Weary Pope Ends Visit; Abortion Issue Raised

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP) — Plainly bone-weary from his dawn-into-night pace, Pope John Paul II ended his U.S. tour Saturday by saying America's greatness will be measured by its treatment of "the weakest and most defenseless ones, those as yet unborn."

"America, defend life!" he said.

The pope raised the abortion issue in the 48th and last speech of his 10-day visit visit, a journey marked by cooler-than-expected protests and smaller-than-expected crowds.

"As I go, I take with me vivid memories of a dynamic nation, a warm and welcoming people, a (Roman Catholic) church abundantly blessed with a rich blend of cultural traditions," John Paul said before taking off for a one-day visit to Canada.

"America, you are beautiful indeed, and blessed in so many ways."

Vice President George Bush was part of a full house at the final Mass at the Pontiac Silverdome, and was dispatched to the airport to see the pope off. The leader of the world's 850 million Roman Catholics was welcomed by President Reagan 10 days ago in Miami.

Bush told John Paul that his "forceful words lead us to see God's love as tough love — love that demands commitment from us, love that challenges as well as forgives.

"It is a message for our times," Bush said, "when so many Americans — searching for meaning amid affluence — are turning once again to the religious and ethical values on which this great nation rests. To those who are fighting temptation's call, you have buttressed our first lady's advice to 'Just Say No.'"

In speeches on his final day, the pope exhorted America to live up to its responsibilities as a world power. And he urged his wayward American flock to practice the values he preaches.

He saved his toughest words on abortion for last.

"Pursuing disarmament, while guaranteeing legitimate defense, all this will succeed only if respect for life and its protection by the law is granted to every human being from conception until natural death," the pope said.

"The best traditions of your land presume respect for those who cannot defend themselves," the pope admonished. "If you want equal justice for all, and true freedom and lasting peace, then, America, defend life!"

John Paul wound up his second tour with the words of the first, in 1979: "God bless America so she may increasingly become — and truly be and long remain — one nation, under God, indivisible with liberty and justice for all."

Iraq, Iran Continue Attacks; Tanker Hit

By RICHARD PYLE
Associated Press Writer

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraq and Iran hammered each other with air raids and artillery attacks on Saturday, one day before a deadline set by Arab states for Iran to accept a U.N. cease-fire resolution.

Meanwhile, a U.S. official said search vessels had found the helmets of two American airmen missing in the crash of their jet warplane in the northern Arabian Sea, south of the Persian Gulf.

The official, speaking with the condition he not be identified, said nothing else was fround from the A-6E Intruder, based on the carrier Ranger, that vanished Friday on a night training mission.

Navy and diplomatic sources in the region, also speaking with the condition of anonymity, said there was no indication the plane was hit by hostile fire.

Iraq said Iranian shelling of seven cities killed at least 12 civilians and wounded more than 30. Iran dismissed the account as "sheer invention."

A Cypriot-flag supertanker bound for Iran was hit by an Exocet missile in an apparent Iraqi attack on Iranian oil targets in the Persian Gulf.

Arab foreign ministers meeting in Tunis, Tunisia, meanwhile were expected to endorse Iraq's stand favoring the cease-fire.

The 238,909-ton, 1,053-foot-long Aktinia was hit by a missile on the starboard side, said gulf-based marine salvage executives.

The sources, who spoke on condition of not being further identified, regularly keep track of attacks in the tanker war. They said they had no details on casualties or damage in the attack, the third claimed by Iraq in recent days but the only one independently confirmed by shipping sources.

When hit, the Aktinia apparently was sailing empty to the major Iranian oil terminal at Kharg Island, the sources said. Kharg, a frequent target, has been hit at least twice by its planes in the last few days, according to Iraq.

Diplomatic activity on several fronts focused on the United Nations July 20 resolution calling for a cease-fire. Sunday marks a deadline set by the Arab League's foreign ministers on Aug. 23 for Iran to accept the Security Council's proposal

Young Leftist Murdered Following Protest Rally

MIGUEL C. SUAREZ
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Gunmen killed a prominent young leftist outside his office Saturday, hours after he called a mass rally to protest "the resurgence of fascist rule in the country."

Supporters blamed President Corazon Aquino's government for the death of Lean Alejandro, 27, secretary-general of the militant New Patriotic Alliance.

Alejandro had decried what he said was growing military influence in the Aquino administration.

Rumors of troop movements in Manila and the provinces swept the capital after the shooting. Armed Forces spokesman Col. Honesto Isleta confirmed the military sent additional patrols throughout the city to prevent any attempts at destabilization. Three weeks ago, a coup attempt against the government failed. The government condemned Saturday's killing and Mrs. Aquino vowed to remain in office.

Joe Castro, an associate of Alejandro, said gunmen in a white van fired from close range at the car of the former student activist as it was entering the grounds of his organization's office in suburban Quezon City.

Castro said the men fired directly at Alejandro's face. Driver Roberto Panganiban was critically wounded.

Planes Collide, Crash

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Two small planes attempting to land at an airport collided, exploded and crashed into Tampa Bay on Saturday, killing the three men aboard, authorities said.

"Witnesses said they saw thousands of pieces of debris falling from the sky," said U.S. Coast Guard Petty Officer Chuck Rose.

The bodies of the three men were found in the wreckage, which was scattered over a half mile in shallow water near the Albert Whitted Airport, which is located right on Tampa Bay, said Rose.

One victim, flying a single-engine four seat Beech Sundowner, was identified as Roy E. Lindenmuth, 70, of St. Petersburg.

Reagan Vows Not To Abandon 'Star Wars' Defense Initiative

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan predicted Saturday that a U.S.-Soviet pact eliminating intermediate-range weapons will be signed "later this fall," but served notice that he will not abandon the "Star Wars" defense to achieve a similar accord on long-range missiles.

"The United States and the Soviet Union have now agreed in principle to completing a truly historic treaty," Reagan said in his five-minute radio address. "I expect to sign this treaty later this fall at a summit."

"Our agenda is both peace and freedom, and when I meet Mr. (Mikhail) Gorbachev later this year, this is the agenda I will pursue," Reagan said in the broadcast from his Camp David, Md., mountaintop retreat.

Reagan's dictum to the Soviets — and his own conservative supporters — came only one day after the tumultuous announcement that the two superpowers had reached an "agreement in principle" to rid the world of an entire class of nuclear weapons.

The president lauded the efforts of Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, saying "important progress was made" during their three days of talks.

But in an apparent effort to mollify skeptics, Reagan used his radio address to repeat his oft-stated vow to stand by his space-based Strategic Defense Initiative.

Reagan noted that the two sides had agreed "to forge ahead toward another historic objective — cutting our strategic nuclear arsenal in half."

But in order to reach such a pact, Reagan said, "I made clear to the Soviet foreign minister, I will not sacrifice our SDI program."

As evidence, the president cited Friday's announcement by the Pentagon to accelerate research and testing of six missile defense technologies to prepare for possible deployment in the mid-1990s.

In an interview taped for broadcast on Cable News Network's "Newsmaker Sunday," the U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union, Jack Matlock, echoed Reagan's SDI pledge.

Asked whether the Soviets had softened their demands to curb "Star Wars," Matlock said they had "modified their position on what sort of arrangement they would accept in terms of the space and defensive weapons." The ambassador said U.S. officials were studying the Soviet position, and would respond.

"But we are making it absolutely clear that the one thing we will require is a viable research and testing program for the Strategic Defense Initiative," Matlock said. "We feel that it's in the interest not only of the

Fire/Rescue Beats NFPA In Adopting Safety Rules

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The image of a firefighter racing to a blaze clinging to the back of a fire truck has gone up in smoke, Greenville Fire/Rescue Chief Jenness Allen says.

"We don't allow anybody to ride on the tailboard of the fire apparatus anymore," Allen said. "They either ride in jump seats or in the cab."

"The reason for this is not only on account of just falling off, but the thing about this is if my trucks stop suddenly and somebody driving behind it doesn't stop, I get some men clipped."

Greenville's new riding rule is not federally mandated, but Allen said it soon may be.

"That's not a NFPA (National Fire Protection Association) requirement, but that is something that we're going to find later on as an NFPA requirement," he said. "That's a safety standard that I'm going by that I have set up in the Fire/Rescue Department."

The 89-member department, which includes fire inspectors, training officers and firefighters, are required to obey related regulations, according to Allen, who said firefighters riding in the city's two trucks without jump seats must ride inside the cab.

"All the personnel riding on fire equipment must wear safety belts," said Allen, the department's chief since 1978. "It's an order we put in about three weeks ago. "Basically, the driver does not even start the apparatus until everybody on the apparatus has their seatbelts fastened. That way we don't have anybody falling off the apparatus.

"If we have a man get on the fire apparatus and say he doesn't have his seatbelt on and he falls off that truck, they can even go back and sue the manufacturer of that truck for not making it safe."

The city has also initiated efforts to meet the new guidelines by purchasing a pair of 1,250-gallon-per-minute pumpers, Allen said. I

Weary Pope Ends U.S. Visit

any earlier stop. He rested his head in his hands for a time as he listened to a speech Saturday morning at a meeting with deacons, and the toll of the long days could be measured in his walk as he shook hands and bestowed blessings.

"Dear friends, on this last day of my second extended visit to the United States of America, I would urge you to continue your personal involvement in that never-ending quest for justice and peace," said the pope in the third of his five speeches Saturday. "Each one of you must be instrumental in promoting a social order that respects the dignity of the human person and serves the common good."

It was a message that he carried across the land, making a nine-city stop-and-go arc that ran from Miami to San Francisco with a final long leg to Detroit.

Compared with his first tour in 1979, the crowds were small and they fell far below estimates made before this trip.

In the Polish enclave of Hamtramck, Mich., on Saturday, the turnout was about one-eighth of the 300,000 forecast. In San Francisco, 1 million were forecast along the motercade route but 125,000 appeared; in Miami, where predictions for a turnout at the Mass had been up to one-half million, the number was closer to 150,000.

The weather, often too hot or too wet, and predictions of traffic jams may have kept people home watching the elaborate local television in each city.

The police presence was awesome. The pope was flanked by Secret Service guards, even when he made a handshaking tour of Mission Dolores in San Francisco where the congregation was the old, the frail and the sick.

The pope chose Detroit's Hart Plaza to deliver a speech on social justice, in which he asked Catholics what they had done since 1979 when he had exhorted them "to become instruments for the common good."

Speaking in a state where the unemployment rate in August was 8.8 percent, the pope said:

"There is poverty among you when the old and the weak are neglected and their standard of living constantly declines. There is poverty when illness takes away the wage earner from a family. There is material need and suffering in those areas or groups where unemployment risks becoming endemic. There is poverty in the future of those that cannot enjoy the benefits of basic education."

And, apparently addressing industry in this Motor City, he warned of the devastating effects that new technologies can have.

"The introduction of robotics, the rapid development of communications, the necessary adaption of industrial plants, the need to introduce new skills in management — these are but some of the factors that, if not analyzed carefully or tested as to their social cost, may produce undue hardship for many, either temporarily or more permanently."

Such problems, said the pope, no longer are confined to one country.

"America is a very powerful country," he said. "The amount and quality of your achievements are staggering ... You may choose to close in on yourselves to enjoy the fruits of your own form of progress and to try to forget about the rest of the world."

Or, said the pope, "you may choose to live up to the responsibilities that your own history and accomplishments place on your shoulders."

He said that "all major problems that concern the life of the human person in society have become world problems. Any decision that is envisaged in the political, economic or social sphere must be considered within the context of its worldwide repercussions."

The pope said those are only a few areas where social responsibility is challenged. He mentioned divorce, abortion, immigration and discrimination based on race, ethnic origin, culture, sex or religion.

In Hamtramck, the pontiff spoke in Polish, a tongue native to him and to much of his audience. He praised the effort there to preserve the Polish heritage and said more and more young people "are willing to learn the history, the language and all the richness of the homeland from which their forebears came."

Said the pope: "They gladly say 'I am proud to be an American,' but they are no less proud of their origins."

Pulitzer Winner Credits Success To Serendipity

By CLAY DEANHARDT
Reflector Staff Writer

As a reporter for the Kansas City Times, Rick Atkinson won the Pulitzer Prize in 1982 for a series of articles chronicling the experiences of the West Point class of 1966.

Three years later Atkinson became deputy national editor for the Washington Post — at age 34 the youngest desk editor for the newspaper.

Atkinson, a 1974 graduate of East Carolina University with a bachelor's degree in English, returned to Greenville Friday to speak to the 7th Annual North Carolina Honors Association meeting on campus.

In an interview after his speech Friday, Atkinson said he enjoyed being a reporter, even though he didn't start practicing journalism until after his graduation.

"It's (reporting) a first rough draft of history, that kind of thing," he said.

As a reporter and an editor, Atkinson has written rough drafts about many big events. He covered the Iran-Contra hearings, Jesse Jackson and later Geraldine Ferraro in the '84 elections, the bombings in Lebanon, the Pentagon, defense contractors, and the U.S. — U.S.S.R. summit in Iceland.

Atkinson headed a team of reporters and photographers at the summit for the Post. He said it was one of the most surprising and exciting things he's ever covered — an expected do-nothing meeting that almost changed the world dramatically forever.

"It was very much a piece of the sort of things — if your lucky — you get to do as a reporter," he said.

He credits his success to serendipity, good fortune and hard work, and says his education both in and out of class at ECU effected him greatly.

"The times were singular," he said. "There was a certain iconoclasm that I think was part of my education and very valuable."

While at ECU, Atkinson was involved in student government as a public defender and later SGA vice president. While public defender, he defended Bob Thonen, editor of The East Carolinian, when Thonen was tried for printing obscenities against the Chancellor.

Atkinson lost the case in front of the ECU Judicial Board, but Thonen sued and was reinstated to his position. That was the beginning of Atkinson's asscociation with the press.

Today he has taken a leave of absence from the Post, and is writing a book about that West Point Class of 1962. They are the emerging leaders of the American military, he says, and they will be the shapers of our defense tomorrow.

When asked about his Pulitzer, Atkinson shrugs off the question with a smile. "It didn't change my life," he said. "I still had to get up the next morning and punch the clock."

As a matter of fact, he noted, the $1,000 check and certificate that come with the prize were mailed to him — postage due: 41 cents.

Atkinson has come a long way since began reporting for a small town Kansas newspaper and, admittedly, "didn't know a headline from a cutline (photo caption)." His advice to future journalists is to stay away from majoring in journalism.

"I think a broad liberal arts education is the best education for being a journalist," he said. "I'm pretty dogmatic about that.

"Some journalism students are great journalists — other people, they're a little pinched in their view of things."

Planes Collide

The identities of the two men aboard the second plane, an antique Commonwealth, were being withheld pending notification of relatives, said Rose.

"Both aircraft were in-bound into the airport and had been talking to the tower" when the collision occurred about 11:30 a.m. in good flying weather under partly cloudy skies, Barker said.

No one saw the collision, but the airport tower and several witnesses heard the explosion and saw debris fall, said Barker.

Immediately after the crash, the Coast Guard sent in a helicopter and two boats, and organized other private vessels to search the area, Rose said.

Neither plane had filed a flight plan and both were flying under visual flight rules, said Jack Barker, spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Atlanta. He added that the Commonwealth was believed to be following the Sundowner toward the airport.

Albert Whitted Airport is largely used for pilot training and small private aircraft.

Reagan

United States, but of the whole world, and we're simply not going to give that up."

Soviet foreign ministry spokesman Gennadiy Gerasimov, speaking on the same program, said Gorbachev does not seek "political tourism" and wants a substantive superpower summit.

"But now we are going to have the centerpiece for the table at which our leaders are going to sit and talk. The centerpiece is the treaty on missiles and we hope both sides are prepared and it is sufficient reason to go," Gerasimov said.

Asked when Gorbachev might come to Washington, he responded, "If it's autumn, November is a good time, I hope."

In the wake of the breakthrough on arms control, Reagan's own conservative allies in Congress have expressed rather muted support for the intermediate-range pact.

They have also voiced fears that in the euphoria over reaching the first nuclear accord of his presidency, Reagan might be persuaded to bargain away SDI for additional agreements.

Reagan said that despite the more knotty problem of the strategic missiles — which by far are the more threatening element of the U.S.-Soviet nuclear arsenals — he did not intend to use the SDI program as a bargaining chip.

The "Star Wars" program, known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative, is an effort to develop a space-based defense against missiles by using exotic technology and posibly nuclear weapons in space.

At times, the Soviets have indicated they would not try to deter research. But they have taken a tough stand in the Geneva negotiations against testng and ultimate deployment of the program.

The framework set up in 1985 for the U.S.-Soviet arms control talks in Geneva permits either side to hold up an accord in one area in order to gain concessions in another.

While the Soviets were willing to reach a tentative agreement to ban intermediate-range nuclear missiles, U.S. officials accuse them of holding progress on a pact to cut strategic weapons in half "hostage" to American concessions on Star Wars.

Leftist Murdered

One of two women staff members in the back seat was grazed by a bullet and sent home after treatment.

The assassination was expected to heighten tensions in a country still reeling from the aftershocks of a military coup attempt Aug. 28 and the government shake-up that followed.

Earlier Saturday, employees of the Department of Agrarian Reform found four bombs outside the department's land transfer office. One of the devices defused by police had only three minutes to go before it was set to explode.

Alejandro's killers escaped. But leaders of various student, labor, peasant and other groups affiliated with his organization said they held the government responsible.

They said Mrs. Aquino's recent overtures to the armed forces were encouraging the military to crack down on organizations suspected of being Communist fronts.

"We hold the Aquino regime responsible for this heinous crime," Castro said. "It has consciously and assiduously sanctioned political repression and unleashed its military troops against the people's legitimate organizations.

"We aver that Lean's murderers could have only been those who hold it in their interest to crush the resurgent nationalist and democratic mass movement and stem growing protests to worsening social conditions," Castro said.

Leftist groups charged last week that the military and other rightist groups planned to kill key leftist figures to justify imposing emergency rule.

"I think the events of the last few weeks have made it increasingly clear that there is no difference between the military loyal to the old regime and the military that is loyal to Cory Aquino," Alejandro's widow, Lydenaida, told reporters.

Presidential spokesman Teodoro Benigno called the killing a "very tragic travesty of law and order." He said the murder was "truly regrettable ... especially at a time when President Aquino is calling on everyone to join hands and enable the country to reach the higher ground of democracy and the rule of law."

Mrs. Aquino vowed Saturday to remain in office until her term expires June 30, 1992.

"There is a commitment on my part to serve out the full term," she told visiting mayors and provincial governors. "I know that I would be able to do so."

Alejandro's group, known by its Tagalog-language acronym BAYAN, helped sweep Mrs. Aquino to power in February 1986 but was disappointed by her failure to initiate broad social reform which the "people power revolution" promised.

Shortly before the ambush, Alejandro told a news conference at the National Press Club that BAYAN would stage a rally Monday to protest military influence in the government.

Monday is the 15th anniversary of the declaration of martial law by ousted President Ferdinand Marcos. Leftists vowed to go ahead with the protest.

Alejandro's shooting was the latest in a series of killings, kidnappings and attacks which have shaken public confidence in the government.

On Aug. 2, gunmen killed Local Governments Secretary Jaime Ferrer.

Last November, left-wing labor leader Rolando Olalia was killed a week before the government blocked a coup attempt by right-wing military officers.

In June, gunmen wounded former Communist rebel leader Bernabe Buscayno and killed three companions in an ambush.

Correction

Winterville Baptist Church will hold homecoming Sept. 27 rather than today as reported in Friday's edition.

It's as inevitable as taxes, but don't ask your CPA about it.

The two inevitabilities. When it comes to questions about taxes most people don't hesitate to make plans and arrangements with their accountant. But when it comes to the other inevitability, it's amazing how few people make any arrangements at all.

And that's a mystery, considering the benefits to family and friends that funeral prearrangement offers. It makes things simple. It offers peace of mind. Reassurance to loved ones. And it takes very little time.

So if you're tax planning, ask your CPA or tax lawyer. The other inevitability? Ask us.

Clarification Offered

No plans or firm proposals have been made in regards to handling East Carolina University student parties, according to a statement released by Nelson Staton, Greenville police interim assistant chief.

Staton's statement was released to clarify the position stated in the article "Police, ECU Officials Developing Plan to Prevent Student Clashes," which was printed in Thursday's Daily Reflector.

"On September 2, university and city officials discussed several alternatives for avoiding or handling incidents involving ECU student parties that get out of control," the statement said. "Many different ideas were discussed; however, no plans or firm proposals were made. Reports of that meeting may have led some citizens to believe that we have a different enforcement policy for students than for other citizens. This is not the case: however, we will continue discussions regarding future policies. Nothing is final at this time and we will probably not give any further consideration to ideas involving a different enforcement policy for students in community problems than the enforcement policy for any other citizen," Staton said.

Visits Down At Heritage

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Fewer and fewer people are visiting Heritage USA since the PTL television ministry filed for reorganization in bankruptcy court in June, officials say.

Heritage officials said visitors have become uncertain about the ministry's future. But they expect to see attendance pick up once bankruptcy proceedings now in progress in Columbia are finished, which should be in December or January.

"I'm not a financial person, and when you say bankruptcy to me, I think it's all over," said PTL spokesman Don Hardister.

Other people probably are having similar thoughts, he said. "They thought we were closing the door," he said.

Also, tour groups have canceled because they fear protests. Hardister said there have been just two marches — one on July 4th and one on Labor Day.

The new PTL board members ought help from bankruptcy court three months after they took over. PTL President Jim Bakker resigned in March after admitting a brief extramarital sexual encounter and turned the ministry over to the Rev. Jerry Falwell.

Heritage, which broke attendance records last season, showed a 16 percent decline in visitors during Sept. 1-13, from 43,388 in 1986 to 36,408 in 1987.

But figures for the year still show an increase because attendance increased until June. From Jan. 1 to Sept. 13 in 1986, the ministry had 909,128 visitors. Over the same period this year, the ministry has had 944,865 visitors.

June showed an 8 percent decrease from 135,845 to 124,916; July showed a 15 percent decrease from 158,623 to 134,480; and August showed a 24 percent decrease from 148,610 to 112,360.

Hardister said Heritage gets its attendance figures by counting the number of vehicles that enter, then figuring four people to a car, eight people to a van and 30 persons per bus.

Reid's Chapel

Homecoming and quarterly meeting will be held at 11 a.m. today in Reid's Chapel Missionary Baptist Church, Fountain, by the Rev. Walter Adkins.

Revival Scheduled

Choirs for the week are Whichard Chapel, Monday; St. Monica, Tuesday; St. Francis, Wednesday, and St. Cindy, Thursday.

ECU BLOOD DRIVE — Chancellor Richard Eakin of East Carolina University recently joined in the effort to raise 200 pints of blood a day during a two-day blood drive sponsored by the ECU Air Force ROTC. (Continued from A-1) for a cease-fire and a negotiated settlement of the 7-year-old war.

At that meeting, also held in Tunis, they warned that if the Tehran government refused, their governments would "reconsider" diplomatic ties with the Islamic revolutionary regime.

The Arab League countries generally support fellow-member Iraq, which endorsed the U.N. cease-fire resolution and rejected any temporary or conditional truce. Syria, a bitter political foe of Iraq, was expected to try to forestall any move toward wholesale severing of ties with Tehran.

According to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar's report to the council on his peace mission to Iran and Iraq this month, Iran would accept an informal cease-fire while an inquiry is conducted to fix blame for the war.

Iranian President Ali Khamenei is expected to spell out further details of Iran's position when he addresses the U.N. General Assembly on Tuesday.

Japanese Foreign Minister Tadashi Kuranari met in Baghdad with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and was told that Iraq would oppose any move to "alter the text" of the resolution, the Iraqi News Agency said.

Japan is one of the few Western-aligned countries with diplomatic ties to both belligerents. It has an important stake in ending the war because more than half of its oil supply comes from the Persian Gulf.

The Iraqi News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, reported coordinated raids by two squadrons of Iraqi warplanes against oil-pumping stations at Zaneh and Razan, western Iran, at noon Saturday.

Tehran Radio, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp., confirmed the attacks and said they caused damage and injured several people.

An earlier Iraqi communique said raiders ranged 700 miles to the south end of the gulf to strike at Iran's Lavan Island oil terminal in the Strait of Hormuz, and also hit an unidentified "large maritime target" — meaning a ship — off Iran.

Baghdad Radio, monitored in Cyprus, broke into normal broadcasting to report that long-range Iranian artillery hit residential areas in seven border cities and towns, killing at least 12 civilians and injuring more than 30.

It said the bombardment began with shelling Basra on Friday, and "continued without letup" through Saturday against Sulaymanieh, Khanaqin, Badra, Sirwan, Jawarneh and Khormal.

In Tehran, a military spokesman dismissed as "sheer invention" Baghdad's claims that Iraqi cities were shelled, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported in a dispatch monitored in Cyprus.

The U.S. Navy jet was the second American aircraft lost in the region since America began escorting convoys of reflagged Kuwaiti tankers to protect them from Iranian attack. A helicopter crash in the gulf July 30 killed four men.

The construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad was completed in 1883. The last spike was driven near Garrison, Mont.

Farm Aid Sings Out For Agriculture

By ED HOWARD
Associated Press Writer

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) - Singer Willie Nelson brought his star-studded Farm Aid III concert to the heartland Saturday to raise money for the nation's small farmers and push for Congress to help them out.

Nelson said he doesn't expect there will be a Farm Aid IV, believing the public and politicians ultimately will have to solve continuing problems in U.S. agriculture.

The concert drew approximately 69,000 people to the University of Nebraska's Memorial Stadium.

The crowd rocked and rolled, shook and shouted, picnicked and partied while a parade of performers sang from noon through the night.

The list of entertainers who sang and then met with reporters to speak up for the nation's small farmers included Nelson, Kris Kristofferson, Rita Coolidge, Arlo Guthrie, Emmylou Harris, Asleep at the Wheel and John Denver.

The Grateful Dead paid for a live satellite hookup in order to appear on giant television screens while they were playing live at Madison Square Garden in New York City.

The Nashville Network agreed to broadcast the show on cable from noon until 8 p.m. Dick Clark Productions signed to syndicate the program nationwide from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. It also was syndicated for radio.

At a news conference Saturday, Nelson said Farm Aid officials want to see farmers get more money for their products.

"Two cents from a box of Wheaties is what farmers get and $1.40 is what you pay," Nelson said. "Something in between is what we're looking for."

Kristofferson said it was "a little optimistic to think there wouldn't be another Farm Aid."

"I wouldn't mind seeing the load taken off of Willie because it is such a load," Kristofferson said.

"I hope it's not the last Farm Aid," said Miss Coolidge, "because this is by far the best. It's been run so well this year, it's a joy to be here."

Nelson said that although the concerts will probably stop, the Farm Aid Inc. organization will live on and try to help family farm agriculture.

Organizers said it would be Sunday or Monday before an accurate estimate of pledges garnered by Farm Aid III could be made.

The festival atmosphere that has engulfed the city's Haymarket District in the last few days was sustained and enhanced by the concert crowd.

"It ain't been a bad crowd when you consider how big it is," said one security officer who declined to give his name. "Not very many hard cases, really."

Safety Rules Are Followed

ed cabs on them where nobody will be sitting in a jumpseat in the back," he said. "They will be sitting inside of a cab with doors on it."

Meanwhile, a number of safety requirements have been implemented, making firefighting more safe and efficient, according to Allen, who joined the city's fire department as a volunteer in 1946 and became a paid employee in 1952.

"There are so many safety factors built in that weren't built in back then," he said. "When I came to work here, basically we had boots, and we had pants and we had coats. We did not have breathing apparatus. What you did was sit at the front door and watch people step out the back door because you couldn't get in it and now that's not true.

"Now, we've got a rule in the department if you go into a house that's got smoke in it, you wear a breathing apparatus. When I first came to work here you would fight a fire and breath in smoke and you'd come back out and cough for 30 minutes."

Firefighters are only wearing NFPA-approved gear, according to Allen, who said the regulations were implemented about three years ago.

"Up until then, we used to wear cotton duck," he said. "Now, we can't do that anymore. Two years before it went into effect, we started changing it over, so by the time this law came into effect, we basically had everybody in Nomax clothes — it's a fire retardent material.

"It doesn't last as long as cotton duck, which means you have to replace it more often."

Regulations have also been implemented involving helmets and foot gear, Allen said.

"We have to wear a certain type helmet that withstands so much shock and so much pressure," he said. "All our men that fight fires are wearing safety boots, too.

"These safety boots have steel innersoles in them so if you step on a nail, it deters the nail or bends it so it doesn't go in your foot. That's something we didn't have when I came to work here."

CONSTITUTION TREE — A commemorative dogwood was added to the plantings on the Farmville Town Common during the U.S. Constitution Bicentennial celebration. Daughters of the American Revolution will provide a plaque to explain the tree's significance.

JAMS TO KNICKERS — School children donned varied attire to attend Farmville's community celebration of the signing of the Constitution.

'One Common Interest' Celebrated In Farmville

FARMVILLE — Sunshine and patriotic festivity reigned Thursday as Farmville celebrated the bicentennial of the signing of the United States Constitution.

Red, white and blue Flags and Flag motifs shone against the sparkle of gold and black band uniforms as the Farmville Central High School Band sounded the musical call to "One Common Interest" — a uniting of the community to express thankfulness for the freedom this nation has enjoyed for two centuries. Fifes and drums, majorettes, vocal soloists, leaders of prayers, and others led the assemblage in wishing the U.S. Constitution "Happy Birthday."

Churches in the community chimed the good news of freedom through patriotic tunes, not only during the celebration, but before and after, including 4 p.m., the exact hour of the signing of the Constitution 200 years ago in Philadelphia.

The Major Benjamin May chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution sponsored the celebration which brought together Farmville residents and guests of all ages and persuasions. From kindergarteners to senior citizens in colonial attire, from Children of the American Revolution to Vietnam Veterans of America, people gathered to express love of country. Sunshine and patriotism reigned.

By Carol Tyer

BONNETS AND RUFFLES — Many of the assemblage, including numerous senior citizens, heightened the festivity by wearing colorful colonial gowns and head coverings.

Pageant Finalists Represented Cross-Section Of United States

By JOYCE A. VENEZIA
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — A casino performer who overcame a paralyzing nerve disorder, a ventriloquist from Louisiana and a rancher's daughter from Texas were among the 10 finalists Saturday trying to become Miss America 1988.

The 10, representing a cross-section of the nation, had the highest scores after four days of swimsuit, talent and evening gown competitions and interviews with eight judges.

They are: Miss Colorado La Tanya R. Hall, 22, of Boulder; Miss Florida Jennifer Anne Sauder, 22, of Homestead; Miss Louisiana Patricia Brant, 23, of Monroe; Miss Maryland Tammy Alaine Walker, 21, of Kingsville; Miss Michigan Kaye Lani Rae Rafko, 24, of Monroe; Miss Missouri Robin Riley, 25, of Columbia; Miss Mississippi Toni Seawright, 23, of Moss Point; Miss Nevada Stacie James, 23, of Las Vegas; Miss Texas Jo Thompson, 22, of Lufkin; and Miss Virginia Heidi Lammi, 26, of Alexandria.

On Saturday, the judging started over as all scores were wiped clean except for the interviews. The 10 finalists then compete again in the swimsuit, evening gown and talent contests and the winner walks down the runway in Convention Hall here as host Gary Collins sings the pageant standard, "There She Is."

The new Miss America succeeds Miss America 1987 Kellye Cash, 22, of Memphis, Tenn.

Security in Convention Hall was tight as labor disputes plagued this year's pageant. Pageant chairman Albert J. Marks Jr. already resolved one problem by moving four contestants from a nearby casino hotel hit by a labor strike.

But several busloads of news writers and studio hands striking the National Broadcasting Co. in New York traveled to Atlantic City to demonstrate during the pageant, which is televised by NBC-TV.

"We are taking every precaution," Marks said Saturday.

Atlantic City police Inspector Nicholas Rifice said that 250 police officers patrolled inside and outside of Convention Hall because of possible problems by members of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, which is striking against the network.

Traditionally, Rifice said, only about 15 to 20 officers cover the pageant.

NABET had approximately 200 members in Atlantic City, including 100 who had purchased tickets for the pageant, said James Norberg, who has worked for NBC for 4½ years and was one of those planning to stand outside Convention Hall on a picket line during the event.

He would not say whether the strikers inside the building planned any interruptions, but said those outside only would picket.

Rifice said police had learned there "might be attempts to sabotage the live production."

To work around the strike by NABET, Marks, who traditionally hires the television crew independent of NBC, hired 42 freelancers from other unions to run this year's show.

Meanwhile, the pageant this year included one Korean and three black women.

Two of the 10 finalists were black: Miss Hall, who sang the pop tune, "I Am Changing," and Miss Seawright, who sang, "We're Going All The Way."

Other singers included Miss James, who belted out "On My Own" from the Broadway musical "Les Miserables;" Miss Walker, with "Don't Rain On My Parade;" and Miss Sauder, who performed the semi-classical piece, "If We Were In Love."

Miss Brant also chose to sing, but with her mouth all but closed. She did a ventriloquist act with two dummies, singing a round of "Row, Row, Row Your Boat" and the "Arizona Yodeler."

Four of the finalists danced for their talent, three in ballet. Miss Lammi performed ballet en pointe to "Grand Tarentelle;" Miss Riley also danced ballet en pointe to "Overture From Funny Girl;" and Miss Thompson did interpretive ballet to "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

Miss Rafko danced a Hawaiian-Tahitian number.

The 66-year-old Miss America Pageant is the largest contributor of scholarships to young women, awarding more than $5.5 million annually to the more than 80,000 young women who compete on the national, state and local levels.

The new Miss America receives a $30,000 cash scholarship and the income from a year of personal appearances. Miss Cash estimates she earned more than $100,000 during her reign.

The first runner-up receives a $17,000 scholarship and the next three runners-up receive $11,000, $8,000 and $6,000 in scholarships, respectively. The remaining finalists each receive $4,000 to be used toward their educations.

It was the sixth year as emcee for Collins, husband of Miss America 1959 Mary Ann Mobley.

"There She Is" was first sung at the pageant in 1951, but was dropped in 1981 in a dispute with composer Bernie Wayne over money. The song returned in 1985.

This year's judges were operatic soprano Martina Arroyo, sportswriter Frank Deford, television producer Jack Grossbart, composer Rupert Holmes, Miss America 1969 Judy Ford Johnson, choreographer Anita Mann, Tony Award-winning stage star Melba Moore and communications consultant Bill G. Young.

The pageant draws criticism from women who decry its concern with beauty and shapeliness, but it has tried to change. The contestants' bust, waist and hip measurements were dropped from the program book and from resumes distributed to the media.

Couple Married At Hospital

CINCINNATI (AP) — A stroke and pancreas problems did not get in the way of love at Holmes Hospital in Cincinnati.

Willa Johnson and Robert Wilkerson were married Saturday at the hospital attached to the University of Cincinnati Medical Center.

The third try was the charm for the couple.

Their first wedding date was postponed when the groom, 49, was hospitalized with pancreas trouble. Their second wedding date, on Sept. 12, was scrapped because the bride, 45, was in the hospital recovering from a stroke.

But, Saturday, the couple kept their matrimonial plans intact and married in a tiny chapel at the hospital.

Ms. Johnson was escorted down the aisle in a wheelchair, carrying a bouquet donated by hospital employees. The Rev. Clayton Bell, a Church of God minister, married the couple in a brief ceremony, and there was donated wedding cake and nonalcoholic champagne afterward.

College Chiefs Urge Involvement In Education Reform Movement

GREENSBORO (AP) — Saying a national emergency surrounds public education in America, the leaders of 37 colleges and universities across the country are calling on their colleagues to become personally involved in the teaching reform movement.

"I see this as a call for action," said Ruth Shaw, president of Central Piedmont Community College in Charlotte. "We have very much to gain or lose."

Shaw and E.K. Fretwell Jr., chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, were among the signers of an open letter sent to the nation's 3,300 college and university presidents.

The letter, released Friday in Washington by the American Association of Higher Education, calls on the presidents to speak out on the need to enhance teaching as a profession, work more closely with the public schools, bring more minorities into teaching, give higher priority to their own schools of education and make sure those schools are doing a first-rate job.

"We perceive a national emergency — an emergency rooted not in the failure of our schools, but in the revolution of expectations about what our schools must accomplish," the letter says.

"Ultimately, all of the major dimensions of our national life — security, economic growth, human welfare, social stability, cultural achievement — are linked to the improvement of our educational enterprise."

The seven-page letter was inspired by "A Nation Prepared: Teachers for the 21st Century," a 1986 report by the Carnegie Forum on Education and the Economy.

Earlier this month, a group of the presidents was invited to Minneapolis by Stanford University President Donald Kennedy to help draft the letter that would be a response to the Carnegie report.

Only Shaw and Fretwell were invited from North Carolina.

But former Gov. Jim Hunt counseled members of the group on the importance of their role.

"The business leadership of this country responds to you and your colleagues in a way they will respond to no one else," Hunt told the presidents. "You have a bully pulpit that is very important."

Hunt, who helped prepare the Carnegie report, said he was pleased by the presidents' response.

"Here for the first time you've got top college and university presidents speaking out," Hunt said Friday. "It's important that they think this is important."

The letter recognizes certain areas that deserve primary attention. They include the critical need for mathematicians; the need for all graduates to command English in writing, speaking and complex argument; and the need to make education relate to available careers.

It also calls on the presidents "to become champions for the whole educational enterprise."

"We can raise the aspirations of parents and children by providing convincing evidence to the public that every child can learn far more than we thought before," the letter says. "At the same time we can help the public understand that resources for new reforms are scarce and that many reforms have yet to reach large numbers of our most disadvantaged children."

The letter adds that any new commitment will require universities to admit their own shortcomings.

"We recognize that we and our institutions are part of the problem as well as the solution and that improvement properly begins at home."

One of the letter's strongest calls was to bring more minorities into teaching.

Minorities will soon total one-third of the children in the nation's schools, but if trends continue, minorities soon will total less than 5 percent of the teachers.

"Our need for able, well-prepared, compassionate teachers is great," the letter says, "but the need for minority teachers with the same qualities is desperate."

Fretwell said he and Shaw will talk to other presidents about the letter's suggestions.

"I hope we can inject this into the thinking of every college and university president in North Carolina," Fretwell said. "The consequences of not improving teacher education ... at this time are terrible to contemplate."

AIDS-Related Death

ASHEVILLE (AP) — A Marion man who had suffered from hemophilia since birth died Friday in Chapel Hill from complications resulting from AIDS, his father said.

The Rev. David Paul Ford, 38, died after spending 12 days in N.C. Memorial Hospital, according to his father, the Rev. Paul A. Ford, also of Marion.

The elder Ford said doctors told him his son contracted the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome during a blood transfusion "some time ago." David Ford had tested positive for the AIDS antibody several months ago, his father said, but it was only within the last few weeks that the family received a definite AIDS diagnosis.

"He did know that he had received some blood that had later been recalled," Paul Ford said in an interview with The Asheville Citizen.

Wolfe Award

ATLANTIC BEACH, N.C. (AP) — Elizabeth Leland of The Charlotte Observer won the 1987 Thomas Wolfe Award for outstanding writing Saturday for a story about the impact of drought on a North Carolina farm family.

Contest judge Lawson Marshall, general manager of The Daily Progress in Charlottesville, Va., and a veteran Virginia journalist, said the "choice was clear" in selecting the winner. The award is presented annually by the North Carolina Associated Press News Council.

Ms. Leland's article, "Harvest of Heartache," "typifies the best of our profession," Marshall wrote. "We in journalism do no greater service to our readers and to our society than when we translate the news into very real human terms."

Ms. Leland's article was about Jack Scism and how the drought of 1986 affected his family and farm.

The award can be given to a story from any section of a newspaper that belongs to the AP. The News Council is composed of editors from AP Member newspapers.

Marshall gave special recognition to two other entries. One was a first-person account by Winston-Salem Journal reporter Frank Tursi about a camp for handicapped children. The other was a piece by Mason Peters of the Norfolk (Va.) Virginian-Pilot and Ledger Star about Jim "Catfish" Hunter.

Ms. Leland is a native of South Carolina, where her father, Jack, is a retired Charleston journalist. She attended Saint Andrews College in Laurinburg, N.C., and graduated from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in journalism. She has a master's degree in international relations from the University of Kent in Canterbury, England.

Before joining The Observer staff in 1985, Ms. Leland worked for The Chapel Hill Newspaper, the AP in Raleigh and The News and Observer of Raleigh.

River Problems

JEFFERSON, N.C. (AP) — Houses are being built along bottomland of the New River and could threaten the river's national designation as wild and scenic, a new report indicates.

Edmund Adams, a member of the National Committee for the New River, which will consider the report at a meeting today, said state officials may be to blame for the problem.

"I think they can be faulted for the fact there's never been any organized effort to get gifts of land" for protective easements, he told The Winston-Salem Journal.

The Division of Parks and Recreation of the N.C. Department of Natural Resources and Community Development arranges for easements and for buying park land along the river.

Adams said even though the state doesn't have enough money to buy the easements, officials could secure some areas by explaining the concept of scenic easements.

"If they'd just make the effort to go see people and explain it to them, with our support, they could get a lot of them," he said. "I believe we could get half of them if we just ask people in the right way."

The idea of easements for the river was born in the mid-1970s when the river was threatened by a dam project proposed by the Appalachian Power Co.

Property owners keep title to land that's covered by an easement but must follow restrictions on its use. Those restrictions protect timber, vegetation or the rural character of the land.

Rick Hazard of the Parks and Recreation Division said serious negotiations with some of the more than 100 property owners along a corridor where easements are needed haven't taken place because money isn't available.

Newspaper Cited

SEATTLE (AP) — The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer and the Beaver County (Pa.) Times have won the 1987 Public Service awards in their circulation categories of the Associated Press Managing Editors association.

The Observer, in the 50,000-and-over category, was selected for stories documenting scandals in the PTL Club that led to the resignation of Jim Bakker, its founder.

The Beaver County entry led those in the under-50,000 circulation class with a series of articles revealing that high levels of toxic metals have made much of the soil in the region unfit for gardening.

Plaques were presented Friday during the APME convention here. The presentation was made by James F. Daubel, editor and publisher of the Fremont (Ohio) News-Messenger, chairman of the judging panel.

There were 192 entries in the competition.

Plea Offer Rejected

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Mecklenburg County prosecutors offered to let Fred Howard Coffey Jr. plead guilty to second-degree murder in the 1979 slaying of Amanda Ray and get a life sentence, according to a letter the man wrote to a Charlotte newspaper.

But the 42-year-old convicted child molester rejected the offer made earlier this month and will risk the death penalty when he faces trial in Mecklenburg Superior Court in two weeks.

Coffey disclosed the plea offer in a Sept. 12 letter to The Charlotte Observer. He said the offer called for the life sentence to run concurrently with the 50-year prison term he is now serving for sexually abusing three children in Caldwell County.

"In reality," he wrote to the newspaper, "I probably would not had to serve any more time in prison that I presently have to do."

Coffey then explained in his three-page letter why he rejected the offer.

"Fully understanding that I risk being sentenced to death if I am convicted at trial, I cannot, and will not accept the district attorney's plea offer," he wrote. "I did not cause the death of Amanda Ray, and I refuse to admit that I did just to avoid the possibility of being put to death. To do so would compromise all I believe in .... "

Coffey is charged with first-degree murder in the death of 10-year-old Amanda, who disappeared from her Eastcrest Drive apartment July 18, 1979. Her body was found the next day beside a lake near Huntersville.

Last week, Coffey pleaded not guilty. His trial is scheduled to begin Oct. 5.

Bad Weather Blamed For Poor Shrimp Harvest In N. Carolina

RALEIGH (AP) — Cool, wet conditions in the spring have netted a skimpy shrimp harvest, forcing many fishermen to leave the state for shrimping areas further south or to rig up for other types of fishing.

"A lot of the big boats have gone to South Carolina because it has been so poor" in North Carolina, said James A. Tyler, spokesman for the N.C. Division of Marine Fisheries.

Sherrill Styron, part owner of Garland Fulcher Seafood Co. Inc. in Oriental, said shrimp were especially scarce in July. "I thought (weather) conditions were right, but when it came time to catch them, they weren't there," he said.

Marie Spain, a spokesman for Pamlico Packing Co. in Pamlico County, said that the company usually had five or six trawlers fishing for shrimp, but that this year only one was needed because of the shortage. The other boats were used to fish for scallops off the New Jersey coast, she said.

"Fishermen who use smaller boats often try to offset the loss of shrimp with crabs or fish. If they can't catch something to make up for shrimp, they just pray a lot," Mrs. Spain told The News and Observer of Raleigh.

Marine fisheries officials said that preliminary reports indicated shrimp landings through August totaled 2.7 million pounds, compared to 4.5 million pounds for the same period in 1986. The total catch in 1986 was about 6.2 million pounds.

"Landings during the peak summer season are running 40 percent below last year's catch. It has not been a very good year," said Birdie Potter of Lowland Seafood Co. in Pamlico County.

But consumers may not notice the pinch. Seafood industry officials say national and international supplies determine retail prices, with more than 60 percent of the shrimp consumed in the United States coming from other countries.

Industry observers also said prices paid to fishermen remained about average despite poor catches, mainly because of seafood imported from the Gulf Coast and lower Atlantic states that helped meet demand. The catch so far this year has been worth $4.8 million, compared to $10.2 million in the same period in 1986. The total catch for 1986 was worth almost $14 million.

Tyler said biologists attributed the drop in catches this year to cool temperatures and heavy rain in the spring. Cool weather often keeps shrimp from beginning their migration into the coastal areas, and heavy rains reduce salinity levels in creeks and bays where young shrimp grow, killing them or forcing them into deeper waters.

Shrimp is usually the most lucrative seafood harvested in the state's coastal waters. The 1985 harvest of 11.7 million pounds — the best since 1953 — brought fishermen $21.7 million.

But now, some fishermen are saying the current harvest is as bad as they can recall.

"It's been a bad year. There's no question about it," said Ray Kirby of Independent Seafood in Holden Beach. "I'd say it's been the worst year we've ever had."

The decline in shrimp landings comes at a time when landings of other fish and shellfish are declining, too. are having problems. Earlier this year, the fisheries division closed five blue-crab spawning areas this year in an effort to boost crab catches, which have dropped about 40 percent in the last four years.

Landings have fallen from a record 38 million pounds worth $7.2 million in 1982 to 23 million pounds worth $5.4 million in 1986, the most recent year for which figures were available.

Wireless telegraph service from the United States to Japan began in 1941.

Smith Seeking Baptist Post

GOLDSBORO, N.C. (AP) — E. Leon Smith of Goldsboro, saying he wants to protect the historical heritage of Baptists in North Carolina, has announced his candidacy for the presidency of the North Carolina State Baptist Convention.

Smith, who has served the last two terms as first vice president of the convention, said he has been encouraged by pastors and lay people across the state to become the mainline candidate for office.

"I feel I represent the mainline Southern Baptists in North Carolina as opposed to the new right movement that now controls the national Baptist body," he said.

He will be opposed in the November election by fundamentalist leader Ned Matthews of Gastonia.

Smith, the pastor of First Baptist Church in Goldsboro, is also a member of the executive committee and general board of the state convention and the board of directors at Fruitland Bible Institute.

He has served in numerous positions within the Southern Baptist denomination including president of the Council on Christian Higher Education and chairman of the bylaws cmmittee.

Eight years ago the fundamentalist movement took over the national convention of Southern Baptists, Smith said, adding that he is concerned about the blow this movement has dealt to Baptist liberties.

"After the 1979 fundamentalist takeover the national body of Baptists moved toward a creedal statement of the Baptist faith," Smith said. "I want to help keep North Carolina Baptists true to their roots and history. Baptists should be free to believe as they feel directed by the Holy Spirit. They should feel free to express their Christian faith without the threat of a creedal statement being imposed on them."

State To Ask Labor Department For Student Driver Exemption

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina officials said they are optimistic they can develop a plan to keep 17-year-old school bus drivers behind the wheel at least through the current school year.

At the same time, plans are being drafted to phase out student drivers and replace them with adults, which would put the state in compliance with federal requirements for the first time in 20 years.

"We have a positive feeling because we believe the U.S. Department of Labor will recognize that something that has been a tradition in North Carolina for years and years cannot be solved overnight," said B. Norfleet Gardner, bus transportation director for the state Department of Public Instruction.

The state controller's office in the public instruction department is gathering new information about student bus drivers and their driving records to present to the labor department Nov. 30.

The updated data will be accompanied by a request for an extension of the department's deadline that student drivers be eliminated by Dec. 31. In addition, the information likely will include plans for phasing out bus drivers who are under the age of 18.

Last month, Labor Secretary William Brock told Gov. Jim Martin the state wouldn't get any more exemptions. The Labor Department gave North Carolina until Dec. 31 to replace the youths with adult drivers.

The state has balked at making the change in part because of costs. Estimated cost of providing a good salary and benefits required to hire adults range upwards of $20 million.

Gardner said state officials met Sept. 10 with federal labor officials to discuss what the state could do to get an extension of the deadline.

A Labor Department spokesman said Friday the state must prove student bus drivers are as safe as adults.

"We will not be able to provide an extension beyond Dec. 31 unless the state submits data for the 1986-87 school year which indicates the accident rate for student drivers compares favorably with the rate for adult drivers," Dan Fuquay, spokesman for the Labor Department in Atlanta, told the Greensboro News and Record.

The Labor Department quit granting North Carolina exemptions this year based upon student driving records for the 1985-86 school year. During that year, the state had 4,273 bus drivers who were 16 or 17 years old. They represented 32.8 percent of all bus drivers, but were involved in 39.8 percent of the accidents.

Statistics from last year are expected to put student bus driving records in a better light, Gardner said. The state is estimating that there were 4,815 student drivers last year, representing 36.9 percent of all drivers, but having 35.9 percent of the accidents.

The data will provide the basis for the state to ask for an exemption through the rest of this year, but Gardner said such exemptions are getting tougher to justify.

"There is some indication that the U.S. Department of Labor is not going to continue these extensions indefinitely," Gardner said. "The state needs to change its mind and work to get a plan."

Such plans probably will be presented to the Labor Department in November. The state could request that student bus drivers stay on through the end of the school year, then be replaced with adults by July 1.

Another option would be to get the extension, then have school systems in urban areas hire adults by July 1, and give rural areas additional time because they would have more trouble funding the change and finding available labor.

"One problem has been that the state has been asking for blanket extensions," Gardner said. "It looks like now we're going to have to be more regional — give rural areas more time, whereas the urban areas could move more quickly."

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S.

Doctors Invent 'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight

New 'Fat Magnet' Diet Pill Guarantees Fast Weight Loss

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)—An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" that you will easily lose fat by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

No Dieting—Eat Normally

Best of all, "you can continue to eat all of your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You will start losing fat from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight and figure you desire."

There has never been anything like it before. It is a totally new major medical breakthrough for weight loss (worldwide patent pending).

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in fat particles. Then, all that trapped fat is naturally "flushed" right out of your body because it cannot be digested.

Within 2 days you will notice a change in the color of your stool as the fat particles are being eliminated.

"Pills Do All the Work"

According to the doctors, the fat-magnet pills do all the work while you quickly lose fat with no starvation diet menus to follow, no calorie counting, no exercising, and no hunger pangs. It is 100% safe. You simply take the pills with a glass of water before meals.

The fat-magnet pills have just been offered to the American public and are already sweeping the country with record sales and reports of dramatic weight loss. It's the "lazy way" to lose weight for people who enjoy eating.

Now Available to Public

If you need to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these new highly successful fat-magnet pills (now available from the doctor's exclusive manufacturer by mail or phone order only) by sending $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$2 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), cash, check or money order to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W300, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date, and signature.) Judge Ended Testimony Saturday

Bork Pledges "A Fair Shake" For All If He Becomes Justice

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Robert H. Bork, winding up a record five days of Senate testimony in his struggle to become a Supreme Court justice, said Saturday he will "give everybody a fair shake" if confirmed.

The extraordinary weekend session of the Senate Judiciary Committee was called in large measure to allow extensive questioning by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., who said he was still undecided about the nomination but demonstrated skepticism about Bork's views.

Specter said Bork apparently would vote on the high court against Congress in its bid to restrain presidential war-making powers.

"We have reason to think you're against us," Specter said. "Why should we confirm someone who is likely to rule against us?"

"The impression I always sided with the president is wrong," Bork said. "My record is not one of unvarying support for the executive branch. I will give you a fair shake. I will give everybody a fair shake."

President Reagan, who nominated Bork in July, telephoned him from Camp David, Md., after the end of testimony Saturday afternoon to say "you demonstrated yet again your qualifications to serve on the highest court."

Reagan, according to spokesman Mark Weinberg, also said in a statement from his mountain retreat, "If the Senate uses the standards it should — integrity, qualifications and temperament — it will certainly move quickly, once the Judiciary Committee's hearings are completed, to confirm Judge Bork."

Earlier in the day, in his weekly radio address, Reagan said there has been "a lot of talk to the effect that Judge Bork was some kind of political ideologue. In truth, Judge Bork's philosophy is neither conservative nor liberal."

Bork, asked at the hearing why he wanted to be on the high court, said it would be "an intellectual feast" and added that he would like to leave his mark on the law.

"I would like to leave a reputation as a judge who understood constitutional governance and contributed his bit to maintaining it," he said.

Committee chairman Joseph R. Biden, D-Del., who previously stated his opposition to Bork, wrapped up the 3½-hour Saturday session with praise for the nominee as "an honorable man." Biden said, "I find you neither a racist nor insensitive."

Biden also defended his committee against accusations that the hearings have been mere partisan politics.

"I hope you feel this has not been only about politics," he told Bork. "It also is about principle."

Sens. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., lavished praise on Bork and said he emerged from the hearings with more honor than his critics.

Hatch and Simpson both predicted that "never again" would a Supreme Court nominee testify so extensively about his views and professional record.

The sharply divided Senate committee, after completing its questioning of Bork, plans to turn Monday to other witnesses speaking for and against the nominee.

No other candidate for the Supreme Court has ever testified as long as Bork since the committee began such hearings 48 years ago.

Specter, whose decision on Bork might influence other senators who have not sat through the arduous give-and-take of this week's hearings, expressed concern over Bork's shifting views.

"You have made significant shifts which, candidly, I think have to be evaluated," Specter said. "Your testimony in this room is materially different than what you have written" over the years as a law school professor and later a federal appeals court judge.

Specter quizzed Bork for 90 minutes Saturday on numerous issues, including the 1973 War Powers Act which Bork previously attacked.

In a 1978 opinion piece published by the Wall Street Journal, Bork said, "As expiation for Vietnam, we have the War Powers Resolution, an attempt by Congress to share in detailed decisions about the deployment of the U.S. armed forces in the world. It is probably unconstitutional and certainly unworkable."

When Specter raised the issue Saturday, Bork led out a sigh. But the nominee, who has maintained his equanimity throughout the week, said his reaction was only because he once again would have to search for the relevant documents to answer questions on a topic he'd discussed at length.

Specter said that without the War Powers Act, Congress is without means to check presidential foreign military adventures.

"Realistically, we don't really have the power," Specter said. "In Grenada, Lebanon, the Persian Gulf, the reality is that it is gone."

Specter said it is "unthinkable and impossible to cut off" funding for military operations once they are under way.

Bork, softening his attack on the constitutionality of the War Powers Act, said, "If it leads to micromanagement of tactical decisions (by the president), it's a problem."

Beginning Monday, groups including the National Organization for Women, the National Abortion Rights Action League, the AFL-CIO, the American Civil Liberties Union and the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights will urge the Senate to reject Bork's nomination.

Groups including Concerned Women for America, the American Conservative Union and the National Right to Work Committee will urge confirmation.

Three prominent Bork supporters — retired Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, former presidential counsel Lloyd Cutler and Illinois Gov. Jim Thompson — are scheduled to testify first when the committee reconvenes.

Representatives of the American Bar Association also are to testify, and they are sure to be peppered with questions about the ABA's divided vote on Bork. The organization's 15-member standing committee on the federal judiciary split 10-5 in finding Bork qualified for the Supreme Court.

Detroit Teachers Accept New Pact

By The Associated Press

Teachers in Detroit ended their 20-day strike Saturday and prepared to return to work Monday, while negotiations resumed in Chicago in efforts to end a 12-day teachers' strike there.

