Baker Says Meese Still Has Reagan's Support

By DONNA CASSATA
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is concerned about a criminal investigation of Attorney General Edwin Meese's role in an Iraqi oil pipeline project, but the president isn't about to throw his longtime friend "to the lions," a White House official says.
White House chief of staff Howard Baker said Sunday that the president continues to support Meese, one of Reagan's closest associates since his days as governor of California.

"He continues to have full confidence in his attorney general," Baker said. "I see no reason on earth for the president to take any action unless and until it's made to appear that Mr. Meese has done something wrong."
A close friend of Meese, E. Robert Wallach, had a financial interest in the Iraqi project and sent the attorney general a memo citing a plan to pay off a top Israeli official in return for a guarantee that Israel would not bomb the pipeline, sources close to the investigation have confirmed. The sources spoke on condition they not be identified.

The 1977 Foreign Corrupt Practices Act generally forbids companies and individuals from making payments to foreign government officials to secure help in obtaining or retaining business. Under that act, the attorney general is responsible for prosecuting American citizens or companies that try to bribe foreign officials.
James Rocop, an attorney for Meese, has said the attorney general had only a limited involvement with the project and "did not approach any Israeli official with respect to the pipeline matter."

But today's New York Times quotes an unidentified source who said Meese wrote a letter in 1985 to Shimon Peres, who was prime minister of Israel, after Peres had written to Meese expressing Israeli support for construction of the pipeline. The Times said it could not be learned what Meese said in his letter to Peres.
The Times on Sunday had reported that the independent counsel probing the matter told White House officials that Meese had played "an important and sustained role" in the $1 billion Iraqi pipeline project, which never came to fruition.

Baker, appearing on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation" and in comments to reporters later, refused to comment on the details of the investigation, except to say that independent counsel James C. McKay had briefed him and White House counsel A.B. Culvahouse "as a matter of courtesy" to Reagan.
A spokesman for McKay, Jack

Barrett, said the independent counsel's office would not comment.
Baker said McKay's investigation is receiving "full cooperation" from the executive branch, but that the president will not jump to conclusions about Meese.
Asked if there has been any discussion of Meese stepping aside as the investigation unfolds, Baker shot back, "There isn't any."
"What kind of a signal would it send that based on newspaper ac-

Election Suit Settlement Said OK'd By Pitt Board

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer
Pitt County may have a new "6-3" method of electing members of the board of commissioners in the near future, according to an announcement made at a meeting of the board this morning.
Raleigh lawyer Mike Crowell, a spokesman for the board, said following a short executive session commissioners have agreed to a settlement of a suit filed in U.S. Eastern District Court in mid-December by the Pitt County Concerned Citizens for Justice and several individuals. The suit challenges the present method of electing six commissioners by at-large vote.
The suit also challenged a "6-3" plan — struck down by the U.S. Justice Department in late-December — which would have seen

Farmville Bypass Contract In Works

A contract for the first segment of the U.S. 264 bypass of Farmville may be awarded Feb. 12, according to Randy Doub of the state Board of Transportation.
In addition, Doub said "if the weather cooperates," a segment of the highway between Greenville and Washington could open in about three weeks.
A contract for the grading, drainage and construction of structures on the first segment of the U.S. 264 Farmville bypass is expected to be awarded when the North Carolina Board of Transportation meets in Raleigh Feb. 12., according to Doub, who said that action will be a significant milestone on the 264 project. He said after that segment, along with the four-lane section of U.S. 264 between Wilson and Greenville now open to traffic, the next priority is the prompt construction and completion of the Farmville and northwest Greenville bypasses.
The project, estimated to cost $5.3 million, begins just east of state road 1311 in Greene County and extends to east of U.S. 258 in Pitt County. Doub said that the project is scheduled for contract-letting in January, 1989. A paving contract on the entire portion would then be let in late 1990, with the

Authority Preparing To Hire Director

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer
The Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitor's Authority — which met for the first time in August after being created by an act of the General Assembly in 1987 — hopes to hire an executive director and open an office by March 1, according to the authority's chairman.

Rudy Alexander, director of university unions at East Carolina University and chairman of the authority, said the past several months have been busy ones for the authority's 12 members — organizing the authority and "educating ourselves on what we need to be doing."
Officers have been elected — Alexander was appointed chairman by the board of county commissioners — bylaws, rules and regulations have been adopted, a job description for an executive director has been prepared and "we're finalizing policies to govern the day-to-day operations ... before our new executive director comes on board," Alexander said.

The director's position has been advertised and more than 50 applications were received, according to Alexander, who said the authority has pared the list to four finalists, who will be interviewed during visits to Greenville today, Tuesday and Wednesday.
"We've covered a lot of ground," Alexander said. "To help us move this fast, we've met two times a month for several months." And subcommittees have also met more than once a month.
"Our goal is to have an executive director and an office open by March 1 of this year," Alexander said.
Then the authority can go about its business of promoting programs aiding and encouraging travel, tourism and conventions in Greenville and Pitt County.

Among the authority's formally adopted goals:

- To promote Pitt County and Greenville as the focal point for conventions and meetings in eastern North Carolina.
- To actively solicit organizations and businesses which will have meetings of a size and nature that Pitt County and Greenville can accommodate.
- To establish and maintain cooperative working relationships with other organizations promoting Greenville and Pitt County.
- To develop a cooperative relationship with East Carolina University and other institutions or agencies to utilize expertise available in developing and conducting activities to promote the hospitality industry.
- To conserve resources available to the authority so that greater funding is available for promotional activities than for operating the Convention and Visitors Bureau.
- To support efforts to obtain a regional activities center by working closely with state and local officials.
- To work with groups and organizations to develop a beautification program to improve the general roadside appearance of commercial, residential, industrial and other areas in Pitt County and Greenville.
- To have at least a five percent increase in the yield of occupancy tax annually.

•And to keep the Greenville City Council, the Board of Commissioners, and the Chamber of Commerce regularly informed about the work of the authority.
The law authorizing the authority also approved a 3 percent motel room occupancy tax to finance authority activities.
Based on projected occupancy tax revenues, the Board of County Commissioners, and the Greenville City Council — as required by law — approved a $240,000 budget for the authority for the fiscal year which ends June 30.
Through December, some $121,265 in tax had been collected, and the authority has spent $8,985 so far.
The approved budget allocates $40,000 for a director, $13,444 for a secretary, $3,120 for a student assistant, $10,000 for office supplies, $25,000 for printing, $60,000 for advertising, $25,000 for audio-visual production and $15,000 for office equipment and furniture.
Alexander described the budget as "a planning tool. We tried to plan what we feel is a conservative budget."

Grand Opening Held For Shelter

After opening its doors to Greenville's homeless three weeks ago, organizers of the Greenville Community Shelter held a grand opening celebration at the shelter on Sunday.
Approximately 60 people, including various elected officials, attended the ceremony at the facility, located on the corner of Manhattan Avenue and Myrtle Street at the former Agnes Fullilove School site.
"We figured everybody who's been a part of this thing deserved to have a time like this to stop and celebrate," said shelter president the Rev. Sam Loy. "We've done so much work it's nice just to have time to celebrate, so that's what we see this as today."

According to Loy, the shelter has provided 253 instances of night lodging to people since its opening on Jan. 11. He said the shelter has been averaging about 15 people per night during the last two weeks, with a record of 19 people accommodated one evening.
Loy said the shelter is doing very well in regard to both finances and volunteer assistance.

Citizen Assembly Meetings Produce Policy Questions

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer
Presidential candidates campaigning through North Carolina might face some tough policy questions as a result of Saturday's Citizen Assembly meetings held throughout the state and in Greenville, a chief organizer of the events said today.
Tim Noonan, director of U.S. 88: North Carolina, said a list of detailed and well-thought-out policy questions was prepared as a result of the voter awareness project held in nine cities.
The project gathered 600 registered voters in different locations to learn about and discuss national policy issues such as the federal budget deficit, the proliferation of nuclear weapons, working families and long-term health care.

"Everyone across the state was very enthusiastic, from the site administrators to the mediators to the participants," Noonan said.
Locally, approximately 65 U.S. 88 participants met Saturday at Pitt Community College to watch video presentations, discuss distributed literature and conduct role-playing exercises on various topics.
Janice Faulkner, mediator for the discussion on working families, said the event went very well, with people participating not only from Greenville but from throughout eastern North Carolina.

"The discussions were very animated with some very good debate," she said.
Ms. Faulkner said she had heard that only the U.S. 88 meeting held in Chapel Hill drew more participants than the sessions in Greenville.
"There were some very positive comments about the experience," she added.

Woman Breaks Tradition In Joining Black Church

BUSHY FORK, N.C. (AP) — Mary Evelyn Long and the Rev. Joe Rone grew up in Person County, a place where blacks and whites traditionally worship in separate churches.

But last fall, the 61-year-old Ms. Long broke with that tradition.

She became the first white person to join Hester Grove Baptist Church, a black congregation of some 100 members about 15 miles north of Durham.

"I get teary when I talk about it," Ms. Long told the Greensboro News & Record last week at her mobile home on the land where her ancestors once had slaves. She wiped moisture from behind her thick glasses.

Rone, 78, sat nearby. He smiled as Ms. Long described the day last year that they met at the home of one of her childhood friends, who is black. Her friend's husband had recently died, and Rone and Ms. Long had come to comfort the family.

When they shook hands, Rone and Ms. Long say, they sensed that they already knew one another. Their meeting immediately sparked a friendship.

But such friendships are uncommon in Person County, says Ms. Long, who got her first lesson in race relations as a child on her family's farm.

About 300 yards behind her parents' house lived the Torains, a black family whose four daughters were close to the ages of the four Long girls. The children often played together and became known as "The Eight Sisters."

But by the time Ms. Long was 12, reality intervened. Her great-aunt warned the Long sisters that they were too old to be playing with the Torain girls.

"We're not going to eat if we can't play with them," Ms. Long says today, describing their reaction. "But of course we did."

of racism at school. Her classmates sometimes charged that her kin had treated their slaves cruelly, an ironic taboo among white slave owners. She doesn't know whether they did or not, but the question continues to haunt her.

She admits to feeling some guilt about slavery.

"I don't see how you can feel any other way," she said.

Rone's grandparents were slaves. His family worked on a white family's farm and lived in a tenant house on their property. Rone joined the Hester Grove church at age 13.

Musician Shot

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — A high-speed chase into Georgia led to the arrest of a suspect in the fatal shooting of a musician who once played with Sly and The Family Stone and the Ohio Players, police said.

According to a report at the Savannah Police Department, 35-year-old Peter John Hynes of Hilton Head, S.C., was arrested early Sunday in the slaying of 32-year-old Anthony Earl John Michael "Toney" Hooks of Bluffton, S.C.

The police report said Hynes was arrested at 4 a.m. on a charge of murder following a high-speed auto chase that ended at a roadblock on the Talmadge Bridge near Savannah.

Hooks died about 3:30 a.m. at a Hilton Head hospital of a shotgun wound following an argument, police said.

Hooks, a guitarist, most recently appeared on an album by the soul artist George Clinton.

Hynes was being held without bond Sunday night at the Chatham County Jail awaiting extradition to South Carolina.

NUTRITION AND TOOTH DEVELOPMENT

Like all the other parts of your body, your teeth depend on good nutrition to develop properly. This is particularly important during the embryonic period, when teeth and bones are being formed initially.

The expectant mother should eat food rich in protein, minerals, and vitamins. Meat, fish, eggs, milk and milk products, fresh fruits and certain vegetables are all high in minerals, vitamins, and proteins, the building blocks of life.

Teeth are made of minerals, particularly calcium; but even with enough calcium, teeth will not calcify properly without vitamins, D,C, and A. Deficiencies of these vitamins can cause defective calcification of teeth and bones. A serious enough deficiency may cause rickets or scurvy in children—and even adults—so think how it must affect the teeth and bones of the developing embryo.

Call our office for an appointment today. We would enjoy having you and your family as patients.

NOTE:
We welcome new patients, both children and adults.

REAL ESTATE FACTS

MOVING DAY!

Once you decide to purchase a home, what else must be done before moving day? Perhaps, you've thought there were two steps - 1) apply for a loan, and 2) wait!

Not so. Purchasing a home is a complex process which begins with signing an agreement to purchase the home and ends with moving day. During the intervening time, however, attention to many details is essential.

Before making application for a mortgage loan, it is necessary to gather detailed credit information such as names, addresses and account numbers of creditors, along with amounts owed.

After loan application, an appraisal will be ordered on the home. Your real estate agent will coordinate the appraisal, as well as ordering a termite inspection when required.

There will be numerous other contacts which are monitored by your agent between the lender, the closing attorneys, inspection companies, insurance agents, the local tax office, the title insurance company and others.

Then, as the closing date approaches, a survey must be ordered, a final walk-through inspection performed and minor repairs made.

Your agent will be in constant touch with all parties to assure a smooth closing of your purchase. Then comes moving day!

SHELTER OPENING — Greenville City Council member Nancy Jenkins, left, examines a list of donated items with Greenville Community Shelter president the Rev. Sam Loy, and council members Lorraine Shinn, Rufus Huggins, and Mildred Council. The Greenville Community Shelter conducted its official grand opening Sunday.

Shelter Grand Opening Held

"We figured when we started that we were going to need something like $8,000 in local donations to get this thing going for the winter months. Well, to date we've raised $10,565 in donations locally and I think that speaks of the type of support we've had in the community," he said.

In addition to donations, Loy said the shelter received $8,560 on Jan. 15 in operating funds as a result of the Federal Emergency Management Act.

Loy also said volunteers have been signed up to assist in the shelter's operation five weeks into the future.

"When you give people a chance to help other people less fortunate, they'll take that chance and they'll help and we've certainly seen that case," he said.

Loy expressed thanks at the ceremony to those people who helped initially start community organization efforts to open a shelter in the community and to those who collectively put forth the approximately 2,300 hours of work time to get the shelter physically prepared for opening.

One such group, the local chapter of the Vietnam Veterans of America, contributed approximately 400 hours of effort necessary to see the shelter open its doors.

"The Vietnam Veterans were instrumental in providing renovation manpower when there were no funds, and we wouldn't be here for another month probably if it had not been for the Vietnam Veterans and their coming over. They painted the outside of the building before winter really got here in December, they helped with the inside, they've done so many things and given so many hours of time, we really appreciate their help," Loy said.

Loy also commended the previous city council, who requested a $40,000 Community Development Block Grant on behalf of the Community Life Center for the purchase of the facility.

"Without that, we wouldn't have gotten off the ground because that made the whole project feasible. I think they went out on a limb to do that and I think they had a prophetic vision about what this could be and I think it speaks well of the leadership that we have in this city," he said.

"We've come a long way in making this probably one of the best shelter facilities in the state and I think we can be very proud of it," he added.

Shirley Daniels, shelter coordinator, said shelter operations have proceeded during the last three weeks without problems.

"The men who come to the shelter are very cooperative. They come and get what's offered to them and that is a night of rest, a meal, and clean clothing. We wash their clothing for them and give a change of clothing if needed. They're in by 10 p.m. and out at 7 a.m. the next morning," she said.

Ms. Daniels also said the shelter accommodated its first woman Saturday night.

Also attending the ceremony were city council members Lorraine Shinn, Nancy Jenkins, Mildred Council, Rufus Huggins, and Rep. Walter B. Jones, Jr.

