Panel Calls For Changes In Presidential Succession

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Before the next president takes office, his staff, his doctor and even his wife need to be better prepared than their predecessors to deal with a president who is incapacitated, a panel of distinguished public figures said today.

The panel said guidelines should be put in place spelling out exactly under what circumstances the vice president should be declared the acting president.

"Most emphatically, this must be done not after inauguration but before," the group said. And the public must be informed that there are "operating procedures for times of temporary presidential disability ... to get through such contingencies without disruption of government or public alarm."

The 25th Amendment to the Constitution, adopted in 1967, lays out the procedure for temporarily transferring a president's powers and duties to the vice president. But two of its provisions could become a lawyers' playground.

"Scenarios for endless mischief have been constructed and widely printed as both fact and fiction," said a report by the Miller Center Commission on Presidential Disability and the 25th Amendment. The group gets its name from the White Burkett Miller Center of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia.

The commission included the two principal authors of the 25th Amendment — Herbert Brownell, attorney general in the Eisenhower administration, and Birch Bayh, a former Democratic senator from Indiana.

Retired Chief Justice Warren Burger was among the 11 other panel members. Panelist Chalmers M. Roberts, former political and diplomatic reporter for The Washington Post, was main draftsman of the report.

The first two of the amendment's four sections are unambiguous: If the president dies, resigns or is removed from office, the vice president becomes president. And whenever the vice presidency is vacant, the president nominates a successor who must be confirmed by a majority vote of both houses of Congress.

Both those sections came into play in the Nixon administration, first when vice president Spiro Agnew resigned in October 1973 and then when Nixon quit in August the next year.

Section 3 temporarily elevates the vice president to acting president when the president declares he is "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office." It was used when Ronald Reagan underwent colon cancer surgery in July 1985 but not when he was shot in 1981 and remained in intensive care one day.

Some circumstances make the need for a temporary transfer obvious. "One situation involves elective surgery where a general anesthetic, narcotics, or other drugs that alter cerebral function will be used," the report said. "Another involves a similarly debilitating disease or physical malfunction."

Carter Heads Tribute To Martin Luther King

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer
Drawing on "hip language" of today's youth, Greenville Mayor Ed Carter told an audience at Hendrix Theater on the East Carolina University campus Monday night that "Martin Luther King Jr. was a mighty, mighty bad man."

Carter, speaking at a program commemorating King's birthday, explained that "bad means good, exceptionally good, in the hip language voiced by people like singer Michael Jackson."

The late black leader, honored in a program sponsored by the Eta Nu Chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity Inc. at ECU, was eulogized by Carter and several other platform speakers in the fourth annual Martin Luther King Jr. Leadership Awards Ceremony.

"Martin Luther King Jr. was bad in the best way," Carter said. "He received a message from the Lord to speak out for non-violence as Gandhi before him had one. Dr. King had a dream, a dream of faith that men could believe in and practice social justice for all, the black, the poor of any race."

Carter stressed that King's non-violence "was never a matter of his being a coward. He knew the meaning of suffering. Trusted friends betrayed him. He was jailed 30 times. But his was a moral courage, one far greater than the courage of violence of the assassin who shot him."

Carter said that in his deepest feeling he thinks of King as "a man above all called to bring dignity to the common man. His life, his dream of a greater America still challenges us. His life, like that of Jesus, was a short life."

"But we must remember, what is important is not how long you live, but how well you live."

Alvin Mitchell, chapter adviser for the fraternity, said "Dr. King's dream is essentially an American dream, not just a dream for blacks."

Dr. Trenton Davis, associate vice chancellor for academic support at ECU, saying he had grown up in Georgia, said "America today is a far better country because of the life of Martin Luther King."

In the awards area of the program, Carter was the recipient of the Community Service Award, given by the fraternity to the person who best exemplifies the spirit of service within the Greenville-Pitt County community.

"Ed Carter is a man who has long walked with the crowd in the roads, a man who has given his best efforts to all people," said Dr. Andrew Best, who presented the award to Carter.

Charles Smith of Newport, a senior at ECU majoring in industrial technology, was this year's recipient of the fraternity's service leadership award. This honor is given to the student who has most effectively contributed to the ideals and achievements of the fraternity. Smith is retired from the U.S. Marine Corps.

Student Phyllis Portie received the fraternity's Greek Award, and a dozen achievement awards were presented to students for outstanding work in various areas of campus life.

Dr. David Dennard, an associate professor of history at ECU, gave the faculty tribute; students Anthony Rook was master of ceremonies, and Leslie Person gave a brief address of welcome.

Chinese Jet Crashes, Killing 108 On Board

BEIJING (AP) — Investigators today searched the wreckage of a domestic airliner that crashed near an airport in southwestern China, killing all 108 people aboard, including three Japanese and a Briton.

The crash Monday night, five miles short of the runway at Chongqing airport in Sichuan province, was one of the worst in China's history.

The official news agency Xinhua said the Soviet-designed Ilyushin IL-18, a four-engine turboprop, was on a landing approach when it went down. The Southwest China Airlines flight from Beijing carried 98 passengers and a crew of 10.

A woman who answered the phone at the Beijing office of the Civil Aviation Administration, the nation's flag carrier and the parent of Southwest China Airlines, said an engine defect caused the crash and weather was not a factor.

The woman would not elaborate on the nature of the engine problem and said she did not know if the plane caught fire. She refused to give her name — a common practice among Chinese officials dealing with reporters.

Hong Kong television showed large pieces of the plane strewn over cropland. The national evening television news read Xinhua's report on the crash but did not show any footage from the crash site.

Confrontation On West Bank

Stones Fly As Rabin Warns Israeli Force Will Continue

JERUSALEM (AP) — Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin confronted stone-throwing Palestinians in a West Bank refugee camp today and said his troops were under orders to quell violent demonstrations "with force, power and blows."

In conversations and shouting matches with Palestinians, Rabin said the army would go on suppressing demonstrations using "force with wisdom" until calm was restored in the occupied territories, where Israeli troops have killed at least 36 Arabs in six weeks of anti-Israeli protests.

Israel radio broadcast Rabin's conversations at the camp and he was accompanied by reporters.

As he faced a crowd in Jelazoun refugee camp 10 miles north of Jerusalem, a salvo of rocks landed 15 yards away, according to reporters. Rabin did not move but his bodyguards, armed with M-16 rifles, went on the alert, trying to spot the stone-throwers.

Earlier, troops forced open store shutters in the nearby city of Ramallah in an attempt to break a commercial strike which Israel claims was forced on the business community by militants.

Israel's hard-fisted approach to the weeks of unrest was evident in the West Bank today. Associated Press photographer Anat Givon saw Israeli soldiers in Ramallah dragging a handcuffed Palestinian into a bus, and she then heard screams and the sound of clubs hitting the walls of the bus.

Rabin drove through Jelazoun streets blackened by burning tires, past collapsing walls whose stones have been ripped out to serve as weapons.

He told reporters: "The orders and first priority to the security forces is to prevent violent demonstrations (by using) force, power and blows."

Elsewhere, Arab merchants kept their stores closed today in a strike that paralyzed east Jerusalem, and Israeli soldiers tried to break a strike in the Gaza Strip by seizing identification papers from Palestinian shopkeepers.

Soldiers confiscated papers from about 50 Palestinians and said they would not be returned until the merchants reopened their businesses.

The papers are critical to Gaza Strip Palestinians, who are under military orders to carry them at all times.

Police in Jerusalem warned they would take tough action if the strike there didn't end soon. Israel's ability to break the work stoppage was seen as a test of how quickly it can reestablish control of annexed east Jerusalem and the occupied territories.

Curfews were in force in a West Bank refugee camp and village and seven Gaza Strip refugee camps today, severely restricting the movements of about 220,000 Palestinians. The daily Hadashot said today that army officers acting under orders had cut electricity, water and telephone lines to thousands of houses in Gaza Strip camps during the riots.

N.C. On Final List For Collider

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seven states chosen by a scientific panel as offering the best sites for the multi-billion-dollar superconducting super collider will be officially named as finalists by the federal government, a Texas senator said today.

"The Department of Energy will announce today the official short list ... will include seven states — Texas, Illinois, North Carolina, Tennessee, Arizona, Michigan and Colorado," said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

New York, which was also recommended as a candidate state by the National Academy of Sciences and the National Academy of Engineering last month, was not on the list, Gramm said.

New York Gov. Mario Cuomo earlier this month asked the department to drop consideration of the Rochester area as a location for the $4.4 billion atom smasher in response to stiff opposition from local residents.

The department is scheduled to announce its choice for the site in July and confirm it in January 1989. The project would require congressional approval.

Gramm said that the selection process will focus on economic rather than technical merits of the individual sites.

"Each of the seven are being considered at an equal footing from a technological standpoint," Gramm said. "But we are down to consideration based on economics rather than technical factors."

Study Cites Stroke Risk In Smoking

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — People cut their risk of strokes by 50 percent if they give up cigarettes, and even life-long smokers benefit from kicking the habit, a study concludes.

Although smoking is clearly a cause of lung cancer and heart attacks, until recently there was no convincing evidence that it causes stroke, the nation's third-leading cause of death.

The latest data, based on the long-running Framingham Heart Study, confirms that cigarettes also contribute to strokes.

"There is a clear-cut relationship between cigarette smoking and stroke, and it's not too late to quit at any age," said the study's director, Dr. Philip A. Wolf of Boston University Medical School.

Wolf presented his data Monday at a meeting of the American Heart Association.

The study was based on 4,255 residents of Framingham, Mass., a suburb west of Boston, who took part in the heart study. During 26 years of followup, 459 of them suffered strokes.

Those who had high blood pressure were twice as likely as people with normal blood pressure to have strokes. Although smoking was not as important a risk factor as elevated blood pressure, the researchers found that it did increase the risk of stroke by 40 percent in men and 60 percent in women.

However, when people quit smoking, their risk of stroke also fell. Two years after quitting, their risk had decreased significantly, and after five years it was the same as that in non-smokers.

"Whether you are a long-term smoker or a new smoker, there is even more evidence now of the benefit of stopping in terms of preserving your brain and your quality of life," said Dr. Bernadine Healy of the Cleveland Clinic Foundation.

Wolf said the link between smoking and strokes may have been missed in earlier studies, because smokers are often thin and have lower blood pressure. This could partially protect them from strokes. However, when his analysis compared people of the same weight, there was clearly a strong association between strokes and cigarettes.

A stroke occurs when a blood vessel in the brain becomes plugged or breaks. The disease kills 152,000 people annually, making it the leading cause of death after heart attacks and cancer.

Windfall Halts Job Cutbacks

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — State Department officials are welcoming $60 million in unexpected revenues approved by Congress that will enable the agency to scrap a plan to eliminate 1,270 jobs.

The department appeared headed toward a financial crisis last fall but was given a reprieve in the catchall spending bill approved by Congress on Dec. 22.

"The immediate financial heat is diminished substantially," Charles Caspar, a department budget analyst, said in an interview.

In coming to grips with the anticipated crisis, the department had taken a number of steps that had a demoralizing effect on many officials.

For example, all routine travel by department officials was banned, salaries at overseas posts were frozen, there was a virtual ban on hiring, and newspaper subscriptions at foreign posts were limited to a small number of officials.

In addition, more than a dozen embassies and consulates were slated for closing. Some officials said the planned cutback of 1,270 jobs — 8 percent of the work force — would have severely impaired the department's ability to carry out its function.

One wag at the U.S. Embassy in Brasilia, Brazil, facetiously recommended that all newspaper subscriptions be eliminated and that officials go to a local kiosk and read the newspapers on display as a cost-free way of keeping informed.

Before the reprieve, some officials had taken to spending on official business out of their own pocket.

Caspar recalled the department decided at one point last year not to send a representative to a NATO conference in Brussels to save money. "Somebody from one of the posts in Europe really had a need to be involved in it and he paid his own way," Caspar said.

Now, officials say, many spending restrictions have been lifted, at least partially, and the department is looking ahead to a year with revenues for salaries and expenses at roughly the same level, $1.44 billion, as last year.

Congressional critics of the department have argued that its operating budget has more than doubled since 1979 and that austerity measures should be spread out among all agencies with no exceptions.

The department contends that other agencies can cut back on programs during periods of austerity but that the State Department has to cut back on staff because it is "people-oriented and not program-oriented," according to officials.

Ironically, the department's fortunes began to change after the Oct. 19 stock market crash when the "budget summit" was called to work out a formula for reducing the federal budget deficit.

highest office in the land."

The president's physician should be part of the planning for when to invoke the amendment, the study said. Dr. Daniel Ruge, Reagan's physician at the time of the shooting, told the commission he gave no thought of asking the president to invoke the amendment then.

The president's spouse also becomes of critical importance in considering when to invoke the temporary transfer of power, the panel said.

"It is essential that each (spouse), like other key personnel around the president, be mentally prepared for what could occur, and unfortunately so often has occurred, and that each be familiar with the amendment's applications," the commission said.

Every member of the president's staff, even if fearing loss of power, should be instructed that when a president is disabled "he or she must not dissemble about the president's health or otherwise fend off use of the constitutional remedy for a presidential illness," the study said.

"The commission believes that this amendment must be utilized whenever necessary as a normal ingredient in the governmental process."

Presidents should accept these basic rules, it added.

"Let the president wave from his window to show he is up and around but convalescing while the vice president, as acting president under Section 3, takes care of the day-to-day business," the study said. "There is a substantial difference between a president being able to wave to the crowd from a hospital window and being able to govern."

Section 4, carrying "the most tantalizing and so far the only unused provision of the 25th Amendment," worried the commission.

That section involves a sick president who refuses to — or is unable to — confront his disability, a president who is disabled but unwilling to step aside. The section provides for a declaration by the vice president and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments — "or of such other body as Congress may by law provide" — that the president is unable to carry on.

Despite the vagueness, the commission decided not to recommend the creation of a statutory body. But it said the vice president should not have to start the process "leading to his or her own self-promotion to the

Argentine Officer, Band Of Rebels Surrender, Ending Rash Of Revolts

By WILLIAM H. HEATH
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Raul Alfonsin said Argentina assured democracy and "put our house in order again" by capturing a rebel army officer and peacefully ending a rash of revolts by his supporters.

Lt. Col. Aldo Rico surrendered at an army compound to loyalist troops Monday afternoon, three days after he escaped from house arrest where he was awaiting trial for leading another military uprising in April.

Rico, 43, and about 150 backers laid down their weapons in the town of Monte Caseros, 325 miles northeast of Buenos Aires, after nearly three hours of sporadic fighting with 2,000 troops equipped with tanks and artillery.

Alfonsin, who personally intervened to end similar rebellions last April, told the nation Monday night that "we have demonstrated that all of us, together, are capable of assuring democracy and the future of the Argentines."

"We have once again put our house in order," said the president, who used the message "Happy Easter. Our house is in order," last April to announce Rico's surrender on Easter Sunday.

Defense Minister Horacio Jaunarena described the country as "absolutely normal" with all military commands "responding to their natural leaders."

Rico, a decorated veteran of the 1982 Falkland Islands war, was flown to nearby Curuzu Cuatia, command post for loyal forces led by Army Chief of Staff Gen. Jose Caridi.

The military on Monday quashed five other army garrison rebellions elsewhere without firing a shot, and Rico sympathizers who took over a metropolitan airport control tower also surrendered peacefully.

Eighteen rebels, some in military uniforms, were arrested after they stormed the tower at Buenos Aires'

Jorge Newbery airport. They closed airport operations before surrendering four hours later to government troops.

Uprisings at army garrisons occurred in the northern city of Tucuman, in western San Juan and San Luis provinces, in southern Santa Cruz province, and at Las Lajas in southwestern Neuquen province.

Jaunarena told reporters that "large numbers of prisoners" were being processed in the incidents. Reports from the various garrisons indicated that at least 250 soldiers had been arrested.

Army, navy and air force troops converged on Monte Caseros on Sunday and began advancing toward the rebel-held 4th Infantry Regiment and an adjacent engineers company early Monday.

The rebels had mined all access roads and placed explosives under three bridges, one of which was blown up in the fighting.

No fatalities were reported in the fighting and no official figures were immediately available on injuries. Jaunarena told reporters the number of wounded "is very small."

The fighting marked the first time since 1962 that members of the Argentine armed forces had shot at each other.

Rico arrived at Monte Caseros on Saturday night after fleeing house arrest Friday in Buenos Aires, where he faced military trial for leading an April 19-21 rebellion at Campo de Mayo, the army's largest base.

Rico demanded the resignation of Caridi as chief of staff before he would surrender and repeated his April complaint that the armed forces were being unfairly persecuted for human rights abuses during the military rule of 1976-83. Following the April revolts, the congress approved a law granting amnesty to most officers accused of human rights abuses during that time.

by Klippan Clemmons, sang two gospel songs, with the audience joining in the singing of "The Black National Anthem."

Following the program in Hendrix Theater, an open reception was held in the multipurpose room at Mendenhall.

Across the state, the Associated Press reported that love and harmony were the recurrent themes of the first paid state holiday marking King's birthday, but controversy simmered as thousands paid homage to the slain civil rights leader.

