Cuban Inmates End Uprising, Free Hostages

By JOSEPH B. FRAZIER
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Freed hostages streamed out of the federal prison today, shaking hands with former captors and hugging relatives as the 11-day Cuban-inmate uprising ended in a pact providing a moratorium on deportations of all Mariel detainees.

"Feels great!" said former hostage Basil T. "Buddy" Levens, the first of the 89 hostages in line, as he moved toward his 11 family members.

The Cubans remained in control of the prison this morning, but agreed to come out one-by-one at noon and begin the process of being moved to other prisons, the FBI said.

The former hostages generally were in good shape and all declined medical treatment at a hospital, said Justice Department spokesman Tom Stewart.

Levens, a 44-year-old hospital administrator, walked out shortly after 1 a.m. as a cheer went up from waiting relatives and others who had been at the penitentiary throughout the siege, one of the longest in U.S. prison history.

The hostages, all prison workers, stepped into vans for a short trip to the warden's residence, tearful reunions and debriefings by the FBI.

Freedom came after Cuban detainee representatives and government negotiators signed an eight-point agreement that includes an indefinite moratorium on the return of any of the Cubans who arrived in this country during the 1980 boatlift from the Cuban port of Mariel.

"Everyone will have a full, fair and equitable review," attorney Gary Leshaw, who advised the inmates, said on ABC-TV's "Nightline" today.

The two-page agreement is similar to one that ended the siege by Cuban inmates in Louisiana on Sunday.

Both grant permission for some inmates to go to any third country willing to accept them. They also guarantee medical treatment for inmates who need it and grant immunity from prosecution for damage at the prisons during the rioting.

Only the Atlanta agreement mentions U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III's proposed moratorium on deportations.

Six representatives of the 1,105 Cuban detainees and federal government negotiators signed the pact in a ceremony broadcast live nationally.

Attending were Auxiliary Bishop Agustin Roman of Miami, a Cuban-born priest who was instrumental in ending the Oakdale, La., uprising, and Leshaw, who read the pact before it was signed.

EEC Talks Face Crisis Over Cash

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Leaders of the European Economic Community began a key summit today, knowing that failure to solve a cash crisis will bankrupt the giant trading bloc and wither its influence as the superpowers meet.

The 12 leaders chatted informally on the cobblestoned dockside outside a converted 18th century warehouse where the meeting is being held. They then gathered inside the building to try to solve perhaps the Community's worst budgetary crisis since its 1957 founding.

Before the meeting convened, the main protagonists in the budget dispute — austerity-minded Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain and Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany, who is leading resistance to strict spending controls — met for a working breakfast. There was no immediate sign of a shift in their positions.

Earlier, Foreign Minister Leo Tindemans of Belgium had said the domestic funding dispute was distracting the EEC from taking a leadership role following the October world market crash and the United States' new moves to reduce its budget deficits.

"This should be the moment when Europe can enter the debate with authority," Tindemans said on the eve of the year-end summit. "Unfortunately we are not there yet. First we have to put our own house in order."

Members must agree on increasing funding, presently based on 1.4 percent of a value added, or sales, tax.

The dispute centers on different views among the members on how to control the Community's ever-expanding agricultural subsidy program, a point that is expected to dominate the two-day conference.

The leaders are also to discuss East-West relations in light of Soviet moves toward more openness, the Iran-Iraq war and terrorism.

Should the funding issue not be settled, the EEC would have no 1988 budget and would have to operate on a month-to-month basis starting Jan. 1.

Prime Minister Poul Schlueter of Denmark said failure to resolve the EEC's internal problems would also diminish Western Europe's stature — just before President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev meet next week in Washington to sign a treaty eliminating shorter- and medium-range nuclear missiles.

"The real problem around which everything revolves is the role we want Europe to play in the world in the years ahead," Schlueter said Thursday.

In an effort to ensure security, armed police had surrounded the summit venue, the Eigtveds Pakhus, and sharpshooters were posted on the roofs of the surrounding Foreign

264 Section Dedicated To East

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

Gov. Jim Martin and other federal, state and local officials officially dedicated the new four-lane U.S. 264 west of Greenville as the "John P. East Freeway" Thursday afternoon.

The ceremony, which also featured a speech by former U.S. Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, was held near the intersection of state road 1204 and the new highway, approximately two miles west of Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

The new section of U.S. 264, dedicated to the late U.S. senator from Greenville, is a 7.5-mile road stretching east of the Farmville East Thoroughfare to state road 1204, west of Greenville.

The road, begun in March 1984, cost approximately $13.1 million to build.

"It is fitting and proper that this new highway be dedicated in his honor. It will serve the people of North Carolina just like the intellectual roads built by John East serve the people of North Carolina," Martin said.

East, who had taught political science at East Carolina University from 1964 to 1980, was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1980.

While in the Senate, he served on the Judiciary Committee and was chairman of the subcommittee on separation of powers and the subcommittee on courts. He also served on the Armed Services Committee, the Energy and Natural Resources Committee and the Laboring Human Resources Committee.

While serving in 1955 as a lieutenant in the U.S. Marine Corps, East contracted polio and was confined to the use of a wheelchair.

East committed suicide at his Greenville home in 1986 after months of battling depression reportedly brought on by a thyroid problem.

"When he died," Martin said, "I said his death was a tragic loss for North Carolina and the people he represented so valiantly and so well. As time has passed and events transpired, I think the magnitude of our loss has grown, not diminished."

Also in attendance were the late senator's wife, Priscilla, and their two daughters, Kathryn and Martha.

Mrs. Dole, who also was in Greenville last week for a campaign breakfast on behalf of her husband, Republican presidential hopeful Robert Dole, said she could think of no more fitting way to John East than by dedicating the freeway to his memory.

"It would please John East to know that this four-lane highway passes right by the new medical school at East Carolina University, the university where he was a professor for many years," she said.

Approximately 30 members of the East Carolina University Marching Band began the ceremony, playing the National Anthem.

Mrs. Dole told the crowd of approximately 200 that highways are much more than roads for travel.

"Our highway system is a symbol of our democracy. Each day Americans use our highways to travel whenever and wherever they please. That's not the case in too many countries around the world," she said.

"When you think of all the grimly guarded checkpoints, all the barbed wire, walls and gates, all the long lines of citizens asking to be let out, then you appreciate as John did, what America, and Americans should always stand for."

Also speaking at the ceremony were state Bill Cobey, state deputy transportation secretary; Randy Doub of Greenville, a member of state Board of Transportation; Mayor Les Garner, and Mayor-Elect Ed Carter.

U.S. May Lop Arms Ceiling

BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is signaling the Soviet Union that it no longer insists on a ceiling on land-based intercontinental missile warheads as part of a treaty reducing long-range nuclear weapons.

The signal was sent Thursday by Kenneth L. Adelman, who is stepping down as director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency after next week's summit meeting. President Reagan and Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev will sign an agreement at the summit banning intermediate-range missiles.

The conciliatory U.S. stance suggested the administration wants to

Reagan Gets His Dollar Backwards

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan and Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III appeared to be talking at cross purposes on the U.S. dollar until a presidential spokesman said Reagan had gotten things backwards.

In an interview with four television networks broadcast Thursday night, Reagan temporarily baffled economists — and probably Baker as well — by appearing to blame declines in the value of the dollar on recent interest-rate cuts by U.S. trading partners.

Said Reagan: "A sudden surge of cutting interest rates in some of our trading allies abroad did have the effect of again making the dollar fall, but that was their doing, not ours."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said later that Reagan didn't mean to say the dollar had fallen further when in fact on Thursday it had actually strengthened.

"It should be (making the dollar rise) rise," Fitzwater said. "He meant to say rise."

Reagan commented after being reminded by an interviewer that the dollar had fallen even after he suggested last month that it had dropped enough.

Reagan's comments came the same day that the West German Bundesbank and six other European central banks agreed to lower key lending rates. The move drew expressions of delight from Baker, who had long pressed for such action.

Baker has contended that lower interest rates abroad would stimulate demand for more U.S. goods and ease the U.S. trade deficit while also helping to stabilize the dollar.

International currency traders said the interest rate cuts helped fuel a dollar rally in exchange markets, particularly in Europe — the opposite effect from that suggested by Reagan's initial remarks.

After Reagan's remarks in the television interview, David Wyss, senior economist for Data Resources Inc. said: "What he said doesn't make sense. The administration wanted the other countries to lower their rates. Maybe he means that they waited too long to do it. ... I just can't understand what he means."

It wasn't the first time Reagan and Baker have appeared to be saying contradictory things about the dollar.

Shellfish War Stirs Environmentalists

RALEIGH (AP) — The fight over the future of North Carolina's shellfishing waters is fast becoming a paper war, with environmentalists vowing to flood state offices with requests for special designations to protect coastal waters.

If Thursday's meeting of the Environmental Management Commission's Water Quality Committee is any indication, the war may be a long one.

Environmentalists are unhappy about state officials' decision to recommend five pristine coastal waterways as outstanding resource waters, which would give them added environmental protection. The five areas are not in danger of being polluted because there is no pressure to develop there, environmentalists say, so the state should act first to protect areas where the need is more urgent.

Only one waterway in North Carolina, South Toe River in Yancey County, now has the outstanding resource designation. But 26 other waterways — most of them coastal rivers and sounds — have been proposed for the program.

Outstanding resource waters are protected by special limits on development, storm water runoff and discharges. Any state citizen can propose that a waterway be designated an outstanding resource, and if the Environmental Management Commission agrees to study it, then all development permits in that area are banned during the study period.

The paper fight has also spread within state government.

In a recent letter to the Division of Environmental Management, William Hogarth, director of the Division of Marine Fisheries, requested that all the state's primary nursery areas — about 80,000 acres — be classified as outstanding resource waters.

But George Everett, deputy director of the Environmental Management Division, said at Thursday's meeting that the proposal is misguided.

"That's all of coastal North Carolina," he said. "And if we were to hold action on that, that would mean that we couldn't permit anything in coastal North Carolina. That's not the intent of the regulations."

He said the outstanding resource designation is supposed to be for waters that are unique and have exceptional recreational or ecological significance.

The five areas were recommended for the designation because they probably are not going to generate controversy and will be approved quickly, he said.

"What I would prefer is some things that will go through," he said. "We need some areas that are controversial ... but we don't want them all to be like that or we'll never get anything designated."

But Bill Holman, lobbyist for the Conservation Council and the state chapter of the Sierra Club, said the choices don't make sense. Environmentalists will continue to request outstanding resource designations because the state's current stormwater regulations aren't adequate, he said.

Video To Feature Wellcome School

Reflector Staff Writer

Wellcome Middle School is among four other schools in the state being filmed for a video on the evaluation of media coordinators, according to Tilla Fearn, television producer and director for the N.C. Department of Education's Division of Media Production Services.

Ms. Fearn and a filming crew, which included director Bill Lovin, were in Wellcome's media center Thursday filming several scenes to be used in the video.

"We're doing a conference between the principal and media coordinator on the professional growth plan," she said. "That is one of the big scenes."

The idea of having parent volunteers to help with activities such as the book fair also was highlighted at Wellcome, Ms. Fearn said. Including volunteers in the plans helps facilitate more activities for the children, and "It helps them (media specialists) have a good relationship with the community."

The video should be finished by mid January, and it will be duplicated and distributed to the eight regional centers in the state where workshops on evaluating media coordinators will be conducted, she said.

The state has developed a standard plan for evaluating coordinators, and through the video "we want to make it clear that the same kind of activities are going on in all centers," Ms. Fearn said.

The range of schools filmed are from small to large and from elementary to high school, she said. Other schools filmed are located in Mecklenburg, Granville, Chatham and Guilford counties.

New Council Given Orientation

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

With the swearing in of the new City Council just a week away, future City Council members received a "crash-course" on all aspects of the city at an orientation Thursday night.

Members-elect Mildred Council and Rufus Huggins, along with Mayor-elect Ed Carter, listened for six hours as 15 city department leaders talked about future issues and concerns of the city.

City Manager Greg Knowles said the session, which was originally scheduled for just four hours, went well.

"I think significant material was presented at the briefing session which will help new council members in the performance of their duties," he said.

Speaking at the meeting were the heads of Recreation & Parks, Police, Fire-Rescue, Public Works, Planning, Engineering & Inspections, Finance, Personnel, the Housing Authority, Library, Airport, and the Greenville Utilities Commission.

Also speaking were the city clerk, city manager and city attorney.

Each speaker detailed his own department's needs and concerns.

One of the major themes discussed throughout the evening was Greenville's rate of growth and how the city must prepare to handle the consequences.

Ms. Council said she benefited from the program.

"I think it was an excellent orientation for me because I've learned a lot and I know I've got a lot more to learn," she said.

"I know I'm looking forward to getting in, and doing the best that I can to serve Greenville", she added.

Huggins said the meeting definitely helped him better understand the city's operations.

"It made me abreast of a lot of things I wasn't aware of in the community," he said.

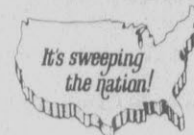

The Soviet Union established the state of East Germany in 1949. It was headquartered in East Berlin.

Fight Back

Tired of those cryptic 30-second political commercials and advertising that says nothing? Concerned about the effect it has on the election process? Wish there were some way to battle the impact of one-shot, pot shot campaigns?

There is. It's called the North Carolina Citizens Assembly, and for 600 voters in the state it will provide an opportunity to affect the focus of the 1988 presidential campaign.

If that's not exciting enough, consider this: this North Carolina Citizens Assembly will lead the press, the public and the presidential candidates to pay less attention to issues and problems — not spout mere rhetoric. It could be a major influence on the quality and texture of political debate in 1988.

The program works simply. Citizens interested in the project apply by Dec. 15. The organizers will select 600 participants, and these individuals will meet Jan. 30 in nine cities across the state — including Greenville. Issues such as agriculture, Central America, federal budget deficits, international trade, global nuclear armaments and working families will be examined. The groups will formulate a set of policy questions for presidential candidates.

The project has venerable vital statistics. It is affiliated with "U.S. 88: A New Road to the White House," a nonpartisan voter education project. In North Carolina civic, education, business, labor and religious organizations and the Roosevelt Center for American Policy studies sponsor the organization. For information or an application write North Carolina Citizens Assembly, North Carolina Leadership Forum, P.O. Box 10723, Raleigh, N.C. 27605.

There's only one hitch to the idea — it won't work unless the 600 participants are diverse and represent a cross-section of the populace. These voters must reflect the economic, social and political complexion of North Carolina. That means applicants from all economic, social and racial sectors are needed to make the project successful.

So apply, liberals, conservatives and moderates of Pitt County. Fight back against the quick-hit, shallow approach to election campaigning. Strike a blow for increased voter awareness. Improve the quality of political debate in North Carolina and work to increase citizen participation through involvement.

Money Crunch

For those wondering from which point on the horizon the next bludgeoning of the United States economy might come, the answer may have been provided at a meeting of eight Latin American presidents in Acapulco.

They represented the countries of Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela.

Their message: a continuing need for economic relief is approaching a point of desperation and if the United States and other industrialized countries continue to sit on their hands, the only recourse may be "retaliation." That retaliation may very well have a considerable impact on this nation's financial system.

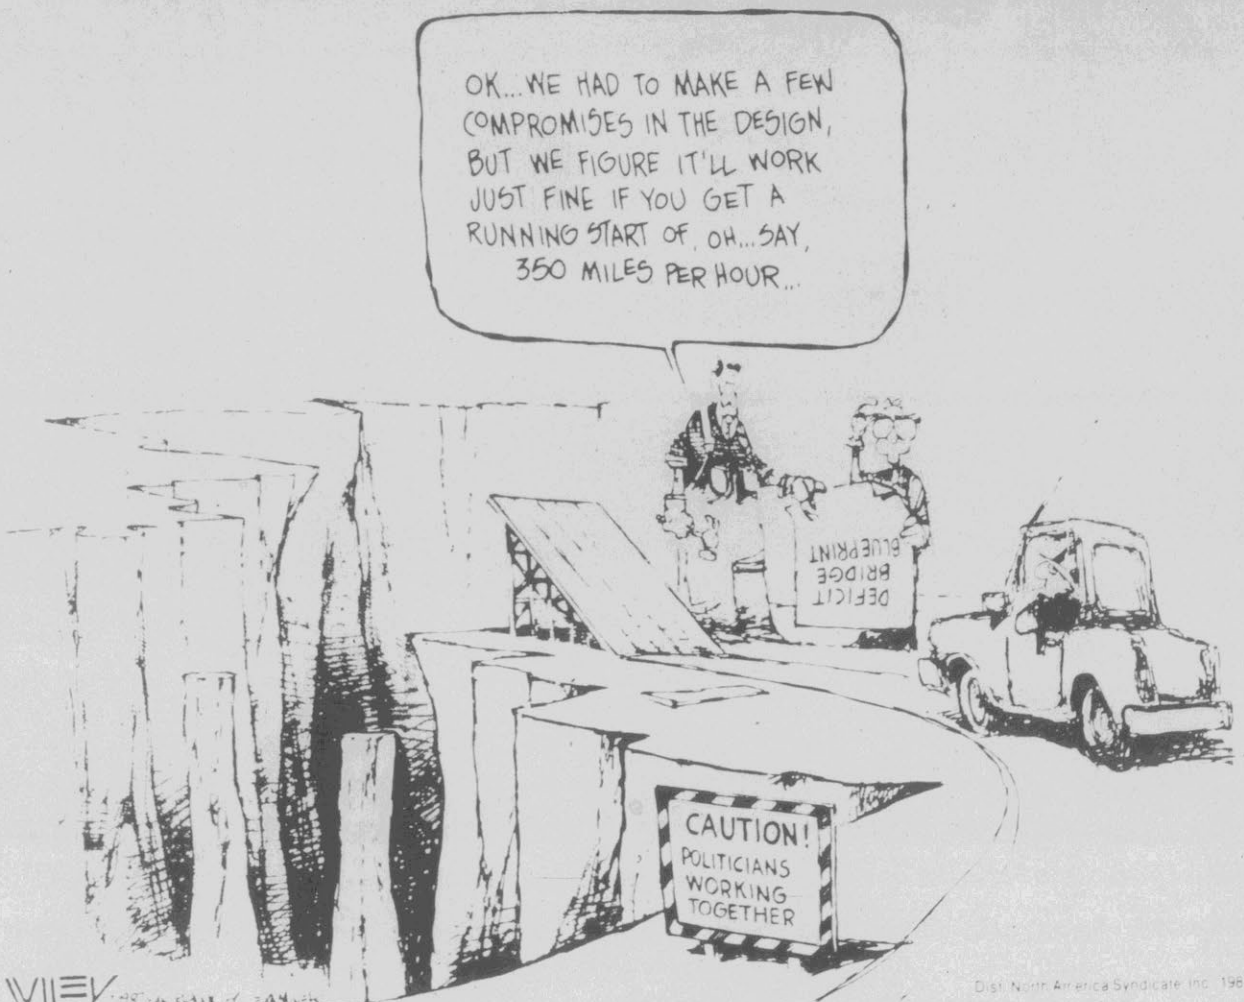

The eight governments have been living in a state of depression for a number of years. Together, they owe international lenders a combined debt of $343 billion and interest payments have proven an intolerable burden. The message for international lenders carried with it a threat to arbitrarily lower the amount of interest they now pay.

