Kuwaiti Tanker Strikes Mine In Gulf

By JOHN RICE
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT (AP) — A Kuwaiti tanker flying the American flag under U.S. Navy escort hit a mine in the Persian Gulf today as it passed an island fortified by Iranian Revolutionary Guards.

No injuries were reported among the 26 people on board the giant tanker Bridgeton, but the vessel took on water. After a brief delay, it proceeded toward Kuwait, its destination.

In Tehran, Iranian Prime Minister Hussein Musavi called the incident an "irreparable blow to America's political and military prestige." He said the mine was planted by "invisible hands."

Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, quoted Musavi as saying he hoped "the wise men in the United States have learned a lesson and (will now) put an end to their tension-creating adventures in the Persian Gulf."

Worshippers at Tehran University responded to news of the mine blast by chanting, "Death to the U.S.A.," and "Persian Gulf of Iran, the graveyard of Reagan" and "We will fight, we will die, but we won't compromise." The chants were carried by Tehran Radio, monitored in Nicosia.

In Washington, White House sqokeswoman Leslye Arsht said President Reagan was awakened at 2 a.m. EDT by national security adviser Frank Carlucci and notified of the explosion. She declined to characterize Reagan's reaction to the report.

U.S. officials have not said how they would respond to an attack on a vessel flying the Stars and Stripes, but have hinted that military retaliation is a possibility.

The convoy was about 120 miles southeast of Kuwait's Mina al-Ahmadi oil terminal when the 401,382-ton Bridgeton, formerly al-Rekkah, hit the mine shortly before 7 a.m. (midnight EDT). It was about 18 miles west of Farsi Island, where the Revolutionary Guards have a marine base from which they have attacked ships in recent weeks.

The U.S. ambassador to Kuwait, Anthony Quainton, told The Associated Press that the damage to the Bridgeton will be inspected upon arrival in al-Ahmadi, Kuwait.

"There are no major dry docks here in Kuwait," he said, adding that the ship's owner, the Kuwait Oil Tanker Co., will decide whether it will be repaired in Kuwait or moved somewhere else.

"It's a matter of considerable regret that the Bridgeton was hit, but I'm not in a position to speculate on how it will affect future transits," Quainton said.

"I certainly wouldn't want to give you the impression that there is any major change anticipated at this time," Quainton said later in an interview from Kuwait on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

"As far as I know the reflagging operation is going ahead. ... It is coming forward under escort as had been planned," he said.

In Washington, Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said the mining of the Bridgeton is an example of "one of the perils of the administra-

GNP Figures Are Revised For 84-86

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When you are trying to measure a $4 trillion economy, it's easy to miss a few items, such as rentals of videocassette movies.

To correct that and other oversights, the Commerce Department today issued new estimates of how much the economy grew from 1984 through 1986 as part of its annual revision process.

The new figures show growth was stronger than previously thought while inflation was a tiny bit lower.

The department put growth in the gross national product, the total output of goods and services, at 2.9 percent in 1986 compared to an earlier estimate of 2.5 percent GNP growth last year.

Even with the upward revision, the 2.9 percent growth was still the slowest pace since the economy fell 2.5 percent in the recession year of 1982.

For 1984, the revised estimate put growth at a strong 6.8 percent, the fastest pace in more than three decades and up from an earlier estimate of 6.4 percent.

The revision for 1985 put growth at 3.0 percent, up from 2.7 percent previously.

Officials with the department's Bureau of Economic Analysis, which prepares the GNP, said that much of the new-found strength came in personal consumption spending, which accounts for two-thirds of overall economic activity.

One major item in that upward revision came in new estimates for how much Americans spent to rent videocassettes in 1986. Officials said they discovered that their previous figures had vastly underestimated activity in this rapidly growing industry. For 1986, the Commerce Department boosted GNP by $3.2 billion to take into account the missed videocassette rentals.

Airport Parking Lot Ready

By DON REUTER

The newly-paved parking lot at Pitt-Greenville Airport should be open for full use later today, according to Airport Manager James G. Turcotte, who said workers are putting the finishing touches on the $130,000 construction project.

"The parking lot is basically finished," Turcotte said. "We're waiting for some directional signs from the city of Greenville and we're hoping they will be in this afternoon.

"We're probably going to open the lot this afternoon whether the signs come in or not, and we're keeping our fingers crossed for the weekend.

The project, which began on June 22, increased paved parking spaces from 64 to 271 spots and included a new access road.

Turcotte said the $130,000 cost included utility relocation, relocating some fencing and adding some fences.

The new parking facilities separate general aviation — business, private and corporate flyers — parking from the air carrier parking, Turcotte said.

The airport provided temporary parking while the construction was under way, according to Turcotte, who said some people were slightly inconvenienced by the renovations.

"It was more or less a temporary inconvenience," he said. "I've never seen so many cars out here."

Despite the inconveniences, Turcotte said the new parking facilities mark a permanent improvement.

"It's been resolved, and I think the citizenry will be pleased with the convenience this will now afford," he said.

Jetliner's Crew Jumps Gunman

By TONY CZUCZKA
Associated Press Writer

GENEVA (AP) — A gunman identified as a Lebanese Shiite Moslem hijacked an Air Afrique jetliner today but was overpowered by the crew after he killed a passenger while the plane refueled in Geneva, authorities said.

Sources in Paris said the hijacker had demanded West Germany free the two Hamadi brothers, who are jailed in connection with the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner to Beirut.

The passengers aboard the Air Afrique DC-10 fled out the rear of the plane down an emergency chute after the hijacker was subdued, said police spokesman Jacques Zweigert.

The pilot, Capt. Edouard Artizzi, said the hijacking ended when "the steward jumped on the guy and police arrived at the same time."

Security police had ringed the jumbo jet and had been planning to storm it, Zweigert said.

The dead passenger, who was shot in the head, was identified as Xavier Beaulieu, a French citizen, according to officials in Paris. One of the crew was slightly injured, Zweigert said.

The jetliner was carrying 163 people on a flight from Rome to Paris. The hijacking began when the gunman fired two shots into the cockpit as the plane flew over Milan and demanded to be flown to Beirut, Lebanon, Artizzi said.

New FBI Director

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Judge William S. Sessions has accepted President Reagan's offer to become the new director of the FBI, an administration source said today.

The source, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said Sessions accepted the job during a meeting today with President Reagan.

An official White House announcement was expected later today.

The forthcoming nomination was confirmed by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a Democrat and one of the two senators from Session's home state of Texas who had been pushing for his nomination.

Sessions' meeting with Reagan followed discussions earlier this morning with Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

Sessions, 57, flew to Washington Thursday night from San Antonio, Texas. His nomination follows a lengthy and politically embarrassing search by the Reagan administration for a new FBI director in which several candidates turned down the job.

Sessions, a Republican, is chief judge of the U.S. District Court for the western district of Texas.

He gained national attention in 1982-83 by presiding over two trials stemming from the killing of U.S. District Court Judge John H. Wood Jr.

Shultz: U.S. Credibility Restored

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz today brushed aside gentle questions about whether he should resign from President Reagan's Cabinet, and declared that the damage done to U.S. credibility abroad by the Iran-Contra affair "has been remedied."

Testifying at nationally televised congressional hearings for the second day, Shultz said there was nothing more he could have done in January 1986 to persuade Reagan to abandon secret arms sales to Iran. He and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger made their case "forcefully, fully," Shultz said.

"I don't think there are any more arguments I could have thought of," he said.

Disclosing more of the high-level intrigue that dominated Thursday's session, Shultz said he had never heard the late CIA Director William J. Casey directly suggest that Shultz resign. But he told Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, that he had seen a letter that Casey once sent to Reagan suggesting that "he needed a new pitcher."

Shultz returned to the witness chair as White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president believes his secretary of state "did an excellent job" during his first day of testimony. Fitzwater said the president watched part of the hearing on television Thursday and "felt his (Shultz's) testimony was honest, sincere and helpful."

Shultz was asked several questions by Rep. William Broomfield, R-Mich., about whether he felt he could do an effective job as secretary of state and whether he felt comfortable remaining in the Cabinet in the aftermath of the Iran-Contra controversy.

"Are you a psychiatrist or something?" Shultz replied at one point.

Shultz disclosed Thursday that he submitted his resignation to the president on three occasions in the past, most recently in August 1986. This time, he gave no indication that he intends to resign.

Instead, he said, "by and large the president's foreign policy has gone forward with widespread support" both within the administration and with Congress.

"It's been a very strong, coherent set of policies," he said. Shultz added there always is debate before a policy is formulated, but said it would be "alarming" if that were not so.

As for his attempts in December 1985 to dissuade the president from approving any more arms sales to Iran, Shultz said he doubts Reagan "was in any doubt about my position."

Broomfield asked whether Reagan was relying too heavily on the late CIA Director William J. Casey, who was a forceful advocate of the sales, and why Shultz didn't prevail.

"I think he was relying on himself," the secretary of state replied. "You seem to miss the point.

Military Judge Says No To Releasing Documents

By JOE TAYLOR
Associated Press Writer

QUANTICO, Va. (AP) — Attorneys of a Marine sergeant charged with espionage failed to persuade a military judge to order the release of classified material they said would prove Clayton Lonetree's innocence.

Lonetree, the first Marine to be court-martialed on espionage charges, admits he had an affair with a Soviet woman but said he did not betray his country. He has been in solitary confinement for eight months.

Navy Capt. Philip F. Roberts, presiding over Lonetree's court-martial, agreed Thursday that some of conditions of the former Moscow Embassy guard's confinement were "onerous" and cleared the way for some changes.

The second day of the trial at the Quantico Marine Corps Base ended about noon Thursday. With temperatures in the 90s, officials suspended proceedings after a power failure hit the base. The trial was to continue today.

Lonetree, a 25-year-old American Indian from St. Paul, Minn., is accused of giving classified embassy information to Soviet agents and of disclosing the identities of U.S. intelligence agents. Espionage is the most serious of the 13 charges he faces, carrying a possible life sentence.

Lonetree's grandfather conducted an Indian prayer ceremony in the courtroom during a break Thursday. "May the Great Spirit bless you all," 72-year-old Sam Lonetree said after blowing on an eagle-bone whistle and waving a feather.

William Kunstler, Lonetree's chief defense lawyer, pressed Roberts to end his client's solitary confinement, which the attorney said gives Lonetree only one hour a day of exercise and imposes around-the-clock surveillance.

"I think that these conditions of confinement are punitive," he said.

Roberts denied Kunstler's request to release Lonetree during the trial, saying he was an escape risk, but agreed that some of the conditions of the detention seemed unnecessary. He asked the two sides to reach some agreement to "perhaps lessen the onerous nature" of the confinement.

The defense unsuccessfully fought for information about State Department conversations with a Soviet KGB agent known as "Uncle Sasha" and records of a congressional panel's inquiry into embassy security.

Maj. David H. Henderson, Lonetree's military counsel, said the congressional documents would show the condition of embassy security.

He and Michael Stuhff, another defense lawyer, said Lonetree's intent will be an important element at the trial.

Stuhff said the Uncle Sasha conversations will show Lonetree did not disclose anything he thought would hurt the United States.

Lonetree was introduced to the KGB agent by his girlfriend.

Maj. David L. Beck, one of two military prosecutors in the case, said Lonetree's lawyers have received all the evidence that is relevant.

Roberts said he would not order another branch of the government to open its files for a general inspection. Lonetree's lawyers should try to obtain specific information from other federal agencies, rather than ask Marine prosecutors under rules of discovery, Roberts said.

Lonetree was the first Marine arrested in a spy scandal at the embassy in Moscow.

The most serious charges, that he allowed Soviet agents inside the embassy, were dropped May 15 after Cpl. Arnold Bracy, another former embassy guard, recanted a statement implicating Lonetree. Charges against Bracy, 21, were dropped for lack of evidence. Two other cases are pending.

Titanic Expedition Criticized

By DANA KENNEDY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The head of the Titanic Historic Society and others have criticized a group of French explorers salvaging the sunken ocean liner, saying they see no good reason for disturbing the wreck.

"If the motivation for disturbing what we view to be a symbolic cemetery, if not a literal one, is the riches that will be derived from such an activity, then we are witnessing one of the greatest examples of greed based on misinformation and lack of historical research the world has ever seen," society President Charles Haas said Thursday.

The Titanic sank on its maiden voyage in 1912 after hitting an iceberg, killing 1,513 people.

The French expedition also was attacked in Congress by a House committee chairman, who said he may try to push through a ban on imported artifacts from the Titanic.

Rep. Walter B. Jones, D-N.C., chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, said Thursday, "Whether or not the French are actually successful in bringing items to the surface, the fear of many in the world community will have been realized — the tomb of so many who died so tragically will have been violated."

The French Institute for Research and Exploitation of the Sea announced Wednesday it had sent a ship to the wreck site, 350 miles off the coast of Newfoundland, to begin a $2.5 million salvage operation.

Any artifacts brought ashore would be put on display and not sold, institute officials said. The project is being funded by international investors, including the Hollywood movie company Westgate Film Group and Swiss millionaire Carlos Piaget.

But Haas said, "The Titanic is not by any stretch of the imagination a treasure ship."

He noted that records he and a colleague obtained and published last year in the book, "The Titanic: Triumph and Tragedy," show the ship contains few valuable possessions.

Haas said if the shipwreck site is disturbed, important historical lessons will be lost. Excavation of the wreck also would cause trauma to the 24 remaining survivors, said Haas, whose 3,000-member group is based in Indian Orchard, Mass.

The Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution had teamed up with the French institution to locate the Titanic in September 1985. Woods Hole director John Steele cited two reasons his group's researchers "didn't think we needed to collect artifacts."

"First was the human sensitivity to a relatively recent tragedy," he said. "Second is that we did not regard collection of artifacts as relative to our scientific mission nor appropriate as archeology. They have no intrinsic value in what happened or the lifestyle of the people.

"That is still our view. The French obviously think differently, and it is a judgment that must be made by French, American and other people about the appropriateness," he said, adding he has a high regard for the French scientists and technicians.

Steele said the French had not discussed their expedition with the Woods Hole officials.

But he said that, other than the timing, "it is no surprise. ... We knew they had the capability, we knew they wanted to do this if they could get funding. It is a surprise that they got funding and went out this late in the season."

Soviets Say U.S. Controls Nuclear Treaty Timetable

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet officials said the United States must yield on four points — including scrapping warheads on Pershing 1-A missiles in West Germany — before agreement can be reached on banning medium- and shorter-range nuclear missiles.

The United States controls the warheads on the German-owned Pershing 1-As. The other three points involve on-site inspection of U.S. bases, the time period for destroying the missiles and guarantees that the missiles not be converted to other weapons categories.

A U.S. refusal to budge on any of the Soviet demands could lead to an impasse in arms negotiations and prevent a potential summit meeting between Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and President Reagan.

In remarks made public Wednesday night, Gorbachev offered to eliminate Soviet medium-range nuclear missiles in Asia if the United States does not insist on keeping 100 medium-range warheads outside Europe.

He also said the Soviet Union would scrap its shorter-range SS-12 and SS-23 rockets east of the Urals, which the United States has regarded as a threat to China and Japan.

The superpowers have been negotiating a ban on medium- and shorter-range rockets in Europe since Gorbachev announced Feb. 28 that the Soviet Union would no longer insist an accord also encompass strategic and space weapons.

Like Gorbachev's February offer, the Soviet proposal for banning the missiles in Asia as well as Europe seemed designed to put pressure on the United States by removing a point of contention the Americans had said was frustrating progress in negotiations.

According to observers, Gorbachev also wants an arms control agreement so the Soviets can divert resources from the military to meet social and economic needs and further cement civilian control over the Soviet military establishment.

Gorbachev, who became Communist Party chief in March 1985, repeatedly has stressed the Kremlin's desire for a total end to nuclear weapons, and accused the United States of frustrating progress toward disarmament.

"We hope for a new impulse to the arms talks," Yuli M. Vorontsov, the chief Kremlin arms negotiator, told a news conference called Thursday to explain Gorbachev's latest proposal. "We're looking now for a political decision from the American side."

According to Vorontsov, who is first deputy foreign minister, two months should be sufficient to reach agreement. He indicated an accord could lead to a summit meeting between Gorbachev and Reagan before the end of the year.

Marshal Sergei F. Akhromeyev, chief of the Soviet general staff, told the Moscow news conference that U.S. nuclear warheads designed for the 72 Pershing 1-A West German missiles would have to be destroyed.

The Bonn government has maintained that its Pershing 1-A missiles cannot be included in a superpower deal since they do not belong to the United States, and the Reagan administration has supported that stance.

On another Soviet demand — on-site inspection of U.S. bases — some U.S. intelligence specialists say some U.S. facilities are too sensitive and should be off-limits to Soviet inspections.

Nuclear Explosion Reported By Tass

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union today exploded a nuclear device underground in a remote, oil-producing region of Siberia, the official Soviet news agency Tass reported.

The explosion, which Tass said had a yield of up to 20 kilotons, was the second test for nonmilitary purposes in two weeks. One kiloton is the equivalent of 1,000 tons of TNT.

On July 7, an explosion was triggered deep underground in an effort to create fractures in the earth that would free natural gas trapped beyond the reach of normal drilling operations, Tass reported.

Today's explosion appeared to have a similar aim, although the news agency said only that it "was conducted in the interests of the national economy" in the Yakut Autonomous Region, an area rich in gold, diamond and petroleum resources.

It was the 12th explosion since the Soviet Union announced the end of it unilateral moratorium on underground nuclear testing on Feb. 28. It began the moratorium in August 1985 and invited the United States to join, but the Reagan administration refused.

All but four of the blasts have been carried out at the Semipalatinsk military weapons range in the Central Asian republic of Kazakhstan in tests of nuclear weaponry.

Egyptian? Arabic? Slavic? It may as well be. For someone who can't read or write, the whole world looks like the scrambled nonsense above.

