Cotton Scores Comeback, But With A Price

CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Cotton may become a king again among cash crops in the eastern North Carolina, several agricultural officials said in recent interviews. But its comeback will not be without a price.

Cotton slowly dissipated from most farms in eastern North Carolina about 15 to 20 years ago as the boll weevil, a weevil that infests cotton plants and feeds on the squares and bolls, became increasingly expensive to control, Billy McLawhorn, owner of McLawhorn Crop Services Inc. of Grifton, said.

The boll weevil "is one of the biggest reasons it went out in the first place," he said. "But, we're using only a fraction of the insecticides that are having to be used in most of the cotton mills." States where most of the nation's cotton is produced, such as Mississippi, Louisiana and California, may make 10 to 12 chemical applications to control insects, McLawhorn said, while "we're making two or three" because of more favorable climate and soil conditions.

Another reason cotton production declined is "a result of supply exceeding demand," Mitch Smith of the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service said. "Resurgence and interest in producing cotton has increased because the return on an acre of cotton is equal to or exceeds feed grains we produce," such as corn and soybeans.

"The price is better because of a number of things going on in the world market," McLawhorn said. "Almost 50 percent of the U.S. apparel market" uses cotton "and that's continuing to climb," he said. "The apparel industry is getting a handle on how to handle the fabric."

And with emerging economic benefits and less threat from the boll weevil, cotton has been creeping back onto the farms.

"We've been heavy in cotton production since 1979-80," Michael Williams, a Chowan County Agricultural Extension agent, said. "Cotton is the cash crop in Chowan County."

Cotton production in Chowan County accompanied the eradication of the boll weevil, Williams said. As the boll weevil became less of a nuisance and as corn prices dropped, cotton became an economical alternative for a rotation crop.

Now producing about 5,000 acres of cotton, farmers in the county formed the Albemarle Cotton Growers Cooperative in November 1980 to buy a cotton gin, which separates the seeds, hulls and foreign matter from the cotton.

In addition to the gin, a harvester also is needed to pick the cotton, and the cost of the equipment may be a discouraging factor in the comeback of the crop, officials said.

A harvester will cost from $75,000 to $85,000 and can handle 200 to 300 acres, while a gin may cost $500,000 or more, Danny Shaw, an agricultural extension agent in Onslow County, said.

Like most areas, Onslow County has not had any significant cotton production in about 20 years, Shaw said, so the equipment needed is not on the farms, but farmers in Onslow as well as Jones and Lenoir counties are considering restoring the crop.

"We're just in the exploration stages as far of the agriculture end of it in this county," he said. There have been meetings on cotton with farmers and specialists from North Carolina State Univeristy and the state Cotton Cooperative, but "the outlook is not too good," he said. "We've got to have a gin, and the question is whether we get the gin first or the cotton growers first."

"A couple growers in Jones County are going to put in a few hundred acres of cotton" without the gin and transport it to a gin in Bethel, Shaw said.

ECU Economists Think Economy Will Hold Up

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

Despite the government's index of leading economic indicators falling for the third consecutive month, two local economists agree that a recession is not necessarily imminent.

According to statistics released by the U.S. Commerce Department on Tuesday, the index had dropped 0.2 percent in December, following declines of 0.1 percent and 1.2 percent in October and November, respectively.

"It is clear that the three negatives in a row is a bad sign," said Professor Louis Zincone, director of the bureau of business research at East Carolina University.

"There always has to be a certain amount of random fluctuation in these numbers and I guess, over time, it has been shown that you can be pretty sure the economy has really turned down if it goes down three successive months," he said.

However, Zincone said the drop in the index was not alarmingly significant.

"Two-tenths of one percent and one-tenth of one percent are pretty small, if you ask me," he said.

Zincone said there are some positive things happening now in the economy, such as the reduced value of the dollar.

"A lower dollar causes our prices abroad to be lower, we can sell more and the prices of imports will be higher," he said.

Zincone said another reason for economic optimism is the fact that 1988 is an election year.

"It has been alleged by many shrewd observers that the Fed does everything it can to keep the economy from being an issue in an election year," he said.

Of the nine indicators of December's economic index, five were down, including the number of building permits issued, a drop in materials prices, an increase in unemployment insurance claims, lower stock prices, and a shorter workweek.

Bullish indicators for the index include orders for

By FRANCEINE PERRY
ECU News Bureau

"Television is here, and kids watch up to 27 hours a week. So let's exploit it, let's use it to advantage," a "Sesame Street" executive told a group of parents and teachers at an East Carolina University conference.

Dr. Valeria Olliver Lovelace, director of research for the popular Children's Television Workshop program, was featured speaker at ECU's annual Mary Lois Staton Reading-Language Arts Conference Thursday and Friday. Conference theme was "Communicating in a Technological Society."

Children will inevitably learn a great deal from television, and much of what they watch does not meet the parents' standards, Dr. Lovelace acknowledged. But even programs that send "bad" messages (excessive violence, ethnic stereotyping, etc.) can be useful, she said.

"Talk back to the TV. Let your child hear you say right out what you don't like about what's on the screen. Comment on what you see, and encourage your child to respond," she said. "The child will pick up your values and feelings."

A 1973 ECU graduate with a doctorate from the University of Michigan, Dr. Lovelace has worked with "Sesame Street" since 1982. She and her team of psychologists visit preschool and daycare facilities in the greater New York area and test "Sesame Street" segments on groups of 3-,4- and 5-year old children.

Children are observed as they view videotapes of test segments. "We watch them watch, timing their 'eyes on screen' time, noticing whether they are laughing or not laughing, and then graph their behavior," she explained.

"We also use role play, games and other methods to discover whether the children actually learned the material we wanted the segment to present." A live-action or animated segment that fails to teach is discarded or modified by the show's producers. A typical hour of "Sesame Street" includes some three dozen individual segments.

"We have strong educational goals — teaching numbers, letters, concepts — and we also want to convey positive social messages," Dr. Lovelace stressed. The show's human characters represent a cross-section of society. Children see other children interacting in a positive fashion with the friendly

Dole, Gephardt Hold Edge In Iowa Voting

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The pack of presidential contenders stormed through a final weekend of campaigning Saturday for Iowa's precinct caucuses, and a fresh poll gave Sen. Robert Dole a double-digit lead in the GOP race and Rep. Dick Gephardt a smaller edge among the Democrats.

The survey, prepared for publication in the Sunday edition of the Des Moines Register, gave Dole a 37 percent to 23 percent edge over Vice President George Bush, with the rest of the GOP rivals further afield.

Gephardt drew the support of 25 percent of likely Democratic caucus goers, compared with 19 percent for Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois and 15 percent for Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis. The rest of the field trailed in the poll, which suggested that the late trend was in Gephardt's favor.

The newspaper disclosed the results as candidates traveled the state in a race so crowded that they kept bumping into each other in airports and hotel lobbies.

"We ought to fly around together and save money," Gephardt quipped as he and Dukakis crossed paths at the airport.

Dole declared that his bitter clash earlier in the week with Bush was a thing of the past. But then he jabbed the vice president, saying, "I don't have rich and powerful parents to go back to."

He said he had been the victim of "unprincipled attacks," and added, "I'm going to preserve my integrity, nobody's going to tear it down. You work hard all your life to acquire it." Asked if he were referring to Bush, he said, "I just made a statement."

The vice president began the day in South Dakota — bumping into Dukakis in a hotel lobby — before flying to nearby Iowa for a final blitz aboard Air Force Two. "We're fighting from behind," he said, and the polls agreed.

Behind Dole and Bush, it said former Rev. Pat Robertson had 13 percent support; Rep. Jack Kemp 11 percent, former Delaware Gov. Pete

Reagan Will Reject 'Surrender'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Saturday he will work with Congress on an aid package for the Nicaraguan rebels but will not agree to any plan that is "little more than a disguise for surrender and abandonment."

Reagan's proposal for $36.2 million in military and other aid was rejected by the House last Wednesday, although approved by the Senate the next day in a vote that had no practical effect but was welcomed by the administration for its symbolic value.

Democrats in Congress are now working on an alternative plan expected to be limited to humanitarian aid.

"I await the details," Reagan said in his weekly radio address, delivered from Camp David, Md. "I will work with the members of both parties to see to it that the fact that we disagree does not mean that America cannot act."

"What I will not accept, however, is an assistance package that is little more than a disguise for surrender and abandonment."

"Both sides claim their goal to be peace and democracy in Central America," the president said. "The argument is over how to achieve it."

Noting recent reforms announced by the Marxist-led Sandinista government of Nicaragua, the president said, "The Sandinistas made commitments to democracy and pluralism as long ago as 1979. They were not kept."

Reagan also used his radio address to warn of the dangers of drugs, especially drugs in the work place, a subject on which he is to speak at a forum at Duke University in Durham, N.C., on Monday.

"The time to act has long since passed," he said.

Mecham Confident Of Senate Victory

WILLCOX, Ariz. (AP) — Impeached Gov. Evan Mecham said Saturday that his lawyer would tear his accusers "to bits" during his trial in the state Senate and that he still was not sure who was entitled to act as governor for now.

The 63-year-old Republican, who was impeached by an overwhelming House vote Friday, told a friendly Town Hall audience he believed House members wanted to impeach him because they thought he would win his May 17 recall election.

The embattled governor said House members also "know darn well that the (criminal) court isn't going to convict me on the trumped-up charges" of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan. The governor is scheduled to go on trial this spring on six felony charges including fraud, perjury and filing false documents.

Mecham was the target of a recall election drive even before he took office on Jan. 5, 1987, and at various times he has angered blacks, homosexuals and women. Most recently, he was criticized for saying that when he told some Japanese golf enthusiasts that Arizona has hundreds of golf courses, "suddenly they got round eyes."

In Willcox, he told the crowd he described the incident later to some Japanese friends and they found

Howard To Receive Hearing On Feb. 17

A hearing on the federal judgeship nomination of Greenville attorney Malcolm Howard has been scheduled in Washington, D.C., Feb. 17 at 9:30 a.m.

The hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee will be headed by Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., and Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio.

Howard said Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C., called him Friday afternoon to advise him that the committee had scheduled the hearing.

Howard was nominated for the judgeship by President Reagan on Sept. 10. With Judiciary Committee approval, the nomination will go to the Senate for a full vote.

Howard is pressing to have his chambers established in Greenville in the federal building, if his nomination is approved. The federal courthouse is located in New Bern.

Economists Think Economy OK

consumer goods, slower deliveries, plant and equipment orders, and an increase in the money supply.

As for the economic outlook for the remainder of the year, Zincome said he believes the percentage growth will decrease, with growth becoming fairly flat, especially in the later part of the year.

"I would say the probability of a slowdown in the second half of the year is 75 percent," he said.

"Whether we will have two quarters of zero or negative GNP growth, I would say it's premature (to tell). Now if this (December's index) happens to be revised downward, suppose they revise it and they say it wasn't two-tenths, it was five-tenths or seven-tenths or something like that, then that would be bad."

Dr. Carson Bays, professor and chairman of the ECU economics department, said the recently released index figures seem to indicate the economy is slowing down but that it's not stopping or going in reverse.

Bays said that, since the index was created, it has fallen for three consecutive months 12 times. In eight of those times, a recession followed while a mere slowdown in economic growth occurred four times.

"I think what we see here is the latter case reflected," Bays said.

"Inflation is in good shape, interest rates have dropped a little bit, and consumer confidence seems to be higher than what was initially anticipated after the stock market crash in October," Bays said.

"Consumers aren't simply going to stop spending as many feared," he added.

Cotton Comes Back At High Price

But, it may not be economically feasible to transport cotton, a bulky product, more than 40 miles, Smith said.

Echoing those comments, Minton C. Small, an agricultural extension agent in Jones County, said the nearest gin would be in Newton Grove, Bethel or Edgecombe County. Traveling more than an hour to those gins would require investments in "more of these big, wiretype trailers or extra trailers." And if there is not a harvester in the county, one would have to be bought, or the farmer would have to custom pick the cotton.

Another problem has to do with government programs, McLawhorn said. If a farmer receives government funds for planting feed grain and decides to plant cotton, "he will be out of compliance and will not be able to participate in the feed grain program," he said.

On the flip side, if a farmer plants 100 acres in 1987, he would establish a cotton base for 50 acres in 1988, McLawhorn said. "That would give a fellow some price stability" in the second year of production, and "the price is high enough now and I think most farmers could make money."

For example, Clifton Dixon, a farmer in Grimesland said he planted 420 acres and produced about 500 pounds of cotton per acre in 1987 and was "knocked out of all federal programs for corn and wheat." He leases his harvester and transports the cotton to gins in Edgecombe or Halifax counties. But, he will have 210 acres of cotton allotment from the government this year on that farm.

The actual production of cotton also has its pluses and minuses, Small said. "Basically, what you're looking at is more fruits over a longer period of time. Corn pollinates in a week (while) cotton (pollinates) over a four to five-week period."

If draught or some other averse weather occurs during the week corn is pollinating, there is a great potential for corn loss. But, if there is draught during the first week of cotton pollination, there are about three more weeks to remedy or eliminate some of the problem. Cotton is "more draught tolerate," Small said. "You've got more than one chance."

Another consideration is soil quality, Small said. "Average corn land could be good cotton land, depending on weather," he said. Jones County has sandy land and will produce good tobacco in a decent year, but has problems with corn and soybeans because the soil does not retain enough moisture.

Dixon said his first year of producing cotton was successful, but it also was a learning experience. "We didn't spray it like we should. If we had had the experience or taken better care of it we would have made 700 to 800 pounds" as opposed to 500, he said.

"It's a good crop, (but) you need expert advise as far as scouting" for insects, Dixon said. "It's really a scientific thing as far as spraying early enough and not too early to waste money."

Cotton "is a crop of commitment," Smith said. "It requires a high level of management" as it is monitored for insects and boll worms. Then "spraying has to be done immediately," and there needs to be weed control.

Dixon said, "you really need to be careful of like things like that, (but) I believe it's really worth it."

TV Can Be Useful

neighbors of "Sesame Street," among them an elderly Jewish storekeeper, a deaf librarian, a young Hispanic couple. They see black professionals, working mothers and people in wheelchairs.

The Muppet "monster" characters were developed also with specific goals in mind, she noted. Best known is Big Bird, the perpetual 6 year old. Other favorites are Elmo, the tiny new Muppet, Grover with his alter-ego Super-Grover, and even Oscar, the disagreeable and unpleasant Muppet who lives in a garbage can. "He legitimizes the negative feelings that all small children experience," Dr. Lovelace said. "He is different, not very likable, but still accepted on 'Sesame Street.'"

Dramatic skits are used to explain difficult concepts, such as adoption. The researchers discovered that children acquired only a vague notion of what adoption actually is when Baby Miles originally joined his new family. The concept had to be presented again in a very basic fashion for children to understand it. The issue of romantic love — another difficult matter to explain to the very young — will be tackled this year as Luis and Maria engage in courtship and finally marry in the spring.

"Sesame Street" was conceived when its originator noticed how quickly children could recite jingles for toothpaste, soft drinks, dishwashing liquid and other products advertised on television, Dr. Lovelace said. "She believed the techniques used for TV commercials could be used to teach children about letters and numbers."

Now nearly 20 years later, the program is regularly watched by some 14 million people in 70 countries, she said. While the show has been modified and expanded over the years, its fundamental purpose remains the same — to help children make the transition from home to school.

Dr. Lovelace offers some ideas for parents who'd like to enhance the benefits of "Sesame Street":

•Watch the program with your child when possible. Studies show that children who watch with their parents show greater enjoyment and learn more of the educational content.

•Ask your child questions about what he's seeing, during and after the program. When children can give correct answers, the learning process is enhanced.

•Read with your child, and encourage discussion of the story. For a familiar favorite, ask the child to anticipate: "What comes next? Then what happens?" Repetition is important.

•Encourage the child to "write" letters and stories. Give him a variety of writing tools (crayons, pencils, magnetic letters) and help your child to feel the pride of being an author.

•In the course of daily activity, point out letter sounds, letter names and consonant blends. Accustom your child to be aware of how words sound.

Above all, relax and let little ones enjoy the program as often as possible, Dr. Lovelace advises. "Your child knows how to get to 'Sesame Street' — and has a running start on kindergarten," she said.

Smith

Serving his first year as principal at Aycock, Smith identified his job as improving the atmosphere at the school. "The most important thing for me to do was to set an atmosphere for students to be able to learn and for teachers to be able to teach," he said.

In doing that, Smith said he had to "seek full cooperation of the staff and work with students to get them to believe what you're trying to do is in their best interest."

Smith will compete with other principals for top honors at the district and state level. The local honor is sponsored by Wachovia Bank and Trust Co.

A native of Greenville, Smith is a graduate of C.M. Eppes High School. He received his bachelor's degree in mathematics from Livingstone College in Salisbury where he was president of the Beta Kappa Chi Honorary Society and lettered in football and basketball.

He received a master's degree in mathematics from Hampton University in Hampton, Va., and his principal certification at East Carolina University.

Smith has taught in several schools, including Pikesville Training School in Wayne County, Eppes and Aycock. He served as assistant principal at Aycock for four years, principal of Elmhurst Elementary for two years and principal of South Greenville School for seven years before assuming his current position at Aycock.

President of the Pitt County Principal's and Assistant Principal's Association, Smith also serves as a stewart and is a member of York Memorial AME Zion Church and is a member of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity.

He is married to the former Charlotte Jenkins of Newport News, Va. They have two children.

Franco's Widow Dies

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Carmen Polo de Franco, widow of dictator Francisco Franco, a prominent force in the cultural repression during his 36-year regime and a figurehead for his remaining followers, died Saturday. She was 87.

Dr. Vicente Pozuelo Escudero said Mrs. Franco died at her home from bronchial pneumonia contracted Feb. 1.

Mrs. Franco was to be buried Sunday in El Pardo, a village outside Madrid where she and her husband lived with their daughter, Carmen, from 1939 to 1975 as Spain's first family.

Queen Sofia went to the home of Mrs. Franco's daughter, Carmen Franco de Martinez Bordiu, Saturday morning to present her condolences and those of her husband, King Juan Carlos, whom Franco designated his successor in 1969.

Juan Carlos became king of Spain two days after Franco died on Nov. 20, 1975 and soon began dismantling Franco's authoritarian state.

Franco is buried in an underground crypt in the Valley of the Fallen outside Madrid, a huge cemetery holding the remains of thousands of Nationalist soldiers who followed his rebellion against the Second Republic that led to the 1936-39 Civil War.

Catholic School To Remain Open

At this time last school year, St. Gabriel's Catholic School was not sure it would be open to celebrate another Catholic School Week which begins Sunday and will run through Saturday. But due to a few grants and interested parents, the school — kindergarten through grade 6 — will be in operation at least through the spring of 1989, according to Sister Kathleen Groves, school principal.

Founded 32 years ago by the Rev. Maurice Tew, the school has encountered several problems in the last 10 years, including a decline in financial support, resulting in a substantial drop in enrollment and staff changes.

The Rev. Xavier Hayes, pastor at St. Gabriel's Church, explained that when the Sisters of Charity announced in December 1986 that they could no longer continue to serve the school, it left St. Gabriel's without a teaching staff.

Hayes said, "I think when the sisters decided to leave, it left an uncertainty with the parents whether the school would continue."

Although enrollment has dropped substantially, from 126 students in 1985 to 72 students in 1987, Sister Kathleen said she feels confident that within two years the school can again establish a continuing source of operating income.

She said, "We have accomplished much in six months and we know our doors will be open again for September 1988."

The school has been preparing to celebrate Catholic School Week. A poster contest was held Friday and a special liturgy and mass are planned Monday at 11 a.m.

"The children are going to make thank you cards this week and send them to people who have been helpful to the school," Sister Kathleen said.

She said there will be an open house for parents Thursday at 11 a.m. and the parents have also been invited to stay for lunch at noon.

St. Peter's Catholic School also has activities planned to celebrate Catholic School week "from an academic as well as religious point of view," said Principal Robert LaFave.

"The theme of the week is 'Catholic Schools Share the Spirit,'" said LaFave.

According to LaFave, a special service will be held Monday at 8:15 a.m. in honor of the occasion and a lunch for parents is planned for Tuesday.

An Ecumenicial service will be held Friday at 8:30 a.m. Pastors of the churches from which students are members will assist in conducting the service. Also, an honors program in journalism and English for seventh graders will be innaugurated Friday, said LaFave.

Other programs beginning this week include a computer club, Spanish and French classes and science lab classes for grades three, four and five.

Local Firm Buys Hotel In Raleigh

RALEIGH — PS Investment Co. Inc. of Greenville recently bought the 314-room Raleigh Inn on U.S. 70 west of Raleigh, according to reports published Saturday.

The inn, which has suffered financially, has been renamed the Raleigh Hotel and Convention Center and will undergo renovations expected to be completed in the fall.

PS Investment paid major creditors, including Raleigh Federal Savings Bank and Borg-Warner Acceptance Corp. in Chicago, to buy the hotel. Both creditors had liens on the property.

Borg-Warner foreclosed late last year on the hotel's previous owners, Raleigh Inn Inc., which had filed bankruptcy. According to documents filed in Wake County Courthouse, PS Investment paid Borg-Warner $960,000 for the hotel.

Raleigh Federal also had foreclosed on the property but withdrew its plans after being paid more than $3 million by PS Investment. The thrift had loaned the money in the 1970s to the inn's original owners.

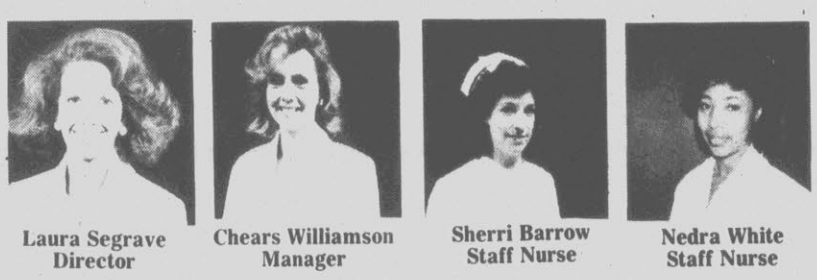
GREENVILLE STAFF



Laura Segrave, Director — Chears Williamson, Manager — Sherri Barrow, Staff Nurse — Nedra White, Staff Nurse

MEDICAL WEIGHT LOSS SYSTEMS' CENTER

Medical Weight Loss Systems in Greenville is proud to announce its first anniversary in this area. Hours of operation for the center are 9 a.m. 'til 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The Greenville office is directed by Laura Segrave. The staff of the Medical Weight Loss Systems' Center can help you become a healthier and more exuberant person. With expert guidance from their medical team, a dieting plan can be designed which will enable you to lose those unwanted pounds. By following simple, sensible procedures, you can obtain your desired weight and improve your total physical well-being.

Although Medical Weight Loss Systems' center is relatively new to Greenville, the professionals at the center have years of experience in the medical field and are particularly knowledgeable in weight loss programs. Director Laura Segrave and her associates have a thorough understanding of the problems associated with being overweight and the failure of fad diets.

Bad eating habits can have serious repercussions such as high blood pressure, heart disease, liver, gall bladder ailments and arteriosclerosis. High levels of triglyceride and cholesterol in the blood are contributing factors to health maladies. The center will provide a free cholesterol screening test to anyone who visits the center (first visits only) so you can find out if your levels are within the normal range. Also, free blood pressure checks will be available at any time.

The professionally supervised weight center utilizes a natural program that includes vitamins, minerals and the other important nutritional elements. A low fat, low salt diet is prescribed which helps reduce high blood pressure while at the same time helping you to lose 3-7 pounds per week. Throughout the weight-loss process, a physician monitors your progress.

The professionals at the center are so concerned about your good health that additional personal counseling and behavior modifications are provided as regular features of the program. Overeating is a serious habit that can only be corrected with constant support and encouragement. The Medical Weight Loss Systems' center helps you to change your attitudes toward certain foods and recognize the need for new and healthier eating habits. Feelings of fitness and vitality will be the rewards of becoming a program member.

Can you afford to continue to postpone taking serious action to improve your health and happiness?

BEHAVIOR MANAGEMENT

Are you caught in the "Overweight Syndrome?" According to Henry Jordan, MD, Director of the Institute for Behavioral Education in King of Prussia, Pennsylvania; "ninety percent of weight loss programs fail because they don't tackle behavior." Research has shown that weight loss programs that involve behavioral techniques come out with the highest success rates.

Medical Weight Loss Systems wellness program combines the fast weight reduction plan with behavior modification, thus working toward the goal of permanent weight loss.

Overweight individuals who are facing their situation realistically are looking for structure. Medical Weight Loss Systems not only offers a plan with structure but also a wellness component that provides structure through behavior modification. With an encouraged commitment to change and supervised support, the person who loses weight with this method of changing behavior and restructuring his lifestyle will regain control.

A WORD ABOUT HEALTH

Being overweight is not healthy. Medical tests have proven that being 20 lbs. or more overweight makes you more prone to have serious health problems.

Losing unwanted fat and inches not only makes you look better, but it also makes you feel better about yourself.

The Medical Weight Loss Systems' total plan of well-balanced nutritional dieting, medical evaluation and counseling is the key to wellness.

The staff at Medical Weight Loss Systems is so sure of their dieting plans, that they will guarantee weight loss in writing. Hundreds of people not only shed pounds, but also nagging medical problems from following the plan.

A myth

Look closely at the personalities featured in commercials. They are young, vibrant, beautiful, slim and sexy. They exude the happiness for which we yearn. Their message: "If you want to be happy like I am, do as I do. Eat, drink, use or buy my product." Obedient souls that we are, we rush out to the store and gorge ourselves on the goodies promoted on T.V. in the hope of attaining instant happiness. The results are staggering: 50 percent of the American population has a weight problem. One out of two people.

I'm sure that, in the other 50 percent of the population, not everyone eats as he should. Over the years, we end up paying for our poor dietary habits. The majority of Americans, between 75 and 80 percent, suffer from illnesses caused by improper nutrition. Have the people attained the happiness promised in advertisements?

True happiness

Through advertising, society has created the myth that we can buy happiness. According to this myth, happiness comes from outside the individual. In reality, however, things are quiet different: true happiness can come only from within.

As an individual, you are part of both the problem and the solution.

Red Tide Has Altered Scientists' Roles

Last In A Series

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

BEAUFORT, N.C. (AP) — State Division of Marine Fisheries personnel are policing every load of oysters which are being transferred from contaminated beds to areas where the mollusks can cleanse themselves — a new role that has begun since the red tide hit three months ago.

The program puts up to $500 a week in the pockets of fishermen who have been barred from taking clams and oysters from most offshore waters. But it also requires policing by state personnel, said Bill Hogarth, division director.

"I think the relaying is the most positive of all the programs," Hogarth said. "But it's extremely time consuming. We've dropped everything else. We're not doing any of our finfish work. We're not doing any of our artificial reef work."

Instead, division officials watch every load of oysters to ensure they don't turn up on the market, where they could pose a public health hazard, Hogarth said.

"They're very resourceful when it comes to stealing," he said, noting that some would-be thieves had tried underwater forays, putting Clorox bottles on their heads to provide camouflage among the crab pots. Others have tried putting nets where they knew oysters would be relocated, hoping to haul them up later.

Since the red tide descended on North Carolina's coast, marine scientists have had to change roles, educating the public, sometimes exploding myths and often dropping other work to help those hit by the shellfishing crisis.

At the National Marine Fisheries Service, Director Bud Cross said personnel who normally would be tagging mackerel had to sample water for red tide while a full-time oceanographer to tracking the outbreak.

"It's on the order of a $20,000 to $25,000 shift we needed to make," Cross said.

She found an algae bloom near Naples, Fla., on Aug. 21 that appeared to have started it all.

"I think the same incident that preceded that bloom probably put cells in the Gulf Stream and Florida current and brought them up here," she said, adding that this was only the third time the red tide organism had gotten around the Florida peninsula from the Gulf of Mexico.

On Oct. 22, thermal photographs showed a streamer of warm water shooting toward Cape Lookout. Offshore temperatures rose, the algae bloom grew and gradually it moved south, she said.

Lower temperatures that might kill the organism appeared unlikely to dispel the threat, Ms. Tester said.

"Offshore areas have such enormous heat capacity and such high temperatures relative to our inshore areas during this time of year that it's not likely that the areas adjacent to or along the Gulf Stream are going to cool off enough to kill the cells simply by temperature shock," she said.

Ms. Tester also said there appeared to be no connection between the red tide's tenacious hold on the coast and pollution or high nutrient levels in the water. In fact, the opposite might be the case.

"One of the reasons that they may not have established themselves on the east coast of Florida when they came into those areas is because the waters were fairly polluted, compared to ours," Ms. Tester said. "I think our pristine waters may have been one of the reasons that the bloom has persisted so long."

John Costlow of the Duke Marine Science Laboratory, said fears about pollution were only one of the rumors scientists have fought to overcome.

A breakthrough experiment using lights to mimic sunrise or sunset to reset body rhythms could improve sleep for the elderly and for workers on rotating shifts, and might even banish winter's blahs.

Children Buckling Up More

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The number of children riding buckled up in 1987 was the highest in North Carolina's history, and law enforcement officials and educators hope to build on that success this week during events aimed at promoting child passenger safety.

Safety seat and seat belt usage rates for children under age 6 now covered under the state's Child Passenger Protection Law reached a record high of 84 percent in 1987, said William L. Hall, research associate at the University of North Carolina Highway Safety Research Center. That figure is based on accident reports compiled by the N.C. Division of Motor Vehicles and is up from 17 percent in 1982.

Under current state law, safety seat use is required for all children under age 3. Children between ages 3 and 5 are required to ride in safety seats or wear seat belts.

The number of children up to age 5 killed on North Carolina highways decreased from 25 deaths in 1986 to 21 deaths in 1987, Hall said.

Among the 21 children killed in 1987, 17 were unrestrained and three were restrained. In one case, seat or safety belt use could not be determined. Hall estimated that 13 of the fatalities could have been prevented if the children had been buckled up. The three children who were restrained were in crashes that he said were unsurvivable.

The usage rate is encouraging, Hall said, "but when you look at the circumstances surrounding the children who are killed, it can be depressing.

"There are an awful lot of kids getting killed or seriously injured because parents aren't taking the time to buckle them up," he said. "It was bad enough 15 years ago when people weren't aware of the importance of child passenger safety. Now that so much more is known, it just doubles the grief to know that these accidents could have been prevented."

Hall said such statistics were among the reasons the UNC center, the N.C. Passenger Safety Association, the Governor's Highway Safety Program and Seat Belts for Safety Inc. had organized the state's observance of Child Passenger Safety Week in North Carolina, which was proclaimed by Gov. Jim Martin.

"Our goal is to raise the consciousnees of parents and other adults who are responsible for kids' safety and promote child passenger safety for those who are not yet using safety seats and seat belts," said Wade Henderson, president of the N.C. Passenger Safety Association and a captain in the Greensboro Police Department.

Local police, sheriff's deputies and the N.C. Highway Patrol will participate in a national program called "Protect a Life." Officers will write down the license plate numbers of cars transporting children who are safely buckled up. The owners of those vehicles will receive a certificate thanking them for their concenr for child passenger safety.

In addition, day-care centers in Raleigh, Greensboro, Wilmington, Greenville, Reidsville and Concord have scheduled activities in connection with the event to promote proper seat belt use.

Woman Gets Her Money From State

Mrs. Mayo had $21,682.07 in a passbook savings account with First Home Federal Savings and Loan Association that was turned over to the state last February under the escheat and abandoned property program after the savings and loan lost track of her.

The Winston-Salem woman thought her money was still in the account, but learned otherwise last month when the state published its list of property that it had been turned over.

Once officials at First Home Federal rediscovered Mrs. Mayo they helped her fill out the paperwork necessay to get her money back and announced they would pay whatever interest she had lost.

On Friday Mrs. Mayo got a check from the state for $21,682.07 and one from First Home Federal for $1,289.93.

"That's something to laugh about," Mrs. Mayo said.

The program is a way of turning over to the state unclaimed or abandoned money, stock and other property, including savings accounts that have been dormant for more than 10 years. Although Mrs. Mayo hadn't gotten the passbook updated in more than 10 years, she hadn't abandoned it and thought everything was fine.

Patrol Cadet Dies After Boxing Bout

Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina Highway Patrol officials say they will review a defensive tactics exercise after a boxing bout apparently claimed the life of a 23-year-old patrol cadet.

Dr. Dennis Bullard, a neurosurgeon at Wake Medical Center, called the death of W.E. Bayless III "a freak accident."

"You have to put this in context of what they're trying to do," Bullard said. "They're trying to train people to the rigors of being a Highway Patrolman. And boxing is part of the training."

Bayless, the son of highway Sgt. William Bayless of Raleigh, died Friday, one day after he collapsed during a boxing exercise at the Patrol Training Center.

Patrol officials said Bayless, an Army veteran from Garner described as "a very good student" in the patrol's training class, was in a routine boxing exercise designed to give future troopers experience in hand-to-hand combat. The 22-week, 47-member class began in October and is to graduate March 4.

"If you didn't teach these fellows how to defend themselves," said Lt. Col. W.D. Teem, executive officer of the patrol, "it'd be like putting lambs among wolves when fights start in the ditch with drunks."

The death of Bayless prompted state officials to suspend the boxing portion of the training for an indefinite period while they consult with sports medicine experts to determine what might be done to make that part of the training safer.

Officials said the defensive training portion of cadet training ended Friday.

"We're looking into the total physical fitness and defensive tactics training that is going on out there," said Maj. Robert Barefoot, commander of the center. "We haven't made any quick decisions. It will be a matter of weeks before we go through the whole procedure."

Patrol and state officials say they cannot recall a serious injury in the training program.

"We've been doing it for 40 years, and we've never had a problem. We've never had a death in training," Crime Control and Public Safety Secretary Joe Dean said at a news conference Friday. "We want to look at it. It's a necessary part of training."

"We're not trying to have them hurt one another," Dean said of the patrol's boxing program. "The purpose is not to have a winner or a loser, but to teach young men how to fight."

Thursday morning, shortly before 8 a.m., Bayless stepped onto a mat with a 24-year-old cadet for the first of two 3-minute rounds of boxing.

DMV Employee Acquitted But Gets Judicial Scolding

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A former state Division of Motor Vehicles clerk was acquitted of prostitution-related charges after a Wake County District Court judge scolded the defendant for her behavior.

Marsha Hicks Molden, 24, burst into tears when Judge Joyce Hamilton announced the verdict Friday. Ms. Molden's father and stepmother rushed to embrace her and scattered applause broke out in the crowded courtroom.

Ms. Hamilton cited insuffient evidence in her ruling after spending an hour in her chamber reviewing a videotape of an encounter between Ms. Molden and a DMV undercover agent. The meeting occurred Jan. 5 in a basement photography lab of the DMV building in Raleigh.

The videotape, recorded by a State Bureau of Investigation camera and shown in open court Thursday, showed Ms. Molden accepting money from agent William Cripps and opening her blouse. Ms. Molden also told Cripps he could get oral sex for $20.

Ms. Molden was charged with solicitation to commit the felony of crime against nature. Solicitation is a misdemeanor carrying a maximum punishment of two years in prison.

"Although I find the conduct of the defendant in this case to be reprehensible, I cannot find beyond a reasonable doubt that this defendant solicited Mr. Cripps to commit the felony of crime against nature ...," Ms. Hamilton said.

"Anytime anyone is in the basement photography lab unbuttoning her blouse, it certainly is not conduct very becoming of an employee of the state of North Carolina," Ms. Hamilton said.

DMV commissioner Bill Hiatt said Ms. Molden's dismissal was final. She was fired after her arrest. He said it resulted from an administrative investigation conducted separately from the criminal probe.

Ms. Molden's attorney, John McClain told reporters the prosecution had failed to prove that Ms. Molden committed a crime. Also, he said, the state's evidence "raised the question of entrapment."

"By Mr. Cripps' own admission, he waved money in front of her face ... he asked her all the questions, he first raised the issue of sex, he asked her what she would do for a variety of different sums of money," McClain said.

"It's clear ... that the law is not going to allow the state to go out and set up a crime, take all the affirmative acts that result in that crime and then turn around and say 'now you've done something wrong and we're going to prosecute you for it,'" he said.

"I am very relieved," Ms. Molden told reporters after the verdict. She declined further comment.

Anita Quigless, the assistant district attorney who prosecuted the case, denied that the state had entrapped Ms. Molden and noted that Ms. Hamilton had criticized Ms. Molden's actions.

"She (the judge) clearly felt the defendant was not entirely innocent but the state's burden of proof was to prove beyond a reasonable doubt ...," Ms. Quigless said in a telephone interview. "Her position was that there was something there but that it was not beyond a reasonable doubt."

Ms. Molden told investigators after her arrest that she was the sole provider for her son and husband, who was totally disabled, had arthritis and was an alcoholic, Carter said.

Ms. Molden did not testify.

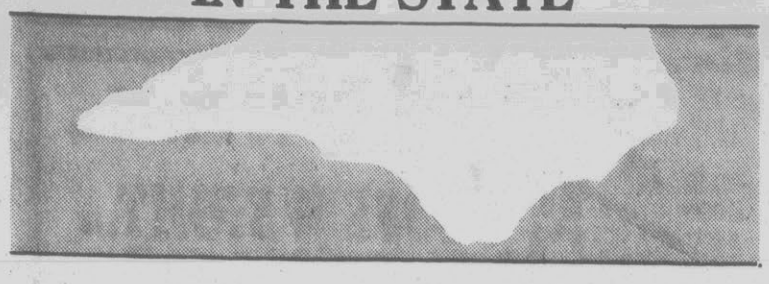
IN THE STATE



Guilty Plea

WILMINGTON (AP) — Wilmington bail bondsman Donald Keith Bridges has pleaded guilty to misdemeanor possession of cocaine.

Bridges, 34, who was arrested Sept. 17 and charged with felony possession of cocaine with intent to sell and deliver, pleaded guilty to reduced charges in a plea agreement with the state.

Bridges is to report Monday at the county jail to begin serving a 90-day active portion of an 18-month sentence imposed by Superior Court Judge David E. Reid Jr.

Bridges was ordered to pay a $250 fine and was placed on supervised probation for 3½ years following the completion of his active sentence.

Suit Continues

DURHAM (AP) — A Superior Court judge has let stand a lawsuit in which a Durham minister seeks a public apology for what he contends was an improper gambling arrest that violated his constitutional rights.

Judge Wiley Brown denied a defense motion to dismiss the suit, which was filed by the Rev. William E. Coleman against the city of Durham, the Durham Police Department, former Police Chief Talmadge Lassiter, Police Officer J.L. Packard and other "unknown members" of the Police Department's Selective Enforcement Team.

The suit was filed in February 1987.

Elections

KENANSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The manner in which Duplin County Commissioners and Board of Education members are elected has been changed, attorneys representing both boards announced Friday.

Under the new system — made to put the county into compliance with the Federal Voting Rights Act — both boards will consist of six members, all of whom will be nominated and elected from districts. The changes, approved in federal court, resolve a grievance first made last May by the NAACP.

The NAACP had said Duplin's old system of electing the five-member boards of commissioners and education prevented blacks from having a legitimate chance of being elected and thus violated the Federal Voting Rights Act.

Layoffs

WAYNESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A change in paper production is causing Champion International to reduce its Haywood County work force by 84, but company officials say they hope there will be no need for forced layoffs.

The giant paper maker plans to offer an early retirement program to employees 55 to 65 years old that could take care of the required cuts.

"If not, then there will be some layoffs," Oliver Blackwell, plant manager of the Canton pulp and paper mill, said.

The Stamford, Conn based corporation will cut 36 positions at its Canton mill and 48 at a Waynesville plant that cuts and packages business papers.

Weapons Charge

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Federal law enforcement agents have charged a Bryson City man with a weapons violation after a traffic stop in Florida in which $16,000 and drug paraphernalia were confiscated, Swain County Sheriff Ray Cline said.

Wayne Herron was charged with possessing an unregistered semi-automatic handgun, Cline said. Herron, 45, was denied bond during a detention hearing in U.S. Magistrate Court in Asheville.

Cline said drug paraphernalia and money were confiscated during a traffic stop Jan. 14 in Daytona Beach, Fla.

Herron was charged in Volusia County, Fla., with carrying a concealed weapon, according to Volusia County records. Cline said Herron was under $10,000 bond in Florida.

Sentence

GRAHAM, N.C. (AP) — A 79-year-old farmer accused of fatally shooting a Burlington boy inside the farmer's pig pen pleaded guilty Friday to involuntary manslaughter and was sentenced to three months in prison.

After pleading guilty, Joseph Oliver told Alamance Superior Court Judge J.B. Allen Jr. that he did not intend to shoot Wayne Lamont Miles, 12, one of five boys Oliver said were throwing rocks and chasing pigs at the farm he rents north of Burlington.

Oliver said he fired his .22-caliber rifle into the ground to scare the boys away. He said he had done the same thing many times to deal with young people who harm his pigs.

Church Volunteers Lend Helping Hand While Patroling Ski Slopes

By MIKE HANNAH
Watauga Democrat

BOONE, N.C. (AP) — The Good Samaritan helped an injured stranger and asked for nothing in return. In the northwest mountains of North Carolina there is a group of volunteers who live that parable each day as they patrol the ski slopes.

Resort Area Ministries is a group of interdenominational volunteers who work with area ski resorts and lend a helping hand with everything from boots and skis on the slopes and in the lodges to dead batteries and flat tires in the parking lots.

The volunteers are members of Baptists, Methodist, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Episcopal and Catholic churches in Watauga and Avery counties along the North Carolina-Tennessee state line.

"I see a deep concern in the typical RAM volunteer," said Tom Moore, RAM chaplain and an ordained Southern Baptist minister.

Moore said the origins of the ministry go back to 1968, just about the same time the ski industry appeared in the North Carolina mountains. Area ministers realized that with the arrival of new resort industries, there would also be an influx of visitors, some of whom might need special assistance not readiliy available in the area.

RAM started then as an outreach program to provide whatever assistance might be needed, but the organization has changed with the resort areas.

Moore began working with the organization during an 18-month trial period, eventually moving into his present full-time job of recruiting and coordinating the more than 100 volunteers now serving the resort communities.

"We're one of the strongest interdenominational groups I know of," Moore said, adding that volunteers must be over 18 years of age and be able to ski on at least the intermediate level.

"They don't have to ski pretty," he said. "They just have to be comfortable enough to give someone a hand up."

Skiers often need help in gaining their confidence or their balance, Moore said, and RAM volunteers try to be close by to help. Some workers cruise through the equipment rooms and help skiers get into their boots and put on their skis. Most often the volunteers simply advise skiers concerning which boot goes on which foot, the most common mistake made by beginners.

Volunteers work at three area resorts: Appalachian Ski Mountain between Boone and Blowing Rock, where the group started in the late 1960s; Ski Hawksnest at Seven Devils and Ski Beech at Beech Mountain. At least one volunteer is placed at each resort during each period the resort is open for business.

Volunteers are readily identified by their royal blue parkas with bright yellow and blue insignias featuring a yellow cross and the letters "RAM." Skiers are often surprised to see a religious presence on the slopes, Moore said, but after the volunteer explains that his presence is simply an outreach of his church and a local concern, the attitude usually becomes quite positive.

Area ministers also donate their time to conduct nondenominational services at Ski Hawksnest and Ski Beech resorts, but Moore said that response to far has been very disappointing. Services are planned so as not to interfere with the day's activities.

"We don't want to cut into the ski time," Moore said. But the ministers are not giving up.

Moore said the practice of going to a church service while on vacation is not very common.

"We're going to run them (services) through March ... when the ski season ends and see where it goes from there," he said.

RAM church members also volunteer their homes and churches as temporary lodgings for stranded visitors or for emergency situations when accommodations are unavailable.

Once a teen-ager from South Carolina came to the area to ski, but he had left behind some necessary medication. After his parents called and asked RAM to help find him and get the medication to him, a RAM minister spent nearly four hours on the phone trying to locate him, Moore said.

College students make up about half of the 100 volunteers, with the rest coming from local churches. But Moore said they all join RAM for one basic purpose.

"It's a way for them to stretch their faith," he said. "They're interested in being a servant."

Joanna Springs, a teacher at Hardin Park Elementary School in Boone, has worked with RAM for one year. She said much of the work involves welcoming people to the resort and the area.

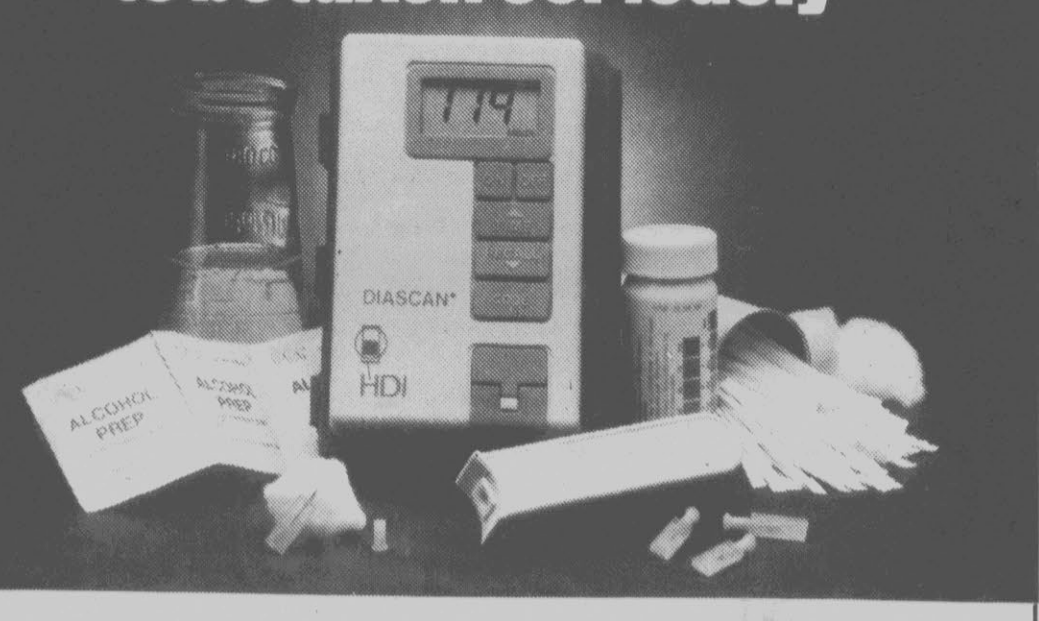
This is one test that needs to be taken seriously



Blood sugar testing is essential to self management of diabetes. Through blood sugar monitoring, a diabetic learns the importance of all aspects of diabetic care.
Fortunately, testing procedures are now easy to perform at work, at home or on vacation. Blood sugar monitoring, combined with proper exercise, nutrition and medication, enables a diabetic to make positive lifestyle adjustments.
The Diabetes Education Program, administered through Pitt Internal & Renal Medicine Associates, Ltd., is a comprehensive program that teaches self management of diabetes. Learning to understand appropriate blood sugar monitoring, exercise, nutrition planning and medication is what the Diabetes Education Program is all about. The program staff, working closely with diabetics and their personal physician, takes a positive approach to managing everyday life with diabetes.
If you or someone close to you has diabetes, find out about The Diabetes Education Program. Call (919) 752-8880 or 1-800-682-4569.

