Regan Says President Rejected Any Pardons

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan testified today that President Reagan "shot down right away" a proposed pardon for Iran-Contra figures John M. Poindexter and Oliver L. North last December, telling aides that neither man had been accused of a crime.

Regan was followed in the witness chair by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who testified that he vehemently opposed secret arms sales to Iran from the time he first heard of the idea in June 1985.

The back-to-back appearance of high-level witnesses reflected the determination of the House and Senate investigating committees to ring down the curtain soon on their dramatic summer run of nationally televised hearings.

The panels are expected to interrogate several CIA officials privately next week, and then spend the month of August writing an official report on the affair that has dealt heavy political damage to Ronald Reagan's presidency.

Testifying for a second day at nationally televised hearings, Regan recalled the president saying, "I'll be darned if I'm going to accuse them of a crime in advance."

Regan said the subject "never came up again" in his presence, adding that Reagan "put his foot down hard."

Regan recalled the events as he concluded a day and a half in the witness chair, and as the congressional Iran-Contra hearings neared the end of their dramatic summer run.

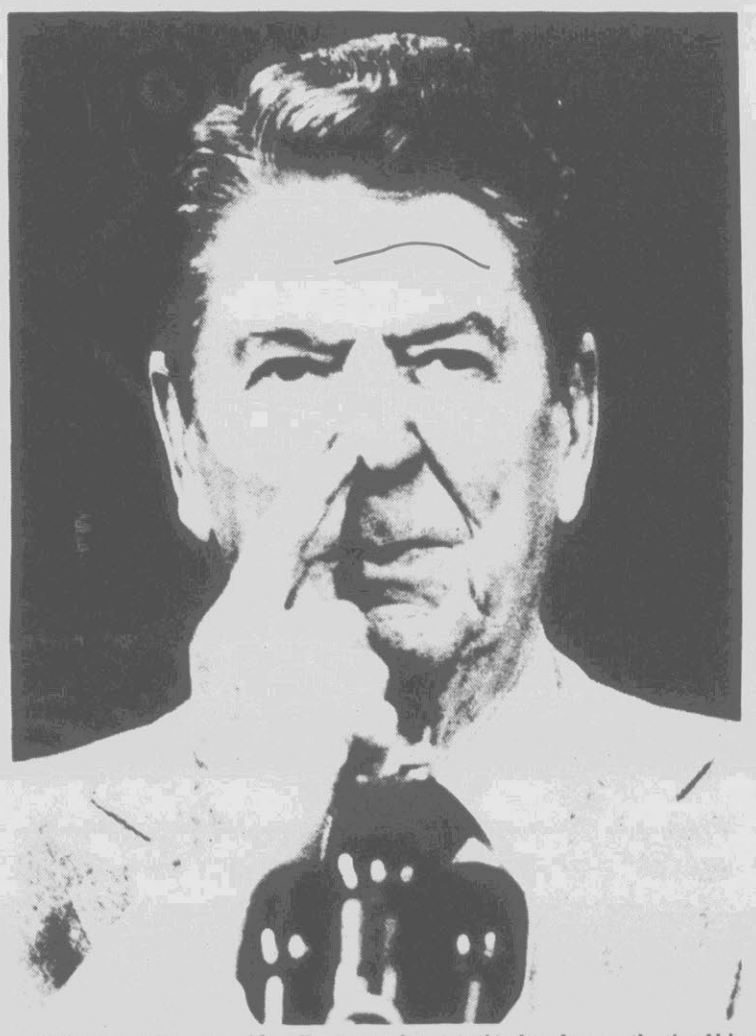

During Regan's stint in the witness chair, lawmakers made numerous expressions of concern that many senior Reagan administration officials had been denied knowlege of major events.

Said Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md.:

"It seems to me what happened in all of this was, in effect, there was a junta within the government of the United States.

"You had Poindexter and North and their associates in effect invoking the authority of the president of the United States, freezing out the chief of staff, the secretary of defense and secretary of state and pursuing their own policy, policies which the president says if he had known about them, he would have strongly opposed, and policies which you said if you had known about

'BILLBOARD' — President Reagan points to a tiny bandage on the tip of his nose while joking Thursday that it was "a billboard (saying) stay out of the sun." Reagan was scheduled to have a skin cancer removed from his nose this afternoon at Bethesda Navy Hospital. It is the third time he has had a basal cell carcinoma removed from his nose, and experts say it could develop again. (AP Laserphoto)

Plane Carrying Horses Hits Busy Road, Kills 37 People

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Bulldozers today cleared charred wreckage from a highway where a 1940s propeller-driven plane loaded with horses crashed into rush-hour traffic and exploded, killing at least 37 people.

The Boeing 377, described by a Boeing spokesman as virtually obsolete, was bound for Miami with 12 people and 18 horses aboard Thursday evening when it crashed. Witnesses said it began swaying as it fell, shearing the tops off trees and knocking down power lines before it plowed through bumper-to-bumper traffic on the eight-lane Mexico-Toluca Highway then slammed into a restaurant.

An investigator from the Defense Department said no cause for the crash had yet been determined.

Mexico City Police Chief Jose Domingo Ramirez Garrido Abreu said the search for bodies ended early today and that 37 people were dead. Arturo Martinez, a dispatcher for the Red Cross, confirmed that figure. Police spokesman Alejandro Ortiz said 22 people were hospitalized.

The government news agency Notimex reported 42 deaths.

It wasn't immediately known how many died on the ground and on the plane.

Heavy equipment was brought in to clear the burned hulks of cars from the highway, and shortly after dawn, traffic was moving slowly along the busy thoroughfare.

Investigators and dozens of curious passers-by crowded in front of the badly damaged restaurant.

Part of one motor was lying in the mud near a section of fuselage. A dozen yards away, a gray crate bearing the words Animal Air Service lay in a muddy field. What appeared to be a horse blanket, badly burned, was under the crate.

A passenger who survived, horse trainer Guadalupe Pina, 42, said in a television news interview from his hospital bed that panic broke out as the plane began rocking from side to side.

Passengers screamed "God save us! Save us!" and cried as the cabin filled with smoke, Pina said.

Alejandro Perez Palma told television news he was in the kitchen of his home when the plane flew past. The impact from the crash made his house shake so violently he thought a powerful earthquake had hit, Perez said.

Residents of the Lomas Santa Fe neighborhood in the plane's flight path ran outside and watched as the plane buzzed low over their homes.

I-95 Will Get 65 In August

After nearly three months of study, the N.C. Department of Transportation has announced it will set a speed limit of 65 mph on 528 miles rural Interstate highway.

The department's decision will increase the speed limit on about 60 percent of the state's Interstate highway network, while maintaining a limit of 55 mph on the remainder of the interstate system.

All North Carolina portions of I-95 will be zoned for 65 mph, along with sections of Interstate highways 26, 40, 77 and 85. The speed limit changes are the result of a study of the entire interstate system in the state. The study, which included consultation with the North Carolina Highway Patrol, focused on safety considerations.

The new speed limit will not be in effect until about 400 new 65 mph signs are erected, according to NCDOT officials. The department hopes to have the signes up by mid-August.

In addition to the new 65 mph signs, about 250 more 55 mph signs are being made for areas remaining at that speed, DOT officials said. Those signs are now needed because more signing is required when speed limits vary.

The department is also expected to install about 75 "reduce speed ahead" signs to warn motorists they are approaching a 55 mph zone.

UNC Governors Elect Whichard

CHAPEL HILL — Greenville publisher David J. Whichard II was elected vice chairman of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors at a meeting of the board here this morning.

He was chosen to fill the unexpired term — ending July 1988 — of former Vice Chairman Jake Froelich of High Point, who was not returned to the board earlier this month by the General Assembly when his term expired.

Whichard, editor and co-publisher of The Daily Reflector, has been a member of the Board of Governors since 1972. He served for 10 years as a member of the board of trustees of East Carolina University and was a member of the N.C. Board of Higher Education from 1969 to 1971. His term on the UNC board will expire in 1989.

He is chairman of the board's drug policy committee and a member of the personnel committee. He has served as chairman of the planning committee and as a member of the board's budget and finance committee.

DAVID J. WHICHARD II

The 32-member UNC board was formed by the General Assembly in 1972 and given broad authority to set policy and budgets for the 16-campus UNC system.

Judge Clears Arrest From Man's Record

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

A Pitt County District Court judge has dismissed and stricken from the record charges against a 25-year-old Greenville man who claims he was wrongfully jailed for two days last weekend.

Chief District Court Judge E.B. Aycock issued an order Monday afternoon to release William Lindell Little of Lot 35, Quail Hollow, after Little spent almost two days in the Pitt County Jail.

Little said he received a call July 23 from the Pitt County Sheriff's Department informing him a warrant had been issued against him and requesting he come in.

Little said he went to the sheriff's office Saturday afternoon and was subsequently arrested for contempt and held under a $500 cash bond. He remained in the Pitt County Jail until about noon Monday, jail officials said.

According to a warrant filed in Pitt County District Court, Little was arrested for failing to appear at a review hearing of his case in the Non-Jury Child Support Enforcement Court of Pitt County in June.

Little, who has been separated from his wife for about 20 months and is paying child support for his 3-year-old son, said he was told he didn't have to attend the meeting.

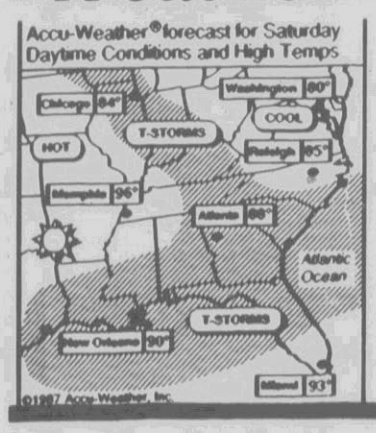

Richard L. Cannon, a Greenville lawyer who represented Little's wife, Eloise Price Little, at the June review session, filed the order for Little's arrest, which was signed by Judge James E. Reagan.

Ann Barnhill, a Greenville lawyer who has also represented the mother in the case, said Cannon based the filing on his interpretation that court papers filed in May called for Little's presence at the June review.

"It doesn't specify in the order that Little had to appear," Ms. Barnhill said. "The case appeared on the cal-

Brenda Farmer Harris, 30, of Stokes was arrested on a larceny charge by Greenville police Thursday.

Officer C.S. Candler said Ms. Harris was charged in connection with a 6:25 p.m. incident at the K mart store at Greenville Square Shopping Center.

Drug Arrest Made

Greenville police arrested Linda Smith Hicks, 34, of Walstonburg on a charge of obtaining drugs by false pretenses Thursday.

Detective D.R. Best said Ms. Hicks was charged about 7 p.m. in connection with an incident that occurred at Hollowell's Drug Store at the intersection of Sixth Street and Memorial Drive about 4:43 p.m.

Best said drugs confiscated from Ms. Hicks at the time of her arrest were valium, Darvocet, Indosin and Ficricit.

Fund Goal Met

The Pitt County Heart Association raised over $35,000 to meet the goal of its 1986-1987 fund-raising campaign, according to Dr. Pete Harris, association president.

"We're proud of the contributions of so many of our community's citizens and the dedication of our campaign volunteers involved in our campaign," Harris said.

Nancy Dudley will serve as the 1987-1988 president of the association.

The American Heart Association invests 75 percent of its income for research, community services and education programs. In Pitt County, the association offers programs such as Heart Treasure Chest and Heart Trunk Lady for school children, and Culinary Hearts Kitchen, blood pressure screenings and a food festival for adults and youth.

Research projects funded by the American Heart Association are being conducted at the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

According to reports, 45 percent of all deaths in Pitt County in 1985 were attributed to cardiovascular disease.

For information about the American Heart Association contact Carol Brown at 752-9989.

'Wonders Of Neuse'

A night program entitled "Wonders of the Neuse" will be presented Saturday at 9 p.m. at the Cliffs of the Neuse Amphitheater.

The park gate closes at 9 p.m. so participants who are not camping should arrive before then.

Jaycee Chief Praises Winterville Festival

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

WINTERVILLE — The Winterville Watermelon Festival is an example of how local Jaycees meet the goals of the state organization, says Rick Byrd, president of the North Carolina Jaycees.

"Local Jaycees run thousands of projects to support local events like the Watermelon Festival," he said this morning at the Winterville Town Hall. Byrd, who lives in Brevard, is visiting chapters in the southeast region this week.

There are three primary goals of the Jaycees — "to help people who can not help themselves ... , to improve the community, and to improve ourselves as individuals," Byrd said.

State Jaycees also have six main projects, he said. "We're real big on 'be smart, don't start.' Just say 'no' to drugs."

Other projects are the Jaycee Burn Center in Chapel Hill, the Boys' Home at Lake Wacamaw, cystic fibrosis, muscular dystrophy and cancer research and Duke Hospital.

Byrd will judge the Miss Rind Pageant (Womanless Beauty Pageant) today at 8 p.m. in the A.G. Cox multipurpose room, and he will participate in opening ceremonies of the festival Saturday at 9 a.m. in the melon patch across from Cox School.

Anna Harrington was crowned queen of the Watermelon Festival Thursday night and was the winner of the talent competition. First runner-up and the congeniality winner was Anne Cutler while Tonya Buck was second-runner up.

"We has a capacity crowd, total saleout," Thursday night, said Randy Avery, president of the Winterville Jaycees. "Everything's been going great."

Leaf Prices Mixed

VALDOSTA, Ga.(AP) — Prices on the Georgia-Florida flue-cured tobacco market varied by $1 to $3, the Federal-State Market News Service reported, as the mixed market created a few more gains than losses.

Averages ranged in price from a low of $113 for n2 to a high of $144 per hundred for grade x4km Thursday, the service said.

Little change was noted in quality with fair and low primings accounting for just under one-half of the light to moderate volume. Around 43 percent of marketings were classified as lemon and orange color.

No sales were held at the Vidalia market because of light volume.

Gross sales in the belt Wednesday amounted to 2,097,124 pounds and averaged $130.77 per hundred, up $2.88 from the previous day. For the season, 4,255,525 pounds have been auctioned, averaging $129.31 per hundred.

Growers placed 0.1 percent under loan Wednesday and 0.1 percent for the season.

Auction bid averages per hundred pounds on several U.S. grades and comparisons were: p4l, $136, unchanged; p5l, $130, up $5; p4f, $137, down $2; p5f, $128, unchanged; p4g, $131, down $3; n1l, $124, up $6; n1p0, $117, down $5; and n2, $113, up $1.

ONE DOLLAR MORE

This has happened to me about a dozen times: When leaving a particular eating establishment in Greenville and paying for the meals of a party of three, I have been charged exactly $1 more than my bill came to. I always correct the cashier. She acknowledges that I am right and I pay my correct amount. I advise others eating in restaurants to know what their tabs will come to, especially if there are several in the party. I have talked to the manager of the particular restaurant about this situation. I hope it won't happen there any more, so I won't give the name of the restaurant. I'll just suggest that everyone take care. T.S.

ECU Gets Grant For Caswell Unit

The Kate B. Reynolds Health Care Trust, a private foundation located in Winston-Salem, has awarded East Carolina University and Caswell Center, a state-supported institution in Kinston for the mentally retarded, a $167,317 grant to establish a training and service center.

"Our overall goal is to promote independence for people who are multi-handicapped," said Sarah Harrell, who will coordinate the project.

According to Ms. Harrell, many residents at Caswell and individuals in the community are unable to speak or move because of physical handicaps. With the proper equipment, however, communication and activities with these individuals are possible.

By using a simple board decorated with pictures — a glass of water for thirst, a plate of food for hunger, a bathroom for toileting needs — a resident who is unable to speak can indicate basic needs and feelings by pointing.

Special switches that can be activated by the tongue, eyebrow or chin enable those who can't move to perform simple tasks like turning a light on and off or opening a door.

"These are simple tasks, but they mean a lot to those who were able to do nothing before," Ms. Harrell said. "You can see it in their faces, how good it makes them feel when they're in control of their environment and are able to make something happen."

The bulk of the grant money will be used to purchase equipment for a lab in which individuals will be evaluated to determine what devices will best serve them. In most cases, the grant will also cover the cost of those devices.

"We won't be able to pay for a whole computer system," said Judy McCall, coordinator of activities between ECU and Caswell Center, who submitted the grant proposal through the School of Education. "We will, however, work with those individuals to find funding that will cover the cost."

In addition, the grant money will be used to pay the salaries of a part-time secretary, three ECU graduate students who will serve as assistants, and a speech-language pathologist, who will be hired to teach classes at ECU, conduct research and provide evaluative services for the project.

A lab will be set up at Caswell, but a van will be equipped to bring the electronics to any developmentally disabled people who reside in the institution's 32-county service area — whether or not they are mentally retarded.

During the center's second year, ECU's School of Home Economics will become involved. Students majoring in clothing design will learn how to make non-binding clothing for the physically impaired that will allow more independence in self-dressing skills.

The Kate B. Reynolds Health Care Trust was created in 1946 through provisions in the will of Mrs. William N. Reynolds for the purpose of improving health care in North Carolina. Approximately $3 million is awarded annually in grants to non-profit organizations throughout the state.

BLIND SAILOR — Jim Dickson poses next to his 36-foot yacht in Middleton, R.I., after the boat was launched recently. Dickson plans to set sail next week in an effort to become the first blind person to cross the Atlantic solo. (AP Laserphoto)

American Helicopter Hits Water

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The U.S. Navy continued searching the waters of the Persian Gulf today for three people missing in the crash of an American helicopter. At least one person was killed and five people were rescued, diplomatic sources said.

The Western diplomatic sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said one of the survivors was seriously injured in the crash of the SH-3G Sea King aircraft at 5:58 p.m. (10:58 a.m. EDT) Thursday. The helicopter crashed into the water as it was about to land aboard the LaSalle, the command ship of the nine-unit Middle East Task Force.

One of the survivors was flown during the night to the island state of Bahrain and taken to Salmaniya Hospital, where some of the 21 American sailors wounded in the May 17 missile attack on the USS Stark were treated.

The victim was on a respirator, the sources said, adding that they had no other information about his injuries.

Hospital personnel contacted by The Associated Press said they had strict instructions not to divulge any details about him.

The diplomatic sources reported that the four other survivors were in good condition, but could not say if they, too, had been flown to Bahrain or remained on one of the U.S. Navy ships in the gulf.

The crash of the Navy helicopter, which carried nine people, was the second fatal incident involving Americans in the gulf in two months.

Blind Sailor To Cast Off On Atlantic Solo Crossing

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — A blind sailor aided by a talking computer plans to cast off next week in his yacht The Eye-Opener on his quest to become the first sightless person to sail solo across the Atlantic Ocean.

"The last couple of months have been the most exciting and the most difficult of my life," Jim Dickson said Thursday.

The 41-year-old Dickson, who has been preparing for the 2,800-mile voyage to England for seven years, had planned to set sail more than a month ago but postponed his departure to make improvements to his 36-foot fiberglass sloop.

His planned route will avoid shipping lanes and will take him southeast from Rhode Island to the 38th parallel, then east almost to the Azore Islands and northeast to Plymouth, England.

Dickson, who estimates the voyage will take 28 to 32 days, will be escorted out of Narragansett Bay and into Plymouth harbor, but will be totally alone otherwise.

He said he is ready to leave whenever the winds cooperate.

"The next three or four days, we're going to have light winds from the wrong direction, and then no winds," but the weather is expected to improve by Tuesday or Wednesday, said Dickson.

He said he hoped his trip would demonstrate what blind people are capable of, and eventually help reduce the 70 percent unemployment rate among the blind.

"It isn't that they don't want to work, it isn't that they're not capable of working," said Dickson, an associate director of Project Vote, a national voter registration organization in Washington.

"It's that they don't get the chance."

Bob Cooper, director of the Governor's Commission on the Handicapped, said Dickson's voyage would show ways that existing technology can help blind people lead productive lives.