Illiteracy is not just a personal problem. It's not merely a family problem. It is a community problem, a state problem — one that must be approached with the resources of the reading and writing community.

In 1986, approximately 25 percent of the adults over age 25 in Pitt County had less than an eighth grade education. Many of these individuals can neither read nor write. This 25 percent possesses an affliction for which there is no vaccination and no immunity. But there is prevention and a cure.

Education — keeping kids in school and teaching them basic reading and writing skills — is the prevention.

Education — teaching adults who are illiterate to read and write — is also the cure.

The Pitt County chapter of the Literacy Volunteers of America is working to ameliorate illiteracy in the county. The organization's work goes hand-in-hand with Pitt Community College's adult education program. Battling illiteracy is a tough job. Non-readers cannot be reached by written advertisements, by posters about reading classes or notices on bulletin boards. Only word-of-mouth can let these individuals know that there is a way out of the handicap binding them to a world of non-understanding.

Once a person who can't read or write is identified, getting him or her in a program designed to teach is another tedious task. Many illiterates have carefully hidden their problem for years. They feel admitting they can't read or write might put their jobs in jeopardy and subject them to ridicule by peers. It is often, however, one of these peers — or a family member — that can convince an illiterate to learn to read and write.

The personal shame a non-reader and non-writer may feel is reason enough to obliterate illiteracy. The benefit to the community is a broader justification to battle the problem. But it takes the combined resources of the community to fight it effectively.

Everyone needs to know how to read and write. Combating illiteracy should be a priority project and a continual project. Decreasing the number of non-readers and non-writers in Pitt County is an undertaking that requires constant public attention and private support.

Write-Downs Mark New Stage

"A brat with guts," Fortune magazine dubbed Citicorp chairman John Reed after he said that Citicorp was bolstering its bad-loan reserves to 25 percent of what it is owed in the Third World.

As if to prove that Citicorp wasn't the only one with guts, bank after large U.S. bank followed suit. Chase. Security Pacific. The Bank of Boston. Even Bank of America, which, conventional wisdom had it, didn't have the financial strength to be so gutsy. As a result, the five largest U.S. banks had unprecedented second-quarter losses totaling nearly $7 billion.

On the sidelines, most financial analysts interpreted the banks' moves as a plus for their negotiation position vis-a-vis the debtor nations. The new cushion of reserves, it was argued, removed the debtors' one good trump card in any negotiation with the banks: the threat of default. Now that Citicorp and others had already taken the hit to their earnings, even the $100 billion debtors, Mexico and Brazil, could not scare the banks into debt relief. "It's a crummy world out there," Reed announced, as if to be clear that the banks were not adding to their reserves to make life easier for the debtor nations.

But here again the conventional wisdom is wrong. The banks' actions have shifted the terms of the debate toward the debtors.

Until now, the creditors have relied on a series of myths to argue their case. Myths held that a buoyant and barreling world economy would pull debtors out of their bind. Myths underpinned the creditors' argument that the debt crisis wasn't really a crisis, but only a temporary liquidity problem. And myths were employed to explain that the loans were and always would be worth 100 cents on the dollar. In one swift move Citicorp shattered them all, saying that "pessimism" about the world economy — and, by inference, pessimism that the liquidity lapse would pass — led it to reclassify its loans at 75 cents to the dollar.

With this dose of reality replacing the myths, a new stage in the resolution of the debt crisis is beginning. Since 1985, Secretary of the Treasury James A. Baker III has promised that compliant Third World debtors — those adhering to Reaganomic formulas of privatization and free-market economics — would get their reward: more private bank loans. Citicorp, making it clear that the debt-ridden Third World is no longer on the list of profitable places for new loans, emerges as the coroner of the Baker Plan.

Citicorp, Chase, Bank of America and the others have proved that a managed write-down need not break the banks. The financial community has long held out the bogyman of global financial collapse to clinch the argument against debt relief. Now we see that a significant portion (somewhere between one-third and one-quarter) of what the Third World owes U.S. banks can be written off without precipitating anything close to financial collapse — and without leaving American taxpayers holding the bill. In other words, no direct government bailout is necessary. Rather, the banks, which privatized the benefits of Third World lending, can afford to privatize the costs. As for the debtors, such write-offs would in many cases drop their debt-service payments to below 20 percent of export earnings, freeing up substantial resources for domestic development.

A further plus from the write-downs was that they helped "level the playing field" between banks of different creditor countries. Previously, U.S. banks argued that debt relief would put them at a competitive disadvantage versus German, French and Swiss banks (with 30 percent to 40 percent of their Third World debt in reserves). Soon most of these banks will face the Third World with large and roughly equivalent reserves.

Finally, Citicorp's move immediately preceded another big event in financial circles: the resignation of Paul A. Volcker as Federal Reserve Board chairman. However coincidental, the timing was fortunate. One of the Baker Plan's architects, Volcker was instrumental in extending its life. His journeys around the globe to twist the arms of debtors and bankers alike have become the stuff of legend. But his replacement, Alan S. Greenspan, lacks the clout and the international experience to continue to patch up a disintegrating structure.

In sum, the banks have opened the doors for debt relief, but only on their side of the ledger. Debtor nations continue to be bled as if they owed the face value of their debts. When and whether more of them will respond by unilaterally reducing debt payments is uncertain; their fear of retaliation remains high.

The challenge before Western governments, which have regulatory authority over their private banking systems, is to help translate the banks' step toward realism in the debt debate into actual relief for the desperate economies of the Third World. For its part, Washington should move quickly to induce banks into debt relief by giving them incentives to pursue different approaches to reducing their Third World loan exposure, from interest-rate relief to principal write-down.

In other words, more guts are in order.

Unfounded Fears

This is that season of the year when many potential blood donors are on vacation and it is also that time of the year when doctors treat more accident victims and blood supplies are at a low point in North Carolina.

Presumably, many regular donors are out of town, recouping energies expended in a year of labor. The irony and the need is not lost on physicians.

About two dozen of them from Alamance and Caswell counties were also concerned that fear of acquired immune deficiency syndrome has been mistakenly linked to donating blood and decided the best way to fight the fear was to roll up their sleeves.

The result was a double-barreled effort to (a) help meet the need for blood and (b) underline their own absolute confidence in safety of contributing blood through the American Red Cross bloodmobile.

One, a radiologist, observed "there's no way you can get AIDS by donating blood."

As he said, all material used in those donations, including needles, plastic tubing and bag, is taken from an individually sealed and sterilized package. Once used, the items are destroyed.

It's not easy to understand why unfounded fears are so often seized upon by some segments of the public. True, there have been a few well-publicized cases in which people requiring blood got the AIDS virus from transfusions; but they did not get it by giving blood....it was by receiving contaminated blood.

No material is reused by the Red Cross.

Much of the fear of AIDS is said to come from lack of information. When people don't know something, their worst fears take over, as another doctor put it.

When our physicians are reduced to joining in a "show and tell" to convince some members of the public that donating blood is not really hazardous to their health, it's a good bet there must have been a number of years in their backgrounds when public schools were not doing their best work.

A Decoder Or A Dream?

RALEIGH — The call came from behind the bushes beside the Legislative Office Building. "Psst, psst," the bum said. "Reporter, I got sumthin' for ya."

"I know what they're talking 'bout 'n there," he whispered as he waved the arm that held the half-empty bottle of Mogen-David towards the office where the supersub committee was meeting. "They may be talkin' in code to you, but I got this machine here from Ollie North that makes it all make sense. Their talk goes in this end and it makes sense on the other."

Now the bum had my attention. The budget supersub committee, forced by public opinion to meet in public, was working on the budget. To foil news reporting, the legislator were reading from lengthy budget documents, identifying programs only by the numbers assigned to them on the documents. They refused to release the documents to the public.

The bum played back a tape from his machine. Here's Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Vance, "We all agree on items six and seven on page three, right." The bum's machine printed out a note: "Extra $25 a day each for stamps."

The bum continued, playing back coded talk about item four, which sailed through the committee without discussion (it was for more decaffeinated coffee in the Legislative Building next year) and to the always contentious item nine, on page 23.

"That's the gay awareness money," he said. The what? "Yea, they're giving the gays a million bucks to run awareness centers in small towns."

Then items eight and nine on page 12. Reporters knew this was a biggie because Rep. Gerald Anderson, D-Craven, kept forgetting to talk in code and kept mentioning the $3 million. "That's for 250 new first grade teachers. They're gonna teach Marxism-Leninism. No wonder they don't want you guys understandin' what they're talking 'bout."

Not here in North Carolina. "Yessiree, and then there's all that money for those you-know-whats to hand out in the junior high schools so kids don't get pregnant. That's $4 million on page 98, item four. (Sen. Aaron) Plyler sweated through that one, sure did."

The list went on: $25 million for a state yacht for legislators' use only, $1,325,000 for a legislative cottage at Carolina Beach, $1 million so all 170 of them can go to some legislative conference in Tahiti next May.

"You here back in '79?" he asked. Uh-huh. "'Member that $425,000 for a tunnel so they wouldn't get wet coming to this place from that place?" He was talking about the tunnel linking the two legislative buildings. Public pressure killed the idea and the legislators are still fuming. "See item 12 on page 213. Take that $425,000, add inflation, and there's $800,000 for a tunnel. They start diggin' it tomorrow." You don't say.

Now armed with the story, this reporter confronted the next meeting of the coded supersub committee. "It is true that there's a million in there for gay activity centers?" There's loud nervous laughter, red faces, Plyler pretends to choke on his doughnut. Watkins speaks up, refers to the farms and his daddy and says he doesn't respond when he doesn't hear anything. More coded talk. The decoder translates, "Holy special provision, they caught us."

The all deny the decoder's findings, but provide no proof that the decoder is wrong, either. The lists stay secret.

It's been a long week, a long session. This reporter only remembers this story after waking up from a long ovedue 12-hour sleep. Is it true that the legislature plans to buy itself a new helicopter. Was this all a dream? Maybe some of my readers can call their legislators and ask what is on those lists.

Strength For Today

A great building, to be made of cut stone, is in progress on a certain university campus. In the vicinity one walked among thousands of pieces of carefully cut stone. Within the next year they will all be put together and the beautiful building will take shape. But to one walking among the stones now, it seems as if they could never be assembled in any rational pattern. But behind this chaotic mass of stone is the chief architect who has envisaged and will create this building.

Behind the apparently random and detached events of life is also a team headed by an Architect. This team is made up of Christian men and women who understand the Architect's plan, at least in part. Someday a new world will arise because of the combined efforts of all of them.

Hearings Left Open Questions On Iran-Contra Scandal

Analysis

WASHINGTON — For the Iran-Contra hearings, still a living organism, though clearly with the life ebbing away, post-mortems are already being conducted.

Here are some. From the we'll-never-know school, strengthened by the confounding, contradictory and forgetful testimony of Rear Adm. John M. Poindexter, Senate select committee Chairman Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii:

"I am now reaching the conclusion that, much as we try, we may very well end up our investigation not really knowing what actually happened," Inouye told ABC television after the hearings resumed this week, "because here we have an admiral and the colonel (Lt. Col. Oliver L. North) not agreeing on certain basic facts. The colonel says he sent certain memos on diversion to the admiral. The admiral says that he's never heard of that, he doesn't recall receiving anything like that. Now, these are basic things."

From the they-were-all-a-waste-of-time-and-money school, the president's unregenerate defender, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah:

"As we near the end of these hearings ... I'm struck more and more how terribly overblown this whole affair has been. We have elevated the art of beating a dead horse to new heights."

From the grave-constitutional-breakdown school, the salty Iran-Contra critic, Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas:

"You wanted to exclude all the elected officials from knowledge of some of the most important and far-reaching areas of foreign policy," Brooks sternly lectured Poindexter. "Now ... is this not precisely the kind of thing that our Founding Fathers were trying to prevent when the Constitution placed the authority and the accountability for these decisions in both the Congress and the president?"

These comments may foreshadow diverse opinions of committee members in their final report this fall, but it is too early for any final judgments yet on the Iran-Contra hearings, especially since the most critical questions remain largely unexplored.

For nearly 10 weeks, the hearings have documented an amazing level of deceit within the highest levels of the administration. These revelations already have had significant impact on domestic and foreign policies, the relationship between Congress and the White House, the president's credibility and Americans' ability to trust their leaders.

The hearings have produced a wealth of damning information about the ways in which secrecy and ideology dominated presidential decision-making in the second Reagan term. This record has diminished Reagan's stature and jeopardized his ability to conduct his office in the closing months of his presidency. It also seems certain to affect negatively his standing in history.

With Poindexter's testimony, the question about the president's knowledge of the diversion of Iran arms-sale profits to Nicaraguan Contra forces has been, if not put to rest, at least put aside. It seems almost certain now that there will be no impeachment. As Inouye says, given the number of contradictions, the truth about that aspect of the affair may never be known.

We thus know much about what happened but not nearly enough about why and how. Here, the forthcoming testimony of key Cabinet officers and presidential advisers, including former chief of staff Donald T. Regan, Secretary of State George P. Shultz, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and Attorney General Edwin Meese III, is crucial. Of all the unanswered questions still before the committees, none looms larger than this: Why didn't anyone around the president — and the president himself — ever ask a single question about what had happened after they say they first learned about the diversion?

That's what Sen. George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, was getting at when he asked Poindexter why, in the week immediately preceding his resignation, "not one of them ever asked you to explain your decision or whether you had told the president." The admiral's response cries out for answers:

"There were three significant meetings involved. ... There was a short meeting with Ed Meese in my office on Monday, Nov. 24. There was a meeting — well, there were four, I guess. The second meeting was with Ed Meese in his office the morning of the 25th. Don Regan came into my office while I was eating breakfast. It was about a five-minute conversation. And then I had about five or 10 minutes with the president and the vice president, Don Regan, Ed Meese at 9:30 on that morning. All of these conversations were very general in nature, not any sort of inquiry or investigation or detailed questions, and I was not asked those questions."

Why not?

Is Competition A Neater Way To Do 'Covert' Operations?

The proposal of the late William J. Casey, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, for the creation of a free-standing, self-financing, eventually self-destructing covert-action agency is an idea with a lot of possibilities. This proposed new "company" has not yet been named. Let's call it "CIA North" to distinguish it from the existing covert-operations agency, "CIA South."

As a "private," free-floating entity it would provide the ultimate in deniability. Certainly nobody would need to tell the president.

It's easy to see how such a company could be much more efficient than CIA South. As Lt. Col. Oliver L. North demonstrated, for example, there is no need to subject recruits for covert operations to a lengthy and costly security-clearance process. The only need is to establish that such personnel have a well-developed capacity for lying. That could be determined with a simple lie-detector test, as it was for Manucher Ghorbanifar. Anyone who has made a mint in used cars or the televangelism business could be given an automatic clearance.

North and his associates have already developed creative approaches to financing such an activity. There would be other possibilities. For example, the new company might conduct a national lottery, with the winners having the choice of playing freedom fighter for a day or of participating in a simulated missile attack on the Soviet Union at the headquarters of the Strategic Air Command.

Consider the innovative possibilities for operations. A private covert company might establish a small bakery. Then, when we want to bake a cake for an Islamic leader, we wouldn't be dependent on a local Israeli bakery, as were Col. North and Robert C. McFarlane.

'The proposal of the late William J. Casey, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, for the creation of a free-standing, self-financing, eventually self-destructing covert-action agency is an idea with a lot of possibilities.'

We have tried to stay neutral in the Iran-Iraq war by alternately helping each side. That has got us into some difficulty as we switch back and forth. With two companies, CIA North could support one combatant, CIA South the other. The profits on arms sales to one side could be used to support the war effort of the other. That way we could fine-tune the conflict, keeping things on an even keel at no cost to ourselves. With imagination, we should be able to develop a variety of such "off-the-shelf" policy packages as Director Casey apparently contemplated.

An important source of error in American foreign policy has been the tendency to take U.S. defense commitments altogether too seriously — a mistake that we made in Vietnam. This problem could be avoided if we turned commitment-making over to the new company. It could undertake commitments on a wholly unattributable and deniable basis, as retired Gen. Richard V. Secord did on behalf of Col. North in negotiations with Iran when he generously offered U.S. support against an attack by the Soviet Union. Such deniable commitments would be disposable, and could be disowned once they had served their immediate purpose.

On a more serious level, if the covert operators needed a small nuclear weapon for a secret operation, they wouldn't have to go through cumbersome U.S. bureaucratic procedures to get one. They could simply arrange for a transfer from the implausibly deniable Israeli stockpile with the understanding that we would later replenish Israel's non-existent inventory from U.S. stocks. The ultimate operation would be a nuclear war conducted entirely in secret — an important point, since, as Oliver North repeatedly emphasized, secrecy is essential to protect lives.

Toshiba Affair: Interlaced Multinationals

The illicit sale by Toshiba Corp. of sensitive defense technology to the Soviet Union is not a Japan-bashing issue, although some are trying to use it as such. Rather, it manifests a dramatic shift in international trade and the relationships among governments and corporations.

Banning imports from Toshiba (or its Norwegian collaborator, Kongsberg Vaapenfabrikk), as members of Congress have proposed, makes no sense. The United States is in no position to enforce extraterritorial demands in most countries, and the Reagan administration is certainly not eager to contribute to the climate of protectionism.

The big issue is no longer just the size and power of individual multinational corporations — businesses that have attained positions of such global power, size and complexity that they cannot be easily monitored or controlled by parent firms or government. Rather, it is also the strategic alliances between these gargantuans, creating tightly interwoven global fabrics of firms with different corporate-national interests and cultures.