Teacher Finalists Named

RALEIGH (AP) — Teachers from Durham, Waynesville and Blowing Rock schools are finalists for the N.C. Teacher of the Year, state Superintendent of Public Instruction Craig Phillips announced.

Vying for the honor of spending a year traveling for the state and promoting their profession are Tinnie L. Salzano, 29, English and journalism teacher at Northern High School in Durham; Merv W. Sessoms, 42, English and journalism teacher at Tuscola High School in Waynesville; and Cherye S. Pace, 42, who teaches a combined fourth-grade and fifth-grade class at Blowing Rock Elementary in Watauga County.

The winner, who will be chosen in April, will serve as an ambassador for the state's best teachers, said Grace H. Drain, coordinator for teacher recruitment in the Department of Public Insturction.

"Most of all, this person has to have the ability to inspire all students to learn and the ability to inspire other teachers," Mrs. Drain said.

The finalists were announced Friday.

Alternative Sentences Gain Favor

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Many prosecutors, judges and probation officers have long looked with suspicion at community programs that work to divert convicted criminals from prison and into alternative means of punishment or rehabilitation.

But given North Carolina's unrelenting prison crowding, alternative sentencing programs are gaining favor, panelists said Friday at the third annual Community Penalties Training Conference.

Though violent offenders are not eligible for alternative sentencing, people headed to prison for crimes such as drug abuse, drunken driving, bad-check writing and burglary are eligible.

"There is this general mind set of negativism among prosecutors and probation officers simply because of the nature of your beast, which is the prison-bound person," Forsyth District Attorney Warren Sparrow said at the conference. "But we've just got to get used to the idea that there's no prison to put them in."

Sparrow said crowded prisons have also contributed to judges imposing shorter sentences.

"There is nothing more discouraging than getting someone convicted for drunken driving and see him sentenced to four years," he said. "And then get a letter from the Department of Correction that says this guy is getting out in three months. That has an impact on us."

Superior Court Judge Thomas Ross of Greensboro said judges are also changing their minds about the value of alternative sentencing.

"We recognize prisons are crowded and if there are good alternatives available, I think most judges are willing to try those," Ross said.

"We're starting to realize if we can do the job with alternatives and therefore save the prison space for those who need those long sentences, it will do everybody a service in that regard."

The panel discussion, which was joined by Nancy Wooten, a Winston-Salem lawyer, and David Jackson, a Forsyth County probation officer, concluded a three-day conference for alternative sentencing workers across North Carolina.

In 1983, the General Assembly began allocating funds to create and continue such programs.

Inmate Given Execution Stay

GREENSBORO (AP) — A Lexington man scheduled to be executed Feb. 12 has received a delay from a U.S. District Court judge, allowing his attorneys to prepare a motion for a new trial on his two 1983 murder convictions.

On Thursday, the U.S. Supreme Court declined to delay the execution of John Sterling Gardner Jr. until it could hear a separate appeal in the case.

Judge Frank W. Bullock signed an order in Greensboro Friday staying the execution. The stay will give Gardner's attorneys time to file new motions in U.S. District Court.

Gardner, 29, was convicted of first-degree murder in the shotgun deaths of Richard Adams, 21, and Kim Miller, 23. The victims worked at a Steak and Ale restaurant and were found dead there on Christmas Eve 1982.

Gardner was convicted in September 1983 and was given two death sentences. He appealed that conviction through the state and federal courts, and the appeals were denied.

Candidates Back Party Lines On SDI, Contra Aid

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — On Star Wars and Contra aid, it is hard to tell one presidential candidate from another within his own party. But differences between the 13 begin to emerge on the critical issues of AIDS, education, arms control and the economy, according to a survey by The Associated Press.

Among the Republicans, all but Vice President George Bush and Senate Republican leader Bob Dole, oppose or have reservations about the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces treaty with the Soviets. Former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont said it "endangers our freedom."

All the Democrats oppose military aid to the Contras, although Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee has voted for non-lethal aid in the past. They also support the peace plan proposed by Oscar Arias, president of Costa Rica. The Republicans called for continued aid for the Contras, and most expressed doubts about the Arias plan.

On AIDS research and education, Democrats Richard Gephardt, Paul Simon and Jesse Jackson said they would more than double the current budget of $950 million.

Two Republicans, Pete du Pont and Pat Robertson, said the current AIDS budget is adequate. Dole promised to spend "whatever is necessary."

Democrat Bruce Babbitt said he learned first-hand about the need for frank AIDS education when his 11-year-old son asked him, "Daddy, what's a condom?" when given a school assignment to write an essay about AIDS.

"It's lucky he came to me and not the president. Otherwise, he'd still be waiting to find out," said Babbitt.

Here are summaries of the candidates' responses to the AP issue survey.

INTERMEDIATE-RANGE NUCLEAR FORCES TREATY

All the Democrats and two Republicans, Bush and Dole, called for ratification of the treaty, which eliminates the U.S. and Soviet arsenals of intermediate- and short-range nuclear weapons.

Bush said the treaty "shows that the U.S. and the Soviet Union can reduce nuclear weapons without upsetting the military balance."

Dole, of Kansas, said, "I would oppose any effort to attach 'killer' amendments" to the treaty that would require renegotiation with the Soviets.

Alexander Haig, the former secretary of state and military chief of NATO, said, "I have expressed strong reservations about the treaty. However, it can be strengthened during the Senate ratification process."

Among his concerns: "the conventional force imbalance in Europe, the Soviet superiority in long-range missile systems," human rights and "Soviet-backed adventurism."

Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., said: "I would seek amendments in the Senate to preserve SDI and require the Soviets to live up to past treaties."

Du Pont said the treaty "harms our ability to defend freedom in Western Europe." He said the treaty allows the Soviets to recycle their nuclear explosives and leaves the Soviet bloc with big advantages in conventional weapons.

Robertson said the treaty would leave Europe "vulnerable to overwhelming Soviet conventional superiority" and "increases the likelihood of conventional war in Europe and thermonuclear war waged on the American homeland."

Babbitt said: "The INF treaty does away with a small but significant class of nuclear weapons."

Gephardt, a Missouri congressman, said of the treaty, "I want it to become the starting point of a continuing process of mutual and verifiable arms control — tactical as well as strategic, conventional as well as nuclear."

Gore, a senator from Tennessee, said that while he strongly supports the treaty, "we must keep pressing for a reductions agreement that affects the total number of strategic forces."

ENDORSEMENT — Democratic presidential hopefuls the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Illinois Sen. Paul Simon join hands at the podium after receiving a dual endorsement from the STAR political action committee in Des Moines, Iowa, on Saturday. Jackson said: "With the INF as an ice-breaker in the Cold War freeze, we can hopefully work with the Soviets to achieve more significant arms reductions."

Simon, an Illinois senator, said the accord would improve security in Europe.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis and Gary Hart also back the treaty without amendments.

STRATEGIC DEFENSE INITIATIVE

The Republicans voiced staunch support for SDI, and ruled out using the program, coined Star Wars, as a bargaining chip in arms control talks. Bush and Dole said U.S. efforts on SDI had brought the Soviets back to the negotiating table.

The Democrats oppose deployment of a space-based missile defense, although most favor basic research in the field.

Bush said SDI could produce a defensive shield "that lifts from the shoulders of mankind the fear of nuclear annihilation" and that it was better "to put weapons at risk, not people."

"We should undertake phased deployment of an SDI system as soon as possible," said Dole.

Du Pont said, "I am committed to having the first phase of a system deployed by the end of 1996."

Haig said he favors SDI "because we cannot cede the field of space-based defenses to the Soviets, who have been developing such systems for over two decades." But he said SDI should not be viewed "as a replacement for our nuclear deterrent."

Kemp said: "I have pledged my presidency to the full research, development and early deployment of SDI, to move the world away from the threat of mutual assured destruction to a defense that will protect America and our allies from the threat of nuclear attack."

Robertson said, "I feel strongly that research, development, and deployment of SDI should move ahead expeditiously as long as the Soviets still maintain an overwhelming superiority in long-range strategic missiles."

Among the Democrats, Babbitt called for a "mutual and verifiable ban on Star Wars development, testing and deployment." He pledged a "substantial research program" emphasizing basic physics, not engineering or development.

Gephardt said, "Star Wars is destabilizing, extraordinarily expensive, and undermines our treaty commitments. ... I do not oppose research, but the current proposal to develop and deploy before we understand what we're doing is pure folly."

Gore said development or deployment of a space-based missile defense system "would have a destabilizing effect on our strategic posture vis-a-vis the Soviet Union. I favor research on defensive technologies within the limits of the original, 'narrow' interpretation of the ABM Treaty."

Dukakis said, "I would cut basic research funding to its 1983 level — before the president announced SDI — and keep that research within the terms of the ABM Treaty."

Hart supports research on SDI technology. But he said space defenses such as lasers and particle beams "will not provide the shield some would dream of, but rather will create a new arena for nuclear war and new ways for such a war to start."

Jackson said, "Star Wars offers an impossible technological solution to a political problem. It will cost over a trillion dollars if pursued, and in the end will not produce a defense but an arms race in the heavens."

Simon said, "I vigorously oppose any early, premature deployment plan." He said he favors "a limited, prudent basic research program consistent with the ABM Treaty of 1972."

CENTRAL AMERICA

The Republicans support Contra aid, and most voiced deep reservations about the Arias peace plan, citing its failure to address Soviet involvement in Central America.

The Democrats oppose any form of Contra aid, although Gore has voted for non-lethal aid for the rebels. All the Democrats endorsed the Arias plan.

Gephardt said, "I would not send even one more dime of aid to the contras. Period." Babbitt called Contra aid "a slow-motion Bay of Pigs."

Deficit Solutions Vary Among Candidates

But Bush pledged, "I will not abandon the Contras."

"If the Arias Plan is to bring freedom as well as peace, then it must provide for free elections with full participation, free press, freedom of religion, and freedom to travel," Bush said.

Dole said U.S. aid to the rebels "helps protect our democratic friends in Central America from threat and intimidation by the Sandinista regime, and advances the prospects for an eventual establishment of democracy inside Nicaragua."

Du Pont faulted the Arias plan for being "vague on amnesty and silent on the need for direct negotiations with the Resistance."

Although Haig said he originally opposed aid for the Contras, he believes the United States cannot back away from its commitment. "I do not support the Arias peace plan since it requires that the Contras disarm under the assumption that the Sandanistas will abide by their word and hold truly free elections, lift all press censorship and send home all foreign advisors," Haig said.

Kemp said he had introduced legislation to provide the Contras with $310 million in assistance over 18 months. "I do not believe the Arias peace plan is an effective way of bringing democracy and freedom to Central America," he said.

Robertson said, "Continued military and non-military aid to the Contra democratic resistance is essential if the Managua regime is ever going to respect the desire of its own people for freedom and the sovereign rights of its neighbors."

Babbitt said, "I do not support aid to the Contras in any form. ... I strongly support the Arias plan."

Gephardt said, "The Reagan administration's Contra policy has violated our domestic laws, violated our international commitments, and has not strengthened our security."

"Contra aid must end," Dukakis said. "It is not a lever which will pry open Nicaragua's closed political system but a wedge separating us from our democratic friends in the region."

Jackson said he would change U.S. policies "from low-level warfare to high-level peacemaking. ... The Arias plan shows that Central American countries are capable of addressing the problems of the region."

Simon said, "We ought to do everything in our power to encourage, not discourage, all nations involved to make (the Arias plan) work."

Gore said, "I have always opposed military aid to the Contras." But he said he has supported "non-lethal aid in the context of reinforcing the peace progress."

"To have simply ended all aid before the Sandinistas had even begun to comply with the pledges they made in the Guatemala Accords would have been to place far too much faith in the goodwill of Daniel Ortega," said Gore.

Hart, too, opposes Contra aid and supports the Arias plan.

DEFICIT

Robertson says he can balance the budget by 1991, Simon by 1992, Dole by 1993 and Hart by 1995. The other candidates did not give a timetable.

Bush promised to "hold the line on taxing and spending," and press for a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget and a line-item veto.

Dole, who says he still believes in the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction targets, has proposed a one-year modified spending freeze to reduce the deficit, but would spare programs for the poor.

He would give Social Security beneficiaries and federal retirees full cost-of-living increases, but limit growth in all other federal programs, including Medicare, to 2 percent a year.

Du Pont called the deficit "a serious problem that must be addressed through spending reductions." He proposed eliminating farm subsidies, replacing welfare with work, and closing unneeded military bases.

Haig said, "Every federal program, including defense, would be closely scrutinized for waste and inefficiencies."

Kemp said he would put a "strict lid" on spending, except for national security and Social Security, use a line-item veto and reform monetary policy to bring down interest rates.

Robertson said he could cut $30 billion to $40 billion by eliminating obsolete weapons systems and dismantling 300 obsolete military bases. His other proposals: cut back on consultants, sell Amtrack to the private sector and eliminate lending activities of the Small Business Administration.

Babbitt promised to cut spending by $20 billion through a means test for Social Security and other government programs, and to raise $40 billion to $60 billion a year with a 5 percent national sales tax.

Gephardt said, "Cuts in spending as well as increased revenues will be required." He said he would trim $12 billion from farm subsidies, and cut Pentagon spending on the MX missile, the B-1 bomber, Star Wars, the Bradley Fighting Vehicle and two additional aircraft carriers.

Jackson said he would "cut the military without cutting our defense, make corporations and the wealthy pay their fare share of taxes and put America back to work."

Simon said he will seek $20 billion in Pentagon savings over three years and pursue economic policies that would save $45 billion by reducing unemployment by 1.5 percentage points and $30 billion by lowering interest rates 1.5 to 2 percentage points.

Gore said he would protect the working poor and elderly from budget cuts and tax increases while cutting corporate farm subsidies, military expenditures, postal subsidies and health care costs.

Dukakis said of the deficit: "There are only four ways to do it: cut spending, increase revenue, improve economic performance, and reduce interest rates. We must do all four."

Gary Hart has said he would cut the deficit by more than $100 billion by 1993, and balance it in 1995. His proposal includes cuts in military expenditures and farm subsidies and increased spending on education.

TAXES

Four Republicans — Bush, du Pont, Kemp and Robertson — flatly rule out tax increases. All six Democrats have either endorsed some higher taxes or held themselves open to the possibility.

Dole said he would close loopholes in the tax laws. Haig says he would look for savings in all areas of the budget to "minimize waste and any need for increased taxes."

Babbitt wants a 5 percent national sales tax; Gephardt, Hart and Simon favor an oil import fee; Jackson supports higher corporate taxes and a 38.5 percent tax bracket for the 400,000 wealthiest Americans; Simon said that if needed he would seek a surtax on the wealthy; Gore has suggested a tax on luxury items and keeping corporate taxes at their current level.

Dukakis says, "No serious candidate for president can rule out the possibility of new taxes." But he says the first step is to "collect every dime we can of the billions owed to the IRS that are not paid each year." Any new taxes "should be based on ability to pay," Dukakis says.

In addition to a $10 per barrel oil import fee, Hart favors a top tax rate of 33 percent for the wealthy, taxing capital gains at death, taxing 85 percent of Social Security benefits for affluent retirees, higher cigarette and liquor taxes, and a 10 percent levy on furs, planes and other luxuries.

Hart says his plan would reap $43 billion in 1989 and nearly $70 billion in 1993.

Rather than raise income tax rates, Babbitt has called for a national consumption tax. He also has has suggested taxing all Social Security benefits of a single retiree whose income exceeds $25,000 and of a couple whose income exceeds $32,000. Those with incomes that high now pay tax on half their benefits.

Gephardt said an oil import fee, in addition to raising revenue, "also makes for sound energy policy. I do not support increasing individual tax rates but do support improving taxpayer compliance, and ... (closing) loopholes."

Jackson said, "My tax proposals call for fair taxes not more taxes." Among them: a 38.5 percent top tax bracket and raising the corporate tax rate.

Simon said he will support tax increases only as a "last resort" if he fails to eliminate the budget deficit by 1992. He said they would fall "on the wealthy."

Gore said, "If we are driven as a last resort to new taxes, I will fight to ensure that we turn first to those who can afford it." He suggests raising nearly $1 billion with a 5 percent tax on luxury items, $10 billion by keeping corporate taxes at their current level and $5 billion by taxing the sale of inherited stocks on the basis of their original value.

Bush pledged, "I will not raise the taxes of the American people." He also has called for lowering the tax on capital gains.

Dole said, "Tax increases are no substitute for restraint in federal spending."

Du Pont said, "I've taken the 'No Tax Increase Pledge' as proof of my commitment."

Kemp said he would reduce the capital gains tax to 15 percent, which he said would lower the deficit by $4 billion to $5 billion a year.

Robertson said, "I am totally opposed to raising taxes to reduce the federal deficit. We must reduce spending instead."

AIDS

Gephardt, Jackson and Simon would spend $1 billion on research and, as recommended by the National Academy of Sciences, $1 billion on education and prevention. Dole promised to spend "whatever is necessary to fight this disease."

Du Pont and Robertson said the government was spending enough on AIDS research and education.

Most candidates sidestepped the question of whether schools should teach "safe sex" practices, including use of condoms. Dole said that issue "should be left to local school officials and parents."

Bush said: "We must commit the resources and the will to find a cure. ... We've got to put into the hands of parents and students and people throughout America essential facts about AIDS in a thoughtful, sensitive manner."

Du Pont said, "We ought to fund every promising avenue of research. My understanding is that current funding is adequate to do that." He said AIDS education must be "consistent with common standards of morality" and should never "advocate or encourage immoral behavior."

Haig said, "I support the continuation and, if necessary expansion, of a strong federally funded research program whose sole objective is to find a cure for AIDS. This disease should not be used as an excuse to establish a massive new federally funded biomedical research bureaucracy."

Haig said children should be taught "the 'R' word — restraint, as in sexual restraint."

Robertson said next year's AIDS budget "is sufficient" and that parents, not the public schools or government, "are responsible for providing appropriate sex education to their children."

Babbitt said, "I would increase our investment in research for vaccine development and a cure for AIDS."

Children should be taught "the virtues of abstinence and restraint" as well as "the bare facts," Babbitt said.

Gephardt said AIDS education "should be age-appropriate and culturally sensitive."

Jackson called for "a massive AIDS treatment, prevention and education campaign," including "early public school education on drugs and sexuality."

Simon said, "Our educational message to young people must be targeted and age appropriate. For junior high and high schools in most areas that certainly includes safe sex education."

Gore said, "Education must start early ... How it is taught and at what age ... should be left primarily to local school boards." But he said, "An effective program should stress that abstinence and absolutely not sharing IV needles are the only sure ways to avoid HIV infection. 'Safer sex' should also be taught."

Dukakis said, "We must provide adequate funding to pursue every scientifically promising research project. The best way to teach children about AIDS is to include it in comprehensive health education along with prevention of drug abuse and teen pregnancy."

U.S. Subdues Reponse To Noriega's Indictment

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is adopting a low-key policy toward the federal indictments handed down against Panamanian strongman Manuel Antonio Noriega, insisting that American policy toward that country remains unchanged.

The administration has said for the past seven months that Panama's military should return to the barracks to clear the way for a restoration of elected civilian rule.

One official, insisting on anonymity, said that if the indictments announced Friday accelerate Noriega's departure and enhance the possibility of democracy, the administration would be pleased.

Another official, also speaking privately, said the administration made a studied attempt not to gloat publicly over the indictments for fear of generating nationalistic sentiments in Panama.

State Department deputy spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley made that point by saying on Friday, shortly after the indictments were announced, that they do not reflect on the Panamanian government or the country's Defense Forces, which Noriega heads.

In Miami, Noriega was charged in a 12-count indictment with taking at least $4.6 million in payoffs from drug smugglers in Colombia to protect cocaine shipments, launder money, supply drug laboratories and shelter the gang's leaders from law enforcement.

A parallel indictment in Tampa accuses Noriega of accepting part of a $1 million bribe and importing or trying to import 1.4 million pounds of marijuana into the United States.

The extradition of Noriega appears highly unlikely because a 1904 treaty between the two countries does not oblige either state to extradite its own nationals.

Although President Eric Delvalle is the nominal leader of Panama, the real power has rested with Noriega for the past five years. U.S. officials have been concerned about Noriega's alleged activities but felt helpless to do anything until six months ago when the first signs of broad-based opposition to him began to emerge.

Since then, the administration has become increasingly outspoken in criticizing Panama's authorities, leading to a period of deep mutual suspicion between the two countries.

At the heart of the administration's concern is the fate of the Panama Canal, over which Panama is due to assume control at the end of 1999. The administration believes the safety of the canal is best assured if a stable, democratic system is in place.

In a speech last summer, Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams said Panama's military leaders "must remove their institution from politics, end any appearance of corruption, and modernize their forces to carry out their large and important tasks in defense of the canal."

As officials see it, the best hope for an end to military domination in Panama lies in the 1989 presidential elections. The administration has been stressing publicly and privately its view that credible elections are needed if political stability is to be achieved.

Noriega sees the campaign against him as part of a plot by rightist circles in the United States to annul the canal treaties and ensure continued U.S. control over the waterway.

During a meeting five weeks ago between Noriega and Assistant Defense Secretary Richard Armitage, the general was assured the United States considers the canal treaties to be sacrosanct.

But U.S. officials are worried that if Noriega is ousted precipitously, hopes for a fair election next year may not be realized. They are concerned that power-hungry elements in the Defense Forces may try to take advantage of Noriega's departure and perpetuate military domination of Panama's political life.

N.Y. Post Sale Expected

NEW YORK (AP) — An agreement to sell the New York Post to a real-estate developer for at least $37 million was at hand Saturday as talks to complete the deal continued, a newspaper spokesman said.

"They're close to an agreement in principle, but they haven't wrapped up all of the details," Post spokesman Howard J. Rubenstein said.

"Certainly nothing has been signed," he said, adding that an announcement was expected Sunday.

The newspaper's staff was told Friday that under terms already agreed to with owner Rupert Murdoch, developer Peter S. Kalikow would publish the daily at its present plant for at least three years.

Executive editor Frank Devine would remain in that post for one year and Peter Price, the publisher of Avenue magazine, would be named publisher.

TRADE

Bush, du Pont, Babbitt and Gore criticized the House-passed trade sanctions authored by one of their rivals, Gephardt. Bush called it "protectionist, pure and simple."

"We need a strategy that ensures both free and fair trade. In cases where trade is not fair, we must continue to vigorously enforce our trade laws," the vice president said.

Dole said he believes U.S. trade laws must be strengthened "to deal with unfair trade practices while at the same time stimulating an increased exchange of fairly traded goods and services around the world."

Du Pont said, "I support trade legislation to open foreign markets and increase U.S. exports. Thus, I strongly support ratification of the new U.S.-Canada trade pact, and I believe we ought to eliminate the restrictions that prevent Alaskan oil and natural gas from being shipped to Japan, and the prohibition on exporting timber harvested from government lands."

Haig said, "The old American formula of investment, innovation, productivity and quality is still the secret to success. To rectify the trade gap, we have to free up more of our own funds for investment" by reducing the deficit.

Kemp said he has sponsored legislation "to create a North American Free Trade Zone between U.S., Canada, and Mexico, to create the largest common market in the world, and allow us to negotiate reductions in trade barriers to U.S. exports."

Robertson said, "Nations that close their doors to our products and services will find ours closed to theirs."

Babbitt called for a new agreement with America's trading partners and a rewriting of the rules of international trade "with a goal of overall multilateral (not bilateral) balance for each country."

Babbitt added, "The long-term answers to our trade problem are increasing productivity and getting our fiscal house in order."

Gephardt said his House-passed trade amendment would "give the president the tools he needs to open foreign makrets unfairly closed to American products."

EDUCATION

The Democrats oppose tuition tax credits and vouchers for private elementary and secondary education. Most of the Republicans favor some form of tax break for parents who choose private schools.

Bush, who wants to be known as "the education president," called for a program of tax-free interest on U.S. savings bonds to help pay parents pay college tuition and tuition tax credits. He also has called for expanding an income-contingent loan program for students.

Dole has suggested tax-deferred "education savings accounts, similar to IRAs, to allow families to save" for college. "I have supported tuition tax credits and vouchers on an experimental basis, but we must structure the programs so that they do not undermine public school systems," he said.

Du Pont said the government should make it possible for anyone to borrow money at market rates for education and training.

Religion On Air Backed

FCC Still Getting Mail Over Non-Existent Policy

By DEBORAH MESCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission has received more than 20 million postcards and letters opposing a proposal that doesn't exist.

The mail has streamed in steadily over the past 12 years, begging the agency not to ban religious broadcasting from the airwaves.

The fact is the FCC has no plans to take religious programming off the air, "and even if it did, under the wildest stretches of the imagination, the First Amendment would forbid it," said agency spokesman John Kamp.

But rumors that have continued to circulate, with a recent resurgence, producing postcards, letters and telephone calls from across the country from an irate public convinced the FCC is ready to pull the plug on God's word.

"We simply can't deal with the amount of mail we get on this issue," FCC spokesman John Kamp said last week. No other issue at the FCC generates anywhere near this much mail, he said.

The FCC has tried to trace the rumors, Kamp said, but without success.

It all began in December 1974, when public-broadcasting advocates Jeremy D. Lansman and Lorenzo W. Milam filed a petition with the FCC asking the agency to look into the operations of religious broadcasting stations.

The petition was routinely assigned a number and on Aug. 1, 1975, the FCC denied it. The agency said it was required by the First Amendment "to observe a stance of neutrality toward religion, acting neither to promote nor to inhibit religion."

Despite the action, the mail that began flowing into the agency in early 1975 got even heavier as rumormongers spread the false word. In 1976 alone, the FCC got 4.5 million pieces of mail on the issue.

Eventually, the name of well-known athiest Madalyn Murray O'Hair of Austin, Texas, became connected with the issue.

Mrs. O'Hair flatly denies that she ever had anything to do with the petition, and says she's convinced religious broadcasters have used her name to drum up interest in the issue and demonstrate their strength to the FCC.

"The religious community desperately needs a devil and I am it," she said.

Ben Armstrong, executive director of the National Religious Broadcasters, says his group is innocent and, in fact, has been trying to stop the rumors.

Armstrong blames the continuing rumors on "grass-roots America. It seems to come from the country churches," which are nondenominational and are not plugged into the news systems of larger churches.

Meanwhile, the FCC says it cannot respond to every piece of mail it gets on the issue. However, it does send out a page-long "fact sheet," mostly to churches and religious groups, that attempts to establish its own word-of-mouth network to counter the rumor mill.

"Because these false rumors still persist, any assistance you can provide by telling your friends and neighbors what the facts are will be greatly appreciated," the fact sheet says.

Indian Farmers Protest Crop Prices

MEERUT, India (AP) — A million farmers are living on the streets of this northern city, virtually paralyzing the local government in a massive sit-in to demand lower utility bills and higher crop prices.

The farmers parked their plows in the midst of harvest in the richest fields in India and left their homes in western Uttar Pradesh state 11 days ago to stage the protest in the city of 700,000.

The protesters are demanding higher crop prices and a waiver of electricity bills, among other things. The government said it cannot meet most of the major demands but has made no effort to remove the farmers with force.

"We can only hope that sometime the farmers will listen to reason," Vijay Sharma, the Meerut District magistrate, said last week.

The method of protest is not new in India, but the sheer numbers involved have turned heads in the capital city of New Delhi, 47 miles to the southwest.

"I will stay here until all the demands are met ... or until I die," said Mahendra Singh Tikait, 53, the charismatic leader of the protest.

Every evening, Tikait addresses the protesters in the flowery dialect of the area, Khari Boli. All day, farmers, their wives and children come to see the man they call "Chaudhary," which means chieftan in Hindi.

The farmers crowd streets on the edge of town outside the commissioner's office, which is responsible for collecting taxes. They cook, eat and sleep on the streets.

Most Meerut citizens are not disturbed since the protest is away from the city center. But no one is allowed into the commissioner's office, where tractors block the entrances.

The farmers have presented a list of 35 demands to the government, focusing mainly on electricity bills, the repayment of bank loans, increases in farm prices and better education facilities.

"In the past year, my village has not had electricity for more than two hours at a stretch," says Harpal Singh, a protester. "Why should I pay them money ?"

The government has accepted 13 of the demands, such as agreeing to quicker repairs of damaged electrical transformers and a reduction in fertilizer prices.

But it hasn't given in on the major demands. Officials have said that farmers pay only about 10 percent of the average customer under concessionary electric rates.

Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh also has said that meeting the farmers' demands would be too costly.

Political groups opposing the ruling Congress Party have tried to use the protest as a platform, but have been firmly brushed aside by Tikait, who heads a group called the Indian Farmers Union.

"Any person can pay homage to the martyrs. But before he can address the crowd, he will have to announce his resignation from politics," said Tikait.

His chief aide, Bhopal Singh, added: "All politicians are jackals. Whether in the opposition or in the ruling party. They only know how to tell lies and retain their offices."

Haiti To Install President Sunday

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Large businesses were closed but small stores, outdoor markets and public transport functioned as usual during a strike to protest the inauguration of President-elect Leslie Manigat.

Dozens of carpenters worked feverishly to finish the grandstand outside the Legislative Palace for Manigat's inauguration on Sunday. Manigat was elected Jan. 17 in an election run by the military junta and boycotted by opposition candidates and most voters.

In the capital, Port-au-Prince, and the towns of Gonaives, Saint Marc, Mirebalais and Les Cayes, businesses closed but public transport was operating and marketplaces were bustling, according to Radio Metropole.

A jitney driver in the capital said, "I don't have enough money to strike. If I don't work, are those people who called the strike going to feed me and my kids?"

In Cap Haitien to the north and Jeremie to the southwest, Haitians did not heed the opposition's call to strike at all, the station reported.

Opposition leaders and former presidential candidates Marc Bazin, Syvlio Claude, Louis Dejoie and Gerard Gourgue maintain the army rigged the election to favor Manigat.

"The strike shows the world that the Haitian people repudiate the selection of a president, as opposed to the election of one," Bazin said in an interview broadcast by Radio Metropole.

During elections run by an independent Electoral Council on Nov. 29, thugs killed at least 34 people trying to vote in the capital. Witnesses said government soldiers did not try to stop the violence and even participated.

In Port-au-Prince on Saturday, the strike closed most large businesses, including supermarkets, department and hardware stores, travel agencies and corporate headquarters, which are normally open until 1 p.m.

There were some military patrols, but for the most part streets were filled with pedestrians and private cars.

"Those people in the opposition had their chance. They could have presented one candidate on Jan. 17 and won," said a civil engineer in his early 30s who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"Manigat is the smart politician," he said. "Sure he got parachuted in by the army, but he was smart enough to be the army's candidate."

Dejoie told Radio Metropole that he considered the strike a success.

Arias Exerts Diplomatic Pressure On Sandinistas

By REID G. MILLER
Associated Press Writer

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — With further military aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels shut off, President Oscar Arias of Costa Rica is relying on increased diplomatic pressure to bring the Sandinista government into compliance with his peace plan.

He is not alone.

The Reagan Administration, which lost its bid for additional Contra aid in a House vote last Wednesday, also says it will be watching closely to see if the Sandinistas live up to their promise to permit greater democracy in Nicaragua.

The first test will come this week.

On Wednesday, the Sandinista government and the Contras are to meet in Guatemala City for a second round of face-to-face peace talks, continuing a dialogue they began in San Jose two weeks ago.

The San Jose talks were marked by cordiality, but by no other substantial agreement than to meet again in Guatemala. Both sides did agree that the initial round of direct talks had achieved "a verbal cease-fire."

But the San Jose talks took place less than a week before the crucial House vote on continued Contra aid, and neither side wanted to negatively influence that decision by appearing instransigent.

Nonetheless, their positions remain diametrically opposed, held up by a concept described in the peace plan as "simultaneity."

The concept means that all of the major steps demanded by the peace plan should take place at the same time. The plan originally set a Jan. 15 deadline for compliance with those demands, but that date passed with only Costa Rica having complied.

The Arias accord, which brought the Costa Rican president the 1987 Nobel Peace Prize, demanded cease fires in Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala; greater freedom and democracy throughout Central America; an end to outside aid to insurgent forces in the region; and a halt to the use of any country's territory as a base for attacks on another nation.

But interpretations of the plan vary.

The Contras contend there can be no cease-fire without democracy in Nicaragua. The Sandinistas insist there can be no democracy without a cease-fire. Even Victor Hugo Tinoco, Nicaragua's deputy foreign minister, has acknowledged that it is a question of what comes first, the chicken or the egg.

Arias and his foreign minister, Rodrigo Madrigal, welcomed the House vote against new Contra aid, but said it put a new, stronger onus on Nicaragua to live up to the accord signed by the presidents of all five Central American nations in Guatemala City last Aug. 7.

Arias called for increased diplomatic pressure to force Nicaragua to live up to the Guatemala accord, not only from its fellow Central American nations but from the international community. Significantly, Arias paid little attention to the failure of other Central American nations to meet their commitments.

Arias has long contended that U.S. aid to the Contras has only given President Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua an excuse to clamp down on his internal opposition, seek increased aid from the Soviet Union and its allies and increase the number and strength of his armed forces.

At the same time, Arias has made it clear that his primary concern is with Nicaragua, with which Costa Rica shares a common border, and not with conditions in El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala, with which it doesn't. Time and again, Arias has said there can be no peace in Central America "without democracy in Nicaragua."

Ortega greeted the House vote with a certain skepticism, saying Nicaragua could not afford to "lower its guard, because the war will end only when the government of the United States accepts a cease-fire and a direct dialogue with Nicaragua over mutual security concerns."

Ortega also took the occasion to accuse the governments of El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala of failing to live up to their end of the Guatemala bargain. Among other things, none of those countries has achieved a cease-fire with leftist insurgents or significantly lessened human rights abuses.

Ortega has consistently said that his government cannot meet all the demands of the Guatemala peace plan unless El Salvador and Honduras quit aiding the Contras, who have been trying to overthrow the Sandinistas since 1981 with the support of the United States.

El Salvador's president, Jose Napoleon Duarte, says his government has halted assistance to the Contras, but in turn accuses Nicaragua of continuing to aid the leftist rebels who have been fighting for power in his country for the past eight years.

For his part, President Jose Azcona Hoyo of Honduras has acknowledged that his country has given shelter to the anti-Sandinista rebels, but insists the problem would disappear if Nicaragua would permit full human rights and political freedom.

"The test is going to come in Guatemala," said one Western diplomat, referring to this week's new round of cease fire talks. "What remains to be seen is how the two sides are going to react to the changed circumstances. I can only guess that these talks will not be as friendly as the last ones."

Jewish Vigilantes Step Up Efforts On West Bank

JERUSALEM (AP) — Militant Jewish settlers have stepped up a campaign of vigilante justice against rock-throwing Palestinians in the occupied West Bank, already wracked by two months of anti-Israeli violence.

Settlers have scooped up stone-throwers in roadside "arrests," smashed windows of Arab cars, set up armed road patrols and, in several instances, opened fire after being trapped by angry mobs.

Mere rumors of settler vigilante justice, in two cases spread by mosque loudspeakers, have sparked violent protests in Arab towns and refugee camps, forcing a massive army response.

Military commanders have appealed to the 65,000 West Bank settlers not to take the law into their own hands, but some settler leaders said they would continue to meet force with force if the army didn't provide sufficient security.

"It is not our role to catch stone-throwers, but if there is no army or police present, we cannot walk away with our hands in our pockets and do nothing," said Uri Ariel, secretary-general of the Amana movement, which administers 50 settlements.

"Anyone who throws a stone at a moving vehicle has a lethal weapon and must be brought to justice as quickly as possible," said Shlomo Riskin, chief rabbi of the Efrat settlement. Confrontations between settlers and Palestinian protesters heated up in the past week after two settlers were seriously injured. One was badly burned after assailants firebombed his car, and a witness said the conscious victim was "burning like a torch."

The flashpoints for violence are West Bank roads where masked Arab youths frequently set up roadblocks of burning tires and boulders, then ambush Israeli cars with a hail of stones.

"I'm getting to be a professional at dodging rocks," said Alisa Herbst, 35, a resident of the Ofra settlement near Ramallah. Mrs. Herbst, a native of San Antonio, Texas, said that in a two-day period, her car was attacked five times.

In several cases, settlers opened fire after being trapped by mobs or have abducted demonstrators to deliver them to army or police headquarters.

In one incident last week, Arab youths hurled rocks at a bus carrying settlers past Dheishe refugee camp near the biblical city of Bethlehem. Camp residents said half a dozen settlers got off the bus, chased the youths at gunpoint and took three or four with them.

Palestinians Blamed In U.N. Kidnappings

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The United Nations Relief and Works Agency on Saturday accused Palestinians of kidnapping two Scandinavian employees, but said the abductors were not politically motivated and that the captives would probably be released soon.

A statement released by UNRWA said the victims — Swede Jan Stening, 44, and Norwegian William Jorgensen, 58 — were being held in the southern outskirts of the southern port city of Sidon after they were kidnapped Friday.

The southern flanks of Sidon, 25 miles south of Beirut, are controlled by several Palestinian guerrilla factions.

No group has claimed responsibility for kidnapping.

The statement said the kidnapping was carried out by a group of individuals who have connections with Fatah, the mainstream guerrilla group of Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization.

UNRWA denied a report by one of its Arab staff members who said the abductions were related to the dismissal of six Palestinian UNRWA employees on charges of corruption.

"Such unfounded stories are inaccurate," the statement said.

Masked gunmen in two cars rammed a marked U.N. vehicle off a road at the southern entrance to Sidon and grabbed the two U.N. employees serving as UNRWA area operations supervisors.

"It has been established that their captors are Palestinians," UNRWA said. "There is no indication that any political motive prompted the abduction or that any major group or organization in involved."

UNRWA helps Palestinian refugees in Lebanon.

Sweden and Norway dispatched diplomats from their embassies in neighboring Syria to Lebanon on Saturday to help in efforts to win the release of the two captives, the first Scandinavians to be abducted in Lebanon.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Results Of New Election Method Need Evaluation

Pitt County's new 6-3 election method contains flaws, and the results it produces should be vigorously and formally assessed after the 1988 and 1990 elections.

The plan provides no at-large representation on the county commission. Instead, it implements a system where candidates are only politically responsible to voters in individual districts. Each is elected by a small minority of citizens.

This inequity could produce a board with a perilously narrow perspective. Commissioners, answerable only to voters in their district, could conveniently ignore the needs of other districts. Provincialism created by this setup could encourage squabbling and squelch progress.

In addition, a system of this type seriously dilutes the value of the individual vote, voiding the one person, one-vote stipulation.

It should be noted that the progress the county commission has made in the past decade occurred with a county wide perspective. Any board making decisions for the public must be concerned not only about the needs of one district, but about the best interest of the populace it represents.

Clearly, this county wide perspective should have been preserved by incorporating some form of at-large voting in the county's election method. Without it, there is no political motivation for elected officials to adopt such a broad posture.

What the new system does present is an increased opportunity for minorities to elect candidates to the commission through district-only voting. In that provision, it is correct. But the plan could have, and should have, employed a combination of district-only and at-large voting to effectively meet the needs of minority voters and maintain a county wide perspective.

For that reason, it is important that both the county commission and citizens require a formal evaluation of the new election method after it is tested by voters. The county should not hesitate to make necessary adjustments. The 1988 and 1990 elections can be viewed as a trial period for the system. The impact of this experimentation, along with new population data from the 1990 census — should be carefully examined with the system's flaws in mind.

The county's election method determines the quality of its leadership. That leadership, in turn, affects the degree of progress. Pitt cannot afford an inadequate approach.

More Flexibility Could End Doubts

Ashley B. Futrell, Jr., publisher of The Washington, N.C. Daily News, came across an intriguing situation on a recent trip to Vietnam.

Futrell joined other publishers on a two-week tour sponsored by the National Newspaper Association. While in Saigon he and Bob Mellis of The New Milford (Conn.) Times were approached by a woman who said she was hiding the remains of a United States military man who has been missing in Vietnam since 1967.

The woman asked for a meeting that night and Mellis met her while Futrell attempted to see another Vietnamese who had requested a meeting.

The woman did not bring the dog tags but did give the name, serial number religious affiliation and blood type which are stamped on the tag. After that there were no further meetings.

Back in the United States, the wife of Warrant Officer Floyd W. Strange was contacted. She had previously received a picture of a woman holding dog tags believed to be her husband's. Mellis identified the woman as the one he and Futrell had met.

There are still unanswered questions from Mrs. Strange, as there are for hundreds of families whose loved ones are not accounted for all these years after the United States left Vietnam.

Thanks to the Vietnamese woman's willingness to speak up and the visiting newspapermen's willingness to take a chance she knows a little more.

If the Vietnamese government would be more flexible in allowing the search for information about missing military men to continue the doubts could be resolved for many families. While it is almost cruel to hold out hope that those who are missing may still be alive, it would certainly be a source of comfort to relatives to learn something about what happened to the loved ones they sent off to a frustrating war.

Nuclear Proliferation In Greenville?

Mary C. Schulken

Sunday Morning Notes

Mary C. Schulken is guest columnist for Sunday Morning Notes

Voices vibrate from the table with a low hum. At desks, people converse quietly, some with confidence, others with discomfort.

Pakistan has threatened a nuclear attack on India. The two countries' allies, the United States and the Soviet Union, along with China, intervene. Diplomats from the five powers are in the heat of a sleeves-rolled-up search for a peaceful settlement to a potentially devastating nuclear conflict.

Sound like Geneva, where exotic accents blend in smoky rooms crowded by negotiators and mahogany desks? Well, it's not. The setting is Pitt Community College, and the players were participants in "US 88: A Road To The Future." They were randomly assigned to represent one of the countries in this role-playing exercise, then drafted to serve as either chief negotiator or ambassador for that country.

These citizens were learning firsthand the tense issues involved in nuclear proliferation. Afterward, they would use this experience to devise questions on nuclear weapons policy for presidential candidates.

As a US 88 participant and an ambassador for the Soviet Union, I worked to uncover the agendas of the other ambassadors while my country's negotiator tried to steer dialogue at the table toward peace and the Soviet Union's best interests.

Meanwhile, at the negotiating table ...

Pakistan is adamant: India was the aggressor. The country has taken all it can without retaliation.

India feels wronged by Pakistan's disrespect for its borders and wants a permanent settlement to this affront.

The Soviet Union, the United States and China want all nuclear weapons out of these two volatile nations.

My job was tough. I found the U.S. ambassador uncommunicative. The Indians wanted more money from the Soviets, period. Pakistan wanted the Soviet Union out of Afghanistan so refugees from that country would stop flooding its border. China's ambassador had been kidnaped, and China suspected India. Threats between the two countries made negotiating tedious.

The issue of creating a nuclear-free zone around the two countries gained popularity at the table, but it was clear vigorous financial involvement and enforcement by the superpowers were required to accomplish this end. In addition, Pakistan and India wanted a concurrent nuclear arms reduction agreement by the Soviet Union and the United States.

In the background loomed the possibility of a Soviet air strike on Pakistan to destroy nuclear weapons. That was a frightening last resort.

The group neared a settlement. It all hinged on a Soviet pledge to provide India with increased humanitarian aid. If that nation yielded some cash, both India and Pakistan would support a nuclear free zone. They would allow all nuclear weapons to be removed by the superpowers and agree to build no more. The United States and the Soviets would then schedule a meeting to discuss nuclear arms reduction.

I approached the Indian ambassador, and she agreed, but said the final word must come from the chief negotiator. Before that concurrence could be reached, time was called. The game was over.

I realized I was sweating and glad to be out of the role of ambassador and back in the real world. The Indians were really being unreasonable and the intricacies of high-powered negotiation were becoming overwhelming. I was glad I could worry instead about what to cook for supper.

The lessons of the exercise were simple. Any presidential candidate, as leader, could find himself in the same decision-making position. Rhetoric was useless. Flagellation meant nuclear war. Inflexibility dictated failure. To successfully avoid disaster, real leadership was essential.

With that in mind, it wasn't so difficult to devise questions.

Pakistan Shifts Stance In Talks

Richard Weintraub

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — In a turnabout in negotiating strategy, Pakistan is demanding agreement on the make-up of a new Afghan government as part of any negotiated settlement of the 8-year-old war in Afghanistan.

Until a few months ago, U.S. and Pakistani diplomats argued that the only outstanding issue in long-running U.N.-sponsored negotiations was Moscow's agreement to a rapid pullout of its 115,000 to 120,000 troops in Afghanistan. All other issues, it was argued, would take care of themselves once this question was settled.

It was Moscow that long appeared to link the pullout to an internal political framework, insisting on the dominance of the Soviet-backed People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, led by Najibullah.

In recent months, however, Moscow said it could withdraw its troops in as little as 12 months, drawing close to the Pakistani, and U.S., negotiating positions on that issue. The Kremlin also appeared to drop its demand that a settlement include an agreement on a domestic Afghan political arrangement.

Now, Pakistan — which plays a key role as the supply route and sanctuary for the Afghan guerrillas fighting the Soviet and Afghan government forces — has relinked the pullout to an internal political arrangement.

President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq said last week, in an interview that appeared in The Washington Post, that he would not sign a settlement pact with the Soviet-backed Afghan leader, Najibullah. He called for an interim government, possibly including representatives of Najibullah's ruling party, saying that "all factions of Afghans must get together."

Zia's new emphasis on the need for an agreed interim government for Afghanistan may be a complicating factor in the negotiations at a time when hopes for progress appear high. According to different assessments here, the Pakistani stance could represent a recognition of political realities, or a dangerous effort to put more pressure on Moscow.

