Thunderstorm Knocks Out Power, Downs Trees

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

AYDEN — Afternoon thunderstorms accompanied by high winds, lightning and hail hit sections of Ayden and areas of eastern Pitt County Monday, causing power outages, downed tree limbs, fires and battered crops.

"Our transmission line was down about 40 minutes," said Mitchell Keel, director of the Ayden Public Works Department.

"A dead tree was blown over into the transmission line and took the whole town out," he said. "After we restored the main power, we had two circuits out about 40 more minutes."

Main circuits were restored about 5 p.m., while scattered, isolated problems were handled until about 8:30 p.m., Keel said. "There were tree limbs blown into some lines all over the system."

But damage was sectional, he said. "On the north side of town, I don't think we had any" rain, while the Roundtree, Hanrahan and Ayden-Grifton High School areas were the most affected.

There was some "heavy and very sharp lightning — some of the worse lightning I've seen," Keel said. "Our crews didn't get out of the truck for 30 minutes after getting to the first site. It was striking around us quite a bit."

Lightning only teased electric systems of other parts of the county, said Roger Jones, director of Electric Systems at the Greenville Utilities Commission.

"I know that early in the afternoon we recorded some operations in the Stokestown, Clayroot area. Breakers were opening and closing, clearing lightning strokes" as part of an automatic sensing function, he said. But, there was no significant damage reported.

The storm did cause other problems during its afternoon visit.

"Our biggest problem was traffic control during the power outage," said Ayden Police Chief Tim Phillips. "We had a minor wreck, (but) there were no injuries at all that we know of."

There also were six fire calls in four locations in the Ayden area because of the lightning, Phillips said. A tobacco barn and a storage building were ignited in addition to two trees that needed extinguishing twice.

"There was a good bit of crop damage that did occur in a narrow band yesterday," said Sam Uzzell of the Pitt County Extension Service. The extent of the damage still is being evaluated.

Crops in their growing season — tobacco, peanuts and soybeans — need rain for better yields but not at that intensity, he said. Needed moisture also could add weight to corn, but it would not significantly increase its yield.

"I think the season for corn is over," he said.

The storm only was a rumor in other parts of the county. "We did not have any major damage reported to us at all," said Bobby Joyner, coordinator for Pitt County Emergency Services.

There were .13 inches of rain recorded in south Greenville Monday while no rain was recorded in northern areas. About 2.32 inches of rain have been recorded for the month and 26.99 inches for the year.

There is a 30 percent chance of showers today, and cooler temperatures are expected in the high 80s to low 90s while lows will be in the mid 70s.

The Tar River level was recorded at 1.8 feet above sea level this morning.

Meese Says Had 'No Hint' Of Criminal Acts In Probe

By PETE YOST

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III today defended the preliminary Iran-Contra inquiry he conducted for President Reagan last fall, telling congressional investigators there was initially "no hint that criminal activity was in any way implicated."

Testifying under oath and without immunity at nationally televised hearings, Meese also said "my own counsel" was to support the secret sale of arms to Iran when his opinion was asked in January 1986. He said he advised the president it was legal to withhold notification of Congress for a brief period.

"There was no one" among Reagan's senior advisers who recommended that Congress be told immediately, Meese recalled.

Meese was the second Cabinet officer to appear before the House and Senate investigating committees at hearings that end the 11th week today. The attorney general sat alone at the witness table while several aides occupied seats one row behind him.

Meese was expected to undergo strenuous questioning about his preliminary inquiry into the affair last November, an inquiry which many lawmakers have criticized as inept.

Meese began by reading a 17-page written statement in which he stressed his "limited role in the events" until last November. He said he began his inquiry "plain and simple" to find out what the facts were and to report back to the president.

"Indeed, on Nov. 21, 1986, there was no hint that criminal activity was in any way implicated in the Iranian arms transactions," he said.

Questioning of Meese was led by House committee counsel John Nields, who began by asking the attorney general whether he had any knowledge that the Israelis had sold American-made weapons to Iran in the summer and fall of 1985.

As he has many times before, Meese said he was unaware of those shipments until November 1986.

Nields led Meese through a long recitation of events and meetings leading to the attorney general's disclosure on Nov. 25 that proceeds of the arms sales had been diverted to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

Among the disclosures, Meese:

— Said he personally telephoned former National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter after Reagan's news conference last Nov. 19 to express concern that several of the president's answers at the session were incorrect. He said Poindexter assured him that a "correction or a clarification" had been issued.

— Described attending a session the following day in Poindexter's office at which White House aide Oliver L. North proposed having Poindexter and former CIA Director William Casey tell Congress the next day that "no one in the U.S. government" knew in November 1985 that an Israeli shipment to Iran contained U.S.-made missiles instead of oil-drilling equipment. That statement was false — and some officials present knew it — but Meese said he was unaware.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz testified last week that Poindexter and Casey were engaged in an effort during this period to hide the true facts of the Iran-Contra affair. Shultz said those two sought to have Reagan make misleading statements to bail them out of difficulty with a policy

Leaf Sales Begin

DOUGLAS, Ga. (AP) — Sales were sluggish as 1987 flue-cured tobacco auctions opened in Georgia today, but farmers said they were impressed with the quality of the tobacco and expect sales to pick up when higher quality leaf reaches the market floor.

"I think this is one of the best seasons for growing tobacco. If we can get the price, then the farmers can make some money," said state Sen. Walter Ray, D-Douglas, vice chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, who was on hand for the first day of sales.

Lyman Wilkins, co-owner of the Wilkins & Veazy tobacco warehouse in Douglas, said he was disappointed that buyers had not purchased more tobacco at the initial sale. But he said sluggish sales are often typical on opening day.

"I'm still proud of the crop of tobacco. It looks ripe and mature," he said, adding that he expects sales to improve when leaf from higher on the stalk reaches the auction floor.

State Agriculture Commissioner Tommy Irvin also was on hand for the opening, shaking hands with farmers and saying he is still optimistic about the season despite the slow sales.

"You've got to realize this isn't our best tobacco," Irvin said. "The companies have indicated there's going to be good demand."

Auctioneer Earlish Lightsey of Baxley, who led the procession of buyers through rows of tobacco at the Wilkins & Veazy warehouse, said he always gets a little nervous on opening day. But once he learns the buyers' signals, he feels comfortable, he said.

"Some have different signs: some will wink at you, some use their

California Tells Drivers Be Wimpish

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Motorists were advised to "be a wimp" and back down from confrontations on Southern California's stress-filled freeways following two more slayings blamed on angry drivers.

The death toll from freeway violence rose to four after two people were fatally shot Sunday in an apparent traffic dispute, the 10th highway shooting since mid-June. Police said it may not be the last.

"The idea is self-perpetuating, because every time (a shooting) happens, it puts the idea in the mind of another person who is already carrying a gun illegally," said California Highway Patrol Sgt. Mark Lynn on Monday.

Three episodes were reported Sunday, including the fatal shootings of Manuel Brown Avila, 28, and Angel Aguirre Barrera, 36.

Two other people were slain on Friday and on June 20, 28-year-old Paul Gary Nussbaum has been in serious condition since he was shot July 18, and three people have suffered less severe injuries.

Two arrests have been made in the rash of shootings.

Traffic tempers appeared to be the motive in some incidents, but the trigger in others has been less clear, police said.

"Be a wimp on the freeways, it's not the place to be assertive," Dr. Martin Brenner, director of an Anaheim hospital stress unit, advised Monday.

Also on Monday, the Guardian Angels anti-crime organization, which has attributed the violence to a "Mad Max" mentality on the road, handed out "freeway violence tip sheets" with a "freeway hothead hotline number."

The group also placed yellow ribbons on antennas as a symbol of

Deadly Heat Wave Breaks In Greece

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Temperatures fell below 100 today as northerly breezes helped cool off a nine-day heat wave in Greece that has killed 688 people, kept hospitals on alert and sent residents fleeing the steamy capital.

Temperatures in Athens dropped to 97 degrees today, from 109 on Monday.

"It looks like the heat wave finally is over," said a weather bureau official who declined to be identified. The Athens Weather Bureau predicted highs of around 97 until the end of the week, followed by a lower temperatures.

The hot weather moved into Cyprus, and officials in Nicosia placed medical services on alert. Sixteen people died from heart and respiratory problems since Monday, and they may have been affected by the record-tying temperature of 111 Fahrenheit.

Residents began returning to Athens today after seeking relief from the heat in the countryside. Some tourists had plunged into the city's fountains to keep cool.

"I just went and laid in sea," said Peggy McNutt, a tourist from Washington, D.C. "And the sea is the only place you could keep cool. When you got out of the shower, you were hotter when you got out."

She said hotel officials in Athens had trouble getting ice cubes, because "the police are having to get all the ice cubes, to keep bodies (cool) of people who have died from the heat."

Most of the 688 dead were elderly Greeks with heart ailments and people with respiratory problems, said city coroner Philippos Koutsafis. No foreign tourists were reported to have died in the heat wave.

In the port of Piraeus, an Athens suburb, the coroner's assistant at the

FAA Chief Putting Airlines On Notice

WASHINGTON (AP) — The new chief of the Federal Aviation Administration is warning that his agency will be watching the airline industry to see if it heeds passengers demanding better and safer service.

"The executive management of every air carrier ... is hereby on notice," T. Allan McArtor said Monday after being sworn in as the agency's administrator.

"If you do not comply with your obligations to maintain your fleets and fulfill the obligations of your operating certificates, you will not operate in the national airspace," McArtor warned airlines.

McArtor, a former senior vice president of Federal Express, also made it clear that airline employees' performances would be watched.

"Pilots, co-pilots, flight engineers and other crew members are also on

He said the agency also would require airlines to periodically audit their compliance with safety and security rules, with the results to be made public. And it will seek money to conduct experiments on more sophisticated instruments planes could carry to transmit their positions to controllers.

Manager Hopefuls Cut To Six

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville City Council has trimmed the list of applicants for the vacant city manager's position to six candidates, Mayor Les Garner said.

The council expects to pare down the list even more at a future meeting, according to Garner, who announced the reduction in applicants after council members met in an executive session Monday night.

"We expect to meet again on August 10 to possibly reduce the number to three," Garner said.

The council, which received 177 applications for the position, had cut down the list to 19 prior to Monday night's session.

Council members will receive additional information on the remaining six candidates before the list is narrowed again, according to Dick Farris, who is serving as the city's staff resource person in the city manager search.

"We're gathering some background information on them right now," said Farris, personnel director at East Carolina University. "That will assist them in making a decision along with additional evaluation of the information they have."

The remaining six candidates are all males with master's degrees, according to Farris, who said only two of the 177 applications received were from females.

Following the Aug. 10 meeting, the council is expected to begin the interview process, which will include day-long sessions with prospective applicants, Farris said.

Meanwhile, Farris said the council expects to have a new city manager in place in September.

"We would hope to complete the process about two weeks after starting the interviews," he said. "They would then name somebody, but when he could start would depend on how much notice he has to give."

The search for a new city manager began following the March 16 dismissal of Gail Meeks.

Training To Eat

A "professional eater" says he will join the contestants in the Watermelon Eating Contest at the second annual Winterville Watermelon Festival Saturday.

"I'm going to be in double figures," said Mort Hurst, who holds a record for eating seven and a half pounds of collards during the Ayden Collard Festival.

"If anybody beats me, they're going to have to do better than 10" pounds of watermelon, he said.

Hurst has been in training for the contest for about two weeks, he said. "I'm training off seafood. I ate six pounds of trout" recently, and 700 shrimp Saturday night.

"I've already gained about 15 pounds, and I need to get up another 10 pounds," Hurst said. At 6 feet 2 inches tall, "I usually weigh about 190 pounds. I'm about 205, and my best weight is 215 for these events."

Hurst, of Robersonville, said he decided to become a professional eater in 1981. "I told my wife if I ever entered that Collard Festival (eating contest) I'd be famous."

But, when he entered the contest at the Ayden festival in 1982, he did not do well because he ate too many collards the night before the contest.

And, before the 1983 contest, Hurst said he drank six beers, and "that filled me up."

But, 1984 was his year when he created the record for collard eating.

Coaxing and cheering from onlookers provides 85 percent of the motivation to keep eating during the contest, Hurst said. "It's got to be a crowd out there."

Immigration Agent Cites Changes In Forms Covering Alien Workers

By CLAY DEANHARDT
Reflector Staff Writer

All employers, both public and private, are now required by law to verify the identity, citizenship and employment eligibility of all employees hired after Nov. 6, 1986, according to Patrick Walters, special agent with the Immigration Service.

Walters spoke to city and community college officials from across eastern North Carolina this morning at Pitt Community College.

Before his presentation, Walters said the law, the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, was intended to slow the tide of illegal immigrants into the country.

"It has never been illegal for employers to knowingly hire illegal aliens until the time of this act," Walters said. "And the theory behind it is that if the employers must hire only United States citizens or aliens authorized to be employed, then they are going to reduce the incentive for aliens to come here to seek employment or to remain here illegally for the purpose of being employed."

Walters said employers must now fill out an I-9 employment eligibility verification form as part of their screening of applicants.

"They are required to do this form on everybody they hire, citizen or alien. You don't have just a foreigner do it," Walters said.

According to Walters there are several ways to prove a persons eligibility. Some documents like a passport, he said, prove both identity and eligibility. In other cases a person might be required to show both a driver's license and Social Security card or birth certificate, he said.

Walters said legal aliens are required to have a form I-151, commonly known as the "green card," in order to be employed in the United States.

He said the new paper work is not going to cost businesses much in time or money. "Right now employers have to go back to employees they've hired since November. So they are in sort of a catch-up phase. As of September 1, 1987, when it's all supposed to be completed, then it's simply a matter of — put yourself in a position where you are applying for a job — it's one of the number of documents you have to fill out," Walters said.

"The execution of the form I-9 requires a minimum amount of paper work," he added.

"I have personally contacted a number of private businesses in Charlotte (where Walters is based). Most of them are on board, in fact, all of them are on board as far as having the I-9, being aware of the requirements of the law and applying the requirements of the law," Walters said.

"Most of them are pretty ambivalent about it," he said. "Their biggest problem has been so far many of their employees don't have the documents (required for proof). Many of the hold-ups have been with employees getting the documents."

Walters said it's unknown how the law is going to affect the farming community, noting his experience has been mostly with manufacturers. "They (farmers) have stated that it does make it a little harder on them than it does in other areas," he said.

"You know the law has to be applied across the law to everybody. And there are provisions within the law to bring in temporary agriculture workers," he said.

Both civil and criminal penalties can be applied in varying situations to enforce the law, Walters said.

