National Unemployment Hits 14-Year Low

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's unemployment rate fell to 5.4 percent in April, the lowest it has been since June 1974, as 606,000 people found jobs, the government said today.

The number of unemployed Americans fell by 191,000 to just over 6.6 million, dropping the jobless rate 0.2 percentage point from March's 5.6 percent.

Nearly all of the jobless decline occurred among adult men, with their unemployment rate falling 0.3 percentage point to 4.6 percent.

The jobless rate for adult women, which had dropped in March, was unchanged last month at 4.8 percent.

The unemployment rate calculations are based on a monthly survey of the nation's households by the Labor Department.

A separate survey of business payrolls showed a gain of 175,000 jobs in April, more than one-fourth of them on factory assembly lines in industries that have increased their exports in recent months.

Two industries, fabricated metal products and machinery, accounted for half of the 45,000 new factory jobs.

Hospital and business services — the hottest area of job growth of late — showed a gain of 55,000. Employment at wholesalers grew by 15,000 while banks and financial houses bounced back with 4,000 new jobs after losing 7,000 in March.

The department said nearly all of the improvement in the unemployment figures was among people who had been laid off from their last jobs, as opposed to those who had quit or were seeking employment for the first time.

"The number of unemployed job losers declined to slightly less than 3 million and the proportion of the total jobless was at its lowest point this decade, 44 percent," said Janet L. Norwood, the commissioner of labor statistics.

Investors, anticipating a strong employment report, had sent the Dow Jones Industrial Average down more than 38 points in trading Wednesday and Thursday. Analysts said the sell off was a reflection of fears that the Federal Reserve Board would view the job figures as an indication that the economy was on the verge of overheating and would try to cool it off by raising interest rates.

The household and payroll surveys often provide different job gain calculations for the same month but tend to balance one another out over several months. While the household survey showed that far more jobs had been created than was reflected in the business survey, just the opposite had been recorded in February and March.

For the first four months of the year, however, the two surveys show fairly similar gains — 1.2 million payroll-survey job growth against 1.0 million household-survey job gains.

Growth in voluntary part-time jobs accounted for two-thirds of the increase in the number of working Americans.

"We often fall into the trap of reacting negatively to any job expansion that is not full time," Ms. Norwood told the congressional Joint Economic Committee. "But some one out of every eight workers — 15 million in all — do not want fulltime jobs."

The number of people working parttime because they could not find fulltime work actually fell by 150,000 last month, still a "level of concern," Ms. Norwood said.

Martin Hospital Board Opposes PCMH Proposal To Add 140 Beds

WILLIAMSTON — Martin County Hospital's directors have gone on record unanimously opposing Pitt County Memorial Hospital's proposal to add 140 beds, contending the addition at PCMH would only increase difficulties for smaller hospitals fighting to remain solvent.

In voicing opposition to the addition, board member Reg Coltrain said, "We feel like we're fighting a monopoly. They're just (attempting) to move it all to Greenville."

Martin Hospital board members agreed they would not oppose the proposed addition at Pitt if they were for tertiary, or acute, care beds. "But we know there are non-tertiary care patients taking up beds at Pitt now. And this is going to open up other beds to primary care there," Coltrain said.

A letter to Martin General Hospital administrator George Brandt from PCMH administrator Jack Richardson stated "the beds are needed for teaching and medical treatments not provided by facilities like Martin General."

Richardson has said that the proposed bed addition at Pitt will help all area hospitals. "We don't see this as taking away from surrounding hospitals, but rather as adding to them," he said. He noted that 60 percent of Pitt Memorial's patients come from outside Pitt County. "We are beginning to fill up the hospital so that Pitt County people have a hard time getting in."

PCMH plans to seek the beds in an application to be made May 16 certifying the need to the State Department of Facility Services.

"If we thought it would improve medical care for the people of eastern North Carolina," Coltrain said, "we'd be all for it."

Instead of fulfilling such a need, the Martin Hospital board members said, it will impose added problems in recruiting nurses and physicians for smaller area hospitals.

"Pitt pays higher salaries," board member James O. Hagwood pointed out. "I am concerned, too, that new beds at Pitt may take beds away from other area hospitals. They (the state facilities services) can do that, but whether they would or not is another thing. The state health plan shows that more beds are not needed in this area until 1992."

Board members expressed a fear that PCMH might be trying a different approach to achieve the goal of adding the extra beds.

"Our primary goal (in opposing the proposed addition of beds at Pitt) is not to hurt Pitt or the medical community," Hagwood said. "We want to see if we can stimulate some discussion and cooperation among hospitals, health care officials and legislators."

Board member Don Christopher said he feels there is a way for "everybody to benefit. We would love to see Pitt get its 140 tertiary care beds, then refer patients to Martin General for primary care." He added he would also "like to see an outreach program where doctors from the ECU School of Medicine would treat patients at surrounding community hospitals."

Martin General's list of objections is being sent to Pitt Memorial officials, to officials in state facility services and to area legislators.

Tougher Drug Laws Proposed

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin today announced a package of tough new proposals to keep convicted drug traffickers in prison for longer periods.

"North Carolina has some of the toughest sounding drug trafficking laws in the nation," Martin said at a news conference. "Unfortunately, these ... laws look tougher on paper than in practice."

Martin said current North Carolina drug laws provide for a mandatory five to 45-year sentence for drug dealers, depending on the severity of the crime. But under current law, a drug convict can have his prison term drastically reduced through the so-called "good time" and gain time rules.

Thus, a convict may serve as little as one-eighth of his original sentence, Martin said.

"Good time" laws cut a sentence in half in return for an inmate's good behavior in prison. Under gain time, created to encourage rehabilitation, a prisoner may reduce a sentence through "meaningful" work while in prison.

Martin said he would propose abolishing both provisions for convicted drug traffickers.

He also said he would seek mandatory life sentences for convicted drug ring leaders. Those whose drug activities result in someone's death could face the death penalty, he said.

Finally, Martin said he would urge the Legislature to pass a measure backed by state Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, making it a felony to possess any amount of cocaine.

Council Begins Consideration Of $21.6 Million Budget Plan

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

Members of the Greenville City Council, along with the mayor, city manager, and several city department heads, shared one thing in common Monday.

That one thing was a two-volume, 700-page document called the 1988-89 city budget proposal.

For four hours, city officials discussed Greenville's future finances in the first of several meetings at City Hall designed to examine City Manager Greg Knowles' financial perception of council's priorities and direction for the upcoming year.

Taking into account the council's emphasis on city growth and expansion, Knowles has proposed an expansion of the city budget by 7.8 percent — a rise from $19,656,163 to $21,693,443. An additional proposal to initiate a complex capital improvement program would raise the budget by nearly half a million dollars, or 10.36 percent over last year's budget.

"It's no longer my budget," Knowles told the council near the beginning of the meeting. "It's now up to you to decide whether I've put proper emphasis on the proper areas. You have to decide whether or not this is an adequate reflection of where you want to go (with the budget)," he said.

Budget topics discussed Monday consisted primarily of operating costs for various city departments, the majority of which showed proposed increases over last year.

•Office of the City Clerk — Knowles recommended $101,175 for 1988-89 compared to $89,717 budgeted this year. The increase is partly attributed to the rise in advertising costs and recording fees and the addition of a staff member.

•Legal Services — a proposed increase of $2,686 in 1988-89, from $90,203 to $92,889, which will partly account for an increase in appropriations relating to professional services.

•Personnel — a proposal of $173,502, over this year's $140,558 to

County Board OKs Life Center Grant

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County Commissioners, at a workshop meeting Thursday, agreed to contribute $17,000 in matching money to the Greenville Community Life Center — which operates the Greenville Community Shelter at the old Agnes Fullilove school on Chestnut Street — if a federal grant of $135,000 is obtained.

County Manager Kramer Jackson told commissioners that the community life center is applying for a federal grant to renovate the old school. The renovation would include several apartments for transitional housing for the homeless.

But Jackson said the non-profit organization is short $17,000 of the required $25,000 local match.

The board then approved the "one-time contribution" in an effort to help secure the $110,000 in renovation money and $25,000 in administration funds.

Commissioners also agreed to schedule interviews with three engineering firms who submitted proposals to do a county-wide water and sewer study.

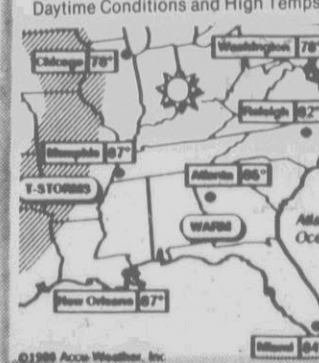

Representatives of the firms — Ragsdale Consultants of Johnston County, and Rivers and Associates and L.E. Wooten & Co., both of Greenville — will be asked to meet with the board on May 17.

Architects selected by commissioners to do a county facilities master plan will also be asked to meet with commissioners May 17, to

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Only A Start

Challenges Await ECU Graduates

It's hard to think of commencement as the beginning. But for the East Carolina University graduates that march to receive degrees Saturday, it is exactly that.

Although it represents the completion of years of effort, the college degree each accepts is only a start. Whether the beginning of work or further study, that degree merely represents a genesis — a collection of the raw material necessary for economic and personal fulfillment. To be effective, each individual must take this base of knowledge and expertise and mold it to fit his or her own talents and aspirations.

Teachers, managers, researchers, social workers and potential doctors and lawyers will march to take their places in society Saturday. These men and women are the leaders of today.

For them, this beginning will test the mettle of the education that has gone before. The jobs they secure and the quality of work they bring to task will have a significant effect on the future. In turn, the quality of task and the financial benefits it brings will play a large role in their lives — and influence their impact on society.

These graduates face sharp, complex issues in the waiting world. They must cope with changing societal roles, a shifting economic future, a threatened environment and uneasy world peace. Their challenge is to balance these issues successfully, to utilize the expertise provided by their preparation to be leaders, thinkers and doers.

The communities that will draw and employ these workers will offer their own set of challenges that serve as hurdles to fulfillment. In eastern North Carolina, these obstacles are, figuratively, both feast and famine. Graduates must approach problems created by economic frustration in the region's more rural areas, as well as sharp growing pains counties like Pitt, Cumberland and New Hanover experience. They will be charged with addressing tangible problems, from illiteracy to infant mortality to inadequate services.

The degrees graduates receive Saturday are representative of the knowledge they have acquired. But these degrees play a real, not symbolic, role in both the graduates' and communities' success.

A college diploma is a license to make dreams come true. The graduates who step up Saturday to receive theirs must pledge to use it accordingly.

U.S. Bungles Foreign Policy Issues

The United States apparently had a policy designed to bring about the departure of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega from Panama.

The problem is, it hasn't worked. The general is still in charge in Panama and the economic measures brought by the United States to force him out, by not doing what they were supposed to, have only left him in a stronger position.

Now Noriega is defiant. He is saying not only that he will stay in Panama but he will also retain his hold on the government.

The Panama Canal is of utmost strategic value to the United States and its allies. Yet the country which will ultimately control it is in the hands of a leader who has backed down the United States at its own economic control game.

While it is doubtful that the United States will, or should, make use of military force in its quarrel with the Noriega regime it is obvious that some new initiative will be necessary if the embarrassment of having a Noriega in Panama ends. It is questionable whether further economic sanctions will bring about the results which are desired by the United States. Thus the world can be left with a Panama which Noriega controls whether this nation likes it or not.