At Hamlet in Richmond County, about 600 people sang spirituals and marched in protest of the local school board's decision to hold classes on the holiday.

"Dr. King worked so hard to get us up in the world, we should do something for his birthday," said Anthony Allred, a Richmond Junior High School student. "I don't think they should have canceled the birthday of somebody so important."

"I'm here because black children need heroes and role models just like everybody else," said Edna Robinson, a drama and North Carolina history teacher. "I didn't feel right telling my students this is what they need to do and I not be here. I'm an advocate for children."

Dr. Fred McQueen, Richmond County NAACP president, said he was pleased with the march, which began and ended peacefully. But he said, "I'm very disappointed that the whites did not come out to protest. It's not just a holiday for blacks. It's a holiday for everybody. What Martin Luther King Jr. did was for the entire country."

Several school systems around the state held classes Monday to make up for a snowstorm that kept students out of school for more than a week.

Schools and government offices were closed in Raleigh, where up to 4,000 people paraded from the Capitol to the Raleigh Civic Center for a memorial service.

Republican Gov. Jim Martin, who last year opposed the Legislature's enactment of a paid state King holiday, drew polite applause for his speech paying tribute to King.

"His dream now becomes ours," Martin said. "It is for us to continue to fulfill that dream through serving others — not in an abstract sense, but through action."

Martin was followed to the rostrum by Democratic Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, who supported the holiday and is running for governor against Martin. Jordan's brief remarks drew a thunderous ovation.

"Just as we made this holiday a reality, we can build a better tomorrow, we can build better opportunities for every man, woman and child in North Carolina and America," Jordan said.

Martin, who drew fire from black leaders for his stand on the holiday, first declined an invitation to take part in the celebration but changed his mind after Jordan agreed to participate.

Wilma Burgess, 35, of Raleigh, said she was angry at Martin for opposing the holiday bill. "I think he's probably lost the governorship for another year because of it."

The crowd clapped and swayed as choirs led the singing of gospel hymns. The keynote speaker was the Rev. John H. Adams, presiding bishop of the Washington, D.C., AME Church Conference, who attended Boston University with King.

Adams said King was a "contemporary man" who seized opportunities as they arose, recognizing that such commonplace incidents as Rose Parks' refusal to relinquish a bus seat to a white man could be used to symbolize widespread discrimination.

"Because Martin was contemporary, we must be contemporary," Adams said. "Because Martin was prepared, we must be prepared. And if we are going to be contemporary, we have got to deal with the new issue of slavery to drugs in our youth."

He urged blacks to register to vote and to "vote intelligently" and said the view of many that Jesse Jackson cannot be elected president was "a cynical example of racism."

Aquino Candidates Sweep Elections As Violence Claims Six More Lives

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino's candidates appeared headed today for a virtual sweep of mayoral posts in the Manila area, and the military reported six more deaths related to the regional election.

Candidates endorsed by Mrs. Aquino or her "People Power" coalition also were leading in other key races as Monday's votes were being counted. But two of the president's relatives fared poorly, apparent victims of a public backlash over allegations the family was building a "political dynasty."

Two candidates charged or implicated in past coup attempts appeared headed for victory in gubernatorial and vice gubernatorial contests, while candidates of ousted President Ferdinand Marcos' New Society Movement fared badly, except in Marcos' home province of Ilocos Norte.

In the Manila suburb of Makati, police arrested a soldier and two civilians who barged into the town hall, where workers were counting ballots, and fired a shot. The poll workers fled but came back and resumed counting after police rounded up the assailants. There were no injuries.

The military also said communist rebels snatched about 4,000 ballots from poll clerks and burned some of them north of Manila. Counting was also disrupted in four districts of suburban Quezon City and several other places for reasons ranging from power blackouts to replacement of allegedly partisan poll supervisors, the government-run Philippine News Agency reported.

In General Santos City on the island of Mindanao, vote counting was stopped late Monday when the local poll chairman disappeared, the government's television station reported today. It said the chairman, Cristito Limbagon, was feared kidnapped by unidentified men.

On the central island of Cebu, a civic group conducting an unofficial count there said it was not including results from the city of Danao because armed men roamed the streets and its messengers were afraid to enter the locality.

The Philippine Constabulary, the country's internal security force, released new figures today showing that at least 101 people died since the campaign began Dec. 1. Communist rebels were blamed for most of the deaths.

The constabulary said the new figure included six civilians killed during the campaign and at least nine soldiers killed by communist rebels in an ambush in the northern Philippines on Monday. The constabulary said it decided to include the soldiers in the list of election-related killings because they were performing "election duties" when attacked by the rebels.

Voting was postponed in 11 of the nation's 73 provinces to prevent further bloodshed and give the military time to deploy its forces. Voting in those places was rescheduled later this month or early in February.

The pro-Aquino coalition said its candidates were leading in races for mayor of Manila and 13 of its suburbs. Coalition candidates were trailing in suburban Quezon City, Caloocan and Las Pinas.

OXFORD, N.C. (AP) — A 24-year-old Oxford man has been charged with first-degree murder in the shooting death of another Oxford man, police said.

Stanley Warren Morton was charged in connection with the Sunday death of Leonard Downey, also 24, said Oxford Police Sgt. W.T. Wilson.

Wilson said Downey had been struck in the upper portion of his back by pellets from shotgun and had been shot through the back window of his car.

Police said two pellets ricocheted from the shell after hitting Downey and struck a passenger in the car, Diane Williamson. She was hit in her neck and leg and was treated and released at the medical center.

Morton is scheduled to appear in Granville District Court Jan. 25 for a preliminary hearing on the murder charge.

Authorities said Morton had apparently contacted Downey about buying some drugs and the shooting occurred shortly afterwards.

Accountability For Authority

Pitt County's fledgling Convention and Visitors Authority should take care to avoid the quagmire of impropriety the Raleigh organization appears bogged in.

Providing its president and vice president with $19,000 and $17,000 cars, purchasing a $26,000 wall-mounted video-audio machine and presenting the city's chamber of commerce with a $1,500 sculpture sound more like perks from a top corporation than expenditures of public funds.

Yet these excesses occurred in a public-supported organization — the Raleigh Convention and Visitors Bureau — under the nose of city officials. It is clear the Raleigh bureau has taken advantage of its relationship with the city by misinterpreting its role and violating purchasing procedures.

Perhaps the most ludicrous and disturbing occurrence, however, was the organization's president's argument that since its funding came from a motel tax paid by non-residents, the taxpayers weren't out anything. That point of view is inaccurate and irresponsible. The tax was levied by duly-elected public officials, the bureau was created by an act of the same duly-elected public officials, and the funds were apportioned to the bureau by public authority. They are tax funds, and abuse of them damages the public. Any other perspective is incorrect.

This abuse took place in part because the awkward structure of the organization allowed it too much unsupervised leeway. The bureau's relationship with its public benefactors was too informal.

Pitt County's officials should recognize the shortcomings of such loose operation and insist on measures of accountability to prevent similar improprieties.

For example, the city and county should require an audit of the Convention and Visitors Authority be conducted annually by an independent entity. The county and city should also audit the organization at least twice a year.

The director of the organization should be supervised by the city and county manager. Roles, responsibilities and expectations should be clearly defined. In addition, these two public officials should closely supervise the authority's budget process and expenditures.

Pitt's Convention and Visitor's Authority has the potential to expand the community's already-vigorous travel and tourism industry by effectively marketing its advantages. That measure can further encourage prosperity. This is the reason the organization was created and should be supported.

But careful procedures for accountability must be established and respected if the publicly-funded authority is to work in the public's benefit.

Opening Doors

Mikhail S. Gorbachev feels he is making headway in relations with the United States. Now he is looking to improve relations with China, the other giant of the communist world.

In a recent interview Gorbachev praised Chinese-Soviet relations and expressed hope for a summit with Chinese leaders to solve some of the problems between the two nations.

The perceptive Gorbachev knows he must develop better relations with the United States. The world is now too small for the two super powers to lack dialogue. But he also must recognize that some kind of accommodation with China is essential. The two nations share a border and the huge Chinese military is no doubt more of an immediate threat to the Soviet people than the United States.

Even though both the Soviet Union and China embrace communism they are worlds apart in understanding. The Soviet Union long ago lost any control over Chinese military might.

The Soviets and China have some differences over border areas and immediate negotiations are aimed at solving this problem. Could that lead to better relations in the communist world and become an eventual threat to the United States? Not likely. Even now the Chinese society is headed in different directions than their Soviet neighbors. There is every indication that Chinese leaders enjoy their independence from Soviet control. There is nothing to indicate that the Chinese would be drawn again into the Soviet orbit.

Gorbachev is likely realistic about all that, but he wants improved relations with China, just as he does with the United States. With the easing of tensions on both sides he can pay more attention to domestic issues in the Soviet Union.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Presently, the media are revealing the news about the Supreme Court's ruling which give "public school officials the broad power to censor student newspapers and other forms of student expression." (The Daily Reflector, Jan. 13, 1988)

It's my turn! How happy I am that Principal Robert Reynolds of Hazelwood East High School assumed responsibility for the two articles in "Spectrum," the school's newspaper. He demonstrated first that the public school is fundamentally responsible for educating the young, preparing each to become a thinking adult. In the second place, Principal Reynolds demonstrated moral and ethical values. I commend him highly.

In my day, the school newspaper was to encourage students to write creatively — to imagine what it would be like to fly in the wild blue yonder or to think in terms of what they would like to be when they grew up and why... If students are going to be allowed openly to write about their lifestyles, then eventually the public mind will accept those lifestyles as being normal. My question is: How could those students in Hazelwood East High School have thought that their writings — reporting — dealt with civics? According to Webster, civics means "a social science dealing with the rights and duties of citizens." When should the line be drawn between a social issue and a social science?

Years ago, I was a student of the late Dr. Edgar W. Knight, a Kenan Professor of Education at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. He made many statements. This one fits perfectly: "One of my fears about the public schools in this great country is that one day the immature minds will be in a position of leadership, not the mature mind."

Thank you, Principal Reynolds. This is a small ray of light.

To the editor:

This year our daughter did not attend school on the birth date of Martin Luther King. This does not surprise me; what does surprise me is that she will attend school on George Washington's birthday.

George Washington's greatness was not only because he persevered in a long and bitter struggle for our independence, but having achieved it, he was the man who would not be king. Certainly he had the opportunity. Instead, he worked with a talented and far-sighted group of individuals to forge the greatest document on behalf of mankind that the world has known, our Constitution. This document has become the framework for democratic constitutions in other countries.

Unfortunately, George Washington's birthday has become better known as a sale day at department stores. Nonetheless, it should remain as a national holiday, schools not excepted, in honor, not only of Washington, but of the historical events in which he had a hand and which shaped our lives.

As for Martin Luther King, he was a brave and courageous individual. While I would agree that the actions of his life have touched all of us, I do not believe that his accomplishments are equal to those of Washington.

Martin Luther King is first and foremost a hero of the black community. Yet we are a nation where precedent establishes custom. We have awarded a national holiday to a segment of our population and have established a strong precedent by doing so. Are we next going to hear from the feminists in favor of an Eleanor Smeal Day and from the gay community for a Harvey Milk Day? (And I do not equate Martin Luther King with these two. I only wish to make a point!)

We need national holidays that bring us together, not those that would divide us.

Economy Is Puzzle In '88 Election

Jack Kintzle, an Iowa farmer, is feeling better about the future of the nation's economy than he has in years, despite his state's economic woes. Yet Robert O'Connor, a physics and chemistry teacher in prosperous New Hampshire, is worried.

Their surprising attitudes reflect the confusion that presidential candidates are finding this year as they try to shape their economic messages.

Traditionally, as pocketbook issues go, so go elections.

Most recent presidential elections have featured intense debates about the health of the economy. Americans were upset about soaring inflation and interest rates in 1980, and candidates in both parties proposed solutions. In 1984, many voters wanted more of the same prosperity they had enjoyed for two years, and President Reagan won big largely by promising just that.

This year, plenty of important economic issues are being debated — the record federal budget and trade deficits, the October stock market plunge and the expected slowdown in economic growth.

Few political analysts, however, seem to know which, if any, economic issue will motivate voters — and that makes the Iowa caucus Feb. 8 and the New Hampshire primary Feb. 16 unusually hard to handicap. If anything, they say, people are looking less for specific solutions than for leadership and strength to deal with the problems.

Adding to the mystery is the wildly different nature of the two states' economies.

New Hampshire is booming. For October, the latest figures available, the state's unemployment rate was 2.1 percent, by far the lowest in the nation.

In Iowa, the economy depends heavily on agriculture and is fragile at best. The state's October jobless rate was 4.8 percent, but Dennis Starleaf, chairman of the Iowa State University economics department, said there are a lot of "disturbing things" about the state's economy.

'Those voters are likely to choose between one of two basic messages — that good times can continue with a little fine-tuning, or that the budget and trade deficits are time bombs that will ruin the economy.'

Farmers "know that with all that government debt, things like the federal farm programs are not a viable long-term solution," he said.

The state of the states' economies does not mean that people in Iowa want change and people in New Hampshire want more of the same kind of economic policies. It is highly uncertain what voters want to hear and whether the economy will play a major role in the elections this year.

"It's always an issue; it just won't be a very decisive issue," said James C. Cleveland, a former Republican congressman from New Hampshire. "People are pretty satisfied."

But others think the economy will dominate, and echo the thoughts of Greg Schneiders, former aide to President Carter and now a partner in a Washington political consulting firm.

"Concern about the economy is like a low-grade fever," he said, "and people are looking for someone to believe in, rather than for specific proposals."

The uncertainty over how important the economy will be has stimulated a range of campaign pledges. Vice President George Bush has promised not to raise taxes; several Democratic candidates have given out detailed plans to raise revenues.

Analysts are hard-pressed to figure which kind of message will sell. In both New Hampshire and Iowa, "people are apprehensive about the economy, but there's not a sense that a recession is coming," said William Schneider, resident fellow at the American Enterprise Institute, a research organization in Washington.

Iowans are looking for leadership, too, but they also want what Kintzle, the Iowa farmer, called "understanding."

Iowa's economy depends heavily on agriculture. Not only has its farm sector had serious problems this decade, but so have related industries, notably farm-machinery manufacturers.

Tales of hard times are easy to find. James Wengert, president of the Iowa Federation of Labor, AFL-CIO, said his unions have lost 30,000 members since 1980, and now have 50,000.

Yet in the past few months, there have been some hopeful signs for Kintzle and the state. Livestock prices have improved. Federal payments to farmers are up. So are land prices.

Kintzle feels it. "I woke up one morning in the early 1980s, and my land was worth less and I couldn't get enough crops," he said. "Now I have very little debt. Because of that, and the farm program, it's been a very successful year."

In both states, analysts believe that voters could use the economy as a key test of a candidate's leadership ability.

Those voters are likely to choose between one of two basic messages — that good times can continue with a little fine-tuning, or that the budget and trade deficits are time bombs that will ruin the economy.

No one is sure what to do. Do people want more of the same? Does the deficit scare them? Are higher taxes the answer? Or no new taxes?

All the candidates can be sure of now is that people want the kind of personal strength and leadership qualities that O'Connor and Kintzle are seeking.

Strength For Today

Someone has said that there is only one thing worse than discontent, and that is contentment.

At first sight this statement might seem to be an insane denial of common sense, but actually it has a great deal of truth. If contentment arises from complete satisfaction with the world as it is, then it is evil. If a person's contentment is pure animal contentment, then every power of the soul atrophies under such a condition.

But where contentment arises from great faith, deep love for one's fellows, and an undefiled conscience, then it is a blessing. The world's great souls have seldom had time to be contented because of the constant efforts they exerted to improve the world around them.

For most of us, whether our contentment is a blessing or a curse depends upon where it comes from.

Is The American Nation Condemned To Repeat The Past?

A curiously one-sided debate is taking place these days about the role and importance of history in the American educational system.

From Secretary of Education William Bennett downwards, politicians and administrators are expressing their concern at the average pupil's lack of knowledge of this country's past and the need to acquire, as part of a "core curriculum," a basic corpus of historical facts — about the nation's Constitution, its presidents, its chief political developments.

But however welcome this debate about history in the schools may be, it ignores another and perhaps even more important dimension: that is, the historical awareness of our present politicians and, in particular, of those Republican and Democratic contenders now scrambling to be the person to lead the United States into the next decade. How broad, or narrow, is their knowledge of history? How many of them spend an evening quietly reflecting on Thucydides' history of the war between ancient Greece's two powers, Athens and Sparta, or Fernand Braudel's studies of how geography, economics and culture affect the course of events, or Michael Howard's military histories, instead of studying opinion-polls or watching talk shows?

And, the most critical question of all: Which one among them, seeking to preside over the world's leading Great Power of the late 20th Century, has any sense of the general pattern of world history, of the ups and downs of those nations that formerly occupied the position in international affairs that the United States holds today, and of the changing place of this country in the global system?

