Fenders Bend As Snow Blankets Pitt Area

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Except for frequent automobile accidents during the afternoon, Pitt County's portion of damage during a snow-ice storm that swept North Carolina Thursday appears minor.

There were 48 wrecks in Greenville between noon and 5 p.m. Thursday, 33 of these between noon and 3 p.m., Randy Nichols, Greenville's interim police chief said. There was no serious injury reported in any of these, he said.

The Highway Patrol had 30 accidents in Pitt County outside of Greenville reported during virtually the same period of time.

According to a Greenville Utilities measurement, five inches of snow — 1.15 inches of precipitation when melted down — fell at the Greenville Utilities water plant. Amount of snowfall throughout the county varied, with more reported in the southern and western portions.

There were no fires in Greenville during the 24 hours prior to 10 a.m. today, Assistant Fire Chief Raymond Carney said. And while there were a number of rescue calls answered by the Greenville squad, none that were weather-related were reported serious, he said.

"I think the media in this area did a good job of letting people know in advance what was coming and people got prepared and stayed in and out of trouble, for the most part," Carney said. "By 5 o'clock yesterday, the only people out to speak of were the kids playing in the snow."

Greenville Public Works crews blocked traffic on a few streets with steep inclines so people could play without threat of vehicles.

Pitt County school children were dismissed from school Thursday about noon. "We had about four bus mishaps on the way home," the school system's public information officer, Barry Gaskins, said. Most of the buses were empty of students when they met sliding cars.

"Everything else went smoothly," Gaskins said. "A lot of them (parents) picked up the kids once they heard they were going to be dismissed."

Activity at Pitt County Memorial Hospital was normal, even a little less hectic than usual in the emergency room, it was reported. Plant operations employees and other volunteers used four-wheel drives to transport many hospital employees to work for the 3 p.m. and 11 p.m. shifts. And many employees from as far away as Goldsboro and Tarboro got in on their own even if it took them much longer than usual, Kathleen Leonard, the nurse administrator on call, said. "Our people showed a lot of dedication. We're very proud of them."

Electricity has continued to flow to most Greenville Utilities customers, Roger Jones, director of electrical systems, said this morning. "We haven't had any severe damage," he said. "We've had a few calls for trees on the lines and service cables down, but none that our people couldn't fix pretty quickly. The first call came in about 11 p.m. and from then on it was just enough to keep us busy."

Greenville Utilities sent a crew this morning to help out in Kinston, where about 3,000 customers were reported without power. Two crews were also going from Wilson. Malcolm Green, director of Greenville Utilities, is the coordinator for emergency mutual assistance among the towns in the area.

Snow Blankets State With Up To 16-Inch Fall

By The Associated Press

While drivers cursed the snow which blanketed North Carolina from the mountains to the coast with up to 16 inches of snow, others thanked the weather for a day off of work or school.

"This is the best thing that's happened to me since Christmas," Billy R. Roberts, 14, said Thursday between trips down the hillside of an exit ramp on Interstate 95 in Robeson County. "They let us out of school and there's really nothing else to do but play."

The N.C. Highway Patrol reported 1,024 collisions from midnight Wednesday to 5:30 a.m. today. One traffic fatality was reported Thursday in Nash County. Brenda Joyce Smith, 24, was killed when her car skidded in the snow and was hit by an oncoming car.

"Stay home, stay home," said Raleigh police Capt. R.D. Williams. "The roads are in very poor condition."

"Roads already made dangerous by the heavy snowfall are even more hazardous this morning because of sleet reported in some areas of the state overnight," the State Emergency Operations Center said in a prepared release early today.

"Interstate highways remain open, with one lane open to traffic in each direction," the release said. "Most secondary roads are impassable."

The National Weather Service said at 6 a.m. that Asheville got 14 inches of snow; Hickory 11, Charlotte 12, Greensboro 9, Raleigh-Durham Airport 7, Fort Bragg 6, and Goldsboro 5. Tryon was hit with 16 inches of snow.

High temperatures today will be near freezing in most areas, meaning the snow will be slow to melt.

By 7 a.m. today, the winter storm warning had been canceled for central and western North Carolina, although it remained in effect for the northern coastal area for mixed rain, freezing rain and snow changing to snow before ending. Additional accumulation of one to two inches was possible in the northern coastal area.

A winter weather advisory remained in effect for the central coastal area, where freezing rain was expected to end today.

RDU, Piedmont Triad International Airport and Charlotte-Douglas International Airport, where visibility was reduced to one-quarter of a mile, remained open, although airlines canceled many flights, airport officials said. The Fayetteville Regional Airport closed after noon.

Even the Fort Bragg Army base shut down for the day. Army officials said soldiers and civilian employees — except for emergency personnel — were sent home early Thursday afternoon.

More than 10,000 Carolina Power & Light customers in the Kinston, Whiteville and Wallace areas were without power at 6 a.m., said company spokesman Wayne Ennis.

The outages, which were caused by ice buildup and high winds, were expected to be restored by mid-afternoon, Ennis said.

"We're not experiencing any major problems in any of other service areas in North Carolina," he said. "That's the only one."

The state emergency response team said about 500 motorists sought refuge at two Johnston County shelters Thursday night as conditions on Interstate 95 deteriorated. More than 100 armories in 74 counties will remain open until conditions improve, state officials said.

Efforts were being made to keep highways open.

Crews Keep The Streets Open

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

Handed the unenviable task of cleaning up the city after Thursday's paralyzing winter storm, Greenville street crews will continue clearing operations today by finishing work on major arteries and starting on residential areas, according to Mayo Allen, director of public works.

"By lunchtime, the major arteries should be clear," Allen said this morning. "Everybody showed up and everybody did their job last night. I've got a good bunch of employees out here."

Allen said a night shift worked from 8 p.m. Thursday to 8 a.m. this morning, enabling city equipment — including motor-graders and sand spreaders — to operate non-stop during Greenville's first major snowfall of the season.

As a result of the road crews' efforts, Allen said other city services such as bus service and garbage collection can operate today.

Allen said the bus service operated today on only a one-hour delay.

"There's a lot of citizens in the community depending on our buses to get to work in the morning," Allen said.

Allen also said normal backyard garbage collection would operate as usual today, but there was no front-yard trash pick-up as those employees were reassigned to cleaning sidewalks.

As road conditions worsened, Allen said he decided to combine salt into the approximately 30 truckloads of sand that were spread throughout the city to combat icy thoroughfares. "I don't use salt unless I absolutely have to," Allen commented.

"If the weather proceeds as predicted, I will have handled the whole episode without adding any additional overtime work," Allen added.

City Manager Greg Knowles said he was pleased with the performance of Allen's department during the storm.

"They did a great job," Knowles said. "Mayo and his group have the scenerio down pat. Everything came out pretty well."

Knowles said the police department operated in double shifts and Fire-Rescue was ready and available had a crisis occurred during the night.

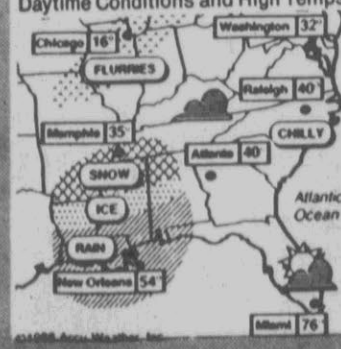

The city manager, formerly employed in a Detroit suburb, also added a warning to Greenville residents who might think of venturing out this evening.

"Don't go anywhere unless you have to, stay at home, build a fire, get some marshmallows and relax," he said. "If you do go out, be sure to drive slowly."

Knowles said freezing temperatures tonight could result in unsafe road conditions.

In The Area

Thursday Thefts

Four thefts were reported to Greenville police Thursday.

Officer Alexander Batts said two television sets and a video cassette recorder, with a combined value of $800, were taken from 310 Paris Ave. in an incident reported at 5:52 a.m., while Officer J.G. Bridges said a radio was taken from a car parked at Quality Used Cars on South Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 8:42 p.m.

Detective S.B. Pass said several items were taken from 14 Edgewood Trailer Park in a break-in reported at 12:48 p.m., while Detective C.E. Weatherington said items were taken from Rose's at The Plaza in an incident reported at 4 p.m.

Osteopathy Lecture

The origin of osteopathy and its value in medical practice will be the topic of a public lecture to be held Monday at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Dr. Norman Gevitz, medical history professor at the University of Illinois School of Medicine in Chicago, will present the hour-long talk at 12:30 p.m. in the upstairs conference room over the hospital cafeteria.

Gevitz defined osteopathy as "a series of techniques used to relieve pain through manipulation of the body."

The lecture is the first in a winter series of "Perspectives" lectures sponsored by the department of medical humanities at the East Carolina University School of Medicine. For further information call 551-2797.

Monday Meeting Set

The board of supervisors of the Pitt Soil and Water Conservation District will meet Monday at 9 a.m. at the district office in the Federal Building, 215 S. Evans St.

Commissioners Meet

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners will meet Monday at 9 a.m. at the county office building, 1717 W. Fifth St., for a workshop session.

The agenda includes reviews of hospital financial information, development and airport activities, updates on data processing and a proposed 911 emergency telephone system, and reviews of the county's solid waste program and proposed changes in inspections and subdivision ordinances.

Grant Announced

Trustees of the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation Inc. have approved a grant of $15,000 to the Pitt County Educational Foundation Inc. for development of its program and operating expenses incurred.

"We are gratified to receive this generous gift from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation," Kenneth Dews, chairman of the Pitt County Educational Foundation, said. "It is another example of their active role in improving the quality of life in North Carolina, and as we approach the first full year of activity for the Pitt County Educational Foundation, it will be invaluable in helping us set up an efficient and productive program."

The Pitt County Educational Foundation is directed by a group of business and professional citizens not directly connected with the schools. Its purpose is to improve the quality of life in Pitt County and to help Pitt County students by strengthening the work and services of the public schools.

Roads Icy But Area Towns Say Residents Managing

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County residents were testing the icy paths but were getting around pretty well this morning, local officials said. And despite frozen, slushy road conditions, no serious injuries were reported.

Roads were "still not in good shape yet, but we haven't had any serious accidents," Elwood Nobles, Winterville town clerk, said early today. Anywhere from 3 1/2 to 6 inches of snow has been reported in Winterville, he said.

"People are moving around pretty well" in Ayden, Mayor Marvin Baldree said. "The streets are not cleared but ruts are cut out in the streets" where traffic has passed.

There were some power failures reported Thursday night in Ayden, Baldree said, but most outages were restored by early today. While there were no rescue calls received, there were a few "fender benders" late Thursday afternoon as people scurried to get home, he said. No serious injuries were reported.

Farmville town officials were clearing roads this morning, Frank Bradham, a town administrator, said. "We're out clearing our streets now and we've been doing it since about 6:20 a.m."

Farmville police received calls for 12 wrecks Thursday from the time it began snowing until about 4 p.m., he said. A few accidents also were reported Thursday night, but a bloody nose was the most serious of the injuries.

Grifton also reported no major wrecks because of the snow, but some motorists have met face-to-face with ditches, Town Administrator Ron Hardison said. No accidents were reported Thursday night.

The streets, covered with a combination of ice and slush, were in fair condition and were passable this morning, he said. About 3 1/2 to 4 inches of snow was reported in Grifton, he said.

As of mid-morning today, reports from Martin County indicated that schools were closed, with most people staying close to their homes rather than venturing out.

Town, police and fire officials in Williamston and Robersonville said there was little activity, with very light traffic on the roads after mid-afternoon Thursday. In Williamston, most stores were closed this morning but most businesses in Robersonville were operating as usual.

The Martin County Sheriff's department reported no activity.

Elvis' Party Will Continue

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — It'll take more than the eight inches of snow left by a winter storm to sidetrack the Elvis faithful headed for the dead singer's birthday party tonight, an organizer of the annual affair says.

"It's just going to make it colder and a little more precarious getting in and out of the door, but that's about all," said Todd Morgan, a spokesman for Graceland Enterprises, the company that takes tourists through Elvis Presley's former home in Memphis.

Eight inches of snow fell in Memphis as a winter storm moved through the area Wednesday. Below freezing temperatures are expected through the weekend.

An Elvis birthday banquet organized by Graceland managers at a Memphis hotel will draw 350 to 400 Presley fans, Morgan said.

"This is a dedicated bunch of folks and if there's any way they can get here, they will," he said.

Paris Flight Set May 26

RALEIGH (AP) — Less than a year after North Carolina got its first regular trans-Atlantic plane route from Charlotte to London, American Airlines officials are hoping to begin a Raleigh-Durham to Paris route.

"Raleigh-Durham has entered an exciting era of growth and opportunity," Lowell Duncan, American's vice president for corporate communications, said Thursday. "Some see it as regional. But at American, we take a larger, more global view."

Airline officials announced Thursday they would begin offering non-stop flights between Paris and Raleigh-Durham Airport on May 26.

"Our research shows that Raleigh-Durham generates more international traffic than any other point in the Carolinas," Duncan said. "Many international companies make their home here. A Paris route will certainly enhance these and other business opportunities."

Duncan and other American officials were on hand for the announcement inside the airline's RDU Airport terminal, which opened last June. Gov. Jim Martin, Sen. Jesse Helms and former Gov. Jim Hunt also attended.

American will offer a normal, one-way coach fare of $915 and advance-purchase excursion fares of $760 round-trip in peak season and $632 round-trip in off-peak season.

Panel Says Agency Needed For Markets

WASHINGTON (AP) — A presidential commission studying the October stock market plunge recommends creation of a new high-level regulatory body to oversee the nation's financial markets, administration officials say.

The officials, who spoke Thursday on the condition of anonymity, said the panel headed by former Sen. Nicholas F. Brady, R-N.J., also would propose daily limits on stock price swings and tighter requirements for buying securities on credit.

The five-member commission, named by President Reagan in the aftermath of the Oct. 19 stock market collapse which saw a record 508-point drop in the Dow Jones industrial average, was to release its findings today at a White House news conference.

The commission calls for closer regulation of the various securities markets, claiming lack of unified oversight authority added to the confusion surrounding the chaos in financial markets on Oct. 19 and Oct. 20, the sources said.

It proposes leaving in place the present Securities and Exchange Commission, which regulates stock transactions, and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, which oversees the sale of financial futures, the officials said.

The panel reportedly rejected proposals that the two regulatory bodies be merged, or that the SEC be given expanded authority over all markets.

Instead, the sources said the commission is proposing a new umbrella panel, made up of government and Wall Street representatives, to oversee the operation of all markets.

The Wall Street Journal, which published details of the commission's recommendations on Thursday, said the Brady commission would recommend a "radical overhaul" of the regulation of stock and other financial markets.

Administration officials later in the day confirmed that the Journal story presented an accurate account of the commission's key findings.

Price movement limits, which currently exist on the Tokyo Stock Exchange, likely would be opposed by Wall Street traders who say limits would simply drive trading to European and other foreign markets.

Critics also say limits would prevent the market from immediately reflecting real declines in value and could have a "gravitational effect," the theory that once stocks approach the limit they would keep falling until they hit it.

Proponents, however, say limits could bolster investor confidence by cushioning one-day losses.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, while declining to reveal the contents of the Brady report, said the Reagan administration will move slowly on whatever recommendations are offered.

