said.

There are three forms of heat disease — heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke, Allison said.

Heat cramps usually attack the calves of the legs and the abdomen, he said. Those suffering from them should "stop the exercise, cool down, drink some fluids and massage" the areas that are cramping. The cramps should go away in five minutes or less, Allison said, and exercise should be avoided for 24 hours.

Heat exhaustion usually affects overweight or out-of-shape people who push themselves too far too fast, he said. "They overextend themselves," and develop dizziness, headaches and become weak.

They should rest in a cool area with something cold to drink. Excess clothing should be removed, and exercise should be avoided for 48 hours. Those affected should feel better in 10 to 15 minutes, he said.

Heat stroke most often affects the elderly, Allison said. "Their internal thermoregulatory mechanism (or temperature guage) goes on the blink."

During a heat stroke, people are in a coma, he said. "They're just unresponsive." Their skin also is very hot and dry. "The sweat mechanism turned off."

Sometimes identifying hot, dry skin "can be tricky," Allison said, especially when a person had been sweating initially.

"Get them to the shade or cool area," and put cool water and a fan on them, he said. Do not use ice, which decreases the circulation of the blood under the skin. Call an ambulance.

PCMH usually treats about three people for heat stroke each summer, Allison said, but there have been none treated so far this summer. There have been a few cases of heat exhaustion treated this summer.

When exposed to extremely hot conditions, it also is important to avoid certain drugs such as alcohol, aspirin, antihistamines and some psychiatric medicines, he said.

Reading Only Part Can Work

By IKE FLORES
Associated Press Writer

WINDERMERE, Fla. (AP) — Two years ago, Max Morris went through a spell of enforced idleness. Cataracts in one eye made it difficult for him to read his Bible.

He tried different ways to improve his reading ability and settled on emphasizing key words and phrases by making them larger and bolder.

The result was Kwikscan, a printing process designed to let readers absorb the content of written material while reading only 40 percent of the text. A learning specialist says it might keep some slower students from dropping out of school.

Morris, an entrepreneur with a doctorate in divinity, is showcasing his work through the Bible, emulating the example of Johann Gutenberg, the German credited with inventing movable printing type more than five centuries ago. Morris is publishing the King James version of the New Testament in Kwikscan.

Kwikscan enlarges and boldfaces words within the regular text to form separate sentences, synthesizing the message into a few words that can be more quickly and easily digested than the whole work. The text remains intact for those who want to read the complete book.

The process employs narrower columns and uses indicators to direct eye movement to each line containing the key words.

"We don't distort the text in any way. Every word is there," says the bearded Morris, 57, a Southern Baptist who has preached, served as a consultant to television ministers Jerry Falwell and Rex Humbard, and run several businesses.

"But Kwikscan's greatest value," according to Morris, "is in acquiring quick information. You can scan it (the text), get the kernel of it and improve your understanding and retention of it."

The patented system can be applied to any text: novels, the classics, legal reports, trade journals, technical documents.

Jekyll Island's Millionaires' Club Becomes Luxury Hotel

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

BRUNSWICK, Ga. (AP) — Old buildings can beat history books at preserving the past, says an architect who played a major role in transforming Jekyll Island's most famous structure into a luxury hotel.

Larry Evans, one of five partners in the $18 million restoration of Jekyll's century-old millionaires' club, believes many historic structures are being razed because progress "often is looked at as a bright, shiny aluminum building."

The Victorian-style clubhouse, which officially opened three months ago as part of a hotel chain, was completed in 1887 for millionaires who purchased the island for a winter retreat. Among the millionaires were J.P. Morgan, Joseph Pulitzer, William Vanderbilt, William Rockefeller and other powerful industrialists.

During their annual visits, which usually lasted from January to March, the millionaires and their guests were attended by a large contingent of servants. The club members hosted beach picnics, played on their private golf course and socialized in the turretted clubhouse, which has become a major tourist attraction in the island's historic district.

The building originally had 60 rooms, but was enlarged in 1901 and 1917 with the addition of two new wings.

During the year-long restoration, workers tried to preserve as much of the original structure as possible. Some components, such as a five-story staircase, were faithfully rebuilt from old photographs, Evans noted.

"It's a treasure. It's a national landmark," he said. "I think it is special because of its architecture, but mainly it is special because ... the club members were the most powerful men in the world at that point."

Evans, a Calhoun native who moved to Brunswick 11 years ago, is a partner in Circle Development Corp which will make a proposal on refurbishing an old hot in Ormond Beach, Fla., and is negotiating for the rights to convert the old Fulton Cotton Mill, a 13-acre tract in downtown Atlanta, into a complex that would include housing, retail stores and offices.

Most old buildings have to have economic potential because few could be operated solely as museums, said Evans, who became concerned about the fate of the Jekyll Club in 1984 and decided to save it.

He believes the clubhouse might have been lost without tax incentives that were available for the restoration of historic buildings. Some of the incentives have been eliminated in the new tax law, he noted.

Funding for the restoration came from a variety of sources, including a $10 million issue of industrial revenue bonds and a $2 million loan from the city of Brunswick through a federal grant. The rest of the money was provided by investors.

Contractors spent more than $10 million on supplies, and the project created 200 construction jobs. The 136-room hotel has generated 130 permanent and 75 part-time jobs, Evans said.

"If this project did not have economic life, then 20 or 30 years from now, the Jekyll Club's role in history would be in a book somewhere."

Evans believes the Jekyll Club's relaxed atmosphere sets it apart from other hotels. Guests often lounge in white wicker chairs on the hotel's long front porch and watch the sunset across the marshes that separate the state-owned island from the mainland.

"I think they can relax easily," Evans said. "It's very comfortable. It's not a very pretentious place at all. It was never meant to be."

Kwikscan System Is A New Way To Read

Still, the success of the system hinges on public reception of the Kwikscan New Testament. Some 650,000 copies of the 421-page paperback volume were ordered and began moving into bookstores around the nation a few weeks ago at $7.95 each.

"We think it could be very, very big," says Mike Anderson, a marketing executive at Riverside Book and Bible House Inc. of Iowa Falls, Iowa, one of the country's largest Bible wholesalers,

In adapting the Bible to Kwikscan, Morris hired three Bible scholars and trained them in the special computer program devised for the process. They decided which words, phrases, sentences and paragraphs should be emphasized to provide for quick, smooth reading. The computer program containing the entire text was then sent to a printer.

"Depending on the text, we have to get somebody very knowledgeable in the subject," says Morris, who notes there were "discussions and consensus" among the scholars on what Bible phrases to emphasize.

Micro-Books Inc., a company formed by Morris and his wife, Nila Vae, is publishing the Kwikscan books, which will include a series of "how-to" books to be sold in supermarkets.

Their latest project is to set up a division of Micro-Books called Micro-Tech, which would adapt industrial and military manuals and materials to the system.

Then there's the possibility of textbooks.

