Riding Mishap Injuries Fatal To Baldrige

By KATHLEEN MACLAY
Associated Press Writer

WALNUT CREEK, Calif. (AP) — Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, a onetime ranch hand who attended Yale and became a successful businessman before joining the Reagan Cabinet, died Saturday hours after the horse he was riding while cattle roping fell on him.

Baldrige, 64, died during surgery at John Muir Hospital here at about 3:50 p.m., said Dr. Naran Patel, a trauma surgeon at the hospital.

The commerce secretary, a member of President Reagan's Cabinet since 1981, arrived at the hospital via helicopter after the accident at the Jack Roddy Ranch in rural Brentwood, 45 miles east of San Francisco.

Baldrige, who had a lifelong passion for rodeo competition and was elected to the Rodeo Hall of Fame in 1984, suffered massive internal injuries including tears to the pancreas and heart when the horse fell on him about 1:15 p.m., doctors said. His heart stopped for several minutes after the accident.

During exploratory surgery, doctors discovered severe internal bleeding that they were unable to stem, Patel said, adding that the aorta and the large vein leading to the heart were both torn. About 1½ hours into the operation, Baldrige's heart stopped and efforts to restart it through heart massage failed.

"He bled to death from the massive injuries and from the lack of coagulation (of his blood)," said chief surgeon Dr. Ronald LaPorta, one of four surgeons who operated on the secretary. "He was always in shock; he never got out of shock."

"The nation has suffered a great loss with the tragic and untimely death of Secretary Malcolm Baldridge," President Reagan said in a statement read by Leslye Arsht, White House deputy press secretary.

"Under his stewardship, the Department of Commerce played a key role in the rebirth of our country's prosperity and all of us owe a great debt to 'Mac' Baldrige," the president said.

Baldrige was attempting to rope a calf when his horse reared and both fell backward, with the horse falling on the commerce secretary "full force," said sheriff's Sgt. Larry Aulich.

Dr. Bert D. Johnson, a Stanford University gynecologist who arrived at the ranch just after the accident, said he and volunteer firefighters administered cardiopulminary resuscitation for about four minutes when Baldrige's heart started beating again and he began breathing. He was then taken to the hospital.

Baldrige was to appear Saturday night at the Contra Costa County Fair. Though in his 60s, he competed in about three professional rodeos a year and often participated in Sunday roping competitions.

His office was filled with mementoes of his life-long passion: bronze cowboy statues, a coiled lasso, a saddle he won at a 1978 rodeo, and a collection of belt buckles won in roping contests.

Shelter For Homeless Eyed

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The proposed conversion of the old Agnes Fullilove School into a shelter could provide protection for as many as 25 homeless people during winter months, according to some community service officials who say the facility is needed.

"From my observation, there will be an eventual need for 20 to 25 homeless to take shelter each night from November 1 to March 30," said Maj. Earl Woodard, commanding officer of the Salvation Army-Greenville.

"Based on my experience in the night shelter in Washington, N.C., and at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, the shelter should plan for no less than 25 people during winter months," said Dick Welch, alcohol program coordinator at the hospital.

"Ten to 25 persons would greatly benefit from a shelter for the homeless — one of the great gaps in our community," Ed Garrison, director of the Pitt County Department of Social Services.

"Over the past 15 years, I have provided services for the homeless in this county through different agencies," Jesse Harris, human relations officer for Pitt County, said. "I welcome this shelter as a needed asset to the community. I estimate that by the end of the first year, it will shelter 25 to 30 persons per night."

Since there are no exact figures on the number of homeless in Pitt County, it is difficult to ascertain how many people would use the facility, according to Bill Byrd, a spokesman for the Greenville Community Life Center, a non-profit organization conducting the search for a shelter.

"I think frankly that while we have people stating that there are between 20 to 30 users, particularly in the winter time, I think the reality is nobody really knows how many homeless people there are," Byrd said. "When the shelter is in operation and people become aware that it's there, the reality may be that the number is much greater than what we are guessing right now."

Autry Will Seek Seat On Council

CHARLES L. AUTRY

Charles L. "Chuck" Autry, owner of Chuck Autry's Paint & Body Shop, has filed as a candidate for the District 5 seat on the Greenville City Council in the Nov. 3 municipal elections.

After filing with the Pitt County Board of Elections Friday, Autry said he supported the city's growth without tax increases.

"I would like to see Greenville grow without raising taxes, and I would like to see a city manager and a chief of police picked from Pitt County," he said. "I would also like to see the business garbage fee lifted."

A 20-year resident of Greenville, Autry resides at 105D Concord Drive. He attends the Reedy Branch Free Will Baptist Church.

Williams, Grooms Enter Race For Seats On Education Board

George E. Williams and Frank Grooms filed for re-election to the Pitt County Board of Education Friday afternoon.

Williams will campaign for Seat B in District 5, which includes southern Greenville and Winterville township. Grooms filed for Seat A in the same district.

As outlined in the new election plan, there will be two seats for the board in each of six districts in the Nov. 3 municipal election for the school board. Seat A will be for an initial term of December 1987 through December 1992, while Seat B will have a shorter term of December 1987 through December 1990. After 1990, all terms will be for six years.

Williams, a resident of Sulgrave Road, served the consolidated board as vice chairman this year.

"It has been a privilege and a pleasure to serve on the Pitt County Board of Education and I am very appreciative of that opportunity," Williams said after filing Friday.

"The board has addressed and debated many issues and I do feel the board is committed to the task of providing the best possible educational opportunities for all students in Pitt County. It is my sincere interest and desire to continue to be a part of this process."

Williams was elected to the Greenville City Board of Education in 1982, and served that board as chairman

Kirby Will Lead United Way Drive

A goal of $1,030,723 has been set for the 1987-1988 Pitt County United Way campaign, representing the largest goal in United Way's 29-year history.

Edgar Kirby III has been chosen as chairman of this year's campaign.

The fund drive, held during the fall of each year, raises money to support 32 health and human service agencies in Pitt County.

Kirby, a native of Petersburg, Va., is city executive for NCNB National Bank.

He received a bachelor's degree from William and Mary College and a master's degree from the University of Virginia.

He has served on the United Way allocations committee and led the Services Division in 1986.

He and his wife, Jamie, have two children.

"This year represents a milestone for the Pitt County United Way," said Andy Warren, 1987 United Way president. "We're working toward out first million dollar goal and reaching out to help more people than ever befor"

A community-based allocations committee reviewed agency and new program requests during May and June. The committee's recommendations were used in determining this year's goal.

"We have seen an increasing number of people turning to United Way agencies for service," Warren said. "We must grow to meet the growing needs of those around us."

Winterville Festival Begins Wednesday

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County's newest superhero — Wondermelon — will return for Winterville's Second Annual Watermelon Festival Wednesday through Aug. 2, said Randy Avery, president of the Winterville Jaycees.

"Wondermelon will be there" distributing candy and festival hats, and signing festival T-shirts, he said.

The Winterville Jaycees sponsored the first festival last year to celebrate its 10th anniversary, Avery said. "The Jaycees felt like it being our 10th anniversary, we decided to pay the community back" for its support.

Other honorees for the name of festival, such as the hog, were considered, he said, but, "watermelon and Winterville had a good ring to it."

Second annual festival activities begin Wednesday with a new event, the Gospel Sing Family Night, Avery said. The 8 p.m. program will feature singing, clowns and magicians at D.H. Conley High School.

The street dance Friday night is another new event, he said. It will feature a country rock band, Silver Wings, and will be in the melon patch across from A.G. Cox School grounds.

A fitness run of one and a half miles will be added to races on Saturday, Avery said. "Our races are designed to appeal to all ages," and they also include the Pro 5K Road Race, the Amateur 5K Road Race and the Kids Fun Run.

Baldrige Dies Of Riding Accident Injuries

Born Oct. 4, 1922, in Omaha, Neb., Baldrige worked as a ranch hand in Nebraska when he was a boy and started his business career as a mill hand.

A graduate of Yale University with a major in English, he was president of Scovill Inc., a large manufacturing business in Waterbury, Conn., before joining the Reagan Cabinet in January 1981.

Baldrige came down with viral pneumonia last December and was hospitalized in Albuquerque. He was flat on his back for nearly four weeks, but said in April that he had made a full recovery. He said he had quit smoking and begun jogging two miles a day.

He was one of only three members of Reagan's original 1981 Cabinet team who remain on the job; the others are Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Housing Secretary Samuel Pierce.

"I guess it's luck of the draw," Baldrige said in April. "There have been other secretaries of Commerce who stayed longer. Herbert Hoover was one of them. He stayed for two full terms."

The intensifying trade dispute with Japan over semiconductors brought him new attention this spring and summer. Long the hawk on trade in an administration that tended to oppose action against errant trading partners, Baldrige marshaled the case in the Cabinet for the stiff tariffs imposed earlier this year on Japanese electronics products.

"We want very much to have good relations with Japan," he said. "The fact that in the past not enough attention was paid to trade has led to this friction now. But that should not bother the rest of our lives. We have to be careful it doesn't."

He said the problems "can't be pushed aside," but that they must be "addressed in a straight-forward manner. And that will help both sides."

Festival To Open

A watermelon roll also is on the list of new events, he said. "You take your watermelon and roll it over the finish line."

Traditional events of the festival are the Miss Watermelon Festival Beauty Pageant Thursday at 8 p.m. in Conley High School auditorium where high school girls compete for a scholarship through formal and casual wear, a talent and an interview.

The Miss Rind (Womanless) Beauty Pageant will be Friday at 8 p.m. in the A.G. Cox multipurpose room where men dressed as women will compete for trophies and watermelons.

Rick Byrd, president of the North Carolina Jaycees, will attend the opening ceremonies Saturday at 9 p.m. in the melon patch, Avery said. And, the state Watermelon Queen, Melinda Ann Whitley of Rocky Mount, also will attend the festival.

Activities scheduled from 7:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday and beginning at 1 p.m. Sunday at the melon patch include the races, a parade, softball tournaments, crafts, games and a street dance featuring the Breeze Band.

Watermelon contests include those for the largest watermelon, the best tasting watermelon, watermelon eating, seed spitting and the watermelon toss.

"Our watermelon are all locally grown," Avery said. "Most of them are from right outside Winterville."

Ed Weeks of Weeks Seed Co. has held two world records for watermelons, he said. "I've got the record for the world's longest watermelon," which was four feet. In the 1980 Guiness Book of World Records, he held the record for the world's largest watermelon at 179 pounds.

Co-chairmen of the 1987 festival are Tim Avery and Jeff Tucker.

State Of Emergency Declared In Sudan

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — The government, plagued by a costly 4-year-old civil war, on Saturday declared a nationwide state of emergency and said it was necessary because of a rapidly deteriorating economic situation.

A government statement broadcast over the official Omdurman radio Saturday night said the move was taken by the elected government of Prime Minister Sadek el-Mahdi and was endorsed by the state's five-man sovereign council.

Sudan has been living under a state of emergency since Gen. Gaafar Nimeiri was overthrown in April 1985, but the statement didn't explain how the new emergency would differ. Government officials were not immediately available for comment because of the late hour.

The northeast African country is struggling with 100 percent inflation, severe commodity shortages, strikes and the civil war.

Rebels who control much of the largely Christian and animist south are fighting a government and army supported by the predominantly Moslem north.

Foreign observers estimate that the rebels number about 30,000.

The government, which has a foreign debt of about $12 billion, spends an estimated $390,000 a day to fight the rebellion.

The statement said the emergency intends to restrict dealing in foreign currency, control marketplace and civil disorder and combat the hoarding of commodities and a flourishing black market.

It also seeks to combat smuggling, which it said is on the rise, halt interruptions of public services — an obvious reference to the labor unrest — reduce crime, rid the nation of unlicensed arms and defend against "enemies of democracy and the country," the statement said.

The rebels are reportedly gaining strength, partly through increasing support from the Marxist government of bordering Ethiopia.

The insurgents do not advocate secession but claim to want a united Sudan with a secular government that does not discriminate against southerners.

Nimeiri ruled with an iron fist for 16 years until two weeks of street violence protesting conditions similar to the current ones led to his ouster.

Press reports said last week that 22 of his followers were arrested for anti-government activities.

Members of El-Mahdi's government says Nimeiri borrowed heavily from foreign countries and that most of the loaned money was misused and mismanaged.

It costs Sudan $800 million a year just to service its foreign debt.

There are periodic shortages of commodities, most recently matches, soap and motor oil. Other items are available only on the black market at three to four times the official price.

The civil war has forced hundreds of thousands of people to flee their homes and settle in squatter camps around Khartoum and other major cities.

The government blames southerners and foreign refugees, estimated to number between 1 to 2 million people, for an increase in crime.

Sudan has more than 18.5 million people and is about one-third the size of the continental United States.

Pakistan Deaths

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — Three people died and 35 were injured in two days of violence apparently linked to riots last week in western Karachi, police said Saturday.

The latest unrest erupted Friday in the Liaquatabad section of eastern Karachi, witnesses said.

Police confirmed there was one death Friday and two Saturday as mobs looted shops, burned vehicles and erected barricades in the streets.

Local residents said they were angry over what they claimed was police brutality in handling riots last week in the western Karachi neighborhoods of Malir, Landhi and Shah Faisal.

Officials said as many as 12 people died in violence there, apparently in protest over police raids in search of weapons and drugs.

There also were protests in the same neighborhoods over a lack of security that residents said was to blame for bomb explosions on July 14 that killed 75 people in a crowded market in central Karachi.

He is the coordinator of physical education within the department of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Safety at ECU.

Williams is a a member of the City of Greenville Human Relations Council and Immanuel Baptist Church. He and his wife Alice have two sons who are graduates of the Greenville City schools.

Grooms served on the Greenville City Board of Education for four years prior to being appointed to the merged board.

"There are several critical areas that the new board will face in 1988, and I would like to be a part of helping to make Pitt County schools the best in the state of North Carolina," Grooms said after filing.

"A major concern is developing a rational process for the board to work together to solve problems and address policy areas to avoid emotionalism," he said. "It is imperative that the board develop specific criteria that leads to excellence and measure all decisions against that criteria.

"Also, a concern is addressing the role of superintendent," Grooms added. "Rumors circulating throughout the state indicate that Dr. (Eddie) West wants to run for State Superintendent (of Public Instruction). The board will have to address this issue in the best interest of Pitt County.

"Other concerns have to do with confronting the Office of Civil Rights in regard to the present method of grouping (students), which seems to take achievement and teacher recommendations completely out of the decision-making process," he said.

Grooms said several of his other concerns are vocational education, the grading system, equal course offerings, capital outlay and support for teachers and administrators.

Grooms, a resident of Wesley Road, is plant superintendent at Yale Materials Handling Corp.

He holds a bachelor's degree in secondary education from Tennessee Technical University in Cookeville, Tenn., and a master's degree in guidance and counseling from Middle Tennessee State University in Murfreesboro, Tenn.

He is a member of the board of directors of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, where he has served as chairman of several committees. He was president of the Pitt County United Way in 1986-1987; he also previously served as chairman of the allocations committee and campaign chairman.

He is president of the Pitt County Partnership for Progress Corporation. His other memberships include the Region Q Private Industry Council, the advisory committee of Pitt Community College Cooperative Education and the State of North Carolina Vocational Education Curriculum committee.

Grooms was responsible for developing the Teacher Work-Learn Program in Pitt County and introducing the Junior Achievement Program. He also has been involved in the expansion of the RECAST program.

Spill Causes Evacuations

AVON, Ind. (AP) — About 17,000 gallons of a flammable chemical spilled at a Conrail train yard Saturday when steel rods knocked a hole in a railroad tanker, injuring 24 people.

Up to 10,000 people were evacuated for about 12 hours.

The spill at Conrail's Avon Yard occurred about 7 a.m. when the steel slipped from a flatbed car and ruptured the tanker coupled behind it, said Lt. Steve Golden of the Hendricks County Sheriff's Department.

More than 10,000 people from a two-mile by three-mile area around the site were evacuated, said Tom Drake, assistant chief of the Brownsburg Fire Department, who was at the scene.

However, both Conrail and the Hendricks County Sheriff's Department estimated the number of evacuees at 2,500. Officials said an exact count could not be immediately determined.

People were allowed to return to their homes about 7:30 p.m., said sheriff's dispatcher Denise Morgan.

YOUR INSURANCE BENEFICIARIES

It might be a good idea to check over your insurance policy beneficiaries to make sure they don't conflict with the beneficiaries listed in your will. Don't let your heirs get short-changed through your inadvertent oversight. Remember: the insurance money must be paid to the beneficiaries as noted on the policy, not as listed in the will. If you've had reason to revise your will, you would have to make separate arrangements to update your insurance.

Another matter where the insurance policy is as stringent as a will is with regard to particular settlement options — that is, the manner in which insurance proceeds are to be distributed to your beneficiary. Stipulations which you might have set down to protect a minor child, for instance, should probably be changed as children reach maturity. In general, you don't want to have such stringent requirements that survivor's interests are jeopardized by changing circumstances.

Decoders Available

Hearing-impaired children of low income families in North Carolina can receive assistance toward purchase of special television decoding devices through a new program sponsored by the National Captioning Institute and the N. C. Department of Human Resources.

With a grant of $25,000 from the North Carolina-based Janirve Foundation, 170 TeleCaption II decoder units will be purchased for families with deaf children from infancy through age 21, providing the family owns a working television and fits within U. S. Department of Energy poverty standards, said Tony Schreiber of East Carolina University.

Schreiber, director of the ECU Program for Hearing-Impaired Students, is one of 20 members of a regional ad hoc committee to help screen and select applicant families who need a TV decoder. Other committee members include school administrators, audiologists and social workers.

NCI has determined that there are thousands of low-income families in the U. S. who have at least one hearing-impaired child, Screiber noted. The current program to place decoders in such homes is entitled Project DARE: Decoders Advance Reading and Education.

Decoders are able to receive and translate "closed" television signals broadcast along with regular programs on network and cable television. Words in dialogue and narration are simultaneously printed as subtitles on the screen when TV sets are connected to decoders. rograms for which closed-captioning is available are marked with the NCI symbol or with the notation "CC" in TV schedules or on the labels of videotapes.

"Many deaf children have serious deficiencies in reading and writing skills because they don't get exposure to spoken language," Schreiber said. "Captioned TV can be of great benefit to these children, and there are a wide range of captioned shows available, including much programming for children. The ABC network alone broadcasts around 50 hours of captioned programs each week."

Schreiber said families who qualify for assistance in the purchase of decoders can receive units for about $20 each, which is less than 10 percent of the actual cost with the remainder of the cost covered by Project DARE.

ECU Sets Up Institute

East Carolina University has established a Science Institute for the Disabled as a public service function among its academic divisions and will launch the new program at the start of the 1987-88 academic year.

Dr. Eugene E. Ryan, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said the Institute will "help disabled students pursue careers in science related fields by improving their science instruction at every level."

Teachers and counselors will be made aware that science may be a realistic career choice for handicapped students and "extraordinary accommodations for them" will be made, Ryan said.

The Institute will be a part of the College of Arts and Sciences and Ryan said that Dr. David Lunney of the chemistry faculty will become director effective Aug. 19.

The Institute will begin immediately planning a summer institute to provide research opportunities for science students with disabilities. A $40,000 National Science Foundation grant to plan two, five-week summer terms was announced last week.

ECU's new Science Institute for the Disabled will be modeled after the National Technical Institute for the Deaf at Rochester, N.Y., but will be smaller in scale and cover all disabilities, Ryan said.

He said that the Institute here will seek to help disabled students at every level for careers in technical or science-related fields, to prepare teachers to teach science to disabled students, to conduct research on means of improving science instruction for disabled students and to collect and disseminate information on science for the handicapped.

"The scientific community has recently become aware of the fact that disabled persons are grossly underrepresented in the sciences and engineering," according to an announcement from the university. Several major scientific organizations such as the American Association for the Advancement of Science, National Science Foundation and the American Chemical Society have started programs to recruit disabled people into scientific careers and improve their educational opportunities, it added.

'Lanters For Hope'

Greenville residents will again take part in a worldwide "Lanterns for Hope" ceremony Saturday evening.

Just after dusk Saturday, paper lanterns decorated by area school children with symbols of hope and peace will be floated on the pond north of the East Carolina University School of Medicine's Brody Medical Sciences Building.

Beginning at 7 p.m., area residents can carry their children, grandchildren and friends to decorate more lanterns and share a pot luck supper.

The local lantern ceremony is sponsored by the Physicians for Social Responsibility and the Greenville Peacemakers. It is part of the International Peace Lantern Exchange Project. Its goal, according to John Moskop, an organizer of the event, is "to focus on our love for the innocent children of the world and our hope that nations will learn to settle their differences through peaceful means."

Other lantern ceremonies in the area will also be held Aug. 1 in Edenton, Oriental and Nags Head.

Shelter For Homeless Viewed As A Benefit For Greenville Area

The Greenville Community Life Center, which is comprised of local ministers from more than a dozen area churches and private citizens, has selected the old Agnes Fullilove School on Chestnut Street as a viable site for the shelter.

The group has negotiated a $75,000 purchase price for the 21,000-square-foot building and surrounding property from the Grace Baptist Church, which owns the facility.

The structure would be used to provide overnight shelter, sleeping space, bath and toilet facilities for homeless men and women and a separate area for use by an overnight manager.

On Monday, the Greenville City Council appropriated $40,000 in Community Development Block Grant funds to the Community Life Center for the purchase of the property.

The appropriation of the CDBG funds are contingent upon the nonprofit status of the Community Life Center under Internal Revenue Service codes, according to Bobby Roberson, director of planning and community development.

As part of the agreement, the funds pledged must be used exclusively toward real estate acquisition, the funds must be in the form of a one-time grant only after sufficient funds are pledged to equal the total acquisition price of the real estate and assurance must be provided that the repair and start-up costs will be secured.

"The proposed project shall remain in operation for at least five years from the date of the grant or all grant funds will be returned to the city, and (it shall) provide employment opportunities to low and moderate income persons who reside in surrounding neighborhoods," Roberson said.

Representatives of the Greenville Community Life Center are scheduled to meet with the Pitt County Board of Commissioners on Aug. 3 to make a proposal similar to the one presented to the City Council Monday night.

Funds required for approximately $200,000 in renovations and repairs to the building could be collected from state and local churches, the United Way, philanthropic foundations and federal funds for homeless shelters, according to David Ames, a member of the organization.

"In addition, revenue will be obtained through lease of the facilities, rent from apartments and income generating work activites," Ames said. "Such revenue would be used for mortgage payments on borrowed money."

The proposed shelter would be located in an area under scrutiny for additional CDBG funds, Roberson said.

"The city is presently having a Community Needs Assessment and Community Development Plan prepared," he said. "Preliminary indicators are that we have a substantial number of substandard structures which will require rehabilitation assistance, dilapidated structures to demolish and associated costs to relocate families.

"Most of these needs are in west Greenville neighborhoods and hopefully will be addressed through future grant applications. The proposed project is located in Higgs, a west Greenville neighborhood. The project may be viewed as a redevelopment activity in a proposed redevelopment area. It would provide a needed public service and would also provide employment for a number of persons, hopefully, some from the immediate areas."

The City Council's decision to designate CDBG monies for the shelter is appropriate, according to Roberson.

"This project would provide for needs, which we understand, are not being addressed," Roberson said. "The city should designate its funds toward the shelter for the homeless as we are already in the business of helping with housing through housing rehabilitation programs under CDBG and through assistance of the Greenville Housing Authority."

However, Roberson said other agencies should be contacted for additional funding.

"Programs to assist the mentally ill are social programs normally handled by the county and should remain as such," he said. "Because of this and because the total project will serve a much greater area than the city limits, I think the county should be given the opportunity to participate. Also other agencies and grant sources should be contacted."

Meanwhile, Greenville Fire Chief Jenness Allen said the creation of a shelter could lead to a reduction in fires.

"I certainly welcome this shelter," Allen said. "Many times each winter fires are set in vacant buildings by mental health patients, derelicts, alcoholics and just people who don't have a place to stay.

"Often it is a double problem because the building is listed as vacant, and we don't know that people are occupying the building."

The proposed shelter would also solve a dilemma faced by the Salvation Army.

"We don't have the funds or budget to meet needs (like a shelter) on a day-to-day basis," Woodard said. "We only are equipped to meet emergency needs, once or twice — more than that we don't have the funds."

Greenville Mayor Les Garner said he supported the shelter concept.

"I've been involved with the Salvation Army for over 25 years, and we've had a problem of having the space to have overnight transient people," he said. "We've had to put them in a motel and pay that out of our Salvation Army funds. I like the project. I think it is absolutely fantastic."

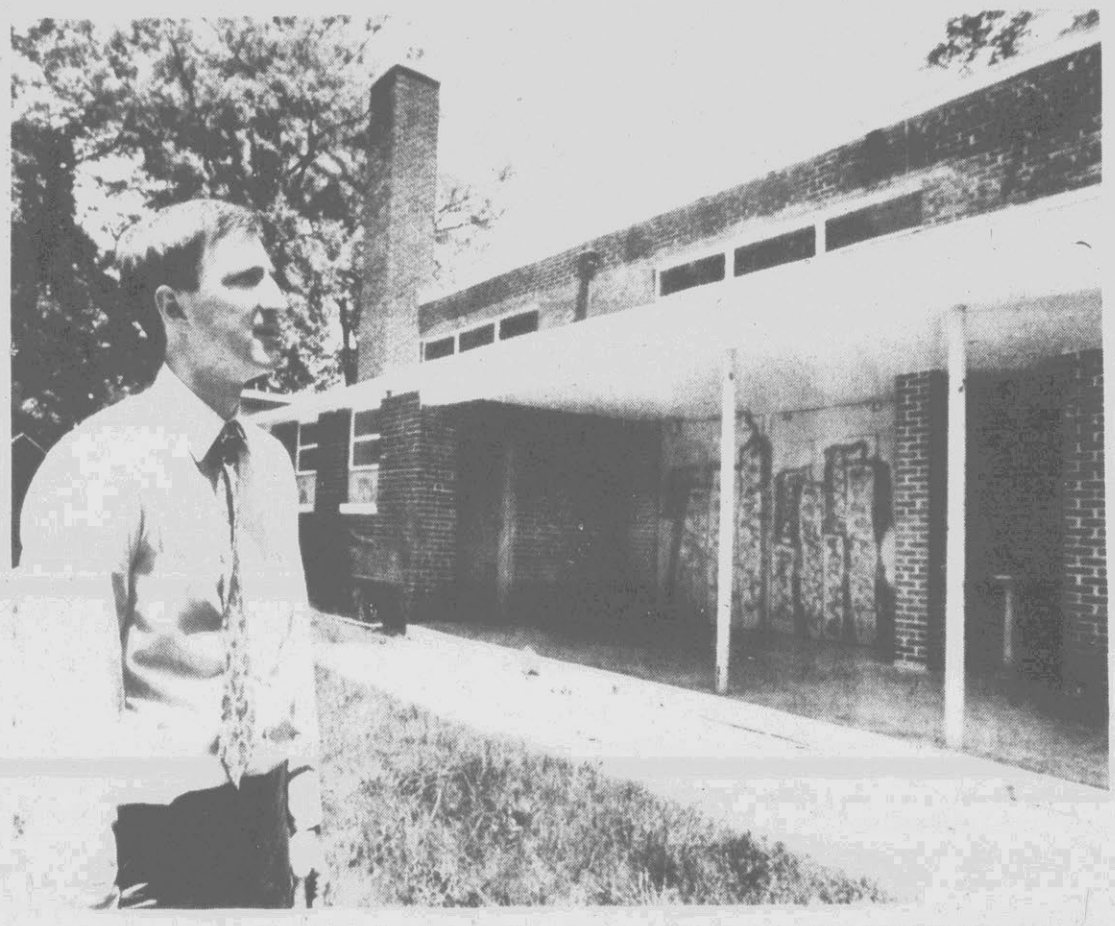
Other council members voiced support for the shelter at Monday night's meeting.

"Generally speaking, the city doesn't involve itself in social services, but I think in this case ... that $75,000 will probably be made up in what we can save over a period of years on the fires that we have and police action and all the things it is going to cost us," Council member Bill Hadden said.

"We are talking about CDBG money being spent on this. We are not talking about ad valorem taxes collected from the taxpayers in the city of Greenville," said Council member Lorraine Shinn.

"The city is not normally in the human services business, but when there's a project like this where there is a need, ... I think a council occasionally has to overstep its areas and look at things like the shelter for the homeless because the biggest problem we have is not in Pitt County, it's in the city of Greenville where the homeless people are."

"We haven't made any strides toward dealing with the problems of the homeless," Council member Ed Carter said. "I think in view of this factor, it would be quite appropriate to strongly consider this as a primary project.



GYM SURVEY — Dan Naugle, pastor of Greenville Bible Church and a member of the board of directors of the Greenville Community Life Center, looks over the gym at Agnes Fullilove School. Auto Insurance Bill Pushed

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — State lawmakers considering extensive changes in automobile insurance laws are trying to patch up political pitfalls on the run as they work to win passage in both houses of the General Assembly this session.

The bill emerged from a House Insurance subcommittee Friday on a lackluster 7-6 vote But most of the objections centered on a provision to require proof of insurance to obtain a driver's license or renewal.

Insurance Commissioner Jim Long said an amendment was being drafted to address concerns about teen-age drivers and people who don't own cars.

"I'm optimistic that we can answer those questions," Long said. "I'm hoping it'll get through the whole session (both House and Senate). I think the real question is how much controversy and conflict the insurance companies will stir up."

Sen. Dave Parnell, D-Robeson, chairman of the Senate Insurance Committee, said he was prepared to hold extra meetings to get something through before adjournment, expected in early August.

The bill, which once called for elimination of the Safe Driver Insurance Plan and a premium tax increase to offset any losses, is barely recognizable now. Bill Hale of the Department of Insurance told the Insurance Committee Thursday the date the bill would take effect was one of the few provisions unchanged.

But Ruffin Bailey, representing the American Insurance Association, still had his doubts.

"The biggest problem you have is to find answers that will be politically acceptable," he said. "Somebody is going to lose any time you change the insurance laws and nobody wants to hear them complain."

FERC Tells Deep River Plants To Shut Down

GREENSBORO (AP) — The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission charged six hydroelectric plants on the Deep River with illegal operations that threaten area water supplies and wildlife and ordered the plants to turn off turbines by Sunday.

Don Follmer of the North Carolina Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, said plant operaters have responded to the concerns "with cosmic indifference." But plant operators say they are operating within their permits.

The regulatory agency, which licenses and monitors hydroelectric projects, acted at the request of the department, according to the Greensboro News & Record.

"Over the past six months, we have been very concerned that the flow of the river has been interrupted and churned up, causing real problems in protection of the resource," Foller said.

"We're operating in compliance and have data to show it," said Steve Cook of Greensboro, owner of the Highfalls hydroelectric plant.

"We don't want to hurt anybody," Cook said. "We don't make any racket or release any chemicals. It's just that sometimes there are conditions you can't control."

Cook, who also owns Sedgefield Auto Parts, shut down his plant on Tuesday.

At issue is the way water is controlled in the power-making process.

These plants, situated on the Deep River between Randleman and Moncure, have permits to operate in "run-of-the-river mode."

That means that the amount of water released from a plant must approximate what it takes in. The result is a relatively constant generation of power — and a relatively constant volume of water in the river for users downstream.

Water officials say one or more of the plants is holding back water in small reservoirs, releasing it in surges to produce power during peak demand times — when the price paid for the power by Carolina Power & Light is highest.

"We suspect unauthorized peak-power generation," Follmer said. "A regular course of power generation doesn't interrupt the normal course of a river's flow."

In this case, he says, fluctuations have ranged as much as 4 or 5 feet.

Knack For Telling Stories Passes From Generation To Generation

An AP Member Exchange Feature
By MARY CORNATZER
The News and Observer of Raleigh

ASHEVILLE (AP) — The sun is getting low over the Blue Ridge Parkway, the air is cooling down and the lightning bugs have started playing hide-and-seek. It's that time of the evening, after supper, when folks head for the front porch to rock away the night, swatting mosquitoes and swapping stories.

Right on the Parkway, inside the Folk Art Center Theater, Connie Regan-Blake and Barbara Freeman have pulled up a couple of chairs and settled in for some sweet mountain talk. They'll spend the next two hours spinning tales, weaving a story out of family lore and decades-old reminiscences.

The women are first cousins. Connie's mother, Mary Agnes, and Barbara's father, Bill Freeman, are sister and brother. They passed on the family stories and the gift of gab to their daughters, who have since turned the knack for telling stories into a way of life. Their two-woman, two-act play, Mountain Sweet Talk, now in its second season at the Folk Art Center, runs through Aug. 16.

Their stories recall nights of low conversations, overheard on front porches, true stories with just a smattering of embellishment to make them go down better, stories that sounded all the more exciting because you weren't supposed to be listening.

Stories about folks like Drye Frye, the preacher man, who was all upset about his stolen bicycle until, while spouting the ten commandments in church on Sunday he got to Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife and suddenly remembered where he left the bike.

But Mountain Sweet Talk is more than just a series of tall tales strung together. There's an overriding story, a thread that holds all the other little tales together. Mountain Sweet Talk is the story of two cousins, Sarah and Jenny Rose, raised in the mountains by their great-aunt Jenny, who had a comment on everything. Great-aunt Jenny is never seen, but the cousins tell her stories, recall their childhood days with her and eventually mourn her passing.

"We decided on the structure, Ms. Regan-Blake said. "Decided on there being a great-aunt Jenny and Barbara being her namesake with the name Jenny Rose, decided on our names and on some of the things about it and then found out from my mom that we had a great-aunt Jenny and that she had died before we were born. And in the same breath that my mother told me about her she said, 'Oh, you know, Barbara Ann reminds me so much of her. She was always the wit of the family, always kept everybody laughing.' So, we knew we were on the right track."

They learned more about the real Jenny, how she broke her hip and walked with a cane, and incorporated that into the story. They even traveled to Houston, Texas, to meet with her son and his wife to talk about her.

"She used to take her cane at the dinner table and hook you," Ms. Freeman said. "That way when you got up she'd pull the cane and you'd trip and fall all over the table."

The fictional great-aunt Jenny is also credited with some characteristics that belong to other relatives. Like Aunt Rhea, who had a habit of meeting naughty children on the front porch with a wooden spoon in her fist.

"She used to have great volumes of sweat coming off her forehead," Ms. Freeman recalled. And she always smelled of fresh baked bread. That's where we ran off in the middle of the night with the horses.

"Lots of family stories were in our house," Ms. Freeman added, "but not your traditional mountain tales. We had very, very funny people in our family who could really make you laugh either through jokes or stories."

The two women grew up as close as two eggs in a basket and discovered they both had a gift for storytelling. Ms. Freeman got a job as a children and young adults librarian in Chattanooga, Tenn., and when Ms. Regan-Blake came to visit she got a job there too. They spent four years working as librarians and storytellers before deciding to chance a dream.

They quit their jobs in 1975 and headed out across the country in Ms. Freeman's pickup with a camper on the back. Within a month they had jobs in Connecticut and then Norfolk, Va., and then on and on across the country, eventually hitting 40 states and 12 countries.

It was during those years that they learned many of the stories heard in Mountain Sweet Talk, including Two White Horses about a woman who was buried alive and rescued from suffocation by a grave robber.

"You find that thing happening in stories a lot," Ms. Regan-Blake said. "But it's a true story that happened over in Erwin, Tenn., which is right across the mountain over near Johnson City. We got it from a woman named Elizabeth Seeman. She's an older woman, in her 80s. She lives at the end of the paved road and the dirt road and the rock road."

They collected ghost stories, sad stories, silly tales and riddles over the years. Learned close to a hundred stories each, Ms. Regan-Blake reckons. And then in 1978, tired of the traveling, they settled in Asheville, leaving only for performances.

Leaf Exports Posts Surplus

WASHINGTON (AP) — A private study showed Friday that U.S. tobacco exports posted a $502 million surplus over imports in the first quarter of this year, a 22 percent advance over the same period of 1986.

The report by Wharton Econometrics, Bala Cynwyd, Pa., said that by contrast the U.S. trade deficit for the first quarter of 1987 was $41 billion.

Romualdo A. Roldan, Wharton's vice president for international services, said, "The continued ability of the tobacco industry to generate trade surpluses and to reduce the U.S. trade deficit depends upon the continued favorability of foreign and domestic factors."

Such favorable foreign factors would include "competitive exchange rates and unfettered access" to foreign markets, he said. Among favorable domestic factors would be "continued government support in ensuring international fair trade practices and an unhindered ability to provide quality products at a competitive price."

The study was commissioned by Philip Morris U.S.A., the largest manufacturer of tobacco products, and was released at a news conference called by the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Dean Kleckner, president of the federation, said it was "significant that federal, state and local governments had a much greater income from the (tobacco) crop in 1986 than did the farmers who grew it."

In all, he said, more than $10.5 billion in tobacco taxes were collected last year, compared with farm tobacco sales of $1.92 billion.

"Further excise taxes are now being considered by Congress — taxes which, if passed, will directly affect people who can afford it the least — and add further problems to an already troubled industry," Kleckner said.

Oliver Wendell Holmes, author, physician and medical science pioneer, was born in Cambridge, Mass., in 1809.

Carters Work On Homes For Needy

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The construction site a few blocks northeast of downtown Charlotte was quiet in the early morning hours of what promised to be another sweltering July day.

As a handful of workers put the finishing touches on a concrete pad, it was difficult to imagine that in less than two weeks hundreds of volunteers — including Jimmy and Rosalynn Carter and Bob Hope — would converge at the former ballfield to construct 14 homes for needy families in just five days.

The Jimmy Carter Work Project '87 is being coordinated by the local chapter of the Habitat for Humanity. The Carters have previously worked on similar projects in Chicago and New York.

"This is the flip side of the coin," said Bob Wilson, who is directing the construction project. "It's not amusement parks and water slides for Jesus. We're using dollars entrusted to us to help people who don't have a decent place to live."

Wilson, a local contractor who's volunteering his time for the Charlotte chapter of the Habitat for Humanity, said the ongoing scandel at the PTL just across the South Carolina border was not a factor in Carter's decision to come here this summer.

"But it would have been a very good reason," he said. "There's a tremendous difference between us and the PTL. I think that's why the community is so excited. It's something being done for all the right reasons."

Work on the project will commence July 27 and last five days. Each house will have a 20-person construction crew. Other volunteers will provide food and other support.

No one, including former residents of the White House, get preferential treatment.

"President Carter will be assigned as a worker to House No. 3," said Wilson. "He's a skilled craftsman and an excellent woodworker. He'll be working alongside 19 other people, including the homeowners."

The Carters won't be the only celebrities with a hammer.

"President Carter called Bob Hope and asked him to help out," Wilson said. "He said he would bring his own hammer and his 85-year-old body."

Actor Paul Newman also might show up to help with the construction.

Hope has also volunteered to stage a show to benefit Habitat for Humanity, which is planning to build 200 new homes nationwide and in several foreign countries during the same week.

"Bob Hope adds a different kind of credibility to the Habitat," Wilson said. "It's one thing to say you've got Jimmy Carter, who's a Southern Baptist and a well-known Christian in support of this. But you get a new dimension when Bob Hope says 'I'm going to help them raise some money.'"

Wilson stressed that the building project does not receive any government funding.

"We're not giving away housing either," he said. "The people will be paying for their house and help build them."

The 14 families who will live in the houses were selected from a list of applicants by a committee of the local chapter of the Habitat for Humanity, which has already built 16 homes in the city for the poor.

"These people must be in need of shelter and they must be poor," Wilson said. "But they also must have sufficient income to make their mortgage payments and good credit.

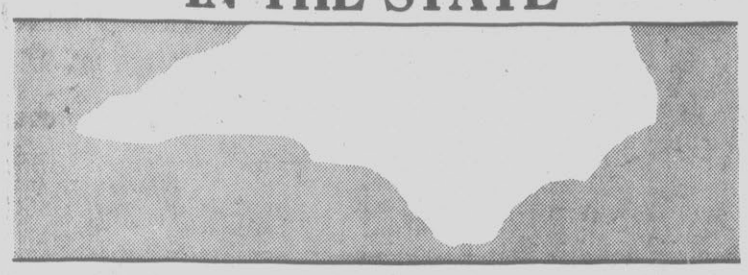
"They also must have children," he added. "That's because this is a long-range program that works."

The Charlotte housing project is the largest undertaken by the Habitat affiliate. The one-story frame homes, which will have three bedrooms and one bathroom, will cost between $25,000 and $28,000.

Payments totaling about $150 per month will go into a fund to finance similar construction projects.

"We're giving these people hope and an opportunity — not a house," Wilson said. "They have to work hundreds of hours to help pay for it."

IN THE STATE



Surplus Of Beds?

RALEIGH (AP) — A draft of the 1988 State Medical Facilities Plan recommends that North Carolina approve no more hospital beds over the next five years, but some officials are questioning the plan's accuracy.

North Carolina could have 5,914 unused hospital beds by 1992 if all approved hospital construction programs are completed, the state report released Friday says.

However, some are skeptical of the plan.

"I don't have a lot of confidence in them," Wake County Commissioner G. Herbert Stout told The News and Observer of Raleigh. "The bed situation has changed in the last year, and they're not acknowledging it. I've seen some problems with that section in recent years — they're pretty removed from what's going on at local levels. Only when something is clear and obvious to everyone do their figures reflect it."

The plan, which projects medical needs over five years and is used in planning medical facilities, also said North Carolina would be short 2,378 nursing home beds by 1990 if no more are licensed.

Madison's Share

RALEIGH (AP) — The co-chairman of the general government budget panel says House Speaker Liston Ramsey's county and hometown will get more than its fair share of money in the upcoming two-year budget proposal being carved out by the Legislature.

And Sen. R.P. "Bo" Thomas, D-Henderson, says they deserve every penny.

"The speaker works hard for North Carolina. He's given a lot to North Carolina," Thomas said. "Madison County's the poorest county in the state. Marshall is one of the poorest towns in the state. They gave us our great favorite son, Liston."

When appropriations chairmen released budget documents last week for review by five budget subcommittees, the general government budget included $200,000 for Madison County to buy land for a landfill in 1987-88. It also includes $240,000 for Marshall to be used to match federal funds for water and sewer lines and repairs or replacement of sewage disposal in 1988-89.

A third grant of $125,000 in 1987-88 for Marshall would be used for water lines, sewer lines and a booster pump to accommodate industrial development and the Madison satellite of Asheville-Buncombe Technical College.

Nothing New

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A new state law threatening punishment for people who intentionally disrupt emergency messages over citizens band radios is not so new for Forsyth County, where a similar measure has been on the books for four years.

"It has improved the situation immensely," said Charlie Weaver, operations officer for Forsyth County REACT Inc., and the person most responsible for the 1983 local legislation.

The new state law, given final Senate passage last week, will hand down some stiff penalties for violators. Interruption on the emergency channel could bring violators a $500 fine or six months' imprisonment if fould guilty of the misdemeanor. But if the interruption causes a serious injury or property damage exceeding $1,000, the punishment would be a year in prison or a fine of up to $1,000.

The statewide bill was introduced into the General Assembly by Rep. James Crawford, D-Granville, at the request of the N.C. Radio Emergency Associated Communications Team Council.

Prisoners Fled

SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — Six prisoners broke a washroom window in the Rowan County minimum security prison unit Saturday morning, crawled over the fence and then fled into a field near U.S. 29, prison officials said.

Prison Superintendent Jay Bame said he believes some or all of the escapees were picked up in a car.

"We do not know for certain," he said.

The prison break occurred about 6 a.m. and bloodhounds spent most of the day tracking the wooded area around the prison, Bame said.

"We found some tracks that were running and we'll see where they lead to to see if we can determine whether they were picked up in a vehicle ...," Bame said.

Two of the escapees, Ronald Athey, 24, of Salisbury; and Billy Ray Smith, 26, of Salisbury, are convicted felons, while the other four prisoners, Sidney E. Combs Jr., 27, of Salisbury; Kenneth Lee Thomas, 22, of Cleveland; Randall Hollifield, 26, of Gastonia; and Patrick J. Malone, 23, of Southport, are serving time for misdemeanors, prison officials said.

The specific charges of which the men were convicted were not available.

Correspondent Dies

NAPLES, Fla. (AP) — John Proctor McKnight, a former foreign correspondent for The Associated Press and foreign service officer, died Friday at Naples Community Hospital after a brief illness. He was 79.

McKnight joined the AP in the Charlotte, N.C., bureau in 1930 and served overseas in Havana, Mexico City, Spain, Portugal and Rome before leaving the wire service in 1949 to write "The Papacy."

He joined the U.S. Information Agency in 1951 and was posted in Rome, South Korea, Brazil and Argentina.

McKnight was surived by his wife Mary Jane, four nieces and two nephews.

Burial was planned in Shelby, N.C., where McKnight grew up, but no service had been scheduled by late Saturday. Earl G. Hodges Funeral Chapel here was handling arrangements.

Falwell Halts Telethon After Hate Mail Arrives

By G.G. RIGSBY
Associated Press Writer

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Hate mail and crank telephone calls from "kooky" people have crippled fund-raising efforts at the PTL television ministry, the Rev. Jerry Falwell said after a secret meeting of the board of directors.

Falwell said Friday the board has asked Dr. Thomas Zimmerman, district superintendent of the Assemblies of God Church and Junie Bradshaw, former state legislator in Virginia, to join the board of directors.

Falwell said the two new board members are being sought because they can help the ministry. He said Zimmerman, a charismatic, was not asked to serve in order to mollify any PTL supporters.

Some PTL contributors have complained that Falwell has changed the nature of the ministry from charismatic to fundamentalist since he took over in March, when Jim Bakker resigned amid a sex scandal.

"Those partners who are saying that we're changing everything are also the partners who have said we sold the place to Coca-Cola," Falwell said.

Appearing on the "PTL Club" television show before the board meeting, Falwell said PTL needs $1,748,000 by next Friday to avoid laying off workers and to keep the Heritage USA Christian theme park open.

Documents released earlier in the week showed PTL is $66 million in debt, which the ministry has tried to erase through a telethon and stepped-up fund-raising.

Falwell suspended the telethon temporarily Friday because of hate letters and 1,800 prank phone calls on Thursday.

He read on the air some of the hate messages received by mail or by phone, including one that said, "I'm going to kill Dr. Falwell somewhere, someplace."

"In the name of Jesus, I hope you rot in hell," he quoted another as saying.

Falwell said the majority of the telephone calls and letters, though, were supportive.

Falwell said security had not been stepped up because of the death threats. "I really think it's 99 percent kooky," he said.

The minister from Lynchburg, Va., said PTL's filing for protection in U.S. Bankruptcy Court, Jim and Tammy Bakker returning for awhile to Tega Cay and "national press furor" caused donations in June to fall to $2.4 million, half of the ministry's operating costs.

The board members are seeking a temporary loan of $5 million and "medium-range financing" of $20 million to $25 million," he said.

Falwell said unless the ministry can raise some money fast, "We could lose our network."

Harry Hargrave, PTL chief operating officer, said after the board meeting that an admission fee will not be charged to enter Heritage USA, which the bankruptcy court judge had suggested. A fee mey be required or donation requested to see the huge display of Christmas lights at the park, however, he said.

On Wednesday, attorneys filed documents in U.S. Bankruptcy Court showing that Bakker paid himself $1.3 million and loaned himself $180,000 during his last year as head of the ministry.

Bakker also paid his wife, Tammy, $437,018 and secretary Shirley Fulbright $193,058 beteen June 1986 and June 1987, according to the 545-page document.

Many of the payments were made in the weeks before and after March 19, when Bakker resigned after it was disclosed that he had a sexual encounter with Jessica Hahn, a former church secretary.

The document showed that the ministry faces 19 lawsuits for debts, including $14.1 million allegedly owed to Wichita, Kan., contractor Roe Messner.

The salaries of former PTL officials were also disclosed.

Former President Richard Dortch was paid $501,082, and aide David Taggart received $580,830, the documents show. Taggart received $45,000 of his pay March 28 and $30,000 on April 16, weeks after Bakker resigned.

Bakker Putting Plans On Hold

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Former PTL head Jim Bakker says he's put his plans to start a new ministry on hold while he concentrates on moving out of his desert home.

"Our main priority is to get our family back together," Bakker said Friday as he loaded a moving van parked in the driveway of the Spanish-style estate he and his wife, Tammy Faye, are vacating.

"We have no plans to start a new ministry right away. We have no cameras and no money," he said.

Bakker said he and his wife will be leaving for Gatlinburg, Tenn., where the couple has taken up residence, in the next few days.

Appearing relaxed as he spoke with reporters gathered outside the house, Bakker refused to comment on a document filed this week in bankruptcy court that showed he paid himself $1.3 million and lent himself $180,000 during his last year as head of PTL, an evangelical empire including the TV ministry and the Heritage Village USA resort at Fort Mill, S.C.

Bakker also paid his wife $437,018 and secretary Shirley Fulbright $193,058 between June 1986 and June 1987, according to the 545-page document.

Many of the payments were made in the weeks before and after March 19, when Bakker resigned as head of PTL after disclosing that he had committed adultery seven years before.

Bakker, who said recent weeks have been "like we went through a plane crash," added he hasn't spoken recently with the Rev. Jerry Falwell. Bakker turned PTL — Praise The Lord or People That Love — over to Falwell, but then accused Falwell of betraying him.

"I don't think he wants to talk to me," Bakker said of Falwell.

In Fort Mill, S.C., Falwell said Friday that he cut off a PTL fund-raising telethon because of hate mail and prank calls, but has not stepped up security.

Some States Pass Up Fiscal Windfall, Survey Says

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

State taxes will rise $4.6 billion next year as a result of legislative actions, even as most big states decided to forgo the fiscal windfall that federal tax reform would bring them, a survey shows.

Actions by state legislatures this year have the effect of avoiding more than than 80 percent of the $6.3 billion windfall in personal income taxes that those states stood to receive as a result of Congress' overhaul of the tax code last year.

That money would have fallen to states because of the way many tie their taxes to federal law. Last year's changes broadened the definition of taxable income, effectively broadening the definition for those states as well so that states not making adjustments would collect more money.

In all, 31 states will have net tax increases while nine lowered taxes, according to the survey by the National Conference of State Legislatures.

Most state legislatures have already adjourned for the year, although California has not yet taken action. The survey was prepared for the legislators' annual meeting this week in Indianapolis.

While raising taxes overall, many states have followed Congress' lead and made their income taxes simpler and lessened the tax burden on poor families.

"The state response to federal tax reform has made state personal income taxes considerably more progressive," said Steven Gold, director of fiscal studies for the conference, based in Denver.

The $4.6 billion in new taxes was a net figure, reduced by states that are cutting taxes.

A third of that amount is from a large sales and business tax increase passed last week by the Texas Legislature, which has grappled with major economic troubles caused by the oil slump. Gold said his study calculated the changes would boost Texas taxes $1.5 billion in 1988.

Of the national total in new state taxes, $600 million was in personal income taxes, and the largest portion, $2.2 billion, was in sales taxes. Other increases were spread among gasoline, tobacco, corporate, alcoholic beverages and other taxes.

The survey did not count avoiding the windfall as a tax cut, since the money was never collected. But it counted allowing the state to collect the windfall as an increase.

With action completed in most states that stood to receive a windfall due to the federal changes, it appears 15 will keep the entire amount, 13 will avoid the increased amount and five will keep a portion of the windfall, according to the survey.

Only $1.2 billion of the total windfall is being kept by states.

States keeping the windfall tend to have smaller amounts and are facing financial troubles, while states with big windfalls are forgoing it. The biggest windfalls are $1.5 billion in New York and $1.4 billion in California.

Of states not taking final action yet, California and Massachusetts were expected to avoid the windfall while North Carolina was expected to keep it, the study said. It listed Michigan as uncertain.

The biggest overall tax cut was in New York, $700 million, followed by Pennsylvania's $102 million. The greatest increases, as a portion of state revenue, were in Oklahoma, Texas, South Dakota and Montana — each of which raised taxes by 10 percent or more.

Overall, the tax increases amount to about 2 percent of state taxes.

In 12 states, Gold said, the changes remove income taxes on the poorest families. They are Colorado, Hawaii, Idaho, Maine, Minnesota, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont and Wisconsin.

Five states thoroughly overhauled their personal income taxes this year. Minnesota and New York adopted tax codes with only two rates, and Colorado set a single rate.

Nebraska and West Virginia also made major changes.

"I expect we're going to see more of that in the future — states taking the tax burden off the poor and moving toward only one or two tax rates," Gold said in an interview.

Eight states lowered their top tax rates: Colorado, Delaware, Hawaii, Minnesota, New York, Oregon, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

Reagan Upset With Health Care Package

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan charged Saturday that House-passed legislation to provide Americans with insurance against catastrophic illness would "bankrupt the elderly" and eventually run up a $20 billion deficit in the Medicare trust fund.

But while Reagan, in his weekly radio address to the nation delivered from Camp David, Md., denounced the bill that passed the House 302-127 on Wednesday, he did not threaten to veto it — as he had done in a meeting with Republican congressional leaders.

"I promised Americans a plan that would protect you in your retirement years from financial devastation brought on by a catastrophic illness requiring prolonged hospitalization and medical care," he said. "I fulfulled that promise, and in turn the Democratic House more than tripled the costs, increased tax rates for virtually all elderly taxpayers, expanded the program so much that in about 15 years, it will run a $20 billion deficit and threaten the solvency of the entire Medicare trust fund. ..."

"This is a fight about protecting the health of our senior citizens — come to think of it, citizens like me — and doing it in a way that doesn't bankrupt the elderly in the process," he said.

"I know all of this is upsetting," Reagan said. "Everywhere I go, I hear protests from people like you about the ways of Capitol Hill."

"I think the American people are doing a slow burn over Congress' failure to face up responsibly to the problems," he said, "and I think the public's temperature is going to rise even higher when it understands that Congress has been trifling with a plan to provide elderly Americans with insurance against catastrophic illness — a plan that can work without taxing the elderly into servitude."

Reagan quarreled with the way catastrophic illness insurance through Medicare would be financed under the House plan, saying the "sound, reasonable program" he proposed "has been converted into a massive program that will impose a new tax on the elderly and soon threaten to bankrupt the Medicare trust fund."

