'It Could Have Been Worse'

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Southern Californians set to work today to clear the destroyed buildings and sea of shattered glass left by the region's most powerful earthquake since 1971. Thursday's disaster, which officials called a dress rehearsal for a "Big One" yet to come, killed at least six people and injured more than 100. The temblor lasted only 10 to 15 seconds but crumbled dozens of buildings, damaged hundreds of houses and tossed heavy pieces of furniture about like toys. Sixteen aftershocks followed. Yet, emergency services worked smoothly, traffic flowed, power was quickly restored, and highway improvements completed since the devastating 1971 Sylmar quake minimized damage, officials said. "It could have been worse," said Mayor Tom Bradley. "Overall, I think we escaped a major catastrophe, and I'm sure we're grateful for that." In an interview today on CBS, Bradley added: "It was a valuable exercise in terms of our preparation. ... Within 15 minutes our emergency center was ready in every respect." The temblor, which struck at 7:42 a.m. Thursday and measured 6.1 on the Richter scale, was centered seven miles east-southeast of downtown Los Angeles at the northwest end of the 30-mile-long Whittier Fault. The town of Whittier, five miles from the epicenter, suffered the most damage and the mayor declared a state of emergency. Hundreds of homes were damaged in the suburban community where Richard Nixon grew up. Police patrolled the town for looters, said police Sgt. Charles Plummer, and Gov. George Deukmejian planned to tour the suburb of 71,000 residents today. In Los Angeles, where five people were arrested for looting, an antilooting squad was on patrol downtown and the entire department was on alert, working 12-hour shifts, said Lt. Dan Cooke, a police spokesman. At least six people died, one of them a college student on her way to class struck by a two-ton slab of concrete falling off a parking structure. Rattled residents said they feared the "Big One," a long-predicted massive quake expected to release 1,000 times more energy than Thursday's temblor, which was the strongest since the magnitude 6.4 Sylmar quake that killed 64.

the vehicles parked alongside it. California officials say six people died during the quake and its aftershocks. (AP Laserphoto)

Study Shows Area Leaders Optimistic

ECU News Bureau
Many of eastern North Carolina's more complex problems such as economic development and education are being addressed locally and, as a result, the region's heartland of medium-sized cities "is improving dramatically," a new study shows. At the same time, the study by an East Carolina University political scientist indicates that the region's local governments probably lack the power to effectively address such massive problems as unemployment and poverty.

City officials surveyed believe, however, that most of the region's problems, when identified, can be solved either by local action, federal or state programs and to some extent by the private sector. These findings were reported by Dr. Carmine P. Scavo of the ECU political science faculty who directed research during the past spring and summer, concentrating on 122 members of city councils and school boards, city managers and department heads and political leaders in the cities of Goldsboro, Greenville, New Bern, Roanoke Rapids, Rocky Mount, Wilmington and Wilson. In an interview, Scavo said "the prevailing view is that most cities in the region are improving rather dramatically but that the region as a whole still has some distance to go to catch up with the rest of the state."

This, Scavo said, may reflect a "two-South" scenario "in which we now have a region composed of relatively healthy medium population cities on the one hand and deteriorating rural areas on the other."

He conceded that the 1987 study did not include problems of the region's rural areas. But these will be included in a later study.

"The differences between the cities indicate that certain areas of the region are perceived to be prosperous and healthy (notably New Bern and Greenville) while other areas (Goldsboro) are not," he said.

"These differences should be reflected even stronger in comparisons between the larger cities of the region and the smaller towns and rural areas," Scavo said. He said such a comparison is the next step in the research project with surveys of small towns and rural areas planned next year.

Some evidence for the "two-South" scenario can be found in Scavo's study, he said. There are fairly large differences between the seven cities in terms of the number of problems cited by the city officials, whether they think their city has improved over the last 10 years, and how satisfied they were with their city. Perceptions of 14 problems were assessed.

City officials in New Bern and Greenville saw their cities as having very few serious problems while city officials in Wilson and Goldsboro saw their cities as having somewhat more serious problems.

Perceived city improvement also varied by city. City officials in New Bern were unanimous in saying that their city had improved in the last 10

Jobless Rate Dips To 5.9 Percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civilian unemployment in September fell through the 6 percent barrier for the first time this decade as the economy created 132,000 jobs, more than 40 percent of them in the rebounding manufacturing sector, the government said today.

Last month's 5.9 percent rate — a 0.1 percentage point drop from the rate of July and August — came despite a drop of 309,000 in the number of working Americans to 112.7 million.

But the ranks of the unemployed declined at the same time by 132,000 to 7.1 million as the labor force shrunk by 440,000 with the return to school of teen-agers who had held summer jobs.

Manufacturing employment rose by 55,000 last month, with large gains in the steel and machinery industries. Since June, the economy has produced 165,000 factory jobs, raising the manufacturing employment level to its highest point since August 1985.

Overall, the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate has not been

Iranian Boat Attacks Cypriot Tanker

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — An Iranian warship today attacked and set afire an Indian tanker carrying volatile petrochemicals in the Persian Gulf, and Iraqi warplanes struck a tanker doing business with Iran.

The attacks came the day after a missile fired from an Iraqi plane hit a shrimp trawler and killed its Australian captain.

The London-based Lloyds Shipping Intelligence Unit identified the latest Iraqi target as the Cypriot-flagged tanker Felicity. Lloyds said it was attacked and set on fire while en route to Iran's Kharg Island loading terminal to take on crude oil.

In Tehran, Iran's Parliament speaker said today that further confrontation with the United States in the gulf was probable, and called on young Iranians to prepare themselves for battle. The United States attacked the Iranian ship Iran Ajr 12 days ago, saying it was sowing mines.

Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani, addressing Friday prayers at Tehran

University, said it is "more sweet" to fight America, "the root cause of the war." Excerpts of his speech were carried by the official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus.

In Paris, the Defense Ministry said the French mine sweeper Garigliano found a Soviet-made mine in the Gulf of Oman about 200 feet below the surface. The MO-8 mine "constituted a definite danger to ships that would be anchoring in this zone," the ministry said.

The mine was found Thursday near the United Arab Emirates port of Khor-Al-Fakkan, south of the Persian Gulf.

And, West Germany's national airline Lufthansa has suspended flights to Tehran after one of its pilots reported that his jetliner may have been shot at over the Iranian capital.

Lufthansa spokesman Stefan Hilscher said the captain of the plane carrying 158 passengers reported bullets shot at the plane as it was approaching Tehran airport.

Registration Closes On Monday

Registration books for Pitt County Board of Education and municipal elections to be held Nov. 3 will close Monday, according to Margaret Hardee, Pitt County Board of Elections supervisor.

Mrs. Hardee said unregistered county residents, along with registered voters who have moved, are required to register by Monday.

"Voters who have not already done so should return election district maps in order to ensure correct district assignment and avoid inconvenience for themselves and others by delays on Election Day," Mrs. Hardee said.

The number of ballots to be printed for each district is determined by election records, which may not be current if voters have moved and not notified the Board of Elections, Mrs. Hardee said.

All Pitt County voters will vote at the same place they voted in 1986.

Some precincts encompass portions of several districts. Ballots for each of the districts included in a precinct will be available for voters at the polling place where they have voted before unless they have moved or didn't vote in 1986, according to Mrs. Hardee.

Greenville voters will get one of five district ballots. At-large candidates in Greenville will be included on each of the district ballots. Greenville voters will also get one of six Board of Education district ballots. There are no at-large candidates for the Board of Education.

"The greatest problem most voters seem to have is distinguishing between districts and precincts, which is understandable," Mrs. Hardee said. "If you vote in Greenville, it could be doubly confusing. Municipal Election District 5 will have ballots in Precincts 5, 6, 9, 10 and 7002 (Winterville)."

"Board of Education Election District 5 will have ballots in Precincts 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 and 7002 (Winterville)."

Questions concerning registration, address changes, voting by district and voting by absentee ballot should be directed to a new telephone number for the Elections Office, 830-4121.

Vehicle Entered

Greenville police said a purse containing $50 in cash was taken from a car parked in a lot at the intersection of Fourth and Reade streets early today.

Police said the incident was reported at 2:01 a.m.

Thursday Thefts

Six thefts, including a purse containing a check for $4,500, were reported to Greenville police Thursday.

Officer L.E. White said the purse containing the check was taken from 1401B E. Second St. in an incident reported at 12:47 p.m., while Officer R.L. Smith said a license plate was taken from a car parked in a lot at the intersection of Fourth and Cotanche streets in an incident reported at 1:15 a.m.

Officer S.A. Person said a purse was taken from a car parked on Jarvis Street in an incident reported at 12:03 p.m., while Officer F.G. Pruitt said a bicycle was taken from 27 Wildwood Villa in an incident reported at 12:29 p.m.

Officer L.R. Kepler said a microwave oven valued at $800 was taken from a mobile home at Family Housing, 809 Greenville Blvd., in a break-in reported at 12:51 p.m., while Officer C.M. Credle said a bicycle was taken from 111A Stencil Drive in an incident reported at 6:34 p.m.

Drug Arrests Made

Greenville police arrested two people on drug charges Thursday.

Officers assigned to the department's special investigations unit said Randy Moye, 30, of 1108 Fairfax Ave. was arrested about 6:30 p.m. on a sale and delivery of cocaine charge in connection with a Sept. 19 incident that occurred on Stantonsburg Road.

Officer W.S. Heath said James Earl Thorne, 26, of 1614 Lincoln Drive was charged with possession of marijuana in connection with a 7:43 p.m. incident at The Plaza on Greenville Boulevard.

Matching Fund Drive Scheduled

Greenville Ronald McDonald House officials have announced a matching funds campaign for October. McDonald's will match every dollar donated during this month.

Money received as a result of this campaign will be applied toward the construction debt on the house located adjacent to Pitt County Memorial Hospital, Betty Allison, Ronald McDonald House president, said.

A "Share-A-Night" program is under way. Individuals, organizations and businesses are being asked to share the cost of a night at the house with a family who cannot afford the $10 fee. The Belk-Tyler store at Carolina East Mall, Greenville, is using a "Ronald McDonald House Share-A-Night" display in the store during October. Volunteers will staff the display on Friday and Saturday nights. "Mac Tonight," a new McDonald's character, will be in the store Saturday from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. to promote the event.

Area Food Lion stores will provide grocery bag stuffers to customers to publicize the "Share-A-Night" idea.

Area 4-H Club members will support the house by selling tickets for the N.C. State Fair champion steer, hog and lamb. These will be sold at area McDonald's restaurants Saturday and Sunday.

Other events scheduled include a series of phone-a-thons throughout eastern North Carolina, direct mailings to 35,000 residents of the region, and a yard sale co-sponsored by the Greenville Business and Professional Women's Association Oct. 17.

For information about any of these or other Ronald McDonald House projects, contact Kathy Brown, 830-0062.

Fire Drill Planned

The Greenville Fire-Rescue Department is cooperating with a nationwide "Plan To Get Out Alive" fire safety program — including a national fire drill — being sponsored by the National Broadcasting System and McDonald's Hamburgers restaurants.

Capt. Michael Branch, fire prevention coordinator for the city's Fire-Rescue Department, said fire trucks were displayed at three local McDonald's last Sunday as part of the kickoff for the program, under which the restaurant chain is distributing fire escape safety pamphlets which give fire safety tips and information on planning escape routes from homes.

On Monday, the NBC television show "Valerie's Family" will concentrate on fire safety, Branch said,

TWO-CAR ACCIDENT — A vehicle driven by Donald Taylor of Greenville and another vehicle collided this morning at the intersection of Red Banks Road and 14th Street. Greenville police said both drivers were taken to Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The identity of the second driver was not available. Police said an investigation was under way. Larceny Charge

Marvin Ralph Boyd, 43, of 911 Imperial St. was arrested on a larceny charge by Greenville police Thursday.

Officer J.E. Tripp said Boyd was charged in connection with the theft of 11 pairs of sweat pants from Carolina Imprints on Albemarle Avenue which was reported Tuesday.

Cost-Share Program

Pitt County is one of 23 counties added to the North Carolina Agricultural Cost-Share Program for Non-point Source Pollution Control.

The program has been allocated $3,575,922 by the state Soil and Water Conservation Commission to expand into 23 new counties and to provide technical assistance to all 100 counties.

The program shares costs 75 percent to 25 percent with landowners to install management practices that will reduce the flow of sediments, nutrients and pesticides into streams, rivers and lakes.

Some practices eligible for cost-sharing are conservation tillage, diversions, filter strips, field borders, stripcropping, cropland conversion to grass, trees or permanent wildlife habitat, water control structures, and animal waste management systems.

Applications are being taken at the Pitt Soil and Water Conservation District office, Room 213 of the Federal Building, 215 S. Evans St.

PCC Offering Classes

Pitt Community College will begin an adult ceramics class Tuesday, with classes meeting from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. for 10 weeks in the East Carolina Vocational Center.

The basics of safe boating class will begin Wednesday and will be taught by the local Coast Guard Auxiliary at PCC. The six-week course will cover boat handling, legal requirements, navigational rules and aids to navigation.

For more information on the classes call PCC at 756-3130, extension 253.

Foreign Students

Enrollment figures this semester at East Carolina University include 93 students from 37 foreign nations, according to the registrar's office.

The total does not include foreign-born students who are naturalized citizens or permanent residents of the United States.

The 14 Malaysians at ECU comprise the largest group from any of the foreign nations.

Six students are from India, with the United Kingdom, Canada and the People's Republic of China each represented by five students.

Represented by at least three students are Greece, Jordan, Iran, Taiwan, Korea, Norway and Japan.

Other nations represented this semester are France, Germany, and on Tuesday, NBC affiliates will broadcast a fire drill during the 6 p.m. local news.

Branch said the local NBC affiliate, WITN-TV in Washington, will announce the national fire drill at 6:28 p.m. And Branch said sirens on Greenville's fire trucks will be blown at the time the drill is announced.

When the drill is announced, Branch said, "each family is asked to put into action their fire evacuation plan."

The "Plan To Get Out Alive" program began in Canada in 1984, and Branch said the Canadian fire service was able to remove 12 lives saved from the 1985 home fire drill.

The program was tested in Colorado, Florida, Michigan, Utah and Wyoming last year.

Venezuela, Costa Rica, Cameroon, Kuwait, the United Arab Republic, South Africa, Thailand, Hong Kong, Togo, Bermuda, Honduras, Colombia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Indonesia, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Singapore, Chile, Peru, Brazil and Mexico.

Telethon Assistance

Pi Kappa Phi, a social fraternity at East Carolina University, will participate in a telethon Oct. 17-18 to raise money for the Pitt-Greenville CrimeStoppers.

The telethon will be carried on Greenville cable channels 7 and 9 and will feature live entertainment as well as music videos that feature local celebrities and businesses.

Dillon Kalkhurst of Raleigh, a fraternity member, said members will answer telephones during the event and pick up pledges made by callers. He said the fraternity members are giving up part of the fall break to help the project.

The fraternity will also present a check to CrimeStoppers for $500 during the telethon. Kalkhurst said the money was raised at a September toga party.

Board Of Supervisors

The board of supervisors of the Pitt Soil and Water Conservation District will meet at 8:30 a.m. Monday at the district office in the Federal Building, 215 S. Evans St.

GUC Board Meets

The Greenville Utilities Commission board will hold a workshop meeting in the training room of the GUC operations center on Mumford Road at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Yearbook Activities

D.H. Conley High School will celebrate National Yearbook Week Sunday through Oct. 11 by displaying volumes of the school's yearbook, Valkyrian, and taking subscriptions.

The 1988 edition of the Valkyrian, which has been produced for 17 years, is scheduled to be delivered in May.

Board Of Education

The Pitt County Board of Education will meet Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the third floor conference room of the county office building, 1717 W. Fifth St.

Sheriff Seeks Clue To Identity Of Body

WILLIAMSTON — No identification has been made of the body found last Friday in a ditch along a timber trail six miles south of Jamesville, according to Martin County Deputy Sheriff Jerry Beach.

Beach, who also serves as coroner, said officers "went back to the scene and found some more bones. The body has possibly been there since June."

Beach said Drs. Page Hudson and Stan Harris, state medical examiners from Greenville, have compiled a basic description of the victim.

"They think it's a male, possibly white or of mixed origin," Beach said. The black-haired man had a small frame and was about 5 feet, 8 inches tall, with a 32- or 33-inch waistline.

The only clues to possible identification are provided by the man's clothing, Beach said. This consists of jeans and a blue, paint-stained T-shirt with the words "American Lover" printed on the front. He was wearing a belt with "Todd" inscribed on the buckle, and "Leandro G" embroidered on the inside of the belt.

"We feel the person was murdered," Beach said. "The jawbone and the neck were broken, indicating foul play. But we're not sure of the cause of death."

Sheriff Willie Rogers said it is believed that the body is not that of a local man. A report has been filed with missing persons bureaus in the state and nationally.

Rogers and Beach are asking that anyone with any ideas based on the clothing description that might help in identification call the Martin County Sheriff's office at 792-2826.

sioners will meet Monday at 10 a.m. at the county office building, 1717 W. Fifth St.

Agenda items include: proposed changes in the subdivision approval procedure; a budget for the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Authority, and participation in an extension of a water line from the town of Ayden to serve the Mid-Atlantic Fish Farms processing plant.

Literacy Volunteers

The Literacy Volunteers of America-Pitt County will meet at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the conference room of Sheppard Memorial Library.

NOW Chapter Meets

The Greenville chapter of the National Organization for Women will meet at 300 S. Pitt St. at 7 p.m. on Monday. Discussion will include local politics and some of the candidates for mayor and city council.

Candidate Forums

Three forums for Pitt County Board of Education candidates will be sponsored by Citizens for Excellence and Equity in Education in Pitt County and the League of Women Voters of Greenville-Pitt County.

The forum for districts 1 and 5 will be held Oct. 13 at 8 p.m. at the Greenville Middle School. The forum for districts 2 and 4 is set for Oct. 15 at 8 p.m. at North Pitt High School, while the forum for districts 3 and 6 will be on Oct. 20 at 8 p.m. at Ayden-Grifton High School.

The League of Women Voters' candidate forum for the Greenville municipal election will be held on Oct. 27 at 8 p.m. at the Jaycee Park auditorium on Cedar Lane. For more information call Mary Alsentzer at 756-5352.

Safety Discussions

Allen Everette, a fire-rescuer in Greenville, and friend Tracy

McLawn visited Jackie Adams' fifth-grade class at Wahl-Coates elementary school to discuss fire-rescue safety and escape procedures in conjunction with a safety unit in health.

Page Ayers, former chief scientist on Jacques Cousteau's research boat Calypso, visited and discussed his adventures and work aboard the vessel.

The Committee to Elect Rufus Huggins is sponsoring a voter's registration and education day on Saturday from noon to 7 p.m. at the American Legion Building on the corner of Skinner and Chestnut streets.

PTO Activities

The Falkland Elementary School Parent-Teacher Organization projects committee recently met to organize its Halloween Carnival.

The group will solicit merchants for contributions and donations for the fall bazaar.

Goals of the PTO this year are to carpet remaining classrooms, to purchase a 27-inch television with a modulator and a VCR-video camera, and to provide funds to update equipment. The PTO also wants to provide a computer for each classroom and to provide supplementary funding for teachers, a spokesman said.

PTO members were visited recently by Henry Clay of Chick-Fil-A who discussed a program on perfect attendance in the Pitt County schools.

September activities at the school included the "Dial-R" screening for kindergarten placement, a 10-day fire drill, the United Way campaign kick-off, student pictures, the celebration of Citizenship Day and the recognition of the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution.

Panel Chairman

Dr. R. William McConnell, a Greenville physician, has been elected to a third term as chairman of the North Carolina Radiation Protection Commission.

McConnell is a radiologist associated with Eastern Radiologists Inc. of Greenville. He is chairman of the radiology department of the East Carolina University School of Medicine. He has been a member of the commission since 1976.

Study

years while only 58 percent of the city officials in Goldsboro and Rocky Mount said that their cities had improved. Although all cities clustered near the upper end of the scale of overall satisfaction with one's city, Goldsboro came in lowest while New Bern came in highest.

In the seven city survey, no one problem dominated the concerns of city officials but the largest number were concerned about economic development (29 percent), unemployment (19 percent), poverty (19 percent) and education (18 percent).

"These figures are not out of line with similar sized cities in other regions of the country," Scavo said.

