Iran, Iraq Raid Ships; Convoy Arrives Safely

By RICHARD PYLE
Associated Press Writer

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraqi warplanes attacked a supertanker off the Iranian coast Saturday, and Iranian speedboats raided a Danish ship in the southern Persian Gulf, gulf-based shipping sources said.

In Iraq's mountainous Kurdistan region, searchers found a helicopter and recovered the bodies of an Iraqi army brigadier general and several other officers who were aboard when it crashed, the official Iraqi News Agency said. Iran claims its troops shot it down.

In the northern gulf, the year's fourth U.S.-Kuwaiti convoy arrived safely in Kuwait, having encountered "no unusual air or sea activity" during the 550-mile trip through the gulf, U.S. officials said.

Iranian speedboats attacked an empty Danish-flag ship bound for Saudi Arabia on Friday night, said the shipping executives, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The 33,650-ton Torm Rotna was hit five or six times above the waterline, apparently by rocket-propelled grenades or deck guns, they said. It steamed to Abu Dhabi for a damage survey. No injuries were reported.

It was the third reported attack by Iran's prowling gunboats in the southern gulf in 18 hours.

The Iraqi News Agency said Iraqi warplanes struck a "very large maritime target," meaning a supertanker, early Saturday.

The attack was confirmed by gulf-based shipping sources, who identified the target as a supertanker named Shirko.

The ship does not appear in Lloyd's Register of Ships, but it apparently was one of several tankers chartered by Iran to shuttle oil down the coast.

The sources said the ship was hit by Iraqi air strikes south of Kharg Island, Iran's main oil terminal in the northern gulf, but they did not have any details of damage.

It was the second such raid claimed by Iraq in less than 24 hours, but the earlier one was not independently verified.

Reagan Sets A Limited Agenda For Last Months

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — One last time, President Reagan is going before Congress with a State of the Union address, giving an upbeat assessment of his seven years at the White House and setting a limited agenda for his final months in power.

There will be no sweeping proposals or bold promises when Reagan delivers the nationally broadcast speech before a joint session of the House and Senate at 9 p.m. EST Monday, officials said. That would be unrealistic in a presidential election year.

Instead, Reagan will restate familiar themes on foreign and domestic policy, look back over the full span of his presidency, and challenge Congress to reform its erratic budget process and try harder to cut federal spending, the officials said.

"I'm looking forward to Monday night. I hope you'll tune in," Reagan said Saturday in his radio address to the nation. "I'll tell Congress then we in Washington have a lot of work ahead of us. For starters, preserving the economic growth of the past five years."

Reagan also will ask for an increase in education spending this year, to nearly $21 billion, with more money for magnet schools and remedial education. He tried to slash school spending last year.

Discussing education issues during his radio talk from Camp David, Md., Reagan said, "I will also talk about continuing to bring greater excellence to education."

Frustrated Officers No Longer Rule Out Force To End Standoff

By LAURIE SULLIVAN
Associated Press Writer

MARION, Utah (AP) — Law officers surrounding the northern Utah farm of an armed polygamist clan said Saturday that storming the compound to bring an end to the siege, now in its second week, could no longer be completely ruled out.

If an officer was killed or wounded "it would probably have a definite impact on the situation," said Deputy Public Safety Commissioner Doug Bodrero. He noted that nearly 70 shots had been fired from the house toward police positions over the past few days, none of which was returned.

However, Bodrero stressed that authorities still wanted to end the standoff with the family of slain polygamist John Singer peacefully and would resort to force only as a last resort.

The clan, led by Singer's widow, Vickie Singer, and her son-in-law, Addam Swapp, holed up in their farmhouse Jan. 16 after a nearby Mormon chapel was bombed. Swapp purportedly has taken responsibility for the blast, saying it was a blow at the Mormon Church, which he blames for Singer's death.

Singer, excommunicated from the Mormon church for advocating polygamy, which the church renounced in 1890, was killed by police nine years ago during an arrest attempt at the same farm. He had defied authorities by refusing to send his children to public schools.

Family members say the clan is awaiting the resurrection of John Singer, whom they believe will return and save the family from the confrontation.

Until a news briefing Saturday, Bodrero had dismissed potential use of force, saying an army of some 100 police and FBI agents would continue an apparent psychological campaign that has included spotlighting the compound at night, shooting off flares and buzzing the home with aircraft.

In the short term, authorities may move the high-intensity lights erected around the farm closer and increase law enforcement presence near the farmhouse, he said.

Authorities noted that the 15 people in the compound included nine children, aged 17 to 10 months.

In another development, Bodrero said, other, unidentified Singer family members had called police to ask if they could communicate with the clan, to tell them "this isn't what John Singer would want." No decision on their requests has been made, he said.

Some of the bullets that have been fired from the house have hit some of the lights.

"Should one of those rounds coming from inside the complex be directed directly at a law-enforcement officer it would definitely mandate a reassessment of the situation," Bodrero said.

He said that while authorities were concerned for the safety of the children, storming the compound could not be completely ruled out.

"I think everything is becoming an option. I don't think right now it's a

Planes Collide

By LOUINN LOTA
Associated Press Writer

TEMPLE CITY, Calif. (AP) — Two planes collided Saturday over this Los Angeles suburb, and one crashed in a yard 8 feet from a house, killing two aboard the craft, authorities said. The other landed safely.

Pieces of the single-engine plane fell throughout the city, according to Robert Bebout, a Federal Aviation Administration inspector. There were no reports of injuries on the ground.

"Boy, we were lucky," said Ward Kimball, 72, a retired Walt Disney animator who was at home with his wife, Betty, 76, and daughter, Kelly, 48, when the plane crashed.

The craft came down vertically and slammed into a magnolia tree but did not burn, said Kimball.

"We heard this roar of the motor, ... then there was an impact that shook the house," Kimball said. "When I ran out there was a big cloud of dust dissipating. Then I turned around and I saw this crumpled aluminum plane, just like a giant fist had crumpled it."

Kimball said his daughter ran out to the plane and looked for the occupants but there was nothing that could be done for them. He said the victims were both men.

"I've seen wrecked planes but this is just the most total job I've ever seen," he said.

The other plane, a twin-engine Cessna with only the pilot on board, flew 15 miles to Burbank Airport and landed safely, said Clark Pearson of the Los Angeles County Fire Department. The identity of the pilot was not released.

The twin-engine Cessna made an emergency landing safely at Burbank Airport about seven minutes after the collision, which took place beneath sunny skies, the FAA said.

The plane crashed alongside Kimball's office-studio while the family was in the kitchen.

The plane, its left engine propeller severely twisted from the impact, was cordoned off by airport officials pending arrival of federal investigators.

Doctor Expresses Cautious Optimism About Medication

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

It was reported in the Jan. 22 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association that tretenoin cream is a wrinkle-remover that actually works.

But Dr. William Burke, dermatologist with the East Carolina University School of Medicine, said he is only cautiously optimistic about the "break-through."

"Preliminary studies at the University of Michigan have shown that it does work at the cellular level to reverse damage done to skin tissue by the sun," he said, "but there also seem to be side effects. I will be prescribing it some for sun-damaged skin, as well as acne, but only with close following of patients."

In the acne patients he has already treated with the Vitamin A derivative, Burke said he has seen effectiveness, but also some drying, inflammation and swelling. He said he expects that sensitivity will be greater in aging patients, those who will have concern about wrinkling and wish to have the medication prescribed.

Burke said he is hopeful that Ortho, the company manufacturing the product under the name Retin-A, will come out with a lower dosage cream that will not create as much dryness and redness of skin.

A study by Dr. Jonathan Weiss and colleagues at the Michigan medical center focused on 30 people aged 35 to 70. All had some signs of aging caused by exposure to the sunlight. The signs included wrinkling, yellowing, roughness, leathery appearance and spotty pigmentation of the skin.

In the study, the subjects rubbed cream containing tretinoin on one forearm and cream without the medication on the other. Also, 15 people rubbed cream with the ingredient on their faces and another 15 rubbed cream without tretinoin on their faces.

In all 30 cases, the doctors were able to tell by both visual inspection

GOP Women Map Out Strategies

Approximately 100 Republican women discussed elections and campaign strategies Saturday as the Pitt County Republican Women's Club played host to the quarterly board meeting of the North Carolina Federation of Republican Women.

Held at the Hilton Inn on Greenville Boulevard, the daylong meeting was highlighted by a luncheon speech by Patric Dorsey, state secretary of cultural resources.

"We were very pleased these ladies came to Greenville from all parts of the state," said Mary Lou Suggs, president of the PCRWC.

The PCRWC is a local affiliate of the statewide organization, which elected to have its quarterly board meeting in Greenville for the first time.

According to Iris Dlugos, NCFRW president, the purpose of the organization is to secure and elect Republican candidates of all levels of government.

She said the organization is self-supporting, with 2,900 members statewide.

"The purpose of the board meeting is to get input from members and conduct the business needed to carry on the organization," she said.

"We're celebrating our 35th year in the state of North Carolina this year, and nationally we are celebrating our 50th year. We are the largest volunteer political organization in the country, with 140,000 plus members nationally," she said.

Ms. Dlugos said the organization is gearing up for this year's presidential race and the legislative races in the state.

"Redistricting comes in 1991 and we want to have more legislators there to have input because the Republicans are always gerrymandered out of seats. We want more house and senate members so facilities to pressure Tehran to accept a negotiated peace in their 7-year-old war. The Iranians counter with gunboat raids on ships doing business with gulf countries that support Iraq.

Eleven Kuwaiti tankers were reflagged with the Stars and Stripes and Navy warships began escorting them in July to protect them from attack by Iran.

The convoy reaching Kuwait on Saturday entered the gulf two days before. It consisted of one ship, the 46,723-ton gas carrier Gas Prince, escorted by the guided missile frigate McClusky.

A spokesman for the U.S. Central Command said U.S. officials have ended the practice of announcing the start of the gulf convoys but will continue to report their termination.

The official Baghdad Radio, monitored in Cyprus, said searchers recovered the bodies of Brig. Gen. Abdel-Aziz Ibrahim al-Hadithi, commander of Iraq's 5th Army Corps, and other officers from the wreckage of a helicopter that crashed Friday near Shuwan village in the Kurdistan mountains.

It did not say how many people were aboard or how many bodies were found.

Tehran radio, also monitored in Cyprus, said the helicopter was shot down by anti-aircraft fire of Iran's Revolutionary Guards. An Iraqi military spokesman called the claim "a cheap lie" and the Iraqi News Agency blamed the crash on bad weather.

The area is the scene of intermittent fighting between Iraqi troops and Iranian-backed Kurdish rebels. Last week, Iran and Kurdish rebel spokesmen reported heavy fighting in Kurdistan, but the Iraqis denied the claim.

Iran's official media reported that Revolutionary Guards seized 56 square miles and killed 4,500 Iraqis in fighting along the northern sector of the two countries' common border over the past week.

Iraq also reported its warplanes on Saturday scored "destructive hits" on an anti-aircraft missile battery along the southern sector of the front east of the Iraqi port city of Basra, the Iraqi News Agency reported.

Iran, in a war communique carried by the Iranian news agency, reported its warplanes attacked Iraqi troop concentrations in the southern warfront.

Reagan Sets Limited Agenda

"I will mention ways to raise the quality of our schools. But I will remind Congress that the most important thing is not to throw quantities of money at education but to tie funding to results and to have a commitment to quality and to state and local control of schools."

He also will propose initiatives in the fight against illegal drugs, another area that was targeted for spending cutbacks last year.

"It does not have a bunch of unrealistic goals laid out there," one official said, describing the speech. "If there were, it would reinforce the fact that: why's he doing this? He can't get them done."

"It will show that he's still willing to put a few challenges out there, that he is not ready to just sit back and watch the days and months go idly by," said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The speech urges Congress to act in a bipartisan spirit and help him make his final year a productive one, the official said.

Another official, also speaking privately, said, "It touches all the Reagan themes that he's emphasized over the last seven years. People who have traditionally supported the president will be quite happy with it. I'm not sure there's a screaming headline in it."

It will be Reagan's seventh State of the Union address, and although he will not mention it, it will be the last one he will deliver in person. Officials said that next January, he will follow the tradition of many outgoing presidents of submitting a written State of the Union message.

In his radio address Saturday, the president talked of how he gets excited by the annual State of the Union foray to Capitol Hill.

"The State of the Union is the only statement that the Constitution itself requires the president to give," he said. "Almost all presidents since Woodrow Wilson have delivered States of the Union in person, not just sent-up written messages. This will be my seventh time. And let me tell you, the thrill of standing in that place where so many great presidents have stood ... never goes away."

In his speech Monday night, Reagan will not take note of the Iran-Contra affair that dominated and drained his administration in 1987. "No reason to. That was last year's story," an official said.

"In the year ahead," Reagan said last week, "we're not going to be on the defensive, shoring up problems and answering our critics."

"We are moving forward, and I have no doubt that when we look back, 1988 will be a year of great accomplishment toward our goals," Reagan told a cheering audience of political appointees.

To a large degree, Reagan's political agenda for 1988 already is fixed: battling for aid for Contra rebels in Nicaragua, pushing for Senate ratification of a U.S.-Soviet treaty to eliminate intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) and seeking another arms agreement, this one to cut long-range nuclear weapons by half.

Reagan's address will contain appeals for approval of the INF treaty and more money for the Contras, and argue anew for moving ahead on his Star Wars missile defense plan, also known as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Three major summit meetings are planned before summer: a NATO meeting in Brussels in March, a trip to Moscow in May or June, and a seven-nation economic conference in Toronto, also in June.

After the Republican National Convention in mid-August, Reagan will be available to work in earnest for the GOP presidential candidate.

To spur budget reform, Reagan will cite the last-minute spending bill approved by Congress last year, a 2,000-page document that contained hidden surprises discovered only after it was signed.

"There will be what you would expect any Ronald Reagan State of the Union to include," an official said. "I think it's fair to say that people look more for things that are excluded than are included, and there are certain fundamental principles of this presidency that would have to be in a speech like this — abortion, school prayer."

Reagan said Saturday he also will be speaking about staunching the flow of federal red ink.

"I'll remind Congress of some good ideas that are past due for action, like the line-item veto and a balanced budget amendment," he said. "And I may have a surprise, too, a way right now for Congress to show it's serious about putting the government's house in order."

Reagan did not say what surprise he had in mind. And White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk said Saturday only that the "the final version" of the address had gone to Reagan on Friday, and that the president was studying it at Camp David over the weekend.

"Of course, it's subject to last-minute changes," the spokesman said.

this does not happen," she said.

She said one of the group's primary concerns is re-electing Gov. Jim Martin.

Ms. Dorsey discussed the accomplishments of Martin's administration and described some of the accomplishments of the department of cultural resources.

She praised Martin's efforts to improve transportation, education, agriculture and economic development in North Carolina during his term of office.

She said Democratic opposition will pose a strong challenge to the Republican Party in the gubernatorial elections.

"I dont have to tell you all that we have our work cut out for us this year," she said.

Greenville City Council member Lorraine Shinn, who attended the luncheon, said the board meeting being held in Greenville is significant because historically, there haven't been many Rebublican women living in the eastern part of the North Carolina.

"This shows we are becoming more predominant in the eastern section of the state and that there's a reason to come here for a meeting."

The PCRWC installed the 1988 officers at Saturday's meeting. The slate includes: Mary Lou Sugg, president; Gladys Pratt, vice-president; Hermine Zmoda, treasurer, and Diana Dansey, secretary.

and by biopsy that the forearms of those having the tretinoin-containing cream treatment improved, while the others did not, and that 14 out of the 15 faces treated with this medication improved. Fine wrinkling tended to improve more than heavy wrinkling.

Charles Carter, a pharmacist at the Kroger Sav-On pharmacy, said he had six calls before 10 a.m. Friday after news about the effectiveness of the product was reported Thursday night and Friday morning on television and in newspapers. "I told all of them they had to get in touch with their doctors," he said. "It's prescription-only."

He said the pharmacy does have the medication in both cream and gel form and previously had sold it to customers being treated by their physicians for acne.

Burke said that besides being used as a treatment for wrinkles, he is pleased to see that the medication has been shown effective in reversing some premalignant lesions of the skin. He said he will perhaps use it to help those patients more than those with just wrinkling.

Effectiveness of the treatment for wrinkling, acne or skin lesions tends to take time, perhaps as long as four months, he said.

"The best advice I can continue to give anyone, though, is stay out of the sun as much as possible, use a sun screen when you're in the sun, and stay out of tanning booths," he said.

Asked if the sun-caused wrinkling tends to respond more than age-related wrinkling, Burke said he believes that virtually all wrinkling of skin is sun-caused. "If you look at the skin on even a very old person's rear end, you'll see very little wrinkling," he said. "Exposed skin is what suffers."

This is the way most people look at funeral prearrangement.

Granted, it isn't the cheeriest of subjects. But, considering the benefits it offers, funeral prearrangement does merit just a little attention.

The puzzling thing is why so many people carefully avoid even thinking about it. The fact is, prearrangement takes very little time. Moreover, funeral prearrangement makes matters infinitely more simple for family and friends in the long run. And ultimately, it's your responsibility—yours alone.

Bennett Verdict

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Richard Bennett's attorney said Saturday his client was released from the Logan County Jail Friday night after posting a $100,000 bond, and he said an appeal would be filed in Bennett's murder conviction.

A Logan County Circuit Court jury found Bennett guilty Friday of first-degree murder in the death 10 years ago of his wife of three months. Bennett claimed his wife drowned after tripping over a blanket she had wrapped around her and fell off the Morrison Bluff bridge into the Arkansas River.

Prosecutor Bill Bullock contended Bennett killed Marcia Good Bennett to gain $53,000 in assets from her estate and from insurance policy proceeds.

Defense attorney Asa Hutchinson said he likely would file a motion for appeal next week, saying there were several areas on which he might base his motion.

"For one thing, I don't believe there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict," Hutchinson said. He also said he believed the testimony of Gloria Good, Mrs. Bennett's daughter by a previous marriage, was improperly admitted.

Hutchinson said Bennett had returned to his home in Salisbury, N.C., to await the appeal, which Hutchinson said would be filed within the 30-day limit, "probably next week."

Rep. Dan Daniel Dies

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Rep. W.C. "Dan" Daniel, a 10-term Democratic congressman from Virginia, died Saturday, four days after he announced that poor health would prevent him from seeking re-election.

Daniel, 73, was admitted to the University of Virginia Hospital at 1:20 p.m. after complaining of chest pains, said Thomas Doran, spokesman for the hospital. He suffered a massive heart attack at 5 p.m. and was pronounced dead 20 minutes later, Doran said.

Daniel and his wife had stopped in Charlottesville to visit their son while en route from their home in Danville to Washington, D.C., said Frances Price, manager of Daniel's Danville office.

Daniel, dean of Virginia's 10-member congressional delegation, was hospitalized in March for a malfunctioning heart valve and was hospitalized again in the summer for a check-up related to the heart problem.

He said Tuesday that he did not consider himself an ill person but did not feel he could perform 100 percent in another term in Washington. He said he had rejected suggestions that he try to cut back on his activities or work a lighter schedule.

"To do differently than I have done all these years would not be fair to the people I represent and would be inconsistent with my basic work ethic," he said.

U.S. Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said few members of Congress had worked harder than Daniel to maintain a strong national defense. "I admired him immensely and will miss the leadership he gave to Virginia for so many years," Warner said.

Lawrence H. Framme III, chairman of the Virginia Democratic Party, said Daniel had been "a person dedicated to efficient, government, fiscally repsonsible government but responsive government."

A textile company executive, Daniel was ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee and served on the permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

He was first elected in southern Virginia's 5th District in 1968 and won re-election in each succeding election.

He "frequently described his role as that of a 'participant' in many contemporary developments, rather than one who introduced a great number of bills," said his spokeswoman, Terry Hoye.

His greatest accomplishment was passing a bill that set up a separate department in the Defense Department to handle special operations and low-intensity conflicts, she said.

Daniel began his career as an hourly textile mill worker in 1939 at Dan River Inc. in Danville and had worked his way up to an executive position when he was elected to Virginia's House of Delegates in 1959.

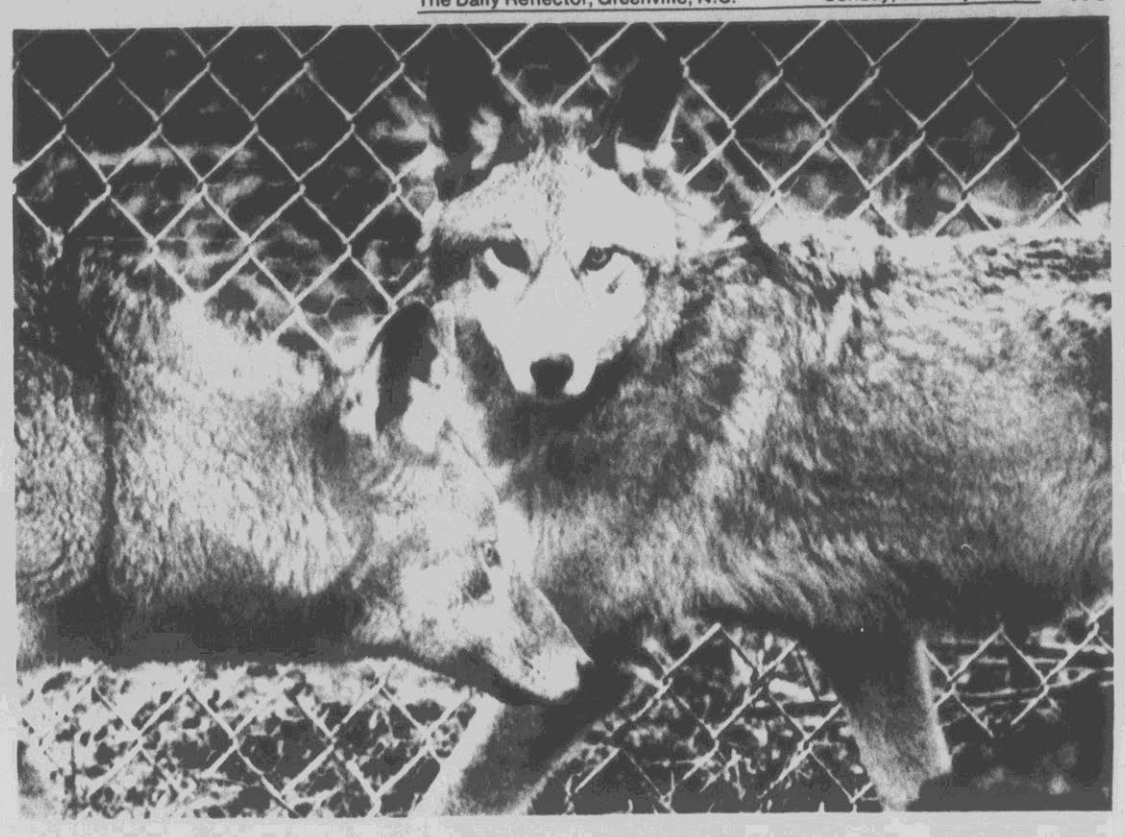

He served as a delegate until being elected to Congress for the first time in1968, replacing former Gov. William M. Tuck

He was chairman of the Armed Services subcommittee on readiness and morale and served on the Intelligence subcommittee on Program and Budget Authorization for All U.S. Government Intelligence Departments.

Daniel was a founding member of the Congressional Textile Caucus.

He was a World War II veteran, and served as state coommander and national commander of the American Legion in the 1950s.

Daniel is survived by his wife, Ruby; one son, Jimmie Foxx; and two grandchildren.

Abandoned Child Has More Surgery

CHICAGO (AP) — A 9-year-old girl whose lower legs had to be amputated because of frostbite suffered while she was locked in a freezing attic underwent a second operation Saturday, and doctors were optimistic about her future.

Darlwin Carlisle went back to the operating room so doctors could look for more infected tissue and close her wounds, said Gretchen Flock, spokeswoman at Wyler Children's Hospital at the University of Chicago.

"She's doing fine. Doctors found no evidence of inflection in her wounds and put her legs in casts," Flock said after 'the 2½-hour procedure. The girl's legs were amputated below the knee Thursday.

"She brought her Cabbage Patch doll with her, and doctors put casts on both legs of the doll before she was put to sleep. She said the doll will look like her now," said Ms. Flock.

Darlwin was found Jan. 17 locked in an unheated attic bedroom of a foreclosed house in Gary, Ind., where she and her mother lived. Authorities believe she was left there several days earlier by her mother, who has been charged with felony neglect.

Dr. Victoria Dvonch, the orthopedic surgeon who amputated the girl's legs and led the operating team Saturday, said Darlwin had been "watching herself on TV in her hospital room, and when told that many people have been asking about her, she said, 'Tell them I'm fine.'"

Darlwin will be transferred this week to La Rabida Children's Hospital, where she will be fitted with artificial legs, Ms. Dvonch said.

Ms. Dvonch said the girl had been exposed to severe cold for three to five days. Temperatures the week before the child was discovered ranged from the 20s and 30s at night and into the 40s during the daytime.

Darlwin, who authorities say has been upbeat and cheerful despite her ordeal, was listed in fair condition Saturday before the surgery, Easton said.

It will take her about a month to learn to walk and then several more months for walking to feel natural again, hospital officials said.

Ms. Dvonch, director of an amputee center at La Rabida, said she and other staff members are optimistic that Darlwin's life will be normal. Children adapt much more easily than adults to artificial limbs, especially happy, active children like Darlwin, she said.

Officials are not sure with whom Darlwin will live when her stay at La Rabida is completed.

Her mother, Darlwin Joann Britt, is in jail in lieu of $50,000 bond. She pleaded innocent Friday on a charge of felony neglect of a dependent.

Ms. Britt, 24, who listed her parents' Gary address as her home, said she was unmarried and has been unemployed since working briefly last year at a fast-food restaurant.

The child's father, James Carlisle, lives in Fort Wayne, Ind., and has visited her in the hospital, Easton said.

Officers Talk Force

viable option; we're still of the opinion that if they will talk we can resolve this," he said.

Saturday morning, two figures emerged with a 6- by 4-foot piece of plywood and then later with a blue tarpaulin and placed them outside the main house in an apparent effort to block light from the police spotlights.

At 4 a.m., about a half-dozen law officers on snowmobiles raced around outside the compound for 45 minutes. At 8 a.m., a twin-engine police airplane resumed buzzing the house to as low as 100 feet from the roof.

Electrical power was cut off to the compound Wednesday when an FBI marksman shot out a cutoff switch next to the pole-mounted transformer serving the compound. Authorities said it was safer to shoot the switch then to send up a lineman.

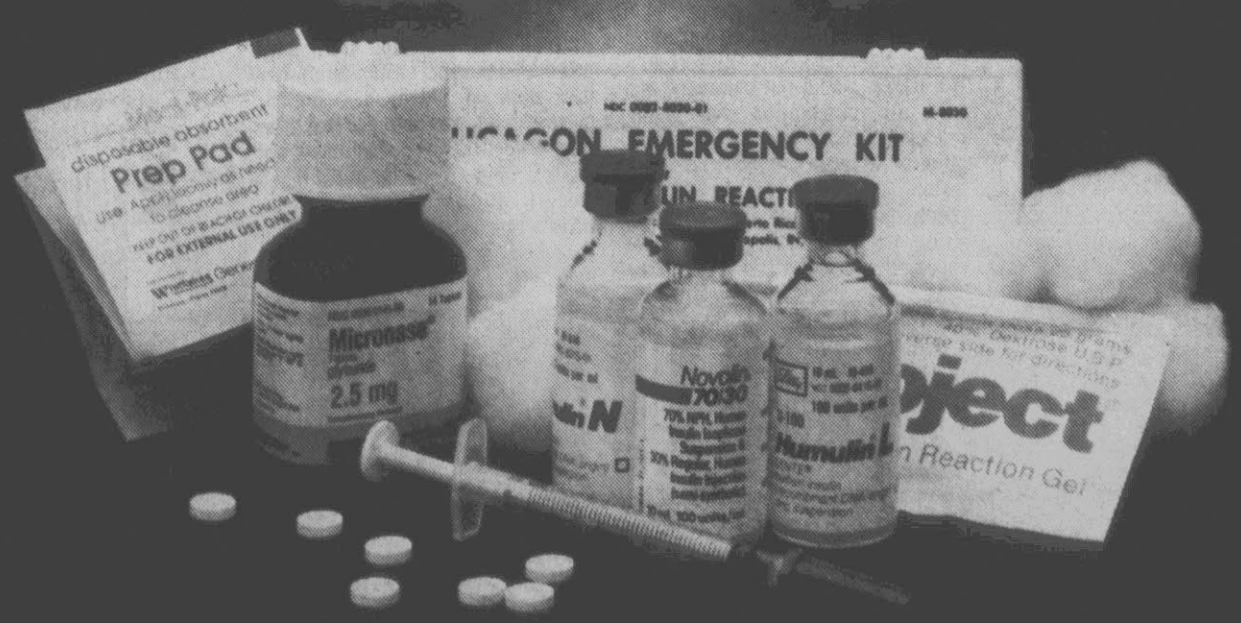

The clan leaders have not talked with authorities since a week ago, although a Morse code message was flashed Thursday saying, "Cops not telling truth."

Meanwhile, a mystery over who six weeks ago gave the clan John Singer's bloody clothes, along with the .308-caliber pistol he was carrying when killed, was solved by Summit County Attorney Robert Adkins.

He said Singer's personal effects were given to Roger Bates, a relative who until recently served as a mediator between police and the family. Adkins said he could not think of a legitimate reason for not returning the items.

Taking medication becomes a part of everyday life to people with diabetes. Whether they require insulin shots or special pills, most diabetics have to take one or the other to support their pancreatic deficiencies.

Everyone needs insulin. It is the major regulator of glucose (sugar) metabolism. The pancreas of a diabetic produces too little insulin or diabetics may ineffectively use the little insulin they do produce. Appropriate medication helps to solve their problem.

An understanding of the correct way to take medication is very important to diabetics. This, coupled with a sound knowledge of meal planning, exercise needs and blood sugar monitoring is the key to successful management of diabetes. Successful self management of diabetes equals healthier lives. This is winning with diabetes rather than losing because of diabetes.

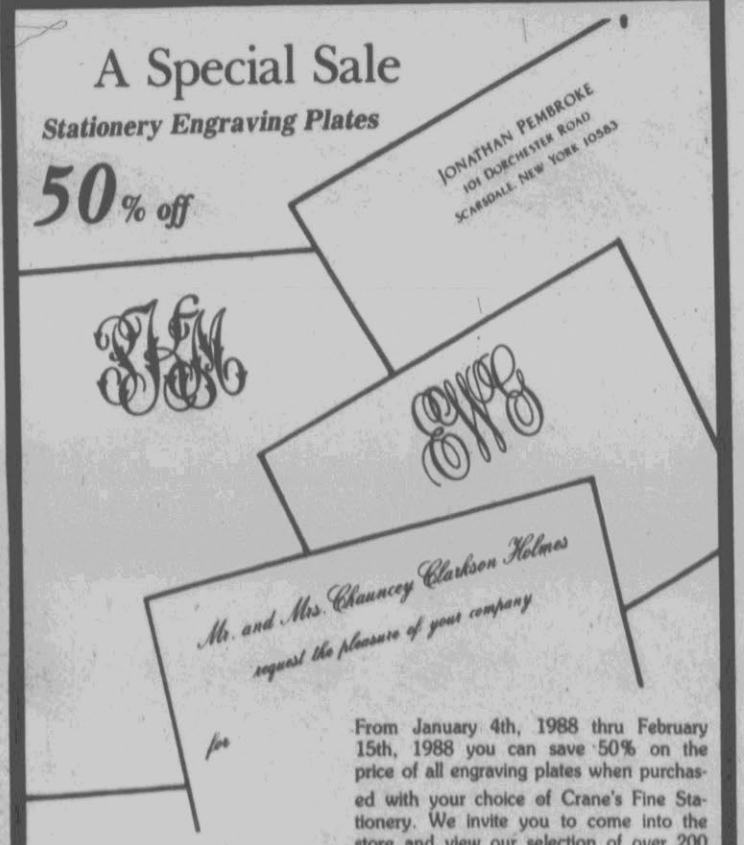

The Diabetes Education Program, developed by Pitt Internal and Renal Medicine Associates, Ltd. (PIRMA), is a program about winning. It is a teaching program structured to help diabetics develop goal standards and good self care techniques. The program supports the efforts of physicians who care for diabetics.

Jordan, Martin Debate Abilities

By The Associated Press

In the first debate of their campaigns for governor, Gov. Jim Martin and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan tussled over leadership qualities, with Martin accused of being ineffective and Jordan of developing a "neo-macho image."

In an hour-long debate sponsored by the North Carolina Press Association, Jordan criticized Martin for assailing the Democratic General Assembly.

"You can't bash the legislature, you can't sue the legislature, you can't call the legislature arrogant and expect them to work with you," Jordan said. He later said he respected the legislature and would continue to do so as governor.

Martin draw laughter from the audience of reporters, editors and publishers when he asked if Jordan was projecting a "neo-macho image" by driving a tractor-trailer truck from his home in Mount Gilead to Raleigh to file for the governor's race.

Martin later said the question was not meant as a personal attack. Some Republicans have portrayed Jordan as a "wimp," but Martin has disavowed that attack.

In other political action Friday, Rep. Howard Coble, R-N.C., sent his filing fee by Federal Express to Raleigh and Democratic State Auditor Ed Renfrow filed for a third term. Jim Gardner, a Republican, filed to run in the race for lieutenant governor, and Insurance Commissioner Jim Long said he expected his former boss to run against him.

Long said he thought former Insurance Commissioner John Ingram was preparing a campaign for the Democratic primary. Long was once fired by Ingram.

"I think he is really going to run," Long told The News and Observer of Raleigh. "He's been out there stirring folks up for umpteen months from the talk I've been hearing."

Ingram did not respond to phone calls, the newspaper said. His son, Randy, declined to discuss his father's political plans.

Coble, a two-term Republican from Greensboro, will face Democrat Tom Gilmore in the 6th District congressional election. The district includes Guilford, Davidson and Alamance counties.

Renfrow said the state auditor is one of the most important positions in state government, despite some people viewing the office as "boring."

"They call us the watchdogs and they probably call us some other kinds of things too ...," Renfrow said. "We view it as the lifeblood and heartbeat of state government.

"When you start filing up with money, you get people's attention very quickly. It's not very boring then," he said.

Also, Charles H. Taylor of Brevard filed Wednesday for the Republican nomination for the 11th Congressional District seat.

In Superior Court filings:

— Romallus O. Murphy, Democrat from Greensboro, filed for District 18-A.

— Joseph R. John, Democrat from Greensboro, filed for District 18-E.

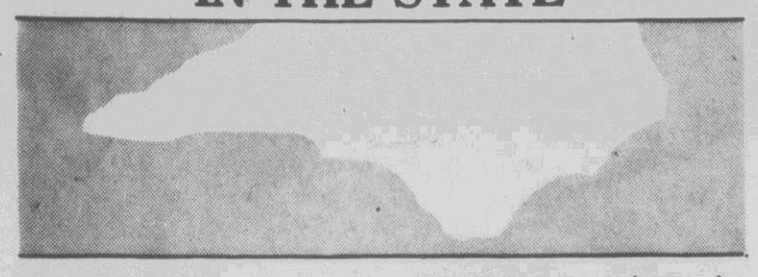

— Shirley Fulton, Democrat from Charlotte, filed for District 26-A.

In District Court filings:

— David E. Leech, Democrat from Greenville, filed in District 3 for seat held by J. Randall Hunter.

— Allen W. Harrell, a Democratic incumbent from Wilson, filed for District 7.

IN THE STATE

Lottery Support

RALEIGH (AP) — Harold Hardison, a Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor, said Saturday he supported a statewide lottery as one way of increasing salaries for North Carolina teachers.

" ... I am today endorsing a statewide lottery with all proceeds to be used in education and especially in upgrading our public school salaries," Hardison said at a news conference at state Democratic Party headquarters.

"It is time to quit fooling ourselves," Hardison said. "If we're really serious about paying our teachers more money, then we have to find a new resource for the revenue — without raising taxes."

With the added income from the lottery, North Carolina should strive toward making "our public school teacher salaries among the highest in the nation," he said. "For years we have been talking about briniong teacher salaries up to the national average. Still, because of the lack of revenue, our teachers rank well below the national average. Even in the South, Virginia, Florida and Georgia rank ahead of us."

Paris Flight

RALEIGH (AP) — The U.S. Department of Transportation has approved American Airlines' application for nonstop service from Raleigh-Durham Airport to Paris, an American spokesman said Friday.

Spokesman Al Becker, based in Dallas, Texas, said service would being May 26.

The approval clears the way for American to being making its RDU hub a major international gateway for the entire Southeast, he said.

People in more than 20 other points throughout the Southeast, including North Carolina, South Carolina and Florida, will have convenient access to Paris through the flights, he said.

Commuter Plans

RALEIGH (AP) — AMR Corp., the parent corporation of American Airlines, and AVAir Inc. jointly announced Friday that both companies had entered into negotiations to re-establish American Eagle commuter operations at Raleigh-Durham Airport.

Steve McGregor, a spokesman for American Airlines, said both sides will work throughout the weekend in an effort to reach an agreement that would allow the resumption of flights and put AVAir employees back to work as early as Feb. 1.

In the meantime, AV Air passengers are being accommodated on American or other carriers, McGregor said.

"If we reach the agreement, it would put AV Air employees back to work" — but not necessarily all of them, McGregor said. "We're working on the size of the operation, and the number of flights. We're looking at that now."

AVAir Inc., which operated as American Eagle in several states under a franchise from American Airlines, filed for reorganization Jan. 15 in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Lynchburg, Va.

The commuter airline had abruptly ceased flights the night before.

Wrong Airport

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A Piedmont airliner en route from Baltimore to Wilmington mistakenly landed in Jacksonville, more than 40 miles north, and the pilots were apparently as surprised as the passengers.

Flight 909 left Baltimore about 9:45 p.m. Thursday and was scheduled to land at the New Hanover County Airport at 10:59 p.m. Through a series of circumstances Piedmont and Federal Aviation Administration officials are still investigating, however, the plane touched down at Albert J. Ellis Field outside Jacksonville about the same time it was scheduled to land in Wilmington.

Jack Barker, spokesman for the FAA's Atlanta office, said Friday in appears the flight was steered to Ellis Field by air traffic controllers at Wilmington. The pilot accepted the directions and proceeded to land in Jacksonville, Barker said.

He added, however, that the incident is still under investigation.

Jim Farrior, the ranking controller at New Hanover County Airport control tower, would not comment and said all information was being released through the FAA regional office in Atlanta.

Don McGuire, vice president of public affairs for the Winston-Salem-based airline, would not speculate about who was at fault.

Judge Dismisses Speeding Count Against Marshal

RALEIGH (AP) — A U.S. district judge dismissed a speeding charge Friday against a deputy U.S. marshal, ending a dispute by federal and state authorities over whether the marshal could be prosecuted in a state court.

Judge James C. Fox ruled Deputy Marshal Danny Eatmon of Knightdale was exempt from prosecution by state authorities because Eatmon thought his actions had been "necessary and proper to the fulfillment of his assigned duties."

The state does not plan to appeal, said Isaac T. Avery III, a special deputy attorney general who represented the state in the case.

A Highway Patrol trooper gave Eatmon, a part-time marshal, a speeding ticket on Sept. 13 after clocking Eatmon's van at 71 mph in a 55 mph zone on N.C. 11 north of Ayden.

Eatmon and his supervisor, Deputy Marshal Dennis Meehan, who had been riding with Eatmon, told Fox at a hearing in December that they had been trying to get some prisoners to the Nash County Jail in time for a meal. They told Fox they did not want to have to stop to feed the prisoners on the road because of security problems.

Fox wrote that under the supremacy clause of the U.S. Constitution, Eatmon was protected from state prosecution even if he had committed "an error of judgment." The supremacy clause says federal laws take precedent over state laws and has been interpreted to mean that a federal official is protected from state prosecution if his or her conduct was necessary and proper in the performance of his duties, Fox said.

PTL Report Predicts Shortage Of Cash

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — PTL trustee David Clark has denied that the ministry is prepared to auction all its assets, but a report filed in U.S. Bankruptcy Court says the television ministry expects to fall short of paying more than $4.1 million in debts due May 2.

"We have no plan to liquidate," Clark said. "There is absolutely no truth to that."

Clark spoke by telephone from Hilton Head Island, where he met Friday with ministry vice presidents. He said they discussed fundraising.

According to the court document filed the same day, PTL expects to have $4.048 million available in cash, roughly $54,000 short of what it needs.

PTL filed for protection in June under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. By May 2, the ministry must raise $4,102,000 — in addition to operating costs — to put the plan in effect and begin paying debts.

If the ministry is unable to pay its more than $60 million debt, it could be forced into Chapter 7 bankruptcy and be forced to sell its assets.

Clark said a liquidation plan has been drawn up but that he doesn't think it will be necessary.

"We're very sanguine, very positive, very optimistic," he said.

Clark also attacked PTL founder and former leader Jim Bakker, who has said he has $62 million available to pay off the ministry's debts.

Bakker said recently he had a commitment from a bank to pay all creditors and have $10 million available for operating expenses during the first two months.

He resigned his post with the ministry last year after admitting to a sexual encounter with a former church secretary.

"I hope he does have some money because in the next week or two, he's going to need some. We're going to be asking him for some in court," Clark said.

Clark has said PTL will try to recover any excess money paid to Bakker and his wife, Tammy, while they headed the ministry. The Internal Revenue Service claims the Bakkers and their aides received nearly $15 million in excessive pay between 1984 and 1987.

PTL's projection of available cash, after expenses, assumes that it can raise nearly $10 million from its viewers by May, said PTL attorney R. Bradford Leggett of Winston-Salem, N.C.

The $10 million projection for 17 weeks is more than double what PTL raised in contributions over the 10-week period ending Jan. 9.

Reports filed with the U.S. trustee in bankruptcy court show that PTL took in $3.9 million from contributors between Nov. 7 and Jan. 9.

"There's no doubt that they are going to have to do better than they have been doing," said U.S. Trustee Joseph Buzhardt.

About the $10 million projection, Leggett said: "That's management's best estimate, and that's all anybody can do.

"It's goes back to the (bankruptcy) judge's comment in December that it is up to the PTL partners now to decide if they will support this ministry.

"We are comfortable with these projections ... We are almost there to begin with, and we are going to try to improve even what we projected," he said.

Legget said PTL plans some fundraising telethons in April to increase revenue. The ministry lost an estimated 3,000 viewers and potential contributors this week when the largest cable company in Tampa, Fla., confirmed that it has dropped the PTL Network.

The figure for debts due May 2 does not include back taxes, which the IRS says total between $62 and $82 million. In addition to trying to collect that amount, the IRS is continuing its efforts to revoke PTL's tax-exempt status.

The South Carolina Tax Commission has filed a $3 million claim against PTL.

About the $54,000 shortfall for meeting the other debts on May 2, Leggett said the shortage could be made up through sale of excess real estate.

Man Sought In Shooting

REIDSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Police, sheriff's deputies and state agents from North Carolina and Virginia were searching Saturday near the state line for a man who reportedly shot at agents trying to arrest him outside Reidsville.

State Bureau of Investigation agents were attempting to arrest a suspect about 6:45 p.m. Friday at the Holiday Inn on N.C. 87 south of Reidsville when the man fired several shots at officers and fled in a four-wheel-drive truck, authorities said. No one was hurt.

The suspect's identity and charges against him were not available Friday night.

State troopers from North Carolina and Virginia searched for the man with the help of Rockingham County and Henry County, Va., sheriff's deputies and police from Reidsville, Danville, Va., and Martinsville, Va.

Cold Water Can Save The Life It Threatens

By KAREN GARLOCH
The Charlotte Observer
AP Member Exchange Feature

DILLON, S.C. (AP) — When emergency medical crews worked to revive a 9-year-old Dillon, S.C., boy who spent 40 minutes in 6 feet of icy water, they were obeying one of the rules of medicine:

Nobody's dead until they're warm and dead.

Kendall Smith's temperature had dropped to 74 degrees, his heart had stopped and he wasn't breathing when he was pulled from an irrigation ditch Jan. 12.

Two and a half hours later, at Dillon's St. Eugene Community Hospital, Kendall's temperature had risen to 97, almost normal, his heart was beating and he was breathing again.

Although he remains in critical condition, in a mild coma, Kendall opens his eyes, moves his arms and legs and turns his head from side to side. His mother, Mary Smith, says he turns to her when she calls his nickname, "Boot."

"He seems like he's afraid of the machines and things plugged up around him," she said. "I haven't heard him say anything, (but) he was moving his mouth a lot the other day. He did a lot of yawning. He has improved some, but he's not out of the woods yet."

Kendall was taken off a respirator Wednesday at the Medical University of South Carolina in Charleston, but doctors don't know if his brain or nervous system are damaged.

Just by being alive, Kendall is beating the odds.

Medical literature reports only three cases of people who've survived without damage after more than 40 minutes in cold water, said Dr. William Norberg, a pediatric critical-care specialist in Fargo, N.D.

One was Norberg's patient, Alvaro Garza Jr., 11, who fell through thin ice into the Red River Dec. 4.

The boy was submerged for 45 minutes. His temperature was 77 degrees when he was rescued. But 17 days later, he was released from the hospital, and Norberg says he appears to have no brain damage.

"He was an A-student in math, and he's still an A-student in math," Norberg said Thursday.

Survivors can thank the cold water that nearly killed them.

"If (Kendall Smith) had been immersed in warm water for the same period, he would not have been able to survive," said Dr. Paul Alexander, an emergency room physician who treated him at St. Eugene Community Hospital in Dillon.

Under normal circumstances, depriving the brain of oxygen for five minutes would lead to irreversible brain damage.

But when the body is cooled quickly to about 80 degrees or less, it is protected by the cold. The metabolism nearly shuts down, reducing the body's need for oxygen.

The quicker the body is cooled — until there's almost no metabolism — the longer a body can survive, Norberg said.

Emergency medical technicians who responded to the scene of Kendall's accident in Dillon had read about other survivors.

"We knew that as cold as it was, with the effects that hypothermia has on the body, that he had a chance," said Randy Grimsley of the Dillon County Emergency Medical Service. "If we could get his body core temperature back, we knew we had a chance."

They gave him oxygen through a tube in his trachea and used cardiopulmonary resuscitation at the scene and in the ambulance.

Warming the body after such a shock is tricky, Norberg said. As the body warms, the blood vessels dilate. It's important to get the heart pumping and blood circulating again. That gets oxygen to the starved cells and helps clear out toxic acids.

Norberg said he believes one of the keys to Alvaro Garza's survival was the use of a heart-lung machine that bypassed Alvaro's heart to pump blood through his body. With the machine, doctors could warm the child's blood, which warmed his body, as well as control his blood pressure.

But St. Eugene Hospital in Dillon didn't have a heart-lung machine. Doctors and nurses used other standard methods to get Kendall warm.

They gave him warm oxygen and put him on a respirator. They gave him warm intravenous fluids and wrapped him in warm blankets.

Kendall's temperature didn't budge for the first hour, Alexander said. But five hours later, when he was taken to Charleston by helicopter, his temperature was 97, almost normal.

As his temperature rose, the hospital's cardiac arrest team used electric shock to start his heart.

Panel Rejects Aging Plan

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin's chief of staff has blamed politics for the rejection of a plan on aging issues by a committee of powerful Democratic legislators.

The Joint Legislative Commission on Governmental Operations instead referred the plan to a pair of legislative study commissions for more work.

"They can report to us the true facts on this," said Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham.

The commission cannot rewrite the administration's report, but its members could control what parts of the plan are funded.

"It shows the pettiness of this political season," said Phil Kirk, Martin's chief of staff, calling the panel the "Governmental Operations Harassment Committee."

The 64-page plan, completed Dec. 31 by the state Department of Human Resources, recommends establishing "senior centers" in each county to provide information about care for the elderly. It also addresses health care, retirement services and other issues and stresses that the state should find ways to help the elderly stay out of institutions.

The plan doubtless would cost the state extra money, but it contains no spending proposals — a sore spot with Democratic legislators.

"Most of us are accustomed to getting numbers," said House Speaker Liston B. Ramsey, D-Madison.

Couple Sued

GREENSBORO (AP) — A dentist and his wife are the target of a lawsuit that claims they allowed teen-agers to illegally drink beer in their Sedgefield home shortly before an alcohol-related traffic accident that killed one teen and injured two others.

The suit was filed in Guilford County Superior Court by the parents of Tamara Renee Trottier of High Point, who was seriously injured in the 1985 crash.

It alleges that William R. and Nancy Campbell permitted friends of their 15-year-old daughter, Laura, to drink alcohol at parties in their house without supervision. Most of the people who attended were under 19 years old, the legal drinking age in North Carolina in 1985, the suit alleges.

William Campbell said Friday he had not seen the lawsuit. He declined further comment.

Trottier, a cheerleader and honor student at Ragsdale High School in Jamestown, claims she was invited by Laura Campbell to a party on Dec. 6, 1985.

Collector Considers "Old-Timey Stuff" Valuable Property

By DARLA GODWIN
The Sanford Herald
An AP Member Exchange Feature

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — Some people may think that time has passed by Stanley Blarchard's farm nestled deep in the Sandhills, tall pines and brimming lakes of western Harnett County.

But time has not passed unnoticed nor has it stopped, according to the hundreds of clocks that Blanchard has collected at the farm, which is located near historic Barbecue Presbyterian Church, founded in 1758.

The 91-year-old Harnett County native began collecting an assortment of old items — clocks, furniture, guns, farm equipment and even houses — in the early 1900s. Today, Blanchard has almost as many houses and buildings as he does antiques.

"I've always believed that if you hang onto something long enough, it is going to be worth something to somebody some day," Blanchard said of his collection. But there are no prices on his antiques — he doesn't sell any of them.

He collects them, he says, because "I've always been interested in old-timey stuff."

His daughter, Iris Johnson of Lillington, said the collecting started out as just a "gradual thing and then they all just came about."

Blanchard started his collection by visiting estate sales and buying things that caught his attention. "Back then, nobody had any money, because there wasn't any money," he said. "But I would go to the sales and buy what nobody else wanted."

Soon, after his interest in "old-timey stuff" became better known, people who were planning on selling or getting rid of their old things would let Blanchard know beforehand.

That is how he got many of the 20 or 30 houses and barns that are scattered across his land and used to house an assortment of antique treasures. The buildings range from large Victorian-style houses complete with gables and turrets to rambling clapboard farmhouses and study old log cabins. Blanchard moved most of the houses himself by cutting them into sections. Most of them came from Harnett County and the neighboring Lee County.

Which of the buildings is the oldest?

"I have one log house that they said the slaves slept in," Blanchard said.

Probably the largest component of Blanchard's collection is the assortment of clocks. They were probably the first items he started collecting, according to Ms. Johnson. He has mantle clocks and wall clcoks, clocks with chimes and clocks with cuckoos. One of the more ornate, and probably more expensive, is a German-made mantle clock with matching candlesticks. The set was purchased more than 20 years ago for $1,250.

Music boxes make up another part of the vast collection and are the personal favorite of Ms. Johnson. Like the clocks, the music boxes come from all over the world — her favorite is from Germany — and in all shapes and sizes. Most of them play large tin "records" of songs that were popular in their time period.

Also in the entertainment area of the collection are a number of pianos — some that may even date back to the 1600s, according to Blanchard — and old televisions, including a 1941 Delco with a four-inch screen.

Blanchard has a large collection of guns and powder horns. To add a western flavor to his collection, he also has many Indian relics, such as peace pipes.

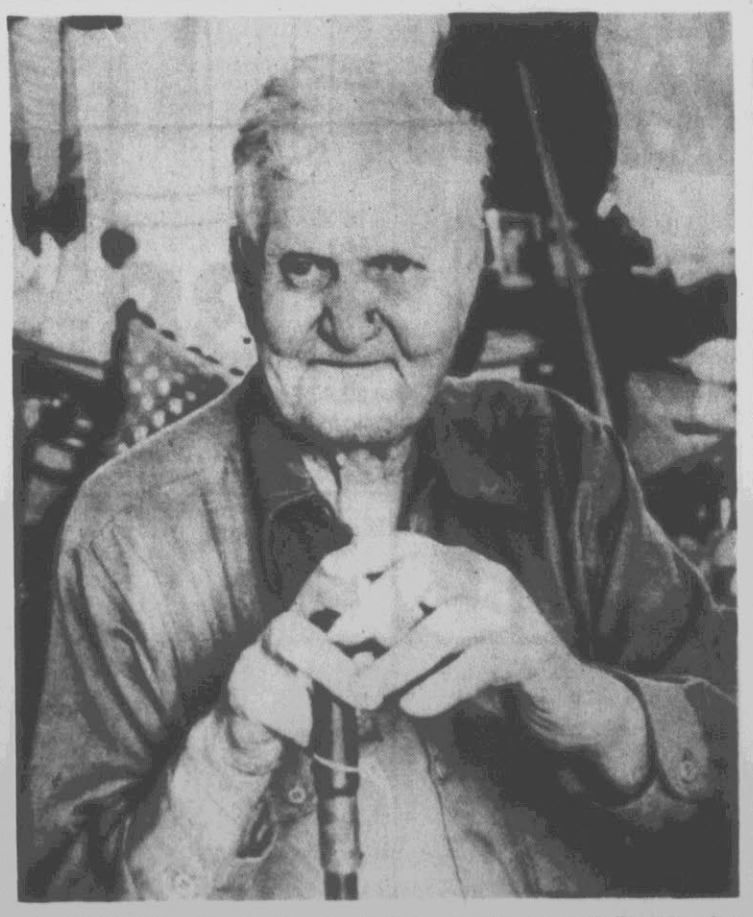

Blanchard followed the family tradition and farmed for many years. He bought his first farm in 1916 at the age of 20 by borrowing $200 at six percent interest. Th land, which would now sell for at least $1,000 an acre, went for $4 an acre then. In the early years, strawberries were his big crop but once tobacco became popular in the area, it became his main product.

Many of Blanchard's antiques reflect his farm upbringing — the barns are filled with old plows, horse collars, farm wagons and other farm tools.

He also tried his hand at other professsions, as a sawmill worker and a trapper. "I trapped all my life," he said. "That's how I got my start."

Although he had a lot of help on the farm from his wife, the former Mattie Ausley, and their eight children, the farm life was a hard one. The hard work is what Blanchard credits for his long life.

"I had to work hard to make a living all my life," Blanchard said. "People don't have to work like that now."

GABB Calls Appeal To Teen-Agers

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Anybody with a telephone can tap into the world of 976-GABB, a live party line that appeals especially to teen-agers, and many parents who know about the line shudder to think about the phone bill.

There's even a popular term for the phenomenon: "telephone bill shock." That's because the calls are local, but cost $3 each.

A young Charlotte man, for example, made 637 calls last summer and ran up a bill of more than $1,900 before his mother realized he was calling the party-line number advertised on television.

"We've heard of some teen-agers who got the numbers at school in the halls and didn't know they were pay calls," says Bob Freedman, Southern Bell district manager.

The line, a service of Omnicall in Seattle, works this way: After you connect with 976-GABB, a recorded message gives a second telephone number and a four-digit access code.

Hang up, dial the new number and, when asked, give your access number. You can then talk — or eavesdrop — to other callers on the party line for about three minutes before being disconnected.

Critics say the talk lines get around the intent of the 976 number, which is to offer recorded material that the phone company can monitor. Freedman says he's heard of problems in other states with live conversations becoming sexually explicit.

If the telephone company has its way, live talk lines won't exist much longer in North Carolina.

On Dec. 18, Southern Bell filed a request with the N.C. Utilities Commission to have such live-voice arrangements prohibited and to restrict 976 services to recordings.

If the commission approves the request at a meeting later this month, live talk lines will have to modify their services to comply.

Charlottean Derek Litton, 23, adds $20 a month to his telephone bill by dialing 976-TEEN once or twice every weekend. Southern Bell says the service, also offered by Omnicall in Seattle, costs $3 a call.

For Litton, unlike the adolescents who call that party line, it's good business.

Litton plans to open a "Photon" laser amusement center in Charlotte soon, and expects teen-agers to be a big part of his clientele. Listening in on the TEEN line helps him keep up with adolescent interests, he says.

