Poindexter Testifies He Obeyed Law But Kept Congress In Dark

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Former National Security Adviser John Poindexter said today he worked "all along" to keep information from Congress about the secret Contra supply program, to the point of giving Lt. Col. Oliver North a written "well done" after he misled lawmakers.

Testifying for the second straight day at the nationally televised hearings, Poindexter said he believed efforts by the National Security Council staff to assist the Contras during a congressional ban were legal because the agency was not covered by the legislation.

He insisted he made sure that officials did "everything that we could to comply with the letter and the spirit of the Boland Amendment," as the legislation is known.

"The only thing I admit to is withholding information from the Congress," Poindexter said in a morning session in which his attorney, Richard Beckler, frequently complained about questions from Senate chief counsel Arthur Liman.

Liman asked Poindexter several times whether he recalled ever telling President Reagan that the NSC staff was assisting the Contras. "I do not recall a specific conversation in that regard," the admiral replied. "He knew that the Contras were being supported. We didn't get into the details of who was doing what."

Poindexter sat quietly at the witness table while Beckler stated his case. At one point, the 50-year-old admiral lit his pipe and listened to a lengthy exchange between his lawyer and members of the committee.

Poindexter answered questions under a limited grant of immunity that bars his words from being used against him in court, except for any charge of perjury.

Poindexter also testified that he participated in the preparation of false chronologies for White House use last fall as the Iran-Contra affair broke into public view. He said he ordered North to omit any mention of the diversion of Iranian arms sales proceeds to the rebels.

He also said he knew the documents were inaccurate as to the 1985 sale of HAWK missiles to Iran, but said no one ordered him to falsify the records. "The problem was I didn't know what the right answer was," said the admiral, who wasn't promoted to National Security Adviser until December of 1985.

"I was very fuzzy on the events of July, August, September and October" of the same year, he said.

Liman's questioning related to congressional attempts to learn the details of the secret supply operation in 1985, while Poindexter was deputy national security adviser, and during the summer of last year, while he was the No. 1 man.

"I intended to withhold information from Chairman Hamilton" last year, Poindexter said, referring to Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., who was serving at the time as chairman of the House Intelligence Committee and now is chairman of the House Iran-Contra committee.

He recalled that he authorized North to meet with the Indiana Democrat last summer to respond to questions. North was the "switching point" for coordinating the secret program of military aid, the admiral said. He said he made his "well done" evaluation after North's meeting because "I was pleased that the session was a success and that Chairman Hamilton seemed satisfied."

"Our objective here was to withhold information. There's no

Six Americans Die In Salvadoran Helicopter Crash

SAN SALVADOR (AP) — Six American military personnel were killed today when their helicopter crashed in a rainstorm just outside San Salvador, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said.

A seventh American survived the crash, said the spokesman, Jacob Gillespie. Crew, medics and at least one officer were on the helicopter, he said, but he declined to further identify the victims. The Salvadoran armed forces press office said that four officers and two soldiers were killed.

The helicopter deaths bring to 12 the number of American military personnel killed in El Salvador since the war between the U.S.-backed government and leftist guerrillas began in 1979. The U.S. Embassy said no guerrilla involvement was suspected in the crash.

The Huey UH-1H helicopter left the capital for San Miguel, 86 miles east of San Salvador, around 10:30 p.m. Wednesday (11:30 EDT) to pick up an American soldier who had been wounded in a gun accident.

Gillespie said the helicopter started to turn back because of rainy weather and crashed just after midnight about 10 miles west of the capital near Ilopango Lake. The area is not accessible by land.

The soldier wounded in the gun accident was hospitalized in stable but serious condition today, Gillespie said. The U.S. Embassy said the soldier was an advisor, but Gillespie declined to identify him further.

The adviser was accidentally wounded in the neck

Wednesday at the Salvadoran military training center in eastern La Union province and later taken to a military hospital in San Miguel, according to Gillespie.

There are about 150 U.S. military personnel, including 55 advisers, in El Salvador to train the Salvadoran army in its fight against leftist rebels. The rebels are grouped under the umbrella Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front.

On May 25, 1983, the rebels shot and killed naval Lt. Commander Albert Schaufelberger as he sat in his car at the Central American University.

Guerrillas opened fire June 19, 1985, on an outdoor cafe in San Salvador and killed four U.S. Marines. They were identified as Sgt. Bobby Dickson, Cpl. Gregory Webber, Sgt. Thomas Handwork and Cpl. Patrick Kwiatkowski.

On March 31, Sgt. Gregory Fronius was killed when guerrillas attacked the northern base at El Paraíso. He was the first U.S. military advisor killed in battle in El Salvador.

The United States has maintained military advisers in El Salvador since 1981 as part of its military aid program to the government.

The limit of 55 was imposed by the United States, and the advisers are under orders to avoid combat situations. They can carry weapons to be used only for self defense.

An estimated 63,000 people have been killed in the civil war, most of them Salvadoran civilians, according to human rights groups.

Korean Cabinet Again Under Fire

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Opposition leaders today demanded that President Chun Doo-hwan dismiss his three-day-old Cabinet and allow opposition members to join the government to ensure fair elections.

"The present Cabinet should resign as soon as possible because it is not expected to manage the upcoming elections in a fair manner," said Kim Young-sam and Kim Dae-jung, the two top opposition leaders, in a statement.

In another development, 36 Anglican church priests ended a six-day hunger strike after receiving a police apology for entering cathedral grounds in Seoul last week.

Chun named the new prime minister and seven ministers as part of an effort to promote evenhandedness during presidential elections later this year. Several ministers belonging to Chun's Democratic Justice Party resigned from the Cabinet.

But the two Kims said today that the Cabinet should include leaders from the governing and opposition parties as well as independent and dissident groups.

"The country, we think, needs a truly neutral government to effectively push democratization and national conciliation," the two Kims said.

South Korea's government has been in a state of transition since Chun agreed July 1 to wide-ranging democratic reforms and direct presidential elections before his term expires in February. Chun agreed to the reforms after 18 straight days of huge anti-government demonstrations.

Chun had planned to maintain the electoral college system for the upcoming elections, which would virtually have assured a victory by the governing party. The two Kims today urged Chun to give up membership in his Democratic Justice Party to ensure he would be impartial through the election period. Chun resigned last week as president of the party, but remains a member.

Chun presided over the first meeting of the new Cabinet on Wednesday. He ordered the ministers to speed up democratic reforms and become "a fair election management government." He also called for law and order during the transition.

Vietnam Demand For Aid Could Derail MIA Effort

By KEITH B. RICHBURG
L.A. Times-Washington Post

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam — America has left a powerful legacy here. Some of it is realistic, some exaggerated, but all of it is being preserved to fuel two seemingly contradictory Vietnamese preoccupations.

One is to keep fresh the memory and human cost of the war with the United States. The other is a strong desire, 12 years after that war's end, to normalize relations with the United States and receive American aid.

Where the two themes meet is Vietnam's belief that the United States should pay for what Hanoi's leaders call its past "war crimes" through large-scale aid.

A decade ago, Vietnam's demand for U.S. aid helped scuttle an effort by the Carter administration to restore relations. The Vietnamese have not said much about it since then. But now, the issue is being subtly raised again by new leaders attempting to reform their country's economy.

The link with the past is preserved in the display here at the "American War Crimes Museum" of an impressive collection of U.S. military hardware with labels reflecting Hanoi's view of the decade-long war.

Beneath a 175-mm. howitzer gun, a sign tells visitors: "The U.S. imperialists mostly used this howitzer in their numerous criminal acts in the Iron Triangle area." An M-113 flame thrower is described as "used in burning villages of the South Vietnamese countryside."

Inside the museum are other photographic memorials to what the Vietnamese refer to as "atrocities of the U.S. imperialists," including photographs of the massacre of villagers at My Lai.

To an American, the often-macabre recital of "atrocities by U.S. imperialists" may seem trying or highly one-sided in its historical accuracy. Any suggestion of killings of civilians by the Communist side are routinely dismissed as "propagan-

Longtime ECU Secretary To Retire

By WILLIAM A. SHIRES
ECU News Bureau

Because of World War II's gasoline rationing, 18-year-old Dahlia Lautares took a bus from her home near Raleigh in 1942 to travel 85 miles to East Carolina Teachers College because she wanted "to go away to college."

En route she saw the flat pinelands of the Coastal Plain, its sandy fields and tobacco barns, and remarked to her cousin, "I would not live here for anything in the world."

Forty-five years later, Dahlia Lautares will retire this month as a longtime staff employee of East Carolina University, the 15,000-student institution which developed from the small prewar teachers' college founded in Greenville in 1907.

Upon her retirement, she is recognized as the "dean" of the university's departmental secretaries. For 35 years she has been an ECU employee, with service as a faculty secretary, Social Studies secretary and secretary to the History Department since 1967.

"Forty-five years later, I am still here, in a place that I have come to love and call my home," she said. "I am at East Carolina University and it is part of me."

Her memories of days as a student and later years as an employee are vivid.

"When we moved into Jarvis Dormitory, the enrollment was small — about 1,000 — and the delightful part was that we knew or recognized everyone," she recalled. Social life included an hour of dancing each evening in Wright Auditorium.

"A student was assigned to the juke box and since we had only 40 male students, it was necessary for the girls to dance with each other and have girl-break." She recalled that, as the war progressed, the campus "was flooded with servicemen on weekends."

"They came from Camp Lejeune, Cherry Point, Elizabeth City and the Marine Corps contingent stationed at the Greenville airport. We met and became friends of entire battalions prior to their leaving for overseas."

"On Saturday nights, we would have dances with bands and beautiful decorations. The girls dressed formally and the Marines wore their dress blues."

"The young men would leave for overseas and the war zones. Often when they returned, they made their way back to East Carolina."

"I recall one girl waited anxiously for a letter from her Marine friend. It finally arrived and was almost totally spliced. The censor had written on the side of the letter: 'Your boyfriend still loves you, but he talks too damn much.'"

When the war ended and returning veterans began enrolling, she was serving as a parlor hostess at the residence halls. There she met the young man who became her husband, John Lautares of Greenville. They were married in 1947 and had four children.

Mrs. Lautares worked as a secretary for the university's business manager and as the first secretary for the Student Stores. Then she was appointed faculty secretary.

"It was a busy office," she said. "Faculty from all over campus brought work to this office. Eventually this office was dissolved and I was asked to join the social studies department as their first secretary. In 1967, the social studies department was separated into several different departments and I became the first secretary of the history department. I have worked in this department under four chairmen.

"The years have been full and busy," Mrs. Lautares said. "I will miss East Carolina University, my history faculty and the many friends I leave behind."

"I frequently hear people say that they can hardly wait until they retire," she said. "These words and thoughts are foreign to me."

Typhoon Lashes South Korean Coast

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Typhoon Thelma killed at least 33 people when it raged along the southern coast of South Korea early today, creating floods and mudslides and smashing boats with wind-whipped seas.

At least 77 people were missing, and authorities said the death toll could rise.

Some news reports said up to 150 people were dead or missing. Yonhap, the Korean news agency, reported that 54 people had been killed and 99 others were missing.

About 110,000 rescue workers, including military reservists, were called out to search for victims and make repairs. Rescue boats searched the churning seas for survivors of vessels sunk by the storm.

The typhoon, packing winds of 80 mph, sent sheets of heavy rain over South Korea, causing rivers to burst their banks and flood villages. Tons of dirt and rocks cascaded onto towns, trapping victims in their homes. Fierce winds hurled objects at passersby, killing at least two in the southern city of Pusan.

"The damage is more than what we thought. We are trying to find out what happened," said an official at the Central Counter Disaster Headquarters in Seoul.

The disaster headquarters provided the figures of 33 dead and 77 missing.

Weather officials downgraded the typhoon to a tropical depression as it lost speed after moving into the Sea of Japan later today.

Emergency relief officials said at least 6,600 people had been left homeless and 993 homes and other buildings had been destroyed in South Kyongsang Province alone. People were being sheltered in local schools and government buildings.

Yonhap said officials in South Kyongsang Province initially estimated damage at $13 million.

The wind and rain slammed into the coast when the typhoon was still 120 miles away, weather officials said. About 9.2 inches of rain fell during the night, they said. The center of the typhoon, the most destructive part, swept by the peninsula without touching it.

The storm sank a number of vessels, mainly fishing boats. Emergency officials said about 360 moored or beached boats had been destroyed or damaged.

Two men were confirmed dead and up to 23 others were feared drowned after a large fishing trawler went down off Sinan, local officials said.

Authorities in Pusan said up to 30 fisherman and sailors were missing after a small freighter and four fishing vessels were engulfed by high waves.

Rescue workers were digging through the remains of smashed houses in villages and towns along the southern coast, but rescue efforts were hampered by landslides and floodwaters blocking roads, officials said.

Seven members of one family were killed when their house was demolished by a mudslide in the southern city of Kwangju, the officials said. Five people died when a landslide swept away four homes in Hamyang. Four members of another family were killed when their home was buried by a mudslide in Milyang, near Pusan.

"We don't have full details. But we think the number of casualties and property damage may increase as communications are restored in remote areas," said a rescue official reached by telephone in Kwangju, 165 miles south of Seoul.

Korean air force helicopters plucked people from the roofs of flooded buildings. An air force spokesman said 18 people trapped by flooding were rescued near Kumnung.

AIDS Rate Holds Constant In Military

BOSTON (AP) — Young blacks have the highest rate of AIDS virus infection among military recruits, and the rate of infection has remained steady over 18 months of testing applicants, Army doctors report.

An analysis of the first six months of AIDS screening among military recruits was published in today's New England Journal of Medicine. The data show that 1.5 of every 1,000 recruits was infected with the AIDS virus, and that infection rate has stayed the same during the first year and a half of the screening program.

All civilians who apply for military service are checked for infection with the AIDS virus, known as HIV. Those who carry the virus are denied admission to the military.

"HIV infections now occur commonly among young adults in their teens and early 20s," the Army doctors wrote in their analysis. Infection rates "are highest in densely populated urban centers, where blacks are disproportionately represented, but HIV transmission can occur throughout the United States."

The report was based on blood samples taken from 306,061 civilian applicants from October 1985 through March 1986. It was written by Dr. Donald S. Burke of the Walter Reed

Army Institute of Research in Washington.

Army doctors reported more recent figures at an AIDS meeting last month in Washington. During the first 18 months of the program, with 963,077 young men and women were tested, the infection rate remained at 1.5 per 1,000 people, the doctors said. They also reported that 1.6 of every 1,000 people already in the military are infected.

In today's report, the doctors said the recruit data may not be an accurate cross-section of the infection rate among the nation's young people. Those who are infected because of homosexuality or drug abuse may be less likely to apply for the armed services, and this could understate the true infection rate. On the other hand, poor urban residents who are at higher risk of infection may be more likely to apply.

Among other findings in the published report:

—Blacks had the highest infection rate, nearly four per 1,000. The rate among whites was less than one per 1,000.

—The chance of infection was higher among older recruits.

Meeting Challenges

Pitt Community College President Charles Russell sees a promising future for his institution, as well as for Pitt County.

Russell said in a recent interview that only lack of space could keep his college from growing as the area's economic development continues.

He said with the completion of the new U.S. 264 "I would expect to see an increase in economic development in Pitt County."

He continued, "The kind of business that expands or comes into the area will impact us. We must be ready to respond to the skills needed."

PCC recently dedicated the new Everett building which houses the Learning Resources Center. While the building was badly needed it did not free up that much space for additional classrooms. However, there will be a new building for vocational shop and classrooms under construction next fall. Three more classroom buildings are planned on the campus. The land is there for projected expansion, although additional land may be needed for future expansions perhaps on into the 21st century.

Russell said PCC is exploring new areas of course offerings which might be of service to the community. Allied health might be such an area considering the changes going on in the community. Pre-engineering is another possibility.

"We will continue to expand our efforts to meet the needs of employed people through night classes and in-plant training," he said. "There are a lot of educational needs for employed persons."

The president saw the need to further emphasize the relationship of PCC with local business and industry.

A community college has at least one great advantage in serving the needs of its community. That advantage is flexibility. As needs for trained employees arises the community college can react and fill that need. That has been the case when new industries came in and needed a training program for new employees.

Pitt Community College will fill many educational roles in the years ahead. It now has the staff and the flexibility to serve the community. It should have adequate facilities to meet the challenges it will face.

Oahu Or Manila?

Napoleon had Elba and Marcos has Oahu.

In terms of the good life in exile, the former Philippines strongman has the better of it. What makes the contrast just a little bit more remarkable is that Ferdinand Marcos says he would rather be in the Philippines.

His reasons are unclear. He certainly does not need more money. (Imelda might.) He would never feel fully secure in Manila...others can be just as greedy and unscrupulous. More medical specialists and more sophisticated medical facilities are at hand in Hawaii for the ailing and aging Marcos than he is likely to find in all of the Philippines.

