Local Man Saves Survivor Of Pamlico Sound Crash

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

A Greenville man crossing the Pamlico Sound on a ferry became a key participant in the rescue of two women from the rough waters near Ocracoke Wednesday.

Chet Emerson, executive director of the Boys Club of Pitt County, said in an interview this morning that he pulled Martha Gaskill, 26, one of the survivors of a Tuesday night plane crash, from the water at about 1:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Mrs. Gaskill and her sister-in-law, Anna Gaskill, 15, both of Bayboro, had been in a single-engine plane piloted by Ms. Gaskill's uncle, Matthew Prescott, when the plane ran out of fuel and crashed into the waters of the sound Tuesday about 9:30 p.m. Prescott was not located, and the Coast Guard suspended the search Wednesday night due to bad weather.

Emerson said he and nine local boys had been camping on the Outer Banks and were returning via the ferry Wednesday afternoon. He said he was standing on the deck of the boat when he heard a passenger yell that someone was in the water. Fearing that it was one of his charges, Emerson ran to see what had happened.

Two women were floating on their backs near the ferry. "They were screaming for help," Emerson said. "One of the women was injured quite badly and the other was in pretty good shape. The woman who was most injured was closest to me. I threw her a round, doughnut-shaped life preserver and yelled for her to hold on. We thought a boat had capsized."

"I asked the woman (Mrs. Gaskill) how many more were there. She said her uncle was still near the plane, and that's when we realized it was a plane crash," he said.

The women and their pilot apparently clung to the plane until 3 a.m. Wednesday, when waves washed the women away from the plane. The pilot was last seen clinging to the fuselage.

"There were gashes on her (Mrs. Gaskill's) head and her face was swollen and she was very weak," he said. "I told her to hang on and began pulling the life preserver to the boat with the (attached) rope. She was having trouble holding on and twice she slipped through the life preserver."

"The wind had just picked up when we spotted them," he said. "After I had her on the life preserver, the wind started whipping and it began to rain. Had we delayed another 15 minutes to a half-hour, we wouldn't have spotted them. The waves were picking up and it really got choppy. A storm came in so hard that we wouldn't have been able to spot them through the driving rain."

"I was leaning over the outside of the ferry holding on to a little gate," he said. "The winds were picking up, and it was getting bouncy."

"I kept talking to her and she said the plane had gone down about 9:30 p.m. Tuesday. They had been in the water 15 1/2 hours. All night long those two girls floated in the water."

"I moved her to the boat with the rope and held on to her for 20 minutes until we could get a ladder down in the water. She was so weak that she couldn't hold on. I had to hold her kind of up out of the water. She was a heavy girl. Today I am so sore I can hardly move."

"I don't know how much longer she could have lasted in the water. Thank goodness the ferry came along when it did."

Tropical Storms At Sea

MIAMI (AP) — Tropical storms Bret and Arlene are wandering over the Atlantic, annoyances to shipping but no immediate danger to land, a forecaster at the National Hurricane Center said today.

"Neither one of them may ever see landfall," said Hurricane Forecaster Bob Case.

Bret, now moving west across the Atlantic from the coast of Africa, could be diverted to the north by a weather trough. The storm would then die over cooler waters, he said.

Bret was centered near latitude 15.5 north and longitude 37.5 west, or about 900 miles west of the Cape Verde Islands at 6 a.m. EDT today. It was moving west at 17 mph, with maximum sustained winds of 50 mph.

Arlene, the first named tropical storm of the 1987 Atlantic hurricane season, was centered near latitude 34.5 north and longitude 43.5 west, or about 750 miles west-southwest of the Azores at 6 a.m. It was moving east at about 15 mph, with 40 mph winds, Case said.

"Arlene is out in the middle of the Atlantic meandering around," Case said. Arlene, which hit Bermuda last week, never went far enough north to be captured by the jet stream and taken into the colder waters of the North Atlantic.

Arlene might move into the North Atlantic in the next two to three days if forecast westerly winds steer it.

The Atlantic hurricane season runs from June 1 to Nov. 30 and normally peaks in early September.

Pentagon May Start Paying Extra For Persian Gulf Duty

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon is considering giving "imminent danger" pay of $110 per month to the thousands of men who are part of the growing U.S. military force in the Persian Gulf region, administration and congressional sources said today.

The proposal to provide additional danger pay has been approved by local U.S. military officials in the gulf region, but is still awaiting final authorization from Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, said the sources.

The Defense Department also has decided to consolidate the on-scene command of all U.S. forces in the region under one ranking Navy officer, and to bolster the already large Navy force with additional mine-sweeping ships from both the east and west coasts, the sources said.

The officials, who agreed to discuss the matter only if not identified, said the mine-sweeping ships would leave their home ports at different times throughout the remainder of August.

It will take more than a month for any of the vessels to reach the Persian Gulf, the sources added.

The officials declined to discuss precisely how many ships were being sent. But the Tacoma, Wash., News Tribune reported Wednesday that up to five mine-sweepers were being dispatched from bases in Washington, and the Norfolk, Va., Ledger-Star reported four East coast ships were being prepared for the voyage.

Principals Explain Goals

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

Principals from schools in the J.H. Rose and the North Pitt attendance areas explained their management plans for the 1987-1988 school year at a workshop meeting of the Pitt County Board of Education Wednesday.

The overall goal of the schools in the Rose attendance area is to improve teacher effectiveness by having all teachers complete the teacher effectiveness training developed by the N.C. State Department of Public Instruction.

Principals in the North Pitt attendance area developed the goal of improving language arts skills by June 1990.

Each principal discussed his goals and strategies for attaining the plan in his school.

Glenn Strickland, principal of Eastern Elementary School, discussed a plan for teaching economics to students in the kindergarten through third grade. By June 30, 1988, he said, the state competency goals in social studies and the series "The Lemonade Stand" will be integrated into the K-3 curriculum.

Stella Chambliss at Elmhurst Elementary, in order to improve student communications skills, has planned a consistent program of creative writing to be implemented on a regular basis. At Third Street School, Principal Carolyn Ferebee has plans to collect student writing samples to analyze student improvement from October 1987 until May 1988.

Rebecca Oats, principal of South Greenville School, and J.B. Smith, principal at E.B. Aycock Junior High School, both have a goal to have all teachers trained in the Assertive Discipline Program by December of this year. The discipline program shows teachers "the right way to discipline" without interrupting the teaching process, Smith said. Students are rewarded for good behavior and punished by the principal for bad behavior.

Two City Manager Finalists Identified

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The remaining three candidates for Greenville's vacant city manager position include a former Charlotte city manager and the current city manager of a Detroit suburb, the Daily Reflector learned today.

The candidates are William Veeder, who served as Charlotte city manager for 12 years, and Gregory Knowles, city manager of Inkster, Mich. A third candidate was considering withdrawing from contention, according to city officials.

The names were confirmed by three sources close to the search.

Veeder is employed at Pension Plans Inc. in Charlotte, while Knowles has served as Inkster's chief executive since 1984. According to the 1980 census, Inkster, which is located west of Detroit, has a population of about 35,190 people.

Veeder declined comment and Knowles could not be reached today.

The City Council, which received 177 applications, reduced the number of candidates from six to three during an executive session on Aug. 3, according to Dick Farris, the city's staff resource person in the search.

The three applicants still involved have been invited for day-long visits Tuesday through Aug. 27, according to Farris, who said the candidates will be interviewed by the council and meet department heads and various community leaders.

Farris, personnel director at East Carolina University, said the council hopes to name the new city manager around Aug. 29.

The search for a new city manager began following the March 16 dismissal of Gail Meeks.

ECU Defends Animal Research

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Displaying a graphic videotape of a dog undergoing surgery, a national animal rights organization has accused East Carolina University medical school instructors of mistreating the dog and violating federal guidelines for animal research.

But ECU officials said this morning that the tape — stolen from the school on Feb. 3 — had been edited and denied that the dog had been mistreated or suffered pain.

Representatives of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals said at a news conference in Washington Wednesday that the tape obtained from an unidentified source showed instructors at the ECU medical school operating on a dog that was not properly anesthetized. PETA officials played a copy of the videotape, which is used during the training of ECU medical students.

Dr. William H. Pryor Jr., a veterinarian and director of the ECU Animal Resources Center, said at a news conference this morning that the tape had been edited to present

Julie J. Song of Greenville is serving as a page in Raleigh with the N.C. Department of Crime Control and Public Safety as a part of Gov. Jim Martin's page program for high school students.

The daughter of Drs. Young-dahl and Juliet Kim Song, she is a senior at J.H. Rose High School.

Electrical Problems

Thunderstorms invaded the Greenville area Wednesday afternoon, creating significant electrical problems, said Roger Jones, director of Electric Systems at the Greenville Utilities Commission.

"About every truck we had was out," he said. At about 4 p.m., there were numerous reports of blown fuses and circuits and trees on the limbs.

But, "we were able to respond very quickly," Jones said. Most calls were handled by 7:30 p.m.

The GUC water plant in north Greenville recorded 2.8 inches of rain from 8 a.m. Wednesday to 8 a.m. today, while WNCN-TV in south Greenville recorded 1.15 inches. There were 1.4 inches recorded in Winterville.

High temperatures today were expected in the high 80s under partly cloudy skies with a 30 percent chance of showers.

The Tar River level was at 2.3 feet above sea level this morning.

United Way Names Division Leaders

The United Way has announced division leaders for the 1987 fund-raising campaign.

Peggy Christopher, branch manager and assistant vice president of the East Branch of NCNB in Greenville, will head the Business Division of the campaign.

She has been active in United Way since 1977, serving as chairman for the Professional and Business Divisions, as vice chairman of the Small Business, County and Special Gifts Divisions and as chairman of the Small Business Division in 1984. She was elected to the United Way Board of Directors in 1987.

D. Jordan Whichard III, vice president and general manager of The Daily Reflector Inc., will head the Commercial Division for the 1987 United Way fund-raising campaign.

A Greenville native, Whichard has served the Pitt County United Way as a member of the allocations committee and 1987 Campaign Service Division.

Ryal Tayloe will be in charge of the Professional Division. He is a partner in the law firm of Everett, Everett, Warren and Harper, Attorneys.

Tayloe has been active in the United Way for the past four years, serving on the Allocations Subcommittee, the full Allocations Committee, as attorneys section chairman of the Professional Division in 1985 and 1986, and as a member of the 1987 Admissions Committee.

The Public and Academics Division will be led by Dewitt F. McCauley.

McCauley, attorney for the City of Greenville, has served on the Allocations and Review Committee for United Way of North Carolina and for

Auto Larceny Charge

Glenn Pearson, 30, of 1503 Mills St. was arrested on an auto larceny charge by Greenville police in connection with an 11:15 p.m. incident Wednesday.

Officer J.E. Woolard said a 1980 model car was taken from Green Villa Apartments on Hooker Road at the Arlington Boulevard intersection. Woolard said the owner of the vehicle gave chase and detained Pearson at the intersection of Vance and Imperial streets until officers arrived.

Chemistry Day

Greenville Mayor Les Garner has proclaimed Nov. 6 as Chemistry Day.

"The science of chemistry provides the fundamental understanding required to deal with many of society's needs, including several that determine our quality of life and our economic strength," Garner said in the proclamation.

"Members of the Eastern North Carolina Section of the American Chemical Society have set aside Nov. 6, 1987, to focus the attention of our community on the myriad contributions of their science," the proclamation said.

Surgeon Says Pancreas Transplant Went Smoothly

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Transplant surgeon Dr. Frank Thomas said he is "extremely happy" with the transplant of a pancreas into the body of a 28-year-old Pitt County diabetes patient this week.

"It went extremely smoothly," he said of the surgery which began about 7 a.m. Monday and was completed about 9:30 a.m. He said that "never even in practice" has pancreatic transplantation been completed more readily by his surgical team.

Thomas and Dr. Paul R.G. Cunningham collaborated on the removal of the pancreas from the donor and on the implant of the organ into the recipient's body. He said the woman's non-functioning pancreas was left intact.

The patient, he said, has had diabetes since she was 2 years old.

The woman is the patient of Dr. Jose Caro and Dr. William Fore, endocrinologists working in a diabetes control program for eastern North Carolina run by the East Carolina University Medical School. Dr. Joseph Newman is her nephrologist. Neither her identity nor that of the pancreas donor has been released.

Dr. Thomas said that at least three major systems of the recipient's body had been damaged by the course of her diabetes which began in early childhood. He said her pancreas has not functioned for many years and that she has for all those years had to be given insulin to survive.

"She's had no insulin since the transplant," he said. "Her new pancreas is functioning beautifully."

Pancreas transplantation is less risky than some other transplant surgeries, like heart transplantation, since if the new pancreas becomes non-functioning or has function impaired, the patient can go back on injected insulin to live.

The value of performing the transplants, however, is that often the degeneration of various systems of the body is either stopped or even reversed by having the functioning pancreas. Insulin given any other way, he said, allows the patient to survive, but often does not stop the ongoing secondary complications of the disease.

He said kidney impairment or failure is a common complication of diabetes, especially juvenile diabetes. Thirty to 50 percent of the people in the United States now undergoing kidney dialysis are doing so because of complications from diabetes, he said.

He said much blindness in young people, most limb amputation, and much neuropathy — an all-over-the-body nerve disease characterized by pain and digestive disturbance — is directly traced to juvenile onset diabetes.

He said Dr. Caro and Dr. Fore decided on transplantation for their patient after virtually all other medical therapy had failed to help her.

Dr. Thomas emphasized that transplantation of the pancreas is becoming a more and more viable possibility for people with juvenile onset diabetes. He stressed, however, that at the present time, there are hundreds of thousands of juvenile onset diabetes patients and not nearly so many opportunities for doing the surgery. He said many more donations of organs are needed to increase the number that can be done.

This year, he said, about 500-600 of these operations will be done in the world. Between 25 and 30 medical centers in the United States do the surgery. So far, East Carolina University Medical School-affiliated surgeons are the only ones in North Carolina which have done the surgery.

The first pancreatic surgery at the medical school's affiliated hospital, Pitt Memorial, was done July 17, 1986. It was a joint kidney-pancreas transplant and took nine hours to complete. A Martin County man was the recipient. After several weeks of good function, the pancreas was removed because infection set in. His

CAR TALK

From Joe Cullipher Chrysler Plymouth, Dodge, Peugeot

By James Phillips
NOISE MEANS TROUBLE

Not all car noises mean trouble, but it's a good idea to investigate any which happen to develop. Here's a brief checklist to help you identify some common noisemakers.

A light metallic engine tap or ping indicates pre-ignition, a condition usually caused by poor timing, abnormal heat, heavy carbon formation or low octane fuel.

If a loud grinding noise is heard after starting the engine, chances are the jamming starter is at fault.

If there's a constant squeal under the hood, look for a tight fan belt. Or look for a loose fan belt if the squeal is only heard during acceleration.

A mysterious cracking or snapping sound often announces that the ignition cable insulation is dried out or leaky.

If a hiss or whistle has you puzzled, check for a loose spark plug or radiator pressure cap.

Class Reunion Held

Graduates of the 1957 class of Greenville High School held their 30th reunion Saturday, with class president Edwin Wilkerson serving as master of ceremonies.

About 80 people attended, including 42 classmates and teachers Elizabeth Mims, Christine Tripp, Kemp Baldwin, Francis Smith and James Rogers.

Class members receiving recognition were the Rev. Hugh Duncan, who traveled the greatest distance from Moses Lake, Wash.; Ginger Ross Sermons and Bill Sermons, married the longest with the oldest grandchild; Martha Tetterton Guill, who celebrated her 23rd wedding anniversary, and Betty Sugg Milliken, the most recently married.

The reunion was chaired by Elizabeth Tunnell Whichard and her husband, Ken, the senior class president.

Community Meeting

A community meeting will be held today from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. at Mount Calvary Feee Will Baptist Church on Hudson Street as part of the Greenville Police Department's problem oriented policing program.

The meeting will include presentations by representatives from the city's animal control division, engineering and inspections, fire-rescue department, parks and recreation, the Greenville Appearance board, the Greenville Utilities Commission, public works, and the police department.

Sgt. C.J. Hardy, who is coordinating the special policing program, said similar programs will be held at other locations in the future.

Seminar Participants

Seven J.H. Rose High School students recently attended a "Presidential Classroom for Young Americans" seminar in Washington, D.C.

Greenville students attending were Stephanie Hewett, William Rhodes, Debbie Seykora, Susan Sloan, Elizabeth Warren, Charlie White III and Missy Whitfield.

The seminar was on democracy and the federal government, diplomacy and issues of foreign policy.

Rescue

"I will never forget the look of someone who's almost at the brink of giving up," Emerson said. "I kept looking in her eyes when I looked down at her in the water. They had such a look of helplessness.

"I was yelling at people to please come help," he said. "I had to actually call on people to help.

"When we got a ladder, I went down the ladder (into the water) and placed her on the first rung. Three or four other gentlemen and I lifted her onto the ferry with the ladder. She was too weak to climb the ladder.

"After we got her on the deck, I covered her with blankets. She was dehydrated and we rubbed ice on her lips. She was sore and bruised."

The Coast Guard was notified and picked up the second survivor, Anna Gaskill, in a boat.

"The ferry was turned around and we went back to Ocracoke," Emerson said. "I spent the entire trip back to Ocracoke talking to her.

"She mentioned to me her baby. At first I thought the baby was in the water. When I got to talking to her more, she said she was going to take the baby with her on the trip. But before she left she told her mother that she wasn't going to take the baby and left her at her mother's home.

"She told me, 'Now I'll be able to raise my baby,'" Emerson said.

"She held my hand all the way back.

"She told me that she does not swim. She said she just floated on her back all night.

She said, 'I'm not a very religious person but I prayed all night long.'

An ambulance met the ferry in Ocracoke and transported the two women to Albemarle Hospital in Elizabeth City. Hospital officials said they were suffering from exposure and facial cuts and Mrs. Gaskill was believed to suffer from hypothermia. They were kept overnight for observation.

"Two ferries had crossed the sound earlier in the day. To find them as we did, it was a miracle," Emerson said.

"It's one of those things that happens once in a lifetime. The whole thing was quite an emotional experience," he said. "I couldn't sleep all night, all I could see was her eyes looking up at me.

When the ferry began its second trip toward Swan Quarter, "I had to get by myself for about 30 minutes to reflect on what happened," Emerson said. "I was quite moved by the whole experience ... to have the opportunity to help someone. We never know what we are going to do until we are called upon to do it.

"I told her I will look her up and visit her later. She might not remember me, but I'll never forget her."

School Principals Present Goals

At Sadie Saulter, Principal Esther Warren has a goal of improving the computer competency of all teachers by June 30, 1988, through Level I Computer Competency training.

Wahl-Coates School will establish a three-year plan for implementing the Effective School Model for increased achievement, according to Principal Judith Budacz. A group of teachers at the school already has been working toward that goal. The mission of the school has been defined as "Wahl-Coates is a place for teaching and learning," she said.

John Carstarphen, principal at Greenville Middle School, has a goal of computerizing student data into the Student Information Management System (SIMS). He said he hopes that by June 30, 1988, the school will receive clearance to print its own report cards.

Increasing services to pregnant and parenting teens is a goal of Principal Johann Bleicher at Agnes Fullilove School. His goal is to expand Project Parenting by increasing the enrollment of the day-care program by eight children of Pitt County schools students and increasing by 30 percent the number of counseling and medical contacts for parenting and prenatal students.

An honor code will be established at J.H. Rose High School in order to "add integrity to the learning process," according to Principal Pat Austin. The honor code, a written document to be signed by participating students, will be established by June 1988.

Project Quest, a program of skills for adolescents, will be implemented for all seventh-grade students at Wellcome Middle School, according to Principal Ed Tadlock. The 45-hour course will include instruction in self-confidence, alcohol and drugs, setting goals and family relationships. Tadlock said the course will help students "develop the skills and self-confidence they will need as they grow through their teen years." Funding has been provided by the Lions Club and the instruction will take place during the health and physical education classes.

At Bethel Elementary School, Janie Manning's management plan includes all teachers of all subjects at the school developing a plan to improve student reading and writing skills. Each teacher will assess her students' abilities and make a plan to submit to the school's Instructional Leadership Team. The teachers will monitor and evaluate their own programs.

Selma Cherry has a goal of increasing reading vocabulary at Pactolus School; comparison of California Achievement Test scores will show a six-month improvement by June 1988. North Pitt High School Principal Josh Potter has a goal of increasing 9th grade percentile scores on the reading portion of the CAT by one percentage point compared to the 8th grade scores. Principal Roscoe Locke of Stokes Elementary School said that by May 1988, 15 percent of the students who score below the 97th percentile will improve their CAT vocabulary reading score by 3 percent. Bruce Gray, principal of Belvoir School, has a goal of specific percentage increases for each grade in the student CAT scores.

Session Marked By Interference

If the 1987 N.C. Legislative session were made into a movie, it could be titled "The Long and Winding Road."

The session, the fourth longest in history, ground to a halt Saturday after lawmakers wound their way down a circuitous seven-month path to progress. They also wound their way into local officials' hair by passing measures restricting local authority.

The session was characterized by both bickering and productivity. It was handicapped by partisan politics and the clash between the state's rural and urban contingents. It marked a trend toward state meddling in local affairs.

For Pitt County, the most notable by-product of the session is the $31.6 million in school construction money the county will receive over a 10-year period. Indeed, the school construction legislation could be considered the strongest achievement of the 1987 General Assembly. Born of compromise, it addresses a need of both rural and urban areas — a serviceable, reasonable fund for urgently-needed improvements in the state's physical environment for learning.

Money-wise, 1987 was also a good year for East Carolina University. The $350,000 in planning money for a regional center is a project capable of significant economic impact. When the $15 million center comes to fruition, it could mean increased travel and tourism revenue for the county. It could also establish ECU as a national site for resource meetings. The university already has the academic muscle to draw distinguished conferences. A center would stimulate this potential.

Also significant is the $4.4 million appropriation for a new sports medicine facility and $4.2 million to complete the Medical Science Building for the School of Medicine.

ECU will benefit from the microelectronics center linking it with the state's center in Research Triangle Park funded by the legislature. This connection will help the school work toward its goal of becoming a research institution. It is also significant that lawmakers acknowledged the need to enlarge ECU's library. Securing planning funds for this expansion should be a major thrust for the next biennium.

Pitt Community College's $711,000 appropriation for a new building also addresses a distinct need, as well as a $50,000 appropriation for a satellite community college campus in Greene County.