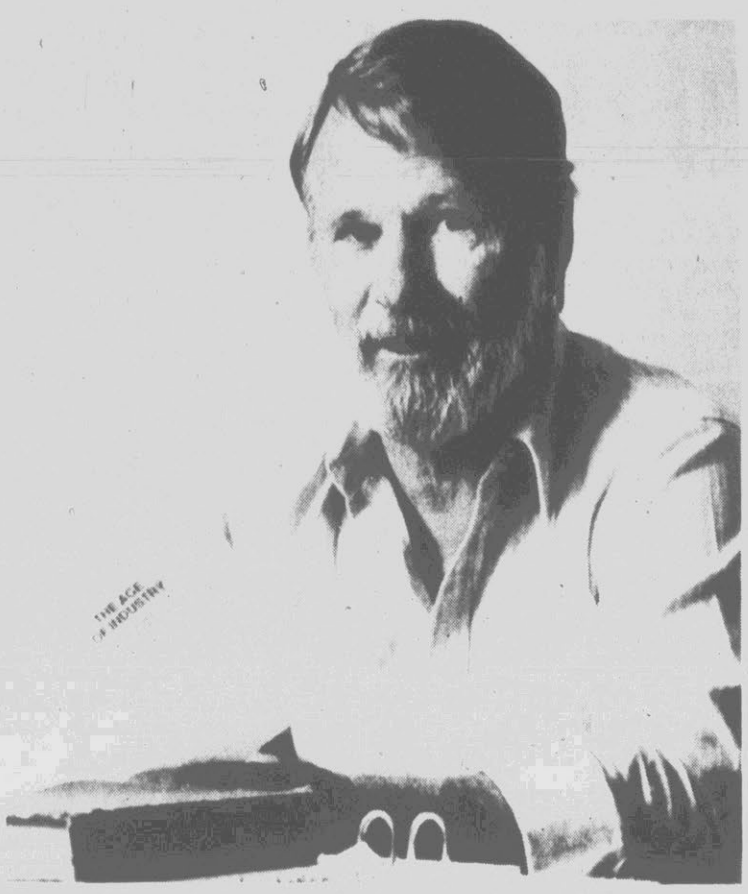

"If students really understand and remember their subjects better, textbook publishers would want to use it," says Margaret Miller, director of a research project on Kwikscan at the University of Central Florida.

She and other reading specialists are trying to determine whether Kwikscan improves retention and comprehension among 300 junior and senior high school students in Florida. A preliminary test on college students indicated that Kwikscan "made quite a difference" in improving reading, she said.

Although results on the younger students won't be published until later this summer, she said they seemed more interested in reading materials and found reading easier.

"We're very excited about it. We're analyzing the tests and are looking for good results," she says. "I think it will be a significant and important program for us."

Students from all learning levels participated in the study, including those with learning disabilities. Ms. Miller believes that if slower learners are helped, Kwikscan might motivate them to stay in school. "Some of them are just waiting around until they're 16 before dropping out," she said.

NEW SYSTEM — Max Morris reads at his desk at his home in Windermere, Fla. He developed Kwikscan, a printing process that allows readers to absorb the context of written material while reading only 40 percent of the text. (AP Laserphoto)

Kids Build Their Playground

and he asked them if they could have anything they wanted in a playground, what would it be? Make a wish list."

"They all want swings and slides," Leathers says. "But they also wanted monsters and space rockets, a castle. The trick is to make something in a way that it can be whatever they want it to be.

"The turret on that castle there, that can also be a space rocket — or a lighthouse for that boat. The boat bounces around, did you notice? The slides are branches coming down from the tree house. Not a real tree house, of course."

Of course. The trunk is made of tires suspended by chains. The slides are its branches, enclosed chutes, like tunnels, coming down from three levels which you can choose depending on how brave you are.

The village is on four levels, lots of cubbies here and there. The dragon is, actually, an obstacle course that would challenge a 6-year-old Marine. The maze would challenge Odysseus.

"We adults like our world orderly and logical," Leathers says. "Kids don't. They want complicated, illogical spaces and they make of them whatever their imagination decides. This playground becomes their own world, their own wonderland."

And all built of thick pine sawed and shaped by neighborhood parents and retired people to Bob Leathers' detailed demands, toted and sanded by their children who made the wish list according to their own demands.

"It takes organization," Pamela Seigle says, "committees for everything, right down to meals for the work force. Bob gave us a thick folder telling us just what to do.

"We held car washes, bake sales, a buy-a-board drive. Really, the whole community was excited about it and got involved."

"The main thing," Leathers says, "is that they did it themselves."

Jay Leno, Man With A Beef, Will Be 'Tonight Show' Host

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Jay Leno is a man with a beef.

He beefs about fast food, television, Mom, skin mags, Rambo, two-speed vacuum cleaners, calcium supplements, Mr. Potato Head, foreign food and tiny imported cars. "Oh, geez, gosh," he whines, and then lines up another target.

National Condom Week! "Boy, there's a parade you don't want to miss, huh?"

With hair bristling and his magnificent jaw jutting, Leno takes on the world like Popeye in the first throes of a spinach rush.

He defends women, castigates corporations and worries about his country, a nation that no longer makes steel or huge cars like his '55 Buick Roadmaster.

"You know, I tend to be more like my Dad than like people my own age," he said, slumping deeply into an armchair and puffing on a pipe.

"I mean, I find it very odd that we buy steel from places like Korea, and I find that when you make jokes about that subject it strikes a chord with people, especially older audiences.

"There's an attitude in America I find very interesting now. Like, you meet somebody and you say, 'I want to buy this kind of car.' And they go, 'Oh, don't buy those cars. They're awful.'

"'How do you know?'

"'Hey, I make 'em! I know they're awful!'

"Isn't that terrible to sell something that you don't believe in?" Leno said. "The nice thing about jokes, they're just jokes, but at least they're my jokes and if I tell them I take a certain pride in them."

Now, after all the sniping at David Letterman and other "arm-chair comedians," Leno will go to work this fall as part-time host of NBC's "Tonight Show."

"Yeah, but it's only on Mondays. I'll be out on the road the rest of the week," said Leno, who claims to feel like a con man running an ever-expanding pyramid scheme, dashing from town to town to keep his flim-flam afloat.

He did it this summer while filming "Collision Course" co-starring Pat Morita. Before coming to Long Island a Sunday show, he had been in Washington Thursday night, back to the set in Detroit, then to Los Angeles on Friday night and Valley Forge, Pa., on Saturday.

And, yes, he was only kidding about disdaining "armchair comedy."

"When you're a comedian, the 'Tonight Show' is really the job I think that everyone has, fantasy-wise, in the back of their mind," he said.

"Like me — I'm starring in a movie, and it's neat and it's fun, but it doesn't seem quite as big as the 'Tonight Show' to me."

Although he now admits he had dreamed of being host, Leno disavows any ambition of succeeding Johnny Carson.

Nor does he claim to be a social critic, though he sounds like one when he talks about Mr. Potato Head being the key to understanding why other countries hate America. He imagines showing a potato to a starving African child who wants to eat it. "No, no, Kimba. You put this little hat on it."

On "Late Night," Letterman cracked up over Leno's squeaky child's voice, and later proposed a fight between Kimba and tiny actor Emmanuel Lewis. So much for serious comedy.

"Yeah, but that's OK. The idea is to entertain," Leno said.