To acquire such a knowledge, the ethnocentric spectacles worn by virtually all American statesmen (among the rare exceptions are George Kennan and Henry Kissinger) must be taken off. An ability to recite the American presidents in chronological order, even an intimate knowledge of abolitionism or the New Deal, will not suffice them to deal with the world. All of that involves inward-looking history — which is all right on its own terms, but cannot really help today's politicians to understand where their country has come from and where it may now be heading in world affairs. To get that sort of perspective, it is necessary to understand the larger economic and strategic changes that have occurred on this planet over the past few centuries.

The story of Great-Power relations since the Renaissance is, in fact, a relatively simple one. During the 16th and 17th Centuries, a series of military-technological breakthroughs (mobile cannon, the long-range sailing ship) enabled a cluster of west European states to go ahead of the large empires of the Ottomans, of Persia, Moghul India and Ming China, and thus to begin a westernization of the globe which has lasted to the present. But among the European Great Powers themselves, no single nation or coalition has ever been able to prevail over its rivals to attain long-term dominance over the continent.

A Risky New Philosophy

"It's telling us a lot about our society. ... Becoming rich and famous has become a philosophy of life."

— An educator, commenting on goals of U.S. college freshmen as revealed in a new national survey.

WASHINGTON — Every four years, as the first votes in the presidential selection process are about to be cast in Iowa and New Hampshire, debate flares about what is "the" national issue. Again, candidates are naming the usual suspects: the economy, trade and budget deficits, the dollar and, of course, defense and "a strong America."

Some are so daring as to raise, softly, the delicate subject of "revenues." Naturally, everyone talks about "leadership." They're all for it. Each candidate possesses the indispensable brand for which the nation yearns and charisma and character, too.

They, and the voters, should ponder something far more significant. In the just-released annual survey of college freshmen lies an issue that embraces every national concern and problem and carries major implications for the future.

That is: Who is going to tend to the nation's business, and how well will that business be done? The overwhelming evidence in this report is that it won't be America's best and brightest and that what matters most to the great majority is not public business but private gain.

Record numbers of freshmen (76 percent) put "being very well off financially" as a top personal goal. That's nearly double the level recorded in a similar 1970 survey. A record 71 percent said a key reason for attending college is "to make more money." In the early 1970s, fewer than half said that. A record 25 percent plan to make business their careers, more than double the figure 21 years ago.

Along with these dramatic shifts in stated goals is an even more striking one. Twenty years ago, 83 percent of entering freshmen said "developing a meaningful philosophy of life" was either an "essential" or "very important" life goal. Now only 40 percent say so. That's the lowest recorded point of the last generation.

"These trends over the past 20 years suggest a gradual but profound shift not only in students' values but also in the values of the larger society," said Professor Alexander W. Astin, who directed the latest survey of 209,627 freshmen at 390 institutions for the American Council on Education and the Higher Education Research Institute at the University of California at Los Angeles.

So what? you say. Everyone knows that the prevailing creed of the '80s is greed. What's that got to do with presidential politics and the state of the nation? Here's what:

These attitudes represent something more than another depressing signal of the diminishing appeal of public service. They are a warning that the nation is in danger of allowing its crucial public business to degenerate into mediocrity.

For years, evidence has mounted that the government increasingly cannot attract and retain the kinds of talented people needed to do its indispensable public business — preventing nuclear meltdowns; providing safety measures for public transportation, food and water and drugs; properly regulating the financial markets; preserving the last-resort safety nets that protect against personal and national disaster; and pressing for greater research into cures for cancer and AIDS.

As former Federal Reserve chairman Paul A. Volcker said memorably in a recent address, "The idea that we can settle for mediocrity in our public services would, in time, become an invitation to mediocrity as a nation."

That day may be closer, judging from the increasingly ineffectual way that the public sector has been performing lately. To quote Volcker again:

"The wishful thinkers are those that think we can make do with the mediocre. There is less room for error in our foreign relations, not more. Technology demands faster responses, not slower, to problems as widely removed as air safety and financial regulation. National security demands that we know how to build military equipment that works and that we can afford. Our very survival may literally depend on how we respond to complex threats to our environment and to our health."

His solution is simple and direct:

"Somewhere it is written: 'The best shall serve the state.' I don't care whether that sentiment ever gets chiseled in stone. But I do think we all should care that it should be part of the American ethic and that we make it possible for the sentiment to be a reality."

The best are not being encouraged to serve the state now. And that, candidates, is a national issue.

Analysis

From time to time, one state became more powerful than any other, but the urge to territorial expansion that followed from its own dynamic growth inevitably led to strategic over-extension and to a growing gap between ends and means that could then be exploited by fearful and jealous rivals. Hapsburg Spain, the France of Louis XIV and Napoleon, the Kaiser's and Hitler's Germany are classic examples of this tendency toward over-commitment and military top-heaviness, while the Great Power that occupied the No. 1 position for the longest time, Great Britain, was distinguished by its efforts to keep its military obligations and its economic resources in balance, to prevent the former from overwhelming the latter. With the rise of the super-powers, plus the costs of the two world wars, even Britain had to yield its place whilst the United States and the Soviet Union advanced to the fore.

Even if the chronological account is known, the underlying patterns of rise and fall — and their implications for the United States' world position today — are much less clearly understood and deserve to be spelled out.

The first and almost elemental point is that, since the world never stands still, the relative position of each of the Great Powers is always changing, sometimes slowly, sometimes more swiftly. For all countries are changing, and at different paces, chiefly because new technologies and newer centers of production tend to shift economic power away from established regions to other areas. Thus, despite the rhetoric of certain politicians, the United States of today can no more "recover" the position of President Dwight Eisenhower's time in the 1950s than Edwardian Britain could return to the world of the Victorians.

With the global scene looking much less certain than in our forefathers' day, it is not surprising that some politicians and pressure-groups of a declining Great Power will look nostalgically backwards — and then call for a "renewal" of those elements they believe made the nation great in the first place: enterprise, courage, hard work, patriotism, a sense of tradition (and with it, usually, a revival of national history).

In one of Rudyard Kipling's most profoundly political poems, "The Heritage" (1905), he wondered whether his Edwardian generation would, through "sloth and pride secure," be the first to neglect all that had been handed down by their steadfast and diligent fathers. As it turned out, none of the campaigns launched by a variety of conservative pressure groups in Edwardian Britain — several of which seem look-alikes to our own Committee on the Present Danger — were able to achieve the restoration of Britain's place in the world that they desired. Precisely because Edwardian Britain's flurry of concern about imperial overextension, growing technological uncompetitiveness and widespread inner-city problems has so many similarities with the United States today, it is being studied so intensively by American political scientists and strategists at the present.

If the American condition at present is therefore not unique, but in fact a common one that has faced all Great Powers in their time, are there any general "lessons" that a thoughtful presidential candidate might draw from the past? The first is already clear from the above argument: that you only properly understand your own country when you remove the ethnocentric spectacles, examine the history of other countries, and put your own nation within the larger context of global developments.

Secondly, and more specifically, it seems that, just as some policies, such as military overextension and fiscal mismanagement, hastened a Great Power's demise, so also some helped to preserve its position — or at least ensured that the relative decline was a slow and smooth one. A key one has always been to do everything to preserve the productive creation of wealth (as opposed to its "paper money" creation). Another key policy has been a substantial and enduring commitment to commercial research and development, to creating a highly trained workforce, and to manufacturing for the world market. In all those aspects, Edwardian Britain exhibited the same weaknesses, relative to its rivals, as the United States does today.

When the philosopher George Santayana wrote that "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it," he obviously did not mean that history repeats itself in a predictable, regular way; because the world is always in flux, circumstances are never exactly the same. What perhaps he was suggesting was that a nation, and a political leadership, without a deep sense of both the varieties and the general tendencies of history would operate at a grave disadvantage, like a blind person, and thus be in danger of repeating the follies of past generations. If that is true, is it too much to ask today's politicians to put history into their own core curriculum, as well as recommending it for all American 15-year-olds?

Paul Kennedy is Dilworth professor of history at Yale. His latest book is "The Rise and Fall of the Great Powers: Economic Change and Military Conflict from 1500 to 2000" (Random House).

Charged

DURHAM (AP) — A Durham woman who said her husband abused her has been charged with murder in his death, police said. Thomasina M. Massey, 35, was arrested Monday and charged with murder in the death of William Massey, 39.

She was being held in the Durham County Jail without bond.

Police said Massey was stabbed in the left side of his chest with an 8-inch butcher knife as he lay in a bed, apparently asleep, in the couple's home. Mrs. Massey told police she had stabbed her husband to end his constant abuse of her, officers said.

Arson-Murder

HICKORY, N.C. (AP) — A Newton man has been charged with arson and first-degree murder in the death of his mother, police said.

John Dwayne Travis, 21, was arrested Monday after his mother, Edna Ruth Travis, 44, was found dead in their home. Mrs. Travis' body was found when firefighters responded to a 10:07 p.m. call Sunday.

Sgt. Tim Brewer of the Newton Police Department said Ms. Travis apparently died of smoke inhalation.

The fire is believed to have started in a chair in the living room. Travis is being held without bond in the Catawba County Jail pending a first appearance hearing.

Bank Burns

HENDERSON, N.C. (AP) — A fire gutted the interior of Southern National Bank in Henderson Monday, causing $250,000 damage to a building that has been a vital part of downtown Henderson for 67 years.

"The building is ruined," Henderson Fire Chief Ranger Wilkerson said. "It is a shame, because to me this and the post office building are the prettiest buildings in downtown Henderson."

While most of the contents were destroyed, none of the deposited money or important records that had been placed in the bank's vault was damaged, Braxton Poythress, vice president and city executive for the bank, said.

Wilkerson said about 30 firefighters using three firetrucks began battling the blaze at about 1:23 a.m.

"When we got there, smoke and fire were leaping at the railroad tracks from the two back windows of the building," he said. "It definitely started in the lounge area at the back of the building. In all probability, it started in the electrical wiring."

Fatality

NEWTON, N.C. (AP) — A Newton man died Monday when he was thrown from his car after it ran through a city intersection in heavy fog and hit a tree, police said.

Paul Harold Miller, 40, was killed in the 5:50 a.m. wreck. Miller was the station manager at WNNC.

Expediting

RALEIGH (AP) — Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham Monday asked U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Richard Lyng to expedite announcement of federal commodity program provisions.

The provisions are the regulations and detailed information by which farmers can make decisions as to whether it would be in their economic best interest to participate in the federal farm program. Historically, this information has been available in the fall of each year so farmers can make management decisions by the first of the following year.

Graham said these commodity programs mean the difference between profit and loss for many North Carolina farmers, saying they "deserve timely information on commodity programs so they can make intelligent, informed management decisions concerning their farming operations."

Shipping Line

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A West German shipping line will begin making weekly calls at the state port in Wilmington next month, providing round-the-world container service to shippers and more than $500,000 in new revenues to the N.C. State Ports Authority.

Senator Line, based in Bremen, West Germany, is scheduled to make its first call at the Wilmington port Feb. 8. The company operates mid-sized container vessels and already makes regular stops at two small East Coast ports — Fernandina Beach, Fla., and Chester, Pa.

SPA Executive Director William Edwards announced the new business Monday, saying he expects the line to increase port operations to two stops a week by the end of the year.

Shortcuts Ruled Out For Trailers

RALEIGH (AP) — In a setback for the trucking industry, Attorney General Lacy Thornburg has advised state officials they do not have the authority to designate shortcuts for twin-trailer trucks between designated routes.

Thornburg's opinion applies to a section of N.C. 152 between China Grove and Mooresville, which would speed access for twin-trailers between a Carolina Freight terminal in Cherryville in northwest Gaston County and Interstate 85.

"Carolina Freight has three fairly direct access routes to I-85, which are approximately 12 miles from the terminal to interchanges on I-85," Thornburg wrote in an opinion delivered to state Transportation Secretary James Harrington Friday. "Carolina Freight's request to the department to authorize or designate an access route, from the terminal to an interchange on I-85 in the vicinity of China Grove, a distance of approximately 54 miles from the terminal, cannot be complied with."

Thornburg's opinion follows a request last month by the DOT board's Drivers and Owners Committee for him to define "reasonable access" for routes designated for twin trailers to reach storage and shipping terminals.

Kenneth G. Younger, a member of the state Board of Transportation and chairman and chief executive officer of Carolina Freight Corp., did not participate in the committee discussion.

"The department has no statutory authority to designate such proposed 'shortcut' routes on which no terminals are located as 'access routes,'" Thornburg wrote in his opinion.

The opinion means twin trailers can receive traffic tickets when traveling on unauthorized routes, officials said.

Gore Supports Leaf Plan But Not Subsidies

RALEIGH (AP) — Sen. Albert Gore Jr. says he supports the present grower-financed federal tobacco system, but has no problems warning young people not to take up the smoking habit.

"I see the economic issue of how to structure the program as completely separate from the health issue of whether or not there ought to be warnings to young people about taking up smoking," Gore said Monday at a Raleigh news conference.

He said it was not inconsistent for the government to regulate tobacco farming while discouraging smoking "as long as (tobacco) is legal and is going to be grown and sold, and that's the case now and that's going to be the case."

Questions about the Tennessee senator's commitment to tobacco arose last Friday during a Democratic candidates' debate. He was asked how he could support federal assistance to tobacco growers in view of the surgeon general's conclusion that smoking contributed to cancer and heart disease.

"I don't think there should be any public subsidy of tobacco at all," Gore replied, adding that he held that position despite being from a tobacco-growing state.

His statement drew criticism from some Democratic leaders in North Carolina. Jim Van Hecke, the state party chairman, said it was "courageous or stupid ... for someone in a tobacco-growing area like we are in to take that position."

But Gore said Monday he always had supported the federal leaf program, which is grower-financed and does not involve public subsidies.

"I think that the tobacco program is a good one. It does not involve any subsidies and I support it strongly," the Democratic presidential hopeful told reporters. "I have fought for it in the Congress."

Gore is defying conventional wisdom by downplaying the Iowa caucuses and the New Hampshire primary, which traditionally have opened the nominating season, and pinning his hopes on a strong showing in his native South.

Rep. Martin Lancaster, D-N.C., warned that Gore could hurt himself in the region if he gave an impression of wavering in his support for tobacco, one of the South's top cash crops.

Republican presidential candidate Pat Robertson created a furor last week by proposing that the government phase out domestic leaf production and purchase growers' allotments.

Gore, who Sunday appeared at a fund-raiser near Winston-Salem that raised $105,000 for his campaign, also said he backed the program's system of allotting rights to grow tobacco, saying it guaranteed that leaf would be produced by family farmers instead of large, corporate farms.

"It keeps hundreds of thousands of small family farms alive," Gore said.

Gore said he had crafted a compromise between industry and health groups on new smoking warnings. Also, he said, he had sponsored an amendment that prohibited imports of tobacco with certain chemical and pesticide residues.

"I encourage young people not to take up smoking," Gore said, adding that adults should be able to make up their own minds. "If you want me to say there are no health consequences, I'm not going to say that. I think that there are."

Gore received a vote of confidence Monday from Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C., chairman of the House subcommittee on tobacco and peanuts and one of the leaf program's staunchest supporters.

Seminary Trustees To Trim Candidates

By The Associated Press
Trustees seeking a replacement for Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary President Randall Lolley will trim the list of possible candidates this week and could elect a new president by March, the chairman of the trustee board says.

"We have good progress toward bringing a candidate to the board by the March 14-15 meeting," the Rev. Robert Crowley of Rockville, Md., said. "We may very possibly boil the list down to five — conceivably three — at the meeting this week."

Crowley said 17 or 18 candidates are in the running. He has said the next president will be a man who believes in the literal truth of the Bible.

Search committee meetings Thursday and Friday come after a heated exchange of letters last month in which Crowley asked Lolley to step down when the trustees meet in March "for the good of the seminary."

About 50 students met Friday to draw up an eight-point profile that depicts a president open to Christians from different denominations who would promote dialogue with Jews and people of other religions.

The students want a president who believes in the Bible's authority, but who rejects the notion of theological conformity through creeds.

The 12-member search committee will conduct closed sessions on campus Friday. Open meetings to solicit student and faculty suggestions are scheduled Thursday.

Among the nominees are the Rev. Paige Patterson, president of the Criswell Center for Biblical Studies in Dallas and a leader in the fundamentalist movement in the Southern Baptist Convention; the Rev. Richard Land, special assistant to the governor of Texas; and Gene Miller Williams, president of Luther Rice Seminary in Jacksonville, Fla.

Fire Destroys Old Wilson Warehouse

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — A fire of undetermined origin claimed the fourth Wilson warehouse in 14 months amid an early-morning fog that enveloped the city Monday.

The fire destroyed one of four warehouse buildings of a complex that was originally the Hackney Wagon Co. building.

The burned section of the complex, which is now owned by the city, was being rented to Equipment Sales and Service Inc. to store tobacco processing equipment. Another part of the complex, apparently unaffected by the fire, is rented to Collapsible Container Co.

Wilson Police Officer Ed Moseley said two passers-by spotted the fire and contacted the Police Department at about 4:15 a.m.

Wilson Fire Chief Bruce Rose said the fire was under control by 5:30 a.m. He said the cause of the fire was not yet known.

Rose said the moisture from the fog trapped a lot of smoke close to the ground, making it difficult for firefighters to get in close.

