Reagan To Give Final State Of Union Speech

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is heading to Capitol Hill for his last State of the Union address, attempting to set an upbeat tone but offering no sweeping proposals for his remaining months in office.

Reagan appears before a joint session of the House and Senate for tonight's 9 p.m. EST speech, which will be nationally televised.

The president, aides say, will stick to tried-and-true themes from his seven-year tenure. He'll challenge

Congress to drop partisan bickering and address what he considers the unfinished business of his administration.

But there will be no mention of the Iran-Contra affair that rocked Reagan's administration in 1987 and threatened his legacy.

Offering a taste of his remarks in his Saturday radio address, Reagan struck a nostalgic note.

"The State of the Union is the only statement that the Constitution itself requires the president to give," he said. "This will be my seventh time.

And let me tell you, the thrill of standing in that place where so many great presidents have stood ... never goes away."

One White House official familiar with the speech said it reflects Reagan's approach to his final year at the nation's helm, calling it "upbeat, but realistic." The official spoke on condition of anonymity.

"It's not conciliatory, but it's not drawing a line in the sand, either," the official said. "It just tries to say that even though Congress and the president have their differences, they can work together to get things done."

Another official, also speaking anonymously, said it would be inappropriate for Reagan to offer "wild and exotic" policy proposals in his final year.

"You're completing an agenda that spans eight years. You're trying to put it in place," the official said.

In his Saturday remarks, Reagan said he wants to make sure the nation preserves "the economic growth of the past five years."

Reagan will challenge Congress to revise its erratic budget process and will press for cuts in federal spending. Yet he'll also pledge to put more money into public education — nearly $21 billion — and suggest new initiatives to battle illegal drugs.

"I will mention ways to raise the quality of our schools," Reagan said. "But I will remind Congress that the most important thing is not to throw quantities of money at education but to tie funding to results and to have a commitment to quality and to state and local control of schools."

Last year, Reagan proposed slashing school spending and targeted anti-drug programs for cutbacks.

To spur budget reform, Reagan will criticize the last-minute spending bill approved by Congress just before Christmas, a 2,000-page document that contained surprises discovered only after it was signed.

Reagan said he'll speak on cutting the federal budget deficit. "And I may have a surprise, too, a way right now for Congress to show it's serious about putting the government's house in order," Reagan said without elaborating.

Survivor Says Supply Plane Used Base Manned By CIA

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A crewman of a Contra supply plane shot down by Sandinista troops said the aircraft took off from a CIA-manned base in Honduras, and the Nicaraguan government claimed the pilot worked for the CIA.

President Daniel Ortega said late Sunday that the statements by Alejandro Sanchez Herrera proved Honduras is violating provisions of a Central American peace plan by allowing anti-Sandinista rebels to operate out of Honduras.

The Defense Ministry said four crewmen — three Nicaraguans and a Colombian pilot — were killed when the vintage DC-6 supply plane was shot down by a Soviet-made, surface-to-air missile over southern Nicaragua late Saturday.

There were no Americans on board, according to the government and the U.S.-backed Contras.

Sanchez Herrera, a Nicaraguan, said the pilot was known to the other crew members only as "Richard." The Defense Ministry said the pilot worked for the CIA. Sanchez Herrera was allowed to talk to reporters Sunday while under military custody in the town of San Carlos, a few miles from the crash site.

Sanchez Herrera said two men parachuted from the plane with a supply of food and ammunition for the Contras before it was shot down. He didn't identify them but said he believed the men had been trained in the United States in the handling of explosives.

He told reporters the plane took off from a CIA-manned base in Swan Island in Honduras and that about 30 people from the CIA directed the mission from the island. Swan Island has been used for decades by the American military to monitor shipping and military activity in the area.

Spokesmen at the State Department were not immediately available Sunday night to comment on the charges against the CIA.

Addressing leaders of the National Farmers and Ranchers Union, Ortega said Sanchez Herrera's statement is proof that Honduras is allowing the United States to use its territory in activities against Nicaragua.

"President Reagan should reflect over this, since his policy is being shot down just like this plane was shot down ... Even though they may approve more funds (for the Contras), they will never be able to defeat our people," Ortega said, referring to Reagan's efforts to get Congress to approve more Contra aid.

"The (peace) accords continue to be violated, because they continue to use the territory of Central American countries — in this case Honduran territory — to sow death in Nicaragua," Ortega said.

The peace plan which Ortega and the presidents of Honduras, El Salvador, Guatemala and Costa Rica signed last August prohibits the signatory nations to allow insurgents of other countries to operate on their territory.

Shultz Says INF Treaty Strengthens Security

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz assured the Senate today the Reagan administration would "react vigorously" if the Soviet Union appeared to be violating a treaty banning U.S. and Soviet intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

Shultz led off the administration's drive for Senate approval of the treaty with a 48-page statement. It declared that the security of the United States and its NATO allies would be bolstered by the treaty signed last month by President Reagan and Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev at their Washington summit.

Critics have questioned the wisdom of the proposed withdrawal of American Pershing II and ground-launched cruise missiles from Western Europe's nuclear shield, and contend that the treaty's safeguards against cheating are inadequate.

Shultz, testifying before the opening session of Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearings, said the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces or INF treaty actually strengthens U.S. and allied security.

"It enhances international stability. It may be opening a new chapter in arms control — the beginning of reductions," Shultz said.

The treaty provides that within three years of ratification, both countries would finish eliminating all their nuclear missiles with ranges of 315 to 3,125 miles. These weapons account for about 4 percent of their nuclear armories.

While Shultz was testifying before the Foreign Relations panel, which has legal authority to act on the treaty, Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci was making his case for ratification before the Senate Armed Services Committee, which plays an influential advisory role.

The treaty's fate ultimately will be decided by the full Senate, probably in early spring.

Shultz acknowledged that the treaty might not contain air-tight assurances against Soviet violations. Reagan has repeatedly accused Moscow of violating past arms control agreements.

"No treaty in and of itself can fully guarantee compliance with its terms," Shultz told a packed hearing room in the modernistic Hart Senate office building.

"No responsible U.S. official can tell you that we do not need to consider possible cheating," he said.

Shultz offered assurances, however, that the Soviets would be called to task.

"We must react vigorously to questionable Soviet activities," he said. "We have to have the will power to press them on our concerns."

If the administration detected suspicious activity it would call immediately for a meeting of a special verification commission established by the treaty, Shultz said.

"If we detect a Soviet action that seems in violation of their INF treaty obligations, we will press them on it," Shultz said.

Expansion Sought At Carver Library

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

Due to an increase in use and to meet the needs brought by expected future growth, officials of Sheppard Memorial Library want to expand and renovate the George Washington Carver Library.

"It's one of the major items we're looking to address in this upcoming year," said Willie Nelms, director of libraries.

Located at 618 W. 14th Ave., the Carver Branch Library has served the library needs of the west Greenville community since its opening in 1962.

Brought into the Greenville library system in 1967, the branch consists of 2,534 square feet and has shelf space for approximately 25,000 volumes.

According to Nelms, the branch has experienced growing community support with circulation in 1986, twice the amount six years ago.

"The branch has begun to realize its potential," Nelms said.

He said the proposed expansion of the branch would enclose some, if not all, of the existing 1,600 square-foot courtyard area. Bringing the full courtyard area under the roof of the library would increase space at the facility by approximately 63 percent.

He said the additional space would probably be designated for children's programming, a major function of the branch.

He said many school groups, community organizations and child care centers visit the Carver branch for planned programs.

In addition, Nelms said officials are hoping to add new furniture and carpet to the facility, which hasn't

Charles McLawhorn Files As State Senate Hopeful

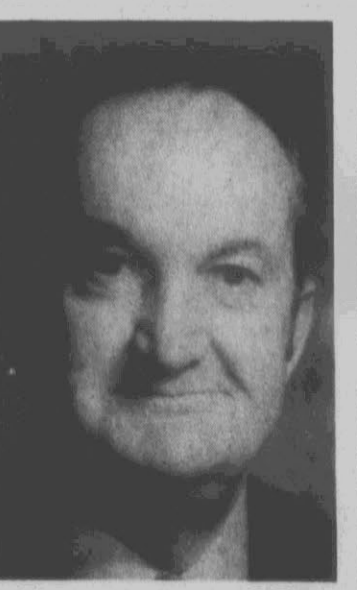

Charles McLawhorn of Winterville formally announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the 9th Senatorial District seat today, with talks at the Martin County Courthouse in Williamston at 10 a.m. and at the Pitt County Courthouse in Greenville at 12:15 p.m.

He was scheduled to make a similar talk at the Beaufort County Courthouse in Washington at 2 p.m.

"I am a candidate for the North Carolina Senate," McLawhorn said, "because I have been encouraged by a number of you, because I have given a great deal of thought to the situation we have in Raleigh, and because I feel that I have what it takes to do the job."

According to McLawhorn, "I am not inclined to run a negative campaign ... to criticize my opponents or to run down my detractors. I want to run a positive campaign, to talk about what's good in eastern North Carolina, and to talk about ways we can make eastern North Carolina better."

"We have so many things going for us," McLawhorn said, such as the medical school at East Carolina Uni-we are today and one that will continue to furnish a foundation for the future if we will keep our minds open to new farming opportunities; three community colleges that are recognized around the state for their standards of excellence; and most importantly, our people ... people who are willing to work hard and study hard, people who will stick with a job until the job gets done, people who get up early in the morning and work until late ... to finish the job."

McLawhorn said 30 years ago the area didn't have the medical school, the airport or the community colleges. "But we had the people, and that's why I want to build my campaign around the people. Because if I know you like I believe I do, I think I can count on you to do what's best for your family and your neighbor's family."

"I believe that every child is entitled to have the opportunity and encouragement to achieve to the very best of his or her ability, and I believe that the Legislature should be more concerned about what happens in the

Registration

Registration for the next fall's afternoon nursery program will continue through Feb. 12 at Our Redeemer Lutheran Church, 1801 S. Elm St.

The afternoon program will meet Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.

The program is designed to provide learning enrichment for the pre-kindergarten child through readings, creative dramatics, arts and crafts, music, science experiments and other activities.

For further information call 756-2065 a.m., 758-5621 p.m.

to his addiction and arrest. He emphasized that drugs lead to crime and teachers should be aware of the problem.

Forestry Meeting

A forestry meeting will be held Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 201 of the Pitt County Office Building.

Jim Kea, area forestry agent for N.C. Extension Service, and Rick Hamilton, extension forestry specialist, will discuss reforestation, assistance programs and forest taxation.

Classes Offered

Two classes on application of agricultural substances will be taught Wednesday at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. in room 201 of the Pitt County Office Building.

The classes will provide opportunities for private applicators to obtain recertification. The classes are open to those whose last names begin with letters A-F. For further information contact Sam Uzzell at 830-6374.

Class Visitors

Bob Daily, health and physical education coordinator with Pitt County schools, recently visited Vickie Biagini's fifth-grade physical education class at Stokes Elementary School. Daily taught the class a gymnastic routine that will be performed in the school's physical education show March 1.

Renee Walden, nutritionist with the Pitt County schools, recently visited Billie Norman's class. Ms. Walden discussed the four basic food groups and had a tasting party with students. The visit concluded a unit on nutrition.

Campaign Rally

The Pitt County Mass Choir and the Craven County Interdenominational Mass Choir will blend their voices in "Campaign Songs" at the Jesse Jackson campaign rally Wednesday at Cornerstone Missionary Baptist Church, Johnny Wooten, director of both choirs, said.

The songs, written and arranged by Wooten, have been adopted by Jackson's official campaign staff and will be used throughout the campaign, he said. Molly Small and the Celestials also will be featured in the program, which begins at 8 p.m.

Special Speaker

Greenville Mayor Ed Carter recently visited students in the Triad Enrichment Program at W.H. Robinson School. He spoke to students on the value of education and he answered questions about city government.

Quiz Bowl

Sheppard Memorial Library will sponsor its ninth annual Quiz Bowl on Feb. 2, beginning at 9 a.m. This question-and-answer academic competition will be held in the City Council chambers on the third floor of the Municipal Building, Fifth and Washington streets.

Participating in the Quiz Bowl will be teams from Farmville Central, Ayden-Grifton, North Pitt, J.H. Rose, and D.H. Conley high schools. The winning team will advance to a district Quiz Bowl in March. District winners compete in the state finals in April.

For more information call the library at 830-4580.

King Honored

Sadie Saulter School honored Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. with an assembly Friday, 22. Ed Carter, Mayor of Greenville, spoke to the student body about his impressions of the late Dr. King.

Top Teacher

Mrs. Tiffney Saieed, a first grade teacher, has been chosen teacher of the year at Sadie Saulter School for the second year.

Mrs. Saieed, an Avery County native, graduated from Newland High School and earned her bachelor's degree in primary education from Appalachian State University. She is attending graduate school at East Carolina University and is a recent recipient of a mini-grant from the Pitt County Schools Educational Foundation.

Larceny Charge

Greenville police arrested Benjamin Wilson Jr., 49, of Apartment 45, 1900 Charles St. on a larceny by employee charge Sunday.

Officer L.C. Overby said Wilson was charged in connection with the theft of $62 worth of oysters and chicken from Parker's Barbecue Restaurant on S. Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 10:51 p.m.

Break-In Reported

Greenville police said a break-in was reported at a 503 W. Third St., apartment about 3:58 a.m. today.

Investigators said a television set, telephone and clock, with a combined value of $400, were reported taken.

Judge Dismisses Suit By Doctor

A civil suit seeking more than $30 million in damages from Roy H. Park Broadcasting — owner of television station WNCT in Greenville — and Roy Hardee, WNCT-TV's news director, was dismissed in Pitt County Superior Court Friday.

The suit, filed in December 1986 by Dr. Joseph M. Ward, a Pitt County physician, charged that on several instances — beginning in December 1985 — the television station aired news reports about malpractice action brought against Ward and others and stories concerning a former University Nursing Home resident, which were "false and/or distorted and/or misleading and which also defamed University Nursing Center and/or the plaintiff (Ward)."

Judge James Lewellyn dismissed Ward's complaint against Roy H. Park Broadcasting and Hardee, saying that some of the broadcasts, including those of December 1985, were "absolutely privileged" in that they were reporting on duly constituted judicial proceedings, and that the other broadcasts, including those of February 1986, were "qualified privileged" in that they were reporting on matters of public concern.

The judge's order also said that Ward failed to show the broadcasts were made with malice.

Ward still has suits pending against The Daily Reflector and television station WTVD in Durham in connection with their use of similar news reports.

Theme Selected

The staff at Elmhurst School has adopted the theme "Beary Good News," which was presented by the guidance committee. The theme allows staff and students to focus on positive things in the school, home and community.

As part of the plan, each class will feature a Student of the Week. Students will be selected as they demonstrate positive attitudes.

Correction

A child in a photo featured on the front page of the Sunday Daily Reflector should have been identified as Katie Haven, 6. Katie was dressed as a dog to participate in Reading Day activities Saturday at Carolina East Mall. Sunday's edition incorrectly identified her as Connie Haven, 7.

Bethel Activities

Gigi Walter of The Daily Reflector recently visited Denise Moore's third grade class at Bethel Elementary School. She explained the procedure for printing the newspaper and also talked about the types of information acquired by reading the newspaper.

Teachers of school recently attended a drug awareness workshop, sponsored by the Students Against Substance Abuse committee (SASA) and conducted by Jim Copeland of the Pitt County Sheriff's Department. The teachers viewed a filmstrip on drug abuse and viewed the slide "How to Tell If a Kid Is On Drugs and What To Do."

Andy Weaver, an inmate from the Martin Correctional Institute, also spoke to the group. He discussed his experiences as a drug user, which led

Farm Scene

By LEROY JAMES

The Southeastern agricultural picture looks brighter for 1988. Farm land values are on the rise. Inflation is slowing while interest rates are falling. Lenders are again soliciting agricultural customers. Agricultural exports are increasing. Some commodity prices are rising and some production expenses are declining.

On top of that, quotas and support prices for both flue-cured tobacco and peanuts, two of the most profitable crops in the Southeast, will be increased for 1988.

Speakers at the recent Economic and Agricultural Outlook Conference left those attending with feelings of cautious optimism; but they warned that all sectors of Southeastern agriculture are not destined for improvements in the coming year. Poultry, turkey and swine producers, and maybe some beef cattle producers may see their profit potential decline.

Charles Moore, specialist in charge of the department of economics and business at North Carolina State University, believes that "1986 may have been the bottom slide in the farm economy" especially in North Carolina.

He sees a period of stability emerging in Southeastern agriculture and across the nation.

Although ending stocks of soybeans are down for the third year in a row, Moore says any price improvements will be contingent on production problems with our American competitors and on next year's U.S. crop.