"I've been considering using 976-GABB as a way to advertise the business," he says. "I could call in and say, 'I hear there's a good thing going on at Photon tonight' — spread the word among the teen-agers, you know."

Litton says a girl recently gave him a phone number to call to continue a conversation they had begun on the TEEN party line. When he dialed the number an irate man answered.

"You could tell he'd gotten a lot of calls that evening. Somebody was flooding that man's house with phone calls, all evening."

That, he says, is a "disturbing" aspect of the 976 party lines: It's too easy for someone harboring a grudge to "get even" by giving out someone else's phone number, and urging everybody on the line to dial it.

Dialing 976 numbers is "definitely addictive," he says. "The more you do it, the more you want to do it. It's so easy: You're not laying out any money right then, and you're at home, with your own phone. You just want to pick it up and dial."

Aside from that — and the problem of grudge calls — Litton finds 976 party lines relatively harmless. And often amusing.

"You'll hear a guy with a squeaky 13-year-old voice that's still changing, and he'll be telling some girl that he's a 30-year-old computer salesman and that he'll pick her up in his BMW. That's very entertaining."

Some frequent callers say 976-GABB can be an anonymous, harmless way to meet strangers.

Democrats Blast Gephardt's Grain, Trade Stances

By MIKE GLOVER
Associated Press Writer

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Richard Gephardt, who has surged in some polls only two weeks before Iowa's key precinct caucuses, was accused Saturday by Democratic presidential rivals of favoring grain embargoes and trade policies with "no hope and no future."

The Missouri congressman defended his trade policy of retaliation against unfair trade practices, saying, "We've got to be able to get more of our products into the world."

Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois wasted no time going on the attack, criticizing Gephardt's backing for a 1980 embargo on grain sales to the Soviet Union during the opening moments of a campaign debate among six Democratic presidential candidates.

"I voted against the grain embargo of 1980," Simon said. "My friend Dick Gephardt voted for it."

"We aren't going to solve the problem of agriculture by eliminating farmers," Simon said. "There's going to be no grain embargo in a Simon administration."

Gary Hart also weighed in by attacking "protectionist" trade policies.

"The road backward is a road called protectionism," Hart said. "There's no hope and no future down that road. The first casualties in any trade war are America's farmers."

Gephardt, telling Hart "you may be pointing at me," offered a defense of an amendment he sponsored calling for retaliation against nations that engage in unfair trade practices.

"We've got to push markets open," Gephardt said. "I want change, I want to stop foreign protectionism."

Current policy, he argued, is "all targeted at complaining about unfairness. The Gephardt trade amendment expands the discussion."

But Hart said, "We've got to jump into that world market with both feet" instead of "erecting trade barriers."

Debate over trade dominated the two-hour debate, though the candidates took time out to argue over taxes. Hart also took a poke at Gephardt's vote against raising the minimum wage, an issue which surfaced in a debate last week.

"Unlike others here who voted against the minimum wage, I think it ought to be $5. I think we ought to get people onto work and off welfare and I think one way to do that is to give them a decent compensation," Hart said.

The debate was the first of three the Democrats will have in three days. Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee was absent Saturday but will join the group Sunday in New Hampshire and Monday night in Boston.

Recent polls have shown Simon, Gephardt and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis closely bunched at the top of the Democratic field in Iowa. Hart shot to the top of those polls with his dramatic re-entry into the race last month but has sagged in most recent samplings.

Gephardt, on the other hand, has been rising as he steps up his use of television commercials pushing his trade policies and attacking the corporate and political establishment.

After the debate, Simon conceded the rough treatment given Gephardt was spurred by his rise in the polls.

"I think whenever you move into a prominent position in the polls that's what happens," Simon said. "I've experienced a little of that myself."

"I think the issues I have proposed have defined the debate," Gephardt told reporters after the debate. "I would be disappointed if it got into personal debates ... but as long as it is on issues, I don't mind."

In Saturday's debate, Jesse Jackson called for an international food conference to devise "stable prices for farmers around the world," and he sharpened his attack on multinational corporations he blamed for profiting from the economic problems facing farmers.

Jackson proposed an international conference to manage markets and "set a floor below which no farmers must fall."

Dukakis and Hart argued over political action committee contributions.

"I'm not taking political action committee money. We've got some people here who are," Hart said.

"That's pretty good populist rhetoric, Gary, but it's beside the point," said Dukakis.

Babbitt told Hart, "I think you ought to go back and find a real revenue source."

However, the first part of the debate contained no direct reference to the recent allegations of improprieties in the financing of Hart's presidential campaigns.

Gephardt's surge in the polls has come largely on the heels of a new television advertising campaign in Iowa in which he attacks the political and business "establishment," and he used Saturday's debate to make that point.

Gephardt attacked "the kind of concentration in the food industry that we see today."

Babbitt said he would move to target farm subsidy programs so only small and medium-sized farmers would benefit.

"You get corporate agribusiness out of the program," Babbitt said. "I'm going to starve the barracudas and get back to family farmers."

Saturday's debate was sponsored by a coalition of mainly liberal farm groups, and was broadcast across Iowa on public television. It was considered important because it comes only two weeks before the Feb. 8 caucuses, and many activists are either uncommitted or are willing to change their minds.

Justice Department Applauds Independent Counsel Ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department welcomed a court decision striking down judicial appointment of independent counsels, while legal scholars and congressmen disagreed over how the ruling would stand up in future court tests.

A panel of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Friday ruled 2-1 that court appointment of special prosecutors violated the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers among the executive, judicial and legislative branches of government.

The Justice Department, which had urged the court to overturn the law's constitutionality, said the ruling reaffirms its argument.

The decision shows "the wisdom of the department's independent efforts to establish a constitutional mechanism through which allegations of misconduct by government officials can be investigated," said Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns.

But Rep. John Conyers Jr., the chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on criminal justice said the ruling would not survive an appeal, either to the full 11-member appeals court or directly to the Supreme Court.

"The decision by the court today is a blow for accountability and the rule of law," said Conyers, D-Mich.

"It is also unlikely to be upheld: either the court will review the case again en banc where there is a majority that views the statute constitutional, or the Supreme Court will review the constitutionality where I believe it will be upheld," Conyers said.

But Daniel D. Polsby, professor at Northwestern University School of Law, said the decision is "a blow in favor of the separation of powers and the constitutional theme left to us. The decision is long overdue, and I predict the Supreme Court will agree and uphold the constitutionality of the special prosecutor law."

The decision erased the legal authority of independent counsel Alexia Morrison to investigate allegations that former Assistant Attorney General Theodore Olson had given false congressional testimony to a House subcommittee in 1983.

Ms. Morrison was reported traveling and unavilable for comment about the ruling or a likely appeal of it.

Olson's lawyer, Thomas Martin, praised the appeals panel's ruling.

"We are gratified with the court's decision and particularly with its sensitivity to the protections which the Constitution affords to individual rights," Martin said.

Independent counsels James McKay, who is prosecuting former presidential aide Lyn C. Nofziger, and Lawrence Walsh, who is investigating the Iran-Contra affair, said they disagreed with the appeals court's decision but said that their operations would not be hampered because they also hold Justice Department appointments.

"Because of the attorney general's parallel appointment, we do not believe this ruling will affect the continuity of our investigation," Walsh said in a statement. "We continue to believe that the independent counsel statute is constitutional and we shall support a (Supreme Court appeal) if one is filed."

Demonstrators Call For End To Abortions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Taylor said she traveled from Ohio to a rally here marking the 15th anniversary of the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion because she had to do all she could to protect "these kids who can't defend themselves."

"If the government can't protect the rights of its most innocent citizens, I don't think anyone can feel secure," said Ms. Taylor of Columbus. "If we don't protest, who is going to protect these kids who can't defend themselves?"

Ms. Taylor joined an estimated 50,000 people who on Friday cheered President Reagan's declaration that all human life is sacred, then marched through Washington to the Supreme Court building to dramatize their call for an end to abortions.

The demonstrators carried various banners and signs, including one that proclaimed "if abortions don't stop, our future will." One woman carried a toy dinosaur on her back with the sign "make abortion extinct."

At the court, spokeswoman Toni House said 35 demonstrators were arrested after crossing a police line at the edge of the building's sprawling plaza. They were arrested as they prayed, and some had to be carried off when they refused to walk with the police who arrested them.

One young man was wrestled to the ground while scuffling with officers of the Supreme Court and District of Columbia police forces.

The march was the latest in a series of annual demonstrations that began in Washington on the first anniversary of the court's Jan. 22, 1973, decision in the case of Roe vs. Wade. Tim Foote, a U.S. Park Police officer, estimated the crowd Friday at 50,000, a figure that march leaders said they would not challenge.

Leaders of this year's demonstration said they will focus on the November elections, working for candidates who would follow Reagan's lead in opposing abortions.

Reagan and other speakers promised to fight to end federal financing of abortions.

"America was founded on a moral proposition that human life, all human life, is sacred," Reagan said in a telephone hookup to the rally.

Helms Steps Up INF Treaty Fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms threw more ammunition into his battle against the intermediate-range nuclear forces treaty Saturday: a 180-page memorandum designed to buttress his view the pact would endanger the United States.

The North Carolina Republican also said he sent evidence of Soviet cheating on the proposed pact to the CIA and the National Security Agency. He asked those agencies to judge the accuracy of the data before ratification hearings open before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Monday.

In a letter released by his staff, Helms said he would ask committee chairman Claiborne Pell to hold urgent secret hearings with CIA Director William Webster and NSA chief William Odom as witnesses if the two officials say the cheating evidence is valid.

Saturday's statements were the latest in a series of public announcements designed by Helms to highlight objections he and other critics of the intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) treaty are raising.

The aim is to win the 34 Senate votes needed to kill ratification or the 51 votes necessary to pass amendments that would require the Reagan administration to re-negotiate sections of the treaty with the Soviets.

Earlier in the week, Helms, the ranking Republican on the Foreign Relations Committee, asserted the treaty is meaningless because it lets each side keep the nuclear weapons after they are removed from the 2,600 missiles to be destroyed.

After 18 Years, Nuke Power Plant Begins Operations

BY JIM IRWIN
Associated Press Writer

MONROE, Mich. (AP) — The Fermi II nuclear power plant went into commercial operation Saturday 18 years after construction began, clearing the way for Detroit Edison Co. to begin charging its customers for the $4.5 billion plant.

The generating plant went into commercial operation at 10 a.m. Saturday after completing a 100-hour, non-stop test at better than 90 percent of its capacity, said Detroit Edison spokesman Robert Vergiels.

He said Fermi II was running at about 94 percent of capacity, generating 1,024 megawatts of electricity, when it passed the end of the test, which started Tuesday.

Edison Chairman Walter J. McCarthy Jr. said at a news conference that Fermi II, which was estimated to cost $229 million when it was announced in 1968, heralded a rebirth of the U.S. nuclear power industry.

He said environmental concerns and the need to replace coal-burning generating plants by the end of the century will make nuclear power attractive for decades.

"In 2050, it's virtually going to be all nuclear," McCarthy said. "Nuclear power operates in a safe, low pollution way.

"Fermi II is safe. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has clearly concluded that ... the day-to-day operators are sure of that," he said.

The cost of the plant, about 40 miles south of Detroit on the shore of Lake Erie, was more than $4 billion over budget. The Michigan Public Service Commission ruled that when the plant completed the 100-hour test, Detroit Edison could begin charging its customers for the electricity the plant produced and $3 billion of its cost.

Construction began in November 1970, but work was halted four years later when the Arab oil embargo severely depressed the automobile-dependent Detroit-area economy, McCarthy said. Construction resumed in February 1977, but the plant did not generate electricity until September 1986.

Fermi was licensed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in July 1985. Final testing was supposed to have taken only six months but it took 2½ years. During that time the plant automatically shut down 10 times and it was shut down manually 20 times for technical reasons.

Edison's financial problems, attributed to rising fuel prices, inflation and slack electrical sales, delayed construction for much of the 1970s. Construction was halted from 1974 into 1977 while Edison sought partners to help pay for the plant. Two other Michigan utilities now own 20 percent.

The last commercial nuclear power reactor to go into service in the United States prior to Fermi II was the Beaver Valley II plant in Shippingport, Pa. It began production on Nov. 17, 1987, said Heather McKeage, a research assistant for the U.S. Council for Energy Awareness in Washington.

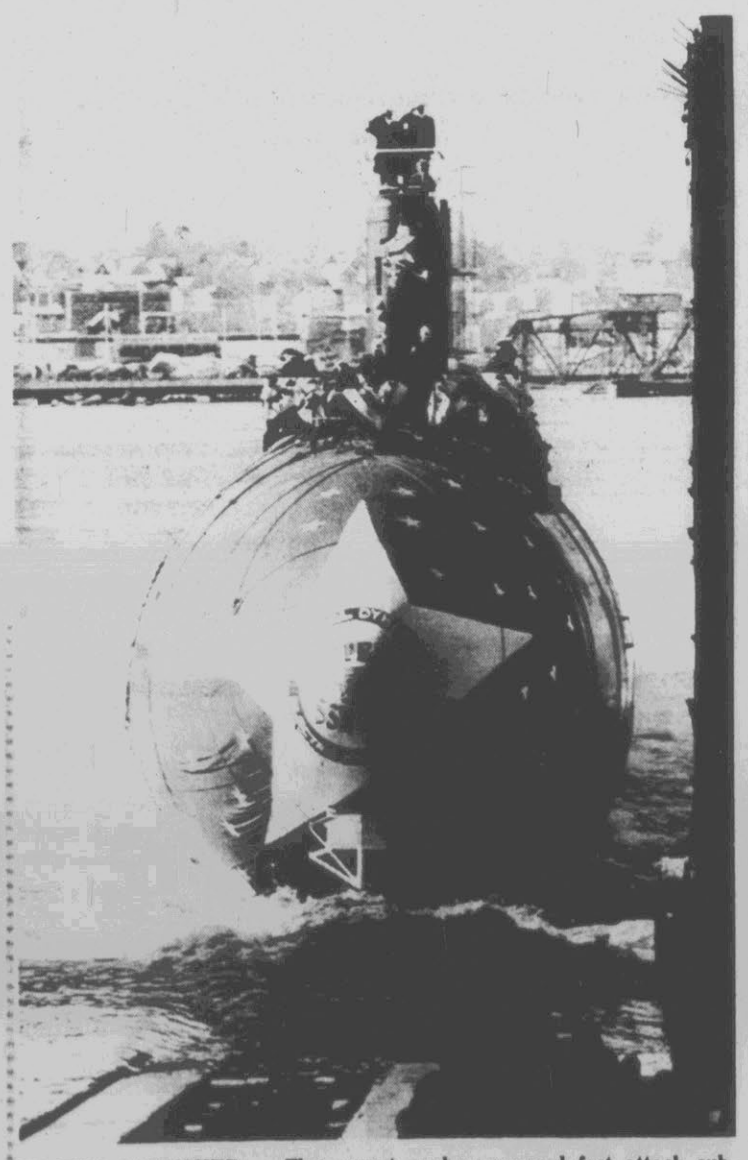

Edison's residential rates are among the lowest in the region, due mostly to the company's large industrial customers.

Officials have said the average Detroit Edison residential customer's bill will increase about $1.10 a month while the company recovers the construction costs.

Company officials said the increase revenue will result in about $400 million being available to Detroit Edison by 1993. That will cover the costs of the plant through 1984.

Detroit Edison has filed a request to the PSC to recoup costs beyond that date, but the commission has yet to rule.

Opponents, including state Attorney General Frank Kelley, have argued that some of the plant's increased costs have been caused by poor management and that consumers should not have to pay for it.

TRAIN WRECK — Los Angeles County firefighters extinguish flames from the still-smouldering remains of two Santa Fe locomotives that collided, exploded and burned in a Pico Rivera, Calif., neighborhood late Friday night. One railroad employee was killed, two injured, and a firefighter was hurt when one freight train rear-ended another in the community located 12 miles east of downtown Los Angeles. (AP Laserphoto)

Railroad Worker Killed In Fiery Train Collision

By LOUINN LOTA
Associated Press Writer

PICO RIVERA, Calif. (AP) — A freight train that passed a malfunctioning signal crashed into a parked train, killing a crew member and igniting a fire that consumed a church and a store, a railroad official said Saturday.

A signal about a mile away from the crash gave a green go-ahead light to the 72-car freight train, which slammed into a parked 67-car freight train Friday night, said Thomas F. Buckley, a Santa Fe Railroad spokesman. It was traveling 40-45 mph, he said.

Diesel fuel tanks on the locomotives erupted in a fireball that consumed a delicatessen and small, wooden church.

Damage to the train equipment was estimated at $2 million, while the burned structures in this Los Angeles suburb were worth about $175,000 each.

"It looks very clear at this point that it was not the fault of the crew of the locomotive," Buckley said. "The best we can determine is there was some fault of the circuitry."

The signals are operated by a dispatcher in San Bernardino, Buckley said.

John Riley, administrator of the Federal Railroad Administration in Washington, D.C., said the investigation was focusing on the possibility that a "recently modified signal system may have been miswired, or malfunctioned for some other reason."

The railroad was instructed not to continue using the signal system in any area where the modifications had been performed pending federal inspections, Riley said.

Houses, shops and apartment buildings on both sides of the track were evacuated for five hours as flames were doused and bulldozers moved charred locomotives off the tracks. Smoke lingered above the cars for more than 12 hours.

The track also is used by Amtrak passenger trains, and officials estimated it would be midafternoon before Amtrak trains could start running on the line. Santa Fe freight trains were rerouted.

Six locomotives and two freight cars derailed from the longer train, and two cars from the stopped train careened off the track and landed in the back yard of the delicatessen.

The moving train, about a mile long, had seven crew members aboard but the three riding the lead engine were the only ones in danger, said Buckley.

The trainmaster-road foreman was found dead at the scene, while the engineer and a brakeman were treated for minor injuries, Buckley said.

All three jumped from the train after emergency brakes were applied, he said.

Md. Police Investigate Slaying Of Five People

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Police searched Saturday for three men they believe killed five people in a suburban Washington, D.C., neighborhood notorious for drug trafficking.

"They are definitely drug related," Prince George's County Police Officer Carol Landrum said of the killings Friday in the Village in the Woods apartment complex. "The investigation has turned up evidence that makes it conclusive. That's all we're saying."

Landrum said police still were trying late Saturday to determine the identities of the victims, who ranged in age from 18 to 32.

A woman who survived the shootings was in serious condition at Prince George's Hospital Center with head and neck wounds, said Ann Basile, hospital spokeswoman.

The woman told police about the suspects, but she would not reveal her own name to officers, Landrum said.

"She's not cooperating. We don't know who she is," said Landrum.

Police said they found the bodies of four men and one woman lying on the floor of various rooms inside an apartment. All five had been shot.

Landrum denied earlier reports that the killings were "execution-style" and that the victims all were shot in the back of the head. She said the five appeared to have died in a flurry of gunfire.

Police said the area where the slayings took place is notorious for drug trafficking. People who live in the neighborhood agree.

"There's always been drugs here, but it has been accelerating the last five years," said Mabel Hill, who has lived in the apartment complex for 10 years.

"When I go out at night, I always walk very fast and look around, and I don't stop to talk to anyone," said Hill, whose unit is next to the building in which the killings took place. "There are usually groups of men standing around, selling (drugs)."

The mass slayings came just one day after Prince George's County Executive Parris Glendening announced a 10-point campaign to step up the war on drugs. The neighborhood where the killings occurred has been targeted by Glendening's task force for stepped up enforcement, said Landrum.

Earlier Friday, authorities conducted a major raid at 13 Prince George's locations, two sites in Winston-Salem, N.C., and an Annapolis residence. The raids resulted in 14 arrests and the seizure of three homes, 10 automobiles, and $300,000 worth of cash and drugs.

Investigations revealed that nearly 40 percent of Prince George's County's record-setting 96 homicides last year were drug-related.

Man Dies In Opera Mishap

NEW YORK (AP) — A man fell to his death from the top balcony of the Metropolitan Opera House on Saturday during an intermission in a performance of Verdi's "Macbeth," authorities said.

The man had been in the upper level, known as the family circle, and landed on the floor in the orchestra section of the Lincoln Center opera house, said Johanna Fiedler, a spokeswoman for the Metropolitan Opera.

The unidentified man was dead when officers arrived, said police spokesman Sgt. Norris Hollomon. It was not known if the man fell or jumped, Hollomon said.

The seats where the man landed were empty and no other injuries were reported, Ms. Fiedler said.

Diana Fanizza, of New York, said she had been outside the hall for the intermission and was returning when she heard someone scream.

"It was very, very frightening, I got very shook up," she said.

The incident occurred about 3:30 p.m. during the second intermission of the opera. The remainder of the performance was canceled.

Supremacists Demonstrate

CUMMING, Ga. (AP) — More than 100 white supremacists, some of them wearing Ku Klux Klan robes, staged a 2½-hour march and rally Saturday in front of the courthouse of virtually all-white Forsyth County.

The demonstration concluded without incident, authorities said, although a brief confrontation occurred at the beginning of the rally when organizer Richard Barrett, a Mississippi segregationist, told demonstrators to block a street next to the courthouse.

Police had refused to block the street, ordering the 130 demonstrators to remain within a barricaded area.

When about a dozen demonstrators attempted to block the street, they were met by Cumming Police Chief Wayne Lindsey and several city, county and state law enforcement officers who herded them behind the barricades.

Afterward, about 30 law enforcement officers formed a line further separating the demonstrators from the street.

The march, sponsored by the Forsyth County Defense League, was organized in response to a civil rights demonstration in the county seven days earlier, as well as two marches last year. The white supremacists had vowed since last year to stage their own rally.

Thirty-six demonstrators wore KKK robes and others wore KKK fatigues.

Gov. Won't Let NAACP Leader Take Down Flag

By KENDAL WEAVER
Associated Press Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — The state president of the NAACP will not be allowed to pull down the Confederate battle flag from atop the dome of the Alabama Capitol, Gov. Guy Hunt said Saturday.

Hunt, in his weekly radio address, acknowledged that the flag stirs widely divergent emotions in many blacks and whites but said it will not be removed unless the Legislature authorizes such action.

"I appeal to the leaders across this state to lower their voices and lower the rhetoric and let's work together," Hunt said in his radio speech.

State Rep. Thomas Reed, a black Democrat from Tuskegee, promised to rip the flag from atop the Capitol if Hunt, the state's first Republican governor this century, doesn't remove it before the Legislature convenes Feb. 2.

He said the flag is a symbol of slavery and black oppression.

Reed made the vow as part of a campaign by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to remove Confederate flags that are displayed separately or as part of the design of state flags atop statehouses in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina.

Hunt noted that the Capitol is undergoing renovation and is surrounded by a chain-link fence, with locked gates, and said Reed could be barred entry. Reed said later that he would meet with the governor Tuesday and would withhold any further comment until then.

The flag flying atop Alabama's Capitol — below the American and state flags — is the Confederate battle flag, a standard used in the Confederacy's military campaigns during the Civil War. The first official flag of the Confederacy, known as the "Stars and Bars," flies across the street from the Capitol at the first White House of the Confederacy.

Local historians say the Rebel battle flag was raised atop the Capitol either in the 1961 Civil War centennial or shortly after former Gov. George C. Wallace first took office in 1963 with the motto "segregation forever." They say it generally was not flown atop the Capitol previously this century.

"To some, the Confederate battle flag that flies over the state Capitol represents slavery and oppression," Hunt said. "To others, it brings to mind the thousands of young men who gave their lives in that terrible War Between the States more than 120 years ago."

"Alabama is the birthplace of the Confederacy and the civil rights movement, and many believe that the flag should remain a part of history and stay at the Capitol ... which is a registered historic landmark."

"I believe the flag is properly displayed on a historic landmark like the Capitol," the governor said. "Others disagree and that's fine. But ultimately, the will of the people must be the deciding factor in this case. If the people of Alabama want the flag removed, they will make that clear to their legislators."

Reed's vow to rip down the flag and negative comments he made about Wallace have all but dominated talk around the Statehouse in anticipation of the opening of the 1988 regular legislative session.

In a Martin Luther King holiday speech, Reed said God left Wallace to suffer in pain as a message to whites about his segregationist past. The former four-term governor was paralyzed in the legs when shot by a would-be assassin in his 1972 presidential campaign.

Reed's comment was denounced by Hunt and other white leaders as well as some but not all black leaders.

Howard Beach Defendant Gets 10 To 30 Years

By PETER ALAN HARPER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A judge who imposed the stiffest sentences possible on a white teen-ager for chasing a black man to his death says the Howard Beach defendant "shows no remorse."

Jon Lester, 18, was the first of three convicted young white men to be sentenced in the assault on three black men in the Queens neighborhood in 1986. Lester listened impassively Friday as state Supreme Court Justice Thomas Demakos, the trial judge, delivered a stern lecture on racism before sentencing him to prison for a total of 10 to 30 years.

"Make no mistake. ... There are no ifs, ands or buts about it: This was racial violence," Demakos said.

Demakos accused residents of predominately white Howard Beach of denying that the attack was racially motivated, citing 1,500 letters he had received asking for leniency.

Lester "shows no remorse, no suggestion of guilt," Demakos said.

The three youths convicted were among a dozen who allegedly confronted three black men outside a pizza parlor on Dec. 20, 1986, and began taunting them.

Michael Griffith, 23, was hit by a car and killed after being chased onto a highway. Another black man, Cedric Sandiford, 37, was attacked with a baseball bat.

"I'll be acquitted on appeal," Lester said as he was escorted out of court, drawing applause from several rows of supporters.

Lester's mother, Jean, burst into tears and put her face in her hands after the sentencing.

Lester's attorney, Bryan Levinson, said an appeal would be filed immediately. He said the sentences were too harsh because "this was a reckless act, not an intentional act."

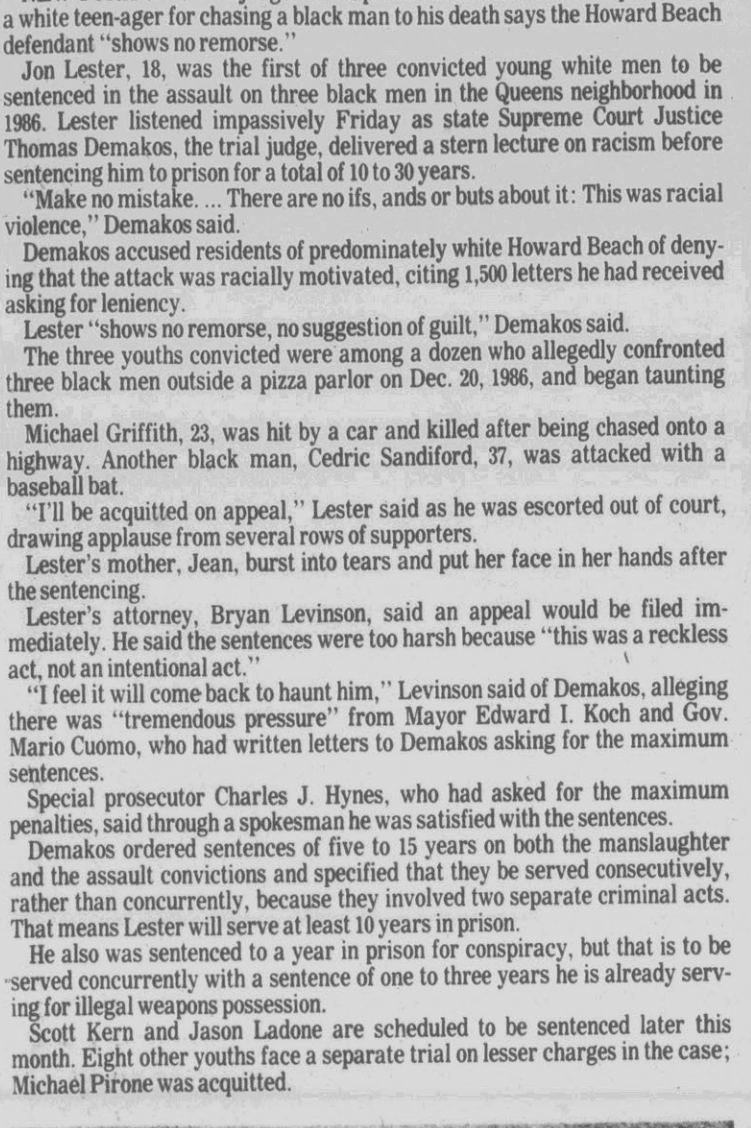

"I feel it will come back to haunt him," Levinson said of Demakos, alleging there was "tremendous pressure" from Mayor Edward I. Koch and Gov. Mario Cuomo, who had written letters to Demakos asking for the maximum sentences.

Special prosecutor Charles J. Hynes, who had asked for the maximum penalties, said through a spokesman he was satisfied with the sentences.

Demakos ordered sentences of five to 15 years on both the manslaughter and the assault convictions and specified that they be served consecutively, rather than concurrently, because they involved two separate criminal acts. That means Lester will serve at least 10 years in prison.

He also was sentenced to a year in prison for conspiracy, but that is to be served concurrently with a sentence of one to three years he is already serving for illegal weapons possession.

Scott Kern and Jason Ladone are scheduled to be sentenced later this month. Eight other youths face a separate trial on lesser charges in the case; Michael Pirone was acquitted.

LESTER SENTENCED — Jon Lester, 18, sits in a New York courtroom as Judge Thomas Demakos sentences him to 10 to 30 years for manslaughter and assault in the Howard Beach case. Lester is the first of three persons to be sentenced for the December 1986 assault in which a black man was chased to his death on a highway to Howard Beach in Queens, New York. (AP Laserphoto)

Prank Leads To Transfers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The city's fire chief transferred all 28 firefighters from one firehouse after no one confessed to pouring glue in the office lock of a black fire inspector.

The order Friday by Acting Fire Chief Mike Farrell came a week after Fire Chief Edward Phipps resigned amid reports of continuing racial problems throughout the department.

Phipps resigned in the wake of U.S. District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel's criticism of the department as "out of control" and a "fraternity."

"The message is that we want everybody in the firehouse to get along," said Assistant Chief James Olson, a spokesman for Farrell. "We want peace and harmony and positive relationships."

Fire Inspector Early Davis, 41, who is black, filed a harassment complaint Monday after discovering the keyhole of his office door in a Marina district firehouse jammed with hardened plastic.

An attorney for the Black Firefighters Association said the lock-jamming appeared to be a "retaliatory measure" for Patel's court orders and Phipps' resignation.

Patel's court monitor is investigating Davis' complaint.

Loose Ends Must Be Tied Before Shuttle Flies

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — In the two years since the Challenger tragedy, space shuttle management, hardware and safety have been overhauled, but much remains to be done before Americans will again orbit the Earth.

"The shuttle will fly only when we're ready and it's safe to fly," said James C. Fletcher, the space agency's administrator.

Officials want to launch the shuttle Discovery next August and hope to set a target date soon. But other dates have come and gone. First was Feb. 18, then June 2, both erased by problems.

The pacing item is redesign of the solid fuel booster rocket blamed for the explosion of Challenger on a frigid Jan. 28, 1986. Seven crew members, including NASA's first "citizen in space," New Hampshire schoolteacher Christa McAuliffe, died in the accident 73 seconds after liftoff.

The Rogers Commission that investigated the disaster for President Reagan said the direct cause was a leak at a joint between segments of one of Challenger's two booster rockets. Superheated gases and flame shot past two synthetic rubber O-rings and touched off the explosion of the huge external fuel tank.

The commission report said the cold weather, 36 degrees at the 11:38 a.m. liftoff, contrbuted to the accident by robbing the O-rings of their resiliency, preventing them from sealing the joint properly. Some engineers had argued against launching in the cold, but their concerns never reached top management.

The report found troubling lapses in judgment, expertise, communications and management within the space agency. It said some NASA managers had feared for years that trouble lurked in the rockets; documents showed prior instances where soot was found on recovered boosters, indicating they had leaked in their two minutes of flight.

It called Challenger's explosion "an accident rooted in history" and said agency officials had accepted growing risk "because they got away with it the last time."

The Reagan administration and NASA moved quickly. Within months the agency had a new administrator and other top officials, the directors of three major field centers left and all those involved in the decision to launch were replaced. There were wholesale resignations and duty changes at Alabama's Marshall Space Flight Center, which oversees the booster rocket contract, and at Morton Thiokol Inc. in Utah, which builds the boosters. The agency established a new safety and quality control office.

Engineers at Marshall and Morton Thiokol redesigned the engine joint, adding a third O-ring, better insulation, a heater and a capture lip to prevent a gap opening under the pressure of ignition.

All the redesign, development, checking, testing and resultant paperwork, however, forced NASA to abandon its February launch target and set what was considered the more realistic date of June 2, 1988.

Following several successful minor tests, the first all-out, two-minute firing of a redesigned booster was conducted in Utah last August. The new joint passed flawlessly. Officials spoke confidently of Discovery's June launch.

In a second full-scale test Dec. 23, the joints were perfect again. But when engineers disassembled the booster for closer inspection, they found something ominous. A heat protection ring on the rocket nozzle had shattered. It broke a second or two after the firing and would not have affected an actual flight, officials said. But the discovery pushed back the launch, with shuttle director Rear Adm. Richard Truly estimating a 10-week delay.

Shuttle managers decided to shift to a backup ring tested in the August firing. This was an improved version of a ring that had protected nozzles on the 24 shuttle flights preceding the Challenger accident.

NASA wants to test-fire rockets with that design two or three more times before resuming flights. Astronaut Daniel Brandenstein, chief of the astronauts at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, says three tests should be mandatory.

The first is scheduled in March, the second in May and a third could be held in June or July.

NASA, already confident in the design, is outfitting Discovery's boosters with that protective ring. To wait until the last test would mean an additional four or five months' delay in the launch.

If the design should fail, there could be a very long delay while a new design was developed and tested.

"We do have a lot of testing to do before flight," Truly said. "And we could have unforeseen problems, and we'll deal with those. It's just a matter of getting through successfully these next motor firings, processing the orbiter and getting ready to fly."

Discovery is being readied at the Kennedy Space Center. Its three main engines have been test-fired and installed, its structure has been beefed up, brakes and landing gear have been improved and a blow-out escape hatch has been added to the crew cabin.

The escape hatch would not help in a Challenger-like accident. It would be useful only in the low-altitude gliding flight of a shuttle landing approach when the astronauts could parachute out.

Once Discovery is mated with its solid fuel rockets, it will be rolled out and bolted to the launch pad for a countdown test and a 20-second firing of its three main engines. That will occur 6-8 weeks before a scheduled launch date.

When Discovery does fly, it will carry a crew of five veteran shuttle astronauts on a four-day mission to deploy a Tracking and Data Relay Satellite to transmit radio messages between the ground and several orbiting spacecraft, including the shuttle. A similar satellite was destroyed aboard Challenger.

An August launch would mean 30 months had passed since the accident — the longest a manned space program has been grounded after a fatal accident. The 1967 Apollo 1 launch pad fire that killed three astronauts halted the moon program for 22 months. After the in-flight deaths of cosmonauts in 1967 and 1971, the Soviet program shut down for 18 months and 27 months, respectively.

What is taking so long?

Technical problems have taken their toll, and Forrest S. McCartney, director of the Kennedy Space Center, offers this explanation:

"After the Challenger, everyone was encouraged to go back and look at everything they could think of and and see what could be done to reduce the risk. They did a very thorough and comprehensive job of that. The stigma of another Challenger is one that everyone is very conscious of. "So the reason it's taking us so long to get back to flying again is that we're doing everything we know to reduce risk to the minimum. We've initiated more checks and balances than we've ever had before."

McCartney said he emphasizes to workers that quality and safety have top priority and this has created considerable paperwork, or as he calls it, flight documentation.

"We have people here, technicians who have been doing this work for years, and doing it very successfully, who are questioning why we have instituted so many additional checks and balances ... particularly since shuttle processing was not responsible for the Challenger accident," McCartney said.

"The answer is that we think we can reduce risks by doing that."

NASA had planned to launch all three remaining shuttles on missions this year, with Atlantis and Columbia to follow Discovery to the pad. But McCartney said the latest launch delay and a shortage of skilled workers make three launches in 1988 doubtful.

He said the shortage of 200 NASA and 600 contract engineers, safety, quality control and other personnel is the result of a government hiring freeze instituted during the budget crunch late last year.

To help NASA meet a shuttle launch rate projected to reach 12 a year by the early 1990s, President Reagan has authorized building a fourth shuttle to replace Challenger.

When the shuttle does fly again, it will have a different cargo mix. Earlier manifests were crowded with communications satellites and other payloads for commercial customers. But after Challenger, President Reagan ordered NASA out of the commercial business and said private industry should be encouraged to step in.

As a result, rocket builders such as Martin Marietta, McDonnell Douglas and General Dynamics are offering unmanned launch services.

Before the accident, 41 percent of shuttle flights projected over the next five years were to have been military in nature. Many of those military payloads are being shifted to unmanned rockets. Even NASA has realized it was foolish to rely solely on the shuttle and also plans to use some expendable boosters.

The shuttle will still have plenty of work, with several scientific and military satellites on the cargo manifest, along with a few commercial packages designed specifically for the shuttle before Challenger. In the 1990s, the shuttle will be used to assemble and service NASA's manned space station.

"There are some exciting times ahead, once we get that first flight under our belt," McCartney said.

Rare Deformity

MIAMI (AP) — A baby boy was born with one enlarged head and two separate faces in an extremely rare variant of Siamese twins, a doctor caring for the infant said.

The boy has one brain, but there is little brain tissue and no brain stem, said Dr. Charles Bauer, associate director of neonatology at Jackson Memorial Hospital, where the baby was born Friday.

"It's a very unusual and rare phenomenon," he said Saturday.

The baby has an unusually large head and two faces looking in different directions. He has two sets of eyes, two noses and two mouths, Bauer said.

Hospital officials would not identify the baby but said he was breathing on his own and was being evaluated for treatment.

The baby's body is normal except that it has meningomyelocele, or open spine, a condition similar to spina bifida. The condition is considered life-threatening, Bauer said.

If the baby survives, he likely would remain in a vegetative state, Bauer said.

In most Siamese twins, the fertilized egg splits most of the way, Bauer said. In this case, the split was less complete.

Hospital officials said the mother has three other children, all normal.

Correspondent Dead

CHICAGO (AP) — Nizar Jwaideh, an Associated Press foreign correspondent who went on to work as an editor for the Chicago Sun-Times and U.S. News & World Report, has died of cancer. He was 55.

Jawideh began his career as a foreign correspondent with the AP in 1953, went to work for the Sun-Times in 1960, and later returned to become the newspaper's national-foreign editor in 1973.

Scientists Could Lose Jobs Over Accord Rift

By STEVEN L. HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Japan's reluctance to open its laboratories to American researchers could lead to the expulsion of Japanese scientists from federal laboratories in the United States, a U.S. senator says.

A U.S.-Japanese accord on science and technology is set to expire Jan. 31, and a major barrier to its renewal is that Tokyo is hesitant to have more American scientists in its research centers, Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., said Friday.

"It's partly cultural," said Rockefeller, who just returned from Japan. "They have never been in a position of opening up their country in large ways."

If there is no agreement by the end of the month, the White House is considering retaliating with a little-known 1986 statute authored by Rockefeller and Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan. It allows the directors of federal laboratories to ban foreign scientists from the premises if the other nation doesn't reciprocate, a U.S. official involved in the talks said.

U.S. negotiators say they are pushing for protection of defense-related technology and assurances that Japan won't unfairly commercialize jointly developed technology, while Japan wants to rubber stamp the vague agreement signed in 1980.

"I'm really pleased that they're seeing that ... we have to show them we mean it," Rockefeller said. "Young people learning technology is tomorrow's trade statistics. It's not esoteric research. It's absolutely vital."

There are 13,000 Japanese doing research in the United States in government and university laboratories, Rockefeller said. Only about 500 American scientists are working in Japan.

Rockefeller said he discussed the disparity last week in Tokyo with Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita.

"He said he was concerned but you can't necessarily bank on that," Rockefeller said.

The president's science adviser, Bill Graham, "feels very strongly about this," but State Department officials "have been a bit softer," because they see it as "just part of the total trade picture," Rockefeller said.

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — Tunisia and Egypt announced immediate resumption of diplomatic relations Saturday after a break of almost nine years.

The announcement came in a statement issued simultaneously in Cairo and in Tunisia's capital Tunis as a special session of foreign ministers from the 21-nation Arab League met here to discuss the Palestinian problem in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The joint statement said the resumption was prompted by the two nations' common destiny "as well as the desire to consolidate (relations) further for the benefit of the two countries and the Arab nation."

Tunisia became the 10th Arab state to restore relations with Egypt since an Arab summit in Amman last November gave Arab League members the green light to do so.

The Tunisian move left only five of the league's 22 members without diplomatic ties to Cairo — Syria, Libya, Algeria, Lebanon and South Yemen.

Seventeen Arab states and the Palestine Liberation Organization severed relations and suspended Egypt's Arab League membership in 1979 to protest Cairo's peace treaty with Israel signed in March of that year. At the same time, the league moved its headquarters from the Egyptian capital to Tunis.

Several Arab states did not break ties.

In Tunis, Arab League Secretary-General Chedli Klibi called Saturday on the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council to find a solution to the Palestinian problem.

He also described Palestinians in the occupied territories as "heroes who have roused the world's esteem and admiration."

At lease 38 Palestinians have been killed since a wave of violence hit the territories last month.

Klibi said the five permanent members of the Security Council — the United States, the Soviet Union, China, Britain and France — should express their determination to carry out U.N. resolutions aimed at bringing about peace in the Middle East and resolving the status of the Palestinians.

The meeting of the foreign ministers and representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization is scheduled to end Sunday.

The Palestinians are expected to ask Egypt to break relations with the Jewish state. Egypt has said it can accomplish more for the Arabs by maintaining ties.

Arab League sources said Libya intended to announce a pledge of $150 million to help Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Ecuador Candidates Targets Of Assassination Attempts

By FERNANDO LARENAS

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — Assailants shot and threw stones at one presidential candidate and sent a rockslide against another in campaign violence before the Jan. 31 election.

Family members said Abdala Bucaram, a presidential candidate of the populist Roldosista party, was shot at in a Guayaquil slum on Friday.

They said Bucaram, 35, and his sister, Elsa, 26, a candidate for Guayaquil mayor of the Roldosista Party, were pelted with rocks and fired on as Elsa campaigned in the port city 165 miles southwest of Quito, the capital.

Bucaram is one of 10 candidates vying for the office being vacated by center-right President Leon Febres Cordero, whose four-year term expires in August.

Another brother, Gustavo, 24, shielded his relatives with his body and received more than 30 shotgun pellet wounds, relatives said. They said he was in stable condition in a Guayaquil hospital.

The charges followed reports of an attack against Sixto Duran of the governing Social Christian Party, one of the two leading presidential contenders.

Duran's running mate, Pablo Baquerizo, said "political adversaries" started a rockslide that narrowly missed Duran's motorcade as it traveled recently near the jungle town of Loja, 100 miles east of Quito.

A congressional deputy of the Democratic Left Party, Nicholas Issa, told reporters that the party's Guayaquil headquarters were strafed by machine gun fire and the windows were shot out before dawn Friday, but there were no injuries.

Polls indicate the party's presidential candidate Rodrigo Borja is the front-runner.

Another member of the Democratic Left, Empalme mayoral candidate Hitler Sambando, was shot and wounded early Saturday as he left a political rally in Empalme, 100 miles southwest of Quito, the party said in a statement. It said Sambando was recovering from minor wounds.

There had been no previous reports of serious violence in the presidential race, which has been marked by strident rhetoric from candidates who range the political spectrum from far right to communist.

None of the candidates is expected to gain the 50 percent of the vote necessary to win in the first round of balloting. The two top vote getters will square off in runoff elections on May 8.

Dissidents Released

BERLIN (AP) — Communist East German authorities allowed 37 dissidents to leave the country after they were arrested for staging a demonstration during an official rally, a West German official said Saturday.

The dissidents arrived in West Germany Friday night and early Saturday, said Heinz Doerr, director of the government refugee office in Giessen, West Germany.

They were among 42 people held after police broke up a demonstration at an officially-sanctioned rally Jan. 17 honoring Rosa Luxemberg and Karl Liebknecht, the leaders who founded the German Communist Party in 1918, Doerr said.

The dissidents unfurled several banners that quoted from writings by Luxemburg and Liebknecht, and criticized policies of East Germany's present-day Communist Party.

Church sources in East Berlin, who spoke to the The Associated Press on condition they not be identified further, said popular songwriter Stephan Krawczyk was among the dissidents believed still in jail.

East German authorities on Friday accused Krawczyk of being a Western agent, church sources said.

One dissident released by authorities Friday chose to remain in East Berlin, church sources said.

Artist groups in East Germany and West Germany on Friday demanded the immediate release of all those arrested in connection with the rally. The calls followed a similar demand by Gottfried Forck, Lutheran Bishop of Berlin-Brandenburg, in East Berlin late Thursday.

CURFEW IMPOSED — A border patrol half-truck is positioned at the entrance to Al Tur, an Arab neighborhood of Jerusalem, Saturday where a curfew was ordered. It was the first time a curfew had been imposed in east Jerusalem as a means of riot control in 20 years of occupation. (AP Laserphoto)

Protesters Rally; Curfew Imposed In E. Jerusalem

By JOCELYN NOVECK
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — Thousands of Israelis marched with torches and thousands of Arabs chanted "Israeli army get out!" in separate rallies Saturday to protest the treatment of Palestinians in the occupied territories.

Scattered protests were reported in the occupied West Bank, and in east Jerusalem the first anti-riot curfew in 20 years of occupation remained in force on an Arab neighborhood.

Palestinian reports said about 15 Arab protesters were injured from beatings or rubber bullets, and two more were wounded by army gunfire. An army spokesman denied the report.

In the northern Israeli town of Nazareth, about 30,000 Arabs from villages throughout the country gathered to protest Israeli policy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, where at least 38 Palestinians have been killed in unrest since Dec. 8.

"We want the PLO. Israeli army get out!" protesters chanted as they marched down the town's main road. "We want a Palestinian state!"

The protesters carried signs with the names of the Palestinians killed in seven weeks of violence in the occupied lands.

Hundreds of extra police stood by but did not interfere in the march and a subsequent rally.

A one-day strike by most of Israel's 750,000 Arabs last month turned violent in many areas, including Nazareth. It shocked many Israelis, who had come to view the nation's Arabs as separate from Palestinians in the territories and well-integrated into Israeli society.

In another sign of the deepening gulf between Israeli Arabs and their Jewish countrymen, an Arab legislator from the centrist Labor Party said Saturday he was leaving the party to protest the "iron fist" policy of Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin, a senior Labor leader.

"I call on all of you to join me and not vote for Labor," the deputy, Abdel Wahad Daroushe, told the crowd in Nazareth. The demonstrators, mostly young men, responded with cheers and slogans supporting the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Also addressing the crowd was a member of the Israeli anti-war group "Peace Now." The group held its own rally later Saturday in Tel Aviv, which was termed the largest Israeli protest against the 1967 occupation.

In the city's central Malchei Yisrael square, at least 20,000 Israelis carried torch lights and held banners saying: "Two states for two peoples" and "Give peace a chance."

Strains of John Lennon's "Imagine" mixed with Israeli peace songs from loudspeakers overhead.

"Are we to become South Africa, or the Soviet Union in Afghanistan?" group leader Avshalom Vilan asked the crowd. "Shamir, where are you heading?"

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir again rejected calls for a U.N.-sponsored an international peace conference. He charged that agreeing to the idea amounted to accepting a separate Palestinian state and total Israeli withdrawal from Arab lands.

Speaking on Israel radio, Shamir said the conference advocated by his coalition rival, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres of the left-leaning Labor Party, "would not contribute anything towards peace."

"What the Soviets want, what the Arabs want, is a real conference in which the fate of our area is decided," Shamir said. "For every Arab, every European who supports this idea ... a conference is identical with a Palestinian state and with the withdrawal from all territories controlled by us," Shamir said.

Israel has always opposed the creation of an independent Palestinian state as a threat to its security. Shamir's right-wing Likud bloc also opposes yielding any Arab lands captured in the 1967 Middle East war.

The White House announced Friday that Shamir had accepted an invitation to go to Washington in March for a working visit with President Reagan.

The Arab-owned Palestine Press Service reported that major protests broke out in the Al Amari refugee camp near Ramallah Saturday, and 15 Palestinians were injured by rubber bullets or beatings. The agency said three Arabs were wounded in the town of Halhoul near Hebron, one of them with a bullet wound in the head.

An army spokesman said he had received no reports of the injuries in Al Amari but that one woman was injured in Halhoul when she attacked soldiers.

Confident Manigat Feels Haiti Victory In the Bag

By ED McCULLOUGH
Associated Press Writer

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — While his rivals charge election irregularities and vote rigging in his favor, leading presidential candidate Leslie Manigat has his eye on the inauguration.

The official results of last Monday's junta-run elections weren't due until Sunday, but Manigat believes he will be sworn in Feb. 7.

"My plan is to start talking with the army" as soon as final results are publicly disclosed, Manigat said in an interview.

Then he will concentrate on putting together a staff, reviewing confidential government files and implementing "programs that will have the quickest result in reducing joblessness," he said.

By Saturday, six days after the vote, only the sketchiest tallies were available from the Electoral Council, which the military-led junta appointed to run the Jan. 17 elections for president, National Assembly and mayors.

"We've received orders to release no more partial results because people in the streets — the opposition — use them to broadcast false information," council spokesman Deronas Alexandre said.

Still, Manigat says his representatives have monitored the vote count and he is "full of optimism" that he will not only win, but garner more than half of all votes cast, thereby preventing a runoff.

"Based on what (information) we have so far, yes, I will win without a runoff," said the heavyset 57-year-old candidate.

The junta called the elections after Nov. 29 balloting organized by an independent Electoral Council was aborted by thugs who killed at least 34 people at polling places in the capital. Witnesses said government soldiers did not prevent the violence and even participated in it.

Rival candidates and Haiti's opposition, which includes popular candidates from the Nov. 29 elections who refused to run Jan. 17, also say Manigat will win.

They say he has been supported by the army, Haiti's strongest though least trusted institution. Opponents also have questioned the integrity of the still-secret vote count.

Attorney Gregoire Eugene, sociologist Hubert DeRonceray, Gerard Philippe-Auguste and Manigat had been expected to garner the most votes.

Eugene and DeRonceray charged that Manigat was "the beneficiary of a grotesque scenario in his favor," and said they may challenge the results.

The main candidates from the Nov. 29 balloting have said all along that new elections would not be fair.

"Those who took part in the election themselves have begun to realize they were duped," economist and ex-presidential candidate Marc Bazin said. "As far as I am concerned, it is not too late if they see clearly now. It's better to have them on the side of democracy."

Bazin and the other main candidates from Nov. 29 — businessman Louis Dejoie II, human rights activist Gerard Gourgue and Baptist pastor and accountant Sylvio Claude — have demanded that junta leader Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy step down, and urged foreign governments to take sanctions against his regime.

The four major candidates boycotted the Jan. 17 vote and now are demanding that the results be annulled in part because the turnout was so low — 5 percent or less, they allege.

That is not likely to happen, and foreign governments including the United States have said they will recognize whatever government emerges from the balloting.

Nevertheless, the opposition appears determined to continue struggling for democracy in the transition from the 29-year dictatorship that ended when Jean-Claude Duvalier fled to exile in France in February 1986.

But residents of the capital seem subdued, resigned and anxious to get on with their lives and put Haiti's months of bitter and often violent political turmoil behind them.

Filing Deadline Extended After Strikes, Violence

By HASAN SAEED
Associated Press Writer

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Police with metal-tipped truncheons Saturday injured at least 45 demonstrators during a protest to prevent candidates from filing for the upcoming elections.

Demonstrators damaged at least ten vehicles because their drivers did not comply with the opposition's call for a general strike, the third since filing began Wednesday.

The protesters were injured when police, wielding the truncheons, charged the crowd to prevent damage to other vehicles, witnesses said.

Forty others were arrested, said the witnesses, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

A senior police officer confirmed that police dispersed demonstrators who were damaging vehicles at several places in Dhaka. He declined to comment on injuries or arrests.

Six state-owned buses, a jeep and at least three bicycle-powered rickshaws were damaged by the demonstrators, the witnesses said.

The Election Commission announced Saturday that nominations for the March 3 elections will be accepted until Monday.

Only a few candidates have so far filed nominations for elections to 300 seats in Parliament, poll officials said. They did not give an exact figure.

The opposition's election boycott is part of the campaign against President Hussain Muhammad Ershad. Opposition parties allege the polls will be rigged to favour Ershad's Jatiya Party as they say was done during elections in 1986.

"The number of candidates submitting their nomination papers clearly shows that we have been successful in thwarting the government efforts to go ahead with the polls," said Suranjit Sengupta, an opposition leader.

Rickshaw drivers, who earn about $1 a day, have been among the hardest hit during the 21 days of strikes called by the opposition since the anti-Ershad campaign was launched Nov. 10.

According to an independent estimate, Bangladesh loses $15.5 million in decreased production every day a strike is called.

Ershad, a former army general, dissolved Parliament on Dec. 5 and ordered fresh elections in an unsuccesful bid to appease the opposition.

Ershad took power in a bloodless coup in 1982 and was elected president in elections conducted in 1986, which the opposition alleges were rigged.

Ershad suffered a defeat Thursday when two of his Cabinet ministers resigned.

Information Minister Anwar Zahid and Health Minister Salahuddin Quader Choudhury resigned in protest against Ershad's plans to hold polls without the participation of opposition parties.

The two have not quit their posts in the Jatiya Party.

Terrorists In Love

ROME (AP) — Two imprisoned former terrorists, she leftist, he right-wing, have fallen in love in a relationship that blossomed after the two were granted a Christmas furlough together, Italian news media said Saturday.

Emilia Libera and Sergio Calore might even be planning to marry, reported state television, news agencies and several newspapers.

Libera, 34, a former member of the leftist Red Brigades group, was convicted and sentenced to 14 years in prison in 1983 in connection with the December 1981, kidnapping of U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier, who was rescued.

Her sentence was reduced to seven years after she cooperated with police. Calore, 35, was sentenced in 1979 to life in prison after being convicted in the murder of a man mistaken for a lawyer who helped track down other right-wing terrorists.

In 1987, he was convicted for planning from prison the 1980 Bologna train bombing that killed 85 people.

New Philippine Defense Chief Takes Office

By CLARO CORTES
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino swore in a new defense chief and three generals to top military positions Saturday in an armed forces revamp triggered by the resignation of former Defense Minister Rafael Ileto.

Also today, unidentified gunmen shot and wounded a bodyguard of Ileto shortly after the former defense secretary was dropped off at his home, officials said.

Ileto told reporters he didn't think he was the real target of the attack, which he called a "chance ambush."

Tech. Sgt. Exequiel Zaragosa, who was alone in a security car, was shot in the thigh and was not seriously wounded, said Defense Department spokesman Ed Pangilinan.

The swearing-in immediately drew fire from opposition Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile, who said Mrs. Aquino should have waited for Congress to approve her appointment of armed forces chief Gen. Fidel V. Ramos to replace Ileto in the Cabinet position.

Under the Philippine Constitution, appointments of Cabinet members and military officers above the rank of colonel are subject to approval by a joint commission of the Senate and House.

Enrile said the swearing-in was unconstitutional.

"I am making my own list of violations of the constitution" imputed to Mrs. Aquino, Enrile told a breakfast forum. "She should not have allowed her appointees to take their oath of office."

Presidential military affairs adviser Jose Magno noted that Congress is not due to reconvene until Monday from its Christmas recess. He said Ramos and the other appointees would take up their posts in "acting capacities" until Congress ratifies their appointments.

Mrs. Aquino also administered oaths of office to Gen. Renato de Villa, who replaced Ramos, and Lt. Gen. Eduardo Ermita and Gen. Ramon Montano, who replaced de Villa in the two jobs he held.

Ermita was named the armed forces' vice chief of staff and Montano was named chief of the Philippine Constabulary. The president also promoted 21 colonels to the rank of brigadier general.

