Martin Tests His Auction Skills

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

FARMVILLE — Gov. Jim Martin, in a playful mood, almost bought a pile of tobacco at Tucker's Warehouse in Farmville Wednesday afternoon.

The governor was greeted by Republican leaders, Farmville town officials and others at the tobacco warehouse and was invited to walk among the buyers as tobacco was auctioned in the warehouse owned by his political supporter, "Chap" Tucker. He earlier had visited a warehouse in Robersonville and said he will soon attend the opening of the burley tobacco market in western North Carolina.

At one point, the governor's jesting bid was the highest and only the generosity of auctioneer Jimmy Parker saved him from owning something he couldn't smoke or chew — a pile of cured but not processed golden leaf.

The governor said he was pleased to be out among tobacco business people, not just for opening day, but "during these middle- to upper-stalk days."

He said, overall, the state has a good tobacco crop, despite some drought, and that last year's changes in the tobacco program have greatly improved the lot of tobacco farmers. He acknowledged the people who have persevered through a trying time as being good business people.

He said he is looking forward to the upcoming political contests because he believes that state and national races are going to be "good bipartisan ones." The bipartisan nature of the state government under his administration, Martin said, is one reason he believes North Carolina has excelled in so many areas recently — particularly in education.

He said the schools' share of state income is up each year now, after having been down for 22 of the last 24 years. He said he believes bipartisanism is improving the lot of people in most of the Southeast.

Asked if he would like to see Secretary of Agriculture Jim Graham run for governor against him, he said he does not believe Graham is serious about running. But, "If he is, I know he will be a strong candidate on the other side, just as he's been a strong secretary of agriculture."

He declined to comment on the Saturday fracas at the East Carolina University-N.C. State University football game, saying, "It's not something the governor can or should influence. It's just very unfortunate and the consequences are up to the universities."

Pope Opens 10-Day Visit

MIAMI (AP) — Pope John Paul II flew to the United States today on a mission to defend church doctrine under attack within his U.S. flock and applaud the vibrancy of the Roman Catholic Church in America.

The special Alitalia 747 nicknamed "Shepherd One" left Leonardo da Vinci airport at 9:25 a.m. local time with the pope, his 31-member entourage and journalists. President Reagan was scheduled to greet the pontiff in Miami at the start of his 10-day, nine-city U.S. tour.

"In Europe and elsewhere, we continue to place our might on the side of human dignity," Reagan said in his prepared remarks.

"In Latin America and Asia, we are supporting the expansion of human freedom, in particular, the powerful movement toward democracy," Reagan said.

Though the president made no specific reference to Nicaragua, aides had said privately that Reagan intended to make an obvious reference to his support for the Contra rebels.

The Polish-born pope has been preparing for the visit for months, carefully working over the 45 speeches he'll deliver, meeting with U.S. church officials and polishing up his English.

It is John Paul's second U.S. tour and his 36th foreign trip since he assumed the papacy in 1978.

Vatican security guards, the pope's valet, and senior prelates involved in issues ranging from foreign policy to relations with other Christian denominations and Jews are accompanying the pope.

Two glass-enclosed bulletproof "popemobiles" were shipped in advance to Miami. John Paul has traveled in such vehicles on foreign trips since he was shot and wounded by a Turkish gunman in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981.

Critics of church views are expected to stage demonstrations in several cities, but the Rev. Roberto Tucci, the organizer of papal trips, said last week that the Vatican was more concerned about the possibility of an assassination attempt because of the availability of guns in the United States.

From Miami, the pope will fly to Columbia, S.C., then on to New Orleans; San Antonio, Texas;

Phoenix, Ariz.; Los Angeles; Monterey, Calif.; San Francisco and Detroit. He is scheduled to visit Fort Simpson in Canada's Northwest Territories on Sept. 20 before returning to Rome.

Vatican officials attach great importance to the Catholic Church in the United States, and expect many of its views to eventually be embraced by Catholics in other countries. It is a wealthy church, with 52.9 million members.

When John Paul visited six U.S. cities in 1979, a year after his election as the first non-Italian pope in 455 years, he was greeted as a superstar and drew enormous crowds. At that time, John Paul gave the first indications his papacy would be uncompromising on church doctrine.

Eakin Backs Football Ban, But Wants To Talk

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

East Carolina University Chancellor Richard R. Eakin says he understands why North Carolina State officials called a one-year moratorium on the schools' football series, but he had hoped to discuss the matter before a decision was reached.

"I am disappointed in the decision reached by North Carolina State University," Eakin said at a news conference Wednesday night. "I am particularly disappointed because I had hoped for the opportunity to discuss this matter more fully prior to a formal decision."

However, Eakin said N.C. State officials made a difficult decision.

"I want to say that I am fully supportive of Chancellor (Bruce) Poulton in this matter," he said. "He and his people had a very difficult decision to reach."

"I fully understand that the decision that they reached could have been more negative than it was. For that I am thankful that they have at least left the door open for a continuation of this series. I believe it is important for two sister universities in this system to compete. I simply feel that it is good for higher education in this state."

Eakin said school supporters need to remember who is responsible for the events leading up to the punitive measure.

"Neither I nor any East Carolina supporters, however, should forget that the initial events leading to this outcome were caused by ECU fans," Eakin said. "This is a bitter lesson but one that I hope (is felt by) those whose unruly behavior has brought us to this juncture."

Most ECU students are distressed by the actions of a minority of the schools' fans, according to Scott Thomas, Student Government Association president.

"Certainly the majority of students at East Carolina, and I'm certain I speak for the majority, can go to an athletic event, sit there and pull for their team without causing any problems or difficulties," Thomas said.

"It's just a shame that a fraction of their fans did resort to that behavior."

Jack Edwards, president of the Pirate Club, said he was disappointed with the decision.

"I think that the N.C. State officials blew this thing way out of proportion," he said. "I think it is unfair because in the past when N.C. State won the ACC (Atlantic Coast Conference) basketball championship, the fans inflicted $100,000 in damages to Raleigh and that was called a celebration, and we inflict $7,200 and they call it a riot."

"I'm very disappointed. The game was so much fun for so many people. It was not just a game, it was a happening. It was one of the top social events of the year."

C. Ralph Kinsey Jr., chairman of the ECU Board of Trustees, declined comment on the moratorium.

N.C. State Athletic Director Jim Valvano announced the one-year moratorium Wednesday. The North Carolina State Athletic Council gave its recommendation to suspend the series to Valvano after meeting Tuesday night to discuss the melee at the end of Saturday's game between the two teams.

More than 50 people were injured in the post-game celebration when nearly 2,000 fans, most of them ECU supporters, broke through a restraining fence in the south end zone of the stadium and mangled two goal posts on the field. Damages to the field and stadium were estimated at $7,200, Valvano said.

Eakin said Poulton told him by phone of the decision to halt play for at least one year, and that Poulton had endorsed that decision.

"Those recommendations are in fact the official position of North Carolina State University," Eakin said. "That position, as I understand it, is that North Carolina State has declared a one-year moratorium in football competition with East

Howard Gets Bench Nomination

By STUART SAVAGE

President Reagan says he will nominate Greenville lawyer Malcolm Howard to be a federal judge for the Eastern District of North Carolina.

In a statement Wednesday announcing Reagan's intentions, the White House said Howard would fill a new judgeship created by Congress in July 1984, subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Howard said the president called him on Tuesday and asked if he would accept the judgeship and, "I responded that I would, to the best of my ability. He told me that he was signing the nomination."

U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms recommended Howard for the nomination earlier this year and Howard has been under investigation since May by the Department of Justice, the FBI, the American Bar Association and the N.C. Bar Association in preparation for the nomination.

But Howard said today that the nomination is "just another step. The next step is a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee."

"The problem will be to have that hearing scheduled," Howard said, because "there are 30 judicial nominees pending before the committee and they will not schedule anymore hearings before the (Supreme Court nominee Robert) Bork confirmation process is completed."

"It's unknown when my hearing will be ... hopefully sometime in October," Howard said. "It is also possible that no more than half of those (nominations) presently before the committee will have hearings this calendar year. The committee will decide who they will hear and who they will not hear."

But Howard said, "I'm honored and look forward to the opportunity to appear before the Senate Judiciary Committee and hopefully receive their blessing."

And if confirmed by the Senate, Howard said, "My hope is to be able to have permanent chambers in the Federal Building in Greenville, although that designation will ultimately be made by the United States Court's administrative office."

As a federal judge, Howard would rotate among the five federal court-houses in the Eastern District — in

"This today was my first opportunity to discuss it with Chancellor Poulton," Eakin said. "I did receive a message that there might be some interest from the chairman of the athletic council, and I did offer myself to them and we spoke briefly yesterday (Tuesday)."

"I would have said what I have said at previous occasions. I talked to Chancellor Poulton and expressed my strong sense of embarrassment and disappointment in the behavior of our fans. I said to him that I certainly hoped we could remedy this

Administration Will Seek Contra Aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz said today the administration will seek $270 million for the Nicaraguan Contras for an 18-month period once the current aid allocation expires at the end of September.

In testimony prepared for the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Shultz said the administration is asking for more money "to end the doubt and uncertainty about the capacity and commitment of the United States that is created by the recurring cycle of off-again, on-again aid decisions punctuated by protracted and divisive debate."

Shultz' announcement was certain to draw fire from many Democrats, who believe the United States must act with restraint to ensure the success of the peace plan signed by five Central American presidents a month ago.

One of the plan's provisions calls for a cutoff of U.S. aid to the Contras. Shultz noted that the Central American peace agreement, signed in Guatemala, sets a Nov. 7 deadline for implementation of a cease-fire and moves toward democratic reform.

Pointing out that the U.S. fiscal year and aid to the Contras both end on Sept. 30, Shultz said unless the rebels receive new funding, "the Guatemala calendar will play out entirely in favor of the communists."

At some point, he added, the Contras will be facing advanced Soviet weaponry and Cuban advisers with rapidly dwindling resources and no further help from the United States.

"And as their resources disappear, the helicopter gunships and armored personnel carriers and rocket launchers that the Soviet Union is continuing to supply will guarantee a communist victory," Shultz said.

He said if the Guatemalan agreement is to be implemented in the way that secures a negotiated cease-fire and a democratic opening in Nicaragua, "the United States must continue to furnish support to the freedom fighters."

Shultz noted that the requested funding amounts to $180 million a year compared with the $100 million Congress approved for the Contras for the current fiscal year.

If Congress goes along with the administration request, the Contras would be assured of uninterrupted U.S. assistance until after President Reagan's departure from office in January 1989.

Shultz said the aid request does not signal U.S. opposition to the Central American peace agreement.

ECU Scientists Plan Sound Ecology Study

Researchers at East Carolina University will study the ecology of the Albemarle and Pamlico sounds in a series of projects aimed at improving water quality in coastal North Carolina.

Two marine scientists and a maritime sociologist have received grants totaling $100,000 to study swamps and aquatic vegetation and to collect data on population in and around the state's two largest inland water basins. The research grants are provided by the Environmental Protection Agency through the North Carolina Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

Dr. Mark M. Brinson, a marine biologist, will study the function and value of swamps that join the Albemarle and Pamlico sounds. Brinson says that the major concern in his study is the ability of the wetlands to recolonize after timber

HONEST MEN

I would like to heap praises on some honest men in our Greenville Public Works Department.

Friday morning I ran into my office to type a check and left my purse in the car. When I went back to the car, the purse was gone. I just knew the $400 I had inside was gone, too. Two hundred dollars of it had been taken, it turned out, but another $200 tucked in a less visible place had not.

The nice policeman who came to assist me, Officer E.G. Prewett, suggested that we ask the garbage collectors working in the area at the time to watch and see if they saw my purse in any trash they dumped that day. My purse was found in trash down the street about an hour later. The garbage collectors who found it, having had ample time to go through my purse and take anything they would have chosen to, returned the purse to me with the remaining money still in it.

I wish to publicly acknowledge James Ward, Arthur Daniels and Ronnie Tyson. I think they are wonderful people. B.L.

Eakin Says ECU, Students Responsible For Actions Of Fans

situation. I then said to him in a letter that I was deeply regretful that this had occurred and that I was hoping for an opportunity to meet with him and representatives of North Carolina State University.

"That offer in a certain sense is open to us now. It's open to us to sit down and consider issues related to resuming series in 1989. What's not open and what I'm disappointed about is not having a chance to work for 1988."

Officials from both schools expect to work toward resuming the series.

"I have pledged my support over the next several months to work for an agreement that will promote the football series with North Carolina State University to resume," he said. "I ask the ECU community to support that effort."

Eakin said he couldn't speculate on why more preventive measures weren't taken.

"I simply attended my first football game at North Carolina State on Saturday night and historical aspects of this (the rivalry and past problems) have been recounted to me but I really couldn't speculate."

Meanwhile, officials have initiated conversations on what measures are needed to remedy the situation, Eakin said.

"That has been a matter of discussion over the last few days. Suggestions have been offered," he said. "One is that we should try to schedule this game in the daytime. The evening game probably had something to do with the difficulties in the sense that there was some excessive use of alcohol by fans in the stadium. Perhaps that could be curtailed to some extent if that were scheduled in the afternoon.

"There are questions about whether fans in this game should be seated on the grassy slope in the stadium. I think there are a lot of questions like that that could be asked. There are questions about how much security should be necessary for a game like this.

"My own view is that while security is probably necessary at any football game or any athletic contest, we should not at East Carolina University make claims that there was inadequate security or any of those factors. One should, in an ideal world, be able to conduct that game without any security officers present. I personally will resist making any such claims."

Since he has arrived, Eakin has seen one present and two former basketball players arrested for theft, a football player arrested for theft and now this, all in less than a year.

"Anyone who takes on the responsibility of chancellor, or a position like it, has to recognize that there will be some things that will be unpredictable," he said. "That is probably one of the challenges of leadership — to be able to cope with those situations and to try to find creative situations out of them."

Eakin said the university bears responsibility for the conduct of its fans.

"Those students who participated in this event are entirely responsible for their own actions," he said "I think that while that is true, it doesn't divorce this university from developing feelings of responsibility, feeling that we indeed have a moral obligation to speak out about those obligations, and more than that, a responsibility to try to correct those actions.

"Some things are beyond our control. I'm willing to admit that today. I'm also willing to admit that all things aren't beyond our control. Our responsibility as an educational institution goes beyond educating students in the classroom. It continues over in to their out of class behavior."

Actual representation on the committee has not been decided yet, but Eakin said he hopes for representation by many groups including the chancellor's office, students, the athletic department as well as faculty.

Howard Nominated

Raleigh, Fayetteville, Wilmington, New Bern and Elizabeth City.

Howard, 48, is a senior partner in the law firm of Howard, Browning, Sams, Poole, Hill & Daniel and specializes in bankruptcy cases and civil law, although he has handled criminal cases.

"The practice of law has been a great joy to me for approximately 15 years. I have been involved in a diverse practice — criminal, civil, bankruptcy matters," Howard said.

"The opportunity to serve our district with a lifetime appointment is appealing (and) I would look forward to discharging those duties to the best of my ability."

A Lenoir County native, Howard graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1962 and was awarded the Bronze Star with Oak Leaf Cluster for heroism in ground combat, the Silver Star for personal gallantry, and the Purple Heart, during two tours in Vietnam where he served as a helicopter door gunner, infantry company commander and ambush academy commandant.

He entered the Wake Forrest University law school in 1967 while still on active duty and served on the staff of the staff judge advocate for the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, and as legislative counsel to the secretary of the Army before resigning from the active Army in 1972.

After receiving his law degree in 1970, Howard co-authored the original legal analysis for the prosecution of Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald, a former Green Beret officer who was convicted of killing his pregnant wife and two daughters at Fort Bragg in 1970.

Howard was an assistant U.S. attorney for the Eastern District for 1½ years, then for eight months in 1974, before Nixon resigned, he was an assistant special counsel to President Nixon and a member of a team preparing an impeachment defense for the president.

Howard entered the private practice of law in Greenville in 1974.

In 1981 the Reagan administration considered Howard for the job of secretary of the Army. Howard retired from the U.S. Army Reserve in 1982 as a lieutenant colonel and in 1986 was appointed by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh as a civilian aid to the secretary of the Army for North Carolina.

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Iranian dissidents occupied or attacked Iranian offices in Norway, France and West Germany today to protest the Islamic revolutionary government of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Eleven unarmed men occupied the Iranian Embassy in Oslo for more than two hours, and three people were injured, the national news agency NTB said. The 11 surrendered peacefully and were taken to police headquarters for questioning, the agency said.

In Frankfurt, West Germany, eight unarmed Iranians were detained after briefly occupying the offices of Iran Air, the national airline, and distributing leaflets calling for an uprising against the Khomeini government.

An anonymous telephone caller to The Associated Press later said the eight belonged to the People's Fedayeen, a group opposed to Khomeini.

In Paris, a group of Iranian dissidents attacked the Iran Air offices on the Avenue des Champs-Elysees, police said.

They shattered windows and left

NTB said banners draped outside the seized Iranian Embassy in Oslo identified the occupying group by the initials OGFPI.

Police cordoned off the area around the embassy, and one person was seen being carried away on a stretcher, the agency reported.

Among the injured during the takeover was charge d'affaires Mohammad Hadi Ardebili, but he refused to be taken to hospital until his children were freed from the building, NTB said. There were no details on the injuries.

The news agency quoted an unidentified Iranian journalist as saying the attackers had offered to surrender if a photographer were first allowed into the building.

It quoted the Iranian journalist as saying the takeover was to demonstrate solidarity with Iranian political prisoners and to protest the export of weapons to Iran.

In Frankfurt, the eight exiles were detained after trying to slip out of the office of Iran Air at Frankfurt Airport and released after identity checks, police said.

The eight stormed into the office, locked the doors and refused to answer telephone calls during the brief occupation.

The Iran Air station manager, who was alone in the office when the eight stormed in, suffered a shock and received medical treatment, police said. He was not identified.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

The Voters' Turn

Pitt County's voters must respond to the challenge placed before them by a large pool of candidates for the Nov. 3 election.

The candidates have done their part by mustering the courage to file for office. Now, the voters must do their share by finding out which candidates represent their district, educating themselves on the issues and making an informed decision about who to select for office.

The slate of candidates for municipal and county offices is broader than usual for this election. In Greenville, 12 candidates filed for six seats on the City Council. Three candidates filed for mayor. Thirty candidates filed for 12 seats on the Pitt County Board of Education. Across the county, 50 hopefuls are vying for spots on local town councils.

These numbers reflect the increased interest the emphasis on new election methods for the City Council and Board of Education may have created. It also indicates the citizens of the county responded to the public's need for a large pool of candidates from which to elect leaders.

The need for voters to respond with equal enthusiasm cannot be overemphasized. It is the responsibility of citizens to become familiar with altered district lines, changed polling places and different voting procedures. It is then their duty to investigate the candidates' qualifications, make a decision, and exercise their privilege to vote on Nov. 3.

The importance of this process should not be downplayed. Local government is the foundation of the nation's political system. Without it, government by the people and for the people couldn't exist.

