ECU Players Charged

Investigation of an incident in Scott Residence Hall at East Carolina University last Sunday morning has led to the arrest of three ECU football players, university officials said today.

Charges of assault on a female were placed against Lester Errol McCorvey, 19, of Pensacola, Fla., and Ernest L. Pendleton, 18, of Devon, Pa. Both were placed under $500 bond, with trial scheduled in Pitkin County District Court March 14. Each was charged with one count of assault on a female.

Lewis E. Wilson, 21, of Foley, Ala., was charged with two counts of aiding and abetting assault on a female and was placed under $1,000 bond, also scheduled for trial in District Court March 14.

The three arrested have been suspended from the team pending outcome of the charges, university athletic officials said.

McCorvey is a reserve defensive back and Pendleton and Wilson are reserve running backs on the team. Neither was expected to play a leading role in this year's football program, according to the ECU Sports Information Department.

Senate Confirms Greenville Attorney For Federal Bench

The U.S. Senate Thursday night confirmed Greenville lawyer Malcolm Howard's appointment as a U.S. District Court judge for eastern North Carolina.

Howard said this morning that a representative of the legislative affairs section of the U.S. Justice Department "notified me about 8 p.m. that the Senate passed on me about 7 o'clock or 7:30 last night."

But Howard said, "I anticipate it will be the middle of March before I swear in. It will take another two weeks to complete the closing down of my law practice (before I) take the oath."

"Present plans," Howard said, call for him to take the oath of office "at New Bern in mid-March."

Howard, 48, was nominated for the post — a new judgeship that has never been filled — by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., 10 months ago. He underwent questioning by members of the Senate Judiciary Committee at a confirmation hearing on Feb. 17.

"It's still not resolved exactly where my chambers will be and I hope to get that resolved within the next month," Howard said today. "I am doing everything I can to have my chambers here in Greenville."

"The problem," Howard said, "is that there are regulations that dictate a judge will have his 'duty station' at a place that regularly holds Federal District Court nearest his abode. In our case, that's obviously New Bern."

But Howard said, "I am working with the administrative office of U.S. Courts and the Eastern District court officials to authorize and allow me to have chambers here in the Federal Building on Evans Street."

Noriega Supporters Oust Delvalle

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — The National Assembly today convened an emergency session and ousted President Eric Arturo Delvalle after he tried to fire the nation's military chief and de facto leader, Gen. Manuel Solis Palma, who was sworn in before dawn.

In a 10-minute session, 38 legislators voted Delvalle out of office and accused him of promoting U.S. interference in domestic affairs by trying to force Noriega out.

The Cabinet immediately named a new chief of state, Education Minister Manuel Solis Palma, who was sworn in before dawn.

U.S. Ambassador Arthur Davis said the U.S. government would not recognize a replacement for Delvalle. In Washington, Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., said U.S. military intervention might be justified if Noriega, under indictment in the United States on drug trafficking charges, decides to cling to power.

In an attempt to assert civilian control over the government and the 15,000 soldiers and police under Noriega, Delvalle tried Thursday night to get the military to replace Noriega. It refused.

Davis spent most of Thursday night with Delvalle in Delvalle's home, along with 30 to 40 people, sources said.

Drivers honked their horns and some waved white handkerchiefs immediately after Delvalle announced his plan to oust Noriega. Both have been signs of opposition to Noriega.

Delvalle called his own ouster "something legally despicable that only fulfills a formality in the mind of those who want to grasp power at any cost."

In an interview with "CBS This Morning," Delvalle urged a trade embargo against Panama but said he opposed U.S. military intervention.

Panama, with 2.2 million people, is headquarters for U.S. military operations in Latin America.

The U.S. Southern Command has 10,000 troops and 20,000 dependents in Panama. The U.S. garrison was on alert and told Americans to keep a low profile during any unrest.

The White House called for Noriega's resignation after his indictment in Florida on Feb. 5. Delvalle's attempt to oust Noriega, announced in a nationwide broadcast Thursday night, received immediate backing from the United States.

"At this time, we want to reiterate our unqualified support for civilian constitutional rule in Panama," said White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

But Noriega and his supporters moved quickly.

The National Assembly was called into session, although opposition lawmakers in the 67-member legislature boycotted the 1 a.m. meeting. Both Delvalle and Vice President Roderick Esquivel were removed from office.

Noriega, who says he is innocent of all charges, did not comment publicly on the events.

Delvalle said of his opponents, "They will not receive acceptance from any country that takes pride in being democratic. I continue to feel that I am president of the republic."

From his home, Delvalle said he asked Noriega to "retire" as soon as the U.S. indictments were announced, but the general refused.

Defense Forces police chief Col. Leonidas Macias told Panamanian television Thursday that no officer would replace the general.

"He (Delvalle) is going first," said Macias, flanked by senior officers at the Defense Forces' central garrison.

In its resolution, the National Assembly said Delvalle violated the law in removing Noriega and noted that Esquivel had abandoned his post in September without resigning.

Delvalle said earlier that Col. Marcos Justines, the chief of staff, would replace Noriega. Justines refused.

Income Swings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Young families with children have suffered the most dramatic income drop since 1970 of any family group in America, while the elderly have seen the sharpest rise, according to a new congressional analysis.

The study of family income trends by the Congressional Budget Office found that median income for families with children, in which the head of household was under 25, plummeted 43 percent from 1970 to 1986.

For those over 65, including people living alone, income went up more than 50 percent.

A Republican senator and a Democratic congressman independently requested the non-partisan CBO to do a study of family income trends, and each offered his own interpretation of the analysis released Thursday.

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., stressed the encouraging CBO finding that overall, American family income has risen 20 percent since 1970. Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., pointed to the plight of low-income families with children.

Miller also cited CBO's finding that many families increased their incomes over the 16-year period not through higher wages but by adding another wage-earner to the workforce, and with that wage-earner such added costs as child care and commuting.

CBO said that the elderly as a group were least buffeted by the swings of the economy, and that rises in their income were due primarily to higher Social Security payments.

Lawyer Leaving Mecham Defense

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Gov. Evan Mecham's chief attorney has resigned, just days after other lawyers were brought in to handle the governor's impeachment trial opening next week before the state Senate, a newspaper reported today.

The Arizona Daily Star of Tucson quoted the governor as saying, "Murray (Miller) withdrew from the case. We parted friendly, but that's really all. You'll have to ask him why."

Earlier this week, Mecham hired Washington attorney Jerris Leonard to be the lead lawyer for his impeachment trial, which is scheduled to begin Monday. Also brought in to the case was Phoenix attorney Thomas Crowe.

Miller said Wednesday he did not know additional attorneys were being hired until Leonard walked into his office Monday.

The beleaguered Mecham also faces a May 17 recall election and a March 22 criminal trial on charges of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan.

The Senate on Wednesday refused to delay the impeachment trial. Miller said then that he expected to remain the lead attorney until Leonard could get acquainted with the case.

Pesticide Rules Draw Opposition

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

Concern arising from proposed amendments to state pesticide rules regarding the aerial treatment of crops brought approximately 400 people from across all of eastern North Carolina to a public hearing at the Willis Building Thursday.

The seven members of the N.C. Pesticide Board listened for nearly three hours as over 40 speakers voiced their opposition to the proposed rulings.

The proposed amendments, which involve Subchapter 9L of the N.C. Administrative Code, deal with the issues of buffering distances and notification requirements regarding aerial spraying.

The proposed amendments state no pesticide shall be deposited by aircraft within 300 feet of a residence, and no pesticide will be deposited within 1,000 feet of any residence unless the aerial applicator has prior written consent of the head of that household. The current law says no pesticide shall be deposited within 100 feet of any residence unless the applicator has written consent.

In addition, any person who contracts for an aerial application of a pesticide would have to provide individual and public notification not less than 72 hours prior applying any application.

According to the proposal, written notification of spraying would be required to be provided within 1,000 feet of the target area to be sprayed. Public notification would also require the posting of warning signs to be placed at the corners and a distance of every one-half mile along the perimeter of the target area to be sprayed, and also posted every one-half mile along any public road located within one-half mile of the boundary of the target area to be sprayed.

The vast majority of speakers at the hearing said the current regulations regarding the aerial application of pesticides are both adequate and sufficient, and most said the proposed amendments were unworkable and unreasonable, and would be economically disastrous to the state's agricultural industry.

Jim Pridgeon, representing the N.C. Forestry Association, told the board the proposed 72-hour notification requirement is unreasonable due to the unpredictability of weather conditions.

"The safe application of chemical by air requires that weather conditions be suitable. Many times jobs are called off at the last minute due to unexpected wind or weather conditions. Operators must be able to act quickly when the weather is right. Such inflexibility would encourage application under marginal weather conditions causing far more problems than it would solve," Pridgeon said.

Robert Earl Hale of the Halifax Farm Bureau said a 72-hour notification requirement is unworkable due to the rapid life cycle and reproductive capabilities of crop-destroying insects.

Delays of pesticides would cause catastrophic crop losses," he predicted.

Steve Winslow, an agricultural extension director, said a 72-hour prior written notice requirement would circumvent the use of thresholds

Howell Appointed

Dr. John M. Howell, chancellor emeritus of East Carolina University, will serve as chairman of a statewide committee to make recommendations on new doctoral degree programs for public school administrators.

The committee is an outgrowth of the state Task Force on the Preparation of Teachers which reported to the 1987 General Assembly. Among its recommendations was the implementation of a "rigorous" doctoral degree program designed specifically for senior school administrators.

The committee, which met for the first time Wednesday, will report its recommendations to the UNC General Administration this fall. ECU is one of several campuses being considered to offer the new education doctorates.

Greenville Mayor Ed Carter will participate in opening ceremonies at 2 p.m.

Death Ruled Suicide

Greenville police said suicide has been ruled in the shotgun death of Donald Earl Hopkins, 31, of 2504A E. Third St. early Thursday night.

Officer R.G. Mendenhall said Hopkins locked himself in a bedroom of his apartment after telling his wife that he was going to kill himself.

Candidate Stresses Corporate Law

Dealing with corporate law is one of the toughest and most important issues facing the people of North Carolina, according to Brad Miller, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for secretary of state.

"The office is as important to the economic future of North Carolina as any in state government," said Miller, who campaigned in Greenville on Thursday.

Miller's campaign is emphasizing the need for sound corporate law so that businesses are able to work for the future instead of battling takeover attempts.

Corporate law needs to be consistent and "needs to be clear, predictable and not give anyone a lot of discretionarily authority," said Miller.

Last year Burlington Industries was the largest employer in North Carolina, Miller said, but they were forced to spend $3 billion and lay off more than 1000 employees to fight off a takeover attempt.

The General Assembly has passed two laws dealing with corporate takeovers, Miller said, and companies must have some stability if they are to compete worldwide. "The constant threat of takeovers has management too concerned with quick profits. Instead of planning for the future they are looking back over their shoulders."

It is not a climate suited to improving for the future and it is tough on employees, Miller said. "They know their jobs aren't secure and their future is uncertain. They know if it can happen to Burlington it can happen to the company they work for."

Miller has held several positions within the Democratic Party. He served as chairman of the Wake County Democratic Party from 1985-1987 and is currently a member of the party's state Executive Committee.

"I am also interested in what this campaign means to the Democratic Party. North Carolina voters seem to want new leaders to come to the front," he said. Voters are looking for candidates who want to deal with issues, not candidates who are interested in running just to hold office, he said.

Miller has never held elected office but he said his work in private law has given him an important view of state government. "It gives me the perspective of state government and state regulations that most people have."

Miller, 34, holds degrees from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, the London School of Economics and Columbia University. He has been practicing law since 1980 and is currently on leave of absence from the firm of LeBoeuf, Lamb, Leiby and MacRae.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Shrinking Numbers
Alarming Decline

A dwindling number of black students enrolling in the nation's colleges is a problem that could impose dire social and economic consequences on a society already suffering from an imbalance between black and white.

That trend compromises the concept that every American should have access to a college education.

Unless it is effectively addressed by the higher education system, the decline is a trend that could create a distinct class separation where divisive lines are racial. It is a trend that could overburden the nation's welfare system and sever the social fabric of the nation if allowed to go unchecked.

The facts on enrollment provide startling evidence that diversity is vanishing from the nation's college campuses.

For example, the American Council on Education reported college enrollment rates for black high school graduates peaked in 1976 at 33.5 percent. By 1985 only 26.1 percent of black high school graduates were going to college — even though more blacks are graduating from high school. Clearly, this decrease can be linked with shrinking federal education cut-backs during the Reagan administration.

The implications of that occurrence are serious enough for the issue to require attention of educators and administrators. In addition, the federal government must give the issue an ear. The funding priorities of the past decade have made loans and grants for higher education scarce — a fact which links the decrease in black college enrollment to federal financial aid.

Ask any college how much financial aid was available 10 years ago and how much is available now. The answer will be a soliloquy on the importance of creating funding banks from the private sector — not exactly a testament to the government's strong support for minority students.

The decline is a trend which must be reversed. When monetary aid sources dried up in the 1980s, that placed financial pressure on those already hard-hit by college expenses. Unfortunately, many minority students are among those ranks.

The result is that the representation of one sector of the population has diminished in higher education — and will consequently dwindle in the work force. The loss of that diversity and balance will be felt economically and socially.

Universities must respond with tangible improvements in teacher-training programs and by forming alliances with public schools and community colleges to encourage minority students' needs. They must direct efforts to reach minority students who are financially pressed and provide them with assistance.

Finally, the federal government must realign its budget priorities and increase financial aid, particularly grants. Minority students who can't afford fees and can't hack conventional loan payments shouldn't have to sacrifice a college education. A college education shouldn't be out of reach for any American.

Fast Track
Train Ride

In Japan preparations are under way to build a commercial supertrain which will ride above a track on superconducting magnets. The train will be capable of reaching speeds of over 300 miles per hour.

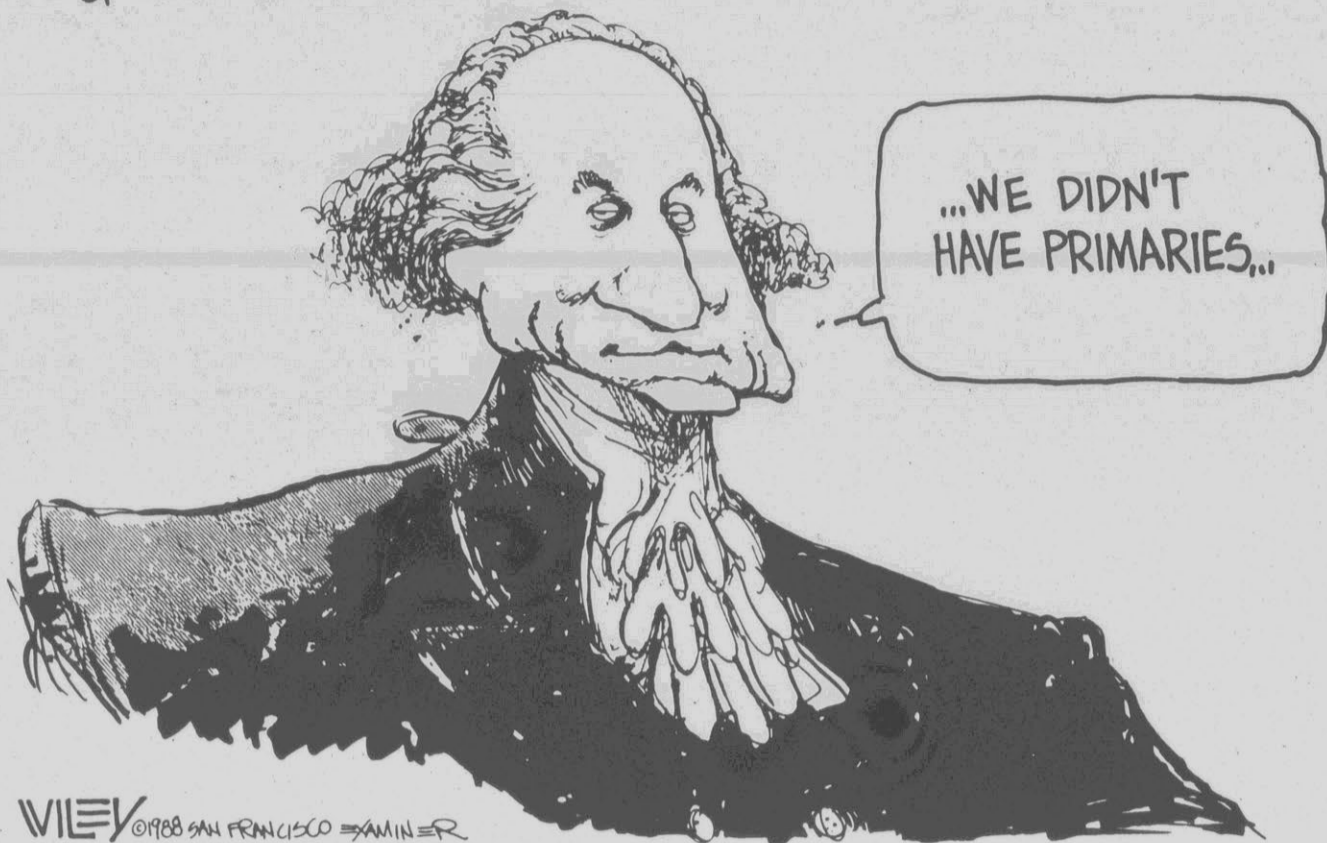

If it sounds impossible, read on. The trains have already been tested in Japan. The can reach speeds of 180 mph in only 30 seconds. An experimental train has already reached speeds of 321 mph and visitors have already been given rides on it. The ride was bumpy but scientists say that will be eliminated by further refinements.