All the advantages of being "in exile" lie with the deposed leader and his wife with none of the risks, discomforts and uncertainties associated with his old life.

Some people just don't know when they're well off.

There are members of Congress who are more than a little upset by the picture. They have convincing evidence Ferdinand Marcos plotted a return to the Philippines with an invading army and they feel American hospitality is being abused.

Rep. Chester Atkins (Mass.) is among those who are fed up. "We've treated these people with kid gloves", he complains. "Why don't we put him in detention?"

Two businessmen from Virginia visited the exile earlier this year and posed as middle-men in an arms deal. They taped the conversation.

How much of it was wishful thinking or the willful plot to regain power we may never know, but Marcos was talking big money and big deals. He raised the prospect of purchasing a 10,000-man army at $500 a head and a long list of weaponry with a line of credit backed by a hidden cache of gold which he said was worth $14 billion.

Looting one's own country has its compensations.

Plots by Marcos have been periodically reported...and thwarted.

Maybe it is time to try reducing his chances for creating more problems. Then again, is he just pulling somebody's leg?

Another Revolution On The Burner

'Panama is on the edge of civil war, facing its worst political crisis in decades. The situation is deteriorating rapidly, and could soon echo events in South Korea and previous uprisings.'

WASHINGTON — Just before he died, I had the opportunity to visit with actor John Wayne at his home in Newport Beach, Calif. It was a captivating four hours, as Wayne was still reeling from a recent visit by two old friends, Ronald and Nancy Reagan.

Wayne had invited his old pal to his home in 1977 to talk to him about the pending Senate debate over the Panama Canal treaty. Reagan opposed the measure, but Wayne was lobbying vigorously for its passage on behalf of President Carter. (Two of Wayne's three wives had been Panamanian, which is why he favored Panamanian sovereignty.)

Unfortunately, the dinner with the Reagans had been a disaster, according to Wayne. "Ron told me that he didn't care one way or the other about the Panama Canal treaty but he knew his advisers wouldn't let him switch his position because he planned to run for president," continued Wayne. What infuriated Wayne was the combination of indifference and intransigence that Reagan showed on the issue.

"I remember Nancy crying and asking 'why politics had to interfere with our friendship?'"

Ronald Reagan's lack of interest in the Panama Canal treaty should surprise no one. Like most policy-makers, he's always adopted a simplistic outlook of the region. By his view, if the U.S. needed a peaceful southern flank, it had to support anyone who would guarantee such stability.

Steadiness is hardly what's occurring south of our border, especially in Panama, where another Ferdinand Marcos-type character is doing America's dirty work. This time it's Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, the strongman who has long been considered the true head of the government in Panama. Noriega is a stocky, 51-year-old street fighter, capable of fits of terrifying anger. He's an avid practitioner of karate and a collector of miniature crystal frogs. And now he's trying to crush a popular, middle-class-based uprising in the streets of Panama.

The current turmoil revolves around charges against the notorious Noriega, made by the second-in-command of the Panamanian Defense Forces (PDF), Col. Roberto Diaz Herrera, who early last month was forced to retire. Diaz Herrera has accused Noriega of electoral fraud in ousting then president Nicolas Ardito Barletta in 1985 and organizing the murder of political rival Hugo Spadafora that same year. He also charges Noriega was involved in the 1981 death of the legendary Panamanian president, Gen. Omar Torrijos Herrera. (Noriega allegedly had a bomb placed on Torrijos' aircraft, which crashed.) And, Noriega has also been accused of overseeing a major drug operation.

According to intelligence reports, the CIA had proposed assassinating Noriega as early as 1972 for forwarding sensitive U.S. information to Cuba, but the option was rejected when Noriega, who was then in charge of Panama's secret police, continued to supply the U.S. with better information than he was giving to the Cubans. He's also recently been helpful to the U.S.-backed contras in Nicaragua.

As a result of the public accusations against Noriega, Panama is on the edge of civil war, facing its worst political crisis in decades. The situation is deteriorating rapidly, and could soon echo events in South Korea and previous uprisings in Haiti and the Philippines.

The current scene in Panama, as the newspaper La Prensa noted last week, is one in which Noriega's military, whose members have amassed scandalous fortunes, is being forced to adopt Nazi-like tactics to control the disenfranchised middle class. "Panamanians understand that it is necessary to redesign society to overcome the loss of values and credibility into which we have fallen," added former Col. Diaz Herrera, Noriega's accuser.

In response to the accusations and the violence in the streets, Noriega and his puppet president, Eria Arturo Delvalle, have blamed the United States by insinuating that Uncle Sam no longer wants to relinquish the Canal on Dec. 31, 1999, or even permit a Panamanian to become chairman of the Panama Canal Commission in 1989. Framing the current crisis along sovereign lines, Noriega has garnered the support of the Sandinistas, as well as the Organization of American States (OAS).

But the situation now appears to be irreversible: Either Noriega will have to step down and flee into a lavish retirement or the country will submit to endless bloodshed. If the latter occurs, the United States may be forced to intervene militarily out of fear for the security of the Canal. (The United States Southern Command has a modest force consisting of the 9,000-member 193d Infantry Brigade and a squadron of A-7 attack jets. The 3d Battalion, 7th Special Forces Group of 400 soldiers is also based in Panama.)

While the State Department continues to call for the restoration of democratic rights and an investigation of Diaz Herrera's charges against Noriega, it must accept some blame for the current debacle. Had the United States truly respected and sought to strengthen constitutional civilian rule in Panama, rather than sacrificing the democratic process for Noriega's assistance with the contras, the U.S. would not be held responsible by all parties.

At present, the Reagan administration and Ambassador Arthur Davis find themselves caught in a quagmire in Panama. It's now character time south of the border, which means Ronald Reagan must force Noriega out of power, as he did Marcos, before a full-scale civil war erupts. The administration retains a huge arsenal of economic weapons, which it can deploy tomorrow to force Noriega's inevitable resignation. It's time our government used them.

The Healing Light Of Disclosure

WASHINGTON — Of the many remarkable aspects of Oliver North's performance before the country and Iran-contra committees, here surely is the greatest: North, the quintessential covert operator who labored so long and hard to keep things secret from Congress and hidden from the people, found his greatest weapon in public disclosure.

It was that most public arena, the Congress, that provided the vehicle for the Marine lieutenant colonel to take his case to the entire country, through television, and improve his public standing dramatically.

In North, the president found his most articulate and eloquent advocate — and again with no little irony, for the president and high administration officials sought for years to keep North's activities secret. Then, when exposed, the public was given lies instead of truth in an attempt to cover up what had, in fact, occurred.

Given North's effectiveness, one wonders whether he and the president might have fared better had they been willing to trust the Congress and the public from the beginning.

The colonel, not the administration, made the best case for the controversial issues that lie at the heart of the affair: the cause of the contras; the need for secrecy in covert operations; the motivations that compel some to skirt the law for what they passionately profess to be a greater good; the reality that makes people like North claim the need to lie to save lives; the elusive but real concept of the "national interest."

For four days North's testimony, and the way he delivered it, produced a sympathetic public response. He seemed to have carried the field in a triumph forged by force of personality, employment of effective rhetoric and tactics — the Nuremberg defense, following higher orders — and by presenting a picture of one person battling alone against superior numbers.

For a time, it appeared he had carried the field.

Then, in a most extraordinary way, on his fifth day before the nation, members of the congressional committees began employing North's tactics. Whereas North had appealed over them to the viewing public, this time they directly spoke over his head to the country beyond.

The result was an outpouring of expressions of democratic values. This was no "cave-of-the-winds" kind of political rhetoric common in the hot air of Congress — as was the case Tuesday in the charade over viewing the "Ollie slide show." This was serious exposition of greater public purposes and of the proper workings of the constitutional system, expressed memorably and movingly.

Warren B. Rudman, a Republican senator from conservative New Hampshire and a backer of Contra aid, evoked the constitutional phrase, "We the people." He reminded the colonel and the country what these hearings and the issues that prompted them are about when he said: "There is no way you can carry out a consistent policy if we the people disagree with it, because this Congress represents the people." He expressed perhaps the greatest of democratic principles — the right to differ and disagree — saying, "The American people have the right to be wrong."

His colleague, Sen. George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, also made that point forcefully when he said that in America, "you can criticize the government without looking over your shoulder."

Mitchell turned one of North's most effective arguments — that North's views represented the real patriotism — against him when he said:

"Now, you've talked a lot about patriotism and the love of our country.

Most nations derive from a single tribe, a single race. They practice a single religion. Common racial, ethnic, religious heritages are the glue of nationhood for many."

"The United States is different. We have all races, all religions. We have a limited common heritage. The glue of nationhood for us is the American ideal of individual liberty and equal justice. The rule of law is critical in our society. It's the great equalizer, because in America everybody is equal before the law.

"We must never allow the end to justify the means, where the law is concerned, however important and noble an objective. And surely, democracy abroad is important, and is noble. It cannot be achieved at the expense of the rule of law in our country."

Whatever else lies ahead, the Iran-contra hearings have accomplished their central purpose. They have provided what cynics said could not happen: a public forum, held in the most visible arena, in which a genuine debate about basic democratic principles and values has taken place.

Now we'll see what kind of a country we really are.

Strength For Today

Several stories have come down to us from the distant past about the dire results of looking backward.

In a Greek myth, Orpheus descended to the lower regions and secured from Pluto consent to take Eurydice up from her captivity to be his bride. Pluto imposed the condition, however, that Orpheus should not look back. On the way the temptation to do so overcame Orpheus, and when he did look back the beloved one for whom he had sacrificed so much had vanished.

Some people constantly look back on past achievements as compensation for present failure. Others can never forget their sorrows. Still others never forget slights and injuries from a distant past.

St. Paul said, "Forgetting these things which are behind ... I press toward the goal ... in Christ Jesus."

Legislature Enacts Tax-Backed School Bill

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — After months of haggling, the Legislature has enacted a program to raise business taxes by more than $1.1 billion to finance public school construction while abolishing the unpopular inventory tax.

"This is a wonderful, major forward step that provides substantial new money (and) calls on the counties to be certain to live up to their commitments," Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said Wednesday after the bill cleared its final legislative hurdle.

The House enacted the bill on a voice vote by accepting a Senate amendment designed to guarantee that no county will lose money because of the inventory tax repeal. Jordan and House Speaker Liston Ramsey were to sign the bill into law today.

The package, which will increase North Carolina's corporate income tax from 6 percent to 7 percent, is designed to raise up to $3.2 billion to build and renovate public school facilities.

It is a markedly different approach than that endorsed by Republican Gov. Jim Martin, who unsuccessfully urged the Legislature to authorize a $1.5 billion bond issue to create a pool from which counties could borrow for school capital projects.

He has charged that the bill, crafted by Jordan, House Speaker

Liston Ramsey and other Democratic leaders, will build few schools and raises taxes unnecessarily.

"In comparison with the proposal offered by the governor, it's night and day," Jordan said. "The governor's proposal offered no new money, no new authority, no new opportunity for those counties that had been unable to pass bond issues."

The Democratic plan generates school construction revenue by:

- Increasing the corporate income tax, effective during the current tax year. This will raise $95 million in fiscal 1987-88, $102.6 million in 1988-89 and $1.3 billion between 1987 and 1997.
- Eliminating a 3 percent sales tax discount that merchants have been allowed for collecting the taxes for state and local governments. The provision will raise $35.3 million in 1987-88, $45.8 million in 1988-89 and $607.2 over the next decade.

- Requiring that employers remit payroll taxes monthly instead of quarterly for every $500 withheld instead of the current $3,000 threshold, creating a one-time $55 million wind-fall in fiscal 1987-88.
- Requiring counties to earmark 60 percent of the revenue from a half-cent local-option sales tax authorized in 1986 for school construction, raising $15.4 million in 1988-89 and $459.3 million in a decade. Counties are required to spend a portion of another half-cent tax increase authorized in 1983 on schools as well.

The bill creates two trust funds for school construction. One is a "critical needs fund" that will spend $95.9 million in 1987-88 and $10 million per year in future years in poor counties that have dire problems.

Ramsey and Jordan will appoint five members each to a citizens' committee that will study the needs and parcel out the money.

The second fund will provide grants to counties on a matching basis; counties will be required to put up $1 for every $3 of state money.

Seeking to enlist the business community's support for the plan and to blunt the political fallout from the billion-dollar business tax increase, lawmakers included inventory tax repeal in the bill.

The property tax on retailer, wholesaler and manufacturer inventories is a longstanding sore spot with business.

Under the bill, repeal will take place in fiscal year 1988-89. The state will reimburse counties for the revenue they stand to lose under a population-based formula that will benefit small counties. They will get more state money than they would have raised by levying inventory taxes, while urban counties will get less.

Sixteen counties would actually lose money under the formula. But the Senate amendment, approved Wednesday by the House, calls for the state to cover those losses, using an unexpected revenue surplus that the bill will generate.

Strong Winds Hit Areas In Brunswick, Columbus

By The Associated Press

No twisters touched ground when a tornado warning was issued for parts of North Carolina, but residents reported two light planes destroyed in Brunswick County and uprooted trees in Columbus County.

"Thank the Lord my house is still standing," Aileen Caines, 69, said Wednesday after the storm passed.

Strong winds broke off and uprooted several towering pecan trees around Mrs. Caines' home located southwest of Delco, and one large tree crushed a corn silo behind her house.

"I'm just so thankful that it didn't take my house," she said.

A cold front moving across southeastern North Carolina Wednesday caused the storm activity when it met the stagnant hot air that has dominated the area's weather for days, said Dave Stevenson of the weather service.

Outside the weather service's offices at the New Hanover County Airport, 1.19 inches of rain fell between 12:05 and 5:33 p.m. Wednesday.

In Delco, tobacco plants were twisted and rows of corn were blown over in several fields in the area.

Bernice Malpass of Delco estimated that he might lose 10 percent of his 20 acres of corn because of the wind damage. "I believe the sun will straighten some of it," Malpass said.

The storms destroyed two small airplanes at the airport in Ocean Isle Beach about 4:10 p.m. The single engine planes, which were tied down, were overturned by what appeared to have been a small funnel cloud, said Bill Ozment, chief of the Ocean Isle Beach Police Department. No one was injured, he said.

"We had two airplanes that overturned at the airport, and they're damaged pretty much," said Peggy Clemmons, a secretary at the police department. "Lightning struck our fire department and knocked out radios out, but there's no damage to the building."

She said three-quarter-inch hail fell in the area Wednesday afternoon as a severe storm swept through the area.

Near Delco, golf ball-size hail and funnel clouds were spotted around noon, the National Weather Service said. The twisters did not touch down and there were no reports of damage or injury.

A tornado warning was in effect from noon until 1 p.m. for parts of Brunswick, Pender and New Hanover counties.

The weather service also issued a severe thunderstorm watch for much of southern and eastern North Carolina until 7 p.m. Wednesday.

The Oak Island Coast Guard Station reported two waterspouts five miles southeast of Oak Island.

Large hail and damaging winds were reported from Brunswick County north to Swansboro and Jacksonville.

House OKs Utilities Bill

RALEIGH (AP) — Both sides claimed a victory for consumers as the House voted 81-23 to approve a bill to let electric utilities change their rates to reflect unexpected fluctuations in fuel costs.

Supporters of the "true-up" bill said it would treat utilities fairly and would result in a $65 million rate reduction when the first adjustment takes effect. But opponents who argued that utilities would eventually reap much larger benefits said they were pleased with an amendment that could help consumers two years from now.

That amendment, approved 51-48, would repeal separate fuel adjustment hearings for utilities in 1989 unless further legislative action is taken. Rep. Richard Wright, D-Columbus, said the attorney general, consumer groups and industrial electricity users supported combining the hearings with full rate hearings to make the process more efficient and keep utilities from misrepresenting operating expenses.

Alan Briggs, representing the state attorney general's office, said the sunset amendment was important for consumers even though there was no guarantee the Legislature wouldn't decide to keep fuel adjustment hearings two years from now.

"It helps a lot," he said. "Now consumers get the $65 million and we get the sunset so we come back in '89 with a level playing field. When you're up against utilities, that's pretty good."

Wright earlier tried to amend the bill to immediately eliminate the fuel hearings, but that amendment was defeated 61-45.

CHECKING YOUR TIRES

Do you know for sure that none of your tires needs to be replaced? If you can't answer without looking, you're probably among the hundreds of thousands of motorists each year who pay premium prices for on-the-road repairs. A short monthly inspection of your tires can keep you up to date on their wear and may even indicate other problems.

Use a pocket type air pressure gauge and check for proper inflation of the tires. Underinflation occurs in one out of four cars and can cause excessive tire wear and dangerous handling. Check for cuts or embedded objects. Excessive wear in uneven patterns can mean imbalance, misalignment, or incorrect inflation. Any of these can cost you money in premature replacement and increase gas consumption.

