Aftershocks Continue In L.A.; Jittery Residents Flee Homes

By LOUINN LOTA
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Quake-jittered residents got another aftershock today, after the most powerful one that followed last week's severe earthquake killed at least one person, injured 200, and shattered buildings and nerves.

Hundreds of frightened residents fled their damaged homes and stayed outdoors, refusing to enter structures, as panic spread after Sunday's predawn aftershock, the 22nd measuring above 3 on the Richter scale since Thursday's magnitude 6.1 temblor.

Within 3½ hours of Sunday's big aftershock, three more above magnitude 3 on the Richter scale shook the area.

An aftershock measuring 3.4 was recorded at 12:05 a.m. today, said Robert Finn, spokesman for the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena. There were no immediate reports of damage, and a police dispatcher said it triggered few calls.

"Psychologically, these people are in pieces. They were already upset and this has really done them in," said Frank Sapien, a Red Cross shelter director in Whittier. "I think a lot of the people are in some state of shock."

At least 1,100 people spent Sunday night in shelters, said Red Cross spokesman Ralph Wright.

One woman died of a heart attack suffered moments after Sunday's aftershock, bringing the earthquake death toll to seven, officials said. Damage since Thursday's quake has been estimated at $108 million.

The magnitude 5.5 aftershock, centered 10 miles northeast of downtown Rosemead, rumbled through Southern California at 3:59 a.m. It was felt in a wide area extending 100 miles from the epicenter.

The greatest damage was in San Gabriel, where a bell tower crashed into the 1,500-seat Civic Auditorium, causing at least $500,000 in damage, officials said.

In suburban Whittier, which sustained most of the damage Thursday, police cordoned off a large part of the city's badly damaged downtown business district. Thirty businesses and about 800 homes were damaged last week.

Many Southern Californians ran from their homes as the earth began to shake Sunday.

Marine Copter Crashes In Gulf

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Marine helicopter returning to the USS LaSalle after a routine night operations flight crashed in the Persian Gulf and one of the four crew members was missing early today, the U.S. the Central Command reported.

The crash of the UH-1 helicopter occurred late Sunday, and did not involve any "hostile activity" in the war-torn gulf region, the Tampa, Fla.-based unified command said in a statement released in Washington.

Three crew members were recovered from a life raft by one of the LaSalle's small boats and were reported in good condition, but search-and-rescue operations for a fourth man continued, involving helicopters, small boats and ships.

The command identified the missing man as Marine Maj. Daniel S. Haworth, 34, of New Castle, Del. It was not immediately clear whether Haworth was the pilot or co-pilot of the aircraft.

The three survivors were identified as 1st Lt. Robert M. Melzer, 26, of Prince Georges County, Md.; Cpl. Michael D. Gauthier, 21, of Hampton County, Mass., and Lance Cpl. Gregory M. Bentley, 20, of Douglas, Ga. All three were reported in good condition.

The command said an investigation into the cause of the crash was under way.

White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk said the helicopter had been returning to the LaSalle, the command ship of U.S. naval forces in the gulf.

"It was an accident that was not due to any hostilities," Popadiuk said. "That's the preliminary report. It was just returning after a routine exercise and there was an accident and it fell into the ocean."

The Pentagon said the chopper had been "conducting routine night operations" when it crashed about 900 yards from the LaSalle, which was steaming about 30 miles northeast of Bahrain at the time.

Rear Admiral Harold J. Bernsen, commander of the U.S. Navy's Middle East Force, said the helicopter's pilots lost control after the aircraft began "vibrating."

Bernsen, interviewed today in Bahrain, said Sea Stallion mine-sweeping helicopters from the assault carrier Guadalcanal would use their sonar gear to pinpoint the wreckage, which would then be salvaged.

The crew was assigned from Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 263, based in Jacksonville, N.C.

The accident was the second involving a U.S. helicopter flying off the LaSalle since the Navy began escorting reflagged Kuwaiti tankers through the war-torn gulf.

On July 30th, a Navy SH-3G courier helicopter hit the stern of the 13,600-ton command ship during a routine landing approach, killing four of the nine people aboard.

Local Doctor Receives Reprimand

By CAROL TYER

The Board of Medical Examiners For North Carolina has officially reprimanded Dr. Steven M. White, a Greenville ophthalmologist, following four months of hearings.

A consent order filed by the medical examiners Thursday states the board and White have agreed that he failed in several cases to provide adequate preoperative and post-operative care to a number of his patients. It also states he delegated these duties inappropriately to non-physicians and has failed to sufficiently document care.

According to the consent order, "The Board of Medical Examiners strongly reprimands Steven M. White, M.D. ..." and "... will continue to monitor White's practice to see that he complies with the requirements of this order."

The findings state that White "failed to perform an adequate preoperative examination or physical in that he delegated to optometrists, nurses or anesthesiologists the responsibility of performing these functions prior to cataract surgery."

The board states and White is reported to have agreed that "it is not consistent with the standards of acceptable and prevailing medical practices in North Carolina for the surgeon to see a patient for the first time at the time of surgery without having performed a preoperative physical or obtained a preoperative history."

The consent order filed before the Board of Medical Examiners stated that "White agrees that he will thoroughly examine each patient on whom he performs surgery prior to surgery and will review the patient's history with that patient. White further agrees that he will make an independent diagnosis of cataracts in each patient on whom he performs cataract surgery and will not rely on others to make that diagnosis. White further agrees that he will have a detailed discussion with each patient regarding the diagnosis and the nature of the surgery, advising the patient fully of the risks involved."

The findings further stated that "White did not perform the 24-hour postoperative exam following cataract surgery on certain patients ... Instead, he delegated such examination to non-physicians, including nurses and optometrists."

The board states that it and White have agreed that "delegation of the 24-hour postoperative exam following cataract surgery to non-physicians is 'not consistent with the standards of acceptable and prevailing medical practices in North Carolina. It is stated that White agrees that he will perform each 24-hour postoperative exam on every patient on whom he performs surgery, with clear documentation ... except in the case of emergency, in which event, he will ensure that another ophthalmologist performs such exam."

White was also reprimanded for failing to examine certain cataract patients at all after their surgeries, failing to have appropriately detailed surgical notes for each of several patients, permitting non-physicians to sever sutures on some patients, permitting non-physicians to sign prescriptions for medicine with consultation with an ophthalmologist.

It was stated in the consent order that White has agreed to obey all laws and "agrees that he will open his records to agents of the board at any reasonable time for inspection to assess compliance with the requirements of this order."

"Failure of White to comply with this order constitutes grounds for review, after notice and a hearing, that could include revocation or suspension of his license to practice medicine."

Hearings concerning the allegations against Dr. White were conducted in March, June, July and September of this year.

Neither White nor Dr. Charles Duckett, a Greenville physician who is president of the Board of Medical Examiners and a signer of the consent order, could be reached this morning for comment.

New Relationship

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

A component included in the state's new highway law has changed the partnership between the N.C. Department of Transportation and municipalities on right-of-way acquisition.

"These guidelines will alter the historic cooperative relationships between the state and municipalities that has long existed in regard to highway improvements," State Transportation Secretary James E. Harrington said in a Sept. 28 letter to Greenville Mayor Les Garner.

The change has forced DOT officials to put urban highway projects worth more than $50 million, including $7.2 million designated for Greenville road improvements, on hold.

DOT officials, who placed the 15 projects in limbo Friday, said their action was forced by the new law which changes the traditional balance between state and city road projects.

"No longer are municipalities required to participate in right-of-way cost for state system projects inside their corporate limits," Harrington said.

"Presently, under House Bill 1211, some municipalities may participate in right-of-way costs, but the degree of participation begins with 5 percent for cities with a population of 10,000 and the maximum contribution is set at 25 percent for cities of 100,000 or more."

Towns and cities with population of less than 10,000 may not participate in right-of-way on the Transportation Improvement Program (TIP) projects, according to Harrington, who said after June 30, 1990, no municipal participation will be permitted in right of way on TIP projects.

Northeast Buried Under Early Snow

By HOWARD GOLDBERG
Associated Press Writer

Temperatures dipped into the 30s as far south as Alabama today, while the Northeast dug out from nearly 20 inches of snow in a sudden storm that sent trees crashing into cars, homes and power lines, and killed at least six.

The Northeast's earliest snowfall in a century dropped wet snow on autumn leaves, causing limbs to crack in the path of travelers who thought they were going to view changing foliage and knocking out power to 900,000 customers. And, with temperatures forecast to rise again, officials worried about flooding from melting snow.

The weather wasn't any more fall-like in California, where record triple-digit heat sent a million people to the beach over the weekend. Many already suffered from a lack of air conditioning as power was temporarily knocked out Sunday in parts of the Los Angeles area by the most powerful aftershock to Thursday's severe earthquake.

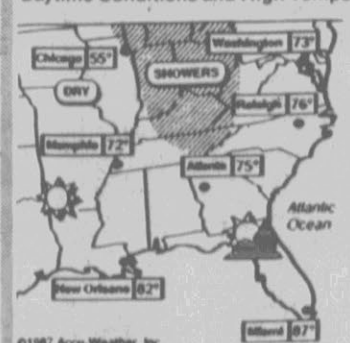

The heat was blamed for the death of 2-year-old Karen Magee, who suffocated Saturday after she entered the family car and was trapped for almost an hour in stifling temperatures, El Monte Police Officer Anthony Alvarez said Sunday.

Six hikers near Tannersville, N.Y., were unaccounted for this morning,

Church Anniversary

Hooker Memorial Christian Church celebrated its 30th birthday yesterday. Tom Money, Hooker Memorial's first full-time minister, delivered the 11 a.m. service, and special music was provided by Ann Messick. A picnic lunch followed.

On October 27, 1957, 47 members of the Eighth Street Christian Church endorsed the charter of the new Christian Church, named Hooker Memorial in honor of the Hooker family. Mrs. T.E. Hooker was the first person to sign the charter, making her a charter member of two Greenville Christian churches. Many of the charter members remain active today.

Church members met at Elmhurst School until March 19, 1961, when the new buildings were dedicated. In 1972, Hooker Memorial donated space to United Cerebral Palsy of North Carolina for a developmental center for physically handicapped

N.C. Counties Will Get Loan Assistance

The U.S. Secretary of Agriculture has declared nine North Carolina counties eligible for Emergency (EM) physical and production loss loan assistance due to damage caused by three months of severe drought and high temperatures.

The eligible counties, which reported damage from June 1 through Aug. 31, include Greene, Caswell, Chowan, Cumberland, Johnston, Orange, Sampson, Wayne and Wilson.

As a result of this disaster declaration, 23 additional contiguous counties were also named as areas where farmers may qualify for Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) Emergency (EM) loan assistance, according to the contiguous county provision of the Emergency Agricultural Credit Act of 1984.

Those counties include Pitt, Alamance, Bertie, Bladen, Chatham, Duplin, Durham, Edgecombe, Franklin, Gates, Guilford, Harnett, Hertford, Hoke, Lenoir, Nash, Pender, Perquimans, Person, Robeson, Rockingham, Wake and Washington.

Bert M. Hall, acting Pitt County supervisor for the Farmers Home Administration, said the provision of the Food Security Act of 1985 (Farm Bill) prohibits FmHA from providing Emergency Loans to farmers on crops grown in areas where Federal Crop Insurance or Multi-Peril Crop Insurance is available if the insurance coverage was not taken out on affected crops.

Hall said this prohibition will effect eligibility of some farmers for Emergency Loan assistance.

Hall said farmers in Pitt County may apply for EM loans and the deadline for filing an application for physical and production losses is May 25, 1988.

The local FmHA office is located at 1411 S. Evans St., Greenville, and has office hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday and 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesday.

Hall said any farmer who suffered a loss should contact his office for additional information.

Candidates for four-year terms as commissioner are Dave Davis, Joe Kue, C. Gary Pridden, Marvin L. Speight Jr. and Alfred Williams Jr.

Williams is an incumbent, appointed to fill the unexpired term of Leroy Redden who died in January, 1986. Kue has previously served as a commissioner. Pridden and Speight are seeking local elective office for the first time. Speight is a former chairman of the North Carolina State ABC Board and has served on the town board of Emerald Isle, where he has a second home.

The mayor's term is four years. The balloting will be conducted in the Farmville Community Center, 417 S. Main St. from 6:30 a.m. until 7:30 p.m. Don Johnson is registrar for this precinct.

According to Margaret Hardee, supervisor of the Pitt County Board of Elections, Farmville had 2,407 registered voters as of mid-July. In the election two years ago 1,182 ballots were cast.

Greenville Blvd. in an incident reported at 5:55 p.m. and a paper towel dispenser was taken from a restroom at the Sub Station II at 215 E. Farm Scene

By PHILLIP ROWAN

Much interest has been shown lately in triticale, a wheat-rye hybrid, which has great potential as swine feed. Triticale is high in lysine, the first limiting amino acid for swine. Thus, when triticale is mixed in swine rations based on amino acid analysis, less soybean meal is needed than in traditional corn-soybean meal diets.

Growing-finishing pigs fed triticale rations perform very similar to those fed corn-soy diets also. Swine have actually performed satisfactory on triticale rations where no soybean meal was added. In these rations, synthetic lysine was added to the diet to balance the ration for the small amount needed. It is important when feeding triticale to swine, that rations are fed on a nutrient analysis basis so the triticale must be analyzed for amino acid levels.

Growing triticale has presented some problems, but new varieties appear to be doing quite well. In fact one variety (Florico) yielded 123 bushels per acre in the 1986-87 variety trial at Plymouth. Three other varieties yielded over 90 bushels per acre. Yields of 45 to 65 bushels per acre were measured from these varieties in trials at Kinston. In Pitt County, yields were 45 and 53 bushels per acre for two different varieties grown on a local farm last year.

Triticale may have some promise for swine producers in the future. Currently, quality seed may be lacking in the southeast. Triticale is planted and managed similar to wheat. Planting dates should be late October or November. About 2 bushels of seed/acre is the seeding rate. Nitrogen should be applied in split applications with most being top-dressed in March. Only about 80 pounds of total nitrogen is recommended.

Contact the Agricultural Extension Office at 752-2934 for more information concerning triticale.

Chamber Had Busy Agenda At Planning Session

The Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce held its planning conference for 1988 this weekend in Williamsburg, Va., with the theme "A Step Into The Past — To Plan For The Future."

Attorney Phil Dixon, the newly elected chairman of the board for the chamber, led the 145-person Pitt County delegation in decisions that included an endorsement of the adopted and proposed Medical Park, a forum to seek a regional name for the growing medical center, lobbying for additional hospital beds, a study of the transportation network for the area including the medical center and park, lobbying for adequate inter and intra city thoroughfares and highways — including a corridor from the medical center to downtown Greenville.

The conferees also agreed to endorse a study for a southern loop that would connect U.S. 264 and N.C. 11 south from Greenville to Bells Fork and N.C. 33 east of Greenville. A feasibility study for the four-laning of N.C. 11 and N.C. 13 North of Greenville to the Virginia state line, was also endorsed.

Chamber leaders proposed a countywide committee to give leadership in building industrial buildings in the county in accordance with the Pitt County Development Commission.

The conference agreed to assist East Carolina University in lobbying for the placement and financing of the activity center, and a committee was formed to help the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Committee create new attractions those for visiting the Pitt-Greenville area.

The chamber was congratulated by Dr. Charles Russell, president of Pitt Community College for its Blue Ribbon Commission that works with Dr. Eddie West, superintendent of Pitt County Schools, and Russell to help form and implement a plan for increasing vocational education among high schools students in Pitt County. Conference participants also requested that chamber ask the Pitt County Board of Commissioners to consider moving the county offices back downtown in Greenville and to build a joint city-county complex.

The chamber also agreed to give special attention to small business and agri-business in the coming year.

Ed Walker, president of the Chamber, requested that it look favorably at forming a 2007 Year Committee for adequate planning, and that the chamber request for a Chamber Roundtable of governmental and economic leaders of the community to be formed immediately to exchange information and plans of various organizations for maximum cooperation in a developing county.

Walker also suggested an intercity visit during 1988 to broaden expectations by the year 2007. The visit would be made to a city that has the same entities as Greenville but has a population now exceeding 60,000.