Iraq Claims Its Planes Bombed Iranian Refinery

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq said its warplanes bombed an oil refinery in northwestern Iran today. The report came after diplomatic sources said the Persian Gulf combatants had been persuaded to curb their attacks on shipping.

The sources also said Syrian officials persuaded Iran to put off an offensive against Iraq in the 7-year-old war.

The state-run Iraqi News Agency said the warplanes raided the refinery near the city of Tabriz, "setting it ablaze to deprive the Iranian regime of the refineries and oil products used by the enemy war machine."

Iran made no mention of the reported raid.

U.S. Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci, meanwhile, inspected U.S.

Navy warships in the gulf today and another convoy of U.S.-escorted tankers entered the waterway.

On Saturday Carlucci is scheduled to begin two days of talks with Saudi officials in Riyadh, the last stop on a tour of gulf nations.

The diplomatic sources in the Syrian capital of Damascus said Thursday that Syrian officials persuaded Iran to stop retaliatory raids on neutral shipping in the gulf. The sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Arab diplomatic sources also said members of the six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council persuaded Iraq to curb its air strikes on Iranian tankers.

The council is an economic and defense alliance of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain, Oman, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates. The agreements could mark a breakthrough in attempts to end the Iran-Iraq war, which began in September 1980.

Attacks on gulf shipping have not occurred for nearly two weeks and Arab leaders have toned down their condemnation of Iran.

Iran and Iraq have attacked more than 400 vessels in the waterway since 1981. Iraq exports its oil through pipelines over land. Iran, however, must export its oil using tankers in the gulf, which Iraq targets to cut Iran's war revenues.

Syria began its initiative last month at the urging of Saudi Arabia to open a dialogue between Tehran and the Gulf Cooperation Council.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Special Niche

The future course of North Carolina's public television system should not be charted by reaction to competitive pressure from commercial television.

The state's public broadcast system holds a unique position in the state's viewing audience. It fills an important need. With its roots solidly in education and its focus on information, public television has etched a notch for itself and secured a future in the realm of television broadcast.

The system has become a welcome alternative to airwaves seemingly filled with inane, meaningless entertainment. Furthermore, it is an alternative that cannot be replaced by commercial distribution without destroying the value of the programming.

Critics of the system claim public television is too serious, not entertaining enough. The programs are often visually unappealing, they complain, and there are too many "talking heads." But this noncommercial approach is the strength of the system. These "talking heads" are honest representations. They don't insult the intelligence of the viewer by seducing him with slick production techniques. Public television programs have enough substance to disregard such gimmickry.

Nationally, public television has prompted commercial television to provide more substance in programming. For this reason, public broadcasting should continue to lead the industry in thoughtful, meaningful programming. It should not follow commercial trends to become more marketable.

This doesn't mean, however, that producers should not experiment with appealing techniques. Public television has traditionally been a forum for innovation and creativity, a forum where the imagination is probed and the mind is stimulated to expand.

North Carolina's public broadcast system is a sound one. If it has a weakness, it is a dearth of programs produced and distributed by the system. The state's public broadcasting system currently only offers one such program for syndication across the nation. Production of such shows is expensive, but worth the price. More attention should be paid by North Carolina's television system to financing these endeavors — whether by aggressively pursuing grants or through state funding.

In addition, equipment needs require monetary attention from the state's General Assembly. Updating technology is a must, and investment in that project is worth the state's support.

North Carolina's public television system should continue to grow, to seek new creative horizons for its viewers. But its strength — the quality of programming and the emphasis on education — should not be abandoned. It is a system with a singular place in broadcasting that must maintain its nonconformity.

Frigid Reminder

The bitter cold and winter snow storm that brought Pitt County to a halt Thursday and early today should serve as a reminder that there are people out there who are real victims of such weather.

There are organizations which help such people and during the weather the National Guard armories opened for those who had no shelter.

But it should be recognized their plight is constant. The homeless are in need of assistance throughout the seasons. They suffer from lack of shelter, nourishment and medical attention perpetually, although these needs become more intense in very frigid and very hot periods.

Those who are more fortunate often view street people as bums — lazy people who won't work to provide for their basic needs. Often, however, they are physically or mentally handicapped, without family or friends and unable to take care of their own needs. They must have the helping hand of society in order to meet even the minimum standards for survival. A subfreezing night can mean disaster for these people — and that tragedy occurs while most people are safe in warm homes with adequate food and clothing.

At Christmas the nation's affluent society remembers the poor. It does things for them such as providing food baskets, fuel, clothing and even compassion. Their needs go on all year, however, and they suffer the most during cold winter months like January — and when snow invades their street havens. A night like Thursday can easily kill an unprotected human being. Already, at least two cold-related deaths — one of them a homeless person — have been reported in North Carolina.

When the temperatures are bitterly cold and snow and ice grip the area, thoughts should turn to the hapless people of society — and then remain on them all through the year. Disdain of these people is unnecessary; compassion is essential.

— Lincoln Caplan —

Meese: Misdeeds And Mishandling

'When backed into a corner, Meese has often explained misdeeds as the product of bumbling and disorganization rather than venality. He has presented himself as a victim of circumstances'

Edwin Meese III is an impresario of corruption: of the old-fashioned kind — misuse of influence and office; of ideas at the heart of constitutional law, and of the process by which laws are made, interpreted and enforced. Since he came to Washington in 1981 as Ronald Reagan's longtime friend and counselor, Meese has regularly eschewed high legal standards in conducting his personal business affairs and matters of state.

When backed into a corner, Meese has often explained misdeeds as the product of bumbling and disorganization rather than venality. He has presented himself as a victim of circumstances — as in the Wedtech scandal where his judgment and financial dealings have been called into question. He has claimed lapses of memory, as during the Iran-Contra hearings when he was asked about his actions and replied, "I don't recall," or something like it, 187 times. He has also eschewed truth. To cite a simple case, he claimed one of his incendiary statements that now rings with irony ("You don't have many suspects who are innocent of a crime") was misquoted though it came from the transcript of a tape-recorded interview.

Until last fall, the political resilience of the president, Meese's closeness to him and the backing of Reaganites helped the attorney general survive doubts about his judgment and integrity. Meese's role in the effort to get a Reagan Supreme Court nominee approved changed that.

Displaying the partisan judgment from which he recovered in the past (as in 1982, when he backed the administration's position favoring tax exemptions for segregated schools, and suffered an embarrassing Supreme Court defeat), Meese insisted on presenting the nomination of Robert H. Bork in the most divisive terms. Then he engineered the hasty selection of Douglas H. Ginsburg as a replacement. He twice opposed the appointment of Anthony M. Kennedy — advocated as the most sensible choice from the start by White House chief of staff Howard H. Baker Jr. These actions convinced influential conservatives that Meese had become a liability.

Meese's bad political judgment rises from the same mix of bullheadedness and carelessness that led to his taint of corruption. The latter has aggravated doubts about his ability to perform the duties of attorney general, among Department of Justice officials as well as others.

The week before Christmas, Meese's longtime friend, E. Bob Wallach, and two associates were indicted for fraud, racketeering and conspiracy in the Wedtech scandal — where a small business allegedly used White House contacts to gain major government contracts. Not long before, the attorney general had appeared before one of two grand juries in Washington — as he has done during 11 sessions in recent months — to tell about his knowledge of and part in the Wedtech and Iran-Contra affairs.

A statement by Meese's attorney, calling attention to the decision of the Wedtech independent counsel not to prosecute the attorney general, was balanced by one from the independent counsel, stressing that his was "an interim and not a final decision."

The Wedtech affair has already led to the guilty pleas of four executives, who admitted stealing $2 million from the firm and bribing federal, state and local officials; the conviction of two Maryland politicians for accepting $50,000 to stop a congressional investigation; the indictment of a New York congressman for racketeering; the indictment of former White House adviser Lyn Nofziger on four counts of breaking federal ethics laws; and the involvement of a dozen other prominent people.

The nub of the Wedtech story is that the firm took advantage of White House contacts and no-bid contracts for minority businesses to turn a tiny South Bronx machine shop into a defense contractor with $100 million annual revenue. Meese admits that, while counselor to the president in 1982, he intervened at Wallach's request to help Wedtech win a $32 million Army contract (The head of the Small Business Administration wouldn't grant the contract, so he was fired). But Meese says he only did for Wedtech what he did for others, to assure a fair hearing.

Meese acknowledges that three years later he (and his wife) invested about $50,000 in a partnership run by W. Franklyn Chinn, who soon became a Wedtech director and was later indicted with Wallach.

But Meese claimed that he turned his investments over to Chinn only because Wallach advised him to, to fulfill a commitment made to Congress that others would handle his financial affairs. His violation of federal ethics rules (reported by the General Accounting Office) by not disclosing the partnership details was an oversight, Meese insists, and he says he knew nothing about Chinn's illegal investment of far more than Meese had handed over to him. Meese concedes that, in two year's time, his profit was $45,857, or about 90 percent, but he says the partnership's dealings had nothing to do with his aid to Wedtech.

Meese's role in the Wedtech scandal has not yet been judged by any official body, but his part in the Iran-Contra affair has. Congress, in its report, strongly censured Meese. After the story surfaced in November 1986, and the cover-up carried out by Central Intelligence Agency Director William J. Casey, national security adviser John M. Poindexter, Lt. Col. Oliver L. North and others collapsed, according to Meese, he set out to gather relevant facts.

Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds (taking part as a trusted crony, not because the Civil Rights Division he heads had any part in it) is said to have found a "smoking gun" — a memorandum that had escaped shredding, about the diversion to the Contras of funds from arms sales to Iran.

To the majority of the congressional committees, what happened next indicated that Meese was either incompetent or part of the cover-up. Until the memorandum was discovered, each interview Meese conducted involved two Department of Justice officials, one taking careful notes; after the memo's discovery, the attorney general, unaccompanied, conducted a series of important interviews with key players, and he says he took no notes. In an affair where the administration continually showed "disdain for the law," according to the committees' report, the attorney general displayed similar disdain by his failure to conduct the investigation properly.

Better Ideas For Not-So-Exciting Issues

RALEIGH — Bill Redman spent much of his state Senate career trying to convince two different administrations that recycled pavement could save a bundle of state highway dollars. Only after he resigned his Senate seat did he get to see the state implement a full scale recycled pavement program.

The trouble Redman had in getting a new technology put to use on an infrastructure problem apparently isn't unusual. The president of the Ohio Senate says America has used technology to solve many of its problems, yet Steel Age techniques still prevail when it comes to infrastructure.

"We build roads, bridges and sewer systems much the same way we did in the 19th century," says Sen. Stanley Aronoff of Ohio in "Issues and Choices for the 1990s," a publication of the Council of State Governments. Aronoff argues that the states must begin to look for new ways to do old jobs — like paving a road — and at new ways of performing public services.

America faces an infrastructure rebuilding bill of between $1 trillion and $3 trillion over the next 20 years. In North Carolina, estimates run as high as $30 billion. Governments can continue to repave roads and fix sewer lines in the old ways, or they can strike out in new directions, using new materials which would be cheaper and which might last longer, Aronoff says.

Among the ideas he mentions are new chemically modified asphalts which last longer, road sealants and modular bridges. He says light-responsive road coatings might make highways self-illuminating at night.

Those ideas merely upgrade current technology, however. Aronoff suggests that the states and local governments consider substitutes to current practices. With so much of the public works up for repair or replacement now, this is the time to think about some of these ideas.

"Existing water infrastructure, for instance, pipes purified water from central plants to individual buildings and then returns an equally large volume of 'used' water to a central treatment facility." What if that idea was thrown out and a new one implemented. Maybe chemical toilets would be installed in homes. Non-potable water could be directed to outside use, lawn watering for example. Drinking water might be brought directly to homes from wells, water storage tanks or in bottles.

Some of those ideas sound like the old ways of doing things, but remember that Aronoff is talking about high technology improvements to such things as chemical toilets which, presumably, would represent greater conveniences than currently exist.

Aronoff suggests that infrastructure functions ought to be combined, when possible. The sewer and clean water pipes running under city streets could provide the conduits needed for power lines and for both telephone and cable TV cables. With these cables in place, sensors could then be attached to the pipes and information on water pressure, leaks and other contaminants could be relayed to central computers.

The collection and treatment of liquid wastes can be combined. Rather than wait for these wastes to make their way back to a central treatment plant, why not begin treating them when they are in the sewers?

"Research programs for defense, space and medicine — where strong commitments have been made — show that science can produce dramatic results in a reasonably short time," Aronoff writes. "Similar technological advances are possible in infrastructure."

Better sewer pipes may not be as exciting an issue as putting a man on the moon, but with a $3 trillion bill looming, there's certainly incentive.

Strength For Today

There is a great movement afoot today to increase what we call leisure time. Make every weekend a long holiday whether such a policy fits the situation or not.

The concept of leisure time is sound but it is foolish for any individual or nation to make no place in its yearly program for leisure time. We should ponder the fact that we can get too much of anything, including leisure time. A beneficial program becomes a foolhardy understating if leisure is made an end, in itself, and increased to a point where it brings on exhaustion or erodes our desire to work hard and succeed at what we are doing.

"Leisure" comes from a Latin verb which means "to be permitted." It is a break from our regular work which we allow ourselves. But to be constructive it should be a period that leaves one refreshed in the best sense of the word.

All Bets Off As Iowans, Candidates Brace For Caucuses

DES MOINES, Iowa — Just one month before the Feb. 8 Iowa caucuses — the first real electoral battle of the 1988 presidential contest — the political landscape in Iowa appears confused and uncertain, clouded by the sudden return of a once-fallen prodigal candidate on the Democratic side and shrouded in mystery by the unknown power of a former evangelical preacher and the lingering after-effects of the Iran-Contra scandal among the Republicans.

Gary Hart's stunning re-entry into the Democratic presidential race — and his even more surprising return to front-runner status in the polls here — has forced candidates and political analysts alike to admit that the dynamics of this year's Democratic campaign in Iowa still elude them.

On the surface, the Republican race seems somewhat more orderly, with the makings of a two-man race between Vice President George Bush and Kansas Sen. Bob Dole. But both professional politicians find themselves looking over their shoulders at former television evangelist Pat Robertson, who remains the wild card here. At the same time, new disclosures about Bush's inside knowledge of the Iran-Contra affair are again dogging him on the campaign trail, threatening to distract his candidacy during the final stretch drive in Iowa.

Many believe that final drive begins Friday night, when the Republican candidates gather in Des Moines for a major debate that will be televised statewide; the Democrats follow with their version a week later.

While there have been debates around the nation during the last few months, the upcoming forums carry the special imprimatur of the Des Moines Register, Iowa's influential statewide newspaper, and come at a time when many voters are beginning to focus on the campaign and make their choices.

"This is the real campaign now, this is when people tune in," said Terry Michael, spokesman for Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill.

For the Republicans, Friday's debate carries the added suspense of how the increasingly tense rivalry between Bush and Dole will play itself out after several days in which both men have bared their teeth at each other.

For the Democrats, next week's debate will be the first opportunity they will have to measure the new Hart shoulder-to-shoulder against his rivals, and may thus help determine whether he remains a serious threat in the closing weeks of the Iowa campaign.