Ileto resigned Thursday, saying the 160,000-strong armed forces were too divisive to be effective against the communist insurgency and that his plans to strengthen the armed forces were ignored. He attended today's ceremonies at the presidential Malacanang Palace.

In a brief talk with reporters after the ceremonies, Ramos said his program to fight the communists will not just emphasize military action against the 24,000-member Communist New People's Army.

He said a coordinated economic, social, political and military program involving all government agencies will be needed to combat the insurgency, which is now in its 20th year. He said it will take some time before results are seen.

"I think our people are just impatient," he said. "You must remember that the Febuary revolution in 1986 took place very swiftly, but then the programs of government take time to jell. Only now perhaps we shall be seeing the fruits of the initial initiatives at reform."

The military said today that six communist rebels were killed when tribesmen backed by government troops repulsed a rebel assault in the village of Tama, 485 miles southeast of Manila on Mindanao island.

Fidel Ramos, right, as the new defense secretary, replacing Rafael Ileto who resigned last week. Earlier Mrs. Aquino presented an award to Ileto and administered oaths to new Armed Forces Chief Maj. Afghanistan City Knows War Sounds

By SCHEHEREZADE FARAMARZI
Associated Press Writer

JALALABAD, Afghanistan (AP) — The guide led a group of foreign visitors through muddy streets lined with dark shops selling fragrant Oriental spices and proudly announced, "This is the city center."

It looked more like a long forgotten village than the provincial capital of Afghanistan's eastern Nangarhar province, where about 200,000 people attended the burial of independence leader Abdul Ghaffar Khan on Friday.

Ghaffar Khan, a leader of the Pathan people who live along the Afghan-Pakistani frontier, advocated non-violent resistance to British colonial rule on the Indian subcontinent.

Najib, the leader of the Soviet-backed Afghan government, joined thousands of other mourners from neighboring Pakistan who crossed the border for the first time since the 1979 Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

During the funeral, bombs exploded near mourners in cars and buses, killing 17 people, mostly Pakistanis, and injuring as many as 40 others, said Afghan sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

But on Saturday, except for a few women concealed under a "bourge" or chador-like Islamic cloak covering the face, there were only men walking or riding bicycles on the city streets. Horses near the city center chomped on a stack of hay.

Life was back to normal, of sorts, for a country rocked by a protracted war between Soviet-backed Afghan forces and rebels backed by the United States, Pakistan and China.

A police warden standing on a small round stone platform at a junction directed the thin traffic consisting mainly of military jeeps, trucks and civilian vans. He held a sign that said "Stop" in English.

Inside the tea houses, only men, including soldiers and armed security men in plainclothes, sat eating grilled meat for breakfast.

At one point, two Russian-made tanks with young Afghan soldiers sitting on top sped by, leaving behind a cloud of dust. The diners did not even look up.

Though none of the estimated 115,000 Soviet soldiers in Afghanistan were to be seen, Afghan soldiers were always in sight — some complaining about being away from their hometowns.

The shabby stucco buildings were grimy and ill-maintained, but despite it all, Jalalabad had an atosphere of friendliness — even coziness.

As darkness fell, some foreign reporters left over from the burial of Ghaffar Khan were approached by a uniformed Afghan security officer.

"Do you have anywhere to stay tonight?" he asked.

After a lot of directing and redirecting, they wound up at a barracks-like compound run by Khad, Afghanistan's feared version of the KGB, the Soviet secret police. The officers called it Jalalabad's "guest house."

The long-awaited meal was a huge plate of rice and mutton. There was only one piece of bread and the tea came without sugar.

"Sorry, we do not have a restaurant here. There is no bread because 100,000 people have come to Jalalabad," the officer apologized.

Throughout the night, the sounds of helicopters, distant artillery and machine gun fire never stopped.

The next morning, the officers bade their guests farewell and wished them a safe journey back to Pakistan. Other soldiers came to shake hands.

They made no mention of the sounds of war. After nine years, they seemed to be used to it.

Opposition Group Blamed For Managua Disturbance

By RODOLFO GARCIA
Associated Press Writer

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Interior Ministry said Saturday an opposition group was preparing to hold an unauthorized demonstration and tear down a Sandinista banner when a mob threw rocks at the building where they were meeting.

About 30 youths yelling "People Power" hurled stones into the second floor of the headquarters of the Nicaraguan Democratic Coordinate on Friday as opposition members discussed a government promise of amnesty with members of an organization of relatives of political prisoners.

People inside the building threw rocks back onto the mob. Several people from both sides suffered minor injuries from stones and broken glass.

The families of political prisoners, the Jan. 22 Mothers' Movement, had announced a march for Friday, but canceled it after a police official told the Coordinate that the march was not authorized.

The Interior Ministry communique, published in newspapers Saturday, also said opposition members were trying to tear down a pro-government banner near the headquarters.

"This situation provoked a confrontation with rock-throwing and blows among the people meeting in the headquarters of the Democratic Coordinate and the people in the area," the communique said.

The ministry said "the action of the Sandinista police was limited to restoring public order, avoiding greater consequences."

It said that a law requires that "all public demonstrations should have prior permission from the Sandinista police."

President Daniel Ortega said in an interview aired on National Public Radio in the United States on Saturday that reports of the incident exaggerated its signficance.

Ortega lifted a 6-year-old state of emergency a week ago as part of the country's compliance with a Central American peace plan.

The amnesty for about 3,300 political prisoners, also part of the agreement, is to take effect either when a cease-fire is reached with U.S.-funded Contra rebels or when a country outside Central America agrees to receive them, the Sandinistas said.

The peace plan, signed Aug. 7 in Guatemala, also calls for other democratic reforms, cease-fires and an end to aid to insurgencies in the region.

Craft Docks With Station

MOSCOW (AP) — A cargo craft carrying food, fuel and mail docked Saturday with the Mir space station, where two cosmonauts are one month into a year-long mission, the official Soviet news agency Tass reported.

Progress 34 blasted off early Thursday and docked with the space station Saturday morning, the news agency said. Data indicated the space station was operating normally and that cosmonauts Vladimir Titov and Musa Manarov were in good health, it said.

The Soviet Union periodically sends cargo craft to the space station, which are emptied and then jetisoned.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Foundation Can Unfasten Future

The Pitt County Education Foundation has the potential to unlock the financial future for the county's schools.

The idea of a non-profit organization earmarked for fundraising and administrating endowments and donations provides flexibility and accountability in revenue-gathering. It is a means of effectively funneling community financial participation in education.

Had the foundation existed in 1986, when the confusion over a missing grant for South Greenville School unraveled, the entire mix-up could have been avoided. Under the foundation guidelines, a grant of the type the school was to receive would be required to come directly from the source to the foundation. This stipulation would have eliminated the circumstances which encouraged the impropriety.

Clearly, the value of an education foundation lies in its ability to draw money and handle it in a responsible manner. A county-wide organization encourages teamwork and unity in fundriasing.

The foundation serves as a repository and clearinghouse for endowments. Currently, it has netted $15,250 in this category. It seeks donations for school use and its board of directors awards mini-grants for specific projects in the schools. This approach eliminates much of the nickel-and-dime fundraising that wears community pockets thin. It also keeps student and faculty time devoted to education — not fundraising.

The potential impact of such an organization is limitless. In the future public funds will have a difficult time keeping pace with education needs. Vigorous particiation by the private sector is essential if a community is to meet the schools' requirements.

In Pitt County, data tells officials this trend is especially significant. Enrollment in public schools is increasing at a rate that would require a new school be built every six years. At the same time, existing facilities deteriorate and need attention. It is already difficult for tax money to address current capital outlay demands, let alone build for the future.

As the school system grows in number, it also grows in diversity — a fact which means educators must meet a continually broadening set of instructional requirements. As lawmakers snip away at budget deficits, less funding will be available for school systems. Yet the students' educational needs remain constant and can neither be sleighted nor ignored.

Clearly, financial participation from the private sector is the key to averting what can be seen as an approaching revenue crisis for education. An organization like the Pitt County Education Foundation is the perfect avenue to successfully stimulate and channel this activity.

Mental Illness: Better Handling

Those who enjoy good mental health seldom consider the alternative, but it is obvious there are people in our society who need help, and sometimes treatment, for mental illness.

The sad situation came into focus at a hearing conducted by the North Carolina Mental Health Study Commission in Greenville last week.

The impact of the comments was that that those who are chronically mentally ill are underserved by society. Speakers called on the commission to address those needs.

There were calls for better support of the Child Mental Health Plan. Better care of the chronically mentally ill and more extensive use of volunteers were advocated.

A speaker for the Alliance for the Mentally Ill said better planning for the discharge of patients from state mental hospitals is needed. A case was cited of a discharged patient being referred to the Raleigh homeless shelter for the first night out.

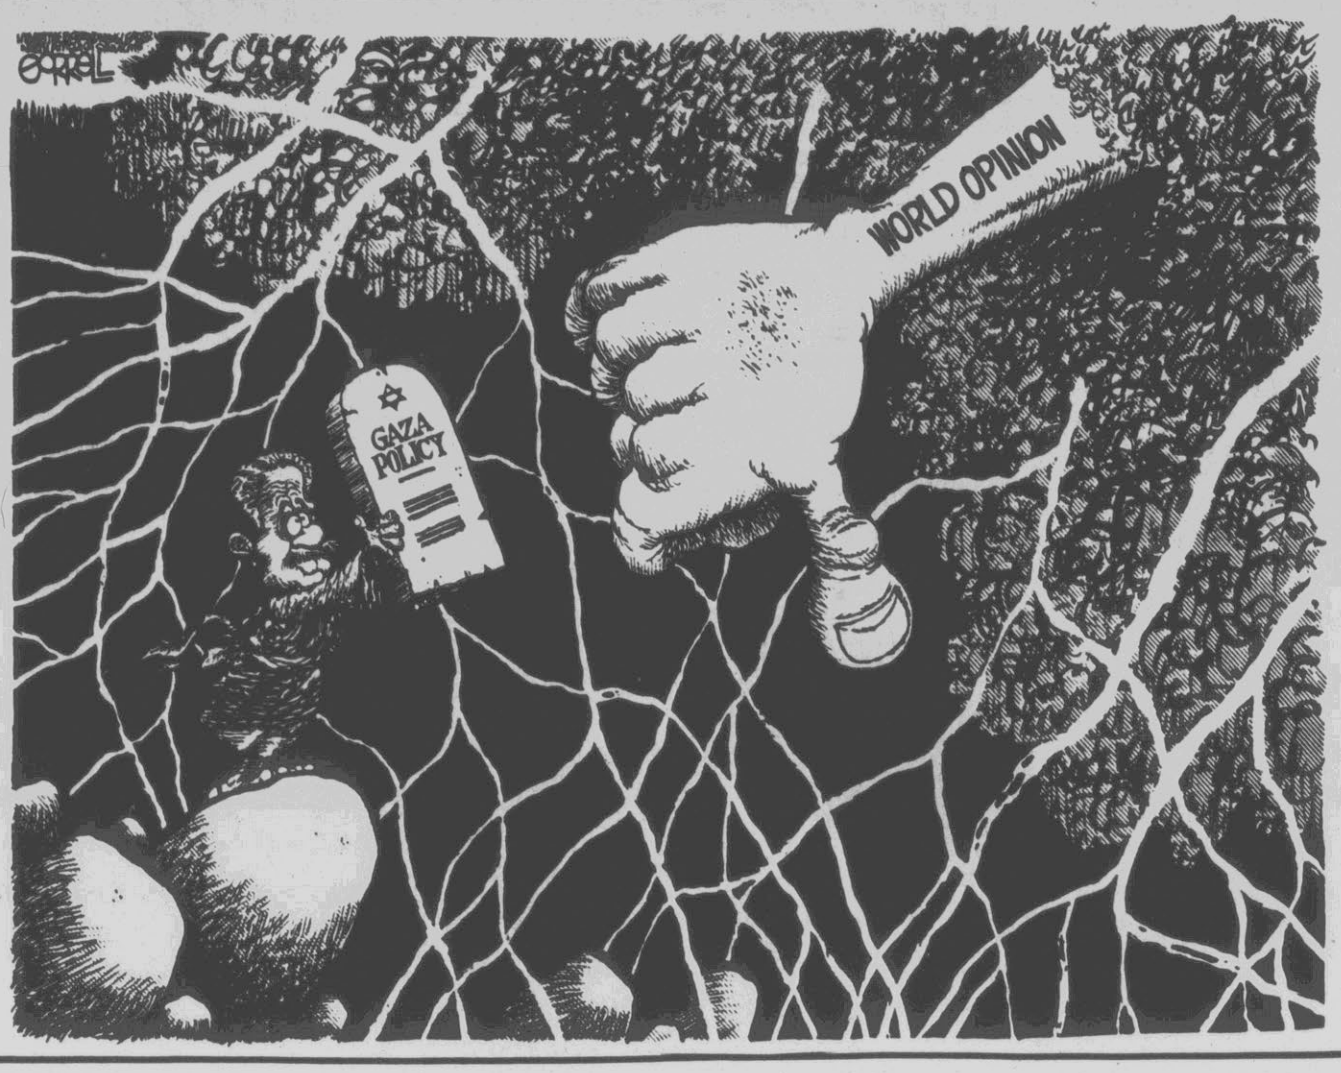

Concern was expressed for aging parents who are wondering what will happen to their mentally ill offspring when the parents are no longer able to look after them.

The need for better community services for the mentally ill was emphasized. A case of a deranged women who was setting fires was cited. Since there was no place to put her on short notice, she was hospitalized.

The stories abound of mentally ill people who, unable to cope with life on their own, resort to street living and aimless wandering.

The mentally ill don't just disappear, and their problems become community problems.

North Carolina and its individual communities must find ways to improve on our treatment and handling of the mentally ill. Perhaps these public hearings will offer some solutions.

Sunday Morning Notes

Iced over ponds in Pitt County? It happened during the recent cold wave which accompanied the five-inch snow that blanketed the county. And it is not the first time.

Normally in this area extended cold weather doesn't occur for a long enough period to ice over bodies of water of any size. This January, however, skims of ice appeared on many rural ponds. Particularly was it noticed on the newly created ponds along U.S. 264 in Pitt, Greene and Wilson counties.

Fortunately even the most naive among us recognized that the ice would never support the weight of a human. But there it was, evidence that if it stays below freezing long enough even water around here will solidify.

As with all things regarding the weather, it has happened before. There was a time in the 1950's when ice appeared on the Tar River and froze solid in the creek at the old Port Terminal east of Greenville. The Pamlico River also froze and pulled the water from the shore line for a good distance. Coastal bridges were damaged by the ice.

That brought a picture to The Daily Reflector, taken decades before which showed ice floes on the Tar.

It also brought stories from native adults that they heard from their grandparents about the times in the 1800s when the Tar froze solid — so solid that a horse and cart could be driven on the ice from Grimesland to Greenville.

While that is difficult to verify, the stories of the hard winters of the late 1800s abound. Since there are very few weather records of that time the weather stories are all we have. Perhaps the winters only seemed colder when living was more primitive.

Regardless, weather patterns change and we can have mild winters in this area and also severe ones. It proves the adage that if you don't like the weather, just wait around awhile. It will change.

For the future there are predictions of a long range world warming trend. That, however, doesn't mean there won't be colder trends in local areas from time to time. If you want to see the Tar River freeze, just hang around. One year it will happen.

Public Forum

To the editor:

After reading Mike Strub's letter in the Public Forum in the Jan. 17 issue, I was downright "ticked off." And I'm not even from Greenville.

It's been years since I rode by in my old Plymouth and hooted at the coeds, but I still admire the view on warm spring days on Cotanche at Reade Circle. And I haven't noticed anyone minding.

So far as improved light synchronization in Greenville, Mr. Strub has me there. As a magistrate, I have probably committed saner people to mental institutions that those in charge of traffic flow in Greenville. Like the Long Island Freeway, Greenville is in danger of becoming a giant bumper-to-bumper parking lot someday. But living in Pitt County is worth some inconvenience.

My hometown, Ayden, experienced an influx of new citizens from the Delaware area in the mid-50's, with the opening of the DuPont plant. Fortunately, those people blended in splendidly. Soon we had the best of both worlds.

Of course, one lady did object to our collards, but we started a Collard Festival in her honor, which is now the main cultural attraction of Southern Pitt County. And no "mess" of collards is complete without hog's head, "debristled" or not.

A lot of citizens of Pitt County have been, on occasion, to the metroplitan areas of the Northeast and have seen the living conditions there. As the writer said, $13,000 isn't much per year for a female college grad, but when you can buy a nice home for $50,000, it doesn't require as much to live on as when it takes $200,000 to buy a rat trap, as in northern New Jersey.

Of course, Mr. Strub can always buy himself a pickup truck with a dog box and a gun rack and join the fun down here. It's about the only game in town.

To the editor:

A letter writer seems to say that the American Central Intelligence Agency is worse in the matter of crimes against humanity than the Soviet Empire's dread state police, the KGB. He proposes that we improve the world by disbanding the CIA. A generation ago we abolished the congressionaland senatorial committees that dealt with spying and subversion. The result? Soviet espionage and theft of our technology are spectacular growth industries. The writer does not even mention the more sinister Soviet organ, the GRU. To support his views he recommends six sources; of the five I am familiar with, four favor the Red Side and are hostile to the USA.

The CIA is an outfit of choirboys compared to its opponent, the KGB. To head off revolts inside the Empire, the KGB, a state within a state, fields its own military forces and operates outside any law or constitution — only the will of the Communist Party leaders control it. As a result, the scales of its crimes are monstrous and its slaughters, mostly of Russians, far surpass even those of Hitler and his Socialists. To learn about such killing machines, begin with Solzhenitsyn's Gulag Archipelago (a short version appeared in 1985), and for the GRU see Viktor Suvorov's two books. Both men, former residents of the USSR, know the truth from the inside, having lived in the belly of the beast.

Paralysis At The Top In Israel

Yoel Marcus

TEL AVIV — Yitzhak Shamir and Shimon Peres, the two main partners in the government of Israel, find themselves these days in the position of two opponents caught in a clinch in the boxing ring: too tired to strike the winning blow, too antagonistic to admit defeat. And so, six weeks after the outbreak of unrest in the occupied territories, these rivals-partners hang on to each other, with neither the strength to fall nor the will to renew the fight. Although Peres has said that he might be interested in moving the elections forward from November to spring, his suggestion fell on deaf ears.

"Nothing unusual has happened," says Shamir, who at 73 is not eager to give up an additional assured year as prime minister. "We would be insane to quit the government and leave it entirely in the hands of the Likud," says Peres. It is clear that neither of them knows for whose benefit continued unrest in the territories is working, unrest caused by the political paralysis in which this government is so expert. And neither of them has the strength, or the inclination, to test public opinion in an early election.

The riots in the territories took the government by surprise: Peres was in Brazil and Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin in the United States, and neither thought that the situation warranted an early return. At home, Shamir assumed that this was merely another of those passing outbursts, and gave the army a free hand to deal with it in the manner that has been routinely employed since 1967.

But the rioting spread like wildfire. During a one-day strike called by Israeli Arabs in sympathy with their brothers in the territories, stones were thrown in Jaffa and Nazareth and along interurban routes in the heart of Israel. This first open expression of solidarity in 20 years stunned the Israeli public.

Soldiers trained in full-scale warfare found themselves helpless when faced with children throwing stones, women cursing, youngsters burning tires, shopkeepers closing up. Unlike former instances, these riots were not orchestrated from "above" and outside. but grew from the grass roots, nurtured from the bottom by unknown local, sometimes neighborhood, leaders — a phenomenon seemingly hinting at a popular uprising in the making.

The army, which on television often appeared to be as bungling as the Keystone Kops, increasingly was shooting, wounding and killing from anxiety, with each incident adding fuel to the flames. Everyone in Israel was talking of "a new situation."

It was some time before the army and the politicians realized that this was no passing phase of limited scope. What the authorities minimized as "disturbances" were everywhere, surprising in their intensity and their endurance. "We ran out of punishments," security officials complained. The most severe punishments — banishment and demolition of houses — were now hard to impose, whether due to American pressure or because the Arabs themselves had found a way to prevent the widespread use of such measures by appealing to the Supreme Court.

The continuation of the riots made nerves and tempers snap in the national-unity government. "I told you so," was the bitter word from Peres, whose initiative for negotiations with King Hussein under the aegis of an international conference had been torpedoed by Shamir. The Likud ministers claimed that it was Peres' courting of Hussein and willingness to make concessions that had caused the riots. Yet, as has happened several times in the past in this strange government in which two bitter ideological rivals coexist in a marriage of convenience, Peres and Shamir joined forces in a weird fraternity behind Rabin and the "iron fist" policy in the territories. "They have to understand that violence will get them nowhere," said Rabin. "Law and order must first be restored, and only then can we talk." In this way the rival partners drew the perfect blueprint for a vicious circle: Nobody believed that when quiet was restored the present paralytic government would be capable of talking with anyone about anything serious.

In Nicaragua, Struggles Continue Despite Peace Efforts

Rebels Inhibit Peace

Jorge Castaneda

There are three immediate and important lessons that can be drawn from last weekend's meeting of the five Central American presidents. But whatever its formal significance, their summit agreement will have little bearing on the lives of the region's people if the United States does not do what it has repeatedly been called on to do by the leaders of Central America and virtually every other government in Latin America: Stop financing the Nicaraguan Contras.

The first message of the summit meeting in San Jose, Costa Rica, was a reiteration of Central American independence. The Reagan administration had applied intense pressure up until the very last minute — especially on the two heads of state most dependent on the United States and most amenable to Washington's brow-beating — Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador and Jose Azcona Hoyo of Honduras. Yet all five presidents rejected the administration's entreaties — or ultimatum, depending on one's point of view — that they denounce the Sandinistas for not complying with the main provisions of the Esquipulas II agreement signed last August in Guatemala.

In fact, apart from criticism of the United States for its continuing support of the Contras, the brunt of criticism during the summit meeting reportedly fell on Azcona for Honduras' non-compliance with its part of the agreement: to stop supply flights from its territory to the Contras in Nicaragua, and to expel the remaining Contras from its soil.

The text that was ultimately signed by all of the presidents (notably including Azcona) says that "compliance with the Esquipulas II agreement includes commitments whose observance by the governments must be specifically verified, particularly regarding the end of all aid to irregular groups." This directly concerns Honduran aid to the Contras and implies on-site inspection of their bases and resupply locations in Honduras, which that country's armed forces has been unwilling to accept.

Even more important, and despite reservations expressed by Duarte and Azcona, was the acceptance by all five presidents of the international verification commission's report on adherence to the Esquipulas II agreement. Point 21 of the report directly says that an end to U.S. aid to the Contras is an "indispensable requirement" for the success of the peace efforts and the plan in its entirety. Initially it was said that the report had been rejected by everyone except Nicaragua's President Daniel Ortega. But on Sunday President Oscar Arias Sanchez of Costa Rica said that his country "has no objection to the report of the commission"; Guatemala's Vinicio Cerezo Arevalo made a similar statement.

Not only did the Reagan administration not get its way in pressing for a condemnation of Nicaragua; it also was taken to task again for impeding the peace effort — this time by the only two presidents at the summit meeting sufficiently impartial to be noteworthy, and sufficiently independent to be impartial: Arias and Cerezo.

The Sandinistas, for their part, took a moderate risk and a daring chance at the summit. The risk is minor because, in the last analysis, most of the concessions that they made in San Jose had already been accepted as inevitable by the leadership in Managua. They have known since August that they would have to participate in face-to-face talks with the Contras on a cease-fire; they also knew that their present amnesty decree was too narrow and would have to be extended to prisoners jailed before the beginning of the Contra war in 1981. And their lifting of the state of emergency was also previously contemplated, mainly since many of its important implications — the reopening of La Prensa and Radio Catolica, and the permitting of opposition demonstrations and gatherings — had already taken effect. One of the tactical drawbacks that the Reagan administration has created for itself is its routine dismissal of every concession made by Nicaragua, which allows the Sandinistas to make each concession twice.

The chance that the government of Nicaragua has taken is, essentially, to trust the Congress of the United States, and more particularly the House and Senate Democratic leaderships. The entire agreement that emerged Saturday night in San Jose is based on one principle: that if Ortega complies with his stated commitments, and if that compliance is certified by the Central American presidents — above all, by Arias and Cerezo — then Congress will end President Reagan's support of the Contras once and for all.

While it seems likely that Congress will not give the Administration what it wants, there is still a strong possibility that it will confirm its proverbial fickleness and lack of backbone by giving the Contras just enough aid to survive, but too much aid for the peace process to withstand.

Democracy Long Way Off

Susan Purcell

The dramatic turnaround by Daniel Ortega at the weekend meeting of Central American presidents does not mean that he can now be trusted to democratize Nicaragua. It means only that he had no other way to achieve his main goal of destroying the Contras. To ensure full implementation of the Central American peace plan, the United States must continue to aid the Nicaraguan armed resistance.

Ortega initially had hoped to avoid negotiating with the Contras and lifting the state of emergency. Direct negotiations would enhance the legitimacy of the Nicaraguan rebels. Allowing freedom of the press and of association might generate a momentum for further democratization that could undermine Sandinista control.

The Nicaraguan president instead proposed a 30-day extension of the deadline for compliance with the peace plan. This would have moved the evaluation of Nicaragua's compliance — or lack of it — beyond early February, when Congress will vote on further aid for the Contras. Ortega's strategy would have given the edge to congressional opponents of aid. With Contra aid defeated, the Sandinistas could finally consolidate their militarized one-party Marxist system.

Before the weekend meeting in San Jose, the conventional wisdom was that the presidents of the Central American democracies would avoid criticizing Nicaragua's non-compliance with the peace plan. Instead, they would take the easy way out and join Ortega in converting the peace process into "another Contadora," characterized by endless meetings that set neither deadlines nor penalties for non-compliance. To the surprise of many, however, the presidents of El Salvador and Honduras insisted on immediate Nicaraguan compliance with the peace plan, and refused to extend the deadline yet again.

Presidents Jose Napoleon Duarte and Jose Azcona Hoyo did not take this position because the United States told them to. They held firm because the end of U.S. support for the Contras and the resulting consolidation of Sandinista control over Nicaragua would gravely threaten their fledgling democracies: The Sandinistas would continue to "export revolution," and the effort to "contain" them would give the military establishments in El Salvador and Honduras too much power over democratically elected civilian rulers.

The strong stand that was taken by the Salvadoran and Honduran presidents enabled the Costa Rican and Guatemalan presidents, both advocates of "active neutrality," to form a united front of Central American democracies against Sandinista efforts to evade compliance with the peace plan. The Sandinistas then had two choices. They could withdraw from the peace process or accede to the pressures for direct negotiations and a lifting of the state of emergency.

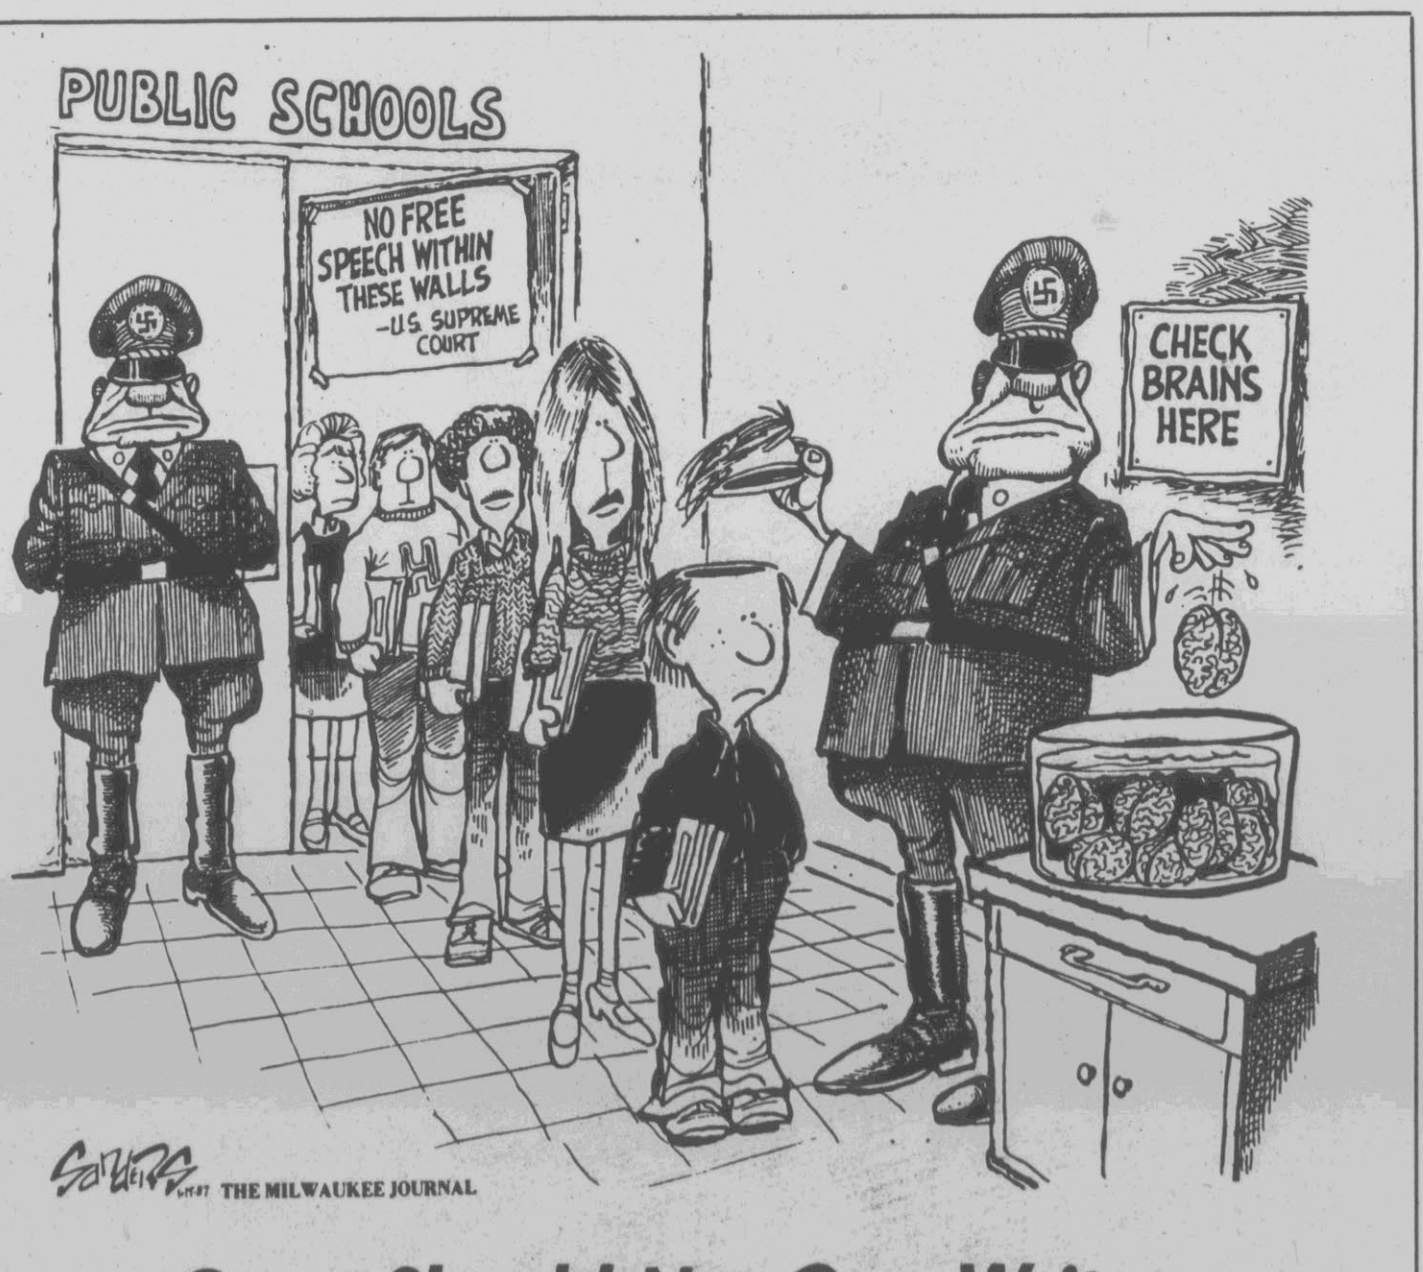

The first option was purely theoretical. The stance of the other Central American presidents ensured that if the Sandinistas withdrew, a congressional vote in favor of the Contras was assured. This the Sandinistas could not tolerate. There are now 12,000 to 16,000 rebels fighting inside Nicaragua, operating in more than half the country's territory. Since October they have scored several dramatic military victories. Perhaps most alarming to the Sandinistas, the Contras' support inside Nicaragua is growing, and cooperation between the armed resistance and the unarmed internal opposition is rapidly increasing. This explains the Sandinistas' arrest last week of several democratic opposition leaders who had met with Contra leaders in Guatemala.

Having no alternative but to agree to make concessions, the Sandinistas will now stall for time in the hope that Congress will refuse to vote additional Contra aid in order to "give peace a chance" once again. Congress should not be fooled. A cutoff in Contra aid would undermine the negotiating strength of the Nicaraguan resistance. It would also sabotage the rebels' efforts to include the unarmed democratic opposition in the cease-fire negotiations.

Neither outcome would serve the interests of the United States or its democratic friends in Central America. The Contras must be able to press for a cease-fire that is not tantamount to surrender but, rather, enables them to make a successful transition from a military to a political force.

Now is not the time to show trust in the Sandinistas by abandoning the Contras. The Sandinistas are not misunderstood and beleaguered democrats. They are committed Marxists who rule by force and make concessions to those who show strength, not weakness. The best way for Congress to give peace a chance is to give democracy a chance. The best way to do that is to continue to support the Contras and their democratic allies.

Court Should Not Gag Writers

Theodore Mitchell

A majority on the U.S. Supreme Court delivered what the minority called "a civics lesson" last week, overturning 20 years of constitutional interpretation that had given students and teachers broad freedoms of speech and expression under the First Amendment.

While reaffirming the court's 1969 decision in Tinker vs. Des Moines that neither "students (nor) teachers shed their constitutional rights of freedom of speech or expression at the schoolhouse gate," the high court nevertheless last week gave wide discretionary powers to school administrators to censor the "style and content of student speech in school-sponsored expressive activities." At issue here are both the nature of students' constitutional rights in schools and the very nature of schools in a democracy.

The recent ruling sprang from a lawsuit filed by high-school students in Hazelwood, Mo., who sought the high court's support after their principal deleted from a student newspaper articles on teenage pregnancy and the effect of divorce.

The court argued previously that school officials could curtail or discipline student expression only when it "materially disrupts classwork or involves substantial disorder or invasion of the rights of others." Now the court majority has ruled that the First Amendment does not protect student expression and speech when that expression occurs under the financial, curricular or administrative auspices of the school. There, the court maintains, the school acts like any editor or publisher, determining what is appropriate and valid and ultimately what is spoken and read.

Under the current ruling, it seems that arm bands and soap-box addresses during the noon hour are permitted, while discomforting editorials in the school paper, unorthodox campaign speeches for school elections and unwelcome ideas in the classroom are not ... simply because the latter are supported, directly or indirectly, by the school.

But the decision has even broader meaning for American education, for it reinforces the notion that schools should be apart from life, not part of it; that schools should teach democracy, but not be democratic.

Schools are dominant institutions in the lives of children. There students learn intellectual and academic skills, there students learn to express their views and opinions, there they make friends and often make enemies. Schools, for the students in them, are small societies, public forums in the lives of America's youth.

Previous high court decisions argued eloquently that schools in which rights were restricted for any but the most compelling reasons of safety or order were schools in which democracy and democratic ideals died. In 1943, in Barnette vs. West Virginia, in a ruling that established the right of students to refuse to salute the flag, the high court wrote that because "they are educating the young for citizenship" schools must "scrupulously protect constitutional freedoms of the individual." If not, the court warned, schools would "strangle the free mind at its source and teach youth to discount important principles of our government as mere platitudes."

The message in Barnette is clear: Democracy must be lived as well as taught in schools, for without the living the teaching is worse than meaningless; it is deceitful and hypocritical. The basic survival of our democracy depends on succeeding generations of citizens who reject the censor and the propagandist and who have learned to speak for what they believe in, even against daunting opposition.

Britain And Decline

Paul Kennedy

The world is coming to the end of another century, and its No. 1 power is faltering.

Forty years earlier, it was in a class of its own in manufacturing output, per-capita productivity, high-technology goods, and average personnel income. Now, with the country's overall growth rate lagging behind that of its chief rivals, that is no longer the case.

At the same time, the social problems of its inner cities, the shortcomings of its educational system, the eroding infrastructure, all call for a vast allocation of resources. So, too, do its armed services, which are grappling with a dreadful spiral in the cost of weaponry, and have numerous theaters of war to prepare to fight in.

So many military commitments overseas have been assumed in more favorable times that, with the global economic and strategical balances changing so rapidly, it is doubtful whether the country could fulfill one-half of its treaty obligations in the event of a large-scale war. Being No. 1 remains a source of pride, but it also has its disadvantages, especially in a period of relative decline.

Most readers will take the remarks above as a description of America's current predicament. In fact, it could also be a fair description of an earlier power, Great Britain, which a century ago found itself in very similar circumstances: its economic and industrial ascendancy being eroded, its pre-eminent position in various parts of the world coming under challenge, its military obligations being far in excess of its capacity to fulfil them all.

And in just the same way as thoughtful American politicians do today, late-Victorian statesmen worried about inner-city poverty, inadequate educational facilities, the erosion of manufacturing jobs, "unfair" foreign competition, and the constant press of demands for more spending on health care, social services and defense..

In the mid-19th century, Britain's industrial and strategical position had been secured. But by 1903, in the words of the Colonial Secretary, Joseph Chamberlain, it resembled a "weary Titan," staggering under the orb of its own fate.

In the opinion of certain members of the Prussian General Staff, the future would probably see what they termed "the war of the British Succession" — that is, a struggle to carve up the empire which Britain could no longer control.

And yet, the British Empire survived for much longer than those gloomy turn-of-the-century forecasts. It emerged victorious, albeit at heavy cost, from the two great wars of this century. Its empire did not suffer a devastating blow, like the fall of Rome or the sack of Constantinople. It was dismantled more gently, and transferred into a Commonwealth.

Britain's overseas obligations were ceded, at least in the less vital regions, to others who took over the burdens and privileges of power. And while it was no longer able to preserve or recover its predominant position of former times, it did ensure that its relative decline was both reasonably smooth and gradual.

Is there something in this story for America today? It needs to be said immediately that there are enormous differences between Britain and the United States, simply because of their respective size, population and natural resources.

Thus, the argument here is not that global trends are relegating this country to second- or third-class status. In 50 years, America still ought to be a major player in world politics. It is with the British example in mind, therefore, that one poses the question: How can the United States' own relative decline be made to occur just as smoothly and slowly as possible?

In the sphere of preserving economic competitiveness, for example, it is clear that the British record was a mixed one. While its share of world manufacturing was virtually bound to decline, did that decline have to be so swift? Probably not.

Dozens of studies of Britain's eclipse as "the workshop of the world" have pointed to the low esteem held for manufacturing and commerce (as opposed to the law, or merchant banking) by the educated classes, to the inability to sell in foreign markets, to the limited technical training of the workforce, and, in particular, to the comparatively low rates of investment in new manufacturing plant and in civilian research and development.

Since this latter element is probably the most important indicator of an economy's long-term future, it is worth wondering whetherthe contemporary American economy is devoting a sufficient share of its resources towards non-military R & D in order to remain competitive with such countries as Japan and West Germany. If the answer is "no", as I suspect it is, the British example should pose a grim warning.

The British had an altogether better record than recent American administrations in budgetary policy and in handling their balance of payments. A strong Treasury department, resting firmly upon pre-Keynesian economic assumptions, insisted that central government revenues and expenditures always be balanced.

Pravda Reports Brezhnev Family-Scandal Link

By MARK J. PORUBCANSKY
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Corrupt officials, including the son-in-law of Leonid I. Brezhnev, stole at least $6.5 billion from the Uzbekistan Republic in a scandal involving extortion, bribery and armed bodyguards, Pravda said Saturday.

The article in the official Communist Party newspaper, coupled with the recent renaming of places that carried Brezhnev's name, indicate Mikhail S. Gorbachev's Kremlin leadership will not tolerate the corruption, stagnation and bureaucracy it associates with the late leader.

"In Uzbekistan such crimes as bribery, falsifying reports and theft became normal," Pravda quoted the investigators as saying. "There was no real struggle against them.

"Not one question was decided without bribes. He who gave bribes got everything. The question stood this way: either leave your post or live according to the law of criminals," investigators were quoted as saying.

Pravda said the money was stolen while officials in the central Asian republic were being given national recognition for overfulfilling their quotas for cotton production, based on falsified reports.

The false reports finally were discovered because the republic continually was lagging behind in production of fabric, even though the reports indicated it was producing record amounts of cotton.

Pravda said the investigation in Uzbekistan began in 1983, the year Uzbekistan Communist Party chief Sharaf Rashidov, a Brezhnev protege, died. Brezhnev, who ruled the Soviet Union from 1964, had died the previous fall.

The newspaper said top officials arrested in the case included the premier and a deputy president of the republic and Communist Party officials at the republic and local levels. They were not identified.

It said among those arrested was the Soviet Union's first deputy interior minister. It did not identify the official, but it was clear the paper was referring to Yuri Churbanov, Brezhnev's son-in-law. He was the only one to hold the office from 1980 until he was transferred to an unspecified job in 1985.

Soviet officials announced last February that Churbanov, the husband of Brezhnev's daughter Galina, had been arrested and accused of corruption and accepting bribes. But they did not immediately tie him to the scandal in Uzbekistan.

At least $6.5 billion of state money disappeared from Uzbekistan's cotton industry, but authorities have found only a small percentage of it, the report said.

Pravda said authorities found a well-organized system in which stolen money was earmarked for bribery or enlarging criminal enterprises.

Blackmail and extortion groups in Uzbekistan pressured those who made illegal millions, and the underground millionaires responded by hiring gunmen for personal bodyguards, the newspaper said.

In August 1986 Vakhbozhan Usmanov, the former cotton minister of Uzbekistan, was sentenced to death by firing squad for corruption.

Pravda said the investigative team sent from Moscow arrested Abduvakhid Karimov, the head of the regional Communist Party in the Uzbeki town of Bukhara, after an all-night party at a government country house. Bukhara, an ancient town on the silk route to China, is 1,600 miles southeast of Moscow.

It said investigators were forced to change the license plates on their car after they arrested him to avoid Karimov's bodyguards and corrupt police.

Soviet media reported last year that Karimov also had been sentenced to death. It is not known whether Karimov and Usmanov were executed.

The Pravda article was printed several days after the weekly Literaturnaya Gazeta revealed that Akhmadzhan Adylov, the head of an agricultural complex in Uzbekistan, had a fiefdom with a private court system and an underground jail built by up to 1,000 workers.

The two articles, striking for their detail even in the atmosphere of greater openness fostered by Gorbachev, apparently were a signal that more trials would be coming up and that those convicted would be treated harshly.

Pravda said the Uzbek party must now try to answer how corrupt officials managed to take control of the republic and ruin the economy.

The Soviet Union announced earlier this month that an industrial city, town squares and a Moscow neighborhood had been stripped of Brezhnev's name.

Soviet Population Tops 284 Million

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet population rose to 284.5 million at the start of 1988, and the average Soviet citizen can now expect to live 69.6 years, Tass said Saturday.

The official Soviet news agency said the average live expectancy had risen by almost two years, but did not say over what time period.

Average life expectancy for Americans is more than 71 years. Western specialists attribute the lower Soviet figure to living conditions that have traditionally been harsher, fatal industrial accidents, alcoholism, a colder climate and other factors.

The Soviet life expectancy statistic was once regarded as so sensitive it could not be published.

In May, the weekly magazine Ogonyok reported that "toward the end of the 1970s ... the average life expectancy of men fell to 62 years." It said the downward trend was halted, then reversed in the early 1980s.

Tass credited the changes wrought by Kremlin economic and social reforms, including the "ensuring of a priority development of the social sphere," for the improved demographic outlook.

Past reports in the official media have said the anti-alcohol drive launched by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has led to a decline in the mortality rate and a drop in industrial accidents.

Two months after taking power as Communist Party chief in March 1985, Gorbachev increased prices of alcoholic beveages and cut production, raised the drinking age and cut back on the hours of liquor stores.

Tass said that in 1987 the Soviet mortality rate had "perceptibly declined," but gave no details.

Official media reported in August that the death rate had fallen by 20 percent in 1986 as compared to the previous year, but gave no figures.

On Jan. 17, 1987, Tass said the population was 281.7 million.

On Saturday, Tass said 5.6 million babies were born in the Soviet Union last year, compared to 4.9 million in 1980.

In the last several years, the Soviet Union has increased benefits for large families and extended some new benefits to mothers for up to 1½ years after birth to encourage couples to have children.

In the United States, 3.71 million live births were reported in 1987, down from 3.77 million in 1986. The U.S. population was 243.4 million in mid-1987.

Because of the increased births and lower death rate, the Soviet Union's annual population growth rate increased to 2.9 million in 1986-87, up from 2.4 million in 1981-85, Tass said.

Tass did not specify where the country's population growth had been strongest.

Spiders Hold Off Pirate Rally

Rebound

University of Richmond players Mike Winiecki (42) and Peter Woolfolk (55) reach for a rebound as East Carolina's Kenny Murphy (25) looks on. Richmond helf off the Pirates for a 84-79 win. (AP Laserphoto)

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

RICHMOND, VA. — Peter Woolfolk scored 14 second-half points and helped Richmond's Spiders slip past scrappy East Carolina, 84-79, Saturday night.

The Pirates, who never led, trailed by as many as 12 points, but fought back to have a chance to get back into it with less than a minute to play.

But the Spiders converted six of seven free throws in the final seconds to hold off the Bucs.

ECU stayed close most of the way. Down by six at the half, the Pirates fell behind by 10 early in the second half before rallying to have a chance to tie the game with 10 minutes left in the game.

But a turnover cost them the ball and Richmond moved back out by 12 points with 2:28 to play. Still, the Pirates refused to give up as they closed the gap to 78-75 with 36 seconds to go and were forced to foul.

Benjy Taylor, who is now nine of nine from the line for the year, made four of four before Rodney Rice finished the Pirates off with two more free throws and nine seconds to go.

Both teams were hot from the floor, despite good defensive efforts from both teams. The Spiders converted 67.3 percent of their shots from the field while ECU hit on 61.7 percent of their shots.

The Pirates also outrebounded the Spiders, 26-19.

"I commend East Carolina," Spider coach Dick Tarrent said. "They played a fine ball game. (Gus) Hill is a great player and he had a great night (26 points).

"We didn't play that poorly by any means. But (Mike) Steele has done a tremendous job with little size and experience. I'm not looking forward to going to Minges (Coliseum in Greenville)."

Steele said he wasn't all that happy just to come close.

"If you had told me before the game that Richmond would have shot 67 percent I would have thought it wouldn't be a game, but our kids played hard and played well," Steele said. "I thought a key play in the game was when Gus got his fourth foul (early in the second half).

"(Steve) Kratzer goes in and charges and gets credit for the basket, and Gus goes the same thing and they say it's no good."

Richmond quickly ran out to as much as a 10-point lead in the early going of the first half — just as Steele feared might happen if the Pirates didn't get their offense in gear right away.

But the Pirates didn't fold their tent, struggling back to tie it up at 29-29 before three straight turnovers allowed the Spiders to pull away again.

Richmond scored the first six points of the game before Kenny Murphy broke the ice for the Pirates just over three minutes into the contest.

But after another Spider basket and a free throw by the Pirates, Scott Stapleton hit a basket and Rice followed with a 3-point basket for a 13-3 Richmond lead with 14:50 left in the half.

Over the next 10 minutes however, the Pirates slowly chipped away at the lead and, helped along with three straight 3-pointers by Hill, fought back to a 29-29 tie..

Hill hit his first 3-pointer from the right corner at 6:39, then added another from the same place at 5:46 and crossed to the other side of the court for the next one with 5:08 to go.

But Richmond scored on its next possession on a jumper by Eric English, to regain the lead at 31-29 with 4:56 left.

The Pirates then had three straight turnovers and the Spiders socred on the first two of them to stretch their lead to 35-29.

The Pirates fought back within five points but still trailed 44-38 by the intermission as they missed on two chances at the end of the half.

Richmond stretched the lead to 10 at 48-38 two minutes into the second half but ECU rallied — mostly without Hill, who was on the bench with four fouls.

Then, with 14:52 left, Hill returned and promptly hit six straight points as ECU closed the gap to 58-56 with 10:04 left.

Murphy, with a career-high 18 points, hit a 3-pointer at 5:37 to go to cut Richmond's lead to 64-63.

When Woolfolk missed the second of two free throws with 5:24 left, Mike Winiecki was there to get the rebound and hit the stick back for a 67-63 lead.

"That was a big play for them," Steele said.

Winiecki's basket helped spring the

Cavaliers Hold Off Tech To Earn A 58-55 Victory

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Bill Batts' offensive rebound and score snapped a 52-52 tie with 1:04 to play and John Johnson converted a pair of free throws with 17 seconds left as Virginia defeated Georgia Tech 58-55 in an Atlantic Coast Conference game Saturday.

Mel Kennedy led Virginia, 10-8 overall and 3-2 in the ACC, with 18 points and eight rebounds. Richard Morgan added 11 points and Kenny Turner had 10 for the Cavaliers.

Georgia Tech, 13-4, 1-2, was led by freshman forward Dennis Scott with 17 points. Tom Hammonds had 15 points and Duane Ferrell tallied 14 for the Yellow Jackets.

The defensive game featured 10 lead changes and 10 ties, the last coming at 52-52 following a foul-line jumper by Hammonds with 1:26 remaining.

Johnson penetrated the lane 20 seconds later but his short one-hander bounded off the rim. Batts, a 6-foot-8 sophomore, was there for the follow shot to give Virginia a 54-52 lead.

Georgia Tech called a timeout with 38 seconds left and when play resumed Brian Oliver put up an air ball from 18 feet with 28 seconds remaining.

Johnson was fouled with 17 seconds to go and nailed both ends of the one-and-one to give Virginia a 56-52 lead.

Hammonds' baseline jumper with 10 seconds left was off target and Turner rebounded and was fouled with 7 seconds to go. Turner hit a pair of free throws to make it 58-52.

Oliver canned a 3-point goal with 2 seconds remaining to account for the final margin.

Half-Court Game Helps Lady Bucs Gain Victory

By CLAY DEANHARDT
Reflector Staff Writer

East Carolina University's Lady Pirates got their half-court game in gear Saturday night and in doing so earned a 60-59 heart stopping victory over the Richmond Spiders in college basketball action.

The win broke a five game losing streak for the Pirates and was their first in conference play.

Coach Pat Pierson said the half-court game was the key to her team's victory in a tight contest.

"We were very patient and we shot well for a change," she said. "In the second half we got good rebounds and we were able to come down and play patiently even when we were behind."

But this was a game where the Lady Pirates would never fall too far behind and instead held the lead for a good part of the game.

In the end, it was patience and strong inside play which won the game for the Pirates.

Richmond went into the locker room at half-time with a one point lead at 31-30, but Pam Williams sunk a 17-footer 50 seconds into the second half to gove the Lady Pirates back the lead they had held through most of the first half.

Richmond then scored on two layups, and then the teams traded buckets. With 16:31 to go, Pam Bryant buried a long jumpshot to put the Spiders ahead by four, their largest lead of the evening.

But the Lady Pirates fought back, and with 13:12 left Williams hit a baseline jumper to put ECU in the lead, 43-42. After that both teams exchanged buckets for the rest of the game, with neither able to stretch any lead to more than two.

The last four minutes of the game turned into a defensive effort, as neither team was able to push the ball in more than once.

Monique Pompili scored a layup for the Lady Pirates with 4:10 to go putting the score at 58-57, ECU.

At the other end Dana Pappas hit an 18-foot jumpshot to put Richmond ahead, 59-58 with 3:50 left.

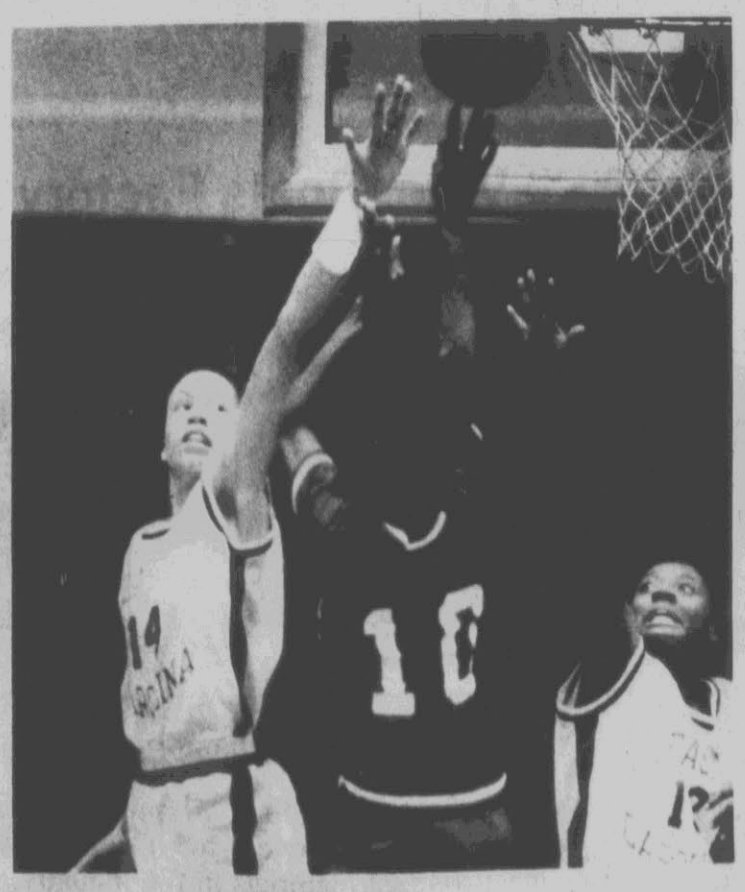

The two teams traded turnovers, and then ECU called a time out with 2:36 remaining. The Spiders turned the ball back over to the Pirates after an inbounds following a foul, and Alma Bethea was fouled on the inside by Richmond's Beth Babbit.

Bethea missed the front end of a one and one, and Richmond called their third time out. Pam Bryant missed a jump shot in the lane for Richmond, and Gretta Savage pulled in the rebound.

ECU set up their half-court offense again, and passed around the perimeter until Williams drove in for a lay-up with 33 seconds left to put the Pirates ahead 60-59. She was fouled on the shot by Richmond's Beth Spence, but missed the free throw.

Ferry's Hot Hand Leads Duke Past Wake Forest

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Duke's Danny Ferry said he relied on a "shooter's mentality" Saturday to break out of a slump.

"I've been struggling from the 3-point line," said Ferry, who tied a career high with 29 points, including 10 during a two-minute span to start the second half, as the ninth-ranked Blue Devils ran away from Wake Forest 103-70 in an Atlantic Coast Conference game.

"We all have a shooter's mentality where if we don't make them the next one is going in. If we don't make one we'll keep shooting."

Ferry said he stayed "inside a lot" to grab some easy baskets.

"I got set up for some nice, easy layups," he said, "We really executed in our half-court offense today."

After holding an 11-point halftime lead, Duke, 12-2 overall and 3-1 in the ACC, rode the hot shooting of the 6-foot-10 junior to take a 57-39 lead with 17:51 remaining.

During that stretch, Ferry hit a turnaround jumper in the lane and a 3-pointer, converted a three-point play and scored on a layup.

Two weeks ago against Virginia, Ferry scored 29 points. Saturday, he hit 10 of 15 shots and seven of seven free throws.

"They're a great basketball team," Wake Forest Coach Bob Staak said. "They're one of the best in this league and one of the top five in the country."

Ferry added a three-point play with 13:23 left to give the Blue Devils a 71-44 lead. Later, Duke increased the margin to 30 points on a three-point play by Kevin Strickland, who scored 25 points, including 17 in the first half.

Quin Snyder had 14 points for Duke, while Robert Brickey had 10.