Statewide, lawmakers succeeded with establishing protection for the environment by passing a phosphate ban and hazardous waste cleanup legislation.

The session's miscues, however, are the bills that restrict the authority of local officials. The billboard removal bill is an example of such poor legislation. That legislation, fought for and won by the lobbying efforts of outdoor advertising companies, makes it impossible for communities to enforce beneficial sign control ordinances.

Another example of feeble lawmaking is a bill allowing mobile homes in neighborhoods zoned for traditional housing — again, a move secured by manufactured housing industry lobbying. This bill makes locally devised zoning ordinances meaningless, and thwarts power of community officials.

Despite these negatives, the 1987 General Assembly can be considered an effective session. Pitt County fared well with funding for local needs. The state came out ahead on bills that address state priorities, although gaps were left. With these lacks in mind, lawmakers should begin planning how to streamline the next session — while accomplishing just as much as in the 1987 "Long and Winding Road."

Bring Back Draft And National Service

WASHINGTON — For those of you who may have missed this summer's most titillating revelation, Brooke Shields' complete academic record at Princeton University can be found in the July issue of Life magazine.

What's noteworthy about Shields' transcript is not that she eked out a "B" average; rather, the kind of courses she passed up while spending $60,000 during four years at Princeton. Her academic course load did not contain one credit in history, economics, political science or sociology.

Shields' academic testes are representative of her generation. Like her peers, she focused on subjects that lead to monetary/professional success.

Like many other members of Congress, Sen. Ernest Hollings (D-S.C.) is so turned off by such insipid values that he's concluded today's younger generation represents the corruption of our democracy. In fact, Hollings is so upset by inward-looking, debt-ridden students that he has introduced legislation to bring back the draft. Meanwhile, other, equally displeased legislators favor some form of mandatory national service.

In Hollings' opinion, the volunteer army has set an unhealthy tone by creating a whole generation of young Americans with no concept of service to country. Unfortunately, the gray-haired, silver-tongued Hollings is on the mark. This country needs a well-coordinated mandatory system of national service for all 18-year-olds, male and female.

Regrettably, the volunteer army has permitted young people to tune out politics, giving them the smug reassurance that, if conflict erupts in Central America or the Persian Gulf — where 18,000 American boys are currently on alert — they will not have to participate. Conversely, the volunteer army has created an environment in which policymakers can blunder into the Persian Gulf without having to worry about uprisings on college campuses. After all, it's not the sons and daughters of policymakers or investment bankers who'll be called upon to sacrifice as a result of unwise decisions made in Washington.

What we have today is a military that is drawn disproportionately from the lower classes, from minorities, from the undereducated and disadvantaged. If we were to go to war tomorrow, the sons of suburbia might, at best, break away from MTV for a moment while the sons of the inner city bleed to death in radically disproportionate numbers.

The United States has reached a crisis point in its national life. Its young people rarely vote or feign interest in current affairs. A mandatory program of national service, however, might alter this fact by providing a sense of national spirit which would widen the horizons of its participants.

Basically, national service calls upon members of a country to render service for some period of time, with equivalent military and non-military options, as a responsibility of membership in and a contribution to general community progress. It provides labor to wrestle with major community problems, gives its participants a sense of purpose, brings members together for common experience and creates a pride of accomplishment.

1987: The Session Of Education

RALEIGH — Although a great many issues are handled in every legislature session, in each, one issue stands above the rest as that session's trademark. There can be no doubt that for the 1987 General Assembly the trademark for history will be education.

Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham, says no General Assembly did more for education in his 21-year legislative career than the one which has just adjourned. He says the 1987 assembly passed legislation which will prove "much more significant" even than 1961 and 1963 when then-Gov. Terry Sanford was winning a national reputation as an education governor.

Let's summarize the education accomplishments: The third and fourth years of the Basic Education Plan were funded, adding $125 million this year and $260.5 million the following year, to the education budget. The Career Ladder Program was continued at a cost of $38 million over two years, and teachers were given a five percent pay raise.

The most controversial issue of the entire session was a school construction program. The assembly finally settled on a 10-year plan that directs $3.2 billion towards new and renovated schools. Of that money, $830 million comes from increases in business taxes.

"About the only thing that failed was (school) governance," said Sen. Marvin Ward, D-Forsyth. Gov. Jim Martin and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan had pushed a plan to make the superintendent of public instruction an appointive rather than an elected officer, but House opposition killed the plan.

Indicative of the broad base of legislative support for improved public education was the ease with which the BEP received its additional funds. In 1984, when the School Reform Act was passed, and in 1985, when the BEP got its first funds, the BEP was highly controversial. After the first several weeks of the legislative session, when there was some talk delaying portions of the third and fourth steps, all resistance to full funding dissipated. In all the budget subcommittee meetings, and in budget leadership meetings, "There weren't any attempts to cut these two BEP steps," said Sen. Aaron Plyler, D-Union, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. "The BEP was just not controversial."

Gov. Jim Martin, who backed off of suggestions to reduce BEP funding, noted during the height of the school construction debate that North Carolina had undergone a marvellous shift in thinking about education. The debate, he said, was not over whether the schools would be helped, but over how they would be helped. And competing politicians, including himself, were bidding up the package, he noted.

The state's community college and university systems also benefitted from the pro-education sentiment of the session. In percentage terms, both saw their share of General Fund expenditures drop. But as UNC system lobbyist Jay Robinson said, "We knew that would happen back in February."

More importantly, even in a year when hundreds of millions of new dollars were pumped into the public schools, new money was found to expand university and community college programs.

That education dominated this session is evident in education's role in what may turn out to be the second most significant accomplishment of the 1987 session — repeal of the inventory tax. Business leaders say that North Carolina's economy will benefit greatly from that move. But, after years of trying, business leaders were able to rid themselves of the tax only after they tie it into the school construction package.

Strength For Today

Usually we are inclined to think of religion in solemn and lugubrious terms. Because it involves sacrifice, we conclude that across the religious life there constantly falls the shadow of denial and secret bitterness. But this is not true. Religion fills people with a variety of happiness which nothing else can confer.

A great heritage of joy has come down to us in our religion. The Bible from beginning to end bids mankind to rejoice. Words connoting cheerfulness, hopefulness and joy appear constantly in the gospel. These words are the unmistakable sign and seal of the fact that the first thing that happens to a person's heart when it is delivered into God's hands is that it takes on new gladness.

The religion Jesus found is a religion of joy. "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" is a promise.

On Elvis, Holding Hands And Humming At Daybreak

WASHINGTON — Considering all the disturbing events of late — air crashes, U.S. ships picking through Persian Gulf mine fields, more confusion over presidential policies, further dangerous Middle East instability, trade and budget deficits rising again — the odd question for Americans is not how much more bad news they can take but whether they can survive what simultaneously passes for good.

In this case, what's "good" depends upon one's point of view.

If the press is any guide, a doubtful proposition at best, for many Americans and countless citizens of the world the good news came in two forms last week.

First, there was the weeklong commemoration of Elvis Presley's death, a mega-media event that deserves to be studied by chroniclers of American life in the 1980s along with Tammy Faye and Jim Bakker, Jessica Hahn, Donna Rice and other instant tearstained happenings. This exercise in emotional bathos nicely led into another kind of mega-media event, one of global if not interstellar dimensions: the so-called "Harmonic Convergence," brainstorm of a Colorado art historian named Jose Arguelles.

As staff writer Mary Battiata explained the phenomenon in The Washington Post Monday, Arguelles "consulted the ancient Mayan calendar and a few other sources and concluded that during a two-day period ending yesterday, the Earth would move from one epic age to another."

She went on to explain, with delightfully felicitous turn of phrase: "The transition would be precarious, however, and to help the Earth along into the Age of Aquarius (to say nothing of preventing nuclear holocaust or similar catastrophe), Arguelles recommended that 144,000 humans get together at far-flung sites, hold hands and hum. For reasons that remain unclear, but which undoubtedly have something to do with widespread anxiety about the state of civilization, thousands of people around the world decided to do just that yesterday."

Holding hands and humming at daybreak sounds like a great idea, especially in the dog days of August.

It beats the heat and provides a modicum of exercise, at least for the lungs, and that's got to be good for cardiovascular stimulation, fitness freaks. It's also infinitely preferable to what the Elvis throngs did all week, according to accounts from the scene in The Washington Post. A sample lead paragraph from Memphis: "At sunrise, Sue Ireland wept, and her friend Cheryl Bott sobbed, as they prepared to place an offering of flowers and letters on Elvis Presley's grave."

Even in this age of media excess, the Elvis outpouring was memorable. The Post alone, in the nine days before, on and immediately after the 10th anniversary of Presley's death, published what must have been more than 20,000 words of reportage — far more, I'll bet, than on similar anniversaries of the deaths of John F. Kennedy, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. or, to keep it musical, the much more talented John Lennon.

This coverage, often with two stories each day, examined everything from what headline writers described as "The Humble Roots of the King of Rock" to the "Passions of the Faithful."

What these events say about the needs and hungers of present-day American life is not certain. They are, however, reminiscent of the 1920s when social historians report that people turned away from the disillusioning aftermath of the great-war-to-end-all-wars, the "Red scare" and the lawlessness of the period to take solace in fads and pleasing nostrums, such as the Mah Jong craze, the Coue Institutes teaching audiences nationwide to murmur the invocation, "Day by day in every way I am getting better and better," and the singing, everywhere, of the nonsensical hit song of the era, "Yes, We Have No Bananas."

So here's the good news. Just go on humming. A few bars of "All Shook Up," naturally, will do nicely.

Jesse Jackson Poses Pivotal Problem For Black Voters

The 1988 presidential race could be one of the most important in this century for black Americans.

The nation stands at a crossroads in each of several arenas of domestic and foreign policy, and the 1988 election — freed from the obfuscating charm of the Reagan persona — could offer a clear choice between honestly debated alternatives for determining the future of American society and for charting its course in international affairs.

Black Americans will be as much affected as other citizens by the outcome of that debate and, therefore, have as much interest in influencing it by participation. Moreover, this interest should extend beyond the handful of issues — federal appointments, affirmative action, minority set-asides — that have become the principal focus of race-relations technicians and thus have come to be seen as exhaustive of black concern with American political life.

On the domestic front, several national issues stand out as particularly significant for blacks. Concentrating fiscal and monetary policy on stimulating or reinforcing growth in relatively capital-intensive, high-tech industries may well be a less attractive option for most blacks than a non-protectionist policy oriented toward strengthening manufacturing and other relatively labor-intensive industries.

Urban revitalization is another area in which policy alternatives have serious consequences for black citizens. At stake are such issues as whether urban policy is to mean only providing a safety net for private development interests, whether central business district health is to be the only effective barometer of central city health, what to do about gentrification, how to compensate for the social costs of economic growth, and how to combat the Bantustanization of central cities, among others.

Black Americans are at least as much affected as other citizens also by the outcomes of foreign policy debates. Southern Africa, where the present administration has supported the aspirations of the white supremacist South African regime, is only the most obvious focal point for black concern. More broadly, black Americans suffer as much as other citizens from a bellicose or jingoistic policy of any sort.

Such policies bring us all closer to dangerous global conflagration and rationalize swelling an already bloated defense budget at the expense of domestic needs. Moreover, because the "volunteer" army amounts to an economic draft, blacks and Hispanics are disproportionately represented — as we have seen in the body counts produced by the Reagan administration — among those called upon to pay the greatest price of adventurism.

Unfortunately, however, public discussion concerning black Americans' stake in presidential politics has been dominated, just as in 1984, not by public policy issues but by the Rev. Jesse Jackson's candidacy for the Democratic nomination.

Although the dangers of collapsing all effective black political voices into Jackson's personal quest were evident — though generally unacknowledged — in 1984, they loom larger this time for two reasons. First, the prospects for Democratic victory are better, which means that the potential losses from being sidetracked with Jackson could be greater. Second, Jackson has decided that he must be seen as "not just a black candidate" but as a champion of all the "locked-out."

The problem is that he wants at the same time both to be seen as the black voice in the campaign and to treat blacks as only one among a potpourri of constituencies he woos. This leads him to very dubious attempts to speak for groups whose interests appear fundamentally to conflict (e.g., farmers, independent oil producers and urban minorities). Moreover, the sleight-of-hand that makes it all seem to work rests on appealing to blacks not on the basis of public policy concerns but through a rhetoric of race loyalty.

Ironically, this amounts to a form of "taking the black vote for granted" more arrogant than any serious Democratic presidential contender would have dared to do in the last half century. Jackson says, in effect, to black voters, "I represent your interest: Whatever I do you must support without question because my success is your greatest need." His approach to the black citizenry is purely demagogic and deeply anti-democratic.

It is significant and profoundly disturbing that what Jackson holds out to black Americans is not only secondary but illusory as well. In my research on Jackson's 1984 campaign, I found that rates of increase in black voter registration in 1984 did not exceed the norm for previous, comparable years.

I also found that the impressive turnouts Jackson recorded in the presidential primaries did not transfer to subsequent elections, where offices were at stake, and that Jackson's candidacy did not have any discernible effect in helping other black candidates win office, even when their races were concurrent with presidential primaries in which he ran.

Subsequent research on key congressional districts in the South, by political scientists Alex Willingham of the Southern Regional Council and Marilyn Davis at Spelman College, has re-affirmed those general findings through 1986. Simply put, Jackson's claims that his presidential campaigning produces general increases in black electoral participation have no basis in fact.

Add to that the brute fact that Jackson cannot win either the presidency or the nomination, and we have a situation in which his candidacy offers nothing substantive to black Americans and diverts public focus from the black citizenry's stake in national policy debates that might very well define the framework within which American society is governed for at least a generation.

Jackson's rhetorical prowess may be intrinsically appealing; his message of positive thinking and providing role models certainly soothes the anxieties accompanying upward mobility. Furthermore, his cathartic style gives an illusion of vitality to a leadership stratum whose vision seems limited to demanding appointments and set-aside contracts and pushing an insipidly self-righteous program of moral rehabilitation onto the already overburdened and abused poor.

We must ask, however, whether those good feelings warrant trading black Americans' participation as citizens for a prime-time speech at the Democratic convention.

Conservatives Hit Reagan On Peace Plan

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — When President Reagan ventures from idealism to political pragmatism, he gets into trouble with his conservative followers.

Nowhere is this more apparent than in the furor surrounding Reagan's decision to consider a diplomatic, rather than military, solution to the leftist dictatorship in Nicaragua.

While Reagan and his top associates have said repeatedly the president's embrace of new peace initiatives should not be interpreted as abandonment of the Contra rebels, conservatives remain suspicious.

Reagan has used his fair share of rhetoric on the Sandinista government headed by President Daniel Ortega, saying at one point that his goal was to make the Sandinistas "say uncle."

But in the aftermath of the Iran-Contra arms-and-money affair, Reagan's aides apparently were ready with some pretty pragmatic advice: Show a willingness to negotiate a settlement to the conflict, or there will be no chance that Congress will approve any new military assistance to the Contras in the budget year starting Oct. 1.

Now, conservatives are protesting that Reagan is reneging on his commitment to the men the president once likened to our "founding fathers," the "freedom-fighters" whose cause he has articulated so often.

This crescendo of criticism may have led to recent statements by the administration emphasizing that the administration would not turn its back on the Contra fighting force — the "insurance policy" against the export of subversion in the Western Hemisphere.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater admitted as much when he told reporters last Friday: "You have to recognize that in this process, there are a number of very heavy pressures being brought to bear on everyone involved by constituent groups for a number of different positions."

In fact, one White House official who accompanied Reagan west for the president's vacation groused privately that conservatives want the president to merely carry their rhetorical water, no matter whether that costs him heavily in the things he's able to achieve before leaving office in early 1989.

Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., a 1988 presidential contender, seized the opportunity last week after Reagan's speech on the Iran-Contra affair to say he was "gravely disappointed" the president "did not forcefully restate his principle of continued military aid to the freedom fighters if democracy and freedom are to be achieved in Nicaragua."

Kemp and other conservatives this week launched a campaign to pressure Congress to approve $310 million in military aid for the Contras and said Reagan's peace initiative is doomed.

Signers of a letter to the president insisting there be no interruption in military aid to the Contras included conservative activist Richard Viguerie, who has accused Reagan of surrendering "the last of his presidency to the liberal establishment."

Paul Weyrich, president of the conservative organization, the Free Congress Foundation, said in a telephone interview Wednesday he plans to keep up the pressure on Reagan.

"I hope to make Ronald Reagan live up to the words he has pronounced," Weyrich said. "It is not Paul Weyrich who held up a T-shirt saying, 'I'm a Contra too!'"

"If there is pressure coming from the right (wing), then so be it," he said. "My feeling is, in Central America, it's guns now or sons later."

Weyrich also complained that the White House had not made Reagan more accessible to his conservative supporters, as chief of staff Howard H. Baker Jr. had promised.

He said that while conservatives continue to be given a say in the development of domestic policy, they are being shut out of foreign policy decision making.

While Weyrich complained of a lack of access, a liberal-to-moderate Presbyterian minister applauded the White House for its hospitality.

Jackson Says 'Super Tuesday' Will Let New South Develop

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Democratic presidential hopeful Jesse Jackson said that next year's Super Tuesday primaries will allow the South to set the tone of the nation, but that it must be a new South, free of racial strife.

"A new South must arise, a South where no one is holding anyone down, where wages are not being held down ... where leadership is not being held down," Jackson on Wednesday told the largely white, conservative state legislators who set up the Southern primary.

"If we must fight, let it be the right fight — for jobs and peace and justice. Let a new South arise." The black civil rights leader, the last of eight potential 1988 presidential contenders to appear before the Southern Legislative Conference, received two standing ovations and the most enthusiastic response of the three-day meeting.

The South Carolina-born Jackson said the South remains characterized by "ditch warfare, one group holding the other group in the ditch. ... Both must stay in the ditch to maintain their relationship."

Super Tuesday is the name given to the primaries scheduled for March 8 in 14 Southern states. Six non-Southern states also will hold primaries or caucuses on that date.

The Southern primary was conceived in an effort to produce a Democratic nominee who has more Southern appeal and is more conservative than Walter Mondale, the 1984 standard bearer.

Jackson said that burst of primaries will enable the South to "set the tone of the nation." About a fourth of the national party convention delegates will be chosen March 8.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, who also addressed the bipartisan but overwhelmingly Democratic group of lawmakers from 15 states, dismissed suggestions he is too liberal for the South.

"I don't understand what the word means anymore," he said at a news conference.

Asked whether he would look to the South for a running mate, Dukakis said: "I certainly would. I can't guarantee you I'd pick someone from the South. ... Maybe southwesterly, I can't pin it down. You get me nominated and I think you'll be happy."

In his speech, Dukakis described his plan for a $500 million "strategic investment fund" to encourage public-private economic development projects in depressed areas.

Jackson, who said he will announce whether he will run for the presidency over the Labor Day holiday, repeated his call for a stepped up fight against the drug trade.

With a rhetorical flourish he suggested drugs are a greater threat than racial hatred.

"We've lost far more lives by the dope than by the rope," he said. "The drug pushers come disguised as friends. They don't wear hoods — they are hoods."

Memo In Bottle Set Adrift At Hatteras Reaches France

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — A note in a bottle set adrift at Cape Hatteras, N.C., by a 9-year-old tourist last summer has been found by another tourist — at a beach in France.

Adreanne Hoyer of Perry Township in Ohio expected the bottle to drift back to the U.S. shoreline after she convinced a fisherman to release it off Cape Hatteras last July.

Instead, it was found by a German family along the French coast and Adreanne acquired a pen pal.

"Just before (the vacation), we had read an article about a little girl and her father who took cruises and set messages adrift," Susan Hoyer, Adreanne's mother, said this week. "Adreanne said, 'Can we try that when we go to the ocean?'"

The 9-year-old and her father put a postcard in a Coca-Cola bottle that included the girl's name, address and the request, "Please write back if you find this." Father and daughter contacted a fisherman, who agreed to take the bottle and note 30 to 50 miles out to sea and set it adrift.

The Berlin family found the bottle on July 21, 10 days short of a year after the message was thrown into the Atlantic.

"Hello Adreanne!" was the greeting the Hoyer girl received in a letter from Germany.

"My name is Christine and I am 18 years old. I come from Berlin. I spend my holidays with my parents and my sister in a small town at the coast of Bretagne in France. There at the coast found my father at the 21st of July your bottle with the postcard and the desire of sending you the postcard back."

"Please write me back, too."

Adreanne feels somewhat obligated to write back because she had offered a small reward for returning the postcard. What does she intend to send?

"I haven't figured out yet," she said.

Supporters To Try Again To Gain Convict's Pardon

HIGH POINT (AP) — Supporters of a High Point man sentenced to 40 years in prison for the robbery of a pizza restaurant are renewing their efforts to obtain a pardon, despite Gov. Jim Martin's refusal to grant a pardon last year.

A meeting scheduled next month with Phil Kirk, Martin's chief of staff, will be the latest in a seven-year effort to free Richard Hoots, who was convicted of taking $550 from a Thomasville Pizza Hut.

The robbery occurred July 24, 1979, and Hoots was tried twice. The first trial ended in a hung jury with most jurors favoring conviction, but a second jury convicted him.

Hoots' supporters say the robbery was committed by Jeffrey Dwayne Hayes, who also was convicted of the robbery, and by Darrell Ray Shaw, who was convicted in 1985 of conspiring to rob the Pizza Hut. Shaw's conviction, however, came only after a rare series of events which culminated in a Guilford County judge's order that he be charged. Authorities in Davidson County have never charged him.

Shaw received a one-year sentence that ran concurrently with another robbery sentence he was serving — meaning he served no additional time for the Pizza Hut crime.

Hoots is serving his sentence at the McCain Correctional Center. He will be eligible for parole in 1991.

"My father took the case on appeal for the first time for that reason alone," said attorney Bob Boyan, referring to the sentence. "He thought the time was extremely excessive."

"We became absolutely convinced they had an innocent man behind bars," Boyan said. "My father and I ... spent somewhere in the neighborhood of in excess of 2,000 hours in unpaid work (on the case) — that's how convinced I am."

In defending Hoots, his supporters point to several discrepancies. Hayes admits to holding up the restaurant and says Hoots was not with him. Hoots' supporters say police failed to follow up important leads, and that witnesses who would have cast doubt on the state's eyewitness were not called.

But all appeals have been rejected.

The last court to look at the case, the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., rejected a request for a new trial in a 2-1 vote. The dissent was lodged by Judge Sam Ervin III of North Carolina, who said Hoots is innocent.

