Medicare Proposal Could Cause Some To Pay More

By ROBERT A. ROSENBLATT
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — A major Medicare expansion plan moving quickly through Congress would force millions of middle- and upper-income retirees to pay substantial new fees without any significant improvement in their health benefits.

The Medicare plan has been widely praised as a way to limit the amount of personal payment for the enormous costs of health care for the elderly. However, a groundswell of protest has been reaching members of Congress from some retirees who already have supplementary health insurance coverage and object to the proposed new payments.

About 80 percent of the nation's 30 million Medicare recipients have some form of supplemental medical insurance, according to insurance industry figures. The supplementary insurance pays some or all of the expenses not covered by Medicare and can mean economic survival in cases of major illness.

Because the policies vary considerably, however, it is not clear how many retirees would prefer their current policies over benefits provided by the proposed Medicare revision.

Under versions of the legislation passed by the full House and the Senate Finance Committee, the costs would be borne by the Medicare enrollees who have enough income to pay federal taxes, about 40 percent of those over 65. The House bill would place more of the cost burden on middle-income people.

The maximum annual charge for single people under the House bill, $580, would be paid by an estimated 2.4 million, those earning more than $20,000 a year. And 1.5 million couples, with incomes in excess of $38,000, would pay the top rate for couples, $1,160 a year.

Those income-related payments would be made in addition to the basic premium paid by all beneficiaries under the current Medicare system, now $214.80 a year. Those elderly who do not pay federal income taxes will continue to pay only the basic premium and will be excluded from the additional payments.

Government experts estimate that single people earning more than $11,000 a year and couples with incomes above $21,000 would pay the new premiums, which would rise with higher income under a sliding scale outlined by the bill.

The new Medicare fees under the House bill would pay for the largest expansion since the program began in 1965, providing unlimited days of government-paid hospital care and a ceiling on personal spending for all hospital and doctor bills.

Congress, fearful of adding to the federal deficit, decided to make the Medicare expansion self-financing. Thus, for the first time, a program of social benefits will be paid for entirely by the people receiving the benefits — creating a new financial burden that would fall heaviest on middle-class beneficiaries.

The nation's largest organization for the aging, the 25-million-member American Association of Retired Persons, likes the new Medicare benefits but is unhappy with the way they would be financed.

"This is the first time in the history of Medicare that beneficiaries are being asked to pay the entire bill," said Cyril F. Brickfield, AARP executive director.

"We know that beneficiaries are going to have to pay part of the bill, but they shouldn't have to pay the whole bill."

The House approved its Medicare legislation by an overwhelming vote of 302-127 in July, and its members are likely to insist on their financing plan when they confer with the Senate on a final version of the legislation. The House bill takes more from the middle class because it finances a more expensive program than the Senate's version.

The House bill adds prescription drugs to Medicare, with the patient paying the first $500 a year and 20 percent of any additional charges. The Senate Finance Committee bill, which sets a ceiling of $1,700 for combined doctor and hospital bills, does not include a drug benefit.

Under current law, the patient pays $520 for the first day in the hospital, receives the next 59 days free and then pays $130 daily. The proposed legislation would require the patient to pay just the first day's

Older Drivers Needed

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County may need as many as 80 new adult school bus drivers by the end of the year unless a ruling by the U.S. Department of Labor that 16- and 17-year- olds cannot drive buses after Jan. 1, 1988, is lifted.

The Labor Department has refused to renew an exemption allowing under-18s to drive because, it says, the accident experience of school bus drivers under 18 years of age in North Carolina does not compare favorably with that of drivers 18 and older.

But if the state can show by Nov. 30 that the safety record of 16- and 17-year-olds has improved, the Jan. 1 deadline could be extended.

Statewide, schools will have to replace about 4,500 drivers — almost a third of the bus drivers — if the deadline is not extended.

North Carolina has applied for and received annual exemptions from the Fair Labor Standards Act to allow drivers under 18 since 1967.

"We started looking (for adult drivers) when the ruling" was announced last week, according to Rodney Bullock, who supervisises bus operations for the Pitt County school system. But "we're hoping the ruling is going to be appealed and extended through the end of the school year.

"We don't feel like we can find 60 to 80 qualified people" before Jan. 1, Bullock said.

Pitt County has 211 school bus drivers at present, about 60 of them non-student adults. Tom Craft, associate superintendent of schools said that, of the 151 student drivers, "we project about 70 to 75" will have to be replaced.

"What limits our field" in recruiting adult drivers, Bullock said, is the relatively low pay and the work schedule.

Bullock said the state allocates $4.91 an hour for bus drivers. Pitt's drivers — students and adults — receive the same pay: $4.81 an hour for first-year drivers and a maximum of $4.97 an hour after four years. And the drivers receive no benefits such as vacation pay, sick leave, retirement or health insurance.

"The average route in the county is about 2- to 2½-hours long ... an hour or an hour and 15 minutes one-way," Bullock said. And under state law, the buses must be parked at the school during the middle of the day, so adult drivers "must provide their own transportation to where the bus is parked so they will have transpor-

Pitt's Tax Share Tops $1 Million

Net distributable tax proceeds amounting to more than $1.147 million were received by Pitt County for the 1986-87 fiscal year ending June 30, according to Myron C. Banks, state deputy secretary of revenue.

Distribution checks were mailed to 475 municipalities and all 100 counties in the state by the N.C. Department of Revenue on Thursday, Banks said.

"These checks covered both net collections of the intangibles tax for fiscal year 1986-87 and special allocations by the state, as authorized by the 1985 General Assembly, to reimburse local governments for revenue lost by the repeal of the intangibles tax on bank deposits and money on hand," Banks said.

The total amount of distribution was $100.4 million, according to Banks, who said $73.5 million represented net intangibles tax collections, while $26.9 million represented the special allocations.

The total distribution for 1986-87 was $14.1 million greater than last year, an increase of 16 percent, he said.

ECU Using Advertising Blitz To Promote Sales

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Season tickets for East Carolina University football games are selling at a record pace thanks in part to an advertising blitz which includes four new television commercials, the school's marketing officials said.

"If we continue on this pace, we'll set another season ticket record this year, which will mark the fourth year in a row we've done so," said Lee Workman, athletic marketing director.

"It's the same thing with the Pirate Club. We set a record last year for dollars raised and membership, and we are ahead of the pace to do that again."

"They've (the ads) been very successful," said John Althoff, assistant athletic marketing director. "Season ticket sales are running ahead of any previous year's pace, but you have to consider there's a lot of optimism involved with the football team and a lot of factors go into it."

In promoting the 1987 Pirate football team, the school's marketing department has been airing commercials featuring former National Football League players Larry Csonka and Conrad Dobler. The spots were filmed when the two players attended the Purple and Gold Pirate Pigskin Pigout in the spring.

Another commercial, featuring new ECU basketball coach Mike Steele, has been aired along with a general commercial about the school's football program.

Workman said the use of Steele in the football ad provided the opportunity to introduce the new coach to ECU fans.

"A lot of people have enjoyed Mike Steele's spot," Workman said. "It just worked out that Mike's personality was conducive to that and it was an opportunity to put Mike in front of the public."

The marketing department has received a favorable response to the spots, Workman said.

"We get a lot of feedback from our commercials," he said. "People see them and they let us know when they like what they see."

Frank Giardina, ECU director of electronic media-promotions, said the spots were designed to be a bit unusual.

"They don't look like network productions because we don't have that kind of money to spend, but they are similar to those on the network level," Giardina said. "We tried to do something people might chuckle at anyway.

"The big thing was to do something a little different. If they all look alike, people don't pay attention."

In addition, the school has three spots airing on 19 eastern North Carolina radio stations along with advertisements in area newspapers, according to Workman, who said the television spots are only being aired locally.

"We're only running in our market

Students Say Police Used Too Much Force In Arrests

By CLAY DEANHARDT
Reflector Staff Writer

Greenville police broke up a block party involving East Carolina University students Saturday evening, forcibly arresting two students.

Other students who witnessed the struggle claimed police used excessive force during the brief confrontation on Biltmore Street between Fourth and Fifth streets. A police shift commander who was at the scene denied the allegations.

Police charged Matthew Hall Moore and Anthony Joseph Pistorio with drinking in public and resisting, delaying and obstructing justice. Moore also was charged with assault on a police office. Bond was set at $300 each.

Earlier in the evening police arrested Michael Hart, also an ECU student, without incident and charged him with being intoxicated in public.

Police Sgt. A.S. Fordham said of-

Patients now pay 20 percent of the cost of doctor bills, with no limit on out-of-pocket expenses. The House bill would set a ceiling of about $1,600 for hospital and doctors' charges paid by the individual; beyond that, the government would pay all costs.

The poor would be among the major beneficiaries of the House bill, which offers free Medicare coverage to as many as 2 million people living in poverty but with incomes too high to qualify for the federal Medicaid welfare program. The state governments would pay on behalf of the poor the costs normally paid by patients, the $520 for the first day in the hospital and the 20 percent of doctors' bills.

To finance the Medicare expansion, all 30 million Medicare enrollees would pay a base premium of $2.60 a month under the House measure and $4 a month under the Senate Finance Committee plan. The additional supplemental premiums would be linked to income in both plans.

The House bill's premium is linked to adjusted gross income, rising $1 for every $14.30 of earnings. (Social Security income is not included in this calculation unless other income exceeds $25,000 for a single person or $32,000 for a couple.)

The Senate committee plan, which will be considered by the full Senate next month, links the premium to the amount of income taxes paid by the beneficiary. It puts more of the burden on upper-income people.

For a single retiree with $15,000 in income, the annual premium would be $311 under the House bill and $85 under the Senate committee bill. At $20,000, the cost would be $580 under the House bill and $98 under the Senate bill.

A married couple would pay nothing until their earnings exceeded $21,000 in the House version or $22,000 in the Senate committee bill. At $25,000, the couple would pay $220 under the House bill and $37 under the Senate bill.

The Senate panel's top rate of $850 would be paid by a small group: the 550,000 single people earning more than $60,000. About 400,000 couples with incomes of $95,000 and over would face the maximum payment. This compares to the maximum of $580 for singles earning more than $20,000 and $1,160 for couples earning in excess of $38,000 under the House bill.

Actor Lee Marvin Dies

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Lee Marvin, the tough-guy actor who won an Oscar as a drunken gunfighter in "Cat Ballou" and was a party in a historic "palimony" suit, died Saturday, a Tucson Medical Center spokesman said. He was 63.

Tom Reavis, director of community affairs for the hospital, said Marvin died of a heart attack about noon, his wife, Pamela, at his side. He had been hospitalized since Aug. 13 with what Reavis described as a run-down condition related to the flu.

He owns a ranch near Tucson.

Usually playing the tough guy, he had roles in such films as "The Dirty Dozen," "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance," "Donovan's Reef," and "Prime Cut."

In 1979 he made headlines in a landmark "palimony case" when he was sued for half his fortune by Michelle Triola, a woman he lived with for six years but never married. Her claim was rejected, but Marvin was ordered to pay her a nominal sum for rehabilitation.

In 1984, after he married his childhood sweetheart, Pamela Feeley, he moved to Tucson.

Last December, he had intestinal surgery after suffering abdominal pains while at his ranch. Officials said then there was an inflammation of colon, but that no malignancy was found.

Marvin, who jested that he learned to act in the Marine Corps, starred in "The Dirty Dozen" in 1967, as well as a 1985 television movie sequel "The Dirty Dozen: Next Mission."

Marvin, distingushed by his snow-white hair and granite-hewn features, fought with the Marines on Kwajalein, Eniwetok and Saipan. On Saipan, he suffered a wound that kept him in a hospital for 13 months.

"I applied a lot of what I learned in the Marines to my films," he said in a 1985 interview. "I was a Pfc. in the Marine Corps, so when I started playing officers I had a good opinion as to how they should be played — from the bias of an enlisted man's viewpoint."

He was born Feb. 19, 1924, in New York City, the son of an advertising executive and a beauty and fashion editor. He was such a hell raiser that he was kicked out of virtually every prep school his parents sent him to.

"I claim the Marine Corps taught me how to act," he said. "I acted every day in the service. If they asked me if I was anxious to get out there and kill the enemy, I answered that I was."

Students Arrested

ficers went to the Biltmore area after receiving complaints of noise and blockage of traffic. He said about 400 people were congregated in the party area.

"We waited on them (after asking them to disperse). They got more aggressive and started throwing eggs," he said.

"We pulled back and then came in and tried to get them to stop again. At that point we had to make some arrests. People got too aggressive," Fordham said.

Fordham said Moore's arrest occurred after he tried to pull Pistorio away from arresting officers.

The sergeant denied that excessive force was used.

"Whenever you've got that size of a crowd and you have to make an arrest, you're going to get that kind of allegation. I don't think there was any excessive force used. I think there was just enough force to make the arrests and clear them out of there," Fordham said.

Fordham said there were eight or nine officers, including Capt. Nelson Staton, who is the interim assistant police chief, in the area. He said the situation was under control 30 to 40 minutes after Staton arrive.

"Once the arrests were made, we pulled out of the area," he said later.

Staton said he arrived about 6 p.m. after receiving complaints that students were making excessive noise, drinking in the streets and allowing their dogs to run free. "After I got here, I found the situation to be as described," he said.

Staton said he called on the party's hosts to halt the party after learning they did not have a permit. "A few of the people started to leave," he said. "A few started swearing.

Greg Christenson, a student at the party, told a newsman the police acted without cause.

"The people were all on their own property," Christensen said. "No one was in the street — they were staying on the property." He said at one point he saw eight police officers on one of the men that were arrested.

Beth Bouillet, another student, said she witnessed Moore's arrest. "They were holding him down and he was purple and they were beating him," she said. "That was not fair — no way."

Several students said bloodstains found on the porch at 402 Biltmore St. were left behind after Moore was arrested. Asked about the report, Fordham said: "I don't know who the blood on the porch belonged to. I know there was blood on his (Moore's) face."

tation to and from their home. This is an expense for them," Bullock said.

"If we have concerned parents who want to drive ... the law says only employees of the board of education or students can ride on the buses. Parents with young children would have to leave the children at home with a baby sitter" while driving, Bullock suggested.

Bullock said there is no difference in the safety record of under-18 drivers and 18-and-over drivers in Pitt County.

And the 16- and 17-year-olds "don't feel like they are being treated fairly. They feel they haven't been given an opportunity to present their case.

"They don't feel they are that unsafe," Bullock said.

Students have been bused to and from school "since the early 1920s," Bullock said, and student drivers have been used "as long as buses have been operating."

Bodies Of 33 People Found In Seoul Attic

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The bound and gagged bodies of 33 people who were linked to a religious cult were found stacked in two piles in a factory attic Saturday after an apparent murder-suicide pact, authorities said.

Police said the bodies were discovered in the attic of a factory cafeteria in Yongin, about 50 miles south of Seoul. Officers said the victims had been dead for up to two days.

"The investigation is still going on but there are suspicions that it was a religious incident," a local police officer told The Associated Press by telephone.

The tourist souvenir factory was owned by Park Soon-ja, 48, the cult leader who was called "Benevolent Mother" by her followers, authorities said. Mrs. Park claimed God appeared to her and told her to seek followers, they said.

The sect claimed to be Christian and preached that the world was about to come to an end. It demanded extreme spiritual discipline and blind obedience, police said.

Some Korean news reports said Mrs. Park and her three children were among the dead, but authorities would not confirm the report.

Mrs. Park disappeared last Wednesday after police began investigating accusations that she swindled $8.7 million from about 220 people, many of them apparently involved in the cult.

Heavily armed police surrounded the factory as officers and forensic experts examined the bodies and the factory complex for evidence.

Taxes Distributed

The intangibles tax is a property tax levied against the value of intangible personal property. The classes of tangible property which were subject to taxation during the past fiscal year were accounts receivable, notes bonds and evidences of debt, shares of stocks and units of investment funds, and beneficial interest in foreign trusts.

The taxes previously levied against money on deposit in banks and money on hand were repealed effective Jan. 1, 1985.

Since the state is responsible for collecting and administering the tax, the net amount collected each year is allocated to counties in the state, according to law.

The tax is then distributed to each county and the municipalities within that county in proportion to the amount of ad valorem taxes levied by each. The special allocations to each county are distributed in the same manner.

Banks said Greenville received $285,710, while Farmville received $30,926, and Ayden received $14,906.

Other Pitt towns included: Winterville, $7,290; Bethel, $7,070; Grifton (Pitt's share), $9,979; Fountain, $1,687; Grimesland, $1,144; Simpson, $1,118, and Falkland, $267.

The county itself received $787,406.

Greene County received $120,758 in net distributions with the county itself receiving $101,688 and the balance shared by Snow Hill, $7,291; Hookerton, $1,398, and Walstonburg, $$379.

Lenoir County received $$855,313 with $627,553 going to the county and the rest distributed to Kinston, $210,598, La Grange, $12,523, Pink Hill, $4,180, and Grifton (Lenoir's share), $456.

Martin County received $235,822 with $193,763 designated for the county and the balance allotted to nine towns. Receiving shares were: Williamston, $28,746; Robersonville, $9,715; Jamesville, $1,268; Oak City, $839; Hamilton, $682; Everetts, $272; Parmele, $342; Bear Grass, $119, and Hassell, $72.

Beaufort County totals included $501,409 in distributions with $394,802 allotted to the county itself. Seven towns shared in the balance, including Washington, $85,910; Belhave, $10,455; Aurora, $2,823; Chocowinity, $3,672; Washington Park, $1,963; Bath, $1,046, and Pantego, $744.

Ads Boost Sales

here," he said. "That's part of what we're trying to with our strategies in marketing and advertising. With everything we do, we're trying to reach eastern North Carolina. We've had a lot of support in the area."

While the promotions are aired in time for football season, planning begins in the winter, according to Workman.

"We got started on this back in December," he said. "We produce the spots right after the pigout, get them dubbed and get them out. It's a tight schedule, but it's something we're used to and we plan for it.

"We sit down and structure our plans for the year back in the winter time, and it's a campaign that we set up for Pirate Club and season tickets as well. We create strategies for our campaign, and from there we start coming up with creative ideas."

Creativity is a key element when trying to promote a team coming off three consecutive 2-9 seasons, Workman said.

"It is easier to do a winning team, but we've got a program that we can sell," he said. "We're not just selling or trying to sell or promote 11 games on the field and winning and losing. We're trying to sell our program and what we're trying to do.

"Football is more than just the game. It's tailgating and it's the marching band, it's the cheerleaders, it's a collegiate atmosphere so to speak. It is something you can come out and bring your family to and have a good time. It's a social event and our people enjoy that, and they come out and want to be a part of that. It's not just winning and losing, it's a program."

Even though you've been gone nearly nine months now, you live on every day in our hearts. And on this, what would have been your fortieth birthday, we remember even in our continuing grief to thank God for allowing us to live, love, laugh and share those precious years with you. And as we promised you on your thirty-ninth and because you do live on with us and because we love you and we miss you so much.....

Granted, it isn't the cheeriest of subjects. But, considering the benefits it offers, funeral prearrangement does merit just a little attention.

The puzzling thing is why so many people carefully avoid even thinking about it. The fact is, prearrangement takes very little time. Moreover, funeral prearrangement makes matters infinitely more simple for family and friends in the long run. And ultimately, it's your responsibility—yours alone.

So take off your blinders. Call us at S.G. Wilkerson & Sons to arrange a private consultation.

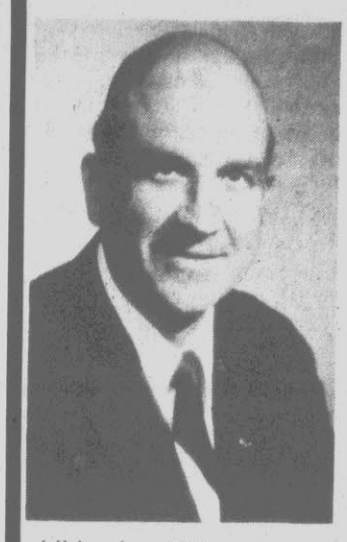
TO THE CITIZENS OF PITT AND GREENE COUNTIES



The 1987 Session of the N.C. General Assembly recently adjourned. It was a session filled with tough decisions, hard work, and very long hours. But, the effort was worth the reward. As Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee on Education, I worked hard to bring back to our district what we deserve. I was extremely pleased with the results. The funds our district will receive will help to strengthen and improve many important institutions and organizations; including our children's public schools, the Community College, and the University. If you have any questions about the 1987 Legislative Session, or if I can be of assistance to you in some other way, please call. Thank you for your interest and support during this past session. I look forward to working for you in the future.

Reagan Says Arms Pact Near

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan said Saturday the United States and the Soviet Union are "close to an agreement" on the elimination of intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

Reagan said that while he's optimistic about chances of a superpower accord on these ground-launched missiles, it's also a "particularly good time" for the Soviets to renounce military adventurism around the world.

"They can stop helping the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua subvert their neighbors," Reagan said in his weekly radio address to the nation, delivered from the president's penthouse suite at the Century Plaza Hotel.

"If the world is to know true peace," he said, "the Soviets must give up these military adventures."

Reagan said he had proposed the global elimination of intermediate-range missiles, and said, "Today, we're close to an agreement with the Soviets to do just that."

Delivering the Democratic Party response, Sen. Carl Levin of Michigan also spoke of the Intermediate-range Nuclear Force issue, saying, "President Reagan should be commended for his efforts to achieve a verifiable INF treaty, and I hope such an agreement can be concluded in the weeks ahead."

"But while this INF step is an important one, it is also a small one," Levin added. "Keep in mind that the superpowers together have over 50,000 nuclear warheads. The INF agreement would eliminate only about 4 percent of that total."

"The bottom line is this: with or without an INF agreement, the superpower nuclear arms race will continue," he said.

There has been heavy speculation about a new summit between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in the wake of West Germany's announcement that it was willing to destroy its 72 Pershing 1A missiles and an offer by U.S. negotiators in Geneva to simplify the means by which the United States and the Soviet Union verify each other's compliance with an INF accord.

Chief U.S. arms negotiator Max Kampelman, in an interview taped for the syndicated television show, "John McLaughlin: One on One," voiced optimism that the two sides might be able to reach agreement on a 50 percent reduction in long-range, or strategic, weapons, by year's end.

Report Of Killings Proves False

RATHDRUM, Idaho (AP) — Heavily armed police staged a dawn raid Saturday on a remote northern Idaho house after a man reported seeing many bodies, but no bodies were found and the man was hit with a drug charge.

The owner of the house, a woman last seen with the man who reported the bodies, was missing and was being sought for questioning in the bizarre incident, Kootenai County Prosecutor Glen Walker said.

Walker also said police were seeking a man the witness claimed he saw dead, with an arrow sticking out of his chest, in the wooded area near Twin Lakes.

"Something happened at that property," Walker said. But he added that no evidence was found that would indicate a struggle or shooting took place.

Walker said additional charges of filing a false report could be filed against George William Lane. The drug charge stemmed from small amounts of cocaine and marijuana found on him at the Kootenai County Jail after he told deputies his story.

Authorities controlled a total area of about 20 square miles during the night before the raid by 70 to 80 deputies and state police, armed with rifles and shotguns. Some FBI agents were also on hand, said Sheriff's Lt. John Smith.

No residents of the rural area were evacuated, but some weren't allowed to pass road blocks to go home, authorities said. All roads were reopened after the raid.

Before police moved in and found no bodies, Kootenai County Sheriff's Sgt. Gary Anderson had said: "The information we've gotten indicates we have a very dangerous and volatile situation."

Lane told deputies that he and Sally Huston, owner of the house, heard shooting outside Friday and that he "hit the floor" while Ms. Huston fled, Walker said.

"There is no indication the gunfight occurred, but she's missing," Walker said. "Until we get her, we don't know what happened."

Walker said Lane also was with Ms. Huston when she told three friends that she had seen about 20 "biker types" wearing camouflage fatigues and carrying rifles on her property.

Thefts Reported

The Greenville Police Department said investigations were continuing Saturday on eight incidents that occurred Friday.

Officer D.R. Wyrick said the attempted theft of a car valued at $14,000 from a fenced in area in the parking lot of Nichols Department store belonging to Brown and Wood Pontiac was reported at 7:23 a.m. Wyrick said the car was driven through the fence, causing $400 damage to the gate and $3,500 in damages to the car.

Officer E.M. Haddock said a breaking, entering and larceny was at Apt. 7, 106 Ash St. in Tar River Estates was reported at 1:10 p.m. Haddock said a microwave oven valued at $100 was taken.

Haddock also said the theft of a men's 10 speed bike from the same apartment was reported at 2 p.m.

Officer E.E. Lauginghouse said the larceny of a payroll check for $538 from 508 W. 5th St. was reported at 2:09 p.m.

Officer J.G. Jenkins said the theft of lumber from a house under construction at 2009 E. 4th St. was reported at 7:40 p.m.

Officer J.E. Woolard said the theft of curtains pictures from a residence at 1610-B W. 3rd St. was reported at 7:39 p.m.

Officer J.W. Isenhour said the larceny of $5 in cash and a paycheck for $187.15 from a purse at 612-B W. 14th St. was reported at 7:44 p.m.

Officer C.S. Candler said the theft of a briefcase worth $35 from a vehicle at the Sheraton was reported at 11:13 p.m.

UNC Board, Martin Aides Criticize Solons

By The Associated Press

Three members of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors have criticized legislators for their penchant to appropriate money for their favorite projects, while the Martin administration has launched an attack over economic development programs.

The board members say the lawmakers' appropriations for such projects threatened to undercut the UNC system's planning and budgeting process. William Johnson, a Lillington attorney who chaired the Board of Governors from 1976 until 1980, suggested at a board meeting Friday that the panel should consider "working with members of the General Assembly" to stem the practice of lawmakers skirting UNC's budget.

"There is an increasing trend for the General Assembly to make appropriations for matters which the board has not seen fit to include in its budget request," Johnson said. "This is a practice which, if it increases, is going to undermine the budgeting process of the Board of Governors. I think it's something we need to look at seriously."

This summer, lawmakers approved $3.3 million in planning funds, all earmarked to lay groundwork for eight projects proposed by influential legislators. None of the projects has been suggested by the Board of Governors, and none was proposed for the system's five historically black institutions.

Former Gov. Jim Holshouser said he recalled vividly why the Board of Governors was created and charged with developing a system-wide budget request.

"I know the thinking that went into the policy," Holshouser said. "It was generated in effect to avoid some of the problems we had in the '60s."

Holshouser said a unified budget request coming directly from the Board of Governors was "sound public policy."

"We certainly wouldn't want to have the campuses fighting each other," Holshouser said.

C.D. Spangler Jr., UNC system president, said he thought formal action opposing lawmakers' special budget requests was unnecessary.

"The message has been properly conveyed," Spangler said, adding that he didn't expect the trend to continue.

Meanwhile, the Martin administration criticized the legislature for its failure to make the state's part-time representative in Japan a full-time position. It also chided lawmakers for failing to put a regional businessindustry development office in the northeast portion of the state, and for failing to add staff in existing regional offices.

Twice in the last week, the state Commerce Department issued statements highly critical of the legislature for not funding various projects being sought by the Martin administration.

"Unfortunately, while they gave us a few new tools for helping rural areas get steady growth, they didn't do much for our programs designed to put new jobs in the pipeline," said Jim Broyhill, the former U.S. Senator who chairs the state Economic Development Board, in a prepared statement.

In the second statement, Commerce Secretary Claude Pope took aim at lawmakers for not adding $450,000 to the budget for upgrading the Japanese office. The decision, he said, "means that our state will be under-represented in the competition for the investments that lie ahead.

Ken Eudy, executive director of the state Democratic party said it is "beyond belief that we would be criticized by this do-nothing administration on industrial recruiting. ... Luther Hodges invented industrial recruiting in the 1950s and Democrats have been the champions of it ever since."

Rep. Al Lineberry Sr., D-Guilford, chairman of the House Economic Growth Committee and a member of the state Economic Development Board, said he was surprised at the criticism given that many of Martin's ideas landed in the state's budget for economic development.

"I think we unleashed some tools for economic growth, especially in rural counties, but also urban ones," Lineberry said."

Employers Face Tuesday Deadline For Filing Forms On Alien Workers

By The Associated Press

Immigration officials and agencies working with a federal amnesty program for illegal aliens are busy as their initial deadline of Sept. 1 approaches.

On that date, all employers who hire someone — from domestic help to factory workers or farm laborers — on a regular basis, must file an I-9 form affirming that every effort has been made to determine the employee is legally entitled to work in the United States.

"Things are really picking up," said Nina Lorch, legalization coordinator for Telamon Corp., a nonprofit corporation that works with farm workers in Raleigh.

"We're sending a busload of people up to Charlotte on Monday," she said.

Rob Brown of the legalization office of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in Charlotte, said registrations have been slow since the office opened on May 5, but he adds that business now is booming.

"We have got a room full of folks," Brown said in a telephone interview with the Greensboro News and Record. "As of yesterday, we had registered a total of 1,648 people. Over the past couple of weeks, an excess of 40 people a day would be average."

Greensboro attorney Manlin Chee said she has taken so many illegal aliens to Charlotte to register under the government's amnesty program that immigration officials are returning the favor. Next Wednesday, agency representatives are coming to her Greensboro office to register more than 20 people who have hired her to help them get through the law without difficulty.

"I used to go down there with a large group and tie things up," Ms. Chee said.

Under the new law, illegal aliens who meet amnesty requirements and have resided here continuously since Jan. 1, 1982, have until May 4, 1988, to apply for legal status as temporary residents. That status could lead to permanent residency.

Agricultural workers who have worked at least 90 days in the United States between May 1, 1985, and May 1, 1986, or who worked for 90 days in each of the three years beginning May 1, 1983, have until Nov. 30, 1988, to register.

Because candidates for the amnesty program are in this country illegally, officials have no accurate estimate of their numbers. Predictions for the Carolinas range from 10,000 to 50,000.

Janet Proctor, immigration coordinator for Lutheran Family Services in Greensboro, told the newspaper that her agency has helped about 175 illegal aliens since May 5, and about 20 to 25 people this week. About 80 percent of them worked on tobacco farms, Ms. Proctor said.

Ms. Chee estimates she has advised about 100 clients who paid her to help them assemble required medical, employment and residence reports and documentation proving they are not in trouble with the law.

Restrictions Tighter On Driver's Licenses

RALEIGH (AP) — Tighter restrictions have been placed on aliens seeking their driver's license in North Carolina, and officials at the Division of Motor Vehicles say the move is being made out of safety concerns.

Because of a new law which makes English the official language of the state, DMV tightened its identification requirements for aliens and suspended driver's license tests administered in Spanish and Korean.

The division plans to reinstate the foreign language tests on Sept. 1, but some of its testing centers already have resumed giving the exams.

DMV said it is concerned that drivers who don't understand English and perhaps cannot read road signs could be dangerous. And, after agreeing in May to allow illegal aliens to take driver's license tests, it is getting stricter on what identification it accepts before allowing them to take the test.

"We are not trying to be tough on these people or give them a hard time," DMV deputy commissioner Robert Hodges said in an interview. "If they can drive safely, we have no problems with that. All we are looking for is to make sure that it is not a fraudulent ID. Usually, we would want someone there to identify them to add some credibility."

Chris Weedy, a Raleigh volunteer who is helping two aliens in their quest to attain their license, claims DMV is looking for any way to deny licenses to citizens who don't speak English.

"First they said they were illegal aliens," Ms. Weedy said. "Then they said they had to learn English. Now they say they are unsafe drivers. The bottom line is they don't want them to get their drivers' licenses."

The two passed their eye examinations and visual tests but failed the written portion of the test

IN THE STATE

AIDS Victims

GREENSBORO (AP) — The founder of a black AIDS awareness group in Wilmington said the disease is striking more blacks, younger people and women, and he blames drug abuse, the lack of education and inadequate health care for the problem.

Speaking at a statewide conference on AIDS education and prevention in Greensboro, Fred McRee said if the problem isn't stemmed in the black community, "we will cease to be a problem to anybody in this country."

McRee emphasized at the conference that AIDS is particularly dangerous to blacks.

"It is hitting a group that America cares less about," he said. "It cannot defend itself."

Briefs Filed

DURHAM (AP) — State officials have asked Durham County Superior Court to dismiss a lawsuit filed against them by a woman who claims she was fired from the Alcohol Rehabilitation Center in Butner for reporting possible patient abuse.

The suit was filed in May by Jeanne M. Lenzer, who claimed there was a coverup of alleged sexual exploitation of patients at the Alcohol Rehabilitation Center. She said in the suit that a health-care technician at the center might be channeling patients into prostitution, and that she had reported this to the State Bureau of Investigation.

The motion to dismiss contends that the Superior Court lacks jurisdiction over the defendants, that the court lacks jurisdiction over the subject matter of Ms. Lenzer's complaint and that the lawsuit "fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted."

Lead Paint

MOUNT AIRY, N.C. (AP) — Health officials have discovered high levels of lead paint in samples taken from a city water tank on a Mount Airy street that was sandblasted for two days last week.

Wallace Venrick, the head of the state Water Supply Branch, said his department found that samples of the paint contained 16.8 percent lead by dry weight.

Charlene Wiggins, a lead epidemiologist with the state Division of Health Services, said that a lead content of 1 percent or more is considered dangerous to children. She said she will take samples Monday to find out if any soil is contaminated with lead.

Move Considered

GREENSBORO (AP) — The North Carolina affiliate of the American Civil Liberties Union will consider a proposal at its next meeting to move the organization from its headquarters in Greensboro to Raleigh.

Jim Shields, the new executive director of the state ACLU chapter, said the group could be more effective in Raleigh because it would have easier access to the General Assembly, the capital press corps and lobbying groups.

The proposal to move the group will be considered at a three-day meeting starting on Oct. 23 in Blowing Rock. There are 35 members of the board, most of whom are elected at large by the membership.

Boy Drowns

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A little boy for whom search parties had searched 20 hours was found dead Friday at the bottom of a neighbor's swimming pool only 75 feet from his grandmother's house, where he was last seen alive.

The body of 4-year-old Antwaun Nordell Simpson, the son of Tangela Simpson, was found in a small swimming pool at a house across the street from the home of Mildred Blackwell, the boy's grandmother.

The body was found by a neighborhood child who was swimming in the pool Friday afternoon.

Murder Sentence

KENANSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Bonnie Sue Clark was sentenced to life in prison Friday in the murder of her estranged husband.

Mrs. Clark, 26, was convicted Tuesday of first-degree murder and conspiracy for the Feb. 1 murder of 34-year-old Glennie Clark, a Marine staff sergeant at Camp Lejeune.

The same jury decided Friday to sentence her to life in prison, instead of a death penalty, which was requested by District Attorney William Andrews and Assistant District Attorney Dewey Hudson.

Robert Bacon Jr., 27, was sentenced to death in June after a jury in Onslow County Superior Court convicted him of murder and conspiracy in the case.

Holiday Deaths

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The North Carolina State Motor Club predicts 14 people will be killed on state roads during the 78-hour Labor Day weekend, down from a 1986 death toll of 23 for the same period.

John Frazier III, president of the club, said he expects this year's decline in highway deaths to continue despite the recent increase in the speed limit on some interstate highways to 65 mph.

Infection Study

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Premature infants hospitalized in Winston-Salem can be enrolled in a nationwide study examining a way to reduce infections, according to a pediatrician at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

In the study, pediatricians and neonatologists at the school are evaluating the use of gamma globulin to reduce the wide variety of infections that plague premature babies.

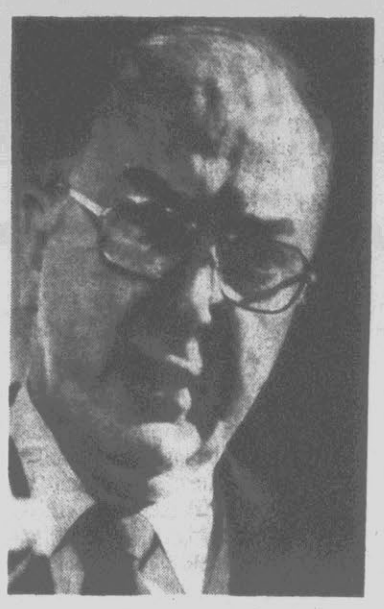
Premature babies in the nurseries at Forsyth Memorial and Baptist hospitals will be enrolled in the study. The infants will randomly be assigned so that half get gamma globulin and half get a preparation that looks the same, but contains no antibodies.

Plants Found

RALEIGH (AP) — The hot, dry weather across the state last week has helped the State Bureau of Investigation find thousands of illegal marijuana plants in four counties, SBI deputy director Charles Dunn said Friday.

Since the first of the year, Dunn said more than 50,000 plants have been discovered and destroyed and 80 growers arrested.

Law enforcement agents confiscated plants in Granville, Wake, Caldwell and Harnett counties last week, Dunn said. A National Guard helicopter discovered 420 10-foot plants in Harnett County on Thursday.



SEN. JESSE HELMS

Helms Says He Wants Ban Lifted

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said Saturday he will fight for repeal of U.S. sanctions against South Africa, which he claims have cost the country jobs and heightened political tensions.

Helms, who completed a seven-day visit to South Africa on Saturday, was was a leading opponent of the bill, which was passed last October over President Reagan's veto.

"I have not found one soul of any race who favors the continuation of sanctions," Helms told reporters at news conference. "I am now persuaded that sanctions have had only one beneficial effect: they have virtually united the people of South Africa in indignation against them."

Helms said he met with President P.W. Botha and numerous South African farmers and agricultural officials during his visit, but declined to answer questions on the nature of the talks.

The senator also said he met with black leaders and opposition figures, but he refused to give any names other than that of Soweto's Mayor Nelson Botile.

Helms said the sanctions "have destroyed jobs at a time when this country needs very much to create jobs."

The senator added, "The United States is not going to accomplish anything with measures like sanction that exacerbate tensions."

The sanctions bill imposed a ban on the importation of South African agricultural products as well as coal, steel, iron, uranium, and textiles. The measure also banned direct air links between the two countries.

Reagan is to report to the Congress by Oct. 2 on the effect of sanctions.

In 1664, the Dutch surrendered New Amsterdam to the British, who renamed it New York.

Study Finds Ministers Have Efficient Anti-Burnout Plan

GOLDSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Because of strong support systems, ministers are less likely to suffer burnout than are people in other professions, according to a study by the Rev. Dr. Ned D. Sauls.

Sauls, a part-time minister with the Disciples of Christ Christian Church in Oak City and an instructor in the Wayne Community College Human Services Department, recently finished his master's degree in the Marriage and Therapy program at East Carolina University. His thesis examined the effect ministers' support systems play in helping them avoid burnout.

The systems are family, friends, and groups within the profession.

During his research for his thesis, Sauls found that few studies have been done on the subect of ministerial burnout.

He said he thought the dearth of information on the issue was due to the perception that members of congregations and ministers themselves have about the ministry.

Ministers are doing the work of God, and thus, there is a feeling they should be able to handle large work loads better than people in other professions, he said.

"To admit burnout is (viewed as) a sign of failure," Sauls said.

Regardless of this perception, however, ministers are human beings with demanding jobs and some do experience times when they are emotionally exhausted.

Exhaustion can be seen when someone becomes emotionally overinvolved, overextended or overwhelmed by the demands imposed by others, he said.

"Emotional exhaustion comes as a result of over-commitment and failure to keep a balanced focus on relationships and personal needs," Sauls said. "Therefore, family life is not over-nurtured by those who overinvest themselves in helping others."

The burnout syndrome is a process that begins with excessive and prolonged levels of job stress which produce strain, resulting in tension, irritability and fatigue, he said. It can progress to the point where workers detach themselves from the job psychologically and become apathetic, cynical or rigid. Family relationships can suffer when someone reaches this point, as can the individual's health.

The ministry is a stressful job. Pastors work long hours without seeing immediate results and sometimes experience financial stress brought on by low salaries, Sauls said.

Unconcerned membership and the loss of loved congregation members through death also bring on stress.

In his research, Sauls found that, while much is expected of ministers, their support systems prevent some of them from suffering burnout.

His study also showed that most ministers are satisfied with their jobs and that, socially, most have reliable friends.

Death Penalty Foes Note 'Killing Summer'

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The pace of executions in the United States is quickening gradually, but the death of three condemned men on the same day last week does not signal a coming blood bath, death penalty opponents say.

"It's a blip in a steadily rising curve," said Henry Schwarzschild of the American Civil Liberties Union. "I don't think it's the beginning of a blood bath. But we will have more and more."

Schwarzschild said he would not be suprised if the number of yearly executions one day duplicates the mid-1930s when death row inmates were being killed at a record pace in the nation.

There were 199 executions in America in 1935, the largest annual total in the nation's history.

With the three executions that took place Friday, there have been 22 in 1987 and four months remain in the year. The previous high for any year since the Supreme Court reinstated capital punishment in 1976 was 21 in 1984.

The execution of three men in one day may attract public attention, but lately enforcement of the death penalty has become routine and has been relegated to the back pages of the newspapers and brief mention on national news broadcasts.

Leigh Dingerson, head of the National Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty, says the increasing pace of executions may awaken public concern.

"It's been a very killing summer," she said, predicting that public opinion in time will shift and opposition to capital punishment will grow.

As the rate increases, she said, "People will be more and more informed. When they learn about it, they will not support it."

She added that last Friday's events are not a harbinger of a sudden, dramatic rise in executions.

"We're angry and outraged. But three in one day is more a coincidence than anything else," she said.

Beauford White, who stood guard while six people were shot to death in a robbery, was electrocuted in Florida; Wayne Eugene Ritter, convicted in the killing of a pawnbroker, died in Alabama's electric chair; and Pierre Dale Selby, convicted in the torture-murders of three people during a robbery, died from a lethal injection in Utah.

Helping to trigger the upsurge in executions is a key Supreme Court ruling last April that said death penalty laws can be valid even if statistics indicate they are enforced in racially biased ways.

The 5-4 ruling upheld Georgia's death penalty system despite the fact that killers of white people in that state are far more likely to be sentenced to death than killers of blacks.

Many executions had been delayed pending that decision.

There are 1,900 men and women on death rows nationwide and some 250 more are sentenced to death each year.

Reducing the death row population significantly would entail a shocking increase in the rate of executions, death penalty opponents say.

David I. Bruck, a Columbia, S.C., lawyer who has represented many sentenced to die, said the growing backlog is not likely to be eliminated.

"You could execute someone every day of the week, including Sundays, Christmas, New Year's Day and Easter and you still couldn't do it by the end of the century," he said.

Bruck and others like him say they are counting on a change in public opinion and enlightened political leadership — not the courts — to reverse the trend in the execution rate.

"Eventually the United States will get back on the course with other democratic countries," he said. He said only South Africa, where racial separatism is official government policy, parallels the U.S. execution rate.

"I don't believe the United States has regressed to the point that executions will be as routine here as in South Africa," he said.

Ms. Dingerson said that if President Reagan's Supreme Court nominee Robert H. Bork is confirmed by the Senate it is not going to mean a reversal in the Supreme Court's endorsement of capital punishment.

The man Bork would replace, retired Justice Lewis F. Powell, generally voted with the majority in upholding state death penalty laws.

The court in 1972 struck down the death penalty nationwide on grounds it was administered arbitrarily and capriciously. But four years later, the justices reinstated capital punishment by upholding state laws the court said passed constitutional muster.

Since then the court has done considerable fine tuning, but generally endorsing the proposition that death can be a constitutional punishment if the process is carried out with safeguards and some precision.

Opponents of capital punishment assert the nation is passing through a phase of increased executions that will point up fallacies in the system.

"People support it now because they don't believe the system can be trusted to keep violent criminals behind bars," said Bruck.

But, he continued, "The more people you execute, the more mistakes you make." He said when retarded persons, juveniles and even some later found to be innocent are put to death, the nation will recoil from capital punishment.

Washington Mayor Says He Could Win

WASHINGTON (AP) — District of Columbia Mayor Marion Barry Jr. says a long-running investigation into his administration involving allegations of corruption, drugs and sex has affected his public standing — but not enough to cost him an election.

"Obviously, it has affected the public's perception temporarily. But in terms of my electability, regardless of what may be going on now, if I were to run for mayor tomorrow morning, it's my analysis I could beat anybody who would run in this town," Barry said in an interview last week.

Barry, a Democrat who was elected to a third four-year term last fall, has taken the offensive against U.S. Attorney Joseph diGenova since a federal investigation into alleged corruption in city contracting was revealed in May. He said the prosecutor was trying to convict him in the news media through calculated leaks.

News reports prompted Barry to file a lawsuit accusing federal prosecutors of misconduct for allegedly leaking information about the investigation. In a friend of the court brief, the National Black Leadership Roundtable and five other national black organizations contended the investigation is part of larger national pattern of attempts to discredit black leadership.

The brief said the investigation reflected a wider "policy and practice of wresting black political power by trying black politicians in the newspapers rather than in the courts."

The U.S. Attorney's office denied the allegations, and the suit was dismissed by Chief U.S. District Judge Aubrey E. Robinson Jr. in July. The dismissal is on appeal.

In an affadavit filed with the suit, Barry had said "the confidence of the public, and of the financial and commercial communities in this government has been shaken..."

Barry, a black 1960s street activist and civil rights worker who rose through the city's political ranks to be elected mayor in 1978, has repeatedly said he is not a target of any investigation.

No one has been charged in the investigation, which is examining possible violations of racketeering, obstruction of justice and bribery laws. Subpoenas for information and documents have been issued to 14 city agencies or officials.

Investigators are trying to determine whether the awarding of contracts was illegally influenced.

In addition, a federal grand jury has subpoened financial records of Barry's 1986 campaign. And records for the mayor's travel and ceremonial funds were requested last year.

According to news reports, an FBI clerk identified as Deitrice Young resigned recently while the agency determines whether confidential information about the contracting investigation was leaked to associates of the mayor by her or another employee.

However, The Washington Post reported that sources indicated neither of the two employees is expected to be prosecuted because of insufficient evidence, and no one has been charged.

Also, the FBI is investigating allegations that police officers stole drugs and money during raids, according to The Washington Post.

The FBI has declined comment. Police Chief Maurice Turner criticized the publication of "vague allegations." He said the department is vigorous in investigations and that "no blue veil of protection exists that would shield wrongdoers within our own ranks."

Barry has referred to the manner in which the contracting probe is being conducted as "Mickey Mouse" and "theatrics" that are the price the District of Columbia pays for having limited self-government.

Congress To Mail Books On AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 7 million U.S. households will soon receive a detailed government booklet on AIDS following a dispute between the Reagan administration and Congress over whether the pamphlets should be mass mailed.

But most Americans still will not get the 36-page report prepared by Surgeon General C. Everett Koop unless they request it.

The Reagan administration is contemplating mailing facts on the deadly disease to all citizens but has said it does not want to use Koop's pamphlet because it is too long and detailed.

Members of Congress, however, can request copies of the report for each household in their districts and mail it free to constituents with their congressional mailing privileges. The report costs the government 12.5 cents a copy to produce.

Twenty-four lawmakers from 13 states and the Virgin Islands have asked for enough booklets so they can conduct district-wide mailings, according to Steven C. Schwadron, an aide to Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass. Public Health Service officials said nearly 7 million copies have been requested from lawmakers at a cost of about $875,000.

"Fear about AIDS has spread even faster than the disease itself," said Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn, who is mailing the pamphlet to the 226,000 households in his district. "Right now the only way to control the fear, and to control this deadly epidemic, is through education. The surgeon general's report provides the comprehensive, frank and simple information needed to achieve that goal."

Brothers Exposed To AIDS Leaving Florida County After Home Burns

By PAT LEISNER
Associated Press Writer

ARCADIA, Fla. (AP) — A mother whose three sons have been exposed to the AIDS virus said Saturday that the boys would be withdrawn from school and that the family would leave DeSoto County after a suspicious fire gutted their home.

"I will not go back," Louise Ray said Saturday in a telephone interview from her attorney's office in Sarasota. "The kids are not going back to school there because next time I might not be so lucky and my kids cannot be replaced.

"I never thought it would go this far," she said.

The fire Friday night that destroyed their wood-frame home capped a week of bomb and death threats and a boycott of the elementary school where the boys returned last week to their classes.

Officials termed the fire suspicious and are investigating.

"All we have are the clothes we have on," Mrs. Ray said. "I don't know where we'll go or what we'll do. We'll go into seclusion for a few days. The only thing I do know is that we will not move back into DeSoto County."

Mrs. Ray, her husband, Clifford, and their children — Ricky, 10, Robert, 9, Randy, 8, and Candy, 6 — weren't home when the fire erupted.

The boys' uncle, Andy Ray, 27, was asleep in a bedroom at the time but escaped. He was released from DeSoto Memorial Hospital on Saturday after treatment for smoke inhalation.

James Smithers, a friend of Andy Ray, said he arrived at the Ray home to find flames and smoke. He could smell gasoline, he said. Smithers said he ran through the front door and into Ray's bedroom and helped Ray out of the house.

The investigation was turned over to the state fire marshal's office, said DeSoto County authorities. "It's a suspicious fire," Sheriff Joe Varnadore said Saturday. "It burned the house very fast. ... It looks like they lost everything."

"From our observation it appeared the fire started from inside," said sheriff's Maj. Vernon Keen. "There was no indication of gasoline but that's why an investigation is being done by the fire marshal."

The fire, which started in the utility room of the three-bedroom house, was definitely not started by a firebomb, Armond Summerall, DeSoto public safety director, said Saturday.

However, he said, "'We're not ruling out anything. We're looking at arson, we're looking at accidental."

Although Summerall said he had his own theories about what happened, he said, "This is so sensitive a situation here I'm not about to make a statement until we know all the facts from the laboratory."

The Ray boys were barred from Memorial Elementary last fall after they tested positive for antibodies to the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome. They are hemophiliacs and are believed to have been exposed to AIDS through a blood factor they take to make their blood clot if they are injured.

They show no symptoms of the deadly disease, which attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to infectious diseases and various forms of cancer.

A federal judge ordered the boys reinstated in school, prompting angry protests from frightened parents and a boycott when classes began last Monday.

While a deputy guarded the house Saturday, the Rays were being settled in an undisclosed place outside the county by their attorney, Judith Kavanaugh.

"What little these people had is gone," Ms. Kavanaugh said. "I'm just glad nobody was killed. I'm outraged."

She faulted the DeSoto School Board for not working to calm hysteria in this rural community.

"The School Board provides a forum for the people in Arcadia to get together, and it has not done so. It's pure hysteria and nobody is doing anything to stop it," she said, adding that a relief fund was started Saturday for the Rays.

Bomb threats disrupted classes at Memorial Elementary on Tuesday and Wednesday, forcing temporary evacuations. No bombs were found.

A week ago, the family received four threatening phone calls at home. One caller said the children would die and another threatened to burn the house, said Ms. Kavanaugh.

But the boys went to school. At first, Randy moped around the school yard alone while classmates played, Mrs. Ray said in an interview Friday.