Without proper involvement by citizenry in local elections, government at the grassroots level can't function effectively. Low citizen participation usually means low quality leadership. Conversely, when an electorate is involved, informed and exercises its rights, the caliber of leadership reflects this fact.

The slate of candidates for the Nov. 3 election represents a high degree of involvement. The voters should react with a matching degree of enthusiasm by participating to the fullest in the election.

A Softy

Sometimes the Hollywood "good guys" are confused with characters they portray who are hard-as-nails rogues, but when actor Lee Marvin died he left behind some character references — people he worked with — who knew the real Lee Marvin was a "softy".

He took up residence on an Arizona ranch in 1984 and soon became known as a contributor to fund-raisers for care of injured wild animals.

Marvin became an actor by chance while he was working as a plumber's assistant and was hired as an extra. From that small start he went on to appear in 56 films and 200 television dramas as well as a Broadway play.

His Academy Award came for playing a dual role (twins) in a 1965 western parody. He had to be different.

In World War II he served with the Marine Corps in the Pacific, seeing action on Kwajalein, Eniwetok and Saipan and suffered a wound that kept him in a hospital for 13 months. He later jested he learned to act from the Marines.

The actor's many years before the camera resulted in a treasure trove of good-and-bad films to be shared anew by future audiences.

Tragic Legacy

The tragic stories continue about victims of the AIDS virus.

Social workers report that about a third of the children born with AIDs are abandoned. Many die in the hospitals because there are few adults who will adopt them or act as foster parents.

Primary concern is fear of catching AIDS but some cannot face the thought of becoming attached to the child only to lose him or her.

An official said AIDS children who are abandoned are born in hospitals, suffer there and die. They never know the comfort of a caring home.

As AIDS becomes more prevalent so will the problem. On Aug. 24 there were 563 children with AIDS, according to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. There were 280 at the end of 1986 and the number of cases is expected to pass 3,000 in the next five years.

As with all AIDS problems there are no easy solutions. It is a dread disease that kills and our society becomes more fearful as the number of cases increase.

It is leaving us with a legacy of doomed infants no one wants.

Reagan Conceding Confusion On Contras

WASHINGTON (AP) — You can tell things aren't going well when the man in charge admits the situation is confused, as President Reagan did the other day in pressing his case for the Nicaraguan rebels he calls freedom fighters.

Addressing a group of presidential appointees as he returned to duty after a 25-day California vacation, Reagan sought to reassure conservatives who fear he has gone too far to accommodate forces seeking peace in Central America.

"We will not abandon our friends in Nicaragua," he said. "We share their desire for peace, prosperity and democracy. And we will support them in that quest just as we've supported them in the past."

That support in the past has meant fighting hard for congressional appropriations to assist the Contras battling the country's leftist Sandinista government, most recently with $100 million in military and other aid that runs out Sept. 30.

Two new elements were injected into the mix last month, however. On Aug. 5, the administration announced it had reached agreement with House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, on a proposed peace plan and that further requests for aid would be held up while the new approach was tried.

Then on Aug. 7, leaders of Nicaragua, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala agreed on a somewhat different peace plan, calling for an end to outside military aid, at a meeting in Guatemala City.

Despite the disclaimers, some conservatives fear that cosmetic moves toward democracy by the Sandinistas could be used to justify a cutoff of further aid to the Contras. Even some White House officials are uneasy, and point out that Reagan's national security adviser, Frank C. Carlucci, was out of town when the president signed on to the Wright peace plan.

Liberals have long been skeptical of aid to the Contras and, while the president denied any knowledge of the diversion of Iranian arms sales to aid the rebels, his devotion to their cause was clearly one of the factors that led him into the Iran-Contra morass.

Now he is being criticized not only by the liberals, but by ardent conservatives who agree with his arguments that the Sandinistas threaten to spread communist influence in the Western Hemisphere.

No wonder Reagan was moved to tell the presidential appointees, "In recent weeks, the issue in Central America seems at times to have become confused: Who is proposing what? How many likely votes are there on Capitol Hill for this or that?"

It is indeed confusing. The administration has said it will not seek additional aid until after Sept. 30, but also has said it will be talking to members of Congress before that. An administration official suggested at one point that the administration would present a request during September.

Bork's 'Candor'

WASHINGTON — With attacks on Judge Robert Bork's conservative philosophy falling short, his foes are switching their Senate confirmation strategy to the new and wholly unexpected issue of "candor."

Considering Bork's towering reputation, an assault on his character seems surprising. But his enemies are digging into the murky record of events 14 years ago immediately following his Oct. 20, 1973 firing of Archibald Cox as Watergate special prosecutor in an effort to find — or manufacture — a candor issue.

Their aim, as National Public Radio correspondent Nina Totenberg said Aug. 26 on "All Things Considered," is to prove that "Bork's version of events ... conflicts directly with the accounts of others" as to exactly what happened after Cox's ouster. Managers of Bork's confirmation are well aware what's coming. "The candor question," one administration strategist told us. "That's what it's coming to, that Judge Bork can't be trusted."

The case comes down in minute detail to what he did or did not say and mean when he briefed the Cox Watergate investigating team the day after he replaced Elliot Richardson, as acting attorney general, and complied with President Nixon's order to fire Cox.

No precise record exists. But in his 1982 testimony to the Senate Judiciary Committee on his nomination to the Circuit Court of Appeals, Bork recalled that tense moment in these words: "I told them that I wanted to continue as before with their investigation, that I would guarantee their independence, including their right to go to court to get the White House tapes or any other evidence they wanted. Therefore I ordered them to do precisely what they had been doing under Mr. Cox."

Totenberg reported, based on an interview with him, that Cox's top aide, Henry Ruth, "remembers the meeting quite differently." That raises the "candor" question. But when we talked to Ruth, he said: "If Bork had had his druthers, of course he wanted to continue with the full investigation." However, added Ruth, neither Bork nor anyone else in the government knew exactly what Nixon would or would not do in the wake of Cox's ouster.

"I don't question his integrity," Ruth told us, "but he just could not have been in a position to tell us all that (specified in his 1982 testimony) at that moment. I hope he will be more precise in his Supreme Court confirmation hearing."

In fact, reaching back in his memory to that moment of constitutional crisis, Bork may have confused what he actually said that day with what he did say later — after the "firestorm" broke and Nixon replaced Cox with Leon Jaworski and surrendered the Oval Office tapes.

A second Totenberg allegation of Bork's lack of candor involved his answer to a question from the American Bar Association (ABA) committee that investigated his fitness for the Circuit Court of Appeals (and gave him the highest rating). Although ABA interviews with judicial prospects are supposed never to be made public, Totenberg obtained a copy of Bork's. In it, she reported, Bork said that after firing Cox he "immediately began searching for another special prosecutor."

Such minute scrutiny of Bork's words in an effort to cast doubt on his integrity demonstrates the intensity of his opposition. But Richardson, the liberal Republican whose support for Bork has been steadfast and strong, told us: "It certainly is unfair to hold any of this against Judge Bork. You've got to imagine the situation he was in."

Charges, no matter how far-fetched, outrageous or ambiguous, that Bork is a man not to be trusted offer a safer platform from which to attack him. That could provide a non-ideological lever to freeze the Supreme Court's present ideological makeup and foil Ronald Reagan.

Public Forum

To the editor:

As a working woman taxpayer and a subscriber to individual and human rights, I am pursuing a campaign to our Senators to vote against the confirmation of Robert H. Bork as Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Judge Bork believe that the "original intent" of the Constitution's framers should determine Supreme Court decisions on constitutionality. This has serious implications for women and minorities who were not included in the august body who wrote the Constitution 200 years ago. Judge Bork has been clear, outspoken and consistent in his narrow views of the U.S. Constitution as it applies to individual rights in general and to the civil rights of minorities and women in particular.

Judge Bork has opposed constitutional provisions that would require the desegregation of public facilities; he has declared Roe vs. Wade (the 1973 Supreme Court ruling overturning state prohibitions against abortion) an "unconstitutional decision;" and has said that the principle of "one man, one vote" runs "counter to the text of the Fourteenth Amendment." Bork has also spoken out against a 1965 decision in which the Supreme Court struck down a Connecticut law banning the use of contraceptives even by married couples in the privacy of their own homes. He has also opposed the Equal Rights Amendment on the grounds that it would give judges authority to decide political and cultural issues.

The role of the Senate in the confirmation process is to advise and consent, not to rubber stamp a nominee despite his ideology. It would not be the first time the Senate took a stance in opposition to a nominee — almost one-fifth of the nominees to the Supreme Court has been rejected.

I will be contacting Senator Helms and Senator Sanford to urge that they reject the nomination of Judge Bork. I urge all members of our community who want to see our liberties maintained — and not a return to the Stone Ages — to do likewise.

Strength For Today

Esau sold his birthright to his brother Jacob for a mess of pottage. Jacob of course shows up very unfavorably in the Bible story, but he had one great asset — a capacity to grow spiritually and later the pattern of his life. Starting out as a villain, he ended up, after a profound religious experience, as one of the Bible's finest characters.

Esau, with whom we sympathize in the Bible story, had none of Jacob's spiritual power. He was thoughtless and impulsive. Jacob was a man upon whom the Almighty himself could rely and upon whom God himself built a great nation after Jacob's heart was purged of evil. The precious spiritual heritage which was to be passed on to the world through Jacob could not be trusted to Esau.

The world has plenty of Esau today. What we need are more men like Jacob.

A Question Of Irrelevance

Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former presidential candidate Gary Hart, opening a bid to put his stamp on the 1988 campaign, is describing Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev as "a modern man" embarked on a historic gamble that could make the Soviet Union "a more relevant superpower than ours in the 21st century."

Hart will outline his view of U.S.-Soviet relations in an appearance today before the Philadelphia World Affairs Council. A text was made available Wednesday in Washington.

He called for establishment of a U.S.-Soviet Youth Corps, patterned after the Peace Corps, to work in Third World countries and said it was time "to be testing Mr. Gorbachev instead of testing weapons."

"There is no doubt in my mind that General Secretary Gorbachev represents the possibility of historic change in the Soviet Union," the former Colorado senator said.

Noting that he had met earlier in the year with the Soviet leader, Hart said, "Mr. Gorbachev is a modern man. He is well-educated, intelligent, articulate and analytical."

Contrasting Gorbachev with President Reagan, Hart said:

"For the first time in many years, the pre-eminent Soviet leader is younger than the American president. More importantly, while the current American president seeks to recapture a mythical time in America's past — whether the 1920s or the 1950s — the new Soviet leader is clearly anticipating the 21st century."

The former front-runner for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination was delivering the first of a series of policy speeches only two days after an extraordinary appearance on national television in which he apologized for the behavior that drove him from the presidential race and said he had no intention to try to revive his candidacy.

"I am going to give speeches and I am going to have an impact," Hart said during the interview on the ABC-TV show "Nightline."

Hart met Wednesday with New York Gov. Mario Cuomo and Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, both of whom declined to enter the Democratic presidential race.

"We didn't say anything surprising," Cuomo said after lunch at a restaurant atop the World Trade Center in New York City. Cuomo added that the subject of Hart's former candidacy did not come up.

In his foreign policy speech, Hart warned that Gorbachev "is gambling on a historical and historic leap that could make his nation a more relevant superpower than ours in the 21st century."

"Imagine, if you will, that the U.S. might continue blindly on its present course of excessive nuclear armament, traveling alone and pointlessly down a blind alley of history and ending up militarily musclebound, uncompetitive in industry, agriculture, or technology, irrelevant to the world of the 21st century — and broke."

Hart said it was time to shift the emphasis of arms control away from efforts to limit the numbers of weapons to the prevention of the use of weapons.

He said negotiations ought to focus on the weapons each side fears the most, advocating that the United States limit defensive systems in exchange for Soviet reductions in their force of large intercontinental ballistic missiles.

In addition, he called for a comprehensive nuclear test ban agreement, a massive joint venture to improve test ban verification and a freeze on the production of plutonium and other weapons-grade material.

"We should challenge the Soviets to convert our military competition to cooperative ventures in our mutual self-interest," he added. "These can include scientific joint ventures, for example, in biomedical research, nuclear reactor safety and space exploration."

Hart went on to propose, "Let us even dream a little. Why not an American-Soviet Youth Corps in the Third World? Young teachers, doctors, agronomists, and engineers who would teach, heal, cultivate and build, instead of establishing military bases and weapons that kill? Idealistic? Perhaps. But not unrealistic or unachievable."

"Nothing is lost by trying and we may even regain leadership in world public opinion. We should be testing Mr. Gorbachev instead of testing weapons."

Anticipating criticism of his approach, Hart said he was aware "many will see this approach to U.S.-Soviet relations as futile or hopelessly naive. But pragmatism and optimistic experimentation have been the hallmark of successful American foreign policy, especially in periods of great change."

Bring Back Those Smoke-Filled Rooms

For months foreign politicians and journalists on fact-finding trips to this country have been earnestly asking American political analysts who will be the Democratic and Republican contenders for the presidency in 1988. The answer that they frequently get, because it will be the only honest response until well into next year's primary season, is: "We don't have the slightest idea."

This is a bit unnerving to foreign visitors, whether they are from allied countries or the Soviet Bloc. The manner in which we respond to problems like the Third World debt to U.S. lending institutions, our huge trade deficit and the political and military competition with the Soviet Union has a major effect on other nations' prosperity and peace of mind — and, for that matter, on their internal politics.

Thus to citizens of other lands it matters a great deal who sits in the White House. They want to think that there is an underlying wisdom to the seeming anarchy of the U.S. presidential selection process. But in fact it is increasingly doubtful that there is — a fact that should worry Americans even more than it worries foreigners.

About 15 would-be candidates already have lined up to compete for the Democratic and Republican presidential nominations, and others may sign up. It is easy to be overwhelmed by the field.

In the wake of the Iran-Contra hearings a lot of pundits prophesied that this time around the American people will be looking for competence and experience.

If that proves to be the case, Vice President George Bush — with his experience in Congress, the CIA and the U.S. Embassy in China — has an advantage on the Republican side. (Whether he can overcome his reputation as a "wimp" remains a question, however.)

Among the Democratic aspirants, not one has any Washington experience beyond legislative service, and a couple don't have even that. What they lack in big-league experience they do not make up for in charisma — all of which helps explain why they have been labeled the "seven dwarfs."

But until they were elected president neither Jimmy Carter nor Ronald Reagan had ever had any Washington experience — or any meaningful exposure to foreign-policy problems, either. Considering the decline in the prestige of American world leadership in the last decade, that helps make the point.

In other democracies the voters decide which political party or coalition will rule, and the dominant figure in the winning party typically becomes the president or prime minister. The only role of rank-and-file voters is to choose between the contending parties — though they usually do so in full knowledge of who that party's choice for prime minister will be.

Under that system, national leaders just don't come out of nowhere. They have risen through party ranks and, as a generality, have had extensive exposure to foreign and domestic problems in the process.

Outside our own borders, there is nothing remotely resembling our obstacle-course presidential primary system. And it's worth remembering that the system is not all that old here, either.

In the supposedly bad old days before "reform," only a few states had presidential primaries. Most delegates to each party's national nominating conventions were chosen by state conventions, which were dominated by state and local political leaders.

Some national conventional delegates were obliged to support a certain candidate for the nomination, at least on the first ballot; others were "uninstructed."

The result frequently was a so-called open convention in which no candidate arrived with a majority of delegates in his pocket.

The choice of the candidate emerged after lengthy balloting — and a lot of horse-trading among the political bosses in the storied smoke-filled rooms.

As an exercise in democracy, the process was flawed. But it managed to produce such presidents as Franklin D. Roosevelt, Dwight D. Eisenhower and John F. Kennedy (and, at the other end of the scale, Warren G. Harding).

Things are different now. Many states, including Iowa, have caucuses in which rank-and-file citizens participate. But the real action is in the primaries.

In 1988, 30-odd states, including nine of the 10 biggest, will hold presidential primaries that are essentially open to anybody who has the filing fee.

As a result, the vast majority of convention delegates will be chosen by popular vote. If the familiar pattern holds, the outcome will be known before the delegates ever meet; the only real purpose of the conventions will be to give the candidates a good send-off for the general-election campaign.

The direct participation of ordinary citizens in the presidential nomination process is an appealing idea.

Some candidates are very serious about the issues, but are convinced that the media — and probably the voters — are not. Political advertising is dominated by 20-second commercials that insult the voters' intelligence and seem designed more to discredit the opposition than to offer a credible program.

There is a growing sense that in theory the primary system is an admirable exercise in participatory democracy — but in practice is a helluva a way to select the major-party contenders for the most powerful and difficult job in the world.

Where are those guys in the smoke-filled rooms when we need them?

Spangler Says Students 'Just Putting In Time'

CHARLOTTE (AP) — University of North Carolina System President C.D. Spangler, harshly criticizing the current curriculum, says the state should lengthen the school year, make the Scholastic Aptitude test mandatory and tighten high school graduation requirements.

"Let's turn around before we dupe another generation into thinking they're getting an education when they're really just putting in time," Spangler said Wednesday.

"We walk the wrong road for students in the lower socioeconomic strata," he said at a luncheon to welcome Charlotte's new school superintendent, Peter Relic. Relic and state Board of Education Chairman Jere Drummond reacted to Spangler's proposals with interest but without promises of support.

Spangler told more than 100 Charlotte business and community leaders that vocational education may not adequately prepare students for employment.

"The most valuable employees are not skilled laborers, but employees with the ability to learn," he said. "Students should not spend their precious high school years learning skills no one will use a decade out."

He urged education leaders to make high school graduation requirements much more rigorous — identical to admission requirements to be implemented in 1990 at University of North Carolina system schools.

Every student would be required to complete 12 courses in several subjects, including some specific courses such as Algebra I, Algebra II and a lab science.

He criticized the number of state-approved courses offered in seventh through 12th grades, saying many of the more than 400 courses were "bottom-of-the-line" courses such as "rinky-dink math courses designed to make the math requirement painless for students and teachers."

He also called for the state to pay for the mandatory Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test and SAT for all high school students.

Those tests of verbal and mathematical ability, used widely in college admissions, would provide a measure of how well individual schools were educating students, he said.

He cited equity as one reason to offer the tests — equity for students with neither the money nor encouragement to take SAT preparatory courses.

Finally, he advocated extending the school day and school year to compete with nations that have longer school years for children.

Spangler unsuccessfully made that proposal when he was N.C. Board of Education chairman several years ago. "I got in big trouble... for trying to do this before the time was right," he said. "I think the time is nearing right now."

Drummond described Spangler's proposals as "challenging."

"I've jotted them down and we will be talking about them," he said. Though educators want to encourage more students to take college-prep courses such as algebra and science, "that doesn't mean we're prepared to match the university system's requirements," he said.

Relic disagreed with Spangler's proposal to make SATs mandatory. The SAT is only a predictor of freshman academic performance, he said, but "we have made it the be-all and end-all of testing."

Candidates Have Old Convictions

HIGH POINT (AP) — A fourth candidate for High Point City Council has a misdemeanor criminal record, it was learned Tuesday.

The Rev. Kenneth Flemming acknowledged that he was convicted in Winston-Salem and placed on probation on an August 1986 charge of solicitation to commit a crime against nature.