"A lot of people should be commended for their dedication and hard work to see this dream become a reality," Jones said. "Anytime that individuals and groups go out of their way to make opportunities for those less fortunate, that's what life's all about."

Council member Huggins said that although residents in the area were initially concerned about the prospects of having a night shelter in their neighborhood, a good feeling has developed in the neighborhood of wanting to make the shelter a success.

"We've had quite a few people in this neighborhood come out and volunteer to help," he said.

Authority Set To Hire Director

member and treasurer of the authority, Alexander said. The county collects the occupancy tax and "the money is in the care of the county. The county oversees the funds."

Even though the authority has been spending most of its efforts on organization and "training ourselves" since it was formed, the promotional organization sponsored a booth at a Raleigh trade show in December, he said. As a result, Alexander said, "one group has agreed to come here in a couple of years for a convention."

"One of the first big projects," after an executive director is hired, Alexander said, will be working with the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce on the Governor's Conference on Travel and Tourism which is scheduled to be held in Greenville April 10, 11 and 12.

"We will want our executive director to assist and take a major role in helping make the conference very successful. It offers tremendous potential for Greenville and Pitt County," Alexander said. "It could impact on getting conferences and conventions to come here in years to come."

After that, Alexander said, the authority will need to develop promotional and publicity materials and decide "just how to get the biggest bang for our buck."

Alexander said "nationally, 500 people attend the average size convention," and Greenville has the facilities to handle such a gathering.

"There are a lot of mid-size ... 300 to 500 people ... conventions we are going to go after."

"We feel we have a lot to offer ... air service, excellent facilities, entertainment, shopping."

"Greenville and Pitt County has a lot to offer these people."

Plan In Trouble

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Republican senator who supports President Reagan's $36.2 million aid package for the Nicaraguan Contras said today the proposal is jeopardized because the administration failed to give Congress a say in whether a military aid component is released to the rebels.

"My view is that the chances for passage are diminished," said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., in an interview with a group of reporters.

During a White House meeting with Reagan and his top strategists last week, McCain said he asked whether anyone in the room believed the administration had the votes to win. "There was a silence," McCain said, before one official spoke up and said Reagan had "a fighting chance."

McCain said he argued for giving Congress a chance at the end of March to hold a second vote on whether the Central American peace process is making sufficient progress to withhold release of $3.6 million in weapons aid to the rebels, but was turned down.

Reagan's package includes $3.6 million for ammunition and anti-aircraft missiles, which would be placed in escrow and released after March 31 if he decides that the regional peace process has not succeeded.

Election Suit Reported Settled

six commissioners elected from six new districts (two of them predominantly black) and three elected at-large.

"The agreement with the plaintiffs ... will be presented to the court and the U.S. Justice Department for approval as soon as possible," Crowell said, adding that the Pitt County Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People "has decided to join the lawsuit and has also agreed to the settlement."

Crowell said "it is hoped by all parties that the new election plan can be implemented in time for the 1988 primary to be held on May 3 as scheduled."

Crowell said that the agreement provides for a nine-member board, with six commissioners elected from districts — the same six districts used for electing members of the board of education.

The other three members, according to Crowell, "will be elected from three consolidated districts — combinations of the six regular election districts."

Crowell said consolidated district A will consist of regular districts 1 and 2, while consolidated district B will consist of regular districts 3 and 6. Consolidated district C will consist of regular districts 4 and 5.

"Only voters who live in a district will vote in the primary and general election for that district," Crowell explained.

"Once the new plan is fully implemented, all commissioners will be elected for four years terms," according to Crowell. "To avoid confusion to voters and election officials, the elections for all six regular districts (numbered districts 1-6) will be held together in non-presidential election years, and the elections for the three consolidated districts (A, B and C) will be held together in presidential election years."

But to begin implementation of the new plan, Crowell said a "mixed election will be required this year."

One commissioner each will be elected from districts 1, 2 and 4 for two-year terms in 1988, "putting them on schedule to be re-elected in 1990 with the other regular district seats."

Also elected this year will be three commissioners from, one each from consolidated districts A, B and C, Crowell said. "Each of those commissioners will be elected for four-year terms."

"In 1990, six commissioners will be elected, one each from the six regular districts and in 1992, the three seats from the consolidated districts will be up for re-election. All commissioners elected in 1990, 1992 and later years will serve four-year terms," Crowell explained.

Commissioners now residing in the new districts 3, 5 and 6 — Tom Johnson, Kenneth Dews and Charles McLawhorn — "will be designated as the representatives of the regular districts in which they reside" and will continue to serve until their terms expire in 1990, according to Crowell.

Commissioners Eugene James, Charles Gaskins, and Bruce Strickland, whose terms expire in December 1988, in new districts 1, 3 and 4. The three have already filed for re-election under the present method of electing members of the board.

Crowell said if the compromise plan is implemented, James and Strickland could re-file as a candidate from the numbered district seat or from the combined letter district seat.

Since Johnson, who also resides in District 3 under the new plan, will continue in office until 1990, Crowell said Gaskins could re-file as a candidate for the combined district B seat.

Because the compromise election plan is new for Pitt County and "no one can be certain how it will work in practice," Crowell said "the parties have agreed that any one of them may ask the court to reconsider the plan after seeing the results of the 1988 and 1990 elections."

Contra Aid: A Bad Answer To A Bad Question

Analysis

One of my college professors repeatedly told his class: "To assure good answers, you must first ask good questions."

The question of continued funding for the Nicaraguan Contras has, unfortunately, been so poorly framed over the years as to ensure only bad answers. The question becomes the foreign-policy equivalent of "Have you stopped beating your wife?"

The Reagan administration has allowed the Contra question to eclipse broader questions of American foreign-policy goals in the Central American region, and Congress has been beguiled into debating the question on those limited terms.

In so doing, both Congress and the president have been backed into a "no win" corner. If military aid is approved this week, we risk undermining the diplomatic offensive that has achieved more in six months than military aid has accomplished in six years. Such approval would give the Sandinista regime an excuse to renege on its promises of political pluralism and the restoration of democratic processes.

On the other hand, a rejection of aid without qualification would send a signal to the Sandinistas that Congress and the president have reached a statement on American policy toward Nicaragua. They would thus be tempted to disregard the promises made last August and expanded upon two weeks ago in Costa Rica.

Either way, the Sandinistas win, because the question has been improperly framed from the beginning. And Congress faces the dilemma of either reaffirming bad policy or rejecting it and creating the vacuum of having no policy at all.

Hopefully, the answer to this imprudent ultimatum will be yet another reprieve through an unglamorous compromise that segregates Contra support into non-lethal and lethal-aid packages, fending off release of the latter for subsequent congressional consideration.

Such an arrangement would allow one more chance, perhaps the last, to return the Contra caboose to the back of the policy train where it belongs, and enable the Administration to forge a truly bipartisan, multidimensional and multilateral approach to the Nicaraguan issue.

Three critical dimensions of our Central American policy need to be resolved:

—An honest attempt must be made to root that policy in genuine bipartisan consensus. Bipartisanship means more than simply securing the magic number of "swing" votes needed to join the majority of Republicans supporting the President on the issue. It means a jointly formulated policy in which there is a sense of shared ownership sufficient to engender a shared obligation to defend it domestically and abroad. Dividing Congress and the nation with "good guy-bad guy" rhetoric over charges of neo-isolationism or naivete regarding Marxist regimes can only serve to undermine this effort. Members of Congress ought not to usurp the role of secretary of state.

But implementing foreign policy in the absence of reasonable political accommodation denies the stable and predictable foundation upon which foreign policy consensus must be built.

—Our Central American policy must be explicitly multidimensional. If continued democratization of Latin American societies is to be nurtured, policies addressing the problem of the drug warlords, the burgeoning Latin populations, the restructuring of Latin American debts and revitalization of Latin American economies must be given just as dramatic a focus and attention as the effort to counter Marxist subversion and presence in the region. We must rigorously examine the impact that our policies may or may not be having in inadvertently remilitarizing the very region in which we are trying to sustain the growth of fragile civilian political institutions.

—Our Central American policy must deliberately seek to strengthen multilateral participation of the region's nations. A sense of shared ownership of that policy is no less important to those affected by it than it is to those conducting it. Last fall, while Congress was once again debating additional millions to the Contras, the State Department advised the Organization of American States that the United States could not afford to meet its financial obligations to host the annual OAS meeting. And of course, it goes without saying that a Central American policy is doomed to failure if it runs counter to the joint efforts of the Central American presidents to develop a regional solution to their problems.

As long as policy-making is determined by lurching from Contra aid request to Contra aid request, there is little in the way of meaningful discussion and agreement on the broader goals and purposes of our policy in Central America, and how and when military force might be used to achieve them. In the present context of the diplomatic initiative undertaken by the Central American presidents, the continued fixation on further funding of the Contras is even less adequate as a substitute for a broader policy. Until we begin to ask the right questions, we shall be frustrated with a policy process that yields only bad answers.

Who Can Demand Perfection?

Right after he awarded me the literary Order of Ruben Dario earlier this month, Nicaragua's President Daniel Ortega announced that he was inviting me and my friend, the novelist William Styron, along on his trip that night to the Central American presidents' meeting in San Jose, Costa Rica. Why were we going? To show that peace in Central America was a concern of citizens, not only of governments. Ortega would pick us up at 3 a.m.

The flight never took place. Nicaraguan intelligence reported that a Contra missile attack on the president's plane was highly probable. So the bus that was to have taken us to the airport instead rolled south toward Costa Rica.

Along the way Styron and I compared notes on our week's stay in Nicaragua. We had heard the criticism of right and left. To the right, the Sandinistas were Marxist Leninists; they were installing a totalitarian dictatorship with all the trappings — press censorship, harassment of political parties, religious persecution, vigilance committees. To the left, the Sandinistas were tepid bourgeois reformists who respected the private sector and gave dollar incentives to exporters; the people were hungry, but the businessmen were making more money than ever.

"What have you got to say about Sandinista persecution of Marxism in Nicaragua?" a fiery-eyed young man with a tape recorder asked me after the Ruben Dario ceremony. The Sandinistas were beginning to look to us like centrists in these tense political confrontations.

Were we simply witnessing the birth pangs of opposition politics in Nicaragua, where traditionally the only opposition has come out of the gun? Fourteen parties were breeding while I was there; the Sandinistas poll less than the government party in Mexico does, but the opposition had yet to present a program of national action comparable to the government's.

Nicaragua was in the initial, affirmative, even violent stages of revolution. I was reminded of the Obregon and Calles regimes in Mexico between 1920 and 1928: fighting opposition from church and business, foreign capitalists and the United States, while promoting basic programs in education, land reform and infrastructure. Mexico faced greater internal violence. There were no firing squads in Nicaragua; it was far safer than El Salvador, Honduras or Guatemala. But Nicaragua was suffering far greater external violence than Mexico ever did.

The striking thing about Nicaragua was that it has a social agenda that has gone on in spite of the Contra war and the destruction of lives, crops and buildings. We saw the new irrigation districts, the new dairy stations dotting central Nicaragua, the new schools. We also saw the mutilated kids in the hospitals, victims of the Contras. We heard workers in co-ops and factories criticize top government officials to their faces, protest inflation and propose different models of organization.

Were we witnessing an extremely dynamic social transformation, stalled during a "hundred years of solitude" and now carrying along everyone, beyond everyone's political dogmas and traditional class distinctions?

Nicaragua was not perfect. But it was creating an infrastructure in spite of war; it was betting on the future in spite of the strong external draw toward the past. The Nicaraguan Establishment and its U.S. sponsors had 150 years to do in Nicaragua what the Sandinistas have achieved in nine years. There was grumbling in Nicaragua, there was hardship, there were many mistakes being made, there were many authoritarian features derived from the state of emergency as well as from the classical Latin American war between tradition and modernization. But there was a national project as well, not a project for plunder nor simple inertia, as in the past, and it seemed creative and ample enough to embrace a majority of Nicaraguans, and permit them, once the war was over, to oppose the regime while participating in the social dynamics.

Nicaragua was not perfect, sure. But all the Central American countries have imperfections, and if they throw rocks at each other, as they started to do at the opening of the San Jose conference, many glass roofs are likely to be shattered. The report of the Arias plan's verification commission said as much.

Honduras was being judged by an inter-American tribunal on civil rights for using death squads, trained under U.S. auspices, to liquidate the opposition. Anyone who tried to be an opposition journalist in El Salvador would soon meet a violent deadline. And in Guatemala, human life was still cheap, especially if you were an Indian. Even the venerated Costa Rica has its flaws; why did this democracy outlaw parties on the left?

Yet in spite of all, the trial of political intentions against Nicaragua seems endless: It is asked for the moon, and when it gives it, it's not enough; Nicaragua must give us the sun now, or else. No other Central American nation is expected to do so much; the rest shy from their obligations without consequences; only Nicaragua has to pay. It pays in blood.

I don't know if Daniel Ortega's decisions in San Jose are the sun or not. They certainly met Costa Rican President Oscar Arias Sanchez's test of what was expected of Managua at the meeting if the peace process was to continue. These were not concessions to Contra pressure; they were simply part of Nicaragua's agreement with its none-too-perfect neighbors to press on toward peace.

Of course, suspending the state of emergency, declaring amnesty and talking to the Contras might also stop Contra aid in its tracks. But in both Managua and San Jose, we felt that such an achievement would be a defeat for no one. It was, rather, to be seen as a success for politics over war. Both were risky; but the risk of politics never maimed a beautiful girl of 13 lying dazed in a Managua hospital.

North Americans have a way of healing that girl; no one like her must suffer again.

Insecurity, hypocrisy. ... Whoever demanded democratization of Nicaragua when it was occupied by the Marines or ruled by the Somozas?

STANDOFF ENDS — Members of the Raleigh Police Department's Selective Enforcement Unit handcuff Thomas Edison Harrington on the porch of a house on Six

Forks Road after a six-hour long standoff Sunday. Police said Harrington had threatened to blow up the house because he has cancer. (AP Laserphoto)

Man Gives Up After Standoff

RALEIGH (AP) — A man who said he had cancer and threatened to blow up his house held police at bay for nine hours before surrendering.

Thomas Edison Harrington, 41, walked out with his hands up at 3:30 p.m. Sunday, nine hours after a relative had called police expressing concern about his mental state.

Police Lt. G.W. Black said police called Harrington's house and asked a female boarder to leave, which she did. Harrington, who recently had separated from his wife, threatened to blow his house up, Black said. Police could smell kerosene, he said.

"We saw him come out of the door two or three times this morning," said Bill T. Early Jr., 62, who lives across the street. "This morning he just came out of the side door and yelled at police, and they yelled back."

"He's a real nice guy, easy to get along with," said Dana Haynie, who worked with Harrington. "He told someone he had cancer. He has had his license revoked. He was upset a couple of weeks ago that his landlord decided to rent his apartment to someone without consulting him when he split up with his wife."

A search team found no weapons or explosives in the house, Black said.

Harrington was not charged, but was taken to Dorothea Dix Hospital for evaluation.

Underage Students Still Finding Ways To Drink

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Raising the drinking age to 21 has done little to slow underage drinking, and may even have created more problems than it has solved, school officials and students say.

"It seems that alcohol has become the forbidden fruit and therefore more desirable," says Sue Wasiolek, dean for student life at Duke University. "From a health and safety standpoint, it appears that the situation has become much more dangerous."

"Our data right now indicates (the law) isn't accomplishing that much," Jerry Lotterhos, chairman of the Department of Community Health at East Carolina University, who is studying the law's impact, told the Greensboro News & Record.