Warren Gamaliel Harding, the 29th president of the United States, was born in 1865 near Corsica, Ohio.

Sessions Would Inherit Agency That Is Under Close Scrutiny

By PETE YOST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — If William S. Sessions wins Senate confirmation as FBI director, he will lead an agency suspected of protecting the White House in the Iran-Contra affair and of harassing opponents of the administration's Central American policies.

Session's predecessor, William Webster, succeeded in maintaining excellent relations with Congress and in building a reputation for personal integrity that reflected on the bureau and its 9,100 special agents.

But Webster's recent confirmation hearings to become CIA director brought to light embarrassing disclosures about the FBI's involvement with fired National Security Council aide Oliver North.

For example, North acknowledged two years ago to an FBI agent that he was involved in directing private fund-raising operations for the Contras fighting the leftist government of Nicaragua and that he was informing President Reagan of his efforts.

But a teletyped summary of the agent's interview never made it to FBI headquarters a few miles away because it was garbled and was never retransmitted.

North dealt frequently with one of Webster's top aides, Oliver Revell, on counter-terrorism matters and then got Revell to agree to intercede with the U.S. attorney's office in Philadelphia on a criminal matter.

Revell telephoned the U.S. attorney's office, but did not intercede because the appearance of a grand jury witness who was assisting Contra fund-raising efforts had already been postponed. It was one of a number of times North tried to inject himself in criminal investigations that directly or indirectly involved the Contras.

"The FBI did not perform well when it came to Oliver North," Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said in an interview. "They had information in July 1985 that could have saved the president and this country a lot of grief, but they didn't use it."

Specter is a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, which reviewed Webster's nomination for the CIA, and is on the Senate Judiciary Committee, which will review the nomination of the new director-designate of the FBI.

The senator supported Webster to head the CIA, calling him "a guy with an extraordinary record," but Specter said that whoever becomes new FBI director "must learn from the mistakes of the past."

Webster has said there were "individual situations that on examination and 20-20 hindsight we might have done differently." But he insisted that none of North's attempts to influence FBI investigations had resulted "in any change in our investigative patterns."

The FBI appears recently to have stepped up the pace of its interviews that have been under way for the past few years of American supporters of the Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

The FBI defends the inquiries as part of its responsibility to protect domestic security or to carry out its foreign counter-intelligence function.

While the FBI insists the interviews are not being conducted for political reasons, Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., says they carry the "odor of harassment." He plans to hold public hearings. A constitutional rights group has filed two lawsuits against the FBI and the U.S. Customs Service over what it regards as harassment.

The Carter administration's Justice Department designed guidelines to keep the FBI within the Constitution in its investigations of individuals and groups representing a danger to domestic security. Rewritten guidelines issued by the Reagan administration gave the bureau much more latitude.

Webster's nearly 10-year tenure as head of the FBI has been marked by great change.

Under the former federal judge, the bureau has moved aggressively into such sensitive areas as labor racketeering, political corruption, organized crime and drugs.

The FBI was exposed to allegations of entrapment after it completed the highly successful Abscam corruption probe that netted a U.S. senator, six congressmen and a number of local politicians. The courts ultimately vindicated the bureau's tactics.

Under Webster, agents involved in wrongdoing have faced criminal charges, rather than being dismissed without disclosure of their illegal behavior as was the policy during the 48-year tenure of J. Edgar Hoover.

More than a dozen agents have been charged with crimes and improper conduct during Webster's directorship, including one for espionage. Another is accused of telling lies that for nearly a year shelved the planned prosecution of Teamsters union President Jackie Presser.

There have been other changes as well at the FBI.

50 Reported Dead In Clash

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Peasants demanding land reform and mobs working for landowners fought with machetes in a clash that may have killed 50 and wounded many more, radio stations reported Saturday.

A group of several hundred peasants en route to the northwestern village of Jean Rabel were ambushed Friday by assailants, some of whom apparently were members of former dictator Jean-Claude Duvalier's private army, the Tontons Macoutes, according to radio stations.

The number of dead and injured could not be determined because many bodies were dismembered and scattered in ravines, Radio Haiti Inter reported.

Radio Soleil, the Roman Catholic Church station, and Radio Antilles reported that at least 30 people were killed and more than 100 wounded. Radio Haiti Inter reported that about 50 people died.

Radio Lumiere, the Protestant station, quoted a clergyman in Port-de-Paix, about 25 miles east of Jean Rabel, as saying more than 200 people may have been killed.

Spokesmen at Radio Soleil and Haiti Inter said their reports came from stringers on the scene. The stringers' reports could not be immediately verified by station correspondents because peasants armed with machetes were blocking the single dirt road leading to Jean Rabel, the spokesmen said.

The reports could not be independently confirmed because there are no phones in Jean Rabel.

The Tontons Macoutes were disarmed and disbanded by the provisional junta that took power following Jean-Claude Duvalier's departure. But critics of the junta claim that some of the Macoutes were incorporated into the regular army and others allowed to remain at liberty in the countryside.

Officials at Our Lady of Peace Hospital in Jean Rabel have been unable to treat the patients because of a lack of medicine and blood, the stations reported. They are unable to evacuate the patients because of the roadblocks.

Peasants and mobs representing the landowners stoned the hospital Friday and were beaten back by police when they tried to enter and kill the injured, the stations reported.

Drought-stricken Jean Rabel and the surrounding region is the poorest part of Haiti, the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere.

Senators Ready To Grill Bork

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court nominee Robert H. Bork may have less freedom than his predecessors in sidestepping touchy questions put to him by the Senate, where his appointment is seen as possibly tipping the ideological balance.

Some senators, complaining of evasiveness by past high court nominees, say too much is at stake this time to settle for less than candor.

"This is an especially important matter," Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said in an interview. "This is a unique situation. There are very important questions that must be answered."

Specter, a moderate Republican, is a swing vote on the Senate Judiciary Committee, which is to begin hearings on the Bork nomination Sept. 15.

He disclosed that he held an 80-minute meeting with Bork last week to explore the nominee's views on numerous issues. He said he hopes to meet with Bork again privately. "I don't want just a courtesy call," Specter said.

He added that Bork was willing to talk about his judicial philosophy, while making a distinction between that and his political ideology.

The senator said among the subjects discussed were Supreme Court cases dealing with privacy rights, free speech and expression, racial discrimination and due process rights for accused criminals.

Specter, who lists himself among the undecided on the nomination, said Bork "is a very intelligent man, an accomplished scholar."

But, he added, "He has very strong and very different views. His views go far beyond harsh criticism of the Warren Court."

The Supreme Court under the leadership of Chief Justice Earl Warren was distinctly liberal and activist, handing down a host of decisions from 1953 through 1969 that expanded civil and privacy rights and the rights of criminal suspects.

The staunchly conservative Bork, a federal appeals court judge since 1982 and a former aw school professor, has decried "imperialistic" judges who seek to impose their own views rather than interpret the Constitution and laws. In extensive writings, he has said judges generally should defer to Congress and state legislatures.

But in several recent interviews with the news media, Bork has portrayed himself as a man of flexibility.

He said he is "kind of in favor of traditional values" but is "not hung on them. I'm not an absolutist in these matters."

Also, he said, "My record will show the decisions don't line up on any political axis."

The twin issues of Bork's ideology and his forthrightness in discussing his views will figure prominently in the confirmation process.

Some senators engaged in preliminary debate last week over the Senate's role in scrutinizing Bork's politics.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph R. Biden, D-Del., expected to lead the fight against the nomination, said Bork's political outlook is fair game.

Others, led by Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said senators should stick to Bork's intellectual and professional qualifications and matters of personal integrity.

Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., a Reagan administration ally with a knack for the pungent and homespun quip, suggested the battle over ideological issues will take on a rodeo-like atmosphere.

"It's going to be a little like riding Brahman bulls around here," he said.

Early indications are that the fight over the nomination will go down to the wire. Republicans and Democrats agree that the Senate appears to be evenly divided.

That means that Bork's handling of questions when he testifies before the Judiciary Committee, and the impression he makes on undecided senators, could be crucial.

Hahn Gets Rich From PTL Story

By LAWRENCE NEUMEISTER
Associated Press Writer

WEST BABYLON, N.Y. (AP) — Jessica Hahn, jolted from her quiet life as a church secretary by the PTL scandal, has moved into the fast lane, telling her story to Playboy and making million-dollar book and movie deals.

Miss Hahn's attorney, Dominic Barbara, said his client, who is staying at a Manhattan hotel courtesy of Playboy, stands to receive at least $2.5 million through the deals.

The Playboy story, which will appear in the November issue, will detail Miss Hahn's tryst with television evangelist Jim Bakker in a Florida hotel room in December 1980.

Barbara would not elaborate on the other deals being arranged for Miss Hahn, who made a five-day trip to Hollywood at the end of last month.

Bakker claims he was blackmailed by Miss Hahn and her advisers over the encounter, which led to his resignation from the television ministry he founded.

Miss Hahn, 28, admits receiving money from PTL, but denies it was blackmail.

She has said she was forced to have sex with Bakker and another minister, and then agreed to a $265,000 settlement with PTL. She said she received only a small amount of the settlement before it was cut off in March when Bakker resigned as head of PTL, which stands for People That Love or Praise the Lord.

When the story broke, hordes of journalists descended on the quaint little house in this New York City suburb where Miss Hahn rented a top-floor apartment.

They stayed for days, photographing her as she played with her dog, Missy, or as she cried while she begged them to leave. Each time the PTL controversy blossomed, the journalists returned.

In a recent interview, she said the PTL scandal and the gossip surrounding it had left her suspicious of people.

"Before, I'd be more confident and comfortable talking to someone, believing that they cared," she said. "Now, I ran into these people and have seen what they are. ... I found out it's very hard to believe in anybody anymore."

In the weeks prior to signing the magazine deal, she said repeatedly that she felt "at a breaking point."

"I always trust in God and I'm glad I do because without him, I probably would not have made it through this," she said. "I probably would have done something stupid because that's how bad I've been."

Miss Hahn said she slipped away from her apartment several times to talk to her pastor but never went back to church for services.

"Naturally, my church has stood by me but I don't want to go there for obvious reasons. That drives me crazy. I just miss it tremendously," she said.

During her seclusion in West Babylon, she said she cried frequently. She also took comfort watching NBC's "Late Night with David Letterman."

"He's my favorite person in the whole world," she said. "I just think he's funny. He's fun to watch, a break from all of this. It relaxes me. It takes my mind off all this other stuff."

In late June, Miss Hahn emerged from her seclusion and appeared on seven or eight television programs and a radio show.

"I did it because people weren't hearing from me and assumed I was the picture everybody painted," she said. "I wanted them to realize I was a human being with feelings."

Espionage Case Becomes Crusade For Indian Rights

By JOE TAYLOR
Associated Press Writer

QUANTICO, Va. (AP) — The family of a Marine sergeant charged with giving U.S. secrets to his Soviet girlfriend has turned his case into a struggle for Indian rights.

Clayton Lonetree, a 25-year-old part Navajo and part Winnebago from St. Paul, Minn., is yet another Indian victim of lies by the federal government, relatives say.

The government contends Lonetree, the first Marine ever charged with espionage, gave away state secrets after being seduced by a Soviet woman who worked in the Moscow embassy while he was a guard there.

But Lonetree's lawyers, headed by famed trial counsel William Kunstler, say the Marine fell deeply in love with the woman, an embassy employee, but did not betray his country.

The defense suffered a defeat last week when the military judge presiding at Lonetree's court-martial refused to release classified testimony that allegedly would help prove Lonetree's innocence.

Navy Capt. Philip F. Roberts accused the defense of engaging in a "fishing trip."

Kunstler and colleague Michael Stuhff allege that the testimony would show that security in American embassies throughout the world is lax and that the female employee in the Moscow incident had not been adequately screened.

They also contend that Lonetree was isolated and vulnerable in the foreign post because of his race.

Lonetree's family have agreed with this, some of them reluctantly.

Telephone calls to a Quantico base spokesman for comment went unanswered Saturday.

"Indians are poor, but at times like this we stand together," said Sam Lonetree, the defendant's 72-year-old grandfather.

"They say he betrayed his country. How could this be? This is his country," the elder Lonetree told reporters during a break in the trial, which opened Wednesday.

Lonetree's grandfather, who described himself as a prayer chief, said the native tribes of the North American continent respect the laws of white men.

In addition to the grandfather, Lonetree's father, mother, grandmother and aunt have attended the trial's opening sessions.

The first day brought a contingent of about a dozen Indians to the Quantico Marine Corps Base headquarters where the proceedings are being held.

On Thursday, Sam Lonetree performed an Indian prayer ceremony inside the courtroom during a break in arguments on pre-testimony motions.

"May the Great Spirit bless you all," he said.

Outside, Lonetree's father, Spencer Lonetree, said he came here "with a heavy heart" because "I simply don't trust the government."

He said the United States has a long history of breaking treaties with his people and has tried to create a "spy fever" to arouse public indignation.

He said he did not initially think the case was racially motivated, but reached that conclusion after a similar case against one of Lonetree's fellow Marines was dropped.

Lonetree is one of several Marines who were arrested in connection with security lapses at the Moscow embassy.

Navajos Move To New Lands

By TOM COYNE
Associated Press Writer

LITTLE SILVERSMITH, Ariz. (AP) — After more than a century of debate and 13 years of legal battles, Navajo families have begun to move off land that is now part of the Hopi reservation and onto land purchased by the federal government.

Navajo families started moving into this tiny community in eastern Arizona about two weeks ago. About 15 of the 95 families who have agreed to relocate are here at the new town site, about 10 miles south of Sanders on Interstate 40 near the New Mexico border.

The move is being organized by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, with a $20 million grant from Congress paying for new houses for the displaced Navajo, at a cost of between $55,000 and $65,000 per dwelling.

Twenty sites for new Navajo communities have been identified. Nearby Parker Draw is almost ready for the families, while Antelope Well still is in its preliminary stages.

The move of the families was mandated in 1974 when Congress settled a land dispute between the Hopi and the faster-growing Navajo, whose sprawling reservation surrounds the Hopi, by dividing up an area that formerly was used by both tribes. About 100 Hopi families moved off Navajo land almost immediately.

As many as 1,500 Navajo families have moved, but about 250 families remain on land where some Navajo families have lived for generations.

Ross Swimmer, assistant interior secretary for Indian Affairs, met Friday with residents of Little Silversmith and visited the soon-to-be communities of Parker Draw and Antelope Well.

"I was pleased with the responses I heard," he said. "I didn't hear any complaints."

Selago Begay, 66, moved in Friday and told Swimmer what he thought of his new home.

"It's better, much better," he said through an interpreter. "The land here will provide a lot of vegetation for our livestock. I made the decision to move here for the livestock."

Begay said his home at Howell Mesa did not have running water or electricity. His new three-bedroom house has water, electricity, a large living room and modern kitchen.

Still, given a choice, he would not have moved if he didn't have to.

"I didn't want to move," he said. "I was told I had to leave. It's the law from Washington and I feel I have abided by the law."

Swimmer, former chief of the Cherokee tribe, said he probably wouldn't be happy either if he were forced to move.

"The reaction of Selago was not unusual," he said. "I knew there were people who didn't want to move. What I wanted to find out was how they liked the new lands."

The Navajo tribe is continuing to fight the 1974 act and has asked Congress to repeal it. Swimmer said the tribe's hands-off attitude about the move has slowed progress.

"Their attitude is that if Congress wants them to move and the families want to move, then let them move. But the Navajo are not helping," he said.

ALL SMILES — Presidential contender Jesse Jackson greets Louisiana Governor Edwin Edward during's Saturday's meeting of the Southern Democratic National Committee in New Orleans. The conference concluded Saturday night. (AP Laserphoto)

Jackson Blasts Reagan, Courts Women's Vote

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jesse Jackson, citing his aim of being the conscience of the Democratic Party, urged his fellow Democrats Saturday not to abandon women's rights or the struggle for equality in South Africa in their quest for the presidency.

Jackson, the first of a string of Democrat presidential aspirants or their representatives to address the Southern National Democratic Committee conference, also accused the Reagan administration of violating the law Saturday and called on fellow Democrats to heal the party's wounds.

"I endeavor to be the conscience of our party," said the civil rights activist. "I will not forsake women. I stood alone in 1984 and called for a woman to be put on our ticket."

Nor would he forsake South Africa and its struggle to be free, he said.

Jackson warned other Democratic presidential hopefuls that "our party must never have a moral deficit" and challenged the party to address these issues.

Turning his attention to the current administration, Jackson said President Reagan's years have been characterized by scandal and flagrant violations of the law.

"This administration will violate the law with contempt of Congress and is flaunting that now," said Jackson, who ran unsuccessfully for his party's presidential nomination in 1984 and is expected to be a candidate this time.

He said the administration's handling of the Iran-Contra arms sales is a prime example of President Reagan's failure to abide by the law.

Jackson accused Lt. Col. Oliver North, former National Security Council chiefs John Poindexter and Robert McFarlane and the late CIA head William Casey of violating the law at Reagan's behest.

"It was (Reagan's) policy that was being followed," he said.

Jackson said the Iran-Contra hearings have focused too much on the bit players and not enough on the chief.

"When the USS Stark was blown up, they didn't go after the petty officer, they went after the captain," he said.

Jackson criticized North for placing "loyalty, lust and ambition over law, truth and justice. That's not a formula for authentic heroism."

Switching to partisan issues, Jackson told Democrats they have to register more voters, heal the wounds within the party and give the nation a new sense of direction.

Asked which Republican he would like to face should he be chosen as the Democratic candidate, Jackson said it didn't matter.

"The cook is different, but the formula is the same. We must defeat the formula," said Jackson.

Also addressing the conference Saturday are Democratic National Committee Chairman Paul Kirk and U.S. Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee, a declared presidential hopeful.

Welfare Reform On Agenda At Governors' Conference

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. (AP) — The nation's governors, opening their annual meeting Saturday, pressed Congress to back their welfare reform plan and recommended to each other local programs to reduce dependence on welfare with new jobs and training.

The National Governors' Association began its annual four-day summer meeting at this resort by Lake Michigan with most of the 24 Republican and 26 Democratic governors present or arriving Sunday.

"What we're doing here is laying the foundation for the future of America's domestic policy," said Virginia Gov. Gerald Baliles, a Democrat.

The governors, while asking for federal help on welfare, were focusing on what states can do to expand social programs and encourage private jobs, using the theme "Making America Work."

"We're not waiting on Washington," Baliles said at a news conference opening the meeting. "It used to be Washington stood tall and tried to do what was necessary — it built the interstates, supported the students, funded the research. Today it seems that the best Washington can do is stand tall and duck."

The governors followed up on major proposals approved at their last two gatherings, on ways to overhaul the nation's education and welfare systems, with a set of reports pointing to successful state programs.

They also planned to focus on problems with the nation's international competitiveness and economic disparities among the states.

"The clear-cut implication is the states are doing a lot," said Michigan Gov. James Blanchard, host for the meeting. "We're the innovators and the laboratories.

"Competitiveness is basically an overworked buzzword, rhetoric, in Washington," Blanchard, a Democrat, said in an interview before the meeting. "If you go to the states you'll see a lot more action, a lot going on."

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, chairman of the National Governors' Association, said the nation was being divided by widening economic disparities among regions, races and age groups, and that a new class of poor is emerging among young single mothers and their children.

"Our country cannot be what we want it to be, cannot maintain its role in the world, unless we can ... overcome these profound divisions," Clinton said.

Clinton called for passage of the governors' welfare reform plan this year. But the incoming chairman, Republican Gov. John Sununu of New Hampshire, cautioned that a thriving economy is the only real way to get people off assistance.

The governors' meeting has a far different look from their gathering a year ago. Twenty-one new governors were elected in 1986, and Republicans went from 16 statehouses to 24 — leaving Democrats barely clinging to the majority they have held since 1970.

The governors were not focusing on 1988 presidential politics during their meeting, although one of their number, Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachussetts, is among the declared Democratic hopefuls and will have a platform as chairman of the Democratic governors.

Clinton announced two weeks ago he would not enter the presidential race after months of hinting that he would.

No other Democratic or Republican candidates were scheduled to attend this meeting. But the Democratic governors have private sessions scheduled with all the announced and probable Democratic presidential candidates when they begin a three-day meeting of their own at another northern Michigan resort, Mackinac Island, after this conference ends Tuesday.

The governors released a pair of reports, titled "Bringing Down the Barriers" and "Jobs, Growth and Competitiveness" that grew out of six committees of governors that held hearings around the country.

They discuss goals for improving the nation's competitiveness in the international economy, creating new jobs and overcoming social problems of teen-age pregnancy, school dropouts, adult illiteracy and drug and alcohol abuse.

Routine Rejection

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department on Saturday rejected a Soviet complaint that the United States is violating a 1972 treaty by improving a radar installation in Greenland.

Spokesman Pete Martinez said this was "an old issue which we have rejected many times."

The U.S. official said the radar was already in place at the time of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty and work on it since was legal.

Martinez said the Soviet radar at Krasnoyarsk was "entirely different" and the United States stands by its claims that that installation is illegal.

Judge Says Collins' Pact Valid

By JEFF WILSON
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joan Collins' prenuptial agreement with estranged husband Peter Holm was valid and the former Swedish pop star deserves no more of the "Dynasty" star's money, a divorce judge ruled Friday.

The prenuptial agreement limited Holm, 40, to 20 percent of Miss Collins' earnings during their 13 months of marriage before the 54-year-old actress filed for an annulment.

"I'm absolutely happy," said a beaming Miss Collins after four often bitter days in court.

She gave her attorney, celebrity lawyer Marvin Mitchelson, a long hug after Superior Court Judge Earl F. Riley issued his ruling.

Mitchelson, who described Holm as greedy, graspy and scheming, said, "The property has been decided. The divorce or annulment is now a matter of course."

Holm's hopes now hinge on a division of property settlement, but Mitchelson said the agreement implied that he had waived community property rights.

Holm received $1.3 million plus $700,000 in support during the marriage.

Riley will decide on Aug. 18 if there will be a hearing to consider Holm's request for $80,000 a month in temporary spousal support until a property settlement can be worked out.

The strapping Holm is "healthy as a horse" and has no disabilities that would prevent him from getting work, Mitchelson said. "He's not suffering from anything except delusions of grandeur."

The court had been asked to determine the validity of the prenuptial agreement, signed on Oct. 23, 1985, and determine if Holm is entitled to temporary spousal support.

The couple was married Nov. 6, 1985. Miss Collins asked for an annulment in December 1986.

Frank Steinschriber, representing Holm, said he was disappointed but that an appeal was under consideration.

"I feel sorry it had to end like this," Miss Collins told reporters in the courtroom. "I'm very happy that justice has been done."

Asked what she would demand in any future long-term relationship, Miss Collins said, "Freedom. Freedom from all entanglements."

"She made a lousy bargain ... but that's the bargain she made and she wanted to stay with it. She relied on it," Mitchelson said in his closing statement.

"This lady had been married three times before and knew what it was like. She just finished paying off her last husband more than $1 million," Mitchelson said. "She was entitled to bargain and not have it happen again."

Miss Collins, who is paid $95,000 an episode for portraying the conniving Alexis Carrington on ABC's "Dynasty," told of constant bickering with Holm over the prenuptial agreement. Without it, she said, she didn't want to marry.

"I've never met a man yet who was able to take care of me," Miss Collins said at one point. During the proceedings, she sipped mineral water brought especially for her and sniffed on a rose bud.

At first, Miss Collins and Holm avoided eye contact. By the third day, the actress sometimes spun in her chair and glared at Holm 10 feet away.

Each day, the third floor courthouse was jammed with scores of "Dynasty" fans, reporters, off-duty jurors and attorneys enthralled with the comings and goings of the actress and her entourage, which included four bodyguards.

Two weeks ago, Holm had holed up in one of Miss Collins' houses, vowing to shoot rather than be evicted. However, he met a judge's deadline to get out.

He then picketed outside another of her homes, complaining that she was treating him unfairly by refusing to give him a place to live.

Romina Danielson, who swooned on the witness stand Thursday after testifying she had had an affair with Holm, was not in court to testify Friday because she was still ill, Mitchelson said.

The judge threw out all of her testimony.

HAPPY WITH DECISION — Actress Joan Collins and her lawyer, Marvin Mitchelson, react to a divorce judge's decision in a Los Angeles court, ruling that Collins' prenuptial agreement with estranged hisband Peter Holm was valid. The pact limited Holm to receive 20 percent of the money made by the actress during their 13-month marriage. (AP Laserphoto)

Hijacker's Father Says His Son Should Be Tried

By RODEINA KENAAN
Associated Press Writer

DEIR QANOUN EN-NAHR, Lebanon (AP) — The father of the Lebanese hijacker who commandeered an Air Afrique jetliner said Saturday he would not feel sorry for his son if he were convicted of air piracy and killing a passenger.

"I am shocked, the whole family is shocked," said Mohammed Ali Hariri, a day after his son Hussein, 21, hijacked the DC-10 airliner to Geneva and shot to death a French passenger.

"I condemn such acts because I frequently travel abroad," the retired Shiite Moslem merchant said in an interview at his modest one-story home in this south Lebanese town.

"I shudder at the thought that one day I might be on a hijacked plane and see the killing of an innocent passenger," said Hariri, 64, who has owned an electrical tools shop in Bangui, the capital of the Central African Republic, since 1980.

He said his son left south Lebanon for Bangui 25 days ago to take over the family shop there.

"If he is proven guilty, I will not feel sorry for him. Let him stand trial," he said.

The elder Hariri often gazed at his son's picture on the front page of a Beirut newspaper during the interview. Hariri has three other sons and three daughters ages 15 to 28.

Although this town is a major stronghold of the pro-Iranian Shiite extremist Hezbollah faction, Hariri's house did not have any portraits of Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Relatives earlier said Hussein Hariri was a member of Hezbollah, or Party of God, believed to be the umbrella group for Shiite militant groups holding hostages in Lebanon.

Neither the elder Hariri nor his 53-year-old wife, Fatima, would confirm or deny that their son was an active Hezbollah member.

Relatives, who spoke on condition of anonymity in the southern port city of Tyre, said on Friday that Hussein Hariri was a friend of the Hamadi brothers, Mohammed Ali, Abbas and Abdul-Hadi, who have been embroiled in a confrontation with West Germany. Mohammed Ali is awaiting trial in Frankfurt on charges of complicity in the May 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner to Beirut, in which a U.S. Navy diver was killed. Abbas is also jailed in West Germany.

Well-informed sources in Paris said Friday that Hariri hijacked the Air Afrique airliner to demand the freedom of Mohammed Ali and Abbas Hamadi.

The third brother, Abdul-Hadi, heads the Hezbollah security apparatus in the Shiite slums of south Beirut. He has often been reported as having engineered the abduction of two West Germans last January in a bid to swap them for his brothers.

Tatars Demonstrate

MOSCOW (AP) — More than 500 Crimean Tatars chanted, waved banners and demanded the right to return to their homeland in a rare demonstration Saturday in Red Square.

The demonstrators brandished their fists in the air and demanded an audience with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to ask him to let them return to the Ukraine's Crimean Peninsula.

"Motherland or death," and "Democracy and openness is for Tatars too," some of the banners read in the second such demonstration near the Kremlin this month.

The 7 p.m. protest and the apparent lack of police retaliation were highly unusual. The rally appeared to be one of the toughest tests yet of the official policy of tolerance of criticism, which Gorbachev has advocated.

But news of the demonstration was not reported by either the official Tass news agency or the state-run television, which led its evening news with a story about the inauguration of a subway station in Gorky.

The Tatars are descendants of the Mongolians, who controlled much of ancient Russia for centuries.

Toll Reaches 260 As Heat Wave Continues In Greece

By HELENA SMITH
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Temperatures soared above 100 degrees Saturday and Greece sizzled for a sixth straight day during a heat wave blamed for at least 260 deaths.

A spokesman at the state First Aid Center in Athens said 260 people have died in hospitals from heat-related problems but that the death toll could mount because more deaths may have have occurred in homes.

The spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said no foreign tourists were among the dead.

"Almost all of those who have died were elderly people who suffered from heart and respiratory problems," a spokesman for the center said.

By midday, the temperature soared to 104 degrees in Elefsina, a suburb nine miles west of Athens.

Hospital sources who requested anonymity said more than 2,000 people have been hospitalized so far in Athens with heat-related problems and hospitals and military clinics were struggling to cope with the huge influx of patients.

Greece has recorded the highest temperatures in Europe, with a peak temperature last week of 109 degrees.

The weather service predicted that temperatures would drop by Monday.

There have been 12-hour water cuts in some areas of the Greek capital during the last two days because of overconsumption, but water supplies were back to normal on Saturday, officials said.

Reports said that dozens of people fainted in streets and other public places because of the heat. Air conditioning is still rare in Greece.

In radio and television bulletins, the Health Ministry advised people to drink plenty of liquids, shower regularly and avoid exercise.

Teen Pilot To Be Tried In Russia

By MASHA HAMILTON
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet court will try a West German teen-ager who braved Soviet border defenses and landed his light plane near Red Square, a West German Embassy official said Saturday.

Soviet officials told the West German Embassy on Friday that Mathias Rust would be tried, said embassy legal counselor Gerhard Enver Schroembgens. He said the Soviets did not say what charges he would face or when the trial would start.

"We hope to learn that next week," Schroembgens said in a telephone interview. "We know only that he has been given a Soviet lawyer and the embassy has asked to be present at his trial."

The 19-year-old Rust, from a suburb of Hamburg, has been jailed in Moscow's Lefortovo Prison since May 28, when he flew his Cessna aircraft from Helsinki, Finland, through heavily guarded Soviet airspace, and landed near the Kremlin.

The incident prompted a top-level shake-up in the Soviet military. Defense Minister Sergei Sokolov was forced to resign and air defense chief Alexander Koldunov was replaced.

Rust's parents, who visited him last month, have said their son is an idealist who apparently flew to Moscow to promote understanding between East and West. They flatly denied he was a part of any conspiracy against the Soviets and appealed to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to secure his release.

But the Soviet news agency Tass has said Rust violated Soviet airspace, a charge which carries a penalty of up to 10 years in jail or a fine of about $1,550 upon conviction.

The charge of illegal entry into the Soviet Union carries a maximum penalty of up to three years in jail.

Schroembgens, who has already visited Rust in prison once this month, said he hopes to see him again next week.

The Bonn government has been allowed periodic meetings with the teen-ager in keeping with Soviet-West German protocol.

Revised Penalties For Violation of Solid Waste Collection and Disposal Ordinance

Effective August 1, 1987, Pitt County will implement a new schedule of penalties for violation of the Solid Waste Collection and Disposal Ordinance. Minimum civil penalties for violations are as follows:

A. Scavenging:

First Offense	Second Offense	Subsequent Offenses
$25.00	$50.00	$100.00

B. Illegal dumping including dumping prohibited materials or quantities of materials in the solid waste receptacles or landfill, or dumping in unapproved areas:

First Offense	Second Offense	Subsequent Offenses
$100.00	$200.00	$400.00

C. Improper transportation, improper vehicles or improper license by contract haulers of solid waste:

First Offense	Second Offense	Subsequent Offenses
$100.00	$200.00	$400.00

D. Violation of any other provision of this Ordinance or the N.C. Division of Health Services Waste Management rules:

First Offense	Second Offense	Subsequent Offenses
$25.00	$50.00	$100.00

Littering Container Sites (Includes failure to place all solid waste in the containers or failure to clean up solid waste spilled in transferring it from the transport vehicle to the container.)

First Offense	Second Offense	Subsequent Offenses
$50.00	$100.00	$200.00

The Citizens of Pitt County are urged to observe the signs at the container sites and the landfill. Citizens are also reminded that they as taxpayers pay the cost of the solid waste program and that these penalties are in effect to help to stabilize the operational cost of the program.

Search For Survivors, Bodies Starts After Floodwaters Fall

By PAUL SHIN
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Floodwaters receded Saturday and tens of thousands of relief workers moved in to search for bodies and survivors after record midweek rains killed 131 people and left 23 others missing.

While the massive cleanup was under way in the flood-stricken central regions of South Korea, weather officials issued an alert for up to six inches of rain in the nation's southern coast, where a typhoon struck July 15 and killed 123 people and left more than 200 missing.

The heavy downpours in the central region drove 69,000 people from their homes. Property damage was put at $125 million, and thousands of houses, buildings, roads and bridges were washed away.

A 20 percent to 30 percent drop in the region's rice harvest is likely, the Ministry of Agriculture said. But it ruled out the possibility foreign imports of rice, South Korea's staple food and one of its chief crops.

"It's beyond description," said Kim Young-kon, a farmer who stood in a rice paddy field that was flooded up to his knees. "Unless water is withdrawn in a day or two, this year's harvest could be impossible."

Center officials said about 150,000 soldiers, students and volunteer workers were taking part in the cleanup, which was expected to take two months.

The country's two state-run television networks halted regular programming and broadcast a 10-hour nationwide fund-raising campaign for the flood victims.

Hundreds of people responded to the campaign, donating relief goods and cash. But the relief goods could not be sent to some areas that remained isolated, according to the television.

Television showed scenes of weary people trying to salvage whatever was left of their possessions. In one shot, a fish wriggled in the living room of a home.

"I feel like I should die," an elderly woman said on the TV program, tearfully telling how she lost her husband and a daughter.

Churches, schools and other public buildings were jammed with about 30,000 people who fled their inundated houses, local news reports said.

The Counter-disaster Center in Seoul said one mangled body was found under smashed debris of a house early Saturday, raising the overall casualty toll to 131 people dead, 210 injured and 23 missing.

Hardest hit was southern Chungchong province, where at least 109 people were killed and 15 others were missing. One town in the region received a record 26.4 inches of rain in less than 24 hours.

A river bank at Nonsan, 125 miles south of Seoul, was turned into a makeshift village with tents as hundreds of people sought shelter on high ground during the floods, the state-run KBS television said.

Military helicopters dropped food and medical supplies to isolated people, state television reported.

Computers Would Anchor 'Smart Cities'

By MAGGIE JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — The Japanese have "smart cities" on the drawing board to help reduce congestion and solve other urban problems, and people living in them will shape day-to-day routines around computers.

They will be linked by computers in their homes to schools, banks, department stores, city hall and a number of other places and things.

On the way home from work, a businessman will learn from a computer in his car where traffic is heavy and take a different route. With a hand-held control, he will then unlock the door of his house, turn on the lights and start the water for his bath.

A housewife will use a computer to pay the bills, take a history course, flip through on-screen store catalogues, order products, buy theater tickets and get a license for the dog.

Kotoro Kitamura is working all this out at a worn wooden desk in an office cooled by an electric fan.

As director of the city bureau of the Ministry of Construction, Kitamura is one of the masterminds behind government plans to turn Tokyo and other places into high-tech cities.

In March, the ministry declared 22 Japanese cities as future "smart cities," a project the government says is unprecedented worldwide in its scope. In addition, Tokyo will begin work next year on a complex in Tokyo Bay that will be Japan's largest "smart" venture.

"We hope to be a leader in world urban design," Kitamura said in an interview. "In the future, it will be necessary to add a 'brain and nervous system' to conventional urban infrastructures."

While smart buildings have become common, the concept of linking those buildings with "intelligent" transport and communication networks is just emerging.

Definitions of smart buildings and cities are as varied as the technologies within them. Most smart buildings seek to provide tenants with the latest communication, energy supply and automated systems. Smart cities go a step further by connecting the smart buildings.

With houses and roads built haphazardly and offices often surprisingly quaint, Tokyo and other Japanese cities face problems that belie the nation's reputation for technological wizardry.

Fearful of the impact of growing populations on already overtaxed city services, and eager to prepare for future information needs, the government hopes its program will help solve urban problems.

Model plans for the cities range from road sensors that funnel traffic information to car computers to regions where residents may shop, balance bank accounts or pay utility bills from their home computers.

Tokyo's own program — separate from the 22-city project — calls for a $13.6 billion complex called Teleport.

The Teleport project on 300 acres of reclaimed land will provide 37 million square feet of office and housing space for a target population of 10,000, according to Tokyo metropolitan officials.

An artist's rendition of the project shows wide streets and plentiful parks between clusters of tall buildings topped by dish-shaped satellite antennas.

Teleport tenants will be able to tap into satellite data ranging from London stock market reports to disaster surveillance and security information at any hour, and communicate through Teleport computers rather than conventional facsimile machines or telephones, said officials.

Japan began building smart buildings in the early 1980s, shortly after they first appeared in the United States, said Shigeru Ito, professor of urban planning at the University of Tokyo.

In the United States, smart buildings arose from a need to attract tenants at a time of high vacancy rates and from a range of new services that became available, said Ito, who is also special adviser to the construction ministry's central city planning council.

In cramped Japan, however, developers haven't had to worry about filling office space — a chronic shortage persists.

Although some critics maintain that smart buildings are a gimmick to inflate rents and prices, they have multiplied into an estimated $206-billion market in Japan.

The rebuilding of Japan's cities, particularly Tokyo, after World War II, proceeded with survival more than planning in mind, said Kitamura. As a result, Tokyo and other cities are bland jumbles of narrow winding roads, exposed telephone lines and buildings of various sizes.

He said ambulances and fire engines in Tokyo take 10 minutes on average to reach their destinations — more than twice the optimum time. The city has far less park space than the capitals of other advanced nations.

Even many of Japan's offices remain out-of-date, Kitamura said. Papers pile up on desks and floors, lighting is poor and other problems abound.

He and others said smart cities won't solve all Japan's urban ills, but the projects will provide needed oases of improvement and needed urban homes and and offices.

The government predicts that in the year 2000, 70 percent of Japan's projected 130 million people will live in cities and Japan will need 25 million square feet of additional office space.

By that time, the ministry expects 400 smart buildings to rise in 22 smart cities, which range from the booming financial center of Osaka to smaller, more rural towns.

The 232,000 residents of Takasaki, 70 miles north of Tokyo, plan to iron out the congestion of their downtown with "smart" improvements, said Minoru Tomita of the urban policy division.

Downtown Takasaki is near an expressway, in a prefecture (state) that has three cars for each family, the most of any nationwide. It will receive a computerized traffic system that even will alert drivers to empty parking lots, and a bus system that tells people when the bus will arrive.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Lack Of Shelter Community Gap

The conversion of the old Agnes Fullilove School into a shelter for the homeless is a project that moves Greenville toward more complete human services.

The lack of such a facility is a large gap in the community. Greenville's population of street people is growing as the city grows. There is currently no plan in place to accommodate the homeless, the destitute and the disadvantaged. A shelter would fill this need.

There are sound practical and economic reasons for a shelter. Estimates of need — 10 to 25 homeless housed per night — justify the undertaking of such a project. In addition, public emergency personnel spend tax paid time tending to homeless-related problems.

Fires are sometimes set in abandoned structures by derelicts seeking shelter and warmth, and these blazes must be fought by city firefighters. Police officers must spend manpower hours dealing with homeless drunks. If a transient needs medical attention, a public ambulance transports him to receive care, usually without being reimbursed for the service.

There are also human considerations. Most citizens see the homeless from behind the wheel of a car, from windows at work, or while shopping — and consequently view them through eyes clouded by life's comforts. It is easy to see these disadvantaged as creatures, not human beings. But that view is not accurate. The homeless are people. They have human names and faces, and human needs — food, shelter and warmth.

The plan for a shelter proposed by the Community Life Center is a feasible one because it puts the responsibility for a shelter in the hands of a non-profit organization supported by community funds, not tax dollars. Therefore, the project would not drain public coffers. This approach to the issue is the best one and should be adhered to as planning progresses.

The city was correct to appropriate Community Development Block Grant funds for the purchase of the proposed shelter property. Since the west Greenville neighborhood housing the shelter site likely will be looked at for future rehabilitation, it is sensible to invest available dollars in that area now. In addition, the stipulations that come with the CDBG funds are stiff enough to assure their use for a shelter.

The proposed shelter would be valuable in both economic and human respects. The plan for operation is a sound one that won't affect public dollars. It is a project worthy of broad community support.

Good Addition

The city's new Town Common amphitheater, which was under construction during the winter months, has been in use for several weeks as the new home of the Sunday In The Park entertainment series.

Thus many people have already enjoyed Sunday afternoon music in the pleasant surroundings of the Town Common with an adequate stage and shell along the water front.

Today the Sunday In The Park entertainment will be preceded by an amphitheater dedication ceremony. The ahphitheater will be named in memory of the late mayor S. Eugene West.

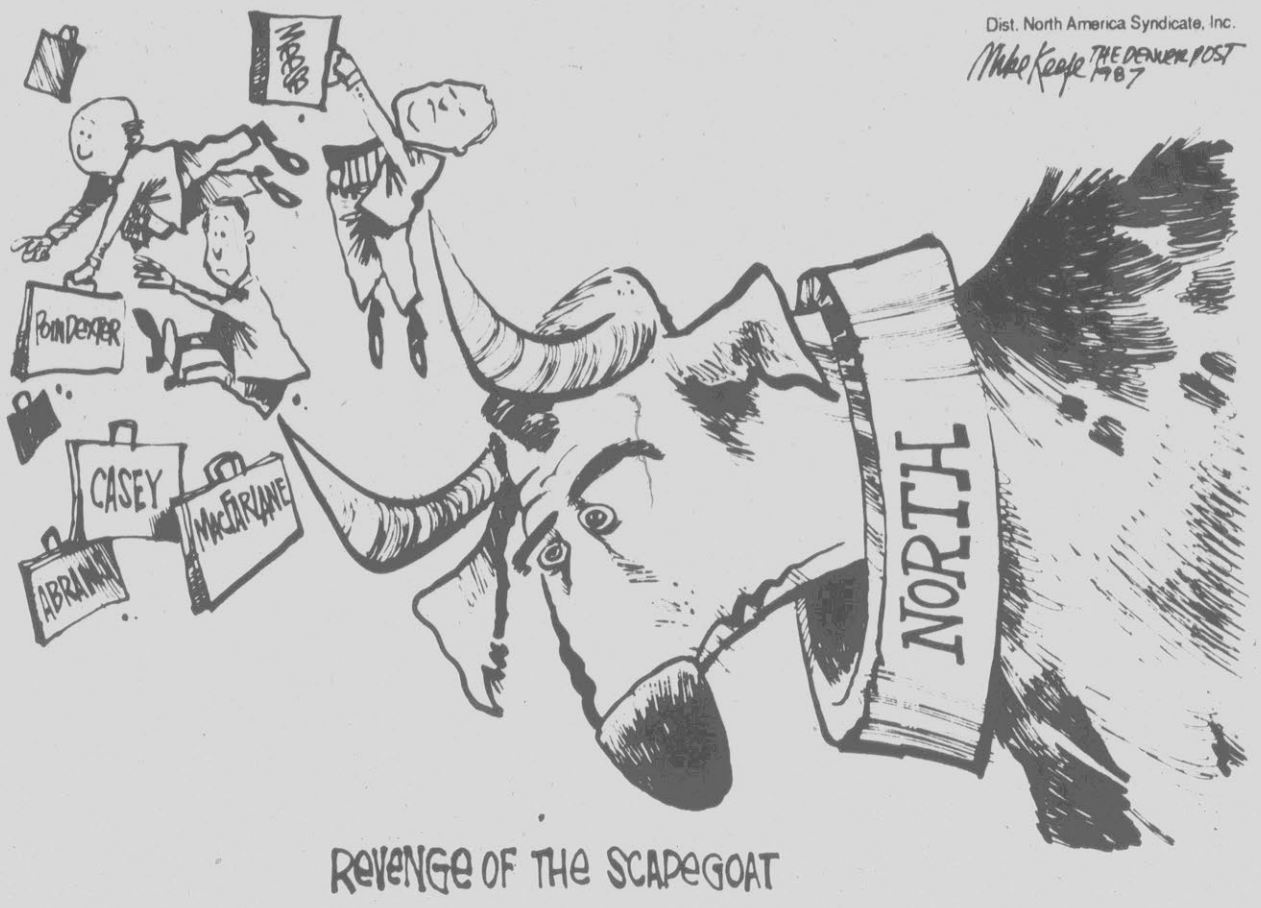
The name is fitting, for without the guidance of the late Mr. West it is possible that the amphitheater might not exist. In fact the Town Common might not be there for us to enjoy today. If the area existed now as it once was it would be a shame for Greenville. Once the slope leading to the river bank was the location of shanties. Persons who lived there co-existed with vermin and there was no view of the river as there is today.

Through the then-new urban renewal program the city cleared the area. Residents were offered standard shelter in low rent housing which was constructed simultanously.

Under the guidance of Mayor West, the park area was developed. It was called the Town Common because in the original Greenville some land along the river front was designated as public land.

Even though property owners were compensated for their property the redevelopment did not come about easily. West never shirked from the fight and this and other projects were eventually accomplished.

Now the Town Common is a valued city recreational area, and one that should forever be maintained as an open land park. Provision of the amphitheater is one more facility which will increase the recreational use of the park. It is a welcome addition.



Next Time, Call A Repairman

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

Lives there an American male who is not driven to be a handyman?

Certainly this columnist is and each time I get into a project I swear that next time I will call a repairman.

Last week it was the dishwasher. The thing usually churns away with little problem. This time, however, it suddenly cut itself off. Opening it, I found the water was not draining from the dishwasher properly. Obviously some safety device turned it off.

I found a book which tells all you need to know about repairing dishwashers and gathered the needed tools. There are, of course, several things that can go wrong and cause a dishwasher to cease draining.

If you ever repair equipment you must know everything mechanical these days has a solenoid. The solenoids quit working and that function stops which means the equipment doesn't do what it is supposed to.

Sure enough, dishwashers have a solenoid which opens and closes the drain at the proper time.

The solenoid, pumps and motor are all located underneath the dishwasher which means removing a front panel and slithering up to the opening on your stomach to check it. It wasn't so easy but an inspection determined that the solenoid worked.

Next there is a float which automatically cuts the machine off if the water gets too high. It, too, can malfunction and cause it to stop. The float was OK.

Next, the book said, inspect the drain hose for kinks. No kinks as far as I could see but the hose disappeared behind the machine.

Finally the hose might be clogged at the end. Where's the end? I finally found it running into the garbage disposal. Disconnecting it spelled success. The hose was clogged up, but relatively easy to clean out.

The job was not complete, however. Garbage disposals are under the sink and difficult to get to. Only by curling up in the cabinet can you reach it. This I did. After reconnecting you try out the dishwasher. Water poured out the door and out of the connection to the disposal.

Releveling the machine corrected one problem. Crawling under the sink and more firmly connecting the drain hose corrected the other. Then ... the dishwasher worked!

Nevertheless, next time I will call a repairman.

North And Smith: A Tale Of Two Colonels

Christopher Stone

Oliver L. North is not the first colonel to find himself jammed between presidential policy and the law. In fact, television and shredders aside, the North-Contra affair has an astonishing and disquieting precedent.

The year was 1806. Spain was the power whose influence in the Western Hemisphere was agitating President Jefferson. Ollie's forerunner was one Col. William S. Smith, whose daring and manner during the Revolutionary War had won him the admiration of George Washington and the hand of John Adams' daughter Abigail, thereby making him the son-in-law of the second president. Col. Smith was described by his wife as "a man of independent spirit (and) high and strict sentiments of honor" — to which a less partial observer added, "It must be admitted that Col. Smith was the sort of man that mothers are especially susceptible to."

Smith's life claimed public attention when the Spaniards intercepted a military expedition near Caracas led by Francisco de Miranda, a revolutionary who was aiming to liberate Venezuela from Spanish rule. Almost all of his companions were captured. Events revealed that Smith, impressed with Miranda's own dash, had been backing the covert operation from the United States. His activities included raising private funds, outfitting a merchantman with weapons and enlisting recruits — including his eldest son, a Columbia College dropout who had joined the expedition as a lieutenant and who was now, to grandfather John Adams' distaste, being put on display like a Eugene Hasenfus (captured by the Sandinistas when an American-operated supply plane for the Contras was shot down on Oct. 5, 1986).

Smith was indicted in New York for violating the Neutrality Act of 1794. The provision in question stated, in essentially similar language to that which Ollie North may have to answer to, that it was unlawful for anyone to "set on foot directly or indirectly within the United States any military expedition or enterprise to be carried on against the territory of a foreign ... state with whom the United States are at peace."

Smith's defense was a bombshell. Everything, he said, had been done "with the knowledge, consent and approbation" of President Jefferson and Secretary of State James Madison.

Before a jury could be impaneled, Smith launched a counterattack in Congress, requesting special relief to derail the criminal charges, of which, "if guilty," he had been led into "by officers of the Executive Government." We will never know his congressional pitch exactly.

The president, who had been privately disavowing any involvement in the affair, refused to issue a public denial. Left to battle it out in court, Smith volleyed off subpoenas to Madison and other government officers (not including Jefferson) who would, he said, substantiate his claim that he was only following orders. When Madison and the others refused to appear, the court had to decide whether to compel Madison's testimony or to drop the prosecution. The answer to that depended on whether executive approval was material to Smith's alleged crimes, either as justification or as mitigation.

What makes the trial of that issue particularly provocative today is that it was presided over by William Paterson, an associate justice of the Supreme Court then "sitting circuit." Paterson had been one of the key delegates to the Constitutional Convention. Modern lawyers can allude rather freely, to their own advantage, to "the framers' intent." But keep in mind that the lawyers who had to argue before Paterson were offering their interpretations to someone who knew, if anyone could know: Paterson was one for whom "original intent" was more than a rhetorical flourish.

The prosecutor, to start, maintained that "the most superficial attention to our Constitution and form of government will be sufficient to convince any one that this sort of defense is wholly inadmissible." The president's power was "to take care that the laws be faithfully executed." The laws forbade military adventures against those with whom we were not at war. We were not at war with Spain. The state of peace could be changed only by Congress. No presidential powers, the prosecutor argued, not even the war powers, gave the chief executive authority to dispense with the laws.

The defense began by characterizing Smith as "a man more sinned against than sinning." It was true that the Constitution empowered Congress alone to declare war against Spain.

Why Don't They Want To Come Home?

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — An open letter to House Speaker Liston Ramsey:

Mr. Speaker, if you looked out towards the press gallery from your podium today, you might have noticed that I didn't make it in for floor debate. I'm sorry, but I had to meet with my editors at some fancy hotel so they can give me their semi-annual lectures on syntax and grammar.

But even after that meeting is over, I won't be coming back for any more of the 1987 session. I'm on strike against the legislature. It's been 118 days, today, and to paraphrase the anchorman in that movie, "I'm burned out as hell and I can't take any more."

You and Bob Jordan promised us we'd have a shorter session this year, maybe closing shop by Independence Day. But it appears we'll be lucky to have you out of Raleigh by Aug. 1, and there's talk about Aug. 7 adjournment.

Several theories are used to explain the length of this session. One is that the intermediate deadlines which Jordan pushed backfired by creating a mid-session frenzy from which no one recovered. Then there's the theory that your buddy Billy Watkins doesn't want to adjourn early and give Jordan a good issue in their upcoming gubernatorial primary campaign.

It's hard to believe, but there's even one theory that the legislature is just hanging around Raleigh to use up all the free U.S. Olympic Festival tickets they got in exchange for that $800,000 appropriation last year.

I want you to know that I don't believe for one minute that ultra cynical theory that the boys don't want to go home because they'd have to leave their Raleigh girlfriends behind. We both know legislators don't do that, don't we?

Regardless of the theory, it's time to send the campers packing. As your buddy Jim Martin said just last week, and I paraphrase, "I'm getting concerned about them. They need to get on with their personal lives."

Legislators are getting tired and doing strange things. Why just the other day, Joe Hackney, D-Left, and Walt Windley, R-Right, actually voted together on a bill. Bob Shaw's bill, a Republican bill, went through both houses without a single amendment, and with his name still on it. Ken Royall shoved a reporter and Ivan Mothershead is rumored to have shown up for work three days in a row.

Every day you stay in town, it costs the taxpayers $43,000. That's not a great deal of money in the grand scheme of things, but look at it this way. Every day you cut, you save the equivalent of one House member's pork barrel for next year. Now that ought to be incentive enough.

By hanging around, you're messing up everybody's summer. We can all forget about going on that junket to the National Conference of State Legislators next week. The Southern Legislative Conference is only two weeks after that. Don't mess that one up, too; the boss is paying.

And how about vacations. I've got that free airplane ticket they gave me when I got bounced last year. I gotta use it. Some of the other guys in the press corps have cottages rented for next week. One lobbyist has already postponed his fishing trip to Montana and that means he'll miss the first four games of the fall softball season.

Then there's your favorite reporter, Anne Jackson Bullard, who is getting more preganant by the day. Her editors won't let her have that baby until you guys go home. For the sake of tht unborn child, Mr. Speaker, please send them home.

The '60s Are Back: Echoes From An Empty, Meaningless Decade

Jonathan Yardley

It would be difficult to think of a more depressing piece of news, but there you have it: The Sixties are back. Not merely are we observing the 20th anniversary of the "Summer of Love" in Haight-Ashbury and of the debut of "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band," but we are undergoing a revival of interest in the decade's artifacts and, if this is the word for it, culture. Sixteen-year-olds are wearing tie-dyed T-shirts, sporting the peace symbol and flocking to concerts by the Grateful Dead; the Sixties, suddenly and inexplicably, are In.

The psychiatrists and psychologists, to whom we journalists invariably turn when in search of the quick and facile explanation, are having a field day telling us what all of this means. Most of those consulted have expressed sentiments similar to those of the one who favored The New York Times with the comment that there is renewed interest in the Sixties because "it was a time of ideological commitment and a sense of purpose, all of which are very important to adolescents."

And all of which is baloney. The Sixties had almost nothing to do with genuine ideological commitment or sense of purpose, and neither does the revival. The Sixties were adolescent rebellion masquerading as a political movement, while the current popularity of the decade's symbols and totems seems to be almost entirely a matter of commercial exploitation. Like most exercises in nostalgia, the Sixties revival is an effort to rewrite the past, to see it through the tinted glass of sentimentality and longing.

The plain truth is that the Sixties were a period of unfettered self-indulgence on the part of the privileged children of the American middle class, and that the decade's legacy is, with the rarest of exceptions, lamentable. During the Sixties — which actually began around 1965 and ended about a decade later — little of lasting value was accomplished either politically or culturally; for all their noisy rhetoric and noisy music, the Sixties contributed nothing to the national heritage, at least nothing anyone in his right mind would care to treasure.