The United States may be making progress on major diplomatic fronts such as arms reduction talks with the Soviets but it falls pitifully short when faced with discomforting situations that require understanding. The situation in Panama didn't develop overnight; the current administration simply doesn't have the foreign policy insight to recognize trouble and deal with it effectively before it becomes unmanageable, like Noriega.

A clear pattern for squelching foreign policy crises with questionable military action has emerged during the Reagan administration. Consider Grenada, for example, or Honduras. While proficiency with this type of approach is essential, complete dependence in it is precarious. The nation needs comprehension and diplomatic aplomb as well.

Most agree that Noriega should leave for the benefit of the Panamanian people and Western Hemisphere stability. Economic sanctions didn't accomplish that, however. Now he has strengthened his hold on that little nation and the United States is left with an enormous diplomatic problem.

Meese In Place Until September

WASHINGTON (AP) — This city is abuzz with speculation over when or whether Edwin Meese III will step down as attorney general. But largely overlooked in the latest flap is a clue from Meese himself that he intends to stay at least until September.

Amid a stream of public disclosures about his assorted legal problems, Meese privately and quickly accepted an invitation to make an official visit to Japan as attorney general Aug. 29-Sept. 1. Even though the trip itself has engendered controversy, he gives every indication of planning to go.

At Mel Krupin's restaurant, frequented by lawyers and lobbyists, political operatives and pundits, Krupin says, "They talk about Meese but they don't make any comments" about the propriety of Meese's actions. "Nobody knows if he's going to stay or go. They just talk about how long he'll stay."

Independent counsel James McKay is not expected to seek indictments of Meese in any of the handful of cases he has investigated, but McKay's public report is expected late this month.

McKay is expected to excoriate Meese for tolerating the appearance of conflicts of interest even where they may not in fact exist. Actions creating such appearances are forbidden by presidential order.

McKay then is likely to refer his evidence to Justice Department internal ethics officers for recommendations on whether administrative discipline by President Reagan is required.

Most observers predict one of two outcomes: either Meese will seize the lack of an indictment as vindication and quickly step down or McKay's move will allow him to continue for a decent interval before departing voluntarily.

A less widely held view is that Meese will not leave unless Reagan forces him out.

This debate has emerged from months of seemingly non-stop Meese revelations.

On Jan. 29, the Los Angeles Times disclosed a 1986 memo from his confidant E. Robert Wallach to Meese that, to some, seemed to suggest illegal bribes to Israeli officials to clear the way for an oil pipeline.

On Feb. 11, Meese's former White House colleague Lyn Nofziger was convicted of lobbying for Wedtech — a reminder that Meese remains under investigation for his role on behalf of that Bronx, N.Y., defense contractor.

Unseen by the public until this week, an invitation for Meese arrived March 15 from Japanese Justice Minister Yukio Hayashida to visit Japan beginning Aug. 29. Meese's official visit would coincide with a private conference on U.S.-Japanese legal issues running through Sept. 1.

A day after the invitation arrived, independent counsel Lawrence Walsh returned an indictment in the Iran-Contra case. Although Meese was not among Walsh's targets, the charges were a reminder of Meese's oft-criticized role in investigating that scandal.

Sometime before the end of March, McKay privately told Meese's attorneys he did not have enough evidence for indictments in the pipeline case or in another matter in which Meese approved a major reversal of Justice Department telephone antitrust policy while owning stock in regional telephone companies that could benefit from the reversal.

On March 29, Deputy Attorney General Arnold Burns and Assistant Attorney William Weld, head of the criminal division, quit on short notice. They made it clear that they doubted Meese could run the department effectively, and Weld told Meese that if he were the independent counsel he would indict the attorney general.

On April 1, McKay publicly announced his interim decision about the pipeline and telephone cases, but added that his grand jury had other matters to investigate.

On April 4, Meese privately wrote Hayashida he was "most pleased to accept your gracious invitation to visit Japan at the end of this summer." Justice Department political appointees this week described this response as extraordinarily quick compared to other matters they say have languished in Meese's office for months and even years, such as whether to challenge two major Supreme Court rulings on criminal law.

On April 13, The Associated Press reported that a wealthy Washington real estate family arranged to pay a $40,000 annual salary to Meese's wife, Ursula, then won renewal of a $50 million lease to provide offices for the Justice Department and quickly sold the building for a $28 million profit. McKay is investigating the matter.

On April 20, Burns and Weld met Reagan and told him face-to-face of their concerns. The president promptly summoned Meese, heard his side and — as Reagan has always done before — reaffirmed support for his longtime friend.

On April 21, in his first mention of leaving, Meese told USA Today, "If an attorney general was indicted, I think that would be a basis for stepping aside." But he added, "I don't know of any factor right now that would cause me to resign."

On April 26, the co-sponsor of the Japan conference mailed 30,000 copies of a letter from Meese to lawyers and businessmen asking them to pay more than $3,000 apiece to join him at the Japan conference.

On May 3, Meese's solicitation letter and Japan trip plans were disclosed in news reports. The Office of Government Ethics opened an investigation of the arrangements.

On May 4, William Barraclough, chief executive of the private group planning the Japan conference, said, "There are no indications whatever that Ed Meese is going to back out."

Facing A Political Tide In Poland

The current wave of strikes in Poland is basically caused by economics, but might yet turn into a political tide. That would have both a serious domestic impact and profoundly negative international consequences.

Currently, Poland is the freest country in the Communist bloc. The Catholic Church enjoys a privileged position and exerts immense popular influence. Indeed, the country's bishops have called for dialogue between the government and the strikers. The public media is accurate and lively. The newly established Weekly Review and the Catholic weekly Lad (Order), for instance, regularly take the government to task over various policies.

In the parliament, a Catholic deputy recently raised the hitherto sensitive issue of the disappearance during World War II of thousands of Polish prisoners of war in the Soviet Union and demanded that the truth finally be told.

In the last few years, Wojciech Jaruzelski's government has taken several steps toward broader democratization. In 1986, there was a total amnesty of political prisoners. Last year, an ombudsman's office was established to protect ordinary citizens from administrative abuses. A consultative council was formed, comprised of the country's leading intellectuals — including some former advisers to Solidarity, the suppressed labor federation. The council is to advise Jaruzelski on the government's policies, and he has already held several sessions listening to its members' suggestions.

Many unofficial political groups — such as the Catholic "Dean's Club" in Warsaw — where various controversial public issues are ventilated, have been tolerated. Even a skeleton Solidarity executive council, holding informal sessions and issuing statements telling the public of its deliberations, has been permitted. And the views of several former prominent Solidarity figures have been solicited by the official press.

In response to the government's conciliatory course, the political emotions of Poles have visibly calmed. Many do still hold a deep grudge against Jaruzelski for crushing Solidarity by imposing martial law and they would be ready to stage another confrontation with him. Yet, it seems, most people are willing to give his evolutionary approach a chance. They understand that the reforms in Poland have to move in tandem with those in the Soviet Union, and they are encouraged by the changes introduced there by Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

On the economic side, however, the situation in the country remains grim. It has improved since 1981 when the stores were virtually empty, but there are still recurring shortages of some essential goods. And, with steadily rising inflation, even those commodities that are for sale are often beyond the reach of an ordinary person. Worst hit are the old-age pensioners whose incomes are not indexed and young couples with children. The latter's conditions are often aggravated by an acute shortage of apartments suitable for growing families.

The government is acutely aware of the problems and last year adopted a comprehensive program of economic reforms. Encouraged by the perestroika reform movement in the Soviet Union, it has moved in the direction of a market economy by reducing centralized controls and offering greater scope of initiative to both public and private enterprises. In the latter case, in fact, it goes considerably further than the Soviet model. These steps have been accompanied by an overhaul of the entire financial system, aimed at increasing the prices of commodities to more nearly reflect the real costs of their production, and at reducing the subsidy of many goods and services that has been the traditional tool for equalizing incomes.

There is no question that, as in the Soviet Union, comprehensive changes are necessary to get Poland's economy moving. However, the problem is that the beneficial effects of the reform, again as in the Soviet Union, are not going to be felt immediately.

Indeed, in the near term lies a period of economic austerity, as noted in a report on Poland issued last year by the World Bank. It was for this reason that early this year the Polish government imposed stiff price increases on some foodstuffs, energy and transportation. This, in turn, led to the present labor unrest. The Polish workers' hardships, thus, are regrettable, but in a way they are unavoidable.

Should the government accept the workers' demands for wage increases, the thrust of its economic reforms will be lost. And if it resists, it risks a major political confrontation. At best, then, Jaruzelski can only buy time for now.

On balance, it is unlikely either that the Jaruzelski government will give in to the workers or that the workers will press their demands beyond the point of no return.

Faced with the new strikes, Jaruzelski had declared that he is willing to examine the workers' grievances and to try to help them as much as he can. But he is not going to abandon his program of economic reforms. His track record since 1981 suggests that he will stick to his course and, if necessary, will once again resort to emergency measures. Early yesterday, police raided a steel mill in Nowa Huta and arrested strike leaders and sealed off the Gdansk shipyard.

Most of the workers appear to understand this situation. They are, well aware that, despite their siren calls, the militant Solidarity leaders cannot possibly prevail. And there is a safety valve.

Before the situation were to get really stormy, it is certain that the Catholic primate of Poland, Jozef Cardinal Glemp, would use his great authority to try to bring calm.

Yet, if in spite of all these the worst should come and workers press their strikes until the government invokes the emergency measures, it would be truly tragic for the Poles. New industrial turmoil would not enhance, but would hinder the implementation of the economic reforms that are so crucial for them. And a return to martial law would inevitably lead to curtailment of their hard-won political freedoms.

A new confrontation in Poland, moreover, could have profoundly negative international consequences.

It would be a serious embarrassment for Gorbachev at the very time that he is fighting for the future of his perestroika. It could prejudice against him — by demonstrating the futility of a reformist line — the major Soviet party conference set for the second part of June.

State Offers Historical Publications At Bargain Prices

By JIM SCHLOSSER
Greensboro News & Record
GREENSBORO (AP) — Hurry, hurry, hurry. Get 'em while they last. First come, first serve. Please, no shoving or pushing.

"It's history at half-price, but it's still good history," said Peggy Howe of the Department of Cultural Resources.

The department's Historical Publications Sections is offering about one-third of its 138 book and pamphlet titles at 50 percent off. The big sale will last through September.

Got a paper due on North Carolina during the Depression? You need a copy of "Hard Times," tracing the early years of the Depression in the state. Follow that with "North Carolina and the New Deal," about how Franklin Roosevelt helped the state through the Depression.

Both of these regular $4 values are going for $2 each.

Need an interesting subject pertaining to black history? How about "James City," the story of a town founded by blacks outside New Bern after the Civil War. Another $4 value for $2.

Jeffrey Crow, administrator of the Historical Publications Section, believes one of the best buys, considering the timing, is "North Carolina Signers," biographical sketches of the Tar Heels who signed the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.

With 1987-89 being the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the signing and adoption of the Constitution, the book is a bargain at a buck.

Crow says the reason the state is cutting prices is simple: It needs the money.

"It's a good way to generate receipts," he says. "We are required by the General Assembly to generate $130,000 in sales."

Last year, the publication section generated only $118,000.

And it wasn't because North Carolinians suddenly lost interest in history. Demand for books was good, but the publications section ran out of certain titles because the legislature had cut its printing budget. Crow's office couldn't afford to reprint certain books.