Wake Forest, which upset No. 20 North Carolina State on Wednesday, dropped to 6-9 and 1-4. Cal Boyd led the Demon Deacons with 20 points, Sam Ivy had 15 and David Carlyle 14.

"I thought that they had a real good shot at knocking us off," Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "We were physically tired (after beating No. 2 North Carolina Thursday). We showed some maturity today. We were good today."

"They're as physical a basketball team as we're played," Staak said. "We just didn't respond well at all today."

After Wake Forest had taken its only lead of the first half on a Boyd 3-pointer three minutes into the game, Duke went on a 21-4 run and grabbed a 28-13 lead with 11:48 left. During the spurt, Strickland scored eight points — including a 3-point jumper and three-point play — and Ferry had seven.

Wake Forest countered with an Ivy three-point play and layup, and a Boyd jumper to pull within eight. A 12-4 run gave the Blue Devils their biggest lead of the half at 40-24.

Haas Ambivalent About Lead

INDIAN WELLS, Calif. (AP) — Jay Haas shrugged when asked about the possible importance of a one-shot lead going into Sunday's final round of the Bob Hope Classic.

"It's just one or two shots I don't have to make up," Haas said after an eagle-3 propelled him into the top spot Saturday after four rounds of this five-day, 90-hole, $1 million event.

The chase for a $180,000 first prize will conclude with a final round at Indian Wells, the shortest course on the PGA Tour and the one that has yielded the lowest scores of the tournament.

"Every day somebody is shooting 8, 9, 10 under on this course," Haas said. "I don't see anything different tomorrow."

Paul Azinger agreed.

"There's no such thing as a comfortable lead in the desert," Azinger said. "Somebody can shoot 61 or 62 at you real quick."

Haas, tied for the lead after three rounds, took sole control with a fourth-round 68 at Bermuda Dunes, completing one round on each of four courses at 268, 20 under par.

Haas' 45-50 yard wedge shot that found the cup for an eagle-3 on the eighth hole was the difference.

"I was kind of shaky starting out; just scraped it around for a while, then I holed that wedge and it seemed to relax me," Haas said.

"I don't know what it did to me inside but it was something. It definitely was the turning point.

"I didn't miss another green after that. I just played much better on the back nine," he said after establishing a one-shot lead over Bob Tway and two over Azinger.

Tway, who won the PGA and Player of the Year titles in 1986 before going slumping last season, scored two eagles in a 67 at La Quinta and finished 72 holes at 269.

Lady Pirates Win ...

out and then in bounded the ball to Bryant. Spider coach Stephanie Gaitley said the teams's play was supposed to isolate two seniors, center Laurie Governor and guard Dana Pappas, to take the last shot, but ECU's defense forced Bryant to take a bad shot with seven seconds on the clock. Babbit got the offensive rebound, but missed on the follow.

The resulting scuffle for the ball ended in a foul by ECU's savage with two seconds left in the game. Both teams called a time out, and then Richmond was forced to inbounds the ball since they were one foul away from being in the bonus. Babbitt got the ball in to Bryant, who missed a long jump shot from the top of the key as time and the Lady Pirate's losing streak both expired.

"I knew East Carolina was ready to break their slump," Gaitley said. "I was just hoping it wouldn't be against us."

Pompili lead the Lady Pirates, now 6-11 and 1-3 in the Colonial Athletic Association, with 16 points followed by Savage and Williams, both with 14. Pappas lead Richmond with 22, followed by Bryant with 16 and Governor with 14.

The Lady Pirates play again Monday at home against conference foe William & Mary.

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Willie Williams scored 23 points and Antonio Howard added 18 to lead North Carolina-Wilmington to a 76-67 Colonial Athletic Association victory over cold-shooting William & Mary Saturday night.

The Seahawks, 9-6 overall and 4-1 in the CAA, took the lead for good at 47-46 on a 3-pointer by Scott Tierney with 14:43 left in the game. Their biggest lead was the final margin.

The Indians, 5-11 and 2-3, led by as many as six in the first half and took a 37-36 intermission lead on a free throw by Mark Batzel with 22 seconds to play before halftime.

Spiders Take Win ...

Spiders loose and over the next few minutes they built a 12-point lead at 78-66 with 2:28 to go.

ECU came back on a 2-point and a 3-point basket to trim the margin. Domique Martin added two free throws and Murphy followed his own missed shot to cut it to 78-75 with 35 seconds remaining.

But the Pirates were unable to get the ball back without fouling and Richmond used free throws to hold them off.

Hill finished with 26 points to lead the Pirates while Murphy added 18 and Reed Lose chipped in 10.

Richmond had six double figure scorers, led by Woolfolk's 18.

The loss dropped the Pirates to 6-10 overall and 2-3 in the CAA while Richmond is 14-3 and 4-1 and tied for first with UNC-Wilmington.

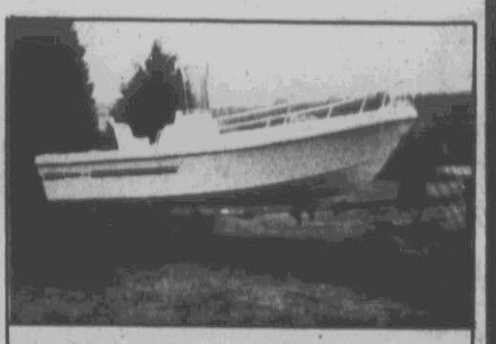

The Pirates face William and Mary at home Wednesday.

Beban, Selmon Head List For Football Hall Choices

LARCHMONT, N.Y. (AP) — Former UCLA quarterback Gary Beban, the 1967 Heisman Trophy winner, and Oklahoma defensive tackle Lee Roy Selmon, who won the 1975 Outland Trophy, were among 11 players named Saturday to the National Football Foundation's College Football Hall of Fame.

The other honorees, all of whom will be formally inducted Dec. 6 at the foundation's annual awards banquet, include Georgia Tech centerlinebacker Maxie Baughan, currently head coach at Cornell University, and defensive tackle Charles "Bubba" Smith of Michigan State.

The other inductees are Forrest Behm, Nebraska tackle, 1938-40; Bob Chappuis, Michigan halfback, 1942 and 1946-47; Darrell Lester, Texas Christian center, 1933-35; John "Tarzan" Riley, Northwestern tackle, 1929-31; Ron Sellers, Florida State wide receiver, 1966-68; Bob Williams, Notre Dame quarterback, 1948-50, and Gen. George "Mike" Wilson, Lafayette halfback, 1926-28.

Beban quarterbacked UCLA for three seasons and still ranks second in career total offense. He is currently an executive vice president for Coldwell Banker in Chicago.

Baughan captained Georgia Tech's 1960 Southeastern Conference champions and set a school record with 124 tackles. He played pro football for 12 years before joining the coaching profession.

Selmon, one of three brothers to play on the defensive line at Oklahoma in the 1970s, was a standout tackle and won the Outland Trophy as the nation's top interior lineman. He played professionally with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers before retiring due to a back ailment and is currently in the banking business in Tulsa, Okla.

Smith joins former Michigan State teammate George Webster, a 1987 inductee, in the Hall of Fame. He played with the Baltimore Colts, Oakland Raiders and Houston Oilers before becoming a television and movie actor.

Behm, who suffered severe leg burns in a fire as a 5-year-old and was told he might never walk again, was unable to participate in athletics until late in high school. He joined Corning Glass Works in Corning, N.Y., in 1946 and held management positions with the company for 39 years.

Chappuis was runner-up to Notre Dame's Johnny Lujack for the 1947 Heisman Trophy. He lettered at Michigan in 1942 before entering the Air Force and returned to school in 1946, leading the Big Ten in rushing that season, in passing the following year and in total offense both seasons.

He was voted the most valuable player in Michigan's 49-0 Rose Bowl rout of Southern California on Jan. 1, 1948, and later played pro ball with the Brooklyn Dodgers and Chicago Hornets. Chappuis worked for the Central Soya Co. for 25 years, the last 13 as a vice president, and later formed his own management consulting company in Fort Wayne, Ind.

Lester graduated from TCU in 1936 after leading the Horned Frogs to a three-year record of 29-7-1 and captained the College All-Stars in their annual game in Chicago. He joined General Mills and later owned his own food brokerage business in Houston.

2nd-Half Spurt Carries Wildcats

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Rex Chapman and Winston Bennett led a 10-3 surge over a three-minute span early in the second half, breaking open a close game and spurring fourth-ranked Kentucky to a 76-61 victory over Louisiana State University Saturday.

Kentucky, 13-2, is second in the Southeastern Conference with a 5-2 mark. LSU is 9-6 and 4-2 in the SEC.

Kentucky led 33-30 when LSU's Bernard Woodside, the Tigers' best defensive player, picked up his fourth personal foul and had to sit down.

Bennett, who finished with 17 points, got six over the next three minutes. Chapman, who had 18 points, added four in the Kentucky surge that put the Wildcats ahead 43-33 with 14:28 left in the game.

Woodside had been covering Bennett when LSU was in its man-to-man defense and sluffing off to help on Chapman.

Ed Davender led Kentucky with 22 points.

Ricky Blanton topped LSU with 16 points. Woodside had 13, while Wayne Sims and Fess Irvin added 10 each.

Purdue.....91
Louisville.....85

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Troy Lewis scored 15 of his 23 points in the second half, including five free throws in the final 1:16, as No. 5 Purdue survived a furious second-half rally by Louisville for a 91-85 victory Saturday.

Purdue, 17-1, also extended the nation's longest winning streak to 16 games, which tied a school record.

Purdue, which led 48-40 at halftime, grabbed its largest lead at 75-56 on Todd Mitchell's two free throws with 8:32 left in the game before Louisville started its comeback.

Kenny Payne hit 3-point shots to start and end a 23-8 scoring run that pulled Louisville within 83-79 with 2:55 remaining. Payne scored 14 of his 16 points during the outburst.

Each team scored again before Lewis hit two free throws to make it 87-81.

Louisville, 9-6, got as close as 88-85 with 16 seconds left, but Lewis made two more free throws and Kip Jones added another.

Everette Stephens added 19 points, 17 in the first half, Mitchell had 16 and Melvin McCants 10 for Purdue. The Boilermakers hit 33 of 54 shots for 61 percent.

Pervis Ellison scored 20 points to lead Louisville, while Herbert Crook added 18, LaBradford Smith 13 and reserve Felton Spencer 10.

Purdue used a 20-10 scoring run over the final 5:15 of the first half to take its halftime lead. Stephens scored eight points, including two 3-pointers, to spark the outburst.

Oklahoma.....86
Pittsburgh.....83

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Harvey Grant scored 28 points and Mookie Blaylock made two free throws with four seconds remaining as 11th-ranked Oklahoma held off No. 6 Pitt, 86-83, in a non-conference game Saturday.

Pitt, 13-2, rallied from a 17-point deficit in the second half to pull within 84-83 with nine seconds left on Jerome Lane's basket.

Blaylock, who finished with 19 points, was then fouled and hit both ends of the one-and-one to provide the winning margin. Oklahoma, 16-2, sealed the victory when Grant stole a pass intended for Sean Miller, who was behind the 3-point stripe on the right wing.

Oklahoma of the Big Eight increased its nine-point halftime lead to 59-42 with 16:15 remaining, but the Panthers went on a 19-6 run to pull within 65-61 with 10:56 left.

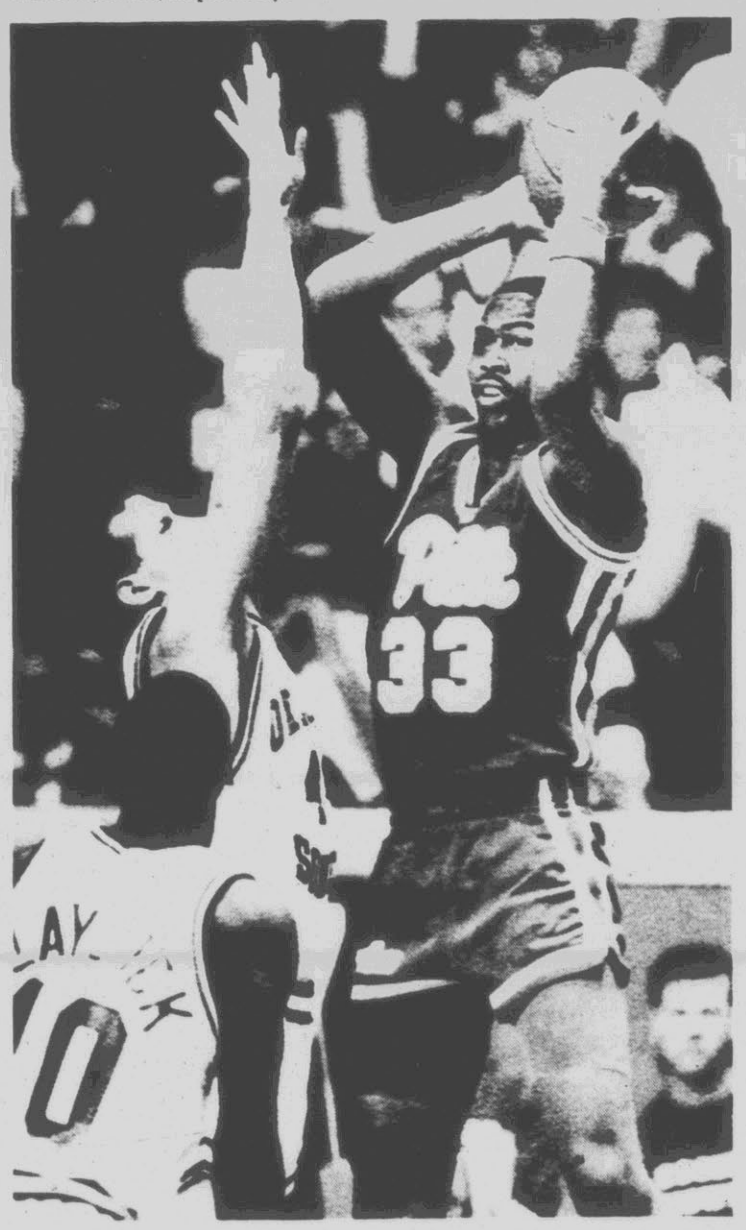

Oklahoma led 77-70, but again Pitt of the Big East rallied to pull within three on several occasions down the stretch.

Oklahoma trailed 20-17 with 13:26 remaining in the first half after Pitt's Demetreus Gore — who led his team with 21 points — made back-to-back shots from in the lane. Then, the Sooners got their running game going, outscoring the Panthers 18-2 in a span of four minutes to pull ahead 35-22.

Grant scored nine points during the run, including consecutive slam dunks that followed Panther turnovers. Pitt had 24 turnovers compared to Oklahoma's nine.

Following a timeout, Pitt went to a more deliberate offense and pulled within six on two occasions and trailed 49-40 at the half.

Stacey King scored 16 points for Oklahoma. Charles Smith and Lane scored 16 apiece for Pitt, and had 14 and 13 rebounds, respectively.

Missouri.....119

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Derrick Chievous scored 30 points and Byron Irvin had 22 of his 24 in the first half as Missouri set a school record for points in a game while beating 10th-ranked Iowa State 119-93 in a Big Eight game Saturday.

The Tigers, 11-4 overall and 1-2 in the conference, built 30-point leads in the first half, making 66 percent of their shots from the field and outrebounding Iowa State 32-15 in the half before a record crowd of 13,544.

It was the most points by a Missouri team since the Tigers scored 112 against Northern Arizona on Jan. 15, 1979. Missouri scored more than 100 points for the third time this season, the most 100-point games in a season for the Tigers.

Jeff Grayer scored 23 points and Lafester Rhodes had 22 for the Cyclones, 16-4 and 2-1.

Irvin's 22 led Missouri to a 63-36 lead at halftime.

Chievous, who didn't come into the game until there were 8½ minutes to play, scored 12 points and had eight rebounds in the half.

Doug Smith added 26 for the Tigers.

Illinois.....79
Northwestern.....48

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Ken Battle scored 17 points Saturday to lead 13th-ranked Illinois past Northwestern 79-48 in a Big Ten conference game.

Nick Anderson added 16 and Glynn Blackwell 12 as the Illini took control early. Northwestern was led by Shon Morris, who scored 12.

The victory improved Illinois' overall record to 14-4 and 4-2 in the Big Ten. Northwestern fell to 7-9 and 2-4 in the conference.

Battle scored three consective baskets to give Illinois a 6-0 lead. Northwestern called timeout but the Wildcats' strategy session failed to stem the Illini momentum. Morris hit a basket but Illinois, playing an up-tempo game and committing few turnovers, led 24-7 with 10 minutes left in the first half.

Illiniois led by as many 18 points in the opening half, and finished the half with a 38-24 lead.

Blackwell, held scoreless in the first half, scored all 12 of his points in the second.

Notre Dame.....80
Kansas.....76

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — David Rivers made 14 of 15 free throws, including six in the final minute, and scored 29 points Saturday as Notre Dame upset No. 16 Kansas, 80-76, in a non-conference game.

Notre Dame, 11-4, trailed the entire first half and were down 11 points in the second before rallying against the Jayhawks, 12-5.

Rivers sealed the victory with three seconds left when he hit both ends of a one-and-one after Kansas had taken its final timeout and Kevin Pritchard fouled the senior guard on the inbounds play.

At 1:13, Pritchard hit a 3-pointer for a 72-72 tie, but Gary Voce put the Irish ahead with a basket.

Rivers hit both ends of a one-and-one with 42 seconds left after a Pritchard foul to give the Irish a 76-72 lead. Danny Manning, who scored 22, scored off a rebound with 32 seconds left but missed the first half of a one-and-one with 15 seconds remaining that could have tied the score.

Lincoln Minor hit a 19-footer for Kansas with seven seconds left to pull the Jayhawks within two before Rivers made his final free throws.

With 10 minutes left and Notre Dame trailing 61-53, the Irish went on a nine-point streak to take the lead for the first time.

The Irish pulled to within 39-36 in the final minute of the half before Keith Harris scored for a 41-36 Kansas lead at halftime.

Brigham Young.....89
New Mexico.....82

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Center Jim Usevitch scored 24 points and led a strong inside game that powered undefeated and No. 12 Brigham Young to an 89-82 Western Athletic Conference win Saturday over New Mexico.

BYU, one of only two undefeated major-college teams, also got 22 points from forward Jeff Chatman and 20 from 6-foot-10 Michael Smith to snap New Mexico's 13-game home winning streak.

The Cougars, who have the inside track on the regular-season conference title, are 14-0 overall and 5-0 in the WAC. New Mexico is 15-6 and 3-3.

New Mexico was led by Charlie Thomas with 20 points and Hunter Greene and Darrell McGee with 16 each. Greene, the team's leading scorer, was held to a pair of second-half free throws by BYU's swarming defense.

The Lobos, who had beaten No. 1 ranked Arizona and No. 5 Wyoming in Albuquerque, did not have enough offense to match Usevitch, Chatman and Smith's scoring.

New Mexico, with Greene scoring seven points in the first five minutes, led 15-8 before BYU answered with eight straight points.

New Mexico still led 36-30 with just over four minutes left in the first half, but Usevitch scored 10 points to give the Cougars a 44-42 lead at halftime.

BYU got an early second-half basket from Smith and never trailed again as the Cougars, the best shooting team in the nation, consistently found the mark over New Mexico's defense.

BYU, which beat No. 18 Texas-El Paso 81-71 Thursday, scored a rare WAC sweep on the road over two of the teams that were expected to challenge for the league title. The Cougars have also won at Wyoming, another contender.

Florida.....76
Tennessee.....56

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Vernon Maxwell scored 18 points and became the leading scorer in Florida history as the Gators downed Tennessee 76-56 in a Southeastern Conference game Saturday.

Dwayne Schintzius added 17 points for Florida, 14-4 overall and 5-1 in the SEC, despite sitting out nearly 15 minutes with foul trouble. Ronnie Montgomery chipped in 11 points.

Dyron Nix led Tennessee with 14 points, Elvin Brown had 13 and Greg Bell added 10. The Vols fell to 10-5, 3-3 in the SEC.

The teams were tied 25-25 at the half and swapped the lead early in the second half before Florida took control.

North Tops South In Senior Bowl

Bell Sacked

South squad quarterback Kerwin Bell (18) of Florida is sacked by the North's Ken Harvey of California in the first half of the Senior Bowl Saturday. (AP Laserphoto)

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Chris Chandler of Washington got the North rolling with a first-quarter touchdown pass and the Yanks went on to down the South 21-7 in the Senior Bowl all-star football game Saturday.

"All I had to do was pull the trigger a couple of times," Chandler said.

Don McPherson of Syracuse also threw for a touchdown as the North built a 14-0 halftime lead and were never seriously challenged.

"The defense played hard, the offense made the big plays," North Coach Chuck Knox of the Seattle Seahawks said.

"The kids played with enthusiasm," Knox said. "It was a good week with the kids, but this made the week to win it."

"They ha the two big plays and the interception," South Coach Jim Mora of the New Orleans Saints said, referring to a pair of touchdown passes and an interception that set up the other North score.

"We had a hard time stopping their running game," Mora said. The North netted 231 yards on the ground.

Chandler engineered a 99-yard scoring drive in the first period, hitting Willie Anderson of UCLA on a 36-yard touchdown pass.

McPherson, the All-American who led Syracuse to an 11-0-1 record, hit the fleet Anthony Miller of Tennessee on a 53-yard scoring play 50 seconds before halftime.

The North, cutting the South's series lead to 19-17-3, built its lead to 21-0 early in the final period on a 1-yard run by Ickey Woods of Nevada-Las Vegas one play after Mississippi Valley's Vincent Brown returned an intercepted pass 26 yards.

The South avoided the first shutout in the 39-year history of the Senior Bowl when Florida's Kerwin Bell connected with South Carolina's Sterling Sharpe on a 60-yard touchdown pass with 11:41 left in the game.

Sharpe got behind the North defense and made the catch at the North 25, sprinting the rest of the way untouched.

The North defense kept the South bottled up most of the day, recording six sacks — three by Ken Harvey of California, two by Paul Frase of Syracuse and one by Tim Moore of Michigan State.

Chandler completed all four of his passes for 77 yards in the 99-yard scoring drive that started after Auburn's Scott Bolton tipped a punt back from the goal that was downed.

Thurman Thomas of Oklahoma State rushed for 97 yards on 16 attempts, an effort that earned him the game's Most Valuable Player award.

Chandler was voted the North's top offensive player and Harvey the outstanding defensive award. South honors went to Bell on offense and Auburn's Aundray Bruce on defense.

Mavs Take Win

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Mavericks overcame an 18-point first-quarter deficit and Mark Aguirre scored 35 points Saturday night in a 113-97 NBA victory over the Milwaukee Bucks.

The Mavericks, off to their best start ever, won their fourth straight game and seventh in their last eight starts.

To do it, the Mavericks needed the second-biggest comeback in franchise history. Dallas rallied from a 19-point deficit to beat Portland in 1984.

McGee Set At USC

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A changing of the guard, especially in collegiate sport, often results in what athletic officials term a transitional period. But at Southern California, Mike McGee missed that time and went right to the top.

One year ago, McGee, a native of Elizabeth City now serving as athletic director at USC, hired Arizona's Larry Smith to turn things around for the Trojan football program, which has a 13-11 record in the previous two seasons.

Smith responded by taking the Trojans to the PAC-10 title and only their second Rose Bowl Berth since 1980, where they lost to Michigan State. Despite the loss, McGee's days are much brighter.

"It is real exciting," McGee said. "Watching things like this year and seeing young people come together and have a wonderful experience, and play about as well as they can play, that's a real joy."

McGee knows about success in football. He won the Outland Trophy in 1959 as the nation's best lineman while playing at Duke. He was also named Atlantic Coast Conference player of the year.

McGee signed with the St. Louis Cardinals right out of college, immediately made the starting lineup and was runner-up in rookie of the year balloting in the National Football League. But a neck injury three years later curtailed his career.

Turning to coaching, McGee joined Duke coach Bill Murray as offensive line coach in 1963. Two years later, he took a similar position at Wisconsin, then he went on to Minnesota, again as offensive line coach.

In 1970, McGee became head football coach at East Carolina, and his brother, Jerry, joined him as defensive coordinator. One year later, the pair went to Duke in the same roles.

After a 37-47-4 record in eight seasons, McGee was fired in 1978. With two years remaining on his contract, McGee went to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, where he earned his degree in athletic administration in 1980.

Upon receiving his degree, McGee became athletic director at Cincinnati. Four years later, McGee went to Southern Cal.

Despite his accomplishments as an administrator, McGee says he misses roaming the sidelines.

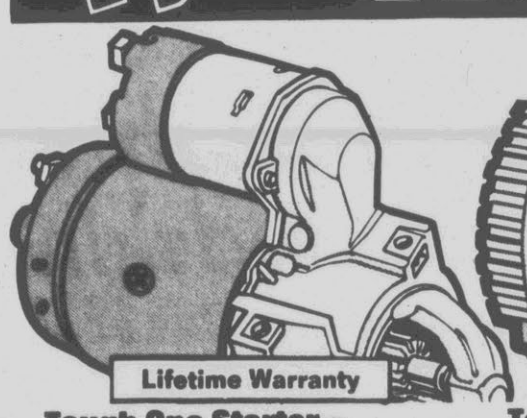

"Coaching? What I do now comes in a distant second to coaching. I love to coach," McGee said. "It's teaching, and that was one of the few things I did well. It's a very creative thing to do. I like working with the young people directly; now I'm insulated from them.

"But (coaching) is not to be, and I've been out of it a long time now," he said. "I'm relegated to the life of administrator."

That life has been good, especially with the resurgence of Trojan football. McGee expects it will only get better.

"The program has turned around," McGee said. "It had fallen off a little, but it's back now. The Rose Bowl is just an indication of things to come."

ECU Swimmers Sweep Past ODU

NORFOLK — East Carolina's men's and women's swim teams both took w ins Saturday in a dual meet against Old Dominion University.

The men came out winners by the count of 106-105 while the women won, 115-99.

Raymond Kennedy was the only dual winner for the men, taking first in the 200 individual medley and the 200-meter breaststroke.

For the women, Patty Walsh was a dual winner, taking firsts in the 200-meter free style and 500-meter free style events. In addition, ECU's Sherry Campbell won both the 1-meter and the 3-meter diving events.

ECU's men move to 6-4 while the women are 10-3. This meet was the last dual meet of the season for ECU, which returns to action Feb. 10 in the Colonial Athletic Association championships at the Naval Academy.

In the men's meet, ODU shaved for the meet, marking the third time this season that a team has shaved before facing the Pirates.

"This is the fastest group we've ever had going into a championship, so we're feeling confident," said ECU coach Rick Kobe. "The girls (being) 10-3 is just incredible. The guys' 6-4 (record) is very deceiving since we've had so many folks shave for us and make ECU their team to beat. We're right where we want to be."

NBA Suspends Cooper And Cummings

NEW YORK (AP) — Swingman Michael Cooper of the Los Angeles Lakers and forward Pat Cummings of the New York Knicks were suspended without pay for one game each for their participation in an altercation during Friday night's game, the NBA said Saturday.

The fight occurred during the fourth quarter of the Lakers' 113-112 victory at The Forum.

In the brawl, Cummings tried to throw a punch at the Lakers' A.C. Green, with Cooper standing in the way. Cooper went back at Cummings as players from both benches emptied onto the court.

When order was restored several minutes later, after some of the combatants had spilled into the crowd, Cummings, Cooper and Green were ejected.

The league said Cummings would miss the Knicks' game at Sacramento Saturday night and Cooper would not play in the Lakers game at Seattle Sunday.

Cummings was suspended for "initiating the incident" and Cooper for "entering and escalating the altercation," the league said.

No action was taken against Green, but the NBA said fines against Cummings, Cooper and other players on both teams would be announced within a few days.

Earnhardt Named Driver Of The Year

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — NASCAR driver Dale Earnhardt, who won his second consecutive Winston Cup title this past season, has been named the winner of the Richard Petty Driver of the Year Award for 1987.

The 35-year-old Doolie, N.C., native won the award by the largest margin in the history of the National Motorsports Press Association, which selects the winner of the award, officials said Saturday.

Earnhardt will receive $30,000 from R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., which sponsors NASCAR's Winston Cup circuit, during the NMPA's annual convention Sunday in Charlotte, N.C.

Petty, the circuit's winningest all-time driver with 200 victories and seven Winston Cup championships, is scheduled to be on hand to present the trophy to Earnhardt.

Driving for the Richard Childress-owned team in 1987, Earnhardt won the Winston Cup title for the third time in his career. His first championship came in 1980.

Elway, Williams In The Focus

SAN DIEGO (AP) — John Elway is Superman in an orange cape, carrying the Denver Broncos to their second straight Super Bowl.

Doug Williams is known more as the first black quarterback to play in the NFL's showcase game, not as the star of the show. Or as he puts it: "I don't win the games, I just don't lose them."

For the second straight year, the Super Bowl comes down to John Elway against the world, the world this year being the Washington Redskins rather than the New York Giants.

Is there anyone else on the Broncos besides their quarterback?

Sure. There are his targets, the Three Amigos — Mark Jackson, Vance Johnson and Ricky Nattiel — Orson Mobley, the huge tight end, and Rulon Jones and Karl Mecklenburg on defense.

But this is Elway's show.

This year he was everything he was supposed to be when he came out of college five years ago. The turning point may have been the 98-yard drive in the last five minutes of last year's AFC title game with Cleveland that put the Broncos in the Super Bowl and gave him the confidence he might have lacked.

This year he has carried a Denver team that lost five starters to retirement and more to injury — their starters missed a total of 61 games.

Beginning at midseason, when the Broncos began using the shotgun more than 50 percent of the time, he has been closer to the old single-wing tailback than the traditional NFL quarterback. Thirty years ago, he would have been called a triple threat — not only does he pass, but he's Denver's second leading rusher and even has quick-kicked twice, once last Sunday against Cleveland in the AFC championship game.

The shotgun began after Elway's only bad game, 13 of 30 for 163 yards in a 30-mph wind in Buffalo, where a 21-14 loss in Buffalo dropped the Broncos to 4-3-1.

It was put in for the Bears to offset their ferocious pass rush, and continued on — in wins over the Bears, Raiders and Chargers, Elway threw for six touchdowns and an average of 329 yards and ran 20 times for 100 yards and a touchdown. Overall, Denver is 8-1 since the shotgun started, including two playoff wins.

"He always had all the skills he has now," Coach Dan Reeves says. "What he has now is experience and confidence and the knowledge of what to do and when to do it."

What he can do are things like the play in last year's Super Bowl when he scrambled to the left side of the field, then threw the ball 55 yards in the air to Steve Watson on the right side.

That also showed what he can't do — that drive ended with Rich Karlis missing a 34-yard field goal attempt.

It also shows what can happen in Super Bowls. While everyone talked "Elway, Elway, Elway," Phil Simms of the Giants went virtually ignored.

All he did was go 22 of 25, led the Giants to a 39-20 victory and won the Most Valuable Player Award.

So pay at least a little attention to Doug Williams.

Like Simms last year, he is just a name behind a bunch of other names. But he does lead a Washington team that will be playing in its third Super Bowl in six years.

There's Dexter Manley, the (sometimes) nonstop talker and (sometimes) All-Pro defensive end; cornerback Darrell Green, the NFL's fastest man; running backs George Rogers and Kelvin Bryant, wide receivers Gary Clark and Art Monk and the offensive line collectively known as The Hogs.

But Doug Williams?

Nothing more than a 32-year-old retread from the USFL who got the quarterback job because Jay Schroeder completed just 48 percent of his passes.

Yet there was a time, nine years ago, when Doug Williams was John Elway.

He was Tampa Bay's first pick in the 1978 draft and the man around whom the second-year franchise would build. He was of classic NFL dimensions, 6-foot-4, 215 pounds with a rifle arm and quick feet.

But instead of slowly learning his trade, he was thrown in from the start with a bad team — his first regular season pass was intercepted and returned for a touchdown.

His first season, he completed just 37.6 percent of his passes and in his second completed just 41.8 percent. He could throw the ball 60 yards in the air with ease, but he also bounced bullets off the chests of receivers seven yards away.

Nonetheless, he took Tampa Bay to the NFC title game in 1979, where it lost 9-0 to the Rams.

From there on it was downhill, both professionally and personally.

In 1983, his wife died of cancer and he left the Bucs in a contract dispute to join the Oklahoma Outlaws of the USFL.

In 1986, after the USFL folded, he was signed by the Redskins as backup to Schroeder.

While Schroeder went to the Pro Bowl, Williams threw one pass all year. It was incomplete.

Yet he retained his confidence.

"You don't pay a black quarterback $475,000 to be a backup if he can't play," he said.

In the off-season, he was almost traded to the Raiders — Washington wanted a first-round pick for him; Los Angeles offered a second. "We weren't ready to give someone a first-stringer for a second-string price," Coach Joe Gibbs says.

Then Schroeder was hurt in the opening game this year and Williams stepped in to lead the Redskins to a 34-24 win over Philadelphia. He started the second game, a 21-20 loss to Atlanta, then sat idle for four weeks during the strike.

When the strike ended, Schroeder had his job back. The Redskins were winning but Schroeder was bouncing passes or overthrowing them. Williams became a starter again in the second half of the final regular-season game — at Minnesota against the team the Redskins were to beat in the NFC title game.

But he never thought of himself as THE Redskins, a point emphasized in that game last Sunday in which he was just 9 for 26 for 119 yards, but threw the two TD passes that gave Washington a 17-10 victory. The secret was that he didn't throw the ball to the Vikings or fumble it.

"If I don't get us beat, we've got too many other people who can win for us. It wasn't that way with Tampa Bay. There, if Doug Williams didn't do it, it didn't get done," he says.

"The only difference between the Doug Williams of nine years ago and the Doug Williams of today is better players around him and better coaches."

Dan Henning, the former Atlanta coach who now coaches Washington's receivers, sees it differently.

"It's the obvious difference between a 23-year-old quarterback and a 32-year-old. Doug sees the field much better and picks out his secondary receivers better. He's just a good, professional quarterback."

Elway, however, is a lot more than that.

Happy Elway

North Wishes Redskins Luck

HERNDON, Va. (AP) — Lt. Col. Oliver North bid the Washington Redskins good luck Saturday after the team finished its final workout before going to San Diego for the Super Bowl.

Cornerback Darrell Green aggravated his rib injury during the two-hour session, but Coach Joe Gibbs dismissed the mishap as minor and preferred instead to talk about North's surprise appearance.

"Oliver North has gotten to be a friend of ours," Gibbs said. "He came here at Christmas and the players got a kick out of it. So he came out again today to wish us off."

The Redskins leave for San Diego Sunday night and resume practice Monday for their Jan. 31 Super Bowl date with the Denver Broncos.

North, the former National Security assistant, arrived shortly before the end of practice. He was invited onto the field, and after shouts of "Ollie! Ollie!" subsided, he spoke to the team.

"Our players like the Colonel," Gibbs said. "You know those Marines going over the hill, they've got a lot at stake, too. A little more than what we have."

Meanwhile, Green sat out most of the practice after being struck in the ribs with a football. Three weeks ago, in a playoff game at Chicago, he suffered pulled cartilage in his ribs while running back a punt for a touchdown.

"Darrell got stung again, he got hit," Gibbs said. "But I don't think it's any big deal. He finished practice and shouldn't miss any time."

Starting defensive tackle Darryl Grant missed much of the session because of a sprained ankle, but Gibbs said he expected him to be ready before the Super Bowl.

Offensive tackle Joe Jacoby missed some drills due to a shoulder injury he suffered Friday, but he said, "The shoulder's fine. t's just a slight strain."

The players were pleased to bid farewell to Redskin Park, where they have practiced since late August.

"We're glad to get out of here, I know that," defensive end Dexter Manley said. "I don't have any sentimental feelings about leaving here for warm San Diego."

Gibbs said he hoped the players would be more intense on the west coast than they were in the east.

"We've had good work, but they (the players) haven't concentrated the way we like," Gibbs said. "Hopefully, we'll get everything out of our system and on Wednesday get back to some serious, hard work."

Gibbs did not lay the team's placekicking controversy to rest.

Harvard's Star

Ralph James Jr., who was scouted as one of the best high school basketball players in America as a high school senior last year said he chose Harvard because he was accepted on his academic, rather than his basketball, accomplishments. (AP Laserphoto)

James Chose Academics

BOSTON (AP) — The money was his for the taking. Ralph James Jr., one of America's best high school basketball players, could have had a free ride at Stanford.

He enjoyed his visit to the West Coast school. It offered an excellent academic program and big-time basketball. He returned home to West Hempstead, N.Y., to ponder his future.

James already had rejected full four-year scholarships from Notre Dame, DePaul, Wake Forest and Michigan State, all major basketball schools. Stanford made the same offer.

Today, as a freshman guard, James is the leading scorer and rebounder for Harvard, which accepted him on his academic credentials. His family is paying $18,500 to send him there this year. "When I got my acceptance it was like 'how could I turn this down?' " he said.

His parents are social workers. They are sacrificing, but not suffering, to pay his school bills. Harvard is providing no financial aid. His parents are borrowing money.

"Some of my friends told me, 'you're crazy. You're giving up a free $18,000 plus school which is just as good as Harvard or better,' " said James' father, also named Ralph. "That was not the issue. The issue was we wanted him to be happy."

"I was looking for the best education I could get and this was it," his son said.

At Archbishop Molloy High School in Queens, N.Y., James averaged 23.5 points and 10 rebounds as a senior, when he was named to the Converse All-American team as an honorable mention. He also excelled in the classroom.

At Harvard he is averaging 14.1 points and 5.7 rebounds per game. He also has As in expository writing and second-year French, an A-minus in introductory economics, and a B-plus in calculus. He's also taking a course in social analysis.

His team, with a 6-8 record, is currently on a 16-day break from basketball games while exams are held.

"If we have a major paper to do or tests to study for we call up the basketball office and explain what's going on and come in late to practice or not at all," James said. "I doubt it's like that elsewhere."

One of the key factors in his decision to attend Harvard rather than Stanford was its proximity to his family.

"My parents have seen me develop and grow thus far," he said. "This would give them a chance to see me."

"He had two great schools," said Jack Curran, his high school coach. "The decision he had to make was did he want to be away so much from home."

James would have gotten wider exposure at a more prominent basketball school. He could have played on television. That might have enhanced his NBA prospects.

"He's got the potential to be as good as anybody who has played here," Harvard Coach Peter Roby said.

James hopes he can play well enough at Harvard to have a shot at a pro career. He also has other aspirations. He worked on Wall Street last summer and is considering concentrating on business or pre-medical courses. Some top basketball schools couldn't prepare him as well for careers in those fields.

Acquaintances who questioned James' decision to reject scholarships "didn't have the intellect to understand the long term value of a Harvard education," said his father, who describes the family as middle class.

"He's a dinosaur in terms of college athletics. He's extinct," Roby said. "He's a very good basketball player who is a good student who concerns himself with education first and basketball second.

"We have to get back to the point where people aren't surprised that good athletes and good students want to get a quality education first," he added. "I hope he'll be an example for more and more kids to do the same thing."

One of those kids is his sister Brittany. She's a top basketball player and student who may go to Harvard next fall. Two siblings in the same school could bring financial aid.

Their father said he has had to give up golf trips to such places as Florida, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and other travel. He and his wife Betty don't go to the theater as often.

"We'll just have to cut back on everything," the elder James said. "If a child gives us back what our children are giving us, we're blessed. I work with problem youngsters. My wife works with juvenile delinquents. Ralph has never been a problem."

On Jan. 15, Harvard visited Columbia. James and his wife were in the stands. Harvard won 64-57. The younger James led all scorers with 20 points.

Pitt Coach Expects Heyward To Return

PITTSBURGH (AP) — University of Pittsburgh Coach Mike Gottfried said junior All-American running back Craig "Ironhead" Heyward has always maintained he planned to stay in school — despite reports he apparently wants to turn pro.

Saturday's Pittsburgh Post-Gazette reported Heyward, the nation's second-leading rusher last fall with 1,655 yards, planned to meet this weekend with sports agent Bruce Allen in Washington, D.C., to discuss turning pro.

"I've heard the rumors. I've talked talked to him (in the past) about it, but he said there was nothing to it," Gottfried said. "I intend to talk to Craig as soon as I can, as soon as we can find him."

A "C. Heyward" was booked on a USAir flight that arrived in Washington on Friday night. Heyward reportedly has met several times with Eric Metz, a Pittsburgh insurance salesman who represents Allen, the Post-Gazette reported.

NCAA rules prohibit a player from having any contact with an agent while he has college eligibility remaining.

"I caught Metz in the locker room about a year ago," Gottfried said. "I threw him out. I got a letter about a month ago from him apologizing. He said that wasn't the way they operated."

The coach said if Heyward is involved with an agent, he will be disciplined.

"There is a penalty to pay. We will follow the rules, Our policy is to go after these agents as hard as we can with all the resources we can," Gottfried said.

Last year, running back Charles Gladman and defensive back Teryl Austin were ruled ineligible for their involvement with agent Norby Walters. Austin's eligibility was restored because he cooperated with an NCAA investigation. Gladman was later signed by the Tampa Bay Bucs.

Heyward refused to confirm the Allen meeting when contacted by the Post-Gazette.

Heyward reportedly did poorly in his fall semester classes and has not attended winter semester classes that began Jan. 6. Heyward has told several friends he wants to turn pro and forego his senior season, even though he would be a frontrunner for the Heisman Trophy, the newspaper said.

The 5-foot-11 Heyward ran for at least 100 yards in all 12 of Pitt's games last fall and finished fifth in the Heisman Trophy balloting behind four seniors.

Heyward apparently would not be eligible for the regular NFL draft because he has eligibility remaining and has not graduated.

However, if he were declared ineligible — such as for having dealings with an agent — he could petition the NFL to hold a supplemental draft.

Buck's Pierce Returns

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Ricky Pierce has agreed to end his holdout and return to the Milwaukee Bucks under terms of an existing contract, the NBA club said Saturday.

The 6-foot-4 guard, who asked that his contract be renegotiated, did not show for training camp in October. He was placed on the team's suspended list in November and will stay on the list until conditioning restores him to playing capacity, the club said.

"We are happy this situation has been resolved," Bucks vice president John Steinmiller said in a statement. "It has been a difficult time for the Bucks and Ricky, and we want to put it behind us."

Pierce was the club's second-best scorer last season, averaging 19½ points a game. He led the team in field accuracy (53.4 percent) and free-throw accuracy (88 percent).

The Bucks said Pierce would return to practice Monday under supervision of assistant coah Mike Dunleavy "and fulfill the terms of his existing contract."

He signed a three-year contract in March 1986. It calls for $225,000 this year and $250,000 next season. Pierce had asked for at least $700,000 a year.

Warren LeGarie said Friday he had replaced Lance Luchnick as Pierce's agent, predicting the holdout would be resolved.

Coach Del Harris has said he doubts there would be animosity against Pierce when he returns.

Pierce had reported Harris advised him to renegotiate his contract last year.

Vikings Rally To Top West Craven

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

HOLLYWOOD — Sherwood Wilder helped bring D.H. Conley back from the brink of disaster and Paul Merritt and James Smith took over from there to lead D.H. Conley past West Craven, 57-54, Friday night in high school basketball action.

After leading most of the game, the Vikings found themselves down by three at 53-50 with just under a minute to go.

But Wilder nailed a 3-point jumper with 50 seconds left to knot the score.

James Smith followed that up by hounding West Craven guard Willie Manley, who scored a game-high 28 points, into a five-second violation to give the Vikings the ball back with 35 seconds left on the clock.

Conley then worked the ball around the top of the key until Merritt found himself all alone just inside the foul line. He hesitated, shot and the ball found nothing but net to give Conley a 55-53 advantage.

After a timeout, West Craven worked the ball inbounds to Manley with 12 seconds to go. Smith pressured him and Manley passed off to teammate Thomas McGhee, who lost the ball in a double team. Smith came up with the ball, was fouled and hit both free throws with four seconds remaining to seal the victory.

"If we hadn't played good defense, we'd have been on the short end of the score," said Conley coach Walter Claybrook. "In the end, our guards came through and made some crucial plays."

And no play was more crucial than the shot by Wilder.

"The kid hit a big shot to tie the ballgame," said West Craven coach Lorenzo Jones. "If he missed it, we'd probably have won."

West Craven, a traditional Coastal Conference power, came into the game with only a 3-8 mark, but the Eagles made the Vikings work for everything they got.

"Lorenzo told me before the game that this is the best defensive team he's had down there, and West Craven has had some real powerhouse teams," Claybrook said. "They will get after you."

It was defense that twice allowed the Eagles to climb back into it after falling behind.

Conley led from the outset and held a 31-21 halftime advantage.

"In the first half, we didn't know about their outside shooting," Jones said. "They hit about everything they threw up. In the second half, we got down by 10. We felt we needed to (pressure) to get back in the game."

Conley led 41-34 after three quarters of play, but West Craven quickly crawled back into the game.

William Brown then opened the final period by scoring on a follow shot to make it 41-36. Conley responded by turning the ball over as Manley came up with a steal and a layup to make it 41-38.

The Vikings again turned the ball over and Brown came up with the loose ball under the basket and laid it in to make it 41-40.

But Conley regrouped from there. With 7:14 remaining, Merritt scored on a tip-in to make it 43-40. West Craven turned the ball over at the other end and with 6:34 to go, Wilder hit a pair of free throws to give the Vikings a 45-40 advantage.

Wilder then came up with a steal, was fouled again and hit two free throws to make it 47-40.

At the other end, McGhee missed the front end of a one and one with 5:53 to go and Conley turned that into two points at the other end as Terry Williams followed a miss by Phil Medlin to make t 49-40.

But just as quickly as the Vikings built up a lead, they lost it.

After Brown hit a jumper to make it 49-42, Conley turned the ball over and Manley nailed a 3-pointer to make it 49-45.

With just under four minutes to go, Keith Roundtree blocked Medlin inside and West Craven came up with the ball. The Eagles' Delton Harris finished the play off with a layup to make it 49-47 with 3:57 to go.

After another Viking turnover, Harris scored again and tied the game. West Craven then took the lead with 2:25 to go when Brown nailed a short jumper to make it 51-49.

With 2:04 remaining, Ed West hit one of two free throws to bring the Vikings within 51-50.

Conley had a chance to take the lead with 2:02 remaining but Merritt missed the front end of the one and one.

Harris missed at the other end for the Eagles, but William Chapman came up with a steal and drew a foul with 58 seconds left. He hit both free throws for a 53-50 lead, but that was it for West Craven as Conley scored the next seven points to take the win.

"The guys played hard, they just didn't play wise and intelligent against the press," Claybrook said.

Conley was led by Merritt with 17 points and Medlin with 12.

Conley improves to 8-5 overall and 3-1 while the Eagles fall to 3-9 and 1-2.

In the girl's game, West Craven rallied from a six-point fourth-quarter deficit to take a 63-52 win over Conley.

Conley, which was led by Lendora Tyson's 22 points, led 39-37 after three quarters of play.

Tyson scored seven points in the opening minutes of the fourth period as the Valkyries stormed out to a 50-44 advantage, but West Craven outscored Conley, 15-2 the rest of the way to take the win.

West Craven took the lead with 1:13 remaining on a two free throws by Evelyn Brimmer that made it 53-52.

After a Conley turnover, Chundra Crouelle hit a pair of free throws to make it 55-52. West Craven then hit six more free throws down the stretch to take the win.

Crouelle had 20 points to lead West Craven while Tyson's 22 led the Valkyries, 5-8 overall and 0-4 in the conference.

Both teams return to action Wednesday at East Carteret.

Fenner's Final Drug Trial Postponed

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The attorney for former North Carolina tailback Derrick Fenner says Fenner's trial on drug and weapons charges will be postponed and he expects Fenner to be cleared of criminal charges in a few weeks.

"We have been involved in extensive discussion withg the prosecutors," defense attorney Fred Joseph said. "Both sides believe a few more weeks to allow us to come to a conclusion satisfactory to both. I think there is a reasonable chance that this case will not go to a jury trial.

"My goal is for Derrick to come out of this without a criminal record, and I believe there is a good chance that will happen. I would say this whole thing will be wrapped up in a few more weeks," Joseph said in an interview with The Chapel Hill Newspaper.

Fenner, 20, of Oxon Hill, Md., was charged last April 9 by police in Prince George's County, Md., with possession of cocaine and transporting a handgun without a license. He was charged after police stopped a car driven by Fenner in his hometown.

Fenner's trial was scheduled to begin Monday, but Joseph said he has requested a continuance in cooperation with the prosecution.

If convicted, Fenner faces a maximum of four years in prison for the cocaine charge and three years for the handgun charge.

Prince George's County assistant state attorney Mary Schestrom refused to comment on discussions with Joseph.

"I expect the continuance will be granted, but a date hasn't been set," she said. However, she added that she wants the Fenner case concluded before Feb. 16, when "the real people who did the Kirkwood shooting will go on trial."

On May 23, 19-year-old Marcellus Leach was shot to death at the Kirkwood Apartments in Hyattsville, Md., also in Prince George's County. In November, first-degree murder charges against Fenner were dropped as well as a charge of attempted murder.

Prosecutors dropped murder charges against Fenner because of what Prince George's County chief state's attorney Alex Williams said was "substantial evidence" that Fenner was not at the crime scene.

In the current charges, Fenner is accused of carrying 25 small vials in his jacket, each of which contained traces of cocaine. A .38-caliber handgun in a paper bag was found under the driver's seat, and had been used. But Ms. Schestrom said that gun had not been recently fired at the time it was found.

Police say the truck in which Fenner was stopped did not belong to him, but Ms. Schestrom said it was owned by a "street person" that authorities cannot find.

ASU Lineman Wins Jacobs Blocking Trophy

CLINTON, S.C. (AP) — Appalachian State offensive lineman James Hardman was named Friday the Southern Conference winner of the Jacobs Blocking Trophy.

Hardman, a 6-5, 279-pound tackle from Jefferson, Ga., is a two-year captain and four-year starter for the Mountaineers, who advanced to the NCAA Division I-AA semifinals before losing to Marshall.

Hardman, a communications major, earned the highest blocking grades of any Mountaineer offensive lineman this year after missing all of 1986 with a knee injury.

It is the second straight year a player from Appalachian State has won the award. Last year, offensive tackle Mike Callaway won it.

The trophy is awarded annually by Hugh and William Jacobs of Clinton to the outstanding blocker in the Atlantic Coast Conference, Southeastern Conference and Southern Conference, as well as the state of South Carolina.

Wake Gives Dooley A Contract Extension

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Wake Forest football coach Bill Dooley has received an extension of his five-year contract and athletic director Gene Hooks has announced plans to upgrade the school's football facilities.

Specific details of the extension were not released Friday and Dooley would not comment on the terms during a telephone interview. But he passed on the thanks for the contract extension on to his team.

"That's a tribute to the players," Dooley said. "They had a good year."

"He has provided excellent leadership in all areas and we feel that Bill Dooley and Wake Forest football are a great match," Hooks said in a prepared statement.

Dooley led Wake Forest to a 7-4 record in 1987, his first at the Atlantic Coast Conference school. It was the second best record for Wake Forest in 43 seasons.

Snyder Says He Has Support

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Jimmy "The Greek" Snyder, hospitalized after experiencing chest pains, says the public is overwhelmingly behind him despite his remarks about blacks that led to his firing by CBS.

"The people's response has been tremendous," Snyder told The News and Observer of Raleigh in an interview before he walked into Duke Medical Center on Friday. "Some writers have taken us apart, but the people haven't."

Snyder was fired last Saturday by CBS, where he had worked for 12 years as part of the network's "NFL Today" pre-game show making predictions of upcoming games, one day after he said that if blacks "take over coaching jobs like everybody wants them to, there's not to be anything left for the white people."

Despite his firing, he noted that polls by Cable News Network and ESPN have shown widespread support.

"All these polls have been running 70 to 30 for me," he said in a telephone interview.

Snyder said many blacks have spoken in his behalf and said, "They've supported me stronger than anyone else."

"It'll all blow over in a few weeks and they'll forget all about Jimmy The Greek," he said.

A hospital spokeswoman who asked not to be identified confirmed that Snyder, 70, was admitted to the Medical Center at 2:29 p.m. EST.

"I don't feel good. I've got a headache. I haven't talked to anybody about this," Snyder said as he walked into the hospital.

Another spokeswoman, Katherine Masick, said Snyder was in good condition Friday night.

Bear Grass Sweeps Creswell To Move Past .500 Mark

BEAR GRASS — Bear Grass took a clean sweep of Creswell in Tobacco Belt 1-A conference basketball action Friday.

In the boy's game, Steve Cowan scored 16 points and Almer Riddick added 15 to lead the Bears to a 74-60 win.

Bear Grass jumped on top early and built up a 39-21 halftime lead. Creswell rallied back in the third quarter by outscoring Bear Grass 16-8 to make it 47-37 by the start of the fourth quarter but that was as close as the score would get.

Bear Grass moves to 8-7 overall and 7-4 in the conference.

In the girl's game, Janet Rodgerson scored 16 points to lead the Lady Bears to a 55-19 romp over Creswell.

Bear Grass led 27-4 at halftime and outscored Creswell 13-0 in the second quarter. It never got any closer than that as the Lady Bears cruised to victory.

Bear Grass improves to 7-6 overall and 6-5 in the Tobacco Belt Conference.

Both teams return to action Tuesday at Aurora.

Panthers Hold Off Falcons For Win

By CLAY DEANHARDT
Reflector Staff Writer

BETHEL — North Pitt Coach Cubby Deans said improved shooting was the key to his team's heart-stopping 60-58 victory over Eastern Plains 2-A Conference rival C.B. Aycock Friday night in high school basketball action.

"We've shot about 25 percent the last four games," Cubby said. He noted that the team had been doing poorly from the line also, and that it had cost them at least three losses.

Friday the team shot 18-26 from the line, including a pair of free throws by Randy House with eight seconds left in the game that broke a 58-58 tie to the favor of the Panthers.

"I have no explanation of it," he said. "I tried to keep away from talking about it (in practice). We tried to think positive.

"When you start playing better, you shoot your foul shots better."

But C.B. Aycock's good shooting up-tempo defense and outside shooting late in the game almost cost the Panthers the win.

North Pitt held their biggest lead of the game, 55-45, with 2:20 left to play when the C.B. Aycock Falcons turned up the pressure and turned a half-court contest into a run and shoot showdown to the wire.

Falcon guard Corey Ruffin, who had 26 points to lead all scorers for the night, scored his second 3-point bucket of the evening with 1:43 left to play to reduce the lead to seven, 55-49.

Johnny Smith added a free throw, and then a bucket after a free throw by the Panthers, to set the score at 56-51. North Pitt's Calvin Hunter sank both ends of a one-and-one after that, but then Ruffin hit his third 3-point bucket with 1:41 left to cut the lead to four.

After a time out, the Falcons forced a turnover as the Panthers could not get the ball in-bounds within five seconds. Don Battle scored a layup from under the basket next, cutting the lead to two, and then the Falcons immediately fouled Reggie Daniels, who missed the front end of a one-and-one with 24 seconds left.

Starting forward Corey Dickerson connected on a lay-up with 11 seconds left to tie the game at 58-58. The Falcons immediately fouled House, who cooly nailed both ends of the one-and-one to set the final margin with eight seconds left.

C.B. Aycock got the ball back down-court after that, but Ruffin missed a jump shot from just outside the lane. After a mad scramble for the rebound, Kelvin Lewis sunk what appeared to be a tying shot at the buzzer, but the officials had ruled the ball dead just before on an inside foul by Aycock.

"If we can ever play a whole game like we did the last four minutes (of this game) we are going to be tough," C.B. Aycock coach Randy Bledsoe said. "If we can regain our aggresiveness, we're going to be trouble for some teams in our conference."

Bledsoe said North Pitt deserved a lot of credit for the win, since they started mostly underclassmen against Aycock's four starting seniors. "I knew North Pitt was a very control offense type team. We tried to pick up the tempo, and we played more man-to-man than before."

The Falcons used the man-to-man defense sparingly in the first quarter, but went to it for good in the second. North Pitt used a strong zone defense throughout the game to take away Aycock's inside game and force them to shoot from the perimeter.

"We had some lapses on the boards sometimes, but I think defense kept us in the game," Deans said. "We got good offense and defense from (Calvin) Cherry."