"I mean, there is nothing I hate more than pontificating comedians. If someone can't figure out my viewpoint from watching my act, that's fine. If you can, that's fine, too.

"I'm not out there to teach."

So deep down, does Jay Leno really have a beef?

"I think most comedians, the good ones, tend to have some sort of anger, real or imagined," Leno said. "And in my case I think it's mostly imagined.

"I tend to make fun of things I am a part of," he said. "I mean, I am one of these guys who will stop and watch TV for a few minutes rather than pick up something and read it, which I should be doing. I do wind up eating at these fast-food joints.

"You know, I have seen the enemy and he is me."

Leno says he had a happy childhood and doesn't regard that as a handicap to being funny.

"I find comics tend to be one extreme or the other: You either have comics that are just drug-dependent, alcoholic, off-the-wall crazy, or very straight," he said.

"Most comedians have a very conservative streak that the comedy comes from. Even Lenny Bruce," Leno said. "Because you have to know what's right to know what's wrong."

Leaves Network

NEW YORK (AP) — Linda Ellerbee, whose "Our World" newsmagazine show was canceled by ABC last spring, is leaving the network to work on a novel, according to a published report.

New York Daily News columnist Liz Smith said Ellerbee had done her last "TGIF" segment, a weekly tongue-in-cheek montage of offbeat news items, last Friday on "Good Morning America." Smith said Ellerbee was unhappy that the network was considering viewer complaints about the reference to God in the title, an acronym for "Thank God it's Friday."

Film Industry Anticipates Record With Summer Fare

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — With new hits arriving at the nation's movie theaters each week, the euphoric film industry is looking for a record summer at the box office and an all-time high for the year.

Last week's figures confirmed the optimism, with a predicted gross of $120 million, a three-year high for a summer week. "Beverly Hills Cop II" set the early pace, reaching almost $120 million in 40 days, and it has been joined by "The Untouchables" ($45 million), "The Witches of Eastwick" ($36 million) and "Predator" ($35 million).

Last week's major additions, "Dragnet" and "Spaceballs," opened impressively. The $10,000 per screen average of "Full Metal Jacket" in its limited debut suggested that it could have the drawing power of the other Vietnam drama, the Academy Award-winning "Platoon," which has grossed $134 million to date.

Art Murphy, Daily Variety's normally cautious movie industry analyst, believes that record highs are likely for both the summer and the year itself.

"Business is well over $100 million a week now," he said. "If that rate continues, only $90-100 million will be needed to top the 1984 record of $4.038 billion. The year to date is already $190 million ahead of last year, which was $3.78 billion."

Murphy cited favorable elements, such as the fact that the summer season is one week longer than normal this year because of an early Memorial Day and a late Labor Day. Many Eastern schoolchildren are just now adding to the moviegoing public, having spent an extra week in school to make up for winter blizzards.

"'Cop II,' 'Predator,' 'Untouchables' and 'Witches' are all rated R," Murphy said, "which means that they don't attract the family audience.

"On the other hand, the early-summer hits that made 1984 so big — 'Indiana Jones,' 'Star Trek III,' 'Ghostbusters' and 'Gremlins' were rated PG-13. Many of the promising films that are coming up this summer will be rated PG or G, which means they can bring the families in."

Ashley Boone, distribution-marketing president of Lorimar, takes a more conservative approach: "Summer used to be the end of June, but then the (Steven) Spielberg and (George) Lucas pictures came along in May, and now everyone is moving earlier and earlier. I think too many of the companies are worrying about what they're opening against instead of getting behind their own product."

He added another disturbing factor: "A lot of pictures are being launched with sneak previews on Friday and Saturday. Everyone's doing it, and they're usurping two hours of prime theater time. As a result, the grosses are not what they should be."

Boone pointed out that the 1984 record was set when first-run theaters in big cities charged $4 per ticket while the going rate now runs as high as $6. The national average rose from $3.34 in 1984 to $3.71 last year, but that includes small-town and third-run houses that add little to film grosses.

The increase in screens can help assure box-office records. The number rose from 20,200 in 1984 to an expected 24,500 this year, with more being added daily.

Last week, Cineplex Odeon celebrated what is described as one of "the greatest opening nights in movie theater history" — the Universal City Cinemas, 18 wide-screen theaters with 6,000 seats under one roof. The art deco palace is billed as the largest movie complex in the world.

Worldnet Explains U.S. Policy

By RUTH SINAI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — An American television network which offers its broadcasts for free, doesn't air commercials and is happy when its programs are pirated: that's Worldnet, a pet project of the Reagan administration.

It is an attempt by a television-oriented administration to use TV to explain U.S. foreign policy and the American way of life to audiences around the world.

The product is slick and sophisticated and a far cry from what one would expect to see on a government-run information system. It is designed to resemble the fast-paced breakfast television shows of ABC, CBS and NBC.

Propaganda, insists Worldnet director Alvin Snyder, it is not.

"We have a charter that says we have to be objective," he says. "There's no pressure on us to be anything else."

The expanding network, run by the United States Information Agency and funded and overseen by Congress, reaches an estimated four million Europeans and millions more in northern Africa and Latin America.

Launched in late 1983 as a one-time satellite news conference to explain why the United States invaded the Caribbean island of Grenada, Worldnet now broadcasts four hours daily to Europe, the Middle East and North Africa and an hour to Latin America. The programs are also available to 25,000 hotel rooms in Europe and Israel through closed circuit systems.

By 1990, USIA plans 12 hours of daily programming, reaching the entire world.

The line-up includes two hours of breakfast television, containing news segments, interviews, weather reports, business news, sports and even health and beauty tips. The morning show, "America Today," is beamed from the United States at mid-afternoon, to reach Europeans at their breakfast tables.

Another hour-long show includes economic and political debates, travel features, wildlife films and music programs. The fourth hour is Dialogue, a live televised news conference featuring a U.S. official or expert answering questions from European or Latin American journalists sitting in various U.S. embassies.

The subjects range from U.S. foreign policy and trade policies to modern dance, toxic waste and the ozone layer of the atmosphere.

"If we had only politics on all the time, we'd bore everyone stiff and run out of people to put on," says Snyder.

Cable TV operators abroad seem more than happy to fill up their schedules with the American programs. "They're hungry for material, and this is free. We even encourage operators and individuals to pirate our tapes," said a producer, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

Worldnet leases space on a European commerical satellite, and stations and individuals are free to pick it up. Some cable operators dub the programs in Italian and German.

In Rome, the U.S. embassy receives the broadcasts by satellite and distributes them for same-day airing on two private Italian networks.

Data collected by the two stations in the past year shows the program has 100,000 viewers in Rome.

The audience is composed mostly of English speakers, tourists and people learning English.

Worldnet does not hide its affiliation, displaying the network's logo on the backdrop of all the programs. But not everyone knows what Worldnet is, and while some cable operators explain that it is a U.S. government broadcast, others don't.

Worldnet gets many of its teleconference ideas from USIA officials overseas who know what interests journalists and audiences, says Snyder. "You wouldn't believe the things they ask for — superconductivity experts, computerized education specialists, AIDS researchers."