Take, for example, AT&T, which is involved in ventures with Toshiba and Olivetti of Italy and with the Netherlands' Phillips, which in turn has extensive Japanese linkages to Matsushita, Sharp, JVC and Sony. AT&T is also involved with Japan's NTT, and NTT is involved in turn with IBM, which has linkages to Nissan Motors and Mitsubishi. Mitsubishi is part of a group that includes Sumitomo and Mitsui; the latter, with Matsushita, is working with C. Itoh (which orchestrated the Toshiba-Kongsberg affair) as part of a new Japanese telecommunications entity in which Toyota, which has a joint venture with General Motors, is also heavily involved. Meanwhile, GM, through its relation to Hughes, is connected to Mitsui, Toshiba and C. Itoh, not to mention Daiwoo in South Korea. Siemens of West Germany is linked to Toshiba and to Emerson Electric, Canon and others. Boeing's arrangement with Japan involves 31 firms, including Toshiba. Boeing's European competitor, Airbus, is a multicountry subsidized consortium.

Thus the Toshiba-Kongsberg affair helps bring the issues into some focus: the difficulty that giant firms have in controlling their many operations, how small transactions by foreign firms can have monumental consequences for third parties, the lack of a global consensus and a common base of ethics and world views regarding interdependencies, the inability to impose effective sanctions, and the complex web of international relationships. These issues also point toward solutions.

We need action in two areas: an enforceable system of agreements among the transnational corporation countries, and improved internal and external technology intelligence.

The system of agreements, which might be named the General Agreement on Multinational Enterprises (or ethics) and Technology — GAMET — could complement the existing General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade — GATT. Its domain would be much wider than that of denying technology to the Soviet Union, and its international reach would go beyond the already rich countries. Covering such issues as multinational-country relations, technology and information transfer, pollution and environmental controls, the protection of intellectual and physical property rights and a mutually agreed-on code of business and trade ethics, it would require each country to embody the standards and penalties in its own laws. This must be done to recognize the supremacy of local law as well as the wider need for global standards to enhance trade, technology and security.

The lack of good technical intelligence along with the inadequacy of monitoring and control was evident in the Toshiba-Kongsberg affair. More generally, this shortcoming is one of the greatest weaknesses in national and corporate strategy and management. Attention to this vital area is a proper subject for international cooperation and could be an important element of GAMET.

Billboard Bill Axed By Committee

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The demise of a bill to make local governments pay a fair price for billboards they ban is being lauded as an environmental victory over business lobbyists, but bill supporters say the action was a blow to fairness.

"The billboard industry camouflaged the bill as a business bill," said Sen. Charles Hipps, D-Haywood. "They hired the very best lobbyists. I've never seen so many $1,000-a-suit people running around."

Nevertheless, Hipps and the Senate Judiciary I Committee unanimously agreed to hold action on the bill until at least 1988. A motion by Hipps to kill the measure outright was defeated 4-3. Sens. Jim Johnson, R-Cabarrus, Mary Seymour, D-Guilford, Bob Warren, D-Johnston and Jim Ezzell, D-Nash, joined forces against Hipps and Sens. Lura Tally, D-Cumberland and Bill Martin, D-Guilford.

"We whipped 'em, pure and simple," said Hipps. "We defeated them at their own game."

Myrick Howard of the North Carolina Historic Preservation Society said the industry had been thwarted in trying to sidestep the courts.

"The billboad industry lost at the local level politically," he said. "They lost in the North Carolina courts. They lost in the U.S. Supreme Court. This is a back-door attempt to try to overturn these losses through expensive and extensive lobbying."

Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, bill sponsor, apparently realized the measure was in trouble. He asked only that the bill be kept alive until 1988, when it might be considered after further study of the issue.

"I'm glad that they're carrying it over because this will give us time to further amplify on the overall policy decision that deals with the issue ...," Miller said.

The bill, which passed the House 57-49, pitted environmentalists and local government officials against sign companies and the billboard industry over how governments would pay for signs banned through local ordinances. Many municipalities now give billboard owners several years to recoup their investments before signs are removed — a practice called amortization.

Miller, however, said when property is taken for the public's benefit, the public should pay the cost up front.

"This bill simply requires that sign owners be compensated fairly," he said, adding that state and federal law already requires similar payments.

"I simply cannot accept as just compensation being allowed to use for a limited time your own property," Miller said.

Jonathan Howes, president of the North Carolina League of Municipalities, said amortization had been upheld by the courts as a proper way to compensate the taking of some property rights. He said the bill was trying to use the Legislature to reverse court rulings.

"We feel it subverts local land-use planning authority by local governments," he said. "The bill would effectively prevent billboard regulation by local governments because of the associate costs for obtainment of removal."

Miller, however, said the cost issue cuts both ways.

"If the cost is devastating, that means that someone's property that has been taken, the cost to that individual is devastating," he said.

Steve Bryant, owner of a Raleigh sign company, said signs "are not as big a problem as the news media has made it out to be."

"I bet if you put it up for a vote there's not a single taxpayer, or very few, in Waynesville or particularly in Raleigh that wouldn't rather see ... tax dollars spent on fixing the highways and to heck with the signs," he said.

Hipps, however, said it was excesses by industry that got his attention.

"When I couldn't see Eagles Nest Mountain on a clear day over the Marlboro sign, I became concerned," he said. "This is not a just compensation bill. It's an unjust enrichment bill."

Martin Threatens Suit Over Judge Elections

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin says he will file suit to block implementation of a law to overhaul North Carolina's system of electing Superior Court judges, but the measure's sponsor says a challenge would be frivolous.

"If he wants to keep on spending taxpayer money fighting it in court, it's up to him," Rep. H.M. "Mickey" Michaux, D-Durham, said Thursday. "I don't know why he wants to keep messing with it."

Martin said he would ask the courts to overturn the newly enacted law that Michaux says is designed to resolve suits contenting North Carolina's judicial election policy is racially discriminatory.

"I think we'll have to" go to court, Martin said. "There's no other way to resolve that. I have no vetoes (and) the Legislature has stood fast."

The state Supreme Court this week refused to issue an advisory opinion on whether the law was unconstitutional as Martin contends. But he said he was encouraged that the court promised to expedite the case and viewed it as "a very serious matter."

The law, enacted June 26, makes two major changes. It creates nine Superior Court judicial nominating districts in areas with majority-black populations while eliminating eight special Superior Court judgeships; and it abolishes staggered terms for judges. Lawsuits pending in federal courts in Washington, D.C., and Raleigh charge that North Carolina's judicial election system discriminates against black candidates by diluting black votes.

Martin fought the bill, saying it did not address the biggest obstacle to electing racial minorities and Republicans: statewide election of judges, who he says should be elected in districts where they are nominated by their political parties.

He also opposed eliminating the special judgeships, which are filled by gubernatorial appointment and provide virtually the only mechanism for Republicans to serve on the Superior Court bench.

Martin said the bill violates separation of powers principles by eroding the governor's authority to appoint judges.

Death Penalty Bill Protecting Those Under 17 Clears Senate

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The death penalty will be virtually eliminated for those under age 17 under a bill given Senate approval and facing possible enactment early next week.

The Senate voted 31-15 Thursday to approve the bill after voting 27-19 to defeat an amendment that would have limited the protection to those under age 16.

Roslyn Savitt, who lobbied for the bill on behalf of the North Carolina Council for Social Legislation, said she was confident the House would concur in other Senate amendments to enact the legislation.

"I'm very pleased, although of course it should go up to age 18," Ms. Savitt said.

Most of the Senate debate came over the issues of age and responsibility.

"We in North Carolina have traditionally ... said that people are responsible for their criminal acts when they reach the age of 16," said Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, who offered the amendment to reduce the age. "I think it's a tendency of people in our generation ... to undersell the maturity and ability of teen-agers."

Winner said they should be held responsible for all crimes equally, adding that it would take "an extremely horrendous" killing to prompt a death sentence for a minor.

Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, said the bill was a creeping approach to raising the age of responsibility for all crimes committed by juveniles who are now usually sent to training schools rather than prison.

"If we had to build training schools for everybody under 16 years old it would be a tremendous expense," he said. "He's held totally responsible at 16 for breaking and entering, larceny, shooting somebody and injuring them. The only difference between assault with a deadly weapon and murder is somebody hit the wrong place. Their aim was not as good as if they had killed somebody."

Swain said there are crimes that should receive the death penalty no matter what the age of the killer.

"Until you get into the throes of these capital trials, you don't know what it really is to have the families of some innocent person approaching you," he said.

Sen. Frank Block, D-New Hanover, also supported Winner's amendment, saying that at age 16 people can get driver's licenses and possess in a car "a very dangerous weapon."

"I would certainly give them credit for understanding that they're not supposed to go out and kill somebody," he said.

But Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, who supports capital punishment for adults, said minors are different.

"If you believe that minors are sometimes influenced by others in regards to the crimes they commit; if you believe that sometimes minors don't make the same judgment call as adults make, then you should be in favor of the bill and opposed to the amendment," he said.

And Sen. Joe Johnson, D-Wake, said there are many discrepancies in ages of responsibility.

"How is it that if we say you can't drink until you're 21 or you can't bring a lawsuit until you're 18 that you have enough judgment, you have enough ability to do an act for which you pay the ultimate penalty," he said.

The Senate Judiciary I Committee earlier this week made other adjustments to defuse objections to the bill.

One amendment prevented the bill from interfering in ongoing capital punishment cases, including that of Leon Brown, a Robeson County man who killed an 11-year-old girl when he was 15. Another reduced the age for banning the death penalty from 18 to 17.

Forecasters See More Of Hot, Muggy Weather

By The Associated Press

There's no relief in sight from the hot, dry weather blistering North Carolina, and that's bad news for the state's farmers, some of whom say conditions are worse this year than last year, when North Carolina experienced a record drought.

"This weather is my mental vision of hell," said Earl Rountree, who raises livestock in Gates County. "In the 10-county northeast, I think the heat and drought is worse for agriculture crops this year than in 1986. Corn was an absolute disaster. The farmers are now concerned about when they are going to get the rain for peanuts, cotton and soybeans."

Charlotte matched a record high Thursday of 101, set in 1952. That made the city the second-hottest spot in North Carolina after mountainous Tryon, which had 102.

And there's more to come.

"We don't see anything at all to push it out of the way," said Bob Phillips of the National Weather Service in Charlotte. "There's no relief in sight through the weekend."

As usual when the hot weather comes at this time of year, the blame lies squarely on the shoulders of the Bermuda High, said Wayne A. Jones, weather specialist at the National Weather Service at Raleigh-Durham Airport.

"It seems like every year at some point this high becomes the dominant feature for us and we get real hot weather," Jones said.

Despite the heat, water use in Charlotte declined Wednesday and Thursday from Tuesday's all-time daily record of 79.3 million gallons. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Utility Department officials credited the 6 a.m.-to-10 p.m. lawn watering ban imposed Wednesday.

"People are cooperating beautifully," utility operations chief Dave Duncan said. "It looks like the program is working — so far."

Durham's water customers have been using nearly 30 million gallons a day this week, city officials said. Normal demand is about 21 millon gallons a day, said Terry Rolan, water resources director.

Oppressive heat for about four days has more than doubled the number of broiler chicken deaths in the poultry industry in North Carolina, said Larry Tetterton, assistant director of marketing in the N.C. Department of Agriculture.

Tetterton said Thursday that between 200,000 and 210,000 broiler chickens have died. Consumers, he said, may not feel the effect for 10 to 14 weeks, when fewer chickens may be available.

Holly Farms has lost about 200,000 broilers and 3,000 breeders in the past week, said Dr. Gordon Miller at the poultry operation's headquarters in North Wilkesboro. Holly Farms has poultry production operations in North Carolina, Virginia and Texas, and most of the losses were in Virginia, Miller said.

North Carolinians hoping to beat the heat might head for the hills and mountains of the western portion of the state.

"It's going to be a real scorcher, but not as hot as yesterday," said Catherine Morton at Grandfather Mountain. "The high yesterday was 76."

Add 30 degrees to that for the Thursday morning temperature at the State Farmers Market in Raleigh, said manager Charles Edwards.

"We've got a thermometer sitting out near a flagpole out on the grass and it had 106 on it," Edwards said at 11:20 a.m.

"People keep asking me when we're going to get fans and air conditioning out here. I keep telling them we're going to when it gets hot enough," Edwards said. "One lady was out here looking for a rope to hang me."

The hot, dry weather has increased the threat of fires, said Herman Terry of the State Forest Resources Division, but "we're not experiencing any unusual numbers of fires. Just a few here and there."

At Pope Air Force Base near Fayetteville, the treeless, concrete flightline can be 5-8 degrees hotter than surrounding areas, said 2nd Lt. Paul B. DeVane, a bio-environmental engineer.

"In the military, we can't close down because of the heat," DeVane said. "The mission goes on. We train to prepare for wartime and we may have to fight in heat. The key is not to stop working. It's to work smart and use a work-rest cycle to allow the body to cool down."

Maj. Jose L. Sanchez, director of preventive medicine at Womack Army Community Hospital at Fort Bragg, said that on a typical day during a heat wave, about 15 cases of heat injury are reported at the post.

Carolina Power & Light Co. reported an all-time usage record Wednesday of 7,985 megawatts, breaking the previous record of 7,838 megawatts set Tuesday, CP&L spokesman Wayne Ennis said. But Ennis said Thursday the peak demand dropped to 7,830 megawatts at 4 p.m.

Duke Power Co. in Charlotte, meanwhile, set a new all-time record demand Thursday of 12,691 megawatts at 4 p.m. The previous all-time record of 12,687 megawatts was set on Jan. 21, 1985.

IN THE STATE

Adam And Eve

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — An Orange County mail-order firm and its president remain the target of an investigation by federal prosecutors, despite their acquittal in March by an Alamance County jury on charges of disseminating obscene material.

Philip D. Harvey, president of Adam and Eve, which sells contraceptives and sexually explicit material, was found not guilty of violating North Carolina's 1985 obscenity law by a jury of seven men and five women on March 26.

Harvey said in a telephone interview Wednesday that he thought it would be unfair to be tried twice on similar charges.

"Having been tried once under great stress and at great expense, it seems terribly unfair to be subjected to a second trial for fundamentally the same thing," Harvey said.

William Delahoyde, the assistant U.S. attorney in charge of the investigation, refused Thursday to discuss the probe, which has been under way more than a year.

"There was an investigation that commenced prior to the verdict, and that investigation is ongoing," Delahoyde said.

Delahoyde confirmed that some of Harvey's employees had been called before a federal grand jury and that some documents had been reviewed. But he refused to speculate on whether the investigation would result in an indictment.

Harvey called the probe "a brutal form of law enforcement," which he said threatened to bankrupt his company.

"If we have to defend ourselves in court again with the same vigor and at the same expense, it would just about break the bank," he said.

More than 20 of Harvey's 125 employees have been called to testify before the grand jury. One was summoned after Harvey was acquitted.

The obscenity law requires jurors to apply "contemporary community standards" in deciding what is obscene. According to the law, material is obscene when, taken as a whole, it "appeals to the prurient interest in sex" and "lacks serious literary, artistic, political and scientific value."

School-Poverty

HICKORY (AP) — Some 450,000 North Carolina children live below the poverty line, and many of them have a poor attitude about school that they learned from their parents, education officials say.

"Some parents who had it hard in school leave with a negative attitude," said the Rev. Charles Lewis, principal of Sweetwater Elementary School in Catawba County. "They can only relate to school when they were there. That can create apathy, a fear even."

A large number of Sweetwater's pupils come from two federal housing projects in Hickory. Early last school year, Lewis went into Ridgecrest and Catawba Arms to meet with parents.

"Once you break down that fear, parents will have a feeling of ownership," he said. "And when you have a feeling of ownership in something, you have pride in that thing."

Poverty must be considered in designing the educational agenda, officials said.

"Most folks are doing so well-off that they might forget others aren't," said Burke County Superintendent James D. Wilson, one of 16 superintendents who studied the issue of poverty and public schools earlier this year.

Rodents Beware

NORTH MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — The newest visitors to the Crescent Beach section of North Myrtle Beach are unwelcome: They don't spend money and they scamper across homeowners' lawns.

The visitors are rats, some big as cats. And city officials are sending out "rat patrols" to clobber them.

Several residents said they have begun wearing long pants — not pleasant when the temperature is in the 90s — and eyeballing the terrain when out for a stroll.

The North Myrtle Beach City Council, after being petitioned by several residents, said earlier this week that it would no longer tolerate the rodents.

"We are now spotting these things virtually every day," said Crescent Beach resident Dorothy Morgan, who lives four blocks from the beach and has watched the creatures scamper across her lawn.

Furniture Prices Could Hinge On Suit Results

HIGH POINT (AP) — The outcome of a suit that pits a discount furniture operation against a manufacturer, Henredon Furniture Industries in Morganton, could determine whether furniture prices in North Carolina increase, furniture retailers and analysts say.

"People will continue to buy furniture, but it will be more expensive if manufacturers win because there will be no more discounts," said Calvin White, owner of Thornton Furniture in Greensboro. "They want to protect their galleries and high prices."

An investment analyst agreed.

"Manufacturers are going to keep moing toward the galleries," said Jerry Epperson, a furniture industry expert with the investment firm Wheat, First Securities. "It's nearly impossible to tell what will happen because court decisions are going both ways."

A ruling is expected today in the first round of the antitrust suit filed by Lofton-Black Furniture Co. of Thomasville.

The civil suit contends that Henredon and other furniture makers, including Thomasville Furniture Industries, have conspired to eliminate discount retailers that earn millions of dollars a year with catalog and telephone sales.

The suit, filed in Davidson County Superior Court, accuses Henredon of breach of contract, charging that the company has ended a sales agreement that had been in effect for 39 years. The suit also contends Henredon is trying to control prices nationwide.

In a letter dated March 2, Henredon told Loftin-Black that it would cease all sales of its furniture to the retailer on July 1. The lawsuit was filed in April and asked that Henredon be required to continue selling furniture to Loftin-Black until the suit is settled.

Judge Russell Walker is expected to decide that temporary arrangement today. Meanwhile, Loftin-Black has continued to receive Henredon furniture and sell it to the public.

Henredon denied the conspiracy and breach of contract charges in court documents filed in June. In a court affidavit, Henredon's sales director outlined the company's gallery concept, which gives a retailer sole license to sell its furniture in its area.