He said the fire could have been burning for some time before the department got the word because the fog also made the fire difficult to see from a distance.

T.M. Carr Jr., owner of Equipment Sales and Service Inc., who was at the fire site Monday said he estimated his company's losses to be about $200,000.

This fire follows the October 1986 fire that destroyed the five-acre Liberty Warehouse site on U.S. 301 and the March 1987 fire that began in the Watson Warehouse and consumed an entire city block in downtown Wilson, including the Hi-Dollar Warehouse.

A CSX Transportation Inc. warehouse fire was averted in July when a passing engineer saw smoke coming from the building.

State's Waste Control Law Draws EPA Threat

By CASS PETERSON
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — When the North Carolina state legislature, last year, voted to limit the discharges of a toxic-waste treatment facility into the Lumber River, it acted to protect the drinking supplies of the 10,000 citizens of nearby Lumberton.

But the legislature also precipitated a major battle with the federal Environmental Protection Agency, which contends that the legislation is an unreasonable restriction and is "inconsistent" with the national program to deal with toxic wastes.

In a case with broad national implications, EPA has threatened to withdraw North Carolina's authority to run its own hazardous-waste programs because of the new state law, which regulates the amount of discharge a GSX Services Inc. treatment facility in adjacent Scotland County can make into the slender Lumber River, which flows by the plant before it gets to Lumberton.

Lumberton citizens and environmentalists noted that the federal toxic-waste law specifically grants state and local officials the right to draw up regulations more stringent than federal rules.

When Lumberton citizens told her of EPA's threat, Velma Smith of the Environmental Policy Institute said she responded: "They can't do that. Don't worry about it. I sure called that one wrong."

EPA officials say they want to "send a message" to the states, which they contend have increasingly used their regulatory discretion to block development of toxic-waste facilities.

Louisiana, for example, has banned waste incinerators in the one parish where an incineration company had expressed interest in locating. In Oklahoma, proposed facilities must receive approval from local voters. Other states have attempted to restrict out-of-state waste, usually by imposing higher disposal fees.

"Our concern is that there be enough capacity nationally to handle hazardous waste," said one EPA official who asked not to be identified. "We're sending a message to all the states that we're watching this."

The message has not been well received in North Carolina, which is considered a leader in the effort to control toxic waste.

"EPA has adopted a position that says the states can't have standards more restrictive than federal standards or we will lose our (toxic-waste) permitting program," said Dan McLawhorn, a state lawyer. "The rules say we can't be unreasonable, but they define unreasonable. As far as we're concerned, they've set the minimum and the maximum."

"That's not true," said Lee A. Deihns, regional administrator in Atlanta. "The concern we have is that the North Carolina legislature's intent was to block the construction of a facility."

State officials contend that the new law is designed to protect public health, not ban toxic-waste facilities, and wouldn't prohibit the GSX facility in Scotland County.

The new law states that any stream receiving discharges from a toxic-waste facility must be capable of diluting it by a ratio of 1,000 to 1. Its supporters say the provision will assure that such facilities don't exceed the "assimilative capacities" of the state's rivers and will provide a "margin of safety" to downstream water systems.

But the stream dilution factor means that GSX, which had planned to discharge 500,000 gallons a day, could discharge no more than 72,000 gallons.

GSX did not return a reporter's telephone call. State and EPA officials said the company has told them that the facility cannot be run profitably unless it has a large quantity of waste coming in.

The facility is supposed to treat mixed waste from Superfund sites as well as liquid waste leaking from a GSX landfill in South Carolina. "It's a witch's brew," McLawhorn said. "No one knows what's in it."

GSX has proposed discharging its waste through a public sewage plant in nearby Laurinburg, N.C., and EPA officials say that the treatment will be adequate to remove whatever dangerous chemicals might remain after the GSX plant has treated the waste. But citizens in Lumberton are skeptical.

Richard Regan, who works for a local group called the Center for Community Action, said the state has drinking-water standards for only 20 of the 300 or more chemicals GSX expects to treat. The EPA has only 62 such standards.

"The purpose is to provide some kind of safety margin for the people who drink the water," he said.

As a national policy, dilution is not supposed to be the solution to pollution. But it isn't entirely ineffective, and even the EPA leans on it from time to time, as it did last week when it announced that an oil slick traveling down the Ohio River was not a health threat because it was gradually becoming diluted.

State officials concede that the dilution requirement is an imperfect solution, but they defend the law as a reasonable and prudent move in the face of uncertainties about the level of contaminants and their potential hazard to health.

"We can get some guppies and if they die, we know it's bad for the fish," McLawhorn said. "We don't have any little boys who are 4 years old that we can pour a glass of this water into every three hours and see what happens in 10 years."

Deihns said there are other methods available for determining contamination level and controlling pollutants. "There is no scientific basis for this whatsoever," he said. "You have to draw a line at some point."

But environmentalists say they fear that the EPA's move against

North Carolina will have a "chilling effect" on other states as they attempt to balance their citizens' concerns against the need for modern toxic-waste disposal. By removing an impediment to a facility's size, Smith said, "EPA seems to be arguing that you have to have enough capacity for any out-of-state waste that wants to come here."

EPA officials deny the allegation, but they say they are concerned about the constitutionality of any provision that might hamper the "free flow" of toxic waste. "It's unconstitutional to ban interstate commerce," said one official.

J. Winston Porter, EPA's assistant administrator for toxic-waste programs, said the agency also was concerned that states that lag behind in siting toxic-waste facilities may face a cutoff of federal funds needed to clean up existing problems. "Under the Superfund law, they have to certify by October 1989 that they can handle their hazardous waste or they get no Superfund money," he said.

But he acknowledged that EPA is not eager to take control of North Carolina's toxic-waste program. "It's a long, tedious process and we're not frankly that interested in doing it," Porter said. "It's a tough call."

EPA and North Carolina will make their cases to an administrative law judge, who will send his recommendations to Deihns. Deihns, who approved the petition seeking withdrawal of North Carolina's toxic-waste program, will make the final decision.

How do I get good people? How do I keep good people?

If you have either of these questions, then you should attend our next Human Resources Seminar, February 4, 1988.

White House Hopefuls Turning Eyes On N.C.

By The Associated Press

North Carolina has become a crossroads for Republican and Democratic presidential candidates this week laying the groundwork for Super Tuesday.

Vice President George Bush is in the state today for a private fundraiser and meeting with supporters in Winston-Salem.

And Democrat Gary Hart, making his first trip to North Carolina since restarting his campaign, was in Fayetteville to campaign at a shopping mall and make speeches at Fayetteville Technical Community College and a VFW post.

Former Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole campaigned Monday for her husband, GOP presidential hopeful Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, while Democratic Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee defended his stance on tobacco.

"What we're talking about is running on a record, not a resume," Mrs. Dole said, adding that the GOP presidential contest is between Dole and Vice President George Bush.

Mrs. Dole started her tour of the state in Hendersonville and went to Hickory before stops in Fayetteville and Winston-Salem.

She told about 200 Republicans gathered at a breakfast meeting that Dole "can understand Washington. He's been in the Congress for 27 years. Will he work effectively with the Congress of the United States? His colleagues selected him to be their majority leader of the United States Senate."

Later, Mrs. Dole told a Hickory-area audience that bipartisan appeal is the primary reason her husband will be nominated and elected president.

"If Bob Dole wins the nomination, he will be the next president because of his support from Democrats and independents," Mrs. Dole said, adding Dole is the only candidate who has such support.

She also called her husband a "hands-on problem solver...He's a leader...he's in there working."

At a news conference at Raleigh-Durham Airport, Gore said he strongly supported the federal tobacco program and saw no inconsistency between that stand and encouraging young people not to smoke.

Faced with criticism from some Southern politicians for his recent comments about tobacco, Gore said he had consistently backed the program in Congress and would continue doing so as president.

He said he would oppose direct federal subsidies of tobacco but that the program was grower financed. The current allotment system, he said, is necessary to ensure that the leaf will continue to be grown on small farms.

Questions about Gore's commitment to tobacco arose after a televised Democratic candidates' debate Friday in which he was asked how he reconciled federal assistance to tobacco farmers with the surgeon general's conclusion that cigarette smoking contributed to cancer and heart disease.

"I don't think there should be any public subsidy of tobacco at all," Gore said. "And let me say the positions I've taken on this in spite of the fact that there are a hundred thousand tobacco farmers in my home state."

Beach Sweep Finds Trash Of All Kinds

By The Associated Press

Barefoot beach walkers probably would cringe if they looked at the detailed list of garbage found by organizers of Beach Sweep '87 last fall.

Those who love cavorting barefoot on the shore might be interested to know that the crews found 1,271 pieces of glass as well as 309 light bulbs and 5,677 bottles.

A washer-dryer was even found during the major cleanup. More than a thousand beachcombers participated in the Sept. 19 cleanup, which netted a gargantuan 14 tons of coastal garbage, officials said.

"The most amazing thing was just the amount of trash," said Sarah Friday, spokesman for the UNC Sea Grant College Program, which sponsored the program with the state's Division of Coastal Management, Office of Marine Affairs, and Division of Parks and Recreation.

Top Astronauts Want More Testing Before Shuttle Ok'd

By PAUL RECER
AP Science Writer
SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Senior astronauts are concerned about booster rocket flaws found during a test last month, and are asking that the space shuttle not be cleared to fly again until at least three more successful tests are conducted.

NASA's return-to-space plan calls for at least two more successful tests of the redesigned solid rocket booster, but Daniel Brandenstein, chief of the astronaut office at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, said he and some other astronauts don't believe that is good enough.

"We are proposing that we do three more (mandatory) tests, but that is still in review," he said in an interview. "They were planning two, but with the (launch date) slip and the failure, putting a third in there is possible."

Navy Rear Adm. Richard H. Truly, a former astronaut who heads the shuttle program, announced earlier this month that the failure in the December rocket test will require a delay in resumption of space flights until late July or August. Flights had been scheduled to resume in June. A spokesman for Morton Thiokol Inc., manufacturer of the rocket, confirmed on Monday that "discussions are under way" about adding another mandatory test-firing of the rocket. No decision has been made, he said.

Two full-scale firings have been conducted and two more were planned before verifying the redesigned shuttle rocket for flight. Still another test was to be conducted, but officials said this fifth test did not have to precede the first mission. It is this fifth test that Brandenstein now wants to be conducted successfully before shuttle flights resume.

The first full-scale test, called DM8, was conducted successfully in August. It was followed on Dec. 23 by the DM9 test in which a new nozzle boot ring design was used for the first time. The boot ring came apart.

"The DM9 outer boot ring test was not a success, so that should not count as one of our 'get ready to fly' tests on the nozzle," said Brandenstein. "My feeling is that we ought to redo the nozzle part of that" and test it three full times again before certifying it for flight.

Truly announced earlier this month that the new boot ring that failed on DM9 would be replaced with the boot ring that worked on DM8. He said it then would be tested twice more to certify it for flight.

Brandenstein said he wants at least one more full-scale test of the whole system before astronauts again ride the rockets into space.

The space shuttle Challenger accident, which killed seven astronauts on Jan. 28, 1986, was blamed on a flawed joint in the side of the solid rocket booster. The side joints have been redesigned, along with parts of the rocket booster nozzle.

John W. Thomas, chief of the shuttle rocket redesign team, said both full-scale tests have shown that the flaw that destroyed Challenger has been corrected.

The new joint design includes the addition of a third O-ring, or rubberized seal, a flange to strengthen the metal joint and a new arrangement of insulation to keep hot rocket gases from reaching the joint.

Mecham Hearing Beginning

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Gov. Evan Mecham may be called to testify this week before a select committee of legislators who will conduct an impeachment inquiry, the state's speaker of the house said after naming the panel.

The 10-member committee planned to hold an organizational meeting late today and begin hearings Wednesday on a report by House special counsel William French.

French last week accused the Republican governor of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan, using money raised by his inauguration for personal purposes and attempting to thwart an investigation into an alleged death threat.

Officials, meanwhile, said that 301,057 Mecham recall petition signatures have been certified statewide, well above with 216,746 required to force the Republican governor to face a recall vote.

Secretary of State Rose Mofford is expected on Jan. 25 to inform the governor that he has five days to resign or face a recall election in late spring. Mecham's spokesman, Ken Smith, said the governor will not resign and is not expected to challenge the signatures' validity.

In part three of what state Senate Democratic leader Alan Stephens called a "triple whammy," Mecham also is scheduled to be arraigned Friday on six felony counts of fraud, perjury and filing false documents for failing to report the $350,000 loan.

Mecham, in a call Monday to a KTAR radio talk show, repeated his claim that he has broken no laws.

"There's a lot of talk like I've been convicted of a crime," the governor said. "I'm an innocent man unless somebody can prove me guilty, which I don't have any fear of them ever doing ..."

"It (the indictment) isn't pleasant, but on the other hand it may be very fortuitous because now we have the tools to do investigating ourselves and we will be able to lift the blanket of secrecy off a number of things that have been happening in Arizona," Mecham added. He did not give details, but added, "Do stay tuned in because it will start unrolling."

Mecham has rejected repeated calls for his resignation, including one last weekend by Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., and three of the state's four GOP members of the U.S. House.

Pacific Storm Roars Into Western Plains

By HOWARD GOLDBERG
Associated Press Writer

A storm that plundered the California coast and packed the Rocky Mountains with snow rolled across Nebraska and Kansas today, bringing near-blizzard conditions and closing schools even in hardy Western cities.

At least 20 deaths have been blamed on bad weather this week. Damages in Southern California were being counted in the millions after giant waves smashed restaurants, beach houses and piers, and sheared off part of a hotel.

Sandbags were stacked and berms constructed to block water for another towering high tide of 7.1 feet in the Los Angeles area today. Northerly winds gusting 20 to 30 mph were expected along the coast, threatening more flooding in low-lying coastal areas.

Winds gusted to 40 mph in western Nebraska this morning, and blowing snow with drifts of up to 6 feet made roads impassable, said Dean Costantinou, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Omaha.

"The storm is moving through central Kansas this morning and will move into southern Iowa tonight. It's moving toward the northeast at about 20 mph," headed toward Michigan by Wednesday, said Lyle Alexander, of the weather service's National Severe Storms Center in Kansas City, Mo.

The storm wasn't the strongest or the fastest-moving of the season, he said. "It's just a good hefty storm."

Winds gusting to 40 mph Monday night blew snow drifts onto Interstate 25 between Colorado Springs and Castle Rock, Colo., triggering a series of accidents and prompting the State Patrol to close that portion of the interstate.

"It's all ice under the snow. People drive like a lot of banshees, then it's wham, bam, alakazam," said Patrol Sgt. Larry Tolar.

Snow totals ranged from 4 inches at Denver's Stapleton International Airport to 25 inches at Purgatory Ski Area.

An 18-inch snowfall Monday in Durango, in Colorado's southwest mountains, shut the airport, left cars looking like igloos and prompted pedestrians to wear skis. For the first time in 20 years, Durango's public schools closed because of weather on Monday.

Truckers hoping to keep ahead of the storm roared through southeastern Wyoming on Monday.

"It seems to me that they're all trying to leave," said Katana Lewis at Art's Truck Terminal outside Cheyenne. "They don't want to get stuck here."

The storm dropped 2 to 5 inches of snow on southern Wyoming and 10 inches on the state's southern mountains Monday. School officials in Cheyenne canceled classes for today.

Ainsworth, Neb., had up a foot of new snow and North Platte had 7 inches by early today.

More than 20 inches piled up Monday at Monticello in southern Utah, 17 inches at Flagstaff, Ariz., and up to 2 feet fell in the Sierra Nevada in Northern California, the weather service said.

In Southern California, engineers were worried about the stability of seaside structures on a stretch of coastline from Malibu about 30 miles northwest of Los Angeles to Laguna Beach about 50 miles south, and whether they could withstand another barrage of 20-foot waves like the one that hit Sunday night and Monday.

The storm caused an estimated $15 million damage just to public facilities at Redondo Beach alone, 20 miles south of downtown Los Angeles.

"We are looking at the worst damage this harbor has ever suffered," said Battalion Chief Pat Aust of the Redondo Beach Fire Department. "We have undermining of the structural stability of some of the buildings."

Other preliminary damage estimates were $1.5 million in Laguna Beach and $3 million in Huntington Beach. At the exclusive Malibu Colony, the waves dumped sand into celebrity homes, such as singer Joni Mitchell's beach house, which is on the market for $3 million.

Officials in San Diego declared a countywide state of emergency and estimated damages at $5 million, including $175,000 at the city's famous zoo, which closed Monday for the first time in its 72-year history. San Diego Gas & Electric Co. workers hoped to restore power today to the last of about 400,000 customers who had outages, spokesman Maurice Luque said.

About 90 miles to the south, the mayor of Ensenada, Mexico, reported $40 million in damage to the port and about $500,000 to the city.

The Coast Guard said it would resume searching today for at least two fishing vessels lost amid high winds and seas southwest of San Diego, and for a person seen floating amid boat debris, authorities said.

