Holmes Resigns As Greenville Police Chief

By CLAY DEANHARDT
Reflector Staff Writer

Citing a recent lack of support from city administrators, Greenville Police Chief Floyd H. "Ted" Holmes has resigned to accept a similar post in Goldsboro.

Holmes, the city's police chief since 1983, was named Friday to replace Goldsboro Police Chief R.K. Whaley, who retired July 1 after 25 years on the force.

"I want to announce my resignation from the Greenville police department," Holmes said in bulletin issued to officers on the force Friday afternoon. "I have accepted the police chief's job in Goldsboro effective August 24. My last day with the department here will be August 21."

On Saturday, acting City Manager Mayo Allen said he would probably appoint an interim chief until a new city manager is selected.

In a phone interview Friday night, Holmes said the city has gone back on its commitment to build a professional police force. "We've been very frustrated the last couple of months," Holmes said.

Holmes said he was disappointed by budget cuts in what he considered essential areas. He said his department's 1987-88 budget has been reduced by 5 percent, including cuts in drug enforcement, the DWI team and the tuition reimbursement program for officers taking classes at Pitt Community College or East Carolina University.

"In a community with lots of drunk driving, that's a frustration," he said.

He also said the position the city has demonstrated in canceling the reimbursement program "portends for a less professional environment in the future."

Allen addressed Holmes' allegations, noting that cuts had been made in all city departments. He said that Holmes had been with him when he worked on the budget, and Holmes knew about and agreed to all the cuts but one, which the council requested in a meeting Holmes did not attend. That cut was in Holmes' personal allowance for clothes and dry cleaning, which no other city department head receives.

Allen said while cuts were made in overtime for officers, no cuts had been made in drug enforcement. "There was some cut in hours. Some of these fellows were working over 60 hours a week. That was the question: Were these too many hours?" he said.

"The DWI was a grant that was cut out. We got a grant from the state to support that and the grant will expire Oct. 1," Allen said. "They knew that when they started it." The 1987-88 budget contains the remaining $10,000 from the grant to finance the program until that date. Holmes had requested an additional $34,056 to continue the program.

Allen said he was responsible for canceling the tuition reimbursement program. "That was a temporary halt," he said.

He said that many officers were pursuing degrees not related to their police work. "If a person was going to school to be a better police officer, that was one thing, but if you're going to get a degree and move somehere else, that's another," he said.

According to city records, the police department was budgeted $3,169,492 for fiscal 1987-88, down from $3,707,619 for fiscal '86-87. However, Allen said, dropping the one time funding for the DWI program and for $400,000 worth of radio equipment, the budgets have been $3,159,492 and $3,243,920, respectively. That indicates a 2.6 percent decrease in the standard operating budget for 1987-88, according to Allen's figures.

NEW FIRE STATION — The new 8,600-square-foot fire/rescue facility on the southwest corner of Red Banks Road and Charles Boulevard is complete and should be ready for the department to move in by the end of the week, officials say. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forest)

New Fire/Rescue Facility Ready

Members of the Greenville Fire/Rescue Department should be operating from their new 8,600-square-foot facility on the southwest corner of Red Banks Road and Charles Boulevard by the end of the week, fire officials say.

"We're trying to get in around Wednesday or Thursday," said Raymond Carney, Greenville's assistant fire chief. "The only thing that has to be done is to put in phones."

The new Greenville Fire/Rescue Station No. 3, which will replace the Gardner Fire Station on Brownlea Drive, is equipped with three truck bays and one bay for a rescue vehicle.

Other features of the new station include a meeting room, a kitchen and an employee's lounge area. Sleeping facilities will be available for 10 fire-rescue shift personnel.

Emergency vehicles will exit from the station onto Charles Street and will re-enter the station property via an entrance on Red Banks Road.

The cost of construction was estimated at $480,000. Work on the new facility began in September.

The new station will serve the area protected by the Gardner Station it replaces, according to Carney, who said personnel from the Brownlea Drive station will move to the new facility.

"The new facility provides better road access, more room for equipment and more room for growth as far as equipment and personnel are concerned," Carney said.

An open house for the new station is tentatively planned for the last weekend in August, Carney said.

Officials Irate

Holmes tendered his resignation late Friday afternoon to Loretta Lewellyn, the administrative assistant to the city manager. Both acting City Manager Mayo Allen and Mayor Les Garner were out of town.

After returning to Greenville Saturday morning from a public works convention, Allen said Lewellyn called to inform him, the mayor and all the council members of the developments. By 5:30 p.m., Allen said, all the city administrators were aware of Holmes' resignation.

"I believe the chief should have brought his resignation to the city manager and the mayor in a professional manner and he should have brought his grievances to the (Greenville City) council instead of

Rep. Jones Will Run

U.S. Rep. Walter B. Jones of Farmville, in order to refute rumors to the contrary, has let it be known that he will run to succeed himself in 1988.

"I know it seems premature to be announcing so early, but there's been so much speculation apparently," the 1st District representative said.

Jones, contacted in Washington, D.C., by telephone, said he has been hearing rumors that he will retire at the end of his present term. This is not so, he said.

He said it is also not true that his wife, Elizabeth, might run for the seat that rumors have had him vacating.

Inez Fridley Files For Council Seat

Greenville City Council member Inez Fridley has filed as a candidate for the District 3 seat on the board in the Nov. 3 municipal elections.

Mrs. Fridley, area coordinator for the department of residence life and housing at East Carolina University is completing her fist term on the council. Mrs. Fridley and her husband, John Anema, reside at 802 River Drive.

A graduate of Virginia Commonwealth University with a bachelor's degreee in social sciences, Mrs. Fridley received her master's degree in education from East Carolina University in 1970. She has been employed at ECU for 21 years.

Mrs. Fridley, a founding member of the Tar River Neighborhood Association, served as treasurer and later as president of the organization.

She served five years on the Greenville Environmental Advisory Commission prior to election to the council in 1985. Mrs. Fridley is a member of the Sierra Club, the Evergreen board of directors, the advisory committee for the Pamlico Tar River Association and the N.C. Women in Municipal Government.

In filing for re-election Friday, Mrs. Fridley, who serves as the council's liaison to the city's Planning and Zoning Commission, said support she received from the community gave her the urge to run again.

"I'm filing for re-election because of encouragement from friends and citizens in town," she said.

Mrs. Fridley also called for careful study of the city's rapid growth.

"One of my major concerns continues to be the increasing growth pressure that we're feeling," she said. "I have a real strong commitment to conscientious long-range

Engineers Eye Traffic Tangles

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

City engineers, working in conjunction with the N.C. Department of Transportation, should be making preliminary recommendations to untangle some of Greenville's traffic tie-ups by the fall, a city official says.

"We're looking to identify the areas where traffic is a problem and expect it to be a major problem in the future and come up with some proposed solutions," Tom Tysinger, director of engineering and inspections, said of the progress on updating the city's Thoroughfare plan.

"We'll be identifying corridors for roadways and improvements to existing roadways to improve the traffic situation in the future."

Engineers have already cited some areas of special concern, according to Tysinger.

"The main areas we're looking at are in the Medical District," he said. "East-west corridors also need to be looked at. There are traffic problems in some areas along Greenville Boulevard and Memorial Drive, and we're looking for ways to relieve those situations."

NCDOT daily traffic count figures attest to the increased number of vehicles using Greenville's streets and highways.

According to the figures, the section of Memorial Drive, just south of the Greenville Boulevard, is the most heavily traveled section of road in Pitt County, with an average of 29,400 vehicles per day in 1986. The same section of road was used by an average of 20,600 vehicles a day in 1982.

Greenville Boulevard, just east of the Charles Boulevard intersection had 15,900 cars a day in 1982 and 20,000 a day in 1986, while just south of 10th Street, the boulevard had 15,000 vehicles a day in 1982, compared with 22,000 a day last year.

Meanwhile, Tysinger said some connections may be included in the updated Thoroughfare Plan.

"We'll be looking for a general loop from the southern part of Greenville to eastern portion and up to north of the city and for the completion of a southwest loop which would be a major highway connecting (U.S.) 264 to the southern part of the city."

Thoroughfare Plan update will provide assistance to a variety of city officials and citizens, according to Bobby Roberson, director of planning and community development, who said the updates are made about every 10 years.

"From a planning perspective, it allows the city to set up capital improvement monies for highway improvements," Roberson said. "It also allows the developers to anticipate at some point in the future where the proposed street alignments would occur.

"It allows Greenville Utilities to forecast in their appropriations for improvement programs improvement for water and sewer projects to work in conjunction with the Thoroughfare Plan improvements."

Jones To Run Again

Jones has been a member of the U.S. House of Representatives for the past 21 years. He is chairman of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Prior to going to Congress, he served both in the state House and Senate and as a mayor and town commissioner of Farmville. He first went to Congress when he was appointed to fill the unexpired term of Rep. Herbert Bonner.

the press," said council member Lorraine Shinn.

"By waiting until he knew the city manager and the mayor were both out of town and giving his resignation to a secretary," said council member Janice Buck, "Chief Holmes showed a great lack of professionalism.

"He spoke out when he knew the two key people of the city were not available to respond to his allegations," she said.

Allen said he was disappointed by Holmes. "He (Holmes) knew I had to go to a public works meeting. He knew I wasn't there. That's what hurt me. He knew I would be there Monday and he knew I was there Thursday morning," he said.

"He could have waited until Monday. Being a professional, and he is, Monday morning would not have hurt him in any way."

Holmes said in a telephone interview Friday night that the announcement had "come about a little more quickly than we had planned."

He said he met with Goldsboro officials on Friday morning, and they wanted to go ahead and make the announcement and let the people know who needed to know. There was a fear the news would leak out over the weekend if the announcement was not made, Holmes said.

A news conference was held by city officials in Goldsboro Friday at 5 p.m. officially announcing Holmes' appointment.

Allen said there was no good reason he could see for the early announcement, and the news could have been postponed until Greenville officials were properly informed. He said he still had not spoken to Holmes, who could not be reached for comment Saturday.

Holmes Resigns As Greenville Police Chief

Allen said that figure could be explained by the reduction in overtime, capital outlays, educational expenses and the chief's clothing allowance.

Mayor Les Garner said that while Holmes had been asked to cut overtime on the force, there was no animosity involved. Although refusing to comment on the specific programs Holmes mentioned, Garner said, "We're trying to cut the budget everywhere we can while providing the same services, and I think we can do it."

Garner said the city has not cut back on any program where it would affect city services, whether it was in drug enforcement, DWI or overtime. He said if Holmes was leaving because of the cuts, then that was his prerogative.

"We wish him all the luck in the world," he said.

Concerning Holmes' resignation, Allen said, "He's leaving, and he's leaving under honorable conditions. He's knitpicking now to find a reason why."

Earlier Allen had said he would give Holmes a good reference right now, if asked to. He said that his main concern in the issue was not to say anything that would hurt Holmes' future employment. "It's just unfortunate," he said. "I like him, I don't want to hurt him."

Janice Buck, a member of the Greenville City Council, said, "There are no facts to substantiate his remarks to the press. In fact the true facts will reveal the opposite view of his management procedures."

Council member Lorraine Shinn said her first reaction was not to comment at all on the situation. "He (Chief Holmes) certainly has received adequate support in my opinion. I would question some of his management policies," she said.

Mrs. Shinn went on to attack the chief's allegations about the tuition reimbursment plan. She said some officers were attending classes on city time and some few were even being paid overtime. This was in addition, she said, to having their tuition and books paid for by the taxpayers.

"I think some forms of allowing our employees to get an education is important. But I think when they are doing it on city time and even on overtime we have crossed the border. I have a serious problem with that," she said.

"I think some of these things (police programs) have been abused and I think they have been poorly managed. I think management was the problem," she said.

Councilman Bill Hadden said, "I have felt that the chief has been an exceptional professional: a man who knows his business."

He said there had been some criticism about the excessive amount of overtime in the police budget, but he noted that had been corrected to the satisfaction of the council. "To my mind he was doing an exceptional job and any criticism of him was not earned," Hadden said.

Other City Council members could not be reached for comment.

Holmes came to Greenville from a job as a police management specialist with Arthur Young and Co. of Austin, Texas. Prior to that he had served as a police management consultant with the International Association of Chiefs of Police, chief of police in Vail, Colo., and as an officer in Berkeley, Calif. He served in the U.S. Army, including a two-year tour at Fort Bragg.

He said he was impressed by the Goldsboro administration and its desire to have a professional police department.

Holmes said he was going to do a careful study of the department to find out what its real needs were, but that it wouldn't be a difficult job. "They have a lot of fine officers and good leadership," he said.

Holmes said the Goldsboro Police Department is in better shape than the Greenville department was when he first came on Oct. 3, 1983.

Times Says Photograph Staged

MIAMI (AP) — A photograph in Sunday's New York Times Magazine that shows a helicopter hovering over what is described as a drug bust is actually a 4-year-old staged picture taken for an advertising layout, the newspaper acknowledged.

The photograph illustrates an article titled "Can Miami Save Itself?" that has been criticized by Miami civic leaders, who said it gives a one-sided depiction of Miami as a corrupt haven of drugs, crime and ethnic tension.

When advance copies of the Times Magazine came out, U.S. Customs Service officials realized the photograph did not show a real event, but rather one staged about 100 yards from a south Florida customs office by Westinghouse to promote a radar device used on F-16 fighters, a customs official said Saturday.

The magazine's caption on the two-page color photograph describes the scene as a drug bust. The photograph was credited to to "Auboyneau-Sipa" or Sipa Press, an international photo agency based in Paris.

The Times is running a statement regarding the photo on Page 3 of its Sunday editions in the section where the newspaper usually runs corrections. The magazines were distributed to newsstands before the problem with the picture was discovered, said an assistant news editor who did not want to be identified.

"The photograph was supplied to the Times by the New York office of Sipa Press ... which has acknowledged it erred ...," the statement said. "The photographs were accompanied by captions dated January 1986. The caption for the photograph purportedly showing the arrest of the smugglers did not indicate in any way that the picture had been posed."

The statement indicated the Times didn't learn about the cirmcumstances under which the photographs were made until The Miami Herald published a story about the pictures Saturday.

Miami officials also were upset about the picture on the magazine's cover, which showed officers of the Florida Department of Law Enforcement guarding three suspects in a drug arrest. The picture, also supplied by Sipa, was taken two years ago.

"The credit for the picture should have included the date it was made," according to the newspaper statement.

Goksin Sipahiogau, director of Sipa Press, told The Associated Press on Saturday that the picture was one of a package taken by photographer Olivia Auboyneau.

"One of the pictures was staged," he said. "Unhappily we didn't know, and the reportage was distributed. We made a mistake."

Sipahiogau said Ms. Auboyneau is on vacation and he has not been able to reach her. A person who answered a call to her Miami telephone number told The Associated Press she was not at home.

Roger Garland, chief of the drug-fighting Customs Air Branch based at Homestead Air Force Base south of Miami, said he had a copy of the picture printed by the Times.

"I have the color picture, probably one of 1,000 prints they have," Garland said. The photograph had "absolutely nothing to do with a bust. I can identify all the people in the shots. It took place in our back yard."

The photograph, made in 1982 or 1983, shows a customs helicopter hovering over a Beach Baron twin-engine aircraft while two drug "suspects" are led to a police van by armed customs agents.

"A Customs Service helicopter illuminates the scene as local police arrest suspected drug smugglers, forced down after their plane failed to respond to the control tower of Miami International Airport," the Times Magazine's caption said.

Garland said the Cobra helicopter depicted in the picture has been out of use for four or five years. He said the picture was used in Westinghouse advertising that appeared in aviation and technology magazines.

Free-lance author Robert Sherrill told The Miami Herald, which published an article on the photo Saturday, that he hadn't seen the pictures used to illustrate his article. Telephone calls by The Associated Press to his residence in Tallahassee were not answered Saturday.

Sailors Return Home

By KAREN McGRATH
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Korean sailors who staged a strike on an American-owned oil freighter for two days after they learned an agent had squandered their pay left for home Saturday with most of the money they were owed.

The 17 crew members were given $70,000 before the flew from Logan International Airport, the Rev. Paul Chapman of the Seamen's Church Institute of New York and New Jersey said Friday night.

"It's a happy ending, a really fine ending," said Chapman, whose organization and others fed the Koreans after the captain locked them out of the ship's mess hall. "It's not quite all the overtime they were entitled to, but they're content."

A crew from Yugoslavia was scheduled to replace the Korean crew on the Go Go Regent.

Chapman said Grudstad Maritime Inc. of Boca Raton, Fla., which owned the ship, agreed to pay the back wages and the men's flight to South Korea.

The sailors started the strike when they learned an agent in Korea responsible for paying a portion of their wages to their families hadn't paid them for three months.

The ship's Norwegian captain, J.K. Jensen, said the agent apparently gambled away the money on the gold market.

The crew members went two days on only bread and water before Chapman's group and the New England Seamen's Mission brought their plight to the attention of the authorities.

U.S. marshals seized the Liberian-registered ship after a federal judge signed a complaint asking that the ship be held until the men were paid and sent home.

Chapman said the ship's captain attempted to list on the men's working cards that they were troublemakers so they would have difficulty getting jobs in the future, but he relented.

Jensen could not be reached for comment because he was on the ship without a telephone.

Study Suggests Premature Babies Thrive On Touching

CHICAGO (AP) — Premature infants might gain weight faster and leave the hospital sooner after birth if their mothers touched, rocked and talked to them more, according to a new study.

Researchers also have found that the added attention from mothers may help offset the "negative stimulation" such infants often receive in bustling hospital nurseries.

Parents of premature infants usually leave the handling of their newborns to hospital nurses until the babies are developed enough to go home, said Rosemary C. White-Traut, author of the study and assistant professor of nursing in the College of Nursing at the University of Illinois-Chicago.

"They're intimidated because the babies are so small and have all those tubes sticking out of them," Ms. White-Traut said by telephone Friday night.

The study will be published in the December issue of Research in Nursing and Health, Ms. White-Traut said.

She said premature babies who were massaged, rocked and talked to at regular intervals left the hospital after an average of 19 days — four days earlier than the normal 23 days. Those infants who were only talked to regularly left after 21 days on the average, she said.

Moreover, those receiving the extra handling gained as much as 4 grams more per day than those who got no special attention, possibly because they were calmer and consumed more at feeding-time, Ms. White-Traut said.

The study was done from August 1981 to September 1983 with 33 mothers at Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago, she said.

Beginning when their premature babies were 24 hours old, the mothers were divided into three groups, including one control group, she said.

Mothers in the first group visited their infants in the hospital's intensive-care nursery twice daily and talked or sang to their babies for 15 minutes at a time, she said.

Mothers in the second group were taught infant massage techniques and also visited their babies twice daily in the nursery, where they massaged them for 10 minutes while talking or singing to them, Ms. White-Traut said.

The mothers then rocked the babies in their arms for an additional five minutes, all the while keeping eye contact with them, she said.

A third group served as controls, she said, and members were given no special instructions on interacting with their infants.

"The babies in the massage group came to what we call a 'quiet-alert state' — ideal for early mother-infant bonding," Ms. White-Traut said.

Dr. Kwang-sun Lee, director of neonatology at the University of Chicago Hospitals, said the study bore out the principle that "tender loving care does what it's supposed to do for babies — helps them thrive."

"Premature babies have a lot of negative stimulation, with the lights, the noise and the talking going on around them in the hospital," Lee said in a telephone interview Friday.

If anything, a mother's presence would help divert the infant's attention from such irritants, he said.

The two inevitabilities. When it comes to questions about taxes most people don't hesitate to make plans and arrangements with their accountant. But when it comes to the other inevitability, it's amazing how few people make any arrangements at all.

And that's a mystery, considering the benefits to family and friends that funeral prearrangement offers. It makes things simple. It offers peace of mind. Reassurance to loved ones. And it takes very little time.

Weyerhaeuser Buys Property In County

Weyerhaeuser Co., a diversified timber company headquartered in Tacoma, Wash., has purchased approximately 200 acres in southern Pitt County for possible long-range development, a company official says.

The property, located between Ayden and Grifton near N.C. 11, was purchased during the winter, according to Charlie Williams, land use manager at Weyerhaeuser's regional headquarters in New Bern.

"We're always looking for new facilities," Williams said. "We had the opportunity to buy some property that may serve as an industrial site some time in the future."

Groundbreaking Set

AYDEN — A by-invitation-only groundbreaking — with N.C. Commissioner of Agriculture Jim Graham heading the guest list — will be held Tuesday for the state's first catfish processing facility located south of Ayden on N.C. 11.

Mid-Atlantic Fish Farms Inc. will build the 3,750-square-foot plant on a 2.4-acre site just south of the N.C. 11-Lee Street intersection.

The plant, designed to serve over 1,000 water acres, will be equipped to process 2 million pounds of catfish per year

Mid-Atlantic currently raises catfish on a farm on secondary road 1724 near Helens Crossroads, and according to Rob Mayo, the firm's founder and president, "we hope to have 250 water acres in production by 1990.

"Our biggest problem to date has been our inability to meet the demand for the product. We've had to turn down business because we couldn't guarantee delivery of fish.

"This processing plant will eliminate much of that problem," he said.

The popularity of farm-raised catfish caught on in the 1970s, Mayo said, and strong markets have developed in restaurants all over the country, particularly in the Deep South and more recently in the Northeast.

Pitt County was selected for the catfish farming and processing operation, Mayo said, because the climate is ideal for growing farm-raised catfish and to gain an advantage over catfish growers in Gulf Coast states, particulary in Mississippi.

Fellowship Recipient

Billie Lennon, a social studies teacher at J.H. Rose High School, has been selected for the 1987 Frank Porter Graham Fellowship Award.

Mrs. Lennon is one of three North Carolina teachers selected for the honor. Recipients are secondary school teachers of U.S. history who have submitted imaginative and effective plans for teaching modules on the U.S. Constitution.

The Frank Porter Graham Fund of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill's Arts and Sciences Foundation provides the three $500 fellowships. The awards will enable the teachers to use the facilities on campuses of the University of North Carolina and the resources of its faculties for research related to the preparation of the modules.

The fellowship is named in memory of U.S. Sen. Frank Porter Graham, mediator for the United Nations and UNC president from 1930 until 1949.

Cropland Program

The Conservation Reserve sign-up period for the 1988 crop year will begin Monday and end July 31.

The Conservation Reserve Program allows farmers to receive an annual payment for 10 years when they place highly erodible cropland in the reserve. Acreage for the reserve is selected by a bid process.

The average bid in North Carolina has been around $45. All acreage must also meet the Department of Agriculure's highly erodible definition.

For more information contact the county office of the USDA-Soil Conservation Service.

Membership Goal Reached

The East Carolina Council, Boys Scouts of America, recognized an accomplished membership goal of 22,000 during its annual Bonner Scout Reservation board meeting recently.

"That's a first" in reaching the membership goal, said Council Commissioner Joe Goodson Sr. "Our Pitt District chairman, Lawton Nisbet, was responsible for that (membership increase)."

Cub Scout membership increased by 50 percent, he said.

Also during the meeting, Grady Mullis of Greenville was recognized as the new Pitt District chairman, while Henry Goodson is the new Neuse Basin-Croatan District chairman. Jim Hackney III of Washington, N.C., has been named president of the Southeastern Region.

Goodson said there have been additions to the camp since the last meeting. Sailboats and canoes have been added, as well as a cope course.

The course of activities includes a tower, but "they practice extreme safety with it," he said. A donkey has also been added to the camp for backpacking.

Competition Hot Among States For Superconducting Collider

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

The talk of electron volts, protons and quarks may be baffling, but the prospect of $4.4 billion in federal spending makes a lot of sense to 24 states that are hotly pursuing the superconducting super collider.

They have invested millions of dollars in the competition for the super-duper atom smasher, and some other states would be tickled just to have the project nearby.

"I think this is so big it defies the imagination of the benefits that will be available to the winning site," said Steve Howerton, chairman of the Dallas-Fort Worth SSC Authority.

"The fact that you've got it would establish any state as being at the very forefront of the highest technology there is," said North Carolina Gov. Jim Martin, whose state has invested $1.25 million.

Beyond its huge construction costs, an estimated $4.4 billion to be borne by the federal government, the project promises 3,000 jobs and annual budget of $200 million, plus the potential of luring high-tech industries to the area.

The super collider would be a 53-mile underground loop in which atomic particles would be accelerated to nearly the speed of light, using 10,000 superconducting magnets to guide the particle beams.

From the head-on collisions of particles, at 20 times the energy of any existing atom-smasher, scientists may find unknown sub-atomic particles and new clues to the composition of matter.

Several states have invested more than $1 million to make their applications, led by Illinois with $4.5 million and California with $4 million appropriated for the project.

However, Congress recently changed the rules to eliminate the advantage of well-heeled states. It barred the Department of Energy from considering offers of financial aid in evaluating site proposals.

Last week, the Energy Department extended the deadline from Aug. 3 to Sept. 2 to allow time for revising proposals. The DOE said that any financial incentives should be submitted in a sealed envelope, which will be opened only if the state has the winning proposal.

Among the candidates to become the world capital of physics are Winnemuca, Nev.; Monroe, Mich.; Omega, Okla.; and Broadview, Mont.

Washington state touts its solid basalt; Tennessee promotes its Ordivician limestone; South Dakota and Idaho emphasize the convenience of cut-and-cover construction compared to tunneling; California and Florida mention their climate, and many proposals stress the nearness of top-flight universities.

Arizona is promoting the availability of desert acreage, good weather, and the proximity of high-tech firms and university research facilities in its bid for the project.

"God made Ohio for the SSC," Gov. Richard Celeste has been saying in recent speeches.

Mississippi has even emphasized its disadvantages. With the nation's lowest per-capita income, it badly needs an economic boost.

The DOE, which hopes to announce a preliminary winner next July and confirm the choice by January 1989, has invited proposals from anyone — states, cities, counties or private owners — with 16,000 acres available. The site must be offered to the federal government at no cost.

Idaho met that requirement easily by proposing a tract of federal land — the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory west of Idaho Falls. Utah's proposal involves federal land west of Salt Lake City.

In a special two-day session July 11-12, New Mexico's Legislature authorized an $11 million bond issue to finance the state's purchase of a site in the Estancia Valley, if it is selected.

On Thursday, Oklahoma's Legislature approved $1.5 million to prepare its application.

The same night, South Dakota's Legislature authorized $6 million for land acquisition and also approved a list of incentives proposed by Gov. George Mickelson. South Dakota is offering cut-rate cement, electricity and water, free roads and sewers and an airstrip to help build the structure — although those goodies must now go in the sealed envelope submitted to the DOE.

Massachusetts has no suitable site but is enthusiastically joining other New England states and New Jersey in supporting New York's bid for the huge construction project.

"We'd obviously like to see some of those contracts and subcontracts go to Massachusetts firms," said Greg Watson, assistant secretary for science and technology in the state Executive Office for Economic Development.

"On the research end, with this being in the region there is less of a risk of suffering the so-called brain drain," Watson said. "We want to make sure some of those key federal research facilities are attracted to this region and we want to protect our valuable human resources from being lured away."

Louisiana prepared its proposal without any special appropriations. Herbert Christenberry III, deputy secretary of commerce, said the site 50 miles north of New Orleans offers "zero percent earthquake possibility."

"Everybody knows about California's earthquake reputation, and Illinois just recently had a 4.4 earthquake at their site," he said.

So far, the various proposals face little organized antagonism. "Some people are outright against it but I think most are just frustrated at the lack of information," said Carl Sorenson, a farmer who lives near Washington's proposed site. "At this point, we don't know enough to love it or hate it or fight it."

In Kansas, state Rep. Delbert Gross has led opposition to the super collider because it would generate small amounts of radioactive waste.

California appears to have the most opposition.

John Eilers of Linden, near a proposed site at Stockton, said the SSC would lure growth and "wipe out the family farmer." He leads the Peoples' Organization for Land Preservation and the Coalition Against the SSC, whose members wear red "Stop the Collider" T-shirts and baseball caps.

Lynnel Pollock, president of Yolo County Farm Bureau, said recently of the Davis, Calif., site that farmers would be deprived of clean and ample water, clean air, energy and land.

Release Predicted

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The magazine Ash-Shiraa said Saturday the release of two West German hostages held in Lebanon was "certain and imminent."

The weekly quoted unnamed knowledgeable sources as saying "the coming days will see a happy ending and a success of the initiatives undertaken by the Bonn government to resolve affairs of the two hostages."

Ash-Shiraa said "international and regional efforts exerted in the past few weeks have accomplished a tangible progress in this affair." It did not elaborate.

The Beirut magazine broke the story of secret U.S. arms sales to Iran last year.

The two hostages are Rudolf Cordes, 53, who was kidnapped Jan. 17; and Alfred Schmidt, 46, who was abducted Jan. 20.

A group calling itself Holy Warriors for Freedom claimed July 8 that it was holding the two West Germans and had negotiated secretly with West Germany to try to swap them for Mohammed Ali Hamadi.

Hamadi, 22, a Lebanese Shiite Moslem, was arrested in Frankfurt on Jan. 13. He is due to face trial there in connection with the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner to Beirut in which a U.S. Navy diver was killed.

Senate Committee Reportedly Checked On Casey's Death

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of two Senate committes, concerned about possible deception regarding William Casey's illness, monitored the medical state of the CIA director as he neared death and then obtained autopsy data, U.S. News & World Report said Saturday.

The magazine's July 27 issue quoted two highly placed congressional sources, whom it did not identify by name, as saying that members of the Senate Intelligence Committee and another Senate committee reviewed Casey's blood tests and other evidence of declining health. The magazine did not name the second committee.

Some Intelligence Committee members obtained the autopsy information because they wanted to be able to assure the public that Casey actually did die of natural causes following the brain seizures that prevented him from testifying about the Iran-Contra affair.

Casey was stricken in December on the day before he was to have testified on the matter before the Intelligence Committee.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., a member of both the Intelligence Committee and the Senate Iran-Contra investigating committee, refused comment Saturday on the U.S. News report.

"I'm not confirming or denying it," he said in a telephone interview.

The magazine quoted Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., as denying that the Intelligence Committee, which he chairs, undertook to monitor Casey's health, but he said he did not know if any individual senators may have done so. Boren is also on the Iran-Contra committee.

Casey underwent surgery Dec. 18 for removal of a malignant brain tumor. He never recovered, and died May 6 of what the hospital said were complications of central nerous system lymphoma.

Since his death, testimony and documents have revealed that he was a key figure in the administration's private efforts to supply the Nicaraguan Contra rebels during a congressional ban on U.S. military aid. He would have been a star witness in the public hearings by congressional committees investigating the affair.

Theory Defended

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An author being sued by convicted murderer Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald has defended in court his book's theory that MacDonald killed family members in what may have been a drug-induced "psychotic rage."

Joe McGinniss, the author of "Fatal Vision," is being sued for $15 million by the doctor, an ex-Green Beret captain who says the book does not appropriately describe his life.

MacDonald long has maintained his innocence in the 1970 slayings of his pregnant wife and two young daughters in Fort Bragg, N.C., where he was assigned as a doctor with the U.S. Special Forces.

MacDonald is currently in federal prison in Phoeniz, Ariz., where he is serving three consecutive life terms.

Smoking Ban On Airlines Could Still Bite Dust

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nonsmokers who are breathing easier after the House vote to ban cigarette smoking on most airline flights, beware: Tobacco-state senators say they are "working on a tombstone" for the proposal.

Opponents of the legislation, which would prohibit smoking on flights of two hours or less, say they have an important ally that they did not have in the House, and that is procedural rules making it easier for opponents of a measure to kill it.

"Some of us are working on a tombstone and we'll chisel on it 'RIP' for this legislation," says Republican Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina, the leading producer for the nation's $34 billion-a-year tobacco industry.

If Helms and his supporters are not able to prevent the proposal from reaching the Senate floor, they would be able to filibuster — that is, kill it with unlimited debate that can only be halted by the vote of 60 senators, a majority that can be difficult to achieve.

"They will have a long, hot summer discussing the matter," Helms said.

The tobacco interests have the airline industry, airport operators and the airline pilots union on their side. Each believes that enforcing the smoking ban would be a nightmare.

Arrayed against them will be the same coalition that helped the measure's chief sponsor, Rep. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., convince the House to vote 198-193 for the ban, which covers 80 percent of carriers' flights. Supporting the measure are two flight attendants' unions and about two dozen health groups, including the American Cancer Society and the American Lung Association.

"After the experience in the House, most of us aren't ready to predict a thing," said Susan Arnold, associate director of the Coalition on Smoking or Health, which represents some of the health groups.

Durbin's measure was an amendment to the transportation appropriations bill for fiscal 1988, which the House passed. Supporters hope that if the smoking restrictions are made a part of that multi-billion dollar legislation in the Senate, opponents would be reluctant to filibuster.

But Helms threatens, "They don't want an appropriations bill tied up for weeks and weeks and weeks because of a proposal that doesn't make sense to start with."

The feeling is different on the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, where ranking Republican Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, with the support of Chairman Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., has introduced legislation that would ban smoking on all public forms of transportation.

An aide, who works for a member of the labor panel who supports the smoking ban, says supporters believe they can accumulate at least 60 votes to defeat a filibuster.

Before the Senate last year passed legislation requiring warning labels on smokeless tobacco, the aide said, a nose count by committee staff members showed that senators would vote 96-4 against a filibuster, an indication of strong anti-tobacco sentiment.

Thought is even being given to working for a measure stronger than the two-hour flight ban, perhaps the Hatch bill itself, said the staff worker, who requested anonymity.

Labor committee aides are already sounding out their counterparts on the Senate Appropriations Committee to find out how receptive lawmakers are to putting the smoking language on the appropriations bill. If favorable sentiment is not there, the provision could instead become a part of a different bill the labor committee would handle, said the aide.

Helms Disputes State Department Claims On Missionaries' Detention

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms says an American nurse and six other missionaries have been detained to protect them from government troops in Mozambique, and are not being held captive by anti-communist rebels as the U.S. State Department claims.

Kendra Bryan, a 27-year-old Texan, and other foreigners have been held for two months by rebel Mozambique National Resistance (Renamo) forces. Helms said the Mozambique government has denied landing rights for a Red Cross mission to evacuate the missionaries.

Helms said the U.S. State Department's assertion that the rebels are holding Ms. Bryan and the other foreigners against their will and could free them safely "is a bald-faced lie and they know it."

Helms, R-N.C., reiterated the rebel group's claim that it had detained the relief workers May 13 to protect them from government troops.

"Renamo is not going to turn over anybody because in the past they (government troops) have killed them," he said.

Citing confidential sources, Helms also said he had learned that the Mozambique government "would not even let the Red Cross plane land" to remove the relief workers.

But the State Department insists that Renamo, which Helms supports, will not set them free.

"Kindra Bryan and six other hostages remain in Renamo's hands, despite the fact that Renamo could have freed them at any time since they were kidnapped May 13," Beatrice Russell, a spokesman for the State Department, told the Winston-Salem Journal Friday.

Ms. Russell said the government was still hopeful for a negotiated settlement.

"We understand that the Red Cross and the Mozambican government are cooperating effectively on this, and we are optimistic as to the outcome," she said.

Jonquerio Manhique, a spokesman for the Mozambican embassy, said that he has no information on Helms' claim that the Red Cross has been barred from the southeast African nation.

Helms sent letters to Mozambique and Renamo officials Tuesday asking both sides to arrange a cease-fire so that the hostages could be freed.

But Manhique said that the government considers Renamo a group of South Africa-backed terrorists and refuses to deal with it for any reason.

"We don't call them Renamo; we call them terrorists and bandits," he said. "We will not negotiate with Renamo."

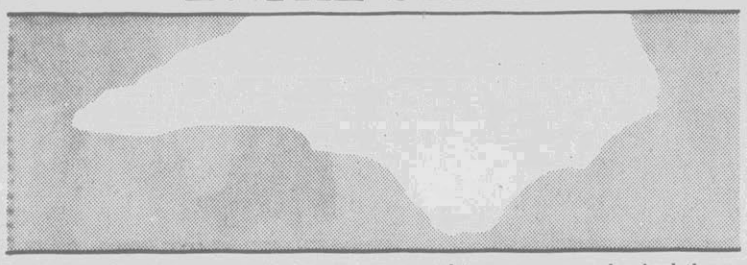

Helms has called the rebels freedom fighters who deserve U.S. support in their drive to uproot Mozambique's Marxist government.

But the State Department has maintained good relations with that regime, and it regards Renamo as an outlaw army lacking popular support.

Last month, Helms said in a Senate hearing that the department could arrange Ms. Bryan's release "in five minutes" by meeting with a Renamo representative in Washington.

A desk officer at the State Department did meet with the representative June 27, but nothing was resolved.

Doctors Set Example

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — About 25 doctors from Alamance and Caswell counties, concerned that the fear of AIDS has affected blood supplies, decided the best way to fight the fear was to roll up their sleeves.

"We thought the best way of setting an example was to be an example," Dr. Jesse McNiel, president of the Alamance-Caswell Medical Society, said. "We hope to show that if physicians are not afraid of giving blood, laymen should not be afraid of giving blood."

The doctors lined up with about two dozen hospitl employees during an American Red Cross Bloodmobile visit to Alamance Memorial Hospital.

Doctors say fears of getting acquired immune deficiency syndrome from blood donations came from well publicized cases of hemophiliacs and other blood recipients getting the virus from blood transfusions.

"The statement we want to make is simple — there's no way you can get AIDS by donating blood," Dr. Edward Duszlak, a radiologist, told the Greensboro News & Record. "It's impossible."

Red Cross officials say all material used in blood donations, including needles, plastic tubing and bag, is taken from an individually sealed and sterilized package. Once used, the items are destroyed.

"No material is ever re-used at the Red Cross," said Dr. Jerry Squires, regional director of Red Cross blood services.

Seasonal Problem

PINE HALL, N.C. (AP) — Seventy-three people have been arrested and charged with trespassing at the Belews Creek Dam in the past three weeks, and Duke Power Co. officials say they will continue to crack down on what appears to be a seasonal problem.

"You can't see this place from the road and it has become the place to be," said Mike Greene, a Duke Power security official.

"But this isn't a new problem. It's something we'd had to deal with each summer for the past four or five years. What we have now is an old problem that's getting worse."

The grassy slope around the dam in located on private property, but Duke Power officials say it has become a hot spot for teen-agers and young adults.

Duke Power's concern is that people trespassing in the area might get hurt, Greene said. Since the lake opened in 1974, more than 20 people have drowned.

Greene said the company will continue to make arrests and prosecute for trespassing, a departure from previous summer when it merely warned trespassers and asked them to leave. When Duke security officers see cars parked by the trail to the spillway, he said, they will investigate.

Duke Power has a steam-generating station in Pine Hall, and the spillway is near the Rockingham-Stokes county line.

Traffic Fatalities

By The Associated Press

Four people died in traffic accidents on state roads this weekend, including a 10-year-old boy who was a passenger in a vehicle that collided with another vehicle, the North Carolina Highway patrol said Saturday.

Jamont Keith Reddick of Washington was killed at 7:50 p.m. Friday on a rural road in Beaufort County, about 7 miles north of Washington, troopers said.

Arthur Ray Richardson, 37, of Rocky Mount, was killed at 6:05 p.m. Friday on a rural road in Nash County, about 4 miles north of Nashville. The vehicle he was driving struck a tree, troopers said.

Danny Ray Vickers, 23, of Stanley, was killed at 3:10 a.m. Saturday on a rural road in Gaston County, about 1 mile northeast of Stanley. He was a passenger in a vehicle that struck a driveway culvert, troopers said.

Kenneth Williams Wilkes, 22, of Fayetteville, was killed at 5:15 a.m. Saturday on a rural road in Cumberland County, just east of Fayetteville. The vehicle he was driving struck a tree, troopers said.

The North Carolina highway fatality toll now stands at 763. Last year at this time, 872 people died on state roads, troopers said.

Outer Banks Fire

COLLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Several houses in the Collington Harbour development on the North Carolina Outer Banks were threatened by a 35-acre woods fire started by two boys playing with a can of charcoal lighter fluid, authorities say.

One house was evacuated, but was not damaged by the Friday fire, said Rick Heppert, Collington's volunteer fire chief. The woman and child in the house were not injured, he said.

Southeasterly winds blew the flames away from a residential area of some 700 homes, he said.

Authorities said two young boys playing "war games" set off the blaze. Lt. Dave Cowan of the Dare County Sheriff's Dept. said the youths poured a soft drink can with charcoal lighter fluid, put in newspaper and lit it to make a firebomb.

Cowan said the youths, ages 10 and 11, kicked the can in an attempt to put the fire out, but instead spread the flames.

Wreck Said Found Off S.C. Coast

WASHINGTON (AP) — A wreck believed to be a steamship that sank in 1857 with a cargo of $450 million in gold coins has been discovered off the South Carolina coast, according to a published report Saturday.

The Columbus America Discovery Group, a limited partnership based in Columbus, Ohio, made the discovery public following a ruling last week in U.S. District Court in Norfolk, Va., the Washington Post said.

The Central America sank during a hurricane Sept. 12, 1857, in about 8,000 feet of water just inside the 200-mile continental limit. Some 428 people died in the shipwreck.

The ship was carrying a regular monthly shipment of gold from the San Francisco mint to New York banks. The gold was an official government shipment valued at $1,219,189. The figure was based on the value of gold, which was about 90 cents an ounce in 1857. Gold closed Friday at $448.10 an ounce.

"This is not some blue-sky treasure hunt looking for investors," Thomas G. Thompson, Columbus America founder and principal director told the Post. "We are fully funded through our recovery phase."

He said the group's salvage vessel, Nicor Navigator, has been on the site since May 25 filiming the wreck with underwater cameras.

Thompson told the Post that salvaging would begin next year and would be accomplished entirely by underwater robots. He said the group used a computer-based imaging system that allows searchers to see objects far below the ocean surface to find the wreck.

Thompson said Columbus America, founded in 1985, has 106 partners, mostly from Columbus.

Plea Bargain

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Mecklenburg County officials hailed a plea bargain agreement that will close 19 adult bookstores in North Carolina as a victory against pornography and said the campaign against such businesses will continue.

"This is an accomplishment of what many people told us was impossible," Charlotte police attorney Bob Thomas said.

A plea bargain agreement was reached Friday between prosecutors and two men accused in a grand jury indictment with being high-level figures in Mecklenburg County's pornography business.

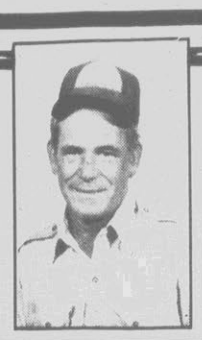

Stephen Winick, 40, of Woodstock, Md., and Roger Griggs, 47, of Charlotte, entered guilty pleas Friday before Mecklenburg County Superior Court Judge Frank Snepp to reduced charges as part of a plea bargain.

On Monday, the men were indicted by a court grand jury on one count each of conspiring to disseminate obscenity and 40 counts of accessory before the fact of disseminating obscenity.

Legislation Reforming Bingo Industry Falters

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Bills to regulate North Carolina's multi-million dollar nonprofit bingo industry have drawn heated debate this session, but when adjournment rolls around it may be the operators, rather than charities, who are shouting "bingo."

Sen. Charles Hipps, D-Haywood, a member of a Senate Judiciary I subcommittee considering a bill to increase charities' stakes in the games, said no compromise appeared likely despite numerous meetings.

"We kept meeting so many times I though I was in a bingo game," he said. "They'd say be there at 4 and it became B-4 after a time."

Even a bill to shift responsibility for regulating bingo from the Revenue Department to the Department of Human Resources ran into trouble over a $100 licensing fee.

"This is not a big money-maker," said Roy Shuping, representing the American Legion. He said the state's intention to keep commercial gambling out of North Carolina could be met without hurting legitimate operators. And he said instead of helping charities, new legislation might eliminate the civic organizations on which many charities depend.

"That $100 would be better spent ... on another uniform for kids playing junior baseball," Shupin said.

What concerns many lawmakers are figures showing the 312 licensed nonprofit bingo operations in North Carolina take in $23 million a year of which less than 10 percent goes to charities.

Rep. Coy Privette, R-Cabarrus, proposed requiring 50 percent of the profits go to charity. But his bill was reduced to a 35 percent mandate before passing the House and is lodged in the Senate subcommittee as opponents, led by Shupin, lobby for a 15-percent level.

"If you can't use at least a fourth of that for charitable causes, they shouldn't be in business to begin with," said Privette. "You've got states that have lotteries and 50 percent of the proceeds go to the designated cause."

Shupin, however, told the Senate Finance Committee that of $22,766,061 in gross proceeds, $21,946,050 went to prizes and expenses allowed under state law. He said that meant each organization averaged a profit of $3,000 or, with one game a week, about $60 each week.

Shupin said giving a higher percentage to charities might scuttle the games.

"The only way it can be done is to cut back on prizes," he said. "In those border counties like Mecklenburg, just across the county line in South Carolina they don't regulate bingo. If they can't meet South Carolina prizes, they close 'em up."

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, chairman of the Judiciary I Committee that is studying Privette's bill, said he would be willing to take up the measure once some agreement is reached.

Privette, however, said a compromise appeared to be out of the question. He said he would ask that the subcommittee choose a figure and run with it.

"The point is that some of these organizations are giving up 83 percent in prizes," he said. "That's not a charitable operation. That's a gambling operation.

"If they can't afford a $100 fee and, again, give at least 25 percent to those charitable causes they say they're doing, they ought to be out of business," he said. "It goes to a matter of greed, now."

Hipps said one piece of legislation to address abuses of bingo laws is nearing enactment. That bill, sent to the House for concurrence, would eliminate a loophole that let for-profit "beach bingo" operations offer prizes in excess of the legally allowable $10 by giving away bingo cards. Current law applies only to cards for which money is paid.

"That's going to straighten out a whole bunch of things that need to be straightened out," Hipps said. "We might wait a year and see what happens."

Diary Theft Leads To Suit

RALEIGH (AP) — Officials of a Cary church, who have been sued by a youth minister over invasion of privacy, say they did read the woman's diary and disclosed the contents to other church members in order to verify the information.

In their answer to the lawsuit, officials of the First Baptist Church of Cary admitted that Cary developer David J. Martin removed one of Susan Bennett's diaries from his home. They contended, however, that as the owner of the house, Martin had the right to enter Ms. Bennett's bedroom.

Martin and other defendants in the suit maintained that they had acted properly by disclosing information in the diary to other church members. The information, they said in their answer, "concerned matters of legitimate concern to the recipients of this information as members of the First Baptist Church of Cary ... and as members of a larger spiritual community."

Ms. Bennett said in her lawsuit that she was forced to resign as youth minister in February after a church member in whose home she was living sneaked into her bedroom and stole her diaries. The suit was filed in May in Wake County Superior Court. Church officials filed the answer to the suit Friday.

Ms. Bennett's suit asked for more than $90,000 in compensatory and punitive damages for invasion of privacy, conversion of property, trespassing, conspiracy and emotional distress. Listed as defendants were Martin and his wife, Marilyn; churcch pastor, the Rev. Harvey L. Duke and his wife, June; Alexander B. Credle Jr., chairman of the church personnel committee; Jean A. Chase, a church deacon; and A. Wayne Witt, chairman of the deacon board.

Neither Ms. Bennett's suit nor the church's answer included any details of the diaries' contents. Ms. Bennett said in a complaint instituting her suit that the diaries were personal and contained private facts that would be embarrassing to her if they were made public.

In their answer, Martin and Duke, admitted that they had contacted some people mentioned in the diary. They did so, they said, "to confirm the truth and accuracy of her written accounts of certain misconduct and to attempt to bring about their repentance and their restoration to the Christian ideal where needed."

The defendants said in the answer that their actions were prompted by their religious convictions and their "special responsibility to the youthful members of the congregation." They asked that the court not recognize any legal claim by Ms. Bennett, saying to do so would violate their constitutional rights to freedom of religion and freedom of association.