One diplomat who has followed the process closely suggested that as an accord became feasible, the Pakistani government began to look in detail at the implications of the existing negotiating goals. The diplomat said Zia's government may have become fearful that the guerrillas, and an estimated 2 to 3 million Afghan refugees in Pakistan's border areas with Afghanistan, might refuse to cooperate-deciding instead to remain in Pakistan.

"Zia is concerned first and foremost about one thing, the stability of Pakistan," the diplomat said. He suggested that Zia's government fears any negotiated settlement that risks internal chaos in Afghanistan because such instability could easily disturb Pakistan's own delicate political balance.

Other observers argue, however, that Pakistan is raising the issue of the future Afghan government in an effort to influence its structure and win some lasting sway over Afghan affairs.

These two interpretations have highlighted signs of a split among Pakistani decision makers, according to foreign observers here.

One argument heard behind the scenes in Islamabad is that the government is giving too much attention to the Afghan guerrilla organizations based in the country. Observers holding this view say that Pakistan would find it difficult to maintain influence over the Afghan guerrilla leaders through whom they might hope to have a future role in Afghanistan.

According to one knowledgeable source, backed up by public statements from Afghan guerrilla leaders, the rebels have been pressing for a dominant role in a future Afghan government. Guerrilla domination of a future Afghan government is said to be appealing to some Pakistanis, who see the ties they have built up during the eight-year clandestine war giving them influence after Soviet troops leave.

Now that talks over Afghanistan are reaching a crucial stage, forceful arguments are heard here that Pakistan should not reach for long-term influence with a future Afghan government by insisting on a voice in formulating it.

One prominent observer argued against such a policy, which he said would operate at the behest of the Afghan guerrillas: "Who are they to tell Pakistan what to do? They are not a government. They are on our soil. Does this mean we surrender the sovereignty over what agreements are arrived at to get their return?"

"We should not be worried about the future of Afghanistan. We should only be worried about getting the Russian troops out. If they go out and there is a civil war that lasts for five or seven years, so be it. It is not Pakistan's problem."

According to this observer, Pakistan must decide its political goal in the negotiations. "Is it to get the withdrawal of Soviet forces and a guarantee of no outside interference in Afghan affairs, or is it putting the right regime in the saddle in Kabul?" he asked.

For some analysts here, Pakistan's new requirement for an interim government in Afghanistan poses a risk that the diplomatic process could collapse. "There is a real danger in letting the opportunity go by. It may not come up again — not for a long time," said one close observer of the talks.

The conflicting pressures are believed to be weighing heavily on Zia as reflected in recent public statements, according to analysts here.

Early in January, when Zia reiterated in an interview with The New York Times that Pakistan favored a compromise government in Kabul that includes elements of the Afghan communists, it was viewed as a signal to Moscow that he was ready to bargain and a sharp public notice to the guerrillas, or mujaheddin, that they must prepare to deal with the communist People's Democratic Party, although not with its leader, Najibullah.

A week and a half later, in the interview published in The Post, Zia appeared to harden his stance by insisting on an interim government in Afghanistan before the signing of any settlement. That statement was published just as U.N. special negotiator Diego Cordovez was ending his first round of talks in Kabul.

"That set the cat loose among the pigeons," said one Western diplomat.

The Nation's Trade Deficit Cures Amount To Malpractice

Tom Bethell

The most closely watched economic statistic today is the Commerce Department's monthly report on the trade balance. Markets get nervous a day or two in advance, and rightly so. Not because the merchandise trade deficit is itself anything to worry about, but because the government reaction to any increase in that deficit really might be alarming. The trade-deficit malady is imaginary. But cures to imaginary maladies can do real harm.

In 1986 the United States ran a merchandise trade deficit of about $150 billion. But in the same year we also had an offsetting capital surplus. These aggregate numbers are difficult to grasp, so let me simplify things with a concrete example: I buy a videocassette recorder from Japan and pay $300 for it. My $300 goes to Japan, where it is exchanged for yen (let us assume at an exchange rate of 150 yen to the dollar). Not wanting to let the money lie idle, the Japanese monetary authorities send my $300 back to the United States in exchange for an interest-bearing U.S. bond.

What, at this point, is the "balance of trade"? I have a VCR, and it is working nicely. My $300 is back in the U.S. Treasury, and Japan is happy with its $300 IOU. We increase our goods, and we have a trade deficit; they increase their pieces of paper, and they have a trade surplus. We receive useful things like cars, television sets and VCRs. In return the Japanese show great confidence in the American system by accepting promises to be repaid in the future. Not a bad deal, you might think.

But wait a minute. Here come the scaremongers and the doom-sayers. We are becoming a "debtor nation"; one day we'll have to pay the piper; all the good jobs are flowing abroad, and so on.

True, foreigners have lent us money. But there is a big difference between being sought out as an opportunity for investments and a haven for savings and begging for the dollars needed to continue subsidizing home consumption, Latin American style. What about jobs? Two years ago we kept hearing that as a result of the trade deficit we had "exported" 3 million jobs. In fact the United States has created 15 million new jobs since 1983. No (net) new jobs have been created in Western Europe since 1980, and West Germany, the proud possessor of a trade surplus, has lost 400,000 jobs since then.

It is furthermore illogical to worry that we owe foreigners money and therefore will have to pay them back at some point. Foreigners with investments and savings in the United States wish us good political and economic health as a result. Would those who worry about foreigners owning U.S. assets feel reassured if we resumed shipping billions of dollars to Mexico and Brazil as we did in the 1970s? If we repeated this to a sufficient extent we would indeed once again be able to call ourselves "net creditors" — on paper.

Now consider the dangerous part — the medicine for the misdiagnosed malady. Some Reagan administration officials have accepted the theory that the dollar must be encouraged to sink in value in order to restore "balance" to trade. Since the Federal Reserve can indeed sink the dollar (by creating new dollars, thereby devaluing the ones that already exist), currency speculators with huge flows of capital passing through their hands try to anticipate the government response (that is, the lower-valued dollar), exchanging dollars for (let us say) yen, thereby causing the very dollar drop that they are trying to anticipate. Down comes the dollar to 125 yen, approximately its present level.

A while back, remember, I bought my VCR when the dollar was worth 150 yen, the exchange rate when the Japanese exchanged my $300 for a U.S. bond. Now let's suppose that they want to redeem the bond and exchange it back into yen. Suddenly they find it worth one-sixth less than they had anticipated because of the exchange-rate drop, which in turn was created by nervous capital movements. These were prompted by an attempt to outguess monetary manipulation by U.S. officials who may have been trying to "do something" about the trade deficit. And all the while some economists and politicians keep saying that we have this terrible trade-deficit problem!

Now what do you think foreigners do when they have investments in this country and they wake up in the morning and read in the London Financial Times or one of the Tokyo papers that U.S. officials are saying once again that maybe the dollar hasn't come down far enough because the big, bad trade deficit hasn't gone away yet? They try to get out as fast as they can.

It is a perilous thing when government officials in a country as important to the world trading system as the United States so much as contemplate manipulating their own currency. A declining dollar rewrites the terms of all existing contractual agreements between Americans and their foreign trading partners. Business is largely a matter of honoring contracts, but how can you do business with someone when the units in which the contract is written mean different things on different days?

Iowa Campaigns Take Circuitous Turns

Richard Cohen

Rep. Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., and Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan. — the front-runners in Iowa polls on the eve of that state's critical presidential caucuses — share much in common.

Although they belong to different parties, both have won the respect of colleagues while rising to leadership posts in Congress. As a Capitol insider, each is well-versed in the detrails of federal spending and taxes and is a skillful craftsman of legislative coalitions. And each is a tireless campaigner who appears rejuvenated by the press of a voter's handshake.

But their contrasting campaign styles in the days before the Iowa vote offer an interesting view of the many different routes to the presidency. Gephardt chartered a planeload of 42 of his House Democratic colleagues to keynote rallies in Des Moines and Cedar Rapids before they fanned across Iowa to campaign for him. Dole, on the other hand, was a first-day witness as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee launched hearings on the nuclear-arms treaty signed in December by President Reagan and Soviet General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev; unlike Gephardt, who missed 82+ of last year's House votes, Dole has kept a strong attendance record on the Senate floor.

Another notable difference: Gephardt is a hot number among the Democratic candidates at the moment and may soar in national publicity and polls if he wins convincingly in Iowa tomorrow. But Dole's campaign appears listless and seemingly outmatched by the overwhelming organizational strength of Vice President George Bush.

Their fates may change overnight, of course. But this year's campaign, so far, is a reminder of the great difference between winning elections and governing. This stark conflict poses real problems for a member of Congress seeking the presidency, because the skills required to succeed legislatively bear little direct relevance to garnering votes in presidential caucuses and primaries.

Legislative success typically demands a precise response to a definite problem and the ability to win support from a relatively small number of fellow lawmakers. In a presidential campaign, the premium is placed on a well-crafted message and legions of grassroots supporters willing to join a crusade.

Take the Gephardt example. After joining the House in 1977, he quickly earned a reputation for his mastery of issues and his painstaking ability to spend as many hours or days as needed to build a majority. Although he has been a leading sponsor of major proposals to shape these debates, such as health-care and tax reform, he has gained more acclaim for steering his party to a consensus position that most Democrats could support. Those skills helped him to win unopposed election in 1984 as chairman of the House Democratic Caucus.

Compare that style with the very different approach that has propelled Gephardt to the front ranks of presidential contenders: He has pushed a major international-trade proposal that his opponents label "protectionist." His proposal to raise farmers' income by forcing up consumer prices has generated considerable appeal in rural Iowa, but Gephardt spends less time discussing it in other states, like New Hampshire. While gaining support from vital labor and farm groups, he has used establishment-bashing rhetoric to attack corporate leaders and editorial writers for the Wall Street Journal, two groups that curry little sympathy among Democratic voters. In the words of a recent Newsweek report, Gephardt "dares to pander."

Meanwhile, Dole has dwelled on his experience as GOP leader and chairman of the powerful Senate Finance Committee, but his campaign pitch has been short on new proposals or a compelling message. His "vision" is the artfully vague pledge of strong leadership to deal with the nation's tough problems, especially the federal deficit. Far from running against the Washington crowd, Dole criticizes Bush, hardly a bomb-thrower, for not understanding how Congress operates.

Voters have heard relatively little from Gephardt or Dole about the details of their past legislative efforts. In part, that may be because such tales are too complex or dull. More to the point, however, nearly any action that either has taken probably offended some important group. In contrast to Dole, whose speeches sometimes sound like a review of the Senate's agenda, Gephardt makes an effort to strike broad themes that responds to public attitudes.

The Gephardt-Dole dichotomy is not the whole story about congressional experience in a presidential race. On the Republican side, Rep. Jack Kemp of New York is the idea-merchant who makes few references to his legislative dealings. Also seeking the Democratic nomination are Sens. Paul Simon of Illinois and Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, both of whom were elected to the House with Gephardt in the mid-1970s but moved to the Senate in 1984. Neither was a major legislative player like Gephardt. Simon failed dismally to win the support of his Democratic colleagues in a 1981 bid to chair the House Budget Committee.

Running on a legislative record has its risks, as has been seen in the attacks on Gephardt's House votes by his opponents. Simon and Gore have criticized his 1981 vote for President Reagan's tax cuts (which prompted Gephardt's defense that he had led the House fight for a Democratic alternative). He also is vulnerable to criticism of a 1985 vote favoring a one-year freeze in the Social Security cost-of-living increase.

But voters seem to be paying little heed to these apparent inconsistencies. Such posturing is a time-honored tradition for political candidates to nearly any office.

AIDS Weapons

Robert Steinbeck

LONDON — Can an "information vaccine" slow the spread of the AIDS virus, until better medical measures are found to combat acquired immune deficiency syndrome?

The success of last month's summit on AIDS hinges on the ability of health ministers from the nearly 150 nations in attendance to dispense information on AIDS effectively. The summit and its "London Declaration on AIDS Prevention" — the most far-reaching international statement of its kind to date — are positive developments in the AIDS-control fight. But it may be impossible to know for several years whether the strategy will succeed.

The World Health Organization's global AIDS-control strategy, as unanimously endorsed at the summit, affirms that "AIDS is a global problem that poses a serious threat to humanity" and calls upon all nations to take "urgent action" to combat it. Each country is asked to develop educational programs that will motivate its citizens to minimize potential exposure to the sexually transmitted and blood-born AIDS virus.

In addition, the control strategy emphasizes social and health services to support the educational programs and the avoidance of discrimination. The caveat "to protect human rights and dignity" applies not only to people with AIDS and those infected with the AIDS virus, but also to uninfected members of population groups who are targeted for intensive educational campaigns, such as homosexual men, prostitutes and drug addicts.

"Unless you have all three elements, (AIDS control) is not going to make it," Dr. Jonathan Mann, director WHO's Global Program on AIDS, said in an interview. But with those elements, he said, "then during 1988 we can begin to see a slowing of the spread of the virus. If that occurs, it is a new era."

Mann estimated that several hundred million people around the world are potentially vulnerable to AIDS virus infection; that number dwarfs the estimated 150,000 AIDS cases that have occured worldwide and the estimated 5 million to 10 million AIDS-virus-infected individuals.

Throughout the world intravenous drug use is increasing, despite education and treatment programs. Sexually transmitted diseases are also notoriously difficult to control, even when good medications are combined with intensive education. Each year millions of people contract syphilis and gonorrhea, two easily curable and preventable sexual infections.

Despite these gloomy facts, there were some positive reports on programs to reduce AIDS risk. From Amsterdam came word of a needle exchange program to supply free sterile needles to intravenous drug users. (Last week New York City officials were given permission by the state health department to launch an experimental program to give clean needles to drug addicts.) The Amsterdam program has apparently helped to decrease the percentage of the city's 5,000 drug addicts who share needles from 75 percent in 1985 to 25 percent in 1987.

From Kenya there was news of an educational program for female prostitutes that has dramatically increased condom use by their clients. The result, a Kenyan report said, was a threefold reduction in the rate of AIDS virus infection among women insisting on condom use by their clients — a finding considered particularly impressive because condoms are rarely used as a method of contraception in Africa.

WHO's "information vaccine" strategy — as one official termed it — also reflects the pessimism expressed at the summit about progress toward a traditional medical vaccine against AIDS.

WHO officials are also pessimistic about the short-term prospects for AIDS drug development. The expensive drug AZT, or azidothymidine, prolongs the lives of some AIDS patients, but it has potent side-effects and so far much of the benefit appears to be limited to about a year.

For these reasons, WHO officials now feel that AIDS control is more a social and behavioral issue than a medical one.

Physicians and health ministers are not accustomed to taking a leadership role on information and communication issues. Nevertheless, a consensus emerged in London that health ministers, perhaps emboldened by a sense of common purpose, have little choice but to try. Their ability to keep AIDS in the eye of their public and political leaders and to mobilize resources may well play a large part in determining whether global AIDS control succeeds.

Iowa

Mecham Confident Of Victory

du Pont 7 percent, former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig 1 percent. The survey of 660 likely caucus goers had a margin of error of 4 percentage points.

On the Democratic side, the survey said Gephardt, Simon and Dukakis were trailed by former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, both with 9 percent; former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart with 7 percent and Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee with 1 percent. Undecided voters totalled 15 percent of the 612 likely caucus goers. The survey had a margin of error of 4 percentage points.

Elsewhere, Dole and Bush each gained Saturday in the survey that counts: support from delegates to the Republican National Convention.

Dole won control of the Kansas GOP caucuses on Saturday, meaning he will win all 34 of his home state's national convention delegates. In Pennsylvania the Republican State Committee picked 18 delegates, and 10 of them are active in the Bush campaign there.

With Saturday's results, Bush has 47 delegates, Dole has 34, Kemp has 32 and Robertson has 8. In all, 2,277 delegates are to attend the national convention in New Orleans in August.

In Iowa, an army of several thousand reporters and television crews was encamped in the frigid state. For their edification, the day blended made-for-television events with attempts to rally the troops to this week's caucuses, the first all-out test of the 1988 presidential race.

To the winners go the spoils of momentum for New Hampshire's primary Feb. 16 and the later races. For the losers, the prospect of sharply diminished prospects.

He denied charges from the Simon campaign that he has exceeded the $755,000 spending limit imposed on Iowa by federal regulations. Then he turned the talk to his populist themes of fighting against the "apostles of the status quo."

Dukakis campaigned with actor Richard Gere from one end of the state to another. Young girls squealed and cheered when they caught sight of the Hollywood star at a shopping mall in Council Bluffs.

The Massachusetts governor stressed his record as chief executive. "They want someone who's been tested in the fires of debts and deficits," he said of the voters of Iowa.

Simon told a crowd of 150 people at Briar Cliff College that the race was "about as tight as you can get." In a standard refrain meant to raise doubts about Gephardt, he said his own views on the issues were "not an election year conversion."

The Illinois senator also delivered the weekly Democratic radio address, calling on embattled Attorney General Edwin Meese III to resign. In remarks taped on Friday in Washington, he added, "Respect for the law must not be diminished."

Back on the Republican side of the ledger, du Pont said his cause has been helped by the recent fighting between Bush and Dole. Du Pont campaigned outside a plant owned by a company that he said received $29 million in federal farm subsidies in 1986 to produce ethanol from corn. There, he repeated his call for phasing out all federal agricultural subsidies.

The Bush and Dole forces clashed earlier in the week when the vice president's Iowa campaign manager issued a statement saying the Kansas senator was guilty of meanspiritedness and cronyism. Dole personally confronted Bush in the Senate chamber on Thursday, demanding an apology at least for his wife.

The vice president said he wouldn't do that, and his aides called on Dole to apologize instead for remarks made by his staff.

nothing wrong with it. "In fact, some of them are having plastic surgery — not here, over there," he added.

Later, in the nearby retirement community of Sunsites, Mecham said he thought people were more aware of how easy it was "for people in government to pull the wool over your eyes," an apparent reference to his oppenents.

But, he said, if elected officials don't do their jobs right "you can nail their shoes to the floor."

Secretary of State Rose Mofford, a Democrat, became acting governor as soon as the House passed the impeachment resolution Friday, state Attorney General Bob Corbin, a Republican, said Saturday.

But Mrs. Mofford has hesitated to declare herself acting governor, and Mecham told the Willcox Town Hall meeting he wants to have a meeting Monday to settle the issue.

The Arizona Constitution requires the secretary of state to become acting governor while the governor stands trial in the Senate, but a state law says other impeached public officers keep their jobs while on impeachment trial. Corbin said the Constitution always takes precedence over a law.

Mrs. Mofford's spokeswoman, Athia Hardt, said the secretary of state was not yet considering herself acting governor and was spending the weekend "thinking a lot and meeting with advisers."

"She plans to try to make the transition as easy as possible," Ms. Hardt said.

Mrs. Mofford may put some of Mecham's top administrative staff on paid leave to bring in her own staff, Ms. Hardt said. It was uncertain how soon the acting governor will take over Mecham's offices, the spokeswoman said.

If Mecham declines to turn the governorship over to Mofford, Corbin said the issue almost certainly will wind up in the Arizona Supreme Court. The attorney general said his office has already drafted the court papers in case the issue comes up.

"Monday's a holiday. If he comes in to work Tuesday morning then we have to file," Corbin said. Monday is Lincoln Day in Arizona, and state offices are closed although the Legislature will be in session.

Meanwhile, lawyers for the House planned to meet through the weekend to outline the specific charges against Mecham. The Senate is expected to officially begin organizing as an impeachment trial court Thursday, and a trial could begin late this month.

"I think cross-examination (by Mecham's attorney) will tear 'em to bits" during the Senate trial, the governor said. He added that his lawyer, Murray Miller, "would have liked me to have never showed up, just say I'm not coming" to the House select committee that studied impeachment.

House special counsel William French has accused the governor of concealing the $350,000 loan, misusing $80,000 from the governor's protocol fund by loaning it to his auto dealership and trying to thwart an investigation of an alleged death threat by a state official. Mecham has repeatedly denied wrongdoing.

The impeachment bill of particulars, to be voted by the House on Monday and sent to the Senate, is expected to break the allegations down to 15 or 20 specific charges.

Committee Chairman Jim Skelly, a Republican, said he believed Mecham damaged himself during testimony before the House impeachment panel. He said he believed the governor did not refute the allegations against him.

Where's The Ball

Kenny Sanders, the Colonial Athletic Association's leading scorer and rebounder, scored 28 points and pulled down 11 rebounds to lead George Mason to a 67-64 basketball victory over East Carolina Saturday night in Minges Coliseum.

The Pirates, who trailed throughout most of the second half, blew a nine-point first half lead, then struggled back to within two points just before the end. The Pirates had the chance to tie it — or take the lead in the final minute — but Kenny Murphy missed a 3-point shot and Sanders came back down the court to score a layup, putting GMU bask up by four with 17 seconds left.

Murphy was fouled with six seconds to go and made both shots, again cutting it to two, 66-64, but Sanders was fouled on the inbounds play and made the front end of the one-and-one try.

The Pirates got the rebound, but threw the ball away on the quick attempt to get it down court for a shot.

"We lost the game in the last three minutes of the first half," East Carolina coach Mike Steele said. "They got the techs, and we made some baskets and were up nine. Then, we had a complete breakdown on three or four possessions in a row. You can expect a breakdown on one play, but we shouldn't have had that many."

The breakdown allowed Mason to rally from a 37-27 deficit to tie it up at 38-38 at intermission.

The technicals Steele referred to were a pair handed Mason coach Rick Barnes in less than a minute in the first half. The first came with the Pirates up 26-24 with 5:43 left when a Mason player was called for traveling.

"The first time, they called (Steve) Smith for traveling, and I said (to the referee) that I thought he made a pretty good jab step," Barnes said. "Then, the next time down the floor, I asked him if it really bothered him that bad what I said."

Reed Lose hit the first of the two free throws on the initial technical and the Pirates scored on a weird 3-point play on the following possession. Jimmy Hinton canned a 15-foot jumper and Robert Dykes was whistled for a foul against Gus Hill while maneuvering for a possible rebound. Hill made the first of the one-and-one, giving the Pirates a 30-24 lead.

Brian Miller canned a 3-pointer for Mason on the ensuing trip down the court, but Hill came back to make a jumper and before the ball was put back in play, the second tech was called. Lose made both shots this time with 5:00 left and after the inbounds play, Hinton hit another jumper to give the Pirates a 36-27 lead with 4:46 to go in the half.

But after that, the Pirates went cold, turned the ball over several times and let Mason back into the game. Dykes converted a one-and-one, and Smith scored on a breakaway. Dykes then made a 3-point play and added two more free throws to tie it at 36-36 with 1:03 left.

Terhern Harvey made two free throws with 33 seconds left but Earl Moore scored on a layup with five seconds left to knot it again, 38-38, at the half.

"You can't have letdowns like that against the good teams like George Mason," Steele said. "You can't play like that and expect to win.

"It's frustrating that we can play pretty well for 35 minutes and then have about five minutes where we break down completely," Steele added.

The coach said he though the Pirates came back and played pretty good defense in the second half, despite the fact that the Patriots built up as much as a 10-point lead in the period.

Even then, the Pirates battled back to get into the game and have the chance to win.

Dykes scored off a 3-point play to open the second half and Amp Davis — held to just three points in the game — scored on a jumper for a 5-point Mason lead, 43-38 before the Pirates scored. ECU struggled back to a 43-43 tie, but Dykes hit a layup and Miller made a 3-pointer. Sanders then scored from underneath for a 50-43 lead with 13:22 to play.

After a Lose basket, Dykes hit and Sanders scored and was fouled, converting to run the lead to 55-45 with 11:34 to go.

The Pirates, still down by 10 at 59-49 with 6:58 to play, started battling back after that. Hill made a basket and Lose made a 3-point shot to trim it to 59-54 with 5:53 left.

The Pirates missed out on a chance to cut it to three, and Sanders again came up with a 3-point play, moving it back out to eight, 62-54.

The Pirates then scored the next three baskets, two of them by Lose, to cut the lead to 62-60 with 2:50 left.

But ECU could come no closer.

Mason moved back out by four, 64-60 and then 66-62, before Murphy's two free throws with six seconds drew then back within two for one last hope.

The Pirates were hampered by the absence of point guard Jeff Kelly, sidelined with a shoulder injury. Kelly's status for Monday's game is questionable. "It's a day-to-day thing," Steele said.

For the Pirates, it was their sixth straight loss, dropping them to 6-14 overall and 2-6 in the CAA.

Mason pulled into a third-share of first place in the league with a 6-2 record, 14-6 overall — and is enjoying a seven game winning streak. Navy's 73-59 win over Richmond dropped the Spiders into a tie with Mason and UNC-Wilmington for first place.

Mason Nips Lady Pirates

FAIRFAX, Va. — George Mason held off East Carolina's Lady Pirates to claim a 68-66 basketball victory Saturday night in the Colonial Athletic Association.

The Pirates were without the services of Monique Pompili, who did not make the trip with the team. An East Carolina spokesman quoted Pirate coach Pat Pierson as saying that Pompili may not be rejoining the team.

The Pirates were led by Alma Bethea, who scored 19 points while Gretta Savage had 16, Chris O'Connor had 14 and Pam Williams had 12.

East Carolina was outrebounded in the contest, 36-30. McLaughlin had nine for the Pats while Bethea had an equal number for the Pirates.

The win boosts Mason to 13-6 overall and to 4-3 in league play. East Carolina drops to 8-14, 2-5 in the league.

Marquette Drills Wake

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Freshman Trevor Powell scored 21 points and Pat Foley added 18 Saturday to lead Marquette to a 76-57 college basketball victory over Wake Forest, snapping a five-game losing streak.

Foley's basket capped a 10-2 run that gave the Warriors a 57-36 lead with 12:28 remaining. The closest Wake Forest got after that was 72-57 with 51 seconds left.

Sam Ivy had 19 points and Cal Boyd added 12 for Wake Forest (8-11). Marquette, which had lost nine of its last 10 games, is 7-12.

Reaching In

Duke University's Quinn Snyder (14) reaches in to try to steal the ball from North Carolina State's Rodney Monroe (21) during first-half action from their game Saturday. Monroe had 17 points to lead the Wolfpack to a 77-74 win over the Blue Devils. (AP Laserphoto)

Del Negro Helps Pack Edge Duke

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Vinny Del Negro, who averages about 16 points a game, said he didn't panic at halftime when the scoring total under his name read zero.

"In the first half I didn't force anything — I let the game come to me," said Del Negro, who scored eight points in the final three minutes to lead North Carolina State to a 77-74 victory over No. 4 Duke Saturday. "At the end of the game I started creating some shots and they went down for me."

The victory lifted the Wolfpack into a three-way tie with Duke and North Carolina for the Atlantic Coast Conference lead at 5-2. N.C. State improved to 14-4 overall, while Duke dropped to 15-3.

Del Negro, who finished with 12 points, said he didn't alter his game after picking up his fourth foul with 16:11 left.

"I tried to play like I normally play," he said. "I didn't want to give any easy baskets since we were playing man-to-man (defense). I had to play solid defense and not do anything stupid on offense."

N.C. State Coach Jim Valvano said he was "very proud of the way our kids battled today."

"I would have been equally as proud if we had lost," he added. "All we ask of our kids is a good effort and that's what we got today."

"I think it was a game we lost," Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "Not to take anything away from N.C. State but they can make that run and if we don't make mistakes, we win."

N.C. State got in position to win the game by going on a 14-0 run midway through the second half after trailing 43-32 at halftime. During the spurt, freshman Rodney Monroe, who led

Signing Date Approaching For Grid Stars

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

The long and involved process of college football recruiting draws to a close Wednesday as high school stars are allowed to sign scholarships with their school of choice.

And around Pitt County and some of the surrounding areas, a number of top prospects will announce where they intend to continue their gridiron careers.

Topping the list of the area's top seniors is Ayden-Grifton's Eric Blount, who was the Daily Reflector's player of the year and an honorable mention all-state choice. The speedy 5-11, 170-pounder is coveted by the colleges as a wide receiver/kick returner and announced Thursday his intention to sign with North Carolina.

Blount had narrowed his choices down to three schools, North Carolina, North Carolina State and Wake Forest, with East Carolina on the outside, according to his coach B.T. Chappell.

"I think he had his heart set on playing in the ACC," Chappell said. "The idea of playing basketball (as a walkon) had been offered to him by Carolina and Wake. As far as basketball is concerned, he was not being offered a grant. They were trying to entice him to play football."

State had reportedly been the front runner for Blount until he made a trip to UNC last weekend.

"They looked at a basketball film and told him he was good enough to play on the freshman team but not on the varsity," Chappell said.

For Blount, the decision ended an intense past few weeks of visiting schools and having college coaches visiting the school and attending most of his basketball games.

"It was a lot of pressure on me," Blount said. "I'm glad it's over. (But) all the colleges have been real good to me.

"I chose Carolina because it's always been a dream (to go there). I feel I have a better chance to play there. I like Coach (Mack) Brown. He's well known. It seems like he's a player's coach. (Also) Carolina has always been a real good academic school."

But there is still the matter of Blount's desire to play both basketball and football. He said the UNC coaches are giving him the chance to fulfill his dream.

"They said I could go out for the JV team and if I do well, I can be on the varsity. If I do well in practices there, hopefully I'll get to play."

Rose linebackers Dave Daniels (5-11, 215) and Adrian Barnhill (6-0, 215) have both committed to East Carolina after entertaining offers from a number of schools, according to their coach Chip Williams.

North Pitt's Ashley Sheppard, a 6-3, 210-pound linebacker, has narrowed his choices down to Clemson, South Carolina and East Carolina. The only stumbling block for him may be SAT scores.

Scott's 3-Pointer Lifts Georgia Tech

ATLANTA (AP) — Freshman Dennis Scott said he did everything right on his game-winning 24-foot 3-pointer at the buzzer to give Georgia Tech a 71-70 victory over DePaul Saturday.

"The play was designed to me," Scott said. "I got a great pick by Brian Oliver. I went straight up, followed through, had the arc, and I knew it had to go."

Tech, 15-6, had called a time out with 3 seconds remaining to set up the winning basket, which came after Kevin Holland hit the front end of a one-and-one to goive the Blue Demons 13-6, a 70-68 lead.

Scott had missed from 3-point range with only five seconds to play and Holland was fouled on the rebound.

"The first one I probably took a little too early," Scott said. "I was mad at myself."

"Unbelievable," Tech Coach Bobby Cremins said. "That's all I can say. I never thought that we'd win that game. I still feel like we didn't win. It's amazing the things that happen."

"This is a hard one to take," said DePaul Coach Joey Meyer. "A great rule (3-point shot), huh? He hit a great shot."

DePaul had taken a 69-68 lead with 1:30 left on a layup by Stanley Brundy, but missed an opportunity to stretch the lead when Rod Strickland failed to convert a one-and-one free throw opportunity.

Duane Ferrell led Tech with 21 points and Brian Oliver added 20, 16 in the first half.

Tech also hit the Demons with a 3-point shot at the buzzer ending the first half, when Craig Neal connected on a 30-footer to give the Jackets a 40-39 intermission lead.

DePaul surged to a 32-20 lead with just under 8 minutes left in the first half but Tech rallied with a 20-7 run that featured 6 poins each by Oliver and Ferrell.

Tech appeared to have taken control midway through the second half when Anthony Sherrod came off the bench for three baskets during a stretch that saw Tech build a 60-54 lead.

Looking Good

Jones Set For Final

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — After spending Saturday in the shadows, Steve Jones will be on center stage for the final round of the $700,000 Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

Jones, playing in relative solitude at Spyglass Hill — far away from the celebrity-watching galleries at Pebble Beach — shot a 2-under-par 70 Saturday to take a three-stroke lead with a 54-hole score of 10-under 216.

But with 18 holes at Pebble Beach, one of three Monterey Peninsula courses used for the tournament, standing between him and the first victory in his four-plus seasons on the PGA Tour, Jones knows he has his work cut out for him Sunday.

"I've never been in this position before, three shots up after three rounds," Jones said. "But I think I've learned from other tournaments where I was around the lead that you can't take anything for granted."

That lesson was impressed on him at the Heritage Classic last spring. He stood on the tee at the 72nd hole with a one-stroke lead, but pushed his tee shot out of bounds, took a double bogey and lost by one.

It's happened on other occasions, too. He has led after two rounds at Phoenix and at the Tournament Players Championship, and had a last-round chance at Hawaii, but came up empty every time.

"Winning your first tournament is very hard," he said.

And, with a history that shows he has yet to break par at Pebble Beach, he's facing a pair of experienced winners — former Masters champions Bernhard Langer of West Germany and Craig Stadler.

"I don't think it will be easy for him," Langer said.

"My thought will be to attack Pebble," Jones said, adding that his failure to be aggressive led to problems at Spyglass Hill.

After starting with birdies on four of his first five holes, he had to struggle to salvage his 70.

"I felt I kind of let up a little at times. I started getting a little timid," Jones said.

But while Jones had trouble getting his putts to drop, finishing with six birdies and four bogeys, his task was eased by Stadler.

Stadler, a non-winner for four years, was within a single stroke of the lead before he bogeyed two of his last three holes at Cypress Point.

Prep Stars Must Choose ...

see if he would be eligible under NCAA standards of proposition 48.

According to North Pitt coach Larry Bolger, ECU has offered him a grant regardless of the test results.

Sheppard's teammate, Calvin Hunter, a 6-0 175-pound quarterback, has taken a visit to State but no decision has been made.

Former ECU aide Rex Sponhaltz, now an assistant at Guilford, has also been recruiting Hunter hard.

"We don't know for sure (about State)," Bolger said. "They said they will let him know by Wednesday."

Bolger said Hunter wants to be sure he will have a chance to play.

"I told with his athletic abilities, if he can't make it at quarterback, he can make it somewhere (another position) else," he said.

Also at North Pitt, Jesse Frank, a 6-3, 270-pound linemen, has been contacted by Elizabeth City State, but no official offer has been made yet.

From Williamston, wide receiver Felix Purvis (6-2, 185), defensive back William Matthews (6-0, 180) and fullback-linebacker Felix Purvis (6-1, 200) have narrowed down their choices to North Carolina A&T and Winston Salem State, according to their coach Harold Robinson.

The advent of Proposition 48, which requires a minimum 700 SAT score and a 2.0 grade point average in core curriculum, has left a number of players in limbo.

If they fail to meet the requirements, their options are severely limited. If they go to a Division I school, they have to sit out their freshman year. If they don't want to lose a year of eligibility, they must go to junior college.

"Proposition 48 has really made an impact," Robinson said. "I've been real surprised the number of kids that fall into the proposition 48 area. It's been tough on them but they've known about it for two years. They should have been prepared. I'm all in favor of it."

Elsewhere in the area, D.H. Conley's Bronswell Patrick (6-2, 180), who was the Reflector's All-Area quarterback this year as well as a top baseball prospect, is talking to a number of junior colleges about possibly playing both baseball and football.

Farmville's Gary Moore (5-11, 185), who has made the All-Area team three years in a row, is also looking into a number of junior colleges but no decision has been made.

Washington's Felix Copper (a 6-1, 180-pound wide receiver) and Chocowinity halfback William Haywood (5-10, 160) are both getting interest from Chowan Junior College.

Washington halfback Donnell Albritton (6-1, 190) has been contacted by North Carolina A&T and will make a visit there.

Blount's teammate Steve Tucker (6-1, 225-pound lineman) is indecisive about whether he wants to play college football, according to Chappell. He reportedly wants to go to N.C. State, but they are not offering him a grant. They have however given him an opportunity to walk on. Guilford also has shown an interest in Tucker.

The face mask penalty in college football against a defensive player is either five yards or 15, depending on whether an official considers it deliberate.

MVP Status Has Lofty Financial Chances

Moments after the Super Bowl ended, MVP Doug Williams trotted off the field with his jubilant Washington teammates to begin the celebration. Then he stopped for a moment and announced into a television camera the new standard speech for big event MVPs.

"I'm going to Disney World!"

Then he did it again, this time saying: "I'm going to Disneyland."

Never mind in what direction Williams really was headed. Geography isn't important here. What counts is that the spots marked the beginning of what figures to be a marketing bonanza for the quarterback.

Disney officials would not say how much they paid for the instant endorsements — one for east coast distribution, the other for the west. But World Series MVP Frank Viola picked up $25,000 for the same few seconds' work. How much will the Super Bowl MVP trophy be worth to Williams? That depends on whom you ask.

"The Super Bowl is a transcendant marketing event that escapes the narrower genre of hard core sports fans," agent Leigh Steinberg said. "The level of awareness is higher. The only things close are the Olympics and World Series. That makes identification with its hero an attractive marketing investment for corportations and advertisers.

"The quarterback being the central position tops the pyramid of awareness and if he's the MVP, his story is a national event. Doug Williams is an appealing and unique story in any year. He fought back from personal tragedy, from problems at Tampa Bay and the USFL. He wasn't the starter until late in the season. That's the kind of Horatio Alger, underdog story that the country loves. It's good news, an upbeat hero. That's just what advertisers look for.

"Because of that, he will be able to sign major national personal service contracts with corporations. As long as he plots his strategy and is not overexposed and only connected with goods or services that are positive in terms of image, he stands to reap a fortune. Doug Williams stands to make between $1 million and $2 million in the next 12 months. With astute and clever marketing, he will surely make the first figure. The second figure? That depends on how well whoever is marketing him follows up on this.

"He plays a high profile position and he's the MVP with an appealing story. That adds up to the Super Bowl of marketing."

Steinberg should know. He represents 18 NFL quarterbacks and negotiated the landmark $40 million USFL deal for Steve Young. But his numbers may be high for Williams.

Phil Simms' Super Bowl MVP was worth about $1 million last year, half what Chicago quarterback Jim McMahon earned the year before. McMahon's charismatic image contributed to his higher earning power. Simms and Williams are both less flamboyant characters.

"Is he the starter for Washington next year?" Fishoff wondered. "When he hurt his knee, people thought Jay Schoeder might finish the Super Bowl. There's a quarterback controversy there. Is Schroeder going to sit making $900,000 a year?

"Do you invest a campaign with someone who might not be the starter? We didn't face that problem with Simms. He was the starter. People knew that. With Williams, you can't be so sure."

The fact is that Williams threw only one pass as a backup for the Redskins when Schroeder was a Pro Bowl quarterback last year, and he started just two games before the playoffs this season. But Steinberg said his success in the Super Bowl will overcome those drawbacks.

"With the Super Bowl, it's not merely sports fans who are affected," he said. "The most casual fan will watch because it's an event. We live in an instant celebrity age and right now, that's Doug Williams. The Disney spot is a clever marketing strategy because it enables them to get on the air apoproximate to the excitement of the event itself."

Tom Elrod of the Disney Company said the Williams ad was on the air 25 hours after the game and ran for seven days. "After that, it's history," he said. "By then, people are Super Bowled out."

Williams is an easy-going, well-spoken athlete. That will help the marketing effort, too, according to Steinberg. "We don't expect William Jennings Bryant or Martin Luther King here," the agent said. "He doesn't have to speak like Sir Lawrence Olivier or James Earl Jones."

Williams' agent is Eddie Sapir, a New Orleans judge who also represents New York Yankee manager Billy Martin. He said speculation on how much the quarterback will reap from his Super Bowl success is distinctly premature.

"For now, I want Doug to enjoy the win," the judge said. "We've got time but we will entertain any and all who want to do business with Doug. We'll weigh all the deals and see what's on the table."

Sapir said he has had a relationship with Williams since the quarterback was in college at Grambling. "I'm his representative. He's my client. More importantly, he's my friend.

"I'm elated for Doug and his family and deeply honored to be handling his business affairs. He's an exceptionally great person and athlete and an astute businessman. When Doug gets home we'll discuss what's available and go from there."

Within one day of Williams' Super Bowl success, Sapir said his office began hearing from potential clients. "It's been soup to nuts," he said.

Bighouse Looking Beyond Win Mark

AP Sports Writer

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Clarence "Bighouse" Gaines has won more college basketball games than anyone except Adolph Rupp. But catching the late Kentucky coach is not what keeps Gaines going.

"My objectives in life are to continue coaching, try to make a contribution to these young black kids that I work with," Gaines, 65, said in an interview in his office at Winston-Salem State University.

Gaines, who has coached at the same school for 42 years, had 781 victories going into the weekend, 94 less than Rupp.

He began his career when it was not easy to gain acceptance as a black coach.

"When we first started, (whites) figured we didn't have as much sense as they did or something," he says.

Gaines is the dean of coaches in the Central Intercollegiate Athletic Association, a 14-member unit of predominantly black schools in Virginia and North Carolina. Those schools have worked in the shadow of the Atlantic Coast Conference for years, and Gaines himself has always been second to Wake Forest, also in Winston-Salem.

The building in which Winston-Salem State plays basketball bears Gaines' name, a tribute to his career, but also a sort of landmark today.

"First of all, you have to be a social worker," he said. "You'll never get the recognition nor the money that goes along with what you see in the newspapers. I would dare say that the average head coach in the CIAA makes under $25,000 a year."

And what might be taken for granted by some of the larger schools in the area are the exception for Gaines and others.

"Go through our conference and you might find, out of 14 schools, that one, maybe two of the schools are provided courtesy cars by dealers," he said.

Indirectly, that leads Gaines to look at the future for young blacks, those who may be under his guidance, and those who choose other endeavors.

There have been advances for blacks in general, black coaches in particular, he said. But Gaines peers into the community, taking a look at the players on his team and where they came from, and he concludes that society must affect more changes.

"You ask yourself sometimes what young blacks really have to look forward to. I think one of the things is we're going to have to get the separateness out at a lower level so that our kids will learn to battle in society as it really is," he said.

Winning that battle involves education without allowances, he added.

"You don't have a lot of guys as old as I am with the same philosophy — 'if you didn't get it, you shouldn't be here,'" he said. "All we need to do is just buckle up. When you have the remedial programs at the college level, take advantage of them."

Further, Gaines said, blacks must have a chance to see the world beyond their own neighborhoods. He said his team's trip to Springfield, Mass., last fall for a tournament was the first time many of his players had been on an airplane.

Temple Rolls Over Rutgers, 84-53

PISCATAWAY, N.J. (AP) — Mike Vreeswyk scored 21 points and No. 5 Temple defeated Rutgers 84-53 Saturday as the Scarlet Knights set a school record by losing their 13th consecutive game.

The victory was the fourth straight for the Owls, 18-1, and their 12th consecutive over Rutgers since the 1982-83 season.

Temple jumped to a 31-10 advantage in the opening 12 minutes with standout freshman guard Mark Macon leading the way. Macon, who finished with 19 points and 10 rebounds, scored the first five points of the game, and eight of the first nine.

Rutgers, 3-16 overall and 0-11 in the Atlantic 10 Conference, made its only run late in the first half, putting together a 19-3 spurt to draw within 34-29 on a basket by Steve Watson with 2:40 left before intermission.

But Temple, which leads the Atlantic 10 with a 12-0 mark, scored the final seven points of the half for a 41-29 bulge and gradually increased the margin to as much as 33 points.

All five Temple starters scored in double figures with Howard Evans adding 13 points and 11 assists, while Tim Perry and Ramon Rivas each had 12 points.

Freshman Craig Carter scored a career-high 18 points for the Scarlet Knights, who hit 21 of 60 shots from the field and made 2 of 16 3-point field goal attempts. Lee Perry, brother of Owls' forward Tim Perry, added 10 points and six rebounds.

Rutgers had two previous 12-game losing streak, one last season and another in the 1955-56 campaign.

Missouri 101

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Stacey King scored a career-high 40 points and Mookie Blaylock set a school record for steals in a season as No. 7 Oklahoma beat Missouri 120-101 in a Big Eight game Saturday.

The 120 points were the most ever scored against Missouri, which has been playing basketball since 1906. The previous high was 112, by Kansas in 1974.

The Sooners, averaging 114 points at home and 105 overall, improved their record to 20-2 in all games, 6-1 in the conference. Missouri is 13-5 and 3-3.

King, who had set his career scoring high a week ago with 36 against Iowa State, scored 17 in the first half when the Sooners opened as much as an 11-point lead before leaving with a 58-52 advantage at halftime.

The Tigers twice pulled within three points early in the second half, the final time when Nathan Buntin hit a short jumper with 19:18 to play that made the score 60-57.

However, Oklahoma later broke things open with an 8-3 run capped by two Harvey Grant jumpers that gave the Sooners a 79-66 lead with 14:34 remaining. Grant finished with 16 points and 14 rebounds.

Missouri, which got 32 points from Derrick Chievous, could get no closer than nine the rest of the way.

Blaylock made five steals, giving him 93 for the season. The previous school record belonged to Tim McCalister, who had 90 steals during the 1984-85 season.

Blaylock also scored 21 points, 12 coming on 3-point shots. Oklahoma was 12-for-24 from 3-point range.

Dave Sieger and Ricky Grace scored 15 apiece for Oklahoma. Lee Coward had 20, Byron Irvin 15 and Buntin 13 for the Tigers.

Mississippi St..... 59

STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP) — Ed Davender scored 21 points and No. 10 Kentucky capitalized on numerous turnovers by Mississippi State for an 83-59 Southeastern Conference victory Saturday.

Kentucky, 16-3 overall, improved its SEC record to 8-3. Mississippi State fell to 11-9 and 3-7.

Davender scored 15 points in the second half including nine in an 18-2 Wildcat run that gave Kentucky a 58-37 lead with 10:54 to play.

Kentucky never trailed, but couldn't shake State, which started four freshmen, until the second half-run led by Davender and Winston Bennett.

State closed to 40-35 on another Carter basket but then hit only one field goal in the next 5½ minutes and with its 18-2 run Kentucky's lead never fell below 17.

Rex Chapman and Bennett added 15 each for Ketnucky, and Bennett had a game-high 11 rebounds. Kentucky shot 56.3 percent from the field, including 18 of 27 — 66.7 percent — in the second half.

Vanderbilt 79

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Ricky Blanton scored 25 points and Wayne Sims added 23 as Louisiana State downed 15th-ranked Vanderbilt 94-79 in a Southeastern Conference game Saturday.

The loss snapped a seven-game winning streak for Vanderbilt, which fell to 14-5 overall and 7-4 in the conference. LSU improved to 11-8 and 6-4.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Freshman guard Jay Edwards scored 27 points and made two free throws with 32 seconds left to give Indiana a 75-74 Big Ten victory over No. 17 Illinois Saturday.

Edwards, who hit five 3-point baskets, scored 24 points in the second half as the Hoosiers overcame an 11-point deficit in the second half and handed the Illini their fourth straight defeat.