Two nations, Brazil and Peru, already have done that and the others firmly supported their action. At least one analyst who was present said U.S. bankers will probably be pleased the Latin Americans didn't take a tougher stance.

We are told the region's economic crisis manifests itself in a decline in development which involves simultaneous and persistent deterioration in production and savings, and a drop in real income. There is no doubt that forecast is accurate and that the cycle it predicts has already begun.

The question is bound to arise: who would be hurt most if the eight governments follow through with that threat — the governments involved or the banking institutions? The question is probably unanswerable.

One thing we can count on, though: the intricate web of the financial world makes it probable for the impact to be felt across the United States, down to branches in some of the smaller-cities of the nation.

Soviet Trade Policy Feasible Option

Some of the most contentious issues in NATO over the last 20 years have centered on economic relations with the Soviets.

From time to time Washington has insisted that its allies participate in embargoes against Moscow; they have often resisted, arguing that these do little good, and that Europe has continental trade ties with the Soviet Union on which many jobs depend.

As the ultimate protector of Europe, for whose security it pays a large bill, this country has regarded such disputes as a repudiation of our leadership of the alliance.

If, in the current environment, America's allies move rapidly to increase economic ties with the Soviets — while the United States hangs back from concern that Soviet economic progress will enhance its military capabilities — frictions are likely to resurface.

Conservative groups in the U.S. might charge that an increase in Western Europe trade with the Soviet Union constituted "overly enthusiastic" support, "creeping neutralism," or, at a minimum, risky dependence.

Europeans might respond that Americans were too quick to expect the worst from the Soviets; many feel that Soviet reforms offer an opportunity for long term improvements and should be encouraged.

Moreover, some might observe that at a time when this country must reduce imports and expand exports, it isn't in a position to tell its allies not to explore other markets.

To head off such potentially divisive arguments, the United States and its allies should agree upon criteria for evaluating Soviet policy changes and applying pressure for Soviet moderation in foreign, security and emigration practices.

In developing this consensus, a few points should be borne in mind:

—Closer economic relations with the USSR and moderation in Soviet performance should go hand in hand, not the least because businesses will not commit large sums of money to new investment or management time to developing new trade ties if they believe that political relations will sour in the future. Moreover increased flows of Western funds and technology — and observer status in international economic institutions — are important enough to the Soviets to serve as an incentive for Kremlin moderation.

—Trade and investment decisions involving non-strategic goods and technology are best left to private decisions. Western governments should refuse to provide subsidized credits, which distort trade flows, while continuing efforts to decontrol low-level technologies.

—To obtain their requested observer status at the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs (GATT), the Soviets should demonstrate (with close monitoring) that they will rely more on real as opposed to administered prices and renounce attempts to steal militarily significant technology from the West.

—To obtain observer status in the World Bank and International Monetary Fund, Moscow should, at a minimum, provide now secret information about its economy (similar to that submitted by large Western nations). Accurate borrowing projections, for example, would help the West assess whether expected Soviet debt levels can be serviced.

—Exchanges of information among Western leaders on economic relations with the Soviet Union would help avoid our working at cross purposes and allow the West to take the initiative in structuring economic proposals that serve our interests.

Whether it is Gorbachev's intention or not, the reforms might emerge from the reform effort not only as a strong economy but also a more vigorous and aggressive power. But economic cooperation with the Soviets entails benefits as well as calculated risks. Closer commercial, scientific and financial ties would require Moscow to tolerate more foreign business people, engineers, bankers and scientists.

These contacts at all levels of the Soviet economy could give us far better "signals" of Soviet intentions, including early signs of any resource shifts away from the civilian sector back to the military — a sort of "economic verification" process.

Eastern Europe accounts for about ten percent of world trade and is a significant international borrower. The Soviets have the capacity to disrupt world trade (as demonstrated by their massive grain purchases in the early 1970s.) Candid discussions with Moscow on trade, borrowing, and investment rules might be possible at a moment when it wants to expand ties with market economies.

If we maintain our security, cohesion and standards for participation in global economic institutions, while our private sectors take advantage of opportunities for increased trade, investment and contacts with Soviet officials, we can put Moscow's intentions and reforms to an honest test — and even give them a boost — without compromising our own interests.

Robert Hormats, vice chairman of Goldman Sachs International Corp., was a senior National Security Council staff member during efforts to normalize economic relations with the Soviet Union in the early 1970s.

Pink Collar Workers Potential Issue

As the Supreme Court nomination of Judge Anthony M. Kennedy comes to Senate debate this month, the concept of comparable worth will be one of the controversies.

In 1985, Kennedy, a federal appeals court judge, overturned a lower court's decision ordering the State of Washington to pay as much as $1 billion to 15,500 female employees. These women had cited a 1974 study showing that the state, like society at large, systematically paid lower salaries in female-dominated occupations than in male-dominated occupations requiring similar levels of training and responsibility.

Without disputing the study, Kennedy ruled that the state had neither "created the market disparity" nor "been shown to have been motivated by impermissible sex-based considerations in setting salaries." Thus, no discriminatory motives could be inferred "from the state's participation in the market system."

In rejecting the notion that comparable worth addresses a serious existing form of discrimination, Kennedy ignored many post-1964 Civil Rights Act cases won by plaintiffs who demonstrated that apparently non-discriminatory screening criteria (for employment, school admission) produced discriminatory results in practice. Most troubling, perhaps, are the long-term implications of this institutionalized male-female wage gap.

Society suffers, not just women. Consider the current crisis in nursing employment and recruitment. Even as the American Hospital Association noted that job vacancy rates among staff nurses had doubled between 1985 and 1986, experienced nurses were leaving the profession. Nursing school enrollments have dropped from about 250,000 in 1983 to 180,000 in 1987. Female college freshmen now prefer medicine to nursing as a career by a ratio of 10 to 8, according to an annual University of California, Los Angeles, survey. In 1968 the ratio was 1 to 3.

Like other such care-taking occupations as teaching and secretarial work, nursing is characterized by low salaries, low status, lack of professional autonomy and poor advancement potential. Although beginning salaries average $21,000, salaries for experienced nurses plateau around $30,000. An aging society with increasing health needs is imperiled by a situation that threatens the quality of care while demoralizing and overworking the present staff. But a chronic nursing shortage will persist until either the concept of comparable worth is accepted and implemented or the occupational distribution of working women matches that of men, forcing nursing employers to offer competitive salaries.

Yet comparable worth offends the sensibilities of many liberals as well as traditionalists because it would seem to reward women who remain in stereotypical occupations. The assumption that male-dominated occupations are inherently more desirable — economically if not socially — is widespread even in the feminist camp and too often goes unchallenged. It originates in an older marketplace, classically, the measure of productivity for any occupation was the prevailing wage rate. Transferring from low-paying to higher-paying work made societal as well as personal sense since, by definition, human resources were now being used more productively.

But that ignores the history of the economics of discrimination. Teaching and office work were male occupations until the late 19th century. Men left because higher-paying options appeared — options closed to women. Classical economics says that had teaching competed openly for labor, wages would have risen to a point reflective of its true economic utility. Instead, low wages in schools and offices prevailed because exclusion from an open labor market crowded women into a few occupations while it reduced their bargaining power.

Until now society has reaped a "consumer's surplus," loosely defined as the extra utility enjoyed by paying less for a job than the job's productivity warrants. This will not continue in a world where women enjoy unconstrained alternatives.

Today, counselors and organizations urge women to avoid low-income occupations in a society where status and income are often linked. A national campaign encouraging young women to reject underpaid pink collar fields such as education is being planned by the 140,000 member National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

True to economic prediction, the most capable women are going where the rewards are highest. Comparable worth is therefore inevitable if society wants to retain and attract qualified workers in pink collar fields. Indeed, step-by-step readjustment has already begun in income, status and career structure; even in the absence of legislation, individual settlements have taken place.

In the absence of a national commitment to comparable worth, however, these remain special situations. They are not likely to increase pink collar status so much that a person entering such work doesn't have to defend her choice, much like today's beleaguered housewife. By contrast, a commitment that comparable worth be considered in any legislated pay scale — such as the federal Civil Service — would revolutionize societal regard for these occupations.

Consider the huge social costs of a piecemeal readjustment process by states or institutions spread over 20-40 years — the entire working life of one person. Until pink collar wages seriously compete with alternative fields, two generations of talented people may be lost.

Strength For Today

About one hundred years ago the British Museum received an ancient pot taken from the ruins of an Egyptian temple built in the time of Moses. In it were found a few grains of wheat and a few peas. They were planted under glass, and in thirty days they sprouted and grew.

We often complain that we cannot do great things because we do not have the power of great things within us. But we never know until we have planted the seed. Or again, we complain that our powers have come to an end. We are worn out. We have failed.

But there are always seeds scattered about somewhere which we have never planted. In them there may be many unsuspected powers. In the day of infirmity and defeat we plant the miserable little seeds with no hope, but the God of the harvest brings first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn.

Wrong Winner

By The Associated Press
A Kentucky-paid survey intended to boost the state's image beyond bourbon and horses shocked officials when business executives from across the nation said they preferred North Carolina.
"We were surprised at how well North Carolina did," said Rudy Moeller of the Louisville, Ky., ad agency that conducted the survey.
The survey asked 165 executives across the nation to rate Kentucky and eight nearby states in seven categories that included taxes, labor costs and location. North Carolina ranked first in five categories and second in another.
The survey included seven states surrounding Kentucky and North Carolina, which Moeller said often is his state's major competitor for new plants.
Kentucky Commerce Department spokesman Fred Troutman declined to discuss the survey results.

UNC Drug Proposal Passes Panel Despite Objections From Students

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A committee of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors has approved a systemwide drug policy that calls for minimum penalties ranging from probation to expulsion for certain infractions.

The nine-page document — the culmination of eight months of work and at least 14 drafts — goes to the full board in January for final action. But representatives of student and faculty groups said they still were not satisfied with the policy.

Though the eight-member committee addressed some faculty worries, "we still had some concerns, such as the fact it is still more punitive than preventive," said UNC Faculty Assembly Chairwoman Meada Gibbs.

Faculty members also want a greater role in formulating individual campus policies than this systemwide proposal gives, she said.

UNC Student Governments Association President Brian Bailey said his group doesn't like the policy's rule of mandatory expulsion of students who sell hard drugs such as heroin and cocaine.

While that may be appropriate in some cases, he said, "maybe some cases would come along where the person could be helped. We should seek to solve the problem instead of just eliminating them." If adopted, the policy would cover students, faculty, staff and administrators across the 16 UNC campuses and, depending on the severity of the violation, could apply to infractions occurring off campus as well as on.

According to the document approved Thursday, anyone caught selling hard drugs such as cocaine and heroin would be fired or expelled.

Anyone caught selling drugs such as marijuana or LSD would be suspended for at least a semester on first offense and fired or expelled for a subsequent violation.

Anyone caught possessing hard drugs would be suspended for at least a semester, while those caught possessing less serious drugs would be placed on probation for a period to be determined on a case-by-case basis.

Campus administrators also said they had some reservations about the proposed policy.

"On the one hand, I applaud it for being strong," said David McIntire, a vice chancellor at Appalachian State University. "On the other, I'm concerned about the prescriptive nature of the sanctions."

"I wish we had been allowed the prerogative of operating independently and intelligently as we have in the past," he said.

David J. Whichard II of Greenville, the committee's chairman, defended the document.

"I think it is a very fair and workable outline which the campuses can put in place to deal with the problem," Whichard said.

NCSU Team Develops Transistor

RALEIGH (AP) — A company has been formed in North Carolina to promote the discovery by a North Carolina State University research team of a device that can operate at 1,200 degrees Fahrenheit — the highest temperature ever recorded for a transistor.

"This process of technology transfer is in keeping with the ideal and plans for partnerships with industry and government that NCSU has developed over several years for its Centennial Campus," said Franklin D. Hart, vice chancellor for research at NCSU.

The microelectronics device could have implications for the automotive industry, as well as the production of jet engines and oil drilling.

The work of the N.C. State team paves the way for commercial uses of silicon carbide, a new semiconductor made from common materials. The findings confirm that silicon carbide devices can operate reliably at high power in high-temperature environments where microelectronic devices cannot now be used.

The research has been directed by engineering professor Robert F. Davis, with major funding from the Office of Naval Research. Within the past year, 10 patent applications have been filed by the researchers.

The new company, Cree Research Inc., founded in July and located near Research Triangle Park, has acquired license rights to the N.C. State patents. Cree is developing silicon carbide semiconductor devices for commercial and military applications.

The potential for silicon carbide has been known and investigated for several years. But until this year, no one had been able to grow thin films of the cubic, or beta, form of the compound of sufficient quality to confirm the material's potential for fabricating high-temperature, high-frequency and high-power devices, said Calvin Carter Jr.

Energy Official Says Congress Showing Apathy Toward Funding Supercollider

By LEE DYE

L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

DENVER — Plans to build the world's largest atom smasher are in serious trouble because of "apathy" in Congress, Secretary of Energy John Herrington and a leading Republican congressional supporter of the project told a major symposium on the proposed facility here Thursday.

"The project is in jeopardy," Herrington warned several hundred scientists attending the conference, sponsored by the American Physical Society.

Twenty-five states — including North Carolina — are competing for the project, and that broad-based interest has engendered considerable political support for it up to now.

Herrington's grim assessment was seconded later in the day by Sen. Peter V. Domenici, R-N.M., a member of the Senate's Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, who has been a strong supporter of the project.

"I can't leave you with a great deal of hope," Domenici told the conference via a satellite hookup from Washington.

Leaving many of the physicists stunned, Domenici said the project has very little chance getting funding in the next year or so. "I don't see $500 million or $600 million next year."

However, the pessimism expressed by Domenici and Herrington on the first day of the conference, which has brought together many of the top names in physics, including several Nobel laureates, was in sharp to the opinion of former presidential science adviser George Keyworth.

Keyworth insisted that the project is virtually in the bag because, he predicted, Congress would not turn its back on "one of the few truly positive things that will be on the congressional agenda over the next year and a half."

"We have not yet established in Congress that this project is a national priority, and it should be," said Herrington, whose agency would build the accelerator, which would be at least 10 times more powerful than the largest atom smasher in the world today.

In a brief press conference following his talk, Herrington said the project was clearly "in danger of not being funded."

Asked what he based that assessment on, Herrington said "apathy. I see apathy in Congress."

The federal deficit also makes it far more difficult to win support, he said.

The accelerator would hurl subatomic particles in opposite directions through a 53-mile underground, circular tunnel. Traveling at near the speed of light, the particles would collide at enormous energies, and the debris from those collisions should tell scientists much about the nature of the most fundamental building blocks of matter.

High School. The students were at a reception, sponsored by the hospital, to honor Pitt County schools' art teachers and to kick off a month-long showing of their work in the hospital. (Reflector Photo By Cliff Hollis)

State School Board Adopts Controversial AIDS Policy

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — In a move that put allies of Republican Gov. Jim Martin at odds with each other, the State Board of Education quickly approved an AIDS curriculum for public schools which opponents said sidestepped key moral issues.

The curriculum "will save an enormous number of lives of North Carolina young people," said Howard Haworth, a board member and the governor's choice to succeed Jere Drummond as chairman.

"It was a project that would never satisfy everyone, but I think it is ... an outstanding curriculum for the state," Haworth said.

But Rep. F.J. "Trip" Sizemore, R-Guilford, sponsor of the bill that directed the board to develop the curriculum, said it was lacking in several respects. He accused the board of ignoring a letter Martin wrote Drummond last month requesting major changes.

The board adopted the curriculum with virtually no debate Thursday after its program committee presented a revised version from the one given tentative approval last month.

"If you read this curriculum from front to back ... I don't think you can fairly conclude that we are giving kids ... the idea that AIDS kills," Sizemore told reporters.

The curriculum does not convey that "if you do engage in sexual practices that are high-risk, you run the risk of dying, and therefore don't do it. That should be the message from front to back of this curriculum," he added.

Martin issued a statement saying, "Every individual on the Board of Education, and off the Board of Education for that matter, probably has some refinement they would like included in the AIDS curriculum. Therefore, no one of us need be totally satisfied."

In Martin's Nov. 13 letter, he praised the original draft's emphasis on parental involvement in AIDS education and on abstinence from sex and drugs as the best way to avoid the disease.