Level of satisfaction with the region's cities is high, he said. On a scale of one to nine, the officials rated their cities an overall average of 6.4, ranging from 7.2 in New Bern to 5.9 in Goldsboro. In addition, 75 percent said that conditions in their cities have remained unchanged and 10 percent said conditions had worsened.

Scavo pinpointed certain difficulties in making comparisons of the eastern region with the state as a whole. Comparing unemployment rates may be misleading, he said, since the rest of the state includes the Research Triangle, which has the lowest unemployment rate in the nation.

City officials interviewed were, on the whole, willing to accept responsibility for the problems except for those of unemployment and poverty, Scavo said.

Search For Federal Dump Site Resumes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Energy Department has announced it is resuming its search in North Carolina and six other Eastern states for the nation's second dump for high-level nuclear waste.

A number of members of Congress, including Rep. Stephen Neal, D-N.C., urged Energy Secretary John S. Herrington to delay the search while Congress debates legislation that would suspend the search for a second site.

"We don't need two sites; we just need one," Neal said in a telephone interview. "It ought to be in an area already contaminated by nuclear radioactivity away from populations, and those areas are far out in the desert in the West."

The Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982 passed Congress with the understanding that the department would open the first site in the West and the second in the East to bury spent fuel rods from nuclear power plants and other highly radioactive waste.

In January 1986, the Energy Department designated 12 primary sites and eight backup candidates for the second site in Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, New Hampshire, Maine, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

But Herrington announced in May 1986 that the department was suspending the search for a site in the East. Herrington said that the slowdown in construction of nuclear plants and the cost of identifying an Eastern site made it unwise to proceed.

The news was hailed by North Carolina and other targeted states in the East, but condemned as a politically motivated betrayal by Western states.

The state of Washington, one of three Western states considered a prime candidate for the first dump, has filed suit in federal court, arguing that Herrington's action was illegal.

The department promised the court that if Congress did not provide further direction by Oct. 1, it would begin narrowing the field of Eastern sites that it considers suitable for holding the waste.

Sens. Jesse Helms, a Republican, and Terry Sanford, a Democrat, joined Neal in signing a letter to Herrington opposing any action to resume the search for a second site.

"Truth In Preference To Fiction"

Ample Grounds

The Senate Judiciary Committee has ample grounds to soundly reject Robert Bork's nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court. Those grounds include the sharp uncertainties surrounding his thinking and his flawed interpretation of the philosophy of judicial restraint.

Bork's intellectual brilliance cannot be questioned. But his enigmatic nature can be, and should be. Too many uncertainties cover his thinking. Even after exhaustive hearings, it's difficult to ascertain where the nominee truly stands.

Bork's transition from early liberal to extreme libertarian to conservative is disconcerting and his defense of this delineation leaves disturbing ambiguities. It appears Bork staked out a theory, used it to address issues, then abandoned it when it produced unworkable results. That approach is troubling and does not belong on the Supreme Court.

Bork's shifts of position cannot be explained as he suggested to the committee. Instead, the way he defended his current thinking yielded no practical interpretation — in fact, it provided more questions.

In addition, Bork's philosophy is not consistent with the charge and purpose of the Supreme Court, and that is the nominee's most alarming flaw. Judicial restraint is a reasonable concept, but under Bork's interpretation, restraint gives a judge the right to ignore principles laid down in past decisions because he dislikes their consequences. In over 50 split decisions in which he has participated, Bork has pursued a conservative, pro-business agenda rather than any neutral theory of judicial restraint.

The implications of that viewpoint endanger the fabric of opinions in past cases where the Supreme Court has protected and assured progress in individual and civil rights. It represents a radical departure from the standard of consensus in constitutional law. Bork's nomination can be firmly declined on those grounds.

The Senate Judiciary Committee's proper action on Bork stands as clear as the nominee's inability to pin down a viewpoint. Too many uncertainties surround Bork's record and thought. His record indicates he is an ideologue who would write his own political views into law for decades to come.

It would be suitable for Bork's nomination to be withdrawn. If it is not, the committee should bypass his nomination. This action could open the door to a nominee with a more consistent and even-handed philosophy than Bork is seen capable of displaying.

Waiting

If the 1987 elections have you confused, just wait until 1988. Better yet, wait until 1990.

The elections this year are local elections. In Pitt County municipalities will be electing council members and aldermen, commissioners and mayors. The county will also be choosing new board of education members. It will be confusing this year, for some changes in election procedure have occurred during the last two years.

Greenville will be electing council members on a district basis. The board of education candidates also are running by districts — and the districts are far different from the present ones.

Once voters figure all that out, they will plunge into the primaries and elections of 1988. It is then we will elect a president, North Carolina governor and fill various state offices.

If that is difficult to digest, be aware that fund raising is already under way for the 1990 U.S. Senate race. At this point nobody is an announced candidate but Sen. Jesse Helms strategists have begun sending out fund raising letters for his possible campaign.

The hint is that former Gov. Jim Hunt will be Sen. Helms opponent in 1990 offering a rematch of the 1984 campaign, one of the bitterest the state has ever seen.

Bear in mind that Sen. Helms has not yet publicly even indicated he will seek re-election in 1990. Hunt says he has given "absolutely no thought" to another senatorial campaign. In fact he found the threat of his candidacy amusing.

"I just laugh at it," Hunt said. "It is another fundraising scheme, I assume, by the Congressional Club." That is the way it appears now, but Hunt has closed no doors behind him.

Dutiful citizens who conscientiously vote will spend the next month trying to figure out who to vote for in the local elections. Soon thereafter they must begin considering the 1988 elections. Already, however, the elections of 1990 are upon us. Maybe it will be a rerun of the Jesse Helms-Jim Hunt race of 1984 — or maybe not. The public will just have to wait a little while and see.

U.S. Politics And Europe's

PARIS — My friend the Frenchman had one of those Eurocomplaints that he had to get off his chest and onto America's back. "Here I am, a leading Americanologist," he had remarked accurately enough back in the spring, "and I don't know a single one of these Democratic candidates. They don't come to Europe like the older generation did. We don't know anything about them."

"That's all right," I responded. "Neither do we."

That is a hard notion for most Europeans to handle, despite the swift ends of the campaigns of Gary Hart and Joe Biden under the pressure of media exposure. It is a great cultural divide: We roll the dice with our politicians in a way they profess to find inexplicable and dangerous for the world. They natter on in ways we find stodgy and condescending.

The truth is that America and Europe have political systems that are weird in different ways. In France, for example, politics, sex and rhetoric are all taken too seriously to be the cause of scandal or the kind of national knee-slapping and finger-pointing that wrote finis to the Hart and Biden campaigns.

As Biden was being blown out of the water by remote-controlled videotape, a right-wing French presidential contender named Jean-Marie Le Pen was getting on front pages here by suggesting that the existence of Nazi gas chambers was only "a detail" of World War II history. A major brouhaha ensued — for all of two days. The professionals think it may have clipped a point off of Le Pen's projected 10 percent share of the electorate, but he is still running hard while Biden is history.

Like every other politician who stands any chance of becoming France's president next May, Le Pen is a known quantity to all of France's voters. His gaffe was in voicing in open terms the covert but clear racist sentiment that won him his following in the first place. Nobody stopped to ask, as they did in the case of Hart and Biden, "Who is this guy anyway? Does he know who he is?"

Le Pen has built his constituency through 20 years of national exposure. It would not evaporate overnight because of a weekend fling or discovery that his law school record is not what he says it is. The same is true for the other French presidential candidates. Their faults and weaknesses are by and large known, and accepted, by an electorate that has been watching them closely at a national level for years.

It is my impression, in fact, that a majority of French voters would agree that the four leading contenders in the gathering presidential race (i.e., Mitterrand, Rocard, Barre and Chirac) are all qualified to be president. They definitely disagree on which one is best qualified, and they may think that the candidates they do not support have terrible flaws.

But voters here and elsewhere in Europe do not seem to harbor the kind of doubts and questions about their candidates' mental abilities and emotional stability that afflict Americans today during primary season. Candidates have reached the top by slogging through constituency systems that emphasize local ties, putting them on display over years to progressively widening circles of "neighbors" who decide whether their qualities outnumber the failings they may exhibit.

Personalities and positions are thus well known by the time the relatively brief formal campaign rolls around. Despite the widespread impression to the contrary, European politicians are engaged in permanent national political campaigns much more than are their American counterparts.

Movement during the campaign itself tends to be incremental and based on how competently the candidates run their campaigns and address their already known positions. Their questioners have to have mastered the details of the economy, arms control or other topics to push the debate, and the story, forward.

Such campaigns are unexciting when judged by the U.S. standards of dramatic disclosure or sudden shifts in the polls. Check recent stories about European elections and see how often they are portrayed as boring or excruciatingly predictable. But also reflect on the proposition that the reasonably attentive reader of The Washington Post or The New York Times was probably exposed to more coverage this year about Neil Kinnock's views on arms control than about Hart's or Biden's.

Or consider that George Bush's dramatic meeting with Lech Walesa in Warsaw Monday received more coverage on French television than it did on the "CBS Evening News" that day. For all the stodginess and insufferable condescension, on politics Europe has a point.

Ferraro, Dole — And Now Schroeder

WASHINGTON — So Pat Schroeder isn't going to run for president after all. Maybe it's just been a bad week, but I'm starting to feel pretty cynical about the kind of examples our most famous elder sisters are setting for us young women.

Remember "role modeling," in the feminist sense? The argument was that no matter how often you were told intellectually that you could be anything you wanted to be, you were most likely to dream of filling the kind of roles, leading the kind of lives, that you had seen being filled and led by people like yourself. This didn't mean that strong, motivated women couldn't make it as pioneers, but simply that — a truism — kids have trouble imagining themselves leading lives they don't know anything about. Seeing a female congressional representative, or a female candidate for vice president, gave girls a plausible and vivid sense of what such a life would be like. A young woman seeing Gerry Ferraro or Pat Schroeder or Elizabeth Dole on TV would need much less imaginative exertion to picture the details of her life, her worries, her day, her childhood, than it would take to put herself in the shoes of a Dick Gephardt. Different body, different background, different rites of passage.

So, as we were saying ... Gerry Ferraro, Pat Schroeder, Elizabeth Dole. Hmmm. As disappointing role models go, the first was the worst, of course. I was newly out of college in July 1984; I watched the Mondale-Ferraro announcement on TV with my mother, and we sniffed and exulted like everyone else. Ferraro's Diet Pepsi commercial punctured the romantic idealizations of the pioneer. To my mind, though, Ferraro did something much worse later. In her infamous whiny book, she said that if she'd known beforehand how hard it was going to be, she wouldn't have done it. Wouldn't have done it! Regretted making her tremendous personal sacrifice for this tremendous cause.

I'm sure there are many male politicians who regret the sacrifices they've made. But these men aren't our heroes. Ferraro was supposed to be. Instead, her slide downward after the campaign evoked classic denigrations of women: she wasn't tough enough, she pitied herself, she didn't know anything about her husband's business endeavors.

Young women trying to formulate lifetime ambitions are, unfortunately, a bit touchy about these particular penumbras. Feminism offers hypotheses we hope to prove in our own lives: that women are capable of anything men are in the career arena; that women and men may have differences, but we don't know what they are, and needn't confine women to certain lifestyles on that basis. Starting out on our own paths, we long to see those hypotheses proven in public.

When Ferraro fails to, we look about elsewhere in the public sphere. And there we find Elizabeth Dole, prominent, intelligent, independent, publicly implying that no matter how much you love your job, and no matter how important you feel that job is to the running of the country, no less — let alone some kind of minor gratification like financial independence, or ambition, or adding to the world's store of knowledge — you still will eventually face the choice whether to keep that job or do your full duty to your husband. "It was my personal choice," Elizabeth Dole declares, meaning that it is impossible to do both.

Just as you console yourself with the thought that, after all, that's the Republican Party, comes Schroeder's announcement that she will not seek the nomination. I didn't necessarily want Pat Schroeder to be president. But for all the reasons that she herself put forward — her seniority in Congress, her leadership on issues not necessarily in the public eye, her activism on issues that are, such as military reform — I also didn't see why her presidency should be considered automatically out of the question. She wasn't the leftmost of the various declared and undeclared candidates, nor the least known, nor the least experienced. Everyone made much of the question of whether she would run "as a woman," as a women's candidate, or as a mainstream candidate with experience on non-feminist issues. I could never figure out why these two different points implied a contradiction. (Is it a contradiction for Albert Gore to run as a Southerner and as an arms-control specialist?)

With all these strong reasons to run, Schroeder went with the reasons not to. They were reasons that carried those same unmistakable associations of gender.

The conjunction of Schroeder's withdrawal and Dole's produces the same frustration, the same worry. Older feminists sometimes complain that this generation of women is growing up "postfeminist," feeling entitled to every opportunity and not appreciating their sacrifices. Sure, we believe that we're as good as men. We've been taught that, we mean to prove it in our own lives, and this is surely progress. But there are still plenty of people out there who don't believe it. Can't we stop giving them ammunition?

Strength For Today

Someone has said that the only difference between a rut and a grave is that a rut is longer.

If getting into a rut means reconciling one's self to a meaningless life, then ruts are of course to be avoided. But there are certain ruts which are channels to a useful and happy life, and these ruts constitute habit patterns very beneficial to our welfare.

Habitual cheerfulness, honesty, courage; a daily routine which makes for health and peace of mind; the disposition to choose one's friends from among people of good character; the habit of thinking good instead of evil, of forgetting grudges — all such habitual reactions to life are ruts which keep us from hurtling off the road and into the ditch.

So we need not be afraid of ruts — unless they are graves in disguise.

The Nation That Loses Leading Industries Loses Ground

Protectionism is depicted by President Reagan, U.S. economists and editorial writers as a disease from which they are fighting to save the nation. History presents a different picture. It shows that protecting its valuable industries is essential to a nation's economic success. The nation that takes over desirable industries from nations that do not protect them wins economic advancement; the nation that loses them goes into economic decline.

By taking over leading industries — historically, high-income manufacturing, shipping, international trade and international banking — a nation gains good jobs, higher incomes, new skills and the potential for further economic success.

The nation that loses leading industries loses all these things, loses its capabilities, its future. The ongoing drama of the economic rise and decline of nations thus centers around the control of markets, which determines which nation gets the most desirable industries.

In the current enactment of this drama, Japan and its imitators have risen extraordinarily rapidly, mainly by taking over the U.S. markets for the products of the advanced industries. In the process, they have supplanted U.S. industries and jobs. The United States has lost capabilities and given up prospects for the future. To be an economic success, a nation must engage in lines of production in which high incomes can be earned, and in which skills can be learned, knowledge acquired, momentum gained for further gains.

When a nation's people have shifted from traditional agriculture to manufacturing, they have created economic potential — learning skills that led to other skills, and forming large, rational, functional organizations. By gaining control of the leading industries through market domination, a nation escapes from the foreign competition that otherwise would hold down the incomes its people could earn.

As farmers competing on equal terms with foreign farmers earning poverty-level incomes, Englishmen could earn only poverty-level incomes. But as leaders in manufacturing and trade, ahead of the competition or suppressing the competition, Englishmen could earn high incomes, selling their manufactured goods abroad for favorable prices, and buying their food cheaply from the low-wage farming nations.

The key to England's great economic rise from the 16th to the 19th centuries was gaining control of foreign markets for manufactured goods, while also protecting its home market from foreign takeover.

Through a series of tough "protectionist" policies, England raised itself from a small, poor nation to the industrial leadership of the world and a position of economic and political pre-eminence.

Finding it could produce fine wool with sheep originally imported from Spain, England rapidly expanded its wool production, encouraged by Henry I's prohibition against importing Spanish wool.

When foreign textile makers became dependent on its wool, England used that leverage to establish dominance in textiles as well. England took two steps: It prohibited the exportation of wool, cutting off foreign textile makers from their supply; and it prohibited the importation of foreign cloth, abruptly stimulating textile manufacturing in England and contributing to the collapse of the competing Flemish textile industry.

The notorious navigation acts and other government actions caused a rapid rise in British shipping and foreign trade.

The naval defeat of the then-dominant Dutch permitted the English to become the leader in international shipping and trade. The English used their dominance in textiles and shipping to squeeze out competitors in markets for other manufactured goods.

While protecting their home market, the English propagandized for "free trade" in other nations. By doing so, they were able to take over the foreign country's markets for manufactured goods, undersell and destroy the local manufacturing industries and thus get rid of foreign competitors.

It was said that English secret-service money was used to bribe German writers to support "free trade" — that is, free access to the German market for English manufactures, who then would undersell and destroy the German manufacturers.

England's economic management of its colonies, of course, assigned the most rewarding industries to England, the others to the colonies.

The outcome of this "protectionist" strategy was that by the late 1800s, England was Number One, the cock of the walk, admired and emulated by other nations. Does the pattern sound familiar from recent events? Japan has essentially repeated England's game. But while England raised itself to economic pre-eminence by taking over the markets of a number of countries, Japan's rise was based mainly on its takeover of the American market and the leading industries of the United States.

The United States had little need of foreign markets. Its economic advancement rested on its great home market, which it could easily have protected. In giving away its home market, the world's greatest market, to other nations to support their economic rise, the United States has followed a uniquely self-destructive policy.

Laissez-faire economics claims foreign trade is automatically beneficial to both trading partners. Experience shows that this is not true. England's economic rise was based on patterns of trade that benefited England at the expense of other nations.

The European market for textiles at any time was only so large. When England took over more of it and expanded its output of textiles (and therefore the number of jobs in its textile industry) other countries lost output and jobs. The more of the American automobile market the Japanese took, the less there was for American production — more good jobs for Japanese workers, fewer for American workers.

The nations that have lost the desirable industries of their time have not automatically received other equally desirable industries to replace them. They just went into economic decline.

When the Methuen Treaty of 1703 weakened Portugal's protection of its textile industry, English goods undersold the local product and destroyed the Portuguese industry.

Portugal was quickly deindustrialized and has remained deindustrialized to this day.

When the northern Italian towns lost their foreign markets and home market to cheap imports, they dropped from a position of world economic leadership to centuries of economic backwardness.

Experience mocks the ideas that now govern U.S. trade policy — the idea that trade automatically benefits both trading partners, that a nation should not care what industries it loses and what ones it keeps, that the United States should practice "free trade" even though other nations are managing their trade so as to take away its desirable industries and jobs.

The foreign trade of the United States is ruining the nation — as similar patterns of trade ruined other nations in the past.

The United States urgently needs to stop passively turning over its market, its desirable industries and jobs, to other nations for their advancement.

The United States should not seek to take advantage of other nations, but should prevent them — and circumstances — from continuing to push the United States down the road to second-class economic status.

To achieve balanced and mutually beneficial foreign trade, the United States needs a positive trade policy that limits its imports as required to keep them in line with its exports, and avoids patterns of exports and imports that shift the desirable industries to other countries and leave the United States with the losers.

In The Background

WASHINGTON — The surprise suggestion by Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III that the United States "is prepared to consider" using the price of gold and other commodities to help monitor global economic health has been in back of his mind for a long time.

Baker felt he needed a way to make sure the exchange rate levels agreed upon by major nations are compatible with a stable and growing economy. Measuring exchange rates against a commodity-price standard, including gold, is one such way.

"But two years ago, when he started the international coordination process at the Plaza Hotel, can you imagine the snorts of disbelief if he had mentioned gold?" asked an insider.

"Just getting the other finance ministers to go to the Plaza, and agree that they would talk to each other on coordination on exchange rates was a tough thing to do."

Even Wednesday, despite the wide acceptance now of the underlying process of economic cooperation, Baker's suggestion that gold might be brought back into the international monetary system — merely as an indicator, not as money — caused lifted eyebrows in the financial community.

Baker knew that he might be touching off a sensation. He briefed President Reagan, and got his approval, on Tuesday. Privately, he discussed the idea with West German Finance Minister Gerhardt Stoltenberg, French Finance Minister Edouard Balladur and British Chancellor of the Exchequer Nigel Lawson. There was no opportunity to tip off Japanese Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa.

The possibility that Baker might be trying to propel the world back onto a gold standard is a chilling thought to those who believe that gold-backed currencies are a drag on the world's economies. But it gave courage to gold proponents, such as Republican presidential candidate Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y. who want to restore gold as the basis of the monetary system.