The news style is slightly different than one would find on network television here. Some issues need explaining for foreign audiences, such as the anomaly of a Congress controlled by Democrats under a Republican president.

Anchor Dorris McMillon points to two other differences. "I've been asked to say Mr. Reagan instead of just Reagan. That's OK because I think respect should be shown for the president. And we don't say the Iran-Contra scandal. We call it the Iran-Contra affair."

The Quebec Bridge on the St. Lawrence River near Quebec City collapsed in 1907 and carried 75 workmen to their deaths. The bridge was started in 1900 and was then the world's largest cantilever bridge. After the accident, construction work was continued and both cantilever sections had been completed when the center span fell into the river, taking the lives of another 13 workmen.

Identified Flying Object

Experts say the Frisbee is the most popular form of recreation in the United States. It is estimated that more Frisbees are sold each year than baseballs, basketballs, and footballs combined. While Frisbees are simply a way to relax for many people, others have made throwing them a serious sport. In 1982, a California man threw, ran and caught a disc a distance of 272.6 feet. The world's record for the fastest Frisbee throw is 74 miles per hour.

DO YOU KNOW — What toy company gave the flying discs the name "Frisbee"?

TUESDAY'S ANSWER — Salmon return to their birthplace to spawn.

Horoscope — From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR THURSDAY July 16

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Use resourcefulness and ingenuity to overcome minor problems in business and personal affairs. This will inspire trust in your associates and help you progress in many areas.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Concentrate on business matters today — home worries can wait for now. The evening is good for social affairs.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You may have difficulty communicating with people other than relatives today, so stay at home as much as possible.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Postpone dealing with money matters and assit a friend. Visiting would be nice, but be sure to drive carefully.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): If someone makes a strange comment, don't take offense, as it may not have been meant for you directly.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Continuing to procrastinate would be a big mistake. Take care of those problems which have needed attention.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Steer clear of people who usually impose on you. Get together with friends you haven't seen for a long time.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Today is a bad time for asking favors of an important person, as he or she may be too busy to help you right now.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Contact those who have been successful and get their advice. You know little about this area, so don't go solo.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Avoid arguing about bills before you double check the facts. Be alert to a great opportuity nearby.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): A problem between you and a partner is best left to blow over. Relax at home tonight with some quiet entertainment.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Speak to a public figure you know about how to improve your situation. Listen carefully to advice given you.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Forget about that expensive recreation and concentrate on problems which require immediate attention.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, should be taught to overcome nervousness with reason and logic. Be sure to give your child plenty of praise for a job well done, but don't dwell on shortcomings. Having plenty of good books around would be a good way to help pique intellectual curiosity.

Opening lead: Queen of ◇

To the average player, the prospect of a finesse evokes the same response as waving a red rag in front of a bull—it is too much to resist. On occasion, though, you have choices and will have to determine which finesse to take.

South obviously did not believe that a five-card major was a bar to opening one no trump. Thereafter, an invitational Stayman sequence led to a normal four-heart game.

After the queen of diamonds opening lead, declarer found a quick way to go down. He won the ace of diamonds and ran the nine of hearts. West took his king and persevered with diamonds, and declarer now had to lose a trick in each side suit for down one.

If the trump finesse were going to succeed, it would do so later as well as at trick two. Declarer should have parlayed his chances by first trying to find the king of spades in front of the queen.

Correct technique is to win the first trick in the closed hand and immediately lead a low spade toward the queen. As the cards lie, West can do no better than rise with the king and continue with a diamond. Declarer wins in dummy, cashes the queen of spades, comes back to hand with the ace of clubs and discards a diamond on the ace of spades. When he later ruffs a diamond on the board, he can try the heart finesse for a possible overtrick.

Declarer is no worse off if the queen of spades loses to the king in the East hand. Declarer can win the diamond return in dummy and try the trump finesse for his contract.

FRUITED CHICKEN — Prepare food well for yourself and serve it prettily, new cookbook author Edie Low suggests. This chicken breast dish is served with sliced kiwi fruit, roasted onions and red bell pepper, and raw green onions. (Photo From Love Yourself Cookbook)

Food Editor Says Cook, Eat Well For Yourself

BY CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Edie Low has written a recipe book with a message.

The Charlotte Observer food editor tells the world in her "Love Yourself Cookbook": You yourself are important enough to cook well for. Never mind that your family's scattered to the four corners of the earth or that you don't have a family.

Eat well alone, she advises. Take the time and spend the energy to feed yourself well, regardless of whether you have others for whom to prepare food. Surveys show, the author says, that more than 57 percent of all Americans eat most of their meals alone or with just one other person. So you're not alone in being alone or nearly alone, she says.

Ms. Low shares her personal philosophy of being good to yourself in her preface, "I don't call any of these gourmet recipes (though you may.) To me, gourmet is an overused word. If you care about yourself, a peanut butter sandwich and a glass of milk can be a gourmet meal. It's all in how you serve it and your attitude."

She suggests putting your sandwich on a pretty plate, pouring your milk into a stemmed goblet, turning off the television and listening to some soft music from the radio or stereo while you eat.

But at the same time, she gives sumptuous recipes and shows how to prepare them carefully, yet quickly, so it's really worth the trouble to cook well just for yourself.

The recipe book grew out of "Cooking For Two," a column that Ms. Low developed for her newspaper. The column now runs weekly in more than 160 newspapers in the Knight-Ridder news chain. The column came about after her family left home and she became faced with cooking almost entirely for herself, except when the kids came to dinner.

For the person living alone or in a pair, reading and putting into action the ideas in this book will eliminate leftovers in the refrigerator and costly overbuying, she promises. Saving money at the meat and/or produce counter is another way of showing love for yourself, she says.

Ms. Low shows love for her readers by assuming they know little about cooking. She writes for the novice in a clear and concise manner. She even provides a glossary of cooking terms at the end, as well as a list of spices and how each can best be used.

Her recipes are conveniently categorized by food type. Most recipes include food items and condiments easily found in the home cupboard. They might taste exotic, but her dishes, for the most part, do not use hard-to-find ingredients. Some are down-to-earth North Carolina fare in small proportions.

Here is the recipe for the entree pictured:

Summer Signals Picnic Time

Sun-splashed summer days give way to thoughts of carefree time spent outdoors. What better way to take advantage of all the season has to offer than going on a picnic together.

Use your imagination in planning where to go. From a secluded spot for just the two of you to busy downtown park, perfect for people watching and absorbing the city's excitement, pick a picnic place that suits your style and mood.

Part of the fun is planning the menu too. Get out of the rut of ho-hum sandwiches or fastfood fare with these inventive recipes from the Kraft Kitchens. The offer elegant, yet easy alternatives that will feed your appetite and delight all your senses. You can showcase the meal with some creative tablescraping, using a colorful tablecloth, napkins and contemporary designed unbreakable dishes.

Assembling many of the things you need can be done ahead of time. Pack in a wicker basket or canvas tote these take-along picnic essentials: corkscrew, bottle opener, sharp knife, leakproof containers, lightweight cutting board, serving platter, paper towels and garbage bags. Don't forget suntan lotion, sunglasses an your camera ... to help you remember all the fun.