The deaths blamed on the weather this week included 10 people killed in five plane crashes blamed on fog in Arkansas, California, Illinois, Missouri and Texas. Accidents on icy roads killed five people in Missouri and two in Nebraska. Three people were found in a car buried by a snow avalanche in the Angeles National Forest about 30 miles northeast of Los Angeles.

Dense fog continued to form today across the Midwest from warm, moist air moving up from the Gulf of Mexico and condensing close to ground that has been cold for some time, Alexander said.

This year, please consider helping these very special children by making a contribution to United Cerebral Palsy during their annual fund raising campaign January 18 - 24. For more information call 756-6533.

Cerebral palsy is a disorder of movement and posture resulting from an injury to the brain that occurs before, during or in early childhood stages. "Cerebral" refers to the brain, while "palsy" describes lack of muscle control or coordination. Cerebral palsy is neither progressive nor communicable. Neither is cerebral palsy curable in the accepted sense, but considerable knowledge is at hand to assist in managing the condition and controlling some of its effects. Some 700,000 persons in the United States are affected by cerebral palsy. Each year an estimated 10,000 babies are born with cerebral palsy or acquire it early in life. It is the most wide spread lifetime disability in the nation.

In Greenville the United Cerebral Palsy Developmental Center serves preschool children who have cerebral palsy and other physical handicaps. Specialized programming is extremely costly. United Cerebral Palsy is a nonprofit organization that is funded in part by state and federal funds; however, the biggest portion of operating costs comes from private contributions. Please give generously.

Women Join Skills To Open Crafts Business

By NANCY ROLLINS SAUL
The Springfield State Journal-Register

MIDDLETOWN, Ill. (AP) — It began with a chance meeting in Apke's Grocery Store in the spring of 1984.

Patricia Cooper had recently returned to Middletown, her childhood home, after many years' absence. As Melane Coulter bagged her groceries, Cooper struck up a conversation about her interest in quilting.

"I just finished a baby quilt as a gift," Coulter remarked, "but I'm not a quilter. I'm a spinner and weaver."

"Then what are you doing clerking in a grocery store?" Cooper asked.

Coulter explained that she had no outlet for her products. She learned that Cooper planned to own a shop someday. Intrigued, Coulter repeated the conversation to her mother, Gloria.

"I have a building behind my house you could use," her mother said. "Why don't you have a shop in the old summer kitchen?"

"Several weeks later, when I walked into the grocery store, Coulter said, 'I have a building for the shop. When do you want to start?'" Cooper remembers with amazement.

It was the beginning of what came to be called the Country Glow Shoppe.

"We did the whole thing on a shoestring," Cooper said. They hired out electrical work, but renovated the rest of the summer kitchen themselves or accepted volunteer labor from their families.

Coulter is the physical partner, Cooper says, "always ready to tackle anything." "Anything" has included everything from splitting wood to heat the shop for foraging the country roadsides for plants for her dye pot.

Cooper, on the other hand, has contributed her quilting skills and critical eye.

"Pat sits back and thinks about things," Coulter says. "She has an eye for detail. She keeps me from rushing headlong into projects without thinking them through. And she's usually right."

The Country Glow Shoppe opened on Oct. 16, 1984.

"We had a $200 day the first day and showed a profit at the end of our first year," Cooper says with pride.

Because of its clientele, the gift shop is also a learning center.

"They would pick up one of our original creations and ask us how to make it instead of buying it," Coulter says. "We decided if they wanted to know, we might as well teach them."

Today, the women are dedicated to keeping alive the crafts of their ancestors, providing an outlet for their own products and contributing to the community.

Coulter teaches spinning and weaving by both drop spindle and spinning wheel. She also teaches how to make bandboxes, barrel-stay rugs and grass baskets, and offers a class on how to build a Navajo loom and weave on it.

Cooper offers a number of quilting classes ranging from basic quilting to hand applique and speed quilting techniques.

"Purple Mountain Majesties," a quilt she designed for the Great American Quilt Contest, created a lot of publicity for Cooper and the shop, even though it didn't win.

The quilt was displayed at the New York Merchant's Mart during the great American Quilt Show and was chosen as one of about 30 quilts featured in the 1987 edition of "Great American Quilts" published by Oxmore House.

In July 1986, it was displayed at the Lincoln Home Visitor's Center in Springfield.

Cooper's vision for Middletown during the next three or four years is to have it filled with small shops similar to the Country Glow Shoppe.

"Melane and I would like to raise up craftspeople to share the talent and make this possible," she says.

Hawaiian Weaver Has Dream

By NADINE W. SCOTT
Star-Bulletin

HONOLULU (AP) — She is not a large woman, this Hawaiian who kneels, crouches, sits on the work of her hands in the dank vault of a basement at Kawaiahao Church.

But she commands attention. "Auntie Esther," they call her around Kawaiahao and most people don't know her last name is Westmoreland, but it is, "just like the general."

She is 75 and she is strong, has to be, has been weaving her lauhala through all the stifling hot months of summer with the fan turned on at her back. Now with the water seeping in, lying in puddles on the cement floor, she still keeps at it. Maybe because she has a dream and the job has to be done and it has to be done just so.

Now it's cold and the fan is still on. Somehow some water got on one of the corners of the lauhala and she wants it to dry out before it mildews. All of it is up on a platform, a huge platform big enough to hold the 16-by-32-foot mat about three inches above the damp and leaky floor.

She's weaving it from the outside in, from the four corners of the wide border of one-inch strips of lauhala that flow into the half-inch strips in the body of the work. And even now, weaving on the inside, she says "it's the corners that are difficult. I can go like crazy in the center."

It's still painstaking, intricate work and even when she's going like crazy it all has to be pulled with just the right tension or it will buckle up and she'll have to take it out and do the work over.

It has to be just right because she is making it for the Bernice Pauahi Bishop Heritage Center next to the Memorial Chapel at Kamehameha Schools, but not only that.

"I'm making it for our future generations so they will see it and know what we can do," she said. "They say that lauhala is dying, but it is not — not as long as I'm living."

"If I can come out strong with this mat and I can make the politicians and Gov. (John) Waihee appreciate this mat, I'll put in a proposal to see if we can have lauhala trees in all the state and city parks so the weavers won't have to go so far to get it."

She knows about that. "I don't have a car and it's an all-day chore to go on the bus out to Turtle Bay and pick it and clean it and roll it and then take it on the bus." To her, kukui trees and lauhala are symbols of the Hawaiian spirit — "part of our heritage, our culture." Her one dream, she says, "is to have my people take up this craft which is truly theirs."

"If we don't watch out, we won't have anything from Hawaii that is made by Hawaiians. I teach Japanese people and Portuguese and Caucasians and Chinese-Hawaiians and they're anxious to learn. We do have a lot of full-blooded Hawaiians and my dream is that they will come forward and use this — this lauhala weaving."

Like the rest of her people, Westmoreland has long memories — remembers when "just about every Hawaiian home had a great big living room with a lauhala mat."

She remembers when she first saw a mat woven like this one, from the outside in, "back in the '30s and it was on another island and I was so thrilled to see it. Lots of people made this type of mat then, but I can't seem to find them now."

And she thinks a lot about the lauhala. "Did the Hawaiians bring it here with them when they came? Or was it already here? Did you know there are 143 varieties? And of course it grows anywhere — by the ocean, up in the mountains. That's why it's so perfect to grow in our parks."

Westmoreland has traveled widely, working her way through almost every state on the mainland. When she came back from the mainland, people told her lauhala was dying. And that's when she started teaching the weaving technique.

Students Give Gifts Of Love

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: As school teachers at an elementary school, we object to the attitude of "Reluctant Gift Collector" who belittled those "No. 1 Teacher" mugs, plaques and pins received from students. The teacher said, "A gift certificate for a free meal would be much more appreciated."

How can this teacher be an example to his/her students when he/she can't appreciate the love and admiration they put into those so-called "useless gimcracks"?

We gratefully accept all gifts from our students as priceless treasures, and we proudly display them in our classrooms and homes. These gifts let us know that we are actually doing our jobs as educators, not only dispensing knowledge, but teaching the future generations how to be human.

Let "Reluctant Gift Collector" have the 20 or 30 gift certificates for a meal out — we'd rather have the love! — THE TEACHERS AT COTTONWOOD, CASA GRANDE, ARIZ.

DEAR TEACHERS: All 23 of you who signed the above letter, beginning with Dave Maloney and ending with Ceil McMurren: Thank you for expressing so well the unselfish attitude of those who have chosen the teaching profession. No one ever went into teaching to get rich. But read on for a "gift" one teacher received that money couldn't buy:

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the teacher who was the "Reluctant Gift Collector." Enclosed is one of the nicest gifts a teacher could ever hope for. — MY NAME IS LEGION, MY ADDRESS IS CLOUD NINE

P.S. I was the young man's chemistry teacher. (The letter enclosed.)

Dear Ms. E.: Each year we ask students admitted to MIT to share with us the name of a teacher who has been especially influential in that student's development. We congratulate you on being named this year! More importantly, we thank you for the time, patience, expertise, love, discipline and all the other qualities which have had an important impact on your students. You do the work from which we all benefit.

Congratulations again on the respect you have earned from your students. — MICHAEL C. BEHNKE, DIRECTOR OF ADMISSIONS, MIT, CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

DEAR ABBY: Your answer to "No-Win Situation" rang a bell with me. "No Win" asked whether she should tell her friend, "Jane," that she was cutting down on her visits to her (Jane's) house because of Jane's badly behaved children. You advised "No Win" that she should gently tell

Jane as diplomatically as possible that her children's behavior is the problem. You pointed out that ill-mannered and badly behaved children are obnoxious and therefore friendless. You added that she'd be doing Jane and her children an enormous favor by telling her how she feels.

Abby, I am the son of not one but two "Jane-type" parents. The result was just as you described. I grew up self-centered, ill-mannered, badly behaved, obnoxious and friendless.

It all worked out — finally. I am now 52 and fairly successful, but I struggled all my life with personality and attitude problems. My grade school report cards consistently showed low marks in "Respects the rights of others." I eventually learned how to be a human being — but not from my parents. I was taught by the outside world. It would have been a lot easier had I learned those lessons at home. I'm signing my name, but if this is published, please sign me, COLONEL, USMC (RETIRED)

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage and handling included).

Explaining Marriage Is Hard

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

One of the hardest things in the world to explain is the difference between being married and living with someone.

As an advocate of orange blossoms and long mortgages, I usually end up throwing around a couple of high-class words like "commitment" and "responsibility to offspring," and then when my opponent tosses back phrases like, "Love doesn't need a piece of paper" or "Look how many people get stuck in unhappy relationships," I crumble. I don't have a good answer for it.

Somehow, I can't seem to put my finger on that elusive bit of intimacy that makes marriage "different." In both relationships, one shares the same bathroom, feeds the collective dog, eats together, shops together, sleeps side by side, and yet...

Recently on a TV show called "A Year in the Life," the widowed father no longer wanted to continue his relationship to a contemporary without marriage. She couldn't understand it. They were doing just fine the way they were, going to dinner, sleeping together and still hanging on to their own independence and careers. He looked at her and said sadly, "But we don't worry about things together."

You have to be married to understand that line. Anyone can play house, but a couple struggling to pay for one is something else. A philosopher once said, "Marriage is our last... our best chance to grow up." He could be right. Everything up until the time you walk down the aisle has been polite, guarded and a little superficial. Returning from the altar is a different feeling altogether. You have not contracted for a temporary position... this is a permanent career. You have just bet all your chips on the biggest crapshoot of your life.

But there is something else. You have agreed to legal rights to share equally in belongings, debts, closets, fidelity and children. There are defined duties. Duties to respect one another, tell the truth, listen, take care of one another and be sensitive to your individual needs. Duties to preserve one another's independence. This isn't dating anymore where you compromise on whether or not to get anchovies on the pizza; this is the major league of relationships where there are surprises around every corner.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market fell this morning, hurt by signs of a widening Japanese trade surplus with the United States and disappointing earnings reported by blue-chip leader International Business Machines Corp.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, marginally higher Monday in the quietest session so far in 1988, fell 13.76 points to 1,950.10 by noon EST. Broader market indices also fell in light trading.

Wall Street strategists said investors sold stocks after Japan reported its trade surplus with the United States climbed to $4.9 billion last month, up from $4.7 billion the previous year and $4.2 billion in November.

The report dampened enthusiasm about improved U.S. trade figures reported last Friday by the Commerce Department, which showed a 25 percent plunge in the November trade deficit.

Investors also sold stocks in reaction to IBM's earnings report, which said the world's biggest computer company earned $2.09 billion or $3.47 a share in the fourth quarter.

Although it was a 50 percent improvement over the year-earlier period and was within expectations, the gain was partly attributable to a more favorable tax rate and apparently left many investors disappointed.

IBM's stock fell 2 1/8 to 114 1/8 in response to the earnings report. Some analysts said the negative reaction reflected an underlying bearish mood in the stock market that has persisted since the October crash.

Xinhua said all the passengers were Chinese except four — three Japanese and a Briton. The U.S. Embassy in Beijing said no Americans were aboard.

In Tokyo, the Japanese Foreign Ministry said at least three Japanese were on board. It identified them as Isamu Tanaka and Masato Haga of Toshiba Corp. and Sumio Kudo of Mitsui and Co. Both companies confirmed their employees were on board.

A spokesman for the British Embassy in Beijing confirmed a British man was among the victims but said his name could not be released until his relatives were notified.

Xinhua said a Civil Aviation Administration team went to the scene to investigate the crash but found no survivors.

Officials at Civil Aviation Administration said they were holding an emergency meeting to discuss the crash. They said other flights were going in and out of Chongqing normally.

A woman who answered the telephone at administration's office at the Chongqing airport said she had no information about the crash.

Xinhua reported the crash about 12 hours after it occurred and about half an hour after the Japanese news service Kyodo reported it based on information from Japan's Foreign Ministry.

"My Letter to Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers"

— Mike Schott

Dear Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers,

I went from weighing 368 1/2 pounds to 221 pounds after joining the Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers program. When I was overweight I had high blood pressure, and I was always tired. Now I feel great—like I was a high school kid again. Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers put me on the road to better nutrition and health, and I never once felt tired or hungry on the diet.

Having lost 115 inches, the change in my appearance is remarkable. I really am a "shadow of my former self." The comments I get now from friends and family are actually compliments to you. Your program really works!

To just say "thanks" would be an understatement. Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers has changed my life entirely. My only regret is that I didn't know that there was a Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Center in Muncie, IN, three years ago!

Thinsrerly,
 Mike Schott

In Overtime Contest

Eagles Defeat ECU, 75-69

By WOODY PEELE

Reflector Sports Editor American University survived a final second scare and went on to claim a 75-69 Colonial Athletic Association overtime basketball victory over East Carolina Monday night.

Gus Hill, who had hit on 13 of 15 free throws to help keep the Pirates in the game, was fouled on the rebound of American's final shot at the basket with the score tied at 65-65 and one second remaining on the clock.

But Hill missed the front end of the one-and-one and that forced the game into overtime.

In the overtime, Hill was called with a charge on ECU's first possession and Dale Spears followed with an American basket. Then, Hill traveled in going to the basket the next time down the court and Mike Sampson hit for a 69-65 lead with 2:45 to play.

For all intents and purposes, it was over.

"I can't fault Gus for the missed free throws," Pirate Coach Mike Steele said. "Everyone is going to miss free throws. But he had three or four charging fouls. He's still learning what we want him to do. And I think at the start of the overtime, he was just trying too hard to make up for the missed shot."

The Pirates, who trailed by as much as 10 points on several occasions in the first half, battled back to take the lead late in the game, but were unable to hold it. They regained the lead for the first time in the second half with 10:34 left when Jeff Kelly hit a jumper from the lane for a 52-51 lead. Kenny Murphy added another basket for a 3-point lead, but the Eagles came back to recapture the lead and move out by three again themselves, 57-54.

East Carolina went back on top, 59-57, on two Murphy free throws, and upped it to three on two more by Hill sandwiched around one at the stripe by American's Spears.

The Pirates held on until 62-60 when Sampson hit a 3-pointer for a 63-62 lead. "We were up three and had the chance to move further out and had two straight turnovers," Steele recalled. "Then, they come down and make a 3-pointer. That was a big play for them."

The Pirates regained the lead at 64-63 on a tip-in by Stanley Love, and then appeared to get a shot clock violation on the Eagles. However, Sampson put up a long shot just at the buzzer which missed everything. But Daryl Holmes was there to snatch the ball and put it back in for a 65-64 lead with 40 seconds left.

Lose fouled with 26 seconds to go and made the first of his one-and-one opportunity to tie it at 65-65, and then, on American's final shot, Hill was fouled and failed to produce, sending the game into overtime.

After the Eagles took a 69-65 lead in the extra period, Lose brought the Pirates back within one with a 3-pointer but Mike Sumner came back down to score and from there on, the Pirates missed on three of four attempts at the foul line allowing the Eagles to pull away to their eventual six-point margin.

"I've got to give American credit," Steele said. "In the overtime, they knocked in several difficult shots for us to win."

"And they got 18 offensive rebounds — I don't know how we stayed in the game," he added. The Pirates were outrebounded 50-32 in the contest, and got only three offensive rebounds themselves.