As is well known, Reagan himself has an affinity for gold, as does the new chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Alan Greenspan. But Reagan has suppressed his affection for gold since taking office. Greenspan — who approves of the latest Baker proposal — has let it be known that he, too, thinks a return to a gold standard is impractical.

Asked about the Baker proposal, IMF managing director Michel Camdessus said Thursday that "gold will not be a major segment of our thinking in the international monetary system." Camdessus cautiously said merely that the commodities-gold indicator idea "is interesting" and would be studied further.

At some point Baker will probably add his public assurance that a gold standard is out of place in the modern world.

"A gold standard is too clumsy: It tries to use monetary policy as a discipline, without consideration for human beings," says a financial expert who knows how Baker thinks.

Why, then, did Baker create uncertainty by mentioning gold? "Gold is in there to make the thing communicable," says a source. Baker's basic idea, as he explained Thursday, is that exchange rate stability without price stability is relatively meaningless. Two weeks ago, in a speech to the Institute of International Economics, he hinted at this when he said that the system of economic indicators being developed to guide the global economy was coming along, but needed "more discipline."

Baker decided that to achieve more discipline, an indicator covering commodity prices should be added to supplement an existing short list including exchange rates, interest rates and economic output levels.

"But commodity prices would not attract enough attention. Using gold, however, grabs your attention. Now, the suggestion of using a commodity standard will become part of the debate — and you'll see, it will eventually be accepted, just as the notion of target zones and economic indicators in general has been accepted," says a well-informed source outside the government.

Baker's game plan from the start contemplated the use of a variety of analytical economic indicators, including one for commodities.

When he succeeded Donald T. Regan at the start of 1985, Baker concluded that the Reagan administration's first-term policy of total devotion to free markets and freely floating exchange rates couldn't work in a global economy overwhelmed by capital movements.

Privately, he decided to aim for a managed system, including "target zones" for currencies, rather than the hands-off approach. The leading nations would undertake to keep currency relationships within acceptable ranges. But America's trading partners weren't ready. German Central Bank President Karl Otto Poehl said that target zones were too much like fixed rates: To defend those rates, the central banks would have to throw too much money into the exchange markets.

Baker started with a Group of Five meeting at the Plaza Hotel on Sept. 22, 1985, seeking small, incremental steps. He said Wednesday in his "gold speech" (as it will become known) that the Plaza accord represented "a major turning point in our efforts to promote a sound world economy."

The Plaza meeting was successful in helping to push the dollar down into a more acceptable relationship with other currencies—a direction in which it was headed, anyway.

That helped to create the momentum for the next step, an agreement among the heads of state at the Tokyo summit in June 1986 to undertake a mutual monitoring of how their economies are working — a process known as surveillance — by using economic indicators.

Board Chief Says No Curbs Placed On Spangler

By The Associated Press

The chairman of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors is denying published reports that he and other members of the board instructed UNC President C.D. Spangler to curb his involvement in campus affairs during a recent meeting.

Philip G. Carson of Asheville said Thursday that he and three other board members met with Spangler at a Durham hotel a couple of weeks ago, but the meeting was not to reprimand UNC's new president. He said the meeting was prompted by Spangler's request for advice.

"The president was not directed to do anything or called on the carpet," Carson said. "This is a non-story getting into a story."

Carson said he received numerous calls from board members after a story Thursday in The News and Observer of Raleigh said Spangler was told to curb his involvement in athletics and other matters at the 16 UNC campuses.

"If I were a board member and what was reported had taken place I would be upset by it," Carson said, "but (what was reported) wasn't the case."

Carson said Spangler "called to ask some questions on some things that had come up and we both agreed that we ought to bounce it around a little bit. I don't purport to speak for the board so others were invited."

Attending in addition to Spangler and Carson were David J. Whichard of Greenville, board vice chairman, and William A. Dees Jr. of Goldsboro, former board chairman.

Carson said the meeting was held in Durham because it was convenient for people coming from various parts of the state. He said the gathering was not a secret meeting.

"It's something that's been done many times," he said. "I think the president is entitled to talk to his board about questions that are troubling him."

Carson said the group took no actions. "We were interpreting existing board policy between meetings." He would not say what was discussed.

Spangler referred questions about the meeting to Carson, saying only "Chairman Carson's statement is accurate."

The News and Observer reported that board members at the meeting were said to have been upset that Spangler was taking too strong a role in deciding how problems in athletic programs at individual schools should be addressed.

"They wanted to make certain that he has as little to do with internal athletics as possible," a source told the newspaper. "He was going in a direction they didn't want him to go in."

Asked if he disagrees with Spangler's position on athletics, Carson said, "President Spangler and I don't have any strong or minor differences on athletic questions."

Board member John R. Jordan, also a former chairman of the Board of Governors, told the paper he learned of the meeting last week.

He said the meeting had "a full agenda" that included internal affairs on the UNC-Chapel Hill campus and athletics at several campuses.

"I was not asked to be there, and I would not have accepted," Jordan said. "I do not believe that those people meeting there in the hotel room had the authority to speak for the full board."

Waste List Is Trimmed To 2 Sites

RALEIGH (AP) — A state commission has pared down a list of potential sites for a hazardous-waste treatment facility from more than 500 to two, but neither the people who live near the locations nor commission members seem happy with the sites.

"We can't say these are the best two sites that exist in the whole state," Al Turner, a member of the North Carolina Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission, told reporters. "What we can say is these are the best two sites for this facility that we've been able to identify."

The commission voted to eliminate all but two of 15 potential sites in eight counties Thursday, after adding two Davidson County sites to its most recent list of 13 locations. The panel also held out the possibility of considering other sites.

The locations still under consideration for the facility are the 264.4-acre Della Cauble property in Rowan County and a 244-acre Clark Road location in Davidson County.

Sites in Durham, Davie, Guilford, Iredell, Lincoln and Rockingham counties were among those dropped from consideration. The commission began its search two years ago with more than 500 sites in 51 counties.

Both remaining sites are located in the central Piedmont, midway between Charlotte and Winston-Salem. Commission members said they chose the sites because they were remote, relatively large, close to major highways and near the center of the state's hazardous waste production.

Residents of Rowan and Davidson counties protested bitterly, with many standing up to tell the commission why they opposed the plant. A contingent of Rowan County residents wore yellow badges that read: Rowan says NO!

Davidson County assembled a large group of speakers, despite having learned that their county was under consideration only two days before Thursday's vote.

"You must go out and actively seek larger and more remote sites," said Edward H. Clement, head of the Rowan Defense Fund. "It makes no sense to put this in an area where there's total opposition to it."

But commission members said they would meet resistance no matter where they put the plant, which will treat about 90 million pounds of toxic, flammable and corrosive wastes annually.

"We need to come to the realization that there is not a county in North Carolina that wants this facility," Chairman Deborah Parker said.

Nevertheless, she said the commission would continue looking for additional properties until its next meeting Nov. 12, when it plans to choose a final site.

Senate Panel Backs States' Right To Control Takeovers

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina officials are praising legislation endorsed by the U.S. Senate Banking Committee that would preserve the traditional right of state governments to set the rules of the corporate takeover game.

"That's exactly the point we've been advocating," said Alan Briggs, deputy attorney general for policy and planning. "I know that Attorney General (Lacy) Thornburg, like many state attorneys general, has been most concerned about federal pre-emption in that field in its entirety."

"There are aspects governing corporate takeovers that states should continue to regulate," Briggs said.

Thornburg sent a letter Tuesday to members of the Banking Committee opposing a proposal to pre-empt state laws governing takeovers, saying that "depending on what form of legislation Congress passes, our state laws could be gutted."

After seven hours of debate Wednesday, the Senate Banking Committee voted 14-6 to send the bill, with most anti-takeover provisions intact, to the full Senate.

The bill passed after the committee rejected an attempt by Sen. William L. Armstrong, R-Colo., to hobble what he called the "most egregious" of state anti-takeover laws. His amendment struck at provisions that restrict the right of corporate raiders to use the shares they acquire to gain control of a company.

"One of the things we did want was the right to control tender offers and control share acquisitions," Briggs said.

"Obviously we're not interested in regulating to such a degree that it's impossible to comply with federal security regulations, but we think there is a middle ground," Briggs added. "We think that states can properly maintain and better protect employees and shareholders that are so impacted by these takeovers."

The North Carolina General Assembly hastily passed two anti-takeover laws earlier this year to protect Greensboro's Burlington Industries Inc. from a hostile takeover attempt led by New York investor Asher Edelman. Legislators feared the company would be broken up and jobs lost.

One of the laws, the Shareholders Protection Act, says that an acquisition opposed by management may be approved only if endorsed by holders of 95 percent of the company's stock.

When lawmakers learned that law might be unconstitutional, they passed the Control Share Acquisition Act. Modeled on an Indiana law upheld this year by the Supreme Court, the law requires an acquiring company to obtain a majority vote of other shareholders before it can vote any stock it has acquired.

Burlington used the state laws to forestall Edelman while it negotiated a higher offer from New York investment banker Morgan Stanley Group Inc., but Morgan Stanley says it will break up Burlington anyway to repay billions of dollars in loans used to buy the company.

Meanwhile, Nortek Inc., filed suit Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Raleigh against state officials and Kincaid Furniture Co. in Hudson, charging that the North Carolina laws violate the U.S. Constitution by restraining interstate commerce. Nortek is trying to acquire Kincaid, which last week rejected an offer of $17 a share, or $58 million.

"One of the difficulties is getting a handle on these issues when they're generic. There's more attention when it comes home like with Burlington and Kincaid," Briggs said.

October Designated Month To Clean Up

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina is determined to clean up its roadsides and prevent overcrowded landfills by declaring a statewide recycling month that should enhance awareness that trash collecting can be a profitable venture.

Keep North Carolina Clean and Beautiful Inc. has chosen October to promote public awareness of resource recovery, placing special emphasis on the importance of recycling aluminum, glass and newspaper. Gov. Jim Martin also has signed a proclamation declaring this month Recycling Month.

"There are some problems out there (concerning trash). There are eyesores," said Jean Dodd, a spokeswoman for the Department of Transportation. "We need to educate our children (about throwing trash away). I think parents have gotten away from that."

Ms. Dodd said at least 12 areas across the state have been designated as drop-off points. Among the events planned and areas involved are recycling competitions between schools in Wake County, a curbside recycling operation in Mecklenburg County and University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill fraternities collecting recyclables on weekends of home football games.

"We have been trying to increase efforts and make the public aware of the problem and how to solve it," Ms. Dodd added. "We figured that if we focused on one month, it would be a good start."

Bob Stebbins, recycling chairman for Keep N.C. Clean & Beautiful, said citizens can get as much as 32 cents a pound for recyclable aluminum, 2 cents per pound for glass and 1 cent per pound for paper.

Plane Crash

WANCHESE, N.C. (AP) — After combing 12 miles of Outer Banks beaches, authorities still have not found a Raleigh man who has been missing since the twin-engine plane he was in crashed into the ocean off the Outer Banks, killing four others. Friends said the men had been on a deep-sea fishing trip at the Outer Banks and were on their way home when their twin-engine Beechcraft Baron burst into flames as it crashed into the Atlantic Ocean off Oregon Inlet Wednesday.

Rescuers found the bodies of Phillip L. Watts, 44, of Clemmons; Emory E. James Jr., 44, also of Clemmons and owner of plane; pilot Keith Duncan, 32, of Winston-Salem, and Thomas C. Thompson, 46, of Winston-Salem, the Coast Guard said.

The Coast Guard's offshore search for Stephen Kirk Mason, 27, of Raleigh, was suspended at sunset Wednesday. Dare County Sheriff Bert Austin said Thursday teams made up of local officials as well as the Coast Guard and National Park Service personnel had searched the beach area for Mason.

Education

GREENSBORO (AP) — State officials no longer block schoolhouse doors, but equal educational opportunities still are denied to blacks through weak classes, social promotion and athletic programs that exploit students and then "discard them like pieces of meat," a UNC system vice president says.

"We have put black students and white students in the same physical setting, but we have not provided equal access to the substance of education," Lloyd Hackley told about 50 higher education officials at UNC-Greensboro on Thursday.

Hackley spoke as part of a daylong conference on survival strategies for post-secondary education.

Award Presented

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — Jack Laughery, chairman and chief operating officer of Hardee's, has been named foodservice operator of the year.

The Multi-Unit Food Services Operators presented the award, the highest honor in the food service industry, during its 28th annual conference in Los Angeles.

Laughery, 52, faced competition from Godfather's Pizza president Herman Cain, Golden Corral co-founder James H. Maynard, Domino's Pizza president and chairman Thomas Monaghan, Dunkin' Donuts chairman and CEO Robert M. Rosenberg and Morrison's Inc. chairman and CEO E. Eugene Bishop.

John Merritt, a spokesman at Hardee's headquarters in Rocky Mount, said Hardee's this year passed Wendy's to become the third-largest fast-food hamburger chain in average unit volume.

Lawyers Assigned

TAYLORSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A woman accused in her husband's slaying has been assigned court-appointed lawyers and moved from Alexander County Jail to Caldwell County.

Lori Mayse, 19, had been sought since January until she was arrested Monday in Tennessee. Ms. Mayse is charged with hiring two relatives to kill her husband, 19-year-old Robert Daniel Mayse.

She waived extradition and was returned to Alexander County Tuesday.

Chiropractors

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina chiropractors hope a permanent injunction barring physicians from discriminating against them will be the catalyst that elevates their profession into the mainstream of medicine.

But physicians say they plan to appeal an injunction issued in Chicago Friday by U.S. District Judge Susan Getzendanner. The injunction is aimed at preventing the American Medical Association from "restricting, regulating or impeding" its 275,000 members or the hospitals where they work from association with chiropractors.

"We're going to appeal that judgment, which we think is in serious error," said James Davis, the AMA's president-elect and a Durham surgeon. He declined further comment because of pending litigation.

Youths Charged

RALEIGH (AP) — Two Raleigh youths charged with stealing $12,000 from a local residence split the money 50-50, and one of them gave most of his share away, a Raleigh police detective said Thursday.

Detective E.L. Rhodes said the other youth hid his share of the loot. But when he took officers to places where he had hidden his half, it was gone.

"The best we can determine right now, he hid it in two locations, and it's missing from both of those," Rhodes said.

Police were tipped by reports of money being given away at Millbrook High School. Rhodes said police found a little over $600 when they picked up one of the suspects. He said about $3,700 of his half of the money had been given away, and the rest was still unaccounted for today.

The youths, Richard Bruce Poole, 16, and an unidentified 12-year-old juvenile, were charged with breaking, entering and larceny, police said.

UNC Divestment

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill will sell all of its remaining stock in U.S. companies doing business in South Africa, the university announced Thursday.

The action by the board of trustees of the university's Endowment Fund was announced by Chancellor Christopher Fordham.

"The Board of Trustees of the Endowment voted today to sell the remaining stocks in its stock portfolio which can be said to represent investments in South Africa," Fordham said. "In view of the declining investment there, and the extraordinary amount of time and energy that has been devoted to this small portion of the portfolio, the board believes that this action will best serve the interests of the university."

As of August 31, the university had slightly more than $6 million invested in U.S. companies doing business in South Africa. That represented about 4.7 percent of the total $129 million endowment.

Discount

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Utilities Commission has submitted a plan to the federal Communications Commission that would give low-income people a discount on telephone connection charges.

The Link-Up Carolina plan is the state version of a federal program to help low income people get up to 50 percent off their connection charges.

Debate Over Resume Goes On

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — The head of the state Democratic Party says Republican Gov. Jim Martin's resume is "riddled with distortions," but Martin's top aide says the controversy is the "biggest non-story" he has ever seen.

"One could overlook this creative writing if the resume were an isolated case," said Jim Van Hecke, chairman of the Democratic Party. "But the governor has demonstrated a pattern of revisionist history that is unsettling coming from one responsible for executing the laws of our state."

But Phil Kirk, Martin's chief of staff, said the resume contained "no major errors" although the governor himself acknowledged there were mistakes. Martin said he saw the resume, written by an aide, for the first time this week.

"I believe it is an accurate representation of what the governor has accomplished working with the General Assembly and sometimes, unfortunately, working alone," Kirk said.

The developments came the day after the Greensboro News & Record reported that the resume made it appear Martin had initiated the Basic Education Program and a career ladder program for teachers, both of which the Legislature enacted before he took office in 1985.

Also, Van Hecke said, the resume credits Martin with a program to attract college students to the teaching profession although his proposed budget contained no scholarship money for the program.

He also noted that the resume calls Martin a tax-cutting governor and credits him with a highway improvement program without mentioning that it included a 3.5 cents-per-gallon motor fuel tax increase.

Van Hecke said the resume resembled campaign literature and should not be mailed at taxpayer expense. Tim Pittman, Martin's press secretary, said copies are sent to people who request information on the governor or who might introduce him at an event.

Van Hecke acknowledged it wasn't unusual for politicians to exaggerate their accomplishments, but said this was different.

"This governor has literally done nothing for three years, and he is facing a re-election campaign and trying to take credit for what has made this state great."

When asked whether that remark was not itself an exaggeration, Van Hecke said, "I may have overstated that ... but he has been a very inactive governor."

Shortly after Van Hecke's news conference at state Democratic headquarters, Kirk summoned reporters to his office in the state Capitol.

"I have been in politics for 25 years, and this is the biggest 'non-story' I have ever seen," he said, reading from a prepared statement.

Martin himself was en route to a Far East trade mission.

Kirk said he had ordered the rewriting of Martin's resume about four months ago because "the old resume, I thought, was a very dry, bare-bones document."

"The criticism is unjustified," Kirk said. "The governor does not believe in taking undeserved credit. He does not believe in grandstanding. Actually, his behind-the-scenes hard work often is much stronger than his rhetoric — just the opposite of many politicians."

The resume says after his inauguration, Martin crafted a "strategic agenda" that was "dedicated to results rather than rhetoric."

It says that during the next six months, Martin increased state funding of public schools by more than $220 million, "halting a decline that had continued every year except two" for the previous 24 years. It says that "with the cooperation of the ... General Assembly, two new programs were implemented in 1985" — the BEP and career ladder.

Martin told the News & Record the statistic on state education spending was wrong. Actually, state spending on schools increased over the 24-year period but decreased as a percentage of the state budget every year but 1966 and 1984.

Kirk told reporters the "hullabaloo about nothing" had taught him one lesson: "We've finally designed a resume that a few of you will read."

Three Killed In Wilson Wreck

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — Three people were killed and a fourth was injured early Thursday when the car in which they were riding ran a stop sign at a rural Wilson County intersection and was struck by a tractor-trailer, authorities said.

One of the victims was a 3-year-old boy.

Sgt. S.H. Taylor of the N.C. Highway Patrol said the crash occurred at 4:15 a.m. at the intersection of N.C. 58 and U.S. 264 about two miles south of Wilson.

Three of the four people riding in the car died instantly, Taylor said. They were identified as Elvin Evesta Estwick, 27, of Jacksonville; his wife, Doreen W.

Estwick, 19, of Jacksonville; and Mrs. Estwick's son, Tyniek Estwick, 3.

Mrs. Estwick's sister, Inetha Wesley, 17, of Newark, N.J., was injured in the accident, Taylor told the News and Observer of Raleigh. She suffered a broken leg and lacerations and was listed in stable condition at Wilson Memorial Hospital late Thursday, hospital officials said.

The driver of the truck, Leslie Ledford, 40, of Nashville, was not injured, Taylor said. The truck was owned by Carolina Freight Carriers of Cherryville.

The truck, traveling east on U.S. 264, slammed into the driver's side of the car and pushed it about 148 feet, Taylor said. No charges have been filed in the case.

McAuliffe Awards Announced

RALEIGH (AP) — Three North Carolina teachers have been awarded nearly $50,000 in Christa McAuliffe Fellowships.

Nancy R. Oakley, a science teacher in the Winston-Salem-Forsyth County schools, was awarded $25,000 for the next year to study whether teaching teen-agers about nutrition can help them lower their blood cholesterol levels.

"When you're 17 and know about the dangers of cholesterol, you won't have to have triple bypass (surgery) when you're 55 because of cholesterol in your blood," Mrs. Oakley, a teacher of anatomy, physiology and biology, said Thursday.

Mrs. Oakley plans to share her information by conducting teacher workshops throughout the state and by publishing the research. Part of her $25,000 fellowship will pay the salaries of teachers who will substitute for her when she travels.