Speakers for the conference included Jack Richardson, president of Pitt County Memorial Hospital; Dr. William Laupus, vice chancellor for Health Services and dean of the ECU School of Medicine; Greg Knowles, city manager; Kramer Jackson, county manager; Bill Clark, chairman of the Board for the Chamber; John Chaffee, executive director of Pitt County Development Commission; Dr. Charles Russell, president of Pitt Community College; Dr. Richard Eakin, chancellor of East Carolina University; Jim Turcotte, manager of Pitt-Greenville Airport; Rog Hagerty, president of Piedmont Commuter; Merry Hoffmeyer, American Eagle; Randy Doub, board member of the N.C. Department of Transportation; Ruth Matous, Sheraton Greenville; Rudy Alexander, assistant vice chancellor of Student Life, director of University Unions and student activities at ECU; Jerry Powell, BB&T; Jack Duffus, chairman of Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority; Jetter Walter, executive director of Convention and Visitors Bureau, Winston-Salem Chamber of Commerce; Jim Lanier, vice chancellor of Institutional Advancement at ECU.

Governmental leaders attending the conference were Sen. Tom Taft, Rep. Ed Warren, County Commissioner Tom Johnson, Loretta Lewellyn, assistant to the city manager, Mayo Allen, former interim city manager and city council members Janice Buck, Edward Carter, Inez Fridley, William Hadden and Nancy Jenkins.

Other leaders attending were Dr. Leo Jenkins, past chairmen of the board, Charlie Burnette, Bob Griffin, John McConney, Jerry Powell and 1987 Chairman Bill Clark; vice chairmen Greenville Banks, Bill Hopper, Edgar Kirby, Ed Murphey, Bob Thompson, John West and Bob Browning.

Chamber staff members attending were President Ed Walker, Pat Burnette, Frances Faust, Melba Green and Barbara Woods.

Northeast Gets Heavy Snow

but authorities located seven Boy Scouts who were camping at nearby Shoe's Lake and had been feared missing, said Hamilton Topping, a Forest Ranger with the N.Y. State Dept. of Environmental Conservation in Tannersville.

"They found the Boy Scouts starting out, but they were having a lot of trouble and so with snowmobiles the rangers helped them out and they were taken out and were all safe probably by about eight o'clock last night," he said.

"We have two cars at one of the trailheads and six people who signed in from a New Jersey hiking club. They haven't come out of the woods yet so we have to start another search to locate them."

Two deaths attributed to the storm occurred in Connecticut, where a large tree limb crushed the roof of a car on Route 7 in Canaan, police said. Falling trees also killed a man leaving a campground in Copake, N.Y., and a man driving a pickup truck in Chatham, N.Y.

The storm was also blamed for two deaths in Massachusetts. North Adams police said a Boston man was electrocuted when he apparently grabbed a downed power line lying in the snow. In Becket, a 54-year-old woman was killed in a two-car crash attributed to snow-slickened roadways.

Hundreds of people spent the night in emergency shelters as more than 150,000 customers in New York's Albany area, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Vermont remained without power today, officials said. Temperatures were forecast to rise above freezing, a comfort to those without heat, but a danger to flood-prone valleys.

"The only thing I worry about is we might get a lot of rapid melting with that snow," said National Weather Service forecaster Joe Luisi in Montpelier, Vt. "It's going to be a mess."

A Canadian cold air mass, which brought the snow by clashing with a moist low-pressure system, lingered over the region today.

Freeze and frost warnings were in effect overnight for areas as far south as South Carolina.

A separate front brought 38-degree temperatures today to Birmingham, Ala., breaking the 19-year-old record of 40 degrees. The thermometer registered 39 degrees today in Meridian, Miss., tying the 13-year-old record low for the date.

In Albany, N.Y., many without heat jammed all-night restaurants.

"The restaurant has been packed most of the night," Tammi Keiser, who works at a Denny's restaurant, said early today. "Now it's slowed down, but all night, we've had like 70 people waiting at the door, just to get in out of the cold, because nobody had heat, nobody could cook any food, and there were very few restaurants open."

In California, temperatures topped the 100-degree mark before noon Sunday, with Los Angeles peaking at 108 for a second-consecutive day and surpassing the record of 100 degrees set in 1933.

An estimated 410,000 people showed up at beaches in Los Angeles County on Saturday, and lifeguards said Sunday's crowds swelled to more than 675,000. But there was little relief on the sizzling sand, as temperatures hit 105 in Long Beach, 103 in Santa Barbara, 93 in Santa Monica and 92 in Newport Beach.

The heat wave extended into the San Francisco Bay area, where a scorching 100 on Sunday broke the 1907 record of 90 degrees for the date.

Forecasters had not predicted what they said turned out to be New England's most severe snowstorm recorded this early in a century.

The snow began falling Saturday evening and intensified overnight.

The heaviest snowfalls were almost 20 inches at East Jewett, N.Y., in the Catskill Mountains, 18 inches at the nearby Hunter Mountain ski resort and 15 inches at Slide Mountain. Bromley Mountain in southern Vermont was also hit with 18 inches.

From about 8 a.m. to 9 a.m. it was unsafe to go outside in Columbia County, east of Albany, said Martin Tuczinski, director of emergency management.

Teen Sentenced

RIVERHEAD, N.Y. (AP) — An 18-year-old who admitted hiring a classmate to kill her abusive father was sentenced today to six months in prison.

Cheryl Pierson's case became symbolic of a national problem of abused children following presentencing hearings in which she described years of physical and sexual abuse.

Miss Pierson fainted as the judge announced that although she was eligible for youthful offender status, he was sentencing her to the jail term for manslaughter.

As Justice Harvey Sherman spoke, a sobbing Miss Pierson fell back and slumped into her chair. Family members and friends in the courtroom, who at first had sighed with relief as the judge sentenced her to five years' probation, broke into cries when he announced that she would be jailed for six months.

New Director

Nance J. Mize, a physical education and recreation specialist with nine years of experience at East Carolina University, has been appointed director of the department of Intramural-Recreational Services.

Mize's appointment, which was effective Sept. 28, was announced by Dr. Elmer Meyer Jr., vice chancellor for Student Life. She was chosen after a national search for a new director to succeed Steven I. Cohen, who resigned.

The Texas-born Mize holds degrees in health, physical education, recreation and exercise physiology from Texas Woman's University, Denton, Texas. Previously associate director of the department, she became acting director last June when Cohen resigned to take a position at N.C. Wesleyan College.

She is a former director of intramurals services at Pittsburg State University, Pittsburg, Kansas, from 1971-1974, and at Sam Houston State University, Huntsville, Texas, from 1975-1978. She came to ECU in 1978 as a lecturer in the Department of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Safety and also as assistant director of intramurals in the Division of Student Life.

Candidate Withdraws

Greg White of Grifton announced today he has withdrawn as a candidate for District 6, Seat B on the Pitt County Board of Education in the Nov. 3 elections. He said he reconsidered his candidacy because of time commitments as manager of Curtis Mathes in Greenville.

"I'm working seven days a week right now, 90 hours a week, and I can't put 100 percent to the job (Board of Education) and I think it's a job that deserves 100 percent."

White said he would consider being a candidate during the next board of education elections.

Other candidates in District 6, Seat B are Ron Hardison, Elbert Buck Jr. and Levi Smith.

Greenville Man Drowns

SWAN QUARTER — Officials resumed search efforts today for the companion of a Greenville man who drowned after a fishing boat capsized in the Deep Bay area Rose Bay in Hyde County Saturday.

Dr. Stan Harris, Regional Medical Examiner for Eastern North Carolina, said drowning was the cause of death for 73-year-old Edward B. Cook of Greenville.

Cook's companion was believed to be Carl Wilbur according to a spokesman in the Hyde County Sheriff's office.

A Coast Guard spokesman from the Coast Guard Station at Fort

Macon said the Coast Guard unit at Hobucken in Pamlico County received a call from the Hyde County Sheriff's office shortly after 10 p.m. Saturday reporting that a capsized boat was sighted in Rose Bay.

Rescue efforts began Saturday, but it was Sunday before a Coast Guard vessel located the capsized boat and the body of Cook, which was found some distance from the boat in shallow water about 200 feet from the shore.

The Hyde County Sheriff's Office and personnel from the Hobucken Coast Guard Station are conducting the continued search.

A BAD TIME TO SELL? NEVER!

Perhaps you've thought about selling your present home, but have put off that decision, thinking that NOW is not a good time to sell. WAIT NO LONGER.

Consider what happens during the "bad times". Most homeowners want to sell their homes for the highest possible price in the shortest possible period of time. So, during those periods which are perceived as "a bad time to sell a home", those homeowners put off their selling decision until a more favorable selling climate exists.

Since the so-called "bad times" can last from a relatively short period to a couple of years, a backlog of frustrated would-be sellers builds up. It is sort of like the pressure which builds up in a pressure cooker.

Then, finally, comes the good news, "Home sales are rising—buyers are buying!" Guess what happens? Like the pressure cooker, the lid blows right off the top. Sellers by the thousands begin to flood the market with homes to sell. The competition is incredibly fierce and prices must be competitive to generate a sale.

The best time to sell a home is when YOU are ready to sell. Make sure your home is in top condition, price it fairly, and employ the best real estate agent available. Through careful planning, your house will sell successfully in any market!

The key to selling a home is professional real estate experience. You'll receive special attention when you list your home with us. Why not call us at 756-2121 or come by our office.

Efforts Worthwhile

Greenville should pursue the All American City designation with enthusiasm.

The benefits are worth the expense to taxpayers — an amount that will likely be minimal compared with the return the city receives. The All American City designation would be a valuable marketing tool both for tourism and for industry recruiting.

Seeking the designation is a logical step to expanding the area's travel and tourism industry. Greenville and Pitt County have already committed to developing this revenue source with a motel occupancy tax earmarked for marketing. An All American City designation would strengthen this position. It would help Greenville compete with other urban areas in North Carolina for travel dollars. Estimates that the title will yield $100,000 in advertising and public relations value are reasonable.

Further, the title can be used successfully to attract new business and industry to Greenville. The All American City designation is a green light that says a community has the necessary resources, high quality of life and commitment to growth that make it desirable.

It is reasonable to assert that if towns like Tarboro, Rocky Mount and Wilson are All American cities, then Greenville is out of step by not holding the title. Certainly the city has the qualifications for the designation. Greenville has good transportation links, strong human services, an outstanding public school system and a record of growth and prosperity. The timing for seeking the designation is correct.

The City Council is correct in assuming more of a leadership role financially in marketing the city and should continue with this support within a reasonable parameter. Until now, the private sector has borne the majority of the cost of marketing Greenville. It is within the scope of a public entity to commit funds to efforts toward improving the community's image and potential and the All American City designation falls well within this responsibility.

With these benefits in mind, Greenville should strongly support efforts to join its municipal neighbors and become an All American City.

Protection

This week the big fire trucks will be rolling up to schools and day care centers.

The emergency vehicles will also be seen at area shopping centers during the week. Since the vehicles usually roll only in the event of an emergency such as a fire or traffic accident this will be an unusual week.

The reason for all the activity is that this is Fire Prevention Week. Firemen, of course, are concerned with fires all year long. All of us should be, and that is the reason for the observance — to make us aware of the dangers that uncontrolled fires present.

Fire department officials say the emergency vehicles will visit 24 schools and day care centers during the week. There will be fire drills and demonstrations.

Fires have been a threat to homes, property and lives of humans since prehistoric times. As great cities developed, awesome fires often swept through them destroying everything in their path. Fire Prevention Week, which began in 1922, commemorates the anniversary of one such fire, the Chicago fire of 1871 in which over 200 people were killed.

The 20 century has brought modern fire equipment, adequate water supplies to metropolitan areas, and more recently, even to more developed rural areas. Better training of fire fighting personnel and a better understanding by citizens as to what should be done when a fire erupts has helped to reduce such disasters.

Home and occupational fires continue to be a major threat to society. Dwellings and business buildings are frequently gutted. Tragedy is sometimes the result when people are badly burned or killed.

The home or the workplace with their familiar surroundings can seem entirely safe. Either can be turned into an unfamiliar world of horror with the quick spread of a fire.

It behooves us all to learn what we can about fire prevention and what we should do in the event of a fire. Certainly we all need smoke detectors, fire extinguishers, escape routes and quick access to emergency numbers. And there is no better time to consider these things than during Fire Prevention Week.

The Campaign That Wasn't

'Being a role model is a blessing and a curse. It opens some doors and shuts others. Certainly being a female politician drew attention to me, and prompted the inane question — Is this a symbolic campaign? ...'

When I stood before hundreds of my friends in Denver last Monday and heard their groans as I said I wouldn't be a candidate for president, I knew I had let them down. In four brief months, they and thousands of others across the United States had made a valiant attempt to organize and fuel a serious national presidential campaign.

I journeyed 75,000 miles, visiting more than 50 cities in almost 30 states. My exploratory committee had a phenomenally successful direct-mail test. We raised almost $1 million the hard way, dollar by dollar. We raised enough money in the requisite 20 states to qualify for federal matching money. We brought 15,000 to 20,000 new people into the political process.

I wanted to know if it were possible to run a presidential campaign where honesty and common sense were not slogans but the whole reason for the campaign. The answer was clearly yes. By the end of the summer, I had risen to third in the preference polls, second in name recognition and first in people's response to the question: Which candidate do you trust?

Spending very little money, we rubbed two sticks together and started a political prairie fire. Yet, it was clear to me that as far as we had come, the late hour and the remaining obstacles made a successful campaign improbable.

The sad farewell to my friends in Denver has produced some "Is she tough enough?" grouching. "Could she negotiate with Gorbachev? Could she pick up the red phone?"

During my 15 years in Congress, I have scrapped with the House leadership over the seniority system, Colorado newspapers over pork-barrel water projects, Ralph Nader and the National Education Association over the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the Department of Education, most of my House colleagues over back-door pay raises, my home-town mayor over revenue sharing and every defense secretary from Melvin Laird to Caspar Weinberger over wasteful military spending.

I won some battles, lost others, but never flinched and never gave up.

Finally, I stand accused on these pages of failure to be a "role model." (I was not alone. Geraldine Ferraro and Elizabeth Dole were in the dock with me. This is the rule of three — three items, illogically or logically connected, comprise a column.) What is the role? Joan of Arc? Annie Oakley? The female equivalent of Dirty Harry?

Being a role model is a blessing and a curse. It opens some doors and shuts others. Certainly being a female politician drew attention to me, and prompted the inane question — Is this a symbolic campaign? — which was obligatory in the early days of the summer before I passed in the polls the majority of the announced candidates.

Role model is the purgatory that cultural pioneers must endure before they pass into the heavenly state of being accepted for who they are.

I often joked that if my name were Patrick, I would have been chased into the race by a horde of check-waving Democratic fat cats. Let's hope that is the pleasant fate of the next woman who aspires to be president.

As far as I am concerned, last Monday I joined Mario Cuomo, Dale Bumpers, Bill Clinton and Sam Nunn. We have come far enough in American politics where that is possible.

Point Of Woodward's Book Missed

WASHINGTON — Bob Woodward's chilling book on William J. Casey's CIA seems controversial because of how, when and in what form it was published, not because of the truthfulness of his charges and their implications. That's not so surprising. Increasingly in this one-dimensional television age, serious issues are treated trivially, and isolated incidents attract sensational comment without perspective or substance.

This is particularly so in the case of "VEL: The Secret Wars of the CIA, 1961-1987." Attention so far focuses not on what Casey did as director of central intelligence in the Reagan years but on whether he nodded at, or spoke a few words to, Woodward while in Georgetown University Hospital. Heated discussion revolves around what Woodward and The Washington Post knew and when they knew it, not on the implications of the specific, detailed accounts of an intelligence agency operating beyond political accountability, if not literally out of control.

To judge from the reaction, many of those commenting, including President Reagan, seem to have read only the headlines, then added to the din of nondescript denials and no-comments. Most of the furor totally misses the point.

The point is not whether Casey nodded or mumbled an affirmative response to Woodward about his knowledge of diversion of U.S.-Iranian arms sales profits to Nicaraguan contras — unless you believe that Woodward is a liar. I do not, and the notion is strongly disputed by Woodward's career record of repeated, accurate disclosures. The public has been told authoritatively, in the sworn testimony of Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, that "Casey knew."

The point is the cumulative portrait of a Central Intelligence Agency director, operating in a climate of official secrecy and distrust for virtually all public institutions, embarking on worldwide actions that made the Iran-contra affair inevitable and perhaps only a small part of a larger pattern.

If Woodward's account is accurate, the now-famous scheme of North & Co.'s secret "enterprise" to provide an "off-the-shelf, full-service," unaccountable covert action capacity worldwide was already operational. Assassinations were among services it could provide.

