Gunmen Kidnap U.N. Workers

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Gunmen today kidnapped a Swede and a Norwegian who work for the U.N. Relief and Works Agency as the two were driving across a bridge just outside the southern port city of Sidon, police said.

UNRWA chief spokesman Niall Kiely identified the victims as Swede Jan Stening, 44, and Norwegian William Jorgensen, 58.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the kidnappings.

Both men are area operations supervisors with UNRWA's nutrition and supplies program, which cares for Palestinian refugees. They are based in Lebanon's southernmost port of Tyre, 50 miles south of Beirut, Kiely said.

Police said the men were driving an agency car from Tyre to Beirut when three gunmen intercepted them at 9:30 a.m. at the Siniq bridge on the coastal highway just south of Sidon. Sidon is 25 miles south of Beirut.

"The attackers forced the two victims out of their car at gunpoint, bundled them into a yellow Mercedes-Benz and sped off to an unknown destination," a police statement said.

A Lebanese farmer who claimed to have witnessed the abduction said the kidnapers wore masks and drove the captured men on a road leading to Sidon's teeming Palestinian refugee camp of Ein el-Hilweh.

The farmer, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he saw the abduction from an orange grove near the bridge where the two men were seized. He declined to give further details.

Ein el-Hilweh, the largest refugee camp in Lebanon with 60,000 inhabitants, is base for several Palestinian guerrilla factions.

Police and UNRWA officials said they had no clues to the identity of the kidnapers or their motive.

UNRWA headquarters in Beirut lost radio contact with the victims almost half-way in their trip. Their white Renault was left on the side of the road, Kiely said.

In Stockholm, Sweden, Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson expressed his "utmost regrets" that a Swedish citizen for the first time was abducted in Lebanon, the national news agency TT reported.

"It is completely unreasonable that something like this should happen to him. But we will look into the matter through our diplomatic channels," he said.

Kiely said no threats against UNRWA staff preceded the abductions and said that UNRWA was in contact with various Palestinian guerrilla factions, the Shiite Moslem Amal militia and Lebanese government officials in a bid to rescue the two victims.

Many UNRWA officials had been kidnapped in Lebanon since the civil war broke out in 1975. But all of them, except New York-based journalist Alec Harriet, were eventually freed unharmed.

Kamtsiklis Ordered To Prison

A Grechris Flo, Fotios Kamtsiklis, 28, of Greenville, was sentenced to 80 years in prison and fined $500,000 early this afternoon after being convicted in Pitt County Superior Court of cocaine dealing charges.

A jury returned guilty verdicts on charges of possession, sale, delivery and transportation of cocaine and charges of conspiracy to sell, deliver, transport and possess cocaine against Kamtsiklis late Thursday.

Following a sentencing hearing this morning, Judge Sam Currin consolidated the substantive sale and delivery charges for judgment and sentenced Kamtsiklis to 40 years in jail and ordered him to pay a $250,000 fine.

Currin also consolidated the possession and transportation counts, and sentenced Kamtsiklis to an additional 40 years in prison and payment of another $250,000 fine.

While Currin withheld judgments in the conspiracy to deliver and conspiracy to possess cases, he ordered 40-year jail terms in the conspiracy to sell and conspiracy to transport cases to run at the same time as the previous sentences.

In addition, Currin ordered Kamtsiklis to pay a $250,000 fine. (See PRISON, A-14)

Board Reviews Local Programs

Presentations on three innovative programs for bettering the lives of young people were made to the Governor's Commission on the Family, which met in Greenville Thursday, and a report was given on the children's services activities of the Pitt County Mental Health Center.

Randy Horton, director of child and community services of the Pitt County Mental Health Center, told the group that about a third of Pitt County's population — about 29,000 of its people — are under 18. He said, according to national averages, 15 percent of them need professional counseling and other assistance for psychological health. He said about 700 were treated by the Pitt County Mental Health Center last year.

Horton described various efforts of the Mental Health Center, including its preschool program, its cooperation with the juvenile justice program and its student assistance program conducted both during the school year and in the summer. He said the center has recently adopted a policy that children reported to have been sexually abused have no wait to see a counselor.

Becky Taylor, director of the Project PARENTING Program, which serves the Pitt County schools, explained that her program is to serve teen-agers who are parents. She explained the jeopardy that these parents, mostly unmarried young women, have against realizing their career and other dreams. At the same time, she said that they are encouraged to bond with and take responsibility for their children's well being and are taught how to spend quality time with them.

Ms. Horton said a state-licensed day care center soon will be established at Agnes Fullilove School to provide care for the children of the young mothers who choose to continue in school. She said of the 33 served so far, only three have dropped out of school, a much lower number than would usually be found among groups of teen-aged parents. She said a support group has also been formed at Agnes Fullilove for the teen-agers who are not parents and not pregnant.

Sonja Robinson of E. A. Laney High School in New Hanover County explained the Job Placement/Dropout Prevention Project in which she serves as a counselor. She said that 28 percent of the North Carolinians who enter 9th grade each year do not graduate. She explained how her program in three high schools of New Hanover County has decreased this percentage through close supervision of the students who are considered to be potential dropouts.

She said many of the students have money as a large issue, a problem she said can be helped and the student's self esteem boosted by

City Panel Puts Off Vote On Private Bus Operation

By GREG LAUDICK

In order to allow time to gather more detailed financial information, the Greenville Public Transportation Commission agreed to delay a decision at Thursday's special call meeting on whether to recommend to City Council the privatization of Greenville's bus service.

A representative of a private city-transit contracting firm presented an hour-long outline and overview of a privatization proposal to commission members at the meeting, held at the public works facility.

Laura Wilson of ATE Management and Service Co. Inc told commission members that advantages of transit contracting include both experience and financial factors.

"I think the biggest advantage of contracting is that it puts the business of managing your transit company in the hands of people who do that for a living," she said.

"That's all these people do. That's what they were trained to do, that's what they studied in school and that's what they've done in their professional lives," she said.

Ms. Wilson also said transit contracting allows the city to budget its transportation costs within a predetermined and agreed upon cost. "The city budget will not get digressed for those incidental expenses that come up as the year goes by," she said.

"You have the protection of knowing your system will be operated at the budget you have established, and believe me, we're motivated to stay within that budget because if we don't stay within that budget, we don't make a profit," she added.

According to City Attorney Mac McCarley, Thursday night's meeting is a result of the state responding to

Task Force Studies Schools' Mission

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Wrestling with the unanswered question, "What is the mission of the public school?" the Futures Task Force of the Pitt County schools has begun forming implications for demographic, social and economic assumptions it had assessed through study of predictable futuristic trends.

In its meeting Thursday night, the task force reviewed demographic trends of a diverging middle class, more single-parent households and more females in the work force and the social trend of citizens expecting more services from social and governmental institutions, and found itself searching for the "true mission" of the public school.

But, "We're not going to solve it in this group," Dr. Jim Young of Pitt County Community College and a member of the task force, said as he led the group in its discussion.

The development of the two classes in society — the haves and the have nots — and the lopsided availability of resources for students led the group to suggest that schools will be used hours beyond traditional instructional periods as services and programs expand to meet the needs for the community.

For example, students who do not have encyclopedias, computers and other learning aids at home to facilitate education, may use those resources in the schools after the regular school day.

Probable trends also imply that schools will have to be flexible as technology rapidly changes educational needs in the community, which means criteria for teachers must be demonstrated. Teachers will need to reemulate flexibility, autonomy and intellectual skills, the group said.

High intellectual and academic expectations will need to be set for all students, the group said. "You've got to challenge them," Lee Hemink said. "There's got to be a challenge."

There will be a continuous need for

Jobless Rate Holding Steady

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's jobless rate held steady at a decade-low 5.8 percent last month as job growth slowed to less than half what it had averaged in late 1987, the government said today.

Some 385,000 Americans said they had found work in January. But the number of unemployed also climbed, by 68,000 to just over 7 million, the Labor Department said.

Businesses said they added 155,000 people to their payrolls last month — compared to a growth averaging 380,000 from October through December.

"The number of jobs in the services industry widened, factory job gains were less widespread than they have been in the last few months, and employment declined in construction and mining," said Janet L. Norwood, the commissioner of labor statistics, in congressional testimony.

Ms. Norwood said the much larger growth in the number of Americans working, 385,000 as reported in the department's monthly household survey, "brings the gain over the last four months in line with the business survey."

The household survey, from which the jobless rate is calculated, had been lagging behind payroll growth in recent months.

Last month, however, the business survey recorded a gain of only 155,000 positions on payrolls nationwide.

Retail trade accounted for all of the seasonally adjusted net increase. "It may be that, in some areas where recruitment has been difficult, retailers decided to retain more of their Christmas staff after the holidays than they usually do," Ms. Norwood told the congressional Joint Economic Committee.

Government payrolls, meanwhile, declined at all levels by 67,000 last month, but were still 271,000 above a year ago.

Manufacturing employment, which had been growing by an average of 70,000 a month recently, slowed to a gain of 25,000, with several industries — such as autos and steel — showing weakness.

Export-producing industries, such as machinery and electrical equipment, continued to increase their payrolls. Those two industries added 21,000 jobs.

Five Given Sentences Over Deer

Five people have been sentenced on firefighting deer charges and one on taking antlerless deer charges in Pitt County District Court.

Milton R. Jones, a Wildlife Resources Commission enforcement officer, said Louis H. Wallace 21, of Route 4, Greenville and Jerry Strickland, 22, of Route 8, Greenville, were convicted on charges of firefighting deer in the Belvoir area on Dec. 28, and were fined $250, ordered to pay court costs, and had their hunting privileges revoked for two years.

Carl B. Morris Jr., 37, of Route 1, Stokes, pleaded guilty to firefighting deer in the Stokes area on Nov. 28 and received a similar sentence, Jones said.

Jones said Roy Skinner Warren, 23, of Ayden and Phillip R. Caton, 23, of Route 1, Stokes, pleaded guilty to firefighting deer in the Stokes area on Dec. 6. Each was fined $250, ordered to pay $139.50 for the replacement cost of one deer and had their hunting privileges revoked for 2 years.

William Warren, 33, of Greenville, pleaded guilty to taking antlerless deer in closed season in the Stokes area on Dec. 8, and was fined $100, ordered to pay $279 for the replacement cost of one deer and had his hunting license suspended until September, Jones said.

Burn Victim Joins ECU Lecture Series

A Texas man severely burned in a freak propane gas explosion in 1973 says he was treated against his will by physicians after requesting that he be left to die. Fifteen years later, Donald "Dax" Cowart will tell of his years of recovery from burns covering nearly two-thirds of his body and his continuing campaign for patients' rights during a two-day program at the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

The free, public program begins Feb. 12 at 1:30 p.m. in Brody Auditorium with a presentation by Cowart titled "Dax Cowart: Fifteen Years Later."

His talk is a part of the Perspectives Lecture series sponsored by the school's Department of Medical Humanities.

Since his recovery from his accident, Cowart, who is permanently maimed and blind, has remained an advocate for patients' rights because his desire to die was ignored by physicians and family. His ordeal has been the subject of two films, "Please Let Me Die," released in 1974 and "Dax's Case: Who Should Decide?," released a decade later. Cowart's campaign and films have stirred discussion surrounding medical ethics and patients' rights.

The program will continue Saturday at 9 a.m. in the Brody Auditorium with the showing of "Dax's Case" and a panel discussion moderated by Pitt County Memorial Hospital social worker Leah J. Boyd. Panel participants are Dr. Ulrich Alsentzer, associate professor and chairman of the ECU Department of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation; Dr. Loretta Kopelman, professor and chairman of the ECU Department of Medical Humanities, and Edward E. Hollowell, a Raleigh attorney and adjunct professor of medical jurisprudence at ECU. Other Saturday program participants include Cowart and Gracie Mebane-Vines, manager of patient and family services at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Sponsors in addition to the department of medical humanities include the departments of patient and family services and hospital education at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, the Coastal District section of the N.C. Chapter of the National Association of Social Workers and Biomedical Home Care Inc. of Raleigh.

Candidate Wants Parents More Involved In Schools

By CHERIE EVANS

Leadership and parent participation are among top issues in state Rep. Bobby Etheridge's campaign for the Democratic nomination for superintendent of public instruction, he said Thursday in an interview.

Etheridge was in Greenville visiting Pitt County schools and had paused at Wahl-Coates School for a reception and interviews with the media before having dinner with supporters and returning to Raleigh.

A key issue, Etheridge said, is "to provide leadership to meet the challenge of educating students for the year 2000." The kindergarten class of 1987-88 will be the first high school graduating class of the 21st century, he said. "We need to provide educational opportunities for those students."

To make sure the educational needs of students are being met, "We've got to do continuous re-evaluations of what we're doing ... search for new ideas, find them and implement them," Etheridge said.

In addition, parents need to become more involved in the education process, he said. "We need better involvement on the part of parents to provide support" for students through the learning process.

Etheridge said he did not currently have a plan for involving more parents, but "we are working on a scheme."

Commending the Pitt County school system for its efforts in educating students, Etheridge said, "I really think Pitt County is doing a good job." And, it is important to "take these successes and continue them all over the state."

During his Pitt County trip, Etheridge was hosted by state Rep. Ed Warren, who said, "He's a good candidate, and I think he's a good businessman."

As a member of the state House of Representatives and its Education Committee, Etheridge boasts of guiding the Basic Education Program through the 1985 General Assembly. He also is director of the North Carolina Public School Forum and led the effort to build new schools in Harnett County while serving as chairman of the Harnett County Commissioners.

The owner of Layton Supply Co. in Lillington, Etheridge is married to the former Faye Cameron of Harnett County and they have three school-age children.

PCC OKs Contracts On New Building

Pitt Community College will break ground for its A.B. Whitley Vocational Education Building about mid March, college officials said Thursday after the PCC Board of Trustees approved low bids for the building.

With low bids, certified by Dudley, Shoe, Ellinwood and Associates, the project cost totaled $2,561,726, although available state funds only totaled $2,331,000, Joe Taft said while presenting the Building Committee report to the d.

"On Feb. 2, 1988, Dr. Charles Russell, Mr. A.B. Whitley and Mr. Joe Hunnicutt met with the (Pitt) County Commissioners and requested that $200,000 of our existing capital reserve budgeted by the county in prior years and an additional appropriation of $30,726 of current year capital funds be appropriated to the project so that contracts could be awarded," he said.

Russell is president of PCC, while Whitley is chairman of the Building Committee and Hunnicutt is dean of administrative services.

"The commissioners most vigorously supported our request and unanimously approved the use of our existing $200,000 reserve for the project. They also agreed to fund our additional request of $30,726 from an appropriation to be made July 1, 1988, for the 1988-89 fiscal year."

The next step in the project is to submit the bids to the state for approval, Taft said.

Safety Proclamation Courses Planned

Greenville Mayor Ed Carter has proclaimed Feb. 7 through Feb. 13 as Child Passenger Safety Awareness Week.

Carter said nationwide studies estimate that only 48 percent of children under the age of five are fully protected in cars in the United States through the correct usage of child safety seats.

He said in the proclamation that research shows that the correct use of child passenger protection devices is over 70 percent effective in preventing death and 67 percent effective in reducing the need for hospitalization in the event of an automobile accident.

He said motor vehicle crashes are the number one cause of death of children over six months of age in the nation.

The East Carolina University Division of Continuing Education will offer a course which will examine the functions and uses of a camera and methods of better picture taking.

Classes will begin Feb. 16 at 7 p.m. at Dean's Photography on Evans Street. Students should have their own camera, preferably a 35 mm or larger.

A "Will and Estate Planning Under New Tax Laws" course will be offered Feb. 16-18 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Charles L. McLawn will explain the basics of will and estate planning. Estate and inheritance taxes will also be discussed.

The class will meet in ECU's Brewster building.

For further information on the courses contact the Division of Continuing Education, 757-6143.

Decision Due Soon By Judge

Chief District Court Judge E. Burt Aycock says he will decide soon whether or not to reinstate a Farmville magistrate who has been barred from performing legal duties for the past 11 months while waiting for court officials to consider an accusation that he did not report part of a cash bond.

Although not suspended, James L. Cowan Jr., a magistrate for nine years, was ordered not to perform legal duties in March after Lawrence Wysocki of Bell Arthur — in an updated, unsworn affidavit — complained that he had given Cowan $300 for a bond in December 1986, but had received a receipt from Cowan for only $100.

Court records show Cowan has denied the accusation and that a Superior Court judge dismissed legal proceedings in the case last month after ruling that state law authorizing the removal or suspension of a magistrate had not been followed because there had been no complaint sworn against Cowan.

Judge James D. Llewellyn's ruling sent the case back to Judge Aycock to determine whether Cowan should be reinstated or be reassigned.

Aycock said Llewellyn's ruling would allow the case to be renewed if Wysocki made a formal, signed complaint, and said he intended to determine whether Wysocki intended to pursue the charge.

The bond was to release Wysocki from jail on a driving while impaired charge.

Graduation Held

Mount Calvary Free Will Baptist Church recently hosted the 81st graduation of the Pre-Release and Aftercare program.

Willie Mae Carney, employee relations specialist with Burroughs Wellcome, spoke to the 21 female graduates of the N.C. Department of Corrections. She told them to choose their own goals and become active in religious, civic and political affairs to help themselves and others, according to Melvin McLawn, training coordinator.

Ladies of the church provided a meal for the graduates.

Organizations or companies wanting to sponsor a graduation may contact McLawn or Elbert Buck, center director, at 108 Dexter St., Greenville, or call 756-8400.

Valentine Luncheon

Pitt Golden K Kiwanis will honor their wives and sweethearts at a Valentine luncheon Wednesday at the Sheraton Greenville.

Pentagon Tests Find 5,890 People With AIDS Virus

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two years after launching the world's most extensive AIDS screening program, the Pentagon has tested nearly 4 million people and identified 5,890 carrying the deadly virus.

The testing has cost $43.1 million so far and is projected to cost an additional $25.5 million this fiscal year.

The latest statistics, released Thursday, include test results not only for recruit applicants — those men and women trying to join the military — but also for those on active duty and those serving in the National Guard and reserves.

They are the first statistics to provide a complete picture of test results through fiscal 1987, which ended last Sept. 30.

If all the groups are combined, the Pentagon has tested the blood of 3.96 million individuals since October 1985, when it launched the AIDS screening effort. Of that total, roughly 1.5 cases of AIDS infection have been detected out of every 1,000 individuals screened — or 5,890 all together.

On the active-duty side, the Pentagon said it had screened 2.18 million individuals over the past two years, of whom 3,336 tested positively for exposure.

Among the Army National Guard and Air National Guard members tested to date, there have been 387 positives out of 300,702 screened, the statistics show.

As for the reserve units of the four services, where testing is only now becoming widespread, 183 cases have been found after screening 99,191 individuals.

And on the recruit applicant side, the Pentagon said that as of December it had screened 1.38 million men and women since the fall of 1985. Of that total, 1,984 tested positively.

AIDS — acquired immune deficiency syndrome — is an incurable disease caused by a virus that attacks the body's immune system and its ability to resist infection. It is most frequently spread through sexual intercourse or the sharing of drug needles. According to the Centers for Disease Control, 51,916 Americans had been diagnosed as having AIDS as of Jan. 25, and an unknown but much greater number of people have been exposed to the virus.

The Defense Department decided in the fall of 1985 to begin testing all recruit applicants as well as all active-duty personnel, citing the need to protect military blood supplies.