Dickson has outfitted his boat with more than $12,000 worth of special equipment bought with donations. The equipment includes the talking computer that will give him position, speed and wind direction. He also plans to have a ham radio aboard, and will keep an AM radio switched on at all times to detect storms.

"If I hear static from a lightning charge, I will lower sail and wait for it to go by," he said. "I'm not trying for speed, so I will always have a little less sail than I should."

He said the satellite tracking system Argos, used by solo yacht racers, will help him fix his position, and the U.S. and British governments have agreed to help as well.

"The Royal Air Force will locate me if my navigation is less than precise," said Dickson, who suffers from the degenerative eye disease retinitis pigmentosa and has been legally blind since age 7, when he lost 80 percent of his vision.

He will fight boredom with 25 books he's bringing along, including James Joyce's epic novel, "Ulysses," Will Durant's "Caesar and Christ" and "some cheap detective novels."

Dickson said he's looking forward to catching up on his reading. "I haven't been able to read anything but sailboat books for the last six months."

He described himself as a sailing enthusiast, but said he has never before sailed solo for more than an afternoon. "Panic? Sure. Sure," he said.

But Dickson said the hardest part, preparing the boat, is over, and he is looking forward to reaching the open sea.

"In a very real way, disability is in the mind of the able-bodied. It is not in the bodies of the disabled," he said.

Graduate Classes Set In Eastern Counties

East Carolina University will offer graduate courses for master's degrees or teacher certification at classroom sites in 15 counties beginning this fall.

The courses are being offered through the Graduate Extension Program in the ECU Division of Continuing Education.

Courses are open to all prospective students. Students wishing to apply the course work toward a graduate degree must be admitted to the ECU Graduate School before the course work is completed.

Registration for each course will be held at the first class meeting.

For more information contact the Division of Continuing Education, ECU by calling 757-6109.

In Greene County, a course in the criminal justice system (SOCW 6600) will be offered at the Eastern Correctional Center in Maury on Mondays from 6:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. beginning Aug. 24.

Special courses for public school teachers will be offered on the ECU campus. ECU. Nutrition Education for Teachers and Health Education Coordinators (HOME 5007) will be offered on Tuesdays from 6:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. beginning Aug. 25 to a limited number of kindergarten through 12th-grade certified teachers with all fees waived. Contact the Division of Continuing Education at 757-6143.

Also, a seminar in regional geography (GEOG 5393) will be offered to middle grades social studies teachers who are, or will be, teaching geography-based social studies courses in grades five through seven. The course will be taught on Tuesdays from 6 p.m. through 9 p.m. beginning Aug. 25. Regular on-campus procedures must be followed in registering for this course. Contact the Division of Continuing Education at 757-6109.

GREENSBORO (AP) — A Greensboro man who admitted to the slashing death of a motel manager last year and to helping dispose of evidence in another murder three days earlier, was sentenced Thursday to 30 years in prison.

Timothy Levon Wharton, 31, was charged with the second-degree murder of Fred Blackwell of Reidsville, manager of the Star Motel on U.S. 29 just north of Greensboro. Blackwell's throat was slit, and he was stabbed in the back three times on July 9, 1986.

Wharton also was charged with accessory after the fact of murder in connection with the July 6, 1986, stabbing death of Noah Christopher Hargett.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Remain Flexible

The U.S. Department of Justice's approval of the district election plan for the Pitt County Board of Education is more proof that the federal governent does not know what's best for Pitt County.

The blame for the plan's implementation, however, falls on the shoulders of the school officials who proposed it for Justice Department approval. The current board of education made the wrong decision when it opted for a 12-person board elected entirely by district voting.

The board allowed itself to be persuaded into approving a plan certain to get Justice Department acceptance rather than acting in the best interest of Pitt County's voters. Now the county is saddled with a less-than-desirable method of electing school board leadership for two reasons.

First, a 12-member board is too large to govern a school system. Eight members would be preferable and would competently represent the county's citizens. The larger the board, the more difficult a concensus is to reach.

Second, having no members elected at-large is not consistent with the concept of sound local government. A school board elected entirely by residency districts creates a precariously narrow body for setting public policy. Each member of this board, which makes decisions for all the citizens, is voted into office by a minority of the people. This situation sets the stage for disunity, diviseness and squabbling — problems already plaguing decision-making.

At-large representation is a safety valve against such provincialism and bickering. Since at-large board members are voted on by the entire county, they answer politically to all citizens. Providing this accountability would have been the preferred approach to a new election method.

For now, the issue of electing the county's school board is legally resolved. More attention can be focused on instruction and other issues directly affecting the classroom.

Simply because the Department of Justice approves an election plan doesn't mean it is a good plan. Neither does it mean a federally accepted plan should not be challenged if it doesn't prove an effective means of electing viable leadership.

Officials should remain cognizant of the newly-approved election method's drawbacks and be prepared to adjust it if problems arise.

More Than Melons

Winterville's Watermelon Festival is not just a matter of melons.

It's a matter of community pride. The event, scheduled today through Sunday, is yet another addition to the festival mania that has seized southern Pitt County in the past 15 years.

The towns of Winterville, Ayden and Grifton now all sport festivals. Grifton honors shad in the spring, Winterville cuts the melon in summer and in September, Ayden cooks collards and invites the world for supper.

There appears to be stiff competition between the towns to see who can be the most ludicrous.

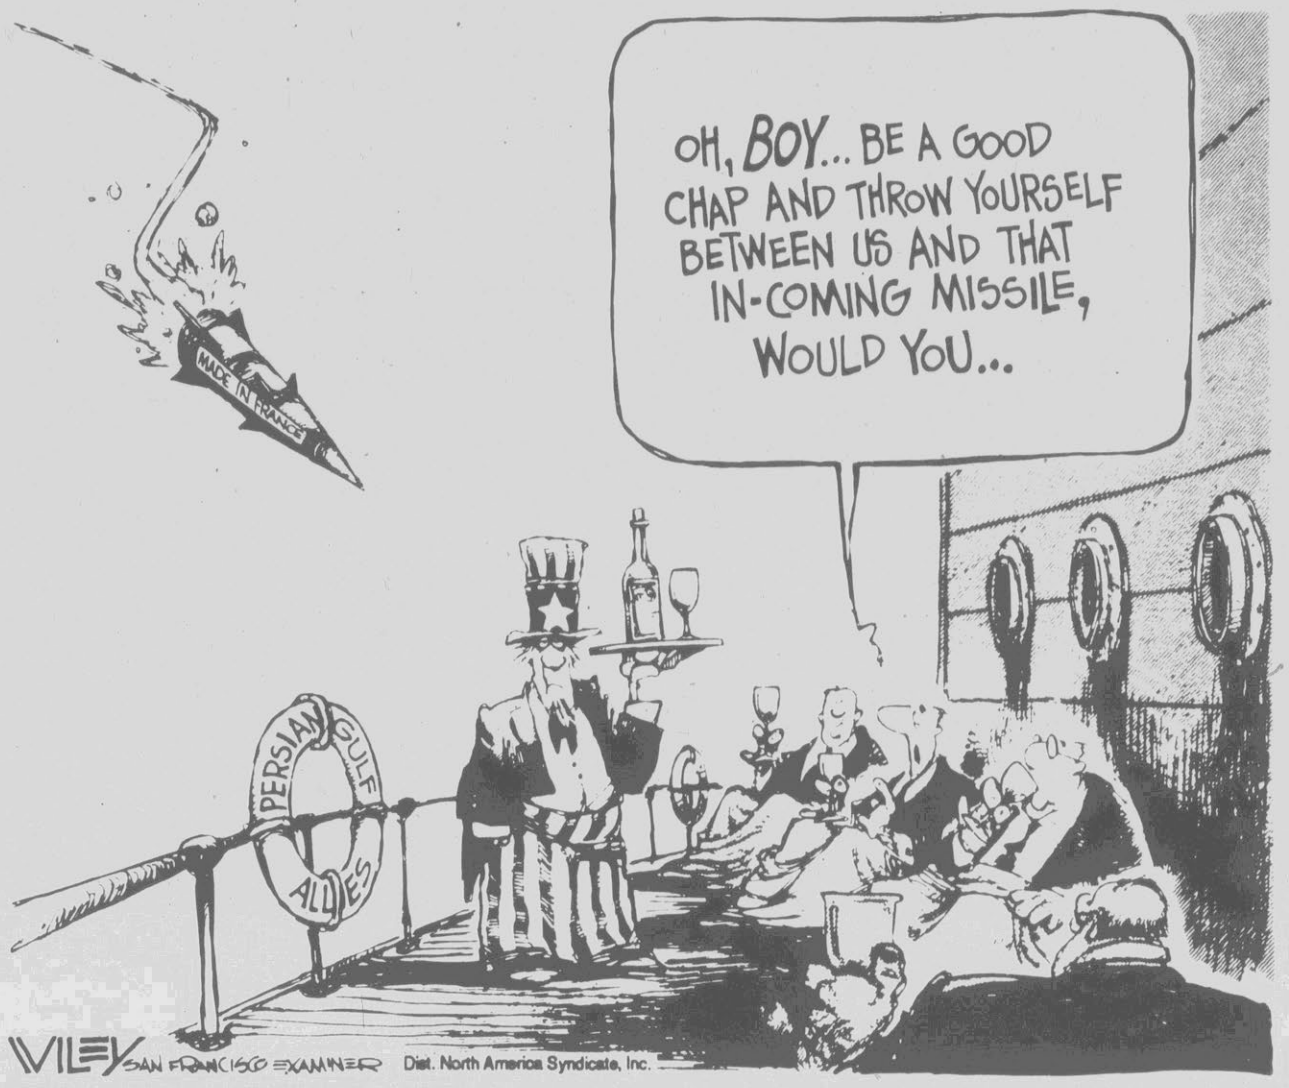

Winterville, for example, has Wondermelon, a rotund fellow dressed in green leotards and red lace. Classy guy. Ayden has Mort Hurst, the Collard King, who holds the world's record for most collards eaten — with tomato catsup. It's rumored Hurst is branching out and will enter the watermelon eating contest in Winterville this weekend. Grifton has Eat Mo' Shad, who has appeared in everything from running shoes to a space suit.

The festival events seem to grow every year. For example, both Winterville and Grifton have womanless beauty pageants. The attributes displayed at these gatherings are rumored to get larger and larger each year. So do the audiences.

Another example: Ayden has a parade that just won't quit, and gets bigger annually. Just when you think all the bands are gone, here comes another one. The same goes for horses. They just keep coming, a fact which attests to the rich character of that festival.

Actually, these three communities don't need to worry about competition from neighbors. Silliness and tomfoolery aside, each event is entertaining and fun in its own right.

Besides, Pitt County is big enough for all three festivals. The more the merrier. So go to Winterville and celebrate the melon this weekend, citizens. Enjoy the fruits of the summer and a large dose of community pride.

U.S. Sweeping Mines Alone In Gulf

For many Americans, the sight of U.S. combat ships steaming to Kuwait behind the tanker that they were supposed to be escorting was one more dismal link in a chain of events that extends back to the U.S. defeat in Vietnam. For many of America's friends, the sight was another sign of American weakness and a new reason to fear a lack, or a withdrawal, of U.S. commitment.

The obvious question was how the United States could have failed to anticipate a mine attack when the Iranians had been using such weapons for months — one of the ships hit was a Soviet tanker.

One answer is that the United States did anticipate the risk. Long before the U.S. re-registration of some Kuwaiti tankers, U.S. military planners identified mines as one of the two greatest risks that the convoys faced — and said this in classified briefings to Congress. Long before the Bridgeton was hit, Washington recognized that it needed mine-warfare support from European allies. It wanted the small Saudi mine fleet to be more active. And it wanted Kuwait to allow U.S. minesweeping helicopters into that nation.

Washington sought this support, but did not get it. France and Britain both increased their presence in the Persian Gulf. But both were afraid that joint action could become a major domestic political issue and possibly lead to pressure to reduce their presence. Other European nations were afraid of taking sides or losing trade with Iran.

Kuwait and Saudi Arabia felt that they already were taking serious political risk. Kuwait is having to quietly purge many Shia Moslems from sensitive jobs and positions, and faces strong internal opposition from Iranian and other expatriate movements to any U.S. force being based in the country.

Saudi Arabia has every reason to fear direct military confrontation with Iran, particularly when it still cannot predict whether the United States will stay in the region. The Saudis already had agreed to expand the patrol activity of their U.S.operated AWACS aircraft to cover the entire gulf, and were providing quiet support to the U.S. task force. But they feared losing ships from a small, young navy that is just beginning to become a fighting force. Now that the mine incident has made the threat a certain risk, rather than just a potential one, recent leaks to the press concerning U.S. negotiations to improve mine sweeping by nations like Kuwait and Saudi Arabia could force them to delay expanding their support.

The broader answer, however, is that the United States could not wait for these fears and uncertainties to be resolved. The risk of mines was only one possible move in a complicated game of international three-dimensional chess in which the United States had both a valid policy and valid military capabilities to implement it. U.S. military planners knew that they could never be ready to deal with every contingency. If not mines, there could be night attacks by Iranian Revolutionary Guards in small craft, or suicide attacks in small boats or light aircraft by groups claiming to represent some radical movement. There could be an attack on any U.S. embassy, or more hostage-taking. Nothing that anyone could do would close all of Iran's options.

The United States had to give priority to politics over military considerations. America could not, as a superpower, respond with a large-scale attack on Iran's many vulnerable military facilities or threaten its even more vulnerable oil exports or arms imports. It has to give Iran the initiative, and wait until Iran establishes a clear enough pattern of hostility to justify a shift from defense to attack.

The United States is trying to use its presence in the gulf as a lever to both influence Iran to accept the U.N. peace resolution and help persuade Iraq to sufficiently limit its attacks on Iran to give the peace initiative a chance. If the U.N. initiative offers little hope of success as long as the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini is alive, it is still the last, best hope of an end to a war that has caused more than a million casualties, and that affects the control of up to 50 percent of the world's proven oil reserves.

Equally important, the U.S. presence in the gulf could not be treated as some kind of scene from "Rambo," in which an unscathed hero destroys a villain in a few moments of violence. The United States is in the gulf for the long haul. It has to accept all the political and military costs of building a consensus around a position that it may have to maintain for several years.

The benefits of accepting these realities are very real. The West needs gulf oil — not only now but for the next quarter of a century. The United States needs a secular Iraq as a buffer to Khomeini's distortions of Islam and Shia beliefs and dreams of regional dominion. It needs to contain Iran without permanently alienating or closing off any hope of a peaceful solution. It needs to succeed by reassuring its friends and allies that they can take the risk of supporting the United States. But we can't wait for them to act.

Over the next year or more we will have to take continuing risks, and we will probably pay in terms of further military losses. It is important to point out, however, that carefully limited military action in an uncertain political environment always presents such price tags.

Testimony From A 'Different Regan'

WASHINGTON — He didn't know when sparrows fell on the White House lawn after all. And all those legends about his having been a "strongman" with an iron grip on the White House staff, the all-powerful guarder of the president's door, aren't right either. That, at least, is Donald T. Regan's latest account of his service as Ronald Reagan's chief of staff.

The self-portrait Regan drew Thursday before the Iran-contra congressional committees was of someone who knew a little about a lot of things, but not much about the dirty details as they applied to the Iran-contra affair. The erstwhile Wall Street wizard, the tough take-charge former decorated Marine, the author of a book on the absolute necessity for proper record-keeping and controlling a big organization's paperwork flow couldn't even get a grip on the documents being presented to the president or see that they were preserved, according to his testimony. And when he attempted to assert control, he failed.

He found out, he testified, that what he believed to have been notes taken during the president's daily intelligence briefings weren't notes at all. He knew almost nothing about the National Security Council's secret operational activities to keep the contras forces alive "body and soul." He knew nothing about the secret network of covert operators — retired Air Force major general Richard V. Secord, Albert Hakim & Co. — who worked directly under the guidance of Lt. Col. Oliver L. North to ship arms to Iran and resupply the contras with arms and materiel. He lamented that he never even saw an NSC organization chart, had no idea how many people worked for it out of the White House or what its budget was. And far from supervising the activities of national security adviser John M. Poindexter, he took pains to say that Poindexter had an independent relationship with the president. His job, he said, was mostly confined to providing the NSC with the proper administrative support.

"Again I'm trying to make that distinction that he didn't report to me," Regan said, referring to Poindexter. "So you keep using the word 'supervision.' I would say 'liasion' ... would be a closer descriptive word. Or 'sharing' or something of that nature, rather than 'supervision.' And during his first days on the job, I would occasionally say to him, you know, 'Is everything all right? Is there anything we can do?' You see, from an administrative point of view we had to give them support — office space, White House passes, parking spaces, all that folderol of administration and wanting to make sure that all of that was being handled."

This picture of Regan, the benign keeper of White House passes and parking spaces, differs dramatically from the description stamped in the public mind by the Tower report earlier this year and in the private accounts about him that have circulated for years among political leaders of both parties in Washington.

The Tower report, drafted by a presidential commission appointed to investigate the causes of the Iran-contra scandal, described Regan as the strongest White House chief of staff in recent memory, an executive who "asserted personal control over the White House staff and sought to extend this control to the national security adviser." The report primarily blamed him: "He must bear primary repsonsiblity for the chaos that descended upon the White House when such disclosure (of the Iran arms sales and diversion of profits to Nicaraguan contra forces) did occur."

During his time as President Reagan's chief of staff, Regan's brusque and peremptory manner angered many members of Congress, not the least of them among the Republic hierarchy, especially in the Senate, whose members he is said to have called, "My board of directors."

That Don Regan was absent Thursday on Capitol Hill. Instead of arrogance, he presented a picture of amiability. He was breezy, wisecracking, self-deprecating. Sen. William S. Cohen, R-Maine, suggested this was a "new Don Regan," one who had "slipped the surly bonds of public service."

Unlike Admiral Poindexter, who could not recall much about the crucial conversations in his final hours in the White House, Regan had vivid recollections of them. He described how he burst into Poindexter to confront him about the discovery of the scheme to divert Iran arms sales profits to the contras, and found Poindexter sitting alone in his NSC conference room, eating breakfast from a tray. He asked Poindexter, "What the heck happened here?" and remembers precisely Poindexter's reaction:

"He adjusted his glasses, he dabbed at his mouth with his napkin, put it down. He said, 'Well, I guess I should have looked into it more, but I didn't.' He said, 'I knew that Ollie was up to something but ... I didn't know what.'

Strength For Today

Christians have often been ridiculed. Some years ago a papyrus was found in Rome upon which was a crude drawing of a jackass nailed to a cross. Beneath the picture, written in Latin by some scoffing unbeliever of the first century, were the words, "Alexander worships this God."

And there is a story of how during this same century an unbelieving Roman said to a humble Christian, "So you worship the carpenter of Nazareth, do you? well, if he is a carpenter, what do you suppose he is doing now?" To which the Christian replied, "He is making a coffin for your emperor."

Christians can afford to be laughed at, then and now, because they know that eternity is on their side. They know that the God of the believer is from everlasting to everlasting, and his truth endurest forever.

Babbitt Puts Tax Increase At Heart Of Presidential Bid

WASHINGTON — By proposing a $40 billion to $50 billion a year national consumption tax, Democratic presidential contender Bruce Babbitt has ventured where his rivals for the nomination have dared not tread: He's put a tax increase at the heart of his bid for the White House.

"It is time to end the conspiracy of evasion by our candidates for national leadership," former Arizona Gov. Babbitt said as he spelled out his proposal for either a 5 percent national sales tax or a European-style value added tax (VAT) in a speech Thursday at the National Press Club. "We've been dancing around the truth, nickel-and-diming the deficit with proposals that don't scratch the surface of the problem."

None of his competitors in the Democratic presidential contest favors adopting a new sales tax or increasing income taxes as a way to address the federal budget deficit. And while some see a need for new revenues — either in the form of excise taxes, oil-import fees or improved collection of existing taxes — most also adopt the basic line enunciated by Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn.: "Taxes should be considered only as a last resort."