One especially bright spot in the Southeast is cotton. Acres are up, yields are up and the price is up, while ending stocks are declining. The outlook continues to look positive with anticipated increases in both domestic use and in exports.

Flue-cured tobacco farmers were pleased to learn in mid-December that their national average support price would be slightly increased and that their quota would be boosted by 6 percent to 8 percent.

These increases will place the average support price at $1.442 per pound and the basic quota at 755 million pounds. With about 50 million pounds of undermarketing from the 1987 crop, flue-cured growers will have an effective quota of 805 million pounds.

APPEAL FOR CHRIS

The Ayden Ministerial Association is again appealing for donations for Christopher Ray McLawhorn, an Ayden 3-year-old who has a degenerative neurological disorder.

Chris, son of Donnie and Janie McLawhorn, is diagnosed as having metachromatocleukodystrophy. In September 1987, Hotline appealed for donations for his family's travel to Baltimore, where he was to be evaluated for a bone marrow transplant. He was turned down. Since returning home, his condition has improved and, having previously lost down to 16 pounds, he has gained to 33 pounds and is now able to raise his head, something he could not do a few months ago.

Anyone wishing to help the family with their ongoing expenses may send donations to the Ayden Ministerial Association, c/o the Rev. Lynwood Walters, First Baptist Church, 303 E. Third St., Ayden, N.C. 28513.

THE PROPHYLAXIS

No matter how expert or diligent you are at bathroom dental gymnastics, there's no way it will replace a periodic professional cleaning. We call it a prophylaxis.

Normally, the dental hygienist will perform this task. Its purpose is not only to shine up your pearly whites, but more importantly, to remove the hardened plaque, called calculus that you can't get at. Most of it clings to the base of your teeth at or under the gumline.

The calculus removal is done either by hand scraping or with a far-out machine called the Cavitron that vibrates like a tuning fork. When it is all removed, your teeth will be polished with an abrasive material called "pumice".

How often should you have a professional cleaning? About once every three to six months is average. It is based on your dental history and home care.

Call our office for an appointment for a professional cleaning. Always remember, there is no replacement like your real teeth.

NOTE:
We welcome new patients, both children and adults.

Compromise

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Champion International officials say they will seek a compromise with Tennessee officials which would pave the way for the EPA to grant a wastewater discharge permit which they say would allow the paper mill to survive.

Champion president Oliver Blackwell said he planned to meet today in Nashville with James Word of the Tennessee Department of Health and Environment.

The EPA has drafted a wastewater discharge permit that calls for the mill to substantially reduce the amount of color, chloroform and toxicity it puts into the Pigeon River, which flows into Tennessee.

REAL ESTATE FACTS

by: Rudy Schulte

WHAT'S IN A PRICE?

Whether buying or selling a home price will certainly be one of your strongest considerations. But, how do buyers and sellers arrive at the final sale price?

Initially, the home's "listed" price is set by the home sellers. Using a "Market Analysis", provided by their real estate agent, the sellers are able to see the prices of other similar homes which are presently on the market "For Sale". This information shows the prices of homes which will be competing for the same buyers.

The Market Analysis also shows the prices of similar homes which have already sold. This is a good indicator of the price other buyers have been willing to pay for like homes.

In some cases the Market Analysis may also show homes which have expired without selling. Their prices are an indicator of what buyers are NOT willing to pay.

From this analysis, sellers may choose to price their home at a "fair" price, one which is an accurate reflection of current home values in their area. If the sellers choose to price their home higher, chances are they will encounter buyer resistance to the higher price. Buyer resistance to price occurs when buyers, who shop for a home by comparison with other similar homes, recognize a home as being priced higher than the market. Pricing too high may result in low offers from buyers, or no offers at all.

Proper exposure and a fair asking price... the two reasons your property will sell quickly and for the best price. If you're planning on selling your property, now or in the future, call me at 756-2121.

Gunmen Kidnap Colombia's Chief Prosecutor

By JAVIER BAENA
Associated Press Writer
BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A band of gunmen today kidnapped Carlos Mauro Hoyos, the government's chief prosecutor, and killed his two bodyguards, authorities said. The government blamed drug traffickers.

One report said the prosecutor was wounded in the throat.

Hoyos investigates wrongdoing in the government and judiciary and recently ordered an inquiry into last month's release from prison of reputed cocaine baron Jorge Luis Ochoa Vasquez, who the United States has been trying to extradite.

Medellin Mayor William Jaramillo Gomez said Hoyos was abducted while nearing the Medellin airport for a flight to the capital about 200 miles to the southeast. The gunmen, in two jeeps and a car, attacked Hoyos' Mercedes Benz, in which the bodies of his bodyguards were found, the mayor said.

A policeman who was on duty at the airport said Hoyos appeared to have been hit twice in the throat by bullets that riddled his car, the mayor of the nearby town of Rionegro, Digo Murillo, told the Caracol radio network.

The airport is 30 miles north of Medellin, where Hoyos had been investigating Ochoa's release.

Jaramillo Gomez said police found one of Hoyos' shoes and his blood-stained jacket in the Mercedes. Police and troops were deployed to search for the prosecutor and his abductors.

In Bogota, the president of the Council of State, Carmelo Martinez, told Caracol radio the kidnappers "can only be the drug traffickers the prosecutor has strongly condemned."

Hoyos recently ordered the investigation of two judges and five government officials for suspected involvement in Ochoa's release. As a result, the judges and four of the officials were fired. The fifth, Justice Minister Enrique Low Murta, remains under investigation.

Ochoa was released from a Bogota prison Dec. 31 after serving less than half of a 20-month sentence for illegally importing fighting bulls.

The most powerful drug cartel in Colombia is based in Medellin, and U.S. authorities say Ochoa is its second-in-command.

Hoyos' abduction came a day after drug traffickers who kidnapped the son of former President Misael Pastrana Borrero demanded that author Gabriel Garcia Marquez help mediate the son's release.

The abductors of Andres Pastrana, the Conservative Party mayoral candidate in Bogota, on Sunday broke off talks with the former president and rejected mediation by Cardinal Alfonso Lopez Trujillo.

Andres Pastrana, 34, a lawyer and journalist, was kidnapped Jan. 18.

In a communique given to the newspapers and radio in Medellin, the group said Garcia Marquez was one of 12 people it demanded for negotiations. The Colombian-born writer lives in Mexico City. He won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1982. It was not immediately possible to contact him for reaction.

The group, which calls itself the "The Extraditable Ones," rejected the Roman Catholic cardinal because "we don't have any knowledge that he was opposed to the handover of Colombians to the United States."

The drug traffickers are urging the government to halt any plans to extradite alleged members of the cartel to the United States, where they face criminal charges. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration estimated that the cartel controls 80 percent of the cocaine entering the United States.

The communique said that they decided to put a stop to direct negotiations with the former president and added, "we only will accept one or many" candidates, among them writers, journalists, members of the Congress and lawyers, most of them opposed to the extradition treaty.

In addition to Garcia Marquez, the kidnapers demanded writer Gustavo Alvarez Gardeazabal and journalists Dario Arismendi Posada, Enrique Santos Calderon and Fidel Cano Izaza, of El Espectador of Bogota.

The Pastrana family said Sunday night in a statement that they accepted the journalist Enrique Santos Calderon as one of the mediators and promised to consider the names of others proposed by the captors.

Relations between the United States and Colombia have been strained since Ochoa's release.

Colombia has pledged to extradite accused cartel members to the United States.

Library Expansion

been renovated since its opening 26 years ago.

"It's very much an early '60s institutional look, and we want to do some things to produce a warm and inviting type of environment," he said.

During its Jan. 14 meeting, the City Council unanimously approved the appropriation of $1,250 to provide for a preliminary plan of the renovation.

The architectural firm doing the plan, Dudley, Shoe and Ellinwood, will also provide a cost estimate for the project.

Nelms said the cost of renovating the branch could range from $75,000 to $150,000 but he said a possible state grant could pay for some of that cost.

The last session of the North Carolina General Assembly approved $1,250,000 during each year of the 1988-1989 biennium for the construction and renovation of public library facilities.

These grants, to be administered by the N.C. Department of Cultural Resources, Division of State Library, are 50 percent matching funds.

Nelms said the Carver Branch project could be considered for some of the appropriated grant money, with applications to be submitted during this year's first quarter.

Although previously perceived as a youth-oriented library, Carver is drawing an increasingly large number of adults into the facility, according to Alan Bailey, Carver Branch librarian.

He said rapid growth in the medical district, and an increase in the number of businesses near Pitt Memorial Hospital, are bringing more adults into the library.

"A lot of new people are coming from the hospital who stop by to and from work," he said. "We're also getting a lot of people who come from the businesses from around Stan-tonsburg Road."

"I feel we're in a really good location," he added. "The growth for the area is unlimited and we're in a perfect position to supply the library needs of the people in this area."

City Council member Rufus Huggins said the expansion and renovation of the branch is a good idea that is long overdue.

"I greatly feel the amount of use of the facility after the expansion will more than justify its cost," he said.

Mayor Ed Carter said he thoroughly supports the proposed project.

"In addition to the significant activities and programs going on out there, the branch also serves as a social and cultural center for the youth of that community," he said.

Israeli Leaders Split On New Peace Plan Proposed By Egypt's Mubarak

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres split today on whether to endorse Egypt's new peace initiative and a moratorium on Jewish settlement building in the occupied territories.

There were also reports of scattered anti-occupation violence in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

And two liberal Israeli lawmakers charged in a report that soldiers have broken the bones of more than 200 Palestinians since the army began discouraging the use of live ammunition to quell unrest, relying more on physical force.

President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt has called on Palestinians to observe a six-month ban on anti-Israeli violence, as well as on settlement building in the territories. He says such conditions would set the stage for an international peace conference.

"An international conference will not serve the cause of peace," Shamir told reporters today. "It will be a stage for anti-Israeli propaganda, and not a framework for serious negotiations between the parties. It will be an attempt to dictate, to impose solutions."

But Peres, a liberal rival of Shamir in the coalition government, welcomed the thrust of Mubarak's call.

"I welcome the Mubarak initiative as a step in the right direction," he said in a statement issued by the Foreign Ministry. "The call for an immediate end to all violent activity is most positive."

An official who spoke on condition of anonymity said Peres did not accept all points in Mubarak's plan. For example, he opposes creating "an international mechanism" — perhaps a greater U.N. presence — to safeguard and protect Palestinians living under occupation and does not accept language referring to Palestinian "political rights."

Cabinet Secretary Elyakim Rubenstein flew to the United States today for talks with U.S. officials, and Israel radio said he would give Shamir's response to recent Middle East peace proposals.

Meanwhile, the Arab-run Palestine Press Service reported disturbances in the West Bank and Gaza, saying one Palestinian was shot and wounded by a rubber bullet.

It said protesters burned tires and stoned soldiers in Hebron, 20 miles south of Jerusalem. The agency said high school students in Gaza City were also protesting. The army said it was checking the reports.

U.N. officials say 38 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli gunfire in a wave of violence that began Dec. 8 in the territories Israel seized in the 1967 Middle East War.

On Sunday, Mubarak sent Shamir a letter saying that an urgent solution had to be found for the occupied territories. Mubarak, who is due in Washington Tuesday, said he would present President Reagan with proposals to end unrest in the occupied territories and to launch peace negotiations.

Legislator Dan Meridor, a member of Shamir's right-wing Likud Bloc, said there was no connection between the Jewish settlements in the occupied territories and the disturbances.

He also warned that Israel would be setting a dangerous precedent by accepting Mubarak's proposal.

"No good will be done by telling Arabs who throw bottles, stones and knives they've succeeded in forcing Israel to change its policies," Meridor told Israel army radio. "If that happens and negotiations begin, every time the talks run into trouble the bottles, stones and knives will start up again."

Also today, two legislators belonging to the liberal Citizens' Rights Party, Yossi Sarid and Deddi Zucker, submitted to parliament a report on the tough measures instituted by the army to put an end to the disturbances.

The report said soldiers have beaten and broken arms, legs and other bones of more than 200 Palestinians since the army began beating protesters.

"The second most important objective," McLawnhorn said, "is economic development."

"We have been very fortunate in eastern North Carolina in supporting responsible industrial growth, in having companies that put more into our communities than they take out. But we have to do more," he emphasized.

"I intend to work with our industrial development commissions, our mayors and county commissioners in their efforts to attract small and large companies alike who are willing to come into our area and pay a range of wages and benefits that are consistent with the skills of our citizens who want to work."

And according to McLawnhorn, "I intend to continue my unqualified support of the growing Pitt-Greenville Airport as a key to quality growth and as a convenience to all of us."

But, McLawnhorn said, "Economic development which threatens the environment, which pollutes the air we breathe and poisons the water we drink, is no development at all. And so our third objective should be to stand guard against those companies and individuals who put profit ahead of the health and welfare of our citizens."

"I ask you to join me in my campaign for the Senate. I cannot do it without you. With you," McLawnhorn said, "we cannot fail."

McLawnhorn, a member of the Pitt County Board of Commissioners since December 1982 and chairman of the board last year, is a Pitt County native and graduate of Ayden High School. He attended Oak Ridge Military Institute and N.C. State University.

A farmer, McLawnhorn has served as president of the East Carolina Milk Producers Association, is a member of the Pitt County Farm Bureau, the North Carolina Farm Bureau Dairy Service Committee, and is a former director of the N.C. Milk Producers Federation.

A World War II U.S. Navy veteran, McLawnhorn served on the N.C. Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service Committee from 1977 to 1981 and has served on the Governor's Advisory Committee on Agriculture, Forestry and the Seafood Industry.

He is a member of the board of directors of Planters National Bank in Ayden, a director of the Ayden Council of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce and a member of Bethany Free Will Baptist Church.

McLawnhorn is married to the former Brownie Dail and they have three sons.

AT&T Closure Sets Challenge

North Carolina has become accustomed to new industries moving in and usually the news is greeted with pleasure in the communities affected.

There is the news on occasions that an industry is closing because of declining demand for its product. While such events have been duly reported, they have been far overshadowed by the influx of new industries into the state.

But when a plant such as American Telephone & Telegraph closes, as has been announced in Winston-Salem, it is a matter of concern.

AT&T announced it will close the operation because of deteriorating demand for communications equipment and new technology which made the operation surplus.

The impact on Winston-Salem will be major. The plant employs 3,300 people. Some will retire and others will find new positions in AT&T's operations. The fact remains, however, that a major payroll is lost to Winston-Salem — and that will also affect the state's economy.

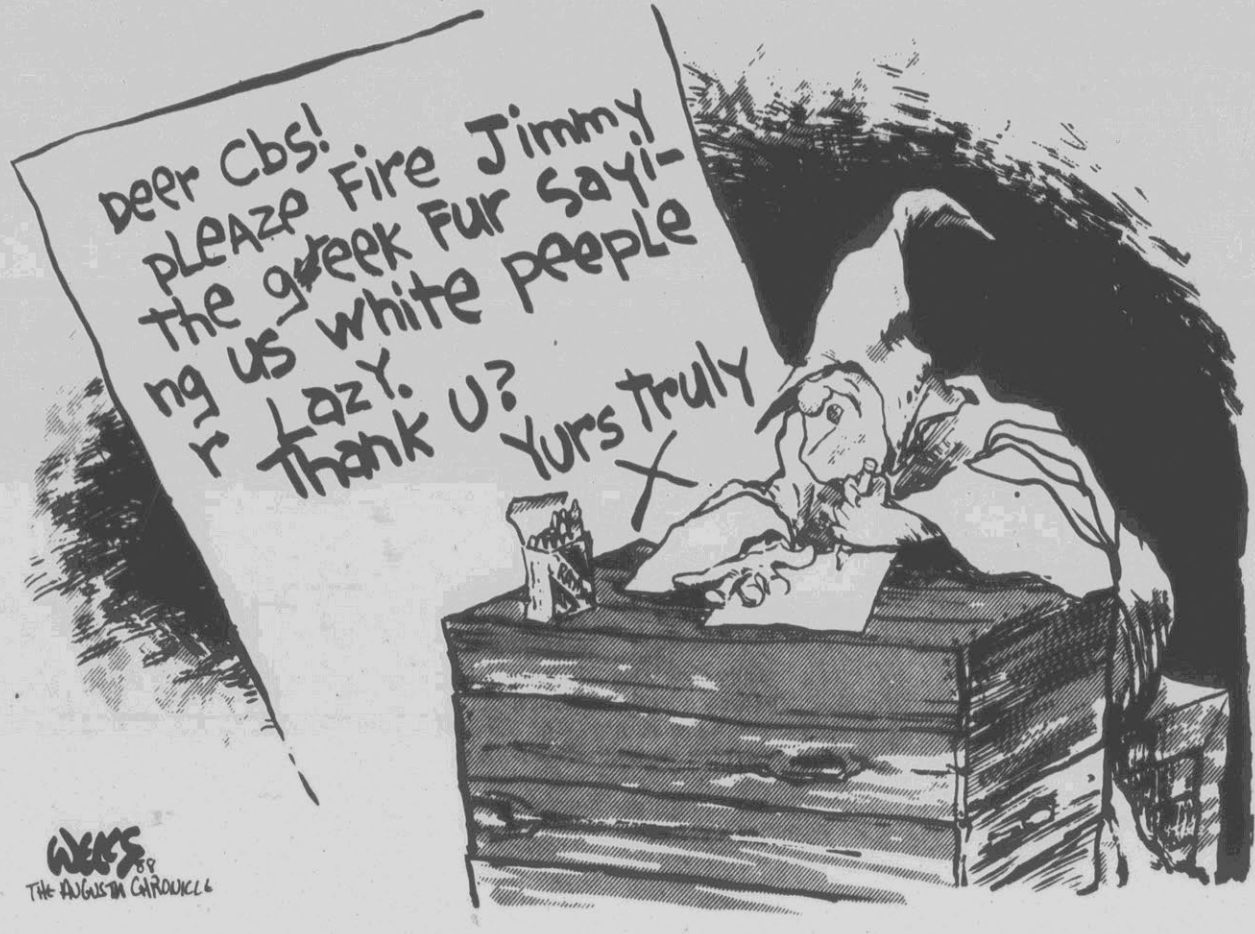

Winston-Salem had already been shaken by the RJR Nabisco, Inc. decision to move its corporate headquarters to Atlanta. Piedmont Aviation, which has its headquarters in Winston-Salem, has been acquired by USAir group — a move with potential implications on the city's employment situation.