He said failure to meet record keeping requirements and hiring or continuing to employ illegal aliens are both civil penalties involving fines. The pattern or practice of knowingly hiring illegal aliens is a criminal offense that could result in a $3,000 fine per employee and/or six months in prison, he said.

Walters said handbooks explaining guidelines are being mailed to all employers through the Internal Revenue Service. He also said photocopies of the I-9 can be used instead of the original document.

For more information, he said, employers can call 1-800-777-7700.

Soviets May OK Another Summit

By HARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz may meet in Washington in September with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze in an effort to wrap up an arms control agreement and make plans for a third U.S.-Soviet summit, U.S. officials say.

Reflecting a sudden improvement in superpower relations, Shultz discussed prospects for the meeting Monday with Yuri V. Dubinin, the Soviet ambassador who had asked to see him, the officials said.

"The time period we are looking at is mid-September," a State Department official, who spoke only on condition of anonymity, said later.

Just two weeks ago, Charles E. Redman, the State Department spokesman, criticized the Soviets for not responding to meeting dates suggested by the U.S. side and for a slowdown in negotiations in Geneva on nuclear missile reductions.

The United States had proposed Shultz and Shevardnadze meet in mid-July on an agenda for a visit to Washington by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev later in the year.

Since then, Gorbachev has offered to destroy all Soviet intermediate-range missiles in Asia as well as in Europe, and Dubinin conveyed to Shultz his government's interest in a high-level meeting.

"Things are a little bit warmer, but we still don't have dates," one U.S. official said.

Shultz and Shevardnadze would try to resolve any obstacles to the signing of a treaty by the U.S. and Soviet leaders.

Shultz, who returned to his State Department office Monday after testifying last week to congressional committees on the Iran-Contra affair, plans to be away on vacation the entire month of August and not to return to work until after Labor Day.

Redman said Gorbachev's offer to destroy all Soviet missiles in Asia had "some positive aspects" but that "there are issues to be resolved" between the two sides.

The principal obstacle apparently is U.S. refusal to destroy West German-based Pershing 1-A missiles, which have a range of 465 miles and could not reach Soviet territory.

Gorbachev did not refer to the Pershings when he used an interview with an Indonesian journal to outline his proposal to ban U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles. Some U.S. officials believe Gorbachev was focusing on Asian issues for an Asian audience.

Last April, the Soviets insisted that the Pershing 1-A warheads be destroyed as part of a treaty with the United States.

"That's definitely out," said a U.S. official of the demand revived by the Soviets last week.

Another U.S. official, also speaking on condition he not be identified, said American negotiator Maynard Glitman soon would present the mixed U.S. response to his Soviet counterparts at the bargaining table in Geneva.

Soviets Execute Man U.S. Deported

MOSCOW (AP) — Fyodor Fedorenko, the first suspected Nazi war criminal deported from the United States to the Soviet Union, has been executed, Tass said.

The official news agency, which announced the execution Monday, did not say when it was carried out. Execution in the Soviet Union is by firing squad.

Fedorenko lived in the United States for 35 years and was deported in 1984 after it was found he obtained citizenship by covering up a Nazi past.

The 80-year-old Fedorenko was convicted by a Soviet court in 1986 of treason and Nazi war crimes and sentenced to death.

Fedorenko was convicted in a court in his native Crimea of treason, voluntarily joining the Nazis in World War II and of participating in mass murder at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland in 1942-43.

Tass said, "Fedorenko personally took part in executions, drove people into gas chambers. This command with Fedorenko's participation destroyed at least 800,000 people."

Last year, at least three witnesses at his trial said they had seen Fedorenko beating Jews as they walked naked toward a gas chamber. Another witness testified that he had seen Fedorenko shoot prisoners.

"The death evaded justice for more than 40 years. Justice was delayed, but finally served," said Abraham H. Foxman, national director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, in a statement issued in New York.

Fedorenko emigrated to the United States from West Germany in 1949 and worked for many years in a factory in Waterbury, Conn.

He retired to Miami Beach, Fla., and later moved to Pennsylvania

Demjanjuk Says He Would Have 'Sold My Soul For Loaf Of Bread'

JERUSALEM (AP) — John Demjanjuk today again denied he was the brutal Nazi prison camp guard known as "Ivan the Terrible," telling the judges in his war crimes trial that he "couldn't even kill a chicken."

The 67-year-old retired Ohio autoworker also said he had lied on his application for U.S. citizenship to avoid being deported to the Soviet Union.

He told the three-judge panel that conditions were so bad in Nazi prisoner-of-war camps that "I would have sold my soul for a loaf of bread."

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk is accused of operating the gas chambers that killed 850,000 people at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland.

Demjanjuk has argued he was a victim of mistaken identity and was never at Treblinka or Sobibor, another Nazi death camp in Poland. Instead, he said he spent most of the time in POW camps as a captured Russian soldier.

"I felt myself like I was in Sobibor or Treblinka when I was in the (POW) camps," Demjanjuk said in his second day of testimony in the trial that began Feb. 16.

Asked by presiding Judge Dov Levine if he was "Ivan the Terrible," Demjanjuk said, "I was never there. I am not 'Ivan the Terrible.'"

He also said he had never killed anyone. "Never, I couldn't even kill a chicken, my wife had to do it," he testified.

Prosecutor Yona Blattman then began cross examination, arguing Demjanjuk's statements in Israel contradicted testimony during U.S. court proceedings about when and where he removed a tattoo from his left armpit. A prosecution argues the tattoo is the same type put on SS guards to signify their blood type in case of injury.

Asked by Levine why he had removed the tattoo, Demjanjuk said, "because we (POWs) ... all knew it belonged to the SS and not the Russians ... not only myself but everyone removed it because we were not SS."

Levine argued with Demjanjuk at several points, telling him on one occasion, "I see you are not only not stupid but clever."

Demjanjuk, who worked 30 years as a machine operator in a Cleveland auto plant, was extradited from the United States after being stripped of his citizenship for lying on application forms requesting entry in 1952.

Demjanjuk conceded under questioning from his attorney John Gill of Cleveland that he had lied in applying for U.S. citizenship.

He said he had listed Sobibor and the names of several other towns on various forms at the recommendation of a United Nations refugee official.

Demjanjuk claimed the official warned him to conceal his Ukrainian origins or be forced to return to the Soviet Union, where he feared prosecution as a deserter from the Red Army.

"The reason was to hide myself from repatriation to the Soviet Union, to hide the fact I was in the Soviet Army and the Vlasov Army," an anti-Soviet unit organized by the Nazis from Soviet POWs.

Levine said the trial "was turning to a great extent" on a key piece of prosecution evidence, an SS identification card that states Demjanjuk was in Sobibor. The Soviet Union provided the card and Demjanjuk claims it is a forgery.

"I was never at Sobibor or Treblinka. Why it's written there I don't know," Demjanjuk responded heatedly, turning red in the face.

Judge Zvi Tal asked Demjanjuk if he did not think it was strange that the SS identification card and his own application form both mentioned Sobibor.

"Maybe it surprises you, but I was never in these places in my life," Demjanjuk said.

Demjanjuk said he had been unfairly pressured during interrogation by Israeli police about where he was during the operation of the Treblinka death camp in 1942-43.

"They kept shouting at me. They pressured me to speak to them all the time in English," said Demjanjuk, arguing his uncertain command of English led to mistakes in his earlier statements.

Demjanjuk recalled that under police questioning he had spoken about Adolf Eichmann, the mastermind of the Nazi extermination of Jews in World War II, who was tried and hanged in Israel in 1962.

"Eichmann was known to the entire world as a Nazi, who caused misery to the Jewish people. I am not the right man who should be tried. I'm innocent and shouldn't be tried."

Levine expressed irritation at Gill's detailed questions. "We are tired of such questions. When we get to the important questions we will not be awake enough because you are putting us to sleep," he said at one point.

Taking the stand for the first time to defend himself, he pleaded, "Please believe me and don't try to put a rope around my neck for something someone else has done."

Jane's Says NASA Caution Allowing Soviets To Advance

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — The Challenger disaster sapped NASA's confidence and its will to put people in space, while the Soviet space program has made steady gains, says the 1987 edition of Jane's Spaceflight Directory, issued today.

"We couldn't disagree more," said David Garrett, spokesman for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. "The United States space program is coming back, stronger, safer and better than ever before."

The directory is a 551-page roundup of developments in the world's space programs. It is published by Jane's Publishing Co., which issues authoritative yearbooks on military and civil topics, including Jane's Fighting Ships.

"The fact is that currently NASA has lost the will to fly men in space," Reginald Turnill, editor of the Spaceflight Directory, wrote in the book's introduction.

"Only those executives emphasizing 'the conservative approach' and 'safety must come first' find favor in the hierarchy," he said.

Turnill said that as a result of the Challenger disaster, NASA had suffered an "unnecessary sense of national humiliation over an accident that should have been accepted as the unfortunate but inevitable price of leadership."

The Challenger space shuttle exploded minutes after liftoff on Jan. 28, 1986, killing seven crew members. Since then, the U.S. shuttle program has been grounded. NASA's caution follows disclosures of quality problems in the program that contributed to the explosion.

Turnill wrote that "disarray" in the U.S. space program has had unfavorable impact on the programs of Europe, Canada and Japan, while the Soviet space effort is advancing steadily with the Mir space station and plans to fly to Mars.

Turnill, who visited NASA facilities, wrote: "The general lack of confidence in NASA's recovery effort, freely expressed in its own offices, probably makes the observer excessively dubious about the May 1987 announcement that shuttle flights would be resumed 'no earlier than January 1988'."

Windsurfer Completes Sea Trip

LA BAULE, France (AP) — A man who completed a 6½-week solo crossing of the Atlantic Ocean on a sailboard glided ashore today to a hero's welcome from his hometown.

Stephane Peyron was escorted to shore by an armada of colorful boats, and hundreds of people waded into the Atlantic Ocean to greet him.

Smiling broadly, he was hoisted into an open car decked with French and American flags and paraded through the town of La Baule, a resort town where his family lives. A young girl kissed him and gave him a crepe, a specialty of the Brittany region.

"Now I know I'm home," said Peyron, 26.

Earlier in the day, he was surrounded by boats full of reporters, camera crews and supporters — a drastic change from the solitude of his voyage, which began June 10 in New York.

"I'm not used to being alone on the ocean," he shouted to a group of journalists. "It was one of the most difficult things to be alone for 46 days."

Peyron, smiling broadly and looking fit in his turquoise wetsuit, red boots and black gloves, said his muscles and joints ached, but he had no major physical problems.

"I have no big hurt," he said in accented English. "I feel good, but will need a lot of time to get in shape."

Bad weather forced him to shore Monday morning at La Rochelle, 100 miles southeast of La Baule. He slept a few hours and then put back out to sea to keep to the original schedule of landing at La Baule today.

The crossing will go into the record books as New York-La Rochelle, 3,300 nautical miles.

Peyron traveled strapped to the sail of his specially designed 25-foot sailboard, decorated in red, white and blue — the colors both of the United States and France.

During the trip, Peyron was able to maintain radio contact with his base station, but had no support vessel tracking him in the event of emergency.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Shultz Shines

The testimony of Secretary of State George P. Shultz before the congressional Iran-Contra committee was extraordinary.

He testified that the President Ronald Reagan was furious when he was finally told that aides had attempted to barter U.S. hostages in Lebanon for convicted terrorists in Kuwait. "I finally felt that the president deeply understands that something is radically wrong here," Shultz said of the meeting.

It was the State Department's public policy to support Kuwait for a strong stand on terrorism. The policy was not to interfere in another country's judicial proceedings.

Shultz, who supports the Contras, said the diversion of the Iranian funds to the Contras is "totally outside the system of government that we live by and must live by." His statement is an accurate one.

The constitution requires a sharing of power, Shultz indicated. "And this is not sharing power," he said. "This is not in line with what was agreed to (at the constitutional convention) in Philadelphia.

"This (the diversion of funds) is a piece of junk and it ought to be treated that way." Another correct assessment by Schultz.

The secretary of state told of having to outmaneuver White House officials to hold a private meeting with the president, a situation that not only is appalling, but could also be dangerous.

The secretary of state received praise from committee members for his candidness.

"We've had a lot of talk about heroes," said Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., vice chairman of the Senate Iran-Contra panel. "I do not believe that heroes are people who deceive their president."

"I believe the real heroes are people who speak up to their president ... who they are loyal to, to give him the best possible advice."

"You are such a hero, Mr. Secretary," Rudman said.

The praise is deserved. Lt. Col. Oliver North and former National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter took the position that it was necessary to withhold information from Congress, the secretary of state and perhaps even the president to carry out their mission.

That position, however, conflicts with the U.S. Constitution as Secretary of State Shultz so well pointed out. When the secretary of state is denied information about what is going on in foreign policy the nation is indeed in a sorry, uninformed state.

Worth Watching

The United States inflation rate continued to rise during June as consumer prices showed a 0.4 percent gain and reflect a 5.4 percent increase for the first half of 1987.

It capped the steepest six-month inflation rate in five years, according to the Labor Department which saw the price index increase paced by higher energy and food costs.

There was a note of optimism at the White House where a presidential spokesman took a calm view, assuring June's figures indicate a gradual return to the 4 percent pace during the first three years of the current economic expansion.

Outgoing Federal Reserve Board Chairman, Paul Volcker, as if anticipating the findings, implied a wait-and-see attitude was in order.

The consumer inflation data was below the six-month average but still underlined higher inflation levels that have been present all this year.

Another Labor Department report noted Americans' average weekly earnings, after adjusting for inflation, fell 0.4 percent in June. The decline erased much of the 0.6 percent rise the previous month and left earnings 0.9 percent lower than they had been a year ago.

The comparison of the impact in June's inflation on consumer prices is expected to trigger tough wage negotiations... "the next battleground on inflation".

Last year's inflation pace was a minuscule 1.1 percent.

Retiring FRB Chairman Volcker, whose money-management policies have been widely credited with helping to tame inflation from the double-digit levels at the beginning of the decade, says stabilizing the dollar helped ease some of the central bank's concerns about renewed inflation. He told the House Banking Committee that the Fed planned no major inflation-fighting monetary policy changes at the present.

He did caution the inflationary process can develop a momentum of its own, "and much depends on whether there is confidence that an environment exists where you don't have to worry ... but we're a long way from that point."

It is something the White House should closely watch.

To the editor:

This is a response to John G. Clark Jr.'s letter of July 22 concerning our state's deliberation to execute a retarded man named Leon Brown who allegedly committed murder when he was 15. I question his example of comparing Brown's alleged act of murder to an act of vandalism in England in the 1800's. Murder and vandalism are not even closely related in my mind; no matter who did it, at what age or level of intelligence.