What would a summer picnic be without chicken? This variation of cold baked chicken is easy on the cook, but has a special flavor that comes from basting it with a mixture of melted margarine and herbs.

To thaw frozen poultry, place the bird, still in its original wrapping, or a pan or tray in the refrigerator and let it remain there fo 24 hours. Thawing chicken quarters takes less time. Do not refreeze any type of poultry or meat after thawing.

When working with raw poultry or meat on a wooden cutting board, always wash the board as well as any wooden utensils thoroughly with soap and water after use to protect against harmful bacteria.

HERBED SEASONED CHICKEN

1/2 of 2 1/2 to 3-pound broiler-fryer, quartered, skinned
1/4 cup margarine, melted
1 1/2 teaspoons chopped parsley
1/4 teaspoon dried basil leaves, crushed
1/4 teaspoon dried oregano leaves, crushed
1/8 teaspoon garlic salt

Place chicken in 12x8-inch baking dish. Bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Drain. Pour combined margarine and seasonings over chicken; continue baking 30 minutes, basting chicken with margarine mixture every 10 minutes. Cool. Chill. Makes 2 servings.

No longer known as noodles, pasta continues to be one of the most popular '80s foods in America. It fits the emphasis on wholesome eating and is recommended by the USDA dietary guidelines. Available in colorful spinach, tomato and other varieties, pasta is filling but not laden with lots of calories. There are approximately 190 calories per one cup of cooked pasta.

Red pepper, celery slices, peanuts and raisins give this pasta recipe from Kraft Kitchens an unusual twist. Its signature ingredients are 100 percent Natural Kraft shredded Swiss cheese and curry powder mixed with Kraft oil and vinegar dressing, which is poured over the salad before it's chilled. For optimum penetration of flavors, add the dressing mixture to the pasta while the pasta is still warm.

When preparing pasta, be careful not to overcook it. The best way to determine doneness is by tasting. "Al dente" is reached when no taste of raw flour remains and the pasta still offers slight resistance to bite.

CURRIED PASTA SALAD

1/2 cup shredded Swiss cheese
1/2 cup tri-color pasta, cooked and drained
1/2 cup celery slices
1/3 cup chopped red pepper
1/4 cup peanuts
1/4 cup raisins
1/4 cup oil and vinegar dressing

Q. Can you tell me more about bagged meats and poultry I see in the meat counters in the stores in Greenville? Mrs. M.K., Royal Oak, Mich.

A. My mom was visiting recently and wondered about bagged meats. She said stores in the metropolitan Detroit area did not have bagged fresh meats. Actually, some stores all over the country have offered their customers cut-your-own-meat-in-a bag for some time. Basically, these pieces of meat are boneless sections of subprimal meat trimmed of excess fat.

The meat is vacuum-packed in a plastic bag at the processing plant under strict sanitation controls. Generally, the price is lower per pound since you are buying a bulk amount. You have saved the butcher the expense of trimming, traying, wrapping and pricing that meat in smaller portions.

I have been buying our boneless beef ribeyes and boneless pork loins that way for some years. I take them home, use a sharp knife and trim and slice the steaks or chops to the thickness we like. I cut the roast to the size we can use without leftovers. Then I wrap the meat in freezer wrap, label it and freeze it. I use the dishwasher-proof cutting board and sanitize my knife afterwards.

The beef in the bag is slightly darker in color than the meat in the trays. But once you open the vacuum-packaged bag, you will let in oxygen and the bloom or red color returns. Some local stores sell packaged meats, including poultry, as "ready-to-eat," "ready-to-microwave," or "ready-to-cook" in small or single portions. Some of these meats are vacuum-packaged to maintain freshness and flavors in you refrigerator for up to seven days.

Others are not just vacuum-packaged but just wrapped in film wrappers. All of this type of bagged meat is more expensive because convenience has been added (slicing, cooking, marinating and/or packaging). If the meat is in vacuum packaging or in film wrapping, they still are perishable. You must refrigerate them promptly. Either use or freeze the meat before the expiration date on the package.

I have not had the opportunity to try these bagged meats yet. I would love to hear from readers on how they like these products.

There are more changes coming our way in the near future, especially in microwaveable foods. Several food companies are developing shelf-stable microwaveable prepared entrees. The entrees are in a new type of special packaging. The food has been vacuum-packaged and the precooked (retorted).

The final product is shelf-stable, if not opened, without refrigeration or freezing for 18 months. They can be prepared in the microwave oven in 2 minutes. It's the packaging and heat treatment that keep these foods from spoiling on the shelf.

Hormel Co. has called their product "Top Shelf," and it includes entrees like sweet and sour chicken, Italian-style lasagna, tender beef roast and lemon fillet of cod.

I often like to roam through grocery stores in other cities I am visiting to see what new products have come to that area or what products are being test marketed. It's amazing how much you can learn about the local off habits and attitudes of people by seeing the foods in the market.

Try a stroll through the grocery store on your next trip. If you happen to be in Denver or Indianapolis this summer, look for "Top Shelf" entrees on the pasta aisle. You can put them in your suitcase for the trip home. Try the entrees and tell us how you like them.

Be Creative With Favorite Dishes

By TONI TIPTON
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

When the weather gets warmer and ideas for simple but nutritious dinners get scarce, follow the suggestion of one popular food manufacturer: "Do what chefs, cooking contest entrants and other creative cooks do: Pick one of your favorite foods and create a new way to serve it."

Because health is of concern, a good idea is to start with a favorite vegetable — particularly one that adapts well to a variety of cooking methods — and work it into an adaptation of a well-liked recipe that the family will enjoy.

Potatoes, corn and broccoli are featured in the recipes that follow. The vitamin and mineral counts may vary appreciably depending on whether you use fresh or packaged varieties.

Bake Pan Biscuits For Summer Meals

By NANCY BYAL
Better Homes and Gardens
Food Editor

This recipe makes 7 crusty-topped biscuits, just the right number for supper at my house. The biscuits bake together where they touch and separate with soft, tender shreds when you pull them apart.

HERBED PAN BISCUITS

1/4 cup finely chopped onion
1 teaspoon Italian seasoning
1 tablespoon margarine or butter
1 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 cup shortening
1 beaten egg
1/3 cup milk
1 tablespoon margarine or butter, melted
2 tablespoons grated Romano or Parmesan cheese

In a small skillet cook onion and Italian seasoning in 1 tablespoon margarine until onion is tender but not brown. In a mixing bowl stir together flour, baking powder and salt. Cut in shortening until mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Combine onion mixture, egg and milk; add to flour mixture all at once. Stir until dough clings together. On a lightly floured surface knead 10 to 12 strokes. Roll or pat dough to 1/2-inch thickness. Cut with a floured 2 1/2-inch biscuit cutter. Place biscuits close together in a greased 8-inch round baking pan. Brush the 1 tablespoon melted margarine over tops. Sprinkle with cheese. Bake in 450-degree oven for 12 to 15 minutes. Serve warm. Makes 7 biscuits.

3 tablespoons spicy mustard
2 to 3 green onions, inlcuding green stems, sliced
1/2 cup dry bread crumbs

Preheat oven to 425 degrees. Have 4 peach or apricot halves ready.