They said that they had needed to disclose the diary's contents to other members because Ms. Bennett had misrepresented her qualifications for the job as youth minister, had concealed personal conduct which made her unqualified for the job and had given church members inaccurate reasons for her resignation.

Ms. Bennett, who was hired in July 1986, said in her complaint that she wrote a resignation letter in February stating that her diaries had been taken and read openly among church members.

Meese: Did He Uncover — Or Cover-Up?

By PETE YOST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Before they are done, investigators will turn their attention to Attorney General Edwin Meese III — and whether he uncovered the Iran-Contra affair, as he claims, or tried to cover it up, as critics charge.

Meese has been portrayed by some in Congress as a bungler who was reluctant to call in the FBI in the affair's earliest days and as a possible participant in a cover-up who was more interested in protecting the boss, President Reagan, than in seeing that a vigorous investigation was conducted.

The attorney general had been expected to appear before the congressional committees investigating the affair after Rear Adm. John Poindexter, the former national security adviser, completes his testimony. However, Justice Department officials said Saturday that they now understand that Meese's appearance has been delayed until the following week.

Committee sources said Secretary of State George Shultz, and possibly former White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan might testify this coming week.

The congressional investigating committees have been delving into Meese's conduct during the days and months leading up to his public disclosure of the affair at a dramatic White House news conference last Nov. 25. Part of independent counsel Lawrence Walsh's criminal investigation of the affair focuses on Meese's activities as well.

Meese has acknowledged delaying one criminal probe involving aid to the Contras, has denied slowing down another, has rejected any suggestion that he should have called the FBI in sooner and says he never engaged in anything that smacks of a cover-up.

One of the attorney general's political aides first unearthed the so-called smoking gun memo last Nov. 22 indicating that money from the Iran arms sales had been diverted to the Contras. Meese didn't put the FBI on the case until Nov. 26 and there was extensive destruction of documents in the intervening four days. Fired National Security Council aide Oliver North testified that while Meese's people were going through his NSC files Nov. 22, he was shredding papers in the next room.

Earlier this month, the Justice Department was put in the position of having to deny that Meese was a participant in a proposed cover-up when he attended a White House meeting last Nov. 20 with North, CIA Director William Casey and others.

North wanted Casey to tell Congress the next day that no one in the Reagan administration had known in 1985 that a shipment to Iran in November 1985 contained weapons. The plan in November 1986 was to tell Congress that the officials thought the shipment was oil drilling equipment.

Meese, according to Justice Department spokesmen, knew so little about the 1985 shipments when he went into the Nov. 20, 1986, White House meeting that he didn't realize that the proposed testimony was false. The November 1985 shipment was especially sensitive because the CIA was involved in it, requiring congressional notification and a presidential finding, which wasn't drafted and signed until after the shipment had already been made.

On another matter, Meese apparently never asked Poindexter during the attorney general's weekend fact-finding inquiry last November the central question in the affair — whether the NSC chief had told Reagan earlier about the diversion of funds to the Contras.

Nonetheless, Meese announced publicly last Nov. 25 that Reagan had been unaware of the diversion.

Poindexter testified that in his final conversation with the president, Meese and Regan last November, none of them asked what he knew about the diversion of U.S.-Iran arms sales proceeds to the Contras.

In rebuttal to the observation of Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, the chairman of the Senate investigating committee, that he had withheld critical information from Cabinet officers, Poindexter replied, "I didn't withhold from them anything that they didn't want withheld."

There has been persistent criticism about Meese's exclusion of career Justice Department attorneys from the criminal division in his November fact-finding inquiry.

Instead, the attorney general chose political appointees with no background in criminal law to sift through conflicting statements from administration officials on the Iran arms sales.

After Meese called the FBI into the investigation, he tried to insert Charles Cooper, one of his political aides from the weekend inquiry, into a leadership role, a move that created discomfort among the FBI officials present. Cooper withdrew shortly thereafter.

It is Meese's dual role as longtime Reagan confidant and top law enforcement officer in the nation that has placed him under suspicion.

As leader of the conservative forces in the Reagan administration, Meese has repeatedly urged continued congressional aid to the Contras fighting the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

At the same time, Meese as attorney general was overseer of numerous criminal investigations into possible illegal shipments of arms to the Contras from U.S. soil after Congress cut off military aid to the guerrillas.

There have been persistent reports that the U.S. attorney in Miami was pressured more than a year ago by superiors in Washington to put the brakes on an investigation of Contra gun-running. Placed on the defensive, Meese had to explain why he had taken a personal interest in the investigation and was forced to deny that he had instituted any delaying tactics.

CIA Shakeup Said Expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — A CIA shakeup reportedly planned by Director William Webster would be expected even if the agency hadn't been tainted by the Iran-Contra affair, two members of the House Intelligence Committee said Saturday.

"This is normal," committee chairman Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, said of reports that Webster, who took over the CIA's top job in late May, intends to remove at least two top covert operations men involved in the Iran-Contra affair.

"Coming into an agency that has had some problems, some involvement with this particular situation, it would be expected, whether there were problems or not, that he would make certain moves in order to have his own people in place at the top of the agency," Stokes said on Cable News Network's Newsmaker Saturday program.

Congressional and intelligence sources told the Los Angeles Times that the CIA's deputy director for operations, Clair George, and its chief of counterterrorism operations, Duane Clarridge, will be dismissed or allowed to take early retirement.

Both men are 30-year CIA veterans who worked with former National Security Council aide Lt. Col. Oliver North and the late CIA director William Casey, who were involved heavily in the Iran-Contra affair.

Stokes and Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., said they had not been told about an impending shake-up. But they said it is Webster's prerogative to move in his own people.

"A new director means a new team, people he's comfortable with, people that he trusts and relies on," Hyde said on the CNN program. "I don't think it's any reflection on the people being removed."

According to a report in Saturday editions of the Times, Alan Fiers, chief of the CIA's Central American Task Force, also may lose his job.

The report said the housecleaning is supported by Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman David Boren, D-Okla.

Members of the House and Senate panels investigating the sale of arms to Iran, the diversion of proceeds to help Nicaragua's Contra rebels and North's private Contra aid network have criticized the CIA for failing to cooperate with their inquiry.

Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., said Friday the agency had tried to stonewall the congressional panels and added that some CIA personnel might be investigated for perjury.

The CIA suspended at least two lower-ranking field officers, one stationed in Honduras and another in Costa Rica, for aiding the Contras in defiance of a congressional ban.

A CIA spokeswoman, Kathy Pherson, said no agency officers have been dismissed because of their activities relating to the Iran-Contra affair. She said she could not comment on specific cases.

One source told the Times that Webster intended to dismiss George and Clarridge, but another said they probably would be allowed to take early retirement.

Last year, George told both the House and Senate Intelligence Committees that as far as he knew, the agency was not connected "directly or indirectly" to North's secret Contra supply operation, unidentified sources told the newspaper.

Other CIA officials have said that George, 56, knew of the effort and at least tacitly approved it, the sources said.

Clarridge, 55, was chief of CIA operations in Europe in 1985 when the agency helped North move a secret shipment of Hawk anti-aircraft missiles to Iran in an attempt to win freedom for American hostages in Lebanon.

The CIA is prohibited fr. n undertaking covert operations without a written order from the President. President Reagan d not issue such an order — known as a "finding" — until after the operation.

In sworn testimony to congressional investigators earlier this year, Clarridge claimed that he believed the shipment contained oil-drilling parts, not missiles.

Other CIA officials told Congress that Clarridge did know, and North's notes of conversations with Clarridge appear to confirm their accounts.

NOW Members Want Lawmaker To Seek Presidential Nomination

By BOB DVORCHAK
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Chanting "Run, Pat, Run," members of the National Organization for Women on Saturday urged U.S. Rep. Patricia Schroeder to seek the Democratic presidential nomination and then marched suffragette-style for a revival of the Equal Rights Amendment.

Delegates at the 21st convention of NOW also planned to vote Saturday night on a successor for outgoing President Eleanor Smeal, who called on delegates to fight Robert Bork's nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Candidates to succeed Smeal are NOW political director Molly Yard and Noreen Connell, president of New York NOW. The winner will be announced Sunday.

Schroeder, from Colorado, is dean of the women in the U.S. House with 15 years experience. She has formed an exploratory committee and hopes to raise $20 million for a possible presidential bid.

She told 2,400 cheering delegates she planned to make a decision in September, but a slip of words in a speech made her sound like a candidate.

"I am running," Schroeder said, pausing to correct herself, "or talking about running, because we desperately need a national housecleaning."

At an earlier news conference, Schroeder said she was not deterred by the experience of Geraldine Ferraro, a former New York congresswoman who was Walter Mondale's vice presidential choice in 1984. Ferraro and her family were closely scrutinized by the media, including negative stories about the real estate dealings of her husband, John Zaccaro.

"The grass-roots support in the women's movement for Patricia Schroeder is overwhelming. We want her to run for the presidency," said Smeal, 47, who has been NOW's president for seven of the past 10 years.

Smeal then led 5,000 chanting ERA supporters on an 18-block march through city streets and past the hall where the Constitution was written 200 years ago. Some marchers wore long white dresses with purple and gold sashes and carried parasols, reminiscent of the suffragettes who marched for voting rights in years past.

The ERA fell three states short of the 38 needed for ratification in 1982, but it has been re-introduced in Congress this year at NOW's urging. Smeal helped carry a banner reading, "How Long Must Women Wait For Equality?"

Earlier Saturday, NOW held an emergency strategy session on how to block Senate confirmation of Bork, a conservative who is President Reagan's choice to succeed Justice Lewis Powell.

NOW delegates sporting "Shred Bork" buttons planned rallies in the states of the 14 members of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"We will not give in. We will fight this to the end. This president will not stack the court against us for the rest of our lives," said Patricia Ireland, NOW's national treasurer.

"This is literally an exercise to save the court for a right to privacy and for women's rights, civil rights and indivdual rights in our country," said Smeal. "A failed presidency has no right to leave its legacy on the Supreme Court of the U.S."

Hart Spending Reported

DENVER (AP) — Former presidential candidate Gary Hart raised and spent about $2 million during his brief campaign, which left him about $100,000 in the red, according to a published report Saturday.

The Denver Post reported that Hart still owes $99,372 for the 1988 campaign. He also owes $1.3 million for his failed 1984 attempt at the Democratic nomination.

The 1988 figures were based on records filed Friday with the Federal Election Commission.

The records also show Hart's 1988 contributors included actresses Jane Fonda, Glenn Close, and Goldie Hawn; Playboy publisher Hugh Hefner; California legislator Tom Hayden; composer Burt Bacharach; and rock musician Don Henley.

The former Colorado senator has $123,071 in surplus funds from the latest campaign but the money was being held by the U.S. District Court in Colorado because creditors from Hart's 1984 presidential campaign have made claims on it.

Hart spokesman David Miller said campaign officials were optimistic that the court will release the money so Hart can pay off his 1988 debts.

Hart abandoned his bid for the presidency May 8 following published reports about his relationship with Miami model Donna Rice. He now practices law in Denver.

The former senator has asked the FEC to reverse an earlier decision that precludes him from getting federal matching funds. Campaign aides have said that the money would be used to pay off debts incurred during both the 1984 and 1988 races.

Searchers Pull 4 More Bodies From Texas River

By DAVID SEDENO
Associated Press Writer

COMFORT, Texas (AP) — Searchers found four more bodies in the churning waters of the Guadalupe River on Saturday, bringing the death toll to six and leaving four missing after a church camp bus and van washed off a river crossing.

Helicopters scoured the river from overhead, while National Guardsmen, scuba divers and dogs trained to sniff for people under water were among those searching the banks.

Authorities rummaged through belongings taken from the vehicles while anxious parents and survivors wept and watched the search from the banks. Wreckers tried to pull the van from the river after rescuers found it lodged against a bank downstream.

"You always hope for the best," said Mike Rogers, a Department of Public Safety dispatcher in nearby Kerrville, but authorities had little hope the missing would be found alive.

"It may be some may never be found because they're covered by sand and they might be buried 5 feet deep," state Trooper Tom Mobley said.

Thirty-three of those aboard the two vehicles scrambled to safety or were rescued after the accident Friday morning.

Early Saturday, rescuers pulled the bodies of two 16-year-olds, a boy and a girl, from the slate-gray waters. They later found two more bodies six miles downstream from where the vehicles were overcome Friday by the raging river, authorities said.

The bodies of two teen-age girls, also among the 43 people on the vehicles from the Seagoville Road Baptist Church in Balch Springs, were recovered Friday.

A 14-year-old girl was still hospitalized Saturday in stable condition, while another person was released after spending the night in the hospital.

During Friday's rescue, workers plucked several screaming, horror-stricken youngsters from the muddy waters, hours after the bus and van were stranded as they tried to cross the river at a ford.

Youngsters clung to branches, praying and singing, and formed a human chain in the cold, swiftly flowing river. One girl plunged 100 feet to her death after losing her grip on a rope dangled from a helicopter, authorities said.

"We had come up here to learn about God, and we sure did," said Melissa Henderson, 17, of Mesquite. "I have never been so scared in my life. The worst thing was hearing your friends screaming for help and not being able to do anything about it."

The vehicles were bound from Camp Pot O' Gold, a children's camp, to a rafting expedition, said Richard Koons, 26, the church's youth minister who was driving the bus. He said the youngsters were not being evacuated from the camp.

Nearly a foot of rain had fallen early Friday, causing the worst flooding of the Guadalupe at nearby Hunt since 1932, the National Weather Service said.

The river had risen to 16 feet above flood stage by 4 a.m. Friday, prompting deputies to evacuate hundreds of residents along the river. The river began receding Saturday.

Kendall County Sheriff Lee D'Spain Jr. said his officers had called camp supervisors between 3 and 4 a.m. Friday to warn them to stay put and not try to cross the swollen river.

Department of Public Safety Sgt. Charles Seale said the bus, with 32 passengers, stalled in about a foot of water at a ford on the Guadalupe River. Two other buses had successfully crossed, but the third was caught in its predecessor's wake, he said.

Koons said that he could not back up the bus because the van, which also stalled, was close behind.

Panic mounted as a flash flood sent water rushing at the vehicles. The water rose as high as the steering wheel, and Koons told the teen-agers to get out and hold hands in an effort to bring everyone to dry land.

Several youths eventually climbed to safety on ropes dropped by National Guard helicopters, but Melanie Finley, 14, of Mesquite "apparently was too weak to hold on" and fell 100 feet to her death, Seale said. "She had the rope around her properly, but she couldn't hold on."

Tonya Smith, 13, of Scurry was found dead three miles downstream, her body tangled in a wiremesh fence.

DPS trooper Frank Phelps identified the first body found Saturday as that of Michael O'Neal, 16, of Balch Springs. The others were Stacy Smith of Scurry, Tonya's sister; Legine Keenum, 15, of Balch Springs; and Mike Lane, 16, of Dallas.

Seale said investigators will determine next week whether any charges should be filed against the bus driver.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators were also on the scene, although spokeswoman Jean Fasone said the team may not have jurisdiction because the occupants had gotten out of the vehicles before they were washed away.

TENSE MOMENTS — Family members and friends watch a television report listing survivors of a bus accident that occurred Friday in Comfort, Texas. A church bus and a van, carrying 43 people, were swept into the Guadalupe River. The death toll rose to six Saturday after four more bodies were found. (AP Laserphoto)

Passenger Sues Delta

ATLANTA (AP) — A passenger on a Delta Air Lines flight that plunged toward the Pacific Ocean last month after the plane's engines were mistakenly shut down has filed a $4 million lawsuit against the airline.

Catherine Demars' suit charges the airline with negligence, saying Delta had reckless disregard for safe aircraft design and flight-crew training.

Bill Berry, a spokesman for the Atlanta-based airline, said he wasn't aware of the lawsuit and could not respond to it.

Mrs. Demars was among 190 passengers aboard a flight bound from Los Angeles to Cincinnati when the flight crew mistakenly shut down both engines shortly after takeoff. It was one of a rash of incidents involving Delta in recent weeks.

The Federal Aviation Administration said the plane glided about 1,100 feet toward the Pacific Ocean until the flight crew was able to restart the engines about 500 feet above the water. The aircraft then resumed normal flight.

According to the suit, filed in federal court in Miami, Mrs. Demars sustained physical and emotional injuries as a result of the accident, including injured cartilage, "extreme anxiety and panic," sleeplessness, loss of appetite and a permanent fear of flying.

Elements Help Firemen Soak Western Blazes

By The Associated Press

With help from rain and even a bit of snow, firefighters on Saturday were mopping up most remnants of the fires that scorched more than 45,000 acres in eight Western states over the past week.

The newest blaze was in Nevada, where 40 firefighters battled a brush fire in two acres of forestland on Lake Tahoe's North Shore triggered by the crash and explosion of a twin-engine plane carrying four people. There were no reports of survivors and the identities of those aboard had not been determined.

The worst fire still uncontained was the Bland Mountain forest fire near Roseburg, Ore., which killed two loggers on Wednesday. Authorities determined the fire was started from an electrical short on a ranch tractor.

Lynn Anderson-Farr, a state Department of Forestry spokeswoman, said 840 firefighters using 13 bulldozers and hand equipment had dug fire trails around more than 40 percent of the 8,600-acre fire by Saturday morning. She said there was no estimate when it would be fully contained.

Rain that fell throughout the night helped settle the blaze and kept the area damp following a light rainfall Friday, she said.

Combined, fires in southwest Oregon burned more than 10,000 acres and created a pall of smoke that was visible on weather satellite photographs.

In north-central Washington, the rain grounded helicopters used by firefighters against an out-of-control 400-acre fire along the Twisp River, but it also helped reduce the need for them.

Officials hoped to fully contain the fire by Saturday evening and have it controlled by Sunday evening, said Ellie Chambers, public affairs assistant with the Okanogan National Forest.

A tree faller helping clear trees along the fire lines was killed Friday morning in an accident at the site, said Ms. Chambers.

Brush and forest fires in Washington have charred more than 2,200 acres and caused at least $7 million damage to a housing development south of Spokane.

In Idaho, overnight rain and cold temperatures helped quell the five-day-old 2,238-acre Minneha Creek fire near Idaho City, and the work turned Saturday to mopping up and forest rehabilitation.

The fire was declared contained Friday night, after a four-day battle that involved up to 550 firefighters working 15 miles of fire lines, with about 100 support personnel.

Montana's fire officials said the steady rainfall Friday night had sharply lessened fire danger. The state's largest fire, the 2,000-acre Sterling Gulch fire in northwest Montana, was entirely contained, but about 400 firefighters remained at work Saturday to begin mop-up operations.

In California's Modoc National Forest, a rare July snowstorm that dumped 3 inches of snow helped cool off a fire that blackened 3,500 acres of trees and brush. The blaze, which was started by lightning on Wednesday, was fanned by high winds on Thursday. At the fire's peak, there were 800 firefighters on the lines.

Fires had also erupted in Utah and New Mexico during the week, but most of those were quelled earlier.

Cherokees Hold Elections

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. (AP) — Wilma Mankiller sought to become the first woman elected principal chief of the Cherokee Nation on Saturday as she battled a former deputy chief in a runoff election.

Ms. Mankiller, 41, of Tahlequah was appointed chief of the 75,000-member tribe in December 1985 when Ross Swimmer became assistant secretary of the Interior to run the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

In the runoff for a four-year term she faced Perry Wheeler, 56, a Sallisaw funeral home director, who was trying for the second time to defeat an incumbent. He lost to Swimmer in 1983.

Cherokee voters also selected a deputy chief, choosing between incumbent John Ketcher and Barbara Starr-Scott.

Ms. Mankiller and Wheeler traded barbs during the campaign, especially since the June 20 election that resulted in Ms. Mankiller receiving 45 percent of the vote and Wheeler 29 percent in a four-way race. Tribal law requires that a candidate receive more than 50 percent of the ballots cast to win the election.

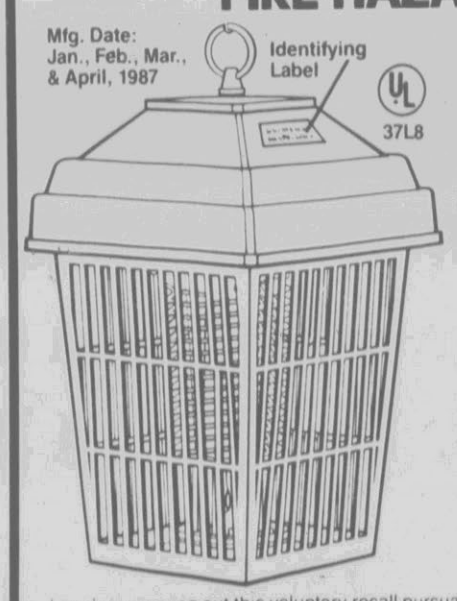

Ms. Mankiller called Wheeler "an old-time political person" and accused him of waging a negative campaign. Wheeler criticized Ms. Mankiller for not hiring more Cherokees to higher-paying management jobs in the tribe and accused her of not being truthful about her health.

Ms. Mankiller suffered from what she said was a kidney infection shortly before last month's election, but Wheeler claimed she had "kidney deterioration."

Wheeler, who served 12 years as mayor of Sallisaw, was elected deputy chief on a slate with Swimmer in 1976 and again in 1979, but split the ticket in 1983 to challenge Swimmer.

Seven Die As Landslide Hits Alpine Resort; 12 Missing

By SARAH DELANEY
Associated Press Writer

SONDRIO, Italy (AP) — A landslide triggered by three days of heavy rain covered an Alpine resort hotel in mud and rocks Saturday, killing at least seven people, police said. Another 12 were reported missing.

The landslide hit the mountainside Gran Baita hotel in the tiny village of Tartano, just southwest of this town near the Swiss border, at about 7 p.m.

A paramilitary police official in Sondrio said an unknown number of people were injured.

The victims were not identified and it was not known if any were foreigners, said the carabinieri official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The hotel "was completely destroyed, covered by mud and rocks," the official said. Some private homes also were hit by the slide, the Italian news agency ANSA reported.

Authorities could not say how big the hotel was or how many guests were registered.

Last week, a landslide also caused by days of heavy rain struck an Alpine campground about 140 miles west of here near Annecy, France and killed 23 people. Three were still missing Saturday.

Hundreds of firefighters, police, soldiers, and mountain guides searched in the rain for victims buried under hotel debris. The official said their efforts were hampered by numerous smaller landslides in the area.

Helicopters, four-wheel drive vehicles and a bulldozer were being used in the operation, the Civil Defense Ministry said.

A heavy rainstorm Saturday sent already swollen rivers and streams over their banks and caused numerous landslides in the mountainous region just north of Milan surrounding Bergamo, Como and Sondrio.

Authorities in many small towns reported roads washed out by surging waters or blocked by rocks and mud.

The inundation isolated some Alpine communities, prompting authorities to evacuate residents, especially in the area north of Bergano, where the Brembo River went over its banks.

Police said telephone service for some in the area had been cut off.

The state-run RAI television said earlier Saturday that one person had died in flooding in the region, but it gave no details.

Civil Defense Minister Giuseppe Zamberletti called in reinforcements of firefighters and paramilitary police to help rescue and evacuation operations in the region.

The ANSA news agency said 75 boys at a campground in Valmasino, near Bergamo, had to be rescued by helicopter after being isolated by high, fast water in mountain streams.

Residents along some parts of the swollen Brembo River also were evacuated, ANSA said. It gave no figures.

A section of railway track on the Milan-Como line was blocked temporarily by a landslide triggered by a heavy downpour Saturday.

Police warned motorists not to head toward the affected areas, and several miles of highway in the Brembo Valley were closed.

Authorities reported that north of Bergamo near Camerata, on the Brembo River, a house collapsed and five people inside got out just in time and were brought to safety by rescue workers.

A bridge collapsed in the center of Sondrio, police said, and Lake Como rose above its banks.

Zamberletti was meeting in an emergency session with fire, police and paramilitary officers to coordinate action to deal with the emergency, ANSA said.

The Civil Defense Ministry said that early Saturday morning they had warned local officials, police and fire departments that because of the sustained rainfall, a dangerous situation could develop in the mountain area.

Welfare Reform Proposal Targets AFDC Payments

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Child support would be withheld from parental paychecks and states would have to run extensive job and education programs under a long-awaited welfare reform plan developed by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan.

The New York Democrat, chairman of the Senate Finance subcommittee on Social Security and family policy, unveiled a five-year, $2.3 billion proposal this weekend and said he will introduce it in the Senate on Tuesday.

Aid to Families with Dependent Children, the current welfare system serving nearly 3.8 million families, is "a passive system. It's a widow's pension," Moynihan said at a briefing Friday, referring to the original intent of AFDC.

Moynihan's Family Security Act, similar in many respects to the major welfare bill making its way through the House, would stress parental obligations to support their children and participate in the work force.

"We're trying to deal with the problem of dependency," said Moynihan, an author and expert on families in poverty. "It is a very large problem and it is not going to respond quickly to anything we do."

The Moynihan plan, co-sponsored so far by six Democrats and one Republican on the Finance Committee, would replace AFDC with a Child Support Supplement program. Like the House bill, it would require states to include two-parent households in the system. Only 26 states do so now.

Moynihan's bill also would require states to set up within three years a Job Opportunities and Basic Skills (JOBS) program that would be mandatory for many welfare recipients, including mothers of children 3 or over. Some 120,000 people would be in the program in 1992 — similar to the 115,000 projected that year for the House version of the work program.

The Senate child support provisions, many of them stiffer than those in the House bill, would require states to set and use guidelines on the amount of awards; collect the support payments directly from the employers of the parents, usually fathers, as soon as an arrangement or court order is final; and step up efforts to establish paternity or lose federal money.

The five-year cost of the Moynihan bill is less than half the $5.3 billion the Congressional Budget Office estimates it would cost to implement the Ways and Means package.

The biggest difference is that the House bill would give states financial incentivcs to raise cash benefits — a provision projected by CBO to cost $1.2 billion over the five-year period.

Under the Moynihan plan, $140 million would be appropriated for the JOBS program each year; states would put up 10 percent of the cost of their program and the federal government would pay the rest. If states wanted to spend more than what was needed to match their share of the $140 million, they could — but the federal match would fall from 90 percent to 60 percent.

Moynihan said the open-ended funding mechanism would not foster a runaway program that would bankrupt the federal treasury. He said states only spend an average of $500,000 a year on the existing open-ended Work Incentive program, which provides job-search services to welfare mothers — partly because they don't have extra money and partly because getting people off welfare is so complicated.

Moynihan, who started talking about his plan six months ago, tried to win Reagan administration support but conceded he has failed.

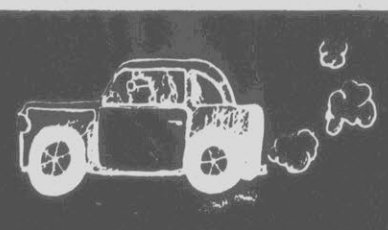

However, he was bolstered by a letter late Friday from Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole and six other GOP members of the Finance Committee citing matching rates and other concerns they had about the bill. Moynihan said principles were not involved, and said he could negotiate on details.

Moynihan said committee chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., has promised to schedule the bill and he predicted the Senate would pass it next year. But it's possible the full Senate will never consider welfare reform — because House leaders may attach their proposal to a budget reconciliation bill headed for a House-Senate conference committee this fall.

Cape Town Police, Black Activists Square Off

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Police ripped the flag of the banned African National Congress off the coffin of a suspected guerrilla Saturday and fired tear gas into an angry black crowd surging toward them after the funeral service.

Riot squad chief Maj. Alf Odendaal struggled for possession of the flag with the Rev. Allan Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. White police and black mourners jostled the coffin outside the Anglican church in the Bonteheuwel mixed-race township.

The hearse drove off to the cemetery, tailgate open and coffin tilting out, as police fired tear gas at close quarters. Mourners screamed and ran, trampling each other, gagging, vomiting and climbing over fences to escape the fumes that wafted into the church.

"A few incidents took place at the funeral," said Lt. R.W. Olivier, a police spokesman in Pretoria. "Tear gas was used to disperse small crowds of people. There were no injuries that we know of and no arrests have been made."

Police in Cape Town, however, said they arrested Craig Matthew, a South African cameraman for London-based Worldwide Television News, for allegedly obstructing the police. They said he would be released on bail.

The violence appeared to reflect a battle of wills between police trying to enforce the government's emergency restrictions on the funeral, and black activists determined to turn it into a political demonstration by waving the banned black, green and gold ANC banner.

The riot squad moved in after organizers of the funeral of 22-year-old Ashley Kriel broke restrictions that limited the congregation to 800, barred political speeches and outlawed displaying banners such as the ANC flag.

The ANC, outlawed since 1960, is the main guerrilla group fighting to overthrow South Africa's government and end apartheid.

Kriel was killed last week in a scuffle with police who said they found a gun and a grenade in his Bonteheuwel home.

Police have said, and Kriel's associates don't deny, that the ANC trained him in Angola and sent him back into South Africa as a guerrilla.

Police said Kriel accidentally shot and killed himself. The United Democratic Front, the country's largest anti-apartheid movement, is demanding an investigation of neighbors' allegations that Kriel was beaten and that his dead body was seen in handcuffs.

The first trouble began as mourners carried the coffin from the New Apostolic Church to the Anglican church for the main service. Police fired tear gas, forcing pallbearers to run the six blocks between the two churches.

In the packed, 2,500-capacity church, Cape Town Archbishop Desmond Tutu gave a eulogy, followed by Farid Esack, a young Moslem mullah, who called Kriel "a comrade (who) has given his life for peace and justice."

An ANC flag that was hanging in the church was draped over the coffin, and youths took turns delivering clenched-fist salutes.

Tutu and Boesak left the service several times to negotiate with police.

Esack said he grabbed the flag as Odendaal and Boesak fought over it, chased after the hearse and tossed the banner over the coffin. The coffin was buried with the ANC flag.

Boesak had asked Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok to lift "the impractical and highly provocative restrictions," but Vlok said the rules "in no way could hamper the holding of a Christian burial for the deceased."

In Johannesburg, meanwhile, the country's largest labor federation ended a four-day convention by calling for all-out economic sanctions, a cutoff of bank loans and diplomatic isolation of South Africa.

Jay Naidoo, general secretary of the predominantly black 750,000-member Congress of South African Trade Unions, said it was calling for an end to foreign purchases of South African gold, platinum, coal and diamonds, which account for 70 percent of its foreign earnings.

It also called for cutting off loans and credit to the South African government and businesses, and a ban on foreign travel by South Africans for any purpose.

By law and custom, apartheid establishes a racially segregated society in which the 25.6 million blacks have no vote in national affairs. The 5 million whites control the economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services.

Jamaica Hosts Mrs. Thatcher

By LLOYD WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain toured historical sites Saturday during a low-key, 20-hour visit to this former British colony.

She arrived Friday night from Washington and was greeted at Norman Manley Airport by Prime Minister Edward Seaga and 14 Cabinet members.

She arranged to fly back to London on Saturday night.

Mrs. Thatcher rose early Saturday to tour Port Royal, the home of Henry Morgan and other 17th-century buccaneers who preyed on Spanish gold ships.

She also visited Jamaica's police academy, which receives technical help from the British government, and a drug rehabilation program. Seaga held a luncheon at Jamaica House in her honor.

Jamaica, a Caribbean island nation of 2.3 million people, was a British colony for more than 300 years before gaining independence in 1962. It plans celebrations next month to celebrate the 25th anniversary of independence, but Mrs. Thatcher was unable to schedule her visit to coincide with the celebration, said a Jamaica Information Service spokesman.

Her visit was expected to give a boost to the Seaga administration, which has been hard pressed by opposition leader and former Prime Minister Michael Manley to call an early election.

Little publicity was given to Mrs. Thatcher's visit, and many residents were surprised when police stopped traffic to make room for her motorcade.

The road between Kingston and the airport was repaired for her visit, but few other preparations were made. In contrast, Kingston was whitewashed before the February 1983 visitor of Queen Elizabeth II.

It was Mrs. Thatcher's first visit to Jamaica and her second to the Caribbean. She attended a Commonwealth conference in the Bahamas in 1985.

Shultz Says U.S. Won't Trade Aid For Information On MIAs

By HENRY GOTTLIEB
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz told the families of missing Vietnam War servicemen Saturday that the Reagan administration will resist any Vietnamese attempts to seek U.S. economic aid as the price of helping to account for the missing.

Vietnam agreed earlier this month to meet with President Reagan's special emissary on the issue, retired Gen. John W. Vessey Jr.

In accepting the Vessey mission, Vietnam said it no longer demanded that talks aimed at accounting for the 2,413 Americans still listed as missing be linked to political issues — such as U.S. economic assistance — but be a strictly "humanitarian" endeavor.

In a speech to the 18th annual meeting of the U.S. League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, however, Shultz said he was disturbed by recent reports that "Vietnam is raising the concept of humanitarian cooperation as a 'two-way street,' including economic assistance."

"Humanitarian reciprocity is one thing, but any attempt to trade information on our missing men for economic aid is another," he said. "We cannot agree to this."

The development means, he said, that in spite of the Vietnamese agreement to work with Vessey, "we must face the possibility that we will not be able to move the issue forward."

Anne Mills Griffiths, executive director of the families' league, said after Shultz' speech that the organization supports the administration's disinclination to link economic help for Vietnam's struggling economy with the issue of the missing in action.

The organization shares the administration's concern that if the talks were linked, failure on the economic issues would doom attempts to find the missing, she said.

"The issue of our missing, however, stands apart — separate from our political differences — as a purely humanitarian matter," Shultz said.

Among the other humanitarian issues the United States will pursue with Vietnam are requests for emigration rights for Vietnamese with family in the United States, for the Amerasian offspring of American servicemen and for prisoners in so-called "re-education camps."

"Vietnam has said that it has similar concerns it wishes to talk with us about and we are prepared to address all those matters which are clearly humanitarian in nature," Shultz said. "We must get down to business."

Officials of both countries are currently working to set a date for Vessey's mission.

Shultz reaffirmed the U.S. view that normalization of relations with Vietnam can begin only after Hanoi orders a withdrawal of its forces from neighboring Cambodia.

"I think it is important and necessary to say that the American people bear no animus towards the Vietnamese people," Shultz said. "We look forward to re-engagement on a political level as we do to the Cambodian settlement which must precede it."

Vietnamese leaders, in interviews with Western journalists, have acknowledged in recent months that the government needs innovative action to improve the country's economy. Vietnam could profit by the example of its prosperous and more democratic neighbors who have been hit by an "economic miracle," Shultz said.

Bomb Kills 3 In Pakistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — A bomb blast killed three people Saturday and wounded 19 in a section of the Afghan capital reserved for Soviets and government officials, Afghanistan's official Radio Kabul reported.

The radio, monitored in Islamabad, said the bomb was placed on a motorcycle in a market place and exploded at 5:30 p.m.

It said the injured included two children, but did not say if any victims were Soviets.

Families of the victims and hundreds of bystanders cursed those responsible, the radio said. It blamed "extremist opposition elements" and "imperialistic circles" — catchphrases for anti-communist Islamic guerrillas who are fighting the Soviet-backed government.

Official Afghan media routinely blame the guerrillas for terrorist bombings in the city.

However, Western and Afghan sources have said previous explosions were the work of rival factions of the ruling People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan.

Najib, the party secretary-general who uses only one name, belongs to the urban Parcham faction. Much of the military belongs to the larger, rural Khalq faction.

Blast Jars Square

BEIJING (AP) — A small explosion occurred in Tiananmen Square but no injuries or damage resulted, the official Xinhua News Agency reported Saturday.

The brief report did not specify the cause of the blast, but said police detained a 25-year-old man from central Hubei province in connection with it. It did not give his name or any details of the explosion.

The blast occurred just before midnight Friday night, Xinhua quoted the Public Security Ministry as saying.

The Public Security Bureau told The Associated Press by telephone that an explosion took place at the square but that no details were available.

Precautionary Stop

NIAGARA FALLS, Ontario (AP) — A helicopter carrying the Duke and Dutchess of York made what an aide described as a precautionary landing Saturday during a 50-mile flight from a Toronto suburb to Niagara Falls.

Wing Commander Andrew Wise, private secretary to the duke, Prince Andrew, said the pilot of the twin-engine Canadian Armed Forces helicopter decided to set down in a field after an instrument indicated a turbine was overheating.

Wise said the Huey helicopter had been in the air only five minutes when the pilot landed near a housing project south of Toronto.

Dissident Injured In Bomb Blast

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — A car bomb exploded Saturday and injured a leading opponent of the Iranian government as he drove through a busy shopping area less than a mile from the Kensington Palace home of Prince Charles and Princess Diana.

A telephone caller to Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, said a group called Guardians of the Islamic Revolution planted the bomb. "We are responsible and we will kill all the ... monarchists," the caller said.

He was rushed to St. Stephen's Hospital in nearby Fulham. Scotland Yard officials said he suffered a broken leg, cuts and bruises but was not severely injured.

Lucy Cheevers, a tourist from New York, said, "I heard the bang and turned round. I saw a man crawling from the smoking car." She said he was obviously in agony.

Friends said Amir-Parvis was chairman of the National Movement for Iranian Resistance in London, which is opposed to the government of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

He held several ministerial posts in Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's government and was agriculture minister when Khomeini deposed the shah in January 1979, said a friend, journalist Hossein Ghauimi.

"It is a fair assumption that this attack was political, although the man is not a diplomat," said Cmdr. George Churchill-Coleman, head of Scotland Yard's Anti-Terrorist Squad. He would confirm only the man's name.

"The explosion went off under the front passenger seat," he said. "We assume it was some sort of bomb ... some sort of improvised explosive device strapped underneath the car." Police refused to give details.

The explosion was the latest in a series of Iranian-linked bomb blasts that have hit London sporadically since 1981, aimed at both pro- and anti-Khomeini factions.

"We cannot rule out the possibility that this is the beginning of some sort of terror campaign in London," Churchill-Coleman said.

The car bomb went off as Amir-Parviz' car drove along Kensington High Street opposite the Royal Kensington Hotel. It was about three-quarters of a mile from the driveway entrance to Kensington Palace.

The 17th-century red-brick mansion is home to Charles and Diana; Princess Margaret, the sister of Queen Elizabeth II; and the queen's cousins, Prince and Princess Michael of Kent and the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester.

A Buckingham Palace spokesman, who by custom was not named, said he had no details of who was in the palace when the car exploded at 12:20 p.m. He noted that Charles and Diana normally spend weekends at their country home.

Restaurateur Renato Sorba said two young men pulled the driver from the car through a window and might have saved his life.

He said the blast blew the car about 20 yards. "The car was almost burned out. There was just the shell," he said.

Another witness, Albert Davies, 67, said: "I heard huge roar and saw a flash. It was just like a thunderbolt."

Police sealed off the area, which had been crowded with Saturday shoppers and was littered with chunks of twisted metal. Police disconnected the battery to stop sparks from igniting gasoline fumes, then told firemen not to touch the car.

Last week, 20 former Iranian military and police officers appeared in uniform at a London news conference and declared allegiance to the Iraqi-based rebel Mujahedeen National Liberation Army. They urged all Iranian servicemen to join the fight against Khomeini's regime.

Last month, tensions flared between Britain and Iran over the arrest of an Iranian diplomat in Manchester on shoplifting charges and the abduction and beating of a British envoy in Tehran.

As a result, relations between the two countries have been downgraded to one caretaker diplomat in each capital.

Journalist Ghauimi described Amir-Parviz as a "nice gentle man," a prominent member of the Iranian community in Britain who has lived in London since fleeing from Iran. He has a wife, a son and a daughter.

In the first Iranian-linked bomb blast in 1981, two Iranians were killed and a third was injured when a bomb exploded in their car near Marble Arch, about a mile from Saturday's explosion.

Detectives believe two men were priming the bomb in the back seat when it blew up in their laps. The target was believed to have been an Iranian group demonstrating in Hyde Park.

In November 1985, a woman was injured by a letter bomb sent to the Iranian Embassy. Last August, the son of a leading opponent of the Iranian regime was killed when a bomb exploded at his video shop, injuring 13 people.

Art Restorers Assess Damage To Valuable Da Vinci Drawing

By AUDREY C. WOODS
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Some of the world's leading art restorers gathered at the National Gallery on Saturday to assess damage to a Leonardo da Vinci drawing which a man blasted with a shotgun.

The man strolled into the art museum Friday evening, pulled out a sawed-off, single-barreled shotgun and fired at "The Virgin and Child with St. Anne and St. John The Baptist," one of Britain's greatest art treasures.

Police said Robert Arthur Cambridge, a 37-year-old, unemployed Londoner, was charged with criminal damage.

Gallery director Neil MacGregor said the 16th-century drawing was protected by reinforced glass "and we now know that the damage is confined within a relatively small area measuring approximately 6 inches square."

The gallery estimated the value of the 55-inch-by-41-inch drawing at $8 million.

The man fired in the small room where the drawing stands alone shortly before the gallery closed at 6 p.m., said gallery security director Dennis Bethel.

He said guard Hasen Gooljar immediately "took control of the situation."

Bethel said the man, dressed in a leather jacket decorated with chains, later sat silently on a chair in the room, head bowed and shotgun by his side.

"He was extremely subdued. Everybody tried to talk to him but he said nothing. The only thing we got out of him was that he was 37, although I thought he looked a bit older," Bethel said.

Police said Cambridge would appear Monday in Bow Street magistrate's court.

MacGregor said the drawing "is one of the finest and best-loved objects in the National Gallery." In 1962, the British public donated $2.24 million and the government gave an additional $980,000 to purchase it.

Shortly afterward, it was damaged by a bottle of ink thrown by a German painter. He was later judged insane.

Leonardo made the drawing in charcoal and chalk on paper in 1500. It was a preliminary drawing for a painting of 1508 that hangs in the Louvre Museum in Paris.

The drawing is believed to have arrived in Britain in the mid-18th century from Venice.

At the gallery on Trafalgar Square on Saturday, experts gathered inside a specially air-conditioned, dimly lighted room to study the drawing, which is kept under strictly controlled humidity and lighting conditions.

Chief restorer Martin Wyld said he expects to know this week the likelihood of successful repair.

Visitors to the gallery flowed in steadily Saturday, delayed only by an occasional bag check.

Gallery press officer Lindsay Callender said: "We get 3 million visitors a year. You can't search everyone. If people want to do damage they can do it with a plastic comb."

In 1918, the Canadian steamship Princess Sophia foundered after hitting a hidden reef off the coast of Alaska. All of the nearly 400 people aboard died.

Gorbachev, Party Chief At Odds Over Policy

By MARK J. PORUBCANSKY
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Sharp disputes in the Soviet press over the meaning of Mikhail S. Gorbachev's campaign for openness are highlighting differences between the Kremlin leader and his No. 2 man, Yegor K. Ligachev.

In the latest issue of the youth monthly Young Guards, deputy editor Vyacheslav Gorbachev bitterly criticized several publications that have been the most outspoken under Mikhail Gorbachev's campaign of "glasnost," or greater openness on selected topics.

He accused them of emulating the "lack of spirituality and consumerism of Western mass culture."

The editor based his arguments on a speech by Ligachev, the Communist Party ideology chief, to writers in Saratov after the January meeting of the Communist Party Central Committee.

Mikhail Gorbachev, in a recent speech, firmly rebuked writers who had criticized the same publications.

The editor is not known to be related to the Soviet Communist Party leader.

In his public pronouncements, Ligachev consistently has taken a more conservative line than the party leader on Gorbachev's glasnost policy.

There have been reports of a split between the Kremlin's top two men on the issue, and that conservative opponents of Gorbachev's policies might seek to rally around Ligachev.

While the press dispute does not provide direct evidence of such a split, it does show how Ligachev's statements are being interpreted by conservative writers.

Even in an atmosphere of fewer press restrictions, it is unlikely that Ligachev would allow prominent writers to misinterpret his statements publicly.

Editor Gorbachev quoted Ligachev as telling writers in Saratov that the party had found bureaucratic thinking, factionalism and efforts to hide from criticism in literature and art.

"Elements of mass bourgeois culture have begun to penetrate into society, literature and art," he was quoted as saying.

The editor specifically criticized the newspapers Literaturnaya Gazeta, Sovietskaya Kultura, Moscow News, Nedelya and the weekly magazine Ogonyok for orienting their publications "to the philistine tastes and demands of philistine morals which more often are compatible with the lack of spirtuality and consumerism of Western mass culture."

In late march the Writers' Union of the Russian Republic criticized some of the same publications, which have touched such previously taboo subjects as prostitution, drug abuse, Soviet vagrants and police brutality.

They were especially critical of Moscow news for printing an interview critical of established writer Vasily Belov. They also cited a passage from Ligachev's Saratov speech in which he urged greater respect for traditional Soviet literature.

Editor Gorbachev cited the meeting of the Russian writers' union as proof that Soviets are not satisfied with the approach taken by some of the more open publications.

But Mikhail Gorbachev, in a speech to officials of the state-controlled unions for writers, journalists and artists, singled out the March meeting of the Russian writers' union for criticism. The speech was published Wednesday.

He said he communicated to the Russian writers that "we would be very concerned if suddenly instead of the consolidation of our creative and artistic intelligentsia, there would occur, so to speak, bickering and its members would try in the conditions of glasnost, openness and democracy to take revenge for any criticism."

"This, comrades, is impermissible," he said. "This would be playing with the people, with the country, with socialism. We won't allow it in any case."

His speech provided a theoretical framework for glasnost.

He outlined a system in which the Communist Party encourages debate, putting certain topics off limits after someone has overstepped the bounds of what the party deems acceptable.

He said anything within the limits of socialism, as he and party leaders define it, will be acceptable.

The Communist Party leader told the writers and artists that criticism and debate have sometimes gone too far, but that he had "no reason to make any big political rebuke."

Hopes Fade For Finding More Typhoon Survivors

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Navy and coast guard ships began calling off most searches in the Korea Strait for about 150 seamen and fishermen as the official count rose Saturday to 368 people known dead or missing from Typhoon Thelma.

The Home Ministry said chances were slim for survivors from more than 100 boats sunk three days previously by winds and high waves.

The ministry listed the storm's toll as 111 people killed and 257 missing.

Some ships kept up their search in the area around Hong-do island off southwestern South Korea, where more than 60 local fishermen vanished after the typhoon hit about midnight Wednesday.

On land, rescue workers searched for possible survivors trapped in buildings smashed by landslides.

More than 120,000 people were mobilized to help repair damage in the three southernmost provinces, which bore the brunt of the typhoon.

High winds and torrential rains set off hundreds of landslides, sent rivers raging over their banks, and caused widespread damage to buildings and farms.

Schools and government buildings were opened as emergency shelters for more than 15,000 people left homeless, the ministry said. Officials in Seoul said 6,510 homes and other buildings were destroyed or damaged.

A preliminary government estimate set damage at more than $150 million. That figure was expected to rise as more detailed assessments were made.

Overall, 2,829 boats were destroyed or badly damaged, most wrecked on shore after having been pulled out of the water to try to escape the storm's wrath.

President Chun Doo-hwan's government on Monday was expected to study charges the Korea Meteorological Service miscalculated the path of the typhoon.

The Korea Herald said Saturday that the service ignored warnings from provincial weather forecasters in the south that the forecast was wrong and the storm would hit the Korean peninsula.

Meteorological service officials declined to comment, but the newspaper quoted one unidentified weather official as saying, "It was Mother Nature that should be blamed for the disaster, not us."

Relief officials said that because of insufficient warning, emergency services were caught unprepared.

About 100 angry farmers blocked a road with vehicles Saturday near the southern town of Sanchong, complaining they were not getting emergency relief quickly enough.

The farmers said they wanted full compensation for homes and crops destroyed by the winds. About 300 farmers staged sit-ins in the area Friday night to press for the same demands.

Democrats Eye Majority In Portugal

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Social Democrats headed into Sunday's general election within reach of securing Portugal's first single-party parliamentary majority in 13 years, according to polls published Saturday.