For instance, the "The Old North State Fact Book" was in big demand because it answered questions that people are always asking about the state seal, the state bird, the state mammal, the state insect and so on.

"It's very popular with school children," Crow said. The same is true of "Pirates of Colonial North Carolina," with more than 100,000 copies in circulation. Every last copy is gone.

Crow's staff brought these out-of-print books to the lawmakers' attention last year. As a result, its printing budget was restored. Now the office is slowly starting to reprint certain books. Pirates and Old State are due for reprinting soon.

The books being offered at half price aren't the dregs in historical publication's inventory.

Crow said one of the best buys for those seriously interested in the state's history is the bound four-volume collection of the papers of John Gray Blount, a merchant who was a political power during the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

The first three volumes are being sold at half price at $7.50, and the fourth and most recent volume goes for $14.

"His papers span a long period of time, 1765 to 1833, and are very rich documentary material on political, economic and social history of that period," Crow says. "Blount corresponded with major national figures, such as Andrew Jackson. This is original source material that historians use."

For more information about the free books and half-price books, write the Historical Publications Section, Division of Archives and History, 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh, 27611.

Martin Budget Proposes Employee Pay Raise

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin has unveiled a $58.7 million budget supplement that includes a 4.5 percent raise for state employees, new programs for the young and old and $37 million in tax breaks for businesses.

Some Democrats said Martin was proposing major new spending programs only because he faces a November election against Democratic Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, but Martin said he was responsible for running the government as well as his campaign.

"To take initiative and to make major proposal in any year is a sign of good leadership, whether it's an election year or not," Martin said. "Yes, there are programs here that deal with identified needs of the people. We can't afford to stop just because there's going to be an election."

Martin called for $27 million to reinstate most of a 3 percent sales tax discount for merchants abolished in 1987, a $10 million corporate income tax break that helped lure an RJR Nabisco plant to Wake County, $18.8 million to hire adult school bus drivers and $31.8 million for prison construction.

He also requested money for employee training, coastal development, state parks, 60 additional highway patrol troopers, local water and sewer loans and capital projects for state facilities and the community college and University of North Carolina systems.

Slightly less than half of the proposed spending increase — $239.9 million — would go for capital projects, which do not become a part of the permanent budget as do such items as pay increases.

The budget supplement promises to become embroiled in election-year politics because it seeks to carry out many of the initiatives Martin has proposed and is trumpeting as he campaigns for a second term.

For example, the package includes the governor's plan for a major bureaucratic shuffle — consolidating the state's environmental and health programs in a new cabinet-level department while abolishing the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

Jordan and other Democratic legislative leaders have said there is not time to consider the plan during next month's session. Martin has accused them of delaying action to deny him a major success in an election year.

Martin's proposals for a new preschool program and improved services for the elderly are rivaled by similar programs crafted by Democrat-dominated legislative study committees.

Also, Martin's economic development proposals would expand the state Department of Commerce, which Jordan has said he would abolish if elected. Jordan wants a new public-private corporation to direct the state's economic development efforts — an idea Martin calls "dumb and dangerous."

Democratic leaders are likely to try to grant a bigger pay raise than Martin's recommended 4.5 percent.

Martin announced in January he would seek restoration of the 3 percent merchants' sales tax discount abolished in 1987 as part of the school financing bill which repealed the inventory tax.

The $27 million appropriation would enable about 90 percent of the state's merchants to take the 3 percent deduction for collecting sales taxes, Cameron said. The other 10 percent are large companies that would be among the primary beneficiaries of inventory tax abolition, he said.

The corporate income tax break Martin proposed drew support of legislative leaders earlier this year in discussions with RJR Nabisco officials who subsequently announced plans for a new cookie plant in Garner.

The reduction would result from a revision of the formula used to determine a company's state tax liability. It is unclear how many businesses other than RJR Nabisco would benefit from the change.

Martin requested $3.5 million for eight pilot preschool programs, the first step in an eventual statewide effort to prevent dropouts by helping "at-risk" children prepare for school.

The provision for bus drivers appears to have bipartisan support. It would increase the hourly wage from $4.91 to $6.10, which officials hope will help them recruit adult drivers. The U.S. Department of Labor has ordered North Carolina to stop using 17-year-old drivers.

Martin did not propose reducing or abolishing the $924,500 fund for poor women's abortions as he has done in previous years. Martin said he would renew his effort to reduce the fund in the 1989-1991 budget.

The budget calls for $5 million as a first installment in what Martin says will be a $48 million initiative to improve services for the elderly. He requested $1.2 million for incentive grants for county aging programs, $1.4 million for senior centers in the 19 counties without them and $675,100 for in-home services.

Martin requested $4 million for state park improvement and maintenance.

He also called for a $37.5 million increase in the state highway fund, including $8 million for resurfacing roads. The administration will ask the Legislature to approve a $450 million bond issue to reduce the backlog of construction needs, he said.

Among the capital projects sought in the supplemental budget are a new treatment facility for drunken drivers ($2.5 million); land for a state hazardous waste facility ($2 million); repairs of state facilities ($25 million); continued development of the state zoo ($6 million); and additional loans and grants for local clean-water projects ($40 million).

The budget recommends issuing $34.9 million in general obligation bonds to finance several projects, including three parking decks for the state government complex in Raleigh and a $15 million reserve to purchase land for the superconducting super collider if the federal government decides to put the project in Durham, Person and Granville counties.

Budget Includes Funding For Projects In Robeson

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin's proposed budget supplement includes funds for a new Superior Court judgeship for Robeson County promised in negotiations between state legislative leaders and supporters of slain Indian activist Julian Pierce.

The budget proposal also includes funds for a public defender's office in the racially troubled county and a $35,000 donation to a Lumbee outdoor drama.

The proposed expenditure of $482,179 "arises out of the turmoil and the anguish that Robeson County had to face a couple of months ago and over the past year," Martin said at a news conference Thursday.

The money "doesn't relieve all of the anguish or the anger but at least it says that somebody's listening to some of their requests," Martin said.

The proposal to create a new Superior Court judgeship stems from an agreement struck by Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, Democratic legislative leaders and Robeson community leaders in the wake of the March slaying of judicial candidate Pierce.

Pierce, a Lumbee Indian, was running for Superior Court judge against District Attorney Joe Freeman Britt, a white. After his slaying in what authorities called a domestic quarrel, supporters asked for a special General Assembly session to amend state law to let another minority candidate enter the race.

Under the compromise reached with legislative leaders, Martin agreed to request funds for a second Superior Court judgeship in the county and to appoint a black or Indian as the judge.

Other items in Martin's budget were included in a report compiled last year by the state Commission on Indian Affairs, which called for state intervention to correct perceived injustices toward minorities in Robeson's judicial system. The report requested a public defender office, saying many low-income blacks and Indians are not satisfied with their representation by court-appointed lawyers.

Martin's budget seeks $385,579 for the office, which would support a 10-person staff and serve Robeson County and adjacent Scotland County.

Storms Bring Hail

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Scattered thunderstorms in southeastern North Carolina Thursday dropped pea- and marble-size hail on the area, but no serious crop damage was reported.

Heavy rains flooded many Wilmington streets as 1.19 inches of rain drenched the city.

The hail was "about the size of a garden pea," said Bud Newkirk, general manager of the swine division at King Farms, north of Wallace. Newkirk said it fell about three or four minutes.

Small pellets of hail also fell in northern Pender County, said Mark Keene, an extension agent. Keene said he was unaware of any damage.

The National Weather Service reported some of the strongest storms that marched across North Carolina hit in New Hanover, Onslow, Pender and Duplin counties.

There were reports of hailstones as large as golf balls in Cumberland County. In Dare County, authorities reported several streets flooded by rain water.

Stevens' Plants To Stay Open

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina Attorney General Lacy Thornburg says the new owners of J.P. Stevens & Co. have agreed to keep plants open for two years to avoid a lawsuit.

Thornburg and the attorneys general of South Carolina and New York had threatened to file suit today over the takeover of J.P. Stevens by West Point-Pepperell Inc, which will pay $1.22 billion for Stevens' 175-year-old sheet and towel operations. Pepperell plans to keep most of Stevens' operations but sell some to another textile producer, Bibb Co. of Macon, Ga., to satisfy federal antitrust concerns.

Odyssey Partners, a Wall Street investment firm that had been vying with Pepperell for Stevens, will get the company's other operations — including its carpet and industrial fabrics plants.

"While these commitments do not guarantee absolute protection of all plants and jobs, these commitments do provide significant protections to Stevens workers," Thornburg said at a news conference Thursday.

The states have reserved the right to go to court later "if it is necessary to protect competition in the textile industry," Thornburg said.

In return for the states agreeing not to file suit today, West Point-Pepperell and Bibb agreed to the following terms:

Preaching Students Suspended Again

MARION, N.C. (AP) — Five-year-old Matthew Strode returned from a suspension to "preach" outside Eastfield Elementary School to teachers and the principal, who listened for 15 minutes before suspending him again for 10 days.

Eastfield Principal Jim Gorst Thursday also suspended Matthew's 6-year-old sister, Pepper, for refusing to go into the building.

Gorst has suspended Matthew and Pepper three times in the last three weeks. He gave their 10-year-old brother, Duffey, his third suspension last Friday, for 10 days.

The Strodes and school officials faced off Thursday morning in the latest round of a monthlong fight over the children's right to preach before school. Parents David and Robin Strode say the children's rights are being violated.

From 7:30 to 7:45 a.m., Pepper stood quietly with Matthew behind the school's rear entrance as he and Duffey alternately shouted Bible verses. Duffey stood in the road outside the school gate, 100 yards away.

"You're in violation of school rules by being out here," Gorst told Matthew and Pepper.

"Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees," yelled Duffey from the gate.

"Marriage is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled. But whoremongers and adulterers God will judge," Matthew replied.

Gorst warned Matthew and Pepper again.

"The rule says if you're on campus after 7:30, you must go into the building," Gorst said.

After his third warning, Gorst approached Robin Strode's car, parked near the gate. Matthew and Pepper followed.

"Come in the office, please, with your children. I think you realize your children are in violation of school rules," Gorst said.

From outside the gate, Duffey continued yelling: "You're either a friend of the world and an enemy of God or a friend of God and an enemy of the world. Which is it? Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers. Ye are of your father the devil."

As Robin Strode left the school with Matthew and Pepper after meeting with Gorst, she said: "I hope the Lord takes every last one of them and does something to them. They ain't nothing but a bunch of hypocrites."

Although the children are honor roll students and Robin Strode has been picking up their homework during their suspensions, if they're suspended again, Matthew, Pepper and Duffey may not be promoted.

Robin and David Strode, who has been a street preacher since 1981, say their children's First Amendment rights to freedom of speech and religion are being violated.

"It's not the preaching, the issue is the disruptive noise, the screaming," Gorst said. "It's stressful to our teachers and it's stressful to our students."

When Duffey returns to school next

Friday, "he'll preach again and they'll suspend him again," Robin Strode said.

Gorst wouldn't comment on whether the children would be expelled next time. The school's policy allows for three suspensions.

"With short-term suspensions, that gives them the option to come back," Gorst said. "I would like to think that at the end of the suspensions, the children will come back to school so they can be educated."

Whether the children are promoted is "up to the teachers," he said.