Illinois had two chances to win in the final seconds but a shot by Kendall Gill was blocked under the basket and another possession ended with a turnover with six seconds left.

The victory improved Indiana's record to 13-6 overall and 5-4 in the conference. Illinois fell to 14-8, 4-5 in the Big Ten.

Illinois was led by Nick Anderson, who scored 22 points, and Ken Battle who had 15. Dean Garrett added 18 points for Indiana.

Illinois led at 42-33 at halftime, and scored the first basket of the second half. But the Hoosiers, led by Edwards and Garrett, began to chip away at the 11-point advantage.

The Hoosiers tied the score at 62 on a 3-point basket by Edwards with 8:30 remaining in the game.

From there, the Hoosiers took charge and led 73-66 with three minutes left. The Illini then got four straight points from Anderson, who later stole the ball and fed Glynn Blackwell for a basket, narrowing the game to 73-72.

St. John's 62

NEW YORK (AP) — Sherman Douglas scored 22 points Saturday as No. 12 Syracuse pulled away for a 79-62 victory over No. 20 St. John's.

The Orangemen, 17-5 overall and 6-3 in the Big East, broke from a 40-37 halftime lead with a 6-2 run to match their largest lead of the first half.

Syracuse's Derrick Coleman then picked up his fourth foul but it hardly seemed to matter as the Orangemen went on to their fourth straight victory with reserve Derek Brower scoring four straight points for a 56-45 lead with 10:48 to play.

The closest St. John's, 14-5 and 5-4, could get was 67-57 with 5:44 to play on a banked 3-pointer by Boo Harvey.

Rony Seikaly added 16 points for Syracuse, while Stephen Thompson had 15 and Matt Roe 10, all in the first half.

Shelton Jones led St. John's with 22 points, while Michael Porter added 16.

The St. John's bench did not score a point for the second straight game, both losses for the Redmen.

Syracuse jumped to a 9-2 lead and the Redmen managed to get within 11-10 but the Orangemen went on a 6-0 run to take a seven-point lead again as Coleman, who finished with eight, scored four of the points.

St. John's managed its first lead of the game at 31-29 with 6:02 to play when Matt Brust made two free throws. A jumper by Porter gave the Redmen their largest lead of the half.

Roe hit his second 3-pointer of the game with 2:57 left in the half to bring Syracuse within 35-34 then he added two free throws to give Syracuse the lead again.

A short jumper in the lane on an inbounds pass by Jones, who made all seven of his shots in the half in scoring 15 points, gave St. John's the lead with 1:40 to play and Syracuse scored the final four points of the half, the last two by Douglas on a nice spin move with three seconds left, to take the 40-37 halftime lead.

Houston 69

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Herbert Crook scored 20 points as Louisville built a 19-point lead early in the second half and then survived a barrage of 3-point shots by Houston for a 73-69 victory Saturday.

Louisville, 13-8, converted 30 Houston turnovers into 43 points, while the Cougars scored 27 points off 21 Cardinal miscues.

Houston, however, made up for its poor ball handling by hitting 10 of 12 3-pointers in the second half to keep itself in the game.

LaBradford Smith, who was held scoreless in the first half, scored nine points during a 17-3 scoring outburst to start the second half that gave Louisville its largest lead at 52-33 with 13:55 left in the game.

But Houston used a 15-2 scoring run — fueled by five 3-point shots — including three by Richard Hollis, to pull within 54-48 at the 10:48 mark.

Louisville then scored 10 straight points over the next two minutes to go up by 16 before Houston came back again.

College Basketball Notes

What name a coaching staff gives to a play can be important during the game to those players in it and on the bench.

Before his team's recent game with San Diego State, Brigham Young Coach Ladell Andersen added a new play to the Cougars' book. He and his staff needed a name for the play and as they were mulling a moniker, freshman David Wolfe walked by so they named the play "Wolf."

During the game Andersen wanted the play run so he stood and yelled to the point guard on the floor to run "Wolf." Apparently the noise was louder in BYU's 22,700-seat Marriott Center than Andersen thought and he had to yell the name a number of times.

David Wolfe, a 6-foot-9 forward who has played in just four games while scoring 10 points for the Cougars, the last undefeated Division I team, thought he was being summoned by the staff and he stood and ripped his warmups off for his earliest entrance of the season.

Andersen had to tell Wolfe he was crying just that and the Pomona, Calif. native had to return to the bench.

When he was a freshman in the 1982-83 season, current senior starter Jim Usevitch was seeing sparse playing time as backup to Greg Kite, later an NBA player with Boston and currently the Los Angeles Clippers.

In a game at Michigan State, Kite was saddled with three fouls quickly and Coach Frank Arnold yelled for Usevitch to enter the game. In his exuberance, Usevitch gave his warmup pants a good pull and down they went along with his uniform shorts. The East Lansing crowd roared as Usevitch scrambled to straighten things out before entering the Cougars' 63-55 loss.

When Villanova entered the Top Twenty last week it was the first appearance for the Wildcats in the rankings since the week of Feb. 4, 1985 when they were ranked 16th.

The next week, the Wildcats dropped three straight, losing to St. John's, Georgetown and Boston College.

The Wildcats had trouble again after being voted 19th in last week's poll. They lost to St. John's and Providence before snapping the quick losing streak with a victory over Georgetown.

Coach Rollie Massimino might just feel some good vibrations from the situation, however. The last time Villanova was ranked it went on to win the national championship.

Eldridge, who has been handing the pieces out to some members of the media, said his office received hundreds of calls after Lane's spectacular dunk that was shown live on national television.

Only three of the calls were of the unexpected variety, the rest were asking for details, interviews and souvenirs.

"Two writers called and asked if the school planned on fining Jerome as they do in the NBA," Eldridge said refusing to reveal the pair. "Another man called and said he is a taxpayer and that he was upset that his money was going to fix the backboard and we were making light of it."

Panthers freshman Darelle Porter was awed by Lane's feat and when he went over to the junior forward he said: "Gee Jerome, I know Coach keeps yelling at you to take it stronger to the hole, but that was ridiculous."

Moorman Arrested In Virginia

RALEIGH (AP) — Former North Carolina State quarterback Percy Moorman, who had been charged with sexual assault in North Carolina until last year, has been arrested in Virginia after police discovered an outstanding warrant pending against him.

Virginia police discovered the warrant after Moorman was stopped for a traffic offense Friday night in Danville, Va.

The warrant, issued by police in Radford, Va., charged Moorman with assault and battery, trespassing and damage to property, Danville Police Sgt. J.A. McLaughlin told the News and Observer of Raleigh. The Radford warrant listed the date of the offense as Dec. 15, 1986.

According to Danville police records, the warrant was taken out by Ann Moore of Radford. Details of the incident were not available.

Danville jail officials would not say whether Moorman had been released on bond after his arrest at 8:45 p.m. Friday. He is scheduled for arraignment Feb. 25.

Moorman was arrested in Raleigh in September 1984 in connection with the alleged assault and rape of an 18-year-old N.C. State freshman in her dormitory room. He was sentenced to 12 years in prison on a conviction of second-degree rape, second-degree sexual assault and breaking and entering, but the North Carolina Court of Appeals threw out the rape charge and upheld the remaining conviction in September 1986.

In July 1987, the N.C. Supreme Court granted Moorman a new trial, but the Wake County district attorney dropped all charges against him when the woman declined to testify in the second trial.

In December 1986, when the Radford incident allegedly took place, Moorman was attending school at a community college in Danville. He went to prison on the North Carolina charge in January 1987, where he remained until his conviction was overturned.

Moorman has since been living in Oakland, Calif. — the home address he gave police Friday when he was arrested. He had hoped to play football there at a local junior college.

Baylor, Fisk Mulling Over Opportunities

NEW YORK (AP) — Free agent Don Baylor is expected to make a decision on what team he will sign with by Monday, his agent said Saturday.

Reached at San Diego, Jerry Kapstein said, "There have been numerous discussions between myself and representatives of various clubs during the past week. We have come to the point where I'm sure Don will be making a final decision on Monday. No agreement has been reached with any club, and discussions continued Saturday."

Kapstein declined comment on the teams involved. Baylor was a designated hitter for Boston and Minnesota last year, and the Twins, Kansas City, Oakland and San Diego have expressed interest in him for 1988.

Kapstein also confirmed that Kansas City had made an offer for catcher Carlton Fisk, whose free agency was restored by arbitrator Thomas Roberts, who found the owners had conspired to restrain the movement of 1985 free agents.

"I plan to continue discussions with Kansas City as well as other clubs next week, but I do not expect a decision within the next few days," Kapstein said.

Fisk spent the 1987 season with the Chicago White Sox.

Seabrooks Retains Bantamweight Title

PARIS (AP) — Kelvin Seabrooks of Charlotte, N.C., knocked down Mexico's Fernando Beltran four times, three in the second round, to retain his International Boxing Federation bantamweight title Saturday.

The American improved his record to 23-13, with 18 KOs. Beltran fell to 54-6.

It was Seabrooks' third title defense since he won the vacant crown May 15, 1987 by knocking out Miguel Maturana of Colombia. He stopped Frenchman Thierry Jacob on July 4 in Calais, France, and knocked out Ernie Cataluna of the Philippines on Nov. 18 in San Cataldo, Italy.

Beltran, 26, was the IBF's fifth-ranked challenger.

As the round was drawing to a close, Beltran backed Seabrooks against the ropes. But the champion caught his opponent in a crouch and nailed him with a crunching left hook that put the challenger on the deck for the third time.

Seabrooks originally was to have fought Louis Gomis at La Seyne sur Mer on the French Riviera, but an eye injury forced Gomis to announce his retirement in January. Beltran was substituted and the fight was moved to Paris.

NFL Investigating Broncos' Organization

DENVER (AP) — The NFL has started an investigation into a bonus system used by the Denver Broncos, a newspaper reported Saturday.

The Rocky Mountain News said NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle confirmed that his office is looking into the bonuses that Denver Broncos owner Pat Bowlen offered his players this season.

"I just read about it in the papers," Rozelle said Friday. "I could have a problem with it. ... Our people are looking into it."

The team's coaching staff reportedly gave bonuses to Broncos players for making certain key plays, such as interceptions or fumble recoveries. Cornerback Jeremiah Castille said he earned $200 for causing and recovering a fumble in the AFC championship game against Cleveland.

The league fined San Francisco 49ers owner Edward DeBartolo $50,000 this year for offering to match playoff bonuses if the team made the playoffs. Bowlen was one of the more outspoken owners against DeBartolo's bonus system, the News said.

Grimsley, Hillside Win Titles Again

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Greensboro Grimsley's girls and Durham Hillside's boys successfully defended their North Carolina High School Athletic Association indoor championships Saturday at the University of North Carolina.

The boys' competition went down the final event, the mile relay, and Hillside finished second to edge Richmond County for the title. The victorious Hornets finished with 50.33 points to 48 to Richmond.

Charlotte Garinger was third with 42, followed by Sun Valley at 28 and Watauga at 26.

Grimsley rolled up 78 points to 56 for Greensboro Dudley. East Mecklenburg was third with 50 and Hillside was fourth with 27. Jacksonville was fifth at 20.

Vince Howard of Greensboro Page was the boys' MVP for winning both the one-mile and two-mile. He set a state record in the two-mile with a time of 9:38.9. Hillside's Doramus Brewer won the 600-yard run and was third in the 300-yard run to lead his school to victory.

Tomi Ogumba of East Mecklenburg earned the women's MVP honor, winning both the 600 and the 1,000 in record times and placing second in the 300 and running a leg of the mile relay.

Bird-Jordan Show Highlights Day

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan and Larry Bird showed again Saturday why they are NBA superstars by walking on air and shooting a basketball under pressure better than anyone else.

Jordan, with a sellout Chicago Stadium crowd of 18,403 behind him, outscored Dominique Wilkins on the last dunk of the final round to win the NBA Slam Dunk contest for the second straight year.

Jordan admitted the five judges might have been swayed by the overwhelming fan support he got.

"If it wasn't in Chicago, it might have gone the other way," Jordan said.

Jordan needed a 47 to tie and a 48 to win before his final attempt after Wilkins got perfect 50 scores on his first to dunks of the final round, then got a 45 for a double-pump two-handed slam.

"I was shocked when he received a 45, but it gave me some leeway," Jordan said.

Jordan then got a perfect 50 on his final dunk when he took off about a foot inside the free-throw line and rammed the ball through the basket. On a similar attempt last year when he won the contest in Seattle, Jordan's final step was just behind the free-throw line.

The final score Saturday was 147-145.

Bird didn't have to rely on judges to win the Long Distance Shooting contest.

He hit his last three shots of the final round, including his final attempt with a ball worth two points, for a 17-15 victory over Dale Ellis. If Bird had missed the last shot, they would have needed another round of shots to break the 15-15 tie.

"I kept score in my head," said Bird, who has won all three Long Distance Shooting contests. "I knew exactly how many I needed in the last rack (of five balls)."

In the second round, Bird earned 23 of a possible 30 points by hitting 18 of 25 attempts from behind the 3-point circle. At one point in the contest, he made 11 straight while using the two-point ball at the end of each rack.

"It's been a little easier to win it each year," Bird said of his domination of the 3-point shooters. "After winning the first two years, the other guys know who the favorite is. I don't have to talk as much."

Before the final round, with six competitors already eliminated, Ellis won a coin flip and elected to shoot his 25 balls first.

"I wanted to put a little pressure on Larry," Ellis said. "I guess that was the wrong thing to do. He's a pressure shooter."

Bird said he should win the contest and the $12,500 first prize every year "because I'm a good shooter and I have confidence in my shot and I can get in a rhythm."

The third All-Star Saturday event, held in conjunction with Sunday's 38th annual All-Star game, was an Old-Timers game.

"I still got that kid in me and the competitive spark that won't allow me to lose," said former Chicago star Norm Van Lier, summarizing the sentiments of the former players. "It brought back memories playing in front of a packed house. It was strange at first."

"I didn't pull a muscle and I didn't get a point," former Laker Tom Hawkins said. "Next year I will come back in better shape and hope to get a hoop."

The All-Star Saturday events were held in the wake of Friday night's vote by player representatives to withdraw the union as the players' exclusive collective bargaining agent.

But on Saturday, Commissioner David Stern said the move does not mean the players don't want to deal with the owners.

Larry Fleisher, the union's general counsel, said the move is designed to cancel the league's legal ability to place free agency restraints on players and rookies.

"It's a transparent litigation ploy, but an intelligent one," Stern said. "But it does not take away the players' basic desire to make a deal of some kind with us."

Asked how the owners can reach a deal with the union if it refuses to act as the players' negotiating agent, Stern said, "We can run from each other, but we can't hide. Somehow or other, we have to make a deal. They say they won't negotiate a collective bargaining agreement, but they can negotiate a settlement of the lawsuit. Whatever you call it, we hope to reach an agreement."

"This is the best bargaining chip we've got left," said Denver's Alex English, the new union president. "We're not going on strike, so this is the way we're going. We feel it gives us leverage in court."

Lopez Endures For Mazda Lead

Lopez overcame blustery conditions to shoot a 1-under-par 71 Saturday for a four-stroke lead after three rounds of the $200,000 Mazda Classic, the first tournament of the LPGA season.

A 20 mph wind and temperatures in the mid-50s were an unpleasant contrast to warm, sunny weather for the first two rounds, but the $30,000 first prize kept Lopez going.

"In the cold, I don't play unless I get paid to play," she said with a smile. "It got tough out there. On the back side it got really cold."

Lopez began the third round two strokes ahead of Patti Rizzo, Tris Johnson and Betsy King. Rizzo and Johnson shot 76s, and King had a 77.

Lopez sank birdie putts of 15 and 8 feet on the second and seventh holes, made 10 straight pars and bogeyed No. 18.

"I think it was a real good score," Lopez said. "I would've taken a 71 before I started. I would've taken a 72, too."

Her total was 208, 8 under par on the 6,368-yard Stonebridge Golf and Country Club course.

Lopez has played well since August, winning once and finishing second four times in five tour events. She also teamed with Miller Barber to win the $500,000 first prize in the Mazda Champions in Jamaica two months ago.

Lopez's closest pursuers never threatened her lead Saturday. King had six bogeys, and Rizzo made three straight on the back nine. Johnson, a rookie from Wales, was penalized two strokes on the 14th hole for moving brush in an area marked as a hazard and took a triple bogey 7.

"They had a little red line around it, but I had no reason to think it was a hazard," Johnson said.

Marta Figueras-Dotti of Spain, who termed the weather "miserable," shot a 72 and was in second place at 4-under 212. Martha Foyer overcame three bogeys for a 72 and was at 213. Both players are looking for their first LPGA title.

Cathy Marino's 70, the day's best round, left her tied at 2-under 214 with Missie McGeorge, Amy Benz, Patty Sheehan and Jan Stephenson. Sheehan and Stephenson shot 71. McGeorge made the turn at 5 under but shot 39 on the back side for a 74.

Johnson and Figueras-Dotti agreed that Lopez will be hard to catch in Sunday's final round.

"If she shoots an 80 ..." Figeras-Dotti said. "If the weather stays like this, she's a lock," said Johnson, who was in Lopez's threesome Saturday. "She's so steady. You can never see her hit a bad shot. It's a bit demoralizing, really."

Lopez is gunning for her 37th LPGA victory but has never won a season-opening tournament.

Her strategy for the final round?

"Wear more clothes," she said.

Third-round scores Saturday from the $200,000 LPGA Mazda Classic, played on the 6,348-yard, par-72 Stonebridge Golf and Country club:

Olympic Room Foul-Up Could Hurt

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Calgary police are investigating a local booking agency for a foul-up that could leave hundreds of Winter Olympic spectators stranded and without rooms.

It is the second time in less than two years that police have become involved in allegations of wrongdoing surrounding the Calgary Games.

With only a week left before the Games' opening ceremonies next Saturday, organizing committee officials admitted they are concerned about "potential problems" with housing and transportation for Olympic visitors since the operating director of Calgary-based World Marketing Services Inc., apparently left the company.

"We have been looking into it since Wednesday," said Grant Howard, media relations officer for the Calgary police. "The problem is that our boys have only been on it a few days, and they haven't gotten the final details to tell whether this is a civil or criminal problem, or whether it will resolve itself."

In October 1986, Jim McGregor, who was the organizing committee's first ticket supervisor, was indicted for theft, fraud and mischief. McGregor was charged with doctoring official Olympic ticket order forms in order to receive payment to his own company, World Tickets Inc., in U.S. rather than Canadian dollars.

A U.S. dollar currently is worth about $1.23 Canadian. McGregor comes to trial in June.

Meanwhile, the International Olympic Committee said it would let the International Speed Skating Federation resolve the case of a Soviet speed skater charged with trafficking steroids.

Prince Alexander de Merode, head of the IOC Medical Commission, told the IOC's executive board Saturday that he was still awaiting further information from the international federation and Soviet sports authorities.

Sergei Guliaev, 1984 Olympic gold medal-winning speed skater, reportedly has been passing steroids to speed skaters from Norway. Guliaev, who is not suspected of using the muscle-building drug himself, has denied knowing what was in packages he passed to Norwegian skater Stein Krosby.

The Calgary organizing committee, known as OCO'88, said its main concern in the World Marketing situation was confirming transportation arrangements for those who had booked through the agency.

The Calgary Herald reported in its Saturday editions that World Marketing may be holding 300 reservations on which deposits have not been made, even though Olympic tour package buyers across Canada and Europe made full payment on the rooms to World Marketing. Other rooms may have been double booked, the paper said, quoting sources.

"It's a disaster," the paper quotes one high-ranking OCO'88 official as saying.

World Marketing was set up last April as the hotel and transportation booking agent for Olson Travelworld Ltd. of California, official U.S. ticket sales agent. Olson Travelworld isn't suspected of any wrongdoing.

Howard said OCO'88 met on Friday with Olson Travel representatives and on Saturday with World Travel people "to see if the problem can be resolved."

"Our main concern is whether criminal activity has taken place," Howard said.

Terry Bullick, spokesperson for OCO'88, said her office had not yet received any complaints of housing problems resulting from the booking agency problem.

"We're sort of a third party in this," she said. "We are, of course, very interested in helping anyone who has a problem."

Although it could not be immediately confirmed, the Herald reported that OCO'88 had sold $35,000 in tickets to World Marketing.

"It's our understanding that the tickets are all secure," Bullick said.

OCO'88 spokesperson Renee Smith said the organizing committee felt confident any housing problems could be solved as they came up. New arrangements for transportation, however, were causing headaches since travel reservations apparently never were made for some tourists booking through World Marketing.

The Herald reported that those answering the phones at World Marketing on Friday said Richard Allan, director of operations, had left the company, and Allan could not be reached at home. There was no answer at World Marketing's number on Saturday.

According to a Calgary police sargent, who asked that his name not be used, the investigation is being handled by the department's commercial crime unit.

Howard said further information on the investigation could be released Monday.

At the same time, more athletes and a warm wind arrived in Calgary.

Jaguars Nip Rams In OT, 62-58

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

FARMVILLE — Tyrone Joyner hit a 3-point basket less than a minute into overtime and Farmville Central never trailed again as the Jaguars slipped past pesky Greene Central, 62-58, Friday night in Eastern Plains Conference basketball action.

Farmville's girls pulled out a 56-44 win over the Lady Rams in their game.

The victory allowed Farmville to hold to a one-game lead in the EPC standings at 7-0 in the conference. Greene Central drops off to 3-4 in league play.

The Jaguars appeared ready to run away with the game in the second quarter, taking as much as a 12-point lead at 30-18 before the Rams rallied back to within eight at the half.

They closed that to one in the third period and took the lead early in the fourth period. Both teams then had their chances but Farmville could not hit its free throws and Greene Central's Maurice Streeter missed a shot just before the horn, forcing the game into an overtime.

Trailing by two, 43-41, as the final quarter opened, the Rams got baskets from Anthony Jones and Reggie Atkinson to tie it up and take the lead, 45-43 a minute and a half into the period. George Burnette hit a 3-pointer to put Farmville back on top, 46-45, but after Jarvis Lang hit another bucket for the Jags, Shay Beamon canned a 3-pointer to tie it once more at 48-48. Burnette put Farmville back up, 50-48, but Jones nailed another 3-pointer for a 51-50 Ram lead with 4:08 to play.

Alexander Daniels made a shot from underneath and Gary Moore put in two free throws for a 54-51 lead by the Jags with 3:16 left — but the Jaguars were not to score again in regulation.

Jones hit off a rebound and Streeter hit the first of a one-and-one to tie it once more, 54-54 with 2:31 to go.

Moore missed a chance at the line when the first of a one-and-one was negated by his own lane violation, and both Burnette and Daniels missed the front end of one-and-one chances in the final two minutes, as did Greene Central's Atkinson.

Joyner — who made four 3-pointers in the game — hit from behind the arc to open the overtime and Farmville was never caught again. Streeter pulled it back to one, 57-56, with a tap-back, but Daniels nailed two free throws, Lang stuffed one off the fast break and Moore hit the first of a one-and-one for a 62-56 lead with 51 seconds left to sew it up.

"We played hard, but they just have too much fire power and jumping ability," Greene Central coach Lewis Godwin' said. "I think we outscrapped them in the second half, though, but in the overtime, when it was still close, we took a couple of bad shots that hurt us.

"I thought we banged the boards better tonight that we have, but I take nothing from Farmville. I'm just proud of the way our kids played night. We've just got to get a little luck sometime."

Farmville coach Mike Terrell praised the game played by the Rams. "When they play like that, they're capable of beating anyone," he said. "Their (Maurice Streeter and Tyrone Streeter) made it tough to get the ball inside. And when we did get it inside, we'd lose the handle or travel.

"They made us shoot from the outside and we're not a strong outside shooting team. It just seemed like we could never get a spurt going," Terrell said.

Terrell was also surprised by the Jaguars lack of ability to hit at the foul line. "We are leading the conference in free throw shooting, but we couldn't make one tonight (13-27, including 5-14 in the last quarter and overtime)."

Neither team shot well either. Farmville connected on 22 of 57 shots (38.6 percent), while Greene Central made just 20 of 64 (31.3 percent).

"I thought that we shot better than that," Godwin said. "In fact, I thought we had shot better than they did."

Greene Central took the lead early on an opening 3-point jumper by Tyrone Hardy. The Rams moved out by as much as five, 9-4, before Lang ignited a comeback that took the lead at 11-9 with 2:58 left in the period. Lang made four points in the seven-point stretch.

Jones tied it up, 11-11, but Lang made two free throws and Joyner added a pair of 3-pointers to give the Jaguars a 19-11 lead at the end of the period.

Lang and Reggie Barrett led a second period blitz that raised the score to 30-18, giving the Jaguars their biggest lead of the night. But the Jags missed their last five shots of the quarter, and Greene Central took advantage, scoring five points of its own to close the margin to 35-28 at intermission.

Farmville — after exchanging several baskets with the Rams — moved back out by nine, 43-34. But Jones hit a 3-pointer and Johnnie Joyner made two free throws, with Jones adding another basket to trim the lead to 43-41 at the end of the third period.

Then came the Ram rally that carried them briefly into the lead — setting up the final scramble the rest of the way.

Lang led Farmville with 19 points while Joyner had 12 and Barrett and Burnette each had 10.

Farmville is now 14-2 overall while the Rams drop to 8-10.

In the girls' contest, the two teams battled back and forth through the opening minutes before Greene Central took the lead at 8-7 on a driving layup by Chanel Hooker with 3:05 left. The Lady Rams held the lead the rest of the way, building up a 14-7 lead.

But Farmville Central rallied in the second frame, tying it at 17-17, then taking the lead at 19-18 for the first time on a basket by Wanda Bullock.

The Jaguars scored the first two baskets of the second half to up the lead to 29-22. Reid scored 10 points in the quarter to power the Jaguars from there out to a 41-28 lead.

Farmville ran its lead out to 15, 49-34, midway through the final period before Greene Central closed back to within seven, 51-44. But Farmville scored the final five points — all at the line — to post the win.

The victory kept Farmville, 5-2, in at least a share of first place in the league while Greene Central falls out of a share, dropping to 4-3. Farmville and Greene Central are both 8-9 overall.

Reid led Farmville with 18 points while Harrison had 17 and Bullock, 12. Greene Central was paced by Hooker with 26.

AG's Balanced Attack Tops Pitt

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

LITTLEFIELD — North Pitt set out to concentrate on Ayden-Grifton top guns Eric Blount and Ronnell Peterson and that gave the other Chargers an opportunity to pick up the slack Friday night.

The Chargers used a balanced scoring attack with four players in doubles figures to take a 56-49 Eastern Plains basketball win over the Panthers Friday night.

Peterson and Blount still got their points, 15 and 10 respectively, but Leon Dixon provided 13 points inside and Darryl Moye added 10 more outside for the Chargers, now 12-5 overall and 6-1 in the EPC.

"I felt like Eric and Ronnell did a good job of not forcing the shots and allowing the other guys to score," said Ayden-Grifton coach Bob Murphrey. "I don't think that teams can beat us doing that. We were trying to screen for them (Peterson and Blount) and let them screen for each other."

North Pitt coach Cobby Deans said it was a calculated risk defensively but one that had to be taken.

"You've got to give up something," he said. "I'd rather take the chance with the other ones shooting."

North Pitt hung tough for most of the ball game, never letting the Chargers build up too much of a lead, but each time the Panthers made a charge, they couldn't close the gap all the way.

After falling behind by 10 by halftime, North Pitt made a surge early in the third period.

Clayton Cherry opened the quarter with a jumper to make it 32-24. After a Charger miss, Calvin Hunter put in a layup to trim the lead to six at 32-26.

After an Ayden-Grifton timeout, Peterson connected from outside to make it 34-28. The two teams then traded baskets before Randy House hit a jumper and Reggie Daniels followed with a layup to make it 36-32 with 4:40 to go in the quarter.

Moye though, countered for the Chargers, hitting his second consecutive jumper to make it 38-32. North Pitt drew back within four on two free throws by Hunter but Moye hit again to give Ayden-Grifton a 40-34 advantage.

The four-point bulge was as close as the Panthers would get all night. Aaron Harper came up with a steal and then hit a shot inside to make it 42-34 with 1:48 remaining in the period and Blount added a layup to make it 44-34.

With momentum shifting the Chargers' way in the final seconds of the third period, House nailed a 3-pointer with 11 seconds left to draw the Panthers back within 44-37.

"We come back and let a lack of concentration take us out of the ball game," Deans said. "I think it's just (a lack of) concentration."

Ayden-Grifton moved out to a bigger lead early in the fourth quarter, going up 50-37 on two baskets by Peterson and a inside hoop by Dixon.

The Chargers moved out to their biggest lead at 55-41 following two straight baskets by Dixon, the second one being a three-point play with 4:33 to to.

The lead hovered between 10-13 for the majority of the period before North Pitt pulled within 55-47 with 1:11 to go on a pair of free throws by Daniels but by then it was almost too little, too late. The Chargers hit on only one of three front-end one-and-one situations but North Pitt's only score off the miscues was a follow shot by Rufus Bynum in the final seconds that made it 56-49.

"We had a couple of breakdowns in rebounding that hurt us," Deans said. "We had a few breakdowns inside where there shouldn't have. There were people standing around that got baskets."

Murphrey said though he thought the Chargers lacked intensity over the whole game, they did pick it up at the key times.

"I think the point at the beginning of the third quarter, we got a lot more active," he said. "Defensively, we forced the ball out further on .the court which makes it tougher for them to get the ball inside."

Daniels led North Pitt, 6-11 and 3-4, with 15 points. Hunter added 12.

In the girls' game, North Pitt built up an early lead and eased by the Lady Chargers, 40-30.

The Pant-Hers led only 8-6 after the first quarter but built up a 23-13 advantage by halftime.

North Pitt led 31-22 at the end of the third quarter and and was ahead 38-24 with just under four minutes to go on a bucket inside by Amy Heath.

But Ayden-Grifton came back to narrow the gap to 10 on two jumpers by Tammy Brown that made it 38-28 but the Lady Chargers would get no closer.

Iris Brown led Ayden-Grifton, 2-16 overall and 1-6 in the EPC, with 12 points while Keisha Pilgreen had 17 points for North Pitt. Gwen Pilgreen added 12 points for the Pant-Hers, 9-6 and 5-2.

Medlin's Big 4th Quarter Leads Vikes By Pam Pack

WASHINGTON — Phil Medlin scored 12 fourth-quarter points, including the go-ahead bucket with 1:21 to go as D.H. Conley took a 64-60 win over Washington in a key Coastal Conference basketball matchup Friday night.

The Vikings rallied from a 16-point first half deficit and took the lead for good in the final quarter when Medlin scored on a dunk at the 1:21 mark to make it 61-59.

He was called for a technical foul on the play for hanging on the rim, allowing Bob Rhodes to hit a free throw to draw Washington within 61-60 but then the Pam Pack failed to score on the ensuring possession.

Medlin added two free throws with 28 seconds remaining to make it 63-60 and James Smith added another free throws with 20 seconds to go to provide the final margin.

Medlin finished with 27 points to lead the Vikes while Paul Merritt added 10.

Conley trailed the first two and a half quarters before tying it up at 40-40 with 1:50 to go in the third period on a shot by Merritt.

From there the lead went back and forth. Rhodes gave Washington a 56-55 lead with a free throw with 2:32 to to go.

Conley, though, came back to score two baskets in a row by Jonathan Bonner and Bronswell Patrick to make it 59-56 with 2:09 remaining.

Washington tied it up again when Ryan Dixon hit a 3-pointer with 1:53 to go to make it 59-59. Washington then took the lead with 1:27 to go on a free throw by Rhodes but it was the last time the Pam Pack would hold the lead.

The win moves Conley to 12-5 overall and in sole possession of the conference lead with a record of 6-1. The Vikings return to action Tuesday at home against North Lenoir, the only Coastal team to beat the Vikings this year.

Nico Hines led Washington with 16 points while Bob Rhodes and Ryan Dixon added 12 and 11 points, respectively, for the Pam Pack, 13-4 and 4-3.

Wake took the lead early, going up 37-30 at the half and 59-42 after three quarters of play.

House finished with 40 points, including five 3-pointers, to lead GCA.

John May added 11 and Franklin Huggins had 10 for the Knights.

Richmond Is Suspended After He Tested Positive

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Tim Richmond was suspended indefinitely Saturday by NASCAR after testing positive for a prohibited substance under the guidelines of the stock car sanctioning body's new substance abuse policy.

Richmond, who has been trying to find a ride for Sunday's Busch Clash and the Feb. 14 Daytona 500, could not be reached for comment.

However, the 32-year-old driver from Ashland, Ohio, has consistently denied rumors that drug use led to a serious bout with double pneumonia that limited him to eight races in 1987.

The new policy calls for a drug test to be given to competitors, crew members or NASCAR officials if there is a "reasonable suspicion" of drug use.

Richmond has been the only driver asked to take the test.

A NASCAR statement said, in part: "He (Richmond) was tested and submitted a urine sample Thursday. It was tested by NASCAR Drug Advisor Dr. Forest S. Tennant Friday. Richmond was informed of the indefinite suspension by NASCAR officials Saturday morning.

"NASCAR's Substance Abuse Policy, first announced publicly on Jan. 25, requires an immediate suspension for a competitor testing true positive for substance abuse. Suspensions may be lifted at a later date if the competitor tests negative."

Bill France Jr., president of NASCAR and son of the organization's founder, said, "We had a test and the results speak for themselves. We're not saying, 'Goody, Goody, the first race we nailed somebody.' No one is saying that. I think it's a shame we have this problem in our society."

Tim Richmond

Richmond, whose Hollywood looks and flamboyant personality have prompted him to talk of a movie career in the future, led the Winston Cup series in 1986 with seven victories.

He was expected to contest the championship last season, but was out of action early in the year with his illness. When Richmond came back to the Hendrick Motorsports team just before midseason, he quickly re-established his driving skill, winning a pole and two straight races before suffering an apparent relapse of pneumonia.

He resigned from the Hendrick team late in the season, saying he did not want people counting on him when his health was so uncertain.

Several of the top competitors in the stock car sport appeared saddened by Richmond's situation.

"I'm sad," said Geoff Bodine. "I feel bad for Tim. It's a waste of a human life, that's the important thing. But it's also a waste of a great talent. I hope and pray, now that this is public, Tim will be able to get himself straightened out."

Dale Earnhardt, the two-time defending Winston Cup champion, said, "I hate it. He's a good driver."

Darrell Waltrip, like Earnhardt a three-time overall series champion, said, "All I can say is think God for drug testing. I think our sport needs to be on the same level as other professional sports, like baseball and football, and drug testing is a part of that.

"Unfortunately," he added, "it's going to catch some people in the web at some point."

Rusty Wallace said, "I'm sorry because I thought the guy had everything go for him. His style and personality were good for the sport."

Richmond started as a short track driver in the Midwest and got to the major leagues of the sport as an Indy-car driver. He was Rookie of the Year in the 1980 Indianapolis 500 and took the first of his 11 career NASCAR victories in 1982.

Elliott Still Insisting That He Could Be Embarrassed

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Defending champion Bill Elliott says he could be embarrassed in the $230,000 Busch Clash Sunday at Daytona International Speedway.

While most of his competitors figure Elliott has been sandbagging, the Dawsonville, Ga., speedster, who has practically owned the 2.5-mile, high-banked Daytona oval since 1985, insists it isn't true.

"I'll just hold it wide open and see what happens," Elliott said. "Yesterday (Friday), I couldn't keep up with (Geoff) Bodine. He passed me just like I passed him in '85. I couldn't find anybody slow enough to draft.

"I'll probably be so embarrassed after the Busch Clash I might want to take the week off," he added. "I'm not complaining, just stating the facts."

This is the same Elliott who not only won last year's Clash, a 20-lap, 50-mile sprint race for a $50,000 first prize, but won the pole for the Daytona 500, then won NASCAR stock car racing's premier event.

He's back with basically the same Ford Thunderbird, the car that has been so intimdiating on the superspeedways since 1985.

But rule changes and some new car models apparently have put the rule of the Fords in serious jeopardy.

Some of the questions may have been answered Saturday in pole qualifying.

Ken Schrader won the pole in a Chevrolet and Davey Allison was second in a Ford, followed by the Chevrolets of Bodine and Darrell Waltrip, the Buick of Bobby Allison and Elliott's Ford.

The Clash involves only the pole-winners from the 1987 season and one wild-card entry, but there is enough of a mix of car makes to give some indication which will have an edge in next Sunday's Daytona 500.

"There are a lot of new cars," said Terry Labonte, who won the Clash in 1985. "Buick, Oldsmobile and Pontiac all have new models. There are several new teams, a bunch of personnel changes on last year's teams and some driver changes on other. It will take some sorting out.

"All of this year's (winter) testing was done by make of car," he added. "In other words, we ran only with other Chevrolets, Fords ran with Fords, Oldsmobiles with Oldsmobiles, etc. So, we haven't had a chance to see how we'll draft with the new cars."

The 12-car Clash field includes four Fords, five Chevrolets, two Buicks and one Pontiac.

Tim Richmond, who was supposed to start 12th in the Clash, was suspended indefinitely Saturday by NASCAR after testing positive for a prohibited substance in the first recorded drug test in the history of the stock car series.

Richmond, who missed most of the 1987 season with double pneumonia, qualified for the Clash with a pole win at Pocono and also won two of eight races in which he ran.

The lineup was set Thursday in a blind draw, with Bodine, the fastest driver in winter testing and in Friday's practice, gaining the pole position and two-time defending Winston Cup champion Dale Earnhardt on the outside of the front row.

Safety Training May Be Required for Hunters

North Carolina sportsmen may be required to take a safety course before purchasing their first hunting licenses, if the N.C. Wildlife Federation gets its way in the General Assembly next year.

Although the issue will not be presented to the Assembly until 1989, the question will be put before hunters this month at a series of public hearings across the state.

The Federation recently announced it would seek mandatory safety training for first-time hunting license buyers. Anyone turning 16 would be required to take the course, as would adults who had never purchased a hunting license.

"Mandatory hunter safety training has been a goal of the Federation for many years," said Dr. Charles S. Manooch, president of the non-profit organization.

The first hearing will be conducted Monday at 7 p.m. in the Craven County Courthouse in New Bern (Wildlife District 2). The 1988-89 hunting and fishing regulations also will be discussed at the hearing, sponsored by the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission.

"We cut hunting fatalities by over 50 percent this past year with the new blaze orange law, but we feel we can further cut fatalities and make hunting a safer sport by training first-time license buyers," Manooch said.

The new law would be targeted at those with little or no experience in the field. Thirty-five other states have adopted similar regulations and all report a drop in hunting accidents, especially in self-inflicted injuries, according to Dr. Michael F. Corcoran, the Federation's executive vice president.

"If we can cut out most of the self-inflicted injuries through education, then we can eliminate most of the common hunting accidents," Corcoran said. All of the states surrounding North Carolina either have a mandatory hunter safety training law enacted or are getting ready to enact one.

The Federation generally agrees with the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission's proposed hunting and fishing regulations changes. The organization strongly supports the proposed doe regulations, as well as the conversion to non-toxic shot on game lands that are posted waterfowl impoundments.

However, the Federation does not support the Commission's attempt to eliminate all gill net seasons for inland waters. Federation members believe that Commission biologists and law enforcement officials can work together to suggest net lengths, mesh sizes and seasons that would drastically reduce the possibility of harvesting inland game fish during the spring herring run.

In addition, the Federation has asked the Commission to review its extensive deer hunting regulations and attempt to simplify them. According to Wildlife Federation officials, the present regulation system is "too complex and unwieldy, especially for sportsmen who travel widely to hunt."

Federation officials urge sportsmen to attend the public hearings and support mandatory hunter safety training for first-time hunting license buyers.

The Wildlife District 1 hearing will be conducted Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the old courthouse in Edenton. Other hearings will be held in each wildlife district across the state before Feb. 19.

Trout Stocking

More than 100,000 trout will be stocked in western North Carolina lakes and streams in March to accommodate crowds of anglers when the 1988 season opens on April 2.

Personnel at the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission's trout hatcheries are preparing to stock brook, brown and rainbow trout. The current trout season ends Feb. 29.

During the 1988 season, more than 656,000 catchable-size trout will be stocked in the state's general trout waters.

Jr. Babe Ruth Tourney Set

ROBESONVILLE — Roanoke High School will be the host site for this year's state Junior Babe Ruth All-Star baseball tournament to be held July 21-26.

The tournament will be a four-day event and will feature seven district champions from across the state. The host will be Martin County and the teams will be competing for the state title and a trip to the National Regionals.

The tournament is looking for committed baseball people who would like to help with the housing of some 75 participants as well as funding for the entire tournament.

Net Income Rose

First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Pitt County reported net income for the quarter ended Dec. 31 of $462,053 before taxes and $298,025 after taxes, an increase of 1.4 percent from the after tax $293,904 earned during the comparable quarter a year earlier.

The firm said that earnings per share for the quarter just ended and for the same period in 1986 were 81 cents and 79 cents, respectively.

For the six months ended Dec. 31, 1987 net income before tax was $970,655 and net income after tax was $626,072, an increase of 1.2 percent from the after tax $618,560 earned in the six-month period the previous year.

Per share earnings for the first six months of fiscal 1988 were $1.69 compared with $1.67 for the same period a year earlier.

Figures Increased

Vermont American had increased sales and earnings for the fourth quarter and record sales and earnings for the fiscal year ended Dec. 31, according to Robert I. Baker, president.

The spokesman said that in the fourth quarter, net sales were $73,604,000 compared with $66,177,000 for the last quarter of the prior year. Net income was $4,157,000 or 41 cents per share compared with $4,142,000 or 40 cents per share in 1986.

Net sales for the year ended Dec. 31, 1987 were $292,701,000 compared with $255,427,000 in 1986. Net income was $18,360,000 or $1.80 per share compared with $13,548,000 of $1.29 per share in 1986.

Baker said per share amounts for the 1986 period have been adjusted to reflect the five-for-four stock split paid in August 1987.

The company, which manufactures and markets cutting tools, power tool accessories, hand tools, and lawn and garden products for consumer and industrial use, has a plant in Greenville.

Sales-Earnings Up

Fieldcrest Cannon Inc. announced that sales for the fourth quarter of 1987 were $384 million compared to $336 million in the same quarter a year ago.

Banker Says U.S. Can Avoid Recession By Defending Dollar

By HOBART ROWEN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

FRANKFURT, West Germany — The United States and its Western partners can avoid a recession if financial markets are convinced that "the United States is willing to defend its currency," central bank president Karl Otto Poehl said in an interview.

Poehl said Friday he believes "there is a chance" of exchange-rate stability in the wake of Black Monday, both because the Oct. 19 market plunge dampened fears of inflation and because more progress than is realized has been made in reducing global trade imbalances.

But he warned that discussions such as the Washington meeting Thursday between West German Finance Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg and Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III have limited value. "I am not against close cooperation, but (these discussions) should be kept on a low-profile basis," Poehl said. "We don't want to create too many expectations."

(In Washington, Stoltenberg told reporters that the close coordination between finance ministers and central-bank chiefs produced a "more promising" outlook for the world economy this year than most had thought possible in the immediate aftermath of the global market collapse. He said this coordination led to the joint statement issued just before Christmas, as well as "not secret but open market intervention in January" to stop the sharp fall of the dollar.

(As a result, he said, there is a "more stable" situation with exchange rates, the dollar has recovered some strength and there is a change in the expectations of currency traders, who had been pushing the dollar down.

(Stoltenberg said his talks with Baker and Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan "confirmed and strengthened" his conviction that Western Europe, the United States and Japan now believe in good international cooperation to get through a year "of problems and some risks" in the international economy.

(This represents a sharp change from the situation before the market crash, which was blamed in part on Baker's public criticism of West Germany's economic policies and a threat that the United States would let the value of the dollar fall, hurting Bonn's export-oriented industries, if the government refused to stimulate its economic growth. Stoltenberg said West German growth would be about 1½ percent to 2 percent this year "if there is no major volatility in exchange rates.")

Poehl acknowledged that there is widespread fear in Europe of a recession this year or next, triggered by the appreciation of European currencies that will sharply reduce export-related growth. Such a prospect would be enhanced by a further decline of the dollar. "One can't predict the repercussions (of a further) sharp drop in the dollar. We saw what happened on Oct. 19. The markets are very sensitive," he said.

Although he declined to be specific on how the United States should "defend" the dollar, recent reports that the Federal Reserve might ease monetary policy clearly cause concern within the West German government.

Some Contractors Are Like The Man Who Married 27 Times. They Make Too Many Promises.

Talk about making more promises than you can keep, some contractors remind you of the man who, according to the GUINESS BOOK OF WORLD RECORDS, has been married 27 times. Because too many contractors make a lot more promises than they can keep.

But not C.A. Lewis. Integrity is our most important (and most appreciated) tool. And that means that we make every effort not to promise the moon and stars when we can't deliver.

So call C.A. Lewis about your next contracting job. Our extra effort and our integrity mean you'll get a better job. And that's a promise we can keep.

Falling Rates Open Door To Housing Market

By ANN MARIANO
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Declining interest rates are opening up the housing market to more buyers, including first-time purchasers who have had increasing difficulty buying homes during the last several years of rising house prices and interest rates, several economists said this past week.

Since last October's stock-market plunge, mortgage-interest rates have dropped about two percentage points to about 10 percent last week and may inch down by another quarter point to half a point, the economists predicted. Expectations of an economic slowdown have sent all interest rates down recently, and major banks lowered their prime rates to 8½ percent last week, a drop of one-fourth of 1 percent.

Most analysts expect fixed-rate mortgages to stay around 10 percent for most of the year, unless the economy slides into a recession. New single-family home sales dropped 6 percent in December, the Department of Commerce reported last week. Most of the unexpectedly large decline alarmed many home builders, but they believe sales will "bounce back" in the coming months, said David F. Seiders, chief economist for the National Association of Home Builders.

James Christian, chief economist for the U.S. League of Savings Institutions, said, "I'm not looking for a plunge" in mortgage rates but a decline by another quarter of 1 percent is probable. Movement of interest rates in the next few months "will be heavily influenced" by economic indicators reported by the government, he said.

A similar dip early in 1987 brought interest rates down to about 9 and 9½ percent during the first three months of the year, drawing more home buyers into the market. Rates began rising in April and soared to levels of 11 percent and 11½ percent by autumn.