Later, some other children played with Randy, she said.

Before Friday's fire, protesting parents had ended a boycott that kept classrooms half-empty, said Janet Tew, whose husband, Danny, is president of Citizens Against AIDS in School.

"Every one of us is sending our kids to school Monday. We don't like it but we don't want the school or our kids to suffer," said Mrs. Tew.

Of the fire, she said Saturday, "We're all level-headed, everyday normal people. We don't do something like this when we don't get what we want. We don't want the Rays to leave Arcadia."

She added, "If it turns out someone local did it, I'll have to eat my words."

A tornado that blasted towns in Ohio and Pennsylvania in May 1985 carried winds estimated at 260 mph or more.

ARCHIE CAMPBELL

Humorist Campbell Passes

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country humorist Archie Campbell, a cigar-puffing comic whose career spanned 50 years on stage, radio and television, especially on the long-running "Hee Haw," died early Saturday at the age of 72.

"You hate to see the laughter die," said Sarah Cannon, better known as Minnie Pearl, a comedian who worked with Campbell on "Hee Haw."

"He was a kind and thoughtful comic," she said. "Some people just play slapstick, but Archie thought about what he was doing."

Campbell, who also had appeared on the Grand Ole Opry since 1959, died of complications from a heart attack he suffered June 15, said Lisa McNeal, spokeswoman for the University of Tennessee Memorial Research Center and Hospital.

Campbell's condition had improved since undergoing surgery to help circulation in two heart arteries, but was downgraded to critical Friday because of kidney failure, Ms. NcNeal said.

The entertainer began his career more than 50 years ago, helping to create the Tennessee Barn Dance radio show during the 1930s. The live music broadcast also helped launch the careers of such country entertainers as Chet Atkins and Kitty Wells.

Campbell joined "Hee Haw" in 1969 for what was to be a three-day stint when the show first aired on network television. But he stayed on, appearing in such roles as a doctor, a barber or a judge. "Hee Haw" is still being produced in syndication.

Campbell was honored in 1984 at the Grand Ole Opry with a three-layer triple anniversary cake to mark 25 years on the Opry roster, 50 years in show business and his 70th birthday.

Campbell is survived by his wife, Mary, and two sons.

Shuttle Testing Planned

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah (AP) — The first full-scale test firing of the redesigned space shuttle booster rocket, delayed three times by equipment failures, has been tentatively rescheduled for Sunday, officials said.

Engineers from Morton Thiokol Inc. and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration planned to spend most of Saturday checking and repairing test equipment that malfunctioned three times Thursday.

A final decision on scheduling the test at Morton Thiokol's northern Utah facilities near here was to be made late Saturday, officials said.

In a joint statement, NASA and Morton Thiokol officials said engineers wanted to be satisfied that "all problems identified (Thursday) are fully understood and have been resolved" before firmly setting the test-firing time.

NASA officials hope the new design of the solid fuel boosters has eliminated the flaws that destroyed the space shuttle Challenger and killed its seven crewmembers on Jan. 28, 1986.

NASA needs a successful test of the booster to clear the way for the nation's space shuttle fleet to resume flying next June. Before the rocket is certified for flight, officials have decided it must be test-fired at least four times on the ground.

Richard Truly, NASA's chief of space flight, has said the schedule leading to a launch was flexible enough to accommodate last week's delay.

A broken water main halted the first countdown 10 seconds before ignition Thursday. Water was to have been used to cool the rocket casing after it was fired.

The second countdown ended three minutes from ignition when a computer detected instrument readings that NASA booster program director John Thomas said "looked strange to us."

Crewmen Indicted In Shrimp Mutiny

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Two shrimp boat crewmen were indicted on charges of murder and mutiny on the high seas after a shipboard attack that left the captain presumed dead and the first mate swimming in shark-infested waters.

The case will result in what is believed to be the first civilian mutiny trial in the United States since World War II, according to federal prosecutors. No arraignment date has been set, but a hearing is expected later this week.

"We can't remember any other cases of mutiny" since World War II, said John Russell, a spokesman for the U.S. Justice Department in Washington.

A federal grand jury Friday charged Billy Gossett Jr., 22, and William Leroy Rector, 21, with murder, attempted murder, conspiracy to commit mutiny, mutiny and assault with intent to commit a felony.

Although Florida has a death penalty statute, the federal charges carry a possible maximum penalty of life in prison because there is no U.S. capital punishment law. The men also face prison terms of up to 45 years and fines of up to $15,000 each, if convicted.

They are being held without bail in the Seminole County Jail.

The pair is accused of taking control of the Tampa shrimp boat Leslie Rae about 26 miles off Port Canaveral on July 29, attacking and killing Capt. Phil Roush, 28, of Tampa and attacking first mate Willie Charpentier, 21, of Baldwin, La.

A third crew member, Maria Barnes, 18, the boat's cook, was not charged.

Roush's body has not been found. Charpentier was picked up by an Air Force helicopter, 12 hours after he said he jumped in the Atlantic Ocean to escape from the boat.

Charpentier told FBI investigators that Gossett and Rector attacked him and Roush from behind as they were repairing nets at dusk.

The attorneys for Gossett and Rector said their clients would continue to plead innocent to the charges.

Six Killed In Wreck Involving Bus For Handicapped Children

BRONSON, Fla. (AP) — Seven people remained hospitalized in critical or serious condition Saturday as federal and state authorities investigated a school bus crash that left five children and their driver dead.

A bus carrying 19 learning-disabled and handicapped children and two adult aides was hit broadside by a flatbed truck that apparently failed to heed a stop sign, according to Florida Highway Patrol trooper Theresa Allen.

"From the point of impact it appears there was no skid mark — no deceleration at all," said crash investigator Chuck Bastik.

Truck driver Scott Allen, 26, will be charged with violation of right of way from a stop intersection, state trooper Virgil Sandlin said Saturday.

Sandlin said criminal charges may result from an investigation by the state attorney's office. Allen was hospitalized with a broken leg.

Investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board in Washington were being sent to study highway conditions and the bus, said board spokesman Alan Pollock.

Killed in the accident were Benjamin Bennett, 4; Glenda Morrow, 6; Mathew Queen, 8; Tommy Thompson, 9; Charles Wilburn, 11; and Edith May Asbell, 59. All were from nearby Chiefland.

Helicopters and ambulances ferried away 17 injured victims, including the two aides and 14 children, to hospitals in the Gainesville area. Students were pinned in the mangled bus for as long as 2½ hours after the 3 p.m. accident.

Hospital officials said Saturday that 14 were still hospitalized. three in critical condition, four in serious condition and seven in good or stable condition.

Hot Heroin

RALEIGH (AP) — Unusually pure heroin has been found among samples analyzed by the State Bureau of Investigation, leading SBI officials to warn illegal drug users to be extremely careful about potential overdoses.

SBI Deputy Director Charles Dunn said drugs analyzed from 10 cases yielded concentrations ranging from 53 percent to 85 percent pure heroin. He said the average heroin on the street is 5 percent to 10 percent pure.

There have been eight heroin-related deaths in North Carolina, compared with seven in 1986.

Law Students Take 'Legalese' Out Of Style Book

By PHYLLIS MENSING
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Students at the University of Chicago law school are making a case for plain English in the lexicon of the law.

They've developed a challenger to the bible of legal writing, the Uniform System of Citation, a 224-page manual first published in 1926.

The "Bluebook," used in law offices, judges' chambers and law schools across the country, rules on everything from abbreviations to typefaces.

But the University of Chicago law students want lawyers and judges to see a different color when they check the style for legal writing.

Their 15-page draft "Maroon Book," produced late last year under the title of the University of Chicago Manual of Legal Citations, pares away pages of rules with a simple edict: Write in a clear, reasonable way.

"We haven't come close to trying to write a rule for everything," said Tom Berg, executive editor of the University of Chicago Law Review and a co-editor of the Maroon Book.

For example, the challenger chips away at the Bluebook by eliminating the requirement for Latin "signals" — italic words such as "cf." or "accord." that the Bluebook says must be used for introducing sources.

According to the Bluebook, cf. means that the "cited authority supports a proposition different from the main proposition but sufficiently analogous to lend support."

The abbreviation "accord." is "commonly used when two or more cases state or directly support the proposition but the text quotes or reflects only one ...."

"We thought this was a pretty unnatural way to have people cite cases," Berg said. "We decided it was better to let them use plain English."

It also reduces two pages of abbreviations to one, and simply advises citing the most important cases first, compared to the Bluebook, which requires that cases be cited in order, with the most recent one first.

The first working draft was published in the Law Review and was sold out in 10 days.

"We ordered an extra 1,000 reprints and they sold out, so we've ordered 2,000 more," said managing editor Diane Klotnia.

Judge Richard A. Posner of the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals wrote an introduction to the Maroon Book, arguing that the Bluebook's "excessive, unhealthy" obsession with uniformity encourages lawyers and judges to "always weasel" or "always be stuffy, boring ... sound old."

But editors of the Bluebook aren't worried.

"We don't regard the Chicago product as a serious challenge," said Adam S. Cohen, president of the Harvard Law Review. A revised Bluebook was published last summer and is selling well, at $6.50 each, he said.

The Maroon Book is infiltrating law offices around the country and even the U.S. Supreme Court has ordered copies.

Paul Gardner, a senior partner in the Los Angeles law firm of Spensley, Horn, Jubas and Lubitz, ordered 50 copies of the Maroon Book for his firm, which works with high-technology clients.

"I would say that about 90 percent of what we need on a regular basis is in the Maroon Book," Gardner said. "While the Bluebook is still useful, I find it extremely cumbersome.

"What they've done with the Maroon Book is to pull out the essence of the Bluebook and make it much easier to use."

At the Supreme Court, Frank D. Wagner, who oversees the official compilation of the judges' rulings, said he is examining the Maroon Book "for any good ideas it might contain."

But not even the respected Bluebook can order the high court justices around.

"We have our own style manual that sometimes agrees with the Harvard Bluebook and sometimes does not," Wagner said.

Maroon Book editors hope their treatise will lead to clear thinking as well as clear writing.

"We felt the time spent by legal writers and editors on technical detail was time taken away from concentration on the substance," Berg said.

Cohen argued that the Bluebook hasn't stopped people from understanding the law.

"Shakespeare had to learn grammar, but it didn't stop him from being creative," he said.

Catholics Report New Interest In Clergy As Papal Visit Nears

DETROIT (AP) — The pope's U.S. visit next month is already inspiring more interest in the priesthood in some parts of the country, according to spokesmen for several of the nation's dioceses, which are scrambling for successors to an aging clergy.

In Detroit, where Pope John Paul II will end his nine-day visit Sept. 19, a $300,000 advertising campaign to recruit new priests, launched just before the visit was announced, has been rescheduled to coincide with his appearence.

"We're trying to get out of it what we can," said the Rev. John West, archdiocese vocations director.

Using the same advertising firm, N.W. Ayer, that created widely praised ads for the U.S. military, the archdiocese has purchased radio and television spots, billboards, and full-page newspaper and magazine ads that extol the virtues of priesthood.

"We're looking to collar a few good men," reads the caption on a full-page ad featuring three clean-cut young men — one white, one black and one Hispanic.

"We're getting two or three times as many inquiries (into priesthood) than we normally would," West said. "Some aren't even Catholic."

Some dioceses say they are still reaping the benefits of the pope's 1979 visit, although interest hasn't necessarily translated into more priests.

"Within a year we doubled our number of seminarians" from 10 to 20, said the Rev. Phil Kruse, vocations director for the archdiocese of Des Moines, Iowa.

Since that initial jump, enrollment has averaged 16 students, six above normal, he said.

"That's a lot for our little rural diocese," he said, adding that new seminary students "who were in fifth and sixth grade when the pope came still make mention of it."

The Rev. Thomas Crowley, associate pastor at St. Augustine Church in Des Moines, said he decided to become a priest during the pope's October 1979 trip after witnessing an outdoor papal mass as a freshman at Creighton University.

New Rules Outlined For Abortion Clincs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Health and Human Services unveiled rules Saturday aimed at "building a high wall" between abortion clinics and federally funded family planning programs.

Under the proposed rules, outlined last month by President Reagan but described in detail for the first time Saturday, clinics that receive federal family planning funds and also offer abortions would have to provide separate entrances and exits, separate waiting and examination rooms, and maintain separate medical records and personnel systems, the department said.

Federally funded family planning centers also would be banned from having informational literature on the premises that mentions abortion as an alternative, said Nabers Cabaniss, a deputy assistant secretary for population affairs at HHS.

Abortion rights activists denounced the proposals.

The proposed rules, to be published Tuesday in the Federal Register, spell out how the department would revise Title X of the Public Health Act, which provides grants to support voluntary family planning services.

"The gist of it is, we are building a high wall of separation between Title X and abortion," Cabaniss said in a telephone interview.

Sex Holds Tiny Spot In Thoughts

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — What's on a college student's mind right now? Probably other people or a task at hand rather than sex, a new study suggests.

When researchers sampled the immediate thoughts of 39 college students and five older people through the day, they found that more than 27 percent of the thoughts concerned other people while only 1 percent concerned sex.

"This may be surprising given the large density of undergraduate students in this sample," said Eric Klinger, psychology professor at the University of Minnesota at Morris.

But the results probably hold true for college students in general, Klinger said after describing the research Friday at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association.

Men and women in the study wore beepers for an average of four days, each day in a different week. They recorded what they were thinking about at the time the beeper went off, which happened 10 to 12 times a day.

Besides other people, other top subjects for thoughts were a task at hand, which showed up in 20 percent of thoughts, and just looking at or listening to something, 14 percent of thoughts.

Problem-solving appeared in 6 percent, self-evaluation in 3 percent, telling oneself what to do in 2 percent, and sex and anger in 1 percent apiece.

The results are "a fairly solid finding," said Marlin Hoover, chairman of the psychology department at St. Xavier College in Chicago, who has done thought-sampling research.

Edward Donner, a University of Chicago researcher who has studied talented high school students with the beeper technique, said his study also found — to his surprise — that sex occupied only abou 1 percent of thoughts.

The idea that adolescents spend far more time thinking about sex probably stems from the fact that such thoughts are more emotionally charged than others, and so seem more prominent when teens are asked to recall what they've been thinking about, he said.

Iraqi Jets Strike 3 Targets As Gulf War Flares Anew

By RICHARD PYLE
Associated Press Writer

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraqi jets blasted Iranian oil installations in the Persian Gulf on Saturday and Iran swore revenge, in the first major step-up of war in the gulf since U.S. Navy warships began escort operations in mid-July.

Iran reported several people "martyred or wounded" in the air strikes and promised a "crushing response." Iraqi President Saddam Hussein vowed further attacks to destroy Iran's economic lifelines.

The Iraqi planes hit at least three targets in coordinated attacks just before noon in the northern, central and southern gulf, leaving them "with explosions erupting from them," said a war communique issued in Baghdad.

In a fourth attack about five hours later, Iraq said its jets "raided a big naval target off the Iranian coast, scoring accurate and effective hits."

The communique, monitored in Cyprus, gave no location. "Big naval target," however, is standard Iraqi terminology for a tanker near Iran's Kharg island terminal in the northern gulf, where Iraqi attacks on Iranian ships have been concentrated.

Gulf-based shipping sources said an Iranian tanker was set ablaze in one of the earlier raids farther south, but Iraq's announcement did not mention that or confirm that an attack ever took place at the reported location.

Saturday's raids were the first in the gulf since July 7, when Kharg island and a Cypriot tanker were hit.

They are also the first raids since the United Nations Security Council adopted a resolution calling on Iraq and Iran to agree to a cease-fire in their 7-year-old war and the U.S. Navy began escorting reflagged Kuwaiti tankers in the gulf on July 20.

A terse Iranian communique carried by the official Islamic Republic News Agency said Iraqi bombings in "parts of Iran's installations and oil fields in the Persian Gulf" left several people "martyred or wounded and some damage was inflicted." It gave no details.

A spokesman for Iran's War Information Headquarters later told the agency that Iran would "give a crushing response to the Iraqi attacks today."

The agency quoted the spokesman as saying the strikes Saturday "have undoubtedly been carried out in coordination with the United States."

Iraq's Hussein, meanwhile, declared: "From now on we will strike them (Iran) at sea."

"We will destroy all of their economic lifelines that supply them with the means of aggression," he said in a speech broadcast by Baghdad Radio.

The broadcast, monitored in Cyprus, quoted Hussein as saying his forces had refrained from attacking Iranian installations to "give diplomacy a chance" after the U.N. resolution calling for a cease-fire.

Salvage company executives said their tugboats along the gulf were put on alert in anticipation of Iranian retaliation. The executives, like the other shipping sources, spoke on the condition of not being identified.

In Washington, the Pentagon said it had no information and no comment on the reported attacks.

Several U.S. warships were in the waterway, awaiting orders for the next convoy of Kuwaiti tankers sailing under the Stars and Stripes.

Iran used a 45-day lull in Iraqi attacks to boost its oil production and exports, independent oil executives say. They estimate that Iran is producing 2.7 million barrels a day and exporting a record 2 million barrels a day.

Iraq named the targets attacked as Lavan island, site of a refinery and terminal in the central gulf, Farsi; a small island often used by Iran for attacks on shipping in the northern gulf, and Rakhsh, an oil platform complex in the southern gulf.

Gulf-based shipping executives said Sirri island, another offshore oil facility in the southern gulf, also was struck and a tanker set afire. The Iraqi communique made no mention of a Sirri attack.

In London, Lloyds Shipping Intelligence Unit identified the tanker reportedly damaged at Sirri as the Alvand, a 120,766-ton vessel operated by the National Iranian Tanker Co.

Unlike the Iraqis, who pump their oil overland through pipelines to Saudi Arabia and Turkey, Iran's oil routes go through the vulnerable shipping lanes of the gulf.

Bombs Kill 3 In Tripoli

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Two bomb-rigged buses exploded five minutes apart Saturday in a crowded square in the northern port city of Tripoli, killing three people and wounding 25, police said.

Later in the day, a bomb exploded in a garbage dump in west Beirut's Hamra street, the Moslem sector's main shopping center, breaking shop windows but injuring no one, police said.

No group claimed responsibility,, but police say such attacks often are designed to discredit the Syrians, who are trying to pacify this Mediterranean country plagued by 12 years of civil war.

The Mercedes-Benz buses were parked side-by-side at Tal square in Tripoli, waiting to load passengers headed for Beirut, 50 miles to the south, a police statement said.

The second explosion jolted the bus station while rescuers were evacuating victims of the first blast, it said.

Palls of smoke billowed from the site as firefighters struggled to control the blaze, said reporters on the scene, interviewed by telephone from Beirut.

Syrian peackeeping troops sealed off the square and chased away onlookers to clear the roads for ambulances, said the reporters, who demanded anonymity. A police spokesman, who could not be identified in keeping with standing regulations, said explosives experts were examining the wreckage to determine the type and weight of the bombs.

The blasts broke glass in nearby restaurants. The streets of Tripoli, a predominantly Sunni Moslem city, were quickly deserted as shops, restaurants and other businesses lowered their shutters, apparently fearing more violence, the reporters added.

Thirteen other bombs concealed in vehicles have exploded across the country this year, killing 52 people and wounding 243 by police count.

Aquino Orders Arrest Of All Involved In Coup

By JAMES W. HATTON
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The military rounded up the last of a rebel force at armed forces headquarters Saturday, but the rebel chief and hundreds of armed mutineers remained at large after failing to overthrow President Corazon Aquino.

Mrs. Aquino demanded the arrest of everyone who joined the gravest attack against her 18-month administration. Police set up roadblocks and stopped vehicles from entering or leaving Manila, trying to catch those who escaped.

"It is not a question of forgiving," Mrs. Aquino said. "It was not only done against me but against the entire country. You saw how many innocent civilians were killed."

U.S. troops at Clark Air Base near Manila were restricted to the base after three policemen were killed and three civilians wounded in an ambush at a nearby roadblock, officials said. Police said all the victims were Filipinos and the killers were believed to be communist guerrillas.

The mutineers had said government inability to curb the communists was a chief reason for their action.

Officials said at least 25 people died and 275 were wounded Friday when 800 to 1,200 mutinous soldiers attacked the presidential compound, key military bases and the state broadcast center.

Mrs. Aquino, 54, visited families of five slain presidential palace guards, including the three bodyguards of her son, Benigno Aquino III, who was wounded. He said rebels fired on him when he mistook attackers for loyal troops and identified himself as the president's son.

Among those still sought were Col. Gregorio Honasan and five other middle-grade officers identified as ringleaders.

By Saturday morning, loyal troops had retaken all of Camp Aguinaldo, the national military headquarters in suburban Quezon City where the fiercest fighting occurred in a 2½-hour battle Friday evening.

Military officials said 43 mutineers surrendered at the camp early Saturday and 41 more were captured there during mop-up operations.

Rep. Ramon Mitra, speaker of the House of Representatives, ordered the arrest of the 200-member House security detachment, which joined the mutiny.

Military authorities let many mutineers go free. Officials said about 400 were allowed to leave a police garrison in San Fernando, 40 miles north of Manila, along with their weapons around Friday midnight to avoid bloodshed.

Bren Guiao, governor of Pampanga province, said roadblocks in northern Manila and adjacent provinces were ordered after officials heard rumors of possible rebel reinforcements on their way to Manila.

"Of course, we don't intend to relax," he said. "The crisis is not totally over."

By early evening, police in Manila were permitting some vehicles to leave the city after farmers, truck drivers and others complained loudly of harassment. But they were unable to get far from the city limits because nearby communities had their own, stricter travel restrictions.

Armed forces chief Gen. Fidel Ramos said 705 mutineers surrendered or were captured, including 591 at Camp Aguinaldo and 114 at the Camelot Hotel. The rebels used the hotel as a base to attack government-run Channel 4 television about a block away in suburban Quezon City.

He said the rebels were being held on a 300-foot-long naval vessel.

Ramos issued arrest orders for top rebel Honasan and the other alleged ringleaders: Lt. Col. Hector Tarazona, Lt. Col. Tito Legaspi, Lt. Col. Gerry Albano, Lt. Col. Reynaldo Beroya and a Maj. Paula, whose first name was unavailable.

At Villamor Air Base, one of several garrisons occupied by mutineers, elite marines backed by at least two armored personnel carriers secured a key road between the base and adjacent Camp Bonifacio, army headquarters.

Maj. Gen. Antonio Sotelo, the air force commander, estimated 400 rebels seized the base, which he said was not adequately protected.

Sotelo denied earlier reports that the rebels took him hostage. He said he was holed up on the third floor of his headquarters building while the rebels occupied the lower stories.

"They did not try to capture me," he told reporters. "When my situation became untenable, I left and went to the Presidential Palace. That is where I controlled the actions of the Philippines Air Force." He did not say how he got from the base to the palace.

In Cebu City, 350 miles to the south, regional constabulary commander Brig. Gen. Edgardo Abenina, fired by Ramos after supporting the mutiny, handed over his command to his successor.

Abenina's troops placed the city mayor and provincial governor under house arrest and confiscated weapons of private security guards before the mutiny collapsed in Manila.

Communist rebels called the coup attempt a "panic reaction" to the guerrillas' growing strength.

"The current situation is undoubtedly excellent for the Filipino people to victoriously advance their revolutionary struggle on all fronts," the communist-dominated National Democratic Front said in a statement.

Manila's Business, Tourist Activity Quickly Returns To Normal Levels

By DAN BIERS
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Colorful jeepneys clogged Manila's bustling streets, music videos blared from television and business was brisk at the girlie bars Saturday, hours after a bloody rebellion wracked the capital.

One day after troops loyal to President Corazon Aquino put down the gravest threat yet to her 18-month government, little evidence was visible of the failed coup that killed at least 25 people and injured hundreds, including many civilians.

Armed forces blocked access to streets leading to Malacanang Palace, but few troops were visible elsewhere in the sprawling city.

Manila's daily newspapers carried extensive coverage of the rebellion under big headlines, but the People's Journal Tonight managed to place on its front page a provocative picture of a bikini-clad woman several times larger than an adjacent picture of coup leader, Col. Gregorio Honasan.

Honasan remains at large, as do an unknown number of rebels.

Television stations stopped broadcasting a continuous stream of coup attempt reports and went back to typical midday fare — music videos, soap operas, soap box races and movies, including an English-dubbed Chinese martial arts movie titled "The Taichi Monk."

Radio stations returned to light programming Saturday after broadcasting continual reports on fighting the day before.

The city's streets were clogged with jeepneys — small trucks that provide Manila's major public transportation — filled to capacity. People crowded the sidewalks and some parks.

About 50 midafternoon customers were seen in the Hollywood Show Palace, a bar in the famed Ermita entertainment district. As five bikini-clad dancers performed to the throbbing beat of disco music beneath blinking colored lights, operations manager Annie Borja said the attempted coup didn't affect business.

"Yesterday, even though there was fighting, we still had a lot of people here," she said.

But Crisanto Guiao had a different story to tell from Wendy's restaurant, across the street from where fierce fighting occurred early Friday near Malacanang.

The 24-hour restaurant closed for several hours Friday because of the skirmishing.

Cambodian Leaders Pledge Effort To Strengthen Shaky Rebel Forces

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

BEIJING (AP) — Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the inactive president of Cambodia's shaky resistance coalition, met Saturday with the alliance's two other leaders and said the three want to strengthen their unity, a report said.

Sihanouk, who said earlier he would not talk with Khieu Samphan and Son Sann, told reporters "our meeting here is aimed at further enhancing our friendship," according to the official Xinhua News Agency.

The three arrived Saturday on an annual official visit to China, the main supplier of arms and materials to the resistance in their fight against Vietnamese forces backing the Heng Samrin government in Cambodia.

Son Sann, prime minister of the coalition known as Democratic Kampuchea, and head of a non-Communist faction, and Khieu Samphan, head of the Communist Khmer Rouge and vice president of the coalition, separately called on Sihanouk Saturday evening at his residence, said the report monitored in Tokyo.

In May, Sihanouk announced a one-year "leave of absence" as coalition president, saying forces belonging to the Communist Khmer Rouge led by Khieu Samphan were attacking Cambodian refugees.

Sihanouk told Xinhua after the meetings that he was satisfied with the progress made by the resistance forces against Vietnam, which invaded Cambodia nine years ago.

Earlier Saturday, the prince said "there will be no discussions" with the other two leaders, adding that he made the trip because China was his greatest friend" and "when China invites me I say always yes."

"I can say no to Khieu Samphan. I can say no to Son Sann. But I cannot say no to China," he said.

Sihanouk's son Sihamoni greeted the other two leaders upon their arrival from Bangkok. Sihanouk had arrived earlier in the day from North Korea.

On Sunday the three are to receive an official welcome ceremony and meet China's President Li Xiannian. There were no announced plans for a meeting among the three.

Democratic Kampuchea is recognized as the legitimate government of Cambodia by the United Nations, China and most countries outside the Soviet-Vietnam bloc.

Hopes for negotiations to end the conflict in Cambodia have dimmed in recent months, first because of Sihanouk's temporary withdrawal from the presidency, which raised doubts about the ability of the coalition to hold together, and by Vietnam's rejection of a plan for getting talks started.

The Association of Southeast Asian Nations, the six-nation grouping which supports the coalition, recently proposed that informal talks be held between the coalition and the Heng Samrin government, to be followed immediately by peace negotiations between Cambodian and Vietnamese leaders. Hanoi, however, turned down the idea.

Libya Shows Off Weapons, Soldiers Seized In Desert

AOUZOU, Aouzou Strip (AP) — Libyan military officers Saturday displayed arms and Chadian soldiers they said were captured in retaking this desert outpost from Chad.

Chad continued to deny that Libya recaptured the village of Aouzou in its first victory after a string of costly defeats in the border area, which both countries claim as their own.

But Libya took six Western journalists to the battle site, about 40 miles south of the internationally recognized border between Libya and Chad, to see the spoils of war and its victims.

"We have no desire or wish to kill anybody, but this is our land," said 45-year-old Col. Ali Sherif Rify, who led the Libyans. "The situation forced us to use all the facilities we had to recapture this land."

The visit offered a rare glimpse of the front, which has seen renewed fighting over the past few years.

Libya annexed the 43,000-square-mile Aouzou Strip, a barren and sparsely populated piece of land across the northern border of Chad, in 1973. Libya claims the land on the basis of a 1935 treaty between Italy and France that was never ratified.

Chad contests this claim, and no other country recognizes the annexation.

Rify said Libyan forces, using mostly Soviet aircraft, attacked the area first by air, then closed in on the ground and waged a two-hour battle.

There was no definite estimate of casualties on either side. Libyan military officials said Chadian deaths numbered in the hundreds, but only about 25 to 30 bodies were seen.

There were few signs of hand-to-hand combat in the village, but much of it was in ruins from what appeared to be heavy bombing. Piles of Chadian armaments and supplies were scattered about the village and on the sandy road that led to it.

Strewn in the area were the scarlet berets of the Chadian army, their insignia readily identifiable, apparently abandoned in haste. There were tins of Chadian-made tomato paste, cartons of cigarettes and on the wall of a deserted school house where Libyan soldiers lunched on dates and cans of Pepsi Cola, a bold message was scrawled in French:

"The Chadian Armed National Forces took Aouzou on the 8th of August, 1987."

The officials said many Chadians fled, and they showed reporters six captured Chadian soldiers and added that 15 others were also being held. The Libyans said three of their own soldiers were killed and five were wounded.

Many of the captured jeeps, armored personnel carriers and artillery were French- or American-made.

The Chadian army said fighting for control of the area continued Saturday afternoon, according to an Agence France-Presse dispatch from the Chadian capital of N'Djamena.

But the French news agency quoted anonymous sources in Paris as saying Chadian troops retreated from the Aouzou region to Bardai, about 25 miles southwest.

The only sign of Chadian resistance was an occasional burst of machine-gun fire rippling through the valleys of the bleak surrounding Tibesti mountains.

Rify said the key element in the victory was "surprise" and that Libyans were still mopping up isolated pockets of resistance. He did not elaborate.

A Libyan military statement broadcast by Libyan radio also said its air force conducted operations inside Chadian territory in pursuit of "scattered remnants of the agents."

The Aouzou region, believed to be rich in uranium and other minerals, is about 900 miles south of the Libyan capital of Tripoli.

President Hissene Habre's army drove the Libyans from the rest of northern Chad in March, and he vowed to retake the Aouzou Strip.

Libya has mounted steady air raids on the northern towns. Its reported capture of Aouzou village came after two unsuccessful attempts to retake it and surrounding areas this month.

Chad says it has killed 1,225 Libyan solders and captured 360 in battles this month. The claim could not be independently verified, but West European diplomats said it appeared to be a reasonable estimate.

French Defense Minister Andre Giraud said Saturday that France does not intend to get drawn into the battle for the Aouzou Strip. He said he could not confirm Aouzou village had been retaken.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Short-Sighted Economic Study

If what a BB&T study on economic prosects for eastern North Carolina says is true, the region may as well cover its head in despair and sink into the sea. In fact, if the study is to be believed, the sea may be the area's only advantage.

The study was short-sighted and unconvincing. It painted a grim economic portrait of eastern North Carolina and ignored the assets of a region rich with potential.

The report, prepared by Branch Banking & Trust at the request of the Eastern Carolina Chamber of Commerce, was presented to the chamber's members at a recent meeting in Greenville. The study does the region a disservice by portending a dismal financial future for it.

By characterizing the entire region as losing residents, having no growth and decaying, the study ignored the pockets of prosperity and growth that flourish east of Raleigh. Certainly Wilmington, Greenville, Wilson-Rocky Mount and Nag's Head can't be considered areas with nothing going for them.

In Pitt County, growth continues, evidenced by building starts, growth of tax base and population expansion. A major university with a medical center and a substantial industrial base fuels this development.

The study was reportedly based on statistics but appears to have little value, except perhaps as shock treatment. It is uncertain why the Eastern North Carolina Chamber of Commerce would actuate such an unbalanced, unfounded report on the region's economic health.

The study ignored the impact of a booming tourist trade on the coast. It ignored the impact of opening major transportation arteries linking the east with the rest of North Carolina — for example, the construction of I-40 and the four-laning of other major transportation routes, U.S. 264, U.S. 64. It discounts the effect of the area's thriving timber industries, small businesses and regional agricultural endeavors, such as Duplin County's wine industry and Robersonville's peanut processing industry.

Certainly the region has its problems. Eastern North Carolina's agriculture-based economy has taken blows in the past decade. The area has a higher percentage of uneducated citizens than its neighbors in the Piedmont. Until the last 10 years, eastern North Carolina has remained geographically isolated from the state's major growth areas.

But if those government leaders and business executives hearing the report last week can only see a bleak outlook for eastern North Carolina, they are selling the region short.

Eastern North Carolina is not a wasteland of decline. Neither is it an area characterized by continuous poverty without outlook for improvement, as the study suggests.

More likely, it is a region with numerous small areas of prosperity and expansion sandwiched between larger no-growth areas.

Like Scrooge's Ghost of Christmas Future, the future doesn't have to be bleak. The region can affect the future. Eastern North Carolina has immense natural and human resources. It can foster, with proper leadership, a climate for growth, not decline.

Inappropriate

Selecting a city manager in a Sunday night executive session is not an appropriate way to conduct important public business.

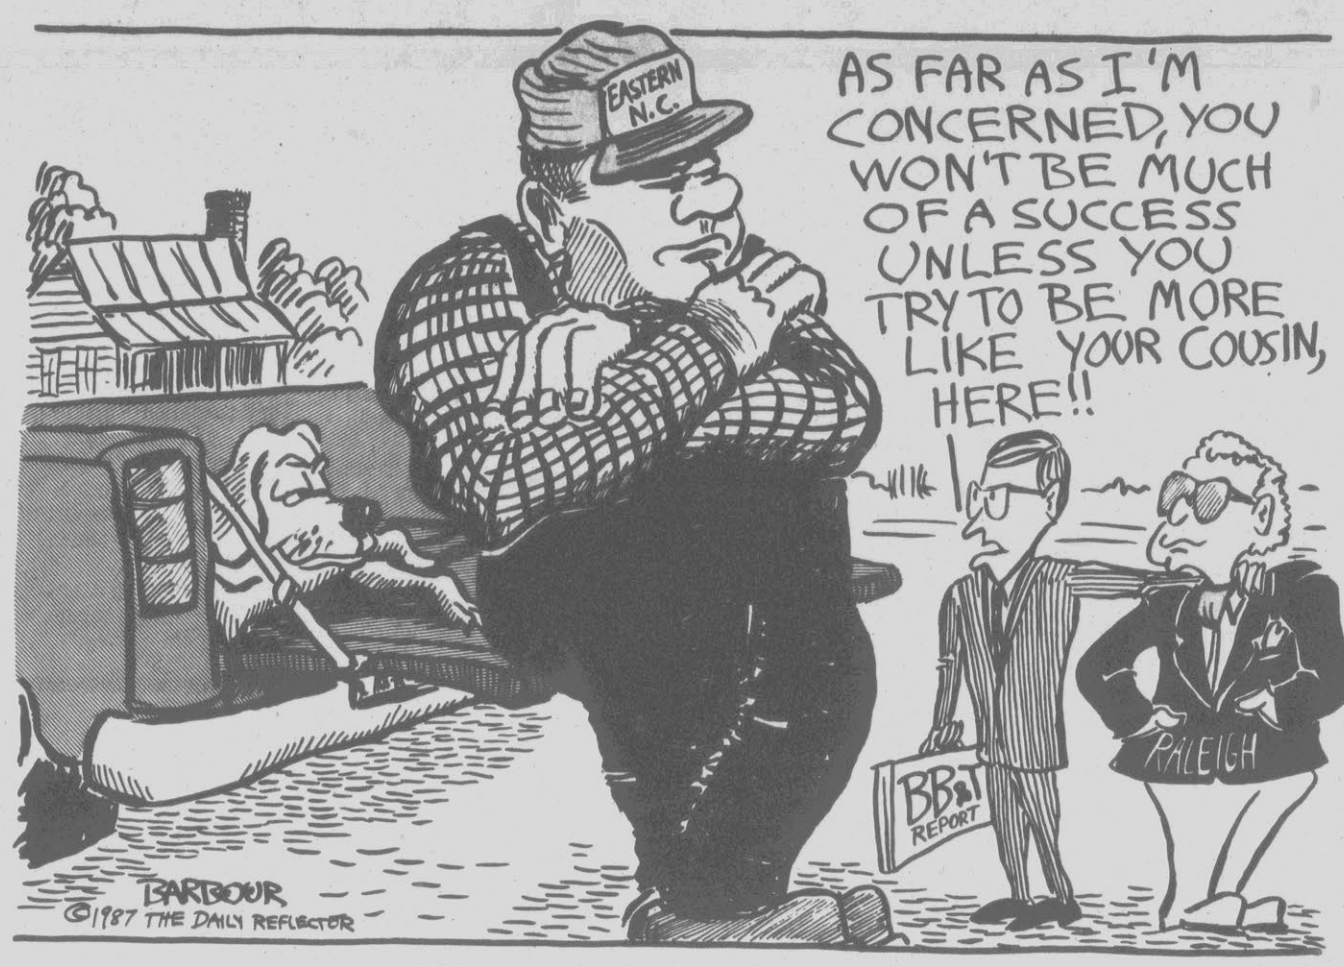
The Greenville City Council should have been able to make a decision on the city manager on Friday, as it originally planned. Postponing the choice on the premise of wanting to meet with one of the candidate's wives is not a valid reason to delay action.

There simply is no justification for council members not to be prepared to act. They have had a month to consider the three finalists' qualifications. They spent three days last week in intense interview sessions with these finalists. The logical time to make an informed decision has arrived.

Rather than needing to scrutinize the spouse of one candidate, it appears that once again, the council cannot agree on an issue of deep import to the city. Perhaps council members should be reminded of the need for unity in a selection of a new city manager. The individual they select will have a sharp impact on the city's future. In light of this fact, a decision concerning who will make that impact should be a sound, solid action.

The Council has a responsibility to choose a new city manager in a professional and credible fashion. Delaying an announced decision, then scheduling a weekend meeting is not consistent with this committment.

That approach simply raises more questions about the way Greenville's future is being planned.



Slipping Away From Life No Escape

Sunday Morning Notes

Friends found his backpack and a pair of his rolled-up pants near a shelter on the trail. No other trace of Mark has surfaced.

I never knew Mark, but he haunts my life. I was one of a group of five local hikers attempting a three-day, 30-mile backpack trip on the AT, as the Appalachian Trail is known by those who hike it, in early August on the section of trail where Mark disappeared.

For these three days we watched searchers comb the woods for clues, dogs find and lose trails and Mark's friends try to put together pieces of a puzzle that just wouldn't fit. It was a chilling scenario for folks in search of serenity and a brief respite from the pressures of the world.

Nobody knows what happened. Mark, age 25, a naturalist for the National Parks Service, was an experienced hiker. In 1986, he hiked the entire 2,100 mile length of the AT, joining the ranks of an elite breed of adventurer known as a "thru-hiker" — one who walks the trail from end to end — from Springer Mountain, Ga., to Mount Katahdin, Maine.

One of our group, Herb Carlton of Greenville, met him on that thru-hike and remembered him as a young man with wilderness savvy and enthusiasm. Mark kept a journal of his journey on the trail and when his hike ended, he mailed it to those he met along the way. It was full of thought, wonder and questions. Judging from his journal, Mark had a keen mind and was a deep thinker.

His co-workers and friends with the parks service said he was good at what he did. Being a naturalist was a lifetime goal and he liked his work, they said. It was unlike him to not show up.

At first authorities guessed a hiker this experienced must have injured himself. Then a search of Mark's current journal indicated he might be depressed, that he might walk into the woods to solve his problems.

Searchers combed the area where Mark's car was found. A helicopter scanned rock outcroppings where a fall might have injured and stranded him. Search and rescue teams went through thick, overgrown summer forests by hand, looking for clues. Friends took to remote side trails and walked along isolated creek beds they knew Mark frequented.

But all anybody found was a backpack and his pants. No Mark and no trace of him.

Suicide and foul play have not been ruled out. But no body has been found, and no clues indicate either Mark or anybody else took his life in the woods. Injury is possible, but again, where is the body? It appears Mark simply slipped off his pack and walked away from life.

I didn't know Mark, but I've thought about him constantly, even dreamed about him at night. I've learned from him that no escape is complete. He misjudged life if he simply walked into the wilderness to seek answers. The same questions he hiked away from will likely find his hiding place and face him if he ever walks back out.

Flowers In State Roadsides' Future

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — North Carolina's roadsides are due for a change in dress.

The Department of Transportation has decided that the summer's flower planting program for the U.S. Olympic Festival was so successful that a basic change in landscaping philosophy will be implemented statewide. More state resources will be funnelled towards flower planting, and less will be used for reforestation.

During the spring, DOT crews, with help from local governments and private groups, planted some 636,000 flowers, 33,000 perennials, and nearly 4,000 shrubs at 23 highway intersections in the Triangle and Greensboro areas for the festival.

According to Bill Johnson, head of the landscaping branch of DOT, the program was immensely popular with area motorists. The resultant display of public support for the program has changed some minds at DOT. "I definitely think it has changed our whole attitude about flowers. We're going to spend a lot more of the resources we have available to us to plant flowering materials whereas before we spent mostly for reforestation," he said.

While pursuing a policy for reforestation, the state spent most of its roadside landscaping effort on returning an area to a natural look. Pine trees and ground covers were the main plantings.

The new flowering program will not duplicate the Triangle effort, however. Johnson says that for economic reasons the state will concentrate on wildflowers, flowering shrubs and perennials, not the annuals which were so prevalent in the Triangle this summer.

"Our approach is going to have to be different," Johnson said. "Rather than use annuals — which are too labor intensive to plant and care for — we'll go towards more perennials, wildflowers and day lillies, lower maintenance plants."

The maintenance required for this summer's program was astronomical. In the hot summer, DOT sprayed four million gallons of water (125,000 a day) on the flowers. They needed 15 trucks to do the work. "That is just not feasible," in a statewide program, Johnson said.

The state's wildflower program will be greatly expanded. This year, 140 acres of wildflowers were planted. Next year, it will be closer to 240, he said. That might not sound like a lot, Johnson said, especially since the state owns 285,000 acres of roadway. But it is a lot of land when one considers that wildflowers are planted in narrow beds. One acre of beds can stretch a very long way down a road. Of the $400,000 the state personalized license plate fund makes available each year for landscaping, Johnson estimates $100,000 will go into wildflowers.

Johnson said DOT was also pleased with the dramatic appearance of bright red Canna Lilies planted in the Triangle. "They have enough mass and color that at highway speeds they make an impact on motorists," he said. "Finer flowers, even dafodils, don't have that impact, we found." Hybrid Canna Lilies, which are not expensive, are also available in different colors.

The change in policy may have an impact on highway grass, also. "When you go from a more naturalistic setting to a more dressed up, ornamental one, with flowers, you're going to have to do more mowing, or at least make sure that the mowing is done on time," Johnson said.

Compared to the massive $800 million-plus state highway budget, a few hundred thousand dollars for flowers is not a lot of money. But as Triangle motorists learned this summer, a few roadside flowers can really brighten a day.

Wooing New Hampshire Tricky Challenge

Steven Sherman

HANCOCK, N.H. — While voters in larger states may meet presidential hopefuls as a once-in-a-lifetime experience, New Hampshire citizens meet them once a week. And candidates discover that citizens here aren't intimidated by celebrity status.

These voters tell candidates what they think, and that is the difficulty. The problem for candidates at this early stage of the first presidential primary race is translating people's opinions into an understanding of how to present the major issues. The candidates are visiting a state with a tradition of intense town government and an extremely large Legislature — 424 members from a population of 1 million. Everybody knows somebody in government, leading to strong, vocal convictions about good management and proper goals. When it comes to politics, these Yankees are not taciturn.

New Hampshire people know that they have a critical, sometimes pivotal, influence on the future direction of the campaign. In fact, they could redirect the South's Super Tuesday regional primary. Local polling and high-level opinion research, however, are expensive for candidates; by federal law each can spend $465,000 in the state.

Bob Dole, R-Kan., for example, has already been to the state a dozen times, yet he has no definite polling plans. Instead, his campaign is relying on 250 members of "a leadership team," according to Paul Jacobson of Dole's staff, "six advisory committees, an executive and a steering committee. They're all local people."

Candidates come early to the state to generate funds, solidify commitments and reinvigorate their staff. They must also move hand-to-hand at voter gatherings in high school auditoriums, Kiwanis Club luncheons, county fairs and "coffees" in homes. There they learn what's on the New Hampshire mind, which may, at this stage, be a more diffuse agenda than candidates wish.

Last week Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., spoke in the same Peterborough home where Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., spoke three weeks earlier. Many of the same people attended and compared the slick stand-up style of Biden with the sit-down, bow-tie folksiness of Simon.

One man, a Unitarian minister, challenged Simon to square his vote for closing the Palestine Liberation Organization office in Washington with his otherwise generous civil rights vote. Simon had his staff send written material to the questioner in explanation.

In New Hampshire, small is important. Candidates used to world problems and broad sociological maneuvering must consider this phenomenon and assimilate their information in discrete samples. Dealing with people who expect to be heard can be bewildering to a man on the presidential run, but the situation isn't going to change.

"The candidates believe the whole world revolves around them," said Joseph Grandmaison, Democrat state chairman, "It is a very humbling process they're put through here. And I honestly think that if they become successful, it makes a better person of them because it renews them emotionally with problems that most of us face."

Nunn's No-Go Decision Boosts Gore's Southern Prospects

Evans
Witt

WASHINGTON (AP) — Albert Gore Jr. can stop looking over his shoulder. Sam Nunn isn't gaining on him anymore — he's not even in the race.

Nunn, the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, announced Thursday in Atlanta that he isn't going to run for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1988.

"I hate to express joy over a decision by him not to run," Gore said, even as he must have been breathing a sigh of relief.

For now the second-generation senator from Tennessee is the only Southerner in the Democratic field.

Nunn's non-candidacy "takes Al Gore out of the shadows and makes him 'The Southern Candidate,'" Atlanta pollster Claiborne Darden said.

"Now that he has decided not to run, I can say candidly that there are an awful lot of people around the country and in my native South and in Georgia who told me that in the event he doesn't run, they're going to look favorably upon my candidacy," Gore said. "So I'm encouraged by that."

But being the southern candidate doesn't mean Gore is the automatic winner in the southern primaries on Super Tuesday next March 8.

In fact, Nunn's decision throws open the door to the South for everyone in the Democratic field to try to gain an advantage in the region. Many conservative southern Democrats had been frozen in place, awaiting Nunn's decision. Those activists are now looking for another candidate, and the candidates are looking for them.

Former Virginia Gov. Charles Robb, a longtime Nunn supporter, said the Georgia senator's decision "presents a tremendous opportunity for a candidate ... to move aggressively to fill that void." Robb, often mentioned as presidential timber himself, declined to avail himself of the opening and allowed as how Gore is probably in the best position to appeal to conservative Democrats who now lack a candidate.

And Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois, another Democratic hopeful, also said Gore may have an early edge in the South now.

But Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri wasted no time trying to pick off Nunn supporters, calling all the Democratic representatives from Georgia within hours of Nunn's decision. Rep. Ed Jenkins said he is going to back Gephardt's presidential bid, and Rep. Lindsay Thomas says he is leaning in that direction.

With Nunn in the race, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt saw his Sun Belt connection as providing "an edge in the Southwest and Texas."

"I would hope I can extend that all the way across the South," he told AP Radio.

Thus Gore is going to have to work hard to inherit Nunn's supporters, particularly since Gore is quite a bit more liberal than Nunn.

Nunn alluded to that, without mentioning Gore, at his Atlanta news conference. The conservative Democrat said none of the Democratic candidates has made clear "the expression of the kind of philosophy and the kind of values that the people of the South are looking for. ... That doesn't mean that could not happen."

For example, Nunn supports aid to the Contra rebels opposing the Nicaraguan government. Gore opposes it. Nunn voted for President Reagan's tax cut and budget in 1981. Gore voted against them as a House member.

For their 1986 votes, the liberal Americans for Democratic Action rated Gore a 70 and Nunn a far more conservative 30 out of a possible 100. At the other end of the spectrum, the American Conservative Union gave Gore only a 9 out of 100 in 1986, while Nunn's votes were rated a 55.

Gore is quick to deny, as he has from the start, that he is a Southern candidate, saying he is a national candidate from the South.

But the 1988 primary calendar makes it hard for Gore to shake the characterization.

Gore got a relatively late start, handicapping his efforts in Iowa and New Hampshire, the two states that will kick off the 1988 Democratic season. The rest of the early states — Maine, South Dakota, Minnesota and the like — are obviously not fertile territory for him.

Thus, the South and Super Tuesday. All the region's states — with one possible exception — will be voting in primaries or caucuses on March 8, 1988.

If Gore has not won a primary or caucus before then, he must do well on March 8 to stay in the field. And even if Gore has broken through to the winner's column in an earlier event, he will have to face high expectations of a strong showing across his home region.

Nunn's decision is actually the second break for Gore in the past few days. In an Iowa debate earlier in the week, Gore drew a lot of attention for his careful dissection of Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, who is the front-runner in New Hampshire.

That clearly marked Gore as a candidate to be reckoned with in a campaign so loaded with debates that it is hard to see when the candidates will get out on the streets to campaign in the first two months of 1988.

Nunn's decision also helped the Democratic presidential field shape up as the dog days of August are winding down. Nunn is not running and neither is New York Gov. Mario Cuomo. Within the next month or so, decisions will be announced by the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Rep. Patricia Schroeder of Colorado.

Then the preliminaries will be over and the 1988 race will be on with all the Democratic contestants on the track.

Economic, Social Woes Handicap Struggle For Democracy

William
Montalbano

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — Carlina Sosa's dream house in the raw workers' suburb of Moreno, overflowing one recent Sunday afternoon with relatives celebrating a family birthday, has two rooms and a new fence to keep the thieves out and the chickens in. Water comes from a hand pump, but there is electricity for a color television that dominates the postage-stamp bedroom.

For more than 20 years Carlina Sosa worked as a cook in a rich man's house here in the Argentine capital. Alone, she raised a daughter, the product of teen-age indiscretion, in her tiny room behind the kitchen. Savings, accumulated a few pesos at a time, allowed the purchase of a narrow strip of land along a dirt track in what had been a pasture. Then, on a historic weekend years later, came the prefabricated wooden house.

"Next we will build another room at the front. One step at a time," she said over an oven warm with of crisp meat pies.

Carlina Sosa is making it. There are uncounted millions like her in the South American vastness today.

Their triumph, and their tragedy, is that they must swim against the tide in nations that seem as mired as ever in backwardness and instability. In one country after another, minor-chord achievements are drowned out by national economic and social cacophony that threaten important political gain.

For South America, this has been the Decade of Democracy. From the Andes to the Pampas, South American nations have exchanged dictatorship for elected government. That much of the continent's long-standing but elusive dream of joining the First World has been achieved — at least momentarily. Only two dictatorships survive among the continent's 10 Latin republics.