How do you check for tread wear? If you have a bald spot, it's time to replace the tire. If you still have all tread, stick a Lincoln's head penny, upside down, into the tread. If the top of Lincoln's head shows, you don't have enough tread.

Lawmaker Suggests Money For County To Take Wastes

RALEIGH (AP) — The sponsor of a bill to remove North Carolina from an eight-state compact for handling low-level radioactive waste says he hopes financial incentives for a county taking the waste will encourage volunteers and maybe turn some heads in the House.

Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, said representatives of three counties said they would be "encouraged to consider volunteering" in light of his proposal to send $3 million a year to a host county. While he declined to identify the counties, Mavretic said poor counties would be particularly likely to be interested.

"Down east, we're not going to farm our way out of the current economic situation," he said. "In the far west, they're not going to Christmas tree our way out. We need alternatives."

The Water and Air Resources Committee voted Wednesday to approve the bill to shift 25 percent of property taxes on nuclear power plants in Brunswick, Mecklenburg and Wake counties to a county that accepts a waste facility. Mavretic said the incentives might defuse objections to a provision in his compact-repeal bill that would limit a waste site to the three counties with nuclear plants if no other counties volunteer.

"I would submit that maybe half the members of the House did not know the contents (of the finance bill)," said Mavretic. "If that gets out there, I think some votes are going to change."

Rep. Casper Holroyd, D-Wake, who has opposed the three-county provision, argued that the compact bill should join the money bill, which was sent to the Finance Committee.

"It seems to me like we're putting the cart before the horse," he said, noting the authority to choose a site is spelled out in one bill while the money to pay for it is in the other. "Without the authority there's no reason for having the bill."

Mavretic, however, said that without assured rewards for a host county and enough money for the authority the compact repeal would be in jeopardy. Even though North Carolina has been chosen by the compact to take the region's waste in 1992, he said the margin between supporters and opponents on the House floor was only six votes either way.

Hughes Probe

RALEIGH (AP) — Two public hearings will be held on allegations of unethical conduct against Rep. Jim Hughes, R-Avery, the Legislative Ethics Committee said.

The committee issued a statement Wednesday saying that the hearings would involve accusations against Hughes by a member of the village of Sugar Mountain Alcoholic Beverage Commission.

If the allegations are true, they "could constitute unethical conduct," the statement said. It did not elaborate on the allegations.

Hughes, owner of a Linville motel, could not be reached for comment. One of the public hearings will be held July 28 in Raleigh. The other will be Aug. 1 in Boone, the statement said.

Blue Mold

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Blue mold disease, which decimated the burley tobacco crop of western North Carolina farmers in 1979, has been found in a Buncombe County field near Weaverville.

Kenneth Reeves, Buncombe County extension director, said Wednesday it was believed to be the first evidence of blue mold in North Carolina this year.

Reeves did not identify the farmer in whose tobacco the fungus disease was spotted, but he warned other farmers to take immediate action to try to avoid development of the mold in their burley.

Forest Closed

ROBBINSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — An outbreak of severe diarrhea has forced the closing of about 3,500 acres of National Forest land surrounding the Rainbow Family's campsite until the last member leaves the area, officials said.

The land was closed Wednesday. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and the state Division of Health Services recommended that the Forest Service close the area for several weeks because it is a "nuisance to public health." The area will probably be reopened in two weeks when the Rainbows have left, officials said.

The CDC reported there have been 22 culture-confirmed cases of the disease in Rainbow people from six states, and it is possible that half of the gathering may have been infected. Some cases were mild, but others have required hospitalization. The CDC was to issue a nationwide alert about the outbreak to health officials today.

Forest Service officials estimate that 12,500 people were at the gathering July 4, the main day of the event, which officially began July 1 and ended July 7. People from nearly every state and several foreign countries attended.

Embezzlement

ASHEVILLE (AP) — The vice president of Sure-Fire Distributing Co. was sentenced to six months in prison for embezzling about $56,000 from the company.

William Fleming Burbank IV was found guilty in U.S. District Court Monday of embezzling from the motorcycle parts distributor. He was found guilty of 12 counts of fraud.

He faced a maximum of 120 years in prison and $120,000 in fines. Judge David Sentelle also ordered Burbank on Wednesday to make full restitution to Sure-Fire, which Burbank owns with his father, William Burbank Sr.

Command Change

SUNNY POINT, N.C. (AP) — The command of the busiest ammunition terminal in the world changed hands here Wednesday.

Col. Frederick F. Meyers formally ended his two-year command of the Military Ocean Terminal at Sunny Point by passing a flag to Col. Charles N. Bullard, who will oversee it for the next two years.

Bullard, 49, has commanded the Military Traffic Management Command Terminal in Pusan, Korea, and his last post was director of logistics at the Army Field Artillery Center at Fort Sill, Okla.

Firm Fined

WILMINGTON (AP) — North Top-sail Water and Sewer Inc., a privately owned utility company in Onslow County, has been charged by the North Carolina Department of Labor with seven violations of worker safety at a warehouse near Holly Ridge.

The warehouse, located off U.S. 17 about a mile north of Holly Ridge, contains between 80 and 100 barrels of a toxic chemical which was ordered removed after it was discovered there on March 3.

The Environmental Protection Agency has ordered removal of the chemical, identified as the toxic and combustible 2,4-dinitrophenol.

The worker safety citations were issued April 2, after an inspection of FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Elly K. McBride, who once cared for 300 animals on her 1½-acre lot near Hope Mills and fought neighbors' attempts to get rid of them, now has no more.

All Gone

Ms. McBride, 61, who was found in contempt of court in May for allowing a public health nuisance to continue, had until last week to find new homes for the animals.

Assistant County Attorney Robert Bartelt said she met the deadline.

'Supersub' Panel Keeps Its Public Work Secret

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The "supersub" is back in business.

Last year, eight powerful legislators whom Republican Gov. Jim Martin derided as the "gang of eight" met for weeks behind closed doors and essentially wrote the state budget for fiscal 1986-87.

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, who plans to challenge Martin in the 1988 gubernatorial race, vowed that things would be different this year. The supersub would meet in public, and more lawmakers would participate in the discussions.

Jordan also said the panel's membership would be enlarged, and several weeks ago announced the appointment of 13 Senate representatives to the new supersub.

But House Speaker Liston Ramsey and his allies did not go along. Ramsey has yet to name additional House members to the supersub, and the expanded Senate panel was forced to meet alone to get budget talks rolling.

This week, things are back to normal. The panel is operating with the same members as last year, with one exception: Jordan is not participating.

"I don't plan to attend any of those meetings," he said

Wednesday. "I grow as I get older. I learn. I don't think it's necessary for me to be in there."

Reporters, who have clashed with supersub members over whether the meetings would be open, had a new complaint Wednesday. Although they were allowed to watch the meeting, the committee refused to distribute copies of working papers needed to follow the discussion.

As reporters and other members of the public — including Ward Purrington, Martin's chief lobbyist — watched helplessly, the seven-member supersub went about its business of paring lists of proposed additions to the fiscal 1987-89 budget.

The legislators spoke cryptically. They often referred to dozens of proposed expenditures on their working documents by number, leaving observers to guess what they meant.

The lawmakers defended their position, saying the budget process was in its infancy and that news stories mentioning specific numbers at this stage would confuse the public.

"It is no way possible for us to release any of these documents because these are only preliminary working papers," Sen. Aaron Plyler, D-Union, said. "No decisions are concrete in here until the (budget) bills have passed both houses."

If a lobbyist seeking an appropriation read that it has been endorsed by the supersub but found later it ad been cut, "we'd catch hell," Plyler, co-chairman of the Joint Appropriations Committee, said.

Asked by reporters how they were supposed to know what the committee was talking about if they had no documents to refer to, Plyler replied, "I don't know."

House Speaker Liston Ramsey, a supersub member, agreed with Plyler. "You'd mislead the people," Ramsey told reporters. "They'd think something they're interested in has been funded when nothing's been funded."

The supersub puts together omnibus spending packages that are presented to the Joint Appropriations Committee, then sent to the House and Senate floors.

Technically, the supersub's proposals can be overruled by the full appropriations panel or on the floor of either chamber. In practice, however, supersub decisions rarely are challenged.

Critics say there's seldom time to mount serious challenges because the supersub presents its bills to the Appropriations Committee and calls for votes after quickly summarizing them, then rushes the bills to the floors.

It is common for major spending bills, some hundreds of pages long, to become law hours after being unveiled to the public.

Martin made the "gang of eight" a whipping boy last year as he campaigned for Republican legislative candidates. He charged that it proved his contention that the Legislature is run by a handful of powerful Democrats who impose their will on the rank-and-file. No Republicans are on the supersub.

Jordan, who presides over the Senate, told reporters he had done his best to encourage the panel to conduct business openly and had instructed Plyler to post notices of when and where the supersub will meet.

But he said it was up to Plyler and Watkins to decide what papers to release to the public, and supported their decision to withhold preliminary figures.

Jordan was asked what use it was to let spectators attend meetings but to keep them from seeing documents that would let them know what was happening.

"I wanted to open the meetings so you could be there to see the deliberations and be involved as much as possible," he said.

"You can criticize me if you want to, but I'm making my best judgment call as to how far we can go and still keep people talking to each other and give you as much access as I think is possible at this point in time."

Charlotte Judge Orders Grand Jury To Investigate PTL Actions

By DAVID REED
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — A bankruptcy judge has agreed to Jim and Tammy Bakker's request for an independent overseer of PTL's reorganization, while a federal judge in North Carolina ordered a grand jury probe of the ministry.

U.S. District Judge Robert D. Potter in Charlotte, N.C., ordered a special grand jury to convene there Aug. 17 to investigate the ministry's operations under Bakker, the PTL founder who stepped down in March amid a sex scandal.

Potter issued his order Wednesday after meeting Tuesday with U.S. Attorney Charles Brewer and other Justice Department officials. The State newspaper reported today. Brewer refused to comment, citing Justice Department policy, the Columbia publication said.

PTL also is being investigated by the Internal Revenue Service and the U.S. Postal Service, and a criminal investigation has been reported by the Charlotte Observer. Officials have refused to comment on the probe.

Federal bankruptcy Judge Rufus Reynolds on Wednesday appointed Columbia bankruptcy lawyer William Robinson to oversee PTL's reorganization.

Bakker's attorney, W. Ryan Hovis, suggested Robinson, but Reynolds sided with PTL attorneys who wanted the scope of Robinson's duties limited. He said the examiner will not monitor PTL's religious activities.

"That will be left exclusively to the debtor (PTL)," Reynolds said.

Attorneys for both sides said they were satisfied with the appointment and the latitude Robinson was given.

Reynolds, who visited PTL's Heritage USA on Monday, on Wednesday offered a suggestion for boosting revenues at the Christian theme park: charge admission.

"It is a real nice park," he said. "So many people were there I couldn't find a place to park."

PTL has a great future, said Reynolds, who can accept a reorganization plan or order the sale of ministry assets to pay off PTL's debts. "As far as I'm concerned there's no reason at all why it can't be successful," he said.

PTL attorney James Paul of Atlanta said the ministry is working on a plan to cut costs and increase revenues, and will consider the judge's suggestion.

PTL filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code last month, saying it owed $72 million to 1,400 creditors. PTL Chairman Jerry Falwell has blamed the financial troubles on mismanagement and exorbitant payments to Bakker and his top executives.

Bakker gave Falwell control of the ministry and Christian theme park near Fort Mill on March 19 when he admitted to a sexual tryst seven years ago.

Wednesday's hearing in Columbia was the first courtroom confrontation between attorneys for Falwell's PTL and lawyers for Bakker, who wants to regain the ministry.

The Bakkers also have applied to the court for recognition as PTL creditors, and claim ownership of the $1.3 million parsonage at Tega Cay where they have lived the past eight years.

Paul had attacked the Bakkers' proposal for an examiner in court documents as "an ill-disguised attempt to displace existing management," suggesting the request was to get the examiner involved in developing the reorganization plan.

Reynolds' order does not let the examiner insert himself into the formulation of a reorganization plan as the Bakkers proposed, Paul said after the hearing.

"We have the exclusive right to form our own plan," he said, adding that the ministry also will control the litigation involving creditors.

Hovis said the examiner still is free to ask Reynolds for permission to work on the plan, which is due in less than three months. Hovis said Reynolds gave Robinson "broader-than-normal power."

PTL should pay $50,000 initially to

Robinson, who should submit his first report to the court by Oct. 1, Reynolds said.

A committee of creditors and a committee of PTL contributors also will have a voice in the reorganization plan. The creditors committee also could submit its own plan.

A group called PTL Partner Major-ity Inc. began polling PTL contributors Monday with AT&T's 1-900 "Dial It" service to determine any interest in establishing a trust fund to buy out the ministry if it cannot survive reorganization.

After the group reported only 235 responses by Wednesday evening, AT&T acknowledged there had been technical problems in the hookup.

No Danger Reported At Plant

MINERAL, Va. (AP) — A stainless-steel tube that ruptured at a nuclear power plant, allowing a trace of radioactivity to escape into the atmosphere, had been inspected a month ago, utility officials said.

No one was injured and there was no danger to the public or to workers in the accident Wednesday, the most serious ever at Virginia Power's North Anna power plant about 40 miles northwest of Richmond, the company said.

One of the two reactors at the plant was shut down pending an investigation.

The ruptured, 5/8-inch tube for carrying superheated water through steam generators was among thousands inspected during a refueling, said Ronald H. Leasburg, utility senior vice president for engineering and construction.

During the inspection, 117 tubes showed significant deterioration and were taken out of service, Leasburg said. The reactor has 3,000 of the tubes, all original equipment at the plant, which came on line in 1978.

The 965-megawatt reactor had been restarted over the weekend after being out of service for several weeks and was at full power when the leak was discovered about 6:30 a.m., Leasburg said.

The utility declared an alert — the second stage of a four-step emergency procedure — 18 minutes later and began to shut down the unit, said William Stewart, utility vice president for nuclear operations.

The reactor will remain out of service for at least three weeks while Nuclear Regulatory Commission, state and utility officials investigate, he said.

He had no explanation why the tubing ruptured so soon after an inspection.

Paul had attacked the Bakkers' proposal for an examiner in court documents as "an ill-disguised attempt to displace existing management," suggesting the request was to get the examiner involved in developing the reorganization plan.

Reynolds' order does not let the examiner insert himself into the formulation of a reorganization plan as the Bakkers proposed, Paul said after the hearing.

"We have the exclusive right to form our own plan," he said, adding that the ministry also will control the litigation involving creditors.

Hovis said the examiner still is free to ask Reynolds for permission to work on the plan, which is due in less than three months. Hovis said Reynolds gave Robinson "broader-than-normal power."

Cash-Short GOP National Committee Cutting Back, Fires 40 Staff Members

By THOMAS B. EDSALL
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — The Republican National Committee, faced with a growing shortage of cash, Wednesday fired 40 of 275 staff members. In addition, the RNC has terminated contracts with 10 politically influential consultants and plans to sharply cut back or eliminate roughly 20 other consulting deals.

Battered by President Reagan's falling ratings, the Iran-contra scandal and disclosures of large consulting fees, fund-raising at the RNC and the GOP Senate and House campaign committees took a nose dive during the first six months of this year.

Among the consultants who have lost contracts paying $2,000 to $5,000 a month are former White House aide Joseph Canzeri, former Reagan-

Bush campaign manager and White House political director Ed Rollins, former RNC deputy chairman Fred Biebel, former RNC chief of staff Bill Phillips and the firm of Black, Manafort & Stone.

"For a long time, we were fat, dumb and happy," said a participant in discussions of the layoffs and cutbacks. "Now it's back to fundamentals." Another participant said: "The gravy train is over."

At the RNC, the cash flow dropped to $17.1 million in the first half of 1987, compared to $22.5 million in the comparable period in 1985 and $19.8 million in 1983. At the National Republican Senatorial Committee, which was severely damaged by disclosures of large staff bonuses paid days after the GOP lost control of the Senate, cash receipts were $10.7 million, less than half of the $23 million raised in the first six months of 1985. The National Republican Congressional Committee raised an estimated $6.1 million, compared to $9.6 million in 1985.

"We got hit, we got hit pretty hard," said Jann L. Olsten, executive director of the Republican Senate committee.

The GOP, despite these declines, retains a massive dollar advantage over the Democrats. The margin, however, is declining as the Democrats are doing better now than in 1985, the previous nonelection year.

The Democratic National Committee reported raising $4.1 million, compared to $3.6 million in 1985. For the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, the cash flow grew from $1.7 million to $2.5 million, and for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, it went from $2.4 million in 1985 to $2.9 million this year.

Terry Michael, spokesman for the DNC, noted that "we have been hiring in our political, communications and finance divisions."

Terry Wade, Michael's counterpart at the RNC, said that even after laying off 40 employees, "we still have 235 people here to do what we have to do." Wade said decisions concerning firings were based on the goal of protecting the RNC's drive to build up state and local parties before the 1988 election. "We want to be 100 percent sure that we are able to deliver for the 1988 nominee."