Babbitt, who has been trying to carve out a niche as the Democrat gutsy enough to say the unspeakable on a range of tax-and-spending issues, expressed thinly veiled contempt for the tax postures of his rivals. "Let's be honest," he said. "Does anybody really think we can balance our budget with a sin tax or an oil fee? Is there one serious person who thinks we'll find a 10th of the answer in 'enforcement?' "

The tax he proposes would work in one of two ways; he said he hadn't decided which: either a a national sales tax, imposed at the point of retail sale, or as a VAT, imposed incrementally at all steps in the manufacturing process, and paid by the consumer in higher prices. In order to eliminate the regressive feature of such taxes, Babbitt calls for exempting such items as food, medicine, housing and clothing, and for providing off-setting income-tax relief for the poor.

"You can make it as progressive as you want to," he said, "and I am committed to working with Congress to do so."

While 45 states impose a sales tax, ranging from 3 to 7.5 percent, there has never been a national sales tax. The idea of one, corrected for regressivity, has in recent years accumulated advocates among the ranks of liberal and neo-liberal economists. Babbitt said his decicion to go that route came as a result of conversations with economist Lester Thurow, among others.

A national sales tax is far from popular with the public, however. Surveys taken in recent years show substantially more resistance to a national sales tax than to excise taxes or surtaxes on corporations or upper-income taxpayers. Considered on its own, a national sales tax is opposed by roughly a 2-to-1 ratio.

Moreover, many Democrats continue to feel it is politically suicidal for the party to focus on taxes. "The difficulty is that when the voters listen to a Democrat, sometimes what they hear is that we really aren't sure what we want to do, but we need the taxes to do it," said one party strategist, who asked not to be identified.

Others counter that in order to build credibility on fiscal matters, Democrats need to talk frankly about taxes — but they should do so in the context of new initiatives they plan to fund. Polling data released Thursday by Louis Harris showed, for example, that, by 65 percent to 33 percent, Americans support increases in federal taxes to pay for improvements in education.

The poll, commissioned by the Democratic Governors Association, also shows that despite widespread apprehensiveness about the economy, voters give Republicans a 50 percent to 40 percent edge over Democrats in "keeping the economy prosperous" — suggesting that the old tag of Democrats as profligate tax-and-spenders still has bite.

In their stump speeches, all eight of the announced or likely Democratic candidates focus on the unprecedented size of deficits of the Reagan era. This raises another concern among party strategists: With the annual deficit expected to drop this year, voter concern over the issue may wane.

Here is a rundown of the Democratic candidates' positions on taxes and deficits:

•Babbitt: In addition to proposing a national consumption tax, says he would cut spending by $40 billion to $60 billion a year by imposing a needs tests on every government expenditure from defense to farm programs to entitlements.

•Sen. Joseph Biden Jr., Del: Talks about taxes only as a last resort; says it would be bad policy to change the income tax after last year's major overhaul; says the most promising way to attack the budget deficit is to persuade banks to forgive Third World debt, thereby freeing up foreign markets for U.S. goods. Proposes an excise tax on alcohol and cigarettes, an oil-import fee pegged to a world price of $19 to $24 a barrel, and improved tax collection.

•Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis: Opposes a national sales tax because he considers it "regressive." Also opposes oil-import fees, excise tax or income-tax increases. Says that "no serious candidate can rule out a revenue increase" but says that as president he would first launch a program to collect $110 billion a year in unpaid federal taxes. He cites one congressional study estimating that $35 billion could be collected by the fifth year of an agressive enforcement plan; many of his rivals says the figure is unrealistic.

•Rep. Richard A. Gephardt, Mo.: Supports a $5 a barrel oil-import fee, an increase in the minimum corporate-tax provision of the new tax law and improved enforcement. As a last resort, "he doesn't rule anything out." Says a national sales tax would require hiring of 30,000 more revenue agents.

•Gore: Says he won't rule anything out but that he he does not have any plans to raise taxes of any kind. Says the deficit should be reduced by stimulating economic growth, cutting wasteful spending and adopting an arms-reduction agreement.

•Jesse Jackson: Has said wealthy individuals and coporations are "not paying their fair share" of taxes but hasn't proposed any tax increase and says he would do so as a last resort. Supports an oil-import fee, with the revenues targeted to infrastructure repairs rather than deficit reduction.

•Rep. Patricia Schroeder, Colo.: Opposes tax increases unless as a last resort, touts her fiscal conservatism — "I have got a more fiscally conservative voting record than Jack Kemp," she said this week — and proposes reducing the deficit by a "burden-sharing" scheme that would threaten developed nations with a "defense-protection fee" on exports to the United States unless they increase their defense spending, thereby by reducing the U.S. military obligations.

•Sen. Paul Simon, Ill.: Boasts of his oppositon to the tax laws that cut the top marginal tax rate from 70 percent to 28 percent but does not support a tax increase for wealthy taxpayers. Supports excise taxes, an oil-import fee and a balanced-budget ammendment, but says the best way to reduce the deficit is to reduce unemployment through a public-works jobs plan.

Policy Change

Mikhail S. Gorbachev's acceptance last week of the American "zero-zero" option — a worldwide ban on medium-range and short-range missiles — along with Soviet proposals for ending the Gulf War, have focused attention on Europe and the Middle East. It is in Asia and the Pacific, however, that some of the most interesting changes in Soviet foreign policy may be occurring.

A year ago Tuesday, Gorbachev traveled to the Pacific port city of Vladivostok to deliver one of the key speeches of his tenure. The principal focus was China — Gorbachev suggested that the Soviet Union might compromise its position towards the divisive Amur River boundary dispute — a dispute that in 1969 led to armed clashes. He declared as well that the Soviet Union might withdraw a substantial number of troops from Mongolia, and stated that the Soviet Union "is prepared to discuss (with China) concrete steps aimed at proportionate lowering of the level of land forces." In part to assuage China, the Soviet leader also gave notice that six regiments would be withdrawn from Afghanistan by the end of the year.

Significant passages of the Vladivostok speech concerned Japan. Gorbachev expressed satisfaction over the January 1986 visit of Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze to Japan and added that the possibility existed of a future "top level" visit. The speech also included a bid for political and economic ties with many of the island microstates of the South Pacific, support for New Zealand in its anti-nuclear policies and a suggestion to the new government of the Philippines that an end to the U.S. military bases there would not go "unanswered."

Noteworthy parallels exist between Soviet policy towards Europe and the Vladivostok speech. As in Europe, there is in Asia a concerted Soviet effort to establish military parity and, where possible, superiority. Arms control is being suggested as a means to reduce forces along the border with China and to promote regional stability. The desire for trade, investment and technology is made explicit. In many countries — Japan in particular — the Soviet Union seeks to discourage support for military expansion; in every case it is trying to weaken ties between regional states and Washington by fanning opposition to the U.S. military (especially nuclear) presence. Indeed, one can now speak of the "Europeanization" of Moscow's Asia policy.

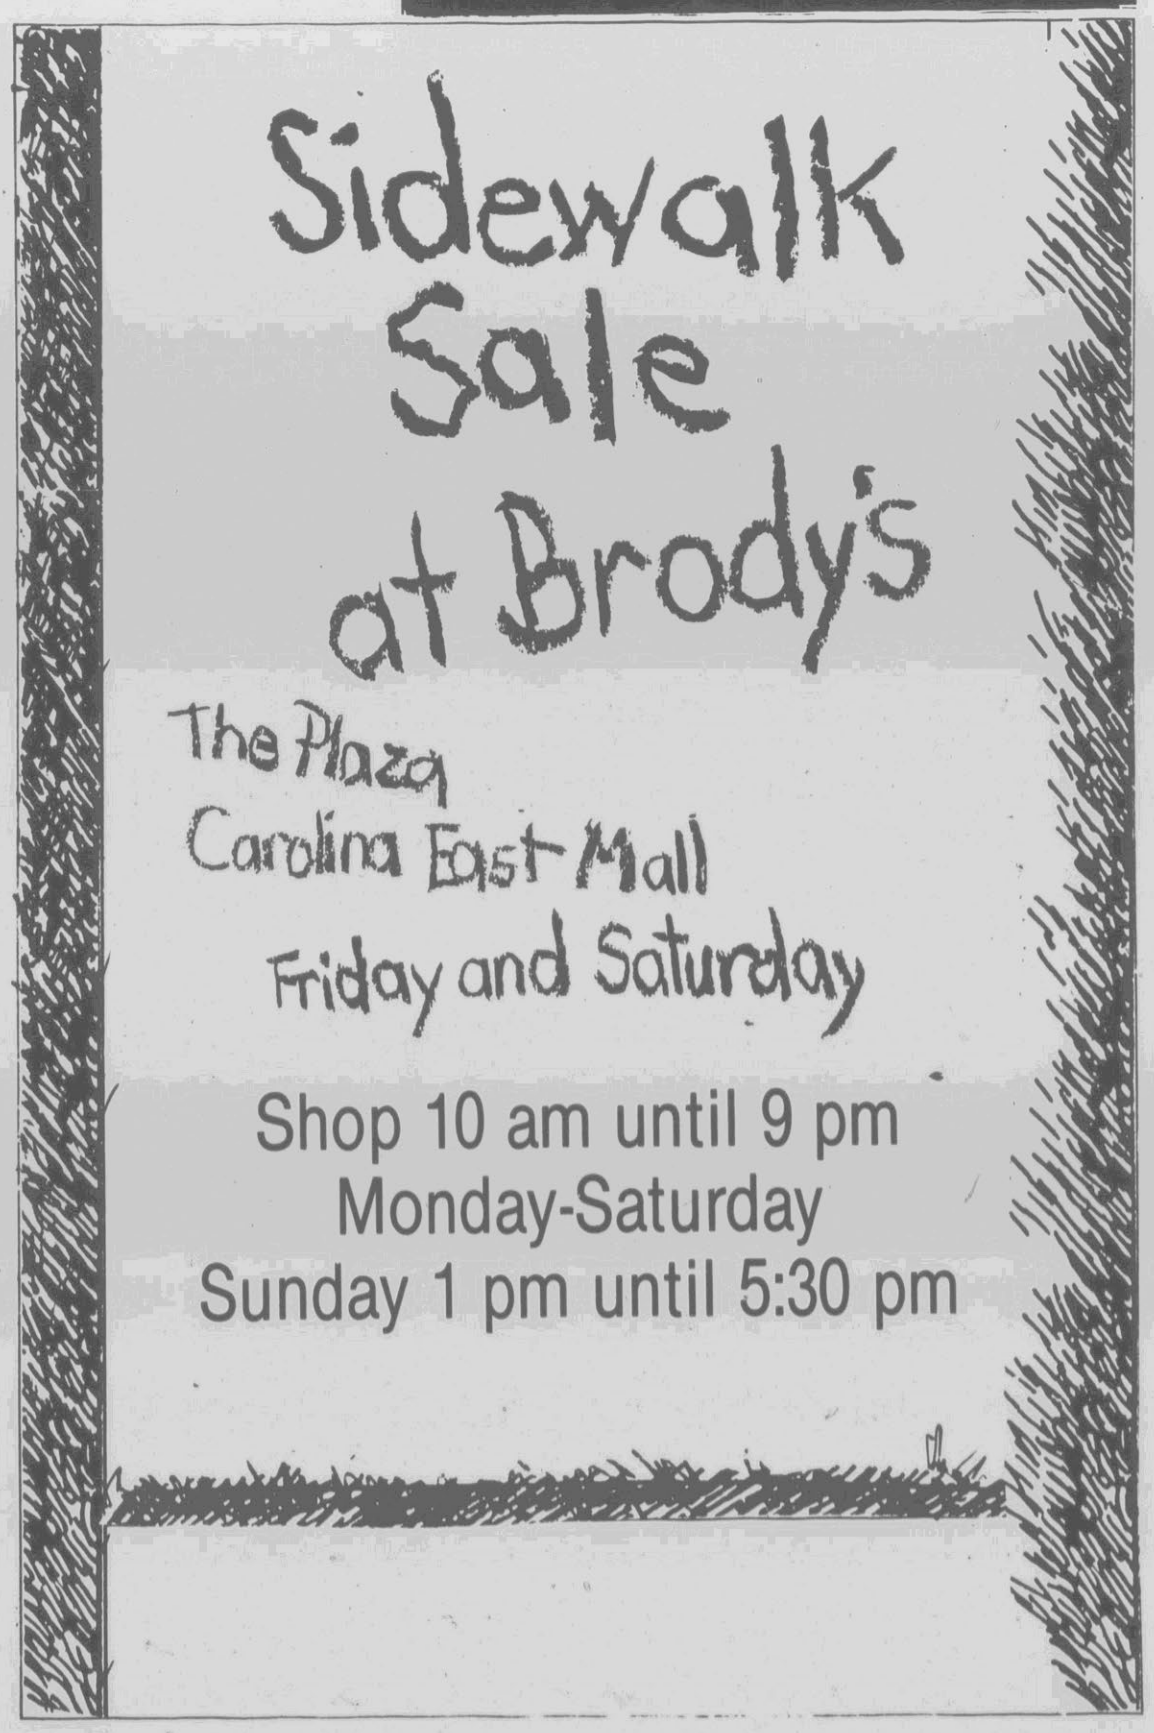

Afghanistan has moved to the top of Gorbachev's agenda. The presence of some 115,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan is costly in a number of ways: The war is expensive to wage, unpopular at home and hurts the Soviet Union's reputation in the Moslem world.

16 Areas Under Consideration

Potential Sites For Waste Treatment Plant Reduced

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission has narrowed to 16 the number of sites under consideration for a comprehensive hazardous waste treatment plant and now must begin the process of choosing one location, a commission member said.

"We still must get down to a single site for this facility," said commission member Alvis G. Turner, a professor in the department of environmental science and engineering at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

"From here on, any elimination of sites is going to have to be based on economics, personal and professional judgment. ... transportation and (whether) the site can be permitted," Turner said Thursday after the commission announced its list of remaining sites.

Six sites remain under consideration in Rowan County, three are in Lincoln County and one site remains under consideration in Davidson, Davie, Durham, Guilford, Iredell, Rockingham and Wake counties.

The sites rejected included one near Farmville in Pitt County.

"We have mixed feelings on the board," Richard D. Massinger, chairman of the Rowan County Board of Commissioners, said after the meeting. "We have some who are very interested in it, some who want more information and one or two who don't want any part of it."

The commission is scheduled to meet again Aug. 13 to discuss the effects of legislation that may affect the suitability of those sites. A bill ratified last month concerns regulations on the wastewater discharge from a commercial hazardous-waste treatment plant.

The commission has until Oct. 1 to select a site for the estimated $20 million plant, which would use incinerators and chemical processes to render toxic wastes essentially harmless.

"We are committed to finding an appropriate site for a facility that will safely and efficiently manage much of our state's hazardous waste, thereby protecting the health and well-being of our citizens and our environment," said commission chairwoman Deborah G. Parker.

But the president of a Durham-based environmental group charged that the commission was more concerned with pleasing industry than with considering environmental factors in the selection process.

One of the potential locations that passed the most recent cut is the Gentry Site in Durham, which the group Save The Water opposes because it is in the watershed of Falls Lake, Raleigh's source of drinking water.

"We're mystified as to how this commission can possibly consider a site close to the Raleigh-Durham area's drinking water," said Jim Clarke. "We think it's environmentally reckless and irresponsible."

But a spokeswoman for the commission disagreed, saying the panel is concerned about the location of the site.

"The commission has always been concerned about drinking water quality and groundwater quality," said commission spokeswoman Kathy Neal. "The potential is always there for spills because trucks carrying hazardous wastes are on the roads every day.... and pretty much everybody is in somebody's watershed."

As for the quality of discharge, the facility "will treat the wastewater to drinking water standards before it will be discharged," she said. "We are concerned about both discharge and the possibility of a spill."

Twenty-eight sites were removed from consideration Thursday because they did not meet the commission's guidelines on acreage — a minimum of 50 acres; population density; surface water or ground water.

Given the uncertainty of the effects of the new law, the commission reserved the right to return to the counties to look at other sites, Ms. Neal said. commission spokeswoman Kathy Neal said.

Commission members also adopted two more guidelines Thursday. The first rules out property containing archaeological sites, excluding the North Battleboro Property in Nash County.

The second guideline ruled out sites more than 75 miles from the center of hazardous waste generated in North Carolina and shipped off-site for treatment. That change eliminated 11 sites.

The commission will hold public meetings in those counties in which sites remain after the effects of the new state law are determined.

POOL PARTNERSHIP — Catawba College students Karen Richardson and Brian Hegedus decided dorm life had to have something else so the two seniors, joined by a couple of friends, bought "a top of the line pool with steps and sliding board." Watkins 'Testing' Scene For Possible Gubernatorial Run

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Wearing a 10-gallon hat and cowboy boots, a beaming Rep. Billy Watkins entered the arena at the North Carolina State Fairgrounds astride a mule — the symbol of the Democratic Party.

Later, the Granville County lawyer dipped a foot — shoe and all — into a metal washtub filled with water and proclaimed the beginning of a two-month period when he will "test the waters" for a possible bid for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

The easygoing atmosphere of Thursday night's fund-raiser, which drew a crowd of about 750, stood in contrast to the day's other events, which included a sharp exchange between Watkins and state Democratic Chairman Jim Van Hecke and a Democratic official's charge that Watkins was holding the General Assembly "hostage."

The developments reflected growing tension between Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, Watkins and their followers in the state Senate and House, where the feud is prolonging what threatens to become one of the longest sessions ever.

Watkins, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and the top ally of House Speaker Liston Ramsey, told the lawmakers, lobbyists and supporters from his home district at his barbecue supper he would form an exploratory committee to measure his support across the state.

He said he hoped to decide by late September or early October whether to battle Jordan for the nomination to challenge Republican Gov. Jim Martin in 1988.

"It is important that the people of North Carolina have a choice," Watkins told the crowd. "We want someone that can shoulder the burden and offer leadership."

Earlier, Watkins fired the opening salvo in the war of words by telling a reporter Van Hecke had violated party rules by openly demonstrating his support of Jordan, who recommended Van Hecke for the Democratic chairmanship.

Watkins said Van Hecke should step aside "if he cannot refrain from choosing persons in the Democratic Party and violating the rules of the Democratic Party which specifically (say) the chairman shall not participate in the primary."

At a news conference, Van Hecke insisted he would exercise even-handed leadership if Jordan and Watkins face off.

"If there is a primary for governor, then we'll provide all candidates with the same (resources) ... and won't show any partisanship," Van Hecke said. "If Billy's uncomfortable with that he can be uncomfortable with it. I'm not resigning."

Shortly thereafter, 2nd District Democratic Chairman James P. Green announced he planned to run for Watkins' state House seat.

Green, a Henderson physician, charged that Watkins was using his powers as Appropriations Committee chairman to delay enactment of the state budget and adjournment of the Legislature.

"I think he literally has the Legislature hostage," Green said. "My message is that the party is being weakened by the divisiveness that he is bringing about."

Green said he expected to run even if Watkins decided to seek re-election instead of entering the governor's race. But Green said he would change his mind if Watkins changed his behavior and demonstrated he was "genuinely interested in ... supporting a united Democratic Party."

Green's announcement raised eyebrows because he cast it in terms of a challenge to Watkins when it wasn't necessary.

The two cannot run head-to-head; and since their district has three seats, both could win. At least one seat probably will be open since the incumbent, Rep. Jim Crawford, D-Granville, has said he'll run for lieutenant governor.

IN THE STATE

NAACP Suit

MONROE, N.C. (AP) — Richmond County has joined the growing ranks of North Carolina counties the NAACP is suing to force single-member district election systems.

The Richmond County branch of the NAACP, the state chapter and six local plaintiffs Monday sued the Richmond County Board of Education and the Richmond Board of County Commissioners. The suit, filed under the Voting Rights Act, seeks to change the at-large method of electing members to both government bodies.