Flemming propositioned a female undercover officer for oral sex, Lt. T.D. Martin of the Winston-Salem police said. Because the charge is a misdemeanor, it does not affect Flemming's eligibility to run for public office.

Flemming said his cousin propositioned the officer and that he did not. But, he said, he pleaded guilty because "I wasn't going to go through a whole lot of stuff."

The charge was brought to a reporter's attention by Flemming's opponent in the 1st Ward race, John Langford. Four of the 21 candidates for High Point City Council and High Point mayor have been convicted of misdemeanor charges.

The other three candidates with criminal pasts are:

—Reginald Whelpley, a candidate for the 4th Ward, who took money from a Guilford County elementary school PTA in 1981. District attorney's office records say Whelpley was convicted of attempted forgery, while clerk of court records say he was convicted of forgery.

—Henry Ray Norris, a mayoral candidate, was convicted in January 1984 of breaking and entering and received a sentence of 12 to 18 months that was suspended for five years.

Norris, a 21-year-old lawn worker, has said he made mistakes "in my younger days." He opposes High Point Mayor Judy Mendenhall and former Mayor Roy Culler, an incumbent council member, in the Oct. 6 primary.

—Johnny Lee Eleby, who is running for an at-large seat, had convictions between 1976 and 1981 in Guilford County District Court for larceny, altering checks and impersonating a law enforcement officer.

Lawmakers Back Guard's Presence In C. America

The new roads and medical assistance that National Guard troops can offer in underdeveloped countries improve the preparedness of reservists while also spreading good will about the United States, say two North Carolina lawmakers who recently visited Honduras and Ecuador.

"The American troops are involved in some real humanitarian projects," said state Rep. Coy Privette, R-Cabarrus. "They're doing more to build good will with the people of Honduras than the millions sent to the governments during the years that went into Swiss bank accounts."

Privette was invited to observe the work of reserve troops along with

Sen. Daniel Simpson, R-Burke, and Sen. Robert Shaw, R-Guilford. The three went to Panama Aug. 30, where they met with U.S. Embassy officials. On Sept. 1 they traveled to Ecuador, where they visited a road project in the Andes Mountains. The three visited Honduras Sept. 3, where reserve troops are building roads to give access to outlying villages.

Shaw said he was impressed with the medical teams that visited villages in Honduras. They would drop leaflets announcing their visit and then helicopters with doctors, dentists and veterinarians would visit the area, treating 1,200 to 1,400 people a day.

"It was a kind of person-to-person thing," Shaw said in a telephone interview. "I don't think either side will ever forget it. It was a tremendous experience for both sides, where the people really saw the American citizen."

Privette said many of the medical problems are caused by contaminated water, so troops dug new wells, along with putting new roofs on churches and school buildings.

Simpson could not be reached for comment on the trip. But Shaw said he also thought the projects were among the best for training troops and spreading good will about the United States.

"I think if any country that we need help with and any country that needs help, I don't know of a better way for our people to train. It's better than spending two weeks at Fort Bragg in a mock attack and it makes us many, many friends in that country."

PTL Lawyer Says He'll Stay On Case

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Roy Grutman says he's going to remain the lead counsel for the PTL television ministry, despite a bankruptcy judge's suggestion that he might want to "pack up his marbles and go home."

Grutman said Wednesday that charges of conflict of interest that have been levied against him by lawyers for former PTL leader Jim Bakker are serious but untrue, and he's not going to leave.

Judge Rufus Reynolds decided during a hearing that both sides should have 60 days starting Oct. 1 to take depositions before he rules on Bakker's motion to have Grutman disqualified from the case.

Reynolds warned Grutman that if he later is disqualified from the case, he will lose any fees he earns after Bakker's motion charging conflicting interests was filed.

Bakkers' attorneys say Grutman represents PTL and the ministry's new chairman, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, who took over the television ministry in March when Bakker admitted to having sex with a church secretary in 1980.

They also claim Grutman represented Bakker.

PTL attorneys earlier had filed documents saying Jim and Tammy Bakker were waging a personal vendetta when they accused Grutman of the conflict of interest.

Also during the hearing Wednesday, Reynolds ordered that Kevin Whittum and his family move out of an 11-bedroom home at PTL's Heritage USA theme park in Fort Mill.

Whittum is a 19-year-old victim of brittle-bone disease whose immediate family is the only occupant of home called "Kevin's House" for handicapped children. Reynolds said the five-member family should move out of the home at least until he rules on a motion for the Whittums to retain the house.

The house failed to meet building codes for use as a group home for the handicapped.

"Everyone wants to see Kevin have a place," Reynolds said. But, he said, "Everyone can't live in a castle."

The judge did not set a date for the Whittums to leave the house, and Whittum told reporters outside the courtroom, "We aren't asking, either."

Whittum contends that money PTL supporters have donated to the home should be considered separate from other PTL accounts. But Reynolds said that contention doesn't hold water.

"I don't think you've got any reasonable chance to win on your theory," the judge told Whittum's lawyer.

Grutman said PTL is offering Whittum the use of a four-bedroom house near Heritage USA that is currently occupied by Bakker's brother, Norman Bakker, who is moving.

In other action:

In a related development, Grutman said Wednesday that PTL leaders "held off as long as we could" before filing a complaint in U.S. Bankruptcy Court against Roe Messner, PTL's chief building contractor.

Durham Firm Says Site OK For Waste

DURHAM (AP) — As state officials mull over 14 potential sites for a hazardous-waste incinerator site, a Durham realtor has offered to sell the state land for the plant. But a group opposing a proposed Durham County site says the new location has the same drawbacks.

"While I encourage you to find a site other than Durham County, if you must place a treatment facility here, I have the perfect site for you," said a letter signed by Charles McBroom of McBroom Realty Inc.

McBroom Realty told the North Carolina Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission last month that it has up to 130 acres available north of Durham. The price is $25,000 an acre with a minimum purchase of 75 acres, McBroom said.

The land is between the Eno River and Ellerbee Creek. It is also about a mile west of the Gentry site, which the commission is considering in its search for a place to build the incinerator.

"That's even worse. It's again very close to the Eno River and Ellerbee Creek," said Jim Clark of Save the Water, a group formed to fight the Gentry site. He said either site should be subject to an environmental impact statement.

Fourteen sites in seven counties are on the commission's list.

McBroom said that rather than risk the value of his property being lowered by having an incinerator nearby, the landowner made a defensive offer to the commission.

The owner of the site involved in the offer "prefers the site on their property as next door to it," McBroom said. "I hope they go somewhere else, but that is a decision that will be made by the politicians. In the meantime, we are bound to do what's best for the principal we represent."

He declined to identify the owner of the land.

Robeson County Citizens' Group Says Protests Have Created 'A New Birth'

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — Jimmy Hunt says a snowflake weighs almost nothing, but when it sticks to other snowflakes, its burden can crush.

He likens snowflakes to the people of Robeson County, whose protests have snowballed since last year's shooting death of an unarmed Lumbee Indian by a sheriff's deputy, creating what Hunt calls a new birth in Robeson County.

The death of Jimmy Earl Cummings sparked open debate in the county over alleged police brutality, racial inequality, courtroom bias against the poor, unsolved murders, nepotism in county offices, drug trafficking and local politics.

"It's pulled the people together," said Hunt, community organizer for the Rural Advancement Fund's Justice Project office in Lumberton.

"The people of Robeson County used to feel that there was nothing they could do," Hunt said. "Whatever was done, they had to take."

But not anymore, according to Hunt and other leaders of Concerned Citizens for Better Government, a coalition of citizens-rights groups whose interests range from courts to racial violence.

The snowball started Nov. 1, 1986, the night Cummings, 36, of Fairmont was shot to death by Kevin Stone, a narcotics agent with the Sheriff's Department.

Stone, son of Sheriff Hubert Stone, stopped a car driven by Cummings and was searching for drug evidence when Cummings grabbed a bucket from the trunk and ran, authorities said. Stone chased him into a ditch and shot him when Cummings swung the bucket at him, authorities said.

At a coroner's inquest two weeks later, a jury ruled the shooting "an accident and/or self-defense."

Some people in Robeson County didn't agree. And they still don't.

"Nobody seems to want to answer that question: Why did the boy die that night?" Hunt said. "What it boils down to is, here's a man who's dead, and he didn't have to die."

The inquest sparked an outcry that led to the formation of Concerned Citizens and a series of public meetings and demonstrations. In April, attendance peaked at about 1,000 people who joined in a "peace march" to the steps of the county courthouse.

"The Cummings killing was the final straw for many citizens who for a long time have felt the abuse and neglect of the law enforcement and court systems of Robeson County," said the Rev. Mac Legerton, executive director of the Robeson County chapter of the national Clergy and Laity Concerned.

The local chapter was formed in 1980 to address problems of unemployment, the justice system, public education and land use.

"So the irony is that it was that slaying that was the stimulus for the beginning of this new coalition and the beginning of a new movement and commitment for justice, which won't die," Legerton said.

Concerned Citizens, the umbrella organization for the various activist groups, and a committee of the county Bar Association are establishing a grievance procedure for poor defendants who are dissatisfied with the performance of court-appointed lawyers.

Concerned Citizens' leaders say that could improve the court system, but they say they will continue to push for a public defender's office for more aggressive representation of poor defendants.

Sheriff Stone, in at least one meeting with leaders of Concerned Citizens, agreed for his advisory committee to review complaints forwarded from the group. He and coalition members have called the communication positive.

Legerton said Cummings' death personalized the injustices in the county "in the clearest way."

"Not only did you have a law enforcement officer as the perpetrator, the same officer was the son of the sheriff who in turn was cleared of any wrongdoing by a kangaroo court led by the district attorney," he said. "And those events personalized the issues of excessive force, nepotism ... and unprofessionalism, all in one week."

Anne Crain, director of the Rural Advancement Fund's Justice Project, said Cummings' death has raised people's awareness.

"Before the death, elected officials didn't seem to understand that they were answerable to the people, and the people didn't understand that either," she said.

Joy Johnson, head of the Robeson County Black Caucus, another group involved with Concerned Citizens, agreed that Cummings' death became the "pivotal point" of underlying unrest.

"I think it took that to arouse some people's interest and concern," said Johnson, a former state representative. "They had been dissatisfied, but they had no agenda to begin with."

Robeson Justice Project Keeping Eye On Courts

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — Judges in Robeson County courts can gaze out from the bench and see defendants, attorneys, clerks and bailiffs. And most days, there's someone watching the judges and lawyers, taking notes, tallying the number of times cases are delayed.

The watchdogs are from the Rural Advancement Fund Justice Project, a small, non-profit organization keeping an eye on the local courts and educating Robeson County residents on how to deal with the maze of the legal system.

"We're known as Rural Advancement Fund's Justice Project and Friend In Court, and that's what we try to be," said Jimmy Hunt, one of two community organizers for the program.

"The average person doesn't know what's going on in court," Hunt said. "They've never been to court. And they just need somebody there."

Hunt said he and his co-workers were there when a Robeson County woman, charged with communicating threats, had her case dismissed Feb. 25 after she had showed up for trial over seven sessions of Superior Court only to have it rescheduled each time.

A judge dismissed the case because the woman, Joyce Locklear of Pembroke, had been denied a speedy trial. Hunt said the woman had spent 55 days in the courthouse awaiting trial.

Justice Project officials claim that such "horror stories" abound in local courts.

"I was brought up to believe that everything that was going on in the courthouse was right and good, until I began to go over there and look," Hunt said. "We're not out here to turn all these criminals loose. ... I believe that if a man's committed a crime, then he ought to pay. But do it the right way."

The Justice Project is housed in a one-room building in downtown Lumberton, a few blocks from the county courthouse and jail where the staff's three members spend most of their time.

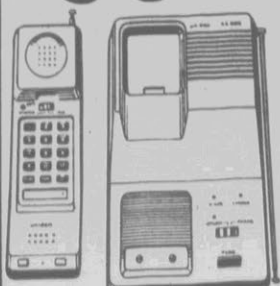

The office was established in Lumberton in 1984 as a project of the Rural Justice Center, a New Hampshire-based organization that tracked legal problems in rural areas. They were referred to Robeson County by an official of the Rural Advancement Fund, a farm-survival program with roots in the post-Depression years.

Anne Crain, then a part-time court researcher for another citizens-rights organization, was hired as Justice Project director. Working alone, it was her job to examine the court system in order to "make it operate the way it was designed to operate in the first place," she said.

"Really, the way to make a difference in the courts was for ... the people to demand a change," Ms. Crain said.

Air Fares

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — American Airlines says it plans to raise the fares used most by business travelers by $5 to $15 each way.

The increase announced Tuesday, which would affect midrange fares priced between full coach and excursion, is the latest attempt in a series of actions by airlines recently to raise prices at a time when passenger traffic is at record highs.

In some cases, competing airlines have refused to go along.

But American's latest proposal, which would affect as much as 25 percent of its seat inventory, was matched by the airline's two largest competitors, Delta Air Lines and United Airlines.

School Fire

RALEIGH (AP) — A fire apparently set by an arsonist caused about $4,000 damage early Wednesday to a mobile classroom at Sanderson High School.

After dousing that blaze, firefighters checked other mobile classrooms at the school and discovered another had minor exterior smoke damage from the blaze.

Firefighters were alerted by a delivery man who spotted the smoke while making a delivery to the school, said Conway H. Haswell, head of the schools' safety office.

Delay Sought

RALEIGH (AP) — A former Northern Telecom Inc. employee, accused of swindling the company of more than $1.5 million through a bogus corporation, has asked a federal court to delay the company's suit against her until a criminal investigation is completed.

Mary C. Cole of Raleigh, the ex-employee; her husband, Marion P. Cole, a former senior manager with the company; and her mother, Nathalie (Nan) Voeltzke, were named in a suit filed by Northern Telecom on Aug. 11. They are accused of defrauding the company by sabotaging a contract the company had with a manufacturer. Then, the suit says, they secretly set themselves up as middlemen to sell the same product to Northern Telecom at an inflated price.

Northern Telecom is located in Research Triangle Park.

Tuesday, lawyers representing Mrs. Cole, A&D Test Equipment Co. and Wausau Enterprises, the two allegedly fraudulent companies, sought to postpone the civil suit in U.S. District Court. Citing a reported investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the motion said that a delay is necessary to "prevent abridgment of (Mrs. Cole's) ... rights under the Fifth Amendment" of the U.S. Constitution. Lawyers for Ms. Voeltzke filed a similar motion.

Staff Member

WASHINGTON (AP) — Elizabeth Colton, a former diplomatic correspondent for National Public Radio, has joined the media staff of Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C.

As special assistant for communications, Ms. Colton will coordinate relations with the national media and will take responsibility for coverage of Sanford's foreign policy initiatives. Ms. Colton also will handle general media writing assignments in the office and will coordinate with press secretary Tom Lawton on other press duties.

Ms. Colton has lived in Chapel Hill, Morganton and Asheville.

Cigarette

NEW YORK (AP) — Lorillard is introducing its new cigarette brand, Harley-Davidson cigarettes, with a test market launch beginning in September in Terre Haute, Ind.

"The Harley-Davidson name was licensed because of Harley's all-American quality image," said brand manager Victor Lindsley. "Our objective is to capitalize on Harley-Davidson's pre-existing image to generate interest and appeal to the male segment of the cigarette market."

Charges Dropped

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Families of four Iredell County residents killed in a head-on collision left a Statesville courtroom in anger and tears after charges against a teenager who survived were dismissed.

"Four people's dead but yet nobody's guilty of it," Donald Faulk said Wednesday. His mother, Donnie Thompson Faulk, 53, and daughter, Heather, 7, died in the July 15 wreck north of Statesville.

William Dangler, 16, was charged with four counts of death by motor vehicle, a charge punishable by up to two years in prison. His brother, Lorin, also survived.

After two prosecution witnesses testified at Wednesday's hearing in Iredell District Court, Dangler's attorney, Edwin Pressly, asked Judge Samuel Cathey to dismiss the charges because the prosecution had not shown Dangler was driving the pickup truck that hit the car Donnie Faulk was driving.

Sounding surprised, Cathey asked prosecuting attorney Richard Phillips if he had anything to say. He didn't and Cathey dismissed the charges.

Storm Brings Winds, Large Hail

By The Associated Press

Winds toppled a construction trailer and tore the roof off a restaurant in Charlotte and dime-sized hail was reported in Wayne County Wednesday, but no injuries were reported, officials said.

A line of heavy thunderstorms moved through the eastern part of the state Wednesday night, with dime-sized hail reported in Wayne County. But there were no reports of damages as the storm system moved through.

Charlotte Sgt. L.L. Kelsey said the trailer was blown over about 3:20 p.m. Four people inside the trailer escaped without injuries.

Charles Helms, a cook at the Sandpiper Restaurant two blocks away from the construction site, said he and other employees were getting ready for work when they heard an electrical transformer outside explode and the roof begin to pull away from the walls.

"We were real scared. We thought that the building was hit by lightning," he said. "We just thank God nobody was hurt, but it looks like the business will be hurt financially."

"We thought that it was a tornado," Helms said. "It blew the entire gable into the parking lot."

Trees were reported down in southeast Charlotte, the weather service said, with power lines down in Matthews, about 10 miles southeast of the city.

The damage was blamed on a slow moving thunderstorm that produced high winds and heavy rain in the area.

Forecasters said shallow flooding was possible in flood-prone areas because the ground was already saturated from rains in the past week.

Bragg Banning Cigarette Sales

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — A year after first cracking down on smoking, Army officials say they will remove cigarette vending machines from Fort Bragg by Sept. 23.

Last year, the Army instituted controls on military and civilian employees. The new rules include limited or total bans on smoking in Army facilities and vehicles.

Fort Bragg's contract with Nance Vending and Food Service Inc. of Spring Lake ends Sept. 23. Any new contract will not include the sale of cigarettes, said Lt. Col. Rick Kierman, the XVIIIth Airborne Corps and Fort Bragg public affairs officer.

Ferman Pape, Nance division vice president, said the company will lose some business from that decision. But he said that cigarette sales at the base had dropped dramatically over the past year because of the Army's encouragement to stop smoking.

Cindy Loses Storm Traits

MIAMI (AP) — Tropical Storm Cindy buffeted the western most Azore Islands this morning as it moved northward, transforming from a tropical storm to a conventional mid-Atlantic storm, according to the National Hurricane Center.

"It's moving toward cooler northern waters that will weaken it and rob it of its tropical characteristics," Hurricane Forecaster Bob Case said today.

The loss of characteristics, a well defined circulating pattern with the strongest winds in the center, does not necessarily mean Cindy will die.

"Weather it will decrease or not is questionable, with the colder weather it could energize," Case said. However, once Cindy is declared non-tropical the National Hurricane Center will issue a last advisory with its position and strength and stop monitoring it.

"Cindy will probably be declared extra-tropical today and the last advisory will be issued at noon or 6 p.m.," Case said.

At 6 a.m. EDT today, the third-named storm of the 1987 Atlantic hurricane season was centered about 75 miles northeast of the Azores, near latitude 40.5 north and longitude 30.5 west, according to Case.

The storm was packing sustained winds of 40 mph and was moving northeast at 25 mph, he said.