The program is by far the largest in the world and has provided medical researchers with much of the statistical data they use in tracking the disease.

Under Pentagon regulations, any recruit applicant who tests positively for the disease is automatically denied entry into the military. Active-duty personnel who test positively are allowed to remain in the service as long as they show no signs of the actual disease, but they are restricted from taking any overseas duty assignments and their condition closely monitored.

The overall military exposure rate of roughly 1.5 cases per 1,000 has changed little since the start of testing, although the Pentagon continues to chart differences between the various services, among individuals from different regions of the country, and among men and women.

The Navy, with its bases concentrated on the East and West coasts, continues to post the highest exposure rate for active-duty personnel with roughly 2.5 cases per 1,000. The Army, by contrast, shows an exposure rate of 1.41 cases per 1,000; the Marine Corps 1.0 case per 1,000, and the Air Force 0.99 case per 1,000.

Howard Beach Defendant Gets Prison Term For Death Chase

NEW YORK (AP) — A white teen-ager convicted of chasing a black man to his death on a highway in the Howard Beach section of the city and battering a second black was sentenced today to six to 18 years in prison.

The sentence given to Scott Kern, 18, was lighter than the 30-year maximum term imposed two weeks ago on a co-defendant.

The judge said he found redeeming and mitigating circumstances in the case of Kern, whom he described as a follower rather than a leader in the assaults.

Kern received consecutive terms of three to nine years for manslaughter and three to nine years for assault. He also received a one-year concurrent sentence for conspiracy.

Kern was sentenced by state Supreme Court Justice Thomas Demakos, who also presided over the trial of four white youths charged in the case, which focused on racial tensions in New York City.

After the sentencing, Kern's family and supporters — who packed half the courtroom — applauded loudly, waved and shouted "Goodbye Scott, we love you!"

Demakos placed Kern in protective custody at the request of his lawyer, Gabriel Leone.

Three of the teen-agers were convicted in the death of Michael Griffith, 23, who died early on Dec. 20, 1986, when he was struck by a car on the Belt Parkway.

Griffith was fleeing a gang of white youths which included Kern, 18-year-old Jon Lester and 17-year-old Jason Ladone. After Griffith's death, the gang went after Cedric Sandiford, 37, beating him with tree limbs and a baseball bat, authorities said.

Lester was sentenced Jan. 20 to 10 to 30 years in prison by Demakos, who handed down the maximum sentences of five to 15 years on both the manslaughter and assault counts.

Demakos ordered Lester's terms to run consecutively. Lester is currently jailed in the state prison at Attica in a maximum security area where inmates are only permitted outside for one hour a day.

He had already been jailed on an unrelated weapons charge during the 10-week trial, which ended Dec. 21 with the three convictions and the acquittal of a fourth defendant, Michael Pirone. Ladone's sentencing is set for Feb. 11.

Seven other youths will go to trial later this year on charges stemming from the assault, which attracted national attention and exacerbated racial tensions in the city.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

The Final Straw

Ed Meese has piled the final straw of impropriety on the camel's back.

The questions surrounding his Iraqi Pipeline project involvement raise serious, unanswered questions about the attorney general's integrity. Equally as disturbing is Meese's inadequate and cavalier defense of his actions.

This posture, when coupled with past scandals, is sufficient reason to remove Meese from office. The Reagan administration should ask for his resignation and clean the slate of the office of attorney general of the United States.

Meese refused to admit his knowledge of the payoff portions of the project outlined in a memo from associate E. Robert Wallach by claiming the explanation was only 10 words in a long document.

This is neither an appropriate response nor an acceptable reason for his professed ignorance of wrongdoing. His reaction furthers the notion his involvement was active and improper. Meese is apparently under the mistaken impression that if he didn't read about payoffs, he is in the clear.

The attorney general is the nation's top law enforcement officer. He should be above reproach, not the subject of a criminal investigation. Meese's record on propriety is abominable. He has been the subject of investigation since his tenure began. His involvement with Wedtech was entirely improper; his associates, such as Wallach, have continually had their integrity called to question.

Now, the implications of his actions regarding the Pipeline scheme further the sleaze factor which makes Meese's presence as attorney general inappropriate. His ethics have been seriously questioned, and the proper action would be to remove him from office.

The justice system of the United States needs a leader who is uncompromising on matters of integrity and devoted to appropriate decorum. That individual's presence should set an example of correctness, above-board procedure and proper judgment for both an administration and a nation. Meese does not meet these requirements.

Instead, his doubtful actions have perhaps set the tone for the Reagan administration's disregard of matters involving propriety. Influence-peddling, and questionable investment involvement among cabinet insiders have flourished under Meese's justice department leadership.

Meese should be removed from office and replaced with an attorney general with the type of conscience and reputation that is beyond reproach.

Tough Battle

Americans — 97 million — will visit the polls in November to elect the next president. The Census Bureau furnished those figures based on the turnout of four years ago.

The numbers stagger the imagination and are far beyond anything the founding fathers could have foreseen 200 years ago. The dark side, however, is that by November, nearly 183 million persons will make up the voting age population. The difference in the two figures, of course, is those who don't exercise their right to vote.

This year's presidential voting totals are based on a projected 53.1 percent participation in voting. Women make up 52 percent of the eligible voters, 11 percent are black and 7 percent Hispanic. And the heavy growth is in the 25-to-44 age bracket, which now claims 43.5 percent of the total voting age population. Meanwhile the 18-to-24 age group continues to shrink reflecting the lower birth rate following the baby boomers.

But for this year, the voting strength, with an increased emphasis on registration, could top 100 million. Even then a remarkably low percentage of voting aged citizens will be deciding who our leaders will be for the next four years.

The nation still has far to go in bringing about full participation in the Democratic processes, and how to accomplish this increased involvement is a tenuous question. Apathy and illiteracy are probably the two biggest contributors to disinterest in government. Although the inability to read and comprehend is a serious impediment to political awareness, it is a problem that can be approached with a tangible plan of action.

Apathy, however, is much harder to address. Involving someone who doesn't care, or who has been turned off by government, or someone who simply never formed an interest in civic affairs is a near impossible task.

A dynamic leader should be able to strike a spark of interest in even the most apathetic citizen. The ideal solution would be to develop leaders possessing this gripping power of persuasion. Often, however, the goal of increased involvement is accomplished only when government takes a turn that directly affects that individual — usually in the pocketbook.

Still, the nation's political leaders should make every effort to reach those citizens who traditionally don't vote. Turning apathy into action could spell victory for the candidate who succeeds.

Leaders, Not Followers, Backing Gore

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Sen. Albert Gore Jr.'s high-risk strategy in this year's presidential campaign has been strikingly successful in winning the endorsements of southern Democratic leaders, but there are no clear signs yet that his message is taking hold among southern voters.

While his rivals are campaigning intensely in Iowa and New Hampshire, the Tennessee Democrat this week took a two-day trip through Georgia and Florida. The swing follows publication of two polls suggesting that Gore's "southern strategy" may not be working as well as once thought.

In the latest Atlanta Constitution survey of Super Tuesday states, published Sunday, Gore did not budge from a 13-percent point level of support between October 1987 and January 1988, running behind both Jesse L. Jackson and Gary Hart.

More importantly, Gore's southern base is heavily concentrated in his native Tennessee, where his support skyrockets to 64 percent, compared with only 5 and 8 percent in Florida and Texas respectively, the two largest states surveyed. Equally damaging, large percentages of white southern voters say they are going to vote in the Republican primary, — as much as 41 percent in Georgia.

Even some politicians sympathetic to Gore's desire to revive the moderate wing of the Democratic Party by concentrating on the South have privately asked why he isn't putting more time and money into the key primary contest in New Hampshire, where there are substantial numbers of conservative voters and where some prominent leaders have endorsed his candidacy.

Gore has dropped out of the Iowa caucuses, contending that liberal interest groups and an unusually liberal universe of caucus-goers distort the process there. These criticisms are not applicable to New Hampshire.

Gore defended his New Hampshire strategy on the grounds that Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis "is a native son" and New Hampshire's "18 delegates compares with 1,400" on Super Tuesday. But while he may avoid the risk of trying hard and failing, Gore's New Hampshire strategy increases the danger that he might fail to make the starting lineup for the Super Tuesday competition, because those who do well in Iowa and New Hampshire will get so much media attention at a time when Gore is getting none.

Tennessee Gov. Ned Ray McWherter (D) looked at the latest poll figures and observed, "You've got to get in with those rednecks, wake 'em up, crank 'em up and get 'em going. The working people are the ones who elect people," he added, implicitly criticizing Gore's cooler approach.

"I suppose Al, like the other candidates, is locked into what you call 'the new politics' — of polls, television and carefully modulated messages, said John Seigenthaler, chairman, editor and publisher of the Nashville Tennessean, where Gore once worked as a young reporter. "The positions he takes on the campaign trail are calculated to present himself as a raging moderate."

Gore rejects the suggestion that he should be more aggressively populist. "I don't think the real answers to our problems involve dividing people into artificial categories," he said in an interview. "... (People realize) that you are not going to effect change by moving them relative to those who are better off."

A random check of voters at the courthouse in Hickman County, Tenn. — the yellow-dog-voter heart of the Democratic South where white voters cast majorities for Walter F. Mondale in 1984 — suggested ambivalence about Gore's message, despite his native-son status, among Tennesseans whose Democratic allegiance has roots in the New Deal coalition.

"I'm hung up on Gore," said Miriam Bogle. But despite her commitment, Bogle believes that the Democratic candidates need to reach "out more for the common folks, the workingman," in "speeches and everyday talk. Gore, maybe, is not ... We always saw the Republican Party as for the rich man. Now, maybe the Democrats are leaning that way too."

Malcolm Plunkett, 56, who works for the circuit court judge, thinks Gore is "capable of doing the job... But he needs another four, eight years." The Democratic Party, he said, "in general represents the workingman, but it hasn't done a very good job of it... We need a good man who is a moderate who has the people in mind, the poor people in mind."

Voters Ill-Served By TV In Politics

On the same evening last week Americans saw two extremes in the political uses of television. George Bush sparred angrily with Dan Rather on the CBS Evening News. Then Ronald Reagan gave a letter-perfect State of the Union performance before a joint session of Congress. Yet neither provided a useful look at leaders, their competence or their stewardship of power.

In the American democracy the media have always been the "fourth branch of government." But that role changed with the advent of television. Most apparent is the competition between politicians and TV journalists to dominate the medium and control the message that goes into American homes.

When it suits his purpose, the politician wants as much television coverage as possible — under his own terms — but as little as possible when it does not. For their part, TV journalists want to set the rules and pursue the "story." Intentionally or not, they play a powerful role in defining issues and at times in deciding the outcome.

Neither in a presidential campaign nor after the election are the American people as well served by this process as the healthy functioning of democracy requires.

As voting Americans struggle to learn what they can about the competence of candidates for the nation's highest office, they no longer have the services of the political parties. A significant role for party professionals and elected officials in choosing nominees has ended; peer review has largely disappeared. Television has filled the vacuum, from the ephemera of the purchased ad and the 60-second news story to the televised debate that gives most voters their rare chance to see the candidates unedited.

These debates tell us much about the intelligence and wit, the wisdom or foolishness of the candidates. But they provide clues to only a small part of what it takes to govern: an ability to work with Congress, to reconcile competing interests, to respond to a crisis, to manage the government.

This year a partial answer has emerged: If there is to be one debate, let there be many — even if that bores the TV audience. At least there is less risk that a Gerald Ford will be irreparably damaged by a single reference to a free Poland, or a Jimmy Carter by Reagan's well-timed "There you go, again."

The limitations of television's current role become more striking as we try to judge the work and the worth of presidents. It is no accident that Reagan, the "Great Communicator," shuns press conferences, at which he is far from adept, and shouts answers to reporters' questions over the whirring of his helicopter. He naturally revels in the Oval Office TV talk or the set-piece appearance before Congress. Nor is it an accident that television journalists clamor for the news-conference format and make a political issue of presidential reticence.

These sessions have largely ceased being serious occasions for exploring a president's thinking or for probing beneath the surface of policy. By reading the newspapers, any White House staff member can predict which questions will be posed. The unexpected or detailed question is often dismissed by the journalism fraternity as irrelevant or unfair, persistence on a single point is condemned as badgering, and deference to the Chief Executive is de rigueur.

Style over substance has become a high art, thus adding to inhibitions against probing a president's remarks.

Television can replace political parties as a springboard to the White House, but not in building constituencies and lasting support. That can now come only from a systematic effort to level with the American people through every means possible. The first president to learn that lesson is likely to be the first in the television age to retire as an enduring success.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Though I have visited River Park North during several official functions, on Sunday my four-year-old son and I had the first time to spend an afternoon as true park visitors. Admittedly, Sunday was a beautiful and unexpected afternoon in the middle of winter, but I must say that I was thrilled to find what an untapped jewel we really have in this area. We walked and ran among the lakes, the cypress swamps and along the river's banks. We watched squirrels in the trees, wood ducks on the pond and Thomas is quite sure that he "saw" bears and I believe even several elephants and kangaroos in the woods.

It is a wonderful natural place nestled right in the middle of our growing metropolis and we should take special care to preserve it, nurture it and make it available for everyone to use and enjoy. As our city expands, a facility like this will become more and more unique. Sunday opened my eyes to what this area could really mean to Greenville.

I hope that my legislative colleagues will find this same interest in Greenville's River Park North and that we can join the city in finding special funding to ensure its preservation and development as a very special part of Greenville. The Greenville Parks and Recreation Commission and our City Council should be commended for their foresight thus far.

Strength For Today

The magnificent Symphony in C Minor, by Ludwig von Beethoven is, in one sense, a page of his life written in blood. Beethoven was continually harried by discouragements and pain. His greatest trial was his deafness, and as this increased he realized that the time was coming when he could not hear a single note of his magnificent compositions. His wretchedness, as one observer put it, "shrieked to high heaven," and thoughts of death laid hold on him in a most morbid fashion.

The result of all this suffering was the Symphony in C Minor, which is a kind of musical picture of how a soul sorely tried rises above its misery.

Beethoven was fortunate in finding one way of triumphing over his sufferings. Other ways are available for all of us, if we will only seek them.

FBI's Snooping Among Dissenters Burns Civil Liberties

Fourteen years ago this April a Senate select committee, chaired by the late Frank M. Church of Idaho, issued a devastating report on an FBI program referred to in bureaucratic as COINTELPRO.

For nearly a generation the agency had been involved in a variety of illegal activities that were designed to chill the First Amendment activities of scores of organizations and hundreds of thousands of individuals opposed to it, among other things, racism at home and military involvement in Southeast Asia.

Under J. Edgar Hoover's guidance, the bureau had conducted surveillance of the protest rallies and demonstrations that it could not prevent, attempted to discredit such progressive leaders as Martin Luther King Jr. as well as many others, and did everything that it could to inhibit Americans from supporting or participating in causes of which the agency disapproved.

As a result of the revelations, both the House and the Senate established committees to oversee the FBI's operations. In addition, the bureau adopted new guidelines — intended, it insisted, to prevent any repetition of COINTELPRO's excesses. The general public was bombarded with frequent and fervent agency pronouncements that the old FBI was dead and in its place was a new bureau, ultra-sensitive to the constitutional right of all citizens to express themselves on any issue without official harassment or impediment.

That picture was rudely shattered last week with the release of a number of FBI files obtained as a result of a Freedom of Information Act lawsuit filed by the New York-based Center for Constitutional Rights on behalf of CISPES (the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador). CISPES is a national organization seeking to build support for the government opposition in that country and to end U.S. intervention in Central America.

Even though only one-third of the 3,756 pages of its reports concerning CISPES was released by the bureau, what was turned over clearly revealed that little had changed since the Church committee investigation. The leopard's roar may have been somewhat muted, but its spots were as visible as ever.

The released CISPES documents demonstrate that the FBI, undoubtedly reflecting the Reagan administration's views, regarded any person or group expressing dissatisfaction with American policy in Central America as virtually traitorous.

"(I)t is imperative at this time to formulate some plan of attack against CISPES and specifically against individuals," the New Orleans office communicated to the Washington headquarters — a call to action so reminiscent of those in the '60s targeting King and his Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the ACLU, the NAACP, CORE, the Black Panthers, Students for a Democratic Society and the Nation of Islam, to name but a handful, that its revelation caused shock waves among many who had lived through that turbulent decade.

Although the bureau now vehemently denies that it was investigating any organization other than CISPES, the released files contain the names of more than 150 distinct groups, some of them religious organizations or trade unions. The once-repudiated concept of "front groups," so prevalent during the McCarthy era, was dredged up by the agency in order to enable the investigation to expand far beyond CISPES chapters and affiliates to any of the legions of organizations whose work may have brought them into contact with CISPES or its members.

It is a fearsome thing when a supposedly free, open society resorts to political investigations as a regularly maintained function of one of its chief law-enforcement agencies. It is even more paradoxical (and incalculably dangerous to democratic institutions) when such activities were so roundly condemned when they first surfaced 14 years ago. The old and highly sensible adage "Once burned, twice shy" seems strangely out of mode in a nation whose citizens should, from sad and bitter experience, know far better. It is high time for those dormant congressional oversight committees to get to horse before the snoopers finally succeed in giving the First Amendment its ultimate quietus.

Sixty years ago Justice Louis Brandeis wrote: "Decency, security and liberty alike demand that government officials shall be subjected to the same rules of conduct that are commands to the citizen. In a government of laws, existence of the government will be imperiled if it fails to observe the law scrupulously.

Our government is the potent, the omnipresent teacher. For good or for ill, it teaches the whole people by its example. If the government becomes a lawbreaker, it breeds contempt for the law; it invites every man to become a law unto himself; it invites anarchy. To declare that the government may commit crimes in order to secure the conviction of a private criminal would bring terrible retribution. Against that pernicious doctrine, this court should resolutely set its face."

And so should the FBI.

William M. Kunstler is a vice president and volunteer staff attorney of the Center for Constitutional Rights; Margaret L. Ratner is its educational director and a staff attorney.

Laws, Not Trust, Should Restrain FBI

Once again the FBI has strayed from its appropriate intelligence mission by investigating lawful political activity rather than crime or terrorism.

Ten years ago we learned of extensive FBI surveillance of civil-rights activists and organizations opposed to the Vietnam War. Now FBI files released under the Freedom of Information Act document a sweeping two-year (1983-85) nationwide investigation of the political beliefs and associations of individuals and organizations opposed to Reagan Administration policy in Central America.

The FBI under its new director, William Sessions, has embarked on an internal review of the FBI investigation of the Coalition in Support of the People of El Salvador, known as CISPES. Intelligence and judiciary committees are gearing up to pore through the files to determine how an investigation, based on alleged terrorist support activities by CISPES members, continued after it was obvious that the charges were unfounded and how it instead became a sweeping probe of lawful political activity.

These after-the-fact oversight activities are to be commended and encouraged. But they are far from a sufficient remedy. We have been down this sorry road before. We need to institute reforms to finally outlaw this kind of surveillance.

The CISPES investigative files make for chilling reading. The investigation was carried out by more than 50 field offices, using techniques ranging from informants to photographic surveillance, and swept within its net every CISPES chapter and more than 100 human-rights and civil-rights groups opposed to U.S. policy in El Salvador. The CISPES files, although heavily censored, are not about crime, but are about peace demonstrations, political organizing and campus political activities.

But after Congress gets to the bottom of this particular investigation it is imperative that the lawmakers address the root problem.