Virginia A. Thompson, a Carteret County middle school teacher, and Joan Lance, a Buncombe County elementary school teacher, were each awarded $12,038 fellowships.

Ms. Thompson will work with students conducting group and individual history and geography projects. Her students will pay particular attention to North Carolina and the application of modern technology to research.

Ms. Lance will fund research and conduct teacher workshops on fostering social and physical growth among kindergartners.

Money for the fellowships is provided to each state by the U.S. Department of Education. The awards honor the memory of Sharon Christa McAuliffe, a New Hampshire teacher and guest citizen astronaut who was killed when the Challenger space shuttle exploded after liftoff in January 1986.

Career Ladder Plan Needs More Work

RALEIGH (AP) — The state's career ladder program for teachers now being tested in 16 school systems still has some bugs that must be worked out before it can be adopted statewide, an education panel has been told.

David Holdzkom, the director of personnel relations for the Department of Public Instruction, told the Personnel Committee of the State Board of Education Wednesday that evaluations of teachers have been inconsistent under the pilot project.

"The data indicates that there are raters who are not reliable,"

Holdzkom said, "but that error was on the high side with more people rated high than should be. If there were rater errors, that did not result in people being hurt."

The career ladder program would break the traditional pay scale that moves teachers up according to their experience and academic degrees. Instead, they would move up based on a two-level scale after evaluations of classroom skills.

But the credibility of the program demands that evaluators in the school systems evaluate in the same way, Holdzkom said.

Bullet Proof

RALEIGH (AP) — Workers this week began construction on a new bulletproof entrance to the U.S. Attorney's Office in Raleigh after the Justice Department approved funds to make the office more secure.

Visitors to the office, in the Federal Building on New Bern Avenue, will be admitted through the glass-enclosed entranceway, said acting U.S. Attorney J. Douglas McCullough.

A Justice Department spokesman said the work was part of a routine upgrading of security at several U.S. attorneys' offices that had asked for the measures.

Bush Says His Trip Isn't Political As Camera Crew Goes To Work

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Vice President George Bush looked in the direction of the camera crew hired by his presidential campaign staff and said his nine-day trip to Europe was not political.

"Most people that have observed what took place in Poland seem to think that it had some substantive importance," Bush said in the direction of reporters, television cameras and his own hired crew.

"And I can tell you having been involved in foreign affairs for some time, that the visits I had in Italy, France, Germany and especially here today ... have all been substance, and no politics," Bush said with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at his side.

Mrs. Thatcher said, "I would like to confirm that. ... Now I'm not quite sure about you, I have some other engagements."

Replied Bush: "It's the best news I've heard in ages."

Thus ended one of the more curious moments of Bush's nine-day trip to Europe, a brief meeting with reporters at which his campaign-financed camera crew taped his remarks about the possible political implications of his voyage.

Bush, whose trip will end on Saturday, met today with British Foreign Minister Geoffrey Howe and other political leaders, and then flew to Brussels where he was to confer with Belgian and NATO officials during his final stop in Europe.

The camera crew followed Bush for three of his four days in Poland, and reappeared Thursday when the vice president arrived in London during his round of arms control consultations with Western allies.

Asked whether the trip wasn't in part the opening salvo of his campaign, the vice president said, "No, it was not."

He said that when he traveled to China in 1983 he was asked similar questions about whether he was simply trying to help himself politically. "I wasn't then and I'm not now," he said.

The vice president is an unannounced candidate for the 1988 Republican presidential nomination, but has scheduled a formal announcement on Oct. 12.

Even as Bush insisted his purpose was diplomatic, he said he hoped the crew would do a good job of recording his actions.

"I hope that those pictures will be very good when I get into politics and when I get back I'll be in it right from the beginning," he said.

"But just as President Reagan was accompanied by cameras when he went to Normandy, there's nothing inappropriate."

Reagan's actions were recorded when he went to Europe before his successful 1984 re-election campaign. That crew came back with dramatic footage of a ceremony marking the 40th anniversary of the Allied invasion of Europe.

Bush's crew filmed several memorable scenes in Poland, including one in which the vice president was cheered by several thousand Poles as he and the leader of the banned Solidarity union movement, Lech Walesa, appeared together on a church balcony.

Bush's top aide, Craig Fuller, told reporters he believed the vice president's trip had a substantive diplomatic purpose.

But he added, "I also think it has political value, and I don't think we should in any way be reluctant to acknowledge that."

"It's my view that any time he travels or engages in some foreign policy activity, it helps him politically because it accentuates what is a strength for him," Fuller said of Bush, who is a former ambassador to the United Nations and to China. "It highlights his experience."

PLASTIC CREDIT — Lynda Bradley of Rolling Meadows, Ill., tests a prototype version of a parking meter that accepts payment by a plastic card similar to a credit card. The cards would be optically marked to register the amount paid for the card and would decline each time the card is used. Test units are to be installed early next year, manufacturers said. (AP Laser-photo)

Credit Card Meters Ready For Testing

CHICAGO — Urban motorists who fumble for change to feed that parking meter will be able to fumble for their plastic, thanks to a major manufacturer of parking meters developing a credit-card operated model.

Duncan Industries Parking Control Systems Corp., of suburban Rolling Meadows, plans to test the devices in early 1988, said Joseph Guzman, Duncan's vice president of sales.

"We have the conceptual model," Guzman said. "We plan to have a prototype near the beginning of next year."

The idea first presented publicly at an Institutional and Municipal Parking Congress convention in April in Miami, and it caught the eyes of some officials, Guzman said.

"We've had 20 municipalities say 'Hey, we're really interested in something like that,'" he said in a telephone interview last week.

"The attraction is that people don't have to carry a large amount of coins," said Guzman.

Special plastic cards would be sold by municipalities or businesses, and the cards would be optically marked to register the amount paid for the card. The amount would decline each time the card is used.

The cards would fit into slots on the meters and register a pre-arranged amount for each use. Some cities might want to work in 5-cent increments, others in 25-cent increments, he said.

The advance sales of the cards would help cities as well as drivers, said Guzman. "To the municipality, it brings in the revenue that much sooner," he said.

Using the back of the card for a city or advertising logo is also a strong selling point, he added.

The meters themselves would resemble traditional models, with a timer on top and a slot for coins on the bottom. Sandwiched in between would be a mechanism about 3 inches high that would with a slot for the meter cards.

The first tests of the meter might come at a couple of parking spaces along Oak Street, an upscale shopping area on the north edge of downtown Chicago.

The Oak Street Council, whose 50-plus members have already banded together to offer $5 valet parking, plan to install some of the prototypes early next year, if city parking officials approve the idea.

Stores along the block would sell the special cards, said Marlei Chaet, assistant to the owner of Ultimo, one of the boutiques.

Miners Rescued

LEADVILLE, Colo. (AP) — Five miners trapped 800 feet below ground for up to 30 hours swapped funny stories and "told lies to each other" waiting for rescuers to cut through tons of timber, rock and machinery blocking the shaft.

The five were rescued unhurt Thursday from the Diamond Shaft gold and silver mine where heavy machinery being lowered by a cable sling fell Wednesday and sealed the main shaft with debris 35 feet above them.

"We rested, we kept warm, we told funny stories, we told lies to each other," said Leonard Wilder, 57, who was pulled from the mine about 9:30 p.m., red-eyed, tired and cold, four hours after the first man was rescued.

"I was the last person out because I should have been the last person out," said the crew foreman.

Rescuers, lowered two at a time in a "sinking bucket" 36 inches across, tunneled through the debris and dropped a ladder to the miners, who were in a horizontal shaft when the machinery fell, said Vernon Gomez, district manager of the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration.

Hot coffee, food and blankets were dropped to the men. The temperature in the mine 7 miles from here was in the 40s, authorities said.

The accident occurred when a sling carrying a three-ton section of a front-loader broke, said mine spokesman Bill Walker. The machinery bounced from side to side in the shaft as it fell, bringing with it boulders and shattered timbers.

Canadian Trade Talks Resume

OTTAWA, Ontario (AP) — U.S. and Canadian negotiations that have been stalemated on a proposed free-trade agreement were to resume today to discuss a new American offer, a spokesman for Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said.

The U.S. Congress has set a midnight Sunday deadline for a tentative deal to eliminate trade barriers between the two countries.

The talks in Washington today were to be attended by Canadian negotiator Simon Reisman and other government officials, said spokesman Bruce Phillips.

He declined to reveal details of the new U.S. offer, which he said was received Thursday. He pointed out, however, that talks stalled eight days ago over Canada's demand for a binding system to settle trade disputes. External Affairs Minister Joe Clark said Thursday there was still disagreement on rules, although the United States had moved closer to the Canadian position.

Reisman walked out of a Washington negotiating session Sept. 23. Since then, U.S. and Canadian leaders have been trying to salvage a deal to eliminate trade barriers between the countries.

For the first time, negotiators were to be joined by politicians today.

Derek Burney, Mulroney's chief of staff; Trade Minister Pat Carney; and Finance Minister Michael Wilson were to join Reisman, Phillips said.

U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker and trade representative Clayton Yeutter were to lead the U.S. team; but it was unclear if chief American negotiator Peter Murphy would attend, Phillips said.

Bank Failures Hit Record For Post-Depression Era

WASHINGTON (AP) — The failure of five more banks has pushed the nation's 1987 total to a post-Depression record for the fourth year in a row, but federal regulators see better times ahead for the beleaguered industry.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. shut down the five on Thursday: three banks in Texas, and one each in Nebraska and Minnesota. The closings push this year's total to 141 with three months left to go, topping last year's end-of-the-year record of 138.

The previous records were 120 in 1985, 79 in 1984 and 77 in 1937. An estimated 4,000 banks closed their doors in 1933 at the peak of the Great Depression before the FDIC was created.

More than half of the closings this year — 76 — have occurred in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana, states dominated by the ailing oil industry. Forty-two of the failed institutions were classified as agricultural banks.

Another 16 banks — 11 of them in Texas — would have failed this year without assistance from the FDIC. A rescue package for an additional 62 banks owned by First City Bancorp. of Texas is pending.

"While we're looking at this pace continuing for the rest of this year ... we see the trend sharply reversing next year because of improvement in the Farm Belt," said L. William Seidman, FDIC chairman. Seidman is predicting 200 failures by the end of this year and a decline to 150 in 1988.

FBI Chief Hospitalized With Ulcer

WASHINGTON (AP) — FBI Director-designate William S. Sessions, who missed his swearing-in ceremony because of a bleeding ulcer, was visited in the hospital by President Reagan, and doctors say Sessions should be released by Sunday.

"He's fine," Reagan said of Sessions after a visit Thursday in which Sessions asked the president, "How's everything going with Bork?"

During their brief hospital visit, Reagan told Sessions "you look good," assured him the Senate nomination fight over Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork was going "positively" and chatted with Sessions' wife and daughter.

Sessions, a federal judge from Texas, took aspirin on an empty stomach, became sick and fainted on a plane flight to Washington on Wednesday night. Doctors found a previously undiagnosed ulcer, which they said flared up when he took the aspirin.

His scheduled installation Thursday morning at FBI headquarters was put off indefinitely, but Sessions "should be ready to go to work next week," said Dr. Allen Ginsberg, who treated the 57-year-old Sessions at George Washington University Medical Center.

"From a medical standpoint he could be sworn in as early as tomorrow (Friday) or Saturday," said Ginsberg, who described the ulcer as small and as being located in the upper portion of Session's small intestine.

Sessions, who will take medication to give the ulcer time to heal, may rest for a week or more before taking the oath of office, said law enforcement officials, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Asked whether the ailment would affect Sessions' performance as FBI director, Ginsberg replied: "Absolutely not."

FBI spokesman Lane Bonner said Sessions underwent a physical examination as part of the selection process for the FBI post, and the exam did not turn up any indication of ulcers.

Sessions, informed on Tuesday by Attorney General Edwin Meese III that he would be sworn in Thursday, had been trying to get things organized and had eaten only one meal Wednesday, said his wife, Alice Sessions.

On Tuesday, Sessions told a reporter he had expected two weeks' notice before the ceremony and added that the call from Meese "was a shock." A reporter for the San Antonio Express-News who saw Sessions at his office Wednesday said the judge appeared "very, very tired."

Sessions was nominated for the FBI post after a nearly five-month search that became a prolonged political embarrassment for the administration when several candidates turned down the job. The previous FBI director, William Webster, now heads the CIA.

Flying aboard Delta Airlines Flight 462 on Wednesday night, Sessions got up hurriedly to go to the bathroom, but vomited in the aisle and fainted.

Several FBI agents and a physician on the plane attended to Sessions, who came to several minutes later. The physician had Sessions lie on the floor for 45 minutes as a precaution.

Sessions, an outdoor enthusiast who has twice partially ascended Mount Everest, has had a reputation as a tough judge, especially toward drug dealers and repeat offenders.

ABRAM IN EGYPT

THAT WHICH ABRAM HAS FEARED, HAS COME TO PASS—PHARAOH, HEARING OF SARAI'S BEAUTY, HAS REQUESTED THAT SHE BE BROUGHT TO HIS PALACE, AND NOW...

...SARAI IS LITTLE MORE THAN A PRISONER IN HER LUXURIOUS QUARTERS, WAITING ON PHARAOH'S PLEASURE....

...AND PHARAOH IS HIGHLY PLEASED! SOON HE WILL SEE FOR HIMSELF IF THIS BEAUTY FROM THE EAST IS WORTHY TO BECOME A QUEEN IN EGYPT....

...SURROUNDED BY THE MANY GIFTS SENT BY PHARAOH, ABRAM CAN FIND BUT LITTLE CONSOLATION IN THEM AS HE SPENDS A SORROWFUL AND LONELY NIGHT IN HIS TENT....

...WHILE SARAI, IN GUARDED PRIVACY, HUGGLES MISERABLY ON HER SILKEN BED!

SUDDENLY, THE DARKNESS OF THE NIGHT IS PIERCED BY A TERRIFIED SCREAM! IT IS PHARAOH, CALLING IN HORROR FOR HIS SERVANTS, WHO SCURRY AS FAST AS THEY CAN TO ANSWER THEIR RULER'S URGENT CRIES FOR HELP!

U.S. Bishops Say They're Aware Of Lay Complaints

By GEORGE W. CORNELL AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Quoting an American Indian adage, a Roman Catholic lay woman, Donna Hanson of Spokane, Wash., told Pope John Paul II on his recent visit:

"Never judge another's life until you have walked in their shoes."

Although bishops at an international synod which opened Thursday at the Vatican are to evaluate roles of lay men and women without being in their shoes, American bishops have tracked the laity's trails.

"We... have listened attentively to the concerns of our lay brothers and sisters," through a year-long series of hearings and diocesan questionnaires involving 200,000 lay people, said the four elected U.S. bishop-delegates.

The bishops say a key lay yearning that emerged in that process is for shared responsibility with clergy in the church's work, what the bishops call "co-discipleship."

That's the cause the Americans say they will press at the month-long synod in Rome, bringing together 230 representatives of national and regional conferences of bishops from around the world.

But indications are that delegates of differing views, including some in the Vatican, are likely to work for sharper lines of demarcation between roles of the laity and clergy.

The pope and some Vatican officials have criticized tendencies to blur those roles, stressing that the laity's prime task is influencing the secular world, while the hierarchy and clergy direct the church.

As a Vatican preparatory document for the synod puts it, "The mission of the laity receives its specific character by their immediate involvement in the world," while the church's clergy authoritatively teach the faith.

The document never uses the definition of the church by the reforming Second Vatican Council of 1962-65 as the "People of God," laity and clergy.

Archbishop Jan Schotte, general secretary of the synod, has questioned applying the word, "ministries," to growing lay church activity, warning against intrusion into "ecclesial ministries" of the clergy.

Although the synod is the chief instrument of "collegiality," or shared church governance with the papacy, the synod's conclusions are only advisory.

Generally church conservatives see the laity's role as outside the church in the secular culture of business, politics and the arts.

Progressive Catholics contend the laity should have power inside the church in a more democratic atmosphere, with a horizontal view of church authority rather than it being applied only vertically from the top.

"Confusion has been introduced concerning the distinction between the roles of the clergy and the laity," charges the conservative, international Alliance of Catholic Lay Associations.

It says widespread "revolutionary ideas" would rob the clergy of the "right, duty and power of ruling."

However, the nationwide U.S. consultations with lay people show they object to Vatican tendencies to see them as passive and needing guidance on everything, says the Rev. Robert Kinast.

Kinast, a Washington, D.C., theologian and consultant to the U.S. bishops laity secretariat, summarized these other prevailing views found among American lay people:

— They consider "all the baptized share full responsibility for both the church and the world."

— They "almost unanimously" affirm a stronger role for women in the church, judging that "women are still discriminated against in the church" and that such discrimination undercuts church credibility.

— They see themselves as actively contributing to the church through "lay ministry" and give a high priority to "collaborative ministry" with priests but don't want to replace them.

— They feel strongly that "church and world should not be divided sharply" in the church's thinking and language, and see a lack of integration between so-called "secular" and Christian life.

American delegate-bishops also object to that dichotomy. Citing the title of the synod, "The Vocation and Mission of the Laity in the Church and the World," the U.S. delegates say:

"The very title of the synod suggests division between vocation and mission, between the church and the world. We think it is important to avoid divisive dualism and exclusionary distinctions."

They prefer the expression "the church in the world," accenting connections, rather than insular spheres.

An American lay adviser to the bishops, Dolores Leckey, director of the bishops' laity secretariat, says the nationwide consultations found overwhelming objections to asserted church discrimination against women.

Religious Groups Break Tradition, Debate Bork

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite longstanding policies against backing or opposing specific political candidates, some religious bodies have jumped directly into the fray over U.S. Supreme Court nominee Robert H. Bork.

The unusual burst of pro-and-con religious partisanship has arrayed religious groups on both sides of the Bork nomination, although most individual denominations have stayed officially aloof.

But some, departing from past practice, have joined the extensive campaigning for or against the candidate.

Past avoidance of such partisan stems both from the politically diverse views within denominations and an IRS regulation barring tax-exempt organizations from taking sides in campaigns for public office.

Support for Bork by the Southern Baptist Public Affairs Committee stirred an uproar in that biggest of Protestant denominations. On the other hand, the United Methodist Church disputed claims it was opposing him.

"The United Methodist Church doesn't come out for or against anyone like that," said Thomas McAnally of Nashville, Tenn., the denomination's information director, repudiating news reports it had taken sides.

That mixup resulted from a women's division advisory to local units to examine Bork's civil rights records and write reactions to senators.

It's a touchy religious zone. However, outright opposition to Bork came from the interdenominational cooperative body, the National Council of Churches, and from leaders of Reform Judaism and of the United Church of Christ.

In contrast, support for Bork came from the National Association of Evangelicals, the orthodox Jewish group, Agudath Israel, and the Catholic fraternal order, the Knights of Columbus, in addition to the Southern Baptist committee.

Such interventions specifically for or against a nominee were unprecedented, except for a single instance by the National Council.

The Rev. Dean Kelley, the council's church-state expert, said taking sides on Bork was "not exactly intervening in a political campaign" since no election was involved, only a pending Senate vote on a presidential nominee.

Of the council action against Bork Sept. 18, he said, "I don't think they were looking over their shoulder at the IRS code." He noted the council once before — in 1970 — took a stand against a Supreme Court nominee, G. Harold Carswell.

The Southern Baptist committee's support for Bork touched off a storm in that denomination, already embroiled in conflict over increasing fundamentalist control of agencies.

Several officials deplored the action, while others defended it.

It drew one of the strongest blasts from a long-time top leader, the Rev. Porter W. Routh of Nashville, who for 28 years headed the denomination's executive committee.

In a letter to state Southern Baptist weeklies, he said the endorsement of Bork violates a denominational bylaw and breaks an historical precedent against such actions.

He said the denomination "has never and should not now be urging the election of any candidate for office."

He cited a 1976 convention resolution reaffirming a "long tradition of non-endorsement of any political candidate" — a policy which that year included refusal to endorse Southern Baptist Jimmy Carter for the presidency.

Routh added: "It is a sad day when persons who have incomplete knowledge of Baptist history or tradition, or the price paid for religious liberty, make decisions which are in violation of specific Southern Baptist actions, and also in violation of the principles of separation of church and state."