But Martin said there were "serious problems" with the original draft:

— It failed to "tell the whole truth" about condoms, excluding statistics about their failure rate and the fact that they offer only limited protection, he said.

"The bottom line is that a single sexual encounter with an AIDS carrier may be relatively safer with a condom than without one, but the risk is still significant ...," Martin wrote.

One of the revisions approved by the board was to note that condoms "don't always work perfectly," failing as contraceptives 10 to 15 percent of the time.

Also, the board voted to attach to the curriculum an AIDS instruction guideline issued by U.S. Education Secretary William Bennett in October. It discusses condom failure rates. Sizemore, however, said the Bennett report was not a part of the curriculum and might be ignored by teachers.

— It did too little to teach youngsters how to "say no to sex," Martin said. That topic also is covered in the Bennett publication.

— It "misses the mark" by steering clear of hard-hitting warnings against homosexual and extramarital heterosexual activity, Martin said.

"We ask students using drugs and those with family members who are drug users to quit," he wrote. "We don't tiptoe around that. We must do the same with 'at-risk sexual practices.'"

Sizemore said the final version of the curriculum implies that any sexual relationship is acceptable as long as it is monogamous. "The curriculum speaks not at all to the marriage relationship," he said.

The curriculum will be taught in the seventh through 12th grades next spring and only in the seventh grade thereafter.

IN THE STATE

Hunger Strike

WILMINGTON (AP) — Ted Sampley, who began serving a 60-day jail sentence Nov. 16 for assaulting a court bailiff and two Wilmington police officers in 1981, said he has begun a hunger strike in his ongoing attempt to win a pardon.

Sampley said he hopes to force the district attorney's office to give him a State Bureau of Investigation report on his case, saying he believes the report may give Gov. Jim Martin some insight into his case. A group of veterans' activists has asked Martin to pardon Sampley.

Jail officials said Sampley has refused all food and water since Monday and that he has lost 10 pounds since then.

Sampley is a Kinston contractor and a Vietnam veteran who has been active in veterans' organizations.

Conviction

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Mecklenburg County jury deliberated for little more than an hour before finding Lawrence LeRoux guilty of the first-degree murder of Charlotte police Officer Robert Smith.

The jurors also found Leroux guilty Thursday of two counts of assault on a police officer and five counts of shooting into an occupied dwelling.

The charges stem from Jan. 15, when Smith, 27, was shot after he responded to a report of a man shooting into a condominium complex in west Charlotte.

President

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Dr. Tyrone L. Burkette has been chosen to succeed Dr. Mable Parker McLean as president of Barber-Scotia College.

A native of Detroit, Burkette is now associate executive of the North Carolina Synod of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). He works with campus ministries for the nine Presbyterian colleges in North Carolina including Barber-Scotia College.

Sock Theft

GIBSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — After a three-week investigation, police have arrested two brothers in connection with the embezzlement of 4,330 dozen pairs of socks from a Gibsonville hosiery mill.

George Dewey Vernon, 28, of Burlington was charged with larceny by an employee. His brother, Raeford Leon Vernon, 33, of Greensboro, was charged with two counts of receiving stolen property — socks valued at $3,060.

Jobless Rate Edges Downward But Retail Sales Stall Economy

By SKIP WOLLENBERG
AP Business Writer

The nation's civilian unemployment rate dropped to a decade-low 5.9 percent in November, aided by a big jump in the number of successful jobhunters, the government said today.

The report from the Labor Department said 315,000 more Americans found work during the month. Factories put 70,000 new workers on their assembly lines, raising to 300,000 the number of jobs gained in the manufacturing sector since June.

The 0.1 percent drop from October's unemployment rate of 6.0 percent brought the rate back to the September level, its lowest since July 1979 when the rate was 5.7 percent.

Unemployment dropped by 58,000 to 7.1 million in November, compared with 8.2 million a year ago.

Analysts said they have found nothing to indicate that the stock market's uneasiness since its October plunge has curtailed employment growth. The November jobs gains were higher than virtually all of them had predicted.

The share of Americans holding jobs increased two-tenths of a percent in November to 61.9 percent, the highest ever, according to the report.

A separate survey of business establishments showed payroll growth of 275,000, about half the increase in October. Next to manufacturing, the largest job gains were in health services, which jumped by 47,000.

In anticipation of the unemployment numbers, stock prices took another dive Thursday, leaving the Dow Jones industrial average down 72.44 points to 1,776.53, its lowest level since the mid-October crash. The nation's major retailers also reported sluggish sales gains for November.

Japanese stock prices fell amid market uncertainty over monetary trends today, while the U.S. dollar drifted lower despite dollar-buying efforts by Japan's central bank.

On the Tokyo Stock Exchange, the Nikkei Stock Average of 225 issues shed 205.41 points, closing at 22,602.75 after losing 107.33 points Thursday. Trading was lackluster, with volume totaling a light 340 million shares.

The dollar closed the week at 132.60 yen, up 0.02 yen from its close Thursday. It opened today's dealing at 133.27 yen following news of key European interest rate cuts Thursday, and then fell steadily to a low of 132.45 yen. Dealers said the Bank of Japan bought the dollar to brake its fall.

The nation's automakers, meanwhile, said their late-November sales improved, and the government reported gains in factory orders for October and in third-quarter business productivity.

Analysts said the sluggish sales reports from the big retail chains depressed the stock market, which failed to show much positive response to some widely-anticipated interest rate cuts by European central banks.

Retail industry analysts said specially apparel retailers were the worst performers in November, although mass merchandisers and department stores also had sales below expectations.

The nation's largest retailer, Sears Roebuck and Co., said its sales edged up 0.7 percent in November from a year earlier. J.C. Penney Co. Inc. reported a 4.3 percent sales increase and K mart Corp. said its sales rose 6.6 percent last month.

The U.S. automakers, on the other hand, said domestic car and light truck sales rose 9.9 percent in late November compared with a year ago, as car sales edged up 2.5 percent and truck sales climbed 25.3 percent.

Domestic car sales were 173,846 during the seven selling days from Nov. 21-30, up from 169,635 in the same period a year ago. Dealers sold 102,083 domestic light trucks, up from 81,474 a year ago.

Senate Panel Bans Sale Of Stingers

By DAVID B. OTTAWAY
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — The Senate Appropriations Committee Thursday ignored urgent pleas from the White House and Pentagon and passed legislation banning the sale of Stinger anti-aircraft missiles to Bahrain or any other Persian Gulf state for the coming year.

The 16-to-10 vote against an amendment that would have exempted Bahrain came after a special closed-door briefing by Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Adm. William J. Crowe Jr. There also was a strong administration appeal for support of a Stinger sale to the gulf Arab sheikhdom.

A White House official said the administration was ready "to go to the mat" to get the ban overturned when the bill reaches the Senate floor. "We're going to give it the old college try," he said.

Farmer Indicted

GRAHAM, N.C. (AP) — An elderly farmer who told investigators he tried to scare away children who were bothering his hogs has been indicted on a charge of murder in the shooting death of a 12-year-old Burlington boy.

Joseph Oliver, 79, of Burlington was indicted by an Alamance County grand jury on a murder charge in the death of Wayne Lamont Miles, who was killed Nov. 6.

The Alamance County Sheriff's Department said Oliver told investigators that he has had trouble with wild dogs and neighborhood children bothering his pigs and he was just shooting to scare them off.

Oliver also said he purposely shot toward the ground and not at the boys because he didn't want to injure anyone.

While the administration has not formally made public the proposed sale, congressional sources said it would involve selling Bahrain 60 to 70 Stingers and 14 launchers at a cost of $7 million.

While the White House is not formally obliged to notify Congress of arms sales under $14 million, it had already promised to consult closely because of the controversy over the transfer of Stingers to any Arab gulf countries.

The White House, in a statement issued Wednesday night, said Bahrain had become crucial to the U.S. military buildup in the gulf and that its role in helping the United States had made it more vulnerable to Iranian threats. Bahrain needed the Stinger to protect both itself and American forces stationed there, the statement said.

In addition, a Carlucci letter to Senate Minority leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., released by Rep. Lee H. Hamilton, D-Ind., Monday, disclosed that U.S. ships and aircraft are now using Bahraini ports and airfields for "vital logistical and reconnaissance purposes."

The committee nonetheless turned its back on the unusual high-level administration appeals and upheld language in the 1988 foreign operations appropriation bill prohibiting the sale, lease or donation of Stingers to any of the Persian Gulf countries for the coming fiscal year.

The vote was unusual because both the chairman and ranking minority member of the Senate foreign operations subcommittee, Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, and Sen. Robert W. Kasten Jr., R-Wis., opposed the ban.

It was Inouye who introduced the amendment Thursday that would have made an exception to the ban for Bahrain if the president found it in the national interest and proper U.S. safeguards over the use and storage of the Stingers were assured.

Near-Miss Investigated

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Authorities are investigating a near collision between a United Airlines jet speeding toward takeoff with 289 people aboard and a Delta Airlines plane that apparently taxied to the wrong runway, officials say.

"We faced colliding into the Delta aircraft or possibly swerving off the runway into the terminal building or into the grassy area, which could have resulted in a fireball" at Los Angeles International Airport, United spokesman Dan Sheehy said Thursday.

Meanwhile, two empty planes being taxied by mechanics ran into each other at the airport Thursday night, damaging both aircraft but causing no injuries, officials said.

The near collision Tuesday between the United DC-10 and the Delta Boeing 737 was being investigated by the National Transportation Safety Board as a "runway incursion," the Federal Aviation Administration said Thursday. The FAA labeled the event a "pilot deviation" and said it also would investigate.

"Our pilot does not deny that the plane was back on the active runway for a very short time," said Delta spokesman Richard Jones. But he said the problem began when controllers directed the pilot to a blocked taxiway.

The pilot of Delta Flight 1605, carrying 82 passengers and a crew of five from Albuquerque, N.M., apparently became confused in the maze of taxiways, made a wrong turn, and taxied into the edge of the same runway as the United jet rushed toward liftoff, said FAA spokeswoman Elley Brekke.

Senator To Lobbyists: 'You Ought To Be Ashamed'

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Congress don't often publicly acknowledge the degree to which lobbyists pull the legislative levers, but a frustrated Sen. Jake Garn told a room full of them, "You ought to be ashamed."

Thirteen years of work on the Senate Banking Committee with little to show for it provoked Garn, R-Utah, into offering an unusually unvarnished lesson in practical politics. "Frankly ladies and gentlemen I'm getting sick of all of you ... and the whole game," he told lobbyists at a hearing Thursday. "You ought to be ashamed along with the Congress. ... We don't do anything because everybody's looking out for their own bailiwick."

The crowd in the committee room laughed nervously, but Garn wasn't smiling. His five-minute lecture was sparked by the continued wrangling over legislation to give banks expanded powers. Garn, the senior Republican on the committee, and Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., the panel's chairman, are sponsoring narrowly crafted legislation that would permit banks to affiliate with securities firms under a parent holding company.

The bill more strictly separates the bank and securities affiliates than most bank lobbyists would prefer, and it does not address at all their desire to expand into insurance and real estate.

Sens. Alfonse M. D'Amato, R-N.Y., and Alan Cranston, D-Calif., have introduced rival legislation that would permit banks to affiliate with a wide range of business, including inurance, real estate, securities and manufacturing companies.

Although the D'Amato proposal gives banks more powers, Proxmire said it could have the anomalous effect of ruining banks' chances of getting any new powers.

Proxmire's bill pits bank lobbyists against the securities industry, with other interest groups sitting on the sidelines. But D'Amato's proposal could bring the securities industry a host of allies.

"If we open it up, you don't have to be very politically sensitive to recognize that it will kill the bill," Proxmire said. "We're just taking on a real political juggernaut. So many insurance agents and so many real estate people will fight like tigers that you can forget about getting this next year or the year after."

D'Amato, however, argued that now is the time to pass broad-based legislation. A congressional moratorium on piecemeal deregulation by federal agencies expires March 1.

"Why take the attitude that we will fail in an effort to comprehensively restructure the institutions. ... I think we have a splendid opportunity," he said.

Garn, in reply, said: "My patience is growing very, very thin with the entire process. ... I'm at the point where I don't care what is done as long as we do something."

He complained that a banking lobby distracted by internal squabbling has been unable to counter the efforts of securities, insurance and real estate lobbyists who fear losing business to banks.

"In 13 years, Chairman Proxmire and I have accumulated more than 20,000 pages of testimony on these issues and there still has been only one or two significant pieces of legislation passed in that time," he said. "It's absurd. It's ridiculous."

The reason, he said: "Nobody really wants to give up their own self interest."

"You've got the ... securities industry, the most concentrated industry in this country. ... Then you've got the ABA (American Bankers Association) that can't get their act together. ... Basically the SIA (Securities Industry Association) doesn't have to do very much while the bankers cut themselves up."

"Then you've got the insurance agents who don't give a damn about the whole thing as long as you protect their little bailiwick."

Tempers Flare As Senate Turns To Confirmations

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Conservatives who held up a judicial appointment they didn't like for 18 months have no right now to complain about the pace of Senate hearings on other nominees, Sen. Joseph Biden says.

Biden, the liberal Delaware Democrat who chairs the Senate Judiciary Committee, was visibly angry Thursday while making that remark to Sen. Gordon Humphrey, the conservative Republican from New Hampshire.

Humphrey had complained that the Democrat-controlled committee was "playing games" with President Reagan's judicial nominees by holding up action on their nominations.

That prompted Biden to snap, "I think it is time you stop this malarkey." He pointed out that Humphrey and other conservatives blocked the nomination of Stanley Sporkin to the U.S. District Court in Washington for a year and half.

The exchange came during a session in which the committee approved seven federal judgeships submitted by Reagan, including Stephen S. Trott, a high-ranking Justice Department official, for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco.

However, Humphrey and Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., demanded to know when the committee was going to act on others including Bernard H. Siegan, a University of San Diego law professor and a former colleague of Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

Siegan was nominated last February for a seat on the 9th Circuit appeals court but has been opposed by critics who say his views on constitutional rights are outside the legal mainstream. Siegan has testified before the committee once, and another hearing is scheduled for January.

Thurmond said there were still six appeals court and 13 district judge nominations pending before the committee.

"Let's vote them up or down, if they are controversial," he said. "Let's not hold them up."

Humphrey complained that the committee was "playing games" and said "common decency" should preclude keeping a person such as Siegan waiting more than 10 months before a hearing was held on his candidacy.

"When can we expect his name to be placed on the agenda?" Humphrey demanded. "Will he be on the next business agenda?"

Biden replied pointedly: "There is no evidence, nor has there been any evidence, that people haven't gotten a fair hearing. All these people will get their chance at a fair hearing."

"If you are going to play this political game, maybe I ought to play politics, too," he continued. "I'm tired of this tripe. It makes me a little bit angry about how this tripe is going on."

Widow Leaves $1,000 To Police

HOBART, Ind. (AP) — A widow who had little contact with the city's 30 police officers left them $1,000 each because she thought they did a good job, says the lawyer who drew up the bequest.

Florence A. Wiesjahn, who died Dec. 13, 1986, lived alone after her husband's death in 1975 and was confident police were protecting her, James Bozik, her attorney in Valparaiso, said Thursday.

Bozik said Mrs. Wiesjahn, who had no children, wanted to leave something to this Chicago suburb of 23,000 people. She specified the police officers because she feared officials would use money to "put up a plaque."

The police learned of the gift only Wednesday when all the paperwork was completed and city Clerk-Treasurer Margaret Kuchta, who also is mayor-elect, called them into a briefing.

"We thought she was going to tell us how she was going to handle the police department in office as mayor," said Sgt. John Clemmons. "She's not one to make jokes about things, but until we got the checks, we didn't believe it."

"I've never heard of this in my life," added Detective Leo Finnerty. "I feel like I won the lottery."

Ms. Kuchta handed Finnerty an envelope while the officers looked on.

The market is lower and the live supply is fully adequate for a light to moderate demand. Average weights desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Friday was 2,450,000, compared to 1,827,000 last Friday.

HENS: Market higher. Supply adequate for a moderate demand. Prices paid per pound day of negotiation generally for slaughter the following week, heavy types, 7 pounds and up, 18 cents at farm with buyer loading.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn steady to 1 cent higher at mostly 1.97-2.10 in East and mostly 2.18-2.30 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans mostly steady at mostly 5.76-5.90 1/2 in East and mostly 5.70-5.80 in the Piedmont; wheat 2.70-2.85; new crop wheat 2.81-2.96. Exchange rates for P.I.K. certificates were steady and ranged from 101 to 104 percent of face value.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices tumbled in early trading today. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial, down more than 72 points Thursday, fell 23.21 to 1,753.32 in the first 30 minutes of trading. In the broader market, declining issues outnumbered advancers by about 11 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 135 up, 1,167 down and 315 unchanged.

Wall Street got little encouragement from the Labor Department's report that unemployment fell by 0.1 percentage point to 5.9 percent in November. Analysts said the market was focusing still on the implications of Thursday's disappointing sales reports from the nation's leading retailers.

In addition, the dollar weakened further in overnight foreign exchange, despite a coordinated round of interest rate cuts Thursday by European central banks. A weak dollar is seen as increasing the chances for high inflation and rising domestic interest rates.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange was 32.12 million shares at 10 a.m. on Wall Street, down from 45.97 million at the same time Thursday.

Among active blue chips, General Electric fell 1/4 to 39 3/8, AT&T fell 1/8 to 25 1/8, IBM dropped 1/8 to 105 1/8 and Exxon fell 3/8 to 35 1/8.

The NYSE composite index of all its listed stocks fell 1.81 to 125.20.

On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index fell 3.45 to 233.10.

On Thursday, the Dow Jones industrial average tumbled 72.44 to 1,776.53, a 3.92 percent decline and its ninth biggest point loss ever.

Big Board volume was 204.16 million shares, up from 148.89 million shares in the previous session.