Obviously there are many problems to be solved before 300 mph trains will become a commonplace thing. At this point some say the project will be too expensive to be feasible.

Nevertheless the Japanese are at the forefront in a scientific field that can produce undreamed of results for future generations. No one can say where it will lead or what the complications will be. Still science will push on in exploring new areas. The result could be radically different trains, which could compete with air travel, and breakthroughs in other areas of science.

The United States, and all industrialized nations, will be striving to stay ahead of the continuing scientific revolution which carries us forward in development at a dizzying pace. To fall behind can mean surrendering our position as the foremost nation of the western world ... and that can have far reaching effects.

Race Forming Along Familiar Lines

Once again, the New Hampshire primary has winnowed the political field. Once again, the Republican and Democratic races are shaping up along familiar dimensions — but with some 1980s-style twists.

On the Republican side, the fight is starting to look like every GOP race since the 1950s — conservative vs. moderate. This year, however, the liberal wing of the party is dead on the presidential level. The last genuinely liberal Republican presidential hopeful, John B. Anderson, lost every primary in 1980. He finally dropped out of the race and ran as an independent.

This leaves the contest among candidates who claim to be right, righter, rightest — or more Reagan than thou.

Two of the most conservative Republicans, Rep. Jack F. Kemp of New York and former Delaware Gov. Pierre S. du Pont IV may have done poorly because they are not much more conservative than Vice President George Bush and Sen. Robert J. Dole of Kansas.

The contrast between Dole, who has been cast as the moderate, and Kemp, the diehard conservative, makes the point well. In the first seven years of the Reagan administration, according to Congressional Quarterly, Kemp voted against the Reagan program twice as much as Dole did — 24 percent vs. 12 percent.

Yet during Reagan's first six years in office, the liberal Americans for Democratic Action rated Kemp twice as liberal as Dole on important issues — 12 percent compared with 6 percent. The conservative Americans for Constitutional Action and American Conservative Union, at the same time, rated Kemp as more conservative than Dole, but only slightly so.

The data are either misleading (after all, Kemp and Dole serve in different houses of Congress and were therefore rated on different votes) or they show how close Dole and Kemp really are.

Voters, however, seem to be responding as though there are vast gulfs between them. In Iowa and New Hampshire, according to the New York Times-CBS News poll, Republican moderates were likely to back Dole. Conservatives and rock-solid Reaganites voted for Marion G. "Pat" Robertson in Iowa and Bush in New Hampshire.

If the Bush-Dole race takes the form of past Republican contests, Dole will probably do best in the Northeast and Midwest, where GOP moderates abound. Bush will run up his highest totals in the conservative heartland — the South and far West.

The GOP nominee will have to walk a fine line between wooing the new voters Robertson has drawn into the process and attracting the yuppies who may be the long-term best hope for Republicans.

If the Democratic race continues to shape up as a contest among Rep. Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri, Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson, voters will begin to feel that they have seen it all before.

As in 1984, there will be a candidate of the Midwestern rust belt and traditional labor unions (Walter F. Mondale in 1984, Gephardt today); a spokesman for the newer, high-tech industries who has ties to the Kennedys (Gary W. Hart four years ago, Dukakis in 1988); and Jackson drawing on the oppressed and dispossessed.

Many commentators have suggested that this election will be about how to respond to the declining role of the United States in the world, a decline epitomized by the large trade deficit and the export of much of the nation's industrial base.

Just as Mondale, Hart and Jackson debated how the country should respond to these shifts, Gephardt, Dukakis and Jackson emerged last year as the chief spokesmen, respectively, for trade retaliation, increased productivity and greater control over multinational corporations.

As with the Republicans, the ideological gap among Democrats has narrowed. The differences between Mondale and Hart or Gephardt and Dukakis, have more to do with which sector of the economy each favors than with broad differences on issues. Only Jesse Jackson can claim to stand appreciably to the left of anyone.

Gephardt's geographic base is likely to be the Southern and border states, the industrial Northeast and the states bordering the Great Lakes.

Dukakis should run best in New England. He is its favorite son and his wing of the party usually runs well where the service sector and high technology are important. The West, including delegate-rich California, is likely to prove hospitable as well.

The patterns are already emerging. Gephardt, like his fellow friend of labor Mondale, carried Iowa. As his fellow high-tech advocate Hart did in 1984, Dukakis, like Hart, swept New Hampshire.

Jackson creates problems for the eventual nominee — like Robertson on the Republican side. For one, he will cut into both candidates' support. Jackson is expected to draw many black voters from Gephardt's Southern flank. Moreover, white southern Democrats may be attracted by Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr.

Gephardt and Dukakis also are well aware of the tricky balancing act that the Democratic nominee must perform. On one side are the white Southerners, the main swing voters in recent presidential politics. Only by doing reasonably well with this constituency can the Democrats hope to regain the White House.

On the other side are black voters, whose level of turnout has often made the difference in statewide races, especially in the South and in the Northern industrial states where most blacks live.

Like the fine line the GOP must tread between Robertson and the yuppies, Democrats must balance Jackson with the good ol' boys (and girls).

The race in each party boils down to a contest of emphasis. Should the Republicans stress the legacy of Reagan and choose Bush? Should they go for a more down-home approach and opt for Dole? Or should they play the social issues and select Robertson?

Should the Democrats go for hard hats and lunch buckets with Gephardt? Should they opt for computers and Belgian endive with Dukakis? Or will they go for good old American populism with Jackson?

In neither party is the choice one of deep contrasts over issues. It may be that neither party offers a program that can deal adequately with the country's international economic and political decline. But by now we should be used to campaigns that avoid the really tough questions.

Born Again And Again And Again

The man who came into my office introduced himself as Rev. Boomer. He handed me a bumper sticker. It said, "Honk Once for God and Vote Twice for Boomer."

"I'm running for born-again President of the United States," he told me.

"But we already have Rev. Robertson as the born-again candidate."

"He's a conservative. God wants me to run as a liberal. That way it doesn't look as if He's favoring one ideology over the other. Born-again liberals have the right answer to every problem facing this great country today," Rev. Boomer said.

"Where do you stand on Armageddon?" I asked.

"It's coming, but unlike the conservatives we believe the government should provide low-cost housing when it's over."

"What is your political strategy?"

"I'm going to take North Carolina on Super Tuesday," Boomer said. "As for Texas, Robertson doesn't have a prayer."

"According to Rev. Robertson, God is going to support him in Texas."

"You heard that from Robertson — not from God."

"If God wants you to run so badly why did He wait this long?"

"He didn't think Robertson would become a viable candidate. But after Iowa God got nervous."

"What scared Him the most?"

"When Robertson said the Russians have placed missiles in Cuba. God knows that kind of stuff could get us into a nuclear war."

"The word is out Robertson wants to smite secular humanists, radical militant homosexuals and the Eastern Liberal Establishment. Why?"

"He feels it will help him raise money in Alabama," Boomer answered.

"Tell me," I said, "what makes you think you have a better platform than Robertson's?"

"I'm a more popular TV evangelist. I got a 31 rating and a 40 share on my most recent program. The last time he was on the air Robertson only got a 10."

"Is it fair to throw a man's ratings at him?"

"It doesn't bother me. Another thing, Robertson is always bringing up hurricanes," Boomer said. "He says he can turn one around all by himself. Which proves his elevator doesn't go to the top floor. I think that's why God asked me to get in the race, so people wouldn't take him seriously."

"Rev. Boomer, just because you've been born again doesn't mean you can be elected to the highest office in a land. Robertson has an organization and an invisible army and claims he is in touch with heaven at all times. He has even referred to the President's seat as 'Yahweh's Oval Office.' How do you match that?"

"I have twice as many volunteers. I have my own PAC and I'm giving biblical acid rain calendars to everyone who sends me $10 before Super Tuesday."

"How does God communicate with you?"

"He leaves messages on my answering machine."

"What is your economic platform?"

"I don't intend to balance the budget — I plan to heal it."

"With your hands?"

"Of course with my hands. The only one who uses his feet is Jimmy Swaggart."

Strength For Today

Pastor Oucken, a Baptist preacher in Germany long ago who suffered much persecution, was once told by the Burgomaster of Hamburg that he would be driven from the city if he continued his preaching and religious work. The Burgomaster raised one finger. "So long as this finger can move," he said, "I will pursue you."

"I see your finger," replied Pastor Oucken, "but I also see an arm which you do not see, and so long as that arm is stretched out toward me, your finger is of no importance."

Behind the injustices of life is a working power which will right all things at last. Brave men have been able to stand torture and persecution because they could see what their opponents could not see; namely, the arm raised to protect them.

Attempt To Fire Strongman Could Erode Regional Support

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — If President Eric Arturo Delvalle's attempted firing of Panama's military strongman has no other immediate result, it will make it harder for other Latin American countries to support the Panamanian government.

That has long been a goal of opponents of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, so leading Panamanian dissidents as well as the U.S. State Department were quick to cheer Delvalle's seemingly quixotic move.

Delvalle's order had all the futility of tilting at windmills because he had no real way of backing it up. Panama's president does not control the army, the police, the legislature or even the nation's game wardens. Gen. Noriega does.

Thus, it came as little surprise that Noriega's top aides, including the commander of the national police and the army's chief of staff, quickly decided to side with the general against the president.

So, too, did the National Assembly, which is dominated by a coalition of Noriega followers. The assembly's 10-minute meeting early this morning, in which it fired Delvalle and Vice President Roderick Esquivel, had the rubber-stamp quality of a session of the Supreme Soviet.

Delvalle called the assembly's action unconstitutional and vowed to fight on.

But he has only one weapon, public opinion, and Panama's neighbors in Latin America have been slow to condemn Noriega despite widespread allegations of his involvement in drug trafficking and other forms of corruption — even murder — all of which Noriega has denied.

That's largely because Noriega has thrown up the United States as a straw man, accusing it of trying to oust him in an attempt to renege on a 1976 treaty turning over the Panama Canal to Panama at the turn of the century. Delvalle himself took that stance before changing his tune Thursday.

Many, if not most, Latin American governments are loathe to side with the United States in any dispute involving a neighbor, if only to pacify their own large numbers of left-leaning voters.

But the spectacle of a legally elected president firing his top general only to be fired himself by the general's henchmen is not likely to sit well, even in Latin America.

"This will isolate the government, no doubt," said Mario Luis Del Valle, vice president of the Panama Banking Association and a member of the National Civic Crusade, which began clamoring for Noriega's ouster last June.

The Civic Crusade, a loose coalition of business, professional, labor and political organizations, has been trying for months to convince the other Latin American countries that Panama's is an illegitimate government under Noriega's thumb.

Aurelio Barria, president of Panama's Chamber of Commerce and Industry and an opposition leader, has personally carried that message to the presidents of at least half a dozen Latin American nations.

But, until now, he has garnered little support. In an interview, Delvalle predicted that would soon change.

"I think it will be another blow against Noriega and also against Panama, which has had a terrible track record in recent years," he said of his attempt to dismiss the general. "I expect that the majority of the nations of this hemisphere will be very reluctant to have relations with Panama."

Domestic Disorders Had An Effect

On March 1, 1968, the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders produced a report attempting to explain the period of greatest turmoil in the United States since the Civil War — and recommending remedies. On Tuesday the 20-year-sequestration placed on the commission records will be lifted and the documents will become available to the public for the first time.

Yet it is dangerous to look at events of one era in the context of another. Thomas J. Bray, Detroit News editorial page editor, writes in the current issue of Policy Review: "Far from offering fresh or interesting ideas for the future, the Kerner report stitched together most of the fashionable bromides of the time into an expensive wish list of social programs." The commission, he goes on to say, thought "white racism was sufficient to explain the urban problems of the day. ... Only now is frank discussion of crime, poverty, family and welfare becoming possible."

To those of us who were involved in the 1960s and concerned above all with forestalling a firestorm, it is like reading about the wheel being rediscovered. In the summer of 1967 I was, as author of "Rivers of Blood, Years of Darkness," an analysis of Los Angeles' 1965 Watts riot, considered an authority on civil disturbances. On July 27, while meeting with officials in Detroit during the riot there, I watched President Lyndon B. Johnson tell a national television audience about "a time of violence and tragedy" as he announced the appointment of a commission to determine "What happened? Why did it happen? What can be done to prevent it from happening again and again? What we are really asking for is a profile of the riots." A little over a month later the commission's executive director, David Ginsburg, asked me to come to Washington and address myself to compiling the "Profiles of Disorder" for the report.

Johnson promised the commission full support and a free hand; but he believed, and expected we would find, a link to communist efforts aimed at discrediting the Great Society and subverting America's efforts in Vietnam. This belief was largely based on the activities of such organizations as the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, led by Stokely Carmichael and H. "Rap" Brown, and the Students for a Democratic Society, led by Tom Hayden (now a California assemblyman), which found common cause in their anti-war positions. The savage beatings administered to non-violent, "passive resistance" civil rights demonstrators in the South by segregationists and by the police, the unleashing of police dogs and use of cattle prods against marchers, plus incidents such as the bombing of a black church in Birmingham, Ala., where four girls were killed, were radicalizing the civil rights movement and, of greater importance, providing justification for black retaliation.

"Uncle Sam Wants You, Nigger!" Carmichael was telling black audiences, and providing the response: "Hell no! America is the black man's battleground. The money that should be spent to fight for a decent life for black people in America is being spent to destroy the lives of Vietnamese." Naturally, Carmichael became the darling of Hanoi and Havana, and a celebrity on American television, which provided a forum for Carmichael's and Brown's pontificating on black urban guerrilla warfare, against a providential background of violence and fire.

But as FBI director J. Edgar Hoover told the commission in secret testimony, Carmichael and Brown were merely exploiting, not instigating. Through its moles the FBI was intimately cognizant of all SNCC operations; later, our director of investigations, Milan C. Miskovsky, a former CIA agent, produced a pile of internal SNCC documents which, he said, had been "found in an Atlanta rest room." The papers showed a minute, bureaucratic organization bickering over petty cash, petty jealousies and members' love affairs. Far from having the ability to subvert a nation, Carmichael lacked even the talent to keep SNCC from unraveling.

Commissions are peculiar elements in the American government, since they have no official standing but are ad hoc bodies serving at the pleasure of the president or Congress. They are usually formed to investigate a past event, such as the Kennedy assassination, or a chronic condition requiring redress. But there has never been another like ours, which was expected to come up with solutions to complex social problems in the midst of ferment threatening civil order.

Johnson had been careful to compose a middle-of-the-road body. Roy Wilkins, executive director of the NAACP was the most liberal; Oklahoma Democratic Sen. Fred R. Harris represented the populist viewpoint. Charles B. Thornton, chairman of the board of Litton Industries, and Katherine G. Peden, Kentucky commissioner of commerce, were conservatives. To chair the 11-member body, Johnson picked Illinois Gov. Otto Kerner, an amiable man of little intellectual depth who was subsequently convicted in a financial scandal. The president's choice was a nod to Chicago Mayor Richard C. Daley, with an eye on the 1968 Democratic convention.

The commission's driving force was Ginsburg, a Washington lawyer and New Deal liberal with close White House ties. What Ginsburg hoped to produce was a document that would be incorporated into the 1968 Democratic platform and commit the nation to a program of equal rights and social welfare for black and white alike.

The commission was supposed to conclude its work in 12 months, producing by the first of the year an interim report, dealing with the prevention of civil disorders, and a final report, making recommendations on programming. The inquiry was conducted along several parallel lines. We held closed hearings — closed because Ginsburg felt witnesses would speak more freely — at which Cabinet secretaries, mayors, experts and officials testified. We were offered and commissioned dozens of studies from social scientists and urbanologists. We became a depository for documents, such as police and FBI reports. And we sent investigative teams to 26 cities — later focusing on half that number — that had experienced urban disorder, to determine what had happened and the climate in which it had happened.

As reports came in, I developed huge charts covering the walls of the "war room," where information was logged and cross-referenced — computers had not yet come into general vogue. We soon realized that there had been no "conspiracy": Conflict had occurred largely at random, with emphasis on local conditions; conflict had been exacerbated because of an inadequacy of understanding among officials and the police; the inaccessibility of traditional democratic channels to people in lower-income areas had built up frustrations, and we learned that much social science theory had no more relation to reality than the fulminations of Carmichael or Brown, or the belief we were ensnared in a communist plot.