Polls in the Lisbon weekly newspapers Semanario and Expresso indicated the Social Democratic Party of Prime Minister Anibal Cavaco Silva as getting 41 to 44 percent of the vote in Portugal's sixth parliamentary election in 11 years.

The nation has 8 million registered voters.

Under Portugal's proportional election system, the Social Democrats would need only 42.6 percent of vote to capture 126 seats in the 250-seat Parliament. No single party has held a majority in the chamber since a military coup brought down a 48-year right-wing dictatorship in 1974 and handed power back to civilians two years later.

The Social Democrats won 29.9 percent of the vote in the last election in October 1985, and formed a minority government. It fell to a censure motion in April.

In the last government, the Social Democrats held 88 seats; the Socialist Party, 57; the Democratic Renewal Party, 45; Communist and other allied parties, 38; and the Christan Democratic Party, 22.

A majority victory by the Social Democrats would give Portugal a government capable of serving out a full four-year term, a feat that hasn't been achieved since the 1974 coup.

Traffic Jams Halt Vacationers

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Thousands of West Germans spent the first night of their summer vacation stranded in cars as a huge wave of southbound tourists created traffic jams up to 48 miles long, police said Saturday.

The massive exodus for the beaches in southern Europe coincided with the beginning of school vacation in North-Rhine Westphalia, the most populous West German state.

Heavy traffic and a series of minor accidents caused a jam 48 miles long between Wuerzburg and Munich late Friday, police said. No serious injuries were reported.

Thousands of vacationers were stuck in their cars for five hours until the traffic started moving again slowly at 4.30 a.m. Saturday, police said.

Traffic also crawled to a stop between Munich and Salzburg, Austria, on one of the busiest expressways to southern Europe, causing a jam 36 miles long.

At least nine other jams stretching up to 18 miles were reported in other parts of the country.

Last weekend, a jam 60 miles long stopped traffic for hours on the expressway to Salzburg.

In 1880, all British possessions in North America and adjacent islands, except Newfoundland and its dependencies, were annexed to Canada by imperial order.

Tiny Kuwait Can't Avoid Center Stage In Gulf War

By JOHN RICE
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT (AP) — After almost seven years of listening to the rumble of distant guns, quiet Kuwait finds itself drawn toward center stage in the Iran-Iraq war.

Iranian ship attacks threaten Kuwait's oil export lifeline. Sabotage inside Kuwait itself strains a national unity forged by decades of fabulous wealth.

Two Kuwaiti-owned tankers are due to raise the American flag this week and begin a sun-broiled journey up the Persian Gulf, guarded by U.S. warships against the threat of Iranian attack.

Soviet and British warships are already protecting their own nations' tankers hauling oil to and from Kuwaiti ports at the northern end of the gulf.

The outsiders have come to the aid of a tiny country whose underground ocean of oil has made its 700,000 citizens, on average, some of the richest people in the world. Only neighboring Saudi Arabia seems sure to have more oil.

Abdel Fatah al-Badr, chairman of the Kuwait Oil Tanker Co., noted last week that Kuwait and its neighbors hold 60 percent of the world's known oil reserves.

"I don't think that the Americans and Russians would like to see that under the control of Khomeini," he said, referring to Iranian revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

The U.S.-Soviet balancing act is typical of Kuwait. Wary of becoming dependent upon the United States, it was the first gulf country to establish ties with the Soviet Union and buy weapons there.

The past decade's oil price boom and canny investments in overseas refining and retailing have given Kuwait an estimated $80 billion in financial reserves —more than $100,000 per citizen.

Full-size Chevrolets and big Mercedes Benz sedans, their air conditioners struggling against the 117 degree July heat, zoom along a network of six-lane expressways often more impressive than those of Los Angeles.

Beyond the offramps are palatial homes and skyscrapers. There are Hardees and Wimpy hamburger restaurants, Kentucky Fried Chicken and two huge Safeway supermarkets, complete down to rows of American-style, thin-sliced white bread.

Kuwaiti citizens are guaranteed jobs. Medical care is free, as is education through college. The state provides large homes, with maid's quarters, at low prices and interest-free terms, although the waiting line can be 10 years long.

The Al-Sabah family has ruled over this land of traders, fishermen and Bedouins since 1756, giving the country two centuries of stability under Turkish and then British protection, which ended in 1971.

Not everyone in Kuwait is rich. Most would be considered middle-class by American or European standards. Some depend on government help to make ends meet.

Perhaps 100,000 Bedouins unable to prove long family residence in the country due to their nomadic tradition, have no passports, and miss out on most of the government's financial benefits.

Uncertainties over the gulf war contributed to the 1982 crash of a wildly speculative local stock market, the Souk al-Manakh, wiping out many fortunes and leaving debts, on paper, of $90.8 billion. Kuwait's banks are still recovering.

A million expatriate workers from Palestine, Jordan, Egypt, Pakistan, India and elsewhere handle nearly all the menial work and many skilled and technical jobs.

But war tensions combined with the strains of last year's oil price collapse led the government to suspend the Arab world's freest Parliament and muzzle its most liberated press.

"We can't write. We can't talk. We can't discuss anything," complained Ahmed Rubaii, a former member of Parliament and newspaper columnist who teaches at Kuwait University.

Iran has increasingly responded to Iraqi attacks on its own oil facilities and ships by menacing Kuwait, one of Iraq's key economic supporters and oil export routes.

Iran's foreign minister, Ali Akbar Velayati, said on July 12 that Kuwait was "virtually turned into an Iraqi province" and "has put all its resources at the disposal of the Iraqi regime."

Those are chilling words for Kuwaitis who could hear the thunder of Iranian artillery echoing across the northern gulf waters during fighting over the past year.

But Kuwait-based Western diplomats say many Kuwaiti Shiite Moslems, about 30 percent of the population, sympathize with Iran, from which most emigrated over the past century.

The relatively smooth relations between the Shiites and Kuwait's majority Sunni Moslem community were strained by the conviction this year of 16 Kuwaiti Shiites in terror bombing and sabotage incidents.

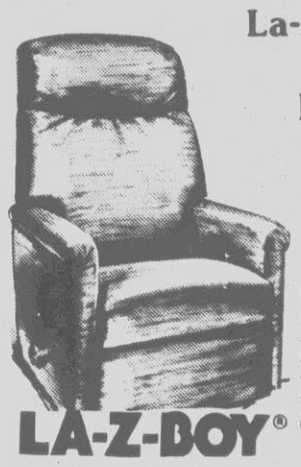

Forty more Shiites were arrested for protesting the arrests or verdicts.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Funding Package Fair, Serviceable

The newly-approved school construction fund for North Carolina is a fair package that can provide the state's school systems with needed capital for new buildings.

The key to the plan's complete success, however, is whether county commissioners across the state — including Pitt County's — live up to financial commitments.

The legislation gives commissioners the raw material — dollars and cents — to make needed improvements in the learning environment. It is an opportunity for these leaders to positively affect the future of education.

Although the bill earmarks a large chunk of money for school construction, it stops short of requiring county commissioners to commit local funds replaced by state Basic Education Funds to school construction. It will be very tempting for local officials to use this money for projects other than education building needs, but that pitfall should be avoided.

The Pitt County Commissioners should look at the plan as a partnership. The state will provide up-front money for school construction. It also will supply counties with dollars for formerly county-funded BEP positions. This money, based on the cooperation approach in the bill, should also go to building needs.

In Pitt County, construction needs merit the commitment of these funds to schools. The schools depend on 73 trailers for classroom space. A report estimates catch-up capital outlay needs at $12 million over a five-year period. These needs range from adding classrooms to replacing structurally deficient facilities to upgrading sewer systems to meet basic environmental regulations.

Furthermore, the majority of the school buildings in Pitt County have a reasonable life expectancy of only 15 years. Of the 31 schools in the system, 18 will need to be replaced in 15 years. Even worse, three are listed in poor condition and need to be replaced in three years. Only 10 are considered excellent and have a life expectancy of over 30 years.

Pitt's commissioners have shown a commendable willingness to address school capital needs by committing $3 million per year for construction. But with the state plan, the board has an opportunity to do more — get ahead on needs.

Commissioners should divert the entire amount available — including the newly-freed BEP funds — to school construction. By taking this responsible approach, leaders can utilize the new plan to the full advantage of the county's school children.

Happy Ending For The Birds

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

If you read last week's column you know that a bird had built a nest behind the grill of Paul Spangler's truck.

Spangler drove the truck a couple of times before discovering the nest and then decided to leave it parked until the eggs hatched. That meant his wife Evelyn Spangler drove him to work for several days while the truck sat parked awaiting the hatching. It got to be quite an event around the neighborhood.

We're happy to report that Spangler now has his truck back.

The baby birds hatched even before last week's column came out. The Spanglers report that the nest produced three survivors who have since flown the nest.

The truck has returned to its normal use. The birds are who knows where.

A couple of days off last week sent your columnist on some short excursions through rural Pitt County. It is still rural, even if it does seem that the bulldozer is king in the Greenville area. Only a few miles away there are seemingly endless fields of tobacco, corn, soybeans, peanuts and the other crops which grow in the county. There are farm homes, like always, but more often than not they are modern homes similar to those found in more urban areas. It goes without saying the farm homes now have telephones and electricity, but would you believe in this era of rural water systems many of them have piped water supplies?

Also sprouting up in areas that are miles from what was the center of Greenville are new houses ... lots of new houses. They are in subdivision such as Woodridge, Millbrook, Windsor, Treetops, Moss Hill, Rolling Meadows, Orchard Hills, McGregor Downs and Twin Creeks.

Sometimes they are surrounded by the corn and tobacco fields that once occupied the farm land on which their houses now stand. And they carry handsome price tags, at least compared to what houses in older subdivisions, such as Elmhurst, Forest Hills, Oakmont and Englewood, originally cost.

Where it will all lead is open to conjecture, but it tells us that growth of the area can't now be measured totally by the extension of the Greenville city limits. It is going on all over.

If the saws ripping and the hammers tapping causes concern for Pitt County rural flavor, be assured that there is plenty of the rural still there. I took a trip to the Grimesland Seine Beach which is about like it always was. The river is wide there. A dirt road is marked only dead end. It costs 50 cents to use the "beach" and something over $3 to launch a boat there. It is still possible to get in some relaxed fishing on the waters of the Tar River.

Chilling Thought

The Iran-Contra hearings may create heroes and pathos as the witnesses appear before the Senate committee, but the end result may be revelations of a breakdown of presidential authority.

Former National Security Adviser John Poindexter said President Reagan approved of the sale of arms for hostages to Iran. But, he said, he tore up the document fearing it would be a "significant political embarrassment to the president and I wanted to protect him from possible disclosure of this."

Poindexter was at odds with the president's recollection of this matter.

On the key question of whether or not the president knew of the diversion of funds received from the arms sales to the Contras, Poindexter said the president did not know.

Poindexter said that while "I was convinced thqt we could properly do it, and that the president would approve, if asked, I made a very deliberate decision not to ask the president so that I could insulate him from the decision and provide some future deniability for the president if it ever leaked out."

Lt. Col North won the hearts of many Americans by pointing out that he was designed to be the fall guy for the Iran-Contra adventure if it became a public issue. He was prepared to do so until talk of criminal indictment arose. North made it clear that he was acting under orders or with approval of higher ups. Poindexter has now taken responsibility for withholding from the president the plan to send arms sales money to the Contras.

The question left is how could a president operate without knowing that such a major foreign policy initiative — for which the president is responsible — existed?

The president can't possibly know all the details of the vast government over which he presides. It is nevetheless inexcusable when he doesn't know what is under way in foreign policy initiatives.

The question arises as to what else is going on that the president does not know about? Even more chilling, what might go on in the next year and a half that will be unknown to the president? The prospects are frightening.

After Khomeini, Then What?

Barry Schweid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iran after the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini could be a dangerous, divided country even though his supporters beginning in 1979 systemically eliminated alternative political groups and ideologies.

There are at least three potential successors, including Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri, whom the 87-year-old leader has chosen to take his place.

The two others are President Mohammad Ali Khamemehi and Parliament Speaker Ali Rkhbar Hasehmi Rafsanjani.

Their rivalry, says scholar Barry Rubin, could provide an opportunity for the Soviet Union to get its foot in the door or degenerate into internal disorder or even armed conflict.

A weakened Iran might encourage a Soviet invasion or, more likely, a covert Soviet role in backing certain groups, Rubin writes in a new paper distributed by the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies.

The competition also could breed adventurism and aggression against Arab states in the Persian Gulf as a way of enhancing one faction's credentials for spreading the fundamentalist revolution, he says.

Rubin's gloomy prognosis appears to make a quick settlement of the Iran-Iraq war even more urgent.

The Khomeini government is on a roll. Despite an enormous human toll — an estimated 400,000 Iranians and Iraqis have perished in nearly seven years of fighting — Tehran is determined to keep fighting until President Saddam Hussein is toppled in Iraq.

Also, Iran has captured Iraqi territory and would be reluctant to retreat to pre-war borders, especially since the war was initiated by Baghdad.

The Iranian offensive has some of the characteristics of a holy war. If Iran were to win a clear victory, Rubin says, it might move against weaker gulf states in order to stem Western influence and spread Islamic fundamentalism.

But his forecast suggests Iran also might be tempted to make the same move after a postwar period of rebuilding and rearmament.

After attempting to influence events in Tehran through secret arms shipments, the Reagan administration is now resorting to traditional diplomacy.

Early next week, the U.N. Security Council will take up a U.S.-backed resolution ordering a cease-fire between Iran and Iraq. Approval by an overwhelming vote apparently is in the cards.

GOP Comment Odd Objection

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — Ever since legislative Democrats unveiled their school construction plan several weeks ago, Gov. Jim Martin and legislative Republicans have been raising an odd objection for members of the conservative party. They say the Democrats aren't big enough spenders.

At his weekly press conferences, Martin has been saying that the Democratic plan would be fine for a state that has already caught up on its school construction needs. But for a state as far behind as North Carolina, he says, a much larger infusion of new money is needed.

Martin proposes a compromise. The Democratic plan will raise $830 million in new revenue for schools over the next 10 years. To that they should add his proposal for $1.5 billion in bond authorizations.

When the bill came before the Senate Finance Committee last week, Republican senators made a pretty good pitch for Martin's position. Sen. Austin Allran, R-Catawba, said the Democratic package brings in money too slowly. By brining in only about $100 million a year, it fails to address the state's immediate massive needs.

Sen. Howard Bryan, R-Iredell, noted that one elementary school in his district will cost $3 million to build this year. That's about three years' worth of Iredell's share of the funds from the Democratic package, he said.

The Republicans were using the numbers which best made their case, and several Democratic senators, including Finance chairman Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, were quick to point out that other money would increase the package from the $830 million in new revenue over 10 years to more than $3 billion.

But the issue raised by the Republicans went unanswered on its merits. Martin says that by borrowing money, the counties could quickly put up the schools needed now. Then, with the new Democratic revenue raising package, they would have even more resources to pay those bonds back. The best element of the Martin plan has always been that it could bring a massive infusion of cash to the problem very quickly. (That is, if the bonds were approved quickly.)

By combining the bonds with the Democratic plan, several of the negatives of the Martin plan are mitigated. The new revenues from the Democratic plan would probably eliminate the need in most counties to pay off the bonds through higher property taxes. That projection, in fact, would probably increase greatly the chances for passage of those bond issues by local voters.

Jordan was asked to address this idea the day he announced the Democratic plan. He said he had nothing against bonds, but that they were dead politically. Bonds are unacceptable to the state House, he said, so it was fruitless to discuss bonds. Very pragmatic.

Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, said essentially the same thing when a $1.5 billion bond amendment was proposed in committee by Sen. Paul Smith, R-Rowan. There is nothing in the bill, he said, to keep counties from floating their own bonds. But, Rand added, the compromise had been worked out on the assumption that the legislative approach to school construction would be on a "pay-as-you-go." If the bonds went into the package, Rand said, the whole balance of the compromise would be broken.

At this writing, the Democratic package was speeding towards final approval without a provision of bonds. The school construction debate will now move to the counties, however, where, as Rand noted, counties are free to float bonds if they choose to accept the thinking of the governor.

Poindexter's Testimony Raises New Questions For President

Haynes Johnson

WASHINGTON — After two days of testimony, Rear Adm. John M. Poindexter has left the Iran-contra congressional committees and the American people grappling with a central question: how plausible is the "plausible deniability" he says he wanted to give President Reagan?

Far from resolving that issue, Poindexter's testimony Thursday raised new questions about it.

He's asking the committees to believe not only his word but the credibility of his actions. Take, for example, his description of the events of Nov. 21, a critical day for the administration as it groped for a way to contain the damage being caused by the unraveling Iran arms sales scandal.

To set the scene: At that time, only the Iran arms sale was known to the public; the contra diversion was not disclosed by Attorney Gen. Edwin Meese III until the next Tuesday, the day Poindexter resigned as the president's national security adviser and Lt. Col Oliver L. North was fired.

As Poindexter testified Thursday, that Friday morning began with a meeting in the Oval Office involving Attorney General Edwin Meese, Reagan and Poindexter. They were discussing discrepancies that had arisen about the November, 1985 shipment of Hawk missiles from Israel to Iran, and the U.S. role in that shipment, Poindexter said. Also at issue that morning was how they would deal with the question of when the president had approved such a shipment.

Two nights before, Reagan had held a disastrous televised news conference, in which he had erroneously described the shipment as one that had been done by Israel without U.S. approval.

Now, Poindexter testified Thursday, "The question was of the president's prior knowledge ... and whether he had approved it or not, and we needed to get to the bottom of that."

John W. Nields Jr., chief counsel for the House panel, immediately asked the admiral: "Did anyone at that meeting ask the president whether he had approved?"

"That's an obvious question," Poindexter testified, "but I don't recall it coming up ... .and I don't recall the attorney general asking him about (it)."

From Poindexter's account, there did not seem to be many questions asked during that meeting. All the participants had participated in the decision to approve the shipment, and Poindexter was asking the committees to believe that none of them remember that involvement. On such a crucial decision, he was suggesting, all had been forgotten.

Poindexter himself had brought the "finding" to the president for his signature. Reagan signed it Dec. 5, 1985, belatedly authorizing the shipment that had taken place the month before. Meese had worked on two subsequent findings that superseded the Dec. 5 action, which the president signed on Jan. 6 and Jan. 17, 1986, and presumably had been told of the original finding. These new findings broadened the stated purposes of the arms deal from a straight arms-for-hostages swap to greater geo-political strategic stakes in the Mideast.

Something else came out of that meeting — the decision to assign Meese to conduct a "fact-finding" inquiry into how the arms deal had occurred. As it was described Thursday by Poindexter, the idea was casual. "Ed asked the president "permission to do it, and the president said, 'fine,' " Poindexter said. He also testified that he viewed Meese as acting "in his role as really a special adviser to the president." This sounded like North's testimony last week that Meese was acting as a "friend" of the president.

The meeting concluded, the congressional investigators were told Thursday, with Poindexter returning to his office. Meese then phoned him and asked that he gather appropriate documents relating to the arms sale and have them ready for two aides to review later that day.

That news prompted Poindexter to retrieve the original Dec. 5 finding, and the two subsequent ones along with some PROF computer notes from an NSC safe — and destroy them all before the attorney general's aides arrived. Poindexter described it graphically, saying he "ripped up" the finding and put it in the "burn basket behind his desk."

Nields wanted to know what motivated him to destroyed the document that answered the question of the origins and the authorization for the arms sale — the main purpose of the morning meeting at the White House that led to the Meese inquiry. "Did you destroy it to give the president deniability?" he asked.

"I did not."

"Well, did you ... not, by destroying that document, give the president the ability to deny that he had signed a finding, on Dec. 5th, that dealt with arms and hostages?"

This led to a stormy objection from Poindexter's lawyer, Richard Beckler, who said: "I submit it's been asked over and over." The previous day, Poindexter had said his intention had been to save the president from "significant political embarrassment."

Beckler's objection was overruled by House Chairman Lee H. Hamilton, D-Ind., and Nields resumed the same line of questioning: "By destroying this document, did you not permit the president to deny that he had signed a finding on Dec. 5, 1985, relating to arms and hostages?"

"That was not the intent at all ... ." Poindexter maintained.

He added, in response to further questioning: "I ... simply did not want this document to see the light of day."

"(Were you) attempting to falsify the record?" Nields asked.

"No," Poindexter insisted, "I wasn't at all."

After another heated objection from Poindexter's lawyer to shift the questioning to other subjects, Nields asked:

"Admiral Poindexter, what made you believe that the president of the United States would want you to destroy a finding in order to save him from political embarrassment, if anything?"

"I-I-that-that thought didn't cross my mind. I recognized that it was politically embarrassing. I thought one of my jobs was to protect the president, and I didn't think about asking him about it."

The questioning on this crucial subject ended with Nields shifting the nature of the "deniablity" factor from the president to others — including Poindexter himself.

"I have to ask you this question," he asked Poindexter. "Was it any part of your purpose in destroying that document to protect anyone other than the president?"

"Nobody," the admiral replied.

"And, particularly, was it part of your purpose to protect yourself?"

"In no way," Poindexter said, leaving the question of his actions in protecting the president still largely unresolved.

Reflagging Difficult To Sell

Cody Shearer

WASHINGTON — Three times in the past week, a Senate majority has gone on record requesting that the Reagan administration hold in abeyance for an unspecified time its plan to have U.S. ships escort Kuwaiti oil tankers in the Persian Gulf.

The non-binding request by the Senate — to think through the full consequences of reflagging — makes sense given this administration's traditional reactive policy of crisis management rather than pursuing any clearly-defined goals. After all, why should the United States protect Kuwaiti shipping in the Persian Gulf?

The answer given by White House aides is the historic commitment the U.S. has to freedom of navigation. Yet, the facts don't support this contention. The United States, for example, has declined to accept the Law of the Sea Treaty. And it's unclear what rules of navigation we consider important these days.

Furthermore, the Reagan White House has invoked the Soviet threat in the Persian Gulf as a rational, which is a suprise to the Kuwaitis, since they are also leasing Soviet tankers. Clearly, this explanation suggests that the U.S. should reflag Kuwait's tankers, otherwise they will let the Soviets do it.

Unfortunately, the flimsiness of these arguments is patent. Either it's important for the U.S. to reflag Kuwaiti tankers or it isn't, regardless of how the Soviets behave.

The sharpest definition of U.S. interests in the Persian Gulf is still best articulated by the Carter doctrine, which stipulates that it is critical to do whatever is necessary to prevent Iran for gaining excessive influence in the region so that it will apply extreme pressure to other Arab states.

Still, the Reagan administration has been unable to offer its own best defense on the reflagging issue. At stake is the safety of Gulf oil, the ability to bring it to market and the stability of friendly states in the Gulf. These are the strategic interests of the U.S. The Soviets aren't the immediate threat in the region, it's the Iranians.

Increasingly, other nations understand this. France, for example, appeared likely last week to break off diplomatic realtions with Iran after one of its ships was attacked by Iranian patrol boats.

There is no denying the importance of Gulf oil. Reliance on Middle East OPEC oil will increase in the 1990s because that's where it costs the least to produce the product.

In defending its decisions, the administration often states things unclearly, opting for muddled explanations, which invariably lead to disconnected policies. Clearly, Americans and the Gulf states have had enough of this kind seat-of-the-pants behavior.

It is no wonder that many in Congress fear the reflagging of Kuwaiti tankers is a step down the road to another Beirut.

Nation Needs A Leader, Not An Amendment, To Solve Deficit

Peter Rodino Jr.

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's recent speeches on the budget are a sad study in the failure of leadership. The United States is in its sixth straight year of triple-digit deficits. World leaders, as was plainly evident at the Venice Economic Summit last month, are uneasy about America's commitment to controlling its massive debt. But in the face of an increasingly urgent threat to global economic order, the president resorts to his now tired prescription for a balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution.

More than ever, the president's attempt to blame record deficits on the Constitution is a dangerous political evasion. For no matter what the process, no matter who the players, responsible budgeting requires the strong leadership necessary to make tough political choices on taxing and spending.

Instead of leadership, the president offers feel-good rhetoric and persists in the delusion that his administration can defy the laws of arithmetic. He opposes meaningful tax increases. He opposes cuts in the defense budget. He favors further cuts in domestic programs, but provides no workable plan for controlling the deficit through such cuts.

The bulk of domestic expenditures is in entitlement programs such as Medicare and Social Security, which the president has promised not to cut. Discretionary non-defense spending has already been cut to 17 percent of the total budget. If cuts are limited to this area, substantial deficit reduction can be achieved only by eliminating such government agencies as the FBI, the Federal Aviation Administration, the Bureau of Prisons, Food and Drug Administration, Environmental Protection Agency and many more.

While criticizing a "tax and spend" Congress and the constitutional process, not once has President Reagan proposed to Congress a balanced budget. His first budget for FY 1982 anticipated a $45 billion deficit, which doubled to $91.5 billion for the next year. Every presidential budget after that has shown a triple-digit deficit, peaking at $189 billion in FY 1984.

To be sure, other recent presidents have also had difficulties balancing the budget. But today's deficits are of a different order. The United States is now the world's No. 1 debtor nation. In 6½ years, President Reagan has more than doubled the accumulated national debt of the previous 192 years of the Republic — the national debt has grown from $1 trillion to an estimated $2.4 trillion for 1987. Annual deficits have more than tripled — to $240 billion for fiscal year 1986. By contrast, the actual deficits of the Carter administration never exceeded the $70 billion range. Left unaddressed, the deficits threaten a worldwide loss of confidence in the U.S. dollar, with severe economic consequences both at home and abroad.

If it worked, a constitutional amendment would shift responsibility for controlling the deficit to the future. Even on a fast track, an amendment is unlikely to be effective until the 1990s. Thus, this administration — and this Congress as well — would never face an amendment's intended discipline.

But an amendment won't work. Its mere passage does nothing to balance the budget. Prof. Philip B. Kurland of the University of Chicago Law School has testified that "an unbalanced budget, like cancer, cannot be eliminated by simple fiat. ... The Constitution is not a magic wand which needs only be waved to effect a cure." And the president's former budget director, David Stockman, predicted at his confirmation hearing that, absent a political will to balance the budget, evasions would abound: "(L)oan guarantees, off-budget expenditures, and various other accounting techniques ... would be developed to totally frustrate or circumvent the purpose of that kind of requirement."

Peter W. Rodino Jr., a Democratic representative from New Jersey, is chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

To the editor:

Last week the Reflector ran an article about Dr. Stanley's research on the Pamlico River. The article implies that there have been no significant changes in the Pamlico River in recent years. Submitting this research as definitive evidence is presumptuous, considering the extensive amount of independent documentation detailing the decline of water quality in the Pamlico.

Government agencies assigned responsibility for the ecological health of our rivers and estuaries agree that the Pamlico is changing. Federal and state offices are collaborating on a massive research and management project that targets the Pamlico.

The project's Work Plan enumerates the river's problems, "Definite changes have taken place in the Albemarle-Pamlico in recent years. These changes are the basis for major envirnomental concerns...declines in fisheries productivity, ulcerative sore diseases, anoxia-related fish kills, changes in distribution patterns of aquatic sessile organism, impairment of nursery area function, eutrophication, habitat loss and toxicant effects."

Dr. Stanley's research is supported and publicized by Texasgulf, a company with obvious interests in convincing the public that the river is as healthy as ever.

Dr. Stanley, himself, confesses, "I can't generalize about the Pamlico's water quality. I can only speak from our data." That the article then proceeds to 'generalize about the Pamlico's water quality,' is distressing.

Texasgulf avows a serious interest in protecting the Pamlico River; however, this effort to deny the problems of the Pamlico, to deflect legitimate environmental concern, only increases suspicion regarding the company's motivation.

We have clear evidence that the river is under stress. Our concerns are not frivolous. Everyone in the Pamlico River area has too much to lose; the River is too great an asset to treat with disregard.

A lady writes to say that I am "distressed" because her husband hails recent events in the U.S.S.R. as sure signs of change for the better there. I don't want to be pictured as pooh-poohing such hope. I am, however, disturbed not by his hope but by his eagerness to conclude, on the basis of weak evidence, that the U.S.S.R. is marching toward peace and democracy.

To the editor:

This is a plea to all America: Please get on your knees and beg God to send us more men like Col. North. I'm sure you all heard Daniel Inouye say during Col. North's trial that he (Inouye) voted against aid to Nicaragua, in essence, "he didn't want to see our young men go to war." What kind of thinking is that? If I had a five-year-old boy that had no more intelligence, foresight and gumption than that, I would give him a whipping and start him to school.

If we let Nicaragua go to the Communists, do you think they will stop there? Of course not. Their ultimate aim is to absorb us and they will but for men like Col. North, who is willing to die for freedom.

Please help us to rid this country of the waterheads in Congress. I sent Col. North a telegram and check to help pay his lawyer. If you can, please help him — if it's no more than $1. His address is: Col. Oliver North, c/o Williams-Connelly-Sullivan, 839 17th Street, NW, Washington, D.C. 20006.

To the editor:

Your editorial in the July 15 paper concerned the inability of high school dropouts to obtain jobs in today's job market. Your article refers to a comment by Bob Scott, president of the community college system, on how many of those dropouts return to the community college system to obtain a GED or a high school equivalency diploma to help them obtain better jobs in today's job market. According to statistics that I received from Raleigh recently, there are 27,000 dropouts in the public school system in North Carolina each year. There are 16,000 admissions into the state prisons of North Carolina each year. Eighty percent of those admissions or 13,000 inmates have no high school degree or GED. It would seem that a man who is uneducated and unemployed turns to crime for his subsistence. If there is no other case that can be made for an individual remaining in high school and completing his degree program, it is this fact. One out of every two high school dropouts will come to prison.

I appreciate your editorial and I encourage you to make as many young people as possible aware of the value of completing their high school degree.

Iran Says France Spying; Vows Trial For Diplomats

By MARTIN MARRIS
Associated Press Writer

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran on Saturday accused French diplomats in Tehran of spying and helping government opponents escape. It vowed to put the French on trial, raising fears in Paris they might be taken hostage.

The official Islamic Republic News Agency said Iranian police surrounded the French Embassy in Tehran.

It was the first time Iran acknowledged its blockade, which has continued on and off since French police surrounded the Iranian Embassy in Paris on June 30. The latest blockade in Tehran began Thursday.

IRNA, monitored in Nicosia, said Interior Minister Ali Akbar Mohtashemi accused French diplomats of acting as a connecting bridge to help counter-revolutionaries escape abroad.

Mohtashemi, whose remarks were paraphrased with no direct quotes, also accused the French of linking anti-government splinter groups inside Iran. He said Iran had documents to prove it.

The agency reported that Mohtashemi said the diplomats would be arrested and handed over to the judiciary for Islamic justice.

It was not clear if Mohtashemi was directing his accusations at all 15 French nationals at the embassy. Eight of them are diplomats.

The latest Iranian statements raised fears in Paris that French diplomats in Tehran might be taken hostage, as Americans were in November 1979.

France broke relations with Iran on Friday after nearly three weeks of tension over Iran's failure to hand over an employee of the Iranian Embassy in Paris.

Wahid Gordji, listed as an interpreter, was summoned to appear before an investigating magistrate for questioning in bomb attacks that killed 11 people and wounded more than 150 in Paris last September.

Since then, Iran has accused the French consul in Tehran, Paul Torri, of espionage and drug smuggling and demanded he appear before a revolutionary tribunal. France refused.

Italy agreed to represent France's interests in Iran.

Earlier, French officials said embassy personnel in France and Iran countries would have five days to leave.

Saturday's statement was not the first time Iran accused French diplomats of spying, but the timing appeared to signal Tehran was not prepared to back down and allow Gordji to be questioned.

On Friday, the Iranian Foreign Ministry said Tehran would not let Gordji become a "hostage" of the French.

In Paris, former Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr told The Associated Press that the French diplomats risked being taken hostage if authorities didn't let Gordji leave France.

Christian Bourguet, a French lawyer representing official Iranian interests in Paris, also said the diplomats were running such a risk.

But no indications emerged Saturday of any hostile actions at the embassy in Tehran, apart from the police cordon.

The Iranian Embassy in Paris remained surrounded by French police, as it has been since Gordji took refuge there June 30.

Mohtashemi was quoted as saying the Iranian people would never allow a handful of people to commit espionage under the pretext of diplomacy.

He did not spell out which anti-government groups the French allegedly were helping.

France last year forced the leaders of the Iranian rebel People's Mujahedeen to leave the country in an effort by the government of Premier Jacques Chirac to improve relations with Iran.

Friday's decision to break ties with Tehran ended a long-standing bid by Chirac to improve relations, partly in the belief that Tehran could help win freedom for Frenchmen held hostage in Lebanon by pro-Iranian groups.

There was no further word Saturday on the fate of two French diplomats held hostage in Lebanon since March 1985.

Telephone calls claiming to speak for the pro-Iranian Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, said Friday that Marcel Fontaine and Marcel Carton would be killed immediately because France broke relations with Iran.

In Beirut, an umbrella group for Shiite Moslems believed holding most of the 25 foreigners missing in Lebanon condemned France for severing relations.

"The French government has committed a horrific mistake," said a statement from Hezbollah. "The universe will see all Moslems united in one rank awaiting orders from (Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah) Khomeini to defend Islam."

Guerrillas Destroy Bridge

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist rebels blew up part of a bridge under construction in eastern El Salvador and damaged electrical towers in several parts of the country, authorities said Saturday.

A military spokesman said guerrillas of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front on Friday blew up a side of the bridge on the outskirts of San Buena Ventura in Usulutan province, about 70 miles east of San Salvador.

No injuries were reported. The spokesman commented on condition of anonymity for security reasons.

Sources at the state electrical company said that in the past two days, the guerrillas damaged three conductor towers for main power lines in the northern part of San Salvador province. The damage has caused power outages in parts of the capital and surrounding areas, said the sources, who also spoke on condition of anonymity.

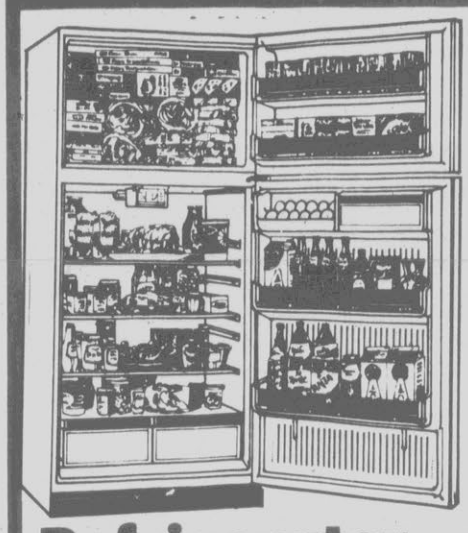

They said that during the week the rebels also damaged 18 electrical towers and posts in the eastern part of the country, causing sporadic outages. Repair work has begun on the damaged structures.

The guerrillas have been at war with the government since October 1979 and especially have targeted the nation's infrastructure and basic services, causing an estimated $2 billion in damage.

The United States, which is providing $480 million in economic and military aid this year, picks up most of the tab for repairs.

Church and human rights groups say more than 63,000 people, most of them civilians, have been killed in the fighting.

Louganis Rolls To Diving Title

Takes The Gold

Greg Louganis waves a carnation after he captured first place in the men's three-meter spring board competition at the U.S. Olympic Festival in Raleigh Saturday. Louganis took the gold in competition for the fifth straight festival. (AP Laserphoto)

Louganis, who has won all but two of the Festival diving titles since 1979, earned 13 perfect scores in his 11 rounds of diving. He clinched the victory with a superb final dive, a forward 3½ somersault from the pike position. The 27-year-old native of Malibu, Calif., who now dives out of Boca Raton, Fla., collected six marks of 10 and one 9.0.

"You can't get 10s on every dive even though you shoot for it," the double gold medalist at the 1984 Olympics said. Louganis has had seven scores of 10 twice, once in the World Championships and once in the nationals.

"It's always nice to go out that way," Louganis said about his near-perfect last dive. "I felt good, I felt strong on that dive . . . and I'm pleased with my score."

Kent Ferguson, who is Louganis' roommate when they are training in Florida, was second in the competition at Raleigh. Ferguson, who beat Louganis at the indoor nationals this year, trailed the winner by more than 60 points.

The women's springboard final was held later Saturday.

Although the swimmers and freestyle wrestlers had completed their competition before Friday's opening ceremonies, the Festival didn't get into full swing until Saturday. All five of the cities being used as sites this year hosted events Saturday.

Jessie Grieco, a 13-year-old cyclist from Emerson, N.J., became the youngest female to win a Festival cycling competition when she raced away from three other riders in the final lap to take the 50-kilometer road race through the streets of Raleigh.

"It's one of my biggest thrills," Grieco said.

The men's 100-kilometer road race went to Richard Hincapie of Farmingdale, N.Y.

In women's basketball, Daedra Charles scored 22 points as the North beat the East 74-63 and the West, with a 52-32 rebounding edge, beat the South 74-64. The men played a doubleheader Saturday night.

In men's archery, Jay Barrs of Mesa, Ariz., held a three-point lead over two-time Olympic gold medalist Darrell Pace after two rounds. Barrs won at 90 meters with 311 points to 303 for Pace, of Hamilton, Ohio. Then Pace, the 1976 and '84 Olympic champion who won golds at the 1978, '81 and '85 Festivals, took the 70-meter event with a 326 score. Barrs had 632 total points and Pace had 629.

Trena King of Kentwood, Mich., won both phases for women.

In tennis action, sisters Jackie and Jenny Moe of Edina, Minn., upset seeded players Saturday in the first round of tennis at the U.S. Olympic Festival.

Jackie eliminated third-seeded Debbie Moringiello of North Brunswick, N.J., 3-6, 6-4, 7-6 in an exciting match which ended in a 7-5 tiebreaker. Jenny downed No. 4 Jessica Emmons of Phoenix 6-4, 4-6, 6-4.

The two other seeded women were victorious. No. 1 Debbie Graham of Fountain Valley, Calif., routed Merideth Geiger of Edmond, Okla., 6-1, 6-1; No. 2 Stacey Martin of Largo, Md., defeated Anna Funderburk, Moultrie, Ga.,

Mitch Michulka upset second-seed David DiLucia and No. 4 Hector Nevares fell to John Bristow in the men's bracket.

Michulka, of Dallas, easily beat DiLucia, from Morristown, Pa., 6-1, 6-4. Bristow, Hendersonville, N.C., had a tougher time with Nevares, of Puerto Rico, before winning 6-1, 7-6 (7-5).

Pate Sampras, the men's top seed from Rancho Palos Verde, Calif., downed Wayne Jang of Renton, Wash., 6-1, 6-1. Third-seeded Geoff Grant of Sudbury, Mass., beat Scott Sigerseth of El Macero, Calif., 6-2, 6-2. 6-1, 6-3.

In mixed doubles, Geiger teamed with Brian MacPhie of San Jose, Calif., to defeated Navares and Funderburk 6-2, 6-2. DiLucia and Robin Dietch, of East Rockaway, N.Y., beat Michulka and Cindy Churchwell, of Houston, 6-4, 6-4, and Bristow and Moringiello downed Eric Fahnestock, of Wichita, Kan., and Dawn Martin, of St. Clair Shores, Mich., 7-6 (7-4), 6-2.

In skating action, the North team, which finished second in both the pairs and women's short programs Saturday, took the lead after two rounds of figure skating at the U.S. Olympic Festival.

For the first time, only team scores are being used for this competition. The North had an average of 106.00, followed by the East with 104.52.

The men's short program and the compulsory dance competition both were held later Saturday.

The East, led by Caryn Kadavy, the bronze medalist at both the national championships and worlds this year, won the women's short program. Kadavy, of Colorado Springs, Colo., teamed with Nancy Kerrigan of Stoneham, Mass., and Kelly Szmurlo of Milwaukee for 157.10 points.

"I made a couple of mistakes," Trenary said. "Better here than in the Olympics."

In pairs, the South finished first, led by 1986 U.S. champions Gillian Wachsman and Todd Waggoner. Wachsman, of Riverside, Conn., and Waggoner, Schaumburg, Ill., teamed with Sharon Carz of Addison, Ill., and Doug Williams of Playa del Rey, Calif., to score 108.00 points.

Charger's' Tart Takes New Job

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

Ayden-Grifton High School football coach Dwight Tart has accepted the head coaching job at Harnett Central after guiding the Chargers for three years.

Ayden Middle School football coach B.T. Chappell has been recommended by Ayden-Grifton principal Bill Wiggins to replace Tart, subject to approval by the Pitt County Board of Education.

DWIGHT TART

During Tart's three years at Ayden-Grifton, the Chargers compiled a 17-13 regular season record and a 0-1 mark in playoff action. Tart's best year was this past season, when the Chargers finished 8-3, earning a share of the 1986 Eastern Plains Conference Championship along with North Pitt.

Tart will be moving up a classification in coaching Harnett Central, a 3-A school. It will also be a move back home for Tart, who is from Dunn which is about 12 miles from the school.

"It was a very hard decision to leave Ayden-Grifton," Tart said. "We had some very good athletes coming back. It was just a matter of a new challenge coming to Harnett Central, which has been down the last couple of years, and also the chance for my wife to have better job opportunities.

"We don't leave with any hard feelings, and (we're) glad for the times we had there, the friends we made and the players I've coached. We leave with some sorrow but we (also) leave looking forward to a new challenge."

Drops First

American Paul Azinger, the overnight leader of the British Open Golf Championship at Muirfield, Scotland, chips out of a first-green bunker Saturday. Azinger lost his second-round lead due to a bogey on this hole but bounced back to take a one-stroke lead into the clubhouse. (AP Laserphoto)

Azinger Salvages 71 To Keep Lead

MUIRFIELD, Scotland (AP) — Paul Azinger, playing in weather that improved to merely miserable, salvaged a 71 from traps and trouble Saturday to keep his one-shot lead in the British Open golf championship.

Azinger saved a round of par with a one-putt bogey on the final hole and completed three rounds at 207, six shots under par.

"I desperately wanted that putt," Azinger said of the 12-15 foot effort that left him a stroke in front of Nick Faldo of England and David Frost of South Africa.

Americans, who recently have fared poorly in this oldest of tournaments — and one of golf's four major events — held the next four positions.

Tom Watson, Craig Stadler and Payne Stewart were tied at 209, only two shots back, and veteran Ray Floyd was at 210.

"I wanted the lead. I was proud of that putt," said Azinger, 27, playing in his first British Open. He is in position to join Watson, Tony Lema, Sam Snead and Ben Hogan as rookie winners.

"We got a great break on the tee times. We got the best of the weather," said Azinger, the leading money winner on the U.S. tour.

Even at that break, with cold winds howling off the Firth of Forth, "it was a struggle," Azinger said. "It was survival of the fittest."

But the foul weather, which was much worse for the early starters, bothered Azinger not at all. It may have even helped.

"It took the pressure off me," he said.

"This is the greatest place in the world to play golf. And I'm in the best position. I'm enjoying it."

He said he would continue to enjoy it, "win lose or draw" in Sunday's final round of the chase for an ancient cup and a $120,000 first prize.

His prime challenges come from Frost and Faldo, a single stroke back at 208. Frost matched the best round of the dismal day with a 70. Faldo, playing on his 30th birthday, had a 71.

Watson, seeking an end to a three-year winless string with a record-matching sixth British Open triumph, rallied from a double-bogey disaster in a fairway bunker and shot 71. So did Stadler. Stewart was one stroke higher at 72.

"I didn't play a very good round of golf," Watson said. "I was lucky to shoot 71."

Floyd, who needs a victory in this event to become only the fifth man in history to make a career sweep of all

Changes In Offensive Line

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

(Editor's Note: This is the third in a series of stories on prospects for the individual playing areas for the East Carolina University football team.)

New is the watchword for the offensive line in 1987.

The coach is new — Steve Shankweiler — who comes from Western Kentucky to the ECU staff. He replaces John Zernhelt, who moved on to Maryland as offensive line coach after seven years with the Pirates.

And — for the most part — the players will be new, also.

"We have no true starters back from last year," Shankweiler said. "We do have three back who played some, but they didn't get all that much experience."

The three include Grant Lowe (6-5, 262, So.), Joe Molineaux (6-3, 255, Jr.) and John O'Driscoll (6-4, 285, Sr.).

A fourth player has also entered the lists in the form of Billy Michel (6-5, 270, Jr.), a second generation Pirate. Michel, who transfered from Taft Junior College in California following his freshman year, is a former Rose High School player, the son of Tom Michel, a star Pirate running back in the early 1960s.

Michel came to ECU as a tight end, was switched to linebacker and defensive line as a sophomore, and then appears to have found a home in the offensive line.

"I think he did play on offense one game last year," Shankweiler said.

For Shankweiler, it was a question of starting over from scratch.

"I didn't even look at film from last year. Everyone started over on an equal footing. I figure since everyone teaches differently that it was the best thing to do, especially considering how many people we graduated." The Pirates lost all five of the original starting offensive line from last season.

"We had a new coach, new kids, and while we were basically running the same plays, we had a new way of teaching it," the coach said.

"We emphasize stance, steps, how to run block and how to pass block," Shankweiler said. "We've put a lot of emphasis on pass blocking. We've taken more of a pro approach to it and I feel that it has helped. But we need to be technique conscious, especially since we don't have the size and strength we've had in the past."

The center position is perhaps the grayest of the five positions up front, according to Shankweiler. "Lowe was listed as a center, but we felt that we were taking a very good tackle and making him an average center, so we moved him back to tackle."

That left the position in the hands of Kyle Condrey (6-2, 262, Jr.) and Carl Carney (6-1, 253, So.). "Carney worked 10 days on defense and 10 on offense in the spring and struggled with it. But he has a chance to be a good player for us. Condrey also responded well and got after it in the spring."

Shankweiler said Todd Creech (6-4, 261, Fr.) would also get a look in the fall for the number three spot. "He didn't work in the spring due to a weight-training injury, so we don't really know what he can do yet."

Shankweiler thinks that the Pirates have some talent at the guard position, although it is inexperienced. "Michel had a very good spring. He has great ability and is working hard this summer to get better. Molineaux will probably be listed as a starter, but he missed part of the spring with an injury and I'm hesitant to give an opinion as to his ability. But he will figure in the situation."

Another candidate is Stewart Southall (6-2, 250, So.), who "had an excellent spring," according to Shankweiler. "He had a knee problem but he fought through it and was a pleasant surprise."

Billy Maxwell (6-2, 251, Jr.) had a good second half of spring drills, according to the coach, but is still recovering from a shoulder injury and may not figure into the plans until around mid-season.

Other candidates include Chad Martin (6-4, 280, Fr.) and Wade Perry (6-3, 277, Jr.), who will battle for the number four position. Neither have experience.

Another posibility is Bobby Winstead (6-2, 245, Jr.), who did not go through spring practice.