One source said the decision was made to maintain a number of consulting contracts amid the cutbacks. Among those who will continue to receive monthly payments from the RNC, according to the source, are Charles Black, who was a senior adviser to the Reagan-Bush campaign; Eddie Mahe, former RNC political director; Donald Devine, a consultant to the presidential campaign of Sen. Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., and Richard Bond, former deputy director of the RNC and currently deputy campaign manager of Vice President Bush's presidential campaign.

Olsten, of the Republican senatorial committee, said that direct-mail drives during the first quarter had such poor response that the committee abandoned prospecting efforts for the period. Those efforts, essentially "prospecting" for people who have not given regularly and could become regular donors, is highly expensive because the cost of the mailing often equals or exceeds donations. But having given once, the new donors may be more likely to give again.

Olsten said the committee has been able to retire most of a $5 million debt. A spokesman for the Republican congressional committee said the debt has been reduced from $4 million at the start of the year to $2 million.

The Democrats had poor direct-mail results as well. Peggy Connolly, communications director for the Democratic congressional committee, said direct mail is down for 1987, and that all the increase in cash resulted from a larger number of major contributors.

Direct mail for the committee went from $1.1 million in the first six months of 1985 to $960,000 this year.

Former Hostage Thanks Poindexter For His Freedom

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former hostage David Jacobsen, praising the Reagan administration for taking risks to free him, personally thanked Rear Adm. John Poindexter for his role in ending Jacobsen's 17-month captivity.

Jacobsen shook hands with Poindexter during a break in the Iran-Contra hearings Wednesday and told the former national security adviser: "Thank you and Ollie for getting me out and keeping me alive."

Exhibiting a rare smile, the ex-National Security Council chief replied, "Thank you."

Poindexter and his fired deputy, Oliver L. North, both testified they carried out a presidentially approved policy that included swapping arms to Iran for U.S. hostages, during a period when the Reagan administration was publicly calling for a worldwide arms embargo against Iran.

Jacobsen never specifically praised the secret arms-for-hostages policy, and said he was unaware of it when freed last November.

But, in an impromptu news conference, he did say of administration officials, "They tried everything they could; they tried to pull out all the resources possible to handle the situation. There are many people in this world who do not like to take risks. Thank God, we have some people willing to take risks."

Earlier, at the request of Rep. Richard Cheney, R-Wyo., Jacobsen gave private testimony to the staff of the Iran-Contra committees. The lawmaker said he might ask that Jacobsen be called as a public witness if the private testimony proves valuable.

Jacobsen, a hospital administrator from Huntington Beach, Calif., wore a Ronald Reagan tie clip and a bracelet with the name of Associated Press reporter Terry Anderson, still a hostage.

"You know what Terry Anderson's doing right now?" he said, somberly. "He's in his underwear, on a foam rubber pad, in a six-foot, by six-foot, by six-foot dungeon. He doesn't know that his father and that his brother is dead."

"He has never held his little daughter, who is now over two years of age. He hasn't had a chance to be a father to his other girl, who is now 10. Terry Anderson is sitting there rotting. I hope to God he survives and I hope that he returns to be reunited with his family and I hope it's soon."

Those holding American hostages "are taking great delight in the inner turmoil that we're experiencing," Jacobsen said. "They are probably singing to my brothers who remain hostages their favorite song, 'Death to America.' And they're laughing about the situation today."

Jacobsen said the captors pay close attention to news reports from the United States. "They have tremendous faith in the integrity of the American media. If it's on television, if it's in print, therefore, it must be accurate," he commented.

Jacobsen was director of the American University Hospital in Beirut when taken captive on May 28, 1985. He was released last Nov. 2, two days after 500 U.S.-made TOW antitank missiles were delivered from Israel to Iran.

Asked what could be done to get remaining hostages out, Jacobsen suggested that the FBI talk with the kidnappers because of the bureau's experience in dealing with hostage situations.

"Talking is not making concessions," Jacobsen said. "The first thing you do is determine: are the victims safe? Secondly, what are the demands of the kidnappers? Who are the kidnappers? Develop a psychological profile of the kidnappers, so therefore you can develop a plan of action."

He said State Department officials are trained to deal diplomatically through standard channels, but "are not set up to deal with a bunch of little punks with AK47s in the Beirut suburbs."

Admiral Was Aware Of Shredding Bans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rear Adm. John M. Poindexter says he tore up President Reagan's signed authorization for an arms-for-hostages trade, even though he was aware of a law that strictly controls destruction of presidential records.

Poindexter, in Wednesday's Iran-Contra hearing, admitted he did not follow requirements of the Presidential Records Act of 1978 in destroying a December 1985 presidential "finding" on the arms sales.

"I am aware of a Presidential Records Act. I must say that I did not think about that at the time," Poindexter said, adding his motivation was to spare Reagan political embarrassment should the document become public.

Poindexter said he destroyed the document after Attorney General Edwin Meese III told him last Nov. 21 that an inquiry was beginning into the arms sales to Iran.

"I tore it up and put it in the burn bag behind my desk," Poindexter testified.

Gary Brooks, acting director of the National Archives legal services staff, said Wednesday, "Whether you're the national security adviser or the janitor cleaning up, you would not have the authority to destroy presidential records without going through these established procedures."

The law was passed in the wake of the Watergate scandal, when former President Richard Nixon arranged a deal with the General Services Administration, giving Nixon control over his presidential papers.

Congress prevented the arrangement and in 1978 passed the law to make clear that official presidential records belong to the government. The act states that the president and his staff have a duty to preserve official presidential records.

SURF CITY, N.C. (AP) — A Marine who had held off police for five hours while holed up in his apartment with a cache of weapons was arrested quietly after apparently taking an overdose of a pain drug, authorities say.

Police evacuated residents and cordoned off about six blocks between 6 and 7 a.m. Wednesday after the man called the Pender County Sheriff's Department to say he was suicidal and would shoot at police officers.

Staff Sgt. Drury Verhoeff, 29, was charged with communicating threats, a misdemeanor offense. After his arrest, he was taken by ambulance to Pender Memorial Hospital in Burgaw and then to Dorothea Dix Hospital in Raleigh.

Poindexter Denies Getting North Notes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter agreed with his former aide, Oliver L. North, that the Iran-Contra diversion was a good idea but says he didn't get the five memos North claims to have sent to him for the president.

Poindexter, who today was continuing his testimony before the congressional committees investigating the Iran-Contra affair, on Wednesday generally supported North's contention that all his actions were authorized.

Poindexter, a Navy rear admiral, said he alone authorized North's plan for the diversion of proceeds from the sale of U.S. weapons to Iran for the Nicaragua Contras, keeping it secret from the president.

"I thought it was a good idea and I personally approved it," Poindexter said.

He also supported North's testimony to the House-Senate Iran-Contra committees that President Reagan signed a 1985 document stating that the sale of U.S. weapons to Iran in November of that year was an arms-for-hostages deal. Poindexter said he destroyed the document last fall to avoid political embarrassment for Reagan.

Poindexter said he holds North responsible for inadvertently preserving the internal White House computer messages that Poindexter and staff used to communicate with each other. Those notes were retrieved by investigators for evidence.

A computer buff, Poindexter said he believed he had taken proper steps to erase the messages at his terminal. "My policy was to erase them, and I apparently did it the right way, and I don't think Colonel North did it the right way," he said.

His chief disagreement, however, came on the five memos that North, in his testimony last week, said he wrote mentioning the diversion of money from the sale of arms to Iran for use by the Contras.

North said he sent those memos "up the line" of command to Poindexter, intending that they go to Reagan or that the president be briefed on them. North said he assumed the president approved them since none was ever returned saying otherwise.

But Poindexter said he never saw any memo on the subject until Nov. 25, 1986, when one written by North was shown to him by investigators for Attorney General Edwin Meese III, who had found it after beginning an inquiry for Reagan.

"I do not remember any other memos," Poindexter said.

Poindexter said he could not recall precisely the circumstances of the one memo that was found but speculated he had tried to destroy it to keep the president from knowing.

"What I speculate happened was that Colonel North probably prepared this memo at that time in response to my request," he said. "It probably came over to me, I realized that I didn't want to discuss the transfer of funds with the president ... and I probably destroyed that memo at the time, or at least disposed of it some way."

Witness Links Contras To Drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — A convicted cocaine trafficker who says he helped the Nicaraguan Contras smuggle drugs into the United States claims he also made payoffs to officials in Cuba and the Bahamas to conduct his business.

George Morales, who is serving a 16-year federal prison sentence in Miami, made his revelations about Cuba for the first time Wednesday at a hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on drugs.

Morales said he worked with Cuban officials in the drug trade between 1980 and 1984. He said payoffs were made directly to Cuban authorities who, in turn, asked Morales to buy merchandise such as boats for them.

In all, Morales, once a large drug smuggler with a fleet of planes, helicopters and boats, said he laundered about $500,000 in illegal drug profits through Cuba.

Although Cuban authorities gave him a special code that enabled his aircraft to evade radar, Morales said he was never asked to gather intelligence on the United States for Fidel Castro's regime.

He told Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., that Cuba offers safe haven for drug traffickers. Morales said he also bribed Bahamian officials to turn a blind eye to the drug trade, and he laundered money through Panama.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., chairman of the subcommittee, said the purpose of Morales' testimony was to determine what steps the United States could take to lessen the impact of narcotics money.

But Kerry said the hearing was "obviously incomplete" because many of Morales' statements needed corroboration.

Morales, an athletic-looking man with a trimmed beard, looked more like a banker than drug smuggler in his crisp blue suit. He appeared at the hearing in the custody of federal marshals.

With his thick accent and soft voice, senators had difficulty understanding the Colombian-born Morales at times.

A major part of Morales' testimony dealt with his allegations against the Contras, who repeatedly have denied drug dealing. Morales said he was willing to take a lie detector test to back up his statements.

"We've heard this gentleman's accusations before. He is a convicted drug dealer," said Contra spokesman Ernesto Palazio, adding that the Contras are "more interested than anyone else" in finding out about alleged drug smuggling so the rebel leadership can take the appropriate action.

Morales, 38, a naturalized American citizen who is known for his speed boat racing prowess, said he became seriously involved with the Contras about a month after he was indicted on a drug charge in March 1984.

In exchange for Morales' help, three men connected to the Contras promised to "take care of my (legal) problem, and to a large extent they did." The men represented themselves as having connections with the CIA, Morales said.

Postal Unions Walk Out On New Contract Talks

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of the Postal Service's two largest unions, after walking out on contract negotiations, vow there won't be any more talks unless management backs down on some of its demands.

The breakdown in talks Wednesday, six days before a deadline for achieving a new three-year accord, apparently centered on a dispute involving union jurisdiction over workers in the clerk class.

There was no immediate indication of when negotiations would resume.

Although the two unions representing some 575,000 workers who process and deliver mail are prohibited by law from striking, the deadline for achieving a new three-year accord is 12:01 a.m. Tuesday.

Thomas J. Fritsch, chief bargainer for the Postal Service, said: "I have no specific comment about the issue itself. However, management stands ready and willing to bargain at any time."

But Dan Frank, a spokeswoman for the Joint Bargaining Committee of the American Postal Workers and the National Association of Letter Carriers, the two large unions, said, "there won't be any further talks unless management backs down" on some of its demands.

Frank would not cite those demands.

But a labor source, speaking on grounds of anonymity, said "there are illegal elements (in the mail handlers proposed pact) that we have found."

This source said the problem involves a proposal to transfer from the 346,000-member APWU to the Mail Handlers jurisdiction over from 5,000 to 7,000 workers in the mail clerk craft.

The two unions are insisting that Postal Service management give us "an iron-clad guarantee to protect the clerks of the APWU," before they will agree to go back to the bargaining table.

Meanwhile, a source close to the negotiations, said that Kay McMurray, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, had been contacted by attorneys for at least one of the unions. The source declined to be named publicly.

It could not immediately be determined whether McMurray or any of his mediators would get involved in the talks.

Three years ago, when the Postal Service and unions were unable to reach agreement, the contract was submitted to binding arbitration for settlement.

One source said the talks collapsed in a dispute between the APWU and letter carriers with the Postal Service over a tentative three-year pact that management reached earlier this week with a smaller union, the Mail Handlers Division of Laborers International Union, which bargained separately from the two larger organizations.

Leaders of the APWU and NALC had denounced that accord, which covers the 50,000-member mail handlers union, whose leaders hailed the settlement.

Postmaster General Preston R. Tisch also had applauded the accord, saying he was "confident this settlement signals a maturing of our labor-management relationships." He termed the agreement "in the best interests of the mail handlers, the best interests of our customers and the best interests of a healthy national postal system."

On Wednesday, Moe Biller, president of the APWU, and Vincent Sombrotto, head of the letter carriers union, withdrew their bargaining team from the Postal Service talks.

The mail handlers agreement calls for an annual wage increase of $350 during the first year, $400 in the second and $500 in the third, an average annual hike of 1.6 percent over three years, Biller said.

"It is a complete disgrace," he added.

Biller and Sombrotto have proposed wage increases for their members averaging 6.8 percent a year for three years, a reduction in the time it takes to rise to top scale, to six years from the current 12, and improved medical benefits.

Postal clerks and letter carriers currently average about $27,000 a year.

Farm Bureau Will Oppose Attempts To Cut Supports

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the nation's most influential farm organizations, the American Farm Bureau Federation, is digging in against any attempt by the Reagan administration to escalate cutbacks in farm price supports.

The federation says agricultural recovery is fragile and that the worst-off farmers will be unable to repay about $30 billion in debt. If only a moderate decline in income should occur, the unpayable debt would double to about $60 billion.

Harry Bell, federation vice president and chairman of the organization's farm income study committee, said he was sympathetic with White House budget planners seeking ways to reduce the federal deficit.

But he warned that "it cannot be reduced on the backs of farmers only" and that the Farm Bureau would oppose commodity price support reductions beyond what already are called for in the 1985 Food Security Act.

Federal relief for the Farm Credit System, which could require a bailout of $5 billion to $6 billion, is another big item on the immediate agenda, and "Congress needs to move on ... and get it behind us," he said.

Bell said heavy debts of Latin American countries, including Brazil, Argentina and Mexico, are thrusting deeply into the U.S. agricultural economy.

The International Monetary Fund, World Bank and the administration "must find a better solution than the Baker Plan for resolving the debt problems of developing countries, which account for major export growth markets for U.S. farmers," he said.

Bell referred to the 3-year-old plan of Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, which basically would require austerity and reform among big Third World debtor nations, including cutbacks on imports and boosting exports.

Another area that needs attention, he said, involves the 1986 tax overhaul law, which "did some useful things to lower rates and reduce tax shelter incentives, but it also produced some negative effects which need to be corrected, such as restoration of income averaging, a change in the treatment of capital gains and estate taxes."

Bell said, "Social Security was originally a tax on wage and salary income. Farmers pay on wage, management and investment income. This isn't fair and must be changed."

The study committee identified more than 50 ideas for action to help improve farm income. Some require federal legislation, while some things farmers can do themselves, such as increased use of forward contracting, better record keeping and greater use of "integrated pest management" techniques to reduce the use of chemicals.

Kleckner said "some are old ideas, but they are still good ideas" and that the federation already is pursuing the aims of many of the recommendations.

Zoo Expansion

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — The first project to go to bid for the N.C. Zoological Park's planned North America expansion came in $240,000 over budget, and officials say $170,000 of that overrun cannot be cut out.

The designers of the veterinary medical complex, Dewberry & Davis engineers of Raleigh, estimated the project to cost $1.55 million last year. But the lowest of four bids received last week was $1.79 million.

Lyn E. Adams, the zoo's deputy director for planning and construction, said the building committee of the N.C. Zoo Council cut some options it wanted, but keeping essential parts of the project will mean a cost of $1.71 million, about 11 per cent more than estimated.

The medical center will have more than 40 rooms that will include a research center, quarantine area, operating suite, wards and a nursery. It also will include holding and breeding facilities. With it, the zoo's veterinary staff will double.

The project is expected to be the first completed in the 200-acre North America habitat.

Judge Threatens Delay In Choosing Deaver Jurors

By BILL McALLISTER
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — The judge presiding over the perjury trial of former White House aide Michael K. Deaver Wednesday threatened to halt the three-day-old proceeding after a federal appeals court directed him to cease questioning all potential jurors in private.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson said the ruling had so seriously eroded his credibility with the jury panel that he had "very grave doubts" if the case against the longtime confidante to President and Mrs. Reagan could proceed. "I frankly find myself embarrassed to face this panel again," the judge said.

His comments came minutes after the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia responded to an appeal by major news organizations by rejecting Jackson's procedure of questioning the potential jurors away from the press and the public.

A three-judge panel of the appeals court said that Jackson's procedures flew in the face of a judicial tradition dating to England that requires criminal proceedings, including jury selections, be conducted in open court.