We were looking at American institutions that were primarily structured of, by and for the middle class. Those institutions, with considerable help from government since the 1930s, had provided an avenue of upward mobility for the white disadvantaged. But for the black underclass, access to the middle class and middle-class institutions was made more difficult by prejudices and stereotypes — in one word, racism.

Time pressures were intense. The deadline for the draft of the interim report was Dec. 10, but we were still embroiled in our investigation of the cities. Hearings were continuing and even though many staff members were working 80-hour weeks, it proved impossible to make more than a preliminary reference to the key Detroit riot in the initial presentation to the commissioners.

eral departments to pitch in with funds. They had complied with considerable reluctance. Now, seeing no political advantage accruing to him, the president let it be known that the commission no longer had priority with him. Less than five months earlier he had said "This matter is far, far too important for politics ... you will have all the support and cooperation you need." But suddenly, funds dried up. The Saturday before Christmas the staff was called together and most people were told their services would no longer be needed. What was intended to be an interim report would be transformed into one final report.

State Loses Exemption For Youth Bus Drivers

By The Associated Press
North Carolina education officials say a U.S. Labor Department order banning the use of 17-year-old school bus drivers after April 1 presents them with "a major league challenge."

The Labor Department Thursday terminated the exemption that has allowed 17-year-olds to drive school buses in North Carolina and South Carolina.

Howard Haworth, chairman of the N.C. State Board of Education, said about 4,000 of the state's 13,000 school bus drivers were 17 years old.

Haworth said the deadline would "present us with a very difficult situation for school systems to comply by April. But I have seen local systems take emergency situations and come up with rather miraculous solutions quickly."

"I'm sure they'll react aggressively and do what has to be done."

Haworth said. "If there is no additional time to allow a smooth and stable transition, every effort will have to be made to comply on schedule."

"If this in fact comes to pass, it would cause North Carolina some very big problems, and we hope the Department of Labor will send us some bus drivers to go with their order," said Jim Sughrue, a spokesman for N.C. Gov. Jim Martin.

About 200 of the 439 bus drivers in Cumberland County are 17 years old, said Ted Chappell, director of transportation. He said the school system has been racing since August to attract and train adult drivers, but there was no way to replace 200 drivers by April.

"This is a serious problem," Chappell said. "We're up against a tremendous mountain here."

The system would have to park some buses, and run remaining buses with double or triple loads, he said.

State officials said Labor Department officials, as recently as two weeks ago, had indicated the state probably could get another exemption next year.

"There was no indication at that time that were problems this year," said James O. Barber, controller for the State Board of Education in North Carolina.

Barber said a local field supervisor with the Labor Department appeared before the State Board of Education at its February meeting "and did not suggest in any way that his initial investigation would lead to that type of report."

The Labor Department said it found widespread non-compliance with the terms of the exemption of child labor laws.

"Department of Labor investigations found that the states did not comply with criteria imposed by the department when it conditionally approved the employment of 17-year-old drivers in August 1987," the statement said.

"The department conducted investigations of compliance with these criteria in several school districts and counties in both North Carolina and South Carolina. These investigations revealed widespread non-compliance, particularly employment of 17-year-olds with moving violations on their driving records as student school bus drivers," the statement said.

"Based on our review of the situation, we might dispute that conclusion," Barber said. "Our investigation has not suggested that."

"To replace those drivers is a pretty significant effort," Barber said.

"I'm not exactly sure what that would involve right now."

Sughrue said the governor's office also were "surprised by what we've heard and dismayed by what we've heard. We had an agreement and we don't know what happened to it."

The Labor Department began investigating compliance with the terms of the exemption in January, after a 4-year-old West Columbia, S.C., boy was run over and killed by a 17-year-old driver who had a previous speeding ticket.

Since 1967, North Carolina has had a waiver exempting the state from federal child labor laws that prohibit 16- and 17-year-olds from driving school buses.

Last August, Secretary of Labor William Brock told Martin that the exemption had been granted the last time and the state must replace its 4,300 student drivers with adults by Jan. 1.

But another exemption was granted Dec. 9, 1987, to the end of 1988 subject to several conditions, including not using 17-year-olds who had received a ticket for a moving violation or who were involved in an accident for which that driver was responsible during the 1986-1987 school year.

The North Carolina General Assembly passed a law in 1987 banning 16-year-old bus drivers, and that law went into effect on Jan. 1. State officials wanted to continue using 17-year-old drivers.

Haworth, then-chairman of the board's business committee, said in November the state would have to increase all drivers' wages by about $2 an hour, to about $6.50, in order to recruit enough adults. He said the raises would cost between $25 million and $27 million a year.

Bragg Sees First Basic In 15 Years

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Two barbers stood ankle-deep in hair Thursday and methodically sheared away the civilian locks of the first new soldiers to go through basic training on Fort Bragg in 15 years.

It took about two minutes for a barber to plow several rows down the middle of a scalp, pare away patches of hair around the ears, make a few passes with the razor up the neck, dust hair off the head with a cloth and shout, "Next!"

The men in the barber chairs were among about 800 new soldiers arriving at Fort Bragg this week from around the United States to receive eight weeks of initial training for the active Army, Army Reserve and National Guard.

The men yelling commands were members of the 80th Training Division, an Army Reserve unit from Richmond, Va., which is conducting Old Dominion Forward, an eight-week basic training cycle, on Fort Bragg through April 28.

About 100 Army Reserve drill sergeants will rotate every two weeks from home stations in Virginia for the mobilization exercise and about 80 additional reservists are serving 90-day tours of active duty as support troops.

Before training gets started, the new soldiers are in for about three days of processing at the reception station.

Besides getting his hair cut, a new soldier will receive uniform items, have eyesight and blood type triple-checked and, as one captain put it, "get pushed, pulled and shoved until he thinks the world's going to end for him."

Army basic training in peacetime normally is conducted at Fort Jackson, S.C., Fort Dix, N.J., Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and Fort Benning, Ga., officials say.

Fort Bragg, home of paratrooper units such as the Green Berets and 82nd Airborne Division, is not normally a basic training post in peacetime, but Old Dominion Forward is a dry run for a wartime mobilization on the post.

"If a national mobilization were ordered, the 80th Division would come to Fort Bragg to do this," said Capt. Donald M. Sensing, a Fort Bragg spokesman.

The 80th Training Division is comprised of 5,000 reservists from Baltimore, Md., and 22 Virginia communities, according to officials.

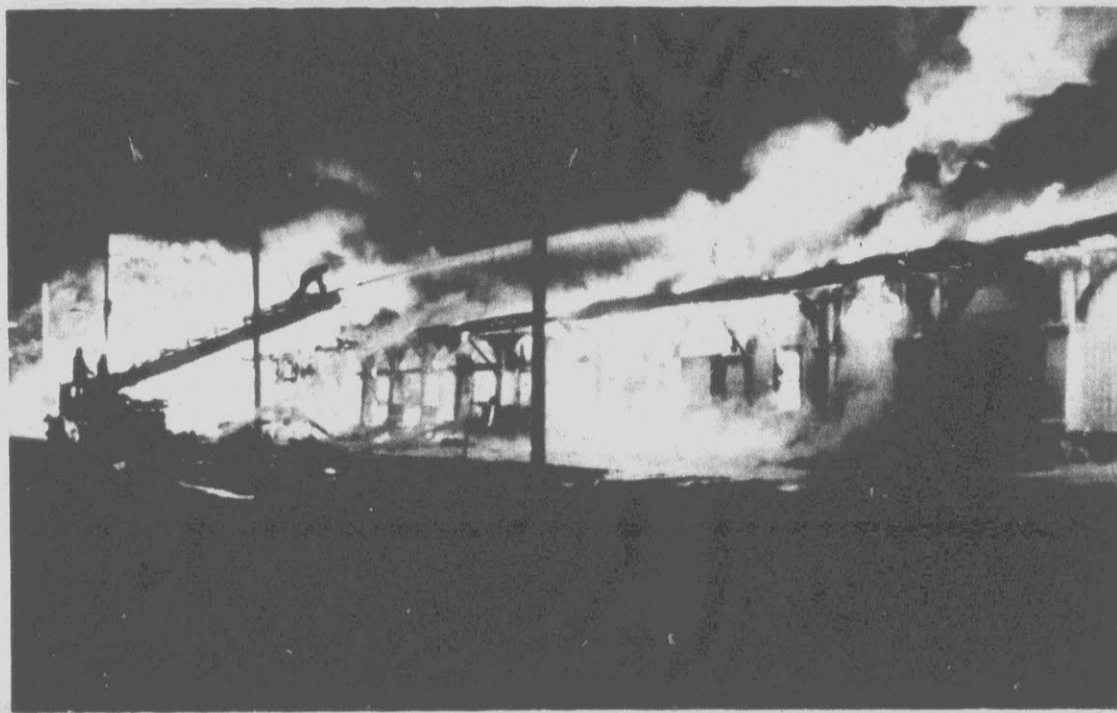

The division's mission in wartime would be to set up and operate a Mobilization Army Training Center to train new soldiers, according to officials.

Old Dominion Forward is the culmination of specialized training during the past year to certify drill sergeants, officials said. Similar exercises are planned for 1990 and 1992.

Martin Says State Unwilling To Move On Waste Disposal

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin says North Carolina is in desperate need of solid and hazardous waste disposal facilities, but massive local opposition to the facilities is thwarting his administration's efforts.

"We're opposed at every turn," Martin said Thursday. "Whether it's landfills or incinerators or anything else, nobody wants any kind of facility near them and therefore we're stymied. We've got to get the determination in this state to move forward."

Martin said the waste facilities are the most glaring shortcoming of North Carolina's "infrastructure" — the framework on which its economy is built.

As do other states, North Carolina needs to upgrade its highways, bridges, water and sewer systems, airports and other public works, the governor said. But while the public generally supports such efforts, its unwillingness to face the waste disposal issue threatens the state's economic well-being, he said.

"We don't do anything," Martin said. "We send it to somebody else. We don't have facilities for the handling of hazardous wastes. ... I would say that our grade there is an 'F' because ... we haven't done our homework."

Martin spoke at a news conference on a report issued Wednesday by the National Council on Public Works Improvement, which called for a 100 percent increase in spending for infrastructure projects at the federal, state and local levels. The nation currently spends roughly $45 billion annually on such projects.

The report, entitled "Fragile Foundations," warns that the nation's infrastructure is crumbling.

The report included a "report card" on eight categories of public works. The highest grade the nation received was "B" for its water resources, while its aviation facilities and water systems were rated "B minus."

Highways got a "C plus," wastewater facilities a "C," solid waste disposal and mass transit "C minuses," and hazardous waste disposal a "D."

While spending on public works has risen over the past 28 years, its share of the gross national product has slumped from 3.6 percent in 1960 to 2.6 percent in 1985, the report says.

The relative share of public works spending at all levels of government fell from nearly 20 percent in 1950 to under 7 percent in 1984, while outlays for welfare and education soared from 10 percent to 40 percent of all government spending.

The report also calls for quicker spending of federal highway, transit, airport and waterway trust funds; removal of limits on availability of tax-exempt financing for state and local self-help efforts; better land-use planning, waste reduction and recycling; and more support for research and development.

Martin said the report would be helpful to the North Carolina Institute of Government, which is developing a package of recommendations on improving the state's infrastructure.

The Legislature adopted a $220 million highway financing package in 1986 and an $830 million school construction program in 1987, along with a $40 million revolving loan fund for water and sewer projects. Critics have called the programs inadequate.

Stolen Textbooks, Computers Found

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Thousands of stolen textbooks, computers and other goods confiscated from a Statesville storage center are the spoils of an alleged multistate theft ring that preys on colleges and bookstores, authorities say.

Police say the items were stolen through a sophisticated operation that may have hit at least 10 states — including North Carolina and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas.

In at least one case, books were stolen by computer, said Charlotte police Cmdr. Bruce Treadaway, head of Charlotte's Investigative Division. Book shipments were rerouted and resold by computer, he said.

"This is most sophisticated," he said.

Law enforcement officers from Statesville, Charlotte and Kennesaw, Ga., finished on Thursday emptying two 10-by-20-foot storage units at Morningstar Mini Storage that Statesville officers discovered Wednesday through a tip from Charlotte and Georgia officers.

Among the items are thousands of keys — some of them apparently made to fit buildings at Winthrop College.

Police discovered the Statesville cache, worth nearly $1 million, because Howard Pratt got into a fight with a Kennesaw KOA camp ground manager over a $40 lot fee, police said.

At the time of Pratt's arrest, he was carrying $78,000 in cash, Treadaway said.

Kennesaw police arrested Pratt on disorderly conduct charges Feb. 10 after he fought with the campground manager over the lot fee for his $100,000 recreational vehicle.

Police searching Pratt's van and recreational vehicle found burglary tools, key-making devices, illegal equipment used to monitor telephone calls, blank driver's licenses and car titles and more than 30 boxes of books, most of them new, police said.

State Legislative Candidate Hasn't Voted Since 1978, Paper Reports

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

Perhaps the biggest question in the race for the N.C. House District 36 seat is whether Republican candidate Larry Diggs will vote in it.

According to county records, Diggs hasn't voted in Mecklenburg County since 1978, and never as a local Republican, The Charlotte Observer reported today.

His failure to vote led the elections board to purge his name from voting rolls in April 1985. When Diggs re-registered in July 1985, the former Democrat registered as a Republican.

He hasn't voted since then, in any of the five elections for which he's been eligible.

"I don't know that it's of great importance," said Diggs, a Mint Hill businessman. "I think the things to talk about are the issues and how I stand on them and how Jim Black stands on them."

Diggs will meet Black, a Democrat, in November in the race for the District 36 seat being vacated by Rep. Ray Warren, R-Mecklenburg. There is no primary in the district.

Diggs said he has voted once in the past 10 years, and as a Republican. He says he cast a vote for Ronald Reagan in 1980 when he and his family left Mecklenburg to live for about two years in the New Orleans area.

GOP officials downplayed Diggs's voting record and played up his business and community interests. He is vice president of the Matthews Chamber of Commerce and is part-owner of a Matthews printing firm.

"Obviously, we think everybody ought to be voting," said GOP Chairman Grant Whitney. "But he's certainly not the only person who hasn't voted lately."

Elsewhere in state politics, leaders of the four

Republican presidential contenders' North Carolina campaigns huddled privately with state GOP Chairman Jack Hawke to discuss clashes at precinct meetings — most of them involving supporters of Pat Robertson.

Sue Wyatt, Robertson's state campaign director, complained Wednesday that Hawke had not intervened to stop "dirty tricks" against Robertson backers. Hawke called the accusation "ludicrous."

The representatives of the Republican presidential contenders met for several hours with Hawke at the state GOP headquarters in Raleigh, said party spokesman Robert Jones.

Robertson supporters, many of whom are political newcomers, have clashed repeatedly with old-line Republicans in recent weeks at precinct meetings — the first step in selection of delegates to the national Republican convention.

Ms. Wyatt's complaints against Hawke were in keeping with Robertson's contention that the GOP establishment nationwide — especially the Bush campaign — was engaged in dirty tricks against the former religious broadcaster.

Among those attending the private meeting were Jon Rawlson, deputy national political director for Robertson's campaign; Jerry Blackwelder, executive director of Sen. Robert Dole's state campaign; Rob Schuler, state political director for Bush; and Carter Wrenn, director of the National Congressional Club and a strategist for Rep. Jack Kemp.

Schuler said in a telephone interview the atmosphere was cordial and downplayed the controversy.

"Any time you have a process as complicated as this you're going to have different interpretations of the rules," he said. "Whenever the Republican Party has had problems in the past in North Carolina we have been able to shake hands afterwards and go forward."

Meanwhile, Republican Gov. Jim Martin charged Thursday that Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan and other Democratic leaders were criticizing him for rejecting industrial recruitment tactics they knew would fail.

"Maybe his party leadership wants me to do that so that I'll mess up North Carolina's industrial development program," Martin said at a Raleigh news conference. "Maybe that's what they really want. Maybe ... if we look bad they'll feel better about it."

Jordan, who is running to unseat Martin in this year's election, denied the accusation.

"I'm not interested in whether Governor Martin does well or not," he said. "I'm interested in whether or not North Carolina does well."

Martin and Jordan have sniped at each other for months over who has the better strategy for building the state's economy.

Democrats have said Martin did too little to prevent RJR Nabisco from moving its corporate headquarters from Winston-Salem to Atlanta last year. Ken Eudy, executive director of the state Democratic Party, said former Govs. Jim Hunt and Terry Sanford would have "prostrated themselves in front of the moving van" to prevent the move.

Martin said his low-key response was partly responsible for the company's decisions to open a food processing plant in Winston-Salem, as well as for last week's announcement that RJR Nabisco would construct a $600 million cookie and cracker plant in Wake County.

IN THE STATE

Bill Advances

WASHINGTON (AP) — A wilderness bill for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park has finally cleared a long-standing hurdle, winning the support of a Senate committee despite objections from Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

The Energy and Natural Resources Committee Thursday voted 11-7 to approve the bill sponsored by Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C.; Sen. Jim Sasser, D-Tenn.; and Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn.