It needs to be emphasized that because "the Sixties" did not take place during the precise confines of the decade from which the period's name has been taken, it is easy to become confused about what did and did not happen then. Apologists for the time like to claim, for example, that the civil rights movement was part of the Sixties, when in fact it had begun long before then; the great legislation that the movement produced, the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965, had nothing to do with Tom Hayden and Mario Savio, everything to do with Martin Luther King Jr. and John Lewis, neither of whom was in any sense a "Sixties" figure.

When we speak of "the Sixties" what we really mean is the tidal wave of immoderation that swept through the colleges and universities, a wave upon which were carried the white and the middle class. Certainly it was powered by what the psychologists would call the "needs" of adolescents and post-adolescents, but those are utterly unrelated to "ideological commitment" or "sense of purpose." Boiled to their essence, those "needs" are to break away from parental supervision and discipline, and to experience the freedoms of the adult world unfettered by external constraints.

What happened during the Sixties was simply that this explosion of adolescent "need" coincided with several phenomena that conspired to produce the particular and peculiar culture of the period. Among these were the determination of a generation that had suffered the deprivations of depression and global war to provide its children with comforts and privileges it had been denied; the attainment of college age by the first baby boomers, the largest "youth culture" in history; the unprecedented expansion of American higher education and the commitment to make it available to all; the gradual relaxation of sexual mores and the easy availability of drugs; the creation, first by southern blacks, then by working-class southerners and British youths, of a new form of popular music; and the decision by Lyndon Johnson to commit American troops to Vietnam.

Put all of this into the kettle, stir it a few times, and — presto! — you have "the Sixties." We seem to fancy it now as we fancied it then, as a period of "idealism" and "commitment," but the unpleasant truth is that it was a period of the most intense self-indulgence. Certainly the Vietnam war was a colossal mistake by the American government, but the movement that rose up against it on the campuses had far less to do with principled or reasoned resistance than with the avoidance of military service. Yes, the war was stupid and quite possibly morally wrong; but just because it was bad is no reason to call the movement against it good.

World's Economic Train Slows

Lester Thurlow

The central economic problem now facing the world is not the next recession but a prolonged slowing of the world's economic train. That slowing means that the way into the next recession, when it comes, will lead over unfamiliar territory, so unfamiliar that we may not realize where we're headed. And the climb back to prosperity may be unusually difficult.

For a decade and a half now, the world's economic growth has been slowing down. The slower growth of the 1970s was supposed to have been produced by the rise in world oil prices and the need to fight inflation. But it has been followed by even slower growth in the 1980s despite falling oil prices and no inflation. Remember the boom that was so confidently predicted when oil prices plunged in January of 1986? It did not happen. Instead the world's economic growth performance became even worse.

All of this has been little noticed inside the United States because the slowdown has been less here than elsewhere, unemployment has continued to fall and the country has been living high on borrowed money. But with the performance of the U.S. economy now inexorably linked with that of the rest of the world, a stagnant world economy eventually drags the United States down with it.

In the distant past (1945-1961), recessions arrived by accident. Some element of aggregate demand (defense spending in 1954, autos in 1957) would fall and the government would rush to the rescue with Keynesian economics — more money, lower interest rates, tax reductions or increased government spending. In the more recent past (1962-1983), recessions became instruments of macro-economic policy making, deliberately started by government in an effort to stop inflation. The recession now on the horizon, however, starts neither by accident nor by deliberate government policy. It is a recession that starts abroad because of the imbalances in world trade and then spreads back to the United States.

America's trade deficit represents a $170 billion addition to foreign demand. As a result there are at least four million foreign workers dependent upon the American market for their livelihoods. When America cures its trade deficit, these four million workers will lose their jobs. Take $170 billion worth of demand and four million jobs out of the economies of the rest of the world and the rest of the world is instantly plunged in a recession.

The falling dollar has now begun the process of curing the U.S. trade deficit. The improvements are as yet small; the dollar has much farther to fall. But the only uncertainty is how far the dollar will have to fall — and how long it will take — before the U.S. trade position swings from its current deficit to a surplus big enough to earn the funds necessary to pay interest on America's foreign indebtedness. (Right now the United States would have to be running a trade surplus of about $28 billion to meet its international interest obligations.)

Foreign exports into the American market are not yet falling rapidly, but both Germany and Japan already seem perched on the edge of recession. In both countries the confident economic forecasts made at the beginning of the year are now being revised downward. For the past 42 years both countries have relied upon U.S. growth and U.S. countercyclical policies to rescue themselves from recession. Neither country has been able to grow unless exports were rising. Yet if the U.S. trade deficit is to shrink, both countries must face a sustained period of declining exports.

This means that to fight their recessions, Germany and Japan will have to restructure their economies to be internally rather than externally led. Japan, for example, will have to make a major shift away from export industries, such as consumer electronics, toward domestic industries, such as housing and public infrastructure investments. Such structural shifts require time and generate internal political opposition. Major export industries don't want to become smaller and less important. As a result the incipient recessions that now loom in Japan and Germany are apt to be lengthy. The economic processes necessary to turn them around quickly just aren't in place.

These foreign events generate a variety of economic pressures inside the Untied States. If the rest of the world slips into a recession, the United States must cure its balance of payments by importing less rather than by exporting more. This means that the dollar must fall to the point where imports are so expensive that Americans cannot afford to buy $170 billion of foreign goods that they now buy. But rising import prices means a rising rate of inflation. The trick will be to keep the necessary import inflation from spreading to domestic wages and prices.

Public Forum

To the editor:

The cast of the Select Committee hearings ran from real statesmen to buffoons to professional liars, self-serving role-playing heroes, others working steadfastly to maintain the Constitution.

A few impressions: Lt. Col. North and Counsel Sullivan. A Charley McCarthy Act, with Sullivan putting into North's mouth the proper response. North, sincere? Yes, but sincerity combined with misguided zeal is no virtue. North shields himself with medals. Shades of "Checkers" in his defense of unbridled use of government-issued checks. A bright man who belies his brightness with, "I don't know. I don't recall ..." but he shredded the proof as Meese's men looked on.

Admiral Poindexter: Whose conduct was not so admirable and whose testimony lacks credibility.

Rep. Stokes: "I love America just as you do..." without his medals, he lowered the boom on North.

Rep. Hyde: Effusively proclaiming — in defense of Reagan. How little he knew of laws he voted on. I believe him, but thank God, that Congress as a whole does not...

Orrin Hatch: The horrible thought occurs that he possibly still is a prospective nominee for the Supreme Court.

Rep. DeWine, who saw the hearings as unfair, with an afterthought that he meant no discredit to Chm. Inouye or Warren Rudman. He should sit at their feet and listen a term or two (if re-elected). Then maybe carry their briefcases.

Then there were the eloquent statements of Cohen, Hamilton, Sarbanes, Ridono, Nunn and others who reinforce one's faith that, though they were no Jeffersons, they knew what the Constitution and the presidency are all about.

They are left to deal with an Administration that is joyful that no "smoking gun" has been uncovered. They also have a public that wants a hero, however besmirched. It's a tough assignment. I believe that, with time and exposure, Congress can clear up this mess. Good luck and God bless them.

To the editor:

The Iran-Contra hearings remind me of George Orwell's book, "1984." In the role of Big Brother is Ollie North, who wins an Academy Award for his ability to convince the American people that he and one or two others in all the U.S. know what is best for us without telling us. "Trust us. We love you. We will always protect you," says Ollie, "But don't ask us how. If we tell you the Bogeyman will get you." Thank you, Ollie. I can become a child again and not have to worry about the world any more. Daddy will protect me.

Okay. I admit it. I feel a few twangs at turning my freedom over to Ollie and company. What they are asking me to do does sound like what the Communist government asks its people to do. "We know what is best for you and we must do it in secret; otherwise, the Capitalists will get you." But Ollie and Ronnie look so much more manly than Gorbachev when they say it. And I'm not easily taken in. I'm an American!

Another twang — Are Ollie and company evidence of the Right Wing's oft-verbalized claim that the Russians will conquest us from within without firing a shot? That we will welcome totalitarianism without being aware we are doing so? Naw, couldn't be. Ollie uses lots of words like "freedom" and "democracy." He couldn't be totalitarian at heart.

A final twang. I know there's evidence that shows the Contras to be rapists and thugs who burn day care centers and have yet to win any support among the Nicaraguan people, despite millions of U.S. dollars in aid. But Ollie calls the Contras freedom-fighters. And besides if we support him, pretty soon we won't hear any more about Contras being unpopular in Nicaragua. It would be best for us to know that.

Yes, I believe Ollie. He must be good. Why else would he be so handsome, have so many medals, have a little girl he buys leotards for, and speak so convincingly about freedom. Yes, I believe! War is peace, freedom is slavery and Ollie North is a hero!

Even Without Arms, Soviets' Influence In Philippines Grows

Richard Kessler

Clearly, the Soviets are up to something in the Philippines. The question is what.

"I have no doubt in my mind," Adm. James A. Lyons, Jr., U.S. Pacific Fleet commander, declared in April, "that the Soviet Union is aiding the (Philippine) rebels."

Many in the American and Philippines intelligence community disagree with Lyons. But analysts have been so preoccupied with finding concrete evidence of Soviet arms — which has not yet emerged — that they have missed what has been happening: The rebel forces have grown strong, reports of Soviet military aid have increased and leadership of the Philippines Communist Party (CPP) has changed its once wary attitude toward accepting foreign support.

Moreover, the Soviets have been courting the Aquino government with offers of investment and expanded commercial ties.

Since January of this year, numerous reports have been filed from Manila alleging sightings of Soviet submarines and of Soviet planes dropping supplies to the rebel New People's Army (NPA).

KGB agents were even said to be infiltrating Mindanao, posing first as gold-diggers, before joining the rebels. In May two Soviet diplomats arriving from Singapore were caugnt by Manila airport security trying to leave through a "backdoor tarmac gate" without clearing immigration.

The Soviets have protested, and the NPA general staff agrees, that they are not providing "funds, arms, and guerrilla warfare expertise" to the NPA. Even the government doesn't suspect the Soviets are spies, according to President Corazon Aquino, who is considering strengthening diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union.

The Soviet ambassador assures Aquino that "we will never interfere with the internal affairs of the Philippines. ... " Instead, the Soviets want to invest in the islands, offering to provide a $350 million coal-fired electrical generating plant in a Finnish joint venture in Isabela province.

They also offered to use moribund Philippine ship-repair facilities, conveniently located next to the American naval base at Subic Bay. Because of job cutbacks in the Middle East, the Philippines even want to export workers to Siberia.

As part of an effort to improve their image, the Soviets replaced their ambassador, the only diplomat to congratulate Ferdinand Marcos for winning the 1986 presidential election.

Construction has also begun on a new Manila office building and home for the Soviet trade representative in fashionable Forbes Park, also home of the American ambassador and not far from the Philippine Army's general headquarters at Fort Bonifacio.

Now the Soviets want to open consulates in the southern cities of Cebu and Davao, where the United States also maintains a diplomatic presence.

The Soviets have long been interested in gaining a foothold in the Philippines. Gorbachev's famous July 1986 Vladivostok speech, when he declared Soviet intent to become a Pacific power and to work for regional demilitarization, had its precursor in Brezhnev's June 1969 Soviet-Asian collective-security proposal.

Now the Soviets have a base in Vietnam and are eyeing the South Pacific. Their persistence is impressive.

The Soviets began translating Philippine books and training linguists in the dominant dialect, Tagalog, in the early 1960s, even though diplomatic relations were not established with the Philippines until 1976.

In fact, Philippine travel to communist countries was banned until Marcos lifted restrictions in April 1966, and Filipino diplomats were forbidden to socialize with their communist counterparts until March 1972.

The Soviets, despite such obstacles, pursued the courtship, encouraging indirect trade with the Philippines through third countries in the 1960s and enrolling Filipino students, including the daughter of Marcos's intelligence chief, in Moscow University.

Reagan Praises Mormons In Videotaped Message

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — President Reagan on Friday praised the Mormon Church's contributions to American life in greetings to Mormon leaders celebrating the 150th anniversary of the church's presence in Britain.

"With their hard work and deep love of God and freedom, they made the desert blossom as the rose, and they helped build the American West," Reagan said in a videotaped message to 350 leaders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and their guests attending an anniversary dinner at the Savoy Hotel.

"A Mormon contribution to American life is beyond measuring, and the contribution of the British Isles and Ireland to the Mormon Church is also immense," Reagan said.

In his message, Reagan recalled how half of the 80,000 Mormon pioneers who pushed handcarts or drove ox-driven wagons to Utah from 1847 to 1869 came from Britain or Ireland.

The dinner audience included church president and former U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson; former Michigan Gov. George W. Romney; former British Prime Minister Edward Heath; U.S. astronaut Don L. Lind; Canadian newspaper publisher Lord Thomson; Sharlene Wells Hawkes, who was Miss America 1985; and British actress Jane Seymour.

The Mormon Church was founded by Joseph Smith in New York state 157 years ago. Because of religious persecution, it began relocating to Utah 17 years later.

The oldest continuously functioning Mormon congregation in the world is in Preston, a Lancashire textile and engineering town, 209 miles northwest of London.

The first nine British members of the Mormon Church were baptized in the Ribble River at Preston on July 30, 1837, 11 days after Smith's first overseas missionaries arrived.

Eventually, the number of British converts who emigrated to the United States reached 100,000.

Benson said there are more than 32,000 Mormon missionaries from about 50 countries serving around the world, including 1,400 in Britain. Like the church's ministry, the missionaries — generally 19 to 23 years of age — are unpaid and supported mainly by their families.

His voice often breaking with emotion, Benson thanked Britain for "giving to the free world foundations for individual rights and liberties ... and for providing us with the King James translation of the Bible, which we accept as our authorized version."

Gordon B. Hinckley, second in line for the church presidency, said the Mormon Church has 6½ million members worldwide and 140,000 in Britain. The British Mormon population is growing at 5½ percent annually, "a very remarkable thing in these British Isles when religion generally appears to be languishing across the world," he said.

Refugees Make Trip

HONG KONG (AP) — One hundred and twenty Vietnamese refugees made it safely to Hong Kong on Saturday aboard three motorboats, a government spokesman reported.

The spokesman, who could not not be further indentified in accordance with official practice, said one of the boats, carrying 18 refugees, sailed here directly from Vietnam.

The other two boats arrived from China, where the refugees stayed after fleeing Vietnam several years ago, the spokesman said.

No other details on the refugees were available, the spokesman said.

Government figures show that more that more than 1,500 Vietnamese have arrived in this British colony this year.

At present there are over 8,000 Vietnamese refugees in the colony awaiting resettlement.

South Team, McNeill Set Record

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — A team led by Dennis Mitchell and East Carolina sprinter Lee Vernon McNeill ran the fastest time in the world this year in the men's 400-meter relay Saturday night in the U.S. Olympic Festival.

The South foursome of James Butler, of Tallahassee, Fla., McNeill, Mitchell of Sicklerville, N.J., and Harvey McSwain of Shelby, N.C., was timed in 38.37 seconds, .01 seconds under the previous 1987 world best by a team from the Soviet Union.

The clocking also broke the track record of 38.56 at Duke's Wallace Wade Stadium, set by the U.S. national team in 1982.

Mitchell was the key to the race. He got the baton in third place on the third leg, but quickly raced into first, before giving the stick to McSwain.

McSwain wasn't challenged on the final leg.

"Everyone was talking about the West team," said Mitchell. "They wouldn't give us a chance.

"But they didn't realize that all of us have run 10.1 in open 100 meters. All we had to do is get the baton around the track, which we did."

It was a trio of North Carolinians that brought home the gold for the South team.

With New Bern-born Mitchell taking over on the third leg, he held control until passing the baton to Shelby's McSwain. Together, the quartet turned in a stadium record time of 38.37 seconds and the best time in the world this year, vanquishing the reputation of the West team in the process.

The West team had three former Olympians, Thomas Jefferson, Calvin Smith and Harvey Glance.

Butler of Tallahassee, Fla., trailed Lee McRae of the East team, but the second exchange reversed the order and McNeill put the South in control. For Mitchell and McSwain, it was mop up.

It was, finally, time to show off the South and its athletes.

"The sprinters really don't get the recognition. They look out in Texas and California," Mitchell said. "We can run just as fast as those guys can."

McSwain said Saturday night's winner "gets bragging rights until next year."

"Our team is the type team where we don't say much," McSwain said. "We just let the actions speak for us. It feels so good when you beat someone who's been talking all this time. It just makes it that much better."

Asked if he realized the time was the best in the world in 1987, Butler was quick to answer, "Yes we do!"

Meanwhile, national 100-meter champion Diane Williams keyed the team that will represent the United States in next month's World Track and Field Championships. Her West squad ran the fastest clocking by an American squad this year in the women's 400-meter relay.

The team of Alice Brown of Los Angeles, Williams of Venice, Calif., Florence Griffith of Los Angeles and Pam Marshall of Glenwood, Calif., was timed in 42.22 seconds.

Earlier, Mike Barnett, saying that he was "stronger than ever," won the men's javelin gold medal.

Barnett, of Glendora, Calif., hurled the javelin 260 feet, 1 inch, his second-best throw of the year and less than five feet off the meet record of 264-8 by Tom Petranoff in 1986, the first year the new javelin was used.

At the start of the competition, the field temperature was 111 degrees. About an hour after the competition began, the air temperature was 100 degrees.

In the gymnastics competition, UCLA gymnast David St. Pierre won four medals Saturday, including two golds, in the men's individual events at the U.S. Olympic Festival.

St. Pierre, 20, won gold medals in floor exercise and horizontal bar, a silver in parallel bars and a bronze in pommel horse.

"It was a personal best for me," St. Pierre said. "I hit 12 out of 12 routines. Previously, my best was 10 of 12.

Men's floor favorite Robert Sundstrom lost points as he slid on the carpet and got a 9.15. All-around gold medalist Neil Palmer earned a 9.10, short of the 9.50 he scored on Thursday.

Post 39 Wins, 9-8

RALEIGH — Pitt County pushed across three runs in the top of the ninth to take a 9-8 win over Raleigh Saturday in opening round play from the Area I American Legion playoffs.

Andy Reich was working on a one-hitter through five innings for Raleigh before Pitt scored four runs in the seventh to tie the game at 6-6.

In the ninth, Hunter Clark opened with a single. He went to second on a sacrifice by Shane Adams. Jason Galloway walked. Clark then scored on Eric Jarman's fielder's choice. An error allowed the final two runs to score.

Jarman had three hits and four RBI to lead Pitt. The two teams meet again tonight in the second game of their best of seven series.

Okamoto Leads After Bad Start

EDISON TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Ayako Okamoto of Japan overcame a miserable start, rolled in three birdies on the back nine and grabbed a one-shot lead Saturday over Laura Davies of England after three rounds of the 42nd U.S. Women's Open.

Okamoto and Davies, the reigning British Open champion and the leader heading into the third round, went to the 18th green at the Plainfield Country Club tied for the lead. Both reached the green of the par-4, 350-yard hole in two shots.

Okamoto missed a 12-foot birdie putt to remain at 3-under-par 213, but Davies three-putted from 50 feet for bogey, missing a 6-footer for par.

The par for Okamoto capped a round of 2-under-par 70, and the Japanese golf star had a lot to smile about. She started the day at 1-under-par, but quickly went to 2-over with a bogey, double bogey, birdie, bogey start on her first four holes.

However, she got back to even par by making birdie at the fifth and seventh holes, and then started knocking it close to the pin on the back nine. She sank a 5-foot birdie at No. 14, an 8-foot birdie at No. 15 and a 6-inch at No. 17. She also missed a 4-foot birdie putt on No. 13 and a 10-foot birdie attempt on No. 16.

Davies, who started the day one shot ahead of Okamoto and played in the same group with her, also birdied the 15th and 17th holes. Her round of par-72 included two birdies and two bogeys.

Martha Nause, a non-winner in nine years as a professional, was the only other player in the field of 68 under par. She was two shots behind Okamoto after round of 2-under-par 70 that included five birdies and three bogeys.

Deedee Roberts, another non-winner as a professional, was three shots back along with former Open champion JoAnne Carner at par 216. Roberts matched the women's course record with a 69, while Carner shot a 72.

Jody Rosenthal, Sally Quinlan and Rosie Jones were four strokes off the pace. Rosenthal had a 74, while Quinlan and Jones had 71s.

Betsy King, 46-year-old Sandra Palmer and Tammie Green were five strokes off th pace. King, the No. 2 money winner on the LPGA tour this year, had a 70, while Palmer, the 1975 Open winner, had a 75 and Green a 72.

Amy Alcott, who also started the round a shot behind Davies, played the final five holes in 4-over-par and finished with a 76 for a 219 total along with Debbie Massey, who had a 74.

Wrenn Builds Up Lead At Buick

GRAND BLANC, Mich. (AP) — Robert Wrenn, if he could, would put his brain on automatic pilot for Sunday's final round of the $600,000 Buick Open.

Wrenn, who started with the lowest 36-hole total on the PGA Tour this season, shot a 5-under-par 67 Saturday for a commanding six-stroke lead after three rounds.

That put Wrenn at a whopping 21-under-par 195 — the lowest 54-hole score on Tour this year — and far ahead of 1985 champion Ken Green who shot 69 Saturday and was 15-under 201 at the 7,014-yard, par-72 Warwick Hills Golf and Country Club.

"I try not to use my mind," said Wrenn, 28, whose only win as a pro was the Indonesia Open in 1983. "I try to go out and play golf and not think about it. The best thing I could do is shut my brain down.

"Then I won't go out there and think dumb."

Green, who started the day four strokes behind, called his chances of catching Wrenn were remote.

"His putter is on the move and I don't expect him to do any kind of folding," said Green, who played in a threesome with Wrenn and Don Pooley. "It's kind of weird to be 15-under and six back."

Trevor Dodds shot a 9-under 63 Saturday, equaling the Buick Open record, to get to 14-under 202. He was tied with Jay Haas.

"I tried to avoid looking at the (leader) boards because when I made the turn (at 7-under 29) I was shocked to see I was in second place," Dodds said.

Jody Mudd and Pooley were at 13-under 203.

If Wrenn continues during Sunday's final round, he will erase all tournament records and perhaps some Tour records as well.

Green set the Buick Open record when he won with a 20-under 268 in 1985.

The 72-hole record for a Tour event is 27-under by Mike Souchak and legendary Ben Hogan.

Souchak shot the lowest score, 257, in winning the 1955 Texas Open at Brackenridge Park Golf Course in San Antonio. Hogan won the 1945 Portland Invitational with a 261.

Lanny Wadkins and Craig Stadler each were 27-under in the 1985 Bob Hope Desert Classic, a five-round event. Greg Norman was 27-under in winning the 1985 Panasonic Las Vegas Invitational, also a 90-hole event.

Wrenn was at 16-under 128 after 36 holes, breaking this year's two-round low of 129 set a week earlier at the Hardee's Classic by Brad Fabel while the big boys were at the British Open in Muirfield, Scotland.

Wrenn birdied the first hole Saturday, a 567-yard, par-5.

"I got a real good start," Wrenn said. "All I was trying to do was get off safely, get over the jitters. Then, it was all of a sudden like Rod Serling (of the Twilight Zone) was out there or something.

"If there was something like a turnaround, that was it."

Wrenn made par on the next five holes, then birdied the seventh,

Buc Defensive Line Expanding

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

(Editor's Note: This is the fourth in a series of articles reviewing the positions for the 1987 East Carolina football team.)

East Carolina defensive line coach Donnie Thompson hopes the switch from two down defensive lineman to three down lineman will improve the group's performance during the 1987 season.

"It fits our existing personnel a lot better than the other scheme," he said. "It will allow more of them to get in the game. Instead of rotating between two, they will be rotating between three. That gives another slot to the down people that they can compete for."

Instead of just two defensive tackles, the Pirates will now employ a nose guard and two defensive ends.

Thompson is a new addition to the ECU coaching staff, coming over from Western Kentucky where he coached the inside linebackers. Prior to that, he was a defensive line coach at the University of Pittsburgh and the defensive coordinator at the University of Connecticut.

The switch was made in spring practice and Thompson said he feels his players made a lot of progress.

"The thing I wanted to accomplish was get about eight guys in a position where they could help the football team on the defensive front," he said. "We got about six that I think can help. We were close to meeting that goal in the spring. We are not there yet by any means. We have a lot of work to accomplish but I was pleased with their progression.

"Spring practice was successful in my eyes in the way that (ECU head) coach (Art) Baker worked the total overview. He gave me the opportunity to work with our top players all spring by the way he spaced off the hitting days and the teaching days. We get 20 days of coaching good players."

The change in the defensive scheme most benefits Medrick Rainbow, according to Thompson. Rainbow (5-11, 256 Sr.) was a defensive tackle in the old scheme but moves to nose guard in the new system.

"We don't know how good Medrick can be because right now he's getting an opportunity to play a position this year that is suited for him," Thompson said. "He's close to the ball where he can use his first five steps and his quickness. In the past, he was playing tackle and any time you put Medrick away from the ball you are nullifying his effectiveness. We're putting in a scheme that accentuates his abilities."

Thompson said that if the season were to start tomorrow, Rainbow would be the starter inside, flanked by Walter Bryant on the right and Mike Applewhite on the left.

"Walter Bryant (6-3, 246 Jr.) at this point in time would probably be the best performer of the group," Thompson said. "He played a lot last year and got a lot of experience. He did not have great technique a year ago but has learned to be a great technician. He has outstanding speed. He should be a dynamic pass rusher but lacks consistency. That's something we have to work at. He could be outstanding. He's a good player now but he could be a great player and that depends upon him."

Applewhite (6-3, 280 So.) is a transfer from North Carolina, where played sparingly. He was one of the prizes in North Carolina's recruiting class in in 1985 after a stellar high school career at Henderson Vance High School.

"Right now, he is a good player with great potential," Thompson said. "He is a long way away right now. He's really lacking a lot of game experience. I really hope he has good games the first three or four games but I'll be pleased if he is just able to play solid. He's been out of the game for two years. I'm going to be patient with him because I know he can be an outstanding player. As long as I can make sure he stays patient with himself and keeps progressing at the rate he has been progressing, he'll be all right.

Pan-Am May Be U.S.-Cuba Showdown

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The 1987 Pan American Games began with a showdown between the United States and Cuba and may well end that way as athletes from 38 nations prepare for a meet that officials hope will be drug free this time.

In a city known primarily for automobile racing, some 4,500 men and women will participate in 30 sports, with political quarrels and athletic rivalries inevitably making the United States and Cuba the pre-eminent combatants.

Indianapolis won a political battle with Cuban President Fidel Castro three years ago when the Midwestern U.S. capital was picked over Havana as the host city for the Aug. 7-23 games.

It was the first time since 1959 the quadrennial athletic showcase for the Western Hemisphere was awarded to the United States. Castro, who later was awarded the 1991 Pan Am Games, threatened a boycott.

Alongside the political in-fighting that preceded the games stood the dark spectre of drugs. In the 1983 games at Caracas, Venezuela, 10 athletes were stripped of medals and 11 Americans withdrew from the games as drug tests began to show positive results. This year, with testing a normal part of athletic life, officials are hoping the competitors will arrive drug free.

It is by far the biggest multination sporting event ever held in Indianapolis, which in recent years has been host of the U.S. Olympic Festival, various Olympic trials, the NCAA basketball finals, national and world track and field championships and national championship meets in swimming, diving and boxing.

Indianapolis, which had originally planned to bid for the 1991 games, was selected as this year's host when the sponsoring Pan American Sports Organization was forced to move the event from South America because of financial problems.

Local organizers quickly went to work, despite Castro's objections, but the controversy was just beginning. A delegation representing PAX-Indianapolis, the organizing committee, traveled to Cuba to meet with Castro and sports officials to smooth the way for participation here. An agreement for broadcast coverage to Cuba was reached.

PAX-I representatives also had to negotiate with the State Department for approval for the Cuban delegation to fly directly to Indianapolis.

The closing ceremonies produced more controversy. During the ceremonies, the national anthem of the next host country traditionally is played while its national flag is flown. Plans to have the ceremony on the American Legion Mall in downtown Indianapolis were changed after the state and national Legion organizations protested.

Now, on the eve of the competition, with politics, housing and security among the side issues presumably settled, the focus shifts to athletics.

In many of the sports, especially boxing, the United States and Cuba are expected do battle for gold medals.

"While the overall field is the strongest in Pan Am history, competition in many sports will boil down to a direct USA versus Cuba showdown," said Mike Moran, director of public information and media relations for the U.S. Olympic Committee.

"This will include boxing, where Cuba and the U.S are probably the top two teams in the world and have had brilliant competitions since the Los Angeles (Olympic) Games."

Cuba also is considered strong in baseball, volleyball and weightlifting. The United States' strongest events figure to be basketball and track and field. Both countries are expected to be strong in wrestling.

"With the exception of swimming, this is our strongest U.S. team in Pan Am history," Moran said. "If this was an Olympic year, most of the same athletes would be representing our country. But Cuba does figure to give them a battle in several sports.

Festival Roundup

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Penny Stone, a 1984 Olympian and the leading scorer in the U.S. Olympic Festival, had eight goals Saturday as the South edged the North 18-17 in the women's gold medal team handball game.

Stone, of Tallahassee, Fla., scored 31 goals for the tournament.

The North rallied from a 10-5 deficit to tie the game 16-16 on a goal by Kristi Kropp of Anoka, Ill., with 8:42 left in the second half. But Stone scored with 6:31 remaining and Lisa Christoph of Colorado Springs, Colo., made it 18-16 with 5:25 to go.

Carmen Forest of Pratt, Kan., connected with 22 seconds remaining, bringing the East within a goal, but it couldn't tie the score.

"We had a lot of heart and guts," Stone said. "We're not very experienced but these are 15 of the best athletes you could ask for."

The bronze medal was won by the West, which routed the East 24-10 as Renee Brum of Camarillo, Calif., scored eight times. Brum, a veteran of five festivals, got five goals in the first half as the West took command 14-4.

In other events, Marco Evoniuk of San Francisco smashed the U.S. Olympic Festival record for the 35-kilometer walk Saturday, winning the event for the second consecutive year.

Evoniuk was timed in two hours, 50 minutes, 51.9 seconds for the 21.7-mile event along the Duke University campus, breaking the mark of 2:55.08.0 he set last year.

Runner-up Jim Heiring of Kenosha, Wis., also went under the old mark, clocking 2:52:26.4.

Randy Mimm of Colorado Springs, Colo., got the bronze medal, finishing third in 2:58:01.9.

Evoniuk assumed the lead from Heiring at the 15-kilometer point (9.3 miles), then took command with the fastest 5-kilometer (3.1-mile) stage of the race with a split time of 23:39.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gary Savage of Kansas City, Mo., won the 67.5-kilogram class in U.S. Olympic Festival weightlifting Saturday with a 292.5 kilogram (644 pounds) total.

Savage won by more than 17.5 kilograms over Duane Winkler of Belleville, Ill. Savage lifted 162.5 pounds in the clean-and-jerk and 130 in the snatch.

The bronze was won by Paul Fleschler of Northbrook, Ill.

Despite a nagging shoulder injury, Cal Shake of Newport News, Va., easily took the 67.5 kilogram championship. Shake won by five kilos over Dean Goad of Auburn, Wash., with Ross DeNicola, the American champion from Baton Rouge, La., winning the bronze.

In the 82.5-kilogram class, Jim Hyde of Phoenix beat Derrick Crass of Belleville by five kilos. Al Jakubowski of Grand Rapids, Mich., was third.

Robert Normann of Matairie, La., won the gold medal in yachting on Lake Kerr at the U.S. Olympic Festival Saturday.

Normann won two of the five boardsailing races. He was second in one, fourth in another and 11th in the first race.

Bert Rice Jr., of Gulf Breeze, Fla., took the silver with two third-place finishes, a second, a fifth and a disqualification. John Jackman of San Diego got the bronze and won the third race.

The opening race was won by Rinn Newmeyer of Sanibel, Fla., who wound up fifth overall. The fourth race went to Mike O'Bryan of San Diego, who was fourth overall.

"It was a nice breeze, but it was still pretty shifty," Normann said. "I wanted to stay psyched no matter what the wind was."

The North's Cathy Cramer of Cincinnati and Tammy Hunt of York, Pa., teammed to score 170.142 points to win the synchronized swimming duet gold medal Saturday at the U.S. Olympic Festival.

Two other duets took second and third place as the North swept the medal competition.

The silver medal went to Cincinnati's Julie Doyle and Christine Youngpeters with 168.342 points.

Denise Sawicki of Cranford, N.J., and Cheryl Schemenaue of Cincinnati took the bronze with 166.786 points.

Competition ends Sunday with the solo competition and the eight-member team competition.

Defensive Line ...

"He can run. He's strong. He's fairly disciplined. He's got to become game-hard. That's only going to come with game experience. I just know the way he runs, the way he changes direction (that) if I can corral all that, (then) somebody else has to block him."

Other players that will compete for playing time in the fall are nose guard Bruce Simpson (6-1, 235 Sr.), defensive end Shannon Boling (6-4, 233 Jr.), defensive end Joey Maddox (6-2, 245 redshirt freshman) and defensive end Mike Donahue (6-3, 267 Sr.). Another player who could figure in is nose guard Carl Carney, who spent half of spring with the defense and the other half with the offense playing center.

Maddox and Donahue missed spring practice with prior injuries. "Those are two guys that we are looking to get something very positive out of in the fall," Thompson said.

Simpson moved to the defensive line after playing last season at linebacker.

"He responded very well and he's putting a lot of pressure on that position," Thompson said. "Shannon Boling plays tight end and slot back on offense and also plays defensive end for me. I'm very pleased with his progress. He can come out and help us. If a guy is not doing his job he can step right in and take his place. That has given me a lot of flexibility.

"Mike Donahue, we knew he was a good player and we just held him out for the spring so he can come back 100 percent."

Carney's position will be determined in the fall, based on the need of the football team, according to Thompson.

Thompson said he hopes the players continue their development once fall practice starts because things get tough in a hurry for the Pirates. They open with North Carolina State on Sept. 5 and then take on in succession, nationally-ranked Florida State and then Illinois.

"I don't worry about the N.C. States, the Florida States, the Illinois," Thompson said. "I worry about our guys. If they play at the level they are capable of playing at, everything else will take care of itself. There's no reason we shouldn't be able to control the line of scrimmage."

Tar Heel All-Stars.....8
North State All-Stars...7

ROANOKE RAPIDS — Will MacKenzie had two homers, drove four runs and was also the winning pitcher as the Greenville Tar Heel All-Stars topped the Greenville North State All-Stars to win the Area II Little League baseball tournament Saturday.

MacKenzie allowed 10 hits while striking out eight and walking five. He also choked off a North State rally in the sixth that saw the Tar Heel lead shrink to one run at 8-7. MacKenzie got the final to batters to fly out to end the game with the tying run on second and the winning run on first.

North State forged out to a 5-2 lead after three innings. North State scored two runs in the first, one on when Brian Fields scored on a passed ball and the other when Dante Daniels reached on an error that brought in Adam Charlton.

North State added three runs in the third, keyed by an RBI single by Brandon Moore.

The Tar Heel All-Stars rallied in the fourth. MacKenzie had a three-run homer that scored Omar Jordan and Richie Grimsley. Josh Burns had previously scored on Will Pleasants' RBI single before scoring himself on a passed ball.

MacKenzie's second homer came in the sixth. It was a solo shot that made the score 8-5.

Brandon Moore had two hits to lead the North State team. MacKenzie, Montez Barrett, Michael Howard and Pleasants all had two hits apiece for the Tar Heel All-Stars, who advance to play the winner of the District IV Area I Champions Monday.

In Friday's game, North State defeated Roanoke Rapids, 6-2, to advance to the finals.

Adam Charlton stared things off with a lead-off home run. Dante Daniels had a two-run double to score Shea Harper and Hays Lambert that gave North State a 3-0 lead.

North State added another run in the second inning when Charlton singled and scored on a base hit by Jarrett McGalliard. Hays Lambert scored in the fifth when he singled, went to second on a passed ball and scored on an error. McGalliard added a solo home run in the sixth to complete the scoring.

Charlton, McGalliard, Harper, Bryan Hill and Lambert had two hits apiece for North State.

East Wake.....13
Pitt County.....3

HOLLYWOOD — Stan Mohn scattered five hits over six innings to lead East Wake past Pitt County, 13-3, in the second round of the Eastern North Carolina 13-year-old Babe Ruth baseball tournament Saturday.

The loss eliminated Pitt County and sends East Wake into the finals to face the winner of the Eastover-New Hannover game.

Mohn struck out seven while walking four.

East Wake scored five runs in the third inning to take a 7-0.

In other games played Saturday, Wayne County defeated Elizabeth City, 22-2 and Kinston Lenoir County defeated Durham County, 9-8.

The tournament runs through Tuesday.

14-15 Babe Ruth

Greenville.....22
Hoke County.....1

BENSON — Timmy Moore tossed a no-hitter with 16 strikeouts as the Greenville Babe Ruth 14-15 All-Stars defeated in the Babe Ruth State baseball tournament Friday.

Greenville had 14 hits, led by Jamie Brewington, Travis Williamson chipped in two apiece. Walter Gatlin with three hits. Chris Christopher added a thee-run triple.

Greenville scored six runs in the first, keyed by a two-run double by Gatlin.

Maurice Hines had two-run triple in the eighth inning to key five more Greenville runs.

Hoke hit no balls out of the infield and got only two hits in the infield. The only run scored came on a wild pitch.

Wrenn birdied the 322-yard, par-4 No. 14 to go 21 under. However, he rolled a 30-foot putt six feet past the hole at No. 15 and bogeyed the 457-yard, par-4 hole.

On No. 18, just as CBS-TV cut away from its national coverage, Wrenn rolled in a nine-foot putt for his sixth birdie of the day to go 21-under again.

The weather continued hot and humid at the rolling Michigan hills, about 50 miles north of Detroit. Tempeatures remained in the 90s with only a mild breeze.

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Pulling Boris Becker from Davis Cup doubles competition against the United States may have cost the West Germans on Saturday.

But it may pay off for them if the relegation round comes down to a final match on Sunday.

"I'm not sure I would have used that type of strategy," United States Captain Tom Gorman said after Robert Seguso and Ken Flach took a relatively easy, straight-set doubles victory over the Becker-less West Germans.

"I think you have to keep putting your best players forward in Davis Cup. In effect, I think they were saying, 'We concede two points,'" he said.

Becker had been expected to play with Eric Jelen against Seguso and Flach, who won the Wimbledon doubles title and remain unbeaten as a team in Davis Cup competition.

But after Becker's six-hour, 38-minute marathon match against John McEnroe Friday night, West German Captain Nikki Pilic decided it was in the team's best interest to rest his 19-year-old star.

"He didn't come and ask me to rest him," Pilic said. "He hit for about half an hour this morning and looked stiff — as anyone would after a 6½-hour match. So I asked him what he thought and he agreed it would be a good idea to rest."

Ricki Osterthun, who had never played with Jelen previously and had never played a Davis Cup match, substituted for Becker.

Seguso and Flach beat the West Germans 6-3, 8-6, 14-12, but they agreed that Pilic made the right choice.

"We actually wanted Becker to play because he had such a long match and it ended so late," Seguso said. "We feel we would have been favored to win anyway, so we were confident we could tire him out even more for his match against Tim Mayotte tomorrow."

The United States needs to win both singles matches Sunday. The West Germans need to win just one. The loser will be relegated to zone competition next year.

The first match will between McEnroe and Jelen, who beat Mayotte on Friday and came back to play doubles on Saturday.

"I think John has to be pleased with the way he performed, even though he lost to Becker," Seguso said. "I can't see him losing to Jelen and Timmy's such a good player, I think anything can happen."

Mayotte said it "hurt a lot" to get beaten by Jelen.

"I'm just glad I'll get another opportunity against Becker on Sunday," he said.

"Tim is eager to get back out there," Gorman said. "The loss was just his third Davis Cup tie and I think when you're starting out, it's easier to play as the underdog. And he'll certainly be the underdog against Becker tomorrow."

However, it will be a well-rested Boris Becker instead of one who would have played 10 or more hours over two straight days.

Killed In Mishap

ARCA driver Tracy Read of Charlotte, N.C., is pulled from the wreckage of his car Saturday after striking the wall in turn two during the Permatex 500 at the Alabama International Motor Speedway. Read, 26, suffered crushing chest and abdominal injuries and was pronounced dead at the infield hospital. He is the sixth driver to be killed at Talladega since the track opened in 1969. Talladega 500 Expected To Be More Than A Two-Man Race

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Bill Elliott and Dale Earnhardt have the glowing credentials and the front-row positions, but nobody expects them to run away with the Talladega 500 NASCAR stock car race Sunday.

Nobody including Elliott and Earnardt, both of whom say they expect one of the most competitive races ever at the Talladega track when the green flag waves at 12:15 p.m. CDT.

Elliott has six consecutive pole starts on the 2.66-mile, high-banked oval at Alabama International Motor Speedway, and Earnhardt comes in with eight victories in 16 starts, including last Sunday's Summer 500 at Pocono, Pa.

"This ought to be a pretty good race because everbody is awfully close," said Elliott, who set the qualifying pace at 203.827 mph.

"I don't expect Bill to run away with it," noted Earnhardt, who was second in qualifying at 203.459. "And I sure don't think we're gonna drive away from everybody. This is going to be a race that maybe six, seven or even eight cars will go into the last couple of laps with a chance to win."

The main reason the top two qualifiers expect so much competition on Sunday is a rule change that has slowed the cars down here by about 7 mph.

In the Winston 500 here in May, the leaders were routinely drafting together at lap speeds of 206 or 207. Early in the event, Bobby Allison, running by himself at close to 210 mph, crashed, nearly flying into the filled grandstand.

That scared NASCAR, the stock car sanctioning body, into changing the rules to slow the cars down this month both here and for the July 4 race at Daytona International Speedway.

"I don't think I've ever seen a rule change that worked better at accomplishing what it was meant to do," said Darrell Waltrip, a three-time Winston Cup champion who often is among NASCAR's harshest critics.

"Slowing the cars down not only makes it safer for the drivers and the fans, but it makes better racing," Waltrip said. "It also makes it real important to stay in the draft and not get caught out by yourself. If you do get out there alone, you're gonna get kicked back a bunch of places and wish you hadn't done it."

Benny Parsons, who like Waltrip is looking for his first victory of the season, said, "Slowing the cars down is not gonna change the characteristics of the race. I think it's gonna be a lot of two-abreast, three-abreast racing, with a lot of lead changes."

Rookie Davey Allison, who already has two victories this season, is starting third, alongside Waltrip.

The third row will be Terry Labonte and Morgan Shepherd, with Bobby Allison, Kyle Petty, Rusty Wallace and Sterling Marlin rounding out the top 10 starters.

Defending champion Bobby Hillin Jr., who at age 22 became the youngest driver ever to win a NASCAR event when he won here last July, will start 20th.

"I'm not particularly happy with our qualifying," Hillin said. "But we started farther back than we wanted to last year and won it because no one gave up and we just kept working on the car.

Driver Is Killed In Permatex 500

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Tracy Read died Saturday of "crushing chest and abdominal injuries" suffered in a accident during the ARCA Permatex 500 late model stock car race at Alabama International Motor Speedway.

Read, 26, who lived in Charlotte, N.C., and worked as a crewman on the Winston Cup team of Cale Yarborough, suffered the fatal injuries when his car spun and hit the infield embankment on the 81st of the 117-lap event. His spin was occured after he avoided the spinning car of Kirk Bryant on the second turn.

He was driving a car owned by his father, Gilbert Read, who was in the pits Saturday.

Read was to be married next weekend, and his father and financee were in the crowd.

The young driver, originally from Lake Village, Ind., was competing in his 20th race on the Automobile Racing Club of America circuit. Read's best career finish was seventh place at Indianapolis Raceway Park in 1983.

He was pronounced dead at the infield care center. Read is the seventh fatality at the Talladega track since it opened in 1969.

Grant Adcox ran away from the rest of the field in the tragedy-marred 500-kilometer (300-mile) race, earning a record fourth straight victory at the Talladega track.

Adcox, who started from the pole position for the first time in his career, was dominant at times during the race, but had to fight off challenges from Charlie Glotzbach and Bryant.

Glotzbach, who led several laps in the early going, had to battle back from two laps down and held the lead as late as lap 95. But Adcox drove past Glotzbach on lap 96, during a restart following a caution period, and Glotzbach suddenly slowed for an unscheduled pit stop, ending his chances.

Bryant, who had just lost the lead to Adcox on lap 81, also lost his chance at victory when he spun in turn two and hit the wall. That was when Read, running well off the pace, lost control and spun off the track and slammed into the high dirt embankment. Bryant was not injured and no other injuries were reported in the race.

There were seven caution flags in the race for a total of 35 laps, slowing Adcox' average speed to 134.323 mph. He led a total of 87 laps. Glotzbach, who wound up a lap down in seventh, led 22.

The winner beat second-place David Simko to the finish line by 1.54 seconds. Series point leader Bill Venturini was third, followed by Bob Brevak, Keith Segars and Ronnie Thomas, the only other drivers on the lead lap.

Adcox, from Chattanooga, Tenn., broke a tie with former ARCA driver Davey Allison and Winston Cup star Buddy Baker, both of whom had won three straight races on Talladega's 2.66-mile, high-speed oval.

The race was run as a support event for Sunday's Talladega 500 NASCAR stock car race.

Davis Powers Houston By Mets

NEW YORK (AP) — Glenn Davis drove in three runs, two with a homer, and Denny Walling knocked in two as the Houston Astros defeated the New York Mets 7-5 Saturday.

Walling tripled home a pair of runs and Davis followed with his 17th homer in a four-run fifth inning that snapped a 3-3 tie.

Jim Deshaies, 9-4, pitched six innings for the victory. He allowed four runs on five hits while striking out two and walking two. Larry Andersen and Dave Smith finished up for the Astros, with the latter gaining his 17th save.

Loser Don Schulze, 1-1, in his second start since being purchased from Tidewater of the International league, seven runs on eight hits through five innings.

The Astros took a 3-0 lead in the first on a double by Billy Hatcher, a single by Bill Doran, a double by Walling, and consecutive sacrifice flies by Davis and Alan Ashby.

The Mets gained a 3-3 tie in the bottom of the inning on one-out walks to Tim Teufel and Keith Hernandez and Kevin McReynolds' two-out homer, his 19th of the season.

After the Astros went ahead 7-3 in the fifth, Gary Carter hit a two-out homer in the sixth inning, his 13th of the season, to narrow the gap to one run.

The Mets scored their fifth run in the seventh when Rafael Santa opened with a double and scored on a pair of errors by Davis at first.

Dodgers 7
Cubs 2

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pedro Guerrero had his first four-hit game of the year and Ken Howell pitched five innings of one-hit ball in a rare start Saturday as the Los Angeles Dodgers ended a six-game losing streak with a 7-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Two of Guerrero's hits came after his bat was confiscated in the third inning, when Chicago catcher Jody Davis complained to the umpires about the legality of the bat. It was taken out of play by home plate umpire Jim Quick and will be sent to the National League office for examination.

Howell, 3-3, struck out six and walked three in only his second major league start in 185 appearances and his first start since July 3, 1984, his rookie season. He pitched 5 2-3 innings in that game, his longest big-league appearance.

The right-hander held the Cubs hitless until Ryne Sandberg led off the fourth with a single.

Brad Havens,who replaced Howell at the start of the sixth, lasted only three batters and gave up a run on singles by pinch-hitter Bob Dernier, Sandberg and Leon Durham. Alejandro Pena retired Moreland on a bases-loaded double-play grounder later in the sixth, and held Chicago to one hit the rest of the way for his second save.

Guerrero singled in the first inning, took second on a balk by Bob Tewksbury, 0-2, and scored the game's first run on a single by Mike Marshall.

Franklin Stubbs sparked a four-run fourth inning with a leadoff homer, his 13th. Mickey Hatcher doubled and Mike Scioscia delivered Hatcher with a single for a 3-0 lead.

Tewksbury, who allowed six hits, departed one batter later after walking Steve Sax. Howell bunted into a force play at third against reliever Les Lancaster, whose ensuing wild pitch put runners at second and third. John Shelby followed a walk to Dave Anderson with a bases-loaded sacrifice fly and Guerrero — with a new bat — hit an RBI single to make it 5-0. Guerrero later singled in the seventh.

Scioscia hit his fourth homer and Ken Landreaux had an RBI single in the Dodger eighth.

Marshall was ejected by Quick in the fourth after protesting a called third strike.

Giants 5
Cardinals 4

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Bob Brenly, who homered earlier in the game, delivered a run-scoring, two-out single in the seventh inning to give the San Francisco Giants a 5-4 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Saturday.

Brenly, batting .409 over his last 17 games, got his game-winning hit off reliever Bill Dawley, 4-7. Scott Garrelts, 8-6, the Giants' third pitcher, was the winner.

Mark Wasinger led off with a single in the Giants' seventh. He tried to score on Mike Aldrete's double to left-center field but was thrown out at the plate, with Aldrete going to third on the throw home. Brenly singled to center after Jeffrey Leonard struck out.

Jose Oquendo, pinch-hitting for Curt Ford in the seventh, hit a two-run homer off San Francisco reliever Craig Lefferts to make the score 4-4. It was Oquendo's second career homer, with the first coming at Candlestick Park in 1983 off the Giants' Gary Lavelle.

The Cardinals trailed 4-1 entering the seventh. They scored the first run in the inning on a walk to Jack Clark, a double by Willie McGee and an RBI grounder by Terry Pendleton.

Mike Krukow, the Giants' 20-game winner of last year who was seeking his second victory of this season, allowed only one hit through five innings and also drove in two runs with a second-inning single.

Chili Davis and Brenly both homered off St. Louis starter Dave LaPoint. Davis led off the second inning with his 16th homer and Brenly had a leadoff homer, his 12th, in the third.

St. Louis scored in the sixth when Rod Booker came home from third on a double-play grounder by Tommy Herr. Krukow left after giving up consecutive singles by Booker, Vince Coleman and Ozzie Smith at the start of the sixth.

The Giants made four double plays in the game, giving them eight in two games and a major league-leading total of 126 this season.

Error-Prone Duncan Sent To The Minors

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Shortstop Mariano Duncan was optioned to Class AAA Albuquerque Saturday by the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The 24-year-old Dominican, in his third ajor-league season, was batting .216 in 67 games with five home runs and 16 runs batted in. He stole 10 bases in 11 attempts.

At the time of his demotion, Duncan led the team with 17 errors. The last three came in the second inning of last Thursday's loss to the St. Louis Cardinals. He left that game three innings later, complaining of a migraine headache.

"He's not doing the thingswe are trying to get him to do," Manager Tom Lasorda said. "He's not bunting and he's not hitting down on the ball."

To take Duncan's spot on the roster, the Dodgers purchsed the contract of infielder Brad Wellman.

Duncan came up to the Dodgers on opening day 1985 when Steve Sax was injured and became the regular shortstop. After hitting 10 triples in spring training 1986, he was plagued with a swollen left knee, s sprained left ankle, a stomach virus, a sprained left knee, a bruised right calf and a fractured left foot. The injuries limited him to 109 games, and he struggled to a .229 average.

This season he spent time on the disabled list with a laceration above the left knee. He had only eight hits in his last 38 at-bats with the Dodgers.

"He told me he wants me to go down there and work hard," Duncan said of Lasorda. "I'm not playing the game the way I'm supposed to. This surprised me, because I didn't know he had it on his mind to send me down. I want to show them I can play."

Welman, 27, was hitting .306 in 84 games with two home runs and 38 runs batted in for Albuquerque of the Class AAA Pacific Coast League. He played several games with the Dodgers in spring training.

Public and private parking areas throughout the city have designated spaces for handicapped citizens. Special dashboard permits and license plates may be purchased at the state license agency, 718 Dickinson Ave. Call 758-1193 for information.

Navratilova Out Due To Injury

WEST VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Top-rated women's tennis player Martina Navratilova, hampered by a sprained ankle suffered playing basketball at her home, was removed from the U.S. Federation Cup squad Saturday, a tournament spokesman said.

"Martina Navratilova's injury has not responded to treatment quickly enough and will be replaced by Elise Burgin," spokesman Henry Wancke said.

Preliminary matches in the 25th Federation Cup are scheduled to begin Sunday, with the main draw of 32 countries to begin Monday and Tuesday.

The Americans begin play Tuesday when they face Japan. The United States had hoped the extra day would allow Navratilova to recover from the injury suffered last week at her home in Texas.

The United States, West Germany, Czechoslovakia and other major women's tennis powers will have Sunday to rest or practice while other 20 nations open play at Hollyburn Country Club in preliminary-round matches.

HERE'S WHO MAKES OUR LIFETIME GUARANTEE ON CAR REPAIRS POSSIBLE.
Herbert Powell
Because we offer the free Lifetime Service Guarantee on car repairs, my job as service manager is a little tougher. I have to make sure car repairs are done right the first time. Because if they're not, it's our problem, not yours.
Here's how the Lifetime Service Guarantee works. If you pay for any covered repair and it has to be done again, we fix it free. That's free parts and free labor. For as long as you own your Ford, Lincoln, Mercury, Merkur or Ford light truck.
The Lifetime Service Guarantee covers thousands of parts and repairs. And it doesn't matter how old your vehicle is, how many miles are on it, or even where you bought it. Add all this up and you've got the best car repair guarantee in America.
Ask us to see a copy of the Lifetime Service Guarantee. Then give us a chance to turn our guarantee into a lifetime reality.

Whitaker's Homer Powers Tigers

DETROIT (AP) — Lou Whitaker's two-out home run in the 10th inning gave the Detroit Tigers a 5-4 victory over the Cleveland Indians Saturday.

Whitaker hit his 11th homer of the season on a 2-2 pitch into the upper deck in right field at Tiger Stadium off reliever Greg Minton, 3-1. Mike Henneman, 8-0, was the winner in relief.

The Angels forced a 4-4 tie by scoring an unearned run off reliever Eric King in the ninth inning. Pinch-hitter Ruppert Jones was safe on Whitaker's error at second, took third on a single to center by pinch-hitter Mark Ryal and scored on Brian Downing's groundout.

Larry Herndon, Bill Madlock and Kirk Gibson hit home runs for the Tigers.