Mr. Clark's reasoning that "Wise ones will tell us his (Brown's) execution would deter others from murdering." is an old, stale and naive line we've heard for years. It doesn't take much intelligence to determine that Brown's execution would deter Brown from murdering again!

I don't know the fact of this particular case; therefore, I won't make nor pass judgment. However, A) If Brown's act was a deliberate and premeditated killing, and B) if he knew right from wrong, then capital punishment should be a matter for a jury to decide. Teenagers that know right from wrong should not have blanket immunity from the law. If Mr. Clark wants to discover a real statistical issue, I suggest he investigate the number of wealthy people facing the death penalty versus poor people or black versus white.

Let Mr. Clark take Leon Brown into his own home and be responsible for Brown's acts of violence. Many taxpayers of North Carolina are tired of paying for criminals and their questionable rehabilitation. Mr. Clark is not just attacking our Senators, he is forgetting the victims. I challenge him to imagine Leon Brown's murdering his wife, children or other loved ones. Would Mr. Clark then be so lenient in his judgment? I think Mr. Clark "needs a rest," not our Senators!

To the editor:

All citizens interested in preserving the honesty of public officials and the integrity of the workings of government should applaud the efforts of Rep. Walter B. Jones Jr. in sponsoring and working for passage of "An Act to Prohibit the Misuse of Confidential Information by Public Officers and Employees." This bill was ratified by the General Assembly on July 14, 1987.

The editorial which appeared in The Daily Reflector on June 2, 1987, supporting passage of this legislation summarized the need for passage of this bill. You said, "Certainly, using information privileged by office to profit financially or benefit personally is unethical and should be illegal ... Public officials and employees have a responsibility to ensure that the government operates in the best interest of the people — not the pocketbooks of the legislators."

Hopefully, this legislation will serve as a deterrent to those few public officials who are tempted by greed, all at the expense of our tax dollars and the moral standards of our society.

Societal Trends, Not Rock, Affect Youth

WASHINGTON — You may or may not know that the Parents Music Resource Center (PMRC), which counts among its leaders Tipper Gore, wife of Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.), continues to press for warning labels and other safeguards on "vulgar" rock music.

After a wave of publicity in 1986, PMRC's efforts have lately received scant attention outside the teen and music press. Mrs. Gore has also published a book, "Raising P.G. Kids in an X-Rated Society," but despite ads in prominent political journals it has made little splash.

The media focus seems for now, at least, to have moved on. A recent "Nightline" program highlighted the gruesome and often explicit videocassettes which can be available to kids from rental stores. Gross videos, which provide startling television footage, seem to have greater potential to remain controversial.

But don't count PMRC out. Ms. Gore & Co.'s dedication and connections, as well as Sen. Gore's newfound publicity, may combine to revive the rock label issue in the coming months. There have in fact already been rumblings that PMRC's persistence could hurt candidate Gore's fund-raising among all the important New York City fateats.

It's worth considering, then, the PMRC drive in context. The right of parents to monitor their kids' activities is obvious. But do rock albums merit such suspicion? And what might the renewed concern over teen culture say about the relations between parents and children?

I found Douglass Miller's book "The Fifties" — and particularly the chapter on rock music entitled "More Than Music" — valuable in its perspective.

Miller's thesis is that it was through the music that "adolescents came to recognize themselves as unique, set apart, different."

Before the raw new music, young people had only the post-war wealth of goods and leisure to bind them. "But these things, the social practices and consumer riches," Miller writes, "were not enough. A more profound shock of recognition was needed to catalyze the separation into something new."

Through the early 1950s, parents of today may be shocked to recall, adults and kids shared basically the same pop music. Rosemary Clooney, Frankie Laine and other "Hit Parade" performers were heard by all ages within the white middle class. Southern blues and gospel, meanwhile, bound the black community and its migration to the urban north.

The middle and late 1950s turned the tide. Impresarios like Alan Freed packaged black rhythm and blues and driving white country blues groups like Bill Haley and the Comets for a growing mass audience, almost exclusively adolescents.

Parents, of course, distrusted the stuff immediately. In addition to the obvious racial overtones, rock and roll by mid-decade acquired a pumping sexuality, in the person of Elvis Presley. "He Can't Be — But He is," shouted the usually upbeat Look magazine. "Presley is Mostly Nightmare," wrote Look, on behalf of many parents.

Today, many of the parents of the kids who listen to raunchy bands like Poison, Anthrax, and Twisted Sister grew up during rock's formative years. The lack of noticeable ill effects on the older generation should tell us something.

Indeed, Miller concludes his chapter by noting that by 1960 rock had taken its place among many other components of the youth culture. "Even at its most furious the music had been unable to counter the life-programming most kids recognized as their future."

Youth culture began to look considerably more threatening in the 1960s. But never, in fact, has mere music exercised the rebellious power parents continually claim for it.

But the effect of other trends and changes in the society — such as the pill, rising prosperity, and racial integration — certainly outweighed the inspiration provided by rock albums on the radio.

Strength For Today

The pine beetle attacks and kills thousands of trees in the South every year. The only way to end beetle infestation is to cut down the trees as quickly as possible and burn them or cut the trunks in sections and send these off to the paper pulp-milling mills.

The necessity for prompt and forthright action teaches quite a lesson on the way we should handle all evils. Compromise should be a key word in all human relationships as long as principle is not involved. But where principle is involved, compromise is malignant.

Jesus expressed the idea by saying that if a hand offend us, we must cut it off. No sacrifice or pain is to be considered when we are dealing with evil in our lives. Disaster is too dreadful for us to think of doing otherwise.

Silent Disagreement Makes Shultz An Imperfect Hero

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George Shultz is wearing the newest mantle of national hero with a rectitude only partly deserved because his actual role in the Iran-contra affair did not match his masterful testimony last week.

That Shultz was badly used by Reagan administration colleagues who backed the abominable hostage-bribery scheme is clear. Even Rep. Henry Hyde, that sterling Republican conservative who serves on the Iran-contra panel, excused Shultz's witness-stand revelations about Oval Office chaos. "He cannot defend a policy he correctly and for so long opposed," Hyde told us.

But Shultz's case that he did what he could to derail arms-for-hostages and save President Reagan falls short, measured against the public record. It also ignores that the inner soul of Reagan's own hostage policy was the identical twin of the manipulative spymaster William J. Casey's soul. Casey, not Shultz, embodied Reagan's convictions, from arms for Iran to aid for the contras. Shultz never struggled with the ferocity needed to overcome this Reagan-Casey union.

Dispute with his colleagues was nothing new for Shultz. He had spent five years fighting rear-guard actions against Casey and other Reagan soulmates: former U.N. ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger (who was on Shultz's side against the Iran arms deal), Adm. John Poindexter, Lt. Col. Oliver North and others. With such experience, Shultz needed no seeing-eye dog to lead to salvation. The clear way was not to "try to resign," as he says he did three times over other issues, but to resign in fact.

If the secretary had privately submitted his resignation after receiving a secret June 1986 memo from a trusted aide warning him of "disastrous consequences" from Iran-arms, the president might well have changed his policy. Certainly it was not beyond change, as events since November prove.

Shultz testified that prior to last November, when the scandal broke, not a single official in the U.S. government informed him that arms were being traded for hostages. He was challenged by nobody on the congressional investigating panel. Yet one of Shultz's most trusted advisers, Amb. Robert Oakley, more than six months earlier sent him that ominous warning. If Shultz refused to read it, his claim to have known nothing rests on deliberate intent to learn nothing.

That can be called a "see-no-evil" reaction to unwise foreign policies thrust on the president over his chief diplomat's opposition. It is scorned here both by traditional diplomats and committed Reaganites.

It is particularly scorned in the Defense Department, where Weinberger was just as much opposed as Shultz to the Iran arms sale. Reagan loyalists there seethed last week watching Shultz hang out dirty Oval Office linen. In the White House, the president, watching Shultz's testimony, "did not react" as he had to Ollie North, one administration insider told us; that was an oblique suggestion of presidential displeasure.

Weinberger's testimony this week will serve as the flip side to Shultz's performance. It will not be susceptible to the charge of "Reagan bashing" that one high-level former administration official used privately against Shultz after his first day's testimony last week.

Shultz's backers, including all Democrats and many Republicans on the select committees, resent and dispute such characterizations of the secretary.

But a shadow has been cast by Shultz's dissection of presidential error and caustic criticism of Casey and other comrades-in-arms. When he could not beat those colleagues, he seemed to join them with discreet, on-the-job silence. That shadow makes George Shultz an imperfect hero.

Reagan's Royal Obsession

The mosaic of testimony emerging from the Iran-Contra hearings gives a picture of President Reagan quite different from the conventional Washington dinner-party view or the critical judgment of the Tower commission. Not exactly the remote chairman of the board who was always taken by surprise at what his subordinates did, not merely a man who took pride in not getting involved in the morass of details as Jimmy Carter did, Rear Adm. John M. Poindexter's Ronald Reagan shapes up as a man obsessed with overthrowing the government in Nicaragua.

"Can't we do something unilaterally?" he asks after Congress passes the Boland Amendment. The question, which Poindexter claims to have taken as his commission to use the profits from trading arms for hostages to subsidize secret attacks on Nicaragua, is in the great tradition of autocratic rulers. In olden days kings merely had to make their wishes known for some loyal servant to turn royal passion into policy. Henry II of England, for example, just had to ask, "Who will free me from this turbulent priest?" and Thomas a Becket was promptly martyred in the cathedral.

The history of royal obsessives weighed heavily on the Founding Fathers. After all, they had just got through dealing with one. "George, be King," the courtiers told the neurotic youth, and George III tried so hard that he lost America for the Empire. He had some help, to be sure, but, as Barbara Tuchman recounts it, royal passion was responsible for that particular march of folly. In more recent times the royal passion of a commoner brought disaster to Britain. "I want Nasser destroyed, can't you understand?" Prime Minister Anthony Eden screamed at his old friend at the Foreign Office, Anthony Nutting, who was advising against the disastrous 1956 invasion of Egypt, which marked the end of British power in the Middle East.

It was the arbitrary nature of kingly power that worried men like Thomas Jefferson and James Madison, for not only does arbitrary power threaten liberties, it is very likely to be exercised foolishly. Those who, like Benjamin Franklin, came to the Constitutional Convention as experienced diplomats might have anticipated what Alexis de Tocqueville observed many years later: Democracy and diplomacy make a bad fit, because the qualities needed for successful management of foreign affairs — secrecy, consistency, agility and the ability to make quick decisions — are more likely "to belong to a single man."

The impatience with the slowness of democracy and the fickleness of the public mood has been expressed by Americans long before Oliver L. North. But the Constitution was based on the collective judgment of 55 remarkable men that the risks of inaction and confusion that are inherent in the democratic process are significantly less than the dangers of royal obsession. If we don't think so now, we should change the Constitution. Until we do change it, we should live under its rules.

This year particularly we are treating the Constitution as an icon without really appreciating what it is saying to us. The president was directed to share power with the Senate because of the fear, expressed even by such a skeptic of democracy as Alexander Hamilton, that a single man might "betray the interests of the state." He was worried that a president might be bribed by a foreign power to sell out the country if the Senate didn't share in the treaty power. A greater danger is that he might damage the interests of the nation by exercising bad judgment on his own. An important function of checks and balances is to provide a reality check on the judgment of one fallible human being.

Reagan's royal obsession with Nicaragua has seriously damaged the United States. He has asserted a towering American interest in a desperately poor country of 2.9 million people without making the case that it represents a national-security threat to the United States. He has offered no credible strategy for accomplishing his objectives, for, as harassed as the Sandinistas are, the Contras can neither win nor govern. The president's response to the disasters that his policies have already wrought is to defend the deception of Congress and to redouble his efforts.

If the president is committed to "victory," it will require American military intervention. To avoid that, Congress must reassert its role as a check on presidential passion.

Sanctions Do Work

In the wake of the rightward tilt in last month's whites-only elections in South Africa, some people are declaring that economic sanctions are a failure — that they've accomplished little more than hardening the government's determination to keep apartheid in force.

The growing popularity of this assessment (which I believe is wrong) is encouraged by certain attitudes that must be fully transcended if the United States is to have an effective policy toward southern Africa.

First, and most obvious, is the tendency toward impatience in foreign-policy matters. It would be astonishing indeed if the immediate reaction of the South African government — or any other — to increased internal and external pressure were anything other than defensiveness. Second, and more subtle, is the ambivalence that arises at those exceptional moments when Americans are asked to support, in the national interest, sanctions against a country not considered as falling within the Soviet orbit. Finally, and most disturbing, given our own tragic history of racial conflict and paternalism, is the appearance at times of a racial double standard in American foreign policy.

Together, in varying proportions, these attitudes help explain why there can be early and vocal skepticism of sanctions against South Africa with no comparable skepticism voiced about the immediate effects of sanctions against, say, Libya or Poland.

Impatience, unconscious racial attitudes and reflexive anti-communism make it possible for there to be expressions of deep concern that sanctions against Pretoria "will hurt the black majority we seek to help" (disregarding the pro-sanctions sentiments of popular black political organizations and unions) when there are no similar cries of conscience about the fate of Polish or Libyan workers. So, too, they help explain why blacks leading an armed struggle against apartheid can be labeled "terrorists" while other insurgents, such as those in Nicaragua and Afghanistan, are hailed as "freedom fighters" deserving of U.S. moral and material support.

By passing the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986, Congress recognized, on a bipartisan basis, that our traditional foreign policy toward South Africa compromised not only our values but our political and strategic interests as well. It acknowledged that apartheid harms America's long-term relationship with all of Africa, and that continued escalation of violence threatens to degenerate into a blood bath and provoke a superpower conflict. By adopting economic sanctions, Congress put into place a medium- to long-range strategy designed to worsen the economic burden that a regime confronting formidable internal opposition must already bear, to send a signal that the regime will continue to be denied economic and diplomatic support internationally, and to encourage legitimate opposition forces.

Beneath their bravado, South African whites are gradually becoming concerned about the accumulating costs of internal resistance and external sanctions. South African economic analysts admit that, even under the most optimistic assumptions, per-capita economic growth will stagnate unless sanctions are lifted. In November, the economic adviser to the South African Reserve Bank pointedly noted that "the upswing in the economy is being inhibited by the effect of trade, and more especially, capital sanctions."

Of greater long-term significance than the "law and order" appeals featured in the last election are recent South African opinion polls, which demonstrate that three times as many whites prefer to accelerate the pace of "reform" as to slow it down. The white Dutch Reformed Church has renounced its previous support for apartheid; the Broederbond has circulated a working document implying that any new constitution would have to be acceptable to the African National Congress; more than 300 faculty members at Stellenbosch University (the intellectual citadel of Afrikanerdom) have called on the government to scrap all remaining discriminatory legislation and make a commitment to share power with blacks; and three credible independent candidates for parliament have shown that there is a new, reformist Afrikaner opposition that approaches 25 percent of the Afrikaner vote in key urban and white-collar districts.