Around the nation, strikes by more than 35,000 teachers still affected more than 500,000 students in Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Washington state.

Detroit Federation of Teachers members voted by acclamation Saturday afternoon to accept a tentative agreement reached Thursday night, DFT member Denise Irwin said.

The DFT's 11,500 members, who struck Aug. 31, will return to work Monday, and classes for 193,000 students will begin Tuesday, she sai.

The three-year agreement in Detroit calls for a 6.5 percent pay raise in the first year, 7 percent in the second and 6 percent in the third. The increases in the final two years are linked to increased revenues coming to the school district through tax boosts or other sources.

The Detroit Federation of Teachers recommended approval.

Two of the five Detroit school board members voted against the proposed pact, saying the district has a $27 million deficit and couldn't afford it.

"If there is no money, how can you give raises?" said board member Alonzo Bates.

The agreement says that if no additional money can be found, wages would be set through binding arbitration in the second year and the contract would be reopened in the third year. Annual pay for Detroit teachers ranges from $19,963 to $36,222.

Four other Michigan districts are on strike. A mediation session was set for Tuesday at Cassopolis. A court hearing on a back-to-work order was due Monday for the Gibralter school district.

Negotiations resumed in Chicago amid stepped-up pressure from parents, but the two sides remained at odds.

Navy Jet Crashes In Arabian Sea

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Navy A-6E Intruder attack jet on a routine training mission apparently crashed Friday in the northern Arabian Sea, the U.S. Pacific Command in Honolulu said.

Search and rescue operations were under way after the incident, which happened at about 1 p.m. EDT, according to a statement read by Col. Dick Heil, a command spokesman. There was no indication whether its two-member crew survived.

An S-3 Viking antisubmarine plane sighted a flash about 15 miles north of the Ranger, the statement said. Communications with the A-6E aircraft were lost after the flash was seen, the statement said.

The jet, assigned to the aircraft carrier USS Ranger and based at Whidbey Island Naval Air Station in Washington state, carried a pilot and a bombardier-navigator, said Widbey spokeswoman Mariana Graham.

It was on routine patrol in the area, Heil said by telephone. He said he did not know the precise location of the carrier when the incident happened.

U.S. Navy sources in the Persian Gulf confirmed early Saturday that the jet had disappeared. Navy and diplomatic sources, demanding anonymity, said there was no indication of hostile fire.

The jet was on a routine night training mission and was returning to the Ranger, according to the statement from the command.

The Ranger arrived in late August in the northern Arabian Sea to relieve the carrier Constellation and provide air cover for U.S. convoys through the Persian Gulf.

The Pentagon said at the time that the carrier had been ordered to take up station in the northern Arabian Sea, due south of Pakistan, within aerial range of the Strait of Hormuz. The strait is where the Persian Gulf opens to the Gulf of Oman, which in turn opens into the Arabian Sea.

Aircraft from the Ranger are sent over the Strait whenever a convoy passes through. The aircraft are supposed to confront any Iranian fighters and attack anti-ship missile batteries if Iran prepares to fire them, Pentagon officials said at the time.

"This was not in the Persian Gulf," Heil said of the crash. "It was well out into the northern Arabian Sea."

A WORD TO THE WISE — Pittsburgh fireman Dennis Lyman, who had responded with others after a storm knocked down electrical wires on a Pittsburgh street, gave a safety lesson to Greg Solomich and the youngster's friends. The boys had placed cones around downed, but safe, telephone wires that happened to be far from the fallen "live wires." (AP Laserphoto)

Ships Practice Convoy Escorts

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — American, Spanish and Italian warships escorted a convoy of four merchant ships from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean as part of an annual fall military exercise, NATO said Saturday.

The warships, supported by sea- and land-based tactical aircraft, escorted the convoy from the Strait of Gibraltar, between Spain and northern Africa, to the Ligurian Sea off northwestern Italy, according to a statement from Allied Forces Southern Europe.

The exercise, part of Display Determination '87, was to simulate the arrival of reinforcements to NATO's southern region. It involved a linkup with another NATO exercise, Ocean Safari 87, to test the cooperation and control of forces between adjacent NATO commands, the statement said.

In the second phase of the maneuvers starting Sunday, a simulated land and air battle will be conducted in northeastern Italy involving 6th Fleet ships and U.S., Turkish, Portuguese and French aircraft.

On Tuesday, U.S., Italian and Portuguese troops are to stage a mock amphibious landing at Capo Teulada, Sardinia, under supporting live fire from the 16-inch guns of the American battleship USS Iowa.

The exercises, part of a yearly series, began last Tuesday and are to end Oct. 11.

Snake Show Had Fergie In Tears

By JUDD EVERHART
Associated Press Writer

GREENWICH, Conn. (AP) — The Duchess of York was visibly shaken during a charity fund-raiser Saturday when a writhing 12-foot Burmese python was brought out during an outdoor wildlife exhibition.

"I can't," she said, recoiling, breaking into tears and moving behind her husband, Prince Andrew, and mother, Susan Barrantes, when television naturalist Jim Fowler brought out the snake. "I can't."

The duchess, the former Sarah Ferguson, refused to look up and stayed back in the crowd until the snake demonstration was over.

"My wife and I are not used to snakes," Andrew could be heard telling Fowler.

The demonstration was part of a day that was to have included a polo game, but that was scratched because of wet weather. The demonstration preceded a $250-a-person luncheon in tents set up along the polo grounds. An auction and ball were scheduled Saturday evening. Tickets for the ball ranged from $250 to $1,000.

All events were for the benefit of the World Wildlife Fund, and the Friends of the Masai Mara, a game preserve in Kenya, and the Tate Gallery in London, of which the duchess is a royal patron.

Fowler told reporters after the 15-minute demonstration that he had no idea the duchess would have such a reaction.

"You tend to be repulsed by those things that are not like us," he said. "Fear is usually the lack of knowledge. I would never have brought it near her had I known."

Asked if the snake had a name, Fowler laughed and said, "I guess it's 'Killer' from now on." He said that he would talk with the duchess and try to sooth her fears.

After the incident, Sarah regained her composure and resumed watching the show. It included demonstrations from a baby elephant named Karen, a golden eagle and a bateleur eagle from Africa.

The royal couple arrived Friday on their first visit to the United States since they were married.

Also at Saturday's event were the duchess' father, Maj. Ronald Ferguson, and her stepfather, Hector Barrantes, who lives with his wife in Greenwich.

Ferguson said his daughter was fine after the snake incident. "She's always all right."

Sally O'Brien of the British Embassy in Washington said she doubted the snake would have been permitted had it been brought to the attention of Buckingham Palace. Although the other animals had been included on a list describing the demonstration, the python was not.

The events were underwritten by Rolex Watch USA so that all proceeds could go to charity.

A Rolex spokesman estimated that between $90,000 and $100,000 had been raised at the luncheon and auction.

Reporters were not permitted to ask Sarah and Andrew any questions. A Rolex spokesman said it was "essentially a photographic event."

When Sarah read a statement on the World Wildlife Fund, she shouted at reporters, "Would you be quiet while I read!"

Andrew was to leave Sunday to return to military duty. Sarah planned to stay at least one additional day.

Freeway Shooting

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police shot and killed a man who may have brandished a handgun at another motorist, while in a separate incident an off-duty sheriff's deputy said he was shot at on a freeway on-ramp.

Ventura police Lt. Pat Rooney said a motorist who ran into the guardrail of the Ventura Freeway waved a handgun at another driver after the second man stopped to help him.

California Highway Patrol and Ventura police officers launched a search for the armed driver, who fled on foot, Rooney said.

About a quarter of a mile away, two officers ordered a man on foot to halt, and the man pointed "what appeared to be a handgun" at them, Rooney said.

The officers opened fire, killing the man, who was not identified, Rooney said.

In Brazil, the fifth-largest country in the world, the distance from the northern Amazon basin to Uruguay is equal to the distance from London to Tehran, says National Geographic.

Black Leader Waits 30 Months To Testify At Trial

By DAVID CRARY
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The chief spokesman for South Africa's largest anti-apartheid organization told his treason trial that the government is to blame for the creation of the group, the United Democratic Front.

Patrick "Terror" Lekota, imprisoned for 30 months, finally took the witness stand last week and testified for five days. He is one of 19 defendants, all senior officials of national or local anti-apartheid groups.

Lekota's nickname, "Terror," dates from his days as a soccer player.

The trial began in June 1985 and is South Africa's longest-running.

The defendants, all black, have pleaded not guilty to charges of treason, terrorism, murder and subversion related to the central allegation that they conspired with the banned African National Congress to incite unrest in September 1984 aimed at making black townships ungovernable.

"If anybody is to be blamed for the formation of the United Democratic Front, it must be the government," said Lekota, 39, the UDF's national publicity secretary.

Of the original 22 defendants arrested in early 1985, three were acquitted last year, and 16 were released on bail. That leaves Lekota and two senior UDF colleagues, Pope Molefe and Moses Chikane, still in prison on grounds they threaten state security.

Lekota, wearing a gray striped suit with a red carnation and a UDF badge on the lapel, told Pretoria Supreme Court the UDF was committed to non-violence.

He said the multiracial coalition, which claims 650 affiliates and 2.5 million members, was formed openly in 1983 to oppose a new constitution bringing Asians and people of mixed-race into Parliament, but not the black majority.

"The continued exclusion of blacks from Parliament has frustrated large sections of the community who resorted to the armed struggle," he said. "We find ourselves in an unsafe country. We want the government to abandon the policy of apartheid which is the basis for this conflict."

By law and custom, apartheid establishes a racially segregated society in which the 25.6 million blacks have no vote in national affairs. The 5 million whites control the economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services.

Since September 1984, more than 2,400 people, most of them blacks, have been killed in unrest. The level of violence dropped sharply after the government imposed a national state of emergency in June 1986 and detained thousands of activists, many of them UDF members.

The government says it permits the UDF to operate openly, but most of its top leaders are in jail or in hiding. Murphy Morobe, who became acting publicity secretary after Lekota's arrest, was detained in July.

Lekota said the UDF advocated a national convention of accepted leaders of all races to work out a new constitution.

"Let not our white compatriots choose for themselves whom they will consult," he said. "Let us, the black communities, decide for themselves who will speak for us."

Lekota had to wait 18 months to respond to one allegation against him, a state witness's claim in April 1986 that he taught young blacks how to make gasoline bombs.

She retracted her testimony during cross-examination, saying she was pressured into making the allegations. Referring last week to the incident, Lekota said the state prosecutors encouraged people to "come and lie" at the trial in an effort to depict him as an anarchist.

On Thursday, one prosecutor suggested to Lekota that the UDF never intended to negotiate with the government. He said this attitude was borne out at the UDF's inaugural rally in 1983 when the crowd chanted that President P.W. Botha was a terrorist.

Lekota said the UDF did support negotiations, but added that the chant about Botha might have been appropriate because of government policies of forced removals and "smashing of shacks."

Through June, before the proceedings were shifted to Pretoria, the trial was conducted 55 miles to the southeast in the small farming town of Delmas.

Dozens of prominent observers, including Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu and senior foreign diplomats, attended sessions.

Hungary OKs Controversial Tax Measures

By TEDDIE WEYR
Associated Press Writer

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Parliament on Saturday approved income tax reform and East Europe's first value-added tax at the end of a four-day session marked by unusual outspokenness.

The vote came two days after the legislature adopted a government austerity program that begins wage, price and pension reforms and reduces subsidies to state-owned firms.

The new tax laws sparked open public debate. Youth leaders, trade unions and parliamentary deputies said pensioners, large families, the unemployed and underprivileged would suffer most from the revisions.

With the income tax of 20 percent to 60 percent on annual incomes over $800, the government hopes to tap income from second jobs or from the "third economy" of gifts and bribes.

The value-added tax is to provide incentive for more competitive production and to reduce consumption. A value-added tax is a form of indirect sales tax paid on products at each stage of production or distribution and included in the cost to the consumer.

Finance Minister Peter Medgyessy who presented the tax bills Friday In his closing statement Saturday, he said a drop in living standards and increased prices would be inevitable next year.

Parliament voted on individual aspects of the bills separately. On some points, up to 73 deputies voted against the government version.

But on the overall personal income tax bill, 10 of the 352 deputies voted against it and 21 abstained. One member voted against the value-added tax and five abstained.

One of the most liberal Soviet bloc countries, Hungary introduced reforms in 1968 that made the nation prosperous in the 1970s. But a large foreign debt, falling exports and a stagnating economy have led to economic crisis.

With a $16 billion gross debt and $9.3 billion net hard currency debt, Hungary has the highest per capita debt in East Europe.

In the weeks and months leading up to this week's session of Parliament, prominent Hungarians inside and outside the Communist Party called for a larger role for the public in decision-making.

Medgyessy said the preparation period of the tax laws, when dozens of amendments were proposed, showed that the government must present alternatives.

Premier Karoly Grosz told Parliament to monitor government work in the future. The unicameral house has traditionally given rubber-stamp approval to government decisions.

Outspoken member of Parliament Zoltan Kiraly stood up after Saturday's vote and complained there had been no vote on the session's agenda at the opening.

He said negative votes and abstentions were not counted at the vote on the government's program Thursday. He said he knew of one or two negative votes, and possibly some abstentions.

Beer Bash Begins

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — A gun salute welcomed the tapping of the first keg as Munich's Oktoberfest, the world's largest beer bash, opened Saturday with traditional Bavarian pageantry.

The 154th Oktoberfest is expected to draw about 7 million visitors to the Bavarian capital for the 16-day festival, according to city officials.

Most foreign tourists are expected to come from the United States, Italy and Japan.

Munich Mayor Georg Kronawitter tapped the first keg and offered the stein to Bavarian Gov. Franz Josef Strauss.

Visitors will have to pay up to $3.70 for a liter of brew (just over a quart) at this year's Oktoberfest, about the same as last year.

Six major Munich breweries have erected huge tents that can seat about 100,000 people at one time.

Hirohito May Face Surgery

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's 86-year-old Emperor Hirohito, the world's longest-reigning monarch, may have to undergo surgery for an intestinal disorder, officials said Saturday.

"We have to check some more to determine whether or not to send the emperor to the hospital and conduct an operation," said a statement from Tomohiko Tomita, director-general of the Imperial Household Agency.

Officials will decide Monday whether to hospitalize Hirohito, who became emperor in 1926, said Satoru Yamamoto, Tomita's deputy.

An operation would almost certainly prevent the emperor from making a historic visit to Okinawa next month.

But his condition will not affect the state and diplomatic duties of Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, who left Japan earlier Saturday to attend the United Nations General Assembly in New York, said Deputy Chief Cabinet Secretary Hideo Watanabe.

"We understand that it is nothing serious," Kyoto News Service quoted Watanabe as saying.

Officials of the Imperial Household Agency, the government agency that handles the personal, ceremonial and official affairs of the emperor and his family, were not available Saturday night.

An agency spokesman, reached earlier by The Associated Press, refused to comment on the emperor's condition but said the emperor canceled a scheduled trip to a sumo wrestling match Sunday.

Yamamoto said the emperor began complaining of constipation and nausea while staying at the imperial villa at Nasu, about 100 miles northeast of Tokyo, late last month.

After the emperor's return to Tokyo on Sept. 11, doctors gave him a medical checkup and concluded that the intestinal passage near the stomach had narrowed, causing difficulty in digestion, Yamamoto said.

The emperor met with visiting Iceland President Vigdis Finnbogadottir at the Imperial Palace Friday morning for 30 minutes and attended a 45-minute lecture that afternoon, Kyodo News Service said.

It said Hirohito, a marine biologist, skipped his regular study at his private laboratory on the palace grounds Saturday.

On his birthday last April 29, the emperor left early from a banquet, complaining of not feeling well. He did not attend a tea ceremony for the diplomatic corps that day, but Imperial Household Agency officials denied he was ill.

Hirohito was scheduled to make his first visit as emperor to Okinawa, Japan's southernmost prefecture, on Oct. 23-27.

Okinawa was the scene of one of the fiercest battles of World War II, and the only one fought on Japanese territory during the war.

The battle caused massive civilian casualties, and several demonstrations were planned during Hirohito's visit to protest his role in the war.

Militia Says Priest Took Own Life

By RODEINA KENAAN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A bomb that wounded the Greek Catholic archbishop and Syrian-backed Christian militia leader Elie Hobeika was placed by a priest who later killed himself, Hobeika's command said Saturday.

A statement issued by the command in the predominantly Greek Catholic city of Zahle identified the priest as Samih Haddad, 30. It said he committed suicide when confronted with the charge.

It indirectly accused Father Haddad, a Greek Catholic, of collaborating with the Lebanese Forces, the Christians' main militia in the 12-year-old civil war against the Moslems.

Hobeika, 30, heads a dissident faction of the militia. He set up headquarters in Zahle after he was ousted from the command of the Lebanese Forces in January 1986 for signing a Syrian-brokered peace pact with Moslem warlords.

The accord was scuttled by his ouster. Christian President Amin Gemayel and present Lebanese Forces commander Samir Geagea, who teamed up to overthrow Hobeika, had since been at loggerheads with the Syrians.

Syria maintains 25,000 troops in eastern and northern Lebanon under a 1976 Arab League mandate. It also has a 7,500-strong contingent in Beirut's Moslem sector.

The statement said Haddad, who was in charge of administrative affairs of the archbishopric, placed the 44-pound bomb in the ceiling of Archbishop Andre Haddad's office Tuesday.

Despite the similarity in names, there was no indication the two Haddads were related.

"Minutes before the explosion at 9:30 p.m. Tuesday, Father Haddad phoned Archbishop Haddad at his office, from the nearby Tell Shiha hospital, to make certain that he was meeting with Hobeika and his aides as scheduled," the statement said.

It said the priest detonated the bomb by a remote control device that was found in the hospital with his fingerprints on it.

When investigators from Hobeika's militia "confronted Father Haddad with the charge and the evidence, he managed to snatch a pistol from one aide and shot himself to death below the chin," the statement added.

The archbishopric also issued a separate statement accusing Father Haddad of engineering the bombing that killed one person and wounded 30 people, including the archbishop and Hobeika.

The archbishop is still hospitalized with injuries. Hobeika was taken to the Syrian capital of Damascus for treatment.

The two statements said Father Haddad served with the Lebanese Forces during Israel's 1982 invasion and was later appointed spiritual guide of the militia garrison in Zahle.

Nicaraguan POWs Released

By PAULINE JELINEK
Associated Press Writer

LIBERIA, Costa Rica (AP) — Nicaraguan rebels flew 80 Nicaraguan prisoners of war into this neutral country and released them, but only 18 said they wanted to return to their homeland.

Shouts of happiness were heard from inside the DC-6 carrying the former POWs shortly after it landed Friday at the airport here 100 miles north of the capital of San Jose and 40 miles south of the Nicaraguan border.

Leaders of the Nicaraguan rebels, known as Contra, said they released the prisoners seven weeks ahead of the new regional peace plan's timetable to show their "good will and total acceptance" of the accord.

Freed were 78 men and two women. A list given Costa Rican officials showed most were captured this year and in 1986, although one had been held since 1984.

The rebels said the prisoners were members of the Sandinista armed forces or militias captured during fighting inside Nicaragua.

The former prisoners left the plane quietly as their names were called from a list, wearing new red, blue or yellow jogging suits. Most carried plastic bags of what appeared to be personal belongings.

They were met by Costa Rican Security Minister Hernan Garron and four directors of the Nicaraguan Resistance umbrella group — Alfonso Robelo, Alfredo Cesar, Ażucena Ferrey and Pedro Joaquin Chamorro.

Cesar said among those getting off the plane was his 17-year-old nephew, Richard Lugo, whose father is an officer in the Nicaraguan navy.

During a brief ceremony at the airport terminal, the Contra leaders read a statement saying in part, "We deliver and entrust these prisoners of war to the president of Costa Rica, Oscar Arias."

Arias is the author of the Central American peace plan signed Aug. 7 in Guatemala by himself and the presidents of Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador and Nicaragua. Among other things, it calls for cease-fires in the civil wars in Nicaragua and El Salvador and amnesty for combatants.

Costa Rica maintains an avowed neutrality in Central American affairs and is the only nation in the region without a standing army.

Garron called the release of the prisoners "one more step toward peace in our region."

The freed prisoners sang the Nicaraguan national anthem and were taken to a Civil Guard post in Liberia where they were given a lunch of scrambled eggs, tortillas, rice and beans.

They then were taken to a room filled with school desks and told they could return to Nicaragua, go to another country or remain in Costa Rica. A few asked questions, with one asking if he would have the status of a refugee or a citizen if he remained in Costa Rica.

Following explanations, they were told those who wanted to return to Nicaragua should step forward, and 18 left their desks and moved to the front of the room. A representative of the Nicaraguan Embassy was present.

Garron said the 18 would be taken to the Nicaraguan border as soon as they were processed, which would include being fingerprinted and receiving anti-malaria shots.

"I think the main news here is that we are liberating them not from us, but from Nicaragua. Now they have the opportunity to be free and chose a country where they want to go," Chamorro told reporters.

"They did not have the same opportunity in Nicaragua and they had to forcibly join the Sandinista army.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Broad Needs Face New City Manager

As Gregory Knowles begins his tenure as Greenville's chief executive and assesses the problems that greet him, some tasks will require priority on the new city manager's agenda.

The first of these tasks is financial, and is two-fold. Greenville needs a reasonable budget that allows for staff expansion in growing areas like planning, engineering and public services.

As Greenville's population and annexations increase, the need for services rises concurrently. Already, departments like planning and engineering cannot keep pace. Fire and police protection and sanitation service must be provided in growth areas. A hold-the-line approach simply won't work in an expanding environment.

Greenville also needs financial expertise that can develop strong, flexible revenue sources to fund city programs. Knowles needs to be a money finder with a sharp pencil.

Another task is the need to develop solid partnerships with the people and entities that affect the city. Knowles faces the job of re-establishing a relationship with Greenville Utilities Commission — an association based on cooperation, not competition.

Greenville must also develop a better working rapport with Pitt County and surrounding smaller municipalities, especially in the area of planning. Closer communication and collaboration with Pitt's state legislative delegation is also essential.

In addition, a stronger coalition with East Carolina University would benefit both the city and the school.

Planning needs — short-term and long range — head the city manager's list of administrative must-dos. The development of a protected airport zone, continuation of aesthetic and safety-related zoning regulations and a data-based approach to planning are priorities.

Protection of Greenville's human resources is also an important consideration. Knowles might apply his hands-on training program with workers in Michigan to Greenville to better assess departmental and worker needs. He might ride with police, empty garbage, fix water mains or plot development impact — just as he did in Inkster — in an effort to understand the city's workings.

It is Knowles' duty to approach these myriad tasks with progress and sound management as his goal. His skills will be tested by Greenville's needs, and he must be ready to respond effectively.

Correct Action

The Pitt County Board of Education was right to table a flawed exam exemption policy that would have allowed mediocre students to bypass finals if they simply attend school.

Members should now request administrators to prepare a policy for 1988-89 that allows only seniors with strong As and good attendance to bypass exams.

The policy the board opted for — one that allows seniors with passing grades and good attendance to skip exams — is superior to the original proposal, but remains too lenient. The board is to be commended for recognizing the weakness of the rejected measure. It could now further illustrate its commitment to excellence by planning a 1988-89 policy that continues to toughen standards.

Under the rejected proposal, all high school students with a passing grade and proper attendance would be exempt from exams. That approach would have hurt students, especially college bound, by not preparing them for test-taking.

Board members, understandably, selected the current policy in an effort to be fair and consistent with the 1987-88 senior class, since the measure is similar to an exam exemption policy now in effect.

That policy is more reflective of quality in education than the rejected one but still falls short of what is needed for excellence. Grades of B, C and D represent above average, average and poor work. No student should be rewarded with an exam exemption for poor or merely tolerable performance.

The board was wise to acknowledge that exam exemptions should not be used as a tool to boost attendance. Students are required to be in school. Rewarding them for doing what they are obligated to do encourages mediocrity.

It is fair to allow seniors to function under old rules, but the board should quickly ask for a future policy that further strengthens exemptions. That policy should then be adopted in plenty of time to allow next year's seniors to plan accordingly.

A Return To The Orient Missed

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

Missed opportunities. Your columnist, as a working newspaperman, received an invitation to make the Far East trade mission trip with the governor Oct. 1-18.

The hitch: it would cost several thousand dollars.

Needless to say I won't be making the trip. The news did come out the other day, however, that about 110 people would be going. Gov. James G. Martin will lecture on biotechnology at Japanese universities. He will discuss trade in Korea and attempt to sell the ports of Wilmington and Morehead City. The news story said about 100 business executives would accompany the governor and they would pay their own way. For each state official making the trip the cost will be $4,000 to $5,000.

It was reported that Japanese companies last year invested $177 million in North Carolina creating 849 jobs. There will also be a trip to China for a portion of the group.

In all modesty I couldn't help but think what a great asset I would be to the governor on this particular trip.

I have, after all, stood on the campuses of the University of Tokyo and the University of Seoul. It was more years back than I care to acknowledge and I would not have been there but for the generosity of the United States Army. Nevertheless I know my way around. Through association with an army friend who had connections in Tokyo I met the Kiwaminami family that headed one of the great shipbuilding empires of the Orient.

Oh, I might be a little rusty getting around the streets of Toyko. Things after all have changed since though days. Most of what is modern Seoul has been built since I was there so I couldn't do much guiding the govenor there.

If the governor wished to travel to Uijongbu, Korea your columnist could lead him. Wonder if my old army unit is still there? Why Gov. Martin might want to go to Uijongbu, however, is certainly open to question.

I might have been of some help in prowling the dock areas of Pusan, Korea assuming things haven't changed too much. If any lingual barriers were met the governor might do better to depend on Korean translator since American soldiers and native Koreans talked in a combination of English, Korean and Japanese in the environment of my time.

Anyway, for the sake of a few measly thousand dollars I won't be making the Far East rim trip. The governor is certainly the loser.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Dove season is here again. And again for the third year in a row, the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission has decided to have a complete slaughter of the lovely birds on the first day of the season. How has this taken place? Simple. By opening the shooting at daylight instead of noon, as it has been for 40 years. Prior to two years ago, our forefathers knew that doves have to feed twice a day — morning and evening — to survive.

He wakes early, very hungry, and will go to his usual feeding place not knowing there are 40 guns waiting for him. Regardless of the guns, he has to feed because a day or two without food and he will starve to death. We are not against the shooting of doves, because we know that their lifespan is only about 12 months without being shot. What we say to the wildlife official is use a little sense about it and open the shooting at 12 noon as it was for years until lately. Why? For the simple reason that most people can't go shooting until 12 noon or later. When they get there, the birds have mostly been killed or wounded and the shooting is all shot for the rest of the first season because the birds do not migrate until colder weather. To go to a dove shoot (not hunting) at noon and finding that the 500-600 doves that have been there slaughtered before you got there is disgusting. Yes, Great (New) White Fathers in Raleigh, please give doves and the average hunter a break before you get in a rut on this thing. Change the shooting hours back to noon-sunset. We are sure you will satisfy more hunters, doves and landowners than you could ever believe. Change for change's sake is not worthwhile. Put it back like it was and admit you made a bad mistake.

To the editor:

In about 1941 following a North Carolina State victory at Kenan Stadium, students poured onto the playing field. A free for all battle occurred between students from sister institutions. If memory serves me right, the goal posts were torn down.

I do not recall any major uproar in connection with that incident. I think State and Carolina played twice the next year because World War II was in progress.

Clearly the seriousness of the recent incident at Carter-Findley Stadium has been exaggerated.

If State does not want to play ECU in the future, so be it. But the blame should not be placed on a group of immature students who got out of hand. Would the series have been interrupted, even for one year, if some intoxicated fan had caused an automobile accident in which four or five innocent persons were killed?

To the editor:

A plan to resolve differences in the five major Central American countries and bring peace to the area was proposed by President Arias of Costa Rica and approved by the others. It's the most hopeful news from that area in a long time.

The Reagan administration publicly supported the plan, while casting doubt on the good faith of the Sandinistas. According to an article by Martha Honey and Tony Avirgan in the last issue of The Nation, our administration's own good faith is questionable. Reagan has used our considerable economic and political power in the area to show displeasure with Arias.

For instance, U.S. funds appropriated for Costa Rica have been withheld for six months. An embassy official admitted to $85,000 worth, but Congressional and Costa Rican officials claim it's $140,000.

Costa Rica exports flowers and clothing to the United States. "Unusually strict bans and restrictions" have been laid on these and other exports, the story reports.

And last month, when American banks refused to renegotiate payment terms on Costa Rican loans, the administration did not intervene as it always had when Contra bases were permitted in Costa Rica. (It would not behoove the biggest debtor nation in the world to cast stones as countries that live from loan to loan.)

An Arias aide said, "The Reagan administration is blind, obsessed with Nicaragua. But they are not going to succeed in overthrowing the Sandinistas. In the end, they are going to destroy Costa Rican democracy instead." The way they use the word, I doubt they'd care.

Family Planning Policies Will Backfire

Carol Joffe

Devotees of Jewish folklore are familiar with the legendary town of Chelm, whose inhabitants were compulsively driven to commit acts that would have the opposite effect of what was originally desired. If the children of the town didn't have enough milk, the Chelm elders would make sure that town revenues were spent on a billy goat; if a new roof was needed for the prayer hall, a brilliant rationale would be found for constructing a new floor and so on. Nowhere are the Chelm-like qualities of the Reagan administration more evident than in its policies on family planning and abortion.

New rules have been proposed by the Department of Health and Human Services that would forbid family-planning clinics that receive federal funds from even mentioning the option of an abortion to patients. (Under current policy, federally funded clinics do not perform abortions, but they must provide counseling on all options, including abortion, if a pregnant woman requests such information.) Should these new rules go into effect, family-planning clinics across the country will find their funding cut, since the health professionals who staff them will be ethically unable to comply with such a restrictive policy.

When these clinics are forced to close, there will result thousands of unwanted pregnancies, and many of these probably will be terminated by abortions. Hence, a move designed to placate the right-to-life supporters of the president will have the ultimate effect of causing more abortions. The people of Chelm would feel at home with such a policy.

These new rules also raise troubling questions about what happens to public policy when it is driven by ideological fanaticism. It is true that there is genuine disagreement in this country about the morality and desirability of abortion. But it is also true that a woman's right to choose an abortion is the law of the land.

The cardinal principle of abortion counseling, a field that has developed ever since the Roe vs. Wade decision in 1973, is that no woman should get an abortion until she has fully explored her feelings on this subject.

By banning the possibility of this kind of discussion in clinics, anti-abortion zealots are not going to reduce the number of abortions performed in this country. They will succeed, however, in reducing the number of places in this society where those with unwanted pregnancies can reflect seriously on the advantages and disadvantages of an abortion.

Biden's Dilemma A Tedious Situation To Overcome In Campaign

'Biden faces a tough ride ahead'

Evans
Witt

WASHINGTON (AP) — A storm is swirling once again around a presidential candidate. And, once again, the wait is on to see whether the campaign, in this case that of Sen. Joseph Biden, can survive questions about his character.

The political furor this time involves plagiarism at law school 23 years in the past and Biden's failures in speeches to give credit to politicians whose words he used.

Biden says it won't stop his campaign.

"I'm in this race to stay," the Delaware Democrat declared Thursday. "I'm in this race to win. And here I come."

But in the 1988 campaign, the rules are different since Gary Hart was forced from the race in May amid a firestorm of criticism over his relationship with a Miami model.

"Anything can be fatal in this day and age," said Rep. Patricia Schroeder, the Colorado Democrat who is thinking of getting into the 1988 race herself. "Anything is relevant."

What is relevant this week for Biden was revealed Thursday at his extraordinary news conference: he admitted he had committed plagiarism, inadvertently, he says, in his first year in law school. And he said he occasionally failed to attribute rhetoric in his speeches to the other politicians from whom he borrowed.

"Little did I know I would be standing before the whole world acknowledging the fact I did not know how to write a legal memorandum and the mistake is costing me as much as it is costing me," Biden said.

The costs are high, for the controversy is raising the "character issue," the complex of matters that add up to just what kind of person the candidate is.

"There are a great many issues. Obviously one's overall character is one of them," said Ted Sorenson, a speechwriter for President Kennedy and adviser to former candidate Hart. "I hope we don't have to dig up every candidate's law school record to determine whether he can be the leader of the free world.

"I really feel that there are many greater issues in the campaign for president than the contents or the authors of presidential speeches," Sorensen added. "I've been reading speeches by candidates for years which borrowed material that I had previously written."

That sentiment was echoed by Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., who looked at the 1988 race and said no thanks.

"I think it's always a good idea to attribute quotes, but I don't think he deserves capital punishment for running a red light," Nunn said.

But Tom Mathews, a Democratic political consultant, argued Biden's troubled go deeper.

Biden's candidacy "is the invention of some very, very talented and clever people. And as is almost always the case, when the candidate is invented by somebody else, the invention comes apart and eventually breaks down."

The allegations about Biden's rhetoric are particularly harmful, for they strike at the heart of his campaign. Biden's soaring speeches were a major reason he was considered a contender for the Democratic nomination, for he can electrify a crowd as few of his opponents can.

Politically, Biden must find a way to restart his campaign, reassure contributors and convince potential primary voters that he is worthy of their vote.

But time is short for the Delaware Democrat, who is one of the least-known in his party's field.

And time is something Biden just doesn't have right now; he is chairing the Senate Judiciary Committee hearings on Robert H. Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court. Later, he'll lead the floor battle against President Reagan's choice.

The Bork hearings could help Biden, of course, if his performance is so sparkling as to demonstrate his leadership abilities and brush aside the doubts generated by the plagiarism charges.

Perhaps the best advice for Biden came from Republican Sen. Alan Simpson of Wyoming: "Hang on tight."

Simpson is right. Biden faces a tough ride ahead.

Jonathan
Wolman

WASHINGTON (AP) — Robert Bork was supposed to be the man on the griddle this week, but it is the fellow across the table — Sen. Joseph Biden — whose ambitions are suddenly in peril.

After admitting an incident of law school plagiarism and some sloppiness on the campaign trail, Biden's presidential campaign will be hard put to overcome comedian Johnny Carson's ridicule and his own self-appraisal.

"I did something very stupid 23 years ago ... I was wrong, but I was not malevolent," the Delaware senator said in an attempt to put the copycat controversy behind him. If he doesn't succeed, and soon, Biden will follow Gary Hart into campaign oblivion.

A friendly voice, Sen. Sam Nunn, described the potential calamity as "capital punishment for running a red light." Said potential Democratic presidential rival Pat Schroeder: "Anything can be fatal in this day and age."

This isn't the publicity that Biden was hoping to attract this week. To break out of the pack of Democrats, he hoped and expected that a strong performance in opposition to the Bork nomination would endear him to primary voters.

By virtue of his chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee, his knack for passionate public speaking and his ability to raise money, he probably had as good a chance as any Democratic candidate.

Until this week.

He may yet win the nomination, but not since Hart's withdrawal has a politician had a worse week.

It was written that Biden graduated near the bottom of his law school class. He did, finishing 76th of 80-some students at Syracuse University law school.

It was discovered that at an Ames, Iowa, candidate forum, he lifted a wonderful campaign anecdote, a story of personal poignancy, from Britain's Neil Kinnock without giving the labor leader credit.

It was revealed that while at Syracuse he'd copied five pages of material without attribution to the original author.

That's a lot of bad news all of a sudden, but Biden said it adds up to not much and he said he'll stay in the race.

"The American people will judge. I think it's much ado about nothing," Biden said. "In the marketplace of ideas in the political realm, the notion that for every thought or idea you have to go back and find and attribute to someone is frankly ludicrous."

(Afficionadoes of irony may want to note: "Much Ado about Nothing" comes from the title of a comedy by Shakespeare. Biden did not attribute the now-generic phrase.)

Does everyone do it? His presidential rivals were asked about Biden.

Jim Kilpatrick, spokesman for Sen. Paul Simon, quoted Biden's Judiciary Committee colleague as saying, "Joe has been doing an outstanding job in these hearings, and doing so under great pressure."

But Kilpatrick said, "This may cause him problems," noting, by way of example, that Johnny Carson in his "Tonight Show" monologue Wednesday joked that Biden called his staff together and told them, "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself" — the famous line from Franklin Roosevelt's 1933 inaugural address.

Rep. Richard Gephardt's spokesman, Mark Johnson, said: "We don't have anything to add to the Biden news conference," but then added, "Has Gephardt ever taken verbatim paragraphs from other peoples' speeches? The answer to that is, No.'"

Scott Hatch, spokesman for Pat Robertson, said Robertson didn't have anything to say about the issue, but doubted Robertson would ever use someone else's quotes. "Pat has been an ad-libber on television for 25 years ... I think he is much less tied to his script than other candidates."

With hearings for Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court far from over, there apparently has been some grumbling that attention to Biden's political problem is draining the energy from the anti-Bork effort. Biden himself disagreed, but said "it is no coincidence" that this controversy broke out as the hearings began — suggesting political opponents might be responsible.

Accusations Of Political Meddling Can Raise Pope's Ire

Don
Schanche

LOS ANGELES — Pope John Paul II has been known to become uncharacteristically furious when accused of trying to influence the politics of the countries he visits.

But like any preacher who focuses on the moral dimensions of contemporary social problems, the pontiff often steps across the unclear line that separates morality and politics, sometimes to the distress of national authorities who are sensitive to possible papal meddling.

Although he has done it only once during his current American pilgrimage — in San Antonio, Texas, when he appeared to encourage members of the sanctuary movement who have clashed with authorities by providing haven to illegal Central American refugees — some of the themes of his speeches in the remaining days of the papal visit suggest that he may become "political" again, perhaps when he speaks on social justice in Detroit.

But as longtime pope-watchers often note with admiration, he probably will do it with the skill of a master politician, leaving himself a safe "out" if domestic authorities question his remarks, as they did in San Antonio.

There, in a homily at Mass that was devoted almost entirely to religious topics such as the sacrament of penance (confession of sins), John Paul launched briefly into a characterization of his host city as a "crossroads" between Latino and other cultures, "a kind of laboratory testing America's commitment to her founding moral principles and human values."

Among those values, he cited America's historic welcome to immigrants, most recently "the movement of people northwards," about which he had been briefed by Archbishop Patrick F. Flores. A Vatican source said the briefing included a full explanation of the sanctuary movement.

"Among you there are people of great courage and generosity who have been doing much on behalf of suffering brothers and sisters arriving from the south," the pope said, stepping into the no man's land between morality and politics. "They have sought to show compassion in the face of complex human, social and political realities."

Members of the sanctuary movement, some of whom have been tried and convicted for aiding illegal aliens, immediately interpreted the pontiff's remarks as encouragement for their cause. So did most of the journalists who heard John Paul make the remarks. And so did the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which demanded to know if the pope was encouraging illegal activity in the United States.

A classic example of a Vatican "clarification" that gave comfort to both sides of the highly charged political issue came the next day from the pope's spokesman, Dr. Joaquin Navarro Valls.

"In his homily in San Antonio on Sunday, the Holy Father addressed the phenomenon of undocumented immigration on the moral, not the legal level," Navarro said in a written statement. "While expressing compassion for undocumented aliens and admiration for those who seek to aid them, he did not endorse any specific movement or group nor did he encourage violation of the civil laws as a solution to this problem."

When asked if the statement meant that the Vatican was denying that the pope encouraged members of the sanctuary movement, Navarro said forcefully, "I did not say that, I said that he did not endorse any specific movement or group."

The result was that the INS was satisfied, the sanctuary people still felt encouraged and the pontiff deftly made his point without being branded a meddling politician, an accusation that touches off papal anger like none other.

Certainly the pope has been highly political throughout his three papal pilgrimages to Poland, arousing cheers from many millions of listeners with constant repetitions of the term "solidarity," the name of the outlawed union movement. But in every case, as in San Antonio, he has carefully cloaked his remarks in ambiguity so that, while the masses get a profound political message, the authorities cannot say there has been a clear papal call for anything more than solidarity among Poles.

A papal aide summed up John Paul's approach to politics with this remark: "He recognizes that whatever power he has rests in morality, never in outright politics. But he knows, too, that the border between religious morality and politics is a thin one."

'He recognizes that whatever power he has rests in morality, never in outright politics. But he knows, too, that the border between religious morality and politics is a thin one.'

'Looking It Up' Isn't Enough For Improvement

James
Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — Let me keep pounding away, if you will, at two stunning reports on the failures of American education. They point to problems that are far more serious in the long run than problems of farm policy, trade imbalance or the public funding of congressional elections. Either we clean up the mess in our schools, or come the next century, we've had it.

One report, "American Memory," comes from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The other, "What Do Our 17-Year-Olds Know?" is the work of scholars Diane Ravitch and Chester E. Finn Jr. Both reports rely upon findings of a test administered to nearly 8,000 American 11th-graders. The students were examined in history and literature. It was an easy test. They failed abysmally.

Without rehashing the sorrowful figures, suffice it to say that these students, as a class, proved to be cultural numskulls. They had no sense of when particular events occurred; they therefore had no sense of what events came before or why consequences came after. In the field of literature, they demonstrated shocking ignorance of the cultural inheritance that every high school student should have received.

As a people we must ask ourselves, Why? Why and how did this happen? What has gone so dreadfully wrong? If we can answer those questions, perhaps we can move on to, What do we do about it?

Ravitch and Finn offer some answers to the "why." Fifty years ago the humanities shared equal billing with mathematics and the natural sciences. High school courses in English were heavily weighted with literature. History was taught in solid chunks from the sixth grade through the 12th. But 25 years ago, when the Soviets' Sputnik shocked the Western world, the balance abruptly shifted. The important literacy became computer literacy. History and literature were shunted aside.

The traditional curriculum in literature fell into disarray. Relatively few schools continued to demand that students read the "hard books." The old tradition died, and in its stead the students were fed "merely cafeteria-style literature, including the written equivalent of junk food." It became educationally fashionable to teach "skills" or "concepts." The educational establishment scorned the teaching of mere "facts and dates." If a high school graduate could not say when Columbus discovered the New World, no matter. "He will know how to look it up."

That won't do. The "concept" of equal rights surely is important to any understanding of American political history, but to teach a concept without facts is to teach a kind of cotton candy history. The nationwide test disclosed that half of the 11th-graders know little or nothing of nullification, the Missouri compromise, secession, the Civil War or Reconstruction. Two-thirds of these students dimwittedly supposed that Jim Crow laws were intended to improve the lot of black citizens. The students were generally ignorant of Plessy v. Ferguson and Brown v. Board of Education.

Listen for a moment to Ravitch and Finn: "To the extent that we — educators, parents and citizens — allow cultural literacy to wane and to be reduced only to knowledge of celebrities from People magazine and the electronic media, then the audience for genuine literature will shrink, material written or produced for a literate public will dwindle, and the quality of public discourse and debate in our society will suffer. It is a tragic downward spiral that can only erode the culture, trivialize the intellect, and in time pauperize our civic life."

What can be done about the situation? The recommendations offered by the NEH study and by Ravitch and Finn call for no radical reforms. They urge merely that our schools restore the humanities to the important position they once occupied. History should be taught from the early elementary grades; high schools should require at least two years of world history in addition to a solid grounding in American history. Greater emphasis should be placed upon geography. Reading assignments should deal with important literary works. None of this is the stuff of revolution.

Will anything be done about the situation? The honest but pessimistic answer is, no, nothing significant will be done. The entrenched educational establishment, supported by timorous textbook publishers and by intimidated school boards, has no enthusiasm for such old-fashioned values. Fifty years hence the student who is asked about the Greeks and the Trojans will be mystified. "Fraternity men? Football players? Sorry, Gramps, it beats the heck out of me."

Kremlin Targets Posters, Slogans

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated press writer

MOSCOW (AP) — A Kremlin campaign for less talk and more action has pruned the Moscow landscape of some of its best-known political slogans and posters, including words and images of Vladimir I. Lenin.

In the past few months, man-size neon letters that proclaimed Lenin's thoughts have been removed from the rooftops of apartments and factories.

Until last year, the wall facing a busy thoroughfare near the Kremlin was occupied by the staring countenance of Lenin.

But huge pictures of the Soviet founder have been papered over with slogans touting the merits of "perestroika," Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's campaign for a wholesale rebuilding of society and the economy.

The scope and intent of the propaganda reform are not entirely clear, but recent articles in the state-run press suggest it is designed to conform with Gorbachev's call for "fewer words, more deeds."

The average Muscovite still faces a good dose of Communist Party policy during a trip through the capital's center.

Soviet cities are nearly devoid of commercial advertising, but buses and trolleys exhort people to "drink fruit juice the whole year round," a plug for the official anti-alcohol campaign.

Many buildings are decorated with slogans along the lines of "Long live the peace-loving Leninist foreign policy of the Soviet Union."

The removal of some Lenin posters and axioms does not necessarily signal a change in official views toward the first Soviet leader.

Gorbachev cites Lenin's words and deeds in his speeches. Portraits of Lenin hang in every classroom and factory, and his statue stands at major intersections in nearly every city.

The chief propagandist at a Moscow poster publishing enterprise said the removals are "not directly associated with politics." Instead, new forms of "mass propagandist art" are being prepared that will better illustrate current reform campaigns, V. Litvinov said in an article last month in the weekly political journal, Arguments and Facts.

A Muscovite who signed his name as S. Kalugin wrote to the weekly Literaturnaya Gazeta recently to complain that propaganda gets more attention than production.

"In a polyclinic where it is impossible to see a doctor, in a shop with empty shelves, in a factory which produces ugly clothes, one thing is always in good order — the vivid propaganda," Kalugin wrote.

"I have noticed a strange pattern — the worse an organization works, the more posters and slogans there are on its walls."

But Soviet citizens say they are largely oblivious to propaganda and that even new slogans go unnoticed.

"The last person who read that was the person who put it up," one young Muscovite said when asked about the impact of a placard on a major boulevard promising fulfillment of the plans outlined during last year's Communist Party congress.

While the new propaganda is more contemporary and placards are backed by more colors other than just the traditional red, some argue the messages are less than inspiring.

Cuomo Taking His Message To Russia

By MARC HUMBERT
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Gov. Mario Cuomo, who insists he is not a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, made last-minute preparations Saturday for his trip to the Soviet Union on what he described as a mission of peace.

"I do not have to be a candidate for the presidency to have an interest in these subjects," he said of nuclear arms control and human rights. "I go there as an American, not as a Democrat."

Cuomo's departure, scheduled for Saturday night, came one day after President Reagan announced an agreement in principle with the Soviets to ban medium- and shorter-range nuclear missiles.

Cuomo said it would a good treaty only if it was the first step toward agreements on long-range missiles, conventional and chemical weapons, and trade and human rights issues.

But Cuomo said he wasn't going to be a naysayer while in the Soviet Union. "I will not say anything that criticizes my president or my country," he vowed.

Cuomo said he didn't expect to meet Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. But officials involved in planning the trip thought it was possible because of Cuomo's high profile in the United States and Gorbachev's possible desire to use such a meeting as a way of reaching the American public.

"I'm not a federal official and I'm not a candidate (for president)," said Cuomo. "I don't believe it's my place to ask for an interview with anybody. I'm nothing. I'm governor of the State of New York, a proud position for me, but it means nothing in the international context."

The visit to Moscow and Leningrad comes seven months after Cuomo announced he wouldn't seek the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination.

Speculation about his presidential ambition has continued, however, because he's refused to rule out accepting a draft at a deadlocked national convention next year and because he has stepped up his travels.

Cuomo was criticized by some Democrats before he bowed out of the race as lacking in foreign policy experience, but his aides say he's been studying foreign affairs since he entered public life in 1975.

"He hasn't talked about it in the past because, especially since 1984, it would have been interpreted as a sign that he was running" for president, said press secretary Gary Fryer. It was Cuomo's keynote address to the 1984 Democratic National Convention that first brought him to public attention outside New York.

A few weeks after Cuomo's return, he's scheduled to address the Washington-based Council on Foreign Relations.

In preparation for the trip, Cuomo said he talked to, among others, former presidents Carter and Nixon, industrialist Armand Hammer and former Soviet dissident Natan Sharansky, who now lives in Israel. "Nixon was very, very helpful," he said.

He also got a State Department briefing and met with Vice President George Bush.

Errors Continue To Plague Pirates As Illinois Takes 20-10 Football Victory

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — With a chance to take a step toward respectability, East Carolina did itself in with mistakes and turnovers in a 20-10 loss to Illinois Saturday.

Two fumbles and a botched field goal were just some of the problems for the Pirates, who were taking on a Big 10 opponent for the first time ever.

"The big culprit is us," said ECU coach Art Baker. "I thought our football players gave a good account of themselves, particularly our defense. I thought our defense played well except for a couple of long passes.

"Our offense played well at times when it didn't stop itself."

The breaking point for the Pirates may have come in the final period.

Trailing 17-10, ECU was driving. With a third and five on its own 29, quarterback Travis Hunter scrambled for 13 yards but fumbled the ball and it was recovered by the Illini's Chris Green.

"That was the one that really took the game out," Baker said. "We had about eight minutes to go and we had time to score twice."

Illinois turned the mistake into three points as they drove down to the Pirates' 18. After the drive stalled, Doug Higgins kicked a 34-yard field goal to make it 20-10 with 10:16 left in the game.

"Sometimes, we're our own worst enemy," said ECU safety Ellis Dillahunt. "It was very frustrating. We were looking forward to going into Georgia Southern 2-1."

ECU had three more possessions after that but failed to advance into Illinois territory.

For the Illini, it was a much needed win. Illinois improves to 1-2 and goes into Big 10 play against Ohio State in two weeks on a high note.

"I think there were some real positive things in this victory," said Illinois coach Mike White. "To East Carolina's credit, they are a real well-coached team and their quarterback was one of the best we've faced. They had a real solid defense."

Leading 14-7 at the half, the Illini had a chance to take command of the game on their initial possession of the second half.

Ken Thomas gave Illinois a first and 10 on the ECU 17 with a 38-yard run. Illinois drove the ball down to the five-yard line but Thomas fumbled on a second and goal at the five to end the threat.

Given new life, ECU began a drive.

Simpson ripped off 17 yards on first down and the Pirates proceeded to march the ball down to the Illinois 24.

That was as far as they would go as the drive bogged down and ECU had to settle for a 40-yard field goal by Berleth.

Illinois, though, continued to move the ball in the second half.

A 21-yard field goal by Higgins, following a 77-yard drive, gave the Illini a 17-10 lead.

Illini quarterback Scott Mohr hooked up with splint end Darryl Usher for a 44-yard pass play that got things rolling. Illinois drove to the Pirate three but ECU held and forced the kick.

For the game, Mohr hit on 10 of 19 passes for 187 yards but had two interceptions.

Illinois forged out to a 14-7 halftime lead, scoring the game's first touchdown by taking advantage of an early ECU turnover.

Maye, Heels Explode, Run Past Georgia Tech, 30-23

ATLANTA (AP) — North Carolina quarterback Mark Maye said North Carolina's hurry-up offense in the second half was the key to his school-record passing peformance that included four touchdowns in the final 30 minutes of a 30-23 victory over Georgia Tech Saturday.

It was the Atlantic Coast Conference opener for both schools.

Three of the TDs were to wide receiver Randy Marriott, who had a school-record 9 catches for 247 yards.

Tech had a 20-3 halftime margin before Maye exploded in the second half, connecting on 16 of 21 passes for 296 yards. He wound up with 23 of 38 completions for 406 yards.

"At the half, we were behind 17 points and we had to score," said Maye. "Coach (Dick) Crum decided to start the second half with our hurry-hurry (2-minute) offense. You have to give the offensive line and the receivers all the credit."

"We had so many things go wrong in the first half," said Crum. "We just kept self-destructing. We told the guys at halftime not to get frustrated with it. You just go out and play your game and some good things will happen."

And they did.

"If you can come behind from a 20-3 deficit at halftime and win, then I think you have to give them a tremendous amount of credit," said Tech Coach Bobby Ross.

"Defensively, I was really disappointed with the way we played the pass. I think we're better than that. I really don't understand that," he said.

Maye capped the comeback with an 18-yard touchdown pass to Marriott with 4:32 left to play to snap a 23-23 tie.

Maye, a senior, had connected on a 25-yard TD strike to Marriott only 2:26 earlier to gain the tie.

North Carolina rolled up 578 yards in total offense.

Maye started the 20-point final quarter with a 23-yard touchdown pass to Eric Lewis at the 4:26 mark, but Kenny Miller missed the extra point as the the Tar Heels, 2-1, trailed 23-16.

In the third period, Maye had teamed with Marriott on a 93-yard scoring pass, the longest in school history.

Tech, 1-1, overall, managed only a 52-yard field goal from Thomas Palmer in the second half in which they had three turnovers, losing the ball twice inside North Carolina's 10-yard line.

The Yellow Jackets had taken a 20-3 halftime lead on field goals of ;27 yards and 47 yards by Palmer, a 17-yard TD pass from quarterback Rick Strom to Greg Lester and Malcolm King's 11-yard TD run.

North Carolina's only first half points came on Miller's 32-yard field goal.

Wake Forest Cruises By Stumbling Wolfpack, 21-3

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Mark Young knew he'd get his chance in the spotlight some day, and the Wake Forest reserve tailback took center stage in Saturday's 21-3 victory over North Carolina State.

Young rushed for a career-high 144 yards and two touchdowns in 29 carries to lead the Demon Deacons to a victory over the winless Wolfpack.

"I wasn't that used to carrying all the load," Young said. "I figured out that, sooner or later, it might have come down to me carrying the load myself."

Starting tailback Darryl McGill scored on a 1-yard plunge on Wake Forest's opening drive, but left the game in the third quarter with a sprained right ankle. Young replaced him in the same drive and added a 1-yard scoring dive with 2:51 left in the third period to give first-year Demon Deacon coach Bill Dooley his first ACC victory since he left North Carolina in 1977.

"In practice, we all go," Young said in sharing time with McGill. "He goes three, I go three."

Young capped his day with a 28-yard touchdown run with 1:51 left to raise Wake Forest's record to 2-0.

"I had to make a move on a guy to score," Young said. "I wanted to score more than he wanted to tackle me, so I just gave it my best."

N.C. State hurt its own efforts to snap a two-game losing streak with costly mistakes throughout its league opener. After Bryan Carter's 22-yard first-quarter field goal on its second possession, the Wolfpack took itself out of drives and scoring opportunities with a fumble and a penalty in the first half, and one more fumble, three interceptions and a half-dozen dropped passes in the second half.

Only twice in the second half did the Wolfpack get into Wake Forest territory, and on each drive it committed a turnover.

N.C. State blocked a punt in the first half to get in position to tie the score, but lost the ball on the next play on one of its two fumbles.

Ernie Purnsley intercepted a Shane Montgomery pass with 4:01 remaining to end N.C. State's last threat.

"It wasn't simply the turnovers today. In key situations, we just didn't execute," N.C. State coach Dick Sheridan said. "That confounds us."

The victory marked the first time Wake Forest had beaten the Wolfpack in Winston-Salem since 1976. The loss gave Sheridan his first 0-3 start since he was at Furman in 1979, when he lost his first five games.

On the third play from scrimmage, Elkins completed a 62-yard pass to Ricky Proehl to put Wake Forest on the N.C. State 15. Six plays later, McGill dived over from the 1 and Wilson Hoyle added the conversion at the 10:14 mark.

The Wolfpack sustained a drive on its second possession, driving from itw own 27 to the Wake Forest 5. The big play in the drive was Montgomery's 32-ard pass play to Danny Peebles. But when the Demon Deacon defense stiffened, Carter kicked his field goal 43 seconds before the end of the period.

The second quarter was a lesson in squandered opportunities. Dubie Picquet blocked Martin Bailey's punt and N.C. State recovered it at the Wake Forest 40. But on the next play, Marty Karriker fumbled at the end of a 13-yard run and Tony Mosley recovered for Wake Forest.

Wake Forest started a drive at midfield and reached the Wolfpack 39, but an Elkins pass for Steve Brown was picked off by Izel Jenkins and returned 16 yards to the N.C. State 38. The Wolfpack took the ball from there to the Wake Forest 40, but an illegal procedure call on a third-and-1 took N.C. State out of field goal range.

The Demon Deacons marched from their own 23 to the Wolfpack 9 to get into field goal range with six seconds left. But Mark Casey fumbled the snap from center and the Demon Deacons lost a chance at a 22-yard field goal.

"A couple of mistakes hurt us in the kicking game," Dooley said. "We'll have to work on these things since they could really hurt us in coming games."