Lawyers for Deaver, a Washington lobbyist accused of lying to a congressional subcommittee and grand jury about his post-White House contacts with high government officials, and his prosecutor expressed alarm at the prospect of delaying the trial.

That, said independent counsel Whitney North Seymour Jr., the prosecution lawyer, would be "a disaster."

"I concur," said Jackson. But he said it would be a "bigger disaster" to allow the case to continue with a jury that has been incorrectly selected.

When Seymour and Herbert Miller Jr., Deaver's lawyer, urged that the judge resume questioning potential jurors from the same panel, Jackson appeared reluctant, citing the ruling as "definitely, irrevocably" destroying his authority with the jury panel.

"We can't afford this," Miller said after the hearing. Asked why, he replied, "Because we are not made made out of money."

Jackson said he understood the costs of a delay would be substantial and that summoning a new panel of 100 potential jurors would take about three weeks. He is to announce his decision on proceeding or delaying the trial Thursday.

Once in Jackson's courtroom, the 100 original jurors who had been summoned were asked a few general questions en masse and then handed a 12-page document containing questions the judge said were sensitive and personal.

Some dealt with the jurors' experience with alcoholism and drug abuse, issues that are important in the Deaver trial because he may argue that excessive drinking and his abuse of prescription drugs impaired his memory of the events in question.

After the jurors completed the form, the judge and the lawyers began questioning them individually in the jury room. Lawyers for news organizations, including the four networks, The New York Times and The Washington Post protested the practice, saying it was inconsistent with a 1984 Supreme Court ruling requiring open jury selection.

Wednesday morning those arguments went before the appeals court panel, sitting three floors above Jackson's courtroom. There Seymour claimed that the media was not seeking "access to public information; it's to watch them (the potential jurors) squirm."

"You don't think that the First Amendment covers what you say is 'watching the jurors squirm'?" shot back Laurence H. Silberman, one of the three judges.

Judge Kenneth W. Starr cited a tradition of openness in U.S. and English law that may require "that jurors may have to squirm" in public as they are questioned.

Seymour, a Park Avenue lawyer who was appointed by the courts to investigate Deaver's lobbying business, said during the arguments that the closed proceedings were especially helpful because many on the jury panel had difficulty filling out the questionnaire.

"These are reasonably unlettered people, mostly verbal," he said. "To ask them to fill out a questionnaire to state their reasons would almost be a joke."

Jackson said the appeals court opinion did not spell out that he should continue the trial. "They didn't make that clear in the opinion, which is the ruling to which I must conform," he told the lawyers. "I'm afraid I've given so many conflicting instructions to the jury panel that I don't think another set of instructions will do any good," he said. "The larger question is the erosion of authority of a trial judge. With this panel, my authority has been definitely, irrevocably been eroded...."

Klan March

SPRING LAKE, N.C. (AP) — The Christian Knights of the Ku Klux Klan have won approval for a march in Spring Lake on Aug. 9 and probably will be permitted to hold a second demonstration the same day in Fayetteville.

Spring Lake Police Chief Don Latham said approval has been given to the KKK group for a parade along Main Street in Spring Lake.

Fayetteville City Manager John Smith said he has not formally approved a request for a parade in Fayetteville after the Spring Lake march but said he "sees no problem with granting the application."

U.S. Expels Cuban Envoys In Protest Of Spy Charges

By DON SHANNON
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States ordered Wednesday the expulsion of the acting head of Cuba's diplomatic mission here and another officer of its 20-member staff in retaliation for public charges of espionage made against U.S. diplomats in Havana.

The State Department, in announcing the expulsion of the two Cubans, cited a television broadcast on Havana's government station July 6 that named four U.S. diplomats and three of their wives as CIA agents and showed scenes of their alleged espionage activities.

The department, calling on the Cuban government to retract the accusations, said the "media campaign has caused irreparable harm to these U.S. diplomats and their families, endangering their safety, damaging their reputations and making it impossible for them to carry on their diplomatic functions."

Wednesday's action marked the first time that members of the mission had been expelled on political grounds since the establishment of U.S. and Cuban diplomatic facilities in each other's capitals in 1977. Low-ranking members of mission, known as an Interest Section, which holds a lesser rank than embassies, have been deported in past years on such charges as shoplifting and smuggling.

The ousted diplomats are Bienvenido Abierno, acting chief of the Cuban Interests Section in the absence of Ramon Sanchez-Parodi, who has headed the mission here since it was opened but is temporarily in Cuba, and Virgilio Lora, who held a mid-level position as one of two consular officers.

Abierno said he was informed of the U.S. action by note and was not summoned to the State Department.

He has been in charge of the complex arrangements for Cuba's participation in next month's Pan American Games in Indianapolis for the last year and said in a telephone interview that it would be difficult for another person to take over the task at this late date.

"Ironically, we also got the word today that we will be permitted to fly our teams to the Games in Cuban planes," Abierno said.

One of the major sticking points in preparations was whether Cuban planes would be permitted to fly direct from Havana to Indianapolis. Cuban diplomats insisted that if their 300-strong Olympics contingent had to use U.S. carriers from southern Florida they could not afford to participate.

Under current law, Cuban aircraft are not allowed to fly over or land in U.S. territory. Indiana's congressional delegation campaigned vigorously to persuade the State Department to alter the normal procedure to meet the Cubans' demands.

Abierno said the loss of Lora would reduce the mission's ability to process applications for visas. The issuance of visas to Cuban-Americans to visit their families provides a major source of revenue for the Interests Section.

Bush Tops Funds List

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush has raised more campaign money than any other 1988 presidential hopeful, $9.4 million, with Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis leading Democrats with $4.6 million, their campaigns report.

Possible Republican candidate Pat

Robertson claims to have collected $8.2 million but has not formally reported his campaign funding.

Bush, after spending $4.4 million in his unannounced campaign, still had more in the bank, $5 million, than the total raised by any announced candidate at this early stage of the campaign.

Arabs Worrying About U.S. Entry Into Gulf Fighting

By MICHAEL ROSS
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

CAIRO, Egypt — As the Reagan administration proceeds with plans to provide naval escorts for Kuwaiti tankers in the Persian Gulf, Arab officials and diplomats are expressing growing concern that the United States may be drawn into an unpredictable situation with uncontrollable consequences.

Until now, the nearly 7-year-old gulf war, while devastating to the combatants, Iran and Iraq, has had little impact on the outside world. However, the U.S. decision to register 11 Kuwaiti oil tankers as American ships and to provide them with naval protection against Iranian attack, beginning as early as next Wednesday, is liable to change this by introducing a whole new set of risks, these officials agree.

"The situation in the gulf is very serious and is escalating by the day. It could put the whole region, and perhaps even the world, at risk," a senior Egyptian official said this week.

Not all the experts hold such alarmist views, but all of those interviewed did agree that the war is about to enter a new "internationalized" phase whose effects are likely to ripple far beyond the waters of the turbulent gulf itself.

The risks arise from the escalating violence that could be triggered by a military clash between the United States and Iran.

Egyptian and Western military experts described several scenarios and said their concerns stemmed chiefly from the difficulty of foreseeing where any of them would lead.

One scenario begins with Iran attempting to attack a reflagged Kuwaiti vessel or, less likely, one of the U.S. warships escorting it. In either case, the United States would probably have to retaliate militarily, initiating a sequence of events that could drag Washington directly into the war.

Even if Iran shies away from a direct confrontation with the U.S. Navy, it can be expected to step up its attacks on other commercial shipping in the gulf as a way of making the U.S. Navy patrols look ineffectual, analysts say. Although the Navy's role, at present, is only to protect tankers flying U.S. flags, the declared aim of the patrols is to protect all commercial shipping in the gulf in order to keep international sea lanes open.

"What does the Reagan administration do if the tanker war escalates, if there are more attacks rather than less as a result of the increased U.S. presence?" asked a Western diplomat. "Does it withdraw, which would be seen as another failure and a humiliation? Or does it expand its role and in doing so become sucked into a vicious and unpredictable war? And if that happens, what will be the Soviet response?"

"These are very disturbing questions," the diplomat added, "and the most disturbing thing about them is that no one seems to know any of the answers."

Indeed, diplomats and Egyptian officials say their misgivings are magnified by what they see as the Reagan administration's lack of a clearly-defined policy towards the gulf war or an accurate perception of the situation into which it is thrusting itself.

For instance, administration officials have insisted that the reflagging operation does not represent a departure from the declared U.S. position of neutrality in the war. However, as several diplomats noted, virtually no one in the Middle East, least of all Iran, is likely to see it that way.

For one thing, Iraq, which initiated the so-called "tanker war," still attacks a lot more ships than Iran does. Indeed, although everyone now agrees that it was an accident, it was Iraq that illustrated the dangers facing the United States in the gulf with its May 17 attack on the guided missile frigate Stark, which resulted in the loss of 37 American lives.

While each side in the gulf war has tried to use the tanker war to disrupt the other's oil exports, Iran has another reason for targeting ships from Kuwait, which is a staunch Iraqi ally and a major transit point for armaments entering Iraq.

"No matter how it is portrayed in Washington, if you try protect only one side's shipping and not the other's, it is going to be seen in the gulf as an intervention on behalf of Iraq," one senior diplomat said.

The consequences of taking sides, or at least of appearing to take them, also could undermine another declared U.S. policy objective of trying to keep communications open with Iran to preclude the possibility of its turning more pro-Soviet, the experts say. This was the rationale originally advanced by President Reagan, among others, to justify the covert sale of U.S. weapons to Iran as part of the secret negotiations to free American hostages held by pro-Iranian groups in Lebanon.

But any overt "tilt towards Iraq now runs the risk of having precisely the opposite effect — you may end up pushing the Iranians further and faster towards the Russians," a Western European diplomat said.

So far, very little of this concern has been expressed in public, and indeed none of the officials interviewed by the Los Angeles Times would speak for attribution. Their reticence partly reflects the fact that it was Kuwait itself that requested superpower protection for its tankers. But, in the wake of the disclosures of the Iran-Contra affair, there is also, in the words of an Egyptian official, "considerable sympathy" for any attempt by the Reagan administration to shore up its badly damaged credibility by showing support for an important Arab ally.

Still, in private, off-the-record conversations, doubts are expressed over whether the administration really has a firm grasp of the political and military implications of its intended actions.

"A policy that has you protecting ships against attacks by a country to which you have until very recently been supplying arms is a policy that seems to be going around in circles," one source said.

"Catching these fellows could prove difficult. They will be fighting a guerrilla war at sea," one military analyst said.

"No one can really predict what they will do. The Revolutionary Guards are not even wholly under the sphere of Iranian influence," a diplomat added.

Some experts still think the threat posed by all these uncertainties is over-rated.

U.S. Pushes Gulf Escort Plan As Congress Drops Opposition

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is going ahead with protection of 11 Kuwaiti oil tankers starting next week after congressional opponents dropped their attempt to delay the plan.

Senate Democrats tried and failed three times in the past week to end a GOP filibuster aimed at protecting the president's plans. Finally, on Wednesday, they gave up.

Elsewhere, a U.S. Navy demolition team was preparing to clear underwater mines laid in the gulf by Iran, and a Pentagon spokesman said some details of U.S. plans in the gulf may have to be changed after three members of Congress told reporters the Navy escorts would begin July 22.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., speaking after defeat of the latest Democratic effort to end the GOP filibuster and clear the way for measures critical of Reagan's gulf plans, said the Senate needs to "get back on track" with other legislation.

"We've had our shots," Byrd said. "We've sent our message that a majority of this chamber is opposed to this policy."

The administration is putting U.S. flags and captains aboard the Kuwaiti tankers and will have Navy warships escort them through the war-torn gulf. Critics fear Kuwait's previous aid to Iraq will mean that the United States will be drawn into the Iran-Iraq war.

ABC News quoted U.S. intelligence sources Wednesday as saying that for the first time in years, Iran has been flying aerial combat exercises near the Strait of Hormuz, using half a dozen F-4 fighters to practice intercepting other planes.

The U.S. Navy mine-clearing operation is planned for the channel leading to Kuwait's main oil terminal.

The operation is a forerunner to the beginning of the U.S. convoy program, according to Pentagon officials.

Pentagon sources said the 18-man Navy ordnance disposal squad last week finished locating the underwater mines. About a dozen have been identified, they said.

The Navy team will operate from small Kuwaiti patrol boats, with divers attaching explosive charges to each mine, the sources said. When all the charges have been attached, the mines will be destroyed simultaneously.

White House and Pentagon officials refused Wednesday to confirm that July 22 is the start-up date for Reagan's convoy program.

Seniors Find Friends At Center

By PHYLLIS MENSING
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — They wanted to do more than play pinocle and bingo.

So a group of senior citizens on Chicago's near North Side planned their own health center, with cooking and exercise classes and a medical staff trained in geriatrics.

"To me, it's like having a good friend in the neighborhood," said Reinhardt Wagner, 57, one of 700 members of the White Crane Senior Health Center, which has been serving Chicago's Lakeview and Lincoln Park communities since September.

White Crane is the result of a partnership involving seniors, a major medical center and the community. That kind of partnership, and the active involvement of the seniors, makes it a facility that others around the country are studying.

"Few programs nationwide are as thoughtfully and respectfully put together," said Stephanie FallCreek, director of the New Mexico State Agency on Aging and a consultant for California's Kaiser Family Foundation, which is doing a national study of model senior centers.

Ms. FallCreek's study also includes Project Staywell, a multiple-center project in New York City; the Health Enrichment Center in Kansas City; the Growing Younger, Growing Wiser program in Boise, Idaho; and the Quality Aging program in Salt Lake City.

All the programs are considered models because of the active participation of their senior citizens, Ms. FallCreek said. Her study, to be finished in the fall, is focusing on what makes each program a success.

"White Crane is unique in its ability to offer a very comprehensive variety of both medical and health services to older adults in a non-restrictive setting," Ms. FallCreek said.

Walk into the one-story center, and you are offered a cup of coffee and a chance to chat with friendly, busy people.

Senior citizens age 56 to 92 come twice a week, on average, to learn how to cook nutritious meals, to get a massage, to browse in the library or to learn Tai Chi, a Chinese series of exercises featuring slow, circular motions.

"My philosophy is that what you can move, you ought to keep moving," Shizu Lofton, 73, the Tai Chi instructor, tells her students.

White Crane's staff of six is trained to work with senior citizens — and the seniors appreciate that.

"I came here to get a medical opinion," said Ethelyn Ann Sacks, 76,

"and after many months of specialists from California and other states, the people here finally told me what was wrong with me — my sinuses. I can't say enough about this place."

"Only recently has geriatrics become part of the training for doctors and nurses," explained Robert Skeist, medical director at White Crane. "As a result, a lot of health professionals wind up working with seniors by default."

"They get impatient because senior citizens can't hear and it takes them longer to communicate, or they get discouraged because they can't cure a chronic illness. And with seniors, you also have to be more careful with drugs because of possible side effects."

Skeist said working with people 60, 70 and 80 years old has put aging into perspective for him.

"It helps me realize that how I'll be at that age depends not so much on my chronological age, but on what I'm doing with my life. And it makes me realize there will be many more options when I get older."

White Crane is funded by the Illinois Masonic Medical Center, which also operates a nursing care facility. Its annual budget is around $300,000, and its policy-making board includes representatives of the community, senior citizens and the hospital.

Suzanne Sullivan, administrator of ambulatory care at Illinois Masonic, said about $50,000 has come in from the $1 to $2 fees charged for classes and other services, and the rest is picked up by Illinois Masonic. Special arrangements are made for people who are unable to pay.

The community, whose senior citizens make up 10 to 15 percent of its 154,000 residents, has contributed to an "affordability fund" which provides supplemental Medicaid insurance for seniors and a program for routine foot care. The center is also working on ways to fund special services for the hearing impaired.

"We feel we're on the right track," said Ruth Shriman, 76. "But we've just started. We feel we have to become absolutely affordable to everybody. That's the hardest part."

"It has to be a reflection of senior needs, not determined by anybody but the seniors."

Ms. FallCreek said, "Too many programs do things to older people or for older people, instead of with older people."

But so far, say its members, White Crane has given them a chance to be involved, a chance to stay healthy and a chance to meet new friends.

FACTS ABOUT FAST FOOD
ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Contrary to popular belief, fast food is not junk food, according to a dietitian at the University of Rochester.

"There's plenty of protein, iron, B vitamins and calcium, and, with the welcome addition of the salad bar, even fiber has been added," says Liudmila Harker. "The problem is that fast food also has lots of fat, sugar and sodium."

The answer? Order milk or juice; ask for fries without salt, pick a smaller burger and balance it with a larger salad. Also, Harker says to vary your choice of restaurants since different places stress different items.

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Daniel Lyon Jr. of Atlanta announce the engagement of their daughter, Mary Allison, to William Henry Cobb VI, son of Dr. and Mrs. William Henry Cobb of Greenville. An Aug. 8 wedding is planned.