On the other hand, Les Csorba of Alexandria, Va., a committee member, said it has "a responsibility to represent" the denomination on First Amendment issues and the endorsement of Bork was "consistent with that."

The committee was newly set up last year after fundamentalists solidified a nine-year process of gaining control of Southern Baptist agencies through appointments of rotated trustees by the denominational president.

The Rev. James M. Dunn of Washington, executive director of the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs, including seven other Baptist bodies besides Southern Baptists, said no Southern Baptist committee could speak "for the entire denomination."

However, the committee's resolution, sent to U.S. senators, said it "is imperative that we, as the largest, non-Catholic religious denomination in the United States, take a firm stand in supporting" Bork's nomination.

The resolution said opposition to Bork "has come from extremist organizations...led and financed by individuals who have consistently opposed the very traditional moral positions Southern Baptists have held."

College Students Can Take Tests, Can't Think

By HOYT HARWELL
Associated Press Writer
BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Over the years education specialists have debated "why Johnny can't read." Now some are finding that Johnny can read, at least for test purposes, but he can't think.

Constance K. Kamii, an education professor at the University of Alabama at Birmingham, said achievement tests have become the objectives of education, with students often taught tricks so they can score high enough to make their schools, principals and teachers look good.

But while learning the tricks, she said, "The students are not learning to think."

Betty Duff, academic services director at UAB, said college freshmen think their academic skills are adequate because they are accustomed to taking memory tests such as multiple choice and true-false exams rather than essay tests, which are more typical in college courses.

They have been taught to skim for facts rather than digest and rethink course material, she said.

The director of UAB's reading center, Thomas J. Barnwell, also questioned testing methods in high schools. He said students are able to pass but are not challenged or required to draw conclusions from what they've learned.

Ms. Kamii said high school teachers have told her, "We have checklists of skills we have to teach, and achievement tests that require us to teach students to get correct answers. Our principals demand higher test scores because they have orders to produce them."

If students are learning, she said, they are doing so "in spite of the teaching methods now used."

She said children are naturally eager to learn but quickly lose their enthusiasm if they repeatedly are trained to learn the tricks of taking tests.

Many teachers, Ms. Kamii said, "don't know they are teaching tricks and discouraging the thought process."

She said good teachers understand the problem once it is explained and would be glad to change.

"However, most principals and supervisors insist that teachers continue using the old techniques," she said. "These teachers become frustrated and their morale sinks."

Administrators, Ms. Kamii said, "worry about test scores because the importance of the scores has been exaggerated to the point where they are a part of the political process. Teachers and their administrative superiors emphasize test scores because our educational systems and the people within them are evaluated on the basis of those scores."

She said the pressure for good scores "creates an environment in which a quick fix becomes attractive, thereby perpetuating the teaching of tricks to obtain correct answers to questions on tests."

Mrs. Duff said she has dealt "with quite a few students who have become somewhat disillusioned, thinking their skills are better than they are."

However, she said, some students with skill deficiencies have worked hard to overcome them and have graduated with honors.

Ernestine Jones, instructional coordinator for UAB's developmental program, said she has found "severe problems in terms of both reading and writing, which I see as very closely related...."

"A lot of them read on the sixth- or seventh-grade level and end up writing on the same level."

Most of the students she helps, she said, have no idea of what it is to write a well-structured essay.

The reason some high school graduates are not prepared for college, she said, is a combination of problems.

"Perhaps teachers are not able to spend enough time on different skills because of oversized classrooms. There are problems with discipline and drugs. Some students are not really interested in learning, and this could cause teachers to become disenchanted."

"The responsibility has to be shared," Mrs. Jones said. "It is a problem that has to be dealt with, but I don't see any end to it in the near future."

The pity, she said, is that most of the students are plenty smart.

"It's just that their basic skills haven't been developed. It has nothing to do with their intelligence level."

"We can't give up on them. If the university can accept them, then we have a responsibility to give all we can to help them develop. A lot of students here fit that mold. Once they reach the point where they want to learn, they can stop placing blame on others and get out and get what they need from whatever source they can."

When students get to college and have to help support themselves, she said, "they start getting serious. They do whatever they have to do."

Double-Ring Vows Said

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Janie Annette White, of Route 1, Fuquay-Varina, and James Russell Wiley of Alexandria, Va., were united in marriage Saturday at 2 p.m. in the First Presbyterian Church.

The Rev. Jerry Bron conducted the double-ring ceremony. Music was provided by Cindy Horner, soloist, and Virginia Gibson, organist.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Garland Eugene White of Route 4, Whiteville and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Russell Wiley of Washington.

Given in marriage by her brother, Eugene White, the bride wore a white satin gown and with French alencon lace. The princess seam basque bodice was molded of alencon lace and beaded with pearls. The sabrina neckline extended to a low V-back. The Elizabethan sleeves were of satin and alencon lace. The chapel train was edged at the hemline with scalloped alencon lace. Her fingertip veil of silk illusion was attached to a headband of pearls and featured a side spray of silk flowers and a back pouf. Her flowers were a cascade of white miniature roses and baby's breath.

Matron of honor was Shirley Skipper of Whiteville, sister of the bride. Bridesmaids were Lynn Kinney of Raleigh, Sara Wiley of Raleigh, sister of the bridegroom, Julie McGill of York, Pa., Lisa Ezzell of Whiteville, Cathy Tedder of Benson and Anita Owenby of Asheville. Honorary bridesmaid was Loretta Clyburn of Durham.

The matron of honor and bridesmaids' dresses were royal blue satin tea-length gowns with lace basque bodice. The bateau necklines were V-back with puffed lace sleeves and shirred satin at the elbow. They carried arrangements of rhubarb lilies accented with deep pink ribbon.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Brett Kassir of Alexandria, Va., John Adler of Reston, Va., Brian Phelan of Greenville, S.C., Luis Soto of Greenville, Chris Pennington of Raleigh and Mike Riley of New York. Sage Wiley was the ring bearer.

A rehearsal dinner, hosted by the parents of the bridegroom, was held at the Holiday Inn in Washington.

Several showers and a tea honored the couple prior to the wedding ceremony.

A reception was held at the church fellowship hall. Assisting were Sherri Whicker, Judy White and Donna Spangler. The reception hall was accented with greenery and floral arrangements. Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Mims and Mr. and Mrs. Bill Morgan greeted guests. The wedding was directed by Margaret Barrow of Greenville.

The bride graduated from East Carolina University with a master's degree in education and is now employed as assistant director at Norwood School in Raleigh. The bridegroom graduated from ECU with degrees in marketing and computer science and is now employed as a marketing coordinator for Electronic Data Systems.

After a wedding trip to Sanibel Island, Fla., the couple will live in Alexandria, Va.

Unlocked Doors Invite Unsavory Characters In

DEAR ABBY: Doesn't anyone believe in knocking on the door anymore? I don't appreciate people just walking through my home till they find us. I wouldn't dream of doing that. I don't mind their calling through the door to see if we're home, but I think it's not only rude, it's frightening to have someone walk in unexpectedly.

My hints seem to bounce off. So please tell all those people out there that an unlocked door is not an invitation to walk in. — MAD IN OHIO

DEAR MAD: You are foolishly trusting to leave your door unlocked. An open door is an invitation to unsavory characters to walk in and help themselves. People who do not lock their doors get robbed a lot. Or worse.

DEAR ABBY: A few days ago I

Dear Abby

found out that our 11-year-old son — I'll call him Sidney — has been playing with my panties and bras, and I've been a wreck ever since. Now I'm afraid to leave him in the house alone. He doesn't know that I know. I haven't told his father yet. (Do I have to?)

Is this normal behavior for a boy his age, or do you think he needs to see some kind of counselor? Do you think if we just ignore it he may outgrow it?

He's always shared a room with his 7-year-old brother. Just last night my husband suggested putting Sidney in a room alone, but I quickly vetoed the idea, so we dropped the matter. It's sure to come up again soon, so please rush your answer to me.

I also found Sidney trying to tie his feet together with a pair of socks a couple of times. Is this normal? — DISMAYED IN DALLAS

DEAR DISMAYED: First, tell your husband. Sidney is his son, too. Don't ignore it; it's not normal behavior. Sidney needs counseling, but don't approach him as though he's committed some kind of terrible crime. He hasn't. Your family doctor can recommend a family therapist who will make Sidney comfortable with his behavior, and help you handle the problem you're facing.

Tapestry Is Chronicle Of Medieval France

By SYDNEY RUBIN
Associated Press Writer
BAYEUX, France (AP) — More than 400,000 people a year come to the museum in this small Norman town to see its single, splendid object: a tapestry that teaches the importance of a promise.

The 900-year-old Bayeux Tapestry is an accurate, colorful chronicle of medieval France and an enduring work of art. It is not, however, a tapestry.

It is an embroidery, 230 feet long and 20 inches high, stitched in eight colors on oyster-colored linen cloth in an unknown English workshop about 1080, two decades after the events it describes.

The figures that dance across the fabric tell in detail the story of the conquest of England. But the story of the conquest occupies little more than half its length, with the rest devoted to the promise.

The first part tells of the trip to France by Harold, Earl of Wessex, of his imprisonment and rescue by William the Bastard, to whom he promised loyalty and aid in gaining the English crown. But when the old English king dies, Harold takes the crown himself, breaking the promise he made before God, an offense serious enough to justify the Norman invasion.

The stitching tells a story with the accuracy and detail of a medieval book. Influential figures of the day are depicted on the linen standing beside hordes of common soldiers and farmers in their fields.

On the tapestry are workmen preparing ships, infantry, cavalry and archers on attack at the great Battle of Hastings in 1066, and the death of King Harold.

Visitors to the William the Conqueror museum enter the exhibit space to the sound of pounding hooves, the soundtrack to a slide show introducing the Middle Ages. A long piece of mounted burlap snakes through the next spacious room, explaining in English and French single events and images reproduced from the tapestry.

Finally, visitors reach the actual work in a darkened room, softly lit and mounted behind glass.

"Look at those millions of stitches, mummy," says a little girl from London on a holiday with her parents. "It must have taken them ages to do that."

Her parents pick her up to get a better look in the case. A group of three French matrons stand for long minutes before one scene, discussing the style of a warrior's protective mail.

Among this year's visitors were Britain's Prince Charles and Princess Diana, who toured the tapestry for the 900th anniversary of the death of William the Conqueror.

More than one-third of the annual visitors to the tapestry come from the United States or England, but the day before the royal visit, practically everyone was outspokenly British.

"A great piece of English craftsmanship," one British tourist wrote in the museum's guestbook. "When are you planning to return it?"

"Never," a French tourist replied on the next line. "The tapestry is forever ours."

Liddy Dole: Questions Of Timing

'I Want To Be Part Of Campaign'

By LAURA PARKER
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

HOUND EARS, N.C. — Whenever Elizabeth Dole talks about her husband, Bob, she always begins with the old story about making the bed.

It is her Modern Woman story, a little tale about the dilemmas that today's working wives must confront. People magazine came by one year, the story goes, to do another of those spreads on Washington's Power Couple and photographed the two of them making the bed.

Bob, naturally, took some flak for participating in this domestic chore. But, she says, smiling devilishly, "they don't know the half of it. Bob does a mighty good job making that bed. He's got that job full time."

The crowd of well-heeled Republicans and family friends assembled at this Blue Ridge Mountains resort last month to contribute to Kansas Sen. Robert Dole's presidential campaign nodded appreciatively at this little insight into the two-career marriage.

What Elizabeth Dole did not share with the group was a more pressing dilemma, one that was closing in on her even as she spoke. About how it was becoming increasingly difficult to continue as secretary of transportation and campaign for Bob at the same time. About how a wave of bad publicity was building, about to crest, blaming her for allowing air safety to erode and lousy airline service to become routine. About how she was going to have to face up to the choice she had made years ago, which was to push him on toward the White House.

The trip to Hound Ears would, in the end, be her last official outing as secretary. Three days later, after two more campaign stops in Columbia, S.C., she would return to Washington and announce that as of Oct. 1, she was trading her Cabinet post for that of a full-time Candidate's Wife.

She said there was the plan to concentrate her work in the "Super Tuesday" primary election states of the South to consider. The push to overtake Vice President George Bush, the chief Republican opposition, in the polls.

"The thing is, Michigan is only four months away, and Bob is ready to make his announcement shortly," she said brightly from the White House driveway. "I want to be a part of my husband's campaign because I believe in him and we're talking about some serious business here."

Dole would also say it was a difficult decision, a "tough choice," one she had been wrestling with for weeks. She gently raised the issue of sexism. She asked if this was a "spousal question," as if some hidden chorus of voices had publicly called for her to step down when no one had asked her to resign at all.

But the choice had been made long before — the only question was when she would go. And by leaving when she did, she escaped any serious review of her performance as secretary. Suddenly no one cared if Bob Dole's wife wanted Mode C transponders on small airplanes.

"I knew all the time that she would go with him when she felt the time was right," said Mary Hanford, her mother.

On Capitol Hill, the Democrats called her "Sugar Lips." The name was coined by a frustrated senator one day after Dole had disarmed a group of senators at what was supposed to have been a tough hearing. It was not the first time she had done that, and the name stuck. Eventually, it came to symbolize Dole's successful use of one of her most potent political tools: her style.

She mixes femininity — in her case, a southern-belle graciousness and an almost girlish charm — with her Ivy League professional credentials more successfully than perhaps any woman in public life today. Her style has brought her good press; it has made her one of the most sought after speakers in the Reagan administration. It has soothed angry lawmakers and transportation executives alike. And it makes her an even more potent force on the campaign trail, particularly in the South.

"She's got a movie star quality to her," says Dave Owens, a longtime friend of Senator Dole, who has raised money for each of his presidential and senatorial campaigns. "You can see it after she's made an appearance. People want to touch her and get their picture taken with her."

"You know she has just flown in from somewhere and she is flying out again that day, but she will talk to you as if she has nothing else to do but talk to you," says Wyndham Robertson, who grew up with her in Salisbury, N.C.

Personal

Cleo Dickens of Falkland and friends from Pinetops and Rocky Mount attended the Piedmont Association held in Roanoke, Va., during the weekend.

Legumes like dried beans, peas and lentils are low in fat and high in fiber and protein.

She is always cheerful, spunky. Her sentences are sprinkled with "gosh," and she easily shares what seem like family intimacies, such as how Bob slept on the couch one night before she went on the "Today" show to keep the dog from waking her.

Elizabeth Dole, 51, is the only daughter of a well-do-do florist with a business that dated back three generations. Salisbury, in those days, was a small southern town with plenty of traditional values. For a girl growing up in the 1940s, life was ballet classes and horseback riding lessons, trips to the seashore and, at 18, a debutante ball in Raleigh.

She nicknamed herself "Liddy."

At 5, she was mascot to her older brother's high school graduating class.

At 8, she was president of her third grade Bird Club.

At 20, she was student body president of the Women's College at Duke University. She was also May Queen.

Then there is the story, which Dole tells herself, about her first court case after her graduation from Harvard Law School. In Washington, she worked briefly representing indigents and was assigned to defend an immigrant zoo keeper accused of harassing a lion. Unless the lion was brought into court to testify, Dole argued, the prosecution couldn't prove it had been harassed. The charge was dropped.

"I began to see a change in her when she took political science in college and I really thought she would take home ec," her mother recalls. "I remember talking with a political science professor and said, 'What do you think about a girl taking political science?' and he said, 'I think it's wonderful. We need women in government.' And then he said, 'Oh, don't worry, Mrs. Hanford, they all get married anyway.'"

"We certainly never talked about a plan for a career," says Robertson. "I felt I slid into my career, and I felt she did, too."

Washington, Dole's mother says, drew Dole "like a magnet," and for the next 20 years she climbed the ladder to increasingly better political jobs and evolved from Democrat to Independent to Republican. She was legislative assistant to President Lyndon B. Johnson's consumer affairs adviser; then, executive director of the President's Commission on Consumer Affairs.

She had the right political connections. She was an attractive woman. And she had drive.

Her tenacity is perhaps best illustrated by her effort to get onto the Federal Trade Commission when the Senate Commerce Committee balked at a proposal to make her a member in 1973.

Michael Pertschuk, then the committee's chief counsel, remembers passing the word back to the White House that the committee thought she was a poor candidate.

"Twenty minutes later, she was in my office saying, basically, 'What do I need to do to be acceptable?'" Pertschuk says. "My answer was that if she was acceptable to the consumer leaders, if they supported her, then the committee would not stand in the way."

By coincidence, a consumer convention was meeting that weekend — and Dole was on the next plane, in search of support.

"The next week," Pertschuk says, "we had a call from the White House with a group of consumer people saying they would support her. That was pretty impressive. She went after what she wanted."

In 1976, Dole began her quest for a much bigger prize. She acquired a taste for presidential politics when she took a leave of absence from the FTC and campaigned for Bob's vice-presidential bid. In 1979, she quit the FTC two years before her term expired to help him run for president.

"We'd only been married eight months," Dole recalls of the 1976 campaign. "I had to listen to him for four or five days to kind of get the hang of it."

"She had good ideas, but they hadn't been seasoned by political judgment," the Doles' friend, Owens, says.

The seasoning came fast. By the end of the summer, she was known as the ticket's "Southern Strategy." She was given much of the credit for reshaping her husband's political image from partisan hatchet man to a power in the Senate. She was credited, too, with softening his sarcastic edge. Around Washington, the Doles, with their clever stage repartee, were dubbed by Savvy magazine as "the Nick and Nora Charles of politics."

She dismisses any role as image-maker as complete nonsense. "He's sort of the way I always knew him," she says. But her campaign tales usually include at least one story about the soft side of Bob Dole. How he was wounded rescuing a fellow soldier in World War II. How he choked up at a home-town rally in Russell, Kan., in 1976 when he recalled that the people there had raised money to pay for his hospitalization after the war ended.

The attention to image carried over when Dole was named transportation secretary in 1983. She promoted herself as the "safety secretary." She abhorred bad publicity. Her critics in Congress most frequently accuse her of managing the department by press release, of grandly unveiling a new regulatory procedure when the department had been pushed into it by Congress or the courts. A former spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration remembers how Dole ducked reporters in 1984 after a hugely promoted test of a special nonexplosive jet fuel in the Mojave Desert ended in flames.

"We were scheduling a news conference and then we were told she had another appointment she had to get to," Ed Pinto says. "So I ran the news conference with (then FAA chief) Don Engen instead of Elizabeth Dole."

By last spring, when airline travel began spinning out of control, Dole's report card began to acquire some failing grades. By late summer the bad reviews were piling up. The Washington Monthly headlined a September cover story: "Charming Her Way to the White House: air travel stinks, auto safety's a joke and Washington still loves Liddy Dole." A trade journal, Traffic World, editorialized that Dole's "stewardship over the last four years has been little more than a planned media event."

Her decision to leave, pressing in on her for weeks, came abruptly. Several major newspapers were preparing critical assessments of her four-year tenure at the department. Her reputation for grace and competence, an asset not only to her but to her husband's campaign, was at risk.

She says that the criticisms had nothing to do with her decision. She says she held the job longer than any of the department's eight secretaries. She talks of agonizing and soul-searching, but it was never really a question of her career versus Bob's, her job versus his. Her sights were set much higher than that.

"You have to look at the opportunity to be a part of something that will also have serious implications," she says. "Certainly as serious in that you are talking about who is going to be the leader of the free world."

Council Has New Regional Director

LESLIE PARKER

The North Carolina Council on the Status of Women is accepting applications for its Distinguished Women's Awards Banquet set for March 30 in Raleigh.

The council, established in 1963, addresses issues such as economic development, sexual assault, legal rights, employment and career planning, and the special needs of minority, low income, and older women.

The 20-member council also advises the governor, the principal state departments and the state Legislature on the needs of women in North Carolina.

The northeastern regional director for the council is Leslie Parker, former director of the Pitt County Family Violence Program.

Ms. Parker encouraged "local councils to network even further ... which causes not only more visibility for the council but reaches an even more diverse population of women."

She also said that a "needs assessment survey," which would give each individual council the information it needs to further develop programs for its areas, needs to take place.

Some issues now being addressed include sexual assault, domestic violence and day care for children. On the national level, a "shelter-aid" fund-raiser is taking place to raise money for women's shelters.

The council publishes a newsletter, Womennews, and has available for loan various books, films and training materials on topics such as sexual assault, domestic violence, women's history, leadership development, legal rights, employment, displaced homemakers and educational equity.