"We feel our voting strength has definitely been diluted with the system they are using now," Dr. Fred McQueen, Richmond County NAACP president, said Thursday.

Frat Houses

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Building inspectors have condemned a seventh University of North Carolina fraternity house.

The Kappa Alpha house was cited for missing window screens, holes in the walls and debris throughout the house, said Darrell Wall, a town inspector. The town has condemned every fraternity house inspected so far this summer, Wall said.

The fraternity has 30 days to fix up the condemned house, Wall said.

Fatality

MARION, N.C. (AP) — Robert Lingerfelt, sports editor of The McDowell News, was killed Wednesday when his car was struck by a truck in downtown Marion, police said.

Lingerfelt, 32, died as a result of injuries he suffered in the accident. A passenger, Donna Oliver, 38, of Marion, was critically injured.

The driver of the truck, Curtis Dale McKinney, 20, of Marion, was charged with failing to have a driver's license, driving while impaired, possession of marijuana, hit and run driving and felony death by vehicle, police said.

His bond was set at $25,000.

Free Advice

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The city of Statesville has been chosen to participate in a nine-month project that will provide free consultation to help cities capitalize on local resources.

The free financial advice will be worth about $40,000.

Statesville, along with two South Carolina cities — Rock Hill and Columbia — were chosen to participate in the Entrepreneurial City Project administered by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

Under the program, eight cities in HUD's Southeast region will receive free consultations with the National Development Council.

Panel Wants Tough Campus Drug Policy

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — An eight-member University of North Carolina Board of Governors committee has requested a new draft of a statewide drug policy proposal after members were dissatisfied with the first effort.

Some committee members said Thursday they want a new drug policy draft that mandates expulsion for students and firing of faculty and employees on the 16-campus system who sell hard drugs such as heroin and cocaine.

Committee member Walter Davis advocated suspending any student taking "hard narcotics" and expelling any student caught selling them. "I think that should be on the first page of the (university) catalogue they send out," Davis said.

Committee member Joan Fox also advocated that penalties at different campuses should be the same. "I don't think if at Appalachian (State University) you're caught with drugs and suspended for three weeks, then at (UNC) Chapel Hill you should be suspended for a semester," she said.

Board of Governors Chairman Philip Carson charged the committee in March with writing a proposed drug policy for the system after the board rejected a policy proposed by system President C.D. Spangler Jr. Some board members said then the policy was vague and weak because it didn't specify penalties, but said only that drug use was prohibited.

On Thursday, committee members discussed written suggestions for a policy that, like Spangler's proposal, allows campuses to develop specific policies and penalties.

"This to me is nothing," Davis said of the suggestions. "It just says we don't like drugs and you shouldn't do it."

The committee directed university system administrators to write another draft spelling out punishment for the most serious drug violations. The committee will meet next month to discuss the new draft.

Agreement Reached For Smith Burial

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A compromise has been reached to settle the dispute over the design of a mausoleum for Kate Smith, and the singer who died last summer will be laid to rest by the end of the year.

"We hope construction will begin next week," the Rev. Robert Lamitie, parish priest at St. Agnes Catholic Church in Lake Placid, N.Y., was quoted today as saying by The News and Observer of Raleigh.

"It pleases me because we've had such a long fight. Now my dear sister can be laid to rest in the place she most wanted to be," said Helena M. Steene of Raleigh. "Everything will be peaceful again. We have been tossed and turned around for a year now."

Miss Smith's body has been in storage since she died of respiratory failure in Raleigh on June 17, 1986. In her will, she requested a $40,000 mausoleum, specified the size and design, and said she wanted it at the cemetery of St. Agnes, which she attended while living at her summer home in Lake Placid.

Senators Back Tobacco Crop

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators from Georgia and Florida sent a letter to Japanese officials Thursday expressing their "complete confidence and faith" in this year's tobacco crop from the two states.

The letter from Sens. Wyche Fowler and Sam Nunn of Georgia and Sens. Lawton Chiles and Bob Graham of Florida was in response to Japanese concerns about the use of dicamba and other chemicals on some tobacco grown in the United States.

"As concerned public officials, we would like to make you aware of the complete confidence and faith we have in the efforts of our federal, state and local agricultural officials to ensure that tobacco produced in our states is of the highest quality and grown in accordance with your standards," the letter said.

Americans spend more than $10 billion a year on medical problems caused by outdoor pollutants, says National Geographic.

Presidential Hopefuls To Attend N.C. Forum

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — At least eight presidential hopefuls will attend a candidates forum on national education issues at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill Sept. 11.

Judy Woodruff, chief Washington correspondent for "The MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour," will moderate the forum.

The forum will be divided into two sessions, one for Democratic contenders and the other for Republicans. The UNC Center for Public Television will televise the forum live in North Carolina and make it available for rebroadcast nationwide by public television stations.

Two Republicans and six Democratic presidential hopefuls have announced they will participate in the forum.

Republican candidates participating include former Delaware Gov. Pierre S. du Pont and Rep. Jack Kemp of New York. Other Republicans who have been invited are Vice President George Bush, former Secretary of State Alexander Haig, the Rev. Pat Robertson, Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas and former Sen. Paul Laxalt of Nevada.

The Democrats include former Gov. Bruce Babbitt of Arizona, Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois. Delaware Sen. Joseph Biden has not responded to the invitation.

Abortion Proposal Prompts Criticism

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of Planned Parenthood charged today that President Reagan's plan to end the use of federal family planning assistance money for abortion counseling and referral is politically motivated.

Faye Wattleton, president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, also said the orders announced Thursday are an attempt to appease pro-life groups.

"These regulations are politically motivated and only designed to give satisfaction to the anti-abortion extremists in this country," Ms. Wattleton said on NBC-TV's "Today" show. "The programs that Mr. Reagan has attacked ... have not been violating the law."

But the president of one of those groups, National Right-to-Life, praised Reagan's decision.

"What President Reagan is saying is that he wants to return the federal family planning program to its original intent," said Dr. John C. Willke, who was interviewed on the same program.

"All that family planning funds for contraception can still go to groups like Planned Parenthood if they get out of the baby-killing business and referring for that," he said.

On Thursday, Reagan said he had ordered Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen to propose rules "to ensure that no Title X funds go to any program that encourages, promotes or advocates abortion, or which assists a women in obtaining an abortion." Title X is part of the Public Health Act.

He also said he had told the department to draft a proposal to eliminate language in Title X that requires recipients of federal funds to suggest abortion as an alternative for the pregnant.

Ms. Wattleton also promised court action to block Reagan's plan.

"We will go to the hearts and minds of people," she said Thursday. "But we will also go through the judicial process."

The specific changes Reagan suggested include these:

—Rules governing disbursement of federal family assistance money should "specifically state that a program that does provide counseling and referral for abortion services as a method of family planning will not be eligible."

—Regulations covering Title X grants would be revised so that "any organization that provides abortion-related services will be required to clearly separate these services" from programs for which federal money is used.

—There would be a cessation of federal financial support for "activities that advocate abortion."

"We believe this is an outrageous assault on the women of this country and specifically the poor women and the young women of this country for whom this program is designed to serve," said Ms. Wattleton.

Reagan said he also has ordered Surgeon General Everett C. Koop to prepare "a comprehensive medical report on the health effects, mental and physical, of abortion on women," although there was no indication of when the study should be completed.

Scott R. Swirling, executive director of the National Family Planning and Reproductive Health Association, said Reagan is seeking to impose "ill-conceived, misguided, untenable and illegal, unconstitutional regulations on the family planning program."

Patricia Ireland, executive vice president of the National Organization for Women, said the plan is "a desperation move, it's a lame-duck presidency, it's a discredited administration. We don't believe they're going to be successful."

Crewmen Charged In Mutiny

PORT CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Two shrimp boat crewmen were charged with piracy for throwing their captain overboard, possibly to his death, and forcing the first mate to jump into the Atlantic after him, authorities said.

A rescue helicopter plucked the first mate from a school of sharks Thursday morning after he floated for 12 hours, but the Coast Guard called off its search for the captain, Phil Roush of Tampa.

"Unless the ship's captain is found alive within the next couple of days, we'll have no choice other than to charge them with murder," said Perry Doran, FBI special agent in Tampa.

Crewmen Billy Cossett Jr., 24, William Leroy Rector, 21, were charged with piracy and assault on the high seas, Doran said.

They faced a hearing before a federal magistrate today in Orlando, Guard officials said.

Cossett and Rector were taken to the Brevard County Detention Center in Sharpes on Thursday after they were questioned by FBI agents at the Port Canaveral Coast Guard station, Doran said. A third crew member, Maria Barnes, 18, was freed.

Authorities heard the mutiny saga Thursday morning after an Air Force helicopter, guided by a couple in a sailboat, found the first mate in the ocean about 20 miles east of here.

"I looked down and there was a guy in the water. His face seemed to jump right up in mine," said helicopter pilot Greg Cochran. "It was just pure luck that we found him. Finding a survivor in the ocean is like finding a needle in a haystack."

Willie Charpentier, 21, of Baldwin, La., first mate of the 61-foot Tampa-based shrimper Leslie Rae, was in stable condition with head injuries this morning at Wuestoff Hospital in Rockledge.

He was in mild shock and was talking incoherently when he was lifted into the helicopter, said Craig Sammons, a member of the rescue team.

"You could tell he was very weak from exposure. His skin was really wrinkled and he was very pale," Sammons said. "He must have had a real will to live, to last so long."

The Coast Guard later intercepted the boat, and captured the three crew members.

Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Jim Simpson said he did not know what led to the altercation. No contraband was found aboard the vessel.

Charpentier told investigators he and the captain were attacked Wednesday night by the three crew members, said Simpson. "The master was thrown overboard, and he (Charpentier) jumped to avoid further injury."

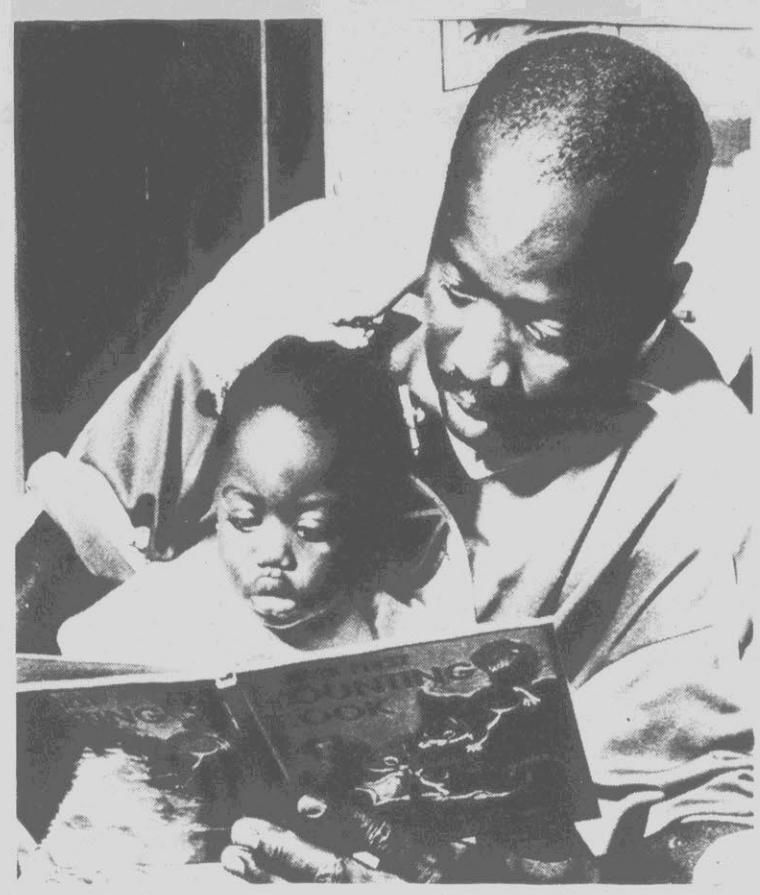

Simpson said the crew members "tell a different story," that they were unaware the two officers were gone until they woke up Thursday morning.

Settlement

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Movie director William Friedkin and his ex-wife, actress Lesley Anne Down, have settled their bitter child custody battle by deciding on joint custody of their 5-year-old son.

Miss Down's attorney, Marvin Mitchelson, said Thursday that Jack Friedkin will alternate three days with each parent.

The couple split in 1985. Miss Down is now married to cameraman Don Fauntleroy and Friedkin recently married Los Angeles news anchorwoman Kelly Lange.

TURNS ONE — Derrick Poole reads to his 1-year-old daughter, Michelle Odette Poole, in their Oakland, Calif., home. Michelle, known a year ago as "Baby Poole," was born seven weeks after her mother was declared brain-dead. Michelle now is described as a normal, healthy child whose only concern is learning to walk. (AP Laserphoto)

Baby Of Brain-Dead Mom Has Birthday

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Michele Poole's first birthday was a time for celebration of her headline-making struggle for life and a time of sorrow for her mother's death.

Last summer, Marie Odette Henderson and her fiancee, Derrick Poole, talked about the baby she was expecting and looked forward to the birth.

But when a massive brain tumor caused Ms. Henderson to suddenly slip into a coma, Poole sought to keep her alive on life-support systems that also would protect the life of the fetus in her womb.

Over the objections of her parents, Poole won a court order to continue the life-support and make him the baby's guardian.

Some 7½ weeks premature and 53 days after doctors declared her mother brain-dead, Michele took her first breath on July 30, 1986. Her mother died the day she was born.

"This is one hell of a job," Poole said Thursday after a year of parenthood.

"I think they ought to extend Mother's Day for one month every year."

Poole, a 32-year-old salesman-driver for a South San Francisco meat company, said he has received more than 200 offers to sell his story as a book or movie. He has appeared with Michele on ABC's "Good Morning America."

He said he and his family have made a videotape chronicling some of the unusual events about Michele's birth. Poole said he will show it to her someday and try to explain the unconventional aspects of her entry into the world.

Poole had an exceptionally difficult time shortly after the birth.

"For awhile, I looked away as I held her. Now I'm just grateful that a part of Odette is alive."

He takes her to day care every day and hopes she will become a ballet dancer, like her mother.

"She is spoiled rotten by me. They tell me every day at day care that I must not let her suck her thumb," he said. "I tell them she can suck her thumb any time she wants, and I'll pay the dental bills later."

He also moved from Richmond to a house in the Oakland hills. He shares the house with Michele Germany, his fiancee's friend and namesake of his child. She also has a young boy and the couple talk about marriage.

Becoming a father, Poole said, has made him "much more of a man than I ever thought I'd be."

Manson Follower Is Denied Parole

FRONTERA, Calif. (AP) — Leslie Van Houten, a Charles Manson follower convicted in the grisly Tate-LaBianca killings, is not likely to win freedom before the end of the century, a prosecutor says.

Miss Van Houten on Thursday lost her seventh bid for parole. The parole board, which deliberated an hour following a five-hour hearing, said it would not meet to consider a release date again for three years.

Miss Van Houten, 37, was glum-faced as Rudolph Castro, chairman of the three-member board, told her: "We find you would present an unreasonable risk to society at large."

Miss Van Houten was convicted along with Manson, Susan Atkins and Patricia Krenwinkel in the August 9, 1969, slayings of pregnant actress Sharon Tate and four others and the bloody slayings of grocery owners Leno and Rosemary LaBianca the following night. Another Manson follower, Charles "Tex" Watson, was convicted in a separate trial.

The cult carried out the killings as part of Manson's bizarre belief that they would incite a race war and he would eventually rule the world.

"The savagery displayed in the killings of seven innocent people is unequaled in California history and perhaps the nation," Castro said.

Deputy District Attorney Stephen Kay vigorously argued against parole.

"How can you parole anyone without a heart?" asked Kay.

Kay once predicted that Miss Van Houten might be paroled by the time she was 40. Thursday, he said that prospect seems unlikely.

"If she gets out by the turn of the century, she'll be lucky," he said. "And she might not even get out then."

Acknowledging that she has been a model inmate at the California prison for women at Frontera, Kay said Van Houten should remain at the facility 30 miles east of Los Angeles where she is serving a life sentence for her murder conviction.

"She does well in prison," he said. "It's a good place for her to stay."

Democratic State Leaders Staking Role In '88 Race

By JEFF HOLYFIELD
Associated Press Writer

MACKINAC ISLAND, Mich. (AP) — Democratic governors, anxious for their party to regain the White House, say their three-day retreat has positioned them for a key role in the 1988 presidential election.

"We wanted to involve the governors in the process from the beginning," Michigan Gov. James J. Blanchard, chairman of the Democratic Governors Association, said as the meeting he organized concluded Thursday.

"I think we're beginning to activate the governors in a way that they've never been activated before," Blanchard said. "I would say it gets the ball rolling for the presidential election."

During the gathering at this famed northern Michigan resort, the governors met behind closed doors with the eight potential Democratic presidential candidates.

They also got a sobering look at a poll showing renewed confidence in Republicans on Nicaragua and holding uncomfortable news for Democrats on other issues.

The meeting laid the foundation for a united effort by the governors to help the Democrats win the presidency, said Hawaii Gov. John Waihee.

"I think it's a very historic meeting and I think the impact of it will be seen in the election," Waihee said, adding that greater involvement by the governors would help the party.

North Dakota Gov. George Sinner said the state's chief executives were in a unique position to help form the party's platform and position it for success.

"The governors by their very nature today are so immersed in global things in ways that has never happened before," he said.

According to the Louis Harris poll unveiled Thursday, there is lessening opposition to an additional $100 million in aid to the Contra rebels, and a 47 percent to 39 percent plurality feels Republicans will do better than Democrats in handling the Nicaragua issue.

Harris said the support for the GOP on Nicaragua was highly unexpected, and he attributed it to Lt. Col. Oliver North's testimony before Congress' Iran-Contra committee.

The survey was conducted July 17-22, from a sample of 2,100 adults, of whom 1,261 likely voters were screened. The margin of error was between 2 and 3 percentage points either way.

Harris said his findings showed a feeling of support for a change in economic policies, but there remains a confidence that a recession will be avoided — and that cuts against Democrats. Among people who expect a recession, Democrats were favored over Republicans by 18 percentage points, but among those who expect no recession, Republicans were favored by 11 percent, he said.

The pollster said there is a 50-40 margin in favor of the GOP on which party can keep the economy prosperous. But he said the GOP remains vulnerable on the issue of fairness, with majorities thinking the rich have benefited at the expense of working people under President Reagan.

Harris also reported a 52-37 lead for the GOP over Democrats on which party can make America more competitive in the world. But he said the poll showed more confidence in Democrats on working for peace and in controlling the nuclear arms race.

Harris said the survey showed people oppose any continuation in the defense buildup.

The governors' group and the Democrats for the 80s political action committee paid for the survey.

On Wednesday, 19 of the governors met for three hours with the potential candidates: Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, former Gov. Bruce Babbitt of Arizona, The Rev. Jesse Jackson, Sen. Joseph Biden Jr. of Delaware, Rep. Patricia Schroeder of Colorado, Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois.

Blanchard said the meeting was beneficial.

Family Incomes Take Big Jump

By Spencer Rich
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — The proportion of Americans living in poverty last year dropped to the lowest level since 1980, while median family income after adjustment for inflation took one of its biggest jumps in the past 15 years, the Census Bureau reported Thursday.

The bureau said the number of people below the government's official poverty line ($11,203 for a family of four in 1986) fell from 33,064,000 in 1985 to 32,370,000 in 1986 — from 14 percent to 13.6 percent of the population. Median family income rose to $29,458, a 4.2 percent increase from 1985.

Gordon Green, assistant chief of the Census Bureau's population division, said the figures are the result of "no economic downturn, four years of sustained economic growth, more people working, low inflation, lower unemployment, and job creation" in recent years.

President Reagan said the figures released Thursday showed that "sustained non-inflationary growth is the government's single best tool for fighting poverty."