To implement such overall secret operational capacity, according to Woodward's depiction, Casey worked diligently and effectively to find a way around Congress. He bypassed rules and laws, made end runs around congressional intelligence oversight committees, got friendly members of Congress to obtain secret agency funding through their committees and obtained assistance for operations from Saudi and Israeli intelligence services. He "privatizes" U.S. intelligence operations and U.S. foreign policy with a vengeance.

It's all possible because of what Woodward portrays as the passive but permissive style of Ronald Reagan in the White House.

Strength For Today

A distinguished public character some years ago uttered these words: "I am only one, but I am one. I cannot do everything, but I can do something. What I can do I ought to do, and what I ought to do, by the grace of God I will do."

What do we mean when we say, "a satisfactory life?" We mean a life in which one is at peace with himself, with his, neighbors, with God, and engaged in some purposeful activity. Omit one of these loyalties and what you have is not a person at all but a creature. The thoroughly happy person is one who has certain unselfish objectives from the time he arises in the morning until he retires at night. What we can do we had better make sure that we actually try to do morning, afternoon and night.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Congratulations to Burger King — and all the Burger King boycotters throughout the country. The boycott is over! Burger King has stopped purchasing beef fed in the rain forests of South and Central America. During the boycott, Burger King's sales nationally dropped 12 percent.

The grazing of American and other beef industries in the rain forest areas is destructive to the rain forest, to the thousands of species of birds and animals which depend on the rain forests, and ultimately to the entire globe. Scientists have known for many decades that the rain forest areas control weather patterns and climate world-wide.

Droughts, increasingly higher/hotter weather temperatures, devastation of lands, and the extinction and endangering of many animal species have been attributed to the destruction of the rain forests.

Thanks to the boycotters for caring enough about protecting our world and its future.

Thanks to Burger King for caring enough to respond.

The Inside-Outside Battle About Seating Judge Bork

So fierce is the fight over the Supreme Court nomination of Judge Robert H. Bork that allies have begun shooting at each other.

Worried that the battle may be moving against them, White House aides have begun complaining — first privately and now in print — that their conservative supporters are not pushing hard enough for Bork. "I think," said one senior White House aide, "some of the opponent groups are more committed to trying to sway public opinion than the proponents." Suspicious conservative leaders hear in those remarks the first echoes of what may become a ractious "Who lost Bork?" debate if the nominee fails.

Meanwhile, conservatives are complaining that White House chief of staff Howard H. Baker Jr. waited too long to launch administration efforts for Bork, allowing liberal opponents to take an early initiative they never relinquished. While President Reagan vacationed in August, Bork's opponents were ready and "they really hit hard," admitted the White House aide. "It took us some time to get ourselves in a position where we were ready to respond."

These complaints whizzing back and forth testify to the White House difficulty in coordinating two distinct elements of its campaign — the inside game of wooing senators, and the outside game of moving public opinion and activating the conservative base. The problem is both simple and intractable: Though the White House wants conservative social and religious groups to rally behind Bork, it fears their embrace will repel moderate senators who hold the key swing votes.

What comforts Reagan advisers is that opponents face much the same problem. Liberal groups worked fiercely to generate public resistance to the nomination — while trying to avoid becoming a target. They have succeeded in the first count, helping move public opinion against Bork. But the visibility of their efforts has allowed Senate Republicans to score points in the inside game by attacking "special interests" opposing Bork.

So on the eve of this week's Senate Judiciary Committee vote, the White House and Bork's Senate opponents find themselves in roughly the same position: both need their supporters' zeal, and both fear it. They are in this conundrum because the Bork battle has no precedent. No one knows the rules for a Supreme Court nomination battle fought as if it were a national plebiscite because no one has ever run such a campaign before. Even the institutional obduracy surrounding President Nixon's nominations of Clement F.

Analysis

Haynsworth Jr., and G. Harrold Carswell — the last two Supreme Court nominees defeated — seems quaint next to the feral struggle over Bork. Nor have Reagan's other Supreme Court nominees fired such passions; only elevating William H. Rehnquist to chief justice drew sustained opposition, mostly on the inside.

"I think this is unprecedented, to use the media to help shape public opinion (on a Supreme Court nomination)," said Arthur J. Kropp, executive director of People for the American Way, a liberal lobbying group that last week completed a $725,000 media campaign against Bork.

Almost from the day Bork was nominated, the White House has been unable to find a message that both advances its cause inside the Senate and excites its natural allies. When Bork was named, conservative leaders erupted with joy; Christian Voice, an evangelical organization, proclaimed that Bork's confirmation "may be our last chance ... to ensure future decades will bring morality, godliness and justice back into focus."

But the congressional veterans gathered in the White House around Baker, a former Senate majority leader, initially saw that enthusiasm as a problem, not an asset. To their view, the right's portrayal of Bork as the answer to its prayers only buttressed the left's portrayal of him as a conservative ideologue. Almost immediately, Baker's insiders decided that an ideologically polarized battle wouldn't get Bork through a Democratic Senate and they began to position him as a moderate. Surprisingly, conservatives tailored their public statements accordingly.

But that was not an easy message to sell their supporters. Though conservative groups have produced piles of mail supporting Bork — winning the battle of the post card in many states — they were unable to raise the money for media campaigns comparable to those funded by his opponents. Bork supporters expected that role to be filled by a group called We The People, formed by California GOP consultant Bill Roberts. Roberts figured to raise $2.5 million from Reagan loyalists for an advertising campaign in key swing states. But the big money never arrived and, so far, the group has only purchased print advertisements in Oregon and Massachusetts.

In part, the fund-raising problems of Bork's supporters reflects the decline of the conservative financial base in the waning months of the Reagan era. But conservative activists argue persuasively that the White House strategy of selling Bork as a moderate accentuated their problems. "They are just taking it too far, to the point where anybody can ask, 'why are we getting excited about him?'" says Curt Anderson, president of Coalitions for America, an umbrella conservative group.

Opponents, on the other hand, have had no trouble exciting people. The White House tactics left all the emotional arguments for the left.

This disparity in tenor — widened by the disparity in money — has enabled the opponents to control the public debate. But that victory may yet create problems on the inside, for many senators seem uncomfortable with such vehement lobbying over a judicial nomination. Repeated assertions by Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, and Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., — that opposition to Bork reflects the power of special interest groups — clearly frightens some wavering senators. Several Judiciary Committee members have delivered self-conscious speeches insisting they won't be swayed by lobbying or the polls — they sound a little like Claude Rains discovering gambling at Rick's in "Casablanca." But in private, the senators are often just as concerned that a vote against Bork will be seen as weakness, not independence. "There seems to be almost an over-reaction to what happened to Walter Mondale in being perceived as a captive of the special interests, and the feminists, and the gays, and the abortionists," said Kropp.

The Still Thinkable War

LONDON — The new term in war is "low-intensity conflict." Both the Defense Intelligence Agency and the Central Intelligence Agency are currently working on a strategy for the United States to fight overseas in such wars.

Completion of these secret studies after this year will mark a fundamental rethinking of America's war-fighting capabilities. The consequences will be important; America will have plans in place to intervene, unilaterally, in operations akin to the invasion of Grenada or actions of a longer duration.

Low-intensity conflict is a growing form of international geopolitics. Last year there were 43 such wars involving 45 of the world's 164 nations. These conflicts have killed more than five million people.

Just as the arrival of the tank saw the elimination of the cavalry as an effective weapon of war, so nuclear weapons have changed the options available to military and political strategists for prosecuting modern warfare.

Yet non-nuclear wars continue among those nations that do not possess nuclear weapons (Iran and Iraq for example), but are increasingly unlikely between those powers that have nuclear arsenals, particularly the United States and the Soviet Union.

The dangers of stepping over the nuclear trip wire are recognized by both superpowers. In every crisis since World War II that could have escalated to a confrontation between the superpowers, both sides have taken positive steps to reduce tension and avoid conflict. Still, under the Reagan administration, there has been a massive increase in defense spending across the board, not only for major weaponry but for an unprecedented buildup of those forces specifically designed to fight low-intensity wars — thinking big about small conflicts.

In 1982 the budget for special operations forces such as the Rangers and the Green Berets was $7.5 million for 4,300 men. By 1986, that figure had increased to $45 million for 9,200 men and by 1990 will peak at $500 million for 11,200 men. At the same time, new command structures have been authorized by Congress, establishing the Special Operations Command at MacDill Air Force Base in Florida. A new Assistant Secretary of Defense for Low-Intensity Conflict has been authorized but not yet appointed.

Plans already exist for committing these Special Operations Forces in support of NATO or in joint operations outside the NATO area. What has been lacking until now is a strategy for unilateral action, something that, since Vietnam, has been anathema to many politicians and members of the military.

In the operations that have taken place during the Reagan administration the United States has displayed little understanding of the political and military requirements of unconventional warfare.

Although substantial numbers of U.S. troops have not yet been employed, the two key tests of U.S. capability have been El Salvador and Nicaragua. In both countries, regardless of the political differences, the U.S. military has performed poorly.

In El Salvador, 55 Green Berets

plus up to 150 CIA counterinsurgency specialists have been training the Salvadoran military to fight left-wing guerrillas for more than five years. The Reagan administration argues that those guerrillas are armed and supported by neighboring Nicaragua. In the first stages of deployment, U.S. Mobile Training Teams attempted to train the 25,000-strong Salvadoran Army to fight a conventional war. Using the classic American prescription for all combat, they decided to meet force with greater force, with massive artillery barrages and air bombings.

The Army was rapidly increased in size although morale remained poor. Many of the troops were unwilling to leave the security of their barracks unless ordered out on a massive combined arms sweep through an area thought to be occupied by guerrillas. Such sweeps achieved little other than to alienate the local population whose crops and villages were often destroyed by the government forces. One Green Beret involved in the training likened the strategy to "putting your fist into a bucket of water: You put your fist in, swirl it around and when you'd withdrawn it there was no evidence that you'd ever been there."

The Green Berets then changed their training method and that, combined with the election of a democratic government in El Salvador, helped place the guerrillas on the defensive. Temporary military success, however, was not matched on the political front; President Jose Napoleon Duarte has not been able to deliver on promised land and military reforms. This has undermined the gains made by more sophisticated counterinsurgency policy; political failures continue to provide both useful propaganda and recruits for the guerrillas.

In Nicaragua, the U.S. sponsored its own guerrilla movement, the famous Contras, whose official assignment is to pressure the leftist Nicaraguan government for reform but whose real aims are to overthrow the government. There, too, the results show a clear misunderstanding of how to wage a guerrilla campaign.

With the help of their U.S. advisers, the Contras have trained to fight a war more reminiscent of the commandos in World War II than a guerrilla war advocated by Mao. The Mao method required guerrillas to live in their area of operations, gaining popular support and gradually undermining the influence and the will of the existing government. The Contras, by hit-and-and-run, chose to fight a remote war.

Future Of Smokeless Cigarettes, Old Product Stirs Health Debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new smokeless cigarette to be produced by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. has shown encouraging results in measurement of cancer-causing substances, and that news may undermine the tobacco industry's long-standing denial that conventional cigarettes cause disease, experts say.

"They have demonstrated that they have a product that can at least potentially have solved the lung-cancer problem," said Richard Daynard, a law professor at Northeastern University and the head of the Tobacco Products Liability Project.

John F. Banzhaf III, the executive director of Action on Smoking and Health, said that Reynolds, by addressing the cancer potential of the new product, in effect conceded the cancer risk of the old product.

"By implication, I think they are certainly saying something about the old product," Banzhaf said.

Twenty years after the first patents were issued on "clean" cigarettes that resembled the Reynolds product in key ways, the industry appears ready to stake part of its future on the concept.

Preliminary plans for the Reynolds invention, obtained through a search of recent European patents on file at the U.S. Patent Office in Washington, reveal that Reynolds put several versions of the cigarette through a standard screening test for carcinogenicity — or cancer-causing potential, the Winston-Salem Journal reported.

"The aerosol 'smoke' from the preferred embodiments (designs) has no significant mutagenic activity as measured by the Ames test," said a summary of the patent request.

One top scientific authority on the chemistry of smoking said that Reynolds' use of the Ames test, which flags substances with a potential for mutating healthy cells into cancer cells, only shows that the company takes product-testing seriously and is not taking short-cuts.

"Every conscientious scientist who brings a new product to the market would do a battery of tests," said the scientist, Dr. Dietrich Hoffmann, the associate director of the American Health Foundation.

At the product announcement, company officials said that they were not claiming it is safer than tobacco-burning cigarettes. Edward A. Horrigan Jr., the Reynolds Tobacco's chairman and chief executive, said that the product "addresses smokers' perceptions that have been created by the continuing smoking and health controversy."

Asked whether Reynolds was not making safety claims by reporting negative Ames test results in the patent request, Betsy Annese, a spokesman for Reynolds, said, "No, we are not. And the general public generally does not see those patents. We are not saying this is a safer cigarette."

"This cigarette will offer smokers a new option. Now they will be able to choose from filter, non-filter, full flavor, and now a cigarette that does not burn tobacco."

Numerous studies using the Ames test have shown that smoke inhaled from regular cigarettes is linked to higher levels of cell-mutating substances in smokers' urine.

When the new product was disclosed Sept. 14, Reynolds officials said that complete toxicological and chemical studies, as well as animal inhalation results, would be made public when sales of the product began.

One critic, Dr. Greg Connelly, the director of the Massachusetts Office for Nonsmoking and Health, said in testimony before a House subcommittee Sept. 16, "If Reynolds is serious (about sharing test data), I suggest that they supply the same evidence to state and federal health authorities and ask that the product be evaluated for safety and efficacy as a therapeutic device to help smokers quit."

"If they refuse to do so, then it is a clear signal that the product is meant to serve as a temporary source of nicotine that allows smokers to continue smoking regular cigarettes."

Cigarettes and other tobacco products are exempt from scrutiny by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. Horrigan said he expects the new product to be taxed, labeled and regulated as a cigarette.

Connelly and Rep. Henry Waxman, a California Democrat and the leading smoking foe in the House, have vowed to fight the exemption.

"The only logical reason the product contains tobacco is that it is needed to gain a regulatory exemption from review by the FDA," Connelly testified.

Though Reynolds says that tobacco is "essential" to the product, the European patent documents refer to "the optional tobacco charge."

The patent records also say, "Articles of the type disclosed herein may be modified for use as drug delivery articles, for delivery of volatile pharmacologically or physiologically active materials such as ephedrine, metaproterenol, terbutaline or the like."

According to Reynolds, the product will contain 70 percent of the tobacco in a regular cigarette. A charcoal-like heat source at one end will vaporize nicotine and flavorings inhaled by the smoker. The tobacco in the product will not burn.

IN THE STATE

Crowded Jails

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina's county jails are becoming crowded with inmates they are not equipped to accept, including some convicted criminals serving sentences of up to six months, officials say.

There are more than 100 county jails in North Carolina, and most were designed to house primarily non-violent offenders for only a few days at a time. Now some officials fear that legal problems that have befallen the state could drift down to the county level.

"Jails are being used more often for a purpose they were never intended, which is long-term confinement," said Michael Smith, assistant director of the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill. "It may be a big problem in some counties, because if people are kept in severely crowded conditions for some time, you've got some potential liability problems there."

Two committees of the Governor's Crime Commission are studying jail populations, and a task force from the Department of Human Resources is drafting a revision of state standards governing county jails.

Some state officials say all they can do is examine the standards and make sure they are being met.

"It's all right for someone to say that if we inspected the jails right they would be up to snuff, but that's just not all it takes," said state Human Resources Secretary David Flaherty. "It's going to take local communities coming up with the money to make sure the standards are going to be met. The only thing we can do is see that the standards are where they need to be and review the county jail to see if they have been met."

Baptist Candidates

RALEIGH (AP) — Three candidates have already announced their intention to run for the North Carolina Baptist State Convention presidency as a gathering approaches that could determine whether state moderates can stave off a determined bid by conservatives to extend their influence.

The 157th annual Baptist State Convention will bring Southern Baptists from throughout the state to Greensboro Nov. 9-11.

The announced candidates include: the Rev. Ned L. Mathews, an ardent fundamentalist from Gastonia; the Rev. E. Leon Smith, a moderate from Goldsboro; and Ted G. Stone, a self-proclaimed "alternative" from Durham. They are running to succeed William E. Poe of Charlotte, the moderate president who has completed two one-year terms and cannot seek re-election.

"Never before have we had people announce candidacies, and never before have we had a candidate with a strong agenda to take over the convention," William H. Boatwright, the convention's communications director, told the News and Observer of Raleigh.

"It definitely says something about how organized the process has become and how pivotal people believe this particular election will be," he said. "In that sense, it's historic."