Despite the political gains, however, First World economic aspirations are undercut by crushing Third World realities. The realities are as old as societies of authoritarian tradition built on unequal, inefficient social and economic structures. They are as relatively new as the bloated populations and the pell-mell urbanization that has stalked virtually every major city since World War II.

To such daunting impediments to modernization add a 1980s agenda of fresh crises in the form of unpayable foreign debt and corrupting drugs. Their sum, stoked by boundless popular expectation amid savagely finite resources, bedevils forward-looking civilian governments today in one country after another.

It would take a rare optimist to imagine that South America's climb from poverty to suburban sufficiency would be as successful as Carlina Sosa's.

Perilous paradox swims in the democratic tide: In almost every country, the majority is relatively poorer precisely at the moment when it is also freer than at any time in a generation.

Middle-class countries like Argentina and Uruguay battle legacies of stagnation, inflation and inept government to climb back to income levels first reached two or three decades ago.

Politically progressive and economically diverse Colombia reels from simultaneous challenges: abject poverty; the continent's largest, most tenacious guerrilla movements and rampant drug barons. Venezuela glumly recognizes that oil wealth is not enough to bridge a sapping gap between rich and poor.

In Ecuador and Chile, untrammeled free market economics have helped fuel political polarization without, critics insist, easing conditions for the poor majority. In Paraguay, bust has followed boom without shaking the grip of the hemisphere's most enduring dictator.

Bolivia, poorest of the South American republics, staggers from crisis to crisis despite painful but astonishing progress in controlling inflation. Tinderbox Peru increasingly looks ungovernable; endemic social hardships are compounded by an ominous Maoist insurgency thus far impervious to counterattack by an impetuous young populist president.

Mighty Brazil, certainly the continent's best next-century hope of a developed nation governing itself democratically, is today really many different countries, as scholars like to note. South-central Brazil, around the dynamic magnet of Sao Paulo, is like Belgium. The cruel Brazilian Northeast, rife with squalor and despair, is like India.

Almost everywhere, democracy is still on trial. Entrenched Paraguayan and Chilean strongmen routinely clobber democratic foes.

An extraordinary harvest of elected civilians announce political values that North Americans enjoy themselves and wish for others. Argentina, Uruguay, Bolivia, Peru, Colombia, Brazil and Venezuela are led by civilians who espouse social reforms of the sort that John F. Kennedy's Alliance for Progress once sought to promote.

Yet young and disorderly democratic experiments are not generating economic benefits enough to give people a stake in defending them. They risk discredit and eventual capture by authoritarian competitors of right and left.

Sadly, South America's new democrats consider that both their message and the threat to it are lost on a government in Washington myopically convulsed by Central American turmoil.

They see the United States as an uncertain ally in their noisy, messy and manifestly imperfect attempts to consolidate hard-won democratic gains. Reagan administration applause sounds empty to South Americans, although there has been some effective behind-the-scenes jawboning; quiet American diplomacy may have been decisive in short-circuiting coups in Bolivia and Ecuador.

Still, at a time when its needs are immediate and the urgency of its quest for modernization-cum-democracy is underlined by widespread economic unrest and growing disillusion, South America seems to its leaders to be remote both from Washington's priorities and sensibilities.

Nuclear Weapons On Trial

Cody
Shearer

WASHINGTON — Is Mordechai Vanunu a hero or a traitor?

On Sunday morning, Aug. 30, an Israeli police van with painted dark windows will leave the Ashkelon prison in Jerusalem and head for the rear gate of the local district court. There Vanunu will enter a courtroom, handcuffed to his guards, to begin one of the world's most emotional trials on nuclear weaponry.

Vanunu, the son of poor Moroccan immigrants, worked until last year as a technician at the top secret Israeli atomic research center in the Negev desert. But since last October he has been in prison, after being abducted in Rome by a female Mossad agent and returned to Israel to answer charges of treason and espionage for revealing the extent of Israel's nuclear arsenal to the Sunday Times of London.

Why Vanunu took such a great personal risk will soon be revealed in court. According to this lawyer, Avigdor Fieldman, Vanunu will not have an easy time winning his freedom. At best, most Israelies care little about Vanunu even though he's a hero to foreign anti-nuclear groups. At worst, he is considered a traitor by his fellow countrymen.

In cooperation with Vanunu, Fieldman has decided to go for broke in the courtroom. His strategy will be to sidestep the narrow confines of treason and espionage and present the court with the legality question of nuclear weapons.

Fieldman will focus on Israel's wreckless nuclear weapons program. Specifically, its failure to abide by the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and its refusal to acknowledge that it possesses more than 200 nuclear warheads in a region that has been continually unstable for the past 40 years.

New technolgoies, such as the innovation of flash X-ray machines, which enable scientists to test bomb designs without actually detonating a nuclear device, are a concern Vanunu emphasized in his revelations to the Times. In short, the ability to develop reliable weapons without full-scale tests means that test-ban treaties are practically useless in detering weapons development.

Because nations such as Israel do not necessarily have to test new nuclear weapons, it can avoid the widespread condemnation testing provokes. And, in turn, Israel can adopt a two-faced policy that implies since it hasn't tested any nuclear weapons, then it is not a nuclear threat. This is one of the inconsistencies Vanunu was tyring to unmask in his disclosure to the British press.

The Pope Visits The Conflict Facing U.S. Catholics

Jason
Berry

Pope John Paul II, who visits the United States next month, has already journeyed through the modern religious sensibility like the protagonist of a picaresque novel, a brave if not always popular conscience pitted against the cultural windmills of the age.

John Paul's intellectual gifts surpass most papal predecessors. Since 1948, he has published 200 articles, several books, poems, even a play (soon to be a film), "The Jeweler's Shop," that explores the effect of time on the love between men and women. Few celibates take such literary risks. Yet scholarly achievements only add to larger complexities of character.

Here is a pope who skis, hikes and swims; his physique and sturdy features convey an appetite for life not usually associated with the ascetic imagery of the office. Here is a pope who was shot by a fanatical Turk and now travels in a car with bulletproof bubble, itself a sad, poignant symbol of his time.

Many theologians and lay Catholics view the pope's conservative doctrinal positions with audible dismay. The pontiff who speaks eloquently about human dignity to politically oppressed Poles and Chileans stands firm on the ecclesiastical ban of birth control devices — while millions of Catholics practice otherwise and Third World leaders worry more about soaring birth rates and hungry lives.

Here is a pope who has condemned the deadly technology of nuclear destruction and also condemned a life-giving technology of artificial insemination. Is John Paul's ethos of freedom irreconcilably split between political liberty and private obedience?

The Rev. Anthony Kosnick, a Detroit theologian who speaks Polish, has an insight. In 1976, Kosnick was a guest in Cracow of Cardinal Karol Wojtyla before his elevation to the papacy. The occasion: Poland's theological congress, held every five years.

"I expected 50 people," Kosnick recalled. "When I arrived, there were 800 priests from all church disciplines. Cardinal Wojtyla offered mass each morning. Two-thirds of the Polish hierarchy was there. All questions were submitted in writing. (Wojtyla) was clearly in charge. He was also chief of dialogue with the Communist Party."

This uniformity of discipline — so different from the sprawling heterogeneity and familial squabbles of the U.S. church — partially accounts for John Paul's conservatism. According to Kosnick, "Poland is a success story when you look at how they have endured under communism. The Polish church didn't change much after Vatican II. Under opposition of the government they couldn't afford to tolerate the diversity.

"John Paul's greatest concern is the confusion people have about faith," Kosnick said. "It's his conviction that he was chosen by God to bring unity to the church and to restore certainty of faith."

As defender of the faith, John Paul has taken an approach to the 1968 birth control encyclical at odds with his immediate predecessor. In a month-long papacy, John Paul I had questioned prior doctrine in a manner that church historians widely agree had cracked the great wall of moral theology. In reference to the pill's regulation of a woman's ovulation cycle, John Paul I said: "A regular cycle means four days of fertility and 24 days of infertility. How on earth can it be a sin to say instead of 24 days, 28 days?"

Polls Indicate Canada Ready For Socialists

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

TORONTO (AP) — Conservative Brian Mulroney boldly predicts he will remain prime minister for 12 more years, but opinion polls indicate Canada's next government could be socialist.

The main reason for the radical swing is the disintegration of the Liberal Party, which has governed the country with a left-of-center, mixed economy vision for 50 of the last 65 years.

Canadian politics have seemed almost brutal in recent weeks as Liberal leader John Turner, a 58-year-old corporate lawyer, came under attack for failing to reverse the party's tailspin.

On Thursday, Alain Tardiff, a Liberal member of Parliament, openly urged his leader to resign and the Young Liberals of Quebec echoed the appeal.

Worst of all for Turner has been the return to the political arena of former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, his onetime rival.

Trudeau emerged from retirement to denounce those — including both Mulroney and Turner — who endorsed an April constitutional accord granting special status to Quebec as a "distinct" French society. He says it will create two Canadas and dilute federal unity, the focus of his career.

Turner maintains that bringing Quebec into the constitution would make Canada whole again and overrides other considerations.

He also angered old Liberal supporters by initially backing the government's plan to turn away any boats carrying illegal refugees to Canada, such as the ships that arrived on the east coast with 155 Tamils and 174 Sikhs.

The public debate has split his party, hurt fund-raising and made Turner appear indecisive and incapable of controlling his own supporters.

Backed by conservative and big-business elements, Turner defeated former Cabinet minister Jean Chretien, but many Liberals think only Chretien can restore the party's fortunes.

"There are some elements who never accepted my leadership,'' said Turner, pledging to buck the pressure and hold onto his job.

He won 76 percent backing at a party convention last November, but opponents have gained ground rapidly since then.

"I think we've got to offer this country a vision of Canada which is in conformity with what the party has fought for and said over the last decade,'' said Robert, a Quebecer.

It's just such a committed platform that the socialist New Democratic Party under populist leader Ed Broadbent offers voters.

The New Democratic Party has never won a federal election and has just 33 seats in the 282-member House of Commons. But when elected at the provincial level it introduced such social welfare programs as unemployment insurance and medicare, which are now accepted by all Canadians.

The New Democrats would pull Canada out of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the North American Air Defense Agreement; oppose free trade with the United States; boost nationalization of industry and increase corporate taxes.

Yet, one recent Gallup Poll gave the socialist party 41 percent, the Liberals 35 percent and the Conservatives 23 percent.

"It's like watching the ugly duckling of Canadian politics turn into a swan,'' said columnist Carol Goar of the Toronto Star.

Mulroney, however, won by a landslide in September 1984 and remains confident the polls will change before he calls the next election, due by mid-1989.

The economy has performed well; he has succeeded where Trudeau failed in finding a constitutional formula acceptable to Quebec, and he may secure a historic free-trade agreement with the United States, Canada's largest trading partner.

"If you want economic progress, lower unemployment rates (and) Quebec-Ottawa cooperation ... you'll know in voting Conservative that I will be here as prime minister in two years and in 12 years,'' he said on a swing through Quebec last week.

Vietnam Expanding Air Service

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Despite aging airplanes and a lack of funds, Vietnam is trying to expand its foreign air links in an attempt to draw tourists and hard currency and to build ties with the non-communist world.

Air Vietnam, the national airline, is called "Hang Khong Vietnam" in Vietnamese. But some diplomats have dubbed it "Hang On Vietnam" because of the bumpy rides provided by its old, overloaded Soviet-made TU-134s.

Even so, Air Vietnam officials want to expand a foreign network now limited to Vientiane, Laos; Phnom Penh, Cambodia; Bangkok, Thailand; and Manila, Philippines.

Vietnam also is trying to attract other airlines to its airports, especially those from other Southeast Asian countries, said Le Van Chung, director of the foreign relations department of the country's General Civil Aviation Administration.

Vietnam now is served only by Aeroflot of the Soviet Union, CSA of Czechoslovakia, Interflug of East Germany, Air France, Thai Airways and Philippine Airlines.

Vietnam hopes new connections will bring in more Western tourists and overseas Vietnamese, whose hard currency is needed to develop the nation's primitive economy. Tourism officials expect 30,000 visitors this year, 50 percent more than last year.

Expansion of air links also appears part of the pragmatic leadership's attempt to increase links with Western and Asian non-communist countries despite their policy of barring official economic cooperation until Vietnamese troops leave Cambodia. Hanoi also has been trying to expand private foreign trade.

More difficult than attracting other airlines will be upgrading Air Vietnam. Flight times are erratic, service well below international standards, and passengers boil in a sauna-like cabin before the air conditioning is turned on, immersing them in a blinding white cloud of condensation.

Chung said the airline has many shortcomings but said, "We do criticism and self-criticism among our staff every day to overcome them.''

Last year, Air Vietnam carried 280,000 passengers on domestic routes and 28,000 on foreign routes, said Le Quy, transportation department director of the airline administration.

Quy would not give financial figures but said the airline's income "is not enough to pay the salary of our staff.''

Air Vietnam was founded just after the Communists defeated the French in 1954, but airline officials said development was impossible until after the war against U.S.-backed South Vietnam ended in 1975.

Cruising Along

Golfer Curtis Strange watches his tee shot on the third hole at Firestone Country Club in Akron Saturday during the third round of the World Series of Golf. Strange shot a two-under par 68 to hold a two-shot lead over the field going into Sunday's final round. (AP Laserphoto)

Holds Two Shot Margin

Strange In Series Lead

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — It's all in Curtis Strange's hands going into Sunday's final round of the $800,000 World Series of Golf.

"Curtis is playing well. He's had a tremendous summer. If he continues to play as well as he has, it'll be almost impossible to catch him," said Tom Kite, one of three men tied for third behind Strange's 54-hole lead.

"He's one of the better players out here and having a great year," said Davis Love III, alone in second, two shots off the pace.

But Strange, who salvaged a 2-under-par 68 despite some erratic periods Saturday, wasn't so sure.

"Who knows?" he asked. "There was a two-shot swing on the first hole today. There could be again tomorrow and now we're even.

"But with a two-stroke lead, it enables me to make some mistakes and not have them be so costly, while the guys behind me have to be pretty much mistake-free."

But he refused to even think about such things as the money-winning spot and the Player of the Year standings, both of which he could lead with a victory here.

"You can't think about that. You start thinking about that and you'll scramble your brains. You'll choke your guts out," Strange said.

He completed three rounds over the hard Firestone Country Club course in 204, six under par.

But it was a struggle.

"I don't feel I played very well, to be honest," Strange said after a last-hole bogey.

"It seemed I struggled with my game out there. I wasn't that comfortable. I feel very, very fortunate to shoot a 68," said Strange, who missed putts of six feet or less on the first two holes.

"After that, going one-over on the first two holes, I kind of slapped myself up 'side the head and said, 'Hey, boy, you got to get going,' " Strange said.

The long-hitting Love converted a very fast start — birdies on five of the first seven holes — into a 66 and second place at 206, four under par with one round to go in the chase for a $144,000 first prize.

Kite, the veteran who has a history of success on this course, pitched in for an eagle-3 on the 16th hole on the way to a 65 that put him in a tie for third at 208 with Bobby Wadkins and South African PGA champion Fulton Allem.

Wadkins had a 70 and Allem a 67.

"I let a lot of 'em get away coming in," Love said of his game after his quick start. "And I made some mental errors. But I'm very pleased to get in with a 66."

After 54 holes, those were the only five men under par. Australian Greg Norman, with a 71 despite severe putting problems, was in a group of seven at par 210.

Strange's poor start, and a birdie-birdie-birdie beginning by Love put them in a front-side tie. But Strange regained the lead with 20-foot birdie putts on three of four holes before the turn, then threatened to run away from the pack when a 30-foot putt found the cup on the 14th.

But he missed a couple putts in the 10-12 foot range on the 16th and 17th, then drove into the rough and bogeyed the 18th.

Kite, who has finished 10th or better in eight of the last 10 years this tournament has been held, stroked a 150-yard, 7-iron shot into the cup on the 625-yard 16th, the par-5 known as "The Monster."

It was the first eagle on that hole in 21 years of World Series play.

"A little bit lucky," Kite said.

Third-round scores Saturday in the $800,000 World Series of Golf on the 7,138 yard, par-70 Firestone Country Club course:

Concern Areas Are Improved

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

(Editor's Note: This is the last of a series of stories on the outlook for the 1987 East Carolina University football team.)

There were several areas of concern when East Carolina's football Pirates finished up spring drills, and these were on the minds of head coach Art Baker and his staff when fall practice began.

Now, with less than a week remaining before the opener against N.C. State, Baker is hopeful that some of the problems have been solved.

There were three real areas of concern — quarterback, defensive secondary and depth in both the offensive and defensive lines. The first two appear to have improved, but the latter still remains a question mark.

"We went into the last two seasons without a proven quarterback," Baker said. "That makes it tough to win against the schedule we play.

"But now we feel that we have two quarterbacks who have proven that we can win at times with them. They are still only sophomores, but we're satisfied and comfortable with them. Charlie (Libretto) is (performing) better at running the option game and Travis (Hunter) is (performaning) better at the passing game. And both of them are better mentally."

And there is a bonus to it too — Brad Walsh has improved greatly at quarterback and Baker said he had confidence in him running the offense, even in the opener, if needed.

"Our secondary is an area that's been picked on the most," Baker said, adding that the secondary is not entirely to blame. "The rush and underneath coverage has to share some of the blame," he said. "We've made a special effort to put our best athletes back there."

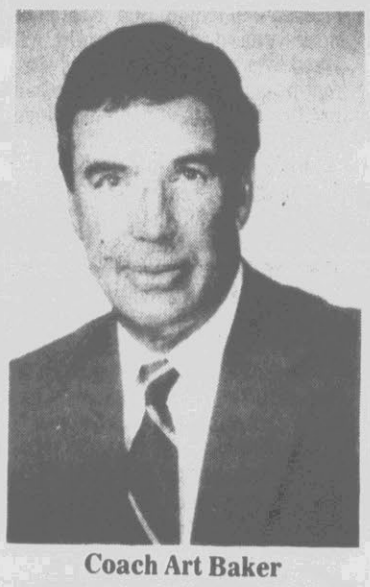
Brian Haywood, a junior college transfer, has come in and performed in pre-season drills exactly as the coaches hoped that he would. "He's worked his way into a starting (free safety) position and he is an outstanding prospect," Baker said. "Ellis (Dillahunt) has had a good preseason at both corner and safety, although we would prefer to play him at safety.

"Junior Robinson has just come on and played very well. He's had a number of interceptions, returning one of them for a touchdown," Baker continued. "He's an exceptional athlete, but he has no experience."

At the other corner, it will probably be Ricky Torain and Ed Brogden. Flint McCallum, another possible starter, is injured and may not be available for State. Also injured is last year's starter Roswell Streeter.

"We've had some newcomers look good too," Baker said, citing Donald Porch, Richard Wright and Al Whiting.

"The biggest area of concern going in is still in the lines," Baker said. "If everyone were well, I think we'd be okay. But we've had some injuries that could hurt us there. For instance, Billy Maxwell had a great spring, but got hurt late and probably is going to be out for the season. Walter Bryant has a shoulder injury. Mike Donohue has had several problems, and Stewart Southall is banged up."



Coach Art Baker

Mike Applewhite and Medrick Rainbow have both enjoyed good falls in the defensive line, and Bruce Simpson has also looked good.

On offense, Kyle Condrey has apparently settled in at center, while Carl Carney will be his backup. At the guard positions, Billy Michel has played well as has Southall. Joe Molineaux has come back well from a spring injury.

"We have more depth at the (offensive) tackles with John O'Driscoll, Grant Lowe, Leon Hall and Todd Drugac," Baker said. "But we just lack experience."

Baker is pleased with the play at linebackers, noting that both Vinson Smith and Bubba Waters are looking good inside. Outside, however, Anthony Thompson still has not returned to practice after an early injury. Brian McPhatter, switched from offense, is doing well at an outside position. "We have four people who will play outside, McPhatter, John Williamson and Willie Powell, while Ernie Logan may be the best looking of them all."

Baker is pleased with the offensive backfield, too, noting that Tim James is running almost as well at fullback as Anthony Simpson. Reggie McKinney and Jarrod Moody are doing a good job at running back, along with Willie Lewis, Denell Harper and Carl Barkers, according to Baker.

He has been pleased with the play of Walter Wilson, Tony Smith, Don Gaylor and Bojack Davenport a the wide receiver slots. He also noted that freshman Terry Bennett has done well.

East Carolina's punter of two years ago, Tim Wolter, has returned from an injury that sidelined him all last season. Baker, however, says he still has not returned to full form. He is battling with Craig Losito, who punted last year. Placekicker Chuck Berleth, who missed the spring due to back surgery, appears back in form, having already booted several from the near-50-yard range.

"The bottom line is always going to be talent," Baker said. "And our talent level is the best it's been in a several years. That doesn't mean that you can't win with less talent. I think N.C. State showed that last year. They beat several teams that had more talent. But State had confidence in its ability and they got momemtum at the right time. Too, luck is somewhat of a factor also.

"I think we have to have a good positive, confident attitude," Baker said. "I think the players feel good about themselves now and in the work they are doing. Our goal is to have a winning season, but there is no one game that is a life-or-death situation for us.

"Sure, N.C. State is our biggest rival and the game means a lot, but we don't want (the team) to feel that they've failed if we don't win the game. But I think we are capable of winning in every game we play."

Baker said that he was very disappointed in the two successive 2-9 seasons his teams have posted. (ECU has had three in a row at 2-9, the first under Ed Emory.)

"I think we could have done better with a few breaks here and there. But I don't think there is any pressure on me except that that I put on myself because I feel that our fans have been patient and understanding with our schedule. The worst thing would be for our fans to get down on our players."

Baker and the Pirates face another tough schedule this year, and while things appear better, the record may not reflect the overall improvement.

Taiwan Again Is Series Champion

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — Pang Yu-Long hit a grand slam and a two-run homer as Hua Lian, Taiwan defeated Irvine, Calif., 21-1 Saturday, continuing the Far East's domination of the Little League World Series championship with the most lopsided score in its 40-year history.

Teams from the Far East have now won 17 of the last 21 Little League championship games.

Yu-Long hit the grand slam in a nine-run second inning, and added the two-run homer in the seven-run third. Lin Yi-Hung and Wang Chi-Kwou each added two-run homers in the third.

Three teams have won the series championship by 12-0 scores, most recently last year when Tainan Park, Taiwan, defeated Tucson, Ariz.

Hua Lian also broke the record for the most runs scored, previously held by Williamsport, Pa., in its 16-7 win over Lock Haven, Pa., in the first World Series championship in 1947.

Aron Garcia, who had allowed one run in the previous 60 innings, faced 30 batters in the first 2 2-3 innings, allowing 13 hits and issuing six walks and four wild pitches as Hua Lian took a 21-1 lead.

Ryan O'Toole followed with 2 1-3 innings of scoreless relief for Irvine, a community 35 miles southeast of Los Angeles representing the U.S. West in the eight-team tournament.

Yi-Hung went the distance for Hua Lian, allowing six hits while striking out nine and walking two.

Irvine scored its only run in the top of the third inning when Geoff Ebdon stole home after Garcia drew catcher Shih Gin-Shou's throw to second. David Lambert led off the inning with a double. Ebdon then walked and Garcia reached on a fielder's choice when shortstop Chen Wen-Shian fielded a grounder and tagged Lambert out on his way to third.

Wen-Shian then threw wildly to second base in a double-play attempt and Ebdon wound up on third and Garcia on second.

Hua Lian, 16-0, reached the finals by blanking a mostly American team from Dharhan, Saudi Arabia, 7-0, in the quarterfinals Tuesday and edging Moca, Dominican Republic, 4-0, in an eight-inning semifinal game completed Friday after being called because of darkness Thursday.

Irvine, 18-1, earned a berth in the championship game by trouncing Dover, N.H., 11-0 in the quarterfinals Wednesday on a no-hitter by Garcia and defeating Chesterfield, Ind., 8-1 Thursday in the semifinals. Taiwan has now won two consecutive championships and 12 of its 14 Little League World Series appearances.

Big 8 Duo Atop Starting Pack

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

The Big Eight, which probably has the greatest inequality between the contenders and also-rans of any conference, probably should be known as the Big Two.

Not only have Oklahoma and Nebraska either won all or a share of the conference championship in 41 of the last 44 years, but they were voted the top two teams in the nation in the Associated Press preseason college football poll.

"We're going to be awfully disappointed if we don't contend for the national championship," Coach Barry Switzer says. "Being No. 1 is always our goal."

Switzer says the 1987 Sooners, with 15 starters back, are basically "the same team it was in 1985 when we won the national championship. Now they're seniors and juniors and a lot more experienced."

The wishbone attack is run by quarterback Jamelle Holieway and the offense features a pair of first-team All-Americans in tight end Keith Jackson and guard Mark Hutson. The interior line probably is the best in the country and there are plenty of outstanding runners.

The defense, however, probably won't be as stingy as last year's which led the nation in all four major categories.

Nebraska has won at least nine games for 18 consecutive years but the Cornhuskers are coming off an embarrassing third-place conference finish. They must replace 13 starters, including most of the offensive line. Quarterback Steve Taylor and tailback Keith Jones will put points on the scoreboard and the defense returns end Broderick Thomas, one of the best.

Any challenge to the Big Two in the Big Eight will come from Colorado, which has 16 starters from the team that beat Nebraska, or Oklahoma State.

UCLA, No. 3 in the preseason poll, is the favorite in the Pac-10 Conference. The Bruins are seeking their fourth Pac-10 title in six years with 12 returning starters and a whopping 56 lettermen, including record-breaking tailback Gaston Green (1,445 yards and 17 touchdowns a year ago).

UCLA's strength, however, will be a defense led by linebackers Ken Norton and Eric Smith, nose guard Terry Tumey and free safety James Washington. The quarterback could be Troy Aikman, a transfer from Oklahoma, which wouldn't let him throw the ball.

Washington, defending champ Arizona State and Southern Cal also made the preseason Top Twenty.

Washington returns seven starters on each side of the ball, including Chris Chandler, who Coach Don James calls "potentially the best quarterback we've ever had." Chandler threw 20 touchdown passes last year. The defense is keyed by tackle Dennis Brown and linebackers David Rill, Tom Erlandson and Bo Yates.

A year ago, Arizona State, according to Coach John Cooper, "had three goals — win the national championship, win the Pac-10 championship and win the Rose Bowl." They settled for two out of three, including their first Pac-10 championship.

Cooper's main task is choosing one of four redshirt quarterbacks to replace starter Jeff Van Raaphorst. Tailback Darryl Harris, fullback Channing Williams and split end Aaron Cox are offensive weapons but the Sun Devils must replace six starters on defense.

Larry Smith, late of Arizona, is Southern Cal's new coach. He inherited a solid nucleus, including a scrambling quarterback in Rodney Peete, who threw for 2,138 yards last year, and a great outside linebacker in Marcus Cotton.

Despite the loss of All-American receiver Cris Carter, who was ruled ineligible for taking money from an agent, Ohio State is the favorite in the Big Ten. The Buckeyes have two awesome linebackers in All-American Chris Spielman and Eric Kumerow.

"A Big Ten team is not going to win the national title," says Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler. "The competition is too keen."

Ohio State's Earle Bruce points out that the Buckeyes "have been in position to win the national championship a few times, but we either lost to Michigan or got knocked off in a bowl game. We've come close."

Michigan and Iowa should give the Buckeyes a run for their money and Michigan State has more returning starters (17) than anyone in the conference.

Iowa has won at least eight games in each of the last six seasons and four returnees have won all-conference honors — tailback Rick Bayless, placekicker Rob Houghtlin, offensive lineman Bob Kratch and nose guard Dave Haight. The Hawkeyes have high hopes for 6-foot-8 quarterback Dan McGwire, brother of Oakland Athletics slugger Mark.

Michigan lost quarterback Jim Harbaugh but returns seven starters on each side of the ball, including tailback Jamie Morris, bidding to become the first Wolverine runner with three thousand-yard seasons, and the entire defensive line.

Auburn and LSU loom as the top two teams in the Southeastern Conference, although Tennessee, Florida and Georgia also made the Top Twenty.

Auburn returns 15 starters now that quarterback Jeff Burger has regained his eligibility. The Tigers' strength is on defense, especially up front. LSU has a new coach in 34-year-old Mike Archer and he inherited 49 lettermen, including 15 starters. Quarterback Tom Hodson, wideout Wendell Davis and tailback Harvey Williams key an explosive offense.

Tennessee has plenty of speed and a passing combination of Jeff Francis to Anthony Miller that will play havoc with opposing defenses. Quarterback Kerwin Bell should keep Florida in every game but the Gators have no depth and could be in big trouble if Bell gets hurt. Georgia's 15 returning starters include quarterback James Jackson and tailback Lars Tate.

Four independent teams made the Top Twenty — Florida State, Miami of Florida, defending national champion Penn State and Notre Dame.

"If you're talking about a national championship contender, we're not strong anywhere," says Penn State Coach Joe Paterno. "We have to literally rebuild our defense, our offense, our whole kicking game. I don't think we've ever had as many areas that we've got to almost start from scratch at as we have with this group."

Paterno will scratch with quarterback Matt Knizner ("I think Knizner will be the best quarterback in the East"); tailback Blair Thomas, who averaged a school record 8.4 yards per carry last year ("Blair can do everything"), an offensive which Paterno says "has a chance to be better than any we've had in the last couple of years," a superb inside linebacking tandem of Trey Bauer and Pete Giftopoulos and Eddie Johnson ("The best corner we've ever had").

Pitt and Boston College could challenge for Eastern honors.

Florida State returns 54 of 66 lettermen. The Seminolea are three-deep at quarterback and tailback and the defense has two all-stars in linebacker Paul McGowan and cornerback Deion Sanders.

Now that Heisman Trophy winner Vinny Testaverde has departed, Miami will do it with a defense that returns eight starters, including All-American safety Bennie Blades and nonpareil pass-rusher Daniel Stubbs. Michael Irvin is an outstanding wide receiver.

Notre Dame has one of the nation's most exciting performers in wideout-running back-kick returner Tim Brown, who set a school record with 1,937 all-purpose yards. Second-year Coach Lou Holtz has finally got Gerry Faust's leftovers in the right positions.

Clemson, which is deep in both lines, and North Carolina, which has quarterback Mark Maye and a bunch of all-star candidates, are the best in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

In the Southwest Conference, Arkansas, which hasn't been to the Cotton Bowl since 1976 but has speed to burn, is favored to snap Texas A&M's two-year hold on the title after finishing second the last two seasons. However, Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield said that "Texas A&M probably should be the favorite even without (quarterback) Kevin Murray," who opted for the NFL draft.

The return of running back James Rouse, SWC Newcomer of the Year in 1985, buoys the Razorbacks. Quarterback Greg Thomas rarely throws an interception and the defense is led by noseguard Tony Cherico.

Craig Stump has some experience as Murray's backup and Texas A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill says the Aggies "have the chance to be good offensively this year, but it will take some time."

Baylor is rebuilding and Texas has some firepower despite winning only five games a year ago.

Brigham Young had its string of 10 Western Athletic Conference championships snapped by San Diego State but the Cougars are favored to make it 10 of 11. San Diego quarterback Todd Santos is poised for a run at Doug Flutie's major-college passing record.

Miami of Ohio will have difficulty defending its Mid-American Conference title. The Redskins lost four starters on defense and six on offense. Kent State, Eastern Michigan and Toledo appear to be the strength in a well-balanced league but Bowling Green, Ball State or Central Michigan could contend.

In the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, defending champion San Jose State, led by quarterback Mike Perez, is the team to beat. Perez led the nation in total offense last season with 329.9 yards per game.

Commissioner Ponders Where Does The SWC Go From Here

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Fred Jacoby didn't know what he was getting into when he left the peaceful Mid-American Conference to become commissioner of the frenetic Southwest Conference on Nov. 1, 1982.

He does now.

Houston — Under preliminary NCAA inquiry.

Southern Methodist — In the jailhouse without a football program for two years, the first school ever to get hit with the NCAA's "death penalty" for major football violations.

Texas — A two-year probation without sanctions, although scholarships have been cut from 25 to 20 next year. The probation can be reduced to one year if the university follows steps outlined by the president to prevent a reoccurrence.

Texas A&M — Results of an internal investigation have been turned over to the NCAA.

Texas Christian — A three-year probation through May 1989. Bowl and TV sanctions have expired, although TCU was permitted to give only 10 football scholarships this year and 15 in 1988.

Texas Tech — A one-year probation through February 1988, with a loss of three scholarships next year.

SMU's probation was a record seventh against the Dallas school by the NCAA.

It was never like this for Jacoby in the Mid-American Conference.

"I was 1,200 miles away," he says of the SWC. "Being a former assistant coach at Wisconsin, I knew that obviously the recruiting was intense. I was equating in my mind that it would be somewhat like the Big Ten. I was mistaken.

"Where I made my error was that the intensity of recruiting here is higher. Eight of the nine conference members are in Texas (87 percent of the players are from in-state). There are more than 1,100 high schools in Texas and there's a wealth of talent."

At the NCAA convention in January 1986, the SWC proposed a ban on recruiting by boosters. It never got to the voting stage.

"We saw it was going to be defeated, so we tabled it and came back with it at the 1987 convention," Jacoby said. "No one spoke against it and it passed by a show of hands without dissent."

The new rule prohibits boosters — alumni or otherwise — from doing any recruiting.

"I look at it as a triangle," Jacoby says. "At the top of the triangle is the coach. On one side, the coach is recruiting the prospect; on the other side, he's recruiting a booster to help recruit the prospect. At the bottom, the booster is recruiting the prospect.

'You have five, six, seven conference schools, plus the Oklahomas, Iowas, UCLAs, BYUs, LSUs, Georgias recruiting the same prospect. You have booster recruiting against booster. I'd like to see it as a straight line from the coach to the prospect. That way, you can pinpoint the responsibility.

"There's no quick fix. We have to correct what we have and see that we don't have any violations. That's the best thing of all. We won't know the results for a few years, but I'm optimistic it can be done. I really don't know why an adult wants to chase an 18-year-old.

"Years ago, the private schools were doing very, very well, especially Rice and SMU. Some boosters are old enough to remember the good old days, and they're frustrated and they want to compete again. Really, what it is is misguided loyalty."

You can tell somebody what he can or can't do until you're blue in the face, but that won't necessarily stop him from breaking a rule, he says.

"Meetings are fine, and that's what we're doing at each school," Jacoby says. "But you don't need the rule book to know that it's wrong to give somebody a car or cash or something else. You don't need the rule book to know what a major violation is. If you turn a rock over and there's something under it, there's no excuse for that.

"I'm not smart enough to know how to legislate integrity and morality but where the correcting has to be done is at our institutions, and all of them are doing that."

Including SMU, which Jacoby expects to resume football in 1989, although it will take a while for the Mustangs to be able to compete with other SWC schools. The NCAA canceled SMU's 1987 season and the school declined a seven-game road schedule in 1988.

SMU plans to hire an athletic director by October and the athletic director will hire a football coach.

"They can sign 15 players next year and 25 in 1989," Jacoby says. "That means they would go into the 1989 season with 40 scholarship players, plus walk-ons.

McGwire's 40th Lifts A's To Win

TORONTO (AP) — Mark McGwire's 40th homer of the season in the 10th inning Saturday gave him the American League lead. But more importantly to McGuire, it also won the game.

McGwire's homer off Mark Eichhorn, 10-6, spoiled the Blue Jays' comeback after Oakland scored five times in the first inning.

"I don't even think about it," said McGwire. "I've never even put myself in the position where I thought I would lead the American League in home runs.

McGuire's homer put him one in front of Toronto's George Bell. But both players said their individual goals weren't important.

"George Bell is a great hitter," said McGwire. "I love watching George Bell hit. Whatever happens, happens."

Bell, second to McGwire with 39 homers, said: "I don't care about McGwire. The main thing is, we just have to win some games."

Toronto completed a comeback from Oakland's five-run first inning to tie the score 5-5 with a run in the ninth. Tony Fernandez grounded a two-strike, two-out RBI single to left off winner Eric Plunk, 2-4.

"What Fernandez did there was professional hitting," said Oakland manager Tony LaRussa. "He put his bat out and stroked it into the hole. A lot of guys would have tried to be a hero and turned on it, (only to) end up grounding it out to second."

In the Oakland first, Luis Polonia singled and Jose Canseco walked before Carney Lansford hit Phil Niekro's first pitch for a his 17th homer. McGwire also had an RBI triple in the inning and scored on Mickey Tettleton's single.

"I've always been streaky for hitting home runs," said Lansford, who twisted his ankle later in the game but expects to play Sunday. "I don't go up there thinking home run, but with men in scoring position, I like to be aggressive on the first pitch."

Niekro, 0-3 since being traded to Toronto from Cleveland, was replaced by John Cerutti with two outs in the first.

"I know I feel awful strong every time I've been going out there," said Niekro. "Maybe I'm throwing it too hard or something, trying to force everything. I just couldn't get the change of speed going today."

Gene Nelson making his fourth start after 41 relief appearances, pitched five innings for the the A's.

Toronto drew within 5-4 in the fifth when Rick Leach hit an RBI double off Plunk. Plunk, the third pitcher of the inning, struck out Gruber with runners on second and third to end the inning.

Toronto scored in the third when Lloyd Moseby singled, stole second, and scored on Fernandez's infield single. Second baseman Tony Bernazard tried to short-hop the high bouncer but it got past him, allowing Moseby to score.

Gruber followed Leach's single in the fifth with his 11th homer of the season.

Toronto's Lloyd Moseby and Lansford were injured on the same play in the fifth. Fernandez, the shortstop, and center fielder Moseby collided chasing Dwayne Murphy's shallow pop and both players were down for several minutes.

The game drew 42,388 bringing Toronto's 1987 attendance to 2,031,143. It is the fourth consecutive season the Blue Jays have attracted more than two million fans.

California 6
Baltimore..... 5

The 39-year-old California catcher beat out an infield chopper to set up the tie-breaking single by Ruppert Jones in the eighth inning as the Angels defeated the Baltimore Orioles 6-5 Saturday.

Boone, who also had two doubles and two RBI, earlier alertly stretched a single into a double and then scored on a two-out single by Dick Schofield.

"I figure I get one of those every three years," Boone said of his infield hit. "I guess it was because I had four innings off last night."

As for his fourth inning double, Boone said: "The ball was in the gap and Sheets (rightfielder Larry Sheets) was going the other way, so I just went. I haven't lost my speed...it's coming back."

Baltimore Manager Cal Ripken Sr., however, was critical of Sheets on the play.

"I don't feel Larry came after the ball real well," Ripken said. "It looked like he assumed it was going to be a single, but evidently Boone saw him lazily play the ball and kept right on going."

In the eighth, after beating the throw from third baseman Ray Knight, Boone advanced on a groundout by Schofield. Then Jones, who came out of a 3-for-21 slump with two hits, singled off Mark Williamson, 8-9.

The winner was Willie Fraser, 8-8, the third California pitcher, who went the last 3 1-3 innings, allowing one hit, as the Angels snapped a nine-game losing streak against Baltimore and beat the Orioles for only the second time in 11 games this season.

A two-run single by Bill Ripken, who drove in three runs, capped a three-run rally in the sixth when the Orioles tied the score at 5-5.

Sheets doubled to start the rally, moved to third on a single by Ray Knight, and scored on Mike Young's groundout.

A walk to Floyd Rayford finished starter Kirk McCaskill. Reliever Gary Lucas yielded a pinch single to Lee Lacy, loading the bases, before Ripken grounded a two-run single to center.

Ripken also had an RBI groundout in the first and Eddie Murray had an RBI single in the fourth before popping out with the bases loaded in the fifth.

The Angels took a 3-1 lead in the fourth and made it 5-2 in the sixth, with all five runs knocked in by the last three batters in the lineup.

Devon White, stuck in a 7-for-63 slump, had a two-run triple to put the Angels ahead 2-1 in the fourth. He then scored on a single by Boone, who was 4-for-40.

Boone also doubled home a run in the sixth off starter Mike Boddicker and scored on a single by Schofield.

Boston 2-1

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cory Snyder hit a solo home run with one out in the bottom of the ninth inning and Rich Yett pitched a two-hitter, leading the Cleveland Indians over the Boston Red Sox 2-1 Saturday and a sweep of their doubleheader.

Cleveland snapped a five-game losing streak in the opener as Tom Candiotti pitched the Indians to a 7-2 victory with a complete-game five-hitter. Pat Tabler and Mel Hall each hit three-run homers for the Indians.

Snyder's 30th homer of the season was lined over the right-center field fence on a 1-1 pitch from starter Bruce Hurst, 14-9. Snyder, who is the only Indian other than Andre Thornton to hit 30 home runs in a season since 1966, had doubled in the seventh inning to break a 5-for-55 batting slump.

Yett, 3-5, pitched his first complete game of the season while striking out five and walking three. The right-hander surrendered only two bloop singles to Mike Greenwell and the run he allowed was unearned.

Both Hurst, who allowed six hits, and Yett allowed only one hit through the first six innings. The Red Sox took a 1-0 lead with an unearned run in the seventh.

George Says He's Sorry

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees Manager Lou Piniella apologized to owner George Steinbrenner on Saturday, one day after they spoke for the first time in four weeks.

Steinbrenner and Piniella had been feuding for nearly a month. The dispute began when Piniella was not in his hotel room in Cleveland on Aug. 2 to receive a scheduled telephone call from Steinbrenner regarding the status of catcher Joel Skinner.

"I should've been in my hotel room when he called," Piniella said. "It was my decision to make and I made a mistake. I apologize for it."

Piniella and Steinbrenner met for two hours before Friday night's game against Seattle, the first time they had talked since Aug. 4. Piniella said the discussion was held to "clear the air."

Hurst, who had allowed his second hit in the seventh inning, then surrendered a lead off home run to Tommy Hinzo in the eighth inning to tie the score.

In the first game, Candiotti, 7-13, walked four and struck out three as he pitched his fifth complete game. Bob Stanley went the route for his fourth complete game, but saw his record drop to 4-13 as he surrendered eight hits, although only four Cleveland runs were earned.

Tabler gave Cleveland a 3-0 lead in the third inning when he hit his 11th home run following singles by Brett Butler and Julio Franco.

Dwight Evans hit his 31st home run, giving him a career high 105 RBI to pull Boston within 3-1 in the fourth.

Hall increased the Indians' lead to 6-1 in the fifth with a three-run shot, his 11th homer and first since July 20.

Wade Boggs singled and scored on a Jim Rice single in the Boston sixth, before Cleveland got the run back in the bottom of the inning when Butler walked, stole second and scored on Franco's single.

Seattle.....7
New York.....1

NEW YORK (AP) — Mark Langston pitched a six-hitter Saturday and the Seattle Mariners beat the New York Yankees 7-1 in the first game of a doubleheader.

Langston, 15-10, struck out eight and walked three en route to his 12th complete game. Langston, who had pitched two perfect innings Thursday in a game that was rained out, blanked the Yankees until Ron Kittle's 11th home run leading off the seventh. Langston leads the major leagues with 208 strikeouts.

The Mariners got 14 hits off Rick Rhoden, Pete Filson and Tim Stoddard in sending New York to its third straight loss.

Rhoden, 15-9, gave up Jim Presley's double and Mike Kingery's RBI single in the second before leaving after two innings because of stiffness in his right shoulder.

Alvin Davis singled home a run in the third off Filson, who was recalled from Class AAA Columbus earlier in the day. Scott Bradley hit an RBI double in the sixth and scored on Harold Reynolds' single.

Phil Bradley hit his 13th home run in the seventh, his first homer on the road this year. The Mariners made it 7-1 in the ninth on Mickey Brantley's RBI double and Gary Matthews' run-scoring single.

Mariners Manager Dick Williams put the game under protest after the lights were turned on with New York batting in the third inning as the afternoon shadows crept across the field. An American League directive precludes the lights from being turned on in the middle of an inning unless the players' safety is in danger.

Bullock In Ham's Spot

STATESBORO, Ga. (AP) — Coach Erk Russell on Saturday named junior Ken Bullock to replace Tracy Ham as Georgia Southern's quarterback, but Russell said Bullock is not expected to fill Ham's shoes.

Ham, now with the Edmonton Eskimos of the Canadian Football League, led the Eagles to two straight NCAA Division I-AA national football titles. He became the first player ever to rush for 3,000 yards and pass for 5,000 yards in a collegiate career.

"Our offense is not as productive as the last two seasons," Russell said. "I don't know how it could be. Ken has shown good effort and even though we don't expect him to put 40 points on the board every game, like Tracy Ham did last year, we still have confidence in him."

Winning Ugly OK For Magrane

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Joe Magrane has pitched well and lost in recent outings, but he'll take winning ugly any day.

'I had nothing to complain about today," the St. Louis rookie lefthander said after snapping a personal four-game losing streak in the Cardinals' 4-2 victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday. 'It goes to show you the unpredictability of the game."

Prior to Saturday, Magrane, 7-6, had allowed two runs each in back-to-back seven-inning outings, but lost both. The Braves reached him for 10 hits in 6 1-3 innings, but he escaped bases-loaded jams in the second and fifth innings without damage.

"I'm probably coming close to turning (manager) Whitey Herzog's hair from white to gray with all the baserunners," said Magrane. "The last three times out, all three have been good enough to win, so this one was really important for me."

It was only the second victory since June 21 for Magrane, who began the season with five straight wins.

The Cardinals gave Magrane a four-run cushion in the first, bunching three of their five hits. Willie McGee had a two-run double, extending his hitting streak to 10 games, and rookie Lance Johnson added a two-run single.

St. Louis struggled the rest of the way against loser Charlie Puleo, 5-7, and two relievers, but Atlanta, which had 12 hits, ended up stranding 13 runners. In the last two games, the Braves have outhit the Cardinals 23-13, but have lost both times.

"We played everything right, and their pitchers wouldn't let us win," said Braves manager Chuck Tanner. "Every time they had to make the big play, they got it."

Atlanta came close in the ninth. With two outs, Gerald Perry singled, Dale Murphy hit a ground-rule double and pinch-hitter Ken Griffey was intentionally walked as Herzog used relievers Bob Forsch, Ken Dayley and Todd Worrell.

Worrell earned his 27th save by retiring pinch-hitter Ted Simmons on a shallow fly to left as Vince Coleman made a sprawling catch to end the game.

"I was just trying to keep Murphy from coming up," Herzog said. "It looked like it was going to work."

Coleman stole three bases, raising his major-league leading total to 88. The Cardinals now have stolen 200 bases for six consecutive seasons.

The Braves knocked out Magrane in the seventh. Leadoff hitter Albert Hall walked, stole second, advanced to third on an infield grounder and scored on a double by Perry.

Reliever Bob Forsch came on to get Murphy on a called third strike. After walking Gary Roenicke, he retired Ozzie Virgil on an infield groundout to end the inning.

San Francisco.....9
New York.....1

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Candy Maldonado tied a major-league record with three sacrifice flies Saturday to lead San Francisco to a 9-1 victory over the New York Mets.

Atlee Hammaker and Kelly Downs combined on an eight-hitter for the Giants, who took a three-game lead over second-place Houston in the National League West. The Astros play the Pirates Saturday night in Pittsburgh.

Hammaker, 9-9, pitched the first seven innings and gave up five hits. Downs took over in the eighth and completed the shutout, which dropped the Mets 5½ games behind division-leading St. Louis in the NL East.

Maldonado hit sacrifice flies in the first, fifth, and seventh innings to tie a record shared by six other players. Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees was the last player to accomplish the feat, on May 3, 1986.

Mets starter Sid Fernandez, 10-8, faced only two batters before leaving the game with a sore left shoulder.

The Giants jumped out to a 5-0 lead in the first inning after loading the bases on singles by Robbie Thompson, Kevin Mitchell and Bob Brenly.

After Maldonado's sacrifice fly made it 1-0, Chili Davis was intentionally walked to reload the bases. Pinch-hitter Will Clark then lined a two-run single to right. Mike Aldrete's single and Jose Uribe's squeeze bunt drove in the final two runs of the inning.

The Giants added a run in the fifth when Mitchell tripled and scored on Maldonado's sacrifice fly. San Francisco scored two more runs in the seventh off reliever Jesse Orosco on sacrifice flies by Brenly and Maldonado.

The four sacrifice flies by the Giants tied a major-league record for most sacrifice flies in a game by one team.

Angels Trade For Ray

BALTIMORE (AP) — The California Angels, in a move to strengthen the club for the American League West pennant stretch, acquired veteran second baseman Johnny Ray from the Pittsburgh Pirates Saturday.

In exchange, the Angels gave up minor-league infielder Bill Merrifield and a player to be named later.

To make room for Ray, the Angels optioned rookie second baseman Mark McLemore to Palm Springs in the Class A California League.

McLemore, batting .230, won't be eligible for postseason play but Manager Gene Mauch said he would be back with the Angels after the roster is expanded on Sept. 1.

"It's nice to acquire a player of that stature," Mauch said of Ray, "without losing someone off your present roster.

"He has been, is, and will be a first-class player. I consider him an all-star caliber second baseman. He'll be in the lineup on Sunday."

McLemore had taken over the second base job this season after Bobby Grich retired following the 1986 AL playoffs. McLemore, 22, has slumped at the bat the second half of the season and also has committed 17 errors.

Ray, 30, entered the season with a .288 batting average in five-plus seasons with Pittsburgh. This season, he is hitting .273, with 54 runs batted in.

"I'm not going to put him (McLemore) down because of the deal," Mauch said, noting that Ray was "a hell of a player."

"We are quite proud of the hard effort put forth by Mark in his first season with California," said General Manager Mike Port, "and anticipate a fine future ahead for him. At this point, we need to bolster our offense and we feel Johnny is that type of player."

Although they have lost seven of their last 11 games and have only a 64-66 record, the Angels remain only 3½ games behind first-place Oakland in the AL West.

Merrifield, 25, has been in the California organization since 1983. With Edmonton of the Class AAA Pacific Coast League this season, he is batting .285, with 29 doubles, 18 homers and 74 RBI.

Long Talk Paying Off For Golfer Jane Geddes

BUFORD, Ga. (AP) — Jane Geddes, a five-time winner on the LPGA Tour this season but mired in a mild slump since the U.S. Open, said Saturday she had a long talk with herself Friday night — and it paid off.

Geddes sank a 60-foot birdie putt and also had an eagle to highlight a 5-under-par 67 that gave her a share of the lead with Japan's Ayako Okamoto after the third round of the $250,000 World Championship of Women's Golf.

"I came in here and didn't feel like a champion," Geddes said. "I didn't have a lot of confidence in myself. I was beating myself up unmercifully, and my caddy.

"I teed it up today and said, 'Listen, you're a good player. Show yourself something.'"

Okamoto shot a third-round 73 to match Geddes' 54-hole score of 5-under 211 on the hilly, 6,073-yard PineIsle Resort golf course.