In 1985, under the threat of losing federal transportation funds, the General Assembly raised North Carolina's minimum age for drinking beer and wine from 19 to 21. The law took effect Sept. 1, 1986.

Last spring, Lotterhos surveyed about 440 students at East Carolina on their drinking habits under the new law and compared responses with an identical survey of 378 students before the law changed.

His research showed that:

- Light-to-moderate drinkers reported a slight decrease in their consumption, but students who were heavy drinkers in the past are drinking more heavily now.
- Students are drinking more at private parties or in their residence hall rooms, where school officials seldom intrude.

This secret drinking has led to a dangerous practice that Robert Gringle, a Duke University health services official, calls "front loading."

Students will quickly down large amounts of alcohol before going to an event where alcohol will not be served.

Fewer students were driving after drinking, but more reported drinking while driving and more said they drink in their cars.

The effects of the new law on state highway statistics aren't fully known yet.

However, a report by the Highway Safety Research Center at UNC-Chapel Hill indicates the number of alcohol-related wrecks involving drivers under 21 dropped in 1986 and 1987 when compared with figures from 1982.

John Lacey of the research center says a number of factors, including sanctions in the 1983 Safe Roads Act, led to the reduction in crashes.

"But I'd be surprised if (raising) the drinking age was not the biggest component," Lacey says.

Figures on injuries and fatalities for those under 21 aren't available, state officials say.

Although results are mixed, Lotterhos says, national studies show that lowering the drinking age leads to an increase in alcohol-related accidents and fatalities, while raising the age has the opposite effect.

But in general, his research questions whether such laws can deter underage drinking.

In addition, he says, drinking-age laws have proven difficult to enforce.

Underage students said in interviews that they have little trouble getting beer or alcohol. Phony IDs are common. And older students are willing to buy for their younger friends, or the students buy it themselves.

In some locales, according to N.C. Alcohol Law Enforcement officials, as many as 50 percent of the outlets checked will sell beer to minors.

Illegal behavior "can be easily hidden," Lotterhos says, "and there could never be enough 'enforcers' to assure compliance."

This fact isn't lost on ALE officers or college students.

"I was with two guys at a bar in Durham last night, and each of them had three IDs," says Bert Smith, a 20-year-old UNC-Chapel Hill student from Charlotte. "They couldn't decide which one to use."

John W. Britt, deputy director for operations with ALE, acknowledges that arresting underage drinkers isn't ALE's top priority, but because illegal drinking is so common, "We're tripping over the violations."

State-Owned Farms In The Red

RALEIGH (AP) — Even with a guaranteed buyer, North Carolina's state-owned farms are facing the same problem as others in agriculture — ledger books filled with red ink.

By its own account, the Department of Agriculture lost $122,376 in fiscal 1984, $192,974 in fiscal 1985, $241,417 in fiscal 1986 and $404,776 in fiscal 1987 when the cost of running the farms outstretched the income from them. Those losses are underwritten by appropriations from the General Assembly.

And the Department of Human Resources, which is required by state law to buy most of the food from the farms, says it could cut its costs by going to the open market.

The use of cattle supplied by the agriculture department provides one example.

"See, the hospitals don't use anything but hamburger, roast and stew," said L.T. Woodlief, an agricultural marketing specialist with the Department of Agriculture. "That's all they use out of the whole carcass. And cube steak."

Woodlief, who makes sure DHR gets the meat it pays for, must watch while a food processor grinds into hamburger the portions of the cattle that could be steaks.

"Rib eyes go into hamburger, file mignons go into hamburger," he said. "It kills me, I tell you."

David Flaherty, secretary of DHR, doesn't like the state farm system, but said state law gives him no choice but to buy from it.

"We should be buying hamburger and what we're doing is buying, what do they call them — sirloins — and chewing 'em up into hamburger because that's what we need," he said.

"I'll be more than happy to jump at an opportunity to go on the open market because we know it will save money for the taxpayers," he said.

Flaherty said the farms should be sold, as the Governor's Efficiency Commission recommended 15 years ago.

The Department of Agriculture asked DHR to put its concerns in writing after the The News and Observer of Raleigh and The Raleigh Times raised questions about farming operations.

"They shouldn't be grinding steaks into hamburger," said William G. Parham Jr., deputy commissioner of agriculture. "If, in fact, all they want is hamburger, it is not in the best interest of the state for us to furnish them cattle."

"We would be responsive to whatever they say, and we would bring that total thing to the commission," he said. "If Human Resources comes to the commission and says they don't want any more products, then we definitely have to reassess the situation."

The Department of Agriculture manages the farms, but farm policy is set by the State Farm Operations Commission, which meets about once a year.

Seven Die On N.C. Roads

By The Associated Press

Seven people, including two pedestrians and two motorcyclists, died in separate accidents on North Carolina highways this weekend, the North Carolina Highway Patrol says.

James Wooten, 56, of Laurinburg, was struck and killed by an oncoming vehicle at 1:55 a.m. Sunday as he lay on a Scotland County road, troopers said. Inez Smith Buchanan, 77, of Durham, died at 6:45 p.m. Saturday when a car hit her on N.C. 98, troopers said.

Terry Wade Shook, 31, of Newton, was killed at 2:47 p.m. Saturday when he hit a car on a rural paved road in Caldwell County, crossed the center line and hit another vehicle, and was thrown from his motorcycle.

James Lester Young, 25, of Hamlet, was killed at 11:30 p.m.

Saturday when he ran off a rural Richmond County road and hit a utility pole and chainlink fence, troopers said.

Henry Lewis Adams, 29, of San Jose, Calif., died at 1:30 a.m. Saturday when his car ran off U.S. 52 north of Pilot Mountain in Surry County and overturned.

Jonathan Coleman Barger, 21, of Rockwell, and Christina Joy Steiger, 18, of Atlasville, Va., were killed at 8:20 p.m. Saturday when the car Barger was driving ran off U.S. 501 10 miles north of Rowland, hit a tree and overturned. Both victims were thrown from the vehicle.

The deaths bring to 79 the number of people killed in North Carolina highway accidents in 1988, compared to 96 people at this time last year.

Laid-Off A&T Workers Hear About New Jobs

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Some of the 3,300 AT&T workers losing their jobs in Winston-Salem will be eligible to apply for about 1,000 jobs in Oklahoma City or Andover, Mass., but union leaders say the North Carolina workers will not get a warm reception.

"The problem is, those other locations don't want us to come because they've got people on layoff," Eddie Hubbard, president of Local 3060 of the Communications Workers of America, told workers Saturday. "They're not going to receive us very well."

Hubbard said North Carolina workers with more than 15 years of service would have an advantage over laid-off workers in the other two AT&T plants.

While news of the possible job openings was welcome, Hubbard said the closing of the N.C. Works, announced Jan. 20, would force most workers to start over.

"There are no jobs out there that we're used to for our standard of living," Hubbard said. "The American dream was taken away from us by AT&T. And we're going to have to buckle down, cut costs and cut expenses. Each and every one of us."

The Saturday meeting at the Benton Convention Center was the first between workers and their union leadership since the plant closing was announced.

At N.C. Works, a sprawling 80-acre facility that has been an economic anchor in Winston-Salem since 1954, the employees' average age is 46, with 18 years of service. Hubbard said that on the average, those workers are paid $11.50 an hour, or nearly $24,000 a year.

Those with 30 years or more with AT&T, or whose age and years of service equal at least 75, can retire with full pension, insurance and medical benefits, Hubbard said.

Also, a layoff allowance, equaling a week's salary, will be paid to workers according to time served with AT&T. For example, a person with five years of service will get a five-week layoff allowance. A person with 15 years will get a 24-week allowance.

Insurance benefits also will be available for a year, though most workers would have to pay the company premium for six months or more of that period.

Beverly Smith, with the N.C. Employment Security Commission in Winston-Salem, told the workers that federal funds are available to help dislocated workers through the Job Training Partnership Act.

Smith said the program will pay for up to two years of job-related schooling, provide 50 percent wage reimbursement for up to six months to employers willing to offer on-the-job training, offer career counseling and help defray some relocation costs.

"A career change can be a crisis or it can be an opportunity," Smith said.

George Long, an AT&T employee, responded: "If you've got 20-25 years experience, who wants to start over at $3.50 an hour? How can we afford to do that? You say you're going to assist us in retraining, in relocating."

"I'm 45 years old. I've got 25 years of service. I need five more years to retire. Where am I going to find a job where I can retire in five years?"

Smith countered: "The program is clearly not going to be the answer to every problem or every individual's situation. We will support you in every way we possibly can, but I don't have all the answers."

Much of the meeting was tranquil, with Hubbard hurling occasional barbs at AT&T corporate leadership.

Visitor Milestone

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A week after the Dean E. Smith Center celebrated its second birthday, Renee Barlow of Lenoir became the one-millionth visitor to attend an event at the 21,444-seat arena when she entered the building for the Georgia-North Carolina basketball game Saturday.

Ms. Barlow, a sophomore at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, set the milestone when she walked through the doors at 1:33 p.m., school officials said.

A framed pen-and-ink drawing of the Smith Center signed by Tar Heel Coach Dean Smith was presented to Ms. Barlow at halftime by Smith Center Director Steve Camp.

Since the Smith Center opened Jan. 18, 1986, a total of 1,011,773 people have attended 69 events ranging from men's and women's basketball games to concerts and the U.S. Olympic Festival.

Hahn Remembers

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A claim by a former PTL president that Jessica Hahn's minister once threatened him with violence on her behalf is "not that far from the truth," Ms. Hahn says.

Former PTL President Richard Dortch said in a television interview that aired Friday that the Rev. Gene Profeta, Ms. Hahn's minister, called him in late 1984 to threaten him and evangelist Jim Bakker with physical violence.

Ms. Hahn was Profeta's secretary at the time.

The alleged threats came during stalled negotiations with Ms. Hahn over how much money she should receive to keep silent about a 1980 sexual encounter with Bakker, Dortch told Charlotte television station WBTV.

Profeta, pastor at the Full Gospel Tabernacle Church in Massapequa, N.Y., on Friday denied the charges and declined to discuss the allegations further.

However, Ms. Hahn, in an interview published in Sunday's editions of the Charlotte Observer, came close to concurring with Dortch's account.

"Dortch had many conversations with many people ... and what I'm saying is it wasn't all pleasant," she said by telephone Saturday from the Playboy Mansion in Los Angeles.

"There was pressure there. I can't even say on who. I can only say that (Dortch) was not that far from the truth."

Dortch also told WBTV that Profeta warned him he would "come to Charlotte, North Carolina, ... and take a piece of Jim Bakker and a piece of me..." unless money was paid to Ms. Hahn.

Pet Pigs Relocated

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Raymond and Debbie Sattler have packed their two 400-pound pigs into a stretch limousine and left town.

After three weeks of fuss from their new neighbors in Wilmington, Sattler and his wife decided to leave an affluent neighborhood that had roundly rejected their porcine pets.

"Our babies are now down in Lumberton, temporarily," Sattler said in a telephone interview today. "We've been blasted ... well, we're out of the Forest Hills area."

But Sattler, a neurosurgeon, has decided to give the Wilmington area a second chance after spending the weekend talking to about 100 area residents who said the Sattlers — and their pet pigs — would be welcome in other neighborhoods.

"We've pretty well settled on an area outside the city limits where the neighbors have assured us we could have animals," Sattler said. "There are other animals there now — horses, dogs, cats — and there have been others, including goats. It's a pleasant, pleasant place and we think it just may work."

The Sattlers decided to do some field surveys before deciding on another move, however.

"We canvassed 10 families and out of that number, all were quite positive. Most of them said they felt silly about what going on and said they'd be happy to have us there," he said. "Even the head of the Bar Association in the Wilmington area is a neighbor and he just laughed and said he'd be happy to have us in the neighborhood."

The Sattlers moved to Wilmington from Lumberton, but had decided to keep their home in the country there. Last week, Sattler was planning to give up his Wilmington practice to reopen his office in Fayetteville, he said.

But after the response from other neighborhoods in Wilmington, he

Bakker Suits

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The bankruptcy trustee for the PTL television ministry says he is suing its founder, Jim Bakker, and other former PTL officials for more than $52 million.

"We are seeking to recover for the ministry the actual losses which we feel these individuals have caused. We are not seeking punitive damages, and we don't want retribution, just restitution," said David Clark, PTL's bankruptcy trustee.

The suit, mailed Friday for filing today in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Columbia, seeks to recover $52,798,218 from Bakker, his wife, Tammy, and former official David Taggart, The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer reported.

The suit charges the Bakkers and Taggart of causing PTL the losses through mismanagement, cash advances on PTL credit cards; and unjustified compensation, benefits and fees, the newspaper said.

Evangelists Face Credibility Problems After PTL Scandal

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Religious broadcasters this week will decide if stricter standards of moral and financial accountability can help them shake off the effects of last year's sex-and-money scandal at PTL.

"It was obviously the toughest year evangelicals have ever faced," said the Rev. Jerry Falwell, whose Lynchburg, Va., ministry includes the "Old-Time Gospel Hour," Thomas Road Baptist Church and Liberty University.

"Credibility was gravely injured by the PTL scandal. ... Many of our projects were delayed or postponed indefinitely."

Falwell took over the reins of PTL in March at Jim Bakker's resignation. His ministry lost $5 million to $6 million in projected revenue. "Old-Time Gospel Hour" cut 50 stations from its weekly syndicated network, and, in December, about 100 mailroom workers were laid off.

Falwell, acknowledging his past reluctance to disclose financial information, issued a call for public accountability while struggling to rebuild PTL. His representatives have been involved in discussions of the National Religious Broadcasters' amended code of ethics.

"On the positive side," Falwell said, "financial accountability is now generally accepted as a part of national ministry."

"We have seen some undesirables forced off the air and out of business, which was inevitable at some time. The general public is far more educated on who is credible and who is not."

NRB President Ben Armstrong says the organization's code of ethics set high standards for radio and television ministries for more than 40 years. But it didn't deter PTL fundraising and spending practices now being investigated by the IRS and a federal grand jury.

"In the wake of the PTL scandal, bankruptcy and reorganization, the urgency of updating our enforcement proceedings is critical," Armstrong told The Charlotte Observer.

NRB's 1,350 member organizations will decide this week whether to make full financial disclosure mandatory for membership. Charlotte-born evangelist Billy Graham will speak Tuesday on integrity in ministry.

"I hadn't planned to go to NRB this year," Graham said, "but when Ben Armstrong asked me to speak — as I have done so many times in the past — he said, 'This year it's a must.'"

Evangelists Face Credibility Problems After PTL Scandal

Graham, considered the father of television evangelism, said his ministry was prospered last year. "Our income was up between 4 percent and 5 percent — higher than any other year," he said.

Among the high-profile evangelists, Graham was an exception.

Christian Broadcasting Network, headed until October by Republican presidential candidate Pat Robertson, blamed a loss of more than $12 million between last February and May on "activities related to Jim Bakker and Oral Roberts."

For the fiscal year ending March 31, the ministry is showing a 32.5 percent drop in contributions — about $40 million — says CBN spokesman Benton Miller. The network laid off 500 employees last summer and 145 more in November in cutbacks designed to save $9 million.

Miller lists the PTL scandal and Oral Roberts' "somewhat unconventional" fundraising as the most significant of four factors in CBN's financial crunch.