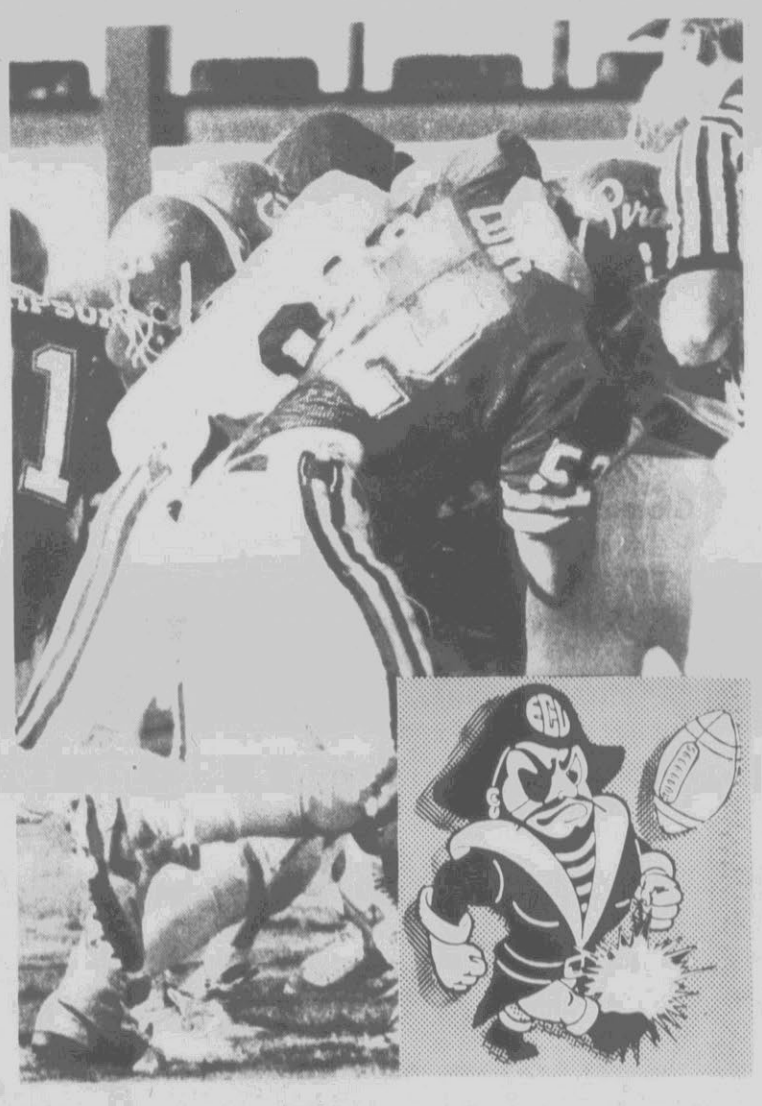

"I feel like we have three tackles who we can count on," Shankweiler said. Lowe will probably start at one tackle with either O'Driscoll or Todd Drugac (6-2, 285, So.) at the other. "All of them had good springs," the coach said. "They responded well to me and were good workers."

Others who may figure in the top four include Leon Hall (6-4, 290, Sr.), who was injured early in the spring and Brad Brown (6-5, 253, Jr.). "Hall is one of those guys who've shuffed around to a lot of positions and the jury is still out on him," Shankweiler said. "If he comes back in shape and healthy, he could be the number four man. Brown bears watching after an improved spring, but he has no experience."

Shankweiler says that no one has a starting berth wrapped up at this point. "We have to keep it competitive for a while (in the fall). But I thought we did a great job of putting in the basics in the spring and we have to build on that and see if they can handle it.

"Our big problem is the lack of exprerience and size, but I think that's because we're not as old as we've been in the past. These are young kids who should be a lot better next year. We do have good speed and I think that will be an asset to us this year," Shankweiler said.

"On the positive side, we do have good athletes, we run better, and we have a chance to get bigger. And these kids are very coachable too."

Richmond Gains Summer 500 Pole

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Tim Richmond, seeking a record fourth straight victory at Pocono International Raceway, captured the pole position Saturday for Sunday's Summer 500 NASCAR Winston Cup Race.

Richmond, who won both 500-mile races at the track in 1986 and was first across the line in the Miller 500 here last month, set a qualifying record with a one-lap speed of 155.979 mph. The old record, 155.502 mph, was set in June by Terry Labonte.

Joining Richmond, of Ashland, Ohio, in the front row is Alan Kulwicki. The Greenfield, Wis., driver was timed at 155.796 mph.

"The first half of this season has been real up and down," Kulwicki said. "I'm looking to turn things around."

The 200-lap race is scheduled to start at 1:15 p.m. EDT.

Richmond, 32, said he and his crew have made few changes in his Folgers Chevrolet since winning here in June.

"Same engine, same everything. I think the car is perfect," he said. "But I'm a little stronger."

The pole-sitter was so pleased with the car, in fact, that he skipped a post-qualifying practice session.

"I was over cooking chicken," he joked.

Richmond's Miller 500 win came after he missed much of the first half of the Winston Cup schedule with double pneumonia.

Also stronger physically for this race is veteran driver Richard Petty, who has competed in a NASCAR record 466 consecutive races.

Petty broke two ribs in a crash before the Miller race. To keep the streak intact, he drove on the parade lap, then turned the car over to a relief driver.

Petty has another streak he wouldn't mind breaking. He hasn't won in 86 consecutive races, the longest losing streak of his career. The last time Petty saw the checkered flag was July 4, 1984, in the Firecracker 400 at Daytona Beach, Fla.

Going into the race, Dale Earnhardt leads in the Winston Cup point standings, followed by Elliott, Neil Bonnett, Labonte and Kyle Petty.

The group at 211 included Australians Graham Marsh and Rodger Davis, South African Nick Price and American Mark Calcavecchia. Marsh, Calcavecchia and Price had 72s and Davis 73.

Notable absentees from the list of contenders include defending champion Greg Norman of Australia, Seve Ballesteros of Spain and Bernhard Langer of West Germany.

Langer, only two back when the day's play started, had a nightmare of a 76 that left him at 214.

He took three from a bunker on the eighth hole and injured his hand, clutching it in pain and dropping to one knee, after hitting from deep rough on the 15th.

Ballesteros, twice a winner of this title, played in some of the worst of the weather and had a 77 that took him out of it at 220.

And Norman acknowledged his reign as the British Open champion was over after a 74 put him at 216.

The weather was at least partially responsible.

"It was brutal out there," said Norman. And he didn't get the worst of it.

The early starters faced a driving rain, 40 mile-per-hour winds and biting cold that had them burrowing into layers of sweaters and foul-weather gear, digging out stocking caps and mittens.

"It's the worst I can remember since St. Andrew's in '64," said Jack Nicklaus. He played in the absolute worst of it and shot 81.

That was one better than the 82 compiled by U.S. Open champ Scott Simpson.

It was so bad early in the day that officials moved the tees far forward on four holes, cutting almost 200 yards off Muirfield's links.

Even that wasn't enough.

Norman, one of golf's longest hitters, caught the par-5 fifth hole, shortened from 559 to 506 yards, with a howling wind in his face.

"It seemed like the longest hole I've ever seen," he said. He played it with a driver, 2-iron, 5-iron, and came up short.

Conditions gradually improved as the day wore on and, for a short time while the leaders were on the course, it was almost tolerable.

But the cold winds picked up again later howling, turning umbrellas inside-out, as Azinger and Faldo came down the stretch tied at six under par.

Neither was able to birdie the par-5 15th, and both bogeyed the 18th, Faldo hitting his second shot onto a grassy mound in a greenside bunker and taking three to get down.

For Azinger, it was much more difficult. He drove into one of those steep-sided fairway bunkers and had to play out sideways.

He was short in three, pitched on made the putt for the bogey that left him in front.

Watson had to work hard to remain in contention.

"It could have been an 80," he said.

He bladed a shot from the sand on the second and buried the ball in the steep face of the bunker. He had to play his next one back into the sand, then came out and made double bogey.

But he completed his comeback with an 18-foot birdie putt on the final hole that left him only two shots back.

"Everybody has an off day," said Watson. "This was my bad day and I got out of it with a 71. That's how you win golf tournaments, take an 80 and turn it into a 71."

Tart Leaving ...

about during the latter part of June.

"The principal at Harnett Central called and asked if I'd be interested in interviewing for the job," he said. "I interviewed and he called me up the Fourth of July so I came down and gave him the decision that I would come."

Tart is a 1982 graduate of East Carolina where he played football for the Pirates. While a student, Tart had assistant coaching stints at Chocowinity and Washington. Following graduation, he took over the head basketball job at Aurora High School before moving on to Armstrong Junior High School in Cumberland County, where he coached football, wrestling and track. He then arrived at Ayden-Grifton in 1984.

Chappell has previously coached high school football at North Pitt High School from 1981-1983 where he had a 10-18-2 record. He helped lay the foundation for the Panther program, which has won conference championships the past two seasons under the directio of Larry Bolger.

"Ayden-Grifton is the area that I grew up in," Chappell said. "I've been at the Middle School the last three years. I have worked with the players that are in the program now. I look forward to it. It's a new challenge."

Chappell's best year at North Pitt was in 1982 when he led the Panthers to a 6-2-2 mark in the regular season and a 5-1 conference mark. For his efforts, he was named the Daily Reflector's Area Coach of the Year. Ironically, the lone conference loss for North Pitt that season was a 7-6 defeat by Ayden-Grifton.

"As far as the challenge of 2-A (football), the conference we are in is going to be a good competitive conference," Chappell said. "I'm not really looking forward to what we have non-conference."

Away from the EPC, the Chargers will take on traditional 2-A power Wallace Rose Hill and 4-A Kinston. Wallace Rose Hill has a 48-3 mark over the last three seasons.

"You know the players are going to be a little apprehensive with a new coach," Chappell said. "It's going to take them a little while to adjust. Ayden-Grifton has had good programs over the years. When you look down, it's important to have the tradition."

Chappell inherits a healthy program at Ayden-Grifton and returns a number of key players from last year's EPC co-championship team, including tailback Eric Blount, offensive guard Steven Tucker and fullback's Aaron Harper and Ronnell Peterson.

"I think B.T. Chappell would be a very good coach," Tart said. "He has plenty of experience and had there been any recommendation asked for, I would have recommended B.T. to take over. I feel like he'll pick up right where I left off."

Guillen Keys Chisox By Tribe

CHICAGO (AP) — Ozzie Guillen scored two runs and hit a sacrifice fly to drive in the lead run Saturday night, pacing the Chicago White Sox to a 6-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Guillen's sacrifice fly, which scored Steve Lyons from third, came off Tom Candiotti, 2-10, who has not won since June 5.

Bobby Thigpen, 3-2, who relieved starter Floyd Bannister in the sixth, pitched 3 1-3 innings, allowing three hits and striking out two. Jim Winn got the final out for his third save.

It was Thigpen's first game since being recalled from the White Sox's Class AAA affiliate in Hawaii last Monday.

Lyons hit a one-out double in the sixth and took third on Bill Lindsey's first major-league hit. He then scored on Guillen's sacrifice fly to break a 3-3 tie.

The White Sox added two runs in the seventh on Daryl Boston's RBI double and Jerry Haritston's sacrifice fly.

Chicago took a 1-0 lead in the first on Harold Baines' two-run, two-out homer to right, extending his hitting streak to 13th games.

It was Baines' 153rd career homer, one short of the club record held by Bill Melton.

Joe Carter tied the game in the third, hitting his 21st homer to left field with two outs.

Candiotti's wildness cost him the a run in the third after a leadoff single by Guillen.

With one out, Candiotti threw a wild pitch, sending Guillen to second and Baines hit a deep fly to center, allowing Guillen to go to third.

The Indians tied the score on consecutive two-out singles by Tommy Hinzo, Pat Tabler and Carter in the fifth.

Chicago took a a 3-2 lead in the fifth. Guillen singled, Baines walked and, after a third wild pitch by Candiotti, Calderon singled off the pitcher's glove.

Jay Bell tied the game in the sixth, scoring Carmen Castillo with an RBI single to left.

BOSTON (AP) — Dave Henderson hit a two-run 10th-inning homer after Jim Rice's two-out, two-strike homer had tied it in the ninth to give the Boston Red Sox a 5-3 victory over the Oakland Athletics Saturday.

Henderson's line-drive homer to right, his seventh of the season, came off Gene Nelson, who replaced Dennis Eckersley, 6-5, after Dwight Evans opened the inning with a single.

Bruce Hurst, 10-6, went all the way for Boston, allowing nine hits.

But only two of the hits, both singles by Steve Henderson, came in the last 6 2-3 innings as Hurst improved his home record to 8-1 and broke a four-game Boston losing streak.

The Athletics went into the eighth leading 3-1 behind Jose Rijo, who allowed six hits in 7 1-3 innings.

But Don Baylor's sacrifice fly made it 3-2 in the eighth and Rice's eighth homer of the year on a 2-2 pitch from Eckersley with two out in the ninth tied the game at 3-3.

Jose Canseco put Oakland up 1-0 in the first when he hit his 19th homer over the screen in left on a 3-0 pitch from Bruce Hurst. Mickey Tettleton singled home Steinbach in the second to make it 2-0.

The Red Sox made it 2-1 in the third on singles by Bill Buckner and Ellis Burks and a balk by Rijo. But Oakland got it back in the fourth on Henderson's single, Steinbach's double and Tettleton's RBI ground ball.

The veteran Henderson, released last year by the Athletics and called up from Tacoma Wednesday, had four hits for Oakland.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Ray Knight had four hits and four runs batted in, including two during a seven-run sixth inning Saturday as the Baltimore Orioles routed Kansas City 11-7.

The Orioles, 1-15 in their last 16 road games before the All-Star Break, have now taken three straight from the slumping Royals, losers of eight of their last 10 games.

Starter Mike Flanagan, 1-5, got his first major league victory in almost a year, a day after coming off the disabled list. Danny Jackson, 4-11, was the loser. Doug Corbett pitched the final four innings for his first save, allowing the final five Kansas City runs, including Kevin Seitzer's sixth homer, a two-run shot in the ninth.

Kansas City rookie Bo Jackson, who announced last week he intends to play running back for the Los Angeles Raiders of the NFL in the off-season, struck out in all four at-bats. That gave him at least one strikeout in 16 straight cgames, a team record.

His season strikeout total of 123 is 66 short of the major league record.

Frank White's RBI single in the second gave Kansas City a 1-0 lead but the Orioles got three in the fourth on RBI doubles by Cal Ripken and Knight and an RBI triple by Eddie Murray.

The Royals got one back in the fourth on Larry Owen's RBI single but Knight's RBI single in the fifth made it 4-2.

Then Ron Washington's leadoff double ignited the sixth-inning outburst which saw the Orioles bat around and score all seven runs before making an out off Jackson, Bob Stoddard and Steve Farr.

Cincinnati Powers By Mets, 7-3

NEW YORK (AP) — Buddy Bell and Bo Diaz each hit two-run homers and Ted Power pitched five-hit ball for seven innings as the Cincinnati Reds beat the New York Mets 7-3 Saturday night.

Power, 7-5, who had two loses and a no decision since his last victory on June 26, struck out four and walked two. Two of the hits he allowed were solo home runs by Howard Johnson in the second inning and Kevin McReynolds in the fourth. Rob Murphy pitched the last two innings for his first save.

Johnson's homer, his 21st of the season, gave the Mets a 1-0 lead. It also set a team record for homers by a Mets third baseman. Charlie Smith hit 20 homers for the Mets in 1964.

Sid Fernandez, 9-6, pitched 5 2-3 innings, allowing four runs on five hits. It was Fernandez's third defeat in his last four starts and he has not won since June 21.

With the score tied 2-2 in the fifth inning, Barry Larkin was hit by a pitch with one out and Bell followed with his seventh homer of the season, a drive over the left-field wall. Bell is 16-for-35 against the Mets this season.

Diaz, who had four hits, gave the Reds a 5-2 lead in the seventh on a bases-loaded single and hit a two-run homer in the eighth, his eighth of the season.

Against the Mets this year, Diaz is 16-for-43 with two homers and 12 runs batted in.

After Johnson's home run, the Reds took a 2-1 lead in the third inning after two were out.

Power walked and scored on Larkin's triple to the center-field wall. Bell followed with a single to first, allowing Larkin to score as Fernandez was late covering the base.

McReynolds tied the score at 2-2 in the fourth with a two-out homer and also hit a solo homer in the ninth, his 18th of the season.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Chris Brown singled home John Kruk with one out in the 10th inning as the San Diego Padres posted their second extra-inning win in three games by coming from behind to beat the St. Louis Cardinals 4-3 Saturday.

Kruk had drawn a leadoff walk off Ken Dayley, 2-1, who entered the game after Joe Magrane allowed just two earned runs and four hits in nine innings. Kruk moved up on Tony Gwynn's sacrifice bunt and Marvell Wynne walked, setting the stage for Brown's line-drive single to center.

Rich Gossage, 2-2, the fourth Padres pitcher, worked one inning to earn credit for the win.

The Cardinals took a 1-0 lead in the first off Eric Show on consecutive doubles by Ozzie Smith and Tommy Herr.

They made it 2-0 in the third when Vince Coleman beat out an infield hit, Smith walked and Herr grounded to second baseman Randy Ready. Smith was forced at second but Coleman raced home when shortstop Garry Templeton dropped the ball.

San Diego cut the lead to 2-1 in the third when Ready drew a leadoff walk and Show was safe as catcher Tony Pena threw his sacrifice bunt wide of first. Stan Jefferson's bunt single loaded the bases and Ready scored as Gwynn grounded into a double play.

The Cards took a 3-1 lead in the fifth when Smith drew a one-out walk and stole second. He scored when Herr hit a fly ball to centerfielder Shane Mack who threw the ball into the Cardinals dugout, trying to catch him at third.

The Padres got one back in the sixth on Gwynn's leadoff triple and Carmelo Martinez's sacrifice fly. They tied it in the seventh on Ready's two-out single, a walk to pinch-hitter Bruce Bochy and a single by Kruk, who had replaced leftfielder Jefferson earlier when the rookie left the game complaining of chest pains.

The Cards had been 10-1 in extra-inning games before losing Thursday and Saturday in 10 innings.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Atlee Hammaker pitched his first complete game in two years and Robby Thompson homered and drove in three runs Saturday, leading the San Francisco Giants to a 9-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Hammaker, 5-7, allowed eight hits, struck out one and walked two as the Giants broke a three-game losing streak. The left-hander, who missed last season because of shoulder surgery, allowed only Manny Trillo's sixth homer of the season following a single by Keith Moreland in the seventh.

Bob Brenly, who now has a career-high 11-game hitting streak, had three hits, including a homer, and singled home Mike Aldrete with two outs for the first run. It was the only earned one in a five-run first inning off Greg Maddux, 5-8.

Kevin Mitchell followed Brenly's single with a fly to deep right center that centerfielder Bob Dernier dropped, allowing two runs to score. Thompson singled in Mitchell and scored on Jose Uribe's double.

Aldrete singled home a run in the second and Thompson's two-run homer in the fifth made it 8-0.

Brenly's tenth homer in the seventh accounted for the final run.

With Ryne Sandberg on first base and one out, Dawson hit a fly ball to short center. Eddie Milner tried for a diving catch and missed, but left fielder Jeffrey Leonard picked up the ball and threw to second in time to force Sandberg.

Dawson, apparently thinking the ball had been caught by Milner, stopped before reaching first. He was trotting back to the Cubs' dugout when second baseman Thompson threw to first, covered by catcher Brenly, for the third out.

Dawson later grounded into a routine double play, and his hitting streak ended at 10 games.

Bucs Sign 14 Draftees, Set For Training Camp

Also among the players signing contracts Saturday was Mike Shula, the son of Miami Dolphins Coach Don Shula. Mike Shula played quarterback for the last four years at Alabama under Coach Ray Perkins, who has since taken over as the Bucs' head coach.

The Bucs also announced the signing of veteran defensive back Craig Curry, a three-year NFL veteran who has played out his contract with the Bucs last season.

The team waived five players who failed their physicals, including five-year veteran tight end Jerry Bell, who caught 101 passes for 1,218 yards with the Bucs. The other who failed physicals were center Bob Tabacino, running back Mack Boatner, and tight ends Jeff Spek and Chris Faulkner.

Running back Nathan Wonsley was placed on the physically unable to perform list. Wonsley suffered a severe back injury last year but has vowed to play again.

The spate of signings came on the day rookies were expected to report to training camp. Only two Bucs draft picks remain unsigned.

"I think the reason we signed so many today is because we are one of the first ones to go to camp and people are just waiting until they have to report," Perkins said. "To be honest with you, I wasn't really ever concerned."

Rookies are scheduled to go through a 12-minute run Sunday and begin practice Monday.

The Bucs signed University of Miami quarterback Vinny Testaverde, the top choice in the National Football League, before the draft.

Moss, a linebacker, was a college teammate of Testaverde. Smith played quarterback at Mississippi State but is listed as a running back with the Bucs. Reynolds is a defensive back from Washington State.

The other draft picks who signed Saturday are:

Third-rounder Mark Carrier, a wide receiver from Nicholls State, La.; fourth-rounders Don Graham, a linebacker from Penn State, and Ron Hall, a tight end from Hawaii; fifth-rounder Henry Rolling, a linebacker from Nevada-Reno; sixth-rounder Steve Bartalo, a running back from Colorado State; seventh-rounder Harry Swayne, a defensive end from Rutgers.

Also, ninth-rounders Joe Armentrout, a running back from Wisconsin, and Greg Davis, a punter from The Citadel; 10th-rounder Mike Simmonds, an offensive lineman from Indiana State; and 11th-rounder Reggie Taylor, a running back from Cincinnati.

Yugoslavia Crushes U.S. To Take Basketball Final

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — Yugoslavia crushed the United States 100-85 in the men's basketball final and Romania collected five rowing golds at the World University Games Saturday.

The United States never had a chance against the taller Yugoslavs, who dominated the backboards.

Drazen Petrovic, rated Europe's best basketball player, scored 35 points for Yugoslavia, which was ahead from the start and had a 50-38 halftime lead.

As usual, the Americans had a strong second half, based on speed and bench strength, but they could do nothing against the Yugoslav 7-footers.

Spain overcame a 43-36 halftime deficit to edge Cuba 80-79 for the bronze medal.

The Romanians had four women's and one men's gold in the rowing, dominating the finals together with Italy, which collected three men's golds.

The other rowing golds went to Holland, China, West Germany, East Germany, Poland and Bulgaria.

Li Kong Zhong took the men's platform diving with a total of 631.71 points, giving China a clean sweep of all golds in the Universiade diving.

"They are older, bigger and more experienced," said U.S. Coach Mike Krzyzewski of Duke University in discussing the Yugoslavs.

He lamented the game was "very physical, another advantage for the Yugoslavs."

With their five wins in the rowing, Romania tied the Americans for golds at 20, both trailing the Soviet Union as the Universiade moved into its last day of competition on Sunday.

Italy held on to fourth place in golds, moving up to 11, followed by China with 9.

The Americans were highly favored in several of the 13 track finals on Sunday. They could match their gold total of 22 in Kobe, Japan, in 1985.

North, West Women Take Opening Wins

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — It was the first time out, and with just four days of practice for the U.S. Olympic Festival, the coaches for the West and the North saw the results of their work measured in big victories.

Paced by overwhelming inside play, the West and North women's basketball teams won their opening games Saturday. In the second of two games, Karen Deden scored 14 points and Pauline Jordan added 12 points as the West rallied from a 10-point deficit in the closing minute of the first half and pulled away for a 74-64 victory over the South.

Daedra Charles scored 22 points and guided the North team to a 74-63 victory over the East in the opening of the competition at the Dean E. Smith Student Activities Center on the campus of the University of North Carolina.

The men's doubleheader was played Saturday night.

"We've been practicing well all week and we just had to get the jitters out," said West Coach Debbie Ryan, whose team struggled early but dominated at the end.

Carla Green's layup 29 seconds before halftime gave the South its biggest lead, 40-30, but Brenetha Jackson scored for the West with seven seconds left.

Jordan scored half the points in an 8-0 run for the West to start the second half. Green scored for the South at 17:51, but the West began to take control of the offensive and defensive boards and started its runaway.

The West outrebounded the South 52-32, including a 27-13 edge in the second half.

"We were able to control the boards better," Ryan said. "In addition, the fact that we were able to find a combination really helped us."

A 9-1 run led the West to a 47-43 edge with 13:41 left. Evelyn Thompson connected for the South at 13:28, but the West ran off a 17-2 spurt over the next seven minutes for a 64-47 edge.

The South's last gasp came on the strength of its own 13-2 scoring run, with seven of the points coming from the free throw line. Tracey Rutledge's jumper with 4:00 left got the South within 66-60, but it never got inside that six-point barrier.

"A lot of teams with leads at halftime tend to let down and I think we sort of fell into that," Rutledge said. "We're just hoping to regroup and play well against the North."

Charles, who will attend Tennessee, sparked an inside game which the East could not counter. However, the East's fast tempo kept it in the game through the first half, and Kelly Lyons' 10-foot jumper with 39 seconds left pulled the East within 36-33 at halftime.

The North went on a 20-7 run to start the second half, with guard Sonja Henning contributing seven points to the rally for a 56-40 edge with 12:25 to play.

Kristine Kinney led an East comeback, scoring six straight points to get her team within 56-46 with 11:07 left. Following two free throws by Mary Long, Terri Bradley scored on a 3-point basket and a 12-foot jumper to get the East within 58-51 at 10:22.

Bradley added a jumper at 5:19 to cut the gap to 64-59, but that was as close as the East would get. Poor inside shooting stopped the East as it scored no more baskets after Bradley's last shot and managed just four free throws.

Meanwhile, Charles, who was the only North player in double figures, scored seven points down the stretch.

"The thing that sets her apart is that she demands the basketball," said Leon Barmore, the North coach from Louisiana Tech. "I've coached some outstanding players and there is no question that she is going to be a great basketball player."

Olympic Festival Officially Opens

AP Sports Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Shannon Gibbons says last year's U.S. Olympic Festival opening ceremonies in the Houston Astrodome were fun, but this year's extravaganza in Raleigh tops it.

"That was cool and everything, but this was much better," said Gibbons, a St. Petersburg, Fla., native and member of the East judo team. "They told us last year how great it was going to be."

Indeed, local organizers put on some show to mark the official opening of the 1987 Festival, which for the first time since its 1978 inception is being held in five different cities instead of the one-city format. The bulk of the 34 sports begin this weekend in Raleigh, Durham, Chapel Hill, Cary and Greensboro.

At 8:30 p.m., North Carolina Gov. Jim Martin declared the Festival open, capping four years of work by state and local officials to bring the games to North Carolina.

Hill Carrow, president of the local organizing committee, urged the crowd to "salute yourselves and the athletes about to enter this great stadium." Carrow even involved himself in a sketch with character actor Jim Varney, known to many as Ernest P. Worrell.

"This is indeed the greatest sports extravaganza in the history of North Carolina," said Dr. LeRoy Walker, a recent inductee into the U.S. Olympic Hall of Fame and a prime mover in bringing the Festival to the state. "And it deserves 45,000 of the nation's greatest fans."

The Festival torch, which for the last several weeks has traveled throughout the state in rain and sunshine, through the major cities and small farming communities, was brought into the stadium by Steve Streater. An all-Atlantic Coast Conference football player at North Carolina in the late 1970s, Streater has been confined to a wheelchair and paralyzed from the chest down since April 1981, when he was involved in an automobile accident on the night he signed a professional football contract.

Streater passed the torch to two University of North Carolina athletes — basketball star J.R. Reid and All-American soccer player April Heinrichs. After running around the perimeter of the playing surface, Reid and Heinrichs carried the torch to the grassy bank at the east end of the stadium, where they lit the cauldron, signifying the start of the Festival.

"I remember watching it being lit last year and thinking what a thrill it must be to do that," Reid said. "I never thought I'd get the chance to be one of the athletes up there."

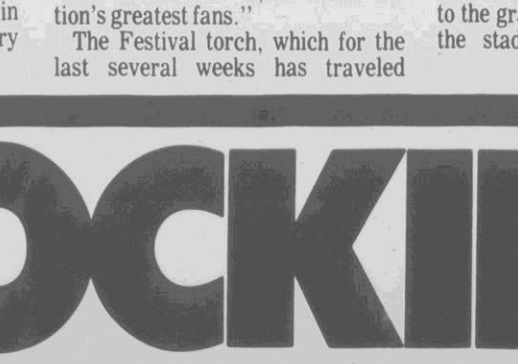

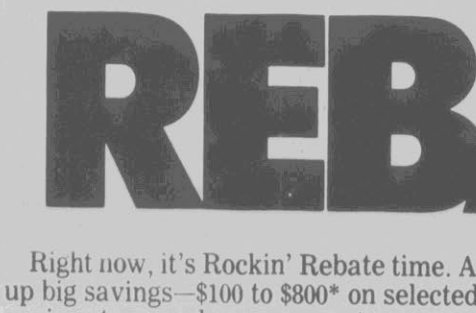

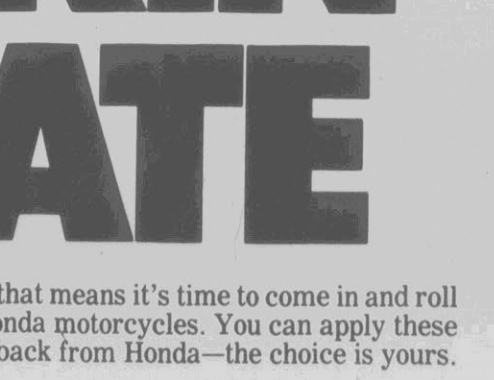

Heinrichs said carrying the torch was a special honor "because it represents people — athletes and everyone else who works hard and strives for a goal."

Entertainment also was provided by North Carolina natives Roberta Flack and Charlie Daniels.

Pearson's Putting Gains Lead

DANVERS, Mass. (AP) — It didn't show on her scorecard, but Becky Pearson said her play improved in the third round of the $300,000 LPGA Boston Five Classic.

Pearson shot 69-68 in the first two rounds, then came back with her highest score, a 2-under-par 70, in Saturday's third round.

Pearson rolled in 50-foot birdie putts on consecutive holes after getting off to a slow start, then added a pair of late birdies to take the lead on a humid, 92-degree day.

"I played actually much better today," the 31-year-old Pearson said. "I felt shakier in the first two rounds."

Her round of 70 gave Pearson a 54-hole score of 9-under-par 207 and a one-shot lead over second-round leader Jody Rosenthal going into Sunday's final round.

Pearson said he got over the shakes by telephone.

"I called my two teachers in Florida last night and they shared their thoughts with me," she said. "Mostly, it was turning my shoulder.

"But really, I played better in terms of ball striking. I had more birdie opportunities and the course played a little more difficult. The fairways are drier and the greens are faster. I was a little nervous but I'm happy with the way I played."

Pearson said she has always scored well on the 6,008-yard Ferncroft Country Club course, recording a 6-under 66 a few years ago and another on Friday.

But she did not want to make any predictions for Sunday's final round.

"I'm just not sure what to expect," she said.

Pearson three-putted for bogeys on the fourth and seventh holes but dropped the first of her 50-foot putts for a birdie on the ninth.

She followed with another 50-footer on the 10th hole, then scrambled to stay near the top before taking the lead with seven-foot birdie putts on the 16th and 18th holes.

Defending champion Jane Geddes made a strong surge late in the round to finish with a 5-under 67. She was at 210, 6-under for the tournament and three shots behind Pearson.

Geddes was tied with three-time U.S. Open champion Hollis Stacy, Vermont native Patty Sheehan and Donna White. Stacy struggled on the back nine and finished with a 72, while Sheehan and White both shot 69s.

Stacy's round was marred by a double bogey on the ninth after she had birdied the previous two holes while Geddes birdied the 17th hole and eagled the 18th, each time holing 12-foot putts.

Local favorite Sally Quinlan, playing in front of a large gallery, momentarily led by a stroke on the front side but had three straight bogeys on the back nine and finished with a 75 and a 54-hole score of 212, five shots off the pace.

Quinlan was in a group that included Jan Stepehenson, who had a 73, and Betsy King, who struggled to a 75, as well as Rosie Jones and Dot Germain.

The hot, humid weather and a stiff, swirling wind combined to harden the greens and make conditions more difficult than in the first two rounds.

Crampton Is Leader

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Defending champion Bruce Crampton pushed his lead to three strokes Saturday midway through the second round at the Syracuse Senior Golf Classic. He had a 4-under-par 32 before heading for the back nine at the Lafayette Country Club.

The Australian-born golfer was 11-under 97 after 27 holes.

Chi Chi Rodgriguez was 8-under 100, while Gene Littler, J.C. Goosie and Jim Barber were all five strokes back at 6-under 102.

Crampton, who opened the day with a one-stroke margin after a 7-under par 65 in the opening round, opened up his lead over the 72-man field with two birdies and eagle on the front nine.

Crampton opened the day with pars on the first four holes, then sank a three-foot putt on par-4 No. 5 to go 8-under for the tournament. Crampton added an eagle on par-5 No. 7, just missing a double eagle when his second shot skidded around the cup.

Crampton scored his second birdie on the par-5 eighth hole.

Rodriguez finished the first nine holes with four birdies, including three consecutively, to pull within three strokes of Crampton. Rodriguez started the day three strokes behind Crampton at 4-under 68.

Littler tied Crampton early in the round at 7-under, but bogeyed hole No. 5 to fall one stroke back. Although he picked the stroke back up two holes later, he suffered his second bogey on the day on No. 9 to fall back into third with Barber and Goosie.

Rainy Weather

Jack Nicklaus and the rest of the British Open field were forced to don rain gear as the rain and high winds plagued the tournament's third round. (AP Laserphoto)

Weather Causing Problems At Open

MUIRFIELD, England (AP) — A year after winning the British Open in atrocious weather, Greg Norman virtually conceded his title Saturday in almost identical conditions.

This time, the hard-hitting Australian took a swipe at the tournament's rules on starting schedules and called for split tee times to give players more of a chance in bad weather.

"It seems to be that every year at the British Open, half the field gets eliminated by the starting times," Norman said after shooting a third-round 74 that put him 10 strokes off the lead with one day remaining.

"Weather plays a pretty big factor every time and if you can reduce that by a two-tee start for the first two days, it could help the championship. This week would have been perfect," he said.

Norman said keeping the field together, and going back to single tee times for the weekend's final two rounds, made for a fairer event.

"It's unfortunate that the guys that played early today are out of the tournament," he said. "Those who got the worst end of the draw can just go out there tomorrow and fill the numbers."

Other top players also suffered in the conditions, despite a concession from the organizers to try and lessen the difficulties.

Before a ball was struck, the yardage of the course was reduced to help players survive the driving rain, 40-mph winds and temperatures in the low 50s.

A total of 182 yards was taken from the fifth, 10th, 11th and 17th holes "to give players the chance to reach the fairways," a tournament news release said.

Some players, such as South Africa's Gary Player who shot 79 for a 12-over-par total, found the shorter course of little help.

"There is no skill involved in these conditions," Player, competing in his 33rd Open, said. "When you stand out there with your hands cold and wet, and wind rushing the ball around, skill is eliminated and does not necessarily bring out the best players in the field."

Although Saturday's attendance was 3,000 less than the previous day, more than 25,000 spectators, many of them carrying huge golf umbrellas, braved the conditions.

Parking lots and fairway crossovers became mud bogs, while stands selling coffee, baked potatoes and steak sandwiches did a roaring trade.

"I'm amazed that anyone would want to come on a day like this. I don't think I would have done," Scott Simpson, the U.S. Open champion, said. "I guess they love their golf. Maybe they're used to playing in it."

Simpson also fell far back with an 82 that put him 15-over par, 21 strokes behind leader Paul Azinger.

"I cannot really say the crowd were an encouragement. Nothing could have been out there," Simpson said. "I was just trying to keep a sense of humor."

Mark O'Meara, who also shot 82, said he wished he were back home in San Diego, "sitting in my backyard in shorts."

"It was pretty brutal out there with the rain coming down sideways, your hands freezing and the ball wiggling when you're trying to tee it up," O'Meara said. "It was so hard to hold on to the club."

British amateur Ricky Willison, the day's first starter, caught the weather at its wildest and had the same problems.

"By the eighth hole I could not see how I could keep hold of the club," Willison said. "I had gone through four towels, all my gloves, and I was really worried the club would start flying out of my hands."

Even those with good scores said conditions were extremely difficult and club selection all-important.

"It was tough and called for a lot of guesswork," Sandy Lyle, the 1985 Open champion who shot 71, said. "You had to use irons to keep the ball down."

The rain had eased by the time Azinger teed up at the first in mid-afternoon.

Azinger, the leading money winner on the U.S. tour and playing in his first British Open, acknowledged he was lucky with the conditions as he shot par 71.

"It's the first time that I've sat in my room and felt sorry for the guys out on the course," he said. "I really pitied them. Some of them were torn apart when they came in."

At Turnberry last year, Norman took a big lead into the third round when, with rain lashing into his face, he managed a 74 to stay in front and went on to win the title on the last day.

At Muirfield, the Australian has had the worst of the weather for three successive rounds. He said the elements were stacked against him.

"It was a par-75 before I even walked to the first tee today," Norman said. "It was very brutal for seven or eight holes, just like Saturday at Turnberry."

More bad weather was forecast for Sunday.

Norman said he was too far back, even for a player with his fighting qualities, to clinch victory.

"If there was just one guy to catch, maybe I could do it," he said. "But five or six are not going to blow up at the same time."

Beamon Now Realizing His Feat

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Although Bob Beamon has held the world record in the long jump for 19 years, not until recently has he realized the enormity of his accomplishment.

"Only in the last couple of years has it dawned on me that I had done something special," Beamon said Friday at the U.S. Olympic Festival.

Going into the 1968 Olympics at Mexico City, Beamon had done nothing special, although he had shown world-record potential. His jump of 27 feet, 6 inches in the Olympic Trials was 1¼ inches further than the listed world record then shared by Ralph Boston of the United States and Igor Ter-Ovanesyan of the Soviet Union. But Beamon's effort wasn't acceptable for record purposes because it was wind-aided.

But even the Olympic Trials effort didn't prepare Beamon and the rest of the world for his 29-2½ jump at Mexico City.

Since Beamon's record performance, no one had reached past 28 feet until this year, when Robert Emmiyan of the Soviet Union leaped 29-1.

Until then, the second- and third-best marks belonged to Carl Lewis of the United States. Lewis, who has done 28-10¼ once indoors and once outdoors, is the jumper Beamon thinks has the best chance of surpassing his world record.

"Carl is the better and more consistent jumper of the two," Beamon said.

Beamon also likes the chances of Larry Myricks, the 1979 World Cup champion from the United States, who has gone well over 28 feet.

"Myricks has the most experience of all," Beamon said.

Beamon, 40, would like to see the record last at least until the 1988 Olympics at Seoul, South Korea, thus making it an even 20 years since he set it. He feels it would then be appropriate for someone to shatter the record in the Olympics, just as he did.

"The Olympics is the greatest spectacular of amateur sports," Beamon said. "I didn't go into the Olympics wanting to break the world record. I wanted the gold medal."

The accomplishment qualified Beamon for the Olympic Spirit Award. The award program, under the auspices of the U.S. Olympic Committee, honors athletes who have overcome adversity and demonstrated extraordinary performance, exceeding all expectations in the Olympic Games.

Fifty-one athletes and four teams have been nominated for the award from each Summer and Winter Olympics since 1968. An individual winner from each Olympiad and two teams will be announced in the fall.

Beamon grew up in a New York ghetto and at age 15 was sent to a school for incorrigibles. He spent two years there learning discipline and basic education.

Big Change For Craig Stadler

MUIRFIELD, Scotland (AP) — A good round of golf Sunday at the British Open could earn Craig Stadler as much as $120,000.

But win or lose, he'll be happy.

That's quite a change for Stadler, who won the Masters and a reputation as a win-at-all-cost competitor in the early 1980s.

"In 1982, possibly I would have had a different view of today," Stadler, who won the Masters that year, said Saturday after an even-par 71 left him at 4-under 212 for 54 holes.

But Stadler, a non-winner on the PGA Tour since capturing the 1984 Byron Nelson Classic, said he's not feeling any pressure.

"I can go out tomorrow and be close or win, and whether I am close or not I will try to play the same game," he said. "Nothing's going to bother me.

"If somebody plays btter than I do, fine. As long as I'm happy, then, OK. I would love to win. It's been a long time."

Stadler has slumped since since winning four games, including the Masters, in 1982.

But on the windswept moors of Muirfield, Stadler has re-established his putting. He shot consecutive 69s in the first two rounds and stayed even in the third with a three-birdie, three-bogey round that included a 20-foot putt for par on the first hole and a 30-foot birdie putt on the par-3 16th.

With 40 mph winds and chilling rain, Stadler called the round a "kind of survival" that he was glad to finish at even-par.

"I didn't play all that well. My driver was not good and I hit it into the rough five or six times, but I got away with it," Stadler said. "I had three good pars at No. 1, 4, and 10, and kind of hung in there.

"The key is I am putting well. I missed some today, but I made some. I've never had a good putting week over here. I've had more confidence all year with my putter, and I am confident in my game."

Stadler has been helped this week by a substitute caddie known only by his nickname, "Irish."

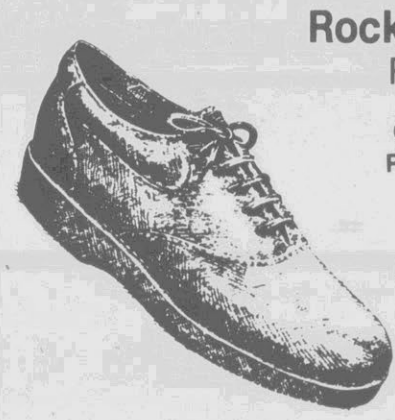

"He won't give his name," Stadler said. "I think he failed in the qualifying."

Stadler took on "Irish" when his usual American caddie called at the last minute and said he was unable to make the trip to Scotland.

With "Irish" sporting a scruffy beard and a broad-brimmed leather hat, the slim caddie and the rotund golfer make an interesting pair strolling down the fairway.

Also, so far, a successful one.

Hagler Searching For Identity In Wake Of Loss To Leonard

BOSTON (AP) — The flash and fast talk of boxing never fit Marvelous Marvin Hagler's style. He was a rock — solid and unshakeable.

Put him in a training camp; he does little but train. Put him in a ring; he does little but slug. He is a fighter. It is his trade. It is his identity.

In just three months, that identity, built over more than a decade of success, has been shaken. The rock is crumbling.

After 11 years of winning all his fights, 12 successful title defenses and 6½ years as middleweight champion, Hagler lost his crown to Sugar Ray Leonard in a split decision last April 6.

After seven years of marriage, he has separated from his wife.

After developing a clean image, he has been linked to alcohol and drug use, a report he has denied.

After everything the survivor of a Newark, N.J., ghetto has achieved — the success, the riches, the fame — he is still pursuing contentment.

"He took the loss pretty hard," Pat Petronelli, his co-manager and co-trainer, said. "The belt meant a lot to him, the championship. He wanted to retire with dignity and retire with the belt."

But he may never fight again.

If he does, acquaintances feel, it would only be in a rematch with Leonard, who has indicated he's not interested. If he doesn't, a brilliant career will have ended at age 34 on a sour note that will linger long after it was played.

"Marvin is the kind of guy who has tunnel vision and deals with one problem at a time," Bob Arum, his promoter, said. "The thing that concerns him now is his marital situation, and until that is resolved I don't think he'll think that much about boxing."

"They still love each other," Petronelli said. "This is the sad part of this whole situation."

Hagler spends a lot of time at his house in the tiny ski town of Bartlett, N.H., 150 miles north of Boston. He has no telephone. Petronelli said he calls a neighbor down the street if he wants to talk with Hagler.

"He doesn't want to be bothered," Petronelli said.

A court order resulting from an abuse petition by his wife Bertha bars Hagler from living at their home in Hanover, Mass., with their five children. The petition says he pushed her out of that house and threw a boulder at her car.

The marital rift, more than the loss to Leonard, accounts for his increased seclusion in Bartlett, says Morris Goldings, Hagler's attorney.

"He has gone through periods of withdrawal and noncommunicativeness after the big wins, too," Goldings said. "There's a letdown after any big fight, and I think that we now know there are (long-standing) domestic problems."

Those problems led him to drink more, but not to excess, Hagler said in an interview with WNEV-TV that was broadcast July 3, one day after it reported that he had abused alcohol and cocaine after losing to Leonard.

"After 17 years" of boxing, "when do you have a good time?" Hagler said in the interview. "I think I deserve it, but I'm not going to hurt myself."

George Gramstorff remembers the frequent visits Hagler and his family paid to his restaurant in Bartlett.

"He was always super with everybody," said Gramstorff, co-owner of The Scarecrow Pub. "A father and son came in, and he probably spent 20 minutes with the kid.

"Another time I remember there was a guy in a wheelchair, and Marvelous was talking with some people. My partner told him, 'There's a man over there in a wheelchair who'd love to meet you.' He spent about 15 minutes with the guy."

But since the fight, Gramstorff hasn't seen his famous customer.

"He's staying to himself a lot," Petronelli said. "I heard he was fishing up there. He's relaxing."

Because of the domestic problems, Goldings has seen Hagler a lot. They've talked about Hagler's family, business matters and a possible movie career.

"He's a very unique and thoughtful individual," Goldings said. "We talk about a lot of things. We drove by the Esplanade (alongside Boston's Charles River) together on Friday the third of July, and they were setting up the July 3 concert and we talked about the Boston Pops.

"He's not a single-dimensional guy."

His devotion to his craft only made it seem that way.

The Hagler the public knew was the no-nonsense, glowering brawler with the shaven skull and the small, loyal entourage. The hooded robe made him look more intimidating. In Hagler's mind, Leonard was the pretty boy with the carefully cultivated image and the horde of hangers-on.

"He's dedicated his life to boxing," Arum said. "You can accept defeat if you believe you've been beaten by a better man. Leonard, in Marvin's eyes, demonstrated nothing to show he's a better man."

Hagler began seeing Leonard as the fulfillment of his career more than six years before the fight.

White-Water Rafting Trip Can Be An Adventure

Outdoor News

WATERTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — A dusty green bus shudders to a halt outside a ramshackle former grain mill and disgorges 64 passengers.

Well, it might not be wilderness, but right here in the industrial heart of the city of Watertown is some of the finest whitewater rafting in the Northeast.

So says Adirondack River Outfitters, which is luring thousands of thrill-seekers to this city at the eastern end of Lake Ontario.

A few doubters pick their way down the cracked, weedy sidewalk to get a glimpse of what has drawn them here. As they step across a guardrail and through a tangle of brush, an amazing scene appears: far below, a violent river churning and frothing over ledges of white sandstone. Two kayaks dart and dive in the current like salmon striving toward spawning grounds, paddling upstream, tipping end-up, riding the chute between immense boulders.

This is the Black River, one of only four rivers in the Northeast with "adventure class" whitewater during the summer — when most rivers in this part of the country slow to a lazy pace that rafting outfitters call "family class." (The other adventure class rivers are the Penobscot and Kennebec in Maine and the Youghiogheny in Pennsylvania.)

Ron Smith of Adirondack River Outfitters discovered the recreational potential of the Black River just a few years ago when he was looking for something to do with all his expensive rafting gear during the summer.

In the early spring, traditional whitewater season in the Northeast when rivers run high, Smith works the upper Hudson River and the Moose. That's serious wilderness whitewater, popular with hardy souls who don neoprene and polypropylene and laugh in the face of frigid death.

Once the spring runoff ends, however, there is little for outfitters to do but take "family class" float trips down the Sacandaga and Salmon rivers.

The Black River offers something in between: a half-day trip down a seven-mile canyon, rife with rapids and waterfalls.

Last year, Adirondack River Outfitters and Pat Cunningham's Hudson River Rafting Co. took about 6,000 to 7,000 people down the Black River, Cunningham says. They expect 10,000 this year.

The dubious folks from Utica are issued paddles, lifejackets and crash helmets before they're herded to the riverbank for a lecture on how to "hit the deck," what to do if they fall overboard and other rafting protocol. Then they climb into eight rubber rafts, each carrying at least one licensed guide, and paddle past power lines and factories.

Civilization recedes and the river looms large and loud. The neophyte paddlers in Smith's boat holler in horror as their tiny craft swirls into rapids like a goldfish being flushed down a toilet.

They freeze, the boat bucking and spinning out of control until Smith jolts them back to action by bellowing orders: "Paddle hard! Dig! Dig! Dig!"

Like many Adirondack rivers, the Black is brown — not muddy, but a clear tea color, from tannins leached from the hemlocks along its banks.

The river folds the rafts in half, sucks them into deep black holes and sends up sparkling amber walls that crash upon the paddlers. Then the river calms down and spits them out into a placid pool where the rafters raise their paddles in triumphant cheer.

In slower sections, the rafts cluster together, and guides liven things up by telling stories and starting water fights. Kayaker Steve Uzdavinis darts from boat to boat telling jokes and showing off — doing Eskimo rolls and tip-ups, running rapids upside-down.