Geddes, currently No. 2 on the money list, said there was a lot of pressure in this chase for the richest first prize in LPGA history, an $81,500 check that would enable any of three players to take a strong step toward winning the 1987 money title.

Okamoto's round Saturday included four birdies, three bogeys and a double bogey when her second shot caught the water on No. 5.

"Even from my practice shots, it was not too good," Okamoto. "After I made birdied on the 11th, I fell much better and relaxed.

"I'll just have to play my best golf tomorrow," Okamoto said.

"Overall, I played very, very well," Geddes said after completing her round more than a half-hour before Okamoto finished. "I had a lot better attitude today."

Geddes got her 60-foot birdie putt on the par-4 No. 10 and capped her round by sinking a 12-footer for an eagle-3 on the 405-yard 16th.

Geddes, who played a bogey-free round, also birdied from 10 feet on No. 3 and two-putted from 25-30-feet for another birdie on No. 5.

Okamoto birdied the fourth hole to get to 7-under at that point, but then had a double bogey 7 on No. 5. She also bogeyed Nos. 7 and 8, but did rally with three birdies on the back side before taking a bogey 4 on No. 15.

Colleen Walker, who has won only once in her six years on the tour, moved to within one shot of the lead with a 70-212, and missed her shot at sharing the lead when she three-putted for par on No. 16.

Laurie Rinker, brother of PGA golfer Larry Rinker, shot a 71 and was alone at 214, three shots off the pace.

Chris Johnson, who started the day tied for 10th place, had the second-best round of the day, a 68 that put her in a tie at 215 with King, the season's leading money-winner, who struggled to a 74.

Kay Cockerill, the two-time U.S. Women's Amateur champion who led the first day, fell further back in the pack with a 74-217.

Grogan Throws Three TD Passes; Collins Scores

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Steve Grogan completed 17 of 22 passes for 277 yards and three touchdowns, including an 80-yard bomb to Stanley Morgan on the Patriots' first play from scrimmage Saturday, and New England held on for a 38-27 NFL preseason victory over the Minnesota Vikings.

Vikings quarterback Tommy Kramer had problems in his 1987 debut after spending 28 days in treatment for alcohol abuse. He was 3-for-10 for 53 yards and fumbled four times, losing two in the second quarter when the Patriots rallied from a 14-10 deficit. Kramer left the game with 7:11 remaining in the third quarter with a pinched nerve in his neck.

Grogan opened the game by handing off to Mosi Tatupu, who was immediately wrapped up by Minnesota's Chris Doleman. Before going down, however, Tatupu pitched back to Grogan, who hit the wide-open Morgan for the score.

Tony Franklin's 34-yard field goal made it 10-0, but the Vikings pulled within 10-7 on Wade Wilson's 7-yard pass to Allen Rice.

Wilson, Kramer's backup for six years but a starter in preseason, then passed for 77 yards in an 80-yard drive culminated by Ted Brown's 1-yard plunge. Wilson finished 9-for-12 for 159 yards.

Kramer entered with 6:29 left in the half but fumbled his second snap and the Patriots took over. Grogan, starting in place of the injured Tony Eason, took advantage immediately, completing three passes to set up Tony Collins' 2-yard touchdown run.

On Minnesota's next possession, Kramer fumbled when hit by Don Blackmon, and Grogan followed with a 28-yard scoring pass to Stephen Starring with 13 seconds left for a 24-14 halftime lead.

Grogan's third-quarter 57-yard touchdown pass to Cedric Jones made it 31-14 before Minnesota pulled within 31-27 on two Rich Gannon-to-Carl Hilton scoring passes. Bob Perryman's 1-yard run closed out the scoring for New England.

Sprint Showdown Set For Sunday

ROME (AP) — Carl Lewis and Ben Johnson moved closer an expected showdown Sunday to determine the world's fastest human.

Lewis served notice Saturday that he was ready to challenge the Canadian's claim by breaking the meet record with a time 10.05 seconds in the first 100-meter heat at the World Track and Field Championships.

Lewis, winner of four Olympic gold medals, burst from the block in the morning heat to beat the time of 10.07 he set in winning the title at the inagural world championships in Helsinki four years ago.

And he did it effortlessly. He had an explosive start and was slowing down some 10 yards from the finish line.

Qualifying Completed For Running Of World Crown

JEFFERSON, Ga. (AP) — One pole sitter was knocked back into the pack as qualifying was completed at Georgia International speedway for Sunday's $102,191 World Crown 500 NASCAR triple.header.

Mark Martin of Batesville, Ark., had earned the pole position for both 200-lap races Friday night. But in an inspection of his All-American Challenge Series car, NASCAR officials found an internal engine part that did not meet specifications.

He was allowed to change engines and will start at the rear of the 32-car field.

The triple header, which will start at 1 p.m. Sunday, includes 200-lap races for the NASCAR Busch Grand National and All-American Challenge series cars along with a 100-lap race for late model stock cars.

Dave Mader III of Maylene, Ala., won the first starting spot of the All-American Challenge race with a speed of 105.727 mph.

Grand National points leader Larry Pearson of Spartanburg, S.C., will start second to Martin in the race for that series, followed by Mike Alexander, Brett Bodine and Rick Mast.

Pearson has won five of the last 10 races on the series, including two in a row.

Jeff Neal of Grayslake, Ill., will start second in the AACS race, followed by Mitch Fowler, NASCAR Winston Cup driver Darrell Waltrip and Ronnie Sanders.

A $15,000 bonus will be available to any driver who wins both 200-lap races. Martin and Waltrip are the only drivers running both.

Speed, Defense Key Rose Romp

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

GOLDSBORO — Rose High School used its flashing speed and a crushing defense to sent Eastern Wayne's Warriors scurrying back to the teepee Friday night in a humbling 47-12 football defeat.

It was the opening game of the season for both teams — but Rose looked far more polished than did its opponent.

It would be difficult to find fault with the Rampants, so much did they overpower their opponent. In only two areas did Rose perhaps need to improve. It lost all three of its fumbles and was penalized nine times for 65 yards.

But when the first team was on the field, there was little Eastern Wayne could do to stop the juggernaut offense and the relentless defense.

Rose so overpowered the Warriors on defense that Eastern finished the game with minus four yards in rushing offense. Much of that came after the first team left the field midway the third period. Eastern did roll up 137 yards in the passing game, but again the defense outshown them there.

While Eastern completed six passes, Rose intercepted five and returned them for a total of 139 yards — two more than the Warriors total. And one was returned for a touchdown.

Rose also blocked a punt for a score and collected five more with its rushing attack.

Dave Daniels scored twice for Rose, the first score of the game on a one-yard plunge, and another before halftime on a 40-yard interception return. Clarence Best recovered a loose ball at the two and scored after Adrian Barnhill had blocked a punt. Axel Smith, who led the rushing with 104 yards on eight carries, blazed in from 39 yards out, winding up the first team's performance.

The second and third units got scores from Freddy Best, 38 yards, and Don Thompson, five yards.

Eastern scored on a 43-yard pass from Jeff Denton to Vincent Smith in the second period, and added a seven yard scoring run by Carl Darby in the final frame.

"I couldn't be any more pleased," Coach Chip Williams said. "We were pretty much on target tonight. About the only thing I was disappointed in was the first touchdown that they got." That was somewhat controversial as the Warrior receiver knocked down a defender to get to the ball. The officials, Williams later said, called the contact "incidental."

"I have to be very pleased with the defense, holding them in check like they did," Williams continued. "They pretty much shut them down."

Williams was also somewhat disappointed that the Rose passing game never got into the game. "I like to throw the ball, but we were running it so well, we just never needed to pass." Quarterback Tom Moye, who didn't play after the second series of the second half, threw the ball only once and it was incomplete.

"I'm tickled with the running of our tailbacks and fullbacks," the coach added.

Prior to the game, Williams had said that he thought the offense would do well. "I'm more worried about us stopping ourselves than the defense stopping us," he said.

And he proved right — Rose was stopped only by itself, fumbling away two excellent chances to score. On their second possession of the game, Rose fumbled it away at the Warrior nine, then on the first possession of the second half, they let it slip loose again at the Warrior 44.

Rose took the opening kickoff and drove downfield for its first score, going 61 yards in 13 plays. Smith picked up 15 on the longest run while Barnhill added 12 on another. On a key third and five at the seven, Smith broke a tackle in the backfield and rolled to a first down at the one. Three plays later, Daniels went up the middle from the one for the score with 4:26 left. Kevin Goodrich booted through the PAT for a 7-0 lead.

Rose got it right back when Rexter Williams intercepted a Warrior pass and returned it 53 yards to the Eastern 20. But on third down, Williams, in on offense, fumbled at the nine.

Ironically, Rose's offense didn't touch the ball until 6:23 remained in the half as the defense put the next two scores on the board.

Early in the second period, Rose forced Eastern to punt and Barnhill led a host of Rampants to the ball, blocking the kick. Baker scooped up the ball at the two and eased into the end zone for the score. Goodrich again kicked for a 14-0 lead with 9:02 left in the half.

Less than a minute later, Rose was on the board again as Daniels intercepted a pass and returned it 40 yards for the score. Goodrich made it 21-0 with 8:17 showing.

Rose put Eastern in scoring position by allowing an 11-yard run on first down with a 15-yard personal foul tacked onto the end, moving the ball to the Rose 39. The Rampants threw the Warriors back to the 43, but Denton managed to hook up with Smith for the touchdown from there, cutting it to 21-6 with 6:23 left in the half.

The offense finally got another chance and made the most of it, driving 62 yards in eight plays. Smith ripped up 24 on first down and Moore added 16 to the five. Moore then went head over heels into the end zone from the three with 2:14 left and the lead climbed to 28-6.

After getting the ball back on another interception after the second half kickoff, Rose fumbled it away then partially blocked another punt to take over on the Eastern 42 with 7:56 left in the third.

After Barnhill picked up three, Smith took the ball over right guard, cut back to his left and zipped past the last defenders on his 39-yard scoring run. A bad snap cost the conversion and Rose led, 34-6 with 7:09 left.

After getting the ball back at its own 35, Rose went with the second unit. Thompson, in at quarterback, ran for 18 yards on first down. Then after nine more yards in two plays, Best took it on a draw and raced 38 yards untouched for the score and it was 41-6 with 3:49 still to go in the third period.

Eastern got a chance to score when it recovered a Rose fumble at the Rampant 27, but ended up giving the ball up on another interception.

But after forcing the only Rose punt of the night, Eastern took over again at the Rampant 45 and drove for the score.

Denton hit Robert Powe on a screen pass for 16 yards and Darby broke away for 21 to the nine. Two plays later, he took the ball around the left side for the final seven with 3:52 left, cutting it to 41-12.

Thompson then directed one final touchdown drive. Best broke away with 37 yards more to help set it up, then Billy Carr got away for 26 to the five. Thompson carried it straight up the middle from there with 1:20 left, making it 47-12.

Rose used a total of 12 ball carriers in the game, led by Smith's 104 and Best's 93 (seven carries).

"It was good opening for us," Williams said. "But we can be sure that Jacksonville is going to have a different attitude about us. We'll know a lot more after that game."

Moore Paces Farmville To 20-0 Win In Opener

LEGGETT — Gary Moore ran for 114 yards to key Farmville Central past North Edgecombe, 20-0, in the high school football opener for both teams.

Moore carried the ball 21 times and scored the Jaguars' first touchdown on a one-yard run in the first quarter.

Farmville went ahead early, driving 14 plays in the opening frame with Moore ripping off runs of 14 and 11 yards to key the march.

Moore finally scored from one yard out and Alexander Daniels kicked the point after to make it 7-0.

The Jaguars extended their lead to 13-0 when Billy Hardison scored on a two-yard run in the third quarter.

The drive was keyed by a blocked punt by the Jaguars' Gary Tripp. Farmville took over first and 10 at the North Edgecombe 36. Daniels had a 16-yard end around and Moore added a 14-yard jaunt as Farmville drove for the score in eight plays.

Panthers, Eagles Battle To Tie

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

VANCEBORO — They say a tie is like kissing your sister. But given the circumstances, North Pitt coach Larry Bolger was pleased with his team despite the 8-8 final score against West Craven.

"We had to play power football against a power football team and we came out even," Bolger said.

The reason the Panthers had to resort to a game plan of exclusively power football was because quarterback Calvin Hunter went down with an ankle injury in the first quarter.

"With Calvin Hunter going down early in the first quarter, it took a lot away from our offense. Our offense (though) did a good job of controlling the football and keeping it out of West Craven's hands."

The game was the season opener for both the 2-A Panthers and the 3-A Eagles.

"I think with the loss of the quarterback, we were scared of their size running straight at us and that's what they did," said West Craven coach Clay Jordan.

Facing a third and 12, Hunter went back to pass but was flushed from the pocket. He picked his way through a number of defenders and gained 11 yards before going down in a pile and it was on this play that he injured his ankle.

With a fourth and one from there, the Panthers lined up in punt formation but Hunter took the hike instead of punter Ashley Sheppard and hit a wide-open Daniels for a 36-yard gain.

The Panthers eventually marched down to the Eagle 15 where Hunter faded back and hit Sheppard with a touchdown pass on a fourth-and-eight play but the score was wiped out because of an illegal receiver downfield. The penalty carried loss of down and the ball went over to the Eagles.

On West Craven's first play, Hardison picked of a Monty Brown pass at the Eagle 36 and ran it back to the 26. On the next play, Hunter found Daniels for the score and then hit Hardison for the two-point conversion.

West Craven came right back, though, keyed by the running of halfback Derek Booker, who had 108 yards rushing on the night.

The drive was 13 plays and covered 68 yards. Booker gained 43 yards on the march including a one-yard plunge for the score early in the second quarter.

"I thought we moved the ball as well as we could," Jordan said. "They really didn't stop us all night. I think Booker and (halfback Anthony) Becton both had good ball games."

With a fourth and six at the 28, Booker was stopped one yard shy of a first down as the ball went over on downs and also gave North Pitt one last shot with 3:44 remaining.

"That fourth and seven, that was the big one," Bolger said. "I think the momentum was still in our way. I thought if we stopped them, then we'd either punch it in for the score or get a tie. We didn't have very good time management."

The Panthers took over and drove to the Eagles' 41 but that was as close as they would get as Hardison's halfback option pass fell incomplete as time ran out.

Both teams had other long drives but failed to capitalize. North Pitt

Wallace-Rose Hill Slips Past Chargers By 26-20

WALLACE — Tony MacKenzie ran for 117 yards and Donald Lisane scored the go-ahead touchdown with just over three minutes to go as Wallace-Rose Hill stopped Ayden-Grifton, 26-20, in high school football action.

Wallace-Rose Hill, a traditional 2-A power, erased a 20-18 deficit when Lisane scored the game-winner and Mark Scrounce ran in the two-point conversion.

With 3:25 to go, the Chargers took over and drove down to the Bulldogs' 30 but Darryl Moye was intercepted as time ran out to end the threat.

Ayden-Grifton had taken the lead, 20-18, when Eric Blount ran it in from 11 yards out with 6:50 to go in the final period.

Blount had 182 all-purpose yards in a losing cause. He ran for 45 yards and one score and had two interceptions, one of which he returned 70 yards for a touchdown.

Wallace-Rose Hill drew first blood in the opening period when Keith Rhinehart hauled in a 27-yard touchdown pass from Scrounce. The run for the conversion failed, leaving the score 6-0.

The Chargers got on the board in the second quarter when Ronnell Peterson scooped a blocked punt by Steven Tucker and rambled 47 yards for the score. The pass on the try for the two-point conversion failed.

The Bulldogs went back in front late in the third quarter when Scrounce took it in from a yard out. The PAT run failed.

The Chargers took their first lead of the game on Blount's 70 yard interception return. Aaron Harper ran for the two-point conversion to make it 14-12.

The lead was shortlived as Wallace-Rose Hill's Wesley Carter returned a fumble 30 yards for the score. The PAT run failed but the Bulldogs were back in front 18-14.

In addition to MacKenzie's yardage, Lisane and James Stallings added 87 yards apiece rushing as the Bulldogs totaled 290 yards on the ground.

Rouse Scores Three As Pam Pack Downs Bulldogs

WASHINGTON — Henry Rouse scored three touchdowns and led the Washington Pam Pack to a 27-8 football victory over Belhaven Friday night as the two opened the 1987 season.

Rouse scored on runs of four and nine yards and pulled in a 23-yard pass from Franz Holscher for a touchdown as the Pam Pack built up a 20-0 lead before allowing Belhaven to get on the scoreboard in the second period.

Rouse went in from the four and then added the pass reception in the first quarter of the game. He then picked up the nine-yard run in the second period, capping it with a two-point conversion run.

Belhaven came back to score its only touchdown before halftime. Ronnell Martin scored on a six-yard run and also added the two-point conversion to trim the lead to 20-8.

The only other score in the game came in the final quarter when Holscher hit Felix Copper on a 70-yard strike for the touchdown. Holscher kicked the PAT to give the Pam Pack its final 27-8 margin.

Rouse finished the game with 82 yards on 14 carries while Copper caught three passes for 130 yards. Holscher completed five of 14 passes for 162 yards and two touchdowns.

"I was pretty much pleased," Coach Bob Hanna said of his first victory as the new coach of the Pam Pack. "We made a lot of mistakes, but if you can win with your mistakes, it leaves you optimistic."

Washington will play host to Plymouth on Friday.

Iowa's McGwire To Be Unveiled

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Dan McGwire, Iowa's 6-foot-8 quarterback, has never started a college football game but the 19-year-old sophomore is getting more attention than Tennessee's Jeff Francis, who was merely the nation's seventh-ranked passer a year ago.

"I don't worry about that," says Francis, who will be at the controls Sunday when 16th-ranked Tennessee meets No. 15 Iowa in the season-opening Kickoff Classic. "I've just got to worry about Iowa's defense. I can't control what their quarterback does."

If Francis cares to take a look at McGwire, he will see a phenomenon who may be the tallest quarterback in football history — "Dan's a legitimate 6-8 and very likely closer to 6-9. He's still growing," Coach Hayden Fry says — with some interesting attributes, including a brother named Mark who plays first base for the Oakland Athletics and has hit more home runs this year than any rookie in major-league history.

"He has unbelievable strength," Fry says of Dangerous Dan McGwire. "The rascal can throw a football as pretty as anyone you've ever seen. He's becoming more and more accurate with it. You can just imagine a guy that's 6-8 playing quarterback and he's got a buggywhip for an arm.

"I mean, when he throws the ball, it's got tremendous velocity on it, and yet it's an easy ball to catch. All Dan needs is experience to become a truly great quarterback.

"I've had some great ones, but never a quarterback with an arm this strong. He's so big and tall that he can see the field. He's not just a slim guy; he weighs 235. Gosh, in our scrimmages, we've had some of our better tacklers hanging on him like they were hanging on branches of a tree, and he doesn't even know they're there. He just stands there and throws the ball like they're not even present."

Fry recently said that McGwire can take one step and fling the ball 90 yards. Is that another of Fry's tall Texas tales (he was born in Eastland, raised in Odessa)?

"Oh, shoot, I imagine he can throw it farter than that. He doesn't even have to take a step. He just flips his wrist and the ball is . . . well, you just have to see him in person.

"I've always been blessed with good quarterbacks since I've been in coaching but I've never had a guy like this. It's just awesome. We're on one sideline on the hashmark on the left side of the field and he can throw the ball on a sideline cut 25 yards down the field on the other side on a straight line. We just don't have the receivers to exploit all of his passing ability.

"The kid's a tremendous all-around athlete. He could play on our basketball team, he can play baseball, he's a tremendous golfer. He is real big but he's above average from a mobility standpoint. This guy is every bit as mobile as Chuck Long (Iowa's 1985 All-American quarterback) and he's got a much stronger arm."

McGwire was unable to verify Fry's remarks since the Hawkeyes' three quarterbacks — Fry said junior Tom Poholsky and senior Chuck Hartlieb also will see action — are off-limits to the media until after the game.

That brings us to Francis, a 6-3, 210-pound junior who has receivers McGwire might salivate over since almost all of them run at least a 4.4 forty.

Francis broke in last year by completing 150 of 233 passes for 1,946 yards.

"I like our quarterback, Jeff Francis, who came within a fraction (64.4) of setting the school record for passing percentage. He's got good size, he's very smart and extremely team-oriented," says Coach Johnny Majors, who obviously doesn't have Fry's talent for braggadocio.

Francis' parents come from Iowa and the family lives in Mount Prospect, Ill., Big Ten territory.

"No one in the Big Ten really recruited me," said Francis, whose high school team was 2-7 in his senior year.

Illinois decided not to offer Francis a scholarship but contacted Walt Harris, Tennessee's offensive coordinator, who coached there from 1980-82.

"Everybody in Illinois really wants to go to the University of Illinois," Francis said, "especially with the quarterbacks they've had recently like Dave Wilson, Tony Eason and Jack Trudeau. But Illinois did me a favor by contacting Tennessee and I owe them a lot."

drove to the West Craven 21 late in the first half but failed to score while the Eagles had their opening drive of the second half cut short by a fumble.

The Eagles were hurt by two lost fumbles as well as the interception that set up the Panthers' touchdown.

"Our defense gave the ball to our offense," Bolger said. "Booker can't score if he doesn't have the ball."

To The Sports Editor:

Why should you join the Pirate Club, whose sole purpose is to raise money for athletic scholarships, if you have no interest in athletics?

The simple answer is that there is no better way to promote a university than through sports. Here's proof: when Penn State won the national football championship, membership in the alumni association for ACADEMIC advancement increased by 16,000, bringing in an additional $10 million for ACADEMICS.

East Carolina's Pirate Club has 4,100 members who donated $1.1 million last year; this year we are ahead of that pace at this point. Our endowment fund, which is the answer to the problem, is approaching $1 million. By contrast, UNC-Chapel Hill collected $6.5 million last year and has an endowment of $17 million. They funded $2.2 million in scholarships while we fund about $800,000. They have a problem trying to figure out how to spend their money!

It's truly amazing how well we do with the resources that we have. If you really want to help ECU, no matter where your interest lie, join the Pirate Club.

OSU Will Not Reinstate Carter

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio State athletic director Rick Bay ended speculation that ineligible receiver Cris Carter might return to play his senior season at the school by saying he would not appeal Carter's ineligibility to the NCAA.

Carter had been seeking reinstatement by Ohio State and was hoping that the school would then appeal to the NCAA for restoration of his remaining year of eligibility.

"We felt that the situation was so serious, and that there were so many untruths, that it would be impossible to appeal the case to the NCAA," Bay said late Friday afternoon.

Carter, the leading all-time receiver at Ohio State, had been declared permanently ineligible July 16 by the university for his involvement with agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom.

The 21-year-old Carter admitted that he had accepted an interest-free loan of $5,000, had signed a contract, and had received monthly payments totaling $1,800 from Walters and Bloom.

Carter, along with running back Charles Gladman of Pittsburgh and five other players, was to have been available in a special supplemental draft scheduled for Friday.

But on Wednesday, defensive back Teryl Austin, another Pitt player who was suspended after allegations he took money from an agent, was reinstated by the NCAA on condition that he repay any money received, sever all ties with the agent and that he sit out the first two games of the 1987 season.

That led to the NFL postponing the supplemental draft by one week, thus encouraging Carter and the others to petition their former schools and the NCAA for reinstatement.

Carter and his brother Butch, a former NBA player, met Friday morning with Bruce and in a separate meeting, with Bay. The Carters also met with Ohio State president Edward Jennings and Bruce.

"I have not wavered (since July 16)," Bay said. "It was painful to talk to Cris for the first time face to face. I hated to snuff out what little hope he had of playing football at Ohio State. But I told him that if we were going to appeal, we would have done it six weeks ago."

Bay, who said he would meet with Jennings next week to make the decision final, added, "We chose not to appeal, not because we couldn't win but because we didn't feel good about it. ... I'm not heartless. If there was some way to logically justify (an appeal), I would. But I couldn't see clear to do it."

After Austin's eligibility had been restored, Carter had said he wanted to return to Ohio State instead of being drafted into the NFL.

"If we were to appeal this, I think it would pass on two messages," Bay said. "First, it would destroy our credibility with the people who believed us six weeks ago (at the time Carter was declared permanently ineligible). Second, this would be a message to future outstanding basketball and football players at Ohio State, that they could ... make such a mistake and still play college athletics."

Bruce, who said he was angry that Carter had repeatedly lied to him about his involvement with the agents, said earlier Friday he was convinced that Carter was contrite and wanted to return to the Ohio State team.

"I can't help but think we should be a little forgiving in this case. ... unless the stuff I'm reading is not right and that the rules are different for Carter than for Austin. Then that's something else," Bruce had said Friday morning.

After Friday afternoon's practice, Bruce had added, "I don't want to see a young man who is 21 years old who has made a mistake have both of his hands cut off."

Carter had 168 catches and 27 touchdowns in his three years, both Ohio State career records. His 69 catches last year and 58 two years ago are the top two single-season marks at the school.

Brewers Knock Twins From Top

By BILL BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

Facing a rookie pitcher who was facing problems on and off the field, the Minnesota Twins looked ready to end a skid that saw them lose eight of their previous nine games.

But Chris Bosio pitched a two-hitter for his first career shutout and complete game Friday night as the Milwaukee Brewers beat Minnesota 1-0 and knocked the Twins out of first place in the American League West.

Bosio, 8-5, who won for the first time since July 28, said he never should have gone that long without a victory.

"The last three times out, the team has averaged about five or six runs and those are three wins I should have had," Bosio said. "I haven't been pitching smart. The way things have been going for me last month on the mound I just wanted to go out and do the best job I could. I just wish I could pitch like this more often."

In other games, it was Seattle 10, New York 4; Texas 5, Detroit 3; Oakland 3, Toronto 2; Kansas City 9, Chicago 3; and Baltimore 6, California 5. Boston at Cleveland was rained out.

Earlier Friday, his attorney entered an innocent plea on an assault and battery charge that stemmed from a July 19 incident in which a parking lot attendant said Bosio punched him in the nose after the pitcher refused to pay a parking fee. An attorney for the attendant also said he planned to file a $200,000 civil suit against the pitcher and the Brewers.

Bosio had no comment on the plea or the incident, but was happy to talk about the game.

"They are a real aggressive team with a lot of guys who can hurt you," he said of the Twins. "The last time I pitched against them they hurt me with the long ball. But I was throwing to spots and not trying to overpower them. I just tried to keep the ball out of the power zone."

Greg Gagne's first-inning single and a seventh-inning hit by Kent Hrbek were the only ones Bosio allowed. He struck out eight and walked three and threw only 95 pitches in a game that lasted two hours, nine minutes.

The victory was the fifth straight for the Brewers, who still have hopes of catching the leaders in the East. They trail Detroit and Toronto by six games.

"I told the team that we have 99 percent of the season in front of us," Milwaukee Manager Tom Trebelhorn said. "We've only played one percent and now we're in a position to do something. We are right where we want to be."

Minnesota's Les Straker, 6-9, strong in defeat, limited the Brewers to six hits in seven innings. Milwaukee's only run came in the sixth as Robin Yount singled, stole second, moved to third on catcher Sal Butera's throwing error and scored on Greg Brock's double.

Athletics 3, Blue Jays 2

Dave Stewart became the major leagues' first 18-game winner with 7 2-3 innings of six-hit pitching that gave Oakland a narrow lead in the West while keeping Toronto from taking over the lead in the East.

Stewart used a forkball to baffle the Blue Jays' left-handed hitters.

"They had a left-hand hitting lineup in there," said Stewart, 18-9, who struck out five and walked four. "That's my pitch to neutralize left-handed hitting. When they have eight out of nine guys in there who are left-handed, then I have to throw the forkball."

Dennis Eckersley got the last four outs for his 10th save, while Carney Lansford had three of the Athletics' five hits off Dave Stieb, 13-7, who lost despite pitching his third complete game.

With the score tied 2-2 in the sixth, Lansford doubled, moved to third on a long fly to right and scored on Dwayne Murphy's shallow fly to center.

Rangers 5, Tigers 3

Texas, held to one hit by Jack Morris for six innings, rallied for four runs in the eighth to beat Detroit.

Ruben Sierra's two-run homer tied the score in the eighth, Pete O'Brien followed with an RBI double and Larry Parrish singled home an insurance run against Morris, 15-7.

Matt Nokes knocked in all three runs for the Tigers with a two-run single and his 24th homer, but Mitch Williams, 7-3, and Dale Mohorcic pitched two shutout innings each in relief for the Rangers.

Despite the loss, the Tigers maintained a percentage-point lead over Toronto in the AL East.

Royals 9, White Sox 3

Kansas City won its second straight under interim Manager John Wathan as Danny Tartabull homered in the first inning for his league-leading 15th game-winning hit and Charlie Leibrandt scattered 10 hits in eight innings.

Leibrandt, 13-9, struck out six and walked two, retiring 11 consecutive batters during one stretch.

With two outs in the first, George Brett singled off Dave LaPoint, 2-2, and Tartabull hit his 23rd homer to put the Royals ahead 2-0.

The Royals, who trail Oakland and Minnesota by two games, turned the game into a rout with four runs in the seventh. Frank White doubled in a pair and Ross Jones and Larry Owen had RBI singles.

Mariners 10, Yankees 4

Alvin Davis' grand slam slam broke a 3-3 tie and Mickey Brantley homered and drove in four runs for Seattle against New York.

Davis hit his fourth career slam and 22nd homer of the season in the sixth inning against reliever Charles Hudson, 9-4. Brantley had a two-run double in the fourth, homered in the seventh and added an RBI single in the eighth.

Reliever Mike Trujillo, 3-4, pitched 2 1-3 innings for the victory as Seattle ended a three-game losing streak.

Orioles 6, Angels 5

Baltimore beat California for the ninth consecutive time when Fred Lynn, the first batter after an 18-minute rain delay, hit a pinch-hit home run with one out in the ninth inning.

Lynn, who did not start the game because of a thigh injury, hit a 3-1 pitch from reliever Chuck Finley, 2-6, who had pitched 5 1-3 scoreless innings of relief. Lynn's homer, his 21st of the season, also snapped a string of 17 1-3 scoreless innings by Finley in his career against the Orioles.

Baltimore took a 5-0 lead, but California tied it with two runs in the fifth inning and three in the sixth with the help of homers by Wally Joyner and Dick Schofield. Mike Hart also homered for the Orioles.

Edwards Says Baseball Needs Campanis Active

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Black activist and sports sociologist Harry Edwards says baseball needs Al Campanis, the former Los Angeles Dodgers executive whose comments resulted in an examination of racism in sports.

Edwards, the commissioner of baseball's special consultant to bring minorities into management, also said Friday he wasn't disappointed that Hal McRae, a black, turned down an opportunity this week to manage the Kansas City Royals.

"I'm elated that we are moving down the proper road," Edwards said. "But the opening of those opportunities must not carry any obligatory responsibility to accept ... every job that is offered. We must have the right to say no as well as the right to pursue the job as a legitimate candidate."

Edwards, addressing the Commonwealth Club of California in a fiery speech broadcast live locally on public radio and scheduled for rebroadcast around the country, blasted the "plantation system" in sports, which he said reflects an "occupational apartheid" in American society.

But he decried any efforts to ostracize Campanis, who said on national television that blacks often lacked the "necessities" to be managers or executives in baseball. Campanis was fired for his remarks after 46 years with the Dodgers.

With Campanis in the audience, Edwards said his statement "represents the conscious or unconscious sentiments of literally millions of Americans.

"We cannot demand open and honest dialogue about race and racism in this society and then bureaucratically lynch and socially ostracize those who say things openly and honestly about which we disagree," he said.

Edwards said it would be "a tremendous waste" to keep a man with Campanis' experience out of the game if he is willing to work toward resolving the problem.

"To slam the door in his face, that is not only cruel, it is stupid," Edwards said. "I look forward to the day when Mr. Campanis can go back on 'Nightline' and say with just as much honesty, 'Not only have I met many black people who have all of the necessities, but I have helped many of them to get jobs in major league baseball.' That is the way that story should end."

Campanis, who has so far met twice with Edwards and former Chicago White Sox General Manager Roland Hemond to plan an affirmative action program for baseball that may start in November, said he is excited about his new role and has no grudge against the Dodgers for firing him.

"I feel that I'll be doing more for human beings," Campanis said "In time, you will see more of the minorities in executive and managerial positions."

Campanis, 70, said he is writing a book about his career and has just finished the "Nightline" chapter. He said he was nervous and unsure when he was speaking on the ABC-TV show, and his "phraseology was not good."

"I said 'necessities' instead of saying 'the necessary experience.' I mentioned that (minorities) lack buoyancy. I shouldn't have brought that up."

Hemond said he and Campanis are talking with many baseball people to form a list of minority candidates for non-playing jobs.

Edwards, a professor at the University of California-Berkeley, said generations of both blacks and whites have accepted a kind of "occupational apartheid" in which certain jobs, especially positions of authority, were dominated by whites.

He said "the first principle of sports sociology," a field he pioneered, is that problems in sports reflect the same problems in society.

With blacks increasingly dominating the player ranks in baseball, basketball and football, Edwards said having blacks in management is "not only good, it's good business" because it will result in better understanding and relations between management and players.

HR Ladder Doesn't Thrill Schmidt

By BRIAN TRUSDELL
AP Sports Writer

Mike Schmidt continues to climb the all-time home run ladder, but even passing Ted Williams and Willie McCovey doesn't excite him.

Schmidt's 522nd homer, Friday night, also was his 483rd as third baseman. It put him ahead of Eddie Matthews as the most prolific home run hitter at that position in National League history.

But Schmidt seemed more satisfied that the two-run fifth-inning homer, his 27th this season, helped lift the Phillies to an 8-1 victory over San Diego.

"These milestones don't have a lot of luster for me now. Someday they will, but not now," said Schmidt, who is 12 homers behind eighth-place Jimmie Foxx on the all-time major league list. "There's a lot of other business to be taken care of. We're not out of the pennant race yet. That's the business at hand for me. Climbing the home run ladder is not important for me."

In other games, it was Chicago 6, Cincinnati 5 in 10 innings; Pittsburgh 4, Houston 2; St. Louis 4, Atlanta 3; Montreal 2, Los Angeles 1 in 12 innings, and New York 4, San Francisco 0.

Schmidt wasn't even aware he had passed Matthews.

"I had no idea that was the case until they put it on the board," Schmidt said. "I'm just on kind of a normal pace. I haven't had many good games here in the last couple of years."

The 37-year-old Schmidt, who was 3-for-4, shows few signs of his oftenmention retirement.

"Physically and mentally I'll be ready to play another year," Schmidt said. "I'll do my best to get another pay raise. If I don't know if I'm going to play baseball by Nov. 1, then I'll probably retire. I'll miss going out of the game as a winner. I would've liked to have a shot at a fourth MVP."

Don Carman, 8-9, scattered nine hits, six over the last eighth innings. Benito Santiago's RBI double in the first was the only extra-base hit allowed by Carman, who walked one and struck out four in his second complete game.

Lance Parrish tied the score 1-1 with a run-scoring double off Ed Whitson, 10-9, in the second.

Philadelphia scored four runs in the fifth on Juan Samuel's RBI triple, Milt Thompson's double and Schmidt's homer.

Philadelphia added a run in the sixth when it loaded the bases on consecutive singles by Glenn Wilson, Jeltz and Carman and then scored when third baseman Chris Brown's throw home on Samuel's grounder hit Wilson in the back.

The Phillies made it 8-1 in the ninth on Von Hayes' RBI single and Wilson's sacrifice fly to right.

Cubs 6, Reds 5

Ryne Sandberg's 10th-inning single with two outs scored Bob Dernier from second and lifted Chicago over Cincinnati as the Reds' lost their seventh straight game.

Lee Smith, 4-7, who walked three in the ninth, including a bases-loaded pass to Bo Diaz, pitched the final two innings. Smith allowed one run, one hit, three walks and struck out three.

Buddy Bell had given Cincinnati a 4-2 lead with a two-run single in the seventh, but Andre Dawson hit a two-run single in the ninth to put Chicago ahead 5-4.

Pirates 4, Astros 2

Bob Walk supplemented a seven-hitter over 7 1-3 innings with an RBI single to score the lead run in the seventh inning, pacing Pittsburgh over Houston.

Johnny Ray had a two-run single with two outs in the seventh off Mike Scott, 13-10, who allowed 11 hits and struck out five in pitching his sixth complete game.

Walk, 6-2, won for the fourth time in his last five decisions as the Pirates won their fourth straight. Jim Gott finished for his fifth save.

Walk struck out four and walked two and improved his record at Three Rivers Stadium this season to 4-0.

Cardinals 4, Braves 3

The Braves forced a 3-3 tie in the top of the ninth when Griffey hit his 14th homer of the season off Todd Worrell, 7-6, leading off the inning.

Mets 4, Giants 0

Howard Johnson hit his 32nd homer off Mike LaCoss, 11-8, and New York scored three runs in the ninth on Keith Hernandez's RBI single, Kevin McReynolds' triple and Gary Carter's double.

Gooden, 12-4 with a 2.86 earned run average, struck out six and walked four for his second shutout and fourth complete game of the year.

LaCoss had allowed only two hits in seven innings before Johnson's homer.

Expos 2, Dodgers 1

Foley, whose eight-inning fielding error helped Los Angeles tie the game, reached second base when third baseman Tracy Woodson threw his grounder past first.

Tim Leary, 3-10, intentionally walked Herm Winningham before Fitzgerald signled to right.

Tim Burke, 7-0, pitched two innings for the victory in relief of starter Pascual Perez. Bob McClure got the final three outs for his fifth save.

The only gold medal for the host country, Greece, in the first modern Olympics in 1896 was in the marathon. The winner was Spyridon Louis, a messenger by trade.

Defending Champ Murphy Rolls In Opening Game

By DAVID DROSCHAK
Associated Press Writer

Senior split end Carl Pickens caught three touchdown passes Friday night to lead defending 1-A state champion Murphy to a 44-7 victory over Franklin on opening night of high school football in North Carolina.

The only other champion in action on the balmy and sometimes stormy night was two-time defending 2-A titlist Lexington. The Yellow Jackets defeated Concord 28-6. Fayetteville 71st, the defending 4-A champion, and Shelby, the defending 3-A titleholder, were idle.

Murphy, with the state's longest winning streak at 16 games, wasted little time in putting away Franklin. All of Pickens' scoring passes came in the first half. He scored on strikes of 27, 3 and 21 yards — all from quarterback Jeff Martin.

Hendersonville, a team also expected to vie for the 1-A crown this season, was upset 19-0 by West Henderson on a night in which 35 teams were shut out.

The Falcons turned two first-quarter Hendersonville fumbles into 13 points en route to the victory. After the first fumble, quarterback Jason Stanley lofted a 33-yard TD to Brian McMinn and Derrick Williams scored on a 2-yard run following the second miscue.

Also in 1-A, Swain County's Greg Taylor scored on a 60-yard punt return and kicked a 36-yard field goal to lead the 1985 champs to a 9-7 victory over Canton Pisgah.

Orrum, usually a strong contender in the 1-A ranks, was clobbered 55-26 by 2-A West Brunswick, while 2-A Farmville Central had its way 20-0 with 1-A North Edgecombe — a state playoff team at 9-1 last season.

In the 2-A ranks, Lexington increased its winning streak to 11 games with its victory at Concord. The Yellow Jackets rushed for 240 yards — 139 of which came from Kevin Sims. However, Lexington had nine fumbles, losing five.

Whiteville, using seven players playing both offense and defense, held off 4-A Scotland County 15-13 — only after the Fighting Scots missed a 30-yard field goal early in the fourth quarter. Tailback Virgil Cokley led Whiteville in rushing with 121 yards.

Ahoskie, losers to Lexington in the 2-A title game a year ago, trounced Gates County 42-8 behind Vince Outlaw's 119 yards and three touchdowns.

South Alamance surprised Jordan-Matthews 18-7, while Wallace-Rose Hill defeated Ayden-Grifton 26-20. Both teams made the playoffs last season.

Shelby, winners of 11 straight, was off Friday night, so Brevard took center stage in the 3-A ranks. The Blue Devils defeated 4-A Asheville A.C. Reynolds 22-14. With the Rockets leading 14-7, Brevard quarterback Jeff Bailey connected with Daries Hemphill on a 58-yard TD pass. Bailey then passed to Hemphill for the two-point conversion and the Blue Devils took the lead for good.

Havelock, losers to Shelby in the last year's 3-A title game, dusted off New Bern 22-7.

Forest Hills, 1985 runners-up, got off to a fast start with a 40-0 pasting of Monroe Piedmont as Bobby Boggan ran for 100 yards on six carries.

Last year's other 3-A state playoff semifinal team — Burlington Cummings — defeated Greensboro Ben Smith 27-15. Cavalier quarterback Jeff Burnette hit receiver Ronnie Enoch with TD passes of 32, 33 and 18 yards in the victory.

In 4-A, Greensboro Page opened the high school season Thursday night by scoring in its 100th straight game and downing High Point Central 24-6.

Powerful Jacksonville took care of White Oak 41-0 as McGrue Booker scored on a 3-yard run and a 58-yard punt return.

Raleigh Athens Drive shocked Hillsborough Orange 21-14 behind Al Nzuiki's 213 all-purpose yards.

Three long touchdowns by Raleigh Millbrook on runs of 86 and 69 yards by Derrick Smith, and a 77-yard punt return by Clarence Inscore, carried the Wildcats to a 20-14 victory over Henderson Vance.

Smith, a 5-foot-6 junior tailback, finished the night with 197 yards and two scores on 17 carries.

Garner defeated Durham 61-0 in the most lopsided score, while Kinston's 19-game losing streak stayed on hold. The Vikings, holders of the state's longest losing streak, were idle Friday night.

Some outstanding individual performances were turned in by Plymouth's Gerald Puckett and Columbia's Andre Cummings. Puckett rushed for 213 yards on 22 carries and scored three TD's in Plymouth's 50-0 victory over Creswell, while Cummings gained 230 yards on 30 carries and scored twice in Columbia's loss to Jones Senior.

Gatlin Told To Hit The Books

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — University of Maryland basketball coach Bob Wade has ordered three players, including starting guard Keith Gatlin, to spend practice time in the library instead of the gymnasium because of low grades.

Wade, who replaced former coach Lefty Driesell last fall in the shakeup following the death of baskeball star Len Bias, said Friday he took the action unilaterally. He stressed the players were not facing academic probation by the university or by the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

"I wanted them to prove something to me," Wade said. "According to the (NCAA) and the University of Maryland, they're fine.

Gatlin, a 6-foot 5-inch senior, will not be allowed to practice or participate in games. Tony Massenburg, a 6-foot-9 sophomore, will practice but not play in games. Rodney Walker, a 6-9 sophomore who is fulfilling his first year of residency as a transfer student from Syracuse, will not be allowed to practice.

"Of course they're all quality basketball players, but I'm concerned about life after basketball," said Wade, who will have the final word on lifting or extending the restrictions.

Classes start Tuesday and basketball practice officially starts Oct. 15, with the first preseason game Nov. 27.

The restrictions have no expiration date and apply differently to the players, whose individual progress would be measured by athletic department tutors. The players will attend tutoring sessions during the time normally spent at practice, Wade said.

Neither Wade nor Athletic Director Lew Perkins would detail the players' grades or discuss other players's academic records.

Following Bias' death, the school and athletic department in particular were scrutinized after revelations of academic deficiencies of some student-athletes. A task force recommended several changes in the department which were furthered by Perkins, who became athletic director early this year.

"We did not make this decision based on what people would think. We made this decision based on what was best for these kids," Perkins said, adding that he had endorsed the action ordered by Wade.

Wade said he made the decision Thursday after one of his weekly meetings with the academic support unit, which regularly helps players with schoolwork. He said the support unit, comprised of advisers and tutors, first suggested the move after Wade asked for its appraisal of the players.

Wade, who took the Maryland job pledging to uphold academic standards, said he received strong support from Perkins, the players and the players' parents.

Gatlin, 22, of Grimesland, N.C., was declared ineligible last year after piling up parking tickets. He started 32 of 33 games two seasons ago, scoring in double figures for 19 of them.

Massenburg, 20, a foward from Greenville, S.C., started 8 of 29 games last year, scoring an average 2.9 points per game.

Seahawks Top Lions

SEATTLE (AP) — Dave Krieg passed for two touchdowns late in the first half and backup quarterback Jeff Kemp threw for a touchdown in the third quarter Friday night as the Seattle Seahawks beat the Detroit Lions 38-10 for their first victory of the exhibition season.

After poor performances in preseason road losses to the Los Angeles Rams and St. Louis, Krieg completed 15 of 19 passes for 177 yards, helping the Seahawks grab a 17-10 halftime lead. Krieg was intercepted four times in Seattle's first two preseason games, but wasn't intercepted by the Lions.

He snapped a 10-10 tie with an 8-yard scoring pass to Daryl Turner with 31 seconds left in the first half. Krieg also had a 21-yard touchdown pass to fullback John L. Williams with 2:44 left.

Tourney Highlights Weekend

Outdoor News

By The Associated Press

Fishing has been slow up and down the coast, but organizers of the second annual Topsail Beach King Mackerel Tournament this weekend are hoping a shift in the weather will bring a change in the luck.

"The weather looks favorable for good conditions for the tournament," said Robin Orr of the Jolly Roger Pier in Topsail Beach. "We're already got a lot of boats rolling in."

Hatteras

Dave Hissey of Pelican's Roost said the "surf fishing has slowed down mainly because the wind has switched and the water has gotten dirty.

"In the past week we've had some real good pompano fishing and also had some croaker, spot and sea mullet. Trolling right off the beach, they're catching Spanish mackerel, some small blues, king mackerel and some albacore.

"In the sound, they're having some nice catches of speckled and grey trout. Gulfstream fishing they're having real good catches of bill fish, wahoo, tuna and dolphin."

Southport

Tony Myers of the Long Beach Pier said they were catching several varieties of fish, but not any one fish in abundance.

"It's been a little slow," he said. "They're still getting a little bit of all of it — a few spots, pompano, few blues and the same way with flounder and speckled trout. They are still catching some nice sheepshead, too.

"There's no consistency. It just kind of comes and goes. We hope it's going to pick up, but you can just never tell."

Topsail Island

Orr said there had been a lot of activity at the Jolly Roger Pier.

"It's been a pretty good week," he said. "We had a nice cool front go through the state and we immediately had a good run of blues Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

"We had some spots and mullet mixed in and had a few Spanish in the last few days. They're scattered, but they're in the area."

Wrightsville Beach

Ellen Downey of the Crystal Pier said fishing and business was slow.

"They were catching some Spanish, a few blues and a few Virginia mullet," she said, adding, "School started the other day, so business has slowed."

Nags Head

Andy McCann of the Nags Head Fishing Pier reported the first run of spots of the year.

"We're getting some speckled trout, bluefish and some spots. The first spots are just starting to show up now. The ones we've been catching are pretty good sized," McCann said.

"The fishing has been pretty good this week. It runs hot and cold during the day but gets better at night. Late in the evening and the early morning seems to be the best times to fish."

McCann said king and Spanish mackerel were also being caught.

Swansboro

In Swansboro, offshore fishing continues to do well, said John Dudley of Dudley's Marina.

Dudley said Dr. Tom Hagan of New Bern landed a 56-pound sailfish. Dudley also reported a 32-pound tuna and some dolphins.

"We've been getting good catches of king mackerel and catching some Spanish in the channel. Grey trout, we're doing real good on those in the sound and on the inside during the ebb tide."

Dove Season Set

Hundreds of area hunters will head for corn fields and cut-downs next weekend when dove season begins on Saturday.

The three segments of the mourning dove season will last all day, from sunrise to sunset. The first season runs from Saturday until Oct. 15; the second season begins Nov. 23 and ends Nov. 28, and the third season lasts from Dec. 18 until Jan. 9.

The daily bag limit is 12. The possession limit is 24, with 12 birds in the field and 12 at home.

Hunters who violate dove and other migratory game bird laws will face stiffer fines beginning Oct. 1.

This year, the General Assembly adopted legislation, at the request of the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, that set $150 as the minimum fine for the following violations involving migratory game birds:

- ☐Using improper weapons
- ☐Using live decoys as bait
- ☐Taking birds during closed seasons
- ☐Exceeding the bag or possession limits.

That same legislation authorized the sale of a waterfowl hunting license beginning with the 1988 waterfowl season. The license, a pictorial stamp, will cost $5.

The new law requires that at least half of the funds collected through the waterfowl stamp sales be used for cooperative waterfowl habitat improvement projects through contracts with local waterfowl organizations. The Commission will use the remaining funds for other waterfowl conservation programs.

The migratory game bird law violations effective Oct. 1 are considered misdemeanors. Under the new law, judges may impose finds higher than $150 at their discretion.

In the past, penalties for migratory game bird law violations were set at $10 and $50 and court costs for first offenses.

Judges may also use their discretion in suspending the violator's hunting license. Under current law, fines levied by the court of more than $50 result in an automatic suspension of hunting licenses for one year by the Wildlife Commission, unless the judge addresses the license suspension in sentencing.

Stream Watch Program

Those who fish, hunt, swim, ski or participate in other water-related activities in the Tar River and other area bodies of water may be interested in helping improve those waters by joining Stream Watch.

The Stream Watch program, which began in 1983, includes over 100 groups across the state who adopt rivers, lakes and streams they are concerned about, and help protect and improve them.

Groups work with the N.C. Division of Water Resources to monitor water quality, construct nature trails, inventory natural resources and lead educational and recreation outings.

Applications for Stream Watch grants will be accepted by the N.C. Division of Water Resources from Sept. 1 through Nov. 15. These monetary awards are made possible by a grant from Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation to the N.C. Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

Glowing Float Aids Fishermen

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Night fishermen will no longer have to strain their eyes, peering into the darkness to watch their floats.

Among the new gadgets for fishermen being shown off this year is the Night Bobby, a lighted fishing float by Rieadco Corp., Cameron, Mo.

Made of a polycarbon plastic which spokesman Fred Archer said is almost impossible to break, even when it's cast onto rocks, the Night Bobby is powered by two tiny batteries, similar to those used in watches. It comes in several colors so anglers can tell their lines apart.

It's available in a variety of sizes and comes with two batteries.

To get your minnows fresh and lively to the hook, Lambourn Ltd, McHenry, Ill., offers a five-gallon, battery-powered self-aerating bait bucket. Made of polypropylene, the bucket is aerated by a small pump in the bottom. It's powered by a single 'D' cell battery.

It will hold up to 100 shrimp or dozens of larger bait fish. It's also strong enough to double as a stool to rest an angler's weary feet.

The Hook Tender, by Haase Industries, Inc., Lake Oswego, Ore., is a magnetic, ceramic fish which can be a hooksaver for the angler who is constantly changing baits.

It has an adhesive strip on the back, to attach it to a boat gunnel or dash. The magnet is strong enough to hold several crankbaits, keeping them handy for the next bait change.