Flatten each chicken breast slightly by pounding with a meat mallet or the side of a heavy plate. Place the pieces in a single layer in a baking dish. Cover loosely with foil. Bake for 20 to 25 minutes or until the chicken is done.

Remove foil and place 2 fruit halves on each peice of chicken. Combine mustard and onions and spread on top of the chicken. Sprinkle with bread crumbs. Broil until lightly browned, about 2 minutes. Watch closely, as the crumbs will burn quickly. Serve at once. Makes two servings.

Here's an easy quick recipe that will make you think you cooked beef stroganoff from scratch just for yourself:

MOCK STROGANOFF

1 teaspoon butter
4 to 6 mushrooms, sliced
2 green onions, including green tops, chopped
1 can (10 1/2 ounces) chunky beef and potato soup dash of nutmeg
2 tablesppons sour cream
1 cup hot cooked rice
Paprika

Melt butter in a small saucepan. Saute mushrooms and onions in butter until the onions are translucent, but not browned — about 4 minutes. Gently blend in soup and nutmeg.

Simmer over low heat, stirring occasionally, until it barely begins to bubble. Lower heat and cook 3 minutes. Remove from heat and stir in sour cream. Sppon over hoot rice on heated plates. Sprinkle with paprika and serve at once. Makes two servings.

She even has a section on leftovers. Here's her recipe for a stew made with leftover turkey or chicken from the holidays:

EASY BRUNSWICK STEW

1 cup cubed cooked turkey — or chicken
1 small oinion, chopped
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
2 tablespoons butter
Half a 10-ounce package frozen mixed vegetables
Half a 1-pound can of canned spaghetti sauce
1/4 teaspoon basil
1/4 cup dry white wine or chicken broth
Hot cooked rice, optional.

Saute the chicken, onion, and green pepper in butter until the onion is tender, but not browned — about four minutes. Add vegetables. Add spaghetti sauce. Stir in basil and wine. Cover and simmer for 15 minutes or until hot through. Serve over rice, if you like. Makes two servings.

Picnics Can Be Carefree Summer Outings

1/4 teaspoon curry powder

Combine pasta, cheese, celery, peppers, peanuts and raisins; mix lightly. Pour combined dressing and curry over pasta mixture; mix lightly. Cover; chill several hours or overnight. Makes about 2 cups.

Variation: substitute 1/2 cup julienne-cut peeled jicama for celery slices.

No picnic is complete without dessert. These mouth-watering Jumbo Cream Puffs, with basic ingredients like margarine, flour, salt, water and eggs used for the dough, will please even the most discriminating dessert connoisseur. A combination of whipped topping, semi-sweet chocolate pieces and slivered almonds form the tasty filling, and strawberry topping adds the crowning glory of color and flavor.

When preparing the dough, add flour and salt all at once. Then cook and stir vigorously just until the mixture forms a smooth compact ball. If the dough is overcooked, it won't puff.

Another tip is to make sure you start with eggs that are room temperature. After adding each egg, beat mixture vigorously with a spoon or electric mixer for 1 to 2 minutes or until it is smooth and has a slight sheen.

Shells can be filled with other variations, such as ice cream, pudding, whipped cream or fresh fruit. When toting crean puffs to your picnic, keep them in a plastic air-tight container in the cooler.

JUMBO CREAM PUFFS

3/4 cup water
1/3 cup margarine
3/4 cup flour
1/8 teaspoon salt
3 eggs
1/4 cup mini semi-sweet chocolate pieces
2 tablespoons slived almonds, toasted
1 1/2 cups thawed frozen whipped topping
Strawberry topping

Bring water and margarine to boil. Add flour and salt; stir vigorously over low heat until mixture forms a ball. Remove from heat. Add eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition. Drop 1/2 cup batter, 4 inches apart, onto ungreased cookie sheet. Bake at 400 degrees, 35 to 40 minutes or until golden brown. Remove from cookie sheet immediately; cool.

Fold chocolate pieces and almonds into whipped topping. Cut tops from two cream puffs; remove soft dough from inside of puff. Fill with whipped topping mixture; replace tops. Serve with strawberry topping.

Make ahead: Wrap remaining cream puffs securely in foil; freeze. Makes 4 servings.

Fruity Desserts

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — As Americans continue to watch their weight and waistline, fruit is gaining in popularity as a dessert.

In fact, fresh fruit is served for dessert 54.4 percent of the time, according to a Better Homes and Gardens consumer panel.

A good way to serve fresh fruit is to combine new or unusual fruits with old favorites. Better Homes suggests teaming kiwis, papayas and mangoes with strawberries and grapes. The fruit platter will look colorful while providing a variety of tastes.

Serve Scrumptious Fruit Filling In Edible Shells

By ROSE DOSTI
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

How about a basket of fruit? Or to be more precise, fruit in a basket that you can also eat?

We have come up with half a dozen or so edible baskets in which to serve fruit. These baskets not only provide complementary flavor to the fruit but also enhance their beauty.

Best of all, the baskets can be prepared ahead and refrigerated or frozen to be brought out whenever needed during the busy summer season, when friends and relatives tend to drop in most often. The baskets can be filled as we suggest in the recipes given, or with concoctions from your own imagination. There are no rules. Creams, puddings, syrups, sauces and fruits of all kinds may be used.

One of the most elegant containers for fruit is the chocolate scallop shell, which we formed directly on a scallop shell, chosen for its especially suitable design. The melted chocolate is simply spread on the rounded side of the shell, cooled until hardened, then pried off when ready to use. You can use any container shape you want, including paper cups. The same spreading principle applies. The only trick is to apply several coats of chocolate in order to achieve a durable shell or container. Although durable and sufficiently lubricated due to the fat content in chocolate, shells should be carefully handled. Keeping them frozen will diminish the chance of their cracking, breaking or melting quickly.

HAYSTACK SHELLS FILLED WITH FRUIT ICE

1/4 (1/4-pound) package shredded filo pastry (kadaif), or 6 sheets filo dough, finely shredded
1/4 cup toasted or plain flaked coconut
1/4 cup butter, melted
Fruit Ice
Raspberry Sauce
Mint leaves

If using kadaif dough, fluff to loosen dough. Add coconut and fluff to mix into dough. Drizzle with melted butter and toss between hands to incorporate butter into dough. Divide dough into 6 equal portions. Pat each portion into large, greased muffin tin or deep tart pan. Bake at 350 degrees 15 minutes or until pale golden in color and crusty. Set aside.

If using filo dough, stack sheets by 2, brushing each sheet with melted butter and sprinkling lightly with coconut. Cut sheets into halves or 5- to 6-inch squares. Press each square into well-buttered shallow muffin tins. With shears, cut extended portion of dough into fine vertical strips, stopping at rim. Position cuttings at random to resemble hay. Bake at 350 degrees 5 to 7 minutes or until golden. Cool, then remove cups carefully. Store in cool, dry place until ready to use, up to 1 week.

Fill each case with 1 scoop Fruit Ice. Lace with Raspberry Sauce. Garnish with mint leaves. Makes 6 servings.