If their children are not promoted, say Robin and David Strode, they intend to sue McDowell County Schools.

To the many friends that came out to vote for me Tuesday.

Educators Opposing Pay Policy

RALEIGH (AP) — A state teachers group says a pay policy adopted by the State Board of Education is a "breach of faith" because it endorses a statewide career ladder plan a year before the plan has been fully tested.

"We believe this is a major break with our organization," Karen Garr, president-elect of the North Carolina Association of Educators, said Thursday. "We have promised our members that we would work with policy makers of this state, and that no decision would be made until the experiment is concluded. This is a year in advance, and they are already saying we will go statewide."

The state is in the third year of a four-year experiment in which 16 school systems are trying a career ladder salary structure, a tiered merit-pay plan that rewards superior teachers with more pay and special duties. The NCAE has supported experimenting with the career ladder but has criticized several features of the plan, including its teacher evaluation and appeals procedures.

Board Chairman Howard H. Haworth said the board took a position in support of expanding the plan statewide so it could account for the career ladder as it develops its budget for the 1989-90 and 1990-91 school years. He said through visits to schools testing career ladders, the board has become convinced that the "majority opinion" favors statewide expansion of the plan, although the career ladder still may need refining.

But he said the board's action does not prevent the career ladder plan from being refined and changed or even from being scrapped after the end of its test period next year.

"My desiring it and the board's desiring it does not ensure it should go statewide," Haworth said. "We believe it ought to."

Ms. Garr attacked the board for refusing to let her speak in protest of its action.

"I cannot stress what a serious shift in policy this is," Ms. Garr said. "We really feel this is a breach of faith with NCAE and its members."

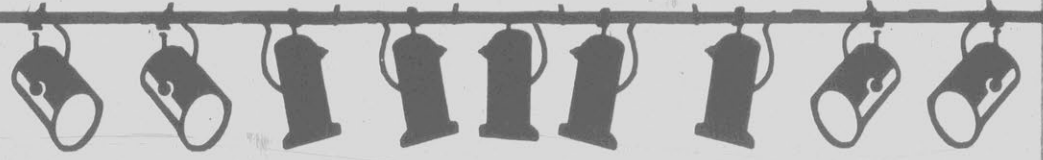

Haworth said he agreed to talk to Ms. Garr next week, but could not fit her into a crowded agenda at the last minute.

"Our meetings in Raleigh are deliberative and decision-making for policy purposes," Haworth said. "They are not public hearings."

He also said he knew of no agreements between the board and the teachers' group on the career ladder plan.

The pay policy, approved unanimously by the board, supports cost-of-living adjustments for school employees, recognizes the value of experience and training, and provides performance pay for the career ladder program.

Change Is Far From Over For The Outer Banks

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer
North Carolina used to boast that its coast was 20 years behind the problems of New Jersey and southern Florida and 10 years ahead of them when it came to solutions, but state officials say the spread has shrunk in recent years.

"Because of our remoteness we had more time to develop, to learn from their mistakes," said Dave Owens, director of the N.C. Division of Coastal Management. "Now I'd say we're only about five years behind their problems."

"There's very few permanent victories," Owens said. "We have to be involved in the struggle constantly. Once one problem is solved, another comes up. But I believe the citizens of this state recognize what they could lose, and they're willing to get involved." Change has come so hard and fast to North Carolina's Outer Banks that only one thing remains certain — the change is far from over.

"Growth is something that keeps magnifying constantly," says Barton Bauers, who's in charge of monitoring growth pressures and needs in Dare County. "Once it gets out of hand and heads in the wrong direction, it's impossible to reverse."

To some Outer Bankers, it's already out of hand.

Nags Head and Kill Devil Hills, which were sleepy coastal villages just 20 years ago, now resemble small cities with their five-lane bypasses, high-rise hotels and fast-food restaurants.

"Everybody seems to come here

Life on the Outer Banks has been governed by tides and seas and storms for centuries. Now, there's a new element — development. This is the last article in a series exploring the region's ability to cope with development that is being thrust on it as vacationers discover and rediscover the charms of the Outer Banks.

with a big fat dollar sign in their head," said Nellie Myrtle Pridgen, who grew up in Nags Head. "Our beaches are ruined."

Up north in Duck, Corolla and Southern Shores, dozens of housing developments have gone up along a stretch of N.C. 12 where long-time residents remember counting the cottages only 10 years ago.

"There's no doubt that as long as there is land to build on and the (national) economy continues to be good, these places are going to go up," said Bauers. "I just hope we don't get to the point where it's a concrete canyon and we ask, 'How do we reverse it?'"

Because most of the Outer Banks is national seashore and therefore protected from beachfront development, most of the construction will be concentrated in the villages that dot the 75 miles of beaches along the Atlantic Ocean.

"It's not reality to cut growth off completely," Owens said. "But transition is painful, and the residents are realizing that they have to regulate not only outsiders, but themselves."

Concepts like zoning and planning do not sit well with the hardy watermen who have lived on the Outer Banks all their lives. More than one long-time resident says zoning was rejected in the past because residents feared they would not be able to keep their crab pots in their front yard.

Prompted by specific development proposals, Dare and Hyde counties enacted modest zoning laws regulating such things as building heights, setbacks and public right-of-ways. But some residents would rather take their chances than allow government to regulate their lives.

"There's a lot of mistrust of political groups," said Bauers. "The feeling they have is that everyone would be forced to paint their house the same color yellow."

Owens agreed. "There always was a lot of freedom," he said. "People could do what they pleased, because there were so few of them. Any disputes were taken care of informally."

"But high-rise hotels and condos are a different ballgame altogether," he said. "What they learned in Nags Head 20 years ago and Duck 10 years ago, they are just seeing happen in Ocracoke and Hatteras now."

Bauers is in charge of the Area Development Coordinating Agency, which was formed last year after a 15-month study was conducted on growth in Dare County, which has 18,000 of the Outer Banks' 21,000 permanent residents.

The study, completed by the Maryland consulting firm of Booz, Allen & Hamilton, said uncontrolled growth could boost Dare County's year-round population to nearly 100,000 by the turn of the century, with an average tourist population of nearly 158,000 and up to 276,000 during peak months.

The population explosion would mean construction of single-family homes would grow by 289 percent, with apartments, condominiums, hotels and motels increasing by 281 percent, the study said.

To provide necessary services, the county would have to spend $155 million by the year 2000 for capital improvements to schools, jails and other facilities.

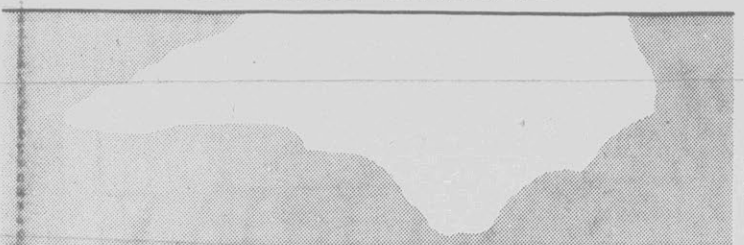

"It's difficult for the people in Hatteras to realize that what happened in Nags Head 20 years ago will be coming to them in the next five years," said Owens. "That's why local citizens need to get involved. They have to think about what kind of community they want to be."

State Sen. Marc Basnight said for years the remoteness of the Outer Banks insulated it from development. By the time the big developers set their sights on the area, he said, the state had already imposed stringent restrictions on coastal development.

But he said overdevelopment is still a possibility.

"We could get to that point very easily," he said. "A whole lot of bad things could happen."

IN THE STATE

Awareness Day

CHARLOTTE (AP) — People confined to wheelchairs will be able to dip their toes into a bubbling creek at a Mecklenburg County park thanks to a new "accessible" nature trail that will be dedicated Saturday in honor of National Barrier Awareness Day.

The event, which has been held in Washington, D.C., since its inception in 1985, was moved to Charlotte this year. Its purpose, local organizer Cindy Teal said Thursday, is to educate the public about the architectural, physical and psychological barriers facing disabled people.

Ms. Teal, who has multiple sclerosis and is legally blind, said the theme of this year's event is to demonstrate the wide variety of recreational activities available to disabled people.

Besides the dedication of the "Four Seasons Trail" at McDowell Park, there will be workshops in weightlifting, horseback riding, auto racing, golf, tennis — even skydiving.

New Trial

RALEIGH (AP) — A trial judge's failure to instruct the jury on a Boy Scout camp caretaker's decision not to testify in his own defense may have prejudiced the jury and led to the man's conviction of murdering two teen-agers, the state Supreme Court says.

The high court ruled Thursday that the judge in the 1985 trial of James Keith Ross had agreed to tell jurors Ross did not have to testify. But he did not give the instruction, which was requested by defense attorneys.

The high court ordered a new trial. Ross was convicted in the slayings of Ricky Buchanan, 15, and Gary Bailey, 14. The two were found shot to death on Jan. 26, 1985, their bodies buried beside a grease pit at Camp Grimes in southeastern McDowell County.

Execution

DOBSON, N.C. (AP) — A new execution date has been set for Arthur Martin Boyd Jr., who was convicted in the 1982 stabbing death of his former girlfriend in the parking lot of a Mount Airy mall.

Judge William C. Wood of Surry County Superior Court set the July 8 date Wednesday. Wood ordered that Boyd be executed at Central Prison in Raleigh between midnight and noon. The method of execution will be lethal gas, unless Boyd asks to be executed by lethal drugs instead, Wood ordered.

Boyd's attorneys have said that they plan to continue their appeals in the case.

Boyd, 42, formerly of Mount Airy, was convicted in 1983 of first-degree murder in the death of Wanda Phillips Hartman, 32, of Mount Airy. Mrs. Hartman was stabbed 37 times on Aug. 7, 1982.

Ban Lifted

RALEIGH (AP) — The ban on outdoor burning in western North Carolina was lifted Thursday by state forester Harry Layman who warned that residents should continue to use caution when building fires in areas where rainfall has been light.

There is no longer a burning ban in any part of the state because of rain, which has varied from light to heavy in different parts of the state.

Deputies Charged

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Two deputies with the Iredell County Sheriff's Department have been charged with felony embezzlement. Sheriff Clyde Lloyd suspended James Josey Jr. and Steven Adams, both 22, who work as jailers.

Josey was charged with one count of embezzling $11,000 worth of property and Adams with one count of embezzling $3,000 worth from Rent-Lo.

Both men, who worked part-time for Rent-Lo in Statesville while on the county payroll, were released on $500 bond and face a June 14 hearing in Iredell County District Court.

Warning

RALEIGH (AP) — Noted American labor expert Robert Glover warned Thursday that the nation faces severe manpower shortages in the year 2000 unless significant changes are made in our education and job training systems.

Glover, a faculty member of the Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs at the University of Texas at Austin, issued the warning at the N.C. Department of Labor's fourth annual Andrew Johnson Memorial Apprenticeship Forum held in Raleigh.

Glover said he also feels that the federal Labor Department needs to be reorganized to get more attention for apprenticeship.

Two Jackson Sons To Graduate Sunday With A&T Seniors

By The Associated Press
The college graduation season kicks off this weekend, with ceremonies at North Carolina A&T State University likely to attract the most outside attention.

Jesse Jackson, an A&T alumnus and Democratic candidate for the presidential nomination, will be the graduation speaker Sunday.