To avoid extra calories, cut a baking potato into strips, place them on a greased baking sheet in one layer and bake for 45 minutes in a 350 degree oven. They will be crisp and lower in calories than French fries.

Wedding Vows Said June 27

JACKSONVILLE — Cynthia Marie Damm and Stephen James Woodward were united in marriage during an afternoon ceremony June 27 in the Lutheran Church of Our Savior. The Rev. Richard Boger Jr. conducted the ceremony.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Woodward of Greenville. He is a graduate of Georgia Institute of Technology.

SMALL SPROUTS CAN BE BIG

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Sprouts may be small but they are big on nutrients, according to Better Homes and Gardens.

Sprouts contain vitamins and minerals, they're low in calories and they're easier to digest than beans themselves. Sprouts can be grown at home in a jar or on a tray. They also taste good inside casseroles, on sandwiches or topping off a salad.

Housekeeper's Houseguest Is Welcome Some Of The Time

DEAR ABBY: Ten months ago my husband and I allowed our housekeeper's boyfriend (I'll call him Steve) to stay in our guesthouse rent-free while he was temporarily unemployed. He stayed for three months, two unemployed and one catching up on his bills.

At the beginning of the fourth month, we suggested that since he was working, he should pay rent. He thought we were asking too much, so he moved into a room about 15 miles from our house. The problem is that now Steve comes over to "visit" our housekeeper (I'll call her Donna) at least five nights a week. He has a key to our house, so he comes here right after work, lets himself in, showers in Donna's bathroom, stays for dinner with her, stays overnight in her room and then has breakfast in our kitchen before he leaves for work in the morning.

I think Steve is taking advantage of our hospitality. My husband says I should keep my mouth shut because if I say anything, Donna might quit, and housekeepers as good as Donna are hard to find.

How can I discreetly tell Donna that Steve is welcome in our home, but not five nights a week, including meals? — FARBRENT, IN BRENTWOOD

DEAR FARBRENT: You stated it very well. Now rehearse those lines before a mirror a few times, then deliver them to Donna.

I think you've been incredibly generous, so don't be defensive or apologetic. Be specific. Is Steve welcome to stay over once a week? Twice a month? Or not at all? It's your house, so you set the rules.

DEAR ABBY: I work with the nosiest man in the world. If he's standing by my desk and happens to see a letter on my desk that interests him, he will boldly pick it up and read it. He even has the nerve to ask me questions about it. If I say, "It's confidential," he says, "That's OK, I was just curious."

If I'm on the phone and he walks in, he will signal to me to tell him who I'm talking to. And after I hang up, he'll ask questions pertaining to some of the comments he's overheard.

Abby, this man has absolutely no judgment and no manners. Worse yet, he doesn't think he's doing anything wrong — he just doesn't know better. He's driving me crazy. I have all I can do to keep from being rude to him.

Maybe if you print this, I, and a few other people, will clip it and put it on his desk. Then he might get the message. Thanks. — HAD IT IN THE OKC STOCKYARDS

DEAR HAD IT: Don't rely on anything as subtle as "a few clippings" to change this man's behavior. Unless he signs your paycheck — which he obviously does not — you are under no obligation to answer his questions or tolerate his nosiness. You don't have to be rude. Just be firm. Good luck. (This turkey is getting on my nerves, and I don't even know him!)

DEAR READERS: Do you have a friend or relative who is anxiously waiting for some tests to come back from his/her physician? (Or maybe you are.)

If so, I'd like to share a little prayer with you — written by my friend, Rabbi Bernard Raskas, Temple Aaron, St. Paul, Minn.:

PATIENCE

God, please give me patience. The doctors do not yet know what is causing my distress. They are making many tests. Over and again, they have taken samples of my blood. They have probed me, listened to my heart, X-rayed me, injected me. And I wait — and wait — and wait! It is very hard to wait hours, even days, for results. I am anxious and sometimes frightened. But, the laboratory technicians and the doctors cannot hurry the process. Every test must be carefully done and evaluated. Why look for the worst and not consider the best? Oh, Lord, please help me to stop worrying — that I may use this time for reflection and to count my blessings.

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Professor Says Mothers Find It's Not Easy Raising Sons

BINGHAMTON, N.Y. (AP) — Women communicate more freely with their daughters than with their sons, and find raising sons more complicated, according to an associate professor at the State University of New York at Binghamton.

Linda Forcey, a sociologist who teaches interdisciplinary studies, says there has been little research or analysis on how women see relationships with sons, particularly with sons over the age of 16.

"There is no mother-son equivalent to 'Portnoy's Complaint,' which explores the relationship from a son's point of view," she says.

Her recently published book, "Mothers and Sons: Toward an Understanding of Responsibility," is "an effort to listen, really listen, to what mothers at all economic levels are saying about their view of the responsibility of raising sons." Although women often are labeled "peacekeepers" within the family, particularly between fathers and sons, Forcey says they are increasingly uncomfortable in that role, and even resent it.

"Women speak in a different voice ... and make moral judgments in a different way than fathers," she says. "They tend to be more conciliatory and compromising."

"They frequently are so concerned about rocking the boat in the father and son relationship that, unfortunately, the price they often pay within their families is the loss of any voice at all."

She says mothers of sons feel com-strained because they have been conditioned to believe it is their responsibility to raise sons who are "masculine" in the traditional sense of the word.

Many encourage their sons to enter the military, yet Forcey's research indicates women often have ambivalent feelings about those traditional masculine values.

Her study of 120 mothers turned up some "joyous stories" of blossoming relationships between women and their sons, particularly among those who have begun to challenge the traditional mother role, she says.

"Women who have developed their own identities, through education, outside activities and work, are becoming more at ease and communicating better with their sons," she says.

Most important, Forcey adds, "women are questioning the myth that they alone are responsible for the well-being of their sons. This is the necessary beginning of true friendship and more realistic expectations between mothers and sons."

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .35 to 174.93. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 1.14 at 352.03.

On Wednesday the Dow Jones industrial average edged up 2.39 to a new closing high of 2,483.74.

Vietnam Wants Aid

da." Rarely is mention made here of the South Vietnamese army as having played any role in the conflict.

Yet, however open it may be to debate among Americans, Vietnam's version of the Vietnam War — in the monuments, the constant references to "atrocities" in Vietnamese-made films about the war — illustrates the depth of emotions that persist and the still perceptible "wounds of war," as foreign minister Nguyen Co Thach put it.

Much of the legacy of America's involvement here is less subjective. There are still countless thousands of Amerasian children — fathered by GIs — left behind in the south, who have grown into young adults.

Also, western and Vietnamese health officials are still trying to determine the health effects of the spraying of the defoliant known as Agent Orange by the Americans. Dr. Arnold Schechter, a New York physician working with the Vietnamese on the Agent Orange question, said persons tested in south Vietnam show higher levels of the potentially cancer-causing dioxin found in Agent Orange than the average in the United States and Europe, and further study is needed. The Vietnamese, without statistical proof, blame a higher-than-average number of deformed babies on the wartime use of the defoliant.

It is this collective legacy, as Vietnam sees it, that lies at the heart of Hanoi's insistence that the United States should pay for past "crimes" through massive monetary aid.

But Vietnam's world view is not shared by official policy-makers in Washington, for whom the only continued interest in Vietnam is the emotional issue of the 1,800 servicemen still missing from the war.

The differing perceptions threaten to collide, as the two sides prepare to resume talks over "humanitarian issues" that Hanoi hopes might pave the way for eventually normalized relations.

No one here specifically uses the term "reparations." But the feeling is unmistakable: the Vietnamese want American reconstruction aid and feel they deserve it.

question about that and that was my intent all along," he said.

Beckler, who disclosed on Wednesday that Poindexter is the target of a criminal investigation, complained that "the long arm of the independent counsel has reached down into the core of this committee."

That brought a soft-spoken, but firm, rebuttal from Hamilton, who said, "That is totally and absolutely false ... most disturbing and I reject it categorically."

The investigating committees have conferred frequently with independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh since beginning their respective probes. But Hamilton said it has done no more consulting than is required by statutes covering their relationship.

Walsh, in fact, has complained that he hasn't gotten sufficient cooperation from the select committees.

Liman's questioning related to congressional attempts to learn the details of the secret supply operation in 1985, while Poindexter was deputy national security adviser, and during the summer of last year, while he was the No. 1 man.

"I intended to withhold information from Chairman Hamilton" last year, Poindexter said.

For all the legal sparring initiated by Beckler, Poindexter's testimony was far less explosive than on Wednesday, when the admiral testified that he never told President Reagan that Iranian arms sale proceeds had been diverted to the Contras.

Committee members say Poindexter's testimony raises other questions, however.

Matthews was placed under a $50,000 bond, while bond for the man arrested Wednesday was set at $90,000.

Chief Ted Holmes, emphasizing the investigation "was a cooperative effort," said the operation "involved the use of undercover officers from agencies outside of this area."

"Most of the people arrested are street-level heroin and cocaine dealers," Holmes said.

The chief also said that "although this operation was not a specific part of our problem-oriented policing program (an effort to reduce crime in the West Fifth Street area) it should contribute to reducing the street-level sales of drugs" in that targeted area.

Dead Heat Results In 2 Golds

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Mark Thompson and Bart Pippenger dead-heated in the men's 100-meter butterfly in the first swimming tie for first place in the eight-year history of the U.S. Olympic Festival.

Thompson got a gold medal for swimming. Pippenger got a gold medal for team handball.

Pippenger, who told officials to give Thompson the gold, could have been presented with a silver medal after the rare dead heat Wednesday night. But "he wanted to receive a gold on the stand," Ross Larson, a member of the company in charge of the medals, said in explaining the unusual presentation after the unusual finish.

"We had some extra golds with us in case there was a tie," Larson said. "Team handball medals aren't being handed out until next Saturday."

Pippenger was to receive his real gold today, after the 100 butterfly gold was engraved.

Thompson, 17, of Tigard, Ore., and Pippenger, 19, of Kamiah, Idaho, both were timed in 55.99 seconds.

"We've swam against each other in the Northwest, so I was glad to share it (the victory) with him," Pippenger said.

"It was the biggest win of my life, so I'm very happy," Thompson said.

While Thompson and Pippenger were elated about sharing a victory, Sarah Anderson, 17, of Moreno Valley, Calif., was excited about collecting her third and fourth swimming golds.

"I came into the Festival not even expecting to place very well," Anderson said after winning the women's 800-meter freestyle in eight minutes, 46.26 seconds and anchoring the North A team to victory in the 400 freestyle relay in 3:56.21.

"I got here, and got caught up by all the excitement of the Festival, and saw this awesome facility," Anderson said of the Koury Natatorium at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. "I guess I psyched myself up to swim here."

Tuesday night, in the opening swimming program, Anderson won the 200 freestyle in Festival record time and was on the winning 800 freestyle relay team.

Tonight, in the final swimming session, Anderson will be in two more events, and could wind up with six golds.

Jeff Olsen in 1985 and Cynthia "Sippy" Woodhead in 1979 both won six events, but both were denied their final golds because they won non-Olympic events. The non-Olympic events have since been eliminated from the Festival.

While Anderson has been the most productive participant in the three-day-old Festival, John Smith, a 136.5-pound wrestler from Stillwater, Okla., has been the most courageous.

Smith, his left hand bandaged to protect broken bones and his ribs taped to support torn cartilage, extended his winning streak to 52 Wednesday night in reaching tonight's final.

After defeating Glenn Goodman of Tampa, Fla. 8-3, 4-3, Smith said his injuries would not prevent him from meeting top-seeded Steve DePetro of Wayne, N.J., in the final.

"I'm going to have to be hurting awfully bad not to wrestle," Smith said. "I can wrestle with pain. It's part of the sport."

Jack Cuvo of Easton, Pa., who draws inspiration from hometown hero Larry Holmes, the former world heavyweight boxing champion, reached the final of the 114.5-pound division.

Cuvo, in his eighth match in three days, beat Jeffrey Henderson of Cooper-ville, Mich., 8-5 in the third match of their best-of-three series. In the final, he will face top-seeded Greg Robbins of Orem, Utah.

"I'm physically drained," Cuvo said.

In a most unusual finish, Ken Chertow of Huntington, W. Va., was awarded a victory in the 125.5-pound class after being elbowed in the back of the head by Charlie Heard of Morgantown, W. Va.

Heard won the first match 5-4, but Chertow was leading the second 4-3 when the disqualification occurred.

Heard was upset over some "cheap shots" by Chertow "that the referee didn't see."

"It frustrated me," Heard said.

There was no frustration in the swimming pool for Nadine Takai, 17, of Waipahu, Hawaii, or Jon Olsen, 18, of Jonesboro, Ark.

Both raised their gold medal haul to three.

Takai, winner of golds in the women's 400 individual medley and the 800 freestyle relay Tuesday night, captured the 200 individual medley in 2:20.94.

Olsen, winner of the men's 50 freestyle and on the winning 400 medley relay Tuesday night, got his third gold on the North A team that won the 800 freestyle relay in 7:42.66.

It took a great anchor leg by Mike "Magic" Johnson, 17, of Ankeny, Iowa, to secure the 800 relay victory.

Johnson began the final leg more than three meters behind Chas Morton, 16, of Franklin, Tenn., who had won the 200 individual medley Tuesday night and the 400 individual medley in 4:29.21 Wednesday night.

Johnson passed Morton with less than 10 meters remaining for his second gold of the night.

Earlier, Johnson won the 200 freestyle in 1:54.64.

"Altitude training did wonders for me," said Johnson, who recently has been training at Colorado Springs, Colo.

"I usually take it out hard and die, which means no kick at the end."

This time, Johnson had the kick and Morton didn't.

Davis' 64 Good For Early Lead

MUIRFIELD, Scotland (AP) — Rodger Davis, an Australian just starting to make his mark on the European PGA Tour, slammed through a becalmed Muirfield course in 7-under par 64 to take the lead in the first round of the British Open today.

The score was one stroke over the Muirfield record of 63 set by Japan's Isao Aoki and the lowest since changes were made to the course in 1980.

And Davis said it could have been much lower. He had eight birdies but missed three other birdie putts by inches.

"You don't want to say you're unlucky shooting 7-under, but this could have been anything," Davis said.

With more than half the field on the course, Davis was three shots clear of a pair of Americans — two-time British Open champion Lee Trevino and Bob Tway, the top golfer on last year's U.S. PGA Tour and defending PGA tournament champion.

"I'm putting very well," the 49-year-old Trevino said. "I've got a shot at it. I've definitely got a shot at it."

Paul Azinger, tops in this year's U.S. tour standings, was another stroke back at 68. Azinger is playing his first British Open.

The 1982 Masters champion, Craig Stadler was at 69 after being penalized two strokes for an illegal drop on the fifth hole. He offered no excuse.

"I played too well to hang my head and mope about it," Stadler said.

Defending champion Greg Norman of Australia, without a tournament title this year on the U.S. circuit, teed off just after midday.

Others in the 153-player field included five-time Open champion Tom Watson, who won the last time the tournament was staged here in 1980 and is trying to tie Harry Vardon's record six titles; U.S. Open champion Scott Simpson; and Masters titlist Larry Mize, all from America.

Seve Ballesteros of Spain and West Germany's Bernhard Langer enter the tournament as favorites.

On the opening day of the four-day Grand Slam event, the golfers took turns hammering the normally treacherous Muirfield links, left naked by a warm, cloudy and unusually windless day.

"Conditions were very good for scores," Tway said. And the leader board showed it.

Davis, winner of the Whyte and Mackey European PGA Championship last season but with no finish better than runner-up on the circuit this year, started his attack quickly.

He birdied the second, third, fifth, seventh and ninth holes, bogeyed the 10th but got the shot back on the 13th, then finished with birdies on the 17th and 18th.

"It was probably my best round ever," Davis said.

Trevino, seeking to duplicate his Muirfield triumph of 1972, bogeyed the first hole but birdied the next four. He was 5-under through 11 before another bogey, and he held par from there.

Tway, whose best finish this season is a third-place tie, birdied five holes, including three of the last five, and bogeyed only the seventh. He saved par on the 448-yard par-4 18th hole after driving into the right rough off the tee.

"I haven't played up to my capabilities this year, but there's a lot of this year left," Tway said.

Par was cracked in the very first threesome on the first day of the four-day Grand Slam event. Carl Mason of England birdied the last two holes for a 1-under 70, soon matched by David Gifford of Scotland.

Welshman Ian Woosnam, the top money winner on the European circuit this season with three titles, shot an even-par 71.

Trevino is eligible for the over-50 Seniors Tour next year, but he said after a final practice round that he'll return to the British Open "as long as they'll have me."

"When I turn 50 in December and go on the Seniors Tour, I will play a full schedule in the United States," he said. "But I will not play the majors there — the U.S. Open, Masters and PGA."

"The only major I'll play is this one. I think I can win on these courses regardless of how old I am."