Blue Devils Win

DURHAM (AP) — Steve Slayden threw four touchdowns passes, but Stanley Monk's 2-yard scoring dive with 3:45 remaining gave unbeaten Duke a 35-31 victory over Vanderbilt in college football Saturday night.

Monk's score capped a 66-yard, four-minute drive which came after Vanderbilt took a 31-28 edge on Eric Jones' 12-yard touchdown pass to Carl Parker with 7:42 left.

After Monk's score, Vanderbilt, 1-1, went from its own 20 to the Duke 26. But Jones' pass for Parker was intercepted in the end zone by Dewayne Terry, his second such interception against the Commodores.

Slayden threw four touchdown passes for the second time in Duke's three games this season. He hit Doug Green with a 37-yard scoring pass to tie the score at 7-7 in the first quarter and a 28-yard strike to Clarkston Hines in the second period for a 14-7 Duke edge.

The second half turned into a passing duel between Jones and Slayden before Monk's scoring run gave Duke the lead for good.

Slayden hit Hines on a 73-yard pass play in the third quarter to give the Blue Devils a 21-17 lead. Jones came back with a 6-yard scoring pass to Parker with 5:50 left in the period. Johnny Clark, who kicked a 37-yard field goal in the first half, added the third of his four conversions.

Duke parlayed Terry's first end zone interception near the end of the third period into a 28-24 lead with 10:54 left when Slayden threw his fourth touchdown pass, a 6-yarder to tight end Jason Cooper with 10:54 left.

Slayden completed 19 of 29 passes for 297 yards and one interception. Jones was 21 of 32 for 342 yards and Terry's two thefts.

Throughout much of the action, Vanderbilt's offense got its plays from the sideline.

The no-huddle offense kept the Duke defense off-balance and produced a touchdown on Vanderbilt's first possession. The Commodores drove 53 yards in 10 plays, the last 29 on Jones' 29-yard scoring pass to Parker at 10:43 of the first quarter.

State To Play West Carolina

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Western Carolina will play North Carolina State in a Sept. 3, 1988, football game, replacing East Carolina on the schedule, N.C. State athletic director Jim Valvano announced Saturday.

"We feel very fortunate to find a team the calibre of Western Carolina which had an opening on its schedule that matches ours," Valvano said in a prepared statement. "We played them in 1986 and coaches (Bob) Waters and (Dick) Sheridan have had great competition against each other in the past. We are pleased that the game also continues our policy of playing in-state schools."

The current agreement is for one year. The Wolfpack contest against East Carolina was canceled earlier this month when a post-game fracas in this season's game caused N.C. State officials to call a one-year moratorium.

"We are excited and pleased that N.C. State would select us for its opening game next year," Western Carolina athletic director Terry Wanless said in a prepared statement. "We are looking forward to the game."

Medlin Says He Is Wake Bound

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley basketball star Phil Medlin has verbally committed to sign a grant-in-aid with Wake Forest University this November, Viking Coach Walter Claybrook has announced.

The 6-8 senior, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Tracy Medlin of Greenville, said that he will sign to play for the Deacons after he completes his high school eligibility. Medlin's signing will come in November at the NCAA-approved early signing date.

Medlin helped lead Conley to the 3-A State Basketball Championship last March in Chapel Hill.

Each Side Blames Other

NEW YORK (AP) — An almost certain NFL strike moved a day closer Saturday and each side blamed the other's stand on free ageny for causing the crisis.

A statement issued by the six-member executive of the NFL Management Council said it had made numerous concessions at a meeting Friday between the two chief negotiators, Jack Donlan and Gene Upshaw. But it said Upshaw's insistence on unrestricted free agency was the stumbling block to an agreement.

"We are satisfied that we have made every effort to negotiate a settlement with the union," the statement said. "Free agency stands in the way."

But Gene Upshaw, executive director of the NFL Players Association, said the free agent issue was being used by management "because they know that's where their leverage is with the players."

And he added of free agency:

"It's management that's pounding this. If they just get off of free agency, we can make a deal."

Upshaw denied management's claim that Donlan had made concessions Friday.

"He never said anything specific. He never made a specific proposal in any area," said Upshaw.

In view of the statements, there seemed no apparent way to avert the second NFL strike in six seasons, barring intervention from someone like Commissioner Pete Rozelle.

Of Rozelle, Upshaw said Friday, "I think he wants to wait until the issues are a little clearer and the sides are a little closer." He added Saturday:

"Of course he could make a deal. But I'm not sure sure they (the owners) will let him."

No new talks were scheduled and the strike was to start following Monday night's game between the New England Patriots and New York Jets, which will complete the season's second week. The 1982 strike, which lasted 57 days and cost seven games of the 16-game season, also started after the second Monday night game.

"I don't have to do anything further but notify the player reps and we'll go," Upshaw said. "The only thing that could stop it now is a settlement and I don't see that."

This time, the owners will try to continue the season, a position reiterated in Saturday's statement, issued in the name of the Management Council Executive Committee made up of Hugh Culverhouse of the Tampa Bay Bucs, Dan Rooney of the Pittsburgh Steelers, Tex Schramm of the Dallas Cowboys, Mike Brown of the Cincinnati Bengals, Joe Robbie of the Miami Dolphins and Chuck Sullivan of the New England Patriots.

They said all strike games will count in the final standings. Many teams have offered $1,000 retainers to players cut in preseason and the Management Council said in its statement it would "meet payrolls for players who are not on strike."

The statement added: "there is a strong indication it may not be feasible to make up any game that is missed during a strike." The owners have said it's likely they will skip the third week of the season to get the teams together, then resume playing the following week.

And they warned "there will be no lump sum bonuses offered to striking players when they return," — a reference to the "money now" provision in the 1982 settlement that provided players with paychecks on their return from strike.

Donlan said in the statement that he had offered Uphshaw "a number of improvements" from the last management proposal in their meeting in Washington Friday.

He said they included an increase in the roster size from 45 men to 49, further improvements in the 17 percent increase in pensions included in their last offer; retroactive pension increases for veteran players; better protection for player representatives and "improvements in other areas including injury protection and insurance."

Donlan also said the owners would further liberalize the league's free agent system, which requires draft-choice compensation for players signing as free agents, although the framework would conceivably remain the same. The union wants unrestricted free agency for players who complete their fourth season in the league.

Donlan said Upshaw rejected it saying, "we're going to change the system. Players are going to have to move."

But Upshaw denied that Donlan had ever made specific offers and called Donlan's statement "a bribe," that will be placed before the players in hopes of keeping them from striking.

He said the closest Donlan came was on roster size, where he said "Your 52 and our 47 is 49."

"All he did was talk in vague generalities," Upshaw said.

State Runners Capture Meet

WILMINGTON — N.C. State's cross country team dominated competition in the Seahawk Run held Saturday at UNC-Wilmington.

The Wolfpack's men won their event with a low score of 15, taking the top five spots individually. The women finished first with 17 points, missing only one spot in the top five.

East Carolina's men finished fifth overall while the women's team came in fourth. In the men's event, Christopher Newport took second place with 79 points while UNCW had 99, Baptist had 129, East Carolina had 138 and Winthrop had 151. St. Andrews also participated, but had no team score.

For the women, N.C. State's B team took second with 41 points while the Lady Seahawks were third with 77. ECU was fourth with 99 followed by Winthrop with 111 and Baptist with 159.

Matt Schwitzer led the ECU men with a 12th place finish in 28:20. Other ECU times were: Mike McGehee, 27th in 30:10; Russell Meador, 31st in 30:33; Rob Rice, 33rd in 30:47; Jim Layton, 36th in 31:00; Russell Williams, 38th in 31:20; Freddie Fuller, 44th in 33:22; and Henry Patrick, 50th in 36:51.

Kim Griffiths led the women with a 13th place finish in 19:52. Stephanie Ingram was 16th in 20:06, followed by Bibi Rosas, 19th in 20:28; Dawn Tillson, 21st in 20:45; Kim Abernethy, 30th in 22;49; Kathy Ellis, 39th in 25:36; and Sheri Swick, 42nd in 26:38.

The Pirates return to action on Oct. 3, traveling to the Lynchburg (Va.) College Invitational.

yards. Romero Brice recovered for Illinois.

The Illini quickly drove it in for the score, keyed again by a 41-yard pass from Mohr to Usher that gave Illinois a first-and-goal situation at the ECU two-yard line. Ken Thomas got the score two plays later on a one-yard plunge. Doug Higgins' kick made it 7-0.

ECU came right back though, driving 79 yards on its next possession, keyed by the running and passing of Hunter.

The sophomore quarterback had 31-yards rushing on the march and 25 yards passing. Berleth's kick made it 7-7.

Illinois went back out in front, keyed once again by the big play.

With a second and five at the ECU 45, Illini fullback Jeff Markland took a short pass in the right flat and turned in into a 38-yard gain. ECU was also penalized for a late hit on the play, giving Illinois a first and goal at the four-yard line.

Lynn McLelland, who rushed for 126 yards on the day, got the score on a one-yard run with 8:29 left in the second quarter, Higgins' kick made it 14-7.

ECU missed a chance to narrow the gap late in the second quarter following an interception by ECU linebacker Bubba Waters that gave the Pirates the ball at the Illinois 20-yard line.

The Pirates drove the ball to the Illini eight but the drive stalled and Berleth came in to attempt a 26-yard field goal.

The Pirates came away with nothing when holder Tony Smith mishandled the snap.

"Something that hurt us was when we fumbled that field goal," Baker said. "First of all we shouldn't have had to go for the field goal."

Offensively, ECU prospered on the ground, rushing for 223 yards. The passing game, though, netted only 57 yards.

"We've just got to go back to the drawing board," Hunter said. "We put the defense in a bind. We're not getting points on the board."

Hunter hit on six of 15 passes with one interception.

Twice Hunter had receivers open for long passes but overthrew them.

"We had three receivers open for touchdowns and he overthrew all of them," Baker said. "That was the difference in the ball game. They hit their two long passes (to Usher). We had Reggie open once, we got Ron Jones open twice and we don't get them on any of the passes."

For the Illini, there was a lot of pre-game speculation on who would be the starting quarterback. Brian Menkhausen started the first two games. Backup Mohr saw considerable action in the Illini's season-opening 34-14 loss to North Carolina but didn't play in last week's 21-7 loss to Arizona State.

Mohr got the starting nod and passed for 127 yards in the first half but had two passes intercepted, one by Waters and the other by Ed Brogden.

The game, played at 70-563-seat capacity Memorial Stadium was the Pirates' first appearance on Astroturf since last season's 45-28 loss to Temple.

East Carolina falls to 1-2 and returns to action Saturday at home against Georgia Southern.

Florida Stuns Alabama, 23-14

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Freshman Emmitt Smith, making his first collegiate start, ran for a school record 224 yards and two touchdowns as Florida upset 11th-ranked Alabama 23-14 Saturday in the Southeastern Conference opener for both teams.

Smith broke a 6-6 tie on a 30-yard run through the middle with 5:39 left in the third quarter and gave the Gators a 17-point lead on a 1-yard plunge with 7:50 left in the game.

Smith got his total on 39 carries, breaking a school mark of 218 set in 1930 by Red Bethea against Chicago.

It was Florida's first victory over the Crimson Tide since 1963, ending an eight-game losing streak in the series since upsetting a Joe Namath-led team 10-6.

Alabama, which upset defending national champion Penn State last week, fell to 2-1, taking its first loss under new coach Bill Curry.

Florida, 2-1, also got got three field goals from Robert McGinty covering 26, 21 and 37 yards, all after he had come up short on a 50-yard attempt on the Gators first possession of the game.

Florida's defense applied pressure throughout the game on quarterback David Smith, sacking him five times for losses of 39 yards.

The Gators also bottled up Tide star Bobby Humphrey, holding him to 73 yards.

Alabama's scoring came on field goals of 36 and 25 yards by Philip Doyle, the first after a short Florida punt and the second after the Tide picked off a Kerwin Bell pass.

The Crimson Tide added a touchdown on Vince Sutton's 13-yard pass to Angelo Stafford with 3:12 remaining.

Smith, who finished his high school career in Pensacola, Fla., last year as the third leading rusher in high school history, was the workhorse throughout the overcast day for the Gators, taking the pressure off the strong Alabama rush on Bell.

Smith, who had 109 yards on 10 carries in a backup role in last week's 52-0 victory over Tulsa, had six carries for 60 yards in Florida's first field goal drive and Bell sparked the second field goal drive when he completed three of four passes for 67 yards.

One of Bell's passes went for 49 yards to Ernie Mills at the Alabama 9 just before Mills dropped a pass in the end zone. McGinty's 21-yard field goal gave the Gators a 6-3 lead 48 seconds before halftime.

Alabama gained the 6-6 tie early in the second half after Lee Ozmint picked off Bell's pass at the Florida 48.

On the first play, Pierre Goode raced 39 yards on a reverse and four players later Doyle tied it.

The Gators took the lead for good after a personal foul following a punt gave them possession on the Florida 49.

Smith raced for 23 yards on the first play and then, after a 2-yard loss, Smith broke through the middle to put Florida ahead to stay.

Bell completed 8 of 17 passes for 130 yards and Alabama's Smith could connect on only 2 of 10 for 20 yards.

Ohio State (5).....24
Oregon 14

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Vince Workman rushed for 162 yards and a touchdown and Tom Tupa passed for two touchdowns in a span of 1:14 in the third quarter as No.5 Ohio State defeated Oregon 24-14 in college football Saturday.

The victory moved Ohio State to 2-0. Oregon fell to 1-1.

Workman, a junior tailback, had 26 carries for his 160 yards.

Tupa completed 20 of 32 passes for 234 yards. In the second half, the senior quarterback was 13 of 17 for 145 yards and two touchdowns.

After Ohio State took a 3-0 lead at the half, Tupa completed his first seven passes of the second half and eight of nine passes during an 88-yard drive that ended with a 4-yard scoring pass to tight end Jay Koch. The touchdown was set up by a 44-yard pass from Tupa to flanker Everett Ross.

After the ensuing kickoff, Oregon was forced to punt and the kick was blocked by Ohio State's David Brown.

Taking over at the Oregon 19, the Buckeyes scored on the first play as Tupa hit fullback George Cooper for the touchdown to make it 17-0.

After Oregon's Joe Meerten scored on an 8-yard pass from Bill Musgrave, Workman scored on a 5-yard run. The touchdown was set up by a 56-yard run by Workman.

Oregon closed the scoring on a 7-yard pass from Musgrave to Rod Green.

Musgrave completed 18 of 27 passes for 204 yards and the two touchdowns.

Ohio State rushed for 201 yards for a total offense of 435 yards. Oregon gained 81 yards on the ground for a total offense of 285 yards.

Texas A&M.....29
Washington (10).....12

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M freshman quarterback Lance Pavlas bolstered a sagging offense and the Aggie defense bottled up Washington quarterback Chris Chandler en route to a 29-12 defeat of the 10th-ranked Huskies Saturday.

The Aggie defense didn't allow a touchdown, forced four Washington fumbles — two by Chandler — to help out the slow-starting offense that sputtered in the first half under quarterback Craig Stump.

Chandler, who entered the game with 514 yards passing in two games, finished with 11 completions on 31 attempts for 120 yards.

The Aggies, 1-1, scratched out a 14-9 halftime lead on Matt Gurley's 2-yard run following a 77-yard run by Keith Woodside and Pavlas' 7-yard pass to Percy Waddle.

It was the first touchdown pass and catch for Pavlas and Waddle. Pavlas came into the game in the second quarter and engineered the second-half surge.

A&M stretched the lead in the third quarter when an end zone punt by Washington's Brandy Brownlee bounced off teammate Aaron Jenkins' shoulder and Lafayette Turner returned it 2 yards for a touchdown.

Gurley scored the final Aggie touchdown on a 2-yard run with 11:38 to play, following Chandler's second fumble.

Brownlee, a transfer from Southern Methodist, kept the Huskies in the game in the first half with field goals of 47, 48 and 49 yards. He kicked a 30-yarder in the third quarter.

Woodside broke off a block by guard Trace McGuire and ran to the Husky 3-yard line before he was tackled by cornerback Art Malone and Gurley scored two plays later.

Washington dropped to 2-1.

Pavlas, a redshirt freshman from Tomball, completed of 13 of 19 passes for 83 yards, while nose guard Sammy O'Brient was a leader of the Aggie defense.

He had two tackles for 6 yards in losses that forced Brownlee to punt out of his own end zone, setting up Turner's short punt return. Later in the fourth quarter, he recovered Chandler's fumble at the Washington 45.

The Aggie defense held an opponent under 100 yards rushing for the fifth straight game, allowing the Huskies 53 yards on 30 attempts.

Chandler fumbled again with 12:48 left in the game, setting up Gurley's second touchdown.

Both teams were hurt by first-half turnovers. Washington's Vince Weathersby fumbled and Tim Landrum recovered for the Aggies at the Husky 7. Waddle caught his first collegiate touchdown two plays later.

Malone intercepted a pass by Pavlas, setting up Brownlee's 49-yarder with two seconds left in the half.

The Huskies struggled offensively in the first half and didn't convert their first third down until the final 39 seconds of the half.

The Aggies had only three first downs at the half, one after each touchdown and on Woodside's 77-yard run.

Arkansas (12).....27
Tulsa 7

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Freshman quarterback Quinn Grovey, making his first start, guided 12th-ranked Arkansas to a plain-vanilla 30-15 victory over Tulsa on Saturday.

The Razorbacks scored on six of their first eight possessions and built a 30-7 lead after three quarters, despite throwing only four passes. At that point, Arkansas had 279 yards rushing and Tulsa had 15 on 15 plays.

Grovey started in place of senior Greg Thomas, who suffered a bruised sternum in last week's 31-10 victory over Mississippi. Thomas, a two-year starter, practiced during the week but was only played sparingly.

The Razorbacks, notching their 11th-straight victory over Tulsa, kept it simple with the basic option series and some counter plays. Arkansas meets sixth-ranked Miami next week.

Tulsa started in a hole. On the game's first play, T.J. Rubley's pass down the middle was picked off by Rickey Williams, who returned it 9 yards to the Tulsa 31. James Rouse scored eight plays later from the 3 and Thomas was the first to congratulate Grovey as he left the field.

Rouse had 74 yards on 16 carries. Grovey rushed 18 times for 81 yards.

The first of Kendall Trainor's three field goals ended a seven-minute drive and made it 10-0 midway through the second quarter. Tulsa made one first down and then Tim Horton returned a punt 22 yards to the Tulsa 48. Rouse gained 22 on the counter option and Foster ripped off a 9-yard run. Two plays later, Foster made a quick 12 to the Tulsa 9. He scored from the 1 on second down for a 17-0 lead with 2:07 left in the half.

Michigan (19).....44
Washington St.....18

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Senior tailback Jamie Morris rushed for 61 yards and two touchdowns during a 24-point third quarter surge Saturday, leading No. 19 Michigan to a 44-18 college football victory over Washington State.

The victory squared Michigan's record at 1-1, while the Cougars dropped their first game after two straight victories.

Michigan led 13-10 at halftime, then capitalized on Washington State mistakes to take control of the game in the third. The Wolverines took the second half kickoff and drove to the Cougars' 27-yard line. On a third and nine, Washington State appeared to have held Michigan, but a pass interference call at the Cougars' 12 kept the drive alive.

Two plays later, Morris swept right end from 2 yards out to increase the Wolverines' lead to 20-10.

Michigan's defense pinned Washington State deep in its own territory on the ensuing series and took over at the Cougars' 27 following a punt. The drive culminated with Mike Gillette's third field goal of the day, a 32-yarder to stretch the Wolverines' advantage to 23-10.

Michigan increased its lead to 30-10 with 4:35 remaining in the quarter on a 12-yard touchdown run by quarterback Demetrius Brown. Linebacker J.J. Grant set up the score with a 14-yard interception return.

Morris capped the third quarter burst with 14 seconds remaining, scoring from 1 yard out to cap a 66-yard, six-play drive helped along by a personal foul penalty against the Cougars for roughing Brown.

Washington State's Victor Wood teamed with quarterback Timm Rosenbach on a 33-yard pass play and Michigan's Allen Jefferson answered with a 70-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter to close out the scoring.

Penn State (20).....41
Cincinnati 0

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Tailback Blair Thomas and John Greene, switched to fullback in wholesale lineup changes, teamed for 278 yards and three touchdowns on rain-slick grass Saturday as 20th-ranked Penn State shut out the Cincinnati Bearcats 41-0.

Thomas carried 22 times for 154 yards and Greene had 124 yards on 11 carries, the first time since 1984 that two Penn State backs ran for 100 or more yards in the same game.

Greene scored twice and Thomas once, all on short plunges.

Penn State Coach Joe Paterno, upset by his team's 24-13 loss last week to Alabama, made changes for Cincinnati involving a total of nine players on offense and defense. It resulted in the Lions' second victory against one loss.

Cincinnati slipped to 1-2 as its best offensive threat, quarterback Danny McCoin, hobbled around on a bad knee. The Bearcats were shut down with minus yardage on the ground, and only once advanced into Penn State territory.

Penn State drove 60 yards in 10 plays for a 7-0 lead at 6:08 of the first period. A 28-yard run by Greene for a first down at the Bearcats 4 set up three plunges by Thomas, who finally scored from the 1.

Clemson Field Goal Nips Dawgs

By RICK SCOPPE
AP Sports Writer

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — For David Treadwell, it was deja vu. For Clemson coach Danny Ford, it was just relief.

Treadwell kicked a 21-yard field goal with two seconds left to lift No. 8 Clemson to a 21-20 victory over 18th-ranked Georgia in college football on Saturday.

"I didn't see the clock running down. I didn't know it was inside 10 seconds," Treadwell said.

"It's an incredible feeling," the senior said. "I'll never get used to it."

It's the second straight year Treadwell has beaten Georgia with a last-second field goal. Last year, he kicked a 46-yard field goal with no time left to lift Clemson past the Bulldogs 31-28.

Ford said he was just happy to have beaten the Bulldogs — no matter what the score.

"I don't know what the final score was," Ford said. "But we found a way to win, whether it was by one point or a half point.

"We had a feeling it would go down late, late, late," he said. "I don't want many more like this. It gets pretty tough on me."

The game was typical of what is to be expected between the two Southern powers that are about 80 miles apart. Eight of the last 10 meetings have been won by a touchdown or less, and two of the last three have been decided by a field goal in the last 10 seconds.

"It was another usual Georgia-Clemson game, going right down to the end," Georgie coach Vince Dooley said. "Clemson has a solid football team on both sides of the ball. They really keep after you, all game long.

"I thought we played well enough to win and to lose right at the end is really a tough way to lose."

Treadwell's kick, which was his fourth of the game, a career high, came after Georgia quarterback James Jackson was tackled in the end zone for a safety with 5:38 left.

Following the ensuing free kick by Georgia, the Tigers drove from their 42-yard line to the Bulldog 5 and then called on Treadwell, who was swarmed by his teammates after the kick.

The victory is the first time since 1905-06 that the Tigers have beaten Georgia two straight seasons. Clemson is now 3-0, while Georgia falls to 2-1.

After battling to a 13-13 tie at the half, Clemson grabbed a three-point lead when Treadwell kicked a 29-yard field goal with 5:51 left in the third period before a crowd of 82,500 at Memorial Stadium on an overcast afternoon.

The field goal was set up when David Spry, the snapper on punts, recovered a fumble by John Thomas on a punt at the Bulldog 5. But the Tigers lost eight yards in three plays and were forced to call on Treadwell.

After Treadwell missed a 42-yard kick early in the final period, Georgia marched 74 yards in seven plays to take the lead on a 7-yard run by running back Rodney Hampton. The march was keyed by a 36-yard pass from Jackson to tight end Kirk Warner to the Clemson 22.

The Bulldogs then forced the Tigers to punt, but Clemson downed the ball inside the Georgia 1. Two plays later, defensive backs James Lott and Gene Beasley led a host of Tigers into the backfield to tackle Jackson for a safety.

It was Clemson's first safety since 1985.

Tailback Terry Allen rushed for 97 yards to lead Clemson, which amassed 337 yards total offense, 261 on the ground.

Georgia, the second-ranked rushing team in the nation, had 268 yards, including 157 on the ground against the nation's No. 1 defense.

The two bitter rivals ended the first 30 minutes tied when Georgia placekicker Steve Crumley booted a 28-yard field goal with eight seconds left in the nationally televised game.

Jackson hit split end John Thomas with a 20-yard completion to the Clemson 17. But the Bulldogs could gain only six yards in three plays and were forced to call on Crumley.

The field goal followed a 43-yard boot by Treadwell that gave the Tigers a 13-10 lead with 2:34 left. The field goal came after an 11-yard punt by Joey Hester that gave Clemson the ball at the Bulldog 34.

Georgia put together a 15-play drive to open the game but had to settle for Crumley's 21-yard field goal.

Clemson tied it on Treadwell's 30-yard field goal with 2:07 remaining in the first period following a 13-play march.

But the Bulldogs regained the lead when Nathaniel Lewis returned a punt 76 yards with 14:31 left in the half. Lewis hauled in the punt at the Georgia 24, cut left and then slipped through several Clemson players and raced down the right sideline.

It was the first punt return for a TD by a Bulldog since 1984.

Clemson took the ensuing kickoff and drove 69 yards to tie it when junior fullback Tracy Johnson burst up the middle with 12:36 left for a 38-yard TD run — the longest run of his career.

Representatives from the Orange and Citrus bowls were also on hand at the game.

Kulwicki Captures Dover Pole; Allison Is Second

DOVER, Del. (AP) — Alan Kulwicki grabbed his third pole of the season with an average speed of 145.826 mph Saturday to take the lead position for the NASCAR Winston Cup Delaware 500.

Kulwicki was grinning from ear to ear after his qualifying run.

"That was a good one," he said. "We never ran better than 18th or 20th here, but we learn from our mistakes what we've done wrong here in the past. Maybe. But it was a good run either way."

The green flag is scheduled to drop at 12:30 p.m. for the race on the oval "Monster Mile" at Dover Downs International Speedway.

Twenty cars qualified Saturday morning and the rest of the field was scheduled to qualify later Saturday afternoon. More than 40 cars are expected to qualify for the race.

Kulwicki was followed by Davey Allison, Terry Labonte, Rick Wilson, and Ken Schrader in the second through fifth positions, respectively.

Defending Delaware 500 champion Ricky Rudd qualified for the 13th position.

Kulwicki, who was the 1986 Rookie of the Year and is 18th in point standings this year, said he's raced at Dover about four times and in the past, had always had trouble at Dover.

"But again, we've learned from our mistakes and (Saturday) we made a better guess on how to set the car up," he said, adding, "That indicates a lot of progress on our team."

Kulwicki noted, however, that if he crashes at Dover, he's going to have a problem next week in Martinsville, Va., because the car he's using at Dover is the only one he has that's running.

Allison, who won this spring's Budweiser 500, is going to try to become only the third driver to complete a perfect season at Dover. The last driver to sweep the season on the high-banked superspeedway was Allison's father, Bobby Allison, in 1983. Bobby Allison qualfied for the 12th position for Sunday's race.

Eddie Drury was the only driver to crash during time trials. Drury, who was unhurt, was expected to qualify during the second round if his car was running.

The starting lineup for Sunday's NASCAR Winston Cup Delaware 500 at Dover Downs International Speedway with driver, type of car, and qualifying speed in mph.

Terps Rally By Mounties

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Falling behind 14-0 after 30 seconds wasn't enough to sink Maryland.

Inspired by teammate Mike Anderson, who played after overcoming leukemia, the Terps came from behind twice and beat West Virginia 25-20 Saturday on Bren Lowery's 13-yard touchdown run with 5:49 left.

Before the game, Coach Joe Krivak said, the Terps talked about dedication and commitment, adding that Anderson "was an inspiration for all of us."

Anderson, sidelined by leukemia just before fall practice, carried the ball twice and returned one punt. The game was dedicated to him, and he was given the game ball.

As for West Virginia's lightning start, Krivak said, that was the best time to trail.

"Be down early, then you've got a lot of time to work back into it," he said. "We certainly didn't plan it that way."

West Virginia Coach Don Nehlen said he couldn't fault the play of the Mountaineers, who had six turnovers, but added: "We just have to find a way to eliminate those mistakes."

"The offense just seemed to hurt itself again," said A.B. Brown, who rushed for 168 yards and scored one West Virginia touchdown. "We had the momentum, but we let Maryland come back."

West Virginia, stopped by four first half turnovers after its stunning start, had taken a 20-19 lead with 8:48 remaining on a 4-yard TD run by Brown, who gained 168 yards on 25 carries.

But Maryland drove 88 yards following the ensuing kickoff, gaining 65 yards on passes by Dan Henning, who went 22-for-37 for 216 yards.

The Mountaineers jumped ahead when Eugene Napoleon ran the opening kickoff back 94 yards after the Terps won the toss but elected to take its option at the start of the second half.

Then, on Maryland's first play from scrimmage, Robert Pickett intercepted a deflected pass from Henning and returned it 26 yards to make in 14-0.

Maryland pulled to within 14-10 before the period ended on Dan Plocki's 39-yard field goal and a 1-yard run by Dennis Spinelli following a pass interception by Richie Petitbon.

Virginia Holds Off Hokie Rally

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Chris Stearns and Jeff Lageman tackled Malcolm Blacken in the backfield on a two-point conversion try with 1:24 to play Saturday as Virginia preserved a 14-13 college football win over Virginia Tech.

Virginia Tech's winning conversion attempt came after quarterback Erik Chapman's 26-yard pass into the end zone bounced off the chest of his intended receiver, Karl Borden, and into the hands of tight end Steve Johnson, who hauled in the ball before it fell to the ground.

Quarterback Scott Secules threw a 29-yard scoring pass to Keith Mattioli in the first quarter and ran for a 1-yard touchdown in the second period for Virginia.

The Cavaliers improved their record to 1-2 with the victory, only their second in the last eight years against their intrastate rivals.

Virginia Tech, 0-2 on the season, is 35-29-5 in the series with Virginia which began in 1895.

The Hokies, whose other touchdown came on a 3-yard run by Earnie Jones in the second quarter, tried an onsides kick after Chapman's scoring pass to Johnson, but Virginia recovered and tried to run out the clock.

The Cavaliers turned the ball over on downs, however, and Virginia Tech got another chance from its own 28-yard line with 21 seconds remaining. Chapman hit Borden on a 22-yard pass to move the ball to midfield, but following an incomplete pass, defensive tackle Elton Toliver sacked Chapman on the final play of the game.

Yankees Top Jays; Tigers Win

NEW YORK (AP) — The way the Toronto Blue Jays started Saturday, they seemed headed toward an important victory and intent on giving Bill Gullickson his 87th lifetime loss.

Instead Gullickson settled down quickly and won his 100th career game, combining with Dave Righetti on a three-hitter as the New York Yankees beat Toronto 4-2 and knocked the Blue Jays back in the American League East.

The Blue Jays fell 1½ games behind division-leading Detroit, which beat Milwaukee 5-2.

Toronto scored once in the first inning and Fred McGriff led off the second with 20th home run. That was all the Blue Jays got, as Gullickson retired the next 17 batters. A two-out walk to McGriff in the seventh was the only baserunner Toronto had the rest of the game.

"I didn't change anything. I thought I was throwing the ball good in the first two innings," said Gullickson, who went seven innings with two strikeouts and one walk. "I knew I had 99 wins."

Gullickson raised his record to 3-2 since being traded to New York from Cincinnati. Righetti finished with perfect relief for his 29th save.

"That was the first time we've seen Gullickson," Toronto Manager Jimy Williams said. "He made our guys hit the ball and we hit some hard, but they caught them."

Rickey Henderson hit a leadoff home run in the Yankees first and singled home the tiebreaking run in the seventh. In 17 games since returning from his month-long hamstring injury, he has scored 17 times, hit four homers, driven in nine runs and stolen 10 bases.

"I'm being aggressive," Henderson said. "With the way my season is going, I'm just happy to be out there."

The Yankees went 16-17 during Henderson's absence, part of the reason they are 8½ games behind Detroit. New York has won two out of three against Toronto in this four-game series, restoring some of its hurt pride.

"We wanted to play Toronto tough here," Yankees Manager Lou Piniella said. "We felt if they were going to win this division, let them win it somewhere else."

The Yankees, held to three hits for six innings by Mike Flanagan, went ahead in the seventh when Mike Pagliarulo beat out an infield hit and took third on Bobby Meacham's one-out single. Henderson met reliever Jose Nunez with an RBI single, and Don Mattingly's groundout scored Meacham.

New York made it 2-2 in the sixth on a walk to Willie Randolph, Dave Winfield's single and an RBI forceout by Gary Ward, who barely beat the relay at first base after a bobble by shortstop Tony Fernandez.

Flanagan, 5-7, took his first loss since joining the Blue Jays Aug. 31. He had won twice for Toronto and allowed just two earned runs in 21 innings.

Henderson's home run in the first was his 15th of the season and his sixth this season opening a game. He is one behind Bobby Bonds' major-league record of 35 leadoff homers in a career.

Toronto scored in the first on a single by Lloyd Moseby, an error by Randolph at second base and George Bell's double. Gullickson struck out Jesse Barfield with the bases loaded and retired Rance Mulliniks on a soft liner.

Blue Jays Manager Jimy Williams played the game under protest for the second straight day because of field conditions at Yankee Stadium. A college football game played last Saturday night in the rain tore up large portions of center field, but the Yankees had played at home five times without incident.

DETROIT (AP) — Doyle Alexander, in the best tradition of the hired gun, has shot the Detroit Tigers to the top of the American League East.

Alexander, who calls himself a "bottom line pitcher," won his seventh consecutive game in a Detroit uniform Saturday as the Tigers beat the Milwaukee Brewers 5-2 to take a 1½-game lead over Toronto.

"We got two games on 'em in the loss column," Alexander said. "But, we can't worry about Toronto. If you do that, and let these other clubs beat up on you, it could get out of hand."

Chet Lemon and Darrell Evans homered to provide more than enough offense for Alexander, 7-0, who came to the Tigers in an Aug. 12 trade with Atlanta.

"He's a very intense person," Evans said of Alexander, a 37-year-old native of Alabama who now calls Texas home. "He has a very dry sense of humor. He's quiet.

"He enjoys things, but to get him to laugh out loud, you might have to bring in Johnny Carson."

Alexander extended his string of scoreless innings to 28 before Milwaukee scored twice in the ninth.

"I don't pay any attention to statistics like that," Alexander said. "The bottom line is: Did you win or did you lose? This isn't a high school or college game. In professional sports, winning is all that matters.

"I don't care who finishes second, as long as we finish first."

Alexander gave up seven hits, walking five and striking out six in 8 1-3 innings. He walked two batters in the ninth and was relieved by Mike Henneman, who gave up a two-run double to Glenn Braggs.

"It's hard to be better than undefeated," Milwaukee Manager Tom Trebelhorn said. "If it weren't for those two walks in the ninth inning, he probably would have had another shutout.

"Alexander is a very effective performer. We had him on the ropes early and he got off. He was cruising along after that. You better get to him when you have the opportunity.

"Alexander's on a good ballclub," Trebelhorn said. "They get him some runs and go and catch the ball for him. And, he doesn't hurt himself too often."

Chris Bosio, 10-7, gave up five runs on nine hits in 6 1-3 innings, walking two and striking out three for Milwaukee.

Lou Whitaker singled in the Detroit first, Kirk Gibson walked and Alan Trammell singled Whitaker home.

Lemon hit his 18th homer in the fourth, driving a 3-1 pitch into the second deck in left.

Evans, who the night before became the first major leaguer ever to hit 30 home runs at the age of 40, hit No. 31 with Whitaker on board in the fifth, a shot into the second deck in right-center on the first pitch.

"We've only got 16 games left, so it's easy to be intense and playing well," Evans said. "You can't look ahead. We're not just now playing well. We've been doing it for 4½ months."

Tom Brookens scored on Gibson's RBI grounder in the Detroit seventh.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Jeff Reardon believes that being in a pennant race has increased the velocity of his 90-mph fastball.

The Twins right-hander pitched two scoreless innings to gain his 27th save of the season Saturday, striking out the side in the ninth and sparking Minnesota to a 3-1 victory over Cleveland Saturday.

Reardon relieved Frank Viola, 16-9, at the start of the eighth inning and allowed only one single for the American League West-leading Twins. Viola allowed six hits and a sixth-inning unearned run before leaving.

"The ball was popping for me today," said Reardon, who was bothered by a stiff right shoulder earlier this month. "My fastball is back to where it was before my shoulder bothered me. The short rest really helps.

"Pitching in a pennant race has added a few miles on my fastball. It gets you pumped up and you try to give it your best shot each time out," said Reardon, who has made 56 appearances and compiled an 8-7 record in his first season with Minnesota after being traded by Montreal.

Greg Gagne and Gary Gaetti hit solo homers for Minnesota, but after the game, they too were talking about Reardon, not their homers.

"Reardon is the best there is in the game," Gaetti said. "I get excited every time he enters the game because I get a positive feeling that we're going to win."

"Reardon's pretty awesome," Gagne added. "He's made a big difference for our club this season. He's really strengthened our bullpen."

Gagne hit a solo home run, his eighth of the year, off Cleveland starter Tom Candiotti, 7-17, to put Minnesota ahead 1-0 in the first inning. Candiotti went the distance for Cleveland, allowing eight hits in eight innings.

Gaetti connected for another solo homer, his 30th, in the fourth inning to boost Minnesota's lead to 2-0. Gaetti is the third Twin to hit 30 home runs this season, tying an American League record held by many teams.

Kent Hrbek has 33 homers, and Tom Brunansky has 30. The Los Angeles Dodgers' 1977 team holds the major league record with four players with 30 or more homers.

Kirby Puckett knocked in Minnesota's third run in the sixth with a single, scoring Gagne from second. Gagne had doubled to lead off the inning.

Joe Carter singled in the sixth, scoring Julio Franco from second, for the Indians' only run. Franco, who had three hits, opened with a single. He was picked off first by Viola but reached second safely when Twins second baseman Steve Lombardozzi dropped the relay from first baseman Randy Bush.

Giants Up Lead As Reds Bow, 5-1

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Shortstop Jose Uribe hit a two-run homer, and the San Francisco Giants beat Cincinnati 5-1 Saturday, increasing their National League West lead to nine games over the second-place Reds.

The Giants, who also got a solo home run from Will Clark, his 32nd, won their seventh straight game for their longest winning streak since 1982.

Mike LaCoss, 13-10, limited the Reds to one run over the first 5 1-3 innings and improved his record to 4-0 against Cincinnati this season.

Kal Daniels opened the game with his 24th homer for a 1-0 Cincinnati lead. It was the eighth time this season that Daniels has led off a game with a home run.

The Giants tied the score in the third on Dave Henderson's two-out single, Candy Maldonado's walk, and Chili Davis' run-scoring single off Tom Browning, 7-13.

Robby Thompson was hit by a Browning pitch leading off the fifth. He went to third on Kevin Mitchell's hit-and-run single and scored on Maldonado's double play grounder following a walk to Henderson.

With one out in the sixth, Bob Melvin was safe on third baseman Buddy Bell's fielding error, and Uribe followed with his fifth home run of the season for a 4-1 lead.

Don Robinson pitched the final two innings for the Giants, picking up his 18th save of the season, six with San Francisco.

Giants left fielder Joel Youngblood broke his right wrist when he ran into the fence trying to make a catch in the second inning. He will be lost for the rest of the season.

Conley Rally Nips Jags, 14-12

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

HOLLYWOOD — Lady Luck sometimes picks up the habit of following teams around, and this year, it would appear one of her early choices is D.H. Conley.

The Vikings, trailing 12-0, rallied in the fourth period for two touchdowns and a 14-12 lead over Farmville Central Friday night in a non-conference cross-county game.

Farmville, which is unknown for its passing game, came roaring back behind the arm of Andre Bandy to knock at the door, only to miss an 18-yard field goal — less than an extra point — with 10 seconds left in the ball game, preserving the Viking win.

It marked the second straight win over Farmville Central for the Vikings, who had never beaten them before until last year when they recorded a 12-6 victory. It was also the second straight win this year after an opening game loss, when Lady Luck smiled on a 7-0 overtime win over North Pitt. An inadvertent whistle may have cost North Pitt a chance at victory when the Panthers appeared to have recovered their own fumble in the end zone. Conley then racked up the play short of the goal line on the replay.

Not that the Vikings didn't have something to do with making their own luck.

In the first quarter, Conley moved the ball well and held Farmville in check, but suffered from poor field position.

In the second frame, Farmville dominated play as Mack Davis hit Elvin McFee on a 24-yard scoring pass and Davis scored on a one-yard sneak to stake the Jags to a 12-0 lead.

But in the second half, Conley gained momentum and even after fumbling the ball away in the shadow of the goal posts, rallied to score on two 1-yard plunges, one each by Anthony Perry and Bronswell Patrick. But it was the toe of Hall Dunn that meant the final blow as he hit on both PAT kicks to give the Vikings the margin to win.

Farmville's first PAT kick was good, but they were called for procedure and missed on the second try. After their second TD, the Vikings tried for two, but Patrick batted down Davis' pass attempt to keep it within striking distance for Conley.

"We made no special adjustments at halftime," Conley coach Steve Craft said. "They beat us off the football in the second quarter and we talked about that at halftime and challenged them. In the second half, we came back and made it no-man's-land.

"We also did a poor job with the kicking game (two fumbles on punt receptions put the Vikings in a hole) in the first half. But in the second half, we did a much better job. We had the big return only to fumble it away on a scrimmage play," Craft said.

"We just beat 'em off the ball in the second half, and I'm pleased for our young men. They played hard and they've come a long way."

Across the field, Farmville's Dixon Sauls agreed that in the second half, the Jaguars were beaten off the ball.

He also blamed some ball handling problems the Jaguars had, losing the handle on three of four successive exchanges between the center and quarterback. "Davis hurt his thumb and that's the reason we replaced him on the final series." That almost proved the move of the night by the Jags as Bandy came off the bench cold to complete five of six passes for 71 yards, moving Farmville within field goal range.

"We just gave up two big plays on them, the long pass (a 42-yarder than set up the first score) and the reverse (a 49-yarder that helped set up the other) to let them get back in the game.

"I thought Bandy did a good job in coming in cold, and it may be a step forward for him. We had planned to use two quarterbacks this year anyway," Sauls said. Bandy was the starting quarterback last year for the Jaguars.

"Our goal line offense and defense just let us down tonight," he added.

Neither team offered a threat in the first quarter although Conley moved the ball with more ability. Farmville did not pick up a first down in the opening period.

But they started their first scoring drive at their own 25 on the final play of the first period. Steadily, they drove downfield on a 12-play move. Moore picked up 10 yards on a third-and-ten to keep it alive from his own 38, then Rasel Daniels broke away for 11 on a reverse to the Conley 28. Two plays later, Davis hit McFee on the deep pattern for the touchdown down the right sideline with 6:30 left in the half.

But the penalty negated the PAT kick and that proved fateful.

Conley gave the ball up on a fumble at its own 36 as Patrick mishandled the ball and Moses Streeter recovered.

Three plays picked up a first down at the 24, from where Daniels broke away on a quick pitch around the left side to the six, an 18-yard gain. Davis then pushed in on fourth and goal from the one.

Farmville elected to go for two on the PAT, but Patrick knocked down the pass attempt, leaving it at 12-0 with 1:35 left in the half.

Conley got its first threat midway through the third period when Chuckie Gardner gathered in a Farmville put and returned it 53 yards to the Jaguar 11 yard line. Moore ran him down and was the last man with the chance to do so.

Two plays later, however, Daryl Simpson fumbled and Devone Vines recovered for Farmville.

Derrick Credle intercepted a Davis pass at the Conley 34, however, to give the ball back to the Vikings in the final two minutes of the period. Perry burst through the middle for 22 yards to the Farmville 40 and again it was the final man, Chris Ross, who made the stop. The Vikings were penalized back to the 48, but Patrick then hit Credle at the 6, where still once more, then last man, Davis, made the stop. But the Jags were penalized on the play to the 3, and Perry picked up two to the 1 on the last play of the period.

He pushed in from the 1 on the opening play of the final quarter and Dunn's kick made it 12-7 with 11:57 left.

Conley held Farmville to four plays and took over again at its own 27. On second and 10, Gardner took the ball on the reverse and raced all the way to the Farmville 24 before Ross pulled him down, a 49-yard gain. Two 5-yard rushes and a 7-yard penalty moved it to the 7 for a first and goal.

The first three plays picked up six, and Patrick kept himself over the middle for the final yard and the score with 5:28 left. Dunn again kicked to up the lead to 14-12.

Farmville then seemed to rise to the occasion behind Bandy. He hit Alexander Daniels for 22 yards on third and seventh, then picked up Moore as a safety valve receiver for a 14-yard gain to the Conley 34. Bandy went back to Daniels for 31 more to the 3, but three plays netting nothing for the Vikes, who then elected to go for the field goal.

But Daniels' kick, from the right hash mark, was off to the left with 10 seconds left and Conley easily ran out the clock to post the win.

The win boosted the Conley record to 2-1 on the season and equaled their total for all of last year. Farmville Central saw its first loss after two victories.

Conley moves into the Coastal Conference race next week, taking on pre-season favorite and second ranked Havelock on the Rams' home field Friday.

Farmville Central plays host to South Lenoir in the Jags' Eastern Plains Conference opener.

Morning Scores Four Times As Roanoke Rips Panthers

ROBERSONVILLE — Marvin Earl Morning scored four touchdowns and rushed for 158 yards in leading Roanoke High School to a 31-12 victory over North Pitt Friday night.

The Redskins spotted the Panthers the opening score on the evening, then took advantage of errors in the North Pitt kicking game to break the game wide open in the first half, scoring four times.

The Redskins used a kickoff return and two punts that traveled only 8 yards to set up scores. They also blocked a Panther punt, but failed to covert that into a score.

The Panthers drove 62 yards in only seven plays for the opening touchdown in the game, as Michael Daniels scored from 7 yards out. The conversion try failed, however, leaving North Pitt up 6-0.

On the kickoff that followed, Bernard Huggins took in the ball at the 9-yard line and broke free to go 91 yards for the tying touchdown. But the Redskins also missed the PAT, knotting it at 6-6.

It didn't take long for the Redskins to get back on the scoreboard, however, as they turned Morning loose. The 'Skins got the ball back at the North Pitt 23 after the first of the 8-yard kicks and scored in only two plays. The first picked up 7 yards and Morning went the next 16 to run the lead to 12-6.

Twice more in the second period, Morning put touchdowns up on the scoreboard. Another poor Panther punt gave Roanoke the ball at the North Pitt 41 and Morning went in from the 4 on the eighth play of the drive. A fumble recovery at the North Pitt 37 set up the next touchdown, as Morning took the ball in from there on the first play, upping the lead to 24-6 at halftime.

Roanoke added one more score in the third quarter, that a 5-yard run by Morning. It ended a 10-play drive from the NP 47 after another punt. Jimmy Brown kicked the PAT to run the lead to 31-6.

North Pitt then closed out the scoring on a 6-yard pass from Randy House to Reggie Daniels.

Morning carried the ball 15 times for his 158 yard total.

The win boosted Roanoke's record to 2-1 on the year. The Redskins open Northeastern Conference play at Plymouth on Friday.

North Pitt falls to 1-2-1 with the loss, its second in a row. The Panthers are open this Friday, then host Ayden-Grifton in the opening Eastern Plains Conference game on Oct. 1.

Wayne Tops Knights, 3-1

The Knights got on the scoreboard first as Franklin Huggins scored, unassisted at the 10:25 mark.

But after that, Wayne took command of the game. Whitfield, assisted by Jeff Michen, tied it up later in the half, then added two more goals in the second half. The first of the second half was assisted by Robbie Bartlett, and the other was unassisted.

Both teams had 14 shots on goal, with GCA goalie Brad Dixon recording 11 saves. Wayne goalie Neil Smith had nine saves.

Chargers Gallop Past Pam Pack

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

LITTLEFIELD — With a stable full of thoroughbreds waiting to go off to the races, Ayden-Grifton coach B.T. Chappell sometimes has trouble getting the football in the hands of all his running backs.

"It's a problem, but a nice problem," Chappell said after his herd of running backs amassed 361 yards on the ground in the Chargers 34-14 victory over Washington in a non-conference matchup Friday night.

On the third play from scrimmage, Tony Reeves, who ran for 138 yards on five carries, dashed away from Pam Pack defenders en route to a 53-yard touchdown, giving Ayden-Grifton a 6-0 lead only 1:21 into the contest.

Reeves' running mate Eric Blount accounted for 208 all-purpose yards and two touchdowns. Curtis Blount came off the bench to add 58 yards on the ground, while fullback Aaron Harper rolled up 46 rushing yards and James Woodard chipped in 45 yards on only three carries.

A strong crop of runners means a lot of shared playing time, according to Chappell, who said he didn't even use one runner.

"We have been splitting the runs as much as possible," he said. "We had a fullback who didn't run tonight. (Ronnell) Peterson played tight end."

Meanwhile, Washington coach Bob Hanna said his team was overmatched by the quickness of the Charger backfield.

"The main problem was speed or the lack of it," Hanna said. "They have tremendous speed in the backfield. They were one step ahead of us on both sides of the football.

"A lot of what happened has to be attributed to team speed. We haven't experienced the type of speed of that football team."

Ayden-Grifton came out of the gate quickly — opening a 20-6 lead after the first quarter and never looking back.

After Reeves' run staked the Chargers to a 6-0 lead, the 175-pound halfback broke off a 59-yard touchdown run, lifting Ayden-Grifton to a 12-0 lead with 3:17 to go in the first period.

The Pam Pack stormed right back with a five-play, 77-yard drive capped off by a 7-yard run by Henry Rouse, who rushed for 151 yards on 26 carries. The point-after kick was wide, leaving the score at 12-6 with a minute remaining in the period.

The Pam Pack drive was aided by four Charger penalties amounting to 38 yards.

On the next series, Ayden-Grifton marched right down field with a three-play, 54-yard drive and put another touchdown on the board just before the quarter ended.

After taking over on their own 46, Eric Blount broke out for 13 yards and Reeves followed with a 25-yard scamper down to the Washington 16. On the next play, Blount circled to the outside and ran down the sidelines into the end zone.

He followed with a 3-yard run for the conversion, making it 20-6 with three ticks remaining in the first quarter.

Washington failed to move the ball on its next possession and was forced to punt. Blount fielded the kick from Franz Holscher at his own 12-yard line, cut to the sidelines and zigzagged 88 yards for another touchdown. The conversion failed, but the Chargers held onto the 26-6 lead as they headed into the locker room.

With 4:45 left in the third quarter, Ayden-Grifton padded its lead on a 2-yard touchdown run by Hooker, making it 34-6. Hooker's run capped a seven-play, 55-yard drive for the Chargers. Quarterback Darryl Moye connected with Michael Jackson for the conversion.

Chappell said the Charger drive accomplished something the team hadn't been able to do in the first 30 minutes.

"I told them at halftime that all our points had come on breakaways," he said. "We hadn't sustained anything. We wanted to sustain something in the second half."

The Pam Pack made the final score a little closer when Adam Williams ran 8 yards for a touchdown with 2:38 to go in the game. Rouse ran the ball in for the two-point conversion to make it 34-14.

Ayden-Grifton, which improved to 3-1, hosts Eastern Plains Conference foe Pamlico Friday night, while Washington, 2-2, travels to East Carteret Friday night for its first Coastal Conference game.

Tigers Roll Up 28-14 Victory

WILLIAMSTON — Williamston High School bounced back from its first loss of the year Monday night to romp over Greene Central, 28-14, Friday night.

The Tigers clawed their way out to a 28-0 lead before the Rams were able to score twice in the final five minutes of play.

Guy Spruill let the Rams know that they were in for trouble in the opening seconds as he returned the opening kickoff 91 yards for the first Tiger touchdown of the night. Spruill then booted the PAT for a 7-0 lead.

Later in the quarter, Williamston put together an 80-yard drive, including a 46-yard rip by Tyrone Bland, to score its second touchdown. Francisco Clifford did the honors, however, scoring from 3 yards out. Spruill again booted the PAT to make it 14-0 after the first period of play.

The defense then helped account for the next two Williamston scores, turning turnovers into big possessions.

A fumble gave the Tigers the ball at the 15, but they were pushed back to the 18 before Mark Williams hit William Matthews on an 18-yard pass for the score on third down. Chris Coudrit then booted the PAT.

Will Ross recovered a fumble at the 24 and returned it to the 16 to set up the final score for the Tigers. Bland got the score on a 2-yard run with Coudrit again kicking the PAT.

Greene Central then drove 80 yards to score as Chris Radford went over from the 1. Minutes later, Kenny Spruill recovered a Tiger fumble at the 32, setting up the final Ram score. That came on a 2-yard run by Anthony Dupree with Radford scoring the two-point PAT afterward.

The Rams had one other threat in the game, driving to the 26 before Matthews intercepted the ball in the end zone. Matthews also had another interception returning it for an apparent touchdown, but the ball was called back because of the clip.

Bland led the Tiger rushing attack with 100 yards on 14 carries.

Williamston is now 3-1 on the year while the Rams fall to 1-2. Williamston plays host to Northampton East in the first Northeastern Conference game of the year.

Greene Central, meanwhile, opens Eastern Plains Conference play hosting Charles B. Aycock.

Jamesville In Upset Of Bath

JAMESVILLE — Craig Dickerson passed for two touchdowns and the Jamesville defense sparkled in a 13-6 upset Tobacco Belt Conference football victory over Bath Friday night.

Bath, one of the pre-season favorites in the league, suffered its first loss of the year in the game, while Jamesville won its first game of the season.

Bath scored first, in the opening period on a 1-yard run by Bill Ambrose. The Pirates had set up that score with a 96-yard pass one play before.

Jamesville bounced back in the second period to tie the game at 6-6. Dickerson climaxed a 72-yard drive with a 10-yard throw to Kelby Moore.

It remained tied until the final quarter when Bath faced a fourth and inches situation at their own 38 with about 2:30 left in the contest. Jamesville halted Bath's run for the first down, however, taking control there.

Then, with the Bullets facing a fourth down of their own, Dickerson hit Ernie Gardner for 15 yards and the touchdown and Moore added the PAT to give the Jamesville to lead.

Bath did not threaten at any other time in the game while Jamesville got off a couple of threats, including one thrust to the 11 yard line.

"The key to it was holding Bath to just one first down and to only 17 yard rushing in the second half," Bullet coach Jerry Godley said.

The win boosts the Bullets to 1-0 in the league and 1-2 overall. They travel to Creswell on Friday for their next game.

Backs Turn In Top Performances

By DAVID DROSCHAK
Associated Press Writer

The North Carolina high school football season is quickly becoming the year of the running back.

On Friday night, at least four runners topped the 200-yard mark in leading their teams to important victories in the fourth week of the season.

Garner's Anthony Barbour took top billing, though, in his record-setting performance against Raleigh Millbrook. Barbour rushed for 267 yards and four touchdowns as the Trojans, now 4-0, held off Millbrook 36-28. The senior tailback had 22 carries and scored on runs of 76, 12, 32 and 39 yards.

Barbour now has 3,442 yards rushing in three seasons at Garner. That breaks the Cap Nine Conference career rushing record of 3,408, set by Smithfield-Selma's Nick McNeil from 1983-85. In four games this season, Barbour has 761 yards.

Whiteville, the top-ranked 2-A team in the state, got 237 yards and three touchdowns from Virgil Cokely in its 42-0 victory over Tabor City. Cokely scored on runs of 88, 82 and 16 yards.

In Greensboro, Elliott Armstrong of 3-A Asheboro rushed for 210 yards on 31 carries and scored on runs of 20, 26 and 3 yards to lead the Blue Comets to a 24-21 victory over Western Guilford. Armstrong also had a 10-yard scoring run called back because of a penalty.

Wilson Hunt got 224 yards on 35 carries from Herbie Barnes in its 29-26 victory over SouthWest Edgecombe. Barnes scored on runs of 3, 57 and 13 yards.

All four of the state's top-ranked teams came away with impressive victories Friday night. Besides Whiteville, 4-A Greensboro Page walloped previously unbeaten Greensboro Grimsley for the 17th straight time 56-7, while 3-A Burlington Cummings downed High Point Central 43-7 and 1-A Murphy took care of Rabun, Ga., 49-17. Murphy also ran the state's longest winning streak to 19 consecutive games.