Also, Robertson resigned as a Southern Baptist minister and as CBN chairman Oct. 1 and hasn't appeared on "The 700 Club" TV show, which he used to host, since then.

Tulsa evangelist Roberts claimed the Bakker sensation when he declared that God would "call me home" if he didn't raise $8 million for missionary scholar ships by the end of March 1987. He made headlines later when he claimed to have raised several people from the dead.

Oral Roberts ministry spokeswoman Jan Dargatz said contributions dropped from about $4.5 million a month to about $3 million last May, after "the Jim and Tammy thing heated up."

"We're not blaming anybody," Dargatz said. "But that's the only thing we can look at and see a strong correlation. We don't see any correlation with what Oral did because February and March were strong months."

Graham, considered the father of television evangelism, said his ministry was prospered last year. "Our income was up between 4 percent and 5 percent — higher than any other year," he said.

Enrollment Slips

RALEIGH (AP) — Student enrollment at strife-torn Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, decreasing in recent years, has fallen again.

Only 905 students enrolled for the spring semester, which began Jan. 19. The figure, the lowest in almost 10 years, is down from 989 for the same semester a year ago. It was 1,003 in the fall of 1987 and in the 1,200s in 1984, according to Southeastern's registrar's office.

"It is a trend that concerns us," said E. Carson Brisson, director of the office. "There's no way around it: The controversy is affecting student decisions on whether to come here and whether to stay here. Just today a young lady withdrew because she said the changes made her stay unfeasible."

Southeastern has been the site of controversy since a meeting by trustees in October at which changes were made to give greater weight to the position that the Bible literally is true and without error. In the aftermath, students and faculty expressed unhappiness, President Randall Lolley and four other administrators announced their resignations and seminary donations began drying up.

DENBY BACK HOME — Carlinville, Ill., farmer James Jordan Denby answers reporters' questions at a press conference Sunday at his home. Denby was released Saturday after being held since Dec. 6 in a Nicaraguan prison. (AP Laserphoto)

Denby Says His Release Tied To Contra Aid Vote

By JOHN DOWLING
Associated Press Writer

CARLINVILLE, Ill. (AP) — James Denby says he believes his abrupt release from a Nicaraguan prison was intended to influence Wednesday's U.S. House vote on a Reagan administration plan to aid the Contras.

And he indicated that in return for his freedom, he agreed to go to Washington, D.C., to help sway votes against aid to the rebels, according to a published report.

Denby was reunited with his family here Sunday, a day after he was freed by Nicaragua's leftist government, which had imprisoned him seven weeks on charges of aiding the Contras.

The 58-year-old farmer, who denied the charges, said Nicaraguan officials had asked him repeatedly during the last two weeks to speak out against Contra aid, but that he declined.

"I told them I was a lifelong Republican, and that was the wrong thing to tell them," Denby told The Associated Press. "That was like saying, 'I'm guilty of everything; I'm your enemy.'"

"In Nicaragua, they feel they're at war, genuine life-threatening war, with Reagan and the Republicans in the United States," he added. "They honestly believe that all Republicans are against them and all Democrats are for them."

But today's St. Louis Post-Dispatch quoted Denby as saying he agreed to go to Washington to speak out against continuing support for the war.

He credited Bill Press, a Democrat running for the U.S. Senate in California, for helping to negotiate his release.

"I told (Press) I could go with saying 10 years is too long for running a covert war, which it is," Denby told the newspaper. "And I told him I could say ... it's time for peace in Central America."

"I have a little problem with my conscience," Denby said. "Politics make strange bedfellows. ..."

"I'm in a bad position here because these fellows that (flew) me back are about as far to the left as you can get," he said.

Denby said he had first met Press when Press called him in a Nicaraguan prison a week ago.

"He had a buddy. They sat down, and (we) talked," Denby said. "They told me they were trying to work a deal. (Press) needed the PR, and they were trying to work a deal to get me out. I told them right off the bat, I'm a Republican."

"I told them I was very disappointed that Nicaragua decided to go to the Russian bloc and not with the United States. I pulled this guy's trigger and got a half-hour preaching about what nice guys these (Nicaraguan) guys were."

"They asked me if I'd done anything bad, like running arms or drugs, that would embarrass them," Denby continued.

"I think if I'd have turned down this lined-up deal down there, (Nicaraguan officials) would say, 'We'll show this gringo what we can do to him,'" Denby told the newspaper.

David Calef, Press' campaign manager, said Press sought Denby's freedom for humanitarian reasons.

"No one, whatever his politics, should have to pay the price for an undeclared war on the part of his country," Calef, quoting Press, told the Post-Dispatch.

Denby arrived at his central Illinois home wearing the same brightly patterned shirt he had worn when his single-engine Cessna plane was forced down by small arms fire Dec. 6.

Denby pleaded innocent last week to charges of anti-government activities, saying he was forced into Nicaraguan airspace by a storm.

Denby's wife, Marie, son, James, and a reporter greeted him when his brother, William, drove him home from the airport at St. Louis.

Denby was freed on his mother's 84th birthday, and he said she was among the first people he spoke to after his release.

He said he lost 30 pounds in prison, but was generally well treated.

Denby said he hopes to return to Central America and retrieve his plane, but "when I fly over the boys with the guns, I'll fly a little higher."

Oil Barge Sinks

ANACORTES, Wash. (AP) — A barge that sank with 318,000 gallons of oil appeared not to be leaking heavily, although strong currents have thwarted divers' efforts to examine the vessel, a Coast Guard officer said today.

"Right now we really don't have a lot of oil in the water," said Lt. Pete Marsh in Seattle.

"It doesn't look like we're getting a lot of leakage from the barge," which sank four miles west of Anacortes in northwest Washington's busy Rosario Strait early Sunday, said Marsh. "We're praying the barge is intact."

There were no injuries in the sinking, whose cause was undetermined, officials said.

Divers from a company in Portland, Ore., tried to examine the barge late Sunday but gave up after just five minutes in the water because strong tidal currents and darkness made diving near the barge dangerous, Marsh said.

Iowa Paper Snubs Bush; Babbitt Attacks Rivals

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

A week before Iowa's key precinct caucuses, the state's biggest newspaper gave a thumbs-down to Vice President George Bush, citing the Iran-Contra affair. And Bruce Babbitt blasted away at his Democratic presidential rivals, calling them "part of the problem."

Meanwhile, prayer and politics mingled as Jesse Jackson's Democratic campaign passed the collection plate in about 500 churches nationwide, and a procession of GOP candidates sought the support of the nation's religious broadcasters.

Bush was basking in a weekend victory in Michigan, where supporters of Pat Robertson, in temporary alliance with Rep. Jack Kemp, had threatened to embarrass the vice president as the state picked the first national GOP delegates. In the end, it was 37 for Bush, 32 for Kemp and eight for Robertson, who refused to accept the results.

Robertson backers also have been trying to make gains in Kansas, the home turf of Sen. Bob Dole. The state's Republican delegate-selection process begins today with county caucuses, which continue through the week.

The Super Bowl figured in the game plans of several contenders. Former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart stayed home to watch on television as his hometown Denver Broncos were crushed 42-10 by the Washington Redskins. Kemp, a former pro football player, was in the stands in San Diego.

All the Democrats were campaigning in Iowa today except Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr., who abandoned the state to concentrate on the South.

All the Republicans were campaigning either in New Hampshire, which holds its primary on Feb. 16, or Iowa, whose much-heralded precinct caucuses are next Monday.

The Des Moines Register, Iowa's largest-circulation newspaper, on Sunday endorsed Bush's chief GOP rival, Dole, speaking approvingly of the senator's "traditional Midwestern Republicanism." The paper faulted Bush for supporting the secret arms sales to Iran.

Bush told The New York Times over the weekend, in response to written questions, that he has "no precise recollection" of when he learned of the Iran arms sales, but that he did not oppose the policy when told of it.

Register editor James Gannon tried to question Bush about his role in the Iran-Contra affair at a debate last month sponsored by the newspaper, and Bush berated him, saying he had already addressed the topic sufficiently.

On the Democratic side, the Iowa newspaper endorsed Sen. Paul Simon, from neighboring Illinois, praising him as "a man who has decent instincts and sticks by them."

Simon was the target of harsh attacks by Babbitt, who spent the weekend gunning for the Democrats clustered at the front of the pack in Iowa — Simon, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, and Rep. Richard Gephardt.

Babbitt said Saturday that Simon's fiscal plans are "far beyond the bounds of economic reality," and on Sunday he characterized Dukakis' major proposals as "a fraud." His campaign said he'd take on Gephardt today.

"This is not a tea party," Babbitt said Sunday in Waterloo, Iowa.

Later, at a dinner in Dubuque, he singled out the three for attack, adding: "By telling you ... that the time for truth is not now, but after the election, they become part of the problem."

Simon spokesman Pat Mitchell called Babbitt a "desperate candidate," and Dukakis spokeswoman Lorraine Voles dismissed his "all-purpose charge against every candidate."

But the Dukakis camp had other woes to cope with: an aide who apparently tried a bit of campaign sabotage, and a salary cut for staffers in Iowa as the campaign struggled to stay under the spending limit for the state under federal election law.

Mecham To Testify

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Gov. Evan Mecham's testimony before a House select committee could determine whether he will be impeached by the end of the week, the panel's chairman says.

The Republican governor, who also faces a recall election and a criminal trial for allegedly concealing a $350,000 campaign loan, was scheduled to testify before the House panel today.

Secretary of State Rose Mofford also planned today to schedule a recall election for May 17. On Saturday, Mecham announced he will not resign but will run in a recall because "I have broken no laws."

Mecham has repeatedly said he wanted the chance to tell his side of the story, but some lawmakers had questioned whether he would show up.

His lawyer, Murray Miller, said last week the governor would answer all questions that were considered "appropriate."

House special counsel William French has accused Mecham of deliberately concealing the loan, mis-ing $80,000 in state money from the governor's protocol fund by loaning it to the Mecham family's auto dealership, and trying to thwart a state investigation of an alleged death threat.

"Mecham's testimony is crucial because thus far the evidence presented has been very damaging to the governor, and it's up to the governor to refute this testimony and evidence if he is able to," Committee Chairman Jim Skelly said Sunday.

"On his testimony may very well rest the determination to impeach him," the Republican lawmaker said. "The result may be that by mid-week there might very well be an acting governor."

GOP Speaker Joe Lane said Sunday he expected a decision on whether to impeach Mecham by mid-week. If the governor is impeached, Mrs. Mofford, a Democrat, would take over as acting governor while Mecham faced trial in the Senate.

Lane said it was "absolutely crucial" that Mecham fully answer committee members' questions.

Loud Ties Are What The Doctor Ordered

By ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN
Associated Press Writer
TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Dr. Ronald P. Spark is a pathologist, and bodies are his business.
But neckties are his passion.
He has about 2,000 in his closet, mostly 4- and 4½-inch-wide ties from the 1940s and 1950s, predominantly originals, some hand-painted.
They're loud, wildly designed, art deco and surrealistic, many one of a kind. No subdued colors or fabrics for him. No narrow ties, such as found around the necks of millions of other men.
Muted shades, cool plaids, quiet patterns or even paisleys? Forget it. The bolder, the better. Like the one with a bowling ball and pins, in green and brown. Or the purple tie with portrait of President Harry Truman and the Capitol.
Or the one a friend gave him, saying he had found this "abomination" in his garage and couldn't bring himself to bury it or throw it out.
Ugly? Not to Spark. He says, "A boring tie to me is an ugly tie, one without any visual interest."
His ties range from designs with fish and peacocks to palm trees and cowboys and four hand-painted Salvador Dalis.
He wears one every day. At that rate, it will take him more than five years to go through every one in his closet.
Most came from second-hand stores, from Vancouver to Miami.

"You used to be able to buy them for 50 cents or $1 at most," he says.
Now, he says, a lot of friends bring him ties.
Where in the 1940s there were avid collectors and tie-swapping was popular, he says, there are few today.
But the flamboyant ties of a bygone era have intrigued Spark, who says, "As a pathologist, I guess I could get used to seeing dead ties and still find value in them."
What would cause a man to become so caught up in cravats that he would wind up co-authoring a book on them, with fellow collector Rod Dyer ("Fit To Be Tied: Vintage Ties of the Forties and Early Fifties")?
Why would a man wear a jacket made from such ties — and admit to it? Why would his wife have an apron, and dress, made of ties?
Spark says the Army drove him to it. The constraint of wearing a narrow black tie every day "made me very much aware of sense of individuality and personal expression," he says.
And as a white-jacketed medical student, the only form of self-expression easily available was the wild necktie.
"It's wonderful for me because I thrive on recognition and being individualistic and being expressive," says Spark.
He says his favorite neckwear, "an absolutely American creation," didn't really catch on until about 1944. It was a breakaway from narrow, dark ties with small patterns, made possible because Europe, which traditionally dictated fashion, had been preoccupied by war.

"America was able to go to its own fashion-setting," Spark says. "The amazing thing is, I think these ties really reflect what's going on in society. This was the first time there was an accepted informality in American society."
He says the ties also reflected the first mass production of goods since the Depression and technological advances in new materials and photographic transfer onto fabric.
With the end of the war, there was "a tremendous sense of release, postwar boom and a general exuberance," which the neckwear symbolized. But in the early 1950s times changed again, and with the Korean War, recession, the advent of the atomic bomb and the onset of the Joseph McCarthy era, the wide, colorful ties faded away.
Spark says he expects to see a comeback of such ties, or similar ones, in the next two years. The change is portended by fish and animal ties, and the advent of Retro Ties, 3- to 3½-inch ties of silk and rayons with the look of the '40s, though by his estimate they never captured more than 15 percent of tie sales originally.
He says he's kept the narrow black Army tie that drove him to his ongoing rebellion. He saved it, he says, "for funerals, but fortunately I haven't worn it more than two or three times."

Forgiveness Week Offers Us Chances To Rebuild Bridges

DEAR READERS: Are you holding a grudge? Don't feel guilty. Many of us are. But we need not hold it forever. Did you know that there is an International Forgiveness Week? Well, neither did I until last year, when Alice Parenti of Fresno, Calif., wrote to tell me about it.
It's from Feb. 1 through Feb. 6. Robert Muller, former assistant secretary-general of the United Nations, wrote this piece for International Forgiveness Week:
DECIDE TO FORGIVE
Decide to forgive
For resentment is negative
Resentment is poisonous
Resentment diminishes and devours the self.
Be the first to forgive.
To smile and to take the first step,
And you will see happiness bloom
On the face of your human brother or sister.
Be always the first
Do not wait for others to forgive.
For by forgiving

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren
You become the master of fate
The fashioner of life
The doer of miracles.
To forgive is the highest
Most beautiful form of love.
In return you will receive
Untold peace and happiness.
Here is the program for achieving a truly forgiving heart:
Sunday: Forgive yourself.
Monday: Forgive your family.
Tuesday: Forgive your friends and associates.
Wednesday: Forgive across economic lines within your own nation.
Thursday: Forgive across cultural lines within your own nation.
Friday: Forgive across political lines within your own nation.
Saturday: Forgive other nations.