Helms tried to have the bill reported out of the committee with no recommendation, but instead the committee reported the bill favorably, said Ron Tipton of the Wilderness Society in Washington. The bill would designate about 465,000 acres of the 520,000-acre park, which straddles the Tennessee-North Carolina border — as wilderness.

It also would authorize the payment of $11.1 million to Swain County, Sanford said. In the 1940s, the federal government agreed to compensate Swain County for a road flooded by the creation of Fontana Lake. The money represents the current value of the road.

Phillips Trial

WILMINGTON (AP) — Sylvester and Ann Phillips have been sentenced to life in prison after being convicted of torturing to death an 11-year-old foster child.

A New Hanover County Superior Court jury of six men and six women Thursday rejected the prosecution's appeal for the death penalty after two hours and 45 minutes of deliberations over two days.

Phillips, 57, and his wife, 68, were convicted of first-degree murder by means of torture in the June 15, 1987, death of Tameka Lehmann, their foster child of six months.

The Bladen County couple also was convicted of child abuse involving an adopted son, John Phillips, now 14. Superior Court Judge Forrest Ferrell gave the Phillipses each a maximum 10-year sentence for child abuse to be served consecutively with the life term.

Nurse Sentenced

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A former nurse at North Carolina Baptist Hospital has been sentenced to life in prison after being convicted of killing a terminally ill patient in the hospital's intensive care unit.

Anthony Shook, 36, of Winston-Salem was found guilty Thursday in the death of Peggy Lou Epley, a Lexington woman hospitalized in a "chronic vegetative state," who died Oct. 9, 1986.

Keith Bulla of the State Bureau of Investigation said investigators will look into other suspicious deaths at Baptist Hospital during the 10 months Shook worked as an intensive-care nurse.

The jury of eight women and four men deliberated for four hours after hearing seven days of testimony in Forsyth Superior Court. Superior Court Judge Judson DeRamus Jr. had given jurors only two options to consider — guilty of first-degree murder and a mandatory life sentence, or not guilty.

Campus Move

DURHAM (AP) — A longtime Duke University custodian has changed addresses after campus security officers threatened him with trespassing charges if he continued to live in his pickup truck on a campus parking lot.

Wayne Johnson, 40, had his truck — which is equipped with a camper top — towed to his brother's house north of Durham Wednesday.

"I just don't want to have (an apartment)," he told the Duke Chronicle before his truck was moved. "Everybody's got their own way ... If they stopped me, I'd park my truck in another street. I ain't got nowhere else to go."

Until Wednesday, Johnson said he had had a cordial relationship with campus officers during the last three years. He said many of the officers who passed the truck on their rounds would stop to speak to him. "They said I can look out for the place for them. One night I caught a man breaking into cars," he said.

Suspended

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A federal judge reduced and then suspended a prison sentence for Ralph N. Colvard, who was convicted last year of trying to buy part of a plane load of cocaine seized in Ashe County.

The decision Wednesday came just minutes before Colvard was to begin serving a 15-year prison term.

Based on affidavits from a former sheriff's deputy whose testimony helped convict Colvard, U.S. District Court Judge Woodrow Jones granted a motion from Colvard's attorney, John P. Siskind, to give Colvard a new trial, according to the clerk of court.

But after negotiations between Siskind and Max Cogburn, the U.S. district attorney, Jones instead reduced Colvard's sentence to five years, which was suspended, and placed Colvard on probation for three years.

Seizure

RALEIGH (AP) — A Raleigh woman who has been accused with her husband of bilking Northern Telecom Inc. out of $1.9 million has been left unemployed, with only a pickup truck, a wedding ring and a retirement account to her name, her lawyer says.

Northern Telecom alleged in a lawsuit that Mary C. Cole and her husband, Marion P. Cole, both former employees, had set up a shell company that sold equipment to Northern Telecom at inflated prices from late 1985 to 1987.

Northern Telecom also obtained court orders seizing the couple's property, including a 1986 Ferrari, 1987 Chevrolet Corvette, 1986 Thunderbird, jewelry, a house in Raleigh and a Tennessee bank account containing about $800,000.

Attorney George Ragsdale told U.S. District Judge Franklin Dupree that his client now has no money left for legal fees to defend herself in the civil suit. He asked that the court orders be dissolved. Dupree did not say when he would rule.

RJR Tax Break May Cost $26 Million

RALEIGH (AP) — A tax break that Gov. Jim Martin and legislative leaders have agreed to consider for RJR Nabisco Inc. could cost the state an estimated $26 million a year in revenues if applied to all corporations, a legislative analyst says.

The tax break, which would involve a change in the method of determining taxable income for corporations operating in more than one state, was discussed briefly Thursday at the Tax Fairness Study Commission meeting, where it was endorsed by the N.C. Association of Certified Public Accountants.

Responding to a question from legislators, David Crotts, a tax analyst for the General Assembly, said current estimates are that the state would lose $26 million a year if it changes the formula. Previous estimates had indicated a loss of up to $32 million, he said.

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, who is challenging Martin's re-election, charged Wednesday that the Martin administration had been ready to give the tax break only to RJR Nabisco, which last week announced plans for a $600 million baking plant near Garner. Jordan said that legislative leaders had refused to go along and said any tax change should apply to all manufacturers.

Martin has denied the charge. Martin and Jordan disclosed that RJR Nabisco officials had suggested the tax change during talks about locating the plant in North Carolina.

RJR Nabisco spokesman Betsy J. Annese declined to say Thursday if the corporation had sought the tax break from state leaders or would seek it in the future.

Ms. Annese told the News and Observer of Raleigh that company officials had discussed education, training for employees, roads, and utilities with administration officials. She said ideas on how to improve "the already excellent business climate" were discussed with legislative leaders.

"Beyond that we aren't not going to comment any further," Ms. Annese said. "We are not going to comment on anything else that may or may not have been discussed."

Meanwhile, Martin continued to defend his administration's role in persuading RJR Nabisco to build the plant in Garner. At his weekly news conference, he described the talks with company officials and said a strategy of working with them "in a positive way" had paid off.

Taxable income for corporations operating in more than one state is now determined under a formula based on three factors: the percentage of payroll that goes to workers in the state; the amount of property in North Carolina in proportion to holdings nationwide; and sales in North Carolina in proportion to sales nationwide.

The current formula weighs all three factors equally. Under the change sought by RJR Nabisco, the procedure would be changed to what is known as a "double weighted" formula that gives the sales factor twice as much weight as the payroll and property factors.

Crotts said in an interview that some corporations would benefit from the change, while others would see their tax bills rise.

Expert Says AIDS Tests Not Accurate

RALEIGH (AP) — An expert on AIDS says he opposes massive, nationwide testing for the disease because current tests are not accurate enough to use on low-risk groups.

"There is bad testing going on across the country," Dr. Jared Schwartz, a member of the North Carolina Medical Society AIDS task force, told a legislative study committee Thursday. "There are no standards for interpretations. I'm not against widespread testing. The problem is that the current tests are not adequate to screen large numbers of low-risk people. Only high-risk people should be tested under the present system."

Schwartz told the AIDS Study Committee that fear of getting the disease is sometimes overshadowed by the fear that others will know you have it.

"I'm going to be blunt with you. I've asked many physicians, 'What's your greatest fear — getting AIDS or dying with the knowledge of society that you have AIDS?' The greatest fear is the fear that if I get AIDS from a needle stick or anything else in the workplace ... the fear of being destroyed as a human being ... my family, my children thinking that I must have been a homosexual or drug user ..."

Schwartz was one of several speakers to address the committee, co-chaired by Sen. Helen Rhyne Marvin, D-Gaston; and Rep. Sidney Locks, D-Robeson. The committee also heard from speakers concerning AIDS education in the state's prisons, schools and insurance industry.

Dr. Ronald Levine, state health director, also reviewed new AIDS-related provisions adopted as communicable disease rules earlier this month.

The meeting began with an emotional 30-minute videotape previously aired by WBTV in Charlotte, showing how a North Carolina man, named Dennis, died from Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. AIDS attacks the body's immune system, leaving it defenseless against a wide variety of diseases.

Schwartz pointed out that no physicians were shown in the videotape entitled, "My Name is Dennis."

"Physicians are afraid, too," Schwartz said. "They are not only afraid of taking care of AIDS patients, they fear for their reputations."

There is a fear if you are identified as a physician in North Carolina who treats AIDS patients, your business will "dwindle away," Schwartz said. State health director Dr. Ronald Levine urged the committee to reject a proposal that would require positive AIDS antibody tests to be reported to state public health officials.

Levine said replacing anonymous AIDS testing currently done at county health departments with confidential testing in which patients' names are known only to their doctor might produce better record-keeping.

Ten Soldiers Die As Helicopter Crashes In Texas Cow Pasture

By JEFF AWALT
Associated Press Writer
CHICO, Texas (AP) — An Army helicopter nosedived into a cow pasture and skidded about 75 feet before it broke apart in a sheet of fire, killing 10 men and seriously wounding eight others, authorities and witnesses said.

Two soldiers leaped about 35 feet to the ground from the burning twin-rotor CH-47D Chinook before it crashed about 50 miles from Fort Worth on Thursday, said state Department of Public Safety Sgt. Robert Rankin. One of the soldiers died.

The other soldier said that a fire had broken out at the back of the helicopter based at Fort Sill, Okla., and that those aboard had tried to move to the front to get away from the flames, Rankin said.

Residents raced to the scene, pulling casualties away from the raging grass fire sparked by the crash. "Some of them were just sitting there screaming," said 17-year-old

Dale Christopher, a Chico High School student who was among the first on the scene. "And they kept asking us 'Help us. Help us.' And then we'd say 'Help is on the way.' That's all we could do for them."

A three-person team of investigators from the Army Safety Center at Fort Rucker, Ala., was investigating the crash today.

The Chinook CH-47D has a history of problems and the Army grounded its entire fleet of 63 of the big transport helicopters for 1½ months in 1985 after an accident in Honduras injured eight soldiers.

Witnesses said the helicopter was tilted forward at a 45-degree angle, puffing smoke and descending rapidly when it crashed about 3:29 p.m., slicing through a power line.

"All of a sudden a little thin streak of smoke came out of it and there was a small explosion on the right side underneath it," said Joe Haworth, who was working at a nearby plant. "Then it put out a little more smoke and it flew straight for a ways, then parts went to coming out of it."

The craft skidded about 75 feet before breaking apart in a sheet of fire, said Wendell Berry Sr., 53, who watched the accident from his home a half-mile away.

Berry cut the seat belt away from a crewman strapped to the remains of the cockpit.

"There was only one guy still in the helicopter who was either the pilot or the co-pilot, and he was conscious," Berry said. "He was so conscious that when I cut his seatbelt he said, 'That feels better — thanks.'"

Jack Souther, 54, used a small fire extinguisher from his pickup truck to douse burning bodies. "The only thing I could do was put the fires out on the bodies. I went from body to body trying to put them out," he said.

The copter, carrying 13 passengers and five crew members, was returning to Fort Sill from Fort Hood in central Texas, Fort Sill spokesman Rick Brink said. He said the passengers probably were from Fort Hood, but officials could identify only two early today.

The CH-47D, which has a troop capacity of 44, is a modernized version of earlier models of the Chinook, which was used in Vietnam.

Republicans Succeed In Blocking Spending Limits On Senate Races

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans, victorious after a 53-hour round-the-clock filibuster, once again have stymied efforts by Democrats to pass a bill that would limit spending on Senate campaigns.

The coup de grace was slated to be administered today when the Senate holds a scheduled cloture vote in a last-ditch Democratic attempt to halt further debate and bring the legislation to a vote.

Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., and his troops have enough votes to pass the bill but are, for the eighth time since last June, expected to fall short of the 60 votes needed to invoke cloture and halt debate.

Another cloture-vote loss would all but doom the chances of the campaign finance legislation emerging from the 100th Congress.

This week's struggle centered on a plan advanced by 52 senators, including Republicans Robert Stafford of Vermont and John Chafee of Rhode Island, to attack the escalating cost of campaigns by imposing spending limits.

Limits for a Senate general election race would range from $950,000 to $5.5 million, depending on a state's population. In 1986, the average campaign cost $3 million — up fivefold from 1976 — with some big state races topping $10 million per candidate.

Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., one of the bill's authors, said that to build a $3 million war chest, a senator must raise $10,000 every week from the time he or she arrives in Washington until the end of the six-year term.

A candidate observing the limit would be eligible for subsidized mailings, rock-bottom radio and TV ad rates and money from the Treasury if the opponent exceeded the limit or the candidate was the target of heavy spending by independent groups.

The legislation also takes aim at the increasing role of special-interest political action committees, which in 1986 provided over half the campaign money raised by more than 200 House and Senate candidates, most of them incumbents. Under the plan, PACs could supply no more than 20 percent of the candidate's spending limit.

Except for Stafford and Chafee, Republicans are having no part of the proposal, which they say would favor Democrats and doom them to continued minority status in heavily Democratic states, particularly in the South.

Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., calls it "the incumbent protection act" because, he said, it would hamper challengers with little name recognition or financial resources.

"Everyone in politics knows that with these limits, what we absolutely say to most challengers is, 'you've had it,'" Rudman said.

Democrats rejected this argument, saying that the real question was the public perception of senators scurrying for contributions to fuel increasingly expensive campaigns.

"We have to spend our time running around the country looking for a handout," Byrd said. "How can we blame anyone from perceiving us as corrupt? The system is corrupt and we're trying to reform it."

"The Senate should not be owned by an aristocracy of money," he said. "Campaign reform gives the little guy an equal share. ... This business of the golden handshake — nobody likes it. Senators don't want to spend all their time going from fund-raiser to fund-raiser with their hand out begging for money."

Republicans were forced into the filibuster at 2 p.m. Tuesday when Byrd placed the legislation before the Senate. Within 12 hours, things turned bitter with the parliamentary arrest of Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore.

Acting on the orders of Democrats, Capitol police pushed into his office and carried him feet-first into the chamber, giving Byrd the quorum — at least 51 present members — he needed to keep the filibuster going.

Republicans talked of "banana republic" tactics. Byrd called them "crybabies" and castigated them for deserting the chamber en masse in an effort to abort the talkathon.

"This was a calculated effort to obstruct the Senate from doing its work," Byrd said. "I was forced to do it (order arrests) to get a majority of the Senate present so the Senate could do its business."

Byrd forced the filibuster in an effort to get the GOP to negotiate. Republicans said they were willing to talk about curbing PAC money, but they steadfastly drew the line at spending limits.

At the start of the filibuster, Byrd said he was ready to keep the Senate in continuous session through the end of next week.

But by midnight Wednesday, he and GOP leaders had agreed to end the siege Thursday evening, let everyone get a night's sleep and return for today's cloture vote.

Army Private Ruled AWOL But Judge Drops Desertion Charge

FORT DIX, N.J. (AP) — A U.S. soldier was acquitted of desertion and given a bad conduct discharge for fleeing his West German base to live in the Soviet Union, shocking prosecutors who had expected him to do prison time.

Courtroom spectators, mostly military personnel, gasped when presiding judge Col. Earl Pauley ordered Pfc. Wade E. Roberts, 22, of Riverside, Calif., released from military custody Thursday.

"I feel great!" Roberts said after he was convicted of a lesser charge of being absent without leave and given a bad conduct discharge.

Roberts, described by a superior as "the most reprehensible, casual soldier" in his command but as "confused" by his attorneys, said he will live in West Germany with his wife, Petra Neumann, and their 3-month-old son.

The military pressed hard for a conviction of desertion during the 1½-day court martial at Fort Dix. That offense carries a maximum penalty of a dishonorable discharge and three years' imprisonment.

"I'm shocked," said Capt. Daniel Shaver, chief military attorney. He said the Army expected Roberts to be sentenced to the maximum AWOL penalty of a dishonorable discharge and one year's imprisonment.

When the sentence was read, Roberts and his attorneys broke into wide grins, and the soldier and his wife embraced and kissed. Shaver's jaw dropped, and he stared at the judge.

To prove desertion, the Army had to demonstrate that when Roberts left his base at Giessen, West Germany, last February, he never intended to return to the Army.

The prosecution produced a half-dozen witnesses in an effort to show Roberts didn't like the Army, talked about leaving, didn't get along with his superiors and had disciplinary problems.

But Roberts' attorneys argued their client fled his unit because was harassed by his superiors for, among other things, dating Ms. Neumann because she was German.

When he took the stand Thursday, Roberts told how one of his sergeants told him to stay away from German women. Roberts said he "panicked" because he didn't want to leave Ms. Neumann, and scaled a fence at the base.

After getting Soviet approval, Roberts and his wife flew to Frankfurt, West Germany, on Nov. 4 and was told by a U.S. embassy official to turn himself over to the military the next day. Before he could, however, he was arrested by the Army.

Prices Up Slightly

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices rose 0.3 percent in January as the year began with a moderate dose of inflation, the government reported today. Higher grocery prices partially offset declines in energy costs.

The increase in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index was equivalent to an annual rate of inflation of 4.2 percent, compared to the 4.4 percent rise for all of 1987.