The negative events offer a challenge to Winston-Salem's leadership. As a major North Carolina city the community has considerable resources to attract new business and industry. Facing such a challenge, Winston-Salem could emerge stronger economically than it has ever been.

North Carolina's port city of Wilmington can empathize with Winston-Salem. Many years ago it lost the Atlantic Coastline Railroad headquarters and a major stable payroll. Faced with a similar crisis, Wilmington's leaders developed strong economic development programs. The result was a thriving port and a healthy industrial employment picture.

Many of the nation's largest cities in the northeast saw the basic industries which had been their strength crumbling. They promoted major improvements to their central cities and aggressively pursued new business interests to turn the situation around.

Communities too often react to their problems only when a crisis faces them. But a crisis brings out an area's strengths and that is when necessary steps are taken to get back on track.

Public Forum

To the editor:

I couldn't help but wonder when I read Mike Strub's response to the article, "Greenville Makes Giant Strides..." (Public Forum, Jan. 17) Having spent most of my life in San Antonio, Texas, and now living in Washington, D.C., I wonder what Utopia Mr. Strub lived in before moving to Greenville. San Antonio, one of the largest cities in the United States, was used in the late 1960s as a training ground for Peace Corps volunteers bound for underdeveloped countries in Central America and Africa. The city still faces poverty in many segments of the population. In Washington, D.C., some members of the Congress today pay male and female college graduates under $15,000 a year. Indeed, most of the large cities I have visited, including New York City, Los Angeles, and Boston have their share of provinciality.

I am not a full-time resident of Greenville. Because my wife is a native, I visit often. My exposure to the city's people and geography has been positive during the past four years. In Greenville, I see a small town caught in the winds of change. There is a tension inherent in change that causes people to react; it forces them to ignore, adopt, or resist that change. Mr. Strub's raises problems that no doubt exist in Greenville, as they exist in many places. Nonetheless, I am confident that the people of Greenville have the sensibility to meet the challenges that change brings.

I strongly disagree with Mr. Strub's characterization of Greenville as a "town run by and primarily populated by close-minded people." His generalizations ignore the positive things occurring in Greenville. As an outsider, I hope that all of the residents of Greenville participate in directing the course of change so that it results in a stronger community and a better quality of life for all.

The Friday morning after the big snow of '88, I drove to my home through Beaufort County. The roads there had been plowed and were nearly bare, but did I get a shock when I came to the Pitt County line.

Those roads had not been touched and were next to impossible. They have remained that way the whole time until Monday afternoon when I did see a snow plow in the vicinity of Black Jack.

I've heard that some of Pitt County's equipment was leased to another county. Would that be Beaufort?

To the editor:

Carroll Webber's Jan. 5 letter advocating U.S. abolishment of all covert operations and disarmament was an incredible display of naivete about what kind of world we live in.

His reasoning: there's corruption in the CIA; therefore, we should abolish it as well as all other covert operations. Using this same reasoning, one could say: there's corruption in our government; therefore, we should abolish our federal government as well as our state and local governments. This reasoning is illogical and dangerous. Conservatives like myself believe corruption in the CIA or anywhere else should be dealt with and prevented. But in doing so, we don't advocate throwing the baby out with the bath water.

He seems to believe that if we stop our intelligence gathering and if we disarm ourselves, the Communists will, too. Then everything will be love, peace, light and sweetness. Who are "peaceniks" like Webber trying to kid? The Communist goal is world domination. Gorbachev has recently said, "We're moving toward a new world, the world of Communism. We'll never swerve off that road."

People who advocate doing away with our weapons, armies and spies live in a fantasy — an idealized and dangerously inaccurate vision of our world. The Communists themselves have told us exactly what they're trying to do (e.g., the Sandinistas in Nicaragua have admitted that they're trying to spread Communism throughout Central America). When will "peaceniks" wake up to the truth?

Say we gave up our spies and weapons. The Communists wouldn't do (as they haven't done) the same thing, and then they'd be able to use nuclear blackmail and intimidation on us. Does Webber want this to happen?

Conservatives: peace through strength; better dead than Red. "Peaceniks": "peace" through recapitulation better Red than dead.

Eyesore Or Treasure?

The eastern North Carolina Chamber of Commerce is continuing its Carolina Clean Countryside campaign but historical groups are concerned about protecting structures that may be of historical interest.

The chamber began a program in 1985 to clean up rural areas by either restoring or removing decaying barns, houses and other structures.

While the goals of the chamber's campaign are understandable, there has to be real concern about maintaining sites of historical and community interest.

"One person's eyesore is another man's treasure," Bill Steiner, director of the North Carolina Historical Preservation Society's revolving trust fund, said. Because it is old or unpainted "doesn't mean it is neglected," he said.

Bill Edwards, site manager at Somerset Place in Washington County, expressed concern that there might not be adequate guidelines to protect buildings of potential historic significance. He maintained that the Washington and Tyrrell county area has the largest number of pre-Civil War buildings in North Carolina. Somerset place once had 40 buildings. They were gradually removed until only six are left.

Here in Pitt County, which dates back to pre-Revolutionary War times, there is almost nothing left that extends back even to pre-Civil War. The structures have been demolished or destroyed by fire until there is very little of historic interest left. Some of what is left might be of historic interest in a hundred years, however, and we wouldn't want to make the mistake of demolishing something that might be held in great value by future generations.

There can be no doubt that there are unsightly piles of rubble in rural areas that should be removed. Let's have adequate safeguards, though, which ensure that old buildings are properly evaluated for future significance before they are unceremoniously destroyed.

Tax Inequality Haunts America

NEW YORK — America is a more unequal society today than it was 10 years ago. This does not just refer to the increase in poverty since 1979. Most people have at least some idea about that outrage. This particular inequality confronts the middle class.

The United States faces a curious situation today: The middle class is under assault and doesn't know it. One reason: A prime source of the problem is located in the Internal Revenue code, one of the most important, least understood and even mysterious instruments of social policy in the United States. A majority of the people have been hit by fine print they never read.

Consider just a bit of data from last fall's Congressional Budget Office report. Primarily as a result of the 1981 Tax Act — the quintessential "supply side" program of the Reagan years — taxes of the poorest 10 percent of the people went up by 2.5 percent between 1977 and 1984, while those of the richest 1 percent went down by a whopping 7.8 percent. That is a fairly routine irony of recent years: The most vulnerable are punished by government policy, the most secure are made more secure.

And the great middle, neither rich nor poor? The 80 percent of Americans between the top and the bottom either got a tiny tax cut of less than 1 percent, or, in the case of one group, a tax increase of 1.2 percent. Since the wealthy got that 7.8 percent bonanza, the burdens of paying for government were shifted from the top down and public policy made all the more unequal.

But then didn't the 1986 tax law supported by the president make amends for the Robin Hood in reverse policies of 1981? Hardly? Despite all the media hype about fairness, and even though there was significant relief for the bottom 20 percent of the taxpayers (who advanced all the way back to where they were under Jimmy Carter), federal taxes this year will still hit the middle class far harder than the rich.

There are three reasons. First, the administration gave so many benefits to the well-to-do in 1981 that even a slight move toward fairness in 1986 will leave those at the top with a 1986 tax bill that will be 6 percent less than 1977's. Second, the favored few did indeed lose some of their most indefensible deductions but they were compensated by getting a massive cut in the maximum tax. And finally, Social Security and other insurance taxes, the most regressive in the land, account for a growing percentage of federal revenue; the income tax portion, which is not as regressive, is declining.

But percentages are hard to visualize — which is why the middle class hasn't yet figured out that it is being attacked. Dollars are more obvious. Take the 10 percent of Americans who are right in the middle of the income structure. Between 1977 and 1988, the budget office tells us, the average family income, measured in 1987 dollars, will go down by $1,120.

Add to these direct consequences of government policy the fact that the Reagan recession of 1981-82 and the huge layoffs since have put labor on the defensive and held wage increases to less than the inflation rate. And with the exception of the recent growth in manufacturing employment — which does not begin to offset the losses in that sector since 1979 — most of the new jobs in the United States have been in low-paid, non-union positions.

Small wonder, then, when the Bureau of the Census reported last fall that between 1980 and 1986 the share of household incomes of the middle 60 percent of America went down by 1.6 percent while that of the highest 20 percent rose by almost 2 percent.

The problem is, most Americans do not "feel" these numbers. They know that they have to run very hard just to stay in the same place, but their "share" of total wealth is an abstraction and not a fact of their daily lives. The middle class hasn't been pushed down into poverty so the new inequality does not hit the members where they live.

Then why bother about an injustice so subtle that most people don't even know they suffer from it? Because it could be a major reason for the next recession and that will hit those same people on the head.

The economic justification for Reagan's massive welfare payment to the rich in 1981 was that they would spend their tax savings to finance a "supply side" boom, investing in the new plants and machines that would create jobs for the workers and competitiveness with the Japanese. Only there was a recession instead. More to the point, the wealthy put that money into speculation and inflation hedges. It was used, among other things, to pay for the fun and games on Wall Street which bid up stock prices out of any proportion to the real world of the economy and prepared the way for the crash of Oct. 19.

Strength For Today

Most people are happy or unhappy depending on how they feel physically. If we allow feeling to dominate us in matters of this sort, we can be pretty sure that most of the time we will be unhappy. For a poor night's rest, a badly digested meal, a protracted season of work which leaves the nerves frayed, will furnish the physical basis for bad mental states which range from petulance to melancholy.

If we are going to be happy, we must make the exercise of the will the chief factor in producing happiness. This is but another way of saying that we are usually about as happy as we make up our minds to be. Fatigue, indigestion, irritation, and the influence of the subconscious mind can make us unhappy if we let them, but we can overwhelm them with good cheer and courage if we will.

Let Presidents Implement Plan

The major summit outcome was that once again we have proved that dialogue bears fruit and it can constitute the civilized road to settling disputes and differences between human beings.

The Central American presidents must recognize that the commitment undertaken by each one of us five months back has not been fulfilled in its entirety and we urge those who have failed to do so to comply immediately.

For my country it was most reassuring to reconfirm, from our reading of the report prepared by the International Verification Commission, what we have maintained all along: That Costa Rica is not a problem for Central America, but that Central America is a problem for Costa Rica. In Costa Rica there is no need for reconciliation because we live in peace and because our style of living is a model. Insurgent forces do not endanger, from our territory, the security of other countries, because we are unswerving and refuse to allow that to occur. The commission recognized that Costa Rica does not require an amnesty law, because this is a country where no citizen is either in exile or incarcerated because of his political beliefs.

We reiterate that without peace there is no development for the region, and without development, the consolidation of the fragile democracies emerging in Central America will be extremely difficult to achieve.

The major obstacles to achieving peace continue to be hardheadedness, inflexibility and lack of political will. I urged my colleagues at the summit that we must honor our words.

My role has always been to build bridges rather than raise walls. If we fail, the alternative is war. Costa Ricans do not wish to see their brothers in the region suffer any longer. We cannot remain untouched by the spilling of blood of youth who should be in the classrooms, books in hand, rather than in the battlefield armed with machine guns.

Major obstacles remain, blocking full implementation of the peace plan. During the course of the last summit meeting, the presidents recognized that some of the countries had not complied with the plan. Lengthy debates ensued in which one president reproached another, stating that he could not comply while the other failed to do so. We must seek to end this stalemate and I think that Daniel Ortega should be the one to do so. With the release of all political prisoners and concrete steps towards democratization, there will be no justification for continuing aid to the Contras. I respectfully told Daniel Ortega that if I were in his shoes, this is precisely what I would do.

To the U.S. public I would repeat the same words I delivered upon receiving the Nobel Peace Prize: "It is for the new generation that we must understand more than ever that peace can only be achieved through its own instruments: dialogue and understanding, tolerance and forgiveness, freedom and democracy."

"I know well you share what we say to all members of the international community, and particularly to those both in the East and the West, with far greater power and resources than my small national could ever hope to possess. I say to them, with the utmost urgency: Let Central Americans decide the future of Central America. Leave the interpretation and implementation of our peace plan to us. Support the efforts for peace instead of the forces of war in our region."

Peace in 1988 depends on the prevalence of reason over madness, on seeing Central American interests placed before all others. Those fueling this war are neither the ones dying in the battlefields nor the mothers who, with heavy hearts, see their sons go off to fight.

A Gamble On Peace

President Daniel Ortega's offer to end Nicaragua's state of emergency, negotiate a cease-fire directly with the armed resistance (the Contras) and release prisoners as part of an amnesty program is a welcome step, and yet it may also be somewhat beside the point.

The concessions announced by Ortega last weekend are an important advance in the Central American peace process initiated by Costa Rica's President Oscar Arias Sanchez and highlighted by last August's Guatemala accord among the five Central American presidents. Seven years of the Contra war had not achieved what diplomatic and political pressures have produced in five months: strong commitments by Nicaragua to expand domestic political space.

This progress is fragile and could be reversed, but it amounts to considerable movement in the desired direction. No one should expect instant and full-blown democracy in Nicaragua, a country that has never known truly free elections, but the conditions slowly being established should allow Nicaragua's democrats to gain important ground.

This progress is jeopardized, however, by the determination of some within the Reagan administration to avoid peace with Nicaragua, almost at any price. They justify the request for further military aid to the Contras as necessary to keep the pressure on Nicaragua, despite appeals from all five Central American presidents — as well as eight other Latin American nations — to end outside support for the insurgents. But military force is useful as a negotiating instrument only if it is subordinated to clear political aims, not if it becomes a substitute for diplomacy.

The plain fact is that some within the administration want to ensure that no agreements are reached with Nicaragua on this president's watch — that accommodation with the Sandinistas is left to the next administration. Nothing that Ortega can do or offer, short of committing political suicide, will satisfy these officials. They still want to remove the Sandinistas, not deal with them.

That is why Ortega's new move, however welcome, is in one sense irrelevant. The struggle for Nicaragua that needs to be decided now is not so much the one between Sandinistas and Contras, however important that is, but rather between the true believers within the administration and those who want to protect the interests of the United States pragmatically — balancing aims and resources, objectives and available instruments.

A broad spectrum of public and congressional opinion supports the aims that were stated cogently by President Reagan and House Speaker Jim Wright last August.

As they put it at that time, the United States has three legitimate concerns: to ensure that no Soviet or Cuban military base is established in Nicaragua, that Nicaragua poses no military threat to its neighbors through invasion or subversion, and that Nicaragua's government respects the basic human rights of its people, established in the country's constitution.

Abraham F. Lowenthal is a professor of international relations at the University of Southern California and executive director of the Inter-American Dialogue.

'Alice In Wonderland' Policy

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Less than four full days after the San Jose summit, Nicaragua became the first country in Central America to move ahead full speed towards total compliance with the agreements. This we did in faithful adherence to the new rules for implementation approved by the five Central American presidents on January 16, 1988.

Although all of us Central American presidents want peace, the Guatemala and San Jose (summit) agreements were not easy to accomplish. Many were quite surprised when we all signed those agreements, especially Reagan administration officials. They never imagined that we Central Americans would ever dare to deal with our own problems and reach our own solutions independently of official U.S. policy.

Predictably, after we signed the Esquipulas Accord on August 7, 1987, in Guatemala City, the administration began to undermine the peace accords, continuing U.S. policy of trying to get rid of our government.