The boats float under bridges and past the ruins of old dams and mills. The rafters climb out above a new hydroelectric project and carry the boats to a place below the dam where the river hurtles into a canyon.

"It's just like Disneyland," someone shouts as the rafts float into a deep gorge with 100-foot walls rising straight up from the river. The limestone ledges are bedecked with white and yellow flowers, lacy ferns and hemlocks. On one side, waterfalls billow down like white veils; Smith says that's leakage from a canal channeling part of the river to hydroelectric generators.

The river slows and widens near the end of the trip and guides lash the rafts together, pass out cold beer and link up to a motorboat. A bus is waiting to take the wet and weary rafters back to Adirondack River Outfitters for a steak roast on the riverbank.

Fishing Report

By The Associated Press

North Carolina anglers beat the heat again this week by turning their attention to the nightime runs of spot and croaker and using the afternoon hours for sunbathing or cooling off in an air-conditioned room.

"Nobody is showing up during the afternoon anymore," said George Fokakis of Crystal Pier in Wrightsville. "Our crowds are big during the morning and evening hours."

Hollis Whitley of the Jolly Roger Pier at Topsail Island said the evening action has been worthwhile though.

"We've been catching spot, mullet and pompano every night," Whitley said. "The spots are really hitting well and everybody seems to be enjoying themselves going for them."

SWANSBORO

Major Phillips of Dudley's Marina said that early in the week fishermen were catching good amounts of Spanish mackerel close to the beach.

"There were also some scattered kings and the dolphin have moved in close," Phillips said.

Bottom fishermen have also landed some sea bass and snapper while Spanish are hitting good on both live bait and artificial lures.

HATTERAS

Fishermen at Pelican's Roost have fought sloppy weather the last few days with thunderstorms and high winds.

"We've been getting some 1-3 pound blue fish in the sound and small flounder and trout in the boats," Steve Hissey said. "We've also had a few nice pompano caught with soft shell sand fleas."

SOUTHPORT

"Those three are the hottest right now," Ratcliffe said, "but we've also had some sheephead, pompano and croaker."

"People are out there trying even though the weather has been so hot."

TOPSAIL ISLAND

Whitley reports good catches of spot, mullet and pompano along with a few flounder and some blues.

"We also had one 27-pound king caught on the 11th by Angelo DePaola of Topsail."

Whitley said that the flounder action from the pier has been slow but they have been pulling in Spanish mackerel every day.

CAROLINA BEACH

Spot have been hitting good off of the Carolina Beach Fishing Pier according to Joy Cash.

"Flounder and sheepshead have been pretty good the past few days," said Ms. Cash, "and we've caught eight kings this week, one was 33 pounds. Our crowds have been turning out mainly at night."

WRIGHTSVILLE BEACH

Crystal Pier anglers have had decent luck catching Spanish mackerel early in the morning and late in the evening.

"We've also had a few blues caught," Fokakis said. "Since the 11th we've caught five king mackerel with the largest being 20¾ pounds."

NAGS HEAD

"Everything's been decent for this time of year," said Al Swiger of the Nags Head Fishing Pier. "We've seen croaker, trout and flounder."

Swiger said that Northeast winds at about 10-15 mph and temperatures around 78 degrees have made for extremely pleasant fishing weather a full pier.

Goldsboro News-Argus Editor Eugene Price was recently named unanimously elected to a two-year term as chairman of the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, a 13-member organization responsible for managing the state's wildlife resources and setting and enforcing wildlife regulations.

Election of a new chairman and vice chairman came after a ceremony in which Gov. Jim Martin introduced his four new appointees to the commission, and state Appellate Court Judge Robert Orr adminstered their oaths of office.

Price, also vice president of the Goldsboro paper, has served as a commissioner for two years. Gov. Martin appointed Price in 1985 to represent wildlife District three, which consists of 11 counties.

Robert E. Barnhill, Jr., of Tarboro, a new appointee, was elected chairman. He is executive vice president of Barnhill Contracting Company and chairman of the board of the Barnhill Company.

Price, who joined the the newspaper staff as a reporter more than 30 years ago is an avid hunter and fisherman. He replaces Jerry W. Wright of Jarvisburg, whose six-year term expired June 30. Other new commissioners recently appointed include Robert Hester of Fairfield, Reed Allen Jr., of Lake Waccamaw and Howell Woltz of Advance. Their terms expire in 1993. Members appointed by Lt. Gov. Robert Jordan and House Speaker Linton Ramsey will be sworn in later.

Officers Save Lifes

Two North Carolina Wildlife enforcement officers saved two lifes in separate instances early this summer.

In May, Officer James A. Emerson of Lumberton, pulled a 10-year old child from the Lumber River. The child, who was unable to swim, had disappeared in 14 feet of water near a boat ramp when the officer came to the rescue.

In late June, Officer James C. Pope of Albemarle dove into waters of Lake Tillery and pulled to safety a man who had fallen off a raft about 50 yards from shore and was unable to swim.

Fishing Slow

A July heat wave has slowed fishing activity on many of North Carolina's inland waters.

Wililife officers in wildlife Districts 4,5,6, and 7 reported a noticeable drop in fishing activity. Officers in Districts 8 and 9 say the activity there is moderate.

Nest Discovered

For the first time in about 30 years, endangered peregrine falcons have a wild nest in North Carolina.

Both the male and the female peregrines were released in the last three years on Grandfather Mountain in an effort to restore this species to North Carolina.

Allen Boynton, nongame mountain project leader with the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, recently discovered that the peregrines had hatched one chick while monitoring a nest in the Pisgah National Forest.

When biologists went to band the chick, however, they discovered that the chick was dead. It had lived for about 21 days and died of unknown causes. The second egg, which never hatched, was found on the nest ledge.

Three days later, a foster chick from the Peregrine Fund was placed in the nest— a mossy area on a rock ledge, to hold the adults at that nesting site and give them experience in raising a chick.

After placing the chick in the nest, biologists moved to a spot half a mile away to see what would happen.

"The adults returned and flew around the nesting site, looking at the chick," Boynton said. "The chick had been fed by adult birds in Idaho when it was hatched, and it started begging for food when an adult peregrine would land on the ledge. After a couple of hours, the birds settled down. Several days later when I returned, I saw one of the adults feeding the chick."

In the late 1960's and early 1970's, the toxic chemical DDT caused the decline of the peregrine falcons from the East. The numbers of peregrines disapperaed from the eastern United States, because, unlike bald eagles, brown pelicans and osprey, the falcon population was not as origanally large.

This year, biologists released 17 young falcons in North Carolina moutain areas., in addtition to the foster chick. This brings the number of peregrine chicks released in North Carolina to 45 in four years.

Fox Hound Wins Award

Tar River Granny, owned by Kurt Hinchman and Jimm Coward of Tar River Kennels in Greenville, recently outscored 684 other fox houds to win first place in the Atlantic States One-Day Field Trial held in Pamlico, S.C.

Granny, whelped May 28, 1985, also placed first out of 342 entries at the Eastern North Carolina One-Day Hunt in Goldsboro this year.

Cards Look Like Team To Beat

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

There are signs the St. Louis Cardinals are getting ready to run away with the National League East, and it seems perfectly appropriate for this team of swifties.

"And we haven't even begun running yet," shortstop Ozzie Smith said.

While baseball reached the All-Star break with three pretty good pennant races, the Cardinals appear to be setting up a situation similar to last year in the NL East.

The difference: Last year, the NL East runaway team was the eventual World Series champion New York Mets. This year, they are also-rans behind the Cardinals, who were sitting on a comfortable nine-game bulge when play resumed Thursday.

"A lot of the success of a club has to do with its personality, and that's dictated by the manager," said pitcher Rick Sutcliffe of the Chicago Cubs, one of the Cards' pursuers. "Whitey Herzog is one of the best I've seen. He doesn't let injuries affect the club. He laughs at them and has quality people to fill in.

"When a team is on a roll, you can tell by its attitude. It's a feeling they have. The team on the field might not be as strong as the Cubs or the Mets, but their defense is underrated. What's the difference if you hit two doubles or stop two doubles? That's just as productive."

The Mets, 9½ games behind at the break, talk bravely about coming back in the second half. "I expect the Cardinals to slow down and us to pick up," Manager Davey Johnson said.

But even if the Mets pick up, St. Louis won't slow down. This team is constructed for speed, and after the Cardinals complete their current West Coast trip, they will play only five more games on grass. The rest of the schedule will be spent on artificial surfaces that cater to speedy teams like theirs.

"There's always room for improvement," Smith said. "We haven't run as well as we are capable of running. If we improve that, we'll make more things happen. You have to go out determined to do better tomorrow than you did today."

At the All-Star break, the Cards had stolen 126 bases, best in the majors but a dozen less than they had at the same point a year ago. The difference this year is the team is leading the league in batting at .283, compared to .236 last season when St. Louis was last in the league in hitting.

Much of the offensive difference can be traced to first baseman Jack Clark. Injuries limited him to a nonproductive 65 games a year ago and robbed the Cardinals of their only long-ball threat. Clark bounced back this season with 26 home runs and a major league leading 86 runs batted in when play paused for the All-Star Game.

"Anytime you take the No. 4 hitter out of the lineup and finish third the way we did last year, that's not bad," Smith said. "We could have been dead in the water, but the guys kept battling. Third was not a bad accomplishment, considering the situation."

The Cardinals had a creditable second half last season with a 43-29 record after the All-Star Game. The Mets were too far ahead to catch, but some positive seeds were planted and now they're being reaped.

"The attitude was great last year," Smith said. "It's just that whatever we did went wrong in the first half. The second half was better, and it carried over to spring training.

"We believed in each other. We proved we could win. We had the same nucleus as we did in 1985 (when they won the NL pennant). We are back to that level of work," Smith said.

"The difference between last year and this year is consistency and production," said center fielder Willie McGee, playing again at an All-Star level after an off-season.

"The key for us is continuing to hit the ball. It's not necessary to run, but if we do, that might be helpful at the end of the season."

The remarkable part of the Cardinals' success is that much of it has been accomplished with spare parts. The club traded for catcher Tony Pena, one of the best in the league, then lost him for six weeks with a broken thumb. Steve Lake and Tom Pagnozzi filled in capably.

DeShaw Inducted Into Hall Of Fame

Dr. Charles DeShaw of Greenville has been inducted into the Pop Warner Hall of Fame in Springville, N.Y.

The award was given during the 15th annual Pop Warner Hall of Fame Dinner sponsored by the Spring Athletic Scholarship Committee of the Springville-Griffith Institute Cnetral School District in New York.

Dr. DeShaw, originally from Malone, N.Y., was director of physical education at East Carolina University from 1949 to 1959. He coached and taught physical education at Griffith Institute beginning in 1929, completing his bachelor's and master's degrees at New York University and the University of Buffalo at the same time. In 1942, he began teaching and coaching in Fredonia, N.Y. and working on a doctorate degree at the University of Buffalo. He then taught at the University of California at Los Angeles and Montclair State University in New Jersey, before coming to Greenville.

From 1959 until his retirement in 1972, he was director of pysical education at Paterson State College in New Jersey.

He and his wife, Vivene, have spent their retirement years in Greenville. They have one daughter, Charlene Holloway, of Greenville and two grandsons.

The Pop Warner Hall of Fame is named for Glenn Scobey "Pop" Warner, a famous graduate of Springville Institute. Warner, who died in 1954, was one of the three winningest college and professional coaches of all time. He was one of the architects of the game as it is now played, having developed rules and equipment and plays for the sport. His name is used to identify youth football programs throughout the country.

Vivene DeShaw, like Warner, is a graduate of Springville. The DeShaws were unable to attend the Hall of Fame designation presentation, but they were represented by Mrs. DeShaw's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Chandler.

He's All-Business

Heavyweight champion Mike Tyson, preparing for a Aug. 1 title unification bout with Tony Tucker, is all business as he spars in preparation for the fight. Tyson's sparring pertners say he's been just as mean sparring as he is in a fight. One was sent to the hospital with bruised ribs and most have been knocked down at least once. (AP Laserphoto)

Sparring With Tyson A Tough Day's Work

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — James Broad was sweating profusely as he climbed out of the ring in the sweltering heat of a tiny downtown gym. After six minutes in the ring with heavyweight champion Mike Tyson, Broad was thankful his day's work was over.

Broad, a sometimes heavyweight contender, walked over to towel off as Tyson, who had barely broken a sweat, began sparring with the second of his four opponents that day.

"If I had his sparring for every fight I ever had, I don't think I could be touched," said Broad, a massive hunk of a fighter at 6-foot-4 and 245 pounds.

Back in the ring, Tyson had already knocked down his next sparring partner, Warren Thompson, with a short left hook.

"Nice punch," Thompson told Tyson, who snorted in response before going back to the business of pounding punches off Thompson's head.

There was no thermometer in Johnny Tocco's rundown gym just blocks away from the posh Las Vegas Hilton, where Tyson seeks to unify the heavyweight title Aug. 1 against Tony Tucker. There was no air conditioning, and it seemed almost as hot as the 106 degrees that registered outside.

A half-dozen fighters were hanging around in the gym. Some were waiting to spar with the undefeated champion, others were working out for other fights.

Over in a corner, Anthony Witherspoon was in high spirits. Tyson bruised his ribs while sparring earlier in the week, and Witherspoon would not work this day.

"It makes you freeze getting hit so hard like that," said Witherspoon, a 193-pound cruiserweight and the older brother of former heavyweight champion Tim Witherspoon. "I've never been hit so hard by someone. ..."

Witherspoon had visited the hospital the day before to get his ribs X-rayed. X-rays were negative, but Witherspoon was planning to wear a flak jacket in future sparring sessions to protect his upper body.

"This is going to be an adventure for me," said Witherspoon, who admitted to being "pretty nervous" before his first sparring session with Tyson. "I just hope to make it in one piece so I can fight on the undercard."

Tyson went eight rounds during the early afternoon sparring session, boxing two rounds apiece with four different sparring partners. It is a training routine that varies only occasionally.

"You get in there and it's war — war at the gym," said Oscar Holman, a Philadelphia heavyweight who mixed it up for Tyson's final two rounds on the weekday afternoon.

"It ain't no boxing, it's fighting," added Holman. "It's different fighting this guy. He's just too full of energy and too strong."

Holman could be excused as a paid shill who has to say the right things about the 21-year-old heavyweight champion. But after being knocked down by Tyson on several occasions and getting a rib fractured by a Tyson left hook, he talks from experience.

"You have to be a good fighter just to get into the ring with him," said Holman, a 28-year-old who claims a 13-7-1 record.

Unlike most fighters, almost all of Tyson's training for a fight revolves around the sparring. He spars 8-12 rounds a day, six days a week, alternating with the seven sparring partners he has in camp.

"We used to have problems getting people to spar with Mike," said Kevin Rooney, Tyson's trainer. "But now we pay them so well, they can't turn the money down."

Broad gets more than the rest of Tyson's sparring partners, earning $1,500 a week plus unspecified bonuses for a 3-4 week stint before the fight. But Broad had to threaten a walkout to get his pay raise of $500 a week. The others get up to $1,000 a week, and all are given rooms and food at the Hilton.

"Believe me, the money has to be good or I wouldn't be doing this," said Holman. "I'd get an eight-hour-a-day job rather than take this punishment."

Some of the sparring partners get fights on the undercard of the Tyson title fights. There they get a couple thousand dollars and the exposure they can't find in a club fight.

But there's also the challenge of fighting the heavyweight champion of the world, a fighter whose devastating power has led to 27 knockouts in 30 fights. No matter that both wear head gear and the gloves are 18-ounce pillows instead of the 10-ounce gloves used during a real fight. Surviving a few rounds and landing some punches can do wonders for a fighter's confidence.

"In the back of their mind, they're thinking that maybe someday they'll be able to fight Mike," Rooney said. "It's always there, the thought that they are the one who can do what no one else has been able to."

Broad, who claims Tyson has not knocked him down in training for his past three fights, says nothing is held back in their encounters.

"Every time I throw a punch I try to knock him out," Broad said.

As yet, Tyson has remained on his feet.

Mike Cox doubled in the winning run in the top of the eighth inning as the Pitt County Babe Ruth All-Stars topped Nash County, 5-4, in regional baseball playoff action.

With the score tied 4-4 heading into the eighth, Timmy Moore drew a walk. After one out, Abram Lang doubled to put men on second and third. Cox then doubled in Moore to break the tie.

Walter Gatlin then came on in relief of Jamie Brewington and struck out the side in the bottom of the inning to preserve the win. Up to that point, Brewington had tossed a four hitter.

Moore, Clark, Brewington, Lang and Cox had two hits apiece to lead Pitt, which advanced to play Northern Wayne Saturday night.

Pitt broke a scoreless tie in the fifth by pushing across four runs, keyed by a two-run double by Brewington and a two-run single by Gatlin.

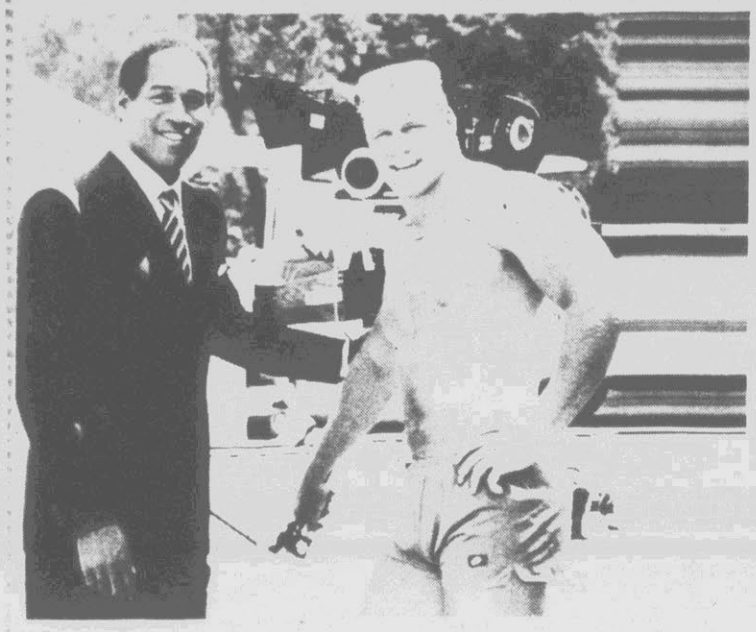

Nash, though, came back to tied it up with four runs in the bottom of the inning before Cox had his game-winning hit in the eighth.

NFL Negotiations Causing Problems

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

While the NFL Management Council and the Players Association negotiate over a new contract, they've also injected themselves into the individual negotiations between players and teams.

In fact, they're viewed as the major reason barely more than 10 percent of the 335 players drafted have been signed, about the same percentage in the week before training camps opened last year.

According to both agents and club officials, the Management Council's desire to slash rookie salaries 10-15 percent from last year and the Players Association's determination to fight the cuts have severely impeded signings.

Agents ready to sign a player for less than the union deems suitable are getting calls from the union; general managers get calls from the Management Council if they offer too much.

"The union is being heavy-handed with agents and the Management Council is being brutal on teams," one agent said. "Nobody's allowed to be creative or do anything on his own any more."

"Simple socialism," is how a management man puts it.

The key to the impasse appears to be Brian Bosworth, chosen in the supplemental draft by the Seattle Seahawks. If he signs soon, most of the early picks will probably follow in time to avoid missing much of training camp.

Bosworth now seems ready to play for Seattle, and is seeking $9 million over seven years. The Seahawks want him but have to structure the contract so his salary isn't higher than established stars like Curt Warner and Kenny Easley. About the best he can expect is an $800,000 average, including signing bonus.

Once Bosworth signs, four other linebacker dominoes may fall — Cornelius Bennett, taken second by Indianapolis; Mike Junkin (No. 5, Cleveland), Shane Conlan (No. 8, Buffalo) and Seattle's own Tony Woods (No. 18). Bennett's agent, Richard Woods, has made it clear he won't accept less than Bosworth, who would have been drafted below him in the regular draft.

Another key is quarterback Chris Miller, Atlanta's first-round pick and the 13th overall.

Vinny Testaverde, signed by Tampa Bay before the draft for $8.2 million over 6 years, is considered out of what has become a general wage-scale pattern — each player signed gets a little more than the guy picked below him. He's a Heisman Trophy winner, a No. 1 pick and a player Tampa Bay desperately needs to re-establish credibiity with its fans.

The other first-rounder signed, No. 14 D.J. Dozier by Minnesota, is also considered out of the pattern. The agents and union think Dozier took a beating and both sides rarely consider Minnesota a model for contracts.

Miller becomes important because the next quarterback taken after Testaverde, Kelly Stouffer (No. 6 by St. Louis), may have to settle for less than he wants from the low-paying Cardinals. The Cards figure to start the season with Neil Lomax anyway and can afford to wait.

But the Falcons, who in recent years have passed up Dan Marino, Boomer Esiason and Jim Everett, will take a beating in an already cynical local press if they don't get Miller into camp early to compete with David Archer and Turk Schonert for the No. 1 quarterback job. He could then set off a chain reaction for the middle and bottom of the first round.

HOBBY CORNER

Take it from Dallas Coach Tom Landry — Bo Jackson will not have an easy time when he joins the Los Angeles Raiders after his baseball duties end.

Landry, who had to work a late-signing Herschel Walker into his system last year, notes that Walker had a number of advantages over Jackson.

He had two years of professional experience in the USFL when he joined the Cowboys; he had a month of training camp to learn the Dallas system, and he had never switched sports — his muscles and his mind were geared for football.

And yet, Landry says, "I don't know that he was ever sure of everything last year." This despite leading the team in receptions with 76; a 4.9 yard rushing average, and Walker's "remarkable ability to concentrate."

What does that bode for Bo?

"It would seem to be a very difficult task," Landry says. "Physically, he hasn't trained his body to play football. He hasn't been trained to take the punishment. It's going to be a real awakening trying to get into pro football when we're at the height of our season."

NEGOTIATIONS UPDATE

Jack Donlan and the Management Council team got together with Gene Upshaw and the union in San Francisco last week and accomplishd little, although there seems to be little animosity. They're expected to return soon to Tampa, where they met two weeks ago. Chances are they'll still accomplish little.

"Things rarely seem to happen until you're working under the pressure of a deadline," Donlan has said on several occasions. In this case, the deadline is Aug. 31, but it's not written in stone — it's possible the season may start Sept. 13 without a contract.

Despite the automatic strike authorization vote, there doesn't seem to be strong strike sentiment among the rank-and-file players, and there probably won't be a strike unless the owners do something to antagonize the players.

Miller Reportedly Signed Contract

ATLANTA (AP) — A story that injuries would force wide receiver Alvin Miller to miss Notre Dame's 1987 football season was concocted to cover his ineligibility for signing with a sports agent, according to a published report.

The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution reported today that Notre Dame Athletic Director Gene Corrigan said Miller admitted to school officials he accepted cash and signed with Norby Walters and associate Lloyd Bloom.

Under NCAA rules, that admission made him ineligible to play his senior season.

Miller was Parade Magazine's high school football player of the year in 1982, but was hampered by injuries in college.

Corrigan said Friday the school is investigating rumors that other players with eligibility are involved.

"There's no way Alvin could come back and play even if he wanted to," Corrigan said. "It's a shame because he's one of the mostwonderful kids you'd ever want to meet. They really don't come any better.

"And it tells you the quality of the young man that he came to us with the decision to not come back. He realized the embarrassment that could have put the school through."

Corrigan said he did not feel compelled to announce Miller's ineligibility last month.

"Since he had stepped out, we saw no reason to drag him through anything," Corrigan said.

Miller could not be reached for comment, the papers said.

He is the fifth college athlete to lose his senior season for violating NCAA regulations by signing with Walters and Bloom, both of whom are targets of a federal grand jury investigation in Chicago.

Miller had caught six passes for 107 yards (a 17.8-yard average) last year when his season was cut short by a knee injury that required surgery. He was given a clean bill of health to play in 1987 as a fifth-year senior.

Firm Takes 'Quality' Approach To Boat Building

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Grady-White Boats Inc., a leading manufacturer of 19- to 25-foot fiberglass boats, has based its success on a prestigious approach to boat building and an aim for the discriminating buyer, according to the firm's chief executive officer.

"We've built a real high quality product and taken sort of a Mercedes, BMW approach to the boating business to address a ... top of the line merchandise with relatively limited production," said Eddie Smith Jr., chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Grady-White Boats.

Grady-White, which produced 2,300 boats in the 1986-87 model year, could build more vessels each year but has no plans to do so, Smith said.

"We could have gone to a second shift and third shift in assembly and literally doubled our sales last year, but there is no way, in my opinion, that we could have maintained the quality that brought us to where we are now," said Smith, 44, a Lexington native.

The boat manufacturer also places a premium on efficiency, according to Smith, who graduated from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 1965 with a bachelor's degree in industrial relations.

"The more efficient we can be, that allows us to put more and more quality into the product and better and better materials into the product without being priced completely out of the market," he said. "We put the best materials money can buy into the product and build the best boat we can build.

"If we don't do it more efficiently than our competitors, then when we get to the market place, we're going to be way above our competitors in price so efficiency is critical in that area, and we've been very, very good at that."

Smith credits Wiley Corbett, president of Grady-White, with implementing several successful innovations designed to improve efficiency, including computer terminals at each work station that tell employees how long each job should take.

"He instituted so many things in our plant that have helped us track our efficiency," Smith said. "I would say without a doubt we are one of the most efficiently run boat manufacturing plants in the country."

Approximately 400 people are employed at Grady-White's 200,000-square-foot plant on U.S. 264 bypass, according to Smith, who moved the company to its present facilities in 1973.

"The company started in an old tobacco warehouse downtown on Albermarle Avenue," said Smith, who purchased Grady-White in 1968 at the age of 26. "It was big. It had about 80,000 square feet in the tobacco warehouse and the working conditions were not great. It was bordered on four streets and there was obviously no room for expansion.

"We moved out here and completed this building in January 1973. At that time this was the most modern boat building plant in the world. It was the only air-conditioned boat assembly plant in the world at that time. We did an awful lot of things in this plant to try to attract better labor, and it certainly helped our efficiency and our quality and working conditions."

The company, which was founded in Greenville in 1959 by Glen Grady and Don White, gained a reputation for building quality wooden lapstrake boats over the years, according to Smith, who went to work in his father's business in Lexington after graduating, only to find he needed a challenge of his own.

"The thing they did right and continued to do through good times and bad was they continued to build absolutely top quality products," Smith said.

However, interest in wooden boats declined in the mid-1960s and fiberglass grew in popularity. At that time, Grady-White started its conversion from wooden boats to fiberglass. By 1968, the year Smith purchased the company, all Grady-Whites were being made by the hand layup fiberglass method.

Today, the company is so busy supplying boats to dealers, it has been unable to build up an inventory, according to Smith.

"Primarily, the boats are ordered by the dealers, some of which are already sold at retail to consumers and have the customers name on them," he said. "We have been so fortunate in the last several years (because) the demand for our product has been unsurpassed by anything in the industry.

"This past year, we put our dealers on an allotment which has never been done in the boating industry, I think. With that kind of demand, we have not built up any kind of inventory in terms of finished boats."

Even boats built during winter months will be sold, Smith said.

"In years past during the winter months, we would build boats that were not built to order, that were not sold, and we could fill the warehouse up," he said. "Then we would get orders for those boats from the dealers in January, February and March and along in there getting ready for the spring.

"In recent years, we've done so well, the demand has been just greater than our ability to build. Everything literally is being built to order."

Grady-White supplies dealers in a variety of major markets, according to Smith, who said the firm also supplies dealers in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Bermuda.

"The East Coast from Maine to Miami is our primary market along with the Gulf Coast from Miami all the way to Corpus Christi (Texas)," Smith said. "Obviously, we look at coastal use because (the boats) are made for rough water, and they're made to hold up in a salt water environment.

"Our secondary markets are the Midwest, the Great Lakes, and on the West Coast and more secondary markets abroad. We don't do an awful lot of exporting. It depends on the strength of the dollar. Some years we do a lot, some years not so much."

The Grady-White boats, which range in price from $11,000 to $55,000, are designed with a specific boater in mind.

"We're aiming at the up-scale customer — the customer that looks for quality merchandise, that is concerned about performance quality, design and is concerned about resale value," he said. "It's also the customer that is interested in rough water use.

"Obviously it would be overkill to buy a Grady-White to use on a city lake in Wilson. We're looking for the customer that is going to be using the boat in rough water in a coastal environment and is interested in safety."

The boats are also geared toward the family man.

"Our line is definitely slanted toward the family fisherman, the guy that's serious about fishing but would probably include his wife and kids," he said. "We envision our boats as being super fishing boats because we're fisherman, and we've designed the boats with all the fishing features including the built-in ice boxes to cool fish, the bait wells, the rod holders, rod storage and tackle drawers."

Despite all the fishing conveniences, some people purchase the boats for different reasons, Smith said.

"They're very well thought out fishing boats, but a lot of people buy our boats they say because they're high quality, safe, good performing boats that they know will have good resale value, and they're really not that into fishing," he said. "That was somewhat of a surprise to me."

Meanwhile, Smith said people are surprised when they learn all Grady-White boats are manufactured at the Greenville facility.

"Most people don't really realize what's going on out here," he said. "We are literally one of the leading fiberglass boat manufacturers in the country and especially in our segment of the market. A lot of people don't realize this is Grady-White, period.

"People are forever coming here, and they know Grady-White is known throughout the country and has a good reputation. They see them in ... every major boat show across the country, and they say 'well, where are your other plants, where else do you make Grady-White boats.' Of course, this is it."

Despite making a success of a company he purchased at the age of 26, Smith isn't one to brag about his accomplishments.

"The key to Grady White's success has not been anything I've done," he said. "Obviously, what can you know when you come in at my age. The best thing you can even hope to do is to surround yourself with good people. The people that work at Grady-White and the managers of Grady-White are the people that are responsible for our success."

The company's employees also have a special attitude, according to Smith, who has served as chairman of the National Marine Manufacturers Association.

"There's a tremendous sense of pride and accomplishment in what these people are doing," said. "It's magic. I go to other boat plants, and I just don't see that. That's the key to our success."

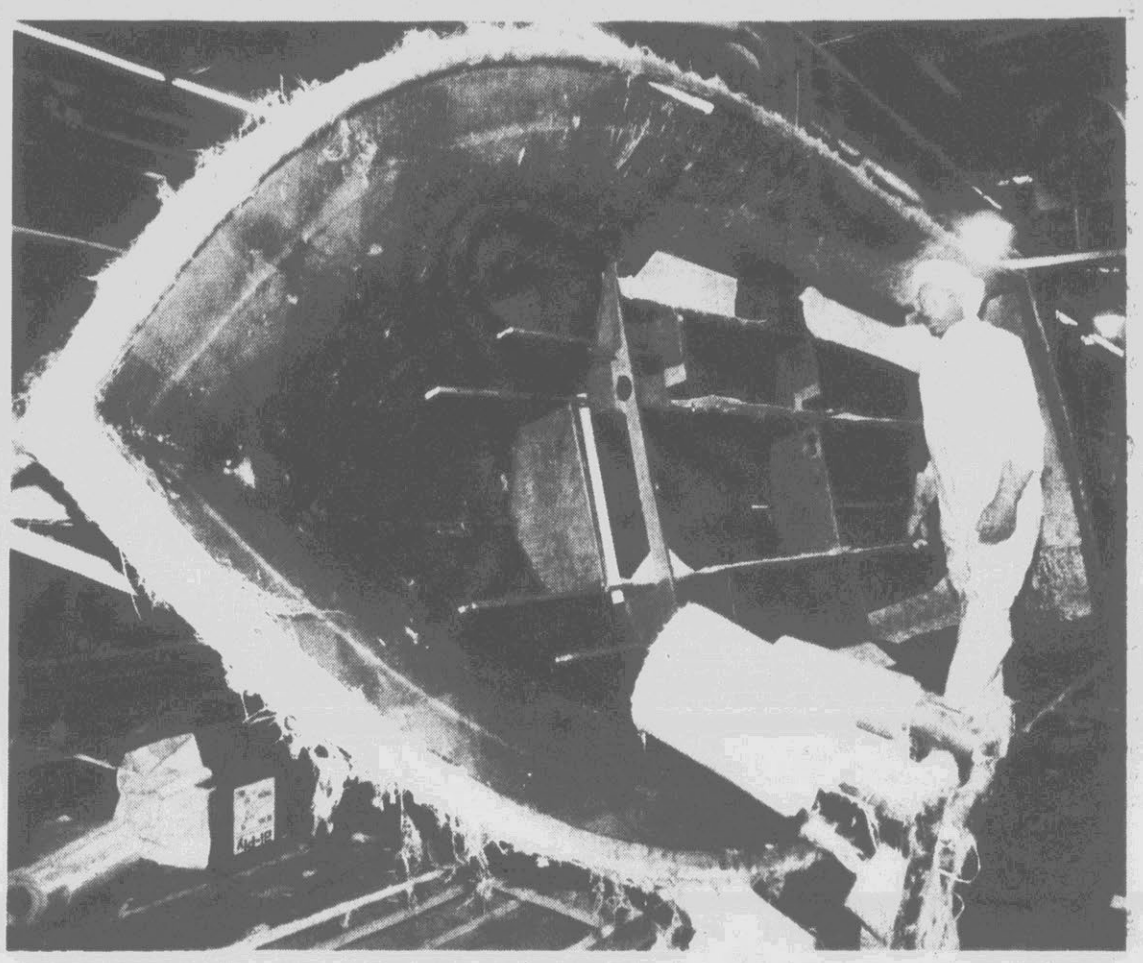

Furthermore, Grady-White has a strong work force to draw from, Smith said.

"Greenville provides a good labor market of people with good work ethic, people that grew up with a rural background," he said. "Many of them worked on their family's farms, and they appreciate the result of good, hard, honest work. That's a real credit to Greenville."

Eastern North Carolina provides a sound location for a boat manufacturer, according to Smith.

"Greenville is so well situated geographically for us," he said. "Our product is large and relatively hard to transport. We are so well positioned to serve the northern market, the southern market and the southwest market. You just couldn't beat that.

"You're going to see more and more boat manufacturers attracted to North Carolina. They have been in recent years. North Carolina is one of the leading boat building states in the nation, and that's only going to grow because of the work ethic and the geographic position."

Commuter To Add Two New Aircraft

CCAir, the Charlotte-based commuter airlines, has announced that it will add two Shorts aircraft to its fleet with an option to buy three more.

CCAir will be the first United States carrier to operate the Shorts 360-300, which was introduced in March.

The new aircraft features a new six-blade composite propeller, the Pratt and Whitney PT6A-67R engine and aerodynamic modifications designed to improve the speed and range over previous models, according to airline officials.

The commuter airline operates five Shorts 360s which provide one-third of its seats.

"The 360 has been as important a factor as any other in the significant growth of CCAir in recent years," said Roy Hagerty, CCAir president. "We look forward to these improved aircraft and the additional operating capability they will afford us."

The Piedmont Commuter serves the Pitt-Greenville Airport with five daily departures to Charlotte, Piedmont's largest hub city with 211 daily departures, and five daily departures to Raleigh-Durham Airport.

Included in net income for the second quarter of 1987 were $12.4 million, or 16 cents per share, of after-tax gains on the sale of investment securites. The total compared to after-tax gains of $9.8 million, or 13 cents per share, in the second quarter of 1986.

Average loans and leases for the second quarter rose 15 percent over the same quarter last year, led by strong increases in commercial and consumer loans. Total loan and lease levels stood at $16.6 billion on June 30.

Hugh McColl, NCNB chairman, attributed earnings growth to higher net interest income, due primarily to strong loan growth, growth in other operating income and careful control of operating expenses, partially offset by higher provision expense.

Experiences Develop Leadership

ONE, READY TO CLIMB — Bob Wendling gives this group of Legislators School students final instructions before sending them up the "Tall Ships" portion of the ropes course. Each student was to climb rope netting to a platform approximately 40 feet high, cross to another on a thin wire, and then hang parallel to the ground from a wooden beam while connected to a safety wire. (Reflector Photos by Cliff Hollis.)

TWO, ON THE WAY UP — Legislators School students watch and listen as Bob Wendling gives instructions on his way up the "Tall Ships" portion of the ropes course. Wendling is demonstrating the proper way to safely climb the rope netting.

By CLAY DEANHARDT
Reflector Staff Writer

"You can do it." Dressed in a red shirt, blue jeans and a hard-hat, Bob Wendling was sitting high atop a platform in the trees encouraging a junior high student to do the sometimes seemingly impossible. "Come on Ryan — you can do it!"

Ryan Terry at that particular moment was also perched high in the trees — on a log between two of them, himself attached by climbing gear to a cable above the log. Wendling was asking him to lean back, extend his legs until almost parallel with the ground and then let go of his life support cord with his hands.

Terry is participating in the second three-week session of Legislators School, a summer program at East Carolina University. That day his class on the ropes course was designed to build confidence and leadership by creating an atmosphere where students have to reach beyond what they feel are their limits to accomplish a goal.

The school is designed with the same principle in mind. According to Katie Tully, assistant director of the school this year, Legislators School is the result of efforts by Rep. Howard Chapin, D-Beaufort, and Charles Coble of the East Carolina University School of Education to create an experiencial school for students with recognized leadership potential.

Funded by the Legislature every two years, the school lasts for two three-week sessions. The first, for high school students, ended on July 10. The second, for junior high students, began on Monday.

The student body here is made of 150 students from 51 eastern North Carolina counties (Western Carolina University serves as base for the western part of the state). Up to two students can be nominated from each school in the area, then a computer picks a core of students racially balanced with respect to the nominations, Ms. Tully said.

Billy Stinson, director of programming, said the program was aimed at the segment of the student population that appears left out of special programming. "The program itself was designed for a target group of individuals that were identified as being high potential students. My pleasure with working with the program is it affects the group not identified as gifted and talented or under achievers but the group of normal students that we all fall into. There are very few programs for those students."

"They (the legislators) feel those kids would come to a program like this and discover something about themselves so that they could go back to their community and school and be a leader — be sensitive to those things that make good leaders," Stinson said.

He added that the program was designed to select leaders for each exercise. Students are forced to take a leadership role often during the three weeks. "Whether they think of themselves as leaders or not, they are given the role and they become a leader because they are put in these roles," he said.

Ms. Tully said the emphasis on experience has allowed flexibility in the curriculum. "We try not to have a typical classroom situation," she said. Later she said, "We feel they get enough reading, writing and arithmetic back in the school. We don't need classes here that mimic those areas."

Students rotate through a series of eight seminar days, and are in class six days a week. Seminar topics include classes in communication, wellness, thinking skills, Pamlico River study, futures concepts, environmental awareness, audio-visual production and the ropes course.

In addition, Tully said, students take a three-day trip to one of several area locations, including Ocracoke, Hanging Rock and Umstead State Park. They also do a skit their final week. That's a five to 10 minute dramatic presentation of something they have an interest in, Tully said. She said topics covered by the high school students included teen suicide, women in the future, lifestyles in 2020 and art through the ages.

Dr. Patricia Anderson, the curriculum director, teaches the communications class. On Wednesday afternoon, her students were busy learning about the importance of different methods of communication. Her class was divided into three groups.

One group was conducting interviews with adults from the community. Another was developing a commercial to advertise the Legislators School, and the last group was creating a Legislators School newspaper, detailing the days events.

When the students finished, they had to present their projects to the group. Each described what they had done, and the commercial groups performed what they designed, complete with props. The young newspaper editors even wrote an advice column for their readers. The problem? What to do about your boyfriend when you're going to be gone for three weeks.

Ryan Williams, 13, of Greenville was working in one of the commercial groups. He said classes were fun, and not as boring as in real school. He said the course on thinking had been his favorite so far. "It's fun, and we have a good teacher," he said.

At the Greenville Teen Center, a group of program participants had been painting on a mural all that morning. The mural, which stretches across 64 feet of wall and is four feet tall, is a service project the school is doing for the city. When it is finished, it will be lifted 2 feet and will remain in the teen center for everyone to see.

It was designed by Stinson, who said he used a computer to help him. Each panel represents another step in the journey through the adolescent years, Stinson said, beginning with a student reflecting on problems and dealing with rejection.

THREE, CAN DO — After some encouragement, Ryan Terry, 13, of Stovall lets go with his hands, trusting his weight to a strap, two buckles and a thin wire as he hangs about 40 feet above his friends on the ground. Terry was participating in the ropes course as part of his Legislators School experience.

Holiday Cheer Is Welcome All Year At Nursing Home

DEAR ABBY: I hope you will print the enclosed piece in your column. Perhaps someone will read it and realize that people in nursing homes need company more than only once a year during holiday time. I am not in a nursing home, but one day I may be. — MRS. CHRISTIAN, BELTSVILLE, MD.

COME VISIT

You say that you can't do anything. Can you read? Good. Read to me. My eyes aren't what they used to be.

Can you write? Good. Write a letter or a card for me. My hands are shaky.

Can you sing? Good. Help me with the words and I'll sing along.

Can you tell me about your job? I was a nurse once, myself.

Can you listen? Wonderful. I'm starved for conversation.

Can you make a sponge cake or zucchini bread or angel biscuits or fudge? They aren't on the nursing home menu, but I remember how good they were and I would like to taste them again.

Do you play checkers or dominoes or rummy? Fine, so do I. But there is never anyone who has the time. They are understaffed around here, you know.

Do you play the violin or the flute or the piano? My hearing is poor but I can hear any kind of music. Even if I fall asleep, you'll know I enjoyed it.

Once we were somebodies, just like you. We were farmers and farmers' wives, teachers, nurses, beauticians, stockbrokers, electricians, bankers and sheriffs, and maybe a few outlaws, too. We're not all senile — just old and needing more attention than our families can give us. This home, whatever its name, is "home" to us, and you're an invited guest.

Please come. The welcome mat is always out — not just on Thanksgiving.

I hope you will keep this and read it again in January, February, and every other month of the year. We'll still be here and our needs will be the same. — AUTHOR UNKNOWN

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I need a family matter settled fast. Yesterday I went to my in-laws wearing a fairly expensive brand of perfume. I might add, I have worn it over there several times in the past. I do not overdo it. I just spray enough on to give off a nice fragrance.

My father-in-law walked up to me and said, "Please do me a small favor and change your brand of perfume; I had to go outside to keep from choking."

Abby, I was hurt beyond words. Should I quit wearing that brand around him, or just stay away and tell him why, if I am asked? Nobody else has ever complained about my perfume. — HURT AND INSULTED

DEAR HURT: Perhaps your father-in-law has an allergy to that fragrance. It's also possible that you use more than you should. Try another brand. Don't be hurt. He may have done you a favor.

DEAR ABBY: The letter in regards to house vs. home reminded me of a poem I learned many years ago:

"You rent this home?"
She asked, amazed.
"The place looks so contented!"

"The home is mine,"
I proudly said,
"It's just the house That's rented."

— JEAN TAYLOR, ORANGEBURG, S.C.

IT'S A FAT MYTH

NEW YORK (AP) — The belief that exercise will change fat to muscle is a myth, according to the Reebok Aerobic Information Bureau.

Dr. Peter Francis, associate professor of physical education at San Diego State University, says: "Fat and muscle are two entirely different substances. Fat cannot change to muscle and muscle cannot change to fat. If a person with nicely developed muscle tissue stops exercising the muscle itself will become smaller (atrophy) from lack of use."

The bureau notes that if you stop exercising but maintain the same eating habits, you're likely to gain body fat. On the other hand, a person with a high level of body fat who begins an exercise program and proper eating habits, will lose body fat and gain muscle tissue.

Experiences...

Each day from 9 a.m. to noon, Stinson brings another group out to paint on the mural. Before it is finished, 300 students will have painted at least a square-foot section, leaving his or her mark in Greenville. Stinson said the project was designed for everybody to have success at painting it, and that so far that had been the case.

High up in the trees, while Ms. Anderson's class and Stinson's artists are on their lunch break, Terry has finally let go of the cord. As he hangs there nervously for a few seconds, his friends cheer him on from far below.

Two days earlier, Ms. Tully had commented on what Terry was feeling when he let go of that cord. "I think they are amazed at their own strengths and discoveries about the cooperativeness of other students," she said. "Most students upon leaving are tremendously overwhelmed at how bonded the group is."

Stinson expounded on that theme.

"One of the very, very important things that I have seen happen is students coming to the program with a very low self concept — with what we are able to offer them, they become very confident, collected individuals.

"To see those students discovering themselves, to have the confidence in themselves to say 'I can do this,' is far more important to me than to get some academic book knowledge."

Talking Is Difficult, Pick Time

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

In case you haven't noticed, communication between child and parent is difficult. Experts say this is because we don't spend enough time talking with one another and sharing what we feel. When is the perfect time for these rap sessions? I guess it depends on whom you talk to.

As a parent, I can tell you my kids always want to talk when I am on the phone. A child will place himself squarely in front of my face and whisper, "I have decided to go to a private college and take you and Dad up on your offer to take a second mortgage on the house. I'm off to mail my acceptance. Want anything while I'm out?"

Or worse, they will stand there and make signals. When they grasp themselves around the throat and their tongue swells and turns blue, this translates to there are no soft drinks in the house or they've eaten an unidentified leftover. Blowing you a kiss could mean a show of affection or they're thanking you for the bank card they just took out of your purse on their way out.

I have never gone to the bathroom in my life that there was not a voice on the other side of the door interrupting my tranquillity with some earthshaking question like, "Are you saving the bananas for anything?" or "Could you slide my Rolling Stone magazine under the door?" It's like a confessional that flushes and you're a captive audience.

A kid who will have absolutely nothing to say to you for 15 years will go to a college an 80-cents-a-minute toll charge away, and suddenly his mouth turns into a miniseries. He calls to know what time it is there, what you're doing, what the weather is like, if anyone has called for him and the recipe for that wonderful ice water you made when he was home.

And if you really want to talk closeness, you should clock a child's mouth on New Year's Day. To many parents, it's a day that gives new meaning to the vows of silence, but to a child, it's a day to take advantage of you as you lie on the couch with the blinds pulled by telling you how he feels about life.

This closeness is equaled only by parents who are going out the door to catch a plane for a vacation. As the luggage is being jammed into the trunk, kids rush to tell you they are having a few people over for a small party ... nothing major ... their teacher called, but you were busy and they didn't want to bother you with another phone call, and they got a part-time job delivering pizzas and they have to use your car, but you can talk when you get home.

Kids say parents only want to talk at 2 a.m. when they're just coming in and are ready to fall into bed, or when they're watching something important on MTV. If they want their side told, let 'em get their own column.

Wedding Vows Said At High Noon

SALISBURY — Tobi Rachelle Ferguson of Salisbury became the bride of Ashley Reid Ferrell of New Bern Saturday at noon in the Sacred Heart Catholic Church.

The Rev. Thomas Clement conducted the double ring ceremony. Wedding music was presented by organist Louise Mussleman and soloists John Brincefield, Debbie Phelps and Ashley Ferrell.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Lee Ferguson of Route 8, Salisbury. She is a senior at East Carolina University and is a staff writer with "The East Carolinian."

The bridegroom is a graduate of ECU and is a staff accountant for Hamlin and Murdock CPAs of Morehead City. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Edwin Ferrell Sr. of Fayetteville.

The bride was escorted by her father. She wore a long white organza gown embellished with beaded lace and a cascade of ruffles forming a cathedral train. A bustle with a large white satin bow accented the dropped fitted waist above the train. She wore beaded lace gauntlets and a crystal tiara to which was attached a floor length veil of illusion. She carried a bouquet of white roses, lilies and purple statice.

Jayme Ferguson of Salisbury, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Tonja Brooks of Wilson, Melanie Robinson and Suzanne Liles, both of Greenville, Michele Goodnight and Paige Miller, both of Salisbury, and Nancy Carr Stainback of Warrenton.