Cindy, was declared a tropical storm on Monday when its winds exceeded 39 mph. Tropical storms become hurricanes when their sustained winds hit 74 mph.

Typically, nine to 10 storms form during the hurricane season, with five or six becoming hurricanes. So far this year three storms and one hurricane have formed, which is below average for the middle of the season.

Islip To Bury Old Garbage

NEW YORK (AP) — A state appeals court has cleared the way for the community of Islip to dump ash from the infamous garbage barge in its landfill.

A four-judge panel in the Appellate Division of state Supreme Court said Wednesday the ash was not hazardous and could be buried.

The New York Public Interest Research Group appealed for a permanent injunction to block dumping the ash, which was left after about 3,100 tons of trash were burned in Brooklyn's Southwest Incinerator.

The judges cited evidence from a trial before state Supreme Court Justice Dominic Lodato in their decision. In New York, Supreme Court is a trial-level court.

The trial "established that all of the studies and tests performed on the waste by various city, state and federal agencies demonstrated that the waste was non-toxic and non-hazardous," the decision said. Randall Weiner, a NYPIRG attorney, argued Tuesday that the ashes contained hazardous concentrations of lead and cadmium.

The barge Mobro 4000 left Islip on March 22 carrying commercial garbage from Long Island and New York City.

Plans by a private developer to turn it into methane gas in North Carolina fell through and the barge unsuccessfully sought another dumping site in several states and three countries.

Beach Pipeline

ISLE OF WIGHT, Va. (AP) — The Isle of Wight County Planning Commission has refused to let Virginia Beach run an 11-mile stretch of its proposed Lake Gaston pipeline through the county.

The 5-to-3 vote Tuesday night goes to the Board of Supervisors, which must either accept or reject the recommendation.

Isle of Wight is the first of seven localities that will be asked to consider the $194 million, 84-mile pipeline from Lake Gaston, which straddles the Virginia-North Carolina border. Although Virginia Beach was prepared for some opposition, city officials did not anticipate it from a locality that had agreed to participate in the project.

THE NOSE KNOWS — Scientists Avery N. Gilbert, left, and Charles J. Wysocki pose beside a giant nose and mouth sculpture outside the Monell Chemical Senses Center in Philadelphia. They developed a survey for the

Sniff Survey Gets Smell Reports From 1.5 Million

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — National Geographic magazine asked its readers to stop and smell the paper, and a surprising 1.5 million people from around the world responded in what ended up being the largest survey of smell ever done.

The survey, consisting of questionnaires containing scratch-and-sniff panels, produced an unprecedented amount of information about smell, the least understood of the five senses, the National Geographic Society said today.

Preliminary findings of the survey, which resulted in so much data that full analysis may take years, confirmed some beliefs about smell and called others into question.

—Women usually smell more acutely than men. However, pregnant women may experience a diminished sense of smell, opposite of what had been believed.

—Both pleasant and unpleasant odors can evoke vivid memories of the past, but this ability appears to decrease gradually with age.

—Odor detection ability declines slowly with age, starting when people are in their 20s, although it remains near youthful levels well into the 60s.

—Contrary to some beliefs, factory workers can identify odors better than people who work outdoors.

—People with allergies can smell as well as those without this problem.

—Almost two out of three people have suffered at least a temporary loss of smell, usually because of a cold, flu or sinus infection, but only 1.2 percent have a permanent loss.

—People in different areas of the world react very differently to a sweaty scent, with almost a third of the people in the United States not being able to pick it up at all.

The survey, mailed to 11 million National Geographic members in the September 1986 magazine, was prepared and conducted by Drs. Avery N. Gilbert and Charles J. Wysocki of the Monell Chemical Senses Center in Philadelphia, an institution devoted exclusively to the study of taste and smell.

Gilbert and Wysocki said their first findings are based upon a random selection of 26,200 replies from the United States and, for purposes of international comparison, all 100,000 responses from abroad, including Europe, Africa, Asia, Latin America and Australia.

Readers were asked to fill out a form that included questions about age, sex, occupation, race and disease history. The form also included six panels containing encapsulated odors of "sweat," bananas, musk, cloves, natural gas and roses.

The researchers found, for instance, that more than 97 percent of Americans could smell the odor of compounds added to natural gas to give it its characteristic foul warning smell. And about 58 percent correctly identified the odor as gas.

However, they found, people over age 60 increasingly rated the odor "not unpleasant," raising questions about the suitability of the smell as a warning of danger.

The scientists said one of the more surprising discoveries of the survey was varying worldwide reaction to the "sweat" scent, a chemical called androstene. The results indicated widespread "odor blindness" about certain smells, they said.

In the United States, 37 percent of men and 29 percent of women could not smell the odor at all.

Critics Say Administration Dragging Feet On Elderly

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission says it filed a record number of age discrimination lawsuits last year, but critics contend the agency isn't doing all it could to protect elderly workers.

The number of charges filed with the commission under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act increased from 9,479 in 1981 to more than 26,000 this year, according to the National Senior Citizens Law Center.

"EEOC litigation has not nearly matched this threefold increase in cases coming before it," executive director Burton Fretz said in testimony submitted for a Senate hearing today.

What's more, Fretz said, broad complaints against large companies and entire industries have fallen victim to the agency's February 1985 move toward enforcement in cases involving individuals and away from those involving systemic age discrimination.

"It is the number of persons helped, not the number of cases filed, which is the more important criterion in gauging EEOC effectiveness," Fretz said in his testimony. He cited House research showing that 2,064 people were compensated through all EEOC cases in the first half of 1985, compared with 15,328 in 1980.

The testimony was submitted for a hearing by the Senate Special Committee on Aging, chaired by Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont. Congress passed the age discrimination law 20 years ago.

EEOC Chairman Clarence Thomas said in his testimony that a record 109 lawsuits were filed under the age discrimination law in fiscal 1986, compared with 47 in 1980.

Thomas also said victims of age discrimination were awarded $2.3 million in 1980 as a result of EEOC litigation, compared with $36.6 million in 1986. Through EEOC administrative action that stopped short of lawsuits, age discrimination victims won monetary relief last year totaling $18 million, compared with $12 million in 1980, Thomas said.

Thomas contended the EEOC has "aggressively investigated and prosecuted claims of age discrimination on an individual, classwide and a systemic basis." The number of cases concluded, the number of lawsuits initiated and the amount of money recovered "clearly show this commission's commitment to eradicating age discrimination," he said.

In an opening statement, Melcher said constituents had told him their cases languished at the EEOC for months without action, and others said the EEOC staff was poorly trained. "Some constituents have even told me EEOC staff members have lost the charges they filed," he said in the statement.

Melcher said he was concerned about a recent congressional report that found an EEOC field office in Birmingham, Ala., was closing nearly one-third of its cases without a full investigation and instructing workers to ignore complaints requiring extensive investigation.

The senator also said he was troubled by a growing backlog of cases and processing delays to the point that more than one-third of the litigation proposals forwarded to the commission were past a two-year statute of limitations.

According to Melcher's staff, the EEOC's general counsel recommended in 1986 and 1987 that lawsuits be filed in fewer than 1 percent of the age discrimination complaints lodged with the agency.

Of 17,443 such complaints in fiscal 1986, the staff said, only 165 were recommended or litigation. This fiscal year, as of Sept. 3, the staff said 10,886 age discrimination complaints had been filed and the general counsel had recommended lawsuits be filed in 82 of the cases.

President Pays Bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — Taxpayers are not feeding the president's dogs or buying President Reagan's toothbrushes or paying to shine his shoes, according to first lady Nancy Reagan's press secretary.

The costs of all the Reagans' personal expenses are billed to the president, says Elaine Crispin in a letter to advice columnist Ann Landers.

"People are surprised that they pay for their own toothbrushes," Mrs. Crispin said Wednesday after her letter was published.

The question came up when the Landers column published a reader's letter asking who finances the personal expenses of the president's married daughter, Maureen, when she stays at the White House.

Mrs. Landers said she didn't know the answer but would be glad to print any comment from the Reagans.

Mrs. Crispin responded: "Your readers might be interested to know that President and Mrs.

Reagan do, in fact, pay for the personal expenses incurred when family members or friends stay or dine in the White House during private visits.

"Those same readers may also be surprised to learn that President and Mrs. Reagan are also charged for their own personal expenses, including private meals and beverages, dry cleaning, shoe repair, dog supplies and other items too numerous to mention."

Mrs. Landers wrote in her copyright column distributed by the Los Angeles Times Syndicate and Creators Syndicate, "I am just as eager as the next person when it comes to saving a few pennies on taxes, but it seems to me that we should be able to pay for our president's meals and, yes, buy dog food for the White House pets."

The Reagans have two dogs — Rex, who stays at the White House, and Lucky who is on their California ranch.

TAKE IT EASY

"Keep smooth, don't drive jerky, and use a feather foot." That's the best way to keep stinky with gasoline and keep safer at the same time. This is the top fuel economy tip offered by auto engineers who have made a study of squeezing the most out of a drop of gasoline. Their know-how comes in most handy during the current energy crisis.

Learning to drive more smoothly to save fuel doesn't involve a lot of tricks. It isn't some kind of black magic. It simply boils down to practice and concentration. By following the instructions of these experts, an inexperienced teenage team averaged better fuel economy as a group than the adult professional drivers in a national fuel economy run of 3,243 miles across the country.

If you want to economize on gasoline drive as smoothly as possible and keep accelerator movements to an absolute minimum.

Firefighters Let Tanker Chemical Blaze Burn Out

By JANET McCONAUGHEY
Associated Press Writer
NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Firefighters decided to pull back and let a fierce chemical fire in a railroad tank car burn itself out today because of a risk of explosion, authorities said. More than 900 people were evacuated.

The car, loaded with 34,000 gallons of toxic butadiene, caught fire before dawn Wednesday in a railroad storage yard next to two interstate highways, bringing most city traffic to a crawl, authorities said.

Three firefighters were taken to a hospital after apparently inhaling fumes from the fire, authorities. They were not believed seriously injured, said Fire Superintendent William McCrossen.

"I've pulled my men back away from there," McCrossen said Wednesday night. "We've scrapped the plan we were going to put into effect. It's too dangerous to put anyone in there."

Firefighters had planned to shoot water into the car, forcing the chemical to the top where it could be vented and burned off.

Instead, firehoses were used to spray down the car, which was bulging at the seams from the heat, to prevent an explosion, said McCrossen.

State Police Sgt. Mike Taylor said the chemical was burning at a rate of 400 gallons an hour Wednesday night. It was expected to burn itself out sometime this morning.

Butadiene fumes can irritate the skin, cause dizziness and even kill if inhaled in sufficient quantities.

"It's not toxic when burning, so it's better for it to burn," said Trooper Ray Meyers of the State Police hazardous materials unit.

Police Chief Warren Woodfork estimated 900 people were evacuated. An additional 21 blocks were cleared out Wednesday night, authorities said.

The interstate highways and several other routes were closed, causing daylong traffic jams. Nine schools were closed, and shelters were opened in two gymnasiums.

Amtrak had to bus passengers between Mobile, Ala., and New Orleans because of the closed rail line, said Johnny Lacy, a reservation sales representative. The cause of the fire was not immediately known. McCrossen said the chemical has a low flash point and catches fire at 112 degrees.

DEBUT — Actress-model Donna Rice appears in an ad for "No Excuses" sportswear, shown publicly for the first time in New York on Wednesday. She gained a degree of fame as the "other woman" in former Sen. Gary Hart's life. (AP Laserphoto)

Donna Rice Ads Debut

By PAULA SPAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

NEW YORK — She would not say whether she had watched Gary Hart on "Nightline" the evening before. She would not say how much a licensing and marketing firm had paid her to appear in two television commercials, about to be previewed, for No Excuses jeans. She would not answer any questions at all.

All Donna Rice would say, giggling several times during her minute-and-a-half statement to a snickering press corps at the Water Club, was "you're probably wondering — no, I know you're wondering — about how I feel about being involved with a product called No Excuses." She had been "a bit skeptical" herself when a New York ad agency first contacted her about the campaign, Rice allowed.

But she had concluded that "the No Excuses concept" represented "an honest, responsible and self-confident approach to life," an insight that now allowed her to feel "very comfortable" with the name and the deal. And with the jeans, which are of the streaky, acid-washed variety and which Rice wore with a matching jacket, apricot T-shirt, and No Excuses sneakers, unlaced.

The president of the marketing and licensing company behind the sportswear line was more blunt. The object of the campaign, said Neil Cole, president of New Retail Concepts Inc., was brand awareness among consumers. Rice, the aspiring model whose association with presidential candidate Hart helped torpedo his campaign last spring, had "a very high profile, one that would create the attention that we desired."

"It looks like we have achieved our goals," Cole added, looking around the room at 12 camera crews (including all three networks), a score of photographers (including both major wire services) and a flock of reporters both local and national. Hart's "Nightline" appearance, another spokesman swore, was "very coincidental timing."

The 15-second commercials — first shown on MTV, the rock cable network, and on several local TV stations Wednesday night — are the work of a British director. (The president of the ad agency likes English directors because they have "a high taste level.")

Americans Still Marry, But Wait Longer

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans in record numbers are staying single through their 20s and even into their early 30s, but nine out of 10 will still marry during their lifetimes, the Census Bureau says.

In a new report Wednesday, the bureau said the percentage of men and women below the age of 35 who have not yet married has risen dramatically since 1970.

Among men between the ages of 30 and 34, those who had never married totaled 23.1 percent, according to estimates made last March. That was almost 2½ times the 1970 figure of 9.4 percent.

Among women in the 30-34 age group, 14.6 percent had never been married, according to the 1987 report, more than double the 6.2 percent in 1970.

In other age groups, 61 percent of women aged 20 to 24 had not married in 1987, compared with 36 percent in 1970. For women aged 25 to 29, the figure was 29 percent in 1987 against 11 percent in 1970.

For men, 78 percent aged 20 to 24 had not married by this year, compared with 55 percent in 1970. Among men in the 25-29 age group, 42 percent were not married, compared with 19 percent in 1970.

"The percentage that remains single throughout their lifetime is likely to be higher than in the past in view of the increases in never-marrieds among today's young adults," the report said.

This year, 4.5 percent of men and 5.5 percent of women who are 65 or older have never been married, figures in line with historical trends.

But Steve Rawlings of the Census Bureau said the percentage is likely to double to around 10 percent for both sexes, based on the growing number who have not yet married.

"There has been quite a significant increase in the number of people who have never married in their 20s and early 30s," Rawlings said in a telephone interview. "Some people are drawing the conclusion that a large percentage will never marry, but our own best guess is that 90 percent will eventually marry."

In 1987, the median age for an American bride was 23.6 years, compared with 20.3 years in 1950. The median age means that half the women have married by this age. The 1987 figure was the highest age since recordkeeping began in 1890.

For men, the median age for the first marriage climbed to 25.8 years this year, the highest it has been since 1900, when it was 25.9 years.

The median age at first marriage had been declining for most of this century until the 1960s, when it started to rise as the post-war Baby Boom generation chose to pursue education and careers, postponing marriage and family obligations.

The statistics on marriage were contained in the Census Bureau study "Marital Status and Living Arrangements: March 1987."

The report found that there were 89.5 million households in March 1987, an increase of 8.7 million since 1980.

The typical married couple with young children is not so typical anymore, the study said. The percentage of married couples with children under the age of 18 fell to 27.5 percent this year, compared to 40.3 percent of all households in 1970.

The report attributed the decline to higher divorce rates and postponement of marriage and child bearing.

The number of Americans living alone accounted for 23.6 percent of American households in March 1987, up from 17.1 percent in 1970, but the increase in this category has slowed dramatically during this decade, due in part to falling numbers of the below-25 age group and to a growing trend for young people to delay leaving home for economic reasons.

The report said increases in single-person households had accounted for 42.8 percent of total growth in households from 1970 to 1980. But this category accounted for just 32.5 percent of the increase from 1980 to 1987.

"The elderly still comprise a large part of the live-alone population, but the under-25 segment is declining," Rawlings said. "More young persons are choosing to live at home with their parents, given the difficulty of establishing a household with the high cost of living today."

Reagan Rejects Criticism

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, rejecting criticism of his civil rights record from Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, says he was raised in a household "where the greatest sin was prejudice."

Marshall, in a rare attack by a member of the court against a sitting president, said Reagan ranked at "the bottom" of American presidents in terms of racial justice.

Speaking of Reagan in an interview with columnist Carl Rowan, Marshall said, "Honestly, I think he's down with (Herbert) Hoover and that group. (Woodrow) Wilson. When we (blacks) really didn't have a chance."

Asked during a dinner Wednesday for Swedish Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson for reaction to Marshall's statements, Reagan said, "I hope he will be informed that that isn't my record and I will point to the record we had not only in this administration but as governor of California, and I was raised in a household where the greatest sin was prejudice."

"From boyhood on, I have been on the side of civil rights and no discrimination and I am just sorry that he is not aware of that," Reagan said.

Earlier, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Reagan "has an outstanding civil rights record" and "has supported racial equality in the last six years of this administration, and I can't understand his (Marshall's) remarks, frankly."

In the past, Reagan has voiced frustration about his reputation among blacks. Critics have noted that the president proposed giving tax credits to schools practicing racial segregation, had opposed making Martin Luther King's birthday a federal holiday and had resisted extension of the Voting Rights Act.

Fitzwater said, "We would not back away from our civil rights record one inch."

Railway

BOLZANO, Italy (AP) — The busy Brenner railway line linking Italy to Austria and West Germany was blocked early Wednesday after a freight train derailed.

Five freight cars went off the tracks for unknown reasons, knocked down power lines and blocked both the north and southbound tracks near the Brenner border point north of this Alto Adige capital, officials said.

Passengers were being transferred by bus to and from the Austrian station of Matri as teams of rail workers tried to restore service, they said.

New Device May Reduce Collisions

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new device that could be installed on the U.S. airline fleet within four years would help pilots cut the number of in-flight collisions by three-fourths, the head of the Federal Aviation Administration says.

FAA Administrator Allan McArtor told a House panel Wednesday that the equipment would prevent 77 percent of future collisions involving airliners.

"The availability of collision avoidance systems is particularly important given projections for continued air traffic growth," McArtor told members of the transportation, aviation and materials subcommittee.

The panel, by a voice vote, sent the full Science, Space and Technology Committee a bill requiring the FAA to complete development and approval of the system within 18 months.

Thirty months after the instrument's certification, all aircraft with more than 30 seats would be required to carry the device, according to the legislation sponsored by Rep. Ron Packard, R-Calif.

The same measure was approved in August by the House Public Works and Transportation Committee.

McArtor's four-year timetable was called "reasonable" by Jim Burnett, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, who has frequently clashed with the FAA over safety improvements. But J. Roger Fleming, a senior vice president of the Air Transport Association, which represents U.S. airlines, said the proposed timetable was "ambitious and will be very difficult to meet."

The bill is similar to a rule the FAA proposed last month that would require planes with more than 30 seats to have the device three years after the rule becomes final. It should take about a year to formally adopt the rule, McArtor said.

But McArtor cautioned that it was unlikely the equipment could be in wide use sooner because it will take time to install the gear and train pilots to use it.