That administration even went so far as to say in a recent trip to the region by top U.S. officials that if their Central American allies did not support the Contras they would lose U.S. economic and military aid.

This is an "Alice In Wonderland" foreign policy. The Reagan administration goes to Congress requesting money for the Contras claiming that its purpose is to safeguard what it perceives as the security of Central American countries. When those countries do not support the Contras as a means to make them secure, the U.S. government threatens to cut off economic and other aid intended for their security.

I stress this because it is essential to understand the dynamics operative at the recent San Jose summit. U.S. allies in the region came to that summit under enormous pressure to make the summit fail or to reach a toothless agreement.

Nicaragua was the target. From the beginning of the peace process, the Reagan administration tried to focus media and public attention on Nicaragua's alleged lack of compliance with the peace accords. The facts showed otherwise.

Nonetheless, the U.S. continued its military action against Nicaragua at the very moment we were moving to comply with the peace treaty. We were loosening measures put in place to guard us against a military force created by the United States in 1981 and financed by hundreds of millions of dollars of U.S. taxpayers' money.

What happened? The International Commission on Verification and Follow-up, created by the peace plan, presented its 100-page report in San Jose showing that Nicaragua along with Costa Rica had complied more fully with the accords than any other countries in the region.

But the spotlight was still on the misrepresentations that the Reagan administration disinformation campaign had designed against us. To make our position unequivocally clear, we took the final steps to comply with the peace accords, without waiting for other countries to do the same, as we all had agreed in San Jose on January 16, 1988.

What is at issue now is the following. We Central Americans, in exercise of our sovereign rights as independent nations, have agreed upon a regional plan to bring peace, justice and democracy to our countries. It is our own plan for our own countries.

The United States must give peace a chance and stop sabotaging the regional peace accord. It must stop funding suffering, death and destruction, for the good of Central America and the image of the United States throughout the hemisphere.

Tar Heels To Take Crash Course On How To Question Candidates

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — About 600 North Carolinians from all walks of life will take part in a "citizens assembly" to generate probing questions for presidential candidates.

"The only agenda in this whole thing is to help people become more aware of the issues and to help them be more aware of the primaries," said Tim Noonan, state coordinator for U.S. 88, a voter-education program sponsored by the Roosevelt Center for American Policy Studies.

The Roosevelt Center ran similar projects in Iowa and New Hampshire and decided to expand into North Carolina and Georgia because of the interest generated by the Super Tuesday Southern primaries in March.

The 600 people will take crash courses on such topics as nuclear weapons proliferation or agricultural policies. In some cases, there will be role-playing games in which people act as "ambassadors, officials or peasants" and decide how to handle issues, Noonan said.

Out of the courses will come questions to be submitted to candidates. The questions can come "from any political viewpoint," Noonan said. "The only requirement is that the questions are well thought out," he said. "We hope we get the answers before the primary," Noonan said. "That's up to the candidates."

Noonan said primers on the issues were sent to North Carolina participants earlier this month. The courses will take place on Saturday.

If the courses in Sylva, Asheville, Charlotte, Hickory, Jamestown, Chapel Hill, Fayetteville, Greenville and Wilmington go as well as expected, it is possible a similar education effort will be extended to public schools, Noonan said.

The project was endorsed by every member of North Carolina's congressional delegation, plus Gov. Jim Martin and such diverse groups as the North Carolina Farm Bureau Federation, the State Employees Association of North Carolina, the state AFL-CIO and the North Carolina Black Leadership Caucus.

Noonan said the widespread support came after people were convinced the Roosevelt Center was unbiased.

"That's their whole thing, being nonpartisan," he said. "To get both parties to sign on... we spent a great deal of time going through this project with them."

Polish Refugee Spends Last Year Roaming Alamance County Woods

GRAHAM, N.C. (AP) — Like thousands of other tourists, Wieslaw Kopckynski set out last year to breathe in the beauty of the Appalachian Mountains.

Kopckynski, 58, stepped on a New Jersey Greyhound destined for the North Carolina mountains. But when the money ran out, the ride came to an abrupt halt in Alamance County, just east of the mountains he had dreamed of seeing.

For almost a year, Kopckynski, a Pole who spoke no English, found refuge in woods near the county's landfill, said Sgt. Joan Bowman of the Alamance County Sheriff's Department.

Ms. Bowman said the department received calls for months about a man spotted in that area before he was finally found on New Year's Day.

"We'd get calls that a suspicious subject was standing on a bridge out there," Ms. Bowman said. "But he'd always disappear before we got there."

The "suspicious subject," she said, turned out to be a gentle, polite man who was frightened by authorities' uniforms. She said his fear could have stemmed from his pre-teen years spent in Poland, when Hitler's armies marched through the war-torn country.

"Those people lived hard if they survived at all," she said, "and this man was a survivor."

Ms. Bowman said she was off duty and out of uniform on New Year's Day, when deputies brought Kopckynski to the sheriff's department.

Kopckynski reluctantly let her wash his face and hands, but refused her offer to wash his feet, swollen and disfigured from wearing shoes that were too small.

"He was pitiful," she said. "He had been eating and dressing from the landfill for months, living like an animal. He reminded me of an abandoned dog, and they'll curl up and die."

Ms. Bowman said Kopckynski was about 5-foot-6, but weighed less than 120 pounds.

"You could count every bone in his body," she said. "I'm glad we found him in time before the really bad weather came or we would have found a dead body out there."

Although Kopckynski did not speak English, he could write his name and birth date. Authorities realized he was Polish and sent for a Burlington woman who spoke his native language fluently.

Stella Rager learned that Kopckynski had come south to sightsee but had run out of money before he reached his destiny. Kopckynski would confide little else in Ms. Rager.

"He did need psychiatric help," she said. "Some of the things he said didn't make sense."

Mirek Lysakowski, a Graham resident and Polish immigrant whom Ms. Rager contacted, was able to learn more about the mysterious man.

"He didn't know what day it was or when he came to America," Lysakowski said, but the man did say he left Poland in 1968 to go to Israel.

"I think he was Jewish because the government sent Polish people to Israel then," Lysakowski said, noting that there was a tattoo on the man's arm he might have gotten while in a concentration camp.

He said he understood from his conversations with Kopckynski that he had ended up in a refugee camp in Greece and was sponsored by a New York church to come to the United States.

He ended up in a Polish community in Elizabeth City, N.J., where he worked as a driver.

"He said he didn't have any friends," Lysakowski said. "He said his father was probably dead but his mother was probably alive somewhere in Poland. He said, 'I don't need help. I want to go back to New Jersey.'"

Sheriff's officials decided otherwise. They took him to Alamance Memorial Hospital, where he bathed and put on clean clothes donated by Lysakowski and the magistrate's son, George Moon.

According to the sheriff's department report, Dr. John Jones examined Kopckynski and found him to be in good physical shape, except for his feet. After the examination, a nurse coaxed him into eating a small meal after learning through Lysakowski that he had not eaten in two days.

Francis Walker of the Department of Social Services told officials Kopckynski could stay at the Fisher Street Missions shelter in Burlington until her office re-opened the following Monday.

"He had done nothing; we couldn't put him in jail," said Ms. Bowman. "I'm so thankful we did have a place to put him."

Kopckynski spent one night at the shelter. Meanwhile, Ms. Rager connected local officials with members of the Polish American Society of North Carolina in Raleigh.

Two society members drove to Alamance County the next day and took Kopckynski to the Raleigh area, where he spent one night at the Salvation Army and one night in a private home. He was hospitalized Jan. 4 at Dorothea Dix Hospital in Raleigh, said Danuta Adam, wife of the society's president.

Ms. Adam said doctors were taking tests for a severe cough Kopckynski had, as well as taking psychiatric tests.

"His memory is coming back and he's getting better and better," Ms. Adam said Friday. "He's still a little bit confused, but he's holding his head up more and he's less ashamed."

He has since been transferred to N.C. Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill.

Ms. Adam said Kopckynski had lost his passport and other official papers but was able to provide the addresses of his mother and a cousin, who both live in Warsaw, Poland.

She said she planned to write them to let them know about his condition.

Old Family Chapel Moves To Raleigh

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — St. Mark's Church has come a long way — literally — since the days when it served as a plantation chapel, complete with a small balcony in the back for slaves.

In the 141 years since it was built as a family chapel in Chatham County, the little church with nine pews has been moved to Siler City and again to Raleigh as part of the Mordecai Historic Park.

"I sort of wonder how many families had their own chapel," said Sally Poland of the Mordecai Square Historical Society. "Researchers have told us it was not unusual for families to build a chapel on their plantation, but I'm not aware of that many of them."

"It certainly reflects a religious dedication and a degree of wealth," she said.

The heart-pine chapel was originally built in 1847 on the John Haughton plantation near Gulf in Chatham County. Its furnishings included a three-legged stool in a back corner of the ground floor for a handicapped slave who could not climb into the loft.

"We still get a lot of requests to use it for weddings," Ms. Poland said. "It's a small, intimate kind of place that some people want for a wedding. And the chapel has been decommissioned, so it's sort of like a church wedding, but not in a church."

After Haughton died, the little church was deeded to the Episcopal

Diocese of North Carolina, which used it as a mission church. But the congregation slowly dwindled and the last service held was a funeral in 1934.

For more than 20 years, the little chapel sat idle until a Siler City congregation — the Church of the Holy Cross — sought to buy the chapel and move it.

But rules of the Episcopal Church required that the little church be decommissioned before it could be sold, moved or torn down. In 1953, a bishop officially removed the church from service.

St. Mark's new congregation planned to number each board as it was torn down so the church could be reassembled in Siler City. But workers discovered that the boards had already been numbered by the original builder.

"There were some modifications made when it was rebuilt," said Ms. Poland, "but it was essentially the original building."

The building was used for 10 years, then sat abandoned for another decade until it was deeded to the historic preservation group.

In 1979, the steeple was removed and the chapel taken by truck from Siler City to Raleigh, where it became a plantation chapel again.

Mordecai Square, once a plantation itself, includes the original plantation house and two other plantation buildings, plus five others that have been brought to the city-owned park for preservation.

Chinese Investigating N.C. Teacher's Death

BEIJING (AP) — An American woman who was teaching English at a university in northeastern China was found dead on campus, the U.S. Embassy said today. Unconfirmed reports said she was slain.

Embassy spokeswoman Sylvia Rifkin identified the woman as Erin Elizabeth Johnston, 18, who was teaching English at Northeast University of Technology in Shenyang, Liaoning province, along with her parents.

Her parents were identified by the embassy as Allen and Mary Jo Kindt of Boone, N.C. Kindt, a music professor at Appalachian State University in Boone, N.C., was her stepfather, according to the ASU news bureau.

A Hong Kong radio station said

Miss Johnston was beaten to death. "As far as we know that is not true," said Ms. Rifkin.

She said the local police were investigating and an autopsy was being done to determine the cause of death.

She said Miss Johnston's body was found in her residence on campus Saturday morning by a fellow American. The spokeswoman said Chinese authorities have not told the embassy any conclusions about the death.

Erin Johnston was a 1987 graduate of Watauga High School. She and her family were supposed to return this spring from China after participating in The China Program.

The exchange program, which is in its seventh year, also brings Chinese students and faculty to ASU.

Church Halts Child Labor

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Officials of a Mecklenburg County church say they have suspended a century-old on-the-job training program for children that a federal judge says violates child labor laws.

Rommie Purser, elder and minister at Shiloh True Light Church of Christ in Mint Hill, said Sunday that a dozen or more youths under 16 would not report to their part-time construction jobs today.

U.S. District Judge Robert Potter had warned Saturday that allowing the children to continue to work could mean hefty fines against two companies owned by church members that supervised their work.

"We would certainly not see fit to fly in his face after he has ruled like that," said Purser, who discussed Potter's comments with church members Sunday afternoon. "I don't think we'll be sending them back until something is worked out."

At the end of a week-long trial, Potter said Saturday the U.S. Labor Department had proved its case that church members were violating child labor laws by using children to lay brick, make wood products and operate heavy equipment.

Federal law prohibits children ages 14 and 15 from working in construction.

IN THE STATE

Storm Warning

RALEIGH (AP) — A winter storm warning remained in effect for the North Carolina mountains today, and a snow advisory was in effect for the foothills this afternoon as a low-pressure system from the Gulf of Mexico approached the Tar Heel state.

Rain was expected to increase across the state today, and scattered thunderstorms were possible across the coastal region, the National Weather Service said.

As the system moves up along the North Carolina coast later today, colder air will be pulled into the mountains. That will change morning rain in the mountains to snow, the weather service said. Between 5 and 9 inches of snow are possible in the northern mountains, before tapering off to flurries late tonight or Tuesday, forecasters said.

Gale force winds were forecast for the coastal area tonight.

Won't Run

RALEIGH (AP) — Betty C. Wallace, an educator who ran for U.S. senator in 1986, says she will not run for superintendent of public instruction this year.

Mrs. Wallace, a deputy assistant superintendent in the department, said she made her decision after several private meetings with the Democratic front-runner, state Rep. Bob Etheridge.

Mrs. Wallace's decision apparently leaves Henry M. McCarthy, an associate professor at Appalachian State University, as the only potential Democratic challenger to Etheridge.

Among the Republicans considering running is Thomas F. Paquin, superintendent of St. Pauls City Schools in Robeson County.

Candidate

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Gerald H. Long, outgoing president and chief executive officer of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco USA, wants to become a Forsyth County commissioner.

On Jan. 18, Long, a registered Republican for the past 12 years, filed to run as a Democrat in the May 3 primary. He says he's always considered himself a Democrat, though he was encouraged to register Republican in 1975 for business purposes.

Three seats on the five-member commission will be up for grabs Nov. 8. Thus far, six Democratic candidates, including commission Chairman James N. Ziglar Jr., have also filed. Three candidates will be chosen to face a like number of Republicans in November.

Red Tide Threatens Tourism

WILMINGTON (AP) — State officials estimate that the clam and oyster trade in four counties hit hard by the red tide will lose more than $3 million, but officials say the losses could be far greater for the tourism trade.

"We can weather this storm if it will dissipate soon because it happened at the best time of year," said Hugh Morton Jr., director of the state Division of Travel and Tourism.

"If it gets into the springtime and we still have the red tide, it will severely affect the economy," Morton said.

Tourism is a much bigger business than fishing. In 1986, tourism brought about $200 million to New Hanover County and $121 million to Brunswick County.

Jane Peterson, executive director of the New Hanover County Convention and Visitors Bureau, was confident that the red tide will be just a bad memory when summer tourists arrive.

"I think it definitely has affected visitors coming into the area because a lot of people come to the area just to eat our seafood and enjoy themselves," Ms. Peterson said. "On the calls that we're getting, though, we're promoting well into the summer season, when the red tide will be gone."

Tom Bennett Jr., whose family owns the Lord Carteret Motor Lodge in Morehead City, said the public will need more than a month to get over its fear of the tide.

"Our big markets are Greenville, Raleigh and Greensboro. When they hear the news that if you stick your arm in the water it's going to start burning and itching, it's the equivalent of a July 4th weekend when the weatherman says it's going to rain," Bennett said. "My business has already fallen from mid-November until now. It's 40 to 50 percent off."

"The public needs a month or so to hear good news about finfish and shellfish and another month or so to get over their misinterpretation of the dangers," he told the Wilmington Morning Star. "That's why it's sort of important it get on out now."

Carmelo Tomas, a red tide expert with the Florida Bureau of Marine Research, said the toxic red tide should die if the water gets cold enough.

"Certainly when temperatures get down below 40 that organism should not be around," he said. "In a lab we cannot grow it at those temperatures."

The state's coastal waters usually reach their low point between Jan. 15 and Feb. 15, said William Kirby-Smith, a research scientist who takes daily water temperature readings at the Duke University Marine Laboratory in Beaufort.

The average low temperature over the coldest week of winter is 41 degrees, he said. This year the lowest weekly average has been about 45 degrees.

Winston-Salem Weathers Latest Economic Setback

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Winston-Salem has lost more than 9,000 jobs since 1983, mostly due to a string of corporate buyouts, departures and employment cuts, but the city has gained three times as many new jobs in that time, economists say.

"The economy works kind of like a hospital," said Howard Holbrook, assistant manager of the Forsyth County Employment Security Commission office. "On one floor, you've got grief and dying, and on another floor you have births and new life. We are just trying to keep the births ahead of the deaths."

The job base in Forsyth County has expanded 17 percent since 1982, compared with 18 percent statewide.

But the harshest blow came last week, when American Telephone & Telegraph announced it would close its 3,300-employee North Carolina Works plant over the next five years. Figures from the state commerce department indicate the shutdown is the state's largest job loss ever.

But within hours after the announcement, Holbrook got phone calls from six companies interested in hiring displaced AT&T workers.

"We've weathered this storm before," he said.