Senior fullback Tony Patterson and junior reserve fullback Manuel Tay both scored a pair of touchdowns for Page, now 3-0. The Pirates rolled up a school-record 545 yards in total offense.

Second-ranked Fayetteville 71st won its 11 straight game with a 27-7 victory over Hoke County. Tailback Robert Mays rushed for 154 yards on 18 carries in the victory, while the 71st defense recorded five quarterback sacks.

Senior running back Junior Hall rushed for 129 yards and scored four TDs, while quarterback Frank Adams hit his first three passing attempts for scores to lead No. 3 Gastonia Ashbrook to a 54-7 pounding of North Gaston. Adams' scoring passes were for 57, 24 and 20 yards.

Waynesville Tuscola ran its mark to 4-0 with a 34-0 victory over Skyland Roberson.

Four of the Top 10 4-A teams were idle Friday night.

In the 3-A ranks, East Wake and Central Cabarrus both squeezed by with close victories to up their marks to 4-0. East Wake defeated Eastern Alamance 15-11, while Central Cabarrus downed South Iredell 6-2. Unranked Wilkes Central also ran its record to 4-0.

Shelby, the defending 3-A champ, dumped Hickory 45-0.

Ahoskie, now 4-0, is right behind Whiteville in 2-A. The Cougars got 181 yards and three TDs from Vince Outlaw to down Bertie 27-0.

Thomasville, Wallace-Rose Hill and Edenton Holmes are also 4-0. Wallace-Rose Hill got 140 yards on 25 carries from Tony McKenzie in its 14-6 victory over South Robeson, while Thomasville thumped East Davidson 41-7 and Holmes trounced Currituck 48-6.

Lexington, two-time defending 2-A champs, bounced back after last week's loss with a 35-6 victory over Southwest Guilford.

North Rowan knocked off its second straight Top 10 team. After last week's overtime victory against Lexington, the Cavaliers dumped No. 10 Randleman 9-0 Friday night.

Mel Nicely caught two touchdown passes and ran for another score in Murphy's big 1-A romp. Quarterback Jeff Martin threw for 209 yards and three touchdowns. Carl Pickens caught five balls for 125 yards.

Jamesville upset previously unbeaten Bath 13-6 when Craig Dickerson hit Ernie Gardner with a 16-yard scoring pass on fourth down with 2:05 remaining. It was Dickerson's sixth TD pass in three games.

Northampton West was upset by Southeast Halifax 12-6, while Bladenboro was upended by East Bladen 27-13.

East Montgomery, 3-1, used a balanced attack to beat 2-A Jordan-Matthews 19-6. Alex Ingram ran for 163 yards on 14 carries, while Danny Greene added 146 on 10 carries. Quarterback Ricky Watts also threw two scoring passes.

Kinston, which hasn't scored in four games dating back to last season, was shut out for the third time this season and ran the state's longest losing string to 22 games. Jacksonville turned the trick this time 14-0.

Apex ran its losing streak to 17 games with a 22-6 loss to Lee County.

Crazy Idea Is Working At Track

CONCORD (AP) — Catfish and crystal. It sounded like a crazy idea and Charlotte Motor Speedway President H.A. "Humpy" Wheeler said that's why it worked.

Wheeler expected some cultural clashes when the $6,500-per-membership Speedway Club opened high above the stock car track frequented by the likes of Richard Petty and Dale Earnhardt.

Wheeler said it really struck home when he suggested to the club's French-born manager, Alain Lacouture, that blackened catfish be added to the menu before last month's opening.

"He was shocked," Wheeler said. "He had never eaten catfish. So I brought a couple of real fresh ones in. Now they're on the menu."

Such is life at the NASCAR circuit's only private club — complete with a French restaurant with Italian silverware and china from Luxembourg. As Wheeler's luncheon guests were being served broiled salmon, veteran driver Darrell Waltrip roared by at 175 miles an hour on the 1.5-mile track just 120 feet below.

Track founder and Chairman Bruton Smith suggested putting in a private club as a way to add more VIP seating. Smith had already built condos at the race track, prompting jokes by comedian David Letterman.

"But they worked, and this will, too," Wheeler said.

"You can't give people today in professional sports enough class," he said. "It's a reflection of the economy. People are buying $150,000 boats these days like they're going out of style."

The speedway commissioned interior designer Carleton Varney of New York to design the club, which features mahogany paneling, plush red carpeting, brass railings, marble and a large crystal chandelier.

Beginning in May, a total of 1,275 memberships were offered. Only about 200 remain.

"Our intention is to make this the best restaurant in America," Wheeler said. "When we started, we thought we'd keep it open on weekends when there were races. But we kept looking at it and it kept getting bigger and bigger.

"We decided for a couple of million more dollars we could have it all year round," he said. "I think it says a lot for the sport of stock car racing."

The Speedway Club occupies two floors or the $20 million Smith Tower, which from a distance resembles a scaled-down version of the United Nations Building. The club is open daily, expect Mondays.

Wheeler said the Speedway Club looks at race weeks as a twice-yearly bonus rather than as its financial base. Like other private clubs, it can be used for business lunches, wedding receptions and parties.

So far, the club has attracted a good lunch crowd. Business is picking up at night, especially on weekends when the nightclub books acts such as Neil Sedaka, Roger Williams and Louise Mandrell.

Wheeler said the Speedway Club attracts people from all walks of life with a common passion — stock car racing.

"It's a real mixing pot," he said.

Indians Blast Warriors, 34-22

LEGGETT — William Haywood rushed for 142 yards and scored three touchdowns in leading Chocowinity to a come-from-behind 34-22 Tobacco Belt Conference football win over North Edgecombe Friday night.

The Indians, trailing 15-0 and 22-8 rallied to tie the game at halftime, then added two more touchdowns in the second half to pull out the victory and up their TBC record to 2-0 on the year.

North Edgecombe came out of the blocks throwing the ball, scoring all three times on passes. The Warriors hit on 16 of 27 attempts for 314 yards, much of that coming in the opening quarter.

Orlando Whitaker hit all three scoring passes, going 10 yards to Mike Williams for the first, 68 yards to Dereke Belcher for the second, and back to Belcher for the last on a 73-yard bomb. Chris Bryant ran over the PAT after the second score and Whitaker passed to Rodney Conyers after the third.

"We moved Curtis Myers to middle linebacker after the first quarter to help stop their passing attack, and the defense responded," Chocowinity coach DeWayne Kellum said. "Our whole defensive line did a great job, Keith Mills, Craig Griffin, Lee Van Crawford and Antonio McCullough. Tylon Warren also came through with two or three sacks on their quarterback."

Chocowinity got on the scoreboard after the second Warrior score with one of its own. Haywood did the honors on a 51-yard ramble. Alton Rogers added the PAT to cut the lead to 15-8 at the time.

Then, trailing 22-8 in the second period, Chocowinity took control. Haywood went over from 3 yards out to cut the margin to 22-16 after Myers ran over the PAT. And before the half ended, Shawn Crawford scored on a 15 yard pass from Dale Cole to draw the two teams even at 22-22.

In the third period, Julius Smith broke the Warriors' back with a 78-yard punt return to gave the Indians a 28-22 lead. Haywood followed in the final period with a 3-yard scoring run that wrapped it up.

Haywood amassed his 142 yards on 18 carries while Myers shared the spotlight with 13 carries for 80 yards. "Our offensive line did a great job of opening the holes when we needed them, especially in the fourth quarter when we were hanging onto the ball," Kellum said.

The victory boosted the Indians to 3-1 overall and to 2-0 in TBC play. The Tribe will play host to Belhaven on Friday.

Pirates Welcome Candelaria Back

By The Associated Press

The New York Mets acquired John Candelaria this week to help win another pennant. For one game anyway, he helped St. Louis hold its first-place margin.

Darryl Strawberry's three-run homer in the first inning staked Candelaria to an early lead against Pittsburgh. But in 1 1-3 innings against his former club, the lefthander allowed five runs and eight hits and the Pirates went on to beat the Mets 10-9 Friday night.

The Mets remained 1½ games behind the East Division-leading Cardinals, who lost 8-1 to Chicago.

"It's tough to lose a game like this," Strawberry said. "It's like giving a game away. Every time we'd take the lead, they'd come back. It doesn't feel good to have a team come back and beat you like that, but we still feel we're the best team."

Mike Diaz's fourth hit of the game, a two-run double in the seventh inning, broke an 8-8 tie.

"We've been talking all season that we want to be competitive, now we have a chance to do it when the other teams are playing their best," Diaz said. "We can make or break some seasons and prove to ourselves we can be competitive with anybody when the season starts next year."

The Mets acquired Candelaria from California for two minor leaguers after Ron Darling was sidelined with a thumb injury.

"I thought Candy threw well but they hit the ball well," Mets Manager Davey Johnson said: "They hit the other pitchers I put in there, too. They got nine hits off the other guys."

The loss spoiled Candelaria's return to Three Rivers Stadium, where he pitched for the Pirates from 1975 until he was traded to the Angels in 1985.

Elsewhere in the NL it was, Montreal 6, Philadelphia 3; San Diego 2, Houston 1, and Los Angeles 7, Atlanta 4. San Francisco and Cincinnati were not scheduled.

With the score tied 8-8, the Pirates — who had trailed 3-0 and 8-5 — got a leadoff single in the seventh from Felix Fermin and Al Pedrique reached when first baseman Keith Hernandez booted his sacrifice bunt for an error.

Roger McDowell, the fifth Mets' pitcher, replaced Randy Myers, 2-6, and walked Jose Lind to load the bases. Diaz followed with a line-drive shot into right-center field that scored Fermin and Pedrique.

John Smiley, 4-4, pitched the eighth inning for the victory as the Pirates won for the 10th time in their last 12 games. Jim Gott pitched the ninth for his 12th save. Gott has not allowed a run in his last 16 appearances, spanning 20 innings.

The game ended when Gott struck out Strawberry and Howard Johnson was thrown out attempting to steal second.

Strawberry's homer was his 37th, tying Dave Kingman for most home runs in a season by a Met.

Cubs 8, Cardinals 1

Rick Sutcliffe pitched a four-hitter and Chicago took advantage of sloppy defense to beat the Cardinals at St. Louis.

Sutcliffe, 17-8, struck out nine and walked one, and also contributed a sacrifice fly. At one point, the righthander retired 16 of 17 batters. The Cardinals ended a streak of 20 scoreless innings on Tony Pena's RBI groundout in the eighth.

"I've got mixed sentiments about it. I've got a lot of friends on the Cardinals. They're one of my favorite teams," Sutcliffe said.

Chicago capitalized on right fielder David Green's three-base error to take a 1-0 lead in the fourth against Danny Cox, 9-8.

Expos 6, Phillies 3

Bryn Smith pitched six shutout innings and Andres Galarraga drove in two runs as Montreal defeated Philadelphia at Olympic Stadium to move within two games of St. Louis.

Smith, 10-7, allowed eight hits, struck out eight and walked none. Andy McGaffigan pitched 2 1-3 innings allowing three hits and two runs, and Tim Burke got the final two outs.

Tim Raines and Mitch Webster opened the Expos' first with singles off Bruce Ruffin, 10-14, and Tim Wallach scored Raines with a single. It was Wallach's 113th RBI of the season, tying the club record set by Andre Dawson in 1983.

Webster took third on Wallach's hit and scored on Galarraga's fielder's choice. Galarraga scored when Mike Fitzgerald walked with the bases loaded for a 3-0 lead.

Padres 2, Astros 1

Benito Santiago extended his hitting streak to 22 games and drove in the game-winning run as San Diego defeated Houston at the Astrodome.

Trailing 1-0, Tony Gwynn led off the Padres' eighth inning with a single and moved to second on Shane Mack's sacrifice bunt.

Dave Smith, 2-1, relieved starter Jim Deshaies and pinch-hitter John Kruk singled to score Gwynn. Kruk stole second, moved to third on third baseman Ken Caminiti's throwing error, and scored on Santiago's ground ball.

Dodgers 7, Braves 4

John Shelby keyed a six-run sixth inning with a three-run homer as Los Angeles defeated visiting Atlanta.

Orel Hershiser, 16-13, struck out eight, walked none en route to his ninth complete game.

Dale Murphy hit his 41st homer for the Braves.

Red Wolves Placed In Dare

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

In a historic first for wildlife management, a pair of red wolves are roaming the hardwood bottoms of eastern North Carolina.

"It's the first time in history of wildlife management that we've taken a species that is extinct in the wild and introduced it back into the wild," said John Taylor, manager of the Alligator River National Wildlife Refuge where two wolves were released Sept. 14 and six more are ready to go.

The plan is to establish three populations of the wolves in their historic range, from the Carolinas to eastern Texas. Sites for the other two introductions haven't been picked.

The red wolf has been extinct in the wild since the last animals were captured along the Texas-Louisiana border in the late 1970s. A captive breeding program built the population to 87 animals.

Red wolves inhabit canebreaks and marshy hardwood bottomlands along the Southeast's rivers. Hunting and destruction of the habitat drove them to extinction.

It left a gap in the ecosystem that is being filled by a more pesky predator — the coyote.

The demise of the red wolf left parts of the ecosystem "without a top predator in the food chain," Taylor said. "If the red wolf isn't there, something else has to take the place of that top predator or the prey populations will increase to levels where they cause habitat damage."

The red wolf, along with the mountain lion or puma, bobcat and black bear are "those top carnivores that help hold the whole food chain in check," he said.

With the red wolf gone from the river bottoms, it left plenty of prey for anything that wandered in, and wild dogs, coyotes and coydogs are filling the gap in many places.

"I think the scientific data confirms that as the red wolf was eliminated from those niches of its historic habitat in the Southeast and Texas, that the coyote filled those in." It was helped by "the land-clearing practices of man that the coyote was more readily adapted to," Taylor said in a telephone interview. "Man changed the habitat, took the red wolf out and the coyote filed in through many areas."

He said studies showed there are no coyotes or wild dogs on the 127,000-acre refuge and "we are hoping that if we can establish a red wolf population throughout the refuge that, in itself, will keep the coyote out of the peninsula the refuge is on."

Although red wolves may occasionally pull down deer, they use the same prey as coyotes — rabbits, rodents, squirrels, opossums and carrion.

Alligator River was chosen as the first release site for the wolves because it is a peninsula where the wolves can be isolated and because there are plenty of those small animals.

Only about 1,500 people live in the area, which also includes 47,000 acres of military land the wolves can wander.

The red wolf is smaller than its northern cousin, the grey wolf. The male, "wolf 140," weighs 72 pounds. The female "wolf 231," weighs 57 pounds.

The wolves were kept in large pens and fed road kill meat or live animals tossed into the pen from behind wood blinds so the wolves couldn't see their human keepers.

The pen was opened after breakfast Sept. 14 and the wolves were free. They stayed close by the first days, the telemetry equipment in their collars giving their location within inches, but showed increased activity by the second night as they got hungry and had to look for a meal.

Each will eat about two rabbits or the equivalent a day, assuming their practice killing is augmented by a growing skill at hunting.

"Some of the wolves may not be able to survive out there. They may not be able to adapt back into the wild," Taylor said. "We're willing to take that chance for the survival of the species, to get the species back into the wild again."

Quail Decline Studied

Scientists from North Carolina State University are focusing on the Fort Bragg Military Reservation in an effort to explain a decline in bobwhite quail populations throughout the Southeast.

Scientists say diligent record-keeping by the Army has given them an unusually well documented look at the Fort Bragg quail population. Dr. Phillip Doerr, a North Carolina Agricultural Research Service zoologist at NCSU, is directing the research.

According to Doerr, hunters during the early- and mid-1970s annually harvested from 6,000 to 9,000 Fort Bragg quail. Since then, the numbers have steadily declined. Hunters now take only 500 to 600 quail off the military reservation each year.

Doerr said quail populations appear to be declining throughout the Southeast, although decreases are not nearly so well documented in other areas, nor do they appear to be of the same magnitude as at Fort Bragg.

Fort Bragg, he explained, is unusual and a particularly good study area because of the Army's record-keeping. Hunting on the military reservation is monitored closely, and the Army counts the number of birds taken off the base. In most other areas, only estimates are available of the number of birds harvested by hunters.

Doerr and other scientists are looking into possible causes for the quail decline.

"There are a ton of ideas that have been proposed," he said. Among the possibilities are disease, agricultural and other chemicals, loss of and changes in habitat, and acid rain.

Some hunters complain that protection of predators such as hawks, owls and foxes has increased the number of these animals to the point the predators are decimating the quail populations.

NCSU researchers are monitoring Fort Bragg quail — capturing the birds and strapping on them tiny harnesses with radio transmitters — in an effort to learn more about the birds.

The researchers have found that quail die in the greatest numbers during the winter, from December through February.

"Only 19 percent survive the winter," Doerr said. "Only one bird in five that starts that period is going to be alive at the end."

The researchers have also learned that four percent or less of the Fort Bragg quail population survives longer than a year. Quail are prolific — studies indicate populations can sustain losses as high as 30 to 40 percent annually — but the birds cannot sustain the kind of mortality seen at Fort Bragg, Doerr said.

"They simply cannot recoup that kind of loss," he said. The population will continue to decline as long as the birds experience such heavy mortality.

Researchers have learned that during the summer, Fort Bragg quail are preyed upon primarily by mammals such as foxes, bobcats and domestic cats. During the winter, however, the predation pattern changes. Human hunters and avian predators such as hawks and owls become the quail's most dangerous enemies, Doerr said.

"We have a small population hit by two forces (during the winter)," he said.

Doerr theorized that heavy human hunting may increase quail mortality from avian predators. He explained that when hunters flush a covey of quail, the birds attempt to regroup by calling to one another. These calls may serve to alert hawks and other avian predators of their location.

Researchers plan to test this theory this winter by comparing the mortality of quail in areas closed to hunting with that in areas where the birds are hunted. But even if the theory holds true, it does not explain why the once abundant Fort Bragg quail population declined so dramatically in the first place.

Scientists hope the quail themselves, at least those whose activities researchers are able to track electronically, will eventually provide the answer to this central question.

Hyde Waterfowlers to Meet

The Hyde County Waterfowl Association, primarily concerned with the Canada goose population in eastern North Carolina, will meet Friday at the Soundside Lounge in Englehard for its 1988 membership kick-off.

The program will begin at 6 p.m. with a social hour, followed by a pig picking at 7 p.m., election of officers, auction and update from Tom Monchein, project coordinator for the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission.

The association, formed in 1985, has accomplished many successful projects since its inception. With support from the Legislature, the association recently began a Hyde County Waterfowl Enhancement Program. As part of the program, the group rented 180 acres of land for goose nesting and brood habitat.

Six acres in Hyde County were pastured, fenced and supplied with ample water for nesting and breeding geese. Seven hundred Canadas were provided by the N.C. Wildlife Reserve Commission to start local broods for 1988. The association hopes these broods will remain in the area and increase the goose population there.

Another waterfowl project sponsored by the association was a "Wood Duck Day" in August 1986. At that time, 140 wood duck boxes were constructed and placed at Mattamuskeet National Wildlife Refuge. The association reported that 60 percent of these boxes helped raise broods this year.

Plans are under way for association members to construct more wood duck boxes, as well as to provide more brood and nesting areas for geese.

The association invites interested sportsmen to the banquet, which costs $25 per person. The price includes $15 membership.

To join the association or attend the banquet, send a check to Hyde County Waterfowl Association, c/o Dick Tunnel, P.O. Box 263, Swan Quarter, N.C. 27885.

Spot Festival Scheduled

By The Associated Press

The 24th annual North Carolina Spot Festival will be held in Hampstead Sept. 25-27, featuring the "Junior Miss N.C. Spot Festival" pageant Friday and a golf tournament, arts and crafts show, bake sale and auction Saturday.

Coincidentally, the spots are starting to arrive on the North Carolina shores in several areas.

"They're running, nothing like they are supposed to, but they are getting a few," said Speed Walton of the Long Beach Pier in Southport.

Here is a look at how selected areas along the coast fared last week.

Swansboro

John Dudley of Dudley's Marina said plenty of fish, including spots, were biting, as long as the fishermen could get out.

"It's doing real good," Dudley said. "The bottom fishing is good and bad. The sailfish have been doing really good. There has been at least a dozen caught in the last week.

"It looks real good but you get run in a lot by the weather. That's the only problem I see right now."

Hatteras

At the Pelican's Roost, Dave Hissey reported a busy week.

"They've caught a lot of pompano in the surf, some fresh shrimp and sand fleas," he said. "They are catching some small flounder and sea mullet, too.

"Offshore they had some real good catches of small dolphin and a few wahoo. The inshore trollers are doing real good on small blues and Spanish mackerel."

Hissey reported catches of puppy drum at Cape Point in Buxton.

Southport

Walton is looking for the water to cool down.

"We need two or three cool days to make this water cool down. We're still getting up to 90 degrees here. It cools down to about 75 at night, but that's not enough to cool the water down," he said.

Despite the temperatures, Walton reported a busy week.

"They've been doing fairly good, catching flounder, trout, whitings and the spots," he said. "We're getting some pompano now and then, pretty good sizes, too."

Topsail Island

Hollis Whitley of the Jolly Roger Pier said Spanish mackerel were still in the area.

"They've been catching some blues in the morning and afternoon and still catching some Spanish," he said. "They've also been catching a few flounder, some spots and croakers and some king mackerel."

Carolina Beach

Laura Phelps reported a little of everything at the Carolina Beach Fishing Pier Northern Extension.

"They've caught a few kings, some flounder, some nice-sized drum, some big blues and spots at night and some nice sheepshead," Phelps said.

Wrightsville Beach

At the Crystal Pier, Sue Fokakis reported an unlucky day for king mackerel fishermen recently.

"They had several king strikes, but lost all of them," she said.

Be Alone And Join The Crowd

By SUSAN WORTMAN
Jefferson City News Tribune

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Going down to the river has always meant going it alone. It's just that now so many people are going it alone, it's getting crowded. That's where the Missouri State Water patrol officers come in.

Officer Vic England, along with four other Water Patrol officers, spends many of his working hours on Missouri rivers. Three of the five work fulltime on state rivers.

"There are one or two attitudes down here," England said. "One is that they accept us 100 percent and are glad to see us. Either that or they have been boating on the river for 20 years and you're not going to tell them what to do. They think the river is no-man's land. There are no rules.

"But each year it's getting better."

The Water Patrol began patrolling Missouri waters in 1961. Capt. Dennis Haupt said Missouri statutes give the patrol specific jurisdiction on the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Osage and the Grand rivers. They also may patrol any river bordered by state or federal land.

The Osage River, for those living along it, is much like a skinny lake. They fish in it, swim in it, boat in it and ski in it.

"The locals use this like a Lake of the Ozarks," England said. "This is their body of water. You'll see jet

Bucs Take On Bears In Top Game

CHICAGO (AP) — The Tampa Bay Buccaneers, sporting a new image under an old quarterback, will try to keep their momentum Sunday when they take on the Chicago Bears in what could be the final weekend before NFL players strike.

The league's players are expected to walk out Tuesday if they are unable to settle their differences with management.

The Buccaneers, 2-14 last season and 4-28 in two years under Leeman Bennett, opened the season last Sunday under new Coach Ray Perkins, with a 48-10 victory over the Atlanta Falcons. And they did it under the guidance of veteran quarterback Steve DeBerg. Heisman Trophy winner Vinny Testaverde did not play.

DeBerg completed 24 of 34 passes for 333 yards and five touchdowns in what Perkins called one of the best games played by any quarterback he has been associated with. Perkins has been associated with the likes of Joe Namath, Ken Stabler, Johnny Unitas, Dan Fouts and Phil Simms.

DeBerg and the Buccaneers set several team records with Sunday's performance, and the defense held the Falcons to 197 yards and did not allow a touchdown until the closing minutes.

But none of this seems to bother the Bears, not after they vanquished the defending Super Bowl champion New York Giants 34-19 last Monday in what was termed "global warfare."

Bears' Coach Mike Ditka, not wanting his team to take the Buccaneers lightly, said, "If that was global then this is the battle for the galaxy."

In other games Sunday, Denver plays Green Bay at Milwaukee, and it will be Houston at Buffalo, Miami at Indianapolis, New Orleans at Philadelphia, Pittsburgh at Cleveland, San Francisco at Cincinnati, Washington at Atlanta, Dallas at the New York Giants, Detroit at the Los Angeles Raiders, Kansas City at Seattle, Minnesota at the Los Angeles Rams and St. Louis at San Diego.

On Monday night, in what could be the final game before the strike, New England visits the New York Jets.

Should the stirke begin Tuesday, there will be no games the following Sunday. But the owners say they intend to resume the schedule Oct. 4 with non-union players they have signed and any members of the NFL Players Association who are willing to cross picket lines.

Ditka did not think there would be any letdown following the victory over the Giants.

"My gosh, they've got the No. 1 quarterback, the No. 1 offense and the No. 1 defense," he said. "We'll have our work cut out against them."

Actually, the Buccaneers rank second in the league in offense and defense and DeBerg was named the NFC Player of the Week on offense.

DeBerg usually plays well against the Bears. In three starts against them the last two seasons, DeBerg has completed 60 of 103 passes for 794 yards and six touchdowns for an 81.7 quarterback rating. The combined rating of all the quarterbacks against the Bears was 50.4.

But DeBerg also recalls that in a game in 1984 the Bears sacked him six times.

"I've never been so beat up in my life," he said.

DeBerg said he watched Monday night's game in which the Bears had eight sacks against the Giants.

"I put myself in Phil Simms' shoes and it was scaring the hell out of me," said DeBerg, who saw the Bears repeatedly hammer the Giants quarterback.

At the same time, the Bear offensive line was doing an excellent job of protecting quarterback Mike Tomczak, who won the starting job after it was learned that Jim McMahon had not sufficiently recovered from shoulder surgery to play for at least six weeks into the season and maybe longer.

Tomczak completed 20 of 34 passes for 292 yards and two touchdowns against the Giants. He also sneaked for a touchdown. But he was disappointed because he threw two interceptions, one of which Terry Kinard returned 70 yards for a touchdown.

"I can play better," Tomczak said. "I can complete more passes and I have to cut down on the stupid interceptions."

Smid Captures Upset Victory

GENEVA (AP) — Tomas Smid of Czechoslovkia upset fourth-seeded Guillermo Perez-Roldan of Argentina 6-2, 7-6 and reached the semifinals of the $231,000 Geneva Open men's tennis tournament.

The unseeded Smid put constant pressure on the 17-year-old, 1985 French Open junior champion's backhand with aggressive approach shots.

skis out here and wet bikes. And we're seeing bigger boats. I saw a 20-foot boat going in this afternoon."

Patrolmen see it the same way. All the rules that apply on the lake apply on rivers as well, and they patrol rivers just as they would a lake. They check for reistration numbers, safety violations and drunken boat operations.

"The Osage and Gasconade are very busy on the weekends," England said. It was 2:30 p.m. Friday and already seven boat trailers sat empty in the launching ramp parking lot. "That's along with the locals who are already out there."

A lake is fairly constant. The river has a current; it changes. The depth fluctuates daily, almost hourly. Lakes do, too, but not nearly as quickly as the river can.

Use of the river itself has changed. Barges used to float up and down the water — steam barges, not the modern-day diesel vessels. They weren't as large as those today, but they were capable of moving railroad ties and crops from Warsaw up to the Missouri.

Even though the river is busier than it used to be, it still is quiet compared to lakes. In most spots, it is still uncomplicated and folksy. Old cars that were dumped years ago onto the bank to stop errosion are still there. Fields of corn and soybeans crop up on both sides. The homes are nice but mostly they are primary homes, not the summer homes like are found around the lake.

As he floated near the old lock and dam, England stopped Brad Howard to inspect his boat. Water patrolmen have the authority to stop boats simply for a safety inspection. They can also pull over a boater for a visible violation or for an authorized check point.

Howard is good friends with the Osage River from way back. Not only does he boat there, he lives along the river during the summer.

"I spend all the time I can along here," he said. "This is the place to be."

A new inspection sticker was put on over the old one on the boat's bow and the Water Patrol boat headed back north.

Just a little way down the river, England watched a passenger in a passing boat toss a beer bottle into the water. The red light on the front of the boat flipped on, the throttle rolled open as he turned his boat after theirs. He chased the two men down to where they could pull their boat up on shore.

A citation was written and England gave the Water Patrol boat a shove and was back on the river.

"The worst part is that you are relatively by yourself out here," England said. "On the lake, there are marinas. But once you're out here, you're out here. There's no gas — you have to bring your own — and no back-up if something goes wrong. The same type of people on the highway are on the water. You never know."

Terrell Shines In Tiger Stadium

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

You can't blame Walt Terrell for wanting to pitch in Tiger Stadium. Just for the record, he's 31-7 lifetime there.

Terrell continued his mastery at his home park Friday night, helping Detroit to a 7-6 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

"I pitched the same as always," Terrell said after pitching five-hit, one-run ball over eight innings. "We had good defense, good hitting. I just throw it in there and our guys catch it."

With the victory, Terrell improved his record at home to 12-2 this year as he helped the Tigers maintain a half-game lead over Toronto in the American League East.

The Blue Jays kept pace with the Tigers by beating the New York Yankees 6-3. In other AL action, it was Seattle 1, Chicago 0; Minnesota 9, Cleveland 4; Texas 5, California 1 and Oakland 4, Kansas City 0. Baltimore beat Boston 9-4 in the opener of a doubleheader before the Red Sox came back to take the nightcap 10-7.

Terrell, 15-10, matching career highs in victories achieved in 1985 and 1986, walked two and struck out five in eight innings.

"It won't mean a thing if we don't win (the AL East)," Terrell said. "It'll be sort of like a no-decision. You were in it, but you didn't do it."

The Brewers made things close at the end by scoring a run in the eighth off Terrell and five in the ninth off two relievers, but Eric King finally got the last two outs for his ninth save.

"We played well, we battled back," Milwaukee Manager Tom Trebelhorn said. "We just came up short. We played hard tonight."

Detroit's Darrell Evans hit an historic home run in the game. The homer, with Alan Trammell on base in the fifth, made Evans the first player in major league history to hit 30 homers at the age of 40. Ted Williams, in 1960, hit 29 home runs when he was 42.

Bill Wegman, 10-11, who was 3-0 against Detroit this season going into the game, gave up seven runs on seven hits in 4 1-3 innings.

Blue Jays 6, Yankees 3

Willie Upshaw hit a two-run homer and Jesse Barfield also drove in two runs as Toronto beat New York.

Upshaw's 14th home run of the season broke a 2-2 tie in the fourth inning. He connected off Neil Allen, 0-8, who was making his first start for the Yankees since signing as a free agent Sept. 4. Allen has lost eight straight decisions since his last victory, on July 20, 1986, with the Chicago White Sox.

Jim Clancy, 14-10, gave up three runs in five innings for the victory. Jeff Musselman took over after a leadoff walk in the sixth and gave way to David Wells in the eighth. Wells pitched 1 2-3 innings for his first major league save.

Mariners 1, White Sox 0

Mark Langston, aided by Scott Bradley's sixth-inning RBI single, won his career-high 18th game and took over the major league strikeout lead to pace Seattle over Chicago.

Langston, 18-11, winner of seven of his last nine games, outdueled Floyd Bannister, 13-11, with a six-hitter in earning his fifth career shutout and third this year.

Pitching his 14th complete game, Langston walked four and struck out six. Langston took over the strikeout lead from Houston's Nolan Ryan, 237-235.

Bannister pitched his career-high 10th complete game while allowing nine hits. The loss ended his five-game winning streak and a five-game streak for the White Sox as well.

Twins 9, Indians 4

Randy Bush drove in five runs with a homer, single and sacrifice fly, leading Minnesota over Cleveland.

The AL West-leading Twins snapped a three-game losing streak by improving their major-league-leading home record to 50-23.

Kirby Puckett and Tom Brunansky also homered in support of Bert Blyleven, 14-11, who pitched a five-hitter over eight innings.

Blyleven, who struck out nine and walked three, tied Juan Marichal for 40th on the all-time list with career victory No. 243. He also allowed Brook Jacoby's two-run homer and Cory Snyder's solo shot and has given up a major-league leading 42 homers, putting him within reach of the big-league record of 50 which he set last year.

Rangers 5, Angels 1

Jose Guzman pitched a four-hitter for his sixth straight victory as Texas beat California.

Guzman, 14-11, went the distance for the sixth time this season in beating the Angels for the second time in a week. Guzman walked five and struck out five, allowing the Angels' only run on Wally Joyner's 30th homer.

Guzman's 14 victories are the most by a Texas pitcher other than Charlie Hough since Frank Tanana won 15 in 1984, and the most by a right-hander since Doc Medich won 14 in 1980.

Angels starter Jerry Reuss, 4-4, lasted 5 1-3 innings.

Athletics 4, Royals 0

Steve Ontiveros and two relievers combined on a four-hitter and Mike Davis hit a two-run homer and scored twice, leading Oakland over Kansas City.

The victory moved the Athletics into second place in the AL West, 3½ games behind Minnesota and a half-game ahead of the Royals.

Davis doubled off Mark Gubicza with one out in the first inning, took third on a wild pitch and scored on a sacrifice fly by Mark McGwire. The Athletics clinched the game with three runs in the eighth on an RBI single by Terry Steinbach and Davis' two-run homer, his 21st.

Ontiveros raised his record to 9-8 with relief help from Eric Plunk and Dennis Eckersley, who gained his 13th save. Gubicza brought a career 6-2 record against Oakland into the game but dropped to 11-17.

Orioles 9, Red Sox 4

Red Sox 10, Orioles 7

Larry Sheets' two-run homer sparked a four-run fifth inning as Baltimore beat Boston in the opener of their twi-night doubleheader and snapped a nine-game losing streak.

Following the homer, Peter Stanicek's RBI single off Bruce Hurst, 15-11, tied the score 3-3. Cal Ripken's sacrifice fly put the Orioles ahead for good at 4-3.

Pat Dodson hit a three-run homer during a six-run Boston rally that led the Red Sox to their second-game victory.

And The Race Is On

Kuhn Has Message For Inflexible Ownership

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Bowie Kuhn doesn't need a picket sign on his office walls to remind him of the baseball strike of 1981, and he says football owners shouldn't need a law book to see the message of the free agency battle that led to the walkout.

While Kuhn is not in the business of handing out unsolicited advice to NFL owners, he does, however, remember the advice he gave baseball's owners and what happened when it was ignored.

"Ownership was too inflexible," the ex-commissioner said. "People like Phil Wrigley (then owner of the Chicago Cubs) and Ed Fitzgerald (a part owner of the Milwaukee Brewers) and a few others should have been listened to. They said bargaining a solution would be better than having one dropped in our laps."

In the end, Kuhn said, the hardliners brought the house of cards tumbling down.

"There could have been a better system," he said. "Marvin Miller (then head of the union) would have settled for less than he got and been happy to get it. But even with the destruction of the reserve system, the collective bargaining result was not too bad and might have worked except for the bad judgment of those (owners) who bid it up."

An arbitrator will rule Monday on a grievance accusing baseball owners of conspiring not to sign some free agents. And NFL players could strike Tuesday with free agency the key issue.

Kuhn, who was the commissioner of baseball for 16 years, thinks baseball would be better off today if owners had compromised.

"I don't think free agency has been good for baseball," he said. "There have been some positives, but mostly, it's been negative. It robbed franchises of the apparent loyalty of players, which is important, and it unreasonably ran up the cost of doing business, although some owners contributed to that, too. It's taken a lot of the romance from the game."

Romance is not something that necessarily concerns NFL owners. Economics, however, are another matter.

Free agency in baseball mushroomed player salaries from an average $51,501 in 1976, the year before it was introduced, to $185,651 when the players struck in 1981, to $412,520 last season. It is a cost spiral that has not escaped the attention of football's owners.

It has not exactly destroyed the sport, though. In 1976, the last year before free agency, major league baseball drew more than 31 million fans. The next year, with new franchises added in Toronto and Seattle, attendance went to more than 38 million.

No more teams have been added since then but, except for the strike season of 1981, attendance never again has been below 40 million. It reached a record 47,506,203 last season. With two weeks left in the current season, baseball hoped to reach 50 million, a figure that was once inconceivable.

Owners argued that free agency would disturb baseball's competitive balance with top players flocking to more desirable cities. Competitive balance, however, has rarely been better. The last four World Series have had eight different teams and no league champion has repeated since the Los Angeles Dodgers and New York Yankees won consecutive titles in 1977-78.

"In my judgment, the gains of baseball are not due to free agency," Kuhn said. "Attendance went up through increased marketing efforts. Competitive balance is a function of clubs concentrating on player development because they viewed free agency as a disaster.

"That's not to say it is wrong as a concept. Some kind of better tailored free agency would be OK. There probably should be a safety valve where the players have an option to look for a new setting. But I don't think it should be as open as it has been."

The irony here is Kuhn believes the baseball players' union never was after the carte blanche free agency it got when arbitrator Peter Seitz dismembered the game's reserve clause in a ruling that was subsequently upheld in the federal courts.

"Marvin Miller never battled for free agency," Kuhn said. "He was never willing to strike on the issue. He attacked it from other angles. He'd always take an adjustment and settle. He got salary arbitration and the 5-and-10 rule (requiring approval for trades of 10-year veterans who had spent the last five years with the same team) that way.

"He never pushed for wide scale free agency. Then he tried arbitration and tumbled the whole thing to his great surprise, and certainly to the great surprise of anybody who understood the law."

It was at the point of no return, Kuhn said.

"So much was handed to the players, it was tough to bargain back. It's still six years (before a player can declare free agency). That's not bad. But the system could have worked to the benefit of all. Instead, it went wildly out of whack with a lot of adversive effect."

Free agent bidding in baseball soared until 1985 when the bottom suddenly dropped out of the market. The decision by arbitrator Tom Roberts could have an impact on the football situation.

If, for example, Roberts rules there was no collusion, football could grant free agency and then not sign players, arguing as baseball did that it was merely exercising economic common sense.

Kuhn, the attorney, thinks the baseball owners will prevail on the collusion case. "I don't know of any evidence that satisfies me there was collusion," he said.

He does not, however, think the baseball decision will change football management's opinion of free agency, even though football does not enjoy baseball's anti-trust exemption.

"I don't see the football owners significantly changing their view," he said. "I think they view baseball free agency as a disaster and want no part of it."

But the guy who was there when free agency came to baseball remembers what happened when some of the owners failed to bend.

NBA Scramble To Sign Gets Underway Oct. 1

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

A scramble to get NBA free agents and rookies under contract will start Oct. 1 when the league's signing moratorium ends after 3½ months.

"Suffice it to say that Oct. 1-9 might be the busiest week in the history of general managers," Jerry Colangelo of the Phoenix Suns said. "It's going to be tight because team representatives and player agents can only be one place at one time."

The moratorium, agreed to by the NBA and the players union, was supposed to allow the two sides to negotiate a new collective bargaining agreement without distractions during the offseason.

The signing hiatus hasn't done much to help negotiations. Both sides report no progress toward reaching an agreement, with free-agent freedom, the draft and the salary cap continuing to be the major stumbling blocks.

But the moratorium promises to play havoc with teams trying to put their training camp rosters together.

Rookies are scheduled to report Oct. 4 and veterans on Oct. 8. With no rookies under contract and roughly 90 free agents scattered among the 23 NBA teams, a mad scramble is in the offing.

"It'll be touch and go," San Antonio General Manager Bob Bass said. "There will probably be some players who won't be signed when training camp starts."

"There's no real way of knowing for sure what the affect of the moratorium will be," said Larry Fleisher, the players association general counsel.

"There will be a much shorter period of time for teams to sign their free agents and rookies, so my guess is that many more players will miss training camp than usual. It's hard to sign that many players in a few days."

In past offseasons, most teams had rookie camps for rookie signees during the offseason, but that was impossible this year. Fleisher conceded that it's possible that rookies might suffer because they didn't get a chance to show what they could do in the summer.

"Some teams might try to have some kind of rookie camp immediately after Oct. 1," Fleisher said, "but those rookie camps will have to be mostly second, third and fourth rounders because No. 1s don't ever sign that quickly."

"There will be a floodgate effect after Oct. 1," New Jersey General Manager Bob Weltman said. "Some precious time has been lost and that will hurt the teams that don't have pat rosters."

The Nets have four free-agent veterans — Albert King, Ben Coleman, Ray Williams and Kevin McKenna — none of whom are certain starters. New Jersey has a higher priority in rookie guard Dennis Hopson, the No. 3 pick in the draft.

"We have to place most of the emphasis on him," Weltman said. "That will deprive the other people, especially the marginal players, of some of their opportunity to get signed before training camp and then make the team."

"It will be much harder for lower-round draft picks to make it because decisions will have to be made quicker at training camps," Seattle General Manager Bob Whitsitt said. "Second, third and fourth picks will have a tougher time because there were no summer camps for rookies. Training camp is not the time for tryouts, it's the time for work."

Whitsitt and Colangelo said, however, that the general managers' task shouldn't be too difficult if they have done some work during the summer.

"There's pressure both ways to get the signings out of the way," Colangelo said. "Teams obviously want to get their players signed and a lot of the players spent the whole summer without any cash and their agents without their fees. So both sides are motivated to get things done."

"Sometimes it's just as tough to negotiate for three months as a week," Whitsitt said. "Talks with free agents during the summer were legal, so we had to do our homework since we have five. Eventually it will all work out."

Steve Alford, All-America for national champion Indiana and second-round pick of the Dallas Mavericks, said the moratorium will have a big effect on rookie salaries.

"Lottery picks (the top seven) usually hold out a while and then a stair-step cycle is established for salaries," Alford said. "They could afford to wait for months in other years, but there's no time for that this year."

Alford said the cancellation of rookie camps will make it tough for all but the highest picks.

"At rookie camp, guys are told what to work on until training camp," Alford said. "Now, they haven't even gotten a look. I couldn't play in a summer league without signing. I've had to be careful about injury."

Alford said he limited himself to a couple of exhibition games against the U.S. Pan American Games team.

As with any new situation, some confusion resulted this summer as a result of the moratorium.

Rick Pitino, new coach in New York, invited three Knicks draft choices, including No. 1 choice Mark Jackson of St. John's, to his youth summer camp in Rhode Island and conducted some workouts. As a result, the Knicks were fined $5,000 by the league.

"It was an honest mistake, I just didn't explain the rules to Rick," Knicks General Manager Al Bianchi said. "We weren't gaining an advantage, but it was a mistake."

Experimental Ball Led To Barrage Of Homers

By JIM DONAGHY
AP Sports Writer

The decline of home runs and batting averages in the late 1960s brought an experimental baseball that got in the air just fine, but never quite got off the ground.

While the experimental ball struck out, other changes that were implemented almost 20 years have culminated this season with an unparalleled number of homers.

Where did the conspiracy against the pitcher begin?

The powers that be in the major leagues decided it was time to help all the hitless wonders after the overall batting average fell to .237 in 1968.

In 1968, five of the National League's 10 teams hit less than .240 and the Chicago Cubs led the league with 130 home runs. The league total was 891 that season, an average of 1.02 homers per game.

This year, 10 of the 12 teams in the NL have more than 100 home runs, and the National and American Leagues have combined to set a record for homers in a season.

Last Monday, the Toronto Blue Jays set a record with 10 homers in a game and four players have hit 40 or more homers this season. The last time that happened was 1973 (Willie Stargell, 44, Davey Johnson 43, Darrell Evans 41 and Hank Aaron 40).

Speculation on why there has been such a dramatic increase in home runs this season has ranged from lively balls to a change in the cosmos.

But there were some specific changes made in 1969 that gave the hitters the uppper hand.

"In 1969 they took five inches off the mound. It went from 15 inches to 10 inches and everybody blames it on me," former St. Louis pitcher Bob Gibson says.

Gibson's career reached its zenith in 1968 when he put together remarkable numbers which included a 1.12 earned run average. His ERA that season was the best since the end of the dead ball era in 1920.

There was also a change in the strike zone after the 1968 season. Instead of a strike being from the batter's knees to the top of the shoulders, it was changed to top of the knee's to the armpits.

Concern over the low scoring also led the major leagues to request Spalding to make a baseball that really was lively. The first experimental ball was the 1-X and it had 10 percent more bounce.

The 1-X had a little bit too much bounce, and it was modified to the X-5 for the spring of 1970.

The X-5, with five percent more bounce, was used for 22 exhibition games in 1970, but was discontinued before spring training ended.

In a game at Miami, Paul Blair hit what were described as a "pair a mammoth home runs" as Baltimore defeated the Chicago White Sox, 12-10. Andy Etchebaren, Walt Williams and Duane Joseph also hit long home runs.

Washington Senators outlasted Minnesota 12-11 as the teams combined for 25 hits. The hits included five homers, two by Tony Oliva. And, Kansas City got 420-foot homers from Bob Oliver and Lou Piniella in beating Montreal, 6-4.

In another game, light-hitting Detroit infielder Don Wert hit a two-run homer against St. Louis.

"It was the new ball that gave me the homer," Wert said. "I didn't really catch it full enough for the ball to go that far."

Pitcher Camilo Pascual, a victim of the X-5 said "I think somebody will get killed with that ball."

Leo Durocher, then manager of the Chicago Cubs, said "If they use that ball on AstroTurf or Tartan-Turf, somebody will get killed."

Bowie Kuhn, commissioner of baseball at the time, agreed.

"The hitters were hitting bullets, not baseballs," Kuhn said. "But the lowering of the mound and the new strike zone helped bring the hitters back and everybody seemed to like that."

Everybody except the pitchers, that is.

"Reporters say fans wanted to see more hitting, but the fans I talked to like 1-0 and 2-1 games, too," Gibson said.

Duke Zilber was a member of the Spalding team that worked on the 1-X and X-5.

"We tried it in spring training and the damn ball was coming off the bat like a rabbit and we thought somebody was going to get killed," Zilber said.

"We put a new compound into the center of the X-5," Zilber said. "It was larger in the center."

Zilber said the regulation ball has a cork-cushioned center and the X-5 did not.

"There are so many things you can do to the ball. You know, they hand-stitch every ball. Everybody stitches differently," Zilber said. "You can pull the stitches a little tighter. I know everything about the ball. We made them, you know, for what, 100 years."

Zilber doesn't think it's a lively ball, corked bats or the weather causing the increase in home runs.

"The guys are getting stronger and they're using lighter bats, they got a faster swing and they got more power," Zilber said.

"I believe the hitters are stronger than they use to be," Gibson said. "If you throw that ball out over the plate, those big strong guys are going to hit the ball hard."

If someday, however, homers and averages start to decrease, Zilber still has a few X-5s around the house.

Lack Of A Controversy May Be A Controversy

By DARRELL CHRISTIAN
AP Sports Editor

There is no quarterback controversy for the Los Angeles Raiders this year, and that in itself could be a controversy given many more games like their season opener.

For seven years, Marc Wilson carried the burden of great potential. Now, he's lucky if he carries a helmet. He couldn't keep his starting job when he was erratic, and he can't get it back when he's steady and his replacement is erratic.

But then Wilson is a veteran of ups and downs.

Four seasons ago, a broken shoulder cost him his starting job, and Jim Plunkett took the Raiders to the Super Bowl championship.

Two seasons ago, after becoming No. 1 when Plunkett was hurt, he infuriated owner Al Davis by wasting two of his three second-half timeouts to avoid delay-of-game penalties on the first drive of the third quarter in a 27-20 playoff loss to New England.

Last season, he began No. 1 but was replaced by Plunkett as the Raiders lost their first three games.

This season, the starter is Rusty Hilger, who threw all of 51 passes in his first three years as a pro.

Hilger was annointed in the offseason, and by the time training camp opened, Wilson was virtually the invisible man.

The Raider media guide praised him as an "excellent holder for field goals and extra points."

Position settled. Or was it?

Consider what happened in Green Bay:

Hilger hurts his left shoulder — not his throwing shoulder — on the opening series but stays in the game.

By halftime, he has completed just two of seven passes for all of 12 yards. The game is scoreless.

On CBS, Brent Musberger tells his television audience that "they've played half a game in Green Bay and the Raiders have already changed quarterbacks."

Enter Wilson to start the second half. He plays well, hitting nine of 16 passes for 97 yards with no interceptions. The Raiders win 20-0.

How did Hilger take Wilson's heroics?

"Maybe being a starting quarter-

Chasm Exists Despite Regard

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — They were so chummy that Friday, two days before the New York Giants beat the Denver Broncos in the last Super Bowl.

Gene Upshaw in a room on one side of a hallway in an Anaheim hotel, Pete Rozelle on the other, telling the world that the Era of Good Feeling had arrived in NFL labor relations.

So why are we a day away from NFL Strike V, scheduled to begin after Monday night's Jets-Patriots game?

Because there's still a chasm between the way the world is viewed by the wealthy, conservative and sometimes eccentric owners and the often doctrinaire labor functionaries at the union.

No matter how much personal regard there is between the two sides — Jack Donlan, the NFL's chief negotiator, was a guest at Upshaw's wedding — the perceptions each has of the other have created a situation where rhetoric has replaced negotiation and no one can find a face-saving way out.

After six months and 19 negotiating sessions, there is virtually no progress beyond the original pie-in-the sky opening proposals. Each side has presented one counteroffer — Upshaw calls the management proposal "garbage;" Donlan uses more polite language to say the same about the union's counterproposal.

Return to January, when it was said that a strike could be avoided this year because Donlan and Rozelle communicated better with Upshaw than they did with Ed Garvey, Upshaw's predecessor as executive director of the NFL Players Association. Garvey's antagonism, management people suggested, provoked the 57-day strike in 1982.

At the same time, the union was issuing a 110-page pamphlet entitled "Game Plan '87," which outlined just about everything that has happened so far.

In essence, it told the players that nothing would occur until after the contract expired and the union had set a strike date. Management, it said, would force a walkout by refusing to negotiate.

The union now says it was prophetic. Management calls it a self-fulfilling prophecy.

People in the middle, most of all the fans, call it lunacy.

And people in the know suggest it's because NFL owners and their union have always distrusted each other — there's been some sort of strike or work stoppage in every negotiation since 1968.

"Each side has a view of the other that isn't that far from the truth," says someone with closer ties to the union than to management.

"Some of the owners are such reactionaries, so knee-jerk anti-union, that even the fact the union exists is waving a red flag in their faces. On the other hand, there are people in the union who still think they're on the barricades at Berkeley in the '60s. Every time the contract comes up it's their time in the sun and they're exploiting it."

It was late March in Los Angeles, the weather was warm and most of the 200 or so players who came to the Century Plaza Hotel for the NFLPA convention enjoyed the weather more than the rhetoric.

Dan Marino, newly appointed to the union's executive board, showed up one day and headed for the golf course.

High-powered agents like Leigh Steinberg and Marvin Demoff huddled with union officials and hobnobbed with clients and potential clients. Mike Trope, an ex-agent, walked around plugging his forthcoming book to reporters and Lloyd Bloom, partner of the newly notorious Norby Walters sat in the coffee shop defending his reputation to anyone who would listen.

Even Doug Allen, the very serious assistant executive director of the union and one of the one of the owners' favorite "radical" targets, loosened up a bit, laughing about his "starring role" in a movie about Rocky Bleier, the former Steeler. His part: missing a tackle in a flim clip of Bleier scoring a touchdown.

Free agency? A concept, an opening demand, but not a high priority, said players like Everson Walls of the Cowboys, Mel Kaufman of the Redskins, Joel Williams of the Falcons, Todd Christensen of the Raiders, even Boomer Esiason of the Bengals, who could command a bundle on the open market. They pointed out that the average NFL salary had increased from $90,000 in 1982 to $230,000 now and that pensions and other fringe benefits were more important.

The morning before the convention officially opened, Upshaw sat with two reporters for two hours in the coffee shop.

And, he emphasized what was to be the official theme of the convention:

"Horizontal not Vertical," meaning one issue was important as the next; roster size and length of contract as important as free agency.

Two days before the strike, it remains the union's official position with only one of Upshaw's eight horizontal issues decided upon, the three-year contract that was a given when the NFL's three-year television contract was signed — the labor contract traditionally parallels TV.

It's April 20 and the union and management formally exchange opening proposals in Washington. Each side says the other is asking for pie in the sky —unfettered free agency by the union; a rookie wage scale by management that would would, for example, reduce Vinny Testaverde's $8.2 million contract over six years to $630,000 over two.

Not to worry, everyone is told. This is all rhetoric. Now we'll start meeting.

They did, but nothing happened.

They spent four hours in the New York's Doral Inn one May afternoon doing little more than rehashing their positions. Between April 20 and Aug. 14 they met in New York, Washington, San Francisco, New Orleans and Fort Lauderdale. Some golf was played, some positions restated, no agreements made.

At one session, they spent five hours debating whether quarterbacks should get a mandatory day off during the season. That ended when Marino, the game's best quarterback, told the union it really wasn't necessary.

"We're trying to get a framework for talks," Donlan kept saying. "We're trying to feel each other out to see where there might be some give."

There didn't seem to be much.

Management people complained that the union had more than 300 loose demands. The union complained that management had just taken the old contract and either marked "same" or demanded givebacks. Donlan said that was the way contracts are always negotiated, using the old contract as the basis for the new one.

Moreover, management complained that at large, formal sessions, Doug Allen did most of the talking.

"He stated the entire union position, then he'd ask us a question and answer it himself," says one Management Council representative. "When it went on for a while, Gene would motion to Jack and they'd step out of the room and talk."

On Aug. 14, 17 days before the contract was to expire, the last meeting was held in New Orleans.

A week later, Donlan called Upshaw to try to get talks going, only to be told he was touring training camps briefing players on the negotiations. So were other key union officials — Allen, Dick Berthelsen, Mark Murphy, M.J. Duberstein.

On Aug. 25, Upshaw declared that the strike would start some time after Sept. 15 — two months after the 60-day strike notice had been filed with the National Labor Relations Board. On Aug. 31, the contract expiration date, the union's executive board set Sept. 22 as a strike date, a decision ratified a week later by 24 of the 28 player representatives.

On Sept. 1, talks resumed. Donlan and Upshaw met for 4½ hours in Washington, discussing such major issues as meal money.

Then came the Holloway affair.

On Monday night, Aug. 31, Brian Holloway, a three-time Pro Bowl tackle for the New England Patriots and the union's first vice president, appeared on national television at halftime of an exhibition game between Chicago and St. Louis to outline the union position.

The next morning, Coach Raymond Berry told him to either retire or be traded. Upshaw, already sensitive to the vulnerability of player reps, told Donlan he would cease talking unless the first item was protection for player representatives. Donlan said no and returned to New York.

That day, Holloway was traded to the Raiders and that night Upshaw met with Berry at Washington's National Airport. Berry told him the decision was done solely on a football basis — Holloway's performance had fallen off and he didn't have his mind on the game.

Berry probably never thought about the horrible timing.

But the Holloway incident radicalized the player reps. It also may have saved the job of the union president, Marvin Powell, a onetime All-Pro who was cut by the New York Jets last year and survived the final cut with the rebuilding Tampa Bay Bucs, whose owner, Hugh Culverhouse, is chairman of the Management Council's executive committee.

The owners were already radicalized by union rhetoric.

"Every time we've negotiated a contract with this union, they've struck," said Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys. "We're not going to take it any more."

That meant planning to play during a strike. Some teams began offering $1,000 retainers to players they cut to return to play in the event of a strike.

On Sept. 17, the owners formally voted 28-0 to continue the season with "whatever players are available."

The players laughed, so did much of the public. The owners conceded they'd have to give rebates to fans and the television networks and Jim Finks, the respected general manager of the New Orleans Saints, commented:

"It's like pouring kerosene on the fire."

Meanwhile, the proposals, put on the table April 20, remained there a week after the contract expired.

The owners' first counterproposal came on Labor Day and Donlan said it would go a long way toward settling the dispute. Upshaw called it "garbage."

It offered guaranteed contracts to players in their fourth year or more who remain on rosters through the eighth game of the season and increased pension and severance pay.

But on the key issue, free agency, it maintained the framework of the prohibitive compensation under which just one player had changed teams in 10 years. It is supposed to make the compensation more realistic, but in fact, it changes little.

The players responded with their first counterproposal last Tuesday, predictably calling it a framework for settlement. It offered to exempt players in their first four years from free agency and exempted rookies from its demand for guaranteed contracts for all players.

That, said Donlan, was not a framework for settlement. It would cost, he said, $200 million — without free agency — and called for federal mediation. The union said mediation was useless because past mediators have only served as fronts for management.

What's left?

Upshaw is never the bogeyman to the NFL owners. He, they seem to suggest, is one of the family who's being led astray by the Garvey holdovers — Allen, Murphy, Berthelsen, Duberstein.