Last month's increase was larger than the 0.2 percent rise in December and matched November's 0.3 percent rise. December's increase was revised from the previously reported 0.1 percent.

Pacing the January increase were widespread gains across a range of goods and services. Energy prices, however, supplied a major dampening on the overall rate by plunging 0.7 percent after a 0.8 percent drop in the preceding month.

Gasoline prices fell 1.6 percent; heating oil costs were down 0.8 percent. The price of natural gas and electricity, combined, fell 0.3 percent.

Food prices rose 0.3 percent, down from December's 0.6 percent gain. Pacing last month's rise were jumps in prices for poultry, eggs and bakery products. Meat, fruit and vegetable prices declined.

Subtracting the usually volatile food and energy categories, consumer prices for all other goods and services rose a sharp 0.5 percent in January after a 0.2 percent increase in December.

January's report underscored forecasts by many analysts that any significant change in the inflation rate was unlikely this year.

Israel Tells Shultz To Move Slowly On Peace Efforts

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli soldiers killed two Palestinians and wounded five today during protests on the Moslem Sabbath. Israeli officials cautioned U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz to move slowly on proposals for Arab self-rule in the occupied territories.

One Palestinian was killed in the refugee camp of Jabaliya in the occupied Gaza Strip and a second was shot dead in Hebron in the occupied West Bank south of Jerusalem, an army official said. Four other Arabs were wounded in Hebron, he said.

An Associated Press reporter saw a fifth wounded Palestinian in Nablus' Al Ittihad Hospital. The deaths bring to 67 the number of Arabs confirmed killed since rioting broke out in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip 11 weeks ago.

The army official said the death and wounding in Hebron occurred when "soldiers fired at the legs of hundreds of Arabs coming out of the mosque after the crowd did not disperse when tear gas and rubber bullets were used."

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said he had no details on the Jabaliya fatality. But the Arab-owned Palestine Press Service said soldiers shot and killed a 12-year-old boy there and wounded as many as 20 others.

Two Palestinians were arrested outside Jerusalem's sacred Dome of the Rock and al Aqsa mosques carrying sharp spiked weapons and nationalist pamphlets, city police said.

Shultz met separately with Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and his political rival, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres. Shultz arrived Thursday for a five-day visit to present U.S. proposals for ending the violence.

Informed sources said Shamir urged Shultz to move slowly on Palestinian self-rule in the occupied territories. He said there should be "a time of testing" for up to three years before negotiations are held on a final settlement, said the sources.

They spoke on condition of anonymity.

Shultz's proposal is understood to be a two-step plan that would loosen Israeli controls over the 1.5 million Palestinians in the occupied territories immediately and lead to negotiations on a final settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict by December.

It is widely known that Shamir rejects key elements of the American plan, while Peres supports it in principle.

Instead, Shamir has proposed several years of limited Palestinian self-rule based on the 1978 Camp David agreements, a plan rejected by Egypt and Jordan.

In Jerusalem, about 700 helmeted riot police circled the area around the mosques carrying batons and tear gas canisters. After prayers about 100 worshippers marched on the Temple Mount, known in Arabic as Haram es Sharif (Sacred Sanctuary).

Some threw stones while others carried an outlawed Palestinian flag, burned an Israeli flag and sang nationalistic songs before dispersing peacefully, Israel radio said.

In Nablus, the West Bank's largest city, prayers were read in the central Nasser Mosque by a prayer leader whose face was covered with a white cloth mask with holes cut for the eyes and mouth.

"Thank God we are still alive to fight our enemy Israel," the prayer leader said. "This is the time that we have to use to launch a holy way."

In occupied Gaza City, several dozen youths demonstrated after noon prayers at the main Al Omari Mosque, some throwing stones. They were chased into nearby narrow alleys by soldiers who threw tear-gas canisters and fired several rounds of rubber bullets.

The police force in Jerusalem was doubled to 3,000 during the Shultz visit, and extra police also were stationed in northern Israel for the weekend after a firebomb was thrown at an Israeli civilian bus south of the port city of Haifa.

U.S. Wants Flexibility In Stopping Afghan Aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has made "no secret deals" on Afghanistan and will arm guerrillas there "until that support is no longer needed" to gain permanent withdrawal of Soviet troops, a senior official told Congress.

"We will not abandon the Afghan resistance," Robert Peck, deputy assistant secretary of state, said Thursday in testimony before the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs.

Peck also welcomed a statement by resistance leaders that they would agree to an interim government consisting of some Afghans currently in Kabul, possibly non-Communist members of the Kremlin's client government.

Peck denied charges by some resistance leaders and conservative members of Congress that the administration has agreed to a deal that would cut off aid at the beginning of a Soviet withdrawal, possibly allowing the Red Army or the Afghan regime to slaughter the insurgents.

A proposed U.N. agreement to end the Afghan war contains provisions the administration understands would bar the Kremlin from arming its clients in Kabul or waging offensive operations against the guerrillas, Peck said.

Continued military aid or offensive operations by the Soviets in Afghanistan would violate provisions of the U.N.-sponsored accord guaranteeing "non-interference and non-intervention," he said.

Soviet officials have said they expect U.S. aid to end 60 days after an agreement is signed, but have not said when they would stop aiding Kabul.

"It is a matter on which we are not completely satisfied, and we intend to pressure them," Peck said.

But the administration would oppose any congressional resolution calling for the president to continue military aid to the guerrillas until the departure of the last of the estimated 120,000 Soviet soldiers from Afghanistan, Peck said. Rep. David Dreier, R-Calif., and Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, are preparing such resolutions, congressional aides said.

"The president wishes not to have his hands tied," Peck said. "We will continue our assistance to the Afghan resistance until that support is no longer needed. But the question of when to cut off aid is one that should be left to the president."

Peck denied that administration officials agreed in December 1985, without President Reagan's knowledge, to abide by the U.N. agreement before final details were worked out.

"There have been no secret deals," Peck said. "No deals at all."

The United Nations-sponsored talks, in which Pakistan is representing the guerrillas and the Kabul regime is representing the Soviets, are to resume next Wednesday. Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has said that if the talks produce an accord, Soviet troops will start leaving by May 15 and be gone within 10 months.

Pakistani officials, who originally demanded Soviet withdrawal over three months, now say eight months is acceptable, but they want the parties to agree on the formation of an interim government.

Soviet negotiators have accused Pakistan of introducing new demands at the last minute, a charge echoed by Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, subcommittee chairman.

"It may not be possible to fashion such a government, in which case it would be a tragedy if, as a consequence of such a condition, we ended up without an interim government but with the continued presence of Soviet forces in Afghanistan," said Solarz, D-N.Y.

Reagan Says No Time To Complete Arms Pact

By LOU CANNON

L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan said Thursday in an interview with The Washington Post that "the time is too limited" to complete work on a strategic nuclear arms treaty before he meets Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev at a Moscow summit this spring.

But Reagan added "that if there is sincerity on both sides with regard to getting such an agreement — and I think there is" — a treaty could be signed before he leaves office next January.

In the 30-minute interview in the Oval Office, the president repeatedly complimented Gorbachev, whom he compared to Vladimir Lenin, the first leader of the Soviet state. Reagan also said he believes that the Soviets intend to withdraw their troops from Afghanistan, as Gorbachev has announced.

On other issues the president, acknowledging a change in attitude, said the federal budget deficit, which rose from $79 billion in fiscal 1981 to $150 billion at the end of fiscal 1987, was "a burden" but "not the disaster some people proclaim."

He also defended "as the very soul of integrity" two former close aides, Michael K. Deaver and Lyn Nofziger, who were convicted of illegal activities after they left the White House, as well as Attorney General Edwin Meese III, who is being investigated by independent counsel James C. McKay for his role in a controversial Mideast pipeline project.

And while saying he would remain neutral in this year's Republican presidential campaign, Reagan effusively praised Vice President George Bush, saying he "has been a part of all that we've been doing" and comparing him to the executive vice president in a corporation.

Reagan's statement that there is not enough time to complete work on a strategic arms treaty before the summit came on a day when contradictory signals emanated from Moscow, where a senior Soviet official said the accord could be reached in time for the summit. Senior U.S. officials said Thursday that the summit probably will be held late in May, exclusively in Moscow, and last four days.

The president said "it would be nice" if a treaty could be completed by the summit, "but I have to tell you that common sense indicates that the time is too limited for us to really think that we could bring a treaty ready for signature to that meeting."

He added that the proposed pact to reduce the superpowers' strategic nuclear arsenals by 50 percent "is so much more complicated with regard to verification and everything else" than the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty, which would scrap U.S. and Soviet medium-range and shorter-range nuclear missiles. The INF accord, now awaiting ratification in the Senate, was signed by Reagan and Gorbachev at their Washington summit in December.

One of the obstacles to agreement on a strategic treaty has been Soviet concern about the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI). Reagan's plan to develop an anti-missile defense system. In the interview, Reagan did not display flexibility on SDI, repeating earlier statements that he would not allow it to be used as "a bargaining chip."

Reagan, who will be meeting Gorbachev for the fourth time, said Gorbachev is different from previous Soviet leaders, adding that he had "met most of them." Actually, Reagan has met two of the seven Soviet leaders — Gorbachev and the late Leonid Brezhnev.

The president said "one difference is that he (Gorbachev) is the first leader that has come along who has gone back before Stalin and ... is trying to do what Lenin was teaching." Reagan cited the New Economic Program allowing limited private enterprise that was launched by Lenin in the 1920s and discarded by Stalin after Lenin's death.

Reagan said Gorbachev's advocacy of "glasnost" (openness) and "perestroika" (restructuring) were proposals "much more smacking of Lenin than of Stalin."

In the first news conference of his presidency, on Jan. 29, 1981, Reagan said the Soviets had since the founding of their state under Lenin reserved "the right to commit any crime, to lie, to cheat," in order to obtain their goal of world domination.

In discussing the prospective withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, beginning in mid-May, the president said that "a large part" of the decision was probably based on economic conditions in the Soviet Union. Reagan also credited the fighting prowess of the U.S.-aided Afghan Mujaheddin guerrillas, saying "they've been a very effective fighting force."

Reagan acknowledged that it is "a reversal of roles" for him to minimize the federal budget deficit, pointing out that he had made speeches for many years deploring excessive government spending. But the president found a silver lining in the deficit cloud, saying "a great many institutions, universities, educational institutions of all kinds" had part of their endowments in government bonds.

"So, instead of it being something that is just disappearing down a rat hole, it's a kind of a redistribution, you might say, of national wealth in that these institutions and so forth are getting this interest from the government," Reagan said.

'How The Mighty Are Fallen' Highly Successful Preachers Appear Most Vulnerable

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The minister basked in glory, so exalted that special choirs of women sang praises to him. Born poor, he had become rich and famous. When he preached, people sighed and waved handkerchiefs in admiration.
But he tumbled into obloquy.
That happened to a third-century Syrian bishop, Paul Samosata, dethroned as a heretic, a story recalled as resembling the fall of modern TV-famed evangelists, including the latest, Jimmy Swaggart.
"There's nothing new in this — it's as old as the hills," says Stanley M. Burgess, professor of religion at Southwestern Missouri State University in Springfield, Mo., but TV makes it a spectacle for millions.
"The higher the pedestal, the heavier the winds," Burgess said in a telephone interview. "The higher they get up the mountain, the thicker the fog."
"It's harder for them to reflect on themselves and see who they really are. With people constantly telling them how wonderful they are, that they're 'the man of God for this hour,' it's not a position to be in if one wants to be honest with himself."
It's the old egocentric problem, as old as the biblical Adam who sought to be God himself, but Burgess said the glorified are especially vulnerable.
"This is a common strand that runs through all religious literature," he said.
As Second Samuel 1:25 puts it, "How the mighty are fallen."
Swaggart's fall, over reported involvement with a prostitute, is particularly stark because of his "hard-line preaching," Burgess said.
"He had preached against almost everything imaginable, and then for him to do the very thing he preached against makes it all the more dramatic," Burgess said.
Burgess, a scholar of the Assemblies of God, the denomination to which Swaggart belongs, said some ministers go wrong in every century, and in every denomination "virtually every day."

But Swaggart, who lashed out at sexual lapses, becomes "the epitome of hypocrisy," Burgess said. "I do appreciate that he came out with it."
Richard Champion, editor of the denomination's weekly, Pentecostal Evangel, said that when "people surround themselves with those who always agree, who tell them only good things, they get tripped up in public adulation."
"Ego takes over, and gets out of control. They see evil as something in other people, and rationalize their own behavior...With somebody like Swaggart, it's a very visible thing."
Clinical psychologist Larry Bass of Springfield, Mo., said that without being specific about Swaggart, his case seemed to fit the category of someone who has "difficulty accepting his own humanness."
"While he is so vocal attacking other people's sexual sins, he is guilty of some of that himself and struggling with it, but he feels as if he has to be above it, and so he hides it."
"He comes across as very judgmental and critical of other people. He can't accept his own vulnerability to sin, so what he has to do is hide it in a kind of self-righteous hypocrisy."
Bass, who also belongs to the Assemblies of God, said that many times those who are the "most judgmental, putting down others and condemning, are guilty of the same thing they're haranguing about."
"But they have to hide it, that's the

Swedish Crystal Makers Cling To Old Tradition

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer
VAXJO, Sweden (AP) — Erik Høglund, a commercial artist, brought a new style to the old art of making crystal in Sweden 30 years ago. He did it with a potato.

He threw the potato into a pot of molten glass, creating air bubbles. But when glassblower Ruben Høglund began to shape a piece at the end of his five-foot-long iron pipe, he became enraged.

The crystal had bubbles in it and wasn't clear as good crystal should be, Høglund told Høglund, and stormed out.

The story goes that it took a bottle of shnapps to get Høglund back, and thus was created a style of crystal bowl and vase — with bubbles frozen into the thick glass — that has distinguished Sweden in the art of glassmaking.

The story of the potato and the air bubbles has entered local folklore in Smaland, a southern province in Sweden known as the Crystal Kingdom.

Here, glassblowing is a matter of pride, tradition and economic survival.

Smaland, which is too hilly, rocky and forested for farming, has lived from glassmaking for 100 years. The industry has suffered some hard times, but the marriage of artistry, craftsmanship and export marketing has helped bring a revival.

Glassmaking employs some 2,500 of Smaland's 700,000 people, and earned $180 million in export income during the first 10 months of 1987.

Tableware from the Orrefors and Kosta Boda companies appear in homes from Tokyo to Topeka and can sell for as much as $80 per glass. One vase made by Orrefors in 1939 fetched $93,000 at an auction this past November.

Glassblowing is a craft that generally takes 10 years to master. It's a tricky art to breathe a bubble of air into molten glass to give the edge just the right thickness, twirl the fiery mass on the end of the pipe, shape it, cool it and cut it.

It's an art still passed on from father to son in Smaland. But some aspects of the industry are changing as big companies and high-powered managers take over.

"When I first started working here in 1959 this was a family-owned company," said Gunnar Cyren, one of eight designers for Orrefors.

"All the youth in the village gathered in the blowing hall to keep warm by the ovens. The door was always open. Today there is a fence around the factory."

Half a million tourists a year come to the village of Orrefors, which has a population of 1,000, to see the glassworks.

Smaland once had as many as 60 glass factories with 4,000 workers. Many companies closed during Sweden's economic crisis of the 1970s, and now only 20 remain.

Orrefors, which began as an ironworks in 1726 and turned to glassmaking later, was bought in 1971 by Incentive, one of Sweden's largest holding companies. Kosta Boda was acquired by Uppsala-Ekeby, another multi-company group.

Anxious to keep employment high, Sweden's Social Democratic government subsidized the industries and pressured the larger companies to buy up the smaller factories to keep them open.

"They were afraid that the villages would die if the plants closed," Orrefors' president, Goran Bernhoff, said in an interview.

A 1982 devaluation of the Swedish krona, together with the big-scale management and marketing of the new owners, turned around the industry.

Now the numbers are climbing again. About 40 young artists have opened studios to sell to tourists and other small markets, says Gunnel Holmer, curator of the Smaland Museum here in Vaxjo, the regional capital.

The threat to the handblown glass industry today comes from new technologies, said Mrs. Holmer.

"If we make good tableware here, others soon copy it with machines and sell it much cheaper. But the unique pieces, the 'art glass,' that's something else," she said.

Glassmaking is a symbiosis between the artist and the artisan.

"You don't do any of the craftwork yourself," says designer Erika Lagerbielke.

"You make a sketch and try to explain to the glassblower what is to be done. When you work well with someone, one plus one sometimes adds up to three or four. Sometimes you both end up surprised."

That was the way it was 30 years ago with Erik Høglund, Ruben Høglund and the hot potato.

Book Has Letter To Parents

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: As medical professionals who have worked with children for more than 24 years, we truly appreciate current, informative material presented in a non-judgmental fashion with a dash of humor, and seasoned thoroughly with honesty, love, warmth and concern for our children of today.

Don't we all as parents wish we could protect and shield our children from adversities and pressures of living in the fast lane of the '80s?

However, unless we put our children in protective plastic bubbles, the realities and pressures of life and living will eventually touch them.