Winston-Salem has faced its share of bad news — the loss of RJR Nabisco Inc. to Atlanta, the merger of Piedmont Aviation Inc. with USAir group Inc. and the bankruptcy of McLean Trucking Co.

Also, the city has absorbed about 3,000 jobs eliminated at the North Carolina Works plant through attrition in the past two decades.

"The ghost town syndrome sort of hangs around and haunts us," said Sandra K. Mitchell, a member of the board of directors of the Greater Winston-Salem Chamber of Commerce. "I am concerned that the perception will show itself once again."

Fred Nordenholz, president of the chamber, said it's a full-time job trying to stress to callers from other communities that Winston-Salem is not drying up, that the city's 3.4 percent unemployment rate, the prosperity of its remaining core businesses and its desire to attract more make it a good place for business.

"I've had a number of calls from people throughout the country who either are in the process of investing or interested in investing (in Winston-Salem), and they want to know what's going on," Nordenholz said.

"I've been trying to expend as much energy as possible to be positive about the good things," he said. "It's tough and it's exhausting, but it's very important to be as aggressive and alert as possible."

Prisoners Escape

SMITHFIELD, N.C. (AP) — Five people, including the 16-year-old Norlina resident charged with setting the fire that destroyed the Four Oaks Public School, escaped from Johnston County Jail early today, authorities said.

Robert Edward Norris, 16, of Norlina was among five teen-agers who escaped from the jail between 1:30 a.m. and 2 a.m., said Sheriff Freddy Narron.

Narron said the five apparently cut through a double ceiling of a cell block, went through a vent that came out on top of the courthouse and escaped down a fire escape.

Authorities believe the five may be driving a white Mazda pickup truck that was stolen today from Guy C.

Lee Building and Supply Co., Narron said. The truck was seen heading north on Interstate 95 with several men in it, he said.

The other four identified as escapees were: Jerry Scott Hill, 16, of Benson; Sherill Lynn Johnson, 16, of Benson; Jackie Wilson, 19, of New York; and Thurman Ray Lucas, 17, of Dunn.

Narron said the prisoners were checked every 30 minutes. The five were in their block at 1:30 a.m. and missing at 2 a.m., he said.

Although he did not their specific charges, Hill and Johnson were charged with felonies and Wilson and Lucas with misdemeanors, he said. All were being held until their trials, he said.

Thieves Targeting Graves For Thefts

RALEIGH (AP) — A growing interest in Indian and Confederate history has made North Carolina a target for thieves, who say getting the thieves charged and convicted is a difficult job.

"Threatening people with the law and enforcing it are two different things," said Steven R. Claggett, the state's chief archaeologist. "We have to catch them red-handed, we have to have a sympathetic district attorney and the cooperation of law enforcement," which may be reluctant to pursue such cases when more violent crimes demand attention.

"You have to catch people in the act and that's difficult to do," said J. Ned Woodall, an anthropology professor at Wake Forest University and president of the national Society of Professional Archaeologists. "A person could easily argue that, 'No, this specimen did not come from an Indian burial.' ... It's nearly impossible to prove that they were wrong."

State laws such as the Archaeological Resource Protection Act of 1981 help, but enforcing them can be difficult, said artifact experts interviewed recently by The News and Observer of Raleigh. North Carolina has about 20 museums of history to oversee, as well as 15,000 historic sites, most of which are prehistoric Indian village sites.

Keith Strong, curator of collections for the N.C. Museum of History, said artifact experts looked for suspicious ads in trade magazines, but thieves preferred word-of-mouth and often sold out-of-state.

"Seventy or eighty percent (of stolen items), once they're gone, they're gone," he said. "We can't get them back." Some items end up in Europe, where American Indian artifacts are in vogue. Others end up at antique stores or flea markets.

Some thieves want to steal a piece of history so badly they will raise the dead to do it.

"To show you how intense these people are, they robbed the grave of a Confederate officer and took what was remaining of the clothing," Strong said. He was referring to a 1983 grave robbery at a private family burial ground in Durham.

"They were after anything Confederate, not to turn around and sell it, but as collecting, as obtaining."

Such thefts often are crimes of passion.

"The (thieves) that I have seen have been emotionally involved with the subject matter," Strong said. "That is to say they want to dress up in uniforms and go fight the war again."

The kind of care sites receive depends primarily on whether they are on state or private property, said Billy L. Oliver, an archaeologist with Office of State Archaeology in the state's Division of Archives and History. An eligible state-owned site may be placed on the national registry of important historic sites, which gives it legal protection. It also can be patrolled, at least during authorized digs.

"We have very little authority to protect things that are not on state property," Oliver said. "It usually ends up in the hands of local citizens to protect what resources they have themselves. It's kind of like a community watch, except it an historical community watch."

He also said small regional museums may be vulnerable because they can't afford security.

For instance, a Revolutionary War bayonet, protected from visitors by a Plexiglass shield, was stolen last summer from the visitor's center museum at Guilford Courthouse National Military Park.

"It was mounted on a mannequin, hanging from the waist," said Charles A. Taylor, the park's chief ranger. "They just reached over and jerked it off."

The delicate condition of historic objects can make them difficult to protect.

"Because of the important nature of our artifacts, we don't secure them in any way that would damage the artifact," said Clare R. Arthur, the state's curator of collections. "We don't bolt them down, so people figure out a way to take these things."

Democrats Focus Attacks On Gore, Gephardt Camps

By MARTHA ENGLERT
Associated Press Writer

DURHAM, N.H. (AP) — Bruce Babbitt could take it when Albert Gore characterized his proposed national sales tax as regressive, though he vehemently disagreed. But when Gore called it a "Republican idea," the former Arizona governor got his hackles up.

"To my way of thinking, Republican is a four-letter word," Babbitt said Sunday after the close of the fourth Democratic presidential debate in 10 days.

"That's across the line," Babbitt told Gore during the most heated exchange of the nationally televised two-hour encounter. "I spent time in ... Selma, Alabama, in the civil rights movement and nobody came and questioned my credentials as a Democrat."

But the Tennessee senator had the last word: "Well, don't put out a Republican idea, then."

The exchange came with a new poll putting Babbitt's support at 13 percent in New Hampshire, which holds its leadoff primary Feb. 16. The Los Angeles Times poll had Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis leading with 37 percent, followed by Illinois Sen. Paul Simon with 19 percent.

A poll in Iowa, whose caucuses are Feb. 8, showed Rep. Richard Gephardt among the leaders there, making the Missouri congressman a target Sunday for repeated attacks on his trade proposal.

Gephardt said his bill would impose automatic sanctions against nations that have trade imbalances with the United States as a result of unfair practices.

"The whole purpose ... is to move us into a changed situation where we can really break foreign markets open," Gephardt said.

Gore said the automatic feature of the Gephardt bill "triggers a trade war because of some feud ... that's nonsense."

Gore then heard Babbitt lump him in the ranks of protectionists for supporting an oil import fee.

"Dick," Babbitt told Gephardt, "I've got some good news for you. Al Gore is a protectionist, too. He's advocating an oil import fee, which is another form of protectionism."

Added former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart: "The worst old idea I've heard of in this campaign is protectionism."

Though Gephardt was the object of numerous barbs, he complimented his rivals when a student questioned Jesse Jackson's qualifications.

"Every candidate on this stage is better than all the Republican candidates put together," he said.

Dukakis came under fire from Babbitt and Hart for his plan to increase federal revenues by cracking down on tax delinquents.

"It's flim-flam to say you're going to balance the budget by hiring more revenue collectors," said Babbitt.

Hart said to Dukakis: "Mike, if you don't know yet that in order to balance this budget we're going to have to raise taxes, then it seriously calls into question your understanding of the deficit."

Dukakis also clashed with Simon, who gave Dukakis credit for helping to restore economic vitality to Massachusetts, but said the boom missed members of the economic "underclass." Simon said his own public-jobs program would address that group.

When Dukakis spoke disparagingly of "make-work jobs," Simon spoke disparagingly of Dukakis.

"Make-work jobs is a white-collar phrase that we use to really put down jobs that a lot of people would be very, very happy to have," he said.

The earliest clash at the University of New Hampshire came between moderator John Chancellor and Hart.

Introducing the seven candidates, Chancellor said Hart "abandoned his campaign in May of last year after stories about his involvement with a Miami model, (then) returned to the race in December, thereby answering the question posed in the song 'Will You Love Me in December as You Do in May?'"

Hart took exception to the "questionable taste" of the introduction. "I didn't mean to be offensive," Chancellor said. "I thought it was a nice little joke."

On the recent questions about his campaign financing, Hart pointed out that some allegations had come from anonymous sources, saying: "I can't respond to ghosts."

Jackson, confronting the question of his electability, delivered an impassioned closing statement, saying, "I'm not going to surrender."

Defending his White House credentials, Jackson said that "there have been four presidents elected who have not held elective office before."

Jury May Rule Against Tobacco Firm

By KATHY EYRE
Associated Press Writer

LEXINGTON, Miss. (AP) — Despite a string of defeats, anti-smoking activists and some legal experts say the odds are in their favor to win a smoking liability case that could help snuff out the tobacco industry.

The case against American Brands Inc. of Hartford, Conn., is the first to be tried in a state with a comparative-fault law, which allows a jury to find against a defendant who bears only partial responsibility.

The $17 million suit brought by the estate of Nathan Horton, a 50-year-old housing contractor who died of lung cancer last January, is only the third liability case against a U.S. tobacco manufacturer to be tried before a jury.

Another brought in Santa Barbara, Calif., against R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. failed when medical experts could not conclusively prove that lung cancer caused the plaintiff's death.

More damaging, a January 1987 decision by the U.S. Supreme Court left intact a decision shielding cigarette manufacturers from legal liability for allegedly failing to warn adequately about the dangers of smoking.

The action was a significant victory for three cigarette manufacturers sued by Rose Cipillone, a New Jersey woman who died of lung cancer. Her family has continued its suit on narrowed grounds, and the case goes to trial on Friday.

Still, some say a victory by the plaintiffs here could trigger an avalanche of lawsuits burying all cigarette companies so deep the industry would suffocate.

"I think its lasting importance is going to be overwhelming," Don Garner, associate dean of the Southern Illinois University School of Law, said of the trial that is entering its fourth week.

The industry "cannot afford to lose," said David Gidmark, who is reporting the trial for the Tobacco Products Liability Project, a Boston-based anti-tobacco organization that sends a monthly newsletter on tobacco litigation to attorneys nationwide.

If an auto manufacturer lost a major case, the precedent wouldn't be nearly as crippling, said Gidmark, one of about 100 observers from across the nation who pack the Holmes County Circuit Court daily in this Mississippi Delta town of 2,600 residents.

"You're only going to have a few cars' gas tanks explode each year," Gidmark said. "There are over 120,000 smokers who die each year from lung cancer."

Attorneys for both sides in the trial, which is expected to last through the month, have declined to discuss the case, citing a gag order imposed by Judge Gray Evans.

For their defense, attorneys for American Brands, which manufactures Pall Mall and other brands of cigarettes, are asking why cigarette manufacturers should be responsible for cancer victims who freely choose to puff away on their products.

But unlike past plaintiffs, Gidmark says the Horton family has a real chance of winning the $15 million punitive damages and $2 million compensatory damages they seek. Horton died on Jan. 27, 1987, after smoking two packs of unfiltered Pall Malls daily for about 35 years. His videotaped testimony before his death has been shown at the trial.

Gidmark says this case differs greatly from previous smokers' suits for several reasons, including: — Mississippi is among about only a dozen states with a comparative-fault law, and the Horton case is the first to be tried under it. The law permits a jury to find against the defendant even if the defendant bears only a small fraction of the responsibility for injury.

The law also allows a large damage award even if the defendant is only partially responsible for the injury.

Dallas Officers Blaming Politicians For Shooting

DALLAS (AP) — Reports that a crowd urged a deranged man to shoot a policeman who died pleading for his life incited some officers, who charged that criticism by politicians undermined support of law enforcers.

"I think I can speak for a lot of officers. We feel abandoned," police officer J.C. Harris said Sunday, a day after officer John Chase, 25, was shot to death by a homeless man with a history of mental illness.

Police Chief Billy Prince blamed the shooting partly on recent criticism of the department by City Council members who have attributed problems between the department and the community to racial tensions.

The Dallas Police Association, representing rank-and-file officers, agreed with the chief and asked Mayor Annette Strauss and three council members not to attend Chase's memorial services, scheduled for Tuesday.

Chase was preparing to write a traffic ticket at a busy downtown intersection shortly after 8:30 a.m. Saturday when a pedestrian who did not know the driver began arguing with the officer, said police spokeswoman Vicki Hawkins.

The attacker took Chase's .44-caliber gun and shot him in the face before a crowd of about 30 people.

"The officer was saying 'Don't shoot me! I'll help you whatever way I can!' But the guy shot him in the head," witness Melitha Johnson said.

"One girl said that people in the crowd were saying, 'Shoot him, shoot him again,'" said police Lt. Jerold Calane.

The suspect, Carl Dudley Williams, 34, was fatally shot by off-duty officers as he wandered down the street dangling the gun from his hand, police said.

Flags were at half-staff and officers masked their badges with black tape at the station where Chase had recently switched from an evening to a day shift to spend more time with his bride.

Kidnapper, Hostage Killed

ONALASKA, Wash. (AP) — A tow-truck driver abducted by two fugitives in a wild getaway attempt says the shoot-out that killed one of the kidnappers and a hostage was "a lifetime in two hours."

Authorities said the drug-using young abductors were suspected in a four-state crime spree dating back at least to Jan. 14, and were wanted for crimes in their home state of Wisconsin.

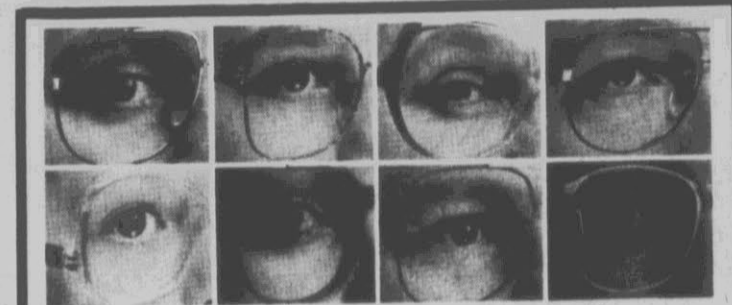

A suspect who survived Sunday morning's shoot-out remained in serious condition today with a gunshot wound in the neck, said a spokeswoman at Harborview Medical Center in Seattle.

"I saw a lot of lead fly," said Bob Matchett, 48, owner of Bob's Towing in Morton and driver of the last of at least four vehicles commandeered by the two men. Matchett escaped unscathed after grabbing a gun from the floor of the truck, jumping out and firing what witnesses said may have been the last shot.

Lewis County Sheriff Bill Logan said Sunday night that the two gunmen opened fire on the deputies, but it was too early to sort out what else had happened. He refused to identify the hostages or say which of the gunmen had died.

Textile Profits Grow

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. International Trade Commission reports that profits have been growing in the nation's $57 billion textile mill industry, which contends that it needs more government protection from foreign competition.

A bill that would further limit imports of textiles and clothes has passed the House and awaits action in the Senate. It faces the possibility of a veto by President Reagan, who killed a similar bill in 1985. Quotas on many products already restrict U.S. imports.

Mills that weave fabrics are the ones that most expect government intervention or legislation, the report says.

"Most of the producers in the carpet and rug, knit fabric and non-woven fabric sectors do not see imports as a problem and expect to be able to counter any efforts of foreign suppliers to gain a significantly larger share of the U.S. market," it adds.

For the most part, the report does not deal with the clothing industry, which is about as big as the mill industry and has heavier competition from imports.

Pay for spinning and weaving in the U.S. mill industry rose in 1986 to an average $8.81 an hour, the report says. In some Asian countries, it was only a small fraction of that: $1.62 in Taiwan, $1.09 in South Korea, 58 cents in Thailand, 23 cents in China and only 20 cents in Indonesia.

The number of jobs in the U.S. industry dropped to 709,000 in 1986 from 749,000 in 1982.

Couple Exchanges Vows Duchess Of York Expecting

Cynthia Denise Eastwood of Walstonburg and Christopher Louis Powell of Farmville were united in marriage Saturday at 3 p.m. in the Marlboro Free Will Baptist Church. Officiating at the double-ring ceremony was the Rev. Scott Sowers.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Robert Eastwood. Connie Powell is the bridegroom's mother.

A program of wedding music was presented by Janie Sowers of Farmville, pianist, and Carl Parker of Farmville, who sang "The Wedding Song" and "The Wedding Prayer."