The "breakdown" at the FBI did not occur in 1983; it stems from the failure of Congress in 1978 to follow the recommendation of the Senate and House committees that studied FBI intelligence operations to enact strict legislative guidelines for FBI domestic security and counterintelligence investigations.

Legislation recommended by the Senate committee headed by the late Frank M. Church of Idaho would have required all FBI counterintelligence investigations to be conducted under a public statutory standard requiring the bureau to demonstrate a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity to initiate or continue an investigation. It would have set forth "special procedures" to ensure against an investigation intruding on lawful political activity, including periodic headquarters review of on-going investigations; mandated Justice Department and congressional oversight of sensitive intelligence investigations, and created civil liability and criminal penalties for violations of the legislated guidelines.

Instead of passing the legislation, Congress declared the problem solved when a new FBI director, William Webster, took over, internal guidelines were put into place and intelligence oversight committees were set up to keep tabs on the bureau.

As the CISPES investigation makes plain and clear, this system doesn't work. Although Webster was at the helm and the guidelines were in place, they were made more flexible by a Reagan administration executive order on intelligence and by revisions in the still-secret foreign counterintelligence guidelines. These changes were initiated by a simple "stroke of a pen." It would have been far more difficult for the administration to amend a legislated set of rules and procedures.

CISPES files indicate only cursory review of the CISPES investigation at FBI headquarters and an investigation that permitted wide discretion on the part of field-office operatives. Agents who requested guidance on how to limit the investigation apparently were ignored by headquarters, and no one in a supervisory position flagged reports indicating that the investigation was spinning out of control. The possi-ty of civil liability under an FBI statute could have made quite a difference.

Finally, the intelligence oversight committees had reason to look into the CISPES investigation in 1985 but failed to probe deeply.

The general verdict on former Director Webster was that he kept the FBI investigating crime rather than politics. The CISPES investigation raises doubt about that assessment. What is not in doubt is that a system that relies on trusting officials is not enough. We need a statute that strictly limits the FBI's authority to the investigation of crimes and takes away its discretion to spy on citizens peacefully exercising their First Amendment rights.

Jerry J. Berman is the chief legislative counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union.

Close Tabs On Credit Ratings

WASHINGTON — Being turned down for a loan or some other form of credit is an ignominious experience. In today's society, creditworthiness is a fundamental part of one's identity, and being told that it doesn't measure up is like being accused of some basic personal inadequacy.

Worse yet, suppose you are turned down because some horrible error has crept into some distant computerized dossier that makes you look like a deadbeat when, in fact, you've never missed a payment.

Now comes a company that promises to spare you that pain and suffering. TRW Inc., which operates one of the nation's largest credit-reporting bureaus, is inviting consumers to sign up for a service that will enable them — for $35 a year — to view their credit histories whenever they want.

TRW Creditentials Service will ease the tension that would-be borrowers feel when they go to a lender, company officials say, and make it easier for them to check their files for accuracy.

Subscribers get unlimited copies of TRW's reports on them, and are notified whenever a "credit grantor" inquires about them. In addition, they get a credit-card registration service, which notifies credit-card issuers if the subscriber's cards are lost or stolen, and a "Consumer Financial Profile" — constructed by TRW from information supplied by the subscriber — that the subscriber can submit to lenders or other credit grantors when applying for credit.

The service makes a lot of sense — from TRW's point of view. The company has a large, computerized data base, which can crank out a copy of your file at very little cost. The more money TRW can generate from the data base, the better.

But do you need Creditentials? Maybe, but be sure you know all your rights and privileges under the law before you fork over your $35. Also, if you're applying for credit or a loan, stop and ask yourself some questions.

In addition to your credit history — the likelihood that you will pay — lenders are also interested in whether you can pay. In other words, is your income high enough to cover your other obligations and make the payments on the new loan? If it's a secured loan like a mortgage, is the collateral sufficient to protect the lender in the event of a default?

If the answer to either of these questions is no, then your credit history is academic. So before you apply, check with the lender about its income and collateral standards and take a hard-nosed look at your situation — you may be able to save yourself a lot of emotional wear and tear.

Now for your rights under the law. They are more extensive than you may realize. In fact, according to Elgie Holstein of Bankcard Holders of America, a consumer group based here, "One reason (Creditentials) appears to be catching on is because people fail to understand the extent of their rights under state and federal credit laws."

These laws require credit bureaus to provide you with most of the information that Creditentials is offering.

Under the federal Fair Credit Reporting Act, the bureaus must give you access to your file for a reasonable charge, usually about $10. And if you have recently been refused credit on the basis of a credit-bureau report, the bureau must provide you that report free if you ask for it within 30 days of being turned down.

Bureaus must also tell you if anyone made an inquiry about you. But you have to ask. The bureaus don't have to volunteer the information. TRW says it keeps inquiries as part of your file for 12 months and then drops them.

"Consumers need to examine their personal credit reports more often than they do," said Holstein. "Most people never do."

TRW's data seems to bear that out. The company says it has some 138 million records in its data base, but less than 1 percent of these consumers ask for copies of their files each year.

Holstein said this may be because consumers erroneously assume that credit bureaus have a legal obligation to make sure files are accurate and up to date. "There is a trade-off in the law. Credit bureaus are not liable for misinformation. ... That is balanced against your right to examine your file. If you fail to do that, you have only yourself to blame" for any mischief that results from incorrect information, he said.

If you do find something wrong, the law gives you the right to challenge it. You write the bureau, tell it what you believe is wrong and ask it to recheck. Under the law, it must reinvestigate and inform you of its findings in a reasonable time. If the information does prove to be incorrect, it must be removed from your file. And, if you so request, the bureau must notify anyone who has seen the incorrect file within the past six months.

If, after the rechecking, you still think the file is wrong, you have the right to have a brief statement giving your side of the issue placed in the file.

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Pete Peterson hoped his research this year would convince scallop fishermen to delay their harvest for a few months.

Instead, he and the fishermen both ended up with no harvest after the toxic red tide killed the scallops in his experimental plot and other beds were closed to fishing.

"The bay scallops were dense enough in September that you couldn't in some areas put your foot down without stepping on one," said Peterson, a researcher with the University of North Carolina Marine Science Laboratory in Beaufort. "We went back to sample and couldn't find a living bay scallop in December."

Peterson said if other scallop beds were affected, the need for a more efficient harvesting method would be even more critical.

"It's a nice irony to the story that the research we lost is actually more important now than it was before," he said.

Bay scallops, with a lifespan of a little more than a year, spawn in autumn. Traditionally, fishermen have harvested the scallops shortly after that, fearing that if they wait too long, all the scallops will die, Peterson said.

"As long as you permit next year's crop to spawn first before you catch them and eat them, you're all set, because they actually would die anyway," he said.

Unfortunately, the scallops lose some weight during spawning — weight that may be recovered if fishermen postpone the harvest. Peterson hoped to find out how long to wait before the mortality rate negates increasing weights.

Part 2 Of A Series

"This bio-economic model is not applied in practice because, in part, the fishermen worry, 'What if they all die? What the heck, a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush,'" he said.

Peterson hoped to convince them with economics.

"The meat weights at least double by March," he said. "Scallop prices usually improve dramatically through the season as well because early in the season the scallop competes with a calico scallop harvest that comes from Florida.

"In reality, you could get as much as a three- or four-fold increase in the value of the harvested scallop crop by postponing scallop harvest until March."

Peterson had more than 50 acres closed as a bay scallop sanctuary to keep his specimens from being harvested. Then the red tide came, leaving in doubt not only the experimental results, but future harvests.

"It's not merely next year, either, because it implies a possibility of not having enough of these things to spawn," Peterson said.

Another thing at a premium may be funding to repeat the experiment, he said.

"As a former member of the Marine Fisheries Commission, I don't know how receptive it will be," Peterson said, referring to recent changes in the commission makeup.

"The old commission was heavily staffed with professional scientists and resource managers and conservationists and the new one is more politically aligned."

In addition, congressional support for North Carolina's coastal projects was cut in half this year, he said.

"Our package for North Carolina was in Congress right at the time when the stock market crash had hit and people were therefore taking a harder look at the budget deficit," he said.

The public furor surrounding the red tide in North Carolina could result in more funding, but not indefinitely, Peterson said.

"If the red tide has seriously harmed several important fisheries, one could envision more funding for an attempt to revitalize that. If those revitalization attempts are not successful, one could envision less money to study fishery problems because that fishery will be of less importance and effectively not able to be rescued."

IN THE STATE

Execution

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court has refused to grant a stay of execution to John Sterling Gardner, convicted of first-degree murder in the shotgun slayings of two people at a Winston-Salem restaurant just before Christmas 1982.

The court voted 6-2 Thursday to refuse to grant the stay of execution, which is scheduled for Feb. 12. Justices Thurgood Marshall and William J. Brennan, opponents of capital punishment in all circumstances, voted to spare Gardner.

Gardner, 29, was convicted of first-degree murder in the deaths of Richard Adams, 21, and Kim Miller, 23, during a restaurant robbery.

Gardner has maintained he did not commit the crime and only wanted to give police information he picked up while in jail on another charge.

Rape Thwarted

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — A 32-year-old woman foiled an attempted rape when she told her two attackers she had AIDS, Rocky Mount police reported.

The woman said she was walking about 10:30 p.m. when a car with two men inside stopped beside her.

The front seat passenger, who had a handgun, stepped out and told her to get inside the car, police said. The men drove the woman to a storage warehouse.

After the three got out of the car, the men cursed her, and one of them pulled the woman's pants down. At that point, the woman told the men that she had Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

The woman was told to get in the car. The men drove her back, let her out and sped off, police said.

It was not known whether the woman actually has AIDS.

Bulldog Ban

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Mecklenburg County Commissioner Rod Autrey, saying pit bulls are vicious creatures, wants the county to ban the dogs.

County officials said they are studying such a ban. They are to report to the county board at its Feb. 15 meeting.

Autrey proposed the ban at Monday's meeting, saying recent incidents involving pit bulls had "heightened awareness of how unstable this particular breed is."

He asked county officials to provide commissioners with statistics on pit bulls and said he hopes the county board will proceed with a ban on Feb. 15.

Police Suit

RALEIGH (AP) — A man shot in the foot in 1984 as he surrendered to law enforcement officers during a break-in is suing the Wendell police officer who shot him.

Robert M. Kuhn Jr., 36, filed the action in Wake County Superior Court against officer Samuel E. Williamson. Williamson shot Kuhn with a .357 Magnum Feb. 27, 1984, after a standoff at a Wendell doctor's office, the complaint said.

Publisher Gets Information On U.S. Airman In Vietnam

WASHINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A North Carolina newspaper publisher says a Vietnamese woman showed him and another publisher evidence that she has the remains and dog tags of an American helicopter crewman who disappeared in Vietnam 20 years ago.

Ashley B. Futrell Jr., publisher of The Washington Daily News, said in a copyrighted story Thursday the woman approached him and Bob Mellis of The New Milford (Conn.) Times last month during a tour of Ho Chi Minh City. The men were in Vietnam on a two-week tour sponsored by the National Newspaper Association.

The woman said the dog tags identified the remains as those of Warrant Officer Floyd W. Strange, who according to a Defense Department report was one of four crewmen aboard a helicopter that crashed Dec. 2, 1967, Futrell said.

"For a Chico, Calif., family, the long wait for concrete information may be over," Futrell wrote in the copyrighted story, "due to the efforts of a courageous Vietnamese woman who told two American newspapers that she and her husband are safeguarding the remains and identification tags of a U.S. serviceman who has been missing in action for more than 20 years."

After returning to the United States, Futrell says, he contacted Strange's wife, Anita Strange of Chico, Calif., who has not remarried. She was pregnant at the time of her husband's disappearance and her daughter is 19, Futrell said.

"Anita Strange termed our information a 'breakthrough' but said that it doesn't completely resolve the case," Futrell wrote. She said she had heard "third-hand" information about the crash but that Futrell's was the strongest yet.

"The only thing I need now is physical evidence, the dog tags and positive identification of the remains, plus the information on the other men on my husband's helicopter," Mrs. Strange said, according to Futrell's story.

She said Vietnamese refugees had given the Joint Casualty Resolution Center a picture of a woman holding dog tags believed to be Strange's. Mrs. Strange sent the picture to Mellis who said the woman is the same one he and Futrell met.

However, Mrs. Strange told Futrell she had been told the plane and remains were discovered in 1982 or 1983, while the Vietnamese woman told Futrell and Mellis she had had the remains since 1969.

Futrell said he and Mellis, who were among 12 publishers on the tour, visited a park near Our Lady of Peace Cathedral that is "frequented by sympathizers to the old American-allied regime" prior to the communist takeover in 1975.

Many people recognized Futrell and Mellis as Americans and approached them to talk. Some sought their help in emigrating to the United States.

The woman, whose identity Futrell said he was withholding to protect her, pushed through the crowd and told the newsmen about the remains.

They agreed to meet the woman that night at the park so she could give them the dog tags. Later, they decided Mellis would go to the park while Futrell went to a restaurant to meet a man who had been a colonel under the old regime and requested a private rendezvous.

Futrell said he was followed to the restaurant and when the colonel arrived, he passed him a note via a waitress who was the colonel's daughter. The colonel sent Futrell a note requesting help with an exit visa.

Meanwhile, Mellis met the woman at the park. She did not bring the dog tags because her husband had not returned home in time for her to consult with him before leaving. But she gave Mellis the name, serial number, religious affiliation and blood type engraved on the dog tags.

Mellis and Futrell were unable to arrange another meeting with the woman.

Syphilis Cases Increase In N.C.

RALEIGH (AP) — A 38 percent increase in the number of North Carolina syphilis cases last year probably resulted from federal funding cuts which forced deep reductions in staff, a state official says.

The federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said the increase from 558 cases to 770 paralleled a similar dramatic rise in 13 other states and New York City.

Robeson Creates Tri-Racial Panel

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — The Robeson County Board of Commissioners has unanimously endorsed a tri-racial human relations commission in the wake of the hostage-taking Monday at a Lumberton newspaper.

"We found that the community is still in crisis," Cloyd Hall, a U.S. Justice Department conciliation specialist, told the commissioners Thursday night. "It is a crisis because there is a perception of disparate treatment against minorities, injustice in social and political arenas and real concern by the public at large. The tension level of Robeson County is volatile."

The Justice Department officials had recommended the commission, which would include whites, blacks and Indians, as a way to restore community confidence in local government.

Eddie Hatcher, 30, and Timothy Jacobs, 19, have been charged with federal hostage-taking and firearms violations after they took over The Robesonian newspaper office and held staff members hostage for 10 hours. The two said they were protesting alleged corruption in local law enforcement agencies, and released their captives after Gov. Jim Martin agreed to have a task force investigate.

Hall warned the commissioners the human relations commission had to be an effective organization.

"If in your deliberations, you're not committed to the idea that you have a problem, if you're just thinking about window dressing, the problems are not going to go away," Hall said.

Hall and James Davis, both of Atlanta, met with local government officials Wednesday.

"We try to provide information to the disputing groups so they can make decisions," Davis said. "The decisions (about how to handle the problems) will be their decisions. We try to guide them and help them in making those decisions."

Davis said he and Hall were not criminal or civil rights investigators, but rather specialists who examine disputes between various groups and recommend ways to solve those disputes.

Davis had been in Lumberton since Monday, when he monitored the tense day of waiting for the siege to end.

The two will continue their assessment of the situation in Robeson County and later will help with "conciliation activity," he said, but they do not know how long they will stay in the county.

Racial tension has been an overriding concern in Robeson County for the last few years.

Hospital Reports Wrong Fluids Given In Heart Surgery

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Two patients died after heart bypass surgery because fluids they received during the operations were mislabeled, officials at Charlotte Memorial Hospital say.

"I hope that our community understands that we do an awful lot of (heart) procedures every day here," Cecily Durrett, the hospital's vice president for marketing said Thursday. "Unfortunately, when you have human beings in a system that relies on their judgment, sometimes that judgment's going to fail. We really regret it."

Ms. Durrett told The Charlotte Observer three of seven bags of solution labeled "cardioplegic solution," actually contained hyperalimentation fluid, a glucose solution commonly used to feed patients intravenously.

Though the three bags were mislabeled as cardioplegic solution, they also carried separate labels listing the ingredients of hyperalimentation fluid. No one caught the discrepancy.

"If he (the hospital pharmacist) had checked the ingredients the way he was supposed to, this wouldn't have happened," Ms. Durrett said.

Both fluids look like water, but hyperalimentation fluid is not used in the operating room, said Dr. Francis Robicsek, the heart surgeon who performed both operations.

Preliminary autopsy results show the fluid caused extensive heart tissue damage, said Dr. Michael Sullivan, Mecklenburg County's medical examiner.

Hospital officials would not identify the pharmacist, who had resigned before Saturday and had one week left at the hospital. He quit Monday once he realized the mistake was his, Ms. Durrett said.

Thursday's statement was the hospital's first detailed account since the deaths of Dillon Murphy, 33, of Lenoir, and William Amick, 58, of Rock Hill, S.C.

Ms. Durrett said the hospital started a new labeling system Saturday night to prevent future mix-ups.

Both cardioplegic and hyperalimentation solutions are packaged in the hospital pharmacy. Clear plastic bags of the solutions were stored next to each other in the pharmacy cooler. Labels included the list of ingredients, not the names of the solutions.

Under the new system, the two kinds of solution are kept farther apart on the cooler shelves. In addition to the ingredients labels, the bags inside the cooler are now labeled with a bright orange sticker saying "cardioplegic" or "hyperalimentation."

The two operations took place consecutively Saturday morning.

Robicsek said he noticed problems during Murphy's surgery and began searching for the source of the trouble. Blood tests revealed an abnormally high level of glucose.

While Robicsek and others called around the country to medical schools and experts, searching for ways to reverse the damage, Murphy was kept on the heart-lung machine for 14 hours. They also tried kidney dialysis, and searched for donors for possible heart transplants.

Murphy died in the operating room Sunday. Amick, who received less of the hyperalimentation fluid, died Monday.

"Apparently, the (heart) muscle was damaged beyond repair," Robicsek said.

Ms. Durrett and Robicsek said families of the patients were told about the possibility of a mistake immediately. Robicsek said he talked with the Murphy family during the operation and with Amick's family before he died. He also met with the Amick family Thursday.

Amick's family has declined to comment, and Murphy's relatives referred questions to their attorney — Wallace Respass Jr. of Lenoir.

Respass said he spoke Thursday with a Charlotte Memorial lawyer after meeting with Murphy's relatives Thursday morning.

"He expressed to me the concern of the hospital and the regret of the hospital," Respass said. "We discussed what our respective courses of action would be over the next 10 days to two weeks."

When asked whether the hospital would fight any potential lawsuits, Ms. Durrett said, "I don't know. I don't think so. ... We are working very closely with the families and any legal representatives they may have."

Senate OKs Dead Contra Aid Package

L.A. Times-Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Senate, serving notice that the fight over aiding the Nicaraguan Contras is far from over, defied House Democratic leaders Thursday and endorsed in a symbolic vote the Reagan administration's plan to give weapons and humanitarian aid to the anti-Sandinista rebels.

Proponents of Contra aid conceded that the 51-48 vote was moot, because the plan had been defeated by the House the night before, but they said that it would keep the issue alive and vowed to introduce new requests for military aid in the coming weeks.