The attendants each wore a purple glimmer lame gown featuring large puffed sleeves, a semi-fitted bodice with a dropped waistline and a plunging back neckline. The long skirt was accented with a back bow. The maid of honor carried three white long-stemmed roses with purple ribbons.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Jeffrey Ferrell of Farmington Hills, Mich., and Dr. Kenneth E. Ferrell Jr. of Columbia, both brothers of the bridegroom; Robert Still of Raleigh; Alan Dickens of Greenville; Greg Fidler of Charlotte; Tommy Michaelson of Wilson, and Bobby Nichols of Hubert.

A sit-down dinner given by the parents of the bride was held in the private dining room of the Western Steer Restaurant following the ceremony.

A bridesemaids luncheon was held at Bonapartes in Salisbury. Several bridal showers and a co-ed shower honored the couple.

Products Go On Display

PHILADELPHIA — Arts and crafts products by North Carolina women go on display today in Philadelphia at the International House on the campus of the University of Pennsylvania.

The Office of Women in Economic Development in the governor's office is sponsoring the exhibit in connection with the International Women's Conference and Marketplace, today through Thursday.

Nearly 2,000 women from around the world are expected to attend. They will have an opportunity to display and market products and to develop trade relationships. They will also attend seminars on many topics, including how to participate in international trade and marketing.

A coalition of women artists has compiled the exhibit to include only work by artists who have received national or international awards. The products range from forged metal, glass and pottery to jewelry and fabric.

Hermes Furthers Success Of Company

By Betty Goodwin
L.A.Times-Washington Post News Service

TOKYO — Jean-Louis Dumas-Hermes looked away from the duck-liver pate, whipped out his Mont-Blanc pen and started drawing diagrams again.

"Business doubled in three years, but we're still halfway from Rolex and Rolex only makes watches. We made one billion francs this year (roughly $150 million), but it's still one month of IBM — so what!"

He can accomplish just as much hosting a party in an ancient Japanese teahouse or sipping Singapore Slings at the Long Bar in Raffles Hotel as he can sitting in his office above the Faubourg Saint Honore in Paris, quietly churning out the expensive hand-stitched leather products for which his company is famous.

It is the year of Hermes' 150th anniversary, and already Dumas-Hermes has masterminded an outrageously ambitious fireworks show form a launching pad on the Seine in Paris. And now, it is the "Earth tour," for which he whisked half a dozen flabbergasted business journalists from Paris for two days of non-stop parties in Los Angeles and more of the same in Tokyo and Singapore for the sole purpose of "showing our vitality. If we look to you old," he says, "we're finished."

Perhaps his most shocking gesture, however, was the unveiling here of a futuristic line of luggage, made of glass-like, epoxy-glazed carbon fiber, the same material used on Formula I race-car bodies and the nose of the European space shuttle Hermes (no relation).

As 150 Japanese reporters looked on in stunned silence, the first two such items, a standard attache case and a slightly larger overnight case, were launched recently with a "Star Wars"-like light show, pulsating music and artificial fog.

For Dumas-Hermes, it was the moment when Hermes finallywent hightech.

Tantalized with the future but devoted to the past, the 49-year-old executive sees the Espace collection as one of the vehicles that will transport his company into the 21st Century, and not because the products (which, in true Hermes style, are lined in lush, caramel-color leather) counterparts, selling at about $3,000 apiece.

Dumas-Hermes foresees the day when leather may eventually outprice itself — even at Hermes, where $2,000 handbags are the norm.

"None of us is tempted to reduce the quality because of a possible price resistance, and I'll fight to the very last minute to see that leather should exist," he says in his usual rapid-fire delivery. But he adds that it would be "foolish" not to consider the day when leather is too precious to use.

When he is not ruminating about designs for printed-silk scarfs or new handbags, the relentlessly energetic Dumas-Hermes is airborne — collecting socks, toothbrushes and whatever other perks of first-class travel there are tocollect — en route to one of the company's 200 worldwide retail outlets. This often means he is somewhere in the Orient, Hermes' fastest growing region.

In Japan alone, there are 41 Hermes shops with two more on the way. All totaled, between 20 percent and 25 percent of the company's sales are made to Japanese customers, be it here, Paris or Beverly Hills, Calif. The phenomenon is explained in part by the strong yen and the ongoing interest by the Japanese in European products.

In the nine years since his cousins voted him into the head office, the aggressive and growth-oriented Dumas-Hermes has shaken up the staid faimly business, launching a stylish advertising campaign, learning to court the press and hiring young, knowledgeable managers from outside the family to head each of the company's divisions.

Describing his approach as "multilocal," he doesn't believe so much in shipping products off to distant locales as he does in building up strong business structures in different geographical markets where he makes a point of learning about the ways of the people.

In Los Angeles, for example, where his whirlwind promotional tour kicked off with a dinner at the home of entertainer Sammy Davis, Jr., Dumas-Hermes was less concerned with meeting the local Who's Who, such as actress Lucille Ball and oil magnate Marvin Davis, than with absorbing the environment.

"There's an extraordinary vegetation smell," he noted at one point in the evening,"and a certain degree of humidity.

"This party to me is so California, the mixture, the way people dress. There is a majesty in this tent," he said glancing upward. "I like it. In Paris it would be formal, everyone would put a mask on.

"One of my key points is: Let's be different. I am just the opposite of some luxury names who try to make a puppet out of you saying: 'Follow me and you'll be the perfect aristocratic WASP,' 'Follow me and you'll be the perfect Italian count.' Hermes is a tool for better living, for making you be more yourself. Hermes is at the service of the customers."

Not immune to grand statements, Dumas-Hermes is, after all, a member of an exclusive club of venerable French companies with long and impressive histories.

Hermes is older than the jewelry concern Van Cleef & Arpels (founded in 1906), but younger than the fur house Revillon (1723). And unlike one competitor, the luggage manufacturer Louis Vuitton (1854), which just announced its merger with the champagne-and-cognac group Moet-Hennessy, Hermes remains a family business.

It began in 1837 when Thierry Hermes opened his own workroom making harnesses for the carriage trade. When his son, Emile Charles, joined him in 1870, they added saddles to their inventory, and the company moved to its current address at 24 Faubourg Saint Honore. When the automobile arrived, the next generation realized that its survival depended on developing new uses for leather, thus the birt of handbags made with saddler's stitching. Eventually, jewelry, perfumes and printed silk scarfs and ties followed.

Dumas-Hermes, great-great-grandson of Thierry, has introduced even more products. Aside from the futuristic carbon-fiber luggage, there is a new faience collection, incorporating the classical Provencal techniques of pottery making. And recently, he reintroduced Eau D'Hermes, a unisex scent created in the '50s by famed perfumer Edmond Roudnitska.

Use Good Judgement In Hot Weather

Use electric fans to draw cool air into the house at night and to circulate the air during the day. Running an electric fan for 10 hours costs only a nickel.

Keep lights on low or off. They add heat and also cost more money.

Homemaker's Haven

Close off "hot areas" such as the kitchen, laundry and water heater. Rooms stay cooler and drier when the doors to these spots are closed.

To draw air into your home, the electric fan should be placed in a window facing the cool, shady side of the house.

At night, open the downstairs windows from the bottom and the upstairs windows from the top.

If your home is air conditioned, close the fireplace damper to keep the cool air from escaping.

Avoid alcohol on very hot days. It tends to make the body more prone to heat illness.

Older people need to watch extremes in the weather. Hot weather can be dangerous to the elderly, those with heart diseases, diabetes or those who've suffered a stroke. The National Institute on Aging makes the following suggestions:

Avoid vigorous physical activity.

Drink plenty of water and juices.

Be extra careful if you are on medication; some drugs make you more vulnerable to heat — ask your doctor.

Take lukewarm showers or baths and air dry.

Stay in cool surroundings whenever possible. Try a shopping mall, public library or other public area if you don't have air conditioning.

Consumer Questions

"How much does it cost to operate the cleaning cycle on a self-clean oven?" Using the self-cleaning cycle does not require as much energy or cost as people think. It uses five to seven kilowatt-hours of electricity depending on the length of the cycle.

Using the national average rate of 7.9 cents per kwh, a self-clean cycle costs approximately 39 to 35 cents. Based on the Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers (AHAM) average of 11 cleaning cycles per year, the yearly cost would be under $6.05 — less than the cost of three cans of most commercial oven cleaners.

"Recently I've noticed the gas burners on my range do not light as quickly as they used to. What might be causing this?" According to AHAM, this is most likely due to the gas ports or holes being clogged on your gas burners. To check this, light the burner in question (with a match if necessary). Visually check to make sure every port around the top of the burner and down the side near the flash tube is open. Any clogged ports should be cleaned with a straight pin. Do not use a wooden toothpick as it may break off and clog the port. Also, be sure not to enlarge or distort the ports in any way.

To prevent clogging, clean the burners frequently with warm, soapy water. Remove stubborn oil by scouring with a nonabrasive plastic scouring pad and cleanser. Since it is necessary to scrub burned-on soil, the surface may become dulled. Also, be sure to thoroughly rinse the burners after cleaning to avoid clogging the ports with cleanser.

Since it is important the burner and flash tube be thoroughly dry before use, you may dry the burners in the oven on the warm setting.

Raising the setting on your home air conditioner from 72 to 78 degrees can save as much as a third of the cost to run the unit.

International Team Works To Save Egyptian Tomb

SAVIORS OF A TOMB — Italian conservators work to save decaying wall murals in the 1,200-year-old tomb of Nefertari, favorite wife of Pharaoh Ramses II. The Egyptian archeaological organization declared that the year-long rescue project has saved one of Egypt's finest ancient burial places. VALLEY OF THE QUEENS, Egypt (AP) — An international team of scientists has won the first round in an effort to save one of Egypt's great treasures, the decaying tomb of Ramses II's beautiful and powerful wife Nefertari.

The condition of the 3,200-year-old tomb was so precarious that tourists have been banned for much of this century.

Egyptologist Ernesto Schiaparelli of Italy discovered the tomb in 1904, its seven chambers looted by grave-robbers but its murals still finer than those of any other of the 70 burial sites in southern Egypt's Valley of the Queens near Luxor.

Some of its brilliantly colored paintings, which depict the life and pleasures of Nefertari, are in superb condition. About half, however, suffer from flaking paint, buckling walls and falling plaster.

The goals of the almost-completed, year-long salvage effort were to locate the sources of salt and water erosion, to repair the most seriously threatened paintings and to determine how to protect the tomb in the future.

"Nefertari's tomb is one of the great pieces of history: (It) rivals the Sistine Chapel, the Taj Mahal and Abu Simbel," said Dr. Ahmed Kadry, chairman of the Egyptian Antiquities Organization.

An Italianconservation team went to work last spring, and Kadry said its work has made it possible to say for the first time that the tomb can be saved.

"After 40 years of doubts, 40 years of worries, 40 years of unchecked deterioration, this group ... has stopped the threatening factors."

Kadry's organization sponsored the project with the J. Paul Getty Conservation Institute, an arm of the Getty Trust of Century City, Calif. The institute spent $400,000 and enlisted scientists and specialists from the United States, Egypt, Mexico, Japan, Spain and Italy.

Nefertari's tomb was cut 33 feet into the barren, wind-swept, limestone hills where queens, princes, princesses and officials were buried across the Nile River from the ancient capital, Thebes.

The walls and columns of every chamber were covered with scenes painted by the most talented artists of Pharaonic Egypt's golden days, a renaissance in mural-painting that accompanied Pharaoh Ramses' successes at home and abroad.

Nefertari was known as the Pharaoh's "great royal wife," his favorite of 13. She was in her mid-40s when she died.

As depicted on her tomb walls, she was a slim, shapely woman with a beautiful profile and delicate features, a bejeweled fashion mannequin draped in a transparent white gown and crowned with a vulture framing her flowing black hair with its wings.

Paolo Mora, former chief conservator at Rome's Instituto Centrale del Restauro, headed the six-member conservation team.

"The incredible thing about this tomb is that some of the paintings look as fresh as if they were painted yesterday," Mora said. "You can even see the brush strokes of the artists. Other portions have been heavily damaged, and about 20 percent of the tomb has been lost forever."

Mora's team used more than 10,000 strips of transparent Japanese paper, each the size of a common bandage strip, to bind flaking pieces to walls and ceilings. They removed fine dust concealing the ancient colors and injected an adhesive to reattach buckling plaster.

Salt crystals had left the tomb's limestone walls and entered the mural-covered plaster, eating away colors and cracking the plaster itself. At some time in the past, water also had damaged the 5,200-square-foot tomb.

Dr. Saleh Ahmed Saleh, chairman of the conservation department at Cairo University's School of Archaeology, believes he has found the source of the erosive salts.

"I have come to believe after investigating tombs for many years that in Nefertari the problem ... originated when artists first entered the tomb," he said.

"They used water in their paints, and moisture immediately began to bring the natural salts out of the limestone and into the plaster even as it was being painted. We can see the artists might have suspected there was a problem early on, because some restoration efforts were made before Nefertari's mummy was sealed inside."

The Ancient Nile River Little Changed After Long Centuries

EDITOR'S NOTE — A reporter who recently sailed the Nile River aboard a modern steamer found that today's travelers, frightened by reports of terrorism in the Middle East, are fewer in number. But those who do make the journey encounter a way of life that has changed little since Cleopatra cruised the river on her barge.

LUXOR, Egypt (AP) — Slender canoes ply the Nile River, their sails dangling like giant white handkerchiefs.

Farmers, brown and thin as stalks of wheat, steer wooden plows pulled by water buffalo along strips of green sandwiched between the life-giving river and the suffocating Sahara Desert.

Such scenes were recorded on the walls of the pharaohs' tombs 5,000 years ago and have left their imprint in the writings of figures as diverse as Napoleon and Agatha Christie.

From its headstream in Burundi in central Africa to the Mediterranean Sea, the Nile flows 4,160 miles through eight countries.

But if the images of river life remain largely unaltered, recent world events have indeed left their mark on the timeless Nile. Tourism, the industry that has grown up around the world's longest river, is suffering.

Frightened by reports of terrorism and growing anti-Americanism, many tourists now avoid the Middle East. Some Americans conceal their nationality from the curious, claiming to be from Canada or Europe.

The canoes, known as "feluccas," share the Nile with steamers that move briskly up and down the river. Once the exclusive conveyance of British aristocracy, the steamers in recent years carried thousands of Americans.

Modern steamers like the three-deck Nile Presidential, which cruises the 125 miles between Aswan and Luxor twice a week, are among the easiest ways to view the Nile.

On one recent trip, however, the ship was less than half full and only six passengers were Americans, a dramatic change from recent years, according to an official at the cruise line's headquarters in Cairo.

Egypt's tourism minister, Fuad Sultan, said recently that tourism revenue was down by about 40 percent from a year earlier, costing the government $750,000 daily.

On a walk through a back street in a small Nile village, a man wearing the flowing white robes and turban that signify an Islamic fundamentalist hissed loudly to an American couple, "Yankee, leave."

But for those who do make the journey, the slowdown in tourism also means more room and more attention.

On board the Presidential, passengers spread out in lounge chairs on the ship's top deck, swim in a pool or sip tea. Beyond the railing on the passing shore, water buffalo wallow in mud and children play a version of soccer.

The constancy of the Nile panorama makes it easy to get lost in the past. Modern life, when it intrudes, is often laid atop the ancient, like the bright white neon that outlines the minaret of a mudbrick Nile mosque, or the tourists themselves, laden with Japanese cameras, suntan lotion and bulky guidebooks.

Rich Italian food is served for lunch and dinner on the Presidential. It is tasty but a little risky. On this trip, more than half the 30 passengers were forced to spend at least a few hours below deck in their cabins. The crew keeps medicine aboard for the "Pharaoh's Revenge."

The boat makes five stops along the Nile. Visitors can wander the narrow streets of the souks, or Arab markets, where the smoke of cooking fires blends with the aroma of burning incense. Passers-by need only pause to be engulfed by merchants eager to bargain away camel saddles, jangling gold bracelets and hot sesame bread.

The souks, farms and mosques all hug a swath of fertility the Nile cuts through the desert. The river is, in the words of one guidebook, a narrow green ribbon tied around the brown package of Egypt.

Despite its generative qualities, however, the Nile was viewed by ancient man as a moody river. Some years it was stingy and dried to a trickle, summoning back the desert sands. Then, in a powerful flex of muscle, it flooded the land.

Early Egyptians believed gods floated on Nile currents and blamed the pharaoh for improper rule if the river brought years of drought and famine, as in the time of the Biblical exodus.

The family feuds fought along the Nile shores before the time of the Bible were recorded in hieroglyphics on sandstone walls of tombs and temples. They rival the scripts of the prime-time soap opera "Dallas."

A favorite is that of an iron willed feminist, Queen Hatshepsut, who was prevented by virtue of her sex from becoming pharaoh; so she married

By JERI FISCHER
The (Charlotte) Observer

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — She met him on a foggy September morning at Victoria Station in London.

Kitty Davy was 40, a music teacher living with her parents in an affluent Kensington neighborhood. Her younger brother had introduced her to Meher Baba's writings. Now she would meet the 37-year-old religious leader.

"I had no idea that morning how my life would change," she said. "Baba was little-known in the West ... and the tradition that I was brought up in was that everyone in the Eastern world was heathen. It was rather a strange thing for an English woman to even associate with an Indian.

"But from the moment I met him, he became the object of my consciousness.'

Davy, now 96, became one of Baba's earliest Western followers. Her half-century of devotion took her to India for 15 years and finally to Baba's home in the West, the Meher Spiritual Center in Myrtle Beach.

"Baba took many things from us, but he's given them all back," she said in the lilting tones of British aristocracy. "There is nothing in my life now that displeases me."

A sturdy woman with dark, saucer eyes and gray hair pulled into a bun, Davy sits with her back to Long Lake, which runs for more than a mile through the 498-acre center. The only sounds this morning are birds chirping, but white-tailed deer, bats, osprey, black bears and alligators thrive among the brush. The whole tract is a wildlife sanctuary.

"You cannot improve on nature ... do not try," says a Baba brochure. "Reverence for all life is a keynote of Meher Center's existence."

It is in this virgin wilderness between Myrtle Beach and North Myrtle Beach — hemmed by highrise condominiums, shopping centers and rushing U.S. 17 — that Davy has lived and worked for 35 years.

But first, she was to follow the mystic to India.

"It caused quite a sensation when we first left," Davy said, her wrinkled fingers fluttering. Her ring, a miniature portrait of Baba, sparkles.

"The press wrote about the bevy of young girls who followed Baba. They thought it was another Rasputin story. 'Messiah's Well-Dressed Girl Disciples Reveal Their Plans,' the headlines said."

Davy left London in 1937 and moved to Baba's colony near Ahmednagar, a crusty, fallow valley. Baba, a Persian born in 1894, opened the colony after drawing his first disciples in 1921. In India, followers say, 100,000 people would come for his blessing. His reputation spread worldwide in the 1930s.

Davy lived frugally, learning to grind wheat, pick cotton and make curry powders and chutneys. The rules: baths every other day, no leaving without Baba or his permission, and no cluttering the table tennis table.

"It was a very practical life," she said. "In many areas it was difficult. Our meals were different, our liberties were taken away, and then Baba would leave for long periods. We had come to be with Baba, but he was often taken away from us."

In India, she and 30 women crossed nearly two-thirds of the country. During the trips, Baba washed and fed lepers and gave money, grains and cloth to the poor. "We saw love in action," Davy said.

Davy came to know Baba as a deep-thinking fan of table tennis, Ellery Queen and Laurel and Hardy. She never heard him speak. Baba chose to remain silent the last half of his life — he died in 1969 — and communicated with an alphabet board and gestures. But she quoted him tirelessly from an inexhaustible fund of Babaisms, and she moved to Myrtle Beach in 1952 to help run the center.

The retreat opened 40 years ago after Baba said he wanted a home in the United States that met five requirements: a good climate for Easterners and Westerners, ample water, virgin soil and land that could be tilled. And, he said, it must be given from the heart.

Elizabeth Patterson, a wealthy Baba follower from New York, found the first four conditions in timberland owned by her father, Simeon Chapin. In 1944, she met the fifth by persuading him to give it to her.

Twisted trails through yaupons and palmettos connect the retreat's 22 cabins, library, kitchens, shelters and meeting places. Passersby may drop in, but overnight visitors must reserve rooms and express a sincere interest in Baba. By year's end, more than 20,000 will have come and gone.

Visitors follow rules. Curfew is 11 p.m. and no one can walk alone to the beach (too dangerous) or fish or swim in Long Lake (it would disturb the alligators). No drugs are allowed, and there is no smoking outside the cabins. Backbiting and political discussions are forgiven. Baba visited the center in 1952, 1956 and 1958.

Although Baba was a Zoroastrian, a Persian religion founded in the 6th century B.C., the center is ecumenical.

"He never wanted you to give up your religion, but to add something to what you already had," Davy said. "The center is for meditation, rest and renewal. Everyone here can worship in their own way. Everyone is free."

The Little Changed Nile River

Archaeologists believe Hatshepsut was finally done in by her jealous brother-in-law, who killed her and obliterated her image from most of the monuments she built.

Hatshepsut's architect, who was also her lover, built the queen a giant mortuary temple dwarfed by cliffs on the Nile's eastern bank across from Luxor, 320 miles south of Cairo. Badly mutilated, the temple today is being restored.

Nearby, hundreds of underground tombs lay hidden in the brown hills, an attempt by royalty to prevent grave robbers from finding their buried riches. For the most part, the effort failed. All but one of the tombs rediscovered in the last two centuries was empty, often even of the mummy itself.

Seti's tomb, discovered in 1817 by a circus muscleman from England, is the largest. About 3,250 years old, it is best seen with a flashlight and must be entered by climbing down dozens of steps.

A procession of fire-breathing goddesses, lion-headed gods and sacred animals march on the walls, leading Seti's spirit to the underworld. A flock of vultures is portrayed on the ceiling.

A tour of the deep, dark burial chamber must be quick. The air is so thick with dust that it is dangerous to stay more than 10 minutes. Those who remain too long start wheezing and the sound echoes inside the tomb. Vistors emerge red-faced, sweating, sometimes a bit panicked, and collapse on cement benches outside Seti's burial place.

The only tomb found in modern times, complete with ancient treasures, was that of Tutankhamen, popularly known as King Tut. Uncovered in 1922 by archaeologist Howard Carter, it contained vast riches: a mummy case of solid gold, a fly-whisk trimmed with ostrich feathers, walking sticks inlaid with precious jewels.

Vendors hawking pottery, beads and sculptures surround the air-conditioned tour buses near the underground tombs and wave their souvenirs in front of bus windows, yelling out prices that usually can be bargained down by more than half the original asking price.

A cluster of Egyptian men, wearing ankle-length dresses called "galabiyas," linger around the tombs, too, eager to tell the tourist — for a fee — intriguing stories, often not found in guide books, of the Nile's past.

Travelers also are accompanied by friendly gangs of youngsters who never seem to be in school. To many visitors they blend quickly into one child, hand outstretched, pleading "Bakhshish? Bakhshish?" (Arabic for tip or handout).

This, too, is part of the unchanged scenery. In Agatha Christie's "Death on the Nile," one character, Mrs. Allerton, asks another for help in chasing away the Nile children.

"They close in on me little by little, and then I yell 'Imshi' (Arabic for 'scat')...and they scatter for a minute or two. And then they come back and stare and stare," she said.

On the other side of the Nile, in Luxor itself, are the massive temples of Luxor and Karnac, a perfect place to drape an arm around a statue of a stern-faced sphinx and pose for a snapshot.

To the south, on the eastern bank of the Nile across from Aswan, is a modern memorial that illustrates the continuing Egyptian obsession with death. It is Aga Khan's mausoleum, reached by a camel ride or a climb up stairs built into the dunes.

Aga Khan, a swinger in European social circles, was also the 48th ruler of the Ismaili sect of Islam. After his death in 1958, his wife built the mausoleum and opened it to the public.

A guard allows visitors to enter in small groups and makes sure they have removed their shoes before they step into the brown brick building to stare at the roped-off sarcophagus.

Legends for future tourists are growing around this modern monument. Each day a fresh red rose is placed on the sarcophagus and guides tell of Aga Khan's widow flying the flower in from Europe when none could be found in Egypt.

'Follies' Reborn In London

By MATT WOLF
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — It's a musical about unfulfilled goals and beautiful women, of dreams gone sour and songs that soar.

Sixteen years after its Broadway bow, Stephen Sondheim's "Follies" is about to be reborn in London.

"This is a unique opportunity to rework something," director Mike Ockrent said of the $2.59 million show, which opens July 21 at the Shaftesbury Theater to an advance sale of about $1.13 million.

Set at a reunion of Ziegfeld Follies performers inside a dilapidated theater, the musical stars Julia McKenzie, Daniel Massey, Diana Rigg and David Healy as two couples who learn to "live, laugh, love."

The winner of seven Tony awards in 1972, including two for the late Michael Bennett as co-director and choreographer, "Follies" was staged last year at the Forum Theater in northern England. This production, with its separate creative team, mark[illegible]'s London debut.

Ockrent, a Tony nominee this year for staging "Me and My Girl," directs from James Goldman's book, which has been fully revised. The producer is Cameron Mackintosh, the moneyman behind "Cats," "Les Miserables" and "The Phantom of the Opera," each one a musical smash.

Sondheim's score, with four new songs for London, includes such musical theater classics as "Losing My Mind" and "Broadway Baby." The composer-lyricist himself is largely absent from London rehearsals, as he is readying a new show, "Into the Woods," for a New York opening in September.

Its other creators said this production would be more upbeat than the Broadway original, which lost its entire $800,000 capitalization despite a run of over a year.

"The show makes demands on an audience," Goldman said. "It never was a tired businessman's show, and probably still isn't."

However, he said, it was "by no means hopeless or joyless. It's about people assessing their lives and coming to terms."

His rewrite plays up the "ghost" characters: the images of the central quartet as their younger selves, who help the show move freely in time and lend it genuine poignance.

Concern Voiced About Paradise For Birds In Turkey

By VEDAT ERDAMAR
Associated Press Writer

KUSCENNETI, Turkey (AP) — Experts fear that industrial wastes and a planned irrigation project could ruin a lakeside willow grove that is a haven for rare birds winging their way between Europe and Asia.

"Alarm bells are ringing for Kuscenneti," said Suleyman Balik, who leads 15 scientists from the Aegean University who are trying to determine just how badly polluted Kus Golu (Bird Lake) is.

The lake's reedy shores attract migratory birds that stay to breed after wintering in warm climates. The birds draw thousands of tourists and birdwatchers every year to the area where special observation platforms have been set up.

"If something is not done soon, it can become a lost paradise," Balik said in a recent interview.

The lake borders Kuscenneti, a 157-acre wood of willow trees, which was declared a national park in 1959 in an effort to help the birds. Kuscenneti, which means bird paradise in Turkish, is near Bandirma on the southern shore of the Marmara Sea across from Istanbul.

Scientists say thousands of fish and smaller creatures that live in the water are being killed by chemicals dumped into the lake by dozens of nearby factories. Birds feed on the aquatic life.

The sanctuary is on the migratory route of such rare birds as spoonbills, common and gray herons, little bitterns, little egrets, cormorants and Dalmation pelicans. They winter in the south and return to Kuscenneti to nest in the spring.

Official records say about 2 million birds, representing 239 separate species, stop at the sanctuary every year.

Among them are 40 rare species who might not survive a demise of the sanctuary, said Kemal Seyhan, director of the national park.

Toward the end of June, when most of the breeding birds start heading westward with their young, the water recedes from the willows and reeds. Fertilized by bird droppings, plants grow lush, providing a habitat for millions of tiny invertebrates, which nourish fish, frogs and crawfish, which then become the food for the birds upon their return.

Balik said that during a recent visit to the park he saw thousands of dead fish in the lake.

"Fish and other water organisms are dying either by direct poisoning or because of diminished oxygen level as a result of pollutants spewed out by 47 factories, workshops, dairy and poultry farms along the Sigirci and Kocacay streams which flow into the lake," Balik said.

Park director Seyhan worries that the delicate ecological balance of Kuscenneti would be damaged if the state water works goes through with plans to turn the lake into a reservoir to irrigate ricefields in the nearby Karacabey plains.

He said the ecological balance could be altered by a dam, which the state body is contructing on the Kocacay stream, and by 30-foot-high barriers being built around the lake as part of the irrigation project.

Seyhan said the government had already dealt a severe blow to the ecosystem of the lake when the state water works opened channels along the outflowing Karadere stream to drain lake waters for irrigation during a drought in July 1985.

He said the drainage reduced the lake to one-third of its size and excessive fishing reduced the fish population.

A parasite called Agrilus Ater took hold at the site after the recession of the waters and ate the inner barks of the willows, drying up half the trees.

Seyhan proposes the enforcement of environmental laws and the closing of installations that dump untreated waste into the water.

New Stamp Issues In The News

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

Sri Lanka's latest set of stamps is for the birds — and especially for topical collectors who specialize in birds on stamps.

The four new definitive stamps illustrate birds found only in Sri Lanka, the former British colony once known as Ceylon.

Featured on the new 50-cent stamp is the Layard's Parakeet, also called the Lanka Alugirawa. It is a colorful bird distinguished by a bright emerald collar and a blue gray tail.

The 5-rupee shows the Sri Lanka White Headed Starling. It has a white face, crown, throat and undertail. The nests of this bird are in cavities of trees at high elevations. The eggs are pale blue.

The 10-rupee illustrates the Sri Lanka Rufous Babbler, a reddish brown bird with a bright orange beak and legs. The Babbler, a noisy bird, moves in large flocks.

Previous issues of Sri Lanka's birds on stamps were released in 1979 and 1983.

The stamp that isn't a postage stamp — the 1977-78 Migratory Bird Hunting and Conservation Stamp — has been released by the U.S. Postal Service.

Commonly known as the "duck stamp," it is issued annually by the Department of the Interior and must be carried by all waterfowl hunters 16 years of age and older. The USPS makes it available at many post offices nationwide.

Since many philatelists like to collect these duck stamps, the items may be purchased by mail order from the Philatelic Sales Division, Washington, DC 20260. The price is $10.00 per stamp plus the usual 50-cent postage and handling charge.

The U.S. Postal Service also is offering pictorial cancellations at 10 U.S. National Parks in conjunction with its sale of the 50 North American Wildlife stamps. As previously reported in this column, the animals depicted on the stamps were chosen to represent all areas of the United States and thereby reflect the variety of North American habitats.

Since the stamps with the pictorial cancellations are difficult for most collectors to obtain, the U.S. Stamp Collectors Society is selling the covers for a total of $29.95. If interested, you may send to: USSCS, Box 854, Van Nuys, CA 91408.

Above we discussed birds, ducks and wildlife on stamps. So I am reminded of the fish booklet offered by the USPS last year. The stamps depicted five varieties of fish found in North American waters — muskellunge, Atlantic cod, largemouth bass, tuna and catfish. Each stamp has a denomination of 22 cents.

There was an error in the booklet's inside cover. An advertising blurb urged collectors to join the USPS Commemorative Stamp Club for $22 for a 12-month subscription. The right price was $18.95.

RED CLOUD STAMP — The U.S. Postal Service has announced the forthcoming issuance of a 10-cent stamp in the Great American Series honoring the Sioux Indian Chief Red Cloud. The stamp will be issued August 15 in Red Cloud, Nebraska. (AP Laserphoto)

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS
Cleaning Oriental Rugs is easy. All of the Oriental Rugs we carry are handmade and of 100% natural wool pile and wool is so much easier to keep clean than regular carpets. Regular vacuuming is all that's needed on a day to day basis. A longer range, continuous cleaning method for Oriental Rugs is any dry cleaning method such as Host. This dry powder is sprinkled on the rug, brushed in with a machine with rotary brushes and then vacuumed after an hour or two. If a stain is the problem remember these four rules (1) start from the outside and work toward the center of the stain; (2) always use a blotting action as rubbing can cause pile discoloration; (3) never over-wet an Oriental Rug as water can rot the cotton warp threads; and (4) act fast before a stain has time to set. Next week look for cleaning tips for specific stains.
At Betsy Drake Interiors we have in stock over 300 of the finest quality, hand-made Oriental Rugs available. Through July 31 these rugs will be offered to our customers at ½ the regular retail price. We invite you to come in and discover why we sell more Oriental Rugs and Dhurries than anyone else in Eastern North Carolina.

Book Restorers Battle Paper Decay

By PAUL WOOD
Champaign News-Gazette

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — The book is a life's work condensed into 200 pages. It has survived for decades. The next time someone tries to read it, the pages will crumble.

At the University of Illinois Library, director of preservation William Henderson guesses that maybe 2 million of the library's 7 million volumes are in similar danger.

In the library's basement, Jane Gammon takes charge of restoration with basic tools: erasers, scissors, paste, tissue paper.

"All our materials cost just pennies," she says. "We really try to do as little as possible to the pages. One of the key conservation principles is that nothing should be done that cannot be undone."

Many of the university's more valuable works are getting help. Books hundreds of years old — including a Gutenberg Bible — are preserved in a room where temperature and humidity are carefully monitored.

Some have survived wars and fires and pestilence and remain supple. Medieval manuscripts hold together better than a math text from Teddy Roosevelt's time.

Bookmakers once used rags in paper, hand-crafting volumes and creating prized possessions. Johann Gutenberg's movable press, a 15-century invention, helped spread Renaissance ideas by making books cheaper and more plentiful.

The Industrial Revolution made printing even easier. The unending demand for paper caused a shortage of rags. Publishers began using paper made of wood pulp.

Though pulp is inferior to rag paper, it is not to blame for turning pages to dust, Henderson says. A compound invented 100 years ago to make ink stick better to paper is the culprit. After years, it breaks down into acids, eating away at fibers that hold paper together.

After World War II, publishers began using paper with compounds less likely to cause acid breakdown, especially in scholarly printing.

The University of Illinois Press prints its cloth editions on acid-free paper, says director Richard Wentworth. It has been doing so since the 1960s, with incentives from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Still, scholarly presses and other acid-free publishers account for only 40 percent of books printed in this country.

The choices for a book in danger are few. Microfilming preserves a book for 200 years, if artificial aging tests are correct. It averages $40 per book, though, and is tedious.

Some books can be copied onto acid-free paper, also preserving the information but not the physical object. But again, it takes time.

When the paper itself is historic, the task is to take out the acid.

Chemicals that remove the acid are cheap, but the job is labor-intensive. Somebody has to turn the pages and apply the chemicals. In a spray booth, Jane Gammon gets to the sheet music, pamphlets and book pages in direst need.

With thousands of volumes on the endangered list, Henderson says, the painstaking work done in the library's basement is a nearly futile race against time. But his eyes light up when he speaks of processes that can remove acids en masse.

Among the most promising, Henderson says, is a chemical called diethyl zinc. The Library of Congress already has spent more than $10 million on a trial plant.

The process can handle huge amounts of paper, at about $3.50 a volume, but the chemical is prone to spontaneous combustion, Henderson says. The pilot plant already has had three major fires.

A system that works on a smaller scale is the Wei T'o, created in Chicago. Canada's National Library is using it, also at a cost of about $3.50 a book.

Henderson estimates, however, that installing a plant for UI would cost $500 million, plus the facility to house it.

So the school librarians continue waging their slow battle to find the most deserving pages before time and decay take their toll.

ORCHESTRA GETS GRANT

CLEVELAND (AP) — ALCOA Foundation has awarded a $24,000 grant to fund a three-year program to microfilm the Cleveland Orchestra archives.

Once the microfilming and cataloging process is completed, thousands of items documenting the orchestra's activities over the past 70 years will be accessible to historians and others.

Designers Tackle Space Living Quarters

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Is lack of gravity a handicap or an opportunity when it comes to designing a space environment for human beings?

Description of a space module as both a severely deprived environment and as a new opportunity to function in a three-dimensional atmosphere were advanced recently by several designers.

As consultants to NASA or its contractors, they are playing a role in designing living quarters for modules that will be placed in space possibly as early as 1994. If all goes according to plan, by then a group of at least eight astronauts will be living in space for 90 days at a time.

According to Guillermo Trotti, associate director of the Saskawa International Center for Space Architecture at the University of Houston, the Challenger space shuttle accident did not interfere with the space station design program, although it did slow the pace of learning about how materials behave in space.

On the other hand, Danforth Toan, a New York architect, said he thought the disaster had exposed the vulnerability of technology, alerted the public to the dangers of space travel and made NASA more cautious.

Toan said that, compared with earth-bound environments, space-modules are deprived and confined spaces.

Models that have helped him understand human needs in environments of prolonged isolation include submarines, oil rigs and stations in the Antarctic.

Space design issues differ from those on earth because of the lack of gravity, according to Trotti. An individual could easily work at a desk bolted to the ceiling or a wall. However, he added, so far the astronauts have been more comfortable with the vertical orientation they are used to on earth.

"Because you can't judge which way is up as you enter a space, lighting, graphics and colors establish orientation." Light colors for the "ceiling" and dark colors for the floor are a means of establishing direction. So is labeling furniture.

Michael Kalil, a designer researching future living arrangements in space, sees the gravity-less environment as an advantage, not a drawback. "In zero gravity, you don't need a floor plan and can take advantage of the properties of a gravity-less environment."

Present thinking places the astronauts' living space inside a 45-foot-long cylinder with an interior diameter of 13 feet 10 inches.

In addition to common areas for exercise, dining, food preparation, medical, toilet and washing facilities, each crew member will have about 125 cubic feet of personal living space.

Trotti says bunks will be arranged as on a ship. Each astronaut will have a private bunk, personal storage, probably a combination computer-home entertainment system, task and general lighting, and a sleeping bag attached to one wall to stay anchored in place during sleep.

"We want to provide as much nondehydrated food as possible," said Trotti. He said there will be a galley with a refrigerator-freezer, pantry and combination microwave-convection oven. The galley also will contain a computer to keep track of food consumption and supplies, and to instruct the astronauts how to prepare food.

Kalil's efforts to free his thinking from the idea of deficiency and hardship has led him to some new formulations for sleeping environments and tables.

If you've ever made patching repairs to wallboard, plaster or ceilings, you know about the array of treatment products on the market. The many different types of available spackling putties, joint compounds, plaster patching materials and repair kits make the selection of the correct items almost as challenging as the work itself.

Most wallboard and plaster repair products come in two forms — dry powders and pre-mixed pastes. The dry powders can be slightly less convenient to use because you have to add water and then mix to the proper consistency. Also, if you mix too much, leftover portions are not reusable, as the mix will harden in the container. But powders do have their advantages. They tend to set faster and shrink less than the pre-mixed pastes. Also, they cost less and last indefinitely if left sealed in their containers.

Pre-mixed pastes, on the other hand, are easy to use, but will shrink slightly upon application. While shrinkage usually isn't a concern for patching small cracks and holes, it can create problems when filling larger areas.

Generally, powders will get the job done more efficiently than pastes when filling medium and large holes and cracks. Medium gaps are in the ½-inch to 1-inch category, large ones over 1-inch wide. Pastes can be used over these large areas, but several applications usually will be required. One word of caution about powders. The chemical reaction involved in the setting process can irritate or burn exposed skin, so wear rubber gloves when working with them.

A talk with Barbara Casserly brought out some facts about the three basic wall repair products. She is product manager of the Durabond Division of USG Industries. She said spackling putty, the most widely used wall repair item, is easy for do-it-yourselfers to use. Designed for filling and concealing small cracks, nail holes and blemishes in plaster, it usually is available in paste and powder forms.

A new type of spackling putty now on the market combines the advantages of paste (convenience) and powdered (non-shrinking) putties. It is a pre-mixed, easy-to-use paste that will not shrink after application and requires little, if any, sanding. It dries quickly, usually in about 15 minutes for small cracks and holes.

Plaster of Paris is not recommended for do-it-yourselfers. For pros, it is an excellent material because it sets quickly without shrinking and can be used to cover large areas in one application. But for the average handyman, it can be unforgiving because it sets so quickly and so hard that mistakes are not easily correctable.

Plaster wall patches are designed for patching and filling very large cracks, holes and breaks in wallboard and plaster. If you are filling large holes or wallboard breaks over 1-inch wide, this probably is the best product to use. It comes in powdered form only, yet the setting time is considerably longer than Plaster of Paris, so mistakes can be corrected. Its advantage is that it sets to a hard, durable finish. But it can be difficult to sand. Apply it carefully so only a minimum of sanding is needed.

Manufacturers recently introduced wallboard repair kits that include the materials needed to fill and patch a wide variety of imperfections. The kits can be very practical, especially when working on an older home that has a lot of wallboard problems.

Because standard dry sanding with sandpaper creates dust, Casserly recommends "wet" sanding, which involves wiping the patched areas after they are dry with a damp sponge, using a large, sweeping motion. If you are dry sanding, wear a dust mask and use a fine grade sandpaper. Fine paper lasts longer than coarse paper and ensures a smooth, even finish.

Q. There are maroon and white bull's-eyes on the leaves of my red maple. What causes this? Should I do anything about it?

A. What you describe are maple eyespot galls. They are caused by a midge, a type of small fly. Ignore the spots. By the time you notice the spots the damage has already been done. The damage is aesthetic if anything at all since the spots do not seriously affect the health of the tree. The population of the midges that cause these spots fluctuates from year to year. Some years you will see numerous spots and in other years none at all.

Q. Is it necessary to add red coloring to the mixture in my hummingbird feeder?

A. Hummingbirds are attracted to red but it is not necessary to add red coloring to the mixture for hummingbirds since most hummingbird feeders are red or have red around the feeding tubes. In fact, some experts believe that the red dye could be harmful to hummers.

Q. Please give me information about the tall sunflowers covered with golden blooms in the perennial border at the NCSU Arboretum last fall. They were spectacular.

A. What you saw was Helianthus angustifolius, the swamp sunflower or tall autumn sunflower. Unquestionably, this native is the most spectacular flowering herbaceous perennial in our collections. With good care, full sun, water and fertilizer, a mature clump can reach 8 to 9 feet tall and 6 feet wide and be covered with masses of 3-inch diameter, golden flowers from top to ground in October. This species exists from New York to Florida to Texas but has never been widely used as a garden plant either here or in Europe. It is sometimes confused with the more commonly grown Helianthus salicifolius which is also tall with narrow leaves. H. salicifolius tends to produce flowers in terminal masses whereas H. angustifolius flowers as low on the plant as good light penetration permits. It is very easy to propagate by seed, from division of clumps or by softwood cuttings through the summer. Through promotion of the N.C. Botanical Garden in Chapel Hill and our distribution to nurseries, this fine plant is beginning to appear in the horticultural industry.

Q. — One of the things I have encountered in woodworking is the tendency of the wood to split when planing the end grain. I know about planing from the edges to the center, but splitting still occurs. Is there something I do not know?

A. — One of the ways to keep the corners of end grain from splitting or otherwise splintering is to place two pieces of scrap wood on both sides of the work and clamp the whole thing together. Then, as you plane, whatever damage takes place will be on the scrap wood rather than the piece being planed.

Q. — Our garage door has a loss of some tension in the big spring on one side. The springs on the door are of the adjustable type, or so we were told when the overhead system was installed. Is there some special way the springs can be tightened. A. — Yes, but the procedure is tricky and can result in an injury if there is the slightest error. A spring that needs adjusting requires the services of a professional or somebody who has had some experience with spring-type doors.

———

Q. — There is a hot water coil attached to our furnace for heating water. Lately, the water doesn't stay hot very long and the pressure in the hot water pipes seems very low. There is no trouble in the cold water line. Is the coil likely to be the cause of the trouble?

A. — Probably. It seems to be a case of a clogged coil that needs replacement. But only an examination will disclose that for certain. A plumber or heating expert can determine fairly quickly whether that's the case.

Q. — I have to do some wood staining. I have never used stain. Is it all right to use the type called an oil stain?

A. — Yes. The intensity of the color will depend on how long you leave it on before wiping it off. You can lighten the stain by mixing it with a little turpentine. Before you attempt your first job, do a little experimenting with scrap wood.

Omaha's Joslyn Museum May Lose Western Art Collections

By CAROL ZUEGNER
Associated Press Writer

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The loss of two art collections tracing the rough-and-tumble history of the Great Plains from the days of explorers and fur traders to the heyday of the American cowboy would be an artistic and cultural disaster, says a Joslyn Art Museum official.

Enron Art Foundation owns the collections, which have been on loan to the museum since the mid-1960s. Now the foundation wants to sell them.

Henry Flood Robert Jr., the director of the museum, calls the two collections a national treasure.

And Joseph Porter, museum curator of Western American history, said that while losing 200 works at one time would be a blow to any museum, Joslyn's loss of these two collections would be a "cultural disaster."

The Enron foundation has offered the two collections — valued at $14.8 million — to Joslyn for $10.8 million.

Enron's decision to sell the works to Joslyn or another museum or collector has prompted museum officials to mount a special exhibition, which will continue through through Sept. 13.

The exhibition includes the 113 paintings and sketches of the Alfred Jacob Miller Collection and the 87 works of the Artists of the Western Frontier Collection.

Scottish nobleman Sir William Drummond Stewart chose American artist Miller to chronicle his adventures on an 1897 American Fur Co. caravan that traveled through Nebraska and into Wyoming along what became the Oregon Trail.

Miller's watercolors and sketches are an evocative picture of the life of the trappers and the Indians they traded with through the eyes of an "avowed romantic," Porter said.

The Artists of the Western Frontier paintings and sculptures capture the beauty of the land and the life of the American cowboy with works by 37 artists including Frederic Remington, Albert Bierstadt and George Catlin.

The Joslyn board has given the go-ahead for the museum to try to acquire the collections, Robert said.

But, he said, if the Joslyn isn't able to raise the money to buy the collections, there's plenty of interest among museums and collectors elsewhere in the United States, as well as in Europe and Japan.

The collections have been a part of the museum for so long that "we forgot they weren't ours," said David Hunt, curator of Western art.

Enron, which was based in Omaha until a move last year to Houston, had loaned three art collections to Joslyn for almost 25 years.

The foundation donated the $14 million Maximilian-Bodmer Collection, from which the traveling exhibit "Views of a Vanishing Frontier" was taken, but has decided to sell the other two collections.

Porter said each collection is valuable in itself, but the combination of all three draws a strong, deep picture of life in the West.

The Bodmer paintings and drawings illustrate an 1832-34 expedition along the Missouri River north through Montana. Those works are more of a scientific record, more exact and detailed than Miller's romanticized view, Hunt said.

Western art has grown in popularity and appreciation in the past 20 years, Hunt said. One indication is the value of the Miller collection, bought in 1965 for $150,000. The collection now is appraised at $6 million.

It's impossible to separate the historical value of the collections from the artistic value, he said.

In the 19th and 20th centuries, much of Western art served a utilitarian purpose as the record of expeditions, either scientific or for the railroads, Porter said.

"Any kind of illustrative or narrative art usually is relegated to a secondary category" in the fine arts by academics, Hunt said.

The works are gaining more recognition in the fine arts world as well as in historical and anthropological circles, Porter said.

A novelist recently looked through the collections for background for a book on fur trading, he said.

Nebraska was a jumping off point for so many of the expeditions and artists, that the history they show is a history of the region, Porter said.

He said that when the collections were loaned to the Joslyn, it was like "coming home."

Bele Chere Festival

ASHEVILLE — Asheville's summer festival, Bele Chere, in downtown Asheville features dancers, hot air balloonists, craftsmen and theater groups.

Among the events scheduled for the Friday through July 26 festival are a Friday night street dance featuring a reggae-rock band, a late night Saturday jazz concert featuring saxophonist Paquito D'Rivera, a wine waiters race, skydiving, bicycle and road races.

Bele Chere (it means good living in Scottish), has a special children's play area complete with graffiti wall and will additionally feature a body beautiful contest.

International foods will be available along with continual music, dance and other performing acts.

To call attention of Ashevile's early 20th century architecture, arrows will be painted on signs to direct visitors throughout the downtown area to study buildings of historic significance.