Neither Mathews nor Smith shies away from joining the ideological battle.

"North Carolina and Virginia seem to be reputed as moderate-liberal states," Mathews, 53, pastor of the Parkwood church in Gastonia, said. "We don't believe that's so. To allow the state's Baptists to dispel that, North Carolina's conservative leadership asked me to run."

Mental Illness

RALEIGH (AP) — Though services for the mentally ill in North Carolina prisons have increased, not everyone is entirely pleased with the state's response to the mentally ill.

John F. Baggett, director of the N.C. Alliance for the Mentally Ill, blasted the practice of incarcerating the mentally ill, saying it was a reflection of society's misunderstanding of mental illness.

"Those with serious and persistent mental illnesses such as schizophrenia and manic depression do not belong in the prison system," Baggett told the News and Observer of Raleigh last week. "And those who suffer from those brain diseases and are persistently dangerous and a security problem do not belong in our psychiatric hospitals."

He also criticized the way in mentally ill inmates are often separated from the general inmate population for treatment, only to be swiftly returned when they show signs of improvement. There, he said, "They can be victimized by those who know a good prey when they see one."

Park Funding

RALEIGH (AP) — A state Division of Parks and Recreation officials says he is not convinced that North Carolina is ready to invest the money necessary to turn around a state park system that ranks last in the nation in per capita funding.

"Will the state of North Carolina ever do it?" William Davis asked. "If history is any indication, the answer is no."

William Holman, a lobbyist for the Conservation Council of North Carolina and the Sierra Club, said "It's a system with tremendous potential, but overall, I'd describe it as poor. It has tremendous natural resources, but land acquisition hasn't been completed. Maintenance is behind. Development is behind. There is inadequate personnel to assist visitors."

The focus of the current debate on the state parks is on how to use the scant funds available, whether the money is best used to maintain or develop the parks presently in this system or to buy more park land in the face of rapidly rising land prices throughout much of the state.

"In every respect, we are the last state park system in the United States," Davis said. "We can't even say, 'Thank God for Mississippi.'"

Environmental groups tend to favor land acquisition for new parks and buffers against development around existing parks. They say the state's parks have a scenic beauty that should not be disturbed by paved roads, visitor's centers and recreation facilities.

"I think it's a fine, magnificent system of state parks," said Margaret Nygard, executive vice president of the Eno River Association, in an interview with The News and Observer of Raleigh. "There is a kind of simplicity to them. They're not overdeveloped."

Ms. Nygard said she thinks officials should focus on land acquisition because "part of the natural experience can be disturbed by what goes on around it."

But Davis and other parks officials, while not discounting the need to purchase more land, contend that more must be done to maintain the existing park system. The division has identified $20 million in repairs and $80 million in capital improvements which need to be made to existing parks. For the 1985-87 budget period, the division received $5.5 million a year for operations. For the 1987-89 period, the division has been budgeted $5.3 million a year for operations.

REAPING THE BENEFITS

Texasgulf has been harvesting something besides phosphate this summer, and it's showing up on the dinner tables of some employees.

Working with Natural Systems Associates of Raleigh, members of the Environmental Control Department have planted and tended seven research gardens to determine whether air emissions from the Lee Creek Phosphate Operations have any detrimental effect on delicate plant life. This is in addition to regular air quality control that ensures emissions fall within state and federal guidelines.

The crops represent a range of plants with varying sensitivities to different kinds of emissions. They include butter beans, eggplant, tomatoes, squash, cucumbers, alfalfa,

VOA Antennas Send U.S. Message Worldwide

By MEREDITH BARKLEY
Greensboro News & Record
An AP Member Exchange Extra
Soaring up to 450 feet above the tobacco and corn fields of Pitt County are the antennas that broadcast America's voice to the world.

Miles of antenna cable, strung between giant steel towers, beam news and entertainment in 31 languages to Europe, the Soviet Union, the Middle East, Africa and Latin America.

The Greenville facility, named for veteran CBS Radio newsmen and Guilford County native Edward R. Murrow, is the largest and most powerful of the Voice of America's 19 transmitting stations worldwide.

"We get information to people who don't have access to anything other than what's canned and given to them," said John F. Moss, station manager since April. "It's the broadcast arm of the U.S. government."

The facility will become the gateway for all overseas feeds later this year when it gets its own large satellite dish. For now, in addition to broadcasting directly to Europe, Africa and Latin America, the Greenville transmitters serve as a back-up feed for programming to Voice of America transmitting stations in Europe and Africa when they lose their satellite transmission. Those stations broadcast to places the Greenville transmitters can't reach.

"We actually will be relaying the programs originating from Washington to the international satellite system," Moss said.

Worldwide, Voice of America broadcasts in 43 languages, reaching more than 120 million people a week. Its first broadcast, in German, was Feb. 24, 1942, — 79 days after the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor.

The Greenville facility is massive. Completed in 1963 at a cost of more than $23 million, the station comprises three sites totaling more than 6,000 acres. One site receives microwave signals from Voice of America headquarters in Washington where programming originates; it relays the signals to transmitters at the other two sites.

Each transmitting site contains 11 transmitters. All are used each day — including 10 that broadcast at a power level of 500 kilowatts and six that broadcast at 250 kilowatts. By comparison, commercial FM radio stations in the United States may transmit at up to 100 kilowatts, the power output of most FM stations in the Triad.

Together, the transmitters take down such down most of the station's $130,000 monthly electricity bill — enough to serve more than 1,100 homes. That accounts for a large part of the $4.6 million it is expected to cost to operate the facility this year.

"They're hungry dudes," observed

Moss, a 59-year-old Iowa native who has been with Voice of America since 1962.

Many of the transmitters at Greenville are large enough to walk around in. Some tubes used to amplify their signals cost $75,000 each and must be lifted into place with cranes because they weigh up to 170 pounds. Fortunately they have a life expectancy of 10,000 hours or more. The average transmitter is used about 3,000 hours a year.

Voice of America transmitters broadcast on a high-frequency range — normally between 6 and 26 megahertz. That's beyond the range of standard AM-FM radios in the United States, but most radios available in foreign countries can pick up the signal.

The broadcast languages as well as the countries targeted change with world events. Before the Shah of Iran was toppled in 1979, for instance, few broadcasts were aimed at the then-friendly Middle Eastern nation. After the hostile Ayatollah Khomeini seized control, however, broadcasts to Iran were stepped up.

It takes 90 people — mostly Civil Service employees — to run the station, which broadcasts 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Some top managers, like Moss, though, are Foreign Service employees who serve at the Greenville facility between foreign assignments.

Voice of America, the global radio network of the U.S. Information Agency, which Murrow once headed, is charged by law with presenting "reliable and authoritative" news to the world in an "accurate, objective and comprehensive" manner.

"The long-range interests of the United States are served by communicating directly with the people of the world by radio," says the agency's charter, which President Ford signed into law in 1976.

Voice of America apparently has achieved its goals of fairness, balance and accuracy.

"They have built the reputation in the broadcast industry of doing a rather straightforward job of news reporting," said Richard Elam, a professor of broadcast journalism at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. "They've based their credibility on accurate reporting."

The broadcasts are intended partly to counterbalance the largely anti-American slant on news coming from organizations like Radio Moscow. To that end, Voice of America beams more than 320 newscasts a day throughout the world.

In addition to news, the agency beams a variety of programs, including music, sports and light features on life in the United States. One popular program is Willis Conover's "Music USA" jazz show, which airs eight times weekly to 100 million people. It has been standard fare for listeners worldwide since Jan. 6, 1955. It has made Conover, little known in the United States, one of America's best-known personalities abroad.

"You have a variety of programs to attract listeners," Moss said. "It seems like there's something for everyone."

State Fair Loses Landmarks As Old Eating Stands Go

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The smell of foot-long hot dogs, barbecue and greasy french fries will still waft over the North Carolina State Fair this year, but the smells won't be coming from the row of ramshackle lunchrooms surrounding the fairgrounds racetrack.

The lunchrooms, with their wooden seats and plywood walls festooned with soft drink posters, are gone.

"The old wooden eating stands around the racetrack had gotten into such deplorable condition that we dismantled them," said fair manager Sam Rand. "They were landmarks of the state fair, but it was taking a chance on safety."

"It was not a very popular decision," he said. "But those old lunchstands had outlived their usefulness. Some of them had been there over 50 years, and some of the groups had been in them for 30 or 40 years."

In place of the lunchrooms, groups will be putting up temporary stands to serve food during the ten-day fair run that begins Oct. 16.

But Rand said he expects the lunchrooms to eventually be rebuilt.

"Once we get funds to build them back, those will be valuable addition," he said.

Rand said this year's fair will offer several new exhibits and acts, including a working grist mill, a 20-minute fireworks extravaganza on the opening night and nondenominational Sunday services in the 1874 church that was moved to the Heritage Circle area in 1985.

And a Wisconsin family will give Tar Heels a chance to re-earn their nickname when they bring a little-known water sport to the South — logrolling.

The Scheer family Lumberjack Show of Champions will offer daredevils to stick to spinning logs floating in a lake at the fairgrounds.

"We do this to show people how truly difficult it is," said Janet Scheer, whose two daughters and a son are logrolling champions. "The average stay is one second."

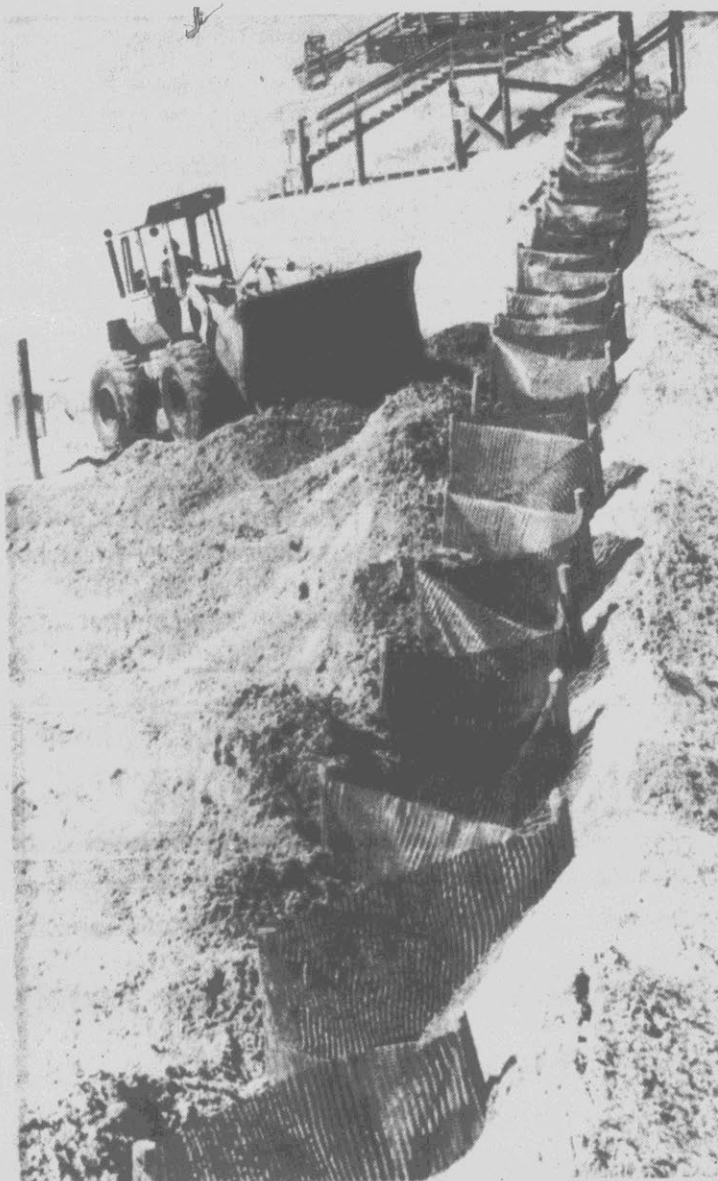

The lumberjack show also presents traditional North Woods skills like chopping, bucksawing, axe throwing and speedclimbing up 50-foot poles.

Janet's son, Robert, holds the record for an 80-foot semiprofessional climb and is third in the world in professional speedclimbing. He can go up a 100-foot tree in 29 seconds and down in four.

Rand said the stars of last year's fair will be returning.

"By popular demand, we are bringing the racing pigs back again this year," he said. The pigs will be racing around a 100-foot racetrack every two hours from noon to 8 p.m. for first-prize of a cream-filled chocolate cookie.

TVA Investigation

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The head of the Tennessee Valley Authority is under investigation for allegedly misleading officials of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission who were reviewing the TVA's Watts Bar Nuclear Plant in 1986, a Nashville newspaper reported.

The NRC plans to turn an investigation of TVA nuclear chief Steven White over to the U.S. Justice Department, The Tennessean reported Saturday.

The paper quoted unnamed sources in Washington saying the commission's investigators have concluded that White intentionally misled the NRC in 1986, when he said TVA's Watts Bar Nuclear Plant met federal safety regulations.

The sources said investigation director Ben Hayes told the NRC and a group of congressional committee staff members on Friday that White had misled the NRC, the paper reported.

Mexico's PRI Chooses Presidential Candidate

By DANA FIELDS
Associated Press Writer
MEXICO CITY (AP) — The governing party designated Budget and Planning Secretary Carlos Salinas de Gortari as its presidential candidate, virtually ensuring he will lead Mexico into the 1990s.

Proclaiming himself part of a new generation "that is modernizing Mexico," Salinas de Gortari on Sunday accepted the nomination for the 1988 election.

The appointment ended a suspenseful process of selection in this country, where the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) has won every presidential election since its founding in 1929.

The choice of Salinas de Gortari, who holds a doctorate in economics from Harvard, was a closely guarded secret until the last minute.

By tradition, the outgoing president handpicks the party's presidential nominee.

The 39-year-old economist is a close adviser to President Miguel de la Madrid and considered the architect of Mexico's economic policy.

Salinas de Gortari is regarded as a "continuity candidate," faithful to de la Madrid's efforts to reform an economy mired in foreign and internal debt and inflation above 100 percent.

"You will be the president of the republic," PRI Chairman Jorge de la Vega told Salinas de Gortari in a meeting Sunday before the candidate was presented to tens of thousands of cheering party faithful.

Salinas de Gortari will be formally nominated during the Nov. 7-8 convention of the PRI, which claims 14 million members. He is expected to campaign strenuously before the election next July 4 to the single, six-year term allowed by Mexico's Constitution.

Short, slim and balding, the athletic Salinas de Gortari was the youngest of six Cabinet members named earlier by the PRI as leading candidates for the party's nomination.

In a brief address to the giant rally outside PRI headquarters, Salinas de Gortari spoke of how he would govern when the next administration begins Dec. 1, 1988.

"I belong to a new generation, that of national renovation, the one that is modernizing Mexico," he said. "We have learned from our history. We have lived through, along with President de la Madrid, one of the greatest stages of our contemporary life both for the difficulties faced and for the realizations achieved."

He warned against "the easy promise," adding:

"Our world is changing with profound speed. Internal challenges and international circumstances, sometimes adverse and sometimes favorable, necessitate the modernization of the country."

He called for "the new Mexican economy: stronger abroad; with better capacity for savings, investment and job creation; with stable prices."

Salinas de Gortari has helped devise programs to sell off or liquidate unprofitable state-supported industries, promote non-petroleum exports and reduce government subsidies for basic foods and goods, a chief cause of the domestic debt.

That record has pleased many in private industry. In the northern city of Monterrey, a leading industrial center, the chairman of the Nuevo Leon state Chamber of Industry applauded the selection.

"He created the current administration's economic policy. The route he took with the economy is the right one," Fernando Sada said Sunday.

In the hours after the announcement there was a traditional outpouring of statements of support for the candidate.

Most of Mexico's 31 governors, the leaders of nearly all main industrial, professional and business groups, senators and deputies, mayors and small-town PRI bosses had issued statements by Sunday night.

The unanimity is a reflection of the PRI's top-to-bottom control of the government and its affiliation with three huge organizations representing labor, peasants and professionals.

But 87-year-old labor boss Fidel Velazquez, head of the 4-million-member Mexican Labor Federation, withheld full endorsement. In an unusual move, he left the podium before the PRI rally ended.

CARPET "UGLIED OUT"?

Most carpet doesn't wear out—it "uglies out"! That's right. Its appearance becomes so bad that you can't stand to look at it anymore (or for your friends and neighbors to), so you drop by your local carpet store to see if you can afford to replace it.