But Rep. Thomas J. Downey, D-N.Y., chairman of the House public-assistance subcommittee and sponsor of a major welfare bill, said the drop in poverty was so small that "there is nothing to be proud of in these statistics," and noted that the rates are still higher than during the 1970s.

In 1973, 11.1 percent of the population was living in poverty, the all-time low, before oil embargoes, a general economic slowdown and three recessions pushed up the figure. The most recent high was 15.2 percent in 1983.

Census figures also reflected a greater concentration of wealth among higher-income groups — "an increase in income inequality," as Green described it. In 1970 the lowest fifth of households got 4.1 percent of total income, the middle three-fifths got 52.7 percent and the top fifth 43.3 percent. By 1986, the figures show, the bottom fifth had dropped to 3.8 percent, the middle three-fifths to 50.2 percent and top fifth had risen to 46.1 percent.

Among the possible reasons for the change, Green said, are the greater growth in high-paying and low-paying jobs than in middle-paying ones, a huge increase in population due to the baby boom, which has made the economy struggle to find enough jobs, and the increase in female-headed families that tend to have low incomes.

But he said, "I don't think we have to worry about the middle class disappearing."

However, Robert Greenstein, director of the non-profit Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, the figures reflected the fact that "The gap between the rich and the middle class and the rich and the poor has now reached its widest point in at least 40 years, and this trend has accelerated in the 1980s."

"The income of the typical family in the poorest 40 percent of the population is essentially unchanged in real purchasing power since 1980, while the income of the typical family in the top 10 percent rose $10,338," he said.

The Census figures are based on the official poverty index, which counts only cash income. However, if $135 billion in non-cash benefits given to Americans in 1986 in the form of Medicare, food stamps, Medicaid, school lunches, and housing subsidies were counted, the ratio of people in poverty would be lower than 13.6 percent.

The bureau said it would be 9 percent if based on the market value of the non-cash benefits, and 11.6 percent if based on the amount of cash the individual would need to obtain the same goods and services provided by the non-cash benefits.

The 4.2 percent increase in median family income represented the fourth consecutive year that real income has increased, the Census Bureau said. The 1986 figure of $29,458 is slightly lower than inflation-adjusted figures for 1973, 1978 and 1979, but the size of families has been declining. After adjusting for that factor, family income in 1986 was probably slightly higher than in those earlier years.

The family figures, Green said, do not include millions of single people. If one looks at the income of everyone in the United States, in 1986 it was $11,670 per person, the highest per-capita income ever after adjustment for inflation. The figures for blacks ($7,207) and Hispanics ($7,000) were also at record highs. Overall, Green said, income grew in the 1970s and 1980s — "not at the robust levels of the 1960s, but still at a respectable rate."

AFT Cites Higher Pay For Teachers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The average starting salary for school teachers jumped 7.1 percent this past year to $17,800, with six states offering more than $19,000 to newcomers, the American Federation of Teachers said today.

The hike over salaries a year earlier was a larger boost than the 5.7 percent average pay raise for all public school teachers, the union said at the start of a biennial conference on school reform.

The AFT estimated that the average salary for all teachers in 1986-87 was $26,698. That is $6 less than the $26,704 that its rival, the National Education Association, arrived at in a salary report released May 27. The NEA data did not include starting salary figures.

The AFT report listed North Carolina's average salary for all teachers at $23,775, or 31st in the nation. With cost-of-living differences among states, the AFT said that average climbed to $25,319, or 18th in the nation.

The AFT said the current teacher salaries are the highest ever, even when adjusted for inflation. The previous high was $26,296 (in 1987 dollars) in 1972. The teachers' actual pay in 1972 was $9,705.

The 660,000-member union said starting salaries topped $19,000 in six states — Alaska, California, Connecticut, New Jersey, New York and Texas — and fell below $15,000 in seven — Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Mississippi, Nebraska, South Dakota and Vermont.

Alaska and South Dakota were the highest and lowest paying states, on average, for all teachers, even after adjusting salaries for regional differences in the cost of living, the AFT said.

The AFT's research shop gathered its data from state education departments.

But the union, using a cost-of-living index developed by private forecasters, said Texas moved up from 22nd to 5th when salaries were adjusted, while New Jersey tumbled from the 9th best paying state to the 36th.

AFT President Albert Shanker, noting that after inflation teacher salaries are back where they were 15 years ago, said in a statement: "Teachers seem always to be in the position of playing catch-up. The good news is that the education reform movement has given teachers some momentum. But how much longer can we afford to make education policy by looking at rear-view mirrors?"

Shanker said that unless teachers are given higher salaries and more autonomy, the public schools will not be able to "compete for the talent necessary to educate our next generation."

School Named

GREENSBORO (AP) — The business school at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro has been named for philanthropist Joseph M. Bryan, the school's board of trustees announced Thursday.

The Joseph M. Bryan School of Business and Economics is the first professional school at UNC-Greensboro to be named for an individual, Chancellor William E. Moran said.

Bryan, 91, is a retired insurance and broadcasting executive with Jefferson-Pilot companies.

Rough Sea Slows Supertanker's Loading For Trip Back Into Gulf

By JOHN RICE
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT (AP) — The damaged supertanker Bridgeton waited to take on oil today.

Choppy seas Wednesday and Thursday delayed the loading of the Bridgeton and drove it away from its moorings, but shipping sources in Kuwait said the tanker was back docked at the Sea Island terminal late Thursday after spending a night anchored 10 miles off shore.

They could not confirm if it had begun taking on oil.

American divers hunted for mines Thursday on the southbound route that the Bridgeton, Gas Prince and their U.S. Navy escorts will take through the Persian Gulf.

In the Netherlands today, a Dutch foreign ministry spokeswoman said the Dutch government had refused an informal American request for naval assistance in the gulf. She said Dutch forces would be sent only as part of a United Nations peacekeeping operation.

The Thursday afternoon crash of a Navy SH-36 Sea King helicopter occurred as it was ferrying equipment and personnel to the USS LaSalle, the command ship of the U.S. Mideast Task Force, the Pentagon said.

The Pentagon said the LaSalle and the destroyer Kidd were patrolling the central Persian Gulf. Officials would not identify the land base, but Bahrain in the central gulf is the main staging area for the task force.

The two ships apparently were near Bahrain when the accident occurred, marine salvage officials said.

The gas products carrier Gas Prince had loaded its cargo of liquefied petroleum gas and moved away from the loading dock, the sources said.

The Bridgeton, damaged July 24 when it hit a mine while traveling north through the gulf, will carry 1.82 million barrels of oil, more than two-thirds its normal capacity of 2.4 million. It takes about 26 hours to load. After passing through the Strait of Hormuz at the gulf's southern end, it is to transfer the oil to other tankers and go to drydock in Dubai or Bahrain for repairs.

Temporary repairs to the ship have been made in Kuwait, and the U.S. Coast Guard declared the 1,200-foot-long ship fit to sail with a partial cargo.

The mine, which the Pentagon believes was planted by Iran, blew a 48-square-yard hole in the Bridgeton's port side and damaged four of its 31 compartments.

Iran, which has been at war with Iraq since September 1980, accuses Kuwait of supporting Iraq and has focused its attacks on ships owned by or serving Kuwait.

According to Pentagon sources, U.S. Navy underwater demolition teams were hunting mines in the deep-water sea lane west of Iran's Farsi Island, which Iranian Revolutionary Guards use as a base for speedboat attacks on shipping. The Bridgeton was hit off Farsi, about 120 miles south of Kuwait.

American officials have reported at least seven mines found and shipping sources said the Saudi minesweepers retrieved others.

U.S. minesweeping efforts have been complicated by the refusal of Kuwait and Saudi Arabia to provide base facilities for the big helicopters.

The Dutch spokeswoman, who could not be identified in keeping with ministry practice, said the United States had not made a formal request for naval assistance, but she added, "we have been sounded out."

The request was made Thursday during talks between U.S. Ambassador John Shad and Dutch Ambassador-at-Large Henk Vijverberg, she said.

The disclosure came amid persistent rumors here that the U.S. government had asked the Netherlands to deploy several of its 13 ultra-modern mine hunters to protect gulf shipping.

Soviets Claim U.S. Diplomats Instigating Protests By Tatars

By WILLIAM J. EATON
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

MOSCOW — Soviet authorities accused American diplomats Thursday of instigating street demonstrations by Crimean Tatars seeking the return of their homeland, which was taken from them in 1944 by Josef Stalin.

The U.S. Embassy dismissed the accusation as "absurd." Embassy spokesman Jaroslav Verner said it showed the limits of "glasnost," the policy of public openness espoused by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Verner said there was nothing wrong with American diplomats contacting Soviet citizens, including the protesting Tatars.

The police, meanwhile, began taking steps to stifle renewed public protests by the Tatars, who have been demonstrating for more than a week in the center of Moscow. About 800 Tatars were warned that they faced arrest if they continued their protests. Last weekend Tatars carried out an unprecedented 24-hour vigil at the edge of Red Square.

The Soviet actions appeared to reflect growing impatience with the Tatars. Earlier in the week, the authorities had set up a meeting between the Tatars and President Andrei Gromyko, but since Tuesday, officials have described the Tatars as "extremists."

"The authorities seem to have reached the limits of their tolerance," a Western diplomat said, asking that he not be identified by name.

A nine-member commission headed by Gromyko has been formed to consider the Tatars' complaint that they were unjustly deported from their autonomous republic in Crimea after Stalin accused them of helping invading German troops in World War II.

The Tatars want their homeland, which in 1954 was absorbed as part of the Ukraine, to be re-established so that those who want to return may do so. Soviet authorities have asked for time to work out a solution and warned that the wishes of other ethnic groups living in the Crimean peninsula must be considered.

The Soviet protest about U.S. activity focused on Shaun M. Byrnes, first secretary of the embassy and chief of a section concerned with internal Soviet political developments.

Byrnes was shown on the main evening television news program, Vremya, walking with three of the Tatar activists, apparently at their headquarters in Ismailovo Park. His face was circled to set him apart from the others.

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, described Byrnes as the chief American "consultant on confrontation." It said Byrnes had "contrived to have a secret meeting with the most vociferous self-styled leaders of the group."

"It is easy to guess," Tass said, "what their secret conversation in the dusk was about if in the morning a group of extremists tried to stage anti-social actions in Moscow streets."

Brynes and other American diplomats, Tass said, were guilty of "gross interference in the internal affairs" of the Soviet Union.

Mark Ramee, acting minister-counselor at the embassy, was summoned to the Foreign Ministry to hear the Soviet protest.

Meanwhile, Tass said, the police warned about 800 Tatars gathered in Moscow that they faced arrest if they continue to demonstrate. Many of them, Tass said, had already left for their homes, mainly in Central Asia, or were preparing to depart.

Individual Tatars said that policemen woke them early Thursday morning at the private homes where they were staying and warned them they could be prosecuted for violation of internal passport laws if they did not leave Moscow.

Policemen barred them from taking part in a demonstration planned for outside Tass headquarters, one of the Tatars said. He said they were allowed to meet in a park on the far northeast side of the city, where an appeal to world leaders for support of their cause was read aloud without police interference.

Tass said the executive committee of the Moscow City Council had given the police additional powers to keep order in light of previous demonstrations by the Tatars.

Soviet Union Presents Plan To Cut In Half Long-Range Nuclear Forces

GENEVA (AP) — The Soviet Union today presented a draft treaty on reducing by half long-range, or strategic, nuclear forces and indicated it would continue to link such a treaty to limits on the "Star Wars" program.

"Today we are presenting our draft (treaty) on strategic offensive missiles," deputy chief Soviet negotiator Alexei Obukhov said. He called the Soviet proposal "another major step in the negotiations."

Obukhov told a news conference that the Soviet draft treaty reflected agreements reached between the superpowers at last year's Reykjavik summit.

These include a 50 percent reduction in superpower strategic nuclear arsenals — land and submarine-based intercontinental ballistic missiles and long-range bombers — to a level of 1,600 on each side, with nuclear warheads limited to 6,000.

But, he said, "serious problems remain at the negotiations."

These include the U.S. demand that both sides have "sublimits" on the number of each type of weapon allowed. The Soviets, who have more land-based missiles, say this would force them to restructure their forces.

The Soviets presented their proposal at a joint plenary meeting of the two sides, comprising about two dozen negotiators and aides on each side.

Obukhov told reporters outside the U.S. mission before the meeting that an agreement on space and defense systems to include limits on the United States' Strategic Defense Initiative "is a necessary prerequisite" for an agreement on long-range weapons.

The chief U.S. delegate on long-range weapons, Ronald Lehman, speaking separately, said: "That is not a reasonable linkage. It creates obstacles." However, he said the Soviet draft treaty submitted today was an "important step — now we can sit down and draft treaty language."

The United States presented a draft treaty on long-range weapons in May and had been waiting for a Soviet response.

The two sides agreed at their summit in Reykjavik last year to halve their strategic arsenals, but they disagreed on how to do it.

Strategic arms represent one of the three areas under discussion at the Geneva arms control talks. The other two are intermediate-range nuclear forces and space and defense systems.

The Soviet move on strategic weapons follows recent movement in the other two areas.

Hopes for an intermediate-range missile accord rose last week when the Soviets announced that they would eliminate their missiles in Asia as well as Europe if the United States agreed to get rid of all its missiles.

Sri Lankan Monks End 4-Day Sit-In

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — A nationwide curfew was lifted briefly today and about 250 monks protesting an accord signed between India and Sri Lanka to end this nation's civil war ended a four-day sit-in at a Buddhist temple.

Indian troops continued to move into rebel areas in northern Sri Lanka to disarm Tamil militants and enforce the peace pact, which was signed Wednesday. On Thursday, about 3,000 Indian troops landed in the northern Jaffna peninsula as a "peacekeeing force," as stipulated in the pact.

Police reported no major violence when the curfew, imposed after violent anti-accord demonstrations Tuesday, was lifted so people could shop for supplies. They said several government cars were burned in isolated acts of arson.

Tamils make up 18 percent of Sri Lanka's people and claim discrimination by the dominant Sinhalese, who control the government and armed forces. The war between the Tamils and the majority Sinhalese, which began in 1983, has cost more than 6,000 lives.

"The Indian troops sent to Jaffna have been placed at the disposal of the president of Sri Lanka as the supreme commander of the Sri Lankan armed forces," J.N. Dixit, the Indian high commissioner, said today.

Indian troops will take up positions in coordination with local military units, he told a news conference.

Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi of India and Sri Lankan President Junius R. Jayewardene signed the accord in Colombo.

On Thursday, a Sinhalese member of the Sri Lanka naval honor guard struck Gandhi with his rifle butt at the farewell ceremony. The Indian leader said he had a lump on his neck but was not seriously injured.

Indian newspapers called it an attempt on his life.

The monks, members of Sri Lanka's Sinhalese community, ended the strike and went back to their home temples during the brief relaxation of the curfew. Before dispersing they briefly blocked a highway leading to Borella, a suburban town about 1.8 miles east of Colombo.

The curfew was imposed to prevent violence that broke out Tuesday and Wednesday. The rioting claimed at least 40 lives.

The sit-in was part of widespread Sinhalese protests of the Indian-mediated peace pact that gives substantial autonomy to minority Tamils living in the north and east of Sri Lanka.

India, an overwhelmingly Hindu nation, has a Tamil community more than three times the size of Sri Lanka's entire 16 million population.

Deliveries

TARBORO, N.C. (AP) — Two obstetricians are scheduled to begin delivering babies Monday in Edgecombe County, ending a doctor shortage that forced expectant mothers to travel out of the county to give birth for the past 15 months.

Hugh Young, director of the Edgecombe County Health Department, said this week that the addition of doctors at a private clinic in Tarboro meant babies could be delivered at Heritage Hospital in Tarboro. The hospital has handled only emergency obstetric cases since May 1986 because of the lack of doctors to provide routine obstetric care.

Son Charged

ELON COLLEGE, N.C. (AP) — A 19-year-old man was charged Thursday with murder in the death of his father, who suffered multiple gunshot wounds Wednesday night.

Russell Franklin Gillespie of Burlington was being held in Alamance County Jail without bond Thursday.

Alamance County sheriff's deputies and Elon College police found the body of Lionel Franklin Gillespie, 42, on the ground at the rear of his residence near Elon College about 8:56 p.m. Wednesday.

What A Gas

For many South Koreans, tear gas has become as much a part of daily life as the air they breathe. Here, a customer tries on one of the many fast-selling gas masks that have been hawked on street corners in downtown Seoul during the many recent marches and demonstrations in that city. Most gas masks clean the air by means of a filter of chemically treated fibers that remove particles, and an activated charcoal layer that absorbs harmful gases.

DO YOU KNOW — Gas masks were invented and first used during which war?

THURSDAY'S ANSWER — Sumatra is a part of Indonesia.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY Aug. 1

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The morning presents the possibility of support from an unusual person which you hadn't expected. Trust this individual and follow the advice given if it seems sound.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): After much accomplishment in the business world, be careful that you do nothing foolish to ruin your day.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Avoid an individual who consistenly tries to influence your opinions. You don't need the aggravation.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): An unexpected invitation should be accepted early. Schedule time to relax with your mate and a good friend.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Don't get involved in an argument between a family friend and an outsider--it'll work itself out.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Don't try to push any new ideas you may have in mind; either they work or they don't. Be cooperative with co-workers.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): If you are getting advice from two people, don't make an immediate decision--sleep on it first and then choose.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Be extremely cautious in any kind of movement today. Don't let anyone sway your opinions in the business world.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Your thinking is a bit confused, so work on getting your head clear. Don't make any decisions about your job.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Avoid a group affair this evening where an agrument could ensue. Get your mate's OK before inviting friends in.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): You may be misinformed about something of great importance, so check it out before taking any action.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Be alert--make sure a newcomer isn't trying to pull one over on you. Be cautious in making financial decisions.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Study a new business venture thoroughly frome very angle. Be very cautious in motion--especially driving.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he, or she, will be very tuned in to current trends, and would do quite well in advertising or marketing. Your progeny may have a tendency to act too quickly, so teach him or her to think first. Some training in psychology would be a big help in understanding self and others.

"The Stars impel; they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 ♣	1	2
4	Dbl	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣

In Gilbert & Sullivan's The Mikado, the Lord High Executioner sets out "to make the punishment fit the crime." That is laudable, but who will take up the cudgels for those who commit no crime yet have to pay a substantial penalty? We sympathize with West on this deal, but the Laws of Contract Bridge do not allow us to offer him any other balm.

First, let's consider the auction. West's cue-bid of two hearts was impeccable by any standards. When North raised preemptively to four hearts, East cannot be blamed for doubling. After all, his only quick tricks were in the opponents' suit, so the chances of his side making 11 tricks at a minor-suit contract, or 10 at no trump, seemed remote. Actually, four no trump might have been a winning decision (it would take a spade lead to defeat it). West had no choice but to respect his partner's double

This will not be a long column, because the play was soon over. West made a normal lead of the king of clubs, then shifted to a diamond. Too late. Declarer rose with the ace, cashed the ace-queen of spades and entered dummy by ruffing a club. He discarded a diamond on the king of spades, then ruffed a diamond in hand and a club in dummy. He was quite happy to surrender two trump tricks—making four hearts doubled.

The only thing West did wrong was not being blessed with X-ray vision. Had he had the ability to see the whole hand, he would have led a diamond initially rather than a club. That would have made a world of difference. Now declarer has no quick entry to the table to take a diamond discard on the king of spades, so he has four losers.

Would you debit West with a rubber swing because of his choice of opening lead?

ECU Secretary Is Written About In National Magazine

CELEBRITY — Lea Welch, an ECU secretary, was interviewed for and is pictured in the Aug. 3 edition of U.S. News and World Report magazine. (Reflector Photo By Cliff Hollis)

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Lea Welch of near Walstonburg is featured in the U.S. News and World Report Aug. 3 cover article, "Living Alone and Learning To Love It."