"It is a complex piece of avionics that requires training of pilots, an installation program" by the airlines and that faces production limitations by manufacturers, he said.

The push for the new instrumentation comes at a time of a growing number of air safety incidents. According to FAA figures, there were 752 reported near collisions involving all types of aircraft in the first eight months of 1987, up 35 percent from 556 during the same period last year.

Reagan Says Late November Best Time For Soviet Summit

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he is hopeful an arms control agreement can be reached with the Soviet Union on intermediate-range missiles and he thinks late November would be the best time for a summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

"We all feel there is grounds for great optimism" about the arms talks in Geneva, Reagan told reporters Wednesday at a state dinner for Swedish Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson.

"Some points remain to be settled, but we are all working and hope to reach an agreement," the president said.

Reagan said he had heard October and November suggested as dates for the summit in the United States if there is to be one and added, "We would think late November would probably be best."

Asked if he would invite Gorbachev to his California ranch, the president said, "I would very much like to have him see our country and see the things he would like to see. I wouldn't want him to think we were staging anything."

Meanwhile, the nation's top arms-control official predicted Wednesday that Gorbachev will come to the United States before the end of November, The Los Angeles Times reported today.

Kenneth L. Adelman, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said negotiators are working out the last details of a treaty banning medium-range nuclear missiles, and he expects the two heads of state to sign the treaty in late October or late November.

"The Soviets seem far more anxious for an agreement with Ronald Reagan before he leaves office than I had thought," Adelman said.

A summit must wait until at least mid-October because preparations will take that long, Adelman said. Failing that, the meeting would have to be put off until late November because Gorbachev will be involved in celebrations of the 70th anniversary of the Communist revolution in the early part of the month, he added.

Adelman said the treaty emerging from negotiations is very close to the original U.S. arms-control proposal made in 1981. He called the pact "very good," but suggested the Soviets have more to gain from an agreement because Moscow has a substantial advantage over the West in conventional forces.

"Arms control, by and large, serves Soviet interests far more than it serves our interests, and they have a real stake in having arms control be the centerpiece of U.S.-Soviet relations," he said.

Adelman previously announced he will leave the administration shortly after the expected summit.

Texas Executes Inmate Convicted In 1976 Slaying Of Parole Officer

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A man who shot to death a probation officer during a burglary but spared the victim's wife and daughter because he killed only "dopers and pigs" was executed by injection today.

Joseph Starvaggi, 34, went to his death silently for the 1976 burglary of John Denson, whose wife and 13-year-old daughter heard Denson beg for his life before Starvaggi shot him dead.

Starvaggi, a cement finisher and native of Champaign, Ill., coughed twice and gasped twice before doctors pronounced him dead at 12:30 a.m., eight minutes after the lethal drugs began passing into his arms.

Starvaggi, whose record included arrests for burglary and marijuana possession, lost appeals Wednesday in U.S. District Court in Houston and the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans before the U.S. Supreme Court, on a 6-2 vote, also rejected pleas for a reprieve.

Starvaggi, the 26th murderer to death here since the state resumed executions in 1982 and the sixth this year, spent his final day in a small holding cell adjacent to the death chamber and declined to have a final evening meal.

Prison officials said he remained calm throughout the day. He requested no visitors and no personal witnesses to his death.

The Denson burglary and slaying occurred the evening of Nov. 19, 1976, as Starvaggi and at least two other men forced their way into the family's rural Montgomery County home about 50 miles north of Houston.

Denson's wife and daughter, tied hand and foot and forced to lie under a blanket, heard Denson — already shot once — beg for his life before Starvaggi shot him two more times, killing him, authorities said.

Starvaggi and another man, G.W. Green, were convicted and sentenced to death. Glen Earl Martin received a life prison term. Charges against a fourth man were dismissed.

"Oh, good! One down, one to go," Denson's widow, Grace, said after she was informed of the execution.

"I've gone through bitterness. I've gone through everything. I don't like to be bitter but I am. Why has this taken so long?"

The apparent motive for the break-in was to steal a $6,000 gun collection owned by Denson, who was a county juvenile probation officer.

Mrs. Denson recalled Wednesday how Green insisted that Starvaggi also kill her and her daughter, Susan.

"I shoot dopers and pigs but I don't shoot straights," she said Starvaggi told him. Then, she said Starvaggi told her, "I killed your old man. You had a good old man."

The two teams were really marching up and down the field in the 1985 Super Bowl. The winning San Francisco 49ers made 31 first downs and the Miami Dolphins had 19.

Budget Outlook Worsened During Congressional Break

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — In Congress, the budget is like the weather: Everybody's complaining about it, but nobody seems to be doing anything about it.

During the lawmakers' summer recess, new estimates showed the red ink getting worse, not better as previously supposed. And the Federal Reserve raised its discount rate on loans to member banks — a move which will cost the government billions of dollars in additional debt payments.

That bad news could help push deficit reduction back to the top of the congressional agenda. But on their first day back in town Wednesday, lawmakers made clear there were no new ideas on how to break through months of stalemate on a 1988 fiscal blueprint.

Democratic leaders, who proposed a $19.3 billion tax increase in their budget, renewed their attack on President Reagan and his veto threats, which cover a wide range of pending legislation but focus mostly on budget issues.

"Old men dream dreams, and young men have visions," Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said. "And I hope he'll have a vision to cut out the veto talk."

"It may be that the president is intent on scuttling any attempt to reduce the deficit," said House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, referring to Reagan's resistance to any new taxes. "We will do the best we can to bring about the maximum deficit reduction."

House GOP leaders scheduled a news conference for today to put the blame on Democratic leaders for the money woes.

Lawmakers say there would be little point in taking the political poison of passing a tax increase if Reagan were sure to veto the bill in the end. Reagan has threatened to veto any tax increase, with the administration contending the $6 billion in revenue-raising budget contains were not taxes but "user fees" and other acceptable levies.

One lever to pry loose the budget issue could be the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law.

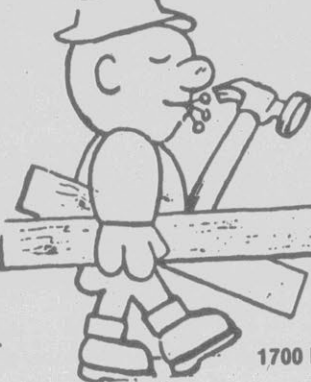

The 1985 law was emasculated by a

Supreme Court ruling. But it still could force deficit-cutting votes upon lawmakers that will be embarrassing unless they can point to real progress on the deficit.

So far this year, Congress has failed to pass any of the 13 annual spending bills, which are rarely done by the Oct. 1 deadline. It has failed to enact a plan to put new teeth into Gramm-Rudman and the legislation's goal of a balanced budget. The latest in a series of temporary bills to increase the huge federal debt expires Sept. 23.

Sen. Pete V. Domenici of New Mexico, senior Republican on the budget committee, said with or without a Gramm-Rudman plan, he is working with other lawmakers to close the budget gap. However, he said "we can't get $36 billion" in deficit reduction, as the Democrats proposed in their tax-raising budget.

Domenici said he had been discussing his plans with White House Chief of Staff Howard H. Baker Jr., the former Senate majority leader, but there was no attempt yet to reach compromise.

Centenarian Keeps Young

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The only difficulty David Kane recalls about reaching 100 is that he couldn't get his driver's license renewed.

Nothing else seems to bother Kane, a prolific artist so busy he has no time for an afternoon nap or television in the evening.

And he's adjusting to the loss of his driver's license.

"Now I have to take buses or walk," said Kane, the epitome of health at 102. "It's one of my hardships."

Kane lives alone, cleans his apartment, cooks his meals, shops, paints over 60 canvases a year and is described by the American Heart Association as its best volunteer campaigner.

"Work. That's the only thing that will keep you young," explained Kane, whose working life was spent as a photographer and portrait artist in New York City.

The walls of his living room and bedroom studio are neatly filled with community awards and his favorite paintings.

"These are my personal treasures. I live with them," Kane said.

Prominently displayed above the piano she once played is his portrait of Wilhelmina, his wife of 66 years, who died in 1971.

Time seems unimportant to this centenarian who forgets dates, but recalls details of his youth with great clarity.

The youngest of six children, he remembers his childhood in the marshlands of Western Russia in the Dnepr Valley and the hardships endured by his mother, who raised her children alone.

"She ran a roadside provision store and, on the side, sold a little vodka to make ends meet," he said.

Repeated raids by peasant gangs finally forced them to move to Pinsk where Mendel, an older brother, became involved in an underground Jewish revolutionary movement before the turn of the century. Finally, to save his life, Mendel was sent to the United States.

"Every month, Mendel sent us a letter and a money order," Kane said. The money was used to bring the Kane family to the United States in the early 1890s.

After high school, Kane worked in a photo studio in Brooklyn for years, and later owned his own.

"I earned $5 a week," he laughed. It was then he began to sketch and paint professionally.

"A customer would look at a photograph and think it would make a good painting. So I made a painting."

Kane moved here in 1967 and during his wife's lengthy illness became associated with the American Heart Association. He now spends much of his time painting and donates his canvases to the charity.

Each February, Kane participates in an annual door-to-door drive for funds. Commendations he's received attest to his being the oldest volunteer for the charity and one of its best money-raisers in South Florida.

Kane considers his longevity a blessing. He's never been seriously ill and contends he feels as he did a half-century ago. He eats two meals a day consisting of vegetables and fish.

"I make my own juices from fresh fruit. You should eat good food," he said.

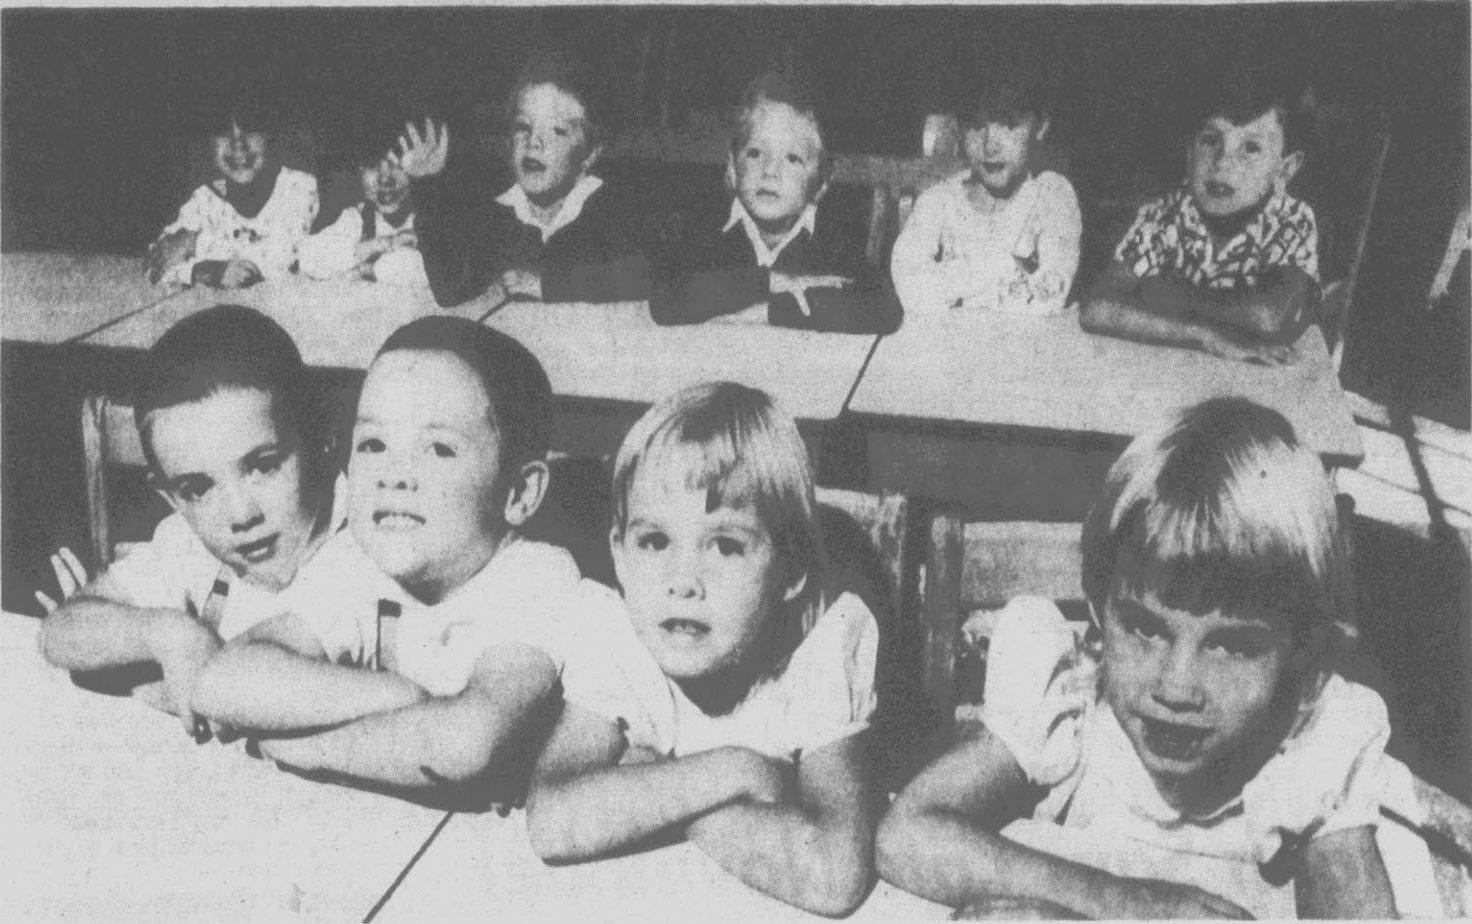

"My mother told me I never had children's diseases. I don't wear glasses and no hearing aid," he said proudly, "and I don't catch colds."

Neither does he smoke or drink.

Kane has a deep love for people and particularly children. Whenever asked, he teaches youngsters how to paint.

"Children don't change," he said, "parents change. There's something about a child that is lovable and then parents do something to make them change."

Kane has outlived his brothers, sisters and one son. A second son is retired in New York.

A TANGLE OF TWINS — The teachers at Longfellow Elementary School in Portland, Me., are likely to be doing a series of double takes when they see five sets of twins in their building. The twins, who make up six percent of the 168 kindergartners in the school, include, front row from left, Ely and Amos Le-Blanch-Simpson and Adrienne and Carrie Lock; back row from left,

Monica and Jessica Wetherington, Eric and Scott Wespi and Lacey and Jeffrey Smith. The chances of having this many twins in the kindergarten is less than one in 10,000 according to the University of Maine math department. (AP Laserphoto)

Teen-Agers Have 'Invisible Parents'

Did you ever notice how teenagers have an orphan wish? There is a reason for this. Around the age of 11 or 12 they realize that mothers are like dental floss. They should never be seen in public... if at all.

From that moment on, a teenager's past is shrouded in mystery. He was never conceived in passion nor born of woman like everything else mortal. He just appeared one day like an apparition. He has no car and is not old enough to drive, yet every day at school he alights from one which is driven by a phantom. He has no visible means of income, yet he always has money and wears clothes with all the right names on them. When he is called and is not home, someone takes his messages, but the voice never materializes.

I have often wondered who all those adults are who roam around on Parent Day at camp and open house at school. Why are they there when they are obviously childless?

A lot of things bothered me about raising teenagers, but being invisible was not one of them. By the time my kids developed hormones, I was going through my "nun" phase and it all worked out somehow.

I was perfectly content to drive the car and have them talk about me like I had expired. Or hide out in the furnace room when they gave a party. I was a little surprised myself when a teacher spoke to me and I was visible to her.

I remember once at a skating rink, I was instructed by my two teenagers to park the car on a side street and let them out so everyone would think they took the bus. I was given explicit instructions that if I opted to go inside the rink and wait (the other option was to freeze to death in the car), I was not to acknowledge them in any way.

At Wits End

way. When they were ready to go home, they would go to the door and I would follow discreetly five or 10 minutes later so as not to stir up suspicion.

About an hour into the afternoon, I was talking with a group of mothers when one of the kids skated over and said, "Mom, you got an extra dollar, I'm hungry." I said, "What's matter, kid, lose your mother?" It was a sweet moment.

A mother in California writes that she has just been asked to take an "early retirement" from motherhood. "My teenage son needed a ride to a football game and as we were going too, we offered him a ride. Our son hesitated because "No one goes to games with parents!" I promised that no one would suspect such a thing. Our son quickly got out of the car and distanced himself from us. So I shouted to him, Hi, how is your mother? Tell her I'll call her next week for lunch. Why don't you meet us at the gate? I told her we'd give you a lift home after the game."

The woman from California is a saint. I'd have been tempted to leave him there and have him picked up for vagrancy.

Survey Shows Fidelity Gap Between Mates

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Doesn't it seem odd that there are so many more men who cheat on their wives than wives who cheat on their husbands? Either somebody is lying, or these men are gay (or bisexual) and are cheating with other men. Could this account for the increase in AIDS? Could it be that these men are having affairs with the same woman?

Are they women who are sowing their wild oats before they get married — or are they really married women who are afraid to tell the truth? How about an update on your survey, Abby? I was one who wrote in. — TRUE-BLUE WIFE IN QUEENS

DEAR TRUE-BLUE: The mail is still coming in, but I'm beginning to see the light at the end of the tunnel. There's no reason for anyone to lie in this survey since names are not required. At the last count, there were 186,775 responses. Approximately two-thirds of the respondents were women, and their fidelity count was far higher than their husbands'. Stay tuned.

DEAR ABBY: Smoking is more than a physical health matter. It's a family and sexual health matter, too.

I haven't kissed my wife in 10 years — her breath is sickening! I can literally smell her before I see her. I love her dearly, and years ago I told her how I felt about her smoking, but I doubt if she remembers, or if she really believed me. I haven't brought it up again because I don't want to be a nag.

She's meticulous in her dress and appearance, but the scent of her perfume, combined with tobacco odor from her hair, her clothing and her body, makes for a real turn-off.

My advice to women smokers looking for a lasting relationship with a man: Give up on the non-smokers on your wish list. You'll be a "smell out" to them. — THE NOSE FROM GEORGIA

DEAR NOSE: Face it: You are married to a woman whose addiction to nicotine is every bit as hard to overcome as a heroin habit. Most smokers would quit tomorrow if it didn't require more determination (OK — "guts") than they possess.

However, anyone who really wants to quit can do it. (It's not easy — but it's not impossible either.) There are "quit smoking" programs (call your local American Cancer Society), and clinics for those who want to overcome addictive behavior, as well as support groups for spouses, friends and family members of alcoholics and substance abusers. Your wife can do whatever is necessary to overcome her addiction. But she has to want to. Unfortunately, like many others, she may not want to until it's too late. What a tragedy for them and their families.

DEAR ABBY: A letter recently appeared in your column from a Christian who found solace in visiting a church in times of stress. He wanted to know why the churches lock their doors, except at specified hours. You replied, correctly, that due to the increase of vandalism, churches could ill afford security guards on a 24-hour basis.