Martin reviewed the case last year and decided against a pardon or commutation of sentence. But it is the governor's legal counsel — Sam Wilson, who recently was appointed head of the state parole board — whom Hoots' supporters blame.

Survey Finds Many Farmers Holding Second, Third Jobs

By The Associated Press
Wilbert East loves farming, but his Rockingham County tobacco farm just doesn't bring in enough money to pay his bills. So he has to work as a carpenter on the side.

"If I could make it by just farming, I'd rather do that," East said. "But I have to make a living somehow."

East is one of a growing number of farmers who have one, and sometimes two, other jobs to support their farms. Most would rather farm full time. But bad weather, increasing costs and loan payments have pushed them off their farms and into factories and businesses in search of income.

Almost two-thirds of North Carolina farmers have told a team of researchers at N.C. State University that their futures in farming are doubtful. Still, the researchers say, two-thirds also said they'd choose the same occupation if they could do things over again — although they caution the next generation not to try to wrest a living from the earth.

The survey of 892 farmers selected at random, completed last month, found that most farmers are white males and their average age is 54. That's up from 52 in a 1982 agriculture census, probably reflecting the declining number of young people choosing to become farmers.

At least half the farmers in the state's northern Piedmont and northwest do some off-farm work, and most of those have full-time jobs off the farm.

The survey also showed that 45 percent of married respondents said their spouses worked off the farm; 20 percent reported an increase in off-farm work by spouses.

Stephen Lilley, an N.C. State sociologist on the survey team, said farmers have been hurt by low market prices, depressed land values and high debt.

"It used to be that people farmed and did a little something else on the side," Lilley said. "Now you have people doing something else so they can farm."

Andy Boyd, Guilford County agricultural extension agent, agrees.

"The number of full-time farmers has been decreasing year after year, while the number of part-time farmers has been increasing," Boyd said. "They need a job to support their 'farming habit.'"

Robert Coltrane, an ex-farmer, works with farmers every day at Southern States Cooperative in High Point, where he is assistant manager. He knows many farmers who have changed their lifestyles because of poor income.

Some farmers have switched to more profitable crops, such as strawberries. But many have simply become part-time farmers.

Mary Clouse, who now works at the Rural Advancement Fund in Pittsboro, once ran a poultry farm. She left it when her sons went to college. She couldn't run the farm without their help and couldn't afford to hire others to help with the labor.

Like Coltrane, she knows several farmers who have resorted to off-farm jobs.

"The income that farmers are making off their farms today is not enough, and many have to moonlight," Clouse said. "They have to take other jobs just to survive."

For East, leaving the farm may be his only option — regardless of how much he enjoys it.

"I only farm tobacco, now. I didn't sow any wheat this year because the prices are so bad," he said. "I'm thinking about getting out of it altogether. I'd rather farm, really, but I may not be able to anymore."

Currin Gets High Marks

RALEIGH (AP) — Margaret P. Currin should have no difficulty winning President Reagan's approval and Senate confirmation to become North Carolina's first female U.S. Attorney, colleagues and legal experts say.

Mrs. Currin, 37, received high marks from her colleagues, although her lack of trial experience was mentioned by several lawyers, after she was nominated by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

"Being a flashy trial lawyer is not necessarily an attribute," Wake District Attorney Colon Willoughby Jr., a former Campbell law school classmate with Mrs. Currin, told The Raleigh Times. "I would think a couple of things would be important — that you would need a good, legal mind and sound mature judgment. I think she has both of those qualities."

Patrick K. Hetrick, dean of Campbell's law school, where Mrs. Currin is assistant dean, said she "does not have the extensive trial experience, and yet I don't see that as a major stumbling block. I think you can quickly acquire that."

If approved for the post, Mrs. Currin would replace her husband, Sam Currin, as the U.S. Attorney for Eastern North Carolina.

Papal Coverage

RALEIGH (AP) — A Raleigh-based satellite corporation and two Catholic telecommunication networks will televise Pope John Paul II to about 12 million national cable television viewers after he lands in Miami for a 10-day United States tour, officials said.

Capitol Satellite and Communication System Inc.; the Eternal Word Television Network, headquartered in Birmingham, Ala.; and the Catholic Telecommunications Network of America, headquartered in New York, will team up to cover the pope's progress live 13 hours a day. The pope is scheduled to travel from Miami on Sept. 10 to Columbia, S.C.; New Orleans; San Antonio, Texas; Phoenix, Ariz.; Los Angeles; Monterey, Calif.; San Francisco and Detroit.

The Rev. Joseph Vetter, communications director for the Catholic Diocese of Raleigh, was on a communications committee for U.S. Catholic Conference when it began to plan news coverage of the pope's visit two years ago.

Bakker Album

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Tammy Bakker came to town Wednesday to begin work on recording a new gospel album and told reporters she and her evangelist husband, Jim Bakker, plan a return to television and a national tour.

"We'll be definitely going back on TV," Mrs. Bakker said.

"The only problem is we don't know the timing right now. We've had offers all over the country," Mrs. Bakker said in an interview with WSM-FM radio.

"I think before we go back on TV we'll probably be going on a tour all over the United States," she said. "We're looking forward to getting out and being with the people again."

Mrs. Bakker said her album has been tentatively named "Singing in the Rain." She declined to say what recording studio she was working with.

IN THE STATE

vention in Fayetteville in November 1789.

The historian will also research the history of the Market House and its predecessor, the State House, where North Carolina's constitutional convention was held, city officials said this week.

"This is really exciting stuff," said John Cavanagh, a visiting scholar at Duke University whom the city has hired.

Cavanagh's one-year study will include rummaging through libraries and archives in Fayetteville, Raleigh, Durham, Winston-Salem, Greenville and Washington. One of his goals, he said, will be to put together a 30-page history for use in schools.

Referendum

BURLINGTON (AP) — The Burlington City Council has voted 3-to-2 to allow a referendum on the sale of mixed drinks to be on the Nov. 3 ballot.

The request for a referendum to be placed on November's ballot was made by Ben Tyler, president of the Alamance County Chamber of Commerce. The vote was held Tuesday.

In 1979 Alamance County and its municipalities defeated a referendum on mixed drinks sales 10,135 votes to 6,424 votes.

In 1983 and 1984 attempts to solicit the required number of signatures to force a referendum on the sale of mixed drinks fell short. In the 1983 attempt, which was concentrated in Burlington, those in support of a referendum were able to gather only 977 of the necessary 4,695 signatures.

Cyclist Killed

PELHAM, N.C. (AP) — A 61-year-old Virginia man was killed in Caswell County while riding his bicycle on a rural road when a dog chased him into the path of an oncoming car, authorities said.

Louie Arnold Fields Jr. of Danville, Va., died Tuesday afternoon when his bicycle crossed the center line and collided with an automobile, according to a state Highway Patrol spokesman.

The driver of the car was not hurt, police said.

Shootings

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Charlotte police have charged a 17-year-old youth with misdemeanor assault, saying he pointed a water pistol at a passing motorist.

The charges were filed as police continued their investigation of incidents of gun-pointing and shooting on city roadways.

John Craighill Redwine Jr. of Charlotte was scheduled to appear in court Aug. 25 on the misdemeanor charge, according to court documents. The charge stemmed from an

Aug. 11 incident in which a 41-year-old woman told police she got into a shouting match with another motorist. The woman told police that two youths pointed a gun at her twice. No shots were fired.

The charge surfaced as police reviewed old and new incidents to determine whether violence on roadways has increased in Charlotte. Five incidents were reported last week in which motorists either shot at or pointed guns guns at pedestrians or other motorists.

Police say none of the incidents appear to be related.

AIDS Sentence

GREENSBORO (AP) — An 18-year-old Greensboro man was sentenced Wednesday to 16 years in prison for the death last August of an AIDS carrier whose liver and kidney were implanted in two men before it was discovered the donor had the deadly virus.

Carlton Pink Martin Jr. pleaded guilty in Guilford County Superior Court to voluntary manslaughter in connection with the Aug. 16, 1986, death of Joseph Blackwell Evans. He died when his car slammed into a bridge abutment in downtown Greensboro.

Police said Evans lost control of his car because Martin was hitting him in the head with a gun during a robbery attempt. Martin was not injured and walked away from the accident before police arrived.

The case gained national attention when it was learned that Evans' AIDS-tainted organs were transplanted after his death despite tests for the virus performed at two Piedmont hospitals. The Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta reported that the two recipients have developed AIDS-virus infections.

Gaston Weed Will Be Exposed To Cold

BRACEY, Va. (AP) — An exotic weed that threatens recreational use of Lake Gaston will be given a blast of cold air in an attempt to bring it under control.

The level of 20,000-acre lake that straddles the Virginia-North Carolina line will be reduced this winter by six to nine feet, exposing the Brazilian elodea to the air during January and February, officials said Wednesday.

The drawdown will curb the growth but will not eliminate the weed that has infested about 300 acres in shallow depths of the lake.

"The idea is to get control and maintain Lake Gaston as an outstanding recreational area," said Ben D. McCauley, president of the Lake Gaston Weed Control Council.

The drawdown was announced by representatives of the weed council, Virginia Power and North Carolina Power. The utilities own the hydroelectric reservoir.

The water level will be slowly reduced beginning Dec. 1. By Jan. 1, the lake will fall to six to nine feet below the normal elevation of 200 feet above sea level.

Beginning March 1, the water level will be slowly increased. The elevation should return to normal by April 1.

If the reduction proves successful, the procedure will be repeated once every three to five years, officials said.

So far, the plan has the support of many waterfront communities.

"Right now in shallow water you can't do anything. It's just terrible," said Wayne Gray, secretary of the River Ridge Association, a group of 1,400 property owners.

"Unless something is done ... we won't be able to enjoy the lake. Our property will be worthless."

Without treatment, the weed could eventually grow in all areas of the lake less than 14 feet in depth, officials said.

The drawdown has already won regulatory approval from the federal government and both state governments.

Brazilian elodea was detected in the lake in 1982. The weed flourishes at the surface and greatly diminishes the recreational value of the lake, snarling propellers, snagging fishing lines and thwarting swimming.

Virginia Power in recent years has tried various herbicides, such as Diquat, on an experimental basis. Results have been mixed.

Landing

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — An American Eagle plane carrying 17 passengers made an emergency landing at Fayetteville Municipal Airport after a fire warning light was activated, but the plane landed safely and no one was injured, authorities said.

Airport Manager Tom Ray said the pilots of the flight bound for Myrtle Beach, S.C., from Raleigh declared an inflight emergency at about 4:17 p.m. and requested an immediate landing.

Ray said emergency crews were dispatched to the scene, and the plane landed about three minutes later without incident.

The plane, a Shorts 330, is a 30-passenger aircraft.

Runoff Hearing

FORT FISHER, N.C. (AP) — About a dozen speakers criticized proposed state regulations to control stormwater runoff pollution at a public hearing at Fort Fisher.

More than 100 people gathered Wednesday night at the North Carolina Aquarium for the hearing on a plan by the state Division of Environmental Management to extend stormwater runoff regulations throughout the state's 20 coastal counties but to reduce the amount of runoff that must be contained.

Stormwater runoff can carry pesticides and bacteria into nearby waterways and is considered a major source of water pollution.

Alien Program

BOONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A Yadkin Valley agency's efforts to help illegal aliens comply with new immigration laws may be curtailed because of a lack of money.

Jimmie R. Hutchens, the executive director of the Yadkin Valley Economic Development District Inc., said Wednesday the agency will charge illegal aliens $75 for help in obtaining residency in the United States starting Sept. 1. That charge, he said, may slow down a program that is gaining momentum and could put a premium on the demand for labor at tobacco farms, particularly in Yadkin, Surry and Stokes counties. The agency, which has been designated by the federal government to register aliens, also serves Davie County.

"We've got them coming in from all over now," Hutchens said. "But having to pay could keep them away. There aren't many that can pay that."

The General Assembly left Raleigh last week without approving a two-year, $25,000 grant sought by local legislators, Hutchens said.

Special Schools

HIGH POINT (AP) — A Thomasville teacher has received national attention for her efforts to create special schools in which young students would learn at their own pace and not be graded.

Marcia Williams said 14 years in the kindergarten classroom have taught her that youngsters, especially boys, would be better off in the long run if they moved from one skill to another without being labeled successes or failures.

She said these developmental schools, so-called because the students proceed from one level of development to another at their own pace, would teach children from kindergarten to third grade. In fourth grade they would begin a more standard course of study and would receive marks from then on.

Mrs. Williams wrote an article in support of her idea for the July issue of Young Children magazine, and she was the only teacher quoted in an Aug. 10 piece in Newsweek titled "The Big Grind in Kindergarten."

FSU Dean Will Request New Inquiry

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A former Fayetteville State University assistant dean, forced to resign in June when his prison record was revealed, said he plans to request a formal inquiry into the circumstances of his dismissal.

Roosevelt Ratliff Jr., who was convicted of second-degree murder in Virginia in 1982, said Tuesday his dismissal on the grounds that he misrepresented his background when hired by the school is unjust.

Fayetteville State officials said Ratliff did not indicate he spent time in prison, but Ratliff contends he was never asked.

"I don't know of any sane person who would volunteer something negative about themselves when they are applying for a position," Ratliff said. "What does Fayetteville State want from me?"

The Fayetteville Observer disclosed June 9 that Ratliff served three years of a 16-year prison sentence handed down for the shooting death of Kenneth H. Wise in Fairfax, Va., in May 1982. Ratliff was on parole in 1985 when he was hired at FSU as an assistant dean of the School of Education and Human Development.

The FSU Board of Trustees recommended on June 11 that Ratliff be immediately terminated.

However, Ratliff has notified FSU Chancellor Charles Lyons Jr. that he intends to file by the end of the month a request for a formal hearing into his dismissal, and subject to the inquiry's outcome, request that he be reinstated.

State HMO Premiums Going Up

RALEIGH (AP) — State employees and teachers who are members of health maintenance organizations will pay more to have that coverage extended to their families when new HMO rates for the state health plan become effective in October, officials said.

But the employees will find that the costs of family coverage in an HMO are more in line with those of the state health plan, and in some cases not as expensive, because of a 47 percent increase in the cost of the traditional program going into effect at the same time, said Durwood "Butch" Gunnells, executive director of the State Employees Association of North Carolina.

The rates were released by state health plan officials last week, and employees have until Sept. 11 to decide whether they want to be in the traditional plan of an HMO.

Under the state health plan, the state pays the premium for its employees, but they must pay the additional costs of having their spouses or children covered.

There are 348,453 employees covered under the traditional plan and another 90,000 under HMOs.

The employee's share for family coverage under the state health plan is $89 a month, less than what he would pay under any of the three available HMOs. However, officials said that picture will change in October when the employee's share increases $42.24 a month, to $131.24.

Under two of the HMOs, Kaiser Permanente of Raleigh and Pru-Care of Charlotte, the employee's share of the cost for family coverage will be less than what he would pay under the state plan.

Study Says CP&L Ranks 23rd In Rate Hikes

RALEIGH (AP) — Carolina Power & Light Co. ranked 23rd among the country's 113 largest electric utilities in the rate at which residential customers' bills rose from 1972 to 1985, a study by utility regulators says.

The annual Electric Utility Performance Study by the National Association of Regulatory Commissioners showed that CP&L customers shouldered a 263 percent increase in their electrical bills during the 14-year period, compared with an average of 220 percent for the 113 companies.

The study, the third since 1984, is designed to give state regulators a comparison of the companies' rates, financial health and operating performance.

CP&L's ranking moved up to 12th when its rate hikes from 1980 to 1985 were compared with other utilities' increases. During that six-year period, CP&L's residential customers saw a 66 percent increase in bills.

The state's largest electric utility, Duke Power Co., ranked 56th in the 14-year period, with a 222 percent increase for residential customers. During the six-year period, Duke's residential customers saw a 57 percent increase in rates, putting Duke in 24th place.

State regulators and utility spokesmen said the rankings came as no surprise because both North Carolina utilities had undertaken ambitious construction programs during the period, while facing high interest rates and inflation in financing their costs. The two smaller electric companies in the state were not included in the rankings.

"We have been involved over the last 10 to 15 years in a very large construction program," CP&L spokesman Wayne L. Ennis said.

"These facilities are very expensive and require a great deal of financing. As we have incurred increased costs, the only way to recover them is through the rates we charge."

The 220 percent average increase in residential rates for the 113 companies was much higher than the 157 percent rise in the consumer price index in the same 14 years.

Duke Power Co. spokesman Joseph J. Maher said that during the period the utility had added 4,400 megawatts of additional generating capacity to its system.

"That (the ranking) isn't bad since it puts us at the average for the industry during a time we have put on more than the average in new generating capacity," Maher said.

Michael D. Foley, director of financial analysis for the association, said the study had provided state regulators with independent data on electric companies that they could use when confronted with conflicting information from utilities and their critics during rate cases. The study is based on information the utilities supply the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

"Everybody that enters a rate case has a vested interest," Foley said Wednesday. "We are just trying to provide some objective evidence so that regulators can take an independent look at how utilities are doing in those three areas."

NCAE Encourages Blacks To Teach

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Association of Educators is launching a program to lure black students into the profession in an attempt to reverse a trend the organization says is making minority teachers "an endangered species."

Gladys Graves, president of the NCAE, said at a news conference Wednesday the association will find teachers to serve as mentors of young blacks with potential for becoming teachers. The mentors, in a program called "Operation Teach," will advise the students on preparing for college and monitor their academic progress.

"It is our judgment that we are still not attracting a sufficient number of black students to the teaching profession," Ms. Graves said.

Ms. Graves said too few whites and minorities are going into teaching, but that the shortage of young black educators is particularly acute — even though colleges are intensifying their recruitment of black students.

One problem is that business and industry also are seeking out the "best and brightest" blacks and usually can offer more money, she said, adding that the situation cannot be reversed overnight.

"You can't hang a carrot out here this year to solve a problem that has been going on for the last 10 to 15 years," she said.

The NCAE program does not address the question of paying for blacks' college education, Ms. Graves said. Enough scholarships are available to enable most top-flight black students to attend college, she said.

"Even in North Carolina ... students are offered scholarships for going into teaching — I mean lucrative scholarships, $5,000 and $6,000, and they're still turning them down," she said.

Ms. Graves said she hoped between 100 and 200 students would participate in the NCAE program during the next academic year.

"This is not a one-shot deal," she said. "This is an ongoing activity." Meanwhile, Ms. Graves said she generally was pleased with the General Assembly's actions on education in the session that ended last Friday but disappointed that lawmakers approved only a 5 percent raise for teachers.

The NCAE had requested a 10 percent, across-the-board raise.

She also complained that the Legislature did not provide additional increments to alleviate the "bunching" that has occurred on the salary stepladder because of a freeze imposed in 1982-83.

As a result of the freeze, a new teacher this fall will earn as much as a teacher beginning his or her third year, Ms. Graves said.

She hailed the Legislature's decision to continue implementing the Basic Education Program, describing the eight-year, $800 million program as the North Carolina equivalent of the Marshall Plan that rebuilt Europe after World War II.

"At a time when the interest (in improving schools) is flagging in other states, at a time when some of the most vociferous of the proponents of reform are suddenly silent, North Carolina continues to march forward," Ms. Graves said.

The Legislature was correct to reject Gov. Jim Martin's call for expanding the career ladder program for teachers, Ms. Graves said, adding that it has "major problems" that should be corrected in the experimental phase.

NAACP Asks Court To Block Elections

GREENSBORO (AP) — The NAACP has filed suit in U.S. District Court in Greensboro seeking to stop upcoming Albemarle City Council elections, an attorney for the group said.

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People attorney Romallus Murphy of Greensboro told The Charlotte Observer the suit seeks a preliminary injunction on the Sept. 22 and Nov. 3 elections until the court rules on a suit forcing city council district representation. The mayor and five city council members now are elected at-large in partisan races.

Murphy said Wednesday he expected a hearing to be held on the request for the injunction within 10 days to two weeks. "We pointed out in the motion the Sept. 22 primary election date and hope to have a hearing well before that time," he said.

Despite the threat of the suit, filing has proceeded as usual with two candidates for mayor and eight candidates for the five council seats. The filing deadline is Aug. 21.

"Blacks in Albemarle are concentrated in a geographic area that basically constitutes a district," Murphy said. "Minority voting has been politically cohesive with blacks voting for black candidates, but with white block voting."

"To allow the elections to be held would delay the right of black residents to representation on the board," Murphy said.

Affidavits filed with the suit say Albemarle school board member Douglas Waddell is the only black elected to office in the City of Albemarle. Waddell was elected in 1981 after losing in 1975 and 1979 elections.

The NAACP filed suit last month seeking to have the method of electing council members changed from at-large to a district representation. The proposals called for five council members to be elected from districts with two members elected at-large.

VISIONARY ART

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Some 30 graphics which depict the German Expressionists' visionary world of the circus and cabaret are on view at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art through Nov. 29.

The show includes portfolios by Otto Dix and Max Beckmann that the museum says "are among the most important graphics on this theme in German art."

Other artists include Max Pechstein and Erich Heckel.

Pilots Forgot To Set Flaps, Investigators Report

By JIM IRWIN
Associated Press Writer
ROMULUS, Mich. (AP) — The pilots of Northwest Flight 255 did not lower the wing flaps and there is no indication a cockpit siren sounded to warn them that the flaps were not in normal takeoff position, federal investigators said.

"At first we didn't believe it because it's just too horrifying," one official involved in the investigation told The Washington Post in an interview published today. "But it looks like they completely forgot to set them."

Sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press that the flight data recorder showed the flaps were left in a horizontal position and not extended downward, which gives a plane lift at lower airspeed.

The McDonnell Douglas MD-80 was equipped with a warning horn that should have sounded if any of several critical maneuvers were not done during takeoff, including adjustments to the plane's flaps, spoiler and stabilizer settings.

There was no indication on the cockpit voice recorder that a horn sounded, said John Lauber of the National Transportation Safety Board.

"They could hear the verbal checking off of some things," NTSB spokesman Alan Pollock said Wednesday. "So far they have not heard anything that indicates they checked the flaps."

A jetliner's flaps and slats are extended at various angles to boost lift during takeoff and are retracted when cruising.

The setting of the flaps prior to takeoff is fundamental to flying and considered by pilots as one of three "killer items" for which the consequences can easily be catastrophic.

"Those were in the zero, or retracted position," Lauber said, adding that "in this aircraft, a zero flap configuration is acceptable under some conditions."

The plane crashed shortly after takeoff Sunday at Detroit Metropolitan Airport, killing up to 158 people. The only survivor, a 4-year-old girl, remained hospitalized in serious condition today.