Sue Barrow of Snow Hill and Dena Lewis of Farmville presided at the register. Ann Parker of Farmville directed the wedding.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor-length gown with a chapel train of organza and chantilly lace over taffeta. The fitted bodice featured a Queen Anne neckline outlined with scalloped lace and long shadow puff sleeves appliqued with chantilly lace garlands. Seed pearls adorned the bodice and peplum waist. A chantilly lace pyramid accented the front of the skirt and a border of lace edged with scalloped lace encircled the hemline. The bride wore a bridal hat of white satin appliqued with alencon lace, pearls and iridescent beads. It was attached to a pouf fingertip length veil of imported illusion. The bride carried a cascade bouquet of pine sweetheart roses, miniature carnations and baby's breath accented the bridal streamers.

Sheryl Sutton of Farmville, was her sister's matron of honor and bridesmaids were Karen Eastwood, sister-in-law of the bride, and Sharon Powell, sister of the bridegroom, both of Farmville. Each wore a formal gown of daphne rose polyester taffeta designed with puffed sleeves. Each featured a close-fitting bodice with a bateau neckline in front and scoop back, a lowered basque waist and full skirt. The attendants carried nosegays in shades of pink miniature carnations interspersed with baby's breath and bridal ribbons.

Lauren Sutton of Farmville, flower girl, wore a white eyelet dress with a rose satin sash that featured a fitted bodice, scoop neckline, with a ruffle, and short puff sleeves. She carried a basket of miniature carnations and other shades of pink flowers.

Bill Allen of Farmville was his grandson's best man. Ushers were Robert Eastwood of Farmville and Michael Eastwood of Raleigh, both brothers of the bride, and Sam Summerlin of Farmville. Jonathan Sutton of Farmville was ring bearer.

The mother of the bride selected a formal gown of pink crepe polyester knit with a pleated skirt. Her corsage was of pink miniature carnations. The mother of the bridegroom chose a royal gown of polyester chiffon.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the church fellowship hall. Presiding at the refreshment table were Mamie Dail of Snow Hill and Margaret May of Farmville. Marie Cowan of Farmville coordinated the reception.

The bride graduated from Greene Central High School and is employed with Collins and Aikman. The bridegroom graduated from Farmville Central and is employed with the Town of Farmville.

The couple will make their home in Farmville.

Following the rehearsal Friday night, the grandparents and mother of the bridegroom hosted a dinner party at the Marlboro Free Will Baptist Church fellowship hall.

LONDON (AP) — The Duchess of York, the former Sarah Ferguson, is expecting a baby in August, Buckingham Palace announced today.

The duchess is married to Prince Andrew, son of Queen Elizabeth II.

The 28-year-old duchess is in "excellent health," said a palace spokesman, speaking anonymously in keeping with British custom.

Sarah married Andrew, who is serving in the British navy, in July 1986.

This will be their first child. It will also be the queen's fifth grandchild.

Prince Charles, her eldest son and heir to the British throne, and his wife, Diana, have two sons, Prince William and Prince Harry. The queen's only daughter, Princess Anne, also has two children, Peter and Zara.

British newspapers have been speculating for two weeks that the duchess was pregnant.

Sarah flew to New York last week for a benefit performance of the hit British musical "The Phantom of the Opera."

Returning to her hotel Friday night, a young man screaming "murderers" rushed toward the duchess from a crowd of Irish Republican Army supporters holding a demonstration. Sarah was unhurt and bodyguards rushed her into the hotel.

The baby, whether a girl or boy, will be fifth in line to the throne, after Charles, 5-year-old William, 3-year-old Harry and Andrew, 27.

The brief statement issued by the palace said simply: "The Duke and Duchess of York are very pleased to announce that the Duchess of York is expecting a baby in August."

Buckingham Palace said Sarah

was expected to continue making public engagements until the beginning of June.

The spokesman said there are no plans to cancel Sarah and Andrew's scheduled visit to Australia in late September, although arrangements for the visit marking Australia's bi-centennial are still in the early stages.

MRS. POWELL

Wife's Pride Sparks Jealousy

DEAR ABBY: I work in an office as a secretary. I enjoy dressing in the latest styles. I am 40, and my clothes are in good taste and appropriate for a woman my age. I also wear make-up — but it's subtle and never conspicuous. I keep my hair attractively styled, too. I take pride in always looking well-dressed and well-groomed. I think people who always look their best feel better about themselves.

My problem: My husband, who is 44, feels differently. He thinks a woman dresses stylishly because she wants to attract attention, hoping that men will look at her and ask her out! Abby, he is wrong in my case. I want to look my best for myself. I am not trying to entice men to notice me and ask me out. I want people to think I look nice, but I do not want men to lust after me.

Abby, I work from 8 to 5 and never go anywhere else without him, except for marketing and to shop for clothes. He even gets angry if I wear a little perfume. What do you make of this situation, and why does he act this way? — CONFUSED IN MISSISSIPPI

DEAR CONFUSED: Your husband is pathetically insecure and his accusations are insulting. He would prefer that you were so plain you blended into the woodwork. He feels that he might lose you because he himself is nothing special. The problem is his — not yours.

DEAR ABBY: I went with a guy for two years. We broke up last October. Last week I found out that he got married. Even though we have not spoken since our breakup, I still care for him, and I want to wish him happiness.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Would it be proper to send him and his wife a wedding card? How about a gift? I want to appear as sincere as possible. I do not know his address, but I could send it to his parents' home and they could forward it to him.

Maybe I shouldn't do anything at all. However, I feel a bit guilty in knowing that he is married and not acknowledging the fact.

What would you do? — HIS EX-LOVE

DEAR EX: If I still "cared" for an "ex-love," I would not send him a card or gift unless he and his wife had sent me a wedding announcement, Christmas card or some kind of friendly greeting that bore their address.

DEAR ABBY: You casually mention that one can get rid of bad breath by brushing one's tongue as well as one's teeth. You didn't stress the point enough! Abby, I suffered with bad breath for 40 years — and went to 21 doctors for the problem, thinking my foul breath was caused by either my teeth or my stomach. It was neither. It was an accumulation of particles on my tongue!

It is unbelievable that so few doctors are aware that this nasty little problem can be solved by a simple solution. All of the well-advertised mouthwashes and breath mints to mask bad breath are temporary and therefore practically useless.

Please print this to let your millions of readers know how important it is to routinely brush the top of one's tongue as far back as can be reached with a medium-soft toothbrush. Sign me ... ABE IN CHICAGO

Many Hearing Problems Can Be Helped.

Chicago, Ill. — A free offer of special interest to those who hear but do not understand words has been announced by Beltone. A non-operating model of the smallest hearing aid Beltone has ever developed will be given absolutely free to anyone requesting it.

It's yours for the asking, so send for it now. It is not a real hearing aid, but it will show you how tiny hearing help can be. The actual aid weighs less than an eighth of an ounce, and it fits completely into the ear canal.

These models are free, so we suggest you write for yours now. Again, there is no cost, and certainly no obligation. Although a hearing aid may not help everyone, more and more people with hearing losses are being helped. For your free sample send your name, address, and phone number today to: Department 82100, Beltone Electronics Corporation, 4201 West Victoria Street, Chicago, Illinois 60646.

Supreme Court Halts Florida Execution

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court today agreed to halt the scheduled execution of Florida death row inmate Willie Jasper Darden, whose innocence has been proclaimed by death penalty opponents from New York to Moscow. The stay will remain in effect at least until the court can hear Darden's latest appeal, but there was no indication when that would happen. The action blocks any execution until further word from the court.

Darden had been scheduled to die Feb. 3 in Florida's electric chair — the sixth time his execution date had been set.

Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov, Rep. John Conyers Jr., D-Mich., American actress Margot Kidder and British rock star Peter Gabriel have joined Amnesty International in asking Gov. Bob Martinez to grant clemency to Darden.

They cite affidavits from a minister and a woman that Darden could not have been at the scene of the murder of a Lakeland furniture store owner during a September 1973 holdup.

Death penalty opponents say Darden is facing electrocution Feb. 3 at the Florida State Prison in Starke because he is black and victim James Turman was white.

"This is not a unique case," said Jaqui Hunt, spokeswoman for Amnesty International in New York.

"People think the death penalty is a quick fix for the crime problem. You can sympathize with people's wish to be secure, but when you see the people who are being executed you see they are the poor, the mentally retarded, juveniles and people who are possibly innocent," she said.

Death-penalty advocates, however, seize upon Darden's case as an example of what they call an inefficient justice system that allows dilatory defense attorneys to undermine any finality of judgment.

"I don't think any case is the right case to advocate for abolishing the death penalty," said Andrea Smith-Hillyer, the Republican governor's legal counsel for capital punishment. "The people of the state of Florida, through the Legislature, have made capital punishment the law. One case is not going to overrule the will of the people."

She said the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals found no cause to change Darden's sentence after seeing the latest affidavits proclaiming his innocence.

At age 54, Darden, who has survived an unprecedented five death warrants, is older than most of Florida's 286 death-row inmates.

Darden proclaims his innocence at every opportunity. A prolific writer, he has been called the poet of death row.

"I will never allow myself to be mentally or spiritually defeated by going to the chair," he said in a recent newspaper interview. "If I was going to accept the fact that I'm going to the electric chair, that means I accept racism and I accept injustice."

He came within seven hours of execution in 1985 before a court interceded. If he is executed this time, Darden would be the 18th person put to death in Florida since the state resumed executions nine years ago.

Opponents of capital punishment now are focusing increasing pressure on the governor, who has the power to rescind death warrants.

Sakharov, a winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, wrote to Martinez last week arguing that capital punishment has no place in a civilized society. Martinez quickly rebuffed the request for clemency.

Henderson Fire

HENDERSON, N.C. (AP) — One firefighter was injured in an early-morning blaze at a Henderson warehouse today in which flames leapt at least 50 feet above the three-story building, authorities said.

Lt. Ray Raines was in stable condition at Maria Parham Hospital, a nursing supervisor said, but she did not know how he had been hurt.

The blaze, at a warehouse owned by Commercial Seaming Co., was reported at about 4:15 a.m. Further details were not immediately available.

UNC Regroups, Tops State

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer
RALEIGH — North Carolina squandered its second-half lead but refused to let go of the game as the Tar Heels rediscovered their offense in the final two minutes to hold off North Carolina State, 77-73, Sunday in college basketball.

Ranked second nationally, UNC led by six points with 10 minutes to go, but State charged back to tie the score with 6:26 to go on a 3-point goal by Vinny Del Negro that made it 62-62.

throw attempts down the stretch to take the win.

"I was real disappointed in that stretch when they were catching up," said UNC coach Dean Smith. "We were really struggling in there."

"Then, when they did catch up, we got unbelievably good shots. We were patient."

After Del Negro tied the game, UNC came right back to take the lead on its next possession as Jeff Lebo hit two free throws to make it 64-62.

At the other end, N.C. State's Chucky Brown missed a jumper. Teammate Charles Shackelford got the rebound but was then whistled for an offensive foul to turn the ball over to the Tar Heels with 6:02 to go.

Scott Williams hit the resulting free throws and UNC held a four-point advantage at 66-62.

The teams traded possessions before Brown got the Wolfpack within two at 66-64 on a jumper with 5:11 to go.

UNC, though, quickly worked the ball into J.R. Reid, who drew Shackelford's fourth foul with 4:41 remaining and hit both free throws for a 68-64 advantage.

Quentin Jackson missed for State at the other end. Scott Williams rebounded for the Tar Heels and Kevin Madden, who had a career-high of 16 points off the bench, worked free inside for a basket to make it 70-64 with just over three and half minutes remaining.

From there, State would get no closer than the final margin.

State trailed 42-35 at the half and Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano said his team did well just to get back in the game.

"In the second half, what we challenged the kids to do was play mini games," Valvano said. "After five minutes of play, what we were trying to do was cut the seven-point lead to five points. At the 10 minute mark we wanted to cut the five-point lead down to a bucket."

"Under 10, (we wanted to) get it tied and play a seven, eight-minute game and we did that. So I was very pleased but it seemed that when we did get it there, they would make either a very good play or would get the foul when they got the ball where they wanted to."

The final minutes went in different directions for the two teams' offenses. UNC executed while State didn't.

Once the Wolfpack fell behind by more than a basket, they were forced into looking for the 3-point shot. And when that didn't fall, their comeback chances began to fade.

"The shots were just not falling," Jackson said. "We were taking good shots. If Vinny can shoot a jumper from that spot, I'll give it to him every time. The same with me. If I can shoot that shot, I'll make the majority of them. Today, they went to a zone and it threw us off balance. We came back and (then) we just missed the shots."

Neither Jackson, Del Negro nor designated 3-point artist Rodney Monroe could get State back into the game. Monroe did hit a 3-pointer with 1:31 remaining to make it 75-71, but UNC quickly countered with a bucket by Reid at the other end.

For the game, State shot 45 percent from the field while the Tar Heels hit on 66 percent of their shots. UNC also hit 23 of 26 free throw attempts.

The Wolfpack also hit on only three of 14 3-point attempts on the day.

"Now if they weren't making the foul shots, it would be obviously a different story," Valvano said. "But they are a good foul shooting team and they showed it today."

Gibbs Must Make Some Decisions

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Washington Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs still has some important roster decisions to make as the Super Bowl draws near.

"There could be some last minute adjustments," Gibbs said Sunday night shortly after the Redskins arrived at San Diego Airport. "I still want to wait (before settling on a 45-man roster)."

One week before the Redskins face the Denver Broncos, Gibbs' problems include deciding who to deactivate to make room for wide receiver Art Monk, who seems to have recovered from the knee injury that sidelined him for the past six weeks.

Also, veteran linebacker Rich Milot could fill the roster spot currently occupied by cornerback Tim Morrison, who was used as insurance in the NFC title game when it was unclear how long the injured Darrell Green could last.

Then, of course, there's the placekicking situation. Gibbs says the inconsistent Ali Haji-Sheikh is his man, but he still hasn't told Jess Atkinson to quit trying to earn the job.

"We're going with Ali unless I see something that would make me want to change my mind," Gibbs said Sunday.

Although Gibbs said the "theme" for the week ahead would be for the Redskins to "relax and enjoy" the festivities, he is intent upon making sure they don't let a good time get in the way of the task at hand.

"What we want to try to do is relax and enjoy everything, but at the same time focus on the fact that we're playing one of the most important games we'll ever be in," he said.

Gibbs well remembers the Redskins' last trip to the Super Bowl. A 38-9 loss to the Los Angeles Raiders created a sour memory of what had been a glorious 1983 season.

"You would think that going to the Super Bowl would be enough, but that was one of the toughest flights home I've ever had," Gibbs said.

Denver lost last year's Super Bowl to the New York Giants 39-20, and Gibbs figures they won't be satisfied this time unless they win.

"We only have 16 guys (from the team that lost to the Raiders) and they've probably got close to 40 from last year's team," Gibbs said. "That's a plus on their side. But I'm hoping our 16 will be able to share it with the younger guys."

Madden Gives Heels A Boost

RALEIGH — When North Carolina's Kevin Madden realized that North Carolina State had decided not to pay as much attention to him defensively, he knew he had to take advantage of the situation.

"They didn't guard me as much as I thought they would," Madden said after scoring 16 points and pulling down six rebounds in the Tar Heels' 77-73 win over the Wolfpack Sunday.

"The guys got me the ball and I said if they're not going to guard me then I can go as far as I want to and hopefully somebody will pick me up and I can dish off to the other guys. They got there late on a couple of shots so I just went in and took my shots."

And for a Tar Heel team that was hampered offensively by the foul problems of big men J.R. Reid and Scott Williams, Madden's contribution was a big key.

"They were giving J.R. and Lebo a lot of attention and that's when Kevin can get it going," said UNC coach Dean Smith. "In the second half we put him (Madden) in for defensive (reasons). He came up with a rebound and bothered (N.C. State's Rodney) Monroe's (3-point) shot (attempts)."

Madden hit two key baskets in the final minutes and also came up with a key rebound and loose ball to help UNC hold off a rallying Wolfpack team.

"They made it tough," Madden said. "When they tied it up (at 62-62 with 6:25 remaining) our guys didn't get down. We just said, 'hey there is still a lot of time on the clock.' So just go out and play aggressive 'd' (defense) and hit the boards hard."

"They were overplaying, they were holding us a lot. What we had to do was just concentrate and really play hard. I thought we did that at the end."

And it was a sweet victory for Madden, a 6-5 sophomore from Staunton, Va., who sat out last year in order to shore up his academic troubles.

He was eligible under NCAA standards but not under coach Dean Smith's. He was given the option of either transferring or sitting out the 1986-87 season. He chose the latter and hasn't once looked back.

"It's a real big game on my part because (my) freshman year, we lost to them here," he said. "Last year, I wasn't a part of that (a 96-79 UNC victory) so this year I wanted to come in here and get the win. That makes it sweet for all of us."

"It was a really big win for us. I think the guys really concentrated and after the Duke game (a 70-69 loss at home) wanted to come in and play well."