Henredon is joining a number of manufacturers, including Thomasville Furniture, in switching to the gallery concept for furniture sales. Thomasville has reported increased sales through galleries, although the number of retailers carrying its line has decreased.

Loftin-Black accuses Henredon of enacting the gallery program to appease higher-price retailers that are complaining about North Carolina discounters. The effect, the suit says, will be to raise furniture prices and eliminate competition.

Two similar suits are being argued in Winston-Salem. Rose Furniture Co. of High Point filed a suit in 1986 against Pennsylvania House that accuses the manufacturer of conspiring to eliminate the retailer.

The suit, fled last August in federal court, says that about 95 percent of Rose's $2.3 million in sales of Pennsylvania House furniture in 1985 were to out-of-state customers by telephone. Another suit against Pennsylvania House, by Parkway Furniture Galleries in Boone, charges the same thing: Pennsylvania House tried to put Parkway out of business because Parkway sold furniture at a discount.

Pennsylvania House, Henredon, Thomasville Furniture, Bernhardt and Drexel Heritage have enacted new policies that discount retailers say are designed to drive them out of business.

The policies say that if a retailer wants to sell a company's furniture, he cannot advertise it out of state.

Advertising includes catalogs, brochures and telephone calls. Most of the discounters have their headquarters in North Carolina and sell most of their furniture out of state.

Raleigh Area Lead Growth List In 1986

RALEIGH (AP) — The metropolitan Raleigh area experienced the most population growth among North Carolina cities in 1986, but the city's mayor said he doesn't expect the area to continue growing at a 3 percent clip.

"The competition is becoming very strong," said Raleigh Mayor Avery Upchurch. "I still see growth, though. North Carolina is changing from being agricultural to more of a manufacturing-, service-oriented state, and that means activity will be around the urban centers."

The Raleigh area, including Durham and Chapel Hill, grew the most, but Charlotte remains the largest Tar Heel city, beating Greensboro by more than 100,000 residents.

The Charlotte area, which includes Mecklenburg, Union, Lincoln and Gaston counties and York County in South Carolina, had about 1,065,400 residents in 1986, up 12,000 or 1 percent from the year before, the Census Bureau said Thursday.

More than 650,000 people lived in metropolitan Raleigh — including all of Wake, Durham, Orange and Franklin counties — in 1986, making it North Carolina's third-largest metropolitan area, the Census Bureau reported. About 220,000 people live within the limits of the capital city.

"In some people's minds, it's good, and in some people's minds, it's bad," Upchurch said.

"We've had very healthy growth fueled by new business and industry within Research Triangle Park and also in the universities," Upchurch said. "But it has also caused some challenges, with transportation, wastewater treatment and the water supply."

The Greensboro area, including Guilford, Randolph, Forsyth, Stokes, Davidson, Davie and Yadkin counties, remained the state's second-largest metropolitan area, with 899,500 residents last year. That was up 0.5 percent from 1985, when the area had a population of 894,300.

Greensboro Mayor John Forbis said the Raleigh area's growth was helped by its proximity to the Research Triangle Park.

"We are also more textile-intensive in terms of our competition with offshore textile producers and we still had some impact from that," Forbis said.

He said the layoffs by some of the area's major employers might have a short term impact on next year's growth figures, but would have no long-term effect on the area.

Fayetteville is the state's fourth-largest city, with 258,500 residents in 1986, up 1 percent from 1985, when it had 255,500 residents. Hickory — including Burke, Catawba and Alexander counties — came in fifth, with a population last year of 217,600. That was 1 percent higher than the previous year's 215,000.

The Census Bureau said Asheville had a 1986 population of 170,000, compared to 168,400 in 1985; Jacksonville had populations of 126,600 and 122,700; Wilmington came in at 114,100 in 1986 and 112,300 the year before; and Burlington had 102,400 residents, the same as in 1985.

Teens Killed By Lightning

SOUTHMONT, N.C. (AP) — Two Lexington teen-agers were killed by lightning after they and their parents sought shelter from a storm that came up suddenly on High Rock Lake in Davidson County, authorities said.

Davidson County Sheriff's Deputy Randy Leonard identified the victims as Scotty Tester, 19, and Nicky Tester, 14, both of Lexington. Their father, Odell Tester, and their mother were stunned by the lightning, Leonard said. He said authorities did not have the mother's name.

The family was in a boat on the lake about 6:40 p.m. Thursday when the storm began, Leonard said. "All of the sudden, it popped up," he said.

They sought shelter under trees on a nearby island, he said. Lightning struck the trees and all four family members, he said.

Reagan Urges AIDS Panel To Use 'Common Sense'

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A diverse new AIDS panel has a challenge from President Reagan to use "a good strong dose of common sense" to help stop the spread of the disease.

The 13 appointees, whom Reagan introduced Thursday at the National Institutes of Health, range from an activist homosexual geneticist to a Roman Catholic cardinal who has denounced homosexuality as a sin.

Asked if such a diverse group would be able to agree on an AIDS policy for the nation, geneticist Dr. Frank Lilly said, "I can only say I hope so."

He said he didn't know most of the other panel members, adding, "Before I can make an evaluation of the commission, I have to sit through at least one meeting of it."

Reagan flew by helicopter to NIH in the Washington suburb of Bethesda, Md., where he signed autographs for child victims of AIDS and visited the laboratory that was the site of the first work on AZT, a drug used to fight the AIDS virus.

"One way or another, whether by breakthrough or steady progress, we will beat this disease," the president told an audience of about 250 at the NIH.

"What we need right now ... is a good strong dose of common sense," he added. "It seems to be common sense to recognize that when it comes to stopping the spread of AIDS, medicine and morality teach the same lessons."

Reagan has asked the panel, among other things, to review AIDS education efforts; examine measures to stop spread of the disease; examine the needs of AIDS patients; identify areas for research; study related legal and ethical issues; and examine policies towards drugs and vaccines.

The appointment of Lilly, chairman of the genetics department at Albert Einstein Medical Center in New York City, capped a drive by gay rights groups for representation on the commission. Lilly has led AIDS education efforts at the Gay Men's Health Crisis group in New York and at the National Academy of Sciences.

Gary Bauer, Reagan's domestic policy adviser, denied that the president gave in to pressure on the homosexual issue. But Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., accused Reagan of caving in to demands by homosexual groups that "society accept their sexual practices as normal."

Among numerous conservatives on the panel are Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York and Penny Pullen, assistant GOP minority leader of the Illinois House.

O'Connor, who volunteered last month to work with hospitalized AIDS patients, says homosexuality is a sin. He takes the church position that homosexuals should prevent AIDS through sexual abstinence.

Pullen pushed two AIDS bills now awaiting Illinois Gov. James Thompson's signature. One requires AIDS testing for marriage licenses; the other requires health officials to notify sex partners of people found to be carrying the AIDS virus.

Reagan gave the commission 90 days to submit a preliminary report.

Some of the panel members, such as Indiana health commissioner Woodrow A. Myers Jr., have strong backgrounds in dealing with AIDS. But biographies of others, such as Amway Corp. president and GOP activist Richard De Vos, reveal little expertise in the field.

Myer championed the cause of an AIDS-carrying Kokomo, Ind., youth barred from going to school. Myer argued that others were not endangered.

Ann E. McFarren, executive director of the AIDS Action Council, a lobbying organization seeking more money for AIDS education, accused Reagan of bypassing "hundreds of experts who have devoted their lives to every aspect of the AIDS problem in favor of quasi-political appointments who will have to spend months, even years, mastering the issues."

The commission chairman, Dr. William Eugene Mayberry, is chairman of the board of governors of the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., and a specialist in endicrinolgy. However, he has acknowledged he is "no AIDS expert."

Other panel members include John J. Creedon, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., which is undertaking a major AIDS education initiative; Colleen Conway-Welch, dean of nursing at Vanderbilt University; Theresa L. Crenshaw, director of a sexual dysfunction clinic whose advocacy of AIDS testing has brought opposition from gay-rights advocates to her nomination to a local AIDS advisory group in San Diego; and Dr. Burton James Lee III, a lymphoma specialist at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York.

Also, Dr. Cory SerVaas of Indianapolis, medical director of the Foundation for Preventative Medicine who advocates AIDS testing as a patriotic duty; Dr. William Walsh of Bethesda, Md., founder of project HOPE; and James Watkins of Washington, a retired Navy admiral who was instrumental in the Pentagon decision to test soldiers and recruits for AIDS.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is a contagious, fatal disease that renders the body's immune system incapable of resisting other diseases and infections. It is spread in most cases by sexual contact, with homosexual men the highest-risk group, followed by intravenous drug addicts who share needles.

Health officials estimate up to 1.5 million Americans have been exposed to the virus.

Tornadoes Rip Homes In Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Tornadoes and high winds damaged as many as 300 houses in a Twin Cities suburb as torrential rains from a fierce summer storm turned streets into rivers and paralyzed much of the metropolitan area.

No fatalities or serious injuries were reported from Thursday night's storms, but several people were cut by broken glass from windows shattered by 60- to 70-mph winds, officials said.

In suburban Maple Grove, a tornado destroyed as many as 10 houses, inflicted major damage on as many as 100, and and lesser damage to 100 to 200 more, said Irene Koski, assistant to the city administrator.

Damage to the suburb was estimated at $5 million, she said.

Civil defense sirens sounded about 20 minutes before the tornado struck, giving people enough time to take shelter, said Lt. Ron Markgraf of the city Police Department.

Some residents were home when the storm demolished their houses, yet escaped serious injuries. "It was probably luck," Markgraf said. "We were very, very fortunate."

Damage was confined to a six-block area that was cordoned off to prevent looting, he said.

Minneapolis had more than 10 inches of rain between early evening and midnight Thursday, and authorities said some south Minneapolis basements collected up to 8 feet of water.

Hennepin County deputies used a boat early today to search for missing residents of Hopkins and south Minneapolis, although officials said they did not know how many people might be missing.

Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport shut down at 8:30 p.m. Thursday, and widespread power and telephone outages were reported.

Golf ball-sized hail also pummeled the area, and the State Patrol closed parts of at least a dozen streets and highways flooded with water 3 to 4 feet deep.

Michael Postle, inspector with the Hennepin County Sheriff's Department, said the weather was "comparable to a major winter storm in terms of shutting down an entire metropolitan area of seven counties and 2 million people.

"Traffic is virtually impassable on all highways and sidestreets. Cars are actually floating. Nowhere in recollection have we had storms like this," he said late Thursday night.

Mary Winstead, a spokeswoman for the Red Cross, said a shelter was set up in Minneapolis for people whose residences were unsafe.

The twisters touched down Thursday night in the Maple Grove-Brooklyn Park area, the Long Lake area and the New Brighton-St. Anthony-Arden Hills area, the National Weather Service said.

Today's forecast called for more showers and thunderstorms, some severe, with clearing in the afternoon.

Dave Lundberg, duty officer for the Minnesota Civil Defense, said the storm could warrant a disaster declaration for the area, with cleanup efforts likely to involve both state and federal assistance.

Hundreds of travelers were stranded when the Minneapolis-St. Paul airport shut down overnight, said John Ostrom, operations coordinator for the Metropolitan Airport Commission. Runways were flooded, and minor flooding was reported inside airport buildings.

Northern States Power Co. spokesman Tom Bushee said the storms knocked out power of thousands of Twin Cities residents. Heavy rains and flooding were preventing crews from making any serious attempts at restoring it, he said.

Widespread phone outages also were reported, although Northwestern Bell spokesman John Walker said he did not know how many customers were affected.

Minneapolis' heavy rain Thursday broke the city's 24-hour rainfall record of 7.80 inches, set July 26-27, 1892, the National Weather Service said.

Rainfall for the month was up to 15.61 inches in the Twin Cities area, bypassing the record of 11.87 inches set in 1892. The area's average rainfall for the month is 3.51 inches, the National Weather Service said.

"I think the Lord is sending down the great flood — I'm just waiting for Noah's Ark to come floating by," said Robert Wise, 21, of Minneapolis, stranded at a Minneapolis restaurant when his car stalled in a flooded street.

HOME DESTROYED — Tom Wilkonson stands in the backyard of his home in Maple Grove, Minn., a suburb of the Twin Cities. His home was almost totally destroyed by a tornado that did an estimated $5 million damage to the area Thursday night. About 20 other homes were severely damaged. (AP Laserphoto)

Minimum Wage

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, is telling union leaders that his proposal to raise the minimum wage by $1.30 an hour to $4.65 will soon be going to the Senate floor for action.

Kennedy said his committee will send the legislation, strongly supported by labor but opposed by the Reagan administration and industry, to the floor where every senator will have to take a stand on it.

The proposal would raise the minimum wage from $3.35 an hour to $4.65 over the next three years and eventually tie the wage to one-half of the average wage as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

A similar measure has been introduced in the House by Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., chairman of the House labor committee. Action in the House is not expected to come until after the Senate acts.

Beatles Suing Record Firm

NEW YORK (AP) — The Beatles have filed a $40 million lawsuit against their former record company and demanded the return of master tapes of their top albums, according to reports published today.

The defunct rock group charged Thursday in a Manhattan court that Capitol Records and its parent, EMI, unfairly withheld release of Beatles records on compact discs for two years, the New York Post and Daily News reported.

Lawyer Leonard Marks said that caused the loss of millions of dollars in revenues.

The lawsuit also claims the record company illegally is taking 25 percent from the Beatles compact disc royalties. It was filed on behalf of Paul McCartney, George Harrison, Ringo Starr, John Lennon's widow, Yoko Ono, and their now-defunct Apple record label.

The News noted that McCartney is not officially named in the suit but is in it because he owns 25 percent of Apple.

"They are cheating the Beatles out of millions, and they are very upset," Marks said.

The lawsuit also claims Capitol refused to release Beatles albums so it could force group members to settle another multimillion-dollar lawsuit they filed to collect back royalties from the record company.

The News said Capitol-EMI did not return telephone calls seeking comment.

Pope Letter

LUND, Sweden (AP) — "The main needs of humanity are calling Christians to a renewed evangelization, to a more intense sharing of the Gospel ... to satisfy the spiritual hunger so obvious in our world," says Pope John Paul II.

In a letter to the Lutheran World Federation, read by the head of the Vatican's Christian unity secretarian, Cardinal Johannes Willebrands, the pope also stressed the importance of dialogue toward Christian unity.

He said "divided Christians give a contradictory witness."

Stock Divestment

SEATTLE (AP) — A meeting of the United Methodist Board of Pensions decided to begin immediate divestment of $26.7 million in stocks of six U.S. corporations doing business in South Africa.

Unitarian Resolution

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The General Assembly of the Unitarian Universalist Association adopted a resolution urging congregations to study and review the legal, moral and economic issues surrounding an individual's "right to die."

The Rev. William Schulz, president of the 180,000-member association, called it the "faith of the free," and said it has grown by 13 new congregations in the past year, with 20 expected to be added in 1987-88.

Move Applauded

NEW YORK (AP) — Conservative and Reform Jewish organizations have hailed the rejection by Israel's parliament of a proposal to empower the Orthodox chief rabbinate to determine the legitamacy of conversions to Judaism outside Israel.

The issue, involving "who is Jewish," has smouldered for years, with Orthodox leaders maintaining only those converted under Orthodox rules are Jews, eligible for citizenship in Israel under its "law of return."

Rabbi Daniel Syme, vice president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations (Reform), says rejection of the meassure shows no faction can make Israel a "private preserve, a members-only club for its ideological adherents."

Strict Hiring Procedures Are Now Rule For Southern Baptist Board

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The Southern Baptist Home Missions Board, in a move it said was not part of its customary hiring practice, had its president question a prospective employee about his beliefs in front of board members.

A key question, put by the new board president, the Rev. Larry L. Lewis, was whether the interviewee believed the Bible is "truth without any mixture of error."

After responding that he did, and answering various other questions, the applicant, Richard Reasoner from Kansas City, Mo., was hired as director of counseling services at board offices in Atlanta, Ga.

The interrogation signaled a pattern of closer examination of employee views, particularly about the Bible, as newly mandated in the 14.6 million-member denomination, the country's largest Protestant body.

Its convention last month in St. Louis directed such scrutiny after a fundamentalist wing defeated moderates and won its ninth straight annual victory, solidifying that bloc's control of the denomination.

The achievement culminated a nine-year drive, begun in 1979, in which strategists projected that timetable for gaining control of denominational operations, through accumulating presidential appointments.

With fundamentalists now attaining majorities of trustees for most of the denomination's 24 agencies and institutions through presidential appointive powers, the re-elected president, the Rev. Adrian Rogers of Memphis, says:

"I'm not swaggering over the fact that we've won and others have lost. I'm grateful our denomination is standing fast in the storm."

The convention, in adopting a peace committee's report, told seminaries and other agencies to choose staffs who believe the Bible is without error "in all realms of reality" and "all fields of knowledge."

As examples, the report said this means believing that Adam an Eve were real persons, that all biblically described miracles were actual events, that the Bible is historically accurate, that as it says, Moses wrote its first five books.

Insistence on such literalistic approaches differs from the old-line Baptist principle that each believer interprets the Bible as each understands it — a heritage called "the crown jewel of Baptists."

Moderate leaders contend the newly prescribed views amount to "creedalism" — imposing a creed of beliefs — something Baptists historically have shunned under their motto, "No creed but the Bible."

After the peace committee was authorized to monitor compliance with the new criteria for the next two to three years, one moderate member, the Rev. Winfred Moore of Amarillo, Texas, resigned in protest.

He objected to having a "police committee" passing judgments on denominational institutions and agencies. Other critics called it a "watchdog" system like the Vatican's doctrinal office.

The committee's chairman, the Rev. Charles Fuller of Roanoke, Va., disavows any policing tactics, but says he's unconfortable at the "risk of an unbaptistic procedure." He says methods still are to be worked out.

Rogers, who as president wields appontive powers greater than that of any U.S. church figure, says the denomination has a right to "set paramaters" on biblical views of employees serving in "places of responsibility."