The MD-80 is capable of taking off without its flaps extended, but that requires a longer runway and higher speed, said Don Hanson, spokesman for the manufacturer. Pilots seldom take off with the flaps fully retracted unless they are flying into a strong headwind and don't want the added lift, he said.

The airport's computer-controlled wind shear alert system had recorded sudden wind shifts 30 minutes before Flight 255 took off. Departing traffic was switched to a shorter runway 20 minutes before the plane left to the northeast in estimated 14 mph westerly winds, Lauber said earlier.

Information about the flaps' position will be added to other factors, such as the plane's weight, speed and weather conditions, to determine how it performed before the crash, Lauber said.

The investigators said that in addition to the two "black box" flight recorders, they would examine pieces of wing flaps and slats recovered Wednesday, and would check the filaments of cockpit indicator lights.

No prior problems with the plane's flaps had been reported and witnesses gave no indication of the flaps' position before the crash, Lauber said.

Flight 255 rolled 6,000 to 6,500 feet down the 8,500-foot runway and reached a maximum speed of 163 to 171 mph, Lauber said. The cockpit recorder also showed the plane never got above 48 feet, although witnesses estimated it was as high as 150 feet, he added.

Other pilots waiting for takeoff reported the plane rolled down the runway for an unusually long distance and that the nose of the plane lifted at an abnormally steep angle.

Some witnesses reported seeing fire from the engines. Investigators determined both engines were producing equal amounts of thrust, and the engines' fire extinguishers were not activated in flight, Lauber said.

The remains of about 30 crash victims have been identified and were released to relatives Wednesday, said Ed McNamara, Wayne County executive.

The death count has changed daily, because authorities say the presence of unticketed babies on the plane and deaths on the ground have hampered efforts to determine the exact number.

County Medical Examiner Werner Spitz said five or six people were killed on the ground, three vehicles were destroyed, and that 152 or 153 were killed on board the aircraft.

Cecilia Cichan of Tempe, Ariz., the lone survivor of Sunday's crash, was listed in serious but stable condition today in C.S. Mott Children's Hospital in Ann Arbor. Her parents and brother were killed.

Gifts Pour Into Hospital For Little Girl Who Survived Detroit Crash

By MARK FRITZ
Associated Press Writer
DETROIT (AP) — Seven-year-old Robin Stafford of Anchorage, Alaska, parted with her most prized possession, a stuffed penguin, to brighten the life of the little girl who survived Northwest Airlines Flight 255.

Robin is one of hundreds of people nationwide sending toys, balloons, clothes and money to 4-year-old Cecilia Cichan, the sole survivor of the crash that killed at least 156 people.

"She got (the penguin) for Christmas," said Robin's mother, Barbara Stafford. "She said 'Mom, I think it would be best for her to have it. She needs something right now.' She even cried."

Cecilia lost her mother, father and 6-year-old brother in the crash Sunday of the twin-engine MD-80 shortly after takeoff from Detroit Metropolitan Airport. She suffered a broken leg and collarbone, a concussion and burns over 30 percent of her body.

Doctors expect the youngster, who was in serious condition today at C.S. Mott Hospital in Ann Arbor, to make a full recovery.

Cecilia was taken off a respirator Wednesday and was breathing well on her own but remained in intensive care, said hospital spokeswoman Sandy Lincoln.

Hundreds of people from around the nation called to ask where they could send money and gifts, Lincoln said. Some even offered to adopt the youngster.

"The calls range from 'we can't send much' to 'please let her know we're praying for her,'" she said. "People want to know her clothes size. One woman wanted to send a necklace with a cross."

Gifts were pouring into the hospital faster than officials could catalog them, said Catherine Cureton, another hospital spokeswoman.

"I don't know how many bears were sent. Rabbits, flowers. It's off the scale," she said.

Rescuers said the little girl's life likely was saved by her mother, who apparently shielded Cecilia with her body from the heat and flames of the crash.

The youngster's paternal grandfather, Anthony Cichan, 59, of Maple Glen, Pa., said it was uncertain who would raise Cecilia.

Stafford, who contacted The Associated Press in Detroit to get an address for the hospital, said she identified with Cecilia's plight.

"When these things happen, it really hits my heart," she said. "If something happened to me, I'd want to know that my little girl was cared for."

"I just want to know that this little girl has a happy life ahead of her. The best gift in life is life, and she's very special."

Cecilia Cichan's address is C.S. Mott Children's Hospital, Room F8412, University of Michigan Medical Center, Ann Arbor, Mich. 48109-0250

Piedmont Says Shear Alerts Work

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Detectors in Piedmont Airlines jets have warned pilots 12 times in the past 21 months of wind shear, a sudden shift in wind speed or direction.

A wind shear was among the possibilities suspected for the cause of Sunday's Northwest Airlines crash near Detroit.

That crash killed as many as 158 people after the MD-80 jetliner climbed to 100 or 150 feet on takeoff from Detroit Metropolitan Airport, then lost speed and struck a freeway overpass.

Wind shear, implicated in other air crashes, can cause an airplane to suddenly lose speed or altitude. Investigators in Detroit this week said that wind shear is one of several possible causes of the crash; other possibilities are improper loading of cargo, engine malfunction or pilot error.

Since November 1985, Piedmont has spent more than $8 million to install devices to warn pilots that wind shear is likely. It was the first airline to use them.

The airline's pilots are trained to take specific steps when amber or red lights on devices in the cockpit light up, said Donald F. McGuire, the vice president for public affairs at Piedmont.

"You don't have to go through A, B, C and D. You know it's wind shear," he said. "You don't want to have to be trouble-shooting there in the cockpit."

The devices have been installed on 40 percent of Piedmont's fleet, or about 80 jets, McGuire said.

Piedmont decided to equip its own jets with wind shear detectors because most airports it serves were slow to get federal money for the expensive systems, which are based on the ground, McGuire said.

None of the 12 warnings that Piedmont pilots have received resulted in a crash.

Air-traffic controllers in Detroit had warned pilots Sunday that wind shear was possible. Northwest Flight 255 took off in moderate wind after a light rain. Thunderstorms, whose presence is associated with wind shear, had been seen earlier in the vicinity.

Radar Detecting System Could Find Wind Shears

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The government hopes to have installed radar systems for 17 or more airports within five years that will protect pilots against wind shears, the powerful downbursts of air that have been responsible for nearly 600 aviation deaths since 1970.

But even then, the radar systems will cover only a small fraction of the airports where the treacherous weather phenomenon is considered a threat, especially during the summer.

This week, investigators speculated that a wind shear might have been involved in Sunday's crash of a Northwest Airlines jetliner shortly after it took off from Detroit Metropolitan Airport. The accident claimed at least 158 lives.

Investigators said Wednesday night they have not ruled out the possibility that the McDonnell Douglas MD-80 encountered a shear during takeoff, although evidence also has surfaced that the crew might have failed to set the proper flap settings on the plane, hindering its lift.

Wind shears were noticed at the airport 20 minutes before the ill-fated flight. Three years ago, a USAir jet attempting to land at the same airport was caught in a shear and landed so hard that the plane sustained heavy damage and three people were injured.

Wind shear, especially the powerful, narrow downdraft of wind called a microburst, has been called the No. 1 killer of airline passengers.

The 18 accidents linked to wind shears since 1970 have claimed 575 lives. Between 1982 and 1985, two-thirds of all commercial aviation deaths in the United States were linked to the weather phenomenon, according to the National Transportation Safety Board.

Nevertheless, efforts to protect jetliners against shears have been slow and sporadic, with airline crashes often prompting spurts of action.

After the microburst-related crash in August 1985 of a Delta Air Lines L-1011 jumbo jet on approach to the Dallas-Fort Worth airport, the federal government stepped up its wind shear programs last year.

Electronic wind shear detection equipment, called LLWS for Low-

Level Wind Shear, were provided to additional airports and are now at 93 sites. An industry consortium, working under a $1.8 million government contract, also developed a training program to help pilots battle a shear once it's encountered.

But the LLWS system, which was in place in Detroit, has been called only marginally effective. The electronic detectors were working at the New Orleans airport in 1982 when a Pan American World Airways jet crashed after hitting a wind shear and also at the Dallas-Fort Worth airport when the Delta jetliner crashed.

Despite the updated training program, pilots say there is still disagreement over how best to respond to a shear. They agree the best protection — and in some cases the only protection — is to avoid the downdraft.

"The worst ones you can't fly through," said William Melvin, a senior Delta captain who is chairman of the Air Line Pilots Association committee that has studied wind shear. "It doesn't matter how good you are or how well you've been trained, you're not going to fly through it."

Near-Miss Pilot Returns To Duty

FORT LEWIS, Wash. (AP) — A soldier whose private plane narrowly missed President Reagan's helicopter has returned to active duty, pending his commanding officer's review of his absence without leave.

Pvt. Ralph Myers, a medical specialist, was released from military custody Wednesday morning and went to work with his unit at Fort Lewis, said Maj. Frank Ham, a spokesman for the base.

Ham said Wednesday night that since AWOL matters are not conducted before a military judge, he had no information on whether Myers had been interviewed yet by his commander. Myers is not restricted or confined, he said.

"When a commander speaks to a soldier on non-judicial items, they're not going to release that information," Ham said.

Near-Miss Pilot Returns To Duty

Myers, 32, of Bingen, Wash., arrived at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport in handcuffs Tuesday night accompanied by two military police guards from Fort Ord, Calif.

He said nothing as guards from Fort Lewis and a police officer whisked him out of the terminal. Myers declined to be interviewed Wednesday by The Associated Press.

Myers' commanding officer will review the evidence and decide sometime this week at what level the soldier's AWOL case will be settled.

Near-Miss Pilot Returns To Duty

Ham said. Being absent without leave is not a criminal offense.

If the case remains at the company level, then Myers' commanding officer will decide how to discipline him, Ham said. The case may be sent for review by higher commanding officers of the battalion. Myers was reported absent without leave from Fort Lewis on Aug. 3.

Punishment for being absent without leave could include a fine, a reduction in pay level, or confinement, said George Polich, a Fort Lewis spokesman. Myers' record is otherwise clean, he said.

Reagan's Cabinet Takes To Hills And Beaches

By DONNA CASSATA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan made the sensible August decision, escaping steamy Washington for his mountain ranch in California, and half his Cabinet has followed suit — heading to the hills, beaches and distant shores.

Vice President George Bush, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and Interior Secretary Donald P. Hodel opted for the coast of Maine, while Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Energy chief John S. Herrington went west to California.

Attorney General Edwin Meese III took a business trip — to California, China and Hawaii.

The other half of the Cabinet either just returned from vacation or was forced to remain in the nation's capital due to recent tragedies, the death of Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and the crash of Northwest Airlines Flight 255 near Detroit. Eye surgery kept Labor Secretary William E. Brock in town.

Bush left the nation's capital the day before Reagan departed for the Santa Ynez Mountains, and is scheduled to return the day before the president returns to the White House.

But the vice president hasn't completely forgotten Washington while he summers in Kennebunkport, Maine. The probable 1988 presidential candidate visited four towns in New Hampshire on Aug. 15, made a speech to a VFW convention in New Orleans and is planning stops in San Antonio, Texas, on Aug. 25 and at a Republican event in Illinois on Aug. 27.

Meese took a similar respite from the nation's capital. The attorney general's itinerary included speeches in China and Hawaii, and visits to various Drug Enforcement Administration and Justice Department offices on the island.

The attorney general is scheduled to return to Washington on Aug. 28.

Shultz is spending the Slow Season at his home in Palo Alto, Calif., where he is on leave from the faculty at Stanford University. The secretary was endowed with a chair by the university, and the house came with the chair.

Located on the campus, the house is the same one occasionally used by former President Hoover during his term in office.

If he follows tradition, Shultz will spend the Labor Day weekend at his home in Cummington, Mass., a small town in the Berkshire Hills embroiled in controversy.

The town's Board of Selectmen recently wrote Shultz asking him to help end nude bathing in a local swimming hole. Members of the board said swimmers were crossing land owned by Shultz to reach state-owned Caulker's Pond, a secluded cove on the Westfield Branch River where many swimmers take dips in the buff.

Shultz wrote back to the board, offering his assistance. "I look forward to having your recommendations about what steps I and my family might consider to help with the town's problem about the local swimming hole," he said in the letter.

Weinberger is spending 10 days at his home in Bar Harbor, Maine, where he's probably pattering around the waterways in his motorboat. Deputy Defense Secretary William Howard Taft IV is running the Pentagon until Weinberger returns to Washington on Aug. 24.

Hodel also chose to spend summer's dog days in Maine, but not until after he led members of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries and House Interior and Insular Affairs committees, along with the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, on a fact-finding trip to Alaska's North Slope.

"He loves to be outside," spokeswoman Penny Eastman said of the Interior secretary. Hodel is expected back Aug. 25.

Herrington is spending much of the month at his home in California.

Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III returned to work this week after a trip to Texas. Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng spent his vacation in the New England states. And Otis R. Bowen, head of the Health and Human Services Department, was back in his office after a few weeks in his home state of Indiana.

Bowen wasn't too far from work during his vacation, reporting on a medical malpractice study and participating in a sports medicine conference held in conjunction with the Pan American Games, now going on in Indianapolis.

Secretary of Education William J. Bennett, who returned to Washington on Wednesday, spent a few days in July at the beach in North Carolina and then took to the mountains.

Bennett hiked through England, Austria, West Germany and Italy, and then climbed a series of 14,000-foot peaks in the Colorado Rockies.

Transportation Secretary Elizabeth H. Dole, who spent much of the spring and summer campaigning with her husband, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, a likely candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, has remained in Washington. She is spending the week monitoring news from Detroit on Sunday's plane crash.

Acting Commerce Secretary Clarence J. Brown has been "holding the fort for the new secretary," Commerce spokesman Malcolm Barr said. Brown took over the department when Baldrige was killed July 25 in a steer roping accident in California.

Reagan nominated C. William Verity Jr., former chairman of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, to replace Baldrige. Verity is awaiting confirmation from Congress.

And Samuel Riley Pierce Jr., secretary of the Housing and Urban Development Department, hasn't taken an official vacation, according to his public affairs office.

He did spend a good part of the spring in the Soviet Union — on business.

'Oldest Man' Plans First London Visit

SWANSEA, Wales (AP) — John Evans, listed in the Guinness Book of Records as the oldest man in the world, celebrated his 110th birthday with a crowd of relatives and friends and said he planned to visit London for the first time in his life.

Family members, well-wishers and reporters gathered Wednesday at the former coal miner's cottage at Fforest-fach near Swansea in south Wales.

Evans said he had a heart pacemaker fitted in 1986 and "it gave me a new lease of life."

Evans, who takes a little honey in boiled water every morning, doesn't drink alcohol, smoke or swear. He said: "My life's been a lot happier without all three."

The Guinness Book says it has no records of anyone being older. Evans has never visited London, 190 miles away, so state-run British Rail gave him a first-class ticket to visit next week.

"I'm really looking forward to it," he said.

Evans said he was forced to retire by British Coal, the state-owned corporation that runs the nation's mining industry, when he was 73. He started work in the mines at the age of 13.

The former miner shares his home with his son, Amwel, 76, and daughter-in-law, Betty.

Divers Get Jewel Bag From Titanic

PARIS (AP) — Divers plucked a battered valise containing a fortune in gems, bank notes and coins from the Titanic today, 75 years after the luxury liner sank, a salvage official said.

The leather valise did not bear a name, said expedition leader Robert Chappaz. He released few details on the satchel's contents.

No estimate has been made for what jewels off the wreck would be worth. But marine salvage experts have said that even a cup off the Titanic would be worth a fortune.

In a statement released in Paris before dawn today, Chappaz said the valise was not in good condition. But its existence indicated that some organic objects remained decades after the ship sank on April 14-15, 1912.

In addition to finding the satchel, divers aboard the high-tech minisub Nautile retrieved a small safe believed to have been the assistant purser's strongbox, the statement said.

The leather satchel, which was found during a routine survey of the stern section of the debris field, was opened and examined briefly, revealing the valuables and currency.

Chappaz repeated the expedition's claim that none of the artifacts would be sold to private individuals. He did not say if the expedition would try to sell the objects to institutions, such as museums.

A full account of the satchel's contents was to be made after the object was transferred to a preservation laboratory in Paris run by the national utility, Electricite de France, Chappaz said.

The French Institute for Research and Exploitation of the Sea, owner of the Nautile and support vessel Nadir, has said any artifacts would be displayed during a world tour.

No explanation has been given on how investors in the expedition will recuperate the $2.5 million cost of the adventure. The investors are grouped as the British-registered Ocean Research and Exploration Ltd.

Plans were announced last week by the Hollywood-based Westgate Film Group to open the safe on a live broadcast from Monaco on Oct. 28.

Legend has it that the four strongboxes believed to have been on the Titanic contain jewelry and other valuables. Marine experts, however, say most valuables were recovered by the passengers who left in lifeboats in the hours before the Titanic sank.

The French Institute was part of a French-American expedition that located the Titanic wreck in September 1985.

The American partner, Woods Hole Oceanographic Laboratory of Cape Cod, Mass., returned to the site last summer to photograph and map the wreck and a 2.5-mile wide debris field around it, about 320 miles southwest of Newfoundland.

Freed Hostage Celebrates In London

By DEBRA CRAINE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Charles Glass celebrated freedom with a party and a family stroll and said relatives of the 24 foreigners held hostage in Lebanon should be encouraged by pressure Syria is putting on their loved ones' captors.

The American journalist was reunited with his wife Fiona, 39, and their five children earlier Wednesday, a day after fleeing his captors while they slept in an apartment building on the outskirts of Moslem west Beirut.

"I just want to be at home with my family," he told reporters. "Being at home is more than enough."

The Syrians have said Glass was permitted to escape because of their efforts. American officials have Syria may have pressured Iran to order the journalist's release.

Glass told reporters that a Syrian-arranged release may have been "politically possible" but he did not think it was the case since his guards had become harsher in recent weeks and they had not altered their routine.

The Glass family held a large private party Wednesday night at the journalist's 18th century house in London's Notting Hill district. His parents and sister flew in from Los Angeles for the reunion.

The journalist and his family also took a long stroll in London's Hyde Park.

"What could be more wonderful than having your son back," the journalist's father, Charles Glass Jr., of Palos Verdes Estates, Calif.

U.S. Envoy Will Return To Syria

WASHINGTON (AP) — The next step in improving U.S. relations with Syria will be the return of Ambassador William Eagleton to Damascus, U.S. officials say, but the Reagan administration is trying to prevent the move from being seen as a reward for the freedom of hostage Charles Glass.

Two administration officials, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said Wednesday a decision to send the ambassador back around Sept. 1 was made before Glass gained his freedom in Beirut on Tuesday.

"We don't want Eagleton to be a reward for Glass," one official said. Some U.S. analysts are convinced the Syrians, at U.S. behest, put pressure on Iran, which it is helping in the Persian Gulf war with Iraq, to free Glass and eight other American hostages also believed to be held in the Lebanese capital.

In fact, the official said, the ambassador's return might be set back a little bit to separate it from Glass's liberation.

Despite the decision to send Eagleton back, Syria remains on the State Department's list of countries that sponsor terrorism. The others cited are Cuba, Iran, Libya and South Yemen.

The official said he knew of no consideration being given to removing Syria from the list.

Eagleton was withdrawn last fall to show strong U.S. disapproval of what American and British experts concluded was Syrian support for terrorism. High-level U.S. contacts with President Hafez Assad's government were banned by President Reagan, and a number of other diplomatic and economic sanctions were imposed.

"He looks great, it's amazing. I was scared to death what I would see when I got here."

Glass, 36, who was held for 62 days by Lebanese Moslem gunmen, said he was not beaten or tortured during his ordeal.

He said he had no plans to return to Beirut and would stay home to write a travel book about the Middle East.

Glass, a Los Angeles native who had taken leave from his job as correspondent with ABC to write a book on the Middle East, was doing research when he was kidnapped June 17. The abduction was claimed by the previously unknown Organization for the People's Defense.

After his escape, Syrian soldiers policing part of Beirut sent him to Damascus, where he was turned over to U.S. officials and caught a plane for London.

Glass met Wednesday with four U.S. officials seeking information about other captives in Lebanon.

Eight Americans are among the 24 foreign hostages seized in Lebanon. Also missing is an Anglican church envoy, Terry Waite. The longest-held hostage is Terry Anderson, the chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was abducted on March 16, 1985.

The speaker of the Iranian Parliament denied Wednesday that his government controls the groups holding hostages, as Reagan administration officials have said. But he said the hostages might be released if the United States put pressure on Israel and Kuwait to free Shiite Moslem prisoners.

"I am not saying that I have absolute power to do that, I only promise to make my best efforts. I think I can be of some help," said Hashemi Rafsanjani, in an interview to be broadcast today on NBC's "Today" show.

Glass was the first foreigner kidnapped in the Lebanese capital since Syria moved 7,500 troops into west Beirut in February to quell fighting. His capture was taken as a deep affront in Damascus.

Glass said Syrian officials and American diplomats in Damascus told him "the political environment between the United States and Syria is improving and Syria is much more active ... in trying to obtain the release of hostages, and so in a sense that is encouraging."

Iranian Offers Help In Setting Up Swap

NEW YORK (AP) — Iran's parliament speaker says his country does not condone hostage taking and would like to help arrange a swap to free foreign captives in Lebanon.

"I am not saying that I have absolute power to do that, I only promise to make my best efforts. I think I can be of some help," Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani said Wednesday in an interview broadcast today on NBC's "Today" show.

He said that for such a swap to occur, the United States would have to exert pressure on Israel and Kuwait to release Shiite Moslem prisoners.

The three countries have said they oppose what they describe as dealing with terrorists. But Israel has released Shiite prisoners to gain freedom of captured servicemen in Lebanon, and the United States last year engaged in what is widely viewed as an arms-for-hostages deal with Iran.

Rafsanjani denied that the government of Iran controls the groups holding 24 foreigners, including eight Americans, hostage in Lebanon.

"We have some influence in certain groups in that country but we never interfere in what they do," he said. "Some of them listen to what we tell them."

The Lebanese groups implicated in the hostage taking are composed of Shiites loyal to Iran's revolutionary leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

"We have told (the groups in Lebanon) that those hostages that are innocent, that are not guilty, they should not be harassed, they should not take these innocent people hostage," said Rafsanjani, who is also a Shiite clergyman.

"No matter how the people of the United States are going to think, ... we shall not commit any terrorist acts in which ordinary people which are not responsible for anything are done damage to," he said.