Still, few bets are being offered now on the outcome.

"What's going to happen in Iowa? I haven't a clue," Massachusetts Democratic Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said ruefully.

So in this free-for-all climate, the candidates, sensing opportunity and searching for a crucial opening, have begun a frenzied push, pouring in armies of staffers and tons of money, saturating the air waves with their television commercials and blanketing the state with personal appearances. All in hopes of catching the Feb. 9 media wave that could carry Iowa's winner on to New Hampshire and beyond, thus making the months or even years of drudgery, of crisscrossing the state in mini-vans and small planes, finally seem worthwhile.

The big drive began New Year's weekend, when Iowans traditionally begin to focus their attention on the caucus race. Almost every major Democratic campaign dramatically expanded its staffing levels, and most kicked off media blitzes with television commercials in every major city in the state. Now, Simon, Dukakis, Missouri congressman Richard A. Gephardt, and former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt all have more than 100 paid staffers in the state. Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. has pulled out of Iowa to concentrate on the South.

Jesse Jackson is the only other major Democratic candidate competing in Iowa who has not expanded his staff of 15 or bought television air time.

Except of course, for the quixotic Hart, who makes the first Iowa appearance of his revived campaign Friday without a large staff or the other trappings of a contender.

But he arrives with the things all his rivals envy: massive media attention and the lead in the polls. In a new Gallup poll released this week, Hart was favored by 34 percent of the Iowa Democrats surveyed, far ahead of the rest of the candidate pack. Simon, the previous front-runner, was in second, with the support of 16 percent, while Gephardt had 15 percent, Dukakis 13 percent, Jackson 7 percent, Babbitt 2 percent and Gore 1 percent.

Hart's re-entry seems to have scrambled the pecking order that was finally beginning to develop here late last year; Iowa caucus goers, confused and startled by Hart and still unsure of the others in the race, have apparently delayed making their final decisions on the candidates.

Although crowds at campaign stops this week for Simon, Dukakis and Gephardt were much larger than they had been earlier in the campaign, many in the crowds confessed that they still did not know who they would vote for.

"Iowans have gone nuts trying to keep track of these candidates," said Bob Thomas, a teacher and Democratic activist who came to hear Simon speak in Centerville. "I think most people are still undecided."

While other candidates and their aides refuse to believe that Hart's high standing in the polls will hold up on caucus night, he still has clearly slowed down the other front-runners, especially Simon and Dukakis.

"I think the most enduring impact of Hart's re-entry has been to blunt Simon's momentum, which was really building," said William Carrick, Gephardt's national campaign manager.

Likewise on the Republican side, huge professional staffs now surround Bush, Dole and New York congressman Jack Kemp. Former Delaware Gov. Pierre S. "Pete" du Pont IV is also aggressively contesting Iowa, while former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has closed up his campaign operation here. But the non-conventional Robertson organization as well as his grass-roots support remains difficult to gauge.

The latest Gallup poll on the Republican side showed Dole holding on to a sizeable 44 percent to 29 percent edge over Bush, with Kemp and Robertson tied for third at 6 percent each. Du Pont registered 3 percent, and Haig 2 percent.

Those numbers, which back up other recent polls, have touched off a vigorous "expectations game" between front-runners Dole and Bush.

Reagan And Iran-Contra: Multiple Choice Answers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Iran-Contra foreign policy debacle has slipped below the horizon after more than a year of controversy, but there are some intriguing mysteries still churning beneath the surface.

The most compelling question is this: Why did he do it?

Why did President Reagan sell weapons to Iran, a country on the State Department's terrorist list, and break the U.S. pledge of neutrality in the Iran-Iraq war?

Why did Reagan send Americans to Iran to deal with the lieutenants of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, a man he says is "as big a satan as he thinks I am"?

Why did the president mislead the world, trying to get allies to take part in an arms embargo against Iran while the United States was secretly sending missiles to Tehran?

Of course, these questions have been answered before — and then answered again in different ways.

In trying to explain the origins of the Iran-Contra affair, there are two distinctly different Reagans.

One is the Reagan who sits behind his desk in the Oval Office reading a carefully prepared speech on the Iran-Contra affair. The other is the Reagan who speaks off the cuff, saying things that surely make his speechwriters wince.

Initially, Reagan argued vehemently that he was not trading arms for hostages by selling arms to Iran. "The United States has not swapped boatloads or plane-loads of Americans weapons for the return of American hostages. And we will not," Reagan said in a televised address 14 months ago.

But under the weight of evidence, Reagan changed his explanation. On Feb. 26, 1987, the presidential Tower commission that investigated the affair delivered its report.

"Whatever the intent, almost from the beginning the initiative became in fact a series of arms-for-hostages deals," the panel said.

Reluctantly, Reagan seemed to accept that finding. In a speech from the Oval Office on March 4, 1987, the president recalled that he had said he did not trade arms for hostages. However, he added, "My heart and my best intentions still tell me that is true, but the facts and the evidence tell me it is not."

Later that month, he told schoolchildren in Columbia, Mo., "It sort of settled down to just trading arms for hostages, and that's a little like paying ransom to a kidnapper."

Reagan made another speech from the Oval Office last Aug. 12 following the congressional hearings into the Iran arms sales and the diversion of profits to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

The president said his original initiative "got all tangled up in the sale of arms, and the sale of arms got tangled up with the hostages. ... I let my preoccupation with the hostages intrude into areas where it didn't belong."

Reagan added that Secretary of State George P. Shultz and then-Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger "both predicted that the American people would immediately assume this whole plan was an arms for hostages deal and nothing more. Unfortunately, their predictions were right."

OK. Case closed. It was arms-for-hostages, right?

Wrong, if you believe Reagan's most recent words on the subject.

At the tail end of an interview last month, Reagan gave a convoluted explanation of the deal and asserted, "Never at any time did we view this as trading weapons for hostages."

So, what was it? Here's what Reagan said, speaking without a text:

"And so — and the weapons — this came as a request from those individuals. That they — that if we could do that — first of all, it would assure them that the people they were dealing with surreptitiously were speaking for the government — had some standing here in our country. And also, they — if they could provide those to the military — not the revolutionary guard — to the military, it would give them the prestige."

It appeared that what Reagan was trying to say was that the United States was trying to prove its bona fides to Iranians the administration thought were not aligned with the ayatollah, but who might be influential when the ayatollah's reign was over.

Health Claims

RALEIGH (AP) — A member of Gov. Jim Martin's cabinet says his department will pressure Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina to speed resolution of workers' health claims.

Thomas Rhodes, secretary of natural resources and community development, said the department's health benefits coordinator will send certified letters to Blue Cross about claims the workers in his department filed.

Rhodes said many workers had been unable to reach Blue Cross by telephone and letters sent by first-class mail had been reported lost.

Wreck Suit

GREENSBORO (AP) — Southern Railway Co. is suing the trucking company and driver whose gasoline tanker collided Oct. 30 with a train at a Greensboro crossing, setting off a fire that killed two railroad crewmen.

The Norfolk-based railroad, which filed the lawsuit last month in Guilford County Superior Court, is seeking damages sustained when the tanker collided with the train's three locomotives. The railroad said it was still calculating the amount of damages. Police, however, estimated that damage to the three engines alone exceeded $3 million.

Named as defendants are Bralley-Willett Tank Lines Inc. and Anthony C. Cranford, 25, of Greensboro, the tanker driver.

The tanker, carrying 8,000 gallons of gasoline, was straddling the railroad tracks when the 57-car train plowed into it.

Identified

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — A Fort Bragg soldier found dead in his automobile on post has been identified as Maj. Robert L. Goldberg, an 82nd Airborne Division dentist, according to Army officials.

Goldberg, 36, of Brooklyn, was found in his vehicle at about 7:30 a.m. Wednesday by a jogger. He was scheduled to face a general court-martial that day, Fort Bragg officials said.

Goldberg, a dental surgeon with the 307th Medical Battalion, was found with a gunshot wound to his head, but cause of death has not been officially determined, Fort Bragg spokesman Capt. Donald Sensing said.

Goldberg had been charged by the Army with forgery and larceny, Sensing said.

Bankruptcy

GREENSBORO (AP) — Johnson Furniture Distributors, an Asheboro telephone mail order company accused of taking customers' payments but not delivering their furniture, has filed for bankruptcy in the wake of state and federal investigations.

The action means customers who complained of losing money — $2,200 in one case — are unlikely to reclaim much of anything, according to an investigator with the state attorney general's office.

Johnson Furniture has not listed its total liabilities, but Randy Miller, the investigator, said the company owes more than $148,000.

Documents the company filed Dec. 29 in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Greensboro say Johnson Furniture owes 239 individuals and companies in 35 states including North Carolina. The documents say the company has assets of less than $50,000.

Sewage Spill

RALEIGH (AP) — A developer's sewer pump station in northwestern Wake County spilled untreated sewage into the Falls Lake watershed because a new home was sold and occupied before the pump station was completed, state officials said.

Both Wake County and the N.C. Division of Environmental Management have changed their procedures because of problems similar to minor spill in November dumped sewage into a tributary creek of Falls Lake, which is Raleigh's water supply.

The state on Oct. 1 began requiring private engineering firms to certify that sewer lines and treatment plants they design have been built according to plans and are working as they should, said Arthur Mouberry, superintendent of permits and engineering in the state division.

DIGGING OUT — Tommy Duckworth of Morganton shovels a trail to a grocery store in Morganton Thursday in a losing battle with snow. The Morganton-Hickory area had more than a foot of fresh snow on the ground this morning from a storm that dumped up to 16 inches of the white stuff on North Carolina Wednesday night and Thursday. Forecaster Gets Taste Of Irony CHARLOTTE (AP) — It's ironic that weather would come into play for Bob Green Jr.'s retirement party.

Snow is expected to make travel too hazardous for forecasters from throughout the state to attend Green's retirement party planned for Friday night, said Ron Kuhn, meteorologist in charge of the Charlotte National Weather Service office.

Green, a Charlotte weather forecaster for the past 36 years, is known for developing a widely used formula to predict whether winter precipitation would be rain or snow, Kuhn said.

Charlotte received a foot of snow Thursday, the weather bureau said this morning.

State Will Prosecute Former Legislator

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina attorney general's office will prosecute the eight perjury-related charges against former state Sen. Cecil Jenkins and three codefendants, Cabarrus District Attorney J.E. "Bob" Roberts said Wednesday.

Roberts made the announcement in Cabarrus District Court, where Jenkins and codefendants Charles Eugene Isenhour, Melvin Greene and Alesia Rinehardt were scheduled for probable cause hearings.

Roberts also asked that the hearings for all four defendants be continued because the attorney general's office had not had time to review information in the cases. No new date was set for the probable cause hearings.

Charges against the four allege that perjury and related crimes were committed during Isenhour's trial last March 30, when he was found innocent of driving while impaired.

In mid-November, Roberts, after receiving certain information in his office, asked the SBI to investigate circumstances of Isenhour's trial.

Eight charges were filed some three weeks later.

Jenkins, 46, Isenhour's attorney, was charged with conspiring with Isenhour, Greene and Rinehardt to commit perjury.

Isenhour, president of Terminal Trucking Co. in Concord, was charged with committing perjury by testifying during his trial he was not driving the car when it was wrecked March 3; conspiring with the other three defendants to commit perjury; and suborning Rinehardt to commit perjury during the trial by urging her to testify that she, not Isenhour, was driving the car at the time.

Greene, a manager with Terminal Trucking, was charged with conspiring with the other three defendants to commit perjury and suborning Rinehardt to commit perjury.

Rinehardt, a Terminal Trucking employee, was charged with committing perjury by testifying that she was driving the car the night of the wreck and with conspiring with the other three defendants to commit perjury.

Rose Running Again

RALEIGH (AP) — Seventh District Rep. Charlie Rose filed Thursday to run for a ninth term in the U.S. House.

Rose, a Democrat from Fayetteville, mailed his $895 filing fee to the State Board of Elections.

Republican George Thompson of Lumberton has filed for Rose's seat.

Rose, 48, was first elected to the House in 1972. He is a member of the House Agriculture Committee and chairman of its tobacco and peanut subcommittee, which oversees the tobacco program.

He is seeking re-election amid questions about his use of campaign money. The House ethics committee has "found reason to believe" Rose violated House rules in borrowing money from his campaign and is conducting an inquiry.

Despite the allegations, Rose easily won re-election.

State Board Of Education Elects Haworth Chairman

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Howard Haworth, the new chairman of the State Board of Education, says his two years as state commerce secretary reinforced in his mind the importance of quality public education.

"I discovered ... that if this state is to remain on the cutting edge of economic development, we must enhance dramatically the broad-based public education for our young people," Haworth said.

"It became clear to me that if there was going to be an important ball game to be played in the next three to five years in North Carolina, it was in the area of public education," he said.

Haworth was elected chairman of the State Board of Education on Thursday, one year after he resigned as state commerce secretary to devote himself to "the renaissance of public education in North Carolina."

The board, its ranks depleted by a snowstorm, unanimously chose Haworth to succeed Jere Drummond, a Southern Bell executive whose company has transferred him to Atlanta.

Gov. Jim Martin appointed Haworth, 53, a Morganton businessman, to the board last year and endorsed him for the chairmanship.

Haworth said he hoped to bring stability to a post that has changed hands four times since C.D. Spangler resigned in January 1986 to become president of the University of North Carolina system.

A native of Buffalo, N.Y., Haworth attended high school in High Point and graduated from Guilford College with a degree in history.

The education board has been at the center of a longstanding dispute over management and policymaking for the state's schools.

Critics have described the current setup as "a three-headed monster" with an appointed board, an elected superintendent of public instruction and a controller, or fiscal officer, chosen by the board.

Another source of friction is that the board members serve staggered, eight-year terms, meaning that it takes several years for a particular governor's appointees to gain majority status and put his stamp on education policy.

Haworth said he wanted to emphasize teamwork and try to overcome built-in conflicts.

"I happen to believe that we have the good-faith courage to set aside incremental or turf ... battles that would distract from doing what is right for the young people of North Carolina."

"We have a long list of exciting things to point to that are (moving) us into what I call the renaissance of public education" in the state, he added.

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, a board member who is challenging Martin's re-election and has criticized the governor's approach to education policy, said he would "feel very comfortable" with Haworth as chairman.

Campaign Funds Listed

RALEIGH (AP) — Both Gov. Jim Martin and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan say they expect to spend $5 million by the time they face off in the gubernatorial election in November but, so far, Martin has raised more money than his Democratic challenger.

"I think both campaigns will be able to raise the amount of money they need to raise in the campaign," said Bob Bradshaw, Martin's campaign chairman. "It was never my expectation that the lieutenant governor would have difficulty raising money."

Martin raised $1.4 million for his re-election bid during 1987, while Jordan raised $1.1 million, campaign officials said Thursday.

In the race for lieutenant governor, state Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, apparently had raised more money than his competitors in the primary, while Raleigh businessman John Carrington was the biggest spender among Republicans.

Thursday was the deadline for candidates for statewide office to report their campaign finances for 1987 to the State Board of Elections. Only a few candidates actually turned in their reports, but the papers are not considered late if they are postmarked by midnight Thursday.