Herndon's two-out home run with Alan Trammell on first base gave the Tigers a 3-2 lead in the fourth inning. The homer, off Angels starter Jerry Reuss, was Herndon's sixth of the season.

Madlock led off the sixth against Reuss with his 10th homer to give the Tigers a 4-2 lead.

Bob Boone pulled California to within one run when he lined a solo home run, his second of the season, leading off the seventh.

After Gus Polidor followed Boone with a single, Tiger starter Dan Petry was relieved by King.

California touched Petry for two runs in the third inning.

With one out, Mark McLemore singled, Downing was hit by a pitch and Jack Howell walked to load the bases. Devon White then singled to score McLemore and Downing.

Gibson gave Detroit a 1-0 lead in the first inning when he hit his 13th home run of the season into the upper deck bleachers in center.

CHICAGO (AP) — Ivan Calderon led off the eighth inning with a double and scored the tie-breaking run on Kenny Williams's sacrifice fly Saturday to lead the Chicago White Sox to 3-2 victory over the New York Yankees.

After Calderon doubled, Greg Walker sacrificed and was safe at first when Don Mattingly failed to get Calderon at third. It was the first sacrifice bunt of Walker's career.

Reliever Dave Righetti got Carlton Fisk to foul out before Williams flied to center to score Calderon.

It was the fourth straight loss for the first-place Yankees, marking their longest losing streak of the season.

Ray Searage, 2-2, was the winner with relief help. Jim Winn pitched the ninth for his sixth save. Pat Clements, 2-2, took the los.

The Yankees tied it in the top of the eighth with an unearned run. With two outs, Mike Pagliarulo singled to left and Gary Redus let the ball get past him, allowing Pagliarulo to get all the way to third. Mark Salas singled Pagliarulo home.

The Yankees scored a run in the first on singles by Rickey Henderson, Mattingly and Dave Winfield but the White Sox went ahead with a pair in the second inning.

Kenny Williams and Ozzie Guillen both singled with one out in the second and then pulled off a double steal. Williams scored as Manrique grounded out and Guillen scored on a single by Redus.

The Yankees managed to halt Harold Baines' 18-game hitting streak, the longest current string in the majors.

Red Sox.....11
Mariners.....5

BOSTON (AP) — Big Sam Horn hit a two-run, tie-breaking homer in the fifth inning of his major league debut Saturday, sparking the Boston Red Sox to an 11-5 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

Rich Gedman drove in three runs with his first homer of the season and two sacrifice flies, Spike Owen had three RBI with a triple and two singles in a 19-hit Boston attack.

Rookie left-hander Tom Bolton, 1-0, earned his first victory in relief after Seattle shelled Boston starter Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd with five runs on seven hits and two walks in four innings.

Horn, recalled Thursday from Pawtucket after hitting 30 homers in the International League, struck out and grounded into a double play in his first two times at bat.

Then, after Jim Rice led off the fifth with a single, the 6-foot-6 slugger broke a 2-2 by hitting a 1-2 pitch into the screen in left-center off Seattle reliever Stan Clarke, 2-2.

Seattle starter Scott Bankhead also was ineffective, allowing eight hits and five runs in 3 1-3 innings.

Every Boston batter in the starting lineup had at least one hit. Owen, Evans, Rice and Ellis Burks led the Boston offense with three hits apiece.

Wade Boggs had an RBI single in the Boston first, but finished 1-for-5.

Phil Bradley and Jim Presley had two hits apiece for Seattle, while Harold Reynolds drove in two runs with a triple and a sacrifice fly.

Donell Nixon drove in Reynolds with a sacrifice bunt on a suicide squeeze in the fourth. Bradley singled home a run in the first and Rey Quinones had an RBI single in the second.

The victory was the third in four games for the Red Sox. However, the club is 6-12 in its last 18 games.

The Mariners lost for the fourth time in five starts and eighth time in the last 10 games.

Rangers.....7
Indians.....3

CLEVELAND (AP) — Charlie Hough, getting home run support from Pete Incaviglia and Steve Buechele, recorded his 12th consecutive victory against Cleveland as the Texas Rangers defeated the Indians 7-3 Saturday.

Hough, 11-6, allowed three runs on six hits, while striking out four and walking four in 6 1-3 innings. Dale Mohorcic, the third Texas pitcher, gained his 15th save.

Hough, the 39-year-old knuckleballer, has notched his last 12 triumphs against Cleveland in 12 starts and is 15-4 lifetime against the Indians. Hough has a 4-0 record against Cleveland this season.

Hough started against 48-year-old knuckleballer Phil Niekro, marking the fourth time the two have met with Hough winning on each occasion. Niekro, 7-10, allowed five runs on nine hits in six innings.

Texas snapped a 3-3 tie in the sixth inning. Incaviglia drew a leadoff walk and scored the lead run on Oddibe McDowell's double. McDowell took third on Geno Petralli's single and scored on Buechele's suicide-squeeze bunt.

The Rangers added a run in the seventh when reliever Reggie Ritter walked Incaviglia with the bases loadad, and Buechele closed the scoring in the eighth when he hit his 10th homer, off Ed Vande Berg.

Incaviglia started the scoring when he ignited a three-run second with his 18th homer. McDowell and Petralli followed with singles before Buechele brought home a run with a fielder's-choice grounder and Jerry Browne tripled home another run.

Cleveland pulled to within 3-2 in the bottom of the second when Joe Carter hit his 24th home run and Mel Hall singled and scored on Brook Jacoby's double. The Indians tied the game in the fourth when Jacoby again doubled and scored on Andy Allanson's sacrifice fly.

Twins.....13
Blue Jays.....9

TORONTO (AP) — Gary Gaetti drove in four runs with a three-run homer and a single and Gene Larkin had two RBI in a seven-run sixth inning as Minnesota defeated the Toronto 13-9 Saturday in the longest nine-inning game in Blue Jays history.

Playing less than 13 hours after Friday night's rain-delayed game, which ended at 12:50 a.m., the two teams played for 4 hours and 5 minutes. There were 15 walks in the game and 28 hits, including five home runs off 11 pitchers.

The Twins, who won at Exhibition Stadium for the first time in eight games, entered the sixth trailing 6-4 and emerged leading 11-6 following an inning that featured six hits and four stolen bases.

Larkin, who also drove in a run in the eighth, led off with homer off rookie Don Gordon.

After Tom Brunansky singled, Jeff Musselman replaced Gordon. He walked Tim Laudner and gave up an infield single to Steve Lombardozzi to load the bases. Greg Gagne then singled home two runs to put the Twins ahead 7-6.

After stolen bases by Lombardozzi and Gagne and an intentional walk, shortstop Tony Fernandez' threw wildly trying for a double play on Randy Bush's grounder to first and two more runs scored. Then Bush stole second and Gaetti singled him home and Gaetti stole second and was singled home by Larkin.

Toronto had taken a 4-0 lead with the help of a three-run second-inning homer by Fred McGriff off Les Straker. But the Twins tied it in the fourth on Gaetti's three-run homer and an RBI groundout by Lombardozzi.

Toronto went ahead 6-4 in the fourth on doubles by Garth Iorg, Ferndandez and Rance Mulliniks before the big Twins sixth.

Giants To Face Champs' Dilemma

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

The Super Bowl champion New York Giants open training camp this week with the most puzzling dilemma in sports hanging over them. Now that they're on top, how do they stay there?

Football has had five different Super Bowl champions in the last five years and no repeater since the Pittsburgh Steelers won consecutive titles in 1979-80. Not since the 1977-78 New York Yankees has a baseball team won two straight World Series, and, in fact, the last nine Series have produced nine different champions. No NBA team has repeated a championship since the 1968-69 Boston Celtics.

Only hockey has avoided the trend with Edmonton, the New York Islanders and Montreal the only Stanley Cup winners in the last dozen years.

Even in individual sports, where success does not depend on the performance of others, it is exceedingly difficult to repeat championships. For example, when Nick Faldo won the British Open last week, he became the 18th different player to capture golf's last 18 major championships.

Why is that?

"All manner of factors enter the equation," sports psychologist Thomas Tutko of San Jose State University said. "There can be real concentration, commitment and dedication to win a single event. Once you do, it's natural to let down. There is a certain mystique about winning before you have won. Once you nin, you know what it's like. Then outside factors can interfere. Injuries and the accolodes that follow a championship interrupt the pattern."

Tutko wonders if in a tough situation, a defending champion might not say to himself: "Hey, I've already proven I could do it. If I fail, people can't say, 'You can't do it,' because I've done it.' " And that kind of thinking can doom an attempt to repeat.

"If you're intent and consistent in wanting to play the best you can, winning comes naturally," he said. "If you're intent on a championship, though, there can be a letdown. I think teams should not emphasize winning so much as motivation on the individual level. That's gone awry. Take the Steelers. They had an obsession to dominate the best they could. They were obsessed with the perfection of play. Winning followed."

Championships create targets. "It's better to be the underdog than the favorite," Tutko said. "Other teams will be waiting for the Giants all season. The favorite has nothing to gain if he wins. He was supposed to win. But the underdog becomes a hero if he wins."

That produces incentives that defending champions don't have. An also-ran can make his season by beating the champion. If enough also-rans do that, the champion isn't the champion anymore.

"The manager or coach has to be a psychologist," Tutko said. "The best ones are. They know motivation, when to cheer, when to support, when to comfort."

John Wooden filled that role at UCLA where his teams built college basketball's last dynasty. The Bruins won 10 of 12 NCAA tournaments and seven in a row. No school has won two straight since UCLA's streak of seven ended in 1973.

"I tried never to let the team feel satisfied," Wooden said. "I was on them when they won, not when they lost. When they lost, they needed a pat on the back.

"I always felt that for every peak there could be a valley, and I emphasized that with my teams. I told them not to get too excited over winning or dejected over losing. I always told them, 'Last year is in the past. Nothing can change that. This year is all we can control.' I tried to never let them get satisfied."

Wooden's teams were workmanlike. "I think my teams showed less outward emotion than others," he said. "One player was dissatisfied with his playing time and said I ran the team like a machine. I took that as a compliment. In a sense, I wanted that.

"There was one team that I hurt by working it too hard. That was 1962. In retrospect, I think that team could have won. I wanted it too much then. You need a balance."

Wooden said he was able to create that balance by watching some of his contemporaries. Ed Jucker at Cincinnati and Phil Woolpert at San Francisco each won two NCAA titles, but when their teams later failed, they were driven out of coaching for a while by the criticism.

"Here were two of the finest coaches in the game hurt by the need to repeat championships," Wooden said. "I was determined that if I were ever so lucky to win the national championship, I would not let that happen to me or to the players.

"You can want it too much. I learned from those others that once you win, you can not allow it to affect you in any way. The new season is just that, a new season."

Rocky Bleier owns four Steeler Super Bowl rings from a team that dominated the NFL in the decade of the '70s. He remembers how those victories were assembled.

"The first year, we were underdogs to Minnesota," he said. "We were upstarts and we won. The second year we had something to prove, that the first victory was no fluke.

"The teams that won in 1978 and 1979 (seasons) were very dominant. Everybody was in their prime — Stallworth, Swann, Lambert. We dominated the passing game with Bradshaw."

But Bleier's Steelers had to face the favorite's factor that Tutko talked about.

"Every game becomes a mini-Super Bowl. If the Giants play Tampa Bay and Tampa Bay beats them, it makes Tampa Bay's season. It puts pressure on you. If you take it in the right vein, you play better.

"All things being equal, the Giants beat Tampa Bay. That's the feeling we had. The key is knowing how well we could play together. We knew we could beat anybody, if we played the way we were capable of playing."

Drug Scandal Of 1983 Still Looms Over Team

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The drug scandal of 1983 will hang over the U.S. track and field team competing at next month's Pan American Games.

Four years ago at Caracas, Venezuela, 12 members of the U.S. men's team returned home prior to their competition when it was disclosed that stringent drug testing was being conducted and positive results had begun showing up.

One athlete, pole vaulter Mike Tully, returned and won the gold medal.

But the 11 withdrawals were an embarrassment to the U.S. men's team, which wound up winning only six gold, its fewest ever in the Pan Am Games.

Houston's Tom Tellez, coach of this year's men's team, doesn't think such a fiasco will happen again.

"They all know that drug testing is going to happen, so they better be ready," Tellez said. "They have been told by the coaching staffs, and by literature that has been handed out and sent in the mail.

"Every athlete knows what to expect. I doubt it will happen again."

With everyone in place, the U.S. should have a very representative men's team, although the long-distance runners and decathletes who qualified will skip the Pan Am Games to prepare for the World Championships at Rome beginning in late August.

The most prominent of the American men will be Carl Lewis, winner of four gold medals in the 1984 Olympics.

Jackie Joyner-Kersee, the world record-holder in the heptathlon and winner of the Sullivan Award as the nation's outstanding amateur athlete, will lead the U.S. women's team, which won eight gold in 1983.

Lewis will compete in the long jump and the 400-meter relay, and Joyner-Kersee, the American record-holder in the long jump, will compete in only that event.

Joining Lewis on the men's squad will be Willie Banks, world record-holder in the triple jump; Greg Foster, 1984 Olympic silver medalist in the 110-meter high hurdles; Mike Conley, 1987 national champion in the triple jump; Johnny Gray, American record-holder at 800 meters; Butch Reynolds, the fastest 400-meter runner ever at sea level; Steve Scott, American record-holder at 1,500 meters; Henry Marsh, American record-holder in the 3,000-meter steeplechase, and Tully.

Others on the women's team will include long sprinter Valerie Brisco, triple Olympic gold medalist; Judi Brown-King, American record-holder in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles; Florence Griffith, Olympic silver medalist in the 200; Stephanie Hightower-Leftwich, American record-holder in the 100 hurdles, and high jumper Coleen Sommer, the 1983 Pan Am champion.

"We have an outstanding team," U.S. women's coach Sue Humphrey said. "We will be strong in the sprints, the relays, the jumps and the hurdles."

While the U.S. team will be one of the strongest ever sent to the Pan Am Games, the Canadian squad will be one of the weakest.

The Canadians are sending only two members of their "A" team, women's walker Ann Peel and women's 400-meter runner Charmaine Crooks, the 1983 Pan Am gold medalist.

Their other top athletes, including sprinter Ben Johnson, high hurdler Mark McKoy, high jumper Milt Ottey, women's sprinter Angella Taylor-Issajenko and women's high jumper Debbie Brill, will be competing in Europe or tuning up for the World Championships.

Participation of other world-class athletes is uncertain.

For example, Brazil could be represented by Joaquim Cruz, 1984 Olympic 800-meter champion; Agberto Guimares, 1983 Pan Am champion at 800 and 1,500 meters); half-miler Jose-Luis Barbosa, and sprinter Robson da Silva.

Cuba has 1983 Pan Am champions Leandro Penalver (men's 100), Jaime Jefferson (men's long jump), Jorge Reyna (men's triple jump), Juan Centelles (men's high jump) and Luis Delis (men's shot put and discus), along with men's high jumper Javier Sotomayer, quarter-miler Roberto Hernandez and women's javelin thrower Maria Colon.

Cuban men won eight gold and the women's team took four in 1983.

"I think Cuba will send its best athletes and not say, 'We're getting ready for the World Championships,' " Tellez said.

"I feel we have have a very good team and will compete well. I'm sure the athletes will want to do well for the United States, especially because the meet is at home."

O'Brien Hoping

NEW YORK (AP) — Quarterback Ken O'Brien says he hopes his salary differences with the New York Jets won't keep him out of the NFL team's training camp very long.

"I hope something gets done so I can get into camp soon," O'Brien said Friday night from his home in Jehicho, N.Y. "But the time factor's not that important as long as both sides are happy."

O'Brien and offensive tackle Reggie McElroy were absent Friday when the Jets opened camp at Hofstra University. The team begins workouts today.

The absence of O'Brien disappointed Jets president Jim Kensil.

"Traditionally, any player that doesn't come to training camp doesn't seem to do as well," Kensil said. "The current status of the negotiations is that they know what our offer is."

Also missing was Reggie McElroy, who earned a reported $275,000 last season.

O'Brien is entering the final year of a $1.6 million, four-year contract he signed after being a 1983 first-round draft choice.

Hall Of Famers

Jim "Catfish" Hunter (left) and Billy Williams tip their hats at a news conference in New York last January after being elected to the baseball Hall of Fame. Hunter, Williams and Ray Dandridge will be officially inducted into the shrine in Cooperstown today. (AP Laserphoto)

Williams Is Permanently In Hall Of Fame This Time

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Billy Williams remembers his last visit to the baseball Hall of Fame. He went looking for the scorecard that marked his 1,000th consecutive game and couldn't find it.

"There was nothing else in there about me. That was it," Williams said. "It was something that made me a part of the Hall of Fame. I finally asked about it and after an hour or so was told they had lost it."

Williams, the "Sweet Swinger" from Whistler, Ala., and the iron man of the Chicago Cubs, won't have to worry about his place in baseball's house of honor after this weekend.

Neither will pitcher Jim "Catfish" Hunter or third baseman Ray Dandridge, who join Williams in being eternally enshrined as the newest members of the Hall of Fame on Sunday.

Williams was named on 354 of the 413 ballots cast by 10-year members of the Baseball Writers Association of America. Hunter received 315 votes, five more than was necessary for induction. Dandridge was selected by the veterans committee.

This usually serene village of 2,400 will swell by thousands over the weekend as fans of the national pastime gather to witness the induction, catch glimpses of some of the game's legends and see the Yankees and Braves tangle on Doubleday Field in the annual Hall of Fame game on Monday.

"When they say, 'You are now officially inducted into baseball's Hall of Fame,' it's final," said Williams, who jokingly added: "I know they keep track of the plaques."

Williams, the National League's Rookie of the Year in 1961, was voted into the hall in his sixth year on the ballot. The left-handed hitting outfielder played 16 seasons with Chicago and two years with the Oakland Athletics, finishing his career with 426 home runs and a .290 lifetime batting average. He had five seasons with 30 or more homers and five times batted over .300, including a league-leading .333 in 1972.

Williams held the National League record for consecutive games with 1,117 until Steve Garvey broke the mark in 1983 en route to 1,207 straight games. The 49-year-old Williams, now a batting coach with Chicago, played at least 161 games for eight consecutive years.

"If I could write my own plaque, I would want it to say 'Billy Williams, for his consistency and durability in the major leagues,' " he said.

Hunter, who compiled a 224-166 record in 15 years in the big leagues, also wanted to be remembered for dedication to his profession.

"I want them to remember Jim Hunter as the guy who went out and pitched whenever the manager wanted. The guy who wanted to stay out there and pitch, throw strikes and not offer excuses when he gave up home runs," said Hunter, who never played a game in the minor leagues.

Hunter, whom Oakland owner Charlie Finley nicknamed "Catfish," said the accomplishment in which he takes most pride is his five consecutive seasons of winning 20 or more games.

Hunter, who will also be well-remembered for the bidding war he started when he left Oakland in 1974 and eventually signed with the New York Yankees for an estimated $2.85 million, won the Cy Young Award that year for the A's with a 25-12 record and an earned run average of 2.49. The 41-year-old right-hander pitched a perfect game against the Minnesota Twins in 1968, the first one in the American League in 46 years.

"I'm excited about the ceremony. Also about seeing the Hall of Fame," said Hunter, who now farms 600 acres in his native Hertford, N.C.. "I've never been up there and I'd like to look at it, but with everything that's going on, I may not get a chance this year."

Hunter said he would have extra incentive to return to Cooperstown now.

For the 73-year-old Dandridge, a longtime Negro League star, selection to the Hall of Fame is compensation for never realizing a dream to play in the majors.

"I'm thankful I'll be able to see the Hall of Fame. I always wanted to say I came out of the cornfields and got to the major leagues. That was my biggest dream. But, now I can say I came out of the cornfields and got to the Hall of Fame," said Dandridge, who, along with Hall of Famer Judy Johnson, was regarded as the finest third basemen ever to play in the Negro League.

Roy Campanella, a fellow Negro Leaguer before joining the Dodgers in 1948, once said Dandridge could have knocked even Brooks Robinson out of the lineup with his slick fielding. He also was a terror with a bat. In 22 years playing in the Negro, Mexican and minor leagues, Dandridge hit over .340.

Dandridge was 31 when Jackie Robinson signed with the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1945 — just young enough to get his hopes up and just old enough to have them dashed. In 1949, with the Minneapolis Millers of the American Association, the New York Giants farm club, Dandridge hit .362. The following year he hit .311 and was named the league's most valuable player.

Parcells Says Taylor's Book Will Not Cause Problems

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Giants Coach Bill Parcells says revelations by All-Pro linebacker Lawrence Taylor that the team and the NFL knew of Taylor's drug use will not cause a major disruption when the defending Super Bowl champions open camp Monday.

"No, because I'm the one in control, that's why," Parcells answered when asked if he expected problems as a results of Talyor's revelations in a book he has written.

Parcells, who has attended drug clinics, spoken to experts in the field and addicts, said Friday he remains vigilant about other players who had drug problems.

"Some of them longer that Lawrence Taylor," Parcells said, dusputing a statement in Taylor's book saying his drug use was tolerated because of his importance to the team.

But Parcells, in a book of his own, admits he may have been too lenient in dealing with Taylorg problems and "probably cut him (Taylor) more slack" than he did with other players who used drugs.

"That's my fault," he writes in "Parcells: Autobiography of the Biggest Giant of The All." "Maybe if I'd been quicker, and confronted him ... Who knows?"

Parcells says he is acquainted with the symptoms of drug use.

"The drug problem has permeated society," he said, noting that one player appeared last spring at the team's free-agent camp under the influence of drugs.

"Zonked," Parcells said.

In his soon-to-be released book, "LT: Living on the Edge," Taylor says:

"I knew they weren't going to (arrest me), not as long as I was who I was and my game was intact.

"If I were Joe Blow, okay, there'd be the slammer or some midnight trip to Betty Ford's farm."

At the Giants' team picnic Friday Parcells criticized a Sport magazine article excerpting the book: "It's a typical example of lack of context and lack of reporting. Any time you see an article with dot, dot, dot, it's taken out of context. It's not as explanatory as it could be if you read the entire thing in context.

Taylor says he used cocaine from 1982 to 1985.

Petty Refuses To Give Up The Chase For Next Victory

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — At age 50 and without a victory in more than three years, Richard Petty refuses to relinquish his crown as the king of stock car racing.

The victory that Petty wanted so badly — No. 200 — came at Daytona Beach, Fla., on July 4, 1984. Since then, there has been only frustration.

After more than a quarter century of racing and winning, NASCAR's all-time victory leader has been unable to find victory circle, although he refuses to quit trying.

In the meantime, he has found several track hospitals.

He had one accident at Charlotte, N.C., last year. He was knocked cold with a concussion during practice, later was cleared to drive and competed in a rented car.

Earier this season, he broke some ribs in a crash at Dover, Del.

He kept alive his string of consecutive races — 469 going into Sunday's Talladega 500 and dating back to late 1971 — by driving the pace lap in several races, then turning over the driving chores to Joe Ruttman.

Petty, who turned 50 on July 2, is back to driving full time now, but the question that keeps coming up is "why?"

The long, tall Petty has no financial worries after winning more than $5 million in his career.

He has a hand in local politics and even has been mentioned as a possible candidate for governor of his home state of North Carolina.

And son Kyle, 27, is a third-generation Petty racer who has blossomed this year, winning the Coca-Cola 500 in May at Charlotte. The elder Petty is likely to play some part in his son's career after his own driving days are done.

But there is no indication that the day of Petty's retirement is close at hand.

"I still pull on my helmet, get in the car and feel like things are the way they should be," Petty said in an interview.

Pressed on the subject of ending his driving career, Petty smiled around the ever-present long, thin cigar and said, "I'll know when. It isn't time yet. I still like driving the car, and I still think I can race with them other cats, and win."

No one is saying that Petty is being embarrassed on the track. He has proved he still can hold his own around the lead.

"It's just that something seems to always happen," he said with a nod of his feathered, black 10-gallon hat. "We have an engine go, a shock break, a seal leak, somebody crashes and I wind up in it. But that's the way it goes in racing."

Bobby Allison won the Firecracker 400 at Daytona Beach earlier this month at age 49, becoming the oldest man to ever win a Winston Cup event.

Asked if that gives him more hope that he can win again, Petty said: "I know I can win more races. Age has nothing to do with it, really. As long as you can still get in there and be competitive." "A lot of younger drivers go out there and drive fast and look spectacular and get in all kinds of trouble," he said. "They drive into trouble and trust their young reflexes to get them out of it.

"The older guys get a sense of anticipation. You sense some deal is going to happen ahead of you and maybe avoid it, instead of having to drive through it."

Kyle agrees that his father still is a competitive driver.

Becker Outlasts McEnroe In Davis Cup Action

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Boris Becker outlasted John McEnroe in a record-breaking marathon Davis Cup struggle Friday night to give West Germany a 2-0 lead over the United States in their best-of-five-match relegation round series.

"It was a war out there," Becker said. "He tried everything and I tried everything."

Becker needed six hours, 38 minutes to down McEnroe 4-6, 15-13, 8-10, 6-2, 6-2. The time, which includes an 18-minute break after the third set, broke the American Davis Cup record of 6:32 set in 1982 when McEnroe defeated Sweden's Mats Wilander in St. Louis.

In Friday's first match, West Germany's Eric Jelen, rated about 50 places below Tim Mayotte in the computer rankings, rallied for a 6-8, 6-2, 1-6, 6-3, 6-2 victory.

With one more victory, West Germany can retain a spot in the World Group next year and drop the Americans into to zonal play. Only the 16 nations in the World Group actually compete for the Davis Cup.

Becker and Jelen will team up to play Robert Seguso and Ken Flach in Saturday's doubles. On Sunday, the three-day battle will end with McEnroe taking on Jelen and Mayotte playing Becker.

"I think this is going to be my sleeping place (tonight)," Becker said, noting Saturday's doubles begin at noon.

In order to stay in the World Group, the United States would have to win all three remaining matches.

"It was a great win for Eric," Becker said of Jelen's surprising victory. "It boosted our spirit quite a bit. But I knew John would be coming out to play all or nothing."

Becker was so right.

It was a war, a battle of attrition. It began at 4:38 p.m. EDT and ended at 11:16 p.m. And Becker, at 19 nine years younger than McEnroe, emerged victorious.

"I think he was playing on emotion," Becker said of McEnroe. "He's going to feel it tomorrow."

It took McEnroe 50 minutes to win the opening set, breaking Becker at love in the 10th game.

Then came one of the longest sets in recent Davis Cup play. Becker broke McEnroe in the 15th game and was serving for the set. But McEnroe broke back.

In the 22nd game, Becker battled back from love-40, eventually staving off five set points to hold serve and pull even at 11-11. On the first set point, the lineswoman called Becker's serve a fault. But umpire Claude Richard of France overruled and called it an ace.

"If it wasn't for me being out there, I don't think we would have gotten that overrule at love-40," McEnroe said. "I just feel that those things wouldn't have happened if it wasn't for the things that happened to me in the past."

Becker then pulled to deuce with two more powerful serves that McEnroe failed to return.

On the fourth set point, McEnroe sailed a backhand long. The fifth set point was saved when the left-hander's backhand half-volley was wide.

The powerful German broke McEnroe at 15 in the 27th game, then held at love to take the second set, a set that took two hours, 35 minutes to play — 19 minutes less than it took Jelen and Mayotte to play their entire match.

McEnroe fought off two break points in the seventh game of the third set, one in the 11th game and two more in the 13th. Becker was never in trouble on his serve until the 18th game.

McEnroe failed to close it out on the first set point, at 15-40, when he netted a service return. But, on the next point, the left-hander lept for joy and the crowd erupted when Becker's backhand down the line was wide.

That gave McEnroe a 2-1 lead in the best-of-five-sets match.

The third set took one hour, 33 minutes. By the end of the third set, the two had battled for four hours, 58 minutes.

The last two sets were almost anticlimatic. Becker broke McEnroe at 15 to begin the fourth set, then staved off a break point before holding for a 2-0 lead.

He broke McEnroe again in the fifth game, this time at 30, and when he held at 15, he had a 5-1 lead.

McEnroe appeared to be resting, willing to give up the fourth set and regroup for the decisive fifth set. It was a tactic that wouldn't work.

The two battled evenly through the first four games. Then, in the fifth game, McEnroe began with an ace, his 16th of the match. But he fell behind 30-40 before pulling to deuce.

A double-fault, his 10th, gave Becker another break point. Again he saved it, this time on a service winner.

But Becker won the next two points and McEnroe had lost his service. He would never be close again as Becker wound up winning the final five games of the night.

Becker finished with 18 aces, two more than McEnroe, and nine double-faults, three less than his American opponent.

"John came back so well in the third set," said U.S. team captain Tom Gorman. "I'm sure a lot of people wrote him off after the second set. Becker just had too much left.

"It was a great match. We had our chances."

Mayottes loss in the opening set was a severe blow to the Americans' hopes of avoiding relegation.

The unheralded Jelen, ranked in the mid-60s on the ATP computer to Mayotte's 14th, was the man the United States figured it had to beat to win this series and remain in the World Group. But Jelen, cheered on by a large contingent of Germans in the Hartford Civic Center, gave the Americans a jolt.

Mackerel Regulations Clarified

Many local fishermen have been confused over the new king and Spanish mackerel federal regulations in the North Carolina area that became effective June 30.

Dennis Spitsbergen, a consultant with the N.C. Division of Marine Fisheries, listed the following update, which applies only to federal waters from three to 200 miles offshore. The new regulations:

•Allow annual changes in the maximum sustainable yield (MSY) and total allowable catch.

•Separate Spanish mackerel into Gulf of Mexico and Atlantic migratory groups, and establish catch allotments for each group.

•Allow establishment of a recreational allocation and bag limit for Spanish mackerel and a reduction of the bag limit to zero if the recreational allocation is reached. King mackerel are managed by a bag limit only with no closure.

•Allow establishment of a commercial allocation for Spanish mackerel and a closure of the fishery if the allocation is reached.

•Require permits for commercial vessels fishing for Spanish mackerel.

•Prohibit the transfer at sea of king or Spanish mackerel taken under a bag limit.

•Restrict the mesh size of Spanish mackerel gill nets to 3 1/2 inches (stretched measure).

•Prohibit the use of purse seines, except for incidental catches, in the fishery for both groups of Spanish mackerel and for the Gulf of Mexico group of king mackerel.

•Require permits for charter vessels fishing on the recreational allocation for king mackerel, Spanish mackerel and cobia.

For the present fishing season (April 1, 1987, through March 31, 1988) the allocations and bag limits follow.

•King mackerel (Atlantic group): Recreational allocation — 6.09 million pounds with a three-fish bag limit per person, per trip; commercial allocation — 3.59 million pounds.

•Spanish mackerel (Atlantic group): 740 thousand pounds with a 10-fish bag limit per person, per trip for all states except Florida; commercial allocation — 2.36 million pounds.

N.C. May Become Leading Trout Producer

Western Carolina University will soon establish a major aquaculture research center that will help make western North Carolina the leading trout producer in the eastern United States.

A grant of up to $1 million from the N.C. Biotechnology Center in Research Triangle Park will fund the first three years of the Mountain Aquaculture Center. Notification of the initial $100,000 award for the project was received by WCU recently.

The center, which will conduct research, education and economic development projects, will be based primarily at WCU's biology department and the WCU Center for Improving Mountain Living.

The center plans to coordinate its activities with others in the region involved in trout production and trout biology. They include trout growers and food manufacturers, the Cherokee Tribal Council, the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service and Haywood Technical College.

Currently, North Carolina is the nation's second leading producer of commercial trout, with an estimated $8 million in sales last year. Idaho leads the nation in trout sales. Studies indicate the potential market for North Carolina is some $20 million to $30 million per year.

Detailed, practical, illustrated, easy-to-understand guides for trout growers will be produced by the center. The guides should help with pond and hatchery construction, culture of trout, disease, harvesting and other topics.

Tax Contributions Increase

Contributions from income tax refund checkoffs to the state's Nongame and Endangered Species Fund are up 30 percent over the amount received during the same period last year.

According to figures provided to the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission by the N.C. Department of Revenue, collections for the fund totaled $120,468 during the first quarter ending in March 1987. That figure reflects an increase of $36,431 from the same time last year.

The state's income tax refund checkoff for contributions to the Nongame and Endangered Wildlife Fund was enacted by the General Assembly in 1983. Since that time, the number of North Carolinians contributing to the fund has also increased. So far this year, 14,787 taxpayers have contributed, which is 2.1 percent.

Bald eagles, peregrine falcons, Virginia big-eared bats, northern flying squirrels, sea turtles and the Tar River spiny mussels are some of the species which have benefitted from the use of checkoff funds.

License Will Cost Less

Local anglers who fish the fabled waters of South Carolina's Santee-Cooper lakes will pay less this year to do so.

Responding to complaints by out-of-state fishermen and the state's tourism industry, South Carolina officials have established a seven-day fishing license for $11. Last year, out-of-state fishermen paid $20.50 for a 10-day license.

Striper Tournament Set

"Striper" magazine, in cooperation with the Mooresville/South Iredell Chamber of Commerce, has announced that the fourth annual striped bass derby will be held at Lake Norman Saturday and Sunday.

As part of the tournament, a free seminar on striper fishing hosted by Stu Tinney, publisher of the magazine, will be held Friday at 7 p.m. The Lake Norman Striper Swipers Club also will be on hand to give up-to-date information about the fishing.

For more information on weigh-in times and pre-registration, call Don Stutts at Stutts Marina (704-892-9120).

Fishing Trophy Attracts Anglers From All Over

SOLDOTNA, Alaska (AP) — Perched on plastic milk boxes in a car dealership showroom, it doesn't look like much as shrines go. To the unwashed, it would seem nothing more than a glass box and a big dead fish.

But to the faithful, it's an angling Mecca — the place where they keep the earthly remains of "The Fish." From around the world they troop in to gawk at the stuffed fish — to photograph, to videotape, to see for themselves what the sport fishing record 97-pound 4-ounce king salmon looks like.

"That's unbelievable, isn't it?" Pete Kerley of Statesville, N.C., asked as he gawked at the fish recently. "That's just unbelievable."

Within 15 minutes, a dozen others had come in. They were among the more than 5,000 people who paraded into the showroom to look at the trophy last year.

But while the fish may draw crowds, Les Anderson, the man who put it in the record book, says it has not made him rich.

"My life has changed not one bit," he said. "Well, I've got an awful lot of people who want to go fishing with me now. I always have a full boat."

Anderson, 68, has fished the Kenai River southwest of Anchorage for 20 years. He tangled with the big fish early on May 17, 1985, on his first fishing trip of that year. He was drifting the Kenai, using 25-pound test line and a big chartreuse and red Spin-N-Glo, with salmon eggs.

Shortly after 6 a.m., the fish hit. It was landed about 45 minutes later.

Anderson is no stranger to big fish. He estimates he has hauled home 60 to 70 king salmon over the years, and he's released scores of the fish. He says he knew the fish was big when it started stripping line off his reel as it headed upstream against the current.

"But I never really thought it was that big," Anderson said.

He says he guessed its weight at between 70 and 80 pounds. As a result, he was in no rush to weigh his catch. It was not put on a certified scale until about 2 p.m., after one of his employees told him it might beat the record 93 pound king salmon caught in 1977 by Juneau angler Howard Rider.

"I didn't even know there was a world record. I never paid attention to it," he said.

The fish had dehydrated considerably in the seven hours after it was caught. Anderson says by plugging the fish's 58 1/2-inch length and 37 1/2-inch girth into a formula used to determine weight, he's sure it probably would have tipped the scales at slightly more than 102 pounds when caught.

"If I'd have known then what I know now, I'd have weighed it quickly," he said.

Word spread quickly that he had nailed a monster in the Kenai River. The telephone started ringing almost immediately, he says. "I must have told the story 25 times that first day. I lifted the fish so many times by that evening I was exhausted."

He says there was an initial flurry of interest that quickly died. Unexpectedly, there was no stampede of fishing tackle manufacturers looking to cash in on Anderson's record.

"A lot of people think I really did well with it. I haven't. Nobody in the tackle companies really showed any enthusiasm at all. If it had been the world's largest bass, it would have been worth something," Anderson said.

Some fishing authorities speculate that a record largemouth bass would be worth more than $1 million in advertising and endorsement packages.

Anderson attributes the lack of interest to the king salmon being known mostly in the West and Northwest.

He says he's been offered a few deals, but has rejected most, including one from a company that wanted to make fiberglass replicas of the fish to sell at $400 a copy. Anderson estimates he could have made $10,000 on the deal, but he rejected it in favor of saving the skin for mounting.

The lunker was mounted for free by a Washington company that estimated it had $4,000 in time and materials in the job, Anderson said.

He says he got 64 large cans of salmon from his trophy, and $1,000 from a fishing tournament. Anderson says he got another $1,000 from an exposition company just to show the fish at its events.

"Spin-N-Glo sent a box of lures, maybe 100. They said if they could help further to write to them. I didn't," he said.

If the financial rewards were fleeting, so was the fame. Anderson was asked to put on a fishing seminar. Three people showed up. "It was a nice evening," he said.

Anderson put the fish on display at his showroom in June 1986. "It sold two cars right off the bat," he says. "Two people came in to look at the fish and bought cars."

The case containing the huge fish is likely to remain in the showroom, Anderson says.

"It's kind of satisfying to me. When a kid's on his knees, with his nose up against the glass looking into the fish's mouth, it's a real pleasure," he said.

Duck Hunting Declines End

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

Duck hunters in the United States killed 11.31 million birds last season, nearly equal to 1984, ending sharp declines in harvest of the previous two years, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service figures show.

The 1986 kill is only 1 percent less than the 11.42 million birds killed in 1985.

It is still far below the kills of 14.6 million birds in 1984 and 15.4 million birds in 1983.

"That is not a significant decline," said Morton Smith, chief of the branch of operations, U.S. Fish and Wildife Service in Washington. The harvest "was down 27 percent for the United States in 1985."

"The regulations we put into effect for 1986 were to continue the 1985 level of harvest. I would say with the 2 percent change that we did that."

Regulations for this fall's regular seasons won't be worked out until after the annual meetings of the four migratory waterfowl flyway councils at the end of July. Regulations for the early migratory bird seasons, such as the early teal season, are the same as last year, Smith said.

The United States and Canadaian wildlife agencies ran a five-year study of waterfowl from the 1981 through 1985 seasons. During those years, duck populations dropped sharply, in large part because drought on the Canadian prairies sharply reduced the numbers of ducklings which survived the summer.

The poorer hunting may be one reason for a reduction in the number of duck hunters. Duck stamp sales last season were 1.66 million, down 1 percent from 1986, and down from the 1.77 million levels of 1984 and 1983.

The result is a slight improvement in breeding populations, although they are well below the 1955 to 1986 average.

The mallard population rebounded 6 percent, to 6.69 million birds, well below the 8.25 million average and high of 12.9 million in 1958.

But the population of northern pintails, another highly sought species, declined 2 percent, to 3.1 million birds, down from the average of 5.6 million and a high of 10.12 million in 1958.

Green-winged teal continue to show large population growth. This year's population is 3.04 million birds, up 18 percent from last year and up 43 percent from the average of 2.1 million.

Lambiotte Chooses

HARRISONBURG, Va. (AP) — Former North Carolina State forward Walker Lambiotte said Friday he will transfer to Northwestern University.

Lambiotte, who will not be eligible to play for the Big 10 Wildcats until the 1988-89 season, left N.C. State in late May after a season in which his playing time diminished significantly.

"I felt like that with the academic program they have, their coach and the opportunities there for me, Northwestern was a place where I was gonna come out on top," Lambiotte told the Daily News-Record.

"Since I've only got two more years left to play, I wanted to make sure I had a place where I was going to get to play," said Lambiotte, who played his high school ball at Central of Woodstock near here.

Northwestern is coached by Bill Foster.

Lambiotte, 6-foot-7, started 21 of N.C. State's 31 regular-season games last year and averaged six points per game.

He said he never considered Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano's offer last month to return to N.C. State.

Among the schools Lambiotte said he was considering were California, Syracuse, Richmond, Furman and North Carolina-Charlotte.

Getting Ready

Parsons Turns Up Speeds With An Early Fast Lap

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Benny Parsons says Alabama International Motor Speedway isn't quite as breathtaking as it used to be.

Parsons caused a surge in speeds at the high-speed Talladega track in May, 1983, when he turned a lap of 200.176 mph, the first official lap over 200 in NASCAR history.

The speeds have climbed steadily since then, with new track or race qualifying records coming at every Talladega event.

But, thanks to NASCAR's order that its team go to a smaller carburetor for the July 1987 events at Daytona Beach, Fla., and Talladega, the stock cars have slowed down by about 6 or 7 mph since the Winston 500 in May.

Parsons, who turned 46 on July 12, said, "You wouldn't think six or seven miles an hour would make much of a difference at the speeds we're running out there, but it does."

The change in carburetors, which effects only the July 4 Firecracker 400 and Sunday's Talladega 500, came in the wake of a near-disaster here in May. During the Winston 500, Bobby Allison, traveling at about 210 mph, slid sideways, became airborne and tore down about 50 yards of catch-fencing, nearly flying into the crowded grandstand.

"It has worked just the way they wanted it to," said Allison, who was one of 15 drivers to qualify for Sunday's race above 200 — well below last year's 39 or 40 starters over 200.

"The cars were slower at Daytona, they're slower here and the racing should be, just like at Daytona, very competitive," Allison said.

Bill Elliott, who earned his sixth pole of the season and a record sixth straight at Talladega, had a fast lap of 203.827, compared to his 209.005 a year ago.

"The only difference is entering the corners," explained Parsons, who qualified 19th at 199.272. "It just doesn't take your breath away in the corners now.

"Now, you drive in the corner and feel like you're gonna come out the other side. At 209 or 210, you wonder if you're gonna make it. Your mind was talking to you, asking 'do you really want to do this?'"

In practice Friday, with some of the faster drivers drafting together, the speeds were just above 202, compared to drafts at around 207 in the May race.

"That's probably what we're gonna see at the start of the race," said Darrell Waltrip, who was in the fastest draft on Friday. "Then, depending on the weather and how the track conditions are, it'll slow down maybe four or five miles an hour."

Allison, who won the slowed-down Firecracker and will start seventh here Sunday, added, "I think the fans are going to see a furious race with a lot of cars going for it at the end."

Michael Waltrip, Darrell's younger brother, paced Friday's round of qualifying. He was one of only four drivers who chose to make a qualifying attempt on Friday rather than standing on the laps posted in the opening round of time trials on Thursday.

The younger Waltrip improved from 198.656 mph, which was good for 21st in Sunday's 40-car lineup.

Cale Yarborough improved from 197.757 to 199.297, taking the 22nd starting position, while Dale Jarrett, the son of retired NASCAR champion Ned Jarrett, moved from 40th to 37th with an improvement from 191.1440 to ;193.318.

Mac Is Disappointed In Crowd's Cheering

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Not only did John McEnroe feel compelled to play tennis well for his country, but he also thought it was his patriotic duty to lead the crowd in cheering.

Unfortunately, he wasn't able to do either to his satisfaction in his Davis Cup match against West German Boris Becker.

After losing the six-hour, 38-minute match, McEnroe said he was disappointed about the ambivalence of the crowd Friday at the Hartford Civic Center and of American fans overall toward international play.

"It's unfortunate about what happens in Davis Cup here," he said. "A quarter of the people are left at the end of one of the greatest matches I've ever played in and half the people are rooting for a guy from another country."

McEnroe constantly waved his arms in the air in attempts to excite the crowd, which numbered about 11,902 at the beinning of the match. They would respond momentarily, but quiet down just as quickly until McEnroe egged them on again.

By the end of the match at 11:17 p.m. EDT, more than half of the fans had left.

Early in the second set, after McEnroe had won the first set 6-4, someone in the crowd cheered when his volley fell weakly into the net. It was difficult to tell which angered McEnroe more, the shot or the fan.

"You quit clapping when I miss a shot. Where do you think you are?," he asked, waving a finger at the man.

McEnroe went on to win the point but lost the grueling 2½-hour set, 15-13. He came back to win the third set 10-8 before running out of gas and losing the final two 6-2, 6-2.

"I thought I was doing a good job of pumping up the crowd in a positive way for myself and making everybody feel good," he said.

"But I have only so much energy. I had to save something for the match. I couldn't worry about the crowd all the time."

Becker became visibly annoyed at the lengths to which McEnroe went to stir the crowd. At one point they gestured as if to challenge each other.

"Basically, we're people in two different situations," McEnroe said. "In the future I hope he'll come to understand what I'm about. He certainly doesn't now."

McEnroe said he believes he was partly to blame for the apathetic response of the crowd in that his reputation may have swayed people against him.

But he also said he believes many fans that attend tennis matches in the United States do so more out of curiosity than for love of the game.

"For people here, it's entertainment. At 7 o'clock they have to go out to dinner. That's more important than the tennis match," he said.

"I would like to thank the people who stayed and did the best they could."

McEnroe's loss and that of Tim Mayotte — to Eric Jelen — puts the U.S. one defeat short of regelation to zonal play. The countries play a doubles match today and reverse singles on Sunday.

Where's The Support?

Orioles Earn No Runs, Just Wins

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The Baltimore Orioles are finding it tough scoring earned runs against the Kansas City Royals. But beating them is another story.

For the second straight game, the Orioles couldn't get an earned run off Kansas City's pitchers — but still managed to beat the Royals 3-1 Friday night and extend their winning streak to 10 games.

"It seems like that old thing where the ball bounces well for you when you're in a good streak," Baltimore shortstop Cal Ripken, Jr. said. "I don't know if you can make your own breaks, sometimes you need a little help."

The Orioles' latest victory over the Royals was fashioned with the help of Kansas City errors that allowed three runs to score in the eighth inning.

Elsewhere in the American League, it was Chicago 5, New York 2; Boston 5, Seattle 4; Texas 6, Cleveland 3; Detroit 6, California 3; Milwaukee 10, Oakland 2, and Toronto 8, Minnesota 6.

Kansas City's pitching staff extended its streak of not allowing an earned run to 28 innings, but it hasn't done the Royals much good. They lost 2-1 to the Orioles on Thursday before giving away another game to baseball's hottest team Friday night.

With the Royals clinging to a 1-0 lead, Larry Sheets opened the inning with only the fifth hit off Kansas City starter Bud Black.

Black was lifted for Steve Farr, who wound up blowning the save for the fourth time in last five opportunities. Farr walked Terry Kennedy. Farr then fielded a bunt by Ken Gerhart, tried for a force at third base and threw the ball into left field, allowing the tying run to score.

Rookie John Davis replaced Farr and walked pinch-hitter Jim Dwyer intentionally. Then after Billy Ripken hit into a forceout, Cal Ripken hit a line drive to left. But Bo Jackson dropped it, allowing two more runs to score.

"I'm not getting depressed, but it's just a tough way to go down to defeat," said Kansas City Manager Billy Gardner, whose Royals have lost 13 of their last 16 games."Our pitching has been outstanding, but we just can't get any runs across."

Tom Niedenfuer, who came into the game in the eighth inning, picked up his second win in four decisions. Farr, who has allowed 11 of the last 14 inherited runners to score, dropped to 3-3.

The Royals took a 1-0 lead in the first with successive one-out singles off Mike Flanagan by Kevin Seitzer, George Brett and Danny Tartabull.

White Sox 5, Yankees 2

Harold Baines' three-run homer and a solo shot by Carlton Fisk powered Chicago.

The White Sox snapped a three-game losing streak and handed the East Division-leading Yankees their third straight defeat, matching their longest losing streak of the season. The New York lead dropped to 1½ games over Toronto.

Baines' homer was his 16th and third in as many games and extended his hitting streak to 18 games, currently the longest in the major leagues.

Floyd Bannister, 5-9, was the winner and Steve Trout, 0-2, suffered his second straight defeat in as many starts since for the Yankees.

Red Sox 5, Mariners 4

Don Baylor's sixth-inning homer, his first in more than a month, led Boston over Seattle and kept the Red Sox from sinking 10 games under .500 for the first time in 11 years. It gave them a 44-52 record.

Baylor hit the first pitch of the inning from Lee Guetterman, 8-2, over the left field wall at Fenway Park to break a 4-4 tie. It was his 15th homer of the season and first since June 23.

Bruce Hurst, 11-6, allowed seven hits, struck out seven and walked one as he tied Kansas City's Bret Saberhagen for the American League lead with 11 complete games.

Rangers 6, Indians 3

Pete Incaviglia snapped an eighth-inning tie with a run-scoring double and Bob Brower and Larry Parrish hit two-run homers for Texas.

Steve Carlton, 5-9, walked Scott Fletcher, leading off the Texas eighth. One out later, Incaviglia doubled to score Sierra and give the Rangers a 4-3 lead. Doug Jones came on to face Parrish, who hit the first pitch for his 22nd home run.

Jeff Russell, 4-1, gained the victory with 1 2-3 scoreless innings in relief. Dale Mohorcic pitched the last two innings for his 14th save.

Carlton became the seventh pitcher in major league history to start 700 games. The 42-year old left-hander yielded seven hits in 7 1-3 innings.

Tigers 6, Angels 3

Lou Whitaker and Kirk Gibson sparked a three-run eighth inning with doubles, to lead Detroit.

Whitaker doubled home Mike Heath with the tie-breaking run to put the Tigers up 4-3. Heath had reached second base on a single and a throwing error by losing pitcher Chuck Finley, 2-4.

Tom Brookens reached first on an infield single and Gibson brought Brookens and Whitaker home with a double to give the Tigers a 6-3 lead.

Mike Henneman, 7-0, got the victory with three innings of one-hit relief. Loser Jack Morris, 12-4, was trying for the third time for his 13th victory.

Brewers 10, Athletics 2

Robin Yount doubled in the go-ahead run in the fifth inning and Steve Keifer's three-run homer keyed a four-run seventh for Milwaukee.

Juan Nieves, 7-6, allowed six hits in seven innings before getting relief help from Mark Clear. The Brewers backed them with a 17-hit attack that also included solo homers by Ernest Riles and Glenn Braggs.

The only run allowed by Nieves came on Steve Henderson's first homer that gave the Athletics a 1-0 lead in the fourth. Riles' homer with two out in the bottom of the inning off Steve Ontiveros, 5-4, tied the game.

The Brewers took the lead for good in the fifth on Yount's RBI double, his third hit of the game. Milwaukee added two runs in the sixth before putting the game away with their in the seventh as Keifer hit Milwaukee's first pinch-hit homer since 1983.

Blue Jays 8, Twins 6

Juan Beniquez and Rick Leach hit three-run homers in the seventh inning to lead Toronto.

The Blue Jays scored seven times in the inning to overcome a 6-1 deficit in a game delayed by rain three times for a total of two hours and 16 minutes.

Tony Fernandez first scored on George Bell's sacrifice fly with the bases loaded before Beniquez, pinch-hitting for Rance Mulliniks, greeted reliever Dan Schatzeder with his fourth homer.

After pinch-hitter Charlie Moore walked, Jeff Reardon, 5-5, relieved and gave up a single to pinch-hitter Willie Upshaw prior to Leach's homer.

Mark Eichhorn, 9-5, allowed three hits in 3 1-3 innings for the victory. Tom Henke finished up for his 20th save.

Minnesota scored five times in the fourth off Blue Jays starter Jose Nunez to break a 1-1 tie.

Phillies Finally Turn The Corner

By BRIAN TRUSDELL
AP Sports Writer

It was supposed to be a contending season for the Philadelphia Phillies. But 95 games into it, a major accomplishment was getting over the .500 mark for the first time.

And it took the old and the new to get there.

Mike Schmidt had a double and two singles and drove in three runs while Juan Samuel homered and tripled to knock in three runs Friday night, pacing Philadelphia to an 11-5 victory over the Atlanta Braves. It raised the Phillies' record to 48-47, 13½ games behind St. Louis in the National League East.

"I really had a good night hitting," Schmidt said. "I hit four times to right field, and I was trying to go that way. It was situation hitting, scoring the runner from third, staying out of a double play, things like that."

In other games, New York swept a doubleheader from Houston, 5-2 and 7-4, Montreal edged Cincinnati 3-2, Pittsburgh beat San Diego 3-2, Chicago overcame Los Angeles 6-4 and San Francisco beat St. Louis 4-3.

It was like the Phillies wanted to make sure they got over .500, batting around twice in the first three innings.

"We just got our butts kicked tonight," Praves Manager Chuck Tanner said. "That's all there is to it.

"We came back and then they came back. You don't worry about games like that. We just got whipped. Schmidt got timely hits and played a great third base like he always does."

But Samuel took equal billing with his older teammate.

Samuel increased his RBI total to 67, one ahead of Schmidt, and rasied his home run total to 20, one behind Schmidt.

"I'm not chasing Mike," said Samuel, whose triple was his eighth and tied him with Tony Gwynn for the league lead. "We all know what kind of player he is. I'm just trying to do my job, do things to help the club win."

Michael Jackson and Jeff Calhoun each allowed one hit splitting the final 3 1-3 innings, after Bruce Ruffin, 8-7, gave up five runs on 10 hits in 5 2-3 innings.

Philadelphia took a 3-0 lead in the first on Von Hayes' RBI double, an errant throw by Gary Roenicke and an RBI single by Schmidt.

Atlanta came back to take a 4-3 lead in the second on a run-scoring double by Glenn Hubbard, Albert Hall's two-run single, and a wild pitch.

The Phillies scored four times in the third off Rick Mahler, 6-9, including Samuel's two-run triple. The Phillies added three runs in the sixth on Schmidt's two-run double and Chris James' one-run double. Samuel capped the scoring with a solo homer in the seventh.

Mets 5, Astros 2
Mets 7, Astros 4

Sid Fernandez pitched a five-hitter over eight-plus innings in the first game and Tim Teufel hit a three-run homer and drove in four runs in the nightcap.

Dave Magadan went five for five and Howard Johnson hit his 23rd homer, a solo shot, in the second game. John Mitchell, 2-2, allowed four runs and five hits in five innings. Jesse Orosco pitched the final two innings his 14th save. Bob Knepper, 3-12, lost his decision in a row, allowing four runs on seven hits in three innings.

In the first game, Len Dykstra hit a run-scoring single to break a fifth-inning tie and Fernandez, 10-6, won for the first time since June 21. Roger McDowell got the final three outs for his 13th save.