Mrs. Welch, a secretary in the East Carolina University School of Home Economics, isn't sure she's loving living alone yet, but she's working on it by doing it.

And she has insisted on doing it since shortly after the death of her husband of 33 years.

"My husband, Joe, asked our son, Joe Jr., when he knew he was dying, to move home with me. Joe Jr. honored his father's request, but I encouraged him not to stay beyond a couple of months. He was wonderful helping me get my business straightened out initially and our daughters were, too. But I want all my children to have their own lives. I don't want them to feel like they have to be with mama."

She said her daughter, Sandy Whitley of Farmville, recently engaged at the time her father's illness became apparent, also offered to stay at home past when she would have chosen to be married. "I appreciated it," Mrs. Welch said. "But I wouldn't hear of it."

Mrs. Welch was born in Wilson County and spent her youth in Halifax. For 22 years of her married life, her family lived in Maryland. During much of this time she was employed by John L. Lewis, famed head of the United Mineworkers. Her husband was in the automobile business.

Welch was 63 and working as an auditor based in Raleigh, commuting to the home the couple had built near Walstonburg, when he discovered in September 1985, that he had cancer of the colon. He had never previously been seriously ill. After not quite four very difficult months, he died on Dec. 29.

Mrs. Welch credits her husband's unerring devotion to her and the family, even in the face of his own illness and impending death, and the support of her friends with getting her through that most trying time of her life.

"I had gone to work at the ECU School of Home Economics in March of 1976," she said. "I had always known I liked my work and that the people I worked with were wonderful. But I never knew how wonderful until Joe's illness.

"My friends at ECU stuck by me from Day 1 and they still are. They even filled my freezer with casseroles, meats, breads and desserts while Joe was sick. How many friends like that do most people have? I am so thankful I work where I do."

Even though she had been gainfully employed much of her married life, Mrs. Welch had always left the finances to her husband, she said.

"After Joe died, I called my banker and asked her if she made housecalls," she said. "I was that distressed trying to balance my checkbook."

The banker told her that she would not make a house call, that she had complete faith in her being able to do it for herself with her guidance on the telephone.

Mrs. Welch said she still counts it a great victory when she gets her checkbook tally to come out to the penny.

Always an enthusiastic yard worker, she has continued to keep the grounds around her house groomed. "The hundreds of azaleas that Joe and I planted give me such wonderful memories of my husband and how much we enjoyed the out-of-doors together," she said. She even had a small vegetable garden this year until drought killed most of it.

She keeps her own large house. "The children talk to me about finding myself a condominium," she said. "But right now I'm not ready to do that. When I feel ready, I will think about it."

She said she also enjoys cooking just as she did before. She often has her children and others in for meals, and even cooks full meals just for herself. "I don't always cook a variety of vegetables or whatever for myself alone," she said, "but if I want to, I do. I do know I'm worth it."

She has made one trip to California alone and plans to travel more in the future. There are a daughter, Brenda Maulding, and a granddaughter, Stephanie Lea Maulding, on the West Coast who make the way west appealing to her. In the meantime, every-other-night phone calls from California suffice.

She has recently become a volunteer at the Ronald McDonald House.

"I know I'm not special learning to cope with living alone," she said. "So many people have done it."

She finds it amazing that she was singled out by a national publication for interviewing and picture-taking. She explained how it happened:

Dr. Judy Rollins, dean of the ECU School of Home Economics, some time ago published an article about living single. Several months ago, she was called by writer Nancy Linnon who later was one of the authors of the News and World Report piece. She asked Dr. Rollins for several names of people she knew who lived alone and Mrs. Welch's was one that she was given. Ms. Linnon later called and conducted a telephone interview with Mrs. Welch of about an hour's duration. Later picture-taking by Raleigh-based photographer Charles Gupton was set up at Mrs. Welch's house.

"The picture-taking took several hours — to produce only one shot" Mrs. Welch said. "It was really fun."

"This is all so new," she said of being featured nationally and locally. "I'm the kind of person who's never even had her name in the paper before. I still can't believe I'm in this national publication.

"It's a very nice article to be involved with, though — good encouragement for people living alone or facing living alone. I read every word of the article and I'm glad to be a part of it."

Phone Calls Prior To Family Visits Wanted

DEAR ABBY: I am a 37-year-old male "helper" presently employed to live with and care for an 89-year-old stroke victim in his home. He is still mentally very sharp. I take him to the senior citizens' center for lunch and company, and sometimes we go to the park to visit his friends.

My problem is with his family -- daughters, son, grandchildren, etc. I have asked them to please call and let me know when they are coming. But an occasional unannounced visit is the way concerned family members are assured that Mom, Dad or Grandpa is getting consistently good care.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Twice now, they have walked in on me while I was in the midst of taking care of certain intimate problems that occur with elderly people -- rather embarrassing for the old gentleman and unpleasant for me.

One of his daughters phoned me late one night to say that she and a family friend would be visiting around noon the following day. Her father and I stayed home all day waiting for them, and they never showed. Not even a phone call to let us know they weren't coming.

I realize that I am paid to take care of this man, but don't you think his family owes me the courtesy of a call to let me know when they are coming, as well as a call to say their plans have changed? -- CONSCIENTIOUS CARETAKER

DEAR CONSCIENTIOUS: To phone and make specific plans to visit a disabled relative and then not show up is the height of insensitivity.

DEAR ABBY: "Outside Looking In" was right. As a stepmother, I would much rather be called "my stepmother" than "my dad's wife." The wicked stepmother image in the Cinderella fairy tale is long gone.

You said (in another letter) that introducing someone as a "third cousin once removed" is a distancing maneuver. By the same token, making the stepmother an attachment of the father ("my father's wife") is also a distancing maneuver. You blew it, Abby. -- STEPMOTHER AND LOVING IT

DEAR STEPMOTHER: When you're right, you're right. I blew it.

Score: Readers, 455; Abby, 1. (I voted for myself.)

(Problems? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. All correspondence is confidential.)

Andrea Shine Is Sweden-Bound

Pitt County youth Andrea Shine will be an exchange student in Sweden during the upcoming school year.

A Greenville area native, she will complete her junior year of high school in Malmo in southern Sweden. She will live with a 19-year-old Swedish girl and her parents.

Ms. Shine has attended the Farmville schools. At Farmville Central High School, she was involved in programs for the academically gifted, the North Carolina Honors program, the Show Choir, the tennis team, and was president of the sophomore class.

The daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Richard E. Shine, she first traveled in Europe when her father, a speech and hearing teacher at East Carolina University, was giving workshops for stuttering children. They visited Belgium, Germany, Italy, England and France. "I enjoyed myself so much then, I had to go see more," she said.

Arrest

endar in June and Mr. Cannon looked at the order and interpreted that Little was to appear and was in contempt for failing to appear. It's not really a black and white issue.

"The order said the matter would be reviewed and Mr. Cannon understood and interpreted that to mean Mr. Little was to appear and show everything was straightened out."

Cannon and Ms. Barnhill are members of a four-lawyer panel which works on child support enforcement cases for Pitt County. according to Ms. Barnhill. Cannon, who was the attorney for the day Little's case was heard, declined comment on the matter.

Little's employer, Jimmy Smith Printing Co., was instructed in December to begin garnisheeing his wages for child support payment, and the case was reviewed in March because of some technical problems in collection, Ms. Barnhill said.

"In December, an order was entered to have wages withheld," she said. "The employer didn't implement it properly and didn't take out the right amount so the case was reviewed in March. At that time, it was straightened out and the June review was ordered" to monitor the garnisheeing set-up.

Mrs. Barnhill said the incident was clarified Monday.

"The employer came and talked to us and showed us the matter had been straightened out, and we cleared up the misunderstanding about the appearance," Ms. Barnhill said. "The defendant asked that the arrest be stricken. We never got to the issue of whether the arrest was appropriate or not."

Meanwhile, Little said he was frustrated because nobody would listen to him when he was arrested.

"I tried several times to explain, but they wouldn't let me straighten it out," Little said. "They put me behind bars until it was straightened out."

Regan

them, you would have reacted with shock and horror."

Regan said he didn't "focus on the Iranian situation at all" for most of 1986, leaving Poindexter, the president's former national security adviser, on his own to manage the secret initiative of arms sales to Iran.

Regan said that during his once-a-week breakfasts with Poindexter, he discussed administrative details and presidential trips abroad — but not Iranian arms sales.

Regan made his comments to Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., who said he would not engage in hindsight and second-guess Regan's actions.

Regan testified on Thursday that he didn't know until last November that proceeds from the weapons sales had been diverted to Contra rebels fighting the Nicaraguan government.

When Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, brought up the pardon, Regan said he recalled the issue arising at a meeting involving the president, Vice President George Bush and himself sometime on Dec. 8, 9 or 10 of last year.

"Somebody brought it up and it was shot down right away," Regan said.

Regan said that the pardon "was something the president wouldn't even listen to."

The former chief of staff said Reagan's reasoning was that "you only pardon for a crime and he didn't know what the crime was."

Regan recalled that at the time, no evidence of a crime had been presented to the president, the Tower commission had not yet issued a report and congressional hearings were still months away.

"The president said not only is it premature, but I'll be darned if I'm going to accuse them of a crime in advance."

Both North, a deputy on the National Security Council staff, and Poindexter are the targets of a criminal investigation being conducted by Indeopendent Counsel Lawrence E. Walsh.

North, in earlier testimony at the hearings, has said he funneled secret military aid to the Contras during a congressional ban on direct or indirect U.S. military aid to the Nicaraguan insurgents.

'When Ever' Finally Here For Yankees' Bonilla As He Leads 6-3 Victory

NEW YORK (AP) — Three weeks removed from being a Class A player-coach, Juan Bonilla sat in the New York Yankees clubhouse and talked quietly about dreams fulfilled. He wore a black T-shirt that read across the front: "When Ever."

"Like in 'When Ever' you want me, I'm ready," he said. "I never lost hope. I thought that one day I would get my chance."

Bonilla, making his fourth start at second base since being recalled, had a double and two singles, scored one run and drove in another Thursday night as the Yankees beat the Kansas City Royals 6-3.

The American League East-leading Yankees opened a two-game lead over idle Detroit. The Tigers begin a three-game series tonight at Yankee Stadium.

The Royals, swept in the three-game series, have now lost 17 of their last 21 games.

In other AL games, Milwaukee beat Chicago 6-1 and Cleveland defeated Baltimore 6-4 in 10 innings.

Tommy John, 10-3, allowed three runs in six innings. Reliever Tim Stoddard pitched three scoreless innings for his fourth save.

Henry Cotto also had three hits and Rick Cerone hit his first Yankee Stadium home run in five years.

"I've only been here a short time, but I'm beginning to taste it," Bonilla said. "I want so much to get to the top. I've never been on a contending team before, and it's exciting. I can feel the pressure of the pennant race. I can feel how hard people in here want to win."

Trailing 2-0 after first-inning RBI doubles by Kevin Seitzer and Frank White, the Yankees tied the game on run-scoring singles by Cotto in the third and Mike Pagliarulo in the fourth. Bonilla, exhibiting some daring baserunning, scored the tying run by racing from second base on a shallow hit to left field.

In the three-run fifth, which broke open the game, New York scored its first two runs on a bases-loaded wild pitch and a botched up rundown. But Bonilla capped the inning with a two-out RBI single off starter Bud Black, 4-6.

Bonilla, who is 6-for-15 for the Yankees, needed to scale three leagues to get to his current position.

After arthroscopic surgery on his right ankle before spring training, Bonilla started the season at Prince William of the Class A Carolina League, where he batted .308 in 44 games.

Part of Bonilla's responsibility at Prince William was pitching batting practice and teaching young players how to hit to the opposite field. But he never thought of making the transition to full-time coach. He felt he could still play in the majors.

Then, in a little more than a week, Bonilla was promoted twice, first playing three games for AA Albany and then five for AAA Columbus before becoming a Yankee.

"This is my chance," he said. "And I know I have to produce. I have to turn the double play when I can, and get the hits when it's needed. No one is going to do it for me."

Two weeks ago, when the regular second baseman, All-Star Willie Randolph, underwent surgery to repair cartilage damage in his left knee, the Yankees searched desperately for a temporary replacement. Names were thrown around for a while, but Yankees Manager Lou Piniella said, "We're not looking for a second baseman anymore."

John, who has accumulated more victories this season than his previous two combined, gave up only four hits after the first inning, the final one being Bo Jackson's leadoff homer in the seventh.

"Tommy struggled the whole game," Piniella said. "It's the worst rhythm he's had in quite a while. But he settled down enough to get us into the seventh inning."

Even Royals Manager Billy Gardner said, "This was the night to get Tommy John. We had him on the ropes. But we just couldn't score. That's been our problem for the last three weeks."

The Royals have scored three runs or fewer 49 times this season, including 13 games in which they were shut out.

Brewers 6, White Sox 1

Glenn Braggs, Paul Molitor and Bill Schroeder each drove in two runs each as Milwaukee beat visiting Chicago.

Mark Knudson, 1-2, got his first AL victory. He gave up one run on eight hits in 6 1-3 innings and Chuck Crim finished with hitless relief for his first major-league save.

Braggs hit a triple, double and two-run single. His single put the Brewers ahead in the sixth inning against Neil Allen, 0-5.

Molitor had a two-run double in the seventh and Schroeder hit a two-run double in the eighth.

Indians 6, Orioles 4

Cory Snyder ended his 0-for-20 slump with a two-run homer in the 10th inning that lifted Cleveland over Baltimore.

Snyder hit his 22nd home run after Carmen Castillo's one-out single off Mark Williamson, 5-7. Brook Jacoby's two-run homer, his 21st, gave the Indians a 4-4 tie in the eighth.

Mets Hand Cards Seventh Straight Loss; Close Gap

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

The New York Mets did what they needed to do. They went into St. Louis, swept a three-game series from the Cardinals and tightened the National League East race.

Dwight Gooden, moved up in the rotation to face the Cardinals, pitched effectively Thursday night as the Mets won 5-3 and extended St. Louis' losing streak to seven.

"After we lost to Houston on Sunday when they came from behind, I wasn't sure we'd bounce back for this," Mets Manager Davey Johnson said. "We've struggled all year but the race is wide-open now."

New York moved within 5½ games of the division-leading Cardinals. Montreal is in second place, four games behind.

St. Louis' losing streak is its longest of the season and the team hurt itself throughout the series against New York with poor baserunning. The Cardinals were also smarting after losing an argument about Howard Johnson's bat after he hit a home run.

In other NL games, Montreal beat Chicago 6-1, San Diego downed Cincinnati 12-8, Houston defeated Atlanta 8-5 and Philadelphia edged Pittsburgh 1-0.

Gooden, working on three days' rest, won his sixth straight decision against the Cardinals. He gave up two runs on four hits in the first inning but then settled down and raised his record to 8-3.

Gooden left the game after Jim Lindeman led off the ninth with a single. Tony Pena reached reliever Roger McDowell with a single and pinch-hitter Jose Oquendo sacrificed the potential tying runs into scoring position.

Vince Coleman then followed with a bouncer that first baseman Keith Hernandez bobbled. Hernandez had no play on Coleman but suddenly threw to catcher Gary Carter, who tagged out the late-breaking Lindeman in a home-plate collision. McDowell retired Ozzie Smith to end the game for his 15th save.

Carter and McReynolds drove in two runs apiece, although it was Johnson's homer that sparked the most commotion.

Johnson, whose two-run homer in the 10th inning beat St. Louis on Wednesday night, hit his 25th of the season in the eighth for a 5-3 lead. When Johnson crossed home plate, he went to pick up his bat but Pena, the Cardinals' catcher, wouldn't give it back.

The Cardinals claimed the bat was illegally doctored. Umpire crew chief Paul Runge took the bat out of play, examined it after the game and then returned it.

"We had no way of keeping it," Runge said. "We took it out of the game to prevent a fight. The grain looked like it had not been tampered with (and) the weight was right. If he (Howard Johnson) had come up again, he would have been entitled to have it back."

Johnson and Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog had their opinions.

"It's a perfectly sound bat," Johnson said. "This is an insult. I've hit home runs all my career."

Herzog said the bat, the same one Johnson won Wednesday's game with, was illegal.

"I knew there was cork in it. He hit a home run, but he's not Babe Ruth," Herzog said. "I wanted to check his bat last night, but the batboy got away with it."

McReynolds hit a two-run triple and scored on Carter's single in the first inning against Greg Mathews, 7-8.

Darryl Strawberry, who had two hits and three walks, walked in the fifth, stole second and scored on Carter's single for a 4-2 lead.

Expos 6, Cubs 1

Mike Fitzgerald went 3-for-3 and drove in two runs as Montreal got 14 hits and won in Chicago.

Neal Heaton, 12-4, gave up just Keith Moreland's 20th home run in seven innings for his ninth victory in his last 11 starts.

Fitzgerald hit RBI singles in the second and the fourth innings. Vance Law, who also had three hits, singled home a run in the fifth against Bob Tewksbury, 0-3.

Padres 12, Reds 8

Carmelo Martinez hit a two-run single during a seven-run outburst in the fifth inning that carried San Diego over Cincinnati. Luis Salazar and Benito Santiago had RBI singles in the Padres' big inning against Guy Hoffman, 7-6, and Bill Landrum.

Jimmy Jones, 3-4, won despite allowing six runs on 11 hits in five-plus innings. It was his first victory in five starts this season. Jones helped himself with a two-run homer, his first in the majors.

Terry McGriff and Bo Diaz hit two-run homers for the host Reds and Nick Esasky hit a solo home run.

Astros 8, Braves 5

Kevin Bass homered and drove in three runs and Alan Ashby had a two-run single that helped Houston's emergency starter Bob Knepper beat Atlanta.

Knepper, 4-12, started in place of Jim Deshaies, whose left shoulder stiffened while warming up. Knepper gave up a leadoff homer to Dion James and yielded six hits in five innings. Dave Smith finished for his 18th save.

The visiting Astros scored four times in the sixth for a 4-2 lead. Ashby singled home two runs and Hass had an RBI single. A balk by Rick Mahler, 6-11, allowed another run to score.

Bass' two-run homer, his 10th, capped a three-run eighth.

Phillies 1, Pirates 0

Bruce Ruffin and Steve Bedrosian teamed on a five-hitter and Glenn Wilson's RBI single in the ninth inning led Philadelphia over Pittsburgh.

The visiting Phillies were held hitless by rookie Mike Dunne before Von Hayes' leadoff single in the seventh.

Pinch-hitter Ron Roenicke drew a leadoff walk from John Smiley, 3-2, in the ninth before Mike Schmidt and Wilson singled off Brett Gideon. Wilson had been 0-for-18 before his game-winning hit.

Ruffin, 9-7, gave up five hits in 8 1-3 innings. Bedrosian got the final two outs for his major league-leading 29th save.

Pitt, Hamlet Set Wednesday

The Eastern championship series for the American Legion baseball program will begin Wednesday at Harrington Field on the East Carolina University campus in Greenville.