Other signs of declining white morale, reminiscent of those that appeared gradually in Rhodesia, include rising emigration (13,711 whites left in 1986, a 67 percent increase over 1983), rampant draft evasion (more than 25 percent defied the 1985 call-up, with the government subsequently refusing to publish updated statistics), and swelling suicide figures (453 members of the South African Defense Forces attempted suicide in 1986, a 500 percent increase over the previous year).

Weakening sanctions in the face of South African intransigence will only encourage the Afrikaner minority in its fantasy that it can hold onto monopoly power indefinitely, free of mounting economic costs or deepening international isolation.

Worse still, to reinforce such delusions is to invite greater repression and delay the onset of negotiations.

Instead, what is urgently needed is a steady policy aimed at tightening those sanctions already in place, while substantially increasing diplomatic and economic pressure on the South African government to abandon apartheid, and to negotiate — with the black majority — a new and genuinely democratic political order.

Where Was Post?

WASHINGTON — Hard-charging, fire-breathing superpatriots and scorned feminists who launch Exocet missiles with their vocal cords, making Ollie North look like a wimpy pacifist, dominated the week.

The women were up in arms; the cause was just. No alibis. The circuits in The Washington Post newsroom just got overloaded. The cause: excessive heat from Capitol Hill. That and the street temperature were nothing compared with the voltage generated by outraged members of NOW.

The Post had kissed off NOW's annual convention in Philadelphia last week with a few paragraphs. The Post, preoccupied with the Hill hearings, blew it. Those things happen. The editor responsible should consider himself lucky to be among the walking wounded; he vowed to make amends.

It wasn't the only story muffed last week, but nobody complained about the other one — a memorial service for Dr. Arthur Burns, a man who played a major role in Washington for at least a generation. He died last month.

Two ex-presidents and the secretary of state, as well as some senators, paid tribute. President Reagan sent a message. President Ford was there. President Nixon spoke warmly and with no notes. Almost everybody who is anybody in the capital was there, except for a reporter from The Post, where the memorable event was dismissed with a fleeting paragraph.

It was that kind of week. The article by Pat Buchanan in last Sunday's Outlook section, calling for a presidential pardon for Oliver North and John Poindexter, produced an unseemly effusion of cheers for The Post. The second wave of callers soon brought things back into perspective, when they discovered Mr. Buchanan wasn't the only writer in Outlook that Sunday.

CONCENTRATION — Former President Jimmy Carter marks a board to be cut as he works with the Habitat for Humanity project Monday in Charlotte. The volunteers plans to build 14 homes in five days. (AP Laserphoto)

Jimmy Carter Leads Volunteers In Building Homes In Charlotte

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer
CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Building 14 homes in five days might be enough for most people, but former President Jimmy Carter has bigger plans in mind for Charlotte.

"By the end of the week there will be 14 new homes in Charlotte," Carter said Monday. "A lot more need to be built of course. We hope to construct 15 more each year until there are no more homeless families in this city."

Carter was one of hundreds of volunteers who endured temperatures in the upper 90s as they worked at Habitat for Humanity's construction sites in Charlotte.

"We built six new homes last year in Chicago. But we only finished one of them," Carter said during a break in the work. "To finish 14 new homes in a week is something only Charlotte could pull off."

The project is part of the non-profit organization's house-raising blitz. By Friday afternoon, Habitat affiliates in several U.S. cities and foreign countries plan to construct more than 200 new homes for the working poor.

Darlene Darby will live in the house that Carter was working on with her husband, Bobby, and their three young children.

"It means a lot to me," she said. "My mother always told me and my sister to try to be a homeowner."

Mrs. Darby held a ladder as Carter secured rafters to the roof.

"I went in there trying to help and everyone was zooming by me," she said. "I decided to let them ask me when they needed help."

Mrs. Darby said she became aware of the housing offer when she drove by the construction site at a former baseball diamond and noticed the signs.

"I told my husband, 'I'm going to give them a call,'" she said. "I went in to a church right down the street and filled out an application. They asked us for some information and they came by to see our apartment."

She said she couldn't believe she would be a homeowner by Friday night.

"The first thing I'm going to do is fix up my den," she said. "I've never had a den before."

Hundreds of volunteers from 28 states and Canada arrived Sunday in Charlotte to work on what Habitat officials have called their greatest challenge to date. The 14 new homes are the most ever attempted in one week by the organization out of Americus, Ga.

Rosalynn Carter was expected to join her husband at the site later, Carter said. Habitat officials said she was forced to stay behind in Atlanta when their daughter, Amy, became ill.

The Carters have previously worked on Habitat construction projects in New York and Chicago.

"Rosalynn and I really enjoy it," he said. "Each former president has a different set of priorities. This happens to be one of ours."

"We've lived a very fruitful life but this is the most challenging thing we've ever done," said Carter, who wore blue jeans and a carpenter's apron. "It's one of the most interesting and exhilarating things in our lives."

Carter and 19 other volunteers began working on House No. 3 at 7:30 a.m. after a prayer. By noon, most of the 14 homes had walls and at least part of a roof.

As the day wore on, the thermometer crept up into the mid 90s. Carter's shirt was drenched in sweat by 8:30 a.m., but he showed no sign of quitting.

"You have to remember I'm from southern Georgia," he said. "This is fishing weather."

Entertainer Bob Hope was expected to arrive today at the site, where he will pound nails with former Miss America Susan Aikin before staging a benefit concert at the Charlotte Coliseum tonight.

Habitat receives no government support for its construction projects. The people who live in the homes help pay for them and are expected to put in hundreds of hours working on their own home and their neighbors' homes.

The 14 families were selected from a list of applicants by a committee of the local Habitat for Humanity affiliate, which has already built 16 homes in the Optimist Park area of the city.

Volunteers for the project came from as far away as Winnipeg, Canada.

Jerry Gates, 50, a public school teacher from nearby Gastonia, N.C., helped Carter erect walls Monday morning. He said Carter was an accomplished carpenter.

"He's very cooperative," Gates said. "He lets you make the decisions."

Dr. Horace Thomas, a retired physician from Columbia, Mo., was working on his first Habitat project.

"I've been contributing money to them for years and I decided to work on one to see where it goes," he said as he cut pieces of wood with Joseph Wilson of Charlotte.

"I love this kind of thing, to help one another," said Wilson, a retired engineer. "If you could see the smiles on the faces on the homeowners — they're amazed. It's like the old barn-raising days."

Martha Sanburg's job was to collect tin cans so they could be recycled. After spotting about a dozen empty soft drink cans in a trash dumpster, she solicited the help of a 10-year-old boy.

"He's just the right size," said Mrs. Sanburg, who also lives in Charlotte.

Tobacco Opponents Want Total Ban On Advertising

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A crusade by professional athletes and appeals in memory of a high school football coach who died of lung cancer mark the opening of a new congressional effort to ban all tobacco product advertising.

Scott Wedman of the Boston Celtics basketball team told a House panel Monday that he and other members of a 7-month-old organization called "Athletes Against Tobacco" want to "send a strong message to our nation's youth that tobacco use and sports do not mix."

Wedman and others said the tobacco industry sends exactly the opposite message in its ads and routinely violates its own voluntary advertising code. Among other things, the code prohibits depictions of smokers engaged in athletic activities and ads that suggest smoking is "essential to social prominence, distinction, success or sexual attraction."

"Not only does the tobacco industry go against its own advertising code, it has also found a way to circumvent federal regulations prohibiting advertising on television," said Wayne Rollins of the Atlanta Hawks basketball team.

Rollins said tobacco companies have placed large advertisements behind goal posts and baskets in sports stadiums across the country. The ads are viewed by thousands at the events and millions who watch on television.

The two athletes testified before the House Energy and Commerce health subcommittee chaired by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., which is conducting hearings for the second straight year on a bill to turn the current television advertising ban into a blanket prohibition. The bill was reintroduced this year by Reps. Mike Synar, D-Okla., and Bob Whittaker, R-Kan.

Lined up in favor of the total ban are numerous health and medical groups along with Waxman, who called the advertising code "a public relations sham" and tobacco use a major cause of unnecessary health expenditures and lost productivity that the government should discourage.

Opponents of the proposal include the Tobacco Institute, the American Bar Association, the American Civil Liberties Union, the American Newspaper Publishers Association and various advertising associations.

They claim a ban would have no effect on consumption of tobacco products among the young, would threaten freedom of speech and could lead to attempts to curb advertising of other controversial products such as contraceptives.

Barry Lynn, legislative counsel to the ACLU, ridiculed criticism that singles out tobacco ads. "No advertising is designed to convince viewers that use of a product will make them unattractive and miserable," he said.

Of ads that depict fishermen or college-age surfers smoking, Lynn said, "All one has to do is observe any Virginia stream on a Saturday when fishing season opens or go to Fort Lauderdale on spring break to observe that these ads, far from being deceptive, in fact reflect what is actually done."

Charles Whitley, a consultant for the Tobacco Institute, said a ban would represent "a giant step toward censorship" and a blow to the thousands of people who earn their living from the tobacco industry. He called the Synar-Whittaker legislation useless and "purely punitive."

IN THE STATE

Speed Limit

RALEIGH (AP) — The Department of Transportation announced Monday that the speed limit on some sections of North Carolina's Interstate highway system will be raised where an extensive study has indicated free-flowing traffic and a lower risk of accidents.

The increase will not be effective until the 65 mph signs are in place, a step the department expects to begin in early August.

The increase is in accordance with legislation passed earlier in the year by Congress and the N.C. General Assembly. That federal and state legislation gave the state DOT the authority to raise the speed limit on sections of rural interstate that meet specified guidelines.

It will be announced Friday which sections of state highway will be affected by the department's decision, officials said.

Eyedrop Warning

RALEIGH (AP) — George's Aloe Eyes eyedrops have been contaminated with mold and bacteria and should not be used, the state Department of Agriculture's Food and Drug Administration announced Monday.

Warren Laboratories of Stafford, Texas, is recalling about 23,000 bottles of eyedrops that were distributed to 700 health food stores nationwide, officials said.

The drops have a potential for causing serious infection, particularly in already-damaged eyes, and should be returned to the place of purchase, the department said.

Physicians' Suits

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina physicians that Medical Mutual Insurance Co. insures are being sued for a record $650 million, not counting a recently filed $5 billion claim, the company said Monday.

"Our insured physicians are practicing with a half billion dollar cloud over their heads," said Dr. James E. Davis, Medical Mutual's president and chairman of the board. "With more than eight out of every 10 claims and suits dismissed without payment or dropped, it makes you wonder why they were ever brought in the first place."

The record lawsuits are against 205 physicians and average $3.2 million each, not counting the $5 billion claim, Davis said. Another 832 claims and 268 lawsuits have been filed, but no dollar value has been determined on those suits.

Verdict

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — Guilty verdicts were returned Monday against a 19-year-old Marine accused of trying to avoid duty by having a friend shoot him.

Pfc. Michael McCrindle was reduced in rank to private and sentenced to 27 months confinement, forfeiture of all pay and allowance, and a bad-conduct discharge.

He was found guilty of conspiracy to commit aggravated assault and malingering and solicitation to commit aggravated assault. An eight-officer general court-martial panel, which deliberated for 1½ hours, also found McCrindle guilty of a charge of malingering.

Legislature Ready To Tackle Budget

RALEIGH (AP) — A multibillion-dollar state budget will begin moving toward enactment this week, with money to finance continued implementation of the Basic Education Program and a 5 percent pay raise for state employees and teachers.

"This process should be moving very well" by the end of the week, when legislative leaders hope an omnibus spending bill will have reached the House floor, Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Aaron Plyler said Monday.

The five appropriations subcommittees were to begin reviewing today a $100 million package of new expenditures. Finishing touches were applied to the package over the weekend in meetings of legislative leaders.

They had predicted that the "expansion budget" would total about $84.5 million. Plyler attributed the higher figure to unspent money from the recently ended 1986-87 fiscal year.

Meanwhile, the leadership will prepare two other budget bills for the Joint Appropriations Committee: one allocating $210 million to $230 million for capital improvements and another containing "special provisions" that will tell the state bureaucracy how to implement the budget.

Telling Lies Can Lead To Trouble

CARSON, Calif. (AP) — To a greater or lesser degree, everyone lies. Most of the lies we tell are small ones, on the level of "I'm feeling fine, thanks," an expert says.

But, for some people, lying becomes a way of life. Lying at high levels of business and government is often self-destructive, and, once revealed, can have serious consequences, says Dr. Beverly Palmer, a professor of psychology at California State University here.

Lying ranges from complimenting a friend's new — but ugly — dress to political scandals, such as the recent Iran-contra arms sale controversy, Palmer says.

Sometimes liars — especially pathological ones — can be convincing but their deceptions can be detected. Palmer says there are ways to tell when someone is lying:

— Absence of typical non-verbal gestures during speech. For example, someone who uses a lot of spontaneous gestures will normally keep his hands still or behind his back when lying.

— A discrepancy between the face and other parts of the body. "If you're trying to hide anger and you're being Mr. Nice-Guy, the anger is exposed because you may have a calm look but your fists are clenched."

— A discrepancy in the total facial expression, such as smiling through tightly closed lips. "Or the liar has a wide smile plastered on his face while he is looking away from you," Palmer says.

"You don't really know all the specific clues. You may just have a feeling that something isn't quite right," she says. "What isn't quite right is that the verbal message doesn't quite match the non-verbal message."

Lying falls into two categories. The first, Palmer says, is falsifying information, such as inventing excuses: "Uh, I forget." "It's in the mail." "Oh, it's only my dentist's office on the phone, honey."

Or, she says, an adult may answer a child's question of "Why do I have to do that?" with the answer, "Because it builds character," rather than telling the child the truth, which is that the parent doesn't want to do it.

The second kind of lying is known as concealment.

"Much of what we try to conceal are our real emotions, some flaw or information," Palmer says.

An example of concealment is smiling when you are actually feeling sad or angry, she says.

"There is a saying, 'True honesty in human relations means saying what you mean and meaning what you say,'" she says. "With the two types of lying, the concealment is not saying what you mean and the falsification is not meaning what you say," Palmer says.

Why do people lie? Palmer says lying is predominantly a defense mechanism.

"We lie when we feel insecure, scared or we're trying to escape the consequences of our actions," she says.

"We say it's a defense to protect ourselves or someone else. But in reality we're protecting ourselves from the other person's angry or hurt feelings."

Lying can be the most destructive force relationships can encounter because it undermines trust. Some people lie as an expression of mistrust, Palmer says.