Martin Says No Apologies Needed

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin says he has nothing to apologize for, after he described the Democratic legislative leadership as "insulting, arrogant and disrespectful."

"The Legislature, and particularly its leadership, have developed a very vigorous and vicious pattern of assaulting the office of governor of the state," Martin said in an interview Thursday. "And people don't like it."

But several Democratic legislators criticized Martin for attacking them in a speech announcing his campaign for re-election.

"I've been here three years, about as long as he has," Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance, said. "I can't think of a single initiative that he has had. That man is as weak as pond water."

Martin and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, the likely Democratic nominee, declared their candidacies Monday and issued hard-hitting critiques of each other's records. Martin also blasted the Democratic legislative leadership, saying it had put partisanship ahead of the good of the state by opposing his programs and eroding his authority.

The state Democratic Party had scheduled a news conference Thursday to rebut Martin's charges, but canceled it because of the snowstorm. Instead, the party issued statements by state Democratic chairman Jim Van Hecke, Sen. Richard Conder, D-Richmond, and Rep. George Miller, D-Durham.

"It's obvious the governor wants to create an issue to campaign on because his record won't earn him a second term," Van Hecke said. "We're saddened that he has chosen to slander some dedicated, hard working North Carolinians who have served this state with distinction."

Joblessness Hits Eight-Year Low

By MATT YANCEY
AP Labor Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's civilian unemployment rate dropped to 5.8 percent in December, its lowest since July 1979, the Labor Department said today, as the economy created 3 million new jobs last year.

Some 235,000 Americans found work in December, raising total employment to 115.5 million and dropping the jobless rate 0.1 percentage point from November.

The number of unemployed people dropped by 112,000 to 6,978,000, the department said.

Meanwhile, the number of so-called discouraged workers — those who have given up the search for a job in the belief they could not find one — fell by 72,000 to 910,000 in the fourth quarter of 1987. Those workers are not counted in the unemployment rate.

The total of discouraged workers is 200,000, or 20 percent, below the figure of a year earlier and is at its lowest since the last quarter of 1979.

The department said, however, that women and blacks continue to make up a disproportionately large share of discouraged workers.

"Although overall joblessness improved, we must still be concerned about the several types of problems that persist," said Janet L. Norwood, the commissioner of labor statistics.

"The number working part-time even though they preferred full-time work remains at more than 5 million and minority youths continue to have difficulty in finding jobs."

Ms. Norwood was at her desk at 8 a.m. despite the eight-plus inches of snow that closed virtually all government offices in Washington.

Also at work were a few disgruntled Bureau of Labor Statistics analysts called in to answer reporters' questions about today's report.

At the nearby headquarters of the Labor Department, two public information officers appeared to be only people at work besides security and custodial personnel. The information specialists said they planned to close up by mid-morning.

The bureau said that a survey of business payrolls showed an increase of 325,000 new jobs in December. Some 40,000 were in manufacturing and a like number were in health services.

"Since last December, the nation's factory payrolls have risen by more than 400,000 jobs, mostly in just the last six months," Ms. Norwood told the congressional Joint Economic Committee.

The increases in manufacturing employment have come in all industries except for autos, where the total number of jobs remains about 60,000 below what it had been in early 1986.

Construction employment, after seasonal adjustments, rose by 55,000 in its third straight monthly gain.

Business services added 35,000 workers and wholesalers increased their workforce by 20,000, mostly in the durable goods sector.

In contrast, retail-trade employment was flat for the second month in a row with general merchandise stores showing a seasonally adjusted drop of 35,000 workers from October to December.

Study Reports AIDS Testing Mishandled

CHICAGO (AP) — Almost half the AIDS antibody tests at a major U.S. medical center were given without good reason, and 44 percent of the tests that were medically justified did not have the patients' consent, researchers reported today.

Dr. Keith Henry and his colleagues said in the Journal of the American Medical Association that their findings at the St. Paul-Ramsey Medical Center in St. Paul, Minn., are probably typical of many hospitals.

In a separate study released Thursday, the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta reported "some variation in performance" by laboratories working with an AIDS test commonly used to confirm initial positive screening tests.

But researchers said they found no indications of erroneous diagnosis when both tests were used properly.

The Minnesota group said no nationwide standard exists for ordering AIDS-antibody tests. Yet mishandled test results can cause financial, social and psychological consequences that are "immediate, severe and irreversible," said a commentary accompanying the report.

"The test is very valuable and should be used frequently but should be used well," said Henry, a staff physician at the medical center and director of AIDS activities for the St. Paul Division of Public Health. "More money and more training need to go into it."

Henry recommends the approach St. Paul-Ramsey has since adopted — assign a registered nurse full time to counsel staff and patients about the test.

The Minnesota researchers reviewed all 275 AIDS-antibody tests given at St. Paul-Ramsey and its clinics from April 1985 through August 1986.

In 44 percent of those cases, there was no reason for a doctor to think the patient might have been infected, said the researchers.

Ice Causes Fuel Slick To Settle

A rainbow-colored fuel slick settled in the ice-clogged Ohio River, causing water emergencies in Steubenville, Ohio, where schools and most businesses are closed, and in Wheeling, W.Va., which planned to shut down its water treatment plant today.

"The river is at a complete standstill," said Steubenville City Manager Bruce Williams after declaring a civil emergency. "We have to wait it out."

Williams said all Steubenville businesses were ordered closed today except food stores, gasoline stations, hospitals and other health care operations, drugstores and transportation systems. Social activities like bingo also were curtailed.

Ohio National Guardsmen were ordered to carry water by truck to help the city of 26,400 residents cope with the shutdown of water-intake valves along the river. The valves were turned off to avoid contaminating the city's water system.

Icy waters and stiff headwinds slowed to less than a mile-per-hour the movement of the slick, which began when a diesel fuel tank ruptured on the Monongahela River south of Pittsburgh Saturday, about 100 miles upstream from Wheeling.

"It's hard to predict what it's going to do," said Ray George, a spokesman for the Environmental Protection Agency in Wheeling. "It's slowed down about 30 or 40 percent since yesterday."

Officials in Wheeling, about 25 miles downstream from Steubenville, said water stored in tanks around the city will be used to keep spigots flowing at about 75 percent of capacity with the plant shut down.

"If we get just a little bit of conservation, we should be able to keep it business as usual. If not, we'll have to shut down non-essential businesses such as car washes and Laundromats," said Joseph Albert, director of the Ohio County, W.Va., office of emergency services.

Many of the city's 43,000 residents spent Wednesday and Thursday preparing for the worst by filling garbage cans, buckets, bathtubs, swimming pools and jugs with water.

Nevertheless, emergency telephone hotlines were jammed after Albert announced Thursday night that the water plant would be closed. "Right now we're just trying to answer everybody's questions," he said. "The telephones are ringing off the hooks."

Veteran British Actor Trevor Howard Dies

HOLLYWOOD — Trevor Howard, the British actor whose reserved presence enabled him to sustain a career that ranged through four decades in time and involved roles ranging from dashing leading men to seagoing martinets, died Thursday.

Howard, winner of Great Britain's equivalent of the Academy Award and considered one of the English-speaking world's finest film and stage actors, was 71.

His wife, actress Helen Cherry, was at his side when he died in a hospital at Bushey near London, his agent, James Sharkey, said.

"He died quite peacefully in his sleep," Sharkey said of the star of "The Third Man," "The Charge of the Light Brigade," "Mutiny on the Bounty" and his first and possibly most endeared, "Brief Encounter."

"He had contracted influenza and bronchitis and at the end, his illness became complicated by jaundice," Sharkey said.

Known generally for his portrayals of "decent men" beset by the travails of plots distinguished more often by Howard's acting than the stories themselves, Howard off-stage presented an entirely different persona.

He was given to drink, travel, jazz and brawling and reveled in boxing and weight-lifting at Clifton College in Gloucestershire where he cheerfully admitted to ranking "at the bottom of the class."

"Hell-raiser?" he once said. "I don't mind if they call me that. If it means I enjoy life, then that's fine and I hope to continue to do so, but not to the extent of throwing bottles or annoying people."

He wore a gray beard in his last few years and said: "When people ask me about it I tell them I'm playing King Lear."

Of his work he admitted that many of the nearly 100 parts he had played on film might have lacked substance but said that "all my performances are good enough to be seen, I'm not ashamed of anything I've done. I consider it professional whoredom to inflict a load of rubbish on a paying public."

Born the son of an insurance underwriter whose travels took the family around the world, Howard was encouraged by his parents to pursue a military career.

"But I just always wanted to act because I felt better when I was someone else," he said early in his career.

He enrolled at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art in London where he was chosen best actor in the class of 1933 and made his professional debut the following year.

He quickly became known for his rugged good looks, his eagerness to brawl and, most importantly, his stage acumen. One story, possibly apocryphal, has it that during a performance of Sheridan's "The Rivals," Howard's breeches split from tail bone to ankles and he played an entire act sitting down.

Victims Differ In Dealing With The Aftermath

By BETH GRACE
Associated Press Writer
COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — People who help crime victims cope with their trauma say more and more they are learning that sex and age play major roles in how victims deal with the aftermath of crime.

On average, if a man, a woman and a child are victims of the same type of crime, odds are that authorities, family and friends will see three distinctly different "coping styles," said Deborah Emm, director of the Columbus-based Survivors of Crime support group.

"Men tend to feel anger sooner than women do. They have murderous fantasies and sometimes act on them," Ms. Emm said. "They also tend to focus more on 'What can I do about this?' Women are more process oriented. They want to know how this affects them, what does it mean, how do they feel about it."

Russ Miller, president and executive director of the Ohio chapter of the League Against Child Abuse, says he has found that a child's sex plays little role in how they cope. Their age and vulnerability are more important.

"There is a cycle of abuse that is very prevalent, where a physically abused child oftentimes becomes an abuser," he said. "In cases of emotional abuse, children ... act out with low self-esteem, listlessness, apathy, depression, self-deprecatory remarks."

Children usually do not want revenge and do not want to hurt the abuser "because usually the child has a lot of love for that person. They believe what they are being told. They take it out on themselves and often internalize the problem, reinforcing it by telling themselves they're bad or ugly," Miller said.

Ms. Emm, who conducted her own research on long- and short-term coping, said she was startled to see no documented report that anyone — male or female — actually had sought out a perpetrator to exact revenge.

"But in figures I found from the last year or so, I began to find evidence that people have actually acted on those revenge fantasies," she said.

She cited one case, in Fairfield County, Ohio, where a man, after learning his wife had been raped and brutally beaten, grabbed a shotgun to protect himself before seeking a face-to-face confrontation with the man his wife claimed was her assailant.

"He saw what had been done to her — the bites, burn marks — and became traumatized," Ms. Emm said. "She told him she was afraid the perpetrator would hurt them again. He said all he wanted to do was talk to the man."

Although no shots were fired and no one was injured in the confrontation, she said, the husband went to jail. The perpetrator was not arrested in connection with the rape.

The couple also had been "victims" about 18 months earlier when their son was murdered.

Ms. Emm says although murderous fantasies are most often a male reaction when a spouse, girlfriend or relative has been assaulted, women are not immune to the feeling.

"We are dealing with one woman now, a homicide survivor, who is very, very angry about her son's death," Ms. Emm said. "She has been talking a lot about revenge."

When men are assaulted or otherwise personally victimized, "the feelings of shock and loss of control are there, initially," but she said the need for revenge generally depended on the crime.

"If a man is physically beaten or raped, he probably will feel that anger," she said. "But if the perpetrator was bigger than him or there were more of them, then they will react the same as most women."

"Women focus on their feelings. They're not as action oriented, but that doesn't mean they don't take action."

Miller and Ms. Emm agree that the healthiest action a victim can take is to discuss what they're feeling, but how soon after a crime that step is taken varies among men and women.

"Some men still don't feel they should talk about it or be seen as being weak or out of control," she said.

Country Cafe Offers Glimpse Of Past

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer
LABELLE, Fla. (AP) — It could be the nostalgia, the home cooking — some say it's the pies — or simply the homey atmosphere at Flora and Ella's that's brought people from around the world to this country restaurant.

Midway between Clewiston and Fort Myers, the place hasn't changed in 54 years. Ella Burchard, now a silver-haired grandmother, still gets up at the crack of dawn six days a week to make cornbread and muffins.

"I don't have anything better to do," smiled Mrs. Burchard, trim and spry at 75, as she bustles around the restaurant which is also a Western Union office and a bus depot for Journey Trailways.

Betty Jean Coston is in the kitchen as her mother, Eula Mae, was for 19 years before she died. Christine Yelling is there, too. She's been cooking and baking here for 13 years.

"Coming here is like going to visit grandma," said Helen Roosevelt, a local customer of 16 years. "It's home cookin' and a good place to meet everybody."

Inside the front door at the corner of Bridge St. and Fort Thompson Ave., nothing has changed for decades.

Eight years after this city was chartered, Flora and Ella Poole opened the restaurant in 1933 in a log cabin about a block away. In 1942, the sisters moved to the present location, which was a drug and sundries shop about to go out of business.

On one wall in glass cases remain many of the patent medications of that era. The wooden phone booth with folding doors is still in operation. On display are quilts, bibs and other hand-sewn items waitress Sharon Darby has for sale.

The soda fountain and counter are on the opposite side where some customers prefer to eat. The space in between is filled with tables. Family pictures, keepsakes and paintings by local artists hang on walls.

"We want folks to have the feeling they're at home," explained Mrs. Burchard.

Flora and Ella married brothers, George and R.E. Burchard, and operated the restaurant together until George Burchard died in 1962 and Flora moved to Lakeland eight years ago.

The menu has remained the same for a half century. Sausage, gravy and biscuits at $2.10 is popular for breakfast while many requests for lunch and dinner are for chuckwagon or country-fry steak and barbecued spareribs.

"People like our stewed chicken and rolled dumplings," said Mrs. Burchard. The house special, however, is a $2.50 bowl of blackeye peas and rice served over a large slice of raw onion.

In 1962, Flora and Ella bought the adjoining building that had been LaBelle's post office. It serves now as an additional dining room. Antique dressers hold tablecloths and dishes.

A buffet table is covered with assorted pies. The meringue on some is four inches high. "We use plenty of eggs," said Mrs. Burchard, particularly proud of her peanut butter, pecan, pumpkin and lime pies, to name a few.

Employees are just as relaxed here as the customers.

Granddaughter Debbie and daughter-in-law Barbara fill in wherever needed.

"It's fun," said Luann Smith, a waitress. "You dress the way you want and we get people from all over the world. They've read about the place or heard of it through word of mouth."

Mrs. Burchard has no plans to retire or sell.

"I wouldn't like to be isolated at home and I have to be busy," she said.

ON THE JOB — At age 75, Ella Burchard still works six days a week at the restaurant in LaBelle, Fla., which looks much as it did over half a century ago.

Mum's Earrings Have Strings

DEAR ABBY: I have been married for eight months to an absolutely wonderful man. We love each other very much, and our marriage would be perfect, except for one fly in the ointment: "Mums" — his mother.

On the evening of our engagement, Mums presented me with a pair of her earrings, saying I could keep them as long as her son and I stayed together. Then she added, "And if you should die, I want them to go to 'Lenore' — my eldest niece."