Only the brave know how to forgive. A coward never forgives. It is not in his nature.
DEAR ABBY: We are a group of married couples. On Saturday evenings, a group of 10 or 12 goes out to dinner and dancing. One couple in our group was divorced last year, but the woman continues to attend our Saturday evening affairs. We women do not like this. We're not jealous, but our husbands feel that they have to dance with her so she won't be sitting alone at the table. So while our husbands are dancing with her, one of the wives has to sit alone. We resent this. We are not mean or selfish, but we feel that a single woman doesn't belong in our group any more than a single man would.
Is there a solution, Abby? — THE WIVES
DEAR THE WIVES: The solution is obvious. Ask the single woman to bring an escort, and tell her why.

Light Can Help Chase Those Wintertime Blues

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Winter is a predictable time of year — a time of holidays, celebration and snowfall. For many people, it is also a time of depression.
As the days grow shorter, the moods turn blue. The "wintertime blues" are often resolved in springtime, with the return of extended daylight.
This phenomenon, known as "seasonal affective disorder," or SAD, is now recognized by the American Psychiatric Association as a psychiatric syndrome.
"SAD can last from fall until mid-spring, depending on the weather," said Dr. James Gaddy, a research psychologist at Thomas Jefferson University. "Studies show that SAD often results in substantial loss of productivity or difficulties in interpersonal relationships. In extreme cases, it can be severely incapacitating."

Seasonal affective disorder is characterized by withdrawal, social isolation, depression, a craving for carbohydrates, weight gain, a tendency to sleep longer, a loss of energy and decreased sexual drive.
Phototherapy, or exposure to bright light, has been shown to reverse the effects of SAD. At Jefferson, the majority of people treated last year have responded favorably to therapy, said Dr. Karl Dogramis, director of the Sleep Disorder Center.
The effects of SAD diminish within two days to one week of therapy. If the phototherapy is discontinued, however, the depression characteristically returns.

During phototherapy, people sit in front of bright lights for a prescribed amount of time, ranging from 30 minutes to four hours daily. But mere skin exposure to light has been determined insufficient. In phototherapy sessions, people are instructed to look at the lights for about five seconds of each minute, so the light rays are received through the eyes.
Special fluorescent lights can be rented or purchased for use in the home or while working at the office. "The therapy," said Gaddy, "is like looking out the window on a summer day."

Teen Fathers Often Have Trouble

BY SPENCER RICH
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service
WASHINGTON — Teen-age fathers are more likely to have experienced trouble with the law and in school than counterparts without children, according to a study of more than 1,300 young men.
The findings suggest that "there are various problem behaviors that seem to cluster together," including teen fatherhood, school problems, drugs and delinquency, said study director Arthur Elster, a pediatrician and visiting researcher at the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development. The study was funded by the federal Office of Population Affairs and the William T. Grant Foundation.
It was based on the National Longitudinal Survey of Work Experience, started by the Labor Department in 1979, in which a nationally representative sample of people age 14-21 in 1979 was surveyed annually to see what had happened in their lives, Elster said.

6,400, Elster said. Results showed the following differences:
— About 60 percent of white teen-age fathers and half of black and Hispanic teen-age fathers reported brushes with the law other than for traffic violations, from apprehensions to formal charges or convictions. Among nonfathers, about one-third had such legal troubles.
— 67 percent of white teen-age fathers and about 57 percent of black and Hispanic fathers had used marijuana at least moderately. Usage among nonfathers was 52 percent for whites and about 42 percent for blacks and Hispanics.
— 55 percent of white teen-age fathers, 65 percent of the blacks and 42 percent of the Hispanics had been expelled from school at least once, far more than the nonfathers.

compared with $15,600 for that of nonfathers.

Moscow Meeting

MOSCOW (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze will meet in Moscow Feb. 21-23 to prepare for a fourth superpower summit and help draft a treaty on strategic weapons cuts, Tass said today.

The official Soviet news agency cited Gennady I. Gerasimov, the Foreign Ministry spokesman, as the source of its report.

Shevardnadze and Shultz met several times in 1987 to set up the December meeting in Washington between President Reagan and Communist Party general-secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

At that summit, the superpower leaders signed a treaty to ban intermediate-range nuclear missiles, which can hit targets between 300 and 3,000 miles away.

Reagan and Gorbachev also agreed to meet in Moscow during the first half of 1988, and said they would seek an accord to cut both sides' long-range nuclear weapons by 50 percent.

Gerasimov said Shultz and Shevardnadze will "conduct the necessary preparation of the draft treaty on 50 percent reduction of the strategic offensive arms."

The meeting will also "create conditions for President Reagan's forthcoming visit to Moscow to end with a concrete result as has Mikhail Gorbachev's visit to Washington."

He said Shultz and Shevardnadze will discuss other matters "that will be topical at the time of the visit." He did not elaborate.

Stark Compensation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraq will be asked to pay $75 million to the United States in compensation for the May 1987 attack on the guided missile frigate Stark, according to a published report.

U.S. officials plan to file three claims, one seeking tens of millions of dollars for families of the 37 sailors who died in the attack, another for those who were injured and a third for damage to the ship. The New York Times reported Sunday, quoting State and Defense department officials, who were not identified.

The Times said Abraham D. Sofaer, State Department legal adviser, soon would present a compensation plan to Secretary of State George P. Shultz for approval.

Chris Baumann, Pentagon weekend duty officer, said he had not heard of the plan, and the State Department's press office director, Dennis Harter, said there was no official available Sunday who could comment on the report.

The Times said the State Department would present the Baghdad government next month with the claim for the families of those killed.

Barrus Construction Company will continue to work on the widening of the old two-lane section, he said.

Meese Has Reagan's Support

counts, based on rumor, that the president would ask him to stand aside or resign?" Baker asked. "A person is innocent until proven guilty. And the president, I think, has a high level of commitment to that."

Pressed on whether the Meese matter presented a major political problem for the president, the chief of staff acknowledged, "It's always a problem when you have the allegation that someone has acted inappropriately."

"But it's not as big a problem as it would be if you start pitching people to lions without proof," he said.

The Washington Post on Sunday quoted an Israeli source as saying Meese was one of several U.S. officials who had contact over a period of years with Israeli officials about the pipeline project.

The Los Angeles Times has reported that some sources identify Peres, now Israel's foreign minister, as a target to be bribed.

In Jerusalem, Peres said he was not offered a bribe.

The daily newspaper Maariv quoted Peres as saying in an interview that it was "just nastiness" to say a bribe was behind Israel's decision not to attack the proposed Iraqi pipeline.

Israeli foreign ministry sources, who spoke only on condition of anonymity, said Israel agreed not to block the pipeline for two reasons: to discourage the expansion of Islamic fundamentalism and win the goodwill of Jordan's King Hussein for future peace negotiations.

Policy Questions Prepared

Virginia Riggs, who participated in the discussion regarding agriculture, said the group talked about farm exports, price supports, and the role of lending institutions in farming.

"It was very interesting and very educational," she said.

According to Noonan, U.S. 88: North Carolina is a non-partisan effort designed to increase voter awareness and citizen participation in the presidential candidate nominating process.

U.S. 88 is sponsored by the Roosevelt Center for American Policy Studies and several North Carolina civic, business, labor and church organizations.

Noonan said because of the sunny, warm temperatures on Saturday, there was a less participation than expected but everything went according to plan.

He said the next step in the U.S. 88 project is to distribute the questions to the press and the candidates, then try to arrange question sessions with the candidates as they campaign through the state.

"We will also try to hook up the actual participants in the project with the candidates," he added.

Paper Staffers Held Hostage

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — Three people protesting law enforcement in Robeson County held 13 staff members of The Robesonian newspaper hostage today and demanded to talk to the governor, authorities said.

"We're all in one room as hostages," said a woman answering the telephone at the newspaper. She refused to give her name.

But four hostages were released shortly after noon. A circulation secretary at the newspaper, Mary Ann Mayers, said two complained of heart problems and one woman who was released "was in really bad shape."

One of the alleged hostage-takers talked by telephone with The Associated Press, saying, "We're trying to get some justice in Robeson County among the minorities. ... We want to see (Sheriff) Hubert Stone out."

Robeson County Sheriff Hubert Stone wasn't available for comment.

Williams, Skins Romp Over Broncos

Super Bowl MVP

Washington Redskin quarterback Doug Williams throws a pass during action from Sunday's game against the Denver Broncos in Super Bowl XXII at Jack Murphy Stadium in San Diego. Williams threw for 340 yards and was named the Most Valuable Player in the 42-10 win by the Redskins. (AP Color-photo)

SAN DIEGO (AP) — As programmed and predicted, the touchdowns came in bunches. The quarterback made big plays, threw for long scores and rode off with the trophies and the championship.

That quarterback was supposed to be John Elway and the Super Bowl was to be his coronation.

When the touchdowns came swiftly in the second quarter — five in 18 plays — four were on passes. But Elway didn't throw them. Doug Williams, who did, stole the throne from the man who would be king.

"I didn't come here for a one-on-one thing with Elway," Williams said after his record-setting performance in Washington's 42-10 victory over Denver Sunday. "I didn't come here to play John Elway."

He came to play and conquer the Broncos. Williams, the first black quarterback to start a Super Bowl, shook off a first-quarter injury to set a record with 340 passing yards. He also tied two Super Bowl marks.

"You will never see a better game by a quarterback in a clutch situation than what you saw Doug do," said Barry Wilburn, who had two interceptions. "Today, Doug Williams was the greatest quarterback in football."

The nine-year veteran, who practically disappeared after two distressing seasons in the USFL, had plenty of help.

Timmy Smith, a rookie who thought his career was over when his knee was wrecked by a "cheap shot" in college, rushed for a record 204 yards. Ricky Sanders, another former USFL player, caught nine passes for 193 yards and two touchdowns, breaking one record and tying another.

Elway, Denver's one-man gang, was outmanned. He couldn't keep pace with that attack. Nor could he handle the Washington defense, which was befuddled by Denver's early razzle-dazzle. The Redskins clamped down on Elway and eliminated the Three Amigos from the Broncos' attack.

For one quarter, Denver dominated. Then, it self-destructed.

"We were playing some great defense in the first quarter," Broncos defensive end Rulon Jones said, "and we got that quick touchdown and were ahead 10-0. Then it fell apart."

"From doing things we were supposed to be doing, things just collapsed on us."

Just as they did last year, when the Broncos messed up three opportunities and managed only a 10-9 halftime lead over the Giants. New York blitzed them in the second half for a 39-20 victory.

The Redskins didn't wait as long to overwhelm the Broncos, who joined Minnesota as the only teams to lose two consecutive Super Bowls. Washington's victory was the fourth straight lopsided win for an NFC team.

"It's a lifetime dream when you come out in the second half and have a 25-point lead," Sanders said.

That lead was built on 18 plays. Sanders started the comeback by beating Mark Haynes for a record-tying 80-yard touchdown pass on Washington's first play of the second quarter. It also was Williams' first play after being removed with a hyperflexed left knee late in the opening period. And it tied the record for the Super Bowl's longest TD pass play, set in 1981 by the Raiders' Jim Plunkett and Kenny King.

"We put our offense in a bad situation," Wilburn said of Denver's 10 first-quarter points. Seven came on the Broncos' first play, a 56-yard TD pass to Ricky Nattiel, who got behind Wilburn with only 1:57 gone. It was the fastest touchdown in Super Bowl history.

"But when Ricky got those seven points back, that's all we needed to see."

It was far from all they would see. The Redskins needed just five plays to go 64 yards for the lead. Gary Clark fooled Steve Wilson on a 27-yard corner pattern for a 14-10 edge.

Elway, who also caught a first-quarter pass from Steve Sewell leading to Rich Karlis' 24-yard field goal, guided Denver to the Washington 26. But Karlis missed from 43 yards and Denver's attack had lost its bite. For good.

"We got up quick and were moving the football," Elway said after a mediocre 14-for-38, 257-yard performance that included five sacks and three interceptions. "They started making some good plays and we never answered the bell to take the momentum away."

The Redskins were so busy ringing up touchdowns they established a SAN DIEGO — Adios, Amigos. Vaya con Elway.

You guys were great, weren't they folks? Let's hear it for them, a really big hand for the Denver Broncos' Three Amigos. Really cute act, fellas.

Now get off the stage. And pick up those footballs you dropped. Worst juggling act in vaudeville.

A drum roll, please, and let's bring up the winners of our nationwide talent search, just in from the nation's capital, those glue-fingered grabbers of gusto, those penultimate pluckers of pigskin, the Washington Redskins' receivers, better known as...

Uh, what do you fellas call yourselves? Your nickname?

"We're just three players out there trying to get the job done." Redskin wideout Gary Clark said Sunday after the Redskins beat the Broncos, 42-10, in the so-called Super Bowl.

Great, Gary, but can't you people come up with anything catchier, no pun intended? "Three Players Out There Trying to Get the Job Done" won't fit on coffee mugs or T-shirts.

Brown Ignites Pack By DePaul

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Chucky Brown finally took advantage of his height when North Carolina State needed it the most, and the Wolfpack rallied for a 71-66 victory over DePaul Sunday.

The 6-foot-9 Brown and 7-10 Charles Shackleford were frustrated much of the afternoon by the quickness of the Blue Demons, especially underneath the basket. But Brown retaliated in the final nine minutes, scoring 10 points to wipe out a five-point deficit and break a tie.

"I wanted the ball real bad because I didn't think they could stop me down low," Brown said. "I just made the shots. I was taking good shots, and I was proud of myself."

Although the Wolfpack held a 36-34 edge in rebounding, DePaul made N.C. State work for every possession on the boards.

"We didn't expect that much trouble from them on the boards. I think they were really great athletes. They were quick off their feet," Brown said. "That's what really beat us. Shack and I weren't as quick to get off our feet as they were."

Rod Strickland's floating one-hander with 3:59 left helped DePaul open a 62-57 lead, but N.C. State came back with seven straight points, four by Brown and a 3-point basket by Rodney Monroe with 2:32 remaining.

Strickland intercepted a pass and threw in a layup at 1:48 to tie the score at 64. Brown came back with a turnaround jumper in the lane. He was fouled by Kevin Holland, and his free throw with 1:25 left pushed the Wolfpack out to a 67-64 edge.

"I never got impatient because there was plenty of time left on the clock and you never know when a quick spurt is going to happen," Brown said.

Terence Greene drove the lane to score for DePaul with 1:09 left. The Wolfpack ran down the clock, and Chris Corchiani turned a DePaul desperation foul into two free throws with 16 seconds left.

"I put Chris Corchiani in a very difficult situation. We sent him in to run the delay cold, and he did a great job," N.C. State Coach Jim Valvano said. "He had to hit the free throws, and it was all net."

Another reason for DePaul's failure to hold onto the lead was an 8-for-9 effort at the free throw line. The Wolfpack hit 20 of 27 free throws.

"We had an 11-point lead and we missed (six of seven) free throws," DePaul Coach Joey Meyer said. "That let the crowd back into the game and let them catch back up."

Strickland scored 30 points for DePaul, which saw a four-game winning streak end and fell to 12-5. Kevin Edwards had 16 points and Stanley Brundy 13.

Lyle Wins

Lyle Triumphs As Couples Falters

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Sandy Lyle appraised his performance in the last round of the Phoenix Open and found it acceptable, even pleasing.

"I didn't do anything daft," Lyle said Sunday.

He left that to Fred Couples.

In less than an hour, Couples twice hooked tee shots into the water on the 18th hole at the TPC course at Scottsdale.

The first one, which trickled into the lake after hitting a spectator, cost him an opportunity to win in regulation play.

The next one cost him the 3-hole sudden-death playoff.

"At the end, he kind of gave it to me," the Scottish golfer said after making up seven shots over the last 18 holes and then becoming the beneficiary of Couples' mistakes.