But, she adds, untruths do more than just harm relationships. Individuals can wind up believing their own falsifications, especially those involving concealment.

"We can spend so much time concealing and falsifying that we can't remember the truth anymore ourselves," she says.

She says pathological liars have no control over their devious behavior. "They're not deciding one time to lie and another time not to lie. It's all part of their fundamental personality."

Such compulsive liars are driven by a combination of inherent manipulateness and a lack of empathy for the emotions of others. Having no feelings for anyone allows them to use people as objects in a controlling way, Palmer says.

"They're lying for the same reasons other people do, they're scared and anxious. But they're unable to be in a relationship in any way other than to be manipulative and deceitful," she explains.

Double Ring Vows Said On July 19

GRIMESLAND — The wedding ceremony of Vickie Jones and Kenneth Wayne Garrish took place July 19 at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold E. Jones of Route 2, Grimesland.

The bridegroom is the son of Dorothy Garrish of Ocracoke and the late James Norman Garrish.

The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Ralph Brown at 5 p.m.

Vivian Jones of Grimesland was honor attendant for her daughter. The best man was Lee Garrish of Winterville, brother of the bridegroom.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a street length dress of ivory silk accented with ivory lace. She wore a halo of baby's breath in her hair and carried a cascade bouquet of pink and yellow sweetheart roses, pink and white carnations, baby's breath and greenery.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. Punch was poured by Evelyn Wilson of Grimesland and cake was cut by Tina Garrish of Winterville, niece of the bridegroom.

The couple is living in Greenville after a wedding trip to unannounced points.

The bride is employed by TRW and the bridegroom is employed by the East Carolina University campus police.

"Deception begets deception and honesty begets honesty, and honesty is necessary for trust. And that's no lie."

Couple Observes 40th Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Tharp

Mr. and Mrs. Bryce W. Tharp of Greenville celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary Sunday.

They were honored at a formal family dinner Saturday night at the Sheraton- Greenville given by their daughters and families, Pamela Stockert of Greensboro and children, Michelle and Brian, Mr. and Mrs. Scott Shanley of Manteo and daughter, Carolyn.

Floating balloons and yellow mums decorated the dinner table area. Special music and an anniversary cake were provided for the honorees. Bridal colors of white and pink, used in the wedding 40 years ago, were reflected in the flowers and cake.

Mrs. Tharp was remembered with a orchid.

Bored Children Need Projects

Brace yourself, parents. I'm going to use the "B" word. Steady yourself now. Here it comes. "Mom, I'm 'BORED.' There's nothing to do."

OK, you can open your eyes now. The only reason I bring it up is that the American Federation of Teachers has taken pity on parents this summer and compiled some suggestions on how to keep youngsters busy. Not only do they have a toll-free "Learning Line" (1-800-242-5465), they have a calendar of projects to pursue.

One suggestion is for a bored child to rub a little petroleum jelly over pieces of cardboard covered with wax paper and set them out in your house. After a couple of days, gather them and examine any little animals that have been snared. (On the other hand, why don't we just admit the house is "bugged" and live in a trailer next to the house?)

Another teaser is to play "Blind-man's Lunch" by eating a meal blindfolded and trying to identify what one is eating. (That seems pretty risky at our house. If kids want that kind of adventure, they'd play with steak knives.)

My favorite is writing something in invisible ink by using a toothpick as a pen and lemon juice as ink. When the juice dries, the message will disappear. (Try this with Mama's phone messages and they will never see daylight again.)

I know what the teachers are trying to do. They are trying to challenge little minds so that children are doing something that will contribute to their learning and development. It's a great idea. I'm for anything that makes them think. It beats reaping a harvest of couch potatoes.

At Wits End

As a mother, I'm sure they wouldn't mind if I added a few diversions of my own.

Have a fun time with a tape recorder. Simply record sounds around the house: water dripping in shower, dog whining at door, air conditioner groaning to cool the outdoors, gym shoes in dryer, buzz of phone left off the hook ... and see how many Mommy and Daddy can identify without "losing it."

Get a hair dryer, set it on high and aim it at the milk and butter and see how long it takes to deteriorate to the point it is in when Mother arrives home. See how you can stop this process by putting it in the refrigerator. For other reference books, visit your library and read the papers on bacteriology by Louis Pasteur.

Or how about making a detailed map of the bedroom, designating where the bed is buried, closet and desk are located, and general area that obscures glasses, plates and silverware brought from kitchen and never returned. A wonderful gift for Mom.

If all this doesn't bring a child up to the first days of school, have him go out and watch the garden hose which has not been turned off burst from the water pressure. So they did it last year! Do it again!

Age Doesn't Count At Weddings

DEAR ABBY: My friend's daughter was married last week in a beautiful wedding in a synagogue. I was greatly surprised — yes, shocked — to see the bride's great-aunt walking down the aisle as the matron of honor! The fact that the bride's mother is very fond of her elderly aunt is totally irrelevant in my opinion.

I think the bridal party should consist of young adults, full of life, not someone like this little old 75-year-old lady. She looked so out of place. I just couldn't believe my eyes! What could that bride have been thinking when she had so many young friends and relatives to choose from? I hope this is not a new trend.

What is your opinion? — NEW YORK POST READER

DEAR READER: If you expected

Dear Abby

support for your opinion, you rattled the wrong cage. Weddings are celebrations of love, and when it comes to love, age is irrelevant. I think choosing a 75-year-old matron of honor is truly wonderful.

DEAR ABBY: Bravo to you for saying that members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons) are Christians. However, I will be very much surprised if you do not receive hundreds of letters telling you that you are wrong!

The experience of "L.D.S. in Ashland," who was told by a bus driver that she was not a Christian, was not that unusual. I am amazed at the number of people who have been told by their ministers and pastors that Mormons are not Christians. I am even more amazed when those misinformed people declare to those of us who are members of the L.D.S. church what we do and do not believe about Jesus Christ.

I count among my friends Protestants, Catholics, Jews, Baptists and evangelical Christians. I cannot imagine my ever presuming to tell any of them what they believe.

I had many misconceptions of the Roman Catholic Church, but they were clarified for me by a good friend who is a member of that church. I hope that if anyone wants to know what someone of another faith believes, that he or she will ask a member of that faith. We may all learn something very valuable that way — tolerance, understanding and, more important, the truth. — ERMA JEAN HANSON, KENT, WASH.

DEAR ERMA JEAN: Your estimate of the number of letters I received telling me that I was "wrong" to say that Mormons were Christians was conservative — to say the least. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Please rush this into print before some Mormon dies believing that he is a Christian!

Although Joseph Smith (the founder of Mormonism) did say, "We believe in God and Jesus Christ," it is not the God and Jesus Christ Christians have believed in for 2,000 years. Let me explain: Mormons believe that God was once as we are now, with the body of flesh and bones — not a spirit God as the Bible teaches us. Mormons believe that if men obey the mandates of the Mormon Church, they can become gods themselves and rule over and populate other planets.

The Mormon Church used Christian terminology, but they have their own definitions of these terms.

For example, the Mormon Jesus had at least three wives and many children. The New Testament Jesus was neither married nor had children. Jesus, in Mormon theology, is the blood brother of Lucifer! Christianity has never professed such a notion.

Abby, the differences (between Christianity and Mormonism) are shocking and countless: The Mormon Church has an excellent reputation, one that carefully presents the positive aspects of this religion: good family values, no drinking, smoking, etc. The frightening part of this is that many of the members themselves do not know all the religion's beliefs. The religion has many levels of involvement. Only one deeply entrenched in the faith would know all the beliefs and secrets of the Mormon Church.

You owe it to your readers to acknowledge this. — A TRUE CHRISTIAN IN KANSAS

DEAR TRUE: I read your letter to two officials of the Mormon Church in Salt Lake City, and they acknowledged that much of what you say is true. However, Mormons have never been taught that Jesus had many wives and children.

Are Mormons Christians? Samuel W. Taylor, noted Mormon author, addressed that question this way in American Weekly in 1955: "Yes, indeed — but neither Protestant nor Catholic. Mormons believe that there was a breaking away of the other churches from true Christianity and that their religion is the restored Gospel."

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Boeing Sets Up Defensive Strategy To Fend Off Possible Takeover Bid

By GEORGE TIBBITS
Associated Press Writer
SEATTLE (AP) — Boeing Co., the nation's No. 1 maker of commercial aircraft, erected a "poison pill" defense against takeover after learning that corporate raider T. Boone Pickens wants a chunk of the aerospace giant.

"We believe that this plan protects the interest of our stockholders in the event that they and Boeing are confronted with coercive or unfair takeover tactics," Frank Shrontz, president and chief executive officer, said Monday.

Boeing, one of the biggest U.S. defense contractors, disclosed Monday that a group led by Pickens plans to acquire more than $15 million worth of Boeing common stock and may buy much more — up to 15 percent of the company.

A "poison pill" defense is designed to make a takeover prohibitively expensive. Boeing's plan, adopted by its directors, would give stockholders the right to buy up more shares in the event of a takeover attempt.

Preserving Boeing's assets from an acquisition fight for use on research and development, plant and equipment costs and other expenses from a number of new programs being launched "is of paramount importance," Boeing said.

Boeing has about 155.37 million common shares outstanding with a market value of about $7.24 billion. A 15 percent share would be worth nearly $1.09 billion.

Trading on the New York Stock Exchange had ended when Boeing made the announcement and also released a quarterly earnings report showing a sharp dip in profits. Boeing stock fell 75 cents to $46.625 on the New York exchange.

Officials at Pickens' Mesa Limited Partnership in Amarillo, Texas, did not return telephone calls.

As a target, Boeing would be a change for the 59-year-old Pickens.

Previously, his takeover bids have been aimed at oil companies, including Gulf Corp., Phillips Petroleum Co., Unocal Corp., and Cities Service Co. He failed to take over any, but made hundreds of millions of dollars when the companies either were bought out by other bidders or repurchased their own stock.

Thomas Lloyd-Butler, an analyst with Montgomery Securities in San Francisco, questioned how seriously Pickens might want Boeing.

He said a hostile takeover would require at least $12 billion, and because Boeing is the dominant force in a major U.S. industry, the government might intervene if a takeover move threatened to weaken the company seriously.

"One of the reasons we produce aircraft cheaper and faster than everyone else is the companies that do it are extremely strong financially," Lloyd-Butler said. "You could have a situation in which someone could come in and remove that flexibility, and it could be hell to pay in that industry."

Pickens may be making "a little investment here and may be trying to stir the waters a little bit," Lloyd-Butler said.

Harold Carr, Boeing vice president for public relations, said Boeing learned June 29 that Mesa had filed notice under antitrust law that it intended to acquire more than $15 million worth of Boeing stock.

Boeing believes that at the end of a 30-day waiting period under law, Mesa would be permitted to acquire up to 15 percent of Boeing's common stock, Shrontz said.

Last year, Boeing's board adopted bylaw changes to help prevent hostile takeovers. Carr said Monday's actions were permitted by those changes.

Under the "poison pill" defense, each holder of common stock will get the right to buy one one-hundredth of a share of newly-issued preferred stock priced at $150.

The right is exercisable if an attempt is made to buy a large block of Boeing stock.

Highway Shootings

cautious driving and a warning to belligerent drivers that they will be reported.

"I think it's great they're out here," said Barry Thomas, who pulled over and tied the ribbon on his truck's antenna.

In Sunday's slayings, witnesses said Avila, who was driving, and Barrera, a passer-by, were killed after an argument at a stop sign where Avila had parked his car and refused to move it, said Detective Jay St. John.

The driver in the car behind Avila's approached Avila and started slapping him, St. John said. Barrera saw the scuffle and threw a bottle at the second driver. The man walked back to his car, drew a gun and shot both men.

"It just seemed to be an argument, because this guy wouldn't move his car out of the way and spontaneously things got cooking," St. John said.

Also on Sunday, a driver suffered cuts from broken glass and his passenger suffered a powder burn in Santa Monica when another motorist fired at the two after exchanging heated words in heavy traffic, police said.

In Sunday's third episode, a man and woman were uninjured when three bullets fired from a pickup truck hit their car on the Long Beach Freeway, said Alhambra police Sgt. Jeff Powell.

On Saturday, a bullet fired from a car shattered a van window on the San Diego Freeway 25 miles southeast of Los Angeles.

The two earlier fatalities apparently involved confrontations over driving, authorities said.

Russell J. Pirrone, 17, was shot and killed Friday night 30 miles east of Los Angeles by a passenger in a pickup truck that apparently had to slow when Pirrone pulled onto the highway, police said. On June 20, 24-year-old Rich Lane Bynum was slain by a tailgater on the Santa Ana Freeway.

Albert Carroll Morgan, 32, pleaded innocent Monday to attempted murder, assault with a deadly weapon and firing a weapon into an occupied vehicle in the July 18 shooting of Nussbaum on the Newport-Costa Mesa Freeway.

A charge of attempted murder has also been filed against Lewis Meeks, 32, arrested after a shot was fired at a woman on the Hollywood Freeway on July 21.

Heat Wave Ends

Piraeus morgue said coffins were piling up because "there's no room inside."

"It's chaotic here. We've only got room for seven bodies in cold storage and we have another 12 waiting outside in the sun ... and the police stations calling us wanting to bring round more," said the assistant.

Elefsina, an industrial suburb 12 miles west of Athens, reported the heat wave's highest temperature Monday — 113 degrees — while the thermometer registered 109 degrees in central Athens, weather officials said.

Meteorologists in London forecast thunderstorms in Yugoslavia would move south and hit Greek beaches by midweek.

Although first-class hotels in Athens are air-conditioned, most homes and offices are not. Hospital officials said most of the heat wave deaths were recorded in the city's poorer suburbs west of Piraeus.

The heat wave hadn't frightened off foreign visitors, tourism officials in Greece said Monday.

"We haven't had any cancellations and the heat wave doesn't seem to have affected tourists, as the vast majority of them holiday on the islands, where temperatures have been much lower," said a spokesman for the National Tourist Organization, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

In central Athens, American and British tourists stayed cool by taking dips in the squares' fountains or by remaining in air-conditioned hotels.

One British tourist, Joanna Galloway, a 20-year-old nanny from London, bathed topless in the fountain in central Omonia Square.

fingers. You have to stay alert to get the job done," said Lightsey, who has been auctioning tobacco for 32 years.

State Rep. James Moore, D-West Green, himself a tobacco farmer, said he is concerned about illegal use of a weedkiller by some growers.

With all the health concerns about tobacco, it is important that growers produce a high-quality product that is free of chemical contaminants, he said. "We've got to have quality. We've got to be conscious of the health problem."