I didn't feel too good about the strings she attached to her gift, but I accepted them because I assumed they were family heirlooms to be kept in the family. (I later learned the earrings were given to her by a wealthy beau who later jilted her.)

Last evening I was wearing them and Mums said, "If you ever lose one, just have the remaining one duplicated, but please don't tell me because I wouldn't want to know how careless you were with 'my' earrings."

After that remark, I was tempted to take them off and give them back to her, but I didn't want to make a scene.

Abby, is there some tactful way to return them? I really don't feel as though they are mine. — TROUBLE IN TORONTO

DEAR TROUBLE: There is no "tactful" way to give them back. Keep them as your own Nobel "peace prize" for keeping peace in the family.

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter signed "Must Know," who asked if his wife could get crab lice from a toilet seat as she claimed, or had she been fooling around.

I am so glad you told him he could believe his wife, because I know for a fact that's where I got them.

I was about six months pregnant when I had to find a bathroom quickly due to an upset stomach. I was at the beach where no facilities were available, so I went to a bar across the road to use theirs. Abby, it was one of the filthiest rest rooms I had ever seen. On leaving, I told the woman bartender that someone should clean up the bathroom because it was disgusting!

Well, shortly after that, I discovered that I had crab lice. There was absolutely no other way or place I could have gotten them. My doctor prescribed a lotion that took care of the problem, but since that time, I am very, very careful where I sit. — NAMELESS FOR OBVIOUS REASONS

DEAR NAMELESS: I apologize if this subject offends anyone, but it may be helpful to know that many wrote to say they had picked up these tenacious, parasitic little pests from a borrowed bathing suit, sleeping bag, blanket, towel, at a spa, public beach and a public toilet.

DEAR ABBY: Our children are all grown and on their own now, but my husband refuses to go to a restaurant for a holiday dinner because we'd have no leftovers.

Wouldn't it be nice if a restaurant would offer a nice dinner plus leftovers? Of course they would charge a little more, but I'm sure a lot of people would think it was worth it to take home some "fresh" leftover ham or turkey or whatever.

I know that doggie bags are available to carry home the leftovers from one's own dinner, but fresh leftovers could make another lunch or dinner the next day.

What do you think of this idea, Abby? It wouldn't be any more trouble for the restaurant — and it could be profitable. — HUNGRY FOR LEFTOVERS IN ELMIRA, N.Y.

DEAR HUNGRY: I think it's a great idea. (I'm reminded of this old saying: "The person who says it can't be done is usually interrupted by someone who is doing it.")

GETTING BANG OUT OF A BUCK HAMILTON, Bermuda (AP) — Bermuda is one place where the fall in value of the U.S. dollar hasn't affected American visitors, according to Gary Phillips, director of tourism.

The Bermuda dollar is still on par with the U.S. greenback, Phillips says, so tourists are getting the same value for their money.

He says Bermuda has many British and European influences and goods imported from these countries are bargains in Bermuda. He says prices run 30 to 50 percent below those in the U.S. for items such as china, crystal and woolsens.

Strange House Is Up For Sale

By JOSE JUDICE
Associated Press Writer
SINTRA, Portugal (AP) — One of the strangest houses in Portugal sits on the side of the mountain in this resort town just outside Lisbon. Built by a reclusive multimillionaire, it is filled with trapdoors, underground corridors and rooms where mysterious sects carried out secret rituals.

The mansion now is up for sale and people are flocking to see it for fear its new owner will close it to outsiders.

The Quinta da Regaleira, as it is called, is a mock-Gothic structure that usually is shrouded in fog.

With its intricate, showy stonework, Gothic-style towers and tile-covered belvederes, Quinta da Regaleira looks like one of the 16th-century castles and monasteries built in the Manuelian style, which marked Portugal's transition from the Gothic era to the Renaissance.

Quinta da Regaleira actually is a turn-of-the-century fake, described by the British guide on country mansions and noble houses, "Country Life," as an example of "amazing revivalism."

Sotheby's, the London-based art auctioneers and international real estate agents, were asked two years ago by the current owners to evaluate Quinta da Regaleira for possible sale.

Federico Horta e Costa, their agent in Lisbon, said the house was "priceless."

"You couldn't build an exquisite house like that today for less than 500,000 contos ($3.78 million)," he said.

Behind its ornate facade, Regaleira reveals an uncommon feast of esoteric symbols, hidden passages and secret underground chapels where the rites of the condemned 14th-century Knights Templars were believed to have been performed.

Regaleira was built from 1900 to 1913 for Antonio Augusto Carvalho Monteiro, a reclusive multimillionaire who made his fortune in Brazilian coffee and international shipping in the late 19th century.

He was so rich that even the wealthy inhabitants of Sintra, where the Portuguese royal court moved to escape the heat in the summer, were impressed and nicknamed him "Milhoes" — the Portuguese word for "millions."

Today, 67 years after Monteiro's death, Regaleira is still known as "the house of Milhoes," though the current owners are not related to him.

Monteiro had few friends and didn't socialize with fellow millionaires in Sintra and nearby Estoril. During the decade he lived in the house before his death in 1920, his only guests were "illuminati" from an esoteric, secret society believed to have followed the heretical rites of the Knights Templars.

The knighthood was established during the Crusades and later became a powerful army that challenged the authority of several 14th-century European rulers. King Philip IV of France accused them of heresy and immorality, and Pope Clement V suppressed the order in 1312.

Fernando D'Orey, a geology professor at Lisbon University and one of some 70 heirs of Valdemar D'Orey who bought Regaleira in 1947 from Monteiro's bankrupt heirs, said he believes the eccentric millionaire intended the house as an "earthly paradise" to which he would return after death.

"That's where he (Monteiro) believed he would return back on Earth," said D'Orey, pointing to a high tower of a mock medieval castle built in the middle of the garden, a few hundred yards from the house. He said legend has it that Monteiro intended to return to the room at the top of the tower.

The room is inaccessible. No stairway leads to it.

Some people in Sintra say Monteiro can be glimpsed in the room on top of the tower at night when the moon is full.

A path through the garden leads to groups of "serpent trees," a thin, gnarled Scandinavian species planted by Monteiro, and to two doors hidden by a huge granite boulder up on the mountainside.

A small push moves the boulder aside, opening the way to an 80-foot shaft with a carved spiral staircase that serves as an entrance to a labyrinth of bat-infested caverns where Monteiro and his fellow "illuminati" celebrated their esoteric ceremonies.

D'Orey, who lives in the former stables on the estate grounds, said the caverns were dug out of Sintra's granite mountain to resemble medieval French caves where the Knights Templars were said to have held heretical Masses.

The caverns lead to a huge underground cathedral, complete with altar and lateral balconies, where the ceremonies took place.

No one knows how much Monteiro spent to build Regaleira, the brainchild of an Italian opera-set designer named Luigi Manini.

After Monteiro's death, his heirs — who are said to have hated the house — sold all its contents, including his library and personal papers, and let the mansion deteriorate until Valdemar D'Orey bought and restored it.

D'Orey said one of the prospective buyers is a Japanese-Brazilian millionaire who would like to live in the house.

"I hope it will be him," D'Orey said. "The Japanese have great respect for the past and tradition."

Female Clowns Help Abused Children

By JENNIFER ALLEN
The Columbus Commercial Dispatch
STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP) — Their mission in Mississippi is to spread love.

Combine that with a healthy dose of laughter, and you have the Rebekah Lodge No. 37 clown unit.

But behind the smiles is a dedication to a serious cause.

The five women use all the funds raised through their work to help alleviate the suffering caused by child abuse across the Magnolia State.

The unit's founder is Lou Adams of Starkville, state president of the Rebekah Assembly. Together with Sue Buckelew, Sarah Tatum, Eunice Lemmons and Syble Huffman, also of Starkville, they sow love in hopes of reaping the reward of helping abused children.

As state president, Mrs. Adams chose abused children as the main focus of her year's tenure in the Assembly's top office. Since last July, she and her four "sisters" have put together a series of routines which can be mixed together for audiences both young and old.

Their debut performance was last summer during a three-state Rebekah and Odd Fellows lodge convention in Louisiana. They proudly recalled how they had their audience "rolling in the aisles," quickly erasing their collective stage fright and increasing their desire to succeed.

"We try to portray different things that are best suited for our audiences," Mrs. Adams said. The five women employed their abundant creativity to design their own skits, which range from a tightrope routine to a rollicking scene from a doctor's office.

"We are not using our routines to get across the message of abused children," Mrs. Adams added. However, they stressed that all funds raised through their work assist in helping prevent child abuse and working with existing cases.

She said there were more than 8,000 reports of child abuse cases in Mississippi last year and that funds are needed to help the state Welfare Department increase its investigative division's scope.

"When we first started the clown unit, we weren't aware of all the work involved, but it is worth it because the funds will help such a worthy cause," Mrs. Adams explained.

Each of the group's members designed her own costume, some of which are sad and others happy. Dressing and makeup often necessitates up to an hour's work.

Because each of the women works outside the home, rehearsal time is limited and it isn't unusual to find the five huddled together in full clown garb, perfecting additions to their routines while waiting for their cues to go on stage.

After the Christmas holidays, the group plans to expand its repertoire of skits and hopes to increase its number of performances. So far, they said, the most challenging appearance was during a 100 degree-plus day this past summer performing outside for a child's birthday party. "One child chased me all over the yard," Mrs. Huffman laughingly recalled. "I thought I was going to die of the heat before he caught me."

"Each of the five of us are grandmothers," Mrs. Adams said, "which probably makes us more sensitive to the problem of child abuse." The five hope not only to raise funds to combat the widespread problem but also to create a heightened public awareness of child abuse, adding that it crosses all socio-economic boundaries.

However, after Mrs. Adams' tenure as president concludes next summer, the five hope to continue their work with the clown unit. "If the next state president would like for us to help raise funds for her chosen program, then we'll be glad to keep on performing."

The Rebekah Lodge is a fraternal order based on the principles of friendship, love and truth, the greatest of which is love for mankind, Mrs. Adams said. "We just want to do whatever we can to help people."

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was slightly lower in moderate trading early today, failing to carry through its winning streak that started with the new year.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks was down 1.66 points at 2,050.23 at 10 a.m. EST. Declining issues numbered advances by about 5-to-4 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 552 issues losing, 428 gaining and 490 unchanged.

Early volume on the Big Board was 29.26 million shares.

Analysts said the government's report today that civilian unemployment dropped to 5.8 percent in December, its lowest rate since July 1979, was viewed as an indication of a strong economy. That fueled concern, they said, that the Federal Reserve could tighten credit and nudge interest rates higher to ward off inflationary pressures.

"It's a case of where good news (on employment) is bad news," said Michael Metz, an analyst for Oppenheimer & Co.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks was down 0.30 at 145.59.

Insurance Rates

RALEIGH (AP) — People with Safe Driver Insurance Plan points on their automobile liability insurance policies will pay reinsurance facility recoupment surcharges totaling 51.6 percent if their policies become effective during the quarter beginning April 1.

There will be a separate 1.4 percent surcharge for all commercial auto liability policies.

The surcharges are required by state law to recover operating losses of the North Carolina Reinsurance Facility. The Legislature created the facility for companies to reinsure risks they are unwilling to insure voluntarily but are required by law to insure.

Snow Arrest

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — A 26-year-old unemployed woman, who told police she was just trying to get out of the cold and snow, was jailed Thursday after being charged with breaking into a High Point church.

"This is the first time this has happened here," said Andrew W. Brown Jr., pastor of Memorial Methodist Church.

Police charged Yvonne Nannette Richardson "Cookie" Livingston of High Point, with misdemeanor breaking and entering and jailed her in lieu of $300 bond.

Ms. Livingston had gotten into the church by breaking a rear window, apparently with a brick, police said. Damages were estimated at $50.

Illegal Fish

RALEIGH (AP) — State and federal wildlife enforcement officers are investigating the smuggling of illegal grass carp to clear weed-infested lakes in North Carolina and 26 other states.

The exotic fish have a healthy appetite for aquatic plants. But wildlife officials fear the Chinese carp could disrupt native fish populations and destroy vital food for migrating waterfowl if they become established in the lakes and streams.

The state allows pond and lake owners to stock sterile grass carp through a tightly controlled permit program, but it prohibits the importation of fertile fish.

Storm

The Greenville National Guard Armory and the Farmville National Guard Armory, both directed by Gov. Jim Martin to be open as public shelter, each had one guest for the night.

Pitt County Communications reported that its referrals during the storm were fewer than usual. "Nothing serious at all," a spokesman said.

The State Department of Transportation had its 75 maintenance staff working throughout the night clearing roads. "Once people get off the roads about dark, our people could really get a lot done," Fred Edwards, maintenance engineer for Pitt County, said. He said the clearance of primary roads should be completed some time today and then work will begin on the secondary roads. He said nine motor graders, 13 truck-mounted snow plows, and eight spreaders are being used. "We put out sand mixed with calcium chloride. This mixture, which is less damaging to pavement than salt, improves traction for vehicles in icy places. It's mostly applied on bridges and in shady places, Edwards indicated.

Major Test Still Ahead Before Shuttle Can Fly

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA has approved for flight the three main engines for the next space shuttle mission, but one major test remains before they can hoist shuttle Discovery into orbit.

About six weeks before the planned launch date, the engines will be fired as a unit on the launch pad in a full-scale countdown test for Discovery and the launch team. To date, each has been test-fired only separately.

The shuttle will be bolted firmly to the pad for the 20-second firing.

The space agency announced Thursday it had completed testing the three engines, said to be the world's most technically advanced powerplants, and had certified them for the first post-Challenger mission.

The launch date for that mission is uncertain because of a new problem with the shuttle's solid fuel booster rocket. NASA officials estimate the trouble will delay the flight at least six weeks beyond the planned June 2 target.

Two solid-fuel boosters combine with the liquid-fuel main engines to thrust a shuttle into space.

The first of the three main engines arrived at the Kennedy Space Center here by truck Wednesday night from NASA's engine-testing facility at Bay St. Louis, Miss.

"Seeing a major piece of flight hardware delivered here is a morale booster, a motivation for the work force," said Lee Solid, director of launch operations for the engine's builder, the Rocketdyne Division of Rockwell International.

He said technicians would begin installing the engine on Discovery on Sunday. The other two engines are scheduled to reach here on Jan. 12 and Jan. 20, he said.

Each of the engines, fueled by liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen, was ignited three times in tests that began last August in Mississippi. The final firing for each was a flight-duration burn of 520 seconds.

The shuttle fleet — Atlantis, Columbia and Discovery — has been grounded since Challenger exploded 73 seconds after liftoff on Jan. 28, 1986, killing its crew of seven. Investigators blamed the accident on a faulty joint in one of two solid-fuel booster rockets. The new joint design worked perfectly in a full-scale test firing late last month, but inspection of the rocket disclosed a shattered boot, a carbon ring that protects a nozzle swiveling joint.

The boot ring design was a new one being tested for the first time. NASA said it hopes to use a backup design that was tested successfully in a rocket firing last August. Officials want to schedule a second test of the backup in March.