"Anybody who thinks this issue will go away is just plain wrong," said Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., the minority whip. "This vote should sober up old daffy Danny (Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega) and put pressure on him to keep faith with the peace process."

But Democratic opponents insisted that the military aid issue was dead for now, and vowed to press ahead with a plan of strictly humanitarian aid that they will bring before Congress in three weeks.

The stalemate clouds the prospect that Congress will be able to act anytime soon on an aid package for the rebels and virtually guarantees that the politically divisive issue will rage on through the session.

Meanwhile, President Reagan said in a statement he is "deeply disappointed" by the House's 219-211 rejection of his plan, but did not hint at what he will do to revive the top foreign policy priority. Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said only that Reagan would consult with Central American leaders and also Congress "to determine whether the Sandinistas are making measurable and timely progress toward attainment of democratic reforms."

Bush-Dole Feud Heightens In Capitol Confrontation

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

The battle between Republican presidential rivals Bob Dole and George Bush boiled over from the campaign trail to the Capitol, and Pat Robertson scored a landslide victory in a straw poll in Hawaii just days before the Iowa caucuses.

On the Democratic side, Gary Hart launched an advertising blitz in Iowa, including a television spot in which he gazes into the camera at close range and says: "Character is the test."

Hart, who dropped out of the race for seven months amid reports of his relationship with Miami model Donna Rice, says in the ad that "there's been a lot of casual talk about character this year. ... They use that word as a smokescreen because they don't like someone who is different, who doesn't play by their political rules."

Bush campaign chairman Lee Atwater denounced Dole as a "schoolyard bully" after he strode up to the vice president on the Senate floor Thursday and demanded to know whether Bush had approved an aide's harsh statement the previous day.

After the confrontation, Dole accused the Bush campaign of "groveling in the mud" in its statement from George Wittgraf, Bush's Iowa campaign chairman.

In the statement issued Wednesday, Wittgraf attacked Dole's "cronism and mean-spiritedness," made reference to the "posh" lifestyle of Dole and his wife Elizabeth, raised questions about Mrs. Dole's blind trust, and implied that Dole accepts favors from the wealthy in exchange for political influence.

"It doesn't have to be this nasty, mean, personal and vindictive," Dole said of the statement. "It's below the belt."

Dole demanded an apology, at least for his wife, but Atwater said none was forthcoming. He said although Bush had not approved Wittgraf's statement in advance, "We are not going to condemn it."

"Senator Dole seems to be like a typical schoolyard bully. He can dish it out ... but if someone hits him back, he starts whining," Atwater said in a telephone interview.

Dole approached Bush on the Senate floor again later, and said afterward the vice president had agreed to meet and discuss the matter. But no date was set.

Rep. Jack Kemp, at a county GOP meeting in Iowa, criticized his two rivals for their bickering.

"I want Bush and Dole to stop getting nasty with each other and start telling us about what they're going to do to help make America stronger," the New York congressman said.

Both Bush and Dole took a back seat to Robertson, the former television evangelist, at a straw poll of Hawaii Republicans on Thursday night. Robertson, whose supporters had signed up thousands of new GOP members in recent weeks, swept away all opposition, picking up almost nine times the number of votes as Dole, his nearest rival. The final results of the caucuses showed Robertson with 1,368 votes, while Dole had 153, Bush 147, Kemp 10, former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont 4 and former Secretary of State Alexander Haig 1.

Hawaii state Rep. Hal Jones, co-chairman of the Hawaii Robertson campaign, said he was "pleasantly surprised by the margin of victory."

Bush and Dole backers had acknowledged beforehand that Robertson had the numbers to win the straw poll at Hawaii Republican precinct meetings. The results are non-binding, but prefigure the makeup of the 20-member Hawaii delegation to the Republican National Convention.

Robertson was expected to tout his strong showing in the final few days of campaigning before the Iowa caucuses.

Polls continued to indicate a close contest on the Democratic side in Iowa. A survey of likely caucus-goers taken for WNEV-TV in Boston had 18 percent saying they supported Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, 16 percent backing Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis and 15 percent for Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois, with a margin of error of 5 points.

Martin Proposes Licensing Changes

RALEIGH (AP) — A state task force has been directed to conduct the first comprehensive study of the driver's license system since licenses were first required 50 years ago, Gov. Jim Martin says.

The study will focus on simplifying the licensing and renewal procedures — including the feasibility of allowing drivers to renew their licenses by mail, Martin said at a Thursday news conference.

"I will predict that this group will affect our citizens as few groups have ever done — for the good," said Martin, a Republican seeking re-election this year. "Driving an automobile today is a vitally important part of people's lives. We are truly a mobile society."

About 500,000 North Carolina citizens obtained driver's licenses when they first were required in 1935, Martin said. Now, the state has roughly 4.5 million licensed drivers. The total has increased by 164,000 in 1986.

The 25-member task force will be chaired by Hendersonville businessman Kermit Edney. Former Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green, who serves as a $329-per-day consultant to Martin, will be vice chairman.

The panel will examine the Driver's License Section of the Division of Motor Vehicles, reviewing the public "contact" portion of its work and its internal operating policies and procedures.

He acknowledged there had been many complaints over the years about long lines at driver's license offices, but said the process had quickened in recent years. Computers have enabled office workers to move faster, he said, acknowledging there still is room for improvement.

Controversy arose last year when the DMV temporarily halted its practice of printing driver's license tests in the Korean and Spanish languages. The move followed the General Assembly's enactment of a bill designating English as the official language of North Carolina.

Martin declined to take a position on that issue but said immigrants should be strongly encouraged to learn English. DMV commissioner Bill Hiatt said the division had restored Spanish- and Korean-language tests and allowed people who speak other languages to bring interpreters with them when taking the tests.

Hiatt said his division had studied other states' policies and found that many of them offered tests in foreign languages. This will be among the issues studied by the new task force, Martin said.

Martin also said he would wait until a proposed AIDS policy for state workers was officially submitted before deciding whether to endorse it.

"As I understand it, it is mainly intended as a reassurance that we do not have a negative policy that would remove people from the jobs solely because they had AIDS or were carriers of the AIDS virus," Martin said.

Mecham Nears Final Vote On Impeachment Action

By LAURIE ASSEO
Associated Press Writer
PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The votes are there to impeach Evan Mecham, say lawmakers who note that the more the embattled governor speaks in his own defense, the more secretaries are flooded with calls urging his impeachment.

"About 50 percent are saying impeach him. The other 50 percent are saying hang him," House Minority Whip Debbie McCune, a Democrat, said Thursday after three days of testimony by Mecham over an undisclosed $350,000 campaign loan.

The Republican governor planned to testify again today before a select House committee, and lawmakers later were to meet in private caucuses before going to the House floor to vote on an impeachment resolution.

If that is approved, the House was expected to vote on a bill of particulars stating the specific reasons for impeachment.

"Before midnight tonight, if it's going to the Senate it will be gone," House Majority Leader Jim Ratliff said.

Speaker Joe Lane and House select committee chairman Jim Skelly, both Republicans, said they believed there were enough votes to impeach the first-term governor, although Lane said his opinion was "just speculation." Other lawmakers said privately they were convinced there would be enough votes.

It takes 31 votes in the 60-member House to impeach the governor, or vote to put him on trial, and 20 votes to convict in the 30-member Senate.

On Thursday, Mecham testified before the House committee that he did not try to hide the campaign loan, contending it was lumped with other funds on campaign finance statements as a "time-saving matter" by his brother and 1986 campaign treasurer Willard Mecham.

"It was listed in an aggregate form but there was nothing done to hide it," said the governor, who began drawing criticism shortly after he took office just over a year ago when he canceled a Martin Luther King holiday created by his predecessor.

Mecham also faces a recall election May 17 and a March 9 criminal trial on charges of concealing the $350,000 loan. His brother faces criminal charges as well.

Mecham press secretary Ken Smith said Wednesday he had "gut instincts" that Mecham will be impeached. He later backtracked, contending an impeachment was not inevitable.

Republican and Democratic lawmakers alike reported that the balance of the phone calls they received had been leaning further and further towards impeachment during Mecham's first three days of testimony.

If the governor is impeached, the constitution requires Secretary of State Rose Mofford, a Democrat, to take over as acting governor while Mecham stands trial in the Senate.

A House special counsel has accused Mecham of concealing the $350,000 campaign loan, misusing $80,000 from the governor's protocol fund by borrowing it for his auto dealership, and trying to thwart an investigation of an alleged death threat by a state official.

House members are being asked only to decide that enough questions exist to merit a trial, but senators would have to determine whether Mecham was innocent or guilty of the offenses, and lawmakers say that will require a higher standard of proof.

The campaign loan from Tempe developer Barry Wolfson was included in a $465,000 lump sum listed as a contribution from Mecham on the governor's campaign financial disclosure form.

Asked about a receipt written in November 1986 that showed a $350,000 contribution to the campaign from Mecham, the governor acknowledged he made no such contribution. Special counsel William French has contended the receipt was a fake document intended to disguise the Wolfson loan.

Mecham testified that Willard Mecham made out the $350,000 receipt and that his brother filled out the financial disclosure forms "the best he knew how," Mecham said.

Another panel member, Republican Mark Killian, questioned why the loan reporting was lumped, but added, "I guess what I'm looking for is intent. Did he intend to try to hide all of this?"

his decision not to go to the Bahamas, but Hudson would not be moved. "There's some type of mental hangup," Gregory said in a brusque voice. "I and my staff do not qualify to deal with it, to continue to deal with it."

Asked later why he couldn't bring in a psychiatrist, Gregory said that Hudson was now free to bring in his own. "I don't understand that type of fear," Gregory said.

After the news conference outside, Gregory invited reporters into Hudson's living room. Hudson clasped hands briefly with Reginald Toran, a Gregory staff member, and then he walked slowly into the harsh light of the TV cameras. He was wearing a horizontal-striped kimono-style shirt and black slacks that Gregory had made for him to symbolize "the prison" of his overweight body. He was barefoot, with a dazed look on his face, and he swayed from side to side like a pendulum, unsteady on his feet.

After Hudson sat down, Gregory stood behind him, raised his hand to silence the crowd, and said, "Walter, this is for you, son, this is your gift."

Dieter Says No To Going Outside

L.A. Times-Washington Post
NEW YORK — Dick Gregory, the pole-thin comedian turned nutritionist, walked out on Walter Hudson Thursday after Hudson, who once claimed to be the world's fattest living human at more than 1,000 pounds, refused to leave home to fly to Gregory's weight-loss clinic in the Bahamas.

Hudson has been out of his Hempstead Village home only once in the last 28 years. He does not own a pair of shoes and has never been on an airplane.

Gregory said that his staff felt that it could no longer work with Hudson in his cramped, poorly ventilated bedroom, surrounded by the smells of his family's cooking. Gregory said that while Hudson has lost an estimated 450 pounds on a liquid diet and exercise regimen in the last four months, he "has reached a stage that requires his moving to a different environment."

Hudson sat alone in his bedroom, weeping, while Gregory stood on the front stoop of Hudson's home at 1:45 p.m. and told more than 100 reporters and curiosity seekers that he had given Hudson an ultimatum:

"He had to walk out of here today. He had to give us a commitment at 1:30 that he would leave the house, break the barriers." But, Gregory announced, "He just told us he can't do it."

As a result, Gregory said, he had "no alternative other than to terminate" his relationship with Hudson, the pigtailed leviathan with a touchingly cherubic face who was 6-foot tall and 9-feet around when Gregory met him four months ago.

"I am more saddened than angry, believe me," Gregory said. "Walking out of the house means life for Walter. Staying in the house means his death."

Gregory said that he was convinced that Hudson was physically capable of leaving the house. Gregory said that he had begged Hudson to at least take a symbolic step onto the front stoop to announce

Federal Grand Juries Indict Panama's Military Leader

L.A. Times-Washington Post
WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has decided to go ahead with drug indictments against Panamanian military leader Manuel Antonio Noriega despite concerns that he might retaliate against U.S. interests, officials said Thursday.

Administration officials considered the possibility that Noriega, whose indictment is expected to be announced in Florida Friday, might seek reprisals but have concluded it is unlikely he would make a major move against the Panama Canal or other sensitive U.S. facilities in Panama, they said.

Federal law enforcement officials said Noriega was indicted Thursday by federal grand juries in Miami and Tampa, Fla., on charges of racketeering, cocaine trafficking and money laundering. The indictments, which have been long expected, were sealed by a federal magistrate, but the U.S. attorneys in the two cities scheduled announcements for Friday.

Officials said one of the indictments focuses in part on Noriega's dealings with Cuban leader Fidel Castro, who reportedly mediated a 1984 business dispute between the Panamanian and members of a Colombian drug cartel.

Noriega was quoted by CBS News as dismissing the indictment as "strictly political."

Noriega, who leads Panama's national guard, has turned himself into a virtual dictator in his strategic country, which includes the 48-mile-long canal between the Atlantic and Pacific.

In secret studies prepared before the decision, the State Department and CIA laid out a range of possible Panamanian reactions to the indictments, from an anti-Noriega coup by military dissidents to a political reprisals by Noriega against U.S. military and diplomatic facilities in the nation.

But in the end, a knowledgeable intelligence source said, the most likely immediate reaction was judged to be: "Nothing."

The U.S.-Panama extradition treaty does not require Panama to arrest or extradite Noriega, and the general could simply defy the indictments and attempt to hang onto power, officials said.

The public charges against Noriega are expected to intensify public sentiment against the military strongman, they said, but the main question — as before — is whether other Panamanian officers will decide "to dump the guy," in the words of one State Department official.

The administration has been urging Noriega to quit for months, to no avail. Secretary of State George P. Shultz publicly called on the general to "step back" from power, and a senior Department of Defense official told Noriega privately that the Pentagon also wanted a new government.

But Noriega, who has been accused of assassinating political opponents, massive corruption, and providing information simultaneously to the CIA and Communist Cuba, has stubbornly refused to relinquish power. He has denounced the U.S. pressure against him as a "rightist plot" to prepare the way for an American seizure of the canal, which was turned over to Panama in a treaty negotiated by President Carter and ratified in 1978.

Under the treaty, Panama acquired sovereignty over the canal, but the United States retained rights to manage and defend the waterway until Dec. 31, 1999.

The United States has about 10,000 troops in Panama, primarily for the defense of the canal. Panama is also the headquarters of the U.S. Southern Command, which coordinates all U.S. military activity in Latin America.

Financial Chiefs Defend System

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top executives of the nation's financial markets say they should be given a chance to put their own houses in order before Congress starts tinkering with the federal regulatory system.

The heads of the two largest futures exchanges and of the second- and third-largest stock trading systems advised the Senate Banking Committee not to make any decisions in the turf war that is developing among federal agencies.

John Phelan, chairman of the New York Stock Exchange, the nation's largest stock exchange, is to testify today, closing out a week of hearings on the October stock market crash.

On the eve of his testimony, the New York Stock Exchange tightened restraints on a computer-driven trading technique that studies have linked to the October collapse.

Directors of the exchange said they approved a rule late Thursday prohibiting member firms from using the exchange's main computer system to execute so-called index arbitrage program trades if the Dow Jones industrial average swings 50 points or more from the previous day's close.

The rule sharpened a temporary NYSE restraint on the trading technique, which uses computers to sell large amounts of stock in New York and simultaneously buy the corresponding stock-index futures in Chicago — or vice versa — to profit from fleeting price disparities. The previous restraint barred such trading if the Dow Jones average changed more than 75 points.

Phelan's counterparts at the National Association of Securities Dealers, the American Stock Exchange, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange and the Chicago Board of Trade appeared before the Senate panel Thursday.

"The expertise to achieve better coordination among the markets lies within the markets themselves," said Leo Melamed, chairman of the executive committee of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. He recommended creation of a private-sector coordinating group with representatives from the exchanges and regulatory agencies.

"Increased regulatory coordination among markets is clearly needed and can be delivered within the existing regulatory framework," said Joseph R. Hardiman, president of the National Association of Securities Dealers, which runs the over-the-counter stock market.

The Securities and Exchange Commission regulates stock and stock options trading, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission oversees futures trading and the Federal Reserve Board sets margins — or borrowing limits — on buying stocks.

The SEC is pushing to expand its authority over futures markets and the CFTC is resisting that. A presidential task force that investigated the Oct. 19 stock crash wants the Federal Reserve Board to coordinate financial market policy.

Kenneth R. Liebler, president of the American Stock Exchange, embraced the presidential task force report more fully than other witnesses.

Study Cites Long Stays In Hospitals

CHICAGO (AP) — Hospitals with the most competition are having to work hardest to shorten the stays of surgical patients, according to researchers studying what they call America's "medical arms race."

Such hospitals, competing with a high number of other institutions, have been most likely to let surgical patients stay longer, adding to high costs, said study published today in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Doctors and patients prefer longer stays for major surgical procedures, to ensure adequate preparation before an operation, adequate recovery afterward and to reduce the nursing burden on family members, the researchers noted.

However, they said in their study of 1982 data on almost 500,000 patients they were unable to find medical reasons for longer surgical stays at high-competition hospitals.

"Classic economic competition would lead you to believe that the more competition, the lower the cost. In fact, what we found was the more competition, the higher the cost," one researcher, health economist Harold S. Luft of the University of California at San Francisco, said in a telephone interview Thursday.

The study adds to previous evidence that hospitals respond to competition largely by adding fancy equipment, extra beds and other amenities — in effect participating in a "medical arms race" that duplicates services and drives costs up, the researchers said.

The American Hospital Association, which represents more than 6,000 hospitals nationwide, could not comment on the findings of the study because no one there had seen it, said spokeswoman Andrea Mann.

The organization's data show a large drop in length of hospital stays between 1982 and 1985, with rates leveling off in 1985 and 1986 and beginning to climb last year, she said.

The picture has changed, the researchers acknowledge, because new spending limits set by the Medicare program starting in 1983 and similar pressures from private health plans have "dramatically reduced" lengths of stay.

Jamaican Minister Sees Work As Answer Of God

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

The Rev. Stanley Beckford of Jamaica, West Indies, says he once passed up a chance to wish upon a star, asking to serve God instead.
The pastor of a small church named Fishers Chapel in St. Andrew, Jamaica, he says he has been a preacher of the gospel since shortly after his conversion in 1950. He arrived in Greenville Wednesday for speaking engagements and personal counseling.
He said it was about a month after his conversion at age 22 when he was walking home one Thursday night and saw a star dance in the heavens. The Lord spoke to him then, he said, and said, "Wish. It is your star."
"I told the Lord," he said, "that I didn't know what to wish for. I just asked Him to use me as He would choose."
"I didn't sleep at all that night and the next morning, I got up and in the morning sun, I saw the face of the Lord. I literally saw his head. That was the first time I knew that the Lord has a body. I know it because I saw it then and I've seen it and touched it since."
Beckford said from that day onward he's had the gift of preaching and the gift of prophecy. Preaching has been his field of work ever since. "I speak because He's in me," he said. "I never have any trouble with what to say because He tells me what to say."

He's had two wives and has 11 children and one grandson. The older children are in their 30s. The youngest is 5 years old. He says his marriage with his present wife, Phyllis, was "made in heaven," that she assists him with everything he does, including being his scribe when he dictates writing.