The Council on the Status of Women is the only state agency which focuses exclusively on women's needs, according to Ms. Parker.

Applications for the organization's Distinguished Women's Award are being sent to the local councils.

Jobless Rate Falls

below 6 percent since November 1979, when it also stood at 5.9 percent, the Labor Department said.

The commissioner of labor statistics, Janet L. Norwood, said the industrial recovery has affected the relationship between the jobless rates for men and women.

"During the recession of the early 1980s, the predominantly male factory work force was hard hit, and the employment rate for men shot upward, surpassing the rate for women," she told the congressional Joint Economic Committee.

The jobless rates for men and women had mirrored each other at nearly 6.0 percent in December and had fallen together to 5.5 percent in April.

Quake Toll Placed At 6 Dead

"This is only the dress rehearsal for the real thing," said Mike Guerin, spokesman for the governor's Office of Emergency Services.

People handled the quake with varying measures of poise or panic.

In suburban Bellflower, a family was sweeping glass and a stream of beer, wine and other spirits out the door of a liquor store when a woman walked up. "Can I just buy a lottery ticket?" she asked. She was told to come back the next day.

Downtown Los Angeles became a virtual ghost town as high-rise buildings were evacuated, businesses closed and workers were sent home for the day.

In Whittier, broken glass and debris rained into the streets. Thirty buildings collapsed, city officials said.

Mayor Gene H. Chandler declared a state of emergency, and at least 170 people spent the night at two shelters.

Mike and Cheryl Verdugo and their 13-month-old daughter, Stephanie, sat on the front lawn of their Whittier house. Verdugo said the family planned to stay outside through the night.

"The side of the house is pretty thrashed. Big chunks of concrete came off the side," Verdugo said, adding his baby girl would sleep in the car.

Amid concern about falling debris,

Statistics

RALEIGH (AP) — The number of major crimes reported to law enforcement agencies in North Carolina increased by 6 percent during the first six months of 1987 compared to the same period last year, SBI Director Robert Morgan says.

Morgan said Thursday violent crimes as a group were up 5 percent statewide, with the largest increase in rural counties, which were up 10 percent. Aggravated assault was up 3 percent; robbery, 7 percent; murder, 10 percent, and rape, 14 percent.

Murder, traditionally more prevalent in urban areas, fell 14 percent in the five largest N.C. cities and 7 percent in suburban cities, while increasing 33 percent in counties and 67 percent in rural towns with more than 10,000 population.

Rape also showed an increase of 59 percent in rural towns of over 10,000 people.

authorities sealed off a dozen blocks of the city.

"The houses up here in the hills are all a mess," said Denise Huff, 33, whose ceiling caved in. "I'm from Ohio, and I'm going back."

Although the quake was brief, its impact was sure to reverberate for years among those whose fears became reality.

The quake was felt as far away as Las Vegas, Nev., 250 miles to the northeast. It knocked dishes off shelves in the Victor Valley, 70 miles to the northeast.

"I've lived here for a year and had horrible, horrible nightmares about the big one. I thought this was it," said Margie Thomas who raced out of a downtown Los Angeles restaurant when the shaking started. "I'm getting out of Los Angeles."

In old residential neighborhoods, porches collapsed onto lawns, chimneys toppled, windows were shattered, and streets cracked.

Those killed included a 21-year-old California State University-Los Angeles student crushed by a collapsing wall; a 32-year-old man who fell from a second floor window in suburban Maywood; and a 40-year-old construction worker buried under seven feet of earth 35 feet into a tunnel under construction in the San Gabriel Mountains, officials said.

Heart attacks attributed to the earthquake killed a 69-year-old man during a high-rise building evacuation in Los Angeles; a 72-year-old woman, distraught over damage to her apartment in the city of Bell; and a 20-year-old woman, described by a coroner's spokeswoman as overweight, in Covina.

A 70-year-old woman suffered a fatal heart attack in bed at her Irvine home as her husband tried to calm her over the telephone, but authorities said they could not prove the earthquake caused her death.

Nearly 12 hours after the quake, a 30-year-old motorcyclist was killed when his bike slid under a state Department of Transportation truck repairing a freeway near suburban Norwalk, said state Highway Patrol spokesman Lyle Whittier.

The quake, dubbed the Whittier Narrows quake by scientists, was followed by at least 16 aftershocks that measured 3 or more on the Richter scale. Three had magnitudes exceeding 4, and U.S. Geological Survey seismologist Lucile Jones said aftershocks up to magnitude 5

Pirates Seek 1st Over Mounties

By WOODY PEELE

East Carolina's Pirates return to the road Saturday, facing a struggling West Virginia University squad in a 1 p.m. contest at Morgantown, W. Va.

East Carolina is coming off only its second victory in four starts, but has matched its output for each of the last three years. Anything else from here on in is an improvement.

West Virginia, which has now lost three straight after an opening game win, hopes to prove an unsatisfactory host, however, and hand the Pirates their sixth straight defeat at the Mountaineers' hands.

The series between the two teams dates back to 1970, when West Virginia first visited Greenville, going away with a 24-14 victory. The following year, the Mountaineers rolled up a 44-21 win in Morgantown. Both times, the West Virginia squad was led by Bobby Bowden, now the head coach at Florida State.

Ten years later, the series was resumed for two more games, both in Morgantown. The Mountaineers took both of those, 20-3 and 30-3 behind current coach Don Nehlen.

Last year, the two teams met once more, this time in Greenville, and the Mountaineers rallied from behind in the final six seconds of the game to pull out a 24-21 victory. The lead changed hands five times in the game as ECU led first, 7-0, then fumbled away a chance to go up 14-0.

West Virginia came back and trailed 7-3 at the break.

The Mountaineers moved ahead, 10-7, then fell behind again 14-10. West Virginia again took the lead, 17-14, before Anthony Simpson scored with 1:26 left to give the Pirates a 21-17 lead.

But they were unable to hold on as quarterback Mike Timko guided the Mountaineers on a 69-yard drive on nine plays to win the game with just six ticks left on the clock.

"Despite their record, they are a very good football team," ECU Coach Art Baker said of the Mountaineers. "They are going through some of the same things that we are going through. They've played a tough schedule (losses to Ohio State, Maryland and Pittsburgh)."

Baker said that the Mountaineers and Pirates are similar in some regards. "Their defense is excellent and they have a lot of their defensive players from last year back. They are tough and hardnosed on defense. Pittsburgh only beat them 6-3 but West Virginia kept the offensive pressure on them all game. They stopped them from scoring a touchdowns, but just couldn't get one of their own.

"They're bigger than Georgia Southern," Baker added. "They are probably one of the bigger teams we face this year."

Offensively, the Mountaineers also are somewhat similar to the Pirates. They have fumbled 15 times, losing 10 of them. East Carolina has lost 10 of 22. "They are also working with a young quarterback (Major Harris, a red-shirt freshman). They've also had a hard time in getting a handle on what they want to do offensively."

Baker said he is expecting a tough football game in the matchup. "It could well come down to a defensive struggle."

The Pirates will rely on the running of fullback Anthony Simpson, who picked up 112 yards last week in the win over Georgia Southern. Simpson had 303 yards on the season, and is averaging 4.4 per lug.

Quarterback Travis Hunter has rushed for 171 yards while slotback Reggie McKinney has picked up 144 yards — a good deal of it from the I-formation.

However, Baker said that the I would be used only if West Virginia presented a need for it. Otherwise, the Pirates will stick with their run-and-shoot offense.

Hunter, through the air, has completed 22 of 52 passing attempts for 224 yards with two interceptions. East Carolina has yet to throw a touchdown pass this season.

Top receivers have been Jarrod Moody, Simpson and Ron Jones, each with four nabs for 46, 43 and 42 yards, respectively.

Ironically, both teams have the same opponent next on their schedule. The Pirates play host to Cincinnati on Oct. 10, while the Bearcats visit West Virginia on Oct. 17. West Virginia will be open on Oct. 10.

Clinching Celebration

Cardinals Celebrate Title, Overwhelmed By Relief

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals did their share of celebrating and champagne-spraying after clinching the National League East title.

But the overwhelming emotion was relief.

"I'm enjoying it all," said reliever Ken Dayley while taking a minute to collect his thoughts after the Cardinals defeated the Montreal Expos 8-2 Thursday night for their third title in six seasons. "But you've got to step back once in a while and take a breather."

"This is a tough business."

And it has been a long road to the playoffs for the Cardinals, who endured injuries to catcher Tony Pena, pitcher John Tudor and first baseman Jack Clark to oust the World Champion New York Mets a day before the teams began a season-ending three-game series.

Pena suffered a broken left thumb in the third game of the season and missed about two months. Tudor, a 21-game winner for the 1985 National League champions, was out from mid-April to August with a broken leg suffered in a freak dugout injury.

Clark, who leads the team with 35 home runs and 106 runs batted in, has been out of the lineup since Sept. 9 with an ankle injury and is expected to miss at least Games 1 and 2 of the playoffs against the NL West champion San Francisco Giants.

"I think to win with everything that's happened to us, is amazing to me," Manager Whitey Herzog said. "We've had so many injuries."

Herzog said he tried to keep an "even keel" despite the problems, and said his easygoing attitude rubbed off on the club.

"We've had some hard times," he said. "The Mets talk about adversity, but we've really had it. This year we could have quit several times."

Throughout the season, Herzog, who has produced six division champions and one world champion in 15 seasons as a manager at Texas, Kansas City and St. Louis, has made all the right moves to cover up the holes.

On Thursday, he made perhaps the best one by accident when he was forced to move veteran Dan Driessen from seventh in the batting order to the cleanup slot. Herzog made the switch when center fielder Willie McGee, who is second on the club with 105 RBI, had to be scratched from the lineup with a jammed finger.

Driessen, a 36-year-old veteran of the Cincinnati Reds' "Big Red Machine" teams of the 1970s, who was called up from the minor leagues to serve as Clark's stand-in at first base, responded by going 2-for-3 with three RBI.

"I guess it was just my time," said Driessen, who entered the game with a .218 average. "Lately I had been struggling with the bat."

"It's a great feeling to help. I came here to help out."

Several players said a crowd of more than 48,000, most of them dressed in red and waving white towels, inspired them.

"It was a fantastic game," outfielder John Morris said. "I'm totally ecstatic right now."

"It's everything I thought it would be," pitcher Greg Mathews said. "I dream of days like this. This is great."

"It's just beginning, though."

For the Expos, a team picked by many to finish last in the East, it was the end of a very impressive run for the title.

"We gave it a helluva try," Montreal Manager Buck Rodgers said in a quiet clubhouse. "They (St. Louis) won it, they deserve it."

"Now we have to go after second place. We finished 29½ games behind the Mets last year, but we'd like to beat them out this season."

The Expos trail the Mets by one game and both teams have three games remaining. Montreal closes at home against the Chicago Cubs.

Owners Stick To Line As More Players Come Back

NEW YORK (AP) — As more striking players returned to their teams, NFL owners are sticking to their hard line position — no new bargaining until the union shows some sign of backing off free agency.

The NFL Management Council, the owners' bargaining arm, brusquely rejected Thursday a public overture from union head Gene Upshaw to resume the talks that broke off last Friday.

"There has been no indication either publicly or privately, that the union's demands are different now than they were ... when the negotiations were recessed," a Council statement said.

Ten more players crossed picket lines Thursday, including Tony Dorsett of the Dallas Cowboys, the fourth-leading rusher in NFL history. That brought to 48 the number who have defected from the union with 2 p.m. EDT today the deadline for players to return and still get paid for this week.

But the players weren't the only ones to feel the financial pinch.

An Associated Press survey showed that more than 287,000 tickets to this week's replacement games had been returned by fans, 40 percent of the total sold. Sellout streaks were expected to end Sunday for Denver, 139 straight since 1970, and Washington, 159 since 1966.

And the Miller Brewing Co., a major sponsor of NFL telecasts, said it was pulling its commercials from this weekend's games.

"We didn't know how the ratings would go so we decided to step back a week and take a look at it," said Miller spokesman Bob Bertini, who said decisions on future advertising would be made later.

Upshaw made his call for new talks at a news conference in Washington at which he also accused owners of trying to make the strike "a black versus white issue."

"They're calling me black, militant and hostile," he said. "They're trying to divide us along the lines of black versus white. That's something the players are aware of."

Upshaw also suggested that the union's demand for unrestricted free agency was not the major issue, as the owners have been insisting.

"We are calling upon the owners to send their negotiators back to the table that they left last Friday," Upshaw said. "We just feel that a lot of things we talked about and suggested are just not getting through to the group of owners out there that should be concerned about a strike."

But the Management Council came back with a statement a few hours later indicating it saw no new reason for talks. It added:

"This is a labor dispute. Race has never been a factor in these negotiations. Suggesting that this is anything more is an attempt to obscure the difficult economic issues including free agency."

It wasn't the first time that Upshaw has suggested that free agency is not the main issue. But he has also said that the players will not give up their demand for some sort of unrestricted free agency at some point in a player's career.

Moreover, some of the players who have returned to camps have cited that as the reason for their defection.

"I told Gene Upshaw this was what I'm going to do," said Steve Dils, the backup quarterback of the Los Angeles Rams and one of the players to cross the lines on Thursday.

"Basically, I didn't feel that Gene was representing what the players wanted and that was sticking on the free agency issue. I had already given them one paycheck. I didn't see any reason to give them another, based on what Gene was saying."

Money was the also the reason for the defection of Dorsett, who received a letter from the Cowboys saying he was putting the annuity in his contract in jeopardy by staying out of camp. The annuity, which will pay him $6.4 million between 1990 and 2014, began being funded Feb. 1, 1985.

Reggie Gets Hit, Leaves No Doubt As To Future

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Reggie Jackson became Mr. October for the last time at the Oakland Coliseum, bowing out in typically dramatic fashion with a pinch-hit single on his final swing of the bat.

Stirring memories of World Series heroics, he waved his helmet and blew kisses to the fans standing and chanting, "Reggie, Reggie" in brilliant sunshine.

Then he went to his locker and said simply, "This was my last at-bat."

Jackson, 41, said he wasn't making an official announcement of his retirement after 20 seasons. This was not the time for a formal speech. But he left no doubt Thursday he intends to quit playing.

He often has hinted he will retire after this season, but he never made it so definite as he did this time.

"I'd like to be around next year, but it won't be as a player," Jackson said.

He has said he is considering a coaching or management role with the Athletics, possibly investing in the club and becoming a part-owner.

Jackson's contribution to the A's this year came less from his bat and more from his leadership and counsel to younger players, especially rookie home run slugger Mark McGwire and last year's Rookie of the Year Jose Canseco.

Jackson hit only 214 with 15 home runs and 42 runs batted in, and his low production in the designated-hitter role is in part the reason for the A's failure this year.

But the A's discounted that, hoping he would be a better influence than last year's DH, Dave Kingman. Manager Tony LaRussa said he's happy with the decision and McGwire and Canseco both say they expected a great deal from Jackson.

If Jackson's hit in Thursday's 9-5 victory over Cleveland was his final swing at the Coliseum, where he starred from 1968-75, he made the most of it in an emotional moment for the players and the fans.

"He's the only player I've ever managed who brought tears to my eyes," La Russa said after watching Jackson chop a single up the middle while pinch-hitting in the eighth inning.

Jackson, who had been limited to pinch-hitting in the past month because of a hamstring pull, was given a standing ovation by the crowd of 9,846 even while he was in the on-deck circle. Before batting, Jackson acknowledged the crowd's chants by waving his helmet.

3 Pollsters Joined In Tie For 1st

Woody Peele

The longjam is back at the top of the Daily Reflector pick'em poll, with three people tied for first place after last week's round.

Tom Morris, Tom Baines and Vicki Spivey are all knotted for first place with 36-10 records. Don Reuter is one step back with a 35-11 record.

The games this week don't really seem as testy as those of last week, but we shall see what we shall see.

Our high school picks last week showed an 8-2 result, which brings us to 25-11 on the year.

There are several key games among conference teams this week, including the Rose-Rocky Mount matchup which the panel will handle.

Meanwhile Ayden-Grifton travels to North Pitt. The Panthers, with a week off to lick some of their wounds, still probably won't have Calvin Hunter back at quarterback, which takes a huge dimension from their offense.

Farmville Central will on the road, traveling to suddenly strong Charles B. Aycock. The Falcons, the doormat of the league for the past several years, have suddenly come to life under the leadership of their new coach.

last two weeks. We don't see another shutout, but we also don't see the Patriots winning. Unless Conley falls asleep in this one, the Vikings win 21-6.

In other games around the area, it will be Pamlico over Greene Central, Plymouth over Williamston, Ashokie over Roanoke, Havelock over Washington and Chocowinity over Jamesville.

Turning to the panel, we find two area games, the Rose at Rocky Mount contest and the East Carolina at West-Virginia match on the collegiate level.

Rose hasn't come away with a victory in Rocky Mount since 1979, and hasn't won a regular season game there since 1974. Is this the year for the jinx to snap.

The panel is split, three each picking Rose or Rocky Mount. Our choice is Rose, by a 21-17 score.

East Carolina travels to the heart of Mountaineer country to take on West Virginia. The Mountaineers have lost three straight since an opening game win, but showed some strength against Pittsburgh last week in a 6-3 loss.

The panel is going with the Mountaineers, 6-0, and we pick West Virginia by 24-14.

Our other consensus picks: Wake Forest and Army, a toss-up; Virginia over VMI; Arkansas over Texas Christian; Iowa over Michigan State; Pittsburgh over Boston College; Georgia Tech and N.C. State, a toss-up; Auburn over North Carolina; Rutgers over Duke; Vanderbilt and Tulane, a toss-up; and Mississippi State over Memphis State.

The full poll:

Vikings' Boys, Girls Post Cross Country Wins

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley's cross country teams swept a pair of meets from J.H. Rose Thursday.

Conley's boys came away with a 23-32 victory in their meet, while the girls took a 17-44 decision.

Conley's Adrain McLawhorn took first place among the boys with a time of 18:19, followed by teammate Emerson Merritt in 18:51. Rose's Jason Dohm was third in 19:05, with Conley's Mark Whitehead fourth in 19:07.

The second five consisted of Conley's Mark Mallison in 19:40; Rose's Chris Richard in 19:46; Rose's Dave Jolley in 19:49; Rose's Mike Jolley in 20:24; and Conley's Paul Merritt in 20:34.

Others in the race included: James McPherson of Rose, 11th in 20:40; Eric Weathington (C), 12th in 20:45; Eric Manning (R) 13th in 20:50; Robbie Barnes (R) 14th in 20:55; Todd Taylor (R) 15th in 21:00; Bershawn Thompson (C) 16th in 21:04; Chris Weathington (C) 17th in 21:16; John Dunn (C) 18th in 21:27; John Turner (R) 19th in 21:41; Mark Dumas (R) 20th in 21:47; Craig Kirkland (R) 21st in 22:12; Doug Hill (C) 22nd in 23:04; Norman Pierce (C) 23rd in 23:46; Eddie Bonner (C) 24th in 25:23; and Scott Hudson (C) 25th in 25:25.

Conley's Gretta Harris took first place in the girls meet in 22:59. Teammates Kim Colson, 24:20; and Amie Aschliman, 24:32, followed in second and third, respectively. Rose's Susan Hu was the first Rampette in, finishing fourth in 24:36. Conley added fifth place with Katie Mohror finishing in 25:20.

The second five were Jennifer Wing (C), sixth in 26:02; Lee Nisbet (R), seventh in 27:38; Heather Smith (C) eighth in 28:38; Sharon Beacham (C) ninth in 29:07; and Alicia Pascasio (R) 10th in 29:19.

Rose's Erin Becker (31:05) and Darby Thomas (32:25) rounded out the field.

Rose's boys are now 2-4 and the girls are 0-2. Rose returns to action on Tuesday at Wilson Fike.

Conley returns to action on Tuesday, traveling to Washington.

GOILSBORO — Washington's girls' cross country team shut out Goldsboro and New Bern in a meet Thursday, while the boys' Pam Pack team finished third in a four-team meet.

Washington's girls finished with 15 points, sweeping the first five spots in the meet. Goldsboro was second with 54 while New Bern had 60.

In the boys' meet, Eastern Wayne took first with 46 points while New Bern was second with 47. Washington had 63 and Goldsboro, 74.