Nothing lasts forever, despite manufacturer's claims. Even miracle fibers wear out. The question is, however, "Did my carpet really wear out, or did it simply 'ugly out'?" Now, exactly what is meant by the term "ugly out"?

I'm referring to entry and traffic areas which are dull, flat and matted—literally ground up by fine, abrasive particles of soil, which aren't removed by vacuuming. Then, there are spots and stains which possibly could have been removed if treated at the outset, but now are permanently set so that nothing short of dynamite will move them.

Is there a solution? You bet! I've seen carpet in businesses exposed to 100 times more traffic than yours which lasted 15 years or more without "uglying out". The solution then is threefold: first, forget the idea of buying quality carpet for $5.99 a yard. The ads suggesting this are used to get you in the store where your ultimate choice will cost twice that or more. Second, treat spots rapidly to prevent permanent staining. Periodic application of a quality carpet protector helps here.

Third, and most important, realize that carpet must be maintained. Gone are the days when you were found scrubbing and mopping hard floors where soil build-up was vividly apparent. Carpet absorbs the same amount. It's just not as noticeable, but it's every bit as destructive!

Today, professional cleaners offer "Carefree Carpet Cleaning", which solves the spot and spill problem...solves the problem of unsightly entry and traffic areas...solves the embarrassment of carpet which has "uglied out" before it's time. For a small monthly fee (like payments to the exterminator or to cable TV), you can have year-round appearance protection, while doubling your carpet's life. Interesting? Give us a call for more information.

Reagan Continues To Battle For Bork

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, rebuffing suggestions that he withdraw the Supreme Court nomination of Robert H. Bork, is embarking on a string of events designed to highlight support for the embattled jurist.

The president and his aides are looking beyond Tuesday's vote on the nomination in the Senate Judiciary Committee and are concentrating instead on winning the nomination on the Senate floor.

Reagan, returning to Washington on Sunday on the eve of today's new Supreme Court session, said "no" when reporters asked if he thought his nomination of the conservative appeals court judge was dead.

Asked whether he was considering withdrawing Bork's name from Senate consideration, Reagan said: "I'm going to continue with his nomination."

Washington attorney Leonard Garment, a friend of Bork, called The New York Times on Sunday to say he was "authorized by Judge Bork to say that he will not ask the president to withdraw his name prior to the full Senate vote on his nomination," the newspaper reported today.

Reporters at the White House also asked Reagan a question dealing with his policies involving the Nicaraguan civil war.

"I'm fighting another war," Reagan quipped, adding, "Bork."

Asked about the president's remarks, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the White House had scheduled a string of "activities" for Reagan to keep the nomination battle moving.

"Every day we'll be doing different things," Fitzwater said, but he refused to be specific.

The spokesman said Reagan had not called any senators over the weekend, but planned to make contact with some this week.

"We're going to fight all the way to the end," Fitzwater said.

Fitzwater pointed to comments by Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, who said Reagan intends to press for a vote on Bork by the entire Senate even if the Judiciary Committee fails to recommend the nominee on Tuesday.

Hatch, interviewed on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," said the president will not withdraw Bork's name even if an overwhelming number of senators say they plan to vote against him.

"The president has authorized me to say on this program this morning that he's going to press through to conclusion, to a vote on the Senate floor," Hatch said.

The split among senators who have declared how they will vote on Bork's nomination narrowed slightly Sunday to 32-28 as Sen. Thomas A. Daschle, D-S.D., announced he would vote against the nomination.

Daschle, in remarks prepared for delivery on the Senate floor Tuesday, said Bork was philosophically unacceptable to serve on the court. The remarks were released Sunday by his office in Sioux Falls, S.D.

However, 40 senators have not yet declared either way, according to a poll by The Associated Press.

Hatch, a member of the Judiciary Committee, said he believed the full floor vote could come in two weeks and that Reagan ultimately will succeed in getting Bork on the high court.

"We have to follow through, win or lose, and I think we will win in the end," Hatch said. "I think the Amer-

Congressional Agenda Includes Farm Bailout, Taxes, Bork Bid

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House decides this week whether to offer a $2.5 billion bailout to the Farm Credit System, while congressional committees focus on taxes and President Reagan's Supreme Court nomination of Robert H. Bork.

The Farm Credit System, a nationwide borrower-owned network of agricultural lenders, has lost $4.8 billion over the past two years because of hard times in rural America.

Congress is working on a legislative package of remedies for the ailing system which would streamline the 37-bank system, call for more restructuring of problem loans and allow it to pool its loans for resale to investors in a secondary market similar to those that already exist for mortgage loans.

When the bill comes before the House for action on Tuesday, House Agriculture Committee Chairman Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, plans to ask that it also include a direct $2.5 billion federal infusion to aid the most troubled regional banks.

The request is well below the $6 billion the system has sought, and would be offset by the sale of some federal rural development loans.

The secondary market for farm loans has become a controversial item in the bill, with opponents, including Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, arguing that it would only amount to another subsidy for oversubsidized farmers and would in the end damage, rather than help, the lending system.

But in the weekly Democratic radio address Saturday, freshman Rep. David Nagle, D-Iowa, argued that the secondary market would bring lower interest rates to producers struggling to recover from a long economic downturn.

Because the system is one of the nation's largest banks, "we cannot afford to let it fail," Nagle said.

Also on Tuesday, the House Ways and Means oversight subcommittee will hold a hearing on whether religious organizations are complying with the law that grants them an exemption from federal income taxes.

Several well-known television evangelists have agreed to testify, including Jerry Falwell, John Ankerberg and Oral Roberts. Jim Bakker, the PTL founder who was defrocked by his denomination after disclosure of his sexual encounter with a church secretary, declined to testify.

Senate and House tax-writers, meanwhile, will begin work on a bill that would raise about $12 billion in taxes during the budget year that began Oct. 1, although Reagan has said repeatedly he will not accept any deficit-cutting plan that includes higher taxes.

Greenspan said Sunday he would prefer that U.S. officials not resort to a tax increase to stem the growing federal deficit, but admitted that such a tack may be necessary.

"I would very much dislike to see us go in that direction — the tax side," Greenspan said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley."

"But I do recognize that ultimately, if we don't get this resolved, somewhere down the line that may be necessary. And I think that would be very regrettable," he said.

The federal budget deficit stands at $157 billion for 1987, according to the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office. In 1986, the deficit hit $220.7 billion, up from the previous year's total of $211.9 billion.

The House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee are concentrating on packages of several minor tax changes, none of which would represent a watering down of the big tax overhaul enacted last year. The final package is likely to include retaining the 3 percent tax on telephone service, which is due to expire this year.

Cuomo: No Skeletons

NEW YORK (AP) — Gov. Mario Cuomo denies that his decision against running for president was based on fears that the glare of publicity would uncover past misdeeds, but said he'll never be president.

"I have run in New York state for governor twice," he said Sunday in an interview on the CBS News program "Face the Nation." "They throw everything at you in this place, especially if you're an Italian-American ... I don't believe there is (a skeleton) or you would have known about it."

He emphatically denied any wrongdoing in his or his family's past, but said: "I'll never be president."

"I have no great desire to prove that I could get to the top of the heap," he added. "I won't get a chance because the Democrats are going to be in place for eight years and by then I will be a vague whisper of a footnote in the book of New York state life."

Asked why people doubt him when he says he isn't running, Cuomo replied, "Maybe you're all cynical."

British Store Undergoing Restoration

By COTTEN TIMBERLAKE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Some first-time visitors to Harrods find the department store disappointingly dowdy, even shabby in some places, considering its reputation as a merchandising giant.

But they may get a different impression in the near future.

The most famous store in the world has decided to try to become the most beautiful one, too.

The 138-year-old store's new owner, Egyptian entrepreneur Mohamed Al-Fayed, has embarked on a 3½-year restoration of Harrods to its former glory. The project is expected to cost about 200 million pounds, the equivalent of about $320 million.

Using new drawings and old photographs from the store's archives, a staff of more than 1,000 interior designers, skilled craftsmen from all over the world and laborers began working this summer to recreate the decor of 1912-1915.

The result will be a rich and decadent combination of Edwardian art deco, plus some earlier Victorian flourishes.

This is the first time in 50 years that any major work has been done on Harrods.

"Harrods is a place steeped in tradition. If you grow up as I did in the shadow of lasting monuments like the pyramids, you constantly see the glory of old civilizations," Al-Fayed said.

"Harrods is not just a money-making venture for me but a place that I can ensure is a lasting monument to British heritage — simply the most beautiful store in the world," he said.

Today's haphazard decor of plastic moldings, spotlights and wallpaper is to be replaced with intricate wrought iron, handwoven Danish carpets, freshly molded ceilings, brass fittings, bronze statues and marbled surfaces.

A fountain is being built in one of the Victorian food halls, which feature colorful hand-painted tiles. The hall will get chandeliers that look like vines with handpainted lemons and bunches of grapes.

On the more mundane side, Al-Fayed also wants to "bring it back to the 20th century" by upgrading air conditioning, other machinery and wiring.

"Everything had been neglected for the last 30 years. It had been a cash cow for management to make profit and it didn't put anything back in it," Al-Fayed said.

The structural refurbishing and rewiring of the five-story building will cost about $165 million.

Much of the 20 acres of selling space in the 110 rooms will be recarpeted at a cost of $10.4 million.

New fittings and decorations will cost about $116 million. The new marble alone will cost $14 million.

Workers on the ground floor found a treasure trove of hidden fittings dating to the turn of the century: green marble columns, entire marble walls and high-vaulted ceilings. These things had been mirrored or plastered over or otherwise sealed off.

Demolishing walls in a food hall, workers found elaborate ironwork balustrades on a winding mahogany staircase.

In the basement is an entire financial services department, which Al-Fayed has ordered restored.

During shopping hours, the work goes on as quietly as possible behind screens. When the store is closed, the workers' number swells and work accelerates.

The leather goods department has been completed. It is a calm and elegant room.

The overhaul will not alter the exterior of the store.

Al-Fayed and his two brothers bought Harrods, and its parent company, House of Fraser PLC, for about $984 million in March 1985 following a bitter and protracted takeover battle against Roland "Tiny" Rowland, chief executive of British conglomerate Lorrho PLC. House of Fraser operates more than 100 stores.

"It's something I am proud to own," Al-Fayed said. "You don't only do business for profit. You always do it with affection and contribution."

Rowland has claimed that the brothers failed to disclose that the bid was partly financed by the Sultan of Brunei. Al-Fayed has repeatedly denied the allegation.

The British government in April said it would investigate the events surrounding the takeover. Both sides said they welcomed the move.

Harrods was founded by merchant Charles Harrod in 1849 at its present site in the upscale Knightsbridge neighborhood and it grew to its present size in the early 1900s.

It survived a huge fire in 1883 and an Irish Republican Army bombing in 1974. In 1983, an IRA car bomb outside the store killed six people and injured 94.

That tragedy hasn't dimmed enthusiasm for shopping at Harrods.

"It's something like a mecca; when you come to London you go to Harrods," Al-Fayed said.

Foreign shoppers speak a babel of tongues in the store, but British royals, too, shop at Harrods, which dispatches a messenger to hand-deliver items to the royal households.

The store, which has 4,000 employees, is famous for its services. It's been known to fly a hamper of kippers, a type of fish, to Texas and croissants to Borneo.

Also famous are its doormen, who wear uniforms of sage green, Harrods' trademark color.

The store, which counts about 50,000 shoppers a day, this year took in $11 million on the first day of its January sales, a major merchandising event.

The private retailer doesn't disclose its financial results, but Al-Fayed said he expects revenue to jump to $720 million this year from $560 million in 1986.

Harrods generates more than half the profit of the House of Fraser, he said.

The refurbishment of Harrods isn't the first time Al-Fayed has embarked on a major restoration. He overhauled the Ritz Hotel in Paris for $160 million over the last eight years.

In addition, Al-Fayed is restoring the late Duchess of Windsor's home in Paris. He bought $5 million worth of belongings of the Duchess and her late husband, the Duke of Windsor, and plans to exhibit them at Harrods.

Lupus Victim Needs Information

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My doctor just told me that I have systemic lupus erythematosus. What do you know about this disease?

I am a 29-year-old school teacher, divorced, and have a 5-year-old daughter who stays with my mother most of the time. I feel so tired I can hardly keep up with my job. My problem developed shortly after my daughter was born. I developed a kidney infection and was never able to get my strength back.

I am taking some medicine that makes me retain fluid and have gained a lot of weight. My face looks like a pumpkin, and the dizziness, diarrhea, headaches and the swelling of my hands and knees have driven me close to the edge.

My doctor says that lupus is a rare, mysterious disease with no cure in sight. What I need most is someone to talk to. Can you help me? — LADY WITH LUPUS

DEAR LADY: Contact the Lupus Foundation of America. Through its literature I have learned that there are about 500,000 known lupus victims in the United States, and probably twice that number who don't even know they have it. Most victims are women in their 20s and 30s.

Lupus has been misdiagnosed, misunderstood and ignored for years. It's especially frustrating because most lupus sufferers "look" so well between episodes that no one can believe that their energy level is so low they can hardly breathe or drag themselves out of bed.

It's enormously comforting to know that you are not alone. I urge you, and other interested parties — including doctors and others in the health care field — to write to the Lupus Foundation of America Inc., 1717 Massachusetts Ave. N.W., Suite 203, Washington, D.C. 20036.

You will be sent up-to-date information on the foundation's treatment and research findings, as well as a list of nearly 200 support groups throughout the United States and Puerto Rico, and 45 affiliated groups throughout the world. This is a non-profit health organization, so please enclose a dollar for its material and a long, self-addressed, stamped (39 cents) envelope.

DEAR ABBY: "Zack" and I have been living together for over six years and are now planning a simple wedding by the local justice of the peace. Just the two of us and the attendants will be present.

The trouble is I would like to send out announcements of our marriage after we are married, but do not want it to look like I'm "hinting" for a wedding gift.

Is there a tactful way to accomplish this? Please help me out, Abby. My marriage awaits your response — I've already waited so long. — BEWILDERED BRIDE-TO-BE

DEAR BEWILDERED: Since you've waited this long, wait a few more months and send Christmas cards from "Mr. and Mrs. So-and-so." You can add a personal note to family and special friends. That way you'll get your message across without giving the impression that you're hinting for a gift.

DEAR ABBY: Please settle a long-standing debate between me and a co-worker: What is the proper way for a gentleman to wear an identification bracelet? Should the name on the bracelet be readable by the wearer of the bracelet or the onlooker? — CONFUSED IN MILLBURN, N.J.

DEAR CONFUSED: I do not know whether there is a "wrong" or "right" way to wear an ID bracelet, but common sense tells me that it should be worn so that "onlookers" can read it. The wearer knows his name.

Jittery Residents Flee

"All the lights went out. It felt like the sky was falling. I thought the whole house was coming down," said Marta Jimenez of suburban Montebello. She and her husband moved a mattress and cushions onto their lawn and set up camp, listening to a portable radio. Many neighbors did the same. "You never know when there will be another one," said Dora Nunes. Craig Mathew of Thousand Oaks in Ventura County was roused from sleep when it hit. "I felt one jolt at the beginning, then a steady rock-and-rolling, like last time," he recalled. "I said, 'Here we go again.'" South Californians should expect even more aftershocks, possibly for weeks, said Don Kelly of the U.S. Geological Survey in Washington, D.C. "Although aftershocks follow no precise pattern, such tremors are a common occurrence after a sizable earthquake. They are caused by strain, instabilities introduced into the earth by the main shock," Kelly said. The Whittier area again bore the brunt of destruction during the 10-second jolt. Authorities declared 200 buildings there unsafe Sunday, said Los Angeles County Fire Department inspector Chuck Gutierrez. Most could be condemned this week. "I thought it was over with after Thursday," said Jeff Langan, surveying the collapsed ceiling of his Whittier paint store. "This morning it really shook us up, even though it was only an aftershock it felt as bad as some earthquakes." Two elderly men suffered heart attacks after Sunday's jolt and a pregnant woman almost miscarried, said Red Cross spokeswoman Barbara Haller. She said some Whittier residents are so frightened, that some have even sought shelter in tents on a baseball field rather than in two buildings, where about 300 people were spending Sunday night. County psychologist Patrick O'Connor said six counselors are on duty around-the-clock at the shelters and hundreds of people have told of their fright. The aftershock "just adds to the burden. It retraumatizes them," he said. "The first one, you kind of just get through it, and you're glad you survived it. And then that second one comes, and it activates a lot of that stuff you didn't deal with then." The Red Cross was placing five service centers and a mobile center in operation today to help people get over anxieties about the quakes. Steve Ortega, 40, and his wife, Cheryl, 43, are typical of quake survivors. The couple, who fled their damaged two-story apartment, sat stunned at a Red Cross shelter in Whittier. Facing her husband, Mrs. Ortega had tears in her eyes as she slowly shook her head in contemplation of their situation. "Even if it's OK, I just don't know how we'll feel about going back there," Ortega said. "I don't know if we feel emotionally well enough to go back."