In the early 1980s, Beckford lost his physical vision. He will not say that he is blind. "With very good reason," he says. "When I lost my physical vision, my real vision became so much keener."
He says now that, at all times, he can look on the body of God and on angels all around Him and intermingle with His body. He sees a wondrously beautiful ever-changing ever-new sight at all times, Beckford said, and that's more valuable to him than anything he could ever see physically.
He usually has a human companion travel with him when he leaves home, Beckford said, but maintains that he does not have to. "God and a legion of His angels are constantly within my sight and I know I am protected wherever I go," he said. "People everywhere I go treat me wonderfully."
Beckford will speak tonight at 7:30 and again Sunday at 9:30 a.m., both times at the office of Dr. Steve Cohen, 3100 S. Memorial Drive.

Quakers Moving To Adopt Music In Worship Service

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer
In a Quaker branch which cherishes "silent" worship, open to God's inward leading and not cluttered by human-devised programs, strains of music have begun, tentatively, to penetrate the quiet.

"It's a very new thing for us," says Mary Moehlman, publications manager of Friends General Conference and in charge of its unprecedented project to develop a hymnal for use in worship.

"Some feel singing is appropriate in worship, that there's a great need for it," she says. "Some feel it's totally inappropriate, even shocking."
In any case, it's the first time in history that this major Quaker branch has embarked on producing a hymnal intended as suitable in worship and recognizing music as ministry.
Other major Quaker branches, the 58,000-member Friends United Meeting and the 24,000-member Evangelical Friends Alliance, commonly use hymns in worship, and have pastors, similar to other Protestant churches.
But this is not generally the case for the 32,000-member Friends General Conference, based in Philadelphia. A survey found that some local "meetings" use music, but many don't and oppose it. Some say they'd like to use music, but don't know how.
"There's a good deal of diversity," says Ms. Moehlman. "That's what makes it exciting. It's a new ministry of music among Friends."

Jewish Man Loses U.S. Citizenship

NEW YORK (AP) — A 75-year-old Jewish man who has admitted brutalizing other Jews in a Nazi concentration camp will lose his U.S. citizenship but won't be deported because of health problems, officials said.
The agreement with the Justice Department's Nazi-hunting unit, the Office of Special Investigations, is the result of denaturalization proceedings against Jacob Tannenbaum of Brooklyn brought by the government last May.
A complaint filed in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn at the time said that Tannenbaum, a native of Poland, served from September 1944 to the war's end in May 1945 as a kapo — an inmate overseer of other prisoners — at the Goerlitz concentration camp in what is now East Germany.
According to the agreement signed Jan. 28 and approved Thursday by U.S. District Judge I. Leo Glasser, Tannenbaum admitted to "each and every allegation contained in the complaint."
Tannenbaum physically abused prisoners, sometimes out of the presence of Nazi guards, said the complaint, which characterized Goerlitz as a concentration camp for Jews where prisoners used as slave laborers were routinely beaten, starved and executed.

The complaint also charged that Tannenbaum concealed his World War II service as a Nazi camp overseer when he entered the United States nearly 30 years ago.
"It's the best solution for all concerned," said an attorney for Tannenbaum, Elihu S. Massel. "It will also avoid a truly ghastly trial, in which Jews would have had to testify against Jews, none of whom really want to remember."
During World War II, kapos were appointed by the SS, which supervised the camps. The kapos enjoyed special privileges, including better food, clothing and housing, in exchange for their supervision of other inmates.
In the 1950s, several former kapos were convicted in Israel of concentration camp brutality. There have been numerous inquiries about former Jewish camp kapos living in the United States.
Tannenbaum came to the United States in 1949 under the Displaced Persons Act and became a U.S. citizen in March 1955.

Gays Barred At Church

NEW YORK (AP) — A state judge has barred a Roman Catholic gay rights group from continuing its silent protests during Sunday services at St. Patrick's Cathedral.
State Supreme Court Justice Harold Baer on Thursday barred members of the group called Dignity from interfering with services inside the church and from "acting in a manner inconsistent with the liturgy."
The ruling by the trial-level court includes, but is not limited to, the group's now-common practice of standing during the homily and Mass.

The demonstrations began last year shortly after Cardinal John J. O'Connor barred Dignity from using church facilities in the archdiocese for meetings, but said homosexuals were welcome to attend regular Mass if they did not disrupt proceedings.
Dignity members have said they are protesting their exclusion from the church.
Baer said he was mindful of the delicate balance between constitutional rights of free speech and freedom of religion. He said he was relying in large part on the private property argument advanced by St. Patrick's lawyers.

Volunteers Build Chapel At Prison

By The Associated Press
It was nearly 15 years ago when Jennings Burgin first came up with the idea of putting together a volunteer effort to build a chapel for the inmates at the minimum-security Spindale Prison Unit.

After several false starts, ground finally was broken two years ago. On Saturday, the 134-seat brick chapel will be formally dedicated by N.C. Supreme Court Chief Justice James B. Exum Jr.
Burgin, 60, a retired textile supervisor, said he was most proud of the fact that the chapel - valued at more than $150,000 - was built at no cost to taxpayers. The volunteer effort included hundreds of individuals, some of them inmates, and dozens of area churches and businesses.

"It's a great thing. We've got high hopes for those men out there," Burgin said in a telephone interview from his Spindale home. "The next step is to raise money to pay a part-time chaplain. We've got two volunteer chaplains, but you've got to keep your services lined up."
Money and labor for the project came from a number of unrelated sources, including a prisoner group called "Helping Hands." Inmates washed cars to help raise money for materials.
A number of professional people also were drawn into the cause. The chapel was designed by architect Russell Burgin, the son of Jennings Burgin. The chief contractor was the Gardner Construction Co. of Forest City, but most of the labor and materials were donated.
The overall effort was headed by the elder Burgin along with Sam Hargett of Rutherfordton and Royce Woodall of Forest City.

February Is Hard Month

Buying Swimwear Is Traumatic

By MARTHA SHERRILL DAILEY
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — It's just you. Alone with 20 bathing suits in a department store dressing room, you are trying them on. The overhead lights are a bright white, blinding fluorescent. The mirror is three-sided. One humbling failure follows another. Each suit seems to flush out the worst parts of your flesh.

After five of them you frown. After 10 you grow disgusted. After 15 you are filled with self-loathing. The sales lady knocks and you are overcome with shame.

It's also the week of the Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue.

"I've heard people moaning in there," says Katherine Long of her dressing rooms at Island Water Sports, a swim and surf shop in Georgetown. There are glossy posters on the walls of 16-year-olds in bikinis. "I had one woman last year who wouldn't leave the dressing room even though she was dressed. Her husband was waiting outside. She told him she was too upset to come out."

Trying on bathing suits can be a humiliating ordeal, a tormenting and demoralizing search. For many women, it's the motivation behind a thousand hours of aerobics, jog-walking, pool laps, dieting. Somewhere along the way to that dressing room is a trail of little pink Sweet & Low packages.

And women approach wearing a bathing suit in public as though it were the swimwear competition in a beauty pageant. "Most people only giggle or shriek when the suit looks bad," says Long. "It's a rare person, an exhibitionist-type, who will come out and model the suit for everybody."

Long believes the average woman tries on a dozen swimsuits before finding one that she likes. But it depends on the time of year. February, the month that the spring swimwear arrives in stores and on the pages of Sports Illustrated, is not the easiest of times to buy. "Women are having a hard time now, because they're not

tan. Now they are terribly fickle," says Long, who has put rose-colored light bulbs in the dressing rooms to make her customers look healthier. "Oh, definitely, they buy when they are feeling more comfortable with themselves."

Winter pallor is not the only problem. Bathing-suit-buying conditions, even for perfect bodies, are foul throughout the year. For one thing, the purchase is irrevocable: Swimwear cannot be returned. For another, you have to try it on while wearing your underpants, and a pair of baggy cotton underpants squashed inside a Lycra suit is not particularly becoming. And then, there are the ratty dressing rooms — the stray straight pins on the floor, the overhead lighting, sometimes even bleak graffiti on the walls — not exactly a reassuring atmosphere. It's lonely.

"It's very hard to look in those mirrors," says Theresa Durazo, swimwear buyer for Raleigh's and Garfinkel's. Durazo admits to trying on 30 to 35 bathing suits before she buys one for herself. The cut and style of swimwear varies so much, women should expect to squeeze into maybe 20 suits to find the right one, she says. Durazo also encourages women to try on the new styles-high-cut legs, low-cut necklines, whatever. She's pleased she got her mother into a bandeau top for the first time last year.

"Honey, I think it's a trauma no matter what size you are," says Nancy Radmin, owner of the Forgotten Woman, a shop that sells bathing suits in sizes 14 to 26. "Any body has a figure problem," Radmin says. "I think society is too hard on itself. Instead of worrying about something important, we worry about the bulge in our tummy."

Radmin says she's a large-size, but she's still a sun worshipper. "I knew a girl who was a size 4, who kept her body all draped at the beach. So it's all in your mind. And there I was, 175 pounds, and it's all hanging out..."

Many swimwear companies have responded to the self-conscious customer, the woman who thinks she's got bulges in the all wrong places. Manufacturers have created not only large-size suits, but swimsuit lines with tame tummy control-light girdles and slimming cuts.

"Women look much better than they think they do," says Jeff Tauber, top swimwear buyer for Bloomingdale's stores. Still, they want all the help they can get. Swimwear companies Roxanne, Sand Castle and Gabar make suits with adjustable legs and straps to make the fit finer. Jantzen swimwear has a line called "Five Pounds Under," which advertises slimming cuts and "power netting" for hauling in the gut.

"In a swimsuit you see your faults. And we are just trying to help the faults look less dramatic," says Christina Balit, creator of Simply Slim, a new line of one-piece suits designed to flatter any figure. Her family founded the company Christina, one of Canada's largest swimwear manufacturers, and she's selling the Simply Slim suits in the United States, at Garfinkel's and Macy's locally. The Christina company's move into "slimming" bathing suits was prompted by two years of research and surveys of women, age 25 to 40, who collectively complained about buying bathing suits.

In the dressing room, women are mercilessly self-critical, says Balit. "You always zoom in on your worst feature. You forget that you have a pretty smile, a pretty waist," she says. "Women are always looking at where the elastic meets the skin — and you always see a bulge there. Women will always check their profile in the mirror and say, 'Oh, my God. Look at my stomach!'"

It's been the butt of humor in Cathy cartoons and Erma Bombeck books, but some say the problem of finding a bathing suit is more profound than body fat. "It's not a joke," says psychologist Rita Freedman, author of Beauty Bound, a 1985 book about the role of physical attractiveness in a woman's life. "Even women who are underweight, or just three pounds overweight, are tormented that they are not thin enough," says Freedman.

An upcoming vacation to the beach, says Freedman, can terrify even a secure woman. Freedman, currently writing a book called Body Love, to be released next fall, specializes in helping people become more accepting of their looks. For women who are self-conscious about wearing a bathing suit in public, Freedman suggests "a lot of fantasy and imagery." She tells a patient to "visualize herself in the situation — on vacation on the beach — and then rehearse positive self-statements." According to Freedman, these reassuring thoughts might go something like: "I am a beautiful woman even though I am not as thin as other women might think I should be. I am the right shape for my body. It's appropriate for women to have more fat on their bodies than men do. I don't want to be tormented by chronic dieting. Things are functioning well in my life."

The point, says Freedman: "She concentrates that she has a much broader life than those 5 minutes when she's walking on the beach in a bathing suit." Movies, magazines and television are constantly showing us beach scenes, says Freedman, "but life doesn't take place on a beach. We have become, somehow, hyperfocused on it."

"I think women should pay attention to how often they are bombarded by these images. The Sports Illustrated bathing suit issue is an excuse for a centerfold display. ...It's not really the suits that are the focus. It's not pornography. It's a well-mannered way of splashing the female body across the page."

"But it does a disservice to women who don't look that way, and it makes them feel less satisfied with themselves when they go into a dressing room and have to put on a bathing suit."

Freedman also recommends that women not become obsessed with finding the perfect bathing suit: "Don't try on a million things. Don't dwell on it. If it looks okay, then buy it and move on with your life. We have better things to do..."

Foreign Films Gaining Ground

By DENNIS HUNT
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Foreign-language films have always been a small fish in the big home-video pond. But, assessing last year, this fish appears to be getting bigger.

Because there are no official figures about foreign-language films on home video, quizzing experts is the best way to gauge what happened in that market last year.

"There are no charts or statistics on foreign films because they're such a tiny part of the home-video market," said Meir Hed, co-owner of Videotheque, the three-store Westside video chain noted for its extensive foreign-film department. "There are no exact figures but I'd say the foreign-film share of the overall market is about 2 percent. But it's growing."

Hed is judging the expansion of the market by the increase in the number of home-video releases: "In '86, I'd say 80-90 foreign films came out on home video. In 1987 there were 100-120 releases. I'd say there was roughly a 25 percent to 30 percent increase in releases."

Hed estimated that half these titles are venerable oldies. "Foreign-movie buffs love the classics. There are all these classics by directors like (Ingmar) Bergman, (Federico) Fellini, (Akira) Kurosawa and (Luis) Bunuel that foreign-film fans would like to see — actually to own. When it comes to the classics, these fans are more interested in buying than renting."

The company that most caters to these collectors is Nelson Entertainment, which puts out far more classics in the home-video market than any other company.

Cinematheque Collection, which released Eric Rohmer's "Clair's Knee" and Kurosawa's "Throne of Blood" last year, is the other major player in this market. CBS-Fox is involved on a smaller scale, with major recent releases such as "Betty Blue" and Kurosawa's "Ran" — which, according to Hed, were two of last year's most popular foreign titles.

Nelson has endeared itself to collectors by marketing its releases at the relatively low price of $29.95. Other companies are still pricing their titles mostly in the $60-$80 range.

"There are a lot of foreign-film collectors out there," said Rand Bleimeister, Nelson's executive vice president. "Very simply, you'll sell more if you market the movies at a lower price. And we're selling more and more. Last year was a big one for us."

Bleimeister said a number of classics in the company's catalog — such as "Fanny and Alexander" and "The Seven Samurai" — did very good business. And some other Nelson titles introduced last year — "Forbidden Games," "Two Women" and "La Ronde" — should have long-range popularity.

"The nice thing about classics is that they have a long life," he said. "They'll sell forever."

Nelson's big problem with its foreign titles, Bleimeister noted, is lack of video-store exposure. Many stores in America's five biggest cities carry foreign-language films but most stores outside these areas do not.

But Nelson came up with an alternative. "We work through several mail-order companies," Bleimeister said. "If you're a foreign-film fan in some outlying area, you have no choice but to order by mail. About half our foreign-film business is done through mail order."

On home video you get nothing but the cream of the foreign crop; there is not much of a home-video market for obscure foreign movies. Hed said

Short Letters Break Up Long Days

DEAR ABBY: I'm not on an aircraft carrier. In fact, I wish I were — spending six months aboard a carrier would be fun. They have video game rooms, snack bars, live USO shows and they receive Operation Dear Abby III mail. My ship is the smallest in the Navy, a guided missile destroyer. I realize it is impossible to get "Operation" mail to every ship under way at Christmas. I just would like people to stop and think about us — the ones who, for six months, live in a world that is 400 feet long and 40 feet wide. A world that rocks and vibrates constantly. A world where 300 people live and work. It's a place where you forget what day it is. Those of us on "small boys" have little time off, and when we do, where can we go?

We are the ones who protect our valuable carriers, recover downed pilots or men overboard. We live with the knowledge that our job is to get between the carrier and the incoming torpedo (or missile); we take the hit so the carrier can continue to fight. We're also the ones who escort tankers in the Persian Gulf. We've been there since the crisis began.

Just a short while back, we were up at 5 a.m. to refuel the ship, then at noon we unloaded ammunition. By 3 p.m. we finished working, and realized that it was Thanksgiving Day! I have been separated from my wife for two months — only four more to go and we'll be a family again.

Abby, I'm not complaining. I love my country. But next Christmas, when I am a civilian, my family and I will take a minute or two to think about, and maybe pray for, the guys out there on large ships and small, keeping Americans respected and free, at any cost. — COUNTING THE DAYS IN THE I.O.

DEAR COUNTING: Thank you for your very informative and heart-warming letter.

Readers: Mail is a terrific morale booster, so be a sweetheart and send a valentine to the men aboard the USS TOWERS (DDG 9), FPO SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF. 96679-1239.

DEAR ABBY: An imaginative member of the Older Women's League came up with an idea similar to the "maverick table" you mentioned in a recent column.

Once a month she chose a reasonably priced restaurant — usually on a Sunday evening — where any OWL member could turn up and enjoy the company of other OWLs. It worked very well, and provided companionship and a pleasant supper to many women who otherwise would have been dining alone. Since the lady who thought of it was named "Lucy," we called the program "Lucy's Table," so one could ask for "Lucy's table" when she enters the restaurant alone. — DOROTHY SATIR, SAN FRANCISCO

Bakehouse Is Working Art Facility

By SANDRA WALEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Twin silos are still attached to the former bakery, only now it's an unusual arts complex coated in bold coral and thriving in an area north of downtown Miami targeted for redevelopment.

For South Florida artists who have been driven out of popular enclaves by escalating rents and are searching for some camaraderie, this is Bakehouse — one of a handful of centers around the nation where artists can meet, work and exhibit under one roof.

"We felt the time had come for Miami to have a working art facility, a gathering place for visual artists," said Helene Pancoast, who along with three co-founders had a vision to acquire an affordable complex that insulated artists from high rents.

They found exactly what they were looking for in the cavernous, 32,000-square-foot building previously owned by the Flowers Baking Co. The complex with ceilings as high as 16 feet in some areas and scarred hardwood maple floors was purchased with grant money for $225,000, although it was appraised at $900,000.

"It gave you that feeling of the old warehouse space in Soho (New York)," said Bakehouse director Vivian Rodriguez. "It really was a perfect space to work in and subdivide."

A corner room where huge mixing vats once sat for preparing dough is now a spacious gallery. The bakery's open loading dock was enclosed and now houses the area's only licensed, professional jewelry institute.

An open central area for ovens and packaging has been partitioned into 65 comfortable studios for painters, sculptors, ceramists, performance artists and others.

"Miami has been growing culturally and we really are infants in many ways. In a sense, what we're doing here is a prototype," Rodriguez said.

Opened a year ago, the fenced-in Bakehouse has not only survived in what some might describe as a rough neighborhood, but is flourishing.

Its studios are full. In fact, there's a waiting list.

Open houses once a month when artists put their work on display and mingle with the public are attracting hundreds of people. Some workshops and classes have been held and more are planned.

South End Alternative Theater, a professional company, has presented at least a half-dozen productions in the Bakehouse's 85-seat live theater on the second floor and plans to perform year-round.

Influenced by similar centers for artists, such as the Torpedo Factory in Alexandria, Va., and The Art Place in New Orleans, Bakehouse has succeeded in fostering a convivial atmosphere that is getting raves from many of the artists renting studios from about $100 to $450, depending on square footage.

"I've always worked by myself," said Sofia Taylor, who for a while had a studio in Coconut Grove, a popular area for artists until developers came in and prices went up. "Since I've been here, the interchange has been marvelous."

During the latest open house a week ago, visitors strolled the maze of hallways, browsing at artwork on display in the studios and chatting with the artists.

Maggie McClellan was putting the finishing touches on her business cards, miniature watercolor pieces, as visitors popped in. A half-finished watercolor portrait sat on an easel nearby.

Like many of the artists at Bakehouse, McClellan used to work out of her garage, but isolation and lack of recognition in the area prompted the established painter to move into one of the largest studios at the complex.