Note: Shredded filo dough (kadaif) can be found at most Middle Eastern grocery stores and some supermarkets.

Fruit Ice

3/4 cup water
3/4 cup sugar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
2 cups chopped fruit of choice

Combine water, sugar and lemon juice in saucepan. Heat over medium heat until sugar dissolves. Cool.

Place fruit in blender or food processor container. Blend or puree until mixture is smooth. Combine with cooled syrup. Freeze in ice cream maker according to manufacturer's directions.

Raspberry Sauce

1 (10-ounce) package frozen raspberries, thawed
2 tablespoons raspberry liqueur
1/4 cup whipping cream, whipped

Puree raspberries until smooth. Strain to remove seeds. Mix with raspberry liqueur and fold or swirl in whipped cream.

DEEP-FRIED TORTILLAS FILLED WITH MANGO CREAM

6 small flour tortillas
Oil for deep-frying
Powdered sugar, optional
2 large mangoes, peeled and sliced or diced
Tequila-Mango Cream
Mint leaves

Place tortillas in small wire basket and top with another basket (or ladle) of smaller size to keep in place. Heat oil until very hot. Dip tortilla in basket into oil and fry a few seconds until crisp but not browned. Remove and drain on paper towel. Continue to fry until all tortillas are fried. Cool. Sprinkle with powdered sugar.

Place each fried tortilla on individual plate. When ready to serve, fill with mango pieces and lace with Tequila-Mango Cream. Serve remaining cream on side. Garnish with mint leaves. Makes 6 servings.

Variation: In place of mangoes, use berries or other fresh fruit in season.

Tequila-Mango Cream

1 1/2 ounces tequila
1 cup vanilla ice cream
1 cup chopped mangoes or papayas

Place tequila, ice cream and chopped mangoes in blender container. Blend until smooth.

BREAD PUDDING NESTS

1/2 loaf French or Italian bread
2 cups milk
1/2 cup unsalted butter, softened
1 cup sugar
1 (12-ounce) can evaporated milk
1 teaspoon ground nutmeg
1 tablespoon vanilla
1/2 cup raisins, optional
Sliced ripe peaches, berries or other fresh fruit
Brandy Sauce

Tear bread into pieces and place in large bowl. Stir in milk.

Beat butter with sugar until light and fluffy. Beat in evaporated milk, nutmeg and vanilla. Stir in bread mixture and raisins. Spoon into 12 to 14 greased small ring molds.

Place molds in baking pan and add water to come halfway up molds, being careful not to submerge molds. Bake at 350 degrees about 30 minutes or until firm. Let cool slightly, then unmold onto serving dishes. Fill with fruit and top with Brandy Sauce. Makes 6 to 7 servings.

Note: If small ring molds are not available, bake in small tartlet or brioche pans and scoop out center to fill with fruit.

Brandy Sauce

3 egg yolks
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 1/2 cups milk
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1/4 cup water
1 1/2 ounces brandy

Lightly beat egg yolks in saucepan. Add sugar, vanilla and milk and blend well. Cook over low heat until mixture comes to boil.

Blend cornstarch in water and stir into hot mixture. Continue to cook until thickened. Remove from heat and stir in brandy. Cool.

FROZEN WHIPPED CREAM SHELLS WITH FRUIT

1 cup whipping cream, whipped, or 1 3/4 cups non-dairy whipped topping, thawed
1 cup vanilla yogurt
1/2 cup flaked coconut, plain or toasted
Mascarpone Filling
Raspberries and blackberries or other fresh fruit

Combine whipped cream and yogurt, blending well. Stir in coconut. Spoon into dessert glasses or spoon in mounds on wax paper-covered baking sheets or trays.

Make depression in center of each with spoon to form shell. Or pipe through pastry bag with large star tip to form 6 shells. Sprinkle with additional coconut, if desired. Freeze until firm, about 1 1/2 hours. Fill each shell with about 1 tablespoon Mascarpone Filling. Mound with berries. Makes 6 servings.

Mascarpone Filling

1/2 cup mascarpone, creme fraiche or ricotta cheese
2 tablespoons sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla

Blend together mascarpone, sugar and vanilla until smooth.

Barbecued Chicken Is A Pleaser

Quick cooking during summer months is effortless with the assistance of a barbecue grill. Grilled foods continue to capture a large American audience. Statistics show the average barbecuer will use his grill nearly four times a month.

For a quick and easy meal for 6 to 8 people, prepare Savory Grilled Chicken and Squash Fans With Herb Butter. A simple marinade for chicken can be made by combining bottled Italian salad dressing with lemon juice, honey, Worcestershire sauce and paprika. While the chicken is marinating, slice abundant summer squash into fans. Top with herb butter and arrange on a sheet of heavy duty aluminum foil and wrap. Each foil packet is a colorful arrangement of zucchini and yellow squash fans that will cook quickly on the grill.

When preparing your barbecue grill, always line the grill with heavy duty alumnium foil. The foil lining protects the interior of your grill and makes cleanup simple. After starting the fire, wait approximately 20 to 30 minutes, or until the charcoal turns ash gray before starting to cook.

For additional barbecue recipes, from appetizers to dessert, order the free brochure "Savor the Summer" from the Reynolds Wrap Kitchens. It is full of a variety of new barbecue ideas including grilled nachos, Szechwan chicken kabobs, spicy beef fajitas with grill-warmed tortillas, a brunch frittata and side dish vegetables. Also included are step-by-step directions for making a variety of foil accessories for easy grill-top cooking. For your free brochure, write to The Reynolds Wrap Kitchens, "Savor the Summer," P.O. Box C-32003, Dept. FE-70, Richmond, Va., 23261-2003.

ALWAYS A CROWD PLEASER — Speedy summer entertaining is easy with Savory Grilled Chicken and Squash Fans With Herb Butter.

SAVORY GRILLED CHICKEN

3 to 4 pounds chicken parts
1 bottle (16 ounces) Italian salad dressing
1/3 cup lemon juice
1/3 cup honey
1/4 cup Worcestershire sauce
2 teaspoons paprika

Place chicken in 13x9x2-inch baking dish. Combine remaining ingredients; mix well. Pour over chicken. Cover dish with plastic wrap and refrigerate 1 hour or overnight, turning chicken once. Line fire bowl of a grill with aluminum foil. Puncture foil at grill vent openings. Remove chicken from marinade; reserve marinade.

Grill chicken over medium-hot coals 40 to 50 minutes until tender, turning and basting occasionally with reserved marinade. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

SQUASH FANS WITH HERB BUTTER

1/2 cup butter or margarine, softened
1 teaspoon thyme leaves
1 teaspoon basil leaves
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
4 medium yellow squash
4 medium zucchini

Line fire bowl of a covered grill with aluminum foil. Puncture foil at grill vent openings. In a bowl, cream together butter, thyme, basil, salt and pepper; set aside.

To make squash fans, slice each squash lengthwise, making the cuts 1/4-inch apart, leaving the slices attached to the stem end. Tear off four 18x14-inch sheets aluminum foil. Fan out squash slices; place one yellow squash fan and one zucchini fan on lower half of each foil sheet. Top each squash with 1 tablespoon herb butter.