Cherry scored 17 points to lead the Panthers from the floor. Hunter scored 14 points, seven from the line, to finish second for North Pitt.

Deans said strong inside play and rebounding from Roosevelt Hines, who finished the night with 10 points, were also a key to the Panther's win.

Aycock jumped to an early 7-3 lead to start the game after House hit a 3-point bucket with 6:40 to go to open the North Pitt scoring. Both teams shot well after the opening spurts, and the Panthers fought back to be down by a bucket, 14-12, at the end of the quarter.

North Pitt opened the second strong, scoring seven unanswered points to take a 19-14 lead. By the end of the half the Panthers led by 3, 27-24.

Cherry came out of the locker room like a cannon and scored 12 points from the inside in the third quarter to help stretch the Panther lead to seven at 44-37.

The Panthers extended the lead to as much as 10 before Aycock battled back to end the game strong.

North Pitt moves to 5-8, 2-2 in conference play, with the win. They return to action Thursday at Greene Central.

In the girl's game, guard Crystal Kennedy scored 16 points to lead C.B. Aycock to a 47-43 win over North Pitt, led by Keisha Pilgreen's 18.

The game stayed tight through the first half with Aycock taking a 23-21 lead into the locker room. Then Gail Coley scored six of her eight points in the third to help extend the Falcon lead to seven, 36-29 at the end of the third.

The Panthers scored five points to open the fourth, including a 3-point bucket by Pilgreen, and cut the led to 36-34 with 6:40 to go. Aycock answered with strong inside play and free-throw shooting to stretch the lead back to six with 5:10 left to play.

Poor free-throw shooting hurt the Panthers down the stretch as Pilgreen missed the front end of three one-and-ones when her team shut down Aycock's scoring attack. Pilgreen hit one free throw with 2:08 left to make the score 46-43, Aycock, but no one would score again until Cafina Dowell hit the front end of a one-and-one with 10 seconds left to ice the game for the Falcons.

North Pitt fell to 5-6, 3-1 in the Eastern Plains Conference, with the loss.

Fike And Hines Roll By Rose

WILSON — Sammy and Kevin Hines combined for 55 points to lead Wilson Fike past J.H. Rose, 94-71, in a Big East 4-A conference basketball game Friday.

Fike took control early, moving out to a 12-point lead after one quarter of play at 25-13 and expanded that to 55-33 by halftime.

Kevin Hines led the way in the first half, scoring 18 of his game-high 32 points, including 11 in the first quarter.

Rose tried to rally by using the 3-point field goal. Keyford Langley hit three of them in the second quarter but Fike was able to overcome the challenge.

Rose outscored Fike in only one quarter, totaling 21 third-quarter points to Fike's 20 but the Golden Demons still led 70-54 heading into the final quarter.

Sammy Hines took over in the second half, scoring 12 of his 23 points as Fike rolled to the win.

Rose hit 11 3-point field goals, including four each by Langley and Errol Wooten but it wasn't enough to overcome Fike's height advantage.

Rose falls to 8-3 overall and 1-2 in the Big East. The Rampants return to action Jan. 29 against Northeastern in Elizabeth City.

In the girl's game, Fike's Deniese Hill scored 26 points to help Fike hand the Rampettes their first loss of the season, 41-33.

Rose led 10-6 after the first quarter but Fike came back to narrow the gap to 17-16 by halftime. Fike then outscored Rose 16-5 over the third quarter to take a 32-22 lead heading into the final period of play.

Andrea Rogers scored 12 points to lead the Rampettes, 9-1 overall and 3-1 in the conference.

Rhodes Leads Pack In Overtime Win

WASHINGTON — Bob Rhodes scored nine of the Pam Pack's 11 points in overtime as Washington held off North Lenoir 90-83 Friday night in a Coastal Conference basketball game.

North Lenoir's Dave Hinson hit two free throws in a one-and-one situation with 11 seconds left to give Washington a 79-78 lead.

Washington then held for a final shot before Nico Hines was fouled and hit one of two free throws with three seconds left to tie it at 79-79.

North Lenoir's Leon Morgan then drove down the floor after receiving a long pass and missed a lay-up at the buzzer to send the game into overtime.

In the extra period, Rhodes scored the first bucket but Wil Sutton hit a free throw for the Hawks to cut lead to 81-80.

Rhodes then scored again for Washington inside and was fouled. He hit the free throw to make it 84-80. North Lenoir then went down and missed a 3-point shot. Washington rebounded and Rhodes tipped in a miss by Donnell Albritton with 1:16 to go to make it 87-80 and that was as close as the Hawks would get.

Rhodes had 20 points for the Pam Pack, who were paced by Joe Daniels with 23. Albritton added 16 while Hine and Dixon added 11 each.

North Lenoir falls to 1-2 in the Coastal and 10-4 overall. Washington is 1-1 and 10-2.

In the girl's game, Washington cruised to a 54-34 win behind a game-high 19 points by Tonya Holley.

Washington 29-21 halftime lead and never looked back.

Deeanna Davis added 14 points for the Lady Pam Pack, 9-1 overall and 2-0 in the conference. North Lenoir drops to 7-7 and 1-2.

Washington returns to action Tuesday at Havelock.

Officials Set Red Wolves Free

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Wildlife officials said they were uncertain how eight red wolves would perform when set free in the swampy forests of northeastern North Carolina, but without the attempt, the rare species may have been human captives for life.

"Man was really responsible for the extinction of the red wolf in the wild and we felt like man had a responsibility to save this species ...," said Warren Parker, director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service project to reintroduce red wolves to the wild. "It was a gamble and we knew it, but we had to try.

"We knew that without the attempt, the red wolf would not survive except as a species in a zoo or some other captive situation," Parker said. "And we felt that we just shouldn't do that to them."

Parker said there were more than a few risks involved when four mated pairs of the rare wolves were taken from federal breeding compounds in Tacoma, Wash., and St. Louis last year and transported to the Alligator River National Wildlife Refuge in Dare County.

Only 76 of the red wolves were known to exist at the time — all of them in captivity where they were fed dog food by human handlers. For six months, the eight wolves were held in remote pens where they were gradually shifted from dog food to wild game. And their exposure to humans was kept to a minimum.

Of the eight animals released last fall, one was found dead in December along the shore of Pamlico Sound. Another was killed last month after a leg wound it suffered when being trapped became infected.

A kidney infection was blamed for the death of the first wolf, said refuge manager John Taylor, but the source of the infection has not been determined. All of the wolves, including the two that died, appeared to be feeding themselves and had kept their body weight at or near their release weight.

"I expected some would die of starvation," Taylor said, "but we've been real surprised how well the animals have done on their own. Whatever it is, they seem to be finding food out there and sustaining themselves without human help."

Both Taylor and Parker said the loss of two wolves was not a major setback for the project.

"We really feel it is a minor problem," Parker said. "To tell you the truth, I figured we'd lose two wolves the first week since we released them only a week before the dog-deer season.

"I figured we'd have a couple get shot, hit by cars or whatever," he said. "But the hunters I talked with have been real supportive of the program and they have certainly been helpful in reporting sightings of the wolves."

Parker said public support had been critical for the project, which originally was planned for an area along the Tennessee-Kentucky border. Public outcry against the wolf project forced it to move to Alligator River.

"Many of the things we have learned have been socio-political rather than just biological," Parker said. "The failure we had in Tennessee and Kentucky gave us the tools to succeed in Dare County. Those lessons were learned there and applied here.

"One of the things that helped us at Alligator River was that wolves had been gone from there for a couple of hundred years," he said. "There were not latent fears about wolves that had been handed down from grandfather to father to son.

"In Tennessee and Kentucky, however, the wolves had only been gone 40 to 50 years and some people had a very adverse reaction to having them back," he said. "Unfortunately a lot of these tales that get handed down are erroneous, but they're very real to the people involved."

Area School Helps Anglers Learn Better Ways to Fish

Recreational fishermen, beginners as well as pros, will hit the beach for a week in June for North Carolina State University's 37th annual Sport Fishing School.

This year's school will be held June 12-17 on Hatteras Island, and registration is already under way for the popular event. Through the years, the week-long school on fishing improvement has been held in Morehead and Nags Head.

Believed to be the oldest of its kind in the nation, the fishing school was started in 1952.

"The staff of the Sport Fishing School is committed to providing students, from the novice on up, with a quality recreational angling experience," said B. Mac Currin, director of the school and a research technician in NCSU's Department of Zoology.

He said the goal of the program is that "everyone attending come away with an increased knowledge of fish and fishing and a better appreciation of our coastal resources, as well as the excitement and enjoyment that can be derived from sportfishing."

Part of the week's activities will be two all-day trips into the Gulf Stream, which offers some of the world's best offshore waters for blue marlin, white marlin, sailfish, bonito, Spanish mackerel, wahoo, yellowfin tuna and others.

Teams of students will go out on charter boats with school instructors. A tournament between teams will provide extra motivation for the students to put their newly acquired expertise to work.

During the 1987 school, which was attended by people from Massachusetts to Mississippi, one student hooked a blue marlin.

"After more than hour of fighting this 300-plus pound fish, the wire leader suddenly snapped," Currin said. The angler's only mementos were his "aching muscles and firsthand knowledge of what it is like to battle the ultimate game fish."

In addition to the Gulf Stream trips, students will participate in seminars on knots, leaders, rigging baits, equipment, sound and inlet fishing, freshwater fishing, fish identification, storage and handling.

A surf casting session and a fish fry conducted by the Hatteras Volunteer Fire Department are among the planned social activities.

On the final day of the event, students may choose from a number of activities, including sheepshead fishing, sound fishing for cobia, red drum or bottom fish, pier or surf fishing, freshwater fishing for largemouth bass at Lake Mattamuskeet or Currituck Sound or more offshore fishing.

"Hatteras is the closest port to the Gulf Stream north of Florida and is world renowned for its excellent offshore fishing," Currin said. "There's a variety of fishing at Hatteras. The angler may inlet, pier or surf fish; fish in the channel or sound; or take a trip to the Gulf Stream."

June is one of the best times of the year for offshore fishing on coastal North Carolina.

The school's staff includes NCSU personnel, marine scientists, marine resources managers, fishing tackle representatives and professional charter boat captains.

Registration is currently under way because the school's spaces are often filled early. The cost of the course is $600, which covers classroom and surf instruction, boat charters, bait and the fish fry. Lodging is not included.

For more information or to register for the Sport Fishing School, contact B. Mac Currin, NCSU Department of Zoology, Box 7617, Raleigh, N.C. 27695-7617, or phone 737-2589.

Rewards Offered for Poaching Information

Turkey hunters in North Carolina are hoping the cash rewards they're offering for information leading to the arrest and conviction of poachers will curb illegal hunting of wild turkey.

The N.C. State chapter of the Wild Turkey Federation and the N.C. Bowhunters Association together offer a $500 reward for information that leads to the arrest and conviction of anyone illegally killing a wild turkey. A group of sportsmen in western North Carolina are offering an additional $1,500 in a case where 11 turkeys were recently killed in Graham County over a baited area.

"At one time, wild turkeys were abundant in North Carolina," said Charles W. Overton, president of the Eastern Piedmont Chapter. "We've seen habitat destruction and a tremendous amount of illegal killing, and we've seen the turkey population almost completely wiped out."

North Carolina's turkey population has grown dramatically in recent years with the success of turkey restoration areas. Those areas have been developed and stocked by the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission with the support of the Wild Turkey Federation.

"We want to try to control poaching," Overton said. "Many turkeys are killed because people are just ignorant of the law. Maybe these rewards will help get their attention and create an interest among landowners and sportsmen. Poaching is a serious matter, and we aim to intensify our efforts in controlling it."

Poaching and other wildlife violations can be reported to the Wildlife Resources Commission at 1-800-662-7137.

Black Mountain's Johnson Excelling In Other Sport

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Florida State's quarterback of the future is enjoying a year off from football helping the Seminoles' basketball team reach unexpected heights.

Freshman Brad Johnson of Black Mountain, N.C., was red-shirted by football coach Bobby Bowden this season and received permission in early November to join the school's basketball team.

Although he was late reporting to basketball boss Pat Kennedy, the 6-foot-6, 200-pound Johnson has become a key player in the Seminoles' fast start — 11-4 after Saturday's 74-71 victory at Cincinnati.

"Right now Brad Johnson has probably meant the most to us as a newcomer," said Kennedy. "He's definitely a coaches' player. He keeps you in your system."

Bowden and Kennedy are both pleased with Johnson's desire to play two sports and each coach expects the soft-spoken 19-year-old to be successful.

"I'm not against it as long as he can make the grades," said Bowden, noting the amount of time required to play back-to-back sports.

Johnson says playing varsity sports keeps him disciplined.

"It helps keep you on schedule," he said. "It keeps me busy rather than having alot of free time. I have to make use of my spare time now. I believe it helps me out."

Bowden has frequently allowed his football players to participate in other sports. Three of his top players skipped spring football last year. Deion Sanders and Ronald Lewis played baseball and Sammie Smith was the Metro Conference 100-meter and 200-meter champion.

"I've not ever had anyone play football and basketball at this level," said Bowden. "When we signed him back last year we told him he could go out for basketball if he wanted. I won't have any objection to him going out after the season in the future. I saw him in one game and I catch him on television (playing basketball) and I'm impressed."

Football is king at Florida State, but basketball has become more popular since the enthusiastic Kennedy arrived two years ago.

Johnson prefers basketball but thinks his future will be in football.

"Basketball is a sport that's just a lot easier to like," said Johnson. "I feel like in football I have more room to grow as a player and an athlete. I just have so much to learn as a quarterback."

Johnson said most basketball coaches didn't recruit him because everyone felt he was going to play football in college.

He credits his high school basketball coach, Bill Burris, with giving him the strong background in fundamentals that has eased his transition to the college game.

"He was very similar to coach Kennedy," said Johnson. "They teach the little things and those things make a big difference."

Although Johnson is averaging less than 14 minutes playing time a game, he has twice been in double figures and is the team's leading free throw shooter with an 91 percent mark on 19 of 21 shooting.

Johnson, who is shooting 55 percent from the floor, averages five points and three rebounds. His best game was a 10-point, six-assist, four-rebound game that helped the Seminoles end a three-year victory drought against Louisville.

"He could play for any division I team in the country," said Kennedy, who recently removed Johnson from the starting lineup at the freshman's request.

"He came into my office and asked to be taken out of the starting lineup because Jerome (Fitchett) was not getting a lot of opportunity as a senior," explained Kennedy. "Brad said he wanted to see Jerome start and he'd be more comfortable coming off the bench."

Kennedy was happy to accommodate Johnson, giving Fitchett - the team's only senior - a starting role.

"Brad came on a football scholarship, but he's intent on playing basketball," said Kennedy. "He's one of the most remarkable kids I've ever been around."

Blount, Chargers Pummel Pamlico

BAYBORO — Ayden-Grifton improved its conference record to 4-0 behind a 23-point performance by Eric Blount in defeating Pamlico 71-54 Friday night in high school basketball.

Ronnell Peterson added 16 and Leon Dixon pumped in 13 each as Ayden-Grifton moved to 9-4 on the year.

The Chargers jumped to an early 10-point lead at the end of the first quarter and never looked back. They stretched the lead to 20 in the seond, going into the locker room with a 47-27 lead.

The third quarter brought much of the same, and a fourth quarter surge by Pamlico was too little too late to do any good.

Jamie Gibbs led the Pamlico squad with 13 points.

In the girl's game, Iris Brown scored 14 points and Debbie Williams added 11 to lead a balnced scoring attack against Pamlico that took the chargers to a 51-19 runaway victory. The lady Chargers moved to 3-11, 1-3 in the conference, with the win.

The Chargers return to action at home against Farmville Central on Friday.

Northampton Rally Puts Away Roanoke

ROBERSONVILLE — Northampton East's Terry Williams led all scorers with 16 to pace his team to a 53-46 victory over Roanoke Friday night in Northeastern 2-A Conference high school basketball.

The score remained close throughout much of the game, with the first quarter ending in a tie and Northampton taking a two point lead, 25-23, into the locker room at the half.

Roanoke came out of the half gunning, though, and scored 14 points in the third quarter to lead by two at the end. They soon lost the momentum, however, and were outscored 18-9 in the fourth as Northampton rolled to the win.

Roanoke was paced by Ricky Howard with 14 points. Edward Vaughan with 10 and Fred Vinson with 11 for Northampton were the only other players to score in double figures.

Roanoke falls to 5-5, 1-1 in the conference, with the loss. They play again Thursday at Ahoskie.

In the girl's game, Michelle Hoggard scored 10 points to lead Roanoke to a 31-25 win over Northampton. The Roanoke girls took a 7-4 lead at the end of the first and never relinquished it to take the win.

Holmes' Miscues Gave Tyson The Break That He Needed

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Mike Tyson took advantage of two mistakes by Larry Holmes: growing careless and growing old.

Tyson knocked down the former champion three times with his right hand in the fourth round and retained his undisputed heavyweight title Friday night, ending Holmes' bid to become the oldest man to win the championship. "I knew I'd hit him with the right hand," Tyson said. "All through his career, he was susceptible to the right hand, and that was true tonight."

The end came at 2:55 of the fourth round. But the 21-year-old Tyson, an ardent student of old fight filmes, had seen the end for Holmes years earlier.

"He made that mistake for a long time," Tyson said. "When he was champion he had that mistake. He was dropping the left hand. He always kept the left hand low to my right hand."

Before the fight with Tyson, Holmes had been knocked down only three times in his career — by Kevin Isaac in 1973, Earnie Shavers in 1979 and Renaldo Snipes in 1981.

All the knockdowns were caused by right hands and Tyson, now 33-0 with 29 knockouts, knew he would get his chance. He saw the opportunity coming in the third round.

"I had it all set up," said Tyson, the youngest man to hold the heavyweight title. "I knew it was not going to last the distance. In the third round, he got very excited, popping the jab, beng cute. The crowd got pumped up. Then I knew he was going to make the mistake and he was going to get it."

Tyson, who plans his next defense March 21 in Tokyo against Tony Tubbs, also took advantage of Holmes' age. At his peak, Holmes might have been able to survive the final five seconds of the round. Not this time.

"I'm 38 years old. I have nothing to be ashamed of," Holmes said. "I'm going to go out and party tonight with my family, and I'm going to party again tomorrow night."

Tyson, gracious in victory, speculated that if Holmes had been "at his best, I don't stand a chance ... At his best, he was the greatest of his time."

While trying to battle the rigors of time may have been his first mistake, Holmes' second mistake came with about 1:20 to go in the fourth round. Tyson landed a left jab. Holmes dropped the left and Tyson followed with a devastating short, quick right, knocking Holmes flat on his back.

"I knew he was not hurt bad," Tyson said. "I looked in his face and saw that he wanted to get up."

Holmes did, and went back down to the canvas less than 20 seconds later as Tyson landed a left followed by another right.

The rest of the round was a chase, with Holmes trying to survive and Tyson delivering blow after blow. The last two punches by Tyson, both rights, came in the final 10 seconds of the round and sent Holmes down a final time.

This time referee Joe Cortez did not count. He waved his arms in the air, ending the fight, while those at ringside rushed to aid the dazed Holmes, a loser for the third straight time. The former champion's record fell to 48-3 with 34 knockouts.

"Larry Holmes is a very, very courageous champion to get up all those times," Tyson said. "Even after that last punch, he was still trying to get up."

Holmes said in every boxer's career there is one fighter who will catch up to you, and Tyson was that man in his career.

"I'd like to give Mike Tyson credit," Holmes said. "He was a lot better than I thought he was."

Muhammad Ali, most prominent among a large group of boxing and entertainment figures at the Atlantic City Convention Center, watched the fight from ringside. He agreed with Holmes, a former sparring partner.

"He's great. He's great," Ali said when asked about Tyson.

For Holmes, this might be the end of the line.

"I know I wanted to come back," Holmes said. "I'm 38-years old and it kind of hurts. But I have nothing to be ashamed of. I'm going to hold my head high ... I'm going to laugh all the way to Lafayette Trust Bank."

Holmes, who weighed 225¾, earned $2.8 million for his first fight since losing an International Boxing Federation heavyweight title rematch to Michael Spinks on Sept. 22, 1985 in a disputed decision. Spinks, who also attended the fight, had won the title a year earlier with another decision. That stopped Holmes' winning streak at 48, one shy of Rocky Marciano's record of 49-0.

Spinks, who gave up his IBF crown rather than participate in an elimination series to fight Tyson for the undisputed title, also noticed the weakness of Holmes' defense.

"Tyson wasn't hurting him until he dropped his hands and gave him the chance," Spinks said.

Tyson, 215¾, earned $5 million in making the second defense of the undisputed title he won last August by defeating Tony Tucker. Tyson successfully defended it last October by stopping Tyrell Biggs in seven rounds.

"I refuse to lose," Tyson said. "When I am in the ring, I refuse to be beaten. I refuse to let anyone take me down. There is no way I go out walking. I fight to the end."

Tyson said he would fight any challenger, "even right now."

Earlier on the undercard, Carlos De Leon of Puerto Rico retained his WBC cruiserweight championship with a unanimous decision over Jose Flores of Uruguay.

Move Inside Was The End Of Holmes' Comeback Bid

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Larry Holmes has a simple explanation for what happened when the fury of Mike Tyson's punches brought to a thundering conclusion the former heavyweight champion's bid to recapture his crown.

"I came in to tie him up and work with him inside," Holmes said Friday night. "And he caught me."

It was a classic one-punch knockdown, a short, swift right hand to the forehead that sent Holmes flat on his back midway through the fourth round. The fight was all but over right there, but Holmes gamely tried to come back, getting up from that punch and a second knockdown as well before being dropped for a third and final time.

But the way he went out seemed to satisfy the ex-champ and offer him some small satisfaction. "I've got nothing to be ashamed of," Holmes said.

Not after facing the most devastating puncher in boxing today.

Going into the fight, Holmes said he had a plan. He hoped to reestablish what once was the best left jab in boxing. He played stay-away for a while.

"What I did wrong was to wait for the fifth round," Holmes said. "He usually tires around the fifth."

That was a mistake because this fight never got that far. Tyson tore into his man and Holmes could not survive the fourth.

"He's better than I thought," Holmes said later. "He's a true champion. He's hard to hit and he punches very good. They can talk about (Michael) Spinks, but in my book, he's the champ and he should go down as such."

It was two disputed losses to Spinks that kept the fire burning within Holmes and led him to the Tyson fight.

"I didn't have to fight this fight," he said. "I wanted to come back to prove a point. I didn't like the way I went out. I was just trying to get back something somebody took away from me."

For his trouble, Holmes made $3.1 million, though 10 percent of that goes to promoter Don King. "That's nothing to sneeze at," Holmes said.

But Holmes was not fighting for money. "I'm rich," he said. "Everybody knows that."

He was fighting instead for his pride and in being knocked out by a younger, strong man, there was a sense that he had regained it.

"I'm 38," he said. "The long (21-month) layoff hurt. As you go along, somebody's going to get you. He got me tonight."

It was the first time in 51 fights in a career that began almost 15 years ago, that had happened. Nobody is likely to get a chance to make it happen again.

As a sideshow to the fight, numerous celebrities attended the event which is sometimes as important as who is fighting on the inside.

Donald Trump knew full well that the secret to a successful bout was not only to get two prize fighters, but to assemble a guest list that read like the pages of People magazine.

On Friday, he proved that Las Vegas is no longer the only place for stars to be seen at ringside.

"In Las Vegas, there are always parties like this, but now it looks like the combination of Donald Trump and (promoter) Don King brought the celebrities out here to Atlantic City," comedian David Brenner said.

Trump had already held two major fights at Atlantic City, with a handful of celebrities turning out for each.

But this time, the announcer at the Mike Tyson-Larry Holmes fight had to catch his breath several times to get through the list of celebrities.

Actor Don Johnson snuggled next to actress Barbra Streisand as Tyson's blows knocked Holmes around. Trump hob-nobbed at ringside with actor Kirk Douglas, who earlier in the evening said he attended the fight because "at this time of life, I'm very anxious to see what an old-timer can do," referring to the 38-year-old Holmes.

Actor Jack Nicholson, with model Cheryl Tiegs at his side in a black miniskirt, hid behind a pair of shaded glasses, but freely chatted with the ringside crowd. Even the normally moody tennis pro John McEnroe, with actress-wife Tatum O'Neal next to him, was in a cordial mood with the droves of reporters who surrounded him.

Actors Bruce Willis and "Mr. T" mingled with author George Plimpton. Novelist Norman Mailer sat near singer Jeffrey Osborne and actor Robert Duval.

Heavyweight boxing legend Muhammad Ali was the guest of honor. Trump and promoter King brought him to the middle of the ring just before the fight began, with the crowd jumping up for a massive standing ovation.

Television newswoman Barbara Walters had a seat closer to ringside than her younger colleague, Maria Shriver.

Several of Hollywood's "Brat Pack" actors accepted fight tickets, including Matt Dillon and Judd Nelson, both of whom grinned when shrieking fans crowded around them.

Lakers Slip By Fighting Knicks

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

The Los Angeles Lakers gave the New York Knicks a fighting chance when they lost their best rebounder and best defensive player in the fourth quarter.

But it wasn't quite enough as the Lakers handed New York its 12th straight road defeat, 113-112 Friday night.

The Knicks led 89-87 with 9:26 left when A.C. Green and Michael Cooper of the Lakers and New York's Pat Cummings were ejected for fighting. Then Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who scored 24 points, hit four sky hooks from the baseline in the last five minutes, salvaging the victory for Los Angeles.

"It was a cowardly act," Knicks Coach Rick Pitino said of Cooper's role as the third man in the brawl. "They don't do that in basketball. That's hockey. You can't come in from nowhere and start throwing punches."

Cummings and Green began shoving each other in the lane near the Knicks' basket as a shot went up. Cooper came at Cummings from the blind side before the fight escalated into a brawl.

"Nothing would have happened if Cooper hadn't come in and sucker-punched me," Cummings said. "I was just trying to protect myself, and the next thing I knew, I don't know how many Lakers were on top of the pile."

"There were no punches thrown," Cooper said. 'We were trying to hold each other up. He tripped and I tripped and we tumbled into the stands.

"I jumped in because I didn't want anything to happen. I'm not going to let anybody come in and do anything flagrant to one of our players. I'm just protecting my man. It's one for all and all for one."

Elsewhere in the NBA, it was Boston 124, Atlanta 106; Indiana 113, New Jersey 104; Washington 115, Golden State 91; Chicago 118, Phoenix 108; Dallas 110, Los Angeles Clippers 87; Utah 119, San Antonio 106; Portland 126, Denver 106, and Seattle 109, Detroit 106.

After the fight, Los Angeles responded with an 11-2 spurt that left the Lakers with a 97-92 lead. At that point, Abdul-Jabbar took over.

"He was hot," Knicks center Patrick Ewing said of his counterpart. "The coach told me to push him off the lane, and I pushed him as far as I could. But he still made them. I know he's not washed up."

Johnny Newman and Gerald Wilkins led the Knicks with 22 points each and Ewing had 21. No. 1 draft pick Mark Jackson finished with 16 assists, marking the first time he had double figures on the road this season after 17 double-figure games at home.

Celtics 124, Hawks 106

Boston took a half-game lead over Atlanta in the Eastern Conference race to determine the head coach for the All-Star game Feb. 7.

Larry Bird scored 27 points and Kevin McHale 24 for the Celtics, who have won seven consecutive games and 17 of 19. A victory at Cleveland tonight would make K.C. Jones the Eastern All-Star coach for the fifth consecutive year.

Bird's 14 points in the third quarter helped the Celtics turn a 64-54 halftime lead into a 95-75 advantage after three periods.

The Hawks, who won 12 of their previous 15 games, were led by Dominique Wilkins with 23 points.

Sonics 109, Pistons 106

Seattle won its sixth straight and 17th in a row at home as Dale Ellis matched his career-high with 47 points.

Detroit was led by Bill Laimbeer with 21 points and 14 rebounds, while Rick Mahorn had 19 points and Isiah Thomas 13 points and 15 assists.

Seattle led 107-106 when Thomas tried a 3-pointer that went through the basket but was disallowed because the ball hit the 24-second clock. Ellis then was fouled intentionally and he made the two free throws with 10 seconds remaining.

Bullets 115, Warriors 91

Washington, after an 8-19 start, improved its record to 6-2 under new Coach Wes Unseld as Terry Catledge and Bernard King scored 20 points apiece and Manute Bol added 10 rebounds and 10 blocked shots against Golden State.

Matched against 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson, Catledge scored 10 points in the first period as Washington opened a 32-22 lead. The 6-8 Catledge had eight points, and the Bullets led 17-10, before Sampson scored.

Bol had five blocks and rookie Tyrone Bogues had two steals in the first five minutes of the second period as Washington extended its margin to 50-26.

Winston Garland led the Warriors with 24 points. Sampson scored 18.

Bulls 118, Suns 108

Michael Jordan scored 42 points and combined with Rory Sparrow for Chicago's first 22 points of the third quarter against Phoenix.

Jordan had 17 points in the third quarter, including 12 to Sparrow's 10 during the Bulls' 22-11 run to start the second half, giving them a 73-60 lead.

Chicago extended the lead to 103-88 midway through the final quarter, but the Suns got within three with 42 seconds left as Phoenix's Armon Gilliam and Eddie Johnson scored 10 points apiece down the stretch. Johnson led the Suns with 23 points.

Mavericks 110, Clippers 87

Dallas handed Los Angeles its 12th consecutive road defeat as Mark Aguirre scored 19 points and Roy Tarpley added 18 points and 19 rebounds.

The Mavericks saw a 15-point second-quarter lead cut to one with seven minutes left in the third quarter before a Tarpley dunk triggered a 10-2 run.

Coal Talks Enter Final Week

By MARTHA BRYSON HODEL
Associated Press Writer

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — With a week to go in the United Mine Workers' contract, the union has amassed a huge strike fund, but there's no guarantee the union once known for industrywide shutdowns will walk out if there is no new agreement.

The UMW's agreement with the coal industry, which was negotiated in 1984 and expires Jan. 31, was hailed as an industry breakthrough, the first contract reached without a nationwide strike in more than 20 years of negotiations with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association.

Since contract talks began Nov. 12 in Washington, D.C., both sides have observed a news blackout. But the time needed for a rank-and-file ratification vote — at least a week — means there is little likelihood a new agreement can be in place before the contract expires.

In a 1983 constitutional convention, the union abandoned its longtime, hard-line policy of "no contract, no work" and gave its president the authority to call selective strikes.

The contract with the BCOA, known as the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement, covers only a portion of the UMW's 85,000 working members, but it sets the standard throughout the soft coal industry. In recent months the UMW also has signed letters of intent — dubbed "me, too" agreements — with numerous non-BCOA companies that have promised to sign the new national pact.

Those agreements are important because UMW members now produce only about 40 percent of the nation's total coal production, down from 60 percent in 1980 when the union had about 140,000 active working members.

While not publicly discussing specific demands, both the UMW and the BCOA staked out widely divergent terrain before the talks began. The UMW said it wanted improved job security for its dwindling membership, and it attacked companies for opening non-union subsidiaries.

The operators said they needed work rule changes to enable their mines to compete with cheaper non-union operations.

If no agreement is in place by Feb. 1, the union has several options, including extending the current agreement. Only UMW President Richard Trumka has authority to call a strike.

Under the current contract, top scale for the most skilled underground workers rose to $124.52 per day.

Kellogg To Build Facility In Tenn.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Kellogg Co. will begin building an estimated $1 billion breakfast cereal plant near here this year, company and local officials said Friday.

The highly automated plant is the second-largest industrial project planned for Tennessee. General Motors Corp. is building a $1.75 billion auto plant at Spring Hill south of Nashville.

The Battle Creek, Mich.-based cereal company already has a plant in Memphis that employs 700 workers.

Officials from Memphis and Shelby County have been talking for more than two years with Kellogg about building a second plant in western Tennessee.

"The business climate in Memphis was attractive to them," said Mayor Richard Hackett. He declined to say how many workers the plant is expected to employ but said it will have a sizable impact on the local economy.

Dick Lovell, a spokesman for Kellogg, said declined to discuss specifics of the project except to say that site preparation is expected to begin this year.

He gave no cost estimate. Hackett estimated the cost at $1 billion, and Gov. Ned McWerter on Friday put the total Kellogg investment at $1.2 billion.

The plant is expected to take three to five years to build and will be in a section of Shelby County that Memphis is trying to annex, Hackett said.

Kellogg chairman William E. LaMothe said three major factors led to the decision: "the growth of our business in the southern United States, the tremendous support of our employees in Memphis, and ... the most needed assistance of state and local leaders."

City and county governments have agreed to property tax breaks for the company, and the state agreed to finance $1.15 million in road and other public improvements near the new plant and the existing one.

On Thursday, Kellogg announced in Battle Creek that the company will spend $200 million to expand processing and packaging capacity at its headquarters.

Business Notes

Figures Decreased

NCNB Corp. reported net income for 1987 of $166.9 million, compared to earnings of $196.8 million a year earlier. Earnings per share totaled $2.93, down 20 percent from the $2.53 per share reported in 1986.

Hugh McColl, NCNB chairman, said major factors affecting the 1987 results included higher income from core banking activities offset by a special provision for losses on Mexican loans and an increase in the provision for losses on domestic loans.

He said that 1987 earnings reflected a total charge of $37.3 million, or 46 cents per share, after taxes from the special provisions and charge-offs of Latin American debt.

He said net income for the fourth quarter of 1987 was $14.7 million, compared to $45.9 million in the same period of 1986. He said earnings per share were 17 cents, down from 59 cents in the final quarter of 1986.

McColl said fourth quarter earnings reflected an after-tax charge of $36 million, or 43 cents per share, due to special provisions for losses on NCNB's Mexican loans.

Merger Agreement

NEW YORK (AP) — Sterling Drug Inc. and Eastman Kodak Co. agreed Friday to a $5.1 billion merger aimed at thwarting a $4.6 billion hostile takeover of Sterling by F. Hoffmann-La Roche and Co.

Sterling and Kodak said that under the signed agreement Kodak will pay $89.50 a share for Sterling's 57.5 million common shares outstanding. The offer was conditioned on a majority of Sterling's shares being tendered to Kodak.

Kodak also obtained an option to purchase 10.5 million new Sterling shares from the company for $89.50 a share, and the option to buy its Sterling Glenbrook Laboratories for $775 million.

Such options commonly are used to discourage hostile suitors from pursuing their bids.

Sterling is a major manufacturer of consumer products and drugs, including Bayer aspirin, Lysol cleaners and prescription medications. Kodak is the world's biggest photography company and also has major chemical operations.

Sterling had rebuffed Hoffmann-La Roche's overtures even before the Swiss pharmaceutical giant and maker of Valium launched its tender offer Jan. 5.

Orange Juice Futures Fall

By DAVID DISHNEAU
Associated Press Writer

Frozen concentrated orange juice futures fell sharply Friday on a combination of factors, including a report that one bulk processor in Florida had lowered its price by about a penny a pound.

On other markets, soybeans surged while grains were mixed; livestock and meat futures, precious metals futures and energy futures all were mixed; and stock-index futures advanced.

The report of discounted orange-juice prices added to the bearish sentiment that had pervaded the orange juice pit at New York's Cotton Exchange all week, said Judy Ganes, an analyst for Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc.

Other factors depressing prices included a new government report showing sluggish demand for orange juice and the passing of the critical freeze period for the Florida citrus crop, Ms. Ganes said.

"You have a lot of factors coming together and pressuring the market in the short term," she said. "As for the long term, there's still some uncertainty as to just what the Brazilian supplies are."

The contract for March delivery of orange juice settled 3.15 cents lower at $1.6865 a pound.

On the Chicago Board of Trade, soybean futures gained as much as 9¾ cents a bushel on a weekly Census Bureau report that U.S. soybean meal stocks stood at about 296,000 short tons, less than the expected figure, said Joel Karlin, an analyst for Research Department Inc. in Chicago.

A short ton is equal to 2,240 pounds.

Corn futures advanced in sympathy with the beans and on expectations for new export business with the Soviet Union, Karlin said.

Wheat retreated, however, in advance of Friday afternoon's weekly Agriculture Department auction of surplus wheat. The USDA said it expected to sell 25 million bushels. Wheat settled 2 cents to 3 cents lower with March at $3.23¼ a bushel; corn was 1 cent to 1¾ cents higher with March at $1.99¾ a bushel; oats were ¾ cent to 1¾ cents higher with March at $1.92 a bushel; soybeans were 7½ cents to 9¾ cents higher with March at $6.31¾ a bushel.

Livestock and meat futures ended mixed in light trading on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange ahead of the USDA's monthly and quarterly cattle-on-feed reports.

The monthly seven-state report and the quarterly 13-state report, both issued after the close, showed a reduction from last year in the number of cattle placed on feedlots to be fattened for slaughter.

From October through December, placements were just 1 percent below the 6.7 million head placed on feedlots in the last quarter of 1986. December placements were off 6 percent from the 1.4 million head placed on feedlots in December 1986.

The figures fell within the estimates of most analysts and should have little impact on futures prices, said Tom O'Hare, an analyst in New York for Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

Scarves Can Twist, Float Or Cling

By ROSALIE TROTMAN
Reflector Lifestyle Editor

Evelyn Spangler has been tying it on — conducting programs on tying and wearing scarves. She is a home economics extension agent in Pitt County.

"Scarves come in many shapes, sizes, colors and textures — from crisp silks to filmy chiffons. They twist, twine and float, creating magic wizardry throughout a woman's wardrobe," she said.

"No matter what you do with scarves, they have a habit of adding sparkle to an outfit. They can fill in a neckline, alter the appearance of a basic dress or introduce a bright splash of color," said Mrs. Spangler.

Scarves are made from a variety of fibers. The classic fiber is silk, chosen for its lustrous sheen and drapeability. Fibers other than silk include rayon, acetate, nylon, cotton, woven polyester and sometimes light-weight wool.

"Regardless of the fiber content or type of fabric, scarves must possess two characteristics in order to perform well — they must drape and have body. Bulky, crisp or stiff fabrics are not suitable since they are unmoldable. They will not stay in place. Body helps the scarf to stand alone. Fabrics without body go limp and fall in a disarrayed mess. Without these two characteristics, a scarf becomes an impossible, rebellious accessory," she said.

"Most polyester double-knit scarves have poor drape. The double-knit fabric construction gives the scarf too much bulk. Thus, the outfit is overpowered by the scarf. Poor drape is a problem with other knit fabrics. The exception is single-knit jersey. Jersey fabric is fluid and clingy, therefore drapeable," she said.

"Scarves come in a multitude of designs and colors. Select scarves that blend in color or design with the outfit. For a real accent splash, use contrasting colors and designs — they must have either colors or design in common," Mrs. Spangler said.

There are two basic scarf shapes, the square and the rectangle. The numerous ways a scarf can be worn depend upon the shape, size, how it is tied and the way it unfolds.

"The square-shaped scarf is probably the most versatile and can be folded three different ways including triangle, two-pointed fold and envelope," she said.

"Careful care of scarves is a must. To extend the life of scarves, follow these procedures. To clean, use a drycleaning facility. Drycleaning helps scarves retain their hand feel and color. Some can be washed by hand or in a delicate cycle washer. To pin scarves in place, use sharp pins. Rough or blunt pins can cause 'pulls or dimples'," she said.

"You can work magic with your wardrobe with scarves," said Mrs. Spangler.

Mrs. Spangler will conduct a second scarf session Feb. 2 starting at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m. Interested persons should preregister by calling 830-6370.

Researchers Find

Much High Blood Pressure Caused By Visit

By JAMIE TALAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

Arlene Steinberg took high blood pressure medication, only to discover that her blood pressure is within normal ranges without it — so long as she is not in the doctor's office.

She is one of millions of Americans with "white-coat hypertension," a term coined specifically for people whose levels rise, but only in the clinic. It is in the clinic, of course, that blood pressure is most often measured.

According to researchers at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center's Cardiovascular Center, 20 percent of people on such drug treatments actually suffer from this transient phenomenon. Dr. Thomas G. Pickering, a cardiologist and lead investigator in the study, worries that these people may be medicated needlessly. The study appears this week in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

There are 60 million Americans with hypertension, a chronic condition that can ultimately cause heart and kidney damage, or stroke. About one-quarter of all patients control their high blood pressure with medications. For others, dieting and reducing salt seems to work.

The readings a doctor takes in the office measures two things: The first number represents the pressure within the blood vessels as the heart contracts, called systolic. The second number, diastolic, represents the pressure between heartbeats. Normally, a healthy reading is 120-80. People with systolic pressure in the range above 140 and the diastolic pressure above 90 are thought to have hypertension.

Experts say that when the pressure is sufficiently high enough it can cause damage to organs and blood vessels. For example, if pressure in the blood vessels of the heart is high, the heart is forced to work harder. After years of extended work, the heart becomes overly enlarged and sluggish. The risk of having a heart attack is greatly increased.

Pickering and his colleagues say that doctors should test their patients more extensively before prescribing medication. The doctors say the key is to measure blood pressure without a "white-coat" present. In fact, preliminary studies from their laboratory suggest that having a technician measure pressure reduces the chances of having spurious readings.

Their study is the first to figure out just how common white-coat hypertension is. They compared blood pressures taken in the office with those measured on a 24-hour ambulatory monitor. These diagnostic tools measure events throughout a given day, offering doctors a new look — and added information — on a variety of medical conditions. Three hundred people, all of whom had been on high blood pressure medication and taken off for the study, were tested. Indeed, 20 percent of the subjects had high blood pressure only in the doctor's office.

This is the first step towards defining who needs treatment, and who doesn't, Pickering said. "If we can tell these people whether they need treatment, that would be quite important. The finding makes me concerned that the doctor's readings may not be the best guide to the patient's level of risk." He said that doctors need to take into consideration the level of blood pressure measured outside of the office also.

The New York researchers say they will study this sub-group of patients, most of whom will discontinue their medications, to see if they develop strokes or heart attacks.

Richard Friedman, a psychologist at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, says that sometimes the very act of taking blood pressure can inch the mercury up. "Careful doctors have always asked their patients to relax to avoid high results," he said.

The body's sympathetic nervous system responds to acute anxiety by increasing the heart and blood rate. The change occurs in a matter of seconds. The doctor may frown or look concerned, which magnifies anxiety and sets up a cycle specific to the blood pressure-taking situation.

Friedman spends one day a week at Cornell training white-coat hypertensive patients in the art of relaxation. The researchers have set up a study where patients are taught to use specific relaxation techniques that will be practiced ultimately at the doctor's office in hope of overcoming the white-coat phenomenon.

Doctors agree that white-coat hypertension is an important, albeit understudied, issue. "The last thing we want to do is treat people who don't need it," said Dr. Claude Lenfant, director of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute. "If this study is true, we have to take a second look at assessing high blood pressure."

Dr. Michael J. Horan, chief of the hypertension and kidney diseases branch at the government institute, agrees. "There is always the possibility of receiving bad news from a doctor. This can affect blood pressure." He added, however, that stress itself does not cause hypertension. In some people, Horan said, it merely aggravates the condition.

Does the stress response increase a person's risk of cardiovascular disease? Doctors just don't know. Acute stress does cause rises in hypertension but only lasts temporarily, experts say. It is not proven that exposure to stress over the long-term causes chronic hypertension.

Regardless of the cause of white-coat hypertension, the fact that one out of every five patients suffers from this condition suggests that new diagnostic measures are needed to avoid unnecessary treatment.

To drive his point home, Pickering also uses an echocardiogram to measure heart muscle. "If the pressure has been up most of the time, the heart muscle will be thickened," Pickering explained. "If it is closer to the home reading, the heart muscle will look healthy."

Doctors fear that the side effects of modern medications to lower blood pressure may be too dangerous for the borderline patient.

The drugs commonly prescribed for high blood pressure all have drawbacks: Diuretics can lead to loss of potassium that may cause heart complications; and beta blockers affect the performance of the heart itself and prevent the bronchial tubes from dilating properly.

Arlene Steinberg, who for seven years remained tied to daily high-blood- pressure medication, now looks back with anger and frustration. "I was popping drugs and always aware that I was a hypertensive. During office visits, my blood pressure kept elevating and my doctor kept increasing the dosage. I felt like I was being treated by a cardiologist, who presumably knows what he is doing. You don't question things. After a while, I said this was crazy."

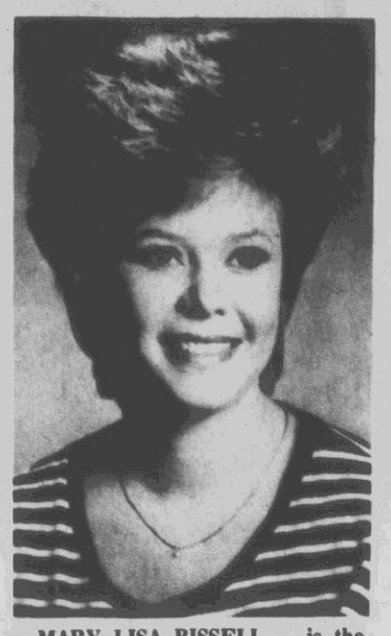

She was referred to Pickering who immediately hooked her up to a 24-hour monitor. "It was the strangest thing. I was seeing that my pressure was normal most of the day. After he analyzed it, he felt that I could do just as well without medication."

She is doing fine. She gave up smoking, known to increase the risk of hypertension, on Pickering's advice almost two years ago. "Now, I am at the lowest risk for heart disease. Not having to take the medication is wonderful. People would be doing themselves a great favor to see if they really need to be on medication." Recognizing Real Redware Pottery

From COUNTRY HOME
A Meredith Magazine

Redware pottery was first created by German immigrants settling in Pennsylvania in the late 17th century. Redware was created from clays of different colors which burned to brick-red in wood-fired kilns and slowly darkened to deeper red through both age and use.

According to Country Home magazine, most of the immigrants' wares were designed for utilitarian purposes, such as eating, drinking, preparing and storing food. In contrast, fancy pieces (sgraffito and slipware) were used primarily for decoration.

Sgraffito pieces, quite rare and very expensive, were prepared by first covering the body of red clay with a shallow layer of slip, a water-thinned clay. Intricate designs were scratched or etched into this covering to reveal the rich red clay beneath. Slipware was produced by pouring slip through a spout into plain, red clay, pottery, creating simple squiggles, lines, or designs, such as birds or flowers.

The earlier forms of redware were eventually phased out when it was discovered their lead glaze was toxic. Potters then turned to stoneware. By the beginning of the 19th century, a wide range of stoneware utensils was being produced for daily use.

When considering the purchase of redware pottery, it's important to recognize the distinction between authentic antiques, authentic reproductions, and forged or faked antiques. Although there are differing views on what constitutes an authentic antique, redware produced in the 18th and early 19th centuries falls into this category.

Although the supply of authentic sgraffito pieces is limited, avid antiques collectors are likely to come across plain utilitarian redware pieces. A simple glazed redware jar from the late 17th century can somtimes be purchased for between $40 and $60. Redware apple-butter pots, somewhat common and inexpensive, are even more affordable with price tags between $15 and $30.

Because elaborately decorated authentic sgraffito jars from the early 18th century are rare, prices may range from $2,500, to $10,000. As a result, potential purchasers should seek the advice of a knowledgeable and reputable expert or consider taking a substantial amount of time to educate themselves.

Anyone who cannot afford highly decorated antique redware may want to consider the purchase of reasonably priced authentic reproductions. Reproductions are duplications of original pieces and should be identified and sold as such. They can be a practical addition to any home because lead glaze is no longer used.

Consumers are particularly encouraged to beware of forged or fake redware antiques that are misrepresented regarding age, condition, maker, history, design or style.

Some forgeries are so well executed they even stump the experts. Nearly any technique early potters used can be reproduced and almost all of the characteristics used to determine authenticity can be duplicated.

Despite the difficulty of learning to evaluate authenticity, there are a few general guidelines that can be helpful in determining the age and origin of a redware piece.

In earlier days, there weren't any shelves in pottery kilns. As redware pieces were stacked directly on top of one another, fragments of one piece may be attached to another. So, for example, a pitcher with an excess piece of clay on its handle may be an old piece. Some redware may also show signs of warping or uneven glazing due to this stacking in the kiln.

Similarity of style among redware pieces is another basis on which to evaluate provenance and authenticity. By examining a variety of signed and dated pieces, consumers can learn to identify designs and stylistic trends characteristically used by different makers. These characteristics can aid in attribution of unmarked vessels.

Wear marks, chips, scratches, and other signs of use help identify the age of a piece. Crazing, or a fine network of cracks in the glaze, also is an indication of authenticity. However, even these signs of use can be duplicated.

When attempting to determine the value of a piece, there are additional characteristics to consider. For example, dated redware pieces usually cost more than similar undated pottery.

Love Affair With Carousel Returns

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — America's love affair with the carousel is on a giddy ride back, thanks to preservationists who are rekindling the romance by restoring antique ponies to their golden past.

"In spirit and design, the people who chiseled, painted and delivered carousels sired a special American breed," says William Manns, co-author of a new book "Painted Ponies: American Carousel Art."

Manns quit his job as an industrial engineer and spent the past 12 years tracking down rare handcarved ponies, many of them neglected and decayed. He said carousel restoration is a movement on the rise.

"With more value placed on the few remaining carousels in existence, a whole new generation has the opportunity to ride a colorful wooden horse and feel the carousel magic."

New Orleans can count itself lucky to have one of the few antique carousels that survive, he said.

The City Park carousel is one of 6,000 built in the United States between 1900 and 1925. It was a golden age when Coney Island boasted 26 carousels and three American schools of carousel art flourished.

But after the heydey, only about 200 of the old carousels survived.

Rising insurance and maintenance costs and declining ridership led many owners to sell their carousels. A number of them, including ones at Audubon Park and Pontchartrain Beach, were sold piecemeal. Others were left to rot.

This spring, the City Park carousel will return to New Orleans after Friends of City Park raised more than $800,000 for its restoration, under way in Connecticut.

"As collectibles, carousel figures are climbing the summit now. In the next two years I think carousel awareness will build," Manns said on a visit to New Orleans.

"There are three documentaries on carousels in the works now, including one on the restoration of the City Park carousel that will air on public broadcasting."

Over time, the antique carousels became recognized as the works of art and valuable collectors' items that they are, Manns said.

Carousels date to at least 500 A.D. and an early Arabian game, Manns said in his book. And medieval jousters practiced spearing a gold ring atop wooden practice horses.

In this country, carousel history began in 1870 with German immigrant Gustav Dentzel, who toured the countryside outside Philadelphia with his small, portable carousel. Dentzel would later carve the Audubon Park carousel.

In 1876 Charles Looff carved the nation's first stationary carousel at Coney Island, and at the turn of the century, the City Park carousel.

Elsewhere, other immigrant craftsmen brought talent to the production of flying horses and developed richly detailed styles of carving and painting.

Contact IRS To Receive Answers To Questions

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In 1981 my husband drove a semi for a living and I worked as a salesperson in a women's apparel store. We have two children. Most of my husband's money went toward his truck payments and repairs on his truck, plus expenses for his trips. He destroyed his receipts and logs.

When time came to do our taxes, my husband said he didn't receive his W-2 forms but it was OK to file without them and he would straighten the matter out later. Needless to say, he didn't. He never even attempted to get his W-2 forms.

Now the IRS says we owe an enormous amount of money in back taxes and penalties! I am very angry because I have always paid my taxes. This idiot husband of mine says, "Leave it alone and they will forget about it." Abby, have you ever heard of the IRS "forgetting" anything?

We do not own any property and we're drowning in bills. Obviously my husband is responsible, so should I go to the IRS or write to them? Is it possible for me to refile just for myself? I have already put my husband out because he refused to do anything about this. He won't take a regular job because he's afraid they will garnishee his wages. What if he disappears? Am I stuck with this, too? If I go back to work, will they garnishee my wages? I can't afford an attorney. Help me! — GOING CRAZY

DEAR GOING: I suggest that you contact the IRS. The people there will be able to tell you all you need to now. I wish you luck.

DEAR ABBY: I am deeply in love with a wonderful man who loves me as much as I love him. I don't see anyone but him, and he doesn't see anyone but me. He is brimming over with life, love and passion, and we're in seventh heaven when we're together.

He has been married twice and was hurt both times. He has teen-aged daughters. I was married once and have three small children. I am a respectable woman and I work outside my home.

Now the problem: We've been seeing each other for more than two years and have kept our relationship a secret because he's a Baptist minister and fears that if his congregation learns that he has a girlfriend, they might kick him out of his church. He has been the pastor there for many years.

To further complicate things, his daughters don't want any woman close to their daddy. They give him a hard time at home and snub me at church. I see him only at church and on rare occasions when our kids aren't home and neither one of us has to work. It's hard for me to deal with caring for him and not being able to be with him. I don't want him to lose his church and I don't want to lose him. Is there anything we can do? — LONELY LADY

DEAR LONELY: Yes. You two should come to an understanding. There is no reason why you should be "sneaking around" to see each other. You are both unmarried respectable adults. If his congregation will "kick him out of his church" because he is keeping company with a lady he loves, he's in the wrong congregation. And if his daughters snub you in church and don't want any woman close to their daddy, Daddy should straighten them out instead of hiding from them.

Keeping your relationship a secret is dishonest, childish and wimpish. And unless your man is willing to bring you out of the closet, don't count on a future with him.

DEAR ABBY: You keep hearing about how hard women work to stay trim and slim until they get married, then after the wedding they let themselves go.

Well, how about the men? I'll bet if the truth were known, men put on just as much weight — maybe more — than their wives after the wedding. Check it out. — FAT AND SASSY LADY

DEAR LADY: I checked it out with the American Dietetic Association. I was told that after 13 years of marriage, the average American woman will have gained 23 pounds, while her husband will have put on 18.

Twig Roosters Are Profitable

By GARY CRAMER
The Intelligencer Journal

LANCASTER, Pa. (AP) — Chris Lubkemann's wife claims that when her husband looks at a tree he sees roosters instead of bark and leaves.

Indeed, uninformed visitors to the Lubkemanns' residence might think the family has some sort of rooster fetish. The living room alone contains dozens of figures of the barnyard birds.

Some are big enough to use as tiny paperweights while others are so tiny they require a magnifying glass to verify that they are, in fact, poultry.

The figures all have one thing in common — Lubkemann carved each one from a single twig or branch.

Ever since his college days, Lubkemann has made an enjoyable and sometimes profitable hobby out of collecting properly shaped twigs and branches and whittling them into the shapes of roosters. He makes other animals as well, but favors the farm fowl for the ease with which it can be carved.

"It's probably the cheapest hobby in the world," Lubkemann claimed of his craft.

The 42-year-old Lancaster resident, who learned the rudiments of rooster carving from a North Carolina minister while in college, has probably done more than any other individual to bring the craft to the public's attention.

Lubkemann has written what may be the only book devoted exclusively to twig and branch carving, and has marketed a pocketknife in Portugal that is especially shaped for rooster whittling. The knife and book should soon be available in the United States as a kit, he said.

In addition, Lubkemann has the honor of holding a Guinness Book of World Records title for carving the world's smallest rooster from a twig. Measuring one-eighth of an inch, it is being held in New York for possible inclusion in the Guinness Museum in the Empire State Building.

"I sometimes get accused of throwing down a wood chip and calling it a rooster," he claimed of his smallest works.

Lubkemann was born in Brazil to missionary parents and he and his wife have continued this missionary work in Portugal for the past 14 years. They moved to Lancaster in August and still work as missionaries for the Pocket Testament League.

Lubkemann demonstrated his whittling technique in several European countries over the years and taught the basic rooster-carving method to hundreds of people, sometimes as part of his ministry, but more often just to make friends.

"I'm very careful about how I use it in my missionary work," he said. "Sometimes people just want a carver and don't want to hear any of that religion stuff."

Lubkemann claims anyone who has a sharp knife and follows directions can turn out something that looks like a rooster in 17 simple steps. After a little practice it is possible to turn a few handfuls of twigs into hundreds of dollars, he said.

"This is a fun thing," he said. "I've seen literally thousands and thousands of people enjoy it. A lot of people on limited incomes can do it. It's cheap. All they need is a knife, some branches and some paint."

Many of the people he taught both in the United States and abroad now make a living, or at least a profit, off their rooster figures, Lubkemann said.