As much as we want to protect our children and their innocence, it may be to our advantage and theirs to "arm" them with some concrete informative ammunition with which to deal with the pitfalls of the '80s.

With the information contained in your booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know," a young adult may come to realize that there are always consequences to pay for one's actions.

On the last page of your booklet is "A Letter to Parents." I think those words are so important they should be engraved on a plaque and positioned where parents can read them often to remind us how to achieve a healthy relationship with our children. Will you please print it in your column?

Abby, you are to be commended. You did a fantastic job. — BOBBIE ELDRIDGE, R.N., J.M. TARLE, M.D., SANTA MONICA PEDIATRIC MEDICAL GROUP

DEAR NURSE ELDRIDGE AND DR. TARLE: Thank you for your kind letter. Here's "A Letter to Parents":

Dear Parents: I know this is a booklet for teen-agers, but there's something that needs to be said, and I'm going to say it.

Sociologists and psychologists have interviewed teen-agers on the subject of what's bugging them. Here is what our youngsters have said they wanted:

LOVE. We want parents who will love us no matter what happens or what we do. We want our dad around more often. We want him home in time for dinner, so we can discuss the day's happenings with him.

UNDERSTANDING. Maybe we don't even understand ourselves. But we want parents who DO, who will listen and at least let us explain.

TRUST. We want to be put on our own. We want our parents to expect the best of us... not fear the worst.

JOINT PLANNING. We want parents who will stand BESIDE us, not OVER us. We appreciate guidance in important matters, but after we've proven ourselves to have fairly mature judgment, we don't want to be nagged about every little thing.

PRIVACY. We need a room of our own to retreat to, and a place to pursue our hobbies — and store our junk. We don't want our letters read, or our phone conversations listened in on.

RESPONSIBILITY. We want our share of family tasks. But we'd like to know who's to do what, and why.

FRIENDSHIPS. We want the right to choose our own friends. And unless they have reputations for being "bad" company, such as boozers or dopers, we want them to be welcome in our home.

So ends the Teen-Age Bill of Rights. How much of it applies to your home is for you to decide.

But don't ever say that you don't understand what your children want. Right or wrong, I think they've made it pretty clear. Don't you?

Also a Parent, ABBY

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage and handling are included.

FITNESS AND HEALTH — Sarah Fulcher, international long distance runner and Winston-Salem native, ran through downtown Winston-Salem to promote fitness and health. Her run is part of an Around America Run, sponsored by the U.S. Fitness Academy. (AP Laser-photo)

Runner Says 'Being Normal Is Boring'

WINSTON-SALEM — Sarah Fulcher is in the middle of an 11,000-mile run around the perimeter of the United States, and she never slows down, even after she hangs up her shoes for the day.

Ms. Fulcher, a 26-year-old graduate of Salem College, added about 15 miles to her total Thursday, but those miles came in Winston-Salem, so it was a homecoming of sorts.

"When people ask me where I'm from, I say Salem College is my home," she said, although she has an apartment in San Diego. But, for the past seven months, a recreational vehicle has been a substitute. Jackie Bass drives the van behind Ms. Fulcher, with an eye on the odometer.

Seven runners joined Ms. Fulcher at Memorial Coliseum Thursday and ran the three miles to Salem Square for a ceremony where Thomas V. Litzenburg Jr., the president of Salem College, presented her with an award.

Ms. Fulcher took time out to talk about her run, but that doesn't mean she sat still. She stretched, took swigs of a high-carbohydrate drink, greeted other runners, sat down, stood up and answered questions.

"I think that's boring, being normal," Ms. Fulcher said. "I couldn't do it, you know?"

Already the women's world-record holder for continuous long-distance running, she is expected to break the men's record by the time she reaches Laguna Hills, Calif., sometime in August.

She ran across Australia — 2,700 miles — last year, the first woman to do so. Her "Across Down Under Run" raised more than $50,000 for groups that fight hunger. On the "Run Around America" run she's trying to increase public awareness of the benefits of physical fitness and raise money to build the United States Fitness Academy in Orange County, Calif.

She left Laguna Hills, Calif., July 21, and headed north. Unfortunately, that meant hitting New England during the coldest time of the year.

"It was 25 below zero in New England," she said. To fight the elements she wore plastic bags on her hands and sometimes up to five pairs of pants. She averages about 32 miles a day, but she found the going rough up north.

"I was lucky to get a marathon holder (more than 26 miles) a day in the cold," she said. "I think everybody's ready for spring."

She's on her 21st pair of running shoes, but they're not a big expense. "People donate them," she said.

Other donations include hotel rooms, the use of swimming pools ("I do a lot of water therapy") and clothing.

But money is running out. When she started, she had a crew of four people with her, as well as an exercise physiologist. "All I had to do was eat, sleep and run," she said.

That crew has dwindled to one person, Ms. Bass, because money is running short, Ms. Fulcher said. The run is sponsored by ARCO, Bonne Bell and Jolt Cola.

The cold weather turns thoughts to logs crackling in a fireplace. But along with that warmth often comes soot and stains.

The nice thing is that soot and stains are relatively easy to remove. But don't put it off and let it build up. Clean the area as soon as possible.

First, you'll need to scrub the fireplace facing with strong soap and water. And you'll probably need to use a stiff brush for brick or rough textured facings.

After scrubbing, rinse the facing thoroughly with clear water. If stains and soot still persist, you may need to use a mild acid bleach, such as vinegar and acetic acid. Again, apply the bleach with a stiff brush. And again, be sure to rinse the facing with water after scrubbing.

If stains are really stubborn, you may need to scrub them with a hydrochloric acid and water solution. To prepare it, mix one part hydrochloric acid to ten parts of water. After scrubbing, rinse immediately with water.

There are a couple of cautions.

Whenever you use the hydrochloric acid and water solution, use rubber gloves to protect your hands. And never, never use the acid solution on stonework.

You might also want to check the hydrochloric acid solution on a small, inconspicuous place before you scrub the whole fireplace facing. For it is possible that the acid solution could discolor some types of brick.

In a recent issue of "The Homeowner," someone wrote about a technique they had discovered for cleaning glass doors on woodstoves or fireplaces. They recommended a wood-ash paste. Use a damp paper towel to pick up some fire ash from under the grate (cold) and scrub the glass (also cold). Finish with a clean, damp paper towel.

One of the tricks to staying warm in cold weather is staying dry. That means dressing to keep warm — and not over-dressing so that you perspire. Then you feel clammy and cold rather than toasty warm.

The secret is to wear lightweight layers of clothes you can adjust or take off when you get too warm. Select those layered-look clothes with an eye for built-in ventilation features.

For instance, winter jackets with zippers that open either direction are a good choice. The two-way zippers allow you to keep comfortable and dry without taking off the entire garment.

For indoor clothes, look for tops that can be opened at the neckline, rather than turtle or crew necks.

And there's a bonus. You won't have to sacrifice fashion for comfort. Cardigan sweaters, vests and jackets worn over other clothes offer a great cold weather look. If you get too warm, one or two layers can easily be taken off.

So when the weather gets frightful, keep warm and dry by adjusting your clothes rather than by turning up the thermostat. You'll look fashionable and feel cozy. And you'll save money on utility bills.

Pesticide Proposals Opposed

"In some cases, it would result in delayed spraying and as a result, the use of either higher rates of pesticides or possibly reapplication because the number of insects were too large and were not killed by the first application," he said.

Many speakers criticized the required written consent section of the proposed amendment.

"Just think about the amount of time it would take each farmer who farms along Highway 95 and 301 in Halifax County just to post (notification) on those highways alone," said Fred Garner, of Halifax County.

"Farmers are having a difficult enough time as it is without these regulations that would increase our costs and reduce our efficiency," he added.

One of the speakers was in favor of the proposals, saying 72-hour notification is a good idea because it would provide advance warning to his daughter, who suffers from respiratory ailments.

According to June Ferrell, an attorney with the state Department of Agriculture, the proposed pesticide amendment has arisen as a result of the actions of a resolution petition brought forth in the western part of the state.

Ferrell said a complaint originated following a timber pesticide application accident which occurred in Chatham County in 1983. The incident was investigated and although no violations in pesticide application were found, citizens of the area have continued to pursue the matter.

May agreed that the solution to any spraying problems is increased enforcement, not rule changes.

"Just punish the ones that are guilty and don't punish everyone else," said Billy Savage of Pender County.

The hearing held in Greenville is the second of three public hearings being conducted on the matter. The first took place Feb. 18 in Hickory, and the next hearing will take place in Raleigh on March 3.

Pesticide Board Chairman John C. Stuart said a decision is expected in late April or early May.

confirmation hearing, said "I am deeply appreciative of all the bipartisan local support I have had in this 10 months' activity to obtain this confirmation."

Howard, as far as anyone can recall, is the first Pitt County resident to hold a U.S. District Court judgeship.

A Kinston native, Howard holds a bachelor of science degree from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point and a law degree from Wake Forest University. He won the Silver Star for personal gallantry, two Bronze Stars for heroism in ground combat, and a Purple Heart as an infantry officer during two tours in Vietnam, where he served as a helicopter door gunner, infantry company commander and ambush academy commander.

After receiving his law degree while still on active duty, Howard co-authored the original legal analysis for the prosecution of Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald, a former Green Beret officer who was convicted of killing his pregnant wife and two daughters at Fort Bragg in 1970.

After resigning from the active Army in 1972, Howard was an assistant U.S. attorney for the Eastern District for 1 1/2 years. Then for eight months in 1974, before President Nixon resigned, he was an assistant special counsel to Nixon and a member of a team preparing an impeachment defense for the president.

Howard entered the private practice of law in Greenville in 1974.

In 1981, the Reagan administration considered Howard for the job of secretary of the Army. Howard retired from the U.S. Army Reserve in 1982 as a lieutenant colonel and in 1986 was appointed by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh as a civilian aide to the secretary of the Army for North Carolina.

Hill Breaks Foot, Out For Year

As if things weren't bad enough on the eve of East Carolina's season-ending game with UNC-Wilmington Saturday night, the Pirates got more bad news this morning.

Gus Hill, the Pirates' leading scorer, will miss the remainder of the season with a broken bone in his foot, it was announced this morning.

Hill, averaging 19.4 points a game and a leading candidate for rookie of the year in the Colonial Athletic Association, suffered the injury in Wednesday night's game against William & Mary, midway through the second half when another player stepped on his foot.

East Carolina announced this morning that Hill had broken the fifth metatarsal in his right foot and has been placed in a cast. He will not be available for Saturday night's 7:30 p.m. game against the Seahawks in Minges Coliseum, nor will he be available for next weekend's CAA tournament in Hampton, Va.

"It will make it real difficult," Coach Mike Steele said. "He's been our most productive player inside and is our best or second best shooter on the perimeter. He's the leading scorer and rebounder on a team that's not very deep."

Steele said that the Pirates must get better play from Dominique Martin, Marc Lacy, Stanley Love and Ronnie Gibbs. "No one of them can replace Gus, but collectively, they have to do it."

The Pirates currently are in eighth place in the Colonial Athletic Association standings and Saturday's game will wind up the regular season. The Bucs, 3-10 in the league, are 8-18 overall.

UNC-Wilmington brings in a 7-6 conference mark, 13-13 overall. The Seahawks currently stand fourth in the standings with a chance to tie for third should they beat the Pirates and George Mason lose its final game to Navy.

The Seahawks could also end up in a tie for fifth with Navy should the Midshipmen beat Mason and the Pirates top UNCW.

East Carolina's only hope of escaping the cellar will be by its beating UNCW and James Madison falling to American in its final game. That would leave the two tied for seventh, and the Pirates would get the nod since it beat Madison in both of its regular season games.

Richmond has already locked up top seeding for the league's post-season tournament, March 5-7 at Hampton Coliseum in Hampton, Va., while American has clinched second seeding.

East Carolina owns a 15-13 lead in the 28 game series with the Seahawks, but has lost the last seven games in a row, including a 71-69 last-second defeat at Wilmington on Jan. 30.

In that game, the Pirates led a great deal of the time and had the ball for a final shot. But the shot missed and Kenny Murphy was charged with a foul on an outside rebound with one second to go. Roy Walker nailed both ends of the one-and-one to give the Seahawks the victory.

It was the second straight game in which UNCW had nipped the Pirates at the horn. In last year's final meeting, in the first round of the CAA tournament, ECU led throughout but lost, 59-58, on Brian Rowsome's desperation 3-pointer at the horn.

"We have a lot of intangibles on the line going into the Wilmington game," Steele said. "First, you always want to go into the league tournament on a winning note. Also there is the fact that we have lost seven straight to one of our biggest rivals, and that is something that we need to stop."

"UNCW has really got a fine balance of inside-outside players, and we don't have anyone to match up well with (6-8 center Larry) Houzer. He beat us down the stretch by just jumping over our guys and hitting the big baskets."

For the Seahawks, too, it will be a case of needing a win to take some momentum into the tournament. The Seahawks lost out on their title hoped Wednesday when Richmond nipped them 61-60. UNCW has had its troubles on the road, however, winning only three of 13 games away from Trask Coliseum.

Houzer, a junior college transfer, is the leading scorer for the Seahawks, hitting 16.2 points per game. He's also the top rebounder with a 7.7 average.

Greg Bender, a 6-6 junior forward, has an 11.6 average and pulls 5.3 rebounds a game.

The other forward will probably be 6-6 senior Roy Walker, hitting 7.8 points a game, while Willie Williams, a 6-0 junior, will be at one of the guard spots, with an 8.3 average.

The other guard position will be handled by 6-2 Mark Gary, a senior with a 5.9 scoring average, or 6-3 junior Antonio Howard, hitting 10.8 points a game.

Howard scored 25 points in the second half of last Saturday night's win over William & Mary, a school record.

Reed Lose is the only other Pirate in double figures besides Hill. Lose is hitting 15.0 per outing.

Meanwhile, East Carolina's Lady Pirates travel to UNC-Wilmington to face the Lady Seahawks in a 7 p.m. game. The Lady Pirates currently occupy the league cellar with a 2-9 conference mark and an 8-18 overall record.

They still have an outside chance to tie for sixth place should they win the game and William & Mary lose its remaining games.

James Madison has already sewn up first place in the league and a first-round bye in the conference tournament, scheduled for March 10-12 at American University's Bender Arena.

Thomas' Coach Charges That Skimpy Outfit Moved Judges

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — It was a subjective decision in the most subjective of sports.

"It hurts," said Debi Thomas' coach.

Thomas moved to the head of the Olympic pack after Thursday's short program, but lost most of the judges to East German rival Katarina Witt, fueling another round of controversy over how skating marks are awarded.

"No matter what Debi does, I'm afraid the die is cast," said Alex McGowan, Thomas' coach, referring to Saturday night's long program that will determine the gold medal. "I get worried when I see a skater not get what she deserves, and I saw that tonight."

Canada's hope for the bronze, Elizabeth Manley, was in third place in the short program and overall, followed by Kira Ivanova of the Soviet Union and Americans Jill Trenary and Caryn Kadavy.

In the short, Thomas beat or tied Witt for technical merit with all nine judges with a punchy skate to a pulsating disco beat that included a soaring double loop-triple toe jump, a difficult move equaled only by Japan's high-flying Midori Ito.

But Witt, skating a lively — and technically clean — showgirl number that featured tap-skating to Broadway tunes including "Hello Dolly," got the winning edge for artistic merit, lining up eight near-perfect 5.9s.

The L.osome East German was decked out in a royal blue concoction of feathers, sequins and sass that raised a ruckus of its own — critics questioned its decorum. The lean and sporty Thomas wore a sleek black bodysuit with spangles at the top.

Were the six male judges wowed by Witt and her high-cut outfit? Did they disapprove of Thomas' costume, which lacked the traditional skirt?

"You'll have to ask the judges," said Thomas. And Witt couldn't be reached to comment on the matter.

The sellout crowd, however, belonged mostly to Thomas. Every jump was greeted with wild cheers and she went off the ice to flying bouquets and one pizza pie — a Thomas favorite. When her artistic marks were flashed, they were loudly booed.

"It was great having the audience boo my marks," Thomas, 20, of San Jose, Calif. "It was like, 'Hey, you did better than that.'"

Witt stood at the end of the rink watching closely as Thomas skated, then applauded her competitor at the finish. She betrayed a moment of anxiety while she waited for the scoreboard to light up, nervously clutching her armload of roses, then sashayed out, head held high, when she realized she had won.

Thomas sat motionless as her marks were posted. But McGowan waved his hand in frustration and held his nose, saying, "No way, no way. It stinks."

He described Thomas' technique and presentation as "superb."

"I feel strongly for her," McGowan said. "It hurts when I see that happen. Katarina skated great, too — I have no problem with that — but I thought Debi had the technical edge and I don't think she deserved to be dropped two-tenths (of a point) on artistic."

Witt, who at 22 has pocketed three world titles and an Olympic gold medal, seemed a bit shaky going into her short program, stumbling on her jumps.

"Somehow, suddenly I became nervous in warming up," she said later. "I didn't hit either the combination or the double. Then I thought, 'You must!'"