"That's a lot of bull," says Upshaw. "I'm in charge. I call the shots."

If that's so, what's the answer?

One might be Rozelle, the NFL Commissioner, who is sensitive to the comparison with Peter Ueberroth, the baseball commissioner who is credited with ending his sport's two-day walkout in 1985.

Rozelle has said he's willing to help this time, the union says it's willing to have him, but only as a representative of management. But the owners aren't.

"If they think he can make a deal for us, they're wrong," says an owner, regarded as more liberal than the others. "Jack Donlan is our negotiator and he makes the deal."

Nonetheless, Rozelle's presence is there. He's met with Upshaw. He's been on the phone to the owners. He's willing, if nothing else.

"There are 24 hours in the day," says one of his chief assistants. "Even Monday morning, there's still time."

back put a little added pressure on him," Hilger said, "but as a backup, the kid is great."

Kid? He's 5 years older than Hilger, but then Wilson never was accorded reverential treatment by his teammates.

The Raiders, to be sure, are tough to please. Not that day, though. They voted Wilson the game ball. What's next? "Detroit," Wilson replies.

Sure enough, Coach Tom Flores announced on Wednesday that Hilger's shoulder is better and, while his game needs to be better, too, he will start this Sunday's home opener against the Lions.

The statistics and situations were just the reverse for Wilson's opposite number in Green Bay.

Consider:

Packers starter Randy Wright completes eight of 21 passes for 99 yards with three interceptions and is replaced by rookie Don Majkowski.

Majkowski hits two of seven — identical to Hilger — for 15 yards and on Wednesday is named to start the Packers' game Sunday against Denver.

Wilson is low key about his plight.

"That's a subject we haven't wanted to talk about, and I really don't want to talk about it now," he says. "That's a decision that's up to them, but I think it's going to depend on how Rusty's shoulder is, frankly."

In Green Bay, no quarterback passed for 100 yards, the first time that had happened since the eighth game of last season. Raiders fans might think it shouldn't have happened to them.

In St. Louis, Neil Lomax hit 17 of 33 passes for 270 yards — 47 more than all four quarterbacks in Green Bay — and rallied the Cardinals to a 24-13 victory over Dallas. The Raiders could have had Lomax in the offseason, but reportedly wouldn't give up a first-round draft choice.

In Washington, Doug Williams replaced the injured Jay Schroeder, hit 17 of 27 passes for 272 yards — 49 more than all four quarterbacks in Green Bay — and led the Redskins to a 34-24 victory over Philadelphia. The Raiders wanted Williams badly, but Washington wouldn't part with him.

Wilson, in fact, wasn't expected to be a Raider by now, but the size of his contract saved him from being traded and a sub-par preseason by backup quarterback Ed Luther saved him from being waived.

In a way, Wilson's awkward situation is more appropriate for the Raiders, who always have made a home for NFL outcasts and castoffs, and his teammates seem to sense that.

"Put yourself in Marc's position," said safety Vann McElroy. "He's been through the things he's been through, that people put him through, that the media put him through, and basically the players. Sometimes you're pretty tough on a guy when you don't mean to be. Sometimes things come out that shouldn't come out. It takes a lot of guts for a guy to come in and do what he did."

Perhaps remembering that, the Raiders are leaving Hilger alone.

"The guys have accepted the fact that the coaches are going with Rusty Hilger and we're not worrying about how he does," McElroy said. "As long as we win, that's the bottom line."

What happens when they lose?

USAir-Piedmont Aviation Merger Faces Test

By The Associated Press

USAir Group Inc.'s proposed acquisition of Piedmont Aviation Inc. faces a key test Monday, when an administrative law judge with the Department of Transportation is expected to issue an opinion on the merger.

The opinion by law judge Ronnie Yoder will count prominently in the final decision by DOT officials on whether to accept or reject a merger between the two airlines.

DOT has final authority over airline mergers and its decision is expected by Oct. 30.

Analysts and industry observers said Friday they expect the merger to be approved, but perhaps not before it receives closer scrutiny than had been expected. There is concern, they said, about problems plaguing other airline mergers and congressional backlash to rising consumer ire over airline delays.

"There certainly seems to be more uncertainty over what the judge will say than two to three weeks ago," said Robert Decker, an analyst with Duff & Phelps in Chicago. "The DOT may feel pressure to display concern and come out against it. Still, I expect the merger to be approved."

Thad Faison, an analyst at Interstate Securities in Charlotte, said, "these things don't usually come unraveled and my gut feeling is this one won't."

Nonetheless, USAir and Piedmont stock tumbled amid speculation Friday that the merger might encounter unexpected stumbling blocks.

The Wall Street Journal quoted a ranking DOT official as saying the merger "has problems" but DOT officials later said the remark was taken out of context and pertained only to the issues that led to the hearing before Yoder.

In New York Exchange trading, shares of Piedmont dropped $1 to $67.625 in active trading and USAir slipped $1.125 to $46.125.

USAir earlier this year agreed to buy Piedmont for $1.59 billion, setting in motion the regulatory review process. The DOT in July postponed a decision to Oct. 30 to allow time to study the merger's potential effect on competition.

Despite the delays, officials at both airlines said Friday they believe the merger will be approved.

"We are confident that the acquisition meets all of the tests that are applied to other airline mergers," said Dave Shipley, a spokesman for USAir.

"We are anxiously awaiting the law judge's recommendation," said Piedmont spokesman Don McGuire. "The Department of Transportation's own (public) counsel saw nothing wrong with the merger. The Department of Justice participated and saw nothing objectionable to the merger."

Peter Schwarz, a University of North Carolina at Charlotte economist and expert on deregulation, said the DOT's precedent of approving mergers — despite continuing service problems in some cases — will work in favor of USAir-Piedmont.

"I just think that to stop this one would be too detrimental, particularly to Piedmont," he said. "It would leave theem in a bit of disarray. That in some sense would be very unfair because they were going by what seemed to the legal precedent."

Yuppie Black Market Suspected

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The increasing number of stolen computers has detectives investigating a possible yuppie black market where buyers contact sellers in upscale bars and may trade cocaine for equipment.

Lt. Bob Overton, head of the Knox County Sheriff Department's burglary unit, said computers are stolen like any other household good, but that recently the items seem to be a prime target.

General Motors Announces Safety Recall

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. is recalling about 480,000 of its 1987 Buicks, Oldsmobiles and Pontiacs to replace windshield washer bottle brackets because of a potential fire hazard, the automaker said Friday.

The voluntary safety recall involves Buick LeSabres and Park Avenues, Oldsmobile Delta 88s and Ninety-Eights, and Pontiac Bonnevilles, GM said.

The company said a section of the car's electrical system could melt under certain circumstances and ignite the plastic bracket. The No. 1 automaker said it was not aware of any accidents or injuries as a result of the condition.

GM said it planned to notify owners by mail to bring their cars into dealers, who would replace the brackets with a non-flammable unit at no cost.

The Soviet Union exploded its first atomic bomb Sept. 22, 1949, four years after the first American nuclear detonation.

P&G Has Positive Impact On Area's Economy

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

As one of Pitt County's largest private industries, Procter & Gamble Paper Products Co. does more for the area's economy than supply paychecks to some 500 employees, according to the plant manager.

"In addition to our 500 employees, there are 100 to 150 people that work on the site as contractors in construction, temporary services, guard services, cleaning and the grounds," Bob Griffin said.

"If you take all of those people that is a pretty major contribution to the community. Some of those contracts are larger than an announcement that might be made for a new business in terms of the number of jobs created."

In addition, Procter & Gamble, which began as a small candle and soapmaking operation 150 years ago, paid out approximately $125 million to the Greenville area economy during the past year, according to company officials.

The figure includes over $15 million in salaries paid at the Greenville plant and over $110 million for purchases of goods and services, including raw materials, contractor services, packaging and office supplies, Griffin said.

Today, Procter & Gamble is no longer in the candle business nor just in the laundry and cleaning products industry. Growth has taken place in personal care products, household paper products, toilet goods, coffee, food and industrial and institutional products.

The Greenville facility, which produces Attends incontinent briefs and Always mini and maxi sanitary napkins, is one of three Procter & Gamble plants in North Carolina.

P&G's Greenville plant located on Old Creek Road just north of the city began operations in August 1975 as manufacturer of Pringles potato chips.

Twenty-six of P&G's 334 acres are under roof to accomodate administrative, material storage, technical and engineering, manufacturing and warehousing functions.

In 1978, the company switched the plant from Pringles to manufacturing paper products, according to Griffin, who said the Greenville facility produces about 9 million bulk cases of its products annually.

"We share the country with one other plant in each brand," he said. "They have certain districts that they normally ship to and we normally ship to from time to time because of product upgrades or changes.

"We may help them or they may help us as we shift over to new improved kinds of things and it takes plant downtime to make some of those changes."

The Greenville facility is also responsible for some exporting, Griffin said.

"We have worked internationally, predominantly in Canada," he said. "Before we will put in manufacturing facilities in another country, we will export to those countries for periods of time.

"The biggest example of that from Greenville was when we first went into the paper products business here and we produced Pampers. We were the largest exporters on the East Coast of C-vans (large shipping containers) out of North Carolina ports in Morehead and Wilmington for a long time. It primarily went to Europe and the Middle East."

The products did well in foreign markets and plants were built overseas, according to Griffin, who has worked at the Greenville plant since 1976.

"It was so successful and there are pulp and raw material supplies in Europe that we now have built two plants in Germany and one in Jidda, Saudi Arabia, to cover those markets.

"That was the way we determined the market viability and we still do that. We do that with Japan. We will export from here to other countries. We've only done that with the expectation that if the brand is successful in those countries, they will be produced there."

Meanwhile, Griffin said the Pitt County location is ideally located for distribution purposes.

"This is an excellent location for us to be," he said. "If you were going to have a single East Coast location and you want to cover the Southeast into Florida where people are migrating rapidly or still in the Northeast and parts of the Midwest, then we can ship there in 24 to 30 hours.

"We have ever-improving road systems, good rail, and are within 100 miles of two deep water ports. This is an ideal location as far as distribution is concerned.

"Our biggest raw material is pulp that becomes the absorbent core of our products. It is supplied by our own P&G pulp mills in Georgia and Florida."

P&G has also initiated a volunteer support program designed to encourage employees to get involved in community activities, Griffin said.

Under the program, the firm gives as much as $6,000 to a fund for distribution among employees for use in activities.

"Employees who are involved in the community can go and draw from that fund," Griffin said. "It's run by an employee committee and they judge who's going to get the money, but to get money, you have to be a volunteer.

"It's important to us to have a legitimate image of being an excellent corporate citizen. We encourage our people to be involved in the community."

Hearing Devices A Hit

BRUNSWICK, Ga. (AP) — A sonic vibration generator designed to make life aboard ship unbearable for barnacles is making life a little better for the deaf.

The Sonic Hull Tender was developed by New South Electronics of South Carolina to keep unwanted growth off boats.

It transmits vibrations people can feel.

The transducer produces high-pitched sound waves that make an untenable environment for marine life. When attached to a stereo, it intensifies the sound to a point that the hearing impaired can feel the music.

"The bone structure of the body becomes a speaker," Thompson said.

"Whatever you attach it to, it makes the whole thing play music," said company engineer David Thompson. He said that property was discovered in 1978.

"One day we were fooling around the office and we hooked up a transducer to a music system. We discovered that whatever we touched with it played music. A chair, a wall, anything," he said. "We knew we had something but we didn't know what. We all looked at each other and somebody said, 'if it does this to a wall, what will it do for a deaf person?'"

A set of transducers went to the Easter Seal Speech and Hearing Center in Brunswick last week because W.B. Lewis of Lewis Crab Factory bought a Hull Tender.

They were an immediate hit with 3-year-olds Crystal Girard and Cynthia Hamilton, who danced on a table when they could enjoy music for the first time.

The transducer has been tried at several other centers for the hearing impaired with good resuts.

Marcia Hugghins, a speech pathologist in Jacksonville, wrote that "out of 28 children who used the transducers, approximately 60 percent seemed to derive some benefit. ... Success for even one child makes the use worth the effort."

The Cleary School for the Deaf in New York is mounting the small black disks under a platform so students can feel sounds through their feet.

Thompson said he and company founder Dannion Brinkley are more excited about the device's potential for the hearing impaired than its success against barnacles.

"When we began the business eight years ago it was to sell a product. After eight years we care more about helping deaf kids," he said.

Brinkley said the company has sold more than 6,000 units in 17 countries. "That means 6,000 kids got transducers. I'll be proud of that all my life. I don't sell deaf systems, I give them away."

Fire At Nuke Plant

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — A boiler caught fire Saturday at the idled Tennessee Valley Authority Sequoyah Nuclear Plant, a spokeswoman for the federal utility said. No one was hurt.

Janice Blankenship, supervisor of information services at the plant, said damage was being assessed. She said the fire "was not a threat to the public or employees."

Ms. Jenkins said the business will be operated under an "old fashioned cafe atmosphere" serving breakfast and home cooked lunches. Operating hours are 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays.

The Courtside menu, which borrows legal terms and applies them to food items in keeping with the courthouse influence across Third Street, also includes hamburgers, fountain beverages and homemade desserts. Some catering services are available.

Commitment To Employees, Excellence Stressed As P&G Marks 150th Birthday

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

All this year Procter and Gamble employees throughout the world are celebrating the sesquicentennial of the company which began as a soap and candle-making operation in 1837.

As most of the 500 P&G employees of the Greenville manufacturing plant and their families enjoyed a "fun day" Saturday, they were honoring the memory of the founders and saluting the future of the ever-growing enterprise.

Everything from barbecue eating to putting one's favorite or least-favorite person in the dunking booth entered into the celebration.

Area community leaders were given a tour of the plant Wednesday afternoon and evening and were treated to dinner at the company's expense. This, too, was a sesquicentennial event, Greenville plant manager Robert S. Griffin said.

The company has been pleased, too, that some local grocery marketers have chosen to promote P&G products with information given in their advertisements that this year is the 150th year of the company.

Especially during the past several weeks during the time leading up to "Fun Day," employees have been given information about the 150 years of the company and have been teased with trivia questions, not the least of which is, "What does 'sesquicentennial' mean?"

Sesquicentennial means among other things appreciation of the founders — James Gamble and William Procter.

Procter and Gamble were brothers-in-law who became business partners making soap and candles in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1837. They had had similar trades and knew they also had similar values about quality of worksmanship, honesty and teamwork. Gamble supervised manufacturing, while Procter handled the company office and sales. Their first employee, Barney Krieger, a chemical engineer fresh out of Yale University, stayed with them 47 years.

As part of this honoring of both the past and the future, the company has adopted the sesquicentennial theme — "Excellence: Through Commitment and Innovation."

John G. Smale, chairman of the board and chief executive of the company, shared his thoughts on the theme. "Excellence," he said, "expresses what we should expect of ourselves and of our fellow employees. Excellence is a standard for all of us.

"Through commitment and innovation is how we achieve the goal of excellence. I don't know how to judge how much of it is commitment and how much is innovation. The two are, in a sense, inseparable.

"Commitment creates innovation," Smale said. "Commitment isn't only personal hard work and willingness to spend the extra time. It's reaching out. It's assuming a sense of responsibility not only for what you do, but for the success of the entire enterprise..."

Company workers at the Greenville plant said that employees' commitment to the company and the its commitment to the employees are apparent every day. "One of the things I am most impressed with," said Louise Skillman, an engineer in the Greenville plant, "is that everyone here has the same opportunity for advancement. Absolutely no intolerance or discrimination is allowed. Even in conversation, we're encouraged to say 'himself or herself,' not just himself. It's nice to know you're working for a company with such high integrity and commitment to its employees.

Commitment to its employees is one reason the local company has a large building which has been vacant much of its life and is now partially leased to an outside firm for storage.

"When our company decided to close down the Pringles (potato chips) operation, we knew there would have to be a period of time during which our people would be idle if we didn't just go ahead and add a building," Griffin said. "So that's exactly what we did. Our Paper Products Division is in new space and the old Pringles food operations building is mostly idle. But our people never had to be out of work. That was what was important to us."

Another way Ms. Skillman feels that the company shows commitment to its workers is that so many are cross-trained in various kinds of work, making them more flexible as the operation changes, as inevitably it must.

Another way is that any schooling related to the work is paid for by the company. And any community involvement by the employee individually is encouraged and supported by the company, sometimes even with financial backing. This money is administered by an employee committee, just as many quality improvement activities within the company are.

James Gamble and William Procter started the company 150 years ago with $7,192.94 in capital. Today the company has operations in 44 countries and sales of $17 billion. From a few employees in Cincinnati, P&G has increased its rolls to 73,000 employees worldwide.

The company sells 82 advertised brands of products in the U.S. and more than 100 brands in foreign countries.

In the U.S. there are 53 plants in 24 states, plus another 60 in other countries around the world. There are also a dozen research and development facilities in five states and several international locations.

A School Away From School

"School in the hospital isn't bad and it isn't good neither — because you're always working on school work. Let's see — the teacher is nice. Your school sends you all this homework to do and the hospital teacher assigns the work to you. I don't get behind — I work pretty hard. The teacher is Mrs. Barbara Close. I like her — she's nice. She's a fun teacher. She jokes a lot. She helps make it fun — like if you're down and out she comes in and starts joking with you. Like this morning I was tired and she came in and I felt better."

These are comments of a cystic fibrosis patient at Pitt County Memorial Hospital who shared his experiences with the Hospital School Program in 1984 in a pamphlet he wrote about his disease. In a section describing his history, he said he sometimes had to stay "a long time."

Children who stay in the hospital two weeks or longer could find themselves behind in their class work once they return to school. Illness already creates a stressful situation, and it may be magnified for school-age children who feel inferior to their classmates after a long separation.

But, Pitt County Memorial Hospital and the Pitt County school system relieve some anxiety created by academic pressures while in the hospital through the Hospital School Program.

The program originated with the Greenville school system and PCMH to help students in the hospital keep up with their school work, said teacher Barbara Close. She has been teaching at the hospital since the program began in January 1981 and currently teaches kindergarten through sixth-grade students.

Roseanna Biehn has taught at the hospital about five years and teaches seventh through 12-grade students.

Children who have been in the hospital for two weeks or longer are eligible for the program, but permission is obtained from the children's doctor and parents before they are enrolled in the school.

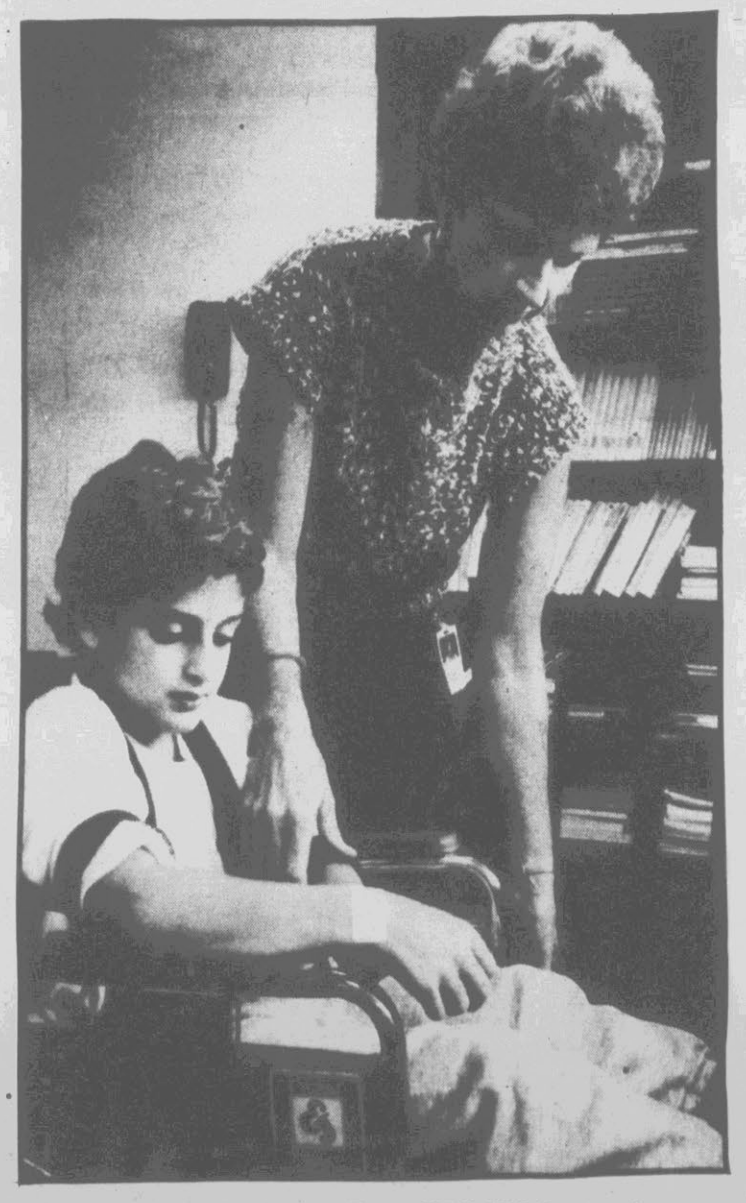
Those participating are transferred to the hospital school and the home school is asked to send information, books and homework to the hospital school teachers.

The two teachers work part time Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m., meeting with all students in the hospital at least an hour three days per week.

"The medical needs always have to take priority," Ms. Close said. But, "the support we have out here is fantastic. They (hospital staff) really want this thing to work and (they) recognize the importance of school," she said.

The teachers use a "schools-in" sign when they are teaching students in their rooms. "They'll honor that and it helps a lot," Ms. Close said.

HELPING HAND — Barbara Close, left, gives a helping hand to Erik Whitehurst, a patient at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. They are working on math problems in the hospital schoolroom located on the pediatric floor.



CHANGING SEATS — Barbara Close and Erik Whitehurst work as a team to get Erik out of his wheelchair into a desk for class. Erik is a fourth-grade student from New Bern.

"If they know the doctors think it's (school) important, they'll try harder," Ms. Biehn said. "You get them motivated and (they) want to keep up with their school work."

Assignments are made to encourage students to work at their own pace. And, "we tailor assignments to what they can handle," Ms. Biehn said. "There's a continuous juggling" of circumstances. For example, "how he feels and all the emotional factions" that come with being in the hospital are considered.

Hospital students often need to be encouraged and motivated — a real challenge for the teachers, Ms. Biehn said. A notebook full of school-oriented things such as rulers, pencils and note paper is a motivational tool she uses.

"They get to chose something" after completing an assignment or doing well in the week of studies, she said. "It's to try to keep them excited about the program."

Other motivating tools are the computers the school integrated into its program this year and occasional trips to the movies or theatrical productions. Patients who are medically stable are escorted to outdoor activities by medical staff.

The computers were purchased through the telethon at the Children's Hospital.

Both teachers research different illnesses to have an idea of what the students are experiencing, Ms. Close said. She is especially interested in cancer patients and their needs and currently serves on a subcommittee of the Cancer Society.

Ms. Biehn is concerned with head-injured children and has attended several conferences relating to that subject.

Students are taught at bedside and in one of the two classrooms, which are located in the therapy department and on the pediatric floor.

In 1984, student enrollment in the hospital school increased, Ms. Close said. To aid the teachers in handling the load, other certified teachers have volunteered to teach children to "increase the amount of time they were seen during the day."

The school is funded through a special grant from the state Department of Public Instruction and is administered by the Pitt County schools. It is accredited by the department and teachers are certified in early childhood, secondary education and special education.

Once the children are released from the hospital, follow-up calls are made to the home school to review students' academic progress and to seek recommendations the home school may have, Ms. Biehn said.

"Response has been overwhelmingly favorable," she said. Most students have kept up with their classes, and "one girl moved ahead," which was an exception.

"It is a wonderful program," said Pat Kelly, a guidance counselor at South Greenville School. She said one or two students from the school participate in a hospital school program each year.

"Sometimes children are out of school for many days and are unable to keep up with their school work," which may result in repeating a grade. But, "we can count the children present in school if they're in the program there," she said.

"Parents are a great help too" by picking up books and materials for the students and taking them to the hospital.

"I'm very much in favor of it," said John Leich, a guidance couselor at J.H. Rose High School. Last year, A Rose student was involved in the program and "they were very, very cooperative. The quality of instruction was pretty good," he said. "She was not that far behind" when she returned to Rose.

The home school is also briefed on what to expect from returning children, Ms. Biehn said. For example, personalities sometimes change when a person has experienced a brain tumor.

"That takes a lot of work and a lot of emotional energy because we try to pave the way for everybody," she said.

About 450 students have been taught in the school since it began, Ms. Close said. "We serve 29 counties in eastern North Carolina." In 1986, 24 of the 29 counties were served.

One student has graduated from the hospital school with a General Equivalency Diploma.

Information on the students is confidential, Ms. Biehn said. "Sometimes we try to know only what we need to know about the situation."

The program office is located in the department of occupational therapy at PCMH.

MRS. WARREN

Couple Marries Saturday

Elizabeth Ellen McConnell and Steven Ray Warren were married in Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church Saturday at 11 a.m. The Rev. Malloy Owen performed the double-ring ceremony.

A program of wedding music was provided by Ruth Moscop, harpist, Mark Ganzor, organist, and Joseph Tatzauer, violinist.

The bride, given in marriage by her parents, is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert William McConnell of Greenville. Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Ray Warren of Canton.

The bride wore a formal gown of silk organza designed with a portrait neckline. The gown's long fitted sleeves and bodice were embellished with re-embroidered alencon lace and seed pearls. The fitted waistline spilled into a full circular skirt and chapel-length train. The triple-tiered skirt was enhanced with satin borders and alencon lace medallions. Her chapel-length veil of silk illusion, re-embroidered with alencon lace and seed pearls, fell from a Juliet cap of alencon lace. The bride carried a white cascade of dendrobium orchids, phalaenopsis orchids accented with freesia and ivy.

The maid of honor was Laura C. McConnell, sister of the bride, of Goldsboro. The matron of honor was Kathryn M. Greven, sister of the bride, of Philadelphia. Bridesmaids were Susan D. McConnell, sister of the bride, of Chapel Hill, Susie Gibson, sister of the bridegroom of Canton, Beth Bryan of Asheville and Marjorie Rowe of Charlotte.

The attendants wore long sleeve blouses of linen and embroidered lace with a fitted waist. A lace peplum fell over a formal length skirt of pastel plaid. Each carried a bouquet of banskia protea, sonia roses, gerberas and blooming myrtle with foliages.

Flower girls were Margaret A. Greven, niece of the bride, and Haley Gibson, niece of the bridegroom. They wore white organza dresses designed with ruffles at the sleeves and three-tiered skirts edged with English lace. Each carried a hoop of white satin, garlands of ivy and an accent of sonia roses.

The father of the bridegroom was best man and ushers were Robert B. Long of Asheville, Ried H. Jones of Canton, James Nehf of Washington, D.C., John Ott of Durham, Todd Bailey of Burnsville, and Craig Greven, brother-in-law of the bride, of Philadelphia.

A wedding brunch was given by the parents of the bride at the Greenville Country Club. Dr. and Mrs. David Stevens and Judge and Mrs. J.W.H. Roberts greeted guests. Tina Salleby presided at the guest register. A jazz quartet entertained guests. The bridal couple were bid farewell with balloons and bird seed.

A rehearsal dinner was hosted by parents of the bridegroom.

Prenuptial parties honoring the couple included a shower, wine and cheese party, bridesmaid luncheon and groomsmen's golf luncheon.

After a wedding trip to Barbados, the couple will make their home in Asheville, where both are practicing attorneys in private law firms.

Charities Go Begging In Japan

By MAGGIE JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Good causes often fare poorly in Japan, one of the world's wealthiest countries.

Although contributions to charity are growing, officials and experts say Japan still lags far behind other well-off nations.

"There's been a lot of catching up in a relatively short time," said David J. Exley, who ran the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) office in Japan until his retirement in April. "But Japan has a long way to go and a lot more catching up to do."

Last year, the Community Chest, Japan's largest charity, raised $144 million, or about 6 percent of the amount raised by its U.S. counterpart, the United Way, officials said. Japan's non-governmental per-capita aid to developing countries ranked 16th in the world in 1985.

Fund-raisers say increased involvement by the news media and some religions is a hopeful sign, and international pressure on Japan to assume a leadership role befitting its wealth will help their causes.

Although their nation has grown affluent in recent decades, many Japanese still need help. Charity officials say the decline of the tradition of the extended family, in which every individual had a place, has left many elderly people and single-parent households in need.

Charities organize home delivery of meals, home care for the elderly, blood donation drives and programs to combat juvenile deliquency, among other activities.

The fund-raisers say, however, they expect historical and cultural obstacles to hinder their work for years to come.

At all levels, Japanese culture teaches that one's responsibility is to those inside one's group, an attitude that often leads to a lack of concern for outsiders.

"In terms of personal generosity, Japanese are second to none," said Exley. "But sometimes when it gets beyond that to 'we must do something to help,' they don't really relate it to themselves."

The "uchi-soto" (inside-outside) complex, coupled with the island nation's long isolation, makes awareness of overseas needs particularly low, said Osamu Muro, a university professor and expert on Third World non-governmental aid.

He and others also point to other obstacles:

—Religions do not emphasize formal charity work. Buddhism teaches a doctrine of helping others but usually does not initiate formal organized care itself. Shintoism, a fluid set of beliefs, also does not create such vehicles of aid.

—A disbelief in Japan's wealth. "Only recently have the Japanese begun ... to accept the reality that they are not so poor as they used to believe," said Muro.

—A belief that the government must care for its citizens, a legacy of 17th-century paternalistic regimes deepened by the welfare-state clauses of the post-World War II constitution.

Not only do many Japanese believe the government alone should fund social work, but the Community Chest lacks the corporate or employee support that fuels the United Way in the United States, said Yoshihisa Shimizu, the Community Chest's chief of general affairs.

Although Japanese companies provide generous benefits for employees, they have no tradition of making charitable donations, fund-raisers say.

Raising money for projects overseas is even more of a battle, said Masako Hoshino, director of the Japan International Volunteer Center, a kind of private Peace Corps.

"We always face big difficulties in getting funding — we don't know what to do," said Ms. Hoshino.

Last year, she said, the center's third-largest donation came from Band Aid, the British-based charity started by rock star Bob Geldof. "Isn't it strange — a British organization donating to a Japanese group?"

An estimated 250 non-governmental groups raised $101 million for overseas aid in 1985, the Foreign Ministry reports.

Although the figure more than doubled that year, Muro attributed this to short-lived interest in the African famine.

"We are very much backward in our national capacity to raise money for overseas aid," he said.

One of Japan's largest donors is said to be controversial 87-year-old tycoon Ryoichi Sasakawa, who made millions on legalized gambling on motorboat racing.

Officials of his Japan Shipbuilding Industry Foundation say his various charitable foundations gave away $29 million last year overseas and $650 million in Japan.

While Muro and others praise Sasakawa's work, they say the figures cannot be verified, and some aid groups have refused to accept Sasakawa foundation money because of the gambling connection.

Still, fund-raisers find hope in the growing involvement of the media and new Buddhist sects.

Japanese newspapers publicize charity campaigns and television networks devote programs to developing countries, such as a half-hour midday program on the Philippines aired last year by Fuji Television Network. The network said 4 million Japanese watched.

Some Buddhist sects, called "new religions" because they date from the 19th and 20th centuries, also have begun to raise funds. The most active is believed to be the 6-million-member Rissho Kosei-kai, largest single donor to UNICEF in Japan.

EARLY DENTAL VISITS FOR KIDS URGED

CHICAGO (AP) — The ideal time to take a child for the first dental visit is when the child is an infant, reports a study on the Infant Oral Health Program at the University of Iowa, which was started in 1984.

The study, published in the Journal of Pediatric Dentistry, strongly supports the recommendations from the American Academy of Pediatric Dentistry that the child should see a dentist by the age of 1 and that even children as young as 6 months can benefit from dental care.

A major finding of the program, directed by pediatric dentist Dr. Stephen J. Goepferd, was that about half of the children seen were at risk for developing nursing bottle caries caused by using bottles filled with milk, juice or soda as pacifiers or for bedtime or naptime. Decay of the primary teeth can lead to problems in permanent teeth, the report notes.

Vacation Slides Are Last Weapon

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

On PBS the other day, I watched in fascination as a black widow spider carefully wove her web of death. Patiently she awaited her victim ... a fly ... who fought to get out of the trap. And then the horror of what he had done hit him.

I have seen that look of desperation on a human face on one occasion. That was when I returned from vacation and a friend asked me, "Did you take any pictures?"

After she said it, that helpless look came over her face as she realized she had fallen into the ultimate trap ... the quintessential web from which there was no return.

She should have realized that people who return from vacation with 700 slides have no compassion or mercy for the terminally stupid! She should have quit while she was asking if I had a good flight or how was the weather, but no, she had to ask if I had taken any pictures. It served her right.

Trapping an audience to show your vacation slides is tough these days. People are getting smarter and smarter. It used to be they were curious about your travels and what you had seen. Not anymore. When our kids met us at the airport, we said, "We had a terrific time. We got a picture of a panda bear who did the fox trot, a sunset over Hong Kong Life magazine would kill for and a shot of your father eating an eel on a cracker."

There was a time when they'd have said, "Boy, are you lucky. Maybe we'll see all of that one day," and bingo, we'd drag them to a darkened room and they were ours. They have learned to choose their words carefully "Got your claim checks for the luggage?"

Slides have become the ultimate weapon. You could empty the Superdome in 13 seconds with 700 slides. You could clear every major freeway in Los Angeles at rush hour with 700 slides. You could "scare straight" every teenager in America just by threatening to set up the projector for the Smoky Mountains vacation where everyone is dressed in the same clothes for 300 slides because you took all the pictures on the last day.

Locking people into a small, dark room and showing them out-of-focus pictures of the Grand Canyon taken through the windshield of a moving car with the wrong speed film at sunset while you explain what your setting was and how if you look in the lower left-hand corner you can see the rear end of a ground squirrel running for cover just doesn't cut it anymore.

I looked at my friend as she fought to remain calm in her trapped predicament. "So, when can you come to see the slides?" I asked.

"I never knew you could be so ruthless," she said.

"Don't grovel," I said. "What do you expect me to do?"

"Eat me! Please!" she begged.

CHILDHOOD ASTHMA

DENVER (AP) — Childhood asthma can be much more serious than many people think.

Nearly 1,500 children in the United States die from the chronic disease each year and the death rate is on the rise, according to medical experts at the National Jewish Center for Immunology and Respiratory Medicine here.

The experts say children who have trouble adjusting to the disease are the most likely to die from an asthma attack. These children frequently:

— Have emotional disturbances, depressions and-or family problems;
— Disregard their symptoms;
— Use their asthma to manipulate others.

Doctors advise that parents of asthmatic children with such problems, or demonstrating such behavior, should seek medical and psychological evaluation and treatment for their children.

Miss Dixon, Lt. Price Exchange Vows

Mary Elizabeth Dixon of Ayden and Lt. Carl Edward Price of Lenoir were united in marriage Saturday in a 4 p.m. ceremony in St. Paul's Episcopal Church.

MRS. PRICE

The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. Elliott Dixon of Ayden. The bridegroom is the son of Una Dell Price of Lenoir and Fate Price of Granite Falls.

The double-ring ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Lawrence P. Houston Jr. and music was provided by Dr. Robert Irwin, organist; Jeff Adkins, vocalist, and JoAnn Bath and Pam Kelly, violinists. The ceremony was directed by Kimberly Dale.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a floor length gown with a cathedral train of traditional white bridal satin with re-embroidered alencon lace encrustd with seed pearls and sequins. The fitted bodice featured a sabrina neckline, long tapered sleeves and torso waist. Alencon lace embellished with sequins and seed pearls appliqued the bodice, sleeves and outlined the deep V-back. A pyramid of re-embroidered alencon lace etched with seed pearls adorned the front of the skirt ending with a scallped lace hemline. Beaded alencon lace motifs cascaded from the waist to the hemline of the cathedral train with scallped beaded alencon bordering the hemline of the train. The bride chose a waltz length layered veil of illusion with scalloped pearled edge border accented with scattered alencon lace motifs flowing from a lace cap. She carried a cascading bouquet of white bridal roses and lilies of the valley.

Kathryn Dixon of Knoxville, Tenn., served as her sister's maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Tammy Price of Lenoir, sister of the bridegroom, Susan Beck of Greensboro, Debra Branson of Cary, Renee Watson of Washington, D.C., and Nicole Berberat of Geneva, Switzerland.

The maid of honor and bridesmaids wore jade green tea length gowns of raschel lace over satin. The scooped necklines were edged in satin piping and the sleeves were gathered to an elbow length. The V-yoke extended to a fitted bodice and front and back basque waist, which fell into a full skirt. The waistlines were accented with a bow. They carried bouquets of pink roses, pink carnations and pink lilies.

Jerry Price of Chapel Hill served as his brother's best man and ushers were Christopher Tyndall of Rocky Mount, Tim Cooke of Lenoir, Joey Osborne of Patterson and Jeff Taylor of Hickory.

The reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. Guests were received by Mr. and Mrs. Richard Kaiser of Shreveport, La., aunt and uncle of the bride, and Mr. and Mrs. Don Watson of Greenville. Jacqueline Jones and Kim Dale presided at the guest register. The cake was served by Mrs. Ray Kite, Laura Higginbotham and Mrs. Bernie Tyndall.

A bridesmaids luncheon was held Friday at the Colonial Inn in Farmville.

The rehearsal dinner was given by Mrs. Emil Kaiser, grandmother of the bride, at the Sheraton-Greenville. The dance immediately following was given by cousins of the bride.

The bridal couple was entertained at several showers, luncheons and dinner given by friends prior to the ceremony.

The bridegroom is a graduate of N.C. State University in technical education and is a lieutenant in the U.S. Air Force-intelligence in San Angelo, Texas. The bride is a graduate of Meredith College in music education.

After a wedding trip to the N.C. mountains, the couple will reside in San Angelo.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

Dual purpose furniture is great for people who move around a lot or for people who simply like a change. A versatile harvest table is a good example. A harvest table is either oval or rectangular in shape with drop leaves. It serves nicely as a sofa table with both sides dropped; use one side up and it converts into a desk or work area; and with both sides open, it can easily be used as a dining table or dinette table.

It is always more interesting to mix different manufacturers of furniture. For example, one might have a harvest table from Southampton in mahogany with chairs from Century in malikite marble. The reason being so the Jones' next door won't have the identical dining room suit. This promotes individuality and lets a person's personality come through. Another example is a breakfast room table we have featured in our showroom. By using a Sherrill rosewood, gooseneck cocktail table with a 44 inch round top and placing a 25 inch, handpainted porcelain Jardinere (or Plante) inside the table base, the glass top is elevated exactly to proper table height. The result is a breakfast room table that is both beautiful and unique.

You can always look to Betsy Drake Interiors for furnishings that are unique and creative. We invite you to visit our showroom often. Through September 30, we are having our fiscal year end inventory reduction sale with storewide savings up to 60%.

Perry Family Creates College Memorial Fund

GAFFNEY, S.C.--The Blanche Manning Perry Memorial Fund has been created at Limestone College by the family of Gaylord Perry to honor Mrs. Perry and assist the college with the renovation of Winnie Davis Hall.

Winnie Davis Hall, one of Limestone's noted landmarks, is named for the daughter of Jefferson Davis, president of the Confederacy. The hall was originally built to house the college's School of History and to serve as a repository of Civil War documents and artifacts. It has not been used since 1977.

The Perry family decided to stimulate interest in and contribute to the restoration of Winnie Davis Hall because of Mrs. Perry's interest in the building.

"This decision by the family is especially appropriate for honoring Blanche Perry," said Dr. Fred Bassett, vice president for resource development. "She truly loved Winnie Davis Hall and had a great interest in books and history."

The name of the building, which is on the National Register, will not change. The college will honor Mrs. Perry when the building is renovated and reoccupied.

A standing committee will be created by members of the Perry family to oversee the fund and to assist in raising funds for this project.

Friends wishing to contribute to the fund are asked to send checks made payable to the Blanche Manning Perry Memorial Fund, Limestone College Development Office, 1115 College Drive, Gaffney, S.C. 29340.

ULTRASOUND

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Ultrasound has been used for everything from detecting body organs to cleaning dirt-encrusted tools.

Now, ultrasound technology is being developed to produce a microscope that "sees" with sound instead of light. R.J. Dwayne Miller of the University of Rochester says he is investigating how ultrasound can create images of individual atoms.

Since ultrasonic waves are much shorter than those of light, an ultrasound microscope would offer a better examination of the surface of objects. One use may be in the production of computer chips, where surfaces must meet exacting standards.

Footsteps In Sands Of Time Show Some Have Tripped

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am enclosing several quotes from famous people. You may want to pass these along to your readers. I clipped this from The Arizona Republic in Phoenix. If you run this in your column, perhaps it might make some of us feel we are not all that stupid. Thank you. — JOHN NESBIT, PHOENIX

DEAR JOHN: We can all use a little reassurance. These quotes point up the fact that what appears sensible at the time can be ludicrous later. For example:

— "Everything that can be invented has already been invented." — Charles H. Duell, Director of U.S. Patent Office, 1899

— "Who the hell wants to hear actors TALK?" — Harry M. Warner, Warner Bros., 1927

— "Sensible and responsible women do not want to vote." — Grover Cleveland, 1905

— "There is no likelihood man can ever tap the power of the atom." — Robert Millikan, Nobel Prize in Physics, 1923

— "Heavier-than-air flying machines are impossible." — Lord Kelvin, President, Royal Society, 1895

— "Ruth made a big mistake when he gave up pitching." — Tris Speaker, 1921

DEAR ABBY: Please answer this in your column because I am sure I am not the only one who doesn't know. Excuse my ignorance, but what is a "round-robin" letter? What does it contain? How is it started and kept in circulation? I am interested in starting one because our family is so scattered.

My younger sisters and I come from a family that has never been close, and we are trying very hard to get to know our relatives more intimately.

Many thanks, and you may use my name. — JANEEN JORDAN, FULLERTON, CALIF.

DEAR JANEEN: Don't apologize. Many others also asked. A round-robin letter is one that "makes the rounds" of a group with a common interest or a family who wants to keep in touch. To start one, write a newsy letter containing information about your family, then send it to another family member with instructions to add to it and send it to another family member, etc.

When the original letter has made its rounds, the originator takes out his or her first letter, replaces it with a new letter, and another round begins. Of course, the round-robin letters should be kept, because they could be valuable historical souvenirs. (They could be photocopied so that all families could have copies.)

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I frequently encounter difficulty when we have guests to dinner at our home. Very often they stay until the wee hours of the morning (from 3 to 5 a.m.). We have to get up the next morning and get on with our lives.

How does one politely get guests to leave? — TIRED IN HIBBING, MINN.

DEAR TIRED: When you think it's time to call it a night, stand, and pleasantly announce: "Time certainly does fly when the company is good — we're going to turn in now so you nice people can go home." (I'm serious.)

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Educator Hopes Card Will Be Big Help To Teen-Agers

By MARTHA WAGGONER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — You may not be able to include everything an adolescent needs to know about sex education on a laminated pocket card, but author Carole Marsh hopes the card would be enough to convince a teen-ager not to have sex — or at least have it safely.

"If we can't get them to read (books), then let's give them something 2 inches by 3 inches and see if we can get them to read this," said Ms. Marsh of Bath, N.C., who has written a series of 35 sex education materials for children, teachers and parents. "It's just a good reminder."

One side of the card has "Six Super Smart Sex Steps" for the child who wants to say no; the second side has sex "musts" for protection against pregnancy and disease.

"If you communicate to (fourth-, fifth- or sixth-graders) that waiting is really a good idea, they'll take that to heart," said Ms. Marsh, who has written children's books for about 10 years. "We'll not have a lot of luck with teen-agers necessarily. It also encompasses the reality that some kids will be sexually involved."

In addition to the laminated card, the material includes books, parent and teacher guides, posters and newsletters. It is published by Gallopade Publishing Group, which is run by Ms. Marsh and her husband, Bob Longmeyer, and publishes only Ms. Marsh's books.

Ms. Marsh said some of the material had been ordered by national bookstore chains. She has received inquiries on it from around the country and has an international wholesaler.

"It (sex education) is on people's minds right now," Ms. Marsh said in a telephone interview. "There's a lot of interest around the world. So I wrote it with that in mind without any American prejudices in it."

Lois Chenault is an elementary school teacher in Bath who describes herself as conservative. But Ms. Chenault, who reviewed the material as a favor to Ms. Marsh, said she had been impressed by what she read.

"She didn't preach," Ms. Chenault said, adding that Ms. Marsh teaches children how to say no and what to do when they say yes. "Carole knows all kids are not going to say no, and those that don't need to know what to do."

Her explanations "are brief, not long, not drawn out — this is the way it it is, these are the facts," Ms. Chenault said.

A set of "Smart Sex Stuff" workbooks, which include quizzes and games, has been prepared for use in the home or classroom. And three books have been especially prepared for parents: "Like a Virgin: How to Convince Your Child to Abstain from Sex"; "How to Get Your Kid Out of School — Without AIDS, a Disease or a Baby"; and "Could Your Child Die Laughing?: AIDS and Today's Adolescents."

"I don't mince any words," Ms. Marsh said. "The facts are enough; you don't have to make the facts any scarier than they are. The one thing I really try to do ... is really cover a child's lifetime of sex. Most things for children about sex focus on adolescent things that are so traumatic. They harp on don't get pregnant; now they harp on AIDS.

"Like money, there will always be something to worry about. And sex is just the same way. I'm hoping that will be a little bit reassuring. That's just the facts of life. There are good things and bad things and that goes for sex too. Sex is a good thing; you don't want to scare kids to death."

For parents who have doubts, Ms. Marsh urges them in her introduction to tear out pages that disturb them. And although some of the material is meant for children, she reminds parents that they can keep the books in their possession.

"They can keep control of the books and show the parts they want to," she said. "I definitely think the parents should be in control. If they object to something, tear the page out."

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Bennett Ray Skelton of Greenville, S.C., announce the engagement of their daughter, Amy Elizabeth, to Phillip Ray Cox, son of Mr. and Mrs. Grover Glenn Cox of Greenville. The wedding is being planned for Nov. 21.

To peel fresh peaches, dip the whole peach in boling water for a few seconds. The skin will slip off.

"The honeymoon was over when I gained 20 pounds."

"After I got married my weight started creeping up on me. I hated myself for being overweight, and that made me a hard person to live with. Then a friend told me about Diet Center. In two months, I was back to my ideal weight and happily married."

Museum Preserves Tribal, Settler History

BY RICHARD EVERETT
Associated Press Writer

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — This West African country, founded by freed American slaves and known for its strong links to American lifestyles, is trying to rekindle interest in the traditional African cultures that existed before the settlers arrived.

A 19th-century building that once served as the seat of government for the slaves' descendents now houses relics of tribes that have existed for centuries in this rainy, heavily forested coastal region.

The refurbished National Museum, which reopened this summer, will provide the link between the highly Americanized ways of the settlers' descendants, known as Americo-Liberians, and the 16 traditional tribal cultures with their colorful dances, richly dyed handmade cloths and elaborately carved masks.

The museum has had a rocky history since it was first created in 1962 by the late President William Tubman. It has had to cope with a chronic lack of funds, public apathy, the loss of its first site to a modern bridge, an 11-year closure and serious water damage to its collection when a storm ripped the roof off the storage building.

However, Burdie Urey-Weeks has not allowed these problems to get her down since she took over as museum director in 1981. Her quiet voice belies the determination visible in her brown eyes, which flash behind large round eyeglasses.

"It's a little shameful that the oldest independent republic in Africa doesn't have an up-to-date museum," she said.

She oversaw the museum's move from its first location on Providence Island, the original disembarkment point of the settlers, to its current home on the corner of Broad and Buchanan Streets in the heart of downtown Monrovia.

She was also responsible for bringing in Bill Seideman, a Fullbright scholar, as a consultant and persuading a debt-plagued government to provide about $150,000 to renovate the new site.

The primary function of the museum, beyond being a repository of national cultures, will be to educate Liberians about their past, she said.

"Liberia has an iron-making tradition recognized by Europeans in the 16th century as being as highly developed as that of Birmingham, England," Seideman added.

Early examples of clay pottery and leather clothing from the region also show a high degree of technical skill.

He noted the difficulty of interesting people in an underdeveloped country in their past, when present needs are so great.

"People undergoing rapid social change are generally not interested in where they're coming from; they're usually more interestd in where they're going," he said.

Schoolchildren who have seen some of the exhibits have shown more interest than adults, he said.

"They're farther removed from their cultural heritage and are thus more curious about it. Adults are too busy trying to get on with daily life," he said, adding this phenomenon was true even in industrialized countries.

Seideman said the refurbished museum's focus on education adheres to Tubman's desire to make the museum a part of his "unification" policy, designed to bring together the Americo-Liberians and the indigenous peoples.

Tubman was the first president to try to raise the living standards and social status of the tribal people, who were considered uncivilized by the elite Americo-Liberian communities in the coastal settlements.

President Samuel Doe, a tribal Krahn who seized power from then-President William Tolbert in a bloody 1980 coup, did much to break the grip of the Americo-Liberians on the country by bringing many indigenous people into the government.

Urey-Weeks and Seideman see the museum as a center for positive interaction between Liberia's social groups.

"The museum has always promoted national unity," Urey-Weeks said.

The museum's collection of tribal artifacts includes several hundred ceremonial masks, carved wooden statuettes, traditional chiefs' costumes, iron tools, clay pottery, jewelry and musical instruments.

Also included in the collections are modern historical materials: several hundred photographs of Americo-Liberian families; 19th-century architecture, furniture and household articles of past Liberian presidents; and bookplate illustrations of Monrovia in the 1830s and '40s.

The three-story building chosen as the museum's new site is a landmark in its own right. Built in 1862, the building once housed the government's Treasury Department, House of Representatives and Supreme Court.

The renovation began in 1984. Today, the freshly-painted white building with brick-red trim gleams in the foggy gloom of the rainy season.

Collectors Prize Painted Envelopes

By DOUG FISHER
Associated Press Writer

PIQUA, Ohio (AP) — Like the watercolor pictures she paints on envelopes, Judith N. Fogt wants to be one of a kind.

Envelopes aren't the medium most artists choose, but Mrs. Fogt's clients aren't ordinary art collectors. She caters to stamp experts who want to add something extra to their collections.

She makes cachets — envelopes on which are pasted stamps on their first day of issue, canceled with a postmark relevant to the subject and accompanied by the drawings which make the envelopes unique.

"When I decided to become a cachet maker, I decided to become the best cachet maker ever," Mrs. Fogt said. She estimates the profession has about 200 practitioners.

In five years since she started making cachets, Mrs. Fogt estimates she has a backlog of 2,000 orders. She also has a regular column in "First Days," the journal of the American First Day Cover Society.

Yet, she admits she "didn't even know what stamp collectors were called" when she got into the business.

"The collection of cacheted covers certainly is an important part of mainstream stamp collecting," said Michael Laurence, editor and publisher of Linn's Stamp News in nearby Sidney. He said Mrs. Fogt had already made a name for herself in the business.

Mrs. Fogt, 45, studied at the Dayton Art Institute and worked in commercial art until one day in 1982 when she saw a television program featuring Mike Weddle, a cachet maker from Columbus.

"I said this was something I had to do with the rest of my life," she said.

Mrs. Fogt said she was surprised Weddle would help her get started in the business. He sent her some extra first-day envelopes so she could try her hand, and he took some of her early work to sell at the 1982 American First Day Cover Society convention.

Out of about 25 cachets, Weddle came back with two or three, she said. "I thought, gee, I can survive, too," she said.

Mrs. Fogt said her career may have been fated, noting that the house she and her husband bought 18 years ago was built in 1847, the year the first postage stamp was issued.

Mrs. Fogt estimates she spends 40 hours a week drawing, plus 12 to 15 hours a week researching the subject of the stamp.

"I do not count the research as work time, because I love it so much. That's my hobby," she said.

Mrs. Fogt says she looks for unusual facts or connections she can illustrate.

For instance, she specializes in collecting stamps of naturalist John J. Audubon. Her research showed that he and Daniel Boone were friends, so one of her cachets pictures the two of them with a first-day Audubon stamp.

Mrs. Fogt says her most expensive cachets sell for up to $200, but the average price is $15 to $40. She produces about 30 a week, and says she invests as much as $1,000 a week in buying stamps and getting them canceled at appropriate post offices.

"Some people get in, think they're going to make big money, don't, and drop out," she said of the business.

Laurence said modern cachet collecting was started by George Linn, the founder of Linn's Stamp News. After President Warren Harding died, Linn took envelopes with first-day Harding stamps, had them canceled in Marion, Harding's hometown, and then printed "In Memoriam" on the envelopes.

Farm Museum Is A Tar Heel's Dream

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer

COOPER'S GAP, N.C. (AP) — Bob Hipps is a man on a mission.

"My only goal is to see this turned into a museum," he said, sipping coffee in the living room of the Polk County farmhouse that has been home to his family since 1842. "But I'm at the end of my rope."

After traveling around the world with the U.S. Navy, Hipps settled in New Jersey. But he never forgot the trips he made as a young boy to the farm in the foothills of the Appalachian Mountains.

"It was one of the true highlights of my childhood," he said. "I still have vivid images of the mules hooked up to the wagon in the fall and crushing sorghum into molasses."

The farm was last owned and operated by three brothers, Ragan, Theophilus and Hobart Jackson, and their sister, Frances. The three brothers have died and Frances was placed in a nursing home.

During a visit to North Carolina last fall, Hipps learned that the farm and its contents were going to be sold and the proceeds split among 11 heirs.

"I felt like someone was trying to tear out my heart," he said. "I decided it wasn't going to happen."

Hipps contacted an old college friend about investing in the land and turning it into a pheasant farm.

"That was before I saw what the auctioneer was pulling out," he said. "Nobody had any idea what was here. I doubt anyone in this century knew about some of the things the family saved."

To his amazement, there were momentos, letters, books and even shopping lists dating back to the 1840s and earlier.

"It was like looking into a living time capsule," Hipps said. "This place has been continually inhabited since 1842."

Hipps managed to raise enough money to stop the auction. He began driving down from New Jersey every weekend to work on the project.

The 1,500-mile weekend commute quickly became too much and Hipps sold everything and gave up his job to move to Overhome, the family's name for the farm nestled in the shadow of Wildcat Spur.

After sleeping in a tent for three months, Hipps obtained permission from the estate's heirs to move inside the farmhouse, where he sleeps on the pine floor at night and works 20-hour days.

The 11 heirs agreed in February to sell the property to Hipps for $140,000, and he's now trying to raise the money.

With the help of friends and other interested parties, Hipps has been able to keep the farm and its contents together. But he says time is running out for Overhome.

"I'm not ready to admit defeat," he said. "But I feel like Custer in the middle of the battle. If someone doesn't show up soon, I'm going to lose."

Hipps wants to turn Overhome into a working museum that would depict life on a Southern subsistence farm.

"We're not trying to save a farm. We're trying to save a heritage," he said as he led a visitor on a tour of the farm. "Other homesteads have been preserved, but they are really just the bare bones without the meat. We have the whole body."

That's because the Jacksons saved everything.

Inside the nine-room farmhouse that was built in this century to replace the original log cabin, Hipps found a grocery list and a black felt hat with a handwritten $1 receipt from 1857. He also found a paper doll family from 1895, an 1837 court summons for a man who owed a Jackson family member $20 and a notice for an 1859 school board election.

There's also $80 in Confederate money, an 1873 letter from a family member who had gone to Kansas on a hunting trip, and about two dozen pairs of eyeglasses.

"The detail of this place is incredible," Hipps said. "Someone can walk into here and see how they lived, how they ate."

In the 16 barns, sheds and other outbuildings are more than 300 hand tools, most of them made in the farm's blacksmith or wood shops. More than 1,000 bales of hay are stored in the loft and a ham is still hanging in the meathouse on a hook crafted from a hickory branch.

The Jacksons were conservative, religious people who knew how to survive on their own. If something broke or wore out, it was stored away until it could be used for some other purpose.

The family finally wired the house for electricity in the early 1950s and burned 25-watt bulbs in the ceiling sockets. They paid the electric bill annually because they never went over the minimum. They had one electric radio and a windup phonograph. They never owned a television.

"They were poor but they weren't ignorant," Hipps said. "They lived that way because that was the way the way they were taught. They knew no other way."