Later today, Irvin was scheduled to observe opening-day sales at markets in Hahira, Valdosta and Blackshear. He will visit markets in Vidalia, Claxton and Alma on Wednesday and heads for Moultrie and Nashville for more visits on Thursday.

Twins' Power Sparks Rally

By The Associated Press
In one action-packed inning the Minnesota Twins demonstrated why they are first in the American League West.

Seattle starter Mark Langston took a two-hitter and a 3-0 lead into the top of the ninth inning Monday night against the Twins at the Kingdome.

Greg Gagne led off with a single and Dan Gladden followed with a walk. Steve Lombardozzi then tied the game with his fourth home run of the season, a drive deep over the center-field fence.

Edwin Nunez replaced Langston and got Kirby Puckett to fly out. Gary Gaetti then gave the Twins a 4-3 victory when he hit his 20th home run of the season.

"He's (Nunez) a power pitcher, and came right at me," Gaetti said. "I was expecting a fastball and got just that."

Minnesota starter Frank Viola, 11-6, allowed six hits and struck out seven in eight innings before Jeff Reardon came on to get his 21st save.

"It's nice to get one of these once in a while," Viola said. "We battled, didn't give up, and got the win."

The Mariners didn't give up either. With two outs in the bottom of the ninth, catcher Dave Valle doubled and Luis Quinones followed with a single to center, but Puckett made a strong throw to nail Valle at the plate and end the game.

"When he hit it, Valle froze," Puckett said. "I came hard, and made a good throw right on a line to get Valle at home. I couldn't believe they sent him."

"I had no hesitation sending Valle on the play," Mariners third base coach Ozzie Virgil said. "The ball was hit hard, and Puckett needed a perfect throw to get him out."

Seattle Manager Dick Williams said he considered sending in a pinch runner for Valle.

"It would have been Mike Kingery, and that would have made it two steps closer, but Valle was out by four steps," Williams said.

The victory kept the Twins two games ahead of second-place Oakland and 4½ ahead of California, Kansas City and Texas.

Elsewhere, Detroit beat Chicago 4-1, Toronto outlasted Boston 10-8, Texas edged Milwaukee 5-4 and Oakland defeated California 6-1 in the only other games scheduled.

Harold Reynolds gave Seattle a 1-0 lead in the third inning with a home run just over the left-field wall. It was the first homer of the season for Reynolds, who has hit only two in 320 major league games. The Mariners added two runs in the sixth on Jim Presley's 16th home run of the year, a two-run shot to right.

Tigers 4, White Sox 1

Bill Madlock's eighth-inning single scored Tom Brookens with the tie-breaking run and Frank Tanana scattered seven hits as Detroit beat Chicago at Tiger Stadium and moved within a half game of New York in the AL East.

With the score tied 1-1, Brookens singled to lead off the eighth, Lou Whitaker followed with a single and Madlock singled and took second on the throw home. After an intentional walk to Kirk Gibson loaded the bases, reliever Bobby Thigpen came on and Alan Trammell hit a two-run single.

Tanana, 10-7, struck out nine and walked one en route to his fourth complete game. "We've been scoring late, so I felt I had to just keep us in the game — long enough," the left-hander said.

Blue Jays 10, Red Sox

Rick Leach singled home pinch-runner Willie Upshaw from third base to snap an eighth-inning tie as Toronto rallied to beat visiting Boston.

Trailing 8-7, George Bell singled with one out in the eighth off reliever Calvin Schiraldi, 5-5. Fred McGriff followed with a single sending Bell to second and Jesse Barfield tied the game with a single to right.

Upshaw came on to run for McGriff and trotted home on Leach's single to right. Barfield later scored on an error for the Blue Jays' final run.

"It feels really good to get an opportunity to play," Leach said. "This is the first time since I came here that I've had an opportunity to play four games in a row."

Rangers 5, Brewers 4

Mike Stanley doubled in two runs with one out in the bottom of the ninth inning as host Texas beat Milwaukee to reach .500 for first time since the first week of the season.

Stanley's hit came off Brewers relief ace Dan Plesac, 4-4. But Plesac walked two batters in the ninth, then gave up Stanley's double.

With Milwaukee leading 4-3, Pete Incaviglia walked to start the ninth, but was thrown out at third trying to advance on Larry Parrish's shallow single to left.

Curtis Wilkerson ran for Parrish, who took second on the throw that nailed Incaviglia. Bob Brower pinch hit for Oddibe McDowell, and walked as Wilkerson stole third and Stanley followed with a double to right center.

Athletics 6, Angels 1

Dave Stewart won his sixth straight game with a five-hitter as Oakland beat visiting California.

Stewart, 13-7, struck out six and walked none in his third complete game of the season. "Every win feels great. Each one sets a new career high for me," the right-hander said.

Stewart, in his seventh major league season, had never won more than nine games before this year. He was signed by Oakland as a free agent last year after being released by Philadelphia.

Oakland had six hits, all singles, in a four-run second inning. Alfredo Griffin, Luis Polonia and Mark McGwire had RBI singles, with McGwire raising his league-leading RBI total to 82.

Pitt Nine Breaks Tie, Rolls To 11-8 Win Over Raleigh

RALEIGH — Pitt County's American Legion baseball team broke out of an 8-8 tie in the sixth inning and went on to record an 11-8 win and take a 3-0 lead in the best-of-seven series.

Eric Jarman, who came on in relief in the seventh inning, earned a save by shutting out Raleigh over the final two and a third frames. Robbie McDonald got the win, but had to come out after six and a third shaky innings.

Pitt County, firmly in the driver's seat in the series, can wrap it up tonight at 7:30 p.m. at Harrington Field by sweeping the set. A Raleigh victory, however, would send it back to Raleigh for game five on Wednesday night.

Meanwhile, Whiteville downed Hamlet, 10-4, in the fourth game of the Area II series, tying the two at two games apiece. They will resume play tonight in Whiteville.

Pitt County took a brief 1-0 lead in the top of the first inning. Shane Adams led off with a triple, scoring on Jarman's sacrifice fly.

But Raleigh came back with two in the bottom of the inning. James Capps reached on a fielder's choice that left two men out. Mike Rigsbee followed with a double, scoring Capps, who had stolen second. Mike Whitten then singled in Rigsbee for a 2-1 lead.

Raleigh upped the lead to 3-1 with another in the second. Ray Osborne doubled and Donald Wilder walked. Both were moved up on a sacrifice, and Jeff Austin's sacrifice fly scored Osborne.

Pitt then vaulted into the lead with three runs in the top of the third, taking a 4-3 edge. Hunter Clark singled and Adams doubled him in. After Jason Galloway sacrificed, Jarman singled in Adams, moving to second on an error. Tom Moye singled and Axel Smith grounded out, scoring Jarman with the go-ahead run.

Raleigh again tied it with one in the bottom of the frame. Capps singled and stole second. He moved up on a ground out and scored on a wild pitch.

Both teams then scored four times in the fourth. Bronswell Patrick led off the Pitt half with a single and stole second. Ty Little walked and Clark singled in Patrick. After both runners were sacrificed up, Galloway doubled in Little and Jarman was intentionally walked. Tom Moye singled in both Clark and Galloway for an 8-4 lead.

But Raleigh again bounced back. Wilder got a hit and Chris Thomas reached on an error. Jeff Austin singled in Wilder and Chris Robbins singled to score Thomas. Capps singled and Austin crossed on an out by Rigsbee. Whitten flew out, scoring Robbins.

But that was to be it for Raleigh. While Post 1 did threaten again on several occasions, Pitt was able to shut it down when it counted.

Meanwhile, Pitt regained the lead for good in the sixth. Jarman singled and was sacrificed up. He scored on Axel Smith's hit.

Insurance runs came in the seventh and ninth. In the seventh, Little

Three-Way Tie

Okamoto and JoAnne Carner. The three are tied at three-under par and were to meet in an 18-hole playoff Tuesday. (AP Laserphoto)

Trio Faces Open Playoff

EDISON TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — The 42nd U.S. Women's Open became the national championship that didn't want to come to an end.

Torrential rains on Sunday stretched the fourth round of the Open into Monday. Then twice Monday a champion seemed ready to be crowned.

Ayako Okamoto of Japan was the first apparent winner as she opened a three-stroke lead through eight holes but fell victim to a balky putter.

LPGA Hall of Famer JoAnne Carner then emerged atop the leaderboard and took a one-stroke lead to the 18th hole. Three putts from 25 feet meant a bogey and dropped her into a tie at 3-under-par 285 with Okamoto and British Women's Open champion Laura Davies after 72 holes.

And that meant the U.S. Women's Open was extended into a sixth day today at the Plainfield Country Club as Carner, Davies and Okamoto met in an 18-hole internationally flavored playoff. Sudden death was to follow if a champion wasn't crowned after 18 holes.

The 48-year-old Carner is definitely going to be the sentimental favorite with the crowd. She was Monday.

"I was going to go fishing tomorrow on our boat down in Palm Beach (Fla.)," said Carner, who has not won a tournament in more than two years.

The catch today could be a piece of history. If Carner wins her third Open, she would become the oldest player in history to win the Women's Open, surpassing Fay Crocker who won in 1955 a month before her 41st birthday.

"I never thought I was too old to win the Open," said the woman known affectionately on the LPGA Tour as "Big Momma." "Most women athletes don't last that long and their careers are much shorter than the men. I'm very happy to be in the position where I am right now." It could have been better.

Carner started the day three shots behind Okamoto, the third-round leader, and moved into contention by sinking 6- and 8-foot birdie putts on the first and fourth holes.

She earned a tie for lead with a 5-foot birdie putt at the par-3, 15th hole and grabbed the lead by making a 5-foot birdie at No. 17.

Then came the fateful par-4, 350-yard 18th. Her drive was in the fairway, but she pushed a 6-iron and ended up 25 feet from the cup on the back fringe.

A mistake followed as Carner took her putter and hit the ball too firmly, knocking it six feet by the hole, from where she could not save par.

"All I was really trying to do was just get it down in two," said Carner, who has won 42 times in a pro career that began in 1970. "I just looked at the putt too long. When I stood over it it looked real dark because I was right against the grain. I made the mistake of not walking away and going to look at it again."

The bogey gave her a course-record equalling 3-under-par 69. Davies and Okamoto both missed birdie putts of more than 40 feet on the 18th green.

It had to be a frustrating round for the 36-year-old Okamoto, who had a par round of 72. She opened the three-shot lead after eight holes, but faltered at No. 9 with a four-putt double bogey from 50 feet.

Her putter also failed at the par-4, 13th hole when she three-putted from three feet.

"My heart was thumping from one to 13," she said through an interpreter. "I was very tense, very nervous."

However, she said she never felt she would lose the tournament.

"To lose, it's such a bad thought to have," Okamoto said. "After 13 I thought somebody would tie me."

Davies, who played with Okamoto, had a 1-under-par 71, but never led by herself anytime during the fourth round.

Her one shot at the lead came at the par-5 17th when she lipped out on a birdie putt as Carner was bogeying 18.

"I am looking forward to the playoff," said Davies, who is scheduled to begin defense of her British Women's Open title on Thursday in Cornwall, England. "It's going to be one of the highlights of my career, playing with JoAnne."

The three-way playoff is the first in a U.S. Women's Open and it marks the second straight year the Open has gone an extra 18 holes. Janes Geddes defeated Sally Little in a playoff last year in Dayton, Ohio.

It will be the second Open playoff for Carner. She won in 1976, defeating Sandra Palmer by two shots.

Betsy King, who at one point drew within two shots of the leaders, finished tied with Jody Rosenthal at 289.

Debbie Massey and Deedee Roberts were tied at 290, one shot ahead of Martha Nause.

Stubbs Rewards Lasorda's Patience

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tom Lasorda was surrounded by a group of reporters at his desk when a familiar hand suddenly reached through the crowd and grabbed his. The hand belonged to Franklin Stubbs.

"Thank you for not giving up, baby," Stubbs told his manager after hitting a 12th-inning home run Monday night to give the Los Angeles Dodgers a 6-5 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Stubbs had reason to be thankful. He had failed in his previous two times at-bat to deliver with a runner in scoring position. He was 0 for 5 on the night when he led off against reliever Scott Garrelts with his 14th homer of the season.

"It was a rough night for me, but if you hang in there long enough, good things will happen," said Stubbs, who ended an 0-for-10 drought by hitting a 1-1 pitch into the right field seats to extend the Dodgers' modest winning streak to three games. "Even if you're 0-for-5 in the game, you're last at-bat is what counts."

The loss, in the only National League game Monday, snapped a four-game San Francisco winning streak.

Stubbs, who made a rare appearance in the cleanup spot in the batting order due to Mike Marshall's illness, was on the spot throughout most of the four-hour, six-minute marathon. Pedro Guerrero, with 21 home runs, was pitched around and walked four times by the Giants.

"Pete was frustrated that he kept walking, and that I couldn't come through," Stubbs said. "I know he wasn't mad at me, but I'm sure he was disappointed I didn't come through with the hit."

Guerrero frustrated the Dodgers, however, with a key fielding error after teammate Mickey Hatcher put them in front 4-3 with his sixth home run, leading off the eighth inning against Craig Lefferts.

"It was a tough ballgame," Giants Manager Roger Craig said. "I used pitchers I didn't want to use."

Tim Crews, making his major league debut for the Dodgers in relief of starter Bob Welch, was two outs away from his first major league victory. But he surrendered a one-out single to left field by Mike Aldrete, who went to second as Guerrero bobbled the ball for only his fourth error of the season.

"I just missed it," said Guerrero, whose string of consecutive times on base ended at 10 with a fifth-inning strikeout. "It was just an error, that's all. No excuses."

Kevin Mitchell followed with a single to left, that scored pinch-runner Mark Wasinger. But Mitchell was out at home plate moments later after trying to score from second base on reliever Matt Young's wild pitch.

Each team scored an unearned run in the 11th. The Giants got theirs on a pinch single by Joel Youngblood, after a double by Eddie Milner and an error by center fielder John Shelby on the same play.

The Dodgers got theirs on a sacrifice fly by Dave Anderson. It followed a single by Seve Sax and an error by first baseman Will Clark, who was charged with mishandling Garrelts' throw on a bunt by Danny Heep.

"No way that was an error on Clark," Craig said. "He (Garrelts) juggled the ball off the mound, then made a bad throw."

Until Hatcher's homer, the Dodgers had been held to one hit through the previous six innings. Left-hander Joe Price, making his first appearance in seven days, pitched 4 2-3 innings of hitless ball after inheriting a 3-1 deficit from starter Kelly Downs with one out in the first.

Downs was hit by a line drive RBI single off the bat of Shelby and sustained a bruised right forearm. Craig said he expected Downs to miss his next start.