That means, he says, requiring that they view the Bible as without error on any matter, including science and history. He says he "could not hold my head up as president" if he named "anybody to anything outside" that position.

Reflecting the more strictly winnowing approach, Lewis, who became head of the Home Missions Board on June 1, says that in hiring future staff, "we will be very careful about moral integrity and doctrinal integrity."

To a question, he said that means the agency will hire only those who consider the Bible "historically, scientifically, theologically and philosophically accurrate" in every respect.

The agency, with a $70 million annual budget, 365 staff members and 3,637 domestic missionaries, also has a stiffened policy about women, barring any funds for small, financially needy mission churches pastored by women.

Opposition to ordaining women is part of the fundamentalist platform, but there already are about 200 women pastors in the denomination.

Home missions is only one of 18 agencies, plus six seminaries, of the huge church organization, centered in Nashville, Tenn., with annual budgets totalling about $400 million, and assets of an estimated $20 billion.

Some of its seminaries still retain moderate leadership, but the impact was yet to come from Rogers' predominantly fundamentalist appointments this year of a committee that determines choices of new trustees.

The Rev. Russell H. Dilday Jr., president of Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth, says he had to withdraw a nomination this spring of a new professor because of fundamentalist "political objections."

Meanwhile, the publishing house of the denomination's Sunday School Board started work on a new multivolume Bible commentary to be produced only by writers holding an "inerrantist" view — that the Bible contains no errors.

The denomination's previously published Bible commentary took varying views — as do Baptists.

Marked Christians

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — About 330,000 Christians a year are martyred for the faith around the world, says the Rev. David Barrett, a noted religious statistician.

Barrett, an Anglican priest and editor of the authoritative World Christian Encyclopedia, now based here as consultant to the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Board, says research indicates one in every 200 workers on the mission field is killed.

"If you are a Christian worker on the frontiers of evangelism in a non-Christian society you are a marked man or woman," he told Dan Wooding of the Open Doors News Service, which deals with Christians under oppression.

Barrett, gleaning cases from interviews, correspondence and from about 1,000 missions magazines, says the 20th century has seen a rise in Christian martyrdom, with an average of 330,000 being slain per year.

Meeting With Pope

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Two Southern Baptist leaders say they will join other U.S. Protestant leaders in meeting privately with Pope John Paul II on his September visit — although the denomination's president declines to do so.

The Rev. Harold C. Bennett, head of the denomination's executive committee, and Carolyn Weatherford of Birmingham, Ala., executive director of the Woman's Missionary Union, say they will participate in the meeting Sept. 11 in Columbia, S.C.

Evangelist Billy Graham, a Southern Baptist, also is to take part.

However, the Rev. Adrian Rogers of Memphis, Tenn., the denomination's president, says he won't take part, declining to give his reasons, saying "they are best not expressed in public media."

Museum Seeks True Story

By Don A. Schanche
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

PONTEDASSIO, Italy — The staid British Broadcasting Corp. once put on a somber, hourlong television documentary that showed Italian farmers tending spaghetti vines, harvesting the golden strands by hand and carefully hanging them in the sun to ripen, then popping them into boiling water.

It was, of course, an April Fool spoof, but the producers reckoned that about half the people who saw the program took it seriously, and were enraged upon being told, at the end, that pasta does not grow on vines. It grows like bread, only easier, from flour and water and sometimes eggs in the hands of a good pasta cook.

The distraught British television viewers who thought they were seeing an agricultural miracle fell into a pattern of misunderstanding about pasta that stretches beyond written history, according to Eva Agnesi, 51, a no-nonsense pasta manufacturer and keeper of the world's only scholarly center on the subject.

"So many people believe things about pasta that simply are not true," she said in a recent interview, "like that nonsense about Marco Polo bringing it to Italy from China."

Agnesi, president of Italy's second-largest pasta producer, the Agnesi company, which her family has run for six generations, also directs the Spaghetti Historical Museum, located in the medieval house of her ancestors in Pontedassio, a small town in the foothills that rise from the nearby Mediterranean coast to the Alps near the Italian-French border.

For more than half a century, her late father, Vicenzo, gathered the rare documents, artworks, cookbooks and artifacts that represent the only concentrated study center on the strings, tubes and ingeniously shaped lumps of dough that are called pasta.

Among other documents are those that show both the beginning and the end of the Marco Polo legend.

The origin of the legend was surprisingly recent, said Agnesi, whose father traced it to an American trade publication called the "Macaroni Journal," still publishing after almost 71 years in Minneapolis. She said the Journal's issue for October 1929 included a story recounting how the famous Venetian traveler, accompanied by an Italian sailor named Spaghetti, observed Chinese cooks making their favorite noodles. Spaghetti learned the process and Polo brought a recipe named after his companion back to Venice, thereby opening the pasta era in Italy. The legend spread, and it still shows up in news articles and cookbooks.

"It's nonsense," Agnesi said. "Marco Polo's book simply mentions that he saw the Chinese eating pasta-like noodles, demonstrating that he already knew pasta before he went to China.

"Also, we have a doctor's prescription, written in 1244, instructing an ill worker to eat 'smooth pasta' 10 years before Marco Polo was born. In 1279, a soldier named Ponzio Bastone dictated his will to a scribe named Ugolino Scarpa and left 'a basket of macaroni' to one of his heirs, and we have that document, too. Marco Polo didn't even return from China until 1295, and it was three years later that he dictated his 'Book of Marco Polo' while spending a year in prison."

Whatever the Chinese and many other cultures, including the ancient Egyptians, did with flour, water and a boiling pot — most of them made noodles and dumplings — there is even older evidence that pasta as Italians know it was invented in Italy.

The oldest evidence of Italian pasta is carved in the stone of the Tomb of the Reliefs, an Etruscan burial site of 400 B.C. in the town of Cerveteri northwest of Rome. Reliefs on the tomb's supporting stone pillars show implements for making pasta, including a rolling pin, remarkably similar to some of those used by Agnesi's more recent ancestors when they began making pasta in Pontedassio in 1814.

"Both Cicero and Horace mentioned lasagna in their writings, and the chief cook of the Emperor Tiberius cooked a noodle that sounds like spaghetti," she said.

But for centuries Italian pasta remained largely a dish for domestic consumption, mostly by the poor, who found that a plate of spaghetti and a little sauce of vegetables, herbs, oil and sometimes meat went a long way at low cost, and tasted even better after Christopher Columbus brought the tomato home from the new world.

According to Agnesi, pasta probably did not reach North America until 1786, when Thomas Jefferson took a macaroni mold and a list of recipes home to Virginia after serving a stint as abassador to France.

Even so, she said, pasta did not catch on in the United States until the great wave of Italian emigration in the late 1800s and early 1900s. But since then pasta consumption by Americans and other nationalities around the world has taken off. An idle mathematician calculated for the museum that a year's supply of spaghetti in the United States would circle the globe more than 215 times. Worldwide, the spaghetti consumed in the last century if launched in a single strand would stretch easily to the planet Jupiter.

Much of it, however, would be overcooked to the point of mushiness, not fit for a true Italian table.

"The Americans must learn not to overcook their pasta, because the good qualities get lost," Agnesi said with a sigh. "It must be al dente, as we say in Italy, just to the right point and firm but not undercooked. Most people find this hard to believe, but pasta is more easily digested if it is al dente than if it is overcooked to softness. That's why we give it in broth to the sick."

Equally important, she said, is that it must be eaten immediately after boiling and should not be overdrained. "Leave a little water, it helps to prevent sticking," she said.

She said she eats pasta at least twice a day, once for quality control at the huge Agnesi factory on the Italian Riviera, in nearby Imperia, and once for pleasure at home.

Another misconception, she said, is that pasta is fattening.

"Actually," she said, "it is a wonderful diet food. The carbohydrates of pasta generate far fewer calories than equal measures of meat and are fat-free. Pasta also generates less blood sugar by half than sugar and considerably less than other carbohydrates such as bread, rice and potatoes. It provides energy for longer periods, too, because of its relatively slow absorption by the body. And there is no cholesterol."

But it can be made as fattening as a cook wants to make it, depending upon which of the uncounted thousands of sauces are served with it.

"No one knows how many sauces there are," Agnesi said, "but a recent cookbook listed 1,001. You can make up your own."

As with sauces, there is a bewildering variety of pasta shapes, ranging from the classic spaghetti and fat macaroni to noodles with names like Wolf's Eyes and Little Mustaches. The museum lists about 300 shapes currently made in Italy, although the Agnesi factory produces only about 100.

"Most of the producers make about 100 to 150," she said.

A few years ago, one of the pasta manufacturers sponsored a competition among Italian designers to create a new shape. The winning design looked both beautiful and practical, an intricately double-folded tube which was grooved on the inside to catch more sauce. Unfortunately, the double fold meant a double thickness in the center of each piece of pasta.

"I don't think it is sold anymore because it is not possible to cook it properly," Agnesi said.

But the search for new and pleasing shapes goes on, she said, and added:

"There's room for fantasy. Something new can still be found."

Christmas Ornaments In July

HEIRLOOM ORNAMENTS — Lucille Sumrell, arts and crafts supervisor for the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, is conducting a July session in making Battenburg lace Christmas ornaments. "I had a new craft idea I wanted to share and teach to the many people remaining in the city during the summer. The ornaments can be made in three afternoons," said Mrs. Sumrell. The first series features a bell, heart, flower, angel and fan. A second series is planned. For further information and to preregister, call Recreation and Parks at 830-4546. The ornaments are displayed at the Community Building, located on the corner of Fourth and Greene streets. (Reflector photo by Rosalie Trotman)

Outside Grills Need Cleaning

Nothing beats barbecuing outdoors. Beginning with the first warm days of spring and extending to the last mild evenings of fall, chicken, beef, hot dogs and hamburgers take on a whole new taste when grilled on an open fire.

But what about cleaning the grill afterward? How do you remove the grease and cooked-on-food particles? Here are some super summertime solutions.

Barbecue Grills and Barbecue Utensils:

To remove accumulations of grease and burned-on food, fill the sink with warm water, add 1/2 cup of washing soda and soak the entire grilling rack in the solution. For hardened accumulations, scrub the rack with washing soda sprinkled on a moist, stiff-bristled brush. Rinse and dry.

Outdoor Furniture:

At the beginning of the season, clean your metal outdoor furniture with a solution of 1/2 cup of washing soda per gallon of warm water. Wipe down seat cushions, patio umbrellas, tabletops, chairs and lounges with a cloth or sponge dipped in the solution. For wrought iron, scrub with a moist stiff-bristled brush. Follow by hosing down all items and letting them dry in the sun. (Do not use on unpainted aluminum surfaces.)

Pation and Garage Surfaces:

To remove oil and grease spills, pour washing soda generously and sprinkle lightly with water until a paste forms. Let it stand overnight. The following day, scrub with a moist brush, hose down and wipe the surface clean.

Homemaker's Haven

Garden Tools (Saws, Hedgetrimmers, Clippers):

For easy maintenance, scrub tools with washing soda sprinkled on a moist, stiff-bristled brush. Hose off and let dry in the sun.

NOTE: Do not use washing soda on unpainted aluminum objects. Also, as with any other household product, rubber gloves are recommended when using washing soda.

Hesitation To Host Tempts Card Group To Fold Playing

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I love to play the card game Pan. In our game, one of the eight players has turned out to be a freeloader. The last eight times when it was her turn to host, she was either "sick," or her husband was "entertaining a relative," or her maid missed coming this week and her house was a mess. However, she has not missed a game in a year!

Now she says her hands hurt (arthritis) so she can't shuffle the cards, but she has no trouble reaching for the chips or reaching for the cards.

Abby, you once wrote: "Nobody can take advantage of you without your permission."

The other women in our group are just as fed up with this woman as I am, but nobody has the nerve to call her on it. I told the others that I was going to drop out. So since I am always quoting you, they said, "Write to Dear Abby and see what she has to say." So I am writing. Should I stay with the group and ignore this woman's faults, or drop out and try to organize another game without her? The other women said they would all go along with your decision. — E.G. IN L.A.

DEAR E.G.: Freeloading is inexcusable, but arthritic hands can be painful, so give the offending woman a break. Confront her and state your complaint, and if she doesn't have the game at her house in the very near future, you would be justified to "reorganize" — and deal her out.

DEAR ABBY: My very good friend (I'll call her Terry) just found out that she is expecting twins. She gave me a baby shower last year, so now I'm going to have one for her.

Do you think I should mention on the invitations that Terry is expecting twins? It will mean that the guests will have to buy two gifts instead of one, which may make it kind of expensive for those who are on a rather tight budget. — DOUBLE TROUBLE

DEAR DOUBLE: Of course you should mention the double blessing in your invitations. Obviously it will mean bringing two gifts instead of one, but everyone knows that one pair of booties will not cover four little feet.

DEAR ABBY: Here's a beef I don't recall seeing in your column: Why does every young twit in a medical/legal office, from the doctor/lawyer down to the receptionist, call me by my first name?

I always introduce myself as "Mrs. Smith." I'm 43, mother of five, a professional person with more life experience than any three of them put together. Yet they're always Dr. X or Mr. X. I find it disrespectful and an unwarranted familiarity. I'm sure every self-respecting woman has at some time resented this condescension.

What is a firm but polite response to nip this habit in the bud? — MRS. SMITH, VANCOUVER, B.C.

DEAR MRS. SMITH: I recommend that you firmly, but politely, ask the offending young twerps, doctors, lawyers, receptionists, etc. to address you as "Mrs. Smith." And should they fall back into their old first-name habits, firmly but politely repeat the request.

Couple Marries Saturday

NEW BERN — Linda Margaret Gorman of New Bern and George Stephen Diab of Wilmington were married Saturday at 4:30 p.m. in Centenary United Methodist Church. The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Edward F. Hill III and Monsignor James R. Jones.

The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Richard Forbes Gorman of New Bern. She is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. George Diab of Wilmington. He graduated from UNC-CH and will attended the law school there.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents and was escorted by her father. She wore a floor length gown of traditional silk taffeta designed by Jim Hylem for Galina. The fitted bodice featured a sweetheart neckline, short pouf sleeves and an elongated torso ending in a V-front and back. The bodice was adorned with alencon lace encrusted with seed pearls and iridescents. The floor length skirt extended into a cathedral train. Beaded alencon lace motifs appliqued the skirt and train and scalloped schiffli embroidery bordered the hemline of the gown. She wore a fingertip tiered veil of illusion appliqued with seed pearls attached to a wreath of silk roses. The bride carried a traditional bouquet of dendrobium orchids, white lilies, English ivy and sword ferns. White crocheted wedding bells made by the bride's great-aunt, Ailine Mewborn, accented the bouquet.

The honor attendant was Mary Margaret Haddock of New Bern. Bridesmaids were Sarah White Palmer of Warren, Ohio, and Katherine Alden White of Sanford, both cousin of the bride; Elissa Gay Robinson of Raleigh; Barbara Diab Shaw of Wilmington, sister of the bridegroom; Willa Marie Stancill of Greenville, and Cynthia Ambrose Stevens and Elizabeth Campbell Weeks, both of New Bern.

The attendants each wore a tea length gown of bridal blue polished cotton designed with a scooped neckline, off-shoulder pouf sleeves and a draped bodice extending low on one hip and accented with a bow. Each carried a bouquet of yellow oncidium orchids, rubrum lilies, pink anthurium and English ivy.

Honorary bridesmaids were Whitney Leigh Carrington of Southern Pines, Sarah Hardison Covington of Weaverville, Whitney Ann Gillespie of Washington, N.C., and Amy Louise Merbern of Farmville and Elizabeth McNeill White of Sanford, both cousins of the bride.

Flower girl Megan Moore Sauls of Farmville, cousin of the bride, wore a tea length white dress with lace inserts and embroidered bridal blue flowers. She wore a wreath of gypsophilia and carried a basket of rose petals.

Best man was Robert Bruce Diab of Wilmington, brother of the bridegroom. Serving as ushers were Scott Thomas Bierwiler, Charles Chung-Hyup Yue and John Decatur Messic, all of Wilmington; Richard Forbes Gorman Jr. of New Bern, brother of the bride; Walter Monroe Brown IV of Burlington; Jeffrey Dean Michael of Albemarle; Charles Randall Tutterow of Greensboro; Robert Gregory Weaver of Chapel Hill and Walter Jay Whelless of Manteo. The ring bearer was Mark Breckenridge Gibbs of New Bern.

Kevin McNeill Mewborn of Farmville, cousin of the bride, was acolyte.

The bride's mother wore a powder blue silk jacquard dress trimmed in Belgium lace and the mother of the bridehrgroom selected a two-piece silk jacquard dress accented with a lace collar. Both mothers and the grandmother of the bride, Mrs. John M. Mewborn, were remembered with white phalaenopsis orchid corsages.

Wedding music was performed by organist Marilyn H. Johnson and vocalist William F.Ward III. The wedding was directed by Margaret Stevens and Mrs. George W. Davis.

A reception was held at the bride's home.

A rehearsal dinner was given by the parents of the bridegroom at the New Bern Golf and Country Club. Following the dinner, a dance hosted by Mr. and Mrs. William Merrette Moore of Raleigh was held, with music provided by the band Liquid Pleasure.

A wedding breakfast was given by friends of the bride's family Saturday at Federal Alley. A bridesmaids luncheon was given Friday at the home of Mrs. Kenneth Gibbs.

After a wedding trip to Bermuda, the couple will reside in Chapel Hill.

HONOLULU (AP) — That voice!

The sound drifted across the aisles of Guava Lane in Ala Moana Center. The song was familiar, the background music professional. But the singer wasn't Stevie Wonder, Elton John, Dionne Warwick or Gladys Knight.

Shoppers stopped and turned toward the speaker. Who was that singing?

"That's what fwends are foaaaaa," Wade Kaneshiro, age 6, sang, his tiny hands grabbing the microphone.

It was Kaneshiro's first time recording a song but he wasn't about to let his success go to his little head.