There is little chance rates will go up dramatically later this year, according to Robert Van Order, chief economist for the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., commonly known as Freddie Mac. He said his best guess for the 1988 average is about 10 percent, but "if there is more of a recession, they will go lower."

Prospective buyers benefiting the most from the lower rates will be those looking for their first homes. Nationally, the number of first-time buyers has dropped in the last decade, bringing calls from many industry groups for government action that would help young Americans buy houses. Compared with first-time buyers of a decade ago, Americans buying their first homes now are older, have saved longer and are more likely to buy an existing house than a new one.

The U.S. League of Savings Institutions said last week that the number of first-time buyers dropped to 35.1 percent last year from 39.1 percent of all purchasers in 1985. The organization surveyed 11,000 home buyers nationwide to reach its figures.

Washington area buyers reversed the apparent national trend, however, with first-time buyers rising from 30.4 percent of all buyers in 1985 to 34.9 percent in 1987.

In another national survey, however, the Chicago Title Insurance Co. found that the number of first-time buyers actually increased last year, largely because of the dip in interest rates during the first quarter of 1987, according to James Pfister, vice president and market-research manager for the company. Chicago Title's figures showed first-time buyers accounting for 36.8 percent of the market last year, up from 35.6 percent in 1986.

But Americans buying their first homes in 1987 had to save for an average of two years and four months before making their purchases, compared with an average of one year and eight months for 1986 buyers, the Chicago Title survey showed. These purchasers paid 29 percent more for their homes in 1987 than in 1986, with the average price rising to $106,450 from $82,510. Average income of the buyers rose to $43,800 in 1987 from $38,920 in 1986. The Chicago company surveyed about 500 buyers in 15 metropolitan regions.

With periods of lower interest rates and new types of mortgages, there is a growing inclination of first-time buyers in the Washington area to buy what they can afford instead of waiting until they can make a down payment on their dream home, said Kenneth M. Tuchtan, head of Coldwell Banker residential real-estate services.

"We lived and died on the move-up market here in the last couple of years, but more people have gotten into the market now," he said.

District of Columbia real-estate agent Linda Low said a number of her clients are first-time owners who usually buy smaller homes or houses that need rehabilitation. They nearly always are two-income couples, and frequently get financial help from relatives, she said.

The U.S. League survey found that first-time and repeat buyers in 1987 were older, more often single and had smaller households than their counterparts a decade ago. The median age of buyers increased to 37 last year from 32.4 years in 1977, and the number who were married dropped to 74 percent from 83 percent during the same period.

Households became smaller during the decade, and the number of one- and two-person households buying homes increased by nearly eight percentage points to 53.6 percent.

The median purchase price of a home more than doubled, growing to $95,000 last year from $44,000 in 1977, the study showed. The nationwide median of combined monthly mortgage, tax, utilities and insurance costs also doubled, to $822 in 1987 from $400 a decade ago. But at the same time, buyers' incomes grew from a median of $22,700 in 1977 to $45,996 last year.

Three metropolitan areas — San Francisco, Los Angeles and New York — reported higher median purchase prices for homes than Washington's 1987 median of $137,500. Only the San Francisco area reported higher monthly housing expenses, including mortgage, taxes, utilities and insurance costs, than Washington. The San Francisco median for these expenses was $1,320 a month, while the Washington area median was $1,178 last year, the U.S. League reported.

Undecideds May Influence Congress On Stock Crash

A News Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Congress investigating the October stock crash have split into two factions: those who say urgent reform is needed to prevent another collapse and those who believe hasty tinkering could harm a basically sound market system.

There are others, somewhere in between, who want to do something but are wary of doing too much at once. They'd rather start with modest changes and see how they work before doing more.

The third group, depending on which faction they side with on a given point, is likely to determine the shape of any legislation passed to cure the ills that caused the Oct. 19 market plunge.

Four days of hearings last week by the Senate Banking Committee provided a good preview of the debate to come.

There are some things everyone seems to agree on.

First, the explosion of computer and telecommunications technology has inextricably linked the New York stock market with the Chicago futures market, and the U.S. markets with markets overseas in Europe and Asia. Market movements that once took weeks to play out can now happen in hours or even minutes.

Second, the reality of what is becoming one market means there must be more coordination among the exchanges and among U.S. regulators — the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) and the Federal Reserve — and eventually international coordination.

Senate Banking Committee Chairman William Proxmire, D-Wis., and Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., chairman of the securities subcommittee, are pushing for what Riegle called "more direct, centralized accountability."

A presidential task force headed by former New Jersey Sen. Nicholas Brady recommends giving the Federal Reserve Board that role. The SEC says it, not the Fed, should regulate stocks and stock-related futures.

Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan's refusal last week to become an overarching regulator appears to have killed Brady's recommendation. He did indicate willingness to become involved in reviewing margins — the initial amount of money required to make an investment — for the futures market. The Fed already sets margins for stocks and options.

Greenspan's position leaves the turf war between the SEC and the CFTC, a fight the CFTC won in 1981 when trading of stock index futures began.

The factors that tipped the balance in the CFTC's favor before are still present. Members of the Agriculture committees in both houses, which oversee the CFTC, don't want the agency to cede any jurisdiction to the SEC, which is overseen by the Banking committee in the Senate and the Energy and Commerce Committee in the House.

Futures exchange officials fear that if the SEC regulated both markets, it would side with the stock exchanges in any conflict.

The futures exchanges and the CFTC are resisting any restructuring greater than some sort of formal mechanism to provide for better communication and cooperation. There is substantial sentiment, particularly from Republicans on the Senate committee, for waiting to see what the exchanges can work out among themselves.

Sens. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y.; Alan Dixon, D-Ill., and Phil Gramm, R-Texas, have been among the most vocal of the "let's be careful" faction.

Gramm compares the U.S. financial markets to the goose that laid golden eggs. Congress better make sure any cure doesn't kill the goose or cause it to fly overseas where regulation is looser, he says.

Air Guns Blamed In Radiation Leaks

MAPLEWOOD, Minn. (AP) — Air guns that have been blamed for leaking radioactive particles at factories from Pennsylvania to California are being called back from some plants by the manufacturer, 3M Co. officials said.

The withdrawal is limited to air ionizers used in the packaging of food, beverages, pharmaceuticals and cosmetics, Mark Fenner, a spokesman for Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing in Austin, Texas, said Saturday. Most ionizers are used in computer, printing, and photographic industries and are not being withdrawn.

The company announced the recall Friday in a statement from its offices in Maplewood.

Meanwhile, the McDonnell Douglas Corp. shut down three laboratories in St. Louis on Friday and sent some workers home after discovering leaks in the 3M air guns used as cleaning devices, a spokesman said Saturday.

"We don't have anyone going back to work until we're satisfied there's no potential hazard," spokesman Jim Reed said. "There were radiation levels that were less than the hazardous (standards) set by the NRC but more than we like."

At McDonnell Douglas, technicians use the air guns in the manufacture of computer chips and other microelectric components, Reed said.

The problem at McDonnell Douglas was detected during field tests of the devices that 3M is conducting nationwide, said Ted Pickens, 3M's public affairs manager in Austin.

"It's my understanding it was just a small area of contamination," Pickens said. "It was nothing significant beyond some of the other experiences we've had."

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission on Jan. 26 ordered 3M to halt distribution of the ionizers after receiving reports of leaking polonium-210, a radioactive isotope of polonium, at plants in Dallas and Easton, Pa. There were later reports from plants in Carrolton, Texas, and three sites in California.

"The NRC's concern is that, while this doesn't appear to be a great health hazard to workers or to the public, it does represent radiation that has gotten out of control," said NRC spokesman Joe Gilliland in Arlington, Texas.

About 20,00 ionizers are in use nationwide, but only about 1,500 are being withdrawn, Pickens said.

The ionizers will be returned to 3M, but Fenner declined to call it a recall.

Pickens said he was unsure how 3M would compensate companies that return ionizers. And Fenner said he was unsure whether 3M would modify or repair the returned ionizers.

3M called for limited withdrawal of its model 902, 902F, 906 and 908 air ionizers to ease consumer fear about their safety, Fenner said.

"This is to put to rest any health concerns," he said. "You're not going to have those concerns if they are being used in a (printing, computer or photographic) operation. Those aren't consumable items."

The radiation leaks are not a health hazard and the leaks have only occurred under certain conditions, Fenner said. All leaking ionizers have been removed from service, he said.

The air guns use polonium-210 to produce small amounts of radiation to neutralize static electricity charges and remove small particles of dust in applications where a high degree of purity is needed. The polonium is encapsulated in tiny ceramic spheres that are chemically bonded to the device.

Fenner said he was unsure how how many ionizers have been found to be leaking.

The only health risks normally associated with raw polonium-210 result from inhalation or ingestion, the company said. But the company said the polonium is fixed within ceramic microspheres, which are too large and heavy to be inhaled. If inadvertently ingested, the microspheres pass quickly through the body and are excreted without harmful side effects, the company said.

TVA Plant To Resume

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — The Tennessee Valley Authority took a step toward reactivating its long-idle nuclear program Saturday by beginning the non-nuclear "heat-up" stage at Sequoyah Nuclear plant, officials said.

The heat-up, which involves heating water in a system of pipes running throughout the Unit 2 reactor system, began at 5:06 p.m. EST, said TVA spokeswoman Janice Blankenship Brady.

"It's a major milestone," Ms. Brady said.

The heat-up must be completed successfully, as well as a series of tests on the plant, before Sequoyah can begin producing nuclear power.

"It's a very slow, methodical process," she said.

TVA hopes to have Sequoyah Unit 1 back on line about six months after Unit 2. Power production at Browns Ferry Nuclear Plant near Athens, Ala., which has been idle since March 1985, is tentatively scheduled to resume sometime in the fall.

TVA got Nuclear Regulatory Commission approval Thursday to begin heat-up testing at the plant northeast of Chattanooga. Officials have said they hope to complete the process in five to six weeks.

When that happens, the NRC will vote on whether to permit the plant to begin producing its first electricity since safety concerns prompted TVA to shut down its nuclear program in August 1985.

Heat-up is a lengthy testing process designed to make sure the plant's equipment can safely function when the reactor begins operating at normal temperatures and pressure.

Mexico Isn't Ready For Free Trade But Is Opening To U.S.

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico has made great strides in recent years to open up its economy to more foreign goods, but it is not yet ready to join a free trade zone with the United States and Canada.

President Miguel de la Madrid dismissed President Reagan's call for a sweeping free trade area. He said Mexico, the poorest of the three countries, wasn't economically prepared for such a move.

"It is not possible to think of the formation of a common market resembling Canada's because the differences of our development do not permit it," de la Madrid recently told a meeting of exporters and importers.

The United States and Canada agreed last year to eliminate all tariffs and most other trade barriers between the two neighbors by 1999.

"We're determined to expand this concept, South as well as North," Reagan said in his State of the Union message in January. "Next month I will be traveling to Mexico where trade matters will be of foremost concern."

The two presidents will meet Feb. 13 in the Pacific coastal resort of Mazatlan.

Trade-opening moves began in Mexico in July 1985 as part de la Madrid's efforts to revive the sickly economy and reduce its heavy dependence on oil exports for foreign earnings.

Since then, Mexico has sharply scaled back its import licensing system and slashed the maximum tariff from 40 percent to 20 percent. It also joined the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, an international trading arrangement to which more than 90 nations belong.

The changes also were designed to control the nation's inflation rate, which hit a record 159.2 percent last year. Outside competition, officials reason, will force local manufacturers to turn out better, cheaper products.

"Mexico has to be an open economy if we want to develop our economy to continue growth and to give more employment to Mexicans," said Luis Bravo Aguilera, the Commerce Department's undersecretary of foreign trade.

"Mexico is leading the way in terms of what other Latin American countries are doing," said Guy F. Erb, a Washington consultant on investment and trade in Mexico.

Imported goods, once considered a serious threat to heavily protected domestic industries, now have become a symbol of the government's ambitious program.

The United States is Mexico's largest trading partner; Mexico's trade with its northern neighbor ranks fourth after Canada, Japan and West Germany.

U.S. exports to Mexico were $13.3 billion in the first 11 months of 1987, compared to $11.4 billion in the same period of 1986, according to U.S. Commerce Department figures.

U.S. imports from Mexico reached $18.8 billion in the first 11 months of last year, up from $16.2 billion for the same period of 1986.

Mexican consumers are increasingly tempted at their local supermarkets and department stores by a host of imported consumer goods impossible to find just a year ago.

Korean TVs were quickly snapped up during a recent sale at a major supermarket chain. U.S.-made toys for preschoolers were a hit during the Christmas season. And connoisseurs can now find a wider variety of Italian and French wines than ever before.

The imports are expensive, often several times the U.S. price, putting them out of reach for all but one-tenth of Mexico's 80 million.

"I don't understand who is buying imported products because prices are so high," said Guillermo Ramos Uriarte, executive director of the United States-Mexico Chamber of Commerce. "The truth is they haven't sold."

But sales clerks at Liverpool, a department store catering to middle- and upper-income consumers, report brisk sales of some foreign goods. Their customers, both foreigners and Mexicans, feel the imports are better made.

"We don't have any complaints about them," said Alejandro Miranda, who sells imported sprinklers and lawn mowers in the store's garden section.

The trade-opening moves have not been without criticism.

Bear Collection Serves As Decorating Decor

The sign on the office door of Jean Cuthrell welcomes visitors to enter her zoo. Her office as administrator at Senior Village is "home" for one of her loves — collecting huggable, stuffed, and wooden bears in all sizes and colors.

The 67 bears have been gifts to Mrs. Cuthrell on many occasions during the past several years. She has decorated her office using the bears in a variety of ways. They sit on tables, in baskets, on miniature park benches, in plants, on the back of a small sofa and on Mrs. Cuthrell's desk.

"My loves are my family, Senior Village residents, teddy bears and plants. Each of the bears is named and each has a story," said Mrs. Cuthrell.

"I am growing older," she said. "You are growing older. And as we look around us, we know that we are not alone. This becomes even more apparent when we consider that in 1900 only four percent of the population of the United States was over age 65. In 1980, more than 11 percent of our people were 65 or older, and by the year 2035, those over 65 will have reached between 18 and 23 percent of the total," she said.

"Pitt County's percentage of people over 60 is 14.65 percent. Some of us grow older gracefully; some of us, not so gracefully. For some of us, aging is a problem, even though we dislike the alternative," she said.

"'Where am I going to live?' is a question that a lot of the elderly have and another important factor is 'Where am I going to need to live?' This would be determined by personal needs," she said.

"The health care administrator is directly responsible for the total operation of a home, which means he or she has responsibility for the direct initiation and overall supervision of all major programs affecting health and welfare of residents, facility operations, personnel practices and public and community relations," said Mrs. Cuthrell.

"I feel that I have a responsibility to help educate the community regarding the various levels of care provided for those whose needs cannot be met in their own homse. In my efforts to provide information, I find that often there are misconceptions about the facilities that provide full-time care," she said.

"All of the facilities provide a place for our aging population to live, and — depending upon what kind of facility it is — all provide some level of health care, with the exception that some retirement centers do not provide health care. Family care homes, rest homes and nursing homes are all licensed by the state after having met certain minimum standards and regulations. Each home must meet the mimimum standard, but it is the option of the management to exceed the minimum," she said.

Mrs. Cuthrell has been Senior Village's administrator for four years. In 1977, she began working as assistant to the administrator at the Methodist Retirement Home in Durham.

"In that position, I was responsible for many of the financial affairs of the residents and processed admissions. I enjoyed working with the residents. I feel like I contributed something to their lives and they had a lot of wisdom to offer me. I have been able to apply my knowledge and gained experience to my present position," said Mrs. Cuthrell.

Mrs. Cuthrell's husband, Bill, has been a United Methodist minister since 1970. He is now under special appointment as a nursing home administrator at Westgate in Tarboro. The couple has two daughters, Lynn and Kathy, and a son, Billy.

Mrs. Cuthrell served as district secretary of Women's Society of Christian Service and then was elected first district president of United Methodist Women. At age 29, she was the youngest district president the conference and the Greenville District had had.

The Cuthrells moved to the Burlington District in 1976 where she served as the district vice president and then as UMW district president. In 1983, she was secretary for financial interpretation for UMW in the Greenville District. "I enjoyed each of those roles, but I enjoyed being a vice president most because it allowed me to be creative and design programs," said. Mrs. Cuthrell.

"Jean Cuthrell is truly an asset to Senior Village," said Mary Lib Moore, administrative secretary at the facility. "Her role as administrator covers many, many areas of the operation. Her love, care and compassion for each resident as well as the resident's family is quite evident. The 29-member staff at Senior Village is given many hours of listening to problems they have — personal or otherwise."

"Mrs. Cuthrell is always willing to give a helping hand in any given situation and will never ask an employee to perform a task that she herself would not undertake."

"Mrs. Cuthrell has a concern and loving care for the staff and residents that goes beyond recognition and is a major asset to Senior Village," said Benita Hollowell, activities director at Senior Village. "She has a genuine interest in geriatric care, possesses patience and good positive relations with families and the community,"

"Jean Cuthrell is a lady who makes each day seem more worthwhile and happier by catching the sunshine of her face and wearing it in a smile," Ms. Hollowell said.

S.C. Chemist First Woman To Get License

By KAY GORDON
The Columbia Record

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Connie Gray's job is a real blast.

The chemist for Divex Inc. is the first woman in South Carolina to receive a blaster's license from the Explosives Control Program of the Division of State Fire Marshal. Her first detonation occurred New Year's Eve at Clemson, when she disposed of some old ether containers.

To date, she is one of 150 applicants who have been licensed under the Explosives Control Act, which became effective in January 1987. The law provides extensive regulations for the sale and use of any kind of explosives in the state and for any kind of blasting.

In order to get a blaster's permit, individuals must pass a written test administered by the fire marshal's office. They must renew the license every two years.

Before her employment with Divex last fall, Mrs. Gray had been a chemist for seven years with the South Carolina Law Enforcement Division, where she also worked in the arson lab.

Part of her job with SLED involved disposing of toxic chemicals, and that is how she met Jack Sutherland, president of Divex, who was doing some work for SLED.

Sutherland, also a chemist, was the first licensed blaster in South Carolina. His license number is 001. Mrs. Gray's is No. 134.

Sutherland, who started Divex in 1971, does commercial blasting and packages hazardous materials statewide. The small firm specializes in reactive and hazardous chemicals.

Divex has military contracts, as well as contracts with the University of South Carolina and Clemson University, to remove hazardous wastes.

A licensed blaster always must be on the site for the detonation, Mrs. Gray said, which is why she decided to get her blaster's license in case Sutherland couldn't be there.

Much planning and care go into a blasting job. Decisions on which type chemicals are to be used are crucial, and the detonations must be done with the public in mind, Sutherland said. Each detonation requires a permit and state Department of Health and Environmental Control clearance.

She actually caps the dynamite, loads the shot into holes, wires it, runs the lead wires and prepares to fire the shot. "She is the ideal person for the job," Sutherland said. "She has the lovely finesse of a mother's hand and at the same time can take a case of dynamite and blow up a bridge."

Mrs. Gray worked at the University of Tennessee for a couple of years, then stayed home with her children, who are now 17, 16 and 11. Ten years ago her husband, Mike, who works for IBM, was transferred to South Carolina.

She began working for SLED, where her duties as a chemist also included being on call for emergency analysis, working at crime scenes and investigating clandestine drug labs.

Mrs. Gray also runs Gray Laboratories, providing arson analysis for the private sector and insurance companies. She has testified 59 times in South Carolina courts in arson cases.

With detonations, Mrs. Gray makes sure she has covered all the angles.

"I treat it like a caged tiger," she said. "As long as I don't get in the cage, it's OK."

Toy Buyers Hearing 'Jingle Bells'

By CHRISTINE DUGAS
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — It was just a few weeks ago that many people were discarding their Christmas trees and putting ornaments in storage for another year. So it may seem hard to believe that next week thousands of toy store buyers will descend on New York City to plan for next Dec. 25.

Monday marks the beginning of the 85th annual American International Toy Fair. More than 1,000 toy makers from 15 different countries will set up exhibits of dolls, games, gadgets and other creatures of play that they hope will be a hit with kids of all ages this year. Their most immediate concern, however, is to capture the fancy of the buyers who come to the fair to order merchandise for toy stores around the country.

"At every toy fair there is an enormous amount of new merchandise that is introduced," said David S. Leibowitz, senior vice president at American Securities. "There is a broader variety of toys than most children can conceive of. It's mind boggling, and this year will not be a disappointment."

In recent years, however, the toy fair has not produced any major sellers on the order of Cabbage Patch dolls. So this year manufacturers are all hoping for a chance to hit the jackpot with a product that becomes a runaway best seller. As a result, toy companies are taking a shotgun approach, says Paul Valentine, a toy analyst for Standard & Poor's. "They're throwing a lot of noodles against the wall to see what sticks," he said. "No one really knows what the next fad will be that will revive the industry."

Last Christmas the biggest sellers were video games and more basic toys such as Barbie dolls and Monopoly. Many of the highly touted and expensive high-tech toys did not do as well as had been expected. So this year, analysts expect to see a lot more new board games and moderately priced toys.

"There are gaps in the product categories currently available where there is great opportunity for toy companies," Leibowitz said. "For instance, there hasn't been a very successful male action figure in the last two years, and I suspect that the fashion doll industry is also ready for a new hit."

There will be plenty of high-tech toys, analysts say. But they may not be as expensive as some of the interactive talking dolls that were introduced last year. And there will be the usual flurry of toys based on well-known licensed characters, such as Garfield, Pee Wee Herman and even the California Raisins from the popular television commercial.

In recent years, some toy manufacturers started getting a jump on the competition by revealing their new lines to the major buyers before the toy fair. "That made Toy Fair seem boring," said Stephen Schwartz, executive vice president of marketing and product development at Hasbro Inc. "But this year we've held back our most important products until next week. We want to put some sizzle back in Toy Fair."

So while thousands of executives spend next week playing with the latest toys, the rest of us can take comfort in the fact that there are 324 shopping days 'til next Christmas.

Associated Press Writer

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — It started out as a reunion of Kansas State University photographers and turned into what may well be the first book of its kind in the nation.

"A Week at Kansas State: College Life as Seen by 44 Photojournalists From Oct. 12-19, 1986" is a record of sorts of university life in the 1980s, from the parties to classrooms, from the football stadiums to the dormitory rooms.

"We just kind of came up with the idea to do a book similar to 'A Day in the Life of America,' although we were in the planning stages by the time that came out," said Dave Adams, director student publications at KSU, who acted as the book's publisher. "Ours was well into preparation before that one took off."

That week in 1986 was an eventful one at Manhattan. KSU played the University of Kansas in their traditional football rivalry. Basketball practice started. KSU had a new president.

The photographers captured portraits of football fans, rock band drummers, cowboys. They show babies being fed at the campus child-care center, card games in the dorm, students being checked for identification outside a watering hole in Aggieville, an off-campus entertainment area.

The whole intent of the book is to capture the flavor of campus life, its feel, its diversity.

Pete Souza, who is currently White House photographer and did graduate work at K-State, was the driving force behind the book, Adams said. He wanted a reunion of old Wildcat photographers, and the book gave that reunion a purpose.

"It turned out to be a tremendous amount of work," Adams said.

The project began at 12:01 a.m. Sunday, Oct. 12, and continued through the following Saturday. There were 29 professional photographers and 15 students involved. The only pay they drew was the satisfaction the project gave them.

Two of the photograpers, Souza and Darryl Heikes, a photographer for U.S. News and World Report, were delayed because they had to cover the summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev at Reykjavik, Iceland.

Exactly 192 hours later, the photographers, with the professionals teamed with the students, had taken 68,000 pictures on 1,900 rolls of film. Students developed 150 rolls of black-and-white film every evening.

"They were up all night," Adams said.

A Needle And Thread Solved All

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

I had a home economics teacher named Miss Kimmel who thought "Gone With the Wind" was one of the greatest films in the history of cinema.

There was one scene she watched again and again. It was the one where Scarlett and Mammy were trying to come up with a drop-dead dress that would seduce Rhett Butler into loaning her big bucks. Finally, Scarlett smiled her little dimpled smile and ripped the draperies right off the windows while Mammy stood by shaking her head in disbelief and choking in the dust. Cut to scene where Scarlett is twirling in 96 yards of green velvet with gold piping cord.

Miss Kimmel must have seen that clip a million times. And she never failed to say, "You see, with a little imagination and a needle and thread, anything is possible."

I hadn't thought about Miss Kimmel's sewing class in years until I was watching a rerun of "The Sound of Music." Maria had just asked Captain von Trapp for money to purchase material for some play clothes for the children. He informed her his children did not play. After he left the room, Maria ran to the window to cry and, bingo! There were the draperies again. Cut to the scene where seven von Trapp children are wearing the same green print that looks like the cat just threw up on them.

Miss Kimmel believed all things were possible if you had a needle and thread, a swatch of cloth, and no taste whatsoever.

You didn't just make a dress in her class. You had matching potholders, a vest, and a tea towel for your mother. I once tried to throw away a few scraps. She seized them from my fingers, went around them with pinking shears and said, "There, now you have four pen wipers." I would have bit my tongue in half before I told her I owned a ballpoint pen.

Miss Kimmel was nearly overcome with emotion when she saw bluebirds drape Snow White in a tablecloth and push the thread in and out with their little beaks to make her a dress. If she had had her way, every movie ever made would have had a scene in it that challenged idle fingers. Dorothy wouldn't have left Oz without taking along a change of draperies, and Katharine Hepburn would have emerged for dinner one night aboard the African Queen in a stunning gown made out of an oily rag that Humphrey Bogart used to repair the engine.

My old home ec teacher has gone to that big Fabric World in the sky now, but every time I see a film of the Old West where Indians are wearing buckskins with shoulder pads and zippers, I think of her.

I thought of her again the other night as I watched a rerun of the old classic, "Citizen Kane." As the fire swept through the old mansion, the camera lingered on the flames that enveloped the old, dusty drapes that hung from the ceiling to the floor.

I'm glad Miss Kimmel wasn't there to see it.

Castellow-Holleman Vows Exchanged

DURHAM — Catherine Anne Holleman and Tad Harris Castellow were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock in a candlelight, double-ring ceremony. The Mount Moriah Baptist Church was the scene of the ceremony conducted by Robert D. Weatherly.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond B. Holleman Jr. of Route 7, Durham, the bride was given in marriage by her father. Carol Jones of Durham was maid of honor for her cousin. Bridesmaids were Tracy Futrell of Hickory, Amy Young of Morrisville, and Tracy Holleman of Durham, cousin of the bride.

The bridegroom is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur A. Castellow of Greenville. His father was best man. Ushers were Tracy Davenport and Jimmy Fisher, both of Greenville, and Tony Holleman of Hillsborough, brother of the bride.

Susan Walston sang "Wedding Song" and "The Bond of Love." Pam Morris was organist and Mary Paul Castellow as violinist.

MRS. CASTELLOW

The bride wore a tea-length dress of ivory chantilly lace over matching taffeta. The open bateau neckline was enhanced with a scalloped embroidered lace edging centered with jeweled beadwork. The fitted bodice featured a sweetheart silhouette with a ruched dropped waist cummerbund of gathered lace fabric. The full, circular skirt was edged with a scalloped lace border. Renaissance-styled sleeves fashioned in sheer lace were banded at the wrist with a lace border. A Dior bow of ivory organza accented the back. Her headpiece with a silk illusion blusher veil was of imported lace rosettes interspersed with filaments of pearls. She carried a bouquet of red roses and baby's breath with trailing ribbons.

The mother of the bride wore a street-length dress of light green brocade. The mother of the bridegroom wore an imported silk Damask dress in midnight blue. The grandmothers were remembered with corsages.

The honor attendant wore a tea-length gown of imported daphne rose French latticework lace bordered in a floral patterned chantilly lace motif over matching satin. The waistline was accented with a cummerbund and bow of satin. She carried a bouquet of red, white and pink roses. Bridesmaids were dressed identically in burgundy gowns and each carried three long-stemmed white roses with pink ribbon streamers.

The couple will live in Morehead City.

The bride is a graduate of East Carolina University with a degree in early childhood education. The bridegroom is a graduate of J.H. Rose High School and attended Pitt Community College. He is serving in the U.S. Coast Guard.

An after-rehearsal dinner was held at the Holiday Inn-West in Durham given by the parents of the bridegroom. Prior to the wedding a several showers were given for the bridal couple.

Couple Upset By Wasted Food

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband recently went to work as the custodian of a junior high school. I assist in the lunchroom.

We are both appalled at the waste of food we observe daily. Whole lunches are thrown in the garbage cans! We see turkey, ham and roast beef sandwiches thrown away. Dozens of apples are thrown out — some whole, others with only one bite taken out.

On days when ice cream is sold during lunch hour, complete lunches (still in their bags) are discarded and the kids eat ice cream and a candy bar as their entire lunch!

Some parents don't care if their children throw their lunches away. When I asked one child if she wanted to take her orange home to eat later, she said, "My mom gave me strict orders not to bring anything home!"

Parents should ask their children if they want fruit, carrot and celery sticks, raisins, etc. And if they don't eat that stuff, they should say so and parents shouldn't pack it to be thrown out. It's a shame to waste good food. We see so much of it, it makes us sick. — FROM ARIZONA (DON'T SAY WHICH TOWN)

DEAR ARIZONA: This would be a good issue to raise at the next PTA meeting. Parents? Teachers? Kids? And does this go on in any of the other 49 states? It's food for thought.

DEAR ABBY: I just read in your column that Cindy Barton, a female disc jockey in Wichita, Kan., offered to send her recording of "Chasing Rainbows" by Perry Como to Emiline Zimmerman for free, even though Emiline offered to pay $100 for it.

I'm curious. How many people did you hear from offering to sell their recording to Emiline? And was Cindy the only person who offered to give it to her for free? — NOSY IN NEWPORT BEACH

DEAR NOSY: At this writing, 477 people wrote offering to sell their record to Emiline for $100; 208 people offered to tape the record and send the tape to Emiline if she would pay for the cost of taping and mailing it; 46 people offered to tape the record and mail it free of charge — all they wanted was Emiline's address. Twenty-one people in the recording business offered to make a professional quality reproduction and sell it to Emiline for anywhere from $10 to $50. And only two people beside Cindy Barton offered to send the record to Emiline absolutely free: Fenwick Walker of San Leandro, Calif., and John S. Kouyoumjian of North Hollywood. Cindy offered first; thus the "rainbow chase" has ended.

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the letter from "Seeing Spots in South Carolina" (the 'liberal" woman who was so concerned about the hickey on the neck of her preacher's wife):

If all the women who have sex
Or hickeys planted on their necks
Were women who aren't preachers' wives —
Think of all the little lives
That never would have come to be:
Preachers' kids — including me!
Preachers' lives are partly formal
But mostly, I hope, they're pretty normal
I'm glad my dad could love his wife —
Where else could I have started life?

— PREACHER'S KID IN OREGON

Homemaker's Haven

Evelyn Spangler

Chances are you, or someone in your family, owns acid-washed jeans. They're those fashionable black or blue jeans with the white wrinkled-looking highlights.

And chances are those acid-washed pants cost more than the garden-variety of jeans. So you'd expect them to last longer, right?

Well, they probably won't because they have been washed with volcanic rock that may have been pickled in hydrochloric acid. And this harsh treatment could reduce the strength and durability of the jeans by 25 to 50 percent.

Since finishing treatments are secret, it's hard to find out what treatment jeans have had and when they've had it.

But if the acid treatment comes after the garment is sewn, it could weaken the seams. And they could split open easily.

It adds up to this: if you buy acid-washed jeans for fashion, and that's fine, don't expect them to last as long as other jeans.

If you're chomping at the bit to buy a leather garment, you might do well to learn a little about leather before you plunk down your hard earned dollars.

First, the difference between top-grained leather and split leather: Top grain leather uses the outermost layer of skin. It's the most durable, takes the best finish, and usually sports the higher pricetag.

On the other hand, split-leather means the skins have been sliced into thinner pieces. These pieces are less durable, and may stretch during the tanning process or shrink during cleaning.

As you shop for a leather garment, check to see that the texture and color are uniform throughout and make sure the garment is large enough. During cleaning, leather tends to lose some of its color and become more bulky, or it may shrink.

Here's another thing you need to be aware of: leathers tanned and dyed outside the United States may not react to cleaning the same as leathers treated in this country.

Of course, care is an important factor, so keep cleaning costs in mind. In fact you'll be way ahead to save all labeling information so you can show it to the drycleaner.

Regular care can prevent frequent trips to the dry cleaners. Suede garments should be brushed with a soft brush or terry towel, but don't brush them when they're wet. Smoother leather can be wiped with a damp cloth, but don't use detergents, shoe creams, saddle soap or cleaning fluids.

On the plus side, quality leather garments should last you many years.

A Child's Life Is Ripped Apart By Using Drugs

By LYNNE DUKE
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — Everyone in the neighborhood, it seemed, knew what the girl was up to, her mother and sister said. Once a good student, bright when it came to mathematics, she began cutting classes. She slept the day away and stayed out all night. In the wee hours of the morning, just before sunup, she would knock on the door of her family's apartment in the Trinidad neighborhood near Gallaudet University in Northeast Washington, waiting for someone to wake up and let her in.

"People that she was with, they said she was hitting the pipe," the girl's 15-year-old sister said when she and her mother, 34, were interviewed. (The names of the mother and her family are being withheld because of the ages of the children involved.) It may have been crack cocaine. It may have been PCP. Whatever drug it was, it transformed the girl into a sullen, violent person at the age of 12.

The girl's trouble with drugs began last summer, her mother said. In the fall, a social worker tried to have the girl admitted to an in-patient drug treatment program at St. Elizabeths Hospital. But there was a waiting list of about six months. In counseling session with the social worker, the girl was uncooperative. And sometimes her mother would not follow through with appointments.

Tuesday, the girl allegedly took her mother's starter's pistol and tried to rob a neighborhood dry cleaners. Friday, the girl, who has been charged with assault with intent to rob, was ordered held at the Receiving Home for Children.

"Had we gotten (the girl) into the in-patient right away, things would have been better all the way around," said the social worker, Sally Bird. She works for the Junior Citizens Corps, a Washington community service organization.

After attending the girl's hearing at D.C. Superior Court Friday, the woman said her daughter will be able to go home on weekends. The woman said she was annoyed by the court process, especially by the fact that someone mentioned during the hearing that they had smelled alcohol on her breath.

When she picks her daughter up from the Receiving Home on Saturday mornings, she said, "They're going to have somebody observing me because they smelled alcohol on my breath. I had a beer. One beer."

In an earlier interview, the mother said she feels partly to blame for her daughter's problems. With cooking, cleaning and taking care of her four other children — ages 16, 15, 11 years and 17 months — she could not keep up with her 12-year-old's activities. She supports the children on public assistance. She said she is divorced from the girl's father, who lives in Alexandria.

"I should have put my foot down," she said. "I'm the one who made the mistake. If I had put my foot down, she wouldn't have gone around with the wrong crowd of people."

The woman and her children live in a small upstairs apartment on 16th Street NE. The cramped apartment is in a state of disrepair. There is a large hole in the ceiling over the stove. Valentines and family pictures adorn many of the walls in the apartment, along with a letter from the 15-year-old's high school that praises her for being on the honor roll this year.

Asked about the last time her sister attended classes at her school, Samuel Wheatley Elemetery, the 15-year-old thought for a minute and said, "It's been so long ago." Maybe November, she said.

"She used to sleep in the daytime and go out at night," the 15-year-old said. "She started getting violent. Her hair started falling out. She didn't care. She'd wear the same clothes every day ... She's good in math. She can do some math, quicker than I can. She used to love school."

"Love it," the mother said.

Her mother said that teen-agers in the neighborhood, maybe even some adults, helped her daughter get involved in drugs. When she learned that the girl was using drugs, she said she asked people on the block not to help the girl in any way. One man used to give the girl money for helping him pick up litter on the street. The mother asked him to stop so the girl wouldn't have money to buy drugs.

Not everyone would cooperate, the mother said. She let her 15-year-old do the explaining.

"My mother would tell them 'Don't let (the girl) go with you nowhere. Don't give her cigarettes or money' and they would give it to her anyway."

"I love my children," the mother added.

The 15-year-old said her little sister used to hang around with people who sold drugs. She suspected it was crack cocaine. She described the small vials containing tiny chunks of the hardened form of cocaine that are commonly sold on the streets.

"She used to be with people who sell it," the 15-year-old said. "They used to sell soap and trick people."

Bird, the social worker, became involved in the girl's case last fall. After she was unable to have the girl admitted to the treatment program at St. Elizabeths, she had the girl attend counseling sessions with the Junior Citizens Corps. The girl was not cooperative.

On a couple of occasions, Bird picked the girl up at home and took her to the sessions. Once, the girl was wearing a beeper. "She had around her neck what I learned was a beeper," Bird said. "A beeper is what the children use when they're selling for a dealer.

Because the counseling outside the girl's home did not appear to be working, Bird suggested to the girl's mother that counseling take place at home.

"I offered to do the counseling at home and the mother just didn't want that ... I did begin to feel it was a little neglectful because I just felt like there wasn't enough motivation on the mother's part or perhaps she was helpless. She was frustrated." The mother "is doing what she can," Bird said. "I think that she needs a lot of things, a lot of help."

The mother said she kept a starter's pistol around the house for protection. She knew it would fire only blanks, but felt it looked real enough to be a deterrent. At some point, the 12-year-old reached atop the hutch in the green living room and took the gun. The woman said she did not know the gun was missing.

Tuesday, the girl slept through the morning and then went out. She returned later in the afternoon. "She came here in the bathroom crying, saying 'Momma, I want some help' ... She said 'Momma, I'm ready to go to the doctor for drug treatment,'" the mother said.

The mother did not know what prompted the girl's plea. But a short time later, police arrived. The girl had been identified as the person who pointed a gun at the owner of a drycleaners, police said. The owner knocked the gun out of the girl's hand. The girl attacked the owner and scratched her face.

The mother took the girl to police later that evening. "I told her to get dressed and look decent," she said. The conversation with police ended, she said, when an officer concluded: "We got to book her."

The girl has been held at the Receiving Home since her arrest. During visits with her mother, she says she is sorry for what she did, her mother said. "Of course she is. Yeah, she's sorry. That's why she was crying — acting just like a baby, like a newborn baby. That's how she cries."

Anniversary For Underground Publishers

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The publicity flyer is printed on high-quality paper with images of medieval printers and a logo that proudly proclaims, "The biggest underground publishing house in the communist bloc."

Now Nowa, a Polish acronym standing for "Independent Publishing House," is marking its 10th anniversary, having won the admiration of writers and readers and even an implicit acknowledgement from Poland's minister of culture.

The pioneer clandestine publisher has hundreds of titles to its credit and press runs of as many as 15,000 copies.

"By its very existence, the underground publications exert great influence," said the longtime opposition activist Jan-Jozef Lipski, who has published two books with Nowa. "An author who writes something that does not pass censorship has another choice. It creates a certain pressure on the official organs."

"I think it's very good that the second circulation exists," Minister of Culture Aleksander Krawczuk, a former classics professor, told startled reporters last February.

"It's good that it's functioning, that different things can be published ... because then there is a situation of a certain freedom."

Although its roots are in the opposition movement, Nowa says it represents no particular political view and "wishes to serve all creative initiative."

It was started in late 1977 by KOR, the Committee for the Defense of Workers, a group of intellectuals formed to aid workers facing reprisals following strikes against price increases in 1976.

Its first publications, according to the publishing house's own history, were KOR bulletins written on typewriters and its first book was a collection of speeches by lawyers defending arrested workers.

"The first documents were printed on a copier produced from a washing machine," said Adam Michnik, an anti-government essayist and historian who has long been associated with Nowa. Though the print was violet and runny, "today we look back on them with affection," he said.

"It was difficult to predict that it was going to last so long," said Lipski, a KOR co-founder. "However, I remember thinking that an institution of considerable durability was being formed."

Today Nowa publishes fiction, non-fiction, drama and poetry by Polish and foreign authors. It also prints Poland's largest underground newspaper and produces uncensored tape recordings (one containing songs from prison) and videocassettes with movies and newsreels.

And Nowa is also the keeper of the archives of the banned Solidarity trade union, including printed documents, microfiche and computer disks.

It was Nowa that first published in Poland, beginning in 1978, the post-Stalinist poetry of Czeslaw Milosz, who left the country in 1951 and won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1980. Like several other writers pioneered by Nowa, his works eventually also became published officially.

Tadeusz Konwicki, arguably Poland's leading living author, helped establish the fledgling Nowa's credibility among writers when he dared to publish his novels "The Polish Complex" and "A Minor Apocolypse" in a Nowa literary quarterly in the late 1970s, bypassing the censor's office. (In 1986 he returned to an official publishing house.)

Among foreign authors Nowa published first in Poland are Kurt Vonnegut Jr. ("Mother Night"), Guenter Grass ("The Tin Drum") and Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn ("One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich"). An edition of William Styron's "Sophie's Choice" is in the planning stages.

A Nowa editor, who was imprisoned for his activities during the 1981-83 martial-law period and agreed to talk about the publishing house only on condition of anonymity, said Nowa has gone through "periods of very different attitudes."

"The first two or three years was the kind of heroic period," he said, referring to the times its leaders were harassed and frequently jailed. But after 1980 and the sudden rise of Solidarity, "we were practically overground," he said.

"The directors were in the open, most everything was printed in Solidarity workshops and people began thinking about becoming a legal organization," he said.

Martial law in December 1981 brought a swift end to the ebullient mood, with about 90 percent of Nowa's workers immediately sent to prison or internment camps, the editor said. Nevertheless, he added, those remaining were able to bring out the first post-martial-law book by March 1982.

"And we had leaflets out even earlier."

The revival was difficult, with the constant threat of capture and imprisonment, he said. But since 1985 authorities have been "relatively mild," reflecting lessened internal tensions, and any sanctions are mainly economic.

Workers caught are fined and printing equipment is confiscated, he said.

Centuries Old Oak Is Subject Of Charleston, S.C. Squabble

By BRUCE SMITH
Associated Press Writer

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — The Dark Ages were just beginning when Angel Oak sprouted from an acorn. But 15 centuries later, the tree is the focus of a modern-day debate over private ownership vs. public benefit.

Mayor Joseph P. Riley Jr. wants to acquire the oak and make it the centerpiece of a city park, using the city's power of eminent domain to condemn property owned by S.E. "Speedy" Felkel.

But Felkel, a real estate developer who erected a fence around Angel Oak 12 years ago and charges visitors $1 to see it, says no amount of compensation the city offers will be enough.

"I consider it like the Felkel family Bible that came over here 200 years ago," he said, adding that he has promised the tree and the land to his children. "There's no room for negotiation."

The oak lies about 300 yards outside city limits on John's Island, a community south of Charleston. State law allows municipalities to acquire land outside their corporate limits and in adjoining counties if the acquisition is for public benefit and just compensation is given.

The oak is estimated to be 1,511 years old, and is believed to be the oldest living thing east of the Rockies, Felkel said. It got its name from the Angel family, which owned it from colonial times through the 1950s.

He said in his recent State of the City address that while the tree used to be available to all the public, in recent years "it became encircled with this hideously ugly fence and became a tourist attraction." The city plans to develop "a quiet and gentle park," the mayor said.

Felkel said: "Had we not fenced that tree 12 years ago, the tree would not be here today. If the mayor comes and pulls down the fence and gives it back to the public, the public will destroy it."

Felkel's attorney, William Ackerman, said the issue of eminent domain concerns a gray area of the law.

Municipalities can condemn property if they want to put through a sewer line or a road, he noted. But does the law permit them to condemn a historic home simply because the city wants it for a museum?

"Can you condemn a painting by Rembrandt if you want to put it in an art gallery?" he asked.

If the city decides to seek it through eminent domain, Felkel promised to fight it to the state Supreme Court.

The case could have effects nationwide, he said, "because it would be the first time to my knowledge that a thing could be condemned because the head of a government body likes the look of it."

Riley told John's Island residents Monday that the city doesn't use its eminent domain power lightly but Angel Oak is an unusual case because it "is the paragon of our physical heritage."

But the mayor was presented with 2,800 signatures from concerned residents opposed to the city using the eminent domain power.

Meanwhile, state Sen. Sherry Martschink said she asked Tuesday for an opinion from the state attorney general on whether condemnation outside a jurisdiction for recreational purposes violates the spirit of the law.

She also plans to introduce a bill that would prohibit out-of-jurisdiction condemnations for non-essential purposes.

Riley has agreed to allow residents study the situation before proceeding further, said Burke Lee, the chairman of a committee that advises the city and county on growth plans for John's Island.

The study should be completed in about three months, he said, adding that the results probably will be presented at a public hearing.

He said he had no great objection to a park but "for a lot of committee members the biggest concern is the use of eminent domain."

SUBJECT OF SQUABBLE — This 1,500-year-old oak, the Angel Oak on Johns Island near Charleston, S.C. has become the focal point of a condemnation fight by the city of Charleston to condemn the property if necessary to acquire the tree and adjacent property, and S.E. "Speedy" Felkel, who owns the tree. Felkel considers the tree a family heirloom and will take the case to the state Supreme Court if he has to. (AP Laserhoto)

Is The North Carolina's Largest Oak?

ONE OF THE LARGEST — This huge live oak tree at the settlement of Gull Rock in Hyde County is said by locals to be the largest of its kind in Hyde County — and perhaps one of the largest live oaks in North Carolina. The huge, gnarled bottom limbs are the size of average full grown trees. Long a community landmark, legend has it the tree was a sacred gathering place for Indians before the coming of white men. U.S., Australia Issuing Joint Stamps

Recently in this column we reported that the U.S. Postal Service, in conjunction with the Australian postal department, will be issuing a 22-cent stamp to hail the bicentennial of the founding of Australia.

The 37-cent Australian stamp, after adjustment for current exchange rates, sells in the United States for 27 cents.

Both the U.S. and Australian first-day cancellations are available as well as maximum cards and bicentennial stamp folders.

First-day cancellations for the U.S. stamp may be obtained by purchasing them at your local post office and affixing them to your own envelopes. Send to: Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Australia Bicentennial Stamps, Postmaster, Washington, DC 20066-9991. It must be postmarked by Feb. 25.

If you prefer to have the USPS affix the stamp, enclose a money order for 22 cents per stamp and send to: Australia Bicentennial Stamps, Postmaster, Washington, DC 20066-9992. The deadline is Feb. 25.