And Madden couldn't have picked a better time to come through for the Heels. With Reid and Williams both saddled with four fouls in the second half, it was left to Madden and 6-8 redshirt freshman Pete Chilcutt (eight points) to provide some quality minutes off the bench.

"With me, I can play J.R.'s position too and guard a bigger guy, and when they go out I really have to dig hard on defense to make up for my lack of size. When I went in and played Shack (N.C. State's 6-10 Charles Shackelford) in the second half, I just wanted to get in front and keep him from catching the ball."

"We look for J.R., Jeff (Lebo) and also Scott to score a lot of points. It's still a team game. If they can't get the shots we try to help them out by getting the shots ourselves."

UNLV, Georgetown Win In A Pair Of Crazy Games

By The Associated Press
Georgetown put up a crazy shot. Nevada-Las Vegas put up an exceptional defense.

Together, they spelled victories Sunday, Georgetown stopping 14th-ranked Syracuse 69-68 at the Carrier Dome and Nevada-Las Vegas handing No. 3 Temple its first loss of the season, 59-58.

Charlie Smith hit a twisting, underhanded layup as time expired to give No. 15 Georgetown its victory. For Smith, the shot was routine.

"My teammates, they are not amazed anymore," Smith said. "At first they were amazed, but now it's an everyday thing. I always throw up something crazy."

No. 8 Nevada-Las Vegas held Temple scoreless in the final four minutes while scoring eight straight points to nip the Owls.

"It's just a miracle for us to win this game," UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian said. "With seven minutes to play, our defense went up one notch higher. We got into total denial."

Brothers Karl and Keith James each hit 3-pointers and Anthony Todd sank a 10-foot jumper with two seconds left to give the Runnin' Rebels the victory. Both Keith James and Todd are reserves.

"It was the people we didn't expect to hurt us that hurt us," said Temple coach John Chaney, whose team fell to 14-1.

In other Top Twenty games Sunday, No. 1 Arizona defeated UCLA 86-74, No. 2 North Carolina defeated No. 20 North Carolina State 77-73, and No. 7 Michigan defeated Indiana 72-60.

On Saturday, No. 4 Kentucky beat Louisiana State 76-61, No. 5 Purdue downed Louisville 91-85, No. 11 Oklahoma edged No. 6 Pitt 86-83, No. 9 Duke routed Wake Forest 103-70, Missouri topped No. 10 Iowa St. 119-93, No. 12 Brigham Young defeated New Mexico 89-82, No. 13 Illinois trounced Northwestern 79-48, Notre Dame beat No. 16 Kansas 80-76, Colorado State downed No. 17 Wyoming 54-49, No. 18 Texas-El Paso edged Utah 56-53, and No. 19 Iowa beat Dartmouth 102-87.

No. 15 Georgetown 69, No. 14 Syracuse 68
"It was a crazy shot, but he's consistent with it," Mark

Tillmon said of Smith's game-winning basket. Once I saw the ball in Smitty's hands, I saw him look at the clock. I pretty much knew what he was going to do. That's his shot."

The victory snapped a three-game losing streak for Georgetown, which erased a nine-point deficit in the final seven minutes.

"Maybe it's our own fault that we made it that close, but we both played real hard," Syracuse center Rony Seikaly said. "We lost six out of seven last year on free throws and last-second shots, so it's definitely getting frustrating. But we'll be back. It's not the end of the world."

Smith had 13 points to lead the Hoyas, now 2-3 in the Big East Conference and 12-4 overall. Seikaly had 22 for Syracuse, which dropped to 3-3 and 13-5.

No. 8 Nevada-Las Vegas 59, No. 3 Temple 58
UNLV was Temple's first Top 20 opponent this season. Now Brigham Young remains the nation's only major college team still undefeated.

"They're a big-play team and they got the big plays today," Chaney said of the winners.

After Temple's Duane Causwell missed a free throw with 17 seconds left and the Owls leading 58-57, Tarkanian decided to let his team play, resulting in Todd's winning jumper. Temple took a timeout after Todd's shot, but a desperation pass slipped through Mark Macon's hands as time expired.

UNLV, 17-1, finished the game without its two leading scorers, Jarvis Basnight and Gerald Paddio. Basnight, who had 15 points, fouled out with 4:01 remaining. Paddio, who scored 14, left the game with an injury with about two minutes left.

Macon led Temple with 19 points.

No. 1 Arizona 86, UCLA 74

Sean Elliott's 27 points led Arizona and the Wildcats withstood a late UCLA rally to beat the Bruins in a Pacific-10 Conference game. After falling behind for only the second time in the game, 66-64, Arizona outscored UCLA 17-4 in a 4½-minute span to regain control with 1:03 left.

Sheer Intensity

Young Advice Spurs Haas To Hope Title

INDIAN WELLS, Calif. (AP) — Jay Haas had his uncle, former Masters champion Bob Goaly, walking with him when he won the Bob Hope Classic. But it was a few gentle words from a much younger member of the family that Haas was heading Sunday as he ground out a 2-shot victory. "I was nervous" early in the morning, Haas said, "and I called Jan (his wife). She put the kids on — I didn't know it but she told them I was nervous — and Jay Jr., he's 6, said 'why are you nervous, Daddy?'" "I got to thinking about that. Why be nervous? I kept it in mind all day," Haas said.

His calm and composure were tested by the pressure of a narrow lead — "if you're back in the pack you don't have the fear of failure," Haas said. But a string of 10 consecutive pars and a closing birdie were enough to secure the seventh title of Haas' 12-year PGA Tour career. With it came a $180,000 winners' share of the $1 million purse.

The victory, on a 22-under-par 338 in this 5-day, 90-hole event, was no particular surprise. But the method of victory was. "There's no way in the world I would have thought a 70 would be good enough to win," said Haas, who entered the final round with a one-shot lead over Bob Tway and two over Paul Azinger.

"Nobody was able to make a big move at me. I'm a little surprised. And I'm very fortunate. "Bob had been playing well and Paul was due for a hot day. They've been Player of the Year the last two years. Guys like that don't back off," Haas said.

But Tway couldn't get anything going. And Azinger suffered an embarrassment with his putter, easing Haas' task and making his 2-under-par final round more than enough to win.

"You can sense when a guy isn't 100 percent. Bob wasn't," Haas said. "I just didn't play as well as I had earlier in the week," Tway said. "To tell the truth, it wasn't really spectacular golf by anybody out there. But Jay did what he had to do to win."

It was considerably less than spectacular for Azinger, who took a fat 75 that included a 5-putt triple-bogey on the fourth hole and a 4-putt double-bogey on the 11th.

"I tried on every stroke. I just couldn't get it in the hole. I was embarrassed," said Azinger, who went to a 75 and dropped back to a tie for 10th. David Edwards came on with a closing, 5-under-par 67 at Indian Wells and finished second, worth $108,000, at 340.

"I'm surprised. Those three guys were so far out in front, I didn't think any of the rest of us had much of a shot at it," Edwards said. Tway was another shot back at 341 after matching par 72.

Payne Stewart, with a closing 65, and Mark O'Meara, with a 69, shared fourth at 342.

Wilander Takes Australian Open Title

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Pat Cash and Mats Wilander agreed they both played great tennis in the finals of the Australian Open — all 4½ hours of it.

Cash was all set to celebrate the opening of the $60 million national tennis center by becoming the first Aussie to win the men's singles at the Open in 12 years.

Wilander, however, had plenty of time for other ideas. With 15,000 fans at the glittering new complex cheering Cash on, Wilander won Sunday's marathon final.

The Swede won the third Australian title of his career by beating Cash 6-3, 6-7 (3-7), 3-6, 6-1, 8-6 in a match that lasted 4 hours, 28 minutes. Rain delays accounted for an additional 52 minutes.

Wilander, who had lost his previous four Grand Slam matches against Cash, was leading 4-1 in the second set when the match was halted by rain. After play resumed, Cash rallied to win the set in a tiebreaker.

"I played the best tennis of my career in the first two sets and I don't know how I lost the second," Wilander said. "But that's one of Cash's strengths. He came back and that's why he is going to be one of the great players."

Wilander took a 2-0 lead in the final set before Cash rallied to even it at 6-all. Wilander broke Cash in the next game and then held serve to close out the match.

"I felt I played great tennis but he was just too good," said Cash, the fourth seed.

"I'm not greatly disappointed, although I obviously wanted to win," Cash said. "You cannot play the best tennis of your life every day. There are only a few points between the top players in the world and one day it will go one way, another day the other."

Wilander said he was at the top of his game because of the competition. "It is a long time since I've seen the top four players (Stefan Edberg and Ivan Lendl) in the world so intense to win a tournament," Wilander, who was seeded third, said. "All four of us felt we could win it and that's why it feels so good to succeed."

Wilander had to rally from a two sets to one deficit to take the fifth Grand Slam title of his career after playing brilliantly for the first 11 games and then watching Cash take control. It was Wilander's first Grand Slam victory since he won the French Open in 1985. He had lost three Grand Slam finals since then.

Wilander, 23, pocketed $105,000 from the $1.9 million pot plus a $50,000 bonus. Cash earned $52,500 plus a $25,000 bonus.

Cash had been bidding to become the first Australian to win the title since Mark Edmondson in 1976.

The Swede previously won the Australian Open in 1983 and '84. His compatriot Edberg won it in 1985 and '87. There was no Open in 1986 because of a switch of dates from December to January.

Swedes now have won the event five straight times. Wilander credited his hard work in training over the past few months for his victory.

"I couldn't have won this match six or seven months ago," he said. "I feel a lot stronger, particularly with my serve."

Cash, the defending Wimbledon champ, was beaten in the final for the second successive year. Last year, he lost to Edberg in five sets.

While Wilander was celebrating Sunday night, Cash was packing for a trip to Mexico City. He was to join his Australian Davis Cup teammates in Mexico on Tuesday.

He leads a six-man squad to face Mexico in a first-round match that runs from Feb. 5-7.

The tournament was played for the first time at the plush new complex in downtown Melbourne on synthetic rebound ace courts. The Open previously was played on grass at nearby Kooyong.

Reid Says He Plans To Be Back Next Year

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina sophomore J.R. Reid said Sunday he has no plans to leave the Tar Heels and turn professional at the end of the season.

Reid, a 6-foot-9, 250-pound forward who scored 17 points and had eight rebounds in Sunday's 77-73 victory over North Carolina State, said he had discussed the situation with his parents, who both teach school in the Tidewater, Va., area.

"My plans are to stay for the full four years," he told The News and Observer. "I want to get this thing cleared up. I'll be back."

Reid's comments were sparked by comments from North Carolina coach Dean Smith that Reid was at least considering turning pro early. Smith said Sunday in an televised interview that he had encouraged the move.

"I've always said, if you can be financially secure for life and come back and get a degree, why not do that?" Smith said, but he added that Reid's parents decided Saturday they wanted J.R. to complete his four years at North Carolina.

NMPA Hands Out Annual Awards

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Charlotte Observer motorsports writer Tom Higgins and Speedway Scene photographer Raymond Shough won the top press awards given annually by the National Motorsports Press Association, it was announced Sunday during the organization's yearly convention.

Higgins, who has covered auto racing for the Charlotte newspaper for more than 15 years, earned the George Cunningham award by winning in two of the four areas of competition. Higgins won first place in spot news writing and took second in the feature category.

The award is named in honor of the late George Cunningham, former motorsports writer for the Charlotte Observer and the Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

Shough claimed the Howard O'Reilly award by winning honors in two of the three areas of competition for photographers. Shough was third in action photography and first in the picture story category.

The award is named after the late Howard O'Reilly, a photographer for Stock Car Racing magazine, who died in an auto accident.

Football Is King In Denver

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Denver is like the small town in Texas where life stops when the high school football team plays. Only Denver is 1,000 times bigger and the team is the National Football League Broncos.

Washington is what the small town in Texas would be like if it were the state capitol.

It's a shame that only 60,000 or so people will be able to cram their way into Jack Murphy Stadium next Sunday for Super Bowl XXII.

For given a big enough facility, at least half the populations of the two opposing cities would be there — it's no exaggeration to say that this year's NFL championship game has brought together the two cities that are most rabid about their pro football teams.

It's not just that they fill their stadiums every week — seven other NFL teams are also sold out when each season begins. It's the way the world revolves around the team, like the Denver judge who appears in court wearing orange after a Bronco victory or the well-publicized horseback ride by a blue-painted naked lady down a main Denver thoroughfare last week to win two tickets to the Super Bowl.

"I thought Chicago was something until I got to Denver for the first time," says a Chicago-born writer, who began covering pro football this season for the first time.

Chicago? A town that's supported losing baseball for years but a pro football mecca only for the past three years, a period in which the Bears are 43-9.

On the day that Walter Payton set a career NFL rushing record in 1984, Soldier Field didn't even sell out — fans stayed home to watch the Cubs lose the deciding game of the National League playoffs to San Diego. Denver and Washington are different.

A reporter for the Washington Post, given the Redskins beat, is told it's the second most important on the paper — second only to the White House. While a sign reading "Washington baseball" hangs at RFK Stadium for Redskins games, the fans there have already driven two franchises out of town with non-support.

But the Redskins have packed them in for 20 years even as a loser.

In 1966, when they were one of the worst teams in the league, they began a string of 161 sellouts that ended with the first replacement game during this year's strike. An Heels Win ...

Down the stretch, both teams' front courts were hampered by foul trouble. Reid and Williams had four each for UNC, but played the final eight minutes without picking up their fifth. For State, Shackelford fouled out while Brown had four, including three in the first half.

"I really wasn't able to do what I like to do defensively because of the way the game was being called," Reid said. "I was trying to play pretty good defense and stay out of foul trouble which I've been fortunate to do all year long, but I think it hurt both teams the way the game was being called in the first half."

UNC led through most of the game, but State never allowed the Heels to get too far ahead, consistently battling back to keep within reach of the Tar Heels.

The Wolfpack relied on the front-court scoring of Shackelford and Brown, who had 26 and 16 points, respectively.

North Carolina moves to 14-2 overall and 3-1 in the Atlantic Coast Conference. State drops to 10-4 and 2-2.

The game marked the first time that Reid and teammate Steve Bucknall had played a game in Raleigh since being charged with assault on a N.C. State student last October.

As part of the settlement, the players agreed to pay the student's medical bills and Reid will also perform some community service work.

But despite being the object of the crowd's scorn, Reid led the Tar Heels in scoring with 17 points. Bucknall had eight points.

invitation to owner Jack Kent Cooke's box in a celebrity-made city is akin to an invitation to a private dinner at the White House and reporters trying to get to the locker room after games often have to line up at the elevator behind U.S. senators.

"The football team is community glue," says columnist George Will, a noted Cubs baseball fan.

"That's true for two reasons. One is that it's a racially divided city. The second is that what people think Washington is composed of people from elsewhere. The town needs something that represents the permanent daily life of an everyday city."

Denver's mania stems from a different source — it's basically the only game in town. It's the only major-league pro sports franchise other than the NBA's Nuggets and it's hard to get steamed up for 82 games.

Like Washington, there are no tickets to be had — season tickets are fought over in wills and divorce settlements and the Broncos have a waiting list of over 17,000, with each request representing four tickets. In one of the smallest NFL markets there are five nightly sports talk shows on radio and most of the calls are about the Broncos, even in the spring and summer.

Moreover, as a relatively remote, relatively small city and the only NFL city (not counting Phoenix) in the mountain time zone, Denver fans are acutely aware of what the outside world thinks.

"When the Broncos play in the Super Bowl, they are carrying Denver on their sleeves," says Jim Saccomano, the team's director of media relations. "It's like the U.S. in the Olympics. They are representing a city, a state and a time zone."

Last year, when the Broncos played the Giants in the Super Bowl, Broncos fans were upset that New York was a double-digit favorite.

Broncos Expect Redskins To Try To Confuse Them

DENVER (AP) — Blitzes, stunts, all kinds of odd formations and something different on almost every play to create confusion. That's what the Washington Redskins' defense employed in its last game, and what the Denver Broncos' offense expects to see in the Super Bowl.

The Redskins will be looking to frustrate Denver's big-play quarterback, John Elway, much like they did Minnesota's Wade Wilson in a 17-10 victory over the Vikings in the NFC championship game.

And it will be up to the Broncos' offensive linemen, in particular, to ruin that strategy.

This is no minor plot in the overall drama that is the Super Bowl. This is nuts-and-bolts stuff.

Alex Gibbs, the Broncos offensive line coach, says the outcome of the game will hinge on how well the Broncos' line controls the Redskins' two defensive ends, Dexter Manley and Charles Mann.

"That's the game," he said. "If we can control them, then we've got a chance. If we don't, we're going to get beat."

Adds offensive tackle Dave Studdard, who will be blocking against Manley most of the game, "If I don't do a good job on Dexter, it will be a long day for John."