"I sound like Webster," he said, after listening to the tape.

Kaneshiro is one of the youngest people to take part in the newest pastime around: vanity recording.

For about $10, you step into a small studio, put on a headset and blast out the lyrics to your favorite song, complete with a background of violins, guitars, horns and whatever other instruments should be there.

You take away a cassette that will either amaze or torture your friends.

Center Stage Recording Studios is three small rooms, a control panel and a cash register inside Guava Lane.

Visitors can pick any of about 200 songs and lay down a vocal soundtrack to professionally recorded background music. For those who don't know the words, a large book with lyrics sits on a stand in each booth.

The engineer fiddles with switches and dials, making a singer's voice sound as good as possible. Then the voice is balanced with the taped background music and a surprisingly professional version of a well-known hit is recorded on a cassette tape.

The background music is recorded by studio musicians in Texas, according to Paul Kyno, who opened the Hawaii store.

Houston entrepreneur Rick Goldberg got the idea for the studios from his two daughters. He has opened 13 Center Stage studios around the United States. The studio allows people to realize their dreams of hearing themselves on a professional recording without having to hire musicians and pay heavy studio fees.

It's kind of like singing in the shower, only high tech.

"Everybody is a closet singer, they sing in the shower, they sing in their cars," Kyno said.

Walter Mitty-ish entertainers can choose songs from religious to rock 'n' roll. Singers from about any era can find a favorite among the song lists.

"It's kind of like a carnival ride," said Kathy Ledesma, one of the engineers who oversees the recordings. "You're kind of nervous at first, then it is kind of like a high."

So far, most of those stopping by to record are teen-age girls. One group filled the largest of the three recording rooms recently to belt out their version of "Twist and Shout."

"We were better than the original group," said 13-year-old Sharlene Yap.

But others are waiting in the wings.

"All right!" said William Palama, shaking hands with his buddy, Robert Williams, while they listened to a version of "On Broadway" they had just recorded.

They pair stopped by during a lunch break.

"We need more practice," Williams said.

Amy Johnson, a tourist from New York, just happened to be walking through Ala Moana when she noticed the laughter and the nervous energy from the small knot of people that always seems to be gathered in front of the recording console.

In a minute, she had picked a song, filled out the paper work, and was in a small room wearing a headset and singing, "Baby Love."

But when she was finished, she wouldn't let it be broadcast across the speakers.

"Diana Ross would kill me," she joked. "I done messed up her song."

Tax Office Moving

The Pitt County Tax Collector's office will move from the courthouse to Shore Drive Plaza at the intersection of Evans and Second streets Saturday and Sunday.

Tax Collector Bill Smith said today that he hopes the move can be completed Saturday. But he said in any event the tax collector's office will be open for business as usual on Monday in the new location.

"We'll be able to operate more efficiently" in the Shore Drive Plaza building, which was recently purchased by the county, Smith said.

The tax collector's office has been in it's present location in the courthouse for "six or seven years," according to Smith, who said "as far as I know, this is the first time in history that the tax collector's office will be located outside the courthouse.

The county bought the entire block bounded by First, Evans, Second and Washington streets — including the 9,600 square foot Shore Drive Plaza building, the 5,980 square foot building housing the Internal Revenue Service offices at the intersection of First and Evans streets, and the 7,262 square foot Barclay's Bank main office at the intersection of Second and Washington streets — to provide additional office space for agencies now located in the courthouse.

The tax collector's office is the first county department to move as a result of the purchase. The tax supervisor's office will move into the Shore Drive Plaza facility later this year.

Tanker Strikes Mine

tion's hastily thought out and, I think, still ill-conceived plan."

"It is fraught with peril and uncertainties," Byrd said.

Sen. Paul Trible, R-Va., said there were inevitably risks associated with the U.S. role in the gulf, but "we have to keep the energy lifeline open."

At the Pentagon, officials who spoke on condition of anonymity said the mine apparently was moored to the bottom of the gulf and floated about 20 feet below the surface. They based that assessment on the fact the mine appeared to have detonated under the tanker.

"To the best of our knowledge, that section of the gulf has never been searched for mines," said one source.

Gulf-based shipping sources who were in touch with the Kuwait Oil Tanker Co. said damage was minor. The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the vessel was proceeding under its own power and was expected to arrive in al-Ahmadi after nightfall. It had been scheduled to arrive around midday.

The convoy ran the gantlet of Iranian warships, missiles and fighter-bombers without incident until striking the mine. The other reflagged Kuwaiti vessel in the convoy is the 46,730-ton Gas Prince.

It was not known who laid the mine, but the Revolutionary Guards have been planting mines in Kuwait's shipping channels in recent weeks. Four vessels have hit the Soviet-made devices since May.

Iran has concentrated its gulf attacks on Kuwaiti shipping, claiming Kuwait backs Iraq in the nearly 7-year-old Iran-Iraq war. It generally has attacked Kuwaiti-bound shipping only after Iraqi attacks on Iranian oil terminals or tanker traffic.

The pilot said he told the gunman the plane would have to refuel in Paris, but the gunman insisted on going to Geneva, where the jet landed at 8:08 a.m. (2:08 a.m. EDT).

An official boarded the green-striped plane and spoke with the hijacker, said Cyrille Bonhote, an official at Cointrin airport.

The hijacker, speaking French, first demanded the plane be resupplied with food, then sent the supplies back when they arrived, said Geneva Police Chief Bernard Ziegler.

The hijacker had threatened to kill the passengers if his demands were not met, but he set no deadline, said police spokesman Marcel Vaudroz.

The passenger was shot about three hours after the plane landed, and the siege ended at 12:13 p.m. (6:13 a.m. EDT).

In Beirut, a Lebanese intelligence source identified the hijacker as Hussein Ali Mohammed Hariri, about 30, a Shiite Moslem Lebanese national. The source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Hariri was arrested by Israel on terrorism-related charges in 1984 but released in May through the International Committee of the Red Cross and returned to Lebanon.

Israel radio said Hariri, from south Lebanon, had spent three years in an Israeli jail on security charges.

Sources in Paris said Hariri demanded that West Germany free Mohammed Ali Hamadi, who was arrested Jan. 13 when he arrived at the Frankfurt airport carrying liquid explosives; and a brother, Abbas Ali Hamadi, 28, who was arrested Jan. 26 and charged in connection with the January kidnapping of two West Germans in Beirut.

West Germany refused a U.S. extradition request for Mohammed Ali Hamadi. The United States has charged him with taking part in the 1985 hijacking of a Trans World Airline jet that was flying from Rome to Athens, Greece. The jet was hijacked to Beirut, where the gunmen shot a U.S. Navy diver and threw his body out on the tarmac.

The Air Afrique flight had originated in Brazzaville, Congo, and stopped in Bangui, Central African Republic before proceeding to Rome. Its passengers included French, Belgian and Canadian nationals.

Air Afrique is based in Abidjan, Ivory Coast and is a consortium involving 10 Francophone countries in West and Central Africa.

Palmer Excels In Other Sport

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — At Nebraska, where football is king, Neil Palmer has made some headlines in gymnastics.

Not that Palmer, who won the U.S. Olympic Festival all-around title Thursday night, doesn't think about being on the Cornhuskers' football team.

"I love the sport of football and Nebraska has a great tradition," the muscular 5-foot-10, 165-pound Palmer said. "I think a gymnast has strength and flexibility which would help him crossover.

"I start thinking about it when gymnastics isn't going well. Right now, it's going well."

No kidding?

Palmer earned the highest score of the competition on the horizontal bar in the final round, and his 9.75 lifted him past UCLA's David St. Pierre for the gold medal. The North, helped by a 2-3-4 finish, won the team gold.

Today, track and field was to get under way as the festival approached an overall attendance record. The eighth festival, being held in five North Carolina cities, already is the most successful in ticket sales, having surpassed Houston's total of $2.4 million in 1986.

Organizers said a $3 million total was possible. Attendance was at 303,614, a little over 43,000 short of Houston's mark with three days remaining.

The gymnastics at Dean Smith Center drew 6,919 but already is sold out for the women's finals on Sunday. Much larger crowds are expected there tonight for the women's all-around and Saturday night for the men's individual competition.

Palmer, who finished third in this year's NCAA all-around, trailed St. Pierre by .05 points going into the final event. But his 9.75 and a 9.60 for Pierre in floor exercise gave Palmer the victory.

The North's Lance Ringnald of Albuquerque, N.M., took the bronze and was mobbed by his gold-medal winning teammates after finishing his floor routine.

"I don't do any extra giant swings," Palmer said about his horizonal bar performance. "I get my requirements over and get off the bar. The longer you stay on, the more chances you have of making mistakes."

St. Pierre, whose UCLA team won the NCAA crown this year, tried to concentrate only on his own routines.

"I wasn't trying to think about his performance," he said. "I notice the crowd's reaction (when Palmer finished) but it was in the back of my mind.

"I thought it was one of my best meets of the year."

Lawrence Hom had one of the best volleyball tournaments of his life. Hom led the North to the gold with 19 kills, giving him a festival-high 88. The North beat the West 6-15, 15-5, 15-5, 15-4.

"I had to prove to myself that I could do it on this level," said Hom, of Torrance, Calif., and a junior at Southern California. "I had the confidence I could do it. This festival has really boosted me."

The festival also might boost Brad Ryan, Brad Jones, Tom Chorske and Jon Morris onto the 1988 Olympic hockey team. Approximately 30 of the 80 players here will be invited to next month's Olympic training camp in Lake Placid, N.Y.

Ryan staked his first claim by stopping 29 shots as the North routed the West 8-0. The West has not scored in two games here.

"I don't think there is a No. 1 goalie out there," Ryan, of Illinois-Chicago, said. "I don't think there's a No. 8 out there. There are eight good goalies."

The North set a festival record by scoring three goals in 54 seconds — John Messuri of Princeton on a power play at 3:13; Skeeter Moore of Minnesota-Duluth 18 seconds later; and Ed Lowney of Boston University at 4:07 on a backhand tip-in.

Jones scored three goals and set up two by linemate Morris, of Lowell, in the third period, while Chorske, of Minnesota, had a goal and four assists in the East's 9-5 romp over the South.

"I had hat tricks three times last year, in successive games," said Jones, of Michigan. "I'm just happy the puck started going in. Everybody runs hot and cold scoring. When the breaks go your way, you're hot."

The weather also has been extremely hot all week, with temperatures in the high 90s. But that hasn't stopped the fans from boosting attendance.

"We were using $1.5 million as a conservative figure," Hill Carrow, president and executive director of the local organizing committee, said. "I thought we could go a little over that. But I never expected we would go more than a million dollars over it."

The U.S. Olympic Committee announced the establishment of a performance enhancement program of up to $5 million. The monies will be available to American athletes in Olympic sports.

Legion Series Opens Play

Pitt County American Legion Post 39 takes on Raleigh in the Area I American Legion Championship series starting Saturday night in Raleigh.

The series will be a best-of-seven set, with the first two games in Raleigh, followed by three in Greenville and the final two to be played back in Raleigh.

Game time is set for 7:30 p.m. at Raleigh's Optmist Park.

The winner advances to play the winner of the Whiteville-Hamlet series.

Both teams won in extra-inning games played Tuesday night.

Raleigh topped Garner, 6-5, in the 10th while Pitt defeated Rocky Mount 8-6 in 11 innings. The win by Pitt wrapped up the best of five series against Post 58.

After opening the series with Post 58, Pitt dropped the next game before coming back to win the final two games to win the best-of-five series, 3-1.

Taylor's Book Details Drug Use

NEW YORK (AP) — The NFL says it never watched Lawrence Taylor. The New York Giants have no comment.

But Taylor says "pretty nearly everybody," including police, knew or suspected he used drugs for three years and nobody did anything about it.

Taylor's allegations and his description of a three-year bout with cocaine are contained in a forthcoming book, "LT: Living on The Edge," excerpts of which were published in the September edition of Sport magazine, due out early next month.

In the excerpt, the NFL's Most Valuable Player wrote that he started using cocaine in October 1982 and continued until just before entering a drug rehabilitation facility early last year under the name of Paul Davis, his best friend. In 1985, he said, he started using crack, the powerful cocaine derivative "because the high was much more intense."

"From very early on, the Giants knew who on the team was into drugs," he said. "They certainly knew I was because they let me know. ...

"Cops and NFL security people, people I knew, would follow me. This wasn't paranoia, this was surveillance — and it was a joke. If they wanted to bust me, fine. But I knew they weren't going to do that, not as long as I was who I was and my game was intact," the All-Pro linebacker wrote.

"If I were Joe Blow, OK, there'd be the slammer or some midnight trip to Betty Ford's farm. ... It was almost a thrill in itself knowing that people knew what I was doing and wouldn't do a thing to stop me."

But the people Taylor said were aware of the problem denied any knowledge.

"This office has never had Lawrence Taylor under surveillance," NFL spokesman Joe Browne said. "Any future dealings with Taylor and the Giants regarding this matter will be handled on a confidential basis."

Giants' general manager George Young had no comment and compared Taylor's account with the Japanese play "Rashomon," in which people see the same event from different perspectives and added:

"We're told all the time about confidentiality in dealing with players. We're also in the rehabilitation business, not the punitive business."

Taylor, who lives in Upper Saddle River, N.J., did not specify what police agency followed him. The New Jersey State police and Upper Saddle River police both denied any knowledge and Prosecutor Larry McClure of Bergen County, where Giants Stadium and Taylor's home are located, said:

"If either myself or my staff knew he was taking drugs he would have been arrested. I could care less if he was Lawrence Taylor, Mahatma Gandhi or Oliver North."

Taylor, who led the NFL with 20½ sacks last year as the Giants won their first Super Bowl, had shunted aside all questions about his drug problem after it became known he had undergone rehabilitation in Houston last March.

But in the excerpt in Sport, he went into detail, crediting his wife Linda with convincing him to get off drugs. At one point, he said, she forced her way into the back room of an apartment where he was "totally out of it," and forced him to go home with her.

Taylor said most of his teammates were aware he used cocaine: "The Giants, like every other team in the NFL, had guys who did drugs and guys who didn't. I knew some of them. I didn't know others. Pretty nearly everybody knew about me because I made no effort to hide it."

He said that through a friend, whose brother worked closely with law enforcement officials, "I had word passed — from the police — that they knew what I was doing. I used to get followed — to bars, to parties, toand from practices and games."

Taylor, who has been an All-Pro in all six of his NFL seasons, had his worst year in 1985, something he acknowledged in print.

"My body began to tell me that I could not continue as I was," he said. "But I also knew that my 75 percent was better than most other guys' 100 percent."

Taylor said he tested positive for drugs once — in a minicamp in the spring of 1985.

After that, he said, he worked out a way to smuggle another player's urine into the bathroom when he was asked to give a sample. Even when the team forced him to take a test under observation, he said he managed to surreptitiously squeeze "clean" urine from a small bottle into a test tube.

"The way I beat urine testing was simple," he said. "I never used my own."

Taylor's New Book Creates Questions

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Perhaps the darkest side in Lawrence Taylor's troubling account of his adventures with cocaine, detailed in his autobiography, "LT: Living on the Edge," and excerpted in the September issue of Sport Magazine, comes in the area of responsibility.

Taylor says he used crack — cocaine's most dangerous derivative — three times a week during the 1985 season. He says his team knew it and the league knew it and that everybody involved looked the other way, because he happens to be one of the best players in the business.

"If they wanted to bust me, fine," Taylor writes. "But I knew they weren't going to do that, not as long as I was who I was and my game was intact. If I were Joe Blow, OK, there'd be the slammer or some midnight trip to Betty Ford's farm. But I felt, as far as my playing ability went, I could do pretty nearly anything I wanted to on a football field and that carried over to the rest of my life. It was almost a thrill in itself knowing that people knew what I was doing and wouldn't do a damn thing to stop me."

What is at issue here is just who is in charge of your life, you or some outside authority. Certainly it is not in the interest of the league or its teams to have a star playing Russian Roulette with his life. But the name of this league is NFL, not FBI or CIA. It is in the business of football, not drug investigations and surveillance.

Player unions howl quite properly when the suggestion is made that their members be randomly tested for using drugs. The NFL Players Association proudly points to its grievance victory over Commissioner Pete Rozelle's effort to impose such testing a year ago. Can you imagine the union's reaction to league private eyes, following the players around?

It is unfair to suggest that a team or league turned its head on a drug abuser just because he happened to be an outstanding player. That flies in the face of Rozelle, who, in his early years as commissioner, suspended running back Paul Hornung and defensive tackle Alex Karras for betting on games.

In their time, Hornung and Karras were as important to the league as Taylor is today. Rozelle moved against them and then later suspended frontline players like E.J. Junior, Ross Browner, Chuck Muncie, Pete Johnson and Tony Peters among others in drug cases. He has not exactly buried his head in the sand over this issue.

Granted, Taylor is the NFL's quintessential defensive player, a textbook performer. But to suggest that his ability would make him immune, free to do anything he wanted with controlled substances, is a slur on the integrity of the league.

For its part, the NFL says it never had the New York Giant linebacker under surveillance, although in retrospect and in light of his revelations, maybe it should have. Certainly his level of play in 1985, when he says he used drugs freely, was not up to previous years, despite his selection for the Pro Bowl, which has become almost automatic.

When you choose to use drugs, that's your decision, made independently, hopefully with the knowledge that Len Bias and Don Rogers, two pretty good athletes, killed themselves that way a little over a week apart last summer.

Now, armed with that information, if you want to go ahead and fool with that dynamite, feel free. But don't get angry because somebody didn't grab you and stop you. If you want to take cocaine, you ought to take the responsibility for that action, right along with the risk.

Elliott's Grin Tells Story

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — The grin that spread across Bill Elliott's face seemed to get wider and wider until it threatened to become painful.

Elliott, a man who knows speed, was talking about one of his favorite subjects — going fast.

"Any time you run fast it's fun," Elliott said after turning a lap at 203.827 mph Thursday to win the pole position for the Talladega 500 NASCAR stock car race.