"I thought the guys plays hard, but with no intelligence," the Pirate coach said. "We had no awareness of what was going on. That's the bottom line."

American, too, forced the tempo of the game. Steele's game plan was for the Pirates to have patience, move the ball and try to score off five to seven passes on each possession. But many times, the Pirates got the ball down court and rushed to the basket. As a result, ECU shot only 41.5 percent. American didn't shoot much better, 41.7 — but enjoyed both the rebounding edge and had six fewer turnovers.

"We had no patience at all. It was as bad as we've been. In the second half, we'd have four or five passes and get an easy basket," Steele said. "But we just don't have the size to come down and make one or two passes and score."

"What's really disappointing is that this is the first game we've lost that we really had a chance to win," Steele said.

American coach Ed Tapscott said he was happy to get away with the win. "I don't know how Mike and I survived this one," he said. "It was a tough, tough ball game. I can't say that I'm happy with our execution or our defense, but we showed some character out there tonight."

American twice ran out to a 10-point lead in the first half, the last time at 32-22 with 3:58 left. But the Pirates, led by four points from Hill, outhit American, 8-2, to close within four at intermission, 34-30. Then, in the second half, the Pirates kept it close until they put on their push to take the lead midway through.

Holmes led American's scoring with 18 points while Sampson had 14 and Spears hit 11.

Hill, whose 13 free throws tied the Minges Coliseum East Carolina record, finished with 25 points. Hill's effort tied the mark of 13 set by Jim Modlin in 1969 against St. Francis, Pa. The coliseum record for all players is 19, held by Furman's Dick Esleeck, set in 1970.

The ECU individual record is 15, set in 1963 by Lacy West against Elon.

Lose added 13 points for the Pirates.

East Carolina slips to 6-9 with the loss, 2-2 in CAA play. American advances to 6-9 overall and is also 2-2 in the league.

The Pirates travel to face league-leading Richmond on Saturday in the Spiders' Robins Center.

American Women Defeat Pirates

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Beth Shearer scored 26 points to pace American University to a 70-51 Colonial Athletic Association women's basketball victory over East Carolina Monday night.

Shearer connected on seven of 13 shots from the field and added 12 of 13 at the foul line as the Lady Eagles pulled away from East Carolina in the second half of play.

Free throws made a big difference in the game as the Eagles connected on 20 of 25 attempts, while East Carolina made only six of eight tries at the charity stripe.

East Carolina was charged with 21 fouls in the game, and Gretta O'Neal Savage played only seven minutes because of foul trouble. She and fellow front-court player Alma Bethea both finished the game with four fouls.

In contrast, American had only 12 fouls whistled against it.

The game was close throughout the first half which ended with American holding a 30-28 lead. In the second half, however, the fouls began to tell and American was able to pull away for the 19-point win.

"The score doesn't indicate how close the game really was," Pirate coach Pat Pierson said. "Our girls played really hard. Now we'll try and put this game behind us. We have a few days to get prepared for an important weekend."

The Lady Pirates will play host to Richmond on Saturday and William & Mary on Monday, still looking for their first CAA victory of the season.

In addition to Shearer's total, Kia Cooper and Janine Lorimer each added 16 points for the Lady Eagles. East Carolina was led by Monique Pompili, who scored 18 points, and Bethea with 10.

The loss was the fifth straight for the Lady Pirates, their longest losing streak since the 1976-77 team lost eight in a row to open the season. That streak actually was nine, including the final game of the 1975-76 season.

For Pierson, it was somewhat of a dubious milestone, her 100th career loss as compared to 169 victories.

The Lady Pirates fall to 5-11 overall and to 0-3 in CAA play.

Slow May Not Be All That Safe

NEW YORK (AP) — Kyle Petty, for one, isn't so sure that slowing down the NASCAR stock cars at Daytona and Talladega is necessary for safe racing.

Petty, interviewed during a recent meeting of the Eastern Motorsports Press Association at Langhorne, Pa., will again drive for the Wood Brothers-Citgo team on the NASCAR Winston Cup circuit in 1988.

The season is to open Feb. 14 with the Daytona 500, the first race in which NASCAR's newly mandated carburetor restrictor plate will be used. The device, which robs an engine of horsepower, is expected to slow race speeds below 190 mph on NASCAR's two fastest speedways — Daytona International Speedway and Alabama International Motor Speedway at Talladega, Ala.

"I still say the best race and the safest race I've ever been in was when Bill Elliott ran at Talladega, made up two laps and won," Petty said. "And that was the fastest race ever."

That was the 1985 Winston 500, the fastest 500-mile event in racing history. Elliott averaged 186.288 mph after qualifying for the race at more than 209 mph.

"The thing I liked about that race and some of the other races (at Talladega and Daytona) is that when the speeds are up like that, you've got two or three cars running together. You know where everybody is. When you're running 180 or 185 and 20 guys are running together, somebody can make a move and get everybody in trouble. That's what happened last year at Daytona when Ken Schrader got out of line at the end. He tried to get back in and got in big trouble."

Schrader, who was challenging for the lead, lost control and hit the wall hard. He escaped injury.

"Some of the worst-looking wrecks I've seen have been in IROC, where all the cars are running at about the same speed," the third-generation stock car star said.

The International Race of Champions series pits top drivers from the stock car, Indy car and sports car circuits against each other in identically prepared cars.

"I'm looking for some problems at Daytona," said Petty, who is testing the Wood Brothers' Ford Thunderbird this week at Daytona. "I think that after that race, there'll be some cars you won't even be able to read the numbers on the side."

But Petty, 28, whose grandfather, Lee, and father, Richard, both have been NASCAR champions, said he is not looking ahead with any trepidation.

"I like the fast places where you just get out and run," he said.

As for his 1988 outlook, Petty said the competition is going to be tougher than ever, with as many as 38 teams bringing cars to the track, backed with big-dollar sponsorship. "It used to be that if you had a so-so day, you'd finished seventh," Petty said. "Now, on a so-so day, you'll be lucky to finish 14th or 15th. With that many good cars running, you're going to have to have a great day to finish in the top 10."

"But we won a couple of races last year and we've got our cars ready for the new season. I think we've got a shot at a very good year."

But Petty isn't the only one who has mixed emotions about the new NASCAR rule.

"For safety reasons I suppose it was needed. But I like to drive fast," he said. "I'm a flat-out driver so I don't like it."

"It might give some drivers a false sense of safety," Earnhardt said. "The car feels more stable at 190 mph than at 200 mph. But a car can still shift sideways at 150 mph and get off the ground."

Illinois Coach Says He's Guilty

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Mike White, saying he accepts responsibility for the latest charges of NCAA recruiting violations, is out as head football coach at the University of Illinois.

Chancellor Morton Weir said White, whose team was placed on probation in 1984, quit Monday after he was confronted with allegations by the NCAA and the university about possible infractions, including one incident in which he was personally involved.

"We just could not continue this way and when the coach saw (the allegations), he decided we could not continue this way," Weir said. "He chose to resign."

White, whose new three-year contract for $900,000 began in January, will be paid about one-third of that as part of the resignation settlement, Weir said.

The NCAA notified Illinois in December of three possible infractions, including a 1985 cash payment by an assistant coach to a prospective athlete for lodging, Weir said. The athlete did not enroll at Illinois and the coach later quit, he said. He would not identify them.

"If you examine these allegations when they become public, you may note that they appear to be minor in nature and date back to 1985," White said. "While I was unaware of the violation, I take full responsibility for the allegations in my capacity as University of Illinois' head football coach."

But Weir said an internal investigation revealed several additional incidents that might be NCAA violations. They included a 1986 visit by White and two assistant coaches to the home of a recruit at a time prohibited by the NCAA, Weir said.

He said White apparently did not realize that was a violation, but in the case of the cash payment, the assistant coach "knew he was doing something" that was against the rules.

Weir said the incident came to light as the NCAA investigated the recruiting of the same athlete by another university. He declined to elaborate. All of Illinois' findings in the case have been sent to the NCAA, and its Committee on Infractions will review them Feb. 5, Weir said.

Sports Information Director Tab Bennett said he did not think the NCAA would consider Illinois for the so-called "death penalty" as part of any sanctions it might issue in the case. The NCAA has the power to bar a team from all competition if there are serious violations twice within five years.

"It was nothing of that magnitude," Bennett said. White was 47-41-3 in eight seasons with the Illini, and his 1983 team won the Big Ten championship and finished 10-2 after a loss in the Rose Bowl.

"After a great deal of thought and prayer with my family, I have chosen to resign," White said in a prepared statement. "I believe that this decision is ultimately the best course for my family, the football program, the university and myself."

Illinois was 4-7 in 1986 and 3-7-1 in 1987, but the poor records had nothing to do with White's resignation, Weir said.

The Illini was barred from post-season play by the Big Ten Conference in a 1981 dispute over the handling of eligibility for quarterback Dave Wilson, who transferred to Illinois from a California junior college. The Big Ten called for Wilson to sit out a year. Wilson sued and won the right to play, but the league sanctions followed.

In 1984, the NCAA placed Illinois on probation for a long list of recruiting violations.

"I must say this does have a familiar ring," said John Cribbet, who was chancellor in 1984. "I had certainly hoped that after the previous affair everything had been straightened out. It was very clear that we would tolerate no further deviations from the highest standards."

Cribbet said it appeared that White had no choice but to resign.

Weir said Illinois would begin an immediate search for a new coach because there are only a few weeks left in the high school recruiting season.

Doubling Up

Reeves Surprised At Broncos' Year

DENVER (AP) — If Dan Reeves had been able to peer into the future at the obstacles his team was to encounter during the 1987 season, he never would have predicted a second straight trip to the Super Bowl for the Denver Broncos.

The retirements of four defensive starters, major injuries to seven key players and the disruption of the strike did not bode well for a return Super Bowl engagement.

"If someone had shown me a list of all the things that would happen to this team, I would have to have been a complete idiot to say we'd be back in the Super Bowl," Reeves said Monday.

"Somehow, this team overcame those things. Whenever we got an injury, somebody came in and did the job for us. We got solid performances from people we never even counted on.

"Mike Freeman is our starting center, and he wasn't even on the team at the start of the season. (Guard) Stefan Humphries is another example of that. I didn't think (tight end) Clarence Kay would have the type of season he's had. When we drafted (wide receiver) Ricky Nattiel in the first round, we thought he'd be a good football player, but we didn't expect he'd be as good as he's been.

"I've never been associated with a championship team that has undergone so many changes. We ended the season with only (nose guard) Greg Kragen and (linebacker) Ricky Hunley playing the same position on defense they played in last year's Super Bowl. It's been remarkable."

By virtue of a 38-33 victory over the Cleveland Browns in the AFC Championship game on Sunday, the Broncos earned the Super Bowl XXII invitation to meet the Washington Redskins in San Diego on Jan. 31.

Reeves on Monday continued to lavish praise on the Browns.

"I was much more impressed with Cleveland's offense this year than last year," he said. "I don't know that anyone has done to our defense what they did. They scored on four straight possessions in the second half, and most of the credit has to go to (Browns quarterback) Bernie Kosar."

It took a timely defensive play by another unsung Bronco, backup cornerback Jeremiah Castille, to preserve the victory.

As Cleveland's Earnest Byner appeared about to score the tying TD on a run from the 8-yard line, Castille stripped the ball and fell on it at the 2-yard line with 1:05 remaining.

Rather than risk having a punt blocked, the Broncos took a safety in the closing seconds.

"Everybody says turnovers will be the difference in a big game, and that turned out to be the case," Reeves said. "Without question, that was the biggest play of the game."

Reeves said the Broncos became interested in Castille after cornerback Louis Wright's unexpected retirement during training camp last summer.

"He had started four or five years for Tampa Bay and had led them one year in interceptions, so we put a claim in for him," Reeves said. "He's been very unselfish. He's a natural left corner, but we've used him at right corner, and he's never complained. He's been beaten some, but that will happen at that position. He's a sound player and he's smart, although he doesn't have that much size. He's helped us this year."

Denver last met Washington late in the 1986 season and came away with a 31-30 victory.

"I would expect the same kind of game in the Super Bowl," Reeves said. "They're much the same team we faced last year, except for Doug Williams moving in at quarterback."

Reeves said the handful of Broncos who suffered minor injuries in Sunday's game should be recovered for the Super Bowl.

Tight end Orson Mobley has a bruised shoulder, but should be able to resume practice by the end of the week.

Reeves remains most concerned about wide receiver Vance Johnson, who was released from the hospital Monday after being treated for internal bleeding — a result of a bruised groin he suffered Jan. 10 against Houston.

"We'll let nature take its course there," Reeves said. "We want him to rest as much as he can. The doctors say if the torn artery heals the way they think it will, there will be no problem. But if the tear is worse than they think..."

Buckeyes Use Home Advantage

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — It might not be haunted, but Ohio State Coach Gary Williams says there's something different about St. John Arena.

"We will never put people away, but we can play with anyone here," Williams said.

The latest bit of homemade magic came Monday night when the Buckeyes upset No. 7 Michigan 70-68 for their second victory over a Top Twenty team in five days.

It took Grady Mateen's dunk off a fastbreak pass from Curtis Wilson with seven seconds left — and a near miss at the buzzer by Michigan — for Ohio State to end the Wolverines' 13-game winning streak.

Last Thursday, the Buckeyes, 9-5 overall and 2-2 in the Big Ten, defeated No. 17 Iowa 87-83 as Mateen scored the final four points, including a pair of clinching free throws with four seconds left.

Ohio State's last three victories have come in the final 10 seconds, against Central Michigan, Iowa and now Michigan — all at home.

In other Top Twenty games, No. 3 Temple beat Penn State 59-44 and No. 14 Syracuse defeated Boston College 90-60.

Mateen, a 6-foot-11 junior transfer from Georgetown, hit a driving layup with 1:17 remaining to give Ohio State a 68-64 lead, but Michigan's Rumeal Robinson scored on a drive at 1:03 to make it 68-66.

A steal by Michigan's Gary Grant with 26 seconds left led to Glen Rice's 15-foot jump shot with 14 seconds remaining that tied the game at 68.

Ohio State's Wilson brought the ball upcourt after Michigan nearly stole the ensuing inbounds pass and passed to Mateen, who was wide-open under the basket.

"When I got the ball, a heady point guard will look up and see what's ahead," Wilson said. "I saw Mateen, but waited to see if they saw him."

Mateen said, "When they made the basket and we got the ball, I just ran as hard as I could and I saw they weren't getting back. I got the pass from Curtis and just slammed it in. I got fouled, but it doesn't matter."

"Mateen reacted well on the last play, especially for a big guy," Williams said. "He saw that they (the Wolverines) were up attacking and reacted like a little guy. He made a great catch for a 6-11 guy."

That wasn't the end, however, as Michigan scrambled up court before Terry Mills' long-range 3-point attempt at the buzzer bounced off the rim.

"I about coughed up my heart when Mills shot the ball," Ohio State's Tony White said.

Michigan fell to 14-2 and 3-1 and a tie with Illinois for second place in the Big Ten behind 5-0 Purdue.

"It was a typical Big Ten game," Michigan Coach Bill Frieder said. "(Ohio State) played well and they prevented us from doing what we wanted. We didn't shoot well. Maybe it was their defense, I don't know."

Michigan, which had been shooting 56 percent from the field, shot 48 percent (28 of 58).

Jay Burson led Ohio State with 18 points, with Jerry Francis and Wilson each scoring 12 and White 11.

Robinson scored 19 for Michigan. Grant had 15, Rice 12 and Mills 10 for the Wolverines.

Grant and Rice had entered the game averaging 24 and 22 points a game, respectively, and Michigan was averaging 94.3 points as a team.

"That was the worst Gary Grant has played in four years here," Frieder said. "Maybe he's been hearing too much about that All-America nonsense."

Michigan, which led 33-32 at the half, led by as many as five points in the second half. Ohio State's largest lead was 62-56 with 4:42 remaining.

"I've been telling people (Ohio State) is a very good basketball team. They proved it tonight," Frieder said.

No. 3 Temple 59, Penn State 44. Mark Macon scored 19 points and Temple led the entire way and is now 13-0.

The visiting Owls broke open the Atlantic 10 Conference game with a 14-2 streak that made it 46-31 with nine minutes remaining. Temple held the Nittany Lions to only two points during a 10-minute period.

Tim Perry scored 13 points and blocked seven shots for Temple. Tony Ward had 13 points for Penn State.

No. 14 Syracuse 90, Boston College 60. Stephen Thompson scored 21 points and sparked a second-half burst that led Syracuse past Boston College in the Big East.

Thompson had seven points during a 24-8 spree that helped the Orangemen pull away from a 46-44 lead.

Rony Seikaly scored 15 points and Matt Roe and Sherman Douglas 13 each for the Orangemen, 13-4 overall and 3-2 in the league.

Dana Barros had 16 for the visiting Eagles, who beat No. 15 Georgetown last week.

Others Games. Pervis Ellison scored 19 points, got 10 rebounds and had a career-high seven assists as Louisville beat Western Kentucky 84-71. Ellison shot 9-for-13 from the field for the Cardinals, 8-5.