Nicklaus Looks At The Positives

MUIRFIELD, Scotland (AP) — Jack Nicklaus suggested he had a couple of positive factors working for him as the British Open Golf Championship got under way.

"I finally started hitting the ball a little bit better than I had been this year. That helps," Nicklaus said Wednesday after his final practice round for the 116th British Open that was to start today. "And I like the golf course. That helps."

In fact, when questioned, Nicklaus admitted both may be understatements. "I love this place," he said of the Muirfield links on the southern tip of the Firth of Forth, the site of this year's edition of golf's oldest championship.

And there are good reasons for his affection for the course after which he named his own layout in Dublin, Ohio.

"There really never was any question about it," Nicklaus said of the decision to name his course Muirfield Village. "It was here that I won my first British Open (in 1966)."

"Everyone said coming in that I didn't have the game — since I hit the high ball — to win in the wind on a British Open course. So winning here made it very special. It completed a sweep of the majors (which also includes the U.S. Open, the Masters and PGA), and that made it special."

"It's just a very special place to me. I have a great love for Muirfield. I think it's the best of the courses used in the (British Open) rotation."

"Don't get me wrong. I love St. Andrews, too, for what it is and for what represents in golf. But Muirfield is a better course," said Nicklaus, who counts three British Open titles among his record 18 major professional championships.

Of those majors, Nicklaus said, "The British Open is probably the most difficult to win."

"It takes more patience, more savvy, it takes knowing more about the game."

Those requirements, however, are diminished in the absence of wind, a condition that prevailed during practice rounds early this week.

Baseball Begins Second Half

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Home runs are increasing and so are strikeouts. The St. Louis Cardinals are way up and the New York Mets are way down. Bret Saberhagen is back, Roger Clemens is struggling.

The second half of the 1987 baseball season resumed today after the All-Star break with everyone in pursuit of the Cardinals, Cincinnati, Minnesota and the New York Yankees while Mark McGwire chases Roger Maris.

"I don't know that much about him. What year did he set the record, 1961?" McGwire said of Maris' single-season mark of 61 home runs. McGwire, the Oakland rookie, leads the majors with 33 homers in 87 games.

Home runs have been the story of the season so far. Homers are 22 percent above last year's record pace and runs also are showing a large increase.

The debate over lively balls has reached such a crescendo that baseball announced this week it will re-test the balls to make sure they are not juiced-up.

"We don't expect to find anything different," American League President Dr. Bobby Brown said. "It's the same ball."

The ball that George Bell has homered on 29 times, Eric Davis 27 and Dale Murphy 25 is the same ball batters are missing more than ever. The strikeout rate is above last season's record mark and is up even more than the home-run pace.

While McGwire has been the biggest individual surprise, the Cardinals have been the most amazing team.

Despite injuries to John Tudor, Tommy Herr, Tony Pena and Danny Cox, the Cardinals lead the National League East by nine games over Montreal and 9½ over the World Series champion Mets.

Jack Clark is the heart of St. Louis' lineup. He leads the majors with 86 runs batted in and is batting .311 with 26 homers.

"People think that because I have a lot of home runs and RBIs that I'm doing well," Clark said. "I can do better."

But it would be hard to imagine the Cardinals doing any better considering their injuries. Cox was 8-3 before breaking a bone in his foot, although Tudor could start pitching next month after recovering from a broken leg.

The Yankees, held back because of their pitching the last two years, lead the American League East by three games over Toronto. The Yankees made an early move to bolster their staff for the stretch by acquiring Steve Trout from the Chicago Cubs this week, and may be close to getting Floyd Bannister from the Chicago White Sox.

Davis, leading the NL with 27 homers, has helped the Reds take a 2½-game margin over Mike Scott's Houston Astros. Cincinnati can score runs, but how well it does in the second half will depend on pitching.

Former 20-game winner Tom Browning will have to pitch better than he did earlier in the season when he got demoted to the minors and Mario Soto remains a question mark.

So does Manager Pete Rose — will he play at all this season?

The AL West, as almost always, is a season-long scramble that turns into a race in September. Minnesota leads Oakland and Kansas City by two games. California is three games back, Seattle is 3½ behind and Texas trails by 6½.

The Twins do some pitching and get more hitting. Oakland can hit, Kansas City and California can pitch. Saberhagen keys the Royals' staff with a major league-leading 15-3 record and a 2.47 earned run average that is the best in the AL. Kansas City's Bo Jackson can hit home runs and strike out — and thinks he can play football, too.

"It is a hobby," said Jackson, the former Heisman Trophy winner who signed a contract with the Los Angeles Raiders during the All-Star break. "I wish I could make money from fishing, also."

Robinson Committed To Navy Only

ST. MARYS, Ga. (AP) — All-American David Robinson is committed to two years in the U.S. Navy, and the NBA's No. 1 draft pick isn't committing to anything else.

"I don't look at myself as playing for any specific team," says Robinson, an ensign in the Navy, a trained civil engineer, and the top pick of the San Antonio Spurs.

Robinson said that, in part because of his commitment to the Navy, he is in no hurry to begin contract negotiations with San Antonio.

"I told them (the Spurs) I wanted to go down and see first, to talk to some of the people, maybe talk to some of the players," Robinson said Wednesday during interviews at the Kings Bay Submarine Base where he is a construction supervising officer.

"You get a little bit of a feeling about a team seeing them on television, but there's a lot you don't know," said the Naval Academy's star center, who scored 2,669 points for the Midshipmen and led the nation with 4.5 blocked shots per game last season.

Robinson said money was not a key issue in any negotiations. He admitted Washington would have been his first choice as a place to play.

"It's home," he said, but added, "I'm very flexible. I can live almost anywhere."

He said he wanted to play for a team backed by a "good organization, with the general manager fairly straightforward and the attitude on the team that it feels like you can go out there and win — even though your record may not have been that good last year."

As far as the money for a No. 1 draft pick is concerned, Robinson said, "I have no real idea of what I'm worth."

"If you gave me $1 million a year for six years, I'd be ecstatic," Robinson said. "But that may not be a real indication of what I'm worth to a specific NBA team."

He said determining the worth would be an agent's job. His job would be to decide where he wanted to play. He said he hopes he'll be able to visit San Antonio fairly soon after playing in this summer's Pan American Games.

"Hopefully I'll get a good feeling," Robinson said.

Asked if he really wanted to play for the Spurs, Robinson answered, "That's what I'm trying to figure out."

Robinson was reminded his two-year hitch in the Navy expires about the same time as the contract for Los Angeles Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. The possibility of being Abdul-Jabbar's successor has "definitely entered my mind," Robinson said.

He said he got a chance to see an NBA championship game in Los Angeles this spring.

He said it would be a tremendous challenge to try to fit into Abdul-Jabbar's shoes, conceding, "It would take me a few years."

Robinson said the Navy is a fine opportunity for him and he isn't sorry he has committed to two years in uniform. He didn't obtain basketball stardom until late in his career at the Naval Academy.

"If I had had a little crystal ball I would have transferred" to another school as a sophomore, Robinson said. "I would have been stupid not to. But I have absolutely no regrets about my decision."

Robinson said his time in the Navy is like an escape.

"You can't live in the limelight your whole life," Robinson said. "This is a place to come and be normal. Here they tell me, 'You wrote that letter wrong. Write it again, and again, and again,' like they did last week."

His workday is from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and most of the job is paperwork, writing letters, sitting in on negotiations with contractors, reviewing specifications and overseeing construction. A principle responsibility is the steel girder construction of the explosives-handling wharf at the base.

The 145-foot tall wharf will be the facility in which Trident II nuclear missiles are loaded into the 10 Trident submarines which will call Kings Bay their homeport.

"Basketball will be after work and on my own," Robinson said.

Conceding there is little opportunity to improve his game with weightlifting, shooting, running and solo workouts, he said competition in preparation for the Pan American Games and, he hopes, the 1988 Olympics, will give him valuable practice "playing at that level of competition."

The time in the Navy, Robinson said, will give both his body and mind a chance to mature before taking on the rigors of the NBA. The delay won't hurt his game, he said.

"I know I have a lot of potential. I don't think that two years is enough, even if I sat around and watched TV all the time, to make me bad enough that I wouldn't make an impact on an NBA team."

John Wesley Powell completed the first exploration of the Colorado River in 1869, having traveled through the Grand Canyon by boat.

Barnhill Is Set For Pan-Am Trials

Former Rose high swimming standout Kelly Barnhill has qualified for the U.S. Senior National Swimming Championship to be held in Clovis, Calif., July 27-31.

A top four performance in the meet would qualify Barnhill for the Pan-Am Games to be held in Indianapolis in August. A top two performance would place him on the Pan-Pacific team.

Barnhill qualified in the 100-yard breaststroke with a time of 57.69 seconds and also in the medley relay. Barnhill is presently competing for the Pinecrest Swim Camp, whom he has competed for the last five summers.

Barnhill, a rising junior at N.C. State, swims the 50-meter and 100-meter free style and the 100-meter breast stroke for the Wolfpack.

"You have to be first or second to make the Pan Pacific team and third and fourth puts you on the Pan-Am team," said Gary Butts, Barnhill's coach at Pinecrest. "He's probably going to have to take a pretty good drop in the 100 to be in the top four. If he can go out there and take another time drop this summer, I feel he's got a pretty good shot.

"I think he's just glad to be going. He'll go out there and do the best he can do. I don't think there is a lot of pressure on him."

Fines Are Handed Down

NEW YORK (AP) — Cleveland Indians outfielder Brett Butler, insisting "they're making an example of me," says he's going to appeal a five-day suspension by the American League office for his involvement in a brawl with the Kansas City Royals.

"They (American League officials) must have gotten together and talked about it," said Butler, who was suspended Wednesday along with Willie Wilson and Danny Jackson of the Royals. "After two pitches thrown at my head, do they want me to stand by and whistle Dixie?"

"The media's been talking about it, and (AL President Bobby) Brown knows about it. I've never started a fight in baseball and I've never started a fight in my life before. I'm here to play baseball, not to fight."

"It's going to be appealed. There's no doubt in my mind. That's not fair. I think it's a severe penalty for a guy charging the mound. It comes out at $21,000 or $22,000, five days' pay for me, for charging the mound."

Butler, Wilson and Jackson were suspended for five games by Brown for their roles in two bench-clearing brawls last week. The suspensions were scheduled to start today, all three have appealed, automatically delaying the penalties pending a hearing before Brown.

In a game last Tuesday, Wilson was knocked down by a pitch from Cleveland's Ken Schrom. Wilson flew out on the next pitch, then charged the mound and tackled Schrom. Both benches emptied and Wilson was ejected from the game.

On Wednesday night, the game was delayed for 16 minutes in the bottom of the first inning when Jackson threw his first pitch behind Butler, Cleveland's leadoff hitter, then threw the next one over his head. Butler charged the mound and again both benches emptied.

Jackson and Butler were ejected, but the Indians played the game under protest, claiming Kansas City Manager Billy Gardner also should have been kicked out.

Close pitches had also caused trouble in the first game of the Indians-Royals series. Cleveland pitcher Sammy Stewart threw a fastball over Frank White's head on the pitch following an eighth-inning homer by Danny Tartabull.

China Objects To MacArthur Photo, U.S. Cancels Exhibit

By JOHN M. GOSHKAL.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States Wednesday canceled plans to send an exhibition of 51 paintings from the National Portrait Gallery to China after the Beijing government demanded that portraits of Gen. Douglas MacArthur Jr. and former Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir be removed because of "their potential for offending the sensitivities of the Chinese people."

MacArthur commanded U.S. and United Nations forces during the first part of the 1950-53 Korean War that pitted the United States against China and North Korea. The Chinese objection to the Meir portrait apparently was prompted by Beijing's policy of championing the Arab states in their dispute with Israel.

The portrait of MacArthur, who died in 1964, was done in 1952 by the late Howard Chandler Christy. The Meir portrait was painted by Raphael Sawyer in 1975. She died in 1978.

"They are trying to introduce politics and censorship into an event that is supposed to be purely cultural. That's offensive to this country, and we don't buy it," U.S. Information Agency Director Charles Z. Wick, said in a telephone interview Wednesday. Wick had been scheduled to go to Beijing to open the exhibition in September.

The exhibition, planned since last fall under the U.S.-China cultural-exchange agreement, is entitled "American Portraits of the Past 100 Years from the Collection of the National Portrait Gallery." After opening in Beijing, it was supposed to tour the provincial Chinese cities of Shenyang, Nanyang and Chengdu.

Carolyn Carr, assistant director of the gallery which is part of the Smithsonian Institution, said the exhibition was made up of "portraits of people who made significant contributions to American life in a variety of different fields." The portraits cover a broad spectrum of subjects including Samuel Clemens, Thomas Edison, T.S. Eliot, George Gershwin, Dashiell Hammett, Joe Louis and Maria Callas.

In addition, Carr said, "the exhibition was intended to show some of the best work of leading American painters during that period, beginning with the realism of the turn of the century and concluding with a pop-art portrait by Andy Warhol." Other prominent artists who would have been represented include Thomas Eakins, Thomas Hart Benton and Alice Neel.

USIA officials said that, after extensive discussions, the list of works to be included was agreed upon earlier this year, and a formal contract was made between the gallery and the Chinese government's cultural agency, with USIA contributing $190,000 toward the costs of mounting and transporting the exhibit. At the time, the officials said, the Chinese made no objection to the MacArthur and Meir portraits.

However, the officials said, several weeks ago, the Chinese advised Winston Lord, U.S. ambassador to Beijing, that there had been a "misunderstanding" and the two portraits had to be removed. The United States rejected the demand, and, the officials said, weeks of subsequent negotiation failed to break the impasse.

Finally, the officials continued, USIA informed China that if it did not agree by Monday of this week to honor the original agreement, there no longer would be sufficient time to pack and ship the exhibition for the scheduled September opening. When that deadline passed without any further word from the Chinese, Wick ordered the project canceled.

The U.S.-China cultural-exchange agreement was negotiated under former President Carter after the 1978 restoration of diplomatic relations that had been severed since 1949. Wick recalled Wednesday that one of his first duties after he became USIA director in 1981 was to visit Beijing for the opening of the first American exhibition under the agreement

— a display of paintings from the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

He said that exhibition almost was canceled because the Chinese wanted to remove a piece of abstract art by Jackson Pollack. However, he added, the Chinese relented after the United States said it would accept no censorship.

"I'm very disappointed that things couldn't be worked out properly this time, given the relationship that we have with China," he said. "But we have been confronted with a breach of a contract and, even more importantly, with unacceptable censorship. We simply can't buy it."

Rescuers Find 20 Victims

GRAND BORNAND, France (AP) — Rescue workers recovered 20 bodies and searched for up to 28 vacationers feared caught in a sea of mud that swept over an Alpine campground.

Experts from Paris were expected to begin an investigation today into Tuesday's disaster, which occurred after heavy rains turned a mountain stream, the Borne, into a torrent.

Hundreds of rescue workers searched along the muddy, debris-strewn river banks and inquired at homes throughout the southeastern French village of Grand Bornand, looking for people whose names were on the list of missing.

The muddy flood swept through the campground when it was filled with hundreds of people enjoying the long Bastille Day weekend.

The Borne later receded, but was still churning and black with mud.

Daniel Philippe, an aide to local governor Jean Jouandet, said Wednesday that 15 bodies had been found in France and another five in the Arve River near Geneva, Switzerland, about 25 miles away. The Borne feeds the Arve.

Earlier, Jouandet had said 14 bodies were found and up to 28 people were still missing. It was not clear if the bodies found later Wednesday were people initially listed as missing.

The 10 victims so far identified were French, Jouandet said.

At least nine people were seriously hurt, and dozens were treated for shock. A temporary morgue was set up in a church.

Witnesses, residents and police said the Borne was swollen by heavy rains and apparently burst through a dam of mud and debris that had collected during the storm. The wave of mud, trees and debris then slammed into the valley campground.

The Borne runs through the campground, but Grand Bornand Mayor Pierre Pochat said that normally in summer, "you can cross this stream without wetting your feet."

Peter Massman, 39, of Abingdon, England, told the London Evening Standard that he, his wife, Rosalyn, and children Jan, 9, and Olivia, 6, were in their trailer when a heavy rain started about 5:30 p.m.

Philippines Files Lawsuit To Recover Marcos' Loot

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The Philippine government today filed suit against Ferdinand Marcos and his family for recovery of $10 billion they allegedly stole during the deposed president's 20-year rule.

Ramon Diaz, chairman of a commission tracking down Marcos' alleged hidden wealth, said government lawyers were also preparing criminal charges against Marcos. But Diaz said the attorneys were currently tied up with more civil suits against some 40 individuals who allegedly connived with Marcos.

The Presidential Commission on Good Government, which Diaz heads, filed the civil suit before a special anti-graft court.

Diaz, at a news conference, said the $10 billion is "a very conservative estimate" of the amount of money Marcos, his wife Imelda, their three children and two sons-in-law acquired illegally.