ART OF THE FANTASTIC

NEW YORK (AP) — A exhibition of more than 100 works by 29 artists from 10 Latin American nations, "Art of the Fantastic: Latin America, 1920-1987," has begun a four-city tour at the Indianapolis Museum of Art.

The exhibition traces the evolution of the "Fantastic" movement in Latin America. The majority of the works in the show never have been seen in the United States, and many never have appeared on public display. A number of the works are considered national treasures in their countries.

After the exhibition closes Sept. 13 at the Indianapolis museum, it will be seen at the Queens Museum, New York, Oct. 10-Jan. 6, 1988; Center for the Fine Arts, Miami, Jan. 15-March 4; and Centro Cultural-Arte Contemporaneo, Mexico City, March 25-May 22.

We are often asked how we compare the quality of bridge today with that of years gone by. There is no doubt in our minds that modern players would overwhelm those of yesteryear in the bidding. In the play, however, the oldtimers would more than hold their own. This hand was played almost a half-century ago by the father of contract bridge, the late Harold S. Vanderbilt, in the team event for the trophy which bears his name.

At one table the declarer took the diamond finesse at trick one, which lost. After the automatic shift to the queen of clubs, the defenders were able to net three more tricks and the contract was defeated even before declarer had gotten started.

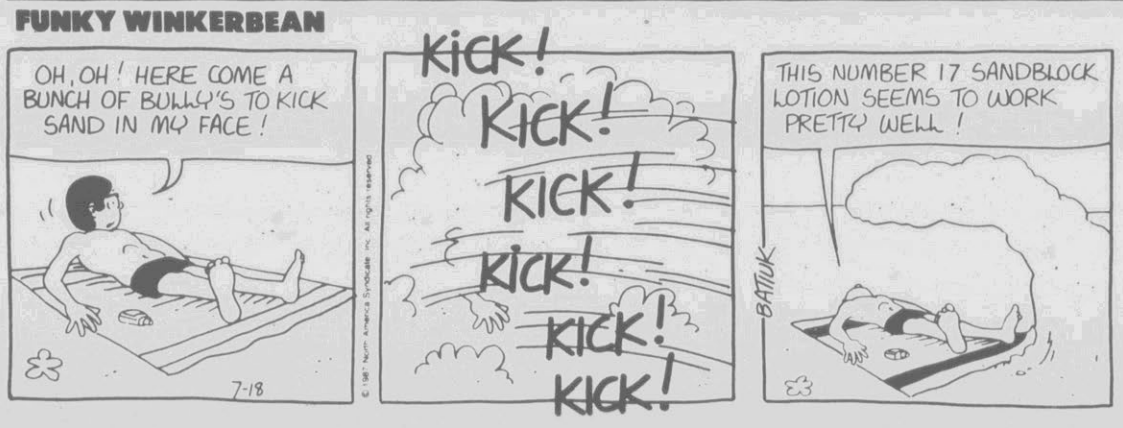

Vanderbilt saw that his contract was safe if he could keep East off lead. He found a pretty series of avoidance plays to accomplish that. He rose with the ace of diamonds at trick one, cashed the ace-king of spades and then entered dummy with a trump to the nine.

The jack of spades was led and, when East followed low, declarer discarded his remaining diamond. West won with the queen and did the best he could by returning a spade, allowing East to ruff away the ten. But it was not good enough. Declarer overruffed, crossed back to the table with a trump and led the queen of diamonds. Had East not covered, declarer would have discarded a club and, had West been able to win, the jack of diamonds would have taken care of another club. When East produced the king, declarer ruffed and was able to get back to the board with the last trump to discard a club on the jack of diamonds. Declarer lost only a spade and two clubs.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By LINDA STANCILL

CBS is in the news with two books recently added to the collection. "Bad News at Black Rock: The Sell-Out of CBS News" gives an inside account of how one of the most distinguished broadcast news organizations in history was nearly destroyed by a combination of personal vanity and institutional short-sightedness.

McCabe, former CBS senior producer, believed in CBS's integrity and its desire to produce innovative, quality news programs when he started to work at the "CBS Morning News" in 1985. He quickly discovered executives looking for a quick fix to satisfy their corporate masters, showmen who seemed to prefer entertainment over journalism.

From the control rooms of CBS's West 57th Street news studios to the executive suites at Black Rock, the network's distinctive Manhattan headquarters, McCabe takes readers on an unsparing, often hilarious journey through the corridors of power.

This chronicle of corporate struggles and individual ambition is also the story of what is wrong with television news, with its questionable values, addiction to celebrity and obsession with ratings.

• Bill Leonard presents a more personal look at CBS in "The Storm of the Eye: A Lifetime at CBS." Leonard, a former president of CBS News, tells the story of his 40-year career at CBS that began just after World War II when, as a young Navy veteran he got his own six-day-a-week radio program.

He continued through the years as reporter, host, producer, lobbyist and finally president.

The creator of "Sunday Morning," he has watched the changes, mourned the defections and worked with all the major personalities including Andy Rooney, Edward R. Murrow, Roger Mudd, Charles Kuralt, Mike Wallace, etc. This inside story of the legendary CBS news operation in the post-Murrow era is told by one who knew it well.

Oriental Babel In Malaysia

By KENNETH L. WHITING
Associated Press Writer

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Southeast Asia is a patchwork of tongues — an Oriental Tower of Babel, so to speak — and few issues can be as politically touchy as the language question.

When Malaysia became independent after a century of British colonial rule in 1957, the new leaders set about replacing English with Bahasa, the local tongue that in English simply means language.

It succeeded so well in the last 30 years that officials now worry about the sorry state of English in their country of 15 million people.

Education Minister Anwar Ibrahim said the government will review the teaching of English to stop the "rot" in the use of the language.

The architects of independence agreed that Bahasa Malaysia or Malay, as it is commonly known to distinguish it from Bahasa Indonesia, would be recognized as the national language. English would be the country's second tongue, while Chinese, Tamil and other languages in Malaysia's plural society would retain certain inalienable rights.

Throughout the rest of Southeast Asia, literary conferences, language seminars and teaching workshops discuss the "pollution" of one language by another or the need to find a common tongue for the entire region.

Neighboring Singapore has four official languages: Mandarin Chinese, English, Malay and Tamil. Malay is designated Singapore's national language and English the language of administration.

Despite years of government publicity campaigns, many people in Singapore continue to speak in languages other than the approved four.

Singapore's main Chinese dialects are Hokkien, Teochew, Cantonese, Hainanese, Hakka and Foochow. Telegu, Malayalam, Punjabi, Hindi and Bengali are spoken by ethnic Indians.

In the early years after self-rule from Britain was granted in 1959, the emphasis in Singapore was largely on English, but that battle is mostly over. Singapore's 2.6 million people are 76 percent ethnic Chinese, but in recent years only about 10 percent of children entering school opt to be educated primarily in Mandarin.

In 1979, Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew launched a long-term drive to eliminate Singapore's regional Chinese dialects, and every October is observed as Speak-Mandarin-Not-Dialects Month.

American English is still widely used in the Philippines, which also has at least 80 distinct dialects. Since independence from the United States after World War II, the government has encouraged the use of Filipino as the traditional language. Based on Tagalog, which is the common tongue of most of the main island of Luzon, Filipino is rooted in Malay and influenced by Spanish and English.

Some 3 million Moslems in Thailand who live on the southern border with Malaysia continue to speak Malay even though the Thai government wants all its 53 million people to learn Thai as a unifying influence.

Indonesia had no post-independence struggle to establish Bahasa Indonesia. The Malay-linked tongue was widely used for decades and Japan's World War II occupation enabled it to flourish when the language of its former Dutch colonializers was scrapped.

However, educators complain that too much English is creeping into everyday use and regional dialects remain entrenched. Indonesia has 13,677 islands and about 250 languages and dialects.

Indonesia and Malaysia agreed to adopt common spellings 15 years ago, but the struggle to standardize is far from over.

Bahasa for centuries was a language primarily of culture, the arts, philosophy and politics. Hundreds of thousands of new words had to be found in recent years to expand its vocabulary to cope with the age of science and technology, according to a spokesman for the Language and Literature Institute in Kuala Lumpur.

Many are minor variations on English, such as "elektron" for electron and "kriterium" for criterion.

The turning point came for Malaysia in May 1969 when post-election riots between politically dominant Malays and economically powerful Chinese left hundreds dead in the streets of Kuala Lumpur.

It was then decided to downgrade English in favor of Bahasa in the interests of national unity.

But the quality of English deteriorated so rapidly that by 1979 the government announced that hundreds of English teachers would be imported to arrest the decline.

Woodrow Wilson was elected president in 1912, defeating Progressive Republican Theodore Roosevelt and incumbent Willian Howard Taft, who had run on the regular G.O.P. ticket.

New Indian Museum Opens In The Village Of Frisco

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

A Pennyslvania native who is an adopted Hopi Indian has chosen North Carolina's Outer Banks as home. Carl Bornfriend, along with his wife Joyce, have transformed a small building in the village of Frisco into the Frisco Native American Museum and Natural History Center.

"The most amazing series of things have happened to me since I first came to the Outer Banks four years ago," Bornfriend said. "On a visit here, I saw the Indian arrow logo on a highway sign. To me, it was something like an omen. So I decided to stay.

"Then I met Carol, and we were married in a ceremony at the Elizabethan Gardens on Roanoke Island."

Bornfriend spoke of "my lifelong love of Indian lore, Indian culture. Something I've pursued since childhood."

His major field and his background work is in landscape design with experience in teaching. After settling down on the Outer Banks, he has been teaching industrial arts, shop and craft in the Dare County schools.

"With both Joyce and myself teaching, it has been possible to continue to work with my Indian artifacts and to get this museum established," he said.

After guiding a contingent of young out-of-state visitors through the museum, Bornfriend returned to the subject of amazing things taking place.

"After we bought this building, and began cleaning up in readiness to open the museum, I discovered a long partially rounded piece of board lying on the ground. For some reason, rather than toss it out, I propped it against the back of the building.

"Soon after that, I heard the news about the ancient Indian canoes found buried in Lake Phelps. Something triggered a question in my mind. I raced down to the building, took another look at it, and saw that the piece resembled what might be the major portion of a canoe."

Noting he was like a kid about the fact his hunch could prove correct, Bornfriend had experts on Indian artifacts study it. "I've been assured it is indeed an old Indian dugout. The holes in the wood are where knot holes popped out when the canoe was obviously submerged in water. Because it's a local piece and as it has came to me by a long-odds chance in this unusual manner, I look on it as the prize piece in the collection."

The museum, a one-story wood building, is a small place. Outside walls are painted pale blue and distinctly decorated with line paintings of Indian symbols.

Given the number of items Bornfriend has accumulated over several decades, it has been necessary that the display be somewhat crowded. "Some day, my dream is to have a larger space where I can effectively show to best advantage all that I have," he said.

Items on view in the newly established museum include feather headdresses, beadwork, an excellent collection of basketry, weaving, dolls, weapons, stone utensils and other pieces. There are also several stuffed heads of native American animals mounted on the wall.

For most visitors, the one irresistible object in the museum is a large drum that visitors are invariably drawn to. "It's a Hopi Kiva sacred drum," Bornfriend said. "It was given to me by the Hopi, and is very special.

"When I was a boy, every penny I got or could earn went to buy Indian artifacts. Through the years, by purchase or trade, I've added art and artifacts from many Indian tribes all across the U.S., including the Eskimo," Bornfriend said.

When he moved to the Outer Banks, married and set up housekeeping, he brought down from Pennsylvania his collection. "Joyce and I had to stack things everywhere, including overhead beams," Bornfriend said.

"Then I began using pieces to teach students about American Indian arts and crafts. They have responded enthusiastically in working with real objects rather than just photographs. Their enthusiasm was one of the reasons that led to the decision to find a building to house the collection."

At the time of this writer's visit, two of his Dare County students, Kenneth Williams and Dawn Simmons, were giving a helping hand in arranging a textile display. Both are students at Dare County Alternative School and spoke eagerly about Bornfriend's and the pleasure of helping him at the museum.

Bornfriend has designed a program to use the museum and a classoom building adjacent to the museum to offer lectures and special projects, along with guided field trips. There are facilities for picnics and the grounds are within easy walking distance to the beach.

'We're especially interested in working with school children," he said. "Our approach is to design lessons around specific needs of a student group."

This summer, through August, the Frisco Native American Museum is open daily from 10 a.m. until about 8 p.m. Beginning in September, when the Bornfriends return to teaching, the museum will be open only on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays from 10 a.m. to about 8 p.m.

Admission is free. The museum is located adjacent to the Frisco Post Office.

Visitors or teachers wanting more information are to write to: Carl Bornfriend, Frisco Native American Museum, P.O. Box 399, Frisco, N.C., 27936 or call 995-4440.

Showing Grafitti Art

By RAF CASERT
Associated Press Writer

KNOKKE-HEIST, Belgium (AP) — Six years after he began scrawling graffiti stick figures in New York City subway stations, Keith Haring is spreading his art around the world.

The 28-year-old performance artist recently wound down a hectic, 2½-month tour of Japan and Europe during which he painted a children's hospital in Paris, designed street signs in Tokyo, set up a drawing workshop in a Swiss school, decorated a room for his goddaughter in Monte Carlo and completed a mural at a plush casino in this North Sea resort town.

Although an exclusive casino has little in common with a noisy subway system, a children's hospital or his goddaughter's room, Haring molds all extremes into a coherent art strategy.

"I want to broaden the scope of my work, to reach even more people," he said in an interview as he prepared his summer exhibit at the Knokke-Heist casino.

One way he hopes to achieve that is by making his work more affordable. For instance, Haring is planning to open a new "pop shop" in Tokyo, where T-shirts, watches and other paraphernalia bearing his signature will be sold at low prices. Some of his paintings fetch as much as $30,000.

"If you really want to communicate with the people, you have to go beyond the art world," said Haring, who is regarded in the more established art quarters as nothing more than a fad.

Chalking such stick figure classics as the radiant, crawling child and the barking dog in his cartoon-like style on the black advertising panels of New York's subway stations was one step. The shops are an extension.

His work often encompasses contemporary issues, such as AIDS, apartheid or nuclear arms, and is brought in striking images and colors.

When he opened his first shop in New York in 1985 it was already an insurance against the copying of his graffiti icons.

"In the beginning the copying was a compliment," he said. "Before I made my first T-shirt there were already Keith Haring T-shirts in South America, Asia. It was in a way a response to those things and an approval for me that these things could exist in the commercial world."

However, he does not plan to become a T-shirt mogul and only wants his shops to break even financially. That way, the shops will remain "more of an art experience than a shopping experience."

During his stay here, he stuck to more conventional painting and finished 13 large works in a temporary studio that was once a popular ice cream parlor. The place, although no longer selling ice cream, remained an attraction for youngsters.

Schoolchildren regularly dropped by, asking Haring to scribble drawings on their blue jeans and shirts with felt-tipped pens. Some asked for more elaborate works on their bags or skateboards. Haring, looking messy amidst pots of acrylic and empty canvases, always obliged.

"Working with children gives me a perspective and keeps me from getting bogged down in the art world and its politics," he said.

The constant contact with youngsters keeps him on his toes and gives him positive energy, he said. He likes the idea of making a small drawing which might then be engraved in the child's mind forever.

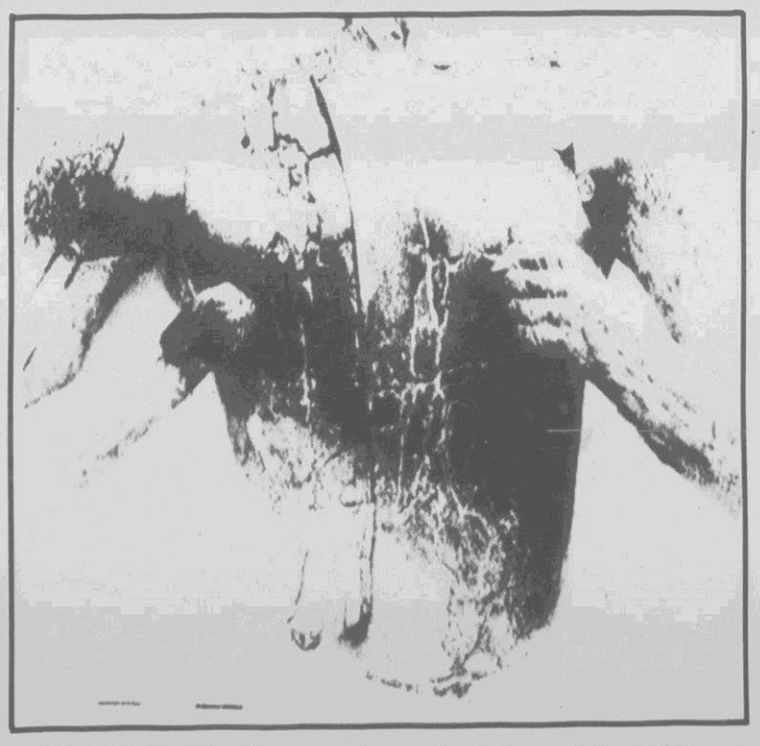

Much of his work during the tour was anything but small. He did a mural here, spanning a wall of an inside hall, full of dragons and caricatures of cigar smoking gamblers playing roulette and throwing dice.

In one corner of the mural, he copied two masked apples of Belgian surrealist Rene Magritte. The casino already has a mural by Magritte, a smaller wall by fellow surrealist Paul Delvaux and sculptures by Nikki de Saint Phalle. It has also been host to such greats as Picasso, Miro and Dali.

ROMANTIC LANDSCAPES

BIGGEST IVORY — The torso and arms of a 3,500-year-old ivory figure excavated last month at Palaikastro in Crete, dates from a period when the island's Minoan civilization reached its artistic peak. The figure is the biggest Minoan ivory ever found and also is the earliest example of "Chryselephantine" sculpture where ivory figures were clad in gold leaf. (AP Laserphoto)

Muriel Resnick's Play Premieres At ECU Next Week

Thoughts From A Playwright, An Actress On A New Play

By CLAY DEANHARDT
Reflector Staff Writer

Muriel Resnick, playwright, says: "North Carolina is actually becoming the first step. There have been a lot of plays done at Duke. It used to be New Haven and Boston, but it isn't any more."

The first step Ms. Resnick is referring to is the one plays take on the way to Broadway and the big time. Finding a place to premier, finding public acceptance, and finding a producer are all part of it.

She should know. Ms. Resnick, currently a resident of Beaufort, is the author of the sucessful play "Any Wednesday," which was a Broadway smash and also the first play she ever wrote. Now she is trying her hand again with "Let's Lunch," to be world premiered next week as part of the East Carolina University Summer Theater.

Starring in the play as Cece will be Karen Grassle, best known for her role as Carolyn Ingalls in "The Little House on the Prarie" television series.

"It's (the play) about the very, very rich ladies who live in New York, who all have lunch at their favorite restaurant, which has become sort of like a club to them, and their maneuverings," Ms. Resnick said.

"You know," Ms. Grassle continued, "it's the society ladies; the people who arrange the big charity balls and wear the designer gowns. There's quite a lot of press about these people the last six or seven years."

"Not much is known about the ins and outs of how that world works," she added. "And its very interesting for me reading some of the research and talking to Muriel, who's gone into her first hand experience and come out with this play."

Ms. Resnick said the play has taken three years to write. The first she spent lunching, the next writing and the third rewriting. "And here we are," she laughed.

"I think that people, for whatever reason, always enjoy seeing women exposing their ... claws. And in this play, that certainly happens – but in a very stylish way. There's no cat fight here. There's no barroom brawl. This is extremely high style and grace and a comedy of the way people behave. And it's a wonderful look at the way people can say they're doing one thing but really they're up to something else," Ms. Grassle explained.

"I play the most experienced, the most practiced society lady of the group. She's been married to the third richest man in the country, and now she's best friends with the woman who is married to the third richest man in the country."

"It's a lot of fun," she said. "When you contrast this character with Carolyn Ingalls, who's so kind to everybody, so generous in spirit, so much a part of the solution to every problem, so focused on her relationship to God and family.

"And sex," Ms. Resnick added.

"It's a complete contrast for me," Ms. Grassle said "I think that people enjoy seeing actors transform themselves. Now they're like this and then they're completely different, and I think that's part of the fun for the people in Greenville. As they go to each play they see actors playing different characters."

Both women commented on the professionalism at the Summer Theater and on the support Greenville gives it. Ms. Resnick said the theater building itself was wonderful, especially noting the acoustics.

Ms. Grassle noted that theater is a lot of work, but not as grueling as working on TV. She said comedy was especially a lot of work. "Your attention and your energy and your mind have to be focused all the time," she said.

"And these characters," she added, "they're so conscious of how they look and how they act and how they're coming across."

What Ms. Resnick knows about plays, Ms. Grassle knows about hard work. In addition to her role in "Little House," she has starred in several TV movies and even co-wrote one, "Battered." Recently she has been performing mostly on the stage, including runs in New York, Los Angeles and regional theaters. All this while she is trying to raise her three-year-old daughter, Lily, who is in Greenville now with her mom.

"I started dancing and performing and all that when I was really just a small kid," Ms. Grassle said. "Putting on my own plays, making up stories and dancing around in costume.

"I was the kid out in left field when they were trying to play baseball, you know, doing pirouettes. But I never admitted that would be a life for me until I was in college. I was 19, and I finally said this is what I want to do."

Ms. Resnick became a playwright more gradually, beginning as the author of such books as "Life Without Father." "Any Wednesday" was the first play she ever wrote, which makes its critical and public success amazing in a field where few rookies even come close to the real big time.

"Let's Lunch" may be the second Resnick play to make it to Broadway. There will be a producer from New York in the audience sometime during its run here, and she said he has the money and the theater, he's just looking for the play.

So she's not taking any chances. Off to a good foot already (Edgar Loessin, award winning ECU faculty member and producer of Summer Theater, is directing), Ms. Resnick is working closely with the cast and crew to insure the play is the best it can be.

"This is about the fourth or fifth draft (of the play)," Ms. Resnick said, "and it was in pretty good shape. I don't think I've changed anything," she said, referring to the habit of many playwrights that sometimes alter a play dramatically in the middle of rehearsals.

Ms. Resnick talked about the way she writes plays, and why she enjoys it, "Because I'm a visual writer – I've written books too – I always see scenes and I see my characters doing things."

She noted that her ideas for plays come from her own experiences. But, she said, "I don't lunch. If you lunch in New York you have to be dressed for it, you have to be made up, and it just breaks up a writer's day." "Let's Lunch" came from some meals shared when a friend invited her to lunch with a group just across the street from her house in New York, making an offer Ms. Resnick couldn't refuse.

"I was surprised, because they were not axing each other and drawing blood, they were actually networking. And after that, whenever I was invited, I went," she said.

There are no men in the play since it's about a custom belonging to women, but both agree that men should enjoy the play.

"It's a little like a woman being able to visit a private men's club and being able to be a fly on the wall and hear the conversation," Ms. Grassle said.

(Performances of "Let's Lunch" will be nightly Monday through Saturday begining at 8:15 p.m at the McGinnis Theater on ECU campus. Matinees on Wednesday and Saturday begin at 2:15 p.m. Tickets are $12 for evening performances and $10 for matinees with student tickets $5 for matinees. Confederate Soldiers On Duty At State Park

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department
Of Cultural Resources

RALEIGH – From now through Labor Day, visitors to Bentonville Battleground State Historic Site near Newton Grove will be able to talk to Confederate soldiers on duty.

Throughout the summer, the battleground will offer a variety of historical programs, including surgeon's talks, uniform and equipment discussions and artillery displays. The programs will feature Morris Bass of Clinton, a student at Mount Olive College, along with Cliff Tyndall, site programs coordinator. Morris is a member of the First North Carolina Volunteer Infantry and a certified member of the Bentonville artillery crew.

Bentonville Battleground is the site of the largest battle ever fought in North Carolina and the last major Confederate offensive of the Civil War. More than 80,000 soldiers battled for three days in a 6,000 acre area of pine woods and farmland.

The battle marked the only significant attempt by the Confederates to halt the advance of Gen. William T. Sherman's army as it headed north from Savannah, Georgia in the spring of 1865.

During the battle, the farm home of John and Amy Harper was converted into a Union field hospital, treating more than 550 soldiers at the makeshift facility.

The house has been restored as a field hopsital and offers visitors a chance to observe an authentic Civil War medical facility.

All programs are free and open to the public. For details and schedules contact the site at 594-0789.

Bentonville Battleground State Historic Site is located near Newton Grove, three miles north on US 701 and then three miles east on SR 1008.

A Superb 'Lost Colony' Marks The Drama's 50th Anniversary

"LOST COLONY INDIANS" — Brian Wescott, left, as the young Indian Wano amd Robert Midgette as Manteo, are shown in the Spanish moss and live oak trees setting of Roanoke Island, site of the symphonic drama, "The Lost Colony." This season marks the 50th anniversary of Paul Green's drama that encompasses the British court of the late 16th century, the colonists who attempted to settle in the New World, and the Indians encountered on the coast of North Carolina. 1987 is also the 400th anniversary of the arrival in the New World of the ill-fated group who disappeared without trace from the annals of history. (Photo courtesy "The Lost Colony.")

MANTEO — When I saw a performance of the 1987 50th Anniversary season of Paul Green's "The Lost Colony" last Monday evening, it dawned on me that many things contribute to the rewards of this father of all outdoor dramas.

• Nature contributes its ambience to "The Lost Colony" scene. In the brief hush before the spotlight picked up this year's historian, David Jefferson, a trio of whipporwills voiced meloncholy laments from the dark of trees surrounding the stage. From the east came the barely heard whisper of Roanoke Sound water washing the shore immediately behind the play's stage. Crickets chorused summer night music, and moths flitted pale in the beams of strong white lights.

When asked if the whipporwills and crickets provided musical preludes at all performances, Scott Parker said, "Indeed they do. We have trained them to make their appearance. They're on the payroll."

Parker, until recently with theater productions at East Carolina University, is executive director of the Roanoke Island Historical Assocation, which produces the annual symphonic drama.

• One factor instrumental in the productions of "The Lost Colony" is the superbly orchestrated beauty of the dances — those of the Indians, the English gentility and the populace of Devonshire.

Individuals guiding the talented dancers are choreographer Frank Rey, dance captain Mark Fields and combat director Pete Person. Rey has a fine touch for creating dance eminently suitable to the dramatic and entertainment needs of the play.

Fields and Peterson fulfill dual roles — Fields as the Indian Ippowoc and as a member of the dance troupe, and Peterson as a veteran performer in the role of Wanchese.

The essence of spirited celebratory Indian dances, of courtly, formal dances of 16th century England, and sprightly folk dances are all projected with verve and precision.

In brief, the color and spectable of dance sequences in "The Lost Colony" are in themselves sufficient to fill a first-rate program of dance.

• Then there's the music. Veteran music director/arranger Rosalind MacEnulty deserves a lion's share of credit for the musical framework that effectively parallels the underlying drama. Whether it's the exotic chant of Indian braves and maidens during the splendor of the Corn Dance, the lilting tempo of English dances or choral and solo selections, the music succinctly highlights the action, the spoken word.

"For the first time in 24 years," Parker said, "we have a director on site staging the show all summer long. This makes a tremendous difference. The cast loves having Voelpel here at all times, and say that working with him is a super pleasure."

• A point worth mentioning is that in recent years a goodly proportion of the acting, singing and dancing talent in "The Lost Colony" productions are young people who have been trained in the music, dance and theater programs at East Carolina programs.

• And of course, there's the script itself, fashioned half a century ago by the late North Carolina playwright Paul Green. 1927 winner of the Pulitzer Prize for drama, Green scripted "The Lost Colony" pageant for the 350th anniversary of the birth of Virginia Dare, the first English child born in the New World. It premiered July 4, 1937 and established a new genre in American theater, the symphonic historical drama.

Although Green's drama encompasses substantial elements of dance and music, he did not neglect the dramatic basis of history in the 1580s or the darker side of human nature. The dream of greater glory for England nourished by Sir Walter Raleigh; the lure of adventure beckoning hearty souls to brave the unknown; the unyielding stance of Queen Elizabeth; the treachery of the Spaniard Simon Fernando, and the misunderstanding between people of different races and the resulting tragic consequence, are all woven into the drama. And there's comedy in the characters of Old Tom and Agona, the giggly Indian who wins Tom's heart.

Despite some minor variations over the years, "The Lost Colony" remains solidly based on the bedrock of Green's imaginative adaptation of known historical fact and a gifted writer's imagination.

Like all good drama, "The Lost Colony" never grows old. Except for a hiatus during World War II, it has consistently attracted playgoers from every state and from foreign countries.

Perhaps the ultimate tribute to "The Lost Colony" drama is that it continues to draw back time and again those who have previously seen the play.

Whether you're a veteran viewer again attending the drama, or attending for the first time, you'll find the 50th anniversary season production well worth the time, money and effort it takes to get to Roanoke Island.

Here, reenacted at the island site where it actually took place, one experiences the haunting, unsolved mystery of men, women and children who disappeared four centuries ago from the annals of history. In a similar vein, there's the poignant realization that the native Americans too have long gone from the scene.

• It is possible that the whipporwills, the crickets and the flying moths are spirit forms of Indians and colonists who return each summer to give approval of the drama celebrating their long ago loves, dreams, struggles and tragedies?

Whatever the answer, there's no question that "The Lost Colony" well deserves its reputation as the nation's foremost outdoor summer drama.

JERRY RAYNOR

• "The Lost Colony" opened June 12. Performances will be presented nightly at 8:30 p.m. except Sundays through August 29. Directory Of Film Personnel To Be Published Soon

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Film Office, the agency responsible for recruiting and assisting movie and television production in the state, today announced plans to broaden its directory of publication to include listings of resident film, video, and other production crew and technicians skilled in the industry.

"The availability of experienced crew people has become an important factor in bringing production to the state," said Bill Arnold, Film Office director. "We believe a listing of individual lighting, sound, grips, make-up, camera operator, production assistant, and other technicians will be an added inducement to film companies considering coming to the state. In addition, it will provide economic opportunities directly to North Carolinians proficient in the required skills."

Experienced production professionals from all areas of the state are requested to submit resumes by August 10. Resumes need to contain name, address, telephone number, specific capabilities, credits with references, and union affiliation (if any). Mail resumes to the North Carolina Film Office at 430 North Salisbury St., Raleigh, N.C. 27611.

The Film Office's directory is an annual publication listing locations, production companies and other film-related services for the use of businesses interested in filming in North Carolina.

North Carolina has become a booming production center since the establishment of the Film Office in 1980, having generated an estimated $921.5 million impact to the state's econonmy from film, TV and commercial production, according to the state Department of Commerce. Last year alone, $266.5 million in production activity occurred in North Carolina, making it one of the top five production states in the nation.

Jazz In A Soviet Night Club

By Gary Lee
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

MOSCOW — It features a menu of soft drinks and caviar, a motley crowd of Russians, Soviet Georgians and Latin Americans and a program of imitation Ray Charles and home-bred saxophone.

The Bluebird, (in Russian Siniaia Ptitsa) the first jazz club to open in Moscow in two decades, could turn out to be the most curious mix of American and Russian cultures since vodka and orange juice were splashed together and called a screwdriver.

In this country where rumors of one Kremlin leader's love of Benny Goodman helped boost his reputation, the Bluebird's opening last month marked merely the latest curious turn in an ongoing cultural thaw.

Banned as decadent and subversive during the reign of longtime Soviet dictator Joseph Stalin, jazz clubs — including the original Bluebird — first opened here in the post-Stalin thaw of the early 1960s, only to close down at the end of that decade of cultural experiments.

Reopening in early May in the same dark basement near the Kremlin, the Bluebird already has the makings of an institution in the tradition of its counterparts the world over.

It is the only public testing ground for would-be Soviet jazz talent, for instance. Bluebird manager Vartan Tonoyan, an Armenian who is all of 26, scouts local Komsomol or young Communist clubs for talent and opens the show with them.

One evening a 16-year-old from Tbilisi begged his way in the door and ended up bringing the house down with piano renditions of big-band favorites.

Next week, a whole evening will be devoted to a 25-year-old, top-quality Soviet saxophonist who is leaving soon for the United States with his American bride.

Other regular performers include moonlighting classical musicians or semi-professional jazz acts hardly known outside of the Soviet Union's vibrant jazz grapevine.

Snacks of caviar and salami sandwiches and soft drinks and alcohol-free cocktails are $2 more.

With a nightly intake of only 200 rubles ($300), Tonoyan says he hardly has money to pay for top-rated Soviet jazz musicians. "People play for free, here," he said in an interview, "but I pay them something anyway. I don't know how you could expect people to play like that without giving them something."

The club is a testament to the persistence of Soviet jazz enthusiasts against the official Communist Party stand on jazz, which is ambivalent at best.

For Tonoyan, its opening was a childhood dream come true. He was introduced to jazz at the age of 12 when his grandfather took him to a Duke Ellington concert in Moscow. "And this," he says, waving his arm around the club, "is the result."

In between came years of battles with the local Komsomol, which ended with an agreement to fund the club in exchange for a handsome share of the profits.

A small clique of Soviet jazz aficionados is already using the Bluebird to help hoist their underground movement at least to basement level. Arriving for Wednesday night jam sessions from as far off as the capitals of the Ukraine and Estonia, they gather at the Bluebird to swap such things as old Nat King Cole albums and anecdotes from the American jazz magazine Downbeat.

On any given night, the Bluebird is also jammed with diplomats from such far-flung jazz havens as Rio de Janeiro, Stockholm and Chicago.

Though public jazz concerts lately have been on the rise in Moscow, jazz clubs are actually more of an established tradition in outlying cities such as Leningrad and Tallinn. Jazz festivals in provincial capitals attract more talent and attention, for some reason, than the Moscow festival.

Moscow Komsomol officials attempted to censor the Bluebird's program, Tonoyan charged in an interview. "They asked me to submit a list of what's going to be played," he said, "but how can you do that in a jazz club? I tell them to come listen for themselves."

Tonoyan's next step is to seek a wider role in the running of the club through new Soviet laws encouraging more cooperatives. As an art form, jazz gained a bit in reputation in the Soviet Union in the early 1980s, when rumors spread that then Kremlin leader Yuri Andropov had a taste for Benny Goodman and Scotch.

But with the Bluebird's opening, Soviet jazz fans hope the music has won acceptance here at last.

Q. Which law school are Caroline and John Kennedy, children of the late President, attending? Is it Harvard, from which their famous father was graduated, or didn't John F. Kennedy go to law school?—N.S., Atlanta, Ga.

A. Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg, 29, attends Columbia University Law School in New York City. Her brother, John, 26, attends New York University Law School. Their father, the late President John F. Kennedy, attended Harvard University (1936-40), where he majored in political science and was graduated cum laude. He did not, however, enroll in any law school.

Q. Joan Collins, the actress who stars in "Dynasty," is supposed to be a very sharp cookie. Why, then, did she not make Peter Holm, her last husband, sign a prenuptial contract before she married him? That way she could have avoided so much financial trouble and so much bad publicity. —Ricki H., La Habra, Calif.

A. Peter Holm reportedly did sign a prenuptial agreement in 1985, limiting him to 20% of Joan's income, which totaled about $5 million last year. It has been said that the actress wanted, however, to have her 13-month marriage to Holm annulled. If the marriage were annulled, the prenuptial agreement would be invalid, and Holm would get little or nothing.

Q. One of the most influential movers and shakers in the Ronald Reagan White House is said to be Art Culvahouse, a protégé of former U.S. Sen. Howard Baker Jr. Do you have a brief rundown on Culvahouse?—R. Simpson, Madison, Wis.

Walker/Gamma-Liaison

Arthur Culvahouse Jr.

A. Arthur Boggess Culvahouse Jr., 39, is President Reagan's lawyer. He was brought into the White House on March 3, shortly after Howard Baker became Reagan's chief of staff. Baker, 61, regards his protégé as one of the sharpest and shrewdest legal beagles in the nation. He relies on Culvahouse to protect the President's interests in the course of the Iran-Contra hearings—no small job.

Born July 4, 1948, in Athens, Tenn. (pop. 12,300), Culvahouse is known as "A.B." by friends, family and associates. He was graduated from the University of Tennessee in 1970 and earned his law degree from New York University in 1973. After a stint as Baker's legislative aide and chief counsel for three years, "A.B." worked for the law firm of O'Melveny & Myers. When Howard Baker retired from the U.S. Senate in 1984 and joined the law firm of Vinson & Elkins, he prevailed upon Culvahouse to follow him there. And when Baker subsequently signed on with Reagan, he induced "A.B." to join him at the White House. Obviously Culvahouse and his mentor admire and respect each other.

Culvahouse married the former Mari Louise Vatter of Louisville in 1977. He now lives in Alexandria, Va., with his wife and their three children—Sarah, 8, Art, 5, and Elizabeth Sue, 2.

Q. Did Nancy Reagan attend the wedding of Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson in England in 1986? If so, I would be interested in knowing what mode of transportation she used and who paid for it.—H.P., Clearwater, Fla.

A. Mrs. Reagan flew to London for the ceremony. Her transportation, and that of her entourage, was paid for by the U.S. government.

Q. How tall is the actor Michael J. Fox, and how tall are his parents? As small as he is, can Michael ever make it as a lover-type leading man?—Cindy Harris, Hamilton, Bermuda.

A. Michael J. Fox is 5 feet 4. His father, William Fox, is 5 feet 6; his mother, Phyllis, is 5 feet. Fox, 26, can make it as "a lover-type leading man" as he grows older, wears lifts in his shoes and plays opposite short actresses. Alan Ladd, Al Pacino, Dustin Hoffman and James Cagney all beat the shortness syndrome, albeit with the cooperation of clever cameramen.

A. Military lives lost to "hostile action" during the Carter Administration—8; during the Reagan Administration, as of this writing—324.

Platzer/Images

Q. Haven't seen or heard much about Raquel Welch, the sex bomb of the 1960s. Has she abandoned her screen career?—Timmy Church, Kansas City, Mo.

A. Raquel Welch, 46, recently worked in an NBC-TV motion picture, "Right To Die," in which she plays a psychology professor who, stricken by Lou Gehrig's disease, decides that she prefers death.

A report on cruelty in the puppy mills

Should You Buy That Doggie In The Window?

FOR MANY PEOPLE, HAPPINESS IS A WARM PUPPY. PET STORES WORK HARD TO PROMOTE THIS IDEA, CREATING THE IMPRESSION THAT WHAT THEY ARE SELLING IS COMPANIONSHIP, AFFECTION AND LOVE. THIS CAN BE PERFECTLY TRUE. BUT BEHIND THE REASSURING IMAGES, THE WAGGING TAILS AND SKILLFUL MARKETING, THERE IS AN UGLY SIDE TO THE HIGHLY PROFITABLE RETAIL PUPPY TRADE.

The vast majority of the 350,000 to 500,000 purebred puppies that will be sold this year in pet shops—at prices ranging from $300 to well over $1000—will have been produced by Midwestern commercial breeders in facilities widely known as "puppy mills."

A PARADE investigation of the puppy mill-pet shop trade revealed the following:

• Breed dogs suffer a variety of abuses in many of the puppy mills. One of the most common is lack of adequate shelter to protect them from the fierce heat, heavy rains and bitter cold common in the Midwest. Many spend their lives crammed into old chicken coops, makeshift kennels or small wire cages that sometimes are stacked atop each other. Conditions sometimes are filthy, the dogs are infested with parasites, and many suffer from illnesses or medical conditions that go untreated.

Puppies usually are raised as a cash crop in rural areas, often as a second income for their breeders. Because profit margins are slim, veterinary care is the exception.

• Puppies bound for the pet-shop trade are bred with little concern for passing on genetic defects, personality disorders or other undesirable traits. The goal is quantity, not quality. This does not mean that you can't buy from the store a healthy pup that will make an excellent family pet, but it is a gamble. Veterinarians advise visiting a breeder, examining the pup's parents for health, looks and temperament and checking the conditions in which the litter was raised.

The national breed clubs, in fact, either forbid or discourage their members from selling pups to pet shops. The result: Pet-shop dogs—usually more expensive than those purchased from a local breeder—stand a greater chance of being diseased or of developing crippling congenital defects, such as hip dysplasia.

• The American Kennel Club is the nation's largest registry for purebred dogs and derives millions of dollars each year from registering the litters bred by puppy-mill owners and then recording the pedigrees of the individual dogs after they are purchased. Part of this money goes to underwrite AKC dog shows and trials, which tend to be the province of well-heeled dog fanciers.

The AKC describes itself as an organization devoted to regulating breeders, improving the purity and advancing the welfare of thoroughbred dogs, yet it does virtually nothing to help eliminate the physical abuses and poor breeding practices characteristic of the puppy mills. "Because a dog is kept in appalling conditions, is it any less registerable?" asks Roy H. Carlberg, the club's executive secretary. And, he notes, it is not the AKC's job to police puppy mills.

There is a widespread public assumption that AKC registration assures a healthy, quality animal. Without AKC papers, pet shops are forced to sell pups for considerably less money. However, AKC papers only verify that a pup is the known offspring of registered purebred parents and was born on a certain date. William F. Stifel, the club's president, was asked what he would do if someone applied for AKC papers for a blind, deaf, three-legged purebred pup with hip dysplasia and green fur.

"We would register the dog," Stifel said. "AKC unfortunately does not mean quality."

• Federal law sets minimum standards for housing and care of dogs in wholesale commercial kennels, but the U.S. Department of Agriculture enforces the Animal Welfare Act unevenly. The USDA does not regard inspecting animal facilities as one of its higher priorities. For two years, the agency has unsuccessfully petitioned Congress not to finance the program, so it could drop the responsibility in the hope that the states would take it on.

The Humane Society of the United States has taken the lead among national animal-welfare organizations in exposing the abuses in the puppy mill-pet shop trade and in trying to push the American Kennel Club into more aggressively enforcing the goals of its own charter.

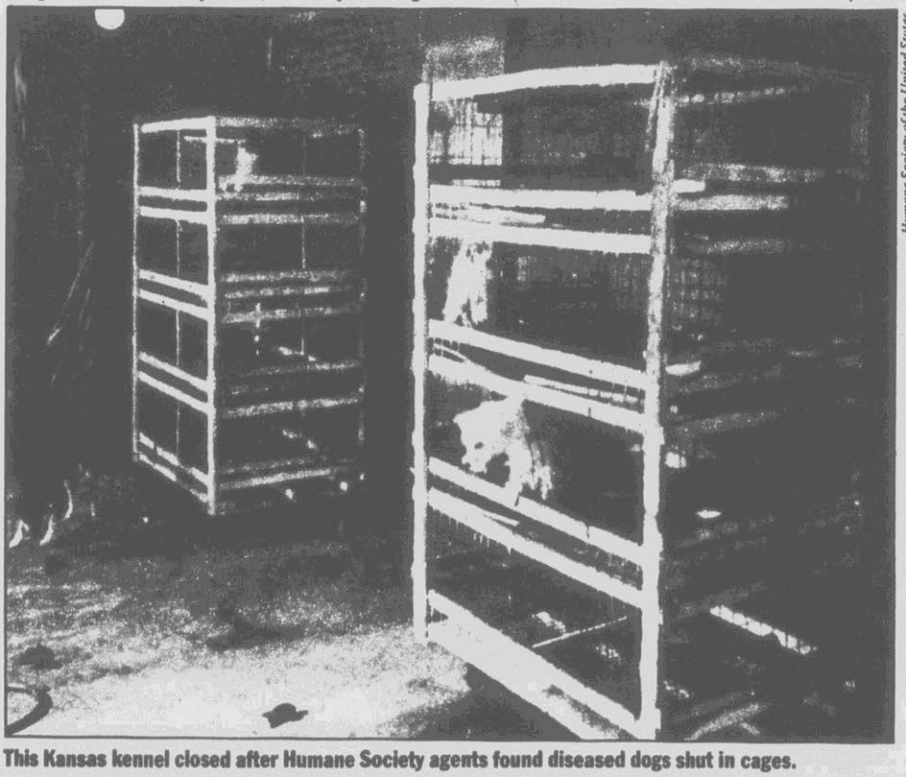

Asserts Robert Baker, a Humane Society investigator: "The AKC is reluctant to go after the puppy mills because it derives millions of dollars from registering these dogs. Fees from these deplorable mass-production mills are underwriting the AKC's prestigious events like the Westminster Kennel Club show."

Baker, a former stockbroker and Thoroughbred horse owner, now works as an undercover agent for the Humane Society. About six years ago, after completing a USDA training course, he posed as a businessman involved in commercial dog breeding and examined 294 puppy mills in seven Midwestern states, using standard federal inspection forms to rate them.

His conclusions: 80 percent had serious deficiencies and only one met all of the requirements of the Animal Welfare Act. As a result, the USDA started cracking down on the mills. Baker has continued to monitor the Midwestern dog breeders but, outside of a few cosmetic changes, he feels there has been little improvement.

"The places look a little better, a little cleaner, but the basic handling and care is the same," he reports. "The USDA is still not aggressively enforcing the law. In some places, their deficiencies border on criminal misconduct."

To get a firsthand look at conditions in the Midwest, I visited a dozen puppy mills in southeast Kansas. They were chosen from the USDA's 1986 listing of some 550 licensed commercial dog breeders, dealers, research facilities and exhibitors in the state. Nationwide, there are about 3000 federally licensed dog breeders and thousands more unlicensed operators who aren't required to be inspected because of their small size, or who simply ignore the law. Using a fake business card and posing as the owner of a chain of East Coast pet stores, I was able to inspect the puppy mills and talk with their owners.

Humane Society of the United States

This Kansas kennel closed after Humane Society agents found diseased dogs shut in cages.

Some puppy mills gave adequate care—but in the worst I saw filthy, skinny dogs tied by short chains to trees

Conditions—to my untrained eye—ranged from adequate to abominable in the dozen randomly chosen facilities.

Three or four were Spartan and makeshift but clean, with dogs kept in outdoor runs or cages combined with small heated indoor quarters that offered protection from the weather extremes. Food and fresh water were available and, chatting with the owners, I could easily detect that they cared for their dogs and tried diligently to provide for them.

At the other extreme were three with conditions disturbing enough for me to request the USDA's chief veterinarian in Kansas to order an immediate inspection. The worst of them was a filthy, trash-strewn compound with 30 or more beagles and other hounds. There were filthy, skinny dogs tied by short chains to trees or old wooden kennels, with others living in open fenced compounds. The only shelter was an old truckbed camper top.

That morning, it was a bone-chilling 6 degrees, and the shivering animals had neither food nor water. At some of the other puppy mills, I had found frozen water bowls, but these dogs didn't even have ice. Checking later, I learned that the USDA had sent three officials to check out the mills I'd complained about. One owner agreed to make improvements, another elected to relinquish his federal license and get out of large-scale commercial breeding. But at this worst place, the government inspectors could not legally go on the property and examine the conditions because the owner had allowed his federal license to lapse in 1985 and—30 dogs to the contrary—was not officially still in the commercial dog business.

If the federal government won't take the lead in ending puppy-mill abuses, whose responsibility is it? Pet shops benefit most from the mass-breeding industry but reject the notion that abuses are widespread or that animals produced in these conditions are inferior to animals bred by local dog fanciers.

"The puppies that come out of pet stores are every bit as healthy," insists Jay Smith, a vice president of the Pet Industry Joint Advisory Council, a pet trade group. "I've never seen any contrary data or studies. Most of this argument is based on emotionalism rather than fact."

Raymond Guyer, executive vice president of Docktors Pet Centers—the largest pet franchise chain in the country, with 245 stores in 36 states—argues that the pups his shops sell aren't show-quality but pet-quality. Docktors will sell about 110,000 puppies this year, most obtained through brokers who buy from Midwestern breeders. Says Guyer: "People want puppies. They don't want to know how they're produced. I will agree, there are some abuses in the system. I've seen some decent [puppy mills], and I've seen some that are absolutely poor facilities, and they should be eliminated, preferably by the USDA with more stiffening of the regulations."