John Hudson and Terry Gould scored 12 points each, leading seven players in double-figures as South Carolina trounced Memphis State 84-58 in the Metro Conference. The Gamecocks improved to 10-3, their best start in five seasons.

Mike Yost scored 14 points and Coach Gale Catlett got his 200th victory with West Virginia, 71-54 over St. Bonaventure in the Atlantic 10. The Mountaineers, 11-4, won their seventh straight game.

John Starks scored all of his 24 points in the second half as Oklahoma State beat North Texas State 92-82. Richard Dumas also had 24 points for the Cowboys.

Bernard Royster scored eight consecutive points in overtime, lifting Old Dominion over Alabama-Birmingham 82-80 in the Sun Belt Conference. The Monarchs, 12-3, overcame a 17-point deficit in the first half.

Detroit fell to 0-14 with a 105-84 loss to Xavier, Ohio. The Titans are one of two winless major college teams in the nation. Colgate is 0-11.

Valvano No Longer Silent With Pack In The Top 20

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina State coach Jim Valvano, a man of many words, was silent at the start of the basketball season as he assembled a new team with a new offensive philosophy.

It didn't hurt his feelings when his Wolfpack wasn't highly touted. But Valvano said N.C. State's climb into The Associated Press Top 20 this week marked the evolution of a team that has to prove it deserves respect.

In past years, Valvano said the Wolfpack played itself out of the Top 20.

"This year I said 'let's see whether we can play ourselves in,'" Valvano said Monday. "From that standpoint, we used it as a motivator and as an indicator."

"We could just as easily play ourselves back out," he said. "It's not so much a good or bad sign. What it did do, it helped us to focus on a goal and see if we could attain that goal. That may be a valuable experience for these people. Nobody gave it to them."

N.C. State, 10-2 and 2-0 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, defeated Georgia Tech 76-74 Saturday when Brian Howard tapped in an offensive rebound at the buzzer. With the bulk of the ACC season ahead, including a game Sunday with second-ranked North Carolina, Valvano is preparing for what he considers the real season — the conference and NCAA tournaments.

Valvano, who used to run at a slower gear, has switched to speed this season. He says he has the personnel to use the running game. Center Charles Shackelford and forwards Chucky Brown and Howard provide strength on the boards to get a fast break started. He depends upon guards Vinny Del Negro and Rodney Monroe for perimeter shooting.

The speed game has also changed his substitution scheme.

"We get a chance to give the kids more quality minutes," Valvano said. "In the Georgia Tech game, I can honestly say everyone contributed. But our depth is very, very young depth. That could contribute to an up-and-down season."

The team also backs up Valvano's reputation as the guru of the overlooked.

"I think they are overachievers," Valvano said. "They are not from the top recruiting class in the country. They left their press clippings at home, and they came to contribute."

"But if you say you're good, somewhere along the line, you have to live up to that," he said. "You can only play the role of the poor little underdog for so long."

Valvano said the appearance in the Top 20 doesn't change any goals for the Wolfpack. He wants to repeat as Atlantic Coast Conference tournament champion, the crown he won last year with a 68-67 victory over North Carolina. He wants to add another NCAA victory to his 1983 championship, something that might help ease the disappointment from the Wolfpack's first-round loss in the tournament last year. At the end of March, he says, everyone's equal and he prepares for that part of the season.

Still, Valvano isn't sorry that the Wolfpack didn't get much attention early.

"In preseason, we weren't really highly thought of," he said. "Let's use the polls somewhat as the indicator of how far we've come."

Moss Testifying At Collusion Trial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dick Moss, the agent for Andre Dawson, Jack Morris and many other prominent players, was to testify as the first witness in the damage phase of the 1985 baseball collusion hearings.

Moss, the former counsel for the Major League Baseball Players Association, was the only scheduled witness today, Don Fehr, executive director of the union, said Monday.

On Monday, the first day of the damage hearings, the union requested in its opening statement that Kirk Gibson, Carlton Fisk and 12 other players be allowed to become free agents immediately. Those 14 are the remaining active players from the 62 free agents of 1985.

Both sides made opening statements on Monday with Harold (Skip) McGuire Jr., a special counsel to the union, taking most of the day. The union is seeking tens of millions of dollars in damages that resulted from the owners' conspiracy against signing free agents in 1985.

"There were a series of arguments made on the association's request for a new-look free agency," Fehr said. "That and the response from the owners took the entire day."

The union is asking that the 14 affected players be allowed to seek offers from others clubs and, if they choose not to accept any, return to their present clubs under their present contracts.

Affected players, in addition to Gibson and Fisk, are Juan Beniquez, Tom Brookens, Danny Darwin, Jim Dwyer, Tommy John, Donnie Moore, Joe Niekro, David Palmer, Jamie Quirk, Harry Spilman, Don Sutton and Butch Wynegar.

In addition to the "new-look," the union is requesting monetary damages for each of the 62 free agents, the 98 players who filed for salary arbitration that winter and all other players who signed contracts that year.

The union also is seeking general and punitive damages against the owners.

Arbitrator Thomas Roberts, who heard the first stage of the hearings last year and ruled Sept. 21 that collusion existed, is presiding over the damage hearings as well.

The damage hearings are expected to take at least two weeks. The first week will be in Los Angeles and the proceeding will move to New York next week.

Slower Threatt Helps Bulls

House Helps Knights Post 78-64 Win

Robin House scored 27 points as Greenville Christian Academy took a 78-64 high school basketball win over Falls Road Christian School Monday night to remain undefeated on the year at 11-0 on the year.

GCC jumped out to a 21-15 lead after the first period and made it 40-30 by halftime. GCC outscored Falls Road 20-17 during the third quarter to make it 60-47 and that was as close as Falls Road would get.

Clint Parker added 21 points for GCC while John May chipped in with 16. Dwayne Chambers led Falls Road with 18 points while Brad Ellis added 10.

In the girl's game, GCC took a 79-40 win as Kim Faulkner scored 22 points to lead four players in double figures.

GCC led from the outset, taking a 21-8 lead after the first quarter and expanding it to 43-18 by halftime.

The lead continued to grow in the third quarter as GCC outscored Falls Road, 21-16 to take a 64-34 lead.

Sandy Johnston added 16 points for GCC, while Loanie Cherry had 15 and Myra Locklear 11.

Candy Jo Evans had 21 points to lead Falls Road.

With the win, the GCA girls are 10-1, while the boys move to 11-0.

Both teams return to action tonight at Bethel Christian School in Kinston.

By The Associated Press

Now that Sedale Threatt has slowed himself down a little, Chicago Coach Doug Collins has taken away the stop sign.

"I had to put a stop sign out on Threatt early in December because he is so hyperactive," Collins said, explaining why Threatt rarely got off the Bulls' bench. "He wanted to do everything right away, and it was no good for our offense."

Threatt's offense was devastating to Washington's defense Monday night as he scored a season-high 26 points to help the Bulls down the Bullets 117-103.

"Like the coach says, I like to go 100 miles an hour," Threatt admitted. "But the big thing against the Bullets was being in rhythm."

"Sometimes coming in and out (of the game), you can't get into the flow or get hot. But with the minutes I played, I got the opportunity to put up some good shots."

The five-year NBA veteran was 12 of 15 from the floor, sank both his free throws, made four steals and handed out two assists.

"When I was with Threatt in Philadelphia, he always had a great and quick jump shot," Washington's Moses Malone said. "And when you leave him on an open court, it's usually disaster for the opposing team."

Elsewhere in the NBA, it was Boston 121, Golden State 101; New York 110, Atlanta 102; Detroit 123, Denver 116; the Los Angeles Lakers 121, Houston 110; Seattle 115, Indiana 105; New Jersey 117, Phoenix 113; and Dallas 99, the Los Angeles Clippers 87.

Until last Saturday, Threatt had not played more than 10 minutes in a game this season. He saw 27 minutes of action against Washington.

"He certainly wasn't in my dog-house, but he wasn't performing," Collins said. "So, until he cooled it, as they say, he was going to remain on the bench."

"But I got the message across in practice where I demand that all my players spend 40 minutes a day doing nothing but shooting, and do it in such a way that it becomes a matter of routine, but in a slowed-down atmosphere."

Threatt scored eight points in a 14-7 Chicago run during a 5:51 span of the fourth period as the Bulls opened a 99-85 lead.

Michael Jordan led the Bulls, who posted their sixth victory in their last eight games, with 33 points.

"When Sedale is on, he presents another offensive threat that opens up our game," Jordan said. "It's a great feeling whenever everyone comes together."

Bernard King led Washington with 25 points.

Mavericks 99, Clippers 87 points in the fourth quarter to lead Dallas. After the Clippers' Benoit Benjamin cut the lead to 75-67, Tarpley scored eight of the Mavericks' last 10 points during a 14-6 run that gave Dallas its biggest lead of the game, 89-73, with 5:19 to play.

Mark Aguirre had 26 points for Dallas, while Quintin Dailey led Los Angeles with 27.

Nets 117, Suns 113

Roy Hinson scored 22 points — 10 in the final period — for New Jersey. Hinson, playing his first game for the Nets since being acquired from the Philadelphia 76ers, had a basket and two free throws in a 14-4 fourth-period surge. The spurt carried the Nets from a 94-92 deficit to a 106-98 lead.

Phoenix closed within 111-109 with 39 seconds to play, but John Bagley hit a jumper, and Bagley and Orlando Woolridge hit a pair of free throws each in the closing seconds.

Woolridge led the Nets with 27 points. Larry Nance had 28 points and 17 rebounds for the losers.

Lakers 121, Rockets 110

Los Angeles built a 22-point lead in the first half as Magic Johnson scored 26 of his season-high 39 points and the Lakers made 18 straight field goals.

The Lakers made 19 of 23 shots overall in the first period. Their 18-of-18 string ended when Johnson, who also had 17 assists, missed a layup. But he made a hook shot in the closing seconds of the quarter to give Los Angeles a 41-22 lead.

After Los Angeles led 68-46 in the second quarter and 72-54 at halftime, 8-2 and 7-0 spurts by the Rockets in the final period made it 115-105, but Houston could get no closer.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the leading scorer in NBA history, scored 20 points to put him over the 37,000-point mark in his career. James Worthy and Byron Scott had 22 points apiece for the Lakers, while Akeem Olujuwon led the Rockets with 24.

Pistons 123, Nuggets 116

Detroit outscored Denver 40-27 in the fourth quarter and Adrian Dantley scored nine of his 32 points during a 20-5 spurt down the stretch.

Jay Vincent's basket put the Nuggets ahead 107-99 with 5:25 to play before the Pistons staged their comeback. With 49 seconds to go, Detroit led 119-112.

Isiah Thomas had 21 points and 10 assists and Joe Dumars 20 points for the Pistons. Alex English had 32 points, Vincent 25 and Lafayette Lever 21 for Denver.

Knicks 110, Hawks 102

Gerald Wilkins came out second-best against older brother Dominique, but New York had a better supporting cast than Atlanta.

Gerald scored 28 points, Patrick Ewing 20 and rookie Mark Jackson had 11 points, 10 rebounds and 13 assists, the first triple-double for the Knicks since Bernard King in the 1984-85 season. Dominique, averaging 38 points in his last six games, had 45 against the Knicks, but the second-leading scorer for the Hawks was Glenn Rivers with 13.

An 11-0 run by the Knicks wiped out a 75-73 deficit and gave them the lead for good at 84-75 with 2:36 left in the third quarter. The closest the Hawks got thereafter was three points on two occasions, in the first and last minute of the fourth period.

Celtics 121, Warriors 101

Boston handed Golden State its 17th road loss without a victory this season as Larry Bird scored 26 points and Kevin McHale 19.

The Warriors, who trailed 35-20 after one quarter and 61-38 at halftime, were led by Rod Higgins with 16 points. Ralph Sampson was 1-for-11 from the field and scored five points in his first appearance for Golden State in Boston.

The Celtics, who have won five straight games and 15 of their last 17, have beaten the Warriors 10 consecutive times at Boston Garden since Jan. 29, 1978.

Sonics 115, Pacers 105

Seattle won its 15th consecutive home game as Dale Ellis scored 29 points, Tom Chambers 27 and Xavier McDaniel 24 against Indiana.

Sonics guard Nate McMillan had his first career triple-double, keyed by a career-high 16 points. He added 15 assists and 11 rebounds as Seattle won its fourth game in a row and ninth in its last 11.

With Seattle leading only 59-56 midway through the third quarter, the Sonics ran off a 15-2 streak over the next four minutes and ended the period with an 88-70 lead.

Indiana, which was led by Chuck Person with 18 points, got no closer than seven points in the fourth quarter.

Kegel was second in vaulting with a total of 16.85 and sixth in the all-around with a 55.35 total.

In the 12-14 year-old-age group, Diane Dorney was fourth in floor exercise with a 15.30 and eighth on the balance beam with a 12.60.

In the same age group, Jennifer Mohror took fifth in vaulting with a 16.50 and ninth in the all-around with a 55.60.

Fenner Says He's Been Readmitted To UNC

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Former North Carolina tailback Derrick Fenner said Monday he has been readmitted to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, but UNC officials declined comment.

Fenner, contacted by WCHL radio at his Oxon Hills, Md., home, said he would be readmitted to school this spring. UNC vice chancellor Donald Boulton said the university could not comment on Fenner's academic status because of student confidentiality.

Fenner's attorney, Fred Joseph, told WRAL-TV that his client would take two correspondence courses at UNC this spring and hoped to resume regular classes by the summer session.

Fenner said he planned to move back to Chapel Hill this week.

Murder charges against Fenner were dropped last year, but he still faces cocaine and handgun possession charges in Maryland, and is scheduled to go to trial next week.

Corchiani Tabbed ACC Rookie Of The Week

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina State freshman Chris Corchiani, who came off the bench to hand out 10 assists in a 76-74 victory over Georgia Tech, has been named the Atlantic Coast Conference rookie of the week.

Corchiani scored nine points, hitting on four of eight from the floor and came up with three steals in 28 minutes of play. Earlier in the week, the Hialeah, Fla., native had six points, three steals and eight assists as the Wolfpack defeated Morgan State 103-54.

The selection was made by a special committee of the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Association, which earlier picked Maryland's Derrick Lewis the conference player of the week.

Lewis scored a game-winning dunk to give Maryland a 76-74 victory over seventh-ranked Duke.

Lewis, who finished the game with 20 points, capped a Maryland rally that erased a five-point deficit in the final 2:42. Lewis hit seven of 11 shots and six of nine free throws while grabbing nine rebounds against Duke.

Earlier in the week, Lewis scored 13 points and grabbed six rebounds in a 71-65 loss to second-ranked North Carolina. Lewis is currently 14th in the conference in scoring at 14.6 points per game and second in rebounding with 8.8 a game.

Houzer Leads UNC-Wilmington Past Navy

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Larry Houzer had 22 points and 10 rebounds while North Carolina-Wilmington outscored Navy 28-7 from the free-throw line and took a 69-60 Colonial Athletic Association victory Monday night.

The Seahawks, 8-6 and 3-1 in the CAA, hit 28 of 33 free throws while being called for only 13 fouls themselves. Navy made good on all seven of its free throws.

Foul shooting offset a 33 percent shooting night for N.C.-Wilmington, while Navy hit 40 percent.

The Seahawks took a 6-0 lead and had the largest lead of the game at 12 points with 3:34 left in the first half. Navy, trailing 37-29 at halftime, pulled within 46-43 when Erik Harris hit a jumper with 11:05 left. But N.C.-Wilmington's hot free-throw shooting helped the Seahawks pull away down the stretch.

Mark Gary added 14 points for the Seahawks while William Williams and Greg Bender had 10 each.

Matt Nordmann scored 18 points and had 11 rebounds to lead Navy, 3-10 and 0-4, while Cliff Rees scored 13 and Eddie Reddick 11.

Yankees Sign Candelaria To 2-Year Pact

NEW YORK (AP) — Free-agent pitcher John Candelaria signed a two-year contract with the New York Yankees today.

Candelaria, who finished last season with the New York Mets, has a career record of 151-95. He was 10-6 with a 4.81 earned run average last season with the Mets and California Angels, who traded him to New York Sept. 15 for pitchers Shane Young and Jeff Richardson.

Redskins Hoping To Have Monk Back For Super Bowl

HERNDON, Va. (AP) — The Washington Redskins expect to have three-time Pro Bowl wide receiver Art Monk available when they face the Denver Broncos in the Super Bowl.

He had 38 receptions for 483 yards this season before he suffered a partial tear of the medial collateral ligament in his right knee in a game against the St. Louis Cardinals on Dec. 6 and has been on the inactive list since.

Monk, who missed the Redskins' last Super Bowl appearance in 1983 due to a broken foot, is planning to practice with the team Thursday when Washington begins on-field preparations for the Broncos.

"I think he's ready to roar," Coach Joe Gibbs said Monday. "I told him not to try it until he feels he's 100 percent, and I think he is now."

Gibbs said Monk told him Monday that he was "ready to go." Last week, Monk worked out on his own, and Washington's 17-10 victory over Minnesota in Sunday's NFC title game enabled him to get one more chance to play this season.