Pirates 3, Padres 2

Mike Dunne, John Smiley and Brett Gideon combined on a seven-hitter and Johnny Ray's two-out, two-run double broke a 1-1 fifth inning tie to lift Pittsburgh over San Diego.

Dunne, 6-4, gave up seven hits in seven innings for his third straight victory. Smiley pitched the eighth and Gideon the ninth, neither allowing a hit. It was Gideon's second save.

Expos 3, Reds 2

Neal Heaton and Tim Burke combined on a six-hitter to help Montreal snap a three-game losing streak.

Heaton, 11-4, allowed all six hits over 7 2-3 innings. He struck out a season-high nine and walked one. Burke got Eric Davis to ground out with men on first and second with two outs in the eighth and then finished the game for his ninth save.

Giants 4, Cardinals 3

Mike Aldrete hit an RBI triple to break a 1-1 tie and later scored, pacing San Francisco over St. Louis and ending the Cardinals' four-game winning streak.

Atlee Hammaker, 6-7, allowed six hits in six innings before Jeff Robinson pitched the final three for his 10th save.

Rick Horton suffered his first loss since April 30, 1986, ending a personal nine-game winning streak.

Cubs 6, Dodgers 4

Andre Dawson hit a two-run seventh-inning homer to lift Chicago over Los Angeles and give the Dodgers' their sixth straight loss.

Dawson's 26th homer of the season came off reliever Tim Leary, 1-6. Los Angeles' Rick Honeycutt, who left with a 4-3 lead after five innings, remained winless in 12 starts, a streak that includes nine losses and three no-decisions since May 12.

Hollingsworth Signs With PCC

Paul Hollingsworth of Greenville has signed to play basketball at Pitt Community College for the upcoming season, PCC Athletic Director Charles Coburn announced Friday.

Hollingsworth is the 1987 recipent of the Charles Coburn Athletic Scholarship.

Hollingsworth averaged 18.2 points and eight rebounds a game during the past season.

"I was very impressed with Paul's overall athletic ability and even though our games will be more up-tempo, I think that he will have no problem adjusting to team play at PCC," Coburn said.

Hollingsworth has enrolled in the pre-liberal arts program and plans to transfer after two years to ECU.

Jackson Died From Weakened Heart

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A heart weakened by birth defects — not cocaine use — killed University of Texas-El Paso basketball player Hernell "Jeep" Jackson, a medical examiner says.

Jackson, 23, collapsed during a benefit basketball game May 2 and was dead within an hour. A preliminary autopsy showed he had used cocaine the night before, and that the drug could have been a factor in the heart attack.

But on Friday, Manny Diaz, chief investigator for the El Paso County Medical Examiner's office, said further investigation showed Jackson was born with small scars on his heart and an enlarged artery.

It was those defects that slowed the blood flow to his heart and caused it to stop beating, Diaz said.

"All I can say is cocaine was not a contributing factor to his death," Diaz said, adding that it is impossible to know exactly what precipitated the heart attack.

Jackson's father, Mason, told the El Paso Times in a telephone interview from the family home in Carson, Calif., that he had believed all along that drugs were not a cause.

"I was in El Paso last week and talked to the coroner, and he was telling me about the heart," he said. "We had our fingers crossed ... that it was a heart attack, since it (the official report) was taking so long."

Dr. Jerry Miller, an El Paso cardiologist, said a rare birth defect such as Jackson's would have been difficult to detect before his death.

Miller said the problem could have been detected only by inserting a catheter into Jackson's chest. He added that if he were treating an athlete with such birth defects, he would order the athlete to stop competition.

The autopsy results came from John Smialek, the Maryland state medical examiner who conducted the autopsy on University of Maryland basketball star Len Bias, who died last summer of cocaine intoxication.

Diaz said Smialek phoned in the results last week, and the autopsy report arrived in the mail Friday. The report will not be made available to the public until Monday.

Soon after Jackson's death, El Paso County Medical Examiner Juan Contin said he had found the abnormal artery and "very small scars in the muscle of the heart." But he said it was difficult to assess to what extent they contributed to the athlete's death.

Contin did not specify how many hours elapsed between the cocaine use and Jackson's death. He ruled out cocaine use shortly before death because no unprocessed cocaine was found in the athlete's system.

Prep Track Awards

DURHAM — Aproximately 300 of North Carolina's top high school track and field athletes, including six area students, received the 1987 Glaxo Leadership Award during ceremonies Saturday at Duke University's Coombes baseball stadium.

"The 1987 Glaxo leadership award recognizes the finest track and field student-athletes our state has to offer," said Jennifer McMillian, director of public affairs for Glaxo. "These young men and women have shown leadership not only on the athletic field but in the classroom and in their community as well."

The Glaxo leadership award recipients were chosen by a panel of teachers and adminstrators at their schools. The recipients, their coaches and invited guests were honored with a luncheon and an awards ceremony after which they attended the track and field events of the 1987 U.S. Olympic Festival as Glaxo's guests.

Guest speakers for the awards ceremony were former Duke All-American Mike Gminski, who currently plays for the NBA's New Jersey Nets, and Willie Banks, the world record holder in triple jump.

Area students selected were Eric Blount and Elizabeth Betts from Ayden-Grifton High School, Mark Simmons and Sharla Richards from D.H. Conley High School, Tyrone Joyner from Farmville Central High School Tyrone Joyner and Terrell Strong from Greene Central High School.

PCC Hosts Tourney

Pitt Community College will host a 32 team double elimination men's softball tournament at Evans Park in Greenville over the Labor Day weekend.

Trophies will be awarded for first, second, third and fourth places. First and second place teams will also receive individual trophies. Most valuable player trophies and sportsmanship trophies will also be awarded.

There will be a $75 entry fee per team and each team must furnish two softballs.

For more information, contact Charles Coburn, PCC athletic director, at 756-3130, extension 212 (work) or 524-4949 at home. All proceeds from the tournament will go to the Pitt Community College Athletic Program.

Buckner To Minnesota?

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Bill Buckner, who recently was released by the Boston Red Sox, will sign with the Minnesota Twins next week if he clears waivers, his wife said.

Texas Rangers Manager Bobby Valentine told reporters before the Rangers played Cleveland Friday that Buckner's wife, Jody, told him the 37-year-old first baseman expects to be the Twins designated hitter, the Minneapolis Star and Tribune reported Saturday.

That was news to Twins Executive Vice President Andy MacPhail.

GCC Holds Its Junior Tourney

Results from Thursday's Junior Club Championship at Greenville Country Club Thursday:

In the 9 and under, Michael Fulp won. Neil Baggett took top honors in the 10-year old age group. Matthew Dellasega was the runnerup in the 10-year old division.

In the 11-year old age group, Robert Fulp took top honors while Chad Aldridge was the runnerup.

First place in the 12-13 year old age group was Brooks Honeycutt while Josh Howard was the runnerup.

Camilla Brown was the low scorer in the 14-year-old age group. Brad Carter was the runnerup. First place in the 15-year-old age group went to Robert Baggett. Second place went to Mark Honeycutt.

First place in the 16-17 year-old age group went to Cam Smith. Charles Cox was th runnerup.

In the superball tournament Thursday, the winning team was Cam Dudley, Lawton Nisbet and Ray Edwards. Second place went to Gordon Fulp, Duff Harris and Buddy Holt.

Broncos' Foley Announces His Retirement At Age 33

GREELEY, Colo. (AP) — Steve Foley, a fixture in the Denver Broncos' secondary for 11 seasons and the team's all-time leading interceptor, announced his retirement on Friday.

Foley, 33, was one of only three Broncos to have started all 10 postseason games in club history, including Super Bowls XII and XXI. He finished his career with 44 interceptions, which ranked third among active players in the NFL heading into the 1987 season.

Last year, he intercepted two passes and was in on 92 tackles, the latter figure tops among all Bronco defensive backs.

A quarterback at Tulane, Foley was drafted by the Broncos in 1975 but opted instead for the World Football League. He was shifted to defensive back at Jacksonville and came to Denver in 1976.

Originally a cornerback with the Broncos, Foley made the move to free safety in 1980. He did not miss a game from 1978-81, but suffered a broken arm in the 1982 season opener and missed the remainder of that season.

"I think this is the right time for me to leave," Foley said at an impromptu press conference following the team's morning practice.

"It has been totally enjoyable except for a couple of years where I was nicked up pretty good."

He cited his current good health, his declining desire to play the game, and the improvement of backup free safety Tony Lilly as factors in his decision.

"I've got two good knees right now," he said. "I've never had a knee operation. I can still run and I've got about 50 years left to enjoy with my kids.

"I first started thinking about retirement after the Super Bowl. Mentally it's hard to keep your desire going. I though I would wait in the off-season to see if the desire was still there. It isn't.

"Tony is able to stand on his own. I think he'll be a great player. That's another reason I felt comfortable leaving.

"I always wondered when you would know if it's time to retire. This year I know. I just know.

"Everything I had I left on the field. I have no regrets whatsoever."

Foley didn't disclose his long-range plans, but said he will take his family on a long vacation to Wyoming and Montana and do some elk hunting this fall.

"He was as good a safety as I've ever been around," said Head Coach Dan Reeves. "He was a great tackler, he had an instinct for the ball, he had tremendous hands — he was just a great athlete. Without great speed he played well at cornerback, too. He did what he was asked to do."

Reeves said the Broncos would miss Foley's leadership. "It's easier to replace guys physically than to replace the intangibles," he said.

Foley worked closely with Lilly in recent years, and Reeves said Lilly's rapid development "had a lot to do with that association."

Reeves said the Broncos would consider moving cornerback Mike Harden to Foley's vacated position, depending on the play of veteran cornerback Mark Haynes. But defensive coordinator Joe Collier insisted the job was Lilly's.

"Tony is the starter," Collier said. "We'll probably work Randy Robbins some there, too. Mike Harden has been a safety, but I don't think we will go that route now."

Foley is Denver's third defensive starter to retire since last season. Nose tackle Rubin Carter has become a coach, and linebacker Tom Jackson will go into broadcasting.

Craven County Hospital, in cooperation with Lenoir Memorial and Onslow Memorial Hospitals, is bringing this area the most advanced technology developed in the last 25 years.

It's called Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI).

Housed in a large van, the MRI unit will serve Craven, Lenoir, and Onslow counties, as well as the surrounding areas. Providing physicians with pictures of the human anatomy that are startling in their clarity.

When patients undergo an MRI scan, they enter a magnetic field 25,000 times greater than the earth's. But they don't feel a thing. A sophisticated computer uses the combination of magnetism and radio waves to create accurate photographic images of the body.

Unlike X-rays, MRI images are three-dimensional. They don't use radiation. And while a CT scan highlights bones, MRI "hides" them, allowing a cleaner picture of soft tissue such as the brain and spine.

MRI will allow doctors to make faster and more accurate diagnoses. And when surgery is required, MRI pinpoints the affected area.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging. Like cooperation between neighboring hospitals, it's attracting a lot of attention.

Lorenzo's Airline Venture Still Flying Low

By MARIANN CAPRINO
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Fancy Frank Lorenzo as a mad scientist, stitching together unmatched parts to form a creature called Texas Air Corp. that at times has seemed unwieldy, lumbering and a little out of control.

Lorenzo began his grand experiment in 1982 with his acquisition of Continental Airlines. But the laboratory has heated up since January when he attached People Express, New York Air and Frontier Airlines.

One industry observer said Lorenzo, chairman of the Houston-based conglomerate, "has a hell of a tough job ahead of him in bringing all the pieces of that thing together in one homogeneous whole."

The strain was evident again this past week when Texas Air posted a larger-than-expected loss and Continental's top executive was fired.

Analysts, customers and travel agents alike agree that the greatest challenge facing the company is to bring an aura of reliability to Continental.

"The biggest problem is the fact that they're late," said Orly Jellinek, a vacation counselor at Thomas Cook Travel in New York. "If I can find my customers another airline at the same rate and the same time, I will definitely switch."

One day this past week, Jellinek said that "just 10 minutes ago" a customer chose Delta Air Lines over Continental, despite the recent spate of air-safety problems at Delta.

But Texas Air spokesman Richard Scott said the company's own internal quality checks have shown "dramatic improvements" in on-time departures, on-time arrivals, the number of canceled flights and in baggage problems since the consolidation earlier this year.

Scott noted that airline complaints in general are up sixfold this year at the Department of Transportation, and that increased consumer criticism of Continental is merely part of a larger trend.

Despite the problems at Continental, travel agents admit the company is hard to avoid. With major hubs in Houston, Denver, Newark, Cleveland and Dulles International in Washington, D.C., the airline has "an excellent route system," said Edward Starkman, an airline analyst with PaineWebber Inc.

And coupled with a new reservation linkup announced Friday, the airline will have greater access to travel agents in Europe. Texas Air said it will link up with Amadeus, the reservation system of high-profile foreign carriers including Air France, Lufthansa, Iberia and the Scandinavian Airlines System.

While the company's problems are much more immediate to the hysterical passenger whose luggage has been lost or who can't get home for a family reunion, analysts are more willing to give Lorenzo time to fuse his airline companies.

"I think they have tremendous potential," said Starkman. "It's just a function of time and training." And it will take time.

Texas Air has to worry not only about maintaining its 20 percent market share, the highest in the industry, but also about hanging on to key executives. With the firing of Continental President Thomas Plaskett on Tuesday, observers began referring to the revolving door at the executive suite. He is only the most recent in a string of executives to leave the company.

Plaskett, who had served at the helm of Continental for only eight mnths, was highly regarded as an excellent manager with a long line of successes. Plaskett had served as senior vice president for marketing at American Airlines, which he joined in 1974.

His departure sent tremors through the industry. Some speculated Plaskett clashed with Lorenzo, while others felt he may have been unable to adapt to Texas Air's freewheeling management style, which often requires quick decision-making in the face of continuous crises.

"That takes a certain personality," Starkman said. "Some people don't like to deal in a quick-action environment. Someone who came out of American — which is more staid and traditional, where there's more time to make decisions —could be very uncomfortable" at Texas Air, he said.

Despite his well-known disdain for having to play the role of a hands-on manager, Lorenzo said he will run Continental in the wake of Plaskett's departure.

The announcement of Plaskett's firing came a day after Texas Air posted a $27 million, second-quarter loss. Continental alone lost $71.1 million, up from the $56.8 million it lost in the year-ago quarter.

Passenger traffic was relatively light at Continental, and the airline's load factor was below the industry average at 63.3 percent.

But that figure did not alarm analysts, who noted that the industry average was only 65.3 percent in June. Another of Continental's cousins in the Texas Air clan, Eastern Airlines, also posted a below-average load factor for June of 64.6 percent, Starkman said.

But Eastern, which Texas Air acquired in November 1986 and operates as an independent subsidiary, reported a $27.1 million profit for the second quarter, compared with a $44 million loss a year ago.

The great irony in the earnings discrepancies stems from the fact that wage costs at non-union Continental are significantly lower than at Eastern, which is unionized.

Still, analysts are optimistic about Texas Air's future. "They're not unaware of their problems, and they're doing what they can to solve them," said Starkman.

In other business news during the week:

—Chairman Carl C. Icahn proposed a plan to take Trans World Airlines Inc. private in a deal with an indicated value of about $1.2 billion.

—General Electric Co. said it will sell its $3 billion consumer electronics business to France's Thomson S.A. GE will receive Thomson's medical equipment business and an estimated $800 million in cash.

—Westwood One Inc. agreed to buy NBC Radio Networks for $50 million, an acquisition that would make Westwood the nation's second-biggest radio network.

—Pennzoil Co. unveiled a reorganization plan for rival Texaco Inc. that included a proposed $4.1 billion settlement of their legal battle over Getty Oil Co., but a federal judge later gave Texaco a 120-day extension on its exclusive right to file a Chapter 11 reorganization plan. Meanwhile, the Securities and Exchange Commission filed a court brief contending Pennzoil Co. violated federal securities law in its alleged contract to acquire Getty Oil.

—British conglomerate Smiths Industries PLC has agreed to pay $350 million for part of Lear Siegler's aerospace holdings.

—Kenner Parker Toys Inc. rejected a $401.8 million takeover bid by New World Pictures Inc. and asked regulators to investigate possible illegal manipulation of its stock.

—The Henley Group, which went public only 14 months ago after being spun off from Allied-Signal Inc., said it would buy back 24 percent of its stock for $700 million and also is seeking to increase its take in Santa Fe Southern Pacific Corp. to 25 percent, which could cost about $1.66 billion.

—International Business Machines Corp. formed a new division that will develop and acquire application software for all IBM computer models.

—Outgoing Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker and Alan Greenspan, the man nominated to replace him, appeared separately before congressional panels to discuss the economy. Greenspan promised to keep up the fight against inflation Volcker began eight years ago.

—The Treasury canceled its weekly auction of short-term securities because Congress failed to increase the federal government's debt limit.

—Union officials announced tentative agreement on a 40-month contract for 580,000 U.S. Postal Service workers following round-the-clock bargaining.

—The gross national product rose 2.6 percent in the second quarter, down from the 4.4 percent increase it posted in the previous quarter.

—Consumer prices rose at an annual rate of 5.4 percent for the first half of 1987, while the gain in June was a moderate 0.4 percent.

—The federal government's budget deficit shrank to $420 million in June and was $119.4 billion for the first nine months of the fiscal year, down 28 percent from the year-ago period.

—Orders for "big ticket" durable goods rose 1.4 percent in June.

Outside World Turbulence Takes Toll On Stock Market

By JOYCE M. ROSENBERG
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market, which for months has immersed itself in ledgers and reams of economic statistics and ignored outside events, has taken a look at the recent goings-on in the world — and decided it didn't like what it saw.

This past week, as the market floundered in a mostly indecisive mode, analysts said traders were hesitant because of Persian Gulf tensions. On Wednesday, the U.S. Navy began escorting Kuwaiti oil tankers in the gulf past the threat of Iranian attack.

The previous week, some analysts called the market cautious because of the then-impending testimony of Rear Adm. John Poindexter at the Iran-Contra hearings on Capitol Hill.

This marked a change from months of the fascination with nothing but earnings reports, bond prices and economic figures.

"There are different things in each" of the news events to disturb the market, said Hugh Johnson, senior vice president with First Albany Corp.

But, he said, it all comes back to the economy.

"The Persian Gulf events could interrupt the flow of oil," said Johnson. "That would hurt particularly the West Germans and the Japanese."

"That will hurt their economy and their investors and boy, we need their investors," he said.

Problems in the Middle East also carry the specter of higher oil prices — and consequently, higher costs for all goods and services — in the United States.

But Michael Metz, an analyst with Oppenheimer & Co., said traders had bigger fears.

"It's not just the possible interruption of oil supplies, it's almost an open-ended political disturbance," he said.

"It's an explosive situation," said Metz. "God knows what it touches off."

The Iran-Contra affair made traders nervous, Johnson said, because they were afraid it could frighten away foreign investors.

"Foreign investors tend to feel comfortable in our markets," said Johnson. "They feel there's more stability in the political system here" than in other countries.

If President Reagan had been further implicated in the affair, it could have undermined his administration and this could have scared off those investors, Johnson said.

He also suggested the Iran-Contra affair could give the Democratic Party "good ammunition" and called that prospect "awful for the markets."

Democrats "like regulation, they like government spending on people who need the money," said Johnson.

"The financial markets don't want any of that," he said.

However, some analysts say external events do not drive the market.

"The markets have their own internal momentum, their own internal rhythm," said A.C. Moore, research director for Argus Research Corp.

Moore said the markets will not react to external pressures unless they have a direct impact on money or the economy, and therefore, few outside events will affect trading.

Attributing the market's direction to particular news events are "easy answers," said Moore.

"They're not reasons why people commit a billion dollars."

Dow Jones's average of 30 blue chips closed Friday at 2,485.33, down 24.71 from the week before, when it closed above 2,500 for the first time.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index ended the week at 173.70, down 2.97. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 347.45, down 6.00.

Volume on the Big Board averaged 170.28 million shares a day, against 192.29 million the previous week.

The stock market also was concerned this past week with an international event closer to traders' own milieu.

Prices plummeted early in the week on the Tokyo stock exchange and then soared Thursday and Friday. What happens in Japanese stocks matters here.

Japanese traders are "likely to feel better about our markets" when stocks are up in Tokyo, Johnson said.

Furthermore, "a large decline (in Tokyo) suggests that some real damage has been done to the world economy," said Johnson.

"The bull argument is, when the Japanese market is down, they will shift money here," said Metz. "But if the market cracks, they won't have any money to shift anywhere."

Whether an event is economic in nature or not, Wall Street will be concerned, because, as Metz put it: "At 2,500 there's no margin for error. Everything must go right for the market to stay at that level."

PAY PHONES PAY — Nationwide there are already 100,000 privately owned or leased coin-operated telephones, and the number is growing, according to the Houston-based Pay Phone Magazine. It has been predicttd that a boom in private pay phones, an intimate fixture of American life which has changed little for most of its 100 years, will double the number of public pay phones in America in the next 5 years. Fast-Growing Firm Looks To Be Best, Not Biggest

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Roberts Welding Contractors Inc., ranked among the 500 fastest growing privately-owned companies in America for three consecutive years by Inc. Magazine, puts integrity before profits, the firm's president says.

"We don't want to be the biggest construction company in the area, but we sure want to be the best," said John Roberts, owner and president of the industrial contractors located on N.C. 11 near Winterville. "That's the way we want the people to look at us."

Roberts Welding, which was founded by Roberts in 1977, first cracked the Inc. 500 list in 1984 when it was ranked 456. In 1985, the company moved up to 185, but dropped to 270 last year, according to Roberts, who said he expects the company to rebound to a higher rating for 1987.

"I expect to be in there this year around 155," said Roberts, 36, a native of Raleigh. "I forecast we will double what we produced last year. We're back on a growth pattern to do approximately $8 million this year."

The company, which employs about 135 employees, is licensed as general, electrical, plumbing, heating and air conditioning contractors and has a variety of American Society of Mechanical Engineering code certifications, according to Roberts, who said the firm handles a wide range of industrial applications.

"We have code certifications from the ASME code division which qualifies us to build pressure vessels or pressure piping or repairs or assemblies and virtually every pressure application except nuclear," he said.

"We do virtually anything there is to be done on an industrial site. We'll build anything from an acid tank ... to pouring concrete foundations to hooking wiring for computer operated equipment to hooking up entire computer systems for any applications."

Roberts Welding has the capabilities to build entire plants, Roberts said. "Our largest projects would be turnkey industrial projects building an entire plant site," Roberts said. "Granted we won't be building $200 million plant sites any time soon, but the $20 (million) to $30 million plant sites we could tackle.

On several occasions, company officials have misjudged estimates due to the wide scope of possibilities, according to Roberts.

"We do quite a few jobs where we'll get involved in a job not knowing how to price it, and it therefore leads to a loss situation," he said. "But we are sure that every job we've done has the same amount of quality whether we're losing money on it or making money on it.

"You still have your integrity to stand by. That's the thing we've knuckled through over the years. Now we're learning how to price jobs a little bit better, but we still do the high quality work. That's our whole reputation around here."

In spite of the firm's success, Roberts, the son of a plumbing contractor, wasn't particularly interested in being an industrial contractor when he entered East Carolina University in 1969.

"I was born and reared a contractor's son," he said. "My father was a plumbing and heating contractor in Raleigh and started us all working for him just as soon as we were old enough to carry a pipe wrench."

"He worked us all hard every summer, so when I got up into high school, I quit working for the old man because I couldn't stand working for him. He was such a tyrant, but I started working for other companies and enjoyed the construction but came down here to get prerequisites so that I could transfer back to (North Carolina) State and go into veterinary medicine."

However, Roberts soon found out his aptitudes weren't in the scientific field.

"After a couple of years of it here, I was doing poorly in the sciences but loved getting out of school to go to the job," he said. "One day I was out doing a real nasty job rodding out a sewer line for a company I was working for and the light bulb came on — there I was doing the nastiest job you could imagine and didn't mind it.

"The revelation came about: 'shucks man go for it, go into construction, that's what you love, that's what you enjoy the most. You've got the aptitude for it.' I had the business background growing up coming from the old man."

After that day, Roberts went back to ECU, changed his major to business and his grades improved markedly.

"I thoroughly enjoyed it from that time on, and I had the plan in mind from that very day to own my own construction company, to run it well, how I wanted to and to strive to be the best contractor in the area," he said. "That was the plan. That's always been the plan."

After graduating from East Carolina in 1974 with a bachelor's degree in business, Roberts' plan began to slowly take shape.

"Upon graduation, I stayed in the industrial circuit until I learned enough to go out and ... start my own business," he said. "I started going around as a welder for anybody I could do business with. I started the business April 10 years ago, with a pickup truck and a welding machine."

Roberts operated the business from a rather nondescript location before moving to the present facilities he built with his own crews in 1986.

"We were located in a little garage-type building off of highway 33," he said. "At that time, we were mainly on-site industrial contractors. So we were pretty obscure to the public until we built this place. We built this place as a new headquarters and as a fabrication facility. Now the fabrication aspect is rapidly approaching an equal point to the on-site construction, so we have a very complementary business, where we can not only build it but we can install it."

The move to the facility has also made Roberts Welding, which has clients along the entire Eastern Seaboard and as far west Utah, more visible to the local public.

"For nine years, we were strictly behind closed doors doing all of our work," Roberts said. "The only time people would see us would be when we were shipping our construction equipment to the job sites.

"Since we built this place out here on the most strategic highway in the county, we've gotten a lot of exposure, and having survived for 10 years adds a little credibility too even though we're still somewhat young and wet behind the years. We still make up the difference with our conscientiousness and integrity."

In the meantime, the company continues to take on any job that comes in, according to Roberts, whose three brothers — Lou, Ty and Dixon — also work for the company.

"Our strongest areas are, of course, in the mechanical and electrical phases and equipment and piping with electrical being everything from the power to the instrumentation side of it," he said. "We're capable of going in and turnkey installing anything they've got right down to when the customer flips the switch.

"We do a turnkey package where we're the only responsible party, and we actually do some $30 jobs for local clients in the shop."

While the Pitt County area hasn't always attracted major industries, Roberts sees that situation changing.

"Now, I see eastern North Carolina, Greenville and Pitt County particularly as one of the most desirable places industry can move to.

"You've got a population increasing to the point it is, making the labor force more available to the industry, and you've got the (area) in a full swing mode where they're willing to do more in their water treatment and power and what not for industry."

Roberts said he has found the eastern North Carolina region provides suitable surroundings in both a personal and business perspective.

"I decided 10 years ago that this was going to be my future here because I saw it becoming my kind of place," he said. "It's still rural in the nature that it is comfortable. I don't really care for a big city atmosphere, but by the same token, it has the industry that you would find in a big city atmosphere."

Eyedrops Recalled

WASHINGTON (AP) — About 23,000 bottles of George's Aloe Eyes eyedrops distributed to 700 health food stores around the nation are being recalled because samples have been found to be contaminated with mold and bacteria, the Food and Drug Administration said Friday.

Although the drops made by Warren Laboratories of Stafford, Texas, were promoted as "sterilized," the FDA said a joint inspection by the federal agency and the Texas Department of Health determined the production facility lacked adequate controls to ensure the drops were sterile.

In addition to being adulterated, the FDA said the drops did not comply with a federal requirement that such products be tamper-resistant.

Introducing The '62 Convertible. No Matter What Mortgage Rates Do, You're In The Driver's Seat.

First Union Mortgage has an innovative Adjustable Rate Mortgage Plan that's perfect for today's market. It's a plan that combines the best features of fixed rate mortgages with the advantages of the more affordable adjustable rate plans.

We call it the '62 Convertible. And it's loaded with features to help make a home more affordable both now and in the future.

For instance, the '62 Convertible's low initial rates make it easier to qualify for your loan. The interest rate is subject to change. And later on, if interest rates go even lower, you can convert it to a fixed rate conventional mortgage.

7.25% Initial Rate
9.477% Annual Percentage Rate*

What's more, the '62 Convertible offers these other key features:
• A 6% maximum increase from your initial interest rate over the life of the loan.
• A 2% maximum annual rate variance.
• You can finance up to 95% of the purchase price of your home.
• Plans are available for a variety of terms.

For a current quote or more information call 1-800-222-6339, or contact the First Union Mortgage office nearest you.

Business Notes

Session Qualifier

Doug Hill of Tadlock Insurance Agency, a Greenville area representative for Jefferson-Pilot Life Insurance Co., qualified for participation in the company's 1987 convention held recently in Honolulu.

Qualification was based on sales and service during a two-year period, the company said.

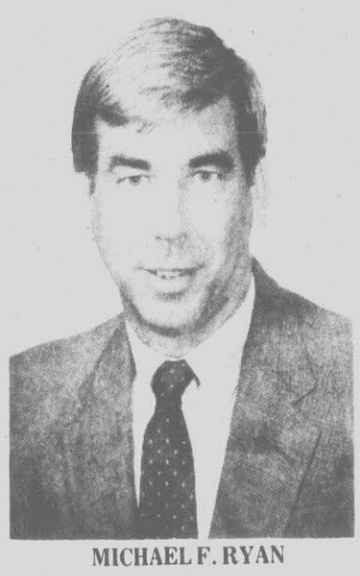
Firm Names VP

Glenn Russell has been named vice president of accounting and controller of Rawl Industries of Greenville, the company has announced.

Russell is a graduate of East Carolina University, where he was on the varsity track team. He is a member of the University City Kiwanis Club of Greenville and attends Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church.

Rawl Industries is involved in real estate development and is operator of the Sportsworlds of Greenville, Morehead City and Rocky Mount.

GLENN RUSSELL



MICHAEL F. RYAN

Ryan joined Wachovia in 1978 in Winston Salem as a new business representative in the commercial finance department. He has held various positions in the commercial finance area, serving as commercial finance loan officer in 1981, manager of the new business development section in 1982, being elected assistant vice president and vice president.

In 1985 he was named manager of the in-state corporate group and served in that position until May 1987 when he moved to Greenville as regional manager of the corporate banking department. A native of Greenville, S.C., Ryan is a 1967 graduate of the University of South Carolina and received a master's degree in business administration in 1972 from University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

West joined Wachovia in 1961 as a retail banking trainee in the Durham office. While in Durham, he served as branch manager, corporate loan officer, marketing officer and retail banking manager. He was elected to assistant vice president in 1968 and vice president in 1972.

Chief Appointed

Exovir Inc. has announced the appointment of William M. Sullivan as president and chief executive officer.

Sullivan was chairman, president and chief executive officer of Burroughs Wellcome Co., which operates a manufacturing plant in Greenville, and also held various lelgal positions with Ciba-Geigy Corp.

Exovir, organized in 1981, is a medical research and development company specializing in topical products for the treatment of skin diseases.

Hutton Conference

Patricia Eguez, resident manager of the Rocky Mount E.F. Hutton office, recently returned from the first national E.F. Hutton group executive conference held in Washington, D.C.

She was also guest of the regent and vice regents of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association celebration of historic Mount Vernon.

Ms. Eguez was one of three female managers out of 80 in the Southeast region participating in the conference.

Promotions Made

Michael F. Ryan and John J. West Jr. have been promoted to senior vice president of Wachovia Bank and Trust Co., in Greenville, according to William C. Baggett, regional vice president.

JOHN J. WEST Jr.

In 1977 West was promoted to city executive of the Jacksonville office and served in that position until 1986 when he was named city executive of the Greenville office.

A native of Durham, West received his business degree from East Carolina University in 1960 and completed the executive program at UNC-Chapel Hill in 1981.

Record Figures

Vermont American Corp. reported record sales and earnings for the second quarter ended June 30, according to Robert I. Baker, president.

Second quarter net sales were $71,185,000, compared with $64,518,000 in the year-earlier period. Net income was $4,833,000 or $.59 per share compared with $3,012,000 or $.35 per share in 1986.

Net sales for six months ended June 30 were $151,869,000 compared with $131,632,000 last year. Net income was $10,710,000 or $1.31 per share compared with $6,752,000 or $.79 per share in 1986.

Per share amounts for the 1986 period have been adjusted to reflect the 10 percent stock dividend paid in August, 1986.

Vermont American, a manufacturer and marketer of cutting tools, has a plant in Greenville.

Annual Convention

Four Greenville general agency representatives for Jefferson-Pilot Life Insurance Company qualified for participation in the company's 1987 convention held recently in Honolulu.

Qualification was based on sales and service during a two-year qualification period.

Qualifying were general agent Pat Walden and representatives Leland Briley, Gene McCreary and Harold Winstead.

Walden and Briley also qualified to participate in a special leaders convention held following the regular convention.

Quarterly Dividend

The board of directors of Branch Corp., meeting recently, declared a regular quarterly dividend of 32 cents per share, payable on Sept. 15 to shareholders of record Aug. 5.

Branch said there are approximately 9,387,000 shares of Branch Corp. common stock outstanding.

Branch Corp. is the parent holding company of Branch Banking and Trust Co., which has offices in Greenville.

Employees Retired

Two employees are retiring from the Eveready Battery plant in Greenville, the company has announced.

Polly Lockamy is leaving after 33 years in production, while Kathryn Jackson is retiring after 16 years in the same division. Both were honored with a retirement party and a plaque.

Net Loss Noted

Interstate Securities has announced a net loss of $1.2 million, or 23 cents per primary share, on revenues of $25.5 million for its third quarter.

For the nine months ended June 30, Interstate reported net income of $2 million on revenues of $83.7 million, producing primary earnings per share of 39 cents.

Earnings Rose

Integon Corp., which offered stock to the public for the first time in June, reported second quarter earnings of $10.2 million, or 36 cents per share, compared with $7.1 million, or 28 cents per share, in the second quarter 1986.

Integon said revenues were $123 million for the quarter, up from $61 million for the same period in 1986.

The company earned $20.9 million, or 77 cents a share, for the first six months of 1987, compared with $13.2 million or 51 cents a share from last year. Six-month revenues were $218 million, compared with $123 million.

Integon also declared its first dividend of 3 cents per share, payable Aug. 14.

Business Manager

Dave Davis of East Carolina ncoln-Mercury-GMC Trucks has announced the association of George Willis as the new business manager.

Willis was formerly associated with Winner Chevrolet, Ayden.

GEORGE WILLIS

Counselor Named

Gail Meeks, former Greenville city manager, has joined Atlantic Personnel Services of Greenville as employment counselor.

The firm said Mrs. Meeks will be working with local businesses to meet their needs from entry level placement to management and technical positions.

"A large part of my new position has to do with working with people and contacting businesses in the community and I think my previous experience with the city will help me in this," Mrs. Meeks said.

Mrs. Meeks is a native of Greenville and attended Pitt Community College.

Staff Changes

Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. in Greenville has announced the promotion of J. Dorson White Jr. to vice president.

The bank said Jeff D. Zeisler, Kenneth K. Howard, and Mike T. Odom have been named banking officers in Greenville.

White joined Wachovia in 1973 as a field representative. In 1975 he was promoted to dealer credit manager and was named banking officer in 1976. He accepted new responsibilities as a personal banker in 1980 and was promoted to branch manager, his current position, in 1981. He was named assistant vice president in 1983.

White, a Swansboro native, is a 1973 graduate of Elon College.

DORSON WHITE JR.

Zeisler joined Wachovia in 1986 as a management trainee in Winston-Salem. Later that year, he transferred to Greenville as a corporate banking representative. A native of Galion, Ohio, he is a 1986 graduate of Ohio State University.

Howard, a 1984 graduate of East Carolina University, is from Deep Run. He joined Wachovia as a field representative in 1985 and later that same year was promoted to dealer credit manager in the sales finance department.

Odom joined the bank as a field representative in Greenville in 1984 after graduating from ECU. In 1985 he was promoted to dealer credit manager.

Product Engineer

William D. Paff has joined Cox Trailers Inc. of Grifton as product engineer.

Paff was born and raised in Charleston, W.Va., and has degrees in mechanical engineering and business administration. He is a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Society of Automotive Engineers.

Paff plans to reside in Greenville.

Cox Trailers produces boat trailers and residential wood burning heaters at its Grifton plant.

Approval

Peoples Bankcorporation announced that it received approval from the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond on July 17 to acquire 76,205 shares of the common stock of Citizens National Bank of Winston-Salem.

Peoples will own 18.4 percent of the Citizens stock when the transaction is completed in August.

Peoples Bankcorporation is based in Rocky Mount and operates a branch in Greenville.

Manager Promotion

Officials at Grady-White Boats Inc. have announced that Sandra Godwin of Kinston has been promoted to data processing manager.

The company said she will be responsible for management of all data processing and related systems.

Ms. Godwin joined Grady-White in 1980 and has held positions in the sales department as well as in the data processing section.

A native of Columbus County, she attended East Carolina University and several technical institutes.

Defense Contractor Liquidating Assets

By RONALD POWERS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Wedtech Corp., the embattled defense contractor barred from bidding on Pentagon contracts, is shutting its doors and liquidating all its businesses and real estate, the company lawyer said Friday.

"It has not been a sudden decision, it's one we have been facing since we filed for bankruptcy on Dec. 15, 1986," said Martin R. Pollner.

Pollner said the sale, which would be under the supervision of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District, would likely be to a New York company that "has stated that it intends to retain the manufacturing facility in the South Bronx and hopes to re-employ some of those workers who had previously been employed by Wedtech."

Pollner said the proposed buyer of its Ordnance and Small Engine Divisions was a New York company, but he declined to name it.

Wedtech, whose primary customer is the Pentagon, owes the Defense Department tens of millions of dollars for goods paid for but not delivered and has been barred from bidding on defense contracts.

"Given these facts, new management has concluded that the only feasible course of action available ... is to sell the businesses and real estate of the company," Wedtech said in a release.

Pollner said a new buyer would not be under the same restrictions and would be free to seek defense contracts.

Wedtech says its problems were caused largely by "the criminal acts of former management." The company, under new management since the first of the year, charged in a pair of civil suits that its prior auditors were negligent in failing to discover the fraud.

Pollner said Wedtech's management would continue the lawsuits after the liquidation.

Any money recovered through the sale of assets or the lawsuits would be distributed to the company's creditors, Pollner said, adding that there was a "core group" of 40 Wedtech employees working to liquidate the business and distribute the proceeds of the sale.

About 75 other Wedtech employees were laid off Tuesday when the company completed work on its last government contract, he said.

The end of the company was in sight in December when the Navy charged Wedtech had missed production deadlines and canceled the balance of a pontoon order.

Wedtech, already the center of state and federal investigations, closed its gates and laid off more than 1,200 workers.

Within months, four former Wedtech executives admitted bribing government officials with company money. The borough president of the Bronx, Stanley Simon, resigned and was indicted on charges he extorted bribe money from Wedtech.

Last month, U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi, a New York Democrat, his son and five others were indicted on racketeering charges stemming from their connection with Wedtech.

The latest development in a continuing scandal centering around the company came July 17 when Lyn Nofziger, a former political director in the Reagan White House, was indicted on charges that his lobbying for Wedtech violated federal ethics laws.

Sewing's Coed And Fun At Conley

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Home economics teacher Brenda Little likes to sew and she wants her students to like to sew.

What better way is there to instill pleasure in the skill, she believes, than to have all her introductory home economics and family life students construct something fun — an item they'll enjoy wearing later?

What better fits this bill for boys and for girls than shorts?

Most of Ms. Little's students at D.H. Conley High School choose to make wild Hawaiian print jams — just-above-the-knee-length baggy shorts. But some have also made more fitted short shorts; a few others constructed Jamaica-length ones.

Her formula for teaching the first-time sewer to sew is detailed in an article Ms. Little had published in the April-May issue of the nationally distributed "What's New in Home Economics: Educator's Guide to Professional Development and Techniques."

She explains in the article how the Bishop apron and A-line dress of past beginning sewing classes more recently have given way to shorts for everyone.

She says she chose one pattern that would be ideal for all sizes, personalities and sexes — Simplicity 7501. This pattern, she says, is a beginners' pattern that is fashionable and usually has results good enough to prompt her students to wear what they make. Even the biggest, baggiest shorts usually take only about a yard of fabric.

Ms. Little calls her article "Success and the First-Time Sewer."

She uses her experience at D.H. Conley High School as the basis for her article. She explains for other home economics teachers how she constructed a sample of each step of the process, then numbered and named the steps "Fifteen Steps to Sewing Success."

"This method of teaching is similar to the lap method of teaching quilting" she said. "It allows students to work at their own pace and level. It helps free the teacher for individual attention to students who may be having machine or other problems.

"It does not hold back those students who are ready to move on," she said.

The 15-step displays show the shorts at various stages of construction.

Ms. Little, a Scotland County native and a Greenville resident, has been teaching home economics in Pitt County for 19 years. A graduate of East Carolina University, she is near completing requirements for designation as a certified home economist.

"It's just so wonderful," she said. "that boys as well as girls are seeing the value of educating themselves for homemaking," she said. "Whether a person lives alone or in a family or other group, sewing ability is valuable to everyone. It has been so gratifying to watch each of my students working independently toward a finished product that is a real source of pride for them."

Perry Ellis Empire Struggles For Stability

By Ralph DiGennaro
LA Times-Washington Post
News Service

Before he died last year, Perry Ellis was the walking embodiment of everything his fashion collections were: original, spirited, witty, slightly irreverent and overwhelmingly American. But in the year since his death from AIDS, the company Ellis built has gone through a series of renovations, not all of them in keeping with the designer's blueprints. The success of Ellis' fashion empire, according to a former key executive, was due to a "network" of people that was, to use his term, a "fine-tuned machine."

"That group, combined with Perry's leadership and invaluable understanding of the customer he was after, was what made Perry Ellis so successful," said the former executive, who requested anonymity. "But something has clearly gone wrong and for a simple reason — the whole machine just isn't there anymore."

From a design standpoint alone, the combined efforts of Ellis' two key design associates, Jed Krascella and Patricia Pastor, have turned out back-to-back collections that for the most part remained true to their mentor's image and point of view. But Krascella announced last month that he was leaving the company to pursue an acting career, thus cutting the design team in half and leaving Pastor with virtually none of the support group she once had. In addition, according to reports, Pastor has recently been spending increasing amounts of time in corporate financial meetings — at the expense of design time.

"She's strung out most of the time with the weight of corporate and financial details on her shoulders," said another former executive. "She should be left to just design."

Recently, chief executive officer Zachary Solomon resigned after almost five years with the company. Elliot Lavigne, executive vice president of Perry Ellis Men, resigned last month, only to reverse his decision soon after and remain.

Today the company is still very much in the spotlight, but how long it will enjoy the cachet of a leading designer house remains to be seen. It may well be that a fashion company is only as good as the people who work there.

"I was lucky," Pastor said. "Working with Perry for 10 years, I learned an incredible amount because he was a great teacher. He included me in everything, and if he were still alive, I would be just as happy for the next 10 years working as his assistant. There's nothing more I would want."

Skeptics initially had their doubts that any designer could successfully pick up where Ellis left off. Taking over the collections' design "wasn't as difficult as one might think," said Pastor. "We were always free to express our ideas."

Now, without Krascella, Pastor is even more on her own. She says that "nobody could take Jed's place," and that working as the sole chief designer will be "both easier and harder.

"Up to now, we have always had to meld two heads together, which isn't always easy, especially if one sees something white and the other sees it as black," she said. "On the other hand, I no longer have the feedback from a partnership." While the loss of Krascella may not be damaging to a well-established company such as Perry Ellis, the many recent personnel shifts may betray unrest at the company, unrest magnified by the financial woes of its largest licensee, Manhattan Industries, Inc., which markets and produces the various men's and women's clothing collections and pays the salaries of executives at both divisions.

Manhattan's top brass refuse to acknowledge personnel problems at any division, despite the loss of top executives such as former president of the men's and women's divisions Ed Jones and former executive vice president for men David Rosensweig, each at one time considered a key part of Ellis' inner circle.

"Companies sometimes," said Laurence C. Leeds Jr., Manhattan's chairman. "And I have no other comment on the subject other than it's just part of business as usual." Many former employees disagree: "Things were never the same once Perry was gone," said one former vice president. "We were like a family, and everyone worked very hard because he deserved our dedication. ... He was an honest, my-door's-always-open type of boss. But things began to change after his death, and not for the better."

Robert McDonald, a former film producer, was appointed by Ellis to replace Laughlin Barker, the designer's companion and business partner whose death in early 1986 was widely attributed to AIDS, as president of Perry Ellis International, the company that licenses the production and marketing of clothing, shoes and accessories under the Perry Ellis label. Despite his limited fashion knowledge, McDonald accepted the role as a favor to Ellis.

"Needless to say, it hasn't been the easiest year of my life," said McDonald. "I inherited the position through weird and strange circumstances, and the hardest part has been facing all the uncertainties. ... Coming from producing films to running a $600 million fashion company was a shock."

From the beginning, McDonald's problems may have seemed insurmountable. Right after Ellis' death, a coterie of key executives inside the company attempted to purchase the Perry Ellis Men license from Manhattan. Not only was Manhattan's Leeds hardly inclined to give the name up, he set out to garner even a bigger share of the Perry Ellis businesses. Last summer, Manhattan, a $335 million giant, purchased the rights to the Perry Ellis America label, which had been unsuccessfully marketed by Levi Strauss Co.

McDonald's troubles began with the very first spring line produced after Ellis' death, a collection that both buyers and press called "safe."

"I mandated that the first collection be safe," McDonald said. "It's true that Patricia and Jed's first collection did not deliver the excitement of Perry Ellis, but it was for a simple reason ... there was no excitement. We were all still getting over the shock of his passing, and I just wanted the collection to sell."

McDonald is confident that Manhattan, Perry Ellis International's biggest source of revenue, will pull out of its earnings slump and "be in the black" sometime next year. But the question lingers: How can Manhattan expect to be successful with a designer name that Leeds, its chairman, has admitted "represented a significant cash drain" on profits the last five years?

"Manhattan's strategic plan to build the Perry Ellis name into one of the most profitable companies in the fashion industry is as sound today as it ever was," maintains Leeds. "It's just that it is taking more years and more investment than we had originally anticipated. We see the business coming into its own next year and expect Perry Ellis to be a significant profit contributor to Manhattan Industries in 1988."

Some analysts aren't so sure. "I don't expect them to make money in 1987," said Jay Meltzer, an analyst with Goldman Sachs & Co. "Manhattan doesn't break out the sales-and-profits picture by division, so it will be hard to tell how well the Perry Ellis divisions will do. I assume they will lose money this year, but the losses will be considerably less than a year ago."

Said another Baltimore-based analyst who watches Manhattan: "I just don't see how they can sustain any sales growth, because I don't know how much people will want to buy clothes from a designer who is dead. Of course, Anne Klein's company is still around, but she was certainly much more established than Perry Ellis."

Pastor believes that she can continue to turn out collections that will be unmistakably Perry Ellis: "Perry, Jed and I thought the same about fashion and how we wanted to see women dressed. Without that kind of freedom I could never have worked for anybody for 10 years."

Couple Marries Saturday

The wedding ceremony of Frances Cameron Dudley and Stephen Richard Ward took place Saturday at 2 p.m. in St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

The double ring ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Middleton Wootten. Organist Diane Hawkins and soloist Susie Pair provided music for the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cameron Rigby Dudley of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Richard Ward.

Given in marriage by her parents, the bride was escorted by her father. She wore a formal gown of white satin, re-embroidered alencon lace and pearls over taffeta. The fitted basque bodice, sabrina neckline with deep V-back and satin Juliet pouf sleeves with schiffli cut-out cameos were appliqued with beaded alencon lace. The bride carried a cascade bouquet of bridal white roses, freezia and Star Gazer lilies.

Wanda Dudley Tudor of Philadelphia was her sister's matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Ellen Heath Dudley, sister-in-law of the bride, Frances Elizabeth Garrett and Helen Heath Hodges, all of Greenville.

The attendants each wore a floor length gown of amourette taffeta in royal blue. The upper bodice featured ruffles worn off-shoulder, accented by a V- neckline. The A-line skirt featured an empire waistline with buttoned cummerbund. They carried nosegays of Star Gazer lilies and white freesia.

The best man was Robert Ward of Jacksonville, brother of the bridegroom. Ushers were Cameron Dudley Jr., brother of the bride, and Dale Graham, both of Greenville, Robert Flournoy of Raleigh, and Kenneth Stroup of Morristown, N.J.

The mother of the bride wore a tea length gown of dusty rose crepe. The bridegroom's aunt, Marilyn Lishe of Boston, wore a tea length gown of white silk trimmed in beige and black. Both wore corsages of white cymbidium orchids.

A rehearsal dinner held at the Sheraton-Greenville was given by the bridegroom and his family. A dance followed at the Greenville Country Club, given by friends and relatives of the couple.

A bridesmaids luncheon was held at the Colonial Inn, Farmville, hosted by Frances Garrett and her mother, Mrs. Ralph M. Garrett Jr. Prior to the wedding, several parties were held for the bridal couple.

The bride received bachelor's and master's degrees in early childhood education from East Carolina University. She is employed by the Pitt County schools.

The bridegroom is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and the Wake Forest Univeristy School of Law. He is a partner in the law firm of Vincent and Ward.

After a Caribbean cruise, the couple will reside in Greenville.

Wedding Vows Said

GREENVILLE, Del. — The Christ Church Christiana (Episcopal) was the scene of the double ring wedding ceremony of Margaret Anne Harris of Wilmington, Del., and David Parry Dickson of Charlotte.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Michael Raymond Nemtuda of Wilmington, Del., and the late Kenneth Gillespie Harris Jr. Her grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Gillespie Harris of Greenville, N.C., and Mrs. James Davis Mellon Sr. of Winterville, N.C.

Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Robert Duane Dickson of Wilmette, Ill.

The Rev. William B. Lane Jr. performed the ceremony. Music was provided by organist William A. Owen III.

The bride was given in marriage by her stepfather, Michael Raymond Nemtuda. She wore her mother's wedding gown of candlelight ivory satin and alencon lace accented with seed pearls. The gown featured a chapel length train. The bride wore a matching alencon lace headpiece and veil. She carried a bouquet of white and ivory brevardia, freesia, miniature roses and baby's breath.

Matron of honor was Wanda Harris Spong of Alexandria, Va., and the maid of honor was Karen Campbell Harris of Nashville, Tenn. Both are sisters of the bride.

They wore full length gowns of romance blue satin fashioned with puffed, sleeves, sweetheart necklines and trains. Each carried a nosegay bouquet of white daisies, baby's breath, blue delphinium, pale yellow button carnations and miniature roses accented with white and ivory satin streamers.

Bridesmaids were Laura Dickson of Wilmette, Ill., sister of the bridegroom; Jane Anne Mellon of Winterville, N.C., cousin of the bride; Martha Bolster of Portland, Ore.; Priscilla Bogitsh of Richmond, Va.; Karen Elaine Harris of Nashville, Tenn., and Donna Ruark of Rockville, Md. The bridesmaids wore gowns and carried bouquets styled like those of the honor attendants.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Robert Duane Dickson Jr. of Lake Bluff, Ill., and Edward B. Dickson of Wilmette, Ill., both brothers of the bridegroom; Kenneth G. Harris III of Wilmington, Del., brother of the bride; Rick Avate and Thomas Dever, both of Charlotte,; Bruce Lyon of Wilmette, Ill., and Terry Moore of Nashville, Tenn.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the Christiana ballroom of the DuPont Country Club. Guests were greeted by the parents and grandparents of the bride and the bridegroom. Music for dancing was provided by The Tradewinds.

An after-rehearsal dinner party was given at the Hercules Country Club Friday, hosted by the parents of the bridegroom.

The bride and the bridegroom both are graduates of Vanderbilt University. The bride is an environmental engineer with the Department of Health and Environment, Nashville, Tenn. The bridegroom is a mechanical engineer with C.E. Tyler, a division of Combustion Engineering, Gastonia, N.C.

The couple will live in Charlotte.

When Mothers Become Children

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

It doesn't matter how old you are. The minute you set foot in your mother's house you are 12 years old again.

It doesn't matter that your job is worth six figures a year and you've been cutting up your own meat for 30 years now, your mother can turn back the clock with one withering glance.

You change the minute you are inside the door. Your posture deteriorates, your hair grows and falls in your eyes, your mind turns to crayon, your shoestrings become untied, and you forget to wipe your feet. You hide food under your plate that you don't want to eat, tease the dog into a coma, and lie about your irregularities.

You find yourself answering questions that you would tell anyone else to stick in their ear. "How much money do you make a week?" "How much did you pay for that car?" "How old is this girl?" "How many times have you worn that shirt between washings?" "Why is the Department of Motor Vehicles sending you letters?" "Do you want to spend the rest of your life being a bum? Think before you answer."

Then she will ask, "Do you want a piece of advice?"

This is a mere formality. It doesn't matter if you answer yes or no. You're going to get it anyway. She will tell you you throw away your money like a drunken sailor and the next time you cook spaghetti, use the water to starch the collars of your shirts and you'll save a fortune. You will not laugh. You will say, "Yes Ma'am."

Children always count on their mother "losing it" at a certain age. Don't be naive. She may have let the eggs boil dry or forgotten to put out the garbage for three weeks in a row, but she NEVER ... repeat, NEVER forgets the time she waited at the school for you when you were in the fourth grade and you went home on the bus with Tim and didn't tell her. Just try to erase the pain.

Resign yourself to a lifetime of knowing nothing. You could be an electrical engineer and she wouldn't trust you to change a fuse. You could be a world-reknowned surgeon and she would still cut up your meat for you. You could be the mother of nine children and your mother would still whisper, "Margaret has something in the oven and she isn't even married ... if you get my drift."

Spending a night in your mother's house is like living a flashback. Your bed is turned down, the bathroom light is left burning all night, and nothing is actually said but there is a raised eyebrow if you have liquids after 9 p.m.

You resent it at first. Doesn't she realize you are capable of taking care of yourself? That you have outgrown your need for someone to mother you?

She knows.

She's just trying to hang onto something so special in her life that she has never been able to replace. Now sit up straight and tell her what you are doing now and don't talk with food in your mouth!

Device Shortens Hospital Stays

ATLANTA (AP) — A new device can shorten hospital stays and improve people's ability to bend their knees after knee joint replacement surgery, reports Arthritis Today.

The publication says the device uses a technique called continuous passive motion to automatically bend and straighten the knee for several days after surgery. The procedure must be used within the first 24 hours after surgery to be most effective, it says.