Why won't local breeders sell to the pet trade? "I have no idea," Guyer says. "The Humane Society people criticize us for selling poor-quality puppies. I'd love to be able to buy pups from local show breeders. It's fine and dandy for the Humane Society to conjure up images of puppy mills—it's real helpful for their fund-raising.

I say let's not criticize puppy mills but get together and see what we can do about them."

Does the American Kennel Club, which has regulated the world of thoroughbred dogs for 102 years, have a responsibility to help eliminate puppy-mill abuses? In 1986, the AKC took in more than $16 million, and 81 percent of this was from dog registrations. Exactly how much of that amount came from the puppy mill-pet shop trade and how much from the show-dog breeders is hard to determine. The club's officials say they don't know, but conversations with AKC sources and industry observers suggest anywhere from a third to a half of the registration income is derived from mass-produced pups.

At its headquarters in New York, Executive Secretary Roy Carlberg insisted that the American Kennel Club has neither the responsibility nor the staff to police the puppy mills. The club's nine enforcement investigators spent $2 million last year tracking down phony registration papers and violations of registration rules, resulting in 81 warnings and 32 dog owners losing their AKC privileges. Couldn't the club also penalize the puppy mills that raise dogs in appalling conditions by lifting their AKC privileges—a move that would make their pups virtually unsalable—until they improved their kennels?

"That's a simplistic approach and completely asinine," Carlberg said.

A decade ago—on Aug. 16, 1977—Elvis Presley died at his residence in Memphis, Tenn. He was 42, overweight and overdosed with drugs. To capitalize on the 10th anniversary of Elvis' death, alert entrepreneurs are offering a variety of Presleyana, new and old, ranging from T-shirts to teddy bears.

One new item that has come to our attention is a book scheduled for release next month, Elvis After Life (Peachtree Publishers, Atlanta), in which the author, Raymond Moody Jr., explores the accounts of people who claim to have been in touch with the singer since he died. Some of these individuals seem genuinely disturbed.

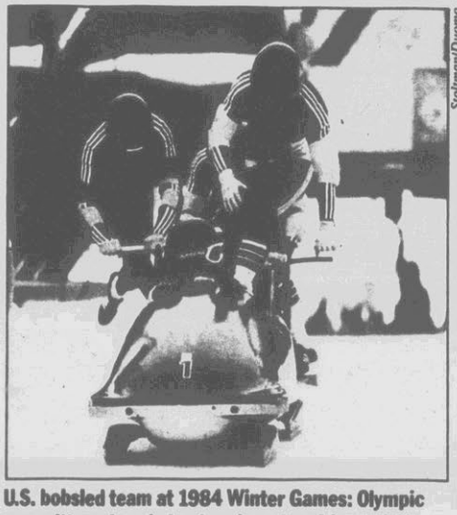

According to Carla Peyton, director of merchandising at Graceland, the Presley residence in Memphis, the best-selling Elvis articles to date have been postcards at 35 cents each, T-shirts at $9 each, and ceramic mugs at $4.99 and $5.99. The only book on Elvis for sale at Graceland is Priscilla Presley's autobiography, Elvis and Me, at $16.95. Priscilla, incidentally, is one of the executors of Elvis' will.

After meeting in Switzerland, the International Olympic Committee recently announced its official candidates to hold the Winter Olympics in 1994: Anchorage, Alaska; Berchtesgaden, West Germany; Lausanne, Switzerland; Lillehammer, Norway; Östersund, Sweden; and Sofia, Bulgaria. The host city will be selected in September 1988.

Calgary, Canada, is the host city for the '88 Winter Games, while Albertville, France, will hold them in 1992—the last year to feature both Olympics. Starting with '94, the Winter Games will alternate with the summer Olympics, which will follow in 1996.

On Selecting a Hospital

Physicians say that the best hospital in which to undergo complex surgery is a high-volume facility where 200 or more operations of the type you need are performed annually. In such hospitals, according to a study of coronary-bypass operations, the procedure usually is safer, cheaper and faster—and the death rate during and after surgery is lower.

The study was financed by Blue Shield of California and published recently in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Curtain Coming Down on Sex Comedy

After 16 years and more than 6700 performances, the world's longest-running comedy, No Sex Please—We're British, is approaching the end of its run in London. The final curtain will descend on the show on Sept. 5, largely because of dwindling audiences, most of which have consisted of American tourists in the last five years.

The lightweight plot of No Sex Please involves a suburban couple and their reaction to a package of Scandinavian pornography. The cornball farce opened in 1971 to bad notices but gradually developed into a tourist attraction. Over the years, however—as the permissive society raised the sophistication level of visitors to London—the show has been badmouthed as boring, tedious, insipid and feeble. American travel agents, after bravely sitting through the show at the Duchess Theatre in Covent Garden, advised their clients to "skip it," which apparently many have.

Three women fly a 727 into history

Who's Driving This Plane?

Gwendolen Cates

Beverley Bass, 35, American Airlines' first—and youngest—woman captain. "At 8 years old, my wish was to land a plane in San Francisco at midnight," she recalls.

By Michael Ryan

JUST BEFORE DAWN ON DEC. 29, 1986, American Airlines Flight 417, a Boeing 727, took off from Washington National Airport. It climbed to altitude, cruised and landed in Dallas three hours later—all pretty unremarkable. But Capt. Beverley Bass, First Officer Terry Clairidge and Flight Officer Tracy Prior had just made history—as the first all-woman cockpit crew on one of America's major airlines.

Only 14 years ago, there were no women pilots on the major U.S. airlines. Today, there are around 400—out of 40,000—and the number is growing. Many have stories of remarkable perseverance.

Take Beverley Bass, for example. American Airlines' first woman captain, she is also, at 35, its youngest. She has wanted to fly for as long as she can remember. "When I was 8 years old," she says, "my parents asked me, if I had one wish, what would it be? I told them it would be to land a jet in San Francisco at midnight." By 1971, Bass was attending college in Fort Worth during the day and taking flying lessons afternoons and evenings. When she graduated in 1974, she had a commercial flying job waiting for her—with a Texas mortician. "I flew bodies in a single-engine Bonanza," she says. "Then I flew night freight out of Love Field from 9 p.m. until 3 a.m. I flew canceled checks, Fotomat film and airplane parts. I never saw any women airline pilots. I just didn't think I could get the job."

Or consider Kathleen Wentworth, now a United co-pilot. In the early '70s, she was a deputy district attorney in the San Francisco area. "I started flying lessons and law school within a few weeks of each other back in 1970," she says. "There were no women airline pilots, so it wasn't a career choice I could make, but it was something I had always wanted to do." By the time she had completed three years as a prosecutor, she also had racked up 500 hours of flying. Then she heard that the airlines were starting to hire women. Although she was eight licenses and thousands of hours away from meeting the minimum requirements, she quit the D.A.'s office. "I didn't want to be 50 years old and look back and say, 'I wish I had tried something else,'" she explains.

Unlike most male pilots, who until recently got their training for free by joining the military, women—who have been accepted for military flight training only for about a decade—usually have taken lessons privately, paying tens of thousands of dollars to meet the requirements of the airlines.

Almost every major airline now has at least one woman flying for it; some of the newer lines even have a fair share of women captains. The airlines have come a long way since Helen Richey, the first woman pilot for a major American commercial airline. Hired by Capitol Airlines in 1934, Richey resigned after 10 months—the male pilots refused to let her in the union and then opposed Capitol's use of nonunion labor.

Forty years passed before the airlines decided to try again, and women like Wentworth and Bass were just waiting for the chance. "I had to have perfect vision, EEGs, EKGs, a brain scan, psychological testing and fly a simulator," Bass recalls. "Plus a minimum of 1000 hours of flight time. I was interviewed before a board of five captains. They asked me what American Airlines stock was selling for. I knew. They asked me the brand name of the propeller on a plane I had flown—to see if my flying time was legit. I knew. They said to me, 'If the captain wants to smoke a cigar and you hate cigar smoke, what would you do?' I said I'd let him smoke." She passed with flying colors.

Bass recalls that some male pilots were skeptical of her abilities but says, "After you make a couple of landings and takeoffs, they accept you." Still, when Wentworth and a male flight attendant spoke at a high school, half the kids asked the man questions about becoming a pilot and asked her about becoming a flight attendant—a slight second only to the little old lady on one flight who whispered to a companion, "Isn't it nice that they let the captain bring his secretary along?"

"I didn't want to look back at 50 and say, 'I wish I had tried something else,'" says one woman pilot.

Perhaps in reaction, many women pilots seem even more determined to prove themselves. Like all pilots, they go through rigorous flight tests and written exams every six months, yet they often feel they are judged by a stricter standard. "Every landing has to be perfect, every takeoff has to be perfect," Bass says. Ten years ago, she co-founded the International Society of Women Airline Pilots. One of its missions is to see that young women learn how they can become pilots.

Flight 417 had the distinction of being both a first and a last; the three women in the cockpit will probably never fly together again. The month after that milestone, Flight Officer Tracy Prior was promoted to co-pilot. Which means there's at least one opening for a well-qualified pilot who loves to fly.

30 MILLION MEN WANT TO KNOW:

Is Baldness Reversible?

YUL BRYNNER WORE his baldness like a crown. Telly Savalas sports his clean pate as a mark not only of his trade but also of virility. Don Rickles jokes about his baldness. But to 30 million American males, lost hair signifies lost youth and vigor.

No wonder a happy frenzy followed the news, about two years ago, that The Upjohn Co. of Kalamazoo, Mich., had a drug that, smeared on the head, could result in the growth of hair, real hair.

Investors ran to cash in on the "baldness cure," sending the price of shares of Upjohn stock skyrocketing. Even the modest hair-growth results reported by Upjohn in April 1986 set off a wild search among pharmaceutical companies. We might soon see salves that produce more hair the way fertilizer produces more crops.

Upjohn's drug, minoxidil, a compound developed to relieve high blood pressure, is to be marketed for baldness as Rogaine, as soon as the Food and Drug Administration okays it. A powerful drug when taken by mouth, minoxidil seems to be safe if applied to the scalp in 2 percent or 3 percent solutions. However, the FDA has been slow in approving the drug and in June 1986 dubbed Upjohn's April report an exaggeration. Says the FDA's Michael Shaffer: "Any baldness preparation is a cosmetic substance, not essential to health or life. So it wouldn't be reasonable to allow it to be marketed if it carries much risk."

Now the evidence is in, substantiating that minoxidil does grow scalp hair—but not for everyone. According to Upjohn, one-third of its users grow hair, one-third grow fuzz, and one-third show no results at all. Still, millions of men are willing to enter this hair lottery, even though full treatment will cost about $1000 a year for life.

Jonathan Flaxer, 33, a Manhattan attorney, applied minoxidil to his scalp for three months. He reported, "I think I've stopped the loss of hair that I do have. The hair that was thinning seems to be coming back. There is a little new fuzz, and even a few new hairs. I consider it a success."

Flaxer has male-pattern baldness, meaning he loses hair from the front and crown, ending up with a patch of skin surrounded on three sides by hair. Doctors call it androgenetic baldness. "Andro" refers to male sex hormones that may cause the condition; "genetic" means that the tendency is inherited.

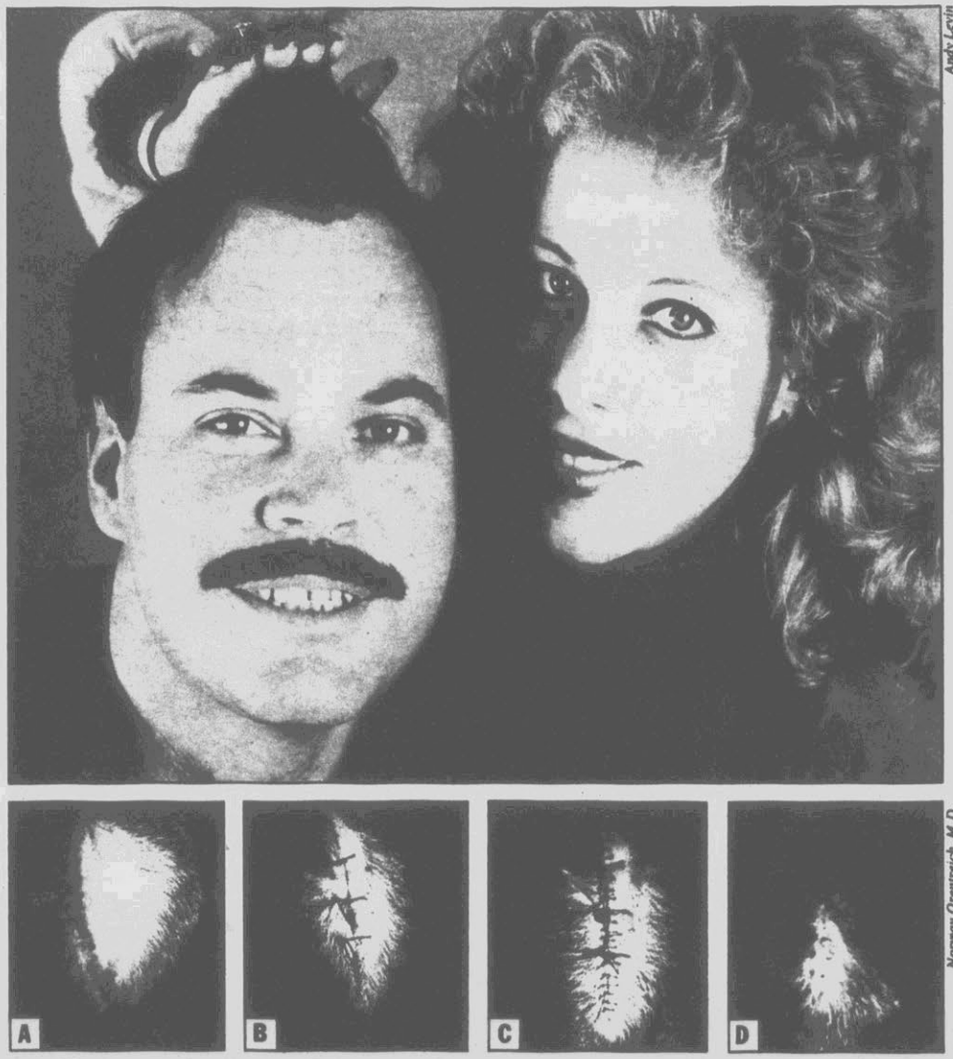

Dr. Norman Orentreich, professor of dermatology at New York University Medical School in Manhattan, says that a particular male sex hormone shrivels the follicles, the organs that grow hair. That hormone is called dihydrotestosterone, which is produced by the skin from the primary male sex hormone, testosterone.

As men age, the hair-growing follicles on the top of the head become more and more sensitive to dihydrotestosterone. It's the individual's hormones that cause baldness—not excessive shampooing, wearing a hat or wig or failing to let the scalp breathe, as many myths say. And no salve, ointment, jelly, soap, massage or electrical treatment will restore lost hair.

Everybody loses hair all the time. Normally, the hair follicle produces hair protein (it's not alive—it's a dead chemical) for about 1000 days and then rests for three months. About 10 percent of your follicles are resting at the same time, so, from the 100,000 follicles on your scalp, you lose 50 to 100 hairs a day.

Dr. Orentreich hopes to find drugs that will block the male sex hormone. Unfortunately, the anti-hormone drugs now available feminize men by destroying their libido, stimulating breast growth, raising the pitch of the voice and eliminating facial hair. Most men find this too high a price for a full head of hair.

Nobody knows yet how minoxidil works, but it doesn't seem to interfere with the hormone system. So you don't get the side effects of anti-hormone medications. Orentreich reports that a drug developed in Europe, cyproterone ace-

John Albanese and his wife, Lisa, like his new crop of hair—grown following scalp-reduction surgery and hair-plug transplants. In scalp reduction, the bald area (A) is cut from front to back and strips of skin are removed (B). Then the hair-bearing sides of the scalp are pulled up (C) and sutured together (see top left of photo) to reduce the bald area. Hair plugs later are implanted (D) to fill in bald spot.

HAIR LOSS—IT'S A QUESTION OF HEREDITY, AND SCIENCE HAS SOME ANSWERS

BY EARL UBELL

tate, also may stimulate scalp-hair growth with fewer of the feminizing effects. It's too early to tell.

With surgery, most bald men can have as much hair as they want without chemical treatment. There are several effective methods that can repopulate the scalp follicles for $3000-$5000—cheaper than lifelong minoxidil treatments.

In 1952, using local anesthetic, Orentreich transferred patches of scalp skin from one part of the head to another. He found that a plug of scalp—about a tenth of an inch in diameter—continued to grow hair when cut from the side or back of the head and transplanted to the bald region. Some patients' patches have continued to grow hair for 25 years.

Thousands of men have had hair transplants with few side effects. But because the plugs are arranged in rows, they sometimes resemble an orchard. To produce an even hairline, doctors now fill in the spaces between the larger plugs with pieces of skin containing one or two hairs. Sometimes, to reduce the area of baldness, scalp-reduction surgery is done. Strips of bald skin are cut, front to back, and the hair-bearing sides of the scalp are sutured together (see photos). Plugs are then implanted to fill in the remaining bald area.

And now there's a new method for patients whose scalps are too tight for reduction: Dr. Sheldon S. Kabaker of the University of California at San Francisco implants a deflated balloon under the hairy skin of the scalp, then inflates it with sterile water. As the patient wears the balloon for six to eight weeks, the skin gradually stretches out. Then Dr. Kabaker performs scalp-reduction.

Patrick Haro, 38, a physician's assistant in Oakland, Calif., says the balloon didn't really hurt; it was just annoying. "It looks fabulous," he says. "I'm on my way to get my second haircut. The change is so dramatic—to have hair where you didn't have it before."

From Japan comes the method of inserting thousands of plastic hairs under the scalp and locking them there. A needle pushes each fiber under the skin and ties the single hair in a knot. Each year, however, about 20 percent of these hairs fall out. On average, they must be fully replaced every five years.

Some technicians weave plastic hairs into the remaining natural hairs, which are pulled tight across the scalp. Dermatologists fear that hair pulled too tightly will fall out, increasing the area of baldness.

Japanese doctors report few of the massive infections that occurred when American plastic-hair implanters tried the method several years ago. The Japanese have used the system for 13 years, but American doctors are still wary.

In all, there is nothing wrong with going bald or wearing a toupee. But many men want real hair. And science may be on the way to supplying that demand.

Monstrous Film—It Is To Laugh

Bruce McBroom

Gill-Man, Frankenstein, Dracula, the Mummy, Wolfman and their brave foe

A mummy has disappeared from a museum. A desperate man is asking the police to lock him up because, when the moon comes out, he's going to turn into a wolf. The adults don't take this seriously. But some savvy kids realize there are monsters in town. They form a squad to battle them and save the world from disaster, in the horror-comedy The Monster Squad.

• Also pitching in to save the world this summer is the Man of Steel (played again by Christopher Reeve). In Superman IV: The Quest for Peace, he battles Nuclear Man while his alter ego, Clark Kent, is courted by two women: Lois Lane (Margot Kidder) and the daughter of the owner of the Daily Planet (Mariel Hemingway). Not bad for a schizophrenic.

• In Maid to Order, Ally Sheedy stars as a Beverly Hills rich brat who's forced to become a maid. Should we take up a collection?

IN STEP WITH: Kim Basinger

BY JAMES BRADY

BORN: Dec. 8, 1953, in Athens, Ga.
PERSONAL: Married painter Ron Britton in 1982.
FIRST JOB: Model with Ford Model Agency at age 17.
FILMS: Hard Country, 1981; Mother Lode, 1982; Never Say Never Again, 1983; The Man Who Loved Women, 1983; The Natural, 1984; Fool for Love, 1985; 9½ Weeks, 1986; Blind Date, 1987.
TV: Includes Katie: Portrait of a Centerfold, 1978; the miniseries From Here to Eternity, 1978.

KIM BASINGER pronounces her last name with a long "a" and a hard "g," but with her soft Southern accent, it sounds like bells. She and her husband, the painter Ron Britton, live in Woodland Hills, Calif., in the hills above Malibu.

"It's a nice house," she said, laughing, "but I've built so much onto it, I'll never get my money back. There's a back house where I work, where I work out. And a pool! I bought it for the pool. It's a 45-foot pool, and I do my laps. I bike, I walk, I hike. This is good hiking country. I keep in shape, but none of this 'I have to be at the gym at 5 o'clock' stuff."

BRADY'S BITS

Kim and Ron have seven "kitties" and 10 dogs. Since she comes from a large family, she thought first about having six kids. Then five. Then four. "Now, I don't exactly know," she said. They are thinking about moving east and getting a house on Long Island. "Good," I said. "In East Hampton, I live on the same road with Betty Bacall and Billy Joel and Christie Brinkley. You come east, and we'll throw a barbecue." Kim replied, in that magnolia and honey voice, "I'd like that." It's a date.

She grew up in a family of five kids in Athens, Ga., where the University of Georgia is, and came to New York City as a teenage model after winning a beauty contest. "What a change," Kim recalled. "Riding the subways, and the fumes from the buses, and the nightlife. I had a ball. But it was lonely in the beginning. There were so many kids back home."

Her first major acting job was in a television movie about centerfold models, and then came a starring role in the TV version of From Here to Eternity. Her first film was Hard Country, with Jan-Michael Vincent, but her breakthrough movie was a James Bond thriller opposite Sean Connery. She worked with Burt Reynolds in a comedy and then tried to derail Robert Redford's baseball career as the blond temptress in The Natural.

Herb Ritts

No one has worked harder than Kim the last two years. She made 9½ Weeks, an erotic sado-masochistic story with Mickey Rourke, Fool for Love with Sam Shepard, No Mercy with Richard Gere, Blind Date with Bruce Willis, and any day now she opens in Nadine, a comedy-thriller with Jeff Bridges.

"No Mercy," she told me, "was a nightmare." Not the sapping physical conditions—filming the picture in the Louisiana swamps—but, she said, "because it was very unorganized." She explained: "Everyone had his own idea of the film, his own dream. The director had an idea, the writer... Richard had an idea, I had an idea."

Actors and actresses work in such intimacy and under such pressure, for weeks at a time, I wondered if they saw one another afterward. "Some situations are, 'Thank God I'll never see them again,'" she replied. "Others are different, like Redford. But I don't see many of them again. There's this craziness between women and men. The wives don't want you seeing their husbands again, the husbands don't want their wives seeing the men again. To be married to an actor, you have to be very strong and sure."

No problems with Jeff Bridges, her latest co-star. "If I had to give a list of actors," said Kim, "Jeff would be number one. Or two. I love Jeff. He takes chances."

Kim said she's ready to take chances herself: "I'm not strictly a movie actress. I'll do anything. I'd love to do Broadway. It's misused, but I love television. I'm a musician and a singer. I'd like to do a record."

TODAY HE RECEIVES THE HONOR HE'S BEEN WAITING FOR ALL HIS LIFE. DEATH.

WORLD WAR II WITH WALTER CRONKITE

Narrated by Walter Cronkite

Japan's Kamikaze pilots were unlike any other enemy the U.S. had ever faced. To them, death in battle was the greatest honor. And crashing their planes into Allied craft was the supreme expression of Japanese spirit.

These suicide legions are just part of what you'll see in "The Pacific Campaign," your first videocassette in the landmark series, WORLD WAR II WITH WALTER CRONKITE.

"The Pacific Campaign" starts with Japanese forces widening their stronghold in the Pacific. Then, as you watch, U.S. intelligence breaks a critical Japanese code, enabling us to prepare for the "surprise" attack on Midway and serve Japan the first naval defeat in its history.

The tide of the war continues to turn in favor of the U.S., as American forces establish a stepping-stone pattern of capturing a chain of crucial islands. And with the costly taking of Tarawa, we learn a lesson that will eventually aid us in winning the war.

You'll be aboard U.S. carriers as they capture the Mariana Islands and develop them into sea bases for the powerful new B-29 bombers. You'll watch the U.S. battle valiantly for the island of Iwo Jima. Actual newsreel footage lets you see World War II through the eyes of men who fought it. And this 90-minute videocassette is yours for just $4.95 plus shipping and handling when you subscribe to the series.

As a subscriber, you'll receive one new videocassette approximately every six-to-eight weeks, always for a ten-day, risk-free trial. And each cassette will feature a different chapter of the war. You'll see "The German High Command," "Air War Over Europe," and more. Each cassette will cost $49.95 plus shipping and handling. There's no minimum number of cassettes to buy, and you can cancel your subscription at any time.

This extraordinary video collection is available exclusively through the CBS Video Library. So see World War II like you never have before. Get "The Pacific Campaign" by sending in the coupon. For faster service, use your credit card to order, and call toll free, 1 800 CBS-4804. (In Indiana, call 1 800 742-1200).

UNIQUE COLLECTING OPPORTUNITY!

Coinage history was made . . .

When the U.S. Mint produced 7 different Cents in 1982!

In 1982, for the first time in history, the U.S. Mint produced 7 different Lincoln Cents — due to Large and Small Date varieties, production at 2 different Mints, and a change in metal from copper to zinc. These 7 Lincolns are very difficult to find and assemble on your own.

SENTRY 100ZX RADAR DETECTOR

FOR ONLY $29.95? IF YOU GIVE US YOUR OPINION ON THE NEW 65 MPH SPEED LIMIT

Unbelievable But True!

As part of an enormous nationwide publicity campaign, the USA Buyers Network will offer one million of its most expensive radar detectors — the famous "SENTRY" 100ZX™ — for the unprecedented low publicity price of only $29.95 each — only to the first one million (1,000,000) readers who write to the company address (below) before Midnight Aug. 15, 1987.

National Speed Limit Survey

- ☐ REINSTATE THE 55 MPH LIMIT ON ALL HIGHWAYS
- ☐ CURRENT SPEED LIMITS ARE ADEQUATE
- ☐ INSTATE 65 MPH LIMIT ON ALL HIGHWAYS
- ☐ THERE SHOULD BE NO SPEED LIMITS

These are the same technologically advanced, widely popular RADAR DETECTORS that have been "showcased" in leading magazines and newspapers across America! Designed for use on dashboard or visor, they are suitable for any motor vehicle — cars, vans or trucks. They are the most expensive, top-of-the-line RADAR DETECTORS ever offered by this multi-million dollar firm. Yet they are now being made available — in conjunction with this special "publicity" campaign — at just a fraction of the selling price you'd expect to see by others!

PICKS UP POLICE RADAR INSTANTLY!

The "SENTRY" 100ZX™ RADAR DETECTOR has been especially designed for the professional driver. Housed in a sleek, protective black steel casing are state-of-the-art electronics that pickup — and alert a driver to — the presence of operating police radar. Its controls are simple — just turn it on...and wait for near by police radar to trigger the DETECTOR's two immediate warnings — both a red signal light and audio tone. And because it monitors microwave frequency (the most commonly used radar frequency), the "SENTRY" 100ZX™ RADAR DETECTOR is very discriminating against "false alarms" or unwanted interference.

Each RADAR DETECTOR comes complete with power indicator light, a built-in 7½ foot power cord adapter (to plug into your vehicle's cigarette lighter), plus easy-to-install mounting hardware and instructions. As with every item offered by this major publicity firm, the "SENTRY" 100ZX™ RADAR DETECTOR is covered by the company's money-back guarantee and has a full 2-year consumer warranty. There is a limit of (2) units per address at this low price, but if your request is mailed early enough (before Aug. 10), you may request up to five units. These famous "SENTRY" 100ZX™ RADAR DETECTORS will not be sold at this low price by the company in any retail or department store.

To order, mail your name and address and only $29.95 for each unit. Add just $4.00 for priority one shipping, handling and insurance no matter how many units you are requesting. (Sales tax included in price). Allow up to 60 days for shipment. Void where prohibited by law. Please check with local authorities regarding legality in your area. Mail to:

Marsha Warfield's Night In Court

By Evan Levine

For a show that relies heavily on semi-crude, adolescent jokes brimming with innuendo, NBC's "Night Court" is also frequently very funny. This is thanks largely to the absurdities of the ensemble cast, including Emmy Award-winner John Larroquette and actor-cum-magician Harry Anderson, who operate in a breakneck manic style, and whose antics include everything from performing magic tricks to leading sumo wrestlers into the courtroom. But then there's Roz.

In direct contrast to the high-pitched hysteria of the other characters, Marsha Warfield plays bailiff Roz Russell in a slow, deadpan style that's attention-grabbing for its very lack of showiness. Warfield took over a seemingly jinxed role. Selma Diamond and Florence Halop, who had each played a bailiff in a fiesty, wise-cracking style, died within a short time of each other.

"I came into the show not wanting to compete with people who were already established and knew what they were doing," explained Warfield. "That would have been the quickest way to lose the job."

Warfield claims that delivering her lines in an understated style that harks back to radio comedians was the only way to stand out. "Things were pretty much in a state of flux when I came in," she explains. "I thought of other actors who had come into extablished shows. I remembered when Steve Landesberg joined the cast of 'Barney Miller' as Dietrich, he chose to underplay his role, and he really stood out. I patterned myself after him a little. I took a big risk, but the character was pretty loosely defined, so I thought I'd try."

With a role in a top-20 show and a standup comedy act that she takes on tour across the country, Warfield doesn't worry about such matters as the total lack of reality in the courtroom her character inhabits. "It's a set, she says practically. "It's a TV show. I wouldn't go onto a set of a bedroom and take my clothes off and go to sleep, and I don't go onto this set like it's real courtroom."

Warfield's practicality also extends to her view of herself. "I always knew I could stand up in front of an audience and be funny," she asserts. "But it's like anything else. If you're a doctor you don't have to doctor all the time, and if you're a comedian you don't have to be funny all the time."

So who does she think is funny?

"That's easy," says Warfield. "Me."

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: My husband and I are in a state of constant debate about Max Headroom. I say he is a real person played by Matt Frewer, while hubby says Max is a computer. — LINDA ROBERTSON, CROYDON, PENN.

Actor Matt Frewer plays Edison Carter and is the voice of Max Headroom, Carter's computer-generated alter ego. Frewer, the son of a Canadian Navy officer, is currently appearing in the feature films "Ishtar" and "The Fourth Protocol." He is married to British actress Amanda Hillwood and they live in London.

Dear Michele: In the season finale of "Magnum, P.I," Magnum was shot and, at the end of the episode, we saw him walking into what looked like heaven. Is this the end for Magnum? — BARBARA HERSHEY, FLORENCE, S.C.

Magnum, Higgins and friends will return for their eighth and final season this fall on CBS.

Dear Michele: What was the name of the marshal on "Cimarron Strip"? Is he still living? And if so, what's his age now? — BILLY DYE, SWORDS CREEK, VA.

Stuart Whitman portrayed U.S. Marshal Jim Crown on this CBS oater that ran only during the 1967-68 season. Whitman, 51, continues to take on guest roles in various prime-time series.

Dear Michele: How tall is Robert Conrad? His son, Christian, who co-starred in the TV movie "High Mountain Rangers" with his famous dad, towered over him. Also, please provide some background information on his talented offspring. — SHIRLEY SIGNOR, HERMON, MAINE.

Robert Conrad has never hidden the fact that he's only 5 feet 8 inches tall. "I seem to have always had an audience out there," says the 52-year-old actor. "I think it's because I don't kid the public. I don't wear a hairpiece or elevator shoes. I don't pretend to be 40. And I'm very honest. Like it or not, people always know where I stand on the issues." Christian Conrad never considered a career in acting until he was featured in the 1984 TV movie "Hard Knox" produced by his dad. Although privately coached by Shauna Hoffman, Christian considers his father the best acting coach around. A television production major at Malibu's Pepperdine University, he also excels in football, soccer and lacrosse.

Dear Michele: Elizabeth Montgomery often played dual roles in the "Bewitched" series as both Samantha Stevens and her look-a-like cousin. Was the cousin's name Serena or Sabrina? — C. JONES, NIANTIC, CT.

It was cousin Serena who often got on Samantha's nerves. Montgomery was billed in the credits as "Pandora Spocks" when she played Serena in this imaginative sitcom.

'B&B' AT Five Months: Beautiful, But Not Bold

By Connie Passalacqua

Daytime's newest soap, "The Bold and the Beautiful," is five months old, so it's time to give it a second look. Is it indeed developing into a bold and beautiful show?

As far as beautiful goes, there's no doubt. "B&B" has the most beautiful cast on daytime. Even the most hardened feminist has to swoon at the sight of Ronn Moss (who plays Ridge Forrester). Every other day for the past three months, Ridge has been shown, at various up-close camera angles, sunning his ripply muscled bod by the Forrester swimming pool. His blond brother Thorn (played by Clayton Norcross) frequently joins him, increasing the pleasure for female voyeurs.

But can they act? Well, some of the show's pretty faces have considerable talent. Ethan Wayne, the Duke's son, who plays Storm Logan, has charm and charisma and carries all his scenes beautifully. Of the show's numerous look-alike blondes, Joanna Johnson (who plays put-upon hero Caroline Spencer) has shown great depth. And Teri Ann Linn, who plays the Forresters' only daughter, Kristen, is the only cast member smart enough to show irreverence amid all the heavy goings-on.

TV Chatter

As a classically trained actor who has performed Shakespeare and Chekhov on Broadway, Max Wright is understandably a bit frustrated playing straight man to a furry puppet on "ALF." Wright plays Willie Tanner, the harried husband and father whose home has been invaded by an extraterrestrial from the planet Melmac. When Hotline caught up with him during a lunch break on the set, he admitted he had just had a "terribly difficult morning, so I'm apt to be a bit prejudiced." In fact, Wright got so caught up in his feelings about the show that he inadvertently revealed how ALF is manipulated — despite a ban by the producers. "Puppeteers squeeze under the sofa. There are tiny holes in the floor where other people hide. There are so many holes, the dresser jiggles when you walk by. We call the place 'The Catacombs.'"

This month Wright will take a break from the sitcom to appear in John Guare's "Moon Over Miami," premiering this month in Williamstown, Va. "I play an aging, obsessive FBI agent who keeps J. Edgar Hoover's toupee and eyelashes in a little shrine. It's a comedy about Abscam, Arabs, Cubans and Jewish matriarchs in Miami. I just couldn't wait to get back to the theater with its traditions and values."

For the new fall season, Mark Linn-Baker and Bronson Pinchot, the stars of ABC's "Perfect Strangers," will get new jobs, working on a newspaper. The job change will take them out of the second-hand store they labored in last season. "I think it's a nice improvement for both of us. We're both starting to move up. The producers felt that the store didn't develop a lot of situations," says Linn-Baker, who will be a reporter for the paper while Pinchot's dim-witted Balki will be stuck in the mailroom. On the other hand, Pinchot still has the more comedic role and that great foreign accent. But if Linn-Baker had had his way, he would be in the mailroom now. "When I first read the script, I said, 'This is great! But why don't I play the guy with the funny accent?'"

Dabney Coleman couldn't make it to ABC's affiliates meeting last month in Los Angeles, but his video image did make the scene. Looking like an oversized mustachioed Wizard of Oz, Coleman appeared on a giant TV screen and talked to the affiliates about his title role in the new ABC sitcom "Slap Maxwell." Although the show has a 13-week commitment from the network, no other actors had been cast, and the series hadn't started shooting yet. Coleman described Slap as a "newspaper reporter who's controversial, two-fisted and a bit of a rabble-rouser." ABC Entertainment President Brandon Stoddard added, "He's the most egotistical character on TV or in film." Since there was no clip of the show available, the promotion department screened scenes from Coleman's film hits. The actor reappeared on screen after the homage and immediately started complaining. "Why didn't you show 'On Golden Pond'? What about 'War Games'"?

Stephen Furst, who plays Dr. Eliot Axelrod on "St. Elsewhere," recalls meeting dethroned talk-show host Joan Rivers at an NBC function shortly after she began substituting for Johnny Carson on the "Tonight Show." According to Furst, Rivers told him, "I have one word of advice. Cash your check as soon as you get it."... Sports commentator Howard Cosell wants to outlaw boxing because ofits brutality. He pooh-poohs those who say the sport will just go underground if it's outlawed. "Where are they going to fight? In a cave?"

BROLIN STARS

James Brolin plays a man presumed dead under mysterious circumstances in "Intimate Betrayal," an NBC movie that recently completed production in Vancouver. Melody Anderson plays the man'swife, who learns some shocking secrets of her husband's past and discovers that he may still be alive. Scheduled for telecast during the 1987-88 season, this mystery thriller also stars Pamela Bellwood of "Dynasty" and Joe Spano of "Hill Street Blues."

SOAP OPERA WEEK

School never gave 'Y&R' actor a role

By Kimberly Redmond

I would appreciate it if you could give me a few facts about Thom Bierdz, the handsome young actor who portrays Phillip Chancellor on "The Young and the Restless." - K.M., Gastonia, N.C.

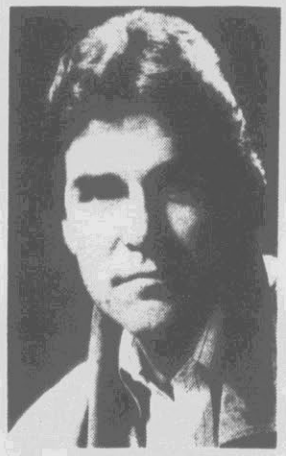

Thom Bierdz

The role of Phillip Chancellor was Bierdz's first recurring professional acting role. His previous experience included a small part in the film "St. Elmo's Fire," and a guest-starring role on TV's "Highway to Heaven." In high school, Bierdz auditioned for, but was never cast in plays. He headed for Hollywood right after graduating.

Whatever happened to the character of Kyle Sampson (played by Larkin Malloy) on "Guiding Light"? I missed a few episodes and when I saw the show again he was gone. - D.C., Roanoke, Va.

Kyle returned to New York City after realizing things weren't going to work out romantically for him and Reva Lewis (Kim Zimmer). Malloy is now playing Travis Montgomery on "All My Children."

Larkin Malloy

What has Brian Patrick Clarke been doing professionally since his departure from "General Hospital"? - P.S., Barnesboro, Pa.

Clarke recently completed shooting a role in the feature film "Private Road." He will also be included in the NBC movie "Eight Is Enough Reunion." Clarke portrayed baseball player Merle "The Pearl" Stockwell in the series "Eight Is Enough."

ATTN: Joe Styron - Display Advertising

Dear Joe,

There are many ways for me to spend my advertising dollar. But to find an effective way is an entirely different story.

Last year you gave me an opportunity to advertise in The Daily Reflector's TV Showtime publication. I was, to say the least, hesitant; after all, I rarely sign a 52 week agreement of any sort much less an advertising one.

The program proved however, to be a most effective one. My ad is in the same position every week, all year long. This allows my customers to see what the mall has to offer every day. This consistant form of advertising has proven to be a good performer, therefore I am pleased to renew my position for the 1987 1988 year.

Your continued attention in helping my advertising campaign to be as effective as possible is greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

Lisa V. Tapp-Daughtry

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Barbara Hale Makes Della Truly Memorable

By Robert DiMatteo

What if Della Street were accused of murder and Perry Mason had to defend her? This idea has occurred to more than one "Perry Mason" fan over the years. In the 1985 TV movie Perry Mason Returns, the idea finally became reality.

"Perry Mason Returns," which will be rebroadcast July 19 on NBC, began the mini-cycle of two-hour Mason "episodes" that reunited Raymond Burr and Barbara Hale as Perry Mason and Della Street. The plot emphasis on the bond between these two is a canny one. Hale's Della Street is as definitive a character as Burr's Perry Mason, and one of the unstated pleasures of the old series involved fantasizing a romance between the two. (It almost happened a few times.)

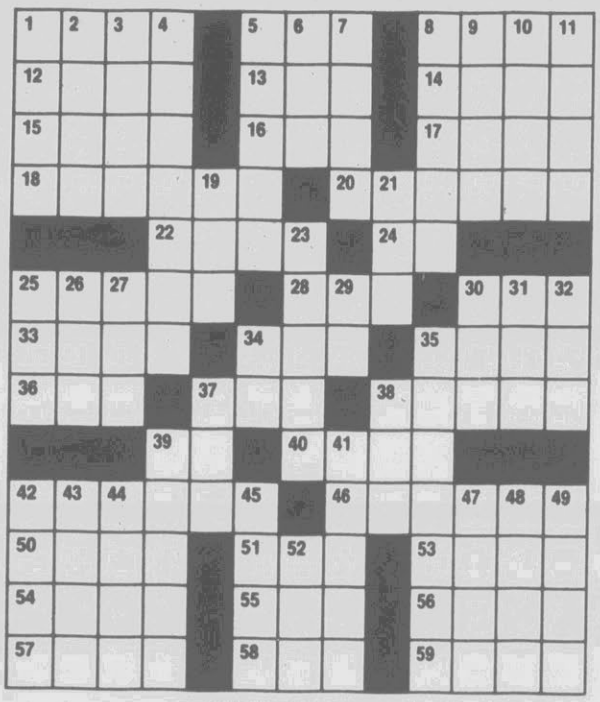

The week's most thought-provoking repeat is Unnatural Causes (NBC, July 20). This made-for-TV movie, with a script by John Sayles ("Return of the Secaucus Seven"), was one of the best of this past TV season. It addresses the issue of Agent Orange contamination among Vietnam vets through the moving study of one dying vet (played by John Ritter) and a Veterans Administration official (played by Alfre Woodard) who passionately investigates his and other cases. Ritter's performance indicates that he has a surprising range as a serious actor.

Kramer vs. Kramer (ABC, July 19) returns to TV this week. This high-class tear-jerker features celebrated performances by Dustin Hoffman, Meryl Streep and the young Justin Henry. It won a Best Picture Oscar for 1979, but this is one Oscar-winning movie that isn't likely to retain its stature over the ensuing years. Still, its portrait of a father's abiding love for his son certainly touched a nerve in 1979.

Young Doctors in Love (ABC, July 24) offers some amusing parody of hospital dramas. But the 1982 movie squanders a cast that includes such talents as Michael McKean, Pamela Reed, Dabney Coleman and Harry Dean Stanton.

Meanwhile, in the retitled Son of Sam (formerly "Out of the Darkness"), Martin Sheen's talents are well served as he plays Eddie Zigo, the zealous New York cop who cracked the Son of Sam case 10 years ago this summer.

Cable Rates Almost Sure To Spiral Upward

By Bill Anderson

This week, the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission will begin hearing from more than two dozen applicants who want to start new TV channels or move existing pay-TV services onto the basic cable position.

It is difficult to predict exactly what the commission will do and how long it will take, but it seems almost certain that when the process is finally over, the basic cable rate will be higher.

The CBC, for example, is one of two bidders for an all-news channel. It proposes to charge cable subscribers 25 cents per month for its service. The proposal also includes an increase to 35 cents by the fifth year of operation.

The other all-news channel bidder, Allarcom Ltd., of Edmonton, proposes a charge of 50 cents per month. In both cases, subscribers would have to take the 24-hour channels and pay the fee once their cable company agreed to put it on basic, which is normally channels 2-13 and accessible without a converter.

Another channel with a "must-pay" tag is TV Canada-TeleCanada, an idea that arose from a recent federal report on broadcasting. Backed by the National Film Board, these two channels would runfor 17 hours a day in English and French and provide a potpourri of Canadian drama, regional works, children's shows and just about anything else. Fees are proposed to start at $1 per month and increase to $1.50 by the fifth year of broadcasting.

An expanded version of the current Parliamentary channel is also proposed by the cable-TV industry, at a price of about 15 cents per month for the 19-hour-a-day service.

With LeMond Away Unknowns Lead Tour

By Adam Beckerman

The Tour de France, the world's most famous bicycle race, has just completed the third week of its 74th running, and highlights can be seen Sunday, July 19, on CBS. After biking around the French flatlands, the riders, originally 207 strong with 23 teams, entered the Pyrenees on July 13, where six mammoth peaks were climbed in two days.

Before the start of the race, handicappers were describing this year's Tour as anyone's race. Last year's winner, Greg LeMond, was sprayed with buckshot by his brother-in-law in a freak hunting accident in April and is recuperating at home in California. LeMond's former La Vie Claire teammate, Bernard "The Badger" Hinault, who won his fifth Tour de France in 1985 with LeMond's help and challenged LeMond every inch of the way in 1986, has retired.

During last year's Tour de France, LeMond and Hinault had a very bitter falling out. They had been teammates for a number of years, and LeMond sacrificed his own chance for victory in 1985 in order to help Hinault win. In return, Hinault made a public promise. Instead of going for a record sixth-straight victory in 1986, he would help LeMond.

Before the race, however, Hinault changed his mind. That was understandable, but he neglected to inform LeMond, who found out the hard way — during the race. Hinault's actions also created a serious split in La Vie Claire ranks, and LeMond found himself stripped of a good deal of his team's support — support that is often crucial in cycling.

* The 118th British Open concludes Sunday, July 19, in Muirfield, Scotland, and ABC provides live coverage. The Muirfield, in operation since 1891, is hosting its 13th Open. This is golfing's second grand-slam event. The first grand-slam event, the U.S. Open, was won by Scott Simpson. But grand slams are almost unheard of in men's golf. In fact, it has been four and a half years since any golfer won two consecutive major championships.

* The Women's U.S. Open is played this week in Plainfield, N.J., and third-round action can be seen Saturday, July 25, on ABC.

* On Cable, ESPN's coverage of the U.S. Olympic Festival is in full swing. The 34-sport celebration of American amateur athletics takes place in North Carolina, and both summer and winter sports are being contested.

REBROADCAST

THE TURBO THAT'S GOING TO MAKE SAABS AND VOLVOS MOVE SLOWER.

$3,000 Rebates Now Available On Peugeot 505 Turbo S.

PRESENTING THE PEUGEOT 505 TURBOS.

Car and Driver recently described the 150-hp Peugeot 505 Turbo S as a car with "instant launch capabilities."

And now, these cars are about to rocket out of the showroom. Because until September 30th, you'll get as much as $3,000* in cash when you buy a Peugeot 505 Turbo S Sedan or wagon. You can take the money and run, or use it as a down payment. You can even use it as a down payment on a lease or financing.

But besides $3,000, you'll also get a car with standard features and amenities (like ABS) only available from Saab and Volvo at extra cost, if at all.

So stop in for a test drive. You'll see what Saab and Volvo are worried about.

• CHECK OUT! Draw checkmarks on paper, see right. Challenge someone to cross out 1, 2 or 3 checks in turn, until just one check is left — to the loser.

If you remember the amounts 13, 9, 5 and 1, and leave your friend those numbers in turn, you can always win.

Give the game a try.

• SUM WORD! It takes three letters to spell SIX, five letters to spell SEVEN, six letters to spell TWELVE. What number between 1 and 10 has the same letter-count as its value?

The number FOUR has the same letter-count as its value.

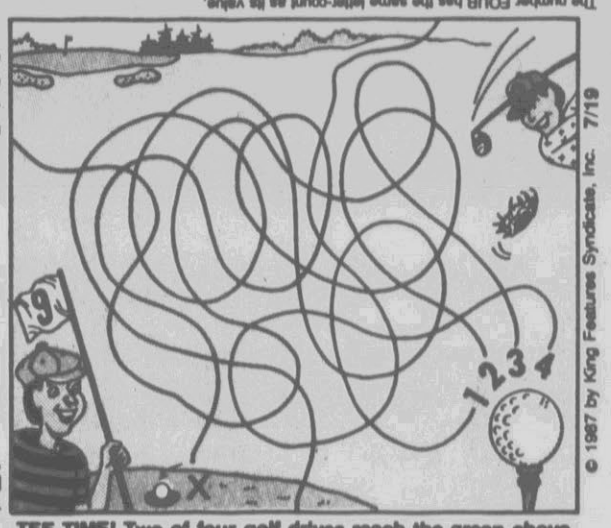

MYSTERY WORD!

Six letters shown above form a word that is the subject of this verse-riddle. See if you can puzzle it out.

My first's in boy,
but not in man.
My second's in box,
but not in pan.
My third's in yellow,
but not in pink.
My fourth's in edge,
but not in brink.
My fifth's in ice,
but not in snow.
My sixth's in wind,
but not in blow.

The word is OXYGEN.