Deanna Davis led Washington's girls with a time of 21:45, followed by Marsha Wells in 22:30; Rachael Williams in 23:07; Denise Weherenberg in 23:33 and Missy Purgason in 23:38 to round out the top five.

Other Lady Pack finishers included Catherine Occhipinti, 11th in 25:42; Stephanie Pittman, 13th in 26:11; Ashley Jones, 14th in 26:25; Michelle Hylton, 17th in 26:44; Jennifer Smith, 18th in 28:12; and Jeanette Boyette, 20th in 29:06.

Washington top finisher in the boys' meet was Kerry Hindsley, who took fourth in 18:38. Gene Wozny took fifth in 18:43 while Jeremy Hill was seventh in 18:49.

But Washington's next finisher was Mike Davenport, who took 25th in 21:01. Other Pack finishers were Eric Peele, 28th in 21:18; Scott Baker, 43rd in 23:43, and Elliott Blake, 44th in 23:50.

Washington's boys are now 7-7 while the girls are 12-0. The Pack will host Conley and Currituck on Monday.

Rampants Top Hunt

Rose High School's soccer team shut out Wilson Hunt, 1-0, Thursday, to move into second place in the Big East standings.

Dallas McPherson booted in a rebound after a direct kick by Lloyd May at the 38:05 mark in the first half for the game's only score.

About a minute later, Rose goalie Brian Wille blocked a penalty kick by Hunt's leading scorer, Michael Bradshaw.

Rose took 11 shots on goal in the match while holding Hunt to 5. Wille, who had five saves, recorded his seventh shutout of the year. Hunt goalie Kelly Lamm had nine saves.

The shutout against Hunt was the first this year, while Rose now leads the conference in both offense and defense.

"We had to neutralize their two top scorers, and our defense did a fine job," Coach Will Wiberg said. "Mike Kasperik, Pat Joyner, Richard Lewis, Dallas McPherson, Ed Norris and Toure Claiborne all had great games and Wille was outstanding in the goal."

Rose is now 5-1 in Big East play and 6-3-2 overall. Hunt falls to 3-1-2 in the league and 6-2-2 overall.

Rose travels to Elizabeth City on Tuesday to face undefeated Northeastern, the league leader.

Rube Marquard of the New York Giants won 19 consecutive games in 1912 and finished with a 26-11 record for the season.

South Lenoir Hands North Pitt First Conference Loss Of Year

BETHEL — South Lenoir handed North Pitt its first conference volleyball loss of the season as the Lady Blue Devils, the Pant-Hers and Ayden-Grifton split a tri-match Thursday.

The Lady Blue Devils defeated North Pitt, 7-15, 15-13 and 15-4.

Amy Heath was the leading server for the Pant-Hers, going 15-18 with 10 points. Angie Purvis went 12-14 with eight points while Pam Worsley was 10 for 10 with three points.

Worsley led the hitting with 23 and four kills. Heath had 10 hits and two kills. The Pant-Hers were led in assist by Tracy Nichols with 23 and Purvis with 20.

In the first match, the Lady Chargers defeated South Lenoir, 15-11, 15-9.

Kelly Thompson led the scoring for South Lenoir with 13. Tracy Marshburn added five points.

Ayden Grifton was led by Shawner Kinsey with 10. Leigh Teale had six. Ondrea Mercer had five.

North Pitt then topped the Chargers, 15-8, 11-15, 15-12.

The leading servers for the Pant-Hers were Purvis, who went 16-16 with 11 points, and Nichols, who went 12-12 with 11 points.

Worsley led the hitting with 16 and six kills. Heath added seven hits and six kills. The Pant-Hers were led in assists by Nichols with 16 and Purvis with 15.

North Pitt improves to 17-6 overall and 15-1 in the conference while Ayden-Grifton stands at 11-5.

Conley.....2 West Craven.....0

VANCEBORO — D.H. Conley's girls' volleyball team stormed past West Craven Thursday, sweeping two matches.

In the opening match, Conley took a 15-8, 15-8 win, then came back in the second to win 15-7, 15-4.

In the opening match, Renee Tuten served up four straight points to lead service, while Hannah Hill had nine straight in the second game, including four aces. Leading hitters for the match were Peggy Whitehurst with four effective hits and Hill with five.

In the second match, Rhonda Mills and Tuten had six and four straight service sets, respectively, while Miriam Fulford and Tracy Sumrell had six and four, respectively, in the second game. Fulford had three effective hits and one kill while Hill added two hits and two kills. Mills had four hits.

Conley is now 8-0 in Coastal play and 15-5 overall. Tuesday, Conley plays host to West Carteret and Havelock in a tri-match.

Rose swept a pair of wins from Wilson Beddingfield 15-12, 15-4 and 15-13, 15-3, in Big East Conference volleyball action.

Lisa Leisten had 21 service points to lead the Rampettes. Andrea Rodgers added 11 service points. Amy Barr and Jana Potter chipped in six apiece. The top spikers were Leisten with 18, Barr with 12 and Rodgers with nine.

Rose improves to 17-3 overall and 12-3 in the conference. The Rampettes return to action at Wilson Fike Tuesday.

Farmville Central.....2 Pamlico.....1 Greene Central.....0

SNOW HILL — Farmville Central split a pair of volleyball matches against Eastern Plains conference foes Greene Central and Pamlico County Thursday.

In the first match, the Lady Jaguars defeated Greene Central, 15-4, 15-7, but the Lady Hurricanes then topped Farmville, 15-10 and 15-12.

Rose, Roanoke Stay Unbeaten

Rose took a 9-0 win over Wilson Hunt Thursday to remain undefeated in the Big East Conference tennis standings.

Top seeds Wendy Simpson, Gina Parrott and Nicole Maxon all took straight set wins to move to 9-0 each on the season.

Kickboxing Card Set

The fight card for the American Kickboxing bouts set for Saturday at the Hilton, featuring a East Coast Bantamweight title fight, has been finalized, Samurai Production officials announced Thursday.

The top fight on the card is the title fight between Greenville's Curtis "Buzzsaw" Evans and David "The Sting" McKinzie.

In addition, two other semi-main event bouts will take place as Richmond's Greg Gallop defends his Tri-State Lightweight title against Charles Turner of Warner-Robbins, Ga.

Gallop is known for his stand-up boxer style and has fought virtually every lightweight on the East Coast and is coming off a two-fight win streak.

In a North Carolina Cruiserweight title fight, Larry Brady of Wilmington will go up against Jamie McClintcham of Cary.

There are seven other bouts on the card, including a special appearance by former World Heavyweight kickboxing champion Demetrius "Oaktree" Edwards of Greenville.

Cox, Aycock, Wellcome -Bethel Post Wins

GRIFTON — A.G. Cox took a 20-12 win over Savannah Junior high school in football action Thursday.

Aaron McKinney led the way, scoring on runs of one and 23 yards as well as a two-point conversion. Anthony Barrett added the other score when he went in from three yards out.

Barrett had 126 yards while McKinney had 102.

Cox is 3-0 and returns to action Thursday hosting Snow Hill.

Wellcome-Bethel defeated Chicod-G.R. Whitfield, 36-8, in junior high football action Thursday.

Derrick Brown scored twice, on a 70-yard kickoff return and a 20-yard run as well as a two-point conversion.

Reggie Cox added a 15 yard touchdown run while Quinton Moore added the final score on a 42-yard pass from John Caton. Jonathon Blow ran in the two-point conversion.

E.B. Aycock shutout Rocky Mount, 20-0, led Anthony Love scored in the first quarter on a one-yard run. Terrance Smith ran in the two-point conversion.

In the second quarter, Smith had a six-yard scoring run. The pass for the two-point conversion failed.

In the third quarter, Grant Harmon added an 11-yard run but the point-after failed.

Aycock improves to 2-0 and returns to action at Bertie Thursday.

Rocky Mount Tops Rose, Jags Win

Rocky Mount defeated Rose, 31-7, in JV high school football action Thursday.

Maurice Hines had Rose's only score on a 35-yard run in the second quarter. The Rampants' Dwayne Williams and Hines rushed for 100 yards and 95 yards, respectively.

Rose suffered five fumbles and two interceptions.

Rocky Mount took control in the first quarter, scoring 12 points while taking advantage of two Rose turnovers.

Rose falls to 3-2 and 1-1 in the Big East with its next game Thursday at Beddingfield.

FARMVILLE — Farmville Central rolled over C.B. Aycock, 46-14, in JV football action Thursday.

Morris Foreman scored five touchdowns to lead the Jaguars. He scored on a 15-yard fumble return, a 1-yard run, a 50-yard pass to Jeff Tyson, a 19-yard pass to Hollis Harper and another 1-yard run.

Calvin Jordan also scored for the Jaguars on a 21-yard run while Melvin Vines added a 24-yard run.

Tyson and Jerry Baker added 2-point conversion runs.

HOLLYWOOD — Conley rolled over West Carteret, 51-0, in JV football action Thursday night.

Fred Streeter and Junior Farrow led the way for the Vikings as each scored two touchdowns and added a two-point conversion.

The Vikings' defense came up with three touchdowns of its own as Shonta Wilks had an 85-yard interception return for one score. Bill Jenkins had the second one when he recovered a West Carteret fumble for a score and kicked the extra point and Stuart Roach had a 65-yard interception return for another score.

Conley improves to 5-0 overall and 2-0 in the conference Thursday at North Lenoir.

Junior Girls' Tennis Team Falls

Ridgcroft Academy of Ahoskie defeated the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department Junior Girl's tennis team, 10-5, Thursday.

Greenville falls to 2-2-1 and meets Ridgcroft again Oct. 6 at Ahoskie.

Starr Hopes To End His Bobbles

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — With all the talk about the many injury problems among North Carolina's tailbacks, it may be easy for some to overlook Eric Starr.

That would be a mistake, though, for the 5-foot-11 senior from Ellenboro is perhaps the most interesting story in the Tar Heel backfield.

In the past three weeks, Starr has gotten himself in, and then out of, Coach Dick Crum's doghouse. After a poor performance in a starting role at Oklahoma earned him a demotion, a costly fumble the next week at Georgia Tech thrust Starr deeper into trouble.

But with both Torin Dorn and Kennard Martin banged up for the Navy game, Crum decided to give Starr another chance against the Midshipmen.

Starr responded with a 127-yard performance for three touchdowns. He did not fumble.

"Eric played better last week," Crum said. "The main thing is that he held onto the football. You never question the effort with him, that's always there. It's just that sometimes, he leaves the ball behind and that's not a good thing for a tailback to do."

Bowden Raves About Hurricanes

By The Associated Press

Florida State Coach Bobby Bowden isn't sure his team is currently worthy of the No. 4 ranking in the nation, but he is sure about Miami's status as No. 3.

"They look so good to me, I'm amazed they're not on strike," said Bowden, referring to the current strike by NFL players. "When most of those guys graduate, I sure will be happy — they've got so many fine players."

In some ways, though, Bowden is looking forward to Saturday's compelling home matchup with another Top Ten team. He's anxious to see how his youthful team will handle the veteran Hurricanes.

"I think we're going to learn more about us this week than we will them from this game," said Bowden, who starts six sophomores and seven juniors. "If we can beat Miami, I'll say, we belong up there."

"I see Miami as a proven football team playing against a team that hasn't proved itself, but might be there."

In another contest involving ranked teams, No. 7 Louisiana State will play host to No. 19 Florida.

Elsewhere in the Top Ten, it's No. 1 Oklahoma at Iowa State; No. 2 Nebraska against South Carolina; No. 6 Auburn at North Carolina; No. 9 Ohio State at Illinois and No. 10 Tennessee vs. California.

In the Second Ten, No. 11 UCLA is at Stanford; No. 12 Michigan plays

Wisconsin; No. 13 Arizona State takes on Texas-El Paso; No. 14 Penn State hosts Temple; No. 15 Texas A&M travels to Texas Tech; No. 16 Washington is at Oregon; No. 17 Alabama plays Southwestern Louisiana at Birmingham; Iowa, also No. 17, faces Michigan State, and No. 20 Georgia tackles Mississippi.

Fifth-ranked Notre Dame and No. 8 Clemson are idle.

Bowden feels his game will feature more skilled players than any in the country.

"Runners, catchers, throwers, defenders, secondary defenders, punt returners, kickoff returners: I think you'll see more in this ball game than in any one ballgame," Bowden said.

The Hurricanes, 2-0, have allowed just 11 points in victories over Florida and Arkansas while Bowden's team averaged 39 points and 489 offensive yards an outing in winning their first four games.

Bowden has closed his practices to the public in preparation for the nationally televised showdown at Tallahassee, where a sellout crowd of 63,000 is expected.

Short Tracks Still Important

NORTH WILKESBORO, N.C. (AP) — Bobby Allison has been around NASCAR stock car racing long enough to know how important it is to master short-track racing.

The glamour of the sport is in the side-by-side and bumper-to-bumper battles at 200 mph on the superspeedways.

But, the big payoff — the Winston Cup title — usually goes to the driver who best handles the tracks shorter than one mile.

"It's a key to winning the championship," Allison said. "There aren't as many races on the short tracks, but there's enough points involved to make a difference most years."

"Besides, doing well on the short tracks shows how a team is getting things together and it may be where a driver can show just how good he really is."

Allison, long a master of short track racing, will reach another milestone this weekend when he drives in Sunday's Holly Farms 400 at North Wilkesboro Speedway.

The four-time North Wilkesboro winner will make his 700th career NASCAR stock car start.

Allison has started 40 races here and has 24 top-five finishes, although he has not won at North Wilkesboro since 1980.

"North Wilkesboro hasn't been one of my strongest tracks, but I've seen Victory Lane here in a Dodge, a Chevy and a Ford," Allison said. "I've even driven a race car that I owned to a win here. Maybe we can add a Buick to our winner's list this time around."

Dale Earnhardt has won six of the seven races already run on tracks shorter than one mile, including the event earlier this year on North Wilkesboro's .625-mile oval.

The two-time and defending Winston Cup champion also heads into the weekend with a 568-point lead over second-place Bill Elliott in the 1987 standings.

He has won five races on the superspeedways, as well, but it is his dominance on the short tracks which has vaulted Earnhardt to a virtually insurmountable point lead.

Last year, Earnhardt also earned the most points in the eight short track events on the 29-race schedule.

"No question," said three-time Winston Cup champion Darrell Waltrip. "You can't win the championship without strong showings on the short tracks."

Waltrip, the defending champion in this race and another master of short track racing, broke Earnhardt's string of six straight short track victories with a triumph last Sunday at Martinsville, Va.

Elliott, who never has won a short track race and still is hunting for his first NASCAR stock car championship, said, "You just can't win the title without good performances on the short track."

"We put a lot of effort into improving our short track program this year. The results show it. And, if Earnhardt weren't having such a phenomenal year, that improvement in our program would have us neck-and-neck with him for the title."

Qualifying sessions for the $332,420 North Wilkesboro race were scheduled today at 3 p.m. EDT and Saturday at 12:30 p.m. The top 20 starting spots were to be determined today, with the rest of the 30-car field to be set in Saturday's session.

Census Study Shows Education Boosts Your Income

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — What's it worth to finish school?
For high schoolers, graduating means an extra $352 a month in earning power.
And college students who finish four years earn $672 a month more than those who attend college but don't get a degree.
Those were among the findings of a new Census Bureau study released Thursday, measuring the average income of adults, based on how much schooling they had received.
Tops on the list were professionals — lawyers, doctors and dentists — who took home more than five times the pay of people who failed to complete high school.
The study found that only about one American in five — 21 percent — has a college degree, but they are the ones who make the money, according to the report, "What's It Worth? Educational Background and Economic Status: Spring 1984."

From top to bottom, there was a spread of $3,178 a month in average income. That's the range from the average professional, who earns $3,871 monthly, and the high-school dropouts, who average only $693.
"There's a hard lesson shown. ... There's a clear relationship, that economic rewards do accrue at each progressive level" of education, Robert Kominski of the Census Bureau said in an interview.
"The piece of paper, and the different kinds of pieces of paper, mean something. They mean something to employers and to the success of individuals. They represent different levels of learning and development of skills," Kominski said of the various college degrees.
Following professionals, the study said, were people who had received doctorates, who averaged $3,265 a month over the four-month study period.
Holders of Ph.D. degrees, while having extensive professional training, are scattered over a wide variety of fields, and thus on average earn less than the professionals, who are concentrated in the high-paying areas of law and medicine, Kominski said.
At the next step down, people who have achieved a master's degree averaged $2,288 a month, the study found. Holders of a bachelor's degree averaged $1,841, followed by those with an associate's degree at $1,346.
Close behind were people who received vocational training, who had average monthly earnings of $1,219. People who attended college but left without a degree averaged $1,169, and high school graduates managed $1,045-a-month.
Well back at $693 were those who dropped out without finishing high school.
While males overall earn more than women, both groups follow similar patterns, with professionals at the top and income dropping from that level.
Within each degree category, of course, many people earned more and others less than the average, Kominski pointed out, and the field of study the student pursued in college is a major factor.

"Every year, several million college students are faced with one of the most difficult decisions in college — the choice of a major. For some students, the choice reflects a pattern of interest that has developed over time, while for other students the choice may be motivated by the path of least academic resistance," Kominski wrote in his study.
Those considering the long-term financial rewards may want to look at some of the results of his research before making a decision on their future.
For example, in addition to law and medicine, engineering and business proved lucrative fields, he found, while at the low end of the scale were such studies as theology, liberal arts and home economics.
Overall, people who studied law had the highest average monthly income in the report at $3,726, followed by those in medicine and dentistry, who averaged $3,440.

Those were the only two areas averaging more than $3,000 a month in income. Leading the $2,000-plus level were economics specialists at $2,824, followed by engineers, who averaged $2,707. Others in that group included physical and earth scientists, $2,554; business managers, $2,215; mathematicians and statisticians, $2,111, and agriculture and forestry specialists, $2,110.
Next came law enforcement officers, averaging $1,809, followed by people who majored in biology, $1,718; social science, $1,666; English and journalism, $1,544; psychology, $1,543; religion, $1,530; education, $1,526; vocational and technical, $1,456; liberal arts, $1,383; nursing and pharmacy, $1,299; and home economics, $1,063.

Inspectors Say Cheaper Soy Oil Being Sold As Corn Oil

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Bottles of corn oil sold in New York groceries were diluted with soy oil in what may be a nationwide multimillion-dollar scam, state agricultural officials said.
"This is not a question of health," state Agriculture Commissioner Donald Butcher said Thursday. "This is a question of economic fraud. Consumers who thought they were getting the more expensive corn oil were getting a (cheaper) mix."
Butcher said inspectors from the state's Food Inspection Services Division acted on a tip and collected samples of corn oil from retail shelves in New York City in April. Laboratory testing in Albany revealed that in some cases, bottles labeled as pure corn oil showed as much as 70 percent soy oil.
"Because soy oil costs about one-third less than corn oil there is a distinct economic motivation to adulterate corn oil with soy substitutes," Butcher said.
The mislabeling included store brands as well as most national brand corn oil, the officials said. The Agriculture Department said it would withhold the names of the companies involved pending legal action by it or the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, which is also investigating the practice.
Officials think that in many cases the adulterated oil was bought innocently by food store chains from unethical suppliers.

Agriculture spokesman Gerald Moore said it was difficult to pin down the source of the problem because distributors often have two or more packers for edible oils. In addition, many brand name products are not coded, making it difficult to identify the packer once the product has reached the retail store.
The department estimates that the practice has already cost consumers hundreds of thousands of dollars in New York state.
"This fraud was not confined to small stores," Butcher said. "Adulterated corn oil has show up in virtually every major food outlet doing business in New York."
He said further testing and a review of records of companies distributing the product indicated that the practice probably includes other states and may be a multimillion dollar operation.
The practice of mixing oils poses no health hazard and, if properly labeled, is not against the law.
"An alert customer might detect a difference in color or slight difference in taste," said Butcher, "but since most corn oil is used in cooking or salads, it is unlikely that consumers would ever know the product they bought was adulterated."
Butcher said tests conducted in August revealed no oil mixing and the practice may have been stopped in New York.