And she did, starting off as Calgary's nightly fireworks boomed outside the arena and hitting all the required moves with her usual verve and flair.

Though she may be closing in fast on a second Olympic gold medal.

Georgia Tech Runs Past Virginia

By The Associated Press

Terry Holland knew Georgia Tech was capable of turning in scoring spurts, and that's what the 20th-ranked Yellow Jackets did.

"We were hoping to be able to contain that and not let that happen to us," the Virginia coach said Thursday night after Tech used runs of 9-0 and 13-0 in the second half to post a 76-71 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over the Cavaliers.

Freshman Dennis Scott was the top scorer in both runs, hitting a 3-point basket in the 9-0 run starting the second half that erased a four-point deficit and gave Tech a 41-36 lead.

The Jackets then took control in the final 5½ minutes when Scott hit another 3-pointer — his fourth of the half — and added a layup in a 13-0 burst that turned a 61-59 lead into a 74-59 advantage with 1:36 to play. Virginia closed the gap against Tech reserves.

In the other game involving an ACC team Thursday, Maryland beat Maryland-Eastern Shore 101-51.

Tom Hammonds led the Jackets with 23 points and Craig Neal had a school-record 17 assists and 11 points, including the last four in the decisive 13-0 burst.

"I don't count them," Neal said of the assists that broke the previous mark of 15 set in 1985 by Mark Price and tied three times since by Neal. "The way our guys are scoring, I believe anything. I give those guys all the credit."

It was the sixth victory in a row for Tech and the sixth loss in a row for Virginia, which had won the last four meetings with the Jackets. Tech is

East Carolina Will Open Baseball Season Saturday

East Carolina's baseball Pirates will open the 1988 season Saturday with a doubleheader against the University of Virginia.

The games are set to get underway at 1 p.m. at ECU's Harrington Field.

The Pirates, 26-17 last season, captured the Colonial Athletic Association championship at The Diamond in Richmond, Va., earning their fourth big in the NCAA tournament since 1980.

The Pirates will rely on youth this year with only three seniors among the 30 players on the roster. Coach Gary Overton's pitching staff will especially be young with only two players with adequate collegiate experience.

Senior Gary Smith, who was 10-6 last year, and junior Jake Jacobs (6-0) will be counted on to lead an inexperienced rotation that also includes sophomore Brian Berkman (1-1), Jonathan Jenkins (0-0) and Tim Langdon (0-0). Freshman Scott Stevens is also considered among the top pitchers for the Pirates.

The Pirates return several strong batsmen, however, led by senior outfielder Jay McGraw, who hit .329 last year with eight homers. A 3-year starter, McGraw will be vying for all-conference honors.

Also back are junior catcher Chris Cauble (.343, 2 homers), junior outfielder John Thomas (.318, 3 homers) and senior shortstop Mike Andrews (.339, 2 homers).

Top newcomers should include Steve Godin of Warrenton, Va., a strong-armed outfielder who elected to play for the Pirates instead of signing a pro contract with the Baltimore Orioles.

For Overton, it will be his fourth season at the helm of the Pirates after serving as an assistant coach under former coach Hal Bair. Overton will be seeking to pass the 100-victory mark this weekend as he opens the season at 98-41.

Following Saturday's twinbill with the Cavaliers, the Pirates will play two single games Sunday, including a 1 p.m. game against Virginia and a 3 p.m. contest against George Washington.

The Bucs are then idle until Wednesday when they play St. Augustine's in a 1 p.m. doubleheader.

The schedule includes 41 home games and 10 road trips, including home stands against James Madison, William & Mary and Richmond in the CAA, and road games at UNC-Wilmington and George Mason.

Kinston, ECU Set Exhibition

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer
East Carolina's Pirates and

ECU's Gary Overton

Kinston's Indians, two local baseball teams that play on different levels but followed similar patterns of late season success in 1987 will get together to play an exhibition game April 7 at Grainger Stadium in Kinston.

The two teams have not met in an exhibition since 1984 when Kinston was a member of the Toronto Braves' minor league system. The team switched affiliation to the Cleveland Indians prior to the 1987 season and came back to claim the eastern title of the Carolina League during the season's second half.

ECU went 26-17 last season, winning the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament in Richmond, Va., before advancing on to the NCAA Atlantic Regionals in Tallahassee, Fla., where the Pirates were eliminated from post-season play.

"This is a game that can certainly benefit us as a professional ballclub and hopefully benefit East Carolina's program," said Kinston Indians vice president North Johnson.

"The reason I picked ECU were they have the best team in the area ... and secondly we just felt Greenville was the market we needed to promote our team."

Kinston's North Johnson

For the Indians, the exhibition game will give the newly-formed team a chance to play against some different competition after going up against the same teams in Arizona for about a month.

The game will also give the Indians their first chance to play under lights and it will also give new team members a chance to get acclimated to Grainger Stadium.

"So we feel that by playing a team that we haven't seen ever, it is going to give us a good opportunity to go out and face some good competition," Johnson said. "Hopefully it will be beneficial to both teams."

ECU has played in Kinston twice before but the two teams haven't met in four years.

"Last year, we didn't play mainly because Cleveland wouldn't allow us to play," Johnson said. "Last year was our first year with the Indians organization and like any first year agreement there is a feeling-out period."

"Cleveland wanted to make sure we would run things and take care of their players the way they wanted us to. Last year we had a real good year and they are real happy with the way we've run the organization so they've sort of given us carte blanche."

Overton added that scheduling of this type game is made more difficult by lack of available time, but that this year things worked out.

According to ECU coach Gary Overton, the game offers his players a unique opportunity.

"This will be our first trip to Kinston since 1984 when we played before (against the now defunct Kinston Blue Jays)," said Overton.

"I think this will be a great opportunity for our young men in that it be their first exposure to the technical part of professional baseball. I think it is the aspiration of most college (players) to play professionally. And again, this will be our first part of professional ball that many of our people will be acclimated to.

"We're looking forward to this. It will give us somewhat of a break in our schedule and we can relax before we get back into the heat of playing our conference schedule."

"The times we've been to Kinston we've had some very good, some very close games. That in itself gives us a competitive factor. Our young men are high for the game. It is something we can look forward to."

For Johnson and the Indians, success was a bit of a double-edged sword as many of last year's players have moved on to AA or AAA clubs in the organization.

"Basically the problem with having a team like we had last year that was so dominant is that we lose most of our players," Johnson said. "We'll probably have six to eight players back from last year's team."

The majority of the players that will rejoin the team were late additions in August that helped carry the team to the division title.

Chocowinity Girls Win; Bear Grass Is Eliminated

CHOCOWINITY — Chocowinity's girls, winners of the regular season Tobacco Belt Conference basketball title, took their first step toward adding the TBC tournament title to their collection with a 70-28 romp over Columbia Thursday night.

In an earlier game, also at Chocowinity, North Edgecombe ousted Bear Grass, 42-39. Meanwhile, at Belhaven, the hosting Lady Bulldogs beat Mattamuskeet, 55-42, and Bath eliminated Aurora, 48-29.

In the opening game at Chocowinity, North Edgecombe eased out into a 9-4 lead over Bear Grass. The Lady Warriors increased their lead with a 13-8 margin in the second period, taking a 22-12 halftime lead into the dressing rooms.

Bear Grass rallied in the third period, 12-8, and cut the lead back to 30-24. The Lady Bears also outthrew North Edgecombe in the final quarter, 15-12, but fell short in their rally.

Shonika Hill led North Edgecombe with 22 points while Janet Rogerson had 24 and Tameka Little had 10 for Bear Grass.

Bear Grass ends its year with an 11-10 record.

In the second game, Chocowinity made quick work of Columbia, zooming out to a 27-6 lead in the opening period. The Lady Indians kept up the pace in the second quarter, scoring 23 more points while limiting Columbia to just five. That gave the Tribe a very comfortable 50-9 halftime lead.

Chocowinity boosted the lead to 58-14 in the third period and allowed a 13-12 Columbia advantage in the final period.

China Grice and Druscilla Crawford each had 14 points to lead Chocowinity while Christie Bradley added 11.

Chocowinity will now meet North Edgecombe in the TBC semifinals on Wednesday at 7 p.m. while Bath and Belhaven meet in the other semifinal on Thursday, also at 7 p.m. All remaining games in the girls' tournament will be played at Bath High School.

Action resumes in the first round of the boys' division tonight. At North Edgecombe, the regular season champion Warriors host Jamesville, while Bear Grass takes on Columbia. At Chocowinity, the Indians face Bath while Creswell meets Belhaven.

The four finalists in the girls' field have already clinched Sectional Tournament berths.

Perry Slowly Building Program At Limestone

By RICK SCOPPE
AP Sports Writer

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — When former major league pitcher Gaylord Perry came to Limestone to start a baseball program the first thing he did was buy the essentials — a bat and ball.

Then he started on the field. Later, Perry got around to teaching the fine and not-so-fine points of the game to not only his team but to college officials, including a secretary who couldn't understand why Perry was ordering 10 dozen baseballs.

"She knows three strikes and you're out, and she's willing to learn," Perry said. "But she thought you just needed one baseball, like in basketball. She couldn't understand why I was ordering so many baseballs. She said that many baseballs should last 100 years."

"But once you explain to them that you lose some, some get dirty, and you don't wash them in the washing machine, they understand," he said in a telephone interview.

Knowledge is not the only thing Limestone, a small NAIA school in Gaffney near the North Carolina-South Carolina border, lacks as it prepares to get its first season under way today at South Carolina-Spartanburg.

Perry found out how short earlier this week. As he looked over the college's new baseball field, Perry realized something was missing — a flag pole.

"I found out we didn't have enough money to order a flag pole. So I ordered one myself," he said. "Things like that, you sometimes ... forget. But it's an American game, and you've got to have a flag."

"I hope they don't mind it having just 13 stars."

Perry can laugh and joke now. After all, Limestone has come a long way since hiring the only pitcher to earn the Cy Young in the American League and National League.

Limestone hired Perry on Nov. 11,

1986, and hoped the former major leaguer's background would help in the building of a baseball program at the private liberal arts college that has an on-campus enrollment of about 300 students.

Perry, a five-time all-star, was 314-265 and had a lifetime earned run average of 3.09 in his 22-year major league career, which included stints with the New York Yankees, Cleveland, San Diego and Atlanta.

Perry, a native of Williamston, N.C., won his first Cy Young while with Cleveland in 1974 when he was 24-16. He won his second while with San Diego in 1978, when he finished 21-6 at the age of 40.

Perry's major league experience and knowledge has paid off for the Saints.

Limestone has a 30-man roster that includes three players who have major league connections — Perry's 6-foot-8 son, Jack, Jerry O'Toole and Todd Belcher, whose brother is a pitcher for Los Angeles.

O'Toole's father, Jim, pitched for Cincinnati in the 1960s. It was against O'Toole and the Reds that Perry started his first major league game with San Francisco.

Perry, who is eligible for the Hall of Fame in 1989, also has used his knowledge acquired in the majors in recruiting, bringing in seven left-handed pitchers — out of a total staff of 11.

But Perry said there is more to it than just numbers. He had major league managers and scouts in mind when he signed seven lefties.

"Can you imagine the scouts when they see we have seven lefties — they've got to come see us play," Perry said. "They've got a manager who's saying, 'Find me a left-hander.' And we've got 'em."

"That's a little strategy I pulled to get them here," Perry said Wednesday. "That should draw the scouts. Plus, they're pretty good."

Perry's strategic moves have also carried over onto the new field, which will be finished this week. The park is a pitcher's dream, and a hitter's nightmare. It's 325 feet to the left field fence and 330 feet down the right field line. The power alleys are 380 feet, and it's 395 feet to the center field fence.

"I wanted it bigger than that. The players were telling me, 'Coach, it's going to be like the Astrodome in Houston,'" Perry said. "But it is going to be a nice park."

When Perry isn't recruiting or working on the field, he's teaching his players how to play baseball. The stress has been on fundamentals. Nothing fancy.

"It's a new program. We've been practicing on fundamentals," he said. "They're looking pretty good. They're excited about the season. They've worked real hard the last month and are in condition."

"I've probably gotten more in than I thought I would this year," Perry said. "The hardest thing for this program is to get my baseball field done."

"When I came to Limestone, they didn't have a ball or a bat or a field. Now, you can tell the guys are getting excited."

Lacrosse Team Opens Season

The East Carolina club lacrosse team opens its third season under Coach Duke Whelan when it plays host to Catholic University and Elon College this weekend.

The Pirates will face Catholic on Saturday at 2 p.m. and will meet Elon on Sunday at 1 p.m.

The ECU team was granted team associate status last fall by the U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association, allowing it to play better competition.

Fifteen players return from last year's team and will be led by Mark Seasholtz and Chris Gauland, along with goalie James Young.

Home games are played behind the Allied Health Building on the corner of Greenville Blvd. and Charles Blvd. There is no admission charge.

Three Relay Teams Play For ECU

COLUMBIA, S.C. — East Carolina's swimming team fared poorly in the opening day of the Independent Nationals Thursday at the University of South Carolina.

The Lady Pirates are 10th among the 13 teams in competition, while the men are 12th after the first of three days of competition.

No ECU swimmer placed in the top nine in 10 individual events held on Thursday.

East Carolina, did, however, place ninth in three different relay events, the women's 200-yard medley relay, the women's 800-yard freestyle relay and the men's 400-yard medley relay.

South Carolina, the host team, led both the men's and women's divisions after the first day of the meet.

ECU Women Top Lady Bulldogs

East Carolina's Lady Pirate tennis team won its first match of the year Thursday, defeating Atlantic Christian College, 5-4, in a match at River Birch Tennis Center.

The Lady Pirates dropped the number one and two singles matches but then took the remaining four for a leg up. They added the number two doubles match to ensure the win.

Now 1-1, the Lady Pirates are hosts to Christopher Newport on Wednesday. Summary:

- Shiela Milme (AC) d. Maria Swaim, 6-0, 6-0.
- Kim Murkurjee (AC) d. Susan Mattocks, 6-1, 6-2.

Pitt Hosting Central Piedmont In Playoffs

WINTERVILLE — Pitt Community College will play host to Central Piedmont Community College in the Region X, Division II championship basketball game Saturday.

The contest will be held at Ayden-Grifton High School at 3 p.m.

Pitt, a member of Division II in the region, will meet the only other Division II member of the region in the game to decide the champion. The winner will then advance to Anderson, S.C., to face the winner of Region III on Tuesday.

The Paladins are led by 6-2 Jesse Pratt, averaging 17.9 points and 8.9 rebounds a game. Three other Paladins are in double figures, including 6-3 Mike Hathaway, 12.0; 6-3 Eric Dunn, 12.9 and 6-1 Paul Hollingsworth, 10.3.

Central Piedmont's Tigers are led by 5-8 Randy Harris, averaging 18.3 points a game and 6-2 Eddie Williams, hitting 13.5.

Metro Slaps Coaches, Players, Officials

ATLANTA (AP) — Metro Conference Commissioner Ralph McFillen Thursday reprimanded coaches, players and officials involved in a fight in Saturday's basketball game between South Carolina and Louisville at Columbia, S.C.

McFillen notified the schools of the reprimands after viewing the tapes of the game and conferring with Metro Conference Supervisor of Officials Dale Kelley.

He confirmed the officials were in error in assessing two of South Carolina's technical fouls on Coach George Felton, resulting in his ejection from the game. McFillen stated the coaches are accountable for the conduct of their players.

"Fighting has not been a problem in the past, but in the event of future incidents, stronger action will be taken," he said.

The fan participating in the disturbance has been barred from remaining games at South Carolina, McFillen said.

There is no penalty for fighting in the Metro Conference, but McFillen said that he would be making such recommendations in the near future.

Fans Vow To Fight Cub Lights

CHICAGO (AP) — Let there be lights at Wrigley Field, the City Council declared, but outraged residents of Wrigleyville say this isn't the last inning in the fight over the Chicago Cubs' park.

"It's really outrageous, and we don't feel this is completely over in our minds," Paul Kendall, head of Citizens United for Baseball in the Sunshine or CUBS, said Thursday night after the City Council voted 29-19 to lift the ban on night games at the only major-league baseball park without lights.

"We'll continue the fight, and we certainly applaud the efforts of the aldermen who tried to provide us some protection," said Kendall, who threatened to bring legal action against night games or launch a campaign to ban alcoholic beverages from the precinct around the park.

The new ordinance, endorsed by Mayor Eugene Sawyer, allows eight night games this season and 18 each in following years until 2002 at the brick and ivy ballpark smack in the middle of the heavily populated Wrigleyville neighborhood.

Cubs players welcomed the news. "I just want to play in that first night game so I can get my name in the Hall of Fame," catcher Jody Davis said at the team's spring training camp in Mesa, Ariz.

Alderman William Henry said he supported lights because Chicago couldn't replace the revenue the team generates if the Cubs went through with their threats to move.

"The real deal is with revenue. No one has talked about the millions of dollars the sports team generates. Do you know we can generate $45 million to $50 million from the 1990 All Star Game?" Henry said during council debate over the issue.