Central American Peace Talks Start Slowly

By BRYNA BRENNAN
Associated Press Writer
SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Five Central American foreign ministers planned to take another stab at working out details of a new regional peace plan today after getting off to a slow start.

The foreign minister of Honduras, Carlos Lopez Contreras, failed to show up for the Wednesday opening of the meeting, and Guatemala's Alfonso Cabrera had to return home in the afternoon. Both were expected at today's session.

After the three remaining ministers worked well into Wednesday evening, El Salvador's foreign minister, Ricardo Acevedo Peralta, told reporters he was "optimistic" and that work was progressing.

The two-day meeting is devoted to discussions on how to implement a regional peace plan signed Aug. 7 by the presidents of El Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Honduras and Guatemala.

The accord seeks to end the civil wars in El Salvador and Nicaragua, tensions among neighbors, restrictions on civil liberties, and involvement by superpowers in the conflicts.

The Salvadoran minister, Acevedo Peralta, said Wednesday night that the Honduran foreign minister had not arrived because of "personal problems, gastric problems."

He said Cabrera returned to Guatemala for a Christian Democratic Party function.

In Guatemala, a government source said Cabrera returned for a farewell party President Vinicio Cerezo was giving for his predecessor, Mario Quinonez Amezcua, who recently resigned.

At least six American diplomats assigned to the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador were at the Presidente Hotel, where the meetings were held, apparently to pick up information on the talks.

Acevedo Peralta opened the talks Wednesday by saying that the ministers had an obligation to their countrymen and the world to comply with the peace plan.

He called on the foreign ministers to "put aside the egos" to show "we desire to construct a just society, egalitarian, united, democratic, pluralistic for the good of future generations and for a dignified and progressive Central America."

The ministers expressed optimism about the plan, but noted that it was only the first step in the difficult process of bringing peace to the war-torn region.

"There are no obstacles now," Cabrera said. "But it's just the beginning."

The five countries are required to announce by Nov. 7 the enactment of terms for amnesties, cease-fires, democratic reforms, a cut-off of all aid to rebels, and a ban on using one territory to invade another.

A key element in the success or failure of the peace plan is the superpowers.

The United States backs the El Salvadoran government in its war against insurgents, while providing aid to the Contra rebels fighting the leftist Nicaraguan government.

The Soviet bloc is Nicaragua's main benefactor and reportedly supplies the guerrillas in El Salvador.

A $100 million package of military and other aid to the Contras, approved last year by the U.S. Congress, runs out Sept. 30. The Reagan administration has hinted it will seek congressional approval for more aid. However, it said it will withhold such a request if there are signs of more democracy in Nicaragua.

Gunman Kills 13 But Has Trouble Shooting Himself

HUNGERFORD, England (AP) — The gunman who killed his mother and 13 others expressed bewilderment before committing suicide that he had shot so many people but felt incapable of turning the gun on himself, police said today.

The rampage on Wednesday was the worst mass murder in modern British history. It left this market town of about 5,000 people in shock and raised national questions about whether Britain's gun laws were strict enough.

Fourteen of the 15 people who were wounded remained in hospitals today, and two were reported in critical condition.

Michael Ryan, 27, had licenses to own three handguns and two rifles, Colin Smith, chief constable of Thames Valley Police, said at a news conference.

Recounting the end of bloody rampage, Smith said police had cornered Ryan in an upper floor of John O'Gaunt's School, and he seemed "lucid and reasonable" as they talked to him in the last moments before he killed himself.

"He expressed concern that he had shot his mother," Smith said. "He expressed the view that it was strange he could shoot other people but he could not shoot himself. Shortly after that a shot was heard."

Ryan was found dead with a gun in his hand when police entered the room seven hours after the shooting began.

The gunman was described by neighbors as a loner with a doting mother and a love of guns. Police said he left no note or any explanation for the massacre.

"It is a complete mystery. We genuinely do not know why he did it," the Thames Valley Police said in a statement.

There had been reports that Ryan was a former paratrooper, but the Parachute Regiment said in a statement he never had been in that unit or any other in the armed services.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and the archbishop of Canterbury, the most Rev. Robert Runcie, issued statements expressing the nation's shock at the massacre.

About 25 people gathered today at the Anglican parish church of St. Lawrence in this town 60 miles west of London to pray for the dead and injured.

Residents today huddled along the main street, staring at newspaper headlines and talking about Ryan. In the midst of the rampage, he had donned combat clothes, went to the home he shared with his 60-year-old widowed mother, shot her to death and set fire to the house.

"It's such a shock that such a thing can happen in a sleepy town like this," said Michael Moon, who runs a newspaper store. "I was saying to a fellow just now, you hear about these things in America, but you don't expect them on your doorstep."

Headlines on newspapers in his shop screamed: "Massacre on the High Street," and "Reign of Terror."

The streets were filled with photographers and police, and the roads and alleys where Ryan ran amok were cordoned off.

The Vicar of Hungerford, the Rev. David Salt, visited victims' relatives. Salt said he didn't know the gunman but was ready to conduct his funeral if asked to do so.

The dead included a woman whose body was found in Savernake Forest, eight miles outside of town. Ryan is believed to have killed the woman as she and her two young children were having a picnic, then gone into Hungerford.

Hess' Body Is Flown To Bavarian Burial

BERLIN (AP) — The body of former Hitler aide Rudolf Hess was flown out of Berlin today for burial in a Bavarian village, where residents were said to be unhappy about the notoriety the grave is expected to bring.

Hess died Monday at age 93 in Spandau Prison after writing a suicide note and wrapping an electrical cord around his neck. British authorities in West Berlin say he died of asphyxiation, but Hess family members say they doubted their relative took his own life.

The Royal Air Force plane carrying the body of the former Nazi deputy fuhrer took off from the British military's Gatow Airport this morning.

The propeller-driven transport plane later landed at the U.S. military base at Grafenwoehr, authorities who asked not to be further identified told the AP. Grafenwoehr is just 40 miles northwest of Nuremberg, where Hess was convicted of war crimes in 1946.

Hess is to be buried in a family plot in the nearby town of Wunsiedel. Wunsiedel Mayor Karl Walter said neither the Hess family nor Allied authorities have told him when a burial might take place.

A remote village 11 miles from the Czechoslovak border, Wunsiedel is the final resting place of Hess' parents, brother and brother-in-law.

Walter said Wunsiedel's 10,208 residents are worried their quiet existence may be forever shattered.

"The city can only hope that yearly memorial services won't be held here to mark the day of Hess' death," Walter told The Associated Press in an interview Wednesday.

Couple Deals In Feathers Tell Girlfriend The Truth

By DAVID SPEER
Associated Press Writer
WEST LIBERTY, Iowa (AP) — Don and Dorothy Hobbs are no lightweight in the feather business.

Hobbs collects, washes, dries and sells 250,000 pounds of raw turkey, goose and duck feathers each year.

Mrs. Hobbs deals in fancy feathers — dyed, trimmed and fluffed plumes that are known by those who tie fish-flies from coast to coast and in 10 foreign countries.

Together, the bulk and fancy feather divisions comprise the Hobbs Feather Co., wholesaler by the pound or fractions of an ounce of almost any kind of plumage available.

"I deal in anything that is used in fishing, in feathers or furs," Mrs. Hobbs said at their West Liberty factory. "We're constantly searching the market for new materials, new colors."

Hobbs and four employees criss-cross the Midwest from October to April each year, picking up duck and goose feathers for the company.

The turkey feathers come from the Louis Rich processing plant in West Liberty. Calf tails, squirrel tails and deer tails come from processors and fur companies.

Hobbs' raw feathers are washed and dried at West Liberty. About 50,000 pounds of duck and goose feathers go to processors each year to be purified and then to manufacturers to make pillows and down coats.

The washed and dried turkey feathers go for boas, feather dusters, archery, crafts, decorations, jewelry, dolls and those Indian head-dresses popular with campaigning politicians.

At the peak of last season, when the company was processing furs as well as feathers, it employed 47 people, including part-time workers. There are about eight regular workers in fancy feathers and seven in the raw feather operation.

Drying the washed feathers takes 45 minutes to an hour in a large commercial dryer. "We sack them, sew them, tag them and get them ready for shipment," Hobbs said.

Mrs. Hobbs handles the company's more exotic offerings: marabou feathers dyed in 58 colors, orange duck wings, fluorescent rooster necks, pheasant skins and guinea, partridge, grouse and wood duck feathers.

She has helped her husband with bookkeeping and other chores since they went into the feather business in 1962. They moved to West Liberty in 1971 to buy feathers from Louis Rich.

"About seven years ago, I got somewhat bored being at home. The family was mostly raised," she said. "I wanted to involve myself in fancy feathers. I've always been interested in that."

She said her parents also had been in the feather business.

The enterprise began with selected feathers from processors. "They would get a feather from the side of a mallard duck. A prettier feather that would be selectively picked," Mrs. Hobbs said. "We were doing that with pheasants and a lot of other birds, too."

Soon, she began to build up an inventory of different types of pretty feathers.

"At that time, hatbands were beginning to become popular, so I began marketing the feathers for hatbands," she said. The hatband market also led the Hobbses to develop dyed feathers.

"The hatbands continued for three or four years and then they bombed," Mrs. Hobbs said. "The market just went."

"I had purchased 15,000 pheasant skins. And I was just stuck with them."

She rebounded by selling the feathers for use in tying fishing flies and now supplies the large mail-order catalog businesses such as Orvis and L.L. Bean.

The Hobbs business is packed with barrels full of feathers dyed maroon, country blue, Hawkeye gold, badger, bronze and root beer and 52 other colors. They are shipped out to suppliers in plastic bags with some orders amounting to little more than a fraction of an ounce.

Fly-tying materials make up about 70 percent of the Hobbses' fancy feather business. "But that will change if the market changes," Mrs. Hobbs said.

She is confident that feather buyers will find the company, even if the fishing market runs dry.

"As long as they buy feathers, I don't care what they use them for," Mrs. Hobbs said.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have been engaged for four months, and have now come to realize that I am not in love with this girl. However, I don't know how to tell her. I know it will break her heart if I call it off between us, but I cannot live with her for the rest of my life. She's a fine person, but I don't love her.

Please tell me how to tell her. I truly need your advice. I can't sleep nights worrying about this dilemma. — TOSSENG AND TURNING

DEAR TOSSENG: You expressed yourself very clearly to me. The fewer words the better. And the sooner, the better. Be kind. Be honest. Be firm. And begone.

DEAR ABBY: Your response to "BJ DuBiel, Welches, Ore.," who complained of a whistling neighbor, was a little shallow. Rhetorically asking whether she would prefer worse disturbances (neighbors who screamed, fought and threw things, or whose kids played loud rock music) sidesteps the issue of how to deal with a neighbor who's bugging you.

You suggested sending him something to wet his whistle. I suggest sending him a box of crackers each week, along with a picture of Whistler's mother, signed, "I love you, son, but you're driving me off my rocker!" — ROBIN READ, ANAHEIM, CALIF.

DEAR ROBIN (a misnomer for someone who opposes chirping): Hear this from more vocally discordant readers:

DEAR ABBY: You put a real guilt trip on the lady who complained about a neighbor who whistled from morning to night. While I'm sure this happy, cheerful man is totally unaware that he's offending anyone, I think this should be a message to all of us who live within earshot of each other.

As much as I enjoy the beautiful chirping of birds in my yard, if one particular bird sat on my patio and chirped the same melody every day, all day long, I probably would be ready to gag him with a Band-Aid!

The neighbor was not being unkind, Abby; she was simply saying that the same tune morning, noon and night, day in and day out, was getting to her. — CHERE ATHERTON, PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: I have never disagreed so completely with you as on your advice to the lady whose neighbor whistles.

Are you mad? Just because the racket is not made with a tuba or a drum or family squabbles does not make it any less annoying! Oh, Lord, were you ever off the beam on this one. — STEAMED IN FRESNO

DEAR ABBY: Constant whistling, even if it's pleasant and in perfect tune, can be as much a form of noise pollution as those wind chimes and office hummers you have discussed in your column. Any sound, if it's constant and beyond one's power to control, can become a form of torture. The world is noisy. Give me some peace and quiet, at least in my own home! — BETTY ALBRIGHT, SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR ABBY: I used to work with a man who walked up and down the halls whistling. How I hated it! I was never so glad to see anyone retire as I was when he did. Sure, there are worse things, but listening to continuous whistling is like a bug that swarms around your head. At first you try to ignore it until it becomes so irritating that all your energy and attention are focused on one thing — getting rid of the pest! — FEELING FOR BJ IN HOUSTON

Learning Aides Never Change

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

There was a time when I believed with all my heart that my child's destiny was contingent upon his starting school with a globe of the world sitting on his desk.

All the ads for globes said so. They always showed some kid of about 12 or 13 sitting in his room at a clean desk wearing a shirt and tie and dreaming of his future. There was a blurb telling how important it was for a child to relate to the universe and then on the application card with the perforated lines around it was written, "Yes! I honestly believe when Henry Ford received his globe of the world he found Detroit and success. Rush me a globe today. I enclose my check."

After the globe arrived, I never saw it until one day when my husband went into our son's bedroom. He said the room was so cluttered he was going to pick up everything that wasn't hung up and hide it. When the kid ran out of clothes, he would convert him to neatness. He found the globe under a pair of dirty underwear. (Incidentally, the plan failed miserably and was scratched when teachers began seating our son near open windows.)

But back to learning aids. Parents are pushovers for anything that promises to get their kids better grades. A set of encyclopedias was supposed to give our children inquiring minds. Those ads were great. The entire family would sit around the dining room table leafing through the set and calling out, "Look, Mama, the history of soybeans with illustrations." In reality, after the kids leafed through and earmarked the pages showing naked Roman statues and natives of New Guinea, their interest waned.

For the last several years there has been a big push by advertisers to send children into the academic wars with calculators, word processors, hernia editions of dictionaries and organizer notebooks. Most of the students are lucky to show up with a pencil in their pocket.

I say you can't make a pocket-pen plastic protector student out of a guy whose locker is being sealed off for health reasons.

Learning aids ... the real ones ... never change. Kids go to school if they can dress like everyone else, have the same name scrawled across their gym shoes and the same animal on the pocket of their shirts. Their own "wheels" beat the heck out of a pen with a three-year guarantee.

We discovered through experience that the best incentive to learning is plain old parent-inflicted fear. Make decent grades or go out and make a living. The math flash cards just didn't get those kinds of results. Neither did the high-intensity study light!

Organizing Is Good Way To Spend Time

NEW YORK (AP) — Many people just can't seem to get everything done in one day. They may sometimes feel overwhelmed by the tasks at hand.

If you're one of those people, Entrepreneur magazine offers some practical suggestions for making the most of your time:

— Keep an ongoing list of projects. Divide the projects into categories such as finance, personal development and health matters.

Experts say making a schedule of projects — and then sticking to it — is the best way to be in control of your time.

— Utilize day calendars. Indicate those activities that will or should take place at a specific time, including those that can be done during the week.

Keep track of your activities, but remember to maintain some flexibility in your schedule and to allow time for unexpected events. Setting aside time for yourself also is important.

— Establish priorities. This can be done according to the purpose of the project, its benefit to you and the project's deadline.

Experts say one way to make sure each project is accomplished is to save the more enjoyable ones as rewards for progress made on others.

— Eliminate time-wasters. Make a list of those things that waste your time, such as incompetent staff, procrastination and unnecessary telephone calls.

Divide the list into two columns: "A" is for things caused by outside forces and people. "B" is for those items you can control. Decide what can be eliminated from these lists.

Remember, good work habits are important.

Divide each piece of paper that comes across your desk into one of four categories: "To Do," "To Pay," "To Read" and "To File." Put all the papers in corresponding stackable wire baskets. Then, schedule time to go through these baskets before the piles become overwhelming.

Your work place also can be better organized by ordering supplies in adequate quantities and making sure pens, pads and important telephone numbers are within easy reach. One final suggestion: At the end of the day, spend 10 minutes cleaning up.

Two cups of cottage cheese have as much calcium as one cup of milk.

Couple Speaks Vows Saturday

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. — The wedding ceremony of Alta Jean Dewar and Mark Edward Parsons, both of Tallahassee, Fla., took place Saturday at 12:30 p.m. in Lovely Lane Chapel.

The Rev. Ellis Jennings Bedworth performed the double ring ceremony. Dorothy Johnson provided a program of organ music. Miriam J. Rasberry, aunt of the bride, directed the wedding.

The bride is the daughter of Thadys J. Dewar of Bethel, N.C., and the late Sam Davis Dewar Sr. The bridegroom's parents are the Rev. and Mrs. William Arthur Parsons of Bayou La Batre, Ala.

The bride was given in marriage by her brothers, Dr. Donald B. Dewar of West Palm Beach, Fla., and Sam Davis Dewar Jr. of Atlanta. Elaine Carson of Greenville, N.C., sister of the bride, was honor attendant.

The best man was William A. Parsons Jr. of Gainesville, Fla., brother of the bridegroom. Ushers included Gary Parsons and Greg Parsons, brothers of the bridegroom of Tallahassee, Fla.

The bride wore a formal gown of ivory satin that extended to form a chapel length train. The basque waistline and short puffed sleeves were trimmed with Venise lace accented by embroidered appliques, sequins and pearls. Her fingertip veil was attached to a headpiece adorned with sequins and pearls to complement her gown. She carried an European cascade bouquet of white dendrobium orchids accented with leatherleaf fern, variegated pit-torsporum, huckleberry and bridal ivy.

The honor attendant wore a form gown of rose taffeta that featured a cummerbund and ruffled sleeves accented by taffeta roses. She carried an European garden bouquet of fuschia and white dendrobium orchids, bridal pink roses accented by baby's breath, fern, variegated pit-torsporum, huckleberry and bridal ivy.

A reception given by the bride's mother was held at the King and Prince Hotel following the ceremony.

The couple will be living in Tallahassee after a wedding trip to Jamaica.

The bride attended East Carolina University and graduated from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The bridegroom is a graduate of Florida State University Law School. He is associated with Brooks and LeBoeuf Law Offices in Tallahassee.

An after-rehearsal dinner was held at Country Hearth Inn given by the bridegroom's family and the sister, brothers and aunt of the bride. Other pre-nuptial parties included a pig picking, a dance and a luncheon.

Skin Cancers Are Curable

NEW YORK (AP) — About 5,800 of the 500,000 Americans who contract skin cancer this year will die, according to dermatology experts at a recent national symposium.

Although one-third of all cancers are skin cancers, most are curable, said Dr. Alfred Lane, assistant professor of dermatology and pediatrics at the University of Rochester (N.Y.) Medical Center.

Cancerous melanoma, which is fatal in 25 percent of cases, will strike more than 25,000 people in the nation this year, he added.

Children playing outdoors without protection from sun exposure are of great concern to experts in the field.

"Today's tan can become tomorrow's cancer," he told the symposium, which was supported by an educational grant from Johnson & Johnson Baby Products Co. "A tan is the body's reaction to damage from the sun."

Because 80 percent of lifetime exposure to the sun is obtained by age 20, parents must help children protect themselves, Lane said. He urged parents to teach youngsters to stay out of the sun during the midday hours, wear protective clothing and use high sunscreen protection.

MOVING EXPERIENCE
NEW YORK (AP) — Of the 16.5 million American households the U.S. Census Bureau estimates will relocate this year, 80 percent will choose to move themselves rather than employ a van line, according to Ryder Truck Rental.

One-third of the truck renters, the company notes, are women.

Bridal Policy

A black and white glossy five by seven photograph is requested for engagement announcements in The Daily Reflector. For publication in a Sunday edition, the information must be submitted by 12 noon on the preceding Wednesday. Engagement pictures must be released at least three weeks prior to the wedding date. After three weeks, only an announcement will be printed.

Wedding write-ups will be printed through the first week with a one column picture. During the second week, a one column picture will be used with a write-up giving less description and after the second week, just as an announcement.

Wedding forms and pictures should be returned to The Daily Reflector one week prior to the date of the wedding. All information should be typed or written neatly.

The taste of salt is learned. If little salt is used, a child will learn to like the taste of food without salt.

Miss Motola, Dr. Harpe Marry

WINSTON-SALEM — Susan Marie Motola and Dr. Keith Gray Harpe, both of Pittsburgh, were united in marriage Aug. 8 at 2 p.m. in the New Philadelphia Moravian Church.

Dr. Henry E. May, pastor, conducted the ceremony.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Farley of Route 3, Beaufort. Mr. and Mrs. John E. Harpe Jr. of Winston-Salem are parents of the bridegroom.

The bride is a graduate of Toms River High School North and East Carolina University School of Nursing. She is now employed at West Penn Hospital in Pittsburgh.

The bridegroom graduated from West Forsythe Senior High School, N.C. State University and the ECU School of Medicine. He is now in the residency-emergency medicine in area hospitals in Pittsburgh.

Hannah Erinzweig of Atlanta was honor attendant and bridesmaids were Lisa Connor of Greenville and Lisa Matlock, sister of the bridegroom.

Edward Via of Pfafftown was best man and ushers included Ernest Connor of Greenville and Charles Matlock of Winston-Salem, brother-in-law of the bridegroom.

The bride wore a gown of organza and crystalline lace styled with a basque waistline and neckline embroidered with pearls. The sleeves were pouf ruffles. She carried a cascade bouquet of white orchids and white roses. She wore a wreath with a pouf attached to a fingertip lace veil embroidered with pearls and crystals.

The attendants wore lavender organza and taffeta full length gowns.

Wedding music was presented by organist Ruby Bumgardner and Mrs. Jarvis Hauser, who sang "Panis Angelicus," "O Perfect Love," and "The Lord's Prayer."

A reception and dinner followed the ceremony given by the bride's parents at the Holiday Inn in Clemmons. Dale Griggs of Lexington provided music. Alma Simpkins of Florida and Nora Kennedy of New Hampshire, aunt of the bride, served cake.

Pre-nuptial events included a shower given in Pittsburgh and a rehearsal dinner given by the bridegroom's parents in Winston-Salem. It was attended by members of the wedding party and out-of-town guests.

The couple lives in Pittsburgh.

Safety Campaign

With classes scheduled to begin for another year at schools throughout the county in less than two weeks, the Greenville police department has started putting up posters and distributing bumper stickers to motorists bearing the message "School's Open — Drive Carefully." Interim Police Chief Randy Nichols said the posters and bumper stickers are part of a program undertaken by the department each year to remind motorists to be particularly careful when driving in school zones and areas where children might be playing. Nichols said the safety campaign is co-sponsored with the 367,000-member AAA Carolina Motor Club, which has distributed more than 21,000 posters and bumper stickers to over 170 cities in North Carolina and South Carolina this year.