Jackson has two sons in the A&T graduating class, said Bruce Lightner, Jackson's North Carolina campaign manager. Lightner said Jackson also will attend a reception at a private home hosted by three black elected officials — state Rep. Dan Blue, state Sens. William Martin and James Richardson.

Other Sunday commencements include:

— University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, where Arkansas Sen. Dale Bumpers will speak to graduates. There will be about 5,000 graduates with ceremonies in Kenan Stadium, starting at 10:30 a.m.

— Duke University, where cartoonist Garry B. Trudeau will receive an honorary degree and give the commencement address. The commencement starts at 10 a.m. in Wallace Wade Stadium.

Former newsman Edwin Newman will address 4,000 seniors at N.C. State University during Saturday ceremonies at Carter-Finley Stadium. It will be NCSU's 99th commencement.

At N.C. Central University, commencement will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday with Mary Hatwood Futrell as the commencement speaker. Ms. Futrell, a classroom teacher from Alexandria, Va., is in her third term as president of the National Education Association, the nation's largest teachers' organization.

East Carolina University's 80th commencement will also be held Saturday for 2,000 graduates, starting at 10 a.m. Douglas Edwards, a pioneer in network news during the first half-century of the television age, will give the keynote address at ECU's commencement. Edwards' address will mark one of his first public appearances since his retirement April 1 after 46 years with CBS.

At Lees-McRae College, graduates will have their commencement ceremony on May 7, with a keynote address by William Franklin Graham III, son of evangelist Billy Graham.

At Campbell University, Gov. Jim Martin will deliver the keynote address for the 102nd graduating class on May 9. About 700 seniors will receive degrees.

The following weekend, William C. Friday, president emeritus of the UNC System, will speak May 15 at University of North Carolina-Greensboro's 96th commencement, when nearly 2,000 degrees will be conferred.

At the University of North Carolina at Charlotte on May 14, W. Ann Reynolds, head of the nation's largest higher education system — the 19-campus California State University system — will be the commencement speaker. Degrees will be awarded to about 2,000 students.

At UNC-Greensboro, Lee Kinard of WFMY-TV will receive his doctor of education degree at the age of 56. Kinard has hosted "The Good Morning Show" for 30 years.

Four Still Missing At Refinery

NORCO, La. (AP) — Authorities searching the smoldering wreckage of a refinery discovered two bodies today, raising the death toll to three and leaving four men missing in the blast that shattered plate glass windows 30 miles away.

Wendy Jacobs, a Shell spokeswoman, said the two were among six employees who had been missing since the explosion.

Police today patrolled virtually windowless Norco to protect the town's bank, furniture store and other businesses. The local co-op lost most of a wall facing the plant when the devastating explosion cut loose.

At least three Shell Oil Co. employees died and 42 other people were injured in the blast in a catalytic cracker Thursday morning.

"It went 'Boom!' and then 'Boom!' again," said Adam Mashia, 65, who lives less than a mile from the plant. "It knocked me to the floor and as I was getting up, it knocked me down again."

The force of the explosion broke windows in New Orleans's Garden District, 30 miles down the Mississippi River.

People in Slidell, 45 miles distant, said they also felt the blast. The fire that broke out in the refinery forced the evacuation of about 2,500 residents until it was brought under control about 5½ hours later.

Gasoline futures prices went up because of the damage to the plant, which will create a squeeze on gasoline supplies in the Gulf Coast, according to Greg Dreis, an analyst at Merrill Lynch Energy Futures.

Authorities waited for the plant's remains to cool down today before searching for the missing men, also Shell employees.

Fred Foster, manager of Shell's Norco complex, said Shell has established a claims center for victims.

He also said a team of company investigators, joined by state and federal authorities would begin looking for the cause of the blast once the plant cooled down.

Alan Migliore, who lives about three blocks from the refinery complex, said: "I was sleeping in the kitchen and it knocked me to the floor. From there, I looked up and could see that the whole area to the Shell was on fire. ... It blew both of the front doors in, and the deadbolts took the frames out."

Damage at the refinery complex alone was expected to run into the millions of dollars, said Shell spokesman Phil Schwin. The accident ruptured the catalytic cracker, which converts crude oil to gasoline, and seriously damaged control rooms and other facilities.

Man Ordered Held In Fire That Killed 15

SALEM, Mass. (AP) — One by one, the names of the 15 dead were read aloud in court as a young man tearfully pleaded innocent to murder and arson charges in a fire that engulfed a crowded rooming house nearly four years ago.

James Carver, a 24-year-old former truck driver, pleaded innocent in an unsteady voice after each count. Once he broke down in tears, holding up his arraignment Thursday for 15 minutes.

The Ipswich man was ordered held on bail of $1 million surety or $100,000 cash by Salem Superior Court Judge Peter Brady.

Prosecutors allege that Carver set the July 4, 1984, pre-dawn fire, lighting gasoline-soaked newspapers in a doorway at the Elliott Chambers boarding house in Beverly in a jealous rage over a crumbling love affair.

Jealous over his fiancée dating a tenant at the rooming house, Carver set the fire that raced through the turn-of-the-century wooden building, said Essex County District Attorney Kevin Burke.

The blaze raged out of control for more than two hours. It trapped six people in their rooms and killed others while they tried to break down a locked exit. One man jumped from a third-story window to his death and another man died several days later in a hospital.

Burke told reporters after the arraignment Carver's rival died in the blaze, but he would not identify the man or name Carver's then-fiancee. Burke said Carver later met his wife MaryJane, 21.

Carver, indicted last week by an Essex County grand jury, was arrested Wednesday as he drove from an Ipswich drug store with his wife and their 6-week-old daughter Kaitlyn, who reportedly has serious health problems.

Burke said Carver had been a suspect during the four-year investigation, but became the principal target last year after a person revealed Carver had admitted to setting the fire. Burke would not identify the source.

Carver, who was identified in an April 21 police lineup ordered by the grand jury, was reported to be outside the rooming house around the time of the fire by several witnesses, Burke said.

APPLAUSE FOR ARCHBISHOP — Eugene A. Marino, the nation's first black Roman Catholic archbishop, is applauded by Coretta Scott King, second from right, and her son Martin Luther King III as Marino arrived for his installation Mass Thursday at the Atlanta

Civic Center. Marino, a native of Biloxi, Miss., told his mostly white new parishioners his status need not "affect the quality of my ministry among you nor the nature of our relationship with each other." (AP Laserphoto)

Chirac Hints France May Mend Fences With Iran

PARIS (AP) — Three Frenchmen held by pro-Iranian kidnapers in Beirut for three years began their first full day of freedom in France today. Premier Jacques Chirac hinted that France might restore diplomatic ties with Tehran.

Chirac thanked Iran, President Hafez Assad of Syria and Lebanese military authorities for their help in freeing the hostages.

Iran said its intervention brought about the release of diplomats Marcel Carton, 62, Marcel Fontaine, 45, and journalist Jean-Paul Kauffmann, 44. The three arrived in France Thursday after being freed in Beirut Wednesday night.

Tehran Television, monitored in Cyprus, quoted Ali Reza Moayyeri, an Iranian deputy prime minister for political affairs, as saying Iran interceded "for humanitarian reasons."

French government officials denied they paid ransom for the hostages' release. But Britain and other countries accused France of dealing with terrorists while 18 other foreigners remain hostage in Lebanon.

In Washington, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said Thursday that a French concession to Iran "raises the risk for all other nationalities ... because now the Iranians will undoubtedly believe that they can make similar deals with other nations and it will be a gory extended effort to prove that they can't."

In Batavia, N.Y., Peggy Say, sister of American journalist Terry Anderson said Thursday she would go to Paris to talk to Fontaine, who said Anderson was his cellmate.

"It's wonderful news for the French," Mrs. Say said. "But it makes it all the more frustrating and disappointing to compare what their government does to what our government does."

Fontaine told a reporter from the French television Channel 5 that he "passed the time playing dominoes and chess" with Anderson.

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, was kidnapped March 16, 1985 and is the longest held of all foreign hostages in Lebanon.

Representatives from the French foreign and interior ministries met Thursday with American, British, Italian and West German officials to explain the circumstances surrounding the release.

The French news agency Agence-France Presse said that France offerred to assist these countries in obtaining freedom for their hostages still held by Shiite Moslem extremists in Lebanon. No details were provided.

Carton, Fontaine and Kauffmann appeared ashen and shaky as they walked slowly down the airplane steps on arrival in Paris.

Kauffmann drew back uncertainly when his 13-year-old son, Alexander, approached him. Then, when he recognized him, Kauffmann's expression changed to one of delight at how much the boy had grown.

Earlier, Kauffmann said that Michel Seurat, the 39-year-old French researcher captured with him on May 22, 1985, probably died of cancer. Seurat's kidnappers claimed he had been executed.

Carton and Fontaine were kidnapped March 22, 1985.

On Thursday, Chirac said normal relations with Iran "could be envisaged."

Swaggart Says Ministry Is 'Scraping The Bottom'

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Fallen evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, his television outlets dwindling, says his troubled worldwide ministry is "scraping the bottom."

As three major cable networks dropped Swaggart's programs, the embattled minister took to the airwaves this week, not to preach fire-and-brimstone gospel of his television ministry but to plead for $6 million.

"We have to raise the funds if we are to keep the ministry going," Swaggart said during a televised appeal with his wife Frances and son Donnie. "Stations will cancel if we cannot pay them. We cannot pay them what we do not have."

Swaggart left the Assemblies of God, the nation's largest Pentecostal denomination, on April 8 after refusing to abide by a one-year suspension from the pulpit and television for his confession of moral failure.

Although Swaggart did not specify his sin during a tearful confession to his congregation on Feb. 21, two church officials have said that Swaggart told them a prostitute posed nude for him while he watched.

The evangelist has said he plans to return to the pulpit on May 22, in accordance with a three-month suspension ordered by state denomination officials. That decision was later overturned by national church leaders.

In his fund-raising plea, Swaggart said his church faces "the most crucial time of any ministry in the history of the world. ... We are scraping the bottom."

One of the cable networks that dropped Swaggart was PTL, which itself has been rocked by financial losses since former Assemblies of God minister Jim Bakker stepped down last year after admitting to adultery.

PTL earlier had decided to remove Swaggart's programs if he failed to abide by the one-year suspension. The CBN cable network canceled Swaggart's programs earlier and Black Entertainment Television, another cable outlet, dropped the evangelist last week. The three networks reach about 70 million homes.

Since his departure from the denomination, contributions to the Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries have dropped sharply, at least seven ministers in key administrative positions have left and a state appeals court has said that fellow defrocked evangelist Marvin Gorman should have his day in court in a lawsuit he filed against Swaggart.

The Baton Rouge Morning Advocate reported that after the scandal broke, contributions fell quickly from $500,000 per day to possibly below the $350,000 the ministry needs to stay afloat. Ministry officials have refused to comment.

House Backs Proposal Giving Military Drug-Fighting Powers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House-approved amendment to the defense spending bill calls for using American military might to halt the flow of illegal drugs, but the measure faces Pentagon opposition and review by a conference committee.

By a 385-23 vote Thursday, the House adopted a measure ordering the president to "deploy equipment and personnel of the Armed Forces sufficient to halt the unlawful penetration of United States borders by aircraft and vessels carrying narcotics."

The House passed similar anti-drug amendments in 1985 and 1986, but they were later eliminated by conference committees. Among the obstacles this time around is opposition from Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci.