I am a member of the board of trustees of St. John's in the Valley — a United Methodist Church — and this is how we solved that problem: Our church is locked except for scheduled functions, but every member is given a key to the chapel adjoining the church. Security is maintained, but access is not denied.

Even if this practice is not feasible to cover all members (perhaps due to the cost of keys), it would seem to be appropriate for those who have special needs to commune with God in a chapel or sanctuary at odd hours.

While this solution may not have occurred to all churches, some might benefit from this suggestion. — ROBERT IRVING, NORTHRIDGE, CALIF.

DEAR MR. IRVING: Thank you for sharing.

BROILERS: The North Carolina fob dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 45.25 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2½ to 3 pounds birds. The market is steady and the live supply is adequate for a moderate demand. Average weights are desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Thursday was 2,043,000, compared to 2,022,000 last Thursday.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn 2 cents higher at mostly 1.61-1.77 in East and mostly 1.89-1.99 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans mostly 1 cent lower at mostly 5.20-5.35 in East and mostly 4.99 in the Piedmont; wheat 2.49-2.67; new crop soybeans 4.79-5.20. NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market opened sharply higher today, extending the gains of the previous session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 22.80 to 2,572.07 in the first half-hour of trading.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by a margin of more than 4 to 1 in the early going on the New York Stock Exchange, with 945 up, 220 down and 354 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 30.97 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Analysts said the stock market got a boost on Wednesday from rising bond prices and a stronger dollar.

This morning, the dollar moved higher in Europe and the prices of long-term Treasury bonds were up $5 for every $1,000 in face value in U.S. trading.

Before the market opened, the Commerce Department said its latest survey of investment spending plans by U.S. businesses indicated growth this year may be slower than previously expected.

The report said an August survey indicated businesses plan to boost investment spending by 1.4 percent this year. That was a downward revision from a May survey which showed businesses planned to boost such spending by 2.8 percent this year.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks was up 1.50 at 177.29 in the early going. On the American Stock Exchange, the composite market index was up 2.02 at 349.57.

Among actively traded issues, Pacific Gas & Electric was up ¼ at 19¾, American Telephone & Telegraph was up ¼ at 32½ and International Business Machines was up ½ at 157½.

Iranian Gunboat Attacks Tanker

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — An Iranian gunboat attacked a Cypriot supertanker in the Persian Gulf this morning in apparent retaliation for Iraqi air strikes, gulf-based shipping executives reported. Iraqi jets struck again today.

"Large formations" of Iraqi warplanes raided factories, power plants, communications centers and oil installations deep inside Iranian territory today, said the official Iraqi News Agency, monitored in Nicosia.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, also monitored in Cyprus, said several civilians were killed or wounded in today's attacks on industrial centers in Bakhtaran province.

The escalation in fighting came as U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar prepared to leave today for the embattled region in an effort to end the 7-year-old war. He had made a cessation of fighting a precondition for his mission, which begins in Tehran Friday.

The 232,164-ton Haven, loaded with Saudi Arabian oil and en route out of the waterway, was ambushed about 16 miles from Sir Abu Nu'ayr island, off the United Arab Emirates, according to the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

They said the vessel had left Saudi Arabia's Ras Tanura loading terminal on Sept. 7 with a load of crude. The sources had said earlier that the ship, which is sometimes chartered by Iran, might have been carrying Iranian oil.

The Iranians used rocket-propelled grenades and machine guns, riddling the ship's funnel with bullets and damaging the bridge, according to witnesses who saw the ship afterward. A fire

ECU Aims To Get Series Renewed

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

Although the football series between East Carolina and N.C. State was a lucrative one for both schools, there is much more at stake than a revenue loss following a moratorium placed on the game for 1988, according to Dr. Ken Karr, ECU director of athletics.

"I think there is much more than money at stake here and that is the postponement of the strong, in-state rivalry," Karr said at a press conference Wednesday night. "That is a very strong negative and we will deal with it."

Karr and ECU Chancellor Dr. Richard Eakin met with the media regarding the one-year moratorium placed on the football series between the two schools by N.C. State officials following damages caused by a group of ECU fans following the Pirates 32-14 win over the Wolfpack Saturday night.

During the melee, more than 50 people, including a N.C. State public safety officer, were injured. Damage to the field, a restraining fence and the two goal post was estimated at $7,200.

"The athletic council last night gave me a recommendation which was carried to Chancellor (Bruce) Poulton that we have a one-year moratorium on the East Carolina-N.C. State series," said N.C. State Athletic Director Jim Valvano in a prepared statement. "We have notified East Carolina officials."

"Furthermore, the council recommend we begin dialogue with East Carolina officials as to the future status of the series. Hopefully, this dialogue, which will begin shortly, will be concluded by Jan. 1, 1988 and a statement will be issued at that time."

The game regularly drew some of the largest crowds in the state for college football and the one-year moratorium will mean a loss of the funds annually generated.

"I really don't view it as a punitive measure," Karr said. "The financial aspects were not a primary consideration because I'm sure (fiscal matters) also created a potential financial shortfall for N.C. State as well."

Karr added that in both this season and last, the Pirates had games with bigger payoffs than the N.C. State game.

"If we look at our 1986 schedule, we had at least three games, in terms of guarantee, that generated as much or more than the N.C. State game," he said. "As we look at our 1987 (schedule), we have two other contests that generate more than the N.C. State game."

Karr said he realized that the decision N.C. State made was a difficult one.

"This is a very difficult decision for any institution to reach and it was made under a tremendous amount of duress," Karr said. "We regret the decision did come down and I'm sure that we would have liked to have had the opportunity to have discussions set out over a longer time period regarding this particular matter."

Eakin agreed the decision for N.C. State officials was a difficult one.

"I want to say that I am fully supportive of Chancellor Poulton in this matter," he said. "He and his people had a very difficult decision to reach. I fully understand the decision that they reached could have been more difficult than it was. For that I am thankful."

Despite the year off, both Karr and Eakin expressed hope that a continuation of the series could be continued.

continued. N.C. State is the only one of the school's four other Division I-A schools that still plays ECU.

"We respect their right to make a decision and we welcome the opportunity to get together and determine some constructive ways to build a better situation to stage this series as we go through the 1989 series and beyond," Karr said.

According to the Associated Press, Valvano was not putting the blame on ECU students.

"We are not blaming anyone," Valvano told reporters prior to boarding a flight at Raleigh-Durham Airport. "The only thing we're responding to is the fact that in two of the last three years, the game has not been conducted in a way that makes a good statement about intercollegiate athletics in general and football in particular."

According to the Associated Press, ECU coach Art Baker, who was in Raleigh Wednesday to address the weekly meeting of the Raleigh Sports Club, said he hoped people "wouldn't look down their noses at us like we've got people in cages and then we let them out."

N.C. State assistant coach Mike O'Cain was an assistant at East Carolina in 1985 when a similar, though smaller, situation broke out following an East Carolina victory.

"It is a very unfair situation altogether for the East Carolina football program and our football program," O'Cain said. "I was there in 1985 when a similar situation occurred. I think it is something that is totally unnecessary in college football. It is a situation that has lost control.

"I am a little bit different than other people (on the N.C. State staff). Having been over there, I know what this game means to their program, what it means to their fans and their players. I would hate to have it taken away from me if I had nothing to do with it."

O'Cain said he felt the excuse about lack of security was not altogether viable.

"I think if you have to have the whole fence lined with 100 policemen, then we ought to not play the football game," O'Cain said. "If that potential is there to erupt, you should stay away from situation."

O'Cain said the post-game melee detracted from what the Pirates did on the field. Karr said the issue of whether there was sufficient police protection may be a moot point.

"Under the set of circumstances that developed there, I don't know if any particular stadium in the nation can put together security that can deal with a mob of 2,000 that have a singleness of purpose in mind," he said.

"If the fans can not control themselves, that is very unfortunate for the East Carolina football program," he said. "That is a shadow cast upon them. They played a very good game (Saturday) and so much of what was a good thing for them is taken away because of the way their fans acted."

Rose Opens New Stadium

Rose High School will open its new football stadium on Friday at 8 p.m. when the Rampants host Fayetteville's Terry Sanford.

The stadium, however, will not be totally ready for the Rampants fans. The stands on the Rose side of the field will not be ready and all seating will be on the visitor's side. The press box and scoreboard are also unlikely to be in place, causing some logistic problems for the game.

Parking will be limited to the lot off Hooker Road, and all fans are requested to park there only. Only one gate into the stadium will be opened.

Meanwhile, D.H. Conley will be hitting the road for the second time, playing at cross-county rival North Pitt in a game scheduled for 8 p.m.

The Vikings opened their season at home Friday night bowing to strong Ayden-Grifton, 33-6, after trailing only 7-6 at intermission.

Rose recorded its second straight road victory Monday night, slipping — literally — past Jacksonville, 12-7, on a muddy field. The Rampants earlier beat Eastern Wayne, 47-12.

"You couldn't ask for a better game for a stadium opener," Rose Coach Chip Williams said. "Terry Sanford has an outstanding history. They went to the state finals two years ago and were unbeaten in the conference last year, too, before losing to Jacksonville in the quarterfinals. That's only one loss a year."

Sanford opened the season Friday against New Hanover, bowing 23-7. "So they've already lost their average," Williams pointed out. For New Hanover, it was the second straight shocker over a Fayetteville area team. They beat Douglas Byrd, another traditional power, 44-7, the first week of the season.

"They played a very good New Hanover team and made some first game mistakes that New Hanover already had behind it," said Williams, who attended the game. "I could see on the faces of the (Terry Sanford) players that they were not used to losing and would be ready for us this week."

Sanford is led by Antonio Wilson, one of the top running backs in the state this year, but Williams points out that they have another fine runner in Del Clark. "He runs a 4.5 40 and scored on a 60-yard run Friday night," Williams said. "They run the veer and they throw the ball well. They have a wide-open attack."

That will press the Rampant defense which has performed outstandingly in the first two games. They held Eastern Wayne to minus yardage rushing and allowed strong Jacksonville only 22 yards.

If the defense has a weakness, it may in the passing game. When they do give up yardage through the air, it has gone for big yards. Jacksonville was only three of 15 passing, but got over 100 yards from it and a touchdown. Eastern also picked up over 100 yards passing including a touchdown, but had five picked off.

"The defense was as hard-hitting as it's been since I've been here," Williams said. "If we can keep that up, I think we will be okay."

Williams said that anytime you can hold a team like Jacksonville to only 22 yards rushing — regardless of field conditions — you've accomplished something.

Rose rushed for 119 yards and Williams felt that was a good showing against a strong defense like Jacksonville — again regardless of field conditions. The Rampants also piled up nearly 150 yards through the air, including two halfback passes from Timmy Moore for good yardage.

"It was a game in which two good football teams who wanted to win went up against each other. Fortunately, we came out on top with a strong defensive effort in the last quarter," Williams said.

The defense twice held Jacksonville without a first down when the game was on the line in the final six minutes.

Williams singled out the play of Adrian Barnhill and Tim Hines on defense and added the thought the secondary did a good job except for the one scoring play.

On offense, he praised Tom Moya at quarterback, Moore for both his running and passing and David Daniels for his running. He was also pleased with the receiving of Eric Morris, Daniels and John Ebron, who caught his first career pass in the game.

Conley coach Steve Craft was not entirely unhappy with the things he saw Friday night in the loss to Ayden-Grifton. "We saw some positive things out of our kids," he said. "We saw some points that were pleasing and some that were not pleasing. I don't feel that our kids or the coaches are down at this point, but there was a three or four minute head-dropping period that turned the ball game around."

"In fact, I think we have a chance to be better than we thought we could be — but we're still going to have to prove it."

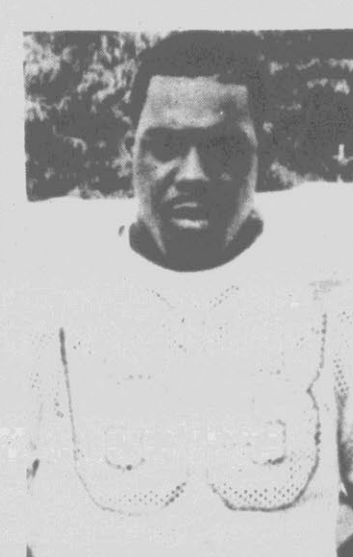

Craft was generally pleased with the Vikings in the first half. "Everyone had their moments. At times, I thought our offensive line did a good job. Bronswell (Patrick, quarterback) made some good reads and Robert Taylor did an excellent job of catching the ball. Aaron Freeman did a good job blocking and our backs ran well in the first half."

But in the second half, Craft said, "I can't say I was happy with too many things. It was like two different games."

From the 7-6 deficit, Conley quickly found itself down 19-7. Eric Blount ran the opening kickoff back and Aaron Harper scored minutes later for the Chargers.

"We missed a lane assignments and they made a couple of good blocks on the kickoff and when they scored, we dropped our heads," Craft said. "Against a team the quality of Ayden-Grifton, you can't do that. They scored again after we fumbled the next kickoff and scored again quickly, all in the span of about three minutes."

"After that we got back to doing things well, but we had to play catch up and got out of our game plan," Craft said. "At least we went down swinging."

JHR's Tim Hines

Against North Pitt it will take a full four-quarter effort, the coach said. "They have a veteran team and are very strong defensively. Even without (quarterback Calvin) Hunter, they are very fundamentally strong and it will be a tough task for us."

"We are going to have to play four quarters of football. We can't just play two. They are solid all the way across the line and I was real impressed with their defense," Craft said.

"We don't have the muscle to wrestle with them. Don't get me wrong, we have some strong people but we don't have their size. We can't stand and muscle with anyone. We have to rely on our quickness because we're going to be going up against some big Mack trucks."

North Carolina State acted quickly to let East Carolina University's rowdy fans know just where things stood.

Yesterday, it was announced that a one-year moratorium had been declared for what has become the state's most popular football game. Next season will mark the first time since 1969 that the two schools have not met.

Whether the series will then be resumed will depend on a number of things, not the least of which will be the decorum of the fans at the next game, assuming there is one.

That game is currently scheduled for Oct. 14, 1989. Rather than being the season opener, it will come around midseason. It is also an afternoon game, and that in itself may cut down on the alcohol abuse that played a role in Saturday night's melee.

For certain, a repeat of Saturday night's disgusting display will see the series gone for good.

State's reaction, while it came quickly and without much time to cool off, was somewhat restrained. The Wolfpack officials know that it is only a rowdy few that caused the problem. The university's fans, for the most part, were orderly in victory and the football team put on a class show on the field.

They also know that it is high-paying game for both schools, but that apparently was not considered in the State decision.

Dr. Richard Eakin, in his first full year as chancellor of East Carolina, will be at the forefront of efforts to get the series back on the road. He has asked for an early meeting with Dr. Bruce Poulton, his opposite at N.C. State, and State athletic director Jim Valvano has asked that meetings be held before the first of the year to try and set up some policy to avoid a repeat of the situation.

Dr. Ken Karr, athletic director at ECU, has said that the university must go about educating its fans to the proper decorum for a football game. But he also has called for additional security if tickets are to be sold on the grassy hill at the end of the stadium. It was there that both of the incidents, this year and in 1985, began.

It all boils down to this: Dr. Eakin said Monday at a press conference that there is no way he can guarantee that it will not happen again. No one can.

But those fans who made the trip onto the playing field, who brought shame to East Carolina when it should have been basking in the light of that victory, must learn the lesson from it. Those who would think of doing it in the future must be restrained by those with more intelligence.

ECU is striving to get back on the schedules of the other Division I schools in the state.

Another outburst like that of Saturday night, and the Pirates will find they have no friends in the state — regardless of whether the greater majority were involved or not.

We ask those rowdy fans to consider this one point: are you willing to crash the field to celebrate one last victory or would you prefer to have the opportunity to come back year after year to cheer the Pirates on against the Wolfpack.

The choice is yours.

In four previous meeting with East Carolina, Florida State University has piled the points on the scoreboard, averaging over 50, and their offense this year appears to be just as potent.

East Carolina came close only once, in 1983, when the Seminoles escaped with a 47-46 victory. That year, the Pirates were 8-3, losing only to FSU, Florida and national champion Miami, all played in the state of Florida.

Baker, who was the offensive coordinator for the Pirates in that heart-stopper, saw the game from the other side of the field the next year when FSU rolled up a 47-17 score. Baker was assistant head coach to Bobby Bowden that year, then returned to ECU as head coach in 1985.

This is the first meeting of the two since then, and the first meeting ever in Greenville.

Florida State opened its season last week at home with a 40-16 victory over Texas Tech that was no contest after the first period. The two teams each scored twice in the first quarter for a 13-13 tie.

FSU then ran away to a 30-16 halftime lead, adding a touchdown and a field goal in the final half.

The Seminoles were led by the passing of senior quarterback Danny McManus, who connected on 19 of 34 passes for 275 yards. His favorite receiver was split end Herb Gainer, who caught six for 128 yards.

Tailback Dexter Carter, who started ahead of two injured players, Sammy Smith and Victor Floyd carried 14 times for 60 yards to lead that category.

Kicker Derek Schmidt, who kicked two field goals against Texas Tech, has moved to first place in the school's all-time scoring list. He now has a total of 287 and needs just four more points to tie Texas A&M's Tony Franklin for 10th place on the all-time NCAA scoring list.

And despite all, Bowden is looking for East Carolina to give a good accounting for itself in the game.

"You can be sure of one thing," Bowden said. "Art Baker will have a team that will not beat itself. When I hired him here at Florida State it was after I had seen the kind of offense he had built at East Carolina as their offensive coordinator. They were disciplined, well-coached and they did not make mistakes that would get them beat."

"They opened their season with a huge win. Beating N.C. State is like us beating Florida. You know they are going to be sky high. I'm not real excited about having to play us there. The people at Miami said it was one of the toughest places they've had to play when they went up there a couple of years ago. You know they'll be ready for us."

Bowden said he felt his team would have to stop the run and to defense the option. "They run an offense you only see a time or two every year. We'll need to play better on defense than we did against Texas Tech. We'll continue to find out about the makeup of our team in this game. Just like the opener, you never know what to expect when you go on the road for the first time."

While Smith sat out last week's game, he is expected to start this week. He rushed for 116 yards in the final regular season game last year against Florida and added 205 against Indiana in the All-American Bowl.

Leading the defense will be 6-1, 230-pound inside linebacker Paul McGowan, a candidate for the Butkus Award. He passed the 300 tackle mark for his career against Texas Tech and has 21 career tackles for a loss.

Texas Tech rushed for 182 yards against the Seminoles and passed for 162.

Baker says that Bowden believes this year's team could be the best ever for him at Florida State. But Baker also believes that his 1987 Pirates are very much like the Pirates of 1983.

If so, it could be a barn-burner.

Alexander Likes September Days

By BILL BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

In 1988, Doyle Alexander might celebrate New Year's Day on Sept. 1, Valentine's Day on Sept. 14, Independence Day on Sept. 4, Christmas on Sept. 25 and Thanksgiving on the third Thursday in September.

"I think I'll get a calendar next year and write 'September' on every month," Alexander said after beating Baltimore 6-0 to complete a doubleheader sweep for the Detroit Tigers on Wednesday night. "I try to go out and make the pitches. That's all I try to do, whether it's June, July, or April."