From laid-off engineers to subway beggars, several people who had no other way to earn money found public demand for roosters could translate into a respectable second career.

"In my senior year of college (the roosters) are how I earned money for books, soap, toothpaste," Lubkemann recalled. "When we had bills to pay these crazy things bailed us out.

Lubkemann has not always used his talent for financial purposes, though.

"In 14 years in Portugal I never sold one," he said. "I gave away hundreds and hundreds of them."

These Folks Travel The Globe Restoring Smiles

By DAVID BRISCOE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A volunteer group that began five years ago with a modest mission to help deformed children in the Philippines has Peace Corps-like goals, a projected $4 million annual budget and ambitions that circle the globe.

"Operation Smile" of Norfolk, Va., has conducted medical and social missions in three countries, operated on more than 1,500 children and adults, set up several high school chapters in the United States and enlisted hundreds of volunteers.

Patients have included a man whose mother didn't recognize him after 45 minutes of restoration surgery, a teen-age boy whose nose and mouth had to be rebuilt and a woman who had a 36-pound growth removed from her face.

"Some of these people literally could not smile," said Dr. William P. Magee Jr., who with his wife Kathy, founded the organization after participating in a 1982 mission to repair cleft palates and lips in the Philippines.

"Ten years from now," he said in an interview, "hundreds of cities will have people involved, each helping a different country around the world. I have no doubt."

After the first Philippine trip, so many children and adults were left pleading for their return that they had to go back, Magee said.

Operation Smile now has sent plastic surgeons and others to the Philippines, Kenya and Liberia and started work to set up missions in India and South America. A team is to go to Columbia later this year.

Their major goal is to repair cleft palates and lips — operations routinely performed on children shortly after birth in more affluent countries. The Philippine patients average 10 years of age, Magee said.

But the work with patients and communities goes on after the operations.

"We try to step out of the operating room and take care of the whole patient," said Mrs. Magee, who is a nurse.

The group plans its most ambitious project yet late this month, when it returns to the Philippines with 120 volunteers from 14 states, ranging from plastic surgeons to high school students.

Past missions have included dentists, speech and play therapists, sociologists, teachers and even an occasional computer expert. One group installed a donated computer at a Philippine hospital.

Among the plastic surgeons on this year's team is Dr. Michael Vincent, who in August 1985 removed a small cancerous spot from President Reagan's nose.

Other renown physicians have donated their services, including French cranial-facial specialist Dr. Paul Tessier who operated on Salvacion Custodio.

Ms. Custodio, 27, who is returning to the Philippines with this year's team after a year of surgery in the United States, had a cleft that extended from her eye to her mouth, doctors said.

A geneticist will travel with this year's team to conduct research into why cleft palates and lips occur three times more frequently in the Philippines in the United States.

The doctors plan to perform 450 operations and set up a cranial-facial unit at a Manila hospital. The high school students will work with a United Nations immunization program and visit a school they collected donations for in the town of Sipocot, about 200 miles sout of Manila in the Bicol region.

The region around the scenic and still-active Mayon Volcano has long been plagued by depressed economic conditions, typhoons and Communist rebels.

The guerrillas blew up a bridge in Sipocot late last year.

Magee said the doctors have operated on several children of New People's Army rebels. He said Operation Smile has never had a problem with the Communists, who recently claimed responsibility for the killings of three U.S. servicemen outside Clark Air Base, north of Manila.

Operation Smile, which receives support from U.S. Filipino and African groups, runs on donations and the proceeds from Friday night bingo games in the Norfolk area.

It has had substantial support from the Christian Broadcast Network, founded by presidential candidate Pat Robertson, but spokeswoman DeLois Greenwood said Operation Smile is non-religious, apolitical and not affiliated with CBN.

Operation Smile pays much of the expenses of participants, including transportation, but their time is donated. If it does everything planned, the cost will reach $4 million for 1988, Ms. Greenwood said.

A Naga teen-ager, Antero Asico, first came to the doctors with a bandana covering half of his face that had been eaten away by a disease called noma, Magee said. He was turned away; the doctors felt his case was more than they could handle. But then they put out a message over local radio stations and, with help from the U.S. Embassy and contacts in Washington, had Asico on a plane to the United States in two weeks.

The young man, who had shunned social contacts for years, is now married and working as a carpenter in Naga, Magee said.

Another former patient's family runs Naga's Smile Beauty Parlor, named after the organization, the doctor said.

He said the movement also benefits its American volunteers, including young people who have formed "Happy Clubs" in several high schools. The clubs send youths abroad with the teams and raise money for Third World students.

"After two weeks, they come back different people," Magee said of both the doctor and students who participate. "Their problems here seem petty, and they come back really stimulated to help their own community."

A Best Friend Is Feeling

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

For over 40 years, I have had the best friend you could ever have. When I told my best friend I was fat, she never said, "I just lost three pounds without even trying."

When we went to a sock hop together in college and she was offered a ride home, she never ditched me.

When I gave myself a home permanent and left it on too long, she was the only one to sit with me in the bathroom until it grew out.

When I told my best friend my husband gave me two snow tires for our anniversary, she never said, "You should be happy he remembered."

When I was pregnant and my stomach looked like a tray on a car door in a drive-in, she never said, "There's a glow about pregnant women."

When I had a miscarriage and everyone else in the world said, "There will be other babies," she cried with me over the one I lost.

When she told me she was staying home for summer, I wouldn't have dreamed of sending her a card from Spain telling her what a great time I was having.

When her mixer broke down, I never asked her if she had sent in the warranty card so she'd be covered.

When I moved 3,000 miles away, she never once told me what I was doing to her. When her mother died, I never said, "She had a rich, full life and she was in her 70s."

When I argued with my husband and begged her for advice, she kept her mouth shut. She just listened.

When we couldn't get a sitter and had to bring the kids along to her house for dinner, she never fell apart.

When I had my first autographing party and no one showed up, she never once suggested, "They probably didn't see the ad."

When her political candidate lost and mine won, I never said, "Ha ha, I told you so."

Every time we got together, neither of us had to say, "I'm glad to see you."

When she was up to her armpits in snow, I never called her to say, "The sun is shining here."

Recently, my best friend lost her child. He was her youngest and was in his 20s. I listened to her. I cried with her. I felt pain that I had never known I could feel before. But not once did I say to her, "I know how you feel."

Nostalgia Is In The Middle Of Lonely Desert

By CHARLES HILLINGER
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

VALMY, Nev. — Valmy is pure nostalgia, a leftover from the 1930s, an out-in-the-middle-of-nowhere, two-lane-highway road stop similar to those that dotted the desert landscape of the Southwest years ago.

For 55 years Eugene DiGrazia — "The Valmy Badger" — has operated the same yellow clapboard Shell station-general store-Greyhound bus depot topped by an antique neon sign proclaiming "Valmy Auto Court."

DiGrazia, 74, also has more years of continuous service as a postmaster than anyone else in the West — 53 years running the hole-in-the-wall Valmy Post Office, which is housed in an old miner's shack with postal boxes dating back to 1900.

His appointment, signed by James Farley, President Franklin D. Roosevelt's postmaster general, and dated Dec. 24, 1934, is tacked to the wall. He actually operated the post office for two years before that but did not legally become postmaster until he reached the minimum required age of 21.

(Only Lillian Bowles, 76, postmaster of Wonalancet, N.H., since September 1932, and Archie Wardeski, 75, postmaster since November 1933 of Irondale, Ohio, have been on the job longer than DiGrazia, according to the U.S. Postal Service.)

And DiGrazia is also owner-operator of Valmy Water Co., distributor of free water from an old 10,000-gallon galvanized iron tank suspended above a well next to the Southern Pacific Railroad track. In the old days the tank was used to water steam engines.

DiGrazia is also mayor, fire chief, dog catcher, ambulance driver — you name it, he's it — in Valmy, population 65, located off Interstate 80 in northern Nevada's lonely desert 315 miles from Salt Lake City and 200 miles from Reno.

He also owns a small cafe, Gene's Golden Grill; the six-unit $15-to-$23-a-night Valmy Auto Court motel, and the two trailer parks on the 63 acres within the Valmy city limits. All of the townspeople — gold miners, employees of a nearby power plant and DiGrazia's own five employees — live in mobile homes in the trailer parks.

Rock star Bruce Springsteen was so struck with the turn-back-the-clock flavor of Valmy when he drove through here several years ago that he had his picture taken sitting on a chair in front of DiGrazia's gas station-general store-bus depot.

The photograph was used on the cover of a limited-release 1981 album by Springsteen and his E Street Band. Amid the clutter of DiGrazia's memorabilia in the Valmy general store is one of the records signed: "To Eugene. Thanks, Bruce Springsteen."

"There has been a post office here since 1890. Nobody alive in these parts and none of the old-timers now dead ever could figure out why someone named this place Valmy — after a famous 1792 battle in France," DiGrazia said.

(In the battle, the French repelled an Austrian and Prussian invasion force.)

DiGrazia comes by his nickname "The Valmy Badger" because for years he has used that name for a column he writes "about my neck of the woods" for the weekly Battle Mountain Bugle, published in a small town 15 miles down the road.

He married his wife, Julia, 49 years ago. She lived in the tiny mining town of Golconda, 15 miles in the other direction. The two of them worked together "keeping Valmy afloat" all through the years.

"An old schoolmarm owned Valmy. I bought the gas station, store, post office, bus depot — the whole works — from her when I was 19 for $1,800. There was $300 worth of groceries in the store at the time. I later bought 140 acres surrounding the place for $2,100," recalled DiGrazia.

"The station had only one pump and in the beginning cars and trucks were few and far between. A narrow two-lane road went through here. Gas sold for 25 cents a gallon. I paid 19½ cents for it. ... Bread sold for 10 cents a loaf, milk 10 cents a gallon."

Many of his regulars when he first started in 1932 were prospectors who rode in to Valmy from their diggings on burros.

"President Herbert Hoover stopped here in 1940. He was interested in a gold mine near here. He bought gas, bought some candy and used the out-house. He stood around and talked for a while," DiGrazia said.

That was three years before electricity came to Valmy.

"We saved for 12 years to get a telephone and have contact with the outside world," he said. "I bought 30 telephone poles for $1,500 in 1942 and a friend and I strung a wire along the poles for 2½ miles to tie in with the main telephone line." He still has three old crank phones.

In addition to everything else he has done in this tiny dot in Nevada's desert, DiGrazia, father of two sons and eight times a grandfather, drove a county school bus for 35 years, until he was 65. "I drove over a million miles without an accident. Not even a flat tire," he says proudly.

He has raised the American flag over the gas station every morning since taking over, when he and eight railroad workers were the only residents here.

"In winter it gets colder than blazes and in summer hotter than hell, but I love it," DiGrazia says. "I never want to retire. If I did, I don't know what the hell I would do.

"Whatever happens, as long as I live, I want Valmy to stay just as it is today, which isn't much different than what it was when I first came here."

Philadelphia Mayor Has Banned Photos

By STEFAN FATSIS
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Art and politics just don't mix in Philadelphia.

In the fourth attempt to ban art from City Hall in the last two years, Mayor W. Wilson Goode ordered two black and white photographs he said depict New Year's Day revelers painted like minstrels removed from an exhibit.

The photographer explained that the Mummers Parade marchers are wearing blue and green makeup and not blackface, which was banned from the annual folk festival in 1964.

Goode, the city's first black mayor, was offended nonetheless.

"They don't belong anywhere in City Hall," Goode said in a statement Dec. 29. "They are an insult to black people and should be removed."

The glass case containing the two 11-by-14-inch documentary photos was covered with brown wrapping paper before the pictures were summarily taken out of the fourth-floor display.

The incident has enraged local artists and curators who are charging the mayor with censorship. Three artists have pulled out of the "Art in City Hall" program while others are calling for it to be permanently canceled.

"There's a fairly parochial point of view surrounding art on the part of some of our political leaders," said Edward C. McGuire, president of the Moore College of Art. "They don't recognize or accept the role of art in American society. I think there are some nerves exposed and they are quick to make judgments because of that."

At the inaugural "Art in City Hall" show in September 1985, Brazilian artist Jonas dos Santos was summoned by Goode to explain that black stick houses in a painting did not represent ones that burned in a confrontation between police and the radical group MOVE. The artist was asked to change the painting. He refused.

Three months later, city officials for the same reasons protested a painting by Anda Dubinskis that depicted a burning building. Like dos Santos' work, it was allowed to remain in the exhibit despite objections.

Last July, the city rejected an "installation art" project by Daniel Loewenstein after it already had been approved for inclusion by the show's curators. The work showed two columns built with garbage cans on either side of a doorway blocked by trash.

The artist said he was making a political statement about the city's long-standing inability to solve a trash-disposal problem. The parties settled out of court after Loewenstein threatened to sue.

"Artists are being denied their free expression if it doesn't come within the parameters of what people in City Hall consider appropriate art," Loewenstein said. "That's not any kind of way to conduct an art program. It's censorship and that's wrong."

In the latest incident, two pictures by free-lance photographer James Conroy were deemed offensive by the mayor after the son of City Council President Joseph Coleman protested that the Mummers were wearing blackface.

The photos were part of an exhibition entitled "Mummery" that opened Dec. 16 and also includes paintings, costumes and masks selected by a panel of curators. It is scheduled to run through March.

Conroy, who has been photographing the Mummers Parade for 15 years, said the pictures were taken in 1979 or 1980 and in 1986. Each shows a group of about 10 Mummers wearing elaborate silk costumes and wigs. On black and white film, their colorful face makeup appears dark gray.

Blackfaced Mummers were part of the parade from its inception in 1901 until civil rights groups began protesting in the early 1960s. A Philadelphia Common Pleas Court judge in 1964 banned blackface and also prohibited civil rights groups from picketing the parade.

Thora Jacobson, director of the Samuel S. Fleisher Art Memorial, which helped curate the show, criticized Goode and other officials opposing the photos "who presume to know what an artist means."

"I think the perception was the more important phenomenon, not the reality of what was documented or how it was photographed," she said. "The mayor as a black man and as the mayor of the city sees himself as protector of the community."

To support Conroy, two other photographers and a painter participating in the exhibit sent letters to the mayor asking that their work be removed.

"If you felt the photos depicted blackface, what you should do is go to the Mummers and deal with it that way," said Harvey Finkle, 53, who had two pictures in the show. "You don't ban the photographs for portraying what exists.

In 1929, the German dirigible Graf Zeppelin completed a trip around the world.

Raleigh Church Is A Landmark

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A Raleigh church is one of 17 properties nationwide recently accorded the designation of National Historic Landmarks. Interior Secretary Don Hodel said the "landmarks incude examples of American architecture such as churches, university buildings, libraries, country homes and a yacht.

The new North Carolina national landmark is Christ Episcopal Church, Raleigh. It was designed by Richard Upjohn and Hobart Upjohn in 1848, and was one of the first gothic revival churches in the South.

Built in the style of an English parish church, its immediate precedent was New St. Mary's Church in Burlington, N.J. It set the ecclesiological fashion in the southern states for many years.

Owner or owners of buildings registered as historic landmarks agree to observe preservation precepts and to receive technical advice and assistance from preservation experts if needed.

Association Plans A Hatteras Village

HATTERAS — The Hatteras Village Civic Association has received a $50,000 check from the state of North Carolina toward the construction of a museum in the village of Hatteras.

Don Flowers, executive director of the Albemarle Historic Commission, recently presented the check to Dale Burras, president of the Hatteras Village Civic Association.

Plans for the museum have gone through several revised proposals since it was first suggested in December 1985 as a permanent home for the artifact of the Monitor ironclad, sunk during the Civil War off the coast of North Carolina.

The artifacts, however, were awarded last February to the Mariner's Museum in Newport News, Va.

State Senator Marc Basnight, representing Dare County as part of his constituency, said "I still believe the Monitor artifacts were stolen from the state of North Carolina. They were ours for 125 years, and they should still be ours."

The $50,000 was given to the association to put together a feasibility study. Four entities — the Hatteras Village Civic Association; the National Park Service; the Albemarle Regional Commission, and the N.C. Division of Archives and History are involved in developing the study.

The National Park Service will provide land for the museum, according to Tom Hartman, superintendent of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore. The proposed site, near the Hatteras village ferry docks, is also near the location where Fort Clark, a Confederate defensive position in the Civil War, once stood.

The Albemarle Historic Commisison will be an intermediary between the Hatteras Village Civic Association and the state and will help with raising more funds for the musum.

"The museum has just now has become a reality," said Burras. "We are now taking everything one step at a time. Everything is very tentative."

Canoe Trips Scheduled At Millpond State Park

GATESVILLE — Floyd K. Williams, park chief ranger, has announced two winter canoe programs that have been scheduled in January and February at Merchants Millpond State Park near Gatesville.

Participation in both events will be limited due to the number of rental canoes available at the park. A canoe rental fee of $1 is to be charged for each of the excursions.

Reservations are necessary. These can be made by calling the park office at 357-1191 or by writing at an early date to: Merchants Millpond State Park, Route 1, Box 141-A, Gatesville, N.C., 27938.

For both trips, participants will meet prior to the 9 a.m. departure hour at the canoe rental point in the park.

The first canoe trip, to begin at 9 a.m. Saturday, is a "Winter Birds by Canoe" event, and will be an exploration to see winter birds, including waterfowl, in their winter home.

The second canoe program is set for Feb. 20, beginning at 9 a.m. The program, "Virgin Cypress Canoe Trip" will be an excursion into Lassiter Swamp to see some of the virgin cypress trees there. This will be a strenuous canoe journey with a total of about ten miles to be traveled and will take at least four to five hours, so that canoeing skills by participants will be required.

For both trips, those attending are to wear warm clothing, comfortable shoes, and are to bring a lunch and something warm to drink. A change of dry clothing is also recommended.

Stamps In The News

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

A 19th-century harbor scene is featured as the main design of a new 22-cent commemorative stamp hailing the State of Connecticut's 200th anniversary. The stamp is part of the Constitution Series of the USPS that will honor seven other states in 1988.

The new adhesive incorporates the harbor scene modeled after the town of Mystic. Prominent in the design is the Charles W. Morgan, a full-rigged whaling ship launched in 1841. The whaling ship, the only wooden vessel of its kind in existence today, is still at the Mystic port.

The state name of "Connecticut" is seen in red at the bottom of the stamp. The date "January 9, 1788," is printed in black type directly above. "22 USA" also in black appears in two lines in the upper right corner.

Connecticut gained fame in the early years for shipping and sailing. By 1700, shipyards were producing vessels up to 100 tons. The state was responsible for a number of maritime firsts, including the first warship to be built in America, and the invention of the steamboat.

Connecticut's delegation to the Constitutional Convention played a pivotal role in resolving a major dispute on representation between smaller and larger states. Under the Connecticut compromise, every state was granted an equal vote in the Senate, with representation in the House of Representatives based on population.

Connecticut, nicknamed the Constitution State, was the fifth state to enter the Union.

First-day cancellations for the Connecticut stamp are available as follows:

If you wish to purchase the stamps at your local post office and affix them to your own envelopes, send to Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Connecticut Statehood Stamp, Postmaster, Hartford, CT 06101-9991. No remittance is required. Envelopes must be postmarked by Feb. 8, 1988.

Those preferring to have the USPS affix the stamp should enclose a money order or personal check for 22 cents per stamp and send to: Connecticut Statehood Stamp, Postmaster, Hartford, CT 06101-9992. Deadline is Feb. 8.

How Sylvan Learning Center® can help students catch up in reading or math.
17-YEAR TEACHING VETERAN SYLVIA HESTER, M.A. Ed., ON THE BENEFITS OF SYLVAN.
"We've all been there. A student begins falling behind in class. The parents, worried, ask for advice. We recommend supplemental education in the basics, reading or math. But how do the parents know where to find it?
"As a teacher, you may not be able to recommend one particular resource over another. But you can help a great deal by emphasizing the importance of finding quality facilities, teachers and methods, like those found at Sylvan Learning Center."
Sylvia Hester, 1986 Wake County, N.C. Mentor Teacher, is now a Sylvan Learning Center director.
Our approach works. Children improve so dramatically at Sylvan, we actually guarantee improvement.
The Sylvan Guarantee
Your student will improve at least one full grade equivalent score in basic math or reading skills after the first 36 hours of instruction, or we will provide up to 12 additional hours of instruction at no further cost.
Measurement will be based on norms from a nationally standardized achievement test for improvement in either reading (comprehension or vocabulary) or math (computation or application)
Of course, the benefits of Sylvan don't end with academic improvement. Most students experience a boost in self-esteem that often carries into home and social life, too.
Please call us for more information.
Sylvan: A proven successful way to help your students.
"Like you, we want to help children master the basics of learning..."
Sylvan is a nationwide chain of private educational centers providing supplemental instruction in basic reading and math. Our goal is quite simple. Like you, we want to help children master the basics of learning, so all possibilities in life are open to them.
We begin just where you might expect: with diagnostic tests that help us pinpoint the exact level at which the student is currently reading or solving math problems.
We then develop an individualized learning program. It begins with what the student knows, to ensure confidence from the start; then progresses at his or her own pace.
The program itself is varied to convey different concepts and hold the child's interest. We use computers, multi-sensory learning aids and math manipulatives, in addition to workbooks.
Along the way, we use the same effective techniques you apply: sound teaching, personal attention, and plenty of encouragement. The difference is, we're able to provide a far more concentrated level of attention. Instruction at Sylvan is given to students individually, with never more than three students assigned to one teacher.

Krishna Communes Hope To Save The World

By RAN DEVLIN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW VRINDABAN, W. Va. — In a tiny, cluttered office in New Vrindaban, a Hare Krishna commune in the hills of West Virginia, a robed architect named Murti Swami is designing 12 walled cities that he behimself and rally his people in New Vrindaban."

Deadwyler and other Krishnas, including some in the Lehigh Valley, portrayed Bhaktipada as an embattled leader of an isolated Krishna sect plagued by declining membership and financial and legal problems.

Bhaktipada was acquitted last month of arson, mail fraud and conspiracy charges in connection with the burning down of a devotee's house in July 1983, but a codefendant, Thomas Dresher, was convicted of arson.

Drescher and another follower of Bhaktipada have been convicted of murdering a fellow devotee. Drescher is also charged with the murder of a former resident of New Vrindaban, who was killed gangland style while sitting in his van on a street in Los Angeles.

A house parent in the New Vrindaban ashram, a dormitory where children over age 5 live, has been convicted of child molestation. The Marshall County, W.Va., prosecutor said the former head of the school, also charged with molesting the children under his care, has fled the country.

In addition, the New Vrindaban community faces possible civil suits by several National Football League teams and "Peanuts" cartoonist Charles Schultz for copyright infringements, according to the U.S. attorney in Wheeling.

"Economically, they're strapped," contended Deadwyler, who heads the Philadelphia, Pa., Krishna temple and a Krishna commune in central Pennsylvania. "By creating a big ruckus about building a city of God, it distracts attention from their immediate problems."

Glowing in the morning sun, the Palace of Gold at New Vrindaban looks like a piece of India dropped down in the foothills of Appalachia.

With the fog still hanging low, the faint sound of the rhythmic Hare Krishna mantra drifting out over the valleys beneath McCreary's Ridge give the nouveau-Indian temple a spiritual aura all its own.

For the several hundred followers of Bhaktipada, who has legally changed his name from Keith Ham, living at New Vrindaban is the closest thing to being in the Indian town where Lord Krishna lived 5,000 years ago. The commune is named for the town.

Even before dawn, about 100 devotees have gathered in the Temple of Understanding, a lodge-type building in a valley beneath the Palace of Gold.

On the parquet floor of a room larger than a basketball court, the devotees burn incense and chant to the beat of a drum and the clanging of brass cymbals.

In a ceremony rich with ritual thousands of years old, the men and boys chant before an altar decorated with ornately clothed deities. As the pace quickens, they jump in an almost aerobic fashion, chanting loudly and moving in groups from one end of the room to the other.

The women, dressed in colorful saris, gather at altars at either side of the room. As young girls carrying brass lamps walk around the room, devotees wave their hand lightly over the flame and touch their foreheads.

When the chanting subsides after an hour or so, the women gather around the sacred Tulsi plant. The plant is named for a woman devotee whose wish was to spend eternity at the feet of Krishna, who devotees believe allowed her to reincarnate in the plant.

"I came here because it's the best thing for my life," said Tracy Felix, who left a job in the Justice Department to live full time at New Vrindaban. It's your natural tendency to want to go back to Godhead."

Felix, who has not yet taken a Krishna name, said she wanted out of the Washington rat race and found little satisfaction in her career.

Guru Prasada Swami, who grew up in affluent Laguna Beach, Calif., said he came to New Vrindaban eight years ago to escape the material world. Although he declined to give their name, he said his parents manufacture rifles and pistols in California. He was being groomed to take over the family's arms business before he took up the austere, nonviolent Krishna life.

"I'm not into war, hunting or killing," he said. I won't kill a fly."

Prasada, who at 27 has reached the highest levels of the Krishna hierarchy, explained that sect members eat no meat, do not take alcohol or caffeine, do not gamble (even on the stock market) and engage in sex only for procreation.

"The human life is meant for more than bodily pleasures," he said. "God gave us a brain to use it, not to become animals."

Prasada, who heads Inner Visions Ministries in New York City, said Krishnas are staunchly against abortion.

"Having a lot of sex makes you forget God and think of your own body," he said, sitting on the tile floor of the sect's dining room. "Some people would rather kill their offspring than give up lust."

Although Prasada works in New York, most of the Krishnas at New Vrindaban spend their days performing various services in the commune.

One of its largest operations is a 350-head dairy, which produces 1,000 gallons of milk a day — half of which is sold commercially, the rest used in the commune's kitchen.

In addition, the commune operates what it says is the largest Sanskrit book publishing firm in the country and an auto repair shop, and has its own construction company. Sect members made most of the brickwork for the Palace of Gold in shops on the property.

In addition, Krishna officials say, about 200,000 tourists pay $5 apiece to tour the Palace of Gold each year, buy souvenirs in its gift shop and eat in its restaurant.

While the community has been there nearly 20 years, its relations with the farmers and coal miners of Marshall County have often been rocky.

Residents of the rural area about 20 miles south of Wheeling were reluctant to talk about the sect, but expressed displeasure about the way it bought up about 3,000 acres of farmland by paying higher-than-market prices.

Debbie Beckner, who lived near the commune but has since moved, said when the sect first located in the county its signs were repeatedly burned by local residents. She said the animosity has settled down in recent years.

"As long as they don't bother me, I don't care," she said.

Bonnie Carney, one of about 87 non-Krishnas employed by the sect, said her son has been beaten up by other boys on the school bus. "My little boy won't tell anybody where I work any more," said Carney, who operates the switchboard at the Krishna offices.

Although New Vrindaban has had its troubles all along, the murder of former devotee Steve Bryant has brought the sect under intense investigation by local, state and federal law enforcement agencies.

Bryant left the sect. claiming that Bhaktipada had turned his wife and child against him. Traveling around the country in an old van, he waged a one-man crusade against the New Vrindaban leader.

In 1986, while he sat at the wheel of his van in Los Angeles, someone put a .45-caliber pistol in the window, pulled the trigger and killed Bryant with two bullets to the head.

Thomas Drescher has been charged with the murder.

Drescher was convicted of the murder of another devotee, Charles St. Denis, in June 1983. According to Madison County prosecutor Thomas E. White, Drescher and another devotee who has yet to be tried shot, stabbed and bludgeoned St. Denis to death in a dispute that involved the purchase of a home and allegations that St. Denis raped Drescher's wife. Although Drescher was convicted without the body being found, White said authorities later recovered St. Denis' body in a streambed on the sect's property.

Bhaktipada was not linked to either slaying, but the U.S. Attorney

SHEPHERD — Louis Gorez, 64, Belgium's last itinerant shepherd, has been driving his sheep down country roads and across pastures of central Belgium for 45 years. He has no plans to retire but intends to circle the world again in accumulated distance. (AP Laserphoto)

The Last Shepherd In Belgium

EDITOR'S NOTE — This is one of a series of periodic reports by Associated Press correspondent on life and culture in the byways of the world.

By MILAN RUZICKA
Associated Press Writer

HENRIPONT, Belgium (AP) — The modern world whizzes by, but the only heed Louis Gorez pays to it is an occasional wave — for what he does every day of every year goes back to the beginning of time.

He is a shepherd, the last of his kind in Belgium.

Gorez figures he has walked more than 130,000 miles in the 45 years he has tended sheep 20 miles outside bustling Brussels, never with a vacation or a day off.

At 64, he still puts in 10 miles a day and has no thought of retiring.

"I love sheep," he told a rare visitor as he drove his 100 sheep and lambs down a country road.

That's why he left the family farm and why he lives alone in this hamlet.

"I know all my sheep by name," he said.

He cuts a lonely figure against the gently rolling horizon of central Belgium where he has spent all his life.

Rain or shine, Gorez leads his flock every day from his home through fields and down country roads. It gives him little chance to speak much, yet he is eager to talk to anyone willing to chat.

As he speaks with a visitor, Major and Doran, his two mongrel dogs, fret nervously, unaccustomed to seeing him so animated and so close to a stranger.

Gorez has herded his sheep without ever seeing another itinerant shepherd, and when he goes, he said, there will be none in Belgium.

He began in 1942 with 180 sheep. Not much has changed since then, he said, except the flock has dwindled to 100 and is likely to shrink even more.

The greatest menace, Gorez said, is not the growing car traffic or disappearing pastures but Belgium's imports of mutton and lamb.

"The government even pays a premium on imported sheep," he complained. "It's getting impossible for me to sell my sheep."

When his ewes are about to give birth he likes to stay close to home.

"This one will have a lamb today ... and that one too," he said, pointing with his long staff.

A rolled up burlap bag is his standard equipment during the lambing season. Once the ewe has licked her newborn dry, Gorez puts it into the bag, takes it home along with the mother, who gets a day off.

His other tool is a long stick with a hook and a small spade at the end. With the spade, Gorez picks up globs of dirt to throw at sheep that stray. The hook is for grabbing them by their hind legs.

Gorez's sheep graze the year-round, even when it freezes and the ground is covered with snow.

"They can always find something to eat," he said.

The only break in his routine came in 1969 when he fractured his skull falling off a bike. He spent two months in the hospital.

The accident has not kept him off the bike, which he uses to go to Ecaussinnes, three miles away, for groceries.

He use to stop for a chat and a drink at the bar, but doctors forbade him alcohol after the accident. So the chat is out as well.

As he drives his flock, Gorez gets friendly waves from passing cars. He always waves back and often that's the extent of his encounter with the modern age.

"Sometimes I don't speak with anyone for days," he said.

He is known in the area simply as "the shepherd." Few know his name or, for that matter, anything else about him.

He is part of the scenery, like the hill or the bend in the river or the rutted country roads that run up and down the landscape.

He was asked to be part of the scenery for a recent visit by King Baudouin.

A local aristocrat, who played a host to the touring monarch, asked Gorez to come with his flock to the chateau to complete the peaceful image he wanted to create.

Gorez obliged, but he never saw the king.

OPERA SEASON

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — The Santa Fe Opera will present the American premiere of Krzysztof Penderecki's opera, "The Black Mask," during its 32nd season. The season opens July 1 and continues through Aug. 27, with 37 performances in nine weeks.

A double bill of two works by Richard Strauss, "Feuersnot", and "Friedenstag", will continue the cycle of works by Strauss.

New productions of "The Flying Dutchman" and "Cosi Fan Tutte" and a revival of "Fledermaus" will complete the company's season.

New Stamp Issues News

A colorful 22-cent U.S. stamp pays tribute to the upcoming Winter Olympics that will take place in Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

The new stamp will be the 15th to commemorate the Winter Olympics. By coincidence, the 1988 competition is the 15th to be held since the Olympic Games were divided into separate summer and winter events in 1924.

The first-day site for the new stamp will be Anchorage, Alaska, which has been endorsed by the U.S. Olympic Committee and is under consideration by the International Olympic Committee as host for the 1994 games.

The design depicts a skier coming through two vertical poles of a slalom gate. The sky is bright blue and the background shows the white mountain snow. Appearing sideways along the left side of the stamp is "Olympics 88," which joins "22 USA" along the base. Above the "USA" are the familiar Olympic rings.

The first of the U.S. Olympic Winter Games stamps was issued in 1932 when the Olympic Games were held at Lake Placid, N.Y. The stamp featured an airborne skier competing in the Nordic combined, an event that blends cross-country skiing and ski jumping.

The second commemorative marked the return of the Olympic Games to the United States in 1960 when they were held in Squaw Valley, Calif. Beginning in 1972, at least one stamp has been issued by the Postal Service to honor the Winter Games.

First-day cancellations are available by the usual two methods.

Collectors desiring to affix their own stamps should purchase them at the local post office and send to: Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Olympic Winter Games Stamp, Postmaster, Anchorage, AK 99502-9991. No remittance is necessary. Envelopes must be postmarked no later than Feb. 9, 1988.

If you prefer to have the USPS affix the stamp, enclose a money order or personal check for 22 cents per stamp and mail to: Olympic Winter Games Stamp, Postmaster, Anchorage, AK 99502-9992.

Tlingit Language Being Preserved As Literature

EDITOR'S NOTE — Tlingit is a dying language, but thanks to the efforts of a Tlingit woman and her linguist husband, the language will be preserved as literature. Their work is a race against time; the couple knows of only two Tlingits under the age of 40 who still speak their native language.

By SUE CROSS
Associated Press Writer

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Nora Marks Dauenhauer remembers when speaking her native Tlingit tongue brought punishment at school and shame on the streets.

Today, she wins recognition as one of the last speakers of the language, known by thousands of people just two generations ago.

Professors in Germany and booksellers in Japan seek the legends she and her linguist husband, Richard, are trying to record before all who remember them are gone.

It's too late for Tlingit to survive as an everyday language, the Dauenhauers say, but they've taken a major step toward seeing it preserved as literature.

Their collection of Tlingit stories, "Haa Shuka'," which means "Our Ancestors," is part of a series that, when completed, will be the largest collection of stories published in both Tlingit and English, and the first edited by a Tlingit. The book was released in July by the University of Washington Press and the Sealaska Heritage Foundation of Juneau.

For the Dauenhauers, the work is a race against time. Since Mrs. Dauenhauer began collecting the stories in the 1960s, almost all the storytellers have died. Of the 12 elders whose tales are printed in the book, only three are living.

Mrs. Dauenhauer says perhaps 1,000 or more Tlingits still speak their native language, but they have not passed it on.

"We only know of two young men who can speak Tlingit, two under the age of 40. All of us who can speak it are now grandmothers," she says.

The Dauenhauers take great pride in responses they get from young Tlingits, even a note to say they got a given story all wrong. A dispute over varied versions at least rekindles interest in the legends and might prompt youngsters to ask how their grandparents told the stories, Dauenhauer says.

The Dauenhauers hope such interest will enable their preservation work to continue, with the creation of new stories.

The potential for many new stories and versions is one major difference between oral and written traditions, they say. Oral traditions generally have more versions, and the stories are tailored to the knowledge of the audience.

Spoken tales also are created and forgotten more frequently, the Dauenhauers say.

The tales in "Haa Shuka'" are considered Tlingit classics, which are not usually lost. But writing them, rather than recording them on video or audiotape, gives the stories a life outside the Tlingit culture, Dauenhauer says.

To non-speakers, "If it's written, it's OK, it's true," says Mrs. Dauenhauer.

Around the turn of the century, when many white people moved into southeastern Alaska's Tlingit country, Indians lost land because their ownership was recorded by oral tradition, she says.

Names and boundaries were remembered and passed down by clan tradition-keepers. But that was not recognized by the whites, who said no one owned the land unless they had a piece of paper proving it.

The Marks family, which owned a mountainside near Juneau, lost all but 2.6 acres along the shore where the Dauenhauers live and work.

The emphasis on writing, plus school rules against speaking Tlingit, led to its rapid loss, Mrs. Dauenhauer says. Indians could have continued speaking the language out of school, but felt pressured not to. "There was a shame factor to speaking Tlingit," she says.

A written form of Tlingit in the Cyrillic alphabet was first developed by Russian priests in the 1800s. A Roman-alphabet version was developed later, and a modified version of it is used in "Haa Shuka'."

Dauenhauer, who is not Tlingit, became interested in the language before he came to Alaska in 1969, intending to apply techniques learned studying Russian and German to native languages. While teaching at Alaska Methodist University, now Alaska Pacific, he met Nora Marks and read some speeches she had collected.

"I was absolutely moved by the beauty of the oratory. I thought this was as great as anything in English poetry," he recalls.

Dauenhauer says in addition to the scholary research allowed by a written language, it has a hidden advantage: It may help Tlingit stories get past what he views as discrimination in literary circles against oral traditions.

"There's a tendency for people to treat American native literature as though it was children's literature. But it's not," Dauenhauer says.

The themes of classic Tlingit tales are universal, he says: alienation, identity, conflict of loyalty, pride and arrogance, separation and loss, revenge.

He'd like to see the stories taught in comparative literature classes. "Our feeling is that this should be taught along with Moby Dick," he says.

The Dauenhauers also envision Tlingit being taught in language classes, as a study of grammar and form.

"People wouldn't come out speaking Tlingit. That's not going to happen anyway. But they'd learn how to learn languages," Dauenhauer says.

Aside from the death of Tlingit speakers, there's another reason the language is not likely to be revived: It's too complicated.

Tlingit has 24 sounds not found in English, and a single word may have 20 components. Aspects and classifiers alter Tlingit words, and like Chinese, a word's meaning changes with the tone in which it's said.

The complications have a hint of comedy. Dauenhauer recalls the night his mother-in-law, Emma Marks, ate a withered apple.

There's a Tlingit verb for just that action, which Mrs. Dauenhauer says most simply translates as eating "the round object that has dried out." Eat an old banana — different shape — and it's a different verb.

Eat dried out blueberries and it gets really complicated. They translate as "dryness is distributed through a handful of small round objects."

Here is a passage from "Mosquito," a story told by Robert Zuboff, of Killisnoo and Angoon. Zuboff died in 1974. The story was included in "Haa Shuka'," a collection of Tlingit tales edited by Nora and Richard Dauenhauer. It was published by the University of Washington Press and Sealaska Heritage Foundation.

He broke those ties,
small strings of spruce roots tying the pack.
When he came out
he got the cannibal's club.
He waited where it was going to come out.
As it stuck its head out, he struck it.
He struck it again.
He struck it again.
He struck it again.
He said,
"I know I killed this cannibal.
But it did a painful thing to me.
It killed two of my older brothers.
What more can I do to make it feel more pain?
Maybe it will be better
if I build a fire under him, and burn him up."
So just like that when he built a fire,
he pulled him into it,
he pulled the cannibal
into the fire.
When only the ashes were left,
when he couldn't make up his mind, he thought,
"What more can I do to the cannibal's ashes?"
And while he couldn't make up his mind, he blew on it, he blew on the cannibal's ashes.
They went into the air,
they became mosquitoes.
That's why mosquitoes
when they bite someone, hurt you bad, they're still the cannibal; even today.

Dauenhauer says there will always be a few scholars willing to try to learn Tlingit, but he's living testimony of the difficulty: "I've been at it 20 years," he says, "and I'm far from fluent."

Krishna Commune

William A. Kolibash said California authorities have listed the killing as a "murder for hire" in Drescher's extradition papers.

Kolibash declined to comment on the status of investigations into the sect's affairs, but indicated a federal grand jury is involved.

A former member of the Iskcon governing board, now living in the Lehigh Valley, said several of the sect's former offices have assisted in the grand jury investigation.

Angus Murphy, who once headed the Iskcon East Coast territory, charged that the sect's women were involved in prostitution, often frequenting hotels during major sporting events. He said the New Vrindaban sect is heavily involved in selling T-shirts, bumper stickers and other paraphernalia at country music concerts and football games.

Those guys selling you gloves on the street in New York, they're from New Vrindaban," said Murphy. Those guys hawking T-shirts at tractor pulls and fiddle contests, they're from New Vrindaban." In February, FBI agents and local police raided the New Vrindaban offices and seized cash and computer records, alleging copyright violations.

Murphy said that most Krishnas have dropped the once-popular tactic of approaching airport travelers for donations. He said they no longer wear saffron robes, wearing T-shirts and dungarees instead.

In a letter to The Morning Call and a subsequent telephone interview, Murphy said many Krishnas are upset by the New Vrindaban goings-on but are fearful of speaking out.

"There are a bunch of devotees out there who are silent because they are afraid their vans will be burned, their kids run over or their businesses destroyed," said Murphy, whose Krishna name is Adi Kasava-das.

Deadwyler said Bhaktipada was expelled from Iskcon last year at its annual meeting in India because he has repeatedly violated the wishes of His Divine Grace A. C. Bhaktivendanta Swmai Prabhupada, who brought Krishna to the United States in 1965. When he died in 1977, Prabhupada specified in his will that he wanted the movement run by the governing board, not a single person.

Bhaktipada wants to be pope," Deadwyler said.

Deadwyler said Iskcon conducted its own investigation of Bhaktipada's activities and, while stopping short of accusing him of criminal behavior, concluded that "not a blade of grass moves in New Vrindaban without Bhaktipada making it."

Jagadananda Pandit grew up in the Krishna movement.

When he was 7, his father, Murti Swami, joined the temple in Dallas and took his son with him.

Pandit, who is now 24, left the Krishna life 10 years ago and traveled through the Orient. Most recently, he managed a coffee shop in Honolulu.

"I've come back and decided to stay," he said, sitting on the steps of the Palace of Gold at dawn. "The movement is starting to bloom."

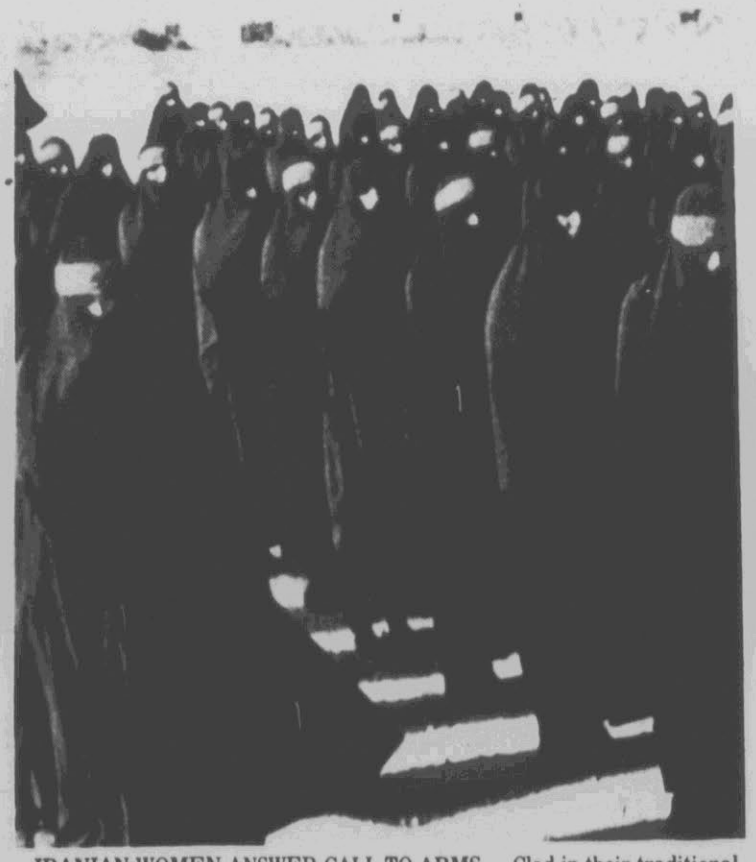

Pandit, whose born name is John Walsh, spends most of his time working in Krishna businesses in Boston, selling hats at Red Sox baseball games and preaching at Harvard and other New England campuses. But like the other devotees at New Vrindaban, he returns each month for a weekend of worship and feasting.

Pandit said he constantly reflected on the Krishna principles of birth, death, old age and disease and the reality that the body will eventually die.

"You either give it up now, or at 50," he said.

The young Krishna devotee, a handsome, square-jawed man with coal black hair, said non-Krishnas do not want to face the reality of death.

"You must ask, who am I, where did I come from, where am I going, am I the shell I'm living in?' " he said, rubbing his bare feet on the cold steps of the Krishna temple. "If a human being doesn't use his intelligence to ask these questions, then he's really been consumed by the television."

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS
DO YOU REALLY HAVE ENOUGH TABLES?
A national agency took a homemaker's survey recently, and one of the findings they reported was that the average home lacks sufficient tables.
They said that there was not only a lack of tables themselves, but also a lack of variety of tables in many homes.
Actually, there are several decorating guidelines to use concerning tables.
First, if you want to have a really comfortable, easy-to-live-in home, you should have tables near most of your seating pieces--and that's easier to accomplish these days because there's such a tremendous selection of shapes and sizes of tables. It's not difficult to find just the "right" table to fit beside any chair or sofa.
Secondly, although tables are practical and necessary to hold lamps, refreshments, etc., they also have an important role to perform in making your rooms beautiful. All by themselves, tables can add decorator touches if you pick the proper looking tables for the different parts of your room.
Look around your home. Ask yourself these two questions: Do you have enough tables? do you have pretty tables? If you'd like to improve on either of those points, we can help. Stop in and see our tables from over 30 different manufacturers in a wide variety of interesting styles and, as always, the best quality available anywhere.

"SOMETHING BEAUTIFUL IS ABOUT TO HAPPEN"

Indian Sites Exploration Expands Southern History

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

ALBANY, Ga. (AP) — Excavation of Indian sites visited by Spanish explorer Hernando De Soto during the 1500s will expand Southern history by several centuries, revealing new details of agrarian societies nearly wiped out by European diseases, says a University of Georgia anthropologist.

Charles Hudson, a professor in the university's anthropology and linguistics department, said De Soto and more than 600 men who accompanied him on a four-year expedition to the New World were the only Spaniards who saw the Indian civilization in the Southeast at its peak.

From then on, diseases such as measles, whooping cough and small pox, decimated the Indians, who had no immunity to the European maladies. European settlers began venturing into the interior of the country about 100 years later, he said in a telephone interview.

"De Soto and his men were the only Spaniards who saw these Indians at their height. If we can get the De Soto sites nailed down exactly, we'll know what was contemporary over a great part of the Southeast," said Hudson, who recently completed a book and several articles on other Spanish expeditions in the region.

Hudson said the average person begins Southern history with the founding of Jamestown, Va., in 1607. But he said the region's history should include the Spanish explorers and the Indians they encountered, descendants of people who arrived in the area 10,000 years ago.

"History in the South ought to begin with these Spanish explorers," he said. "The holocaust of diseases was really what made European conquest possible. If you want to say what cleared the way for Europeans on this continent, that was a great big piece of it."

Dissatisfied with a reconstruction of the De Soto route commissioned in 1935 by President Franklin Roosevelt, Hudson and other scholars spent eight years recharting the journey using the most up-to-date information available.

They began with vague accounts written by some of the Spaniards who accompanied De Soto. Then Chester DePratter, a graduate student, made a breakthrough when he discovered a document detailing the travels of Juan Pardo, a Spaniard who toured the Southeast 26 years after De Soto.

The Pardo account helped the scholars pinpoint five towns visited by both explorers.

De Soto's journey started at Tampa Bay in 1539 and lasted until 1543, when he died in Arkansas. His expedition spent the first winter at what is now Tallahassee, Fla., before visiting Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas, said Hudson.

After his death, De Soto's men traveled west to the Trinity River in Texas, then returned to the Mississippi River to build boats that took them to Mexico.

Historians discovered a De Soto campsite in Tallahassee last year and others are excavating a site in northwestern Georgia. Scholars also are trying to determine if a site near Selma, Ala., is the remains of an Indian village known as Mabila.

In the bloodiest battle of the expedition, 22 Spaniards were killed and another 148 were wounded when attacked by Indians near Mabila. Indian losses have been estimated at 3,000.

Most of the information available on Indians residing in the area during the 15th and 16th centuries has come to light in the last 20 years, Hudson said.

By the time of De Soto's visit, the Indians had an agricultural society. They grew corn, made pottery and crafted artifacts from shell and copper, Hudson said.

They lived in "chiefdoms," with a central town where the chief lived on the top of a high mound. Chiefs, thought to be descendants of the sun, were treated like they had divine powers and wore special clothing.

"I think they were far more complex than any Indians in the Southeast in the 18th century. Their societies were large. ... Some people were privileged. The military organization was more formal. By the 18th century, the Indians were more like guerillas, whereas in the 16th century, they were more disciplined and better organized."

Home Should Be Changed To Fit Owner's Needs

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Living longer is its own reward. But a person's later years can be more comfortable and safe if the home accommodates changing physical needs.

That's the theory behind a model home built recently by the Hartford Insurance Group. The home, which features about 100 modifications to enhance comfort, convenience and safety, will be exhibited publicly in various parts of the country during 1988 and 1989.

According to the company, all the products used are readily available and most are from manufacturers' standard lines. The remodeling suggestions, such as lowering cabinets and raising countertops, also require only standard building materials and methods.

Research for the design choices made was conducted by Beverly Hynes-Grace, staff gerontologist, and Joan A. Pease, a consulting designer specializing in retirement housing.

Timing for the demonstration project is particularly appropriate since Americans are both living longer and staying in their own homes longer.

Government figures show life expectancy is now 74.9 years at birth and a recent survey by the American Association of Retired Persons found that 75 percent of older Americans own their own home and nearly half of those over 60 had lived in their present home more than 20 years.

Yet, according to Pease, many of these homes have significant safety hazards and detriments to comfort for older Americans.

"I see design for seniors receiving more attention than 10 to 15 years ago, but I don't see what we have learned being implemented. I find too many architectural barriers, poor lighting, slippery floors, and too few products available to make living more comfortable," she said.

She added that thinking about changes to remove potential safety hazards and comfort drawbacks should start long before one has aged enough to need them. "That way people could incorporate features to enable them to stay in their homes, especially since the vast majority of older people live in a home they've owned for many years."

As one ages, a loss of sensory acuity often occurs, said both authorities. Some 95 percent of older adults experience decreased visual perception. Reading fine print becomes difficult; glare from sun or over-bright lights reduces concentration on close-work tasks and as the lens of the eye yellows, colors like blue, green, brown and black may appear similar.

It becomes harder to hear over competing background noise, harder to detect odors such as smoke and gas and more difficult to distinguish sensations such as being too hot or cold or feeling pain. Illness may also affect a person's strength, stamina, mobility, dexterity, agility and balance.

Home furnishings choices can produce a safer home without sacrificing good looks, said Pease. For example, glare from windows can be controlled through the use of miniblinds which don't obstruct the view.

In place of highly combustible materials for walls and upholstery fabric, fire retardant materials and fabrics can be substituted. Instead of a dense, thick carpet which she says can trap air and feed a fire, a flat weave or dense cut pile covering can be chosen. These are also easier for the wheelchair-bound and those with arthritis to walk on than thick pile.

Instead of standard mattresses and foam upholstery filling, which can emit deadly smoke if ignited, choose bedding and furniture made of fire retardant materials.

One such material, used in mattress covers and as an interlining between fabric, is a fiberglass. It does not allow flame to reach the stuffing. The mattress cover is widely available at moderate cost, according to Pease.

Some tips everyone can make use of include the following:

— Trip-proof the living room by removing throw rugs, coffee tables and other low-placed pieces. Slip-proof the bathroom with strategically-placed grab bars and non-skid flooring.

— Choose seating that is easy to get in and out of, avoiding low, very deep upholstery.

— Replace round doorknobs and faucet handles with levers. Opt for C-shaped drawer pulls and cabinet door handles for easy opening.

— Buy heat-generating small appliances such as toasters and irons with automatic shut-off features.

— Install smoke detectors and alarms near the bedroom.

— Buy an electric range oven to eliminate a potential gas leak that can't be detected with a diminished sense of smell. Choose a range that has controls at the front for easier access.

(These and other ideas are detailed in a free booklet, available by request. Send a stamped self-addressed business envelope to Hartford House, Hartford Insurance Group, Hartford, Conn., 06115.)

On The House

By ANDY LANG

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

A sure way to determine the best way to sell your house is to recall your own reactions to certain things when you were on the lookout for a place to live.

Were you turned off when you went to a house and discovered the area in front of it looked like a junkyard? Did it disturb you to see the odd collection of broken toys, worn tires and assorted other litter at the rear of the house? Did you wonder why the windows were so dirty and notice that a couple of them had long cracks? Did the grass and shrubbery appear to have been neglected? Did you get the feeling as you went in that you weren't going to like this place no matter how the inside looked?

If the answers to those questions were "yes," it is an affirmation of the condition known as "curb appeal." Real estate brokers will tell you a house often has a certain appeal — or a lack of it — because of what the onlooker sees at the curb or as he approaches the entrance. Everybody has imagination and many can tell how a house would look if it were taken care of properly.

But the truth is we are likely to make judgments quickly without thinking very much about the matter, which is why first impressions are so important. And just as first impressions are not always accurate, neither are those quick feelings we get about a house.

So it is to our advantage to see the house we have put up for sale has "curb appeal." When a house seems to be in good condition and the grounds are attractive, we think kindly about it and become receptive to the conditions we will see on the inside.

Having established the house is well-maintained in a nice community, we must now hold the prospective buyer's attention by "following through" properly. In short, the inside must have its own appeal. It does not have to be manicured. A lived-in atmosphere is fine. But doors should not squeak, faucets should not leak, wallpaper should not be peeling and nails should not be popping out of wallboard.

If you are working with a real estate broker who is showing your house to someone, stay out of the way. The broker should know the answers to most of the questions. When he is asked something he doesn't know — and he turns to you for an answer — be ready to reply. Don't say you have no idea what your heating or air conditioning bill was for the year. Don't say you aren't sure what the taxes are.

A hesitant or evasive reply is taken to mean you are trying to hide something. The only way you can give a precise answer is to have everything written down, so that you can recite or show the figures. A detailed reply says this is the whole story. An imprecise reply may indicate you are hiding an astronomical figure of some kind.

On the other hand, don't follow the broker around and volunteer information on everything. Let the broker run his own business. If you have briefed him well, there is little left to tell him in the presence of the possible purchaser.

All of which brings up the question of whether you need a broker in the first place.

Yes, you can sell your house by yourself, but you must carefully calculate what that means. It means you must be on call all the time; that you must screen the prospective buyers from the curious; that you will be disturbed at odd times; and half a dozen other unappealing reasons.

But most important of all, it means you must do your own bargaining. A broker can negotiate for you far more smoothly than you can negotiate for yourself.

Garden Clinic

Q. What conditions are best for pieris?

A. Pieris performs best in areas with moist, well-drained organic soils and light shade.

Q. Why did my weeping fig lose all its leaves when I moved it to another window in my apartment?

A. Weeping figs are very sensitive to changes in their position and changes in the amount of light they receive. They can easily lose all their leaves after being moved to an area with less light. It takes a while for them to recuperate from the shock of moving, but they will leaf out again.

Q. Where and when should I put up a bluebird house?

A. Put nest boxes up by the end of February in areas around open fields, pastures, golf courses, cemeteries, gardens and large lawns. These areas usually provide plenty of insects to eat.

Avoid areas where insecticides are used heavily since insects are a favorite bluebird food and if the insect population is reduced, the birds may have trouble finding enough to eat.

Also, the insects left are usually covered with insecticide and bluebirds may be poisoned when they eat these insects.

Place the boxes four to six feet above the ground and 50 to 100 yards apart. Try to select places where trees, shrubs, utility wires or fences are within 25 to 100 feet of the boxes. Bluebirds use these for perches when feeding. These perches are also helpful to young birds during their first flights.

If boxes are located near woods and brush piles, other species of birds such as chickadees, titmice, nuthatches and wrens may use bluebird boxes.

These species, like the bluebird, are welcome additions to the area and should not be discouraged from using boxes.

These birds are also helpful in controlling insect populations. It may be possible to get a bluebird to nest in the same area by placing another box about 10 to 20 feet from the one which the other bird is using.

Here's The Answer

Q. — We will be doing some remodeling in our house. My brother and I intend to do the work ourselves. We both have some knowledge of carpentry, but actually have never worked on a project of this kind. Most of it we will be able to figure out. However, we need some advice on how to remove studs when taking down a wall.