The boot ring is critical to the shuttle's performance because it allows the booster nozzle to move and steer the spacecraft.

While the shuttle fleet has been grounded, engineers made several changes in the main engines, including improvements in the electronic controller, valve actuators, temperature sensors, the main combustion chamber and the turbopumps.

In 1949, the Soviet Union recognized the new Chinese Communist government in Peking.

Snow Covers N.C.

William D. Jones Jr., spokesman for the N.C. Department of Transportation, said that statewide, DOT has about 1,200 salt spreaders, about 1,530 truck-mounted snow plows, 680 motor graders, and various front-end loaders and bulldozers for removing snow. He said 6,000 to 7,000 maintenance personnel statewide will be working on snow removal.

If the snow was a curse for drivers, it was a blessing to Pitt County children who were able to pull out little-used sleds and makeshift ones. The Greenville Public Works Department blocked traffic on two or three streets with steep inclines so children could play without threats from vehicles, said Diane Lamb, a department spokesman.

ECU Heads Into Conference Play

From Staff Reports

East Carolina has finished its early-season non-conference schedule, exceeding some expectations by winning four games, but this weekend the Pirates face new challenges as they begin Colonial Athletic Association play at George Mason.

At the same time, East Carolina's Lady Pirates return home to open their CAA season.

The men's team will be at George Mason Saturday night for a 7:30 p.m. contest, then will move on to James Madison Monday for another CAA contest.

George Mason's women invade Minges for a Saturday night contest with the ECU women at 7:30 p.m., with nationally-ranked James Madison coming in Monday, also for a 7:30 p.m. game.

East Carolina's men go into the series with a 4-6 overall record, having lost their last outing to Maryland-Baltimore County on the road, 73-84. It was a game in which Coach Mike Steele didn't think his charges played with a great deal of emotion.

At the same time, the Pirates have won four games in a season that some observers felt might just be a winless year for East Carolina. And they have already assured themselves of at least equaling the worst-record year the Pirates have ever had.

"We have surprised some people and surprised ourselves at times," Steele said. "But now that I know how we're capable of playing, I'm disappointed in our record. We had two road games (Radford and UMBC) that we could have won to improve our record to 6-4 entering conference play.

"We put ourselves in a position to be 5-5 entering the George Mason game, and we came up one short. I can't fault our kids for their effort. They've given all that they have. We just have to overcome our weaknesses and start winning on the road."

Steele feels that the Pirates can come through with some wins in the conference, too. "We were picked by everyone to finish last in the conference, and I don't think that's going to happen. But now is the time for us to start proving ourselves all over again."

The Pirates have gotten scoring leadership from two sophomores, Reed Lose and Gus Hill. Hill is the leading scorer with a 16.6 average, while Lose checks in at 16.3. Stanley Love, who turned in his best offensive effort against UMBC with 23 points is next at 8.0 per game.

The Pirates are expected to start 6-3 junior Kenny Murphy and the 6-5 Love, a freshman, at the forwards, with 6-6 junior Dominique Martin at center. Jeff Kelly, a 5-9 junior will be at one guard, with Lose, 6-3, at the other guard.

George Mason comes into the game with a 6-4 record, having beaten Bucknell, 96-91, on Wednesday. East Carolina has not beaten the Patriots since taking a 75-67 win in Greenville in 1985-86, and has only one win on the Pats' court, that coming in their first meeting in 1981-82.

Like East Carolina, the Patriots have a first-year coach in Rick Barnes, who was a candidate for the ECU job before replacing Joe Harrington at GMU. However, unlike Steele, he had a wealth of talent to build around.

The leader for the Patriots is 6-5 junior Kenny Sanders, averaging 24.4 points a game and 11.1 rebounds. Anthony "Amp" Davis, a 5-10 senior guard, averages 16.1 points and 6.2 assists, while 6-0 junior guard Earl Moore has a 16.9 scoring average. Brian Miller, a 6-4 senior forward, rounds out those in double figures with a 10.8 mark. Robert Dykes, a 6-7 freshman, starts at center and averages 4.0 points a game.

James Madison, picked by many to challenge Richmond for the championship, has a disappointing 3-7 record going into Saturday night's game with UNC-Wilmington.

East Carolina won the last game between the two, 74-68, in Greenville, but has never won on a JMU court.

In contrast to the Patriots, the Dukes have but one starter in double figures, 6-6 sophomore guard Claude Ferdinand at 12.7.

However, Kennard Winchester, a 6-5 junior is the leading scorer at 16.5 and also leads in rebounding with a 6.7 average.

Other starters are expected to be Allen Dorsey, a 6-7 freshman forward (8.2 ppg.); Ralph Glenn, a 6-4 senior forward (3.6); Barry Brown, a 6-5 freshman center (6.4); and Ben Gordon, a 6-0 senior guard (7.9).

The men return home on Wednesday to face South Carolina at 7:30 p.m. in Minges.

East Carolina's women take a 5-6 record into this weekend's opening CAA contests.

The Lady Pirates are paced by Monique Pompili with a 14.9 scoring average. Gretta Savage is next at 13.2. Alma Bethea is also in double figures at 12.3 points a game.

George Mason brings an 8-2 record, including a 63-52 victory over Bucknell of Wednesday.

The Lady Patriots are led by Cindy Baruch, hitting 12.0 points a game. Beverly McLaughlin has an 11.1 average while Jeannine Jeminez, with a 10.9 average.

The Lady Pats lost their season opener to Miami of Ohio then won six in a row before falling to Appalachian State. They bring in a two-game winning streak.

James Madison, which plays UNC-Wilmington on Saturday, is currently 8-1 and ranked 21st by USA Today/CNN poll. Their only loss was an upset in the Sun & Fun Invitational in Miami, Fla., falling to Houston, 65-54.

The defending CAA champs beat Georgia Southern, 65-52, which beat the Pirates earlier, 75-70.

The Lady Dukes are led by Alisa Harris with a 16.9 scoring average and a 6.9 rebounding average. Sydney Beasley is scoring at a 16.6 clip with an 8.8 rebound average. Missy Dudley is scoring 12.3 with 6.2 rebounds.

Corchiani Helping Out

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Closing minutes of basketball games coached by North Carolina State's Jim Valvano have, in recent times, been filled with heartbreak. But Valvano said freshman point guard Chris Corchiani plans to change all that.

"He makes good decisions, he's a good free throw shooter, he finds people," Valvano added. "I've got a lot of confidence in him."

However, Corchiani nearly skipped out on N.C. State, upset over rumors this summer that Valvano was about to become head coach of the New York Knicks. Valvano stayed, and Corchiani stayed with his commitment.

Just as this season began, Corchiani came down with mononucleosis and it looked as though he would miss too much of the season to be a contributor. Two weeks after his case was diagnosed, he was given medical clearance to return to the courts, far sooner than anyone expected.

"It really scared me," Corchiani recalled after the N.C. State's 70-61 victory over Clemson on Wednesday night. "I had started off so well, and then to come down with this sickness was terrible. It crushed me."

Corchiani says he followed doctor's orders and instead of sitting out a month, he returned to action within two weeks. And he is making the most of his return.

His 11 points against the Tigers matched his best production this year, but it was more notable to him because it was against Atlantic Coast Conference competition, the time he says he's been dreaming of.

"I've wanted that for the longest time. Playing in the ACC is something I've always wanted," he says. "It's the best conference in the nation and an ACC game finally came."

And, Corchiani also got one more thing he wanted — control of the game in a key situation. That's what Valvano wants, too.

Syracuse's Dick MacPherson Chosen Coach Of The Year

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Syracuse Coach Dick MacPherson thinks there's room for more than one Beast of the East.

Although the Orangemen finished fourth nationally and No. 1 in the East with an 11-0-1 record, MacPherson isn't ready to claim Eastern supremacy until he can convince the top players in New York State to stay home.

"Penn State is the top football team in the East personnel-wise and program-wise, without a doubt," MacPherson said Thursday after being named 1987 major-college Coach of the Year by the American Football Coaches Association.

"What we're looking for is to join them. But I don't think in Joe's (Paterno) career there they'll be going down. What we're trying to do is get to their level."

"Syracuse, Pitt and Penn State have been there (national champions), so we know that those three can. The key to it all in my opinion is we're in New York State. That makes a difference."

"We are the only Division I school in New York State — Army's a national school — and our long-range goal and game plan is the Nebraska theory of making New York State one. When that happens, then everybody is in trouble."

The 57-year-old MacPherson was honored Thursday at the annual Kodak-AFCA Coach of the Year banquet along with Mark Duffner of Holy Cross in Division I-AA, Rick Rhoades of Troy (Ala.) State in the AFCA's College Division I and Walt Hameline from Wagner College of Staten Island, N.Y., in College Division II.

Rhoades and Hameline were not among the regional winners. However, their teams won national championships in the NCAA's Division II and III, respectively.

The AFCA's College Division I consists of NCAA Division II and NAIA Division I schools. College Division II includes schools from NCAA Division III and NAIA Division II.

"This is probably the most prestigious award in coaching, and also the most cherished," MacPherson said.

After posting a 30-36-1 record in his first six seasons at Syracuse, topped by a 7-5 mark in 1985, MacPherson reportedly was on the hotseat following a 5-6 record in 1986, even though the Orangemen won five of their last seven games.

"I heard that there were a couple of board of trustees members who expressed that kind of thing to the chancellor," MacPherson said. "But the chancellor supported me very strongly."

"I didn't worry about it because my contract was that they liked what I was doing and always wanted me around Syracuse University. The only thing was that pressures might be such that they might have to take the football away from me."

"I think that's a great way to go. I think every football coach should understand that the administration sometimes might have to let you go because of other problems."

"Certainly I can understand that if they're giving me all the resources and I'm not getting the job done, it's time to get somebody else. If we had everybody alive like we did and ended up 5-6, then I'd say that we'd have to sit down and talk."

The regional winners besides MacPherson in Division I-A were Bobby Bowden of Florida State, a tie between George Perles of Michigan State and Bill Mallory of Indiana, Tom Osborne of Nebraska and Paul Roach of Wyoming.

Elway Hopeful Of A Big Day

DENVER (AP) — John Elway's eyes lit up when they told him the Houston Oilers played mostly man-to-man defense. Any quarterback who thrives on a challenge the way Elway does relishes having his receivers go one-on-one with defensive backs.

Trouble is, the Oilers' defensive reputation seems to be a misconception.

"We thought they played a lot of man coverage, but after looking at film that's not necessarily the case," Elway said as his Denver Broncos prepared for Sunday's AFC playoff game against Houston.

"Against Seattle they were in a zone 70 percent of the time on first down," Elway said of last Sunday's conference wild-card game. "The week before against Cincinnati they were in a zone the whole game. That surprised me."

"They're actually a game-plan type defense. They use whatever they think will stop you that day."

Coach Dan Reeves said: "Houston uses a lot of bump-and-run and they have the reputation of being a man-to-man team. But they don't do that exclusively. They mix up their coverages and they disguise it well."

Elway, then, must polish up his reading glasses — the kind that discern defensive coverages.

"Nothing about their defense particularly stands out," Elway said. "They're physical, they rush the passer well and their backs are aggressive. They sort of remind me of the way the Raiders used to play. It's a team that clearly has a lot of talent."

Elway's talent is not lost on the Oilers either.

Denver, 10-4-1 during the regular season, is a 10-point favorite over the Oilers, 9-6 before their wild-card victory over Seattle.

Snow And Icy Roads Force Postponements

Snow and icy road conditions have served to force the postponement of all area sporting activities scheduled for tonight, with a couple of possible exceptions.

Trinity Christian School, in Nashville, Tenn., to participate in the Nashville Free Will Baptist Invitational Basketball Tournament, will compete as scheduled.

Greenville Christian Academy, scheduled to travel to Falls Road of Rocky Mount, had not made a determination of its basketball game as of press time.

Among postponed basketball games were (new dates in parentheses where known): Aurora at Jamesville; Bear Grass at Belhaven; Chocowinity at Bath, Greene Central at Ayden-Grifton (Wednesday); North Pitt at Havelock; Farmville Central at C.B. Aycock; Roanoke at Roanoke Rapids; Ahsokie at Williamston, and Northern Nash at Rose (Wednesday).

Wrestling matches delayed include: West Carteret at Conley (Jan. 16), and Rose at Northern Nash.

Now that the bowl games have finally passed us by, we must give credit where credit is due.

Tom Morris of the sports department is the winner of the 1987 pick the winners session. Morris went through the bowls with a 9-8 record, but it was enough for him to take a two-game victory over runner-up Clay Deanhardt. Morris finished the season with a 107-52 record.

Deanhardt, who took over for Don Reuter when he left the Reflector late in the season, proved a good replacement. He turned in a fine 14-3 record in the bowls and vaulted into second place with a 105-54 record.

Vickie Spivey, who had been in second place prior to the bowls, went 8-9 and fell to third with a 103-56 mark.

This writer had a 12-5 record in the bowls and pulled up to fourth place in the final tally with a 102-57 record. Tom Baines fell from third to fifth with a 7-10 record and ended up 101-58.

And, bless his heart, Joe Jenkins finally did end up just where he seems to have found a home — in last place. Jenkins was 9-8 in the bowls and ended up 99-60 to capture that honor.

Congratulations to the champ. And better luck next year to the rest of us.

East Carolina's Pirates go into their first weekend of Colonial Athletic Association play Saturday night at George Mason, and the Bucs are still looking for their first win on the road.

This weekend won't find things any easier.

Mason has the second-best record in the conference, one of only two winning records in the league. Richmond has the best record, 8-2, while George Mason is at 6-4.

All the rest of the teams have a losing record at this point.

The Pirates have a chance against the Patriots, but they must play an outstanding game from tip off to horn. They cannot play the type game they played against Winthrop in their last home game, or as they played against Maryland-Baltimore County earlier this week.

James Madison, only 3-7, might prove an easier opponent, but still the Pirates must play at their best. The Pirates have yet to learn, Coach Mike Steele says, that they have to play their hardest to win on the road.

Winning at James Madison is not an easy task either. The Pirates have never won a game on a JMU court. In fact, they have come within 10 of the Dukes there only once, last year when they lost by eight.

From what has been seen thus far, however, the Pirates do have a chance to win some games in the league. At their best, they might even finish around the middle of the league.

But, as Steele says, it will take the team's best effort.

Trinity Takes Two In Hoop Tourney

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Trinity Christian School of Greenville captured a pair of games in the Nashville Free Will Baptist Invitational Basketball Tournament Thursday, defeating teams from Arkansas and Illinois.

Trinity defeated Van Buren Christian of Arkansas, 71-53, in the opening game of the tournament, then came back with a 53-51 win over Bethel Christian of Illinois.

In the opening game of the tourney, Trinity struggled with Van Buren for the first three quarters. Trinity led 14-13 after the first period, but fell behind in the second period, 29-25, as Van Buren outthit the Tigers, 16-11.

"We did everything we wanted to," Coach Don Southerland said. "We ran the break, we got the ball inside and we played good defense. But the ball just would not fall for us."

Trinity inched back in the third period, 19-16, and trailed by one going into the final period, 46-44. Then, in the final period, Trinity's shots started to fall and the Tigers outhit Van Buren, 27-8.