The six-hitter gave Alexander a 12-3 record in September since 1984 and was his fifth consecutive victory and second shutout since the Tigers acquired him from Atlanta on Aug. 12.

"I enjoyed playing with Atlanta, but obviously these ball clubs are quite different," Alexander said. "We have a chance to win here. Atlanta is at least two years away. I didn't know Detroit needed pitching. I wasn't paying attention to that race."

The Tigers' 7-4 victory in the first game, Alexander's win and Milwaukee's 6-4 defeat of Toronto gave Detroit a 1½-game lead in the American League East.

"I think it's going to be a tight race," Alexander said. "If any ball club pulls away, I hope it's us."

Elsewhere, it was Boston 5, New York 3; Oakland 11, Texas 7; Seattle 9, Cleveland 4; and Minnesota 2, Chicago 1.

Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson said Alexander's record could be even better.

"He's pitched so well for us," Anderson said. "He should be 6-0. His first game, we messed around and lost it."

Alexander, who walked one and struck out six, twice stranded runners at third base before Detroit snapped a scoreless tie with five runs in the fourth inning off Mike Boddicker, 10-8.

Libretto Leaving?

Charlie Libretto, the number two quarterback for the East Carolina Pirates, is considering his future with the football team, a spokesman for the sports information office said today.

The Raleigh News & Observer published a story this morning saying that Libretto, a 6-1, 200-pound sophomore from Middleburg, Fla., had quit the team. The ECU spokesman said that Coach Art Baker has given Libretto until Friday to think over his decision before it becomes final. Baker said that Libretto would not play in Saturday's game against Florida State, regardless of his decision, and that Brad Walsh, a 6-1, 192-pound sophomore from Summerville, S.C., would move up to the number two spot behind starter Travis Hunter.

Libretto, who shared starting duties with Hunter last season, had been the number two quarterback since the end of spring drills. He saw action Saturday in the 32-14 win over N.C. State, connecting on one of four passes with one interception for 15 yards.

Last year, Libretto hit on 71 of 148 pass attempts for 833 yards and one touchdown. He had six passes intercepted.

Walsh has yet to take a snap in a varsity game.

Scott Lusader had a two-run triple, his first major-league RBI, and Lou Whitaker a two-run homer as the Tigers batted around for the fourth time in 22 innings against Baltimore.

In the opener, Detroit took a 4-0 lead in the first inning on Bill Madlock's two-run homer, an RBI triple by Alan Trammell and a run-scoring double by John Grubb. Loser Ken Dixon, 7-9, lasted only three batters.

Nokes, who had four hits in the twinbill, hit his 28th homer in the third to make it 6-0.

Walt Terrell, 13-10, allowed nine hits in six-plus innings while winning his fourth straight decision. He is now 2-8 on the road, where he had lost his four previous games.

Brewers 6, Blue Jays 4
Milwaukee rallied for four runs in the seventh inning against Toronto, keyed by B.J. Surhoff's two-out, two-run single.

Blue Jays starter Jim Clancy had 10 strikeouts and a 4-2 lead entering the seventh, but the Brewers came back against Clancy and relievers Duane Ward and Tom Henke. Glenn Braggs hit a sacrifice fly to make it 4-3 before Rob Deer tied it with a double off Henke.

Surhoff's single broke the tie and made a winner of Mark Clear, 7-5, who stopped a Toronto rally in the seventh and pitched the final three innings.

Twins 2, White Sox 1
Tim Laudner led off the bottom of the ninth with a homer, the second time this season he has broken a ninth-inning tie at the Metrodome with a homer off Chicago reliever Jim Winn.

Laudner's 428-foot homer, his 16th of the year, came on an 0-2 pitch from Winn, 4-6, and repeated a feat Laudner accomplished against Winn on June 19. It was only the second hit of the game for the Twins off three White Sox pitchers.

Frank Viola, 15-8, pitched a six-hitter for the victory, blanking the White Sox after a homer by Gary Redus leading off the game. Viola, who struck out nine and walked two, won his eighth straight decision at home.

The victory, coupled with Oakland's win over Texas, maintained Minnesota's three-game lead in the AL West.

Athletics 11, Rangers 7
Oakland kept pace with Minnesota as Carney Lansford drove in four runs with a triple and double against Texas.

The Athletics took a 4-0 lead in the first inning, keyed by Lansford's two-run triple off Texas starter Bob Witt, 7-9, and RBI singles by Jose Canseco and Mark McGwire.

Canseco got his second RBI of the game and 98th of the season with another single in the second, after Tony Bernazard's RBI double.

The Rangers, who trailed 6-0 and 9-3 before rallying, kept Oakland starter Storm Davis, making his debut with the A's, from getting the victory because he was relieved in the fifth.

Texas scored three runs, with the first coming on Geno Petralli's fifth homer, in the fifth. Greg Cadaret, 4-2, was the winner.

Red Sox 5, Yankees 3
Roger Clemens pitched hitless ball from the second through seventh innings and Jim Rice and Todd Benzinger homered on consecutive pitches in the fourth inning for Boston against New York.

Clemens, 16-8, who struck out 12, gave up four hits and two runs in the first inning and two hits and one run in the ninth, but allowed only two walks in between.

Game Time For Miami Changed

The starting time for the East Carolina-Miami, Fla., game on Oct. 31 has been changed to 12:10 p.m.

The game, which had originally been scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m., was moved to accommodate a television contract for the game, ECU Athletic Director Ken Karr said.

The game will be televised in Florida by the Raycom Network.

Rice hit the first fourth-inning pitch from Charles Hudson, 9-6, for his 13th homer of the season, tying the score 2-2. Benzinger connected on the next pitch for his third homer.

Rice and Benzinger added RBI singles in the seventh for a 5-2 lead.

The Yankees went ahead 2-0 in the first on RBI singles by Dave Winfield and Mike Easler.

Mariners 9, Indians 4
Mike Moore pitched a nine-hitter, with only two of the hits in the last five innings, and Seattle defeated Cleveland with a 17-hit attack.

Moore, 7-17, who has 12 complete games, picked up his first road victory since June 22. He had lost his previous seven road decisions.

Cleveland took a 4-3 lead into the seventh inning, but the Mariners scored four runs to take the lead for good. A single by Phil Bradley made it 4-4, an error by Cleveland first baseman Joe Carter broke the tie and Scott Bradley capped the inning with a two-run single.

Mickey Brantley, who homered, and Phil and Scott Bradley had three hits apiece for Seattle. Brook Jacoby homered for Cleveland.

To The Sports Editor:

The performance of the team, coaches, band and thousands of mature ECU fans was overshadowed Saturday by a band of immature alcohol abusing East Carolina students in Raleigh.

I suggest the following:

1. Require the ECU Student Government Association to cancel a previously budgeted event and use the money to pay for the damage at Carter-Finley Stadium.

2. In the future, sell all N.C. State tickets allotted to ECU to Pirate Club members and offer none to East Carolina students.

Have the ECU administration announce prior to the next game that any student caught damaging property at the N.C. State game or any other game will be permanently expelled from ECU.

4. Increase the security force for the State-ECU game and issue orders to use night sticks on the knuckles of anyone who lays a hand on the fence or goal posts.

5. Change the starting time of the 1988 State-ECU game to noon to reduce the time available for alcohol abuse.

Fans Are Extradited

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Twenty-five British soccer fans were extradited to Belgium to face manslaughter charges from the 1985 European Cup Final at Heysel Stadium, in which 39 people died in a riot begun by Liverpool supporters.

The Britons were flown to Belgium amid tight security and were housed in a renovated prison in Leuven, east of Brussels. A 26th defendant, who was also due to be extradited, was scheduled to appear in a London court today for "a serious charge."

No trial date has been set.

It was the first such extradition since violence became a recurring phenomenon in European soccer stadiums in the early 1970s. And it reflected the British government's determination to stamp out hooliganism which led to British teams being barred from European cup matches.

Pitcher Ed Walsh won 40 games for the Chicago White Sox in 1908, during the era when the team was called "The Hitless Wonders."

Strawberry Back In The Groove

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

Thanks to batting coach Bill Robinson, Darryl Strawberry is back in the groove and the New York Mets are in hot pursuit of the lead in the National League East.

Strawberry hit a pair of two-run homers, his 34th and 35th of the season, to lead the Mets to an 11-5 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies on Wednesday night.

Coupled with Montreal's 8-3 victory over St. Louis, the Mets moved to within 1½ games of the Cardinals. They meet in a three-game series starting Friday night at New York.

"It's exciting now," Mets Manager Davey Johnson said. "A couple of wins and we're in first place. That's what the season is all about.

"The pitching is good ... the offense is ready to erupt ... all our ammunition is available. I still think this team, when healthy, is better than last year's."

Last year's Mets won the World Series.

Elsewhere, it was Pittsburgh 4, Chicago 3; Atlanta 3, San Diego 2; Cincinnati 4, Los Angeles 1, and Houston 4, San Francisco 2.

Shane Rawley held the Mets to just one hit over the first five innings. That's when Robinson talked strategy to Keith Hernandez and Strawberry.

"Bill told Keith and myself in the dugout that we should try to break Rawley's rhythm," Strawberry said. "Rawley wanted to work fast, but with Keith and myself stepping out, we slowed him down and broke his rhythm."

Strawberry also had a double to set a single-season team record for extra-base hits with 62. It was his fourth multiple-homer game of the season and 15th of his career.

"I think I'm back in the groove again and I know that I am definitely staying within myself," Strawberry said. "On the West Coast trip, I pressed the entire time and stopped doing things that had me on a hitting streak. Getting back to Shea and having the fans' support is a tremendous boost."

Strawberry's first homer came with Hernandez on base and began a seven-run sixth inning that was capped by Mookie Wilson's eighth home run of the season. In the eighth, Strawberry's homer came with Dave Magadan on base.

Rick Aguilera, 8-2, went seven-plus innings to gain his fifth straight victory, although he needed help from Jesse Orosco. Rawley, 17-8, took the loss, allowing five runs on six hits in five-plus innings.

Astros 4, Giants 2

Houston's Nolan Ryan struck out a league-high 16 batters in eight innings as the Astros defeated San Francisco to move within 4½ games of the visiting NL West Division-leading Giants.

Ryan, 7-14, boosted his strikeouts total to a major league-leading 226 for the season in only 176 innings.

He extended his major league record to 172 games with 10 or more strikeouts, fanning 10 of the last 12 batters he faced, including the last five. It was his highest strikeout total since he struck out 16 in 1979, when he was with the California Angels. His previous high came in 1977, also with the Angels, when he fanned 19.

"I think I probably had as good control of all three pitches as I've had," Ryan said. "What made tonight so good was I threw my curve ball harder and for strikes."

"I call it my old American League curve. Batters don't do me any favors. They usually lay off my curve ball until I throw it for strikes."

San Francisco first baseman Will Clark, who struck out three times, was impressed.

"His curve ball is what made him so effective," Clark said. "When he's throwing that hard and has control of his curve, you can't sit on the fast ball. It makes for a rough day at the old ball park."

The Astros took a 4-0 lead on Ryan's second career game-winning hit and a double by Gerald Young in the second inning, and Kevin Bass' two-run homer in the third.

Expos 8, Cardinals 3

Vance Law's two-run homer and

Dave Engle's two-run pinch double boosted Montreal over St. Louis and completed a three-game sweep. The victory was Montreal's fifth straight and 10th in 14 games against St. Louis this year.

Dennis Martinez, 9-3, pitching with three days of rest for the first time since 1980, went 6 1-3 innings for the victory. Joe Magrane, 7-7, was the loser.

Willie McGee's 10th home run tied the game 2-2 in the fourth. But the Expos took the lead for good in the bottom of the fourth when Law hit his 12th homer.

Pirates 4, Cubs 3

Pitcher Jeff Robinson's two-out, ninth-inning homer, his first in the major leagues, gave visiting Pittsburgh the victory. Chicago reliever Lee Smith, 4-9, retired the first two batters before Robinson homered in to the left field bleachers.

Robinson, 8-8, entered the game in the seventh.

Mackey Sasser's first major league hit, a single, and R.J. Reynolds' opposite field homer, his sixth, gave the Pirates a 2-0 second-inning lead before the teams battled to a 3-3 tie in the seventh.

Braves 3, Padres 2

At Atlanta, David Palmer yielded four hits in 6 1-3 innings and Ozzie Virgil drove in the go-ahead run with a sacrifice fly in a three-run sixth inning for the Braves.

Palmer, 8-10, struck out five of the first six batters he faced as he recorded his first victory since Aug. 23. Jim Aker pitched the final 2 2-3 innings for his 10th save. Rookie Eric Nolte, 2-3, took the loss.

Dodgers 4, Reds 1

Tom Browning threw a two-hitter and Barry Larkin knocked in two runs as Cincinnati defeated visiting Los Angeles. Browning, 7-11, started the game by hurling five perfect innings before Mike Devereaux doubled down the right field line to lead off the sixth. After Devereaux scored on an errant pickoff attempt by Browning, Steve Sax doubled for the Dodgers' only other hit.

Terry McGriff and Larkin hit consecutive fifth-inning doubles to score the game's first run. One out later, Tracy Jones' bloop single scored Larkin. The Reds added two runs in the sixth.

Terps, Cavs In First ACC Test

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Maryland opens the chase for the 1987 Atlantic Coast Conference football championship at home this weekend against Virginia, which hasn't beaten the Terrapins in its last 15 attempts.

Both teams started this year with losses, but while Virginia held a lead against 20th-ranked Georgia before dropping a 30-22 decision, the Terrapins were sent to a 25-11 loss at Syracuse. Maryland coach Joe Krivak said the difference in the margins of defeat could give Virginia a psychological edge.

"He'll probably look at our film," Krivak said, referring to Virginia coach George Welsh, "and say, 'Hey, we've got a chance to beat Maryland for the first time in a long time.'"

Maryland is a 12-point favorite to capture their home opener, but Krivak doesn't buy that point spread.

"We're only as good as the preparation we get," he said. "We've got to turn it up a notch."

Welsh may have looked at the films, but, based on his comments, he isn't as confident as Krivak might think.

"I'm not sure I can tell you anything about another team after one loss," Welsh said. "Maryland's in a new defensive scheme, too, and I don't know whether they're comfortable with it or not."

All eight ACC teams are in action this weekend, with Georgia Tech and Wake Forest opening their seasons. The Yellow Jackets, under former Maryland head coach Bobby Ross, starts against The Citadel, while the Demon Deacons, with new head coach Bill Dooley, is at home to Richmond.

North Carolina goes to No. 1 Oklahoma, No. 10 Clemson is at Virginia Tech, North Carolina State travels to No. 18 Pittsburgh and Northwestern is at Duke.

Georgia Tech has won two of its last three season openers and tied the third, last year's 17-17 tie with Furman. This season, the Yellow Jackets open against another Southern Conference team, and Ross is concerned because The Citadel operates the wishbone offense.

"You just don't see the wishbone that much and it compounds our problems," Ross said, adding that he expects the Bulldogs, led by first-year coach Charlie Taaffe, will be fired up.

"They will treat it as World War III," Ross said.

Heavy rains in the past several days have literally put a damper on Wake Forest's preparations for the Spiders. Those preparations already were delayed with graduation losses and injuries to key personnel.

"We needed to work on the flow of things with a new staff," Dooley said. "Things like substitutions, getting people on and off the field, play calling needed to be covered before they were done in game situations."

The last time the Tar Heels went to Norman was in 1980, when greater national recognition and a 7-0 record was on the line. The Sooners won that game 41-7.

This time, Coach Dick Crum thinks he has the makings of a better showing. But, like Ross, he has had a tough time in practice defending the wishbone because no one can simulate the execution or the speed.

"I've thought about trying to get some sprinters from the track team," Crum joked.

Clemson's Danny Ford said the Tigers didn't know much about the Hokies, and they sprung a 20-14 opening-day upset. Ford said this year, he doesn't know much more than the quarterback's name, Erik Chapman. He also knows the new coach's name, Frank Beamer, and that could be why Ford isn't certain what to expect.

"We'll spend the week preparing for something we might not see," Ford said. "But the worst thing that can happen to you in a football game is to see something you didn't prepare for. We're having to guess a lot."

The Wolfpack fell to East Carolina, 32-14, and things get worse as Coach Dick Sheridan's team prepares for the trip north against the physically imposing Panthers.

"Looking at film, it's easy to see that Pittsburgh is an extremely talented, physical, large, aggressive team," Sheridan said. "Last year, we felt they were the most physical team we played."

Sheridan said last year's 14-14 tie with the Panthers should be motivation enough for his opponents.

"But they have a lot more going for them than that," he added.

Quarterbacks Steve Slayden and Anthony Dilweg each tossed two touchdown passes in the Blue Devils' opening night victory over Colgate, and is expected to defeat the Wildcats. But first-year coach Steve Spurrier wants more diversity to his offense.

"... We'll have to run the ball better this week against Northwestern," Spurrier said. "We can't depend on just our passing game."

Serious Talks Get Underway

SCHAUMBURG, Ill. (AP) — The maneuvering in the NFL's labor dispute is just about over. The serious negotiations to determine if NFL players strike for the second time in five years are about to begin.

NFL owners were to meet today to decide their posture entering the final, critical phase of the talks — likely a decision to field teams even if there is a strike.

After they're finished, negotiations are expected to resume this weekend under the deadline pressure both sides have predicted is the only way to arrive at a contract — the Sept. 22 strike deadline approved Tuesday by the 28 player representatives. The negotiations are expected to resume this weekend on neutral ground outside Washington and New York.

The contract between the players and owners expired Aug. 31. But since Aug. 14, the two sides have bargained face-to-face for just 4½ hours — they met in Washington on Sept. 2, but broke off the next day in a dispute over protection for player representatives.

The main issue for the owners is trying to play games with non-roster players. Some teams are dubious, others say they are ready and willing. And there is the hope, some owners say privately, of attracting those regulars who are less than enthusiastic about striking.

A number of teams, in fact, have already paid $1,000 to players they cut to get them to return in the event of a strike. Others, like the New York Giants and Los Angeles Raiders, say they haven't.

Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys, said Wednesday that he had re-signed an undisclosed number of recently released players in hopes of using them if there is a strike.

"I don't really think we have any alternative," he said. "I know we'll field a team if it comes to a strike. This is a union that's struck us every time we've bargained."

Schramm conceded, however, that the teams would have to return money to both the fans and the television networks even if they did play. And some players have suggested that rather than luring them back, playing with non-roster players would cause them to harden their resolution to strike.

And Doug Allen, the union's assistant executive director, said Wednesday: "Without our players on the field, it will be a rag-tag shoddy product. It won't be the NFL, whatever it is."

Despite the hard-line rhetoric, there were indications that attempts were being made to resolve the dispute without a walkout. The last one, in 1982, also began following the second week and lasted 57 days, costing seven games of the 16-game schedule.

The two chief negotiators — Jack

Donlan for the owners and Gene Upshaw for the union — were expected to talk by telephone today, and talks are expected to resume no later than Saturday at a location that may not be disclosed.