"I liked the quicker speeds," Elliott, who now has won six straight pole positions at Alabama International Motor Speedway, said. For the first time in that string failed to set a race or track qualifying record. "I've just learned to hold my breath for about 47 seconds. It's really fun."

Elliott, who now has a season-high six poles, set the all-time stock car qualifying mark of 212.809 here in May while winning the pole for the Winston 500. A year ago, he took the top qualifying spot for this event at 209.005.

However, Thursday's lap, which took 46.981 seconds, was no disappointment.

The speeds are down this week because NASCAR, reacting to Bobby Allison's crash at nearly 210 mph here in May that nearly sailed his car into a packed grandstand, mandated a smaller carburetor for the July 4 race at Daytona Beach, Fla., and Sunday's 500-miler here.

"It's all the same to me," Elliott said of the rule change. "It has done what they (NASCAR) wanted to do. As far as being competitive, they had a good race at Daytona (on July 4), and it should be the same here."

Last July, 39 cars made it into the 40-car race lineup for this race at more than 200 mph. This time, only 15 cars have been able to top that coveted mark after the first of two qualifying sessions.

The top 20 spots were locked in Thursday, with the rest of the field to be filled in further time trials today. Dale Earnhardt, the defending Winston Cup champion and this year's runaway point leader, was second on Thursday at 203.459 in a Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, followed by rookie Davey Allison, Bobby's son, at 203.079 in a Thunderbird, three-time Winston Cup champion Darrell Waltrip at 202.474 and Terry Labonte, another former series champion, at 202.435, both in Chevrolets.

Others getting above 200 included Morgan Shepherd, Bobby Allison, Kyle Petty, Rusty Wallace, Sterling Marlin, Geoff Bodine, Buddy Baker, Alan Kulwicki, Lake Speed and Phil Parsons.

Rounding out the top 20 were Tim Richmond, Neil Bonnett, A.J. Foyt, Benny Parsons and defending race champion Bobby Hillin Jr., whose qualifying lap was 199.214.

Ex-Hooper In Trouble Again

CHICAGO (AP) — A former college basketball player, whose disclosure of near-illiteracy forced a re-examination of academic standards for student-athletes, was freed in a priest's custody after barricading himself in a hotel.

Kevin Ross, 28, told police he had a gun and held 40 officers at bay for three hours Thursday while shouting obscenities and throwing furniture, clothing and other items from an eighth-floor balcony, Deputy Police Superintendent Joseph Mayo said.

The 6-foot-9, 250-pound Ross, who was captain of his Creighton University basketball team, was arrested after noted educator Marva Collins was brought to the scene — the balcony across from the room — to help with negotiations.

"I said 'Kevin, I believe in you. ... We've come too far now. Please don't do this to yourself, to me, to the children,'" said Collins, whose Westside Preparatory School taught Ross to read and write after he had spent nearly four years in college.

No weapon was found when police searched the room at the Quality Inn Downtown on the city's Near West Side, Mayo said.

Ross, who has acknowledged an alcohol problem, was said to be depressed over not finding a full-time job and not becoming a pro basketball player.

He was charged with criminal damage to property, aggravated assault and criminal trespass because he wasn't in the room he had rented, Detective Leonard Ficht said.

"We used to call him the gentle giant in class," Collins said. "The other side of Kevin just split, I guess."

Ross was freed late Thursday on a $5,000 recognizance bond by Cook County Circuit Judge Stuart A. Nudelman, after the Rev. George Clements, a Roman Catholic priest known for his adoption of teen-age children, said he would take responsibility for the ex-athlete.

Ross told the judge he had been beaten by police. But his lawyer, Dan Wolff, did not file police brutality charges.

Ross had been taken from the hotel to Cook County Hospital but refused treatment there, said a hospital spokesman who asked not to be identified.

In a telephone interview from the Monroe District police station where he had been held, Ross said he suffered bruises inflicted by arresting officers.

"Talk about rough; I'm just happy I got this 6-9 frame," he said.

Capt. Ivan Rittenberg confirmed there had been a scuffle, but said officers didn't use unnecessary force. "Policemen do not get there jollies from fighting a big guy like this," he said.

Ross graduated from Kansas City's Wyandotte High School with just over a C average.

He averaged 21 points and 20 rebounds per game as a high school basketball player and was admitted as a "special permission," student at Creighton in Omaha, Neb.

Ross said last year he had taken "all kinds of bonehead courses," at Creighton and maintained his athetic eligibility by taking such subjects as "Theory of Basketball."

Sidelined from basketball by a leg injury his senior year, Ross dropped out of Creighton in September, 1982. He enrolled in Collins' school, sitting alongside elementary-school students in a remedial-reading program.

National stories about Ross at the time raised questions about academic programs for athletes at Creighton and other schools. The new examination led to the NCAA adopting Proposition 48, which sets minimum academic standards for incoming freshmen athletes.

Ross completed studies at Westside and went on to enroll as a part-time student at Roosevelt University in Chicago, with hopes of becoming a teacher. But he discontinued studies and took odd jobs.

Ross had been staying at the Quality Inn hotel since July 10 or 11, said Manager Marco Manzie.

On Thursday, Collins said Ross had called her "every hour on the hour" the previous night, expressing frustration at his failure to find a job.

Collins said Ross told her he had been arrested and beaten by police on Monday because he could not pay a $3 meal tab. Police confirmed the Monday arrest but said it had taken 12 officers to subdue Ross.

"If college had taken an interest in his mind or body, he'd be a man of tremendous wealth and not a man who walked out on a $3 dinner tab," Wolff said after Thursday night's bond hearing.

Parker Uses Practice To Aid Reds

By The Associated Press

Some extra batting practice earlier this week by Cincinnati's Dave Parker resulted in an almost perfect performance against the Montreal Expos.

Parker drove in six runs with a homer, double and single in five at-bats as the Reds defeated the Expos 8-4 Thursday night at Olympic Stadium.

The six runs batted in, tied Parker's career high for a game set against Los Angeles on May 9, 1975, while a member of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

"I took a lot of batting practice on Monday and Tuesday and it paid off tonight," Parker said.

"Pete (Manager Rose) told me that when you take a lot of extra BP (batting practice), you sometimes get tired and it takes a while until you see some results," Parker said.

Elsewhere in the National League Thursday, Philadelphia beat Atlanta 5-1; San Diego edged Pittsburgh 2-1 and St. Louis defeated Los Angeles 9-6 in the only other games scheduled.

The Expos scored four runs off Ted Power, 8-5, in the first inning, but he settled down and pitched eight innings, allowing eight hits. John Franco pitched the ninth inning for the Reds.

The Expos sent nine men to the plate and scored four runs — three unearned — in the first inning on four hits. Tim Wallach's double accounted for two runs before Andres Galarraga and Mike Fitzgerald each drove in one with singles.

"I might have been a little too pumped up in the first inning," Power said. "I had good stuff warming up and I think I just tried to blow the ball past them instead of concentrating on pitching."

Montreal starter Bryn Smith, 6-4, allowed eight hits and six earned runs in 4 1-3 innings as the Expos lost their third straight.

The Reds scored five runs on four hits to take the lead in the third.

Kurt Stillwell led off the third and reached on third baseman Wallach's two-base error, went to third on Power's sacrifice, and scored the Reds' first run on Barry Larkin's single.

Larkin went to second on Buddy Bell's single and scored on the first of two singles by Eric Davis before Parker hit a three-run homer to put the Reds ahead 5-4. It was Parker's 20th homer of the season.

Parker added a two-run double in the fifth and a run-scoring single in the ninth.

"It was a low changeup, which is the pitch I've been getting him out with pretty consistently," Smith said of Parker's homer. "I guess I went to the well once too often."

"We're an explosive team," Parker said. "When we get guys on base like we did tonight, we're going to score some runs."

Phillies 5, Braves 1

Don Carman pitched five-hit ball over seven innings and drove in a run with a single as Philadelphia beat Atlanta at Veterans Stadium.

Carman, 6-7, struck out six and walked five. Mike Jackson pitched the final two innings for the Phillies allowing no hits.

With the score tied 1-1, the Phillies took a 3-1 lead in the fifth with the help of Carman's single.

Darren Daulton reached on a one-out single and raced to third on Steve Jeltz's double. Carman then singled to score Daulton and Jeltz took third. Jeltz then scored on Juan Samuel's sacrifice fly.

Padres 2, Pirates 1

Eric Show pitched six-hit ball for 8 2-3 innings and Randy Ready hit a home run as host San Diego beat Pittsburgh.

Show, 5-11, struck out eight and walked two before leaving with two outs and two on in the ninth inning. Rich Gossage got the last out for his seventh save.

"... He looked like a different pitcher out there today," San Diego Manager Larry Bowa said of Show. "He changed his windup, if you noticed he started with the ball in his hand instead of his glove. And he had the best velocity I've seen him have all year."

Ready led off the second with a homer off Doug Drabek, 2-9, and Tony Gwynn doubled in the other San Diego run in the third.

Cardinals 9, Dodgers 6

Vince Coleman snapped a 6-6 tie with a run-scoring single in the ninth inning and Ozzie Smith added a two-run double as St. Louis won its fourth straight, taking a 9½-game lead over second-place Montreal in the NL East.

The Dodgers have lost five straight games and have also dropped seven in a row to the Cardinals.

Matt Young, 5-6, came on in the ninth in relief of starter Orel Hershiser and allowed a one-out single to Tony Pena and an infield hit by pinch-hitter Steve Lake. Coleman then singled to right to score Pena and Smith followed with his 200th career double.

The victory went to reliever Ken Dayley, 5-1. Todd Worrell pitched the ninth inning for his 21st save.

Los Angeles shortstop Mariano Duncan made three errors in the second inning helping the Cardinals to score two unearned runs.

Orioles Resume Winning With A Family Feeling

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The Baltimore Orioles are playing like a "family" these days, in more ways than one.

"It's a lot of fun in the clubhouse now," pitcher Eric Bell said after leading the Orioles to a 2-1 victory over the Kansas City Royals Thursday night for their ninth straight victory. "We're nice and loose and we're joking around a lot. It feels like we're one big family right now."

That can be also taken literally, of course, since the recent callup of Billy Ripken gave the Orioles three family members on the same team with Manager Cal Ripken, Sr., and shortstop Cal Ripken, Jr.

The youngest Ripken has chipped in with some timely hits while hitting in eight straight games and solid defense. On Thursday night, Cal Jr., knocked in the Orioles' two runs with a fifth-inning single.

"That's what it takes to win ballgames and keep the streak going," Cal Ripken Sr. said. "We're just trying to play them one at a time. Just go out there and try to win every day."

In other American League games, it was Toronto 4, Minnesota 3; Cleveland 4, Texas 2, and Milwauke 12, Oakland 5 in the only games scheduled.

The Orioles got a strong performance from Bell, who pitched a five-hitter and struck out a career-high 12 for his first complete game in the major leagues as he improved his record to 8-7. Bell had also pitched well against the Royals last Friday night in a 3-1 victory.

Danny Jackson, 4-12, suffered the loss.

Blue Jays 4, Twins 3

An RBI single by Lloyd Moseby with two outs in the bottom of the ninth and the five-hit pitching of Dave Stieb led Toronto over visiting Minnesota.

Garth Iorg singled with two outs in the ninth off reliever George Frazier, 5-5, moved to second on Tony Fernandez's single off Keith Atherton, and scored on Moseby's base hit.

Minnesota's Gary Gaetti hit a solo home run in the sixth, his 18th of the season, to tie the score 3-3 against Stieb.

Stieb, 9-5, struck out eight to win his third straight game.

Indians 4, Rangers 2

Tom Candiotti pitched a four-hitter and Brook Jacoby and Pat Tabler homered as host Cleveland defeated Texas.

Candiotti, 3-10, walked one and struck out seven en route to his first win since June 5 and his second complete game of the season. The knuckleballer led the American League with 17 complete games in 1986.

The Indians took a 1-0 lead in the third against Jose Guzman, 8-9, when Brett Butler walked, took second on Tommy Hinzo's sacrifice and scored on Joe Carter's base hit.

Cleveland made it 3-0 in the fourth on Jacoby's 18th homer — one more than he had all of last season — after Cory Snyder led off the inning with a double. And, Pat Tabler accounted for the Indians' final run with a homer in the seventh.

Brewers 12, Athletics 5

Greg Brock and Paul Molitor homered to key consecutive four-run innings, leading Milwaukee over Oakland at County Stadium.

Joaquin Andujar, 3-3, balked with the bases loaded, forcing in Milwaukee's first run in the third. Brock then followed with a three-run homer, his 10th, to give the Brewers a 4-2 lead.

The Athletics got a run back in the fourth on Alfredo Griffin's RBI double off starter Chris Bosio, 6-2. But in the bottom half of the fourth, singles by Glenn Braggs, Bill Schroeder and Steve Keifer accounted for one run, another scored on Dale Sveum's grounder and Molitor's two-run homer made it 8-3 and chased Andujar.

Buckner Is Waived

BOSTON (AP) — Bill Buckner is waiting to be picked up by a major-league team. The Boston Red Sox are waiting till next year.

Mired in fifth place in the East Division, last year's American League champions intensified their youth movement Thursday by waiving the 37-year-old Buckner and promoting 23-year-old Sam Horn from the International League.

Buckner, an 18-year veteran who has more than 2,500 hits and one unforgettable World Series error, said he expected the move.

"The club was not winning and I was the easiest guy to get rid of," the first baseman said. "They made the decision to go with younger players and that left me out.

Mount Fuji Is Conquered By 91-Year-Old Climber

By MAGGIE JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

MOUNT FUJI, Japan (AP) — Hulda Crooks, a 91-year-old mountaineer from California, today became the oldest woman to conquer Mount Fuji, Japan's highest peak.

"I'm tired. But I'm doing fine," Mrs. Crooks said in a telephone call from the summit of the 12,385-foot dormant volcano to Elmer Digneo, mayor of her hometown of Loma Linda, Calif.

"You always feel good when you've made a goal," said Mrs. Crooks, a tiny, soft-spoken woman. "You need goals."

The conversation took place shortly after she passed through a shrine gate at 3:45 a.m. today to reach the top after a difficult three-day climb.

She was greeted by applause from employees of Dentsu Inc., the Japanese advertising firm which invited her to join their 60th annual company climb.

In front of a sign congratulating "Grandma Fuji," she raised the American flag tied to her walking stick and climbed the final feet onto the summit. She watched the sun rise, bundled against the pre-dawn cold in a down jacket and vest and heavy red socks over sweat pants.

After signing a register at a mountaintop shrine, she began to descend from the mountain at 8:00 a.m. and arrived at 2:05 p.m. at the fifth station, a rest stop from which she planned to leave tonight, Dentsu officials said.

As she climbed the difficult trails on the windswept, barren Fuji and slept in primitive huts, Mrs. Crooks said she hoped her adventure would encourage people to reject limitations society sometimes places on the old and young.

"Even when people say old age starts at 65, you don't have to settle for that," she said, adding: "If young people can take care of themselves when they are younger, they can help themselves."

Mrs. Crooks is nicknamed "Grandma Whitney" for her 22 ascents of the 14,495-foot Mount Whitney, the highest peak in the contiguous 48 United States. She began climbing Fuji early Wednesday from the fifth station, the half-way point where most climbers begin.

Although a veteran of Mount Whitney and 86 other peaks over 4,950 feet in the Sierra Nevada range, the former Canadian farm girl said she has never climbed a mountain so steep and treacherous as Fuji.

"It was more difficult because it's steeper, the volcanic material is loose under the foot and the wind has been blowing quite hard," said Mrs. Crooks, who began climbing in her 40s on the advice of her late husband, a doctor, after she had a bout of pneumonia.

Each year, tens of thousands of Japanese attempt to climb the Mount Fuji, which is considered sacred in Japan. Most climb during the official season from July 1 to Aug. 31 when sudden storms are least likely.

In reaching the summit today, Mrs. Crooks broke the record set by Mine Yajima of Kanagawa prefecture who climbed the mountain in 1985 at the age of 90, according to Dentsu.

The oldest man to reach the summit is Teiichi Igarashi of Fukushima prefecture who scaled the peak in 1986 at 99 and plans to try again this year.

SINKING PROBLEMS — Rodney Jobert watches as his car begins to disappear in a hole in front of his house Thursday on Hayne Boulevard in eastern New Orleans. It is believed that a car struck a fire hydrant during the night and the flowing water caused the erosion. Police notified Jobert, who attempted to move the vehicle before it started sinking. However, Jobert and the car starting going down before it could be moved. (AP Laserphoto)

New United Plan Proves Profitable

DENVER (AP) — United Airline's aggressive policy of snagging other airlines' passengers in Denver's airport and persuading them to switch to United netted more than $1 million in its first two months, United officials said.

"It's been so successful in Denver that we're in the process of expanding it to other airports," said United corporate communications manager Joe Hopkins in Chicago.

Hopkins said the "TORQUE" program ("Try Our Real Quality united Experience") is already under way at Washington, D.C.'s Dulles Airport and New York's LaGuardia Airport.

Officials at Continental Airlines, United's major competitor at Stapleton, have dismissed the effect of United's strategy on Continental's business. They say their passenger loads in Denver have been unaffected.

"We're enjoying the best July we've ever had," said Continental spokesman Ned Walker at the airline's Houston headquarters.

United officials said TORQUE was initiated by employees responding to the intense competition here between United and Continental, which together account for 88 percent of Stapleton International Airport's passengers.

Under the TORQUE program, which began in late April, about half a dozen United employees each day approach passengers at rental car counters, ticket counters, shuttle bus terminals and other areas at Stapleton and try to sell them on United's services.

The solicitors are equipped to write tickets on the spot if necessary.

"We've converted to United in excess of $1 million in revenue, from passengers who were originally booked on other carriers," said Hopkins.

United officials in Denver say the TORQUE program costs them almost nothing.