Should you desire an Australian first-day cancellation (Australian postmark) enclose a money order for 27 cents and send to: Australian First-Day Cancellation, Washington, DC 20066-9991. The deadline is Feb. 25.

A combination first-day cancellation — one U.S. and one Australian stamp — may be ordered by enclosing a money order for 49 cents and sending to: U.S.-Australia Combination Cover, Postmaster, Washington, DC 20066-9994.

The U.S. maximum card is available in mint or canceled forms. Both the 50-cent plain card and the 72-cent with a canceled U.S. stamp can be purchased by mail only from the Philatelic Sales Division. Send to: U.S.-Australia Maximum Cards, Philatelic Sales Division, Washington, DC 20265-9997. There is a $10 minimum and a 50-cent postage and handling fee for each order.

The Australian maximum card can be purchased in mint form or with canceled Australian stamp by sending to: Australian Maximum Cards, Philatelic Sales Division, Washington, DC 20265-9997. The $10 minimum and 50-cent handling fee applies. You have until June 30 to order.

The U.S. Stamp Folder contains a block of four of both commemoratives plus a narrative highlighting the importance of the Australian anniversary. The folder sells for $4 and is available at all philatelic centers. It can be ordered from: U.S.-Australian Stamp Folders, Philatelic Sales Division, Washington, DC 20265-9997. As with most purchases from the Sales Division, there is a $10 minimum order requirement and the 50-cent postage and handling fee.

North Carolina State Parks Said To Be Nation's Worst

By ERICA JOHNSTON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — When Wes Davis travels out of the state on business, people usually are impressed that he is parks director for North Carolina. But Davis says there's a wide gulf between the image and the reality of state parks.

"When I'm out of state and I tell people that I'm director of parks in North Carolina, they get very excited," he said. "They say 'North Carolina, what a beautiful state! I've been to Asheville, and I love the Outer Banks.'"

Davis, in his third year as state parks director, doesn't mince any words when talking about the 53 parks and natural areas he supervises.

"They're pretty depressing," he says. "... We are in every respect the last state park system in the country."

When asked to single out good and bad state parks, Davis doesn't even hesitate.

"I can't honestly tell you that we've got a good one," he says.

Davis quickly adds that some of the 123,000 acres of state parkland boast stunning natural landmarks, such as Jockey's Ridge on the Outer Banks, Hanging Rock in Stokes County and Mount Mitchell in the west. But he says the man-made amenities that make nature accessible and enjoyable are sorely lacking — simple things like lavoratories and brochures, and not-so-simple things like educational and camping facilities.

Some parks, such as Mitchell's Mill in northern Wake County, have been used as garbage dumps, Davis said. Only 28 of the state's 53 park areas are even open.

"The rest are just sitting there," he said. "If you're generous, you say they're land banks. If not, you say they're going to waste."

Davis hauls out a sheaf of mounted, enlarged photographs he showed to state legislators in an unsuccessful attempt to get more money for state parks. They show cracks in buildings, graffiti, eroded roads and a cement boat ramp that looks as though it was blown apart in an earthquake.

"North Carolina deserves much better," he says.

And other state officials agree. In 1986, the State Goals and Policy Board concluded that the state's "park and recreation system is in generally deplorable condition ... and is inarguably a worst-case example of the abuse of a public trust and the abdication of responsibility."

Why so many problems?

North Carolina was the first state in the Southeast to establish a state park system, with the acquisition of Mount Mitchell in 1915. But state lawmakers have always been hesitant to commit resources to the cause. From 1915 through 1986, legislators voted to spend a total of $50 million for state parks.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

If you would like to add some brightness to a room, you might want to consider some furnishings in yellows. Yellow is the color of sunshine and that color can bring some sunshine to your home.

On the other hand, if you want to make a room seem quieter or more relaxed, try some blues or greens.

If you want to add some warmth and excitement to an area, you might consider some oranges and reds.

There are many things that the mere choice of color can do for you. Two identical pieces of furniture that are the same except for color can bring different moods and qualities to a room.

Don't overlook the fact, however, that a color is affected by the color it is next to, so be sure to use a color in relation to that to which it will be adjacent.

And, there are other considerations, too. For example, pale colors on things can make a room seem bigger since pale colors recede and give a feeling of more space, while dark colors come toward you and make an area seem smaller or more intimate.

We urge you to use color as a decorating tool, and we can help you select the colors and color combinations you want, in the places you want them in your home. Betsy Drake Interiors, Inc. is the interior design firm with a million dollar inventory. We invite you to come in and see the top name brands of home furnishings attractively displayed with beautiful lamps, accessories and handmade Oriental rugs. You'll be glad you did.

Mort Hurst Called 'Mouth Of The South'

By KATHY JUMPER
The Mobile Press Register

This world champion eater has earned a place in the Guinness Book of World Records thanks to his "bottomless pit."

He holds world records in watermelon speed eating — he ate 15½ pounds of watermelon (with seeds) in 10 minutes. And he slurped down 7½ pounds of collard greens with ketchup in 30 minutes.

"I've always liked eating," said Hurst, who can eat six whole chickens at one sitting. "And I like to win. It started out as a challenge. Then it was a hobby. Now it's strictly a business."

He said he will be appearing in a movie for HBO, was featured in the National Enquirer last November and has appeared on radio and TV talk shows in 23 states. He hopes one day to be on The David Letterman Show.

"I don't eat anything now except to set a record or for money," said Hurst, the father of two who owns four ice plants in Robersonville. "I went through a period of a year and a half when I proved that I could eat."

He said he has been banned from the all-you-can-eat restaurants in his hometown. And he doesn't go far without his trusty bottle of ketchup. He puts ketchup on everything, even watermelon.

"The hardest things to eat are collards, steak — I once ate eight pounds — and eggs," he said. "Cool Hand Luke (Paul Newman) ate 50 eggs and that's the reason I ate 54 eggs."

He's also eaten 750 shrimp in one sitting and a chocolate pie in 32 seconds. For 150 of his townspeople, he ate a light breakfast: 54 eggs, 8 pieces of toast, three 14-ounce soft drinks, 3 large pancakes and two bottles of ketchup.

A city councilman in Robersonville, Hurst said his family and friends are his biggest fans. "My daddy said with the money I won on the first contest I should go see a psychiatrist," he joked. "Now he's really into it. I told my wife I was foolish not to make some money off this."

"I'm going to try to go with a big name singer," Hurst said after playing the song. "Like Ray Stevens or Tom T. Hall."

He entered his first contest, the Ayden Collard Festival in North Carolina, in 1983. He ate five pounds of collards and three bottles of ketchup and lost the contest by one-half pound. He went back in 1984 and "I slaughtered everybody over there by eating seven pounds of collards," he said.

Hurst trains for six weeks before a contest. "Never train on what you eat," he advised. "I'm not too crazy about collards."

He tells kids what one of his idols, Evel Knievel, said: "Watch what I do but don't attempt it. I've choked two times. I've passed out, too." In speed eating he has cut his lips and pulled muscles in his neck.

"Before a contest I do stretching exercises," he said. "I loosen my belt and stay cool. When you eat a lot of food you generate heat. Sometimes I have to take my shirt off. It is dangerous. You can cut your lights out."

"He said if you eat the seeds, I want you to win."

New Stamp Issues In The News

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

Four years ago the U.S. Postal Service issued a block of four dedicated to the canine family, and now it is releasing a block of four featuring domestic cats. The designs depict eight popular breeds of cats, two per stamp.

The stamp in the upper left of the corner shows the Siamese and the Exotic Shorthair. The upper right adhesive has the Abyssinian and the Himalayan. The lower left illustrates the Maine Coon and the Burmese. The lower right pictures the American Shorthair and Persian.

Cat lovers as well as those topical collectors who specialize in cats (or any animals) on stamps will welcome the new feline quartet.

First-day cancellations are available in the usual two methods.

You may purchase the stamps at your local post office and attach to your own envelopes, remembering to place the stamps in the upper right corner and the address at least 5/8 of an inch from the bottom. No remittance is required. Orders must be postmarked no later than March 6. Send to: Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Cats Stamps, Postmaster, New York, NY 10199-9991. Collectors preferring to have the USPS affix the stamps must enclose a money order or personal check for 88 cents for each block of four and 22 cents for single stamps. Selection of single stamps by the Postal Service will be random, and requests for specific designs will not be honored. The deadline is March 6. Send to: Cats Stamps, Postmaster, New York, NY 10199-9992.

Looking ahead, the USPS says it will host a major philatelic exhibition in conjunction with the 20th Congress of the Universal Postal Union. The philatelic Congress is set for 1989 in Washington, D.C., and will mark the first time in 92 years that the governing body of the Universal Postal Union has convened in the United States.

The philatelic exhibition, "World Stamp Expo '89," will take place for 12 days during the period Nov. 17-Dec.3. The exhibition will be open for three weekends, and closed for a few days in between. This will enable visitors and booth holders to attend the wholesale stamp stock exchange and stamp auctions, or visit some of the many attractions in Washington. Additional events are planned for junior collectors between the second and third weekends.

The UPU Congress and the philatelic event will both be held at the Washington Convention Center.

The philatelic event will see experienced collectors from throughout the world as well as the young, new collectors, who will find many exciting displays and interesting information about the hobby.

Additional information may be obtained by writing to: Les Winick, Exhibition Manager, World Stamp Expo '89, Box 1989, Homewood, IL 60430-8989.

N.C. State Parks

In contrast, Kentucky spent more than North Carolina's 72-year total — $51.8 million — in 1987 alone. California topped the list of state parks spenders at $123 million.

North Carolina's park system is more like a slap-dash patchwork quilt than a carefully thought-out network. Most of the public lands were donated by individuals or the U.S. government. Many are like donuts, Davis says, with islands of private land in the middle of the parks.

It wasn't until several months ago that state lawmakers adopted the State Parks Act, which is designed to clarify the role of state parks. Now, legislators have to approve all land acquisitions. Before, the Council of State authorized gifts of land, without even the knowledge of lawmakers. So they often were hesitant to give money to projects they had not been involved in.

The state's rural nature also probably held back state funding of parks, Davis said.

"Twenty years ago, it was very difficult to convince a farmer of the need for a park," he said. "He had a little park of his own."

But things are different now, he said. Fifty-two percent of the state's residents live in urban areas, and North Carolina is now the 10th most populous state. "That causes tremendous pressure to have open spaces." Davis said

State parks have seen an 11 percent rise in visitors in each of the last three years, with 6.2 million people visiting them in 1986.

"All these demands are coming in ... but the facilities are the same, and the number of staff is the same," Davis said. "That leads to problems."

Is the situation improving for North Carolina parks? Not yet, at least in terms of money.

North Carolina is 50th among the 50 states in per capita spending for parks. In 1986, the state spent 99 cents per resident for its parks. Kentucky spent almost $14, and the Southeastern average was $3.14.

Davis tells the story of a frustrated park ranger confronted by a frustrated park visitor: "The guy says, 'Where is all my tax money going?' The ranger said he wanted to reach into his pocket and give the guy $1, and say, 'Here it is.'"

Things got worse in the 1987 Legislature. The parks division's funding was cut 2 percent for 1987-89 in comparison to its 1985-87 levels.

Davis says the park system needs at least $15 million to buy the donut holes of private property in public land, $80 million for new construction and $20 million in repairs.

Money-raising possibilities include a bond issue, establishment of a trust fund or increased taxes, he added. Colorado raises money for parks through its lottery, as Virginia will do when its lottery begins. Part of the gas tax goes to the parks cause in Oregon, and Florida takes some of its real estate transfer tax for parks.

Homeland Of The Mohawks Indians Poisoned By Chemicals

EDITOR'S NOTE — The Mohawks call their homeland Akwesasne, "Land Where the Partridge Drums." It's a 25-square-mile reservation spanning the St. Lawrence River, a place where they once could hunt and fish for food. Today the white man's chemicals have poisoned Akwesasne and the Mohawk way of life is in peril.

By MARY ESCH
Associated Press Writer

HOGANSBURG, N.Y. (AP) — When a snapping turtle from the St. Lawrence River was found to be so laden with PCBs that its fat could qualify as toxic waste, the Mohawk Indians regarded it as an especially significant omen.

In the mystical religion of the Mohawks, the turtle is symbolic of the very foundation of the natural world. Tribal elders pass on an ancient story of creation in which the earth took shape on a turtle's back.

Now, the turtle has taken on a somber new symbolism for the Mohawk Nation of the Iroquois. Its tainted flesh is a sign of the defilement of nature, of the poisoning of the bountiful river from which the Mohawks have drawn sustenance and inspiration for centuries.

"I used to have my nets in the river," says Tom Porter, a Bear Clan chief at the St. Regis Reservation, which the Mohawks call Akwesasne. "My family ate fish almost every day. Then they told us of mercury contamination, mirex and PCBs. I pulled my nets out and let them rot."

To traditional Mohawks like Porter, who are trying to maintain their cultural identity by living off the land according to age-old customs, the environmental ills are more than a health threat. They are seen as a threat to the very fabric of Mohawk society.

"Our traditions survive in doing things the Mohawk way," says Katsi Cook, a Mohawk midwife. "Our whole ceremonial life, our cosmological life, is based on nature. Without that river, we lose Akwesasne."

Akwesasne — "Land Where the Partridge Drums" — is a 25-square-mile reservation which spans the St. Lawrence River and the international border between northern New York and Canada. It is home to about 8,000 Mohawks.

To outsiders whizzing down the state highway that cuts across it, the reservation is a brushy flatland cluttered with garish tourist traps — bingo halls, truck stops, drive-through, tax-free cigarette stands.

Less obvious to the casual observer are the fishing villages along the river, the prolific vegetable gardens, the marshes teeming with ducks, the new cultural center displaying intricately woven sweet grass baskets and beadwork wrought by Mohawk artisans.

Cheap hydroelectric power and access to international shipping on the St. Lawrence Seaway made the remote rural area near Akwesasne an attractive location for aluminum smelters, foundries, chemical factories and paper mills.

A General Motors foundry abuts the western edge of Indian land, with a Superfund-listed, PCB-filled dump perched at the very brink of the river. Wild animals caught nearby have been found to be loaded with polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs). Mohawks fear the game which supplements the diets of many families is no longer edible.

A yellow-gray haze of metallic-smelling smoke laden with fluoride drifts over Cornwall Island, the agricultural center of the reservation, from a nearby aluminum smelter. Mohawk cattle herds were virtually wiped out more than a decade ago, the animals wasting away with brittle bones and rotting teeth: A Cornell University study confirmed fluoride poisoning.

Reynolds Metals Co. cut its fluoride emissions from 300 pounds per hour in 1959 to 75 pounds per hour by 1980. Reynolds and the Aluminum Company of America in nearby Massena agreed to pay $650,000 in damages two years ago, to settle a $150 million lawsuit brought by the Mohawks. But the cattle herds have not recovered.

"When I was a teen-ager, my friends and I always talked of one day having farms on Cornwall Island," says Cook, 35, who delivers babies on the reservation but lives in Ithaca, about 220 miles southwest. "We left because of the pollution. It's hard to build a traditional lifestyle on a pile of toxic waste."

Cook has become one of the leaders in the fight to clean up the pollution in the place where she was born.

"I never wanted to be an environmental activist," Cook says. "I just wanted to deliver babies." But she saw several infants with birth defects like cleft palate, deafness and intestinal abnormalities, and wondered if the pollution was affecting human health.

In 1985, Cook turned to Ward Stone, a New York state wildlife pathologist whose work has been influential in spurring environmental cleanup. She asked him to investigate whether pollutants were moving through the food chain at Akwesasne.

Stone tested the flesh of a snapping turtle captured within 300 feet of the GM landfill. He found PCBs at a level of 835 parts per million (ppm) in the turtle's fat. A level above 3 ppm in poultry fat is deemed unfit for human consumption.

"In soil, 50 ppm on a dry weight basis is considered hazardous waste," Stone says. "So you could say this animal would qualify as hazardous waste."

Stone continued his sampling of fish and wildlife at the reservation, working with a group of Mohawk interns. In 1985, he found a PCB level of 11,522 ppm in a shrew — the highest level he had ever seen in any mammal. This fall, he found a PCB level of 3,067 ppm in the fat of another snapping turtle.

"They have a massive pollution problem," Stone says. "We've pushed the Mohawk people onto a tiny postage-stamp piece of land, and now we've polluted it so their traditional lifestyle is in jeopardy."

"What happens to a people when you remove their source of protein?" says Henry Lickers, a Mohawk environmentalist who led the court battle against Reynolds. "Protein has become a very scarce commodity here, very expensive in a community where more than 70 percent of the people are on public assistance. Instead of cattle, fish and game, people are eating macaroni, potatoes and bread. And that's in a population where 50 percent of the people over the age of 40 are confirmed diabetics."

The eggs of a giant sturgeon caught in 1986 had PCB readings at 8 ppm, four times the permissible level. That raised concern over the future of a lucrative Mohawk industry: the sale of caviar, which goes for $30 an ounce in luxury markets in New York City and Montreal.

Francis Jock, a 45-year-old Mohawk fisherman who lives in a white clapboard cottage on the river bank, caught the toxic sturgeon as well as other fish sampled by Stone. He says the pollution has hurt not only the commercial fishing industry, but also the tourist trade.

"We used to have a lot of fishing camps here," Jock says. Anglers from across the Northeast would hire Mohawk guides, whose skills on the river are legendary. "Now they can't eat the fish, so they don't come."

Jock worries about the spiritual as well as financial loss. "When you're out on the river, you can think, you're at peace with yourself," he says. "You can talk with your Maker. The young people aren't learning that now."

Tony Barnes, a 67-year-old Mohawk hunter, trapper and purveyor of herbal medicines, provides Stone with the carcasses of ducks, muskrats, beavers, salmon and other creatures for testing.

"People came from all over to fish for muskie. I caught more than any other guide," says Barnes, hauling out a scrapbook filled with yellowed newspaper photos of grinning men with strings of fish. "We closed the fishing camp three years ago because of the pollution."

"We used to have perch for breakfast every day," adds Barnes, who has nine children and 14 grandchildren. "Now we don't eat fish more than once a week. We eat birds and rabbits, squirrels. This is the first muskrat we've eaten in three years. I've caught 112 for the tests."

Stone's studies are intended to track the movement of toxic chemicals through the environment, with exhaustive analyses of soil, river sediments, plants, leeches, insects, fish, birds and a broad range of animals. Some of the data will be used by state health officials to assess the risk of eating various species of fish and game.

It is one of many pollution studies coordinated by Mohawk health officials. In the early 1970s, Cornell University veterinarians documented fluoride poisoning of Mohawk cattle. About the same time, a University of Montana scientist found high fluoride levels in plant samples from Cornwall Island.

In 1981, scientists from the Mt. Sinai School of Medicine studied fluoride in the Mohawk people but found no persuasive link to clinical illness.

"Up until 1983, GM denied there was a PCB problem," says Jim Ransom, an environmental technician with the St. Regis Tribal Council. The Environmental Protection Agency fined the company $507,000 that year for illegal use, storage and disposal of PCBs.

A $1.2 million remediation study started by GM in 1985 under federal orders showed 23,000 cubic yards of PCB-contaminated sediments in the river adjacent to the plant, Ransom says.

The study also showed PCB contamination of drinking water wells on Raquette Point, just downstream from the GM plant. The company supplied bottled water to those affected — including the Freedom School, an elementary school where Mohawk children are taught in their native language.

Cook is now working on a study of PCBs in the breast milk of Mohawk women. Cornell scientists are involved in several projects at the reservation, including a study of human health risks, contamination of the food supply and effects on the immune systems of dogs.

"It was a very long fight to bring recognition to these problems," says Lickers, who has been fighting the polluters for 12 years as director of the Environmental Division of the Mohawk Band Council.

Dealing with the environmental ills, Lickers says, has been complicated by the complex political situation at the reservation, which overlaps the jurisdictions of environmental agencies in the United States, Canada, New York state, and the provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

And there are three Indian governments: the Canadian-backed Mohawk Band Council, the U.S.-backed St. Regis Tribal Council, and the traditionalist Mohawk Nation Council of Iroquois Confederacy chiefs.

While various Mohawk factions have clashed over issues like bingo and slot machines, an overriding concern for the environment has fostered close cooperation on pollution studies — even during an armed standoff between traditionalist and tribal factions in 1979, Lickers says.

Stone is skeptical that Akwesasne will ever be clean enough to supply safe fish and game to its people. "I don't think you'll ever be able to clean up a mess like this, although you can reduce it," he says.

Porter talks of leaving, of starting a new life with other traditional families.

"If we could find 5,000, maybe 20,000 acres of land, with no factories polluting it, we could go and start over, live the way we're supposed to live," he says.

But Lickers is steadfast in his belief that the river will one day be clean enough for his grandchildren to swim in.

"What keeps me going is believing that river will be clean," he says. "We aren't looking for a big monetary settlement. We just want the tools to restore the environment. To develop marsh management plans. To put bass boxes in the river. To improve the pickerel spawning beds. To study protein sources like flint corn, a traditional Indian corn that's high in protein and low in starch."

"In Love Canal, the people got compensation and moved away," Lickers says. "But we have no place to run. Our people have been here for 10,000 years. This is our homeland."

Some older residents of the Sea Islands, off the southeast coast of the United States, are named for months or days of the week. This naming system is common among West African peoples.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An exhibition of the work of contemporary artist David Hockney is on view at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art through April 24.

Organized by the museum to celebrate Hockney's 50th year, the restrospective surveys more than a quarter century of his work. The museum says it affords "a rare opportunity to see the early paintings as well as several recent works never previously exhibited."

The exhibition includes some 150 paintings, 60 drawings and 30 photographs, in addition to prints, illustrated books and examples of Hockney's collaborative stage design.

A Book About Mississippi Courthouses

By KATHY EYRE
Associated Press Writer

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A single undated photograph of overall-clad men whittling or sitting idly on the steps of the Tippah County Courthouse precedes the title page of Bill Gurney's newly published book "Mississippi Courthouses Then and Now."

Though such ritualistic loitering is a thing of the past in much of Mississippi, Ripley native Gurney notes that his hometown has clung to its traditional social roots.

"Five or six days a week a hardy faithful group of whittlers gathers in the courthouse yard in balmy months and inside the courthouse corridor in winter, to exchange gossip, news, and assorted exaggerated tales. The shavings from this sport are graciously swept up daily by an obliging courthouse sexton," Gurney writes in his book's introduction.

Other than a few paragraphs in the introduction, Gurney lets the photograph serve as a single statement on the Mississippi courthouse square's important role in yesteryear.

But his book certainly stems from a tender feeling for the buildings which served as a backdrop for so much of Mississippi's cultural as well as political history.

The other 160 or so photographs in the 185-page picture book catalog courthouses long torn down and those recently constructed in Mississippi's 82 counties. Ten of the counties have two currently functioning county seats, he notes.

Arranged alphabetically by county, the photographs are accompanied by an inset state map locating each county, a list of the square-mile size and population of each county, and their ranking in comparsion with the others. A paragraph or two on the history of each county serve as captions for the courthouse photographs.

In a recent interview from his home in Ripley, Gurney said he traveled across the state in 1986 and 1987 to take most of the photographs of the standing courthouses himself.

He said photographs of now demolished courthouses were gleaned from the state Department of Archives and History, libraries, old newspaper files, and some personal and family photograph collections.

"I don't know much about architecture," says the 68-year-old University of Mississippi history graduate who worked as an accountant in several other states until 1974, when he returned to Ripley. Eventually he began publishing regional genealogical materials and in 1975 he helped form the Tippah County Historical and Genealogical Society.

Gurney admits he couldn't say with confidence whether a structure was Victorian or Greek Revival.

But when he came across picture books cataloging the courthouses of other Southern states, Gurney said he decided Mississippians shouldn't be without access to a single volume showing them their architectural heritage.

People's tongues don't have to know the fancy terms that describe architecture for their eyes to appreciate its beauty, he says.

"Potentially it could be lost. One of my goals was to make a record of the architecture that has been part of our architectural heritage," Gurney said, noting that the courthouses in Vicksburg, Raymond and Canton are the best preserved of the ornate antebellum courthouses.

"Mississippi Courthouses Then and Now" is available in several bookstores in larger cities throughout the state at a cost $25 each, Gurney said.

Fort Fisher Attractions

KURE BEACH — North Carolina's historic Civil War Confederate fort is inviting classroom teachers and their students to make reservations for spring 1988 field trips.

The staff at Fort Fisher State Historic Site near Kure Beach has increased educational resources and offers several types of guided tours and interpretations of the historic fort.

Since April and May are heavy months for school visitation, the staff advises making reservations early — at least two to four weeks in advance of your intended visit, according to Leland Smith, assistant manager.

Fort Fisher played a significant role in the Civil War by keeping the port of Wilmington open for blockade runners bringing in vital supplies. Among the largest earthen fortifications in the south, the hand-constructed wall of Fort Fisher stretched more than 1.5 miles. After four years of stubborn defiance, Fort Fisher finally fell to Union forces Jan. 15, 1865, after two of the largest land-sea battles in the world up to D-day in World War II.

The staff offers several types of costumed guided tours, which include such sights as the reconstructed gun battery and an entrance to a bombproof , an underground room.

Guides also show period clothing and give weapons demonstrations. In the visitor center a 15-minute slide program explains the history of the fort. Visitor center exhibits show artifacts from area blockade runner wrecks and from inside the fort.

Admission at all times is free, both for the general public and for groups.

Fort Fisher State Historic Site, an agency of the Department of Cultural Resources, is located at Kure Beach, three miles south on US 421, 20 miles south of Wilmington.

Malcolm Miller Lecture At ECU

Author-lecturer Malcolm Miller, internationally recognized as an authority on Chartres Cathedral in France, will visit East Carolina University Feb. 10 to present an illustrated lecture on the art and architecture of the medieval cathedral.

His program is scheduled for 8 p.m. in the Brody Building Auditorium and is free and open to the public.

A native of England, Miller has lectured at Chartres since 1958. Each winter he visits various campuses and museums in the British Isles and North America, speaking on medieval stained glass, cathedral architecture and other topics.

In addition, he has published several books on the famed Cathedral and has been featured on Canadian and British television.

Miller's appearance, coordinated by Karine Sparrow-Ginter of the ECU Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures, is sponsored by the languages and literatures department, the ECU Medieval-Renaissance Studies Committee, the European Area Studies Committee, the Department of Medical Humanities and the ECU-Sorbonne Program.

Movies, TV May Be Helping VN Veterans

By DAN SEWELL
Associated Press Writer

LAKE WORTH, Fla. (AP) — Hollywood's wave of Vietnam movies and the critically praised TV series, "Tour of Duty," may be important tools for psychologists trying to help veterans still suffering from the trauma of war experiences two decades ago.

"I saw 'Platoon' eight times," said John J. Anderson, a Palm Beach County sheriff's lieutenant who served in Vietnam in 1966-67. "I cried the first time I saw it ... and the third and fourth times. 'Platoon' helped me understand."

Anderson is among 250 to 300 Vietnam veterans who come here for therapy at the Vet Center, one of many around the nation established in a federal program that began nearly eight years ago for veterans of that war.

Dr. William Weitz, an Army lieutenant colonel and clinical psychologist, considers movies and videos one of the best ways to evoke deep-seated memories the veterans need to deal with as they go through therapy.

"Many of these guys talk about not being able to feel anything," Weitz said. "The irony is the feelings are so intense that they have blocked them. If you don't feel the past, you can't feel the present or the future.

"The movies can bring 'Nam to the forefront and make them re-experience those memories that are bothering them, make them break through the barriers." The center in this Palm Beach County city is well-stocked with dozens of videotapes that range from military instructional films to the latest Hollywood movies available.

"The visual modality can be very powerful," Weitz said. "Sometimes at the end of a movie there will be long periods of silence. You can hear the heartbeats of 15 guys."

Veterans watching movies will apply specific scenes to their own experiences, and most find "Platoon," which won four Academy Awards including best picture, as the most realistic treatment. Director Oliver Stone is a Vietnam vet whose movie captured the terrifying chaos of jungle warfare in a strange country.

"When someone asked me what it was like over there, it was hard to explain. How do you describe a firefight? The movie showed it," said Greg Stauch, who was in Vietnam with the Army in 1965-66.

Tom Reilly, who served in Vietnam in 1966-70, took his son and wife to see "Platoon" and the movie helped them to understand what he had gone through.

The veterans also liked "Hamburger Hill," the Paramount Pictures release about the bloody taking and retaking of a small area in Vietnam. And they praised "Ceasefire," in which Don Johnson plays a Vietnam vet struggling to return to civilian life.

Daniel Rose, who served in Vietnam from 1969-70, said he began coming here for therapy after seeing "Ceasefire" and recognizing his own problems. "It just hit home. I felt like I was up on the screen," he said.

In the past year, Hollywood has released Francis Coppola's portrait of burial duty at Arlington National Cemetery, "Gardens of Stone," Stanley Kubrick's "Full Metal Jacket," "Hamburger Hill" and just recently "Good Morning Saigon" with Robin Williams. With these films and "Tour of Duty" on television, veterans say their once-neglected problems are finally touching other Americans.

"Full Metal Jacket" and Coppola's 1979 "Apocalypse Now" weren't favorites among the veterans assembled here, but they said some scenes were very true-to-life.

Ron Hanna, an Army veteran, can identify with the "Apocalypse Now" protagonist played by Martin Sheen. Like Sheen's character, he returned home after a tour in Vietnam and found himself so unable to relate to his family and civilian life that he voluntarily returned to Vietnam for more action. He said he had witnessed real counterparts of the brash Robert Duvall character who insisted on surfing as battle continued.

Most veterans didn't like the critically acclaimed "Coming Home" because it starred Jane Fonda, whose visit to Hanoi they still remember bitterly. "The Deer Hunter," another Academy Award winner, was enjoyed by most.

Peter Erlinder, a Minnesota law professor who has studied extensively the post-traumatic stress disorder often suffered by veterans, has identified several reasons why Vietnam veterans have been especially prone to that problem, which can trigger violent, criminal behavior.

He says veterans of any war are subject to the trauma, but Vietnam was particularly troubling because of the combatants' young age — the average age of a U.S. soldier in Vietnam was 19, compared to 26 in World War II. Also, they were in a country whose culture and language were completely alien, they were in near-constant danger throughout their tour, there were no clear military objectives such as "crossing the Rhine" they returned home to a nation that didn't honor them as heroes.

Weitz noted that post-traumatic stress disorder is not confined to war victims, but also can afflict rape victims or anyone who has had a traumatic event.

Curb Begins This Year On Wood Smoke Emissions

By DAVID HENCH
Associated Press Writer

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — Harry Locker enjoys the pleasant aroma of wood smoke on cold New England mornings as much as anyone, even knowing it can be unhealthy.

Locker, a graduate student at Dartmouth College, has for four years been researching ways to determine how much wood smoke contributes to air pollution, something that monitoring agencies in Vermont, Maine and New Hampshire say they need to assess the problem.

Though wood-smoke pollution is "not the worst environmental situation in the world," Locker is glad nonetheless that federal emissions standards for new wood-burning stoves take effect this summer.

The Environmental Protection Agency regulations, adopted last week, mandate a sharp reduction in particles emitted by stoves manufactured after July 1.

Sellers have until 1990 to exhaust their supplies of unregulated stoves, and tougher restrictions on particles take effect in 1990 for producers and 1992 for sellers.

The new stoves, some already certified and being sold, reduce emissions by improving combustion efficiency. Some use design improvements; others have a catalytic combustor described by EPA as "in effect, a smoke afterburner."

Standards are tougher for catalytic stoves because the catalytic elements — typically platinum or palladium bonded to a ceramic backing — deteriorate with time.

Both approaches add to the cost of a stove — about $200 for catalytic models and $120 for non-catalytic ones. But there are benefits: the new stoves burn less wood to produce a given amount of heat. They also emit less creosote, which builds up in chimneys and must be cleaned out periodically to avoid chimney fires.

"It's true that the price that you see on the showroom floor will go up a little bit, but you'll make it back," says David Doniger of the Natural Resources Defense Council in Washington. The EPA agrees, estimating $29 million in savings in five years for consumers nationwide.

Smoke from wood-burning stoves is considered by some scientists to be northern New England's worst homegrown air pollution problem. Wood-smoke pollution also is prevalent in parts of the West.

One component of wood smoke, polycyclic organic matter, contains carcinogens. Locker estimates that half of such compounds in the air come from wood-burning stoves.

In addition to causing cancer, wood smoke contains carbon monoxide and small particles that lodge deep in the lungs and can lead to respiratory and cardiovascular problems.

But the health risks of wood smoke in northern New England have been difficult to gauge. Monitoring agencies not only can't determine how much air pollution is from wood-burning stoves, but they lack health risk assessments for compounds in the smoke, making it impossible to accurately assess the dangers of exposure, says Norman Anderson, Maine's assistant state toxicologist.

Oregon discovered wood smoke as a significant pollutant only after it had clamped stringent emissions controls on industry and still couldn't meet federal Clean Air Act standards.

After discovering that much of its pollution was caused by residential wood-burning, Oregon passed state emission controls for stoves that took effect in mid-1986. Colorado followed on Jan. 1, 1987.

With more state and local restrictions looming, stove manufacturers asked the EPA to set federal regulations. "They wanted a federal standard so badly they would accept a good one," said Doniger.

The immediate impact of the regulations on pollution will be negligible.

"If you have an area with wood-smoke problems that you want to mitigate, these regulations are not going to do that," says Andrew Smith, staff scientist for the Natural Resources Council in Maine.

The regulations don't affect fireplaces or wood-burning furnaces and boilers. And they don't affect the millions of stoves already in service and expected to have useful lives of 10 to 20 years.

Still, 400,000 to 800,000 new stoves are sold each year, says Doniger, and since most being used now were bought in the energy crisis of the 1970s, they are aging.

The catalytic stoves require attentive operators to work effectively, says Thomas Noel of New Hampshire's Air Resources Division. Colored paper contains heavy metals that can foul combustors in much the same way that leaded gas affects a car designed to burn unleaded. The devices must be replaced periodically.

A recent study by the Coalition of Northeastern Governors indicated that some new stoves — with and without catalytic combustors — do not significantly reduce emissions once they are installed in a home.

Noel and Vermont's air quality planner, Richard Poirot, question whether people will make the effort to operate the stoves properly.

"There's a certain perception that this is the federal government entering into their living room and it isn't even doing anything about the Midwestern power plants," Poirot says. The reference was to northern New England's principal air pollution concern, acid rain caused by industrial pollutants drifting in from the Midwest.

Though more than 40 percent of the region's residents burn wood to heat their homes and wood smoke can comprise 40 percent of air pollution in some areas, says Poirot, geography and climate make the pollution less serious than in Western states.

Weather experts say wood smoke pollution becomes most acute when an inversion of warm air traps smoke in valleys. Though northern New England has many valleys, they are shallower than those in the West, and the legendary abrupt changes in New England weather mean that most inversions end quickly.

Air quality is monitored at 24-hour intervals, and officials say that no violations of federal air quality standards have yet been attributed to wood smoke in northern New England.

"It's one thing to say we don't violate this federal standard and it's another to say we don't have a problem," Poirot cautions.

Alex Driessen, an environmental consultant and volunteer with the New Hampshire Lung Association, is puzzled by the attention being given wood smoke pollution.

"It's out of priority. I think it's a non-issue issue," Driessen says. He says other pollutants are produced in greater volume, such as auto emissions, are a more pressing issue, along with acid rain.

But Locker, for one, is pleased with the EPA controls — even though he also wants to put a wood-burning stove in his house.

"There's still a certain amount of romantic attraction about wood-burning" he says.

Q. I cannot get cuttings of Leyland cypress to root. What could be the trouble? Do I need to take them at a certain time of year?

A. Many people report having difficulty with getting Leyland cypress cuttings to root. Part of the secret is in the nature of the cuttings taken. (This is true for many other conifers as well.) Look at the branches of the plant carefully. You will notice two different bark colors on a branch — the reddish brown of the older bark and the green of the younger. The reddish brown bark is necessary for good rooting. Since Leyland cypress grows so rapidly at times, the green bark may extend a foot or more from the tip of the branch. Someone taking six-inch cuttings off such a branch will get disappointing results. We normally have a 90 percent success rate or better rooting Leyland cypress at any time of year.

Q. On which side of the house would it be best to build a hobby greenhouse?

A. A southern or southeastern exposure will provide the maximum amount of winter light. If these cannot be used, a western exposure gives good afternoon light. There are many things to consider when choosing a location for your greenhouse, however, such as the structure of your house, the type of plants you want to grow and, of course, your budget.

Q. Besides installing special lighting or leaving lamps or overhead lights turned on, what can I do to increase the amount of light the plants in my home receive?

A. Re-position your plants so they can take maximum advantage of the natural and artificial light in your home. For example, you may have a place in your home that receives an adequate amount of sunlight for plants, but it is not convenient to have plants there. You may place plants there temporarily, perhaps while you are away during the day. At night, move the plants to an area of your home where they can be enjoyed. Some other things you can do include painting your roooms with white flat paint. White flat paint will reflect 75 percent or more of the light that strikes it.

Mirrors or mirrorized walls will direct and distribute light in a dark room. Mirror tiles are readily available. In addition to spreading light more evenly throughout the room, mirrors will visually expand your garden. Open curtains or shades all the way. Keep your windows clean — dirty glass lets in less light. Keep your plants clean — washing the leaves of plants with lukerarm water removes dust and allows more light to reach the surface of the leaves. Selectively prune any large shrubs blocking windows to allow more light to penetrate.

Paperbark Tree Threatens Everglades

A Meredith Magazine

In South Florida, a tree transplanted from Australia more than 80 years ago terrorizes the Everglades.

According to Wood magazine, foresters, naturalists and conservationists fear the tree, known variously as cajeput, punk tree and paperbark tree, will eventually displace much of that part of the state's natural trees and plants if its advancement isn't thwarted.

A first cousin to the eucalyptus, the pesky tree gulps so much water it dries out swampland. It's oil-filled leaves turn the tree into a pyrotechnic torch at a wildfire's faintest spark. Despite this, fire won't kill it. The thick, soft bark insulates the wood as the leaves burn. Moreover, the tree invades areas cleared of native vegetation, grows into thick stands and virtually takes over by crowding out other desirable plants. Locals joke that even rabbits can't probe the tangle.

The paperbark tree was first planted in 1906 by a well-intentioned forester as a potential commercial hardwood. However, its wood has such a high moisture content that sawmilling and seasoning proved impractical. With no harvest, the tree proliferates. Tight government budgets have limited the battle with the tree's encroachment to hand-to-hand combat. Workers use machetes to hack the trees, then pour toxic chemicals into the slashes.

A blacktop driveway is almost destined to be in need of repair every so often.

The wear and tear is caused by constant usage and the weather. Sun, rain, snow and extreme temperatures all take their toll of the blacktop covering, entirely aside from the day-to-day pounding by automobiles.

Fortunately, the repair of a blacktop driveway is fairly simple. It requires no special skills. Should there be only small cracks, they can be filled with sand and then covered with a liquid sealer. Slightly larger cracks should be filled with a mixture of sand and sealer, applied and spread with a trowel. Read the label on the container of the sealer to determine whether the kind you bought can and should be mixed with sand. Most of the time it can.

A little more material and work is required when the openings in the driveway are holes rather than cracks. In that case, jiggle a spade, small shovel or other tool into the hole to loosen everything that comes free easily, then remove the debris. You are ready to fill the opening when all the loose matter has been removed and your spade or trowel hits solid material.

The hole should be patched with fairly sizeable rocks and then filled in and over with gravel. Stop pouring the gravel when a few inches remain for the addition of an asphalt or cold mix. Add the mix and tamp everything down. Then add more mix until it is slightly higher than the surrounding surface. As you do this, dig your spade or other tool into the mix now and then to remove air pockets.

If you do not have a tamper, you can make one by fastening a flat piece of wood to the bottom of a length of 2-by-4. Don't do a halfway job of the tamping. Tamp down as though you really mean it. When you have completed this phase of the operation, the patch should be solidly compact and the mix should have been pushed the slightest bit below the surface.

At this point, add more patching mix so that it now is above the surface. Sprinkle sand all over it. New get into your car and drive it forwards and backwards so that the wheels finish the tamping task. A garden roller is also very effective for the final tamping.

Not only should the patch be given at least one and preferably two coats of sealer, so should the rest of the driveway under most cirumstances. It may not be necessary if sealer has been applied to the driveway recently, but don't neglect the patched areas, in any case. In spreading the sealer, use a pushbroom and do a section at a time.

If you seal the entire driveway, it's a good idea not to run your car over it for a couple of days. An even better way is to keep the auto away from the driveway for two or three days after applying a first coat, then to put on a second coat and wait a couple of additional days.

Blacktop driveways last longer when adequate provision is made for drainage. In some cases, you not only have to see that ordinary rain moves quickly away from the driveway, you must also take care of water that runs onto the driveway from downspouts. If the driveway is graded properly, the runoff may occur easily and naturally. When it doesn't, it's not a bad idea to place some kind of pipe at a strategic location to assist in carrying off the extra water.

Here's The Answer

By ANDY LANG

Q. — I am thinking about building or installing a windmill as a source of power. Is this practical and where can I get additional information about it? I live in an area where it is windy very often.

A. — There are so many factors that enter into a decision on whether it is practical to utilize the wind as a source of energy that it is impossible to consider an answer in the amount of space at our disposal. Some have found it an excellent source of energy, but usually only as an alternative source. Others have discovered the cost can be high and not worth it. You have a better chance of making a good decision if you read up on the matter. Both public libraries and bookstores have books about windmills and wind power. The U.S. Department of Energy and the American Wind Energy Association work together to conduct experiments and cooperate with manufacturers. Material originally published under the title, "Wind Power for Farms, Homes and Small Industry," by the Department of Energy has been put into book form by Garden Way Publishing, Charlotte, VT 05445. Write there for additional information.

Q. — I will be painting two rooms in our house for the first time. In choosing paint, must I get a particular solvent for a particular kind or can I use turpentine for any kind?

A. — Turpentine or mineral spirits can be used only with an oil-base or alkyd-base paint. It also is the solvent or thinner for varnish and enamels. You must use only water for latex paints. And, if you use a clear finish, it is lacquer thinner for lacquer and denatured alcohol for shellac. But, in all cases, read the label on the item you purchase to determine exactly which solvent is correct.

Q. — I have some fir plywood. Someone told me its grain is very "wild" and must be given a special primer before it can be finished. Is this correct?

A. — Yes. If you put on a finish coat without a special undercoat, the grain will come through after a period of time. There is a special product for use under the final coat. Tell the dealer what you want it for, then explain what you will be using for the top coat. One kind is for use under paint, another for use under a clear finish, such as varnish or shellac.

(The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, bleach, stain, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 75 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

STRONG WOOD

ALCOLU, S.C. (AP) — Because of its strength and resistance to stresses and abrasions, the hackberry tree traditionally was used to make church pews, according to Georgia-Pacific.

Today, the hackberry, a Southern hardwood with yellowish-grey to light-brown wood, is used to manufacture tables, chairs and upholstered furniture.