Haase also offers a larger, more powerful version, a strip of magnetic blocks which will hold a dozen baits.

Anglers looking for fish suspended in deep water, a frequent occurrence in deep Western lakes, have a new tool to fish that twilight zone below the depth reachable by a deep-diving crankbait.

Doelcher Products, Inc., Granada Hills, Calif., offers the Fish Seeker depth controller, a one-half ounce diving plane which will take a surface lure down 60 feet or more behind a trolling boat. Available in several colors, Fish Seeker attaches to the line through a release clip which snaps free when a fish hits, allowing the angler to fight his catch without interference from the trolling plane.

After the day's catch is at the dock, it must be cleaned. To help do that job, and protect anglers' fingers, DuPont offers Sports Guard gloves, made of Kevlar, the fiber used in bullet-proof vests.

The palms and fingers are dotted with dozens of grip spots to give a good hold on a slippery fish. The fabric is so tough even a sharp fillet knife usually can't slash through it.

The gloves, which are cut-resistant, not cut-proof, also will help protect hands from sharp gill plates on stripers and will keep hands as warm as a pair of wool gloves. After the day's catch is frying, the gloves can be washed like any other laundry.

Lead Shot On Way Out

By CHRIS TODD
International Falls Daily Journal

INTERNATIONAL FALLS, Minn. (AP) - Waterfowl hunters in Minnesota and other states have been using lead shot for the past century, and it has taken its toll.

Each year, between 1.5 and 3 million ducks die from ingesting lead pellets shot by waterfowl hunters, according to statistics compiled by the National Wildlife Federation.

The Minnesota Department of Natural Resources has taken action to try to remedy the situation.

This duck season, waterfowl hunters in Minnesota will be required to use steel shot instead of lead.

And by 1991, federal law will make shooting with lead pellets illegal in every state but Alaska.

According to DNR Wildlife Section Chief Roger Holmes, most waterfowl hunters in the state recognize the need for the change.

"We've had very few complaints from hunters about the new regulation," he said. "Most waterfowl hunters know there is a problem, and they also want to do something about it."

Holmes added that hunters will have to make some adjustments when using steel shot. He advised hunters to "pattern their shotguns" by experimenting with steel shot at shooting ranges before going out in the field.

"Steel shot is actually a more efficient ammunition," he said, "because there are very few ill-formed pellets in a given load. With lead shot, some pellets aren't true in form and are less accurate."

The big advantage of steel, however, is that it's not as harmful to waterfowl. Research has shown that when waterfowl ingest lead pellets, the birds suffer a loss of red blood cells, as well as a reduction in the ability of bone marrow to produce the cells.

The result is a degeneration of the kidneys and liver, damage to the nervous system, reduced resistance to infections, starvation and eventual death.

Lead poisoning in waterfowl, according to Ray Norrgard, former executive director of the Minnesota Waterfowl Association, results when ducks and geese mistake spent lead shot shell pellets for food and grit.

Occasionally, accoring to Norrgard, lead poisoning has erupted in spectacular and tragic results.

In 1954, 16,000 mallards were lost to lead poisoning on the Claypool Reservoir in Arkansas. In 1980, more than 100 mallards died near North Heron Lake in southwestern Minnesota.

Norrgard says that hunters making the adjustment to steel shot should be aware that some shotguns won't adapt well. As a general rule, he said, American-made shotguns produced since 1975 should have no problems with steel shot.

Nissan Shuffles Upper Level Of Executives To Regain Its One-Time Edge On Auto Rivals

By DONALD WOUTAT
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

The crunch had to come sooner or later for Japanese automakers in this country, and the first to feel the squeeze was Nissan Motor Corp. USA. It had quality problems and a muddled image, which put it in a weak position to combat the falling dollar, South Korean competitors and a rally by Detroit auto companies.

This month, Nissan is completing a shake-up that has left its U.S. sales and marketing arm with a completely new management face and its employees wondering who they will report to next. It is the latest in a series of actions that dealers and others hope are positioning Nissan for a turnaround in its fortunes.

"The class of the Japanese are Toyota and Honda. Nissan has really fallen out of that first tier and into a second category with Mazda and the rest in terms in market presence, new product coming, and so forth," says a market researcher who specializes in Japanese companies.

Nissan's executive shuffle took place quietly over 18 months, which was a lot faster than Nissan was able to effect the change of its name from Datsun a few years back. To many, that was the start of the trouble.

After Toyota, Nissan had long been the No. 2 Japanese marketer of cars in the United States, which until lately was a rather pleasant and rewarding market to be in. Japanese vehicles boasted high quality, low manufacturing costs and spectacular profit margins in North America that accounted for some Japanese companies' entire worldwide earnings. The main task of the sales force was keeping all those customers straight.

Not even the 25 percent tariff that the United States slapped on Japanese trucks in 1980 or the "voluntary" ceiling on auto imports set by the Japanese government in 1981 did much harm. The quotas drove up prices without deterring customers, who bought every vehicle the Japanese could ship here.

For the Japanese, it was the sort of easy market that their Detroit counterparts enjoyed until the 1970s. Critics say Nissan borrowed a page from the Detroit story and allowed its quality to slip and its cars to get stodgy — even as it was trying to clear up customer confusion that stemmed from its puzzling 1981 decision to change its name.

At the time, the United States was the only nation where the vehicles made by Nissan Motor Co. Ltd. were called Datsuns instead of Nissans. Japanese management insisted on dropping the Datsun name here, over the protest of Senior Vice President Charles P. King and other U.S. managers who had spent two decades making Datsun a household name.

Today, the step is widely recognized as a marketing blunder that is undermining sales six years later. Some customers still think that Datsun and Nissan are two different companies. One dealer says he occasionally slips up in conversation by referring to his Datsun franchises.

Honda shot past Nissan in U.S. sales, buoyed by its own reputation for quality and innovation and its early ability to skirt import quotas as the first Japanese auto company to build cars in the United States beginning in 1982. Back home in the Japanese market, Toyota likewise increased its dominance.

Meanwhile, Japan's "Big Three" — Toyota, Nissan and Honda — found themselves competing with improved Detroit cars, an ever-lengthening roster of Japanese manufacturers and an influx of cheap South Korean autos unrestrained by import ceilings. Soon, even cheaper cars will be arriving from Malaysia.

And the fall of the dollar to a postwar low against the Japanese yen has eroded much of the cost advantage long enjoyed by auto companies from Japan. They have repeatedly raised U.S. prices because the dollars they collect are worth less, but competition prevented them from charging what they needed to maintain their customary profit margins.

"About $2,000 a car was typical profit. Now they might be getting $500," says Donald Descenza, auto analyst at Nomura Securities International in New York, a branch of the Japanese brokerage house.

Earnings shrank at all the Japanese companies, but Nissan's performance raised eyebrows in Tokyo. After four decades of phenomenal postwar success, the parent company last September reported its first operating loss of $122 million for the first six months of its fiscal year.

It was perhaps inevitable that control from Tokyo headquarters would be tightened, and the first step was the recycling of several Japanese executives back home last year. Last January, Sales Vice President Charles LaBelle and his top assistant were replaced. Then Nissan dropped its U.S. advertising agency and hired Chiat-Day of Los Angeles. On Aug. 6, the company announced the early retirement of King, 58, a one-time Chrysler executive who had headed Nissan's U.S. sales and marketing operations for 15 years.

King's duties at Nissan's headquarters in Carson, Calif., will be taken over by Thomas D. Mignanelli, a highly regarded Ford Motor executive hired earlier this year from his post as general sales manager of the Lincoln-Mercury division. The shake-up does not involve Nissan's separately operated manufacturing arm, which makes cars and pickup trucks in Smyrna, Tenn.

King says he had hoped to retire earlier, but first wanted to arrange the recently announced launch of Nissan's new Infiniti luxury car division with a separate dealer network. He has told dealers and others that he also wanted to first replace LaBelle, find a new ad agency and help with the transition of the newly assigned Japanese executives. And colleagues say he chafed at the shortened leash from Tokyo.

"He got fed up," a colleague says.

However, an executive at a Nissan supplier says: "We had understood they brought Mignanelli in to assume King's duties and that they intended to kick King upstairs somehow. It was clear that Nissan wanted a new management team."

The changes in the sales and marketing arm have occurred in the wake of what is described as a rebound in the quality of Nissan's cars during the past year. A survey by Westlake Village, Calif., market researchers J.D. Power & Associates, based on reported customer problems with 1987-model cars, called Nissan the top Japanese company in overall quality, trailing only Mercedes-Benz in a survey of all auto makers. A year earlier, it ranked fourth behind Mercedes, Toyota and Honda. Its new Tennessee-built Sentra small car trailed only two luxury models, the Toyota Cressida and a Mercedes-Benz line, in perceived quality.

"Nissan has made a huge leap in product quality. It's the first positive thing Nissan has done in a couple of years," says John Hammond, a J.D. Power analyst.

Moreover, in the first seven months of the year, Nissan has sold more cars in this country than Toyota and is No. 2 to Honda among the Japanese. Toyota blames this on its own car shortages as against the plentiful supplies of Nissan models. Indeed, Nissan has an unhealthy 85 days worth of its imports on dealers' lots, compared to Toyota's too-lean 26 days. But others credit Nissan's aggressive sales approach as well.

"I think Nissan has been much more responsive to the marketplace and recognized very early that it had become a buyer's market and that to succeed a distributor had to be extremely aggressive," Descenza says.

Latest Trade Figures Fuel Push For Protectionist Laws

By MARCY GORDON
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — The Reagan administration got another bad report card on the nation's trade deficit this past week, pressuring the already flagging dollar and bond prices, and providing more ammunition to proponents of protectionist trade legislation in Congress.

The Commerce Department reported Wednesday that the gap between what the United States sells and purchases abroad widened to an all-time high of $39.5 billion in the April-to-June quarter, reflecting a hefty increase in imports that overtook a smaller rise in exports.

The discouraging trade report confirmed parallel figures released a few weeks earlier which put the second-quarter merchandise trade deficit at $42.7 billion. The latest deficit figure is lower because it reflects trade on a "balance-of-payments" basis, omitting such factors as the cost of shipping and insurance and military sales.

News of the swelling trade gap pulled the dollar down against all major currencies except the British pound. Bond prices, which have been closely tracking the dollar's movements for several months, tumbled in turn — forcing interest rates higher.

The trade figures showed that, despite a substantial long-term decline in the value of the dollar, the more competitive dollar has not yet produced a big reduction in the trade deficit.

The data prompted foreign-exchange investors to sell dollars, by arousing concern that the administration could allow the U.S. currency to fall still further in an attempt to cut the trade shortfall.

The deficit did decline in volume terms. Measured using 1982 prices, to eliminate pricing changes, the deficit peaked at $47.2 billion in the third quarter of [illegible] $41 billion in this year's second quarter, down from $42 billion in the first quarter, Commerce Undersecretary Robert Ortner said.

However, the deficit did grow in dollars, known as the nominal basis.

"On a nominal basis, there is no turn in the trade deficit, simply no turn. That potentially spells trouble for the U.S. economy, although not right away," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc.

"The figures demonstrate that the light at the end of the tunnel the (Reagan) administration has been talking about can barely be seen," said Mark Anderson, a trade economist at the AFL-CIO's headquarters in Washington. "The overall impact (of the declining dollar) is clearly not what people thought it would be."

Not surprisingly, the union economist is sharply critical of the administration's trade and monetary policies. If the current trade trend continues, Anderson contends, some 2.5 million U.S. jobs will be displaced this year by foreign competition.

He warned that pressure could build again in Congress for protectionist legislation after the lawmakers return from their summer recess.

The next set of trade figures to be published is preliminary data for July due on Sept. 11.

"That's the next key number to look at," said Mitchell Held, chief financial economist for Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

U.S. bond prices were weakened this past week by a skittish reaction of European and Japanese investors to the trade deficit report, Held suggested.

On the one hand, he said, the overseas investors see a buoyant U.S. economy. The Commerce Department also reported this past week that consumer spending, bolstered by brisk auto sales and exceptional air conditioning costs, soared 0.9 percent in July for the second month in a row, more than twice as fast as incomes grew.

But the foreign bond investors are alarmed, on the other hand, by the burgeoning trade deficit, which would appear to undercut the economic buoyancy, Held noted. And they are concerned that a robust economy will be prone to buy still more goods from abroad, further swelling the trade gap.

Clothing Plant May Relocate In S.C.

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — Horry County's proximity to the Georgetown port has convinced an international clothing maker to attempt to relocate its main plant from Hong Kong to the Grand Strand county, U.S. Rep. Robin Tallon said.

The South Carolina Democrat said the Horry County plant would initially hire 1,000 people.

Tallon said he is currently helping the company with some red tape, and that a formal announcement could come as early as next month. He wouldn't identify the company.

"Hong Kong will belong to communist China starting in 1997 so they are desperately looking to move industrial investments out of the country," the 6th District representative said. "My immediate concerns are helping them with a lot of red tape."

The manufacturer would have to construct a new plant — most likely in western Horry County — because available industrial sites in the area are too small, Tallon said. The plant will be capabe of completely manufacturing its product on site.

Tallon said he helped arrange the deal on a two-week trip he made to Asia this month. During the trip, Tallon said he also visited Taiwan where he found similar interest in investing in the area.

"The Taiwanese are very interested in real estate investment," Tallon said.

Hendrix & Dail Crew Cleaned White House Dirt

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County firm of Hendrix & Dail Inc. was called to Washington recently to clean up the dirt at the White House.

The soil fumigation company sent four employees to the nation's capital in mid-August for a two-day project on the south elipse lawn of the Pennsylvania Avenue residence, said Gene Brown, Hendrix & Dail president.

"We had done some work years ago for the National Parks Service and, in fact, we had done some work on the Rose Garden at the White House," Brown said. "We have been negotiating on this job for several years, but they kept putting it off for a variety of reasons and it finally came to pass last week."

Hendrix & Dail, a company founded by Floyd F. Hendrix Sr. and Moye Dail in 1964, treated the soil in conjunction with a landscape project on the two-acre section, Brown said.

"A landscape contractor stripped the turf off the lawn and rototilled the soil and then had us come in and fumigate it," he said. "Then the contractor came back in and covered it up and resodded."

The workers had to be careful working around some valuable trees on the White House lawn, some of which were favorites of former presidents, Brown said.

"There were a lot of unusual and unique trees in the area that we worked, and we had to work around them out beyond the drip line of the tree to keep from killing them," he said.

"We like to say we sterilize the soil It primarily sterilizes and helps with diseases. It more or less eliminates all competition to the new grass or whatever crop you happen to be growing, so it doesn't have to overcome insects or nematodes and can get a good healthy start."

Brown accompanied W. Carroll McLawhorn, the firm's executive vice president; Ray Braxton, a crew chief, and Bobby Braxton, a crew member, on the White House project.

"We're planning to do more work up there," McLawhorn said. "We feel very privileged about it."

The soil fumigation firm, which employs about 42 people at its Greenville location on Industrial Boulevard, north of Greenville, and facilities in Oxford, Tifton, Ga., and Frankfort, Ky., has worked in 35 states, Africa, Canada and Jamaica, Brown said.

"We got started in 1964 treating tobacco plant beds in eastern North Carolina, that was primarily the work," Brown said. "But it just grew from a Pitt County firm into Granville County to Tipton, Georgia.

"We operate primarily in tobacco areas because it is the backbone of our business, but we have diversified into vegetables, turf and golf course greens and forestry. We're primarily soil fumigation. We'll manufacture equipment for soil fumigation and we sell bulk chemicals, but we're not in a full line of agricultural chemicals like some companies."

The company's diversification was partially dictated by an unstable farm economy, according to company officials, who said the firm moved from its original location on N.C. 903 about 10 years ago.

"Over the years, our business has been affected considerably by the cutbacks and bad crop years and the credits and collections," Brown said.

"The cutbacks have affected our dollar sales in the tobacco industry. That was one reason why we diversified. Originally, we were just treating tobacco beds.

"We have been affected by the tobacco cuts every year, so therefore we have taken that volume and moved into other markets and diversied and specialized in developing technology of our own," McLawhorn said.

"We are specialist in that one vein or one area of soil fumigation. With all these other things, we're just trying to be proficient in that field and that area and expand it as far as it takes us."

Hendrix & Dail has worked for forestry services in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, Georgia, Tennessee, according to Brown, who said the firm has also treated the soil at a number of Professional Golf Association courses.

Despite the work at the White House and other areas across the country, Brown, a Pitt County native, said the company is a bit of a local secret.

"Unless somebody has a farming interest in this area, they don't know what we're doing." he said.

Six Airlines Agree To Reduce Delays

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government is increasing the pressure on airlines to eliminate chronically late flights, and has won an agreement from six of the country's major air carriers to make schedule changes.

The six airlines agreed under Transportation Department pressure on Friday to shift schedules at four busy airports — Atlanta, Dallas-Fort Worth, Chicago and Boston — to keep flights from being regularly late.

Under the consent agreement, the airlines must shift the schedules of their chronically late flights so that they arrive within 30 minutes of their scheduled arrival time 50 percent of the time by November and 75 percent of the time by next April.

Some of those flights, the government contends, have been arriving late 70 percent or more of the time.

If an airline doesn't comply, it could be subject to fines of up to $1,000 for any flight that is regularly late, said Wayne Vance, general counsel for the department.

The carriers that signed the agreement are Eastern Airlines, American Airlines, Continental Airlines, United Airlines, USAir and Delta Air Lines.

The Transportation Department also has been examining scheduling practices at four other airports — New York's LaGuardia, Newark International, Denver Stapleton and San Francisco International.

Dollar, Interest Rates Cool Stocks

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A weak dollar in foreign exchange and rising interest rates have once again cast a shadow over the stock market.

In recent days, the dollar has slumped against leading foreign currencies to around the lows it hit last spring, touching off new inflation concerns and talk of credit-tightening by the Federal Reserve.

And that, in turn, has helped push interest rates higher in the credit markets to the point where yields on long-term Treasury bonds surpassed 9 percent.

All this has made stock traders uneasy. But the way some analysts see it, the situation may actually be healthy for the market.

First of all, they argue, stock prices got overextended as they climbed to record highs as recently as last Tuesday. They say nervousness about the dollar and interest rates helps keep enthusiasm from getting dangerously out of hand.

In the optimistic view, the doubts raised by the dollar may have restored the proverbial "wall of worry" that bull markets climb.

"The market has its minor setbacks on pieces of bad news, but that's not the way a major top materializes," maintained Justin Mamis, an analyst at the investment firm of Cowen & Co.

"Tops of consequence come when so much GOOD news and seemingly robust market activity lull everyone into believing there is a lot more to come."

As upbeat as they may be, few analysts believe the rest of 1987 is going to provide easy pickings for stock investors.

At their current levels, interest rates have made bonds and other interest-bearing investments increasingly attractive in competition with stocks for investors' favor.

"Should bond rates move to around 9.5 percent, the interest outlook will create some uneasiness about the longevity of the earnings story that is now widely acknowledged as the stock market's engine," said Greg Smith at Prudential-Bache Securities.

Indeed, hardly anybody on Wall Street would be surprised if the market averages took a short- to intermediate-term drop of 10 percent or so — something that hasn't happened in more than three years.

"The danger or caveat in continuing to be an aggressive near-term buyer is the increasing possibility of a 10 percent type correction," asserted Edward Nicoski, analyst at Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood Inc. in Minneapolis.

Against that background, the stock market gave ground in the past week, breaking a four-week string of gains.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials tumbled 70.15 to 2,639.35, for its largest weekly loss since it dropped a record 141.03 points Sept. 8-12 of last year.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index fell 4.51 to 182.99, and the market value index at the American Stock Exchange was down 3.72 at 359.75.

Strikes Cut Into South Korean Car Exports

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The nationwide labor strikes that have lasted more than a month have seriously hurt South Korea's export-oriented auto industry, with exports falling far below goals, automakers said.

South Korea's three leading automakers — Hyundai Motor Co., Daewoo Motor Co. and Kia Motors Corp. — said they have combined to export 14,600 cars so far in August, about one-fouth of the month's export goal of 53,000. The lost export earnings were estimated at $200 million.

The three comapanies have exported a combined 329,500 cars over first eight months of 1987, only about 50 percent of the goal of 660,000 for the entire year, they said.

Korea exported about 300,000 cars last year, according to the automakers.

Hyundai, the biggest Korean auto producer, said it planned to export 37,000 cars this month, but has so far shipped only 7,700, bringing the total number of cars exported this year to 257,000.

Daewoo planned to export 8,000 cars but shipped only 2,000 for an eight-month total of 40,000. Kia planned to export 8,000 cars but shipped 4,900 for an eight-month total of 32,500, the two companies said.

The three automakers said they doubted annual export targets would be attained, blaming poor parts shipments in August and the uncertainty of future parts supplies. Hundreds of local auto part suppliers have been crippled by strikes.

Hyundai and Kia have resumed production after they were forced to suspend operations for several days because of part supliers' strikes. Daewoo was still unable to reopen its car plant near Seoul because of labor unrest.

Asked about future prospects, one Hyundai official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said: "Although we have resumed car assembly, it is like walking over the thin ice in a river. It is very difficult deal with the workers who tend to make excessive demands and also sometimes are split in factional rivalry."

"Furthermore, it is hard to predict when strikes at hundreds of small part markers would be settled," he said.

Hyundai's overall daily car production has been cut by 900 cars to 1,600, according to company officials.

The construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad was completed in 1883. The last spike was driven near Garrison, Mont.

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville, N.C. Sunday, August 30, 1987

Today Is Dr. Frederick Haar Day

Friends of Dr. Haar will honor him at the VFW Hut on Mumford Road today from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. The public may attend.

Dr. Frederick B. Haar has been a pediatrician in Greenville for 52 years and many of his patients are at least third generation in the same family.

"Dr. Haar was my doctor when I was a child," Rosa Lee Phillips, a retired nurse who has accompanied him on rounds at Pitt Memorial in years past, said, "and he was my daughter's doctor. And now he's caring for my granddaughter, Drenda Best, and my grandson, John Best Jr. Like so many people in Pitt County, we just adore the man. I have never known anybody in my whole life that I thought had his heart, his honesty, his genuine love for children and their parents."

Now that he's 83, Dr. Haar isn't doing anything differently from the the way he's conducted his practice in the past. "I'm in the office every day except Saturday afternoon and Sunday and I'm available on the phone 24 hours a day," he said. "That's the only way I know to practice medicine."

Born in Wilmington Nov. 22, 1904, he was the third in a family of five boys. His father sold groceries and hardware at the corner of Front and Dock Streets. The German immigrant family lived above the store until shortly before Frederick was born. He was delivered in their new home at the corner of Sixth and Dock streets.

He regrets that he never learned German. His two older brothers, Henry and Lawrence, learned much of their family's native tongue, mostly from their grandmother, who spoke no English. But after the schools sent home notes asking that the boys not be taught German, his parents decided to stop allowing the children to learn German, so he was never included in the teaching and his brothers gradually forgot much of what they knew, he said.

His father died when he was eight years old and his mother later married her husband's brother, Jurgen Haar, who became an affluent businessman. His uncle-stepfather brought to Wilmington such amenities as electricity and electrically powered trolley cars to the streets and even a larger "beach car," a trolley which ran seven miles to Wrightsville Beach. "I had two good fathers," he said. Both my father and Jurgen were good solid men."

The family life was centered around Lutheran Church teachings. THey attended the St. Paul Evangelical Lutheran Church at the corner of Sixth and Market streets in Wilmington.

Dr. Haar enjoyed high school in Wilmington and sports, mostly at the YMCA, as a young teenager. His last two years of high school were spent at Wagner College on Long Island, a Lutheran preparatory school chosen by his mother.

He met the woman who would share his life while both were in high school in Wilmington. She was Nell Venable Hubbard, his wife of 51 years, who died in July, 1986.

"Nell and I always loved each other," he said. "But I had a lot of education to get to become the doctor I wanted to be," he said. "So we agreed not to tie each other down at all, but to be with each other whenever we could over many long years," he said.

While he was attending Roanoke College in Salem. Virginia, Nell attended Converse College in Spartanburg, S.C. "Once while she was there, majoring in music, she was invited to sing with the famous soprano Lily Pons," he said. "She told me she was scared to death," he said, "but Miss Pons took her apart and gave her all the instruction she needed and she did it," he said.

After her education at Converse was completed, the future Mrs. Haar trained as a pediatric assistant and worked for Dr. J. Buren Sidbury, a Wilmington pediatrician.

Dr. Haar often visited the office when he was home on vacation from Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, where he obtained his M.D. degree.

"I really admired Dr. Sidbury," he said. "He was the first North Carolina doctor to make serious inroads into saving babies from dying of dehydration due to diarrhea, often during their first summer after their mothers had stopped nursing them. Before Dr. Sidbury brought modern methods of giving fluids to this state, thousands of babies died. My mother lost three babies this way.

After his graduation from Jefferson in 1932, Haar interned at the New York Nursery and Child's Hospital in New York, specializing in pediatrics.

"I shall never forget a conversation around the dinner table at my fraternity house at Jefferson. All the guys were discussing what they would do once their medical education was completed. 'What in the hell is the matter with you?' was one of my friends' comment when he heard I was planning to study pedjatrics and be a pediatrician. Most of them aspired to surgery and other high-flown medical careers. Pediatrics was just becoming known then and it did not have the prestige that it does now."

"I always knew, though, that I wanted to be a children's doctor."

Once his internship was completed, he was invited to stay in New York and remain associated with New York Nursery and Child's Hospital. "No," I told them. "I'm going home and marry my sweetheart and practice there."

The Haars were married in January, 1935, and set out looking for a place to set up a pediatric office. Dr. Sidbury suggested they go to Goldsboro and they did go there looking. But they also decided to visit their friends, Dr. Thomas Merton Watson, also a pediatrician, and his wife, Pat, in Greenville.

Dr. Watson invited Dr. Haar to join his practice, and he agreed.

"I'll never forget our first day in Greenville," he said. "Nell spotted a maple spool bed in the window of Quinn-Miller Furniture Store and wanted to check the price. I wandered around while she did so and pretty soon came a phone call there for me. 'It couldn't be,' I said. 'No one I know knows I'm here.' But sure enough it was for me. Dr. Watson's nurse had used her intuition that the newcomer newlyweds might be furniture shopping and had found me. Dr. Watson was out of town and she had a child with a fever of 105 in the office. I went right over and treated him."

The Haars' first residence in Greenville was an upstair suite of rooms in the home of Raleigh and Gladys Lee on Summit Street. The only entrance to their rooms was through the owners' living room. Dr. Haar recalls, "The first day I came home from work, I said, 'Nell, I'll take out this trash.' 'Oh, no, you won't carry trash through Mrs. Lee's living room,' she said. Nothing would do but that I go downtown to a hardware store, buy some rope and rig up a way to let the trash to the ground through the window. That was Nell, a very strong-minded woman with very high principles."

The Haars' two sons were born in Greenville. Fred Hubbard Haar was a pharmacist in Charlottesville, Va., until his death three years ago. Richard Venable Haar is a certified public accountant in Raleigh. There are five adult grandchildren.

The Haars became members of the First Presbyterian Church soon after their arrival in Greenville. "There wasn't a Lutheran church here then," Haar said. "So I gladly became a Presbyterian to be with Nell. She was from a long line of Presbyterians and I didn't feel there was that much difference in the doctrine of the two denominations. Still don't."

Housecalls and visits back to the hospital to check have been a part of his life. He remembers one housecall all the way to Ayden only to be told by a distraught mother that her child was not going to be given diptheria antitoxin. Haar and Dr. Grady Dixon, the child's general practitioner, had agreed on the diagnosis and knew that the boy was likely to die if he didn't get the antitoxin. "Boy," Dr. Dixon said addressing him, "Let's get out of here." He said he and Dr. Dixon left the house, he sorrowfully, Dr. Dixon, older and wiser and not so worried. "By the time I got back to Greenville, I got a call from Dr. Dixon. The woman had called him back to give her son the antitoxin once her fear subsided some. And he got all right."

Dr. Haar said he had slept many a night with a culture tube in a breast pocket of his pajamas. This is how he would incubate a culture like diptheria. The next morning he'd test for whatever he was looking for.

Over 52 years, nurses at Pitt Memorial and its predecessor hospitals have grown accustomed to seeing Haar in the halls at all times of the day and night checking on patients, many times with pajamas obviously under his clothes. "Other doctors check on their patients when it's the appointed rounds time or when they're called by a nurse," Rosa Lee Phillips said. "Everyone at the hospital knows Dr. Haar's going to show up at any time he gets worried about one of his patients and feels the need to check on him."

Some parents of his patients report unexpected visits from him at their homes in the middle of the night in his pajamas and robe. "I just wanted to see how Johnny was doing," he'd tell the parents of a sick child.

Dr. Haar has served in various capacities on state and local committees of many medical organizations, including the North Carolina Pediatric Society. For many years, he conducted the Pitt County Welfare Children's Clinics one day of each week.

Possibly the most painful time of his life was when he spent several years away from his wife and young sons during World War II. He volunteered to enter the medical corps, but then never directly practiced. He had administrative duties at various places in the United States.

A special federal action directed him back to Greenville in 1945, when Dr. Watson died, leaving the town without a pediatrician.

Dr. Haar says himself that he is probably the poorest physician in Greenville. "Money's just never meant anything to me," he said. "I like what I do and that's all I care about."

Asked about hobbies, he said, "Hobbies are something other people have. I am a doctor."

Japanese Products Fill Lives

For the last several years, Japanese manufacturers have infiltrated our lives with their cars, cameras and electronic goodies. Their success at producing what America wants has become a phenomenon.

Sony is our second language. We speak Mitsubishi fluently. Toshiba rolls off our tongue like butter melting in our mouth. It always used to be fascinating to read what their designers had on their drawing boards for our future.

After reading a recent story on what is being previewed as the latest consumer products from Japan, I think they've lost it!

Japan is at work on a personalized sound-activated household shrine. Clap twice and the doors open automatically on a miniature altar, the interior lights up and a recorded prayer starts to play. It's available in Buddhist and Shinto models. I could be wrong, but I'm willing to bet that at $675 it's going to have a long shelf life.

A Japanese wedding gown manufacturer thinks he has come up with a winner for the American market: a fiber-optic wedding dress that glows in the dark. They play well in Japan because their weddings are by candlelight. Drip-dry, maybe, but I have a feeling that glowing like a tennis ball will never catch on in the Midwest.

They're also at work on an automatic bread maker that kneads the dough as you sleep. Before you sack out at night, you pour the flour, water and yeast in a container. In the morning, it's ready for the oven.

I guess the logic behind that is if American women get choked up when their toilet bowls are being cleaned as they sleep, think what all that dough would do for them. They're too late anyway. Sara Lee got there first.

Another idea that definitely needs work is the stereo cabinet where you climb in, play music, get a massage and inhale oxygen-enriched air. Unless you draw Michael Jackson's name in the Christmas exchange, forget it. For $9,000 you can go to a mountaintop in Tibet and hum.

I know what you're thinking. You're saying look how many Americans said they'd never eat raw fish and today there are sushi bars all over the country. But when you come right down to it, Americans are practical people with practical needs.

What about the electronic bridge score pad? The copier that fits in your hand? The horse race analyzer that takes a 9V battery? The bug detector to see if you're under surveillance? The portable instrument that tells you where the sweet spot is on your golf ball? All flukes.

It's like Henny Youngman's brother-in-law who opened up a tall man's shop in Tokyo. Bad marketing advice.

Adults need two servings of milk every day. Low-fat milk and cheese made from low-fat milk are lower-calorie choices.

BENITA LOUISE JENKINS — is the granddaughter of Ethel L. Jenkins of Bethel, who announces her engagement to Athan Maurice Marshall, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Raison of Coatsville, Pa. The bride-elect is the daughter of Brenda Joyce Jenkins. A Sept. 26 wedding is being planned.

Betsy Drake Lewis' Decorating Tips

With costs continually rising, quality and durability of upholstered furniture are very important considerations. With this in mind, consider top grain leather for your next upholstery purchase.

No two pieces of leather are alike. Distinctive marks such as barbed wire nicks, brands, neck wrinkles, or scratches give the individual hide its personality. They are nature's hallmarks that took years to custom make. Only genuine leather can boast these marks, and pride of ownership is enhanced because of this individuality.

Leather is half again as strong as any other upholstery materials so it will outlast any other material. The many available colors are permanent so they will not rub off or fade. Today's leathers will not crack. Because it is a natural material, it is said to "breathe". Odors and heat are not retained. It is never hot or cold because it assumes your own body temperature very rapidly.

By the yard, leather costs more; by the year it is the least costly because it will last as much as two to three times as long as fabric. While other materials depreciate year after year, leather appreciates and improves in look with age. No slip-covering or expensive cleaning will ever be needed.

Our inventory of fine leather sofas, chairs, ottomans and recliners is at its peak and your selection will never be better. We invite you to stop in soon.

Paris en Plaid from Lancome, Paris:
Sophisticated Patterns of Parisian Colour

Plaid. It's the pattern that "tailors" autumn fashion, taking checks to a bold extreme. You'll see it everywhere...but never like this!

New-tailored, neutral colours now blur the lines between the expected and the extraordinary. The polarity of black and white counterpoised by the subtlety of grey and violet...lifted by vibrant red, pink-berry and orange...colour-crossed by threads of kelly, cobalt and golden brown...made brand new again when paired, tripled, quadrupled, and used the way plaid is used: layered, for textural, polished effect.

Paris en Plaid from Lancome, Paris. Because no matter how tailored the clothes, no matter how classic the silhouette...a woman's eyes, cheeks, lips and nails should never look serious. Just sensational!

Couple Marries On Saturday

JACKSON — Anita Delayne Coleman and Dr. C. Christian Hamilton were united in marriage Saturday morning at 11 o'clock in the Jackson United Methodist Church. The Revs. John Andrews of Jackson and Timothy Carter of Greenville conducted the double-ring ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin C. Coleman. The bridegroom is the son of the late Dr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Hamilton Jr.

The bride wore a candlelight formal gown of silk satin over peau de soie. The basque bodice with an overlay of English net, embellished with designs of alencon lace reembroidered with pearls, was fashioned with a V-yoke highlighted with sprays of lace. The gown had a split ring collar and bridal buttons of satin closed the back. The long fitted sleeves were enhanced with cutout motifs of pearled lace ending in scallops over the hands. The gathered skirt stemmed from a lowered waist marked with lace scallops and cascading designs of lace on the chapel-length train. Her veil was a pointed shell of pleated satin outlined in pearls and embellished with side lace leaves, waterfall pearls and silk roses with a waltz-length veil of English silk illusion. She carried her mother's wedding prayer Bible centered with a mixed cascade of cymbidium orchids and sonia roses.

The bride graduated from King College in Bristol, Tenn., and received her master's degree from East Carolina University. She plans to continue her career in counseling and is the former executive director of the Carolina Pregnancy Center in Greenville, N.C. The bridegroom is a second-year internal medicine resident at Greenville Memorial Hospital in Greenville, S.C. He is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Asheville and ECU School of Medicine.

Maids of honor were Sharon A. Coleman of Chapel Hill and Angela M. Coleman of Jackson, sisters of the bride, Jo Lynn Elvington of Nichols, S.C., sister of the bridegroom, and Donna J. Crabtree of Bristol, Va.

Tarah Carter and Christa Carter of Greenville distributed programs.

James M. Markley of Fairview was best man. Ushers included Joseph F. Hamilton III of South Daytona, Fla., brother of the bridegroom, James F. Goffin of Horseshoe, and William W. Brooks of Fairview. Webb Elvington of Nichols, S.C., nephew of the bridegroom, was ring bearer.

The attendants wore tea-length dresses originated by the bride's grandmother. They were fashioned in coral brocade satin dresses with dropped waistlines and pleated skirt, V-neckline and constrasting cream eyelet collar and cuffs bordered in scalloped lace. Each carried a nosegay of mixed flowers accented by sonia roses.

A program of music was presented by organist Genevieve H. Gay of Jackson, soloist Dilene deSilva Pinto of Reafe, Brazil, and trumpeteer Samuel Morgan of Seaboard.

Isadora Johnson of Jackson directed the ceremony.

A reception followed in the church fellowship hall and was given by the bride's parents. Lynda J. Brady of Roanoke Rapids greeted guests and Nelda S. Martin of Jackson presided at the register.

The couple will live in Greenville, S.C., after a wedding trip to New Mexico and Colorado.

MRS. HAMILTON

A rehearsal dinner was given by Mr. and Mrs. James M. Markley at the Holiday Inn in Roanoke Rapids.

Several miscellaneous showers and luncheons, lingerie shower and pig picking were held prior to the wedding.

Wedding Vows Said Friday

Tracie Lynne Parkin of Greenville and Peter Reginald Morris of Columbia, Tenn., were married Friday evening at 7:30 in a ceremony held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis R. Curtis.

The bride is the daughter of James Edmond Parkin of Southern Pines and Bethel O'Neal Parkin of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of James Prescott Morris of Raleigh and the late Mrs. Morris.

The matron of honor was Wendy H. Keith of Greenville. The father of the bridegroom was best man. C.K. Morgan of Greenville, son of the bride, was ring bearer.

The bride wore a tea-length dress of imported candlelight chantilly lace fashioned with an open, square neckline enhanced with a floral pattern silk Venise lace and pearl edging. The elbow-length lace sleeves were finished with pearl button closures. The chemise styled dress was styled with a princess lines defined with pearl edging and the drop waistline was encircled with a Venise lace border. She wore a pearl hairpiece and carried champagne roses with matching ribbon.

The honor attendant wore a pink satin tea-length dress styled with a fitted bodice, V-neckline, shirred pouf sleeves accented with a satin rosette and basque waist. An asymmetrical drape ended with a bow at the waist. The skirt was a mock wrap design. She carried champagne roses and pink miniature carnations with greenery and pink ribbon.

MRS. MORRIS

The couple will be living in Columbia, Tenn., after a cruise to the Bahamas.

The bride was formerly office manager of East Carolina Heart Specialists, PA in Greenville. The bridegroom is credit manager of Heilig-Meyers in Lawrenceburg, Tenn.

After a Bahamas cruise, the couple will live in Columbia, Tenn.

Give Your Wife Flowers

DEAR ABBY: I would like to urge all husbands to not keep putting off the nice things they want to do for their wives. For if they do, when they finally get around to it, it might be too late.

I know. That's what I did. My wife passed away nearly a year ago — just 23 days before our 49th wedding anniversary. Since then, I have been putting a bouquet of fresh flowers on her grave regularly. It makes me feel guilty that I never gave her a bouquet while she was alive and could enjoy it.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Now that I think of it, there are a lot of things I should have said and done, but I never got around to it. And now it's too late, and I am filled with regret. — GLENN KIRBY, LAKEWOOD, CALIF.

DEAR GLENN: Your letter moved me deeply, and it might inspire others to give "bouquets" to the living while they can appreciate them. When I telephoned you personally to ask if I could use your name, you said, "Yes, if it will help someone for whom it is not too late."

Thank you for your generosity. God bless you.

DEAR ABBY: There is a new fellow at work who seemed to like me a lot. My co-workers said he was interested in dating me, but I have a policy against dating people from work.

Later I contrived to introduce him to a friend who works with me. Thanks to my matchmaking scheme, those two really hit it off.

Now I am kicking myself for not realizing how attractive and nice he is. I now regret introducing him to my friend. I should have dated him myself when I had the chance even though we work for the same company. Is it too late now? What can I do? — MISERABLE MATCHMAKER

DEAR MISERABLE: If they "really hit it off," it's probably too late, so don't do anything. (And quit kicking yourself before you dislocate your hip.)

DEAR ABBY: I have been legally separated from my wife for seven years. I recently met a lady whom I figured to be about 40 or 45 years old — and she turned out to be 55! (I am 40.)

We started dating, became good friends, hiking, biking, then dinner and dancing, and finally lovers! When I told her I was married, she became upset and refuses to see me until I am divorced.

I know she loves me, and after not seeing her for a month, I feel like half of me is missing. What should I do? — RUDY

DEAR RUDY: You know the lady's terms. I can't tell you whether you should get divorced in order to marry your perennially youthful lover, but if you feel like half of you is missing, use the half with the brains in it and make a decision you can live with.

DEAR ABBY: Your "Monkey's Disgrace" lifted my laughter high on a low-mood day. It's truly a delightful ode to the disappointment of our furry forefathers.

During World War II I heard this one: "A jungle gentleman is a monkey that will not monkey with another monkey's monkey." — RAY IN YUMA

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church was the setting for the wedding ceremony Saturday at 3 p.m. of Teresa Lee Lloyd and Rodney Eugene Davenport. The Rev. J. Malloy Owen III performed the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Eugene Lloyd of Route 1, Winterville. Mrs. Dave Altizer of Tarboro and Carl Davenport of Rocky Mount are parents of the bridegroom.

The bride wore a formal-length gown of white whipped cream satin designed with an open neckline edged in clipped peau d'ange lace. The empire bodice was styled with an overlay of matching lace which extended down the cardinal sleeves to the elbow. The Juliet flared cuffs were trimmed in miniature clipped lace. Lace panels in a redingote effect fell from the inset bond encircling the waistline. Appliques of matching lace were featured on the attached chapel train. She wore a Camelot cap which held her mantilla edged in lace. She carried a bouquet of white roses, baby's breath and daisies with white satin streamers. She was given in marriage by her father.

The honor attendant wore a formal gown of royal blue matte taffeta designed with an open sweetheart neckline and short French pouf sleeves featuring accents of rosettes of self-fabric. The elongated bodice was styled with inset panels of ruffled taffeta finishing with a dropped basque waistline and full circular skirt. She carried a bouquet of mixed summer flowers tied with satin bows and wore a halo of matching flowers in her hair.

The mother of the bride wore a sea green lustreglo gown with a V-neckline. The mother of the bridegroom wore a street-length dress of periwinkle blue georgette with bugle beads. Both wore corsages of white cymbidium orchids. Grandmothers wore corsages of white carnations.

The human body can tolerate a therapeutic peat bath as hot as 118 degrees farenheit, a temperature that would be close to scalding in water, because heat in peat is transferred molecule by molecule, not by convection as it is in water, says National Geographic.

A New Idea Is Born

Introducing Special Beginnings at Heritage Hospital
More than just a new place to have your baby, it's a whole new way to give your baby a good start in life.

The 2nd floor of Heritage Hospital, the Women's Pavilion, includes Special Beginnings, the region's first true birthing center, and a special place where you can have your baby.

The rooms at Special Beginnings are more like comfortable bedrooms than hospital rooms. They're decorated to make you feel right at home, complete with rocking chair, cradle, a television and a recliner that turns into an extra bed for dad.

The room you check into becomes your room for your entire stay. You won't be moved around several times during labor, delivery and recovery as you would be in most hospitals.

Helping you feel relaxed and at home makes it easier for you and the baby, and it can actually shorten labor and recovery time in most cases. It's simply a gentler, more sensible way for your baby to make his difficult transition into the world.

At Special Beginnings, Mother Knows Best

The doctors and nurses here respect your wishes and opinions. You're able to choose your method of childbirth, decide who you'd like with you during labor and delivery and pick the most comfortable positions of the special birthing beds.

First-Class Medical Care

As pleasant as the surroundings are, safety still comes first. Part of the comfort of Special Beginnings is knowing that you're in one of eastern North Carolina's newest medical facilities, Heritage Hospital.

An Idea This Important Is Worth A Closer Look

To understand the benefits of having your baby at Special Beginnings, you simply need to visit the birthing center, meet the staff and see for yourself all the thoughtful touches.

To arrange a tour of the Women's Pavilion and Special Beginnings, call us at 641-7272 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Some Make The Dangerous Trek To Afghanistan

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Occupied by the Red Army, ringed by high mountains, Afghanistan is closed to virtually all Westerners except those who make the dangerous secret trek to the battlefield.

The odyssey into Afghanistan has lured journalists, doctors, lawyers and even a U.S. congressman, and left them with visions of starving refugees, maimed children, veiled widows and above all the fierce Mojahedeen guerillas who are battling the Soviets for control of their homeland.

"I went because I thought that I could have a little more influence here, and also say what was wrong and what was right" with the covert U.S. program to arm the guerrillas, said Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas.

Wilson, a member of the House Intelligence Committee which oversees the aid, has mounted on his wall the first of the American "Stinger" anti-aircraft missile launchers sent to the guerrillas last fall.

Wilson was turned away at the border in November by authorities in neighboring Pakistan, but slipped in last February to spent four days near Khost in eastern Afghanistan, and found what he called "a program the CIA should be proud of."

The Stingers and a "rather massive buildup over the last year have turned the tide," forcing Soviet warplanes to operate too high to be effective and forcing their helicopters to fly low, within the range of guerilla machine guns, said Wilson, interviewed in his Capitol Hill office.

Jan Goodwin, a journalist, and Charles Norchi, an attorney, also have journeyed into Afghanistan and the picture they paint has more suffering than bravado and more victims than heros.

"I went to do a story on women refugees (in Pakistan), and when I got there, I couldn't believe the stories that I heard. I thought it was exagerrated. So I decided to go in," said Goodwin, executiv editor of Ladies Home Journal. After her trip, she wrote a book, "Caught In The Crossfire," her story of Afghanistan.

"When I got there, I saw a country that had been potholed, with mountainsides devastated, villages flattened, children dying of malnutrition. I saw them drop dead at my feet as I drove into villages," Goodwin said in an interview.

Norchi and his coleagues documented numerous cases in which the Soviets or their Afghan government allies tortured civilians, raped women, killed children and reduced villages to rubble. And they found that some of the most severe suffering was caused by hunger.

"If you bomb the irrigation system every year, it has a cumulative effect," said Norchi. "If the young men are driven from the country for over five years, it has a cumulative effect."

The people of Afghanistan are starving, he said, and "the war is getting dirtier."

Sovit warplanes have intensified their air attacks on refugee camps in Pakistan and an estimated Soviet 20,000 special forces, known as Spetsnaz, have been brought in to spearhead the war on Afghanistan, according to Wilson, Goodwin, and U.S. government officials.

The Russians have done their best to hide the war from Western eyes. Vitaly Smirnov, the Soviet ambassador to Pakistan, tol reporters two years ago, "I warn you, and through you, all of your journalist colleagues: stop trying to penetrate Afghanistan with the so-called guerrillas. From now on, the bandits and the so-called journalists accompanying them will be killed."

Despite the threat, Goodwin spent three months with the guerrillas inside Afghanistan, and produced one of the most detailed account of the war to date. Among the moving personal stories are those of:

—Fatima Nassery, tortured for 25 days in Russian-occupied Kabul because she protested plans to send her school-age daughter to the Soviet Union for 12 years of indoctrination. After stripping her and administering electrical shocks during one interrogation, Nassery said, her captors "took me to a different room; it was badly lit, but I could see bloodstains everywhere. On the floor were amputated fingers.'

—Sarihullah, 12, who watched as Soviet troops drove a tank over his father.

—Mohamad Fazeer, 31, who said "it was just after dawn when the Soviets arrrived; there were 20 helicopter gunships, and I counted 200 tanks. We thought they had come for the men, so we ran to the mountains." Later he learned that the Soviets rounded up the women and children and said, "If you believe in God, where is your God now?' Then they shot them. They shot my wife and daughters, but they burned my two sons alive. They were 6 and 7 years old."

—Abdul Rehman, 17, who joined the Mojahedeen after his 15-year-old sister was taken by Soviet troops, never to be seen again. In an isolated stretch of central Afghanistan, he told Goodwin, "three gunships landed near a nomad camp and abducted four girls. As the helicopters flew over a nearby village, the clothing of the girls was tossed out. Sometime later, the girl's naked bodies followed."

Norchi gave up a lucrative legal practice to join an interntional team of lawyers that conducted extensive interviews in Afghanistan and Pakistan. By cross-examining the witnesses, they hope to build a solid legal case to convince the United Nations Commission on Human Rights that the Soviets are guilty of massive war crimes, bordering on genocide, in Afghanistan.

Norchi and his fellow lawyers conducted many of their interviews among the 3 million Afghan refugees who live in poverty along the border in Pakistan.

Between 1 million and 2 million Afghans are thought to have died since the Soviets invaded in December 1979, and at least one third of the country's estimated 15 million people have been forced to flee into Pakistan or Iran, or become internal refugees, wandering their own homeland, according to U.S. government estimates.

The lawyers came up with numerous eyewitnesses accounts of Soviets raping women and killing children, but the Russians appear reluctant to carry out torture themselves.

"Usually, the way it works, the Afghans themselves apply the torture, with questions passedfrom Soviet officers in the next room," said Norchi.

In 1984, in a village of Askalan-Amel 11 miles west of Kabul, "the Soviets lined children up on one side of the street and adults on the other. They slit the throats of 12 children, demanding money," Norchi said the lawyers had been told by a Swedish journalist, Ander Fange.

Americans Back Restoration In Turkey

By MIMI MANN
Associated Press Writer

SELJUK, Turkey (AP) — Money from the U.S. heartland is financing the resurrection of two of Christendom's most important churches in Ephesus, one of the ancient world's holiest cities.

For almost 30 years, the George B. Quatman family of Lima, Ohio, has sent funds to excavate and restore the ruins of St. John's Church, where the Apostle John is buried on a slope of Ayasoluk Hill.

Two years ago the family expanded the project to include rejuvenation of the fourth-century Church of the Virgin Mary, the world's first church named for the mother of Jesus and the site of a visit by Pope Paul VI in 1967.

Quatman, a wealthy telephone executive who died in the early 1960s, and his wife Lucille established the American Society of Ephesus, Inc., in 1955 as a foundation to help the Christian monuments of Ephesus, which was part of Ionian Greece in its early days and now is in predominantly Moslem Turkey.

Administered by their son, Joseph B. Quatman, a Lima attorney, the foundation has been providing more than $80,000 a year for the work, mainly from interest on the Quatmans' original bequest but also with outside donations of as little as $1.

Christianity came to Ephesus after St. Paul and other Apostles fled Jerusalem to avoid persecution in the years 37 to 42. At the time, the city was the site of one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World, the temple of Artemis Ephesus, the Greek earth goddess whom the Romans identified with Diana.

Tradition says that two of the arrivals were St. John and the aging Mary, whom Christ had entrusted to his care. The new religion the Apostles brought was so powerful that it took less than 200 years to woo the city away from the worship of Artemis.

At his request St. John, who wrote his Gospel in Ephesus, was buried on the hill he called home, and in the fourth century a basilica with a wooden roof was built over his grave. Two centuries later, the Emperior Justinian marked the spot by erecting a mammoth church.

Ahmet Donmez, a Turkish archaeologist and antiquities expert, was the first official to discuss the needs of St. John's Church with the Quatmans.

"They had just visited Jerusalem, and as they were standing on their hotel balcony in Izmir (in Turkey) overlooking the mountains, the Quatmans said they saw a vision of the Virgin Mary," Donmez said.