Arms Chief Hints At Possible Compromise

follow that INF treaty with a quick agreement on strategic, or long-range, weapons. And in an appearance today on CBS' "This Morning" program, chief arms control adviser Paul H. Nitze said discussions of long-range weapons were high on the agenda.

"That's exactly what I hope they will focus on," he said.

Talking to a group of reporters, Adelman said the ceiling of 3,300 land-based warheads proposed by the administration for a year was "not essential" if other issues in a treaty on long-range weapons could be resolved. The Soviets currently have about 6,400 such warheads.

But Adelman said the United States still would insist on an overall ceiling for ballistic missile warheads. Some are deployed on land and the others at sea.

American negotiators have proposed 4,800 as a ceiling. The Soviets have not responded formally in Geneva with a counteroffer, but Gen. Sergei Akhromyev, the military chief of staff, has suggested 5,100.

Earlier this week, Max M. Kampelman, the chief U.S. negotiator, said if the Soviets put that figure on the table it could be a basis for settling the issue.

Adelman said a ceiling between 4,800 and 5,100 would be acceptable.

Adelman said dropping any sub-ceiling on ICBM warheads would give the two sides more freedom to choose the kind of weapons they would retain under a Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty.

Reagan and Gorbachev agreed last year at the Reykjavik, Iceland, summit to limit their strategic warheads to 6,000. But the Soviets have not accepted U.S. proposals for sub-ceilings on various categories of weapons.

Adelman said the talks would be "a raging success" if the Soviets accepted U.S. proposals for an overall limit of 4,800 to 5,100 on ballistic missile warheads, restraints on heavy missiles and a formula for counting the weapons under the treaty.

But, he said, the 3,300-warhead ceiling on ICBMs sought by U.S. negotiators since the Iceland meeting could be dropped in order to get an agreement.

"I'm saying to me it is preferable to have an ICBM sub-limit," Adelman said. "I'm not convinced it's essential."

The Soviets also have proposed a similar ceiling, and Adelman said they might want to include it in the treaty Reagan hopes to sign next June in Moscow.

The accord would cover American and Soviet long-range nuclear bombers, missiles and submarines. Reagan has presented it as a 50 percent reduction in the two sides' arsenals, but some analysts estimate the cutbacks would be 30 percent to 35 percent.

Adelman said the principal unresolved issue is how to guard against violations. A second issue, the U.S. arms control director said, is whether to ban mobile ICBMs.

The United States wants to outlaw the weapons. The Soviets do not.

Differences over the various ceilings also must be settled before a treaty can be completed.

And yet, Adelman said, both sides want an agreement.

"I tell you what the Soviets want worst of all," the U.S. official said. "They want Ronald Reagan to come to Moscow. They keep talking about it, insisting on it, in a way that is far more exaggerated than I would ever have expected, and more pronounced than I would ever have expected."

The U.S. arms control director said the most likely outcome of next week's summit is directions by Reagan and Gorbachev to their negotiators "to put this stuff into a treaty text."

Inmates End Siege

One of the inmates sitting at the table had wrapped himself in the Cuban and American flags. The group placed a large silver crucifix on the table before them.

Roman, who was flown here by U.S. officials from Miami, said he didn't come as a negotiator.

"I came as a father. I came as a priest. I came as a pastor," he told Cable News Network.

"I feel very proud for my people," said Maria Herren, wife of a detainee. "They didn't hurt them, and I hope that those wives and those families over there that they already have their families, pray for us now."

The federal prisons here and in Louisiana were overrun by Cuban inmates fearing deportation under a new immigration pact in which 2,500 Cubans considered undesirable by the U.S. government would be returned to Cuba.

Meese offered the moratorium on the deportations shortly after the Atlanta siege began.

Authorities did not move immediately to retake control of the prison. But Weldon Kennedy, agent in charge of the Atlanta FBI office, said the inmates agreed to surrender at noon. They will be transferred to other institutions.

"After we've had a complete head count and determined how many have not surrendered, we'll have to go in building by building and sweep the prison," Kennedy said on NBC's Today program.

The Cubans were heavily armed, he said, displaying a 3- to 4-foot-long machete he said was used both to guard and threaten hostages.

The granite face of the 85-year-old U.S. Penitentiary, which once housed Al Capone, was bathed in lights as the pact was signed early today.

On the prison grounds, relatives of hostages waited anxiously to hug their loved ones, while inmates' families rejoiced across the street.

Hostage families watched the signing ceremony on television sets in a small, crowded room in the warden's house. The slow reading of the document, in Spanish and then in English, was interrupted by shouts of "Hurry up. Sign it. Sign it," by anxious relatives.

While hostages headed for their own beds for the first night since Nov. 23, the inmates remained at the prison, which is in the midst of a $40 million facelift. Officials planned to begin moving them to other institutions later today.

At the fiery start of the uprising, one inmate was killed by a shotgun blast, at least two dozen people were hurt and three buildings were gutted. At the time, there were nearly 1,400 Cuban inmates and about 200 Americans locked up, but by the time the takeover had ended, 1,105 Cuban and 17 American prisoners remained.

Inmates came close to a mass release of hostages Thanksgiving night after a meeting between inmate representatives and three Cuban exile heroes, including two men who spent at least 20 years each in prisons on the island.

But the inmates rejected that plan to release approximately 50 hostages. Leshaw, who for years has pressed immigration cases on the Cubans' behalf, met with six detainee representatives Wednesday as cautious optimism spread among weary federal officials.

One of the negotiators for the Cuban prisoners, eight-year detainee Carlos Marrero Gonzalez, said it took "all of our effort and all of our force" to convince some of the inmates that the agreement was the best possible.

Negotiations were slowed while federal representatives talked with at least 27 Cubans who claimed to speak for the detainees, Kennedy said.

At least 200 "hard-liners" never did ratify the agreement, Kennedy said, adding, "They wanted a guarantee that there would not be deportations."

Leshaw said, "They got the best deal they thought they were going to get. They proved their point — they got their reviews that they wanted and the fair hearings that they have not had for the last seven to eight years."

Meese approved provisions of the agreement before it went to the inmates for approval.

Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten said the pact not only applies to Cuban inmates at Oakdale and Atlanta but also to all 3,800 Mariel arrivals in county, state and federal prisons nationwide. Hostages said they were well treated by the Cubans.

"They were very good to us," Ellison McKnight told CNN. "There was a time when I thought that this is it. ... (But) they wanted to make sure we stayed alive. They knew that if we stayed alive, they stayed alive."

U-SAVE Grant

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — Wilson Opportunity Industrialization Center's family violence project U-SAVE has been awarded a $20,000 grant from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation to support the Male Abuser Project.

The grant was given to the United Services Assistance and Volunteer Effort.

U-SAVE's major focus is the establishment of a countywide central data collection and referral points that coordinate various community services for victims of domestic violence.

According to the grant proposal submitted by Wilson OIC, the Male Abuser Project is a pilot project for the treatment of the male abuser. The project will forge an alliance between U-SAVE, the office of the district attorney and the Wesley Shelter — a residence for abused women in Wilson County.

Europe Threatened Dollar

Ministry buildings by the time the leaders arrived.

Schlueter staged a pre-summit swing through European capitals, but failed to budge Mrs. Thatcher or freer-spending EEC nations from their respective positions on the financing dispute.

"All 12 (governments) must moderate their national positions. We must all of us give a bit," Schlueter said.

Britain, which has few farmers, has threatened to veto any new source of funds unless the EEC ends what Mrs. Thatcher regards as wasteful levels of agricultural subsidies.

Farm subsidies consume two-thirds of the 42-billion European currency unit ($52 billion) budget, are growing rapidly and increasing already huge stockpiles.

For example, the EEC's wheat surpluses now stand at 14 million metric tons despite give-aways and cheap sales to outsiders. That amount could grow to 100 million tons by 1992 if surplus production continues unabated.

West Germany and France, which are along with Britain the only net contributors to the EEC budget, want looser and more gradual controls.

Two weeks ago, Reagan told reporters the dollar had fallen enough. Those comments came on the heels of Baker's suggestion in a Wall Street Journal interview that the administration would let the dollar fall rather than risk a recession with stringent monetary policies to prop it up.

And, like Thursday's presidential remarks, Reagan's earlier comments also produced a later clarification from Fitzwater.

Dillahunt Named To All-Star Team

ATLANTA (AP) — Third-ranked Florida State placed All-American defensive stars Paul McGowan and Deion Sanders plus five of their teammates on The Associated Press All-South Independent football team for 1987.

Ellis Dillahunt, a defensive back, was the only selection on the team from East Carolina University. He has been picked to play in the annual Blue-Gray Game on Christmas Day in Mobile, Ala.

The team, announced Thursday, included three other All-Americans — wide receiver Marc Zeno of Tulane and defensive end Daniel Stubbs and defensive back Bennie Blades, both of second-ranked Miami.

The Hurricanes placed three others on the All-South Independent team and No. 8 South Carolina had six, including sophomore quarterback Todd Ellis and his favorite receiver, wingback Sterling Sharpe.

Coach Joe Morrison of South

Carolina edged out FSU's Bobby Bowden 5-4 for Coach of the Years honors in balloting by a panel of sportswriters in the region. Miami's Jimmy Johnson had two votes in the balloting.

Others named to the offensive unit were wide receiver Michael Irvin of Miami, tight end Pat Carter of FSU, down linemen Pat Tomberlin of FSU, Tim Borcky of Memphis State, Pat Ferrell of Southern Mississippi and Matt Patchan of Miami, center Woody Myers of South Carolina, running back Sammie Smith of FSU and all-time NCAA scoring leader Derek Schmidt, FSU's placekicker.

Joining Miami's Stubbs on the defensive front were end Terry Warren of FSU, tackles Eric Hayes of FSU and Scott Hill of Virginia Tech and middle guard Roy Hart of South Carolina.

George Mira Jr. of Miami occupied a linebacker spot and the secondary also included Brad Edwards of South Carolina and Dillahunt. South Carolina's Rodney Price was the punter.

Zeno, the all-time leaders in pass receiving yardage, caught 77 for 1,206 yards in 1987.

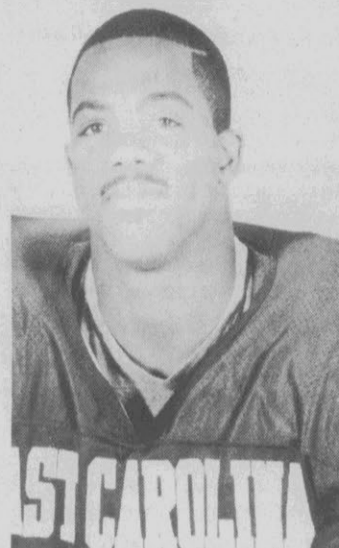

South Carolina's Ellis completed 203 of 357 passes for 2,761 yards and nine touchdowns, with teammate Sharpe catching 52 passes for 793 yards. Miami's Irvin had 37 receptions for 594 yards.

FSU's Smith rushed for 1,230 yards on 172 attempts, a 7.1 average per carry, and Schmidt kicked 23 of 31 field goals and 47 of 50 extra points for 116 points, finishing his career with a record 393 points.

Carter caught 28 passes for 274 yards and Carolina's Price had the top punting average, 41.6.

Named to the second team offense were wide receivers Herb Gainer of FSU and Brian Blades of Miami, tight end Steve Johnson of VPI, linemen Scott Dill of Memphis State, Kevin Keefe of VPI, Andre Lockley of Tulane and Jason Kuipers of FSU and centers Rod Holder of Miami and Ted Gatewood of Memphis State.

Tulane's Terrence Jones was the second team quarterback, Shelton Gandy of Southern Mississippi and Harold Green of South Carolina claimed running back spots and the kicking position went to Greg Cox of Miami.

The second defensive front consisted of ends Marlon Brown of Memphis State and Bill Hawkins of Miami and tackles Brendan McCormack of South Carolina and Odell Higgins of FSU.

Linebacking spots went to Southern Mississippi's Sidney Coleman and Onesimus Henry, Louisville's Chris Sellars and Miami's Rod Carter. In the secondary were Carter Wiley of VPI, Mitchell Price of Tulane, Greg Philpot of South Carolina and Thomas King of Southwestern Louisiana. Southern's Billy Knighten was the No. 2 punter.

Heels, Terps, Cavaliers, Deacons All Post Wins

By The Associated Press
Top-ranked North Carolina is unbeaten after four games, but the Mad Hatters of Stetson didn't give up without a fight.

"We kept battling back and I was pleased with that," said Stetson coach Glenn Wilkes. "I have to admire my team for having the heart and the character to battle back like that."

The Tar Heels earned a 86-74 victory Thursday night, but coach Dean Smith noted that the game mirrored the start to the season.

"We did some nice things and some things that weren't so nice," Smith said. "We're overrated as far as ranking."

In other games involving Atlantic Coast Conference teams, Wake Forest defeated Davidson 78-65, Virginia blasted North Carolina-Wilmington 87-51 and Maryland held off Winthrop 65-52.

Scott Williams scored 16 points and Kevin Madden added 12 for the Tar Heels, including seven straight in a decisive second-half run. But neither Smith, Madden nor Williams got to rest until the buzzer.

North Carolina led 80-51 when J.R. Reid hit a foul shot with 7:13 left. But the Hatters weren't done.

Terry Johnson hit three 3-point field goals in an 18-1 run that closed the margin to 81-69 with 3:02 left.

"You have to give Stetson credit," Smith said. "We had them down, but they came back and made those 3-point plays. We have to be happy to win over a Stetson team that is capable, especially when they make the 3-point shot."

Joining Williams and Madden in double figures were Reid and Peter Chilcutt with 12 each and Jeff Lebo with 11.

Randy Anderson led Stetson, 2-1, with 15 points. Andrew Woodward added 14 points and 13 rebounds and Johnson also scored 14.

In Winston-Salem, Robert Siler's two free throws broke a tie and sparked a run that led the Demon Deacons to the victory.

Siler, a freshman, hit the free throws with 7:18 remaining to break a tie at 52. The Demon Deacons then went on a 15-4 run to clinch their first victory this season after an opening-night loss on Monday.

"We're pleased to come back the way we did tonight and play as well as we did after Monday night was a credit to our players," said coach Bob Staak. "Robert Siler played a great game."

Davidson had led by as much as 40-29 after Derek Rucker's two free throws with three minutes left in the first half. But the Wildcats went cold and the Demon Deacons closed the gap to 42-38 at halftime.

Rucker scored 21 points in the first half, but Wake Forest used a diamond and one defense to concentrate on Rucker, and he had only five points in the second half.

In Charlottesville, John Crotty scored 20 points, including 18 in the second half, as the Cavaliers climbed to 2-1 for the season. John Johnson finished with 15 points. Bill Batts had 13, and Richard Morgan added 12.

The Seahawks, 0-2, got a game-high 21 points from Larry Houzer.

Derrick Lewis scored 16 points as Maryland, 3-0, held off several second-half comeback attempts by Winthrop.

Freshman Brian Williams finished with 13 points and four blocked shots. Greg Washington led Winthrop, 2-1, with 16 points.

Ohio State's Spielman Takes Lombardi Award

HOUSTON (AP) — Ohio State linebacker Chris Spielman looked nervous as he waited with three other finalists for the naming of the Lombardi Award winner as the nation's outstanding collegiate lineman.

"I was concentrating, I had kind of a feeling like it was game day," Spielman said. "It was a big opportunity for me and I just wanted to get it over."

Just as he did throughout his collegiate career with the Buckeyes, Spielman came out a winner again Thursday, earning the 40-pound granite trophy on his second attempt.

"When they called my name it was like doing 85 miles per hour and seeing red lights behind you," said Spielman, a finalist for the honor last year. "You get a funny feeling in your stomach."

Spielman beat out Oklahoma tight end Keith Jackson, Auburn defensive tackle Tracy Rocker and Syracuse nose guard Ted Gregory for the 18th annual trophy, named in honor of the former Green Bay and Washington coach and member of Fordham University's famed Seven Blocks of Granite who died of cancer in 1970.

Proceeds go to the American Cancer Society for research.

"I believe all four of us are winners here tonight," Spielman said. "It means something special because we didn't have the year we expected at Ohio State."

The Buckeyes finished 6-4-1 and Coach Earle Bruce was fired prior to the final game against Michigan.

"It feels like something good came out of this season after all," Spielman said.

"When I look up and see myself around guys that are going to bowl games it hurts me deep inside," Spielman said. "I'm jealous of them."

The other finalists missed out on the award but they'll be playing in bowl games this postseason.

"I think we're all a little bitter," Spielman said. "I think the president has a right to hire and fire the coach, but I disagree with his timing."

"I don't understand how he can win 75 percent of his games and beat Michigan five out of nine years and get fired. It shows how sometimes college football is controlled by politics."

Spielman recorded 156 tackles for the Buckeyes this season, 78 of them solos. Spielman's 1987 totals gave him 546 career tackles, including 283 solos.

Jackson, a 6-3, 241-pound tight end, set a school record with an average of 28.1 yards per catch this season, and his 1,759 receiving yards ranked second on the all-time Sooner list.

Gregory, a nose guard for unbeaten Syracuse, was injured in the seventh game of the season but finished the year second in unassisted tackles with 38. He has 242 career tackles.

Rocker, the only junior among the finalists, led Auburn tacklers as a freshman in 1985 and despite an injury this season, has 254 career tackles and 16 quarterback sacks.

Ohio State's Jim Stillwagon won the first award in 1970.

USC Blitzing A Double Challenge

MIAMI (AP) — University of Miami quarterback Steve Walsh says South Carolina's blitzing defense will present the No. 2 Hurricanes with both challenges and opportunities Saturday night.

"If we're sharp, we can score a lot of points," Walsh said. "We'll probably throw more this game than in any of the past games."