The suit accuses the Marcoses of "breach of public trust" and "abuse of right and power" in their "plunder of the nation's wealth." It says they committed "theft of public funds... Extortion, bribery, embezzlement and other acts of corruption."

Diaz said his commission intends to begin filing criminal charges against the Marcoses and their associates next week despite problems posed by President Corazon Aquino's refusal to allow Marcos to return for security reasons.

Marcos has been living in Hawaii since his ouster in a civilian-military uprising in February 1986.

In addition to requiring the Marcoses to return the $10 billion with unspecified interest, the lawsuit seeks $12.5 million as reimbursement of expenses in tracking down the allegedly ill-gotten wealth, $10 million in actual damages and unspecified amounts in other damages and attorneys' fees.

Sea Rescue

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Five Sri Lankans whose boat drifted for 24 days after running out of fuel have been rescued near Bangladesh's St. Martins Island, officials said today.

They said Bangladeshi fishermen on Tuesday found the Sri Lankans "in bad shape" on their boat drifting in the Bay of Bengal.

The officials at the southern port city of Chittagong said by telephone that the Sri Lankans were apparently swept from the Indian Ocean to the Bay of Bengal by strong winds and currents.

The crew members were all ill and rushed to a medical center, they said. There was no immediate word on their condition.

U.S. Challenges Pakistani Attempt To Buy Steel Used In Nuclear Arms

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration wants Pakistan to explain an attempt to export a type of steel used in uranium enrichment, an effort that seems part of the Islamabad government's drive to build nuclear arms.

The arrest of a Pakistani resident of Canada last week on charges of trying to circumvent U.S. export laws presents a dilemma for the Reagan administration, which is relying on Pakistan for help in the covert war against the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

A 1985 law requires the administration to end foreign aid to any non-nuclear nation that tries to export from the United States materials that "would contribute significantly to manufacture of a nuclear explosive device."

The author of the law, Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., has scheduled hearings on the case next week before the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Asia.

"This is not an issue the administration can duck," Solarz warned.

The State Department responded on Wednesday by summoning Pakistani ambassador K.A. Marker to explain his government's involvement in the attempt to buy the steel, and also will press the case in Islamabad, department spokesman Charles Redman said.

"We cannot, and will not tolerate any clandestine, any illegal efforts to circumvent our export control laws," Redman said. The incident is still under investigation and no aid decision has been reached, he added.

Pakistan is a major recipient of U.S. aid, taking $630 million this year, and due for $670 million next year under a six-year, $4.02 billion package.

Several hundred million more dollars in covert aid is channelled through Pakistan to Moslem guerrillas who are battling the Red Army in Afghanistan, and to help between 2 million and 3 million Afghan refugees who have crossed the border since Soviet troops entered Afghanistan in December 1979.

Despite the secrecy surrounding Pakistan's nuclear program, "a consensus seems to have emerged that Pakistan is at the nuclear-weapons threshold: it either possesses all of the components needed to manufacture one or several atom bombs or else remains just short of this goal," said Leonard Spector, a Washington-based nuclear proliferation expert and author of "Going Nuclear."

Pakistan wants the maraging 350 steel, as the special alloy is called, for centrifuges at a second uranium enrichment plant at its nuclear facility in Kahuta, 18 miles from the capital of Islamabad, Spector said.

A second plant would allow Pakistan to produce fuel for as many as 10 bombs a year, while the one enrichment facility at Kahuta can produce 22 pounds of uranium annually, enough for about one bomb, Spector said.

Pakistan's drive to build nuclear weapons dates from the explosion of an atomic device in 1974 by India, its historic enemy, and has included theft, bribery and subterfuge to circumvent international controls on nuclear technology and material, according to court records in the United States and Western Europe.

Pakistan refuses to allow inspection of its Kahuta plant and will not sign the nuclear non-proliferation treaty until India does likewise, said Pakistani embassy spokesman Salim Gul Shaikh.

The spokesman declined to comment on the latest case, which was disclosed in papers filed last week in Philadelphia federal court when customs officials arrested Arshad Z. Pervaz of Pakistan for bribing an undercover agent to obtain a license to export 25 tons of maraging steel.

Top Banana

Do you take your bananas for granted? Experts say this greatly underestimated fruit is actually one of the most perfect human foods. Bananas are high in phosphorous, calcium, magnesium, potassium, sodium and iron, as well as vitamins A, B and G. Carbohydrates in bananas help satisfy hunger readily and sugars in the fruit will help your sweet tooth. Best of all, bananas are inexpensive. On average, each American eats approximately 21 pounds of bananas a year.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Avoid causing any unnecessary friction at home. Don't be too forceful in supporting your opinions.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Be extremely cautious in writing anything today. Friends could cause you trouble if you're not tactful.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Get your wardrobe in order—that shopping trip may not be needed. Friends can give you good financial advice.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Activities which require a lot of energy would be good for you. Don't let anyone control your thoughts.
LEO (July 22 to August 21): Concentrate on the future today. Be watchful for a new enterprise which could prove to be quite lucrative.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): A trip you've been considering is best postponed until there aren't so many conflicts to be dealt with.
SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Follow your intuition today, it's really very accurate. Don't be too serious, you really need to unwind.
CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Steer clear of a nervous friend. Invite some guests in and fulfill your social obligations. Avoid touchy topics.
AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): You can get needed backing for an important project, all you need do is ask. Success will equal the effort you expend.
PISCES (February 20 to March 20): If you explain the practical side of a new plan, you can get a lot of cooperation from co-workers. Use reason and logic.
IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, will have an interesting life from the earliest years, and will get assistance from influential people. Teach your child to be punctual and to keep any promises that are made. This will help to build up good will from others and the bank account at the same time.

The temptation of something for nothing is hard to resist. The trouble is, appearances can be deceptive.

North had a difficult hand to describe. His decision to make a jump rebid in clubs cannot be faulted, and we also agree with South's decision to bid three no trump despite no solid stopper in either major.
West made the normal lead of the top of his heart sequence. Declarer, who foresaw no problems, seized the opportunity for a second heart trick by playing low from dummy. He soon learned to regret that decision.
East won the king of hearts and shifted to a spade, West's ten forcing the ace. Now declarer decided it was time to run clubs, but he received a rude shock when West showed out on the second round of the suit. Declarer had to be content with eight tricks.
Had South not succumbed to that deadly sin, greed, he would have realized that nine tricks were in the bag if East could be kept off lead. To attain that total, one heart trick and five clubs would have been sufficient.

The winning line was to rise with the ace of hearts at trick one and run the nine of clubs. At worst, that would have lost to the jack, but the defenders would have been powerless to harm the contract. As the cards actually lay, the nine of clubs would have won and, with correct timing, declarer could have emerged with 11 tricks.

Mom Says Carson Ignores Grandchild

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — The 1-year-old daughter of Johnny Carson's son, Chris, is ignored by her father's wealthy family and forced to live in a trailer park surrounded by crack cocaine addicts, the girl's mother says.

"We're at the mercy of vultures. We're at the mercy of crack users," said Tanena Love, mother of Christal Carson. "There's a lot of jealousy and envy, and they think I have money and I don't."

Ms. Love and her attorney Ellis Rubin, asked a judge Wednesday to order an increase in child support for Christal from $125 a week to $500 a week.

Broward Circuit Judge Robert C. Abel Jr. took the case under advisement after the hearing and was expected to issue a ruling this week.

Chris Carson, 36, who bears a strong resemblance to his entertainer father, did not respond Ms. Love's assertion that he and his family had turned their backs on her because she is black.

The soft-spoken unemployed golf pro, whose sole income is a $35,000 annuity from his father, the host of NBC's "The Tonight Show," has acknowledged his daughter and paid $125 a week in temporary support since March.

"He has no real earning capacity demonstrated and none will be demonstrated," his attorney Herbert Stettin told the judge. "Chris Carson is unemployed for all practical purposes and has been for several years."

Carson testified that he knew he was in legal trouble when Ms. Love told him she was pregnant.

"She did it in such a fashion that I knew within a certainty that I was in hot water," he said, adding he later told his father the news. "I notified him when it became apparent to me that it would be quite a scandal."

Carson said he first saw his daughter when Ms. Love drove to his house shortly after the child was born.

"She told me that she'd been offered $60,000 by The National Enquirer for pictures of the child, and if I didn't want to see my name splashed across the front pages, I should get some money quick," he said. Carson said he paid her $2,000 within days.

Ms. Love, 35, claims $729 a month in expenses for Christal.

Rubin questioned Ms. Love in detail about her household expenses, which she said ranged from $18 a week for disposable diapers to $410 a month for rent on a mobile home.

She told Stettin her income has been limited to babysitting and ironing since Christal's birth. Ms. Love has two other children, and was divorced from a previous husband while pregnant with Christal.

Chris Carson testified he has cut his spending to make child support payments, and could charge $40 an hour for golf lessons if he needed extra money. He also said he considered becoming a commercial pilot, but quit lessons three months ago.

Outside court, Ms. Love told reporters she wants to move her daughter to a better neighborhood and get adequate support for the baby's education.

Through the testimony of witnesses, Stettin depicted Ms. Love as a clotheshorse taking advantage of the media at the expense of her child.

Steven Sparr, a free-lance photographer on assignment with The New York Post, testified that Ms. Love charged $1,200 worth of clothes, including one $750 outfit, on his credit card before a photo session.

Entertainment Unit Pushes AIDS Drive

L.A. Times-Washington Post

HOLLYWOOD — The Entertainment Industries Council, formed three years ago to address the growing drug problem within the entertainment community, has now issued a challenge to the film and television industry to use its influence to help educate the public about AIDS.

Backed by a three-year, $300,000 grant from the National Institute on Drug Abuse, the non-profit, industry-supported council plans to mail a "white paper" Thursday to 2,500 members of the entertainment community recommending steps they can take to become part of the anti-AIDS effort. A series of educational workshops with writers and directors is planned here for later in the year. Meetings with corporate executives will be held in New York.

The Entertainment Industries Council is backed by representatives from virtually all the major studios, networks and other groups within the entertainment industry.

Particularly targeted by the organization's new initiative are those who work creatively in television, according to council president Brian Dyak.

"AIDS has been perceived as a gay issue and that's just not the case," Dyak said from the organization's office here. The paper emphasizes that acquired immune deficiency syndrome is slowly spreading into the heterosexual community and is disproportionately affecting black and Latino populations. "And if television shows can help spread that message, it's better for everybody," Dyak said.

"We're stressing (the need for) safer sex and safer drug use. We're staying pretty general at this point, rather than taking official positions. It doesn't matter to us if it's depicted (on TV) as abstinence or with a condom, so long as the safe sex message gets across.

"As for drugs, we're trying to get the message out that users need to stop using drugs, or at least clean their works. But the bottom line is, no drug use at all."

The primary recommendations: AIDS-drug prevention educational messages should be placed within prime time. Celebrities should be used to deliver messages.

American Is Building New Globe Theater On Thames

By MATT WOLF
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — More than three centuries after Oliver Cromwell ordered the destruction of Shakespeare's playhouse, an American actor is building a new Globe Theater 200 yards from the site of the original.

With today's ground-breaking, Sam Wanamaker will begin the realization of a dream he has pursued for four decades — to restore an authentic Shakespearean stage to south bank of the River Thames.

"This is going to be a major attraction alongside Madame Tussaud's (Wax Museum), St. Paul's (Cathedral), and the Tower of London," the 68-year-old expatriate American actor-director said jubilantly Wednesday.

The British were not initially enthusiastic about the project and sometimes he wondered whether it was to be or not to be.

"The British are very cynical and overly sophisticated people," he said. "The idea of the reconstruction of a building three to four centuries old doesn't occur to them because so many buildings (of that period) already still stand."

Wanamaker's persistence has been tried repeatedly since he first conceived the idea of building the theater, during a trip to London in 1949. At that time, he was amazed to discover that the site of the original Globe had been allowed to fall to ruin.

He said that because he was an American outsider, his appeals for reconstruction of the theater were discounted.

"With my not being perhaps on the level of the Gielguds, the Oliviers, and so on, people had no conviction that my intentions were on the highest level of art," he said.

Nonetheless, he won respect as a Shakespearean actor through performances such as a 1959 role as Iago opposite Paul Robeson's Othello at Stratford-on-Avon.

He also found the British government had other priorities.

"They were very concerned 18 years ago with the fact they were about to build the National Theater and, then, the Barbican (home to the Royal Shakespeare Company)," Wanamaker said.

"The idea of another Shakespearean center competing for funding was something they didn't want to encourage."

His biggest struggle was with the borough council of Southwark, which canceled a 125-year lease signed in 1980, claiming the site was needed for public housing. A legal battle ensued, resulting in an out-of-court settlement in Wanamaker's favor in June 1986.

"Shakespeare belongs to the whole of mankind, not just one country," he said.

Although replicas of the Globe exist in America — from Hofstra College outside New York City to the Old Globe Theater in San Diego — the new structure will be the first modern Globe replica to be built in England.

Wanamaker, of Chicago, says he fought court cases, apathy and government criticism to win permission to build the playhouse.

Shakespeare's original theater, a doughnut-shaped structure built in 1599, had three stories and an open roof and sat 3,000. It burned down in 1613.

The theater was subsequently rebuilt, but it was shut in 1642 when Oliver Cromwell's Puritans closed public places of entertainment. When the lease ran out in 1644, it was ordered demolished.

The builders of the new theater hope to open it on April 23, 1992, Shakespeare's 428th birthday, and present four plays a year, from April to September. The opening play will probably be "Henry V" because of its explicit textual reference to the original Globe, described as a "wooden O."

Wanamaker is pushing the campaign to raise $25 million to finance the three-tier, 1,500-seat structure.

He said that despite Shakespeare's widespread popularity in England, the American looks forward to the day when thousands of people will again travel to south London to see the work of the Bard of Avon.

Studio Tour Offers Action, Stunts From 'Miami Vice'

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — The setting is a smuggler's lagoon on a Caribbean island, and the action starts when Crockett and Tubbs race in on a Scarab speedboat.

The action races for 15 minutes: gun battles, explosions, fireworks, spectacular stunts, a runaway mine trolley, a Hovercraft, and a helicopter crash that sends up a fireball as big as a napalm strike.

The live-action spectacular, based on exploits of Sonny Crockett and Ricardo Tubbs on NBC's "Miami Vice," is the newest attraction on the Universal Studios Tour.

The show, performed up to 10 times a day in a 3,000-seat arena, opened to the public over the Fourth of July holiday.

Universal describes it as the most ambitious special effects presentation ever designed for repeated performances. The gunfire is all electronic; computer-controlled explosions are fired only after the stuntman nearest the blast has signaled it is safe.

"We chose 'Miami Vice' because it's popular, well-known, has a lot of action and because it has style," said Phil Hettema, who produced the new show. He was production supervisor for the opening and closing ceremonies of the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics and for the closing ceremonies of "Liberty Weekend" last year.

"Everything on the Universal Tour is themed to music, film or television. That's what makes us unique. We're not an 'iron ride' park. We don't have any rides," Hettema said.

It was stuntman-director Alex Plasschaert who selected the 24-man stunt crew and put them through a vigorous training course. Despite the high-tech fireworks, it's the stunt work that gives the show its pizzazz.

"I got the script in January and it took me seven weeks of training and rehearsal to get everyone ready," Plasschaert said in the arena as people began to fill the stands.

Preparations started with three days of auditions at the Hollywood Palladium, where 325 people showed up. Plasschaert picked 125 for additional tryouts that included working on circus equipment, high falls, and riding jet skis. He finally selected 24 men, with a waiting list of 57.

"I put them through basic training," he said. "They learned how to do stunts, how to do a high fall, how to use a Russian catapult, which throws Crockett and Tubbs out of the mine car. Then we spent weeks teaching them to use the jet skis."

Plasschaert divided his stuntmen into four teams: red, white, blue and green. The red and white teams each do four shows per day for four to five days. The blue team fills in when they're off and the green team is an alternate.

So far, the show has had only one mishap. One of the stuntmen portraying Tubbs was injured during training while attempting a backflip on a trampoline, Plasschaert said.

The show opens with Crockett and Tubbs speeding into the lagoon with guns blazing. The outdoor arena has been built to look like a seedy island port, with a wharf, a full-scale cargo trawler, a warehouse, water tower and an abandoned mine shaft.

The show pits the two detectives against four smugglers. One stuntman acts as "director," who occasionally stops the action to set up the next sequence and explains what's happening. Pulsating "Miami Vice" music plays throughout the show.

THEN AND NOW — "Snow White," left, greets dancer Marge Champion at a celebration Wednesday at New York's Radio City Music Hall marking the 50th anniversary of Walt Disney's classic "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." The animated film, which premiered at the theater in 1937, used Mrs. Champion as the live-action model for the Snow White character when it was being created. (AP Laserphoto)