"They were very moved, and when they visited Ephesus they saw St. John's Church in a very primitive condition, with donkeys running around, not much care being taken. It looked more like a ruin, and they decided they wanted to do something for the religious monuments, to make St. John's special again."

With the promise of $40,000 a year, Donmez established a technical committee, which remains a liaison between the foundation and Turkey's Ministry of Culture and Tourism. Since 1974, more than 30 specialists have worked virtually year-round to excavate and restore the monument.

Ephesus is on the edge of Seljuk on the Kucuk Menderes River in southwestern Turkey, about five miles inland from the Aegean Sea and about 35 miles south of Izmir.

Heading the project is Turkey's dean of archaeologists, Ekrem Akurgal, who undertook the work 10 years ago.

As he walked among the stately marble and brick columns with their capitals open to the sky, past mellowed frescoes and delicate mosaics, the 76-year-old professor recalled why he decided to accept a Christian project in a Moslem country, sacrificing time from his beloved Hittite studies and his excavations at Smyrna.

"I realized that this project was vital for Turkey's prestige and image as a tolerant country," Akurgal said. "Only somebody of my status, known for his love of science, could dispel the politics.

"Turkey has some of the best preserved Christian churches in the world, but these relics are not only our national heritage but a heritage of the world as well.

"This American family came here with money and a desire to help the monuments, and the work has been first rate. We haven't tried to to rebuild the churches as they would have appeared, but using available material we are giving an atmosphere of how the churches would have looked in ancient times, an idea."

Visitors enter the church past the fortification wall, built from marble originally found in the eastern end of a stadium where early Christians were tortured, through the Pursuit Gate and into a courtyard with Roman inscriptions. Red and pink rose bushes dot the hillsides.

Inside, restoration efforts now cover almost every niche of the cross-shaped church, including the main section once topped by six large domes and another portion just above the sacred burial chamber where pilgrims flocked during the Middle Ages for miracle cures from dust rising from St. John's grave.

A balcony, which would have given Christians a magnificent view of the happenings below and the hills beyond, today affords a view of a lone still-standing column of Artemis' temple, ancient Turkish baths and the Isa Bey Mosque, completed in 1375.

Many discoveries have been made during the work, including a group of houses where early Christians gathered in a community just outside the church. While artifacts have been unearthed, the finds yielded none of the luxurious objects that Akurgal said must have been kept there because of the importance of the church.

Found in the early section of the church was a baptisterium, a stepped marble construction resembling a sunken bathtub. Akurgal theorizes it was not used for baptizing children but had an unknown purpose in a yearly spring festival.

Below in a distant low-lying area, archaeologists and restorers are also at work inside and outside the Church of the Virgin Mary.

A major landscaping effort is included in those plans to transform the weed-filled grounds into an appropriate setting for a church that made religious history in 431.

It was the site of the third General Council that for three months hotly debated whether Mary was the mother of God or simply the mother of a mortal Jesus. It decided that she was indeed the mother of God.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

Opening lead: Four of ♠ Study the play of today's hand. South brought home an "unmakable" three no trump contract, and we are asking you to decide which defender, if either, is to blame for the debacle. If you think both are at fault, apportion the guilt.

In North-South's methods, South's two no trump rebid showed a balanced minimum opening bid. However, North hoped his six-card suit would compensate for his high-card shortcomings, so he pushed on to game.

West led his fourth-best spade and declarer played the hand cleverly. When the king of spades won the first trick, with East contributing the deuce, declarer led a low diamond and inserted the eight. West won the jack and shifted to the nine of clubs. When East's king held, he reverted to spades, and declarer could then lose no more than the two black aces—the diamonds were established and declarer's ninth trick had been set up in spades. Where did the defenders go wrong?

Obviously, had East returned a club when in with the king, the contract would have been defeated. But had West's black jack been in spades rather than clubs, the spade return would have been right. Since East had no way of knowing, we can attach no blame to him.

While we congratulate West on finding the club shift that would have beaten the contract, we nevertheless find him the culprit in the mis-defense. Once he had decided to switch the attack, he should have cashed the ace of spades before shifting to a club! Then, when East won the king of clubs, he would have realized that a spade continuation was futile, and he would have returned a club to net five tricks for the defenders.

Fall Is Good Time To Check Plants For Repotting Needs

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

House plants are quite likely to have outgrown their pots if they have spent the summer outdoors growing in ideal locations. The same could have happened if they remained indoors in the long days with bright light and higher humidity that brings substantial growth.

As a consequence, your plants may face the winter in a container that was roomy enough last spring but is now too small.

Spring is the ideal time for repotting house plants so that roots can develop during the summer. But plants certainly can benefit from larger quarters in the fall.

In any case, whether they are repotted or not, plants that vacationed outdoors and are then brought into the house should be checked for insect pests, slugs, sow bugs or earthworms that may have invaded the pot and remained in hiding.

To remove a plant from a small pot, turn it upside down, tap the top edge on a bench or chair edge, holding one hand under the soil ball so that it rests in your hand as it leaves the pot. This prevents damage. Check the base of the soil ball for channels where pests might hide.

Then carefully place the root mass into a larger pot and tap so that the root ball settles in. Disturb the roots as little as possible during fall repotting. Spring potting is more severe. If a soil change is necessary, do it as growing conditions improve. In fall, the main purpose for repotting is to move the plant into a slightly larger pot to bring it into visual balance and to reduce the frequency of watering needed in the warm, dry atmosphere of the average home.

Use clean pots in repotting. It is best also to shift plants into pots only one size or so larger than the previous pot. The most common house-plant pot sizes are 4, 5, 6, 8, 10 and 12 inches. Most pots are standard shape but a pot more shallow in depth, called the "azalea" pot, is often used.

Previously used pots should be washed thoroughly with soapy water. To sterilize, soak the pots in a solution of one part liquid bleach to nine parts warm water. If the pot has a white accumulation of salts on the top or outside, use a wire brush to remove it.

Place a few pieces of broken pot or stones over the drainage hole when potting house plants to prevent the new soil from being washed out. The pot pieces also should be cleaned.

Potting mixes — there are many good ones available in garden shops — should provide proper drainage and air movement for roots. If plants are root bound, cut some of the encircling roots to stimulate growth of new roots into the new mix.

Try not to break the existing root ball. Put enough of the new soil in the base of the pot so that the plant will sit in the larger pot at the same height as the old pot. Fill in around the sides of the existing root ball with new soil, firming the mix as it is added.

As for watering, give plants enough so that water seeps from the holes in the pot bottom, but remove any excess after an hour or two.

NEW SOIL LAB

A soil laboratory intended to be a "focal point for national research" conserving and restoring agricultural land is being built at Ames, Iowa, by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Orville G. Bentley, assistant secretary for science and education, said research at the National Soil Tilth Laboratory will lead to a "basic understanding of soil tilth that is necessary if improved, less costly and more practical methods for farm and watershed conservation are going to be available to farmers in the future."

Federal, state and foreign scientists will conduct research at the 82,000-square-foot facility on the Iowa State University campus.

Pick Your Lighting Carefully

By HOUSE BEAUTIFUL
A Hearst Magazine

Lighting a living room does not mean just buying a few lamps — it is the complex orchestraction of levels and kinds of light.

There are three spheres of light in a room, according to an article by designer John F. Saladino in the current issue of House Beautiful, and lamps provide only one of them.

The first of the three spheres of lighting is ambient light that illuminates the interior — the architecture — of a room and makes you aware of the shape and dimensions of a space.

Work light is the second kind — the light you read and sew by. This is what lamps supply.

Finally there is art light — built-in concealed lights in the ceiling that bathe paintings with a specific kind of illumination, or the up-lighting hidden behind a plant to cast lacy shadows on the ceiling and walls. Candles on the dining room table fit into this category.

"Think about lighting as three zones within a room: above your head, at eye level and below the knees," Saladino said, and added of ambient light, "Lighting should never confront you; it should be hidden and beautifully orchestrated. The first task in designing a lighting plan is to conceal the source of light."

He says those whose taste is modern can rely on ceiling down-lights, or they can conceal lighting in coves and behind moldings. For traditionalists, he suggested wall sconces.

"When I design lighting," he wrote, "I try to imitate nature. Imagine a full moonlight night in a park, the soft illumination of the trees, the dark ground around a glistening pond. The light is pervasive. It comes alive in the upside-down reflection in the water."

Saladino says this can be translated indoors by having a highly waxed floor in the living room or entrance hall and a plant in a terra cotta pot or copper bucket. Conceal a light behind the plant and at nght you will see leaf patterns in the blurred reflection of the waxed floor.

On The House
By ANDY LANG

Permanent pipe repairs are best left to a licensed plumber, but there comes a time when a homeowner must take care of a leak which has occurred when a plumber is unavailable.

The first and most important thing that should be known to every adult in the house is where the main shutoff valve is located. When the handle on the valve is turned clockwise, the water coming into the house is shut off, insuring the end of the leak even though it also means a lack of water. The location of this valve is often vital while the repair is being made, since most emergency measures require that the damaged section be dry.

When a leak occurs at a joint, it sometimes can be fixed merely by tightening the fitting at that point. To avoid throwing the entire line out of kilter, two pipe wrenches should be used, one for tightening, the other for holding. When it is necessary to loosen the nut a bit before tightening it, apply a pipe joint compound to the threads.

A tiny pinpoint hole in a pipe usually can be fixed temporarily by plugging the hole with a piece of toothpick, a sliver of wood or even by inserting the point of a graphite pencil into the opening and breaking it off. After that has been done, wrap the patched area with heavy tape, which will keep the plug from coming out.

Do-it-yourself centers, some hardware stores and regular plumbing supply houses carry a sleevelike product that fits over the pipe and then can be tightened. This makes even a better patch than the small plug and may turn out to be kind of permanent, but it is usually better to have a professional look it over and make a decision. A metal plug, a material that hardens into metal and certain types of wrapping are other possibilities. If you state the problem to your dealer, he may be able to determine which kind of repair will fit your particular situation. One of the suggested solutions may involve the use of an epoxy plumbing material. Two parts of the substance are mixed together and then wrapped around the leaky area. A big advantage of this kind of repair is that the epoxy hardens quickly and permits use of the water line within an hour or so.

Questions often come in about the manner in which a damaged section of pipe can be replaced. Actually, this is a job for a plumber. In fact, in some communities, you are forbidden to make a repair of that kind without a plumber's license. Should there be no such restriction in your area and you feel competent to make such a repair, the trick is to use two pieces of pipe to replace the damaged section. Sometimes you may see a plumber make such a replacement with a single piece of pipe, but it is something you should not attempt even if the local regulations do not forbid it.

After turning off the water, use a hacksaw or a pipe cutter to slice off the old pipe about 4 to 6 inches from a joint. Unscrew the long piece of pipe first, then the short one. Take both pieces to a hardware store, home center or plumbing supply house and replace them, getting a union or coupling to fit. One length of the new pipe is screwed into the one joint, the coupling or union added to the open end and the other piece added on. The two lengths are then brought together with the union after coating all threads with a pipe compound. It cannot be emphasized too strongly that, even if the local laws permit it and even if you are fairly handy, you should not fool around with this type of pipe repair unless you have handled some plumbing chores in the past.

If you are lucky enough to make a temporary patch that stops a pipe leak, consider it a stopgap measure. A patch that gives way when you are not at home can cause considerable damage.

(Pipe leaks, leaky faucets, balky toilet tanks and tank condensation are among the subjects discussed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Make Simple Plumbing Repairs," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743.)

Here's The Answer

Q. — Last year, we had our 50-year-old house insulated. When cold weather set in, the panes on the windows sweated profusely and began dripping down onto the sills and the woodwork underneath them. How can we avoid this happening this year and did the insulation have anything to do with the problem?

A. — In a sense, yes. Your house was not airtight in the past, thus permitting excessive moisture inside the house to escape. But when the house was insulated, the warm, moist air had no place to go and settled on the cold window panes. This condensation occurs when humid air hits a cold surface.

It is true the insulation undoubtedly has saved you money in fuel costs, it is also true the warm air on the inside is trapped, resulting in the condensation.

Since we know the causes — excessive moisture and cold window panes — we can solve it only by cutting down on the excessive humidity or not permitting the panes to become cold. You reduce humidity only by creating less of it, allowing it to get out of the house or by trapping it. This means not making as much warm air when you use cooking appliances, showers, clothes dryers, etc., or getting it out of the house instantly, with exhaust fans, vents and the like.

Trapping it can be done only with dehumidifiers. How do you prevent the window panes from getting cold? By having as much storm window protection as possible. Sometimes storm windows already there are not airtight and require to be made so.

Q. — I am putting wire mesh in a concrete driveway. At which place in the concrete mix should the mesh be put — the top, the bottom or the middle?

A. — Pour half the concrete mix, wait a few minutes, then put the mesh in place and pour the rest of the mixture.

Q. — You recently advised someone to put a sealer on bare wood before applying stain. That confuses me. Isn't sealer supposed to do what it says — seal the wood? If it seals the wood, how can the stain get into the wood?

A. — The sealer acts only as a partial seal if thinned according to the directions on the container. By doing so, it prevents the stain from sinking in too deeply at certain spots and causing uneven coloring. Some professional wood finishers use the sealer at all times before the application of stain. Others use it only when there is a chance of uneven coloring.

Q. — I have to replace the washer in an old-fashioned faucet, a job I have never done before. Is it necessary to turn off the water?

A. — Yes. If you don't, the water will shoot up as soon as the stem is removed. Many sinks and other plumbing fixtures have shutoff valves underneath them. If you can't find it or don't know where it is, you will have to turn off the main water valve. It's a good idea to make the repair when the water is not being used.

Q. — Gypsum board was installed in our recreation room a few years ago. We put wallpaper over it and it held up fairly well but recently started to show wear. We want to take off the wallpaper and paint the entire wall. How do I get the wallpaper off since it is obvious that scraping it after softening with water might damage the wallboard. Is there some special way to get the paper of gypsum board?

A. — Your best bet is to rent a wallpaper steamer. This will enable you to soften the paper and get it off without scraping. You are correct in assuming that scraping might damage the wallboard, although the paper can be removed if water is applied to it very carefully and the scraping is done gently. But your best bet is to soften the paper with a steamer and then lift it off without scraping.

Q. — We have a house that is 85 years old. We would like to make some alterations to utilize passive solar heating. Originally, we wanted to try active solar heating, but found the cost too high for our budget. Will passive solar heating work in an old house?

A. — In passive solar heating, the house is built to take advantage of the sun's rays. In an older house, too many architectural changes are necessary to achieve good results, although some changes will help in an area of the country which does not get too cold. Generally, converting an old house into one utilizing passive solar energy is not practical, not to mention the high price of doing it.

Garden Clinic

Q. What soil and sunlight requirements does a crepe myrtle have?

A. The ideal planting site for crepe myrtles has well-drained soil, full sun and good air drainage. Crepe myrtles do not flower well in partial shade and not at all in heavy shade. Powdery mildew is minimized by planting in an open area where air movement will not be restricted. Crepe myrtles grow well in most of our heavy loam and clay soils and tolerate a pH range of 5 to 6.5.

Q. How tall will a dwarf crepe myrtle grow?

A. Crepe myrtles in the dwarf category generally grow less than three feet tall. The other categories are: semi-dwarf (three to six feet), medium (six to 12 feet) and tall (more than 12 feet). These are general height guidelines, not steadfast rules.

Q. Please give me some information on the goldflame honeysuckle.

A. Goldflame honeysuckle (Lonicera X heckrottii) originated before 1895 as a hybrid of Lonicera sempervirens and Lonicera americana and is still likely the finest of the many flowering vines in the genus Lonicera. The foliage survives to about 15 to 20 degrees, making the platn evergreen where winters are not severe. Goldflame honeysuckle blooms as long as weather permits growth — in Raleigh at times from March into December. Flowers are a combination of yellow, pink and carmine. It is easily propagated from softwood cuttings. It grows to 12 to 15 feet in either full or partial shade.

Q. Does black plastic make a good mulch around shrubs?

A. I would not use it. When used as a mulch around shrubs, black plastic interferes with the normal oxygen and water exchange around plant roots. The results are extremely fibrous, shallow roots, leaving the plant in poor condition to deal with drought. (Kim Powell, extension horticultural specialist).

Idaho To Preserve Old Penitentiary

By CHARLES HILLINGER
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

BOISE, Idaho — Eyeing the huge hook hanging from the ceiling, the dangling rope, noose and trap door at the gallows in the old Idaho penitentiary, former warden Orvil E. Stiles recalls the state's last execution:

"I was here with Raymond Snowden 30 years ago on the last day of his life. Snowden murdered a woman in a Garden City bar. He prayed alone with me. Then he was led into this room. He was the calmest man in the execution chamber, far calmer than I was."

Stiles, 73, spent nine years as chaplain at the Idaho penitentiary. He was chaplain at the time of Snowden's execution and later became warden. He was both the warden and a Baptist minister at the same time.

The old penitentiary on the east end of Idaho's capital city was home for more than 13,000 prisoners, 215 of them women, from 1872 to 1974 when a new penitentiary was opened.

The plan was to demolish the complex of sandstone buildings when the penitentiary was vacated. But the Idaho State Historical Society was granted permission to preserve the historic prison as a permanent exhibit of the changing nature of penitentiary philosophy and practices during the past century.

When the last prisoners walked out, the Historical Society walked in — opening the prison seven days a week for public visitation. Guided tours are conducted through cell blocks, death row, the gallows, laundry, women's prison, cannery, license plate factory, shirt and shoe factories, dining hall and other buildings by former guards and wardens and occasionally even former inmates.

An area referred to as the "hole" or "Siberia," where prisoners in isolation ate and slept, consisted of 12 cells, each 3½ feet wide and 6 feet long, with one small hole for ventilation.

"When we were on duty in the vicinity of Siberia we could hear prisoners in the hall screaming and yelling their heads off," said former guard Jim Howland, 68. "It was an awful place to be confined."

Stiles vividly remembers his first day as warden, Sept. 15, 1967: "I gathered all the prisoners together and announced that no one would be confined any longer in Siberia. I told the prisoners if a dog had been put in one of those cells, the humane society would have you jailed. I got a standing ovation."

In recent years, Stiles has been chaplain at the Idaho State Veterans Home. He frequently conducts tours through the old penitentiary because he believes it is important for people to see what life was like behind prison walls.

Every year about 7,000 Idaho elementary and high school students make field trips to the old penitentiary. Teacher Dick Newton, 46, has been taking his fourth-grade classes through the penitentiary ever since it was first opened to the public.

"Touring the penitentiary fits in beautifully with the history class," he said. "The kids start their tour laughing and joking. But by the time they've finished their mood is quite the reverse. They see what it's like to lose their freedom for whatever mistake society thinks they made. It makes a lasting impression. It makes the young people think."

Listed on the National Register of Historic Places, the old Idaho Penitentiary was built by prisoners using sandstone blocks quarried in the hills above the penitentiary.

The Moorish-style dining hall was designed, constructed and supervised in 1898 by inmate George Hamilton. The prison administration was so proud of his efforts, he was granted an early release, providing he leave Idaho and never return. Hamilton committed suicide the day after he was released.

Various exhibits in the penitentiary tell the story of riots, escapes (there were more than 500, and 90 of the prisoners were never recaptured), attempted escapes and the 10 executions that occurred here. There are also photos and information about many of the better-known inmates.

Lyda Southard, an inmate from 1921 to 1941, was called Idaho's "Lady Bluebeard." She was convicted of poisoning her fourth husband by boiling arsenic flypaper and pouring the water from it into his food. (Her three previous husbands died from similar symptoms.) Southard escaped for 13 months and, during that time, married a fifth time. The mother of her husband also died of arsenic flypaper poisoning.

Harry Orchard, who assassinated a former Idaho governor, served longer than any other inmate. He was imprisoned for 46 years, until his death in 1954. He was 88. Orchard is buried in the penitentiary cemetery with 74 other inmates whose bodies were never claimed by relatives or friends.

BRAIN FOOD

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Throughout history, many dishes and foods have been named for people in the musical world, says librarian Iva Buff of the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music.

There's Mozart Kugeln, named after the composer, Chicken Tetrazzini, named for Luisa Tetrazzini, an early 20th-century Italian soprano, and Peach Melba, named for Nellie Melba, the 19th-century Australian soprano.

If these don't suit your fancy, variations on well-known dishes include Consomme Bizet, Bombe Aida, Potage Rossini and Toska Tortchen. Or, if simple and easy and low in calories suits your mood, there's always Melba Toast.

British Woman Seeks To Protect Donkeys

By LARRY THORSON
Associated Press Writer

SIDMOUTH, England (AP) — In the world of stereotypes, the donkey is stubborn, a stupid animal — an ass.

Elisabeth Svendsen is out to dispel that idea, which she maintains has caused a lot of mistreatment and neglect of donkeys.

Thus, she has become a one-woman society for the promotion of the welfare of and the prevention of cruelty to the donkeys of the world.

Mrs. Svendsen, 57, devotes practically all of her waking hours to donkey welfare, and in the 14 years since she became a registered charity, she has given a caring home to 3,200 donkeys in Britain and has made a good start at helping millions of donkeys abroad.

To Mrs. Svendsen, the donkey is intelligent, a good companion, a hard-working and durable friend of mankind since the dawn of history, and she finds it hard to believe how little it is understood.

It remains to millions of poor people in the world what the family car or the pickup truck is to the affluent.

Yet, she says, even animal experts know little about donkeys.

She recalls going to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, a few years ago for an international conference of veterinarians. She asked if any of them knew a donkey's body temperature, which is 98.8 degrees, two-tenths of a degree warmer than a human's.

"They all assumed it's the same as the horse (100.5 degrees)," she said. "Well, it's not. I told them they knew the temperature of a zebra or a snake, but not a donkey.

"Everybody else had ignored it, and I like championing the underdog, perhaps, and I landed up championing the underdonkey."

With a background of having helped to develop several successful businesses with her husband, Niels, Mrs. Svendsen has practically built a donkey empire around Sidmouth, a town on the English south coast.

Mrs. Svendsen runs three charities, five farms with 900 acres, an X-ray-equipped donkey hospital and veterinary research center, and an arena where handicapped children can ride donkeys or donkey carts.

A visitor to her Slade Farm, where thousands of people tour the Donkey Sanctuary each month free of charge, will see scores of contented donkeys — some bearing scars of past mistreatment — munching hay in clean barns or ambling peacefully in lush pastures.

Behind the scenes are offices full of people keeping computerized records of the donkeys and their health, following up on reports of mistreated donkeys, or researching the animal.

The staff numbers 96 — they all wear T-shirts or sweatshirts with donkey insignia — and the annual budget is $1.6 million.

The money comes from public donations or income from the 16 books she has written, including some for children.

In her autobiography, "Down Among the Donkeys," Mrs. Svendsen writes as directly and humorously as she speaks of the surprises, setbacks and successes of her singular campaign.

As a girl in northern England, she could be enchanted by a donkey, but it didn't become a passion until she was well along in married life with small children, and she and her husband Niels were running a country hotel.

In 1969, they bought a donkey mare. It turned out to be pregnant, and soon they were thinking of breeding donkeys to make money.

At livestock markets, she saw donkeys that were mistreated, starved, beaten and overworked. She bought a few to rescue them, browbeat some owners to treat their animals better, and gradually became known as "the donkey lady."

News stories about her brought offers of more donkeys, and in 1974 she was willed 204 donkeys by a woman who had bought them to save them from being slaughtered for pet food.

"That's when I stopped being a hotelier and took up donkeys," she said. "I had no choice. The donkeys would have been killed if I hadn't taken them. It was me or nothing."

She rented a barn and a few months later bought Slade Farm.

"I came up here and worked full time," she said. "Since then you might say I've been doing all the donkey work."

Many of her charges have worked on beaches around Britain giving rides, others were pets that outlived a family's interest and suffered neglect or bad feed, and a few had been severely mistreated. A fuzzy gray named Timothy has pathetic ears because someone tried to hack them off with a knife.

A star attraction at the sanctuary is Blackie, which was brought from Spain last spring after surviving a strange custom in a village where each year the fattest man rides a donkey until it breaks down. Blackie became famous through British newspaper stories about the bizarre Spanish fiesta, otherwise it would have been killed, Mrs. Svendsen said.

Now Blackie is guaranteed "the best possible treatment, care and drugs to preserve its life to the maximum," according to the charter of the sanctuary.

Mrs. Svendsen believes that her efforts have helped make donkey welfare important to the British public, and she has made many trips abroad to educate people about donkeys, examine local donkeys and treat them for parasites.

Her visits to Greece and Cyprus led to government programs to treat donkeys regularly for parasites, she said, and she hopes to make an impact on such countries as Mexico (6 million donkeys), Egypt (4 million), Kenya (1 million) and Ethiopia (3.5 million).

"You get rid of those parasites and it can help the poorest person in the world more than all your bags of sugar and flour, because you're not changing their way of life; you're just making their beast of burden happier and fitter, and going to live twice as long, perhaps," she said.

"In Ethiopia, they've survived (drought) better than anything, better than camels," she said. "Donkeys are now the best draft animal in Ethiopia. Their metabolism is very clever. They lose very little water through the skin, and a donkey can walk 34 miles without needing water."

In poor countries the donkey is very highly valued, she said, while in the West the animal is not respected.

"People just tend to think of it as a poor horse, a funny horse," she said.

SCHOLAR'S STUDIO

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Chinese Scholar's Studio: Artistic Life in the Late Ming Period, An Exhibition from the Shanghai Museum" will be seen at the Asia Society Oct. 15 through Jan. 3, 1988.

This show of Ming-period art, the result of a cultural collaboration between the People's Republic of China and the United States, comprises 130 objects from the Shanghai museum, including many which have never been exhibited or published outside China.

In addition to the paintings, calligraphies, bronzes and jades on view, a specially constructed and furnished room setting, approximating a Ming-era scholar-artist's studio, will illustrate the materials, methods and training of Ming-dynasty artists.

After closing at the Asia Society, the exhibition will be seen at the Seattle Art Museum, Feb. 4-March 27, 1988; the Arthur M. Sackler Gallery of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C. May 2-June 26, 1988; and the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art, Kansas City, Mo., July 30-Sept. 25, 1988.

The abbey's foundation is preserved about six feet up, providing Walsh with many clues. Another aid: Architecture was standard among Cistercian monasteries, so Walsh can surmise many of the features.

ISUZU STANDARD P'UP.

IT'S BUILT TO SURVIVE THE WORLD'S WORST CLIMATES. EVEN THE ECONOMIC ONES.

$5995* Don't be fooled by our low price. Sure, it's one of the lowest of the top five compact pickups, but that's probably the last reason to by an Isuzu.

What really makes us a solid investment is the fact that our trucks have conquered some of the world's roughest terrain. FOUR WHEELER MAGAZINE called them "a shining example of what quality control is all about."

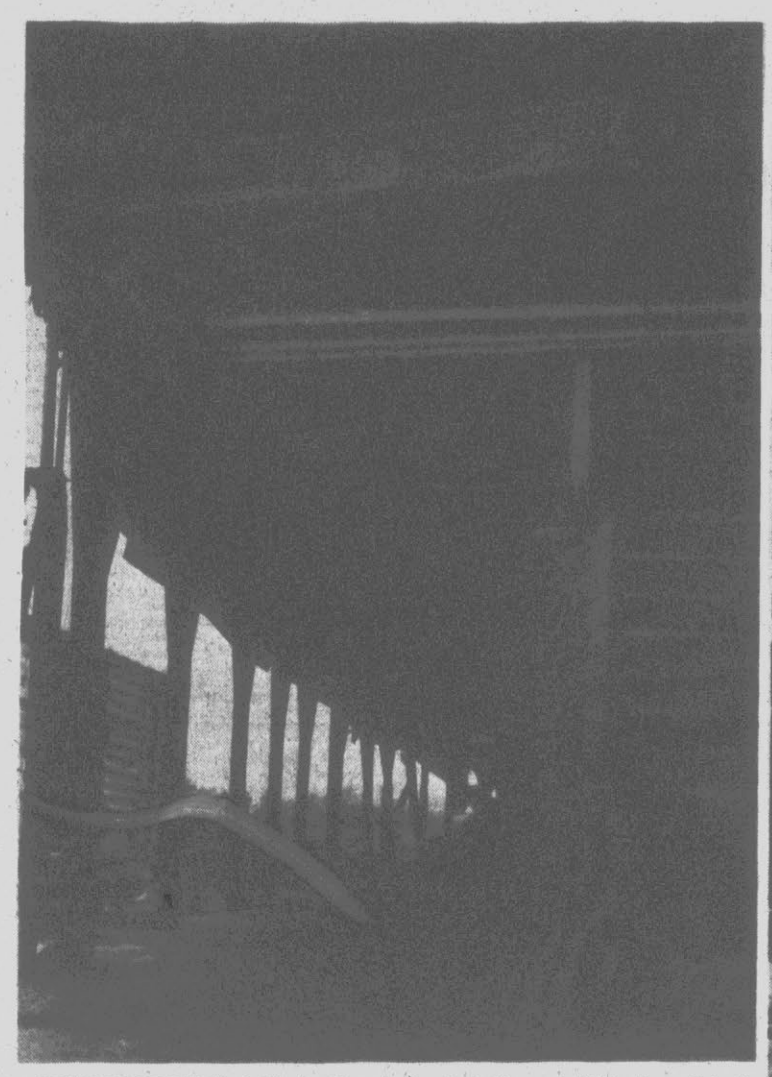
The Sprawling Red-Painted Wood Building Housing Blount Fertilizer Company On West 14th Street

Familiar Greenville Commercial Landmark To Be Razed Soon



NOW ABANDONED — The loading platform-shelter parallel to the railroad tracks was, during peak years of operation, a scene of busy activity as workmen unloaded incoming materials from railroad cars. Trains no longer roll up to the platform, and trucks were used for delivery in later years.

LANDMARK TO GO — The sprawling Blount Fertilizer Company at 615 West 14th Street will soon be no more than a memory. The half century old red painted wood commercial building with its distinctive low and high rooflines and loading platform-porches will be razed at an early date.

Another of Greenville's older commercial landmarks, the Blount Fertilizer Company building on West 14th Street, will soon be a thing of the past.

David Evans, Jr. has announced that the property has recently been sold to Garris Evans Lumber Co., located adjacent to the fertilizer company.

Charles Hudson, who has been with the company since 1945 and is currently president of the company, related the basic history of the sprawling red-painted wood building scheduled to be torn down at an early date.

"The main building was constructed in 1935," Hudson said. "An addition to the original building was added in 1953."

In the company's "peak years of operations, we had about 60 people working here in manfacturing fertilizers," Hudson said. "Operations closed down October 31 last year. Since that time, the building has been used only for storage.

"During most of the years of operation, the company manufactured various fertilizers for general crops and special mixtures for tobacco. The type of fertilizer first manufactured was ammonianated based fertilizer containing nitrate of soda.

"In 1961-62, the company started producing granulated fertilizer, a form of pulverized fertilizer.

"Then, for several years we began blending ingredients we purchased, using material about the same size as blenders the company operated in Grimesland and Bethel."

Hudson said "at one time, we stored as much as 17,000 tons of materials in the factory, but for the last year of business we operated only as a dealer outlet."

Over the years, Blount Fertilizer utilized trains for a substantial portion of in shipments of materials for manufacturing fertilizers. "There was a time when operations saw 150 to 200 railroad cars delivering materials from Fayetteville, Wilmington and Raleigh. In later years, delivery by railroad cars dwindled down to seven or eight car loads because in later years, we relied mostly on trucks for shipments."

The company, Hudson said, was originally formed by Judson H. Blount, Sr., Marvin K. Blount, Sr. and F. Leighton Blount, Sr. "They each owned equal shares in the company. Along about 1964-65, Marvin Sr. traded his stock to Leighton for shares in Blount-Harvey. The store was a project that Marvin Sr. took great pride in."

Hudson, a Pitt County native, has been an employee of Blount Fertilizer for 42 years. "You could say I came up through the ranks," he said. "First I was promoted to production manager, then on to sales manager, vice president and recently, as president.

"Ferrell Blount has been chairman of the board for the past several years as well as president for most of that time. All three of the original founders are now deceased."

Hudson said "I hate to see the familiar building go, but it simply is not feasible to maintain a big wood building like this. In recent years, it has been a constant process of repairs to keep the building patched up and in safe condition.

"Due to the changes in the fertilizer business, so many innovations in recent years, the owners realized the time had come to discontinue operations in this big old building. Now, small blenders that operate three or four months a year are the most practical, the most economical type of method in manufacturing fertilizer.

"Very few of this once common type of fertilizer manufacturing plant remain," Hudson said. "The only one I can recall offhand still in active operations is the Weaver Fertilizer Company in Norfolk."

When the dark-red building, with its distinctive sprawl of simple mid-20th century commercial architectural features passes from the scene, Greenville will have lost one of the last, if not the last, of a particular style of commercial landmarks.

GRASSES GROW — Forms that once cradled large metal storage tanks containing materials for fertilizer are now but empty concrete part-circles with grasses growing up around them. A couple of freight cars are temporarily parked on the spur that served the building.

Evidence Points To An Ancient Tiwanaku Culture In Bolivia

By KEVIN NOBLET
Associated Press Writer

LUQURMATA, Bolivia (AP) — U.S. archaeologists are unearthing evidence that Bolivia's ancient, enigmatic Tiwanaku culture was a powerful empire that supported tens of thousands of people in its central city and immediate suburbs.

Digs in this peasant village on the swampy edge of Lake Titicaca are turning up an extensive network of terraced, stone-walled houses and courtyards dotted with tombs, some containing elaborately crafted ceramic bowls and figurines dating back more than 1,000 years.

"Almost every time we've put a hole in a two-kilometer-square area, we've hit a house," said Charles "Chip" Stanish, an anthropologist at the University of Chicago. "We not only hit one house, we hit a lot of them."

"It's becoming clear we're looking at massive population sites."

To Bolivians the discovery is not that surprising. For decades they have maintained that the Tiwanakus were once the Americas' finest and most powerful empire, providing the inspiration for the better-known and relatively modern Incas of Peru.

But the digs are destroying a notion long held in international archaeological circles that the culture was little more than a loosely knit confederation of fiefdoms struggling to survive in the thin air, harsh climate and infertile soil of the Bolivian "altiplano" (high plains), about 13,000 feet above sea level.

"It's now being considered a powerful, integrated state," said Alan Kolata, anthropologist from the University of Illinois who is co-directing the excavations with Bolivian archaeologist Osvaldo Rivera. They are the first major foreign digs in Bolivia since the 1930s.

Emerging shortly before the time of Christ, the Tiwanakus flourished for scores of generations and reached their technological and artistic peak in the years 600 to 800, before the culture collapsed and disappeared some 400 years later. Their influence extended north and west across Lake Titicaca well into Peru, east into the rain forests of the Amazon basin and south in Chile and Argentina.

Their central temple stood at what is now the potato-farming village of Tiwanaku, 10 miles from Luqurmata, which apparently was a vital suburb. Still standing are a haunting collection of massive stone ruins including an accurate calendar and an elaborately carved Gateway to the Sun.

Also left behind, at points all around the lake and even hundreds of miles from it, are a now-disintegrating network of raised fields that provides the basis for arguments that the Tiwanakus had the resources for a concentrated population and wide-ranging political control.

Excavations have shown that the fields, divided by long irrigation canals, were sophisticated and highly productive. A base of cobblestone was topped by gravel and then impermeable clay, which kept salt from the lake's brackish waters from seeping into the topsoil above.

Recent studies across the lake in Peru, by Clark Erickson, also of the University of Illinois, indicate that productivity was as much as 800 percent that of current farming practices.

Kolata holds a more conservative estimate of 300 to 400 percent, but nonetheless believes the fields could easily have supported 40,000 to 120,000 people alone in the 32-square-mile Tiwanaku valley. "That's a substantial population, by any standard," he said.

Both he and Erickson are engaged in projects to put the raised-field technique back into practice. A few experimental fields have been started up with enthusiastic support from local authorities, who see this "applied archaeology" as a means to improve the standard of living for the area's poor farmers.

"It's a rescue of lost technology, and of the values of the past," said Rivera, planning chief of Bolivia's Insitute of Archaeology.

Few details of the Tiwanaku's life and religious practices are known, in large part because few modern excavations have been conducted since the American Wendell Bennett in the mid-1930s. Angered by the loss of invaluable artifacts, carried off to museums or private collections in the United States and Europe, Bolivian authorities barred foreigners from any major excavations for a half-century and had little money to conduct their own investigations.

Kolata, after several years of lobbying, won a five-year permit to dig in the Tiwanaku valley as part of a joint U.S.-Bolivian project. He began in Luqurmata and has plans for other excavations at Tiwanaku itself and at an untouched site further west.

The Tiwanakus were illiterate, and thus left behind no written records. From their carvings and paintings experts have determined that they were proficient warriors, carrying the heads of victims on their belts, and that their religious practices included the use of hallucinogenic drugs.

New Travel-Cookbook Volume Is A Dream For Food Lovers

THE AMERICAN COUNTRY INN AND BED & BREAKFAST COOKBOOK. By Kitty and Lucian Maynard. Julia M. Pitkin, Editor. Nashville, Tenn. Rutledge Hill Press. 1987. Hard covers, illustrated. 510 pps. $22.95.

If it's a truly wide range of different recipes you want, "The American Inn Country and Bed & Breakfast Cookbook" is the answer to your kitchen dreams. The food-loving couple Kitty and Lucian Maynard have traveled thousands of miles all across America, including Alaska and Hawaii, to hundreds of country inns and bed and breakfast establishments.

In their visits to these places, they garnered favorite recipes from each and present them in one volume — a comprehensive rainbow of eating delights.

Some of the recipes are designed to serve up portions for 12, 16 or occasionally even more diners, but by and large, most are for managable portions. Some are easy to prepare, others require extensive preparation time.

Information on the establishments, though secondary to the recipes, gives concise details on the number of rooms and pinpoints highlights of each establishment as well as a few notes on the local area. More details in these areas would have added a greater travel flavor. But since this is basically a cookbook of over 500 pages, there was evidently a necessity to keep such details to a minimum.

Prices for rooms and the average price of meals are not provided, however, the mail address and telephone numbers are given, making it a simple matter of a phone call to get current information.

Practical and attractive features worthy of note in this cookbook are the lovely line drawings in brownish-red of the establishments, the same color headings for the recipes; small black and white decorative sketches of food; the sensible state by state and towns within each state alphabetical format, and two comprehensive indexes, an index of cities and another of food.

Based on the number of pages allocated to various states, Vermont leads the nation in the authors' coverage of country inns and bed and breakfast places chosen for inclusion. Five other states — California, Maine, Massachusetts, North Carolina and Pennsylvania each merit more than 20 pages of recipe listings.

Narrowing in on North Carolina, the authors list a total of 28 establishments. Not surprisingly, a majority of these are in the western area of the state where inns and homes serving visitors have a long tradition.

Close to the Greenville area, there are three listings for eastern North Carolina — Langdon House, Beaufort; the Lords Proprietors' Inn, Edenton, and Winborne House, Murfreesboro.

Looking at the listing nearest Greenville, The Lords Proprietors' Inn in Edenton, we discover these brief details (slightly abbreviated here) on the town and the inn given before the inn's recipes... "Edenton, once the colonial capital of North Carolina, has been called 'the South's prettiest town' because of the reach of Albemarle Sound... the tree-lined streets flanked by fine 18th and 19th century homes, and the magnificant 1767 Court House... The inn is part of this charming and historical environment. Offering 17 elegant guest rooms... the inn is furnished by local cabinetmakers and antique dealers."

To a certain extent, recipes reflect specialties common to different regions of the country — but not by any means exclusively so. Expectedly, there are beef dishes from the Midwest, seafood recipes from New England and the Gulf coast, Spanish inspired concoctions from Texas, Arizona and New Mexico, and fish recipes from Alaska. At the same time, it can readily be seen that America has become a land of readiness to experiment in a melting pot of food preferences.

My own random selection of "to be tried at first chance" recipes include some unsual offerings from that land of extravagance, California: a hot-hot artichokde spread; broiled pork chops with orange and mustard sauce, and roasted quail stuffed with leeks. Then from New Mexico there's a dish that sounds exotic (and delectable), green chili lamb with pinon nuts, blue corn and enchiladas; Louisiana's tempting to try (maybe just once) alligator meat amply laced with chilis and spices, and from Wisconsin, a stawberry consomme.

Exotic dishes, however, are not the meat and potatoes of this cookbook. There are dozens of more standard offerings — in cakes, cookies, drinks, meats, omelets — you name it, and likely it's to be found in these pages.

I made the error of browsing through the recipe offerings after having merely a widower's banana-mayonnaise-bacon sandwich and coffee supper snack. So, reader, be certain you open this book only after a full, hearty meal to avoid a dream-hunger of greater feasts.

Cooks or food dreamers alike will find "The American Country Inn and Bed & Breakfast Cookbook" a long lasting delight, a hefty, well-designed cookbook well worth its price.

New Stamp Issues Listed

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

The delicate beauty of the lacemaker's craft is captured on a new block of four 22-cent stamps being released by the U.S. Postal Service. Each stamp features a different lacework, with the lace appearing white against a deep blue background.

The lacemaking issue is the eighth in the Folk Art Series. Previous folk art stamps were Pueblo Indian pottery (1977), quilts (1978), Pennsylvania toleware (1979), Indian masks (1980), duck decoys (1985), Navajo Indian blankets (1986) and woodcarved figurines (1986).

Originally scheduled for last year, the issuance of the lacemaking stamps was delayed to ensure that the finished product would do justice to the craft. The USPS and the Bureau of Engraving strove for a high quality stamp design and production.

The designs were based on the works of Michigan members of the Great Lakes Lacers Group, the largest and most active such organization in the United States.

At the bottom of each stamp in the block is "Lacemaking USA 22."

First-day cancellations are available as follows:

Collectors desiring to affix their own stamps may purchase the block at their local post offices and send to: Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Lacemaking Stamps, Postmaster, Ypsilanti, MI 48197-9991. No remittance is required. Deadline is Sept. 13.

If you prefer to have the USPS affix the stamps, enclose a money order or personal check for 88 cents (22 cents per stamp) and send to: Lacemaking Stamps, Postmaster, Ypsilanti, MI 48197-9992. It must be postmarked no later than Sept. 13.

The United States issues expensive stamps, too.

The new Bret Harte definitive stamp in the Great Americans Series has a denomination of $5.

Bret Harte, who moved from New York to California at the age of 18 in 1854, established himself as America's favorite Western epic writer with short stories and poems weaving vivid tales of mining camps and frontier towns.

Although Harte's stories told of early California people and events, he longed for the East. Harte returned there in 1871, then went to Europe in 1878 and never returned. He died in England in 1902.

The new Harte stamp will be made available in a new format of 20-stamp panes or miniature sheets, which will have plate numbers in all four corners. The Postal Service intends to use the new pane format in future years for some new issues of high value definitive stamps. The sheet contains only 20 stamps. Most U.S. issues come in panes of 40 to 100, depending on stamp size.

Collectors may affix their own stamps purchased at their local post offices. Requests postmarked by Sept. 24 should be sent to: Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Bret Harte Stamp, Postmaster, Twain Harte, CA 93583-9991. No remittance is required.

Those wishing to have the USPS affix the stamp should enclose a money order or personal check for $5 per stamp and send to Bret Harte Stamp, Postmaster, Twain Harte, CA 93583-9992. It must be postmarked by Sept. 24.

Famed New York Literary Shrine To Be Preserved

EDITOR'S NOTE — Among America's literary places of the heart, few evoke more nostalgia and have stirred greater anecdotage than the Algonquin Hotel. Though its great days of wits and raconteurs have passed, traditionalists cringed when the hotel was sold recently to a Japanese company. Not to worry, says the new management, the shrine will be preserved, even unto the cats.

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

NEW YORK (AP) — The Round Table of wits known as "The Vicious Circle" can rest easy in their eternity of rapier repartee and endless insult.

The new Japanese owners of the Algonquin Hotel have no intention of making a sushi bar out of Blue Bar, where Robert Benchley hurried to get "out of the rain and into a dry martini," converting the Chinese Room to the Japanese Room or bringing in a hibachi chef from Kyoto to toss cleavers and carving knives about in the Rose Room, which was the target range for the slings and arrows of sardonic humorists like Dorothy Parker, George S. Kaufman and Alexander Woollcott.

"Chieko Aoki, our president, knows this hotel's unique history. She's determined to maintain the clubby atmosphere so dear to writers and theater people," says British-born Andrew Noble, new general manager of the graciously aging hostelry in midtown Manhattan. "In my estimation New York already has 600 Japanese restaurants, two of them on this block, so we'll continue with our basic American and English cuisine."

The 200-room hotel has been a literary landmark since Prohibition days because of the wits who traded quips at its famed luncheon round table on weekdays and gathered for all-night poker sessions on Saturday. The Algonquin recently came under the ownership of Caesar Park Hotels, a subsidiary of Tokyo's Aoki Corporation, the construction giant that builds dams, power plants, and mass transit systems around the globe.

Most Round Table regulars were drama critics who lingered long over what really was a cobweb-chasing brunch. They discussed and dissected plays in the occasional company of a few thick-skinned theatrical friends who could abide barbs like Kaufman's dismissal of a stillborn comedy: "There was laughter at the back of the theater, leading to the belief that somebody was telling jokes back there," and Parker's: "'The House Beautiful' is the Play Lousy."

Poet-critic Parker had the lethal last word in an Alphonse and Gaston act with Clare Boothe Luce at the door to the ladies room:

"Age before beauty," offered the playwright who had been ambassador to Rome.

"Pearls before swine," agreed the dainty damsel best described as a caustic compound of Little Nell and Lady Macbeth.

Theater buff Frank Case ran the hotel from 1907 to 1946. He aided and abetted in raising rhetorical rudeness and urbane insult to an art form by extending credit, assigning the group their own waiter to answer the brass service bell that still adorns every table, and providing a vacant room and free snacks for the Thanatopsis and Literary Inside Straight Club, as the poker session was called.

New York World columnist Franklin Pierce was founding father of the Round Table. It soon numbered 30 virtuosos of vitriol, including such paragons of the pun and the put-down as Ring Lardner, Heywood Broun, S.J. Perelman, Harpo Marx, Tallulah Bankhead, Robert Sherwood, Marc Connelly, Edna Ferber and James Thurber.

"Admission to this charmed circle is difficult," conceded Frank Sullivan, the sage of Saratoga, "The candidate must have the price of lunch."

At the Algonquin, to general lack of enthusiasm and seldom understated ridicule, Harold Ross, that nagging, fretting, naive worrier blessed with intuitive editorial taste, unveiled a dummy first issue of The New Yorker. Not one of the Vicious Circle invested in the magazine, although almost all wound up writing for it. Predicting a flop, Aleck Woollcott, the malevolent owl dubbed "old vitriol and violets" by Thurber, even withdrew his name from the masthead.

"The New Yorker will be the magazine which is not edited for the old lady from Dubuque...This is not meant in disrespect, but The New Yorker is a magazine avowedly published for a metropolitan audience."

The ladies from Dubuque sensed no disrespect. They still sign the register side by side with celebrities in the place where Ross, hands fluttering nervously, always checked in as the weekly deadline approached. The New Yorker maintains a permanent suite and copies of the magazine are dutifully placed in each room.

"That won't change," pledged the new general manager. "We're running at 96 to 100 percent occupancy now, so why tamper with tradition?

"We'll concentrate on improving room service, and the bathrooms could do with some attention. But no Jacuzzis, I promise."

As he spoke, British actors Robert Morley and Peter O'Toole nattered beneath the chiming grandfather clock in the oak-paneled lobby. Novelist John Updike waved a greeting to 100-year-old Broadway writer-director George Abbott, about to ascend to his room in an elevator that looked far more creaky. Editor emeritus William Shawn of The New Yorker was led to his regular luncheon table in the right-hand corner, and Charles Addams, the magazine's master of morbid mirth, stopped by the newsstand for the one cigar a week permitted by his doctor.

"Actually he never lights it, but only chomps on it," confided news vendor Harry A. Celentano, who joined the Algonquin staff as an elevator boy 42 years ago after failing to follow Whitey Ford, his sandlot teammate on the 34th Avenue Boys Club in Astoria, into pro baseball.

Dozens of books and plays have been written about the hotel, its Round Tablers and even the house cats, both named Hamlet, but Harry is a walking bibliography of literary works committed on the premises.

"When I graduated to hopping bells, all you heard in these corridors was pounding typewriters," he said, launching into an oral history of American Literature at 59 West 44th Street, as royalties and rejection slips were frequently addressed. "Alan Lerner and Fritz Loewe had 905 and 908 while working on 'My Fair Lady.' James Thurber had a twin-bedded double up on seven. Rex Beach and Sinclair Lewis always stayed with us.'"

In keeping with the monastic tone of a scriptorium that opened in 1902 as the Puritan Hotel, Edna Ferber got a phone call from the desk while collaborating with George Kaufman on the play "The Royal Family":

"Beg pardon, Madam, is there a gentleman in your room?"

"I don't know. Hold on a minute, I'll ask him."

After Frank Case's death in 1946, the Algonquin was bought by retired oilman Ben Bodne, who spent his honeymoon here in 1926. He has loved the hotel so unswervingly that, even after selling to the Japanese group, he continues to reside in a 10th floor suite.

H.L. Mencken, Noel Coward, Graham Greene and many other literary giants have stopped by the newsstand over the decades, but customer loyalty aside, Harry cannot escape the Algonquin affliction of incurable critic-itis.

"To my mind the best book written here was John Hersey's 'A Bell for Adano.' It grabs you right here." He indicated an area just south of the protrusion of cigars and ball point pens in his shirt pocket. And far and away "the greatest character to stop here was Brendan Behan." One morning, Harry recalled, the dining room captain intercepted the Irish playwright on his way into breakfast in his pajamas. Behan demanded to know if the minion had worn pajamas to breakfast. "Ah yes," he agreed, "but I ate at home."

"Well this is my home," thundered the author, striding stage left toward the coffee urn.

Benchley once threatened to move out because too many of his pals loitering in the lobby wandered up for a chat. It was suggested that the desk could be instructed to keep visitors downstairs until he telephoned down his approval.

"But that won't keep me from coming down," the humorist glumly replied.

"That Hamlet II was one beautiful cat. Independent, stuck up, big bushy tail, she'd stroll up 44th Street and go calling at the New York Yacht Club, the Bar Association and the Harvard Club. Then one day she didn't come back. Probably wound up at the Yale Club and came to no good end."

As evidence of intent to keep the Algonquin spirit alive — "No charter buses, no conventions, no tour groups," vows Noble — the hotel has launched a search for Hamlet III. Auditions are limited to genuine Broadway alley cats; no Persian or Siamese kittens need apply.

Remembered Remarks From Notables Of Past Days

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

Poet Don Marquis of "Archy and Mehitabel" fame, falling off the wagon and into the Blue Bar for a double dry Martini: "I've conquered my (bleep) willpower."