The Redskins devised a workable defensive scheme in the NFC championship game, first containing the scrambling of Wilson and then sacking him eight times.

Denver figures the Redskins will do much of the same in the Super Bowl, bringing Manley and Mann hard on the outside to keep Elway in the pocket, and then sending tackles Dave Butz and Darryl Grant up the middle. Elway tends to be most dangerous when he can get outside and buy time to find a receiver, often for a big play.

Studdard, one of Denver's most consistent offensive linemen, has faced Manley before, during a 31-30 Denver victory late in the 1986 season.

"I remember he gave me some problems early in the game," Studdard said. "I really had my hands full for the first five minutes or so until I got used to him. I was able to make some adjustments that worked better."

Dawson, Bell Accept MVP Awards

NEW YORK (AP) — There will be no blank contracts for Andre Dawson this year.

Dawson, along with Toronto's George Bell, attended the New York baseball writers' gala Sunday night to accept their Most Valuable Player awards and a pat on the back.

After hitting .276 with 18 homers and 78 runs batted in for the Montreal Expos in 1986, Dawson became a free agent.

He wanted to play for the Chicago Cubs, but their offer was much less than the Expos'.

When Dawson and agent Dick Moss didn't receive any other attractive offers, they went back to then-Cubs general manager Dallas Green with a blank contract and told him to pencil in a figure.

Dawson got $500,000 and an additional $200,000 in bonuses and had an MVP season for a last-place team.

"If I would have been Roger Maris' record when I was 34 or 33," Jackson said, "I would have broken the record because I would have known how to deal with the pressures of the media. I would have known how to handle myself."

George Steinbrenner was there to make the presentation.

"Reggie's one of the greatest winners in athletics," the Boss said. "When it comes time to vote for the Hall of Fame, anybody who votes against Reggie doesn't know what winning is all about."

Backstage, before the dinner, Steinbrenner was asked about Kirk Gibson, who became a free agent Friday.

Does Steinbrenner want Gibson for left field?

"I haven't thought about it," Steinbrenner said. "I've already signed two free agents this winter (Jack Clark and John Candelaria). I just got back from Florida and I'll have to discuss it with (general manager) Lou Piniella."

Andre Dawson, who received the NL MVP award, toyed with Steinbrenner at the ballroom-length dais.

"Last year, at this time I didn't have a job and I still don't have a job," Dawson said.

Steinbrenner started crooking his finger and pointing to himself as if he wanted Dawson for Yankee Stadium.

Ueberroth covered his eyes so as not to see the playful tampering.

Dawson stayed playful.

"I told them not to go to arbitration with me," Dawson said of his $2-million filing against the Cubs, "because for the first time in the history of arbitration there is going to be a black arbitrator. I'm all out of blank contracts this year."

He was referring to the blank contract his agent, Dick Moss, gave the Cubs last spring. Then GM-Dallas Green filled in $500,000 with $200,000 in bonuses, all of which Dawson earned.

NEW YORK (AP) — The who's who of baseball turned out for the black-tie writers' bash, from Commissioner Peter Ueberroth to NL President A. Bartlett Giamatti to legends Joe DiMaggio and Hank Aaron, and MVP's Andre Dawson and George Bell.

The back-dais talk Sunday night was of Friday's collusion ruling. When Ueberroth walked in, that's what people in the hallway asked about.

"I don't think there's any collusion but we'll have to see," Ueberroth said as he walked into the pre-dinner reception for the stars. "I think the arbitrator's doing a good job."

Reggie Jackson was the only big name honored to miss this dinner. He was to receive an award for long and meritorious service but got stuck in a snowstorm in Wichita, Kansas.

He made his thoughts known in a filmed message, talking about 1969, when he had 37 homers at the All-Star break and finished with 47.

He led the majors with 137 RBI and tied for the home run lead with 49.

Dawson, who played 11 years with Montreal, had finished runner-up twice in the NL MVP voting.

"When I finished runner-up twice in a five-year period, I tried to visualize what it would take to win the MVP... first of all I had to get out of Canada," Dawson joked. "They would enjoy the game a lot more if we played the game with a hockey puck."

Dawson said he thought he was capable of winning the MVP award again next season — but this time for MVP wages.

Dawson requested $2 million in arbitration last Tuesday and the Cubs have offered $1.85 million.

"Thanks to all the people here tonight, and to the old players that made me a good player because I case and the first $1 million case with Fernando Valenzuela, was at the dinner. He's in town to prepare for the salary arbitration hearings.

His number-one client, Dawson, didn't try to hide his dislike for Canada, where he spent 11 seasons playing in Montreal.

"I had to get out of Canada, first of all (to win the MVP)," joked Dawson, who wore red-tie instead of black. "It feels good to come to a dinner and not to wonder if I had to speak in French or not."

He didn't think the Montreal fans had the proper appreciation for baseball.

"They would have enjoyed it a lot more if they played it with a hockey puck," Dawson quipped.

George Bell of Toronto came to receive his MVP award. He and Dawson received prizes from Arby's, too, for leading their leagues in runs batted in.

"I'd like to thank Arby's," Bell said. "It was my favorite restaurant

'Last Emperor' Sweeps Golden Globes Awards

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer
BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — "The Last Emperor" reigned over the foreign press corps' Golden Globe Awards despite tough competition by much-acclaimed blockbusters that have Oscar prognosticators scratching their heads.

The four trophies — for dramatic movie, direction, screenplay and score — gives "The Last Emperor" hope as Hollywood prepares to cast ballots for Academy Award nominees. The ballots will be arriving this week.

"The Last Emperor" is now the movie that beat out "Cry Freedom," "Empire of the Sun," "Fatal Attraction," "La Bamba" and "Nuts."

The Hollywood Foreign Press Association also bestowed Golden Globes on "Moonstruck," deemed the year's best comedy film, and on television's "L.A. Law" as the top dramatic show and "The Golden Girls" as TV's best comedy.

Golden Globes for 1987 film and television productions were presented Saturday night by the 88-member press group.

Michael Douglas, star of "Wall Street," and Sally Kirkland, star of "Anna," won dramatic acting honors, while comedy acting awards went to Cher for "Moonstruck" and Robin Williams for "Good Morning, Vietnam."

"Hope and Glory," John Boorman's reminiscence of his boyhood in war-torn Britain, won the best comedy or musical film category.

Bernardo Bertolucci won the direction award for "The Last Emperor" and shared the screenplay honor with Mark Peploe. The panoramic history of modern China also earned David Byrne and Cong Su the Golden Globe for original score.

The Swedish comedy "My Life as a Dog" was best foreign language film.

The award for original song was won by "(I've Had) The Time of My Life," from "Dirty Dancing," written by Franke Previte, Donald Markowitz and John DeNicola.

The press group gave its supporting film performers awards to Olympia Dukakis, the feisty mother in "Moonstruck," and Sean Connery, the incorruptible policeman in "The Untouchables."

Clint Eastwood received the honorary Cecil B. DeMille Award.

Television's top drama Golden Globe went to "L.A. Law," and cast member Susan Dey won the trophy as top dramatic actress.

Richard Kiley of "A Year in the Life" won the dramatic actor award for television.

"The Golden Girls," NBC's saga of four women as they advance in years in Florida, was named best musical or comedy television series.

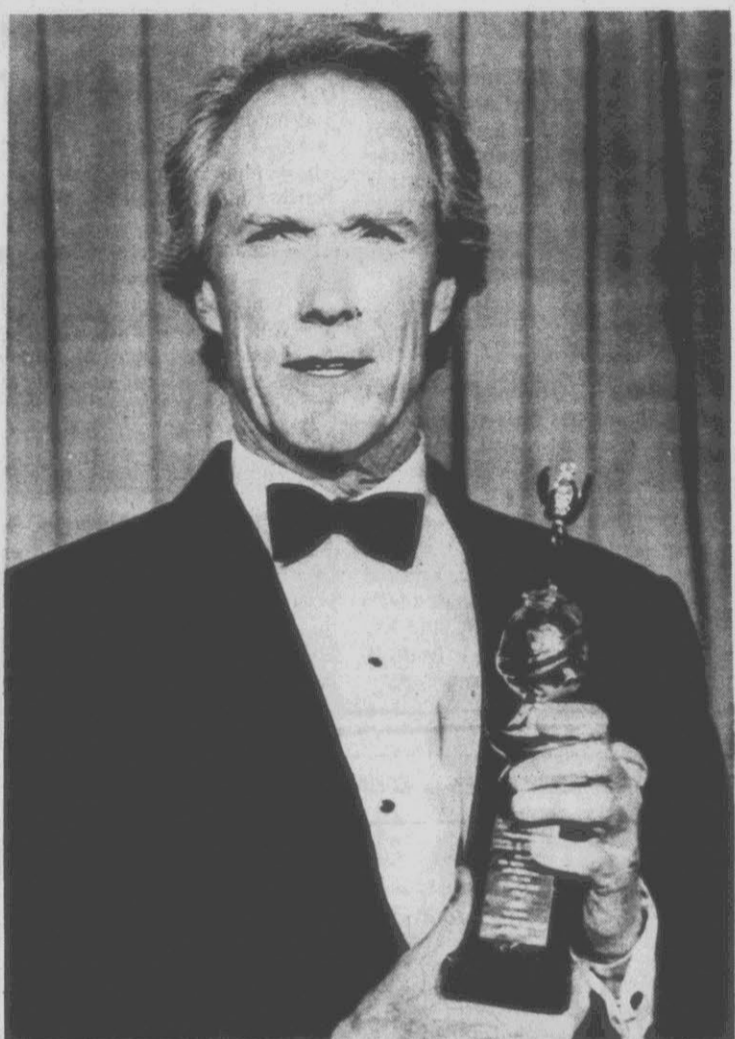

British comedian Tracey Ullman and the sardonic Dabney Coleman scored as best star performers in a musical or comedy TV series.

"I'm thrilled to bits," gushed Miss Ullman, chosen for her Fox Broadcasting series "The Tracey Ullman Show."

Coleman, selected for his role as the opinionated sports writer whose private life is in disarray on the ABC-TV show "Slap Maxwell Story," glanced at his gold-plated trophy and cracked: "Actually I thought it was a little bigger than this."

Robin Williams Gives HBO Edge In Cable TV Awards

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Home Box Office, with the help of Robin Williams' comedy special and the thriller series "The Hitchhiker," led with 15 wins during the ninth annual ACE Awards honoring cable television.

The Discovery Channel received the cable industry's highest honor for a week-long experiment last year during which it carried live Soviet TV. "Russia: Live from the Inside" featured news programs, cartoons, rock videos, game shows and movies, which carried English subtitles.

HBO won 15 of the 35 awards presented, while the Arts & Entertainment Cable Network earned five to finish second. Showtime was third with three and SuperStation TBS and the Disney Channel tied with two apiece.

The Award for Cable Excellence presentations were televised on HBO live during a two-hour show Sunday night.

Williams won three ACE awards — best comedy special, best performance and writing in a comedy special for HBO's "On Location: Robin Williams - An Evening at the Met."

HBO's "The Hitchhiker," also won in three categories — best dramatic actor, writing and directing.

Other popular comedians also won ACE awards. Billy Crystal was named along with Paul Flaherty as best directors for HBO's "The Lost Minutes of Billy Crystal," and Garry Shandling and Alan Zweibel won for their comedy writing in "It's Garry Shandling's Show - The Graduate."

Timothy Bottoms was named best actor for "The Hitchhiker — The Joker," and Barbara Babcock was named the best actress in a dramatic series for "Alfred Hitchcock Presents: Conversation Over a Corpse" on USA Network.

John Gielgud and Googie Withers, stars of A&E's "Time After Time," won the top acting trophies for movie or miniseries, and the cable net-work's "Hotel De Lac" was judged the top movie or miniseries.

In comedy, Lucy Webb of HBO's "Not Necessarily the News" was named best actress in a comedy series and Paul Eddington of A&E's "Yes, Prime Minister," won for best comic actor in a series.

"Blackadder II" on A&E was named best comedy series.

The top dramatic special was "HBO Showcase: Conspiracy: The Trial of the Chicago 8," and the best music special was Showtime's "Paul Simon's Graceland: The African Concert."

Jennifer Holiday received an ACE for best performance in a music special for "Cinemax Sessions: A Gospel Session: Everybody Say Yeah!"

Larry King was named best program interviewer for CNN's "Larry King Live," and Hal Holbrook was named best documentary host for SuperStation TBS's "Portrait of America."

The best news special or series was TBS' "Jihad: Afghanistan's Holy War" and HBO's "America Undercover: Drunk & Deadly" won for best documentary special.

ESPN's "The America's Cup - Challenge Down Under" was named best sports series and HBO's "World Championship Boxing: Marvelous Marvin Hagler vs. Sugar Ray Leonard" won the best sports special ACE.

The ACE awards were established after cable programs and performers were excluded from broadcast television's Emmy Awards.

The winners were chosen by the 1,540 members of the National Academy of Cable Programming, established in March 1985 to promote excellence in cable TV programming.

However, the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences announced in November that original prime-time cable shows that reach more than 50 percent of TV households may compete in the 40th annual primetime Emmy Awards this year.

"My teddy bear doesn't HAVE to talk. We have ESP."

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY, Jan. 26

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Do some things to increase your attractiveness as well as your possessions early in the day. If you have an opportunity to become involved in any new financial obligations, be sure to consider them carefully.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): If you spend any money this morning, do so carefully. Make sure your car is in good running order before you drive anywhere tonight.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Do whatever is necessary to improve your health. Some reliable friends can help you greatly in handling some practical affairs.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Help out a friend who is having a hard time, but keep anything which transpires confidential. Be kind and considerate to your mate.

MOON CHILDREN spoiled. Smile more and gain your aims easily.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): If you get involved in any credit or civic matters today, be sure to keep your wits about you. Be appreciative of some help from a superior.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): Don't be taken in by a flashy newcomer; this person has your worst interests in mind. Arrange tomorrow's schedule tonight.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Avoid a business acquaintance who may feel cheated in some way, and later all will be cleared up nicely. Don't be harsh with your mate.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Get an early start this morning and arrange a time to have a discussion with an associate. Decide which projects require your attention.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Try to make your surroundings at work more pleasant and efficient with the help of a co-worker. Enjoy the home life tonight.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): This morning is a good time to plan future entertainment, but cut down on expenses this evening. Show your mate how devoted you are.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Plan how to make your home more attractive this morning. Be sure to stay within your budget while shopping this evening.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Be sure you are on time for any early appointments so you can gain greater benefits. Drive very carefully this evening.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠8762 ♥72 ♦952 ♣AJ72
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
 2 NT Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Partner has issued a game invitation while showing a balanced hand. Since you have a dead minimum, you certainly intend refusing. However, you are still obliged to find the best contract and, with a known nine-card fit, the suit contract should be better. Correct to three spades.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠Q76 ♥95 ♦K1076532 ♣8
 Partner opens the bidding with three no trump. What action do you take?
 A.—Partner is describing a balanced hand of 25-27 points. If he has diamond support and top controls, slam should be a good proposition. Bid four diamonds, with the intention of bidding slam if partner shows interest. However, be prepared to end in four no trump if he does not.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠KQ8652 ♥Q10 ♦2 ♣QJ104
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 2 ♥ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
 3 ♦ Pass 3 ♣ Pass
 4 ♥ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Even though you have a partial misfit, your two honors in partner's first-bid suit make your hand too good to pass. A raise to five hearts is least you can do. Remember, partner has shown a minimum of six hearts on this auction.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠A5 ♥AQ87632 ♦7 ♣J92
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♦ Pass 1 ♥ Pass
 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—You have only one story to tell, and you may as well tell it quickly. Bid four hearts. That not only describes the length of your suit, but your opening bid strength as well.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠Q5 ♥AKQ10943 ♦AQ6 ♣5
 Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you bid now?
 A.—We would take our shot at four hearts. You are probably going to get a diamond lead, which will bring your total to nine. As little as a diamond ruff or the king of spades in partner's hand would produce the 10th trick.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠QJ9 ♥KQ1096 ♦QJ8 ♣63
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 1 ♥ Pass
 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—You don't have to tell partner that you have a reasonable five-card heart suit. It is more important to advise him of your balanced hand that needs only a bit more than a minimum opening to produce game. The way to do that is to invite with two no trump.

WE WANT YOU TO PUT OUR NAME IN LIGHTS.

Quite simply, we're out to make First Federal the only show in town. And so every member of our cast is working to outshine the other banks. Doing more. Trying harder. Going further to give you star treatment.

And, in the coming weeks, we'll even invite our toughest most important critics—our customers—to tell us how we're doing.

An all-out attempt to get your business. To earn your business. And to keep your business.

So if you're tired of the same old song and dance, come to First Federal.

And witness a performance you're not likely to forget.

First