A. — Before thinking about the studs, have you considered the difference between a bearing and non-bearing wall? Be sure you know which is which. If not, have some knowledgeable person advise you. It is important that a load-bearing wall not be knocked down or disturbed at all until some temporary supporting walls are in place. As for the studs, they can be taken down by hitting them with a sledgehammer after the wall material is removed. Perhaps a better way is to cut the studs in half, but this has the disadvantage of reducing the size of the studding if the wood is to be used again. There are several other methods, none of which is perfect. Any way you can handle it safely is all right — again being certain whether it is a bearing or non-bearing wall before you begin.

Q. — I have to do some plumbing work. There are several places where elbows will be needed. Do they come in angles other than 45 degrees or 90 degrees?

A. — Your question almost implies your knowledge of plumbing is rather limited. Do you know what you are doing and whether the plumbing regulations in your community permit a non-licensed person to do the work? Yes, elbows come in many different angles, although the 45 and 90-degrees angles are standard.

Q. — I will be handling some plumbing projects in my house. I have examined the plumbing codes and find I can do most of the work myself. But I need advice. When the National Plumbing Code differs a bit from the local code, which one has to be followed?

A. — Always follow the local code.

Q. — When my toilet is flushed, not enough water flows into the bowl to make it work properly. I have taken off the tank cover, but don't know enough about the mechanism to know what's wrong.

A. — Sounds as if the water level in the tank isn't high enough. When you flush the toilet, the water should rise high enough in the tank so it is about ½ to one inch below the top of the overflow tube. If the valve shuts off too soon, you won't get the water to rise that high. To raise the water level, bend the float arm upwards a little. Do it with two hands so you don't throw the entire mechanism out of whack.

(Balky toilet tanks, clogged drains, leaky faucets and tank condensation are among the topics discussed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Make Simple Plumbing Repairs," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y., 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Insurance May Be A Good Bet

By ESQUIRE
A Hearst Magazine

Parents and grandparents can help insure their children's financial future by buying insurance.

Insurance and annuities are replacing custodial and trust accounts in providing a nest egg for kids, according to an article in the current issue of Esquire, because insurance gets a better break under the new tax law.

There are three ways that insurance products may help build the assets of a juvenile.

One strategy is the purchase of whole-life insurance on a grandchild's life — a policy that will accumulate a sizable cash value as the child matures. Usually the policy owner is the applicant, with automatic transfer to the insured at age 21.

You could buy a 1-year-old child $500,000 worth of life insurance in a vanishing premium policy. Theoretically you pay premiums for seven years — in this case $2,602 a year. By age 18, the policy would have a guaranteed cash value of $36,905 and at present dividend scales, it would be higher — $43,893.

The most dramatic results on this kind of policy would be evident after the child reached his 30th birthday, when the policy's cash value at present dividend scales would be $143,473.

Such policies should only be considered for the long haul. It takes 20 years or more before the policy's overall rate of return exceeds 7 percent, a rate that could be achieved by buying tax exempt municipal bonds.

If funding a college education is the goal, the purchase of a rider on a parent's existing cash-value policy or buying additional life insurance makes more sense.

A 30-year-old nonsmoker who has just had his first child could buy a $100,000 vanishing premium policy with annual payments of about $1,154 for 15 years.

The policy would contain a paid-up additions rider, calling for an extra 15-year annual contribution of $2,000. Its purpose is to give the policy a large enough cash value to withdraw $10,000 a year when the child reaches college age.

In the policy's 20th year, even after withdrawals, it still would have a residual cash value of $129,188, at present dividend scale, and a buildup in the death benefit to $343,470.

The same results — or better, depending on interest rates — could be achieved by good universal-life coverage. This is a very flexible policy that pays interest at prevailing rates and allows you to vary the premiums paid as long as you keep enough money in the pot to cover the cost of the basic insurance.

The nonprofit national Insurance Consumer Organization says one of the best universal-life policies is offered by USAA Life of San Antonio, Texas, which sells at low cost by using only salaried salespeople instead of commissioned agents.

Another strategy would be to give the minor an annuity. Most annuities are bought by adults, with payments to commence at retirement, but the same technique could be used for a minor.

Upon reaching college age, the teenager would use a term-certain settlement option — which means all funds would be paid out during his or her college years.

The beauty of an annuity is that while the funds remain within the annuity, any increase in value is sheltered from all taxes.

Opening lead: Seven of ♡

You are empanelled to sit on a jury considering this hand from a rubber bridge game. Pass out kudos or brickbats as you see fit, then see if you agree with our awards.

South's no trump overcall showed the equivalent of a no trump opening bid. North forced in spades, and South's correction to three no trump ended the auction.

Declarer won the heart opening lead and led a spade to the king, which was allowed to hold. Declarer returned to his hand with a heart finesse and led another spade, the queen losing to the ace. Since the defenders still had a spade stopper, declarer was an entry short to set up and use the long spades, so eight tricks were all he could make. Assess the hand.

First, a small brickbat to North for his bid of three spades. He was not interested in slam, and he had no reason to believe that three no trump would be a better contract than four spades. We would have bid four spades right off, a contract that could not be defeated.

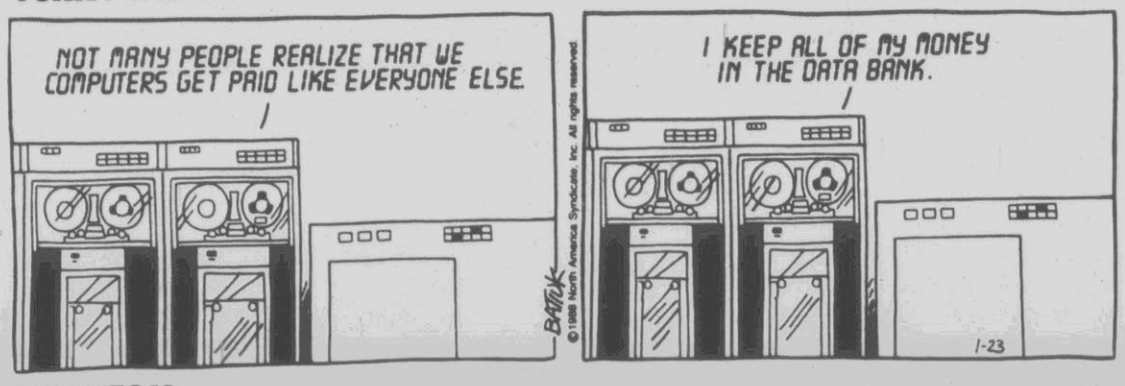

Next, a bouquet to East. His holdup of the ace of spades was sound defense. Had he taken the ace, declarer would have had smooth sailing.

The major culprit on the hand, however, was South. Going down in his contract was inexcusable. All he had to do after winning the first trick was to duck a spade completely. The defense would have been rendered powerless.

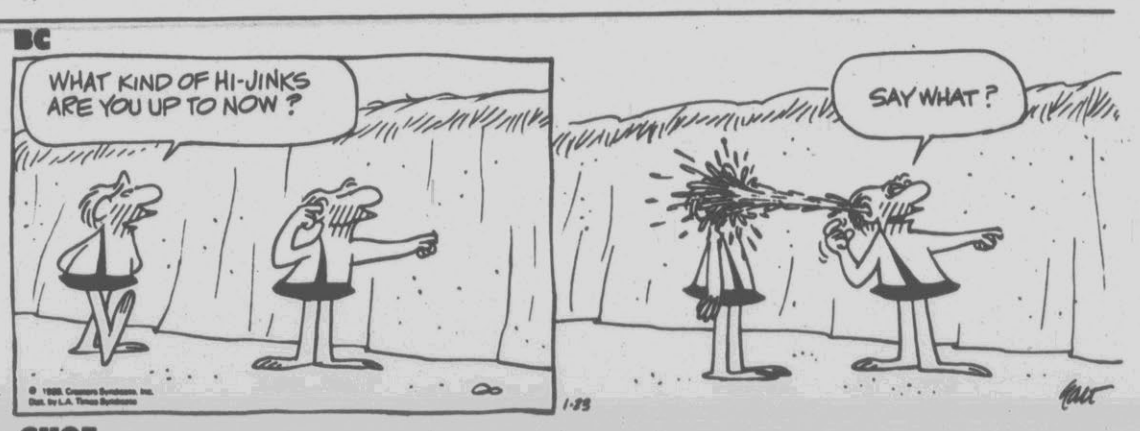

Suppose that East wins and shifts to a diamond. Declarer wins in hand and leads a spade to the king. Regardless of whether East takes the ace or holds up, the spade suit is established while the king of diamonds is still in dummy as an entry. Declarer would lose the same two spade tricks he actually lost, but instead of eight tricks, he would have emerged with 11! It is all a matter of when he gives up the tricks.

Old Venezuelan Home Now A Museum

By MARIA TEJERA
Associated Press Writer

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — High ceilings to ward off the tropical heat, a sunken stone tub with a built-in mountain stream and velvet cushions set on a dais to escape the fleas on the floor were all part of gracious living in 18th century Venezuela.

Those luxuries are now on view at the Colonial Museum in Caracas.

Neither the traffic down the hill or the modern houses next door detract from the air of bourgeois comfort, circa 1790, that envelops the Museo de Arte Colonial, also known as the "Quinta de Anauco."

Visitors walk up a steep cobblestoned carriage way to the Quinta, one of the few colonial houses to have survived recurrent earthquakes, revolutions and modern urbanism.

The sprawling house, with its 25 rooms, stables and gardens is visited by thousands of people a year, some of them tourists, some of them Venezuelans curious to see how their ancestors lived in the days before the discovery of oil made the nation one of the richest in Latin America.

The wide verandas look out on a tangle of tropical flowers — 18th century local taste ran to overgrown gardens for the "natural," Jean Jacques Rousseau 1ook — and huge mango trees, one of the museum's few anachronisms.

"You know, Venezuelans are always astonished when we tell them that the mango shouldn't even be present in the garden of the Colonial Museum," says Carlos Duarte, the museum's director. "We all think of the mango as being something of a national fruit or staple, but the truth is that it is an Asian tree that arrived in Venezuela in the 1840s from Trinidad, where traders from the Far East had taken it."

Those who think of Latin American houses as white walls, dark beams and heavy furniture are in for a shock when they enter the Quinta: A cedarwood sewing box is placed against a strawberry pink wall, a pianoforte against banana yellow and brocaded beds against glowing orange. It is just as they were when the house was built at the end of the 18th century.

The surprisingly delicate marquetry furniture (decorative inlaid work), made in Venezuela between the 17th and early 19th centuries, is also a far cry from the expected heavy chairs and tables. Even the low wooden armchairs for everyday use — the "butacas" — are made of mahogany and cedar inlaid with precious woods, all of them common in the country.

In one of the salons, under a reed-lined 20 feet high ceiling, a dais is strewn with velvet cushions. There, the family and visitors would gather at night to sew and gossip.

"They couldn't sit on cushions on the floor because of the fleas, so it was common to have a raised dais," Duarte said.

Also on exhibit are religious paintings and portraits; a vellum covered edition of "El Arte del Buen Morir" ("The Art of Dying Well"), a favorite bedside book of the time; small carved coconut shells in silver stands, at one point fashionable for drinking chocolate, the favorite beverage; and a silver chocolate beater. Venezuelan cocoa was, and still is, regarded as being among the world's best.

An unusual feature that delights visitors is a sunken stone bathtub with a little mountain stream running through it. Lay down a stone at the far end, and the tub rapidly fills up; lift the stone, and the bathwater flows out just as easily.

The Spanish Empire considered Venezuela a backwater colony, and it was ruled by a lowly captain-general, instead of the viceroy Peru and Mexico had.

The country only woke up in 1810 when Simon Bolivar, the "Liberator of America," began the revolution that would spread through the rest of the continent. After the 11-year War of Independence, it sank back into relative obscurity and poverty until oil was discovered early in this century.

Venezuelan generals on both the royalist and the revolutionary side were well aware of the value of propaganda. A favorite custom was to send to England for commemorative mugs and plates with messages lauding the valor of a general. Staffordshire potters would impartially accept orders from both sides, and just as impartially ship the mugs back to Venezuela with hilarious spelling mistakes, as seen in one of the exhibits.

Bolivar, who knew the Quinta well, loved the place and at one point instructed a friend to buy the house.

Years later, the Quinta was still a favorite party site. In 1840, the British minister described one that had "too many speeches, a great amount of broken glasses and, as our host later found out, 22 missing silver spoons."

And when your employer signs up with us, he or she has the option of letting you choose the program that best suits your health care needs and the needs of your family.

Sue Wray Group, Individual

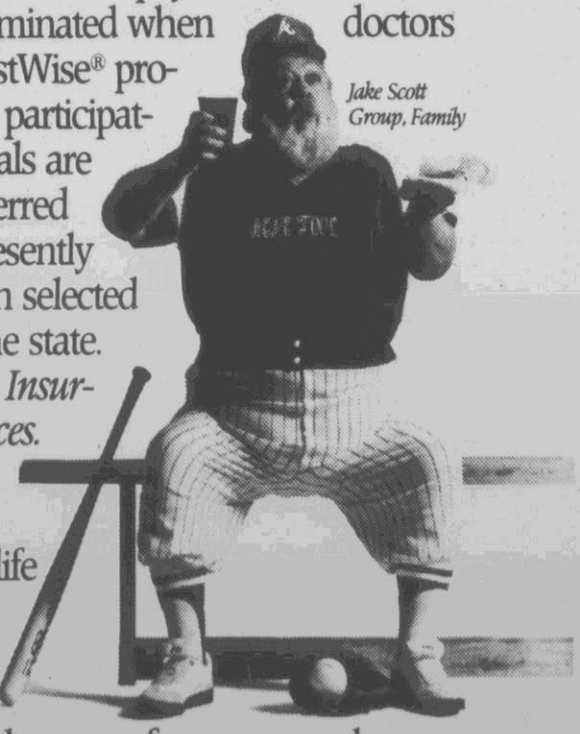

And you don't have to pick the same plan as the person working next to you. Because your needs and that person's needs may be completely different.

Here's what you get to choose from:

Traditional Group. This is the plan you're probably most familiar with. It offers basic comprehensive coverage.

The Personal Care Plan or HMO of North Carolina. Your company may select one of the two. The Personal Care Plan is an HMO. One monthly payment covers virtually every health care need. HMO of North Carolina is an HMO, too. But it differs from the Personal Care Plan in that it utilizes the staff and facilities of a participating hospital. It is presently available in selected areas of the state.

Preferred Care. Preferred Care covers treatment wherever a patient prefers. But deductables and co-payments are reduced or eliminated when doctors in our CostWise® program and participating hospitals are used. Preferred Care is presently available in selected areas of the state.

Jake Scott Group, Family

Group Insurance Services. Group Insurance Services is life insurance coverage that can be attached to any of our group plans.

So there they are. The widest choice of health programs in North Carolina. And one of the reasons nearly two million North Carolinians choose us as their coverage carrier.

If your company has Blue Cross and Blue Shield coverage, talk to your employer about providing you the option of picking the plan you like best. And if your company's not covered by Blue Cross and Blue Shield, ask your employer to pick up the phone and call us. Because when it comes to health coverage, we're clearly the best in our field.

Drawings By Minnie Evans Acquired By The NCMA

N.C. Museum of Art

RALEIGH — Seven drawings by the late Minnie Evans, a self-taught visionary artist, will be shown at the North Carolina Museum of Art Feb. 9-May 15. The drawings were recently acquired by the museum as a gift from Dr. and Mrs. D.H. McCollough, who were friends of the artist, supplemented by funds from the Robert F. Phifer Bequest to the North Carolina Art Society.

Minnie Evans died in Wilmington in December.

The drawings date from 1960 and 1962 and represent the artist at the height of her talents, according to assistant curator Huston Paschal.

Inspired by dreams and visions, and by the beauty of nature, Evans' work is rich in religious and exotic imagery. Her drawings often include a central figure, which may be interpreted as a divine or royal image, surrounded by a symmetrical, abstracted motif of flowers and leaves. Ms. Paschal commented, "Her pencil illustrations of paradise offer glorious testimony to the unified spiritual replenishment she derived from nature and religion."

In the 1940s and 1950s, Evans experimented with a variety of formats and media, including oil painting, and developed a use of traditional perspective. By the 1960s, however, she had settled upon a flat, hierarchical arrangement of images as her favored mode, working both with figures and with abstract designs. She is best known for the richly detailed, symmetrical works of this period.

Evans' work has been seen in numerous exhibitions, including a one-artist exhibition at the Whitney Museum of American Art, New York City, in 1975. In 1985, the North Carolina Museum of Art presented the exhibition "Heavenly Visions: The Art of Minnie Evans," accompanied by the first publication devoted entirely to Evans' work.

Museum hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, until 9 p.m. Fridays, 12 noon to 5 p.m. Sundays, closed Mondays. For information call 833-1935.

Lectures On Books

RALEIGH — Three novels of the 19th century will be the focus of a free, statewide lecture series in February, sponsored by the North Carolina Literary and Historical Association.

The series is made possible by a grant of $6,000 from the N.C. Humanities Committee, and includes a novel from each of the three geographical areas of North Carolina.

Titled "Three North Carolina Novels of the 19th Century," the series is offered in an effort to revive interest in the state's literary heritage.

The often neglected, but important, novels highlight the cultural, political and social life of 19th century North Carolina.

The coastal novel, "Bertie: or, Life in the Old Field, a Humorous Novel," 1851, by Gregory Seaworthy, the nom de plume of George H. Throop, details plantation life in eastern North Carolina. Throop was a Yankee schoolmaster who taught in North Carolina from 1849 to 1852.

"Bricks Without Straw," 1880, was Albion Winegar Tourgee's second novel about Reconstruction in North Carolina. A carpetbagger politician and judge, Tourgee settled in Greensboro after the Civil War, and the novel reflects some of the issues he faced and problems he experienced.

"Eoneguski," 1839, by Robert Strange, a superior court judge and U.S. senator, is an epic romance of the mountain frontier border. Strange's novel, the first ever to use North Carolina as a setting, is a sympathetic portrayal of native Americans and the loss of their lands to white settlers.

In each session literary and historical scholars will examine the novels from the perspective of their individual fields of study, with special emphasis on the works as examples of the early novel and as documents in themselves for interpreting the history of the state and its three major regions.

All forums will begin at 7:30 p.m. and last for 90 minutes. Each speaker will present a 25-minute talk to be followed by discussion with the audience.

At each host site, copies or excerpts from the novels will be available to the public ahead of time.

Speakers will be Dr. W. Keats Sparrow, East Carolina University; Dr. Thomas C. Parramore, Meredith College; Dr. Robert O. Stephens, and Dr. Allen W. Trelease, both UNC, Greensboro; Dr. Mark Holland, East Tennessee State University, and Dr. William L. Anderson, Western Carolina University.

Lecture dates are Feb. 1, 8 and 15, at sites in Fayetteville, Durham and Flat Rock. For more details, write to: North Carolina Literary and Historical Association, 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh, N.C. 27611, or call 733-7305.

A Poignant Love Letter On A Scrap Of Birch Bark

By DOUGLAS J. PRESTON
A Press Syndicate Release
Book Communications System

NEW YORK — "The largest collection anywhere in the world lies behind the great granite walls of the American Museum of Natural History in New York City.

"When I first started writing 'Dinosaurs in the Attic,' I had a chance to explore, at leisure, the 700 or more storerooms and halls in this museum, where more that 35 million objects are kept.

"And what I saw boggled the mind. Imagine a vast storeroom piled high with gigantic dinosaur bones; vaults crammed with elephant tusks; Chinese jades or sackfulls of priceless gems; an attic room stacked with totem poles and grinning gods; or a vault filled from floor to ceiling with human mummies and containing things Ali Baba never dreamed of.

"In 'Dinosaurs in the Attic,' I tell how explorers and adventurers discovered many of these fabulous objects and carried them back to the Museum — people like Ray Chapman Andrews, who hunted dinosaurs and fought bandits in Outer Mongolia; Mary Jobe Akeley, who penetrated the deepest rainforests of the Belgian Congo in search of the elusive mountain gorilla; Adm. Robert E. Peary, who captured the world's largest meteorite in the wastelands of the Arctic; and hundreds of others. My interest was not in the history of the Museum, but in the remarkable histories of the treasures in it. Every object, every artifact and speciman, told some kind of story.

"In all the splendor and variety of these vast collections, I came to appreciate — more than anything else — one insignificant object. This object told me a story that was amusing, sad and ultimately chilling. It is a story I just couldn't seem to shake from my mind. It hounts me still.

"The object in question sits in the back of the hall of Asian Peoples in a dark case. It is small and unprepossessing. Most visitors hurry by it without so much as a glance.

"It is a small scrap of birchbark, incised with geometrical designs. A red ribbon is tied to one corner. It is a love letter, and the only one of its kind in existence. This is the story that object told:

"In 1895, the museum hired a Russian anthropologist to conduct fieldwork in a very remote area of eastern Siberia. The man, named Waldemar Jochelson, had been exiled to Siberia by the Czar for belonging to a socialist discussion group.

"Jochelson studied and lived with a tiny tribe called the Yukaghir, and he came to be very fond of them. The Yukaghir were a peaceloving, honest, kind and gentle people. They abhorred personal violence, dishonesty and bad language.

"While Jochelson was living with the Yukaghir, two teenage girls of the tribe developed a crush on him. Jochelson, who was married, rejected their advances in the kindest way he could. The two girls then wrote him a love letter, which told of their feelings for him and of how they had been rejected. The letter was written in the pictographic language of the Yukaghir.

"Jochelson left the tribe in 1896 and resumed other work. Six years later, in 1902, he returned for a second round of study and was horrified at what he found. This gentle tribe was on the verge of extinction. They had been brutally exploited by the Russian and Cossack settlers and priests. Smallpox and starvation had swept through there villages. Rather than studying them, Jochelson found himself desperately trying to save them.

"Despite his efforts, the Yukaghir shortly died out. With them died their ancient culture, their rich mythology and traditions, their language and religious beliefs, their songs and dances and their gentle way of life.

"Among the few things the Yukaghir left behind is the love letter. It is extremely valuable from an anthropological point of view. Many believe it is an example of the very first stage of writing — the transition from pictures to the written word.

"To me, it is more than that. It captures a moment in the lives of two young girls who were like teenage girls everywhere. Life to them must have been just starting, full of hope and promise. They were just beginning to discover their world. These two girls had no notion of what lay a few years ahead — the utter and complete extinction of that world.

"When I see this little scrap of birchbark, it reminds me that little do we, ourselves, know what lies ahead for our world either."

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By SUSANNE M. LONG

Weeks before Feb. 14, the windows of card shops and candy stores display the pretty trimmings and trappings of the coming Valentine holiday.

Children through the ages have connected lighthearted and sentimental Valentine's Day with thoughts of some kind of sweet.

What better way for a child to prepare to celebrate than by reading "The Kids' Book of Chocolate," new in Sheppard Memorial Libary Children's Room?

Richard Ammon's book is chock-full of facts, including the history of chocolate from the day Cortes was served the frothy drink in Aztec golden goblets.

Included are fascinating chapters on blending and making chocolate products, beginning with selection and preparation of cocoa beans, and continuing through dipping and molding processes.

At one stage, batches of liquid chocolate may be shipped in heated tank trucks that keep the chocolate melted and warm.

Ammon discusses the "symbols" swirled into the chocolate coating of boxed candies as handy hints to the filling inside. Within this chocolate fan's dream of a book are tips on storing chocolate, charts evaluating chocolate as a nutritious food, chocolate jokes, and chocolate myths.

Best of all, as February approaches, is the section of chocolate recipes. Chewy Brownies, microwave fudge, or milk chocolate bar cake are bound to win someone a sweetheart.

The Continuity Of Pavlova's Methods

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Madame Jean Campbell's guest visit this weekend to Greenville in essence represents the extenuation of an honored tradition of passing on dance techniques and training from one to another generation.

A native of Fairfax, Alabama, Madam Campbell, has been active in dance for more than 25 years as dancer, choreographer and teacher.

Her first intensive study in dance was with Mme. Hilda Butsova of New York City. Mme. Butsova in turn had studied with the the legendary Anna Pavlova.

The thread of keeping active the techniques and dance traditions of Pavlova was carried to another generation when Madame Campbell instructed Greenville's Robin Blount in studies in the resort city of Cannes, France.

Now a new generation enters the picture — seven-year old Betsy Barrow of Greenville is being taught by Ms. Blount at the Greenville Dance Company, Charles Street. Incidentally, Betsy is the granddaughter of Madame Campbells, so that Campbell's visit here is both an opportunity to do guest choreography work and to see her granddaughter.

"Madame Campbell came Friday and will be here through Monday," said Ms. Blount. She and Su-Su Corbitt are owners and directors of the Greenville Dance Company.

"She will give us pointers, and she has also sketched the choreography for "Graduation Ball," a dance we will present to the public in May," Ms. Blount said.

Madame Campbell's early education in the area of liberal arts was at Atlantic Christian College, Wison, and at Phillips University, Oklahoma and George Peabody College in Tennessee.

From 1962 until 1965 she studied ballet in Nashville, Tenn. and performed with the Nashville Civic Ballet. Later in New York, she studied with Mme. Butsova and with classical East Indian dancers Nala Najan and Aman Ram. During this time she added the study of flamenco dancing with Luis Montro and Jose Molina to her experiences in dance.

In the early 1970s she went abroad, first for dance studies in Estoril, Portugal, where she also performed in "Sleeping Beauty" and "Firebird". In 1975 she studied with Rosella Hightower, the noted American Indian ballet dancer, and then in 1980 went to Monaco where she was affiliated with the Ballet Acadamie de Princess Grace.

Also during these years, Madame Campbell operated a private studio in Wilson, where she taught dance local students. Five of her students have been enrolled in the North Carolina School of the Arts, Winston-Salem. Other students have gone on to dance programs in Virgina, Houston, and one to the American Ballet Theater, New York. Many of her Wilson students have performed with the Raleigh Civic Ballet.

Among her numerous credits are choreography are musicals, full length ballets and a wide range of shorter and incidental dance pieces.

Currently, Madame Campbell is teaching at a studio in West Point, Georgia.

CONGRATULATED — Madame Jean Campbell, left, is congratulated by Princess Grace of Monaco at a reception for dancers held in Monaco in 1980.

N.C. Dancers Chosen For Competition

WINSTON-SALEM — Two ballet students from the North Carolina School of the Arts are among six Americans selected to attend the Prix de Lausanne International Ballet competiton to be held Jan. 26-31 in Luusanne, Switzerland.

The two are Leslie Braverman, 17, of Reston, Va. and Michael Wise, 18, of CKharleston, S.C.

The Lausanne competition is the sole world-class ballet competition open exclusvely to student dancers; between the ages of 15 and 18 for females and between 14 and 18 for male dancers.

The two dancers from NCSA were selected after auditions at the Washington School of Ballet in Washington, D.C. A total of 116 ballet students from 15 states, the District of Columbia and Canada were auditioned at sites in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Houston, Miami, New York and Washington seeking sponsorship to the Prix de Lausanne Competition.

The four other winners were one each from the Ballet Academy Center of Southern California, the School of American Ballet in New York City, and two from the Houston Ballet Academy.

Auditions were adjudicated by Violette Verdy, former principal dancer and now teaching associate of the New York City Ballet.

The American winners will receive paid airfare and hotel expenses and have an opportunity to compete with young dancers form Europe, China, Japan and South America. The prizes the competitors seek is a year's scholarship to one of 11 top ballet academies worldwide, including NCSA, or cash prizes to continue their training.

Festival Director

HIGH POINT — The North Carolina Shakespeare Festival has received grants from the James G. Hanes Memorial Fund/Foundation, the Mary Reynolds Babcock Foundation and the Theater Arts Division of the N.C. Arts Council to support its new, full-time artistic director position.

Through last summer, NCSF produced its professional theater employing an artistic director on a part-time basis. With the departure of Malcom Morrison, artistic director for nine years, to head Denver's National Theater Conservatory, the festival decided to increase its artistic director position to full-time status.

Grant funds will support the increased cost of a full-time director. The Hanes Foundation funds will provide $5,000 annually over the next three years; the Babcock Foundation will provide $5,000 for the first year, and the arts council will provide $8,000 this year with possible support in 1989 and 1990.

Lou Rckoff is the festival theater's new artistic director. Raised in Queens, New York, he has directed throughout the country. He has assumed his position initially on a commuting basis from New York.

Students selected by the committee will work and study with some of New York's finest actors and directors, many of whom began their careers at Circle in the Square.

Photoplay

James Stewart and Jean Arthur in 1939 film Mr. Smith

Q. I've read Personality Parade for longer than I can count, but I've never seen reference to the actress Jean Arthur. Is she dead? Oh, I hope not!—J.N., Washington, D.C.

A. Jean Arthur, born Gladys Greene in New York on Oct. 17, 1905, was one of the outstanding screen stars of the 1930s and '40s, acting in "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town," "You Can't Take It With You," "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" and many other memorable films shown today on TV. After teaching drama at Vassar College and other educational institutions, she retired to Carmel, Calif., where she reportedly still resides.

Q. Who originated the witty remark: "Gary Hart is the poor man's Warren Beatty"? —Diane Sullivan, Arlington, Va.

A. No particular person has taken credit for that crack—which, incidentally, has been in vogue since 1984.

Q. Remember Boy George? He's that young London switch-hitter who dressed in drag and made himself look like a woman. He did drugs. What has happened to him? He used to sing for his supper.—Frankie Johnson, Florence, S.C.

A. Boy George recently finished a tour in Europe. It was a sorry flop. Promoters booked the 26-year-old transvestite into medium-sized halls, but the teenagers stayed away in droves.

Q. Was Sara Delano Roosevelt, mother of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, an Italian or of Italian descent? Isn't Delano an Italian name? If so, why was that item eliminated from President Roosevelt's lineage?—Pete S., Bryan, Tex.

A. Sara "Sallie" Delano Roosevelt (1854-1941) was not Italian or of Italian descent. She was born near Newburgh, N.Y., and listed among her antecedents Philippe de La Noye (whose family name in subsequent generations became Delano). De La Noye was a French Huguenot from Holland who emigrated to the Plymouth Colony in 1621, where, history has it, he competed with John Alden for the hand of Priscilla Mullens and lost.

UPI/Bettmann

Sara Roosevelt in 1940

Q. Why does the actress Cher, 41, take as lovers or companions men who are so much younger than she is? Can it be that she feels more intellectually comfortable with them than she does with older men?—Tisha Stanley, Sanford, N.C.

A. Cher is quoted as having said of young men: "They are more supportive as lovers and a lot less demanding." Over the years, she has dated the actors Tom Cruise, now 26, and Val Kilmer, 28—co-stars in the film "Top Gun"—as well as the TV producer Josh Donen, 31. As of this writing, her lover is a 23-year-old ex-waiter named Robert Camilletti, who is only five years older than her daughter, Chastity Bono. Cher —who married Salvatore "Sonny" Bono, a record-promoter 11 years her senior, when she was 18 and the rock star Gregg Allman when she was 29—is capable of handling men of all ages. She is highly adaptive and more intelligent than many people may think.

Cher: Age is no barrier

Q. I met a young man recently who was shocked that I, as a college graduate, had never heard of Simon Rattle. He refused to identify Rattle. Now I wonder if he was pulling my leg or if there is a real celebrity named Simon Rattle.—Sharon W., Spartanburg, S.C.

Wilson/EMI

The real Mr. Rattle

A. There is indeed a Simon Rattle. He is a 33-year-old Briton who for eight years has been the principal conductor of the symphony orchestra in Birmingham, England. Rattle also has conducted orchestras in Germany, New York, Cleveland, Boston, Los Angeles and elsewhere. Music critics regard him as one of the most brilliant and controversial conductors of his generation.

Q. Demi Moore, the actress who played in "St. Elmo's Fire" and "About Last Night," is married to Bruce Willis. Right? How could she have married Willis—even in Las Vegas—without first divorcing Emilio Estevez, whom she married in 1986?—Beulah Fulton, Gadsen, Ala.

A. Moore and Estevez were closest of friends in 1986, with Demi announcing their impending marriage every few weeks. The truth, however, is that they never were married to each other.

Young competitor: Denise Parker during archery event at Pan American Games. She won the gold.

CAN A 14-year-old girl shoot for greatness? If her name is Denise Parker, the answer is yes. Last August at the Pan American Games in Indianapolis, Denise—then 13, standing 5 feet 1 and weighing a mere 90 pounds—competed for the first time against top archers from the Western Hemisphere. Scoring 315 points out of a possible 360, she won the gold medal in the individual archery competition, the youngest person ever to do so. In June, she will enter the Olympic trials for a place on the American team at the 1988 Olympics in South Korea.

After her victory, I traveled to the tiny hamlet of South Jordan, Utah, to visit Denise Parker and her parents in their small bungalow in a tract development, incongruously set in the flatlands of the Salt Lake valley amid the unplowed fields of winter wheat. People here live modest, uncomplaining lives, their values bedrock conservative. The economy is depressed; it's not hard to find families who count their pennies while older children look for work.

The Parker house sits on a neat, quarter-acre lot, a camper and an old jeep parked in front. Its backyard is like others on the block: a vegetable garden, fruit trees, a trampoline. But against the garage's back wall hangs a straw target on a large plywood board. Fifty-eight feet away is a crudely made wooden footstand covered with a black plastic garbage bag. It was on this jerry-built platform that Denise stood, practicing shooting arrows, something she does for one to three hours each weekday. At school, she keeps a 3.7 academic average. She is a beautiful girl with long blond hair, large blue eyes and a fetching smile. On this warm, overcast day, she was dressed in jeans, white tennis shoes and a T-shirt imprinted with the words: PAN AMERICAN GAMES 1987.

Denise with parents, Earl and Valerie Parker, at the practice range.

"Most of the credit goes to my parents. I think if they didn't come out and see me compete, I wouldn't be as good."

With her parents—Earl, 58, and Valerie, 44—beside me on folding chairs, I watched the almost incredible agility, the astonishing eye-aim coordination of a child who had taken up the bow and arrow barely four years before, at age 10. Today, Denise is considered among a handful of the world's greatest archers, the youngest of the best. From time to time, her father, a printer by profession and an occasional archer himself, got up to give her advice. He's her coach. We applauded as she shot one arrow after another, all hitting the bull's-eye. It was an awesome display of physical grace and mental concentration, although Denise seemed to view her talent with shy bemusement and a shrug.

I asked Mrs. Parker, a secretary, when she first had noticed her daughter's athletic gifts.

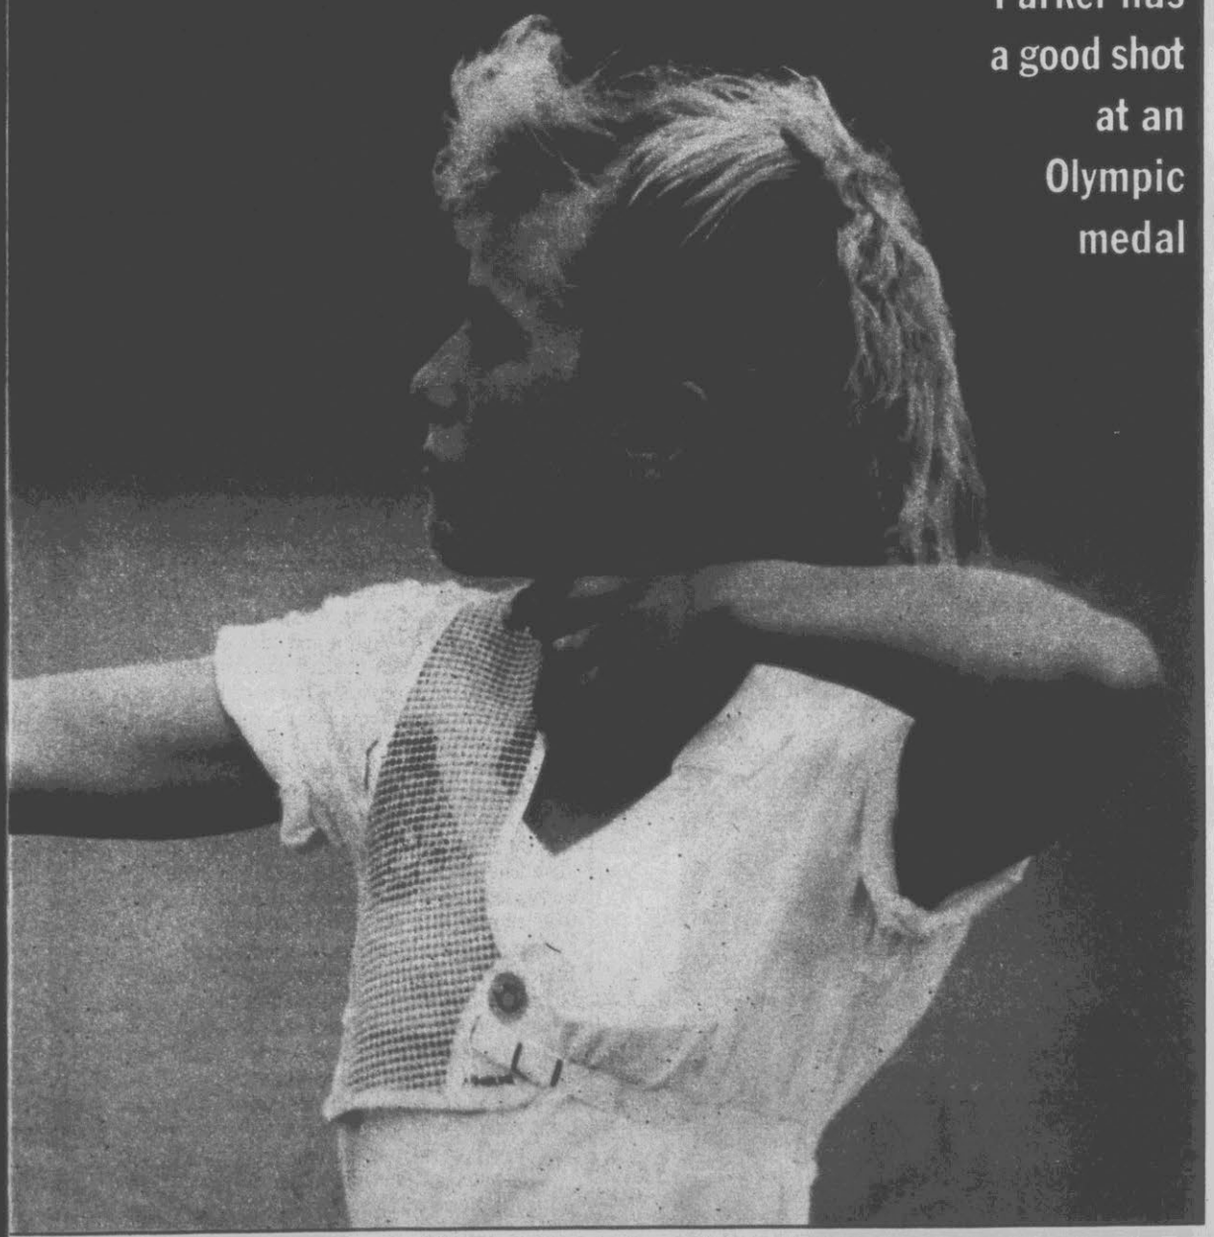

"When she was quite little," Denise's mother replied. "I tried to interest her in ballet, piano, things little girls do. I remember taking her to ballet class and saying, 'This is something wonderful, if you'd like to do it.' She thought it was awful. So I got her piano lessons, and she hated them. In second grade they have what they call a Reflections Contest. Little kids write essays about what makes them happy. She wrote that what made her happiest was scoring points in soccer. So I thought, if this is what makes Denise happy, why am I bothering with music and ballet? We got her in a little league so she could play soccer. She was an exceptional player."

"We've never done anything as a family except all three of us together," Earl interjected. Though her stepfather, he seems to have an especially close relationship with Denise—at once loving, proud and protective. His white hair and craggy, deeply lined face reflect a life of tough times, hard work and rough beginnings. Earl Parker was born and raised in poverty in a West Virginia coal camp. After high school and a three-year stint in the Air Force, he became a printer, working a few days here or there, then shoving on. He admits to having been shy and full of self-doubt. But then he met and fell in love with Valerie Knudson at a Religious Science self-awareness seminar in Salt Lake City, and he knew he was home.

Valerie also was acquainted with hardship. A Salt Lake City native, she was the youngest of four children in a large, supportive extended family. Her family was hit but didn't break when her father, an engineer, became paralyzed from the neck down. Bedridden, he supported his family by selling insurance over a phone built so that he could work it with his mouth alone.

When Denise was 3, her natural father died of cancer. When she was 5, Earl found his way into her mother's heart. And when they married, Denise asked her mother if she could change her name to Parker too. The three have remained inseparable ever since.

"We're always together," Earl said, "whether it's an archery shoot, or we run a foot race. When I was racing motorcycles, Denise and Valerie came along, and Denise was more competitive than me. The first time I realized that Denise had something special was when we bought her her first bicycle. She was 6, and it was a two-wheeler without training wheels. She'd never been on one before. Well, she jumped on it and took off down the street. She couldn't stop because she didn't even know where the damn brakes were. But she was balanced and peddling that thing. It was amazing! That's when I knew."

"I used to be a tomboy. After school, I'd rough around with the boys and play football. None of the other girls wanted to do that."

I asked Mrs. Parker where her daughter's competitiveness, her desire to win, came from.

"We always taught Denise that she could do anything she set her mind to do," she replied. "Anything. We taught her about goals and sticking to them, of never giving in. It's not so much winning as making the effort that counts. We've taught her about the difference between long-range and short-range goals, and how you reach them one day at a time."

When Denise had finished her practice, we went inside the house, and she showed me her bedroom. I was touched by its childlike femininity—the piles of dolls and stuffed animals, the schoolgirl things, the pin-up posters on the wall, one of Kirk Cameron, star of television's Growing Pains and Denise's current favorite.

Later we sat alone in the dining area, across the room from the walls with her hundreds of trophies, ribbons and citations won in regional and national archery competitions. Denise is somewhat self-conscious in talking about herself and blushes frequently. She smiles a lot, and giggles and laughs as nervously as a teenager on her first big date.

"I started playing soccer when I was 6," she said. "I loved the competition. Mainly I love sports the most. Math I like second. I used to be a tomboy [this with a giggle]. After school, I would rough around with the boys and play football. None of the other girls wanted to do that."

I asked about her large holdings in dolls and stuffed toys—whether she collected them.

She curled her nose in distaste. "No. People give them to me, and I just set them there and forget about it. I don't play with them. I never liked dolls. They used to give me dolls for Christmas, but I never played with them. But if they gave me a football or something like that, I'd go out right away and play with it. I've always been like that. They finally figured out that I didn't like the toys and Barbies and stuff, that I liked sports stuff."

I asked how she got involved in archery at age 10.

"I got involved in archery because Dad wanted to do it for hunting. He asked Mom and me if we wanted to join him. I said sure. So I went down to Salt Lake City and joined the JOAD [Junior Olympic Archery Development] and started to shoot each week. It's at the Utah Hot Shots Club at the Salt Lake Archery range. I got good coaching from Budd Rose and other archers. Then my Dad started to coach me, because he knew what my form was, my style. And now, if we have problems, we go to Ed Eliason." Eliason is recognized as one of America's best bowmen. Now 49, he has been a member of 15 American national teams. "Ed tells us what to do," Denise continued, "and Dad and I will come home and work at it. That's how I train now, with my dad."

"Why do you love archery so much?" I inquired.

"I like traveling around to different places to shoot. And I like being good at it," she said, giggling again. "I like going to new places and meeting different people, like at the Pan Am Games. I'd never been with those people before, and it was neat. And I like being back East, like in North Carolina. Back East is a lot different from here. I like the trees, but I get claustrophobia if I'm there too long. Then I want to come home, where there's so much more space. I suppose it's the same if you're from back East and come here. You're glad when you go home."

I asked whom she most credited for winning.

She thought a moment, then grinned and said, "Most of the credit goes to my parents. They're pretty neat. One of the things that really helps is that my Mom or Dad shoots with me. I hate just shooting alone. If someone says, 'Go out and practice,' or, 'Shoot 100 arrows,' and you do it alone, it's pretty boring. But if Dad goes with me, it's a lot more fun. I think that has a lot to do with the way I'm shooting now. They're very supportive, and they want me to excel in everything I do. It wouldn't be fun if my parents didn't encourage me and come to the meets and games. I think if they didn't come out and see me compete, I wouldn't be as good because I'd think they didn't care or didn't want me to do it."

I asked Denise if one of the reasons that she competed so hard was because, after the death of her natural father, she strove to win and hold the affection and regard of her new father.

"I was about 3 when my real father died. I don't remember him very much." She paused, thinking. "No, I don't think I compete as much for my Dad as I do for myself. I sort of tell Dad what I want to do, and he helps me do it. Just like my goals."

On the refrigerator door is taped a sheet of paper on which Denise writes down her personal goals: so many arrows to shoot, so much practice time this month, the 1988 Olympics and so on. As she achieves each one, she draws a line through it and adds another goal.

"I set out my own goals," she continued. "Dad doesn't push me to set them. But once I do, he tries to make sure I reach them. I don't set goals to try to impress Dad or keep his love. I do it for myself. I've always been an achiever, and if it wasn't this sport, it would be another. Maybe God wanted me to be this way.

"I think about the future sometimes. About whether there'll be a nuclear war and why they are sending arms everywhere. I don't worry about it a lot, but I sometimes wonder why they do the things they do. If I were famous, I would try to help starving people, like the Ethiopians, and crippled people. I usually don't cry, but when I see those people on TV, I cry. I'm really sensitive to animals. When I see lost pets or hungry cats, it makes me sad. I think when I'm my parents' age, the world will be worse. But I want to fall in love and have two kids and a house. I want my husband to be an athlete, with good muscles, who has a sense of humor and is sensitive too and is good with kids."

"And you want the Olympics too," I said. "What if you go to Korea and you lose?"

"I think just going to the Olympics would be enough," Denise replied. "And we're not as competitive in archery as other countries, like Korea, as we should be. By the time the Olympics come, I hope to be competitive with the best in the world. But if I went to the Olympics and lost bad? I wouldn't quit or anything. Just being at the Olympics means you're good, and that's satisfaction enough. I'd like to be like Luann Ryon, who won the 1976 Olympic gold in archery. Every time she shoots, she comes off the line smiling as big as she can, no matter what she shot. She's just happy to be there and to know she did her best. That's what I try to do."

Which is why Denise Parker—whether or not she wins the Olympics—already is a champion.

The president of Stanford has some strong opinions on the subject

ARE OUR UNIVERSITIES LETTING US DOWN?

BY MICHAEL RYAN

HAVE OUR UNIVERSITIES fallen apart?

Not too many years ago, nobody would have taken that question seriously. America sent men to the moon, conquered polio and cured killer diseases. Graduates of the American educational system in this century have won more Nobel Prizes than those of any other country. Students from every populated continent have come here for the best education the world has to offer.

But recently the American educational system has been criticized as never before. Secretary of Education William Bennett has stumped the country, making speeches that argue that our universities have abdicated their role as moral leaders. Two best-selling books—The Closing of the American Mind, by Allan Bloom, and Cultural Literacy, by E.D. Hirsch—have argued that you can graduate from college today without acquiring moral values, learning about your cultural tradition or even picking up basic facts about American history. Turn on a television set, and you see young Americans fumbling for an answer when an interviewer asks them when, within 50 years, the Civil War occurred. Pick up a newspaper and read how recent graduates of some of our best institutions have been indicted for insider trading on Wall Street. One parent was shocked to discover that his offspring, enrolled in a course on Shakespeare at one of the nation's great universities, was not even required to write a term paper—for generations the traditional device for teaching analytical thought, organization and self-discipline.

In 1985, almost one-third of the Yale graduating class applied to work at a single Wall Street investment bank. A visitor to this nation could get the impression that our college graduates are barely literate, avaricious and ill-equipped to compete in a world whose technology grows more sophisticated every day. Could that be true?

No, says Donald Kennedy—and he says it with resounding assurance. "Our educational system is the envy of the world," argues Kennedy, 56, an internationally respected biologist who has been president of Stanford University since 1980. "A survey of scholars in Asian countries rated the world's greatest universities, and seven of the Top 10 were U.S. universities. There isn't a single other U.S. industry you can point to and say that it is acknowledged everywhere to be the leader, the gold standard."

Yet, clearly, times have changed in American higher education. The ideal of our great universities for a century or more has been to produce graduates who are literate, wise and cultured—good citizens and community leaders. Today, higher education is often equated with money, and some universities even collect statistics on how much money their graduates make.

"In the old days, people were interested in the liberal arts and culture—but they could afford to be," says Kennedy. "College students were an economically privileged elite. College education in America has been expanded to a larger portion of the population. When families are pressed hard to provide an education for their children, it might be unrealistic not to expect them to justify it in terms of economic benefit. But our universities do not let students forget that education is about life and not just work."

While Kennedy admits that the race of the best students to small, highly paid sections of the financial market has troubled him, he predicts that the phenomenon has played itself out since the stock market crash: "I think the month of October had a hell of a lot to say about that," he says.

"The great thing about education is that it should be unfinished"

He thinks the students who enter college today are different from their predecessors. "They are better prepared in some ways, less well prepared in others. They are better in quantitative skills, in knowing about technology. They are, perhaps, a little weaker in languages and literature, and they don't write quite as well."

But Kennedy sees that as a challenge to be met, not a crippling defect. "I get after faculty members about improving students' writing skills," he says. "And believe me, Shakespeare courses in most places still require term papers. We're still requiring students to show they can do analysis."

But are the Jonas Salks and Robert Jarviks of tomorrow—the scientists and engineers who will develop our new medicines and redefine our technology—studying at American colleges today? Yes, says Kennedy: "Whoever is criticizing the research universities of this country, it isn't U.S. industry. Industry is giving more to universities directly and supporting them more politically than it ever has before. In some respects, international competitiveness is the Sputnik of the '80s. It's as though the Japanese orbited a Toyota."

He adds: "International competitiveness has spurred us to ask some hard questions about whether research and education in the sciences are as good as we thought—or as good as they need to be." To an unprecedented extent, he points out, private industry and universities are cooperating to make sure that American universities stay on those international Top 10 lists.

But the ultimate product of our universities is the graduate. When you face Donald Kennedy with the notion that our colleges are turning out alumni who are greedy and ill-lettered, he answers not as a university president but as a teacher. Talk about insider trading, and he can tell you of a former student who went into venture capital but spends much of his time in volunteer work. Mention graduates rushing to Wall Street, and he can name a young doctor who works with migrant farmworkers. While some find college students intellectually sloppy, he thinks of former charges who have become scholars in the humanities, epidemiologists, historians of science. "I don't think the idea of this generation as a kind of self-interested, self-seeking group is right at all," he says. "They have responded to signals from the society. Once it is shown that society attaches value to public service, people respond by demonstrating great enthusiasm for it."

Kennedy concedes that today's college graduates don't know everything—nor should they. "I get mad at some of these approaches to education," he says. "The idea that somewhere in the world is an education that will make you go through life looking at things with a smug understanding is a foolish notion. I feel culturally illiterate about half the time, and I think anybody who's vaguely curious about this extraordinary world we live in and this vibrant, productive society we live in does too. The great thing about education is that it should be unfinished, that it should prod people ceaselessly to acquire more insight and more knowledge. I tend to respect institutions that raise more questions than they answer. That's what produces people who have a drive to know and to understand."

We're looking for people to write children's books

By Alvin Tresselt,
Dean of Faculty

"Writing for children is the perfect way to take up writing," says the author of 53 children's books. "Your ideas come right out of your own experience. And while it's still a challenge, it's the straightest possible line between you and publication—if you're qualified to seek the success this rewarding field offers."

The Institute of Children's Literature deep in the Connecticut woods. The old mansion has been the home of this workshop for new writers since 1969.

IF YOU WANT TO WRITE AND GET PUBLISHED, I can't think of a better way to do it than writing books and stories for children and teenagers. Ideas flow naturally right out of your own life experience. While it's still a challenge, the odds of getting that first unforgettable check from a juvenile publisher are better than they are from any other kind of publisher I know.

Later on, you may get other checks from other publishers. But right now, the object is to begin—to break into print—to learn the feeling of writing and selling your work and seeing your name in type. After that, you can decide if you want your writing to take another direction.

But after 30 years of editing, publishing, and teaching—and 53 books of my own—I can tell you this: You'll go a long way before you discover anything as rewarding as writing for young readers.

Your words will never sound as sweet as they do from the lips of a child reading your books and stories. And the joy of creating books and stories that young people 'really like' is an experience you'll never have anywhere else. (In this age of boob tube illiteracy, convenient morality, and plastic values, do you know of a more important audience?)

A surprisingly big market

But, that's not all. The financial rewards go far beyond most people's expectations because there's a surprisingly big market out there for writers who are trained to crack it. More than 130 million young people's books are purchased each year. As many as 2,500 new titles appear annually and new authors account for up to half of them.

There are also 250 monthly magazines looking for material for young readers. You can imagine how much writing it takes just to keep them going!

Yet two big questions bedevil nearly every would-be writer: "Am I really qualified?" and "How can I get started?"

'Am I really qualified?'

This is our definition of a "qualified person": It's someone with an aptitude for writing who can take constructive criticism, learn from it, and turn it into a professional performance. That's the only kind of person we're looking for.

The reasons are simple: Our reputation is built on success, and if prospective students don't have the earmarks of success, we probably can't help them. And we tell them so. It's only fair to both of us.

To help us spot potential authors, we've developed a revealing test for writing aptitude. It's free, and we don't charge for our evaluation.

But no one gets into The Institute without passing it. Those who pass and enroll receive our promise: You will complete at least one manuscript ready to submit to a publisher by the time you finish the Course.

Our students learn where to sell their writing with our exclusive publishers' lists.

Learn one-to-one with your own instructor

I've learned a lot about writing for children and I love it. Now I'm passing my knowledge on to my students so they can profit from it. When I'm not writing my own books I spend my time at The Institute of Children's Literature, a workshop for new writers that does one thing and does it better than any other educational institution I know of: It trains qualified people to write for the young reader.

This is the way I work with my students, and my fellow instructors—all of whom are experienced writers or editors—work more or less the same way.

Learn at your own pace

When you're ready—at your own time and your own pace—you send your assignment to me and I read it and I reread it to get everything out of it you've put into it.

Then I edit your assignment with a red pencil just the way a publishing house editor would—if he had the time. I return it along with a detailed letter explaining my comments. I tell you what your strong points are, what your weaknesses are, and just what you can do to improve. It's a matter of push and pull with each assignment. You push and I pull and between us both, you learn to write.

'Now...I am a writer!'

This method really works. I wouldn't spend five minutes at it if it didn't. The proof of the pudding is that many students break into print even before they finish the Course. We receive hundreds of letters like these from students: "Before taking your Course, the short stories I scribbled for my two tiny tots never caught an editor's fancy," writes Emily Burns of Salem, Ore. "My first sale, to National Catholic Weekly, was a Course lesson. Then I sent another Course assignment to a writer's competition and won first prize of $400!"

Della Domangue of New Orleans, LA writes: "Having taken several writing courses, I can truthfully say yours was the best. My instructor's personal comments, suggestions and encouragement were invaluable. I also learned the joys of... editors answering you personally."

Marilyn Day of Marissa, Ill. says, "Now I'm no longer a housewife, I am a writer!"

And Mary Carruth, Dublin, Cal., writes, "I sent out my first article with a prayer and it was accepted. Your Course, with its structure and support, has been everything I hoped for."

"When I started, I did not really think I had the ability" writes Sister M. Laetitia Mudde, West Haven, CT. "But my instructor made me believe in myself."*

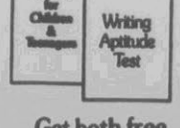

I have a file full of similar letters. People like yourself so full of pride they could easily convince you that it is a pity more people don't take up writing for children.

Advance Oscar-Touting

The word in Hollywood from industrious press agents, hopeful studio executives and veteran amateur film critics is that five of the following 10 actresses are sure to win Academy Award nominations on Feb. 17. One of the five, of course, subsequently will take home the Oscar itself for best performance by an actress in a leading role in a 1987 movie:

- Glenn Close in Fatal Attraction
- Holly Hunter in Broadcast News
- Barbra Streisand in Nuts
- Lillian Gish in The Whales of August
- Faye Dunaway in Barfly
- Meryl Streep in Ironweed
- Maggie Smith in The Lonely Passion of Judith Hearne
- Sally Kirkland in Anna
- Cher in Moonstruck or Suspect
- Lindsay Crouse in House of Games.