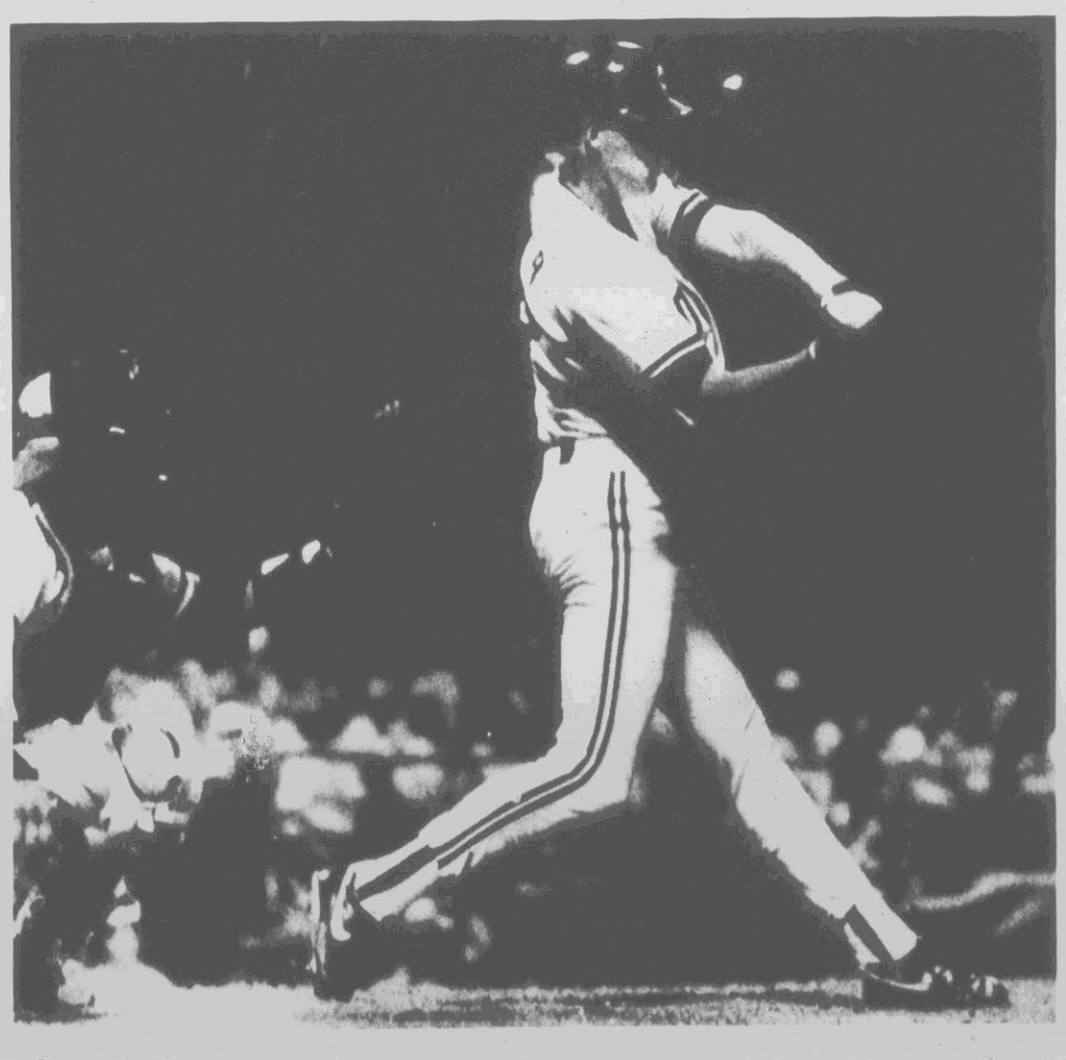

Pitt County, the Area I champion, will take on Hamlet, the Area II winner, in a best-of-seven series for the eastern title. The winner of the series will then advance to the state championship series against the western winner, also a best-of-seven affair. That is scheduled to begin on Aug. 15.

Pitt, 22-9, defeated Raleigh in four straight games to win the Area I title, while Hamlet, a traditional power in Area II, downed Whiteville, four games to two. Hamlet brings in a 29-5 record.

This year marks the first time since 1982 that Pitt has advanced to the Eastern finals — the farthest they have gone in state play. That year, Post 39 also met Hamlet, bowing in five close-fought games.

Hamlet won the opening game of that series, 5-3, then fell to Pitt, 4-3. Hamlet then took the next three, 6-5, 11-9, and 5-4 to advance to the state finals.

The first two games of the series will be played in Greenville, with the series then moving to Hamlet for the next three, if all are needed. Should the series still be unresolved, the final two games would be played back in Greenville.

McKinnie's Runs Lead Way To West's 28-21 Win

GREENSBORO (AP) — Herman McKinnie of West Forsyth rushed for a record-setting 171 yards on 23 carries and scored on a one-yard run with 23 seconds left to lead the West to a 28-21 victory over the East in the 39th annual All-Star football game.

McKinnie, the 6-foot, 180-pound All-State running back who missed an appearance in the Shrine Bowl last December because of a shoulder injury, carried the ball 23 times, and smashed the All-Star record of 156 yards by Thomasville's Charles Bowers in 1966.

Trailing 21-20 with less than a minute to play and the ball resting on the East 1-yard-line, West coach John Anderson of McDowell elected to go for the touchdown rather a field goal. McKinnie scored on a off-tackle dive.

"We had had some problems with our kicking game earlier with a blocked extra point and a couple of kickoffs that went out of bounds," game. "We figured they'd be thinking option outside to Andre. That's why we went up the middle."

Early in the game, the East pushed the ball to the West 13-yard-line, and quarterback Charles Davenport of Fayetteville Pine Forest scored on an option keeper and Michael Mumford of Durham Jordan added the conversion kick for a 7-0 lead.

West quarterback Scott McAlister of Western Guilford set up the drive that tied the score with a 17-yard pass to Steven Penn of Brevard and an 18-yard pass to Scott Clinard of Gastonia Ashbrook to put the ball on the East 11-yard-line.

From there, McKinnie picked up eight yards, and then scored from three yards out.

The East moved from its own 22 to the West 10-yard-line, when Heath Hewett hit Chris Bowers of Eastern Wayne on touchdown pass. The 6-2, 170-pound ECU signee was dragged down just after crossing the goal line. The kick failed, giving the East a 13-7 lead.

The West took the lead at 14-13 when Malcolm Dixon of South Stokes caught a 15-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Andre White of Concord in the third quarter. White, who finished with 106 yards in 13 carries, scored again on a two-yard run in the fourth quarter to give the West a 20-13 lead.

The East retook the lead 14-yard run by Everett Norwood of Fayetteville E.E. Smith. Davenport's two-point conversion run gave the East a 21-20 advantage.

NFL Teams Set Own AIDS Policy

By BOB KIMBALL
Associated Press Writer

The NFL has decided to let teams deal with AIDS testing and related concerns on an individual basis.

"Each club is handling it as it sees fit," NFL spokesman Joe Browne said.

Questions regarding AIDS found their way into pro football this week when the Dallas Cowboys announced a voluntary testing program to check their players for the deadly disease. As of Thursday, five other clubs had followed suit: the Los Angeles Rams, Los Angeles Raiders, St. Louis Cardinals, Houston Oilers and San Francisco 49ers.

AIDS was a major topic of discussion at the Cowboys' training camp at Thousand Oaks, Calif. Crews from four TV networks were among those attending Coach Tom Landry's weekly news conference, at which he stressed the team's voluntary AIDS examinations are confidential between player and doctor.

However, most NFL clubs have not instituted AIDS testing, while several refuse to elaborate on the matter. For example, Seattle Seahawks' spokesman Gary Wright, when asked if his team offers AIDS testing, said, "We don't talk about anything we do during our physicals."

Cleveland Browns spokesman Kevin Byrne said testing is very confidential. "We frankly feel it's nobody's business."

A Houston doctor who specializes in AIDS research, feels that NFL clubs are overreacting and creating a scare.

Dr. Peter Mansell of the Institute for Immunological Disorders in Houston said testing is "totally unnecessary" and that playing football has "absolutely nothing to do with the transmission of the disease." Mansell also said "this type of stupidity is going to put us back into the dark ages so far as educating people" about the disease.

Mansell, in an interview from his office, also said teams have begun testing for AIDS "because they're ignorant."

"Contracting AIDS (by playing football) is not as much of a risk as getting kicked in the head and dying," Mansell said. "I suggest they (pro football teams) shut up and leave the business of health care to those qualified to do it."

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is a disease in which a virus attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to a wide variety of infections and cancers.

It is transmitted primarily through sexual contact, and can be transmitted by transfusion of contaminated blood or blood products, and by contaminated hypodermic needles or syringes used by drug abusers.

"I can remember when drinking was our big problem, then it became marijuana, then cocaine, then crack, and now we have to fight AIDS," Houston Oilers Coach Jerry Glanville said.

Detroit General Manager Russ Thomas believes fighting AIDS in the NFL is just part of dealing with the disease on a larger scale. "Our whole society is confronted with the problem," Thomas said.

The NFL has no known cases of AIDS among its approximately 1,500 players. The only former league player to die of the disease, Washington Redskins tight end Jerry Smith, passed away last year at the age of 43.

The Redskins announced Thursday that the team is taking precautions against AIDS, including possibly testing players for the virus.

"As of right now, we haven't tested anyone for AIDS," Head Coach Joe Gibbs said. "But if, after going through it with the medical staff, they feel that's something we should do, then we're going to do it."

The AIDS scare has also caused changes in procedures for treating routine injuries. For example, Cardinal, Cowboy and Redskin trainers and doctors are wearing rubber gloves to treat player injuries involving cuts and abrasions.

Dr. Owen Bossman, team physician for the Buffalo Bills, said the team is not doing any testing for AIDS, but there is education and precaution.

"We're instructing the players in the practice of safe sex, not to share razors because of the possibility of blood ... keeping the equipment clean," Bossman said. "Our clubhouse men are instructed to clean up blood spills with bleach. Basically, that's all we're doing."

Mansell does not agree with using rubber gloves to contain the AIDS virus.

"The truth is that AIDS is not transmitted by casual contact," said Mansell, who believes, in this case anyway, that playing pro football is casual contact.

Non-Winners Sparkle In First Round Of St. Jude

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Russ Cochran is hoping the hot and humid weather in the Memphis area continues.

The left-hander, who has never won a PGA Tour event, led three other non-winners by one-stroke after Thursday's first round of $600,000 Federal Express-St. Jude Classic.

Antonio Cerda, Charlie Bolling and Andy Dillard all turned in 67s on the par-72, 7,828-yard Colonial Country Club course.

Cochran registered eight birdies in his round of 6-under-par 66 and he said the 96-degree temperature and 108-degree heat factor helped him from "overconcentrating" on his game.

"Sometimes you try so hard and things just don't work out," said Cochran, whose top career finishes are seconds in the 1984 B.C. Open and the 1986 Tallahassee Open.

"I made an effort to turn my mind off a little bit," Cochran said. "It was a struggle to keep your concentration in this weather, so, in a way, it helped me do what I wanted to do."

The eight-year pro started his round with a bogey on the par-4, 417-yard 10th hole and also bogeyed the par-4 17th but still made the turn at 34.

Cochran then mastered the front nine by dropping in four birdie putts, one a 25-footer at the par-4, 4th.

The tour's longest course also held little mystery for Cerda, Bolling or Dillard.

Cerda, who has failed to make the cut in his last four tournaments, credited his success to a little late-night work.

"I've been hitting the ball good lately and putting bad, but today I putted real well," Cerda said. "I worked on my putting for three hours last night on the carpet in the hotel room."

The native of Argentina turned in a steady round, taking two strokes off par on the back nine and then playing the front three under.

Bolling, who failed to make the cut in last weekend's Buick Open, had an opportunity to tie Cochran for the lead on his final hole, the ninth, but pushed a 10-foot, birdie putt off line and settled for par.

"I got off to a great start and I'd like to play well all week," Bolling said. "I don't think the lead is that big at this point, but I'd certainly like to be in this position going into Sunday."

Dillard, whose top finish this year has been a tie for 15th in the Doral Open, turned in a 4-under-par 32 with four birdies on the front nine, but cooled off on the back nine with eight pars and one birdie.

"This is the most solid round I've had in a long time. I missed several makeable putts, but I'm not complaining. I'm thrilled," Dillard said.

Cochran has a two-shot lead over 10 golfers, including Masters champion Larry Mize, 1986 Tournament Players Championship winner John Maffey and Payne Stewart.

Stewart was the only other player to reach six under on the day, tying Cochran for the lead when he birdied the 218-yard, par-3 12th hole. Stewart then double bogeyed the par-4, 464-yard 13th hole after hitting out of bounds.

Eleven players are bunched three shots off Cochran's pace at 69.

In all, 59 players bettered par with 16, including defending champion Mike Hulbert, carding 70s and 18 finishing at 71.

Among those finishing at 70 was Mike McGee, who tied a PGA Tour record by putting only 18 times during his round.

McGee had no putts on three greens, chipping in once and converting from the fringe twice, two-putted three greens and one-putted 12 holes.

McGee tied the record set in the final round of the 1979 Philadelphia Classic by Sam Trahan.

Robert Wrenn, who went 26 shots under par to win last weekend's Buick Open, was among a group of 27 golfers to match par at 72.

Hill's Heart Is At Memphis Golf

SCARBOROUGH-ON-HUDSON, N.Y. (AP) — Dave Hill's heart is in Memphis, Tenn., where the St. Jude Classic is under way. But he is at the $250,000 Seniors Commemorative tournament.

The 50-year-old Hill readily admitted that he would be in Memphis for the PGA event if there were no Senior Tour event this week. After all, he won the St. Jude Classic four times — 1967, 1969, 1970 and 1973.

"My first obligation is to play on the Senior Tour," Hill said. "We need name players to help it continue to grow. We will get them in the next four or five years."

Hill was referring to players such as Al Geiberger, Lee Trevino and possibly, Jack Nicklaus.

"While I'm talking about being loyal to this tour, I also am taking a practical approach — I'm too old to play with the kids," Hill said.

"They are way too competitive. I'm at the point that I want to have some fun. I don't want to be playing just for the sake of playing."

Hill found himself in that position for the last six or seven years, and as a result, played sparingly.

"I had no desire because my game had gotten so bad," explained the Jackson, Mich., native who joined the PGA Tour in 1959 and registered 13 victories and earnings of $1,130,430.

"That's why I didn't play on either tour last year," he said. "Frankly, I came back because of the money. There are a few things I still want to do, but I would not have returned if I didn't think I'd make a profit. After all, it cost about $2,000 a week to be on tour."

Hill, who resumed playing in April, has only had two days off and that was as a result of not making the cut in last week's Buick Open on the PGA Tour. He has finished in the top ten in five of eight tournaments, all as a senior.

"I'm tired, but I'm still swinging the clubs well," he said. "I'm fighting the driver a bit and the putter is a little balky, but I feel good about my game."

Hill admitted that he had trouble reading the greens in a pro-am round Wednesday over the par-70, 6,545-yard Sleepy Hollow Country Club course.

"I shot a 72," he said, "but today I came back with a 66 even though I three-putted the last hole. That means a great deal mentally. You have to drive well on this course. Position is everything."

Lee Elder is the two-time defender in the 54-hole tournament that offers a top prize of $37,500. A victory this week would make the 53-year-old the first member of the Senior Tour to win the same title in three successive years.

Arnold Palmer, who is the Commemorative honoree for winning the Masters and British Open 25 years ago when he was also the year's leading money winner, is also entered.

Others include Chi Chi Rodriguez, Roberto de Vincenzo, Doug Sanders, Dale Douglass and Orville Moody.

Chris Johnson Grabs Lead, Looks For Better Play Today

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. (AP) — Chris Johnson doesn't have to remember the holes of her birdie run in the first round of the Columbia Savings LPGA Pro-Am.

She's playing a different course today, but one she likes.

Johnson birdied four of five holes starting at No. 8 Thursday as she shot a 6-under-par 66 for a two-shot lead over Jill Briles in the $275,000 tournament. The no-bogey round was over the 6,265-yard Meridian Golf Club course, the same one Briles played.

Today, however, both golfers were scheduled to play the par-72, 6,510-yard Lone Tree Golf Club course.

"I like Lone Tree. I played well there last year," Johnson said. "I've just got to get out and hit some balls before the rain hits."

Temperatures have been above 90 degrees, and thunderstorms rolled in shortly after the end of competition in the preliminary Skins Game on Wednesday, and after Thursday's opening round.

Johnson said she was able to concentrate and focus better after working out a problem with her swing on the practice tee.

"I've been in a slump for six or seven months, and it feels good to be playing well," Johnson said.

But there may be another contributor to her game, she said.

"I've got a soft spot in my heart for Denver. Denver was the first tournament I played in as a professional in 1980."

Johnson currently stands 12th on the LPGA earnings list with $109,773, while Briles has won $31,762 and is in 60th place.

Briles, a former collegiate star and academic all-American at Miami, Fla., finished her round with an eagle 3 on the 482-yard 18th.

Her eagle came after a 300-yard drive and a 7-iron that put her on the green about pin high.

"The ball was in a swale and I rolled in about a 30-foot putt," she said. "I used a lot of short irons to get on the green."

Grouped at 69 were Barb Bunkowsky, Kathryn Young, Susan Tonkin, Sherri Stenhauer, and Sara Ann Timms. All except Tonkin played their first round at Lone Tree.

Defending champion Amy Alcott, who was three over on her front nine, came back to finish with a 1-over-par 73 at Lone Tree, and blamed her lack of concentration on cancer surgery her mother, Lea, was to undergo Thursday in California.

"If I had putted I might have gotten a 68 or a 69," Alcott said.

Signings Could Solve Problems

By The Associated Press

The New York Jets finally solved a big problem and the New York Giants may have solved another one, thanks to the signing of a couple of key players.

The Jets and holdout quarterback Ken O'Brien finally came to terms on a new contract late Thursday night in what a Jets' spokesman called "an amicable agreement."

O'Brien, who was entering the option year of the contract he signed after the Jets made him their first-round draft pick in 1983, did not report as scheduled last weekend. But the Jets said O'Brien will be in camp today when veterans report.

O'Brien reportedly was seeking a contract in the $900,000 range while the Jets were offering about $750,000, with incentives. Neither side revealed contract terms.

O'Brien's backup, Pat Ryan, is still out with a pulled groin muscle and is not expected back until Sunday.

The defending Super Bowl champion Giants, meanwhile, came to terms with Mark Ingram, a wide receiver from Michigan State who was their first-round selection this year in the draft.

Ingram signed a four-year deal reportedly worth more than $1 million and reported to camp Thursday for the afternoon practice.

The Giants opened camp for rookies on Monday, meaning Ingram has missed 3½ days of practice.

"I think he missed quite a bit," Giants Coach Bill Parcells said. "When the vets come in we'll go over the same stuff. But he'll only have one time to get it instead of two. It's not that big a deal. But if it is, then we made a big mistake."

Wide receiver was the weakest position on the Super Bowl champions last season. The Giants chose three, led by Ingram, in the first four rounds of April's college draft.

The 5-foot-11 Ingram, the 28th pick overall, was the last of the Giants picks to sign and became the 13th first-rounder to sign so far this season. A six-hour negotiating session with Giants vice president and general manager George Young preceeded the signing.

Other Agreements

Four-time Pro Bowl linebacker Rickey Jackson signed a contract with the New Orleans Saints. Jackson said he had bargained another $100,000 out of the Saints, bringing his package to a reported $1.9 million over three years.

With only hours remaining in Thursday's reporting deadline for veterans, Jackson said he signed a three-year contract with no option clause.

Also signing contracts with the Saints on Thursday were starting tackle Stan Brock, reserve center Joel Hilgenberg and reserve defensive back Brett Maxie.

Safety Frank Wattelet and linebackers Joe Kohlbrand and Jack Del Rio agreed to terms, but had not signed.

The Atlanta Falcons came to terms with rookie running back Kenny Flowers, their second-round draft pick from Clemson. Falcons officials announced that Flowers signed "a series of one-year contracts," but refused to provide other information.

Former Houston Oilers wide receiver Tim Smith joined the Cleveland Browns as a free agent. The 6-foot-2, 206-pound Smith is trying to play an eighth NFL season.

The Buffalo Bills agreed to terms with two veteran receivers and cut seven players, as the remaining 24 veterans due at training camp arrived.

Jerry Butler, a wide receiver who suffered a broken leg last season, signed two one-year contracts. Also agreeing to terms was tight end Pete Metzelaars, the Bills' leading receiver last season.

The New England Patriots came to contract agreements with veteran free agents Craig James and Lin Dawson. Although no terms of the contracts were released, the players were expected to sign today, according to a team spokesman.