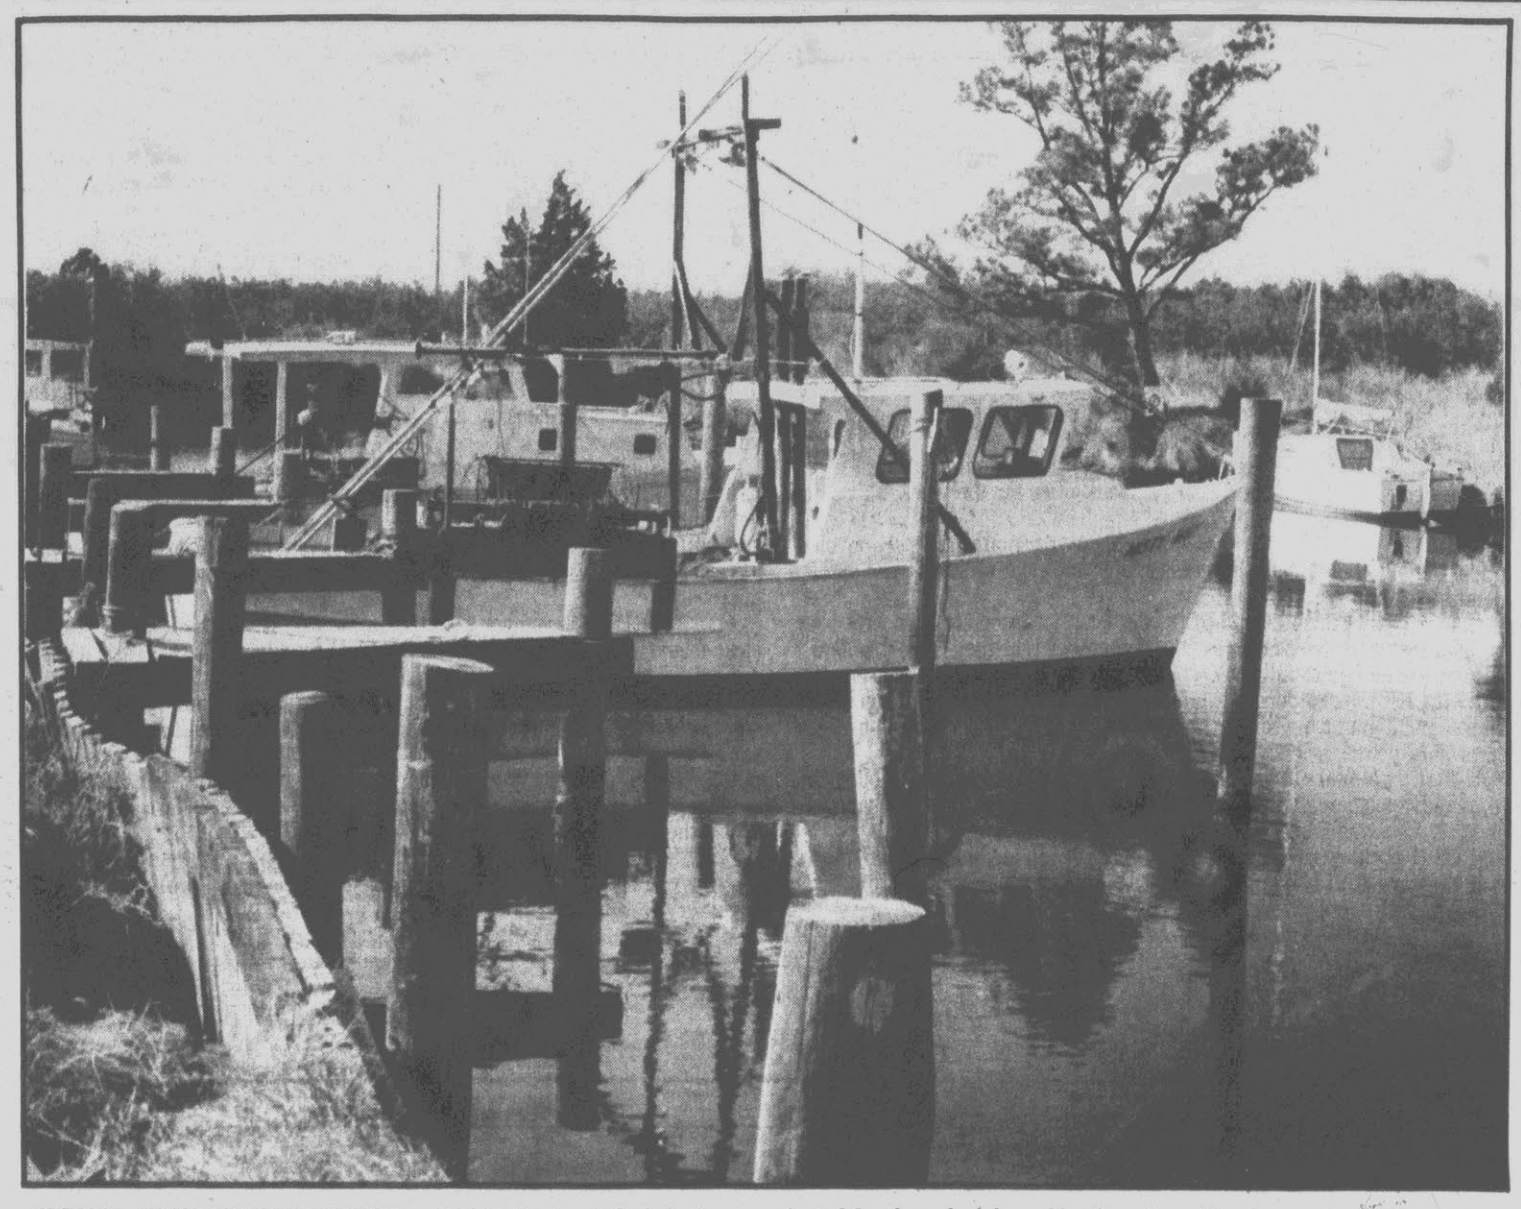
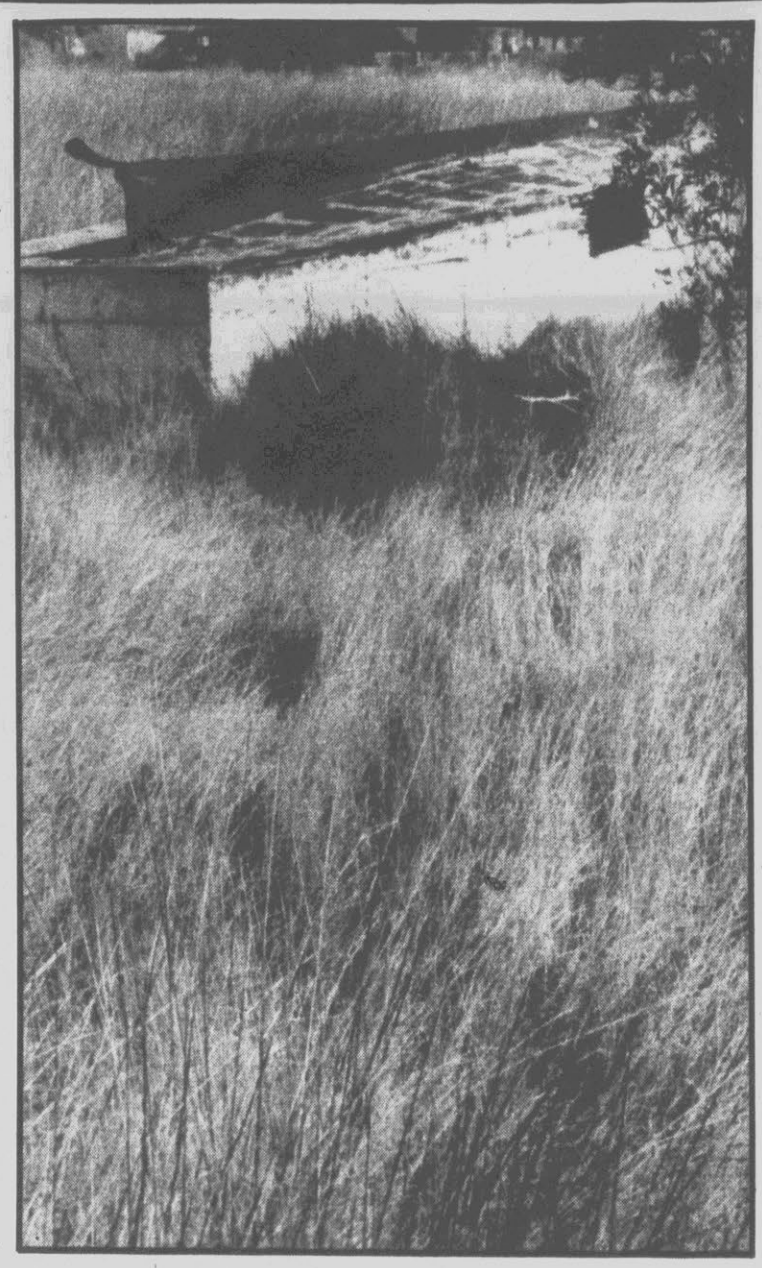
FEATURES



TYPICAL SWAN QUARTER SCENE — Fishing boats at dock in Swan Quarter is a familiar sight. Boats are docked at several canals and inlets that reach into the town and in nearby places. Tourists and photographers are fascinated by the colorful combination of working boats, piers and reflecting waters. Fishing remains Swan Quarter's principal occupation.



A RUIN IN THE GRASS — At several points along the irregular-shaped shorelines surrounding Swan Quarter, fishing boats no longer in use are cast away, to mellow with age amid stretches of winter-bronzed marsh grasses.

Swan Quarter, Hyde Village Noted For Lovely Scenes, Friendly People

Two and a half centuries have passed since Hyde Precinct in eastern North Carolina became Hyde County in 1738. The county was formed from Albemarle and Bath counties, both abolished at that time.

Today, and since 1836, Swan Quarter has been the county seat of Hyde County. Previously, county seats were located first at Germantown in 1791, a settlement no longer in existence; then at Lake Landing in 1820.

In 1836, commissioners were appointed to purchase land near Swann's Quarter in the southern section of the county as a more suitable central site for a new courthouse.

Owner of the land purchased for this purpose, Samuel Swann, had settled in Hyde Precinct in the 1700s. He owned extensive lands along the Pamlico Sound, lands commonly known as Swann's Quarter. Conjecture is that the final "n" of Swann was dropped, thus giving rise to the name Swan Quarter.

The courthouse at Swan Quarter, constructed in the 1850s, is still in use today — though added to and renovated at least four times between 1878 and 1964.

Cliff Swindell, county manager of Hyde County, notes that "the 1980 census shows that the Swan Quarter township has a population of 1,098. This includes the town itself and people living in the township." Four other townships make up the divisions of Hyde County — Lake Landing, Ocracoke, Currituck and Fairfield.

Swan Quarter, incidentally, is one of the few unincorporated county seats in North Carolina.

A harbor town, Swan Quarter has several inlets that reach into the town from the Pamlico Sound. On these small streams, fishermen bring their boats to harbor after harvesting fish, crabs, oysters and other sea life in the Pamlico and Atlantic Ocean waters.

The line-up in times of "being home from the sea" of fishing boats of varied sizes, with their vividly hued nets and floats, provide one of the most colorful aspects of the town — one often admired and photographed by travelers.

"Fishing and seafood processing is an important industry in Swan Quarter," Swindell said. "Farming is also important, with the cultivation of corn and soybeans as the primary crops. Recently, logging has come more into the picture as a means of taking up the slack in the fishing industry."

Visitors find Swan Quarter a comfortable place to visit — a town where the pace is unhurried. Residents generally are ready to chat a while about the town, the history of their families, and above all, tales of adventures about their life on the water.

For the traveler who enjoys historic sites, Swan Quarter has several homes and public buildings of interest in addition to the courthouse. These are mostly residential structures and churches architectually typical of the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Nature lovers can pass enjoyable hours strolling the shores around Swan Quarter, where marsh grasses, myrtles, and song birds abound. Sea gulls circle, land and circle again everywhere in and around the town.

Perhaps the most intriguing legend of the town involves a simple frame fellowship hall and school building to the rear of Providence Methodist Church. Known as the "Church Moved by the Hand of God," the story goes that a congregation organized in the early 1870s to build a church. The owner of the land, however, refused to sell the property and the church was built on another lot. During the storm of Sept. 17, 1876, the church was blown off its footing and taken by wind and flood down the street to the very site desired by the congregation. The owner immediately donated the land to the church, which was used until the present brick Providence Church was built in 1921.

A keen observer will note that the village has several churches — Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, etc., but not a single bar, disco or movie house.

Another attractive feature in Swan Quarter is the presence of canals along several of the streets, with wooden bridges connecting home sites to the street.

Due to the construction of a bypass of Swan Quarter along U.S. 264 several years ago, the town was cut off from the main flow of traffic along the southern coastal route from Washington to Manns Harbor and the Outer Banks. However, the establishment of the toll ferry from Swan Quarter across the Pamlico to Ocracoke three years ago has resulted in a resurgence of travelers passing through Swan Quarter on the way to the ferry site at the edge of town.

Whether one stops en route to the ferry for a brief visit, or better yet make a visit of several hours or half a day, the things to see and do in this village of dark flat land and darker water are rewarding.

There is a motel in town located adjacent to a seafood restaurant and fishing boat docking area. An overnight stay gives time to explore other Hyde County points of interest — Lake Mattamuskeet; Swan Quarter National Wildlife Refuge; the harbor town of Engelhard; small settlements like Scranton, Sladesville, New Holland, Gull Rock, Nebraska and Middletown; fine old farm homes; cemeteries that date back several generations; great streches of farm land laced by canals, and Hyde County's across-the-sound tourist spot, Ocracoke Island on the Outer Banks.

Text And Photos By Jerry Raynor

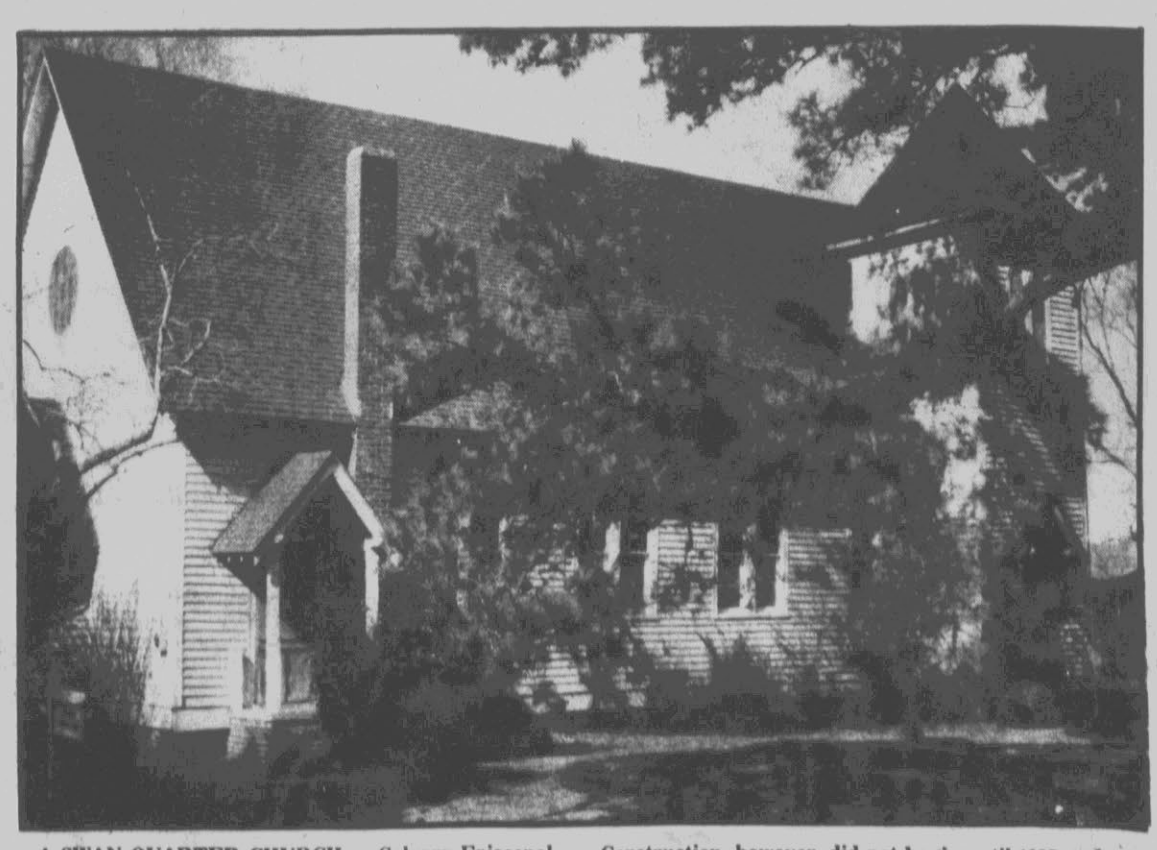
ONE MORE CHANGE — A for-sale sign marks another chapter in the history of the M.M. Swindell Building in downtown Swan Quarter. Built in the early 1900s, it has seen occupancy as the David M. Griffon store, the drug store of Dr. Richard Eugene Windley and in the 1950s, the Hyde County Health Department. The area in front of the building is a display of directional signs.



A SWAN QUARTER CHURCH — Calvary Episcopal Church is one of several churches in downtown Swan Quarter. Plans for the church were first made in 1910. Construction, however, did not begin until 1925 and was not completed until 1949 under the rectorship of the Rev. Sidney E. Matthews.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	2 ◇	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ◇

The simple finesse is something of a misnomer. Usually, the play is easy enough. But often other considerations enter into account.

The auction was straightforward. With four-card support, North's raise to four spades was "automatic." Too bad he didn't consider the positional value of his queen of diamonds, because three no trump from his side of the table would have been routine.

Guided by his partner's overcall, West attacked with a diamond, and the defenders quickly netted two tricks in the suit. East continued with a third diamond and declarer ruffed high. After drawing trumps, declarer had only one problem—to avoid two club losers.

Had either declarer or dummy held only two clubs and had the goal been to avoid losing any trick in the suit, then the finesse would have been the only way to tackle the suit. But since declarer had to lose a club trick, he found a better way to handle the combination. He led a club to the ace, then cashed three rounds of hearts, ending in hand. Next came a club toward the queen.

Had West held the king, he would have been able to win with his majesty, but that would have been the last trick for the defense. When West played low, declarer tried the queen from dummy, and he was not really surprised, in light of the overcall, when that lost to the king. But now declarer's extra chance paid off. East had started with only two clubs, and he was now forced to give declarer a ruff-sluff by returning a diamond. Declarer's only losers were two diamonds and a club.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Willie Nelms

"In Search of Excellence," by Tom Peters and Robert Waterman was one of the most popular books published in the 1980s. Peters' new book "Thriving on Chaos," will surprise many people who accepted the observations of the earlier book.

As the title suggests, Peters' latest volume emphasizes the impact of change in the business environment. In fact, he argues that the world described in "In Search of Excellence," no longer exists.

Instead, everywhere and every day managers confront shattering and accelerating change, change paced by constant innovations in computers and telecommunications. Therefore, the prescriptions of Peters' previous bestseller are not applicable to today's business environment.

Today, managers confront a chaotic new world in which new competitors spring up overnight and old ones disappear as companies merge and "demerge."

In such a world, Peters maintains, merely aspiring to be excellent will prove disastrous; the only winning companies will be constantly adaptable ones — organizations that are able not only to respond quickly to shifting circumstances but to proactively cause this change.

"Thriving on Chaos," is a guide to this era of rapid development in business conditions. It offers not only analysis but also provides a plan of action for today's managers.

Considering the constant flux existing in the modern business environment, this book should be very popular among people who enjoyed Peters' earlier works.

COTTON PICKERS — A painting of cotton pickers by Mississippi artist M.B. Mayfield is among the paintings by Mayfield that will go on view Tuesday at Arlington Hall, 327 Arlington Boulevard. A reception, open to the public, will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday. The exhibition will remain on view through March 7.

Exhibition Of Mayfield Art At Arlington Hall Gallery

An exhibition of paintings by Mississippi painter M.B. Mayfield will open Tuesday at Arlington Hall, 327 Arlington Boulevard. The exhibition is a celebration of black art in conjunction with the observance of February as Black History Month throughout America.

Because of other commitments, the artist will not be able to come to Greenville for the reception.

Mayfield was born in Ecru, Miss. in 1923. In 1949, a traveler, Dr. Stuart Purser, director of the art department at the University of Mississippi, passing through the small Southern town, noticed Mayfield's art.

Intrigued by what he saw, Purser made arrangements for Mayfield to come to Oxford work and study at Ole Miss.

Due to the segregation laws of that time, Mayfield's janitorial work was scheduled around art classes so that he could study while seated in an adjacent broom closet.

These people, along with Mississippi writer William Faulkner, contributed money to send Mayfield to Chicago to see a Van Gogh exhibition.

Mayfield paints in a bright, colorful but simple style. He loves to recreate scenes from memory. His subject matter is mostly of black rural life in the South, paintings related to his childhood, of cotton fields, children at play, and life and death of people he has known.

Mayfield's art is considered both as an individualistic expression of art and an important creation in the preservation of Southern culture as it comprises a visual art record of a heritage, a way of life and a community in the Deep South.

A Reflector Review

Informative Viewpoints Noted

"Three Views — Sculpture, Paintings and Drawings: Heidi Fasnacht, Sally Hutchison and Sam Scott" is the exhibition currently on view at the Gray Gallery, School of Art, East Carolina University. The show will be up through Feb. 13.

The art of these artists have one main thing in common — all are simplified, pared-down creations. These near minimal works of art, however, convey individual, personal viewpoints more representative of expressions that at first might not seem apparent.

In 19 monotypes, all loosely based on the human figure, painter Sam Scott draws and paints forms that are recognizable as based on the human body, but that are comprised largely of sturdy legs and torso without discernible heads. Only occasionally does he depict arms. The unpictured portions of the anatomy in some of the paintings are faintly suggested, but most often merge into a few black outlines or areas of color.

In her floor standing sculptural forms, Hutchison creates formal shapes employing foamcore, plaster and gesso. Architectural in their design of steps and blocks, they stimulate the viewer to try to imagine the buildings to which these would be attached.

A group of 32 drawings by Hutchison of black marker on grid paper is an intriguing glimpse of what can be achieved using a simple method of this nature.

Hers, however, are works that very evidently require a tremendous amount of time and energy — both in preparation and execution. The sculpted pieces, in particular, reveal painstaking techniques in making a basic design followed by intricate work in shaping, coloring and assembling the wood into a sculptural entity.

Fasnacht's work is an example of the willingness of the part of an artist to expend infinite care and thought to bringing to fruition works of art that fulfill the intent of an artist.

Together, these three artists provide an informative view of creations that exemplify the efforts of contemporary artists in directions in which they direct their talents in today's vastly diverse, and often complicated world of art.

Gallery hours at Gray Gallery, located in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center on the East Carolina University campus parallel to East Fifth Street, are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Saturdays, until 8 p.m. Thursdays. Admission is free and parking is available in spaces near the center.

African Art Show At UNCG

GREENSBORO — An exhibition of African art opens today in the Weatherspoon Art Gallery at UNC Greensboro. The exhibit is part of the university's Black History Month observance, with 58 pieces from Greensboro, New York and North Carolina collections.

The display will be on view through Feb. 28. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and 2 to 6 p.m. on weekends. Admission is free.

Editha Floro Carpenter of Greensboro was curator for the exhibit, which took four months to assemble. Most of the pieces in the show are sculptures from the 19th and 20th centuries, with some dating back to the period of the 11th to 14th centuries.

Contrary to their bad reputations, bats often are beneficial to humans. They are a major predator of night-flying insects. A single gray bat can eat 3,000 or more insects in one night. A colony of free-tailed bats, totaling 20 million animals, may consume 250,000 pounds of insects nightly.

Rossini's 'Cinderella' To Have Four ECU Performances

ECU News Bureau

Rossini's opera "Cinderella" will be presented by the East Carolina University Opera Theatre Feb. 11-14 in four performances in the Fletcher Music Center Recital Hall. Evening performances are scheduled for Feb. 11, 12 and 13 at 8 p.m.; with a 2 p.m. matinee performance on Feb. 14.

Advance tickets to the Opera Theatre's "Cinderella" are available from the Central Ticket Office in Mendenhall Student Center at $5 each for the general public, and $2.50 for students. Any unsold tickets will be available at the door. However, since seating is limited, early purchase of tickets is advised.

Accompanists will be Mark Gansor and Alisa Wetherington. Costumes are by Patricia Hiss ansd Diane Foley.

In order to give the maximum number of student singers an opportunity to perform, lead roles are double cast, with some soloists appearing Thursday and Saturday; others on Friday and Sunday.

Featured as Cinderella will be Jennifer Grum of Raleigh and Carol Hawkins of Wilson. Doubling as her stepsisters are Michele Crotty of Fayetteville, Karla Scott of Greensboro, Bridgette Cooper of Washington, D.C. and Mary Jay of Wilmington.

Prince Ramiro will be sung by Charles Maxwell of Raleigh and Mark Caughron of Nahunta. Alidoro, a philosopher, will be portrayed by Dean Layes of Chesapeake, Va., and Christopher Bridges of Raleigh. Don Magnifico, a snob, will be sung by Dale Smith of Raleigh and Robert Cox of Wilson. Jonathan Jolley of Greenville and Gregory Honeycutt of Benson will sing the part of Dandini, servant to the prince.

A chorus of 14 singers will also appear onstage. The opera will be sung entirely in English.

For one thing, his version has the prince and his servant exchanging places, complete with disguises, in order that the prince can find a girl who will be attracted to him for himself alone, not for his position.

Also, since the composer disliked "magic" in plots, he insisted that his text have no reference to the transformation of pumpkin, rats and mice into coach, horses and coachmen. The glass slipper in his operatic "Cinderella" became a pair of matching bracelets. The fairy godmother becomes a philosopher/tutor to the prince, and the stepmother becomes a stepfather, the snobbish Don Magnifico

"We felt that using all of these changes might make an audience wonder if it really had seen 'Cinderella'," Dr. Hiss commented. "Therefore we have reinstated those elements we perceived as not doing too much damage to Rossini's original."

Thursday Concert By The Herman Band

ECU News Bureau

Virtuoso classical clarinetist Richard Stoltzmann will be featured guest artist with Woody Herman's Thundering Herd in a concert scheduled at East Carolina University Thursday at 8 p.m. in Wright Auditorium.

Tickets are $14 each for the general public and $7 for youth. They are on sale at the ECU Central Ticket Office in Mendenhall Student Center, 757-6611, ext. 266, and may be ordered by telephone with major credit cards. The ticket office is open each weekday from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m.

Originally booked for the ECU Artists Series as a concert featuring the late Woody Herman himself, along with Stoltzman as soloist, the concert is part of a current tour billed as "A Tribute to Woody" since the death of the celebrated jazz band leader late last year. The current tour includes appearances in Spartanburg, S. C., Kennedy Center in Washington, D. C., Carnegie Hall in New York and seven cities on the west coast.

The concert will feature "Ebony Concerto," the only piece for jazz orchestra written by composer Igor Stravinsky. The piece was originally written for a 1946 Carnegie Hall concert played by Herman and the Herd.

Also scheduled are a variety of jazz standards and pieces written especially for this tour. In conjunction with the tour, RCA records will release a new album, "Ebony," recorded by Stoltzman and the Herman band last spring.

For the past several years Stoltzman has taken time from his rigorous schedule of classical engagements to work with the late bandleader and his band.

Winner of a Grammy Award for chamber music recording, Stoltzman has appeared on the NBC-TV shows "Tonight" and "Today" and on CBS "Sunday Morning."

Now directed by Frank Tiberi, the Thundering Herd has adapted to new types and phases of jazz since its debut 50 years ago, ranging from blues and semi-Dixieland to more recent styles. Its best known tunes have included "Blues on Parade," "Woodchopper's Ball, "Do Nothing 'Til You Hear from Me," "Caledonia" and "Laura".

GUEST SOLOIST — Classical clarinetist Richard Stoltzmann will be guest artist with Woody Herman's Thundering Herd in a concert at ECU Thursday. The performance will be at 8 p.m. in Wright Auditorium. For tickets, call 757-6611, extension 266.

Dinner Theater Set

ECU News Bureau

The Neil Simon comedy, "Barefoot in the Park," will be performed at East Carolina University Feb. 19-20 by a traveling company. Dinner theatre performances are scheduled for 6:30 p.m. each of the two evenings in Mendenhall Student Center.

The saga of a pair of newlyweds as they set up housekeeping, "Barefoot in the Park" takes its title from the scatterbrained bride's insistence that to walk shoeless through the February snow is a test of whether her rather staid bridegroom is sufficiently free in spirit to deserve her.

The play is a production of the Alpha-Omega Players of Rockport, Texas, the same troupe which has presented such plays as "Last of the Red Hot Lovers" and "I Ought To Be in Pictures" for ECU dinner theatre audiences in the past.

Dinner will be served at 6:30 p.m. and the performance will begin at 8 p.m.

Tickets, priced at $16 per person, are available at the Central Ticket Office in Mendenhall Student Center, open weekdays from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m., telephone 757-6611, ext. 266.

NCSA Dance Conference Scheduled

WINSTON-SALEM — Dance historians from around the world will gather at the North Carolina School of the Arts when the Society of Dance History Scholars convenes its 11th annual conference Friday through Feb. 14.

The public is invited to register for the conference and participate in all events. Registration is $65, $35 for students. Single-day registration is $30, $15 for students. Registrations will be held from 6 to 10 p.m. Friday at the Stevens Center Box Office, and from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday in the lobby of Crawford Hall. There will be additional charges for the lunches and banquet.

The conference is expected to draw some 150 paricipants from across the United States, Canada, England, Italy and Yugoslavia.

This is the first time that the society will meet at the School of the Arts. In previous years, the conference has been held at such institutions as Harvard University and the University of California at Los Angeles.

The theme of the conference is the Ballets Russes and subsequent Ballet Russe companies. The conference will feature the presentation of papers, displays, films and videotapes of historic performances, a performance of repertory, and panal discussions by Ballet Russe performers. In addition, presentations relating to other aspects of the history of dance, particularly of the Renaissance and Baroque periods, are scheduled.

The North Carolina School of the Arts has ties to the Ballet Russe. School of Dance acting dean Duncan Noble and former dean Robert Lindgren both danced with the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, one of the companies which succeeded Diaghilev's Ballets Russes.

The conference will open at the Stevens Center of the school on Friday with registration and a welcoming reception. Following the reception, participants will be greeted by Noble and will be treated to a concert of works from the Ballets Russes repertory, performed by NCSA dance students.

Saturday's events will take place on the NCSA campus and will open with a keynote speech by Jack Anderson, dance critic for The New York Times. Anderson recently published his book, "The One and Only: The Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo."

Among other Saturday events are a panel on Ballet Russe designs, which will include David Vaughan speaking on "Ballats Russes and the School of Paris"; a panel discussion with members of the Ballet Russe, chaired by Doris Hering, and the presentation of a paper by Frank W.D. Ries of the University of California, Santa Barbara.

Among events planned for Feb. 14 are another panel discussion with members of the Ballet Russe; a panel on Ballet Russe choreographers, and a panel on the 16th-18th centuries, which will feature Barbara Sparti of Rome.

NCSA students will be performing in a lecture/demonstration, as well as in Friday's special concert.

'The Lark' Opens Wednesday At ECU

"THE LARK" PLAYERS — Joan of Arc, played by Debbie Shirley, tries to convince Charles, the Dauphin, played by Chris Brown, to lead the armies of France. The East Carolina Playhouse production of the play will be at 8:15 nightly Wednesday through Saturday in McGinnis Theater on the ECU campus. For tickets, call 757-6390. (Photo by Doug Ray)

Lillian Hellman's adaptation of Jean Anouih's "The Lark" is the third show to be presented by the East Carolina Playhouse this season.

Opening night is Wednesday at 8:15 p.m. in the McGinnis Theatre on the East Carolina University campus. The play runs nightly through Saturday. Single tickets are priced at $5 for the general public, and $4 for groups of 10 or more. Tickets may be charged by telephoning the box office at 757-6390, or may be purchased at the McGinnis Theatre box office between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. through Tuesday and until 8:30 p.m. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday and from 4 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. on Saturday.

"The Lark," hailed by Life Magazine during its original production in 1955 as "American Theatre at its distinguished best," is the tale of the life and trial of Joan of Arc.

The drama begins with the trial of Joan of Arc before the ecclesiastical court that has gathered, they think, to "burn a dirty peasant witch." As the trial progresses, we are taken back to the 15th century to the tale of a simple, often bewildered country girl who was inspired by voices to lead the armies of France against the invading English, to crown a king, and be burned for her faith and deeds.

The true story of how an illiterate peasant girl of 16 managed to persuade the military governor of Valcouleurs that the "voices" she heard of saints exhorting her to aid the dauphin become the crowned king of France and to expel the English invaders were real enough to make the governor give her a horse and an escort of six men to go to the dauphin.

She actually conquered the dauphin's skepticism as to her divine mission, was given troops to command and then won mighty battles.

When Joan ploughs her way through France, and France's way through the English armies, there is no question of heavenly voices. Joan has a secret she spills to the dauphin the first time she meets him. It is that "God gave man an inside to his head and doesn't want it wasted." Joan's inspiration is divine; everything else she does must be accomplished humanly.

The legend ends when Joan becomes a powerful force for the people of France; a force that threatens to throw the English completely off the European continent. Her enemies at court maneuver the weak and indecisive king into dealing with Philip the Good of Burgandy, an English ally.

Finally, as Joan rides to relieve Compiegne with her army, she is captured by the Burgundians, and sold by them to the English who know they must get rid of her to remain on the continent. But rather than put her to death themselves, thereby making her by martyrdom at their hands an even greater symbol of French unity, the English turn her over an to inquisitorial court of the church to be tried for heresy and witchcraft by French ecclesiastics.

ECU Concerts For Children

This year's performance will mark the 20th year that the East Carolina University Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Robert Hause, has presented special concerts for county and city school children.

The concerts will be held Friday in Minges Coliseum on the ECU campus, with the first concert at 10 a.m. and the second at 12:30 p.m.

Children who will be attending the concert have been learning about some of the music in advance, and will sing with the orchestra in a traditional sing-along piece of music.

The concert program will include, also, "The Star Spangled Banner," Grieg's "Peer Gynt Suite," and several waltz numbers as a tribute to the Strauss family of composers.

The annual event is sponsored by the ECU School of Music in cooperation with the public schools in a program designed to enrich the cultural understanding and development of youth in the Pitt County area.

Televised Version Of 'The Ramayana' Mesmerizes Indians

By RAJU GOPALAKRISHNAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — One of the biggest hits on Indian television is not shown in prime time and is based on a story 2,600 years old.

Starting at 9:30 every Sunday morning, life comes to a near-halt for 40 minutes all over the country as people gather in front of television sets to watch the latest installment of "The Ramayana," the Hindu epic of the same name.

To some, the show is a religious experience. In the eastern city of Cuttack, incense sticks are lit, bells are rung and conch shells are blown like trumpets to herald the start of the weekly exploits of the warrior-god Rama.

To others, it's a soap opera obsession that transcends sectarian divisions in this country of many religions. Newspapers complained in December that doctors and nurses in at least one hospital in the central city of Lucknow stopped tending their patients to huddle in front of TV sets.

In Chandrapura, a village near Baroda, authorities said two women died of heart attacks while watching a particularly tense episode.

Riots broke out in Jammu and Kashmir in northern India when a power failure blacked out the weekly broadcast. Protesters blocked roads and tried to burn down an electricity authority office.

Television critics estimate that more than 100 million people watch the trial and tribulations of Rama as he grows up, marries, is crowned king of Ayodhya, spends 14 years of banishment in a forest and battles demons to rescue his kidnapped wife Sita, only to have the earth swallow her up.

"It's holy, isn't it?" said Maya Devi, an illiterate 32-year-old New Delhi woman who irons clothes for a living. She bought a television set just to watch "The Ramayana."

The show's Sunday-morning time slot, although not prime time in India, has a special significance. Devout Hindus bathe and pray before eating Sunday breakfast and for many, watching the show then is a way of appeasing the gods. Some chant prayers in front of their television sets.

About 80 percent of India's 780 million people are Hindus. Moslems, the second largest sect, make up 11 percent, and the remainder are Christians, Sikhs, Buddhists, Jains and several other sects.

"The Ramayana" is also big business.

The Illustrated Weekly of India recently estimated that the serial's producer, filmmaker Ramanand Sagar, was making a profit of at least 150,000 rupees (about $12,000) per show.

Doordarshan, the state-run television station, is also reaping rich dividends, according to the Illustrated Weekly. It said about 40 companies pay a total of 3 million rupees (about $231,000) a week for 10-second commercials shown before each installment.

But the program has come in for a few darts.

Amita Malik, who writes a weekly column for the Indian Express newspaper chain and is one of the most widely read media critics in the country, says "The Ramayana" appeals only to devout Hindus.

"The serial is subordinated to the narrow mass needs of viewership," Ms. Malik said in an interview.

She added that the serial is full of "ham acting" and suggested the government was promoting the show to win the Hindu vote in future elections.

The Telegraph, a newspaper in Calcutta, said in a recent article the serial's popularity could be traced to "an outburst of neo-Hinduism."

"The serial treats the Ramayana not as a universal epic with a tragic end, showing man's glories and failings in a certain social background, but as a religious scripture resting above all literary or historical considerations," the Telegraph said.

"I watch it every week," said Zakia Hasnain, a Moslem housewife in Allahabad.

"If I don't wake up in time, my wife or one of my three children drag me out of bed to see it," he said.

Ute Lemper, A New Star

By JOAN FISCHER
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Leggy, blond Ute Lemper is captivating Germans in much the same way Marlene Dietrich did decades ago, and hopes she can excite Americans just as much.

Critics have compared the vivacious 24-year-old with such entertainers as Shirley MacLaine, Liza Minnelli and Barbra Streisand, and say she is potentially the most exciting German star in decades.

"I would love to take my show to America," Lemper said in a recent interview in her Frankfurt apartment.

Her show is a multilingual potpourri that blends music by jazz great Duke Ellington and the German-born composer Kurt Weill. There are tunes from the Broadway hit musical, "Cabaret," French chansons and songs made immortal by Dietrich herself.

Lemper's show comes hot on the heels of her stunning leading performance in the Paris production of "Cabaret" last year. She received standing ovations, rave reviews and the prestigious Moliere Theater Prize.

There are plans to take her show to New York and Los Angeles next year, according to Lemper's manager Marek Lieberberg.

The young star also recently signed contracts with CBS Records and Decca Records. She will be bringing out an album next fall, Lieberberg said.

New York audiences have already had a taste of Lemper's talents. Last September, she was highly praised for her rendition of Kurt Weill songs in an evening devoted to the composer's works.

"They've never had a show like this in Germany," she said, speaking in flawless English. "The mentality here is not so open to popular music. It's more a thinking mentality, a little cramped.

"Before World War II, there were so many things happening in entertainment in Berlin. Shows would surely have developed further there if it hadn't been for the war."

Lemper admits that coping with sudden fame has its drawbacks. She can no longer go out in Frankfurt, her home base, without being recognized everywhere. "I just put on my ugly glasses and a scarf around my head," she said. "It doesn't really bother me."

And she says that, while comparisons with great entertainers honor her, she wants to create her own, contemporary identity.

"My taste is very broad. I just wanted to put together everything that I like, all kinds of music," she said, referring to her show. Besides doing old classics, she also sings contemporary Top 40 tunes.

Lemper aims at a broad audience as well. "I like it when I look into the public and see an old woman, a punk and a preppy," she said.

Although she's just released an album in West Germany, her biggest interest now is film. She will soon star in a movie loosely based on the life of German actress Hildegard Knef, directed by Volker Schloendorff ("The Tin Drum"). Lemper has also taped a TV adaption of her show in English, French and German and is currently negotiating with American TV networks.

The rising star was born on July 4, 1963, in Muenster, a town in the northwest known for its Catholic tradition and excellent university. She spent her schooldays tossing her books in a corner and rushing out to acting, singing and dancing lessons.

"I had 11 or 12 hobbies every day," she said.

Dolly: She knows showbiz

A. Dolly Parton, 42, clearly regards her prominent bust as one of her two most outstanding physical attributes.

A. Bill Cosby, who wrote the original story for "Leonard Part 6," was also one of the picture's producers.

Q. What has happened to Dovie Beams, the Hollywood starlet who used to hide a tape recorder under her bed while bedding down with Ferdinand Marcos, deposed president of the Philippines? PARADE ran an article on Beams last year or the year before that.—R. Quintero, Vancouver, Canada

A. Beams, 55, mistress of Marcos in Manila from 1968 to 1970, was sentenced in Los Angeles on Dec. 18 to eight years in prison for defrauding 12 Southern California banks. She and her husband, Sergio de Villagran, had been found guilty of using false statements of financial worth to obtain $18 million in real-estate loans. Beams was ordered to serve her sentence in the federal prison in Lexington, Ky., not far from her original home in Nashville, Tenn.

Q. One hears so much gossip about Brigitte Nielsen, the second Mrs. Sylvester Stallone, it boggles the mind. One hears, for instance, that Stallone got rid of Brigitte because he didn't like the relationships she'd forged with Eddie Murphy, who gave her a bit part in "Beverly Hills Cop II"; with Tony Scott, who directed that picture; and with Kelly Sahnger, her so-called secretary and traveling companion. Are these the real reasons why he paid Brigitte off? Or is it true he found out she was mostly made of silicone?—H.S., Denver, Colo.

A. Only Stallone knows "the real reasons," and he's not talking. It was suggested by one source in Philadelphia who knows him well that the actor, after a year of marriage, might have realized Brigitte was only using him, and he took corrective action.

Q. Assuming Anthony Kennedy is appointed to the Supreme Court, please list the religions of our nine justices.—Earl Berger, Portland, Ore.

William Rehnquist	Lutheran
William Brennan Jr.	Roman Catholic
Byron White	Episcopal
Thurgood Marshall	Episcopal
Harry Blackmun	Methodist
John Stevens	Baptist
Sandra Day O'Connor	Episcopal
Antonin Scalia	Roman Catholic
Anthony Kennedy	Roman Catholic

Q. Several weeks ago, when President Reagan was preparing to confer with Mikhail Gorbachev, a man named Howard Phillips called Reagan "a useful idiot for Soviet propaganda" and "a very weak man with a strong wife and a strong staff." Who is Howard Phillips?—D.S., Venice, Calif.

A. Howard Phillips, 47, is chairman of the Conservative Caucus, a grass-roots lobbying organization. He is a member of the far-right wing of the Republican Party and is bitterly opposed to the INF treaty signed at the Washington summit by Reagan and Gorbachev. Born and reared in Boston, Phillips was educated at Harvard and helped found "Young Americans for Freedom" and "Youths for Nixon." He was married in 1964 to the former Margaret Blanchard of Newton, Mass. They reside in Vienna, Va., and are the parents of six children, ranging in age from 17 months to 23 years.

Q. It has been printed that Woody Allen and Mia Farrow named their new 9-pound baby son Satchel, after Satchel Paige. Who's he?—Dolores King, Portland, Maine

A. Satchel Paige (1906?-82) was one of the greatest pitchers in the history of baseball, playing on touring black teams when blacks were not allowed in the major leagues. Unfortunately for Paige, he was past his prime when he joined the Cleveland Indians in 1948 to become the first black pitcher in the American League. He also played for the St. Louis Browns and made his final appearance in 1965, with the Kansas City A's. Paige was elected to the Hall of Fame in 1971.

THE COMMON ENEMY

BY CARL SAGAN

The following article, which also is scheduled to appear in its entirety in "Ogonyok," the most popular magazine in the Soviet Union, explores the relationship between our two nations. Citizens of both countries may find some of Carl Sagan's insights uncomfortable and even provocative because, fundamentally, he challenges popular views of each nation's history. The editors of PARADE hope that this analysis, as it is read here and in the Soviet Union, constitutes a first step to achieve the very goals the author describes.

IF ONLY, SAID THE AMERICAN President to the Soviet General Secretary, extraterrestrials were about to invade—then our two countries could unite against the common enemy. Indeed, there are many instances when deadly adversaries, at one another's throats for generations, put their differences aside to confront a still more urgent threat: the Greek city-states against the Persians; the Russians and the Polovtsys (who once had sacked Kiev) against the Mongols; or, for that matter, the Americans and the Soviets against the Nazis.

An alien invasion is, of course, unlikely. But there is a common enemy—in fact, a range of common enemies, some of unprecedented menace, each unique to our time. They derive from our growing technological powers and from our reluctance to forgo perceived short-term advantages for the longer-term well-being of our species.

The innocent act of burning coal and other fossil fuels increases the carbon dioxide greenhouse effect and raises the temperature of the Earth, so that in less than a century, according to some projections, the American Midwest and the Soviet Ukraine—current breadbaskets of the world—may be converted into something approaching scrub deserts. Inert, apparently harmless gases used in refrigeration deplete the protective ozone layer; they increase the amount of deadly ultraviolet radiation from the Sun that reaches the surface of the Earth, destroying vast numbers of unprotected microorganisms that lie at the base of a poorly understood food chain—at the top of which precariously teeter we. American industrial pollution destroys forests in Canada. A Soviet nuclear-reactor accident endangers the ancient culture of Lapland. Raging epidemic disease spreads worldwide, accelerated by modern transportation technology. And inevitably there will be other perils that, with our usual bumbling, short-term focus, we have not yet even discovered.

The nuclear arms race, jointly pioneered by the United States and the Soviet Union, has now booby-trapped the planet with some 60,000 nuclear weapons—far more than enough to obliterate both nations, to jeopardize the global civilization and perhaps even to end the million-year-long human experiment. Despite indignant protestations of peaceable intent and solemn treaty obligations to reverse the nuclear arms race, the United States and the Soviet Union together still somehow manage to build enough new nuclear weapons each year to destroy every sizable city on the planet. When asked for justification, each earnestly points to the other. In the wake of the Challenger space shuttle and Chernobyl nuclear power plant disasters, we are reminded that catastrophic failures in high technology can occur despite our best efforts. In the century of Hitler, we recognize that madmen can achieve absolute control over modern industrial states. It is only a matter of time until there occurs some unanticipated subtle error in the machinery of mass destruction, or some crucial communications failure, or some emotional crisis in an already burdened national leader. Overall, the human species spends almost $1 trillion a year, most of it by the United States and the Soviet Union, in preparations for intimidation and war. Perhaps, in retrospect, there would be little motivation even for malevolent extraterrestrials to attack the Earth; perhaps, after a preliminary survey, they might decide it more expedient just to be patient for a little while and wait for us to self-destruct.

Faces of the Enemy/Sam Keen

Faces of the Enemy/Sam Keen

WHAT WILL IT TAKE TO FREE US FROM THE DEADLY TRAP THAT WE HAVE SET FOR OURSELVES?

We are at risk. We do not need alien invaders. We have all by ourselves generated sufficient dangers. But they are unseen dangers, seemingly far removed from everyday life, requiring careful thought to understand, and involving transparent gases, invisible radiation, nuclear weapons that almost no one has actually witnessed in use—not a foreign army intent on plunder, slavery, rape and murder. Our common enemies are harder to personify, more difficult to hate than a Shahanshah, a Khan or a Führer. And joining forces against these new enemies requires us to make courageous efforts at self-knowledge, because we ourselves—all the nations of the Earth, but especially the United States and the Soviet Union—bear responsibility for the perils we now face.

Our two nations are tapestries woven from a rich diversity of ethnic and cultural threads. Militarily, we are the most powerful nations on Earth. We are advocates of the proposition that science and technology can make a better life for all. We share a stated belief in the right of the people to rule themselves. Our systems of government were born in historic revolutions against injustice, despotism, incompetence and superstition. We come from revolutionaries who accomplished the impossible—freeing us from tyrannies entrenched for centuries and thought to be divinely ordained. What will it take to free us from the trap we have set for ourselves?

Each side has a long list of deeply resented abuses committed by the other—some imaginary, most, in varying degrees, real. Every time there is an abuse by one side, you can be sure of some compensatory abuse by the other. Both nations are full of wounded pride and professed moral rectitude. Each knows in excruciating detail the most minor malefactions of the other but hardly even glimpses its own sins and the suffering its own policies have caused. On each side, of course, there are good and honest people who see the dangers their national policies have created—people who long, as a matter of elementary decency and simple survival, to put things right. But there are also, on both sides, people gripped by a hatred and fear intentionally fanned by the respective agencies of national propaganda, people who believe their adversaries are beyond redemption, people who seek confrontation. The hard-liners on each side encourage one another. They owe their credibility and their power to one another. They need one another. They are locked in a deadly embrace.

If no one else, alien or human, can extricate us from this deadly embrace, then there is only one remaining alternative: However painful it may be, we will just have to do it ourselves. A good start is to examine the historical facts as they might be viewed by the other side—or by posterity, if any. Imagine first a Soviet observer considering some of the events of American history: The United States, founded on principles of freedom and liberty, was the last major nation to end chattel slavery; many of its founding fathers—George Washington and Thomas Jefferson among them—were slave-owners; and racism was legally protected for a century after the slaves were freed. The United States has systematically violated more than 300 treaties it signed guaranteeing some of the rights of the original inhabitants of the country. In 1899, two years before becoming President, Theodore Roosevelt, in a widely admired speech, advocated "righteous war" as the sole means of achieving "national greatness." The United States invaded the Soviet Union in 1918 in an unsuccessful attempt to undo the Bolshevik Revolution. The United States invented nuclear weapons and was the first and only nation to explode them against civilian populations—killing hundreds of thousands of men, women and children in the process. The United States had operational plans for the nuclear annihilation of the Soviet Union before there even was a Soviet nuclear weapon, and it has been the chief innovator in the continuing nuclear arms race. The many recent contradictions between theory and practice in the United States include the present Administration, in high moral dudgeon, warning its allies not to sell arms to terrorist Iran while secretly doing just that; conducting worldwide covert wars in the name of democracy while opposing effective economic sanctions against a South African regime in which the vast majority of citizens have no political rights at all; being outraged at Iranian mining of the Persian Gulf as a violation of international law, while it has itself mined Nicaraguan harbors and subsequently fled from the jurisdiction of the World Court; vilifying Libya for killing children and in retaliation killing children; and denouncing the treatment of minorities in the Soviet Union, while America has more young black men in jail than in college. This is not just a matter of mean-spirited Soviet propaganda. Even people congenially disposed toward the United States may feel grave reservations about its real intentions, especially when Americans are reluctant to acknowledge the uncomfortable facts of their history.