Drama critic Robert Benchley, deserting a sinking musical midway in the first act: "My foot went to sleep. I think I'll join it."

Heywood Broun on the art of the Algonquin insult: "Repartee is what you wish you had said."

Drama critic George S. Kaufman on actor Raymond Massey's absorption in the title role of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois": "He won't be satisfied until he's assassinated."

Kaufman, contemplating a lousy hand at the Saturday night poker session: "I've been tray-deuced." Dealt another, he threw in his hand: "I fold my tens like the Arabs and as silently steal away."

In the space marked "position" on an Algonquin credit application, columnist Franklin P. Adams wrote "horizontal."

At last, the teller of an interminable anecdote reached the inevitable, "Well, to make a long story short." "Too late!," F.P.A. sighed.

"Excuse me," said Dorothy Parker, rising from the Round Table. "I have to go to the bathroom. (Dramatic pause). I really have to telephone, but I'm too embarrassed to say so."

When a garrulous old battle-ax was praised as "outspoken," Mrs. Parker raised an eyebrow to take dead aim: "Outspoken? By whom?"

Her dog, she told the Round Table, contracted a "social disease" from "using a public lamppost."

Woollcott, a shameless freeloader caricatured in "The Man Who Came to Dinner," invited himself for a weekend at Frank Sullivan's Saratoga home.

OLD WEST STRUCTURE — An exhibition, "Wild West Town," by Greenville policeman Mack Jones will be one of three shows to be on view at the Greenville Museum of Art beginning Sept. 13. Jones has researched, designed and constructed a town of the American West. A reception from 2 to 4 p.m. Sept. 13 will honor Jones and other artists whose work is being shown. That date marks the reopening of the musuem following extensive interior and exterior renovations.

Greenville Museum Of Art To Reopen On September 13

The Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street, will officially re-open its galleries to the public on Sept. 13, with a ribbon cutting at 2 p.m. and open house from 2 to 4 p.m.

The public is invited to attend the reception for the newly renovated museum facility which has been under renovation for 18 months and closed for the past four and one-half months. Renovation was carried out on the building's interior and exterior, including the museum grounds.

The museum is housed in the former Flanagan-Wagner House, built about 1900. It is a nationally accredited museum and serves the Pitt-Greenville community and northeastern North Carolina.

GMA has a notable collection of early 20th century drawings and paintings, one of the largest public collections of North Carolina Jugtown pottery, a Works Project Administration graphics collection and a representative group of contemporary North Carolina art.

It is a non-profit educational institution founded in 1939 as a federally funded WPA gallery. The museum moved into its present facility in 1960 and presents a year round schedule of exhibitions and programs for adults, children and special interest groups.

The reception on Sept. 13 will feature al fresco dining (weather permitting), music and three exhibitions. The reception will also honor the September exhibition artists who will be present to talk with museum visitors.

The three exhibits are:

• "Wild West Town (Re-living the Old West,") by Greenville city policeman Mack Jones. He has researched, designed and constructed to scale an authentic town of the late 19th century in the American West.

• "The Capital Collection," paintings and photographs by The Capital Art League, Raleigh, a group of women representing those who pursue a life of creativity at a professional level, integrating their studio work with their roles as business women, wives and mothers.

• "Family Ties," by an artist who signs his work as Linister. The Kansas City, Mo. painter is known of his meticulous and revealing portraits and still lifes.

Portions of the GMA collection, including the Jugtown Pottery and examples of art created during 1900-1945 by American artists will also be on view.

The 18 months renovation project was made possible by a 1985 capital/endowment campaign which raised funds to begin an Operating Endowment Fund and to completely renovate the facility.

G. Henry Leslie was the general chairman of the campaign and with over 100 volunteers raised over $187,000.

The renovation was accomplished in two phases. The Bill Clark Construction Company did phase one, the exterior; and Renova Construction Company of Washington, N.C. did the interior work.

Renovation was exhaustive and included total re-wiring, insulation, a new administrative office, space for the GMA Guild of Docents and volunteers office, an art library, new bathrooms and kitchen, new lighting, carpet and gallery walls, an improved HVAC system, the refinishing of floors and painting, new signs, a paved parking lot, landscaping of the grounds, a new telephone system and a modernized collections storage facility.

For more details on the museum's programs and membership opportunities, call 758-1946.

GMA will resume its regular operation scheduled on Sept. 15. Hours are: Tuesdays, 10 a.m. to 8:30 p.m.; Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.; Saturdays 11 a.m. to 2:45 p.m., and Sundays, 1 to 5 p.m. The museum will be closed Mondays and on major holidays.

Some Contemporary Art Is Now Highly Treasured

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Paintings by dynamic American artists such as Jackson Pollock, Willem de Kooning, Franz Kline and Jasper Johns are valued like gold these days, but there was a time when some of those artists really didn't know where they'd get their next meal.

"There was extreme poverty," recalled Grace Hartigan, one of that post-World War II school known as the Abstract Expressionists.

"Elaine de Kooning tells of Kline living on coffee and a lot of sugar," she said. "Kline had a growling dog which was found dead with a half-chewed bar of soap beside it and Elaine said, 'Look, an artist can live where a dog dies.'"

Hartigan told the story at a recent one-day conference in London on Anglo-American painting since 1945, organized by the British American Arts Association, which arranges cultural exchanges.

The Newark-born artist moved to New York in 1947 and had her first solo show there in 1951. Since 1967 she has been dirctor of the Hoffberger Graduate School of Painting at the Maryland Institute of Art in Baltimore.

"My friends were discussing a man named Jackson Pollock and I was curious about why they were mocking him," she said, recalling an incident of the post-war art scene. "So I saw the first show of the Drips, as they were called, and in those days we were a very small world and it was easy to get to know these people.

"I heard Pollock had moved to the country and was lonely, and so I walked into a barn on Long Island and saw a wet Pollock (painting) and I had the feeling I was seeing something I had never seen before."

Hartigan discovered a new way to make a painting, she said, "where the painting was an image and there were no images in the painting."

Describing what it was like to be an artist in those days, she said: "You were facing a blank canvas with the mystery of the unknown in your hand and making the unknown known."

Bryan Robertson, who directed London's Whitechapel Art Gallery from 1952 to 1968, said that when he first visited New York in 1956, the year Pollock was killed in an auto crash, he was astounded by the "unprovincial and un-French" art produced there.

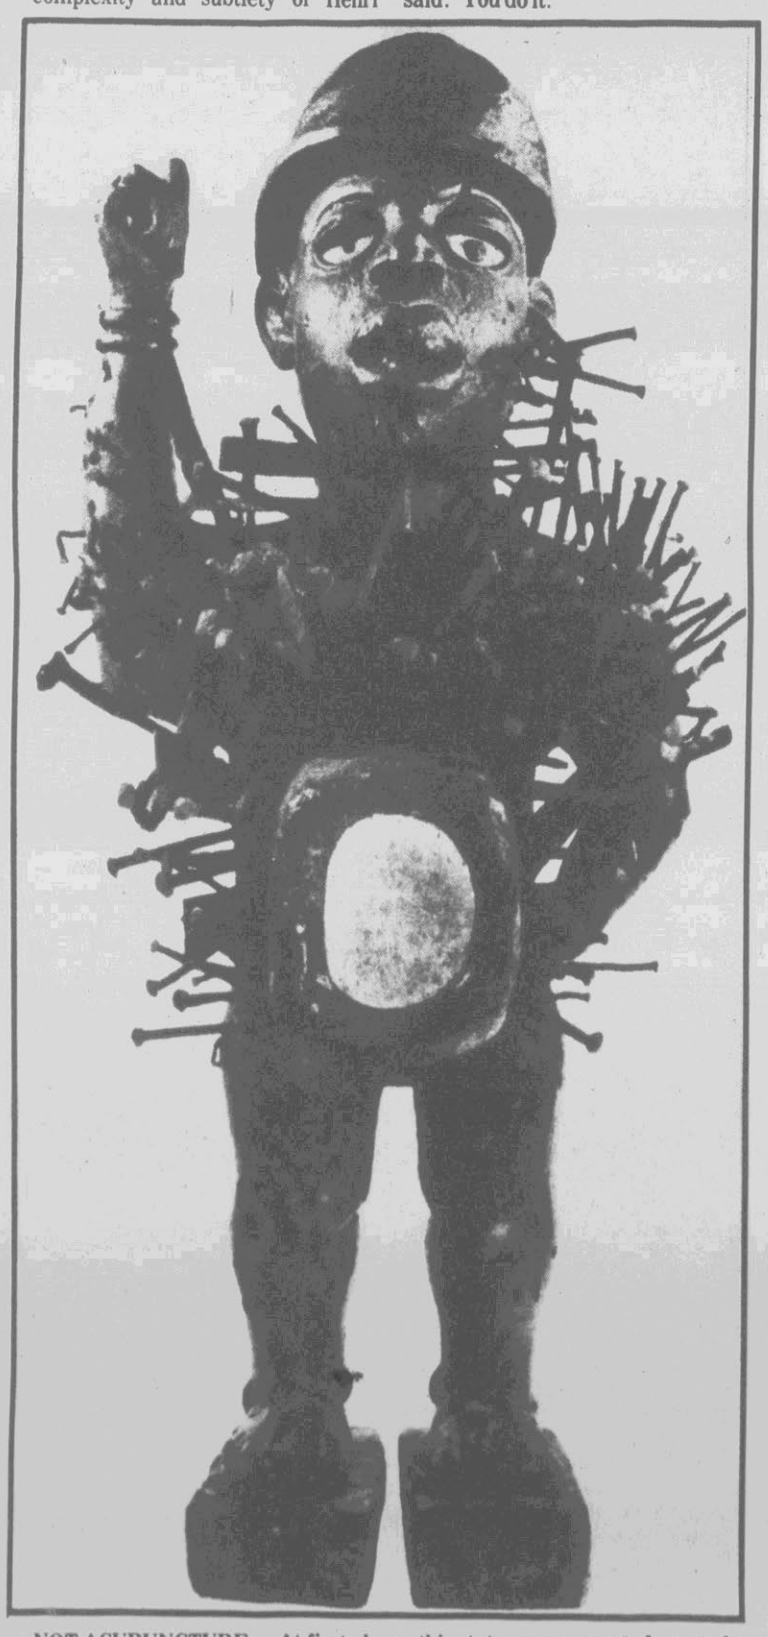
"American art then was remarkable — they altered painting more than anyone since," he said. "English painting by contrast was provincial. I said Pollock had made the most important contribution to Western art since Picasso."

Robertson was director of the State University of New York Museum from 1970-75 and wrote a book on Pollock.

A contrary view of the importance of the New York painters was given by Patrick Heron, a British artist who helped through his writing to popularize them in Britain.

"A painter can have an innovative impact," Heron said. "Great though it was, you cannot squeeze any more out of those artists. The interest, complexity and subtlety of Henri Matisse is unending. But the interest in Pollock is over."

John Baldessari, one of the first conceptual artists, recalled that when he first came to England he was given eight pages on using a water heater. "It would be three sentences in New York," he said. "It maddens me, this English attitude of 'One really can't do it, can one.' I said: 'You do it.'"



NOT ACUPUNCTURE — At first glance this statue may seem to be a study in massive acupuncture. Instead, its a piece of African folk art sculpture in which nails are freely used.

Second Grant To GMA For Art Conservation

The Greenville Museum of Art Inc. has received its second grant award for collection conservation projects during fiscal year 1987-88.

Mary Anne Pennington, director of the museum, has announced the award of the grant by The Institute of Museum Services, a federal agency, for the amount of $1,692.

This award will be matched for a like amount by the Rachel Maxwell Moore Foundation, a private foundation of which the museum is the beneficiary of funds to acquire works for the museum and to preserve the GMA collections.

The grant will fund a conservation needs and condition survey of the collections and allow the museum to bring professional conservators to GMA from the North Carolina Museum of Art, Raleigh and The Center for Conservation and Technical Studies at the Harvard University Museums to conduct an on-site survey of all objects in the colletions.

Lois Burke Shepard, director of The Institute of Museum Services, said "Too often the proper conservation of museum collections is neglected or put off. Unfortunately, such neglect is extremely detrimental to irreplaceable cultural artifacts housed in our nation's museums.

"The goal of the Conservation Project Support Program is to encourage museums to develop a farsighted, long-term approach to the conservation of their collections. I am delighted by the encouraging response to the program guidelines from the museum field and from conservators reviewing the applications. It is evident that the program is helping to address the needs of the country's museums."

A total of 495 museums nationwide applied for the grants, all of which required a one-to-one match and are made on a competitive basis. A total of 248 applications were funded out of the 495 museums submitting proposals.

The other conservation grant received by the Greenville Museum of Art for 1987-88 to provide collections treatment funds is from the Z. Zmith Reynolds Foundation in the amount of $5,000.

N.C. Indian Grave Provides A Window On Earlier Times

By FRANK TURSI
Winston-Salem Journal

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — The Indians gathered near the shoals of the river and carefully lowered the great man into the grave. One placed a small woven bag by the dead man's head. Its top was ringed with ornaments made of beaver teeth and tips of turkey wings, and in it were the man's tools and the prized rocks used to make spear points. His small soapstone pipe was placed near his waist.

Someone certainly said a prayer, and then the great man and his possessions were covered with the silty red earth.

There they remained, forgotten and unnoticed, for about 500 years. White men plowed the earth above, and corn and tobacco grew in the fertile river bottoms where the Indians once prospered.

Then Ned J. Woodall and his band of students came along.

Woodall is chairman of the anthropology department at Wake Forest University and a recognized expert on the prehistoric Indians of the Yadkin River Valley.

He and some students spent much of this summer digging along the Yadkin near Siloam in Surry County. They were uncovering mostly Indian trash pits that were filled with the refuse of an ancient society: bits of animal bones, pieces of pottery, husks of charred hickory nuts.

In July, though, they came upon two startling and puzzling finds. First, they uncovered a grave containing just the skull of a Indian child and a small pot. Then, they uncovered the grave of an adult Indian who, judging from the things buried with him, must have been an important man.

"It's unusual when you find this much of what we call grave furniture," said Woodall as he stood in his lab where the spear points, turkey wings and rocks were spread on a table in front of him. "We haven't seen anything like this in the other graves we've found downriver."

He picked up a plastic box containing the small greenish pipe. Some Indian spent a great deal of time hollowing out the bowl and drilling the hole in the stem with crude stone tools. Something that valuable, Woodall said, wouldn't have been buried with the man unless the other Indians thought pretty highly of him.

More convincing, though, are the rocks that were in the small woven sack that was buried with the Indian. Called chert, they are gray and smooth like flint and, when chipped, they leave a sharp edge. So they were prized by prehistoric man for making blades and cutting tools.

Anthropologists think that the Indians of the northwest Piedmont faced a continual rock shortage. There was plenty of granite and quartz lying about, but the prime stuff — rhyolite, feldspar, flint and chert — was scarce. These rocks made the hardest blades and the sharpest points, and the Indians of the upper Yadkin River Valley must have traded for them.

The rocks found in this Indian's grave, said Woodall, probably came from Mount Rogers in Virginia.

"They are not natural to this area," he said, "and to the Indians they were as valuable as oil is to us. So why would they bury something that valuable with this guy?"

Another clue to the man's status is the bag itself. Though nothing is left of it, the fabric bag must have been painstakingly woven, Woodall said, and a great deal of effort went into making its ornamental turkey wings and beaver teeth.

A spear point whose design, called Kirk, dates back to 7,000 B.C., also was found in the grave. This Indian must have traded for it or it was given to him. The fact that it was buried with him says something of his importance.

"It all suggests that this guy was some sort of honcho," Woodall said, "but I'm waffling because with a sample of just two graves, you don't know if what you're looking at is unusual."

However, finding just a skull in a grave is unusual. No other bones were found with the skull of the Indian child, who Woodall estimated was 6 years old when he died. The skull looks nothing like the bleached white skulls that high school biology teachers are fond of passing around. Sitting in a cardboard box caked with mud, it looked more like a misshapen clump of dirt. No eye sockets were visible, but some teeth were, sticking barely out from the dirt.

"There could be all kinds of reasons why just the skull was buried," Woodall said. "Maybe the child was decapitated in some way or maybe he drowned in the river, and all they could recover was his head. Whatever happened, someone thought enough of him to bury that pot with him."

Physical anthropologists will clean the skull and the skeleton of the adult Indian and will look for signs of how they died. Charcoal found under the pot in the child's grave then will be sent to a laboratory for dating.

"We've got a pool going on what it's going to come back as," Woodall said. "My guess is 1500 A.D."

That would make the finds slightly newer than the artifacts that Woodall has been digging up near Donnaha, a mile or so from Siloam, for about 10 years now. He has found Indian dwellings and graves indicating that there was a thriving village near the Great Bend in the river 700-900 years ago.

Blossoms Of Beebalm Attract Hummingbirds

By TOM FEGELY
The Allentown Morning Call

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — The backyard bird feeder may not attract as many different kinds of visitors on a simmering summer day as it does in the dead of winter, but what's there is worth watching — and not all of the freeloaders have feathers.

Two years back a friend gave me a clump of beebalm; wild-growing flowers that do well in rock gardens, especially as tall-growing border plants. The beebalm blossom grows atop a 3-foot high stalk and shows beautiful scarlet flower heads.

Blooming from June into September, it attracts a variety of insects and is a visited daily by a pair of ruby-throated hummingbirds nesting somewhere in the woods behind my home.

But more on the hummingbirds later.

Recently I noticed another visitor among the bees gathering pollen from the beebalm.

At first I thought it was a hummingbird but when it appeared from a clump of red blossoms and proceeded to dip its long tongue in a single flower cluster, I identified it as a hummingbird moth.

A visit to my nature library revealed that the insect is also called the clearwing moth because the wings show conspicuous clear areas. Unlike most moths which possess scaly wings, this one shows only reddish-brown colorations on the tips and where they join the body.

It's a close relative of the sphinx or "hawk" moths but differs from its relatives by being active during the day. Most moths, as is widely known by their accumulations under street and porch lights, are most active at dark.

Oh, yes. The hummingbirds. Several of them come in to hover, helicopter-like and drink.

Seldom are two in attendance at a time although one Sunday afternoon, following a rainstorm, both a female and male were visiting when a third hummer, another male, chased them away.

As hummingbirds all look alike, it's impossible to tell exactly how many birds visit the beebalm.

It's so named because of the male's bright red throat, which may appear black when viewed in dim light. The female has no such throat coloration but shows the same metallic green on its crown and back.

On several occasions, when one or the other sipped from a flower head only inches from the kitchen window screen, the humming sound of the fast-moving wings first caught my attention.

More often it's the rapid, squeaky chipping call that signals its appearance a dozen or more times daily, sometimes long after sunset but before total darkness.

High-speed movie photography has shown that the ruby-throat's wings beat 55 times a second when hovering, 61 times per second when backing up, and 75 times a second when flying forward.

Although I've not seen it, naturalists have reported seeing ruby-throats hover aside and drink from trees whose trunks were oozing sap, fight with bumblebees over feeding rights, pick insects entangled in a spider web and chase kingbirds and crows.

Recently I watched the male chase and catch a small flying insect that happened by.

ECU Faculty Art Show Now On View At Gray Gallery

ECU News Bureau

Gray Art Gallery, located on the campus of East Carolina University, has opened its 1987-88 season with an exhibition of recent works by School of Art faculty members.

The Faculty '87 Show went on view Saturday and will be up through Sept. 19. A reception, free and open to the public, will be held in the gallery on Sept. 11 from 7:30 until 9 p.m.

According to Perry Nesbitt, gallery director, the exhibit is designed to acquaint students and the public with the quality and range of work represented by the faculty. Media areas such as painting, drawing, watercolor, sculpture, printmaking, photography, textiles, metal arts, wood and ceramics will be represented.

Some of the faculty who will be exhibiting are Norman Keller, Paul Hartley, Clarence Morgan, Laura Davis, Mike Ehlbeck, Donald Sexauer, Chuck Chamberlain and Darryl Halbrooks.

Keller returns to ECU from a year's sabbatical, part of which was spent in Cortona, Italy, as a faculty member of the University of Georgia's Studies Abroad Program. He will exhibit drawings and sculpture from a new series developed from this experience.

Working in mixed media of stone, metal and wood, Keller describes his pieces as "open air reliquaries," containers for religious relics.

"La Forza Della Pino," or "Spirit of the Pine," was done in Italy predominately of stone. It makes strong visual references to several features of Italian architecture.

According to Keller, the piece is a "metaphorical 3-D story" eulogizing the Italian pine and its prominent place in the history of Italian painting.

His most recent piece features an "offering" basin filled with stones, which is inscribed with the words "Take a Stone." This invitation to touch and participate with the sculpture contrasts and parodies the sacredness of both the art object and the relic.

Laura Davis, who joined the ECU faculty last year, will present "Notes of a Displaced Northerner," a video piece about the experience of moving to the South.

The works of Donald Sexauer and Chuck Chamberlain also derive from their personal lives. Sexauer's exhibited work will include a piece about his son, "Geologist Who Would Be Chef." The print is currently traveling with the Hunterton National Print Exhibit Tour of New Jersey.

Darryl Halbrooks of Eastern Kentucky University is teaching at ECU this fall through the Artist-in-Residence Program. He will exhibit prints and drawings.

Gray Art Gallery is located in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center. All events are free and the public is invited.

Works on display will be for sale at the opening and during gallery hours, Monday through Friday, from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. For more information, call 757-6336.

Seven Plays For PFNC's New Season

The 1987-88 season of plays to be presented by the Playwrights Fund of North Carolina has been announced by artistic director Christine Rusch. The plays encompass comedy, farce, mystery and family drama.

Performance dates, previously on Wednesdays, have been changed to Saturdays.

Continuing the earlier pattern of presentations, plays will be given reading performances twice on each performance date — at noon in The Best Lunch Theater at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street; and an encore evening performance at 8 p.m. in the Downtown, Downstairs studio in the Humber House, 117 West Fifth Street.

• Sept. 19 — "Home Place," by Phill Hines. A family drama by one of North Carolina's outstanding young playwrights. In this drama, members of the Chappell family have to deal with their brother's return home.

• Oct. 17 — "Birds in the Weather," by David Muschell. Vivian Beasley, an outspoken, self-proclaimed wheelchair-bound sleuth, investigates the suspicious events at the Chilliwick Nursing Home.

• Nov. 14 — "Family Reunion," by Glenn Rawls. An unusual twist on the standard family reunion.

• There will be no presentation during the month of December.

• Jan. 16 — "Bright Star," bu Terry Theddore. An account of the life of Ida Vernon, a star of the stage during the 1800s.

• March 19 — "Special Pals," by Pamela Parker. What begins as a complicated 65th anniversary celebration for the Wilkins couple becomes a romantic comedy with a happy ending.

• April 16 — Presentation of the winner of the best North Carolina Play of the Year in the PFNC competition for North Carolina Playwrights.

The Playwrights Fund of North Carolina, with headquarters in Greenville, is a non-profit organization devoted to developing scripts by playwrights in North Carolina and throughout the southeastern states. It is funded by a grant from the North Carolina Arts Council, by area corporate contributions, and by membership fees.

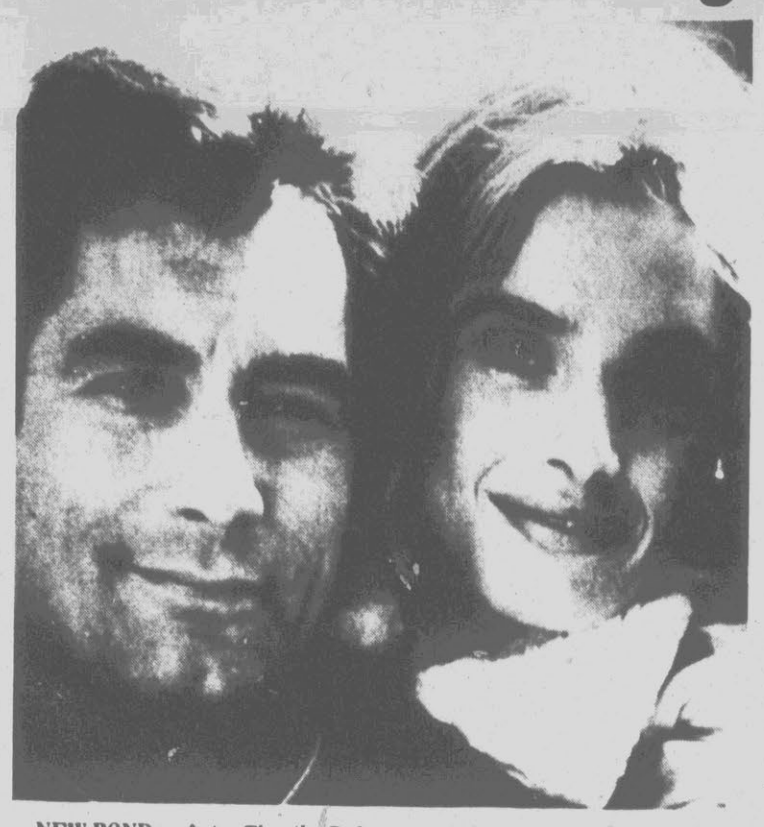
Mexican Cinematographer Gabriel Figueroa Still Active At 80



NEW BOND — Actor Timothy Dalton poses with actress Maryann d'Abo in "The Living Daylights." James Bond is a new man this summer — literally. And the happy news is that Dalton, number five on the Bond parade, is an attractive addition to the rogues gallery of actors who have portrayed Ian Fleming's debonair agent 007. (AP Laserphoto)

By JAVIER PICHARDINI
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — At 80, there's no slowing down for cinematographer Gabriel Figueroa, who has made 200 movies and won at least 19 international film awards.

The "prince of cinematographers," as he is known in France, is about to film "Eternal Splendor." The project marks the return to the screen of Maria Felix, one of Latin America's leading actresses, who has not made a movie since 1966. Filming is expected to start in Paris as early as September.

Figueroa has worked with such legendary directors as John Ford, John Huston and Luis Bunuel. Some film texts say he is among the leading directors of photography in the world.

Among his top achievements are awards at the Cannes Film Festival for his work on "Maria Candelaria" in 1946 and "Macario" in 1960. A Mexico City movie theater is named after him.

The white-haired cinematographer, sporting a trim mustache and dark sunglasses, recently talked about "Eternal Splendor" and his career during an interview at his studio.

"The film has been planned for three years, but it has not been possible to do it because Maria has had three operations during that time. The last time was on her leg, but she's recovered now," Figueroa said.

He has worked on 12 of Miss Felix's 47 movies, including her last, "The Lady General." The actress, who is 73 years old, is one of the two great female stars of Mexican cinema along with the late Dolores del Rio.

Portraits of Miss Felix, Miss Del Rio and Greta Garbo are on the walls of Figueroa's studio.

"The film's script is an adaptation of a work by the classic American author Henry James," Figueroa said. "It tells the story of the life of a movie star who remembers the best moments of her life by seeing fragments of her films."

The cinematographer also is involved in the American production, "A House for Mister Barnum," to be filmed in New York and Seville, Spain.

When he was working on his first film, "Alla en el Rancho Grande" or "Home on the Ranch" in 1938, he did not expect that he would go on to international recognition.

But his camera artistry so dazzled the film world that even today the term "Figueroa skies" is a common one in the industry. It describes his achievements with the camera, forging vivid and memorable sky and cloud formations with black-and-white film.

"When I won the prize in 1948 at the Venice Film Festival for 'The Pearl,' they asked me my secret. I always told them that I used infra-red filters," Figueroa said.

He was a friend of the Mexican muralists David Alfaro Siqueiros, Diego Rivera and Jose Clemente Orozco and the painter Guadalupe Posada. And from those artists he learned ways to present the reality of the Mexican Revolution in 1910-21, a favorite subject of Mexican filmmakers.

"To obtain firm and strong images it's necessary to use the technique of the engravings of those men," Figueroa said.

His "Enamorada" ("In Love"), which starred Miss Felix, won the cinematography award at the Brussels Film Festival in 1947. "Maria Candelaria," with Miss del Rio, won the award at Lucerne, Switzerland that same year. "The Unloved One," again with Miss del Rio, won in Venice in 1949.

Much of the composition of those movies recalls the work of the Mexican muralists.

"The director shouldn't get involved in lighting," Figueroa said. "Here rests all the atmosphere which the author of the work has decided, and here it is seen if you interpeted the director well."

The cinematographer says that he had complete liberty in his camera and composicion work with Ford and with the Mexican director Emilio "El Indio" Fernandez, his associate throughout the 1940s at the height of the so-called Golden Age of Film here. Fernandez died last year.

The two men worked together in Huston's "Under the Volcano," made in Mexico in 1983, Figueroa as cinematographer and Fernandez as an actor.

Through the lens of his camera have passed such stars as Ava Gardner, Deborah Kerr, Richard Burton, Shirley MacLaine, Clint Eastwood, Lana Turner and Henry Fonda.

Figueroa studied cinematography in the United States with Gregg Toland in the 1930s. His Hollywood movies include "The Fugitive" in 1947 with Ford; "The Torch" in 1950; "The Night of the Iguana," made in Mexico with Huston in 1964; and "Two Mules for Sister Sara."

Q. Are all those sensational stories about Elvis Presley's illegitimate children true? How many legitimate ones did he have?—Marcy Wilkins, Grand Rapids, Mich.

A. The only child, legitimate or illegitimate, that Elvis ever acknowledged as his is Lisa Marie Presley, born in 1968 to the singer's only wife, Priscilla. Others who claim to have been fathered by Elvis lack verifiable evidence—which does not necessarily mean their claims are untrue.

ABC-TV

Bisset and Assante rule world in Napoleon and Josephine

Q. Jacqueline Bisset has been signed to play Josephine in the six-hour ABC-TV miniseries "Napoleon and Josephine." Who has been signed to play Napoleon—her Russian lover, Alexander Godunov? Isn't Godunov too tall? Also, I would like to know if Bisset and Godunov are U.S. citizens.—Denise Collins, Baltimore, Md.

A. Jacqueline Bisset and Armand Assante have the title roles in "Napoleon and Josephine," which is being filmed in France. Bisset's heartthrob, Alexander Godunov, who danced with the Bolshoi Ballet before defecting in New York City in 1979, became a U.S. citizen in March. Bisset, born in 1944 in Weybridge, England, still retains her British citizenship. You are right: Godunov is too tall to play Napoleon—also too Slavic.

Q. As Illinois goes, so goes the nation. In this century, the residents of Illinois have voted for every winning Presidential candidate except one. Who was the one loser they voted for?—G. Clark, Anderson, Ind.

Hughes: Illinois went, but...

A. There were two. In 1916, the Republican Charles Evans Hughes won in Illinois but lost the election to incumbent President Woodrow Wilson. (Hughes later became chief justice of the United States, 1930-41.) And in 1976, President Gerald Ford carried Illinois but lost the election to Democrat Jimmy Carter.

Q. Who was the late Fred Astaire's favorite dancing partner? Is it true that he and Ginger Rogers were "friendly enemies"? And why did he never win an Oscar?—J.F., Latrobe, Pa.

A. Astaire diplomatically avoided naming his favorite partner by telling reporters, "It's a toss-up between Bing Crosby and Gene Kelly." Astaire and Rogers were neither "friendly enemies" nor best friends. He was wary of Ginger and her mother. Astaire was nominated for an Oscar for his supporting role in "The Towering Inferno" (1974), but Robert De Niro won for "The Godfather, Part II." In 1949, Astaire was voted an honorary Oscar for his musical contributions to films.

Q. Did Stewart Granger ever sue anybody for writing that his second wife, Jean Simmons, was seduced by the late Richard Burton? Where is Granger these days?—D. Burke, Simi Valley, Calif.

A. Yes, Granger (real name: James Stewart) sued the author Penny Junor and her British publishers, Sidgwick & Jackson, for alleging in a book that Richard Burton had seduced actress Jean Simmons while Granger, her husband, was asleep elsewhere in their home. In March, the actor won substantial but undisclosed libel damages in the London High Court. The publishers also agreed to take the book off the market and not to republish it until the offending passages had been deleted. Granger, 74, currently resides in Los Angeles.

Q. Is it true that Dan Rather, the CBS-TV anchorman, owns the largest ranch in New Mexico?—J.L., Roswell, N.M.

A. Rather owns a ranch 50 miles east of Santa Fe in partnership with Don Rumsfeld, who was President Ford's chief of staff; Ned Jannotta, an investment banker; Jim Denny, a vice president of Sears; and Jim Otis, an architect who manages the ranch. It is not, however, the largest in New Mexico.

Q. How much did the film "Platoon," about the Vietnam war, cost to make? How much will it gross?—Richard Rosen, Key Largo, Fla.

A. Shot in the Philippines for $5.5 million, "Platoon" is expected to bring in $250 million in worldwide revenues.

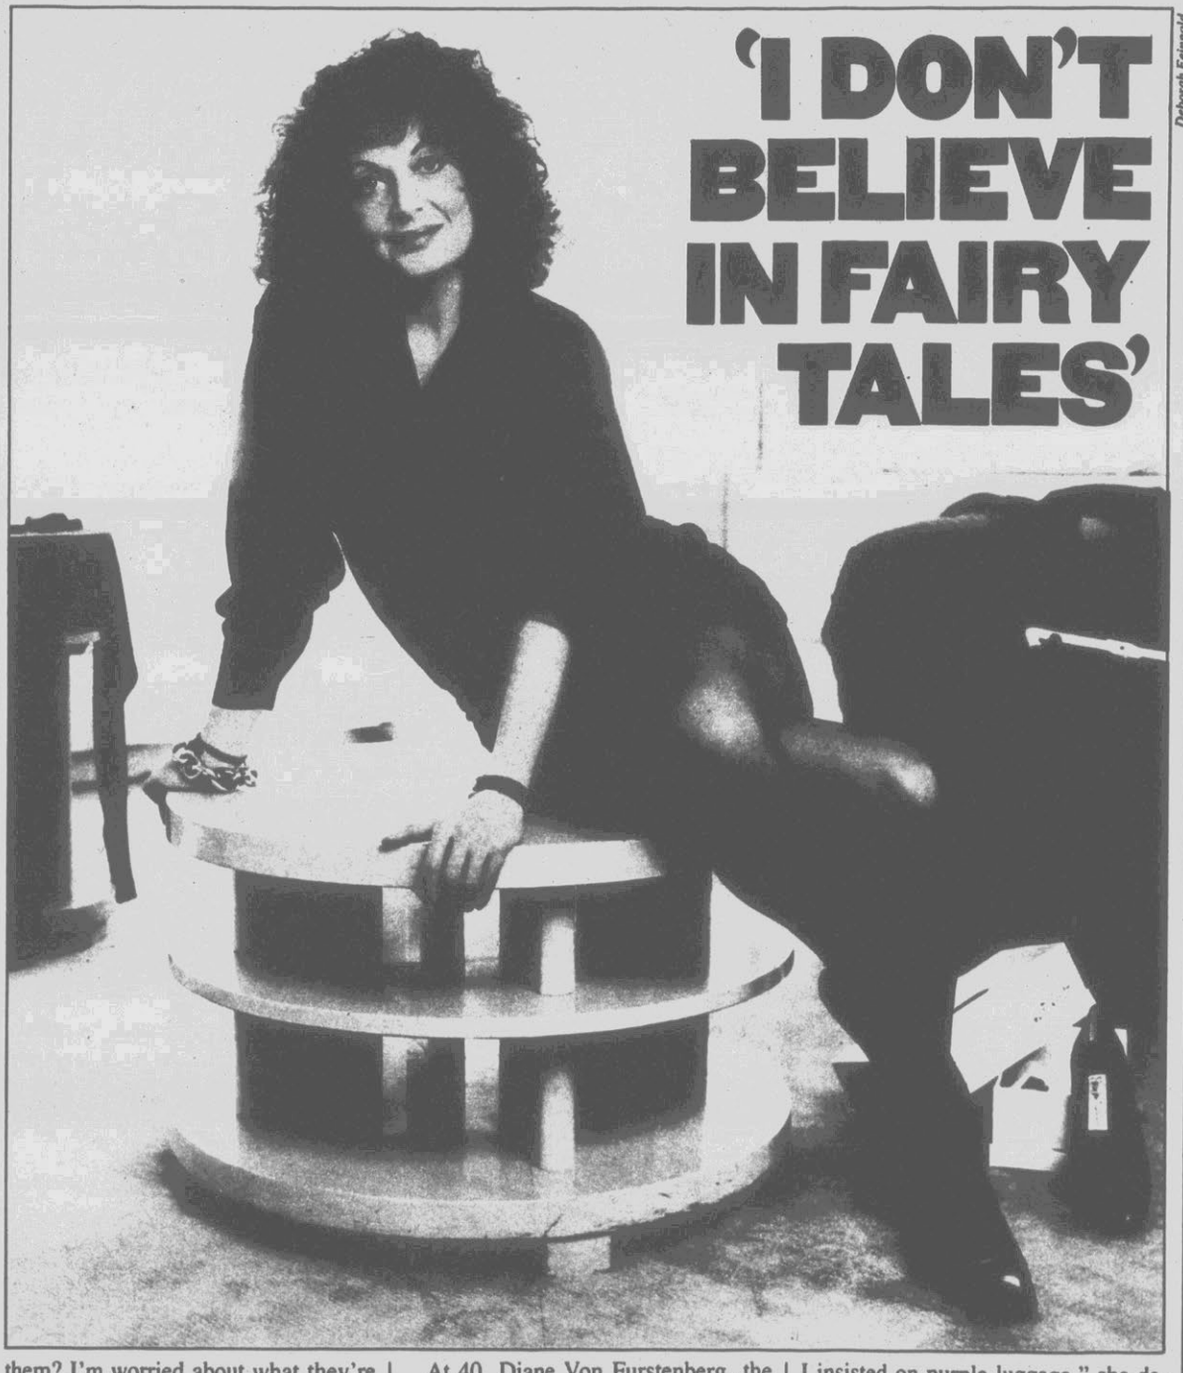
DIANE VON FURSTENBERG:

'I DON'T BELIEVE IN FAIRY TALES'



Deborah Feingold

Fashion designer Diane Von Furstenberg

"I GUESS PEOPLE SEE my life as a fairy tale," says Diane Von Furstenberg, the Belgian beauty who married an Austrian prince, moved to America and became an overnight fashion star, reaping royalties and publicity happily ever after. "But you realize very quickly," she points out, "that if it were a fairy tale, the prince would have taken care of me, not sent me out to work. I don't believe in fairy tales. Because you pay for everything."

The sun is shining brightly over Diane Von Furstenberg's sprawling "Cloudwalk Farm" in rustic northwestern Connecticut, where her neighbors and friends include Bill Blass, Oscar de la Renta and Dr. and Mrs. Henry Kissinger. There is a rambling, old, white-frame main house, a matching caretaker's cottage, a big Dutch barn converted into a design studio, a swimming pool, a babbling brook and a waterfall. The day of my visit, the dogwoods, azaleas and rhododendrons are ablaze with Diane's favorite pinks and purples, and her two children—Alexandre, 17, and Tatiana, 16—are close by, entertaining schoolmates in the roomy bungalow their mother recently had built for them behind the four-car garage (Mercedes, Chrysler, Jeep and jalopy).

It is a pretty picture, and Diane Von Furstenberg, tan and fit in jeans and work shirt, completes it well. But, as with most such images, there is more (or less) than meets the eye. The prince is long gone. Diane divorced Prince Egon Von Furstenberg, whose family once ruled the Black Forest, in 1983, though they had separated a decade earlier. She is now plain Ms. Von Furstenberg.

The current man in her life, the Italian novelist Alain Elkann, has been calling from Milan this sunny Sunday morning, demanding that Diane be at his side when his new book is launched there later in the week. "I want this one to last," Diane confides after the fourth phone call, each of which starts in shouts and ends in whispers.

The Late Show also has been calling. The talk-show's producers want Diane to fly out to Los Angeles to tape a show later in the week. Diane can't make up her mind, but she is certain about wanting to spend the following weekend on the farm with her children. "Once they go to college," she says, "there will be less and less time when all three of us can be at home together. And I think that's important. Do I worry about them? I'm worried about what they're doing with their friends this very minute. No, they're good kids. But you have to worry, especially today. That's why I took them out of school in New York City when they were still small and brought them up here in the country."

Just then, Tatiana, who has skipped two grades and will enter an Ivy League college this fall, appears. She asks her mother to take her along to L.A. Diane says no, because Tatiana has hurt her foot stepping on a nail and has to see a doctor in New York. "You mean," sulks Tatiana, "you don't want to see me."

At 40, Diane Von Furstenberg, the woman who seems to have it all, is at a crossroads. It's not just a question of going to California or Italy, of choosing between career and romance, though that's part of it. Like millions of mothers whose kids are grown up and going off to college, the decision she faces is what to do with the rest of her life. Or, as she puts it, "my second life."

On the one hand, she is expanding her $250 million-a-year fashion and beauty empire. Her name is on everything from Revlon fragrances to Sears home furnishings, sunglasses to suitcases. ("Everyone said I was crazy when I insisted on purple luggage," she declares, "but it became a best-seller.")

Diane also recently flew to Detroit to talk about designing automobile interiors for Lee Iacocca. And she's bringing back the inexpensive jersey fashions that made her fortune in the first place. "I love jersey," she says. "It has a little elasticity, a little life. It's a modern fabric. And it goes back to my original concept: to give as many women as possible clothes that have taste, quality and value. I want to make clothes that everybody can buy everywhere, that are practical, comfortable and becoming."

Diane comes alive when pitching her line; she obviously loves her work. "I think it's important," she says, "for a woman to have a career, an identity. Because a woman is a little like a flower that fades. Men can have children until they are 85. Nothing explains better how aging for a woman is different than for a man. Nothing is more unfair."

On the other hand, Diane says, "It's so important to be in love. If you boss people around all day, obviously you lose some femininity. So I think it's very important to be with a man, to keep that. What about marriage? I would love to be married. If I got married now, I'd get into it with a total commitment. If I had to sacrifice my career... I would just have my daughter go on with the business. I could. Definitely."

"Look," she says finally. "It's really difficult. You do give up certain things at different times—I'm just realizing this now. I always thought you could do it all. And you can to a certain limit. But you pay for everything. The more you want, the more complicated things are. The children are a problem. Relationships, getting old, health—all are problems. If you think big, if you have big visions, then the problems can become big too. And if you've chosen a man's life and you are a woman, it's tough. But it's worth it. I wouldn't change my life for anyone else's. I know I'm privileged. It's not easy for any woman, not just me."

Diane Von Furstenberg's life has never been as easy as it seemed. She was born Diane Halfin on New Year's Eve, 1946, in Brussels. Her father was a successful shopowner, but her mother, who helped the Resistance during the German occupation in World War II, spent 18 months in Auschwitz, an experience that shadowed Diane's youth. ("I'm the vengeance for my mother," she says, "because she was a prisoner, and I became so independent.")

Her parents divorced when she was 15, and Diane roamed Europe, studying and working in London, Madrid and Geneva, where she met her Prince Charming in 1965. Less charming was her haughty father-in-law, who refused to attend their 1969 wedding reception and told the press: "Our family hasn't had Jewish blood for 900 years."

To escape that attitude, the young Von Furstenbergs moved to New York, where society hailed them as the couple of the year. But their marriage soon stumbled. Egon, like many aristocrats, saw marriage as an open institution. Diane, more middle-class, did not. She coped with her personal disappointment, as so many women do, by going to work.

That wasn't as easy as it seemed, either. The story of her career is one of struggle and will. "I believe nothing happens unless you can imagine it," Diane says. "I have to have images of where I want to go next; otherwise, I'm insecure. I knew all along what I wanted to be at 30. And that's exactly what I was at 30—really young, wearing little tight skirts, coming and going in and out of cars with drivers. It was absurd, if you think about it, but it fulfilled an image I had of myself. And it fulfilled a lot of frustration."

She started her business in 1970 with the dining room table as her office, $10,000 from pawning a ring, and a good idea. At the time, American women were wearing pants for breakfast, lunch and dinner. Diane thought it was time to put them back in dresses. "I hate pants," she says. "I like jeans for casual things, but I don't think pants work for something more elegant. I don't think it's very feminine, a woman in pants. You cross your legs, and nothing happens."

She had the dresses manufactured at a friend's factory in Italy, fought with U.S. Customs because the fabric-content labels were in Italian and peddled them herself from store to store. "People thought I was crazy," she says. "There I was with a big Vuitton suitcase and a huge stomach—I was pregnant. I remember one day I went to Best & Company and I couldn't find a taxi and it was raining and I was crying... But nothing could stop me."

When she finally persuaded Bloomingdale's to take her dresses, the factory was late in delivering the order. Diane dashed out to New York's Kennedy Airport, found her dresses "in the warehouse of Air India or Air Pakistan" and brought them to Bloomingdale's herself. "They had an ad in the paper for me that day," she recalls, "and I came running in, carrying in my arms all the missing dresses. There was the buyer waiting for me, and I looked at him, and everything fell all over the floor. But I felt I had a product. I can't tell you that the dresses flew out of the store. People didn't understand at first. But I knew that it made sense. And I was fed up working out of my dining room."

She decided to find an American backer and made appointments with the largest garment-center firms. None was interested, though one suggested she take a salesman as a partner, which she did. "I couldn't pay him," Diane explains, "so I gave him 25 percent of the company. He didn't understand the clothes either. So I made three shirts for him out of the jersey fabric. Then he understood it, and then he started to sell it. Lord & Taylor took this one little wrap top and skirt in a chicken-wire print. Oh, I hated him calling it a 'chicken-wire' print. I preferred 'trellis.' It was Nixon's resignation, and Julie Nixon wore this little chicken-wire wrap top and skirt. That sold very well."

Very well indeed. By the end of 1974, the year Nixon resigned, Diane Von Furstenberg had sold 300,000 of her V-neck, waist-slimming wrap dresses. In 1976, her business grossed $64 million, and she was on the cover of Newsweek—a superstar at 29.

One year later, American women had enough jersey dresses, and Diane found herself with $4 million in unsold stock. "It was like being on a roller coaster," she says. She reorganized her business, putting the emphasis on licensing rather than manufacturing, and introduced her first fragrance, Tatiana, named after her daughter. It was a giant success, and by 1981 she was back on top. Then she launched her second fragrance, Volcan d'Amour. That was a giant flop. The losses almost destroyed her business, but Diane persevered and in 1983 stunned the industry by selling her beauty business for a reported $22 million to Beecham (which later sold it to Revlon).

Meanwhile, her personal life also had its ups and downs. She separated from Egon in 1973. "We had different views of how to deal with our lives," she explains. "But we always cared about each other, and we still do." Then she had a lengthy and intense relationship with Barry Diller, then chairman of Paramount and now of Fox. It didn't work out. Nor did her five-year affair with a Brazilian primitive-art dealer, Paulo Fernandes, whom she had hoped to marry. "It's difficult for a man to have me as a girlfriend," she admits. "It can be overpowering. If you are a public person, can you also be a private person? That's a major issue. You think you can, but maybe it's not so easy for other people to deal with you because of that."

She is more hopeful about the future of her relationship with Alain Elkann. "There is every reason for it to last," she tells me. "We have a lot in common. We're both Jewish, both European... and I like his head. But sometimes it's difficult to be in another life with somebody else, because there are the children, and the friendship with your ex-husband... Sometimes I think we should never have divorced. That's why I say, if I were to marry again, I would do it with such a total commitment. I think marriage is very serious. People should think very seriously about whom they marry and whom they have children with, because later you realize children are really only half yours. But who am I to give advice? I need the advice."

"You know," she continues, "I was telling my son, Alexandre, the other day that when he was very little, we were walking down by the river, and I said to him, 'So what do you think is going to happen to our lives?' And he said, 'The snow will come, and it will be winter. And then the flowers will come, and it will be spring.' Life is just day after day, season after season, on and on. You just try to get through the day.

"I'll tell you another story, which my mother always tells. My mother had a very sheltered life. Her first experience out in the world was the train. That's what she remembers most: the train to Auschwitz. On the train, she got very, very close to an old woman who took care of her. For my mother, there was nobody who counted anymore in the world except that woman. They were on the train for days and days. People died. It was disgusting. They arrived and undressed and were shaved, and my mother was always with this woman.

"One day, they were put into a long line, and there was a soldier who said, 'You go right. You go left.' When the woman's turn came, he told her, 'You go right.' So my mother, without listening, just followed the woman. And the soldier let her. But there was an officer watching the whole thing, and he took my mother away from there and whipped her and said, 'You go left.' My mother says she has never hated anybody more than that man. Why did he have to pull her out? Why did he have to do it? And, of course, that man saved her. Because all the people who went right were going to the gas chamber. So the worse catastrophe can happen to you, and it turns out to be good for you. You never know what's good for you."

Once again, Tatiana interrupts us. "Mommy!" she shouts. "My friend Beate swallowed a quarter! It's all Alex's fault. He dared her to do it."

Diane Von Furstenberg—mother, lover, chairman of the eighth-largest business run by a woman in America—laughs a little as she calls the doctor. He tells her that the quarter too shall pass. She hangs up and calls out across the freshly mowed lawn to her daughter. "Tati, the doctor said not to worry. I asked him about your foot too, and he said it's okay for you to come to California with me. But you have to wear sneakers and not run around too much, okay?"

Then she looks at me and says, "Or should I go to Milan?"

SIMPLY DELICIOUS

Barbara Walz

The markets are now overflowing with the season's sweetest fruits, vegetables and seafood

Summer may be winding down, but fresh ingredients are now at their peak. Savor them with one last end-of-the-season splurge.

We love a scrumptious clambake, simply done with layers of seafood, vegetables and herbs, simmered in one pot. It couldn't be easier! Then a luscious casserole of fresh tomatoes, basil and eggplant. And last, a lovely lattice pie made of everyone's favorite fruit—raspberries.

LIBERTY

The art of

In fine bisque porcelain accented with 24 karat gold.

Liberty. Today she's more alive than ever before! Which is the reason The Franklin Mint commissioned one of today's great American sculptors, Stuart Mark Feldman, to recapture her beauty and vitality in a new work of art.

Graceful. Flowing. Free as the wind. This eloquent portrayal evokes the essence of liberty in your own life. Every line, every motion, every detail is classic and timeless...yet very much in the mood of today.

Crafted in the purity of fine bisque porcelain, Liberty possesses a soft ethereal quality but carries a message of compelling power. Enhanced by the torch of freedom held aloft...lit with a flame embellished in pure 24 karat gold.

But you will not find this imported sculpture in any art galleries or stores. Liberty is available exclusively from The Franklin Mint. To acquire it, please mail your reservation directly to The Franklin Mint, Franklin Center, Pennsylvania [illegible] September 30, 19[illegible]

Shown smaller than actual size of 10¼" high. Brass base included.