Eighth-ranked South Carolina, second in the nation in fewest yards and points allowed, rushes five to eight men on most plays. Walsh said that's the type of defense he prefers to face.

"It'll be one-on-one with our wideouts," the sophomore quarterback said. "I think our wideouts are the best in the nation, and I don't feel anybody can cover them one-on-one. So it's a challenge I'm looking forward to, because if we can make connections there are a lot of opportunities for some big plays."

If the Hurricanes make enough big plays, they'll take an 11-0 record into the Orange Bowl game against No. 1 Oklahoma on New Year's night. But South Carolina Coach Joe Morrison said his team isn't motivated by an opportunity to damage Miami's chances for the national championship.

"All that will be resolved later on down the road," Morrison said. "I don't know whether our ball game will have a particular impact or not."

None of the few other games on the final Saturday of the regular season have a bearing on the national title, either. Army plays Navy in the 88th renewal of that annual rivalry, Arkansas is at Hawaii and Brigham Young and Colorado State play at Melbourne, Australia.

Miami Coach Jimmy Johnson said South Carolina ranks with Florida State as the best teams the Hurricanes have played. The Gamecocks' defense is complemented by a run-and-shoot offense that is averaging 31 points per game and will test Miami's secondary.

"They have great receivers, so talent has as much to do with it as the offense itself," Johnson said. "Then you've got Todd Ellis, who was one of the most sought-after quarterbacks in the country a couple of years ago."

Ellis, a sophomore, has thrown for 2,761 yards. His favorite receiver is the explosive Stanley Sharpe, and tailback Harold Green has scored 15 touchdowns.

The Gator Bowl-bound Gamecocks, 8-2, have won six straight.

Miami is coming off a 24-0 victory over Notre Dame that followed unimpressive defeats of Toledo and Virginia Tech. Before the Notre Dame game, Miami's seniors held a closed meeting that provided a spark, offensive guard Scott Provin said.

"We said to ourselves, 'Hey, we've got to prove to America that we're not just a mediocre team,'" Provin said. "We came out more united. We wanted to get back the positive attitude we had last year."

Despite a mid-season slump against weak opponents, Miami has won 31 straight regular-season games, the longest streak in the nation.

"Miami certainly is one of the finest, if not the finest, teams in the country," Morrison said. "Not only do they have outstanding size and athletic ability on both offense and defense, but they have great quickness and speed."

The offense is led by Walsh, who has thrown 17 touchdown passes and only five interceptions. Michael Irvin and Brian Blades are the dangerous wide receivers. Tailback Warren Williams has rushed for 650 yards and caught 26 passes.

Miami was the first team to shut out Notre Dame since the Hurricanes did it in 1983. The defense, third in the nation in fewest points allowed, is led by All-Americans Dan Stubbs at end and Bennie Blades at safety.

Neither Army nor Navy has had a winning year. But a victory in the season finale at sold-out Veterans Stadium in Philadelphia can restore some lost pride.

Tory Crawford, who led Division I-A quarterbacks in rushing as a junior, plays his last game for Army. Injuries have forced the Cadets to use six quarterbacks this year, and Crawford missed time after knee surgery. Army is 4-6, Navy 2-8.

Arkansas, 8-3, is led by Joe Rouse, who has run for 908 yards. The Razorbacks will next play in the Liberty Bowl against Georgia. Hawaii, 5-6, has lost four of its last five games.

BYU is adding to its international experience by going to Australia. The Cougars played in Japan in 1977 and 1978.

Brigham Young, 8-3, has a berth in the All-America Bowl Dec. 22 against Virginia. Colorado State, which cost BYU a share of the Western Athletic Conference title last season, is 1-10.

Other divisions continue their playoffs this weekend. In NCAA I-AA, it is Weber State at Marshall, Georgia Southern at Appalachian State, Eastern Kentucky at Northeast Louisiana and Arkansas State at Northern Iowa.

The Division II semifinals have Troy State, Ala., at Central Florida and Northern Michigan at Portland State. In Division III, it's Central

Army Back At The Start

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Six quarterbacks later, Army is back where it started for its annual clash with the Navy, and a recuperated Tory Crawford is ready to run the Cadets' wishbone offense.

"There's a lot of tradition in this game," Crawford said Thursday during a break in the Cadets' preparation for Saturday's meeting at Veterans Stadium, the 88th clash of the service academies. "Once you've participated in a game like this, you feel you are part of that history."

Crawford, a 5-foot-11, 185-pound senior quarterback, led Army to a 27-7 rout of the Midshipmen last year with 94 yards rushing and one touchdown. He finished the season with 1,078 yards gained on the ground, the third highest in total in Army history.

But Crawford sustained a sprained knee ligament in this season's fourth game, against Wake Forest. Mark Mooney came in for Crawford and, despite dislocating a toe, finished the 17-3 loss.

Bryan Babb started the next game, scoring two touchdowns in a 29-24 loss to Boston College, but he started only one more week, against Colgate. A few days later, the Cadets learned that Babb needed surgery on a cancerous tumor.

Mooney came back against Rutgers, but he went down with a separated shoulder. Morrell Savoy took over and twisted his left ankle before the end of the 27-14 loss.

Army Coach Jim Young started freshman Bryan McWilliams against Temple, and McWilliams was knocked out of the game with a dislocated finger. Another plebe directed Army to its 17-7 win.

The 46 Cadets, favored by a touchdown over the 2-8 Middies, finally received some good news when Crawford returned to the Air Force Academy game Nov. 7. Army lost, 17-10, but Crawford proved the following week he was back in form when he gained 104 yards on the ground and scored three touchdowns in a 49-37 win over Lafayette.

SMU Shocks Florida

By The Associated Press
Don't blame seventh-ranked Florida if it decides to skip the next reunion at Reunion Arena.

Todd Alexander scored 24 points and Southern Methodist avenged a 40-point loss to Florida last season by upsetting the Gators 82-76 Thursday night in college basketball.

"It was a terrific win for us," SMU Coach Dave Bliss said. "It was one of the rare occasions where we got a Top Ten team on our own court."

The Mustangs rushed to a 52-32 halftime lead. Eric Longino scored all his 19 points in the first half.

"We were just stunned," Florida Coach Norm Sloan said. "SMU was really playing on adrenaline."

SMU is 3-0. Florida, which won the Big Apple NIT last weekend, is 4-1.

In other games involving ranked teams, No. 1 North Carolina beat Stetson 86-74, No. 11 Purdue got past Wichita State 80-78 in overtime, No. 12 Temple held off UCLA 81-76, No. 16 Kansas escaped Western Carolina 68-63 and No. 19 Nevada-Las Vegas routed Hawaii-Loa 114-46.

Alexander, who was 12-for-13 from the foul line, scored 20 points in the second half as SMU blunted Florida's rally. After the Gators got within 77-74 with 1:06 remaining, Alexander made four free throws.

"Now we know we can play with the top teams in the country," said Alexander, whose Mustangs were trounced 110-70 by Florida last season.

Glenn Puddy had 15 points and Vernon Perdue 10 for SMU, a 10-point underdog.

Vernon Maxwell scored 20 points for Florida and Dwayne Schintzius had 16.

No. 1 North Carolina 86, Stetson 74
Scott Williams scored 16 points and the Tar Heels used a 19-4 burst early in the second half to beat scrappy Stetson.

North Carolina, 4-0, outshot the visiting Hatters from the field, 61 percent to 43 percent. But Stetson, with its tallest player only 6-foot-8, outrebounced the Tar Heels 37-28 and forced them into 18 turnovers.

The Tar Heels led 44-37 with 19:22 left in the game before breaking away to a 63-41 margin. North Carolina increased the lead to 80-51 but Stetson went on an 18-1 streak and stayed close.

J.R. Reid, Kevin Madden and Peter Chilcutt scored 12 points each for North Carolina. Randy Anderson had 15 for Stetson, 2-1.

SOME OF OUR FINEST VIEWS WERE DISCOVERED CENTURIES AGO.
When Verrazano first came ashore at Landfall in 1524, he saw some of the same views that remain today. The towering water oaks. The gentle sweep of the IntraCoastal Waterway. The mysterious aura of hidden lakes, marshes, and creeks.
What has changed at Landfall is the addition of some of the most desirable homesites and villas on the coast.
And much more. A Pete Dye championship golf course, and a second 18-holes by Jack Nicklaus under construction.
A Cliff Drysdale swim and tennis complex that's now in the beginning stages. An ideal location for sailing, boating, fishing, or other water sports and recreation. And, the enhanced security of a gatehouse community.

Haitian Junta Extends Deadline For Council

By ED McCULLOUGH
Associated Press Writer
PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The ruling junta, engaged in a bitter confrontation over who should restage national elections wrecked by violence, today gave civilian authorities another day to name a new Electoral Council.

An official source said the military-dominated government, which has been accused of abetting or allowing the violence that aborted Sunday's vote, will itself name the new electoral panel if the civilians do not act by midnight tonight.

The junta disbanded the first Electoral Council. But members of that panel, which was independent of the government, challenged the junta's authority to dissolve their board.

Civil rights leaders contend that free elections are not possible under the current government.

Presidential candidate Sylvio

Claude and the Association of Public Employees called for a general, open-ended strike starting Monday to force the junta out of office.

Claude originally set the strike for today, but pushed it back to Monday, Radio Metropole reported.

Soldiers and thugs using guns and machetes killed 34 people and wounded 75 others in the hours before and after polls opened Sunday. Many of the victims were standing in line at polling places.

The voting would have been Haiti's first free elections in 30 years.

"Elections are not possible with this criminal government," said the Rev. Jean Bertrand Aristide, a popular Roman Catholic priest.

The three-man National Governing Council led by Lt. Col. Henri Namphy today extended for another 24 hours its deadline for civic groups to name new representatives to the nine-member electoral council. The original deadline expired at midnight Thursday.

"We cannot be expected to approve the arbitrary and illegal decree of Nov. 29, nor the massacre of Nov. 29, which served as a prelude to the decree," said a coalition of human rights groups.

The human rights groups said Haiti's constitution requires the original Electoral Council to be in charge of the election process until a new government is installed on Feb. 7, the second anniversary of dictator Jean-Claude Duvalier's flight to exile in France.

In a televised announcement Thursday night, the government named a six-member committee to investigate the violence that prompted cancellation of the elections.

"Naming new (electoral) representatives is not the intention of the government, but according to the Constitution, if institutions don't respond it is up to the government to select the council," said the government source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The government said new elections would be organized once members to the second electoral board are named.

Louis Roy, one of the key drafters of the Constitution approved overwhelmingly in a referendum this year, said the government misinterpreted constitutional guarantees of an independent Electoral Council.

Aristide on Thursday called for a "real revolution" to oust the junta. He said the government wanted "rigged elections to put a Macoute in office."

The priest was referring to the Tontons Macoute, the Duvaliers' dreaded private militia. Duvalier and his father, Francois Duvalier, ruled the nation for 29 years.

Presidential candidate Claude told reporters Thursday that the general strike was "to continue until the departure of the junta."

"If the junta does not resign, we ask for the intervention of a multinational observer force to supervise elections and guarantee security. I just want people not to be killed anymore," Claude said.

There were no long lines at supermarkets or gas stations to indicate that people were hoarding supplies in anticipation of a long strike.

"I'm not going to buy tons of food every time there is disorder. Otherwise, I would always be in the supermarket," said a 69-year-old man at one store. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Association of Public Employees represents many of the country's 70,000 public employees. A successful strike would require the participation of the The Group of 57, which was the leading force in massive strikes last summer.

In other developments Thursday:

—The U.S. House of Representatives voted without dissent to cut off all U.S. aid to Haiti until the Electoral Council is reinstated and elections are put back on track. The action essentially ratified the earlier suspension of nearly $64 million in U.S. aid by the Reagan administration.

—Amnesty International, the London-based human rights organization, reported in New York that soldiers arrested at least 50 people and sprayed automatic gunfire in a suburb of Port-au-Prince earlier this week.

—The government denied a report by the San Francisco Examiner that soldiers massacred 46 people from Carrefour-Feuilles at a military prison. The Examiner quoted a 19-year-old unidentified Haitian woman as saying the massacre occurred Saturday at a military prison outside Port-au-Prince.

Iran Warns Kuwait Not To Let U.S. Use Barge As Floating Sea Base

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iran warned Kuwait it would capture a barge in the emirate's waters in the Persian Gulf if U.S. forces moored and used it, the Iranian official news agency reported today.

Kuwait has said it would not grant such facilities to foreign powers, despite statements to the contrary by U.S. officials.

Meanwhile, Iraq said its warplanes raided a ship off Iran today. An Iraqi military spokesman in Baghdad said the planes today hit "a large maritime target," or tanker, off the Iranian coast.

Gulf-based marine salvage executives did not immediately confirm the claim.

Also today, anti-Iranian guerrillas claimed they killed 80 Iranian soldiers and wounded another 143 in what they called their first major attack in the southern part of the oil-rich Khuzestan province.

Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani issued the warning against foreign use of the barge during a gathering of war volunteers Thursday, Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency reported.

"If you give them floating bases, you must give us one, too," IRNA quoted Rafsanjani as saying. "Otherwise if we seize this base one day in case of a confrontation, you would have no claim against us."

Defense Department officials said earlier this week that Washington and Kuwait had agreed to use a barge in Kuwaiti territorial waters as a floating base for American forces.

But Kuwait's Defense Minister Sheik Salem al-Sabah on Thursday reiterated his country's policy of not signing "any agreement with any party that grants bases or military facilities on its territory or in its territorial waters." He was quoted by the Kuwait News Agency.

In October, three Iranian missiles hit oil facilities in Kuwait, which Iran accuses of backing Iraq in the 7-year-old Persian Gulf war. U.S. Navy warships are escorting 11 Kuwaiti tankers bearing the American flag to protect them from Iranian attack in the Gulf.

The Mujahedeen Khalq, the largest of the opposition groups fighting the government of Iranian patriarch Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, said just five of its fighters were killed in Wednesday's raid in Khuzestan.

Guerrillas targeted army bases 50 miles southwest of the city of Ahvaz, according to a telex received by The Associated Press in Cyprus.

The group's leader, Massoud Rajavi, called it "the first valuable and extremely significant victory achieved" in the area. The statement said the guerrillas had killed or wounded 4,151 Iranian soldiers in the past 10 days.

The Iranian government did not comment on the Mujahedeen's claim, which could not be independently verified.

At United Nations headquarters in New York, Iran said Thursday it would not agree to a U.N.-sponsored peace resolution until the world body says Iraq started the war in September 1980.

Nicaraguan Talks Move At Slow Pace

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (AP) — Delegations from Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government and U.S.-backed rebels met with a mediator for a second day today in their first attempt to stop a six-year war that has killed 40,000 people.

Negotiations, which began Thursday evening, were expected to be drawn-out and slow.

Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, the go-between in the truce talks, was to return to Managua, the Nicaraguan capital, this afternoon after hearing both sides outline their positions in a series of separate meetings. There were no face-to-face sessions between the warring parties.

Roman Catholic offices are serving as the base for the rebel delegation, while the Sandinista team is at the Nicaraguan Embassy. The cardinal shuttles between the two places delivering each side's views to the other.

Obando, the archbishop of Managua and a leading Sandinista critic, said his primary task was to clarify "some points that still are not very clear" in a cease-fire counterproposal presented to the government delegation last Monday by the rebels, known as Contras.

The cardinal said he would discuss those points with the five-member Contra negotiating team headed by Jaime Morales Carrazo, then pass on their explanations to the government delegation, led by Victor Hugo Tinoco, the Sandinista vice minister for Foreign Affairs.

Morales is an adviser to the Nicaraguan Resistance, an umbrella organization representing several Contra groups. Among those groups is the Nicaraguan Democratic Front, or FDN, which fields a guerrilla army of about 10,000 combatants. No high-level rebel leaders participated in the Santo Domingo talks.

Air Crash Kills 11 American Tourists

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Eleven American tourists were among 13 people killed when their chartered plane crashed in a mountainous area of northwestern Rwanda, U.S. Embassy officials and an airline executive said today.

The propeller-driven Cessna 404 had been chartered by tourists and was on a flight from Goma, Zaire, to Nairobi when it crashed Thursday afternoon near the Rwandan village of Kanama, killing all aboard.

State Department officials in Washington said nine of the American victims were residents of Amarillo, Texas, a newspaper reported today.

"There were 11 Americans aboard, a Kenyan pilot and a Zairois," a spokesman at the U.S. Embassy in Nairobi said. "They all were killed."

John Ouma-Daniel, an executive with Cooper Skybird Air Charters of Nairobi, which owned the plane, said a group of Americans chartered the aircraft Nov. 30 for a safari to Zaire.

He said the plane was due back Thursday.

"There were 13 people aboard — 12 passengers and the pilot," said John Ouma-Daniel. "The majority of the passengers would appear to be Americans."

Neither the U.S. Embassies in Nairobi or Kigali, the Rwandan capital, nor Ouma-Daniel would release the passengers' names or hometowns because the victims' relatives had not been notified.

The Amarillo (Texas) Globe-News reported today that State Department officials identified some of the victims as: Dr. Danny Schwartz, an obstetrician-gynecologist; Dr. Thelma Yambao, an obstetrician with Texas Tech Health Sciences Center; and Jill Cowan and Nancy Gerald, all of Amarillo.

It added that the State Department refused to identify five other Amarillo residents also killed in the crash until their relatives were informed.

Women Captains Hold Major Role In Ferry Service

By CHARLES HILLINGER
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

OXFORD, Md. — The Oxford-Bellevue Ferry across the Tred Avon River is the oldest privately owned car-and-passenger ferry service in America. And one of its captains is a woman.

But that is nothing new. Women have played an important part in the history of this 304-year-old ferry service.

In the 1700s, Judith Bennett was married to three different captains on the ferry line and served as a captain herself between husbands.