Now imagine a Western observer considering some of the events in Soviet history. Marshal Tukachevsky's marching orders on July 2, 1920, were, "On our bayonets we will bring peace and happiness to toiling humanity. Forward to the West!" Shortly after, V.I. Lenin, in conversation with French delegates, remarked: "Yes, Soviet troops are in Warsaw. Soon Germany will be ours. We will reconquer Hungary. The Balkans will rise against capitalism. Italy will tremble. Bourgeois Europe is cracking at all its seams in this storm." Then contemplate the millions of Soviet citizens killed by Stalin's deliberate policy in the years between 1929 and World War II—in forced collectivization, mass deportation of peasants, the resulting famine of 1932-33 and the great purges (in which almost the entire Communist Party hierarchy over the age of 35 was arrested and executed, and during which a new constitution that allegedly safeguarded the rights of Soviet citizens was proudly proclaimed). Then consider Stalin's decapitation of the Red Army, the secret protocol to his nonaggression pact with Hitler, and his refusal to believe in a Nazi invasion of the USSR even after it had begun—and how many millions more were killed in consequence. Think of Soviet restrictions on civil liberties, freedom of expression and the right to emigrate, and continuing endemic anti-Semitism and religious persecution. If, then, shortly after your nation is established, your highest military and civilian leaders boast about their intentions of invading neighboring states; if your absolute leader for almost half your history is someone who methodically killed millions of his own people; if, even now, your coins display your national symbol emblazoned over the whole world—you can understand that citizens of other nations, even those with peaceful or credulous dispositions, might be skeptical of your present good intentions, however sincere and genuine they may be. This is not merely a matter of mean-spirited American propaganda. The problem is compounded if you pretend such things never happened.

Tass from Sovfoto

Samantha Smith of Maine wrote a letter in 1982 to the Secretary General of the Soviet Communist Party, politely upbraiding him for wanting to conquer the world. He replied, she was invited to the USSR and became a goodwill ambassador between the two nations until her tragic death at age 13.

ARE WE AT LAST COMING TO OUR SENSES AND BEGINNING TO WORK TOGETHER ON BEHALF OF THE SPECIES?

"No nation can be free if it oppresses other nations," wrote Friedrich Engels. At the London Conference of 1903, Lenin advocated the "complete right of self-determination of all nations." The same principles were uttered in almost exactly the same language by Woodrow Wilson and by many other American statesmen. But for both nations the facts speak otherwise. The Soviet Union has forcibly annexed Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia and parts of Finland, Poland and Romania; occupied and brought under Communist control Poland, Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany and Afghanistan; and suppressed the East German workers' uprising of 1953, the Hungarian Revolution of 1956 and the Czech attempt to introduce glasnost and perestroika in 1968. Excluding World Wars and expeditions to suppress piracy or the slave trade, the United States has made armed invasions and interventions in other countries on more than 130 separate occasions, including China (on 18 separate occasions), Mexico (13), Nicaragua and Panama (9 each), Honduras (7), Colombia and Turkey (6 each), the Dominican Republic, Korea and Japan (5 each), Argentina, Cuba, Haiti, the Kingdom of Hawaii and Samoa (4 each), Uruguay and Fiji (3 each), Guatemala, Lebanon, the Soviet Union and Sumatra (2 each), Grenada, Puerto Rico, Brazil, Chile, Morocco, Egypt, Ivory Coast, Syria, the Persian Gulf, Peru, Formosa, the Philippines, Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam. Most of these incursions were small-scale efforts to maintain compliant governments or to protect American property and business interests; but some were much larger, more prolonged and on far deadlier scales.

United States armed forces were intervening in Latin America not only before the Bolshevik Revolution but also before the Communist Manifesto—which makes the anti-Communist justification for American intervention in Nicaragua a little difficult to rationalize; the deficiencies of the argument would be better understood, however, had the Soviet Union not been in the habit of gobbling up other countries. The American invasion of Southeast Asia—of nations that never had harmed or threatened the United States—killed 58,000 Americans and more than a million Asians; the U.S. dropped 7.5 megatons of high explosives and produced an ecological and economic chaos from which the region still has not recovered. More than 100,000 Soviet troops have, since 1979, been occupying Afghanistan—a nation with a lower per capita income than Haiti—with atrocities still largely untold (because Soviets are much more successful than Americans in excluding independent reporters from their war zones).

Habitual enmity is corrupting and self-sustaining. If it falters, it can easily be revived by reminding us of past abuses, by contriving an atrocity or a military incident, by announcing that the adversary has deployed some dangerous new weapon or merely by taunts of naiveté or disloyalty when domestic political opinion becomes uncomfortably evenhanded. For many Americans, communism means poverty, backwardness, the Gulag for speaking one's mind, a ruthless crushing of the human spirit and a thirst to conquer the world. For many Soviets, capitalism means heartless and insatiable greed, racism, war, economic instability and a worldwide conspiracy of the rich against the poor. These are caricatures—but not wholly so—and over the years Soviet and American actions have given them some credence and plausibility.

These caricatures persist because they are partly true, but also because they are useful. If there is an implacable enemy, then bureaucrats have a ready excuse for why prices go up, why consumer goods are unavailable, why the nation is noncompetitive in world markets, why there are large numbers of unemployed and homeless people or why criticism of leaders is unpatriotic and impermissible—and especially why so supreme an evil as nuclear weapons must be deployed in the tens of thousands. But if the adversary is insufficiently wicked, the incompetence and failed vision of government officials cannot be so easily ignored. Bureaucrats have motives for inventing enemies and exaggerating their misdeeds.

Each nation has military and intelligence establishments that evaluate the danger posed by the other side. These establishments have a vested interest in large military and intelligence expenditures. Thus, they must grapple with a continuing crisis of conscience—the clear incentive to exaggerate the adversary's capabilities and intentions. When they succumb, they call it necessary prudence; but whatever they call it, it propels the arms race. Is there an independent public assessment of the intelligence data? No. Why not? Because the data are secret. So we have here a machine that goes by itself, a kind of de facto conspiracy to prevent tensions from falling below a minimum level of bureaucratic acceptability.

It is evident that many national institutions and dogmas, however effective they may once have been, are now in need of change. No nation is yet well-fitted to the world of the 21st century. The challenge then is not in selective glorification of the past, or in defending the national icons, but in devising a path that will carry us through a time of great mutual peril. To accomplish this, we need all the help we can get.

A central lesson of science is that to understand complex issues (or even simple ones), we must try to free our minds of dogma and to guarantee the freedom to publish, to contradict and to experiment. Arguments from authority are unacceptable. We are all fallible, even leaders. But however clear it is that criticism is necessary for progress, governments tend to resist. The ultimate example is Hitler's Germany. Here is an excerpt from a speech by the Nazi Party leader Rudolf Hess on June 30, 1934:

> One man remains beyond all criticism, and that is the Führer. This is because everyone senses and knows: He is always right, and he will always be right. The National Socialism of all of us is anchored in uncritical loyalty, in a surrender to the Führer.

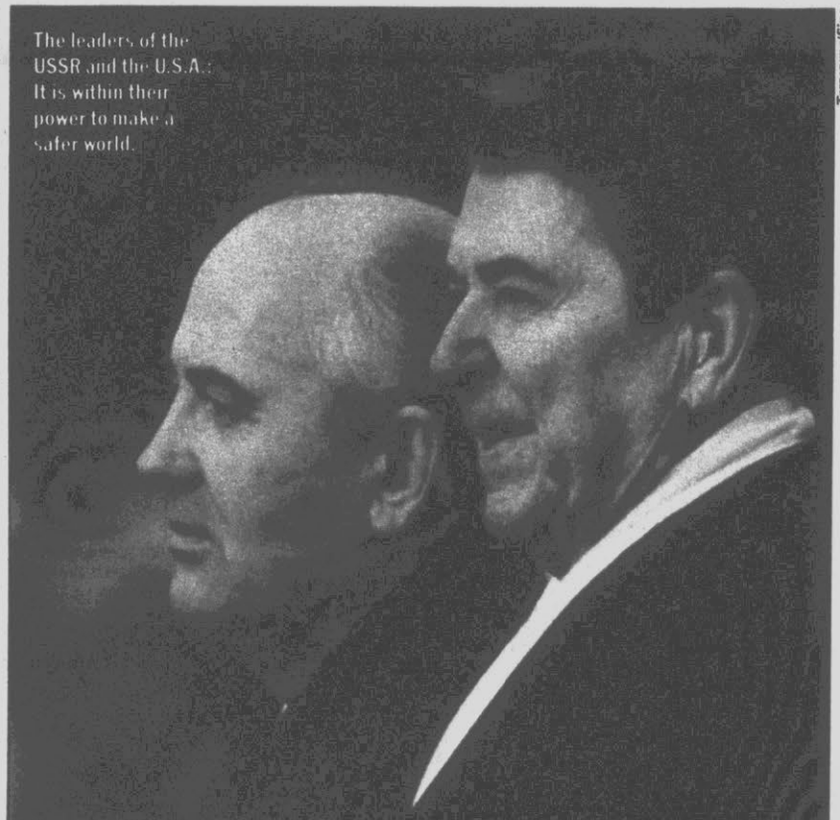
The convenience of such a doctrine for national leaders is further clarified by Hitler's remark: "What good fortune for those in power that people do not think!" Widespread intellectual and moral docility may be convenient for leaders in the short term, but it is suicidal for nations in the long term. One of the criteria for national leadership should therefore be a talent for understanding, encouraging and making constructive use of vigorous criticism.

So when those who once were silenced and humiliated by state terror now are able to speak out—fledgling civil libertarians flexing their wings—of course they find it exhilarating, and so does any lover of freedom who witnesses it. Glasnost and perestroika exhibit to the rest of the world the human scope of Soviet society that past policies have masked. They provide error-correcting mechanisms at all levels of Soviet society. They are essential for economic well-being. They permit real improvements in international cooperation and a major reversal of the nuclear arms race. Glasnost and perestroika are thus good for the Soviet Union and good for the United States.

There is, of course, opposition to glasnost and perestroika in the Soviet Union: by those who must now demonstrate their abilities competitively rather than sleepwalking through lifetime tenure; by those unaccustomed to the responsibilities of democracy; by those in no mood, after decades of following the norms, to be taken to task for past behavior. And in the United States too, there are those who oppose glasnost and perestroika: Some argue it is a trick to lull the West, while the Soviet Union gathers its strength to emerge as a still more formidable rival. Some prefer the old kind of Soviet Union—debilitated by its lack of democracy, easily demonized, readily caricatured. (Americans, complacent about their own democratic forms for too long, have something to learn from glasnost and perestroika as well. This by itself makes some Americans uneasy.) With such powerful forces arrayed for and against reform, no one can know the outcome.

In both countries, what passes for public debate is still, on closer examination, mainly repetition of national slogans, appeal to popular prejudice, innuendo, self-justification, misdirection, incantation of homilies when evidence is asked for, and a thorough contempt for the intelligence of the citizenry. What we need is an admission of how little we actually know about how to pass safely through the next few decades, the courage to examine a wide range of alternative programs and, most of all, a dedication not to dogma but



The leaders of the USSR and the U.S.A.: It is within their power to make a safer world.

WHAT YOU CAN DO. Readers who wish to express their views to either national leader may write to them as follows: President Ronald Reagan, P.O. to solutions. Finding any solution will be hard enough. Finding ones that perfectly correspond to 18th- or 19th-century political doctrines will be much more difficult.

Our two nations must help one another figure out what changes must be made; the changes must help both sides; and our perspective must embrace a future beyond the next Presidential term of office or the next Five Year Plan. We need to reduce military budgets; raise living standards; engender respect for learning; support science, scholarship, invention and industry; promote free inquiry; reduce domestic coercion; involve the workers more in managerial decisions; and promote a genuine respect and understanding derived from an acknowledgement of our common humanity and our common jeopardy.

Although we must cooperate to an unprecedented degree, I am not arguing against healthy competition. But let us compete in finding ways safely to reverse the nuclear arms race and to make massive reductions in conventional forces; in eliminating government corruption; in making most of the world agriculturally self-sufficient. Let us vie in art and science, in music and literature, in technological innovation. Let us have an honesty race. Let us compete in relieving suffering and ignorance and disease; in respecting national independence worldwide; in formulating and implementing an ethic for responsible stewardship of the planet.

Let us learn from one another. Capitalism and socialism have been mutually borrowing methods and doctrine in largely unacknowledged plagiarisms for a century. Neither the U.S. nor the Soviet Union has a monopoly on truth and virtue. I would like to see us compete in cooperativeness. In the 1970s, apart from treaties constraining the nuclear arms race, we had some notable successes in working together—the elimination of smallpox worldwide, efforts to prevent South African nuclear weapons development, the Apollo-Soyuz joint manned spaceflight. We can now do much better. Let us begin with a few joint projects of great scope and vision—in relief of starvation, especially in nations such as Ethiopia, which are victimized by superpower rivalry; in identifying and defusing long-term environmental catastrophes that are products of our technology; in fusion physics to provide a safe energy source for the future; in joint exploration of Mars, culminating in the first landing of human beings—Soviets and Americans—on another planet.

Perhaps we will destroy ourselves. Perhaps the common enemy within us will be too strong for us to recognize and overcome. Perhaps the world will be reduced to medieval conditions or far worse.

But I have hope. Lately there are signs of change—tentative but in the right direction and, by previous standards of national behavior, swift. Is it possible that we—we Americans, we Soviets, we humans—are at last coming to our senses and beginning to work together on behalf of the species and the planet?

Nothing is promised. History has placed this burden on our shoulders. It is up to us to build a future worthy of our children and grandchildren.

Carl Sagan is Professor of Astronomy and Space Sciences and Director of the Laboratory for Planetary Studies at Cornell University. For his work in spacecraft exploration of the planets, he has received the NASA Medals for Exceptional Scientific Achievement and (twice) for Distinguished Public Service, and the Konstantin Tsiolkovsky Medal of the Soviet Cosmonautics Federation. In recent years, Dr. Sagan and his colleagues have engaged in research on the long-term consequences of nuclear war, uncovering previously unsuspected dangers for our civilization and our species. He is a recipient of the Joseph Priestley Award "for distinguished contributions to the welfare of mankind" and the Honda Prize for "contributions toward...a new era of human civilization."

NEW TECHNIQUES ARE MAKING IT EASIER TO KEEP GUMS HEALTHY

Brush That Plaque Away

NOW THAT FLUORIDE in toothpaste and drinking water has cut dramatically the threat of tooth decay, dentistry is concentrating mightily on conquering plaque. That's the sticky film that forms on your teeth. Unless you clean off plaque regularly, it can trap harmful germs that can cause tooth decay and gum disease. In the extreme, diseased gums can loosen your teeth so that eventually they fall out.

To make the plaque-killers work, you have to use them correctly. Most people don't even correctly use the best weapon against plaque—the toothbrush.

"You need to brush your teeth at least one full minute," says Karen Baker, assistant professor at the Colleges of Dentistry and Pharmacy at the University of Iowa. "Most people brush for only 30 seconds."

How you can wage the war on plaque:

- Brush with soft bristles at least 60 seconds at least once a day (each time you eat is better).
- Use a toothpaste containing fluoride.
- Clean between the teeth and gums with waxed or unwaxed dental floss. Or use a Stim-U-Dent toothpick.
- At least twice a year, have your dentist or dental hygienist scrape the surfaces of your teeth to remove built-up plaque and tartar, especially under the gums.
- Limit daily meals and snacks to three each.
- Rinse with a mouthwash containing germ-killers that control plaque.

Your saliva contains a substance that coats your teeth. The plaque-forming bacteria attach themselves to that coating. After you eat anything, the plaque-making process starts again.

Dr. Sebastian G. Ciancio, clinical professor and chairman of periodontology at the State University of New York at Buffalo, notes that 24 hours after you clean your teeth, plaque has grown again. He urges that you brush and floss at least every 12 hours.

Your saliva adds calcium to plaque, which hardens into tartar. The bacteria also produce acid that causes cavities. Fluoride slows the acid production and toughens the teeth against cavities.

Plaque-Fighting Weapons

MANUAL TOOTHBRUSHES. Aim, Butler, Colgate, Dental H, Disney, Improve, Lactona, McDonald's, Oral-B, Pepsodent, Pepsodent Plus, Py-Co-Pay Softex, Py-Co-Twin, Reach, Sensodyne Search.

ELECTRIC TOOTHBRUSHES. Braun, Broxodent, Interplak, Rotadent, Sears*, Sunbeam, Water Pik, Woog 2000*, Woog Orabrush.

No toothpaste or gel has ADA acceptance for fighting plaque, but the following accepted products (in paste and gel form) contain fluoride, which fights tooth decay: TOOTHPASTES AND GELS. Regular and Extra Strength Aim, Aqua Fresh, Aqua Fresh for Kids, Colgate Tartar-Control Formula, Colgate with MFP, Crest, Crest Toothpaste for Kids, Crest Tartar-Control Formula, Dentaguard, Macleans, Zact HP and Zact Smoker's.

When the plaque invades the spaces between teeth and gums, it allows other bacteria to attack the gums, infecting and inflaming them. Once this happens, you have gingivitis—inflammation of the gingiva, the gums.

"Almost everyone has some gingivitis," says Dr. Alan Polson, chairman of the department of periodontology at the Eastman Dental Center in Rochester, N.Y. The center developed a simple test using the Stim-U-Dent toothpick for cleaning plaque from between teeth and under the gum line. If gums bleed while using it, you have gingivitis.

As gingivitis progresses, pockets of infection form under the gums, which become more inflamed and increasingly shrink away from the teeth. The bacteria then harm the teeth's supporting bones, and the teeth loosen. Surgery may be needed. After age 40, more teeth are lost to gum disease than to cavities.

Dental researchers hope one day to create a vaccine against gum disease. "We are moving closer," says Dr. Robert Genco, chairman of the Department of Oral Biology of the School of Dental Medicine, State University of New York at Buffalo. "We have found three types of germs responsible for much of gum disease."

Toothbrushes: Whether manual or electric, the brush must be soft, with rounded bristles that won't hurt the gums. Place the brush at a 45-degree angle to the gum line and then jiggle it in a rotary motion. This thorough scrubbing removes plaque. Also clean your tongue with your brush. Interplak, a new electric brush, has rotating bristles that get down between the teeth.

Toothpastes: None has earned the American Dental Association seal for plaque removal, but several brands say that they help loosen plaque and tartar. And they probably do. Many have ADA acceptance for fighting cavities. All contain fluoride, which fights plaque-forming germs.

Many dentists say brushing with a paste of bicarbonate of soda mixed with hydrogen peroxide helps to kill germs and prevent plaque formation.

Mouth rinses: Only two plaque-fighting mouthwashes now have the ADA seal: Peridex, available only by prescription, and Listerine, a 109-year-old, over-the-counter product. Other products are under consideration.

Irrigators: These squirt pulses of water between the teeth and at the gums. None has ADA acceptance for plaque removal, but they do remove large particles of food from between the teeth.

Onassis on TV

Because they are so expensive to make, miniseries are not the favored staple of network TV that they once were. ABC, which pioneered the form, nevertheless is producing a new miniseries titled The Richest Man in the World: The Story of Aristotle Onassis. The four-hour tale of the late Greek millionaire is being shot in Spain, where production costs reportedly are less than they are here.

In the ABC version, Raul Julia, a stage and screen actor best known for his role in the film Kiss of the Spider Woman, plays Onassis; Jane Seymour portrays Maria Callas, the opera star who was the shipping tycoon's longtime lover; and Francesca Annis depicts Jacqueline Kennedy, Onassis' second wife. Also in the series are Anthony Quinn, who played a character based on Onassis in the 1978 movie The Greek Tycoon, and Quinn's son, Lorenzo. Young Quinn plays Onassis' son, Alexander, who was killed in a plane crash in 1973; Anthony Quinn is cast as Onassis' father, Socrates.

Aristotle Onassis was never the richest man in the world, but TV entertainment divisions have never made a fetish of accuracy.

Good News

ITT Automotive—a division of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., one of the country's slimmed-down corporate conglomerates—has selected Asheville, N.C., as the site for a new manufacturing plant. The factory, situated just outside the city limits, will make anti-lock brake systems for the North American automotive industry. Production is scheduled to begin in early 1989, with full capacity planned for 1992.

Asheville (pop. 60,000) is a stunningly picturesque city in western North Carolina, well-known for its health, tourist and manufacturing facilities. At this writing, its largest employer is Memorial Mission Hospital, with more than 1500 employees.

Worldwide Mail-Order Company

It may come as a surprise to you, but Otto Versand—a firm based in Hamburg, West Germany—has become, so it boasts, the largest mail-order company in the world. Founded in 1950 by Werner Otto (versand is the German word for mail-order house), it did an estimated $5.5 billion worth of business in fiscal 1986, half of it overseas.

In 1982, Otto Versand bought Spiegel of Chicago; and last year, in a deal with the Japanese trading house of Sumitomo, the company established Otto Sumisho, a joint mail-order enterprise of which it owns 51%.

Otto Versand is managed by Michael Otto, son of the founder, who says the mail-order potential in Japan is tremendous. He points out that the country, with a population of 120 million, provides the second-largest domestic market in the non-Communist world yet has no large mail-order house offering a wide selection. He plans to fill that void through his catalog, Together.

Otto Versand owns mail-order companies or shares of same in Japan, France, Belgium, Spain and Britain, in addition to Spiegel in the U.S. and the parent company in Germany. It now is looking to acquire or establish a mail-order firm in Italy.

Mike Deaver and boss in 1982: Six years later, will the President pardon his old pal?

The Deaver Case: Thinking Out Loud

If Ronald Reagan decides to pardon Michael K. Deaver, his longtime friend and former deputy chief-of-staff, he probably will do so after Nov. 8—Election Day.

Found guilty last December of lying under oath, Deaver is scheduled for sentencing on Feb. 25. No doubt he will appeal the verdict, if he hasn't already, and employ whatever judicial process is necessary to remain free until Reagan can pardon him. Once Election Day has come and gone, the President, if he so chooses, can pardon his onetime assistant executive secretary without the Republican Party suffering any retaliation at the polls.

That, at least, is the "thinking out loud" of some political savants in Washington.

New and Improved

When it comes to the research and development of new products, Japan's Sony Corp. is a leader. A few weeks ago, its battery-manufacturing subsidiary, Sony Energytec Inc., announced the development of a new lightweight, long-lasting, rechargeable battery. Made from a complex manganese oxide unlike the compounds used in other batteries, the Sony product is one-fourth the weight of a nickel-cadmium battery and lasts 2.4 times longer. Sony has not yet released its marketing date.

The Humane Society of the United States announces its first official sculpture.

Two prized mediums magically combined in a unique work of art. Fine full-lead crystal finished and polished by hand. Meticulously hand-painted porcelain of superb quality.

Snow Pup is the first sculpture ever issued by The Humane Society of the United States, America's premier organization dedicated to the protection of our animals.

It is an original creation by Roslyn S. Carren, internationally respected for her ability to portray baby animals. Here she authentically depicts the baby harp seal. And the ice floe that cradles the seal glistens like the arctic ice.

The issue price is $90. And a portion of the issue price will be contributed to further the Humane Society's worthy efforts — adding to the satisfaction of owning this official sculpture.

'They Thought I Was Too Preppy For Television'

BY DOTSON RADER

CHARLES GIBSON greeted me in his small office on Broadway, a block from the ABC-TV New York studios where he is co-host of Good Morning America. When he joined Joan Lunden on the show last February, he brought with him 20 years of experience in hard-news reporting—10 of them as a national correspondent for ABC. He has since become a familiar fixture in the waking hours of millions.

Why did he go into journalism?

"I couldn't get into law school," he joked. "It was clear that my application to Yale wouldn't be accepted. I wasn't a very good student at Princeton. When I got out of prep school, my dad's best friend from Chicago, where I was born, talked lyrically to me about Princeton, and I knew I had to go. I'd never get into Princeton today. I limped through with mediocre grades. I enjoyed Princeton enormously, but I didn't excel there, although it wasn't for lack of trying."

"I set out, very consciously, to get into television journalism ... I decided that I would get to a network by the time I was 33."

At Princeton, Gibson served as news director of the university's radio station, WPRB-FM, which whetted his appetite for journalism. He was graduated in 1965, the year he met his wife, Arlene, on a blind date. They were married in 1968. "Both Arlene and I are extraordinarily competitive," he said, "and our competitiveness is channeled into our work." Arlene Gibson is headmistress of the Kent School for girls in Summit, N.J., where the Gibsons and their daughters, aged 11 and 15, live in the headmistress' house.

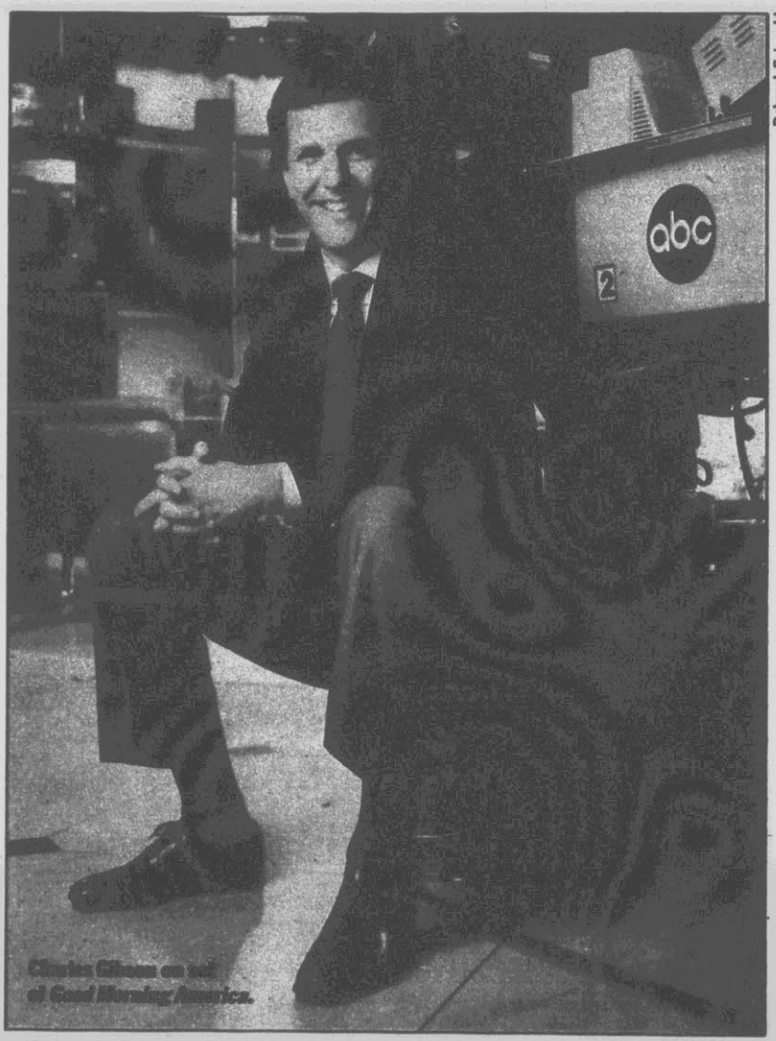
"God, I love women," said this lone man in a household of women. "They bond better than men, both with each other and with men. Men are more closed-down, particularly at my age." Gibson is 44.

After Princeton, he said, "I set out, very consciously, to get into television journalism. I wanted to be part of a network and to work overseas."

Why television? Why not print?

"Because my father and I had watched the news together every night, from the time we got a television set, when I was 12. We'd talk at the dinner table about what we'd seen, about politics." His voice softened when he talked of his parents. His mother died in 1978, and as we spoke he was burdened by the knowledge that his father was gravely ill.

"It seemed to me that television was the future of news," he added. "You felt you were at the hearings or in the hall. I decided I would get to a network by the time I was 33. When I got out of the Marine Reserves, I gave myself 10 years. If, in 10 years, I'd made it, I would stay in the business. If not, I'd get out."



Deborah Feingold

Gibson's first station job was as a trainee with WMAL-TV, Channel 7, in Washington, D.C. "I swept floors after Coco, the dog on a kids' show called Clare and Coco," Gibson said.

Three months later, in 1967, Gibson was hired by WLVA-TV and Radio in Lynchburg, Va. He spent three years there but admits he wasn't happy.

"To have grown up with a keen awareness of civil rights, which my parents would talk about, and to go down to Lynchburg, where the local newspaper didn't publish stories about blacks unless they'd committed a crime—that was surprising to me," he recalled. "And I just assumed that my co-workers at the station would also find it strange.

"But our station carried the football games of the white high school on radio, but not the games of the black high school. That didn't seem right. So those of us in the news department raised a fuss. So the station guy said, 'Okay, we'll do a few of the Dunbar [black] High

"My father and I had watched the news together every night, from the time we got a television set, when I was 12. We'd talk about it at dinner."

After a row with the station manager, Gibson packed it in. As he was leaving Lynchburg, he found his tires had been slashed.

He soon returned to WMAL-TV in Washington, this time as news anchor and reporter. Three years later, his career seemed finished.

"I got bounced in Washington because they thought I was too preppy for television," he said. "They put me on radio instead. The career elevator had started to go down. And once it starts down, it is time to get out. I took a student fellowship to buy time to decide what I was going to do. I was 31, and I went to the University of Michigan to try the law-school route. But within three or four months, I knew I was going back to journalism. I was far more interested in the human story of a law case than in the points of law."

In 1975, back in Washington at age 32, Gibson was hired by ABC. From 1976 to 1977, he was a White House correspondent. From 1977 to 1981, he was a general assignment correspondent. And from January 1981 until his move to Good Morning America, he was the network's chief correspondent on Capitol Hill. The elevator had gone up again.

What were the critical influences on his life and character, his values?

"I guess my parents," he replied. "Mother was an organizer, while Dad was very involved with each of the kids. My dad and I would spend hours doing my math homework."

He paused and became somber. "I just spent a week in Florida with my father. He looked good, and we had such good times. But he's dying." (Note: Burdett Gibson died soon after.)

"Oh, Mother!" he said, brightening. "She was born in 1903, Dad in 1899. She was raised to take the traditional woman's role—finishing school, marriage, children. It was only after I'd finished school that she worked as an interior decorator in Georgetown. I was always sorry she hadn't professionally used her artistic talent earlier. Instead, she devoted it to us." He paused again, then added:

"We were happy. The family always got together for Christmas. Mother would fuss endlessly with what are still the most beautiful Christmas trees I've ever seen. She'd spend hours arranging the smallest white lights until the arrangement was perfect. Now, I try. But even after 48 hours of trying, my trees don't look like Mother's. I still haven't got it right, and I know I never will."

BY JAMES BRADY

Faye Dunaway

O'Neill/Sygma

BORN: Jan. 14, 1941, in Bascom, Fla.
PERSONAL: Married to Peter Wolf, 1974-78. Married Terry O'Neill in 1983; one son, Liam.
FILMS: Include The Happening, 1967 (debut); Bonnie and Clyde, 1967; Hurry Sundown, 1967; The Thomas Crown Affair, 1968; Little Big Man, 1970; Oklahoma Crude, 1973; Chinatown, 1974; The Towering Inferno, 1974; Three Days of the Condor, 1975; Network, 1976 (Oscar); Voyage of the Damned, 1976; Eyes of Laura Mars, 1978; The Champ, 1979; The First Deadly Sin, 1980; Mommie Dearest, 1981; Supergirl, 1984; Barfly, 1987.

Another Oscar nomination for Faye Dunaway? She lost to Kate Hepburn, then won for Network. Some think she'll win again as a gin-soaked beauty in Barfly.

THIS WAS ONE OF THOSE PARTIES where the cocktail hour to precede dinner had spilled out onto the sidewalk. I was standing there chatting when Faye Dunaway, looking very nifty in a miniskirt, hopped out of a cab. Since I had never met Miss Dunaway and was standing closest to the curb, I greeted her and asked, "May I get you a drink?"

"No," she said, trying to slip past me. "I'm starved. Where do they have the food?"

I pointed toward the restaurant, and she sprinted away and inside, through the kitchen door. I let her go. When Faye Dunaway is starving, you do not stand in her way.

BRADY'S BITS

The dinner where we met was in honor of the Paris fashion designer Yves Saint Laurent. A few days earlier, Faye had been photographed wearing a dress (and showing a nifty leg) by Saint Laurent's bitter rival, Christian Lacroix. Tactfully, this night, she wore something by Yves. During dinner, we all compared handwriting. I argued that the nuns taught it best. Faye had enough of that after a while. "Come on," she said. "There's a party for Norman Mailer's new movie. Let's go!" It was after midnight, and she was just getting her second wind.

Later, over dinner, we had a chance to talk. And I can report that, besides having a voracious appetite, she is an easy, candid conversationalist —nothing like the driven career woman she portrayed in Network, the role that won her an Oscar.

Her current film is Barfly, with Mickey Rourke, in which they play a couple of boozers. Her concern wasn't the critics but finding a theater in which the movie could be shown for the New York Film Festival. "Find me a theater," she said. "Please?" Since I had no theater available right then, I asked if Barfly would be successful. "You never know before," she said. "Warren [Beatty] wasn't at all sure about Bonnie and Clyde." I asked her about Bill Holden, her Network co-star, who drank heavily and died a few years after that film. Did she sense it coming? "No. He was a professional. A delight. Not a single problem."

The daughter of a career soldier, Dunaway came out of a small Florida town. She turned down a Fulbright scholarship to study acting in New York. A couple of stage plays got her noticed, and in 1967 she became Bonnie Parker, shooting her way to stardom but losing out to Katharine Hepburn for that year's Oscar as Best Actress.

She has never shied away from an unsympathetic role. In The Thomas Crown Affair, Faye played a hard-as-nails insurance investigator to Steve McQueen's millionaire bank robber. In Mommie Dearest, she portrayed a monstrous Joan Crawford. She was a villain in Supergirl and even played Eva Perón. While making Chinatown, however, director Roman Polanski reduced her to tears and at one point literally pulled hairs out of her head.

Success doesn't necessarily guarantee happiness. Dunaway has had a number of love affairs, notably one with Marcello Mastroianni that ended badly, and two broken marriages. She denies stories of hard drugs. She told the writer Alan Ebert that she had smoked pot for a time, in 1970, but quit. Reason? She wanted to have a baby.

BOOKS

MRS. SADAT REMEMBERS

Courage runs in Anwar Sadat's family, as this book by the widow of the assassinated Egyptian president demonstrates. Jehan Sadat, the daughter of an English mother and an Egyptian father, married Sadat when she was 15 and he was still a penniless revolutionary. A strong woman, she immediately asserted her independence and later won many battles for women's rights in her conservative Moslem country. Her book, A Woman of Egypt (Simon & Schuster, $19.95), is a warm portrait of Sadat as father and husband and a rich memoir of Egypt, with all its sharp contrasts and sometimes violent transitions into modern times. It is also the story of a woman who found the strength to continue after her world had been shattered.

Harrison Ford Searches For Wife in Thriller

Warner Bros.

Frantic, directed by Roman Polanski, has a classic thriller plot: A happily married San Francisco surgeon (Harrison Ford), in Paris for a convention, discovers his wife has been kidnapped. He spends the rest of the movie in the back alleys of the city trying desperately to find her—aided by a gorgeous and somewhat treacherous young woman. "It's interesting," says the co-producer, Thom Mount, "to see what Polanski does with a story about a man afraid of losing his wife, since few people we know have lost their wives in a more publicly hideous manner than Roman [whose pregnant wife, Sharon Tate, was murdered by the Charles Manson gang]. It's safe to say that the subject matter means something special to him."

VIDEO

Javert vs. Valjean

Now that the musical based on Victor Hugo's classic Les Misérables is a smash on Broadway, two movie versions of the heartbreaking story are out on video: The 1935 b&w adaptation, starring Charles Laughton as the relentless Inspector Javert and Fredric March as Jean Valjean, the escaped convict who stole a loaf of bread to feed his starving family; and a 1978 version in color, with Anthony Perkins and Richard Jordan.

Ms. Okays Corselettes

You Never Thought You'd See the Day department: Ms., under its new Australian management, adds a regular column on clothing in the February issue, to wit: "A lot of women are finding that, far from being demeaning, bubbles, balloons and corselettes are marvelous novelties and...fun to wear." Well, we knew those Aussies were bottom-line conscious.

Dyan Cannon Has Her Own Rock Ambitions

"Rock 'n' Roll Mom," a special two-hour "Disney Sunday Movie" airing Feb. 7, wasn't written with Dyan Cannon in mind, but it almost could have been. In fact, Cannon, who recently turned 50, has spent the past two years writing music for a rock 'n' roll album.

"Then 'Rock 'n' Roll Mom' was brought to me, and I was asked if I wanted to do it," she says. "After my mouth dropped to my chin, I said, 'Wait a minute. This is miracle time. Yes. Yes, I do.' "

Her favorite part was filming the concerts. "I was having so much fun that at the end of the day I'd say to the director, 'Can't I do it one more time?' He'd say, 'Go home!' Now I want to be a rock 'n' roll star. But whenever I tell people that, they start laughing. I say, 'Why not?' They say, 'Well, because you're a grown woman.' I say, 'What's wrong with that?' "

Three Different Sports Offer All-Star Games

By Marty Linehan

This is all-star week in three sports — basketball, hockey and football. It is also the week in which the Winter Olympics open in Calgary, Canada.

The NBA All-Star Game on CBS airs on Sunday, Feb. 7, with its annual clash between East and West. Last year, Seattle's Tom Chambers — who was a last-minute replacement for an injured Ralph Sampson — turned into the hero of the day and picked up the game's MVP award for his contribution to the West's win.

* Also on Sunday, ESPN will travel to Honolulu to bring us the NFL's Pro Bowl. This annual all-star game has proved so popular that it is now played in Hawaii and presented on cable TV. When was the last time you stayed home to watch the Pro Bowl? Even the players are more interested in being named to the team than playing in the game. But it is — definitely — the last football game of the season.

* There is non-all-star action as well on Sunday. NBC will feature the Notre Dame-Duke basketball game, and ABC counters with Big Ten rivals Purdue and Michigan. There's also a 15-round bout between Frank Tate and Tony Sibson on NBC from Birmingham, England, if fisticuffs suit your fancy.

* On Tuesday, Feb. 9, ESPN airs the National Hockey League's All-Star Game from St. Louis. After a one-year break to allow an all-star team to play a two-game set with the Soviet National Team in lieu of the all-star game, the NHL returns to its old format.

* But Saturday, Feb. 13, is the day many sports fans are waiting for. The opening ceremonies of the XV Winter Olympic Games will be shown on ABC, which will be televising the games. We're sure it will be too cold in Calgary for performers to put on the same circus that marked the opening of the 1984 Summer Games in Los Angeles. All that was missing there were the 200 Elvis Presley look-alikes who showed up at the Statue of Liberty celebration two years later in New York.

Making the Winter Games more interesting this year will be the addition of a number of nations that are usually not associated with winter sports to the list of 60 competing countries. These mostly warm-weather nations include Fiji (in cross-country skiing), Ireland (bobsled and luge), Guatemala (Alpine and cross-country skiing), Guam (biathlon), Malta and Thailand (figure skating) and Jamaica (bobsled).

CTV Providing Lots Of Coverage

CTV: Eyes for the XV Winter Olympics

Four years ago at Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, marchers and flagbearers at the closing ceremonies of the XIV Winter Olympics cast their eyes westward toward Calgary in the traditional salute in the direction of the next host country of the Winter Games.

Finally for Calgary, the building, primping and waiting is over, the Olympic torch has been passed and for the next two weeks the games of the XV Winter Olympics will dominate the sports pages. CTV will provide more than 114 hours of exclusive live coverage.

ENJOY THE PERFORMANCE FROM A COMFORTABLE SEAT.

The Peugeot 505 STX certainly won't cheat you on performance. After all, there's a fuel-injected, 145-hp overhead-cam V-6 in there. However, unlike many so-called luxury performance cars, this one offers a comfortable, luxurious ride. Find out just how comfortable by slipping into the hand-stitched, electrically heated front seat for a test-drive.

NEW! Rest-A-Matic®...Adjustable Bed...

© Copyright, 1979, Rest-A-Matic® Adjustable Beds

Rest-A-Matic—so versatile, so advanced it makes ordinary chairs, sofas, and beds practically obsolete for leisure activities, relaxation, and sleep!

Here's an amazing discovery that enriches the hours you spend at home...making the most of healthful relaxation. REST-A-MATIC®... An engineering marvel that makes (what looks like) a conventional bed... into an ADJUSTABLE BED... that changes to literally hundreds of restful positions. Quiet electric motors concealed in the understructure of the REST-A-MATIC® do your bidding at the touch of a button.

The Rest-A-Matic® Adjustable Bed provides the ultimate in comfort and relaxation in your home...where you can enjoy extra leisure hours the most.

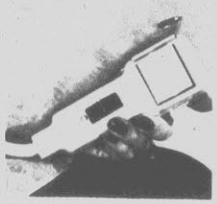
Now your bedroom is not just for sleeping! With Rest-A-Matic® ...it becomes a center for your most rewarding leisure-time activities... reading, studying, sewing...watching TV... or even breakfast in bed!

People of all ages...in all walks of life are now finding new ways to enrich their lives with healthful, vigorous activities...for a renewed spirit of enjoyment, physically and mentally. And equally important to this renewed activity...is the enjoyment of total relaxation!

Rest-A-Matic® lets your mind work while your body rests. You may actually be able to add extra hours every day to your active life because you'll be more comfortable... more relaxed, yet wide-awake. you will soon find that muscle tension will be relieved in every part of your body.... because your body weight is more evenly distributed and supported than in any chair or ordinary bed.

Couples can now enjoy these extra pleasant hours spent together... each enjoying a preference of relaxed activities. With the new Dual-King model, for example, you can sit up watching television, perhaps, while your spouse can lie back even further for relaxed conversation... or just a pleasant rest.

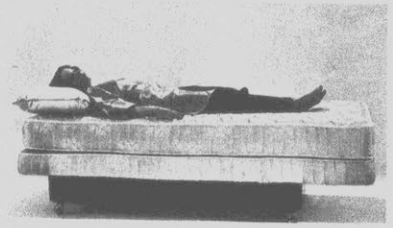
How does Rest-A-Matic do all this for you?

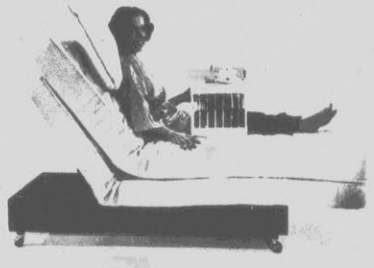


Programmed to raise or lower different sections of the bed, the Rest-A-Matic® is the product of extensive engineering design and testing... All toward the ultimate aim of providing you with a "free-floating" kind of support you could never experience in chair lounges, sofas or conventional beds. Since the Rest-A-Matic® adapts to literally hundreds of restful positions, you can actually distribute body weight more evenly to help relieve muscle tension, back fatigue, tired legs. Comfort is yours to command whether you just want to relax or adjust to a position for increased circulatory action.

Inside the Rest-A-Matic® frame and mattress is where the engineering magic has been concealed. Simply plug the cord into a regular electric outlet and the Rest-A-Matic, with its silent electric motors and scientifically structured framework ...is ready to do your bidding at the touch of a button.

When made up, your Rest-A-Matic® bed looks like any other elegant conventional bed. Can be used with your present headboards and comes in the usual sizes; Twin, Full-Sized, Queen and King, and Dual-King (two twin beds that accommodate king-size bedspreads).





Refreshing relaxation and increased circulation offer many obvious benefits to health and well-being.

Since the Rest-A-Matic® Bed adjusts to many positions, you can now choose exactly the right amount of lift or support for healthful relaxation. For example, you can lower the head support and raise your legs... for a healthful surge of circulatory action. With legs elevated, back completely relaxed... and your head slightly lower than the rest of your body... you can almost feel the pressures and tensions of the day slip away!

Enjoy "cradle-comfort" even in the sitting-up position, since only about one fifth of your body weight rests on the hips. Just one of thousands of restful positions you can command.

Rest-A-Matic® can automatically be controlled by the patient to change positions to relieve the monotony, aches, nervous tension and soreness from remaining in one position too long. In addition, by adjusting the bed to "activity" positions the patient can keep self-entertained or engaged in other activities such as reading, writing, with virtually no assistance from others.

After a hard day, you might like to enjoy a pleasant, refreshing massage... right in your own bed! Just dial in the optional Digi-Matic massage that sends out waves of pulsating energy... simulating the gentle fingers of a skilled masseur!

Another optional feature is the Thermo-Matic Warmth Control, a heating unit for your Rest-A-Matic® that is imperceptible to sight or touch. With its own control that lets you select the level of heat you prefer, "Thermo-Matic" is far more efficient than an electric blanket since the heat rises from the mattress and is retained by the lightest of blankets above.

• SEVEN OUT! Let's say you have 10 balls numbered from 0 through 9 and you wish to use all but the 7 in the diagram at right to total 16 on each of the triangle's sides. How can you place the balls in the nine circles to have them comply?

Remember, you wish to use all balls 0-6 with the exception of ball no. 7.

• SEE LIGHTS! In a formation of nine-light planes there was a plane before two planes, a plane behind two planes, and a plane between two planes. How many planes in all?

VERSE-RIDDLE WITS TESTER!

In form more like a snake I look,
Though having 16 feet at least.
What am I?

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

HIT OR MISS! Apply crayons or colored pencils neatly to numbered segments above: 1—Red. 2—Lt. blue. 3—Yellow. 4—Lt. brown. 5—Flesh tones. 6—Green. 7—Dk. brown. 8—Lt. purple.