Fold upper half of foil over the food meeting the bottom edges. Seal edges together, making a tight 1/2-inch fold. Fold again. Allow space for heat circulation and expansion. Repeat to seal each side.

Cook in covered grill over medium-hot coals 15 minutes or until vegetables are tender. To serve, cut an X in top of packet; fold foil back. Makes 8 servings.

Better Burgers Can Be Built

By TOM SIETSEMA
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

The common hamburger has friends in high places — and they're adamant about how the sandwich should be prepared and served.

Julia Child prefers her hamburgers "fairly thick, nice and juicy," and calls them "one of our greatest contributions to civilization."

Marion Cunningham, aka Fannie Farmer, is a fan who thinks "a hamburger should fit the mouth."

One way the late James Beard cheered distraught friends was to make a bacon cheeseburger and serve it "with a fine, old, first-growth Bordeaux — like a '64 Lafitte," recalls a longtime associate.

Foremost, say cooking experts, the model hamburger is built on good, fresh meat. The exact cut seems to depend on one's taste and budget.

Ideally, says Cunningham, a hamburger should be made from "the trimmings of prime-beef roast" — which even she admits is probably not very practical for the majority of burger enthusiasts.

Among the many cuts available, ground sirloin is apt to provide the meatiest, most full-flavored sandwich, while those with more fat — regular or chuck, for example — are likely to be juicier, depending, of course, upon their degree of doneness.

"Hamburger is not diet food," says Child, who likes hamburger with a 25-to 30-percent fat content. Fat, she adds, lends both flavor and tenderness.

Nevertheless, if you want very lean meat ground for hamburger, opt for round, flank, chuck, neck or shank. A pound of ground beef is enough for four generous patties.

Some like 'em thick, and some like 'em thin. But the cooking pros all tend to agree about how the hamburger should be handled: Pat — but do not squeeze — the meat, cautioned Beard. "I've learned that patting too firmly makes hamburgers rubbery and tougher," notes Cunningham, who recommends lightly molding the meat into patties. (A tip: if you dip your fingers in cold water before handling the meat, they won't stick.)

At this point, one might consider adding a sprinkle of grated onion, a dash of tomato juice, cream or some butter to keep the patty moist. Also, a beaten egg added to each pound of meat helps the meat adhere better to itself.

And should you find it necessary to stretch hamburger, try blending ½ cup of soft bread crumbs (soaked momentarily in about 1-3 cup milk) to each pound of meat, or add ½ cup chopped bean sprouts, grated raw carrot, or ¼ cup of ground nuts, wheat germ or pre-moistened, cracked bulgur.

When grilling hamburgers, remember to grease the grill with some vegetable oil before laying on the patties — this prevents them from sticking. Unlike with other cooking methods, it's impossible to retrieve juices lost from hamburgers grilled over a fire.

So to avoid dryness, sear the meat first: Place the grill close to the coals and lay on the burgers. Flip and sear the other side. Then raise the grill about 3 inches from the flame and cook until desired doneness. (The length of time will vary according to the meat and the fire's intensity.)

But "cook no faster than necessary," says Cunningham, who also warns against compacting the patties with a spatula, which pushes out the juices. And remember that a well-done hamburger is rarely juicy.

The most important part of a hamburger — aside from an icy beer, some might argue — is the bun. A good bun is not too hard and not too soft. And it shouldn't fall apart with the first few bites.

As alternatives to the flimsy, mass-produced hamburger buns, Child suggests using either French or sourdough bread. Alternately, try english-muffin halves, grilled dark bread or even bagels. Warming or lightly toasting buns makes for a better sandwich, too.

Garnishes and accompaniments are used for two reasons: to enhance a good burger and disguise an inferior one. While the meat should be the star of any well-made hamburger — "if it's really good meat, don't put anything on it," offers Child — there is an infinite number of ways to dress one up.

Cunningham, who insists on a moist hamburger, adds sweet relish, shaved lettuce (never whole leaves) and finely chopped onion held in place with plenty of mayonnaise.

Child might add grated onion, thyme and pureed garlic to meat that is unexceptional. And in response to that all-important question, both of them think ketchup is acceptable.

Like garnishes, additions to the meat can include almost anything. For a twist on the usual, you might consider incorporating seasonings such as nutmeg or allspice into the meat, or topping finished burgers with shredded cheese and walnut pieces, sour cream with horseradish, or guacamole.

The stellar hamburgers at Union Street Public House in Alexandria, Va., served with slices of grilled rye bread and melted cheddar, are accented with caraway and beer (to 1 pound of meat, add about 3 ounces ale, 1 teaspoon caraway seeds and 2 teaspoons worcestershire sauce).

Still, the accompaniments should never detract from the raison d'etre: "I strongly object to restaurants that serve 33 different hamburgers," says Cunningham of all the clutter.

Lastly, any good hamburger is improved with the addition of the following, Fannie Farmer's homemade buns:

FANNIE FARMER'S HAMBURGER BUNS

(Makes about 16 3 1/2-inch buns)

"Rich buns with a fine texture," writes Marion Cunningham, "they pass all the hamburger bun tests — they hold the meat drippings, catsup, mayonnaise, mustard and relish without collapsing or becoming soggy. The same dough can also be shaped into hot dog buns."

1 1/2 cups warm water
2/3 cup instant nonfat dry milk
1/3 cup lard
1 1/2 teaspoons salt
3 tablespoons sugar
2 packages dry yeast
1 egg
About 5 cups all-purpose flour

Combine water, dry milk, lard, salt, and sugar in a mixing bowl, and stir to blend. Sprinkle the yeast over, stir, then let stand to dissolve for a couple of minutes. Add the egg and 2 cups flour, and beat vigorously until thoroughly blended and smooth. Add enough of the remaining flour to make a manageable dough, then turn out onto a lightly floured surface and knead for a few minutes. Let rest for 10 minutes.

Add enough more flour so the dough is not sticky, and resume kneading until smooth and elastic. Place dough in a large greased bowl, cover, and let rise until double in bulk.

Grease several baking sheets. Punch the dough down and divide in half, then cut each half into 8 equal pieces. Roll each piece between your palms into a smooth ball and place about 3 inches apart on the baking sheets. Pressing down with the palm of your hand, flatten each ball into a circle about 3 inches in diameter. Cover lightly and let rise about 45 minutes, or until double in bulk. Bake in a 425-degree oven, 20 to 25 minutes, or until lightly browned. Remove from the baking sheets and cool on racks.

—From "The Fannie Farmer Baking Book" by Marion Cunningham (Knopf, 1984)

GAIL'S ONION JAM

¼ cup butter
8 cups thinly sliced Spanish onions
6 shallots, sliced
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon black pepper
¼ cup sugar

Melt butter and oil in saucepan. Saute onions and shallots until they begin to brown, about 10 minutes. Reduce heat and stir in salt and pepper. Cook, partly covered, stirring frequently, until onions are very soft and caramel-colored, about 30 minutes. Do not burn. Stir in sugar and cook until sugar is completely dissolved. Serve warm or at room temperature. Makes about 3 cups.