Just a few hours earlier, major-league baseball owners meeting in West Palm Beach, Fla., voted to award Wrigley Field the 1990 All Star Game if the lights are in place.

The Cubs said they would soon begin installing a $5-million state-of-the-art lighting system.

"The completion date is still uncertain, but the project should be completed in four to six months," the Cubs said in a statement read by spokeswoman Doris Acosta after the council vote.

That would mean Davis and his teammates should be making history sometime in July. The Chicago Tribune reported that the first Wrigley night game could be July 18 against the San Francisco Giants.

The Cubs have played for 112 seasons, 72 in Wrigley, without benefit of night home games, and haven't had a trip to the World Series since 1945.

"It's not going to hurt the Cubs not to have lights. And Lord knows what it's going to take to get them to the World Series," Alderman Edward Burke argued Thursday during council debate.

In its arguments for lights, Tribune Co., owner of the Cubs, said the Cubs lost out on revenue from televised night games.

But Wrigleyville residents fought tooth and nail for years, decrying rowdy crowds and problems with traffic and parking.

"They're telling us everyone has to bleed — everyone has to sacrifice," said Wrigleyville resident Patty Gruber, 34. "Well, we have sacrificed, and we have to do it again. There's no such thing as democracy."

But Steven Strauss, owner of Sluggers' tavern a half block from the park, said too much emphasis has been put on unruly fans.

"Cubs fans are not boisterous, bad people," he maintained.

A state law is still on the books banning regular-season night contests at the ballpark, and State Sen. William Marovitz, D-Chicago, said Thursday, "If the noise from Wrigley Field violates the decibel limit, a resident might file a lawsuit."

But Alderman Bobby Rush, whose committee held hearings on the lights issue, said state legislators told him the General Assembly would follow the city's lead in lifting the ban.

Tomba Takes Giant Slalom

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Debi Thomas spoke diplomatically, but the judges' scoring sparked thunderous boos from the Winter Olympics crowd and the pungent comment, "It stinks," from her coach.

The judges flipped for Katerina Witt's Broadway boogie-woogie — blue feathers, soft shoe and "Hello, Dolly" — and scored her much higher on artistic merit after giving Thomas the edge on technical merit.

Thomas performed as precisely as a surgeon, a profession she hopes to pursue. Witt showed the pizzazz of the actress she wants to be.

The numbers added up to a slight lead by Thomas, of San Jose, Calif., over the world champion Witt of East Germany going into the free skating program Saturday night, with Liz Manley of Canada in third.

None of them wants to rile judges, but Thomas couldn't conceal her disappointment completely.

"Of course, I hoped to have higher marks," Thomas allowed after she received a 5.6, four 5.7s and four 5.8s for artistic merit. Witt got one 5.8 and the rest 5.9s.

The partisan, American flag-waving crowd of 19,000 was more vocal in its disapproval and Thomas' coach, Alex McGowan, was flat angry. In a departure from decorum, McGowan held his nose to show he thought the judging was a little smelly.

"It hurts me when I see her skating so well and she's dropped in artistic marks when they raise Katarina," he said later. "Katarina did skate well — I have no problem there — but I'm a little concerned it may happen again in the long program. No matter how well Debi skates, she will be dropped in the long."

The judges indeed appear to have drawn the lines between Thomas and Witt, but that could work to Thomas' advantage in the free skate as it did for fellow Californian Brian Boitano when he won the gold last Saturday.

Ties in scoring are broken by giving the nod to the better technical skater, the one who leaps higher, spins straighter and lands more lightly. Boitano held the technical advantage over Canadian Brian Orser, and Thomas hopes a similar advantage will enable her to hand Witt her first defeat in a long program since 1982.

There were no judgment calls on the giant slalom course, only sheer speed by an Italian who won a gold medal and a red Ferrari, and proclaimed with Muhammad Ali bravado, "I am the strongest in the world."

Alberto Tomba, 21 and cocky, certainly was the fastest skier on this warm, sunny day, whipping past the gates in 2 minutes, 6.37 seconds in two runs to earn the new sports car his father promised him if he won.

Tomba was more than a second faster than silver medalist Hubert Strolz of Austria, the Alpine combined champion, and more than two seconds faster than bronze medalist Pirmin Zurbriggen of Switzerland, the downhill winner.

Tomba sped gracefully along the course with the powerful legs and efficient style of a young Ingemar Stenmark, the Swede who once dominated the sport and won two gold medals in 1980.

The present-day Stenmark, 31, was back in the Olympics after missing the 1984 Games because of professionalism, but the return wasn't so sweet. He was 30th after the first run and didn't finish the second. Asked how it felt to be back, he replied, "Right now, it doesn't feel so good."

Fourteen other skiers, including all four Canadians, weren't feeling so wonderful, either, after they were disqualified from the second run because their suits were not approved by the International Ski Federation. None would have won a medal, but they all spent a long time training to get here.

All the training in women's figure skating didn't produce many surprises. More than two hours passed in the short program before the crowd got pumped up by a superb performance by Japan's Midori Ito. Although skating earlier than the top contenders, she produced high marks with an exuberant, smooth routine, then delighted the roaring crowd by waving joyfully in every direction.

Witt slipped twice in practice and looked distracted just before her program, but some sharp words from her coach and a few moments to settle down helped.

She performed almost flawlessly, leaning slightly askew on one double jump, but her tap dancing and jaunty show-biz style won over the crowd and the judges.

Thomas, ever the athlete, slapped both hands with her coach twice, as if she were going out to play basketball, then took the ice with a determined look.

Wearing a black and silver-spangled bodysuit, she began with two perfect triple jumps and got the crowd excited with a fast-paced whirl to rock and jazz.

Manley also skated a clean, charged program that drew good marks and loud cheers from the Canadian fans. The other Americans, Caryn Kadavy and Jill Trenary, also did well, finishing the day fifth and sixth, respectively.

Tragedy struck on Mount Allan for the second time when the Austrian ski team's doctor, Joerg Oberhammer, 47, died instantly when he was crushed by a snow-grooming machine after he collided with another skier.

Bradford MacDonald, 17, of Calgary, is still in a coma after skiing into a tree last week after working earlier that day as a photo messenger for The Associated Press.

The Games were spiced with a little controversy after an unusual personal criticism about the U.S. hockey team by International Olympic Committee President Juan Antonio Samaranch.

"It is a pity the Americans are so weak," Samaranch said. "They are good players, but they have no cohesion. They have no coordination between them."

"Everyone is playing his own game," he said. "When they have the puck, never, never do they hit the puck to one another. They run and shoot, run and shoot. And the Russians are playing another way."

The undefeated Soviets could clinch the gold medal today when they play top-seeded Sweden in a game between slick-passing teams. However, if Finland beats Czechoslovakia today, the Finns' match with the Soviets on Sunday will be for the gold medal.

U.S. Coach Dave Peterson didn't care much for Samaranch's assessment, saying he wasn't aware Samaranch was an expert in the sport, but Peterson didn't refute him.

The Americans beat Switzerland 8-4 to end the tournament in seventh place, the same spot they finished in 1984.

The Soviets boosted their medal-leading total to 25 with a sweep in the women's 20-kilometer cross-country race. Raisa Smetanina, who won the bronze, increased her Olympic career total to nine medals — more than any other woman.

East Germany remained second on the medal list with 17, followed by Switzerland with 11, Austria nine, Finland six.

West Germany, the Netherlands and Norway have five each, and Sweden, the United States and Canada have four each.

Basnight Out But Rebs Win Anyway

By The Associated Press
Jarvis Basnight was knocked out in the opening minute by Pacific University but Nevada-Las Vegas won on points anyway.

Basnight, second in the NCAA in field goal percentage and the rebounding leader of the Runnin' Rebels, was knocked unconscious when Pacific's Holger Fuerst elbowed him under the backboard 49 seconds into Thursday night's game.

Without him, the eighth-ranked Runnin' Rebels broke a 30-30 tie late in the first half and went on to beat Pacific 77-61.

Gerald Paddio scored 18 points and Anthony Cook added 15 for the Runnin' Rebels, who gave the Tigers their 18th consecutive loss. Stacey Augmon had 14 rebounds for Nevada-Las Vegas.

"I was very happy to get a win without Jarvis," Rebels Coach Jerry Tarkanian said. "Early in the game, we did not have anything going. We were absolutely horrible. Stacey Augmon was not there in the first half, but in the second half, his offensive rebounding made the difference."

Basnight, who makes 68.2 percent of his shots and averages 7.4 rebounds, was taken to Dameron Hospital in Stockton, Calif., with a concussion. He was released after the game but did not return to the arena.

"Las Vegas is a very good basketball team," Pacific Coach Denis Willens said. "Tonight, we could not play any better. We tried to slow the tempo down. We played the best 19 minutes and 30 seconds we could play against them."

In other Top Twenty games, No. 1 Temple beat Duquesne 94-55, No. 2 Purdue beat Illinois 93-79, No. 10 Syracuse beat Providence 91-73, No. 11 Brigham Young beat Air Force 76-63, No. 14 Bradley beat Tulsa 67-62, No. 16 Wyoming beat Utah 79-56, No. 19 Loyola of California beat St. Mary's of California 96-94 and No. 20 Georgia Tech beat Virginia 76-71.

Nevada-Las Vegas, 24-3 and 13-2 in the PCAA, scored the last four points of the first half to lead 34-30. The Rebels opened the second half with a 13-4 run in the first five minutes.

"In the first half, we were all playing together and everybody was doing what we were told to do," Pacific guard Christian Gray said. "Then — it always happens — you have a couple of individuals not playing together, and you break down."

"I was surprised we shut them down in the first half," guard Dan Embick said. "It was the best defense we played all year."

No. 1 Temple 94, Duquesne 55
Mark Macon scored 24 points and Mike Vreeswyk added 19 as Temple, 24-1 and 16-0 in the Atlantic 10, won its 10th consecutive game.

Macon scored 18 points in the first half, matching the total for Duquesne's team. He made 9 of 18 shots and all six free throws.

Vreeswyk made five 3-pointers and Tim Perry scored 13 points, had nine rebounds and blocked nine shots. Ramon Rovas had 10 rebounds for Temple.

Steve Thompson scored 18 points for Duquesne, 9-18 and 5-11.

No. 2 Purdue 93, Illinois 79
Melvin McCants scored 22 points, including six of Purdue's first 11 in the second half.

McCants' spurt helped the Boiler-makers open a 57-41 lead with 15:57 remaining. Purdue, 23-2 and 12-1 in the Big Ten, led by at least 10 points the rest of the way.

Nick Anderson scored 21 points to lead Illinois, 18-9 and 8-6. Lowell Hamilton and Kendall Gill scored 16 points each.

No. 10 Syracuse 91, Providence 73
Steve Thompson scored 18 points as the Orangemen used 15-point runs in each half to gain their 18th consecutive victory over Providence, 10-15 and 4-10.

Syracuse, 21-6 and 10-4 in the Big East, scored 15 straight points for a 29-12 lead, led 50-36 at the half and used its second 15-point spurt to go up by 25.

Delray Brooks scored 17 points for Providence, which has lost four straight and 11 of 13.

No. 11 BYU 76, Air Force 62
Michael Smith scored 21 points and had 12 rebounds for Brigham Young, 23-2 and 12-1 in the Western Athletic Conference.

Air Force, 11-3 and 4-9 in the Western Athletic Conference, stayed even with Brigham Young for the first 11 minutes before the Cougars opened a 37-25 lead with 2:29 remaining in the half.

Mike Hammond and Raymond Dudley scored 18 each for the Falcons.

NBC To Introduce Three New Shows

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NBC said it will introduce three new television shows next month and shift several current programs in the first phase of a mid-season programming change.

The new series are "In the Heat of the Night," based on the 1967 Academy Award-winning motion picture, "Aaron's Way" and the returning "Bronx Zoo."

Carroll O'Connor and Howard E. Rollins star in the new version of "In the Heat of the Night," which tells the story of the grudging cooperation between a Southern white sheriff and a Northern black detective.

The two-hour preview of the series will be presented on Sunday, March 6. The regular series will make its debut on Tuesday, March 15, in the 9-10 p.m. EST time slot behind "Matlock."

"Aaron's Way," starring Merlin Olsen as an Amish farmer who moves from his Pennsylvania home to California's wine country, will have a two-hour preview Wednesday, March 9. The series will begin at 8-9 p.m. EST on Wednesday, March 16. "The Bronx Zoo," starring Edward Asner as a tough high school principal, will have its premiere telecast on Wednesday, March 30, at 10-11 p.m. EST.

In other changes announced Thursday by Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment, "Hunter," currently telecast on Tuesdays, will move to 10-11 p.m. EST Saturday on March 12. It will replace "J.J. Starbuck," which will return at a later date.

"A Year in the Life" will move back one hour to 10-11 p.m. EST from March 9-23, returning to its regular time slot of 9-10 p.m. EST on April 6.

"Highway to Heaven" will move back one hour to 9-10 p.m. EST Wednesday from March 16-30, then return at a later date.

"St. Elsewhere" will be telecast on Wednesday, March 2, then leave the air until a later date. This is the final season for "St. Elsewhere."

Reagan Honors Wayne Newton

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan honored singer Wayne Newton at the White House for participating in United Service Organizations tours to entertain armed forces overseas.

Newton received a plaque Thursday for giving a Thanksgiving tour aboard ships in the Mediterranean and also touring the Arabian Sea and the Persian Gulf, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

"We talked about his Las Vegas years," Newton said of his conversation with the president. "I didn't sing for him and he didn't sing for me, and I think we'll probably keep it that way."

The singer brought Washington a touch of glitzy Las Vegas, where he is one of the biggest entertainment draws, by arriving at the White House in a caravan of three stretch limousines.

Screaming Comedian Faces Suit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — United Artists Pictures has filed a $5.6 million lawsuit against screaming comedian Sam Kinison, claiming he "acted with despicable conduct" when he allegedly breached an obligation to appear in a film.

UA's suit, filed Thursday in Superior Court, contends that Kinison refused to appear as the title character in the film "ATUK" after he developed the movie.

The lawsuit, which seeks $4.6 million in actual damages and $1 million in punitive damages, says Kinison's representatives told the studio that he had approved the screenplay and would appear in the film.

However, the comic, who has appeared on NBC's "Late Night with David Letterman" and had his own cable television special, began demanding revisions in the screenplay, the suit states.

When the studio failed to meet his demands, the suit says Kinison said he "would walk through his role during the filming of the picture and thereby deliberately give an uninspired and substandard performance."

A message seeking comment was left Thursday night for Kinison at The Comedy Store, a Sunset Boulevard nightclub where he frequently appears.

UA also announced Thursday that it is cancelling production of "ATUK," which began filming in New York on Feb. 16.

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY Feb. 27

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): The situation at home this morning may not be as ideal as you would like, but you can improve this quickly and make some rapid progress.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Be extremely accurate when making out any reports or statements today, and don't waste any valuable time this afternoon.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You will have a fine idea on how to handle a financial difficulty, so go ahead with it, but be sure not to change boats in midstream.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Forget your resentment of a co-worker, as this will only hurt your position in the long run. Don't push your opinions on anyone.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): You may not agree with the plans your mate has made, but it will do no good to argue about this. This is not a good time to make important decisions.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): If you must have any important discussions today, make them short and to-the-point. Set aside some time for relaxation tonight.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Handle a long-standing problem quickly this morning so you can move on to more important matters. Your employer can help your progress.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): You have some fine ideas which could work to your benefit, so don't let anyone change your mind or distract you from your work.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Take care of any important matters early in the day so you can finish the dull chores you have been putting off for too long.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): You could make an enemy quite easily today by saying the wrong thing, so be very cautious about how you word your thoughts.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Some special thought for your mate would be wise this evening, as he or she may be feeling out of sorts. Get plenty of rest tonight.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): Try to organize your activities more efficiently. This will make your work easier and give you some needed time for recreation.

Opening lead: Three of ♦
 There are two words that the prudent bridge writer soon learns to discard from his vocabulary. They are "never" and "always." Use one, and that very day you will come across an exception to the rule.

North-South conducted a reasonable auction to five spades. Note that North cue-bid his heart ace before showing spade support. The one disadvantage of the auction was that it painted a complete picture of the North hand.

Sitting West was Tom Smith of Greenwich, Conn, a top-ranked player and member of the Goren Editorial Board. He knew all about "never" leading away from an ace, but it was obvious that North's distribution was 3-1-4-5 and that if the enemy had a weakness, it was going to be in diamonds. So he committed the unpardonable bridge crime of underleading his ace of diamonds.

As the cards lie, that rated to be the killing lead. If declarer finessed the jack, East would win the queen, and ruff the third diamond for a one-trick set.

Now Smith's reputation worked against him. After considerable thought, declarer called for the king from dummy! When that held, he cashed two high clubs for diamond discards and ran the queen of spades. When that also worked, declarer had no trouble making all the tricks.

"Nice lead," remarked declarer, as he scored up one trick more than did his counterpart at the other table in the match. The only difference was that there the contract was six spades!