"That is not a function of the military," Carlucci said in an interview earlier this year. "We are not the front-line agency in the war on drugs."

Carlucci was interviewed after Education Secretary William Bennett had raised the possibility in a speech.

House members admitted Thursday that the amendment has shortcomings. "Yes, it is flawed," said Rep. Jack Davis, R-Ill.

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, agreed. "This thing has serious problems," he said.

Aspin had proposed adding $350 million to the bill for the Coast Guard, which has cut anti-drug patrols by 55 percent because of budget problems.

The money would be used to pay for more Coast Guard patrols, along with buying six more patrol helicopters, six patrol boats, and a pair of radar aircraft to track smugglers.

Davis and other Republicans raised the total to $475 million and added the amendment ordering the military to seal American borders.

The House also voted Thursday to spend $600 million for research into the single-warhead Midgetman weapon that the Reagan administration wants to kill.

"The message here is that there is a lot of support for Midgetman," said Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Ore., speaking shortly before the 231-171 vote.

AuCoin's plan proposes only $100 million for the railroad-based version of the 10-warhead MX. President Reagan wants 50 of those missiles to go with 50 more MX weapons that will be put into land-based silos.

Reagan had sought only $200 million for the Midgetman and $793 million for the rail-based MX.

Professor Wants Children As National Priority

By MEGAN ROSENFELD
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

Urie Bronfenbrenner has a vision for all American workplaces, be they factories or offices: Install two telephone lines, one incoming and one outgoing, and put a sign over them that says: Family Calls Only.

"The important thing is the knowledge that they're there, that you can be reached, or that you can reach your family. They probably wouldn't even be used that much."

Sure, it's a gimmick, or perhaps a metaphor, but one with conscious implications. The telephones would be a statement, an acknowledgment by both employers and employees that the family is important, and that it is connected to the workplace.

Bronfenbrenner — Ph.D., professor (now emeritus) at Cornell University, recipient of five honorary degrees, a founding architect of Operation Head Start, member of distinguished advisory boards and father of six — is one of a small band of child-development experts trying to answer the questions of why the rates of drug abuse, child abuse, teen-age pregnancy, infant mortality, divorce and delinquency in the United States keep going up.

Now almost 71, he is still fueled by the passion of the true believer, one who feels that governments as well as individuals have a moral imperative to do something about human problems.

The current candidates for president almost to a man call for a "comprehensive family policy" of some kind, but Bronfenbrenner regards them with a slightly weary sense of déjà vu, such as a veteran of numerous hearings by congressional subcommittees can feel. The candidates issue position papers, he complains, but they haven't pushed the issue front and center.

Indeed, a review of available position papers shows remarkable agreement. They cite similar statistics about our infant-mortality rate (the worst of 20 industrialized nations), divorce rate (highest in the world), lack of health insurance (37 million are without). They generally agree that the Head Start program was a success, with graduates more likely to get a job and less likely to become criminals, and they promise more money for day care and for training day-care workers, and support for parental leave (unpaid) for the birth, adoption or illness of a child.

And Albert Gore Jr. says he would open a child-care center in the White House basement.

"I'm not excited about any of them," Bronfenbrenner said.

Actually, while he was in Washington recently to give two speeches, Bronfenbrenner almost sounded like a candidate himself.

"The principal horsemen of modern times are poverty, chaos, isolation and abandonment of our responsibility to love our neighbors," he says. He turns an audience into a classroom, throwing out questions to see who has done his homework, or, as he put it, to test how well the mass media have been keeping up.

"Two hidden revolutions have been taking place in this country," he told a sellout crowd gathered under the auspices of the Smithsonian Resident Associates and Cornell alumni. "The first is a revolution in society, the second a revolution in science. ... What are the three greatest and most consequential changes in American life in recent years?"

The first comes forth without much trouble. "Working mothers."

"May I rephrase?" says the professor. "Working mothers and fathers."

The second, too, is easy. "Single parents."

But "the big one, the most consequential," is a long time in coming. People shout out "mobility" and "the loss of the extended family," and "people having fewer children."

None of these gets the teacher's nod of approval. "Isn't this interesting?" he asks. Finally a woman gets it right.

"Increased levels of poverty," she says.

"You got it!"

Bronfenbrenner was born in Moscow and emigrated here at the age of 6 with his family. His father, a neuropathologist who also had a doctorate in zoology, was hired at a state institution for the "feeble-minded," as they were called then.

In those days, as Bronfenbrenner writes in the preface to "The Ecology of Human Development," "the patients spent most of their time out of the wards, not just in school classrooms, but working on the farm and in the shops of the 3,000-acre institution. There were cow, horse, pig, sheep, and chicken barns, a smithy, carpenter shops, a bakery and a storehouse from which food and goods were delivered around the village in horsedrawn farm wagons driven by inmates."

He recalls his father's "anguish when the New York City courts committed to our institution, out of error or — more probably — sheer desperation, perfectly normal children. Before he could unwind the necessary red tape to have them released, it would be too late. After a few weeks as one of 80 inmates in a cottage with two matrons, their scores on intelligence tests administered as a compulsory part of the discharge process proved them mentally deficient: that meant remaining in the institution for the rest of their lives."

These children had a major influence on Bronfenbrenner when he began to study human development. After getting a bachelor's in psychology and music from Cornell, a master of education degree in psychology from Harvard and a PhD in developmental psychology from the University of Michigan, he spent World War II as an Army psychologist. In 1948 he returned to Cornell and began his continuing research into child development in the College of Human Ecology.

Along the way he fathered four girls and two boys and is now the active grandparent of seven, with two more on the way. Part of his ability to empathize with the middle-class parent as well as the plight of the poor comes from his observations of his own children.

"What I'm seeing is how much harder life with children is for them than it was for us," he said. "When my grandchildren are with us, they are different kids — not because we are better parents, but because we can take the time."

"Hecticness" in American life is a primary cause of the instability and chaos he sees as one trigger of adolescent alienation, and as such qualifies as a serious problem, he said. Just the demands of transporting mother, father and a child to and from their daily occupations is a strain, he said.

"A friend of mine from Hungary once said to me, 'It is very interesting; in America the children are being brought up in moving vehicles.'"

He cites a Finnish study that followed a group of children from ages 8 to 30 and showed "instability" in a family was the strongest predictor of later anti-social behavior. By instability he means frequent changes in day-care arrangements, or in parental employment, location or schedule.

"The engine of development is a progressively more complex Ping-Pong game between two people (parent and child) who have irrational feelings about each other. They're crazy about each other. But for it to work, it has to go on for a while," he said.

He then acted out a familiar situation: Parent settles down to read Junior a story, only to be interrupted several times by the telephone.

To counteract the daily difficulties of playing the Ping-Pong game, he recommends that parents schedule times "that allow the process of reciprocity." It could be a walk or a trip to the zoo — as long as the parent realizes that what is important is not necessarily the activity itself, but "what's in between," time when a child might initiate something, when a conversation might take place or a game be played. Vacations should not become exercises in sightseeing, but an "extended time to, in a sense, get bored doing something interesting."

Parents need to "arrange for the presence of your absence," by having rules for children to follow when they aren't there, as well as rituals and patterns that are respected, and frequent phone calls.

It is important, he said, to realize that a child will teach the parent. "They are wired to create and sustain the environments they need to grow," if a parent will pay attention.

Bronfenbrenner brings forth these suggestions in response to the urgent requests he gets from the various groups he speaks to around the country, audiences who are generally middle class and members of two-career or single-parent families.

Talk about public policy and the "disruption of family life" on a national level is fine, but after a while "the middle class wants to know, 'What about me?'" he said.

He's not about to suggest that the stress of an overscheduled, overworked middle-class family is any better or worse than the stress of a family that doesn't know where its next meal is coming from, but his list of priorities begins with a national health-insurance system, employment for the "breadwinner," "truly adequate resources for those unable to work for legitimate reasons,"

"houses that aren't hellholes" and quality day care for all who need it.

To those who say that throwing monty at social problems doesn't work, Bronfenbrenner says that enough money has never been thrown. The notion that people earning less than the poverty level set annually by the Agriculture Department are getting a full range of welfare benefits is, he says, incorrect.

He cites statistics from the U.S. Census Bureau and the Children's Defense Fund to argue that the percentage of families with children under 6 who live in poverty was the same (25 percent) in 1986 (the last year for which numbers are available) as it was in 1959. In 1969, following the War on Poverty, the percentage had declined to 14 percent.

But after a while the numbers begin to numb, conjuring up the picture of a dismal present and a dismal future. His cold statement remains: The only way out is to raise taxes — which, not being a politician, he can say.

The industrialized nations that have better numbers for prenatal care, infant mortality, birth weight, maternity leave, day care and so on, all have higher taxes, he notes.

But Bronfenbrenner recognizes cultural forces are at work here, too. "In the first half of the 19th century we became the most individualistic and the most volunteeristic society on earth. Who emigrated here? The kind of people who couldn't stand authority, or who authority couldn't stand.

"We have this idea that if you fail, it's because you didn't have the right stuff. And (we think) the thing to avoid at all costs is interference (by the government). In a crisis, like in the Great Depression ... we got organized as hell. But that ... was a crash, and this damn emergency eats at our society by a fraction of a percentile point a day."

He sees a few small signs of hope that family issues are coming to the forefront, however. Just the other day he heard two Southern governors say on television that the candidates hadn't been talking about the issues that really concerned their region; one cited low birth weights and the other infant mortality.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR MARTI: Your message came through clear as a bell. I hear you, and hope others do.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 59-year-old, college-educated, retired professional woman. My husband — a professional man — died of AIDS three years ago. He was not in a high-risk group. Because he was a family man, and because AIDS was unknown in our area, the doctors never thought to test him for the virus until about a week before he died. The results were positive, but these did not come back until after his funeral, and more important for me, after the death certificate was signed. So the certificate bore no stigma, and there was no publicity.

Because not much was known at the time (at least around here) about how AIDS is transmitted, our adult children were tested for the virus at the same time I was. Now, of course, we know that testing the kids was unnecessary because they neither had sex nor shared needles with my husband, and had no contact with his blood. Naturally, their tests were negative. I, on the other hand, tested positive, and was tested again to make certain there was no mistake. Positive again.

I want to make it absolutely clear that there was no anal intercourse — only normal penile-vaginal (missionary) intercourse in my case. I was told that the odds of a straight, monogamous, drug-free person getting this disease is about 5 million-to-1, but that doesn't help if you're the one in 5 million!

So far, I am still healthy but I have the virus — the virus I got from "normal" intercourse.

Abby, I implore you to alert your reading audience to my message. If this happened to me, it can happen to any straight, monogamous woman.

There may be many, perhaps thousands, of women like me. There are no records on us because as I understand it, only full-blown AIDS, and perhaps AIDS-related complex cases, are reported to the CDC. Carriers are not reported. And if these women are like me, they are telling NO ONE.

Of course, I am not sexually active. But those who are must inform their partners, and insist on the use of a condom, which may still carry some risks, but is considerably safer. To do otherwise is tantamount to murder.

— ANONYMOUS WIDOW

DEAR WIDOW: You are courageous to have written, and I thank you for wanting to warn other women. The message here is: A sexually active monogamous woman can be at risk from "normal" intercourse if her partner is infected with the AIDS virus.

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Budget Considered help provide for additional positions added during this year's budget period.