SOUFFLES ARE A SNAP

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — You don't have to be a gourmet cook to prepare a souffle, according to Donna Higgins.

Higgins, director of Del Monte Kitchens, says a few tips can make souffle preparation easier.

She recommends giving close attention to the preparation of egg whites in souffles.

Umphlet-Sessoms Vows Said

Jennifer Christine Sessoms of Greenville and Johnnie Edward Umphlet Jr. of Rocky Mount were united in marriage Saturday in the First Presbyterian Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Daniel C. Wilkers at 3 p.m.

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald H. Sessoms Sr. of Greenville and Mr. and Mrs. Johnnie E. Umphlet Sr. of Rocky Mount are parents of the bridal couple.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father. Pamela Marie Robinson of Greenville was maid of honor. Nicole Sessoms of Fayetteville, cousin of the bride, Rebekah Pittman of Goldsboro, Debbie Bone and Rena Sherrod, both sisters of the bridegroom from Rocky Mount, were bridesmaids.

Ricemaids were Kelly Glass of Fayetteville and Rachelle Webre of Edwards, Calif., cousins of the bride.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers included Ronald H. Sessoms Jr. of Greenville, brother of the bride, Sammy Hicks of Tarboro, uncle of the bridegroom, and Larry Bone and Terry Sherrod, both brothers-in-law of the bridegroom from Rocky Mount.

Frances Cain of Greenville was organist for the ceremony. Flutist Lynn Marks and harpist Ruth Moskop presented special music.

Mrs. Tommie Little coordinated the wedding and reception. The guest register was attended by Mrs. Ray Evans.

The bride wore a formal gown of ivory taffeta over peau de soie designed with a sabrina neckline and scooped back outlined in alencon lace beaded with pearls. The bodice was enhanced with sheer English net which extended from the neckline in a V-design to the basque waistline, which was accented with beaded lace. Pearls and iridescent sequins also trimmed the bodice. The sleeves, which tapered to calla points at the wrist, had English net and beaded lace appliques. The gathered skirt was bordered in alencon lace that flowed into a chapel train. She wore a bridal hat overlaid in alencon lace beaded with pearls and accented with silk flowers. It had a face blusher and fingertip veiling. The bride carried a formal cascade bouquet of phalaenopsis orchids, stephanotis and white sweetheart roses with ivy and ruskus.

The attendants wore tea length gowns of aqua embossed satin styled with scoop necklines, lantern sleeves and princess bodices. Each carried a cascade bouquet of sonia roses, carnations, sonia gerbera daisies, white freesia, white daisies and mini peach gladioli with ruskus.

The ricemaids wore tea length gowns of aqua satin featuring a scoop neckline, princess bodice and puff sleeves. They carried nosegays of peach miniature carnations, white pom pons and white daisies. They wore clusters of baby's breath in their hair.

A reception was given by the parents of the bride in the church fellowship hall. Mrs. Joe Glass, Mrs. Wayne Sessoms of Fayetteville and Mrs. James Webre of Edwards, Calif., aunts of the bride, and Mrs. Ed Sharpe of Rocky Mount assisted in serving wedding cake. Mrs. Bill Whichard of Bethel, aunt of the bridegroom, and Mrs. Pat Walden of Greenville poured punch. The ricemaids distributed birdseed rosebuds. Speical music was presented by Ms. Marks and Ms. Moskop. Dr. and Mrs. William B. Martin said goodbyes.

The bridegroom is employed by Cox Floral Service, Inc. The bride is employed by Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance in Greenville. Both are students at East Carolina University.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to Williamsburg, Va.

A bridesmaids' luncheon was given by Mrs. Wayne Sessoms at the Colonial Inn. A rehearsal dinner was given by the parents of the bridegroom at the Sheraton. Several miscellaneous showers, kitchen shower and a cookout honoring the couple before their marriage.

Bridal Policy

A black and white glossy five by seven photograph is requested for engagement announcements in The Daily Reflector. For publication in a Sunday edition, the information must be submitted by 12 noon on the preceding Wednesday. Engagement pictures must be released at least three weeks prior to the wedding date. After three weeks, only an announcement will be printed.

Wedding write-ups will be printed through the first week with a one column picture. During the second week, a one column picture will be used with a write-up giving less description and after the second week, just as an announcement.

Wedding forms and pictures should be returned to The Daily Reflector one week prior to the date of the wedding. All information should be typed or written neatly.

To avoid extra calories, cut a baking potato into strips, place them on a greased baking sheet in one layer and bake for 45 minutes in a 350 degree oven. They will be crisp and lower in calories than French fries.

MRS. FLOWERS

Lillie Ann Darden Weds

Hooker Memorial Christian Church was the scene of the wedding of Lillie Ann Darden of Greenville and Christopher Winston Flowers of Scotland Neck Saturday at 5 p.m.

The Rev. E.T. Vinson conducted the double ring ceremony. Music was performed by organist Randy Buck of Greenville and soloist Pam Davis of Wilson.

The bride is the daughter of Leon Alvis and Mary Elizabeth Darden of Goldsboro. Parents of the bridegroom are Richard Malcolm and Eloise Flowers of Scotland Neck.

The bride, escorted by her father, wore a formal gown of white taffeta over peau de soie designed with an open sweetheart neckline outlined in silk Venise lace. A medallion of silk Venise lace with pearls accented the front of the fitted bodice. The Renaissance sleeves were fashioned of taffeta and silk Venise lace cuffs formed calla points over the wrist. Covered buttons enhanced the back bodice. The full circular skirt and attached chapel train were accented by scalloped silk Venise lace edging. She wore a halo of silk Venise lace with pearl edging and a pouf of French illusion. The bride carried a cascading bouquet of three cattleya orchids, lavender alstromeria lilies, white roses, lilies, stephanotis and baby's breath with white lace streamers.

The bride was attended by her sister, Mary Scott Manning of Winterville. She wore a tea length gown of lavender satin with a lavender chantilly lace overlay. The gown was designed with a high neckline and Renaissance sleeves and was accented by a dropped waistline with a satin sash. She carried an arched bouquet of lavender freesia, purple iris, white daisies and baby's breath accented with white satin streamers.

Bridesmaids were Michelle Mills of Greenville and Beth Vinson of Winterville, both sisters of the bride; Cindy Darden of Goldsboro, sister-in-law of the bride, and Sandra Flowers of Farmville, sister-in-law of the bridegroom. They wore gowns and carried bouquets like the honor attendant's.

Bill Flowers of Farmville was his brother's best man. Ushers were Brad Flowers of Farmville, nephew of the bridegroom; Al Darden of Goldsboro, brother of the bride; Robert Messer of Raleigh, and Johnny Echols. Junior ushers were Clayton Manning and Brandon Manning, nephews of the bride from Winterville. The ring bearer was Justin Manning of Winterville, nephew of the bride.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall following the ceremony. Guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Skipper McLawhorn of Greenville. Laney Bradley of Richmond, Va., attended the register. Punch was poured by Mrs. Allan Wood and Rose Perry, both of Wilson, and cake was served by Mrs. Rick Russell of Charlotte and Mrs. Frank Bullard of Scotland Neck. Assisting were April Strickland and Meg Bullard. Goodbyes were said by Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Braxton of Greenville.

The bride received a bachelor's degree from Atlantic Christian College and a master's degree in education from East Carolina University. The bridegroom received both bachelor's and master's in education degrees from ECU.

After a wedding trip to the coast, the couple will live in Roanoke Rapids.

A bridal shower was given by friends and relatives of the bride. The bride also was honored with a tea in Scotland Neck given by friends and relatives of the bridegroom.

Wedding Vows Said At Noon

Paula Lynne Alcock of Sneads Ferry became the bride of Maylon Arthur Kirby Jr. of Jacksonville Saturday at high noon. The Rev. Seth Jones III of Farmville conducted the double ring ceremony in the First Pentecostal Holiness Church.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Alcock of Greenville. Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Maylon A. Kirby of Kenly.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father. She wore a formal gown designed by Sposaeuropa by Illisa. The gown, fashioned of white bridal satin, featured a bateau neckline with a sheer illusion yoke, beaded bodice and basque waistline. Re-embroidered schiffli lace adorned the Elizabethan sleeves, which formed points at the fingertip. The gathered skirt extended into a cathedral train ornamented by re-embroidered lace and beaded accents. She wore a headband of silk flowers which featured a pouf of illusion cascading into a fingertip veil. The bride carried a cascade bouquet of white calla lilies with English ivy and ribbon streamers.

Angela Alcock Stallings of Greenville was her sister's matron of honor and wore a sleeveless satin gown of white featuring a princess seam bodice with one shoulder adorned by chiffonet caught with silk flowers, ribbons and pearl sprays. The tea length ballerina skirt was covered with chiffonet. She carried an arm bouquet of carnations, mums, pom pons and greenery tied with tulle.

MRS. KIRBY

Bridesmaids were Myra K. Kennedy, sister of the bridegroom of Lucama, Lorraine W. Galicic of Middletown, Md., and Teresa K. Simpson of Franklin, Ky. Their gowns and bouquets were fashioned similar to that of the honor attendant in light pink.

The flower birl was Sarah A. Starling of Jacksonville. She wore a white off-shoulder satin gown accented by ruffles of Wedgewood and Venise lace and short puff sleeves. The A-line skirt extended into a sweep train with ruffles. She carried a basket of miniature carnations.

Honorary bridesmaids were Janet M. Field of Jacksonville, Margie Klinge of Raleigh, and Lauri H. Roberson of Greenville.

The best man was the bridegroom's father. Ushers were David Kennedy, brother-in-law of the bridegroom of Lucama, Van Jones Jr. of Pine Level, Mike Grizzard of Kenly, Todd Morris of Vanceboro, and William Stallings Jr., brother-in-law of the bride of Greenville. Jason Kennedy of Lucama, nephew of the bridegroom, was ring bearer.

Betty leRoux was organist and Guy Buck was vocalist. Selections included "You Mean More to Me, "Always," "If You Say My Eyes Are Beautiful" and "The Lord's Prayer."

The wedding was directed by Barbara Morris of Vanceboro, aunt of the bride. Kim and Tina Williams of Greenville presided at the guest register.

A reception was given by the parents of the bride at Brook Valley Country Club. Dr. and Mrs. Randy Williams of Greenville greeted guests. Augustine Parrish of Benson, and Eva Wooten of Fremont, both aunts of the bridegroom, poured punch. Cake was served by Betty Pollard of Greenville and Janice Morris of Vanceboro. Goodbyes were said by Dr. and Mrs. Raymond Stroh of Middletown, Md., and Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Morris of Vanceboro, aunts and uncles of the bride. The bridal couple left the reception in a horse-drawn carrage.

The couple will live in Sneads Ferry after a wedding trip to New Orleans, La., and Freeport, Bahamas.

The parents of the bridegroom entertained at an after-rehearsal dinner and dance at Brook Valley Country Club Friday night.

The bride is a commercial loan officer with NCNB National Bank. She graduated from East Carolina University. The bridegroom attended N.C. State University and is employed as a N.C. State Highway Patrol Trooper by the Department of Crime Control and Public Safety.

Engagement Announced

ANGELA ELIZABETH WARD — is the daughter of Ann Cooke of Williamston and Charles E. Ward of Spring Hill, Fla., who announce her engagement to Clifton Ervin Warren Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Ervin Warren of Route 1, Stokes. A Sept. 12 wedding is being planned.

Carlton-Teel Vows Said

Geraldine Teel of Greenville and Glenn Carlton of Farmville were united in holy matrimony Saturday in Philippi Church of Christ. The Rev. Kenneth Hammond performed the double ring ceremony.

The wedding was directed by Darilyn Sharpe.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Moses Teel Sr. of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Linwood Earl Carlton of Farmville.

A program of nuptial music was presented by organist Rodger Ingram. Deborah Leathers sang "What a Difference You've Made in My Life," "Color My World" and "We've Only Just Begun." Joyce Teel, sister-in-law of the bride, sang "The Lord's Prayer." "Always" was sung by Onession Brooks and Ms. Leathers.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her brother, Harry Teel Sr. She wore a floor length gown with a cathedral train of traditional bridal satin with silk Venise lace and sposabella lace. The fitted bodice featured a Victorian neckline with a sheer illusion yoke, leg o'mutton sleeves and basque waist. Venise lace motifs embellished with seed pearls and sequins appliqued the bodice, sleeves and collar. Beaded Venise lace motifs appliqued in a pyramid design appliqued the skirt. Scattered lace motifs in a baroque pattern accented the train, with garlands of scalloped sposabella lace bordering the skirt hemline and train. She wore a halo with white cascading silk flowers accented with pearls. The two tiered waltz length veil of illusion and scattered pearls was accented with white satin streamers. The bride carried a cascade bouquet of pink and white roses tied with matching streamers.

MRS. CARLTON

Gloria Teel of Greenville was maid of honor for her sister. She wore a strawberry pink polyester taffeta formal gown. The gown was designed with a fitted V-neck, tucked bodice, flared skirt, gathered elbow length sleeves and a back bow satin sash. She carried a bouquet of pink roses and daisies with pink streamers.

Bridesmaids were Lavorn Scarbrough of Alexandria, Va., and Jeanette Taft of Greenville, sisters of the bride, and Pamela Teel of Greenville, niece of the bride. They wore dresses and carried bouquets identical to that of the honor attendant.

Honorary bridesmaids were Sheila Speight of Kinston and Debra Lane of Maury. They wore dusty rose polyester taffeta formal gowns with fitted bodices, dropped waistlines and gathered skirts. The gowns were accented with bows at the neckline. They carried long-stemmed roses with pink streamers.

Kimberly Taft, niece of the bride, was flower girl and Harry Teel Jr., nephew of the bride, was ring bearer.

Allen Wilkes of Farmville, cousin of the bridegroom, was best man. Groomsmen were Barry Carlton of Farmville, brother of the bridegroom, Derek Scarbrough of Alexandria, Va., brother-in-law of the bride, and Tony McKoy of Greenville. Ushers included Jeff Wilkes and Ronnie Wilkes, cousins of the bridegroom, and Larry Barrett, all of Farmville.

The mother of the bride wore a strawberry pink gown and the mother of the bridegroom selected a formal dusty rose gown. Each wore a corsage of summer flowers.

A reception was held at the Bachelor Benedict Club. Geraldine Teel attended the guest register and Pauline Teel poured punch; both are sisters-in-law of the bride. Grace Phillips served cake.

A rehearsal dinner was given by the family of the bridegroom. The bride was given showers by family and friends.

She is a graduate of Atlantic Christian College in Wilson and is a registered nurse at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The bridegroom graduated from Farmville Central High School. He is employed by Sterling Radiator.

After a wedding trip to Virginia Beach, Va., the couple will live in Farmville.

She Wants To Skip Invitation

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: What should a handicapped woman say to men who ask her to dance? I am a 27-year-old graduate student who walks with crutches. I enjoy going out with friends to listen to live music, and I put my crutches under the table so no one will trip over them.

When a man comes over and asks me to dance, a direct, "No, thank you," (according to male friends) is seen as snobbish or aloof — and invariably the guy turns and walks away without a word.

To say, "I really can't dance," leads to arguments that "Everyone can dance," or, "I can teach you," which is very embarrassing. Were I to say, "Sorry, I'm handicapped," it would cause an outpouring of sympathy, followed by a hasty retreat.

Abby, please don't suggest I keep my crutches in evidence as a tip-off. I am as flattered as the next woman by an invitation to dance. I need a quick, clever answer that won't embarrass either of us.

Your answer will not only help me, it will remind people to control the urge to say something sympathetic or to hurry away when they meet someone with a handicap. Finally, it may teach men to react more civilly to a woman who, for whatever reason, turns down their invitation to dance. — EVA IN BEAVERTON

DEAR EVA: When an attractive stranger comes to your table and asks you to dance, instead of a, "No, thank you," offer a pleasant, "I would love to — but won't you please be seated so we can sit this one out? My name is Eva, what's yours?"

Now, what man would walk away from such a gracious invitation? After he's seated, you can then explain that you were complimented by his offer to dance, but you are physically disabled, and although you keep your crutches under the table, you believe in putting all your cards on the table to ensure a fair deal. Good luck, Eva.

DEAR ABBY: I'm having a bridal shower for my daughter who is getting married. Must I invite all the people I am having at the shower to the wedding, too?

My sister says that everyone coming to the shower must be invited to the wedding, too. I say, "Not so!" What do you say? — THE BRIDE'S MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: It's true. Score: sister, 1; you, 0.

And by the way, Mother, bridal showers should not be given by close family members. Friends, aunts, cousins, si. Mothers, no!

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

Here is a simple guide for removing stains from wool oriental rugs.
1. Identify the stain and locate it on the stain removal chart below.
2. Remove excess material.
3. Carefully apply remover with a clean cloth.
4. Blot stained areas with a tissue or clean dry cloth.
5. Apply remover as listed. Repeat step No. 2 and No. 3 for each one.
6. Dry carpet and brush pile to restore texture.
7. If stain persists, repeat entire procedure.

Recommended Stain Removers

A. Detergent Solution: 1 tsp. of a neutral detergent (such as brands used for washing lingerie e.g. Lux) and 1 tsp. white vinegar in 1 qt of warm water.
B. Paint Remover: Should not contain any oil; lacquer thinner may be used.
C. Dry Cleaner Fluid: Any common brand used according to instructions.
D. Alcohol: Rubbing, denatured or Isopropyl.

Celebration For 500-Year-Old Live Oak

By KATHY EYRE
Associated Press Writer

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — As bands play, fireworks explode and a mayor and congressman wax lyrical; Long Beach will celebrate Aug. 1 the birthday of its oldest and perhaps most beloved resident: a 500-year-old live oak tree.

A birthday cake to serve 5,000 will be baked in the shape of its sprawling, gnarled branches. And the guests surely will nibble a bit on the sweet memories of events shared with their towering friend.

"Almost everyone who grew up in the area has some type of story that relates back to this tree, maybe a first kiss, a proposal, things of this type," Kent Grizzard said in a recent telephone interview.

Grizzard is the state forester assigned to Harrison County and a member of the volunteer birthday party committee.

"To stand under this tree, it kind of overwhelms you. It's one of those things you can't really explain, you have to witness the tree yourself. It definitely gives you a sense of history," he said.

And party-goers needn't even worry about the juiciest tidbits of their personal histories being revealed by the guest of honor. Sworn to silence long ago, the birthday girl will respond to all the ruckus with a mere rustling of her leaves.

The birthday party isn't the first time the old oak has been in the spotlight. The late Bob Davis, former world correspondent for the New York Sun, published an "interview" with the tree in his 1936 book, "People, People Everywhere." And the Oct. 16, 1950, issue of Life Magazine published a two-page photograph of the enormous oak.

The tree is located on the University of Southern Mississippi Gulf Coast Regional Campus, which had been the Gulf Park College for Girls until 1971. The tree's birthday party coincides with a reunion of alumnae of the former school. Three hundred have registered to attend the reunion, but the general public is invited to join in the festivities free of charge. The party's more than $8,000 budget has been raised by selling prints of a watercolor portrait of the tree by Elizabeth Veglia of Long Beach.

The Drum and Bugle Corp from nearby Keesler Air Force Base and the Biloxi Municipal Band are among those agreeing to provide the music Aug. 1. Speeches by Mayor Glenn Mitchell and Mississippi Rep. Trent Lott will be sandwiched between a singalong and the 20-minute fireworks display. The music will begin at 5:30 p.m., with the fireworks to start booming at 9 p.m.

"Not knowing when the first sprout came fourth, Aug. 1, 1987, has been chosen for the birthday party," said William Kirkpatrick, public relations director for the University of Southern Mississippi.

He said if anything, the 500th birthday party is long overdue.

Grizzard confirmed that the only way to know the tree's exact age would be to bore into its trunk, and school officials won't permit that because they are afraid of damaging the tree. Besides, he said, the state doesn't have any boring instruments long enough to go through the 5-foot, 4-inch diameter of the tree.

But Grizzard said a scientific guess based on the current size of the tree and reports on its height years ago would make the tree at least 500 years old.

"It probably is the oldest tree on the Coast and in Mississippi," said Grizzard, noting that the average life span for a live oak tree is 300 years.

He said the only other trees he knew of that lived as long as the live oaks are the redwoods found along the Western Coast.

A platform built into the branches of the Long Beach "Friendship Oak" allow visitors a clear view of the lapping waves of the Gulf of Mexico just a few hundred yards away.

Florida Cowboy Recalls Former Central Prairie

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

PALMDALE, Fla. (AP) — Vinnie Arnold hung up his saddle seven years ago after he was felled by a stroke. Now, at 80, he spends his days sitting under an old oak tree remembering a lifetime spent as a cowboy on the Central Florida prairie.

"Yessir, I rode a horse all my time and did more camping out than most," Arnold says. "I guess I could still ride, but my legs ain't no good anymore."

Leaning on a chipped wooden cane and peering from under the brim of his sweat-stained cowboy hat, Arnold looks across his open yard and dirt road toward the hills to the west.

"The pastures are all posted now. I 'member when there were no fences. You can't go nowhere anymore," he says.

Arnold learned to ride when he learned to walk on his family's farm near Kenansville in Osceola County to the northeast. His cowboy career began as a youth working on neighbor cattle and horse ranches.

"I didn't get much of an education," he admits.

In 1934, in search of work, he went to the Arcadia area west of here and joined Lykes Bros. for $35 a month plus board. Over the next 46 years, he was a top hand for the large land and cattle company. He rode the range, broke horses and served as trail boss, ranch foreman and fence rider.

Tom Gaskin Jr. has known Arnold all his life and remembers a summer he worked for him as a cowhand.

"Arnold is as much a part of a horse as a man could be," says Gaskin, 46. "He knows cattle better than most people know their children."

Florida cowboys, unlike those in motion pictures or television, didn't wear sidearms during Arnold's time. However, Florida range wars did occur before the turn of the century.

"A gun would be more in my way than anything," Arnold says.

That didn't mean, however, that Florida cowboys didn't fight.

"We worked from daylight to dark and come Saturday afternoon, the crews would go to town and the first thing they hunted was a liquor store or saloon," Arnold says.

"They'd be fist fights, even on the open prairie. Yessir, I miss that."

He talks about the twice-a-year roundups and trail herds of more than 1,000 head of cattle. A major task for Florida cowboys was having to dip the cattle every seven days to rid them of ticks.

While some cowboys used whips to control cattle, Arnold always used a lariat.

"Owners didn't like whips because it cut up the cattle," he says.

Another reason, Arnold recalls, was the crack of a whip would "sound way cross yonder and could start a stampede."

Arnold knows his cowboy days are over.

"Most of the fellers died out. Now, they herd cattle with a Jeep," he says in a weak voice.

"In those days, a boy learned to saddle a horse first thing in the morning. I remember the campfires. There were good jolly crews, and they'd tell stories after dark came. I enjoyed it better then."

He also recalls that food tasted differently when he was a cowboy.

"Those biscuits. They were something good. The cook used an old Dutch oven at the camp. Nobody uses them anymore."

Much of Arnold's time now is spent in the back room of an old mobile home owned by a nephew. He's outlived two wives but has no children.

Arnold wears glasses now, and most of his teeth are gone. Walking is difficult, but he shuffles every day to his favorite tree where he sits and remembers.

"I remember I used to put over 1,000 head of cattle in a pen over yonder across the creek...."

Yves Montand Returns To Hollywood

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Yves Montand was back at the Beverly Hills Hotel where it all happened — his legendary romance with Marilyn Monroe.

The French star came here to do publicity for his new film, "Jean de Florette," already a huge hit in France. In a wide-ranging interview, he talked of many things, including the 1985 death of his wife, the actress Simone Signoret, and co-starring with Miss Monroe in the 1960 "Let's Make Love," his first Hollywood film.

He spoke of the Monroe affair with reluctance, explaining that it was "a secret and a beautiful thing." But it became public knowledge when Miss Signoret wrote about it in her memoirs.

The Montands came here in 1959 during his concert tour of the United States. After his triumphant appearance at the Huntington Hartford Theater, 20th Century-Fox asked him to appear opposite their hottest new star, Marilyn Monroe. He was enthusiastic, but his agents insisted on holding out until he was paid $100,000, big money then for an unknown foreign actor.

"The moment I say yes, I think: 'But how are you going to do it? You don't speak a word of English!' I had to learn all of my lines by heart. I had no connection to my own language," Montand said.

"They gave me a coach. But I don't trust him completely 100 percent. I think, 'Why did this actor become a coach? Something someplace didn't work.'"

Montand's insecurity coincided with Miss Monroe's, and they found themselves working closely for self-protection.

"She was so afraid of shooting, every moment afraid," the actor recalled. "This is surprising. She was more a real big personality than a real comedian. The real suffering for her was that she wanted to be a dramatic actress. She knew that people in Hollywood are very nasty and cruel. They did not want to consider her an actress.

"We helped each other. I knew she was afraid. I told her once in my very poor English: 'It is not the director, not the camera man that don't do their work well; you are afraid.' She realized that I had discovered one part of her real secret. Not Arthur Miller or even (Joe) DiMaggio could find that, because to them she was a wonderful actress."

When they first studied together, nothing romantic happened — "I swear on Simone," he said. However, the studios went on strike for three months and Miss Signoret and Miss Monroe's love interest, the writer Arthur Miller, both left town.

"I couldn't speak a word of English, so I stay in my rich bungalow which looks like a gold jail and I don't go outside because I feel like an imbecile," Montand said.

In "Jean de Florette," Montand presents a different personality from the dashing figure of his American films: "My Geisha" (1962) with Shirley MacLaine; and "On a Clear Day You Can See Forever" (1970) with Barbra Streisand. He plays the aging patriarch of a once-powerful family in Claude Berri's new version of Marcel Pagnol's modern classic.

The sequel, "Manon of the Spring," was filmed at the same time and will be released in this country later this year.

"Simone talked me into it," admitted the 65-year-old Montand, who was reluctant to play an elderly person. "She said 10 years before I would have been too young to play the role, 10 years later I would be too old because I wouldn't have the energy."

Berri tricked him into testing in the role of Cesar Soubeyran to help an actor in another role. After Montand saw himself as an old man in the test, he agreed to undertake the role.

He was born Yvo Livi to Italian parents in a village near Florence. His political father fled Italy to escape fascist rule when Montand was 2 years old, and he grew up in the tough working-class district of Marseilles. He left school at 11 to work in a spaghetti factory, in waterfront bars and on the docks before becoming a hairdresser in his sister's beauty shop.

Enamored with American movies, he began singing in cabarets, adapting his stage name from his mother's call for him to come upstairs: "Yvo, monta!" During the German occupation, he sang in Paris nightclubs, becoming the partner onstage and off with Edith Piaf. After the war he branched into movies, and became a star in Henri-Georges Clouzot's "The Wages of Fear."

In 1951 Montand married Miss Signoret, and they became leading figures in the political and artistic ferment of postwar France. Their radicalism caused them to be barred from the United States during the McCarthy era. In 1959 they were granted visas, and he made the concert tour that led to Hollywood.

Montand's second American movie was "Sanctuary," based on William Faulkner's steamy novel. Hollywood was still in the grip of self-censorship, and he recalled that during his crucial love scene with Lee Remick, he wore a shirt and pants, she was in a slip and they stayed in separate beds. Weary of being cast as the lover, he returned to European films, notably with Costa-Gavras ("Z," "State of Siege").

In the middle of the nine-month filming of "Jean de Florette," Simone Signoret died of cancer. After a brief absence, Montand returned to the location near Cuges-les-Pins and completed his role. He is still recovering from his loss.

Dedicated To Women's Care

There's a place in Eastern North Carolina where women can go to get the care they deserve, the Women's Pavilion at Heritage Hospital. The only facility of its kind in the area, the Women's Pavilion provides progressive, comprehensive care, a skilled professional staff, experienced obstetricians/gynecologists, and an environment of respect and understanding.

Everything in the Women's Pavilion is directed toward care and recovery. Women now have access to services ranging from the careful planning of comfortable, private rooms to our extensive birthing services. They also have the opportunity to attend any or all of our special classes covering childbirth and infant care, endometriosis, osteoporosis and PMS.

The second floor of Heritage Hospital, the Women's Pavilion, includes "Special Beginnings," the area's first birthing center. Special Beginnings provides a unique care nursery for newborns needing intensive care and an operating suite for cesarean deliveries. Also included in the Women's Pavilion is a full gynecological wing with facilities for treatment and recovery.

If you'd like more information about the Women's Pavilion at Heritage Hospital or would like to arrange a tour of the facilities, call us at 641-7272 during business hours. We'll be happy to show you just how comprehensive our dedication is.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY July 26

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You may feel all stirred up to make some big plans for the future--go with the feeling. Channel your thoughts and efforts along very positive lines and have much success.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): A far-away individual can give you good ideas for growth and advancement. Don't rush into a good time without planning.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Avoid an argumetntat home; the accord has been building for some time. Control your temper tonight.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Study a message carefully before answering it. Be very cautious in motion. Caution is the key word today.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Coordinate your spending and saving of money, and set down a wiser budget for your family and home.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Budget your time wisely, as that personal wish will take longer than expected. Arrange a social affair with old friends.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Seize an opportunity to turn a problem into something advantageous. It will take some time, but will be worth it.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Get together with an old friend who has been depressed lately, but who is now out of the dumps. Have a great time.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Youa re well equipped to handle a public matter, but don't be hasty or forceful or you'll lose out in the long run.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): You want to begin something new and inspiring--an excellent idea. Plan a trip which will be profitable.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): The venture in which you and your mate are involved may take some time to mature, so be patient.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): You have agreed to handle an outside matter, but it would be better to find someone with experience to help out.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): You may be eager to begin the activities ahead of you, but get a family tie to help. The beginning of an upswing.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, will be able to accomplish a great deal if the proper encouragement is given early on. Your child should be given a fine education which will prepare him or her for a position in a large corporation, or possibly in government. Sports are necessary here.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY July 27

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Use your imagination to develop an original and progressive plan of action. With assistance from some influential friends, you could be sitting on top of the world.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Be willing to engage in some activities of your mate's choice. Let your kind and charming side lead your day.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Get busy early on changes you've been wanting to make at home, then have guests in and be proud.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Your communication skills will be extremely sharp. You'll have no trouble getting ideas across today.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Follow the lead of those who have proven track records. Listen carefully to their advice.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): New ideas and your generous nature can be used to great advantage. Avoid someone who usually nags you this evening.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Consider your priorities and pursue the goals which are most important to you. Show more affection to your loved one.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Being around many of your old friends could be very enjoyable if you let your fine sense of humor run free.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Efficiency in your duties and an effort to increase your property values will give you a good feeling of satisfaction.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Stay alert for opportunities which could yield rapid career advancement. Improve your wardrobe.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): You can relieve that "in a rut" feeling by controlling your tendency to do everything as an annoying routine.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): This may be a good time to purchase new furnishings you've been considering. Tie up loose ends you've left hanging.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Remember that there are others around who can help you or give advice. You don't always have to go it alone.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, will have a refined manner and attractive appearance. Be sure that these facts are not permitted to play such a major role that they will spoil your child. A good education is a must, and be sure to have good books around the house. Light sports are best.

For friends, we like to choose optimists, people who like to look on the bright side of life. For our bridge partners we prefer pessimists, those who always fear the worst.

If an optimist were sitting South, he would like his club holding and try for bigger things by making a slam.try of four clubs. That might propel North beyond four spades. The pessimist would be inhibited by his aceless hand and scrawny trump holding, so he would settle for four spades.

The play of the hand also would likely be different. Those who wear rose-colored spectacles would reckon that if the club finesse were right and if they could pick up the trump suit without loss, they would make 12 tricks.

Therefore, after winning the queen of hearts, they would lay down the king of spades at trick two. When West showed out and the club finesse later failed, they would go down a trick, losing two trumps and a trick in each minor suit.

The pessimist would take a far dimmer view of the hand. He would presume that he was going to lose the club finesse. Since the ace of diamonds was a sure loser, he would see that he had to limit his trump losers to one to bring home his contract.

After winning the queen of hearts, this declarer's first move would be to lead a low trump from hand. If West produced a trump, declarer would simply cover as cheaply as possible. If that trick were taken by East, that would mean that trumps were no worse than 3-1 and the ace-king would pick up the outstanding pieces.

As the cards lie, when West shows out on the first trump declarer rises with dummy's ace and returns the jack. After East covers, declarer wins the king and continues with a trump to the nine. East scores his ten, but declarer can draw the last trump and try the club finesse for an overtrick.

This Tudor style 3-bedroom home is unusually attractive with its stone accents and impressive windows. Its sizeable rooms appear larger thanks to sloped ceilings and a tasteful floor plan. A quaint breakfast nook with bow window provides a buffer between the no-nonsense kitchen and elegant, airy dining room. Comfort comes naturally in the living room which features a large fireplace with stone hearth. An outside patio is easily accessible through sliding doors and enjoys private access to the master bedroom.

Keys Exhibition Offers Glimpse Of Decorative, Cultural History

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

What could be more ordinary than a key? Each of these prosaic devices, anonymously stamped out by the thousands, looks pretty much like another of the same type.

But a current exhibition at the Cooper-Hewitt Museum, the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of Design in New York, reveals an unexpectedly rich decorative and cultural history for keys and locks, which are believed to have originated many centuries ago in the Middle East, probably to safeguard grain.

While it may not be a first, this showing of about 500 keys, locks and related devices is believed to be one of the most inclusive.

"It offers a glimpse into nearly 2,000 years of history," said David McFadden, the museum's decorative arts curator and curator for the exhibition, which runs through Oct. 18.

He said that once you delve into the subject, the historic associations, artistic potential and cultural significance of keys and locks through the ages become obvious.

"I guarantee that those who see it will look at their own door key rather differently. They will realize it is part of a long tradition," he said.

The exhibition has been assembled from the museum's collection and loans from private collectors and institutions. The emphasis is on rare, ornate locks and keys of the past.

But the exhibit proves that ingenuity continues today by showing one of the newest electronic devices, a system in which a sensor reads fingerprints, matches them with a recorded image and then admits or bars the petitioner.

According to McFadden, the exhibition's design importance is that it compares and contrasts periods and styles and shows how an era's overall style affected something as practical and commonplace as keys.

For example, the rococo key designs of the 18th century, with their asymmetrical shells and scrolls inspired by organic shapes, employ the same design vocabulary found in 18th century architecture, porcelain and silver.

According to Bert Spilker — a well-known collector who assisted in the exhibit's organization, lent some of his prized examples and wrote the exhibition catalogue essay — the first locks and keys were made of wood and crafted by carpenters.

By the days of the Roman Empire, the craft was taken over by metalsmiths. That was good for history since the early wooden keys have fallen victim to decay, while a number of the keys made of metal in the last 2,000 years have survived.

Typically, regardless of the century in which they were made, keys consist of three parts: the handle (usually round) for grasping, the shaft and the bit that is inserted into the lock.

Mass production of keys began in the 19th century; before that blacksmiths often made keys. But many of our current attitudes about keys and locks developed a century earlier. There was a dramatic increase in the number of keys and in the number of people using them on a daily basis, Spilker said.

As more people moved into cities and life took on a more anonymous cast than in small towns and rural areas, the need for keys grew. Rising crime and the growth of banking increased the need for security devices and stimulated lockmaking. Before 1700, most locks were so easy to pick that people used to camouflage them, often adding false locks to throw thieves off the trail.

The 1700s also produced the most beautiful and ornamental keys, used for everything from securing dwellings to locking valuables in furniture and chests. Even boxes containing tea and sugar often were fitted with small locks to protect these valuable edibles.

By the 19th century, the era of security was in full sway. In England, where there were many technical advances, the Chubb Co., for example, advertised one lock as unpickable.

But at the Crystal Palace Exhibition in London in 1851, an American locksmith, Alfred C. Hobbs, succeeded in publicly picking the Chubb lock and received a substantial cash prize for doing so, Spilker said.

On The House
By ANDY LANG

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

When you contemplate buying an existing house (as real estate people call a house that has been lived in), you risk the possibility of having to make repairs to it within a year or two of moving in.

Which is not surprising, because you usually can buy an existing house cheaper than if it were new. You get the advantage of landscaping and other improvements made by the previous owner or owners. And you often can get into an established neighborhood that is unlikely to change much over time.

What you don't want are major repair costs. One way to avoid them is to have a house inspection made by a professional before you make a final commitment. There are individuals who perform the service and many companies that do it throughout the United States.

How to be your own house inspector is explained in Alfred H. Daniel's book, "The Home Inspection Manual." As he puts it, the book "was born of the need to educate the prospective home buyer."

Before inspecting the house of your choice, call the real estate agent (or the seller if the house is being sold by the owner) and make a daytime appointment to revisit the house, explaining that you wish to inspect personally before buying.

No part of the house is left out of the suggested inspection points. So numerous are the recommended places to check and the details to be looked into that it probably would take more than a single day to complete the job. But better too many suggested trouble spots than not enough. And you can choose those you are most interested in.

A checklist near the end of the book contains a special rating system for the various features of the house. For instance, X stands for something that exists, O for something that doesn't, A for satisfactory, B for anything that needs routine attention, C for anything that requires special attention and NA for Not Applicable.

Parts in disrepair often are outside the house as well as inside. Where to look? The recommendation is to inspect the siding, the windows, gutters, downspouts, roof, vents, gable ends, porches, railings, walks, buildings and their components and landscaping.

Try to figure out what will have to be replaced when and if you move in. When there appears to be a serious structural defect that makes you wonder but doesn't necessarily change your mind about buying, Daniel recommends negotiating with the seller for a corresponding reduction in the asking price to pay for fixing the defect.

Whether you do your own home inspection or hire a professional, know ahead of time that you are not going to encounter the "perfect" house. There will always be something wrong; most of the time, there will be many things wrong. What you will have to do is to weigh the problems against the probable cost of solving them.

Make a distinction between something that really must be fixed and something that you merely want to change because you don't like it the way it looks or have an idea of how it can be improved to suit your own tastes. And if you make a deal with the seller to pay for the cost of fixing something, be sure to put it in writing.

Friend In Need

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — A business executive says he never forgot a "vital, aggressive, bear of a man" he met two decades ago while working as a surveyor, and he's determined to get the man a pension now that asthma and other problems have reduced the man to penilessness.

Donald Fromm, 49, is homeless and exists on $210 a month in welfare payments. Illness has cut his weight from 200 to 136 pounds, but the Social Security Admininstration has refused to declare him disabled, saying its doctors believe he could still work a desk job.

Michael Klein, a marketing executive with a home in fashionable Sausalito and a 30-foot sailboat, has served as Fromm's unpaid adviser in his so-far unsuccessful battle to get a pension. Klein has written dozens of letters to government officials, doctors and the media, and though he has no law training has appeared at Social Security proceedings as Fromm's legal adviser.

Craftsman-Style Homes Reflect Simple Features

From COUNTRY HOME
A Meredith Magazine

Before 1910, most American houses were patterned after the designs of earlier European buildings — Greek temples, renaissance villas, Medieval cottages and Gothic cathedrals.

About 1900, however, a number of American architects, including Frank Lloyd Wright and Charles and Henry Greene, developed the first popular modern styles — architectural fashions that were not influenced by old-world structures.

Writing in Country Home magazine, authors Virginia and Lee McAlester reveal craftsman-style homes as comfortable residences characterized by low-pitched gabled roofs with wide overhanging eaves that displayed the exposed ends of the roof rafters. Often, the rafter end was cut into a decorative shape. Many craftsman houses also featured exposed purlins visible under the eaves of the gable end.

Craftsman porches typically have simple square columns embellished with decorative knee braces. The porch railings also are notable in their simplicity. Similarly, the trim around the windows and even the doors is absolutely plain. These simplified details were not mere cost-cutting devices — they were a conscious choice. The simplified craftsman facade, free of traditional decoration, expressed the underlying structure and typified the new modernism of the early 20th century.

These contemporary designs stood in dramatic contrast to the preceding Queen Anne fashion, which featured high-pitched roofs, elaborate spindles and ornamentation reminiscent of Grecian and Roman architecture. Although there had been hints of modern architecture in the last decades of the 19th century — particularly in suburban residences and some Chicago skyscrapers — it was not until the early 1900s that modernism came to dominate new construction across the country. A drive through early 20th century suburbs in almost any American city will reveal entire neighborhoods of these craftsman-style houses.

The craftsman style emerged around the turn of the century as a reflection of the nation's new attitude. Fresh with its first taste of colonial expansion after victory in the Spanish-American War, it was ready for a change. Publicized by popular magazines and builders' pattern books, craftsman architecture quickly swept the country to become the dominant fashion in housing.

The craftsman period affected not only exteriors, but all related aspects of interiors and the decorative arts. Simple, unadorned lines became popular for furniture. Light fixtures and window design became strongly geometric. Fireplaces were surrounded by large, unglazed tiles and topped by simple wooden mantels.

The garage was an architectural result of social change during the craftsman era. Between 1908 and 1920 — the years of the advent of the mass-produced automobile — the sale of Ford's Model T skyrocketed, and garages began to take the place of stables and carriage houses. The detached garage was set well behind the house, as stables had been. The location was no longer dictated by the smell of manure but by gas fumes and fires.

Best Experience

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Nanette Davis-Ferrall, a paraplegic who managed to walk again with the help of a revolutionary computer-controlled device, says she is having her best experience yet — motherhood.

Mrs. Davis-Ferrall, 27, and her husband, Gregory Ferrall, 30, showed off their 3-day-old son, Zach, to reporters at St. Elizbeth Medical Center on Thursday.

She said they nicknamed him "Turtle" because "he lays on his stomach and puts his head up, then he puts his lip out and he looks like a turtle."

Mrs. Davis-Ferrall was paralyzed in an auto accident the night of her high school graduation nine years ago. In 1982, she took some steps with the help of an electrical muscle-stimulation system developed at Wright State University.

Her struggle to walk was the basis of the TV movie "First Steps."

Still, she said no experiences compared to having a baby, which was "far above and beyond all of them."

To any other paralyzed woman who wants to have a baby, her advice was: "Go for it, if she really wants it."

Q. Will mothballs keep snakes away?

A. Many people believe that mothballs, lime, gourd vines, cedar oil or sulfur will repel snakes. All these materials and many others have been tested and none has proven effective. The best method to keep snakes away from your yard is to remove any habitat that would provide food or cover for a snake. Please consider, though, that most snakes are not aggressive and will go the other way if given a chance. Since 1958, eight people have died from snakebites in North Carolina. In those 29 years there were 21 years when no one in North Carolina died from a snakebite. In that same time period, 148 people in North Carolina were killed by lightning strikes, 16 in 1961 alone.

Q. Is it true that corn should be cooked as soon as possible after picking?

A. Yes. Sugar in the kernels starts to change to starch as soon as an ear of corn is picked. For the sweetest possible corn-on-the-cob, have the water boiling when you pick the corn. Grocery store corn-on-the cob is good, but it is hard to beat that fresh from the garden corn.

Q. Do dragonflies sting? What do they eat?

A. Dragonflies do not sting or bite. Adult dragonfliles are sometimes called "mosquito hawks" because they prey on mosquitoes. They also eat small moths and other flying insects. Dragonfly naiads eat mosquito larvae, aquatic larvae of beetles and naiads of stone flies and mayflies. The larvae of certain aquatic insects are called naiads.

Q. — I plan to install a brick floor on the patio in the rear of our house. I originally planned to lay the bricks in sand without using mortar, but I now want to use the mortar. Is there any special way this can be done?

A. — Do as you would have done with the sand. Spread the dry mortar into the joints, brush off the excess and sprinkle the joints with water. Wait about 20 minutes, then sprinkle again. Examine the joints and see whether any more mortar is required. If not, let the whole thing alone and it will harden overnight. Sprinkle the patio lightly at least once a day for five or six days.

Q. — What does "milking" the color of a wood finish mean?

A. — It refers to the addition of white to a color to make it a bit lighter.

Previous successful candidates have progressed to top level positions with six figure incomes. Additional opportunities may include travel to various towns.

FREE, NO OBLIGATION EVALUATION.
We want you to succeed as much as you do. So, as part of our evaluation process, we will invest the time and expense to determine your qualifications through an extensive interview process...and it only takes a couple hours of your time.

EXPERIENCE
We're looking for people with sales experience in clothing, insurance, banking and other fields that do not reward you in proportion to your performance.

EDUCATION GIVES YOU A HEAD START.
We prefer people who have earned a college degree, but we will make exceptions for unusually talented and high motivated people. We'll do this because many of the characteristics of successful candidates cannot be taught in college: ambition, "street smarts", sense of humor, commitment, and an unbeatable desire to succeed

Mr. Goodwrench

THE TURBO THAT'S GOING TO MAKE SAABS AND VOLVOS MOVE SLOWER.

PRESENTING THE PEUGEOT 505 TURBOS.

Car and Driver recently described the 150-hp Peugeot 505 Turbo S as a car with "instant launch capabilities."

And now, these cars are about to rocket out of the showroom. Because until September 30th, you'll get as much as $3000* in cash when you buy a Peugeot 505 Turbo S sedan or wagon. You can take the money and run, or use it as a down payment. You can even use it as a down payment on a lease or financing.

But besides $3000, you'll also get a car with standard features and amenities (like ABS) only available from Saab and Volvo at extra cost, if at all.

So stop in for a test drive. You'll see what Saab and Volvo are worried about.

*See us for details. Manufacturer's suggested retail prices do not include destination, taxes and title charges.

"WE WANT OUR HOME TO IMPRESS SOME VERY IMPORTANT PEOPLE."

"US."

We know something about achievement. That's why we were impressed by the achievement that is Planter's Walk.

Just stand inside the custom decorated model, the view is breathtaking. . .

Cathedral ceilings with skylights, masonary fireplaces, crown molding, chairrail and more. . .

Airy and convenient kitchens, wood decks and custom landscaping. . .

This transitional architecture reflects the location, which is the finest in Greenville, next to the Brook Valley Country Club.

Perhaps Planter's Walk's greatest achievement is offering very high style without very high prices.

Come see Planter's Walk now. Take 14th Street extension past Brook Valley exit. Model open daily 1:00 - 5:00 p.m. Saturday 10:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.

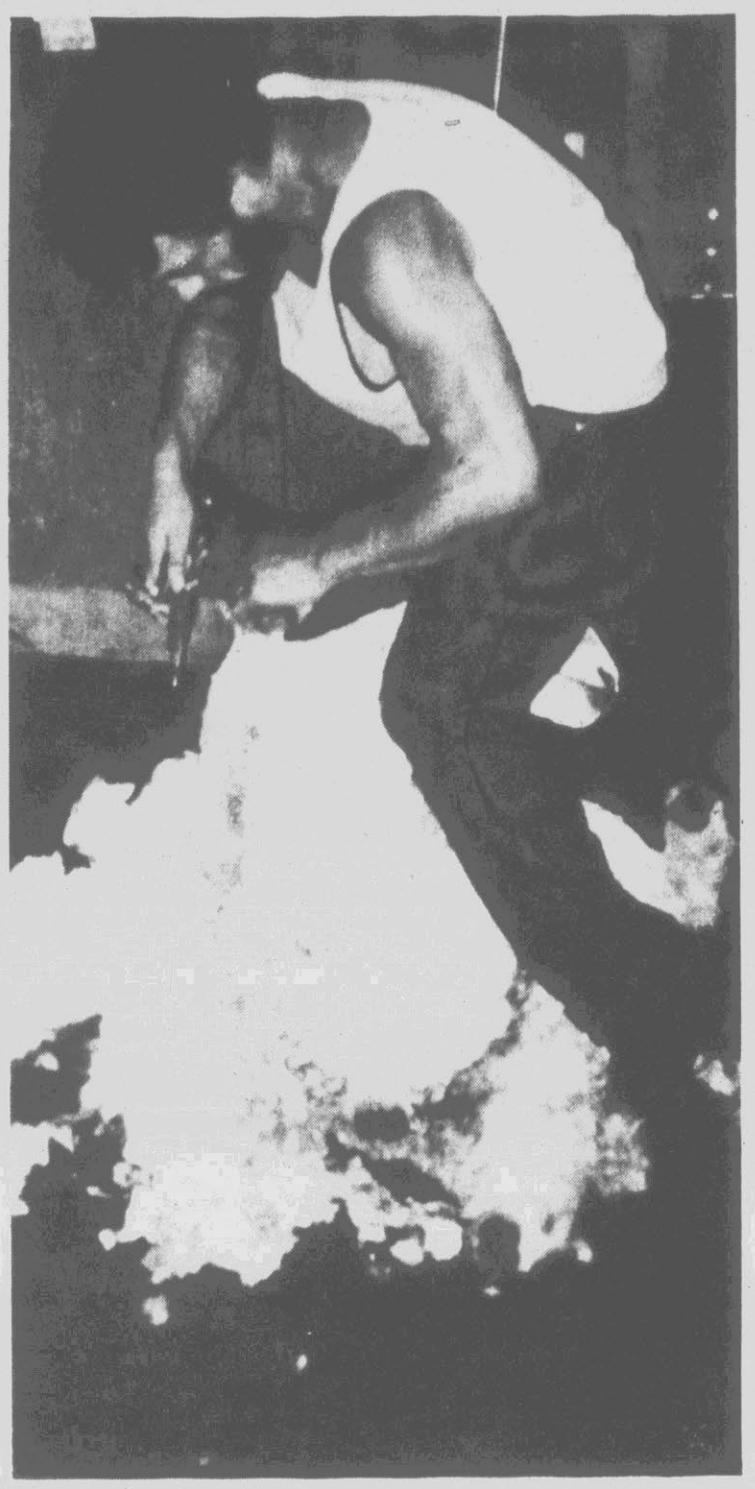
A PLACE OF TRANQUILITY — The beach home of the Harnett family on the Bay of Plenty provided vistas of a quiet lake front, gentle hills and wooded areas, and in the distance, the sight of an active volcano 25 miles off the Bay of Bounty shore.



SHEEP SHEARING — The shearing of sheep is a common sight in New Zealand, where a population of about three million people is far outnumbered by nearly 70 million sheep. Here, an unidentified Maori worker skillfully removes the animal's valuable wool.

Discovering New Zealand's Beauty

Text By Jerry Raynor
Photographs By Lucy Wright

Longtime Greenville resident, Boston native Dr. Lucy Wright, Dean of Student Services, East Carolina University is a veteran of living and traveling in European, Central and South American countries. Recently, she became a first time discoverer of "the spectacular beauty and grandeur of New Zealand," the Pacific country of two islands 1,200 miles east of the south coast of Australia. Her husband, Dr. Jim Wright, of the ECU English Department, was unable to make the trip due to other commitments.

"New Zealanders, who call themselves Kiwis, are warm, outgoing. They have a special way of making you feel you're wanted. It's not just a surface thing. It's sincere. I found this everywhere, with my host family and with everyone I encountered on my travels in both the country's two islands," Mrs. Wright said.

Along with several other local area people, Mrs. Wright traveled with 40 Tar Heels taking part in this year's North Carolina's Friendship Force group during May and June. Each year, the friendship group travels to some foreign land, getting to know peoples and discover lands in all areas of the world.

Group members this year had the option of a shorter or longer trip. "I decided on staying on longer so that I could spend several days with a host family. I feel in visiting a foreign country that a family-to-family relationship makes a great difference. It's the ideal way to form a bond with people and places new to you."

Before making the trip, Mrs. Wright corresponded with the family suggested to her by the force coordinators.

The entire group flew from Raleigh to Auckland on New Zealand's North Island. "From there I flew to Gisborne, on Poverty Bay on the island's east coast. It's a lively port town, about the size of Greenville.

"My host family, Philip Harnett, his wife Verna and two sons, Bernard and Nigel live on a farm near the town of Matawai, about 60 miles north of Gisborne. They met me at the airport. The reception at the airport was heartwarming, a welcome wreath over the door and children dancing. The weather there in May, just before the onset of their winter, was delightfully cool, like our early November days. Yet profusions of flowers were in bloom, including lots of roses."

Living with the Harnetts "was fascinating, totally rewarding. The large family farm, named Torohiwi, is nestled in a pleasant hilly area. They raise sheep, cattle and deer. Deer farming provides two sources of income, meat for the venison market and horns for sale in the Orient. I was told Orientals use the horns as an aphrodisiac."

The older Harnett son, Bernard, 22, is in conservation work. Nigel, 20, attends business school.

One discovery Mrs. Wright had not expected "was the influence of the original Maori inhabitants. I knew about them, of course, that they settled the islands about 1350 A.D., but I did not realize the prevalence of their culture everywhere. Over the years, the Maori and the European settlers have freely intermarried, so that you find many degrees of Maori and part-Maori. Maori name places abound. They are wonderfully evocative and lyrical names."

Food at the Harnett home, Mrs. Wright termed as "lots of wonderful meat and fresh vegetables." Television viewing over two channels, both government-owned, "is important to the Harnett family. The big news while I was with them was the military coup in the Fiji Islands, especially as it involved the hijacking of a New Zealand plane." The Fiji Islands are New Zealand's nearest sizeable island nation, a bit closer than the 1,200 miles that separates the nation from Australia.

"My visit there also coincided with the World Rugby Cup playoffs. The Kiwis are fond of saying New Zealand has four religions, rugby, cricket, horse racing and beer drinking.

"Actually," Mrs. Wright added, "in the realm of religion, I found out that the Mormans have a very strong influence on the Maori." Two sites near the farm offered special appeal to Mrs. Wright. "Going to the Maori meeting house was a tremendously moving experience. I was greeted, invited inside and told marvelous tales of their ancestors. Next door I was feted with singing, dancing and food."

Mrs. Wright remembers "the time spent with the Harnett family at their guest beach home on the Bay of Plenty north of Matawai as the best part of my trip. It's such a tranquil, restful place. From their house you can see an active volcano on White Island, more than 25 miles distant at sea. Such a contrast!"

South Island Tour

Following her stay with the host family on North Island, Mrs. Wright and three others made a 12-day tour of South Island, larger of the two islands.

"It's truly a land of spectacular sights, ranging from the unusual architecture of Christchurch and Dunedin to the natural beauty of vast areas protected as national park land. There's the majesty of Mt. Cook, at 12,349 feet the highest in New Zealand's Southern Alps.