"That's all profit — it goes right directly to the bottom line and that's the neat thing about it," said Jack Ekey, manager of station operations for United in Denver.

Sometimes, United woos passengers with the added perk of a visit to its Stapleton "Red Carpet Room" and a couple of drinks at the bar.

Louisiana Executes Killer Of Tulane Nursing Student

By JENNIFER KENT
Associated Press Writer

ANGOLA, La. (AP) — Willie Watson went calmly and silently to his death in the electric chair early today for the rape, robbery and murder of a Tulane University nursing student.

He was the sixth murderer executed by Louisiana since early June.

Watson, 30, confessed that he killed Kathy Newman, 25, who was abducted and raped before she was fatally shot in 1981. He blamed the crime on his drug-addicted adolescence in tough New Orleans housing projects.

The scheduled midnight execution was delayed two hours after the U.S. Supreme Court split 4-4 in rejecting the appeal and Watson's lawyers made a last-minute plea to Gov. Edwin Edwards in Baton Rouge.

Proceedings went on hold until the governor denied the reprieve and gave Watson's lawyer time to get back to the prison to tell him he must die.

At 1:58 a.m. Watson shuffled into the death chamber. His head drooped low, shaved of the shoulder-wide Afro he had worn the day before when he appeared at the state Pardon Board in a futile appeal.

Asked if he wanted to make a final statement, Watson shook his head no. The 5-foot-6 Watson then was strapped into the huge wooden electric chair but his heels did not reach the floor.

Before his face was masked, he looked at his spiritual adviser, Sister Lee Scardina, and mouthed "I love you, Sister Lee."

The first of four jolts of electricty hit him at 2:02 a.m. He was pronounced dead at 2:09. After it was over, Sister Scardina went to Jed Stone, Watson's lawyer who was outside the death chamber, and cried on his shoulder.

Outside the prison, six death penalty proponents marched in the darkness. Watson spent his last day visiting with his girlfriend, his mother, three sisters, and Sister Scardina. Warden Hilton Butler said he spurned a last meal.

In the days leading up to the execution, Watson lost all his appeals, which were based in part on the legal argument that Louisiana's death penalty law is unconstitutional.

Stone said the aggravating circumstances that make a killing a first-degree murder — in this case, rape and murder — could also be the aggravating circumstances that a jury considers in deciding whether to sentence the killer to death.

There had been two executions scheduled at Angola for the early hours of Friday.

Bright Executives Revitalize Walt Disney Co.

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Three years ago, Michael Eisner became a principal figure in a power struggle that threatened one of Hollywood's most revered institutions, the Walt Disney Co.

Eighteen years after the death of Walt Disney, the company was reeling from internal dissension and failure of its movie attractions. Takeover dealers threatened to capture the company and sell off its rich assets. His nephew Roy E. Disney enlisted the backing of the Bass family of Texas to thwart the invaders.

Disney's son-in-law, Ron Miller, and other top management were deposed. Eisner was installed as chairman and chief executive officer, and Frank Wells, formerly a top Warner Bros. executive, came in as president and chief operating officer.

Eisner and Wells, working in close collaboration, have presided over one of Hollywood's most impressive success stories. They have reached a wide audience with such adult comedies as "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," "Ruthless People" and "Outrageous Fortune," released under the Touchstone label.

Disneyland and Walt Disney World have been revitalized, and a Euro Disneyland in France has been announced. The company is expanding in network and syndicated television, cable TV, merchandising, retailing, real estate and other areas.

Eisner is a solidly built, 45-year-old New Yorker who came to movies from television. He was a top ABC programmer at a time when the network dominated the ratings. Along with Barry Diller, he moved from ABC to Paramount Pictures where they helped provide an impressive string of hits: "Saturday Night Fever," "Grease," "Raiders of the Lost Ark," "Ordinary People," the "Star Trek" movies, "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom" and "Terms of Endearment."

Eisner, who directs the Disney empire from a corner office near the one Walt Disney once had in the Animation Building at the Burbank studio, recently spoke on a variety of topics in an interview with The Associated Press.

Q. What is the schedule on Euro Disneyland in France?

A. At least one of the ... attractions, the Magic Kingdom, will be open by 1992. ... Resort hotels and hotel rooms, golf courses, a festival marketplace will all be on our 5,000 acres at Marne-la-Valle. I just spent a week in Paris, and I had previously spent a three-day planning session.

That's going to be the major concentration of the company as far as the outdoor recreation sector. But equally important and getting as much of our attention is the continuing expansion of Walt Disney World.

Q. What will be the other attractions at Euro Disneyland?

A. There may be a French studio and studio tour, or a water theme park of some kind. We haven't decided what the second gate attraction will be.

Q. What are your plans for Walt Disney World?

A. The mega-attraction will be the Disney and MGM studio in '88 and studio tour in '89. Pleasure Island will be opening next year, also the Norway Pavillion, Typhoon Lagoon plus a lot of hotel and convention expansion.

Q. Your successful Touchstone films have featured some racy language and situations. Do you get any complaints about that?

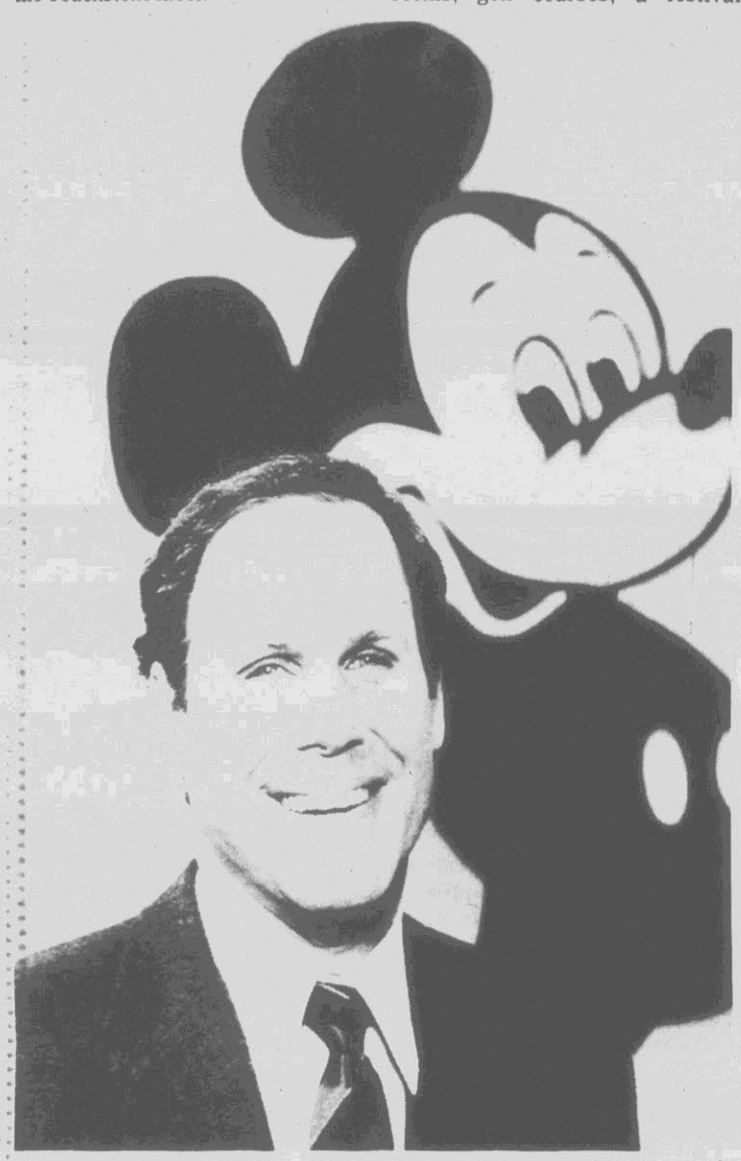
A. I've had unbelievably little criticism, strangely quiet. I think the reason for that is that we have not tampered with the Disney image. Disney is still Disney and none of those things show up in any of the Disney films. If anything, I'm more conservative than less in what we depict in Disney.

The Touchstone line is very important because contemporary filmmakers now feel as though they can work with this company and do contemporary films. Most of them have families and children, so they figure they want to give something back to the family situation. ... The consumer doesn't necessarily associate Touchstone with Disney, and the knowledgeable professional knows that we've separated the two.

Q. Your salary ($3.4 million in 1986) has drawn a lot of attention in the press. How do you respond?

A. I think it's unfortunate that the media will spend so much attention on that. The media doesn't say that the value of the company to its shareholders has gone from $2 billion to $7-$8 billion. The media also doesn't show how the compensation of executives is geared to the increased value to the owners of the company.

I happened to come into this company ... at the right time and the right place. I was very lucky. The company was all there; I didn't change the company or create the image. I simply became a cheerleader. I feel fortunate that the markets didn't value the company the way they value it today. I was able to unlock those values.



NOT SO MICKEY MOUSE — Michael Eisner, chairman and chief executive officer of the Walt Disney Co., has pulled the company, one of Hollywood's most revered institutions, from the depths of internal dissension and failure, turning it into one of the industry's most exciting success stories. ## Jackson Album Out

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Now playing, and playing and playing on pop radio stations everywhere is the first single released from Michael Jackson's first album in 4½ years.

"I Can't Stop Loving You," a slow-to medium-tempo duet with Siedah Garrett, is due in record stores Monday. The album, "Bad," will be released Aug. 31.

Top-rated KIIS AM and FM received about 50 calls per four-hour shift since first broadcasting the single at 10 p.m. Tuesday and is playing it 10 times a day, music director Jack Silver said Thursday.

Licia Torres, music director for KJLH, an urban contemporary station here, said "I Can't Stop Loving You" may have a short life on the top charts.

"I think this song, because every station in the country is going to play i, it'll have a strong burnout factor," she said.

"Bad" is Jackson's first album since 1982's "Thriller," which won eight Grammy Awards and has sold 38.5 million copies worldwide.

Opera Debut

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Sid Caesar will make his Metropolitan Opera debut this season, but not singing.

Caesar will play Frosch the jailer, a speaking part known for its comic possibilities, in Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus" for eight performances in December, the Met said Thursday.

Caesar was in a musical revue, "Make Mine Manhattan," in 1949, which led to his TV stardom in "Your Show of Shows" in the 1950s.

Collins Divorce Like Soap Opera

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In a scene worthy of television's "Dynasty," a woman fainted in divorce court after testifying she had a sexual fling with Joan Collins' estranged husband, Peter Holm, who nicknamed her "Passion Flower."

Romina Danielson, 23, testified Thursday that Holm encouraged her to marry the rich Axel Danielson, 80, so she and Holm could later share their wealth.

Mrs. Danielson said her sexual encounters with Holm took place during the day because Miss Collins expected him to be at their mansion when she returned from the set of "Dynasty," on which she plays the conniving Alexis Carrington Colby.

Miss Collins, 54, stood up and eyed Mrs. Danielson as the woman took the stand, then glared at her as she spoke.

Miss Collins toyed with a gold bracelet as Mrs. Danielson said she was having difficulty because it was so tense in the courtroom. Holm, 40, giggled and sometimes laughed, drawing an admonition from the judge.

Ten minutes into questioning by Miss Collins' attorney, Marvin Mitchelson, Mrs. Danielson fainted, slumping from the witness chair. The courtroom was cleared and paramedics carried the woman, by then screaming, through the crowded Superior Court hallway on a stretcher.

Holm's attorney, Frank Steinschriber, derided Mrs. Danielson, saying she "has been peddling her story all over the East Coast and London," seeking as much as $150,000 for it.

'Down And Out' Debuts On Fox

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — If Jerry, the Zen-spouting bum from "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," were cast in an iffy situation comedy on a new network, he'd take the same go-with-the-flow attitude Tim Thomerson does.

"You know, it's all a crap shoot. It's Hollywood and it's another half-hour situation comedy," Thomerson said. "You can't take it real serious."

In Fox's sitcom version of the hit movie, Thomerson has the Nick Nolte role of Jerry. He was in New York recently for a guest appearance on "Late Night with David Letterman."

Thomerson, a stand-up comic and character actor, comes by the laid-back, surfer-dude style naturally. He's a '60s refugee and "Navy brat" from San Diego who got his first acting experience in Army training films. Eventually he worked his way to performing standup comedy in places like Gil Hodges' Grand-Slam Room, a Brooklyn bowling alley.

Now he's a veteran of series television from numerous guest-starring stints and a part in the ensemble cast of ABC's critically praised but short-lived law-firm comedy "The Associates."

"Down and Out" makes its debut Saturday, completing Fox's schedule for the evening.

Thomerson was being especially philosophical due to the difficulties of cast changes and shaky direction that delayed the debut of the show. The producers are using a later, smoother episode for the premiere.

"It's difficult to come up with good stuff every week," Thomerson said. "But I think you can come with good stuff about people studies — you know, what people do and what they go through in life — and still make it funny with some little pathos to pull it off."

The plot line is a staple of comedy, the stranger in a strange land. The show is strictly tired, garden-variety sitcom fare. The characters have potential, but the writing needs sprucing up. The second episode is lame.

As in the movie, Jerry is taken in by the Whitemans, a wealthy Beverly Hills couple, after he tries to commit suicide by leaping into their swimming pool. This is accomplished over the credits so Jerry can get on with wandering around the mansion commenting on everybody's psycho-social problems, like a benevolent "ALF."

The TV show, like the movie, gives credit to the Rene Fauchois play "Boudu Sauve Des Eaux" ("Boudu Saved From Drowning"), and a French film, "Breathless," inspires the first episode.

Michael Shaner gets a meaty guest-starring role as Turk Black, a nervous hood with Elvis-impersonator tendencies, brought home from Reno by daughter Jenny (Eileen Seeley) in a warped bid for attention.

Turk comments on dinner: "My mom used to make something like this — until she lost the use of her arms."

Hector Elizondo, a well-known character actor, and Anita Morris, a Tony winner for "Nine," play the Whitemans, roles played in the movie by Richard Dreyfuss and Bette Midler.

Evan Richards reprises his role from the movie as the Whitemans overprivileged and disturbed teenage son, Max.

The producers also got Mike the Dog to re-create his movie role as Matisse for the TV version.

Mike, a black and white border collie-mix, is the supposedly neurotic pooch who is really smarter than everybody else in the wacky household. He easily steals the lightweight sitcom from the humans, handling any material with aplomb, even when playing straight man, er, dog.

In the first episode, Max is trying to sneak out of the house, but Mike won't let him.

FOCUS

Moonies

On this day in 1969, President Nixon greeted the Apollo 11 astronauts — Neil Armstrong, Michael Collins and Buzz Aldrin — upon their return from their historic trip to the Moon. The Moon has fascinated humans for centuries. Calendars noting the position of the Moon have been found at Angkor Wat in Cambodia built in the late 700s, at Stonehenge built around 1900 B.C. in England, and at the temples of Abu Simbel in Egypt, dating back to 2700 B.C.

DO YOU KNOW — Which of the three Apollo 11 astronauts did NOT set foot on the Moon on their trip?

THURSDAY'S ANSWER — Johannes Gutenberg developed movable type.

Horoscope — From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY July 25

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Take no unnecessary risks and avoid starting a new course of action. Your judgement is not apt to be up to par, and adverse results would be likely. Finish old work.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Make sure you finish any shopping early today. Don't try to clear up the situation with your mate right now.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Be firm in solving that annoying problem at home. This is definitely a bad day to have guests into your home.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Drive very carefully and avoid heavy traffic. An accident could be very expensive to say the least.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Make overdue collections and then pay your own bills. Watch out for faulty financial advice.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Do more listening and less talking when with friends today. Keep important new ideas to yourself, or risk losing them.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Tried and true methods will work well in handling private affairs, but don't be sarcastic. Demonstrate your loyalty.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Avoid a "friend" who has been consistently unreliable, or you can expect further disappointments from this person.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Avoid upsetting a person in a place of power or position, or you'll regret it later. Take no risks with credit matters.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): You may be eager for some frivolous activities, but it would be best to attend to your duties at hand.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Give your full attention to getting some obligations out of the way. Don't start any arguments over trivial matters.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Be sure to keep a promise to an outside contact or this person will oppose you later. Get some recreation this evening.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Get small tasks out of the way now and prepare for bigger and more important activities just down the road.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, will be talented in areas such as saving failing businesses. Teach him or her to understand the motives of others, and not to judge simply by outward appearances. Adding psychology to the academic curriculum would be very helpful. Also, make sure ethics are understood.

"The Stars impel; they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

The bidding:

| East | South | West | North |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♡ | 1 ♠ | 4 ♡ | 4 ♠ |
| Pass | Pass | Dbl | Pass |
| Pass | Pass | | |

Opening lead: Seven of ♡

Strange things happen in trials to select teams to represent the U.S in world championship competition. This hand from the semifinals illustrates our point.

At only one table did East consider his hand of suitable strength for a non-vulnerable weak two-bid (all others opened one heart), and there West raised to four hearts after a forcing and uncontested auction. The result was down one. At another table East-West were pushed to five hearts, down one when the defenders did not get a club lead in before the diamonds were freed. At two tables the final contract was four spades doubled.

At one of these, the opening heart lead was ruffed and a club was led to the king. West took his ace and "cleverly" underled the ace of diamonds. Declarer shot up with dummy's king, drew trumps in two rounds and ended up with two overtricks.

At the other table, West did not win the ace of clubs at trick two. Declarer continued with a club, West ruffed in dummy. Declarer had a counter to this excellent defense, but he failed to find it and went down one.

For his strong bidding and penalty double, West probably has the minor-suit aces. If he has three trumps as well, the contract is unmakable. Therefore, to maintain trump control if spades are 3-1 the best line seems to be to cash the king of trumps at trick three and now lead a club. If West wins and continues a heart, South ruffs and leads a club, discarding a heart if East does not ruff. If East does trump, declarer overtrumps, ruffs another heart in dummy and leads a winning club, discarding his last heart. As long as the ace of diamonds is where declarer expects it to be, the contract is safe.