"I looked down and there was a knot," Downs said. "I'll have to wait and see how I feel. Right now, it's pretty sore."

Not as sore as Stubbs was after the first nine innings. He struck out with a runner at third after a walk to Guerrero to end the seventh inning, then struck out for the third straight time in the ninth with the potential winning run on second base following another walk to Guerrero.

In all, Stubbs did nothing with a total of seven men on bases. He admitted he went to the plate in the 12th a lot more relaxed, seeing the bases empty.

"I had guys on base all night, but I was just pressing," he said. "I was trying too hard. I just wasn't coming through with the hit I needed. They can't afford to wait around 12 innings for me to hit a home run."

This time, however, the wait was worth it.

"This is a game that every team needs as a confidence builder," Hatcher said. "We're picking each other up, and that's the key."

Festival's Success Could Bring Other Top Events

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Considered a hotbed only for college basketball, North Carolina could become the site of future world championships after the successful U.S. Olympic Festival, says the chairman of the local organizing committee.

"The results of the festival indicated that we are big time on structure and crowd participation," said Dr. LeRoy Walker, also president of The Athletics Congress, track and field's national governing body.

Walker said the committee's work proved the state can do more than host a track and field meet, which until the festival had been virtually the state's only exposure to international athletics.

"... We have taken the organizational structure and moved it into other sports areas," Walker said.

"Most national governing bodies are influenced by the reactions of athletes to particular venues. Rarely have they seen spectators into it quite the way our spectators were into it," he added. "This is the kind of thing that impresses the governing bodies."

With a final day attendance of 61,421, the 1987 festival finished its two-week run with a total crowd of 460,884, compared with the previous record of 346,944 set at Houston last summer.

Gymnastics attracted 20,393 to the Smith Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill on the final day, and the combined track and field-closing ceremonies at Wallace Wade Stadium at Duke University drew 19,617, the largest crowd ever to see track and field in festival history. Attendance records were broken at 30 of the 34 venues and ticket sales surpassed $3 million.

Such figures opened the eyes of the U.S. Olympic Committee, which likely will consider North Carolina as a future site for its national championships. Already, Walker is meeting with the board of North Carolina Amateur Sports to map strategy for future national and international competition.

"If you can sell out taekwondo, if you can sell out synchronized swimming, the state of North Carolina is capable of getting the job done," Walker said in a telephone interview. "If you heard the comments of the USOC people, they would come back in the next quadriennial because they said it's the best thing they have seen."

Because he has been a fixture in the Olympic movement, Walker is aware that he will have to do a hard sell to convince governing bodies throughout the world that North Carolina has the resources to pull it off.

At the upcoming world track and field championships in Rome, Walker said he would present North Carolina's advantages to officials of the IAAF with the intention of bringing world championship meets to the state soon.

"While the representatives are there for the congress, they are powerful people," Walker said. "I intend to do some lobbying."

Even without the final financial totals as a gauge, NCAS president Hill Carrow is calling the festival a tremendous success.

"I think this went even beyond my expectations," Carrow said. "Our numbers of 300,000 attendance and $1.5 million in ticket sales — we didn't just pull those out of the air. They were based on previous festivals and what we thought we could do given the population base in this area. Obviously, we smashed those."

Trappers' Winning Streak Finally Comes To An End

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Even though he gave up two quick runs in the first inning against the team with the longest winning streak in the history of professional baseball, Billings pitcher Mack Jenkins wasn't worried.

"When I saw their cheap hits ... I knew they weren't world beaters," he said Monday night after ending the Salt Lake Trappers' winning streak at 29 games.

Minutes after the Trappers scored two unearned runs in the top of the first, the Mustangs powdered Salt Lake for six runs in their half of the inning and rode the lead to a 7-5 victory.

"They picked me up with six big ones," said Jenkins, a second-year free agent out of the University of Tampa.

Despite the early four-run lead, Jenkins had far from an easy time with the Trappers, who boast a team batting average of .347. Only once did he retire the side in order, and he gave up 11 hits before leaving with two outs in the eighth and the bases loaded.

Reliever Quinn Marsh came on to get the final out, preserving the two-run lead, and he shut down the Trappers in the ninth for the save.

"Jenkins did a super job in the clutch," Salt Lake Manager Jim Gilligan said. "He threw some big league pitches with two outs (and the bases loaded in the seventh). He really showed me something."

The Trappers, a Pioneer League team with no major league affiliate, started their march into history June 25, when they beat Pocatello 12-6 at home. A month later to the day — last Saturday — they defeated Pocatello at home again for their 28th straight victory.

That broke the 27-game record set in 1902 by the Corsicana Oilers of the Texas League and matched in 1921 by the Baltimore Orioles of the International League.

Salt Lake added one more game to its streak, an 8-6 victory Sunday over Pocatello. The Trappers are 32-4 and are 16 games in front of their nearest competitor in the league's Southern Division.

Billings, 24-10, is leading the league's Northern Division.

Jenkins, an off-speed specialist, said he stuck to his game plan of changeups, sliders and split-fingered fastballs.

His teammates also had a game plan at the plate: hit the ball and play aggressively on the base paths.

Bernie Walker led off for the Mustangs in the bottom of the first by legging a routine single into a double, and the rush was on.

One out later, Walker scored an in-field single. The Mustangs loaded the bases on a single and a walk, and another run scored on a fly ball that was ruled a trap.

Dante Johnson knocked in the third run with a bloop single, Keith Thomas stole home on a double steal to make it 4-2, and catcher Ernie Taubensee capped the rally with a two-run homer to right-center.

The Mustangs added another run in the third, and Salt Lake had single runs in the third, fourth and sixth innings.

While Billings Manager Dave Keller was savoring his team's feat, he had some words of praise for the record-setting Trappers.

"You can't take anything away from them. They won 29 in a row," he said. "They won at home and they won on the road. That says a lot about their club."

Goodman Gains Junior Event

Christy Goodman, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Goodman of Greenville, was a qualifier in the Junior Olympic Qualifying Swimming Meet held in Sanford this past weekend.

Goodman, a member of the Greenville Swim Club, was that group's only qualifier at the meet.

She finished third in the 100-meter breaststroke with a time of 1:46.50. That qualified her for the next meet, to be held in High Point in August.

She also finished fourth in the 50-meter freestyle in 37.09 seconds, but failed to qualify for further competition in that event.

Babe Ruth Nine In State Finals

BENSON — Greenville's 14-15 year-old Babe Ruth baseball team picked up two wins Monday to advance to the finals of the state tournament.

Greenville, playing in the loser's bracket of the double elimination tournament, topped Hoke, 5-4, in the first game as Heath Clark doubled home Chris Christopher with the winning run in the fourth.

Christopher had reached on an error and advanced to second on a passed ball before coming home on Clark's hit.

Maurice Hines, Kendall Hardee and Jamie Brewington combined for the win, allowing six hits.

Greenville went ahead early, scoring four runs in the first.

Timmy Moore drew a walk to start things off. Clark and Walter Gatlin singled. Hines doubled in Clark and Moore. Brewington then singled before Mike Cox reached on an error that allowed Gatlin and Brewington to score.

In the second game, Greenville romped past Wilmington, 27-1.

Greenville banged out 24 hits, keyed by eight runs in the second, eight runs in the third and seven in the fourth.

Moore had a three-run homer to key the third. Abram Lang went 5-6 to lead Greenville. Gatlin added four hits, while Moore and Grant Harmon had three hits apiece.

Cox and Clark combined for the win, scattering four hits.

Greenville advances to play undefeated North Wake tonight at 6 p.m. Should Greenville win, a final game will be played at 8:30 p.m. for the title.

Sky Scraped

On this day in 1945, an Army B-25 bomber lost in the fog crashed into the Empire State Building in New York City. Thirteen people lost their lives in the accident. In 1857, Elisha Graves Otis made the age of the skyscraper possible by developing the first passenger elevator with adequate safety devices. After the Chicago fire of 1871, designers helping to rebuild that city took advantage of Otis's invention to begin exceeding previous height restrictions.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY July 29

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Some delays or unpleasant conditions this morning could cause anxiety, but later in the day you'll be able to control things pretty much as you wish. Be well-rounded.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Be sure to keep any promises you have made to you family. Breaking them could cause a lot of tension.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Your mate may be in a poor mood this morning, but don't argue. Try to humor him or her and the evening will be happy.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Some friends who you really enjoy would be just the thing to brighten up the mood at home, so invite them in.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): A message you receive this morning may cause some worries, but try to put them behind you.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Be very wary of strangers this evening. Caution should be used in any investments you make today on advice from friends.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Don't ask questions of someone you dislike: just avoid this individual. He'd probably be wrong anyway.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Take some time to think over your situation. Perhaps a quiet conversation with a good friend would help matters.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): You may meet with opposition when going after a goal this morning, so plan your strategy well in advance.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Someone you're counting on for support may not agree with you this morning, but there may be a change of heart.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): You have some piled up work which needs attention. Finish it early so the afternoon will be all yours.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Your mate may not agree with your plan at the start, but when properly informed, he or she will be enthusiastic.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Don't let an annoyed partner interfere with your scheduling. An opportunity will arise after lunch.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, will have great organizational ability and a talent for delegating authority. Teach your child early not to be overly critical of others, but rather to have patience and explain what is desired. A musical ability is indicated, so you may want to supply training.

It is not easy to decide whether, at the slam level, to play in a 4-4 or a 5-3 fit. If you have no loser outside the 4-4 suit, it is often preferable to play in the 5-3 suit; you might be able to overcome a 4-1 split in the 4-4 side suit by discarding on another suit, whereas if that suit were trumps, you would have two unavoidable losers.

South's decision to open 2 no trump was reasonable. The spade suit lacked the intermediates and the hand was a whit weak for a demand bid in the suit, and a one spade opening bid risked a pass. Thereafter, a natural auction led to the point where South had to choose between black-suit slams, and in view of the lack of club intermediates, his decision to opt for spades cannot be faulted.

As he was reluctant to lead away from his side-suit honors, West attacked with a trump. Declarer won in hand, then continued with a trump to the queen to learn that he had a sure loser in the suit. His problem, therefore, was to avoid losing a club trick, and to accomplish that he would have to establish dummy's diamonds for discards.

Since West was short in spades he rated to have length in diamonds, so declarer cashed the ace of diamonds and finessed the jack successfully. He ruffed a low diamond to set up the suit as East discarded a heart, cashed the ace of hearts and ruffed the queen. When he led the king of diamonds from the table, East was a dead duck. If East elected not to ruff, declarer would simply have sluffed his two clubs on the diamonds, so East could do no better than ruff. Declarer pitched a club, won the club shift in hand and drew the last trump. The king of clubs served as the entry for him to reach the board's good diamond and discard his remaining club loser.

Stark's Captain Forced To Retire Because Of Persian Gulf Attack

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The captain of the USS Stark, forced to retire at a lower rank because of the attack that killed 37 sailors on his ship, says in an interview published today that the investigation didn't go "high enough."

Capt. Glenn R. Brindel said he is disappointed in the military for blaming him without scrutinizing the actions of his superiors.

"The investigation didn't go high enough, but that's all I'll say about it," Brindel told The San Diego Union. "I'm very disappointed, but I will tell you that (the decision) is only a piece of the puzzle."

The interview was conducted Monday, when the Navy said Brindel and the Stark's weapons officer, Lt. Basil E. Moncrief, will not be court-martialed because they have accepted responsibility for the ship's failure to defend itself against an Iraqi warplane. It said they agreed to end their naval careers.

The San Diego newspaper, quoting unidentified Navy sources, said earlier this month that the Stark had been conducting a "full-power run" of the ship's engine the night of the attack. Such tests should not be conducted in potential war zones such as the Persian Gulf because the crew could be distracted, the sources told the newspaper.

"Pacific Fleet ships are not allowed to perform this kind of training in the Persian Gulf, but the Atlantic Fleet is," Brindel said in the interview published today. "It would please me if the Atlantic Fleet ended the practice of performing engineering (training) while a ship is operationally deployed in the Persian Gulf."

"The crew's attention had been less than what you would want in this area of operations," Brindel said. "The executive officer and myself, we weren't totally immersed in the training at all. I don't want to give that impression."

Adm. Frank B. Kelso, the com-

mander-in-chief of the U.S. Atlantic Fleet, decided to issue letters of reprimand to Brindel and Moncrief and forego courts-martial because nothing further would be gained through legal action, the Navy said.

While confirming a military board of inquiry had recommended courts-martial for the two on charges of dereliction of duty, the Navy said, "Both (men) accepted responsibility and both volunteered significant personal sacrifice in acknowledgement of accountability. Adm. Kelso, after a review of the investigation, felt that it was unlikely that any new facts would be uncovered in a (court-martial)."

Brindel, the Stark's 43-year-old skipper, has submitted a request to retire, the Navy said. By taking that step now, Brindel will have to retire with a pension pegged to the rank of commander instead of captain, thus "incurring a substantial loss in retired pay," the Navy said.

Brindel, a native of Pittsburgh, was promoted to the rank of captain last January. Under federal law, however, a military officer must serve at least three years "in grade" to retire with that rank.

Moncrief, 32, of Corpus Christi, Texas, the Stark's tactical action officer, had served only about eight years in the Navy. As a result, he submitted a letter of resignation "and will be separated by the Navy," forfeiting any opportunity to obtain a pension, the service said.

Thirty-seven sailors died and 21 were injured when the Stark was struck by two Exocet missiles from the Iraqi plane on the night of May 17 while on routine patrol in the Persian Gulf. Iraq called the attack a mistake, an explanation the United States accepted.

The Pentagon has said the attack occurred without the Stark taking any defensive action, in part because the Iraqi warplane was "presumed friendly." Nonetheless, the ship's failure to take standard defensive precautions became the central focus of the military inquiry.

The letters of reprimand were issued by Kelso following an "admiral's mast" on Monday during which he reviewed the circumstances of the attack.

An admiral's mast is a type of disciplinary proceeding in which a senior officer reviews evidence of misconduct or negligence. Such a proceeding is one step short of a formal court-martial and can result in various disciplinary sanctions, including a suspension from duty, temporary forfeiture of pay, a letter of reprimand or a letter of admonition.

Within the military legal system, a formal letter of reprimand "is a harsh penalty," said one Navy officer who asked not to be named. "For an officer, it's the same thing as saying your career is through, you'll never have a shot at command."

While Brindel and Moncrief did not appear in person before Kelso during the admiral's mast, as was their right, "each admitted responsibility in writing," the Navy said.

"Capt. Brindel and Lt. Moncrief admitted and accepted accountability for the lack of readiness and inadequacy of measures taken to protect Stark on May 17, 1987. The basic charge ... was negligence in the performance of official duties."