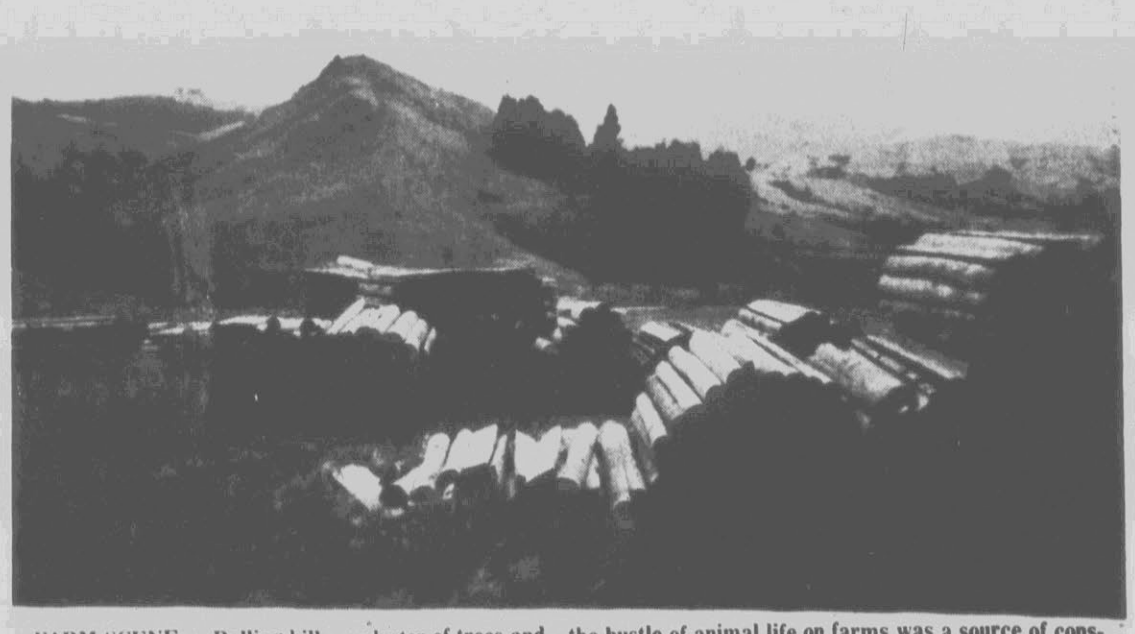
"And stretching south on the west coast along the Tasman Sea from Milford Sound are the incredible coastal indentures of Fjordland. There's nothing like it anywhere except in Norway. It's a land too of heavy seasonal rains. It rained while we were there. We saw numerous waterfalls, cascades, the unbelievable verdancy of green, underfoot and on rocks, and snow on distant peaks.

"The area reminds me a great deal of Southern Chile's mountain and lake regions."

Although Mrs. Wright, who is fluent in Spanish, Portuguese and Italian, and who has in the past lived and traveled primarily in Spain, Portugal, Colombia, Peru and Chile, admits her Latin languages were of little use in New Zealand, she maintains "that did not matter. They understood my English and I understood their warmth and reveled in the beauty of the people and countryside new to me. Who could ask for anything more?"

A DELIGHTFUL PLACE — One of the places Mrs. Wright found most interesting was a Maori Meeting House near Matawai. Traditional Maroi woodcarvings decorate the doorways and the interior architecture of the building.

HOST FAMILY — Members of the Harnett family, host to Mrs. Wright during a visit to their farm named Torohiwi, are, left to right: son Philip, husband and wife Bernard and Verna, and son Nigel. The Harnetts raise sheep, cattle and deer on their large farm near the small town of Matawai.



FARM SCENE — Rolling hills, a cluster of trees and neat stacks of wood form a typical New Zealand rural scene. Mrs. Wright said the contrast of gentle scenes and the bustle of animal life on farms was a source of constant interest.

July Issue Of Historical Review Highlights Carolina Baseball

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department Of Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — Although sports at both the collegiate and professional levels are popular pastimes for many North Carolinians, not much has been written about the history of sports in the Tar Heel State.

The July issue of the "North Carolina Historical Review" helps to correct this gap with two articles that focus on the coming of professional baseball to North Carolina in 1902 and the concern about abuses in collegiate athletics at the University of North Carolina in the 1930s.

A third story, about the beginnings of Duke University, offers further insight into the history of higher education in North Carolina.

Since the late 19th century, North Carolinians have enjoyed the game of baseball. But scholars have written little about professional minor league teams and their important place in the state's social history.

Now Jim L. Sumner, a historian with the State Historic Preservation office, has resurrected the excitement of minor league baseball in his article "The North Carolina State Professional Baseball League of 1902." That organization was the first professional baseball league in North Carolina, and it excited a public mania for the national pastime and planted the seeds for future leagues in the state.

Sumner discusses how the league was formed and operated. He identified team owners, managers, players and even the umpires, who suffered public disdain from the outset. Sumner describes the thrills that such teams as the Charlotte Hornets and Wilmington Sea Gulls provided for their fans at the turn of the century.

In 1935 sports were also on the mind of Frank Porter Graham, president of the consolidated University of North Carolina. In that year the success of the football team at UNC-Chapel Hill intensified Graham's fear of abuses in collegiate sports, and he launched his campaign against professionalism in college athletics. In "The Graham Plan of 1935: An Aborted Crusade to De-Emphasize College Athletics," Richard Stone, professor of history at Western Kentucky University, describes the controversy surrounding Graham's efforts to curtail big-time sports on North Carolina's campuses. Although the Graham plan failed, writes Stone, "Frank Porter Graham nevertheless managed to implant a bit of his southern Presbyterian conscience into his university, and that influence has survived to the present day."

Another of North Carolina's universities is the subject of the two-part "Crises in University Governance: The Launching of Duke University, 1925-1935," by Robert F. Durden, professor of history at Duke.

In Part I, Durden traces the history of that university from the time it was orgaanized around Trinity College in late 1924 until 1930. Durden skillfully recounts how President William P. Few, with the support of James B. Duke and his family's endowment, began to build a major research university in the poverty stricken South. Durden describes in detail the governmental and financial crises that Few surmounted to ensure Duke University's survival as a major national institution.

Part II of the article, which covers the period 1931-1935, will appear in the October, 1987, "Historical Review."

With the bicentennial of the Constitution now officially under way, public attention is turning to the document and the context in which it was conceived. In a review essay entitled "Beyond the Republican Synthesis: Reinterpreting the Constitution," Jeffrey J. Crow, editor-in-chief of the "North Carolina Historical Review," evaluates an important new work on the Constitution — "Beyond Confederation: Origins of the Constitution and American National Identity," edited by Richard Beeman, Stephen Botein and Edward C. Carter II. Crow provides an analysis of the collection of essays and concludes that the book may inspire additional specialized studies about people and events "unalterably affected by the deliberations in Philadelphia in the summer of 1787."

The "North Carolina Historical Review" is published quarterly by the Historical Publications Section of the N.C. Division of Archives and History, Department of Cultural Resources. An annual subscription costs $15 and includes a year's subscription (six issues) to "Carolina Comments," a bimonthly commentary about historical activities throughout the state and the programs of the Division of Archives and History.

PHOTO SHOWCASED — A photograph by Charles Vollertsen of Images Creative Photography Inc., Greenville, titled "California Dreaming," has been selected to be showcased in the 96th International Exposition of Professional Photography August 2-4 in Rosemont, Illinois. The exhibition, of more than 2,500 photographs, is the world's largest show of professional photography gathered at one time under roof.

Preserving Ocracoke Site

MANTEO — Preservation work has begun on the historic Ocracoke Lighthouse Keeper's Quarters. The National Park Service project began June 8.

The project is designed to make the structure safe for use as living quarters and to improve its appearance.

The Ocracoke Lighthouse is among the oldest in the country. The original part of the keeper's house, the first floor of the west apartment, may be the oldest house standing on the Outer Banks.

The original house, a one-floor, brick structure, was built in 1823, the same year that the Ocracoke Lighthouse was completed. A second floor was added in 1897. Further additions in 1929 doubled the size of the structure and provided apartments for two families.

Today, the building is owned by the U.S. Coast Guard, and is home for two National Park Service families through an agreement between the Coast Guard and the Park Service.

The exterior and surrounding grounds will be restored as closely as possible to its earlier appearance. The interior will be adapted for use as a contemporary family dwelling. Stabilization of the structure will be an ongoing effort. Two of the four chimneys will be rebuilt above the roof line.

The work is being conducted by the Williamsport Preservation Training Center, a branch of the National Park Service that employs and trains skilled craftsmen in the art of historic preservation.

Four of the five craftsmen will live at the Ocracoke Coast Guard Station for the duration of the project.

Further work in the historic district will attempt to delineate the access roads that led to the lighthouse in the 1930's, a time when the few roads in Ocracoke Village were nothing more than dirt trails. Finally, the extensive picket fence that surrounds the historic district will be repaired.

A Fine Small Volume For Quiet Summertime Reading

ST. ANDREWS REVIEW. Spring/Summer 1987. Issue No. 32. Susan Ketchin Edgerton, General Editor. Laurinburg. St. Andrews Press. Paper, 80 pages. $6.

For summertime pleasure, readers need at least one easy-to-carry, small volume that offers good literature for those quiet moments free of work, family or vacation fever.

The spring/summer 1987 issue of "St. Andrews Review" is the perfect answer to this need. It continues the offering of excellence that is a trademark of this compact, twice-yearly volume.

In contrast to the fall/winter 1986 volume that contained short stories mostly of Latin America locales, the emphasis in this issue is decidedly on places and peoples of the South. Here is a fresh look at the South of contemporary times, with what is commonly referred to as oddball or strange characters of the Dixie types predominating.

Six short stories comprise the fiction portion of this issue, one each by four writers and two by a fifth writer.

In Kaye Gibbons' "The Headache," the reader can emphathize with the suffering of Lucille, a poor woman who found a pocketbook in a restroom — "A nice one like a town lady carries. . . . Well, I stuck that pocketbook up under my dress . . . I couldn't look at my husband and boys in the face when I came out of that toilet." Instead of the hoped-for windfall of desperately needed money inside the found treasure, it held a hissing snake. What followed, and how Lucille overcame the terrible headaches resulting from the serpent confrontation, is altogether touching and believable.

Without sentimentally, Charles Conner relates in "The Man Who Hugged Chickens" the colorful tale of a young boy who took a job working with two free-spirit men — Rafe and Pigeon Boyd; men his churchgoing mama sternly disapproved of. The men, both hearty stipplers and jokesters, drove an old dilapidated truck on trips to catch chickens and deliver them to the buying market.

In writing that has a ring of Mark Twain in its comic moments, Conner brings alive the three main characters and half a dozen peripheral ones in this entertaining story of work, boozing, religious fervor and narrow-minded citizens of a small southern town.

Conner's second contribution in this issue is replete with humor, an ironic story of the besting of a cafe waitress "whose coarse temper permeates the premises." An unusual crew, a fast-talking con man and his associates, confuse the grumpy woman in a complicated routine centered on a punch-out board with foot-long pecan candy logs as prizes. The way Conner economically pinpoints diverse characters and his depiction of the landscape and ambience of a small town coalesces beautifully.

Nanci Kincaid's "Like the Old Wolf in All Those Wold Stories," is a powerful but simply told tale of a woman, Melvina, who suffers repeated abuse at the hands of her man, Alfonso Williams, a no-count drunkard. Eventually, a neighbor, tired of the repeated uproars, calls the sheriff. His belief that the riddance of Alfonso will make life happier for Melvina and her children, is sadly mistaken. It's a well-told story of the old theme that some people seem to thrive best in a hell of their own without other broaching interference, well-intended or not.

In the other stories — "Holding the Nail" by Charlene Y. Suggs and "Life Without Water" by Nancy Jean Peacock, readers are given other viewpoints of rural life in the South of recent years. Both are stories of losses, of the deterioration of families and of the courage and endurance that overcomes the sad sense of what might have been.

Poetry as usual in all issues of St. Andrews Review, provides a substantial part of each publication. This issue has 19 poems by 15 poets — and in keeping with the fiction, a goodly portion of the poems relate to the South — some directly, others in a framework universally applicable to any area.

In "Widow," a long poem by Mary Kratt, the fascinating thread of events is a reconstruction of entries from the journal of Susan Nye Hutchinson. The widow, after a journey by steamboat, train and rickety coach, arrives in Salisbury in October, 1838. The poem evokes the restrictive life of women at that time as well as the loneliness of a young woman with children thrust into the necessity of earning a living while yearning for companionship.

Poet Robert Morgan deals with three entirely different subjects in as many poems — the longing for his Cherokee home by an Indian tired of pale people in in the tinsel world of England, in "Attakullakulla Goes to London"; the pathos of German prisoners of war on an American farm being rebuffed when they try to get close to a blond child that reminds them of their own children, and environment pollution in "Mud Library."

A fine dose of humor runs through R.T. Smith's "Wacky Jungle Chief Marries 20 Mannikins!" The chief, irked by the harangues and battles of his flesh and blood wives, finds quiet and the solace of non-communicative females with his new batch of wives, 20 lifeless mannequins with green eyes pulled from a crashed cargo plane.

All the poems have interest in reflecting nature, in sketches of people and human relations.

For front porch or shade tree reading, late at night browsing, o with early morning coffee, the sp ing/summer 1987 issue of St. An drews Review is a worthy compa nion.

Ideas For The Collector

COLLECTOR'S SIDELINES — Many collectors of postage stamps from time-to-time come across items that although are not always specimens of valid postal issues, are colorful sideline additions to collections. Sometimes it is the use of postal issues for other than mailing purposes — such as the two pence 1951 British housing receipt fee of 1951, right center; a special postmark used in Paris, upper right, advocating the collection of stamps, or a military cancellation, in this instance a British Field Post Office, on a King George regular issue, second from top left. Other specimens shown here include a postage stamp sized poster from the Dominican Republic; two non-postal war progaganda issues of 1939 and 1940; air mail stickers from Cyprus and West Germany; registration labels of Traipei and Trinidad; items from diplomatic mail pouches of Peru, Mexico and Venezuela; an 1895 pen-cancelled item from France, and the numbered stamp affixed to a French national lottery ticket sold to benefit former colonies of France. FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By ALAN R. BAILEY

Did you know...?

• The human body can survive three minutes without oxygen, three days without water and three weeks without food.

• People once thought that a sneeze was a sign that death was near, so they started saying "God bless you" as a kind of condolence for what might be a last "achoo."

• Whooping cough was once treated by putting a live frog in the patient's mouth.

Barbara Seuling's latest book, "You Can't Swim with Your Eyes Open and Other Freaky Facts About the Human Body" (Lodestar Books, 1986) presents facts relating to the human physiology. It is a book full of fun and startling facts covering a variety of oddities about the amazing machine we call the body.

Ms. Seuling explores the old and quirky ways that humans function, grow, heal, are born and die, and zany beliefs and curiosities about the human condition throughout history.

This eye-opening collection of fantastic truths is sure to keep you laughing, and cartoons drawn in fine line break up the text and reinforce the light tone of the book.

Barbara Seuling is the author-illustrator of many freaky facts books, including "You Can't Eat Peanuts in Church and Other Little-known Laws," "Elephants Can't Jump and Other Freaky Facts About Animals" and "You Can't Show Kids in Underwear and Other Little-known Facts About Television."

N.C. Museum Of Art Acquires 19th Century Paintings

"Bridal Veil Falls, Yosemite" a painting by Albert Bierstadt

By SHARON BROOM
N.C. Museum of Art

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Musuem of Art has acquired two significant American 19th-century paintings, "Bridal Veil Falls, Yosemite" by Albert Bierstadt, painted about 1871-73 and "Salt Marsh at Southport, Conn." by Johnson Heade, painted in the period about 1875 to 1881.

The acquisition of the Bierstadt painting was made possible, in part, by funds from the Robert F. Phifer Bequest to the North Carolina Art Society.

Both paintings are considered excellent examples of the work of these two painters, who are among the most important landscape artists of the 19th century. The works will be placed on view during a reinstallation of the museum's American Galleries, which begins August 3 and will be completed by the end of the month.

According to museum director Richard Schneiderman, "These two works represent the beginning of our effort to enchance significantly the museum's collection of American paintings — a goal which the staff and board of trustees have identified as our priorirty for the next few years in the area of acquisitions.

"We are especially grateful to the Art Society for making the Phifer Fund monies available to the museum for the purchase of the Bierstadt," he said.

Bierstadt (1830-1902) was born in Germany and came to America with his parents at age two. As a young man, he studied landscape painting in both America and Germany. His work during a series of journeys to the Rocky Mountains, Yosemite Valley and California established him as the pre-eminent painter of the American West.

"Bridal Veil Falls" is typical of Bierstadt's best work in its depiction of the power and majesty of nature. According to curator David Steel, "the painting sparkles with a luminosity and freshness which makes the viewer feel like the first person ever to behold the scene."

Heade's "Salt Marsh at Southport, Conn." shows a very different aspect of the American landsape, the salt marshes of the east coast which were his favorite subject. Heade painted more than a hundred views of the marshes, from Rhode Island to Florda, capturing them at various times of the day and in all types of weather. In contrast to the drama of Bierstadt's work, Heade's landscapes are characterized by tranquility and intimacy.

The son of a well-to-do farmer, Heade (1819-1904) studied with Philadelphia folk artist Edward Hicks before continuing his training in Europe. Returning to America, he lived in several northeastern cities and began to concentrate on paintings of salt marshes, which gained him his earliest critical recognition. Heade later traveled to Central and South America, where he painted numerous tropical landscapes.

The artist spent the latter part of his career in New York City and St. Augustine, Fla., where he again concentrated on tropical landscapes and flowers. Ignored by the art world during his late years and for decades after his death, Heade is now considered among the foremost artists of his time.

(NOTE: The American Galleries of the North Carolina Museum of Art will be closed to the public beginning August 4 and will reopen by the end of the month.

The closing will enable the museum staff to reinstall these galleries, placing on view the two recently acquired landsapces by Bierstadt and Heade, and replacing paintings that are being lent to other museums with works that have been in storage.)

The public is invited to attend the opening reception on August 7 from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. The Gallery is located at Herman Park Center in Goldsboro. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information call 736-3300.

A Carolina Showplace Of Art

By MARTHA WHITENER
N.C. Division of Travel and Tourism

REIDSVILLE — Hidden away high on a knoll in the rolling countryside three miles north of Reidsville is a romantic and fascinating cultural legacy — Chinqua-Penn Plantation.

The former home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Penn, Chinqua-Penn is widely known for its lavish, international flavor.

Thomas Jefferson Penn was the owner of Penn Tobacco Company, the company founded by his father which was later sold to American Tobacco Company. Betsy Penn was a native of Niagara Falls, New York, and a member of the Schoellkopf family who developed Niagara Falls as a power source.

Until Penn's death in 1946, the Penns traveled extensively all over the world — from Europe to the Orient — collecting many rare and interesting art objects and furniture pieces. Their furnishings and estate reflected their personalities.

The English country-style house, completed in 1925, is built of grey stone and oakwood logs. The rest of the plantation, however, does not follow this English country style. Instead, the 27 rooms in the house reflect places the Penns became fond of during their many trips abroad. They purposely avoided collecting objects from one particular country or period, and as a result, the plantation is a showplace of art objects and furniture dating from 1100 B.C. China to 18th century France.

The estate was named after a chinquapin bush which grew on the hill on which the house was built. Mrs. Penn commented in an interview in 1962: "The chinquapin bush grew on this hill. The nut, like a miniature chestnut, is delicious. We thought it appropriate to spell the name Chinqua-Penn."

Magnificent wrought iron gates ornamented with clusters of chinquapin nuts in leaves of green metal open into the driveway leading to the mansion. Along the driveway is an abundance of plants, bushes and trees from all over the world. At the front door of the house is a fountain purchased in Versailles and two sculpted Italian dogs on either side.

The mansion includes rare treasures, including a mosaic of Moses with outstretched arms in the foyer; terra cotta statues from a Chinese tomb in the reception hall; a replica of King Tut's throne in teakwood and ivory; an exact replica of Marie Antoinette's powder room at Versailes; a libation bowl dating back to 1100 B.C. China; two enamel paintings and china that belonged to Francois I of France, displayed in the main living room; rare Russian icons hanging in the sitting room, and a Beauvais tapestry of Moses receiving the Ten Commandments.

Moving from room to room in the house is like travelling to all corners of the world in one day. There is a Chinese room, decorated with bright, green jade door knobs and a Buddha statuette; a French room, filled primarily with antique French furniture; an Italian room, and a velvet room with silk and velvet-covered walls.

The library is filled with books which the Penns read and enjoyed. Vases of fresh cut flowers grown in the five greenhouses on the plantation are placed throughout the house just as they were when Mr. and Mrs. Penn lived there.

The grounds of the estate are equally fascinating. A Chinese pagoda, complete with bells, stands behind a pool in the pagoda garden; the formal gardens contain thousands of varieties of flowers and shrubs, and an exotic rose garden.

Chinqua-Penn Plantation is open Monday-Wednesday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and on Sunday from 1:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Guided tours are available. For more information, write to Chinqua-Penn Plantation, Route 8, Box 682, Reidsville, N.C.; or telephone 349-4576.

Wilmington's John Cheek Winner Of Annual Prize

ATLANTA — John Cheek, bass-baritone, has been named the winner of the fifth annual North Carolina Prize, a $10,000 award to a North Carolinian for outstanding work in the visual or performing arts.

The prize is awarded jonitly by the four North Carolina newspapers owned by The New York Times Company.

The award will be presented by U.S. Senator Terry Sanford at a dinner on September 4 at the Cape Fear Country Club in Wilmington.

Cheek made his professional debut in 1976 after service in the U.S. Army, where he was featured soloist with the U.S. Army Chorus. In the decade following, he has appeared with almost every major symphony orchestra in the United States.

New York Times critic Allen Hughes wrote of a Cheek performance in New York by saying "the singing of John Cheek overshadowed everything else . . . Mr. Cheek's performance was so commanding that everything else paled in comparison."

Cheek has been highly acclaimed for his performance in operatic roles with the Metropolitan Opera and with opera companies in Toronto, Fort Worth, Tulsa, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Detroit, Miami and at the Paris, France opera house.

He performs regularly at festivals at Ravinia, Tanglewood, Saratoga, Caramoor and New York's Mostly Mozart.

This summer he is to sing "Faust" with the New York City Opera and in the fall will be heard at the Metropolitan in "La Boheme" and with the Canadian Opera in "La Forza del Destino."

Other coming engagements for Cheek include a tour to the Far East in the spring of 1988 and engagements with the Detroit and San Francisco symphonies.

Among his best known records are Boito's prologue to "Mefistofele"; Handel's "Messiah," and "A Mask of Time," the latter recorded with the BBC Symphony and Andrew Davis.

A native of Greenville, S.C., Cheek grew up in Wilmington. He received a music degree at the North Carolina School of Arts in Winston-Salem and earned the Diploma of Merit at the Academia Musicale Chigiona.

GETS REA AWARD

NEW YORK (AP) — The 1987 Rea Award for the Short Story has been awarded to Robert Coover.

The $25,000 award was established in 1986 to annually "honor a writer who has made a significant contribution to the short story as an art form."

Jurors for the award were Benjamin DeMott, Stanley Elkin and Shannon Ravenel.

ASCAP AWARD

NEW YORK (AP) — Paul Nelson recently won the $5,000 seventh annual ASCAP Rudolf Nissim Award.

The winning entry, "Vox Aeterna Amoris" for mezzo soprano solo and orchestra, consists of settings of six love poems by women over a period of 2,000 years.

Nelson, of Providence, R.I., is a recently retired professor of composition at Brown University.

ASU Professor Claims That Film Violence Romanticizes War, Serves The Government

By SPEED HALLMAN
Appalachian State University
News Bureau

"Rambo," "Top Gun" and other films that glorify war and violence are worth millions to Hollywood at the box offices, but they also serve a purpose for Washington, an Appalachian State University sociology and social work professor says.

Dr. Fred Milano said movies that glorify or romanticize war keep voters ready to support military action and large defense budgets, and prime younger viewers for shipping off to war, while showing violence as an acceptable way of dealing with international problems. "I can't think of a better way to program youth than the very violent movies," he said.

Teenagers and college students know very little about the Vietnam war, Milano said. "Enough time has passed that for political purposes it would behoove a government, whether Democrat or Republican, to prepare a new generation of youth (for war)," he said. "If it can make money for Hollywood and satisfy policy makers, it's cutting on both edges."

Milano said Hollywood may accept alternative lifestyles, but that doesn't mean the film industry readily expresses insurgent political ideas. "I think we're kind in saying that Hollywood is supercritical and a watchdog of government for the public," he said. During the Vietnam war Hollywood's only war movie, "The Green Berets," strongly favored the war, as did its star, John Wayne. The film industry avoided the war issue "like the plague," Milano said. Recent critical films like "Platoon," "The Deer Hunter" and "Apocalypse Now" were turned down by Hollywood and produced with foreign backing. When these films won acclaim, Hollywood took the credit, he said.

Besides having an easier time landing financial help, films presenting the "good" side of war also receive help from the Pentagon. Milano said producers wanting to use military hardware — jeeps, tanks, planes, guns, uniforms — must submit scripts to the Pentagon for approval. Only films showing the military in the best light receive government help, in the way "Top Gun" was able to use Navy jets. In return for the Navy's help with that movie, producers agreed early on to allow Navy recruiters in theater lobbies where the film was shown. As a result, the Navy enjoyed one of its highest enrollment period ever, Milano said. In contrast, Francis Ford Coppola made his dark view of the Vietnam war, "Apocalypse Now," with Philippine army helicopters and equipment.

Many Vietnam veterans have praised the critical films while putting down "Rambo" for two reasons, Milano said. "First, they see the films as romanticizing war and they worry about their own sons and the next generation. They're hoping films like 'Platoon' will make a lot of guys think about the actual horrors of war. Secondly, the 'Rambo' portrayals are an indirect putdown against those servicemen who did fight in the war because it gives the impression that they could not win it in reality, whereas Rambo will revise history and win it on the screen. He'll do on the screen what they couldn't do in person."

Milano said movies aren't alone in promoting violence as a solution. Saturday morning cartoons with associated war toys and nighttime television contribute to the violent climate. "A certain amount of violence is unavoidable in the human and the animal world, but could you ameliorate it and ask the industry to turn down the violence? If you shut it down completely it becomes a censorship issue," he said.

Studies show that television violence increased 100 percent since 1980 and sales of war toys shot up 600 percent since 1982 to $1 bilion per year, leading all other toy categories. The U.S. leads the western world in murder, rape, aggravated assault, child abuse and battering of the elderly, he said.

Milano said he doesn't see a conspiracy between film and television producers and policy makers, but the system as it stands is convenient for Washington and Hollywood. "Through entertainment, the general population can be coaxed into a common, desired frame of mind," he said. "Foreign policy decisions made by one class will then be more readily supported by the other classes — a crucial step if they are to be asked later to sacrifice their sons."

Milano delivered a paper based on his research, "Hollywood and the Cult of Violence," at the Southeastern Sociological Society annual meeting in Atlanta.

Kim Hunter, Orson Bean Steadfast In Love For, Dedication To The Theater

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

The most remarkable impression I gained in a Tuesday interview with two veteran theater professionals, Miss Kim Hunter and Orson Bean, is their amazing vitality and dedication.

It's evident that long years of hard work, of the grueling demands that stage, film and television require, has not dampened their ardor or the youthful-like eagerness with which they face the future.

Miss Hunter and Bean are starring in the East Carolina University Summer Theater production of Tina Howe's play, "Painting Churches." Terence LaMude, a New Yorker, is directing the play, which opens Monday for a week's run at McGinnis Theater on the ECU campus.

"Theater is always exciting," Miss Hunter said. "There are times when everything goes wrong, and sometimes everything goes right. Whichever way things go, I can't imagine life without my theater work."

"Anyone with theater in their blood can't feel otherwise," Bean agreed. Noting this is the first time the two of them have worked together, Bean said "I find that actors always think they know each other, even when they've never met. You know about them and their work, and you're never a stranger."

"True," Miss Hunter said. "That feeling, that closeness is not only with other actors, but with the directors, the crews one works with."

"It's a life of tremendous intensity," Bean added. "You're close to everyone involved for a few weeks or sometimes a little longer. But you never forget each experience. It's one of the things that make theater life so exhilarating."

Miss Hunter is as trim and vivacious as she was nearly 40 years ago when she made her Broadway debut in December, 1947, as Stella Kowalski in Tennessee Williams' "A Streetcar Named Desire." For her performance she won both the Donaldson and Critics awards. Not much later, in 1951, she won the Academy Award as best supporting actress, the Look Magazine Award and the Hollywood Foreign Correspondent's Golden Award for the role of Stella in the film version of "Streetcar" with Marlon Brando and Vivien Leigh.

"Being in the play and later in the film was a very rewarding time for me," Miss Hunter said. "I was a young actress, and it was a rich experience. The play ran two full seasons, the first time I'd been in a long-running production."

Miss Hunter recalls "the excitement of Academy Award night that year. I was living in New York, and it was the last year of radio broadcast of the awards before it went on television. People from the press were gathered at my place, waiting and when I was named winner, cameras went click, click all over the place. Bette Davis accepted the award for me, which meant a lot to me."

Bean mentioned that "my kids were excited that here in Greenville I'd be playing opposite that good-looking monkey in 'Planet of the Apes," a reference to Miss Hunter's film roles in the original "Planet" and two of the series that followed.

"Playing the chimpanzee psychiatrist Zira was an incredible experience," Miss Hunter said. "After the first film, I was talked into the second, and accepted the third because I was entranced by the script. But when I was asked to do a guest spot in number four, I firmly said 'no way.'"

Miss Hunter spoke of the "unbelievable discomfort of being made up for the chimpanzee role. All that gear, that glue. The only thing of me showing was my eyeballs. After four days we begged for and got a one-day reprieve before being costumed again. We had to, because of what was happening to our skin."

Bean, whose long and varied theatrical career has spanned stage, screen and television, as well as producer of avante garde Off-Broadway plays, author and comedian, quipped "I'm doing quite a bit of television commercial work now, even though I try to tell them I'm too rich to work. But you know it's a matter of making money to pay taxes on money you've already earned."

In a more serious vein, Bean spoke of the fond memories he has "of playing opposite Jane Mansfield in a year's run of 'Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter,' and another year in 'Illya Darling' with that remarkable actress, Melina Mercouri."

Bean, like Miss Hunter, has received recognition for his work. He received a Theater World Award for his performance in a Broadway play; a Tony nomination for the musical, "Subways Are For Sleeping," and three Obie awards for his Off-Broadway production of "Home Movies."

Asked if he had regrets about a 10-year absence before making a decision to return to the theater, Bean said "absolutely not. Those were the years I devoted to raising my children." In that time span, he made his livelihood on talk and game shows. "I don't regret that either, but I must confess that I'm glad I've made the return to my first love, theater. By the way," he added, "one of my sons is coming in for the opening of 'Painting Churches.' I've promised I'd get him a date, and hope that I'll be able to." Home for Bean is the beach town of Venice, Calif., near Los Angeles.

Family is important in Miss Hunter's life. "My husband, Robert Emmett, a television writer, and I have one special place in our New York home, a shelf where he and I keep our awards." Her son has a band, Mainstream, in Las Vegas. Her daughter, trained in law, is "the one in the family not in the entertainment world is now a judge in New Stamford, Conn."

Miss Hunter is keen on cooking and is the author of an autobiographical cookbook, "Loose in the Kitchen."

On the subject of food, Bean avows "the food here in Greenville is truly wonderful. I'm delighted that I have discovered some really fine eating places here."

Both stars are pleased about the "Painting Churches" script. "It's such a warm human story," Bean said. "About an old man entering his dotage, his faculties fading.

"And it says so much about two generations of people, the terms of communications between them. It's a fine play."

PFCN Publishes Play By Hopes

Dr. Richard H. Laing, president of the Playwrights Fund of North Carolina, has announced the publication by PFNC of the play, "Timothy Liberty," by North Carolina plawright David Brandan Hopes.

"Although several of the playwrights we have worked with have gone on to publish their plays, publishing one ourselves marks a milestone in PFNC's development," Laing said.

Initial screening for the publication selection was carried out by a publishing committee chaired by Dr. David Sanders, head of the honors program at East Carolina University. Final selection of Hopes' one-act drama was made by a panel of independent judges.

Sanders said "I think it is a significant play with rather profound insights on a topical subject, dazzling in its poetry, and exciting on its levels of ambiguities. The play sets a high precedent as the first play the Plauwrights Fund is publishing."

Independent judges included Dr. Ted Ellis and Tracy Donahue, both of East Carolina University, and Pat Johnston of the North Carolina School of the Arts, Winston-Salem.

"Timothy Liberty" was winner of the fifth annual PFNC Playwrights Competition. Other works by David Hopes include "Mother Midnight's Oratory"; "Seas's Edge"; "A Choir Invisible," and "Phantom of the Blue Letters."

The Playwrights Fund will pay a royalty to the playwright in whose name the work is copyrighted. Royalty and copyright information was researched by Frank Wooten, Greenville attorney and PFNC board member.

Funding for the project was made possible by a grant from the literature division of the N.C. Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts. Criteria for funding included artistic excellence, regional or national influence, and access for North Carolina writers, readers and audiences.

PFNC's production coordinator, Grigg Denton, said "at least one national distributor has expressed interest in the Playwrights Fund as publishers. We will also explore local opportunties as well."

Christine Rusbh, co-founder and artistic director of PFNC, comments that "hopefully, this event will pave the way toward making it possible for new works by southeastern playwrights to be developed and published here in the southeast."

For more information about PFNC, call 758-3628.

Concert, Amphitheater Dedication In Today's Sunday In The Park Program

Today's Sunday in the Park will feature a concert by the Eastern Symphonette and the official dedication of the recently constructed amphitheater at the Town Common.

At 7 p.m. Robert Hause, conductor of the East Carolina Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Eastern Symphonette in the performance of selections by several composers. The program is:

- "Youth Overture," by Emma Lou Dierner.
- "A Melodic Caravan," by Jimmy McHugh.
- "Killing Me Softly With His Song," by Gimbel and Fox.
- "Emperor Waltzes," by Johann Straus, Jr.
- "Irving Berlin — A Symphonic Portrait," arranged by Ader.
- A sing-along medley of old standards, arranged by Robert Hause.
- Selections from the Rodgers/Bennett musical "The King and I."

As part of today's program, the amphitheater will be officiallly dedicated and named in memory of the late S. Eugene West, for several years mayor of Greenville. All those who donated money to the construction of the amphitheater will be recognized.

Sunday in the Park is funded by the City of Greenville and is presented each summer under the auspices of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department. The series of Sunday concerts is free and open to the public.

In the event of rain today, the program will be given at the same site at 7 p.m. Monday.

Wildflower Dream Site

By LEANNE WAXMAN
Associated Press Writer

ROAN MOUNTAIN, Tenn. (AP) — Where the Doe River starts in Tennessee and the Toe River begins in North Carolina is a wildflower enthusiast's dream come true.

The rivers originate as tiny streams high atop Roan Mountain, an expansive combination of national forest, state and private land that harbors numerous unique and often rare wildflowers.

"If you want to see this anywhere else you have to go to Maine," University of Tennessee botanist Eugene Wofford said, as he cupped a Schweinitz ragwort on a recent wildflower hunt in the mountain's grassy foothills.

"This is a rare one," he said of the white-petaled mountain sandwort, which is found no farther south than Roan and as far north as Greenland.

Wofford would not point out or even describe the truly endangered wildflowers to the 15 people who packed a lunch and hiked the day away on the guided tour, with small magnifying lenses and photography equipment at hand.

"If I did that, people would start to pick them. We don't do it to help protect the really rare ones," he said.

The group did stumble across some alder bush, found only on Roan and in Pennsylvania, Wofford said. Roan Mountain goldenrod, Roan Mountain bluets and Roan Mountain rattlesnake root also are unique to the area that sits mostly in the Cherokee and Pisgah national forests on the Tennessee-North Carolina line.

"Who's never had a wild strawberry?" Wofford asked, as he doled out the tiny, freshly picked fruit. "They're nothing like you get in the store or in your yard."

The mountain, above a state park of the same name, has a rounded, 6,285-foot summit that forms a broad ridge extending about five miles.

Among the area's biggest draws are about 650 acres of rhododendrons that bring the mountain alive with pink and white blooms in late June, said Russ Griffith, a recreation staff officer for the Cherokee forest.

"It's probably the largest natural rhododendron garden in the United States if not the world," he said. "Some of the most unique flora and fauna in the eastern United States is there."

Many of the wildflowers' seeds traveled south aboard huge, cold chunks during the ice ages and the mountain serves as a laboratory for botanists and ecologists, Wofford said.

"These mountaintops were never under ice. They've been available to plants as long as there have been plants," he said. "It's the distribution. Why only here and in Pennsylvania?"

Lush grass and heath balds also make Roan Mountain distinct, though the balds are endangered by the encroaching forest and thickets of wild blackberries.

The balds are wide open rolling ranges and nobody knows for sure how they were created. A favorite theory of some botanists is that the balds were eaten down by the grazing cattle of early settlers, Wofford said, though Griffith leaves open the possibility that they developed with help from Indians who burned them into the landscape as a way to fight the forest.

"There are a few balds around but the balds are disappearing," Griffith said. "At one time there was about 80 balds between Virginia and Georgia, but there aren't nearly that many left anymore. We have about 10 left in the Cherokee."

The Cherokee's management plan for about 2,000 acres of Roan Mountain does not yet include an approach for the balds, though it prohibits commercial timber cutting and overnight camping as a way to protect the plant and wildlife, he said.

"We don't know how the balds got there in the first place, whether it was climate or Indians or early settlers are what, so we don't know whether they should be preserved in their current state," Griffith said. "We're doing some studying right now on how to maintain the balds in their present condition. We could use prescribed burning or cut back or use herbicides. We haven't decided yet."

Wofford agreed that the balds present the mountain's overseers with a difficult problem. He pointed to a small, lone spruce tree jutting from a thicket of blackberries.

"What does the forest service do?" he asked. "Does it cut that tree down or does it leave it? It's a real management problem."

COLONIAL PROPAGANDA

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Daniel Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe" is much more than a ripping adventure yarn, says an authority on the 18th-century novelist.

In 1719, when "Robinson Crusoe" was published, unemployment and poverty were rampant in England.

"Defoe saw colonization as the answer to England's economic problems, by influencing trade and creating new jobs," says Paula Backscheider, an English professor at the University of Rochester.

Defoe's novel, in addition to being entertaining, is also a work of "colonial propaganda," says Backscheider.

Q. In many of the news reports on politicians and adultery, passing references are made to Franklin Roosevelt and his wife's secretary, Lucy Mercer. Can you fill us in on this affair?—Lois Shaw, New Orleans, La.

FDR's secret love, Lucy

A. On March 17, 1905, Franklin D. Roosevelt, 23, wed Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, 20, his fifth cousin once removed. Eleanor was sexually unsophisticated, according to her son Elliott, but between 1906 and 1916 she bore six children, one of whom died. Too shy to discuss birth control with her husband, she finally decided that sexual abstinence was the best method for her—a solution that did not sit well with him.

In 1914, when she was pregnant for the fifth time, Mrs. Roosevelt hired as her social secretary Lucy Mercer, a tall, beautiful, blue-eyed brunette from an old Maryland family long on background but short on money. Exactly when FDR, a ladies' man ever since his Harvard days, took a fancy to Lucy and she to him is not known, but their love affair began during World War I when Roosevelt was Assistant Secretary of the Navy in Washington, D.C., and his wife and children were summering on Campobello Island in Canada. It was in 1918, however, that Eleanor discovered a packet of love letters and learned of her husband's infidelity. She threatened a divorce, which would have ruined his political career, unless he promised to stop seeing Lucy. He agreed, but from that point on marital relations between the Roosevelts were finished.

In 1920, Lucy Mercer, then 29, married Winthrop Rutherfurd, 58, a wealthy widower by whom she had a daughter. She maintained a correspondence with FDR, however, and visited him at Bernard Baruch's plantation in South Carolina after her husband's death in 1944. She also visited him at the White House when Eleanor was away, and it was Lucy who was with the President on April 12, 1945, when he was fatally stricken in Warm Springs, Ga. Attendants rushed her off the premises before Mrs. Roosevelt arrived the next day. Lucy Mercer Rutherfurd died in 1948, Eleanor Roosevelt in 1962.

Q. Did Paramount Pictures pay Eddie Murphy $8 million to perform in "Beverly Hills Cop II"? If they did, have they no sense of values? How do they expect a young man like Murphy, still in his mid-20s, to practice moderation in all things, including his sex life? No wonder his language is so profane, his behavior so hedonistic. The young man is simply spoiled, spoiled, spoiled! Can Paramount Pictures do nothing, nothing, nothing?—C. Jenkins, Charleston, S.C.

A. Paramount Pictures is not Eddie Murphy's guardian. He is an adult responsible for his own behavior. How he reacts to money, people and creature comforts is a reflection of his own character. It is true that Murphy was paid $8 million for "Beverly Hills Cop II."

Q. Having suffered a stroke from which she recovered and breast cancer from which she also recovered, is Bette Davis still ready and able at 79 to proceed with her magnificent acting career? I understand that in the 1930s, Bette and billionaire Howard Hughes engaged in a tempestuous love affair. Did Hughes remember Bette in his will?—Claudia Baird, Annapolis, Md.

A. Bette Davis says she is ready to consider acting offers. Howard Hughes died intestate (without a will) in 1976, and to date Davis has not received a penny from his estate... So much for old, tempestuous love affairs.

Kobal Collection

Q. Some years ago, I was told that Mickey Mouse was not the original name of the famous cartoon character. If not Mickey, what was it?—Emma Montgomery, Amarillo, Tex.

A. The name originally suggested was Mortimer Mouse, but Walt Disney's wife, Lillian, didn't like it, so Mortimer became Mickey.

Q. Who are the happily married show-biz couple whose real names are Konigsberg and Molinsky?—Bobbie Kaplan, Key West, Fla.

A. Allen Konigsberg is the real name of comic Woody Allen, whose love affair with actress Mia Farrow is no secret. Joan Molinsky is the original name of comedienne Joan Rivers, who is married to Edgar Rosenberg, her producer.

Q. What's wrong with actor Sean Penn, who's married to singer-actress Madonna? He seems to get sued or arrested every few months.—Leah C., Evanston, Ill.

A. Sean Penn allegedly is handy with his fists, owns a quick and bad temper and is supersensitive to the intrusions of photographers. Among other things, he has pleaded no contest to a misdemeanor battery charge, has been involved in a nightclub altercation and has been sentenced to 60 days in jail for reckless driving and other offenses. At this writing, the Penn-Madonna marriage is described as "almost finished."

She doesn't run with the pack

Ally Sheedy Is Not A Brat

On her way to leading lady—after a tough battle with herself

Ally Sheedy. New roles in drama and comedy show increasing depth, sophistication.

BY MARK GOODMAN

TALL, POISED AND LOVELY, HER hair trimmed and fluffed, the young film actress Ally Sheedy walks into the office of her publicist. Contrary to expectation, she in no way resembles the unkempt, brooding adolescent of her early success, The Breakfast Club. Her outfit, a turquoise knit dress with matching pendant earrings, is not the sort a young woman throws on of a casual Los Angeles afternoon, and it carries an unmistakable message: Look at me. I'm all grown up now.

Indeed she is, having come a very long way in a very few years over a road more bumpy than you might suppose. At the age of 6, she was dancing with the American Ballet Theater at New York's Lincoln Center. At 12, she was the published author of a children's book, She Was Nice to Mice, about Queen Bess' affection for the creatures of her palace. At 15, while attending an exclusive Manhattan prep school, she was appearing in TV commercials and acting at the Neighborhood Playhouse. By 20, she had become a full-fledged screen actress (Bad Boys, WarGames) but also a bulimic, and it is no small achievement that in the five years since then she has become a genuine film star while conquering that dread binge-and-purge eating disorder.

Both triumphs are the result of sheer will backed by a keen intelligence—traits that don't necessarily leap out at the audience from some of the fetching flibbertijibbets Ally has played. But film roles are deceiving. Sheedy has emerged, at age 25, by bringing her intelligence and an almost lyrical intensity to the simplest of roles. She was roundly praised for her work as The Basket Case in The Breakfast Club; for her wholesome allure as the girl who helps Matthew Broderick save Western Civilization in the teen fantasy WarGames; and for her performance as a striving, neurotic young architect in St. Elmo's Fire.

Then, suddenly, the bright young people with whom she had been working—Rob Lowe, Judd Nelson, Emilio Estevez, Molly Ringwald and others—were lumped together and branded "The Brat Pack" in a New York magazine article that caused a minor sensation. (Film critic Richard Schickel, on The Donahue Show with Sheedy, Lowe and Nelson, called the piece "slob journalism.") Not surprisingly, Ally and her colleagues were offended by the collective criticism.

Perhaps most offensive to Ally was the social fact that they are not a pack at all, bratty or otherwise. "John Hughes didn't cast us as a group for Breakfast Club or St. Elmo's Fire," she says. "It just happened. When the story came out—I never read it, by the way—it bothered us to the point that we overreacted. We said to ourselves, 'What did we do? Is there something wrong with us?' Then we did try to band together to brave the storm." She laughs lightly. "Now that it's all past, we're all going off on our own, having identity crises. I guess the message was: Don't be too happy."

Ally pauses for a moment to collect her thoughts. "The truth is," she continues, "that I'm closest to Demi Moore of 'the group,' but I'm not really that close to the rest of them. I do like working with Judd Nelson, because he's so smart. But I'm not very social—I don't hang out much, so I don't see a lot of them."

Responsibility for the "brat" label must lie in part with the writer-director John Hughes, who seems bent on pursuing arrested adolescence as a life's work. Ally (and the others, for that matter) seems to have had her fill of post-pubescent panting. "No more John Hughes for me," she says, shaking her earrings. "I'm definitely ready to grow up."

To that end, she appeared earlier this year in the searing television drama We Are the Children, portraying a young doctor caught up in the Ethiopian famine. On a decidedly lighter note, she can now be seen in Maid to Order, a romp reminiscent of the screwball comedies of the '30s. Ally's role, clearly modeled on the Claudette Colbert/Carole Lombard motif of that time, gives full vent to her flair for romantic comedy. As she describes it, "The movie's a funny tale about a girl who grows up in Beverly Hills very, very rich and very, very spoiled. She spends her time shopping and going to clubs—in short, a thoroughly despicable character. Finally, her father wishes on a star that he didn't have a daughter, so her fairy godmother appears and takes away her past. The result is, she has to go to work as a maid for a rich family."

Ally herself had the sort of accelerated upbringing in a rarefied atmosphere that was bound to jump the track at some point. Her father is a Manhattan advertising executive; her mother, a literary agent. They divorced when Ally was 9, sharing custody of Ally and her younger sister and brother. Ally's after-school life became a round of acting and dancing lessons. She already had danced with the American Ballet Theater in the first grade, and it had given her an appetite for a magical world some distance from the playgrounds of other children.

"When I was little," she recalls, "I saw Anne of the Thousand Days. I thought, 'God, what a great life.' I wanted there still to be kings and queens. I started reading everything I could find on Elizabeth I." When her parents divorced and her mother began attending classes at New York's Columbia University, Ally says, she used to wander the campus and fashion it, in her imagination, into a monarch's grounds.

These royal preoccupations also led her to write the children's book about the queen and her mice. She wound up on The Mike Douglas Show, at age 12, to plug her book. She told Douglas she thought she might like to act, and casting directors looked up and took notice of her trademark sculpted chin and quizzical brown eyes. Soon she was doing TV commercials and off-Broadway theater.

During the school year, she attended Columbia Prep; summers were spent at acting school or Oxford. By the time graduation rolled around, Ally was ready for Hollywood. Well, almost. "I wanted adventure," she recalls, "to get out on my own. I figured to find an agent and start acting out here. But I was too scared to come out without going to school. Besides, I thought that at USC I could find ready-made friends and colleagues in the drama department."

So Ally enrolled at the University of Southern California and cried all the way to Kennedy Airport, wondering if she was doing the right thing. She didn't even know how to drive. But she landed a job at Nature's Health Cove in Westwood, started school and began calling on agents and casting directors.

Her first roles were for McDonald's and Pizza Hut—curious work for an avowed vegetarian. She did an "ABC Afterschool Special" called I Want To Have My Baby, then happened to meet a casting director, Mary Gail Artz, who thought Ally had something. Artz was casting the film Bad Boys, featuring Sean Penn. When the director didn't buy the slightly ragged waif who showed up, Ally returned in a snappy dress, tested beautifully and got the part.

Before Bad Boys came out, Ally got another nifty role: a two-parter on NBC's Hill Street Blues as a Catholic girls school tease who drives Officer La Rue wild. There she showed her marvelous capacity to be at once brightly scrubbed and darkly provocative. Her guest stint gained Ally considerable notice—as did, soon after, her street-smart gal in Bad Boys. The offers began rolling in: WarGames, Oxford Blues, The Breakfast Club, St. Elmo's Fire, Twice in a Lifetime, Short Circuit and Blue City.

The role that struck closest to the bone was that of the ambitious, confused yuppie princess in St. Elmo's Fire. "It was a very hard part for me," she confesses. "I had to dredge up a lot of things about myself." She drew heavily on her own inner turmoil to build her character, right down to placing particular books on the set's shelves and certain magazines on the coffee table.

Clockwise from left: Ally at 12, after publication of her book, She Was Nice to Mice (1975); in The Breakfast Club (1985); in new film, Maid to Order; with Matthew Broderick in WarGames (1983); Alexandra Sheedy (l) with sister, Meghan, on Parade cover, May 28, 1972. Story was about new trend: girls wearing boys' clothes.

"You have to decide you don't want your life ruled by an obsession"

Even as Ally Sheedy began accepting the plaudits, she started to reject food. The result was bulimia—a disorder that involves gorging food, then forcing oneself to vomit—which left her exhausted and thin as a Little League bat. Ally is reluctant to discuss the subject, insisting that she will publish something about the disease herself someday, perhaps even make a documentary. "I did a lot of work on myself to get through it," she admits. "There are a lot of different therapies and a lot of clinics you can go to. But it finally comes down to you. You have to be willing to change that sort of behavior, and it took me years to beat it. When you have an emotional disorder, you have to decide that you don't want your life being ruled by an obsession. And food is an obsession, whether you're gorging it or refusing it."

Ally's life today incorporates an array of modern regimens: no cigarettes, no alcohol, no drugs, no meat; yoga, meditation, consultations with latter-day soothsayers. "I'm very interested in anything causing personal growth and change in me," she says. "I meditate and read everything I can about self-help. You want to find something that will push you past conceived limits, and you have to be persistent about it. If I have a glitch or see an emotional problem or attachment looming up, I stop and say to myself, 'Okay, let's see how we're going to get past this.'"

Ally's causes are another outlet. She's something of a throwback to the '60s: Her modern role model is Jane Fonda. "I'm politically very active," she says. "A lot of that comes from my upbringing. My mother was very active. From an early age, I thought everyone was aware of what was happening and marching in the streets." She laughs. "When I came out here, it was a different story. But I got involved anyway. I worked on Alan Cranston's Senate campaign, and I work on a number of environmental issues, like the toxic initiative that was passed here." Mostly, Ally donates to causes anonymously and works behind the scenes.

But first and foremost, Ally Sheedy is a serious actress who works very hard at her craft. "I put a lot of time in on my voice, on acting out situations, on how to read a script," she says. "It just means a lot to me. I notice how incredibly accelerated I am when I'm working. I feel a huge sense of relief when a film is done, because it takes so much concentration." She pauses. "The best feeling in the world is when I'm working on a set, because it's so exciting. There's a rhythm and a feeling when a scene starts to click... So, concentration or no, it doesn't seem hard when I'm doing it."

Ally is channeling her resources toward a smooth run through the transitional period from teen star to leading lady. That is why she isn't working on a film right now. "I've been successful in what I've done," she says, "and I could always ride on that—except that it wouldn't work. I'm very careful these days about scripts. I could be working every day, but I'd rather wait until the right thing comes along. I'm reading books, scripts, everything I can get my hands on, and I'm working with a classic theater workshop in L.A." She also fills notebooks with musings and poetry and says she is even considering finishing college. "I may go to UCLA and change my major," Ally says, "perhaps to philosophy."

Well, I wonder aloud—since she's rich, successful and sought after, with a splendid future in films assured—why bother? Or why not at least stick to studying her craft? "Getting a degree in drama seems somehow redundant at this stage of my life," she promptly replies, "and a degree in philosophy would look nice on my wall."

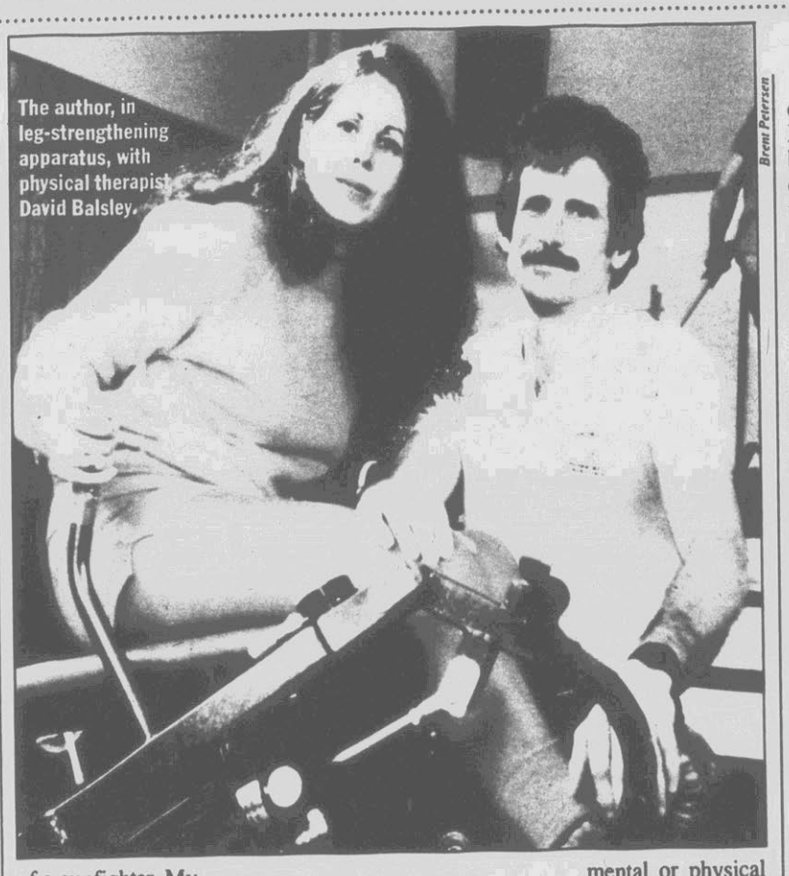
When Pain Is Your Partner



The author, in leg-strengthening apparatus, with physical therapist David Balsley.