It's as inevitable as taxes, but don't ask your CPA about it.

The two inevitabilities. When it comes to questions about taxes most people don't hesitate to make plans and arrangements with their accountant. But when it comes to the other inevitability, it's amazing how few people make any arrangements at all.

And that's a mystery, considering the benefits to family and friends that funeral prearrangement offers. It makes things simple. It offers peace of mind. Reassurance to loved ones. And it takes very little time.

So if you're tax planning, ask your CPA or tax lawyer. The other inevitability? Ask us.

Tigers Top Toronto For Title

DETROIT (AP) — It was a lesson in pressure baseball and only the Detroit Tigers could pass the test.

And it was fitting that two players who have won battles to save their careers — the greatest pressure of all — should lead the way as the Tigers won their second American League East title in four years.

But it took the full 162 games. The Tigers, on Larry Herndon's ninth home run and Frank Tanana's six-hitter, beat the backsliding Toronto Blue Jays 1-0 Sunday on only three hits.

The Tigers, who haven't had a day off in almost three weeks, planned to rest today, then fly to Minneapolis on Tuesday. They open the AL Playoffs against the Twins in the Metrodome on Wednesday night.

Herndon, playing on aching knees that likely will require offseason surgery, took a pay cut to remain with the Tigers this season. Tanana became a real pitcher after repairing both his arm and his fast-lane lifestyle.

"If you look at this series here, nobody hit the ball," Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson said. "I don't think people understand the pressure.

"What did we get? We got one fly ball. So, we got lucky."

The fly ball was Herndon's second-inning shot that just barely got over the fence in left field.

"I didn't really think the ball was out," said Herndon, whose solo home run won Game 1 of the 1984 World Series in San Diego. "It was an inside pitch. I saw George Bell go back and heard the crowd's reaction. But I didn't see George throw it back in, so I figured it went out."

The Tigers and Blue Jays played seven times in the last 11 days of the season. The Blue Jays won the first three, in Toronto last weekend, to take a 3½-game lead over Detroit.

They were three outs from a sweep in the fourth game until Kirk Gibson's home run in the ninth gave Detroit new life. The Tigers won that game in the 13th and the Blue Jays didn't win another game the remainder of the season.

But it would be wrong to simply say the Blue Jays collapsed.

The Blue Jays lost three games to the Milwaukee Brewers who are, perhaps, the best team in the AL East right now.

"You can't say they let seven games get away," Tigers designated hitter Bill Madlock said. "Milwaukee right now is awfully tough. It ain't no sin to lose to the Brewers.

"And we beat them. They didn't let us. Whatever it takes, we go out and do it. You can't pick when you'll go in a slump. We did a good job. We didn't score many runs, but our pitching and defense was the key."

Then came the showdown in Motown. Detroit won all three. But, all seven games between the contenders was settled by one run.

"There was a lot of intensity in this whole seven-game series," Toronto's Lloyd Moseby said. "They took advantage of the breaks they got."

"Remember, Detroit is a great ballclub with good players."

The pitching throughout the series was especially good.

Tanana, 15-10, allowed just six hits. Using a mixture of sliders, sinkers and the occasional well-placed fastball, Tanana struck out nine in turning in only his fifth complete game.

"I don't go nine innings often," Tanana said. "But, I was pitching well. It was just a matter of going after them. I was just taking them one at a time."

"This is great. It's a wonderful moment."

Toronto's Jimmy Key, 17-8, thwarted in his attempt to match the club record for victories, was every bit as tough as Tanana. Key, who is 0-2 against the Tigers this season and 0-3 in his career at Tiger Stadium, allowed three hits, walking one and striking out three.

"It's tough to put in perspective what has happened," Toronto's Rance Mulliniks said. "I mean, all those one-run games. The Tigers deserve all the credit. They showed a lot of character and class."

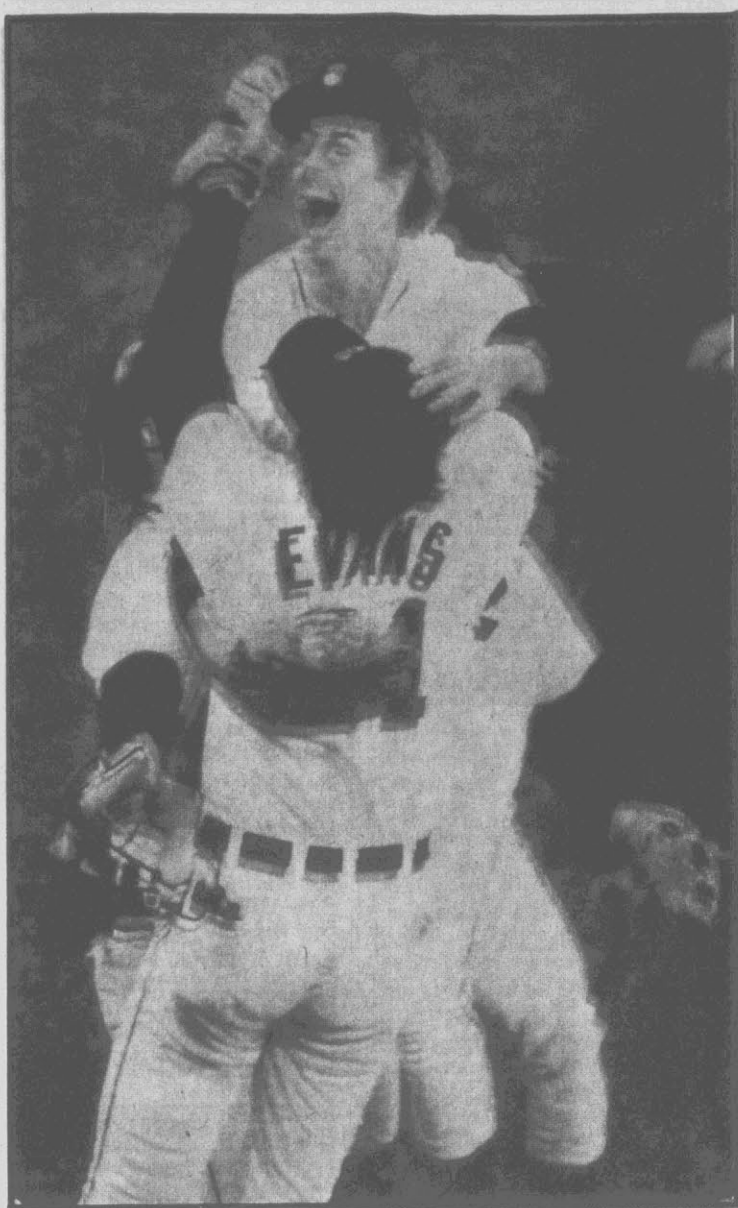

"They won the 13-inning game in Toronto. It was a key game. If we had won, it might have been the end of the Tigers. They were the better ballclub. I'll go home and watch and root for the Tigers on television."

"We've got a chance to find out if we're the best team in baseball," Detroit's Kirk Gibson said. "It's not been easy. From this point on, it won't be any easier."

"We've had our backs against the wall all season. If that happens again, maybe this will help us."

It was the Tigers 11th first-place finish and third AL East championship, their second under Anderson who led them to the World Series title in 1984.

"This is so much sweeter," Herndon said in the champagne-splashed clubhouse. "We had to work from the beginning all the way to the end here."

Sunday, several people asked what we would write in today's column. Frankly, we were at a loss to say at the time. One, a solid East Carolina fan, even suggested we print "No comment," and leave the rest blank.

Well, we won't go quite that far.

However, the thought persists that East Carolina is not using its talent to its best advantage. The run-and-shoot offense is a great offense, but it takes great players to execute it properly. A team must have a solid passing quarterback as well as a good option game.

East Carolina has not proven that it has this. Sure, the Pirates moved the ball well from 20 to 20 against West Virginia. But they never got the ball into the end zone.

A team that that throws the ball fairly well can move the ball well in the open field. But it must score on some of those long plays when the defense is spread out. Otherwise, when it reaches the 20 and deeper, the field the defense has to cover shortens considerably.

Teams must then be able to execute the run, the pass and the option equally well at these times if they are to score.

Saturday, the Pirates were unable to do this.

Certainly, the game had snowballing effect — once West Virginia started piling it on, the Pirate spirits flagged and things got even worse.

To have a chance at an elusive third victory this season, East Carolina must snap back mentally and quickly, too. The upcoming schedule leaves little breathing room now.

Cincinnati had an open date to prepare for this week's game. Virginia Tech had little trouble with Navy but goes up against a buzzsaw this week in South Carolina, which nearly upset Nebraska. Then, the Pirates face South Carolina, followed by Miami, Fla. Then a strong Temple team comes in followed by a road game against Southern Mississippi, which scored 65 points against Howard Schnellenburger's Louisville team Saturday.

While the Pirates may be struggling, they are still making progress in some ways. Fullback Anthony Simpson is now just 65 yards shy of reaching 10th place in the all-time career rushing statistics. Tenth is currently held by Tom Michel, who rushed for 1,788 yards. Ironically, his son, Billy, is one of those helping to open holes for Simpson as a Pirate lineman.

Quarterback Travis Hunter needs 33 more yards passing to tie Bill Bailey for 10th. Bailey passed for 929 yards. He's also just 50 short of ninth place George Richardson, who had 946. Hunter and Charlie Libretto, with 75 completions each, are tied with Mike Weaver for ninth place, and just one behind Richardson and Ron Jones, tied for seventh with 76.

Speaking of Miami, those folks who stayed at home Saturday to watch the battle for Florida saw one heck of a football game. Miami, seemingly out of the game late in the third period, put together a remarkable comeback to gain the lead over the Seminoles in the final two minutes of the game, 26-19.

Florida State's Danny McManus, who played in Ficklen just a few weeks ago, then guided the Seminoles back for a touchdown in the final minute of the game.

Then, FSU Coach Bobby Bowden did a gutsy thing — he called for the two-point try. It was win or lose — but no sister-kissing. Later, he said it was because his kicker had missed on several tries already, but nevertheless, one has to respect and give credit to a man who is willing to gamble what may have been a chance at the national championship on winning or losing.

The try failed and Miami got the win and the foothold on a try for the title. We applaud Miami's comeback AND Bowden's decision to go for broke.

Rose High School took control of the Big East Conference race Friday with its stunning victory over Rocky Mount. The Gryphons dominated the first half of the game, but Rose came back in the final quarter to take control and win it.

Conditioning may have been a great factor. The Rampants were able to take the ball twice in the final period and mount long drives for scores. Prior to that, Rocky Mount had dominated the line and held Rose virtually in check except for Timmy Moore's long TD run in the first half.

Not that the Rampants have a walk in for the championship. They must avoid falling asleep against Beddingfield. Kinston showed some surprising strength this weekend in beating Fike. The Demons, too, are the next opponent after that and are always very dangerous at home.

Then, Rose will take on Wilson Hunt, a team that has dominated the Rampants in recent years. The Warriors are unbeaten now and tied with Rose for first place. It could well be that the tie will still be in place when they meet.

Finally, Rose must travel to Northeastern for the closing game of the regular season. Again, this is a dangerous place to visit. Northeastern, despite its record, could play spoiler.

If the Rampants keep mentally up, however, they may sail into the playoffs as an unbeaten. Should Rose be top-seeded, the Rampants will be home the first two weeks of the playoffs, take to the road in week three, then return home for the Eastern finals — should they survive that long. The 4-A finals apparently will not be in Kenan Stadium this year, but at the western champ's home field.

Sub Games Resemble Exhibitions

NEW YORK (AP) — Strike football turned out to be just about what it was supposed to be — the second half of any season's first exhibition game.

The first week of replacement games in the NFL strike Sunday was Gary Hogeboom outclassing the Buffalo B-team; heroics from faceless players like Anthony Allen and Kevin Sweeney; fumbles, flubs, empty seats; and scores that would be outrageous if the varsities were playing.

Can anyone, for example, envision Houston beating Denver 40-10 at Mile High Stadium?

Or Green Bay beating Minnesota at the Metrodome with New Orleans stockbroker Alan Risher, who hasn't played since 1985, outquarterbacking 37-year-old Tony Adams, who last played in the Canadian Football League six years ago?

Or Bruce Mathison, a career backup who joined the Seattle Seahawks three days ago after being out of football for two years, passing for 326 yards in Seattle's 24-20 victory over Miami?

"It was the strangest feeling I've had on a football field," said quarterback Danny White of the Cowboys, who sat out while Sweeney threw three touchdown passes in Dallas' 38-24 victory over the New York Jets. "I compare it to being traded. My first goal was to learn all the names. It was strange on the plane trip up here, looking around and not knowing too many guys."

"We've just witnessed a bit of history, I suppose," Cincinnati Coach Sam Wyche said after the Bengals, with a passing attack that managed minus-13 yards, lost 10-9 to San Diego in a game marked by fumbles on three of the first eight plays.

Actually, there weren't that many witnesses.

The league that normally plays to more than 95 percent of capacity, did just 26.2 percent this time, including "crowds" of 4,074 in the Pontiac Silverdome and 4,919 in Philadelphia, where 1,500 pickets closed all but one entrance to Veterans Stadium. Those were the sites of the most trouble — eggs were thrown and cars bashed in Philadelphia and seven people were arrested in Pontiac for failing to obey the directions of police directing traffic.

There were 9,860 in Buffalo's 80,000-seat Rich Stadium, 10,708 at the 92,516-seat Los Angeles Coliseum and 12,370 at 76,891-capacity Giants Stadium to watch the Jets lose to Dallas.

Seattle, Minnesota, New England and New Orleans had their smallest-ever crowds, Buffalo had its second-lowest and there were just 27,728 in Washington's RFK Stadium, the first time in 160 games over 21 years that the Redskins didn't sell out.

The reaction to that was predictable.

"After what I saw on TV today, I felt bad my players are on strike," said Gene Upshaw, the executive director of the NFL Players Association. "They're being cheated and the fans are being cheated."

"The number of fans is incidental," said Tex Schramm of the Dallas Cowboys, a member of the Management Council Executive Committee. "The main objective of the league was to play the games and we played all the games. If you looked at the scores, it looks like a typical NFL weekend. It was very successful."

Some notes on Week One of Strike Football:

— There were 76 fumbles in the 12 games and 183 penalties, 26 of them alone in the Cowboys' victory over the Jets. New England's Tony Collins, a regular starter who crossed the picket line last week, fumbled three times on his team's first series, one of them nullified by a penalty.

— Two of the NFL's four unbeaten teams, the New York Jets at home to Dallas and Minnesota at home to Green Bay — lost in games their regulars would have been favored to win. But the Bears' irregulars looked pretty much like the regulars, registering 11 sacks in a 35-3 romp over Philadelphia that improved them to 3-0 and the Raiders remained unbeaten with a 35-17 victory over Kansas City.

— Hogeboom, the Colts' regular quarterback, tied a 22-year-old team record with five touchdown passes in Indianapolis' 47-6 rout of Buffalo and played just one minute of the second

West Virginia Loss Leaves A Big Scar

By TOM MORRIS

Reflector Sports Writer

MORGANTOWN, W. Va. — The memory of a 49-0 thrashing at the hands of West Virginia left an immediate and painful memory for East Carolina coach Art Baker.

While the Pirates have been on the losing end of some lopsided scores in the last few years, this one was different.

Losing 42-17 to national champion Penn State and 45-0 to top 10 finisher Auburn in 1986 is somewhat easier to swallow than losing to a West Virginia team that was 1-3 coming in to the game.

"I don't ever want to see another football game like this one," Baker said following the game. "I was embarrassed. Our players were embarrassed. Our coaches were embarrassed (in) the way we executed and played. We're not that bad but we're going to have to prove it."

Granted, the Mountaineers are a talented team. But they are not top-20 caliber. Yet they put a pounding on the Pirates that few of the more powerful schools that ECU plays, such as Miami or Florida State, have.

Following the game, Baker was asked if it was the biggest loss he has suffered through.

"I don't know," he said. "But right now it's the one with the most lasting memory for me. It's certainly the worst one since I've been at East Carolina and we've played some pretty good football teams."