"It's a comfortable community. You're inspired by each other's work," said McClellan, who worked with a partner at the Torpedo Factory. "(Bakehouse) is the greatest thing that's happened to the community, artwise."

For Kenneth Gregory, a painter and art teacher, the bedroom-sized studio is secure, affordable space he can use at any time.

In addition to 65 tenants, Bakehouse has 30 associate artists who have studios elsewhere but participate in exhibitions and other activities with the complex's artists.

Bakehouse is still in its infancy, with the gallery in need of adequate lighting and a new floor; outdoor sculpture sheds are incomplete.

Pancoast, who founded Bakehouse with Faith Atlans and David and Nathalie Nadel, said the complex could become a big force in South Florida's cultural growth given enough time and community support.

"It's projected Miami will be in the 1990s one of the most important arts centers in the country," she said. "I think (Bakehouse) can only help (the area) grow."

FUN TIME — Kids spring into the new season wearing spirited turnouts with lots of zing! For boys, there are color and white printed woven shirts topping pieced surfer shorts for sizes 4-14. And girls will look as fresh as a breath of spring in a feminine drop-waist dress speckled with coin-size dots with lots of dash.

Magic Lantern Prices Can Vary

From COUNTRY HOME
A Meredith Magazine

The concept of the magic lantern was first described in 1646 by Athanasius Kircher, a German scientist and Jesuit priest.

Kircher's proposed device used a simple oil lamp and a lens to project and enlarge transparent color painting glass, an unprecedented feat made possible by centuries of development in the science of optics, according to Country Home magazine.

Not until the end of the 1700s, however, did the crowd-pleasing potential of the magic lantern achieve widespread recognition. In France and England, entertainers began to captivate audiences with lantern spectacles called phantasmagoria. Hidden behind a semitransparent sheet with a simple lantern, these artists used the "magic" powers of the projecting device to conjure up specters of dead heroes and departed saints, or what seemed such to their technologically naive audiences.

By mounting the lantern on wheels and moving it backward and forward, the lanternist made the ghostly images grow and then shrink, seeming to rush toward then recede from the cowering crowd. Like fans of today's horror movies, people came from miles around to witness these spine-tingling events.

During the early years of the 19th century, the influence of the magic lantern spread throughout Europe.

As the lantern worked its spell in parlors across England and the Continent the demand for the amazing apparatus grew, and lantern makers responded with a variety of projecting devices meant for home use. By the time young Victoria ascended the English throne in 1837, the proliferation of home lanterns had put most itinerant lanternists out of business. At mid-century the magic lantern was entrenched as an essential element of every proper Victorian home, in America as well as Europe, and it remained so until the 1920s, two decades after England's great queen was dead and buried.

Home lantern shows were popular, but public lantern entertainments became a favorite Victorian pastime. Large public lantern shows thrived throughout the Victorian period. Even as moving pictures took center stage, magic lanterns continued in use, providing moviegoing audiences with glimpses of news photographs, coming attractions, and advertisements well after World War I.

As with most successful inventions, the mechanics and aesthetics of the magic lantern were refined as time passed, and many variations on the basic theme coexisted during the lantern's 200-year reign.

At the height of the lantern's ascendance, well-to-do families could splurge on projectors of gleaming brass and "Russian" iron — a metal forged in Birmingham, England, not Russia, that was reputed to rust. These top-of-the-line lanterns had brass-fitted lenses and cases of polished mahogany as finely crafted as the rest of the parlor furniture.

Those who craved the lantern's magic but had little money to spend on frivolous entertainment could buy manufactured lens kits and build their own projecting devices. Gaudy lanterns of brightly japanned tin also were affordable to many.

Although many lanterns and slides were discarded in the first decades of this century when moving pictures dazzled the eyes of a new generation, some survived and still surface today at antique shows and flea markets.

Collector Richard Balzar bought his first lantern and slides in 1975 at an auction in England. A short 12 years later, this collection covers every aspect of the lantern's evolution.

Balzar has netted some excellent deals over the years, but he warns beginning collectors that prices vary greatly. "I've found lanterns for as little as $15, but they can go as high as $5,000 to $10,000," he says. "It's not necessarily the technology involved, it's the unusual lanterns that are the most expensive, like one in the shape of the Eiffel Tower. The rarest are the Buddha and a lantern in the shape of a racing car."

Slide prices begin at around $1 and soar to $1,000 or more. The older the slide or the more intricate its mechanics, the more expensive it will probably be. Prices for ephemera may range from $10 for a Christmas card to $300 to $400 for a hand-colored engraving.

HELPING OUT

NEW YORK (AP) — Parents, age 65 and over, are four times more likely to give their children regular financial assistance than the other way around, according to a study by Louis Harris Associates.

The study was for the Commonwealth Fund's Commission on Elderly People Living Alone, says AIMplus magazine.

In addition, of those polled, most said they would be willing to take a $20 to $30 cut in their monthly Social Security benefits if the money could be applied to assuring complete medical coverage and preventing elderly people from living in poverty.

Engagement Diamonds Are Popular, More Expensive

By The Associated Press
Diamonds apparently still are a girl's best friend.

In 1986, according to industry figures, 73 percent of all brides-to-be got diamond engagement rings. And they probably were bigger and more expensive than in previous years.

The average diamond ring sold in 1986 was .46 carats, with an average value of $1,177, says Lloyd Jaffe, chairman of the American Diamond Industry Association, a trade group. That compared with an average .28 carats and a value of $700 in 1980, Jaffe says.

"Latest tabulations regarding diamond wedding bands and anniversary rings," he says, "indicate that the market for men's diamond wedding bands has increased substantially, to over 400,000 pieces, up 20 percent over 1985."

Men usually know very little about diamonds when they start shopping for an engagement ring, says another jewelry executive, but they generally have a set price they are willing to spend.

"Before they buy an engagement ring," says H. Marvin Beasley, vice president, jewelry merchandising for Best Products Co., "they should decide what is most important for the money — quality or size or both."

Other things to keep in mind, he says:

- Does the wearer prefer traditional or unusual styles in settings and stone?
- Ask about color, cut, clarity and carat weight.
- Have the ring insured right away.

 siklis to surrender his passport and ordered that, when he is released from the custody of the Department of Corrections, Kamtsiklis should be "delivered to the jurisdiction of the U.S. Immigration Service for immediate deportation."

Kamtsiklis and two other men — his first cousin Petros Tholiotis, 27, of 111 E. Ninth St., and William Anderson Noble, 23, of 402 Lewis St. — were arrested in May 1987 following a year-long undercover investigation by the State Bureau of Investigation.

Kamtsiklis, in a statement to the court this morning, said he came to the United States in 1977 at the urging of Tholiotis and, had he not been arrested, would have become a U.S. citizen in May 1987.

"I love this country. I love the freedom of this country," Kamtsiklis told the court. "I never break the law in my life before."

"I wanted to cooperate with the police," after his arrest, Kamtsiklis said. "I am not a drug user. I despise them. Why I was doing it, I don't know."

 up-to-date equipment for the schools, and there will be a need to share resources among the public schools, universities, community colleges, public libraries and other agencies and organizations.

With the assumption that the local revenue tax base will remain stable, there will be a need acquire funds through a variety of sources, the group said, as competition for limited resources increase.

In addition to outlining some implications of the demographic, social and economic assumptions, the group outlined some educational assumptions during its meeting.

Emphasis was placed on the fundamentals, such as thinking and processing information, as well as on communication, the understanding of values and the development of creativity.

The task force's next meeting is scheduled for Feb. 25.

Shirley Nwangwa, a health educator for the Halifax County Health Department, showed her film, "Eye Can." The film — made in northeastern North Carolina — shows the pressure on a teen-aged girl to become sexually involved and what firm resolve she must maintain if she is to realize her career and other life goals. The film shows how Chiemeka, a 14-year-old child of a fatherless home, focuses on being an engineer, prepares herself academically, has a part-time job, is dropped by her boyfriend when she won't sleep with him, and finally graduates from Elizabeth City State University with a double major in electronic engineering and computer science and as president of her class.

It also shows how her grandmother, responsible for several grandchildren and great-grandchildren and her elderly mother, gets her high school equivalency degree through community college study, which enables her to get a job outside the home and improve the housing and other circumstances of her family even as she raises her own self-esteem.

The film was written by Ms. Nwangwa and produced with the assistance of the Northeastern North Carolina Tomorrow organization and the North Carolina Department of Human Resources. Ms. Nwangwa says she now wants to make another film which focuses on a young man from northeastern North Carolina and the difficulties he faces in realizing his dreams.

Dotty Martin, wife of Gov. Jim Martin, chaired the day-long Commission on the Family meeting, which brought members from throughout the state to Greenville.

Decision On City Buses Delayed

 federal pressure to privatize transit services whenever possible.

He said the city is subsequently responding to the pressures from both state and federal funding sources by requesting bids and proposals from private transit-contracting firms.

McCarley said the city sent out proposal requests two months ago and ATE was the only company to submit a bid.

The Public Transportation Commission will consider ATE's proposal and then recommend to City Council whether to privatize GREAT or keep it under the city's domain as it currently exists.

According to McCarley, the city is not required to make a decision on the matter on economic grounds alone. Other factors to be considered include quality of service, risk of future cost increases and community concerns.

McCarley said the transit commission is expected to have a decision on the recommendation to present to City Council within three weeks.

According to Ms. Wilson, ATE is the oldest and largest transit management firm in the country, managing more than 50 U.S. transit systems including the systems of Minneapolis, Corpus Christi, Texas, and Cincinnati, ATE's corporate headquarters.

She said ATE manages 6,000 buses and 14,000 employees nationwide, including 70 full-time employees who provide trouble-shooting and special consulting services including designing routes and schedules, helping design vehicle specifications, and providing interim management.

"We have a very busy consulting practice, the largest in the United States dedicated to transit, and it encompasses every discipline associated with mass transit, from maintenance, operations, planning, accounting and marketing," she said.

She also said ATE has a 90 percent renewal rate on all of its contracts.

"We think that speaks very highly of our abilities to fulfill our clients' expectations," she said.

To insure communication between ATE and city officials, Ms. Wilson said the company would locate a site manager to work and live in Greenville, providing personal identification with the system.

She also said another advantage of contracting with ATE is the size and financial integrity of the firm.

"ATE has a good reputation in the industry. Our parent company Ryder Systems Inc. and Ryder Truck Rental is a megacorporation. They have the financial strength to protect ATE, to protect the city of Greenville, and to protect the residents of the city of Greenville," she said.

She also said within the proposal, ATE has provided in the price liability insurance up to $5 million.

During the two-hour meeting, transportation commission members asked several questions regarding ATE staffing and the impact of the 13C regulations on private contracting.

The 13C regulation is an agreement between cities and the North Carolina Department of Transportation which states employees who are employed and supported by federal subsidies will not be adversely affected by changes made to a city's transit program by contracting the service out to private enterprise.

Under the ATE proposal, the city would absorb transit employees into other city positions as they would become available.

"If the city should accept ATE's proposal, no city employee would be out of work," said McCarley.

In financial terms, the ATE proposal as it now exists would save the city approximately $9,000 per year. ATE's proposed operating expenditures would be $345,114 for the first year compared to the city's current operating expense of approximately $354,000.

Ron Kimble, city finance director, said additional financial information needs to be obtained before the transportation commission makes any decision on the matter.

"Upon closer scrutiny, it appears the ATE proposal does not include some of the overhead and indirect cost that the city's current budget contains. It will be incumbent upon the city to work with ATE over the next two weeks to identify and come to some consensus about the dollar figures. Only then will we have the proper basis of comparison to determine if ATE's proposal is less costly than the cost the city presently incurs," he said.

"In addition, a further cost of $7,000 would surface due to the phasing in of drivers that would be employed by ATE," he added.

Mayo Allen, director of public works, said he feels it will be difficult for ATE to show it can operate GREAT at less expense.

Heels Up To Test; Stop Tiger Rally

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Eighth-ranked North Carolina put the lesson it learned against Wake Forest a week ago to use against Clemson.

The Tar Heels led Wake Forest at halftime but wilted in the second half and lost 83-80. Against the Tigers on Thursday night, North Carolina again led at the half and faced a strong second-half rally.

But this time the Tar Heels were up to the test, downing the Tigers 88-64 in Atlantic Coast Conference action.

"I don't think anybody is going to forget Wake Forest," said forward J.R. Reid, who scored 17 points and had 10 rebounds against Clemson. "We didn't want to let anything like that happen in this game."

"We've been through this before ... and that helped us a great deal," he said. "I thought we showed a lot of character."

Guard Jeff Lebo, who also had 17 points, agreed. "I think that it hurt (to lose to Wake Forest)," he said. "It woke us up a bit."

North Carolina, now 16-3 overall and 5-2 in the ACC, stretched its 38-28 halftime lead to 15 with two straight buckets early in the second half. But Clemson scored 11 straight points — keyed by Elden Campbell's two baskets and free throw — to cut the lead to 49-45 with 12:54 left.

Campbell, who scored 20 points before fouling out with 4:08 left, then slammed home a dunk to make it 52-49 with 11:59 left.

But Ranzino Smith countered with a 3-pointer to key a 7-0 run that upped the lead to 59-49. Clemson cut it to 66-62 with 4:42 remaining but could get no closer as the Tigers were outscored 22-2 after Campbell fouled out.

Lebo said the Clemson game was very similar to the Wake Forest game — with one exception.

"We were up on Wake Forest at halftime, the same way we were here," he said. "They made a run at us, just like Clemson did."

But Clemson's run failed as the Tigers fell to 11-8 and 1-6 in losing to North Carolina for the 17th time in 18 games.

Reid said he wasn't surprised at Clemson's play.

"We realize being away from home is always going to be tough," he said. "A game like this, it doesn't matter if you win by 2 or 22. You're just happy to win."

Clemson coach Cliff Ellis was pleased with his team's hustle but not its shooting.

The Tigers, who came into the game with just two guards after losing Donnell Bruce this week to a broken hand, hit just 42.6 percent, compared to 58.8 percent for the Tar Heels.

East Carolina's Pirates, mired in a five-game losing streak, will attempt to break out as they begin their second swing through the Colonial Athletic Association this weekend.

Saturday night, the Pirates will play host to George Mason at 7:30 p.m. in Minges Coliseum. Then, on Monday, James Madison's Dukes invade Minges, also for a 7:30 p.m. game.

The Patriots are currently the hottest team in the CAA, having won six straight games. Their last loss was a league contest to Richmond, 86-70, back on Jan. 16. The Patriots are currently tied with UNC-Wilmington for second place in the league standings with a 5-2 record and are 13-6 overall.

James Madison, meanwhile, is having its problems. Head coach John Thurston, advised that his contract would not be renewed at the end of this season, resigned last week and left the team. Tom McCorry, his assistant was named as interim coach, but lost his first outing to George Mason, 86-66, last Saturday.

The Pirates, meanwhile, have dropped to 2-5 in the league and 6-13 overall, and haven't posted a win since beating Navy on Jan. 16. The current streak includes four CAA games and a 77-50 licking at the hands of non-conference rival Campbell on Monday.

The Pirates trailed by as much as 10 points in the early going of the game but struggled back to tie it at 40-40 early in the second half. But after that, the Pirates scored but 10 more points while Campbell used a hot hand to fire in over 64 percent of their shots.

"We just hit 'The Wall,'" Pirate coach Mike Steele said of the Campbell game. "When you play as few players (seven) as we've been playing, and they give the type of all-out effort that they gave at Wilmington and in the first half against Campbell, they just didn't have anything left."

"That, coupled with the fact that Campbell shot the lights out, adds up to a blowout. Now, we've got a few days off before gearing up for George Mason, and we certainly need it."

The Pirate nucleus of seven players is probably going to be reduced to six this weekend. Guard Jeff Kelly was sidelined late in the Campbell game with a shoulder injury and is listed as doubtful for both games.

Mason won the opening game of this year's series, 77-63. The Pirates have won only four of the 14 games in the series thus far, with the Pats holding a four-game string at present. ECU's last win came in Minges in the 1985-86 season, 75-67.

Kenny Sanders, the league's leading scorer, fired in 22 points in the first meeting, while Brian Miller added 19. ECU led early in the game, 25-20, but GMU scored the final 14 points of the first half to take a 34-25 lead. Miller, hot from behind the arc, made five of seven 3-pointers in the game.

Gus Hill led ECU with 24 points while Reed Lose and Stanley Love each had 13.

Sanders, a 6-5 junior leads the Pats in scoring with a 21.9 average. He's also the rebounding leader for the conference with an 11.4 average. Miller, a 6-4 senior, is at 11.8 points per game, while Robert Dykes, a 6-7 freshman is the only starter out of double figures at 6.6.

The other starters are 5-10 senior Anthony Davis at 14.9, and either Steve Smith, a 6-3 sophomore (10.2) or Earl Moore, a 6-0 junior (10.9).

One of ECU's two league victories is over James Madison, that coming in Harrisonburg, Va., in January when the Pirates gained a 68-65 win. That marked the first win ever on the Duke court for the Bucs.

ECU also won the last game between the two last year, 74-68, in Greenville, giving the Pirates a two-game streak against the Dukes.

The Pirates were led by clutch free throw shooting in the first game, hitting 24 of 29. Hill led the way with 24 points.

Claude Ferdinand, a starter for the Dukes, was academically suspended by Thurston after playing 14 games, but was then reinstated for the Jan. 27 Navy game. Following Thurston's resignation the next day, McCorry put Ferdinand back on suspension for the remainder of the season.

Kennard Winchester, who led the Dukes with 16 points in the first game, is the only double figure scorer for Madison among their starters. The 6-5 junior forward is scoring 15.6 points a game. He's also the leading rebounder with 6.6 per game.

The other starters are 6-4 senior forward Ralph Glenn (6.3); 6-5 junior center Anthony Cooley (2.4), 6-0 senior guard Ben Gordon (7.6) and 6-2 senior guard Robert Griffin (4.8).

The win for the Pirates in Harrisonburg has been their only road win thus far this year.

"It's been a while since we enjoyed that win last month," Steele said. "We were 2-1 in the league and now we're 2-5. That tells you a little of how important this weekend will be for us."

Hill is the leading scorer for the Pirates with an 18.4 mark. Lose is the only other player in double figures at 14.8.

While the men have a home date, the Lady Pirates will take to the road to face Mason on Saturday night and Madison on Monday.

The Lady Pirates have lost their last two after winning three in a row — their longest win streak of the year. ECU currently stands 8-13 overall and 2-4 in the CAA, in sixth place.

George Mason is currently tied for second place in the league with a 3-3 record, the same as UNC-Wilmington and American. The Lady Patriots entered this week with an 11-6 overall record.

Madison, currently ranked 18th on the Associated Press poll, is 6-0 against conference opposition and 15-3 following an upset at Virginia Commonwealth this week. The Dukes are the defending conference champions.

Blount Chooses North Carolina

Ayden-Grifton's Eric Blount, the Daily Reflector's All-Area high school football player of the year, verbally committed to play for the University of North Carolina Thursday, school officials announced.

Blount narrowed his choices down to UNC, North Carolina State and Wake Forest before deciding to opt for the Tar Heels.

Blount, who is also a standout basketball player, reportedly based his decision on UNC's agreeing to give him the opportunity to try out for the basketball team.

Blount was a two-year starter for the Chargers, playing wingback and tailback his junior year and switched to halfback for his senior year.