"They just finally ran out of gas and we were still strong," Southerland said.

Kirk Welch led Trinity with 29 points while Gerard Fulton had 15 and Mike Harrell and Kreston Welch each had 10. Kirk Welch led the Tigers in rebounding with 19 while John Griffith added 13.

Chuck Lennier led Van Buren with 19 while Travis Crabtree had 11.

In the second game, Trinity was still tired from the first contest and after the first quarter also ran out of gas. "We had less than two hours work and we stood around a lot after the first period," Southerland said.

Trinity did run out to a 20-8 lead in the first period, but then had to hold on. Bethel came back with a 14-8 edge in the second quarter to cut the lead to 28-22.

In the third period, Trinity held Bethel off, 18-17, to take a 46-39 lead into the final frame. In that, Bethel rallied once more and nearly pulled it off.

With 18 seconds left, Fulton hit on a 3-point play to give Trinity a 53-49 lead. Bethel scored to pull it back to 53-51, but Trinity missed at the free throw line. Bethel turned the ball over with five seconds left, only to get it right back when the Tigers misplayed it on the in-bounds, but a shot at the horn failed, preserving the Trinity win.

Kirk Welch again led the Trinity scoring with 21 points while Fulton had 11 and Kreston Welch had 10. Kirk Welch had 13 rebounds to lead in that department.

Darrin Portell had 18, Brad Ryan had 16 and Craig Willeford had 10 for Bethel.

The Tigers, however, suffered a blow when Michael Harrell suffered a sprained ankle in the third quarter of the second game and is questionable for today's action.

Now 10-1, the Tigers were to face Mingo of West Virginia in today's first game.

Cary Man Tried For Riot Assault

RALEIGH (AP) — A Cary man pleaded guilty Thursday to assaulting an N.C. State University inspector during a riot after the East Carolina-North Carolina State football game in September.

Keith Douglas Philbeck, 21, will not have to serve time in jail for the offense. Instead, Wake County District Court Judge George Greene ordered him to pay the medical bills of Robert Malason, of Raleigh, the man punched in the incident.

"To err is human," Greene said.

UC-Santa Barbara Upsets UNLV

By The Associated Press
Jerry Tarkanian rolled craps with the game on the line.

Like the high-rollers who frequent the town he calls home, Tarkanian took the ivories to hand, so to speak, with 13th-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas fighting for its basketball life Thursday night against UC-Santa Barbara.

Tarkanian gambled on a play designed for his leading scorer, Jarvis Basnight. Had it worked, UNLV would force an overtime, an extra five minutes to dispatch this upstart from California.

What Basnight got was a hurried 15-footer that fell short as time expired and UC-Santa Barbara had a 62-60 upset of the Runnin' Rebels.

"We ran the wrong play on the court," Tarkanian said. "We were supposed to get the ball to Jarvis down low and that is not what we did."

The last play was typical of how things went for a UNLV team that was 11-0 and riding a 21-game winning streak in the Pacific Coast Athletic Association. The Rebels shot a miserable 35 percent from the field and only 30 percent in the second half. The chief offender was high-scoring Gerald Paddio, who missed 12 of 13 attempts during a six-point evening.

"I honestly thought coming in that we had a chance to win," said Santa Barbara Coach Jerry Pimm, who'd be a rich man today had he offered that opinion around before the game.

"That may sound crazy," Pimm added, "but I thought, with good defense and inside work, we could win."

Although Brian Johnson hit two 3-point crucial baskets in the late going, it was Santa Barbara's steady inside game that produced 49 percent shooting and enough points to offset a miserable night at the free-throw line — 11 misses in 19 attempts, including four bonus front-ends in the last two minutes.

"The thing that really bothers me is that I really don't think we defended when we were behind," Tarkanian said. "When you're behind, you have to play hard and play defense. I just don't think we played very hard, and that is what bothers me."

"This win has to rank up there with the best," said Pimm, whose team won for the first time in 17 games against the Runnin' Rebels. "Everybody is hungry to beat UNLV."

Hungry just about describes the way No. 3 Arizona felt. Playing its first game since a 61-59 loss at New Mexico that cost the Wildcats the No. 1 national ranking, Arizona devoured hapless California 80-51. The main course of Golden Bear was served in the first half, which the Wildcats devoured to the tune of 43-12.

In other Top Twenty games, No. 10 Purdue held off Ohio State 84-77, No. 17 Iowa State beat Grambling 99-81 and No. 19 Illinois needed an overtime for a 65-61 victory over Minnesota, which lost its 17th straight Big Ten game.

At Las Vegas, Johnson got all of his points on the two second-half 3-pointers. The first gave Santa Barbara the lead for good at 55-54 with seven minutes left. The second, capping a 9-0 Gauchos run, made it 59-54 with 4:07 to go.

Santa Barbara led 62-55 after a free throw by Greg Trygstad with 2:16 to play, but UNLV got a 3-pointer from Clint Rossum and a basket by Karl James to draw within two with 1:15 left.

Santa Barbara had chances to salt the game away, but kept missing free throws. The last miss occurred with the Gauchos on top 62-60, clearing the way for a final UNLV shot.

Santa Barbara is 10-1 and leads the PCAA with a 2-0 record. UNLV is 11-1 and 2-1.

No. 3 Arizona 80, California 51

Tom Tolbert, held to seven points in the loss at New Mexico last Saturday, had 12 by halftime — the same total as California, which needed 29 shots for its four first-half baskets.

"There was no question I was in a slump," Tolbert said. "I wasn't worried. I knew I would come out of it. It felt good when I hit the first two jumpers, and that's when I got my confidence back."

"The first half was a weird situation," Arizona Coach Lute Olsen said. "I thought offensively, they got the ball inside on us better than anyone so far (this season). I thought Cal did an excellent job of getting the shots it wanted. They just didn't fall for them."

"We've hit a slump — you hope it ends soon," understated California Coach Lou Campanelli said. "If there are any witch doctors out there, we'll try anything."

California, playing against a sated foe in the final 20 minutes, managed to get within 15 points on one occasion but never threatened.

Sean Elliott had 23 points and Tolbert 20 for Arizona, 13-1 overall and 3-0 in the Pac-10. Visiting California is 4-7 and 1-2.

No. 10 Purdue 84, Ohio St. 77

At West Lafayette, Ind., Troy Lewis scored four of his 22 points in the late going as Purdue, 11-1, held off Ohio State, 7-4. The Buckeyes got within three points on four occasions in the second half, the last time at 78-75 with 1:15 to go. But a Lewis jumper and two free throws by Melvin McCants ensured Purdue's second Big Ten victory in as many starts.

Ohio State, which got 24 points from Jay Burson, lost any chance of winning its conference opener when it committed two turnovers in the last 22 seconds.

No. 17 Iowa St. 99, Grambling 81

At Ames, Iowa, Jeff Grayer scored 35 points and Lafester Rhodes 29 as the 17th-ranked Cyclones blew past Grambling. Two free throws by Grayer put Iowa State, 12-2, ahead for good at 16-15 and the Cyclones built the lead to 20 points in the second half. Grayer, the Big Eight's leading scorer, hit 12 of 16 shots from the floor and 11 of 12 free throws. Rhodes hit 13 of 29 shots from the field.

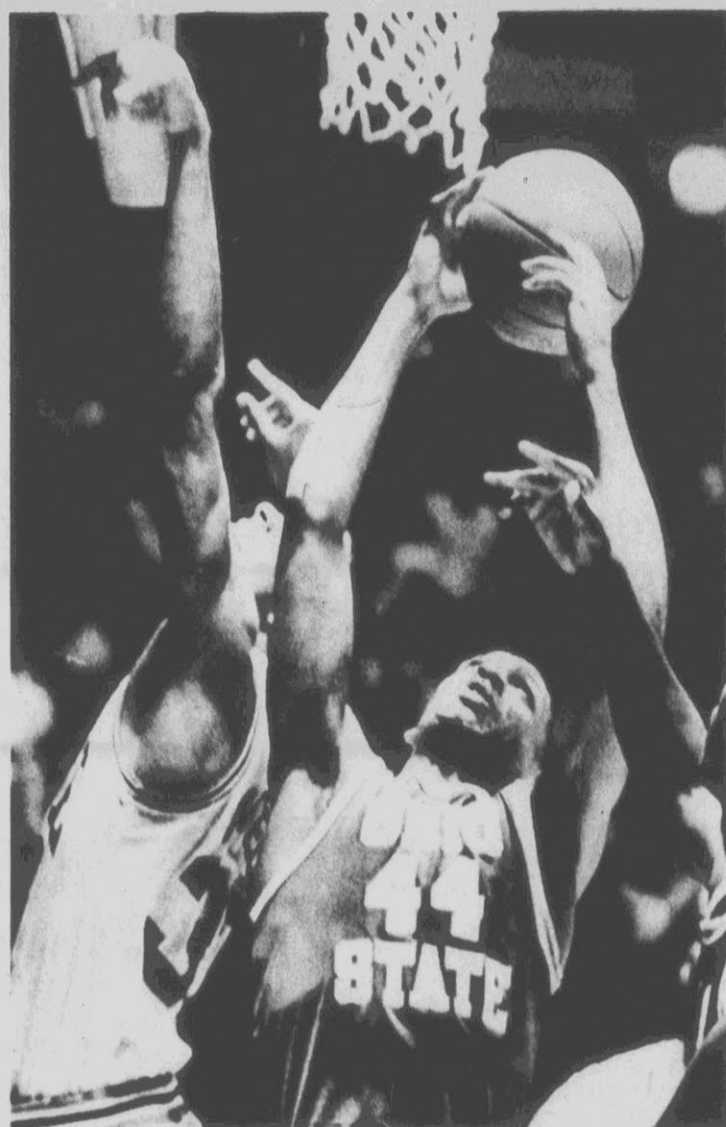

Joel Berry had 26 points for Grambling, 2-10, which has played all of its games on the road.

No. 19 Illinois 65, Minnesota 61

At Minneapolis, Kendall Gill scored four of his 15 points in overtime for Illinois, 10-3 overall and 1-1 in the Big Ten. Two Gill free throws with 2:25 left in overtime to put the Illini ahead for good at 59-58.

Minnesota outscored the Illini 7-2 in the last 2½ minutes of regulation to tie it. Jim Shikenjanski's basket with 1:24 left drew the Gophers within 55-53 and his layup with 34 seconds to go tied it.

WilliBton had 20 points for Minnesota, 6-5 overall and 0-1 in the Big Ten.

Redskins Wary Of McMahon

HERNDON, Va. (AP) — Winning is the statistic that means the most in the NFL, and that is exactly why the Washington Redskins rank Chicago's Jim McMahon above all the other quarterbacks.

The 28-year-old McMahon has had only one 300-yard game in his career, but it isn't his arm that concerns the Redskins most as they prepare for Sunday's NFC playoff against the Bears.

"Three-hundred yard games are not significant when it comes to talking about a great quarterback," said Washington linebacker coach Larry Peccatiello. "It's McMahon's ability to mix his running game and to capitalize on the passing opportunities that makes him an outstanding quarterback."

In other words, McMahon does what it takes to win. In his last 30 starts, he has lost only once, and that setback, ironically, came against Denver this season in his lone 300-yard passing effort.

"Certain guys have the ability to lead and get the most out of a team, and he's one of those guys," said head coach Joe Gibbs. "I think they have extreme confidence in him, and because of that he lifts the whole team."

The win-at-all-costs style makes McMahon stand above the rest, according to defensive tackle Darryl Grant.

"I don't think you can compare McMahon with anyone," Grant said. "His style is unique; he does everything he has to do when he has to do it."

"He gets points on the board and, most of all, the Bears just seem to have a burst of life when he's in the game."

The Redskins are not relieved because McMahon, due to a hamstring injury, has not thrown a pass in competition for a month. Gibbs said the six-year veteran has proven that a layoff means nothing to him.

"If you look at his past history, when he's been out he's come back great," Gibbs said.

The last time McMahon quarterbacked the Bears against the Redskins, Washington was dealt its worst defeat in 24 years. The Redskins haven't forgotten that 45-10 disaster in 1985, when McMahon threw for three touchdowns and caught a pass for another.

"He was all over the field," said All-Pro cornerback Barry Wilburn. "Once he got going we couldn't do a thing to stop him."

The Bears were without McMahon in last year's NFC semifinal when the Redskins harassed Doug Flutie in a 27-13 victory. Washington expects a much tougher battle this time, simply because Chicago has its leader back.

"When McMahon is out they lose something," said Pro Bowl-bound defensive end Charles Mann. "He likes to win and knows how to do it."

While Wilburn spoke highly of McMahon's leadership qualities, but he said there is nothing lacking in the quarterback's ability to get the ball to an open man.

"You really have to cover their receivers because he'll just put it right in there," Wilburn said. "He's more than just blood and guts." Added Grant: "He releases the ball quickly, scrambles, he does it all."

McMahon's presence in the Bears' starting lineup, and his 29-1 streak as a starter, is the main reason the Redskins are underdogs, Grant said.

Ex-Warriors Top Golden State

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

The faces looked familiar, but the uniforms they were wearing identified them as the Houston Rockets. Their old team, the Golden State Warriors, lost in familiar fashion.

The Warriors traded Purvis Short to Houston the day before the season began. Then, on Dec. 12, Golden State sent Sleepy Floyd and Joe Barry Carroll to Houston for Ralph Sampson.

All three made their first appearance in Oakland, Calif., in a Houston uniform Thursday night.

Short scored 13 of his 27 points in the final period as the Rockets defeated Golden State 120-113. With the score tied at 92 with 10:21 left, Short scored six points to trigger a 19-2 run by the Rockets.

Floyd had 15 points, and while Carroll scored only two, he held Sampson scoreless in the second half.

"J.B. (Carroll) struggled before the old home crowd, but he got some big rebounds and played Ralph tough in the second half," Houston Coach Bill Fitch said. "There's more than one way to skin a cat."

Sampson scored his 14 points in the first half and only got four shots in the final two periods.

"It's a matter of inexperience, unfamiliarity with each other and the fact that Ralph is too selfish at times," Golden State Coach George Karl said, explaining Sampson's second-half woes. "I'm proud of what we did tonight. Houston is a very good team and we're getting better every night."

In other NBA games, it was Indiana 114, Milwaukee 108; Chicago 100, Denver 96; Dallas 105, Phoenix 91, and San Antonio 124, Sacramento 119.

Akeem Olajuwon led Houston with 30 points, 20 rebounds and six blocked shots.

Sampson scored 12 points in the second quarter to rally the Warriors from a 36-23 deficit to a 59-57 halftime lead. He had 14 rebounds and four blocked shots in the game.

"I always said that Ralph was an excellent center, and he showed what he could do in the pivot tonight, particularly in the second quarter when he played with a great deal of zeal," Fitch said.

Sampson insisted that "this was just one of 82 games as far as I'm concerned. I don't have any bad feeling against my old teammates. I wish them the best of luck and hope they win the championship."

Spurs 124, Kings 119
Johnny Dawkins scored a season-high 30 points to lead San Antonio over Sacramento. Walter Berry added 22 points and Alvin Robertson 20 as the Spurs snapped a three-game losing streak.