What makes the outcome even more perplexing is that the two teams were virtually the same two teams as last season, when the Mountaineers squeezed out a 24-21 win in the final seconds.

"They were much better prepared than we were," Baker said. "We played basically the same football team last year and we played well and I had the feeling all through the first half that we could do the same thing if we just executed."

But it was the Pirates who were executed, beaten, pounded and crushed.

Player Reps, Upshaw To Meet

WASHINGTON (AP) — NFL Players Association head Gene Upshaw will meet with the union's 28 player representatives in Chicago tonight to discuss, among other things, a possible change in the union's bargaining position.

Upshaw said he will leave it up to the team leaders to decide whether the union should change its stand, particularly on the key issue of free agency.

"Gene Upshaw has never represented his view, but represented the players," he said Sunday in a telephone interview. "If the players change their mind, it's Gene Upshaw's job to change his mind."

The meeting comes in the wake of reports that several teams were getting ready to end the two-week strike by reporting en masse and that the union was prepared to take free agency off the table.

"We'll get those guys in there and see where they are now," Upshaw said. "We will look at what player reps are saying. The majority will rule... we have to do what's good for all of us."

Upshaw and Bears player representative Mike Singletary denied reports of mass defections.

"The Bears aren't coming back without a contract," Singletary said.

"The media is portraying the union as being desperate," Upshaw said. "The guys want to play football, but we have to have an agreement. The players play a game that starts at one o'clock and ends at four and then they go home. With negotiations, it's tougher than that and the players get frustrated at the process."

George Martin was one of those frustrated players. The New York Giants' player rep, who is also a member of the union's executive committee, said Sunday the Super Bowl champions "will walk in if that's what we see other teams doing." Said Upshaw: "If one team goes back, yes, it could start a domino effect. But I don't see that happening. Sure we've had some defections, but whatever we do we'll do together."

Upshaw said he would be willing to accept responsibility for the lengthy strike, but insisted that he was merely following orders.

"If you need to have someone to blame it on, I have broad enough shoulders to handle it," he said. "But it's not Gene Upshaw's issues that are stopping us from getting an agreement. I wasn't sitting around one day and all of a sudden decided to make free agency the issue."

Tonight the players will decide what the issues really are. Singletary said the player reps could change their position, particularly on free agency, which has thus far kept the two sides from the negotiating table since Sept. 25, three days after the strike started. The owners have said they see no point in resuming talks unless the union drops its demand for unrestricted free agency.

"I think at this point, the players want to see some movement," Singletary said. "Whether that means taking free agency off the table or not remains to be seen."

Earlier Sunday, defensive end Charles Mann of the Washington Redskins said, "We're giving it (free agency) up. Once we give that up, what we're doing is putting the ball back in the owners' court and see if they are willing to make a move."

Asked if the owners were ready to make concessions, Tampa Bay Buccaneers owner Hugh Culverhouse, chairman of the Management Council's executive committee said: "If Gene needs something for dignity, we'll give it to him. But not free agency."

Dallas Cowboys president Tex Schramm, asked if negotiations would come to a quick conclusion if the union dropped free agency, said, "I think that's just dreaming."

Upshaw also said Sunday he was considering asking Jesse Jackson to mediate the dispute.

Jackson, who is expected to announce he is a presidential candidate this week, approached Management Council head Jack Donlan, Upshaw and NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, saying he wanted to help settle the strike.

"Jesse Jackson is involved in getting both sides talking again," Upshaw said. "In fact, we've already been talking. I don't have any trouble at all having him join the talks."

The union had previously turned down attempts by management to call in a mediator.

The Management Council, in a statement, said: "A number of nationally recognized individuals have called to offer their help. As the Management Council has said, professional mediation would benefit these negotiations."

Sunday, meanwhile, marked the NFL's first strike games, played by teams of replacement players.

In Philadelphia, three dozen trucks, tractor-trailer rigs and vans stopped bumper to bumper on the street next to Veterans Stadium 45 minutes before game time, paralyzing traffic.

In Detroit, at least seven people were arrested and released after getting citations for disrupting traffic.

Pirates Finish Up Strong

By BILL BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

When the San Francisco Giants and St. Louis Cardinals meet in the opener of the National League Championship Series Tuesday night, the Pittsburgh Pirates will be looking ahead to spring training with anticipation.

"We gained some respect this year, but there's still a way to go," Pirates catcher Mike LaValliere said. "Nobody's satisfied with fourth place because we're looking for bigger and better things. But at least we don't have to go into next season with that last-place tag."

The Pirates completed the season with a 4-2 victory over Philadelphia Sunday and three-game sweep of the Phillies that left the teams tied for fourth in the NL East. After a 46-59 start, the Pirates won 34 of their last 57 games to finish out of last place for the first time since 1983.

A crowd of 26,734 at Three Rivers

Stadium for the finale treated its young team like a pennant winner. After the game, the fans stood and applauded as the players came out the dugout, many of them throwing their caps to the fans.

Pittsburgh trailed 2-1 with two outs and nobody on in the eighth, but Mackey Sasser singled and Barry Bonds walked to start the winning rally against Steve Bedrosian, 5-3. Jose Lind then singled home Sasser, and Bonds scored the go-ahead run when right fielder Keith Hughes threw the ball to the backstop.

Giants 5, Braves 4

West Division champion San Francisco hit four homers, including Bob Brenly's game-winner in the 10th inning, to establish a club record for a season.

Will Clark hit two homers to give the Giants a 3-0 lead and Chili Davis added his 24th in the sixth inning, tying the score 4-4.

Mets 11, Cardinals 6

New York finished second in the East with a five-run ninth inning against St. Louis, highlighted by Lee Mazzilli's two-run single and Tim Teufel's two-run double.

Gary Carter and Keith Hernandez homered for the Mets, and Darryl Strawberry added a run-scoring single in the ninth to help the Mets wind up their season series against the first-place Cardinals at 9-9.

Cubs 7, Expos 5

Last-place Chicago knocked Montreal out of a second-place tie in the East as Dave Martinez hit a two-run triple and Rafael Palmeiro and Keith Moreland added solo homers.

Andre Dawson managed only a single in four at-bats as he fell one short of becoming the first major-leaguer since George Foster in 1977 to hit 50 homers.

Reds 2, Astros 1

Cincinnati put a frustrating cap on Nolan Ryan's frustrating season for Houston.

Ryan, 8-16, led the majors in strikeouts with 270 and the NL in earned run average at 2.76. He struck out 10 and walked one in seven innings, allowing two runs in the fifth on an RBI single by Terry Francona and a run-scoring double by Terry McGriff.

Dodgers 5, Padres 3

Steve Sax went 3-for-3 and drove in two runs with a homer and a single, leading Los Angeles over San Diego.

Rookie right-hander Shawn Hillegas, 4-3, went six innings, allowing two runs and five hits, for the victory. Alejandro Pena pitched the ninth for his 11th save.

Evans Wins Kickboxing Match

Greenville's Curtis (Buzzsaw) Evans captured the East Coast bantamweight title in a kickboxing match held Saturday night at the Hilton Inn.

Over 1,000 fans attended the event, which was sanctioned by the Karate International Council of Kickboxing.

Evans, who trains at the Bill McDonald Karate School in Greenville, went the distance against his opponent, David McKinzie of Warner-Robbins, Ga., to win a decision. In the third round of the bout, Evans put McKinzie on the canvas, but was unable to complete the knockout as bell sounded.

Evans already owns the Tri-State and Southeastern 126-pound titles.

In the other two bouts, Charles (Mad Dog) Turner of Warner-Robbins, rallied to score an upset win over Richmond's Greg Gallop for the Southeastern lightweight title and set up a possible meeting with Greenville's Dale (Sunshine) Evans for the U.S. title. Larry Grady of Williamston knocked out Jamie McLinham in the third round of their fight to win the North Carolina cruiserweight title.

In other action, Demetrius (Oaktree) Edwards, a former world heavyweight champ, decided the 1983 Asian Bareknuckle champ Dennis Lang; Gary Landreth decided Mike Britten; David Varner knocked out Richard Miller in the third round; Donnie Walker won by decision over Thomas Brinkman; Doug Langley and John Tolan fought to a draw; and the Joe Grace-Raymond Cross bout was ruled no contest.

Hignite Wins State Tennis Title

RALEIGH — Leonard Hignite of Greenville captured the state titles in both the singles and doubles tennis matches in the Senior Games, held this past weekend in Raleigh.

Hignite, 66, won three singles matches to capture that title, beating his final opponent, 9-7. In the doubles, he teamed with Bill Sizemore of Greensboro to win the doubles championship. They won two matches, including a 6-1, 6-0 victory in the finals.

Pinpointing the turning point is a tough call.

Once again, the Pirates fell behind early and for a team that has trouble even getting in the end zone, being down 14-0 midway through the second quarter can be a death knell.

The Mountaineers got their first score on a long pass play. Major Harris hit Calvin Phillips for a 31-yard touchdown play.

Then, ECU quarterback Travis Hunter was hit as he attempted a pass. The errant throw was picked off by Bo Orlando who returned it 84 yards for the score.

Warm up the bus, the party's over. "Apparently, it looked like we did not really execute from that point on," Baker said.

Soon after that, a fumble by Hunter was recovered by WVU and it led directly to a score that made it 21-0 at the half.

The two miscues overshadowed a solid first half by Hunter. He threw the ball as well as he has all year and not just short passes. He hit Walter Wilson with a 43-yard pass on a first down play on the drive that ended with Orlando's interception.

For the half, Hunter had 112 yards through the air in the first half and 157 for the game. He hit on 11 of 18 throws with the one interception, which are his best totals for the season.

"We tried to throw the ball more today than we have in the past," Baker said. "Apparently we did throw the ball better today. But I think we found out that when we throw the football, if you don't execute in the critical downs, you are still not going to win. We need to take the football in for scores and we weren't able to do that. I have to give credit to their defense."

It would be unfair, however to find fault for the loss at any one position.

"It was a terrible day," Baker said. "I don't remember ever having one quite that bad. That's about as soundly as we've ever been beaten. There wasn't any phase that I'd thought we'd won. There was not a bright spot to come out of it."

Smothers Brothers Act Is Now More Sophisticated, Smoother

By Michael Kernan
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — Dick Smothers is out, but Tommy is there at the hotel, making phone calls to his winery and getting ready to play some golf, and when he is told that his people had scheduled the interview, he drops everything and sits down to talk.

"Dickie doesn't have anything to say anyway," he mutters. We laugh. This is something from the act, for Dick is the one nominally in charge.

Or is it? The comedy of the Smothers Brothers is so intimately homey, so family, so real, that it is hard to tell where it leaves off.

Lately Tommy has been studying the straight man, that eternal victim of the comedy teams, the guy who makes a career out of putting on top hats so the other guy can knock them off.

"The comic is always kind of driven, involved in detail, the timing, the creation of the act," he observes. "But the straight man enjoys life. Plays a lot of golf, gets around, has friends. Dean Martin. Bud Abbott. Oliver Hardy."

And Dick Smothers too, Dick Smothers of the Sebring car races, Dick Smothers the aerobist, the superb skier, the passionate golfer, the lover of great cuisines, the family man.

Tommy Smothers frames a square in the air with his hands. "It's how we are," he says. "Dickie says, well, somebody's got to enjoy the fruits of his labor. He taught me to eat a lot of different foods. How to be spontaneous, how to do what I want to do. Most of the time I am a worrier. I try to keep things in order. Not like the act at all."

Not that one ever really thought Tommy Smothers actually was the character he does onstage, with those broken-up pieces of sentences and that dumb-struck, round-eyed look, the look of a kid who has just recognized his father in the Santa suit.

They are much more sophisticated now than when they created the act at San Francisco's Purple Onion in 1960. They are older: Tommy 50, Dick 48. The act is smoother, more at ease with itself and the audience.

"They're so polite when we start," he says, "they're more — they come in with an attit — they come in — in with reverence. They want us to succeed, and then when they realize we're gonna be — we're totally in control, then they. They relax."

But they are not that far from their stage personas. Tommy really talks that way. People still laugh to hear the brothers arguing in real life.

"Especially Dickie. He's so close to who he is, offstage and onstage. His wife says, 'I don't like you talking to me the way you talk to Tommy.' He'll do that. He'll say, 'That does not make sense.' Or, 'Why do you do this? It's not practical.'"

The act. Always they come back to the act. They split up for four years, made a fair success working separately, acted in a musical comedy together. But their bread and butter is the Smothers Brothers, and they know it.

They open with music, Tommy on guitar, Dick on string bass. Believe it or not, that was how they started at the Purple Onion: a folk song act.

But then, in the middle of something called "Boil the Cabbage Down, Boys," Dick ends a verse and calls out, "Take it!" and looks expectantly at his brother.

Tommy does nothing. Dick lectures him. In black and white the dialogue isn't really funny at all. But from this the two create a verbal chaos that leaves audiences weak from laughter.

"You're doing a great job," Dick sneers.

"Thank you very much," Tommy chirps.

"That was not a compliment."

"You said —"

And so on.

In the midst of a sweet Spanish song Tommy suddenly bursts into German. Dick stops cold and stares at him. Tommy continues, innocent as a puppy who has made a nuisance, singing along in Spanish, humming, breaking into "Wagon Wheels."

Dick stares at him.

Tommy mutters in Spanish, makes clippity-cloppity horse sounds, gives his brother the most famous sidelong glance in show biz, plinks jauntily at the strings, at last lapses into silence.

At this point Dick could recite the phone book and get a laugh. His line is weak (the dialogue is, as always, improvised), but he quickly tops himself.

"You have a covert plan to wreck this song," says Dick.

"To the best of my recollection ..." Tommy says, and they do a number on deniability, shredding and congressional hearings. In the '60s they were considered controversial because they voiced opinions about the news, which happened to include Vietnam.

In '69 CBS even canceled their TV series. They have always insisted they were not political but were just reflecting the times. The political stuff seems almost out of character now.

In mid-song Tommy shows off his considerable yo-yo skills with a yo-yo "specially designed for him by his psychiatrist." (Actually it was his dentist.) An attack on the classic "John Henry" veers surrealistically into "Dueling Banjos," only Tommy is dueling with the pianist, the talented Michael Preddy of Houston, and at last Preddy kills him with a crashing cadenza from Rachmaninoff.

In the stunned silence that follows, Tommy softly plays again the little tune that started it all. The marvelous thing about his timing is that you are not aware of it.

It goes on from there, the running gags, the non sequiturs, the stares, timeless as Abbott and Costello, spacey as "Waiting for Godot." You laugh, even at the "classic" numbers, which are numbers you've heard before.

There is not much new material in the act, which is put together with help from Mason Williams, their longtime idea man. "I guess our longevity has something to do with the fact that when we started out we were unique. It's probably gotten us a lot more applause than it should. Like the Wright brothers: Their planes didn't get much better after that first one."

In spite of their very different lives and separate ways — Dick has five children, was married for the second time last year; Tommy is single by nature — they are still extremely close. "Probably the most important relationship I have in my life is my brother," Tommy says.

It has been that way since their father died in a Japanese prison camp in the Philippines and they moved to California. Redondo Beach High School, San Jose State College, singing in barbershop quartets and madrigal choirs, entering talent contests.

In 1959 they got a gig at the with-it Purple Onion, home of Mort Sahl and other '60s icons. It was a straight folk-song act.

"I did the introductions, and he'd say, 'Well, that's wrong, that's stupid,'" Tommy muses, and you can see them up there, learning to stretch out the banter, milking the laughs, gradually realizing what their real act was going to be.

to do what I want to do. Most of the time I am a worrier. I try to keep things in order. Not like the act at all."

CONCERT — Entertainer Michael Jackson clinches his fist as he performs Sunday night at Yokohama Stadium in Yokohama, Japan, a port city near Tokyo.

Singer Says Press Hurt Him

NEW YORK (AP) — Reclusive singer Michael Jackson said in a rambling, anquished letter that he has been "bleeding a long time," because of sensational coverage of his life and career, according to a published report.

The handwritten letter, which contained several spelling and grammatical errors, was published in the Oct. 12 issue of People magazine. It said many press reports about the pop singer are inaccurate.

"Most people don't know me, that is why they write such things in wich (sic) most is not true," Jackson wrote. "I cry very often because it hurts and I worry (sic) about my children all over the world, I live for them."

The 29-year-old singer, who has undergone cosmetic surgery at least twice, denies accusations that he uses chemicals to make his skin lighter and takes female hormones to keep his voice high.

"Like the old Indian proverb says do not judge a man until you've walked 2 moons in his Moccasins (sic)," Jackson wrote. He ended the letter with a plea for understanding.