Meanwhile, Redskins running back Timmy Smith said the Vikings' defense is superior to Denver's.

Minnesota limited Washington to 11 first downs and nine pass completions while holding the Redskins to their lowest point-output of the year. Smith, a rookie, predicted that the Washington offense would fare better against the Broncos.

"I don't think their defense is as tough as Minnesota's," said Smith, who rushed for 72 yards Sunday. "I don't think the Denver Broncos' defense is as aggressive, so that's going to give us a little edge."

The Redskins could also have an edge if they have Monk, who set an NFL single-season record in 1984 with 106 catches. Gibbs said he will assess the condition of the eight-year veteran Thursday and Friday before deciding whether he is healthy enough to reclaim his starting spot from Ricky Sanders. The last time the Redskins faced the Broncos, in December 1986, Monk had six catches for 129 yards and a touchdown. But Denver escaped with a 31-30 victory at Mile High Stadium after Washington kicker Max Zendejas missed a conversion and two field goals.

Zendejas' performance has not escaped the memory of Redskins center Jeff Bostic.

"We don't have Max Zendejas this time. At least we don't have to go in there with a left-footed kicker," Bostic said Monday. "Actually, he's right-footed, but might as well have kicked left-footed."

The Redskins' current placekicker, Ali Haji-Sheikh, has come under fire because of his Zendejas-like inconsistency. Haji-Sheikh missed field goals of 38 and 47 yards Sunday to help make the game closer than it might have been.

North, South Korea Still Opposed

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — One door that had remained open for months in hopes of bringing North and South Korea together for this year's Olympics has been slammed shut.

A second door could be opened, according to International Olympic Committee President Juan Antonio Samaranch. But he raises doubts about finding the keys to the lock in time, if at all.

Unless those long-sought keys turn up, the only time athletes from the two Koreas are likely to face each other in 1988 with Olympic glory at stake probably will come in the Winter Games at Calgary next month, where both are entered.

Samaranch said on Monday that he regretted North Korea's decision to boycott the Summer Games in Seoul unless it is given a host's role.

Cuba, a staunch ally of the North, will boycott, too, and four other nations — Nicaragua, Ethiopia, Albania and the Seychelles — will stay away for other reasons.

They stand to be the only no-shows in an Olympics that will feature athletes from a record 161 countries, the first Olympic battles between East and West in 12 years, and what the IOC described as "rediscovered Olympic unity."

"I believe that we have reached unity of the Olympic movement," Samaranch said during a news conference. "I believe the Games in Seoul will be universal Games. The whole world will be there, with a few exceptions."

For two years, Samaranch has led IOC efforts to resolve North Korea's demand that it co-host the Games, which were awarded to Seoul in 1981. Throughout that period, he had been publicly optimistic, even as the North made repeated changes in its demands, threatened to lead an East-bloc boycott that subsequently fizzled and refused to accept a precedent-setting package of five sports presented by the IOC last July.

But on Monday, a day after acceptance by the Soviet Union, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, the United States and 157 other nations were safely in hand, Samaranch was blunt in his criticism of North Korea and its Cuban allies.

"The whole Olympic movement is particularly disappointed today to see that (North Korea) seems not to have understood, or has not wanted to realize, the historic significance of the offer made to it by the IOC," a statement from the committee's top official said.

"That door is closed," Samaranch said.

That plan would have put all or part of the archery, table tennis, women's volleyball, cycling and soccer tournaments in the North. It would have marked only the second time that Olympic events were held outside the country to which they were awarded. The other occasion occurred in 1956, when strict animal quarantine laws in Australia forced moving equestrian events from host Melbourne to Sweden.

Samaranch said North Korea could still get its wish for more negotiations on participating in the Games if it accepted the five-sport plan in principle. Even then, the normally up-beat Samaranch said, the IOC would only be able to tell the North it would "do what we can," because international federations governing the sports would have the final say.

In a telex to Samaranch, North Korean Olympic Committee president Kim Yu-sun said Pyongyang could "not participate in the Olympic Games to be singly hosted by the South Korean side, and such being the case there is no possibility for us to present application for participation in the 24th Olympiad."

Kim called for direct North-South talks as part of overall negotiations "with the question of Korea's reunification and detente."

In Seoul, his South Korean counterpart, Kim Chong-ha, urged the North and Cuba to reconsider their positions, and Samaranch said any change of heart would be reviewed by the IOC's executive board.

Williams Survived, Prospered

HERNDON, Va. (AP) — Doug Williams is a survivor, and that's part of the reason he says he deserves to be the first black quarterback to lead a team into the Super Bowl.

Williams, 32, will run the Washington Redskins' offense against the Denver Broncos in the Super Bowl on Jan. 31. No other black quarterback has played, much less started, in an NFL championship game.

It is a distinction that Williams said should have gone to James Harris or Joe Gilliam, who achieved notoriety before Williams did.

But when it comes to the current crop of black quarterbacks, such as Houston's Warren Moon and Philadelphia's Randall Cunningham, Williams claims he's the one who warranted the first shot.

"At this particular time, if anybody deserves it, I think I do," Williams said Monday, less than 24 hours after throwing two touchdown passes in a 17-10 victory over Minnesota in the NFC title game.

"I feel like I struggled enough. After all, there are no James Harris and no Joe Gilliams around anymore," he said. "But if anyone who's playing now deserves to be the first one, it should be myself."

Williams said Harris, who played with the Los Angeles Rams from 1973 to 1976, and Gilliam, who was with Pittsburgh from 1972 to 1975, paved the way for Williams to be accepted as a quarterback.

"I never wanted to take the credit of being known as the first (successful) black quarterback, because of Harris and Gilliam," Williams said. "They were the pioneers. They just opened the door for myself."

Williams began his career in 1978 with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. He said he never expected to be anything but a quarterback, although it was a common practice then to convert black college quarterbacks into receivers or defensive backs.

"I was a quarterback from high school through college," he said. "I wasn't about to go to the pros and learn a new position."

Williams directed the Bucs to the NFC title game in 1979, in which the Los Angeles Rams dealt Tampa Bay a 9-0 defeat.

That was then and this is now, and Williams says it's impossible to compare the Bucs with the Redskins. Williams completed only nine of 26 passes against the Vikings, but he knew Washington's fortunes did not depend entirely upon his performance.

"If you read the paper, you might say I didn't play well, and I probably didn't," he said. "But I didn't get us beat. I didn't turn the ball over, I didn't get intercepted."

"If I don't get us beat, we've got too many other people who can win for us," Williams said. "It wasn't that way with Tampa Bay. There, if Doug Williams didn't do it, it didn't get done."

Williams has had little time to absorb what exactly has happened to him. He went to sleep at 2 a.m. Monday, woke up three hours later to prepare for a spot on a morning TV show, then zipped across town to preside over a Martin Luther King parade in downtown Washington.

Williams made it to Redskin Park for a 1 p.m. team meeting, then endured the first of what promises to be many, many press conferences over the next two weeks.

Williams did, however, get to share the excitement of reaching the Super Bowl with his family, via telephone.

"If I didn't call them, they would have sent the police out for me," Williams said.

Williams started the season as Washington's backup quarterback, and he almost missed a chance to go to the Super Bowl altogether.

His name was often mentioned in a possible trade with the Los Angeles Raiders, but Coach Joe Gibbs finally decided to hold onto Williams, who at the time was a $475,000 backup.

"The way I look at it, it couldn't have worked out better for me," Williams said. "I'm going to the Super Bowl and the Raiders are one of the other 26 teams who will be watching it on TV."

Kim called for direct North-South talks as part of overall negotiations "with the question of Korea's reunification and detente."

In Seoul, his South Korean counterpart, Kim Chong-ha, urged the North and Cuba to reconsider their positions, and Samaranch said any change of heart would be reviewed by the IOC's executive board.

Lee Show

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer Brenda Lee will headline a musical show at the Opryland USA entertainment complex starting in March, officials announced.

Miss Lee, known for such hits as "I'm Sorry," and "All Alone Am I," said Monday that working in the production will be much different from being on the road with her concert tour.

"This will be a challenge, but I've always been interested in all aspects of show business," said the 43-year-old singer, who toured 225 days in 1987.

She will appear from late March through October in the 22-member, 75-minute show at Opryland USA, which includes the Opryland amusement park and the Grand Ole Opry, officials said.

Comic Wil Shriner Attempts Return To Light Fare On TV

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The makers of "The Wil Shriner" show are hoping the low-key comedian can draw daytime television audiences back into the world of light entertainment, a la Mike Douglas or John Davidson.

In recent years, the syndicated market has been taken over by issue-oriented shows such as "The Oprah Winfrey Show" and "Donahue" or by magazine shows like "Hour Magazine."

Shriner's daily, one-hour talk show made its debut last fall, getting a big push from Group W Productions. Shriner's show, seen in more than 100 cities — airing in prime time in some markets, including Los Angeles — got off to a rocky start in the ratings, but the numbers improved after it was revamped to make it more theme-oriented.

"I think Oprah changed the way people expect syndicated shows to perform," Shriner said. "She came out and started getting ratings numbers like 5 and 6. The big problem is that the networks and syndicators won't stick with anything new. The most a network will give a show to make it is six weeks. It's a little longer in syndication."

The verdict on Shriner's show is still out. He is scheduled to tape shows until at least June 17 for airing later in the summer.

"In the beginning, we went for the name value of stars to attract an audience," he said. "Now we're going for elements that make for an entertaining show. The feeling is that people don't watch these shows to see stars. We find people come back because it's a pleasant hour. A blend of information and humor."

CBS To Debut News Series On Prime-Time TV Tonight

By Diane Haightman
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

HOLLYWOOD — CBS Entertainment President Kim LeMasters raised some eyebrows the other day when he told visiting TV critics that his network had taken steps in "breaking down the corroded barriers" between the entertainment and news divisions.

But CBS News President Howard Stringer and "CBS Evening News" anchor Dan Rather insist that, although CBS has made progress recently in getting news programming considered for prime time, the line between reporting and entertainment is in no danger of being blurred at CBS.

"There used to be a sense that we were a stepchild — that we had no business being in prime time and were a handicap to the entertainment business," Stringer said. "That's the barrier that's gone. But I'm not going to get into an agreement with entertainment to go into co-production or anything ridiculous like that."

The question of whether CBS News might be wandering into the controversial turf of "infotainment" was raised at a news conference regarding "48 Hours," CBS' prime-time news series that premieres Tuesday night, with Rather as host.

Unlike CBS' other two prime-time news series, "60 Minutes" and "West 57th," each hourlong installment of "48 Hours" will focus on a single subject, beginning with two days in the life of a Dallas hospital.

Executive producer Andrew Heyward acknowledged that LeMasters had offered suggestions for possible "48 Hours" subjects, but said he was under no obligation to follow them. He added that although "48 Hours" might be as likely to focus on pop superstar Michael Jackson as a major world event, that was not a result of pressure from the network's entertainment brass.

"I happen to believe that news is interesting, and I think we'll be covering all over the world and all over the spectrum," Heyward said. "I happen to be very interested in the arts myself."

"We expect to be doing stories which range from the Persian Gulf to Broadway to Hollywood, for which I have no apologies," he continued, adding that he will include show-biz topics because they represent a certain slice of life, "not because I think we have to have a quota of sexy programs."

Rather also refuted suggestions that the show's prime-time slot would tempt producers to go for the glitz. "Prime time is an area where they shoot to kill, and we welcome that," he said, "but style is not going to overwhelm substance."

"If you don't know anything else about me, I hope you know — I trust you know — that I'm all news, all the time. That's what I care about. That's my life. This program is for us a chance to break new ground."

Heyward said in addition to focusing on a single subject, "48 Hours" will differ from other TV news magazines in that it relies "more on action and less on narration than traditional news programs," as a CBS News team spends 48 hours on a given story.

The program is an offshoot of the 1986 CBS News special "48 Hours on Crack Street," which spent two days on the streets of New York exploring the drug epidemic and became one of the network's highest-rated documentary programs.

The series will follow the same format by having reporters and camera crews spend two days and two nights focusing on the subject of the week. After Tuesday night's visit to Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas, reports will include an exploration of the City of Miami, including its drug trade, and a hectic New Year's weekend at Denver's Stapleton Airport.

Stringer, asked whether "breaking new ground" stylistically with this cinema verite style might be unfavorably compared with the hyper-emotional reporting of Geraldo Rivera's syndicated series of live news specials, said he believes that CBS can go for the on-the-scene excitement without losing objectivity.

As proof of his theory, Stringer proudly cited CBS' fast but probing "Crack Street" coverage ("There, cinema verite became cinema realite — we didn't influence the story"). He also pointed to the network's blanket coverage of the execution of killer Gary Gilmore in January 1977 — which, he told the assembly of print reporters, "beat the (expensive deleted) out of all of you, including the networks" with its exclusive interviews with Gilmore family members and visits to Gilmore's prison cell.

TV Ad Prompts Calls From Abuse Victims

COLLINGSWOOD, N.J. (AP) — A commercial by actor Michael Landon for a rape counseling center in his hometown generated a flood of phone calls from sexual abuse victims, many of them men, says the agency's director.

In the 30-second public service announcement, broadcast last fall on Philadelphia, New Jersey and New York stations, Landon urged sexual assault victims of both sexes to seek free counseling from the center.

The center, Women Against Rape, received 207 calls in November and December in addition to the monthly average of 80 to 150 calls because of the tape, executive director Joan McKenna said Monday.

"We got calls from Delaware and Connecticut," Ms. McKenna said. "It was just unbelievable. She said many of the men who called had been abused as children."

Landon, who grew up in this Philadelphia suburb and is the star of NBC's "Highway to Heaven," was delighted by the response to the commercial, said his spokesman, Harry F. Flynn.

 The winners of the Reisinger Board-a-Match Team Championship at the Fall North American Championships was won by a truly international team: Canadian Billy Cohen, now residing in the U.S.; Pakistan international star Zia Mahmood; Indian internationalist Jaggy Shivdasani; and Ron Smith, a St. Louis options broker. Shivdasani had, a few months earlier, won the Spingold team event at the Summer Nationals.

 They virtually locked up the title in the first round of the finals when they won 21 boards of a possible 27, to take a 7 1/2 board lead over the field. Typical of their wins was this board, where both teams stretched slightly to a three no trump contract. In both rooms, the opening lead was the king of spades, and both declarers allowed it to win the trick as East signalled with a high spade.
 Shivdasani realized that to continue with a spade would be leading into declarer's ace-jack tenace, but he did not think that any shift would be effective. So he continued with a spade, conceding two tricks in the suit to declarer. He won the king of hearts with the ace and assured that the defense would prevail by continuing with a third spade. Declarer had no way to come to nine tricks without the club suit, but he could not reach dummy to take the finesse. When he conceded a club trick to East, the defenders were able to cash a spade and take their ace of diamonds for down one.

 At the other table West discontinued spades at trick two. Less than optimum defense now allowed declarer to make his contract.

New Pesticide Zaps Insects With Activation By Sunlight

URBANA, Ill. (AP) — A high-tech pesticide triggered by light kills insects within seconds, according to researchers who say the "ray-gun" insecticide is safe and biodegradable.

Unlike conventional products, the new insecticide also should be nearly impossible for bugs to develop natural resistance to it, said Constantin Rebeiz, a University of Illinois plant physiology professor who helped develop the insecticide.

He estimated commercial development could take five years.

University officials scheduled an announcement today about the pesticide.

The insecticide combines an amino acid known as ALA with a chemical modulator, causing a lethal reaction that is accelerated by sunlight.

Exposed insects suddenly accumulate a massive quantity of biochemicals, which stops their metabolism, the researchers said.

Rebeiz said the insecticide may be sprayed on bugs, or incorporated with a tasty bait that lures them to their last meal.

When the sun comes up, the reaction is dramatic, he said.

"The minute they saw the light, they started spinning at 60 miles an hour," said Rebeiz. "They spin, vomit and drop dead — in 20 seconds, the show is over."

Although the insecticide eventually kills bugs in darkness, he said the action is quicker after dawn.

"It's like pointing a ray gun ... and shooting, except the bullet is light," said Rebeiz, who in 1984 unveiled an herbicide that kills weeds at sunrise in a similar manner.

USDA Opens Labs To Activist Groups

WASHINGTON (AP) — Animal welfare activists are welcome to visit laboratory facilities operated by the Agriculture Department to see for themselves how cats and other creatures are treated in experiments, says Terry B. Kinney Jr., who oversees the department's research programs.

Last August, an underground group calling itself the Band of Mercy cut through a chainlink fence near restricted animal parasitology laboratories of the department's Agricultural Research Center in Beltsville, Md., and stole 27 cats and 7 African miniature pigs.

Some of the cats were infected with parasites that cause toxoplasmosis, a contagious disease of cats that also can cause spontaneous abortions in sheep and prenatal deformities in human children.

After spraying slogans on one of the federally owned buildings, the animal-rights activists escaped and are still at large. Members have not been identified.

Kinney said the group has contended in statements to the news media that the catnapping had a humane objective and that the USDA's laboratory's work was "animal abuse with no clinical significance."

"Their judgment is uninformed," Kinney says in Agricultural Research magazine.