"He was a bit unlucky. In the pressure, his right hand got over a little and he pulled it," said Lyle, who won the playoff with a bogey-5 on the third extra hole.

Couples' comments were not recorded. He departed immediately after the playoff without speaking to reporters.

Lyle's victory was his third on the PGA Tour and was worth $117,000 from the total purse of $650,000. His comeback from a 7-shot deficit in the last round marked the biggest final-day rally on the Tour since Tom Kite made up seven shots to win the 1986 Western Open.

"I was moving forward and the leaders came back to me," Lyle said. "Seven shots dwindled away quickly. But I'm still surprised. I thought I had a very thin chance to make the playoff," he said.

Third-round leader Davis Love III fell back by bogeying four consecutive holes, beginning with No. 8, surrendering the lead to Couples.

Lyle, who had a final-round 65, drove the green on the 305-yard 17th and two-putted for birdie. He was tied for the lead until he bogeyed the 72nd hole after putting his approach in a greenside bunker.

That gave Couples a one-stroke lead as he stood on the tee. He promptly hooked his tee shot, which bounced off a spectator's leg and into the water. He, too, made bogey and, with a closing 70, was tied with Lyle at 15-under-par 269.

Adios To The 3 Amigos

'Smurfs, Second Generation,' said Washington receiver coach Charley Taylor.

Ouch. A recycled nickname. How declassé.

Work on it, will you? Since you are Redskins, how about the Seven Kemo Sabes? Tonto won't mind if we borrow his word. Not great, but I'm on deadline, fellas.

Let's see, Ricky Sanders caught nine passes, Gary Clark caught three, Don Warren two, and four guys caught one each. Seven receivers. Eighteen catches, four for touchdowns.

Go figure. After six months of sophisticated scouting, dazzling terminology and miles of computer printouts, you seven, with Doug "Lone Ranger" Williams, reduced NFL strategy to the two favorite words on every football sandlot:

Go long.
Touchdown passes of 80, 27, 50 and 8 yards.

You gave the Broncos a new theme song: "Let's Twist in the Wind Again, Like We Did Last Winter."

A Denver disaster? For a historical equivalent to the Bronco second-quarter collapse, General Custer would have had to go down on the Titanic, with camera footage shot from the Diet Fuji Hindenberg blimp.

And we can blame it, a lot of it, on you Seven Kemo Sabes.

For the last two weeks, America has been saturated by the Three Amigos. The book, the movie and Las Vegas act were in the works. And we could almost see it — the ceremonial placing of the sombrero on the head of President Reagan in the Rose Garden.

What happened? You Redskin receivers weren't supposed to be spectacular. What was your game plan? How about it, Charley Taylor?

"Our plan," Taylor said, "was to be low key, go in there and kick some ..."

Uh, that's a little technical for our readers, Charley. Could you explain? You said something about Denver's surprising coverage of your receivers?

"Had they (Broncos) backed off and played zone, those (bombs) would have been 10-yard gains," Taylor said. "But they came up and challenged us."

"They pressed (played bump-and-run), with no deep help, which can be a good defense, Chicago uses it effectively. They left their zone to single up, which is a good tactic, but it leaves you vulnerable."

"They thought they had Doug (Williams) rattled, they said, 'Hey, it's time to press him, shut him down.'"

The trouble was, Williams rattles like a brand new Jaguar.

Even with the Redskins down 10-0, Williams in the huddle was, as Gary Clark said, "the same cucumber. We never know what he's thinking, if he's upset, because he never shows it."

Bronco safety Tony Lilly said of the bump-and-run, "We figured we'd go at 'em, we didn't want to lay back."

Instead, they got laid out. "Our big shots (passes) happened every time they went 'man,'" Clark said.

The problem was, when the Denver cornerbacks played bump-and-run, or press, instead of hanging back, they occasionally need backup help. But the Denver safeties were busy blitzing and falling for play-action fakes. Williams stepped back and cumbered the Broncos to death, with a little help from his Seven Kemo Sabes.

"We like the press," Redskin wideout Art Monk said. "It gives us the opportunity to do more things we like to do. It was good for us."

Williams' Performance May Change The Game

HAL BOCK

AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Another sociological stereotype passed quietly into history at the Super Bowl, tucked safely away by Doug Williams of the Washington Redskins.

From now on, the MVP quarterback doesn't have to be the blond, blue-eyed All-American with the rifle arm. Sorry, John Elway.

From now on he can be a black passer from the wrong side of the tracks, with a fierce determination to succeed and the inner strength to ignore adversity.

Doug Williams raised America's consciousness with a record-breaking performance in the Redskins' 42-10 romp over Denver and Elway. He broke one Super Bowl record and tied two others, and by the time he was through this year's hero was just "the quarterback," not "the black quarterback."

"All week long, the importance of being a black quarterback was thrown around," Williams said. "But before I got here, I knew one thing. I wasn't the quarterback of the Washington Redskins because I was black. I didn't come here with that in mind."

Still, people could not ignore Williams' race. Black quarterbacks are a curiosity in the NFL. This is America, where all men are created equal. But in football, white quarterbacks have always been a little more equal than their black counterparts.

So if you were looking for an MVP quarterback candidate Sunday, the natural place to stop was Elway, equipped with a million-dollar arm and a toothy smile to go with it. But he was the second-best quarterback in the Super Bowl.

Williams stole his thunder, passing for 340 yards and four touchdowns, one of them an 80-yarder. That broke Joe Montana's record of 331 yards and tied marks set by Terry Bradshaw and Jim Plunkett. In one magical game, Doug Williams, a black playing a white position, made the Super Bowl color blind.

For a long time, when black passers came into the NFL, they were converted to defensive backs or wide receivers. It was position discrimination that changed ever so slowly with people like James Harris and Joe Gilliam.

Then along came Williams from dusty Zachary, La., a mapdot town light years removed from Los Angeles, where Elway grew up. Williams played at Grambling, a small state school, and Elway at Stanford, a prestigious private institution.

Both were first-round draft choices. Williams was installed almost in desperation by woeful Tampa Bay, while Elway was warmly welcomed by more competitive Denver.

Williams took the Bucs to the NFC championship game one year but was largely dismissed by experts. He was, remember, a black quarterback, burdened by the long-standing racial albatross. The Bucs eventually soured on him, rejected his contract demands and shrugged as he went off to the USFL.

The new league failed and personal tragedy struck with the death of his young wife. So when the Redskins signed Williams as a backup and used him for exactly one pass all last season — a year when Elway delivered Denver to the Super Bowl — it hardly seemed a hint of what would happen Sunday.

But there was Williams, starting at quarterback in the Super Bowl and scrutinized all week for the racial history he was writing. It was not a role he relished, because he saw himself not as a black quarterback, but rather as a quarterback who happened to be black.

"Hopefully, we're at the point now where most people are looking at players as players and not colors anymore," Coach Joe Gibbs said.

"I think," Williams said, "the important thing was to come here and play the game and do what we needed to. And that was to win."

Three hours of root canal surgery Saturday and a hyperflexed left knee that took him out of the game for two plays at the end of the first quarter Sunday did not interfere.

"The tooth was sore," Williams said.

And the knee? "On the sidelines, I felt I could walk and set up. No matter the pain, I was going back."

When he did, he produced five touchdowns in 5 minutes, 47 seconds, and silenced the whispers black quarterbacks have heard for years.

post-season mark for points in a period with 35.

After Karlis' miss, Clark made a 16-yard reception, then Smith broke a 58-yard scoring run for his first NFL touchdown.

"I thought I'd never get the chance at the pros," said Smith, who played only two games in his final two seasons at Texas Tech after a severe knee injury. "I didn't really get to show what I could do in college. It cost me a shot at being a No. 1 (draft pick)."

Smith, a native of Hobbs, N.M., was hurt by what he called a cheap shot by a New Mexico player after he had scored a touchdown.

"They came in there trying to get me. They felt I should have stayed and represented New Mexico. It really messed my head."

Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs had a gut feeling about starting Smith ahead of George Rogers on Sunday, and that decision tore out the guts of the Denver defense.

"I felt they'd be going out there to shut down our inside running game," said Gibbs, who is 2-1 in Super Bowls since 1983. "George is our starter, but I went to him and said we needed more speed early. I felt we would get George in there earlier than the third quarter, but the way Timmy was running ..."

The way Williams was passing, Terry Bradshaw's Super Bowl mark of four touchdowns in a game was about to be equaled in just over 13 minutes.

Williams and Sanders teamed on a 50-yard pass for a 28-10 lead and Smith's 43-yard run set up an 8-yard pass to Clint Didier, finishing off the outburst.

"That was the best quarter I ever saw a Redskins team play," Gibbs said.

It was the best game of Williams' checkered career — he completed 18 of 29 passes. It capped the most visible week of his career, which began as a 1978 first-round pick by the Buccaneers and seemed ended when the USFL collapsed.

"I feel good about being a part of the Washington Redskins and being named MVP," Williams said. "I think there was a lot of television sets turned on today and a lot of people will start to see me as a role model."

There Was No Where To Run For Elway Under A Big Rush

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Washington Redskins stopped John Elway's arm by taking away his legs.

Elway, an artist at escaping the pass rush all season, had no place to run in Sunday's Super Bowl. The Redskins planned it that way.

"The main thing we wanted to do was keep him from being able to plant his feet and throw," Washington defensive tackle Dave Butz said of Elway.

The Redskins defense did just that, keeping Elway off-balance with defensive pressure that helped produce three interceptions, five sacks and at least a dozen hurried or deflected throws. A couple of passes also were dropped.

The result was a 42-10 Washington victory.

"Elway can give you a lot of problems, but he had a big load to carry today," said Richie Petitbon, Washington assistant head coach for defense.

"We went in (rushed) with five guys, but that's nothing revolutionary," he said. "Sometimes four guys just isn't enough. Your defensive ends may have a clear shot at Elway, but he can still scramble and get away."

At the beginning, everything went right for Elway. He threw a 56-yard touchdown pass to Ricky Nattiel on Denver's first play from scrimmage. Then he drove the team 61 yards, ending in a 24-yard Rich Karlis field goal and a 10-0 Denver lead with 5:51 gone in the first period.

But that would be the last score by Denver, which surrendered a playoff-record 35 points in the second quarter in losing its second consecutive Super Bowl.

"We just broke down as a team," Denver wide receiver Vance Johnson said. "When John doesn't get time to throw it makes our receivers alter their routes. ... I guess you can blame a lack of concentration for the dropped balls."

Elway completed four of eight passes in the first quarter, but was most ineffective when the Redskins were at their second-quarter peak.

"They started making some big plays, and we never answered the bell to take the momentum away from them," Elway said. "Once we were down at halftime by 25 points, they're tying those ears back and rushing."

After Washington scored its first TD on Doug Williams' 80-yard pass to Ricky Sanders with 53 seconds gone in the second period, the Broncos ran once and Elway threw two incompletions before punting.

Denver ran off seven plays on its next possession, including three incompletions, ending in a missed field goal from 43 yards.

Chi Chi Tops In Sr. Skins

HONOLULU (AP) — Chi Chi Rodriguez, $300,000 richer for a quick two days of work, had some regrets. "One thing I feel bad about is that Sam (Snead) didn't win a skin," Rodriguez said after Sunday's final day of the inaugural Senior Skins Game.

"I was playing really poorly last week, and when I came in here, Sam gave me some lessons and it made all the difference," Rodriguez said.

"I don't think Sam's going to leave here empty-handed," he added with a smile.

The 52-year-old Rodriguez could afford to be generous.

He turned the $360,000 Senior Skins into a virtual one-man show, winning $260,000 the final day to go, with the $40,000 he had collected during Saturday's first nine holes.

Arnold Palmer, 58, won just one hole, or skin, worth $20,000, on the first day. Gary Player, 52, won the only other hole that eluded Rodriguez, collecting $40,000 on No. 12 on Sunday. The 75-year-old Snead was shut out.

In Skins competition, the low score on a hole wins the prize money, or skin. If the hole is tied, the prize money is carried to the next hole, with all four of the players still in contention.

In the Seniors Skins, the first six holes were worth $10,000 each, the next six worth $20,000 each, and the final six worth $30,000 each, with no buildup on sudden-death holes.

In the sudden-death, players who tie the hole continue, while higher scores are eliminated.

The event at Turtle Bay Resort on the north shore of Oahu continued Rodriguez's domination of senior tournaments. He won seven events and more than $500,000 on the 50-and-older circuit last year.

Rodriguez capped the Senior Skins by beating Palmer in a six-hole playoff, after Snead and Player went out earlier in the showdown.

The final three holes of regulation were tied, with a carryover of $90,000, then it was six holes later before Palmer bogeyed and Rodriguez parred to collect the final skin.

Palmer, who had not won a single hole in the last two regular Skins events, was frustrated after the seniors' edition of the match-play competition.

"I was very disappointed in my play," Palmer said. "I had putts for skins on almost every hole, but I didn't make them."

"It just boiled down to bad putting."

The two most dramatic shots of the event perhaps were Rodriguez's 35-foot birdie putt worth $80,000 on the first hole Sunday, and Palmer's poor 9-iron on the final playoff hole, which led to a bogey.

Player said he actually thought his game was fine, but that the putts just weren't dropping for him.

"I played well, putted well, but they never went in," he said.

Snead was left fretting about his play.

"It's back to the drawing board," he said. "I need to find out why I'm not hitting the ball solid."

Wildcats Still Tops In AP Poll

By JIM O'CONNELL
AP Basketball Writer

Arizona, one vote shy of unanimous, remained atop the AP college basketball today for the fourth straight week and seventh overall.

Two teams, No. 15 Vanderbilt and No. 18 Bradley, joined the Top Twenty for the first time this season, while St. John's re-joined the poll at No. 20.

The Wildcats, the only Division I team with 20 victories, received 61 of 62 first-place votes and 1,239 points in the voting by a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

Nevada-Las Vegas, like Arizona beaten only once this season, jumped from fourth to second with 1,094 points after registering its 18th and 19th victories.

Brigham Young, the only unbeaten major-college team and holder of the longest current winning streak at 15 games, jumped from seventh to third, narrowly edging Duke 1,009-1,006. Duke, 13-2, improved one place from last week's voting after winning its only game of the week, 81-78 over Stetson.

Temple, 16-1, also improved one place, receiving 989 points, 83 more than Purdue, which had been second. The Boilermakers, 17-2, lost at Indiana on Saturday, snapping a 16-game winning streak.

Oklahoma, which beat then-No. 12 Iowa State twice last week, improved from 10th to seventh with 883 points and an 18-2 record.

North Carolina, which lost to Wake Forest 83-80 and beat Georgia Tech 73-71 to go 15-3, fell from third to eighth with 871 points.

Pittsburgh, 15-2, jumped two places to take ninth with 767 points, while Kentucky, 14-3, rounded out the Top Ten with 621 points, 29 more than Michigan.

Rounding out the Second Ten were Syracuse, Iowa, Georgetown, Vanderbilt, Iowa State, Illinois, Bradley, Florida and St. John's.

Last week's Second Ten was Pittsburgh, Iowa State, Illinois, Florida, Georgetown, Iowa, Syracuse, Texas-El Paso, Villanova and Southern Mississippi.

Vanderbilt, 13-4, joins the Top Twenty after beating its third and fourth ranked teams this season. The Commodores, who earlier this year beat then-No. 1 North Carolina and Indiana, beat Kentucky 83-66 and Florida 92-65.