Hipps has something in common with his ancestors — he's out of money and he has to find a way to save the farm. He can't go after state or federal funds until the farm receives non-profit status, which could take months.

To attract attention to the venture, Hipps has shown the farm to more than 1,000 people, including historians, preservationists and journalists. Their reaction has been favorable but contributions have amounted to less than $4,000.

Ten area residents did guarantee a $45,000 loan to buy the household goods in March and a 15-member Jackson Farm Restoration Committee and Advisory Board was created this summer.

"I have nothing else to sell," Hipps said. "This comes from my heart because it's my ancestors and because I love this country and these people. I'll never leave this place if I can save it and get it going."

Partyboats Approach To Going Fishing

By TOM FEGELY
The Allentown Morning Call

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — Getting started in freshwater fishing is intimidating to many people who may not want to do it every weekend, but would like to at least buy some gear and catch a fish.

It's doubly frightening to consider a trip on the high seas or anywhere along the New Jersey coastline, the very spot where novices probably stand the best chance of coming back with a catch fit for the table. Families that travel to the shore each summer for a week of sun and surf are perfect candidates for taking a break and trying some fishing.

Charter boats, those that require deposits and typically carry four-to-six people on deep-sea excursions, are expensive, running from $250 to $400 or more for a day on the water. But there is an inexpensive way for the sun-and-sand crowd to enjoy a day saltwater angling without spending much money or being subject to embarrassment or frustration.

The not-so-secret recommendation is to "party."

Partyboats, known also as "headboats" by salty anglers, provide inexpensive ways for individuals, couples or families to enjoy a sea-fishing experience. There are about 100 of them — ranging from old but seaworthy 35-footers to modern aluminum-hulled "ships" of 100-feet or more.

Most partyboat trips aren't necessarily "deep-sea" excursions although some of the larger boats will head east of the shoreline to fish submerged wrecks or drift for bluefish. Most partyboats simply stay close to port while fishing the bays and near-shore waters on half-day or full-day outings. They can be found anywhere from Sandy Hook, N.J., to Cape May and seldom require reservations.

Bringing your own gear isn't a good idea, unless you know it's sufficient to handle the type of fish you'll be after. Light tackle just won't do. Not only will it be insufficient for all but flounder but whenever you hook into a fish it will literally run all over the place, usually tangling in the lines of other anglers.

Such occurrences seldom make the light-tackle angler the most popular person on board.

Although reservations usually aren't taken on such boats, and you can board right up to the minute prior to departure, it's best to get there early. The larger boats can carry 100 or more passengers while the smaller ones take proportionately less. On drift boats, such as those that fish for flounder, weakfish or bluefish, angling is done from one side only. While this will change from time to time, there are preferential spots and if you're going as a contingent, you'll probably want to stay together.

Generally there's a choice of flounder, or fluke as they're also called, bluefish, blackfish, sea bass, whiting, ling, weakfish and others via headboats although you won't be the one making the choice when aboard a particular vessel. But you certainly have a choice of boats and should ask in advance what you'll be catching.

Fluke and bluefish are the more popular species. They're caught in the near-offshore waters and bays in the summer months. Such a boat is probably the easiest to find and you'll return with some tasty fare. Bouncing bottom will yield fluke (summer flounder), blackfish, sea bass and other species.

If the quarry to be pursued isn't listed on the sign or in a brochure or newspaper ad, ask what's in store before going aboard. Your best bet is to phone the captain or visit the dock previous to your trip to ask questions. Better yet, seek the advice of someone who has patronized the boat or query at a tackle and bait shop.

A Hot-Cake Spy Story

THE KREMLIN CONTRACT. By James Barwick. Putnam. 254 Pages. $17.95.

As spy stories go, James Barwick's "The Kremlin Contract" goes about like countless others of recent years.

Addicts of such fiction, however, probably will regard it as quite a hot-cake.

There certainly is an impressive cast of characters: top echelons of the powerful in Russia and the United States — from Stalin and Eisenhower on down — along with spies and counterspies galore.

In 1953, Stalin, aging, ill and half crazy, is on the verge of setting off World War III by invading Western Europe. But since America has the atom bomb, Russian generals can see only disaster. They plan to assassinate Stalin.

Yet, before they can get a chance, monumental military preparations by both nations are carried right to the trigger stage. Secretly, Russian military leaders plead with their U.S. counterparts to wait ....

In the meantime, spies of the two countries both work together and double-cross each other amid an orgy of torture, killings and, yes, sex aplenty.

Chinese Treasures Subject To Thievery

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

BEIJING (AP) — Every year Chinese archaeologists prove ancient man's versatility and sense of beauty with their startling discoveries. And every year Chinese thieves give evidence to modern man's greed with their looting of the nation's cultural heritage.

This year the bounty and the booty of Chinese archaeology have been particularly sensational.

The discovery of 3,000-year-old bronze figures in southwestern Sichuan is being compared to China's most famous monument to past grandeur, the terracotta warriors of Xian. At the same time in Sichuan, 10,000 ancient graves have been cleaned out.

In western Qinghai, more than 5,000 articles have been stolen from Neolithic Age tombs. The traffic in smuggled relics to Hong Kong is said to be so heavy that some ancient pottery and other antiques are selling at bargain rates.

The situation has become so serious that the State Council issued orders in May to all local cultural relics bureaus demanding greater efforts to stop plundering.

As a warning to would-be thieves, a Beijing court recently imposed the death sentenced on a 22-year-old man who tried to break into a treasure house of the Forbidden City, the home of China's past emperors in Beijing, and steal imperial gold seals.

The thievery problem is the most acute in rural areas where farmers who may earn the equivalent of $100 a year in the fields can make far more in the tombs. Last year in central Henan, 400 people from eight villages banded together to pillage 500 graves dating back to the 10th century B.C. In southern Jiangxi, thousands of farmers descended on 1,000 ancient tombs in a 10-day rampage this year.

In 1985, when diggers near Shanghai uncovered the remains of a bejeweled, 200-year-old Qing Dynasty noblewoman, a near-riot broke out in which the corpse was ripped to pieces.

"There have been a lot of things taken, so many that we don't know what's being robbed," said Huang Jinglue of the State Cultural Relics Bureau.

Peasants, many ignorant of the law, are not the only culprits.

"Some party members and cadres in rural areas should also be blamed because they have taken a laissez-faire attitude to the illegal activities or even join them," the newspaper Farmers' Daily said.

Five officials of a local branch of the National Arts Export and Import Corp. in southern Hunan were imprisoned last November for netting the equivalent of $100,000 through antique smuggling.

Most smugglers disguise themselves as traders and roam the countryside seeking out farmers with relics for which they pay a fraction of going rates in Hong Kong and other world antique markets.

Most antiques exit through Guangdong province, adjacent to Hong Kong, either hidden on produce trucks or aboard fishing boats that link up with Hong Kong buyers in international waters.

According to official reports, Guangdong police this summer exposed 70 relics smuggling gangs and recovered more than 1,000 valuable objects. Among them were painted pottery from the Neolithic period and a 14-foot-high stone-carved Buddha from the Tang Dynasty (618-907).

Last December police in Canton, provincial capital of Guangdong, arrested 10 people and confiscated 3,000 items of pottery, bronze cauldrons, porcelain, jade and old coins in the city's largest smuggling case in 38 years of Communist rule. Police also retrieved almost $300,000 worth of Chinese and Hong Kong currencies.

Elsewhere, police in central Shaanxi, where the ancient capital of Xian is situated, have uncovered 11 smuggling rings and closed down 354 shops since the beginning of 1986, while authorities in the famed pottery town of Jingdezhen have retrieved more than 1,000 pieces headed for the antique stores of Hong Kong and Macao.

Ironically, as China tries to stanch the illegal flow of its treasures, it has emphasized thievery more than discovery in Chinese archaeology.

Little has been said so far about the excavation work in Guanghan county in Sichuan where 5,000 pieces, including 1,000 bronze figures dating as far back as 1700 B.C., have been uncovered.

Wang Luwei of the Cultural Relics Bureau told The Associated Press that the Sichuan find could compare in importance with the 2,000 lifesize terracotta warriors and horses standing guard near the mausoleum of Emperor Qin Shi Huang (259-210 B.C.), the first ruler of a united China.

The warriors were discovered by a farmer in 1974, and have since become one of China's main tourist attractions.

"We can't say which is more important," Miss Wang said. "They each have their own unique qualities and are equally significant."

She explained that the figures at Sichuan could offer evidence of links between Chinese civilizations and the peoples who later came to inhabit South and Central America.

"That's one of the many research subjects the archaeologists are keenly interested in."

There have been other exciting finds this year. Also in Sichuan, archaeologists found the front tooth and lower jaw bone of a human living in the pleistocene period 1.8 million years ago. In western Gansu, evidence was found of a culture dating back 5,000 to 7,000 years, pushing back by 1,000 years the habitation of the Yellow River banks, the birthplace of Chinese civilization.

Archaeologists in northeastern Liaoning uncovered an "unimaginable historical site" of altars, temples and tombs dating back 5,000 years. It could alter the historical conclusion that the more southerly Xia Dynasty of 4,000 years ago was China's first organized state.

In eastern Zhejiang 1,000 funerary objects, 90 percent of them jade, were found in 4,000-year-old tombs. An additional 1,700 terracotta warriors, smaller than those in Xian, were dug up in central Hebei while 4,000, also 2,000 years old, were excavated in eastern Jiangsu.

A Merger Of Irish Names And Harmony

By JOE EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Jamie O'Hara remembers the first time he and Kieran Kane sang together in public.

"We were asking ourselves: 'Will we hit the right note?'" O'Hara recalled.

Although they did poorly during that initial performance about three years ago, they've hit enough correct notes since then to become one of the fastest rising duets in country music.

The two make up the O'Kanes, who have merged their Irish names and their tight harmony to take their simple music to the top of the country charts.

Their single, "Can't Stop My Heart From Lovin' You," was a No. 1 hit on the country music charts in May. Their first single, "Oh Darlin," made the Top 10 earlier.

Both hits, and their current "Daddies Need to Grow Up Too," are in their debut album, "The O'Kanes." The LP has been in the Top 10 of the country album charts this year.

The 36-year-old O'Hara and 37-year-old Kane are Nashville songwriters who developed their eclectic style during writing sessions in Kane's stuffy attic. Their music is a blend of country, blues, bluegrass and folk sounds set off by O'Hara's guitar playing and Kane's mandolin work. "It has so many elements," Kane said. "It's a product of everything we've been doing. It's acoustical based with elements of country and blues and all kinds of things."

Said O'Hara, "I'd rather other people define it than me."

Regardless of how it is portrayed, their music had to overcome that first performance at a Nashville nightclub.

"In a word, we were nervous," O'Hara recalled. "We'd never done it before and 95 percent of the audience was our peers — a very discriminating audience."

Kane's recollection: "After you've been through a painful experience, it's hard to remember just how bad the pain was. It's hard to relate to what a broken leg feels like after you've recovered."

Their rapid rise — a No. 1 record on their second release — has made them one of the most heralded new acts of the year. In fact, they are finalists for four Country Music Association awards: single and song of the year for "Can't Stop My Heart From Loving You," music video of the year for "Oh Darlin" and Horizon Award for career development.

But their chart success has left them seemingly unimpressed.

"It's probably not that important to the public," O'Hara said. "When I was growing up and I heard a song I liked, I didn't ask whether it was No. 1."

O'Hara, originally from Toledo, Ohio, wrote the No. 1 hit "Grandpa (Tell Me 'Bout the Good Ole Days)," which was recorded by the country mother-daughter duo the Judds. The touching tune was a finalist for song of the year in 1986.

"I woke up and got a 'gift,'" he said about the inspiration for the song. Both his grandfathers were dead, and the song filled a void.

"Songs fill up holes for songwriters. 'Grandpa' did that for me," O'Hara said. "I feel like I have a grandfather now."

A former star football player at Indiana University, O'Hara was given his first guitar by his father while in college shortly before his father died.

"I was attached to it 15 hours a day," he recalled. "All the emotions I felt after he died came out of the guitar. It was an avenue for me — a channel for me to express things."

Kane, a native of Queens, N.Y., is a former bluegrass and folk singer. As a country performer, he had two Top 10 hits, "You're the Best" and "It's Who You Love," before teaming up with O'Hara.

The O'Kanes are one of the few male duets in country music, although Willie Nelson has recorded duets with various rotating partners.

They've put together one of the most impressive bands in Nashville. Bass player Henry Strezlecki has played with Bob Dylan and others. Drummer Roy Yeager has played with the Atlanta Rhythm Section. Accordion player Jay Spell has played for Canned Heat and Jimmy Buffett. Rounding out the band is Kane's brother Richard, who plays guitar, fiddle and banjo.

At Special Beginnings, We Go Through A Little More Labor So You Can Go Through A Little Less

Check into a hospital to have your baby and you'll probably be moved at least four times before you take the baby home. While that may be convenient for the hospital, it adds more stress and discomfort to a time when you already have plenty.
Special Beginnings, the new birthing center in the Women's Pavilion at Heritage Hospital, offers a gentler, more sensible way. Labor, delivery, recovery and postpartum care all take place in your private, beautifully decorated birthing room.
It's a little more work for our staff to bring the medical care to you instead of wheeling you around the building. But helping you relax and feel more at home actually reduces labor and recovery time in most cases.
Special Beginnings is more than just a new place to give birth; it's a whole new way to give your baby a good start in life.
To arrange a tour of the Women's Pavilion and Special Beginnings, call us at 641-7272 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Birdcages Double As Decorative Accessories And Housing For Pets

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Observers have often noted that Americans love pets. But birdcages — a form of pet housing — recently have become fashionable decorative accessories.

The highly ornamental devices in wood and metal have been showing up in rooms pictured in decorating magazines. They also have been garnering spirited bidding at some auction sales.

For example, Ursula Hermacinski, a specialist in 19th century European decorative arts at Christie's East, the auction gallery in New York, said the most ornate 19th century bird cages are very saleable.

"They are being purchased by people who are thinking of them as decorative accessories, not because they actually need a cage for a bird," she added, noting that prices range from $200 to $2,000 depending more on decorative appeal than on age and rarity.

Actually, 19th century birdcages have been quietly popular for quite a few years among well-to-do fanciers of English antiques, according to Hermacinski. When the estate of Mrs. C.J. Devine Sr., was sold at auction in 1985, there were eight lots of birdcages among the antiques.

Since little is known about the history of birdcages, Hermacinski appraises and dates them by observing the materials used and the architectural styles employed. As decorative objects they were most likely designed to fit in with whatever style was ascendant at any particular time.

The evidence of paintings indicates that keeping birds in cages in the home goes back at least to the 16th century. They were particularly popular as household decoration during the 18th and 19th centuries in France and England. The late Victorian era, with its penchant for subduing nature to keep it in home conservatories, also contained a vogue for birds in cages.

Birdhouses for outdoor display also have captured the public's imagination. This year when the Parrish Museum in Southampton, N.Y., mounted an exhibition and auction of 55 birdhouses designed by eminent architects, the bidding was brisk. With a top price of $15,000 (for a birdhouse designed by Robert A.M. Stern), the museum was able to raise $145,000 from the sale, according to Trudy Kramer, director.

Kramer ties the enthusiasm to interest in landscaping and gardening. The idea for the birdhouse exhibition and sale developed out of a program begun several years ago to study American gardens at the turn of the century.

"We studied the great gardens and organized a lecture series on landscape history and design," she recalled. She pointed out that at the turn of the century, architects such as Stanford White, whose mansions dot the area, actually did design birdhouses.

While antique birdcages and ornamental birdhouses are valued for their decorative potential, live birds and cages in which to keep them also are enjoying renewed attention.

Ruth Hanessian of Rockville, Md., Washington-area coordinator for the American Federation of Aviculture, says keeping birds as pets is on the increase, even though it is not so popular as it was in the early part of the 20th century. Birds make good pets for individuals who travel a great deal or live in restricted quarters since they are easy to care for and take little room, she said.

The psittatines, a large and colorful group that includes budgerigars, macaws, parrots, cockatoos and cockatells, are particularly popular, according to Lee Phillips, a past president of the American Federation of Aviculture. These birds were banned from importation for many years but improvements in breeding, nutrition and medicine have taken place, so that while some psittatines can't be imported other species of the same family can.

Those seeking a cage for a living bird have to be more careful about its safety than those who use cages purely decoratively, noted Hanessian.

Live birds need cages free of lead-based or any toxic paint, large enough to accommodate the bird comfortably, and easy to keep clean with easy outside access to food and water so these can be changed frequently.

Bars should be spaced closely so a bird cannot get its head caught between them and there should be more horizontal than vertical space since birds fly back and forth, not up and down. A variety of perches inside the cage is ideal. These should be thick enough so the bird's foot goes two thirds of the way around.

Garden Clinic

Q: Please give me some information about the plant named melampodium. I saw it in the bedding plant trial garden at the North Carolina State University Arboretum in Raleigh.

A: Melampodium is one of the newer bedding plants available to gardners. 'Medaillon,' the variety we grew at our trial garden, has yellow-orange, daisy-like flowers and dark green leaves. It grows to be 30 inches wide, 22 to 24 inches tall and blooms all summer.

Q: What is a "multiplier" onion?

A: Multiplier onions are a hardy type of onion allowed to remain in the garden over winter. In summer the tops produce new bulblets that drop to the ground to start a new crop. Multiplier onions are used as green onions and are not suitable for storage.

Q: Is it possible to use sheared white pines as a hedge?

A: At the NCSU Arboretum we have a hedge of sheared white pine (Pinus strobus). Most people never think of pines when considering plants to use for hedges, usually chosing the common broadleaf evergreens like photinia, privet and wax myrtle. The white pine gives a different texture and color to enjoy. Generally, one shearing a year when the new growth is about half expanded in the spring will be adequate to keep the hedge shaped. Another excellent candidate is the Virginia or scrub pine (Pinus virginia). Its needles are dark, green and it has less problems with root rots than the white pine.

Q: How deep should crocus corms be planted?

A: Crocus corms and other small bulbs (those 1 inch and less in height) should be planted 1 to 2 inches apart and 5 inches deep.

The first step in the repair of a bureau drawer that doesn't operate smoothly is to examine it and the runners on which it moves back and forth.

Remove the drawer and see how it is constructed, since that is the key to how it should be fixed. If anything is loose — the most common cause of trouble — tightening should be done in the manner of the original construction. For instance, if the parts were glued together, it is not wise to use either nails or screws to reattach anything that has become separated.

Only when it is impossible to follow the style of construction should you look for another way to handle the problem. Even then, it is all right to substitute glue for nails, not the other way around. This is especially true if nails have become loose, causing a dragging of the drawer against the sides and bottom.

A usual reason for drawer problems is a split bottom. the best way to handle this is to glue a narrow piece of wood or canvas across the split. if the bottom is pulling away from the frame or there is any other joint trouble, common sense will tell you to attempt a repair that will bring the drawer back to its original condition. Sometimes this can be done solely with glue, sometimes with nails and sometimes with both, but consider the use of clamps to hold everything together.

The runners on which the drawer slides may be out of line and usually can be set back into place, but when they are worn, they should be replaced, You can get the same kind or consider the use of more modern plastic or metal types, either with or without ball bearings. If you haven't had any experience with the runners and drawers, be sure you understand how they work before you leave the home center or other store.

One thing that should be avoided is a hasty removal of any wood that may be warped. When humidity conditions change, the drawer is likely to give you new troubles. But if some removal is required, do it carefully, testing constantly to be sure you do not overdo it.

When a drawer has to be lifted slightly to open all the way, it sometimes can be made to operate smoothly by placing a couple of thumb tacks in the runners at the front end. This will lift the drawer slightly to permit easier sliding.

When a drawer opens part-way and will go no farther, don't see how strong you are by forcing it. You not only may damage the drawer further, you may brake the object that is causing the problem in the first place. Tug gently. If that doesn't work, try using something like a ruler to prod inside the drawer and dislodge the offending item.

If nothing works and you do not want to risk damaging either the drawer or its contents, take out the drawers below and above the blocked one and see if you can manage to free it from one of those spots. Sometimes you may have to take off the back of the furniture, which usually isn't as difficult as it sounds although it might be a little tedious.

If a drawer hits the back panel of the bureau, attach a small block of wood at the back of the runner to act as a stop. And when all repairs have been completed, apply a lubricant to the runners to keep things sliding smoothly. Home centers and some hardware stores sell little glides that can be attached to the runners to help the operation of a drawer.

If you have taken off any wood to make a repair, be sure the exposed area is sealed to prevent future warpage. You can use any one of several sealants, including a 50-50 mixture of shellac and denatured alcohol.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much helpful data in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $2 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, N.J., 07666.)

Here's The Answer

Q. — I recently changed the washer in a leaky faucet. After I installed the new washer, the leak from the faucet opening stopped. Now a new leak has developed. This one is from the faucet handle itself and seems to be coming from the large nut that goes all the way round the handle. Before I start to take the faucet apart, can you tell me what I should know about this type of repair?

A. — This leak undoubtedly is coming from what is called the packing nut. The first thing to do is to tighten the nut with the proper wrench, placing some tape around the nut so that the finish does not get damaged. If the nut was loose, you will feel it immediately as you turn. Sometimes this is all that is necessary. But if the leak persists, unscrew the nut and replace the washer you will find underneath it. If there is no washer there, you will find a kind of stringlike substance called packing. You can buy some at any hardware store. When the new packing has been wound around the stem and the nut replaced, the leak will stop. Once in a while, the item underneath the nut will be some kind of rubber ring rather than conventional washer. If so, take it off and buy a replacement of the same size and composition. When you go to buy it, ask for an O-ring.

Q. — The drain in our kitchen sink works slowly. It always clears itself, but only after 15 or 20 minutes have passed. I would like to use a chemical cleaner and a suction cup, but my neighbor says I shouldn't do this. Is he right?

A. — They should not be used together. Use one or the other, as operating the plunger after you have used a chemical can result in an injury from the splashing. The best way is to use the suction cup and, if that does not work, then use the chemical. Or, use the chemical and forget about the plunger for the time being.

Q. — Our toilet tank sweats constantly in warm weather. I know this can be stopped by putting a fabric covering on the tank, but when I did that years ago, the fabric caused the toilet seat to slam down every once in a while. Is there some other way to stop the sweating?

A. — You can use an insulating material on the inside of the tank. This will prevent the outside of the tank from getting cold, which condenses the warm, humid air that settles on it. When the tank exterior is not cold, there will be no condensation. Or, you can have a plumber install a valve that will mix a little warm water with the cold water in the tank, again preventing the tank exterior from getting cold.

(Leaky faucets, balky toilet tanks, pipe leaks and tank condensation are among the topics discussed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Make Simple Plumbing Repairs," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y., 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Wood Kits A Big Hit

From WOOD
A Meredith Magazine

Woodworking from kits affords woodworkers the satisfaction of a handmade project without the expense and time that crafting from scratch requires.

In Wood magazine, Robert H. Taupeka, president of Emperor Clock Co., a kit manufacturer in Fairhope, Ala., cites a few reasons for the popularity of kits. Many of his customers actually get hooked on kits. "I know of a minister who orders from us. So far he has built 136 of our clocks."

Why? "Because our kits are high quality, have old-time traditional style, take less time and effort than building from scratch, and carry a moderate price," replies Taupeka.

According to Louise Christoffers, of the Bartley Collection Ltd., in Easton, Md., customers ordering their antique reproduction furniture kits fall into these general categories:

People who appreciate quality furniture but would rather build it themselves than pay high retail prices.

Professional and business people with little time but who enjoy making something.

Retirees who can't build from scratch because they're short of space or the necessary tools, but still like the accomplishment of building something first-rate.

Kit builders usually don't have a shop because they can't yet afford one, no longer need one, or wouldn't spend that much time in one. Yet, they have the desire, and the aptitude, to craft quality with their hands. Kits fill this need, and continue to be popular. Says Taupeka: "We have close to 400,000 repeat customers."

Most manufacturers offer furniture kits of traditional and classic styles — Colonial, Queen Anne, Chippendale and Shaker, to name the most popular. Many kits are based on original museum pieces that would be worth thousands. As an example, a replica kit of an $8,500 Queen Anne end table might cost only $300.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip: TWO ANGRY, PUGNACIOUS JUNKYARD WORKERS JUST HAD THEIR SCRAP.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: E equals N

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J73 ♡K1062 ◇AQ83 ♣Q6
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	?

What action do you take?
A.—You have the right distribution and right suits for a takeout double, but you have too many wasted values in the opponents' suits. Pass, and wait to see how the auction develops.

Q.2—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ72 ♡K43 ◇Q762 ♣9
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one club. What action do you take?
A.—Because you are not strong enough to make a takeout double and then bid spades over any response from partner, and because you do not have an ideal shape for a double, simply overcall one spade. That action can be taken with a pretty good hand.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ2 ♡9 ◇K83 ♣AQ10852
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner's bidding shows two things: at least five spades (otherwise he would have responded one diamond initially) and a better than minimum response. A jump to three spades nicely describes the strength of your hand and the quality of your three-card support.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠73 ♡K106 ◇A8 ♣AKJ1065
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	1 ♠	1 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—If you did no more than rebid three clubs, you don't appreciate the power of your hand. Partner has shown some 9 points with his bid, and the no trump game should depend, at worst, on a club finesse. Bid three no trump.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠9 ♡762 ◇1052 ♣KQ10963
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Dbl	?

What action do you take?
A.—It looks as if the spade suit belongs to the enemy, and you are likely to be outbid. Under the circumstances, you might as well get in the lead-directing bid of two clubs, to help partner get off to the best lead should West become the declarer.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠73 ♡A985 ◇A107 ♣AQ98
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—That depends on your methods. If you play that a two-over-one response is a game force, you can afford to bid only two no trump now to hear what partner says. However, if your initial response promised only about 11 points, we suggest you jump to four spades. Partner's spade rebid virtually guarantees a six-card suit in this auction.

The Turbo That's Going To Save You Up To $3,000

PRESENTING THE PEUGEOT 505 TURBOS.

Car and Driver recently described the 150-hp Peugeot 505 Turbo S as a car with "instant launch capabilities."

And now, these cars are about to rocket out of the showroom. Because until September 30th, you'll get as much as $3000* in cash when you buy a Peugeot 505 Turbo S sedan or wagon. You can take the money and run, or use it as a down payment. You can even use it as a down payment on a lease or financing.

But besides $3000, you'll also get a car with standard features and amenities (like ABS) only available from Saab and Volvo at extra cost, if at all.

So stop in for a test drive. You'll see what Saab and Volvo are worried about.

PEUGEOT 505 NOTHING ELSE FEELS LIKE IT.

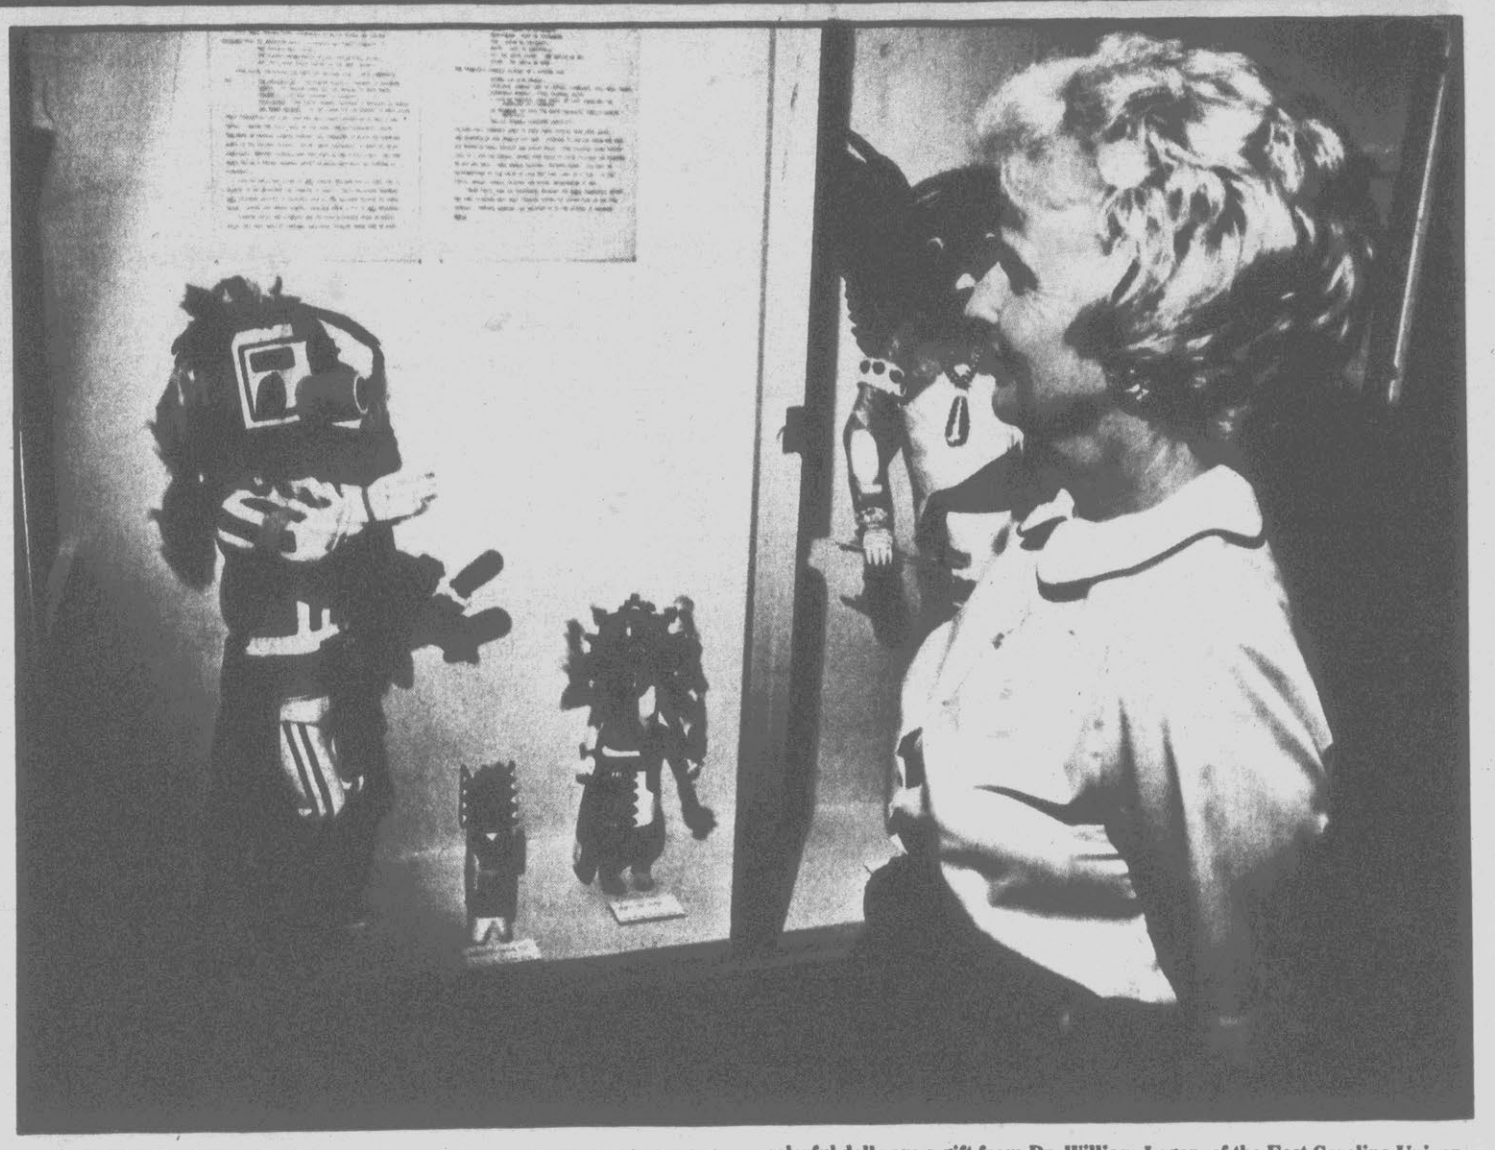
MUSEUM STAIRWAY — The spiral, wrought-iron decorated stairway from the first to the second floor of the Greenville Museum of Art is one of a very few of this type of stairs found in 20th century North Carolina buildings.



VIEWS NEW ACQUISITION — Yvonne Deyton, past president of the museum's board of directors, looks at a new acquisition in the collections of the Greenville Museum of Art, kachina ritual dolls of the Hopi Indians. The colorful dolls are a gift from Dr. William Logan, of the East Carolina University School of Medicine. A sizeable number of items in the museum's collections are gifts from donors and artists.

Renovated Greenville Museum Signals An Exciting Future

Text By Jerry Raynor, Photographs By Cliff Hollis

Elegance and enhanced serviceability to the public best describe the characteristics of the newly renovated Greenville Museum of Art at 802 South Evans Street.

Following a summer-plus long closure for the final interior stages of renovation that altogether covered a total exterior-interior time period of 18 months, a reopening of Greenville's public museum of art took place Sept. 13.

"We are excited about the future of the museum," said Nell Webb, president of the 20-member governing board of trustees. "The Greenville Museum of Art is the only nationally accredited museum in eastern North Carolina, and we can look forward to its role as an increasingly active important part of the lives of people in Greenville, in Pitt County and throughout eastern North Carolina."

Renovations have been extensive. Funding for updating and improving the facility was provided by a capital/endowment campaign fund drive in the autumn of 1985, headed by Henry Leslie, with the assistance of several division chairmen and dozens of volunteers. The campaign netted $187,000.

"Trustees made a decision to use 80 percent of this amount for renovation, with 20 percent earmarked as seed money for an endowment to cover operating expenses," said Mary Anne Pennington, the museum's director.

Exterior renovations encompass a paved parking lot, replacement of the circular portico on the north side of the building, repair and repainting of exterior areas of wood, a paved drive at the back of the museum leading to the carriage house, and renovations to the museum grounds.

Interior renovation has been even more extensive. This summer long process covered complete rewiring, installation of a central air conditioning, upgrading the security of the building, refinishing floors, repair to interior woodwork, reconstruction of two bathrooms to remove unused tubs and replacement with modern washbasins, mirrors and cabinets, refurbishing the kitchen, and recarpeting the stairs and other areas.

"One of the major objectives was to create better use of existing space within the museum, both for the administration and for the public," Ms. Pennington explained. "This meant doing a number of things we have been wanting to take care of, but could not before as there were no funds for these projects."

To meet these objectives, a number of interior changes were carried out. The crowded enclosure behind double French doors at the end of the downstairs hall that formerly served as the office for administrative assistant Dorothy Anderson is now an attractive reception space for visitors and artists and also contains part of the museum's small library. Two rooms that previously housed the sales gallery were restructured to provide adequate, more accessible office space for Mrs. Anderson and director Pennington, who had before worked from a small, awkwardly placed space behind the kitchen.

"Perhaps the most exciting thing that happened during renovation was the discovery, behind a plywood wall, of a beautiful set of built-in shelves," Ms. Pennington said. "The carpenter came to me, told me about uncovering the shelves and wanted to know if I wished them ripped out. 'By no means,' I told him when I saw the beauty of the shelves, which were completely unsuspected."

These shelves now house another part of the museum's reference library.

In the large downstairs room that has been named the Flanagan Parlor, for the original occupants of the 1900 building, rickety shelves next to the fireplace were rebuilt. These, and a glassed-in cabinet in the parlor now house the collection of Jugtown Pottery donated to the museum years ago by Mrs. Elizabeth Savage. "It's so good to have a safe, permanent display for this top rate collection, one of the best in North Carolina," Ms. Pennington said.

Other rare, fragile items in the collection — a Steuben crystal vase and a Maria Martinez polished black pottery, are encased in plexiglass and prominently displayed. The hallway display case now houses Hopi Indian ritual kachina dolls donated by Dr. William Logan of the East Carolina School of Medicine. "Our collection guidelines do not include American Indian art," Ms. Pennington said. "However, we are delighted to have the Martinez pottery and the Hopi dolls as a fascinating, informative addition to our collections."

Two pieces of furniture are original to the Flanagan house — the Victorian sofa and the Persian rug, both in the Flanagan Parlor.

Additional major changes in the museum's interior cover structural changes upstairs and downstairs to give more protective storage space for the museum's collection. This includes the installation of dehumidifiers and locked storerooms. A working area has been added for artists in preparing art for exhibition, and the upstairs hallway has been designed as a place of honor for the members of the Maxwell family — Mrs. Rachel Maxwell Moore and her brothers Grover Sr. and Jeff Maxwell — who were instrumental in donating substantial funds that continue to underwrite acquisitions of art for the museum.

"Just about everybody who has visited the museum since its reopening have commented favorably on the decor," Ms. Pennington said. The walls, woodwork, mantels and carpeting are in muted shades of gray and misty blue. "These colors are restful, attractive as a setting for the art, and elegant," Ms. Pennington said.

The Collection

Whatever the beauty of a building, the main function of an art museum is to house collections of art. In the case of the Greenville Museum of Art, a two-pronged guideline is in effect to form the collections.

"Our trustees some years ago established guidelines that concentrate on forming collections that reflect two major areas," Ms. Pennington said. "One is American art of the 20th century, the other is a focus on North Carolina art to include the best of our talented local artists, young and old.

"I personally feel that since the museum's inception, this policy has resulted in an exceptionally good representation of art in both fields. In fact, this was borne out when the evaluation team from Sotheby's in New York gave our collections very high critical marks, noting that the museum owns a number of outstanding pieces."

The collections, currently numbering more than 550 works in paintings, prints, sculpture, ceramics, drawings, and miscellanous items are valued in excess of $250,000.

"The scope of our collections is truly representative of our basic aims," Ms. Pennington said.

Work by several nationally known artists are in the collection — George Bellows, Robert Henri, Francis and Sara Speight (who are also local residents), Hobson Pittman, Louise Nevelson, Anna Hyatt Huntington and a complete set of the Louis Orr engravings of North Carolina historic scenes.

North Carolina artists represented include Philip Moose, Claude Howell, Susan Durfee and Dixie Browning.

From the local area and the university, the collections contain works by Donald Sexaur, Tran and Marilyn Gordley, Bob Pittman, Edward Reep, Roxanne Reep, Michael Voors, Paul Hartley, Ray Elmore, Vince Price, Bob Edmisten and many others.

"A substantial portion of the collections come from proceeds of the Rachel Maxwell Moore Foundation, which was set up by Mrs. Moore for the express purpose of purchasing art," Ms. Pennington said. "The museum was most fortunate that Mrs. Moore's brothers, Grover Maxwell Sr. and Jeff Maxwell, contributed most generously to enlarge the original foundation money."

Several of the finer items "are also the result of gifts of art work to the museum, or through funds provided for the purchase of a particular work of art. I do want to emphasize that the board, through the acquisition committee, welcomes the offer of any worthwhile work of art that meets our guidelines."

Ms. Pennington said too "that we hope to extend our reference library. We will be delighted to receive any art books or reference materials that fit our emphasis on 20th century American and North Carolina art."

Staff And Services

The staff of the Greenville Museum of Art, in addition to the two full-time members, director Pennington and administrative assistant Mrs. Anderson, is comprised of parttime employees Linda Darty, children's director; Evan Stanford, the gallery technician, and Cottie Peartree, the museum's custodian.

"We receive invaluable support from the museum guild, an auxiliary group active in many ways, such as training docents and assisting in benefit affairs, receptions and telephoning during campaigns," Ms. Pennington said. "Also, numerous volunteers from the community provide help for which we are grateful.

"Without all these people," she added, "we would never be able to carry out the variety of programs we offer to the public."

These programs include lectures and slide demonstrations — the museum has more than 2,000 art slides — guest speakers, operation of the Artmobile which takes programs, including slides and arts to schools, nursing homes and area prisons, and art classes, especially ones oriented to young people.

In addition to these ongoing programs, the museum schedules a continuing series of changing exhibitions, drawn from local, state, and federal sources. At any given time, selections of art from the permanent collections are displayed on a changing basis.

Financial support for salaries and operations come from a number of sources. Each year, Pitt County commissioners and the Greenville City Council allocate operating and maintenance funds. Membership fees provide an important source of funding, and state and federal grants supplement money needed for a number of programs.

"The city has really eased one burden for us," Ms. Pennington said. "In the past, we had to rely on volunteers to take care of the grounds. Now the city does that, and they really do a superb job. The grounds have never before looked so good."

A Long Cherished Dream

The establishment of an active museum of art in Greenville has been a dream long cherished and made possible by a number of caring people through the years.

Two of the pioneers in laying the groundwork for a Greenville museum were Mrs. Moore and Pitt County native Lucy Cherry Crisp. Miss Crisp arranged for Greenville to receive an allocation of prints from the federal government made under the auspices of the Works Project Administration.

Dr. Robert Lee Humber was the driving force behind efforts to have French artist Louis Orr come to North Carolina to execute a portfolio of engravings of North Carolina scenes, of which the Greenville Museum has a portfolio. Marvin Blount, Sr. for many years diligently supported efforts to keep the idea of the museum alive, assisting behind the scenes in raising funds for the Rachel Maxwell Moore Foundation.

Trustee chairman Mrs. Webb summed up the outlook for the future at the rededication ceremony. "We have come a long way in the past three decades," she said. "And today, with this wonderful renovated facility, we can look forward to the museum's continued growth and its role of service to everyone, young and old."

Anyone interested in any facets of the Greenville Museum of Art can call 758-1946 or visit the museum at 802 South Evans Street near downtown Greenville.

AN ATTRACTIVE VIEW — The Flanagan Parlor on the museum's ground floor is considered by many as the museum's showplace. A crystal chandelier is suspended from the ceiling. A Bertie County landscape, "Shipyard Landing," by Francis Speight hangs above a Victorian sofa, an original furnishing in the house, and over the mantle is a painting, "Lady in Coral and Black" by Durr Freedly. The glass-fronted case contains a portion of the Jugtown Pottery collection donated by Mrs. Elizabeth Savage, with two other ceramics, by Tony Joneck and Charles Chamberlain, left to right, on the top shelf.

IN A POTTERY SHOW — "Homage to New Mexico," an earthenware piece by ceramist Clara Couch from Burnsville, is one of the pieces to be shown in the sixth annual North Carolina Sculpture Exhibition coming to Gray Gallery on the East Carolina University campus. The show is one of two opening Oct. 1 at the gallery.

A Catalog House

GAMBIER, Ohio (AP) — The history of Tracy Schermer's house is written in a 1909 Sears, Roebuck & Co. catalog.

The nine-room house is pictured in the 1909 Sears Book of Modern Homes, which lists a similar dwelling as selling for "less than $2,500."

Schermer, resident physician at Kenyon College here, has lived in the catalog house since 1981 and has filled it with antique furniture.

He has tried to restore and maintain the house as it was originally built and does this with loyal devotion to his first-grade teacher, Kate Allen, who grew up in the house that was ordered from Sears.

"It's really her house," Schermer said. "We still call it Miss Allen's house."

In 1909, Reginald Allen, a professor of mathematics at Kenyon, built the house for himself, his wife, and two daughters, ordering it from a Sears catalog.

Mail-order houses were acceptable for many home buyers at the time, and Sears was not the only company to offer mail-order houses. It may have been the largest, selling more than 100,000 such houses between 1908 and 1940.

Lenore Swoiskin, archivist at Sears' headquarters in Chicago, said the Modern Homes Department was part of Sears' attempt to sell anything anybody might possibly want to buy.

Sears offered just about everything needed. The lumber was precut, the shingles came with their own nails and the lath was accompanied by the plaster. Paint, windows, flooring and blueprints were all included. Plumbing and wiring were extras but could be ordered.

It was all delivered by boxcar to the rail siding nearest the purchaser's vacant lot.

Schermer's house has an abundance of space, high ceilings, a big front porch, a living room fireplace, and wide oak wood trim with doors separating many of the first-floor living areas.

Allen reared his two daughters in the house and one of them, Kate, went on to be a teacher in Cleveland Heights, Ohio.

There she met Tracy Schermer, an obstinate 6-year-old who didn't want to work to overcome his reading problems.

Kate Allen had a goat that she used to "bring a little country to the city kids," Schermer said. By giving Schermer responsibility of caring for the goat, Miss Allen persuaded him to stay after school and practice his reading.

New Shows To Open At ECU's Gray Gallery

Two exhibits will be on view at East Carolina University's Gray Art Gallery from Sept. 25 through Oct. 24. Selections from the sixth annual North Carolina Sculpture Exhibition will share the gallery with the work of Israeli photographer Gilad Ophir.

An opening reception will be held on Oct. 1 at 8:30 p.m. at the gallery.

The annual juried exhibition of North Carolina sculpture is being underwritten by Northern Telecom of Research Triangle Park, which has published a catalogue of the works.

Thirty-seven sculptures of the 67 originally shown will be on exhibit in the gallery. The work ranges from realistic human forms in bronze or terra-cotta, mixed media neo-expressionist works, abstract pieces in wood or stainless steel to non-functional works in glass and earthenware.

Works by 32 artists will be shown, including Mark Brown, Robbie Barber, Evan Stanford, Matt Savino, and Arlene Burke-Morgan of Greenville; Bryant Holsenbeck of Durham; John Wofford of Newell; Tomas Sayre of Morganton and Clara Couch of Burnsville.

Gilad Ophir manipulates the photographic process to produce large format black and white images which evoke a mysterious presence. The process and the product are equally important in fusing a personal and universal language through forms and symbols.

Ophir sees his photographs as "more the way music is written, where each note creates its own sound but also connects to the previous and subsequent one.

Ophir will discuss his work in a slide lecture on Oct. 1 at 7:30 p.m. in the Jenkins Auditorium.

Gray Art Gallery and Jenkins Auditorium are located in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center on the campus of East Carolina University in Greenville. All events are free and open to the public.

Parking is available in lots adjoining the center. For more information, call (919) 757-6336.

DECATUR, Miss. (AP) — For Rudolph and Madaline Mayes, the words to the 1940 Fats Domino song, "Blueberry Hill," have acquired a whole new meaning.

Rudolph Mayes was an English instructor for 31 years. Today he and his wife, Madaline, cultivate a different field for a luscious crop, more commonly referred to as blueberries. The couple's enterprise has grown from the 12 original plants of seven years ago to their present two-acre farm, which produces a crop that tops 1,200 bushes.

Mayes was so pleased with the productivity of the plants he started out with that he decided to investigate the market possibilities for blueberries in Mississippi. Satisfied with his findings, three years later the couple arranged to acquire 630 plants from a nursery in Brookes, Ga. With assistance from relatives and friends, they set the plants out on a one-acre tract of land behind their home.

Accepting the recommendation that Mississippi blueberry farmers not apply fertilizer during the first year of plant growth, Mayes concentrated his efforts on developing an effective irrigation system for his farm, a deep well with automatic water control. Water is supplied to 300 plants for three hours at a time, on a rotation basis every three days.

As the plants grew and matured, weeding, mulching, pruning and light fertilizing were required. Three of the four rabbit's eye varieties (so named because of the rich red color of the berry before it matures) of the blueberry bushes found in the Mayeses' patch will grow 12-15 feet tall when fully mature.

Mayes will prune his plants to about six feet and thin out the branches to facilitate picking. Mayes added that at full maturity, each plant should produce four to five gallons of fruit.

There is a lot of hard work involved to keep the grass mowed and the weeds cut, Mrs. Mayes said, but picking and eating the berries can be a pleasurable experience on a cool morning or in the afternoon.

The operation being primarily a "Pick Your Own" affair, the two advise that customers visit during the cooler hours of the day. The ripening of the berries usually occurs between mid-June and mid-July.

It is not uncommon for someone to come to pick one gallon of berries and leave with two or more, Mrs. Mayes said. We have even had occasions where people have picked as many as seven gallons before stopping.

She added that people do not realize that a gallon of berries can be picked in 15-30 minutes from a well-laden bush.

Both emphasized the growing popularity of blueberries in Mississippi. Mrs. Mayes reiterated the many uses of the berry. She said that besides being nutritious, low in calories and cholesterol, blueberries are delicious eaten raw or used in salads, cakes, muffins, pancakes, breads, pies, jellies, jams even as a topping for cereal.

With blueberries an emerging crop just beginning to show commercial potential, only a limited quantity of berries is available to the public each summer.

KAUFFMAN'S WALL RELIEFS

NEW YORK (AP) — The exhibition "Craig Kauffman: Wall Reliefs From the Late 1960s," is on view at the Whitney Museum of American Art through Nov. 8.

The exhibition of three-dimensional paintings on plexiglass consists of seven lozenge-shaped works. The museum says they are "Quintessential examples of the pristine aesthetic known as 'Los Angeles fetish-finish,' which is characterized by a sensuously colored, immaculately finished surface."

Kauffman discarded canvas to paint first on glass, then plastic. By spraying paint onto the back of plexiglass, he was able to achieve a shadow box effect. The bubble shape of the reliefs was achieved by means of an industrial process of vacuum-formed molding.

REMBRANDT MASTERPIECE

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — A masterpiece from the Soviet Union, "Rembrandt's Holy Family With Angels" will be on view at the Toledo Museum of Art Oct. 4-Jan. 3, 1988.

The religious painting is being loaned by the Soviet Union and has never been seen in the Western Hemisphere before. It will be the centerpiece of an exhibition which focuses on the art of Rembrandt.

The Rembrandt masterpiece is being lent by the State Hermitage Museum at Leningrad in exchange for Toledo's "Agony in the Garden" by El Greco.

There was a panic on Wall Street Sept. 24, 1869 — Black Friday — when financiers Jay Gould and James Fisk attempted to corner the gold market. The U.S. government had to step in to restore order.

Indian Heritage Celebration Set For Pettigrew State Park

CRESWELL — Pettigrew State Park will celebrate Indian Heritage Week Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Information Building of the park, located adjacent to the picnic area about one quarter mile from Historic Somerset Place.

A variety of Indian artifacts will be displayed and a number of specialists in the history of Indian life in North Carolina will be on hand at various time periods during the three day event, including Dr. David Phelps and Kaea Morris of East Carolina University.

Exhibits and lectures will take place each of the three days from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., with all events free and open to the public.

The staff at Pettigrew State Park will be lecturing each day on Indian life and the past environment of the Indians.

Artifacts to be displayed at the Information site include three of the Indian dugouts discovered at Lake Phelps. Two other canoes — one measuring 37 feet five inches and the longest canoe discovered in the South; and the second, carbon-dated at 4,370 years old, the oldest known in the nation, cannot be displayed. Because of their fragile condition, they remain underwater in the lake and will be there until such time as the complex processs of restoration can be carried out.

Other Indian artifacts to be shown will encompass a collection of skins of animals past and present.

Persons interested in viewing the vast expanse of shallow Lake Phelps can easily do so. A gravel road leads to the boat launch site of Lake Phelps, about 100 yards from the information center-picnic area.

The schedule of lecturers to be on hand to talk to the public is:

• Friday — Leslie Bright from the Underwater Archaeology Unit of the Division of Archives and History, Raleigh. He has been active in underwater archaeology projects in North Carolina including the Monitor discovery, the Ram Neuse, and the Lake Phelps canoes. Bright is the author of two books and will lecture on the recovery of the Indian dugout canoes at Lake Phelps.

Becky Marty, the East District Naturalist for the Division of Parks and Recreation, on Friday will help the park staff interpret the environment during the Indian occupation era.

• Saturday — Dr. David Phelps, professor of archaeology at East Carolina University, will be on hand to answer questions on Indian history. A native of northeastern North Carolina, he is considered the foremost authority on the Native Americans of eastern North Carolina. Collectors are invited to bring their artifacts for Dr. Phelps to analyze.

Kaea Morris, a graduate student at East Carolina University, is presently writing her master's thesis on the Indian dugouts discovered at Lake Phelps. She will answer questions about her part in research on the dugout canoes.

David Cook, a park ranger at Falls Lake Recreation Area near Durham, on Saturday will demonstrate projectile point construction and how to use an atlatl, or throwing stick.

Another Saturday lecturer/demonstrator, will be Paris Trail of Edenton, who will demonstate the methods used to burn out a segment of a large tree to fashiion a dugout canoe.

. Sunday — On this, the final of the three days celebration of Indian Heritage Week, exhibits will remain open with members of the park staff to lecture on request.

The family campground located between the Information Center and Somerset House will be open on a first come, first served basis.

Visitors can bring picnic lunches. The ample picnic area is located beneath a grove of bald cypress and sycamore trees adjacent to the parking lot.

Visitors may also want to visit Somerset Place, an easy five minutes walk from the Information Center. The 19th century plantation home of the Josiah Collins family, the spacious three-story house is fully furnished, and tours are provided by the plantation staff. The home is surrounded by several buildings, gardens, an enclosure containing sheep, and foundations of former slave buildings being excavated by teams of archaeologists.

The three day Indian Heritage celebration is made possible by grants from The Washington County 400th Anniversary Committee and North Carolina Humanities.

Pettigrew State Park is located about 69 miles from Greenville by the shorter route, and about 76 miles by the longer route. Persons knowledgeable in short-cut routes can travel beyond Pactolus to the cut-off to U.S. 17 that leads to Mineola, and there take N.C. 171 to Jamesville before reaching U.S. 64 to Roper then taking the paved back road to Cherry and on to the park. Travelers less certain about this route can travel to Williamston and take U.S. 64 to Jamesville, Plymouth, Roper and Creswell, and at Creswell watch for directional signs to Pettigrew State Park.

For more details on the Indian Heritage days, call 797-4475.

Plans Announced For New North Carolina Museum Of History

RALEIGH — Officials of the North Carolina Museum of History have announced today that construction on the new $24.7 million museum will begin in June of 1988, with the building due to be completed in 1990.

At a news conference a model of the 152,000 square-foot building was unveiled, and efforts to raise $3 million in private funds were detailed.

The private funds, added to appropriations made by the General Assembly since 1983 totalling $21.7 million, will fund a project that includes the museum building, a 500-space parking garage beneath the site, a huge underground chiller tank to hold air conditioning water for this and other government buildings, and renovations to Bicentennial Plaza, a small park that runs from Edenton Street to Jones Street.

The site, between the State Capitol and the Legislative Building, is now a 115-space parking lot, on the same block with the Museum of Natural Sciences.

The history museum is presently housed in the Archives and History/State Library Building on Jones Street, and has a total of 32,000 square feet of space, with 14,500 square feet available for displays and exhibits.

The new building will have 50,000 square feet available for exhibits. Plans also call for a restaurant and meeting areas for public functions and receptions.

The model of the building was designed by the architect team of O'Brien/Atkins Associates of Research Triangle Park and Cambridge Seven Associates of Cambridge, Mass.

The North Carolina Museum of History Associates, the museum's 12,000 member statewide support group, has raised $2 million in private funds for the new building, including a $1 million gift from the Cannon Foundation, in Concord, in memory of Charles A. and Ruth C. Cannon.

Another $1 million is still to be raised from individuals, corporations and foundations, an effort that will be led by L. Vincent Lowe, Jr., of Wilson, president and chief executive officer of Branch Banking and Trust Co.

Interest in expanding Museum facilities for its collection of 350,000 artifacts surfaced in 1979 with a legislative study commission. Funds for that purpose were first authorized by the General Assembly four years later.

VICTORIAN BRITAIN — Four stamps honoring the 150th anniversary of Queen Victoria's ascension to the throne in 1837 were issued on September 8 by the British Post Office. Portraits of the queen from youth to grand old lady of the British Empire are pictured on the quartet, along with scenes that highlight events in industry, arts and war during her long reign that lasted until 1901. Values are 18, 22, 31 and 34 pence. (Photograph courtesy The British Post Office)

Film On N.C. Indians Premieres At Pembroke

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department
Of Cultural Resources

PEMBROKE — "An Indian, a Person, Myself" premieres Monday at 2:30 p.m. at the Native American Resource Center at Pembroke State University in Pembroke. A reception will be held at the center spotlighting the documentary, an art show titled "Two of the Earth" featuring N.C. Indian artists Gloria Lowery and DeLora Cummings, and various speakers. This event is part of the Indian Week Celebration that runs from today through Saturday.

The N.C. Department of Cultural Resources and the University of North Carolina Center for Public Television has co-produced the 30-minute show.

The documentary examines the present status of North Carolina's American Indian community. Its primary theme is the issue of Indian self-determination, from an Indian viewpoint. It explores how family life, education and economic development can affect the attainment of this goal.

The show will debut on public television Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. Stations that will air the documentary include WUNK-TV, Channel 25, Greenville.