Commuter Flight

The Piedmont Commuter system operated by CCAir Inc. has announced that a morning trip to Charlotte from the Pitt/Greenville Airport will connect with Piedmont Airlines' Indianapolis flight. Piedmont said it will begin service to the Indiana state capital on Oct. 10. Company officials said Piedmont is adding a second daily flight on Oct. 10 to Tallahassee, Fla. The airline began service to the Florida state capital Tuesday, giving Piedmont 222 daily flights from Charlotte/Douglas.

The family will receive friends at the church Friday from 8 p.m. to 9 p.m., and at other times will be at the home of Ernest Taylor, Greenfield Heights, Route 1, Farmville.

East Carolina Defends Research Practice an unfair picture of the dog's condition. He also disputed claims that the instructor treated the animal callously.

Pryor said ECU followed animal research procedures that were commonly used to train students in physiology and surgery courses. "They are critical of it, and they hope to use the film as one means of demonstrating that these labs are necessary," he said of PETA.

Pryor said the videotape was used to give first-year medical students an overview of procedures before they examine dogs directly in a physiology class. He said that about 34 dogs are used each year in the physiology course to determine how the heart and lungs work and that about 66 additional dogs are used in other courses. As many as 650 dogs obtained from area dog pounds are used each year by the medical school in all research and training programs, he said.

The stolen video tape used by PETA Wednesday — showing a neutered male dog being prepared for surgery and an operation that exposed its heart — was made in January 1986 during a lab attended by first-year medical students. The tape was also shown to first-year medical students in January 1987, Pryor said.

Ingrid Newkirk, executive director of PETA, said in a telephone interview that the dog had cried and whined before a tube was inserted into its throat. She said a panel of 10 experts, including veterinarians and medical doctors who viewed the film, said the dog's cries and the rate of its heartbeat indicated that it had not received proper anesthesia. She said the instructor joked while he worked and "didn't encourage any sensitivity to what the animal was going through."

Spurrier Looks To Move Duke Upward

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

DURHAM (AP) — First-year Duke Coach Steve Spurrier says the Blue Devils have come a long way with football facilities since his days as an assistant coach, which means he can concentrate on improving what happens in those facilities.

Spurrier's predecessor, Steve Sloan, convinced Duke officials to build a $2.4 million football building and install lights at Wallace Wade Stadium to accommodate night-time football.

"Facility-wise, we're at the top of the conference," Spurrier said Wednesday during the ACC's Operation Football tour. "More money has been spent on football here at Duke than about anywhere in the country. We will not need any improvements probably for 35, 45 years."

So Spurrier, the 1966 Heisman Trophy winner, has concentrated on making other changes he hopes will move Duke out of its second-division status in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Hoping to improve on last year's 4-7 mark, the former offensive coordinator has implemented an offense which will put greater emphasis on the pass and moving the ball upfield. That should boost quarterback Steve Slayden's senior statistics — he completed 58.5 percent of his passes last year for 1,914 yards and 14 touchdowns.

"Coach Spurrier's got a more wide-open attack and it will trick the defense a little bit more, no doubt about that," Slayden said.

"We've always moved it for a little while, get a couple of first downs, then we'd stall. There's more chance for a big play in coach Spurrier's offense, which will get you in the end zone. When we get down to the 30, don't be surprised if we throw one in the end zone," Slayden said.

Duke hasn't won more than six games in a season since 1962, when the Blue Devils were 8-2, and its last Atlantic Coast Conference championship came in that same season with an unblemished league mark in six games. Duke's last six-win season came in 1982, when it finished third in the league at 3-3.

When Spurrier arrived as an assistant in 1980, Duke went 2-9, but posted consecutive 6-5 seasons before Spurrier left for the United States Football League.

"We feel like we're somewhere in the middle of the conference talent-wise," Spurrier said. "We don't think we've got the best. We certainly don't have the worst. But if we can play a little better than we're supposed to ... then we can climb up into the top part of the conference."

Slayden will be looking for senior split end Doug Green, whose 111 career catches put him within striking distance of becoming the school's all-time leading receiver — Wes Chesson has the school record at 164. There is also 245-pound senior tight end Jason Cooper and junior flanker Greg Downs.

"Slayden has a lot more options than he had last year," Green said. "I think he tended to look a lot at one receiver. Now, he's learned to (look to several receivers)."

The defense underwent one big change with the departure of linebacker Mike Junkin. But because of the new offense, linebacker Jim Godfrey sees a benefit on the other side of the ball.

"The coming of coach Spurrier seems to have the offense going in the right direction," said Godfrey, a senior. "It's really explosive, unpredictable, and it should put a lot of points on the board. And that will help the defense out a lot. The offense will take a little pressure off the defense, get us off the field, give us a little rest."

Spurrier wants a winning record in his first year. Godfrey has set his aim even higher.

"At least go to a bowl, win at least seven games. Six won't do it for me," he said. "And compete for the conference championship. We should be able to do that."

One-Game Playoff Proposed

NCAA Title Game Near

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — This could be the last year that polls determine the national college football champion.

A special subcommittee which has been studying various playoff plans will ask the NCAA Council to put a one-game format on the agenda for the January 1988 convention, a source told the Associated Press.

Whether schools would approve a playoff is still unknown. But if it is approved, the first official NCAA football champion could be crowned following the 1988 season.

A news conference was scheduled today at Kansas City to make the subcommittee's decision public.

"I'm really not sure what we're going to recommend at this point. We still haven't gotten together with the full Special Events Committee," DeLoss Dodds, the subcommittee chairman, said Wednesday during a break in meetings at Kansas City. "We'll know for sure by tomorrow when we hold the news conference."

However, a source who asked not to be identified said the council would

"most likely" be asked to give schools a chance to vote for the first time on one of the most-discussed ideas in sports. Neither the subcommittee nor the council would necessarily recommend adoption of the playoff.

"It's going to be put up or shut up time on this issue," the source said. "We've been talking about this for how many years? It's time to let people decide one way or the other, or at least find out what they're thinking."

The policy-making council would automatically follow the recommendation of the committee, an NCAA official said. A playoff plan was on the agenda once before at an NCAA convention, in 1976, but was withdrawn before coming up for vote.

Historically, coaches and administrators have opposed a football playoff. In a show of hands at a special NCAA meeting in 1982, schools voted almost unanimously against even conducting a feasibility study. But in the wake of last January's commercially successful Fiesta Bowl showdown between No. 1

Miami and No. 2 Penn State, opinion seems to be shifting.

Estimates on the revenue potential for a football playoff run as high as $40 million. And, in an anonymous survey of Division I-A coaches and athletic directors this summer, Dodds' subcommittee found that a one-game playoff was favored 65-53.

The subcommittee met with representatives of the College Football Association and the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics to hammer out a playoff format and apparently settled on a one-game format as the most acceptable format for all concerned. Teams picked by the postseason football committee would meet in either a domed or a Sun Belt-area stadium following the Jan. 1 bowl games.

Dodds, athletic director at Texas, said respondents to his poll voted 91-22 in favor of kicking off the championship game at 6 p.m. on the Sunday prior to the National Football League's Super Bowl.

Dodds said the postseason football committee would use the results of bowl games, news service polls and computer rankings to make what could be a very controversial decision.

"There would be no easy way of doing it. There just would be no easy way," he said.

Dodds cautioned against predicting adoption of the plan based on the results of his survey.

"We didn't have them put their names on it," he said. "Otherwise, it could have been different. We wanted them to feel free to write and say whatever they felt. We don't even know if each response is from a coach or an athletic director. But when you start putting names on things, you start representing institutions rather than individuals, and votes can change."

"We asked them whether they thought it should be on the agenda, and 65 percent said it should. When we asked whether there should be a playoff, 55 percent said there should. But when they start signing their names and institutions, that can change."

Coach Not Talking Title

By RICK SCOPPE
AP Sports Writer

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — South Carolina coach Joe Morrison says he is excited about the upcoming football season, but he is not going as far as some of his players in talking about 1987.

Take quarterback Todd Ellis. Never mind the Gamecocks were 3-6-2 a year ago. Ellis and some of his teammates are talking championship — national championship.

"The guys I ran with all summer," Ellis said, "we never ended a workout without chanting, 'National champs! National champs!'"

South Carolina has never won a national championship and has only once gone through a season unbeaten — 1907 when the Gamecocks finished 3-0.

Still, Ellis remains optimistic. "If you reach for that, if that's your goal, then how bad is it if you fall short?" he said. "If you're not looking to do that, then you will never be that good."

Morrison is not talking national championship. He is more reserved in his assessment of his fifth season at South Carolina as he tries to improve his 23-20-2 record at the school.

"(An) area that we felt hurt us last year was critical or crucial situations. I think you can look at the youth we had on our ballclub. But they're certainly a year older," Morrison said. "They've matured and certainly gained a lot of experience last year."

"So we feel that during those crucial or critical situations they ought to go our way this fall."

The Gamecocks return 17 starters, eight on offense and defense and punter Scott Bame, who averaged 38 yards a kick. South Carolina should be improved this year, but just how much may depend on the defense.

While the run-and-shoot offense averaged 409 yards a game in 1986, the defense was giving up 366.7 yards per contest. Opponents scored 27 points in six games. The Gamecocks were 0-5-1 in those six games.

Morrison has changed from a 4-3 defense to a five-man front and has hired a new defensive coordinator, Joe Lee Dunn. Dunn was with Morrison when he was head coach at New Mexico and replaced Morrison in 1983 when he came to South Carolina.

"Defensively, I think Coach Dunn and his staff did a tremendous job during the course of the spring, and we look to be improved on that side of the ball," Morrison said.

Dunn agreed.

"We will do our part and help out.

I'd be very surprised if they don't perform and do their job," Dunn said.

Morrison Named In Suit

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The woman who filed a paternity suit against University of South Carolina football coach Joe Morrison took the action after the two had a falling out and he stopped paying child support. The State newspaper reported today.

In today's editions, the newspaper reported that Barbara Button filed suit "to force his hand," according to a source who insisted on anonymity.

Ms. Button, 30, lives in a $30,000 condominium owned by MO-JO Inc., Morrison's television production company, records show. She lives in a Lakewood Village condominium in Lexington County. The Columbia Record reported. Morrison is president of the company, records show.

Ms. Button, the mother of two children, would not discuss the lawsuit Wednesday and said her attorney couldn't, either. "No one can," she said.

She refused to answer her door Wednesday and an Associated Press reporter and photographer were ordered off the property by a Lexington County sheriff's deputy.

Details of the case have been sealed by a Richland County family court judge. Officials at the Richland County Family Court would not allow a reporter to view dockets, which list court cases.

Ms. Button is a liberal arts and work-study student at Midlands Technical College's airport campus. The school registrar's office said records show Ms. Button was born in 1957, is a second-year student and helps tutor other students.

The payments to Ms. Button were her only income other than the part-time tutorial job at Midlands Tech, the source told The State.

A neighbor in the Lakewood Village complex, on Jamil Road off Interstate 126 in Lexington County, asked not to be identified but said Ms. Button has two children, a 5-year-old girl and another daughter about 12 or 13 years old.

Neither Ms. Button's attorney, Brian Dumas, nor Tom Price, USC's assistant athletic director for media relations, would comment on the lawsuit.

Morrison on Wednesday closed football practice to the media. He issued a statement through Price that said: "I have no comment on anything concerning me personally. I'll talk about football, but nothing else."

The South Carolina Network on Wednesday cited "someone close to the proceeding" as saying the case has been settled, but provided no other details. Neither Dumas nor Price was immediately available for comment on the report. However, James Rollison, Dumas' associate in his law practice, said neither he nor Dumas could comment on the report.

Morrison, 49, came to Carolina in 1982 from the University of New Mexico, where he coached for three years. He is married to the former JeVena Armstrong.

A New Mexico-based corporation, MO-JO Inc. was authorized to do business in South Carolina in November 1983 — a year after Morrison came here as USC's head coach.

The Secretary of State's office lists MO-JO Inc.'s business as "producing and selling television programs."

The company bought the condominium on Jan. 26, 1984, according to the deed on file in the Lexington County Courthouse. Morrison signed the deed as MO-JO's president. The deed listed the purchase price as $32,900.

Other public documents show First

Federal Savings and Loan holds a $29,600 mortgage on the property.

The condominium unit in which Ms. Button lives has an appraised value of $30,000 for the structure and $5,000 for the land, Lexington County tax records revealed.

The Greenville News reported Wednesday that Ms. Button had filed the suit and that documents to verify it had been sealed by the court.

A clerk in the family court refused to discuss the paternity suit Wednesday.

"I cannot comment on that case," said Lois Hardiman. She was backed up by Barbara Scott, Richland County clerk of courts.

"I won't say anything," Ms. Scott said. "I will not comment on anything in the family court."

Normally, Ms. Scott said, certain records in the family court are open to the public. In this case they are not, Ms. Scott said.

She would not explain. According to officials at the Department of Health and Environmental Control, birth records are not public documents and can only be obtained by the person or his or her parents.

State QB Sparkles

RALEIGH (AP) — Sophomore quarterback Shane Montgomery, in the hunt along with redshirt freshman Preston Poag and junior Joe Hollowell for the No. 1 position, directed two long scoring drives Wednesday in North Carolina State's initial football scrimmage.

Montgomery connected with freshman running back Tyrone Jackson for a 76-yard pass play on a drive that ended with a 22-yard field goal. Later, Montgomery capped a 90-yard drive with a 58-yard touchdown pass over the middle to freshman Charles Davenport.

Hollowell engineered an 80-yard drive that resulted in a 1-yard plunge by Jim Lowe for a touchdown.

"We are not a good football team at this point," said second-year Coach Dick Sheridan. "But we will work to be a good team."

5th-Place Prediction Proves Untrue

By BILL BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson still bristles when he's reminded that the Tigers were picked for fifth place this season.

"There still are people saying we're not going to win it, and I ain't going to argue with those people," Anderson said Wednesday night after the Tigers took over first place in the American League East with a 7-1 victory over the Minnesota Twins. "But we're not a fifth-place ballclub, not this year, not next year. Period."

The fifth-place prediction by Las Vegas oddsmakers came after a 9-20 spring training performance by the Tigers. An 11-19 record on May 11 appeared to vindicate the prognosticators, but Detroit is 59-28 since then.

"The people in Las Vegas were right to pick Toronto and New York ahead of us," Anderson said. "But how could you pick us fifth? You'd have to be nuts. I could see us a solid third, but how could you pick us lower than that?"

In other games, it was Oakland 7, Toronto 3; Milwaukee 13, Cleveland 2 in a game that saw Paul Molitor extend his hitting streak to 34; Chicago 8, Boston 3; Kansas City 11, Texas 6; Baltimore 2, California 1, and New York 8, Seattle 0.

Walt Terrell, 10-10, improved his lifetime record at Tiger Stadium to 28-7 with a complete-game six-hitter. The only run he allowed was a solo homer by Steve Lombardozzi.

Terrell said the Tigers have played so well lately that it was like being in first place.

"We've been playing so well, we felt we'd get there eventually," said Terrell, who is 9-2 at home and 1-8 on the road this season. "This is only a state of mind."

The Tigers hammered Bert Blyleven, 12-10, for seven runs on nine hits in 4 1-3 innings. Kirk Gibson and Darrell Evans homered off Blyleven and Pat Sheridan keyed a four-run second inning with a two-run double.

"We always anticipate a tough ballgame with the Tigers," Twins Manager Tom Kelly said. "They're in first place now and they're going to have to be reckoned with."

The Twins' lead in the AL West was cut to four games over Oakland.

Athletics 7, Blue Jays 3
Oakland knocked Toronto out of first place in the East as Dave Stewart became the major leagues' first 17-game winner and Jose Canseco hit two home runs.

Stewart, 17-8, allowed seven hits, struck out 10 and walked one in his fifth complete game of the season and 10th in his last 11 decisions.

Canseco's homers, his 26th and 27th, accounted for Oakland's first three runs and raised his RBI total to 90. Both homers came off John Cerutti, 9-3, who had won his last eight decisions.

Alfredo Griffin hit a two-run homer for the Athletics and George Bell hit his 38th homer of the season for the Blue Jays.

Brewers 13, Indians 2
Molitor went hitless in his first two at-bats, then homered, doubled and singled twice for his first four-hit game of the season as Milwaukee routed Cleveland.

Molitor's three-run homer in the Brewers' eight-run fourth inning enabled him to match the seventh-longest hitting streak in the major leagues in this century. Rob Deer hit his first career grand slam in the same inning.

"Home runs are nice, but that's really not the type of thing I want to do," Molitor said. "I really feel most comfortable hitting the ball up the middle and to right field."

The 34-game streak equals Dom DiMaggio's 34-game streak for Boston in 1949 as the longest in the AL since Dom's brother, Joe, set the major-league record with a 56-game streak for the New York Yankees in 1941. Molitor, who is 60-for-144 with a .417 average during the streak, is now batting .368 for the season.

"Sooner or later it's going to end, probably sooner," Molitor said. "But each day I go out there feeling better than I have."

Juan Nieves, 10-6, scattered nine hits for his first complete game since he pitched a no-hitter against Baltimore on April 15. He has won his last five decisions.

Yankees 8, Mariners 0
Mike Pagliarulo got the game-winning RBI for the second consecutive night and Charles Hudson allowed five hits in the last eight innings for New York against Seattle.

Hudson, 8-3, replaced starter Tommy John after he pitched one hitless inning, then left the game with a stomach ailment.

Pagliarulo, who hit a tiebreaking homer in the ninth inning Tuesday night, hit a two-run double after the Yankees loaded the bases with no outs against Mike Morgan, 10-13, in the first inning. Pagliarulo doubled and scored again in the fifth.

The Yankees scored their final three runs on solo homers by Dan Pasqua, Ron Kittle and Don Mattingly.

Orioles 2, Angels 1
Baltimore held California to four hits for the second straight game and Jim Dwyer and Terry Kennedy homered for the Orioles.

Mike Boddicker, 9-6, held the Angels to three hits before being forced out by a pinched nerve in his neck.

Mike Griffin replaced Boddicker in the sixth inning and pitched two. Then Tom Niedenfur worked two perfect innings for his ninth save.

Dwyer led off the game with a homer and Kennedy hit another solo shot in the second off Don Sutton, 8-10.

White Sox 8, Red Sox 3
Ivan Calderon hit his 19th and 20th homers for Chicago and Steve Lyons knocked in two runs with a double and a single against Boston.

Winning pitcher Jose DeLeon broke a personal five-game losing streak and loser Bruce Hurst ended a string of five consecutive victories.

DeLeon, 6-11, pitched seven innings, giving up two runs on five hits, while Hurst, 14-7, gave up 10 hits and seven runs in 7 1-3 innings.

Chicago broke a 1-1 tie in the fifth inning when Lyons drove in Donnie Hill with a double. Fred Manrique, who had three hits, hit his fourth homer in the seventh and Calderon sparked a three-run eighth with his second homer of the game.

Royals 11, Rangers 6
Kansas City wiped out a 6-3 deficit with a six-run fifth inning against Texas.

The Royals sent 10 batters to the plate in the inning, knocking out Rangers right-hander Bobby Witt, 6-6.

George Brett, Thad Bosley, Jamie Quirk and Ross Jones each hit run-scoring singles, Lonnie Smith delivered a sacrifice fly and another run scored on an error.

Brett, Danny Tartabull and Frank White homered for the Royals, and Jerry Browne, Ruben Sierra and Pete Incaviglia homered for Texas.

Bob Stoddard, 1-1, earned the victory with 5 1-3 innings of three-hit relief. John Davis got the last four outs for his first major-league save.

Western Is Still Flooded

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — If they get it started, it'll be clothes-pin golf at Lake Oak Brook.

"Isn't it incredible," defending Western Open champion Tom Kite said of the gagging stench left when flood waters receded from the Butler National Golf Club.

The course, in the western suburbs of Chicago, had been under five feet of water after torrential rains last weekend.

"Lake Oak Brook," Tom Watson said when he saw it Tuesday.

Cuban Boxers Prevents Sweep

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The United States beat Cuba in the pool, on the field and on the court. Everywhere but in the ring.

On an otherwise successful day against its chief rival, the United States lost two of three bouts against Cuban boxers who moved into the gold medal finals.

America fared much better in team sports Wednesday with victories in women's basketball, men's volleyball and softball, and water polo.

"This was one of the sweetest wins I remember in a long time," Coach Jody Conradt said after the U.S. women rallied for an 85-80 victory that put them in Sunday's gold medal game against Brazil.

In water polo, it was a night of roughhousing at the natatorium.

"For the Cubans, we expected a lot of aggressive play," said U.S. team captain Terry Schroeder following the 5-3 victory. And they got it in a game punctuated by foul whistles.

Michael Carbajal of Phoenix, probably the most lightly regarded U.S. boxer left in competition, was the only one to beat a Cuban.

He upset 106-pound world champion Juan Torres, scoring early and pounding Torres in the third round to gain the decision.

"I had to beat him decisively because I wouldn't get the decision if I didn't," Carbajal said. "I knew what I had to do. I put a lot of pressure on him and he tired."

In the other U.S.-Cuba bouts, U.S. light heavyweight Andrew Maynard lost a fight he appeared to be winning when he injured his ankle against Pablo Romero, and Cuban super heavyweight Jorge Gonzales knocked down Riddick Bowe twice and went on to beat the American 3-2.

"That cat can punch," Bowe said. "I'll give him credit for that."

However, Bowe wasn't as willing to concede he lost. He felt he won in the end, and vowed to beat Gonzales if the two meet in the 1988 Olympics.

"If I get Mr. Gonzales in Seoul, he'd better have a pension plan," Bowe said. "He was extremely difficult and experienced, but I thought I did enough to win the fight." Each boxer took a standing 8-count during the bout.

Joining Carbajal in advancing to the finals were Americans Kelcie Banks and Kenneth Gould, world champions at 125 pounds and 147 pounds, respectively. Both won decisions against opponents from Puerto Rico.

Cuba is 5-2 in head-to-head competition against the United States.

The United States bettered its record medal total to 336, adding silvers in fencing and women's field hockey and a bronze in men's field hockey. That gives Americans 156 gold, 107 silver and 73 bronze.

Canada is second with 154 medals, including 29 gold, followed by Cuba with 151, 62 of them gold.

BASKETBALL
Cindy Cooper and Jennifer Gillom came off the bench to score 14 and 13 points, respectively, to lead the U.S. women to their come-from-behind victory. Cuba led 42-40 at halftime and 54-47 with 15:51 to play before the Americans rallied to improve to 3-0.