Reggie Theus topped Sacramento with 24 points, while Joe Kleine scored a season-high 22, the same as Kenny Smith.

The Kings opened the game by hitting 11 consecutive baskets before missing as they built a 22-10 lead with 6:45 left in the first quarter. Dawkins scored 11 straight points during an 11-2 San Antonio run that pulled the Spurs within 38-35 with 10:30 left in the first half.

Mavericks 105, Suns 91
Derek Harper scored 27 points and Sam Perkins had 23 as Dallas snapped a two-game losing streak by defeating Phoenix. The game marked the return to Phoenix of first-year Mavericks Coach John MacLeod, who was fired by the Suns last Feb. 26.

Dallas never trailed en route to beating the Suns for the 11th time in their last 13 meetings. Mark Aguirre, who finished with 16 points, was ejected along with the Suns' Larry

Nance for fighting 21 seconds before halftime.

Perkins had 10 third-period points as Dallas took a 80-68 lead into a final quarter in which Phoenix never got closer than 11.

Walter Davis paced Phoenix with 25 points.

Pacers 114, Bucks 108
Steve Stipanovich scored 25 points and Indiana hit its final 13 free throws to defeat Milwaukee. Stipanovich, scoring six points in the final 6½ minutes, hit two free throws with 1:13 to play to give the Pacers a 106-104 advantage. Herb Williams added a layup 44 seconds later to make it 108-104.

The Bucks cut it to two on a 15-footer by Terry Cummings, who finished with 32 points. But Milwaukee would come no closer as Indiana's Chuck Person, Vern Fleming and John Long each hit two free throws.

Bulls 100, Nuggets 96
Michael Jordan, held to 15 points in the first three quarters, hit a fadeaway jumper to break a 96-96 tie with 56 seconds remaining and lead Chicago over Denver. Jordan, who finished with 28 points, had four blocked shots and six steals.

Bidwill May Ask For A Deadline

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — St. Louis Cardinals' owner Bill Bidwill has concluded two days of meetings with Phoenix-area officials and says he may ask the NFL to extend its deadline for deciding if he will move his team to another city.

A two-year-old league policy mandates that Bidwill must inform the NFL where he would be relocating by Jan. 15 plus provide a basic lease agreement with the new city.

The move then must be approved by 21 of the NFL's 28 owners, who ironically are scheduled to gather here in March for the league meetings.

Bidwill protested the policy when it was implemented on Dec. 21, 1984, and it has yet to be tested.

"It's not set in concrete," Bidwill told reporters Thursday at Phoenix Sky Harbor International Airport before catching a flight back to St. Louis. "I might ask to have it extended. We'll see what happens."

Bidwill said he has not made a decision yet, but was leaving with more information than he had before. He said his meetings Wednesday and Thursday afternoons with officials of Arizona State University, Phoenix and Tempe were not as secret as he would like for them to have been.

Although no one involved in the meetings would provide details of the talks, Bidwill apparently didn't want the media even to be aware that he was in town.

Bonnie Bartak, an aide to Phoenix Mayor Terry Goddard, said Bidwill's visit was a surprise. "We had no idea he was coming," she said.

Burton Barr, who has represented Phoenix in negotiations with Bidwill, said the meetings with Bidwill, his attorney, Tom Guilfoil, and financial advisor Chris Melvin focused on ironing out the financial details of the proposal, including several guarantees.

"It's a good step, a friendly step," Barr said. "But we haven't bought a flag and we haven't bought a flag that says 'Arizona Cardinals.'"

One key issue reportedly discussed involved a $5-million training facility that Tempe has said it would build for the team.

Clark Signing Not A Clear Sign

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Before baseball's free agents start celebrating Jack Clark's signing with the New York Yankees as a signal that the good, old open market auction days are back, they might want to consider a few things about the deal.

Remember first that Clark got a two-year contract, the established standard in baseball's brave new financial world.

In another time, a free agent with his credentials could have commanded much more than that. The last time George Steinbrenner whipped out his wallet for a fancy free agent, Dave Winfield got a 10-year deal. Previous Yankee market coups like Reggie Jackson, Catfish Hunter and Goose Gosage got five- and six-year agreements.

So the length of Clark's contract did not exactly break any new ground. Neither did the numbers in it.

Clark left St. Louis to play for less money in New York. He got $1.5 million a year plus incentives that could total $500,000 a year from the Yankees. This is hardly pin money but the fact is that the Cardinals offered $1.6 million plus incentives that could have pushed his income to $2.15 million per year.

The owners' conspiracy has never objected to free agent movement as long as it was for less money. Last winter, MVP Andre Dawson and Lance Parrish paid for the privilege of going to new teams by accepting sizeable pay cuts. So again, Steinbrenner's deal with Clark fit neatly within the boundaries baseball established three winters ago.

Clark moved to New York because it suited him, not because Steinbrenner broke ranks with the management fraternity and overwhelmed him with a collusion-busting offer. Instead, it was a matter of pride.

The new Yankee is a sensitive man and was less than thrilled about the way the Cardinals handled his ankle injury last September. Through much of the summer, Clark was the National League's most feared hitter, and that includes Dawson, who was en route to the MVP award. When the first baseman hurt his ankle in September, the Cardinals lost the one legitimate long-ball threat in their lineup.

Perhaps to deprive other teams of any psychological advantage, St.

Louis kept insisting Clark's injury was minor and that he would be back soon. When he never returned, the suggestion was that he was dogging it. "They told me he would be back by Friday," Manager Whitey Herzog later cracked. "I didn't know they meant Good Friday."

Soft tissue injury, however, is often more debilitating than a broken bone, as the Cardinals and Clark learned. The Cards, however, may have learned something else about dealing with important employees.

"All I kept hearing was that I was a one-dimensional player, that I couldn't do this and I couldn't do that," Clark said. "I just had enough of it. It wasn't about money. I just didn't like the abuse I was getting."

Clark recalled one conversation in which Cardinal General Manager Dal Maxvill said, "Go find somewhere else to play. Nobody's going to offer you as much as we have."

Maxvill, schooled in the fine financial art of Ueberrothomics, was right about that. Nobody did.

Springsteen Plans Tour

NEW YORK (AP) — Rock star Bruce Springsteen will begin a tour of about 22 cities for his latest album in late February, a Columbia Records spokeswoman said.

No details were available for the "Bruce Springsteen Tunnel of Love Express Tour," a Columbia Records spokeswoman in New York City said, on condition that her name not be used.

Even though the "Tunnel of Love," Springsteen's ninth album, is largely a compilation of solo songs, the tour also will feature the E Street Band, the spokeswoman said.

In 1984 and 1985, Springsteen made a world tour for the "Born in the U.S.A." album. When tickets went on sale for that tour's concerts in Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J., New Jersey Bell reported that 67 million calls — 24 million more than on a typical day — were made by fans seeking tickets.

PBS Special Gives Glimpse Of Famed Conductor's Life

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The most famous and acclaimed conductor of the 20th century is, without doubt, Arturo Toscanini.

Artists who worked with Toscanini gathered recently, braving a snowstorm, to reminisce and watch a preview of the 90-minute "Toscanini: the Maestro," which airs tonight on PBS' "Great Performances."

Toscanini died in 1957, two months before his 90th birthday. At age 70, he took over the NBC Symphony and conducted it for 17 years.

The show is designed for the viewer who is more interested in the person than the music. It includes kinescopes of the NBC Symphony that were broadcast from 1948 to 1952, but the music is secondary to voiceovers of reminiscences.

The show also includes home movies from the Toscanini family, an interview with Toscanini's only grandson, Walfredo Toscanini, and recollections of singers and orchestra members who tell how Toscanini brought more artistry out of them than they thought they possessed.

Any mention of Toscanini's towering rages when he didn't hear what he wanted is saved for the last half hour.

Prague-born soprano Jarmila Novotna, who sang in "The Magic Flute," the last staged opera conducted by Toscanini at the 1937 Salzburg Festival, was greeted by Brooklyn-born baritone Robert Merrill, who at 25 sang Germont in "La Traviata" with Toscanini and the NBC Symphony.

Merrill, who had his own radio show when he was in his 20s, sang "Di Provenza," the baritone's big aria from "La Traviata." Toscanini was casting "Traviata" for a broadcast concert. He heard Merrill on the radio and hired him, sight unseen.

Merrill recalls, "I walked in. He was sitting alone at the piano. I was 25 and looked about 19. Germont is an old man."

"I saw fear in his blazing eyes. After three minutes of silence which felt like two hours, he asked me if I'm a father. I said, 'No, Maestro, I'm not even married.'"

"He played and sang the whole role with me. After we finished, he said, 'I'll make you a father.' He coached me. Can you imagine the luck I had, to be involved with a genius like that?"

Before the performance, Merrill said, he saw Toscanini in his office, jumping up onto a couch and down again.

"I was astounded. I asked somebody, who said, 'He does this because he wants to leap gracefully onto the podium.'"

"People thought only music was on his mind. He was conscious of every aspect of performance."

Novotna had with her a 1930 program she got when Toscanini conducted the New York Philharmonic in Prague. She said, "When I came to America, I showed it to Maestro and he signed it for me. Almost 60 years I've kept it nicely."

She said, "I worshiped Maestro ever since I studied singing in Milan in 1927. I went to all performances at La Scala when he conducted. This was the most important part of my studies, to hear this perfection."

Shortly before the 1937 Salzburg Festival, Toscanini attended a "Magic Flute" in Vienna in which Novotna sang Pamina. Afterwards, she said, he asked her, "Are you going to be my Pamina?"

"I said, 'Maestro, if you think I am good enough, what can I say?' That was something fantastic."

The last time Merrill sang for Toscanini, in "The Masked Ball," he said, "There is a spot in the duet with the soprano where I have a little phrase and come to E flat, which is a great sound for the baritone voice. It's written 'retard,' but he never let me pause there."

"In the broadcast, live on the air, we came to that spot and he waited. Afterwards, backstage, he gave me a wonderful embrace and said, 'Merrill, I hear you take a good breath. I let you hold the note.'"

TV Ads Will Urge Early Tax Filing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Your television screen flashes, the wind howls, papers are shuffled by an invisible hand. And that eerie music — is that the theme from "The Exorcist"?

No, and you're not watching "The Twilight Zone." It's just Madison Avenue's way of telling you that there's a brand new federal tax law and that it's time to start thinking about filing your 1987 return.

The McCann-Erickson advertising agency, in cooperation with the non-profit Advertising Council, has created for the Internal Revenue Service a series of advertisements with the theme "make your taxes less taxing."

The theme of the two 30-second television commercials deals with the human tendency to procrastinate. With all the props and effects that might fit into the movie "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," the ads convey the message that the longer you put it off, the worse your tax chore seems — and that all kinds of bad things might happen "because you're leaving your taxes for the last minute."

In the end, the taxpayer sees the light, stuffs his return into an envelope and — in the words of Robert Summers of McCann-Erickson — "experiences a sense of emotional relief ... even a sense of satisfaction for having done it right."

IRS Commissioner Lawrence B. Gibbs told a news conference Wednesday he thinks the ads will make clear that this year especially, because so much of the law has been changed, taxpayers should not wait until near the April 15 deadline to begin work on their returns.

Gibbs said the IRS is ready to receive the first of an expected 105 million individual returns, and to start processing refund checks for about 80 million of them. With increased appropriations from Congress, the agency has hired new "assistants" to answer questions, has intensified training to help assure correct answers, and has boosted the number of telephone lines in an effort to cut the number of busy signals.

"We are ready," Gibbs said. "Our tax forms are tested and ready. Our computers are reprogrammed and ready. Our employees are trained and ready. ... All we need now is for taxpayers to get ready — and that's where the advertising campaign comes in."

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY Jan. 9

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Study the promises you have made to various people, and find a way to keep them all so that nobody will feel cheated or angry.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Stop procrastinating about any civic duties which you should handle. Be more cooperative with a co-worker, and get good results.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You can handle some duties now for which you have had little time, and get excellent results. Don't spend any money foolishly at this time.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Give more attention to your creative ideas and you can achieve some unexpected success. Greater cooperation can work wonders.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Pay attention to some home condition which needs improvement. Don't lose your temper with a family friend; use tact instead.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): It is important that you handle your correspondence immediately. Also, if you are planning a trip, make sure of all the details now.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Call the individual on the phone who has the advice you need. If the line is busy, keep trying. Improve the appearance of your property.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): This is a good day to handle your own affairs and not to bother with those of others. Drive with great care while traveling tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Your mate may tend to lead you into an argument, but don't take the bait or you'll regret it. Smile sweetly instead, and be happy.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): If you get together with some friends tonight, don't bring up a controversial subject or an unfortunate argument will follow.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): This is not a good day to ask for favors. Stick to your duties, but concentrate mainly on the most important matters for now.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): A person who has the information you need may not be willing to part with it. Be polite, but persistent, and eventually you'll get it.

1♥	Pass	1♣	Pass
4♣	Pass	5♣	Pass
5♦	Pass	5♣	Pass
6♣	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♦

If you take a quick look at this hand, you might think that, after a diamond lead, declarer has to resort to a heart finesse in an effort to make his slam. He has a better line available.

The bidding is interesting. North was preparing to reverse into spades when his partner responded in that suit. Instead, North made the splinter bid of four clubs, showing game-going values in spades and a singleton club. South announced slam interest by cue-bidding five clubs, but could make no move over his partner's diamond cue-bid—he had shown everything with his move toward slam. However, North had more than enough to bid the slam—

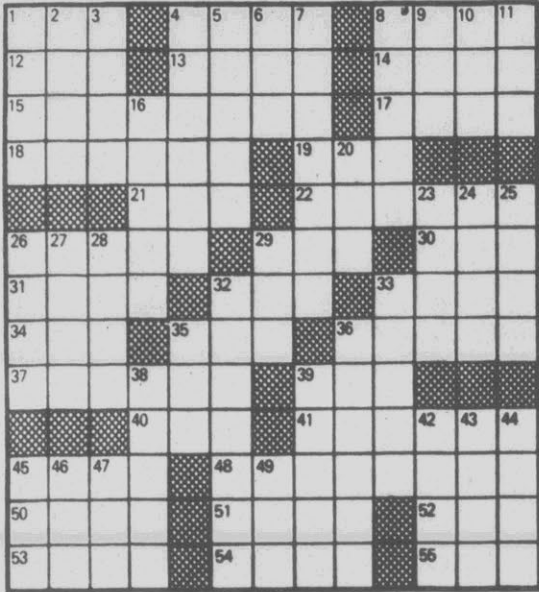

South had to have the king of trumps, ace of clubs and at least one other card for his bidding.

The moment of truth came right away. West led the king of diamonds, and declarer was in danger of losing a trick in each red suit. He drew trumps in two rounds, ending in hand, and led a heart. When West followed with the deuce, declarer hopped up with dummy's ace, and great was the fall thereon.

No, South had not peeked at East's hand and seen the singleton king—he was simply combining his chances for the best percentage shot at his contract. Had the king of hearts not dropped, South was going to finesse—in clubs! Even though he had no loser in that suit, were the club finesse to win, declarer would have been able to discard dummy's diamond loser on the ace of clubs, still making his slam. He was simply getting two chances for the price of one.