Local libraries in the state are encouraged to videotape the broadcast of this show. They are also invited to make local educators aware that this documentary is available for their use.

"An Indian, A Person, Myself" highlights America's 400th Anniversary and the Year of the Native American. A case in point is that North Carolina Indians have had contact with Europeans as long as any other Indian group in the Americas. They are also the largest native American group east of the Mississippi and the fifth largest in the United States.

The show was shot on location in Cherokee, Lumberton, Hollister and Greensboro. Although it documents the experiences of a limited number of Indian groups and tribes in the state, Ben Jacobs, Economic Development Officer for the N.C. Commission of Indian Affairs, says he feels the program is "accurate and representative."

To obtain a candid portrait of Indian life in N.C., the documentary's producers relied on Indian liasons for all subject interviews. Indians of all ages and backgrounds can be seen on the program. They range from a successful Lumberton business whose "day care center" was a tobacco crate, to a Cherokee grandmother who grew up on family stories of the infamous "Trail of Tears," to a grade school girl in Greensboro who just wants to be like her schoolmates.

This documentary is scheduled for use by the N.C. school system. For further information on the piece or to obtain a copy of "An Indian, a Person, Myself," contact Cheyney Hales, Producer/Director, N.C. Department of Cultural Resources, 733-5722 or Stanley Knick, Director of the Native American Resource Center at Pembroke State University, 521-4214, ext. 282.

Big Lobster

FORT FISHER — The largest live spiny lobster on display on the East Coast is at the North Carolina Aquarium at Fort Fisher.

The 12-pound, 21-inch lobster was caught Aug. 29 by fisherman Raymond H. Key Jr. of Winston-Salem, fishing aboard the Winner Speed Queen out of Carolina Beach. Captain Skeets Winner kept the lobster alive and took it to the aquarium.

Aquarium curator Paul Barrington identified the specimen as a Panulirus argus. It is a male, over 20 years old. After checking with other major aquariums, Barrington discovered the surprise catch is the largest spiny lobster on display along the entire East Coast.

According to Barrington, spiny lobsters normally range from North Carolina southward to Florida and the Caribbean. They have a normal maximum length of 20 to 24 inches and are easily distinguished from the more familiar American lobster by the absence of large claws.

The animal is currently on display at the aquarium and is thriving on live blue crabs, clams and fish.

The North Carolina Aquariums, located at Fort Fisher, at Pine Knoll Shores and on Roanoke Island, are open year-round Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

The Aquariums are administered by the Office of Marine Affairs in the N.C. Department of Administration.

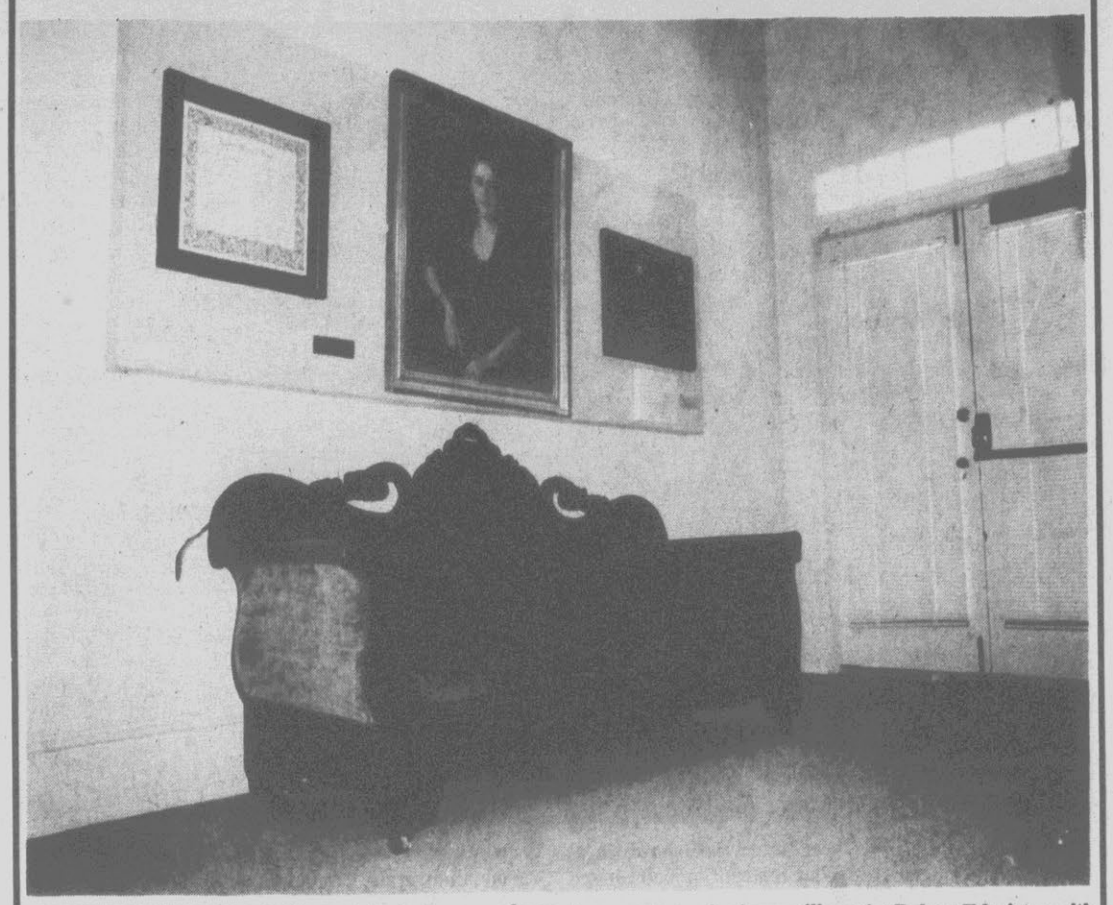
More Photos Of The Renovated Museum



PLACE OF HONOR — In the upstairs hallway, a place of honor has been established. On the wall is a calligraphic homage to Mrs. Rachel Maxwell Moore next to a portrait of the late Greenville resident who established the foundation bearing her name. On the right is a bronze plaque by Greenville artist Robert Edmisten with bas-relief portraits of Grover Maxwell Sr. and Jeff Maxwell. The late 19th century sofa is a gift of Mr. and Mrs. John E. King, IV.

THE MUSEUM BUILDING — A two-story brick structure with a spacious attic is the home of the Greenville Museum of Art. A large front porch and ample areas of white wood trim add to the architectural beauty of the facility. The museum opened in May, 1960 with a gala showing of masterpieces loaned by a noted New York art gallery. During renovation, the building has been air conditioned and otherwise made more secure for the 550 items of art in the museum's collections.

Hopes To Save Island Church

By LISA COUCH
The Island Packet

DAUFUSKIE ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — The simple white church has stood in the midst of moss-hung oaks and jungle-like foliage for 118 years.

Inside the First Union African Baptist Church, the only church on Daufuskie Island, hard brown-painted benches wobble a bit as you sit down. Faded green shag carpet covers the altar, which is decorated with two white posts boasting bouquets of plastic red and yellow flowers.

The old black piano at the side of the room sounds tinny, almost like a child's toy. In the back of the room stand two rusted relics, wood-burning stoves that were once the church's heating system.

There is no need for them now, as the hot August air filters through the open doors and a few broken window panes. Next to the old kerosene-powered chandelier — the only ornate part of the church — hang four modern ceiling fans, installed last year by a church group from Columbia. They, and the paper fans printed with pictures of the Last Supper, are the only air conditioning in the old building.

John Dial, captain of the Miss Wendy yacht anchored in Harbour Town at neighboring Hilton Head, went to the church one recent Sunday, and the visit led him to start a campaign to refurbish the church.

"I had stayed overnight in the mansion at Haig Point. That Sunday morning, I asked some ladies who live here where I could go to church," he said. "I walked in there, and I couldn't believe it. I couldn't believe people have to endure such hardships of elements to worship."

Dial said he contacted the pastor, the Rev. Marion Taylor, and explained his idea: Get people on Hilton Head to donate money, materials and services to renovate the church.

"It's the only piece of history we've got near Hilton Head," Dial said. "Here's this church that's been around for 118 years, and I'm not going to let it die.

"If that building could talk, it could tell you of all kinds of things," Dial said. "And if we don't take steps to preserve it, we've got nothing to say when it's gone."

Taylor said the historic value of the church is important, but he's more concerned with its spiritual value for the island's residents. The church has only 13 members. But the congregation fluctuates, with sometimes as many as 45 people attending a service.

Taylor is hoping to get the whole island community involved in fixing up the church. "I'm trying to help the people get their own self-esteem," he said. "If we can get a project like this going, and get them involved in it, then it would be something they're doing themselves. If we can get them involved, the church itself will grow. And I believe God's house should be a beautiful place."

When the church is renovated and air-conditioned, people will be more inclined to come listen to the sermon, Dial said.

When he contacted Taylor, Dial found the pastor already had made a list of things the church needed. The list includes cushions for the benches, a coat of paint for the a piano, new carpet for the altar, reinforcement for the balcony to make it usable, and a fence around the outside.

The fence is to keep tour buses from driving right up to the door of the church. Taylor said he has found empty beer and soda cans in the church after tourists have visited, and has found cigarette ashes on the communion table.

An old-fashioned cross disappeared.

Dial said he is just getting the preliminaries done to get the campaign going. But Hilton Head lawyer Terry A. Finger is donating time to set up a non-profit organization and a bank account for the campaign.

East Carolina Playhouse's 1987-88 Season
Leave it to Jane
Book and Lyrics by Guy Bolton and P.G. Wodehouse
Music by Jerome Kern
October 7-10 & 12, 1987
A musical about razz-matazz, romantic intrigue on the campus of Atwater College, a rip-roaring institute of "lower" learning. A beguiling and utterly captivating look backward to the early 1920's when things were pure of heart, charming and delightfully innocent. "Nostalgic and enjoyable; how lovely those Jerome Kern songs are."
Lovers and Other Strangers
By Renée Taylor and Joseph Bologne
November 18-21, 1987
A true-to-life airing of the inevitable relationship of man and woman. One of the five episodes will surely relate to a similar event in everyone's past or present. Warmth, humanity, insight, wistful humor about that ever durable, sometimes unendurable, institution—matrimony. "A hilarious look at sex, love and marriage; amusing and continuously interesting."
The Lark
A memorable, exalting telling of the story of Joan of Arc who was inspired by "unearthly voices" to lead the armies of France against the invading English and to crown a king. She becomes a martyr for her faith and deeds and is burned at the stake. "Distinguished, witty and genuinely moving; one of Broadway's proudest achievements."
By Jean Anouilh
Adapted by Lillian Hellman
February 10-13, 1988
Terra Nova
By Ted Tally
March 30-31, 1988
In the winter of 1911-1912, five Englishmen and five Norwegians raced each other to the bottom of the earth. The play deals with this ill-fated Antarctic expedition as experienced by the Englishmen, who did not return. "A heart-rending, imaginative and powerfully-memorable experience of history."
East Carolina Dance Theatre
Choreography by ECU Dance Faculty
April 15, 16, 18, 19, 1988
A varied offering of modern ballet and jazz performed by the talented students in the professionally-oriented ECU dance program. This popular program plays to "standing room only" capacity each year.

Five Productions Scheduled At McGinnis Theater In The Forthcoming 86-86 Season

The Department of Theater Arts at East Carolina University, Edgar Loessin, chairman, will present five productions in the McGinnis Theatre on the ECU campus during the 1987-88 season. Four Broadway plays and an evening of dance choreography by the dance faculty of ECU will be presented.

Attractions being offered are:

• Jerome Kern's "Leave it to Jane" opens the season on October 7 with additonal performances on Oct. 8, 9, 10 and 12.

Originally "Leave it to Jane" was one of the series of Kern-Bolton-Wodehouse musical comedies that came to be known as the Princess Musicals, in reference to the theater where they were presented. This series is noted for having helped to inject a new note of informality and effervescence into American musical.

• On Nov. 18-21, the season's second offering, "Lovers and Other Strangers," Renee Taylor and Joseph Bologna's first Broadway success, will be presented. The play is collection of comedies that deal with love and marriage and human reaction to both.

The playwrights were married three years before writing this comedy. By their own admittance, their life together provided the basis for insights into courtship, love and marriage that they put into "Lovers and Other Strangers."

• Lillian Hellman's adaptation of Jean Anouilh's "The Lark" will run Feb. 10-13. This story of Joan of Arc was called by Life Magazine, "American Theater at it's best."

"The Lark" is a pensive recollection of the life of Joan of Arc. It begins with the trial and as Joan's testimony unfolds, the play goes back in time to uncover the various stages of her journey through history towards martyrdom. It is a story full of anguish and spiritual wonder.

• Appearing fourth in the season is Ted Tally's tour de force "Terra Nova," March 28-31. The play focuses on Captain Robert Falcon Scott's ill fated expedition to the bottom of the world, Antartica.

Scott had trekked to the South Pole, only to find that he had lost out as its discoverer to the Norwegian, Ronald Amundsen. Tally has alternated scenes of Scott and his men at various stages of their ordeal with others in which Scott conducts remembered or imaginary dialogues with his wife, and with Amundsen.

• The final production of the season is the East Carolina Dance Theater, April 15, 16, 18 and 19. The program showcases modern, ballet and jazz choreography by members of the ECU dance faculty. Performances, which feature the professionally-oriented students in the ECU dance department, are generally sold out several days before the event.

All performances will take place at 8:15 p.m. in the McGinnis Theater in the Messick Theater Arts Center, corner of Fifth and Eastern Streets.

Season tickets for all five productions are $20 and are now available. Subscription rates will be applicable until Oct. 12. Single tickets may be purchased for each show one week prior to each opening at the cost of $10 for "Leave it to Jane" and $5 for all other productions. Group rates are available for parties of ten or more: $15 season ticket; $8 "Leave it to Jane;" and $4 all other productions.

Tickets may be charged on VISA or Mastercard by telephoning the box office, 757-6390; by mail order to : General Manager, Department of Theater Arts, East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C. 27858-4353; or in person at room 108, Messick Theater Arts Center through Oct. 1, and thereafter at the McGinnis Theater box office 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on performance days.

THEATER SCENE — Three actors are shown in a scene from "I Ought To Be In Pictures," a Neil Simon play. The dinner-theater production of the comedy will be presented at Mendenhall Student Center on the East Carolina University campus on Oct. 8 and 9.

ECU Dinner Theater Oct. 8-9

Neil Simon's "I Ought To Be In Pictures" will be East Carolina University's dinner theater offering on Oct. 8th and 9th at 6:30 p.m. in Mendenhall Student Center.

The theater dinner will be served beginning at 6 p.m., with curtain time for the play at 8 p.m.

The play will be staged by the Alpha-Omega Players of Rockport, Texas. This troupe has staged such hits as "The Good Doctor," "Any Wednesday," and "The Last of The Red Hot Lovers" previously at ECU's Theater.

"I Ought To Be In Pictures" is a father-daughter relationship of discovery. The author combines humor and poignancy by depicting a fading Hollywood scriptwriter who walked out on his Brooklyn wife and two children 16 years before. The plot unfolds when his 19-year-old tomboy daughter drops in on him out of the clear, blue California sky.

The Department of University Unions is sponsoring the dinner-theater.

Tickets may be purchased at the Central Ticket Office, Mendenhall Student Center, East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C. 27858-4353, or by calling 757-6611, ext. 266. Office hours are 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., Mondays through Fridays.

Tickets are $16. For tickets and further information, write or call the Central Ticket Office during business hours. There will be a 50-cent handling fee on all Mastercard/VISA telephone orders, and on all mail orders.

A Peak Time For Dennis Quaid

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The movie trade is pretty much in agreement that this is the year of Dennis Quaid.

More like the half-year, as the affable younger brother of Randy Quaid reports: "I've got six pictures coming out in six months. First 'InnerSpace,' now 'The Big Easy.' Then 'Suspect' with Cher comes out in October. I did another movie called 'D.O.A' and that follows, I don't know when. So that's four right in a row."

So far, so good.

While "InnerSpace" didn't score as well as Steven Spielberg productions are supposed to, Quaid drew critical acclaim for his well-shaded performance as a hotshot Navy pilot on a cruise inside Martin Short's body.

"The Big Easy" provided another step forward. Quaid brought dimension to his role as a New Orleans cop on the take until he falls for an upright prosecutor (Ellen Barkin). Both performances required more skill than many leading men are accustomed to displaying. During most of "InnerSpace" he was seated at the controls of his microscopic space ship.

"That wasn't so bad: I got to sit down most of the time," he said. "I couldn't believe it myself, but the movie was actually a lot of fun. Much of that was due to Martin Short, the funniest man in the world as well as the kindest."

In "The Big Easy," Quaid managed to handle not one but two unfamiliar accents.

"I tried to combine two kinds of Louisiana accents," said the Texas-born actor. "One was a kind of New Orleans 'yat,' which is kind of Brooklynese with elongated syllables. For the Cajun accent I went down to southwestern Louisiana on weekends and got that into my system. Then I tried to put the two accents together. I think I got it."

Dennis Quaid was speaking by telephone from Montana, where he maintains a refuge from the pressures of a fast-moving career. He fell in love with the Big Sky country while driving through after the Midwest location of "Breaking Away." During the rare breaks from films and publicity tours, he goes there "to fish the river, look at the clouds and empty out my brain — so I can fill it up again."

During most of his 33 years, Dennis has been known as Randy Quaid's kid brother. Four years younger, Dennis followed his big, outgoing brother through Houston schools, then the University of Houston, where both studied acting. Dennis credits his father, William Quaid, with influencing his sons to be actors.

"My dad was a frustrated actor," he said. "He was an electrician, but he liked to tap dance around the house and act like Bing Crosby and Dean Martin. He turned us on to Laurel and Hardy and pointed out actors he particularly liked. I think that's where we got it." The elder Quaid died five months ago.

Randy preceded Dennis to films by five years, scoring in such films as "The Last Picture Show," "What's Up Doc?" "The Last Detail" and "Midnight Express." Dennis followed him to Hollywood, making his film debut in 1973 with "93055," James Bridges memoir about the impact of James Dean's death on a small town.

The Quaids appeared together in "The Long Riders" and off-Broadway in Sam Shepard's "True West." During the latter run, the lifelong sibling rivalry erupted into a wild slugging match.

"Randy and I are closer than two brothers can possibly be, and there are positives and negatives to that," Quaid said. "We love each other more than most brothers do. We can also hate each other as much. We can fight — I mean really fight.

"But that's good. How many people can you really do that with? Somebody you're really intimate with can really get to you.

"We almost killed each other one night (during the play) over some stupid reason that came out of frustration. Part of it was because of the play, which is very difficult. We actually ended up going out and having the best time we ever had.

"As you get older, the parts get better," he said. "Let's face it, when you're 20 and 21, you're not very interesting. What have you really experienced in life?"

After such films as "Crazy Mama," "Gorp" and "Caveman," he hit the bottom with "Jaws 3-D."

"I was having to support a house up here in Montana, and it was the only movie I did for commercial reasons," he recalled. "I asked myself, 'Why am I an actor?' It just wasn't any fun any more. So I sold the house I was building and lost all my bread in that. I moved to New York and started doing plays again, and I realized I was an actor because I really loved it. I've got it back now."

DISPUTE MAY PREVENT U.S. EXHIBIT — "Liberty at the Barricades," by 19th century French painter Eugene Delacroix is one of the paintings that might prevent an important show of his work from coming to the United States for the first time. The show was to have been shown at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., but J. Carter Brown said that he was pulling out of the show in a dispute over the refusal of the Louvre in Paris to lend the top paintings he considered indispensable after he thought they would be available. Literary Fellowships Listed

RALEIGH — Nine fiction writers and poets will receive literary fellowship awards of $5,000 each for achievements in their field.

The North Carolina Arts Council has announced the 1987 fellowship winners: Julie Fay of Winterville, poet and faculty member at East Carolina University; Betty Adcock of Raleigh, poet; Dorothy Baressi of Charlotte, poet; Ronald H. Bayes of Laurinburg, poet and novelist; Susan Ludvigson of Charlotte, poet; Ruth Moose of Albemarle, poet and fiction writer; Cindy Paris of Durham, novelist; David Paul Weaver of Winston-Salem, short story writer, and Evelyn Wright of Winston-Salem, short story writer.

A panel of out-of-state writers reviewed the 91 fellowship entries. All applications were judged on the artistic merit of the writer's work, the importance of the award to their career plans, and past literary achievements.

"We are pleased to recognize these North Carolina professional poets and writers for the contributions they have made to the artistic environment of the state," said Mary Regan, executive director of the N.C. Arts Council.

The N.C. Arts Council awards fellowships to deserving artists. Fiction writers, poets, playwrights, composers, choreographers, and visual artists were eligible this year. The next deadline to apply for a writer's fellowship is Feb. 1, 1988. For further information contact Jean McLaughlin, literature section director for the council, at 733-2111.

Brunswick Festival

RALEIGH — Eighteenth and 19th century farm and home skills will be highlights of the annual "Brunswick Days" celebration at Brunswick Town State Historic Site near Wilmington on Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Volunteers and staff members in period dress will demonstrate colonial skills. A special exhibit will be dedicated to two early North Carolina statesmen and Brunswick Town residents.

The 1 p.m. dedication ceremony honors Benjamin Smith and Alfred Moore, and is timed to coincide with the United States Constitution bicentennial observance, according to James Bartley, site manager.

Demonstrations are scheduled for 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Visitors may tour the site during regular hours. Admission is free.

Brunswick Town State Historic Site preserves the remains of the colonial port town of Brunswick and the earth mounds of Fort Anderson, built by the Confederate States Army. The town was begun in 1726 by South Carolinian Maurice Moore. The venture prospered and the town became an important port for exporting naval supplies and lumber to Europe and the West Indies.

An active political center, Brunswick served as the seat of government for New Hanover County and later Brunswick County, was home for two royal governors and often a meeting place for the colonial assembly. Later, as Wilmington grew, Brunswick declined.

For details on Brunswick Autumn Days or the site, call Brunswick Town State Historic Site at 371-6613 or the Historic Sites Section in Raleigh at 733-7862.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By LINDA M. STANCILL

It's possible to enhance your daily performance dramatically through diet, according to Dr. Judith J. Wurtman and her sophisticated research at M.I.T. The author of two previous best sellers, "The Carbohydrate Craver's Diet" and "Eating Your Way Through Life," Dr. Wurtman translates her findings into practical programs in "Managing Your Mind and Mood Through Food." She demonstrates how what we eat and when we eat it affects our moods, minds and lives. She reveals what foods can prevent afternoon slumps, increase productivity, help us carry on with activities after work or through the night, calm stress and anxiety and aid sleep.

She presents guidelines about how carbohydrates and proteins interact in the body and how to use this knowledge to set your own food/mood clock. She shatters the myths about avoiding sugar, caffeine and carbohydrate snacks, which she finds acceptable in the amounts and way she recommends.

Dr. Wurtman's research confirms what millions of people struggling to achieve their desired weight have always suspected that moods and weight are deeply linked. She reveals the methods she has devised for how and what to eat to control the mood swings that cause us to pile up pounds against our will. "Managing Your Mind and Mood Through Food" can help you to use your eating habits as tools to help you gain more control over your moods, minds and lives. Recipes and menus are included to help you put Dr. Wutman's advice into practice.

John Egerton's "Southern Food" celebrates the food of the American South in all its glorious variety — yesterday, today, at home, on the road and in history. Egerton, who has lived and eaten all over the South, presents the story of Southern cooking from Jamestown in 1607 through generations up to the present day and fast food biscuits.

He guides you through more than 200 restaurants in 11 Southern states, both plain and fancy, that still served home-cooked Southern dishes. For eating in, there's a choice selection of recipes for more than 150 time-honored Southern foods.

"Southern Food" is the flavor and feel of what it has meant for Southerners over the generations to gather at the table in a book that's for reading, for cooking and for browsing.

"Make Ahead Menus" from Time-Life's Great Meals in Minutes Series shows you how preplanning and precooking entire meals or parts of meals can prevent last-minute chaos in the kitchen. Instead of rushing to beat the clock, you will be free to relax with family and friends and have time to indulge in some of the more creative aspects of entertaining.

Nine of America's most talented cooks present 27 complete menus featuring ideas for make-ahead meals, from an elegant roast loin of pork to a single supper of Swedish meatballs and cucumber and radish salad. Each menu serves four people and the cooks not only borrow ideas and techniques from around the world but also value our native traditions. The menus are tested for appearance as well as taste and accompanying photographs show appetising meals and attractive table settings.

Writers Group To Meet Tuesday

The second meeting in the month of September of the Greenville Writers Club will be held at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the home of Jerry Raynor, 2106 Pendleton Street, Greenville.

The Raynor home is the second house on the right of Pendleton Street, which is across from the Fast Fare store on Hooker Road.

Persons wanting to share rides are to meet at the Krispy Kreme Doughnut Shop on East Tenth Street at 7:30 p.m.

SCULPTURE ACQUIRED

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — The Worcester Art Museum says it recently acquired a sculpture by Giacomo Manzu, one of Italy's foremost contemporary sculptors.

Entitled "Giulia," the sculpture is a child's head made of bronze and was completed in 1973. It was donated by Malcolm R. McBride, a member of the museum corporation since 1984.

Manzo rose to prominence as one of the leaders of the post-World War II figurative tradition in Italian sculpture. He is known for his bronze door reliefs at St. Peter's in the Vatican.

COUNTRY CHURCHES

NEW YORK (AP) — "Country Churches," an exhibition of photographs of notable examples of 18th and 19th century country churches in New York State, will be on view at Fraunces Tavern Museum's Mesick Gallery Oct. 20-Jan. 8, 1988.

Most 18th and 19th century village churches had no architect in the modern sense of the word. Congregations commissioned master carpenters to build their churches, using European churches as sources for their designs. Another source of architectural influence was builder's guides and patternbooks.

Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania were admitted as members of the League of Nations in 1921.

Britain abandoned the gold standard in international monetary exchange in 1931.

ATW Lists Events For New Season

AYDEN — The Ayden Theater Workshop announces a calender of four productions for the 1987-88 season.

The season opener, "Dracula" by H. Deane and J.L. Balderston, is to be presented Oct. 29, 30, 31 and Nov. 1. This play is one of the more faithful adaptions of Bram Stoker's novel.

"The Best Christmas Pageant Ever," is the second offering, scheduled for Dec. 10, 11, 12 and 13. This story by Barbara Robinson is about a mother stuck with the job of directing the annual church Christmas pageant.

The third production of the season is to be "The Tea House of the August Moon," by John Patrick, to be presented on Feb. 11, 13 and 14. This comedy is deals with a captain of an Army team working to Americanize a small Okinawan village. This will be presented by the Curtain Players of Ayden-Grifton High School.

The season finale will be the musical "Oklahoma," by Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein II. It is to be on stage April 21, 23 and 24. Songs from the 44-year old musical include such favorites as "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning," and "People Will Say We're In Love."

Season tickets for the four productions are now available. Tickets are priced at $12.50 for individuals and $25 for families including dependent students through college age. Purchasing a season ticket has the added advantages of membership in the workshop, a subscription to the Workshop Newsletter, and participation in all the special events offered by the Ayden Theater Workshop.

A series of classes in the dramatic arts are scheduled for workshop members in March. Additional events for members include a backstage reception with the cast after the opening night performance of "Dracula" on Oct. 29, the annual Spring Celebration on May 24, and first option for seats on any tours to New York City or other theater centers.

Other special classes tentatively scheduled include instruction in costuming, make-up, set design/building, technical work, and acting techniques.

Tickets may be purchased by sending check or money order to Ayden Theater Workshop; P.O. Box 293; Ayden, N.C. 28513. If a family ticket is being purchased, indicate total number in family consisting of parents and dependent children. Benjamin Franklin's "Writings" is the 37th volume in the Library of America, a definitive collection of America's greatest writers.

The library says the volume includes "the first accurate and unmodernized edition of Franklin's 'Autobigraphy.' " Also included are 57 newly attributed writings that have never before been collected.

Martin-Rountree Duo To Be In Recital On Monday

The Martin and Rountree Duo from Kentucky wil be in recital at 8:15 Monday in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall on the East Carolina University campus.

This first recital of the 1987-88 academic year season is featuring Roger Martin, flute and Kathleen Rountree, piano, in a program of music by four composers ranging from the 18th century to the 20th century.

The recital is free and is open to the public on a first-come, first-seated basis.

The two will open their program with the "Sonata in B Minor" by Johann Sebastian Bach in three movements to be followed by Daniel Breedon's "Fantasy for Flute and Piano," composed in 1987.

After an intermission, three pieces will be played: Beethoven's "Air Ecossaise, Opus 107, No. 8" (theme and variations); Verne Reynolds' "Sonata for Flute and Piano" in four movements, and two Lukas Foss compositions, "Early Song" and "Composer's Holiday."

Martin, a member of Moorhead State University faculty since 1984, teaches flute, clarinet and saxophone and is director of the Concert Band. He is also principal flutist with the Fargo-Moorhead Symphny, Civic Opera Copany and the Moorhead State University Baroque Ensemble and Woodwind Qunitet. He is currently working on his doctorate at Virginia Commonwealth University.

Ms. Rountree, newest member of the piano faculty at Moorhead State University, hold the bachelors and masters degrees from East Carolina University and Southern Illinois University, respectively. She has recently completed the doctor of music degree at Florida State University.

She has been both soloist and chamber musician throughout the Southeast and Midwest. Dr. Rountree studied at the Mozarteum in Salzburg, Austria and in 1983 held a position as staff pianist at the American Institute of Musical Studies in Graz.

In 1986 she was chosen as one of three ECU alumni to be featured in the first annual Alumni Concert sponsored by the ECU School of Music Alumni Professional Society.

The late Spyros Skouras: A "Greek tragedy"?

Q. Who is the waggish Hollywood actress who, when asked about Greek tragedy, wittily replied, "The only Greek tragedy I know is Spyros Skouras"? I am told it was the late Marilyn Monroe. Was it not?—Reed Walters, Denver, Colo.

A. The quip belongs to Billy Wilder, who directed Monroe in her two best comedies: "The Seven Year Itch" and "Some Like It Hot." Spyros Skouras, incidentally, was the head of 20th Century-Fox when the film "Cleopatra" almost tragically sank the studio in 1962.

Q. Is Diana Ross, the singer, pregnant by her Norwegian husband? That's what I hear. Who is the father of her other children?—Sharon Moss, Detroit, Mich.

A. Diana Ross, 43, and her second husband, Arne Naess Jr., a shipping tycoon from Norway, expect their first child next month. The father of Ross' three daughters—Rhonda, 15, Tracee, 14, and Chudney, 11—is her former press agent, Robert Silberstein, to whom she was married from 1971 to 1976.

Ranchan/Sygma

Q. Michael Bennett, the producer-director of "A Chorus Line" and "Dreamgirls," who recently died of an AIDS-related malady—what was his real family name, and was he ever married?—Paula Farrell, Piscataway, N.J.

A. Bennett's family name was DiFiglia. In December 1977, he married the dancer Donna McKechnie, star of "A Chorus Line," but the marriage foundered within a few months.

Robin Platzer

Q. Our local newspaper recently ran a series of articles about the late Ernest Hemingway's three sons. One of them, it said, had confided to several sources about his arrest years ago in the ladies' room of a Los Angeles motion picture theater while wearing women's clothes. The question I would like answered is this: Was his son's deviant behavior the real reason why the novelist took his own life in 1961?—C.S., Washington, D.C.

A. Ernest Hemingway (1899-1961) was possessed of many demons. A number of suicides punctuated his family history, and some neurotic compulsion or compensatory reaction drove him to overemphasize his masculinity. He was mentally deranged, of course, when he killed himself with a shotgun, but the derangement cannot be accurately attributed to any of his three sons or four wives, nor to the suspected realization that he possibly was a latent homosexual.

Q. How much does Joan Collins get for acting in an episode of the TV show "Dynasty"? And do you believe her vow that "I will never marry again, never, never"?—Fiona MacLeod, Aspen, Colo.

Celebrity Photo

"Never again," says Joan

A. Reportedly Joan Collins, 54, is paid $95,000 for each hour-long "Dynasty" episode. As to the credulity of her vow not to marry again—the result of her acrimonious marriage to Peter Holm, 40, her fourth husband—one should not take that promise too seriously. Collins, on the record, seems constitutionally incapable of living a manless life for any considerable period of time. She is also old-fashioned enough to believe in the virtues of marriage and will probably give the institution another try.

Q. Is Adm. John Poindexter's demotion by the Navy from vice admiral to rear admiral a drop from three stars to two stars or a drop to one star?—Christ P. Zivalich Jr., Honolulu, Hawaii

A. John Poindexter, former national security adviser to President Reagan, was dropped in rank from a three-star vice admiral to a two-star rear admiral (upper half). The rear admiral rating comes in two echelons—upper half and lower half.

UPI/Bettmann

Kefauver: Ladies' man

Q. Who was the politician—I believe he was a Southerner—who had the reputation of being the leading ladies' man in the history of the U.S. Congress? If memory serves me, he was in the Senate with John F. Kennedy.—T.L., Wilmington, N.C.

A. He could have been Sen. Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), who served from 1949 until his death in 1963. Kefauver was long recognized as one of the outstanding philanderers of his time.

Jane Pauley, 36, celebrates her 11th year with Today next month.

Deborah Feingold

In many ways, she's a true Middle American—in others, she's very different.

The Truth About Jane Pauley

"I'm pretty solid... I grew up being mistrustful of luck and success"

"I DIDN'T THINK IT WAS IN THE cards that I was going to excel," said Jane Pauley. "In fact, I probably thought I was going to fail. You see, there's something a little paradoxical about me. I am a person filled with anxiety. I have a blind faith in the worst possible outcome. On the other hand, I have a fundamental confidence that remarkable things will happen to me."

The more positive side of Jane Pauley has clearly been borne out. She will soon celebrate her 11th year on Today, tying the record set by David Hartman for the longest-running stint on a morning television news program. Since she debuted back in October 1976 alongside Tom Brokaw, Pauley has grown up before our eyes. The ponytailed 25-year-old, who some critics thought was too young to replace the departing Barbara Walters, is now a polished professional reporter. Her rapport with co-host Bryant Gumbel is credited with making Today the most popular morning show. Moreover, Pauley's private life—her marriage to Doonesbury cartoonist Garry Trudeau and the birth of their three children—has been closely followed in households across the country.

What is it about Jane Pauley that has earned her the affection of the American public? And is she as likable in private as on the home screen? To find out more about one of television's most enduring personalities, I visited her on the set of Today.

BY TOM SELIGSON

COVER PHOTOGRAPH BY DEBORAH FEINGOLD

Petite and slender, Pauley is as pretty in person as on TV. The most noticeable difference is her obvious sense of humor. Whether throwing herself against a wall at the prospect of Bryant Gumbel appraising her in print or crossing her eyes at a joke, Pauley is relaxed and unself-conscious when the tables are turned and the questions directed at her.

We sat in her tidy office, decorated with photos of her husband and children, the Today show staff and Prince Charles, whom she had interviewed early in her career.

I asked her why, when so many other TV personalities had come and gone, she had lasted for so long.

"I think one reason for my success is my wearability," she said, leaning back in her antique rocking chair. "Over the years, there have been a lot of new faces, so-called 'golden girls,' in this business. I've never been that golden girl. But when you're too hot, you risk being cold the next year. So Jane Pauley never went in and out of fashion. I think the reason for that is that I strike a familiar chord with a lot of people. It's not something I have cultivated. I'm not an actress. But people can easily identify with me. I think that's probably because there are some pretty fundamental American values that I represent.

"I had a very stable, nurturing home life," she recalled of her childhood in Indianapolis. Her father was a salesman for a milk company, her mother a housewife, and she has an older sister, Ann, now a manager for Westinghouse (the first woman in the job), who remains her best friend. "I come from a history of strong women," Pauley said. "My grandmother was a nurse at the turn of the century who lived away from home even as a girl to go to school, and I have an aunt who's in her 70s and is still gallivanting all over the world as a tour guide.

"There was no pressure for my sister and me to go be professionals, but my parents did expect us to bring home straight A's and blue ribbons. Not aspire outrageously, but just be the best in your class," she added with a laugh.

"I was prone to anxiety," Pauley remembered. "I could make myself sick the night before a test. I even got migraine headaches." Though her earliest ambition was to be either Connie Stevens, who was then starring on Hawaiian Eye, or an interior decorator, it was her failed ambition as a cheerleader that ultimately influenced her. "I didn't make varsity cheerleader," she said. "At the age of 14, I felt my life was over. I ended up joining the speech team instead. And within a year, I became real good.

"My event was Girls' Extemporaneous Speaking. They would give you a topic, and a half-hour later you made a seven-minute speech on it." Her chief competitor was the future actress Shelley Long, from nearby Fort Wayne. "Most often she beat me," Pauley admitted. "But when Shelley graduated, I had a clear field. By my senior year, I was state champion. And I made it to the semifinals of the national competition. The six girls who were ranked ahead of me are probably all arguing cases before the Supreme Court—they were terrifying. So I did find out my limitations. But in my smaller pond, I was a big fish. And I can't imagine better preparation for what I do today."

Pauley attended Indiana University, where she majored in political science and considered going into law. "Everybody who was in speech was going to be either a lawyer or broadcast journalist," she recalled. "Although broadcasting really was not in the forefront of anybody's mind. It hadn't happened yet for women. When I was in high school, Barbara Walters, Marlene Sanders and Nancy Dickerson were really the only prominent women on television. Then, in 1972, television stations began feeling the pressure to get women on the air. Connie Chung, Lesley Stahl, a lot of us started around then. The door just kind of creaked open, and there I was, standing in the doorway."

Pauley's first job was at WISH-TV in Indianapolis, where she was a street reporter, covering crimes and fires. She laughed, remembering her first week on the air, when she had no definite assignment and was expected to enterprise a story: "I had a friend whose father was a farmer, and I knew they were having trouble getting the equipment into the fields because of the very rainy fall. They faced losing an entire crop. I was wearing these multicolored, suede platform shoes, and I went out trudging around in the mud. I ended up being queen for a day, because the story made the wires. I became the unofficial farm reporter there for a time. Also, that was the year of the high price of beef. I did a lot of beef stories. That took me from the farm into the supermarket. Jane emerges the consumer reporter."

Pauley worked her way up to anchoring the noon and weekend news. "But, like anybody, I wanted the evening newscast," she said, brushing the hair out of her eyes. "After a while, it was clear that it wasn't going to happen to a woman. I had nowhere to go but out. And then the phone rang."

The caller was from WMAQ in Chicago, which hired her to do exactly what she wanted—co-anchor the evening news. However, Chicago did not exactly welcome its first female co-anchor. Before she had even arrived, Pauley read scathing reviews of herself in the paper. She was attacked for being too young and too attractive. One critic wrote that she had the IQ of a cantaloupe. How did she react to such criticism?

"I tried to make lame jokes about having the skin of a cantaloupe," she said, smiling. "Well, Dorothy, this isn't Kansas anymore. I think to the degree that it was upsetting," she added, turning serious, "it was probably reflected in my personal life, of which there wasn't any. I kind of suffered by myself. I remember I didn't buy any furniture—not because I knew I was moving on but because I was not making a life there."

Ann Pauley recalled that the attacks were very hurtful to her sister: "The way we were brought up, you never said nasty things about people in public, so she wasn't used to it. Also, she was living away from home for the first time, living by herself, and without any friends in the area."

"I strike a familiar chord with people. They identify with me."

Fortunately for Pauley, she did not stay long in Chicago. "Three months after I started," she said," I was filling in for Barbara Walters on the Today show while she covered President Ford's trip to China. I was the first person ever to substitute for her." But Pauley was far from the only one considered to replace Walters when the popular Today host defected to ABC. "There was said to be a master list of 250 names," she explained, "although there were probably only about 20 serious contenders. I doubt that I was even one of them, until I auditioned. They were auditioning a lot of NBC on-air women: Linda Ellerbee, Betty Rollin, Cassie Mackin, who has since died. Just as a courtesy perhaps, they asked me to come have a shot at it. And it was only after I auditioned that they began to take me seriously."

Along with Pauley's strong audition, the results of NBC's research also figured in her favor. The network polled some 2000 viewers across the country. "I have been told that they ranked me first in every category but experience," she said. "Betty Furness beat me in experience. I also heard that during an affiliates' convention, the wives of a number of NBC executives got together and picked me. Now, whether they had any real influence, I'll never know."

Did she feel tremendous pressure when she first started on Today, especially considering her age and whom she was following? "You know, I really didn't," she said, rocking back and forth. "I guess I was very naive about it. But the line at the time was that Tom Brokaw was replacing Barbara Walters—he started a week before I did—and I was hired as his partner. So I did not walk into my office and see Barbara Walters' footprints, because I felt the burden was more on Tom's shoulders than on mine. I was blessed to really hang on to his coattails in those early years, because I was much too young."

Tom Brokaw remembers the young Jane Pauley as being more than able to hold her own. "It was tough for both of us," he said. "I had been around the track a few more times than she had, and I was worried on a couple of occasions that she was not experienced enough to do the show—for instance when Mao died or Sadat got shot. But Jane always handled things with extraordinary presence and intelligence."

Brokaw was similarly impressed by how Pauley managed her instant celebrity. "There was a fair amount of pressure on her to be more public," he said. "To take part in the New York nightlife and get her name in the columns. A lot of very glamorous people made a run at her, so to speak. For many other starry-eyed young women, it would have been a traumatic experience. They would have gotten swept off their feet by New York playboys, and their work would have been secondary. But Jane was simply not interested. She was well grounded. She came here prepared to do what she did best, and she maintained those strong Midwestern values."

Brokaw took enough interest in Pauley to introduce her to Garry Trudeau, the cartoonist of Doonesbury. "I knew that Garry was intrigued by her," he said. "We were going to go somewhere together, and I said, 'I'll meet you at the airport.' He said, 'No, I'll pick you up at the studio.' I knew he was coming in to have a firsthand look at her. Ultimately, Mrs. Brokaw gets the credit, because she decided that Jane would be happier in her life if she had some grounding here. And, gosh, it's hard to improve on Garry Trudeau as a blind date. We had them over for dinner. And they never looked back."

Pauley beamed when recalling their first meeting. "The thing we found we had in common was matching freezers," she said with a laugh, "We both knew a lot about frozen food. We had been through the Morton pot pie phase and had graduated to Stouffer's frozen dinners." And, with Trudeau writing his satirical strip and Pauley interviewing public figures every day, they shared a mutual interest in the news and political and cultural events.

They were married in 1980 and continue to lead an extremely quiet private life, avoiding parties and celebrity functions. Yet Pauley has come to accept some loss of privacy from her many years on television. Her worst experience was when her first pregnancy was announced in Newsweek days after she had miscarried.

"It was one of the most painful periods in my life," she said softly. "But the upside was that I got hundreds of thousands of letters from people. I found to my surprise that condolence letters from perfect strangers really made a difference. I generally would go to the bottom of the letter, where it said, 'And we now have five grown children.' I liked those letters best. Although, after having a miscarriage, when the months are going by and you think that there will never be any children in your life, it's really hard."

After a second, less-publicized miscarriage, Pauley gave birth to twins, Rachel and Ross, in 1983. And in August 1986, she had a third child, Thomas. Pauley is the first to admit that motherhood has changed her. "I'm different than I was before I became somebody's mother," she said. "It's certainly one of the most enriching life experiences. But, frankly, motherhood can also narrow your horizons, because you tend to look through the perspective of 'what kind of world am I bringing my children up in?' You personalize everything through your children."

Bryant Gumbel believes that motherhood has helped make Pauley a much better on-camera journalist. "In part, the reason we succeed now is because Jane had the babies," he said flatly. "In my opinion, until the babies, Jane was overly concerned with what the journalistic establishment thought about her. Having kids forced her to see the difference between her life and her work. It forced her to say, 'Hey, you know what? I'm secure in my work, because I'm secure with myself. And now I can just be myself and relax up here.'"

Of course, raising a family while preparing for two hours of live television every day creates its own problems. "I remember one particular weekend," she said, "when my husband was gone, and I was juggling all the children. I was tired, frazzled, and I had a lot of homework for the next day that I had not yet gotten to. Then the phone rang, and in addition to everything else, I was told I would be interviewing the Vice President. I just started laughing. What else could I do?"

Like all working mothers, Pauley worries about the time she spends away from her children, like when the Today show goes on the road. "When I look back on my childhood, I remember my father's suitcase open so much and his being gone a lot," she said. "And now I am this professional woman, and I can tote up with some alarm that I've been gone a month in the last year. A month in my children's lives. That doesn't fit my image of being a mother."

"However, on a day-to-day basis," she added, "I probably spend as much time with my children as many homemakers. Usually Garry works at home, so virtually all the time my children are with one or both of their parents." What's more, she has a full-time nanny, and her unusual working hours are ideally suited for a mother. Leaving her three-bedroom apartment at 5 a.m., when husband and children are still asleep, Pauley returns home for lunch. "I will probably come back here later," she said, "to prepare for tomorrow's show. But sometimes they messenger over the research, and I can work from home."

All of these "extenuating advantages," as she calls them, make Pauley uncomfortable being viewed as a role model for women. "It's a lie for me to perpetuate the notion that I am the all-American working mother," she said firmly. "To celebrate me as a role model is only to say that having a good income [reportedly $750,000 last year] and flexible schedule makes it a lot easier."

Pauley's current contract with Today runs to 1991. But as far as she's concerned, she can imagine staying on indefinitely. "If you've got the best job in the world, you're not supposed to want to keep it forever," she said. "You are supposed to want more. But I've always said, if you can show me something better, I'll aspire to it." She stopped rocking and leaned forward. "You know, I wish I could freeze time right now. I wouldn't get any older. I'd keep things just the way they are."

Which ultimately may be the key to Jane Pauley's success, as well as her obvious contentment. Despite her considerable achievement, she has never really changed. "None of it has gone to her head," said her sister. "Jane's the kind of girl who's not all that impressed by what she's doing. I'll never forget the time my mother called and said, 'Did you hear Jane's gong to London for the queen's jubilee?' I said, 'No, and we just talked an hour ago.' 'What did you talk about?' my mother wanted to know. 'We talked about her cat.' "

Tom Brokaw agrees that there's no hidden side to Jane Pauley. "What you see is exactly what you get," he said. "And that comes through on TV, which is a big part of the reason for her success. People don't like phonies, and because Jane has demonstrated morning after morning that she is comfortable with who she is and is not going to alter it for trendy purposes, she has developed a real link with the American public."

Pauley was eager to get home to her children. As she walked me down the hall to the elevator, we passed photos of the many Today show hosts who had preceded her. "I think I have a pretty healthy attitude," she said. "You couldn't characterize it as positive because, like I told you, there's a little bit of cynicism in me. But the head of NBC News paid me a compliment once. He told me I was the healthiest person he had ever met in broadcasting. And there's something to that. I am pretty solid."

"Maybe it's because my parents were both children of the Depression and learned about the impermanence of success," she added. "But I grew up being mistrustful of luck and success. You learn you can't invest your life in the applause and accolades, the trappings and glamour. I am very happy that I've built my life on much firmer foundations than that." She grinned. "But having said that, I enjoy my success a lot."

Happy Anniversary

CBS-TV

Current cast of 60 Minutes (l-r): Bradley, Wallace, Safer, Sawyer and Reasoner

This evening, 60 Minutes—one of the most consistently viewed and successful investigative news programs in the history of broadcast journalism—begins its 20th season with its 800th telecast.

In the almost two decades that the program has been on the air (it made its debut on Sept. 24, 1968, with Mike Wallace and Harry Reasoner), 60 Minutes has won every major broadcasting award for which it has been qualified. It also has generated 37 lawsuits without losing a single case—although, 15 years ago, it settled one imbroglio out of court for a measly $5000. That concerned a 60 Minutes segment which dealt with the growing traffic in drugs and implicated the son of a South American government official, who has yet to pick up his $5000.

Originated by Don Hewitt, a veteran CBS news junkie who is still the program's executive producer and guiding beacon, 60 Minutes is pridefully acclaimed for bringing into the American living room such respected and welcome journalists as Mike Wallace, Morley Safer, Dan Rather, Harry Reasoner, Ed Bradley, Andy Rooney and, most recently, Diane Sawyer. It is an acknowledged credit to the network and the nation.

National Health Service Coming

A survey of 603 physicians by the California Medical Association reveals that:

- Nearly 60% of the doctors agreed that the traditional fee-for-service system of reimbursing physicians is doomed and will no longer exist in the U.S.
- Nearly 90% of the physicians agreed that the competition for patients will compel increasing numbers of them to seek salaried employment with Health Maintenance Organizations (HMOs), such as the Kaiser Plan, and similar entities.
- More than 70% of the responding doctors agreed that the quality of patient care "can be diminished through salaried employment of physicians, since their primary loyalty would be shifted from the patient to the employing organization."
- A sizable number of the respondents opposed advertising by physicians.

Lemons of '87

Carmen/Warner Bros./DC Comics

Warner Bros

Mariel Hemingway and Chris Reeve in Superman IV, Madonna in Who's That Girl?

Each year, about three-dozen or more movies are released to the public without previous press screenings. Generally this tactic constitutes an admission by the distributor that he has a lemon on his hands and wants to get his picture out before the negative press criticism kills it.

Last month, The Los Angeles Times published a list of 38 motion pictures that had been released this year in L.A. without advance screenings for the press. Who's That Girl?, with Madonna; Superman IV, with Christopher Reeve; Masters of the Universe, with Dolph Lundgren and Frank Langella; and Jaws: The Revenge, starring Michael Caine, were four of the films rushed to market in August without benefit of press previews.

Emperor's Visit

Next month—if he maintains his good health—Japan's Emperor Hirohito, 86, will pay his first visit to Okinawa since World War II. Okinawa was the scene of the last great U.S. amphibious campaign in the Pacific war. More than 200,000 persons lost their lives in the battle's closing weeks, from April 1 to July 2, 1945. Okinawa remained under U.S. control until 1972, when we returned it to Japan. The purpose of the emperor's visit, Oct. 23-27, will be to congratulate the Okinawans on their valor and postwar industry.

Expanding Giant

Relatively few Americans know or care, but a privately owned West German company named Bertelsmann, headquartered in the small city of Gutersloh, has quietly grown into one of the world's media giants.

In this country, for example, Bertelsmann owns the Doubleday, Bantam and Dell publishing companies; RCA music and tapes; and, indirectly, the Brown Printing Co., which prints Time and many other magazines. In West Germany, it is the largest publisher of magazines and books, controls 15% of Radio and Television Luxembourg and a 24.9% interest in Der Spiegel ("The Mirror"), West Germany's leading weekly newsmagazine.

The company was founded in 1835 by Carl Bertelsmann, who originally published religious tracts and hymnals. Its major owner is Reinhard Mohn, 67, a descendant of the founder. Mohn is under no obligation to issue financial statements to the public, but it has been reported that the company anticipates a gross business of $5.1 billion this year. Several weeks ago, Bertelsmann bought its first daily newspaper, the Hamburger Morgenpost, evidence that it is still on the prowl for acquisitions.

Soviet Sex Education

Now that glasnost, the quality of "openness," has become official Soviet policy, Igor Kon, a top Russian sociologist, has suggested that it be applied to the teaching of courses regarding sex, divorce, marriage and allied subjects. Such topics traditionally have been banned from Soviet schools. As a result, the USSR has relatively few trained sex counselors, and most parents are too ignorant and afraid to discuss human sexuality with their offspring.

"Sexual literacy is needed," Kon explained in a recent magazine interview, "not only because people are deprived but also because the quality of family life and the stability of the family depend on it to a great extent." The divorce rate in the Soviet Union has been estimated to range from 25% to 50%, and the typical Soviet married woman has been said to undergo seven abortions in her lifetime.

Will Becker Beat The Draft?

Focus on Sports

Boris Becker: Time to serve?

The word in European tennis circles is that Boris Becker, 19, West Germany's No. 1 tennis ace, will somehow beat the 15-month term of compulsory military training required of his countrymen. Becker, it is rumored, will be deferred until he quits the game or, as a resident of Monte Carlo, will be excused by his draft board from pulling any military duty.

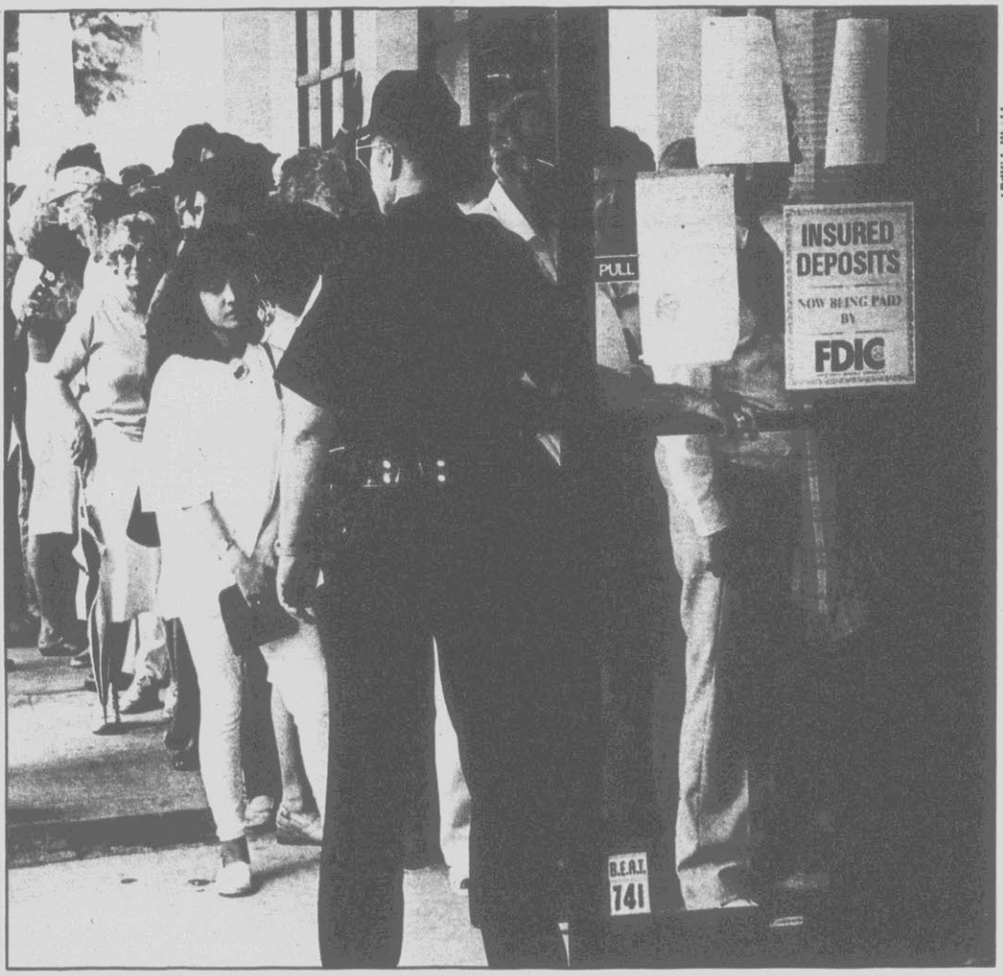
Is Your Bank Account Safe?



AP/Wide World

Depositors wait to recover their savings from Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. outside failed Miami bank.

THE NATION'S LARGEST banks may seem as impressive and solid as the sleek office towers that house the headquarters of their corporate empires. But a growing number of them balance delicately on the edge of failure. And the collapse of one megabank, with its intricate ties to other big banks and to hundreds of smaller ones, could cause a chain reaction of failures and panic that would bring down the entire banking system. Here's the story of how it almost happened—when Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, one of the most mega of the megabanks, came within a few hours of collapse.

The Continental saga began on July 7, 1976, when Chairman Roger E. Anderson announced that Continental had embarked on a strategy calculated to make it one of the three biggest business lenders in the United States. Proud words. Yet Continental outstripped even its own boast. By 1981, Continental was one of the top corporate lenders and the sixth-largest commercial bank in the country.

But Continental's astonishing growth also contained the seeds of its destruction. Many of its loans were connected to the energy boom of the late 1970s. But the subsequent oil glut had brought the great expectations crashing down.

One of the highest fliers in the energy-financing heaven was Penn Square Bank of Oklahoma—and Continental was intricately involved with Penn Square. So when the Oklahoma bank went belly-up in 1982, Continental was stuck with a bundle of uninsured loans it had made to Penn Square in the heady days of the energy boom. The collateral—high hopes and rusting oil-drilling gear—was worthless.