Two other women skippers in that century were Catherine Bennett, daughter-in-law of Judith Bennett, who ran the ferry five years beginning in 1737, and Elizabeth Skinner, who operated it during the 1750s.

In the minutes for the Talbot County Commissioners meeting Nov. 20, 1683, is this notation:

"This court have pitch upon Mr. Richard Royston to keepe a ferry for horses and men over Tred Haven to the towne of Oxford and back gaine."

Royston had come to Maryland from England in 1670. He was an attorney, an agent for a London grocer and a grand jury foreman in a celebrated hog-stealing case before he began the Oxford-Bellevue Ferry.

The same ferry service has three regular captains today: Gilbert Clark, 63; his daughter, Valerie Bittner, 39; and her husband, David Bittner, 42.

David is a civil engineering graduate of Lehigh University. He served in the Air Force five years as a jet pilot before becoming a ferry skipper.

Valerie is a seventh-generation ferry captain.

"It's an honor to be a ferryboat captain on this historic run, especially since my great-great-great-great-grandfather, great-great-great-grandfather, great-great-grandfather, great-grandfather, grandfather and father were all ferryboat skippers," Valerie Bittner noted. She is, however, the first female captain in the family.

"I think I'm a natural for this job. I have been around ferryboats all my life. It's in my blood," she allowed as she stood in the pilothouse behind the wheel of the 10-car ferry Talbot on a seven-minute, ¾-mile run from Bellevue to Oxford.

The Bittners and Clark have two boats chugging back and forth at speeds up to 10 knots across the Tred Avon: the 10-car steel ferry boat Talbot, commissioned in 1980, and the seven-car Southside, afloat since 1923.

Clark brought the Southside down from New York, where he had operated it between Shelter Island and Long Island. The Clark family ran the Shelter Island ferry continuously from the 1850s until Gilbert Clark sold out in 1974 and bought the Oxford-Bellevue ferry from Captain William Benson.

Benson owned and operated the ferry from 1936 until he sold it in 1974. The 76-year-old ferryboat captain is still at it. He is a relief skipper, and in February he will celebrate 50 years running ferryboats on the Oxford-Bellevue crossing.

Residents from miles around — in cars, trucks, on bicycles and on foot — ride the ferry between the two tiny towns at the south end of a peninsula. The ferry saves 25 miles of driving. On weekends and busy days, Clark and the Bittners will operate both the Southside and the Talbot to handle the traffic; otherwise they take turns running the ferry from dawn to dusk seven days a week.

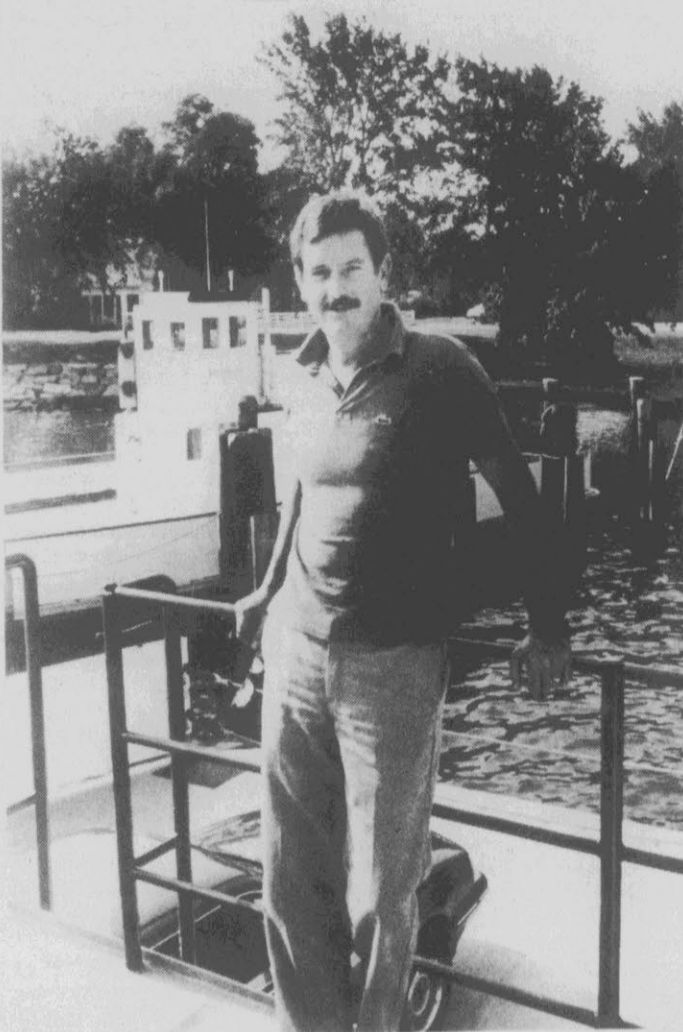

In September, the Talbot was pressed into service as a fire boat. Early on a quiet Sunday morning, a 58-foot yacht caught fire from an electrical short in the Tred Avon River off Bellevue. There were three people and three parrots aboard.

The Talbot, with two fire trucks aboard, arrived to put out the fire and save the yacht. The birds and the humans made it safely to shore in a dinghy.

"For years we have been practicing with the local fire department for just this type of happening," said David Bittner.

It was another exciting page in the history of America's oldest ferry service. "Stories about people and events connected with this ferry during the last 300 years would fill several books, I'm sure," Valerie Bittner mused.

"The captain I would like to know more about is that Judith Bennett," she said. "What happened to her three ferryboat skipper husbands? Did they die or just take off and leave her to run the ferry? I wish I knew. I often think when I'm up here in the wheelhouse about those other women captains who lived so long ago and wonder what life was like for them running the old ferryboats between Oxford and Bellevue across the Tred Avon."

Blacks Slowly Making Inroads In National Greeting Card Sales

By KATHRYN HARRIS

LOS ANGELES — Six years ago, Stephanie P. Honeywood tried to sell her sister's greeting cards to the fashionable galleries and shops along Connecticut Avenue in the nation's capital. The sisters are black, and the art is black-themed.

"They wouldn't even look at what I had," Honeywood says. "It was just too new; too different."

Now actor Bill Cosby owns some of Varnette P. Honeywood's artwork, and reproductions are part of the set decorations on "The Cosby Show," the nation's most-watched prime-time television series. The Honeywoods' greeting cards have found their way into nearly 150 shops and galleries across the country.

But that is a tiny dent in the greeting card business when American Greetings, the industry's largest publicly traded company, boasts of 65,000 outlets for its cards.

Only now are black artists and black entrepreneurs attempting to make inroads in the industry, despite the fact that 12 percent of the nation's population is black.

The sparse distribution of black-themed art is sometimes attributed to the merchants' fear of offending either black or white customers with an ill-chosen "image," as the artwork on cards is called.

But more complex reasons lie in the distribution system itself, and in the artists' reluctance to plunge full time into the greeting card business. Many artists explain that they would rather paint than sell. By operating small greeting card businesses from their homes, they can create images of their own liking and retain control. The sales may not be staggering, but they provide a welcome flow of income.

No nationwide distribution system now serves those independents, although at least one Los Angeles company has tried and failed.

For more than three years, a company called Black Is More Than

White House Chef Faces Big Moment

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House's first American-born executive chef gets a chance to show his stuff to top-ranking visitors from the Soviet Union when President and Mrs. Reagan throw a state dinner for Kremlin leader Mikhail Gorbachev and his wife, Raisa.

The dinner, scheduled for Dec. 8, is the social highlight of the three-day superpower summit. The Soviets will give a return dinner the following night at their embassy.

Although this will be chef Jon Hill's biggest moment since he took over at the White House on Oct. 1, he has had time to practice on heads of state from El Salvador, Israel and other countries.

According to Hill's predecessor, Swiss-born Henry Haller, Reagan has given an average of one state dinner per month since first coming to office in 1981. This one will attract more attention than most, but they are all sumptuous affairs.

Hill, 33, of Spokane, Wash., has declined to give interviews since coming to the White House.

"If he gave all the interviews that have been requested, he would never get dinner on the table," said Elaine Crispin, first lady Nancy Reagan's press secretary.

At his last job, as executive chef of the Westin Cypress Creek Hotel in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Hill oversaw an eclectic menu highlighting native American food. Specialties ranged from a breakfast creation of thick bread soaked in egg batter overnight to sauteed sea scallops in tequila with grapefruit sections.

Menus for state dinners are normally kept secret until just before the event, so it is not known what the Gorbachevs will be served. Whatever it is, the Reagans may have tried it first.

"Mrs. Reagan is very much involved in the planning for state dinners and other official functions hosted by the White House," Haller wrote in his newly published "White House Family Cookbook."

He said the first lady "usually reviews the menu early on in the planning of the event, to allow time for a 'dry run' whenever she deems it appropriate."

"In such cases, the White House kitchen will prepare a scaled-down version of the special meal from soup to dessert, including the proposed sauces and garnishes, for the first lady and several guests."

Haller, who retired in October after 21 years at the White House, said he has seen "a gradual evolution in the cuisine ... from the Johnsons' family-style meals to the Nixons' French fare, to the Fords' all-American and the Carters' Southern favorites." Mrs. Reagan, he said, "prefers light and sophisticated food, with equal emphasis on appearance and taste."

The title of White House executive chef was created in the Kennedy administration, when the first professionally trained civilian chef was hired, according to James Allan, assistant usher at the White House. Before that, Navy stewards were responsible.

The Kennedys hired French-born Rene Verdon, who was replaced by Haller in the Johnson administration.

Before going to Florida, Hill spent six years at the Westin Mauna Kea Beach Hotel in Kamuela, Hawaii, and two years as executive sous chef at the Arizona Biltmore, where the Reagans have stayed during their trips to Phoenix, including their honeymoon in 1952.

In an interview at the time of Hill's appointment, Haller described him as an executive chef who likes to cook, saying that is important because the kitchen staff at the White House is small and it is not unusual to find the head man peeling potatoes.

Fast Freights Could Give Trains An Edge

By KEITH BRADSHAW
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

It was nearly 4 a.m., and the outskirts of San Bernardino, Calif., ahead were pitch black as engineer Alvin Wolfe, one hand on the brake and the other near the throttle, eased his westbound express freight train down the steep grade from the Cajon Pass.

Between Barstow, Calif., and Victorville, Calif., his train, providing the fastest transcontinental freight rail service ever scheduled, had hurtled along at 70 miles per hour. But now Wolfe, wearing a yellow corduroy cap with the words "Santa Fe" stitched in red, kept the train's speed down to 24 mph.

"If your wheels warm up, your brake efficiency goes way down," he explained. Ten feet off the ground in the yellow diesel-electric locomotive's cab, progress seemed glacial.

Despite the pre-dawn hour, Interstate 15 — paralleling the tracks — was clogged with trucks, a long line of red dots in the dark. The trucks were pulling ahead, but Wolfe refused to ease up on the brake. "There they go, unsafe at any speed," he said ruefully, making a typical railroad worker remark on the safety of anything that can haul less than a thousand tons.

Since Congress began deregulating the trucking and railway industries in 1980, trucks have been gaining on trains in hauling U.S. freight. Railroad executives hope that recently launched express freight train services such as Santa Fe's, begun in late July, may help them recapture lost business.

According to the Association of American Railroads in Washington, trucks hauled 25.1 percent of U.S. intercity freight tonnage last year, up from 22.3 percent in 1980, while the market share for trains has fallen to 35.8 percent from 37.5 percent in the same period. At the same time, the railway industry's average revenue for hauling a ton of freight one mile has slumped from a peak of 3.212 cents in 1982 to a crippling 2.921 cents last year.

"The pressure on rates is almost unbearable because of the trucking

Strict Rules Keep Criminals Out Of Town

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

BISCAYNE PARK, Fla. (AP) — Posted at every entrance to this picturesque village is the sign: "Don't even THINK of speeding." The warnings are for real.

It is that kind of discipline that has made Biscayne Park one of the safest communities in the United States.

"Someone described our village as 'an oasis in a desert of crime,'" said Police Chief Dan Marx, who has headed the city's seven-person police force for 12 years.

Pie-shaped and only 64 square miles in area, Biscayne Park is bordered on the north by North Miami, on the south by Miami Shores and by unincorporated Dade County on the east and west perimeters.

"It's a bedroom community with a negative drug problem," said Marx of the 3,200 population. Serious crime is minimal and the last homicide, he recalled, occurred in 1974.

"A couple years ago, Biscayne Village was the fifth-safest community in the United States," said patrolman Nick Ladas, born and raised in this village of manicured lawns, promenade street lighting and tree-lined medians.

There are no sidewalks or gutters, high-rises or office buildings and the 1,200 single-family homes here are provided valet garbage service.

"People don't put their trash out front," said Edward Burke, a retired plumbing-mechanical contractor and Biscayne Park's mayor for 22 years. "Three times a week our public works people go around to the backyards to pick up the trash."

"No business — nothing — is allowed here," emphasized Ladas — not even a doctor's or lawyer's shingle.

There is no school and the only place of worship is the Church of the Resurrection-Episcopal.

"The toughest job is keeping it as it was," said Burke of repeated efforts by outside developers to encroach on the city's serenity and zoning restrictions. "We're hanging on with both hands to keep a piece of the past."

Incorporated in 1933 and chartered in 1933 by the late developer, Arthur Griffing, Biscayne Park remains unchanged, in part, by natural barriers — railroad tracks on the east and a canal on the west.

"Fifteen years ago, residents were predominantly older, but now about 30 percent are under 35," said Ladas.

CBS African Documentary Concentrates On Children

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In an especially eloquent moment during the CBS documentary "Children of Apartheid," Roxanne Botha, 27-year-old daughter of President P.W. Botha, sings a song of her own composition in a banquet room whose long, elegantly appointed table is lined with empty chairs.

Cut to Zinzi Mandela, also 27, and dozens of other fist-waving blacks singing a rousing anti-apartheid song.

"Children of Apartheid" is a fine piece of filmmaking that CBS has, unfortunately, elected to air on the network's worst night for ratings, Saturday. The 1-hour documentary airs at 8 p.m. EST.

Walter Cronkite is host and was to have conducted the interviews, but he couldn't get a work visa and was not allowed to conduct on-camera interviews under South Africa's press restrictions.

The piece really belongs to producer Brian Ellis, who went to South Africa last year to establish contacts, then returned a few weeks later to conduct the on-camera interviews.

All those interviewed are youths, from 10-year-olds who have been jailed by the police to teen-agers who despair of ever uniting their country.

"I don't think there's any absence of documentaries on South Africa these days," Cronkite said in a telephone interview, "but what's not been examined, it seemed to me, was the children and how are they growing up, with what attitudes. How will they approach the problem? Do they simply reflect the various opinions of their elders or do they seem to have some of their own? What do they expect from their future, because the future is in their hands, excuse the cliché. We can get a little peek at the future by having a good look at the youth of today."

Cronkite says in the introduction, "reports like this one are assembled at some risk, with not infrequent questioning of reporters and camera crews. Some of the young people who spoke to us on camera did so with the knowledge that they might be subject to arrest."

Getting the interviews was "difficult, very hard," Ellis said in a telephone interview. "It was almost as hard to get the blacks to talk as it was the whites. They don't know. You come from outside. There's a concern about who you are and who you represent."

At one point in the documentary, Ellis reminds Zinzi Mandela that a previous conversation was interrupted by a visit from the police. Ms. Mandela's father, Nelson, has been in prison for 25 years for anti-apartheid activities.

"Yeah," she says. "Well, I mean, our families make a joke that I've literally been raised by the police. I mean, they've been a part of my life ever since I can remember."

Ellis said in a telephone interview that meetings with Ms. Mandela were actually interrupted twice, once by a search of her house, once after persons fired on the house during the night and police came to investigate.

"I certainly didn't want to be there when the police came out to investigate a shooting," Ellis said. "As we were talking, sure enough, the police rolled up, and I went over the back gates."

Ellis and his crew were themselves detained by police once. He said a black crowd gathered because they couldn't believe white police would arrest other whites. They were released a short time later, Ellis said, "because they didn't ask the right question of the right person."

"I was probably more worried about running into mischief with some of the black militant groups," he said. "There were a couple of nights I actually slept in the townships. They don't know who you are, you could be anyone, and there isn't any time to ask questions. I never really felt any fear for my life. I don't want to leave the impression. But I was nervous."

W. Germans Love Soaps

By JOAN FISCHER
Associated Press Writer
FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — West Germans, it seems, can't get enough of their own prime-time soap operas.

West German-produced shows dealing with everything from extramarital affairs to homosexuality to drug abuse are drawing millions of West Germans to their TV sets each week.

The hit series "Schwarzwaldklinik" ("Black Forest Hospital") deals with the professional and private dilemmas of doctors, nurses and patients at a hospital in West Germany's scenic Black Forest.

The series "Lindenstrasse" ("Linden Street") sticks close to real life in its presentation of the joys and problems of a group of neighbors in Munich.

And, in response to seemingly insatiable public demand, a West German series called "Waldhaus" ("House in the Forest"), about a backwoods restaurant and the family running it, premiered last month.

Spiegel magazine has already panned "Waldhaus," saying, "It's possible the show's audience will soon be staggering around mindlessly, with a horrible stomachache."

The West German soaps are usually aired once a week, mostly in the evening. However, some are broadcast in the popular afternoon slot.

Viewers seem to like the shows' combination of sentimental drama and moral affirmation. In spite of the characters' problems, good and evil are clearly defined, and the good guys win in the end.

The two-year-old series "Schwarzwaldklinik" was rated No. 2, with 18.3 million viewers, in a recent TV ratings list in Stern magazine. That represents about half of the TV-viewing public.

Although U.S. imports such as "Dallas" and "Dynasty" remain popular, a TV station spokesman attributed the rise of West German-produced soap operas to increasing public demand.

"We've noticed that the public here prefers West German-produced shows to imported ones. They simply identify more with situations and characters in their own country," said Siegfried Braum of the ZDF television station.