•Finance — proposed amount of $298,835 compared to $265,965 budgeted this year. The increase is partly attributed to a 10 percent to 13 percent tax on citywide purchases and a $10,000 appropriation for the addition of an intern to work during peak work periods.

•Purchasing — an increase from $63,405 to $99,392 is attributed partly to the purchase of a $24,530 offset printer.

•Mayor's budget — an increase from $54,405 this year to $66,309 next year.

Councilmember Nancy Jenkins was absent from Monday's budget meeting.

The remaining budget sessions are scheduled for May 9, May 18 and May 24 in the third floor conference room of City Hall. All meetings are scheduled to begin at 5:30 p.m.

A public hearing on the budget proposal is scheduled for June 6 while the proposed date for budget adoption is June 20.

A copy of the budget proposal is available for public examination in the office of the city clerk in City Hall.

Grant Is Approved

continue negotiations on the cost of the plan.

Initial estimates of the cost of the plan, presented to commissioners Monday, totaled some $130,000.

Board members Thursday said similar plans for other counties have been done for $30,000 to $35,000 and suggested that the architects be asked to consider proposals in that price range.

Three firms — Hellmuth, Obata & Kassabaum of Washington, Dudley Shoe Ellingood & Associates of Greenville, and Carter Govle Associates of South Carolina — formed a joint venture to submit a proposal for the project.

The board also agreed to invite representatives of the Martin County Board of Commissioners to discuss a proposed national wildlife refuge in lowland areas along the Roanoke River in Martin, Bertie and Halifax counties.

The Pitt board, last month, at the request of Martin County commissioners, adopted a resolution opposing the creation of the 30,000-acre preserve.

But several Pitt County residents and representatives of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on Monday asked Pitt commissioners to reconsider their action.

Travis McDaniel, a wildlife service spokesman, said all property acquired for the refuge would be bought "from willing sellers only" at its fair market value. He also said the counties — including Martin — would receive payments in lieu of taxes.

MASONIC NOTICE

Winterville Masonic Lodge No. 232 will hold a communication at the Masonic Hall today at 8 p.m.

REAL ESTATE FACTS
 by: Rudy Schulte

IT'S REAL & IT'S PERSONAL!
 When you buy or sell a home, it is important to know what is and is not being sold. Let's say, for example, that the home you are buying has a beautiful brass chandelier in the formal dining room. It will go well with your furniture. But, the day you move into the home, you find only a simple $15.00 overhead light in the dining room. The sellers explain that the chandelier was a gift from a relative and was not included in the sale.

Take a look at the definitions used for real estate and personal property. Real estate is defined as "the earth's surface extending downward to the center of the earth and upward into space, including all things permanently attached thereto by nature or by man." Personal property is considered to be "everything else."

These definitions are especially important when buying or selling a home. Obviously, the home is permanently attached to the land. The chandelier was also attached, and unless specifically expected from a contract of sale, would be considered part of the "real estate." Items such as furniture, a table-top microwave oven, or a lawn mower are considered "personal" property.

Ask your real estate agent for clarification if you are not sure what is "personal" and what is "real" property. Be sure that specific items are identified in a contract of sale if there are any doubts about whether or not they are to be conveyed. Your agent understands the difference and can answer your questions.

A good real estate agent will anticipate such potential problems and help you word an Offer to Purchase so that you have no "surprises" later. Please call me for professional service. I am interested in you.

Gr

With 16-3 Rout Of White Sox Bosox End 4-Game Dive

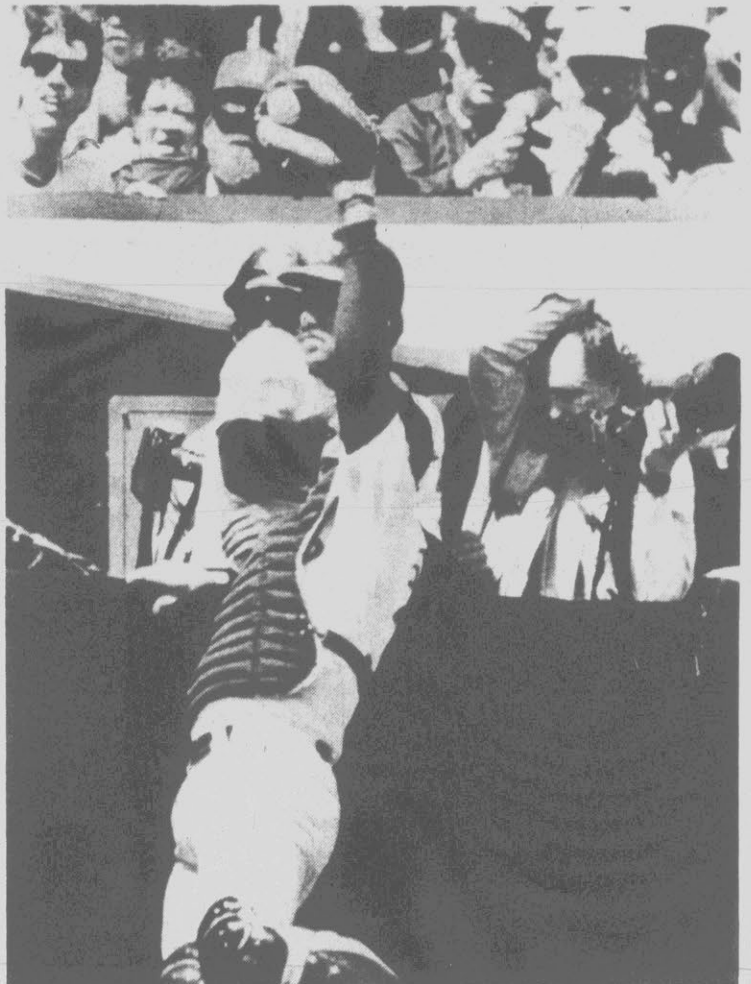

By Associated Press
Boston needed some hits to break a slump, and just about everybody in the lineup got some to beat Chicago. The Red Sox entered Thursday night's game against the White Sox with a four-game losing streak. During the streak, Boston was shut out twice and scored five runs in the four games at Fenway Park. That all ended Thursday, as the Red Sox had 18 hits en route to a 16-3 rout of Chicago. "We hit the ball the way we know how to hit it," said Todd Benzinger, who went 4-for-5 with a homer and a single, four runs batted in and three runs scored. Dwight Evans also had four RBI and scored two runs with two doubles and a single, while Marty Barrett went 4-for-6 with a double and three singles and three runs scored. "This is going to help me and help the Red Sox," said Benzinger, a part-time outfielder with just 39 at-bats so far this season. "I want to show that I can hit. And we want to get back on track, get people feeling good again." Elsewhere in the American League it was Oakland 8, Toronto 5; Milwaukee 9, Texas 1; New York 5, Kansas City 3; Detroit 8, California 5; and Seattle 7, Cleveland 2. Minnesota at Baltimore was postponed by rain. Every Boston starter except Jim Rice had at least a single, and Rice managed to drive in a run with an infield grounder. Still puzzling for the Red Sox, however, is the fact that Rice, Evans and Wade Boggs have yet to hit a home run. The trio combined for 71 last year. "We needed a game like this to get us going," said Barrett, moved up to the leadoff spot. "I think it's going to stay with us now." The 16 runs were the most scored against the White Sox since a 16-8 loss to California in Chicago on Sept. 7, 1984. Bruce Hurst breezed to his fifth victory, allowing four hits in seven innings, including Carlton Fisk's long two-run homer in the fifth. Dennis Lamp and Wes Gardner finished for Boston. Barrett ended an 0-14 drought with a leadoff double in the first inning off Rick Horton, 3-4. Jody Reed walked and Boggs grounded back to the mound. Evans then lined a two-run single. The Red Sox shelled Horton in a three-run second inning. Barrett singled, Reed doubled and Boggs scored both with a double.

Athletics 8, Blue Jays 5
Mark McGwire's single with one out in the bottom of the seventh inning scored Carney Lansford to put Oakland ahead as the Athletics extended their winning streak to 11 games. Eric Plunk, 3-1, won in relief. The AL West-leading A's won for the 15th time in 16 games and matched the Oakland club record, set in 1981, with the winning streak. With the score 5-5, Lansford walked to lead off the seventh and stole second. With one out, McGwire singled off Jose Nunez, 0-1, and Lansford, running through the third base coach's stop sign, beat the throw home by inches. Brewers 9, Rangers 1

Bill Wegman pitched a four-hitter as Milwaukee won its sixth straight game by beating visiting Texas. Glenn Braggs had a three-run homer in the fifth off Bobby Witt, 0-5, who walked five batters in 5 1-3 innings to increase his AL-leading total to 35. Wegman, 3-3, pitched his third complete game of the season, struck out two and walked one. Texas scored its only run on Pete O'Brien's seventh homer of the season in the fourth inning. The Rangers have lost six of their last eight games and have not won a series in 1988, going 0-5 with five splits. Yankees 5, Royals 3
Richard Dotson and Ceciliano Guante combined on a seven-hitter and Mike Pagliarulo drove in two runs as New York extended its road winning streak to seven games. The Yankees' Dave Winfield was 0-for-3 and had his hitting streak was snapped at 16 games. Mariners 7, Indians 2

Alvin Davis drove in five runs with a grand slam and a single as Seattle beat Cleveland at the Kingdome. After two out in the Seattle sixth, Harold Reynolds tripled and Mike Kingery doubled to give the Mariners a 3-1 lead off Rich Yett, 2-2. Jeff Dedmon relieved, walked Scott Bradley intentionally and yielded a single to Henry Cotto to load the bases. Dan Schatzeder relieved and Davis homered over the right-field fence. The loss dropped the Indians 2½ games behind first-place New York in the AL East. Tigers 8, Angels 5
Alan Trammell had three hits and two RBI as visiting Detroit beat California. Trammell's single in the second sparked a four-run rally against Chuck Finley, 2-4. Trammell added an infield single in the third and a fourth-inning single that gave the Tigers a 6-1 lead. Willie Hernandez, 2-1, got the victory with three innings of relief after taking over for Walt Terrell with two out in the fifth as the Angels scored three runs to cut the Tigers' lead to 6-5. Mike Henneman pitched 1 1-3 innings for his ninth save.

Rose Appealing His Suspension

NEW YORK (AP) — Cincinnati Reds manager Pete Rose, armed with videotapes and accompanied by his boss, was hoping today to convince the National League to shorten the longest suspension given a major league manager in more than 40 years. A three-man league review board was scheduled at 11 a.m. EDT today to hear Rose's appeal of a 30-day suspension and $10,000 fine for bumping umpire Dave Pallone in the ninth inning of Saturday night's game in Cincinnati against the New York Mets. The Reds begin a three-game series in New York on Friday. Katy Feeney, league spokeswoman, said the panel likely would reach a decision by the end of the day. "I just want a fair chance to explain myself," Rose said. Rose and Reds general manager Murray Cook have prepared videotapes for the hearing before Bill Bartholomay, board chairman of the Atlanta Braves;

Charles Bronfman, board chairman of the Montreal Expos, and Chub Feeney, president of the San Diego Padres. "I think all three of those men have very high integrity," Rose said. Cook said the Reds agreed with Rose "that the length of the suspension is too severe." NL President Bart Giamatti levied the suspension and fine on Monday. It is the longest suspension for a manager for on-the-field behavior, and the most severe since 1947 when Brooklyn Dodgers manager Leo Durocher was suspended for conduct detrimental to baseball, details of which Happy Chandler, then the commissioner never spelled out. It reportedly included association with unsavory characters, including gamblers, heated run-ins with baseball people and a violent disagreement with Larry MacPhail, then part owner of the New York Yankees.