"It's fun to coach when you can push a lot of buttons, and there were a lot to push today," Conradt said. "This team is deep and it starts at one end of the bench and goes right to the other."

Katrina McClain and Teresa Edwards scored 10 points apiece for the Americans.

VOLLEYBALL
U.S. men were inspired by the all-around play of Karch Kiraly in the 15-10, 10-15, 15-10, 15-6 victory over Cuba.

"We didn't play our best," Kiraly said. "We played to win and I hope we can play our best when we meet for the gold medal. Our team simply doesn't play its best in games like this."

The United States will oppose Argentina in one semifinal. Brazil plays Cuba in the other.

WATER POLO
The United States and Cuba could play again for the gold medal Saturday.

"Defensively we played well; offensively we missed a lot of opportunities," U.S. Coach Bill Barnett said. "In general, we had good opportunities for good shots and didn't get the ball in the cage."

Cuba's chances were not enhanced by 15 fouls, including nine that sent a player to the sideline for 35 seconds and another that resulted in a game ejection.

"We didn't play bad," said Cuban Coach Juan Almeneiro. "We were affected a lot by penalties and expulsions and that hurt. We were playing a lot with one less man."

The refereeing, he said, was fair. "But we had twice the fouls they did. It might be more of our own errors that we have to overcome," he said.

BASEBALL
The U.S. team clinched the top spot in the medal-round with its 4-0, 11th inning victory over Puerto Rico. Ted Wood broke the scoreless tie with a home run to open the 11th, and Scott Servais added a three-run shot.

"When I hit the homer, it was a great feeling," Wood said. "It was a long game and we just wanted to get out of here."

Servais, whose homer came after he fouled off one bunt attempt, said he wasn't thinking home run.

"I didn't bunt like I was supposed to. I screwed up," he said.

"That's OK," Coach Ron Fraser said reassuringly to Servais.

GYMNASTICS
National champion Kristie Phillips gave the United States a solid lead in the compulsorys. The 15-year-old from Baton Rouge, La., led the individual standings with 38.95 points, and Salt Lake City's Melissa Marlowe had 38.75.

Still, Phillips wasn't happy with herself after the competition. "A few of the performances weren't the best I could do," she said. "I was a little shaky on my balance beam and I took a step on vault."

Phillips, America's surest shot for a gold in Seoul, is expected to win the all-around gold at these games.

SOFTBALL
The United States will meet Canada in the finals of the men's tournament after beating Cuba 9-1 behind the combined four-hit pitching of Steve Padilla and Vaughn Alvey. Peter Spoerl had three hits and drove in two runs to provide the offensive spark.

The United States must win two games against Canada to win the gold medal. Canada is the top seed after beating the U.S. team 1-0 in a medal-round game earlier this week.

"Somebody's been doing what has to be done every game," said Coach Rocco Santilli. "But it's not going to be easy."

Against Cuba, he said, "The boys were a little determined to come out early and get something going ..."

TENNIS
Luke Jensen, a Southern Cal junior with an ambidextrous serve, knocked off top-seeded Agustin Moreno of Mexico 6-3, 3-6, 7-6 in the quarterfinals of the men's singles tournament.

Jensen, though seeded eighth, was confident entering the match because he had beaten Moreno in seven of seven meetings in college.

rick Little, a 6-foot-4, 230-pound junior who had 88 tackles last season, second highest on the team.

Nose guard Roy Hart, a 6-0, 255-pound senior, led all down linemen with 72 tackles last year and will anchor the front line after being named the team's defensive player of the year 1986.

Hart underwent arthroscopic surgery on his knee earlier this week but is expected to be able to play in South Carolina's season-opener on Sept. 5 against Appalachian State.

The team's top two defensive backs — Greg Philpot and Brad Edwards — also return, although they have switched positions. Edwards will be at free safety to take advantage of his open-field tackling ability, while Philpot will move to strong safety where he can take advantage of his hard-hitting, reckless-abandon style of play.

Philpot, a 5-11, 185-pound senior, had three interceptions a year ago, while Edwards, a 6-3, 200-pound senior, picked off two passes in 1986.

Offensively, the Gamecock attack starts with Ellis, who is coming off one of the best freshman seasons ever for a college quarterback. The 6-3, 203-pound Greensboro, N.C., native set NCAA freshman records for passing yards (3,020), touchdowns (20) and total offense (2,975).

Ellis, who completed 60.3 percent of his passes (205 of 340), also passed for 200 yards or more in 10 of 11 games and threw for 300 yards or more three times. But Ellis also had 22 passes picked off.

Still, South Carolina ranked third nationally in passing and 16th in total offense.

"I think you kind of run out of adjectives to describe Todd," Morrison said. "We certainly hope he picks up, and we think he will, right where he left off last year."

The Gamecocks lost running back Anthony Smith and wingback Raynard Brown to graduation. But sophomore Harold Green, a 6-2, 212-pounder, returns after rushing for 388 yards and six touchdowns.

"He certainly has the potential," Morrison said. "One of the goals we have this year is to get him the ball a little bit more and let him run to daylight and find that crease."

Sterling Sharpe, a 6-1, 200-pound senior, returns at wingback and is considered one of the best athletes and most explosive players on the team. Sharpe had 74 receptions for 1,582 yards and 12 TDs a year ago.

Ryan Bethea, 6-3, 208-pound junior, returns at wide receiver after hauling in 27 catches for 572 yard and five TDs.

The offensive line will be led by tackle Mark Fryer, a 6-4, 255-pound red-shirt sophomore, guard Charlie Gowan, a 6-4, 245-pound junior, and tackle David Poinsett, a 6-5, 277-pound senior.

While the Gamecocks punting appears settled, the place-kicking duties remain murky at best as Morrison searches for a replacement for Scott Hagler. Leading candidates include red-shirt freshman Eric Markle, Scott Hagler's younger brother, Sam, and freshman Collin Mackie.

"Our kicking game is still somewhat of a mystery," Morrison said. "We didn't spend a great deal of time with it during the spring. That's an area we're going to be conscious of."

Overall, Morrison said he feels the coaches and players are anxious to get the season started.

"You can go back and think of a lot of adjectives to describe last football season," he said. "But I think we all learned from it, and I think this year is the time to take advantage of some of those things and some of the experiences our football team went through."

HERE'S WHO MAKES OUR LIFETIME GUARANTEE ON CAR REPAIRS POSSIBLE.

HERBERT POWELL

Because we offer the free Lifetime Service Guarantee on car repairs, my job as service manager is a little tougher. I have to make sure car repairs are done right the first time. Because if they're not, it's our problem, not yours.

Here's how the Lifetime Service Guarantee works. If you pay for any covered repair and it has to be done again, we fix it free. That's free parts and free labor. For as long as you own your Ford, Lincoln, Mercury, Merkur or Ford light truck.

The Lifetime Service Guarantee covers thousands of parts and repairs. And it doesn't matter how old your vehicle is, how many miles are on it, or even where you bought it. Add all this up and you've got the best car repair guarantee in America.

Ask us to see a copy of the Lifetime Service Guarantee. Then give us a chance to turn our guarantee into a lifetime reality.

Craig's Dream Becomes Reality

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

San Francisco Manager Roger Craig had this dream that sooner or later his Giants would be in first place in the National League West.

Well, dreams do come true. The Giants beat the New York Mets 10-6 in 10 innings Wednesday night and now lead the division.

San Francisco moved one game ahead of Cincinnati, which lost 10-9 to Pittsburgh. The Giants had not held sole possession of first place since May 28.

"I knew one of these days I'd wake up and discover us in first place," Craig said. "Now I just hope I continue to wake up and still find us on top."

Elsewhere, Houston beat St. Louis 2-1, Los Angeles got past Montreal 10-9, Philadelphia held off San Diego 6-5 and Chicago defeated Atlanta 9-1.

Chili Davis' sacrifice fly put San Francisco ahead 7-6 in the 10th, relief pitcher Scott Garrelts followed with an RBI double and Rob Thompson hit a two-run single.

In the bottom of the ninth, Garrelts escaped a one-out, first-and-third jam. He struck out Kevin McReynolds and then, with the bases loaded and two outs and a full count, Garrelts got Howard Johnson looking at strike three.

"It was situation where I had to come right after him," Garrelts said. "I had to be aggressive. If you give in there, you end up making a mistake."

"If my team lost, I wanted to walk off that mound with the knowledge that I gave it all I had."

Garrelts, 10-7, got the victory. Roger McDowell, 7-5, took the loss.

The Giants came back from a 5-1 deficit built on a three-run homer by Darryl Strawberry and Johnson's solo shot. Johnson and Strawberry each hit their 30th home runs and became the first Mets teammates to reach that mark in the same season.

While rallying, Craig created some controversy in the second inning after Johnson led off with a home run. Craig immediately went to home plate and requested the umpires impound Johnson's bat. It marked the third time a team has suspected Johnson of using an illegal bat and asked for a check.

"This thing is a joke," Johnson said. "I don't even want to elaborate."

I don't want to go through this anymore."

Craig said he wanted to examine Johnson's bat to be sure.

"Seriously, I know him from my days with Detroit and I realize that he had the potential to do what he's doing. However, when he hits the ball off the scoreboard 480 feet away, I'm not about to take any chances," Craig said.

"Frankly, he's too smart to take a chance during a pennant race. Howard looked into the dugout at me after it happened and was wondering why I did it. I told him I wanted his autograph."

In the fourth inning, Mets Manager Davey Johnson asked umpires to take the bat of Candy Maldonado.

Pirates 10, Reds 9

Barry Bonds and Andy Van Slyke homered and Bobby Bonilla drove in three runs as Pittsburgh won at Cincinnati. The Pirates are 5-0 at Riverfront Stadium this season.

Bonds, who has hit three homers in two games, scored four runs. Rafael Belliard and Al Pedrique hit RBI doubles during a five-run eighth inning that made it 10-3. Bonds joined Dave Parker as the only Pirates to hit 20 home runs and steal 20 bases in the same season.

The Reds scored six times in the eighth. Kal Daniels and Paul O'Neill hit two-run singles.

Doug Drabek, 5-10, gave up two earned runs on five hits in six innings. Tom Browning, 5-10, lost his fourth straight decision.

Astros 2, Cardinals 1

Ken Caminiti hit a two-run double and Bob Knepper teamed with Larry Andersen on a four-hitter as Houston beat St. Louis for its sixth straight victory.

Knepper, 6-13, gave up three hits in seven innings. Andersen finished for his fourth save.

The host Astros got only four hits in sending the Cardinals to their fourth straight loss. Joe Magrane, 6-5, took a one-hitter into the seventh before Bill Doran and Alan Ashby singled and scored on Caminiti's two-out double.

Dodgers 10, Expos 9

Craig Shipley's two-run single keyed a five-run rally in the eighth inning and Los Angeles ended Montreal's five-game winning streak.

The Dodgers, who trailed 7-1 after three innings, took a 10-8 lead in the eighth after loading the bases on three walks. Shipley singled off Jeff Parrett, 4-5, Steve Sax had an RBI grounder, Alex Trevino singled home a run and John Shelby had a run-scoring double.

Alejandro Pena, 2-6, got the victory and Tim Crews worked two innings for his third save.

Casey Candaele and Tom Foley had three singles and drove in two runs apiece for the host Expos.

Phillies 6, Padres 5

Mike Schmidt hit a three-run homer and tied Eddie Mathews for all-time home runs by a third baseman at 482, leading Philadelphia over visiting San Diego.

Schmidt's 26th home run of the season moved him into a tie for ninth place on the all-time homer list with Willie McCovey and Ted Williams.

Schmidt connected in the third inning against Mark Grant, 3-7. Chris James hit a two-run homer, his 15th, for a 6-0 lead in the fifth.

Bruce Ruffin, 10-9, got the victory. Jeff Calhoun worked the final inning for his first save.

Benito Santiago singled during the Padres' three-run rally in the seventh and hit an RBI single in the eighth that made it 6-4.

Cubs 9, Braves 1

Scott Sanderson pitched 7 2-3 strong innings and Luis Quinones' single broke a 1-1 tie in the seventh inning as Chicago won at Atlanta.

Sanderson, 7-6, gave up an unearned run, struck out seven and walked two.

Quinones hit an RBI single and scored on Jody Davis' double for a 3-1 lead. The Cubs scored six times in the ninth, capped by Rafael Palmeiro's three-run homer.

Charlie Puleo, 5-6, took the loss. The Braves have lost six of their last seven.

NFL Announces A Draft For Ineligible Players

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

The NFL, acting in the face of a potential lawsuit, has made Cris Carter and Charles Gladman eligible to be drafted next week. In the process it may have hurt its relations with the colleges that provide the league with players.

The league said that Carter, the Ohio State wide receiver made ineligible for taking money from agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom, will be eligible to be chosen in a supplemental draft to be held Aug. 28. So will Gladman, the Pitt running back who denies taking money but was suspended anyway for refusing to cooperate with an inquiry into the two agents.

The NFL action came after what sources said was the threat of a lawsuit its lawyers didn't think they could win. It represents the first time the league has agreed to draft players made ineligible because of dealings with agents.

"While we have made this decision reluctantly, it is simply not feasible for the NFL to attempt to act as the NCAA's enforcement arm in assuring college athletes' compliance with NCAA rules," NFL spokesman Joe Browne said in a statement released Wednesday by the league.

The statement didn't placate the two schools involved.

"They made a legal decision, but a legal decision and the right decision are not always the same thing," Ohio State Coach Earl Bruce said.

"Here you have a young man who has taken money from an agent and done something to ruin his college eligibility and he's rewarded with an NFL contract. I think the NFL has opened up a whole new can of worms with this decision.

"For years, pro football and college football have had a close relationship and I hate to see anything jeopardize that."

"I'm totally against it," Pitt Coach Mike Gottfried said of the supplemental draft for the ineligible players. "If there is a draft we'll have to take a very serious look at agents and pro people coming onto campus. I'll be very disappointed if they reward someone for breaking a rule, and in essence pro football is encouraging people to leave early."

Ohio State Athletic Director Rick Bay, while acknowledging that a lawsuit could have destroyed the agreement under which the NFL refuses to draft underclassmen, added:

"I think where we are now is at a point of sending out a message to all college football players that, if you're so inclined, go ahead and take the money and sign with an agent as a sophomore or a junior and, if you're not caught, that'll be fine."

In most cases, the NFL uses the supplemental draft as a vehicle for players who graduate or complete their class work after the regular draft. In many cases, they have eligibility remaining — as did Miami's Bernie Kosar and Oklahoma's Brian Bosworth — but are eligible for the NFL because they have completed school.

The NFL, however, has also allowed the selection in both supplemental and regular drafts of underclassmen kicked off teams or out of school for disciplinary infractions.

It once allowed a special draft for Notre Dame running back Al Hunter, who lost his eligibility because of off-the-field indiscretions, and allowed the participation in the 1985 regular draft of wide receiver Tracy Henderson, who had been kicked off the team.

But the league has also denied players the right to be drafted before their classes. The most recent case involved Texas Christian running back Kenneth Davis, who was declared ineligible during the 1985 season for accepting money from alumni. His request to be drafted was turned down because he had already played in a college game and the NFL doesn't allow players to compete in both college and pro games the same season.

Davis was subsequently taken in the 1986 regular draft and is now with the Green Bay Packers.

Browne said an entirely new weighted lottery will be held to determine the order for the draft, which will include Carter, Gladman and other players, as yet unnamed, eligible for other reasons. A third player, Pitt defensive back Teryl Austin, has also been declared ineligible over his dealings with Walters and Bloom, but Browne said Austin had not yet applied for the draft.

Carter has been considered a possible first-round choice while Gladman is rated as a third- to fifth-round. However, several NFL scouts said Wednesday that they didn't believe a team would use a first-round choice on Carter and forfeit next year's pick.

Under the system, team logos are pulled from a drum to set the order with the Tampa Bay Bucs, 2-14 last season, having 28 chances for the first pick and the Super Bowl champion New York Giants having one.

Sun Devils Adding One More Goal

By The Associated Press
Arizona State had a memorable football season last year, but Coach John Cooper also remembers the one that got away.

"Last year, we had three goals — win the national championship, win the Pac-10 championship and win the Rose Bowl," Cooper said. "This year, we've added a fourth goal — beat U of A."

Arizona State's only loss of 1986 came in the regular-season finale, 34-17 at the hands of archrival Arizona.

That loss, ASU's fifth in a row to the downstate Wildcats, ended Sun Devil hopes for a national championship and the school's first undefeated season since 1975.

So the Sun Devils settled for their first Pac-10 championship, a 10-1-1 record, a 22-15 Rose Bowl victory over Michigan and a final No. 4 ranking.

The Sun Devils may have gotten the break they needed in the quest to beat Arizona when U of A Coach Larry Smith took the head job at Southern California. Dick Tomey took Smith's place at Arizona.

UCLA, Southern Cal and Washington are expected to be the Sun Devils' top challengers in the Pac-10 while Stanford looms as a darkhorse contender.

Cooper faces the task of replacing three-year starter Jeff Van Raaphorst with one of four redshirt quarterbacks — juniors John Walker and Dan Ford and freshmen Paul Justin and Kent Kiefer.

Walker, who started four games as a freshman in 1984, has played sparingly since because of recurring elbow problems. Ford completed 11 of 18 passes for 163 yards and three touchdowns in relief duty last season.

Senior tailback Darryl Harris, who ran for 933 yards and eight touchdowns last season, is joined in the backfield by senior fullback Channing Williams (540 yards, 8 TDs). Senior split end Aaron Cox, who caught 29 passes for 591 yards and 2 TDs, figures heavily in the passing game.

UCLA, which has won bowls each of the last five seasons, will lean on tailback Gaston Green in an effort to improve its 8-3-1 record and No. 14 ranking of last year.

Green ran for 1,139 yards and scored 14 touchdowns as a junior. Eric Ball and James Primus will also contribute to the Bruins' running attack.

Juniors Brendan McCracken and Troy Aikman are battling for the Bruins' quarterback job.

Linebacker Ken Norton, son of the former heavyweight boxing champion, is expected to head up the Bruin defense. At Southern Cal, Smith, the replacement for the fired Ted Tollner, appears to have a solid nucleus. The inventory includes a scrambling quarterback in junior Rodney Peete, who threw for 2,025 yards and 10 touchdowns last year.

One change already made by Smith is the elevation of seldom-used junior Steve Webster into the starting tailback job. The 5-foot-10, 185-pound Webster is adept at open-field running, a departure from the power running provided by Ryan Knight and Aaron Emanuel the previous two years. Knight, incidentally, returns for his senior year.

Defensively, the Trojans will be led by Marcus Cotton, one of the finest linebackers in the nation last season.

Washington finished tied for second in the Pac-10 with a 5-2-1 record, but lost nine players to the NFL draft. Only national champion Penn State had more players snapped up by the pros.

The return of quarterback Chris Chandler, running back Vince Weathersby and receivers Darryl Franklin and Brian Slater gives Washington some solid offensive weapons.

Chandler threw 20 touchdown passes last year, while Weathersby gained 880 yards and scored four touchdowns. Franklin caught 26 passes for 427 yards and three touchdowns while four of Slater's nine catches went for scores.

Linebackers David Rill, Tom Erlanson and Bo Yates figure to anchor the defense.

Stanford broke a string of five consecutive losing seasons with an 8-4 record last year, including a 27-21 loss to Clemson in the Gator Bowl.

The Cardinal offense is built around Brad Muster, the Pac-10 Offensive Player of the Year, and wide receiver Jeff James.

Muster ran for 1,053 yards and accounted for another 565 on 61 pass receptions. James had 52 catches for 779 yards.

Senior Greg Ennis probably will start at quarterback. He stepped in when starter John Paye went down with a bad shoulder and passed for 168 yards in the Gator Bowl.

The defensive unit, which ranked fifth in Pac-10 last season, lost five seniors, including all-conference linebacker Dave Wyman and tackle Tony Leiker. Senior linebacker Barry McKeever suffered a knee injury in the spring and his status is questionable.

Arizona comes off a 9-3 season, 5-3 in the Pac-10, and a 30-21 victory over North Carolina in the Aloha Bowl, the school's first-ever post-season football victory.

Tomey, who coached 10 seasons at Hawaii, expects to combine run-and-shoot and wishbone schemes "to add variety to this conference and show them something really different."

Arizona lost 25 seniors from last year's squad, including three-year quarterback starter Alfred Jenkins and tailback David Adams, the Pac-10 rushing leader with 1,175 yards. Tomey said redshirt sophomore Craig Bergman and Southern Methodist transfer Bobby Watters are the leading candidates at quarterback.

California, 2-9 overall last season and 2-7 in Pac-10, has a new coach in Bruce Snyder, a former Utah State head coach who takes over after four years as offensive backfield coach for the Los Angeles Rams.

The Bears, who have 14 returning starters, will be without running back Marc Hicks, who transferred to Ohio State following a disappointing sophomore showing, and wide receiver Vince Delgado, who hurt a knee in spring practice.

Troy Taylor, who passed for 891 yards last year, including 239 against Southern Cal, will be the quarterback. His top running backs should be Chris Richards and Todd Powers. Wide receiver James Devers caught 29 passes for 431 yards in the last five games of the season.

Washington State, which lost its final five games to finish at 3-7-1 overall and 2-6-1 in conference, will feature a pass-oriented offense under new Coach Dennis Erickson.

The Cougars' coach of nine years, Jim Walden, left for Iowa State in December, and Erickson took over after spending one season at Wyoming.

Sophomore Timm Rosenbach (34 of 61 passes, 452 yards, 4 TDs) will replace graduated Ed Blount at quarterback.

The Oregon Ducks, 5-6 overall and 3-5 in the conference, return with a young, inexperienced team and without all-conference quarterback Chris Miller. Coach Rich Brooks will choose between sophomore Pete Nelson and redshirt freshman Bill Musgrave as Miller's replacement.

Whoever wins the quarterback derby will have runners Derek Loville and Latin Berry and six experienced receivers with which to work.

The Ducks' defense, which last season ranked near the bottom of the league, has been realigned to a 3-4 configuration.

Coach Dave Kragthorpe, beginning the third year of his attempt to restore a winning program at Oregon State, says his team will lack depth but will return stronger both on offense and defense.

Junior Eric Wilhelm returns at quarterback for the Beavers, who finished 3-8 overall and 1-6 in the Pac-10.