"What we really should be talking about instead of strikes, instead of playing games without players that are star quality, we should be talking about bargain and negotiations," Upshaw said Wednesday on ABC's "Good Morning America."

The major problem remained free agency.

The union, which had been proposing unrestricted free agency, has modified that position, proposing that non-playoff teams get first shot at players whose contracts have expired. It also proposes that free agents be limited to a percentage above their current salaries.

The owners have countered with a liberalization of the current system, which gives teams right of first refusal on their current players and draft-choice compensation for players who sign with other teams. The management proposal submitted Monday, described by Upshaw as "garbage," requires, for example, that a team surrender a first-round pick for a fourth-year player it signs for $240,000 a year.

The union on Wednesday released figures it claims shows that the proposal represents a $90-million takeback by management.

It said the owners save $95 million alone with their proposed entry level wage scale, which would pay every rookie $60,000 per year with an escalated system of signing bonuses starting at $500,000 for the first pick in the draft down to $100,000 for the 28th and $4,000 for free-agent rookies.

Molitor In Slump Now

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Two weeks after his 39-game hitting streak ended, Paul Molitor is in the midst of another baseball extreme — a slump.

Molitor is 9-for-57 (.158) since his streak, the fifth longest in major league history, was stopped Aug. 26 by Cleveland Indians rookie right-hander John Farrell.

"It's frustrating. Like I said during the streak, this game can humble you in a hurry," said Molitor, who broke a 0-for-19 skid with a single Wednesday night against Toronto.

"Slumps usually start when the ball doesn't fall for you a few days. Then it becomes a mental thing and you start pressing," Molitor said.

"You go from a high level of confidence to a minimal level of confidence."

Lost Oscar Turns Up

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A plea for an Oscar awarded in 1930 was answered by a screenwriter's son who agreed to loan the gold statuette won by his late mother, and used by her as a doorstop, to complete a Hollywood display.

Richard G. Thomson, the son of screenwriter Frances Marion, stepped forward this week to offer the statuette after learning of the plea from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, which opened the display Wednesday.

Ms. Marion received the Oscar for the screenplay of the box-office blockbuster "The Big House," a Metro Goldwyn Mayer prison drama with Wallace Beery as a hard-boiled murderer. The movie climaxed with an attempted jail break.

Thomson, 59, a sales marketing representative from Washington, D.C., said he learned of the search Sunday from a cousin in Spokane, Wash., who had read about it in the newspaper.

The academy needed one of the eight Oscars awarded during the 1929-30 ceremony to complete an exhibit consisting of one Oscar from each of the 59 annual Academy Award extravaganzas.

As of last week, the academy had collected statuettes for all but one ceremony.

Eight Oscars were awarded in 1929-30, a time when the Oscars were presented at small banquets to winners who knew in advance that they had won, said Ric Robertson of the academy.

PBS Teen Show Takes Serious Look At Problems Of Youths

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — "New Image Teen Theater" demonstrates that teen-agers can take themselves seriously, even if television often does not.

Three shows produced by this San Diego theater group are appearing on public television this month. The best of the bunch, "Date Rape," airs Thursday.

"Date Rape" is a sober and compelling look at an all-too-common abuse of trust, and even more impressive for being developed by the troupe's young members. Their research included interviews with rape victims.

"No" means "no," the program insists, and sex without consent is just another name for rape.

"I will never be the person I was before, never, ever," says one girl who plays a victim.

The program contrasts the devastation of the young woman with the bragging of the young man, who believes that "no" is just a woman's way of saying "yes."

"New Image Teen Theater" is a project of Planned Parenthood of San Diego and Riverside counties, supported by a grant from the Junior League and produced by San Diego's KPBS-TV. These are encore performances of shows which won an Alpha award at the American Children's Television Festival in 1985.

Some teens will probably find the show stuffy or preachy, and sometimes the points are made with sledge-hammer emphasis. The underlying appeal to "be yourself" isn't advice you would want every kid to take, either.

On the other hand, "New Image Teen Theater" is a refreshing advance beyond those public service spots in which television has no better advice to offer than to wear a condom.

These teens audaciously suggest that people have some responsibility to each other beyond avoiding each others' diseases. It's television worth watching and discussing.

"De Grassi Junior High," which premieres Sept. 19, has a lighter touch that may reach a wider audience.

The initial episode, "Kiss Me,

Steph," tells about a blooming eighth-grader who discovers that sex sells — in this case, her candidacy for school president. Stephanie Kaye, winningly played by Nicole Stoffman, finds that she can line up the boy vote with a bare shoulder and "one kiss, one vote" campaign.

In the process, she alienates her best friend, Voula, and is placed in the humiliating position of seeking help from her impossibly declassé younger brother, Arthur.

In 30 minutes, this production, supported by U.S. and Canadian television and presented by WGBH in Boston, has something worthwhile to say about self-image, sexuality, friendship and politics, without being preachy.

Our heroine, by the way, faces further perils in the following 12 weeks. In Episode 2, Steph gets drunk, while Voula, intoxicated by the forbidden fruit of a school dance, lies to her father.

Other characters step to the fore as the program explores new issues: drugs, adoption, smoking, child abuse, homosexuality and death, among others.

Brazilian Film Crews Finding Grass Greener In Other Areas

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Brazilian filmmakers, known for such political and romantic movies as "Dona Flor and Her Two Husbands," "Bye, Bye Brazil" and "They Don't Use Black Tie," are abandoning the sunny, sensual tropics and going Hollywood.

The trend is causing controversy between those who say directors are selling out and handing over Brazil's cultural identity and those who say the added challenge of making a Brazilian film for a foreign audience will push the industry to new heights.

Hector Babenco, director of the Brazilian-filmed but English-language "Kiss of the Spider Woman," which won an Academy Award in 1985 for actor William Hurt, went directly to making movies overseas after that critically acclaimed film. He recently took his film crew to Albany, N.Y., where he shot a $30 million adaptation of William Kennedy's "Ironweed," starring Jack Nicholson and Meryl Streep.

Top directors Miguel Faria Jr.,

Arnaldo Jabor and Nelson Pereira dos Santos are finishing scripts for films spoken in English and made with foreign money.

They say they lose on expensive feature films made in Brazil's Portuguese language and shown only to the relatively few cinemagoers in Brazil, where 50 percent of the population have never seen a film, according to government figures.

Co-productions with another country and foreign actors help to sell a Brazilian film abroad, Faria said.

However, last year, Brazilian movies, known for their metaphorical, political themes, won a record 17 international prizes.

Suzana Amaral's "Star Hour" took the Golden Bear award for best actress at the Berlin Film Festival, and Jabor's "Love Me Forever or Never" won best actress at the Cannes Film Festival.

But directors say it's increasingly hard to make films pay off in this country with a $112 billion foreign debt, sporadically rampant inflation and with little money to invest in movies.

Last year, Embrafilme, the government film agency, received 600 film scripts but only had the money to finance 22. This year, the number will be about the same, according to Ivan Isola, the operations director of the agency. About 10 will be co-productions with foreign producers.

"We have to make films for foreign markets now," Isola said. "Co-productions are the only solution. Films don't pay for themselves if they are shown only in Brazil."

Beyond the immediate problem of financing, Brazilian directors must compete for movie audiences with American superproductions, which cost an average $16 million. A top Brazilian production costs only $500,000.

Despite difficulties selling Brazilian films at home, Carlos Diegues, director of "Bye Bye Brazil" and "Quilombo," called the sudden move to make English-speaking films dangerous.

FADING LAUGHS — Writer-producer Mort Lachman sits in his Los Angeles office from where he oversees his New York staff's production of the CBS "Kate & Allie" show. He says today's comedy "is pathetic. It lacks muscle." (AP Laserphoto)

TV Producer Says Comedy Shows Today 'Doing Trivia'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The trouble with television comedy today, laments writer-producer Mort Lachman, is that it isn't about anything.

"I did 'All in the Family' for five years," he said. "I can't believe how strong and involved those shows were. They said things. They had an integrity I don't see now, a point of view I don't see now."

"M-A-S-H" was a comedy based on human needs and emotions. We have more shows now, but no muscle. The shows don't seem to be about anything. We're back to the days of Ozzie and Harriet, doing trivia.

"It's pathetic. When the big blast comes, we'll all be in front of the set watching, 'Hello, honey, I'm home.' I don't think we're getting on the tube today what the world is all about."

Lachman is currently the executive producer of CBS' "Kate & Allie," overseeing the staff in New York, where the show is produced, from here. He is a tall, thin man with a somewhat morose look, which sometimes seems to be the official expression of gag writers. His horn-rimmed glasses have earned him the nickname "The Owl."

He has a number of series under development, but he can only sell what the networks are buying. And what they are buying are shows that have scant social or political content. A few shows have a facade of importance, like a stage flat, but there's little of substance behind them.

He spent 28 years writing for Bob Hope. He wrote for 11 Academy Award shows and six Grammy shows. He co-wrote two movies, "Yours, Mine and Ours" and "Mixed Company." He has produced, directed or written such shows as "Baby, I'm Back," "One Day at a Time," "Archie Bunker's Place," "Sanford," "Gimme a Break." His honors include two Emmys, a Humanitas Award, a Golden Globe and a Peabody Award.

Lachman has also written gags for political candidates. He last wrote for George Bush in his 1984 race for vice president. But he would not be surprised if he's asked to participate in the next presidential campaign.

"I wrote some gags for Bob for a roast in Washington and Barry Goldwater heard him and called me for some material," he said. "I also wrote a speech for Robert Kennedy. After that, I did a lot of writing for politicians."

Lachman was born in Seattle, but is frequently taken for a New Yorker. "People just naturally assume that all comedy writers grew up in New York," he said. "They think every writer went to high school with Woody Allen in Brooklyn."

People Meters Give ABC First Place In Prime Time

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — NBC complained when the A.C. Nielsen Co.'s old rating system showed it with lower Sunday night numbers than it thought it should have had, but things might be worse under the new people meters.

When the first, weekly national people-meter ratings were released on Wednesday, ABC won for the first time since July 1986. CBS News was happy with the new system, too, since it came in firmly in first place. CBS announced it had signed a new contract with Nielsen for the coming season, joining NBC. ABC has yet to sign.

Meanwhile, there was a glitch in the old Nielsen system that is being phased out this month in favor of people meters, and Nielsen had to recalculate the ratings, delaying program rankings a day.

The people-meter ratings don't become the rule until the new television season officially begins later this month. Meantime, the networks are operating under the old system, but releasing people-meter numbers, too.

Before the recalculation, NBC was in first place under the old system, and presumably will remain so, since the recalculation will bring down ABC's rating slightly.

But under the people-meter numbers, ABC won the week with an average rating of 11.2. NBC was second with a 10.9, and CBS third with 10.0.

Ironically, ABC has not yet signed up with Nielsen for the new season, citing complaints about alleged inaccuracies in the new ratings system.

The "CBS Evening News," meanwhile, which had been struggling in third place under the old Nielsen system most of the summer bounced into firm first place under people meters with a 10.2 and a 22 share. "NBC Nightly News" had a 9.3 rating and 20 share and ABC's "World News Tonight" had a 9.0 and a 19.

The rating is a percentage of the nation's estimated 88.6 million households with televisions. The share is a percentage of the viewers tuned in during a particular time period.

Coincidentally, CBS announced Wednesday it was signing a new contract with Nielsen, but will continue its contract with a Nielsen competitor, AGB Research. CBS, too, had expressed concern about accuracy of the new Nielsen system but said it was satisfied with guarantees in the new contract.

The old system uses a combination of audiometers attached to sets that automatically record what channel is tuned and a separate, written diary.

The people meter records each viewer's sex and age via an identification code that must be punched in each time the viewer watches TV.

Until the new season starts, program rankings are calculated under the old system, and the Nielsen computer apparently failed to accurately calculate ABC's ratings for Sunday when the syndicated Jerry Lewis telethon heavily pre-empted network programs.

The news ratings were not affected, and even under the old-system news ratings, CBS won with a rating of 9.6. NBC and ABC tied with 9.2 each.

The people-meter numbers were welcome news at CBS News, where anchor Dan Rather had been plagued by rumors of co-anchors and drastic changes because of a long, unaccustomed run in third place this summer.

CBS News spokesman Tom Goodman said Rather was pleased by the week's results, but eager to give credit to his production staff.

"It's a real shot in the arm for us," Goodman said.

Japanese Turn Out For Michael Jackson

L.A. Times-Washington Post

TOKYO — Michael Jackson, accompanied by 110,000 pounds of musical and lighting equipment, an 85-person entourage and Bubbles the Chimpanzee, arrived here Wednesday to begin a 12-nation world tour, the superstar's first performances ever as a solo act.

Although police at Narita International Airport limited the numbers of photographers and fans, Jackson received a frenzied welcome. The terminal lobby was packed with both ordinary travelers and fans who had made the 41-mile trip out from downtown Tokyo in hopes of seeing the singer.

Middle-age men and women, along with teen-age girls, took off their shoes and climbed atop sofa backs in an attempt to catch a glimpse of the 29-year-old singer. Others lined a balcony overlooking the terminal's ground floor.

What they saw was Jackson, wearing his trademark dark glasses, come out of the customs area through a doorway normally used only for baggage carts, walk quickly across the edge of the lobby with a police escort and disappear into an elevator. It took him to an underground exit, so that he could avoid the roads in front of the terminal used by limousine buses, taxis and ordinary vehicles.

Asked for a word for his Japanese fans, Jackson said only, "I love them all."

Vietnam Seeks Help For Veterans In Five Conflicts

By PETER ENG
Associated Press Writer
HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Dao Duc Dai limps on a wooden left leg toward machines spinning and screeching to turn out spools of thread in a factory the government reserves for people like him.

He is one of an estimated half million Vietnamese military veterans disabled in five conflicts — against the Japanese in World War II, the French in the early 1950s, the Americans in South Vietnam, and more recently the Chinese along the northern border and guerrilla forces in neighboring Cambodia.

Dai, now 42, watches over 12 old machines at his job. He said he lost his leg during the Communists' Tet offensive at Hue in South Vietnam in 1968.

"I remember the difficulties of the war, the long way I had to go from North to South," he told a visitor. "It was a hard life. But I don't feel any hatred for the Americans because what happened is in the past and you cannot do anything about it now."

The government knows roughly how many disabled veterans it has to care for but it doesn't know — except to say in the "millions" — how many war veterans it has overall.

"We have three generations of war invalids and veterans," said Le Binh, an official in the Ministry of Labor, War Invalids and Social Welfare who lost a leg fighting the French. "The veterans of war in Vietnam have a strong will to return to normal life."

Vietnam maintains the world's third largest standing army, and acknowledges it has major problems in finding jobs for the most recent veterans, particularly for those who have fought the Chinese and the Cambodian resistance since 1979.

The Communist party newspaper Nan Dhan recently assailed veteran policies as being out of date. "Many violations of social justice are still prevalent," it said.

The army newspaper Quan Doi Nhan Dan said former soldiers face "unfair and irrational" hiring practices at enterprises and state agencies.

But veterans interviewed here say they had few problems in rejoining society because, unlike the Americans they fought in the South, they returned home as heroes who won national independence.

Binh said some veterans were recuperating in provincial sanitariums from psychological scars from the 1960-75 conflict in South Vietnam. But he added that such cases were very few because the soldiers fought for a cause they supported and the people and government welcomed them back with "love and respect."

"I fought for my people and that's why they treated me well," said Hoang Chien Viet, a factory guard partially paralyzed from an American air strike. "The Americans — I don't know whom they fought for, and perhaps they don't know themselves."

Ex-Soldier Compiling Veterans' Directory

FREEPORT, Minn. (AP) — Ron McGinnis pulled his semi-trailer truck into St. Louis, hometown of an old Vietnam war buddy. He found a motel, a beer and a phone book, but he couldn't find Jim Boettcher.

"I must have called every Boettcher in the St. Louis phone book. And, of all names, wouldn't you know his wife's was Smith. So I didn't even try."

But McGinnis, 39, of Freeport, didn't give up his search for Boettcher and his other Army buddies. In fact, he's not only looking for his own buddies, but everybody else's as well.

McGinnis wants to put together a directory of veterans' addresses and phone numbers. That way vets like him could keep in touch with each other.

"There's a bond there. We share something that others will never know," he said.

McGinnis formed Veteran's Directory Inc. in January. He quit his trucking job about three months later to devote time to the project.

He works out of an office in the back of his house, where he spends his days making telephone calls, writing letters and preparing news releases.

"We're looking for recognition at this point. We're here. We're not going to give up," he said.

The "we" is McGinnis and five or six volunteers, whom he calls his board of directors. He admits he's the only full-time worker, and an unpaid one at that, running the operation on donations.

Some vets have sent back the information needed to get their names in the directory. McGinnis keeps them filed by state in his desk drawer. Before he's finished, he'll probably fill several filing cabinets.

He estimates there are 2.5 million vets in the American Legion alone. And then there are the deceased vets and civilian war vets he'd like to include in the book.

"A lot of people don't realize how many civilians served in the war. I remember the pilot and stewardesses on the plane that took us home. (Enemy troops) were bombing the airfield when they landed."

Not all correspondence has been positive. One letter-writer told

McGinnis that other veterans' organizations provide directories.

But that didn't faze him. Sure, he says, you can find out someone's address when they were discharged. But it's next to impossible to find out where they've moved since.

"Anybody who looks up my discharge address will see Woodson, Calif. But I haven't lived there for 12 years," he noted.

McGinnis says he'd like to have about 100,000 names before publishing his first edition. He'll print other editions after the first book drums up more interest in the project.

(The address of Veteran's Directory Inc. is P.O. Box 171, Freeport, Minn., 56331.)

Agency Fine

RALEIGH (AP) — The state Department of Natural Resources and Community Development is levying a $9,500 fine against the state Department of Human Resources for problems at a wastewater treatment plant in Butner operated by the agency.

"The violations were longstanding," said Paul Wilms, the director of the state's Division of Environmental Management. "They were egregious and had to be addressed."

The Butner plant in Granville County discharges treated sewage upstream from Falls Lake, a Raleigh water supply. Officials say the daily 2.5-million gallon capacity of the 40-year-old plant is often overextended, sometimes reaching 7 million gallons.

We'll make sure you're happy with your mortgage loan because we've got to live with you.

Since all First Federal offices are in and around Pitt County, we've got to deliver the best rates and the most efficient service. You're our only customers.

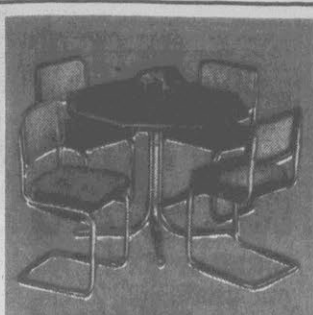

If we don't make home loans in and around Pitt County, we don't make home loans at all. That's because First Federal offices aren't located all around the state and the country like other mortgage firms. We have to make an extra effort to get you the best rates, the best programs and the most efficient service on your mortgage loan. That's why more people in this area come to us for home loans than any other bank, mortgage company or savings institution.

So, if you're in the market for a home, drop by and see one of our friendly mortgage loan officers. We're conveniently located, probably right around the corner. And we'll make an extra effort to help you get settled.