Bradley, probably best known this season for the nation's leading scorer, senior guard Hersey Hawkins, improved to 13-2 with victories last week over West Virginia, 96-65, and Tulsa, 65-62.

St. John's, ranked 20th four weeks ago, beat Villanova 60-55 and Seton Hall 58-55 in a pair of Big East games to improve its overall record to 14-3.

Texas-El Paso, 17-4, had been 18th for two straight weeks before falling this week after splitting two Western Athletic Conference games, beating Colorado State 53-51 and losing at home to New Mexico 70-69.

Villanova, 14-6, and Southern Mississippi, 15-3, both dropped out of the Top Twenty after just one week in the rankings.

Villanova lost both its games, falling at home to St. John's and at Providence in overtime 82-76. Southern Mississippi beat Louisville 95-92 but lost at South Carolina 97-78.

The Top Twenty teams in the Associated Press' college basketball poll, with first-place votes in parentheses, total points based on 20-19-18-17-16-15-14-13-12-11-10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1, records through Jan. 31 and last week's ranking:

Celtics' Win Over Philly Was Anything But Super

BOSTON (AP) — The noon news probably was more exciting than the game between the two teams that used to make up the NBA's showcase rivalry.

There was nothing super about the Boston Celtics' 100-85 victory over the Philadelphia 76ers on Super Bowl Sunday.

"We played ugly basketball, but they played uglier," Boston Coach K.C. Jones said.

The game turned into a fiasco shortly after the high noon tipoff. The only question was how much the Celtics would win by.

"It was a boring slowdown game," said Boston superstar Larry Bird, who had 29 points, 17 rebounds, five assists and three blocked shots. "It wasn't a hard game, but it seemed the game was taking forever."

"We didn't shoot well, we didn't penetrate well, we didn't pass well, we didn't do anything well," Philadelphia Coach Matt Guokas said.

The tempo of the game may have been set when Philadelphia All-Star Charles Barkley tested his twisted ankle and limped off the court a half-hour before the scheduled start. "We had a letdown with Barkley out," Bird said. "With Barkley in there, you come prepared to play."

"A guy like Charles makes you play that much harder," said Kevin McHale, who had 26 points and eight rebounds. "You get into it mentally. You're almost a little bit down when you realize that he's not going to be in there."

"It was bad, it wasn't fun being out there. It was a long day for everyone. Not having Barkley out there made a difference for both teams."

"There's always a chance of reinjury and it's not worth it for one game," Guokas said of the decision to hold Barkley out of a second game in a row.

"It was tough sitting there and not being able to help or do anything," Barkley said. "I wouldn't have been effective going left, and that's my basic move. It's frustrating, but injuries are part of the game."

The Celtics, whipped on the road by the Detroit Pistons Friday night, jumped to a 24-12 lead, then went the last 5:23 of the first period without scoring. But they still led 24-19 at the end of the quarter.

The Celtics scored only 19 points in the second quarter — and widened their advantage. Philadelphia hit only four of 21 field goal tries and scored just 10 points to trail 43-29 at the half.

The 29 points in the half were an NBA season low, one fewer than Washington scored in a half against Atlanta on Dec. 3.

Bird, who had 12 points and 13 rebounds at halftime, added 10 points and McHale 14 in the third period as the Celtics took a whopping 74-53 lead and cruised through the fourth quarter.

BACK TO THE BORDER — Vocalist Linda Ronstadt, whose 20-year career has traveled the length and breadth of American music, has gone home to Tucson and her

Ronstadt Album Of Mexican Tunes Involved Whole Family

By RICHARD DE ATLEY
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Her 20-year career has traveled the length and breadth of American music — from California rock to Broadway, from bayou blues to Motown. Now Linda Ronstadt returns home with an album of Mexican ranchera tunes. "Canciones de mi Padre" or "Songs of My Father" is a celebration of Ronstadt's Tucson, Ariz., roots, with the singer's whole family getting into the act. Dad Gilbert did the desert scene on the back of the Spanish-language LP and offered fatherly advice. Her two brothers and a niece sang harmony on several tracks. Cousins helped out with the English song translations on the inside cover. "People have said 'this is such a departure in your career.' Really, for me, singing rock 'n' roll was a departure," Ronstadt said in a recent interview.

"When we were kids we sang Mexican songs, and we sang folk music and my sister sang whatever classics were around, the standards, and my father would sing them, and we all sang in Spanish." Ronstadt's musical styles have journeyed through folk tunes ("Different Drum"), country ballads ("Long, Long Time"), California rock ("Desperado"), hard rock ("Back in the U.S.A."), Broadway ("Pirates of Penzance"), classic ballads ("What's New") and Motown soul ("Tracks of My Tears"). "Canciones de mi Padre," however, seems to come closest to the Ronstadt soul. The singer traces her Hispanic roots in the Americas back to Jose Francisco de Ortega, a Spanish Army sergeant in the 1769 Alta California expedition of explorer Gaspar de Portola. Ortega was the first Spaniard to set eyes on San Francisco Bay. Ronstadt also has in her lineage Henry Dalton, an Englishman who came to Mexican California and acquired Rancho Azusa and part of the Rancho San Francisquito, both in Southern California. "People say, 'Oh, you have a German surname,'" she said. "There was this very big settlement of Germans, and they intermarried. People say, 'Oh, your family moved from Mexico,' and I say, 'We didn't move, the border moved.'"

"We thought of ourselves as Mexicans," she said of her childhood. "I didn't realize until I traveled to Mexico that I was an American." Ronstadt's first and biggest influence in song styles was the Mexican singer Lola Beltran, whom she saw as a child and with whom she has performed as an adult — an experience she relates with fan-like enthusiasm. As a credit to the leverage she has acquired as an artist, "Canciones" was produced and distributed with no known demographic market in an era when radio stations are defining their play lists by age, race, income and attitude. And even though the resurgent Los Lobos hit version of "La Bamba" has opened a trend for Hispanic music, Ronstadt denied she was jumping on a bandwagon. "They think you are scheming to do this or scheming to do that," she said. "That's of no concern to me. It's hard enough to make a record, without worrying about that stuff." Even the Hispanic market was dubious for this record of 13 folk songs, many of them first recorded 50 or 60 years ago by Mexican artists, she noted.

"Musically, I didn't consider any market," Miss Ronstadt said. "I didn't consider the Hispanic market, I didn't consider the English-speaking market. I considered my own taste, and I did what I've been dying to do, songs that I love desperately."

Which needs no translation. The record, despite its obscure material, has climbed into the Top 100 of the Billboard charts and Ronstadt appeared on NBC's "Saturday Night Live" to bring some of the passionate ranchera singing style to its hip audience.

Ronstadt said she began zeroing in on a long-held desire to make a Spanish-language album three years ago when she renegotiated her contract with Asylum Records.

Letterman Anxious About Prime Time Show Ratings

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Expect an unusual entry next week near the top of the Nielsen ratings: "Late Night with David Letterman" is moving, for one night only, to Thursday night prime time, NBC's biggest night for ratings.

Yet instead of reveling in the probability that millions will see his 90-minute, sixth anniversary special, Letterman is spinning amid nightmarish visions of a ratings free fall, despite a lead-in from the network's top-rated comedies, including "The Cosby Show." "If this thing tanks, I'm outta town. I'm back to Indianapolis, because NBC spent a lotta dough on this," said Letterman, who taped the anniversary special last week at the ornate Radio City Music Hall in front of an audience of 6,000. "Thursday is, like, NBC's big night. But don't you understand?" he said, his voice rising. "They're just giving us enough rope to hang ourselves! If we go in on their most powerful night and tank, goodbye! You won't be seeing me for years! I'll be gone! I'll be on at 1:30 (a.m.)! I'll be on before the 'Today' show!"

Calm down, Dave. Like last year's "Late Night" fifth anniversary special, taped in Studio 8-H, this year's special features Paul Shaffer and the band joined by a who's who of rock stars, including Billy Joel, Warren Zevon, Joe Walsh, Duane Eddy, Robert Cray, David Sanborn, Clarence Clemmons, Tom Scott, Freddie Hubbard, Jon Faddis, Carole King, Cyndi Lauper, Ben E. King, Roberta Flack, and Ashford and Simpson.

Late Arrival

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP) — "Family Ties" star Michael J. Fox, forced to abandon his $30,000 Range Rover when it broke down, was a late arrival for a Super Bowl XXII party attended by Dick Clark and other celebrities.

The four-wheel-drive vehicle died just short of Chasen's Restaurant, where television producer Pierre Cosset threw Sunday's bash. The vehicle was pushed to a side street.

Fox walked the short distance to the restaurant, where he entered with "Dynasty" vixen Joan Collins.

Other Super Bowl watchers at Chasen's included actor Lloyd Bridges, "L.A. Law" creator Steven Bochco, actress Angie Dickinson, Ed McMahon, comedian Don Rickles, actor Ricky Schroeder, entertainer Ann Jillian and oil millionaire Marvin Davis.

Murphy Top Draw

NEW YORK (AP) — "Top Gun" star Tom Cruise has been shot down as the nation's top movie box office draw by "Beverly Hills Cop" Eddie Murphy, according to a survey of motion picture exhibitors.

Murphy notched hits last year with "Beverly Hills Cop II" and "Eddie Murphy Raw," moving up from second place on the Quigley Publications list to No. 1.

According to the list released Sunday, Murphy was followed in the top 10 by Michael Douglas, Michael J. Fox, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Paul Hogan, Cruise, Glenn Close, Sylvester Stallone, Cher and Mel Gibson.

The survey asked movie theater executives to select 10 people whose names on the marquee draw the most customers.

Quigley Publications, which has conducted the survey annually since 1932, did not say how many people were questioned.

There will also be highlights of past shows, the best of Stupid Pet Tricks, a visit from comic Richard Belzer and appearances by "Late Night" regulars Chris Elliott and Larry "Bud" Melman.

"If it doesn't do well, I, of course, take it personally and will become bitter and disgusted," Letterman said. "What we're really counting on is people are too lazy to change the channel after 'Cosby.'"

Letterman often indulges in a kind of self-deprecating mantra that recalls Chinese superstition of cursing one's lot in order to fool the gods. For a man who virtually single-handedly turned the dreary post-midnight time period into a ratings bonanza for NBC, he seems awfully insecure.

"Sooner or later it's going to go away, you know. And it could be sooner," Letterman fretted. "But Johnny Carson, this man, they could prop him up there in his sleep, and people would still watch him. He's beloved. He's the idol of generations. We're not close to that. We're still struggling. We're still fighting for every crumb."

Carson has been doing "The Tonight Show" for a quarter-century. He recently signed a new contract with NBC. So did Letterman. Letterman is widely presumed to be Carson's heir apparent.

"Late Night" seems to be abandoning the wacky experiments that marked its earlier years in favor of a more traditional talk-show format. That would certainly ease a transition of "Late Night" to the "Tonight Show" slot if and when Carson retires.

"First of all," said Letterman, "I think following Carson, regardless of who it is, is going to be tough. I don't know. I think the longer this show succeeds at 12:30 (EST), the more uncertainty there is with moving it to 11:30...."

"I must say, the show for me personally hasn't gotten any easier after six years. It's not like, oh, now we've figured something out and we're able to streamline the operation. But I think as a person grows older, and I'm speaking of myself, when you get to be 40, the kind of things that you're interested in doing are going to be a little different than the things you were interested in doing when you were 34. So I think maybe that's part of it. And I wouldn't mind. It would be easier on me to try to do a more traditional kind of talk show."

One of the show's early innovators was writer Merrill Markoe. She and Letterman had lived together for years, but she moved to the West Coast two years ago to pursue film projects, prompting rumors of a split.

"The only thing I can say is there is a split based only on geography," Letterman said. "She's in California and I'm here, but on every vacation I go to California, and she's coming to town in a week for our anniversary party."

The show might have changed, but Letterman hasn't. When it's suggested that it's still a pretty darn good TV show, he immediately interrupts: "It blows. It blows. Top to bottom. We're flying on fumes."

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Steer clear of a friend who tends to be too demanding and sometimes gets on your nerves. Don't neglect any important business matters.
AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): You'll have a considerable amount of luck today at being in the right place at the right time, so keep your eyes open for opportunities.
PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Your fellow workers can be very helpful today, but someone you don't know too well could give you bad advice. Consider new ideas carefully.

 North East South West
 1 ♠ Pass 1 ♠ Pass
 1 ♠ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—On this auction, partner could have four spades as well, and it is your duty to probe for a possible 4-4 major fit. Bid one spade. At the one-level, the fourth suit is natural, and any new suit by responder in an unlimited auction is a one-round force.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

 What do you bid now?
 A.—You have the values for game but you can't be sure of your best contract. It might be in diamonds, no trump or even spades. For the moment, jump to three diamonds. A jump in opener's minor is forcing, and will give you time to find

 What do you bid now?
 A.—This is a matter of style. If you play that two hearts is a game force, you need no more than bid three hearts—you want to leave as much room as possible for slam exploration. However, if partner is allowed to pass three hearts, you have to jump to game in his suit.
Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

Report Shows Increase In Breast Cancer Rate, Dip In Lung Cancer

By PAUL RECER
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Breast cancer has risen to the highest rate in history, while lung cancer among men has dropped to the lowest rate this decade, according to a new federal report.

The report, compiled by the National Cancer Institute, shows that breast cancer continues to be the leading cause of cancer death among women and suggests that early diagnosis through screening has not reduced mortality "to the extent possible."

Lung cancer, while still the leading cause of cancer deaths, decreased among males in 1985, the latest year in the study, but continues to increase in women.

The statistics used in the report are from the years 1950 to 1985 and were compiled by the NCI from a variety of studies to present what the agency called "a very general picture" of cancer incidence, mortality and survival over 3 1/2 decades in America.

Cancer deaths, in general, the report said, are declining for most age groups, though there are increases in death and incidence in specific types of cancer.

"The cancer mortality rates among Americans under the age of 55 have been decreasing during the time period... 1950 to 1985 (and) for all age groups up to the age of 85 when lung cancer, a largely preventable disease, is excluded," the report said.

Cancer among the young, under age 15, has shown the most improvement in mortality rates in recent years, the report said. Cancer death among the young was at about 3.5 per 100,000 population in 1985, a decrease of about 33 percent over 35 years, according to the report.

Lung cancer continues to have a major impact on the general statistics. The number of lung cancer deaths in 1985 totaled 122,395, about 90,898 more deaths than would be predicted by an extension of the 1950 rates, the report said.

"Without lung cancer, the total cancer deaths in 1985 would have been below that expected from the 1950 rates by 44,500," the report said.

It attributed a downward trend in lung cancer among males to a reduction since 1965 in cigarette smoking, which the report called "the major cause of lung cancer."

For white males, there were 80 cases of lung cancer per 100,000 population in 1985, compared to a rate of 84 in 1984. The report said this is the lowest rate since 1977.

For black males, the rate declined from 135.5 per 100,000 in 1984 to 124.7 in 1985, "the lowest rate since 1981 for black males."

Among females, lung cancer rates have increased generally, but the rate is declining among women under age 45. Over the decade 1975-85, the number of lung cancer cases among females increased at the rate of about 4.7 percent a year, with an incidence rate in 1985 of about 36.3 per 100,000.

Lung cancer death among females increased about 5 percent a year over the measured decade and reached 26.8 per 100,000 in 1985.