Kelso said he decided to forego courts-martial because of various factors, including the fact the Iraqi attack was "unprovoked and indiscriminate" and "originated from a source considered not likely to act in a manner hostile to a U.S. naval vessel."

Kelso also cited the "leadership" of the two men in "their respective personal efforts in saving Stark and preventing further loss of life" and a "concern that the prolonged nature of courts-martial proceedings would cause intensified grief on the part of the families of the victims of the attack and stress to the Stark crew."

Brindel will receive a pension of roughly $24,734 a year as a commander. Had he been allowed to serve additional time in the rank of captain, he could have retired with a pension of about $31,764 a year.

In a related move, the Navy said Monday the Stark's second-ranking officer, Lt. Cmdr. Raymond J. Gagan, 35, of Rockville, Md., "has been referred (for) disciplinary action to the commander, Naval Surface Force, Atlantic Fleet."

That means Kelso determined Gagan was less culpable than the other two officers and thus decided to delegate review of his case to a lower level in the chain of command, the Navy said.

Iraq Says Iranians May Try Blackmail

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz says Iran is taking advantage of a suspension in Iraqi attacks on Persian Gulf shipping and aims to "blackmail" countries in the region.

Iraq, which halted the attacks 12 days ago, has since agreed to observe a cease-fire resolution ordered by the U.N. Security Council, but Iran so far has not gone along.

Aziz, emerging from a meeting with Secretary of State George P. Shultz on Monday, told reporters that Iran wanted "a partial halt" to the shipping war in order to continue its invasion of Iraq and to "get hold of the whole gulf region."

"Any partial implementation of the resolution will help the Iranian position, the Iranian position of blackmail and intimidation," Aziz said.

The foreign minister did not say how long his government would wait for Iran to respond to the cease-fire.

"But we would like this time frame to be as short as possible," he said.

"The main issue for us is the full implementation of the resolution, not a partial implementation," Aziz said.

The security council resolution, which was adopted unanimously last Monday, calls for an end to fighting on all fronts, on land and in the air as well as in gulf waters.

Iraq voluntarily halted its attacks on merchant ships carrying Iranian oil and other supplies for Tehran on July 15. In mid-May, the U.S. warship Stark was hit by an Iraqi warplane. Thirty-seven American sailors were killed.

The United States subsequently accepted Baghdad's explanation that the missile attack was a mistake.

In related developments:

—There are no plans for U.S. retaliation against Iran for last week's mine explosion which damaged the Bridgeton, a newly U.S.-flagged oil tanker, a senior administration official said. But the official said Iran has "raised the stakes" in the gulf with the mine incident and the United States will not abandon its tanker escort mission. U.S. officials believe but cannot prove Iran planted the mine, despite Iran's assertion Friday that it was put there by "invisible hands."

—A Kuwaiti shipping official said today that the U.S. Coast Guard has approved the loading of some oil aboard the Bridgeton, indicating that the U.S. convoy operation will resume shortly. The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Coast Guard gave verbal approval to the Kuwait Oil Tanker Co. and the loading was expected to begin later today. Other sources said the loading had already begun.

Kuwaiti shipping officials have said they hope the Bridgeton, after repairs, can begin the 500-mile trip to the mouth of the gulf on Friday.

—The United States wants to send some mine-sweeping helicopters to the gulf to assist Navy convoys, but has delayed such a move pending a decision on where they'll be based, Pentagon officials said.

The officials, who insisted on anonymity, said efforts to enlist the aid of either Kuwait or Saudi Arabia in providing land facilities for the giant RH-53D choppers had so far failed to produce any results.

Aziz met for about 35 minutes with Shultz, and another hour with Assistant Secretary Richard W. Murphy, the State Department's principal Middle East specialist.

The Iraqi foreign minister described the talks as "friendly and fruitful." He thanked the Reagan administration for guiding the security council to adopt the cease-fire resolution.

A number of Iranian officials have denounced the order as one-sided. But Charles E. Redman, the State Department spokesman, said that did not mean Tehran had rejected it.

"We believe it is an equitable and fair way to end this war," Redman said.

Aziz told reporters Iran has been blackmailing countries in the region, "intimidating them in order to achieve a piecemeal solution or a partial halt in the activity in the gulf so that will enable them to continue the war, to continue the invasion of our territory."

Aziz added: "If they succeed in that way, they will get hold of the whole gulf region."

Asked if his views were shared by Iraqi military commanders, Aziz said he did not usually "interfere" in military decisions. But, he said, "This is the political position of Iraq."

The Aziz visit was a sign that U.S. relations with Iraq, which were re-established in 1984, have continued to improve.

By contrast, Murphy denounced Iran's policies. "It seems to be a government which has decided to attack the world," he said in an interview with an Iraqi magazine.

Murphy said the United States would like to have a better relationship with Tehran. "But we see no evidence that Iran is interested, from its side," he said.

Tanker Allowed To Take On Oil

KUWAIT (AP) — The U.S. Coast Guard has approved the loading of some oil aboard the super-tanker Bridgeton, which was struck by a mine while under American naval protection, a Kuwaiti shipping official said today.

The approval indicated the U.S. convoy operation, which was embarrassed by last Friday's mine explosion in the Persian Gulf, would soon resume.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Coast Guard gave verbal approval to the Kuwait Oil Tanker Co. and told the company that written approval would probably arrive later today.

The official said the Coast Guard, which has responsibility for determining seaworthiness, authorized the Bridgeton to load 260,000 tons of crude oil, about three-quarters of the ship's capacity.

BLACK SHANK — The cutaway above shows the damage that occurs when the disease black shank strikes a tobacco plant. Black shank is one of several diseases affecting Pitt County's 1987 tobacco crop. (Reflector Photo By Tommy Forrest)

Farm Scene

By MITCH SMITH

Tobacco disease has been an obstacle in 1987 that Pitt County growers have had to deal with. Starting with weather flecking and anthracnose in the spring and recently the occurrence of Granville wilt, area farmers have seen a number of field problems.

Black shank is the latest disease to join the picture for this year. Unlike Granville wilt, this disease is caused by a fungus and usually shows up later in the growing season. The incidence of this disease is increased as conditions of high humidity continue to persist.

Differentiation between Granville wilt and black shank is essential if future decisions are to be properly made regarding disease control. Since black shank can be effectively controlled by Ridomil, resistance and rotation, proper identification of this disease can prevent growers from investing dollars in costly multipurpose chemicals which are normally associated with control of Granville wilt.

The above-ground symptoms of black shank are a uniform yellowing and wilting of the tobacco plant. This is different from Granville wilt from the fact that with Granville wilt, wilting normally occurs on one side of the plant. Further investigation into the root system also reveals distinct differences. When the bacteria of Granville wilt invades a plant's root system, the effect is a root system whose branches can be easily sloughed off with one's hands. The black shank fungus does not affect the root system in this fashion.

The most characteristic and visible difference between these two diseases is found upon observing the lower stalk of each disease infected plant. With black shank this takes the form of a "disking" and discoloration of the pitch. Granville wilt does not exhibit this characteristic in that its stalk takes upon itself a dark and slimy texture.

For assistance in properly identifying tobacco disease, contact your local Agriculture Extension Office.

Rock Star Irate As Crew Turns Lights On Audience

MOSCOW (AP) — Rock star Billy Joel, angered when his American film crew shined spotlights on the audience, overturned an electric piano and smashed a microphone on stage during his second Soviet concert.

Joel interrupted the lyrics of his hit single "Just a Fantasy" Monday night with a furious shout: "Stop lighting the audience. It's my show, for Christ's sake."

He then flipped over a Yamaha electric grand piano he was playing at the rear of the stage and moved to the front, lifted a microphone stand over his head and smashed it on the stage, his face twisted in fury.

The crew that angered him is filming a documentary of his Soviet trip that Joel hopes to sell to recoup some of the $2 million cost of his tour. The crew had shined spotlights on the audience to catch them clapping and swaying to the Joel tunes. The singer said later that the audience should be kept in the dark so they could relax.

At the end of "Just a Fantasy," the lights were doused and Joel banged on a set of drums for a minute before tensely resuming the concert.

He took some of his frustration out on members of the audience in front, mostly middle-aged Soviets who sat stone-faced throughout the performance. "If you don't want to be here, why don't you leave," he hollered.

But most of the audience, who filled to capacity Moscow's 20,000-seat Olympic sports complex, appeared to enjoy themselves and seemed uncertain as to whether Joel's temper tantrum was part of the show.

Youths crowded against the stage continued to scream, dance and wave their arms as Joel briefly concluded his concert, singing the Beatles' song "Back in the U.S.S.R."

A perspiring Joel, 38, offered an apology of sorts after the show for behaving like an "Angry Young Man," the title of one of his hit songs.

"I just want to break even ... But this is bigger than bucks," Joel said as he sipped a glass of water, his wrinkled blue shirt outside his pants. "People in the audience want to be in the dark. They want to get loose."

Denial

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — A federal judge denied he imposed a stiff prison sentence on a friend of author Norman Mailer in a drug case because the man would not implicate Mailer.

"That's absolutely ridiculous," U.S. District Judge Edward T. Gignoux said of Mailer's allegations Monday.

Richard Stratton was convicted of drug conspiracy and given the maximum, 15-year sentence after Mailer testified in 1983 as a character witness.

He said he was pleased that most of the audience seemed to enjoy his act. "I was yelling at my own people," he stressed. "I was a real capitalist boss. It was a prima donna act, but I have to protect my show."

Joel also said he was "run ragged" after 11 months on the road and his throat was bothering him. He said he saw a doctor in Moscow on Monday who gave him some anti-inflammatory medicine.

Tension between Joel and the Soviets flared after his Sunday night concert, when state authorities complained of a lack of crowd control and the loud volume of Joel's music.

Marina Mytareva, a spokeswoman for the state-controlled Goskontsert that organizes concerts, said one woman fainted Sunday night and a doctor was not able to reach her. "The audience is just too large," she said.

But Joel's response to a request to lower the volume of his music and keep the crowd calm was a resounding "nyet."

He began his concert Monday night by saying through an interpreter: "The music is going to be played very, very loudly. If you don't want to stay, when you leave, please give your ticket to someone at the door."

Joel is to perform again Wednesday night in Moscow before moving to Leningrad for three concerts. He then returns to the United States.

Screen's First 'Superman' Returns On Home Video

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Superman, alias Clark Kent, alias Kirk Alyn, has retired from the Daily Planet and his efforts to save the world from the likes of Luthor and the Spider Woman and moved to Sun City. Alyn, 77, first to portray the Man of Steel on film, occasionally ventures out of retirement. In 1978, he and Noel Neill, the original Lois Lane, played the parents of Lois Lane in "Superman: The Movie."

Now Alyn has come out for the 50th anniversary of "Superman" and the release of his first movie serial on video cassette. The 15 chapters of the 1948 serial, the first live-action appearance of "Superman" on film, is now on the market in two volumes.

Warner Home Video is also releasing "Superman and the Mole Men," a 1951 theatrical movie starring George Reeves. Reeves, who also starred in 104 half-hour television episodes from 1951-57, committed suicide in 1959.

In addition, the latest movie, "Superman IV: The Quest for Peace," starring Christopher Reeve, opened last week in theaters across the country. (Warner Bros. is pushing the 50th anniversary a little. "Superman," created by Jerome Siegel and Joe Shuster, did not appear in the D.C. Comics until 1938.) Alyn, a former dancer, made six pictures with producer Sam Katzman before "Superman." As a dancer he had worked out regularly with weights to keep in shape.

"When he asked me if I wanted to play Superman I thought it was a publicity stunt," Alyn recalled. "I didn't think you could ever put Superman on film. They brought the people from D.C. Comics over and they said, 'Hey, he looks just like Clark Kent.'"

"They said take off your shirt, so I did and flexed my muscles. Then the guy said, 'Take off your pants,' and I said, 'Wait a minute!'" I was 37 when I played Superman. I picked up that girl and ran up that flight of stairs like it was nothing."

Alyn had worked mainly in B pictures and such serials as "Blackhawk," "G-Men vs. the Underworld," "Daughter of Don Q," and "Radar Patrol."

"I didn't care what they were," he said. "They paid me my salary and I did them and forgot them."

But after "Superman" he was typecast. "I couldn't get another film job," he said. "I did play 'Superman' again and 'Blackhawk,' another comic book character. Then I went back to New York, where I had started. I did 10-12 Broadway plays. I was in New York only two weeks when I got my first show, 'Angel in Paris,' with Ilona Massey. I also did about 125 commercials."

Alyn returned to Los Angeles about a year and a half later and immediately went back into pictures. "I did Westerns, musicals, whodunits, whatever," he said. "I did Sidney Tolan's last Charlie Chan movie. I did a lot of television. I was on 'The Donna Reed Show' 12 to 14 times, 'Highway Patrol' six times. I think 'Battlerstar Galactica' was one of the last things I did before I retired."

Alyn has three grown children and six grandchildren. "That's the nice part," he said. "They call me Grandpa Superman."

Why is "Superman" still popular after 50 years? Alyn thought for a moment, then said, "He was a do-gooder, he always got the bad guy."

Jim Hambrick, who says he is the world's largest collector of "Superman" memorabilia, said: "I think he represents everything that's good. Truth, justice and the American way, as it says in the comic books. There's something in every one of us that relates to Superman." He accompanied Alyn to the interview.

Alyn said: "I played him very serious, very close to the comic books. We didn't do it tongue-in-cheek. We didn't want to disappoint the kids."

The producers took it so seriously they didn't give Alyn screen credit for playing Superman. They felt the young audience should be led to believe that Superman was played by himself. Alyn did get credit, however, for playing Clark Kent.

Nielsen Signs NBC

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NBC says it's less than thrilled with A.C. Nielsen Co.'s new "people meters" but nevertheless became the first of the three major networks to sign up for the TV ratings service in the fall.

Nielsen has agreed to some adjustments in its new system of gathering viewer information, which relies on handheld, push-button devices, said Bill Rubens, NBC vice president for research.

"I'm still not happy with it," Rubens said of the new system Monday. "But it's the best we could get under the circumstances."

He said NBC believes the new system is inevitable.

All three networks have expressed concern that people meters will distort ratings, and have balked at signing up for the new season.

CBS and ABC have sent Nielsen letters canceling the ratings service until they can reach an agreement. The notice of cancellation was necessary to keep their contracts from being automatically renewed.

People meters, designed to provide advertisers with more detailed information about viewers, including age and sex, requires viewers to push a button whenever they watch television.

The old system consisted of a device hooked to the television set to record what was being watched and a diary in which viewers noted who was watching. Conventional wisdom has held that people meters would be used more by younger people comfortable with electronic equipment. But Rubens said NBC research showed that younger households tended to tire of pushing the buttons.