He led the Chargers to an 11-3 record this past season, including a second consecutive tie for the Eastern Plains 2-A championship.

Ayden-Grifton advanced to the Eastern 2-A playoff finals before falling to eventual state champion Whiteville, 28-0.

Blount ran for 1,103 yards on the season and 14 touchdowns during the regular season and then had over 300 yards rushing during the playoffs.

He also returned one kickoff and three punts for touchdowns despite opponents best efforts to kick away from him. Blount also played defense and intercepted eight passes and returned them 149 yards with one score. All told, he accounted for 20 touchdowns and 10 extra points for a total of 130 points.

Hill Makes Long Climb Back

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

There were times during the fall of 1986 when East Carolina's Gus Hill felt about as far away from being a college basketball player as one could, but perseverance has helped him overcome a serious knee injury and academic problems.

It's taken Hill over two years to return to the starting point of his college career, but the 6-3 205-pound sophomore from Fairfax, Va., has come back in fine fashion.

He leads the Pirates in scoring with an average of 18.4 points per game despite playing out of position at forward.

Hill tore up his knee in a pickup game during his first week on campus as a freshman in 1985. Then after a long rehabilitation period, he was forced to sit out the fall semester of 1986 with academic troubles.

"I had never been hurt before in my life," Hill said. "I went through four years of high school with no problems. I think more than anything I was just wondering if there was a chance I could play again."

"From the very beginning I was optimistic. At times, it just didn't feel like much was happening. I can't even describe how slow a process it is with the whole recovery. Now I'm still recovering."

Hill came to ECU as a highly-regarded prep all-star out of Flint Hill Academy in Virginia, where he averaged 22 points and eight rebounds a game as a senior.

But that all came crashing down around him during that pickup game in early September 1985.

"I was dribbling the ball down the court," Hill said, describing the play on which he was hurt. "I was going real fast and the ball got sort of under my knee so my next step would have been right on top of the ball or to the side."

"I decided to step to the side. That's when everything went. The doctor said it was about the second worst (knee) injury he had ever seen."

"I was in the cast for about two months. Then it felt like a brick. I started off with just leg exercises, having somebody press down. The next step was riding the bike. When I got a chance to start on the Ortho-Tron machine, that's when things really picked up."

"It was a bad situation. When basketball has been a part of your life for 12 years, it's definitely a change. It was such a part of my life that I think that was the main problem I had problems academically."

Hill is, by his own admission, not nearly the player he was before the injury, but he said his comeback is still an on-going process.

"I'm coming along slowly with what I'm doing," Hill said. "Every game, I'm starting to move a little better. I'm starting to do things like I used to. It's a slow process."

"If I keep playing and keep playing, I think I can get back to my old self. I'm playing with a lot of confidence because I got through it. I'm still not playing like I was before. It's coming gradually. I think next year, everybody will see. The knee is about as good as it's going to get. People don't realize basketballwise, when you haven't taken a shot for, at one point, about a whole year, you have to learn all over again."

The success predicted for Hill when he signed with the Pirates has been slow in coming because just when the knee was improving, his academic problems caught up with him.

"I got in academic trouble the spring semester of my freshman year," he said. "I think as a whole it was just a matter of depression and not really adjusting to being away from home for the first time."

"It was going from getting a lot of attention to not getting any at all and just limping around all the time. It was a tough situation. I went to summer school but I messed up there too. I was out for a semester."

In a situation tailor-made for failure, it would have been easy for Hill to pack it in at this point. He had encountered problems at every turn in his efforts to play college basketball. The move home was difficult for Hill and it could have easily been the final straw.

"People basically look at you as a failure," he said of his return to Fairfax. "(But) my family, they never gave up on me. Things never changed there. I just worked and did the best I could as far as rehabing my knee and just waited for January."

"My family was the biggest help because they made me realize that I had another chance. It's not like the world is coming to an end."

Given a second chance, Hill has taken advantage. He's learned to separate academics from athletics.

"The whole thing with coming to ECU, I knew basketball was the least of my worries," he said. "I knew I could play here. Academics were my biggest worry."

"I feel like I owe them a lot for bringing me back. My attitude is much more intense that I owe them something for what they did for me. I'm thinking about having to graduate, hitting the books as hard as I can because that really is the most important thing."

But Hill is also paying them back on the court. He has been one of the big reasons the Pirates have been competitive this year despite gloomy preseason predictions that put the Pirates at the bottom of the Colonial Athletic Association standings.

ECU boasts a 6-13 overall record and 2-5 mark in the CAA. Hill was named CAA player of the week on Jan. 12 along with Richmond's Rodney Rice after scoring 48 points in two games, the first a 77-63 loss to George Mason, and the second a 68-65 win over James Madison on the road.

That's not too bad for somebody for whose basketball career appeared to be over.

"People take walking for granted," Hill said. "I'll never take walking for granted again. It's a tough situation. I grew about 10 years during that time. It made me think about what I was going to do after basketball."

"With a knee like this, there is no way of playing professionally. I definitely learned a lot from it. I've had friends tell me it was probably the best thing that ever happened to me."

Powell Earns Number-One Tennis Ranking

Paige Powell, 13, of Greenville was recently awarded the number-one tennis ranking in state for the 13-year old age group by the North Carolina Tennis Association.

Powell also earned a ranking of 22nd for the 13-state southern region. She begins tournament play in February. These rankings are based on her 1987 results and they determine seeding for all this year's tournaments.

This is the second year in a row Powell has been ranked number one in the state in her age group. In 1986 she was ranked number one in the 12-and-under age group.

Gamecocks' Bethea Arrested In Drug Bust

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — University of South Carolina wide receiver Ryan Bethea was arrested Thursday and charged with possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, a spokesman for the city of Columbia said.

Betha was arrested about 4 p.m. and was taken to the Columbia City Jail, said spokesman John Spade. A Columbia magistrate agreed that the junior from Columbia could be released on a personal recognizance bond, Spade said.

Betha, 20, had five bags of cocaine weighing about four grams, Spade said. The football player also had a small amount of marijuana and was charged with simple possession of marijuana, the spokesman said.

Police said Bethea was arrested on the South Carolina campus between the university library and the Russell House student center.

Tom Price, South Carolina's assistant athletic director for media relations, said university athletic officials had no immediate comment on the arrest.

Betha was South Carolina's second leading receiver during the 1987 regular season, behind only Sterling Sharpe. He caught 41 passes for 620 yards for a 15.1-yard average. He caught two touchdowns during the season, including one for 77 yards. Bethea also rushed seven times for 65 yards.

Tigers' Cooper Joins Basketball Team

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Sophomore wide receiver Gary Cooper, who led Clemson in receiving this past year, has joined the Tigers' basketball team, Coach Cliff Ellis said Thursday.

The 6-foot-4 Cooper will begin practice Monday but was on the bench for the Tigers on Thursday night against North Carolina, Ellis said. Cooper did not dress for the game against the eighth-ranked Tar Heels at Littlejohn Coliseum.

Wilkinson Joins Charlotte Heat Tennis Team

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Tim Wilkinson, a native of Shelby and contender for the 1986 U.S. Open Championship, will join the Charlotte Heat franchise of Domino's Pizza Team Tennis, officials announced Thursday.

Team owner Bob Benson called Wilkinson decision "the most significant player announcement ever made by a professional team sport in Charlotte."

Wilkinson said he made the decision to play for the heat because he and his wife, Vicky, have moved to Charlotte. The 28-year-old also said he is building a home near the Olde Providence Racquet Club, where the Heat plays its home matches.

"The Heat was so successful last year," he said at a news conference, "and my goal is to help the team win again."

Stanford Upsets #1 Arizona

By The Associated Press
The Arizona Wildcats are one of the best teams in nation, except when they're ranked No. 1 and playing at Stanford.

Todd Licht scored 23 points and Howard Wright 21 Thursday night as Stanford upset top-ranked Arizona 82-74.

It marked the second time this season Arizona has lost while holding the No. 1 rating. It also was the fourth straight year the Wildcats have lost at Stanford.

"They kicked our tails in every way — boards, shooting, free throws," Arizona Coach Lute Olson said. "People have said all along that we couldn't be tested in the (Pacific-10) conference. I've said all along this was way off."

Stanford joined New Mexico as the teams that have ambushed the No. 1

Wildcats, now 20-2. The Cardinal, 14-7, did it by scoring the final 10 points in the last five minutes.

The standing-room only crowd of 7,500 at Maple's Pavilion was warned early in the game to stop stomping on the floor when Arizona was shooting free throws. But the Wildcats still seemed rattled by the crowd, which swarmed onto the court when the game ended.

"The crowd came in and really made a difference," Stanford Coach Mike Montgomery said. "That put us over the edge."

Said Olson: "I thought we looked pressured in the final minutes."

In other Top Twenty games, No. 2 Nevada-Las Vegas beat Cal-Irvine 99-77, No. 3 Brigham Young defeated Utah 82-64, No. 5 Temple trounced Duquesne 110-70, No. 8 North Carolina stopped Clemson 88-64 and Ohio State toppled No. 17 Illinois 64-60.

Stanford outrebounded Arizona 32-26 and outshot the Wildcats from the free-throw line. For the fourth straight year, Arizona ran into foul trouble at Stanford and the result was the Cardinal made 22 of 30 free throws, compared to 11-for-16 for the Wildcats.

"When there's that much difference, when they shoot 30 free throws and you shoot only 16, that's hard to overcome unless you are shooting real well," Olson said.

Stanford trailed by nine points in the first half but came back to trail only 43-40 at halftime.

"We knew then, when we went into halftime behind only three to the No. 1 team in the nation, we had them right where we wanted them," Wright said.

Sean Elliott led the Wildcats with 22 points, but couldn't score after making a short jumper that put Arizona ahead for the last time at 74-72. Licht then hit a 15-foot bank shot to start Stanford's 10-0 streak, and ended it with a pair of free throws.

Stanford avenged a 90-65 loss at Arizona last month and gave the Wildcats their first Pac-10 loss in 10 games. The Cardinal is 6-4 in the league.

No. 2 UNLV 99, Cal-Irvine 77
Karl James scored 26 points and sparked a first-half spree that sent UNLV past Cal-Irvine in the Pacific Coast Athletic Association.

James, a freshman, had seven points during an 11-0 streak that gave the visiting Runnin' Rebels a 44-28 lead. Jarvis Basnight and Anthony Todd each added 13 points for UNLV, 20-1 overall and 9-1 in the PCAA.

UNLV made 25 of 26 free throws.

Reid also had 10 rebounds for the Tar Heels, 16-3 overall and 5-2 in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Clemson is 11-8 and 1-6.

Ohio State 64, No. 17 Illinois 60
Jay Burson scored 20 points and made two clinching foul shots with 17 seconds left as Ohio State held off Illinois.

The Buckeyes won for the third time this season at home against a ranked Big Ten team. Ohio State is 11-7 overall while the Illini fell to 14-7 with its third straight loss.

Illinois led 41-30 with 16:11 remaining before Ohio State rallied for a tie at 51. Grady Mateen's three-point play gave the Buckeyes the lead for good at 56-53 with 2:23 left.

Tony White scored 12 points for Ohio State, which shot 21-for-27 from the foul line. Nick Anderson had 17 points for Illinois, which was 8-for-16 on foul shots and missed the front end of three one-and-ones in the final five minutes.

Drivers Believe Luck Plays Role

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Luck is something most race drivers believe in.

Geoff Bodine believes his luck may be turning for the better and Dale Earnhardt thinks his luck is still good. Tim Richmond figures that if weren't for bad luck, he'd have no luck at all.

Bodine, who went winless on the NASCAR stock car circuit in 1987, on Thursday drew the pole position for the $230,000 Busch Clash at Daytona International Speedway.

"We don't talk about last year," Bodine said. "We're looking forward to this year. I have a new crew chief (Waddell Wilson), I've got the pole in the Clash and I think things are really looking up."

Earnhardt, the two-time defending Winston Cup champion, came up with the No. 2 starting position in the blind draw among 13 drivers — 12 1987 pole winners and one wild-card entry.

"My luck hasn't run out yet," said Earnhardt, who won the Clash in 1980 and 1986. "But it don't make a difference where you start. ... I think drafting is going to be the ticket."

The second row will include Ken Schrader, the wild-card entry, and Rusty Wallace, followed by Terry Labonte and defending Clash champion Bill Elliott.

Benny Parsons and Bobby Allison will start from the fourth row, with Davey Allison and Morgan Shepherd in the fifth and Alan Kulwicki and Richmond in the sixth row. Harry Gant brings up the rear.

Richmond, who won a pole and two races last season despite missing most of the season while recuperating from double pneumonia, continued to job hunt Thursday.

"I still have five possible rides for the Clash and the (Daytona 500) race," Richmond said. "But I've got to make a decision real soon."

"Obviously, I have not tested here at all," he said. "I have no idea what to expect. We'll just have to pick and choose the right time to make a move and be lucky."

"I missed the sport. I just hope the sport missed me."

Richmond won't be the only one driving unfamiliar equipment on Sunday and in the Daytona 500 on Feb. 14.

Buick, Oldsmobile and Pontiac all have new models here and all of the cars will be carrying the new carburetor restrictor plates mandated by NASCAR to slow the cars down in races at Daytona and at Alabama International Motor Speedway, the two fastest NASCAR superspeedways.

"The Clash will be a good learning process for a lot of people," Elliott said. "The Pontiac, Oldsmobile and Buick teams have new cars, and it will give them a chance to learn about them."

Kulwicki, in his second Clash start, said, "With the new restrictor plates, anything can happen in this race. Every car in the race is fast. You can run very good and still finish last."

The restrictor plates, with one-inch openings, reduce horsepower and, therefore, speed. A plate with a somewhat larger opening was used last year in the July races at Daytona and Talladega.

Practice opens today for both the Clash and Saturday's pole qualifying for the 500.

Several Pontiacs and Oldsmobiles had problems during technical inspection on Thursday when it was discovered the cars were about two inches longer than NASCAR limits.

Crewmen of the teams affected spent part of the afternoon removing the rear sheet metal, cutting it down to the proper length and reattaching it.

"That's going to really mess up the aerodynamics," said one crewman who asked not to be identified.

Heels Up...

"Dog, we just didn't shoot the ball anywhere," Ellis said. "Two-pointers, 3-pointers, free throws. That's going to happen."

"I think our guys played hard. The score is not indicative of the way the game was played," he said. "The effort was there. ... Some nights it's just not going to fall for you."

North Carolina coach Dean Smith was just happy to escape with a victory before a vocal but less-than-capacity crowd of 9,508.

"We would've been happy with a one-point win," he said. "It was a very aggressive game by both teams."

Steve Bucknall had 13 points for the Tar Heels, while Rick Fox had 12 and Smith had 10.

Jerry Pryor added 14 points for the Tigers, who lost the battle of the boards 36-30 but had 14 turnovers to 21 for North Carolina.

North Carolina, which trailed by as many as three early, used a 12-2 run to grab a 25-16 lead with 7:28 to go in the first half on Pete Chilcutt's second straight tip-in.

The Tigers cut the lead to five moments later, but Bucknall hit a three-point play and two free throws as the Tar Heels took a 10-point halftime lead.

Defense Lifts Bulls By Phoenix

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

Michael Jordan got his points and John Paxson hit two 3-point goals late in the game. But it was Chicago's defense and lack of the same by the Suns that finally gave the Bulls a 113-101 victory in Phoenix.

Chicago hadn't won at the Arizona Veterans Memorial Coliseum since March 2, 1977, dropping 14 straight games.

Thursday night, that streak came to an end.

"We got the lead, but we let them back in it. Then we found ourselves in a game," said Jordan, who scored 37 points. "We got into our rhythm and we had to play some defense on them."

"Finally, in the third quarter, we put our defenses on them. Then we outscored them 23-5 to get the lead back and controlled the game from then on."

Suns Coach John Wetzel agreed with Jordan.

"We didn't execute down the stretch," he said. "We didn't run our plays. We went one-on-one and we didn't make the Bulls play defense."

In other NBA games, it was New York 100, Detroit 93; Golden State 96, Cleveland 90 in overtime; Indiana 109, Philadelphia 95; Milwaukee 111, Boston 101; Houston 115, New Jersey 87; Denver 129, San Antonio 123; the Los Angeles Lakers 117, the Los Angeles Clippers 86; Sacramento 118, Dallas 101; Utah 126, Portland 123, and Atlanta 119, Seattle 109.

Phoenix led 80-64 with 6:53 remaining in the third quarter, but the Bulls went on a 23-5 run to close out the quarter, taking an 87-85 lead on Charles Oakley's jumper with three seconds left.

The Suns fought back and tied the score at 97 in the fourth quarter before Chicago reeled off 10 straight points with Paxson hitting his pair of 3-pointers for a 107-97 lead with 3:13 to play. Phoenix never threatened again, losing its 10th straight game and moving within two of tying its club record, set in 1968-69 and tied in 1976-77.

Larry Nance paced the Suns with 21 points, but had only three in the second half.

Lakers 117, Clippers 86

Byron Scott scored 21 points and Magic Johnson recorded his sixth triple-double of the season for the Lakers, making the Clippers' Gene Shue the first head coach in NBA history to suffer 800 defeats.

"I'm never ever going to have a great record," said Shue, who took the Washington Bullets and Philadelphia 76ers as far as the NBA Championship Series in the 1970s.

"Every job I've had has been a rebuilding job."

Johnson had 18 points, 10 rebounds and 10 assists for the Lakers, winners for the seventh straight time and 24th in 26 games. The Clippers, losers of six in a row and 20 of their last 22, were led by Michael Cage with 16 points.

Kings 118, Mavericks 101

Mike McGee scored 11 of his 18 points in the final quarter as Sacramento snapped a six-game losing streak against Dallas and handed the Midwest Division-leading Mavericks their fourth straight loss.

Reggie Theus topped Sacramento with 23 points, while Otis Thorpe added 20 and Derek Smith 19. Mark Aguirre scored 35 points for the Mavericks.

Jazz 126, Trail Blazers 123

Kelly Tripuck's 3-point shot at the buzzer gave Utah its fourth straight victory.

"I could see it coming a mile away," said Utah's Karl Malone, who scored a career-high 41 points and had a career-high 19 rebounds.

The victory ended a series streak in which the home team had won the last 17 contests. The last time Utah won at Portland was Feb. 12, 1984.

Kevin Duckworth led Portland with a career-high 28 points, while Clyde Drexler had 26.

Hawks 119, Sonics 109

Doc Rivers scored a career-high 37 points and Dominique Wilkins had 33 as Atlanta snapped a four-game losing streak. Rivers hit his last six shots and scored nine straight points as the Hawks handed the SuperSonics their fourth straight loss.

Seattle was led by Dale Ellis with 36 points and Tom Chambers with 22.

Bucks 111, Celtics 101

Terry Cummings scored 22 of his 30 points in the first half and Milwaukee held on in the second. Jack Sikma added 20 points and reserve forward Larry Krystkowiak had a season-high 18 for the Bucks.

Kevin McHale led the Celtics with 25 points and Larry Bird had 21.

Down 62-50 at the half, Boston closed within 72-69 with 3:45 to go in the third quarter as Robert Parish scored nine points in a 15-4 run. Boston never got closer than four points in the final period.

Rockets 115, Nets 87

Purvis Short scored 24 points and Houston hit a team record 25 consecutive free throws. The Rockets did not miss a free throw until 37 seconds remained in the game. Houston finished 28 of 29 from the line, eclipsing its record of 18 of 18 set in 1978.