The report said the recent trend of increasing rates of breast cancer "may be due in part to increased screening activities" but it said the effort is not as successful as it should be.

"The lack of a large decline in mortality (from breast cancer) is strong evidence that little effective screening is taking place," the report said, because clinical trials have demonstrated that early detection and appropriate treatment "can reduce the mortality rate... by over 30 percent."

Breast cancer rates among American women is between 104 and 107 per 100,000, "the highest incidence rates ever recorded," the report said. The rate increased by 17 percent from 1975 to 1985.

The report said the rates increase very steeply in post-menopausal women. For women under 50, the rate is 32.8 per 100,000, while for those over 50, the rate is 335.

Other findings include:

—Stomach cancer incidences and deaths have decreased sharply in the last 35 years, but the decline in rate has flattened somewhat in recent years. The NCI estimates 24,600 new cases in 1987, with 14,200 deaths.

—Colon and rectal cancer mortality is declining, despite an increase in cases, indicative of earlier detection and more effective treatment.

—Prostate cancer, which has risen steadily in recent years, is showing signs of stabilizing, but remains the third leading cause of cancer death among males.

—Cervical cancer strikes about 12,800 women a year and kills 4,500 annually. But the incidence and mortality have fallen more than 70 percent in the last 35 years.

—Uterine cancer is the most common of the gynecologic tumors, with about 37,000 new cases and 3,000 deaths annually, but the survival rate has improved to more than 80 percent for all stages, and to more than 90 percent for localized tumors.

—Testicular cancer now has a cure rate of more than 90 percent.

—Malignant melanoma of the skin incidence has increased more than 200 percent in 35 years, with the death rates climbing by 150 percent. The skin cancer rate increased 10 percent in just one year, 1984 to 1985. The report attributed the increase to life style, principally an overexposure to sunlight.

—A group of cancers known as non-Hodgkin's lymphoma has sharply increased in cases and mortality and the report notes, "a definitive reason for these two increases is not known." There were 26,500 new cases in 1985 and the one-year survival rate is about 69 percent.

Study Finds A High Pregnancy Rate Among Single Navy Women

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A study by a Navy nurse suggests that a remarkably high percentage of the female sailors who become pregnant are unmarried, raising sensitive questions about the service's assimilation of women.

The study, conducted by Cmdr. Judy J. Glenn, a nurse in the obstetrics and gynecology department of the San Diego Naval Hospital, found that 41 percent of the enlisted women who became pregnant during a recent 10-month period were single at the time.

The study focused on 789 active-duty women who registered for prenatal care at the San Diego facility from July 1986 through May 1987.

Of that total, 323 or 40.9 percent said they were not married.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, 17 percent of American women giving birth during the year ending in June 1986 were unmarried. Of those women aged 18 to 24, the rate was higher — 29.9 percent — but still substantially below the rate in the Navy study.

The San Diego study also found that most of the single pregnant women were young and in low-paying ranks; that 60 percent were white and 27 percent black, and that only 17 percent had been trying to become pregnant.

The study further discovered that a large majority of the single pregnant women — 69 percent — decided to remain in the Navy rather than take advantage of an option to resign.

Such findings raise questions about the Navy's provision of sex education to female sailors; its ability or willingness to provide the types of services needed by young, single parents; and the impact of pregnancy and single parenthood on combat readiness.

"This obviously has tremendous ramifications for the Navy, health care providers and our society," Glenn said.

Such issues apparently are considered so touchy by the Navy that it initially refused to release Glenn's study, even though a report on her work had appeared in the independent weekly paper "Navy Times."

After two days of prodding, the Navy finally released the study along with a prepared statement noting the work was part of "a local health care initiative."

"It is not a Navy-wide study, and for that reason it is not possible to draw any general conclusions about the issues of pregnancy or single parents," it said.

The Navy's hesitancy to release the study comes amid promises by its civilian leader, Secretary James H. Webb, to expand job opportunities for women and to crack down on sexual harassment. It also comes as a special panel created by Webb is reporting new anecdotal evidence that Navy commanders are frustrated over the service's pregnancy rate.

The service's leaders are viewing pregnancy "as a major consideration in decisions concerning employment of women in the Navy," the panel reported in December. "The most common problems expressed by command leaders were unplanned losses of personnel, lost time and a high concentration of pregnant women at major homeports.

"Unit commanders have expressed the opinion that an effective and on-going education program regarding sex, pregnancy and responsible parenthood would contribute to a reduction in the Navy's pregnancy rate," it said.

Glenn agreed on the need for additional support services.

"We blame the women when they get pregnant, but we don't do enough to help them not get pregnant," she said.

There are about 54,000 women in the Navy, comprising about 9 percent of the active-duty force. The annual pregnancy rate has remained fairly stable over the past few years, ranging from 6 percent to 7 percent of the female force. It is higher, however, for women assigned to ships as opposed to shore installations.

The San Diego study was launched as part of a local initiative to improve the quality of prenatal care and to assure pregnant sailors adequate counseling. The finding that 41 percent of the pregnant women were unmarried was "astonishing and overwhelming," Glenn said, and clearly contributed to some of the other findings.

For example, the study showed that large numbers of the pregnant sailors did not seek prenatal care until the second or third trimester; that 18 percent were suffering from one of two different sexually transmitted diseases; that 38 percent were living in barracks or on ships, meaning they were facing a move into civilian housing; and that a third had no independent means of transportation.

"The data strongly suggest that single pregnant servicemembers are at higher risk for pregnancy complications and socio-economic difficulties during and following delivery because of their relatively low social, economic and military standings," the study concluded.

"Additional family housing, low-cost quality child care facilities and access to pediatric medical care during evenings and weekends would greatly assist these parents' efforts to fulfill their military obligations and family responsibilities," it said.

New York Plan To Combat AIDS Receives Approval

By ROBERT BELLAFORE
Associated Press Writer

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The state's unprecedented decision to combat AIDS by allowing New York City to distribute clean hypodermic needles will encourage drug abuse, says that city's special prosecutor for narcotics.

State Health Commissioner Dr. David Axelrod approved the experimental plan, believed to be the first of its kind in the United States, according to his spokesman, Peter Slocum.

Axelrod had opposed such a program, but changed his mind because the proposal had been modified to require addicts receiving the free needles to enter drug treatment programs, Slocum said Sunday.

The program developed by New York City Health Department officials would "use the offer of a free, clean needle as a carrot" to lure addicts into treatment programs, he said.

"It would not be just walk in the door, get your needle and turn around," Slocum said. The addict would receive the needle during a drug treatment session and could exchange it for a clean one at a subsequent session, he said.

The proposal has been opposed by law enforcement officials.

"It sends out the message that it is all right to shoot drugs," said Sterling Johnson Jr., the city's special prosecutor for narcotics. "It may be well-meaning but I think it is a very bad mistake."

Similar programs have been successful in Amsterdam and England, Slocum said.

Health officials became increasingly alarmed about

AIDS after a state study found that one of every 60 women who gave birth in New York City in December carried antibodies to the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

New York state has about one-third of the nation's more than 40,000 known AIDS cases. Most of those are in New York City.

AIDS has no known cure, and is spread through the sharing of intravenous needles as well as through sexual activities.

"The key thing is not to share the needle," Slocum said. "It doesn't matter if you get the needle from the city or on the street."

The program, which would be administered by the New York City Health Department, will probably begin in the spring, Slocum said.

He said the program would begin with a couple hundred addicts and would be expanded later in the year to several thousand if officials determine that giving out needles helped lower the number of drug addicts and reduce transmission of AIDS.

As part of the plan, city-run methadone and other drug treatment programs would be expanded to accommodate from the current 4,000 slots to between 7,000 and 9,000, he said. There also are an unknown number of slots in private programs.

An addict in the program would be issued an identification card with the person's photograph and fingerprint. The New York Times reported Sunday. Returned needles would be tested for blood types that differ from the addict's blood type to make sure needles were not being shared, according to the Times.

Designed to set young inmates straight, the boot camp-like program features a rigorous routine of manual labor, physical training, basic education and drug and alcohol abuse counseling. Eligible inmates must be younger than 24, serving time for a non-violent offense, be eligible for parole within three years and never have been charged with escape or attempted escape.

Shock Program Developed

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Despite jokes about "shockettes," the state wants to enlist 40 female prison inmates into its shock incarceration program, military-style camps designed to dissuade young prisoners from a life of crime.

The only question about the plan, which would create the state's first cohort correctional program, is what women could do beyond drilling alongside their male counterparts, says Corrections Commissioner Thomas Coughlin.

"The daytime program is all hard labor and work. I'm not sure whether that's appropriate for women inmates," Coughlin said.

Coughlin's plan to include women, developed after he was threatened with a lawsuit by female inmates, sparked controversy when Coughlin and an influential state senator used some less-than-choice words in discussing it last week.

When the prison chief first publicly brought up women's shock incarceration at a Senate Corrections Committee, Chairman Christopher Mega referred to participants as "bimbettes."

Coughlin then referred to the inmates as "shockettes."

Women legislators complained, and Mega apologized. Coughlin called the use of both words "unfortunate."

Designed to set young inmates straight, the boot camp-like program features a rigorous routine of manual labor, physical training, basic education and drug and alcohol abuse counseling. Eligible inmates must be younger than 24, serving time for a non-violent offense, be eligible for parole within three years and never have been charged with escape or attempted escape.

For example, the study showed that large numbers of the pregnant sailors did not seek prenatal care until the second or third trimester; that 18 percent were suffering from one of two different sexually transmitted diseases; that 38 percent were living in barracks or on ships, meaning they were facing a move into civilian housing; and that a third had no independent means of transportation.

"The data strongly suggest that single pregnant servicemembers are at higher risk for pregnancy complications and socio-economic difficulties during and following delivery because of their relatively low social, economic and military standings," the study concluded.

"Additional family housing, low-cost quality child care facilities and access to pediatric medical care during evenings and weekends would greatly assist these parents' efforts to fulfill their military obligations and family responsibilities," it said.

Opposition Candidates Face Runoff In Ecuador

By MONTE HAYES
Associated Press Writer
QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — Two opposition presidential candidates emerged from a field of 10 and are headed for a runoff. One vows to shift Ecuador's slant from conservative to leftist, the other promises to tax the rich to feed the poor.

At stake is the leadership of a nation that had become Washington's closest ally in South America, but may be changing its ideological orientation.

The favored Rodrigo Borja, a 52-year-old center-left lawyer who heads the Democratic Left Party, garnered about 20 percent of the vote in Sunday's election, far short of the majority needed to avoid a runoff May 8.

In the runoff he will face Abdala Bucaram, 35, a populist who has his power base in Guayaquil, a rough-and-tumble port and Ecuador's largest city.

With 2,907,909 — or more than 80 percent — of the ballots counted, Borja had 592,233 votes, or 20.4 percent to Bucaram's 449,166 votes, or 15.4 percent.

The third-place finisher was the nominee of the governing Social Christian Party, 66-year-old conservative Sixto Duran, who received 13.1 percent of the vote and promptly conceded. "It doesn't hurt me, but it surprises me," Duran said early today of his unexpected defeat.

The next two leading candidates, former Gen. Frank Vargas Pazzos, running on a Nationalist Leftist ticket, and Christian Democrat Jamil Mahuad, finished with about 12 percent and 9 percent, respectively.

Election officials said only about 3.5 million of Ecuador's 4.6 million registered voters cast ballots. Voting is required by law, but in past elections the abstention rate has been close to 30 percent.

Voters also cast ballots Sunday for the 71-seat unicameral Congress and 1,400 provincial and municipal officials. Sixteen parties ranging from far right to Communist took part.

Borja has pledged to reverse the conservative policies of pro-American President Febres Cordero, a 56-year-old millionaire businessman barred by law from seeking a second consecutive four-year term. He steps down in August.

Bucaram has vowed to raise the taxes of the rich and divide the wealth among the needy. A colorful, combative campaigner, he was seen as a "wild card," with only a slight chance of making it into the runoff.

Borja, who ran twice before for the presidency, narrowly lost a bitterly fought runoff against Febres Cordero in 1984 and was favored on Sunday.

Duran's loss was a sign of the waning popularity of Febres Cordero's government in the face of serious economic problems brought on by a sharp drop in the price of oil, the country's main export, and economic damage from devastating earthquakes last year.

Borja has vowed to reverse Febres Cordero's free-market economic policies and distance himself from the current president's pro-U.S. stance.

He is calling for a moratorium on Ecuador's foreign debt payments, a more restrictive foreign investment policy, restoration of diplomatic relations with Nicaragua, which Febres Cordero severed, and close ties to the non-aligned movement.

Bucaram, a former mayor of Guayaquil who has gained a huge following among the city's slum dwellers, campaigned as the "force of the poor."

"Voting for me is the same as throwing excrement in the face of the oligarchy," he said during his campaign.

Illustrative of his combative style, Bucaram on Sunday punched in the nose the director of the Guayaquil Red Cross.

Voting Flap Sparks Melee In Manila

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer
MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Troops fired tear gas before dawn today to disperse 1,000 people who stormed a suburban town hall to protest alleged election fraud, and delayed regional elections were held in four provinces.

Voting in the four provinces was postponed until today because the government feared violence in the areas in which communist rebels are active. Most of the rest of the nation elected local officials on Jan. 18.

At least three people were injured in today's melee in the town hall in Muntinlupa, where votes from the Jan. 18 election were being counted.

Supporters of losing candidates stormed the building. They smashed windows, overturned tables and tried to tear down the election tally board, witnesses said. Troops hurled tear gas canisters and fired weapons in the air to scatter the protesters. Former Mayor Santiago Carlos Jr., who was trailing in the mayoral contest, was slightly injured.

Elsewhere, voters cast ballots in the central provinces of Leyte and Northern Samar and in the Mindanao island provinces of Lanao del Norte and Lanao del Sur to choose governors, vice governors, mayors and council members.

At least 2,000 additional soldiers were sent to the two Lanao provinces to provide additional security for the voting, said Col. Antonio Nale. Communist and Moslem rebels operate in the two provinces, among the most lawless in the archipelago nation.

Authorities said voting was generally peaceful in the Lanao provinces, though turnout was light in many areas. They said troops arrested several people for election violations, including possession of fraudulent ballots and voting was delayed in some places for lack of enough ballots and ballot boxes.

Filipinos in 62 of the nation's 73 provinces voted Jan. 18, but balloting was rescheduled in the others because of threats of violence. Elections were held Jan. 25 in five provinces. Two other southern provinces, Tawi-Tawi and Sulu, will hold elections later this month.

Meanwhile, four young gunmen believed to be communist rebels ambushed and killed two Constabulary soldiers on Sunday.

Malenkov Dead

MOSCOW (AP) — Georgi M. Malenkov, who served as Josef Stalin's right-hand man during the purges of the 1930s and briefly as Stalin's successor before falling into disgrace, died at age 86, the government said today.

Malenkov, who was often rumored to have been shot after disappearing from view in 1957, actually died a few days ago, Deputy Foreign Minister Gennady I. Gerasimov said. No further details of his death were immediately available.

Soviet historian Roy Medvedev reported in 1984 in his book "All Stalin's Men" that he had spotted Malenkov sitting with his wife in a hospital for old Bolsheviks in Moscow. The writer said Malenkov had an apartment in Moscow but spent most of his time at his daughter's dacha outside the capital.

Malenkov served as Soviet prime minister for two years after Stalin's death in 1953 but lost out in a power struggle with Nikita S. Khrushchev.