A current story line in "Lindenstrasse" deals with the difficulties faced by a Greek family living in West Germany, a relevant aspect of life in a country with a large influx of foreigners.

The series, now in its third year, has also tackled topics such as mercy killing, violence in the family, unemployment and alcoholism.

Some 13.5 million viewers in this country of 61.5 million residents regularly tune in to "Lindenstrasse."

"Viewers write us that hearing the characters' troubles discussed on the show helps them work out their real-life problems," Hans-Joerg Hoerber, a spokesman for WDR-TV, said.

Some other hit soap operas are "Traumschiff" ("Dream Boat") and "Ich Heirate Eine Familie" ("I'm Married to a Family").

Despite the soaps' mass popularity, some West Germans say the series are shallow and filled with clichés.

Sally Field Has Baby Boy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Academy Award-winning actress Sally Field and producer-husband Alan Greisman are the parents of a 6-pound, 7-ounce boy, a spokeswoman for the actress said Wednesday.

The boy, named Samuel H. Morlan Greisman, was delivered without complications at 7:30 a.m., said Heidi Schaeffer. She declined to identify the hospital.

He is the first child for the couple, who married in March 1986, and the third for Miss Field, who has two boys, Peter, 18, and Eli, 15, from her five-year marriage to Steve Craig. They were divorced in 1973.

Miss Field, 41, first gained fame in the title roles in the original "Gidget" series in 1965-1966 for ABC-TV and "The Flying Nun" for the same network in 1967-70.

She won best actress Academy Awards in 1979 for "Norma Rae" and in 1984 for "Places in the Heart." She was awarded an Emmy for her performance in the 1976 NBC television film "Sybil."

Cher Skips Steamy Scenes In 'Suspect' Film Thriller

By LARRY McSHANE
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The money-making movie formula for 1987 is simple: action, suspense and sex. That combination reaped millions for "Fatal Attraction" and "No Way Out."

Cher, star of the box-office winner "Suspect," which grossed $1.3 million over the weekend of Nov. 20-22, figures two out of three's not bad. There's plenty of action and suspense in her latest effort, but movie-goers won't see her making love with co-star Dennis Quaid. There are no steamy scenes between the stars of this flick — which is just the way Cher wanted it.

"I didn't even want to kiss him, but they made us do that," said Cher, who plays a lawyer defending a homeless man in a murder case. Quaid plays a Washington lobbyist who ends up as a juror on the case.

"I didn't even think about AIDS. I didn't think about anything," the actress said. "It bothered me that a professional woman, who had a lot of integrity, would forget all that because of a man. I thought it was absolutely wrong, and I didn't want to do it."

It's about the only thing the assertive star-without-a-surname hasn't done lately. On the heels of her role as an attorney in the highly successful "Suspect," Cher has:

—Completed work in the upcoming Christmas comedy "Moonstruck."

—Released her first album in five years, "Cher," with production help from Jon Bon Jovi.

—Reunited with ex-husband Sonny

Bono (albeit under protest) to perform "I Got You, Babe" on "Late Night With David Letterman."

Born Cheryl Sarkisian, Cher was just 16 when she moved in with Sonny — a decision which ended up delaying her acting career by about two decades, the 41-year-old star said.

"When I met Sonny, that's what I wanted to be — an actress," Cher said during a recent interview. "And then we became famous, so it kind of went on the back burner."

Instead, she became a singer, scoring such hits as "The Beat Goes On" — with Sonny — and "Bang, Bang," "Half Breed" and "Gypsies, Tramps and Thieves" as a solo act. Although a successful TV show followed, the marriage and the act broke up in the mid-1970s.

After pursuing a solo singing career, Cher returned to her first love — acting. She made her debut in 1981's off-Broadway "Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean."

"When I came to New York, what I was coming to do was get an apartment and take acting lessons from Lee Strasberg," Cher recalled. "But I got the job before I got the lessons. ... I don't know that you need to take lessons to appear confident (on screen)."

"I think it takes a certain kind of person to act. It's not for everyone, that's for sure. Acting is not frightening; it's kind of easy."

The acting jobs kept coming, with critical acclaim and awards soon following: an Academy Award nomination for her role as the lesbian roommate in "Silkwood"; the 1985 best actress award at the Cannes Film Festival for her portrayal of the biker mom in "Mask."

"I love my role in 'Mask.' I felt really close to it," said Cher, who considers it her best dramatic work.

"And there was something about it, because of Eric (Stolz, who played her son), just working and sharing time with another person."

She has the same good feelings about her "Witches of Eastwick" co-star Jack Nicholson. Questions about rock idol Bon Jovi, who produced two songs on her new album, elicit similar raves, although Cher was far more apprehensive about singing than acting.

"If you had asked me, 'Will you ever make an album again?' I'd say, 'Probably not.' Or 'Are you happy acting?' I'd say, 'Yes.' But I forgot how much I enjoyed singing," said Cher, who confesses to sheer fright at the start of the project.

Trains Try To Regain An Edge

 competition," said Isabel H. Benham, president of Printon, Kane Research, a Manhattan railroad consultant.

In the past two years, however, all of the nation's largest railroads have fought back by starting fast freight train services aimed at winning business from the trucking industry — by carrying the truck trailers "piggyback" on flatbed rail cars, or even buying so-called RoadRailer truck trailers with hydraulically lowered railway wheels.

"Premium piggyback" and RoadRailer trains are intended to haul freight over distances of as little as 200 miles, and with greater punctuality, less damage, and at a lower price than trucks can offer. In place of such cheap, bulky, traditional railroad shipments as coal and grain, the trains are carrying small, valuable products — everything from mail parcels and cigarettes to television sets, glass bottles and computers.

Premium piggyback trains have benefited from concessions by the powerful railroad unions and have three other distinguishing characteristics: fewer cars, tighter schedules and preferential treatment by train dispatchers.

Fragile goods in trailers suffer less breakage when carried aboard short trains composed entirely of 20 or 30 flatbed cars, because the cars swing back and forth less when rounding curves. Products in flatbed cars coupled to tankers full of sloshing liquids used to suffer substantial damage, said Clarence W. Gooden, vice president and general manager for operations of CSX's intermodal division. "Some railroads thought a car coupled to another car didn't care what was in the car next to it."

"Everybody talks about this rock and roll, and bump and grind," said Mark S. Cane, Burlington Northern's intermodal marketing director. The company's Expediter service guarantees 99 percent damage-free delivery, carrying such products as television sets from Zenith's Springfield, Mo., factory.

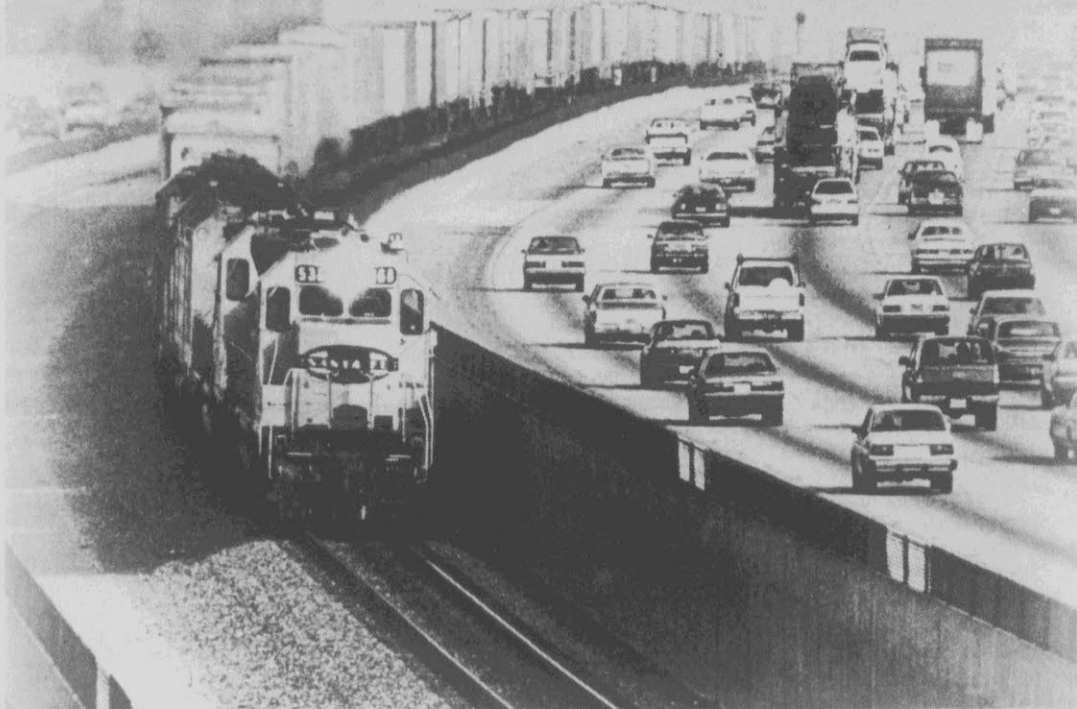

Tighter schedules mean accepting trailers practically until the train leaves and charging the shipper based on the number of hours within which the goods must be delivered.

Santa Fe's daily, 76-hour express transcontinental service from Los Angeles — Conrail operates the Chicago-to-New York leg — accepts trailers until 4:30 p.m. for departure between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m., and costs 10 percent to 20 percent more than conventional piggyback service. Burlington Northern, Santa Fe, Union Pacific and CSX all claim that their premium piggyback trains arrive on schedule at least 95 percent of the time.

Dispatchers clear the tracks in front of premium piggybacks, ordering other freight trains onto sidings. "Basically when you have a (premium piggyback), everything gets out of the way. You don't have a work gang out in front pulling up the rails," Santa Fe spokesman Michael A. Martin said.

So-called piggyback trains have been around for decades, but the volume of traffic on them has surged 64 percent in the past six years, thanks to technological innovations, deregulation, union concessions, the worldwide growth of intermodal transport — moving containers or trailers by more than one means, such as by ship and then truck — and the advent of premium services.

ROLLING ALONG — A Santa Fe freight train rolls along tracks that go down the middle of a freeway in Pasadena, Calif., heading toward its destination in Los Angeles. Rail companies, which have been losing business to trucks, are hoping new express services will win back business from the trucking industry. (AP Laserphoto)

No Crime In Town

Children either attend Miami Country Dade, a private school, or William Jennings Bryan, both outside city limits.

Local government, including the police department, is conducted from a log cabin made of Dade County Pine. Biscayne Park operates on a $1 million annual budget; funds provided by state revenue sharing and ad valorem taxes of $4.66 per $1,000, explained Burke.

A well-equipped recreation center with playing fields and equipment for the young is a popular gathering place for residents.

Ladas is in charge of the city's Crime Watch program, a community effort he says residents take seriously.

State Road 915, the north-south artery to Miami, is patrolled around the clock and its 30 mph speed limit is enforced. An average 200 traffic citations are issued a month.

The speed warning signs, explained Marx, was the idea of resident Lee Court, who had seen something similar at a club in California.

"Everyone knows about those signs. They make a lasting impression," said Marx.

"I love it here," said Ann Ellis, a former beauty queen and show girl who moved here in 1957.

"I love the quietness and safety. I go to sleep at night and rest in peace," added Mrs. Ellis.

"It's heaven on earth," was Burke's description. "You don't get hit with a wall of concrete or an ocean of paving. It's a place where you can come home at night and breathe freely."

Blacks Design Cards

Beautiful produced and distributed black-themed cards for as many as 20 artists. In 1986, however, the company sought the protection of bankruptcy court and was dissolved a few months later, according to Phillip T. Wilson, its former president and chief executive.

Wilson says the company posted sales of nearly $250,000 in its best year, yet "barely broke even." He and his partner, Chris Brownlie, discovered they were operating on too modest a margin to compete with giant card companies.

"It cost us more to print our cards," Wilson says. "At the same time, I can't charge any more than they charge because their cards are on shelves right next to mine."

From the outset, Wilson's company had to persuade some retailers of the potential sales in black-themed art. On more than one occasion, Wilson positioned himself outside a shop to count the number of black customers entering, to provide some statistical evidence.

"The majority of retailers are not black," Wilson says, and in his experience, many retailers seem unaware of black customers' tastes. "To fuel that, the black clients are not in the habit of assuming that something's missing when the black product (is absent). They don't demand it."

Avery Clayton, a Los Angeles artist whose pen-and-ink cards sell alongside the Honeywoods' in the gift shop of the California Museum of Afro-American History and Culture, began distributing his own cards in 1981. He says he has sold as much as $60,000 in one year, but "ran dry and night." He was one of the artists who signed on with Black Is More Than Beautiful.

Clayton had already sold poster reproductions to J.C. Penney, but he found that Black Is More Than Beautiful opened doors to K mart and Walgreen Drug Stores, among others. "They were excellent," Clayton says of Wilson and Brownlie, attributing the firm's downfall to a case of "too much too soon."

"Costs did get ahead of us," concedes Wilson. The partners took no salaries, he says, but moved to better quarters to "establish a business atmosphere."

In effect, Wilson says, his company added one more layer to the distribution process for artists who had been selling directly to stores, but he maintains that "the extra layer would have worked if distribution had been broad enough."

Although the Honeywoods' cards were never distributed by Black Is More Than Beautiful, Stephanie Honeywood says, "They had a really good idea and we hope somebody (else) will come to the fore."

A sudden takeoff in sales, however, would pose a difficult choice for some independent artists.

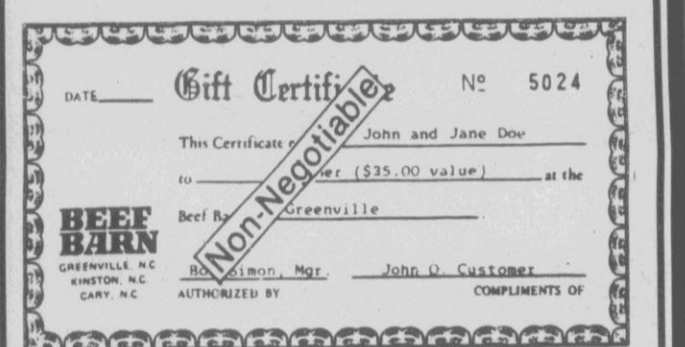

"I'd love to see a big growth, but then I'd have to make a big lifestyle decision," Clayton says. At present he operates with three part-time workers, grossing about $30,000, or just half his peak-year's rate. "I travel," says the Los Angeles native. "I like to paint."

The Honeywoods encouraged two other women artists, Theresa Patterson and La Keeta E. Howard, to form a cooperative, working together on the greeting card business even though no one's home has sufficient space for a shared art studio. The group has published and distributed a line of seven cards designed by Varnette Honeywood's early mentor, printmaker Ruth Waddy, who recently moved to San Francisco.

The Honeywood sisters will not divulge the sales of their company, Black Lifestyles, but they are adamant about priorities. "We are artists first, and business is secondary," says Stephanie Honeywood, herself a linguist, poet and writer.

Nonetheless, they've adopted stern business practices. Cash on delivery, no credit extended. "We've cut out everything that requires a lot of paperwork," Stephanie Honeywood says.

NEW YORK (AP) — A report that singer Madonna had divorce papers served on actor Sean Penn was premature, her publicist says.

"Papers haven't been filed yet," publicist Liz Rosenberg said Wednesday. "The marriage is over, and I imagine papers will be forthcoming."

Daily News columnist Liz Smith reported last week that Penn had told friends that Madonna had served him with papers and had thrown him out of the couple's home on Thanksgiving Eve. "In reality it appears she only tossed him out on his ear," Miss Smith said Wednesday.

 You can't trust anyone any more!
 While deceit in everyday life is a matter for opprobrium, at the bridge table it is something to be admired. Look at today's hand and see if you can spot how declarer could possibly go down at his contract of four spades.

 South's opening bid is a classic preempt according to the Rule of Two and Three. Not vulnerable, a bid of four of a major promises a seven-trick hand, and that's exactly what South thought he had. Events proved him wrong, however.
 The opening lead of the queen of hearts was covered by the king and won by the ace, and the heart return went to West's ten. He shifted to the jack of clubs, won in dummy, and a trump to the king fetched the ace. West persevered with the ten of clubs, again won on the board.
 Declarer now had a minor problem. Since he would need his three high trumps to draw West's remaining spades, he had to find a way to return to his hand by ruffing successfully with a low card. He could try to do that with either a club or a diamond. Which should he choose?
 Declarer had all but made up his mind to try to ruff a diamond. So he cashed the ace and West smoothly dropped the king! Declarer gazed at the card suspiciously. West looked like an honest enough fellow, so declarer decided to accept the king at face value as being singleton. He tried to get back to his hand with a club ruff—down one.

 While we applaud West's fine defense, declarer had only himself to blame for being duped. All he had to do to guarantee the contract was to cash all of dummy's winners before leading a trump.

Fortune-Making Team Live Separately

By Martha Sherill Dailey
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — Doug and Susie Tompkins can't be found in Who's Who in America. They don't fly first-class. And when Forbes magazine dropped the couple from its list of the "Four Hundred Richest People in America" (last year's estimated worth, $350 million), Doug says he was relieved.

"I hate the whole idea of that damn thing," he says. "It's a drag."

The Tompkins are a part of a new generation of entrepreneurs who have synergized their counterculture ideals with their corporate identities. They say their product — suitably sloppy clothes for the MTV generation — is not simply fashion; it's a way of life.

They not only have esprit, they are Esprit.

"Esprit is so much more than anyone thinks it is," says Susie, 45, who started the business 20 years ago out of her cramped San Francisco kitchen. "It's a lifestyle, a culture, a society."

"Whatever is unique to Esprit is the effort to put a comprehensive show together," says Doug, 44, CEO and administrator of the architectural department. "It's your clothing, your image and the aura that you spin around the clothing, the form of advertising and promotions, the catalogs, the use of photography, store architecture, the interiors."