Rodney McCray scored 19 points for Houston. Buck Williams led the Nets with 23 points and 14 rebounds.

The teams were tied at 22 after the first quarter, but the Rockets outscored the Nets 23-4 to take control.

Nuggets 129, Spurs 123

Lafayette Lever scored six straight points in the fourth period to lead Denver. The Nuggets trailed for most of the game before outscoring the Spurs 42-28 in the final period. Alex English finished with 30 points and Lever had 26.

With San Antonio leading 106-102, Lever hit a 12-footer. He then grabbed a rebound and put in a layup to tie the game. His five-foot jumper with 6:25 remaining put Denver on top for good 108-106.

Alvin Robertson led the Spurs with 29 points and Walter Berry had 19.

Knicks 100, Pistons 93

Gerald Wilkins scored 19 points, including six during a 12-2 spurt in the fourth quarter to snap a tie, and Patrick Ewing had 25 as New York won its sixth straight home game. The victory snapped the Knicks' 12-game losing streak against Detroit, dating back to Dec. 21, 1985.

With the score tied at 74, New York spurred to an 86-76 lead with 5:15 left in the game.

Isiah Thomas had 29 points for Detroit and Adrian Dantley added 21. Former Piston Sidney Green grabbed a team-high 18 rebounds and added 13 points for the Knicks.

Warriors 96, Cavaliers 90

Chris Mullin scored 22 points, including two free throws to snap an 88-88 tie in overtime, and Golden State scored only its second road victory of the season in snapping Cleveland's five-game winning streak.

Golden State's Winston Garland banked in a 10-footer with five seconds left to force the extra period. Mullin's two free throws put the Warriors ahead for good at 90-88 with 2:14 to play.

Ron Harper led Cleveland with 22 points and Mark Price had 19.

Pacers 109, 76ers 95

Wayman Tisdale scored a season-high 26 points to lead Indiana. Tisdale made his first five shots and was 11 of 13, including a basket in a six-point spurt that put Indiana ahead to stay 91-85.

Philadelphia, which lost its 10th consecutive road game, tied the score at 85 with a seven-point spurt. Steve Stipanovich put Indiana ahead to stay 87-85 with a jumper from the free throw line with 6:48 to go.

Charles Barkley led Philadelphia with 30 points.

Wayward Shot Is Costly To Norman

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — There is no ice plant in Australia. "And we're not going to import any, either," Greg Norman said.

It is classified as a succulent, this ground cover common to California. It has bright blooms of varied color. It has thick, pulpy, fleshy leaves. It can be very pretty.

But it is no place to hit a golf ball.

Norman did that, on the 16th hole of the picturesque Cypress Point course, and paid a penalty. The double bogey cost him the first-round lead Thursday in the $700,000 Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

"I'm glad it's behind me," Norman said after taking two shots to get out of the ice plant on the 16th. "When we were going to the 16th tee, a lady asked me, 'Are you finished?' I said, 'Yes, I think I'll just skip the last three.'"

"I should have," Norman said.

After the double bogey on the 16th, Norman also bogeyed the 18th to finish with a 68, one shot back of the three men who shared the lead — Mark Calcavecchia, Jim Gallagher and Jim Booros.

Gallagher and Calcavecchia had 67s in the brilliant sunshine at Cypress Point.

Booros, 37, the head pro at the Allentown, Pa., municipal course and now making his third attempt at the PGA Tour, played his back nine in 30 in a 5-under-par effort at Pebble Beach.

But they were challenged by a starry group that included Tom Watson, Ben Crenshaw and Craig Stadler, tied with Norman a single stroke back at 68. Mark Brooks and John Huston also were at four under par.

Brooks and the rookie Huston played at Pebble Beach, Stadler at Spyglass Hill while Watson, Norman and Crenshaw were with the celebrity group at Cypress Point.

The format for this old tournament, formerly known as The Crosby, calls for the pros and an amateur partner to play one round over each of the three courses before the field is cut for the final round at Pebble Beach on Sunday.

Norman, playing in the same group with Watson, now goes to Spyglass Hill.

"I like that course. I could do well there," Norman said. "I'm swinging the club better than I have since 1986" when he was the outstanding figure in world golf.

Watson, on the other hand, called Spyglass "my nemesis. I'll be happy just to break par."

Also going to Spyglass Hill will be the Nicklaus-Miller family feud. The Millers, defending champion Johnny Miller and his 17-year-old son, Johnny Jr., won the first round playing in a foursome that included Jack Nicklaus and his 24-year-old son, Steve. Johnny Miller had a 71, Jack Nicklaus a 73. The two Millers combined for a best-ball score of 64, two shots better than the Nicklaus twosome.

Improved Testing For The Olympics

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Athletes in this month's Winter Games face "the most comprehensive drug testing program" in Olympic history, a top-ranking medical official says.

The athletes also should feel secure about the chances of a drug test coming back positive when it should show they are clean, according to Dr. Robert Baynton, chairman of medical laboratory services for the Calgary Olympic Organizing Committee.

Drug samples are collected and kept under the most secure conditions, Baynton said during a news conference Thursday.

If initial tests are suspicious, a backup test is run, and any positive result then must be confirmed by an entirely separate analysis on another sample, he said.

Bono Runs For Mayor

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Entertainer and restaurateur Sonny Bono is making his first bid for public office in the upcoming mayoral election in this winter resort home of golfers and celebrities.

Bono, best known for the pop records he made with former wife Cher in the 1960s and their television variety show of the 1970s, faces half a dozen lesser known candidates in the April 12 election. Incumbent Mayor Frank Bogert, 78, declined to file candidacy papers by the Thursday deadline.

Bono, who will be 53 on Feb. 16, said he's most concerned about the strong competition for tourist dollars from surrounding cities, Palm Springs' deficit budget and the need to balance growth with preservation of the desert environment.

Kuralt Holds Edge On Sunday

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Once a week on Sunday morning, television sets across the country quit blaring for 90 minutes and quietly reverberate with such odd TV sounds as bird calls, classical music, sea breezes, cool jazz, intelligent words and, gasp!, silence.

For "CBS Sunday Morning," such departures from standard television fare have earned a loyal audience in an unlikely time period, as early as 6 a.m. in some areas.

Last month, the program began its 10th year on the air. It celebrated — quietly, of course — with a brief retrospective of special moments from a decade of shows.

Charles Kuralt stayed late after a recent show to do the voiceover for the retrospective. While the tape ran, he sat, fingers to chin, genuinely engrossed.

Only a little earlier, media critic Ron Powers, one of the regulars on "Sunday Morning," had come out of the studio and remarked, without regret, "I'm starting to sound more like Kuralt as time goes on."

Powers noted that Robert Northshield, the show's original executive producer, was the one who believed news could be presented "lovingly and with a sense of scope about how the world is."

But if Northshield created the show, Kuralt became the show.

"He's such a presence, and he's so legitimate," said Powers. "There's not one Charles Kuralt who appears on the air and another Charles Kuralt who walks around the halls. They're the same person."

Because of budget cuts last year that decimated the number of producers and reporters available to "Sunday Morning," Kuralt now has to come back to New York each week from doing his "On the Road" segments and narrate many "Sunday Morning" pieces that would have been narrated by other correspondents in the past.

"It takes away some of the romance from 'On the Road' to have to always get back here," said Kuralt, "but now, this program has become so important to me, I'm eager to."

The first show aired Jan. 28, 1979.

"What I remember is the high points," Kuralt said. "That trip to Moscow with (Vladimir) Horowitz. I mean it was the hardest work any of us ever did, and it just lifted our spirits so when it was finished successfully. And the big broadcasts, we did one on Henry Moore the sculptor, and recently we did one on the Wyeths to a fare-thee-well. There is a real high that comes from doing those things. Maybe I'm wrong, but I don't think there's any other place where those things regularly get on the air."

"The classic things about 'Sunday Morning' would be very hard, I think, for anyone else to do," said Powers. "The use of silence, the way the correspondent sort of disappears into the story ... the assumption that if we do present a piece on an esoteric artist, his or her power will shine through enough to make it palatable for the audience."

The people at "Sunday Morning" say they are curious about NBC's new "Sunday Today," but unconcerned. Kuralt says he hasn't been able to see it since it premiered.

"Sunday Morning" executive producer Linda Mason says "Sunday Today" apparently brought its own audience and has not noticeably lured away "Sunday Morning" viewers.

"Sunday Morning" has become so distinctive, Mason said, she wants to keep it from becoming a self-parody.

"Keeping it fresh and finding new ways to do things or new subjects to tackle is a challenge, without interfering with the style and the nature, the things that people have come to expect and really like," she said.

A large volume of mostly affectionate mail prompted a new segment on the show devoted to letters.

"People really feel it's their program," said Kuralt. "And they go to great lengths to tell me what pain and suffering they go through to get up. On the West Coast some stations carry it live at 6 o'clock. ... These people say, 'You don't know what we go through at our house for you.'"

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY Feb. 6

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): You should use much caution today, since strange happenings could occur at a moment's notice. Handle your financial affairs tonight.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Postpone recreational activities until you can get your personal affairs in better order. Make sure you dress very nicely this evening.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Do what you can to relieve the tensions at home by spending more time with your family. This is not a good day to entertain guests.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Steer clear of anyone who is in a bad mood, or it could rub off on you. You'll need to follow a well-planned schedule today.
LEO (July 22 to August 21): This is not a good time to discuss money and property matters with anyone. If you need to make some home repairs, do them yourself.
VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): You could get into a lot of trouble today if you get impatient and lose your temper, so stay cool. Don't be critical of your friends.
LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Your plan for a night on the town with your mate may have to be postponed. If so, stay home and have a great time together anyway.
SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): A friend who is in trouble should be helped without a second thought; this person is most deserving. Drive very carefully today.
SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): If there are some obstacles in the path of your progress, remove them rather than trying to leap them. Don't neglect your bills.
CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Don't rely on others to help your progress. Pull yourself up by your bootstraps and forge ahead. Postpone a trip you have in mind.
AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): This is a good day to study your financial status and correct any errors you may have made. Don't get upset over a little setback.
PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Let a business partner know that you will carry through with any promises you have made, and maintain harmony with this person.

If the average player has a major fault, it is that he is all too ready to concede defeat. Don't lower the flag until you have exhausted all chances to make your contract.
 Six spades was a good contract. It would be cold if the queen of trumps dropped either doubleton or singleton and, as South proved, there were other chances, albeit slim, even if her majesty did not appear.
 West led a diamond, and declarer soon knew he had a steep hill to climb. He won in hand and cashed the ace-king of spades to learn that he had a trump loser. Many a player would now have thrown in the towel. But was there a way to avoid losing a club trick?
 Declarer worked out that he could still bring home his contract if East held specifically a doubleton club and a suitable holding in the red suits. After cashing his three heart winners and the ace-king of clubs, declarer cashed the ace of diamonds and ruffed a diamond in his hand to complete the groundwork for an endplay. He then exited with a trump.

 The lie of cards was the answer to a bridge player's prayers. In with the queen of spades, East was forced to lead a red card. Declarer could ruff in either hand while discarding his club loser from the other, so he lost only a trump trick.
 True, declarer was most fortunate to find a distribution that enabled him to make his slam. But credit him with the technique to make good fortune pay off.

Tobacco Industry Documents Released At Trial

By JOHN RILEY

L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

NEWARK, N.J. — A web of internal tobacco industry documents revealed at a trial Thursday suggests that industry researchers concluded 26 years ago that cigarettes contained cancer-causing agents, and one company developed a less carcinogenic cigarette by 1979 but never marketed it.

Liggett Group Inc., according to one document, spent $14 million to develop a palladium and magnesium nitrate additive that "neutralizes" cigarette tars and reduced the incidence of tumor on mouse skin "by as much as 95 percent" when tested.

The two elements destroy cancer agents by changing the way the cigarette burns, according to Liggett documents about its research.

"There was no legitimate scientific reason not to market this cigarette," said Dr. Jeffrey Harris, an expert testifying for the widower of lung-cancer victim Rose Cipollone.

The widower, Antonio Cipollone, is seeking damages from Liggett and two other cigarette makers — Philip Morris Inc. and P. Lorillard Co. — for causing his wife's death in 1984 at age 59. She was a lifelong smoker of the three companies' products, including Liggett's Chesterfield and L&M brands.

Marc Z. Edell, Cipollone's lawyer, contends that Liggett didn't market its palladium cigarette because it might have exposed the company to liability for marketing other brands. Liggett spokesmen have contended that it was held back because it did not taste good and because later testing raised questions about its health attributes.

On the fourth day of the trial Thursday, Edell and Harris, a doctor and economist who teaches at Harvard University Medical School and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, presented more than a dozen previously undisclosed industry documents.

—A 1961 memorandum from Arthur D. Little Inc. — a Cambridge, Mass., consulting firm that began doing cancer experiments for Liggett in 1954 — stated: "There are biologically active materials present in cigarette tobacco. These are: a) cancer causing; b) cancer promoting; c) poisonous ..."

The memo, titled "L&M — A Perspective Review" and labeled "confidential," appeared to contradict long-standing claims from Liggett and other companies that evidence linking smoking to cancer is inconclusive. Liggett spokesmen said yesterday that the documents came from Little's files and not Liggett's, and have never been read by anyone from Liggett. The memo was unsigned.

—In a 21-page, 1961 memorandum,

Philip Morris research director Helmut Wakeham noted that developing a "medically acceptable cigarette" would require "reduction of the general level of carcinogenic substances in smoke" and cost $10 million.

Wakeham cited 15 compounds in smoke "identified as carcinogens" and said, "Carcinogens are found in practically every class of compound in smoke" — a fact that "prohibits complete solution of the problem."

Philip Morris spokesmen Thursday pointed out that Wakeham was referring to compounds that cause cancer on the skin of mice. The company says experiments with mice don't prove a substance causes cancer to humans.

—Harris testified that, despite the industry's public position, the documents reveal that industry scientists have for years relied internally on animal tests. Wakeham, in defining "carcinogen," stated, "It is assumed that a carcinogen so demonstrated in test animals is dangerous to man."

—In his testimony, Harris quoted frequently from a deposition by Dr. James D. Mold, a former assistant research director at Liggett who spearheaded development of the palladium cigarette. Mold's testimony will be presented next week.

Harris said Mold testified that he concluded by the early 1960s that smoking caused cancer.

Reagan To Sign Housing Measure

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is signing the first major housing legislation of his administration, a measure that urban leaders welcome but say won't come close to solving a housing crisis in the nation's cities.

"This is legislation that really was the best that could be worked out given the budgetary limitations imposed upon it," said Joseph P. Riley, mayor of Charleston, S.C., and immediate past president of the United States Conference of Mayors.

"We are pleased that it was passed and that it will be signed," he said in a telephone interview Thursday from Austin, Tex., where he is attending a housing forum called by the mayors' group. But he added that "there is a tremendous unmet need out there."

Other urban officials blame that need on what they call seven years of federal neglect under Reagan. The president of the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials this week called the administration's record on housing "shameful."

Association president Helen Sause said more than 7.5 million American families live in sub-standard housing and "hundreds of thousands" of needy Americans have no homes at all.

Reagan planned to sign the bill today in a White House ceremony attended by its legislative sponsors.

The $30.6 billion measure is the first substantial housing legislation since 1980. It provides $15 billion for housing and community development in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 and $15.6 billion in the succeeding fiscal year. It also contains permanent insuring authority for the Federal Housing Administration's home-mortgage insurance program, a provision long sought by the housing and financial industries.

It provides $7 billion annually for low-income housing assistance, $1.5 billion for public-housing operating subsidies, $2 billion for rural housing, $3 billion for community development grants and $225 million for urban development grants.

But in order to gain administration approval of the bill, sponsors had to scale back funding for housing poor people displaced by federally funded development projects and for a controversial home-ownership program for moderate-income families.

When the bill was passed in December, shortly before Congress adjourned, Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Samuel R. Pierce Jr. said, "I am grateful that Congress adopted a housing bill which holds the lines against deficit spending, preserves the progress made since 1981 to extend housing assistance to the truly needy and guarantees young families that F.H.A. Home Mortgage Insurance will always be available."

Riley, asked whether the bill dealt adequately with the housing needs of low- and moderate-income Americans, said, "It doesn't. The bill, in fairness, is one that is drafted within the current budgetary limits. The needs are far greater than what the bill seeks to address."

Riley said the meeting of mayors was told that 17.8 million Americans are spending more than half of their income for housing.

"These are the people who are at the risk of becoming homeless because low-income (housing) stocks are not growing," he said.

Automakers Claim Administration Urging Suit Against Japanese Firms

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. automakers say the Reagan administration is encouraging them to prepare a trade complaint accusing Japanese companies of illegally "dumping" vehicles by letting prices lag behind the soaring yen.

Such a complaint could be one of the largest petitions for trade relief ever filed by a U.S. industry. Auto company executives have been encouraged by Commerce Secretary C. William Verity and other top Reagan administration officials, industry officials said.

Verity has publicly told Japan that it faces possible dumping charges if it continues to hold down import prices despite the steeply rising yen.

But Edwin Dale Jr., a top Verity aide, denied that Verity had solicited U.S. companies to file such actions. Despite Verity's earlier comments, "there has been no follow-up in terms of producing cases," Dale said.

A senior Commerce Department official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said that while the agency is not soliciting dumping cases based on the higher-valued yen, it is keeping in touch with industry on possible candidates for such cases.

"There are some that may qualify for dumping," the official said.

Although domestic car manufacturers have yet to decide on specifics, the challenge is likely to focus on sales of small vans, pickup trucks and utility vehicles, according to industry officials.

The case could open the way to other major "dumping" cases based on exchange-rate variations rather than on more traditional grounds.

Dumping is the sale of products in the United States either at prices below those charged in a manufacturer's home country or below the manufacturer's cost of production.

Dumping is illegal under U.S. trade laws and can result in additional duties on the products equal to the margin by which they are deemed to be underpriced. Both the Commerce Department and the U.S. International Trade Commission must act on such petitions.

In addition to demonstrating that the Japanese companies are deliberately keeping prices artificially low, the U.S. industry would also have to show that the practice is hurting it.

The yen has risen roughly 80 percent against the dollar since 1985, but prices of Japanese goods have not risen accordingly. Japanese manufacturers have often taken smaller profits in an effort to cling to their share of lucrative U.S. markets.

Data released earlier this week showed that imports in January made up 30.1 percent of the U.S. car market, down from 31.3 percent in January 1987.

Ford Recalls Cars, Vans

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. said it is voluntarily recalling more than 1 million vehicles to replace engine cooling system hoses that could cause engine damage if their breakage goes unnoticed.

The company said the inlet hoses and engine bypass hoses may not be able to withstand high engine temperatures and could slip, causing the car to quickly lose engine coolant. Affected vehicles are equipped with either 3.0- or 3.8-liter engines from the 1985-87 model years.

Included in this service program are 733,000 1985-86 Ford Thunderbird, Mustang and LTD models, and Mercury Cougar, Capri and Marquis passenger cars. Also included are 327,000 1986-87 Ford Taurus and Mercury Sable passenger cars and 96,000 1986-87 Ford Aerostar minivans equipped with front air conditioners.

No accidents or injuries have been linked to the condition, Ford spokesman Chuck Smeally said. The company also said in a written release it also was recalling 66,000 1987-88 Ford F-350 vehicles equipped with dual rear wheels to correct a condition that may cause a front-end shimmy.