Mother Gets Life In Infant Smothering

SCHENECTADY, N.Y. (AP) — A woman whose nine children died before age 5 proclaimed her innocence before being sentenced to at least 20 years to life in prison for smothering an infant daughter with a pillow.
Mary Beth Tinning, 45, was convicted of second-degree murder in July in the 1985 death of 3½-month-old Tami Lynne.
"I want you and the people in this courtroom to know that I am very sorry for Tami Lynne's death. There is not a day that has gone by that I haven't thought about it," she told Schenectady County Judge Clifford T. Harrigan on Thursday.
"I played no part in the death of my daughter, Tami Lynne," she added. "The Lord above and I know that I am innocent."
The former nurse's aide and school bus driver was convicted of acting recklessly in causing the death, but was acquitted of intentionally killing the child.
She could have been sentenced to a minimum of 15 years or a maximum of 25 years to life. Mrs. Tinning must serve at least 20 years in prison.
Mrs. Tinning had told police at the time of her 1986 arrest that she killed Tami Lynne and two sons because she was "not a good mother" and "because of the other children." She denied harming the other children.
The defense had attempted to prove at trial that a rare genetic disease claimed Tami Lynne's life. Doctors testified about the possibility a childhood form of Lou Gehrig's disease caused the death.
District Attorney John Poersch called Mrs. Tinning a "wicked woman" Thursday and urged Harrigan to impose the maximum.
"She confessed to murdering three of her babies and she was convicted in the trial, after a long trial, of murdering with a pillow one of those children," he said.
"To me that is a heinous act, an act that is beyond my comprehension."
Police said Mrs. Tinning was considered a suspect in seven of the eight other deaths. Poersch said further indictments against Mrs. Tinning are possible.
Defense Attorney Paul A. Callahan filed notice of appeal immediately after sentencing.
Mrs. Tinning's children died as young as 7 days old, beginning in 1972. Causes of death listed for the children included cardio-pulmonary arrest, brain swelling and sudden infant death syndrome.

Three More Democrats Say They'll Vote Against Bork

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three more Democratic senators, including Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, said today they will oppose elevation of Judge Robert H. Bork to the Supreme Court, criticizing Bork's record on civil rights and individual privacy.
"In virtually every case where he has taken a position, Judge Bork has opposed the advancement of civil rights over the past 25 years," Bentsen said in a Senate speech. He added: "I am not prepared to vote for a Supreme Court nominee who has steadfastly refused to acknowledge that the people of America have a constitutional right of privacy, especially in the home."
Also announcing their opposition were Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts and Jeff Bingaman of New Mexico. Bingaman said confirmation would run the risk of inviting "an era of internal dispute and disaffection" in the country.

"To place this man on the Supreme Court would be to re-open old wounds and to re-fight old battles," Kerry said.
Bentsen, who had not previously indicated publicly how he was leaning, became the fourth Southern Democrat in 24 hours to announce opposition to Bork. Those losses and another defection in Republican ranks apparently have hurt Bork's chances, but President Reagan has said he is far from giving up.
"I'm working my head off to make sure that we don't lose it," a defiant Reagan said Thursday after Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., joined three Southern Democrats in announcing opposition to Bork.

Senate Democratic Whip Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said Thursday he was counting 50 senators likely to vote against Bork, with 40 likely to support him and 10 undecided. There was no indication how he had listed Bentsen.
Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., a leader of the anti-Bork forces, said he is now "increasingly confident" of victory.
"Clearly, the momentum is with us," he declared, but "it's too early to call it final."
But Chief White House legislative strategist William L. Ball III said the White House counts slightly more than 40 senators in favor of the nominee, about the same number against him and about 18 undecided.
Asked how he would respond to suggestions the battle was all but lost, Ball said, "That's just not so. The numbers just don't reflect that."
"There may be some in the next day or two who come out our way," Ball said.
Reagan told reporters, "I'm spending my time working as hard as I can to see that he gets confirmed as he should be."
Senate Republican Whip Alan K. Simpson of Wyoming and Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, tried to help Reagan — holding a news conference just as Specter was starting to address the Senate.
"Significant, but not fatal," was the way White House chief of staff Howard H. Baker Jr. described the developments.

Gorbachev Warns Soviets Will Face Major Food Price Hikes

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail Gorbachev said the Soviet Union must enact major food price hikes to improve its economy, but he promised to use the fruits of reform to improve social services.

Soviets don't value basics such as bread and meat because they pay far below the cost of production, Gorbachev said Thursday in a two-hour speech from the arctic city of Murmansk. The text was released today by the official Tass news agency.

"One can see children using a loaf of bread as a ball in football," he said.

"However, the most important thing is that families with large incomes consume more meat and milk, and consequently, take advantage of the subsidies to a greater degree."

Price hikes would be significant because overall price stability and low costs for basics are considered a tenet of Communist ideology and the Soviet social contract.

Bread costs the equivalent of about 30 cents a loaf in the Soviet Union. The price has changed little in more than 30 years. Gorbachev said the average annual per capita consumption of meat, 38.5 pounds, costs about the same as a pair of women's boots — 120 to 130 rubles, or $180 to $200.

During the speech, televised nationwide Thursday, Gorbachev also said he hoped a U.S.-Soviet missile accord and summit will spark a "peaceful chain reaction" leading to more progress in arms control. He also proposed limiting military activity in the arctic.

The text covered 2½ pages in Friday's newspapers, which were delayed apparently so they could print it in full.

Item by item, Gorbachev compared the price of foodstuffs in the United States, France, Britain and Hungary with what the Soviet consumer pays, noting that foreign prices were much higher.

He said changes in wholesale and retail prices "cannot be avoided" if the nation is to speed up its economic development, augment national income and ensure a higher living standard in accordance with reforms instituted by Gorbachev.

But he added, "We are ready to invest additionally in health care, just like in the educational sphere, the maximum share of what we will produce over and above plans."

He also noted that the issue of prices changes "would certainly be brought up for the discussion of the working people."

Soviet economists such as Abel Aganbegyan have said radical restructuring of prices is needed to reflect the real cost of goods, encourage thrift and stimulate productivity. Currently, prices of all goods in the Soviet Union, from automobiles to paper clips, are fixed by bureaucrats in Moscow, and do not necessarily relate to production costs or demand.

Aganbegyan says salaries, which average $300 a month for a factory worker, might have to be raised to compensate for higher prices of food or lodging.

Gorbachev said the income of the Soviet population grew roughly by about $24 billion annually over the past two years. Doctors and teachers got raises, he said, and some student grants and workers' pensions were increased.

Gorbachev said the Kremlin reform drive was entering a "critical stage," and that Soviets should not wait for orders from above.

"You know what the political guidelines are," he said. "There is a need for action now, for the initiatives of the masses."

Gorbachev also lashed out against waste in the Soviet Union of natural resources.

"Just think of all the losses incurred in harvesting and the storage of farm produce, wood-cutting and construction," he said. "We still are impermissibly, criminally wasteful, and extravagant."

On arms control, Gorbachev said he hoped a U.S.-Soviet accord to scrap intermediate-range nuclear missiles and plans for a Reagan-Gorbachev summit would lead to more progress in arms control. The accord was reached in principle Sept. 18.

"There are rays of hope, (and) not only on medium- and shorter-range missiles," Gorbachev said.

He said his country could one day agree to the withdrawal of submarines armed with ballistic missiles from the Soviet fleet based in the Baltic Sea.

Speaking of the arctic, Gorbachev said: "Let the north of the globe, the arctic, become a zone of peace." The Soviet Union, he said, is proposing negotiations between the Warsaw pact and NATO to limit air and naval activity in the Baltic, North, Norwegian and Greenland Seas.

Those waters are heavily patrolled by U.S. and Soviet surface warships, submarines and aircraft, and NATO defense plans consider mastery of the seas off Northern Europe vital in the event of a Soviet strike on NATO.

Prisoners Returned

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian authorities handed over 102 disabled, sick and elderly Iraqi prisoners of war to representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross for repatriation to Iraq, Iran said today.

The International Committee issued a statement in Geneva confirming the transfer, but saying it had received only 101 Iraqi prisoners. Spokeswoman Francoise Derron said she could not explain the discrepancy in the figures.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said the transfer took place Thursday at Tehran's Mehrabad airport, and the men were to be flown to Baghdad aboard a Red Cross plane. The IRNA dispatch was monitored in Nicosia.

The International Committee statement said the prisoners left Tehran on a chartered airplane for Baghdad, where they would be given to Iraqi officials.

RIPPER SUSPECT — Montague John Druitt, a lawyer found dead in the River Thames 99 years ago, was the mysterious Victorian murderer Jack the Ripper, according to a new book called "The Ripper Legacy," published in London Thursday. This file picture shows Druitt at his desk. (AP Laserphoto)

Three Die In Tibet

CHENGDU, China (AP) — Thousands of Tibetans demanding independence stoned Chinese police in Lhasa and set fire to a police station and police vehicles, witnesses said today. At least three people were killed, they said.

The witnesses, who flew to Chengdu from Lhasa, said there were unconfirmed reports that up to seven people — six Tibetans and one Chinese — were killed in the demonstration Thursday in Jokhang Temple square in the center of Lhasa, Tibet's capital.

Chengdu, 750 miles east of Lhasa, is the capital of Sichuan province, which borders Tibet.

The witnesses said eight Buddhist monks were arrested, but that at least some escaped from the police station when it was set on fire. An undetermined number of foreign bystanders were detained briefly and had their film confiscated, the travelers said.

Ripper Tales Abound In London

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Who was Jack the Ripper?

The centennial of the Ripper serial murders that shocked Victorian London is next year and still nobody knows the identity of the uncaught killer.

But theories abound, and Ripperology — the writing of books identifying possible suspects — is a booming literary genre, with five new titles already in print this year.

The latest, "The Ripper Legacy: The Life and Death of Jack the Ripper" by Martin Howells and Keith Skinner, suggests the killer was a failed lawyer and schoolmaster, Montague John Druitt.

But the Times of London indicated today that it wasn't impressed.

"It does not matter much which book you choose," wrote Times book reviewer Catherine Bennett under the headline "Who was Jack the Ripper? And who really cares?"

"Ripperologists, as they describe themselves, are as uniform in making deductions from no evidence whatever as they are in their loyalty to the tested three-part formula for Ripper books, which has proved commercially successful during the past (almost) 100 years," she declared.

"The second and third parts — the demolition of rival theories and the presentation of a new culprit — allow for some deviation. However, the first section should always include these vital aspects: the low life of Victorian Whitechapel and, most important, a description of the murders."

But Ripperologists are undeterred by such criticism.

Still hot on the trail of the killer after 99 years, Howells and Skinner claim in their book published Thursday that Scotland Yard police chiefs and government officials knew it was Druitt.

"The authorities kept quiet because Druitt was friendly with a lot of important people who were homosexuals," Howells told the Associated Press in an interview. The homosexuals included Queen Victoria's grandson, the Duke of Clarence, he charged.

"When Druitt was found dead in the River Thames in 1888, soon after the last murder, the Yard was able to close its file on the Ripper, satisfied the affair was over but leaving the public in ignorance," the writer said.

"But the mystery won't die down because nobody except us really wants it to be solved," Howells added.

The slayings were horrific. The killer slit the throats of the five prostitute victims in the Whitechapel slum district of London's East End and disemboweled four of the women.

Official files on the Ripper remain secret. But Howells and Skinner say they base their claim on confidential notes that Sir Melville Macnaghten, a former head of the Yard's detectives, left to his daughter.

The same notes were used by two other writers, Dan Farson and Tom Cullen, to identify Druitt as a prime suspect in their books about the mystery which appeared in 1965 and 1972, respectively.

But Howells and Skinner, who say they spent five years on their quest, claimed they are the first authors to investigate Druitt as the Ripper and to suggest he was murdered by a high-placed associate.

But the intrigue remains and the total Ripper bibliography now runs to more than 200 books and major articles.

Carson Jokes About Quake During Anniversary Show

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Johnny Carson ushered in his 25th anniversary as host of "The Tonight Show" by joking that Southern California's jolting earthquake was a salute to his long reign as king of the talk shows.

Carson, 61, in black tie for the occasion, received a standing ovation as he walked on stage Thursday, and devoted his monologue Thursday to gags about the strong tremor that rattled Los Angeles and its suburbs.

"I especially want to thank the state of California for the special salute this morning," he said. "A little overly dramatic, but nice."

He even got in a dig at the Los Angeles Raiders football team's proposed move to the distant suburbs.

"This is a strange state," Carson said. "The Raiders move to Irwindale and Irwindale moved to Pacoima."

He also joked about the way broadcasters at KNBC-TV's Channel 4 reacted to Thursday morning's quake.

Referring to one newscaster's attempt to help his viewing audience, Carson observed: "He dived under the desk and came up and said 'Don't panic!'"

Carson made it clear that he owed his success to his fans, and the two men who bask in his limelight, sidekick Ed McMahon and orchestra leader Doc Severinsen.

"It has been a fabulous journey for me personally," Carson said. "I was going to hang it up. But I found I was having so much fun, I wanted to stick around a while. So if you want to stick around, we'll stick around."

The 90-minute prime time special on NBC had no guest stars, just Carson, McMahon and Severinsen, who also wore black tuxedos for the occasion.

The show was simple, featuring clips of guests who have appeared on the "Tonight Show," including national leaders such as President Reagan and former President Nixon and entertainers such as Jack Benny, Judy Garland, and former guest hosts David Letterman and Steve Martin.

There was no mention of Joan Rivers, Carson's permanent guest host until their falling out last year when she joined the Fox network as star of a competing show, from which she was later dropped.

There were jokes about McMahon's drinking, but Carson called him his "rock" and told him, "I wouldn't do it without you."

Also on hand to celebrate were Carson's wife, Alexis Maas, and his brother, producer Dick Carson, who were seated in the audience.

"The Tonight Show" debuted in New York on Oct. 1, 1962 and moved to Burbank in 1972, but the format stayed the same throughout the years, with Carson sitting behind a desk, chatting with guests.

The show not only made Carson a multimillionaire, but has become an institution and a late-night viewing tradition.

PBS Profiles Presidential Shangri-La At Camp David

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — When President Reagan and his wife arrived on their first visit to Camp David, a delegation greeted them: eight white-tailed deer.

When President Nixon spent time at the rustic hideaway, he wore a jacket and tie, almost as though he were at the White House.

President Carter signaled the success of the Camp David accord by giving aides a thumbs-up signal through the window of his lodge.

These glimpses inside the presidential retreat in the Catoctin Mountains of Maryland are part of a one-hour documentary tonight on PBS, produced by Maryland Public Television.

Maryland Public Television was apparently no more successful than others at persuading the White House to allow its cameras to roam freely inside the camp. Instead the program relies on archival footage, home movies and interviews, including one with the president and first lady Nancy Reagan at the White House as they prepared to leave for one of their frequent Camp David weekends. According to White House records, they have been there 17 times this year.

They plan to go again this weekend, so if they watch the program, it will probably be in Aspen Lodge, the presidential digs that Franklin Roosevelt designed and christened "The Bear's Den." Roosevelt had called the camp "Shangri-La." Dwight Eisenhower changed the name to Camp David, in honor of his grandson.

Presidents have played host to world leaders at Camp David throughout its 45-year history — Roosevelt to Winston Churchill in World War II, Carter to Egypt's Anwar Sadat and Israel's Menachem Begin in 1978, and Reagan to British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

"The White House has quite luxurious accommodations ... but you're a bird in a gilded cage," Reagan says in the interview. "You can't go out and run around on the lawn anymore. Once upon a time, presidents could. I've seen a photograph of Harding, who kept a horse on the grounds and rode out on Pennsylvania Avenue. But not anymore."

Thus the appeal of Camp David, where "you live in a normal-sized house and ... in the proper season for it, hear the birds, and right there outside the living room window is a bird feeder, and in this time of the year you look out almost anytime and there are chipmunks running around for the spilled grain, and gray squirrels and so forth."

Mrs. Reagan adds, "The first time we went up there we walked in and looked out the window and there were eight deer out in the back and I said, 'Do you think they're welcoming us?'"

As for Nixon, who went to the camp more than 150 times in his 5½ years in office, his daughter, Julie Nixon Eisenhower, said, "He would spend many hours in his little tucked-away room right off of the two bedrooms in Aspen, with his feet up on the ottoman and his yellow legal pad, working and usually wearing a smoking jacket. He's a formal person, and even at Camp David, he'd have on a tie and a smoking jacket."

Jody Powell, who was Carter's press secretary, says of the Camp David accord, "I don't think any of us ever thought that it would happen. And then, in the last 24 hours, things began to fall together, and a couple of us were sitting out on a porch at his cottage; he was in there with Sadat and Begin and he turned and smiled and gave us kind of a thumbs-up signal and we knew then that it had been accomplished."

The program features home movies, actually shot by Navy photographers, of President Kennedy and his family at play, with Caroline riding her pony in the ring her father had built for her.

The best description of the compound comes from Bill Gully, former head of the White House Military Office that runs Camp David.

"If you drive up to Aspen, there is just room for one car. As you get out of this car in front of the door of Aspen there's a little fish pond there if you look through the cabin. Then you overlook a pool, a very elaborate swimming pool. It also has a great view from the top of the mountain down over the valleys. You go on down the road and up there are other cabins. Incidentally at night, as you go down this road, lights come on as you walk, and they go off. You trip them automatically as you walk."

It may be, as Mrs. Reagan says "not elaborate or fancy at all," but it's not your average campground, either.

The first Labor Day parade in the United States was held Sept. 5, 1882, in New York City.

FOCUS

Toothy Tidbits

According to statistics, American teeth are in pretty good shape. Some experts credit the use of fluoridated water. Children who have had fluoridated water since birth have 65 percent fewer cavities than kids who live in towns without the treated water. And adults today have less need for false teeth than did past generations. In 1960, for example, 35 in 100 Americans over 30 wore full sets of upper or lower dentures. By the late 1970s only 25 in 100 wore them.

DO YOU KNOW — How many permanent teeth do humans usually develop?

THURSDAY'S ANSWER — Hungarian actor Bela Lugosi was famous for his portrayal of Count Dracula.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY Oct. 3

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Today is a banner day for using all of your talents. Contact soem progressive friends and go visiting. You're likely to run into some very humorous, and proitable, situations. Be carefree and have fun.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): You have some great ideas for weekend activities, so don't let them be ignored. Sports, drama, music, or all three fan be included.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Discuss your plans for the future with superiors. They may be able to make some useful suggestions. Be sure to drive carefully.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): If there is a special person you've been wanting to meet, work at arranging a time and place. Don't neglect to do necessary shopping today.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Your business sense is especially keen today, so use it wherever you have the opportunity. Try to please your mate.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Great benefits can be gained if you maintain an enthusiastic attitude while dealing with the public today, but watch what you say.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Try to be more efficient and productive today. Be wary of loopholes which you hadn't noticed before. Be very cautious in business.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): You can make a big hit in some public activities today, but don't over-extend yourself or you'll regret it. Use your common sense.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): If you put a new idea into operation at home, life can be more interesting and harmonious there. Be congenial to your guests.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Adding a bit of humor to your correspondence would be a good idea. Get your shopping done early, and watch for bargains.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Listen to the advice of a financial expert. Show more devotion for your family this evening. They're feeling a bit neglected.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): A good friend can be very helpful with some unique ideas, so be sure you don't ignore this person. Take some time for relaxation.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Do something which you don't really enjoy, but which will please your mate very much. Take no risks while driving today.

2 ♣	Pass	2 ♦	Dbl
3 ♠	5 ♦	Dbl	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ace of ♠

The Drury Convention has a considerable amount of merit. It is used to check on whether partner's third or fourth-seat opening bid was full value or a little light. But using any convention recklessly can be costly, as East learned.

If we were sitting East, we would not care much what sort of opening bid partner had—we would bounce into four spades and leave it up to the opponents to find a way to beat us, if one existed. When East used a Drury two-club bid to check on the strength of his partner's opening and West responded two diamonds to show a shaded opening, North seized the opportunity to double diamonds for penalties. As a result, South judged that the North-South hands were fitting well, and he bounced into five diamonds as an advance sacrifice.

West's opening lead of the ace of spades did declarer no harm. However, it would have done him no good either had he ruffed—declarer would have been an entry short to set up and run his club suit. Instead, declarer made the excellent play of discarding a low heart, and the defenders were powerless to prevent the contract from being brought home.

West did the best he could by shifting to a heart. Declarer won the ace, cashed the ace of diamonds and then led a club from the dummy.

The heart continuation was ruffed, a club was ruffed on the table and declarer returned to hand with the king of diamonds to ruff another club. Since trumps split favorably, declarer was able to come back to hand with another ruff, and his hand was high.