It's High Concept. Just as Ralph Lauren sells WASP nostalgia or Banana Republic markets the allure of exotic travel, Esprit trades on Northern California hip.

It successfully sells an image the way its competition — the Gap, the Limited, Benetton — sells a product. Fresh, casual and just a little funky, the Esprit clothes often make less of an impression than the Esprit ethos.

"It's like, it's no big deal," says Susie. "They're just clothes." But her designs have accomplished the impossible: They straddle the line between what a teen-ager wants to wear and what a parent is willing to buy.

The Esprit corp. has invaded Europe, the Far East and the Middle East as well as America, with worldwide sales estimated at $800 million a year. Sixty-five percent of sales are international — the clothes are sold in 25 countries. Twelve new stores will open in Italy this year. An Esprit Superstore opens on Sloane Street in London in November.

The Tompkins were both in Washington in September for the opening of the new East Coast flagship store, 11,000 square feet of white walls, soaring ceilings and streamlined polished steel. Airy, modern, a little hollow, it is a timeless backdrop for the changing moods of adolescence.

But they were together only in esprit. More like business partners than partners in marriage, Doug and Susie rarely see each other.

They share a house on the curvy part of Lombard Street on San Francisco's Russian Hill, but Doug spends half the year outside Milan, and Susie spends many months at their place in Hong Kong.

"There's a conflict between us, but there's a dynamic that can create a lot of positive energy," she explains.

Susie has never dressed for success. Her sunny blond bob is tousled, and her Esprit suit needs ironing. She wears no makeup and only two pieces of jewelry — a plain gold wedding band and a man's stainless steel Rolex.

As design director, she's here to check on the clothing displays and the supply of short skirts. Sitting in the new Esprit store, she is constantly turning over a thought and checking her feelings.

When she bought herself a "little Mercedes" recently, she says, Doug thought it was "vulgar." But "it doesn't mean that I've copped out," she says. "I don't think it's vulgar."

And Doug, still stewing about his childhood spent with rich kids, doesn't believe in inheritance. Their daughters Quincey, 21, and Summer, 20, will have to survive on Susie's half of Esprit. "You sit around waiting for the money to come in, and it retards your personal growth," he says.

"I don't agree with him," says Susie, "but that's the way he is."

Three days after his wife leaves town, Doug arrives. Cruising around the new store, he's got on his corporate uniform — pressed cotton shirt, belted jeans and Timberland shoes.

Speaking softly, just louder than the be-bop piped in over his head, he doesn't sound like an aggressive, ambitious, teenwear tycoon. He seems more like a man on vacation.

"I see all sorts of slapdash stuff up and down this street," he says of Wisconsin Avenue in Georgetown as he settles back in a black, high-tech office chair. Considering himself an architect without a license, he's here attending to what he loves most — the Esprit environment.

"First of all, the tapes around here now are not my favorites," he says, referring to the be-bop. He prefers more profound shopping music — instrumentals like "Celestial Sodapop" off Ray Lynch's "Deep Breakfast" album. It's wistful, space-age jazz, the kind of sound track you'd imagine for a California condor on its final flight.

Doug, like Susie, is kid-size, inquisitive and esthetically preoccupied. They have designed everything for Esprit, from dressing rooms reminiscent of black port-a-johns and postmodern sales receipts to management style and advertising.

Doug and Susie Tompkins met 25 years ago on a road outside Lake Tahoe. Susie, then 20, was running keno bets at a casino for the summer. Doug, 19 and trying to make the U.S. Olympic ski team, was hitching a ride. She picked him up in her '57 VW bug, and they were married a year later, in 1963, after moving to San Francisco.

They never went to college — prep schools are their only academic claim. Susie, born to an old-line San Francisco family, was sent to boarding school when she was 3½, and a score of schools followed. "I was too energetic," she says. "I was a handful, I know."

Doug must have been, too. The son of antique dealers in Millbrook, N.Y., he dropped out at 17, he says, when he was kicked out of the Pomfret School in Connecticut.

With only their taste and intuition to guide them, the Tompkins backed into the rag trade. If he had had his way, Doug, who is a world-class expert in rock climbing and white-water kayaking, would still be selling outerwear, as does his closest friend, Yvon Chouinard, the owner of Patagonia. In 1964 Doug started a mountaineering store in North Beach called North Face.

San Franciscans still remember the store for its slick, modern design. Filled with Kelty packs, ice clamps and other climbing gear, it was one of the more beautiful stores in the city at the time.

And on the walls for inspiration — not unlike the large, glossy faces in the Esprit store here — were huge, black-and-white photographs of guys hanging from slings and pitons doing Class VI climbs.

Doug sold North Face, the shop and the label, in 1969 for $50,000. It's now a $40 million business. "No regrets," he says.

The same year, Susie, at home with two toddlers, started a dress business with her childhood friend Jane Tise. It was an immediate hit.

In no time there were four different lines — Plain Jane, Sweet Baby Jane, Jasmine Teas and Rose Hips — all geared to young women.

"Teen-agers spend a lot of money on clothes, and I think it's normal," she says, leaning in closer to talk with the understanding voice of the therapist you've always wanted. "That's when you are finding out who you are. What you are wearing is an expression of who you are."

As she says today, "If I had to design a collection for Palm Beach socialites, I just couldn't do it."

Doug, who admits to having dropped his "share of acid in the '60s," helped them handle both success and a Haight-Ashbury life style. "Today, sharp people aren't taking drugs," he says, "but in the '60s there was a willingness to take adventures with yourself to discover things."

He had shoulder-length hair at the time and would take off for months on "out-of-contact" trips to South America.

Nonetheless, he became hooked on the business. "I'm still not very interested in clothing. I'm interested in things that build and creating an organization." In 1969 he named the organization Esprit de Corp., he says, because of his anti-war sentiments. "It's from the Marines. We were trying to make fun of them."

Elderly Have Range Of Housing Options

LEXINGTON, Mass. (AP) — Most people don't realize the wide range of housing options that exist for the elderly in addition to nursing homes and moving in with grown children, says Dr. Vivian Carlin, a specialist on the aging.

There are many alternative living arrangements that should be considered, advises Carlin, a psychologist and consulting gerontologist involved in housing and preretirement planning.

She recently retired as supervisor of the Office of Planning and Policy Analysis of the New Jersey State Division on Aging, where she developed the Elderly Home Conversion program.

It is a problem more and more people face every year — helping elderly parents find safe, affordable and suitable housing, she points out.

"As we age, we all experience some physical, economic and social changes. These must be taken into account in the housing choices you and your parents make together," she notes in a new book, "Where Can Mom Live?: A Family Guide to Living Arrangements for Elderly Parents," written with Ruth Mansberg.

For years it has been assumed that nursing homes or living with children are the only solutions available, say the authors, who add that not only are these not the sole choices open, but they are too often not even the best choices.

"Housing should provide a living environment that will allow the person to continue her preferred lifestyle while at the same time safeguarding her health and independence for as long as possible," they write.

Using the experiences of real people, they recount ways families have coped with living arrangements for both men and women, and explain how to go about investigating the alternatives.

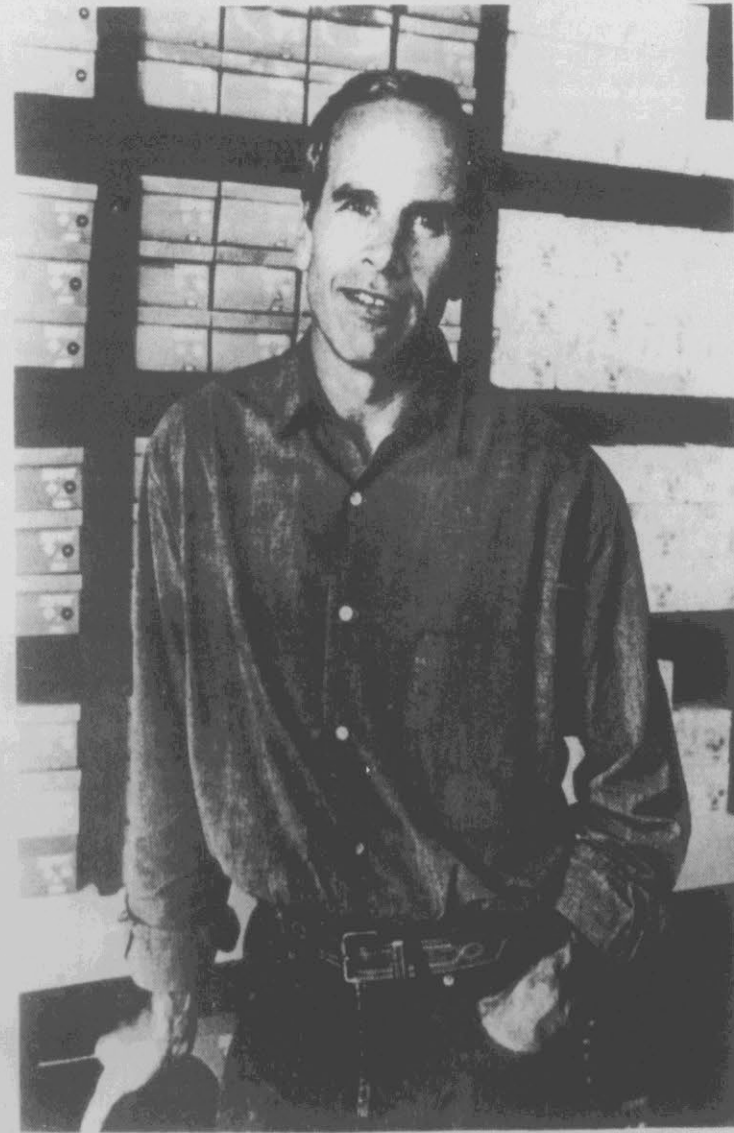

Among their suggestions: — Home, sweet home: Staying put but finding services and people to help make this a safe and satisfying solution.

— Group-shared homes: unrelated people living together and sharing the expenses and some or all of the work of maintaining a household.

— Life-care and other congregate communities: studio and one-bedroom apartments. Usually included in the rent are some meals, housekeeping services and social, recreational and cultural programs.

— Home sharing, accessory apartments and elder cottages: homeowners share part or all of their homes with a tenant, offer a complete apartment in a house or a separate cottage adjacent to a house.

("Where Can Mom Live?" is published by Lexington Books, 125 Spring St., Lexington, MA 02173.)

Podiatrist Has Foot In Show Biz Door

By GEORGE W. HACKETT
Associated Press Writer
LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Most of his days are spent treating patients' feet, but at night, Dr. Tim Stivers moves from toe biz to show biz.

He's a stand-up comic, with an acquired corncob accent, poking fun at himself, his profession and small-town folks.

"I make sure they always come off as being pretty cool," said Stivers, who appears on television, fills 100 speaking engagements a year and has five albums on the market.

It's a rigorous schedule, but one that doesn't keep him from practicing podiatry here with a brother and a sister. "She's the one in the dress."

His material is drawn from many sources, including the office, restaurants and country clubs because "their members are nothing but country boys cleaned up."

Stivers delivers one-liners and stories with the rapidity of a machine gun, choosing his targets at random.

"Congress is always giving things away. Do you think they should give a pension to the widow of the Unknown Soldier?"

"Winters are dull in rural communities. For excitement, people go down to the general store and try on gloves."

He attributes his sense of humor to his parents, who also instilled a love for barbershop harmony in their children.

"My mother and father could both sing lead. My brother sang tenor and I sang bass. My sister sang whatever the person next to her was singing."

From 1962 to 1974, the brothers were part of a quartet that spent weekends touring the United States and Canada.

"I did the emceeing for the group and things just sort of snowballed from there. I decided to branch out into comedy," said Stivers, now 52 and making a success of his second career.

"I just can't believe I get paid so well for doing something that's so much fun. And I don't need malpractice insurance."

He crisscrosses the country in his own twin-engine plane, having learned to fly while in college.

He admits there are times when he has to step on his foot to keep from laughing because of something a patient has told him.

Like the woman whose husband had "romantic fever" as a child and later suffered a heart attack. "He's doing better according to the electrocablegram they gave him," she said.

In poking fun at the medical profession, Stivers talks about the waiting room, where the receptionist is "an ex-social director of a woman's state prison and wears aluminum underwear."

He has a suggestion for those who show up for an 8 a.m. appointment and find 30 people ahead of them.

"Bring along the neighbor's kids and turn them loose. If that doesn't work, give each one an unwrapped, room-temperature Hershey bar. You will be the first to see the doctor."

Stivers has played with the idea of taking a sabbatical and trying comedy full time. "I've often wondered why I went into medicine because I don't play golf and I look terrible in green slacks."

Right now, he said, "I'm enjoying the best of both worlds."

Melanie Rogers Wed

Melanie Charlene Rogers of Greenville and Steven Lawrence Regner of Frederick, Md., were united in marriage November 28 in an 8 p.m. ceremony at St. James United Methodist Church in Greenville.

The Rev. Caswell Show officiated during the double-ring ceremony. Music was provided by Francis Cain, organist, and Wendy Banner, soloist.

Parents of the bridal couple are Charles and Jewelle Rogers of Greenville and Larry and Susan Regner of Baltimore, Md.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a satin sheath gown of imported silk satin. The Elizabethan re-embroidered schiffli lace sleeves were accented with pearls and iridescents with wrist points. She carried a formal cascade bouquet of white cattleya orchids, white freesia, and a cascade of green ruscus tied with green satin.

Anita Rogers of Greenville served as maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Sheila Hill of Greenville, sister of the bride, Dayle Oakley of Cary, sister of the bride, Mary Tart and Jackie Mayhew, both of Fayetteville, Wendy Martin of Wilmington, Charlie Overton of Smithfield, Jo Ellen Wilkes of Cary, and Krisia Gallagher of Vermont. Becky Bredehoeft of Baltimore served as flower girl. She carried a basket filled with miniature mixed flowers with rose petals tied with green satin.

The attendants wore ivory satin sheath gowns with sweetheart necklines accented with venise lace and flounced sleeves. The backs were accented with flounced peplum flowing to a semi-train. They carried formal bouquets of green cymbidium orchids with cascades of rich green ruscus tied with green satin.

Rick Kelly of Baltimore served as best man. Ushers were Bill Wilkes, Joe Stephenson, Johnny Hulmes, Jimmy Maguire, Tim Kotrocco, Andy Bradshaw, Jeff Reiner, Kevin Barger and Mark Taylor. Steven Elliot of Greenville served as ring bearer.

The refreshment table at the reception was centered with an arrangement of mixed flowers designed in a silver punch bowl.

The rehearsal dinner was held at the Holiday Inn-Greenville.

A bridal luncheon and pig picking was held for the couple prior to the wedding.

The bride and bridegroom are both graduates of Campbell University. The bride received a B.B.A. in trust management and the bridegroom received a B.A. in social science. The bride is employed at Hagerstown Trust Co. as a business development representative and the bridegroom is employed as sales manager at Lowe's of Leesburg, Va.

After a wedding trip to Australia, the couple will reside in Hagerstown, Md.

Daughter Jilted At College Has Painful Lesson

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter, "Lisa," is a senior at a college 50 miles from here. She had been dating a "wonderful" boyfriend since her junior year. He lives in her college town where he owns a restaurant. We were happy to hear of this. They were talking of setting a wedding date after Lisa's graduation.

However, he never came home with Lisa for a weekend or holiday visit. He was always "tied up" at the restaurant, which seemed logical so we didn't question it. We had assumed that he was around Lisa's age.

Last week I found out this man is 12 years older than Lisa, has been married for nine years and has three children! The bearer of this news was his wife. She phoned me, yelling and cursing and using the dirtiest language I had ever heard. She claims our daughter knew he was married when she met him, but she went after him anyway.

My husband and I drove down to see Lisa. She was in tears, had lost weight and looked crushed. She told us she thought he was single when they first met, then he told her he was married but separated, and his "divorce" was in the works but his wife was giving him a hard time because of the children. Now it seems that he went back to his wife — she's forgiven him, and he told Lisa he can't see her any more.

Lisa wants to leave college. She's heartbroken, and we are really worried about her. How can we help her, Abby? — LISA'S MOM

DEAR MOM: Urge her to get counseling at the student health center of her college. It will help to ease the bitterness and pain.

If she's not strong enough to stay at college, welcome her home with open arms and see that she gets counseling there. Just let her know you love her, and it's not the end of the world. She's hurting now, but eventually she'll realize she's lucky to be rid of him. This was a valuable though painful learning experience — but not as costly as it might have been.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Please help me. I have an identity crisis. I'm not sure whether I'm a widow or a divorcee.

My ex-husband passed away recently. After he and I were divorced, he married again, but I did not. I feel that I am a widow now, because were I to continue to call myself a divorcee, it would indicate to others that my ex-husband is still living, which he is not.

Since our marriage is now ended completely by his death, I consider myself a widow. This would also indicate that I have no living spouse or ex-spouse. What is correct? — M.M. IN INDIANAPOLIS

DEAR M.M.: You may call yourself whatever makes you feel comfortable, but bear in mind that your ex-husband (now deceased) left one widow (assuming she is still living), which is all one man is entitled to — at a time.

Technically, you are the divorced wife of a man who died. His death did not make a widow of you — it made a widow of the woman to whom he was married at the time of his death.

DEAR ABBY: May I add a few couplets to your dieter's prayer as the holidays approach:

Lord, grant me the strength that I may not fall

Into the clutches of cholesterol.

At polyunsaturates, I'll never mutter.

The road to hell is paved with butter.

And cake is cursed, and cream is awful.

Satan hides in every waffle.

Beelzebub is a chocolate drop

And Lucifer is a lollipop.

Teach me the evils of hollandaise

Or pasta, and gobs of mayonnaise.

And crispy fried chicken from the South —

If you love me, Lord, please shut my mouth.

— ELSIE SIETSEMA, ARIZONA