"But have mercy, for I've been bleeding a long time now," he said.

Jackson's fans have paid up to $700 for tickets to sold-out concerts on his recent Japanese tour. His latest album, "Bad," has been on best-seller lists since its August release.

Humana Sues NBC Over Name

By Mark Potts
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

Humana Inc. wishes the creators of "St. Elsewhere" had looked elsewhere when they dreamed up the name of a fictional company to take over the television show's decrepit hospital.

The giant hospital chain has sued NBC-TV, which broadcasts the Emmy-award-winning show, for copyright infringement, trying to stop the network from using the name "Ecumena" for the company said to have bought St. Eligius hospital.

"We're not trying to stop the program, but we just feel the use of Ecumena is an infringement on the Humana trademark. ... It just simply sounds so much like Humana," said George Atkins, a Humana vice president. "As far as the program is concerned, I think most of the people here like the program. Our problem is not with the content of the show."

Late Wednesday, a federal district judge in Paducah, Ky., refused Humana's request to block the showing of Wednesday night's episode of the show after NBC agreed to run a disclaimer saying Ecumena is not a real company. However, Humana said it would continue to pursue the case, which was filed Tuesday in Louisville, Ky., where Humana is based, but heard in Paducah because the judge first assigned it turned out to be a Humana stockholder.

John Tinker, one of the show's writers at MTM Productions, said no imitation was intended. "We weren't thinking of them at all," he said. The Ecumena name came up as a play on the word "ecumenical," he said.

Nevertheless, there do seem to be some similarities between Ecumena and Humana. In the show, Ecumena is a for-profit hospital company, based in the Midwest, that modernizes

St. Eligius and adds an artificial-heart program to the fictional Boston Hospital. In real life, Humana is a for-profit hospital company, based in Louisville, that specializes in taking over and modernizing poorly performing hospitals, and operates the nation's only permanent artificial-heart program in Louisville. Even the blue-and-white Ecumena and Humana logos are similar, according to Humana.

AIDS Topic Of 'Designing Women' Tonight On CBS

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Producer and writer Linda Bloodworth-Thomason had more in mind than taking advantage of a hot topic when she wrote an AIDS episode for her hit CBS television show "Designing Women."

Bloodworth-Thomason's mother died of the fatal disease after receiving tainted blood in a transfusion.

In tonight's episode, "Killing All the Right People," a young fellow interior designer asks the women of Sugarbaker's to decorate a room for his funeral because he is dying of AIDS.

The title comes from a line in the episode uttered by a self-righteous matron who says homosexuals have brought the disease on themselves: "As far as I'm concerned, this disease has one thing going for it — it's killing all the right people."

A further poignant note about the episode is that the actor originally cast to play the AIDS victim had AIDS, but when filming started, the producers said, he was too ill to work. Tony Goldwyn, son of Hollywood magnate Samuel Goldwyn, who does not have AIDS, was cast instead as Kendall.

It's always tricky when comedy shows try to tackle deeply serious subjects, but "Designing Women" succeeds, thanks to Bloodworth-Thomason's remarkable writing talent. In half an hour, she manages to attack ignorance and self-righteousness, provide information about AIDS, make a case for abstinence and provide both laughter and tears.

When Kendall arrives and announces he wants the women to design his funeral because he is dying of AIDS, Suzanne Sugarbaker, played by Delta Burke, notes, "I didn't even know you were gay."

"Well, I am," Kendall says, "but you don't have to be." He tells how his fellow AIDS patients in the hospital included a 65-year-old man who received AIDS from a blood transfusion and an 18-year-old girl who got it from a boyfriend.

Later, Suzanne recalls that her doctor told her AIDS was contracted not from casual contact, but from sex, blood products or shared hypodermic needles.

Mary Jo (Annie Potts) attends a PTA meeting called to discuss a proposal to distribute condoms on request to teen-agers. Shy Mary Jo vainly tries to speak up in favor of the idea. She gets roped into leading the proponents at a debate to be held the following week.

The condom discussion is brought back to the design studio.

"My father used to keep a bunch of them in his dresser drawer," says Charlene (Jean Smart). "I got in so much trouble once because I blew them all up on my birthday."

Julia (Dixie Carter) rages against Hollywood producers "who are now going to depict people not sleeping around because of AIDS."

"What I want to know is, what was wrong with not sleeping around before AIDS? I mean, God forbid that anybody would be sexually discriminating because it's virtuous or loyal or classy."

At the PTA debate, Mary Jo struggles to make her point, until Kendall arrives and stands in the back of the room, inspiring her.

The Last Laugh

Robert Goddard, the father of modern space rocketry, was born on this day in 1882. In 1926, Goddard successfully launched the first liquid-propellant rocket. Its flight lasted less than three seconds. In his day, Goddard was often ridiculed. In his paper, "A Method of Reaching Extreme Altitudes," he proposed sending rockets to the moon. As a result, many of Goddard's detractors labeled him the "moon man." Today, the world remembers Goddard — not his critics.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q6 ♥KQ832 ♦94 ♣AQ63
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ Pass 1 ♠ 2 ♦
? What action do you take?
A.—It's time to tell partner that you have a minimum opening bid with no particular fit for his suit. The correct way to do that is to pass. Don't bid either two hearts or three clubs. The former would show a better suit, the latter a far stronger hand.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠83 ♥AKJ52 ♦953 ♣KQ9
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
? What do you bid now?
A.—Resist the temptation to show a good five-card heart suit by rebid-ding it. For the moment, the most important feature of your hand is the excellent support for partner's suit. Tell partner of the good news by raising to three clubs. If partner has heart support, he can still reveal it.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A94 ♥AQ985 ♦Q103 ♣62
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ 1 ♠ 2 ♣ Pass
? What do you bid now?
A.—Since partner's bid is forcing, you must do something. You don't really want to bid no trump when your only stopper in the enemy suit is the ace. Therefore, you are reluctantly compelled to rebid your heart suit.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AQ4 ♥AQ953 ♦1085 ♣72
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ Pass 2 ♣ 2 ♣
? What action do you take?
A.—The same logic applies here as in the first example. While you have good stoppers in the enemy suit, your first task is to tell partner that you have a minimum. Pass. Partner's next move will give you a clue as to how to proceed.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A ♥KQ73 ♦AQJ652 ♣J5
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♦ Pass 1 ♠ Pass
? What do you bid now?
A.—Even though you have a partial misfit, your playing strength is such that two diamonds would be an underbid, while three diamonds risks losing the heart suit. Your hand fully merits a reverse bid of two hearts.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KJ854 ♥J42 ♦87 ♣K106
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♦ Pass 1 ♠ Pass
2 ♥ Pass ?
What action do you take?
A.—After partner's reverse, your order of priorities should be to raise his major with four-card support or take a preference to his first-bid suit with three-card support. If you can do neither of these, rebid a five-card major, if you have one. That leaves you with clear-cut action here—bid two spades.

Duarte, Rebels Continue Peace Negotiations

By REID G. MILLER
Associated Press Writer
SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — President Jose Napoleon Duarte and leftist Salvadoran rebels, holding their first peace talks in three years, agreed to extend their negotiations today.

The talks were "going well" and the atmosphere was one of "great frankness and great seriousness," said Monsignor Gregorio Rosa Chavez, a spokesman for the Roman Catholic Church, which is mediating the talks.

Negotiations in 1984 on ending the 8-year-old war between the U.S.-backed government and the insurgents ended in deadlock.

Rosa Chavez, auxiliary bishop of San Salvador, said the two sides spent more than six hours Sunday discussing the first of four points on the agenda. They agreed to meet again today, he said.

The auxiliary bishop declined to elaborate on the agenda. Both delegations, however, made it clear going into the talks that they were far apart on major issues.

The rebels are insisting, as they have for years, on participating in a new, provisional government that would rule until new elections could be held. They also want their army incorporated into the Salvadoran armed forces.

But Duarte has said the rebels must lay down their arms before their demands can be discussed.

El Salvador's civil war has shattered the country's economy and cost about 65,000 lives.

The government and the rebels agreed to the talks after Duarte and the presidents of four other Central American nations signed a peace plan aimed at ending regional conflicts.

The negotiations started nearly five hours behind schedule Sunday because the insurgent delegation arrived late. The rebels accused the Salvadoran army of causing the delay by impeding travel of two of their representatives.

The talks were at the Vatican Embassy, a two-story building in an upper-class residential area on the capital's east side.

The delegates ate lunch in the embassy, then moved to a small conference room and took their places at a long table — eight rebels on one side, Duarte and six other government representatives on the other.

Duarte opened the talks with a plea that both sides "forgive and forget" the inhumanities of the war. He said the conflict "had a historical justification that has now disappeared."

The president called on the rebels to take "a path of faith and hope on which we can advance on the long march to reconciliation — to justice, to liberty, to democracy and to peace."

But, as he has in the past, Duarte said negotiations would have to be conducted within the framework of El Salvador's constitution. The rebels say the constitution should be altered to permit them a share of power in the government. Duarte aides distributed the president's statement to reporters shortly after the meeting began.

In announcing their agreement to keep talking, both sides said they would make no further declarations to the press as long as the negotiations were in progress.

Several thousand demonstrators began gathering in a large open field about a block from the Vatican mission hours before the talks began.

The crowd was composed of government supporters waving white banners and members of leftist popular groups waving red ones, with the leftist demonstrators appearing to have a substantial edge in number.

Members of the two groups shouted insults at each other and competed for attention over separate public address systems. Some shouting matches and at least one fistfight broke out. No major incidents were reported.

Reagan To Outline Aid Schedule

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will promote a toughened set of demands for peace in Nicaragua in a major address to the Organization of American States this week, administration officials say.

Reagan's speech, set for Wednesday, will take place a month prior to the Nov. 7 deadline for a cease-fire and democratic reforms established in a regionally sponsored peace plan.

Administration officials, speaking Sunday only on condition they not be identified, said Reagan's address will lay out a timetable for the resumption of U.S. aid to the rebels battling Nicaragua's leftist government.

It also will highlight the "guidelines" the administration will use to judge Nicaragua's compliance with the peace process, a senior administration official said.

The speech is geared to "have the effect of formalizing our current policy position on Central America," another official said.

Reagan gave only a lukewarm welcome to the regional plan when it was signed in August by five Central American nations, including Nicaragua.

Since that time, he has offered increasingly harsh assessments of the plan. At one point, Reagan criticized the pact as "fatally flawed" for failing to require the withdrawal of Soviet and Cuban military support from Nicaragua.

The senior administration official says the White House plans to hold off its request to Congress for $270 million in aid to the Nicaraguan rebels until "early November."

The official said the administration was "reluctant to set a specific date" at this time, but that the formal request "would come closer to the (Nov. 7) deadline for the cease-fire" as stipulated in the regional plan.

In the speech, Reagan "will lay out a timetable for funding the resistance" as a means of keeping pressure on the Sandinistas, the senior official said. "He'll cite guideposts for judging the situation."

The Organization of American States, founded in 1948 in Bogota, Colombia, is headquartered in Washington. It is composed of member states from North, South and Central America as well as the Caribbean.

Reagan, who offered his own version of a peace plan in August, has used several speeches in recent weeks to make demands on Nicaragua that go beyond those contained in the regional proposal.

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Nicaragua was used as a base for leftist subversion in El Salvador after the 1979 Sandinista revolution but is now firmly opposed to a resumption of any such activity, according to a senior Nicaraguan diplomat.

Vice Foreign Minister Victor Hugo Tinoco said in an interview that there is "no possibility of friendly relations among Central Americans if someone follows a pattern of promoting subversion."

Confirming Reagan administration claims, Tinoco acknowledged that "some sectors" in Nicaragua helped leftist guerrillas in El Salvador in 1980. But he said the Sandinista government's attitude has changed since then.

Nicaragua's alleged use as a platform for subversion in Central America is at the heart of administration concerns about the Sandinista government and has been cited as a major justification for U.S. support for the Contra rebels.

Administration officials have used that argument less frequently in the recent past but they insist that Sandinista aid to the Salvadoran rebels has never stopped.

The Central America peace agreement signed two months ago in Guatemala City commits Nicaragua and the other four signatories to a policy of non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

U.S., Canada Officials Excited About Prospects For Trade Pact

By DAVID BRISCOE
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A sweeping trade agreement to eliminate all tariffs between the United States and Canada should find little opposition in Congress or Canada's parliament, because it puts both countries in a "win-win situation," officials on both sides say.

"It's a carefully crafted package with a good chance of passage," Treasury Secretary James Baker III said at a joint news conference Sunday with Canadian Finance Minister Michael Wilson, who said he was confident both country's legislative branches would approve the pact.

President Reagan hailed the agreement as historic and said it would be beneficial to both nations' economies, create thousands of jobs on both sides of the border and provide a model for other nations seeking to improve trade relations.

Wilson called the proposed pact "a dramatic step toward implementing a new trade relationship" and said it "is a powerful signal against protectionism and for trade liberalization."

"I believe we've achieved a win-win situation," Wilson said. Baker later said he agreed it is a "win-win situation" and that the prospect of huge economic benefits for the United States would help it pass Congress.

But late Sunday, Canadian Press reported that a discrepancy between the Canadian and U.S. synopses of the deal would delay a scheduled Canadian cabinet briefing on the agreement.

Tim Ralfe, spokesman for Canadian Trade Minister Pat Carney, said there were differences of wording between the U.S. and Canadian synopses on how trade disputes would be resolved. It was not clear if the discrepancy would have any impact on the pact.

"The U.S. synopsis made it sound less than binding," Ralfe told Canadian Press, which reported that Canadian officials remained later than planned in Washington to try to settle the problem.

Reagan sent word to Congress just before a midnight Saturday deadline that he would submit the agreement, which was reached by negotiators working up to the 11th hour. U.S. and Canadian officials have been trying for 100 years to reach a broad trading agreement.

With $150 billion in goods and services passing between the two countries last year, the United States and Canada are the world's largest trading partners.

The agreement, which eliminates some tariffs immediately and others over five or 10 years, affects all imports and exports between the two nations. Motor vehicles or parts account for 36 percent of all U.S. imports from Canada and 40 percent of U.S. exports to Canada.

A summary released by U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter's office said, "The primary objective of the FTA (free trade agreement) is the eventual elimination of tariff and non-tariff trade barriers."

It gave these details of the agreement:

—Existing laws dealing with subsidies and dumping of inexpensive foreign merchandise in either country will remain. But special bilateral panels will be set up to settle appeals of duty decisions.

—On automobiles, Canada immediately eliminates a tariff subsidy program linked to export performance or local production. A Canadian embargo on used cars also will be scrapped.

—All agricultural tariffs are to be eliminated within 10 years, with more access to Canadian markets for U.S. farm products and the conditional elimination of Canadian import licenses for U.S. wheat, barley, oats and grain products. The two countries would exempt each other from meat import laws.

—Virtually all existing import and export restrictions are eliminated, but with procedures set up to lessen the effects on specific industries.

—Free and open energy trade is established, with Canadian access to oil from Alaska's north slope, "subject to certain conditions."

—Discriminatory pricing of alcoholic beverages in Canada is phased out.

—Many restrictions that require government agencies to buy only products made within the respective country are eliminated on both sides.

—Citizens of each country providing services in the other would be treated equal to the country's own citizens in all new measures affecting services.

—Border crossings for business purposes are made easier.

Baker characterized the pact as "an agreement in principle. We still have to cross some t's and dot some i's. We are continuing to clean up loose ends."

Reagan telephoned Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney on Sunday afternoon after returning from his weekend at Camp David, Md., according to White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater.

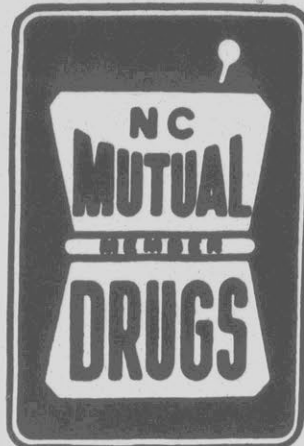

Reagan "congratulated him on the agreement and noted that the negotiations had gone down to the wire, but both teams had shown good faith in bargaining and produced a good agreement," Fitzwater said.

Carter Goes Home

ATLANTA (AP) — Billy Carter, brother of former President Jimmy Carter, was released from Emory University Hospital, three weeks after being diagnosed as having inoperable cancer of the pancreas.

Hospital spokeswoman Mildred Stroud confirmed Sunday that Carter, 50, had left the hospital. She declined further comment on his condition.