Brent Petersen

I SIT IN MY WHEELCHAIR at The Sports Medicine Performance and Research Center at The Hospital for Special Surgery in New York. It is January 1986, and I am waiting to start physical therapy after the last of four operations on my badly damaged left knee.

My leg feels as if it were made of hot wires and broken glass. The pain it causes is as constant as my heartbeat. My surgeon has told me that to walk again I must learn to tolerate this pain. If I can't, more-invasive surgery will be necessary. Even then, it may not succeed. I am determined to make this operation work—to regain the full use of my leg.

The child of New England stoics, I have always found my fears unacceptable. I shove them away to watch the other patients. A few men and women are trying to regain full or partial use of injured, diseased or surgically repaired tendons, ligaments, muscles, bones. A child exercises to regain strength lost during chemotherapy. A young amputee is learning to run with his new prosthesis. To the insistent beat of pop music on the sound system, they move in the hesitant, graceless rhythm of those in pain.

Someone tells me to get out of my chair and onto an examining table. I am a bloated, aching mess of a woman. I am afraid to fall. But I don't ask for help. Convinced that my only asset is my stiff upper lip, I bite down on it to keep it from trembling. I look up and smile at the man who is to be my physical therapist.

His name is David Balsley. Director of The Sports Medicine Center and two sports-medicine facilities on Long Island, he is also adjunct professor of sports medicine at Springfield College in Springfield, Mass. In addition, he co-directs the hospital's aggressive rehabilitation program for adolescent cancer patients and is a consultant to injured performers for The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theatre. A healer by profession, he will help me through a hell in order to restore me to life.

As he examines me, I redouble my efforts to hide my helplessness. I resolve that he will never see me struggle, never see me cry. I will get strong quickly and force the pain away. I tell myself that, compared to those around me, my injury is small and temporary and I can make it go away on my own.

David Balsley has the rock-hard gaze of a gunfighter. My forced smile, my jokes and my thin show of strength do not fool him for a second. By training and instinct, he immediately knows what I do not—that, full of defenses, I am denying the permanence of my handicap and my pain and that I am at the very edge of panic. He also knows that he must teach me to accept both my pain and injury so I can find a way around them.

'A healer is helping me through a hell to restore me to life'

Because I am so afraid to surrender what little control I have, I will find myself fighting him from the beginning. It won't bother him. It is a fight he is used to winning. As he puts it, that battle "is all part of the process of learning to own your own limitations." So as never to underestimate the discomfort or stress his patients go through, David regularly runs 100-mile ultramarathons. Not sparing himself, he has no intention of sparing anyone in his care the mental or physical effort it takes to improve. I am not to be the exception.

In the first weeks of my therapy, he hammers away at my ridiculous defenses. He starts with the dark glasses I wear to hide my tears and my terror from him. One morning, he glances down at me as I struggle with the leg press. "What are the glasses for?" he asks. "You want an A in drama?"

"They're prescription," I answer. "I want to see what's going on."

"Horsefeathers," he replies. "You don't fool me. I must see your eyes to know what you're feeling." He does not let up. After a week, I take off the dark glasses.

A month later, a dinky 2-pound weight strapped to my ankle still gives me trouble. Each time I lift it, my leg wobbles and drops. Worse, it feels like it's ripping away from the steel plate and rod that holds it together. I clench my fists. I will not give in.

David watches. "You can't stand to be out of control, can you?" he comments. I avoid his eyes. "You're never going to be in control of that leg again. Start dealing with what it is able to do, not what you want it to do."

He takes the weight off my ankle and points me to a row of stationary bikes. "On the white one," he directs. "Just peddle back and forth as far as you can for five minutes. And don't stop!"

In seconds, I'm in a furious struggle with weakness. It is making me crazy to be so incapable. "You're thinking too much," he calls across the room. "Give the mind a rest. Let the body take over."

I try, but my body won't respond. I stop peddling. Why can't I beat this thing? I despise myself. From nowhere, his voice: "Hey! You with the bad attitude! I said five minutes, I mean five minutes. Don't bother being angry. Just do what you have to."

If he won't let up, neither will I. I peddle again. The weakness diminishes. I bless him because I can do something. The weakness returns and, with it, cramps and pain. I curse him because I am hurt.

But I don't complain. I don't feel entitled because I am not fighting for my life, like some of the others. So I work at appearing optimistic. But a heavy, dark feeling takes over my days.

One morning, six weeks later, David tells me to leave my crutches in the dressing room. When I do, I stand paralyzed in the doorway. He ambles over. "What's up?" he asks. Mute with rage at him and at myself, I look at the floor. "Well?" he persists. "What's the problem?"

"I can't," I reply.

"Can't is not a good word," he says.

"You don't understand . . ." My voice is fragile. "I'll fall. My leg feels like it's on all wrong."

"That's because it is on all wrong," he answers, his eyes intently on mine. My mouth drops open. It's not the answer I expect. Instead, it is the truth. "Well?" he says. "What are you waiting for? Get going." Because I do not trust myself, I must trust him. I get going. I limp badly, but I do not fall.

These exchanges would become typical. For him, facts are facts. You deal with them or you go elsewhere. As he says, "I've found through the years that being easy with people makes 'em feel good, but it doesn't get 'em better. Some people don't want to get better at all.

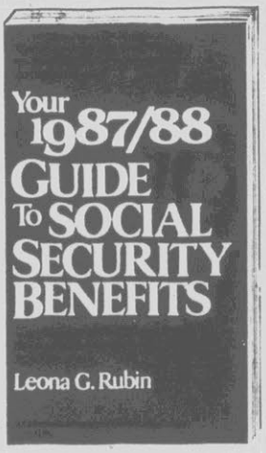
How to Get Maximum Social Security Benefits

When it comes time to collect Social Security benefits—or if you are already receiving them—you want to be sure that you get what you are entitled to. But if you don't understand the benefits, you can't claim them. In fact, you may even be losing out on important cash benefits you deserve to receive right now! That's why you need YOUR 1987/88 GUIDE TO SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS.

Here is a Social Security guidebook that's comprehensive, up-to-date and written in plain English you can understand, using an easy-to-follow question-and-answer format. You'll find answers to over 500 of the questions most often asked about Social Security. Fully revised and updated for 1987, it covers all the latest Congressional amendments (and what is planned for the very near future) and how the new tax laws may affect your benefits.



Updated to Cover the 1987 Tax Laws

Some of these changes, such as the new method of figuring cost-of-living increases or the gradual rise in "full retirement age" from 65 to 67, may mean smaller checks . . . while others, such as the increase in the earnings limit, may improve your benefits. It's all here, as well as:

- How to collect and protect benefits due you, your spouse and your family
- How early retirement affects your (and your dependents') benefits
- Making the decision—the case for and against early retirement . . . and delayed retirement . . . and timing your application to get the most benefits
- How your job affects your work credits
- The advantages of being a "two-work-record" family
- Dependents' benefits—a quick guide
- Under what circumstances Social Security benefits are taxable
- When a pension may affect your retirement benefits
- Working after retirement . . . knowing how to make it worth your while
- The smart way to supplement retirement income
- Going over the earnings limit—is it worth it?
- What types of income affect—and don't affect—your benefits
- Disability—who can collect . . . and for how long
- How Workers' Compensation may affect your disability benefits
- Making disability claims—and how to appeal Social Security decisions
- Getting the best deal from Medicare
- What Medicare (Parts A and B) covers . . . and what it doesn't
- Part B—is it worth the premiums?
- Eligibility for SSI (Supplemental Security Income) . . . Medicaid . . . veterans' rights
- How Social Security benefits may affect VA benefits

You've worked hard all your life, now learn how to make Social Security and Medicare work for you. Order your copy of YOUR 1987/88 GUIDE TO SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS today!

Fitting Facts

CHECKING YOUR BRA FOR A PROPER FIT

Notice any bulges over the front or sides of your bra? Maybe you've got a cup that's too small—or a bra band that's too tight. A "rule of thumb" for telling whether or not your bra band fits correctly is: try to slip your thumb underneath it. If you can do so comfortably, the fit is fine.

Magnificent floral display and dense growth of a mature Hummingbird Vine.

Hummingbirds will gorge themselves on the sweet nectar from the flower of the fabulous trumpet vine. The very first year of planting the beautiful, hardy vines will climb skyward, grasping any kind of support....man-high in a single season. May grow to 40 feet high...a pillar of flaming red trumpet flowers, each loaded with nectar that hummingbirds find so irresistable, they return year after year to thrill you and your family.

These plants are foolproof to grow, thrive even in poor soils, sun or shade. Climbs on its own, covering walls, arbors and fences in no time at all!

They want to make money from their disability, or they want to use it as a crutch or a weapon. They want sympathy and attention more than they want to get on with life. They say they can't do something because their back is bad or they are always in pain. I hate the word 'can't,' and I hate the word 'always.'

"I hate the attitude why me? 'Why?' I tell them. 'Because it happened to you, that's why.' Patients with real cause to ask that question never do. Especially the kids. They just say, 'Hey, I've only got one leg or one arm. Now what?' Anybody has a right to tell me they won't do something. I have a right to tell them to go to another therapist.

"I'll take you as far as you want to go. But I'm only a coach, a trainer. I've learned that if amputees want to walk or run, they can't do it with a normal gait. They have to develop their own style. When they do, I'm around to help, to say, 'Here, try it this way. Let me help you with your own pattern.' Find yours. Then tell me what you want to do. I'll try to find a way to help you do it."

He studies my reaction, then continues: "Don't challenge what you can't change, or you'll end up against a brick wall. Start by locating your limits and challenging those. We're going to try a lot of new stuff, and some of it might not work. You're going to get better. You're going to get worse. At times, you'll get hurt, but you'll recover and start again. It's going to keep happening."

"Then you think I can make it?" I press him.

"A or B," he answers dispassionately. "Yes or no. Remember, however it goes, it can't last forever. You and I both know that, one day, they're going to have to operate again."

Childishly, I put my hands over my ears. "Never tell me that!" I shout.

"You want me to tell you your knee will be all right? Well, it won't be. It's a lousy knee."

When I tell him his directness is almost as lethal as swallowing a grenade, he answers, "I believe that if you want someone to trust you, the God's honest truth is what you have to tell them. The relationship between the therapist and the patient is primal. Going through the black hole of pain, there are no masks and there is no hiding."

"Pain is the biggest problem," he continues. "It numbs everything. And if your body's not working, your mind's not working. Everyone has pain. But pain is not the worst thing in the world. You can evaluate it. There are times when you can go through it and over it, times when you have to lie down and let it pass.

"But first there must be acceptance. Once you accept a situation—no matter how difficult it is—you can go around it and keep going.

"Here's what it all comes down to—people get themselves better. If you have hope and really think you'll get better and never give up the desire, that's the spark right there. Hope is a very, very active part of the healing process."

He turns the treadmill to its slowest speed and tells me to walk on it. I start, and my entire left side feels as if it has been hit with an ax. "It hurts," I whisper solemnly.

"So what?" he answers.

"So what?" I yelp.

"Yeah—so what?" He is smiling at me. The damnedest thing is that I am smiling back.

In seven weeks, I can walk 15 minutes on the treadmill and use a cane and brace instead of crutches. I am delighted, and I take the summer off. I put off my program of excruciating home exercises. I dismiss the signs of weakness and medicate the pain.

Back in therapy in September, I can hardly manage two minutes on the treadmill. I crumple at the edge of the platform and cover my head with my arms, hiding in plain sight.

Suddenly next to me, David puts a hand on my shoulder. "So you've hurt yourself," he says quietly. "It isn't the first time; it won't be the last. You can do whatever you want. Just know what it's going to cost you. You can't have your normal life back. For every day you don't maintain your strength, you lose three. Go home. Ice your knee and hip. Call if there's a problem."

All that night and the following day, there is no relief. Panic and self-hatred come back like rampaging elephants. Overwhelmed, I call David. When I speak, the words are spongy and sour in my mouth. "I can't stand up. My leg collapses. My knee is swollen and hot. The ice doesn't help." I hear myself cry for the first time. I wait for his concern to interrupt the tears. It does not come.

"Put on your brace and get off your butt," he instructs. "The worst thing you can do is lie around thinking about this. See you tomorrow." No coddling, no lectures, no false encouragement. I put on my brace and get off my butt. Panic evaporates. I am back on the treadmill the next morning.

Slowly, I am being made to understand that I am the enemy, not my disability. I know now what David has already taught so many others: Acceptance does not mean giving in or giving up. It is the real beginning of the healing process, allowing a full collaboration between the mind and the body. By admitting to myself that I will always be in pain, I can let my coach show me how to shift it from my knee to my ankle, from my ankle to my hip, then back to my knee so I can walk more often. There are times when I can even walk without a brace. And there are days when I can't walk at all. At last, I am finding my pattern, and it is beginning to work. I may not like my limitations, but I have finally accepted the fact that they belong to me.

Recipes for Diabetics

by BILLIE LITTLE

Preface by

Victor G. Ettinger, M.D.

FEATURING THE AMERICAN
DIABETES ASSOCIATION'S NEW EXCHANGE LISTS

RECIPES FOR DIABETICS is a complete, all-purpose cookbook that means an end to monotonous meals for diabetics and their families. This new, revised edition features even more of the practical, elegant and mouth-watering dishes that made the first edition so popular.

OVER 335 RECIPES IN ALL

RECIPES FOR DIABETICS can meet all your cooking and dining needs from easy family favorites like Chile Con Carne to gourmet treats like Cheese and Crab Oriental Style or Chocolate Chiffon Cake with Rum. You will also find delicious appetizers, soups, salads, breads, cookies, cakes, and drinks for every occasion—over 335 different recipes in all.

NOT JUST FOR DIABETICS

But this is not just a cookbook for diabetics. RECIPES FOR DIABETICS will help you plan meals that are low in calories, fat and cholesterol, yet contain plenty of fruits and vegetables. If you want to lose weight, if you want to maintain optimum weight, or if you just want a good sensible diet—here is a book well-suited to your needs.

EASY TO USE

For ease of use, RECIPES FOR DIABETICS provides:

- the American Diabetics Association's updated Exchange Lists
- daily menu guides
- exchange group breakdowns and calorie counts for measured individual servings
- tips on dining out
- guides for using nutrition labeling to compute exchanges
- diabetic exchanges for brand-name products
- hints for buying and storing produce
- tips on recipes for microwaving

So eat healthy, and dine in style with the entire family. Order RECIPES FOR DIABETICS today!

Scared, but loving: Bond and blonde

JAMES BOND STARTS A NEW WAY OF LIFE

Timothy Dalton, the broodingly handsome British actor who stars in The Living Daylights, plays a different kind of James Bond from either Roger Moore or Sean Connery. Although this 15th Bond adventure has all the gadgets, stunts, cars and the East-West intrigue (a defecting Soviet general, a mad American arms dealer) that we've come to expect in 007 flicks, James as womanizer is history, says director John Glen: "Bond has a serious, monogamous relationship with a beautiful Czech cellist [Maryam d'Abo]." The sexual revolution is truly over.

Vampires Are Updated In a Horror-Comedy

In the horror-comedy The Lost Boys, the average American family meets the average American vampires when a divorced woman (Dianne Wiest) and her two sons come to live with her father (Barnard Hughes) in a California seaside community. The older son, Michael, is attracted to a beautiful runaway girl with a dark secret—she's a member of a gang of motorcyclists who roam the beach at night. "Of course, there's a classic influence to all vampire movies," says director Joel Schumacher, "but we tried to give the genre our own touch: in the way these vampires lure their victims, the way they feed, sleep and dress. You can say that this is a movie that says there are still vampires—they just dress better."

MAGAZINES

Attacking the Press, Civil War Style

The public figure who really battled the press was not Richard Nixon or Gary Hart, but Civil War general William Tecumseh Sherman, whom newspapers of the day charged with incompetence, insanity and sacrificing his men needlessly. General Sherman, for his part, alleged that stories from the front by "dirty newspaper scribblers" provided the enemy with crucial information. Calling war correspondents "informers," "spies" and "infamous lying dogs," Sherman wrote to a close friend: "to [the press] more than to any other cause do I trace the failures that attend our army."—From recently revealed letters in the July/August American Heritage.

CHILDREN

HOW TO GO BUGS

The surprise hit of the summer for kids might well be The Bug Book and The Bug Bottle, which comes as a package from Workman ($7.95). Colorful, informative and fun, the book has tips on how to catch and identify creepy crawlies and keep them safely at home in their own little bug hotel, plus suggestions for projects. A child can discover how the praying mantis snares its food, how the grasshopper sings and how the caterpillar becomes a butterfly.

GREAT IDEAS FROM THE CREATORS

GRILL

SIMPLY DELICIOUS

We've always been wild about cooking out of doors. Food just tastes better there. And now that it's grilling season, it's time to perfect your techniques—and to be adventurous with some exciting variations of classic grill foods.

The timing of grilling is critical. All too often, meat is allowed to dry out on the grill. To ensure moistness, we like to precook many foods, then finish them off (2 to 15 minutes) on the grill. This is also a sure-fire way to set the time when we all sit down to dine—together.

For full cooking or just finishing on the grill, you can get peak flavor by making your fire with hickory, mesquite, oak, fruitwoods or grapevines. In the last moments of grilling, toss sprigs of rosemary, thyme or fennel, or citrus peels, over the coals. Test and taste to find your favorites.

Dining outdoors brings hearty appetites to the table. So be ready for them, then go grill crazy. You'll find it difficult to go back indoors.

RED POTATOES & ONIONS

Garden greats on the grill. Use this technique for other vegetables too—tomatoes, red and yellow peppers, zucchini, eggplant or summer squash.

20 small red new potatoes, well washed
4 tablespoons olive oil
6 medium-sized red onions, peeled and cut crosswise into 1/2-inch slices
1 tablespoon red wine vinegar
1 tablespoon white wine
Coarse (kosher) salt to taste
Butcher-grind black pepper to taste
5 tablespoons chopped Italian parsley

1. Preheat oven to 350°F
2. Prick potatoes with a fork and bake in shallow roasting pan 45 to 50 minutes. Remove.
3. Coat potatoes with 1 tablespoon olive oil and thread on thin skewers. Place on grill over very hot coals and cook, turning once, until browned and tender—1 to 2 minutes. Remove from grill.
4. Brush one side of onion slices with 1 tablespoon olive oil and place, oiled-side down, on grill over very hot coals. Cook until brown and just tender—2 to 4 minutes. Do not overcook. Remove from grill with spatula. Reserve.
5. Remove potatoes from skewers. Cut in half, place in a bowl and carefully toss with remaining 2 tablespoons olive oil, vinegar, wine, salt, pepper and 4 tablespoons parsley.
6. Arrange potatoes in center of platter. Surround with grilled onion slices. Sprinkle salt, pepper and remaining parsley over onion slices. Serve at room temperature.

Chicken Fajitas—a Mexican delight

BURGERS AL FRESCO

America's favorite grill food with Italian style. Sun-dried tomatoes, capers and mozzarella accent the beef perfectly to give these hamburgers pizzazz. Watch them disappear.

1½ pounds ground sirloin
1/2 cup chopped Italian parsley
4 tablespoons red onion, peeled and finely chopped
4 tablespoons capers
4 tablespoons Dijon-style mustard
2 ripe plum tomatoes, seeded and cut into 1/4-inch dice
2 raw egg yolks
8 sun-dried tomato halves, coarsely chopped
2 teaspoons caraway seeds
1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
3 ounces mozzarella cheese (preferably fresh), coarsely grated

1. In a bowl, combine all ingredients except mozzarella, gently tossing with hands. Do not overmix.
2. Divide meat mixture in half. Make 4 patties from each half (8 patties in all). Make a small indentation in the center of 4 patties and place 1/4 of grated mozzarella in each. Top each with another patty and pinch edges together to finish burgers.
3. Grill over hot coals—3 minutes on each side for rare burgers.

CHICKEN FAJITAS

A terrific way to cook Mexican-style at home. Fajitas couldn't be easier to prepare, and everyone gets involved in customizing his own. This is one of the great outdoor finger foods.

1½ pounds chicken breasts, skin and bones removed Juice of 4 limes
2 tablespoons plus 1/4 cup olive oil
1 teaspoon dried oregano
1 teaspoon coarsely ground black pepper
1 teaspoon salt
2 large yellow onions, peeled, cut in half lengthwise and cut into 1/4-inch slivers
1½ cups Guacamole (recipe follows)
12 corn tortillas (6-inch), prepared to soften according to package directions
8 ounces plain yogurt
2 ripe plum tomatoes, seeded and cut into 1/4-inch dice
Tabasco or hot pepper sauce (optional)
1 tablespoon chopped Italian parsley

1. In a glass bowl, marinate chicken breasts in lime juice, 2 tablespoons olive oil, oregano, 1/2 teaspoon pepper and 1/2 teaspoon salt for 2 hours.
2. Preheat oven to 350°F.
3. In a shallow roasting pan, combine slivered onions with the chicken breasts and marinade. Cover pan with aluminum foil and bake for 15 to 20 minutes. Remove chicken breasts to a platter and reserve.
4. Transfer onions to a heavy skillet containing 1/4 cup olive oil. Add any pan juices. Sprinkle with remaining salt and pepper. Cook over medium heat for 15 minutes, stirring often, until onions are very soft and slightly browned. Drain excess liquid and reserve onion.
5. Prepare guacamole (recipe follows).
6. Place chicken breasts on a grill over very hot coals and cook about 2 minutes on each side, or until chicken is cooked through but still moist. Remove to cutting board and slice into strips 3 inches long by 1/2 inch wide.
7. Lay out 12 prepared corn tortillas. Divide chicken into 12 and place in center of each tortilla. Place onions, guacamole, yogurt and tomatoes evenly over chicken. Top each with a dash of Tabasco sauce and sprinkle each with chopped parsley. Fold or roll tortillas to serve. Arrange on a large platter.
Yield: 12 fajitas

Guacamole

2 ripe avocados, peeled and seeded
4 teaspoons lemon juice
1 large ripe plum tomato, seeded and cut into 1/4-inch dice
1 tablespoon chopped purple onion
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
Dash of Tabasco or hot pepper sauce

1. Place peeled avocados in a bowl with lemon juice and mash coarsely.
2. With a fork, gently mix in tomato, onion, salt, pepper and Tabasco sauce. Reserve.
Yield: about 1½ cups

JIMMY'S RED-HOT RIBS

One of our nation's finest young chefs, Jimmy Schmidt of the Rattlesnake Club in Denver, has made this his signature dish. Its three sauces are well worth the time for the resulting deep, hot flavor. These are real mean Western ribs.

RIBS AND BRAISING LIQUID:
4 quarts beef broth
3/4 cup red wine vinegar
1 tablespoon paprika
1 tablespoon cayenne pepper
1½ tablespoons ground cumin
3 tablespoons Tabasco sauce
1½ tablespoons garlic powder
1 tablespoon ground ginger
1 cup tomato paste
1/4 cup honey
1 tablespoon salt
4 slabs baby-back ribs, 1¼ pounds each
SPICE MIXTURE:
1/4 cup garlic salt
1 tablespoon ground white pepper
1/2 cup paprika
1/4 cup dry mustard
1/4 cup red wine vinegar
1/4 cup Worcestershire sauce
1/2 cup beer
BARBECUE SAUCE:
1 cup chili sauce
1 cup ketchup
1/4 cup steak sauce
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
1 tablespoon finely pressed garlic
2 tablespoons prepared horseradish
3 tablespoons dry mustard
1 tablespoon Tabasco sauce
1 tablespoon molasses
1 tablespoon jalapeño salsa
1 tablespoon red wine vinegar

1. Combine all Braising Liquid ingredients in a large pot. Stir well, and bring to a simmer over medium heat.
2. Add ribs and simmer until tender but not falling apart, about 1 hour and 45 minutes. When done, carefully transfer ribs to a cookie sheet. Reserve liquid for future use, if desired.
3. Combine all Spice Mixture ingredients in a medium-sized bowl to form a paste (add more beer if too dry).
4. Rub paste over all surfaces of ribs. Wrap each rib in aluminum foil, dull side out. Refrigerate until ready to cook. (Can be prepared in advance.)
5. Combine Barbecue Sauce ingredients in a medium-sized bowl. Whisk until well-blended. Adjust seasoning to taste.
6. Preheat oven to 400°F.
7. Cover a cookie sheet with aluminum foil. Place ribs on foil, unwrap and coat with 2 cups of Barbecue Sauce. Rewrap ribs and bake on center rack of oven for 10 minutes.
8. Unwrap ribs and place on a grill (or under preheated broiler) to char. Serve immediately with the remaining Barbecue Sauce.

Sunday Freebie

The Federal Trade Commission estimates that American consumers are cheated out of almost $1 billion each year in fraudulent investments. Three quarters of the ripoffs that it investigates, says the FTC, were perpetrated by confidence men and women working the telephones. To trusting and gullible people, these bucket-shop or boiler-room operators sell phony deals in oil and gas leases, precious metals, bargain vacations, rare coins or anything that will earn them a fast buck.

To protect the public from slick, high-pressure swindlers, the FTC is offering a free, four-page brochure titled Telephone Investment Fraud. For your copy, write to the Federal Trade Commission, Dept. P, Room 130, Washington, D.C. 20580.

The brochure contains much useful information. For example, it warns you against the typical sales pitch of the fraudulent salesperson, who will:

FTC's Daniel Oliver

- Say you have been especially selected to participate in an unusual investment opportunity.
- Present a popular, believable message mixed with truth and lies.
- Guarantee large and rapid profits.
- Insist that virtually no risk is involved.
- Require that money be paid immediately because "the market is moving."

If by chance you already have been the victim of a telemarketing fraud, FTC Chairman Daniel Oliver wants you to write him. "We need to hear from people," he says, "who have had personal experience with these telephone swindlers so we can get the evidence we need to stop them. If you've had a problem, be sure to let us know."

Japan on Buying Spree

AP/Wide World

AP/Wide World

Authors Dorothy Parker (l) and Edna Ferber were regulars at Algonquin: It has new owners

A year ago, it took approximately 240 Japanese yen to buy one U.S. dollar. As we go to press, it takes only 140 yen to purchase a cheap Yankee buck. Is it any wonder then that the Japanese are buying up as much U.S. real estate and as many American businesses as they can? Just look at their record:

In the last year, Japan's Shuwa Investments paid $620 million for the Atlantic Richfield tower complex in Los Angeles. For a mere $175 million, the firm also bought the headquarters building of the American Broadcasting Co. in New York. Not to be outdone, Sumitomo Realty and Development Corp. of Tokyo agreed to pay $500 million for the office building at 666 Fifth Ave. in midtown Manhattan. Mitsui, a Japanese conglomerate, bought the Exxon Building, also in Manhattan, for $610 million. And a few weeks ago, a subsidiary of the Aoki Corp. of Tokyo acquired for a bagatelle of $29 million the legendary Algonquin Hotel, far-famed as the Manhattan meeting place decades ago for such writers as Dorothy Parker, Edna Ferber, Robert Benchley, Alexander Woollcott and James Thurber, as well as the Barrymores and other actors.

In May, the Japanese released a report showing that their overseas investments had almost doubled in the fiscal year ending March 31. Of that $22.32 billion total, an all-time high for Japan, 46% was spent in this country.

The Japanese have long favored the Hawaiian Islands as an investment location. They own approximately 70% of the islands' hotels, including the Hyatt on Maui, which they purchased for $319 million; the Hyatt Regency in Waikiki, which set them back $245 million; and the Ala Moana in Waikiki, bought for $69 million.

AIDS and Women

Of the people with AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) in this country, about 7% are women. As of this writing, however, there have been no proven cases of female-to-female transmission of the disease in the United States.

So declares the California Medical Association in a recent edition of Health Tips.

Experts Rate the Top 10

One of the questions most frequently asked of and by people in journalism is: "Which are the 10 best newspapers in the U.S.?"

A few months ago, Adweek magazine published the selections of a panel of 13 so-called "experts," among them Tom Winship, former editor of The Boston Globe; Edward Bassett, dean of the Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern University; George Reedy, a former press secretary of President Lyndon Johnson who currently teaches journalism at Marquette University; and Vartan Gregorian, president of the New York Public Library. Herewith their preferences:

1) The New York Times
2) Los Angeles Times
3) The Washington Post
4) The Wall Street Journal
5) The Philadelphia Inquirer
6) Newsday
7) The Christian Science Monitor

Ladies Taking Over

How soon before women come to dominate American politics? How soon before they regularly vote candidates of their own sex or choosing into the highest offices in the land? The correct answer is: "Sooner than you think."

UPI/Bettmann Newsphotos

Ferraro in 1984 race: Didn't help

The U.S. Census Bureau recently released statistics showing that the turnout of women voters exceeded that of men voters for the first time in the Presidential election of 1984—the one in which Ronald Reagan easily defeated Walter Mondale and won re-election, even though the Democrats ran a woman, Geraldine Ferraro, for Vice President. In that race, 61% of the eligible women cast votes, compared to 59% of the eligible men.

BY JAMES BRADY

Bryant Gumbel

ONCE UPON A TIME, WE had the Today show and Barbara Walters and Joe Garagiola on NBC with our morning cornflakes. Today owned the dawn patrol. Then ABC hired an actor named David Hartman, who used to play Lucas Tanner, and everything changed. It was David and his Middle American style and slightly bulging eyes who presided over the country's first cup of coffee. Then, in January 1982, NBC did an extraordinary thing to win back the morning audience from David: It hired a sportscaster named Bryant Gumbel to serve as co-host of Today with Jane Pauley.

The critics rubbed their hands in glee. Gumbel was a jock, he was too young (just 33), he was black. Hartman would eat this kid alive.

If Gumbel were a vindictive sort, which he isn't, he'd be smirking today. After five years, his show is back in first place in the network morning ratings, comfortably ahead of Good Morning America and nearly out of sight of CBS' Morning Program. I don't know just who at NBC deserves credit for putting Gumbel on the air; I know who deserves credit for making it work: Bryant himself.

When Tom Brokaw moved from Today to anchor the evening news, Bryant was the host of an NBC sports show, the way Bob Costas is these days. Bryant's background was sports. Period. That's what he'd done after graduating from Bates College in 1970—as a writer, as editor of Black Sports magazine and later as a sportscaster and sports director at KNBC-TV in Los Angeles. He held onto the L.A. job while moonlighting in New York during weekends, doing network sportscasting—until, in 1975, NBC Sports offered him $500,000 for his full-time services.

His wife, June, a former flight attendant, must have been delighted that he'd no longer be flying coast-to-coast and back every weekend of the year. And she now could afford to turn in her own wings.

Gumbel is currently in his sixth year at Today, and the man's professional growth has been astonishing. He is a terrific interviewer—instinctive and quick. He may have a list of questions, but if a guest tosses in a surprising answer, hinting of real news, Gumbel pounces upon it with a follow-up question, deftly discarding the planned scenario. Only the best TV interviewers can do this; most are terrified to abandon the script. His overseas broadcasts have generated journalism awards for his show and his network.

Gumbel is now one of the highest-paid people in the business. Some think his success helped pave the way for other black broadcasters, like Oprah Winfrey. Of his color, Bryant says, "I'm a broadcaster who happens to be black. Not a black broadcaster." He admits that he also talks too much, gets sore and is not known for being modest. Hey, nobody's perfect.

BORN: Sept. 29, 1948, in New Orleans.
PERSONAL: Married June Carlyn Baranco in 1973; one son and one daughter.
CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: Black Sports magazine writer, 1971, and editor, 1972; sportscaster on KNBC-TV, 1972-76; sports director at KNBC-TV, 1976-80; host of NBC Sports, 1975-82; co-host Today show, 1982-.

Eddie Adams

You think Bryant Gumbel's already a household face? Wait till next year. He has just grabbed the big NBC job of broadcasting the 1988 Olympics from South Korea.

BRADY'S BITS

I first met Bryant a couple of years ago in France, where we were both enjoying a weekend at the Normandy chateau of publisher Malcolm Forbes. He and June slept late, skipping the morning fun and frolic. You get to appreciate a good night's sleep when you start work before dawn. Evenings were different. Bryant sat around late after dinner, wearing a baseball cap and telling stories. "I went to the Muhammad Ali-Sonny Liston fight in Lewiston, Maine," he said, "working as a vendor. I missed the knockout. I was tossing a bag of peanuts."

'Houston Knights' Star: Make Me A Lady

By Evan Levine

In the 1984 movie "Her Life as a Man," Robyn Douglass got to wear pinstripes and wingtips and pretend she was a man; a kind of "Tootsie" in reverse. Now, as Joanne Beaumont, commanding officer to two police officers with conflicting styles in CBS's "Houston Knights," she just wishes they's let her be a woman. The series, starring Michael Beck and Michael Pare, returns to TV Tuesday, July 28, and has been renewed for the fall.

"My part in 'Her Life as a Man' was probably my most interesting role to date," she says. "I never believed I could portray an aggressive woman, let alone a man." But Douglass goes on to say that this time around, she wants to put that all behind her.

"I'm the only woman on the set," she explains. "I wish that we could see the more feminine side of Joanne. They could get a man if it's going to be a man's role."

What would she like to see? "Look, I never wanted her to be a twinkie," Douglass asserts. "I just try to put in interesting feminine touches. One time Joanne was sitting at her desk reading a book. I tried to have her read something by Helen Caldecott (the doctor and anti-nuclear activist), but the producers substituted something else."

In this era of "Cagney & Lacey"-type female cops who dodge bullets with the best of them, Douglass does hope that her character will move out of the office and into the action a little more next season. "I understand that the relationship between the boys (Beck and Pare) had to be on solid ground before they started developing my character," says Douglass, who trained with the prestigious Second City troupe in Chicago. "Now that the premise of the show is clear, I hope I'll be able to move away from my desk."

Douglass, who got her big break in the 1979 film "Breaking Away," said she knew "Houston Knights" had a chance because "the pilot was real good. I knew when I saw that 'Odd Couple' sense of humor that this was more than just a cowboy show or a detective show. I felt sure it was going to succeed.

"I love playing comedy and light roles," continues Douglass. "Ever since 'Her Life as a Man,' I've been a lot more secure about what I can do. That role showed me how insecure I'd been. Now, I walk into an audition and I think, 'What's the worst thing that can happen? So I'll be bad.' Even though the only thing holding me together sometimes is static cling, I let myself go, because I'll be OK."

Michael Beck (l.), Robyn Douglass and Michael Pare play police officers in CBS's "Houston Knights." It airs Tuesday, July 28.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: What was the name of the series starring Patty Duke that also featured Billie Bird as the grandmother? I believe Anthony Edwards appeared as the son. — JAN SIDLOWSKI, CRYSTAL LAKE, ILL.

The short-lived (1982-83) ABC sitcom was titled "It Takes Two." Patty Duke and Richard Crenna starred as Molly and Sam Quinn, while Billie Burke played Mama. Anthony Edwards and Helen Hunt rounded out the family as siblings Andy and Lisa.

Dear Michele: What can you tell us about Alan Young, who played Wilbur on "Mr. Ed"? Did Young own Mr. Ed? — SUSAN SPILSKI, SOUTH BEND, IND.

Canadian native Alan Young started out in the 1940s and early 1950s as a radio and TV personality. In 1953, CBS canceled his "Alan Young Show," and he left to pursue a TV career in England. Upon his return to the States, the only work he was offered was "Mr. Ed." The show aired from 1961 to 1965. In 1976, Young gave up his show-business career to devote his energies to religious activities. He returned to performing eventually, and today he dubs such cartoons as "The Smurfs" and "Fat Cat." Young did not own the horse who played Ed. He was a palomino named Bamboo Harvester, who was purchased for $1500 on behalf of Filmways Studios. The horse died in 1979 at the age of 33.

Dear Michele: Where was ABC anchor Peter Jennings born? — KATHEREEN SMITH, HICKORY, N.C.

Jennings, the urbane anchor of ABC's "World News Tonight," was born July 29, 1938, in Toronto, Canada.

Dear Michele: What is the real age of Pernell Roberts, who most recently starred in "Trapper John, M.D."? — DONNA BURGER, SYRACUSE, N.Y.

Roberts was born May 18, 1930, which makes him 57 years old. The actor starred as Adam Cartwright in "Bonanza" (1959-65) and in the title role of "Trapper John, M.D." (1979-86). Roberts was recently teamed with Dirk Blocker, son of his late "Bonanza" co-star Dan Blocker, in the TV movie "Desperado."

Dear Michele: What is Dean Martin doing now? — JOAN MONEY, HEADLAND, ALA.

Martin continues to perform his nightclub act, even after the shattering and untimely death of his son Dean Paul Martin in a March plane crash.

Please address questions to Michele Will Tell, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 2315, Grand Central Station, New York, NY 10163. Because of the volume of mail received, personal replies cannot be sent.

'Live It Up' Is Looking For Good Clean Jokes

By Bob Remington

Heard a good joke, lately? If so, the folks at CTV's "Live It Up" want to hear it.

But it has to be clean (none of those seven dirty words you can't say on TV) and concise, and it has to be Canadian. The best gut-busters will be aired this fall as The Great Canadian Joke Competition helps the upbeat consumer/lifestyle show mark its 10th anniversary.

"We want to dispel the myth that Canadians are dull," says "Live It Up" co-host Dianne Buckner, who has been traveling the country this summer getting people to tell jokes on camera. "Look at all the comedians who have come out of Canada, like John Candy and Martin Short and Dan Aykroyd. You don't produce talent like that without having some sort of national funnybone."

Buckner says the joke contest should reveal that Canadian humor lies somewhere between the American tradition of slapstick and British fondness for the absurd. Such lightweight programming, however, leads one to wonder if the biggest joke is "Live It Up" itself.

Of all the so-called informational programs on television, "Live It Up" is the most difficult to take seriously. Its peppy format, complete with slide-whistle sound effects and hokey music, makes it a target for ridicule.

"Just because we have funny little sound effects doesn't mean we're not credible," says Buckner, who is entering her second season on the show alongside co-hosts Alan Edmonds and Jack McGaw.

TV Chatter

Oprah Winfrey earned a reported $30 million-plus from her syndicated talk show last year. She owns an $800,000 condo on Chicago's tony Near North Side. But as daytime TV's biggest star reviews her current good fortune, she can't help thinking about earlier times when life was less than grand. Says Winfrey, who was raised in a Milwaukee housing project, "I was a smart kid but I needed direction. I was labeled 'hyperactive' and 'mischievous.' My mother was a domestic, and she just didn't have any time to give me. She was just trying to survive. I was the classic black inner-city welfare kid." But living in that environment, where everyone else was poor and black, was almost a blessing. "I didn't know we were poor, and I never encountered any racism because we were all black," she says. All that changed when Winfrey won a scholarship to a posh private school in the white suburbs of Milwaukee. "I didn't realize until then just how poor I was. I'd spend the night at these rich girls' homes. It was 1968 and real hip to know a black person. Their mother would come waltzing out of the kitchen and ask me if I knew Sammy Davis Jr."

Please don't call Susan Ruttan's long-suffering secretary Roxanne Melman on "L.A. Law" a nebbish. Although the secretary at the high-powered law firm often serves as a doormat for her boss, sleazy lawyer Arnold Becker (Corbin Bernsen), Ruttan wants to make it clear that Roxanne only seems like a pushover. "She's probably the most interesting person in the room if you go over and talk to her," says Ruttan. "She has a good heart and is very bright." Roxanne may be pining for her boss, but Ruttan wants to keep the two at arm's length. "I don't think Roxanne and Arnie should have an affair. I like the tension better." She does, however, fantasize about a scene she hopes one day to play with Bernsen. "I have this fantasy — maybe Roxanne has it, too — of Arnie turning around and saying, 'Omigod! I've been a fool! It's you! You're the one. Will you marry me, Roxanne?' And Roxanne goes, 'Uh, I have to think about it. I'll get back to you... maybe in five years.' "

How times change! Rick Moranis, currently starring as Dark Helmet in Mel Brooks' "Spaceballs," became famous in the '70s as one of the McKenzie Brothers on the classic comedy show "SCTV." Now that TV shows such as "Dragnet" and "The Untouchables" have been turned into feature films, Moranis says there is talk about producing "SCTV — The Movie." But Moranis isn't optimistic about a big-screen reunion with his former co-stars, who include John Candy, Eugene Levy and Andrea Martin. "It's just so hard to get our schedules to work together. It's not just seven comedians anymore. It's 49 people! Everybody has a lawyer, business manager, publicist, masseur..." The diminutive actor also sees special problems bringing the tipsy McKenzie Brothers back during the current anti-drug and alcohol climate. ("Strange Brew," the 1983 feature in which Moranis and Dave Thomas appeared as the backwoods Canadian brothers, was a flop.) Moranis and Thomas were recently approached to doa beer commercial as the McKenzie Brothers. "We turned them down. We have a lot of identification with kids, and we really don't want to promote beer. I am talking to somebody about us representinga non-alcoholic beer, which I'd really like to do." He adds that the Brothers were never really supposed to appear drunk. "We just liked our brew."

She's now a major film star with roles in "Roxanne" and the upcoming "Wall Street," but in her salad days, Daryl Hannah couldn't even get a job as a tour guide at Universal Studios. "Friends told me that was the way to get into the business, so I called Universal on the phone, but they turned me down. They said you had to have special talents," she recalls. Such as? "Being able to speak to people."

PRIVATE EYE

NBC's fall prime-time [illegible] feature "Pri[illegible] new series [illegible]thony Yerko[illegible]ed "Miami [illegible] three Emmys as producer of "Hill Street Blues." Production has recently begun on the series, which is set in the 1956 Los Angeles rock 'n' roll scene. The program will star Michael Woods and Josh Brolin.

SOAP OPERA WEEK

'Y&R' actor has had a varied acting past

By Kimberly Redmond

What can you tell me about Scott Palmer, who portrays Tim Sullivan on "The Young and the Restless"? - I.B., South Bend, Ind.

Ross Kettle

Before Palmer joined "Y&R," he had roles in other daytime soaps such as "General Hospital," "All My Children" and "Days of Our Lives." He also appeared in "Dallas" and in the feature film "The First Deadly Sin."

Are Michael Weiss (Dr. Mike Horton) and Derya Ruggles (Dr. Robin Jacobs) of "Days of Our Lives" married to each other in real life? - V.A., Clearwater, Fla.

Weiss and Ruggles are not married to each other in real life. In fact, both are single.

On "Santa Barbara," what is the name of the song Jeffrey Conrad (Ross Kettle) played on the piano when he and Kelly Capwell (Robin Wright) were traveling in a van? - B.T., Independence, Va.

The title of the tune Jeffrey played while he and Kelly were on the run was "Vivian's Eyes." The song was written by Rick Rhodes (whose wife's name is Vivian) and Marc Greene.

If Susan Lucci (who plays Erica Kane on "All My Children") has a fan club, could you give me the address? - B.D., LaRonge, Sask., Canada

Susan Lucci

Lucci had a fan club several years ago, but it's no longer in existence. You can write to her c/o "AMC," ABC-TV, 1330 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10019.

(Have a question about soap operas? Write Kimberly Redmond at 200 Park Ave., Room 602, New York, NY 10166. Questions cannot be answered personally but those of general interest will be answered in future columns.)

ATTN: Joe Styron - Display Advertising

Dear Joe,

There are many ways for me to spend my advertising dollar. But to find an effective way is an entirely different story.

Last year you gave me an opportunity to advertise in The Daily Reflector's TV Showtime publication. I was, to say the least, hesitant: after all, I rarely sign a 52 week agreement of any sort much less an advertising one.

The progrm proved however, to be a most effective one. My ad is in the same position every week, all year long. This allows my customers to see what the mall has to offer every day. This consistant form of advertising has proven to be a good performer, therefore I am pleased to renew my position for the 1987/1988 year.

Your continued attention in helping my advertising campaign to be as effective as possible is greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

Lisa V. Tapp-Daughtry

Emmys This Year Went To Previous Winners

By Connie Passalacqua

"Twins" was the buzzword at the 1986 Daytime Emmys. Actors who played these dual roles swept the awards categories. "Repeaters" was the buzzword at the 1987 Daytime Emmys. So many winners were repeaters from recent years that they could have simply recycled the statuettes.

Certainly no arguments can be made against the excellence of the actors who won again — including "Guiding Light"'s Kim Zimmer (who plays Reva Shayne and was chosen Best Actress), "As the World Turns"'s Larry Bryggman (who plays Dr. John Dixon and was chosen as Best Actor) and "All My Children"'s Michael Knight (who played Tad Martin and was chosen as Best Younger Leading Man). Butwas last year really their year?

Last year was the year that the formerly flamboyant Reva had a baby and listened to other people's problems. It was also the year that evil Dr. John Dixon began to soften as he fell in love andmarried neurotic Lucinda Walsh (played by Elizabeth Hubbard). Ironically, the kind of dramatic fireworks that usually merit an award are scheduled next year for Bryggman. As the Dixon marriage disintegrates, Hubbard and Bryggman, both brilliant actors, are going to start performing their own version of "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?"

John Wesley Shipp (who won last year for Best Supporting Actor as Douglas Cummings on "As the World Turns") walked off with the award for Best Guest Performer, a new category. For six weeks heplayed Martin, the psychotic boyfriend of Tori Lane (Kristen Meadows) on "Santa Barbara." Shipp triumphed over such big-name guest stars as Celeste Holm (who played a bag lady on "Loving") and Eileen Heckart (who played the sympathetic mother of a killer on "OLTL"). It is ironic that a soap regular walked off with this award the first time out, since the category was created to siphon offbig-name guest performers and keep them from competing with soap names in the regular major categories.

The most merited win was "ATWT" as Best Show. But to everyone's dismay, Doug Marland, daytime's best and most consistent head writer, wasn't even nominated.

John Hillerman Knows When He Has It Good

By Lynn Hoogenboom

If there's one thing that "Magnum P.I." 's John Hillerman has learned over the years, it's how to appreciate a good thing.

"I've been acting 33 years — 15 years on the stage and 18 years in front of the camera," says the 54-year-old actor who plays Jonathan Quale Higgins III on the CBS Wednesday-night series. "Higgins is, quite simply, the best part I've ever had. It's not only one of the best roles on the show. At the risk of sounding snobbish, it's one of the best roles on television."

Even now, with a rejuvenated "Magnum" heading into its eighth season, Hillerman expresses mild surprise that he finally managed to land in a hit series.

"I had been in two good se[ries] that had failed — 'Ellery Queen' and 'The Betty White Show,'" he explains. "After those experiences one is always skeptical. It's easy to do a pilot and get onthe air. It's very difficult to have a hit series. But after I saw the pilot and saw Tom Selleck's charisma, I said to myself, 'Well, Hillerman, you may have a shot.'"

That may be the reason that he isn't particularly anxious to see "Magnum" come to an end. "I'm not dying to move on to other things," he says. "As long as people want to see 'Magnum,' I will do that part."

When it does, however — and there have been rumors that Selleck may call it quits after the February sweeps this coming winter, Hillerman plans to start work on a new series. "I have several offers, and I will undoubtedly do another series when this is over," he says. "I like doing series television. I like getting up and going to work every day and working with the same people."

When he does move on to a new series, he plans to be involved from its inception. "I have very specific ideas about what I want to do," he says. "I like to play people of intelligence and wit. I don't want to play a numbskull. I like characters that have a hard acerbic edge to them like Higgins. I don't want to play a lovable teddy bear.

"I'm not the sort of person who's sitting around doing a TV series wishing he were doing 'Hamlet,'" Hillerman concludes. "I've had a very good career in Hollywood. I've done everything from Westerns to drawing-room comedy and a few things in between. I've always worked with top people and I've done very good roles. I'm perfectly content doing what I'm doing. I know it's boring, but I'm a happy actor."

Simon Sings Again; Lifetime Adds 'Kayo'

By Andrew J. Edelstein

HBO scored a coup when it landed the rights to broadcast Carly Simon's comeback concert. The artist stopped performing in public several years ago because she experienced severe panic attackson stage, but in June, she decided to give live performing another chance with an intimate concert on Martha's Vineyard, Mass. Did she bear up to the pressure? Was she inspired by the feats of New York Mets first baseman Keith Hernandez, to whom she has been romantically linked? A tape of "Carly in Concert: Coming Around Again" was not available at press time, but according to newspaper reports, the concert itself went swimmingly. It airs July 30.

* Lifetime continues to ransack the video refuse heap for some of its programming. The channel recently added "Kay O'Brien" to its lineup — a demographically sound decision for the women-oriented channel. For those with short memories, this 1986 series starred Patricia Kalember as a first-year surgery resident. CBS canceled the series after only a few episodes were aired.

Starting in September, Lifetime will air reruns of "Falcon Crest," the nighttime soap now airing on CBS. For those who keep track of such minutiae, this marks the first time a cable network has actually run rebroadcasts of a series still airing on network TV.

Sparky Anderson Has Tigers Believing Again

By Adam Beckerman

On NBC's Game of the Week on Saturday, Aug. 1, viewers will see either the New York Yankees hosting the Detroit Tigers or the San Francisco Giants visiting the Cincinnati Reds.

Detroit manager Sparky Anderson actually has his Tigers believing the raves he gives them. The addition of Bill Madlock has boosted Tiger production, and the short-second combo of Alan Trammelland Lou Whitaker is once again the best in the bigs. Ace Jack Morris is winning without his accustomed backstop, Lance Parish, and could have the final laugh over Yankee boss George Steinbrenner andother owners who chose not to pursue baseball's winningest pitcher of the '80s when he was available.

Over in the National League, San Francisco is notorious for making dubious trades, but maybe the seven-player deal with the San Diego Padres, in which the Giants sent problem-child Chris Brown,their often-injured All-Star third baseman, and a couple of pitchers to the Padres for lefties Dave Dravecky and Craig Lefferts and infielder-outfielder Kevin Mitchell, will catapult them to the top. Mitchell had a two-out single during the New York Mets' miracle tenth-inning rally against the Boston Red Sox in game six of the 1986 World Series. San Francisco can always use heart.

* The 74th Tour de France concludes on Sunday, July 26, with a 111.8 mile push from Cretil to Paris. The French economy takes a customary 10 to 15 percent dip during July, and once you see the multitude of men, women and dachsunds lining the Paris streets to greet their cycling heroes, you'll understand why. CBS will air the finish at noon (ET) and will also show highlights from the grueling past week which has included two time trials and a three-day trek through the Alps.

* The U.S. Olympic Festival in Charlotte, N.C., also winds up on Sunday, July 26. Women's gymnastics individual finals, synchronized swimming, equestrian events and the gold medal hockey game can be seen on ESPN.

* On ESPN also, the maiden season of arena football climaxes Saturday, Aug. 1, with the championship game. Expect this to be one of the highest-scoring football title matches ever. Our prediction is 84-63. Hey, when the opposing team has to kick off from its own goal-line, you're never out of decent scoring position.

NEW FACES

This fall, Jack Scalia, Andrew Stevens, Bert Remsen, Leigh Taylor-Young and Amy Stock will join the cast of "Dallas." The arrival of these five actors sets a series record for new faces joining the cast in one season.

GAMBLING AGAIN

Once again Kenny Rogers will reprise his role as "The Gambler" in "Kenny Rogers as 'The Gambler' Part III," currently filming for future broadcast on CBS. Bruce Boxleitner and Linda Gray will also star in this four-hour, two-part miniseries, which involves a dangerous quest for justice for the Sioux Indians in the Dakota Territory of the late 1880s.

- WORD PLAY! Challenge: Rearrange letters of five words at right to form new words, removing one letter from each of the first two words, as indicated, and adding one letter to each of the remaining three.

See if you can puzzle out at least three of the word possibilities.

1. TARGET – T.
2. EMBALM – M.
3. CARROT + T.
4. COURSE + A.
5. NECTAR + L.

1. Great (or grate). 2. Blame (or amble). 3. Tractor. 4. Carouse. 5. Central.

- AGE GAUGE! Scott is 13 years old. His grandpa is 57. In how many years will Scott's age be one-third that of his grandpa's age?

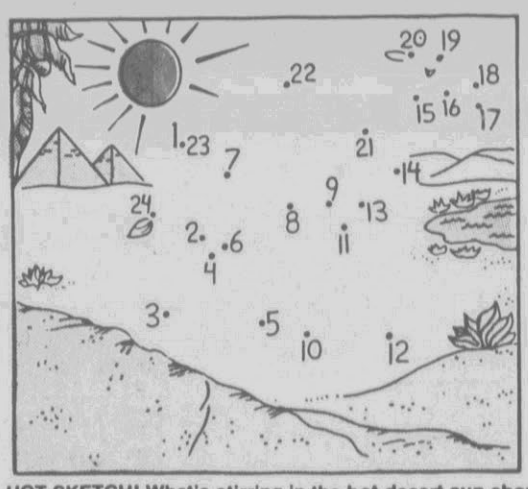
In nine years, when Scott will be 22, his grandpa will be 66.

MATH MAGIC TO PONDER

Save this trick for a friend's ninth birthday party or ninth anniversary.

Pick any number of two or more assorted digits (the more the merrier). Rearrange the chosen number's digits at random and subtract lower from higher amount. Add resulting digits progressively until one amount is left. Alakazam, it will be 9!

Ex.: Say number picked is 634. A random rearrangement is 436; 436 from 634 is 198; 1 plus 9 plus 8 is 18; 1 plus 8 is 9.



HOT SKETCH! What's stirring in the hot desert sun above? To find out, add lines from 1 to 2 to 3, etc.

AIR LIFT! Here it is, there it goes! Add colors neatly to the scene above: 1—Red. 2—Lt. blue. 3—Yellow. 4—Lt. brown. 5—Flesh. 6—Dk. blue. 7—Dk. brown. 8—Lt. purple.

SPELLBINDER

SCORE 10 points for using all the letters in the word below to form two complete words:

MELODIST

THEN score 2 points each for all words of four letters or more found among the letters.

Try to score at least 50 points.

Possible anagram: List, mode.