In February 1983, federal regulators from the FDIC and the Comptroller of the Currency's office met for a secret briefing on Continental's condition. Meeting behind closed doors in downtown Washington, everyone agreed on the diagnosis: too many sour loans. But there was sharp disagreement on the prognosis.

Then on May 10, 1984, a crisis loomed: Continental was being hit by a silent but devastating run by overseas investors. Using computer terminals in Europe and Japan, they were withdrawing large, uninsured deposits from Continental because of whispers that the bank was about to fail. Without so much as a line of anxious depositors outside its doors, Continental was being drained by a $15 billion run.

With almost $40 billion in assets and offices in 14 states and 29 foreign countries, Continental was too big to collapse without terrible repercussions. More than 2000 small banks, for example, had nearly $6 billion on deposit in Continental—all of it uninsured. More than 120 smaller banks would have gone down with Continental. And some of its fellow Big 10 banks also were vulnerable. So, clearly, the federal rescue team could not let Continental sink.

One emergency meeting followed another through the next day, a Friday, and throughout the weekend. On Tuesday, May 15, Paul Volcker, then chairman of the Federal Reserve, reached William Isaac, the dynamic former chairman of the FDIC, on his car telephone. "It's heating up," Volcker said tersely. "It's getting worse. Can you come in and see me right away?"

Brent Peterson

Jack Anderson

At the Fed, Isaac determined that Continental would need $2 billion. Pronto. Donald Regan, then Treasury Secretary, agreed but had a political suggestion: Get some of the major banks to contribute to the $2 billion, instead of making it strictly a federal government intervention.

The failure of one big bank could bring down many others

Easier said than done. At a hush-hush meeting in New York on May 16, the private bankers quarreled. At one extreme, Manufacturers Hanover didn't think the FDIC should be involved at all. It should be the banks' responsibility. At the other extreme, Citibank opposed any bailout by anyone. Continental should swim or sink.

By noon that day, there was apparent agreement on a joint venture. The FDIC would put up $1.5 billion, the banks would ante up the rest, and the public announcement would stress the cooperative nature of the bailout. The deal would have to be announced by 10 a.m. the next day—when trading in Continental stock would be stopped. Without some announcement, William Isaac warned, all hell would break loose once the stock trading was halted.

BY JACK ANDERSON AND MICHAEL BINSTEIN

Citibank threw a monkey wrench into the arrangement in the late afternoon, insisting that the FDIC guarantee that the banks wouldn't lose a nickel of their contribution. Isaac and Volcker protested that this would expose the whole cooperative deal as a fraud.

Isaac thought everything was set when he checked into a hotel at 11 that night. But at 4 a.m. he was awakened by his staff: Citibank's objections were wrecking everything, he was told.

Isaac rushed to the FDIC's regional office on Fifth Avenue, where the negotiators were meeting—only to find that he was locked out. Trying a side entrance, Isaac brushed past a protesting guard and rode the escalator to the conference room, where unshaven, hollow-eyed lawyers were waiting in despair. Citibank wouldn't budge, even after an urgent phone call to its chairman from Volcker. The deadline was approaching, and the deadlock appeared unbreakable.

At precisely 10 a.m., Isaac walked into the room where the bankers were caucusing. "Continental has just suspended trading on its stock," he said. "I have to make an announcement. Have you got it resolved yet? Is everybody in the deal except Citibank?" Yes.

Isaac then demanded to know if all would honor their commitments, even if Citibank stayed out. The other bankers agreed. Eventually Citibank came in, and the most serious banking crisis in 50 years was ended. No one wants to replay it—not ever.

What almost happened to Continental Illinois has become more, rather than less, likely since 1984. I believe the millions of Americans who keep their life savings in banks have the right to know whether their money is safe. Just how serious is the banking crisis, and could individual depositors lose their savings? From my inside sources and the evidence they have shown me, I have compiled some answers:

Why are banks failing? The relaxation of government controls tempted many bank managers to take risks for quick profits. They ventured onto thin financial ice, granting loans in boom times based more on hope than collateral. Unhappily, many loans went bad as agriculture, energy and real estate prices fell. Bank deregulations also encouraged inexperienced entrepreneurs to form banks. Some of these new banks were simply mismanaged.

How many major banks are on the endangered list? Six of the top 25 banks, including two in the top 10, made the problem list in 1986. These six institutions in danger of failing comprise nearly 7 percent of all America's banking assets.

Why are so many big banks in trouble? Less-developed countries, known to bankers by the dread initials LDC, have run up staggering loans that they cannot pay off. The LDCs don't want to default on their loans, because it would wipe out their credit. Then they would be forced to pay cash for imports they can't afford but continue to purchase. The banks don't have the cash to cover the enormous losses. Should the LDCs start to default, it would be a staggering blow that could ruin the banks. So both bankers and borrowers go on pretending these bad loans are good. The LDCs merely pay interest on their loans, often borrowing more money to make the payments. A few even have stopped paying interest, and some banks have started cautiously to write off foreign loans. But the problem has become far too massive for conventional solutions. Still, the authorities continue to defer reality.

How much money do LDCs owe to banks? A stupendous total of $400 billion.

Which banks are stuck with the worst loans? I have seen studies of the Latin American debt. The figures show that loan-to-capital ratios exceed 100 percent for Bank America, Chase, Citicorp, Chemical and Manufacturers Hanover. If the LDCs should ever acknowledge the truth that the loans will never be paid, these financial giants would go broke.

What would happen if a megabank failed? Treasury officials believe it would cause a "credit implosion." The supply of credit would begin drying up. Banks would have to call in loans on a massive scale, triggering a domino reaction of defaults and bankruptcies. Interest rates would soar beyond the reach of average borrowers. The economic effects would be extreme, both for the average consumer and for the large corporation.

Given the economic wreckage it would cause, can the federal government let a megabank fail? Without notification or publicity, the regulatory agencies have adopted a double standard for banks. The government is not inclined to rescue the average bank if it should go broke. But the authorities agree they simply can't permit a megabank like Continental Illinois to collapse: This would snowball into an epic disaster. So, in the back rooms of Washington, they have decreed that the megabanks must be fail-safe. This means the U.S. government will intervene—with the taxpayers' money, if necessary—to keep these banks solvent.

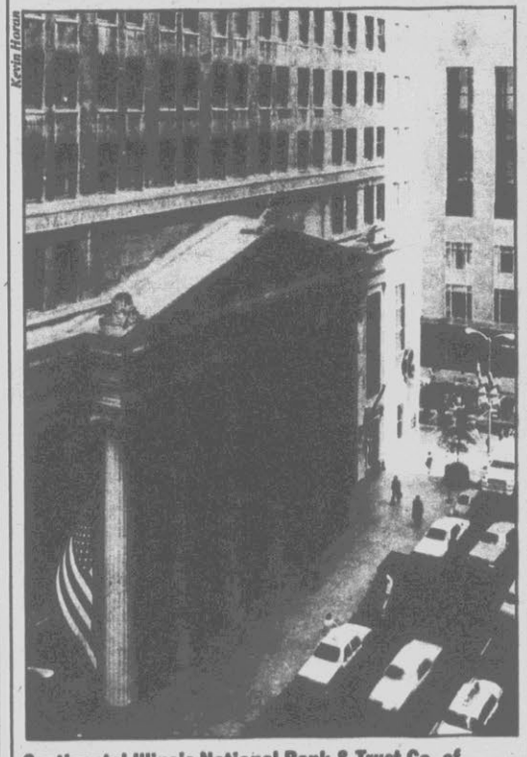
How would the federal authorities handle a megabank crisis? The Federal Reserve System has "adequate powers," according to a confidential assessment, to pump money into the system and to lend unlimited amounts "when that system is under stress." The Federal Reserve banks hold more than $36 billion in unissued currency, stashed in the Federal Reserve vaults. Enough cash, the authorities believe, to provide an emergency transfusion. If more funds should be required, the secret contingency plan calls for siphoning currency from healthy banks to the emergency cases.

Big banks have made enormous loans to the Third World countries—most of the money may never be paid back

But what if the contingency plan turns out to be "too little, too late" to save the banking system? Then the government would have no alternative but to nationalize the major banks. A contingency plan is ready, in case of such a dire emergency, to do precisely that.

What would happen to individual bank accounts during the emergency? The government would try, of course, to save all bank accounts. But deposits over $100,000 could be lost. You have no risk whatsoever if you keep your bank deposits under $100,000. These accounts are federally insured, which means the taxpayers back them up.

What You Can Do To Safeguard Your Deposit



Kevin Horan

Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago: Behind the solid front was a shaky empire.

Given today's economic uncertainties, how can you tell whether your bank is in trouble? Then, what can you do to safeguard your deposit?

If your bank is federally insured, regulators keep a close watch on its books, but they can't tell you what they find. It's against the law for a government official or bank director to divulge the contents of federal examination reports. But here's what you should watch for:

- Beware of high interest rates. If your bank offers above-the-market interest rates, it could mean that it is short of funds and in failing condition.
- Keep your money in a federally insured bank. Its deposits are protected by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which has $18.4 billion to back its guarantees. In contrast, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. is down to about $500 million, which is all it has to back about $900 billion in savings-and-loan deposits.
- Never allow your account to exceed the federal deposit limit of $100,000. Any amount over $100,000 is not covered by federal insurance.
- Don't gamble on privately insured banks, thrifts and credit unions, hybrid depositories known as industrial banks, investment companies, even state-authorized insurance funds. Depositors in these institutions have sometimes lost money.

If you choose your bank carefully and handle your account prudently, your money should be safe. No one ever has lost a nickel from a federally insured deposit.

WHAT'S UP THIS WEEK

TELEVISION

VIETNAM SERIES SET OPPOSITE COSBY

On CBS' expensively produced and very compelling Tour of Duty, the first network drama series about the Vietnam war, we follow the adventures of a multi-ethnic platoon of American soldiers in 1967—the camaraderie, the testing of self, the shared danger. The grunts are not involved with the war's politics—they're just trying to stay alive. But placed opposite The Cosby Show and its new spin-off, A Different World, starring Lisa Bonet as a college student, Tour of Duty may start its own war. Insiders predict that this time slot could well be the most hotly contested on TV this fall. Thursdays, 8-9 p.m. EDT, beginning this week.

Cameron (l) and Moore switch roles

In Like Father Like Son, Dudley Moore and Kirk Cameron play a heart surgeon and his teenage son whose personalities are suddenly switched. So Cameron—in school, with the girls—has to act as if he were really his father. And Moore behaves as if inhabited by a 16-year-old's mind . . . Again. After all, doesn't Moore usually play a man who behaves like an adolescent (e.g., Arthur)? "True," the actor admits cheerfully. "There's not a stoic, Paul Newmanesque quality here. In fact, when Kirk asked me how he, as the father, should play certain lines, I said, 'I don't think I'm a good adult model.'"

A Favorite Book Finally Comes to Screen

The Princess Bride, set once upon a time with a contemporary feel, is a quirky, funny, satisfying fairy tale adventure where true love conquers all and revenge has its day. It's based on a William Goldman novel that the director Rob Reiner (Stand By Me) fell in love with 14 years ago, and it unfolds as a story read by a grandfather (Peter Falk) to his at-first-reluctant grandson.

ASK MARILYN

BY MARILYN VOS SAVANT

Why do like things tend to cluster together—for example, leaves on a tree, gold crystals in a vein and rich people?

—A.B., Sacramento, Calif.

Perhaps it's because they need the same conditions to flourish. For example, leaves won't be found growing on dogs, gold crystals won't be found in roses, and rich people won't be found where there are no good restaurants.

If you have a question for Marilyn vos Savant, who is listed in the "Guinness Book of World Records" under "Highest IQ," send it to: "Ask Marilyn," PARADE, 750 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017. Because of volume of mail, personal replies are not possible.

The Madonna. Inspiration of painters down through the ages. A subject to which Raphael—one of the greatest painters who ever lived—returned again and again.

And of the more than fifty Madonnas Raphael painted, none is more beautiful than his famous Sistine Madonna. Indeed, it is recognized as the most glorious Madonna of all time.

Now the master sculptors of The Franklin Mint have interpreted this immortal masterpiece in the full dimension of fine bisque porcelain. And every detail is captured with sensitivity and deep emotion. Then every feature is painted by hand in the rich tones of Raphael's palette.

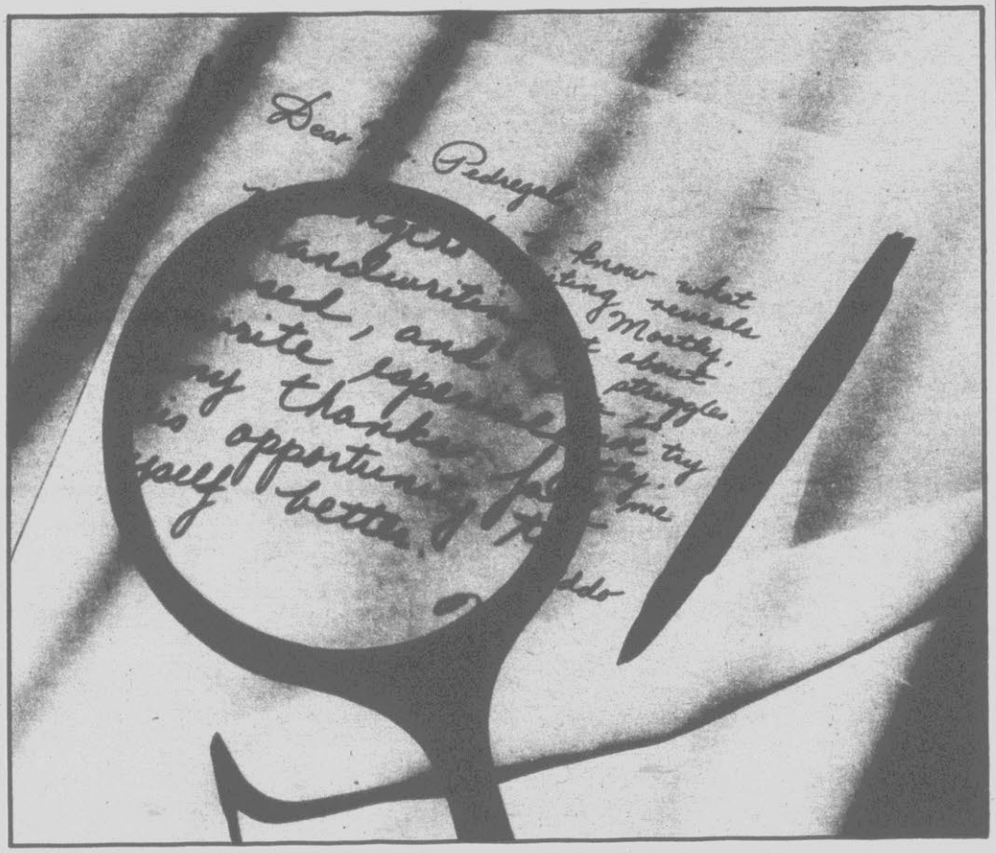
That's Write!

Want to find out what makes you tick? Just pick up a pen.

By J. J. Leonard



I seated myself in front of the round dining room table, shifted in the chair until I was quite comfortable, and prepared to copy out the paragraph on the sheet of blank paper in front of me. "Just think of this as a lark," I told myself as I began to scribble. "Just think of the stories you can dine out on when this guy's conclusions are all off-base."

I guess I'm a skeptic at heart. I make it a point not to trust in things like graphology. So I never expected anything to come of having my handwriting analyzed. A few laughs, maybe. But certainly nothing revealing. Nothing of consequence.

I was wrong.

I recognized the truth of most of graphologist Carlos Pedregal's assertions right away. But, when he announced that I was very decisive but often not patient enough, I was sure that I'd caught him in a mistake.

It took me a week to accept the fact that, as much as I didn't want to believe it, signs of my impatience stood out like highway markers in both my professional and personal life. I'd simply chosen to ignore them. I had to confess, Carlos Pedregal knew me—or at least certain aspects of my personality—better than I knew myself.

Had I known more about graphology at the time, I might not have been so surprised. Graphology operates on the same principle as, for example, the Rorschach psychological tests. In putting words on a piece of paper or interpreting inkblots—a person projects her unconscious personality. Where the writer chooses to first place her pen on the page indicates how she situates herself in relation to family and society. The shape and length of the lines reveal other personality traits.

From there the analysis narrows down to looking at specific letters—their size, shape, slant, and how they're grouped. Even the choice of writing implement, the pressure applied and legibility are considered. And of course, the signature is studied—the individual's personal creation that no parent or teacher has had a hand in transforming. "One characteristic, in isolation shows nothing," says Pedregal. "The conjunction of everything is used to analyze a person's handwriting."

In all, a graphologist examines over 300 aspects of a person's script. The result? "Your handwriting will tell an expert things that your best friend or mate wouldn't know after a full 10 years," says Pedregal. Not surprisingly, a handwriting analysis can often provide new insights into yourself, your relationships and your life as well.

Take Mike and Susan (not their real names) as an example. The couple decided they would both have their handwriting analyzed. For the most part, husband and wife were pleased with the results. Each, however, adamantly disagreed with one of the characteristics listed in their respective analyses. Mike's handwriting had revealed that he placed too much importance on himself and his family. "The rest of the world can die so long as we're okay," was the attitude that came through. Though Mike denied that this was true, his wife felt that the analysis was right on target.

Interestingly, Susan's point of contention was about a characteristic that was in direct opposition to the quality Mike had argued about. Her script showed a tendency to put other people's needs first, before her own or her family's, something which Mike had accused her of time and time again. "You don't care enough about our kids," he'd tell her. "You're always taking care of all the other kids in the neighborhood."

The conflicting reactions sparked numerous discussions between the two. Finally, Mike and Susan realized that they—and not the graphologist—were mistaken. Their opposing personality traits had blinded them to each other and fueled their conflict. That awareness allowed them to look at the situation from a new angle and put it in perspective.

Graphology can also reveal character traits that people who've been close most of their lives aren't aware of. For years the 65-year-old Canadian had felt that his five children didn't know who he really was. When he received his handwriting analysis he felt it was so accurate that he ended up mailing a copy to each of his now-adult kids. "For the first time, I felt that somebody understood me," he explained.

For some, the self-discovery that results from having their handwriting analyzed becomes a necessary catalyst for change. "I used to think that I was always right," says Nancy (not her real name). "So I always insisted that my family do things my way." Her handwriting, however, showed that she had become too involved with her family, at the expense of her own identity. The cause: her less than perfect childhood. The result: an overly demanding mother and wife, who only began to step back when the analysis of her handwriting made her aware of the problem and its origins.

Graphology can even shed light on "real life" mysteries. The adoptive mother of a 15-month-old foundling wrote Pedregal asking for help. "All my baby has of her natural mother is the note she was found with. Very possibly she will never have anything else. Could you please see what you can discover about the woman who left her from the note? I would like to be able to tell my daughter something about her mother when she is old enough to question her abandonment."

The note was very short, written on a corner of what looked like a brown paper shopping bag. Though there was not enough written material to be able to do a comprehensive analysis, Pedregal was able to learn a lot about the child's real mother. The writing showed her to be a sad and lonely young woman of about 23 years of age. The characteristics that surfaced in her handwriting included sensitivity, impressionability, generosity and sensuality. They also revealed a woman who was difficult to understand and constantly on the defensive—an outsider who had trouble adapting to society.

The analysis may not have turned up the specific woman who left her baby on the church steps, but it satisfied the child's new mother. "Thank you." she wrote Pedregal. "You've added substance to the shadow of the person who gave us such a wonderful gift."

Occasionally a graphologist can actually foresee the future when examining a person's handwriting. One young couple who'd recently become engaged was told that their marriage would not last more than six months. They'd been high school sweethearts, and their families very much wanted the two to marry. They did, in spite of the graphologist's warning. Five months later they separated. What the expert had concluded based on two handwriting samples unfortunately turned out to be all too true.

These examples may astound you, but they shouldn't. After all, "brain-writing" is what graphologists call handwriting, and they should know.

What Does Your Writing Say About You?

This is your chance to find out what your handwriting reveals about you. Though most experts charge $100 or more, Carlos Pedregal has agreed to a special arrangement for Parade readers. For only $12, your handwriting sample will be analyzed by this internationally renowned graphologist and his staff. You will learn which characteristics surface in your handwriting and you will receive a comprehensive printed explanation of their conclusions. To take advantage of this offer, simply follow the instructions on this page.

GET THE WRITE IDEA

To find out what your writing reveals about your personality, just follow these easy directions.

- Copy the letter on the right, designed to provide Pedregal with the sample he needs for the analysis. Use an ink or ballpoint pen and write in the blank space at the bottom of the page. (You can also use a sheet of unlined writing paper . . . just make sure to attach all the necessary information that's been requested.) And remember, don't try to write neatly. Just relax and write the way you usually do, and then sign your name.
- Be sure to complete the order form below. If you are sending more than one sample, include payment and an order form for each. Anyone over sixteen can participate.
- Send the entire page or clip along dotted line and send order form and sample with a check or money order for $12 plus $2 postage & handling to: GRAPHOLOGY OFFER, 230 Adams Ave., P.O. Box 17081, Hauppauge, NY 11788. Orders must be post-marked by November 30, 1987.

Dear Mr. Pedregal:

I'd like to know what my regular handwriting reveals about my personality. Mostly, I'd like to find out about my strengths and my struggles. My handwriting sample is enclosed, and I did not try to write especially neatly. Many thanks for giving me this opportunity to know myself better.

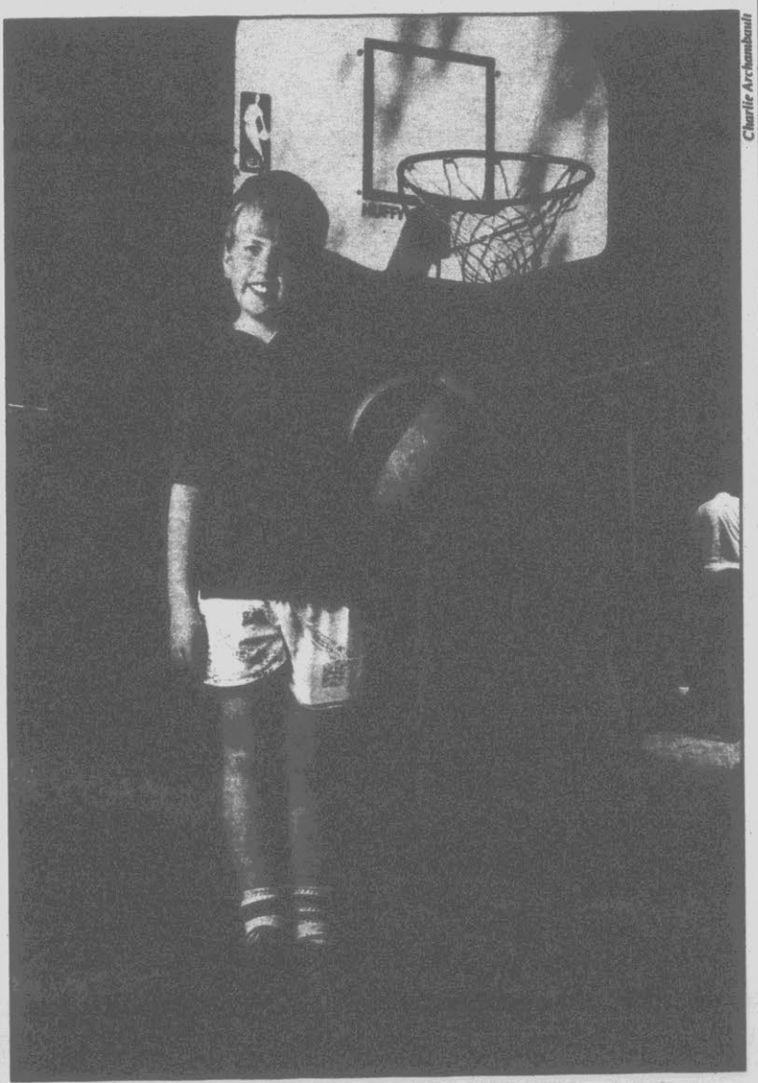
HOW YOUR BODY'S SECRET SYSTEM WORKS

BY EARL UBELL



Charlie Archambault

Healthy, active—and growing: Scotty Floyd, 12, now gets hormone for normal growth through a medicine pump he wears around his waist.

AS YOU WALK DOWN THE street, a large, ferocious dog suddenly jumps from behind a bush and directly in your path. Your heart begins thumping wildly. Your blood pressure peaks. Your body mobilizes its energy resources. You are ready to stand firm and do battle or to flee—ready for fight or flight.

Your body contains a marvelous system of glands and nerves that quickly organizes your heart, lungs, liver, kidneys, blood vessels and bowels, causing them to work at top efficiency in an emergency. And when the threat ends, that same glandular system calms everything down.

Of course, your brain acts first. Through your senses, generally your eyes, the brain recognizes the dog as a threat, sizes up the danger and then releases chemicals to trigger the complex web of glands posted throughout your body. The glands pour out more chemicals—messengers that start the other organs working at top speed.

These chemical messengers are called hormones (from the Greek hormon, meaning to stimulate). Up until 15 years ago, scientists had found only about 20 hormones; now they believe that more than 200 hormones course through our veins and arteries.

"In the last 10 years, we have had an explosion in our knowledge of hormones," says Dr. Charles Hollander, director of endocrinology (the study of glands) at New York University Medical Center. "Through endocrinology, we have new understanding of cancer, diabetes, heart disease, depression and a host of other diseases."

The fight-or-flight hormone network takes care of just one of your needs—the survival response to danger. Your glands also release hormones to:

- regulate your sexual development (ovaries and testes)
- influence your blood pressure and heart rate (adrenals)
- adjust your growth (pituitary)
- control energy use (thyroid)
- govern how your cells burn sugar (pancreas)

In 1983, Ruby Hunt-Russell of Torrance, Calif., was born without a thyroid gland. Had she come into the world four years earlier, the lack of thyroid hormones would have irrevocably damaged her brain. But she was lucky. In 1980, California implemented a law requiring that every newborn get a thyroid test. Today, most states have such a law.

When Ruby was 2 days old, doctors took a sample of her blood. No thyroid hormone showed in the sample. X-rays of the base of her throat, the site of the thyroid, revealed no thyroid gland. In this country, one baby in 4000 is born with a defective thyroid or is lacking one. Doctors prescribed that thyroxin be given to Ruby in her milk. She will take the hormone in pill form for the rest of her life.

Your brain alerts the glands in the body to do their jobs

"She is totally normal, physically and in intelligence," says Lyn Hunt-Russell, Ruby's mother, a schoolteacher.

Ruby today is a striking blond child, with giant brown eyes and a California tan. Without thyroid hormone, she would have become a mentally retarded dwarf.

Scientists also have learned that glands strongly influence both your physical life and your moods and thoughts. Too much or too little hormone secretion by glands can cause anxiety (nonstop fear or depression) and uncontrollable sadness and moroseness, or impair the ability to think clearly.

More news: Other organs, in addition to your glands, make important hormones. Your kidneys make erythropoietin, a substance that spurs the growth of red blood cells. Scientists have made this hormone artificially to help produce blood in people without kidneys.

Your heart pours out atrial natriuretic factor, a hormone that controls blood pressure. Some doctors believe this hormone may be the most powerful medicine yet discovered for high blood pressure. Your stomach secretes cholecystokinin, which tells your brain that you have had enough to eat. If scientists can find ways of making this substance in quantity, they may have the drug that will end the need for dieting forever.

The new knowledge about hormones has given doctors powerful new treatments for ailments that had resisted cure. Among them are: synthetic growth hormone to make dwarfs grow to near normal height; tests to show if depression has a glandular cause; hormone techniques to treat infertility; and hormone treatments for menopause symptoms.

They also have found inhibin, a hormone that could be a male contraceptive. Inhibin is made by the testes and ovaries. But its commercial production for general use could be years off.

At the Salk Institute in La Jolla, Calif., Dr. Roger Guillemin, a Nobel Prize-winner, and his colleagues have isolated what Dr. Guillemin calls "perhaps the most important molecule ever characterized." Called Fibroblast Growth Factor (FGF), it speeds up the healing of wounds, stimulates the growth of new blood vessels after menstruation and helps restore damaged nerves. It may be involved in stimulating blood-vessel growth to feed new blood to the heart after a heart attack or to the brain after a stroke.

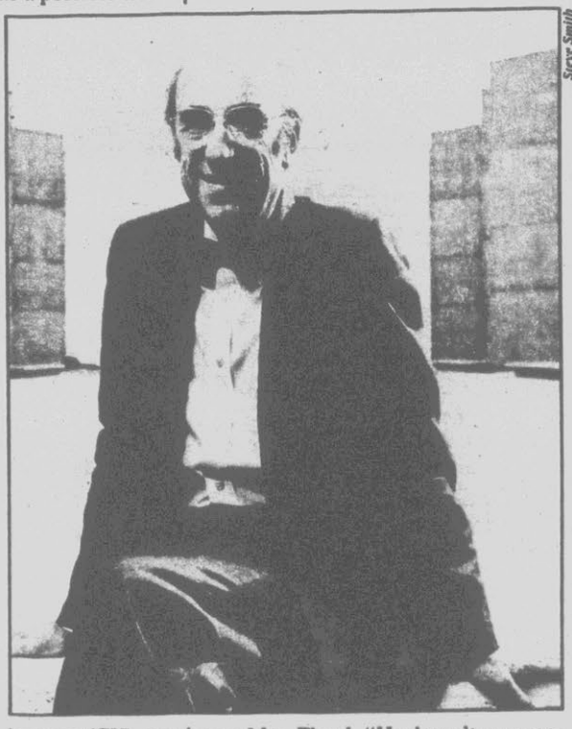
Scientists are trying to create FGF by genetic engineering as a possible treatment for heart attack or stroke patients.

Scientists already have created two kinds of hormone that make children grow—one that normally comes from the pituitary gland at the base of the brain and the other from the brain itself. The pituitary chemical, called growth hormone (GH), can stimulate growth in children whose pituitary gland cannot naturally make it. The brain chemical, called growth hormone releasing factor (GHRF), stimulates the normal pituitary gland to release growth hormone. It was first isolated by Dr. Guillemin and his colleagues.



Steve Smith

Dr. Roger Guillemin isolated a hormone that helps new blood vessels to grow.

Doctors now have synthetic hormones to cure ills caused by bad glands

At age 7, Scotty Floyd of Buena Vista, Va., stood eye-to-eye with 4-year-olds. "I'm just barely 5 feet tall and my husband, Larry, is average height," says Scotty's mother, Donna. "So we thought Scotty would be short."

Scotty's pediatrician sent his young patient for tests by Dr. Michael Thorner, an endocrinologist at the University of Virginia Medical School in Charlottesville. Dr. Thorner found a cyst in Scotty's brain that stopped GHRF from getting to his pituitary.

Scotty began wearing around his waist a special medicine pump that contained the hormone. Every three hours, the pump automatically fed a dose of GHRF through a needle in Scotty's skin. In the first three months of treatment, Scotty grew three inches. Now 12, he alternates by wearing the pump for six months, then removing it for six months. When Scotty wears the pump, he grows two or three inches during the six-month period. When he removes the pump, he grows less than an inch during the same amount of time. He will continue this treatment until he's 17.

"There have been no side effects," says Mrs. Floyd. "He doesn't even notice the pump. Scotty plays sports, except contact sports. And he grins a lot, now that he's growing."

The brain—your most powerful gland. In the last 20 years, scientists have discovered that the brain puts out scores of hormones to control other glands and organs. Not all of these speedy messengers are known or named.

The brain acts as a switchboard between your mental and physical life. By releasing hormones to travel to distant organs, your brain translates your emotional upsets into physical responses—a rapid heartbeat, a stomachache, inflamed intestines.

The brain controls, first of all, the master gland—the pituitary (see box, next page). Just above the pituitary lies a tangle of nerves known as the hypothalamus. The hypothalamus spews out several chemicals that release the major hormones from the pituitary. Here's a brief summary of the process:

- The growth hormone releasing factor triggers growth hormone from the pituitary. This is the substance that is enabling Scotty Floyd to grow to normal height.

• The growth hormone inhibiting factor controls the release of growth hormone from the pituitary. Called somatostatin, it helps to regulate our growth and probably protects us from becoming giants, as well as controlling the release of a number of other hormones. Several new drugs—somatostatin-like compounds—are effectively treating disorders linked to this hormone.

• The thyrotropin releasing factor lets thyrotropin go to the thyroid. It's like a double play in baseball: The brain triggers the pituitary, which, in turn, triggers the thyroid gland to produce its thyroid hormone.

• The gonadotropin releasing hormone (GnRH) does the same for the sex organs: brain to pituitary to sex glands. Doctors give this hormone to women who cannot ovulate. In some infertile men, the hormone increases sperm production.

Chemists have developed artificial cousins of GnRH that are even more powerful. These substances are being tested against prostate gland cancer. Male hormones stimulate the growth of this cancer. By giving the hormone steadily and in large doses, doctors can shut off the testes' production of male sex hormone and slow the cancer. In women, these sex hormones could be used to treat premenstrual tension and a disease called endometriosis, in which tissue from the lining of the womb invades other parts of the pelvis.

• Corticotropin releasing factor (CRF) is a major stress-control hormone. First isolated from human tissue in 1981 by Wylie Vale of the Salk Institute, CRF may be the key to understanding chronic stress and whether it is of psychological or physical origin.

CRF triggers the pituitary to secrete cortisol (an adrenal hormone) and also stimulates the brain to activate the fight-or-flight nervous system to produce adrenaline. When that ferocious dog jumps out at you, your brain releases CRF, which signals the gland network to speed up your heart, release sugar into the blood, raise your blood pressure and spur you into a fight-or-flight response.

"In the short run, your body response mechanism is good for you," says Vale. "You are ready to act. But if you are chronically under stress, you suppress your immune system, your appetite and your reproductive system. Chronic stress also suppresses growth in children."

To counteract this suppression, Vale and his associates developed the first agent that blocks the action of the hormone—called a CRF blocker—in the hope that resultant drugs will be able to relieve patients who overrespond to stress situations.

THE PITUITARY–MASTER GLAND

SNUGGLED UNDER YOUR brain is the pituitary, a tiny lump of tissue which squirts out a variety of hormones that control nearly every major biological system.

I already have told you about GH, the hormone that stimulates growth. Doctors succeeded in isolating that hormone from human cadavers and injected it in children whose pituitary glands could not produce the chemical. But tragedy occasionally accompanied this treatment: Some researchers believe that a virus which causes severe brain damage sometimes "piggybacked" with the human hormone and invaded the patient, destroying the child's ability to think. A safe form of the hormone is now made in the laboratory by genetic engineering.

The pituitary also puts out gonadotropic hormones, chemicals that head for the ovaries or testes—our gonads, or sex glands. (Gonad means seed; tropic means turning.) In women, these hormones control the ovaries' production of eggs, menstruation and the release of female sex hormones, such as estrogen and progestin. In men, the hormones stimulate the formation of sperm and the manufacture of male hormones, such as testosterone.

Doctors now use these gonadotropic hormones to stimulate egg production in infertile women. They also inject them to induce eggs from the ovaries for in vitro fertilization.

Thyrotropin stimulates the thyroid gland to release its hormone, thereby controlling the body's energy levels. Too much or too little thyrotropin also may contribute to mental depression.

In addition, the pituitary produces adrenocorticotropic hormone (ACTH), which switches your adrenal glands on and off. In response to ACTH, the adrenals (one astride each kidney) create several hormones that increase blood sugar, turn off inflammation, lower immunity and trigger the production of male sex hormones.

Perhaps most intriguing of all, the pituitary makes beta-endorphin, a natural, opiumlike substance that reduces pain, gives a feeling of pleasure and may help counter depression.

Clearly, trouble in the pituitary gland spells trouble throughout your body.

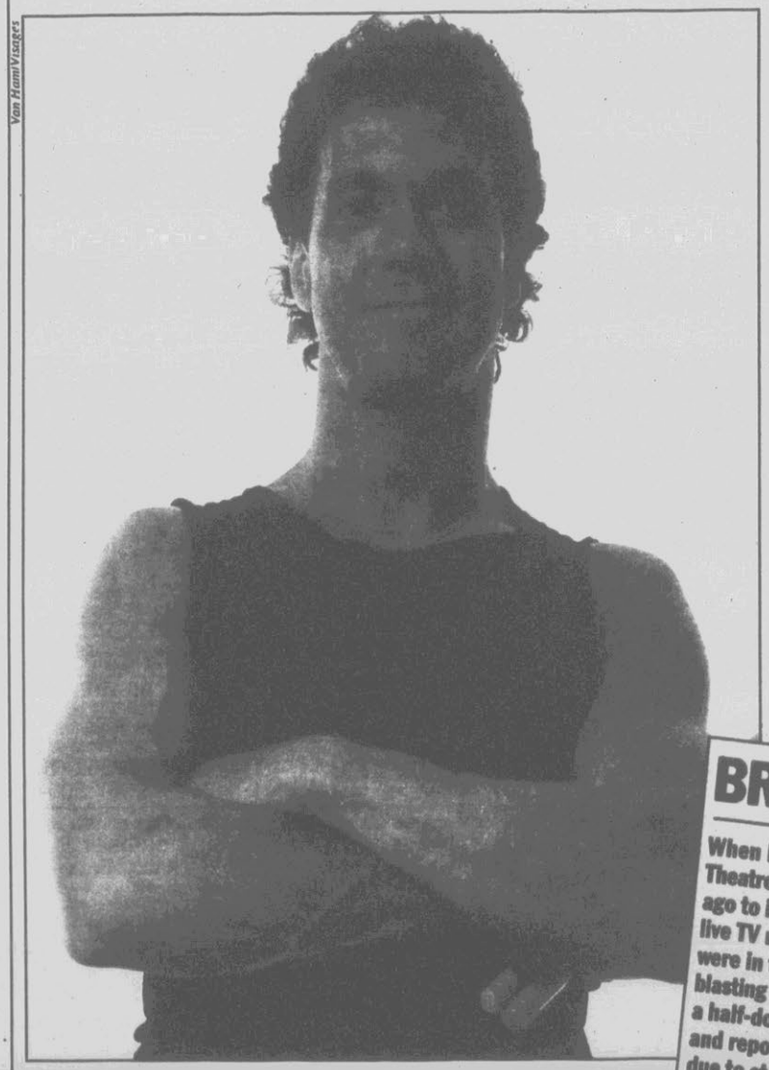
Joe Piscopo

Joe Piscopo's next TV special will be shown on HBO this Halloween. It will be one hour, live—a one-man performance. That is, unless some of his pals show up.



Van Ham/Visages

BORN: June 17, 1951, in Passaic, N.J.
PERSONAL: Married Nancy Jones in 1973; one son, Joseph.
TV SERIES: Saturday Night Live, 1980-84.
TV SPECIALS: Joe Piscopo Special, 1984; Joe Piscopo New Jersey Special, 1986; Comic Relief, 1986.
FILMS: Johnny Dangerously, 1984; Wise Guys, 1986.
BOOKS: The Piscopo Tapes, 1984.
RECORDINGS: I Love Rock 'n' Roll, 1983; New Jersey, 1985.

I CAN STILL SEE THE SMOKE, ANGRY AND black, rising high into the summer sky.

Two years ago on Labor Day weekend, some kids were tossing matches into a dumpster in the industrial city of Passaic, N.J., and set fire to a factory. The resulting blaze destroyed not only the factory but also the small, one-family homes where many of the workers had lived, some for several generations. In a few hours, the guts of a city had been blackened and leveled in a tragedy that deprived many of its people of their homes and jobs.

That was when I first met Joe Piscopo. He had been born in Passaic, not of factory workers (his father was an attorney), and had gone on to other things and better places. But when his hometown called out in its agony, Piscopo listened. He took over an ornate and archaic old Passaic movie house, put on a show, invited in the television cameras and almost single-handedly launched a mammoth fund-raising effort to rehouse his onetime neighbors and to retrain them to find new jobs.

There are very few heroes anymore. But in 1985, the Polish and Hispanic and other folks of Passaic would have struck medals for Joe Piscopo.

Saturday Night Live, which has hatched many brilliant young talents, made him famous. Piscopo began acting in high school and then left New Jersey for a small college in Florida, where he majored in broadcast management and minored in surfing. After graduation, he worked as a disc jockey at a couple of radio stations, acted in local and rep theater, and did commercials. In 1975, he invaded New York and became a regular at the Improvisation, the comedy club where SNL discovered him.

He is a muscular, pleasant, nice-looking fellow given to wearing running shoes and sweatshirts and baseball caps. You can imagine Joe hanging around with the guys, having a beer and talking ball scores—until he starts doing impersonations, which he insists are "appreciations, an affectionate presentation" of what he likes about another performer: a Sinatra, a Joan Rivers, a David Letterman, an Andy Rooney.

He calls his act "affectionate," but a television producer pal of mine says, "If Sinatra ever saw him doing Sinatra, Frank would leave town."

Joe plays the drums, he sings, he does mock play-by-play and he whips up marvelous characters like Python and Helga and Jumpin' Joe and Rappin' Piscopo. And now he isn't just one of the repertory company but also a movie star with his own TV specials.

Last year, one of those specials was about New Jersey. Even the governor had a role. But the star, with Joe, was Eddie Murphy. It was cold, it was wet, it was raw. And Eddie, in a mood, sat in a cozy trailer having lunch with his entourage, while everyone else shivered outside, seriously considering mutiny. A director who suffered through it told me, "Joe held it together. Joe got Eddie out. Joe got Eddie to perform. Without Joe, no show."

BRADY'S BITS

When I got to the old Capitol Theatre in Passaic, N.J., two years ago to interview Piscopo for a live TV news show, I knew we were in trouble. A rock band was blasting in rehearsal, there were a half-dozen other camera crews and reporters, the show was due to start in a couple of hours, and the place was chaos. Until Joe strolled down the aisle wearing a baseball cap and a vast grin. I started to tell him who I was. "Hey," he said, "I know you. I see you all the time on the news." He introduced me to his son, silenced the band, and Joe Piscopo and I sat on the front of the stage and did the interview. I don't think I ever wrote to thank him. Until today.

Teen Heartthrob Returns To Prime Time

By Evan Levine

Girls swooned, shrieked and threatened to tie themselves to his legs when he walked down the street. From 1982 to '84, John Stamos played street-punk-with-a-heart-of-gold Blackie Parrish on "General Hospital." Adoring females watched in delight as he fulfilled the calling for a new pinup to replace John Travolta, who had his moment in the sun as a teen idol.

Now Stamos, 24, is back in the kind of role his fans covet: He's playing a street-smart musician-with-a-heart-of-gold named Jesse on the new ABC series "Full House." The show revolves around a widowed father (played by Dave Coulier) and his brother-in-law (Stamos) into moving in and helping him raise his three daughters. But wait: Isn't that just the type of character he played on "GH"?

"Well," Stamos admits, "I have pulled little pieces from all the characters I've played into this one." These characters include a rock musician on the failed series "Dreams" and an outspoken teen on another failed series, "You Again?" starring Jack Klugman. With this kind of record, it's understandable that Stamos was a little reluctant to try another sitcom.

"This series isn't anything really different, but it is likable," Stamos admits. "I guess Jesse was close to being typecast-the wild, girl-crazy, rock 'n' roll musician. But I liked him, and I was given a chance for a lot of input. I tried to make him good with the kids. And I made him an Elvis fan, like I am. And I liked the fact that it wasn't just one-line jokes."

Stamos, who has toured as the drummer for the Beach Boys, retains little of the streetwise, girl-crazy demeanor of the characters he plays, but much of the cocky charm. He says he doesn't have a girlfriend, and agrees that dating is a pain. He claims never to go to clubs, but to spend his spare time with his family and friends or in his recording studio.

What about the fan magazine claims about the endless strings of females he romances? "Not true," he protests. "I never meet anyone. My mom is really the only one in the family who reads those things anyway."

On ABC's "Full House," a widowed father (Bob Saget, c.) enlists the aid of his best friend (Dave Coulier,l.) and brother-in-law (John Stamos) to help him raise his three daughters. The series previews Tuesday, Sept. 22, before moving to Fridays.

So far, Stamos says he hasn't minded that typecasting, since it's what fans want. "But for my next part, I'm going to do something totally different," he claims. "I don't care what; I'll cut my hair, do a dramatic role."

Just in case he's right, fans had better catch him now in all his poster boy glory.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: I've become quite a fan of Michael Biehn since "The Terminator" and "Aliens." What's his background? — L. OTTARA, AUBURN, N.Y.

"Fan" is the key word. It was Biehn's portrayal of the crazed fan in the 1981 Lauren Bacall thriller, "The Fan," which he maintains set back his acting career for two years. Because of ego conflicts and back-biting on the set, Biehn claims industry people no longer took him seriously as an actor. In the interim, he studied acting and took dance classes. Finally, in 1983 he was cast as the chief bully in the military drama "The Lords of Discipline." The following year, he appeared in "The Terminator" as futuristic soldier Kyle Reese, who was sent to save Linda Hamilton'slife. Unfortunately for Biehn, the film belonged to Arnold Schwarzenegger and his following. Disappointed over the lack of scripts he was offered, he accepted the role of Cpl. Hicks in "Aliens,"which starred Sigourney Weaver. The 31-year-old actor appears to have finally achieved equal footing in his next big-screen outing, "The Border" with Demi Moore. Biehn is married, and the father of 3-year-old twin sons, Devon and Taylor.

Dear Michele: What's the fate of "Houston Knights" and its two good-looking hunks? — DEBBIE BOLDER, CUERO, TEXAS

CBS's "Houston Knights," starring Michael Beck and Michael Pare, has returned for its second season. One difference, however: In order to cut production costs, the show will now film in Los Angeles, which will double for Houston. "It's not anyone's preference," says executive producer Jay Bernstein. "It's a financial consideration."

Dear Michele: I never heard of Harry Hamlin prior to "L.A. Law." What else has he done, or is this his first shot at stardom? — BONNIE BRYAN, FLORENCE, S.C.

"L.A. Law" is Hamlin's first TV series. Hamlin, however, did not appear out of nowhere. A 1974 graduate of Yale, he is a classically trained actor who just happened to make several poorcareer choices. He gave up a Fulbright Scholarship to study Shakespeare in London in order to make his film debut in "Movie Movie" (1978). In 1981, he starred as the toga-clad Perseus in the bomb "Clash of the Titans," and in 1982, he played a gay writer in another flop, "Making Love." His other film credits include "King of the Mountain" (1981) and "Blue Skies Again" (1983). The 35-year-old actor has appeared in the TV miniseries "Studs Lonigan" (1979), "Master of the Game" (1984) and "Space" (1985). On stage he starred in "Hamlet" and the Broadway revival "Awake and Sing."

Return to Dodge

"Gunsmoke: Return to Dodge," which airs this Saturday, Sept. 26, reunites the cast from the longest-running series in TV history. The original "Gunsmoke" premiered on September 1955 and continued for 20 seasons before airing for the last time in September 1975. The cast was remarkably stable: James Arness starred as Marshall Matt Dillion for the entire run, and Amanda Blake played Kitty Russell in every season but the last one.

TV Chatter

TV pitchman David Leisure stays in mendacious character for his TV movie debut in "If It's Tuesday, It Must Be Belgium" (airing Sept. 21 on NBC). In the movie, Leisure — who is best known for his outrageous fibbing as Joe Isuzu on the TV car commercials — plays a spy who tells whoppers. "I'm a spy, so I'm supposed to lie," he says. "I also do gags in the movie, every slapstick thing you can imagine. It's all-out Inspector Clouseau. I'm a lovable bumbling fool." Leisure has two major problems being TV's biggest liar. The actor, who was starving and living in the back seat of his car before Isuzu called, fears he will become so stereotyped as Joe that no one will ever consider him for more truthful parts. "Actually, I would be worrying about typecasting if I weren't having such a great time doing the commercials." He has had other offers, including hosting a new version of "The Gong Show." The other Isuzu-related dilemma? Strangers keep approaching him, asking him totell another king-sized fib.

If he could be convincing as a cop chasing criminals on horseback in New York City, former "McCloud" star Dennis Weaver should be able to pull off his latest unusual casting. He plays a traumasurgeon/cattle roper on ABC's new dramatic series "Buck James" (premiering Sept. 27). When Dr. James isn't cutting into accident victims as head of the emergency department at a major Southwest hospital, good ole boy Buck wears cowboy chic and hangs out with livestock on his ranch. At least he doesn't track down criminals as a sideline! "If you saw him outside the operating room, you'd never guess he was a surgeon," Weaver says. "That's what appealed to me. He's like a fish out of water." As if cattle wrestling and operating on patients near death weren't excitement enough, Buck will also be participating in emergency airlift operations. In the pilot, he jumps out of a helicopter to rescue an accident victim. Weaver doesn't think that's carrying things too far. "I call it heightened reality," he says. Weaver has returned to TV despite the failure of his last series, "Emerald Point, N.A.S." It's all a matter of exposure, he says. "You can do Broadway or a TV-movie, but if you don't have a series, people say, 'Whatever happened to so-and-so?' "

Paul Sorvino, star of the new CBS series "The Oldest Rookie," may be in competition with William Conrad for the title of fattest man on the small screen, but not for long. Sorvino is currentlywriting a diet book called "Everything to Lose." Says Sorvino, "I won't be able to write it unless I lose some weight. And I already have. I've lost 15 pounds in the last month." Like most dieters, Sorvino has had his ups and downs. "I figure I've lost and gained 17 persons in my lifetime." The actor feels the problem is both hereditary and cultural. "Not some of my relatives — all of my relatives — are fat. I come from an ethnic background where food is medicine." His excess weight never hurt his acting career, he believes, "because I was never considered a pretty boy." Sorvinomay have felt the need to slim down because in the pilot he undergoes basic training as a police recruit.

SOAP OPERA WEEK

This 'Y&R' actress started acting in Canadian theater

By Kimberly Redmond

I'm a fan of Jess Walton, who recently took over the role of Jill Abbott on "The Young and The Restless." Can you tell me something about her? – S.S., Danville, Va.

Jess Walton

Walton became interested in an acting career in high school, where she wet her feet in show business by appearing in school theatrical productions.

She grew up in Toronto, Canada, and spent three years with the Toronto Workshop Productions repertory company. She has appeared in the Canadian Broadcasting Company television films "Tom Jones," "Diary of a Madman" and "Noises in Paradise." Her feature-film work includes "The Peace Killers" and "Monkeys in the Attic." She guest-starred in such American TV series as "Rockford Files," "Marcus Welby, M.D. " and "Ironside." Walton portrayed Kelly Harper on the canceled daytime soap "Capitol."

Can you tell me if Kim Zimmer, who portrays Reva Shayne on "Guiding Light," has ever appeared on another soap? – T.W., Turkey, N.C.

Zimmer played Nola Dancy on "The Doctors" from 1979 until 1982.

Christopher Walken

Is it true that Christopher Walken once appeared on "Guiding Light," and if so, what role did he play? – D.M., Houston, Texas

From 1954 until 1956, Walken portrayed Michael Bauer on "GL." At the time he was known as Glenn Walken.

(Have a question about soap operas? Write Kimberly Redmond at 200 Park Ave., Room 602, New York, NY 10166. Questions cannot be answered personally but those of general interest will be answered in future columns.)

ASK ME ABOUT TV

Actor who was on on 'C&L' wasn't a driver of 'Car 54'

By Toni D'Amato

Recently, my husband and I were watching "Car 54, Where Are You?" and one of the police officers resembled the actor who plays Cagney's father on "Cagney & Lacey." Did he appear on "Car 54"? What is his name? Where can we write him? – E.N., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Dick O'Neill

Dick O'Neill portrayed Charlie Cagney on "Cagney & Lacey" until this past season, when the character passed away during the season-ending episodes. O'Neill was not a regular on "Car 54." He starred in the very short-lived sitcom "Empire" (it aired from Jan. 4 to Feb. 1, 1984) and in "Rosetti and Ryan," a law drama that lasted only slightly longer (it aired from Sept. 22 to Nov. 10, 1977). He was also a cast regular of the law/detective drama "Kaz," which aired from September '78 to August '79. He was also in the extremely short-lived CBS series "Better Days," in 1986. Although he hasn't had a long run as the star of a TV series, it is no reflection on his work – he's a very talented actor.

Send mail to O'Neill in care of Orion Television, 1875 Century Park East, Los Angeles, CA 90067.

I say Jennifer Cooke, who starred in "Friday the 13th Part VI," also played Elizabeth in the TV series "V." My friend says it was someone else. Who is right? – C.H., Omro, Wis.

You are. In 1986, Cooke starred with Tom Mathews in part six of the never-ending saga of Jason. She also starred in NBC's "V."

I would love to have an address for Elizabeth Taylor. – E.V., Kingsland, Texas.

Send mail to this legendary actress in care of Chen Sam Associates, 315 East 72 Street, New York, NY 10021.

Chris Evert is my favorite tennis star. Where can I write her? – A.C., Newfoundland, Canada.

Send mail to this sports celeb in care of International Management Group (IMG), One Erieview Place, Cleveland, Ohio 44114.

(Do you have a question about a celebrity? Write Toni D'Amato at 200 Park Ave., Room 602, New York, NY 10166. Questions cannot be answered personally, but those of general interest will be answered in future columns.)

ABC Presents The Final Event Of CART Season

By Marty Linehan

On Sunday, Sept. 20, auto-racing fans can rejoice as ABC presents the same-day coverage of the Bosch Spark Plug Grand Prix, the $450,000 inaugural Indy-car event from the Pennsylvania International Raceway in Nazareth, Pa. This year's Indianapolis 500 champion, Bobby Rahal (the CART point leader this season), Mario and Michael Andretti, Danny Sullivan and Rick Mears are the top riders hoping to make the 200 laps of this 1-mile CART oval track. This is the final CART event of the year.

* For those more interested in racing for daylight, there will be Tony Dorsett, Herschel Walker and Danny White running for the Dallas Cowboys against the Super Bowl champion New York Giants in the second half of a CBS football double-header.

How far the declining Cowboys will get depends on the Giant defense. If last year is any indication, it looks like a long afternoon for the boys from Big D.

* "Monday Night Football" is still on a New York kick. Last week we had the Giants playing the Bears, and this Monday, Sept. 21, the New York Jets take on the New England Patriots. Both teams finished with an 11-5 record last year.

* On Saturday, Sept. 26, viewers can watch young men and women run down the street in New York City, and there won't be any muggers chasing them. No wonder CBS will televise it.

It's the Mercedes Mile, a straight 1-mile run down Fifth Avenue, complete with potholes and manhole covers. Last year Jose-Luis Gonzalez won the men's event in 3:53.52, and the Romanian Maricica Puica finished first among the women in 4:19.48, a record for the event.

* Early Saturday afternoon, Sept. 26, ABC brings us the semifinal round of the biennial Ryder Cup competition between the United States and the best of the professional European golfers. Jack Nicklaus captains an all-star crew of Americans, while Tony Jacklin heads the Europeans.

The United States will try to recapture the title lost in 1985, which was the first time the Europeans won since 1957. The match play comes from the Muirfield Village Golf Club in Dublin, Ohio.

* After the golf, ABC airs the Nebraska-Arizona State football game from Tempe, Ariz. The strong Cornhuskers take on a rebuilding State. CBS will counter with the Ohio State-LSU game.

WORD HUNT CHALLENGE

Each of the first four lines of this verse-riddle provides a clue to one letter of a certain word. See if you can discover the word.

but not in bed.
My second's in nose,
but not in head.
My third's in flame,
but not in fire.
My fourth's in wheel,
and also in tire.
My whole is my castle,
large or small,
in summer, winter,
spring or fall.
What word am I?

Remember, each sentence provides a letter clue in order.

The word is 'home.'

- SUM FUN! Insert six consecutive numbers under 10 in blanks of the diagram at right as necessary so that any three numbers in a row across, including 9, will total 20.

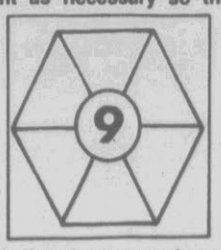
Remember, the consecutive numbers used must be between 1 and 10.

How quickly can you discover the six numbers?



Use numbers 3 through 8. Top clockwise: 7, 5, 8, 4, 6, 3, is one possibility.

- TEA TESTER! Given a golf ball and a teacup, how can you push the ball through the cup's handle? Alakazam! Hold the ball beside the handle, reach through with a finger and push.