James, a running back from SMU, is entering his fourth year with the Patriots. Dawson, a tight end from North Carolina State, sat out all of last season after suffering a knee injury on the first play of the preceding Super Bowl.

Veteran offensive lineman Larry Lee signed a contract with the Miami Dolphins and joined the other veterans who showed up on the final official reporting date for training camp.

Third-round draft pick Robert Awalt, a tight end from San Diego State, and a pair of veterans agreed to contract terms with the St. Louis Cardinals.

Awalt, defensive tackle Mark Duda and defensive end Al "Bubba" Baker were expected to sign today.

The Cardinals also announced that linebacker Niko Noga had signed a contract Wednesday night. Reportedly, Noga signed a three-year deal for a reported $265,000 per year.

Holdouts

The agent for holdout rookie running back Brent Fullwood said he and the Green Bay Packers are still between $400,000 and $500,000 apart in contract negotiations. George Kickliter, who met with Tom Braatz, the team's vice president for football operations, said he is seeking a three- or four-year contract.

Fullwood, who played at Auburn, was the Packers' No. 1 choice and fourth overall in the NFL draft.

Around the Camps

John Stallworth and Donnie Shell, two of the Pittsburgh Steelers' last remaining links to their four Super Bowl championships, reported to preseason training camp for the 14th — and possibly last — time.

Stallworth and Shell, who joined 45 other veterans in the team's first full-squad workout, said last year's 6-10 season was frustrating.

"I cannot go through another season like last year," said Shell, 34, whose 50 interceptions are the most ever by an NFL strong safety. "We absolutely have got to do better. We've got to get the attitude back, the respect back that we used to have."

Cuts

The Houston Oilers waived veteran running back Butch Woolfolk.

Coach Jerry Glanville said Woolfolk, the club's starting fullback until he suffered a shoulder injury last season, had asked to be traded if he was not going to be a starter.

"It would have been best for the club to keep Butch on the team in case someone gets hurt," Glanville said. "But we tell the whole squad, if you don't want to be here, come see me."

Glanville also said goodbye to offensive lineman Mike Kelley, who said he'd lost his interest in playing football.

Meanwhile, the Dallas Cowbys waived nine players, including rookie quarterback John Shaffer, who led Penn State to the national championship this past season.

"John is a great kid and I can see how Penn State won the national title with him, but his arm just wasn't strong enough by NFL standards," Dallas Coach Tom Landry said.

Pee Wee Tourney Champs

Jackson Pact Said Highest

DALLAS (AP) — Bo Jackson, the full-time baseball player and soon-to-be part-time football player, will be the highest-paid non-quarterback in NFL history when he begins his career with the Los Angeles Raiders around mid-season, a published report says.

The Dallas Morning News reported today that the former Heisman Trophy winner, now an outfielder with the Kansas City Royals, has a five-year, $7.4-million contract with the Raiders even though he might be available to the Raiders for only eight games a year.

Only Miami's Dan Marino, whose multi-year contract is worth $9 million, Tampa Bay's Vinny Testaverde, who will get $8.2 million, and Buffalo's Jim Kelly, who earns $8 million, have more lucrative total dollar deals, the newspaper said. But they play a full schedule.

Denver's John Elway is expected to sign a new long-term contract for $2 million per year before the start of the season, the newspaper said.

The present value of Jackson's contract, computed in today's dollars, is $4.5 million, the newspaper said. That reflects deferred compensation in base salary and bonuses.

Neither Jackson nor the Raiders has been willing to divulge contract details. The newspaper did not reveal how it obtained the figures.

Jackson's contract includes a $1-million signing bonus and base salaries that average $864,000 a year. It also has an injury protection clause that guarantees he will be paid in full should he sustain a career-ending injury playing for either the Royals or Raiders once he passes his first Raiders physical in October.

The contract is not based on the number of games Jackson plays. It simply requires him to report to the Raiders 10 days after the conclusion of the baseball season and allows the Raiders to begin using him in games at their discretion.

There is nothing in the contract that forces Jackson to choose between the sports, the newspaper said.

The base salaries for the five years, which will be deferred over a 12-year period, are: $668,975, $748,499, $840,184, $960,886 and $1,101,456, the newspaper said. The total base salary compensation is $4.32 million, which will be paid in equal installments, about $360,000 a year, from 1987-1999.

Jackson's signing bonus of $1 million will be paid in two installments: $500,000 when he reports and passes the physical this year and $500,000 when he does the same in 1988.

He will get a $420,000 deferred bonus for each year he plays. If he plays the five years, the Raiders will pay Jackson $2.1 million in 25 years. That has a present value of $300,000, the newspaper said.

There is a $300,000 loan, which is not included in the $7.4 million total because it must be repaid in 25 years, the newspaper said.

There is no clause for renegotiation if Jackson, an All-American at Auburn, decides to only play football. And unlike Jackson's baseball contract, there is no buyout period and payback requirement if he drops the sport.

Joe Sorry About Hard Feelings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Joe Theismann said that he's sorry if some published excerpts of his soon-to-be-released autobiography have caused hard feelings with his former Washington Redskins teammates or with Coach Joe Gibbs, a man for whom said he has "tremendous respect."

The former Washington quarterback appeared Thursday on WRC-TV and said that the intention of his book wasn't to alienate the Redskins, for whom he played from 1974 to 1985, but to share his experiences as a professional athlete.

Theismann, who led Washington to Super Bowls in 1982 and 1983, said that he was surprised about the furor caused by the appearance of excerpts from his book in the Washington Post that were picked up from the August edition of Washingtonian magazine.

He said that he wasn't often hung over at practices as was reported by the newspaper and stated that he doesn't have a drinking problem.

"It should well have been a shock to Joe Gibbs, because the problem never existed," Theismann said. "I feel like it's a bit of irresponsible journalism trying to sensationalize something and make headlines out of nothing.

Theismann says what the Post excerpted is a very small part of the book and that the comments were taken out of context. He said he wanted to state his side of the controversy.

"My situation is such that I felt that it was really blown way out of proportion as far as that particular aspect of what I write in the book about," Theismann said, adding that he felt no remorse about writing the book.

"I'm very proud to have been a Redskin and what it represents," he said.

Gibbs earlier said that he was "shocked" by the revelations by Theismann and that they were new to him.

"I never saw Joe Theismann where I didn't think he was (giving) 100 percent on the practice field," Gibbs said. "I thought Joe was one of the best practice players I ever saw. I didn't know Joe drank, I swear I didn't, other than to have a beer or something."

As for passages critical to Gibbs, including an allegation that the coach was easy on players' gambling and drinking as long as the team was winning, Theismann said, "I think that happens in every organization. I thinkif things are going well, a lot of times the smaller things are overlooked. Believe me, the book is not intended, nor is anything I say is intended as a personal attack against Joe Gibbs.

Versatile SNL Regular Phil Hartman Enjoys Imitations Of Other People

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Mention Phil Hartman's name even to diehard fans of "Saturday Night Live" and you'll likely get the response, "Now, which one is he?"

He doesn't do "Church Lady" like Dana Carvey or "The Liar" like Jon Lovitz. But the versatile Hartman can do almost anybody — President Reagan, Phil Donahue, Liberace, even Peter Graves in a spoof of the science show "Discovery."

"I like what I do. I like the idea of writers coming to me and saying, 'Can you do Ted Kennedy?' And I go, 'Uh, yes, uh, I cahn.' I have this notion of myself as the man of a thousand faces, or a thousand voices," said Hartman in an interview at NBC just before SNL wrapped up for the season.

He has one of those generic-handsome faces that he likens to that of a 1950s B-movie hero.

But he also likes the 1940s and does a great Humphrey Bogart, lapsing at one point in the interview into a bullet-fast, Phillip Marlowe takeoff: "Come on, Johnny! I read you like a book! Sure, some of the pages are stuck together, but let's go through the table of contents — Chapter 1!"

A favorite character of his own making is Chick Hazard, a Bogey-like, hard-boiled private eye. Hartman has written a movie script around Chick that would co-star his friend, Jon Lovitz, as gangster Eddie Spumozo.

In his favorite sketch of last season Hartman played a washed-up 1940s movie star, and Lovitz was the studio boss trying to fire him. That was one Hartman wrote. He has dual writing-performing credit on SNL.

Hartman was born in Ontario, Canada. After college, he moved to the West Coast and opened his own graphic design shop where he created album covers and logos for rock groups like Poco, America and Crosby, Stills and Nash.

But it didn't give him an outlet for his "class clown" tendencies, so he joined The Groundlings, a Los Angeles improvisational group that also included Paul Reubens, now "Pee Wee Herman," and Lovitz.

Hartman's big break came when he wrote the script for the feature film "Pee-Wee's Big Adventure" for Reubens. Director Blake Edwards admired the film and cast Hartman as Bruce Willis' brother in the movie "Blind Date."

Hartman has continued the association with Reubens, playing Captain Carl last season in "Pee-Wee's Playhouse," an innovative Saturday morning kids' show on CBS. Hartman also did voices for an animated "Dennis the Menace" show.

Hartman, 38, says previous SNL cast members who joined up at a younger age saw the show primarily as a springboard to a movie career. For Hartman, the show is "the pinnacle."

"This is it," he said, "This is Rockefeller Center, New York City, live comedy television. There's nothing like it."

Hartman's affection for the show sits well with his friend, SNL producer Lorne Michaels. Michaels compares Hartman to Dan Aykroyd, a founding cast member whose versatility was similarly overlooked by the public back when Chevy Chase, John Belushi and Gilda Radner were the big stars.

"I know the things that are more accessible or have a little more sugar in them are taken up by the public, and real brilliant work doesn't necessarily get appreciated until years later," Michaels said.

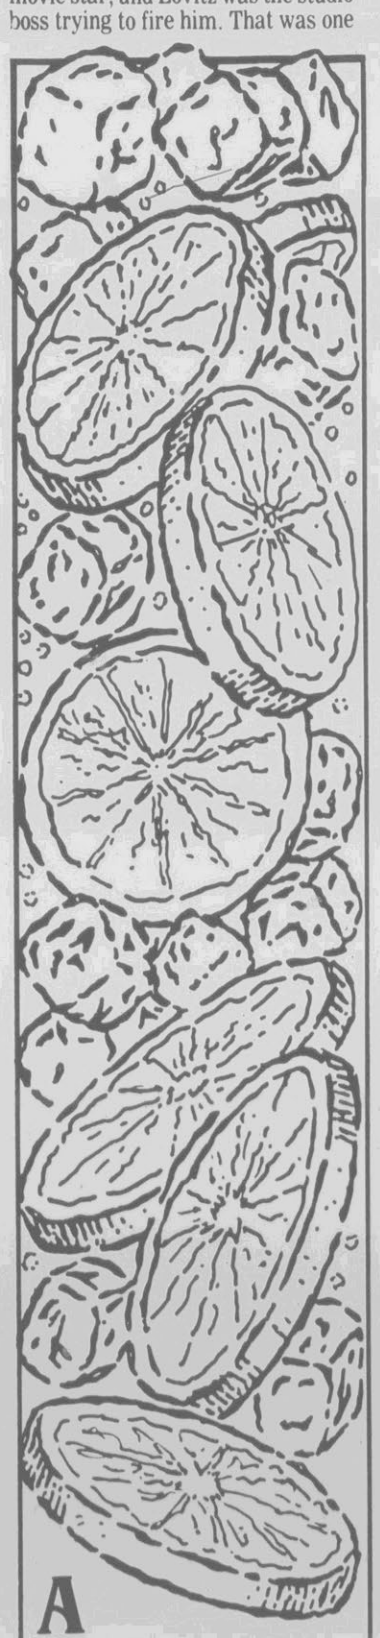

"That kind of ability to do five or six parts in a show where you're playing support or you're doing remarkable character work is different than doing the 'Samurai' all the time or well-known or more popular characters.

"Phil Hartman, I think, is the least appreciated, except here. He's very similar to Danny in that regard."

Hartman displays a remarkable objectivity about himself as performer. He says he predicted to Michaels that Dana Carvey, whom he greatly admires, would be the star of the new cast.

"Moreover, I don't think I'm that kind of talent," Hartman said. "I don't think I'm the guy that everybody just wants to fall in love with and cuddle up and take into their homes. There's something a little forbidding about me, a little unusual.

"I suppose in my heart of hearts, sure, I'd like to become something unique in the overall scheme of things. But right now, I'm very proud of what I've done."

A refreshing twist on the routine bar scene.

After work, after dinner, after hours, when you come to Annabelle's to relax and unwind, you'll get more than just a seat at the bar. Keeshan Undergoes Surgery

HOUSTON (AP) — Bob Keeshan, television's Captain Kangaroo, looks good and says he feels great after undergoing triple by-pass surgery last week, his surgeon said Thursday.

Keeshan, 60, underwent surgery July 23 at Methodist Hospital and should be returning to his Long Island, N.Y., home this weekend, said Ruth Manecke, his spokeswoman.

"He's just fine," Ms. Manecke said. "He's called his office and is coming home in a few days."

The surgery was not an emergency, hospital spokeswoman Brenda Blake said. Keeshan's physician in New York recommended that he undergo the operation, she said. Keeshan suffered a heart attack in 1981.

"He's a perfect patient," said Dr. E. Stanley Crawford, who performed the operation. "He looks good and says he feels great."

The actor and producer has had no complications, hospital officials said.

Keeshan, a six-time Emmy winner, wore a captain's uniform and sugar-bowl haircut for nearly 30 years as host of CBS' "Captain Kangaroo," television's longest-running children's program.

BOB KEESHAN

"Captain Kangaroo" premiered on CBS on Oct. 3, 1955. It went off the air in 1984, but half-hour shows from the originals run on public television.

He began his TV career as a network page boy in New York.

Beyond his on-air work, Keeshan developed the CBS Workshop on Children's Television in 1978, in an effort to improve the quality of TV aimed at young viewers.

Keeshan also became an advocate for children's issues. He told a Dartmouth College audience in 1980 that he was concerned that many parents were using television as baby sitters.

Woodward Hospitalized

LONDON (AP) — Edward Woodward, British star of the American television series "The Equalizer," was resting after a suspected heart attack and will be cheered by news of his nomination for an Emmy award, his agent said.

Woodward, 57, who plays a champion of the weak in the fight against crime in New York City, was nominated Thursday as best lead actor in a drama series by the American Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

The Emmy winners will be announced Sept. 20 in Los Angeles.

"We immediately passed on the news about the Emmy nomination to Mrs. Woodward," said the actor's London agent, Eric Glass. "She was with her husband today in the hospital, and I am sure she must have told him.

"It would have helped to cheer him up. Edward is making good progress."

Woodward was admitted to Warwick Hospital in central England on Tuesday with breathing problems and chest pains.

He had been at his home in nearby Edgehill, where he was taking a break from "The Equalizer" to film "Kyril," a British-made TV thriller in which he plays a spy.

Dusty Picasso Etching Found By Porno Raiders

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Police had planned to burn a charcoal-colored picture of a buxom naked woman and a bearded man along with seized pornography. Then they saw it was signed — Picasso.

City property manager Phil Edwards first noticed the work because he liked the frame. But when he dusted off the work, he saw an abstract image and pencil markings in a bottom corner that set it apart.

That portrait of a nude woman posing for an artist that had been the laughingstock of evidence room workers could be worth between $2,000 to $9,500, some New York art dealers said Thursday.

The work appears to be an original aquatint etching prepared in 1966 by the prolific Spanish-born artist Pablo Picasso, according to Alan DuBois, assistant director of the Orlando Museum of Art.

Aquatinting is a form of etching in which the artist uses acid to etch zones, rather than lines, from a copper plate. The print is transferred to paper and the zones are filled with color, producing an etching that is similar to a watercolor painting.

The etching discovered in the evidence room was the first of 50 produced from a plate Picasso prepared on Oct. 25, 1965. The artist, who died in 1973 at age 91, started making prints in 1904.

"It was a very nice frame," Edwards said of the slightly chipped gold painted wood frame. The etching "looked like a charcoal drawing behind the dust."

Edwards said he recognized the Picasso style from an art class he took 10 years ago at the University of West Florida. He asked the city librarian to check it.

Later, City Clerk Grace Chewning arranged to have DuBois examine it. The museum official confirmed the style and signature.

Police said Thursday they couldn't pinpoint where the print came from. It was either unclaimed stolen property or material seized in a drug raid, said spokesman Mike Wenger.

The print had been collecting dust in the evidence room for at least a year.

"It was horrible," an unidentified evidence caretaker told the Orlando Sentinel. "When we first pulled it, we all laughed about it."

Had Edwards not grabbed it, the police would have burned the print along with the pornographic films and other confiscated materials they don't want returned to the public through city auctions.

Officials at the Museum of Modern Art in New York, who found the print listed in a Picasso catalog, said the work is titled "Modele Posant et Peintre," which is French for Model posing and Artist.

The print shows a dark-haired buxom nude woman posing for a bearded artist at a easel with a paint brush in his hand.

If the print is authentic, signed and in good condition, it could be worth $2,000 to $3,000, said Jennifer Dodge Josselson, director of prints for Christie's auction house.

Audubon TV Specials Look At Ducks, Organic Farming

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States has run out of dusky sparrows, and is down to its last few condors and black-footed ferrets. You wouldn't think anyone needs to worry about ducks, which number in the millions.

"Survivors yes; indestructible, no," narrator John Heard says at the beginning of "Ducks Under Siege," an Audubon Society special appearing on public television Monday.

Duck numbers are down sharply since 1955, the program says, and half the wetland habitat has disappeared. Some of what remains is poisoned.

The special visits the Kesterson Wildlife Refuge in California, where high concentrations of selenium from agricultural runoff was killing ducks. Now game wardens use flares to chase ducks away.

In Louisiana, canals dug to facilitate oil exploration let salt water into some wetlands, and ruined them as duck habitat. Meanwhile, ducks crowding into freshwater marshes become more vulnerable to disease and to hunters, the program says.

In the northern plains, farmers are draining and plowing glacial potholes which are prime habitat.

Ducks are showing signs of stress. There were 6.7 million mallards counted this year, compared to 13 million in 1958, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service public affairs officer Megan Durham said in a telephone interview. However, the mallard count was up 6 percent from a year ago.

Northern pintail ducks, another popular game fowl, declined by 2 percent since last year, and the population is now 44 percent below its 30-year average, Ms. Durham said.

But there may be ways for ducks to coexist with farmers, hunters and all the rest of us, the special suggests, and it looks at some possibilities.

Peaceful coexistence gets a more intensive look on Aug. 9 in another Audubon special, "Common Ground," which argues the case for organic farming.

One advocate says farmers benefit by cutting their costs for fertilizer, pesticides and herbicides, soil erosion is curbed and fewer poisons leech into groundwater.

Farmers may come out ahead even if yields fall, the organic advocates argue.

Wildlife benefit indirectly. For instance, if farmers rely less on pesticides and more on beneficial insects such as ladybugs, then there will be more bugs for birds to eat.

This may sound like some hippy-dippy earth consciousness spiel, but "Common Ground" stresses that, in some areas, these methods simply make economic sense. If farmers in the Susquehana Valley of Pennsylvania can save money by using less chemical fertilizer, that's all a farmer needs to know.

Happily, that also helps revive Chesapeake Bay by reducing the amount of pollution flowing in, the program says.

The Audubon specials are produced by the Audubon Society, Turner Broadcasting and WETA-TV in Washington. They were broadcast last year on WTBS.

Reunion

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Rock-country star Charlie Daniels' Volunteer Jam concert in September will mark a reunion of Lynyrd Skynyrd, a rock 'n' roll band that disbanded after a plane crash killed two members in 1977.

Daniels said Thursday that the seven-member band would be his special guest Sept. 6 at Volunteer Jam XIII at Starwood Amphitheater.

Lynyrd Skynyrd is best known for the hits "Sweet Home Alabama" and "Free Bird." The band will play in more than 25 cities following the concert in Nashville.