The two favorites in the lineup are Close and Hunter.

This year, the Academy Awards ceremony will be telecast on April 11. The first awards were

New World for Miss World

Time was when a beautiful, curvaceous young woman could be chosen Miss World or Miss Universe or "Miss Perfect" without anyone delving into her past. No more. Let some lovely young thing win a beauty crown, and almost immediately reporters are feverishly investigating her love life and modeling history.

Take Ulla Weigerstorfer, 21, a tall stalk of blond Viennese pulchritude who won the Miss World beauty pageant in London a few months ago. Supposedly Ulla was a wholesome, clean-living, hardworking veterinary student who, having captured the Miss Austria title, entered the Miss World contest as a lark.

London Express

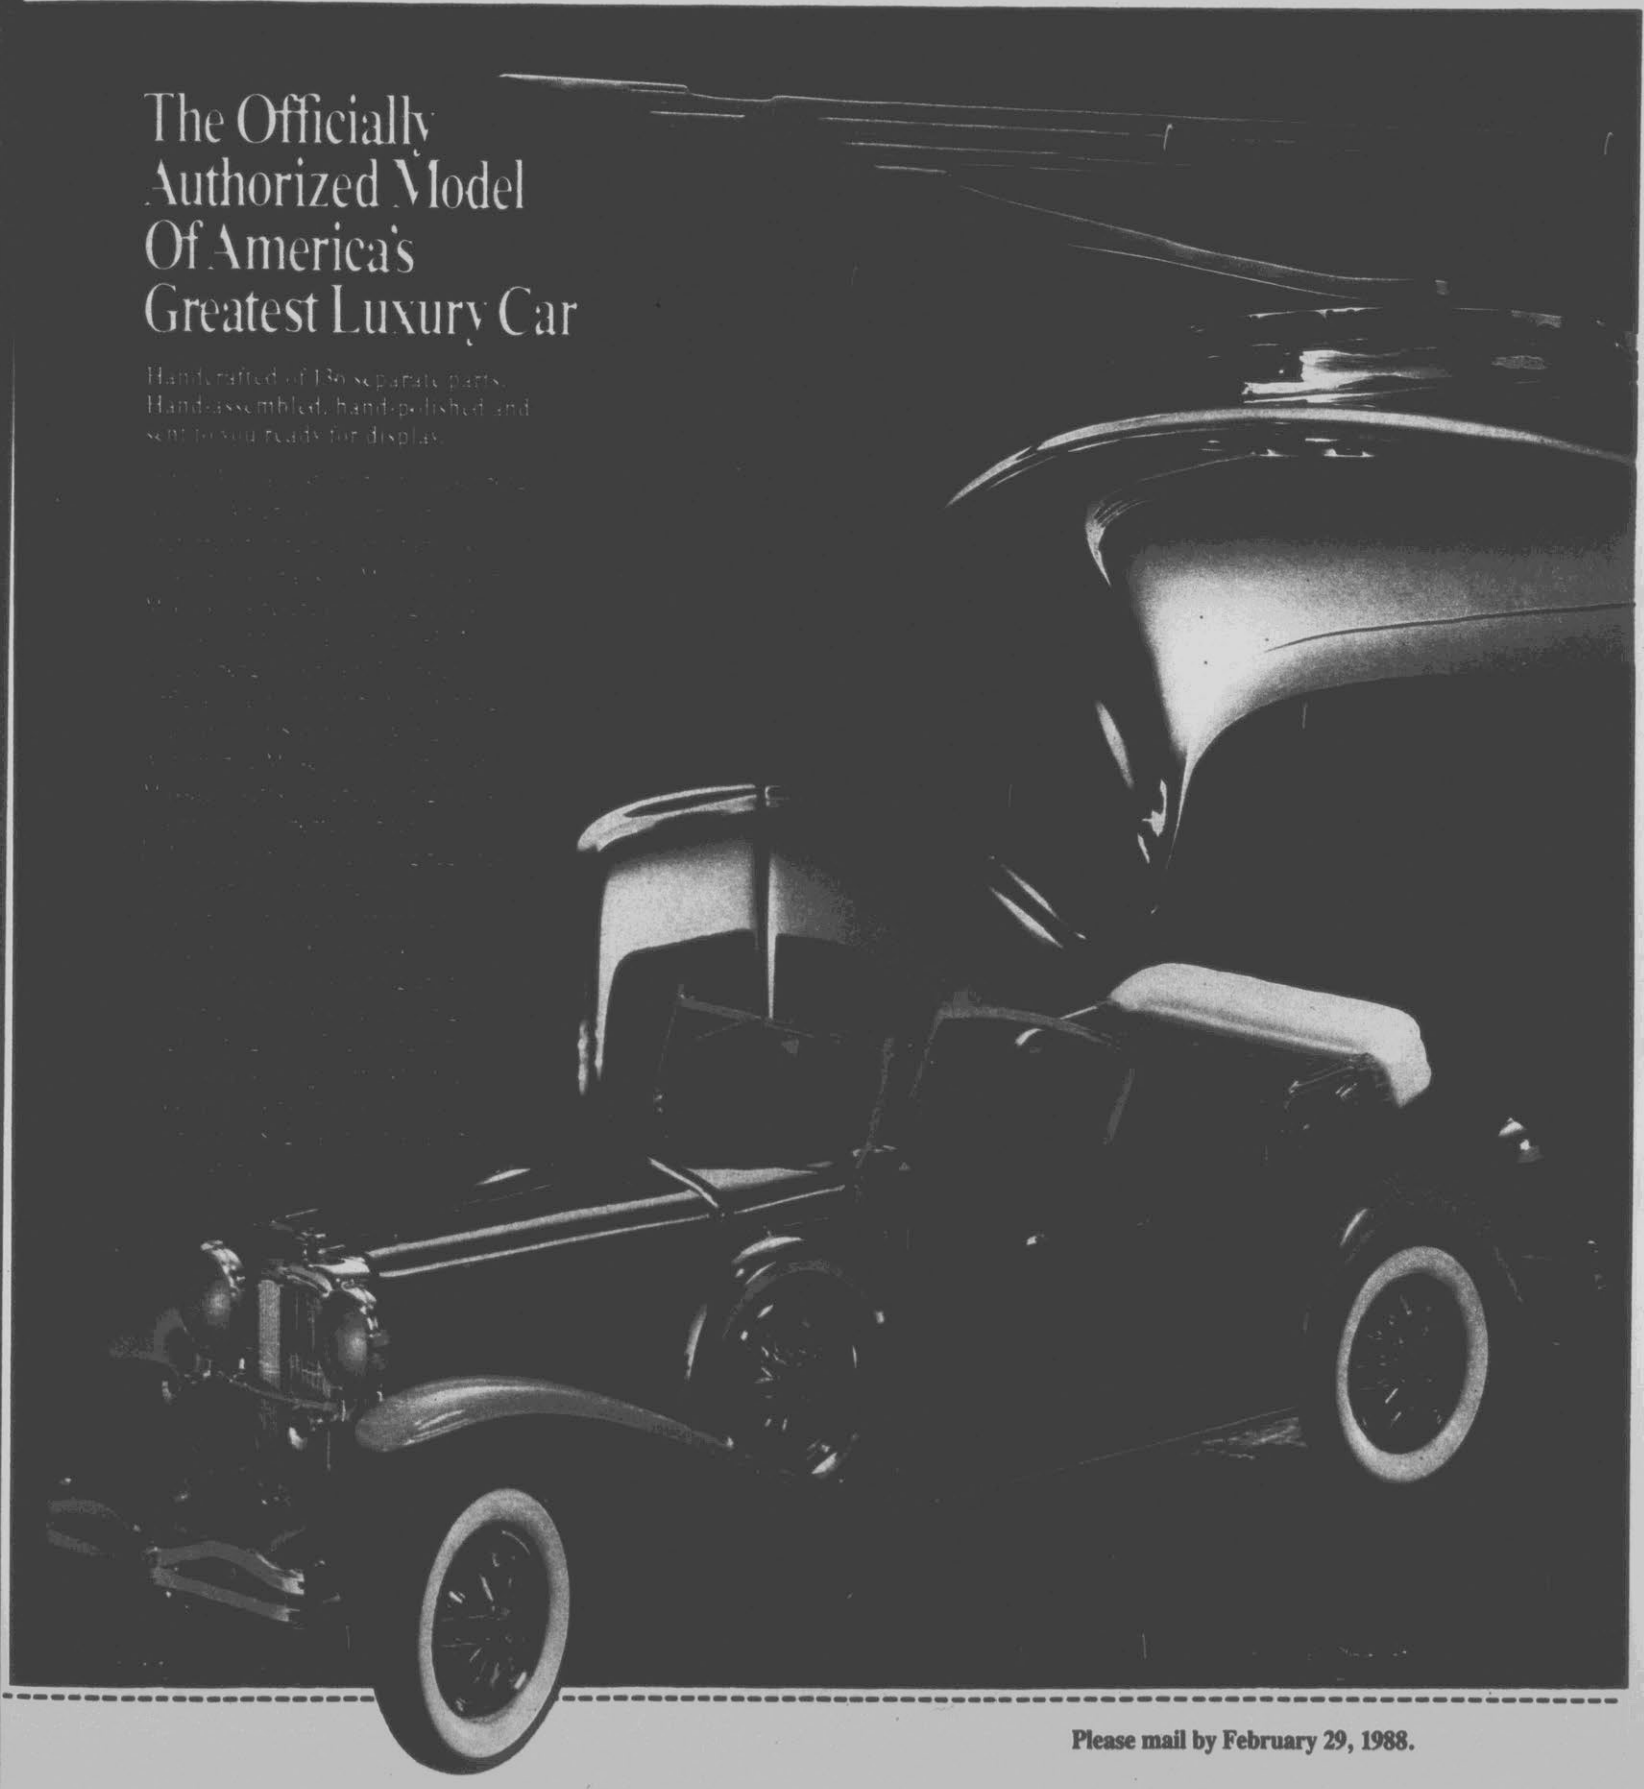

Ulla with new crown

It turns out that before she was Miss Austria, blue-eyed Ulla was a "Mistress Austria" of sorts, living in Vienna with her 40-year-old lover, Josef Wegrostek, a divorced lawyer and playboy father of three. Once his Ulla garnered the Miss World honors, however—with the possibility of earning $100,000 in endorsements—Wegrostek said sadly that he was afraid she'd dump him for an international modeling career or Hollywood. "One minute," he said, "our world looked bright. The next, she was crowned, and I suddenly realized what that meant. I hope our love will be strong enough to see us through."

"I have not asked Ulla to marry me," he added. "She is too young to settle down, but she is desperate to have a baby. If she had become pregnant, we would have married. Last year, just before I met Ulla, I broke up with another model. She is the mother of our son, Manuel, 3½. He loves Ulla, and she looks after him like a mother."

GREAT IDEAS FROM THE CREATORS OF THE SILVER PALATE COOKBOOKS

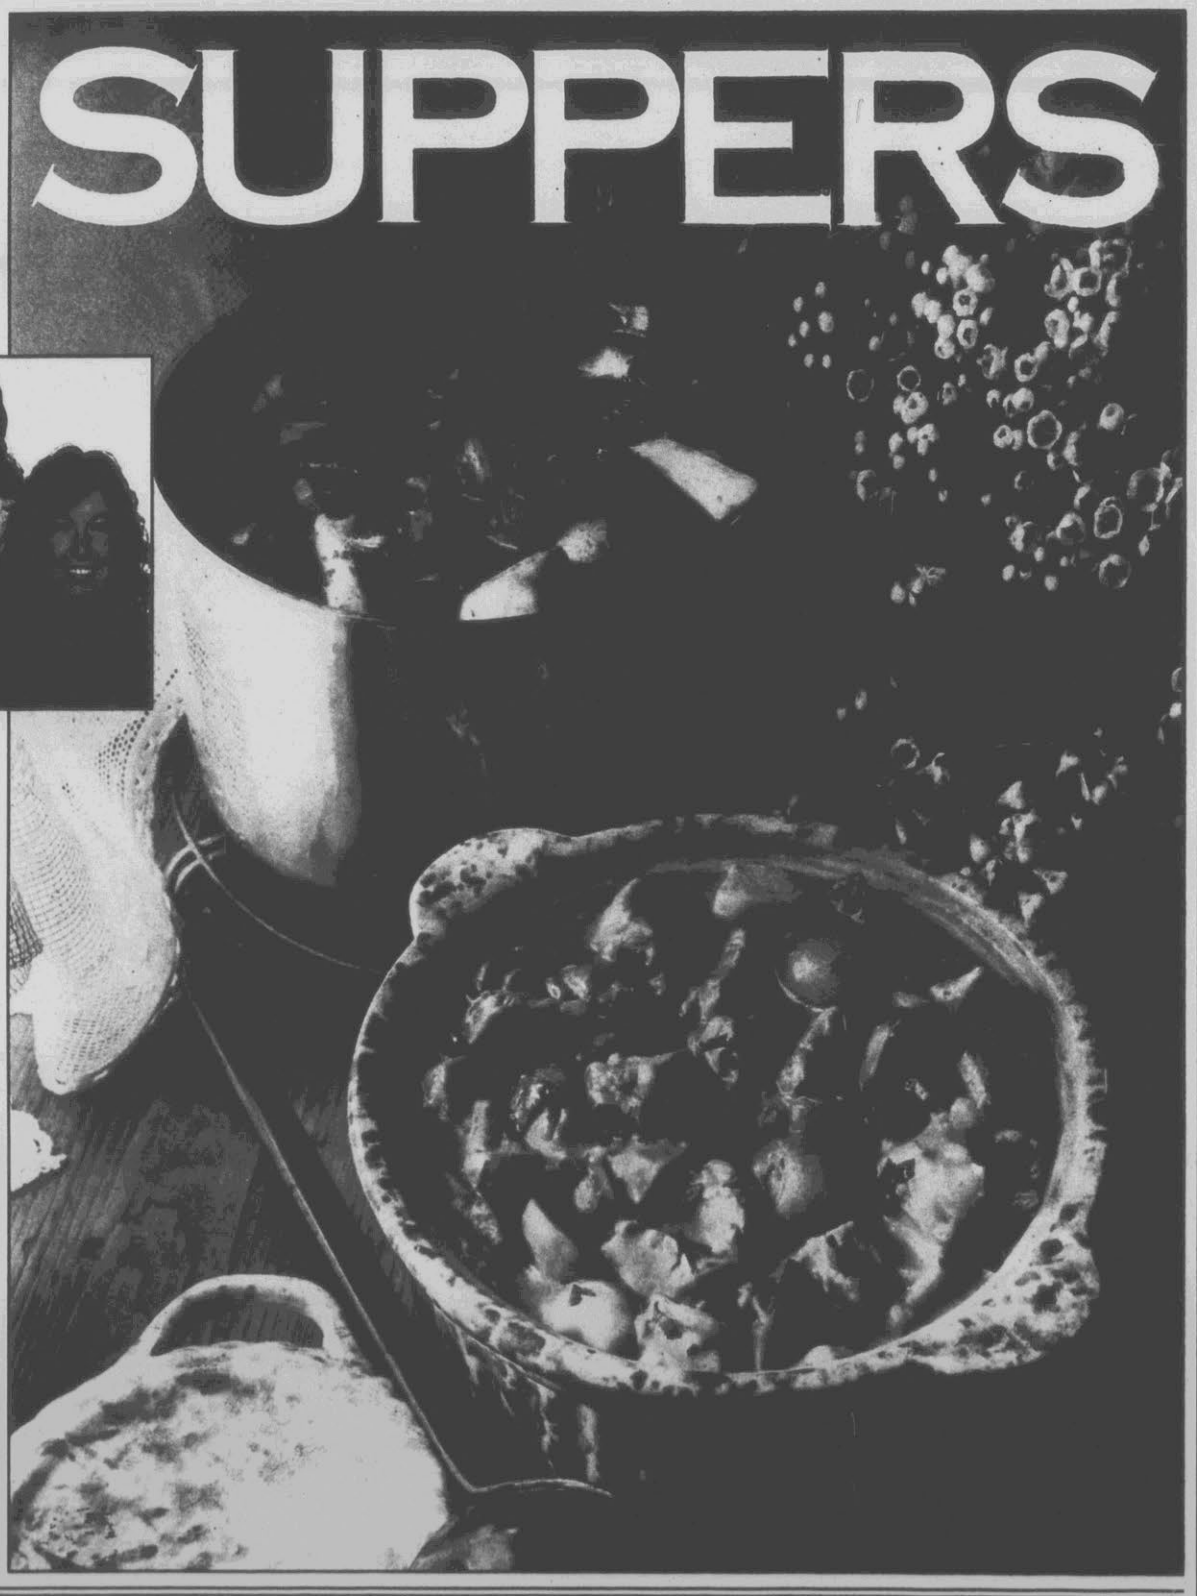

Sunday Night SUPPERS

Winter's chill calls for no-nonsense foods like savory soups and hearty stews. We crave their comforting tastes and welcome those reassuring smells that fill the house when a potful has been simmering for hours. Soups and stews also are nourishing, economical and practically foolproof. Marno's Chicken Soup is a rich broth with an abundance of noodles. Our two stews—Beef Burgundy Vegetable Medley and Veal & Mushroom Stew—have loads of chunky vegetables for lighter eating. For a satisfying dessert, there's Amaretto Bread Pudding. All are great for Sunday night suppers or weekend entertaining.

Great-tasting stews to warm up your winter: Beef Burgundy Vegetable Medley (top) and Veal & Mushroom Stew

BY JULEE ROSSO AND SHEILA LUKINS

FOOD PHOTOGRAPHER: STEVEN MARK NEEDHAM; FOOD STYLIST: SIDNEY BURSTEIN; PROP STYLIST: NANCY MERNIT

VEAL & MUSHROOM STEW

A luscious, light veal stew that has the surprise color and fresh tastes of plum tomatoes and orange zest. This is perfect for buffet dinner parties.

9 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 pounds veal, cut into 1-inch cubes
5 tablespoons all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons paprika
1½ teaspoons ground coriander
Salt and pepper to taste
3 cups seeded and diced plum tomatoes
2 cups chicken broth
1½ cups yellow onions, cut in half and then in slivers
12 large whole shallots, peeled
2 cloves of garlic, peeled and finely minced
1/4 cup chopped Italian parsley plus 1 tablespoon for garnish
1 tablespoon dried tarragon
Grated zest of 1 orange
1/2 pound firm white mushrooms, cut in half lengthwise
1/2 cup heavy cream

1. Preheat oven to 350°F.
2. Melt 4 tablespoons of the butter in a heavy flameproof casserole. Add veal and cook on top of stove, turning frequently (do not brown) over low heat.
3. In a small bowl, stir together 2 tablespoons of the flour, the paprika, coriander, salt and pepper. Sprinkle this mixture over the veal and cook over low heat, stirring, for an additional 5 minutes. Do not let the veal brown.
4. Add 2 cups diced tomatoes, chicken broth, onions, shallots, garlic, 1/4 cup parsley, tarragon and orange zest. Bring to a boil on top of stove. Cover and bake in oven for 1¼ hours, or until veal is tender.
5. While stew is baking, melt 2 tablespoons butter in a skillet. Quickly sauté mushroom halves until golden. Reserve.
6. Remove stew from oven and pour it through a strainer placed over a bowl. Reserve stew and cooking liquid separately.
7. Return casserole to medium heat on top of stove and melt remaining 3 tablespoons butter in it. Sprinkle in remaining 3 tablespoons flour and cook over very low heat, whisking constantly, for 3 minutes.
8. Whisk reserved cooking liquid slowly into butter and flour mixture; simmer slowly, stirring constantly, for 5 minutes.
9. Whisk in cream and adjust seasonings to taste. Return veal stew to the casserole. Gently stir in the remaining cup of tomatoes and the reserved mushrooms. Simmer 5 minutes to heat through. Transfer to a deep serving dish, sprinkle with remaining tablespoon of parsley and serve at once.

BEEF BURGUNDY VEGETABLE MEDLEY

Parsnips, new potatoes, leeks, carrots and tomatoes lighten this robust beef and burgundy stew. The aroma alone will have everyone in the kitchen long before dinnertime.

2 tablespoons olive oil
6 slices bacon, 1/8-inch thick, cut into 1-inch lengths
2 pounds beef stew meat, cut into 1-inch cubes
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
10 small leeks, well washed, with 2 inches of green left on 6 carrots, peeled and cut into 3-inch lengths
6 medium-sized parsnips, peeled and cut into 3-inch lengths
2 tablespoons granulated sugar
1½ cups beef broth
1½ cups burgundy wine
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 tablespoons red currant jelly
2 teaspoons dried thyme
8 small red new potatoes, cut in half
6 cloves of garlic, peeled and minced
6 ripe plum tomatoes, seeded and coarsely chopped
1/2 cup chopped Italian parsley plus 1 tablespoon for garnish
Buttered noodles (optional)

1. Preheat oven to 350°F.
2. Heat olive oil in a large skillet. Add bacon and cook until fat is rendered. Remove bacon to a heavy flameproof casserole.
3. Brown beef stew meat in skillet in small batches, sprinkling with pepper. Remove to casserole with bacon.
4. In same skillet, quickly sauté leeks, carrots and parsnips, sprinkling with sugar to caramelize slightly. Remove from skillet and reserve.
5. Add beef broth and wine to skillet and bring to a boil, scraping up brown bits. Reduce heat, swirl in butter, red currant jelly and thyme; cook for a minute more. Pour over beef in casserole.
6. Add potatoes and garlic to casserole and bring to a boil. Cover, place in oven and bake for 45 minutes.
7. Remove from oven, add reserved leeks, carrots and parsnips, plus the chopped plum tomatoes and 1/2 cup parsley. Stir gently, adjust seasonings and bake in oven, uncovered, for an additional 45 minutes, or until beef is tender. Garnish with parsley. Delicious served with buttered noodles.

- May be an excellent source for school or science fair projects!

Here is a delightful collection of experiments and "tricks" that demonstrate a variety of well-known, and not-so-well-known, scientific principles and illusions: From tricks based on inertia, momentum, sound and other vibrations and projects to build, to experiments in biology and psychology, water surface tension, gravity and centrifugal force, heat, light, chemistry, and mechanics.

Interesting to young and old alike, these experiments are designed to satisfy the investigative curiosity about how and why things happen. These are projects that develop interest in and answer questions about biology such as developing new plant leaves...or producing natural dyes from vegetables or fruits. Readers explore the "tricks" of air and water pressure by building an atomizer using a straw and a glass of water...and so much more!

MARNO'S CHICKEN NOODLE SOUP

When this dear friend from Kalamazoo delivers her soup as a neighborly gift, it reminds us of the good, simple things in life. The light, light noodles float in a rich broth with plenty of pieces of chicken. It's superb!

1 chicken (4 pounds), preferably a stewing hen
4 stalks celery with leaves
4 carrots, peeled
3 parsnips, peeled
2 yellow onions, peeled and halved, studded with 4 whole cloves
3 cloves of garlic, peeled
6 sprigs fresh dill
6 sprigs parsley
Salt and pepper to taste
3 quarts water
1 chicken bouillon cube (optional)
Marno's noodles (see recipe)
1½ cups cooked peas
1/4 cup chopped fresh dill
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

1. Place chicken in a large soup pot. Add celery, carrots, parsnips, onions, garlic, sprigs of dill and parsley, salt and pepper. Add water. Bring to a boil, reduce heat to a simmer and cook, covered, for 2 hours.

2. Skim any foam that has formed on top of soup. Remove chicken from soup and cool. Remove skin and bones from chicken; shred the meat, cover and reserve.

3. Strain the soup, discard the vegetables and return liquid to the pot. Add bouillon cube for stronger flavor and adjust seasonings. Bring to a boil, uncovered, for 10 minutes to intensify flavors.

4. Make noodles (see recipe, opposite page).

5. Before serving, bring chicken broth to a gentle boil. Add noodles and cook soup for 4 minutes, or until noodles are tender. Gently stir in reserved shredded chicken, peas, chopped dill and parsley. Heat through and serve.

The secret to thicker sauce is in the can.

Marno's Noodles

1/2 teaspoon salt
2/3 cup all-purpose flour plus 2 tablespoons for rolling surface

1. Beat egg and salt together in a bowl. With a fork, mix in the 2/3 cup of flour. Gather in a ball with hands and knead to form noodle dough.
2. Dust a rolling surface with additional flour and roll dough very thinly into a rectangular shape approximately 9 inches by 18 inches. Dust top of dough lightly with flour.
3. Roll up dough jelly-roll fashion along 18-inch edge. Slice crosswise into 1/4-inch-wide spirals.
4. Carefully unroll and shake out spirals into noodles; let rest on a cookie sheet for 10 minutes. Continue with Step 5 of soup recipe.

AMARETTO BREAD PUDDING

1 loaf French bread
1 quart half-and-half
2 tablespoons unsalted butter at room temperature
3 eggs
1½ cups granulated sugar
2 tablespoons almond extract
3/4 cup golden raisins
3/4 cup sliced almonds

1. Break up bread into small pieces. Place in a medium-sized bowl and cover with the half-and-half. Cover bowl and let stand for 1 hour.
2. Preheat oven to 325°F.
3. Grease a 9x13x2-inch baking dish with the butter.
4. In a small bowl, beat together eggs, sugar and almond extract. Stir into bread mixture.
5. Gently fold raisins and almonds into bread mixture.
6. Spread bread mixture evenly in buttered baking dish. Set on middle rack of oven and bake for 50 minutes, until golden. Remove and let cool.

Amaretto Sauce

8 tablespoons unsalted butter at room temperature
1 cup confectioners sugar
1 egg, well beaten
4 tablespoons amaretto liqueur

1. In the top of a double boiler over simmering water, stir together butter and sugar. Stir constantly until sugar and butter are dissolved and mixture is very hot.
2. Remove from heat. Whisk the egg well into the butter-and-sugar mixture. Continue whisking until sauce has come to room temperature.
3. Add the amaretto liqueur.

To Serve

Preheat broiler. Cut pudding into 8-10 squares and place on a decorative ovenproof serving dish. Spoon Amaretto Sauce over pudding and place under broiler until sauce bubbles. Serve immediately.

APPLESAUCE RAISIN MUFFINS

Applesauce Raisin Muffins

Very soft and spicy with applesauce and raisins.

1 large egg
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1½ cups unsweetened applesauce
2 cups unbleached white flour
¾ teaspoon baking soda
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon cinnamon
¾ cup raisins

Beat together egg, oil, and applesauce. Add flour, baking soda, baking powder, and spices; beat well. Stir in raisins. Spoon batter into oiled and floured muffin wells. Bake at 375 degrees for 20 to 25 minutes or until firm to the touch and browned. Cool on wire racks. Delicious topped with cream cheese!

Try Karen Barkie's Applesauce Raisin Muffins. Her readers did and told her this is their favorite.

What mother does not want wholesome and nutritious foods for her family? My interest in nutrition led me to discover enough disturbing facts about sugar to make me firmly resolve to keep America's #1 high calorie non-food out of the mouths of my children. And honey can be just as unhealthful. In fact, it even contains more calories per cup than sugar! And I wasn't willing to serve my family artificial sweeteners. So I simply stopped serving cakes, cookies, candy and other sugar-sweetened desserts.

But my family was unhappy about it. Even my husband dropped hints like "Remember how good chocolate cake tastes?" And I had to admit I too missed desserts. So I found a way to treat my family's sweet tooth—without using a spoonful of sugar. And without honey or artificial sweeteners. And now you can too.

No Sugar—No Honey—No Artificial Sweeteners

SWEET AND SUGARFREE is the cookbook that tells you how. It offers you 207 different recipes for cakes, cookies, breads, sherbets, custard and much more. Try my Applesauce Raisin Muffins above. I've developed a few hundred SWEET AND SUGARFREE recipes but this is the one people ask for most. Or my sweet and chewy spicy Apple Raisin Coffee Cake. Or create a luscious pineapple cream pie (it only sounds rich), banana nut pancakes topped with apricot syrup, or easy-to-make peach cheesecake.

"I strongly recommend this book for every person who wants to be healthy while enjoying the sensation of sweetness as nature meant it to be enjoyed—with good, whole, safe food."

207 Sugarfree Recipes In All!

The secret is simply using natural fresh fruits and fruit juices—nature's most wholesome sweetener, available in a variety of tangy flavors, all rich in vitamins and minerals . . . and with considerably fewer calories than sugar or honey.

So give it a try. I think it will open up a whole world of new desserts for you. What have you got to lose, except sugar, calories or pounds? Order your copy of SWEET AND SUGARFREE today!

THE LEO FRANK CASE

The Murder of Mary Phagan is based on the real-life case of Leo Frank, who was railroaded for the killing of a 13-year-old Atlanta factory worker in 1913. But the final piece of the puzzle was not put into place until the 1980s, when an 83-year-old man came forward. Starring Jack Lemmon, this is a moving story of bigotry, opportunism—and extraordinary political courage. NBC, today, 8:30-11 p.m. EST., and Tuesday, 9-11:30 p.m.

Put a Poet in Your Home

Happy Marriages Produce Look-Alikes

Robert Zajonc, a University of Michigan psychologist, actually has proved that married couples who live together long enough come to resemble each other. In the Feb. 2 issue of Family Circle, Zajonc speculates that "shared experiences and emotions...made the couples' faces similar." Intriguingly, his study reveals that "the husbands and wives who looked most alike after 25 years were also those who reported the happiest marriages." Check it out.

ASK MARILYN

BY MARILYN VOS SAVANT

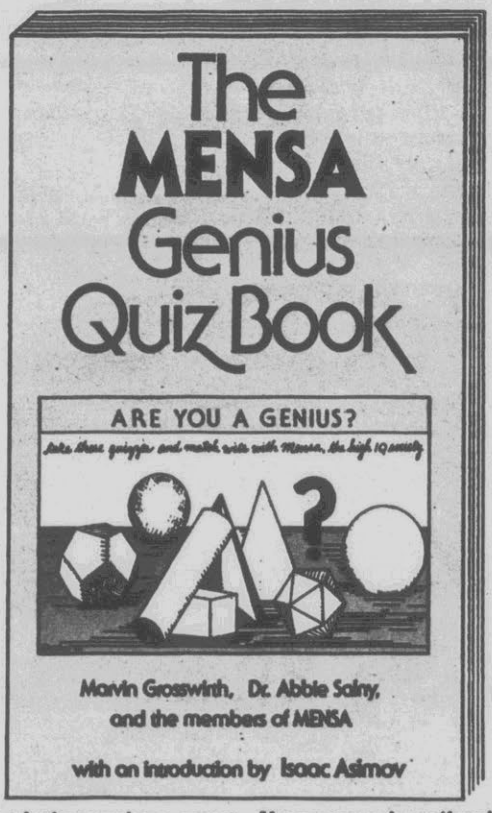

What do you think about artifacts that seem to contradict history as we know it—for example, the skull of a long-extinct animal that apparently died of a gunshot wound long before man existed?

—David Reyes, Elsa, Tex.

If the artifact appears to contradict history as we know it, either we are wrong about the artifact or wrong about history. The least surprising possibility is the most likely. For example, if that skull were found with what appeared to be a hole made by a crude bullet, it would be more likely that a nonhuman force shot a pebble there—the way a tornado drives a straw into a tree—than it would be that our historical dating system is almost comically flawed or that the Rifleman can travel back through time.

If you have a question for Marilyn vos Savant, who is listed in the "Guinness Book of World Records" under "Highest IQ," send it to: "Ask Marilyn," PARADE, 750 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017. Because of volume of mail, personal replies are impossible.

IN STEP WITH:

BY JAMES BRADY

Marcello Mastroianni

I ONCE ASKED MARCELLO Mastroianni what he thought was the secret of his immense appeal to women. He is, after all, no longer young, hardly an imposing physical presence. He looks, well, tired. I didn't say these things, of course. My mother taught me always to be polite.

He sort of shrugged. "I don't know," he said, genuinely puzzled. "I sometimes ask that myself."

Perhaps the question would have been better put to his wife of nearly 40 years, or to various of his loves, who include the actresses Catherine Deneuve and Faye Dunaway.

Frank Micelotta

Mastroianni has been an Italian star since the early '50s and a world-class headliner since 1960, when he made what some critics still consider the greatest of all films, La Dolce Vita. He was then 36, playing a cheap Roman gossip columnist through whose eyes director Federico Fellini showed us a world drunk on pleasure, fame and wealth.

The first time I ever saw him was in a hotel in Milan. He already was famous and, as I stood behind him at the front desk waiting to check in, I noticed with a certain envious delight that on the back of his neck festered an angry-looking boil. Aha! I thought. So he isn't perfect after all.

His current film—he has made 116—is Dark Eyes, for which he won the Best Actor award at the 1987 Cannes Film Festival. Dark Eyes also was selected as the opener of last fall's New York Film Festival and, at this writing, is likely to garner a number of Oscar nominations. In 1962, he became the first performer in a foreign-language film ever to be nominated for an Oscar as Best Actor. The movie was Divorce—Italian Style, in which he played a love-sodden husband seeking a way to bump off his wife, a boring woman with an unappetizing mustache. In the end, he wins the nymphet after whom he has been lusting, only to lose her (poetic justice) to a young sailor.

There's no professional insecurity in the man. He specializes in playing losers. Film, he says, is a lie, and the actor is a liar. Maybe this realistic view of the industry that made him famous derives from his upbringing in a village south of Rome. His father repaired old furniture, and young Marcello wore hand-me-downs and shoes with homemade patches. Even his war was unheroic—a dreary series of Italian retreats. When he married, he and his 19-year-old wife had to move in with his parents.

As a teenager, Marcello helped the family pay its bills by acting as an extra in several films. But it didn't occur to him to think of the movies as a career. Much too sensible for that, he studied to become a surveyor. But times were tough in post-war Italy, and Marcello took a menial job as a bookkeeper for a theater company. Gradually, he was drawn into playing a role himself, into the business of make-believe. One of his first co-stars was another impoverished young unknown named Sophia Loren.

BORN: Sept. 28, 1924, in Fontana Liri, Italy.
PERSONAL: Married Flora Carabella in 1950; one daughter, Barbara. Also has a daughter, Chiara, by Catherine Deneuve.
FILMS: His 116 films include La Dolce Vita, 1960; La Notte, 1961; A Very Private Affair, 1961; Divorce—Italian Style, 1961; 8½, 1963; Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow, 1964; The 10th Victim, 1965; La Grande Bouffe, 1973; A Special Day, 1977; Macaroni, 1985; Ginger and Fred, 1986; Dark Eyes, 1987.

BRADY'S BITS

When I interviewed him, Marcello was out on tour, plugging a film he'd just made with Jack Lemmon, a sweet comedy called Macaroni. Refreshingly modest, he kept talking about Lemmon, whom he likes and whose work he admires. Though his English is pretty good, Marcello said, surprisingly, "I protected myself against Hollywood by refusing to learn English. I told everyone that it did not interest me, but it was really my fear." This great actor confessed that when it came to Hollywood and American movies, he was pure coward. "Actors," he once admitted, "are like babies."

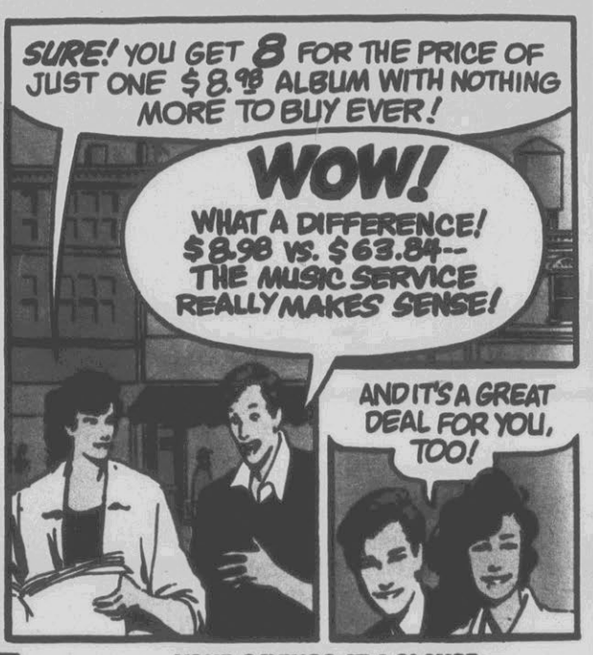

Marcello Mastroianni is 63 and still playing romantic leading men (on the screen and off). "Dark Eyes" is his new big hit. At Cannes, it won him the award as "Best Actor."

A Brutal Murder Fires 'Mary Phagan'

By Evan Levine

NBC's "The Murder of Mary Phagan" is an ambitious five-hour miniseries that tells the true story of a 13-year-old factory worker who was found dead in 1913 Atlanta. Leo Frank, the Jewish factory manager from Brooklyn, was accused of her murder, tried, and subsequently lynched.

The miniseries, which airs Sunday, Jan. 24, and Tuesday, Jan. 26, is notable not only for dealing with such emotionally charged issues, but also for having recruited a remarkable group of actors, such as Jack Lemmon and Robert Prosky, who have backgrounds in theater. Peter Gallagher, who plays Leo Frank, is another actor with a theater background. To him, the presence of such a cast contributed immeasurably to the production. "I knew many cast members," Gallagher explains. "We had worked together on stage. This was like old home week.

"I also love working with Jack," adds the 32-year-old Gallagher, who won a Tony Award for his role in the revival of "A Long Day's Journey Into Night," in which he co-starred with Lemmon. "We became good friends during 'Journey.'"

The miniseries follows Frnak's conviction in 1913 Atlanta, a time of great anti-Northern sentiment in the South. Encouraged by a climate of racial and religious intolerance, many citizens took matters into their own hands after Gov. Slaton, doubtful of Frank's guilt, commuted his sentence the eve of his execution. In researching these events, Gallagher employed the same intensity that he brought to the roles of Edmund Tyrone in "Journey" and Billy in "The Real Thing," also on Broadway. "I get very intense about a role," he says. "I read newspapers and books and Frank's letters. I even showed up at the audition with glasses and my hair slicked back, to look like him.

"I don't know what I found so fascinating about Frank," he continues. "But I need something like this that ignites passion in me. This almost recreated the feel of a play because the other actors were great. I couldn't dream up a better cast. Even though I prefer theater because there's a greater sense of power and you can act as your own editor, I loved the role of Leo."

In NBC's "The Murder of Mary Phagan," Peter Gallagher (l.) plays Leo Frank, the factory manager accused of murder and Jack Lemmon (r.) portrays Governor John Slaton, who doubts Frank's guilt. Beeson Carol plays Sheriff Mangum. It airs Sunday, Jan. 24 and Tuesday, Jan. 26.

The spectacle of a child murder and racial tension, issues which remain prevalent, as well as the presence of many distinguished actors, should prove a strong lure for viewers. "I think I brought a sense of truth to him," says Gallagher. "This ignites passion in me."

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: Is young actress Rosanna Arquette any relation to the late "Hollywood Squares" regular, Charley Weaver? If so, how? — BOB BARESI, MERIDEN, CT.

Rosanna Arquette, 27, is the granddaughter of the late Cliff Arquette, the "Hollywood Squares" regular best known as Charley Weaver. Cliff Arquette died in 1975 and never lived to see his granddaughter in film. Rosanna is the eldest of five children. Her mother, Mardi, is a political activist and poet, and her father is actor/director Lewis Arquette. Father and daughter appearedtogether in the 1986 film "Nobody's Fool."

Dear Michele: My husband insists that Dustin Hoffman portrayed a notorious bank robber in the movie "Dog Day Afternoon." Please tell him it was Al Pacino! — ROSEMARY DE PALMA, KENT, OHIO

It was Al Pacino, and he won an Oscar nomination for Best Actor in the 1975 film based on a true story.

Dear Michele: Is actress Jill St. John related in any way to Al St. John, who used to appear in Western movies some years ago? — JOHN C. McKENDRICK, FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

Jill St. John was born Jill Oppenheim on Aug. 19, 1940, in Los Angeles. She is not related to the late Al "Fuzzy" St. John, who died in 1963. Al St. John, however, was the nephew of comedian Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle.

Dear Michele: Who plays the beast in "Beauty and the Beast," and what can you tell us about him? Also, how many hours of make-up application are required for his character? — L. MILLER, DANVILLE, ILL.

Ron Perlman stars as Vincent the Beast on CBS's "Beauty and the Beast" and he spends four hours per day in makeup session. Credit for Perlman's daily transformations, by the way, goes tomake-up wizard Rick Baker ("An American Werewolf in London"). Perlman is a native New Yorker who has a masters degree in fine arts from the University of Minnesota. He says he grew up as "a fatkid with a low self-image in a family of intellectuals and raconteurs." He began his acting career on stage, and has appeared in both regional and New York theater productions. Perlman's film credits include "Quest for Fire" (1981), "The Ice Pirates" (1984) and "The Name of the Rose" (1986). Judging from the voluminous fan mail I've been receiving, it appears many women would like a "Beast" in their lives. Sorry, ladies, Perlman is married to fashion designer Opal Stone. They have a daughter, Blake Amanda, 3.

Please address questions to Michele Will Tell, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 2315, Grand Central Station, New York, NY 10163. Because of the volume of mail received, personal replies cannot be sent.

DICKIE ROOK

Wonderful Wool

Wool has regained its popularity as a fabric for winter clothes. It is a natural animal fiber that absorbs moisture and causes the wearer to feel warm. A Cleaner World offers the following information about wool.

Wool retains its shape very well, which makes it a popular fabric for tailored garments. It resists wrinkling and retains creases. Wool is also naturally water-repellent and flame resistant. It dyes readily and is therefore available in a wide variety of colors, from dark tones to pale pastels.

Some specially processed wool is labeled as washable, but special handling is needed. Wool is susceptible to damage from washroom chemicals, moisture, mechanical action, and excessive heat. For this reason, drycleaning is the safest method for cleaning wool.

Ron Reagan proves on TV that he's well connected

By Connie Passalacqua

OK, so what did Ron Reagan do to deserve his own "Cinemax Comedy Experiment"? (It's suitably titled "Ron Reagan Is the President's Son" and airs this week Jan. 25 and 30).

Ron Reagan

Well, he hasn't done much, but let's just say he's well-connected. Which is exactly what's wrong not just with this episode but with the whole series of "Cinemax Comedy Experiments." More on that later.

As presidential children go, Ron Jr. isn't so bad. As a reporter for "Good Morning America" he has proven that he's intelligent and possesses a natural screen presence. He also should be given credit for being honest enough not to take himself too seriously.

Being irreverent about his privileged position in life is what first appears to be the metier of Reagan's "Comedy Experiment." We get to see a month or so in the life of Ron Reagan, who's always surrounded by secret-service agents sporting sunglasses. He's called "the president's son" by everyone from his producer boss on his fictional morning talk show to the guy at the newsstand. One person who crossed Ron, we're told, was given 18 weeks of jury duty.

Somewhere along the way, Reagan's irreverence is eclipsed by his bitterness at never being given credit for having his own talents. Ten minutes into the show (co-scripted by Penn Jillette of the magic team of Penn and Teller), the episode runs out of steam. What more can you say about Ron Reagan?

In picking celebrities for its monthly "Comedy Experiment," Cinemax frequently picks "talents" whose only qualification seems to be that they are well connected. If you're connected with the "Late Night with David Letterman" show (Paul Shaffer and Chris Elliott have had shows on "Comedy Experiment"), you've a sure ticket. If you're connected with the Brat Pack, like Demi Moore or Judge Reinhold, you're in. But the most successful episodes have been those of people like Ann Magnuson, who have fresh comedy talent to offer. Wouldn't it be nice if Cinemax offered their comedy showcase to unknowns with talent rather than to "performers" who are chic or who know the right people?

Lady in the Lake

David Hasselhoff, John Beck and Audra Lindley will join Raymond Burr for "Perry Mason: The Lady in the Lake," an upcoming NBC movie that recently completed production in Denver. Mason, aided by Della Street (Barbara Hale) and Paul Drake Jr. (William Katt), investigates the disappearance of a young heiress (Doran Clark). David Ogden Stiers reprises his role as prosecuting attorney Michael Reston.

TV Chatter

"L.A. Law" co-creator Terry Louise Fisher is in the middle of a major legal battle involving financial compensation and breach of contract with series producer Twentieth Century Fox. Published reports also say that Fisher has "ruffled the feathers" of the show's other creator, powerful producer Steven Bochco. Hotline chatted with Fisher and Bochco at the Emmys last year, right after "L.A. Law" had won the statuette for best dramatic series. The two writers-producers laughed and joked in the wake of their victory, but some of their statements may have even hinted at the problems to come. In her acceptance speech, Fisher thanked the show's male writers for using their "feminine sides." Later, she explained, " 'L.A. Law' balances the male and female side of all its characters..." At that point, Bochco interrupted and said, "Yeah, they write with their..." using a vulgar term for a part of the female anatomy. Fisher gave her partner a distressed look, then continued, "There's a certain sensitivity to the show. I think our male writers can all write about women, which is real interesting because that's always been a complaint of actresses. They read something and say, 'Oh, no! I can't do this. This isn't the way a woman would act.' " Bochco interrupted again, cracking, "Terry makes me wear a dress during story meetings."

On the new CBS adventure series, "High Mountain Rangers," veteran actor Robert Conrad shares the screen with his real-life offspring Christian, 23, and Shane, 16, who play his sons on the show as well. Meanwhile, Joan Conrad, Robert's daughter, serves as executive producer. The conflict on screen, as the Conrads battle snow and evildoers, may be nothing compared to all the backstage backstabbing. Commenting on his relationship with Christian, Robert Conrad says, "My son's an authority on everything. Here's a guy who already knows what I've been trying to learn for 30 years." Forhis part, Christian refuses to engage in any dad-bashing and says in reply, "The older I get, the smarter he becomes. My sister Joan is the tough one. Dad's a pussycat by comparison."

Since its debut in December, Fox's new late-night show, "The Wilton North Report," seems to be a comedy program in search of a concept. And like many other Fox shows, the changes are on-going. Producer Barry Sand says he doubts that "Wilton North" will look the same in a month or even a week from now and counsels patience, pointing to his experience as producer of "Late Night with David Letterman." " 'Letterman' took almost two years to find its audience," says Sand. But while "Wilton North" looks for its audience, will the skittish Fox network give the show the time to find itself? Says Sand, "The commitment I have from Fox is that they're behind us 100 percent."

Speaking of David Letterman, Hotline recently asked the acerbic late-night host if he had ever reduced a guest to tears on the air. "Unfortunately, some people have left the studio crying," says Dave, "but mostly they've been in the audience."

Is 'Mount Royal' More Than 'Dynasty' Clone?

By Bob Remington

It's being called a Canadian "Dynasty," but don't tell that to Robert Lantos.

Lantos, executive producer and creator of "Mount Royal," insists that the 17-part series is not a clone of any existing formula. Those expecting a primetime soap, he says, will be disappointed.

"This is not a Harlequin Romance," says Lantos. "People compare it to 'Dallas' or 'Dynasty' because it involves a wealthy family, but that is where the similarities end. It is not an 'internal' show like 'Dallas,' which relies on family intrigue. Ours is very much an 'external' show. There are five radically different characters in the family, and that gives us access to five radically different worlds. It is not a carbon copy of any existing format."

"Mount Royal" (Sunday nights on CTV), centres around the fictional Valeur family, a wealthy clan who reside in the old-money enclave of Montreal from which the series takes its name. The real Mount Royal has historically been populated by wealthy Canadian industrialists. It was once estimated that the 50 families who formed the core of the Mount Royal elite controlled two-thirds of Canada's wealth.

It is this backdrop that Lantos, of Alliance Entertainment (the producers of "Night Heat"), has chosen for "Mount Royal." As befits its namesake, the 17-part TV series has an American-sized budget of $17 million, making it the most expensive series ever produced in Canada.

SOAP OPERA WEEK

These star-crossed lovers may finally be reunited

By Kimberly Redmond

It burns me up that on "Days of Our Lives" the writers have separated Patch (Stephen Nichols) and Kayla (Mary Beth Evans). Will these two ever get back together? – B.M., Houston, Texas

Stephen Nichols

At the time of this writing, it seemed that the writers were bringing Patch and Kayla back together, but there are never any guaranties in soapdom. The powers that be on "DOOL" aren't too disturbed that fans were upset about the breakup; it means that they will continue to watch the soap to find out if they get back together.

Please tell me something about Don Fischer. Even though he portrays Geoffrey McGrath on "One Life to Live," I never see anything printed about him. – J.N., Nashville, Tenn.

Fischer joined "OLTL" last summer to create the role of Geoffrey, the illegitimate member of the Sanders family. Before that, he appeared briefly on "Guiding Light" in the role of Cat. On Broadway, he appeared in "A Little Family Business" with Angela Lansbury. At Circle in the Square in New York City, he appeared in Tina Howe's "Coastal Disturbances."

Can you give me an address where I can write to Constance Ford, who portrays Ada Hobson on "Another World"? – R.S., Phillipsburg, N.J.

Constance Ford

The correct address is: Constance Ford, c/o "Another World," NBC-TV, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, NY 10019.

ASK ME ABOUT TV

Vivien Leigh turned in some impressive film roles

By Toni D'Amato

Can you tell me anything about Vivien Leigh, who played Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone with the Wind"? - J.D., Galix, Va.

Vivien Leigh

Born Vivien Mary Hartley on Nov. 5, 1913, this actress died in 1967. She had one daughter, Suzanne Holman, through her marriage to barrister Herbert Leigh Holman, which lasted from 1932 to 1937. She married actor Laurence Olivier in 1940 and they divorced 20 years later. Although Leigh fought a battle against manic-depressive tendencies, she was able to deliver Academy Award-winning performances in "Gone With the Wind" (1939) and "A Streetcar Named Desire" (1951). She also starred in "Waterloo Bridge" (1940) and "That Hamilton Woman" (1941). Her last film was "Ship of Fools" (1965).

I'd like to know what happened to Van Williams, who starred in "The Green Hornet." - R.K.W., Kansas City, Kan.

Before beginning his acting career, Williams operated a salvage business and skin-diving school in Hawaii. He was discovered by a producer and encouraged to take a screen test, and was cast in a General Electric Theater drama. Next, the actor won a contract with Warner Brothers and was cast in the TV series "Bourbon Street Beat" and "Surfside Six." He went on to play opposite Walter Brennan in "The Tycoon" before playing the hero in "The Green Hornet."

When his acting career slowed down, Williams turned to other interests, including real estate and law enforcement supplies. It is reported that he turned down a role on "Falcon Crest" so he could concentrate on these interests.

Is it true that Martin Sheen had a heart attack some years back? He doesn't seem to have stopped working at all. - E.P., Johnstown, Pa.

Sheen had a heart attack while filming "Apocalypse Now" (1979), but resumed his career soon afterwards.

PBS's 'Television' Will Look At The Roots Of TV

By Jon Burlingame

HOLLYWOOD — "Television," a new eight-part series, focuses on the enormous impact the tube has had on all of us. It debuts on most PBS stations Monday, Jan. 25. (Check local listings.) That it has taken this long for such a retrospective is no surprise to writer and co-producer Michael Winship, however.

"It would have been impossible for the commercial networks to do it on any wide-ranging scale because of their competitiveness," he says. "They've all done anniversary programs, but none ofthem has ever attempted to tackle the whole business. As for public television, one of the things that has precluded it for so long was the enormous expense. We estimated that to do it from scratch would have cost around $10 million."

Winship and his producing partners went to a pre-existing source for about a third of their material: England's Granada TV series "Television," which Winship describes as the "bedrock" of the American series. By doing so, they only had to spend about $800,000 in production costs on this side of the Atlantic.

Most of "Television" 's eight hours focuses on program genres (live TV and sports, comedy, drama, light entertainment, news). One program covers the race to invent TV, and a concluding hour looks at the medium's responsibility.

Chapel Lands A Key 'OLTL' Sweeps Role

By Connie Passalacqua

February sweeps will soon be upon us, and rumors have been flying about the casting of dance hall hostess Blaze in "One Life to Live" 's upcoming and highly touted back-in-time remote. Nowcomes word that she'll definitely be played by Loyita Chapel (formerly Judy on "The Young and the Restless"). Chapel is also the real-life wife of Emmy winner Bob Woods, who is finally coming backto "OLTL" this month as Bo Buchanan — after a long courtship. But that's not the only casting news:

* Mark Pinter (formerly Brian McColl on "ATWT") has joined "Loving" as mystery man Dan Hollister. He's stirring up trouble for amnesiac former priest Jim Vochek (Peter Davies) and his wife Shana (Susan Keith).

* The key role of Pamela Conrad on "Santa Barbara" has been taken over by Marj Dusay (formerly Myrna Clegg on "Capitol"). Dusay was the show's first choice for Pamela, but she was busy with other obligations when the character was scheduled to make her debut, so the part was played — and not too badly at that — by English film star Shirley Anne Field.

Pro Football Players Can Only Sit And Wait

By Marty Linehan

Pro football fans get a day off as the conference championship teams take their annual Sunday off before Super Bowl XXII. Not that the players get much chance to rest, what with interviews with thousands of newspaper people — some inquiring about such important matters as what the players eat for breakfast or the size of their wives' shoes.

This day off may be a good idea for the game's ancillary people, but breaking a team's routine after it has played almost every Sunday for the past four months has been questioned in many quarters.

Former Washington Redskins coach George Allen even blamed the two-week wait for his team's loss in Super Bowl VII, when the Redskins bowed to the Miami Dolphins 14-7. Allen claimed his team was bothered by too many distractions during that extra week off.

* This week, football fans will have to settle for basketball and golf. On Sunday, Jan. 24, the finals of the Bob Hope Chrysler Classic come from Palm Desert, Calif., on NBC. This is one of the most watched tournaments on television. Needless to say, all the top pros will be there. When Bob plays, everybody plays.

* In basketball, NBC will present an Atlantic Coast Conference game, with North Carolina State hosting North Carolina, on Sunday, Jan. 24. CBS has a top Big East clash when Georgetown visits the Carrier Dome in Syracuse to take on the Orangemen. This one will be a battle of big men.

Not to be outdone, ABC has a Big Ten game on tap. The Wolverines of Michigan take on the Indiana Hoosiers. Michigan has a strong team, and some experts, including ABC's commentator Dick Vitale,think the Wolverines will end up in the final two — playing Syracuse for the national title. ABC will follow that game with Temple playing the University of Nevada at Las Vegas.

* On Jan. 25, ESPN's Monday night basketball double-heade has Providence playing powe ful Pittsburgh, followed by Big Ten face-off featuring Iow vs. Wisconsin. On Friday, Ja 29, TBS hasa pro basketba double-header with the Bosto Celtics playing the Detroit Pi tons, followed by the Atlan Hawks vs. the Los Angel Lakers.

* For bowlers, the $200,00 Don Carter Greater New O leans Classic Open comes fro the Don Carter's All Star Lane in Harvey, La., on Saturday Jan. 30, on ABC.

More War

Robert Mitchum, Jane Seymour, John Gielgud and Michael Woods are the stars of "War and Remembrance," the sequel to the 1983 miniseries "The Winds of War." The upcoming miniseries, which will air during the 1988-89 season on ABC, is set in Europe during World War II. It was filmed in 10 countries over a period of 21 months.

Hate on Trial

Lindsay Wagner and Randy Quaid will star in "Hate on Trial," an upcoming ABC movie about a mother who discovers that her son's junior high school teacher is an anti-Semitic bigot — and therest of the town doesn't seem to care. Wagner plays the mother, and Quaid plays the teacher. The movie will air later this spring.

• FIVE-O HO! Challenge: Place consecutive numbers 13 through 20 in blanks of the square at right so that numbers on each of the four sides total 50. Three of the numbers — 18, 19 and 20 — are already in place. How quickly can you add the remaining four?

Remember, each of the sides is to total 50.

Top, across: 15, 18, 17; middle: 19, 13; bottom: 16, 14, 20.

• SUM POEM! Five and one, five and one, and then five hundred; If this is not clear, then someone has blundered. How is this explained?

Roman equivalents of numbers rearranged form word VIVID.