SILVER PALATE CLAMBAKE

1 dozen littleneck clams
1 pound steamer clams
1/2 cup cornmeal
1 large bunch fresh rosemary
1 large bunch thyme
1 large bunch tarragon (1/2 bunch whole tarragon and 1/2 bunch with stems discarded)
6 cloves of garlic, peeled and coarsely chopped
5 medium carrots, peeled and cut into julienne strips
3/4 cup coarsely chopped shallots
1/2 cup chopped Italian parsley
2 teaspoons coarse-grind black pepper
3 cups white wine
3 cups water
2 uncooked lobsters (1½ pounds each), cut into six pieces, claws cracked
4 small yellow summer squash, cut into 1/2-inch rounds
8 ripe plum tomatoes, cut in half lengthwise, seeded and cored
Grated zest of 1 orange
1/2 pound snow peas, cleaned
1 pound bay scallops
1 pound shrimp, peeled and deveined

1. In a large bowl, place littleneck clams and steamers. To remove any dirt, sprinkle with cornmeal, cover with water and soak 30 minutes. Drain, rinse with cold water and reserve.
2. In a large, deep stock pot at least 12 inches in diameter, place 1/2 bunch each of rosemary and thyme and the whole tarragon. Sprinkle with the garlic, carrots, 1/2 cup shallots, 1/4 cup parsley and 1 teaspoon pepper. Finally, add wine and water. Cover pot and heat to boiling; reduce heat and cook 10 minutes.
3. Remove pot from heat. Place a layer of littleneck clams over ingredients in pot. Cover with half the remaining thyme and rosemary. Then place a layer of lobster pieces over the herbs. Next, add a layer of yellow squash, then the tomato halves. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons parsley and orange zest. Cover and cook over low heat for 10 more minutes.
4. Remove pot from heat. Add, in layers, the steamer clams, the rest of the thyme and rosemary, the snow peas, scallops and shrimp. Gently, add in the tarragon leaves, the remaining teaspoon of pepper and remaining shallots.
5. Cover and cook over medium-high heat for 10 minutes longer. With a gentle motion, swirl pot to distribute the juices—try not to disturb the layering. Remove from heat. Let stand, covered, for 5 minutes more. Sprinkle with remaining parsley.

TOMATO, BASIL & EGGPLANT CASSEROLE

12 small Italian or baby eggplants
Coarse salt
6 large ripe tomatoes
4 large cloves of garlic, peeled and cut in slivers
2 bunches fresh basil (stems discarded)
1/2 cup olive oil
Coarse-grind black pepper
2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
1 cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese
6 tablespoons fresh thyme leaves or 2 tablespoons dried thyme
1/4 cup coarsely chopped parsley

1. Remove stems and cut eggplants in half lengthwise. Sprinkle with salt and let rest on paper towel for 30 minutes to release moisture. Pat dry.
2. Cut tomatoes in 1/2-inch slices. Sprinkle with salt and let rest on paper towel 30 minutes to release moisture. Pat dry.
3. Preheat oven to 425°F.
4. Make a 2-inch slit lengthwise on the cut side of each eggplant half. Into the slits insert garlic slivers and a basil leaf, pushing it in well.
5. Place prepared eggplants, skin-side down, on a cookie sheet. Drizzle with 1/4 cup olive oil and sprinkle evenly with black pepper. Cover tightly with aluminum foil and bake for 20 minutes. Remove eggplants from oven and reduce heat to 350°F.
6. Place 12 eggplant halves and half the tomato slices in decorative rows in the bottom of an ovenproof dish. Drizzle with 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Sprinkle with salt and pepper to taste. Cover evenly with 1/2 cup Parmesan cheese and half the thyme. Cover completely with a layer of whole basil leaves and drizzle with 2 tablespoons olive oil.
7. Repeat another complete layer as in Step 6, so that tomatoes cover eggplants, and vice versa. Sprinkle top with 2 tablespoons parsley.
8. Cover dish lightly with aluminum foil and bake for 1 hour. Remove foil and bake an additional 10 minutes, until eggplants and tomatoes are very tender. Garnish with remaining chopped parsley. Serve hot or at room temperature.

SPICED RASPBERRY PIE

This raspberry pie has just a glimmer of cinnamon and spices, making it a candidate for the season's best. To fully indulge, we serve it still warm, topped with vanilla ice cream.

Pastry

5½ tablespoons unsalted butter, cut into small pieces
3 tablespoons vegetable shortening
1½ cups all-purpose unbleached flour
2 teaspoons granulated sugar
1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon grated orange zest
1/4 cup ice water

1. Chill butter and vegetable shortening.
2. In a bowl, combine flour, sugar, cinnamon, salt and orange zest.
3. Cut chilled butter and shortening into dry ingredients with two knives or a pastry blender, until mixture resembles coarse meal. Add ice water, 1 tablespoon at a time, until mixture can be gathered into a ball. Wrap in wax paper and chill for 2 hours.

Raspberry Filling

4 cups fresh raspberries, cleaned
1 cup granulated sugar
1/3 cup Framboise (eau de vie) or a raspberry liqueur
4 tablespoons cornstarch
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Pinch of salt
1 egg yolk
1 teaspoon milk

1. Preheat oven to 425°F.
2. In a bowl, gently combine raspberries with sugar.
3. In a separate small bowl, whisk Framboise (or raspberry liqueur) with cornstarch until smooth.
4. Gently stir Framboise mixture, lemon juice and salt into berries
5. On a lightly floured board, roll out chilled pastry. Line a 9-inch Pyrex pie plate with pastry, leaving a 1-inch overhang. Gather excess pastry, roll again and cut into 1/2-inch-wide lattice strips; reserve.
6. Carefully spoon raspberry mixture into pie shell. Arrange lattice strips over mixture and crimp edge decoratively.
7. In a small bowl, combine egg yolk with milk. Carefully brush mixture over lattice.
8. Place pie on a cookie sheet to catch any drippings and bake on upper rack of oven at 425°F for 15 minutes. Reduce heat to 350°F, place pie on lower rack of oven and cook an additional 35 to 40 minutes, until crust is golden and raspberries are bubbling. Serve warm or at room temperature.

Rehab physicians are successfully treating the severely disabled

WHEN OTHER DOCTORS FAIL

From strokes and arthritis to chronic back problems—people can be helped

BY DONALD ROBINSON

THOUSANDS OF disabled people who feared that they were condemned to an existence of endless pain and stagnation are finding new hope through a remarkable medical specialty called physical medicine and rehabilitation—"rehab" for short.

"Rehab" doctors take over where other specialists leave off. They help people surmount the long-term effects of strokes, arthritis, musculoskeletal diseases, amputations, spinal-cord injuries and other kinds of trauma.

The official name for rehab doctors is physiatrists (not to be confused with psychiatrists). Most of them practice in large hospitals. They use a variety of ingenious techniques—electronic devices, muscle-relaxant medications, physical therapy, occupational therapy and psychotherapy, among others—to help handicapped patients achieve as much as possible.

At times, the results seem miraculous. For example, seven years ago, James Fuchs, the head of a corporate consulting agency in New York City, was so crippled by a pinched nerve in his back that he couldn't get out of bed. "The pain was excruciating," he says. It was especially devastating to Fuchs because he had been a champion athlete. He won a medal in the shot put at the 1948 Olympics, broke the world shot-put record at Oslo in 1949 and won another medal for the U.S. at the 1952 Olympics.

But nothing eased his agonizing pain until he went to see Dr. Willibald Nagler, director of rehabilitation medicine at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center in New York City. Dr. Nagler gave him a series of saline injections, an intensive course of physical therapy at the hospital and a set of rigorous exercises to do at home. Inside of three weeks, Fuchs was back at work full-time. Now 59, he plays squash, golf and tennis regularly.

"Life's worth living again," he declares. "Let me tell you, for a long time it wasn't."

Recently, investigators for the Medical College of Wisconsin and the Rand Corp. made a careful study of 7623 patients of various ages who had received rehab treatment for major strokes, fractured hips and other crippling conditions at 100 different hospitals throughout the country. All had been in bad shape. The investigators found that, as a result of rehabilitation, 68 percent of these patients had made "significant improvement in their functional status"—in other words, they could live much more normally. Close to 75 percent were able to go straight home after they left the hospital. Usually, this type of patient must go first to a nursing home for many more months of care.

Another survey, of 500 people with disabling back conditions, found that rehab doctors were far more effective in treating bad backs over a lengthy period of time than were either orthopedists or chiropractors.

Experts say that rehab doctors are particularly helpful to people who suffer from long-standing chronic pain.

"It's really amazing what good physiatrists can do," says Brent England, director of rehabilitation activities for the American Hospital Association (AHA). "They constantly take pain-ridden patients that other specialists have given up on and bring them lasting relief."

The need for rehabilitation medicine is intense. The National Rehabilitation Hospital in Washington, D.C., says one in every seven Americans is disabled. That adds up to 34 million disabled people.

It's worse with older people: According to the Census Bureau, one in every four Americans between 55 and 64 is seriously disabled. "At some point in their lives," England notes, "70 percent of all Americans will be so disabled that they cannot mount a flight of stairs."

The cost to society of caring for all these disabled people is enormous. Last year, Medicaid alone paid out more than $32 billion in benefits to disabled persons.

Fortunately, rehab can help considerably to cut these costs. The savings reach $13,000 a year, for example, whenever rehabilitation makes it possible for one victim of a stroke to live at home instead of in an institution.

Rehab is one of the youngest and least-known specialties in American medicine. It was developed in the 1930s and '40s, when polio epidemics left thousands of young people paralyzed. World War II, with its great number of maimed GIs, added impetus to the field's growth. The American Medical Association officially recognized physical medicine and rehabilitation as a specialty in 1947.

It's a tough specialty to qualify for. To become a physiatrist, a doctor must complete a four-year residency at an accredited hospital. He or she must have knowledge of orthopedics, neurosurgery, neurology, rheumatology and internal medicine, plus all aspects of rehab medicine.

Above all, Dr. Nagler declares, a physiatrist must be a top-notch psychologist. "You have to motivate your patients," he says. "That is the biggest challenge a physiatrist faces. You have to take some poor chap who cracked up horribly in a motorcycle accident—who has lost the use of his legs forever—and convince him that he can still have a good life if only he tries. You can't just give a disabled person a pill and expect him to improve. He's got to work at it, and you have to persuade him to do it."

Rehab is not interested in "a quick fix," Nagler adds. "Most medical specialties look for a speedy cure for some sick patient. Not physiatrists. We expect to spend a long time with our patients—many months, ordinarily. We learn everything we can about them—their wives, their children, their professions, their goals—so we can help them to attain a lifestyle they want and are truly suited for."

I saw what a rehab team at the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago did for 19-year-old Claudia Martinez, a college student from Hammond, Ind., who had been thrown from a horse. The fall left her partly paralyzed. She couldn't move her right arm or leg. She couldn't talk. She had lost her memory. She had been treated first at the University of Iowa Medical Center in Iowa City. Then she was transferred to the institute for rehabilitation.

"Claudia was disoriented and very agitated," says Dr. Christina Marciniak, the physiatrist in charge of her case. "She had to be fed through her nose, and she hated it. Her loss of memory bothered her inordinately. She was one of the most disheartened girls I ever saw."

The rehab team members spent four to five hours a day with Claudia. They taught her exercises, and gradually she won back the use of her arm. Step by step, they made her walk. A speech pathologist patiently instructed her how to employ words again. They all prodded her memory. They kept asking her name, her birthday, her school. They made her strain to remember.

"It was slow, but eventually we got her to care, to give a damn," says Dr. Henry B. Betts, medical director of the institute. "From then on, her progress was steady."

The day I talked with Claudia, her memory was excellent. She got up from her wheelchair and walked down the corridor for me to see. "Tomorrow, I'm going to ride a horse again," Claudia said, "so I won't have any more fears."

Also at the institute, I met Hendricks Tenbruin, 78, who'd had a leg amputated because of a clot in a blood vessel. Tenbruin had been a mechanic in the pressroom of a big Chicago daily newspaper for 40 years. Now he feared that he might have to give up his job. But the institute's therapists assured him that he didn't have to retire. They fitted him with an artificial limb and painstakingly schooled him in its use. They gave him occupational therapy too, to bolster his self-confidence. They even taught him how to drive an automobile using an artificial leg.

Rehabilitation treatment is usually a team effort. Dr. Betts explains the team approach at the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago: "A physiatrist is captain of the team. He prescribes and coordinates the program for each patient. In addition, the patient has at least seven other experts working with him—a physical therapist, an occupational therapist, a respiratory therapist, a speech pathologist, a recreational therapist, a social worker and a psychologist. They're all concerned with the emotional well-being as well as the physical health of the patient. In rehab, you treat the whole system."

Rehab treatment can sometimes save people from surgery—especially surgery for slipped disks and other back problems. Dr. Ernest W. Johnson, chairman of the department of physical medicine at Ohio State University, says, "We can very often strengthen a patient's muscles so much with physical therapy and other rehabilitation techniques that it eliminates the need for most back surgery."

Dr. Johnson told me about a 45-year-old church organist who lifted a heavy package from her car and immediately felt searing pains in her back and legs. The pains became unbearable, and her husband brought her into the emergency room at Ohio State University Hospital in Columbus. Surgeons wanted to operate, but when Dr. Johnson examined the woman, he said, "It's absurd. You shouldn't be operated on at all." He gave her a course of physical therapy, and she was back in her church playing the organ four weeks later.

"Any time some doctors say that you must have back surgery, get a second opinion," Johnson urges. "Get it from a physiatrist, not a surgeon. Surgeons always want to operate."

Rehab doctors also can help tiny babies born with congenital defects like spina bifida, a hole in their spines that enfeebles them. The rehab treatment helps the babies grow more normally. At the other end of the scale, rehab helps keep old people mobile despite osteoporosis and similar musculoskeletal diseases.

The tragedy is this: The majority of people—of all ages—who need rehabilitation today don't receive it. They can't get it. We don't have enough rehabilitation facilities or trained physiatrists to take care of them.

In the entire U.S., only 73 hospitals are devoted exclusively to rehabilitation. In fact, only 20,600 of the one million beds in the nation's 6000 acute-care hospitals are assigned to rehabilitation patients. Scarcely one hospital in 10 has a full-fledged rehabilitation program.

At last count, the total number of board-certified physiatrists in the U.S. came to 2748. The American Hospital Association says we can use at least twice as many.

We're not likely to get them soon. Despite the presence of 34 million disabled Americans, many medical schools still do not teach rehabilitation medicine. According to a recent report in the Journal of the American Medical Association, less than 50 percent of medical students get any instruction in rehabilitation medicine during their four years in medical school.

Why?

"The dean and the curriculum committee do not perceive the need," states Dr. Robert H. Meier of the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center in Denver.

The experts point to a more shocking reason yet for the neglect of rehab: medical politics. They say that other medical specialties are afraid of competition. "There is a reluctance on the part of the medical staff to give up the turf," declares Dr. John Melvin, chairman of the department of physical medicine and rehabilitation at the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee.

"Millions of disabled people are suffering unnecessarily today because of this type of shortsighted thinking," says Brent England of the American Hospital Association.

When should you consider physiatric care? Dr. Willibald Nagler, who treated President Kennedy's back problem, advises that a physiatrist should always be consulted in these situations:

- When a patient is admitted to a hospital because of an accident or stroke. Immediate consultation with a physiatrist could prevent dangerous complications and in the long run might mean the difference between a normal life and permanent disability.
- When a person suffers from chronic lower-back pain or severe arthritis. It is likely that he could benefit from a physiatrist's care. Always get a second opinion from a physiatrist before agreeing to surgery for these conditions.
- When anyone is in chronic, debilitating pain. The chances are good that a physiatrist can help.

To request a list of board-certified physiatrists in your state, write to Ike Mayeda, Executive Director, American Academy of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation, Dept. P, 122 S. Michigan Ave., Suite 1300, Chicago, Ill. 60603-6107.

Diana and Charles walk down the aisle in London's St. Paul's Cathedral: Six years and two children later, say the "royal watchers," the bloom is off the marital rose

Tensions are mounting in the once-storybook marriage of Charles, Prince of Wales, heir to the British throne, and his wife, Diana, Princess of Wales. That's the word from the overseas tabloids, gossipists and so-called "royal watchers."

Not only is the bloom off their marital rose, goes the gossip, but the 12-year age difference between Charles, 38, and Diana, 26, is showing, and the hiatus in their interests is expanding.

Charles is intelligent, introspective, polo-playing, literary and pensive. He likes to go off on pilgrimages to Africa, Italy and the Hebrides Islands of Scotland. Princess Di, on the other hand, prefers rock concerts, dancing in nightspots and keeping abreast, if not ahead, of the latest in fashion. Having borne two sons, William and Harry, in six years of marriage, she seems determined to be much more than a dutiful breeder of royal offspring. She likes her fun and is not above dancing and chatting with men other than her husband. The rumor-runners already have coupled her with Philip Dunne, a handsome bachelor and banker, and paired Charles, by way of retaliation, with an Italian Lolita-type named Fiammeta Frescobaldi.

One basic trouble with the Charles-Di marriage, according to the London journalists who have covered it, is that the princess is relatively undereducated. Child of a broken home, she attended a series of private grammar schools, where her grades were average. As a young girl, she wanted to become a classical ballet dancer, but she grew too tall. At 16, she left West Heath, a British boarding school, and enrolled at the Institut Alpin Videmanette, a Swiss finishing school near Gstaad.

After two months there, she quit, returned to London and obtained a job as a nanny, looking after the 2-year-old son of an American couple. Her parents later bought her an apartment on Brompton Road, and she got a full-time position in a kindergarten. That was pretty much the sum of her academic and job experience when she and Charles were wed with monumental public approval in St. Paul's Cathedral on July 29, 1981. By then, Diana was considered a pleasant, attractive and well-mannered young woman, but surely no "brain."

As for Prince Charles, he was so supersensitive as a lad that his governess, Catherine Peebles, remembered: "If you raised your voice to him, he would draw back into his shell, and for a time you would be able to do nothing with him." Fortunately, his parents opposed the royal tradition of solitary education for the heir to the throne and enrolled Charles in schools where he would have something in common with his future subjects. He attended Hill House, a day school not far from Buckingham Palace, followed by Cheam, Gordonstoun, Geelong and Trinity College at Cambridge. He loathed math but became the first future British king to be educated outside his home and the first to win a university degree. Then he pulled six years in the navy, emerging as an accomplished sailor and flier.

Over the years, Charles has developed into a witty, versatile, sophisticated man with a deep hunger for some meaningful position in life. He's profoundly interested, for example, in improving the worst slums of London and Britain's other major cities. Tradition, however, prevents his mother from appointing Charles to a position racked with potential political controversy. British monarchs must remain untouched by politics, however remote.

As a result, Charles spends many of his days in needless protocol—laying foundation stones, opening hospitals, making endless speeches. All this leads to frustration. The prince is only 38. The queen is 61. Reportedly she does not believe in abdication. She already has reigned for 35 years and might be good for 20 more—so that when Charles III comes to the throne, he may be 58. By then, he will have spent the best and brightest of his years. But doing what? Playing polo? Begetting more children? Or, like Edward VII, his great-great-grandfather—whose name was linked with Sarah Bernhardt, Lily Langtry, Mrs. George Keppel and Mrs. Agnes Keyser—engaging in sexual hanky-panky?

The time to put Prince Charles to work is now. A worthy job surely would bolster his marriage—which, if we are to believe the British press, seems to be slipping.

CALL-IN SHOW ANSWERS PARENTS' QUESTIONS

Bobbi Renz (c) with child-care experts Adele Faber (l) and Elaine Mazlish

Once radio producer Bobbi Renz had her own two kids, it struck her that "there was no regular call-in program where parents could share info and ask an expert's advice." The Children's Journal, begun last November on National Public Radio and already on the air weekly in 25 cities, is Renz's response. On each show, an expert joins her in talking with listeners about one subject in depth—like discipline, children's sports or finding good child care. Consult your public radio station for the time—or suggest it carry the show.

Insecurity Hampers Women's Sexuality

The single factor that is most responsible for sexual inhibitions in today's women—according to the results of an intensive survey of 26,000 women in the September Redbook—is not fear of AIDS, or religious guilt or fear of pregnancy, but insecurity about physical appearance. Fully 41 percent of the women surveyed said that their feelings of insecurity about their looks prevent them from freely expressing their sexuality.

BOOKS

The Anne Frank Story in a New Perspective

Anne Frank, the Dutch girl who died in a Nazi concentration camp after years of hiding, remains an eternal symbol of the suffering of millions in World War II. Anne Frank Remembered, by Miep Gies (Simon & Schuster, $17.95), is a poignant memoir by the brave woman who helped hide the Jewish child and her family during the German occupation of Holland.

It recalls, as few books do, the grim realities of everyday life under Nazi sway, as well as the cheerfulness and courage of the little family struggling to stay alive until the horror ended. And it is a reminder that, despite the recent crackdown on some war criminals, the identity of those who betrayed Anne and her family to the Nazis—for a reward of 60 guilders—has never been discovered.

ASK MARILYN

BY MARILYN VOS SAVANT

Is it better to be lucky or to be skillful?

—Marie Torgesen, Magnolia, Tex.

Skillful, because skill is always there, whereas luck can't be depended upon. I would much rather be operated upon by a surgeon who is skillful than one who is lucky.

If you have a question for Marilyn vos Savant, who is listed in the "Guinness Book of World Records" under "Highest IQ," send it to: "Ask Marilyn," PARADE, 750 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017. Because of volume of mail, personal replies are not possible.

WANT TO BREAK THE DRY SKIN HABIT?

STOP USING YOUR LOTION.

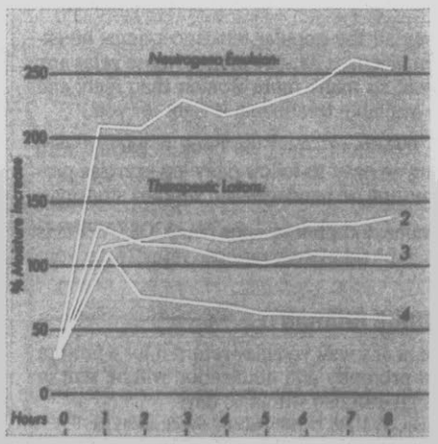
Aren't you tired of watching it happen... despite faithful lotioning, two or three times a day, dry skin still makes a comeback. Here's the surprising news... all those applications of lotion aren't doing much of anything to solve your dry skin problem. Why? Because many lotions dry out after two or three hours. Too soon for your skin's moisture barrier to repair itself. So your skin goes right back to being just as dry as before—sometimes worse!

What's the answer? You may need to stop using your lotion and try something that works differently.

Now there's a formula that shelters your skin in a moist environment long enough to see and feel real improvement. It's Neutrogena® Norwegian Formula® Emulsion. So much richer than a lotion... with all the staying power of a cream.

You can feel the surge of moisture as this silky fluid glides on... flooding thirsty skin with up to 250% more moisture. It feels so much different from your lotion... because it is!

Then for eight long, soft hours—or more!—Emulsion helps your skin hold onto all the moisture it needs to prevent premature dryout. In fact, tests show that even after eight hours, the skin's moisture level is almost as high as when you first apply!



Moisturization Efficiency: Just one application of Neutrogena Emulsion (Line 1) increased the skin's moisture level by 250% and maintained almost as high a level for at least 8 hours. Even leading therapeutic lotions (Lines 2,3,4) moisturized at much lower levels, the best increasing only slightly over time.—from Neutrogena Skin Care Institute. Report on file.

Neutrogena Emulsion goes far beyond the moisturizing ability of leading therapeutic lotions. And you have all the quick-and-easy convenience of a pump bottle. When you're away from home for longer than eight hours, the pump on Neutrogena Emulsion even locks securely for tidy traveling.

Now your hands and skin stay softer... smoother ...healthier... hours longer. Because Neutrogena Emulsion breaks the dry skin habit once and for all.

Neutrogena Emulsion is sold with a satisfaction-or-your-money-back guarantee. Available scented or unscented at better drug stores and cosmetic counters.

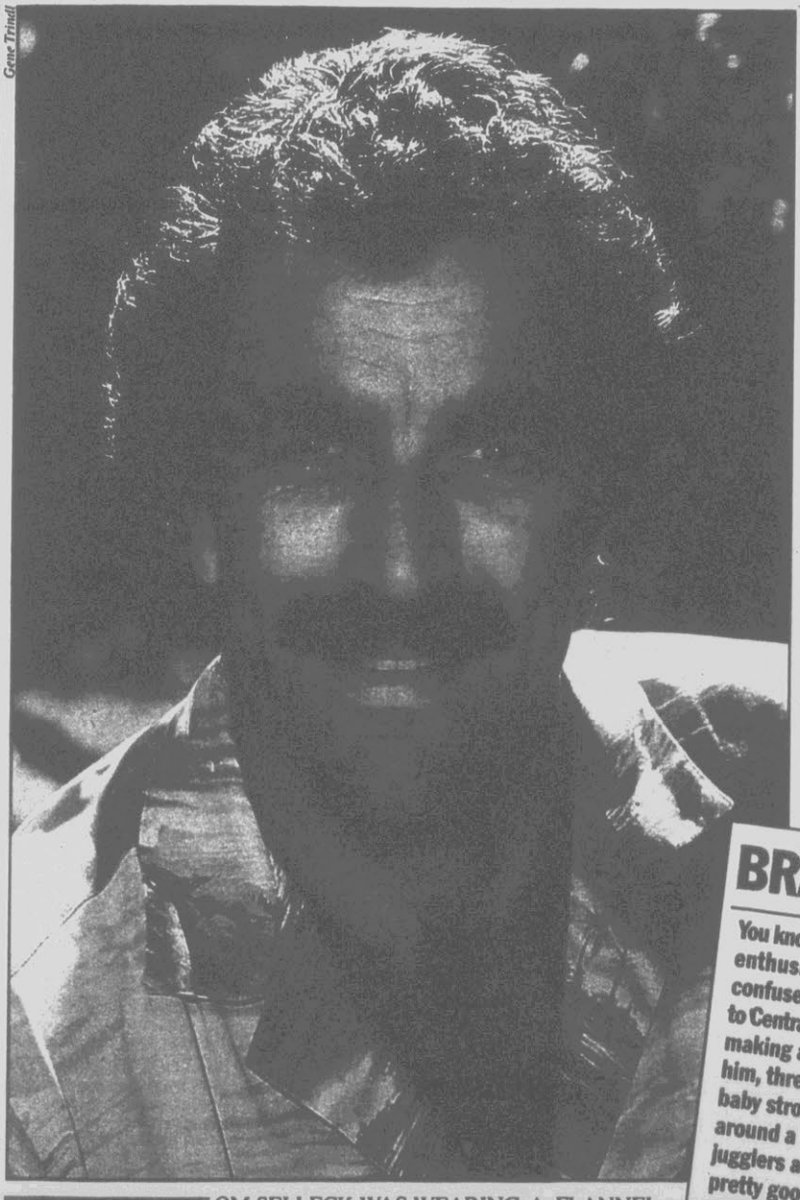
IN STEP WITH:

BY JAMES BRADY

Tom Selleck



Gene Trindl

Tom is in Hawaii right now, filming Magnum. And he, Ted Danson and Steve Guttenberg will be starring in movie theaters this Christmas.

TOM SELLECK WAS WEARING A FLANNEL shirt, a loose tie, a corduroy jacket and a hard hat. We were standing in a light drizzle in front of a Manhattan skyscraper construction site, talking about babies. "You hold a doll during rehearsal while you walk through the scene," he said, "and then they hand you the real baby, and it's another thing entirely. Babies don't do what you expect."

Selleck is a great big guy with a year-round tan, a handsome rascal with two deeply etched vertical lines in his face. He was in New York this summer making a movie with Ted Danson and Steve Guttenberg. The three play wealthy, pleasure-seeking bachelors suddenly confronted with responsibility when a 6-month-old baby girl is abandoned on their doorstep. The film is called Three Men and a Baby, and for a couple of days I hung around, grabbing Selleck in between takes.

You can fool reporters like me. You can fool the camera. But you can't fool kids. Even the babies (there were two of them, identical twins from Canada) started gooing and kicking their feet when Ted or Steve or Tom picked them up. And, in a scene in Central Park over by the bronze statue of Alice sitting on a toadstool, little boys and a 3-year-old girl with blond pigtails told Selleck farfetched stories and poked him in the belly and giggled as he sternly admonished them by shaking his finger. It was obvious that, to these kids, Selleck wasn't a big actor or Magnum, P.I., but just a nice guy they could play with.

Tom was finishing the film that weekend, then going to Washington for a day, then back to the Coast. "I'm going to sleep for a week," he said. "Then we start doing Magnum again. I'm producing now too." Are movies tougher than television? "No, there's nothing tougher than a weekly series," he said. "The acting is the same. But on Magnum we do eight or nine pages [of script] a day. Here [on the movie] we do two pages."

I got Tom talking about the beginning. "I was at USC playing basketball and studying business," he recalled. "A casting guy sent me to a commercial casting call. I did my first ad. Then I started acting classes and was signed by a studio for two years. I was making $60 a week. I had a wife and a child by then, so I had to make some money. My wife was a model, and when she showed her book around, someone said, 'Who's the guy with you?' So I got more modeling work. It's very narrow, being a male model. You're either an escort or you're 'Vic Virile.'"

"People think modeling got me here," he continued. "But I'd been studying and acting in pilots no one ever saw and was under contract for eight years."

Tom talked about Magnum. "Kids watch it, so you don't want to lead them wrong," he said. "So occasionally I get a speeding ticket in a Ferrari. I do something wrong and get caught. But you can't be a perfect, one-dimensional role model. If you are, you might as well be on [TV] Saturday mornings."

BORN: Jan. 29, 1945, in Detroit.
PERSONAL: Married to Jacquelyn Ray, 1970-82.
TV: Magnum, P.I. series, 1980-; guest appearances include The Rockford Files, Bracken's World.
TV MOVIES: Include The Movie Murderer, 1970; A Case of Rape, 1974; Returning Home, 1975; Most Wanted, 1976; The Gypsy Warriors, 1978; The Sacketts, 1979; Divorce Wars: A Love Story, 1981; Shadow Riders, 1982.

BRADY'S BITS

You know how I am with movie stars: enthusiastic and often a bit confused. The first day I went over to Central Park to see Tom Selleck making a movie and to talk with him, three guys were wheeling a baby stroller with a life-size doll around a lot of little kids and jugglers and nannies. Tom looked pretty good—a big, handsome guy with a mustache. I gave him a big wave, and he gave me a salute. Then, when the rehearsal was over, the real Selleck, in khaki shorts, came on the set. I'd been waving madly at his stand-in and stuntman. Just to keep the record straight, the stand-in is named John Nordlum, and he also works with Tom on Magnum. Maybe someday he'll be famous too.

Ed Asner Is Back In 'The Bronx Zoo'

By Evan Levine

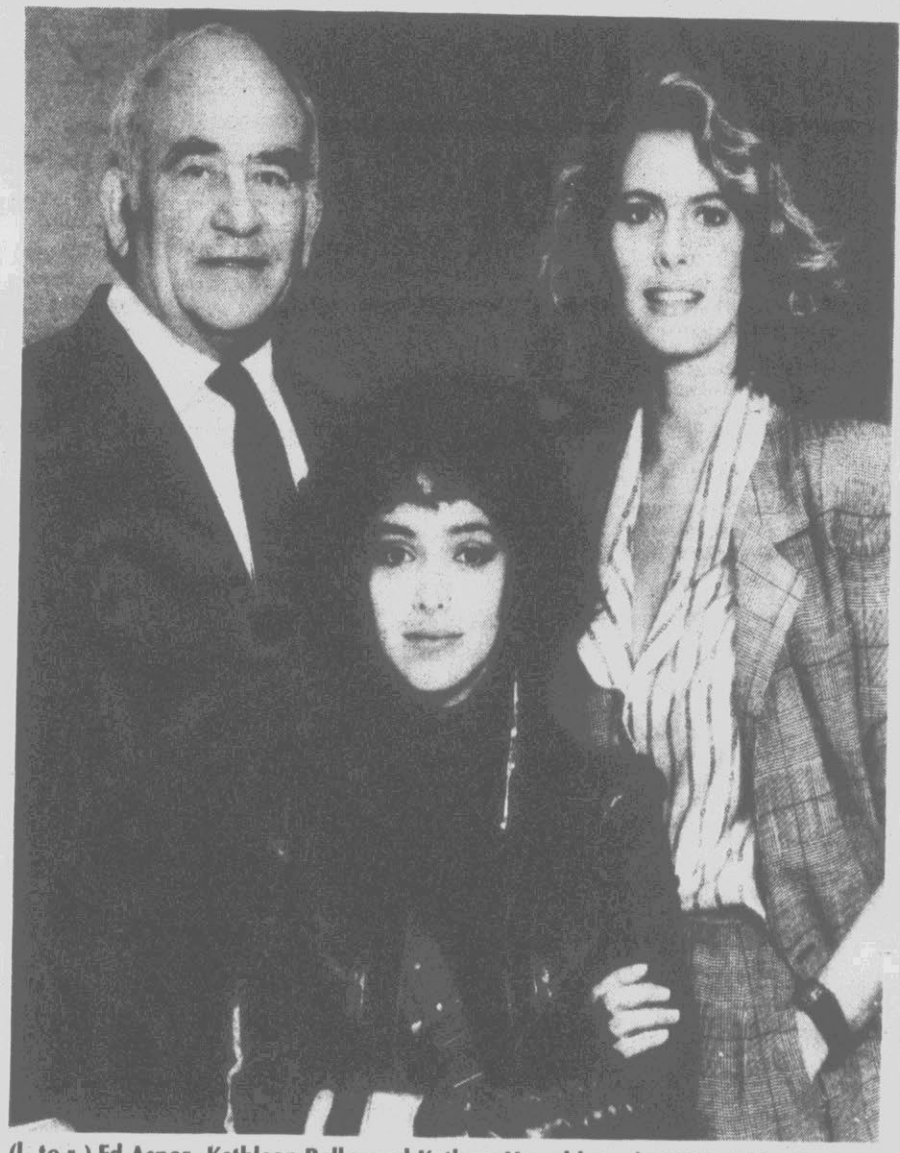
Ed Asner is used to controversy. After his stint on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" as the gruff Lou Grant, he parlayed that role into the acclaimed series of the same name. When the show was canceled in 1982, it was shrouded in a haze of political intrigue and allegations. Asner, then president of the Screen Actors Guild, had spoken out on issues such as apartheid and aid to El Salvador, and it was alleged he had become too hot for CBS to handle. I't still unclear whether CBS bowed to pressure from conservative groups, or simpley canceled the show because the ratings were down, as they claimed. Now, as a high-school principal on NBC's "Bronx Zoo," Asner is feeling the heat again. Last spring, when "The Bronx Zoo" debuted, objections were raised over the title of the show. Critics thought it was offensive to the community and the Bronx school system.

"In the beginning, I had doubts about the name," Asner admits. "But that was prompted by the paranoia of the people who lived in the Bronx. Once we reassured them that we didn't mean any harm, everything was OK. Anything after that was just publicity."

Asner says he doesn't regret any of the political stands he took. "I just have to be more careful now," he claims. "There are people waiting out there to red-bait me, but I'm not going to stop supporting causes I believe in. I made a lot of mistakes, but I learned from them."

The best way to raise support for various causes, Asner believes, is through attracting media attention. "It's good to give money, but it's also important for me to act as a conduit and get information in the press. But the most important thing," he says, "is to be well-informed about whatever it is I'm talking about, so I don't make a fool out of myself."

Asner has more time to give to causes these days. "Working on 'The Bronx Zoo' is much easier than 'Lou Grant,'" he says. "I felt like I was carrying a ton of bricks when I was doing that. It was really an unsurmountable load — to take a comedy character and turn him into the lead character of a primarily dramatic show. There was a lot of angst the whole time."



(l. to r.) Ed Asner, Kathleen Beller and Kathryn Harrold star in NBC's "The Bronx Zoo," the series about an urban high school that is airing in reruns on Wednesdays. It will return as one of the network's "designated hitters" in the fall.

With an emsemble show, Asner feels he can relax. "It's a great cast," he says. "And there are opportunities to talk about important issues, like teenage birth control."

But that doesn't mean that he is steering clear of controversy.

"Oh, no," he says. "It keeps things from getting boring."

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: Who is Sigourney Weaver? How old is she? Is she married? — LORRAINE M. MARTIN, SANTA ROSA, CALIF.

Weaver is one of today's hottest actors. She was born Susan Weaver on Oct. 8, 1949, in New York City and is the daughter of former NBC president Sylvester "Pat" Weaver, the man who launched both "The Tonight Show" and "Today." Her mother is British stage actress Elizabeth Inglis. Susan changed her name to Sigourney while still a teenager attending the Stanton Boarding School near San Francisco, adopting the name from F. Scott Fitzgerald's "The Great Gatsby." Weaver was educated at both Stanford University and the Yale Drama School and made her film debut in "Alien" (1979). In 1984, she made her Broadway debut in "Hurlyburly," for which she received a Tony nomination. That same year, she married director Jim Simpson. Weaver, the star of such box-office bonanzas as "Ghostbusters" (1984) and "Aliens" (1986), will star next in the big-screen saga of slain zoologist Diane Fossey.

Dear Michele: Will Kirk Cameron return to "Growing Pains" next season? Has he been in any films? — MARY E. KNAPP, DURHAM, N.C.

Sixteen-year-old Cameron returns as Mike Seaver this fall, and with a much heftier bank account, too! The hot, young "Growing Pains" star is cashing in on his teen-hunk status by requesting a substantial pay hike. The producers have reportedly agreed to give Cameron a $50,000 per episode contract, the same financial bracket as series star Alan Thicke. Cameron has appeared in the feature film "Best of Times" (1986), with Kurt Russell and Robin Williams, and is now filming "Like Father, Like Son," a comedy co-starring Dudley Moore set for Christmas release.

Dear Michele: Was it Stevie Wonder or Lou Rawls who was accused of stealing a song from another writer and using it? — GLENDA ARNOLD, LEBANON, PENN.

It was Stevie Wonder whom songwriters Lee Garrett and Lloyd Chiate slapped with a plagiarism suit in October 1985. Garrett, a longtime pal of Wonder's and co-author of Wonder's 1970 hit,"Signed, Sealed, Delivered," filed the infringement over "I Just Called to Say I Love You." Garrett claimed it may have been lifted from a song he wrote called "I Just Called to Say." On May 6, 1986, Garrett and Chiate rescinded their complaint. They asked to have the U.S. District Court dismiss the case after they saw evidence that Wonder wrote the song a year earlier. The case was tossed out of Federal Court in August 1986.

Please address questions to Michele Will Tell, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 2315, Grand Central Station, New York, NY 10163. Because of the volume of mail received, personal replies cannot be sent.

TV Chatter

Truth may sometimes be stranger than fiction, but the creation of a TV sitcom can be even stranger. Michael Leeson, co-creator of "The Cosby Show," swears this is a true story about the origin of ABC's "I Married Dora," a new sitcom concerning a woman from El Salvador (Elizabeth Pena) who works as a maid for a widowed architect (Daniel Hugh Kelly) and his two children. When the immigration department threatens to deport her, Dora's boss gallantly offers to marry her so she can remain in this country. There would be no sex, just a name on the dotted line. Of course, as the episodes roll by, Dora and her boss will gradually fall in love — sooner if the ratings aren't good. It turns out that "Dora" 's concept grew out of a conversation Leeson once had with his wife. Mrs. Leeson was speculating what her husband would do if she passed away before he did. One solution that would make her happy was to have her husband marry the family maid. Leeson replied, "That's the most ridiculous thing I ever heard... let's put it on TV." The name of the Leesons' real-life maid? You guessed it: Dora.

Poor Ron Perlman! He's a classically trained actor who has spoken Shakespeare's graceful iambs and Chekhov's elliptical phrases on stage, but his two big film roles have had him grunting and looking like something the stegosaurus dragged in. As a caveman in "Quest for Fire," Perlman had an overbite the size of Rhode Island with a protruding forehead to match. In "Name of the Rose," heplayed a deformed medieval monk who talked as though he had mashed potatoes in his mouth. Now Perlman finally has a modern urban role in a new CBS series, but the actor still finds himself playing ugly. In "Beauty and the beast," guess who gets to play the Beast? Actually, the beast has a name: Vincent. He was born so hideously deformed his parents abandoned him at birth. Vincent is raised by a philosopher (Roy Dotrice) who has created a Utopian society underneath the New York subways. Linda Hamilton ("The Terminator") is the Beauty whose life Vincent saves. But Perlman, who has a master's degree in theater, insists that Vincent is not a monster. "He's a beast. I don't want to get semantic, but 'monster' implies monstrous behavior. 'Beast' implies a form of animal-tinged life. Vincent is absolutely the most noble, heroic character I've ever played. He's brilliant. His soul has more depth than you're likely to find on one of the nighttime cop shows."

On "Family Ties" this fall Alex Keaton (Michael J. Fox) will get a new girlfriend named Lauren. She is played by Courtney Cox, a former Ford model who may be best known for her appearance in Bruce Springsteen's video of "Dancing in the Dark." She was also a cast member of the short-lived 1983 series "Misfits of Science." Cox is an inch taller than the 5-foot-4 Fox, but she says there are no plans to mine comedy from the disparity in their heights. But life won't be completely rosy. "You'll see a lot of conflict in our relationship," Cox says. "Alex is an economics major, and I'm a psychology major, so we disagree fundamentally on a lot of things." Cox was majoring in architecture at Vernon College in Birmingham, Ala., when she decided to become a model to defray the high cost of college tuition. "I knew I'd never be big because I'm so small," the 5-foot-5 actress says. When she auditioned for "Family Ties," her future co-star read opposite her. "Michael was great in the audition. It was very scary joining a cast that had been together for five years. But Michael made me feel very comfortable. It's true that his public image of being a nice guy is the way he really is."

"All My Children" 's Susan Lucci is half-Italian and half-Swedish, but she feels she takes after her Swedish mother more than her Italian father. "I tend to be more reserved, but I don't think my husband would agree. During an argument I once dumped a plate of cold cuts on his head."

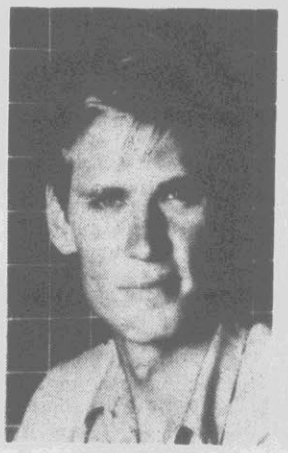
SOAP OPERA WEEK

'GH' star's interests include fixing old cars

By Kimberly Redmond

I'm fascinated by David Wallace, the handsome hunk who portrays Tom Hardy on "General Hospital." I'd like as much information as possible about him. – N.S., St. Augustine, Fla.



David Wallace

Wallace was born in Florida, but was raised in Long Beach, Calif. After high school, he worked in his father's auto shop, which eventually led to his interest in buying, fixing and re-selling cars. Wallace attended charm class, which brought out his interest in an acting career. He then enrolled in drama courses at Long Beach City College.

Wallace's first feature-film role was in "Money to Burn." He later appeared in such films as "Mortuary," "The Babysitter" and "Miracle on Ice." On television, Wallace has had guest-starring roles on "Facts of Life," "Diff'rent Strokes," "Hart to Hart" and "Sheriff Lobo." In 1985, he accepted his first soap-opera role as Tod Chandler on "Days of Our Lives." He stayed with the show for a year.

I've been watching "Days of Our Lives" for many years, but I must have missed the episode in which Anna DiMera, played by Leann Hunley, was written out of the show. Can you tell me what happened to Anna? – H.C., Leonardtown, Md.

Leann Hunley

CINDY SAYS

By Cindy Adams

Sidney Sheldon's current best seller, "Windmills of the Gods," has been filming in Wilmington, N.C. The company includes Jaclyn Smith, Robert Wagner, Ian McKellan, Michael Moriarty, Deborah Raffin. Producer Michael Viner swears "there's absolutely no temperament. Jackie and R.J. (Wagner) have taken homes on the ocean. Everyone gets along great." That's nice for Michael, but boring for me.

Elizabeth Taylor

Elizabeth Taylor Hilton Wilding Todd Fisher Burton Burton Warner is pining for her fifth and sixth husband. She still loves Richard Burton. In "Elizabeth Takes Off," which Putnam publishes in the fall, she says she'd give it all up, that she'd gladly suffer the bad old days once more, that she'd even put 50 pounds back on if only she could have Richard in her life again. Whenever the New York editors met with Taylor for discussions, they flew cross-country. Said one: "Although it meant time and effort for our entire group, it made more sense and was cheaper for us to schlep there than to have Elizabeth come here."

Stacy Keach

Stacy Keach was filming "Hemingway," the six-hour miniseries, in Africa. Lions were needed to re-create a specific hunt. No problem, right? Wrong. Large problem. There are strict laws about disturbing the "local talent." The situation was solved by shipping in two trained lions from deepest, darkest Germany. They proved to have better agents than Stallone or Schwarzenegger. Their deals provided one whole week to get used to their new surroundings before reporting for work. A special compound was even built for them. These lions were treated like kings.

Smart Characters Can Do The Dumbest Things

By Connie Passalacqua

"All My Children"'s Travis Montgomery (played by Larkin Malloy) was a famous race-car driver. Now he's a candidate for the U.S. Senate. His lover, Erica Kane (played by Susan Lucci), was a world famous model. Now she's the publisher of a high-fashion magazine. Both are millionaires. Both are urbane and extremely intelligent.

Despite the proliferation of business moguls, doctors and lawyers on the soaps, intelligent characters such as Erica and Travis are a rarity on daytime television. And that makes it particularlyannoying when smart soap characters do stupid things.

Take Erica and Travis, for example. Despite all their worldliness, neither, apparently, has heard of birth control. Although both are experienced adults in their 30s, Erica accidentally became pregnant this summer. She then avoided telling Travis the news (and kept denying it when he found out), because she was afraid that it would ruin his senatorial campaign.

Experienced "AMC" watchers know that Erica, who made a practice of lying to men for years, is finally too mature to do it anymore. But that's what the writers had her do. They also used the possibility that Travis wouldn't want to marry her to build suspense. But why bother? The audience already knew that Travis was a mature, sophisticated man who wouldn't jilt the woman he sincerely loves for the sake of mere ambition. Give the guy — and the audience — a little credit!

Intelligent characters are frequently forced to trade their brains for the sake of melodramatic plot devices. Most often these devices are used to throw a monkey wrench into a long-running romance or prolong a successful story line.

"Santa Barbara"'s bright Eden Capwell (played by Marcy Walker) was presumed dead for months. When she returned to town for a long-awaited reunion with her equally intelligent fiance, Cruz Castillo (played by A Martinez), she was paralyzed from the waist down and told Cruz that she couldn't reconcile with him because she couldn't satisfy him sexually.

In Sports, What Goes Around Comes Around

By Adam Beckerman

Three years of writing a weekly television sports column concludes right where it began: in front of the set awaiting the start of the U.S. Open, the college football season, the stretch runof the pennant races and the NFL.

I'm reminded of a David Sipress cartoon: A golfer is contemplating a putt. "So I hit the ball. So it goes in the hole. So I get all excited for a minute ... So big deal."

Every team, it seems, eventually has a year worth watching. And then they spend the entire next year desperately clinging to what we saw them once have. It was the year of the Tigers. And then it wasn't their year, but that, somehow, of the Royals. It was the year of the 49ers. The year of the Bears. The year of the Giants. The Lakers. The Celtics. The Lakers.

Or the year of watching America's Cup sailing live from Fremantle, Australia, at 2:30 a.m.

* Is this the year that John McEnroe comes back — at 28? The four-time U.S. Open Champ and wife Tatum are expecting baby No. 2 the weekend of the U.S. Open semifinals. Mac is regaining his touch, but isn't this the year of Wimbledon winner Pat Cash? Or West German flag-waver Boris Becker? No, he was last year. Or was it the year before? Ivan Lendl is the two-time defending champ, but whoturns on the set to watch him play? The USA network offers full weekday coverage of the U.S. Open, while CBS airs weekday highlights, starting Tuesday, Sept. 1, and weekend coverage, beginning Saturday, Sept. 5.

* On Sunday, Aug. 30, ABC offers the Mazda Kickoff Classic Game between Iowa and Tennessee. After that, it's a pileup. ESPN jumps into the fray with three games in the next six days: Pittsburgh at BYU Wednesday night; then a doubleheader Saturday, Sept. 5, as Texas travels to Auburn and LSU visits Texas A&M.

* NBC, the network that gave us "The Ten-Minute Ticker" and "The Silent Minute," the network that must live with the anxiety that another Summer Olympics could be dead on its airways, brings us the phoenix-like California Angels vs. the New York Steinbrenners on Saturday, Sept. 5.

In closing, I'd like to thank Steve Friedlander, my first editor, for providing me with a morally defensible reason for turning on the TV and consuming more tube sports than I had ever considered socially responsible.

REPEATS

ABC will be airing repeat episodes of "Mr. Belvedere" in its daytime lineup beginning Monday, Sept. 7. The half-hour sitcom, which stars Christopher Hewett and Bob Uecker, will be telecast at 11:30 a.m. (ET) in place of "Bargain Hunters."

Ex-Chef Pare Is Really Cooking On 'Knights'

By Lynn Hoogenboom

The interview is scheduled for 1 o'clock. The star doesn't call. Typical, any reporter will tell you.

But when an apologetic Michael Pare calls at 3:30, the excuse he offers is anything but typical. Had he collapsed from exhaustion after being kept on the set all night? Had he been forced to work through lunch, because his series was behind in its shooting schedule? Was he paying an emergency visit to his dentist?

No, the "Houston Knights" star was moving furniture. That's right — moving furniture for his wife, the proprietor of a home furnishings store. "That's what I've been doing for my whole hiatus— delivering furniture."

Pare, 28, was born in Brooklyn, N.Y., and grew up in suburban Westchester County. He was the eighth of 10 children. Lana Turner, legend has it, was discovered sipping a soda at Schwab's drug store. Pare can go her one better. He was discovered at a bar located a half block from the New York City restaurant where he worked as a sous (or assistant) chef.

He has starred in the movies "Eddie and the Cruisers" and "Streets of Fire." After that came the CBS series "Houston Knights," which airs Tuesdays, and two more movies, "The Women's Club," which is scheduled for release this fall, and "World Gone Wild," with Bruce Dern.

WEATHER SPLOTCH

On the day before yesterday, the weatherman reported: "Today's weather in our area is the opposite of yesterday's. If tomorrow's weather is the same as yesterday's, it is likely to rain the day after tomorrow."

Now then, the weatherman was correct. It rained in the area on the day before yesterday, and it is raining there today.

Question: What was the weather yesterday?

Don't take this too seriously, folks. If it isn't clear, blame it on the weather.

• MINI-TEST! Double your age, add 18, divide by two. Subtract your age, multiply by 79. See if your answer checks with the one given below.