In the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, defending champion San Jose State, again led by quarterback Mike Perez, figures to be the team to beat. Perez led the nation in total offense last season with a 329.9 yards per game average. The Spartans capped a 9-2 season with a 37-7 trouncing of Miami, Ohio, in the California Bowl.

Fresno State, also 9-2, lost quarterback Kevin Sweeney to graduation, but the Bulldogs nevertheless appear solid with 33 returning lettermen.

Long Beach State, which could be the league's surprise team, has a new coach, Larry Reisbig. A former assistant at Long Beach, Reisbig replaces Mike Sheppard, who took the head job at New Mexico.

While Nevada-Las Vegas also might challenge for the league title, rebuilding programs are still underway at Utah State, Pacific, Fullerton State and New Mexico State.

Anti-Castro Group Wants Charges Filed

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — An anti-Castro group wants the local prosecutor to file assault charges against the Cuban boxing delegation and four Cuban security agents at the Pan American Games.

But Marion County prosecutor Stephen Goldsmith says he doubts a trial would be held even if he goes along with the group's request.

"I think there ought to be a remedy. There ought to be a sanction. There ought to be some kind of definitive statement about what occurred," Goldsmith said Wednesday after meeting with members of the Cuba Independent Democratic group.

"But I am not sure the criminal process is necessarily the most constructive thing," he said.

The CID wants the Cubans prosecuted because of a brawl involving Cuban boxers and anti-Castro demonstrators in the stands at the Indiana Convention Center last Friday.

However, Goldsmith said that even if he files charges, it is doubtful the Cubans could be returned to Indianapolis for a trial after they return home from the games.

"The international complications are a factor," Goldsmith said, "and we still have to put on the games."

In a separate matter, the CID filed a $50 million suit in Marion Superior Court against Olympian Alberto Juantorena, vice president of the Cuban Ministry for Sports. The group alleges Juantorena made defamatory statements about members of the anti-Castro organization.

Rogers Hornsby of the St. Louis Cardinals led the National League in batting six straight years, 1920-25, and his lowest average in that time was .370.

Civil lawsuits also were filed in Superior Court against Cuban boxer Pablo Romero, the 178-pound world amateur champion, and other Cuban athletes.

Romero was one of about a dozen Cuban boxers who charged into the stands and fought with demonstrators who tried to rip up a Cuban flag last Friday during boxing at the Convention Center.

"The TV tape shows fellows in the stands being subjected to some pummeling by the boxers," Goldsmith said. "In Indiana, if a sporting person, be it a football player or basketball player, charges in the stands and hits a citizen, he would be prosecuted. I don't know if we would extradite him from outside the state or country."

Two demonstrators were treated at a nearby hospital for cuts and bruises. A Dominican Republic native who lives in Dayton, Ohio, was charged with disorderly conduct and resisting arrest, but police said he was not a part of the anti-Castro or Cuban factions.

Other defendants in the suits include Armando Guirola, chief of security for the Cuban delegation, and Manuel Gonzalez Guerra, head of the Cuban Olympic Committee.

The CID alleged that Cuban officials failed to supervise and control the Cuban athletes and security forces and conspired to commit battery upon members of the anti-Castro group.

A CID member also was involved in a fight with Cuban officials after an Aug. 9 baseball game between Cuba and the Netherlands Antilles.

"We didn't come here to destroy or disrupt these games," said Hubert Matos Jr., leader of the anti-Castro organization. "We did what any American citizen would have done if beaten or insulted."

"The most important priority is to see the law is obeyed," he said.

Man With Toy Gun Takes Over TV NewsRoom

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — A man with a history of mental illness seized control of a live newscast by pointing a realistic toy pistol at TV reporter David Horowitz and demanding he read a statement about the CIA and space creatures.

Gary Stollman, 34, of Tallahassee, Fla., was booked for investigation of false imprisonment and disturbing the peace after Wednesday's brief takeover of KNBC-TV, said police Lt. Jay Farrand.

Horowitz and anchors Kirstie Wilde and John Beard were unharmed. Stollman, taken to the jail ward at Los Angeles County-USC Medical Center, was to undergo a mental evaluation, police Sgt. Joseph Latta said.

Almost as soon as Stollman appeared on camera at 4:42 p.m., toy gun in hand, news director Tom Capra ordered a blackout of Wednesday's newscast.

Horowitz read the man's statement during a nine-minute period in which KNBC broadcast a message asking its viewing audience to stand by.

"The reason we went to black is because we can't let people with guns or weapons of any kind take the station hostage," Capra told reporters at a news conference.

The document Horowitz read was a rambling statement warning of a plot by the CIA and outer space "alien forces" against the U.S. government, and "possibly the human race itself."

Heather Burke was among scores of television viewers who called police and other news media to report what was happening.

"I'm sitting here watching TV, and I'm just freaking out," Ms. Burke said from her home in Hollywood. "You could see the gun, it was black, it looked like a .357 Magnum."

The intruder used a type of toy that Horowitz has complained about repeatedly on his nationally syndicated consumer show, "Fight Back With David Horowitz."

"The irony is that this guy did this with a toy gun and I had been telling parents for months not to get their kids replica toy guns," Horowitz said at a news conference.

With thousands of viewers watching, Horowitz maintained a calm demeanor as the man brandished the fake weapon. After Horowitz read the statement, the man told him: "Thank you very much, David. I couldn't hurt anyone with this BB gun."

Miami Police Probe Nets Three Officers

MIAMI (AP) — The arrest of three past or present policemen on charges they stole cash, marijuana and cocaine and resold the drugs brought to 15 the number of Miami officers accused of using their badges to operate a crime network.

The three, arrested by FBI agents Wednesday, were named in an indictment handed up Tuesday. Among the charges was the theft of 147 kilograms, or about 320 pounds, of cocaine from a vessel on the Miami River in 1985.

The indictment is the fourth issued so far in an investigation of the Police Department.

"I personally feel it's a tragedy," said U.S. Attorney Leon Kellner. "It impacts not only on the officers indicted, but the reputation of the department."

The 15 officers charged in the so-called Miami River Cops corruption case are accused of being members of a gang that stole and sold drugs, robbed motorists and plotted to kill witnesses. Six of the 15 are fugitives.

The three officers arrested Wednesday were Armando Lopez, 26, Felix Alberto Beruvides, 29, and Ricardo J. Perez, 24.

Perez has been relieved of duty with pay; Beruvides and Lopez left the force after the offenses alleged in the indictment. All three pleaded innocent before a federal magistrate Wednesday.

Also arrested was Beruvides' father, Felix Candido Beruvides, 56.

Two of the three officers were accused of stealing $3,500 cash from a man in 1984 through violence and intimidation. They were also charged with raiding homes, cars and businesses to steal cocaine and marijuana for resale.

Also named in the latest indictment were former officer Armando Garcia, who was charged in an earlier indictment, and Raul Rojas Fernandez, 47, a wheelchair-bound civilian also charged earlier. Both are fugitives.

The Dutch and Indians concluded a peace treaty at New Amsterdam in 1645.

'Right-To-Know' Rules Will Cost Employers $687 Million Next Year

By MATT YANCEY
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — An estimated 3.5 million companies around the country will have to begin training employees to protect themselves from hazardous chemicals in the workplace under newly expanded "right-to-know" regulations by the government.

The Labor Department estimates that the training, required labels on products and posted instructions at worksites will cost employers more than $687 million next year, or more than $40 for each of the estimated 18 million American workers coming under the law's protection.

The court-ordered expansion of coverage beyond the chemical and manufacturing industries, to include virtually every major workplace in the country, was announced Wednesday by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

OSHA officials estimated that worker knowledge of chemical hazards around them will reduce occupational injuries, illnesses and deaths by 20 percent in non-manufacturing industries once the regulations become fully implemented in May 1988.

Formally known as the hazard communication standard, the regulations were recommended more than a decade ago by a federal advisory committee to help combat the annual 100,000 deaths and 340,000 disabling illnesses and injuries blamed on workplace hazards.

Both government officials and outside experts predicted Wednesday that the new requirements will quickly become the most effective weapon in the government's arsenal for reducing occupational illnesses and diseases.

"OSHA's existing hazard communication standard has been the agency's most significant regulatory action ever taken to protect America's manufacturing workers," said Deputy Assistant Labor Secretary Frank White.

The agency last year expanded "right-to-know" coverage to include 300,000 companies employing some 14 million workers. It first imposed the regulations on the chemical industry and its 1.4 million workers in 1985.

President Signs Law Banning Grand Canyon Tourist Flights

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan has signed into law legislation banning tourist flights below the rim of the Grand Canyon, a proposal his administration initially had resisted.

The bill, developed in response to the June 1986 collision of a tourist plane and a helicopter in which 25 people died, was signed by Reagan at his mountaintop ranch, the White House press office announced Wednesday.

The legislation also requires the Interior Department and Federal Aviation Administration to work together on a plan that better defines how airspace over national parks may be used.

Besides the fatal accident last year, there have been complaints of increased aircraft noise at the Grand Canyon and other landmarks.

In a statement, Reagan noted that the legislation orders the FAA administrator and secretary of Interior "to specify compatible aviation uses over our national parks."

Reagan said a Senate Commerce Committee study on the legislation recognized "the potential problems of an agency other than the FAA developing airspace regulations." He said he shares the committee's concern that steps called for in the bill might diminish the FAA's primary responsibility for deciding proper airspace use.

The bill had been sent to Reagan by a voice vote in the House on Aug. 3.

Ed Dale, a spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget, said at the time that the administration opposed the legislation.

Reacting to the president's decision to sign the bill anyway, Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., referred to the close encounter last week between Reagan's helicopter and a private plane over his Santa Barbara ranch.

"Perhaps the administration realized that if the skies over Santa Barbara aren't safe, the same could apply to our national parks. The president has done the right thing," said Coelho, the House majority whip and a sponsor of the bill.

The Wilderness Society's Phoenix, Ariz.-based regional director, Jim Norton, said "we're very excited that after more than a decade of work, quiet will be restored to the Grand Canyon."

Norton said the society "will be watching" how the two agencies carry out the law.

The legislation also sets minimum altitudes for sight-seeing aircraft over Yosemite National Park in California and Haleakala National Park in Hawaii, and it directs the National Park Service to study the impact of tourist flights on its other facilities.

For the Grand Canyon, the Park Service now has 60 days to draft a plan banning below-the-rim flights and establishing aircraft-free zones in an effort to restore the canyon's natural quiet.

The FAA then will have 30 days to implement the rules unless it could show that they would create safety problems at the canyon.

The big banks would be a lot smaller if they didn't require such high checking balances.

We'll give you free checking and interest with a Prestige Checking account at First Federal. All for a low minimum balance of $300.

If you do business with one of the big banks, examine the service charges on your checking account. We think you'll be surprised.

If you check with anyone but First Federal, you're probably paying more in service charges than you're earning in interest...if you earn interest at all.

Now examine the benefits of First Federal's Prestige Checking account. When you maintain a balance of only $300 or more, you receive interest, no-fee travelers checks, free notary services, our no-charge Prestige Place 24-hour teller and Prestige Emergency Cash in over 5500 locations nationwide. All insured to $100,000 by the FSLIC.

Maybe we could be a lot bigger if we require higher minimum balances on our interest checking accounts. But at First Federal, we'd rather be better than bigger.

Young Star Joins Puppets In Film

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If Mackenzie Astin's junior high teacher asks him to write about his summer vacation he can say he spent it with "The Garbage Pail Kids."

The 14-year-old actor, who also stars in NBC's "Facts of Life," is one of the few human stars in the movie, at least in recognizable human form.

The feature movie, which opens Wednesday, also stars Anthony Newley and Katie Barberi, as well as seven of the "Garbage Pail Kids."

"I discover the kids and become their hero and they become my heroes," he said. "We each help each other to beat the bad guy."

The "Garbage Pail Kids" originated as bubble gum cards. Kids loved the grotesque creatures and parents hated them. Astin's mother, actress Patty Duke, said she found them gross but admitted that one of her stepdaughters, Charlene, has a huge collection.

"They're really disgusting," said Astin. "It's gross stuff. In the movie they're disgusting but kind of lovable."

The kids were controlled by puppeteers operating electronic pins that made them move. But whenever the kids were shown scampering about, they were played by small actors in costumes.

"The little people wore these big heads and they were very hot," Astin said. "They had hoses blowing cold air into the heads. It took a long time to film because each kid had to have a closeup."

Astin said Atlantic Releasing asked him to be in the movie just as he was completing work on "Facts of Life." The show is now back in production for the fall season, which will be Astin's fourth year.

He plays Andy, the adopted son of Cloris Leachman's character.

"Before I was adopted I worked in the shop with the girls as a sort of unofficial stockboy," he said. "They've gotten rid of the store."

"Facts of Life" was a spinoff from "Diff'rent Strokes" in 1979 and is now the longest-running situation comedy on television.

The show originally starred Charlotte Rae as the housemother of an Eastern girls school. The show has changed over the years as the girls grew up and graduated from school. Rae left the show at the end of the 1985-86 season and was replaced by Leachman.

Astin made his professional debut in a TV movie called "Lois Gibbs and the Love Canal."

"I died about a third of the way through the movie from liver cancer from all the toxic waste," he said.

He is the son of Duke and actor-director John Astin, who are divorced. His mother, in the business since she was a child, did not encourage her children to become actors. But an older son, Sean, 16, stars in the current movie "White Water Summer."

"At first they wanted to make sure I wanted to do it," Astin said. "Then when they were sure I wanted to act they became very supportive. They helped me in every respect. I grew up around movie studios. I think what basically interested me was seeing my brother work."

"I played in a 'Hotel' with my mother and she played my mother. It was really tough. She had to act a lot. I was also in her series, 'Hail to the Chief.' I played the son of the secretary of war."

He appeared in other series before getting the call to audition for "Facts of Life." "I read for them on a Tuesday, went back on a Wednesday and went to work on a Thursday," he said. "That was December 1984."

Michael Jackson Named In $150 Million Birth Suit

CHICAGO (AP) — Claims by a woman calling herself Billie Jean that Michael Jackson fathered her three children were labeled "preposterous" by the singer's publicist.

Lavon Powlis, who says the singer once proposed to her, filed the $150 million paternity suit against him in Cook County Circuit Court.

"Billie Jean" is the title of a Jackson hit about a man accused by a woman of fathering a child. In the song, the man says, "The kid is not my son."

Jackson is not the first celebrity the 39-year-old woman has named as the children's father, Dave Schneiderman of the state Department of Children and Family Services, which now has custody of the youngsters, said Wednesday.

"She is famous for claiming that various famous people are the father of her children," Schneiderman said. "If this lady doesn't know who the father is, we don't."

Ms. Powlis has at least twice before named other notable people as the father but never before filed a paternity suit, Schneiderman said. He refused to identify the other notable.

Ms. Powlis' claims are "ridiculous and preposterous," said Jackson publicist Lee Solters.

Schneiderman said his agency took custody of the children after the mother left two of them at a Black Muslim mosque in Chicago. The department is allowing the children to live with relatives in New York City, he said.

Ms. Powlis, who describes herself as an unemployed legal secretary living in suburban Hanover Park, contended that she and the 28-year-old Jackson had sex in 1975 and 1981 and that he has acknowledged he is the father of her 5-year-old twins — a girl and a boy — and her 11-year-old son.

In a telephone interview Wednesday, Ms. Powlis said the children were conceived in a blue Rolls Royce parked in front of the singer's suburban Los Angeles home.

She said she met Jackson in 1975, when she was living in New York, after writing him letters. "Michael asked me to marry him Sept. 13, 1985. I said yes, of course," she said.

Since then, Ms. Powlis said, "family feuds" have delayed the wedding and Jackson has refused to pay child support.

Her lawsuit was filed Friday without an attorney. A preliminary hearing was set for Sept. 4.

Veteran Actor Hayden Rorke Dies

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hayden Rorke, who played the bewildered psychiatrist Dr. Alfred Bellows in the TV series "I Dream of Jeannie," has died. He was 76.

Rorke, who died of cancer at his suburban Toluca Lake home Wednesday, had a career that spanned six decades on stage, screen and television.

He appeared in 53 movies, including "Pillow Talk," "An American in Paris" and "The Nightwalker," in which he had the title role.

Born in New York, Rorke attended the American Academy of Dramatic Arts and appeared in 70 Broadway productions, including "The Country Wife," "The Philadelphia Story," "The Iceman Cometh" and "A Moon

For The Misbegotten."

He was best known as the space agency psychiatrist and antagonist of the astronaut played by Larry Hagman on the comedy "I Dream of Jeannie," which ran from 1965 to 1970 on NBC.

Rorke also made some 400 guest appearances in such TV series as "I Love Lucy," "The Loretta Young Show," "Dr. Kildare," "Bonanza," "Perry Mason" and "Barnaby Jones."

He is survived by two brothers.

Finalists

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Randy Travis, boosted by his No. 1 song "Forever and Ever, Amen," leads finalists for the 21st annual Country Music Association awards.

Travis is a finalist for five awards: entertainer of the year, top male vocalist, single of the year, music video of the year and album of the year.

Joining Travis as finalists for entertainer of the year are Reba McEntire, the 1986 winner; the Judds; George Strait; and Hank Williams Jr.

George Jones, Ricky Skaggs and Williams joined Travis and Strait as finalists for top male vocalist.

Nominated with Ms. McEntire for No. 1 female vocalist were Rosanne Cash, Emmylou Harris, Kathy Mattea and Dolly Parton.

The CMA announced the finalists Monday. Winners will be announced Oct. 12.

FOCUS

Ten-Year Mission

Ten years ago today, Voyager 2 was launched on its mission of exploration. Voyager 2 actually took off a few days before Voyager 1, but it followed a slower and longer trajectory through the solar system. It passed by Jupiter in 1979, Saturn in 1981 and Uranus in 1986. It is scheduled to pass by Neptune on August 24, 1989. While Earth is about 98 million miles from the Sun, Neptune is almost 2.7 BILLION miles further out. A "year" on Neptune equals 164.8 Earth years.

DO YOU KNOW — What planet's orbit takes it further from the Sun than Neptune?

WEDNESDAY'S ANSWER — Puritans used the so-called "New England Primer" to teach the alphabet.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY Aug. 21

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You must use special care not to do anything which might be misunderstood or make your family disappointed in you. The evening will be more relaxed and productive.
ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Plan an activity which will bring your family together and create a happy state of mind. Don't be extravagant.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Do some entertaining in your home this evening, but only invite guests who are trustworthy. Avoid any arguments.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Don't create any new financial burdens today. Be wary of a newcomer who may attempt to see you tonight.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You may have the feeling that you're not getting the help you deserve, but the mood changes tonight.
LEO (July 22 to August 21): Stop keeping a secret from one who deserves to know the truth. The time is not right for putting that new plan into action.
VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Be wary of a fast talker who may try to talk you into something which would take up far too much of your time.
LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Avoid irritating someone in authority today. Get together with an old friend and have a fine time together.
SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Avoid an outsider who is irate and avoid an unfortunate confrontation. Be sure to drive carefully this evening.
SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Don't lose your temper over a purchase which seems frivolous. Your mate may be disturbed, so be kind.
CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): A meeting with a partner could lead to a big quarrel today. Enjoy romance with your mate this evening.
AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Your work may seem boring, but remain cheerful and get it done more quickly. Avoid any quarrels with co-workers.
PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Any plans for recreation should be postponed. Your mate may be suspicious and try to make trouble, but ignore it.
IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will have to learn not to take slights so seriously and to become more objective. A good education will provide your progeny with the opportunity for fantastic success. He or she will have the ability to organize and oversee large projects without difficulty.

"The Stars impel; they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

 In the course of our bridge lives, we have come across many strange and wondrous things. Had we been asked to construct a seemingly impossible auction, we would have trouble coming up with one weirder than this, from the 1975 World Championships.
 Taking part were four of the world's all-time great players: Giorgio Belladonna and Benito Garozzo, North-South for Italy, and Bob Hamman and Bobby Wolff, East-West for the U.S. The auction included seven doubles and two redoubles, yet the bidding got no higher than the two-level!
 North's original takeout double was typical of the style of this partnership. They were more interested in showing overall strength than worrying about the fact the spade suit was missing. East's redouble is the standard way of showing strength, and South bid his spades lest North chose to bypass that suit. All subsequent doubles were for penalties as North and South wriggled around looking for a better spot. Eventually North had to settle for two spades doubled, one higher than necessary.

 The defense was on target. West led his singleton heart, East won the queen and shifted to a diamond. In with the king, West switched to a club, ducked in dummy and taken by the queen. After cashing the ace of hearts, East gave his partner a heart ruff. West promptly cashed his other diamond winner, and declarer still had to lose trump tricks to the ace and queen, so the contract was down three—500 points. That was a substantial pickup, for in the other room East-West came to rest in an unambitious no trump partscore.

ISUZU STANDARD P.U.P.

IT'S BUILT TO SURVIVE THE WORLD'S WORST CLIMATES. EVEN THE ECONOMIC ONES.

$5995 * Don't be fooled by our low price. Sure, it's one of the lowest of the top five compact pickups, but that's probably the last reason to buy an Isuzu.

What really makes us a solid investment is the fact that our trucks have conquered some of the world's roughest terrain. FOUR WHEELER MAGAZINE called them "a shining example of what quality control is all about."

The bottom line is you get a durable truck at a price that's tough to beat.

Farm Aid

RALEIGH (AP) — Five more North Carolina counties have requested federal aid for crop losses, bringing to 17 the total number of counties across the state asking for such assistance, officials said.

More rainfall in the past two weeks, however, has eased drought conditions in some of the hardest-hit counties, state and agriculture officials said Wednesday.

A prolonged dry spell has hurt crop yield in much of eastern North Carolina, where many counties had little rainfall from May through July. That prompted requests for federal disaster aid in early August from 12 counties — Chowan, Cumberland, Duplin, Gates, Greene, Harnett, Halifax, Johnston, Nash, Sampson, Wayne and Wilson.

Additional counties that have requested aid since include Caswell, Durham, Edgecombe, Orange and Pasquotank, said Jim Oliver, agricultural adviser to Gov. Jim Martin.

Federal disaster aid could include low-interest loans, emergency feed for livestock and other programs, Oliver said. Last year, 69 of the state's 100 counties qualified for federal aid because of record drought.

John David Smith, Washington, N.C., driving while impaired, order for remand to comply with District Court judgment.

Donald Glenn Holloman, Farmville, armed robbery (7 counts), jury verdict - not guilty.

William Anderson Noble, 402 Lewis St., Apartment 2, conspiracy to deliver cocaine, prayer for judgment continued until Sept. 7, 1987.