Aguirre Sparks Dallas Win

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer
The Texas range war between Dallas and Houston is over because Mark Aguirre found the range. Aguirre, who averaged 25.1 points a game this season, had only 45 points overall in three playoff games against the Rockets. He had only six points at halftime Thursday night. Then Aguirre found the target, scoring a club-record 27 points in the third quarter and 38 for the game as Dallas eliminated Houston from the NBA playoffs 107-97. The Mavericks won the Western Conference series 3-1. "Mark played a great game, a perfect game," Dallas coach John MacLeod said. "Nobody wanted it worse than him. Some of his points were set plays but he knows to call for the ball when he's hot as a pistol." Which he was in the third quarter, making nine of 10 shots from the field and six in a row from the free throw line. "The guy just had the shots and there was no stopping him, I just didn't do my part," said Rodney McCray, who had to defend Aguirre. "He was just a better player tonight. He hasn't had a great series but he had a great game." Also having great games Thursday night were Ron Harper and Michael Jordan. Harper scored 10 of his 30 points in the fourth period and made two key defensive plays in the closing moments, leading Cleveland to a 97-91 victory over Chicago and Jordan, who had 44 points despite a strained rib cage muscle. The Cavaliers' victory set up Sunday's fifth game in Chicago. A fifth game of the Denver-Seattle series was made necessary when the SuperSonics beat the Nuggets 127-117. The teams will finish on Saturday in Denver. Tonight, Boston is at New York, Atlanta at Milwaukee and Portland at Utah. The Celtics, Hawks and Jazz have 2-1 leads. The Los Angeles Lakers swept San Antonio and already are in the second round. Detroit and Washington, tied 2-2, finish Sunday at Pontiac, Mich. Mavericks 107, Rockets 97

Akeem Olajuwon had 40 points and 15 rebounds for Houston, setting a four-game series scoring mark with 150 points. But it wasn't enough, thanks mainly to Aguirre. "When I finally got the hot hand, I really felt it," Aguirre said. "When I come out of a slump, I do it in bunches." Dallas missed in bunches in the first quarter, being held to an all-time playoff low of 14 points. But they got straightened out in the second period and grabbed a 46-44 halftime lead.

Aguirre then scored the first 12 points of the third quarter and wound up smashing his team mark of 21 points in a period. "I'm happy to go beyond the first round but this is hardly the end of the road," Aguirre said. Cavaliers 97, Bulls 91
Chicago won the first two games at home, now Cleveland has a pair of home wins. The Cavs didn't trail in either of its home games until Horace Grant made a free throw, his only point of the game, for an 87-86 Chicago lead with 3:13 to play. A three-point play by Larry Nance gave Cleveland the lead for good and Nance and Harper blocked shots by Grant and Jordan on the Bulls' next two possessions. Harper's two free throws made it 93-89 with 44 seconds to go and he also had a late steal that led to Jordan's sixth foul. "Michael Jordan probably shouldn't have played tonight," Bulls coach Doug Collins said. "He just finds a way every single night to go out and lay his heart and soul on the floor." SuperSonics 127, Nuggets 107
Xavier McDaniel scored 27 points and Tom Chambers added 25 for Seattle, which scored the game's final 10 points. Derrick McKey blocked a Jay Vincent shot and grabbed the rebound with Seattle in front 121-117 with 50 seconds remaining. McKey had made a pair of free throws with 1:19 left, Danny Young made another pair with 42 seconds left and two more with 34 seconds remaining. Chambers added a dunk shot with three seconds to go. For Denver, Jay Vincent scored 28 points, Michael Adams had 22 and Alex English had 20. Denver was without All-Star guard Lafayette Lever, who has a strained right knee. "I don't know if we'll get Fat back," Moe said. "We'd like to have him, but we have to go into Saturday thinking he's not going to be there."

High Winds Force Play To Standstill

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — How windy was it? "If I'd spread my arms I'd have been a bird," Greg Norman responded. Norman was among the 71 players stranded on three courses Thursday when desert winds gusting to 55 mph forced an overnight postponement of play in the $1,388,889 Las Vegas Invitational, the same tournament that faced course evacuation Wednesday when an explosion 10 miles away at a plant that produced fuel for the space shuttle produced a toxic cloud. "We had no choice (but to postpone)," tournament director Jim Cook said of the high winds. "It was dangerous out there." Ironically, it was wind that saved first-round play Wednesday when it pushed the toxic cloud in the opposite direction from the three courses. Norman, who was playing Thursday at Spanish Trail, the most exposed of the three courses used for this unique event, agreed about the danger. "Not only was it almost impossible to play, it was dangerous — rubbish and trash bins blowing through the air," he said. Tournament and PGA Tour officials said it was the first time they could recall that an American tournament round had been postponed by wind. The winds, which the National Weather Service said were gusting to 55 mph, disrupted the tournament schedule and reduced it from a 90-hole, five-day tournament to a conventional 72-hole format.

The players stranded on the three courses marked their positions and were scheduled to return this morning to complete second-round play. The third round is scheduled for Saturday, after which the field will be cut from 156 pros to the low 70 scorers, and the 636 amateurs will be through. The final round of the chase for the $250,000 first prize will be held Sunday. Of those who completed second-round play Thursday, Bob Lohr held the lead at 136, eight under par, after a 70 at the Desert Inn. Peter Jacobsen, who had a 66 at the Desert Inn, was at 137. Keith Clearwater, with a 70 at Spanish Trail, and Ben Crenshaw, 69 at the Desert Inn, were next at 138. First-round leader Bobby Wadkins lost two shots to par over the first nine holes and was six under par when play was called. Norman, who opened with a 68, played his front nine in 40 in the worst of the winds at Spanish Trail. "It's the worst I've ever played in," said Norman, who was on hand when a round was cancelled in an Australian tournament late last year. "This was much worse," he said. "The wind must have been blowing 60, maybe 65 miles an hour." As an illustration, he said his drive was slightly over the green on the downwind, 414-yard first hole. "I probably hit it 430 yards," he said. "Unfortunately, anyone who played at Spanish Trail this afternoon is pretty much out of the tournament," he said.

Crushing Block
Houston Rocket Robert Reid (right) is hit with a crushing block by Dallas Maverick James Donaldson in the fourth period of their NBA playoff game at Houston Thursday. Williams Released

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — University of Maryland standout basketball center Brian Williams has been released from his scholarship to transfer to another school, but he said he won't decide where he will go until he finishes final exams. The university on Thursday granted Williams' request to be released from the scholarship, athletic department spokesman Joe Blair said. Coach Bob Wade, however, said he does not plan to alter his coaching style or change his rules.

Private Terms Favored In Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Trainer Charlie Hadry, a man of few words, says he will have little to say to Chris Antley about his first Kentucky Derby ride on Saturday.

"I'll just tell him to move when he thinks he should," Hadry said on Thursday after his colt, unbeaten Private Terms, was made the early 5-2 favorite over 16 rivals for the 114th Derby at Churchill Downs.

It is the first Derby for Hadry, 57, but more importantly, the first for Antley, 22, who has never even ridden at Churchill Downs. Antley had some mounts today to familiarize himself with the track.

Hadry is confident Antley is up to the task in America's most famous horse race which has the added spice of a big, fast filly, Winning Colors, attempting to beat the males on Saturday. Winning Colors is the early 3-1 second choice.

"Nobody's going to intimidate Chris, I'll tell you that," Hadry said. "And I like him because he's a good finisher."

Antley was the nation's leading jockey in 1985 with 469 winners while riding mostly in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Last year, he ranked fourth in the nation with 340 winners and now rides primarily in New York.

Private Terms, owned by the Locust Hill Farm, has won all seven starts, including five this year. But it wasn't until the son of Fast Account was shipped from Maryland to New York for the Gotham and Wood Memorial that he gained some respect.

Private Terms, who likes to stay fairly close to the pace, went off at 10-1 in the Gotham and was more than 3-1 in the Wood Memorial. They were Antley's first two rides on the ark bay colt.

Hadry put $100 on Private Terms in the Gotham, figuring he'd never see odds like that again on his colt.

"This is an easy horse to ride," Hadry said. "He's had four different riders in seven starts. It's good to know he can carry the Derby weight (126 pounds). He showed that in the Gotham and Wood when he made big moves."

Hadry was unhappy at landing post position No. 16, next to the outside horse, Forty Niner, but he was philosophical about it.

"I don't like it at all, but there's nothing I can do about it," he said.

Private Terms may have to go faster at the start than anticipated in order to get good position for the 1/4-mile first leg of racing's Triple Crown for 3-year-olds.

Since 1915 only 12 horses have carried perfect records into the Derby and only four came out of the race unbeaten — 1977 Triple Crown winner Seattle Slew, Morvich in 1922, Majestic Prince in 1969 and the filly Regret in 1915.

Eugene Klein's Winning Colors, winner of five of six starts, ran off and stole the Santa Anita Derby on April 9 and many trainers are wary that jockey Gary Stevens will try to duplicate that 7 1/2-length victory.

She will leave from the No. 11 post, which pleased trainer D. Wayne Lukas. Lukas is winless with 12 horses in seven Derbys but is seeking to put a filly in the Derby winner's circle for the third time in history.

"She'll have a straight shot for the first quarter of a mile," said Lukas, who doesn't think post positions are the key to handicapping the race. "The five pounds we get (at 121) could be an edge."

Woody Stephens, who trains the entry of Forty Niner and late-closer Cephis, isn't worried about Forty Niner, the leaving from post No. 17.

"I just as soon have what I got," said Stephens, whose entry is 5-1 in the morning line. "I got the filly on the inside of him. I'm going put heat on the filly, you know that."

"This is the fastest breaking horse in America," Stephens said. "He just might break a length in front and say, 'Move over, boys.'"

Forty Niner, the 2-year-old champion who has won seven of 11 starts, runs on or close to the pace.

Other main contenders include

Louisiana Derby winner Risen Star, 6-1; Seeking The Gold, the Gotham and Wood Memorial runner-up, 8-1, and Brian's Time, the Florida Derby winner, 12-1.

All the rest are 15-1 or better, including an entry of Intensive Command and Lively One. Because there are only 12 betting interests, four colts were lumped into the parimutuel field — Regal Classic, Din's Dancer, Sea Trek and Purdue King.

If all 17 starters go, the Derby will be worth $786,200 with the winner earning $611,200.

The complete field in post position order: Risen Star, Cefis, Regal Classic, Kingpost, Brian's Time, Granacus, Intensive Command, Seeking The Gold, Din's Dancer, Sea Trek, Winning Colors, Proper Reality, Jim's Orbit, Purdue King, Lively One, Private Terms and Forty Niner.

Post time is 5:33 p.m. EDT. ABC's Derby telecast will be shown from 4:30-6 p.m. EDT.

Gomez Angry Over His Treatment At Tourney

NEW YORK (AP) — Defending champion Andres Gomez wasn't treated like one during the third round of the Tournament of Champions.

Gomez, scheduled to play on the featured stadium court, was switched to the grandstand Thursday so more matches could be squeezed in during a rain-plagued day at the West Side Tennis Club.

After beating Milan Srejber 6-1, 6-0 in front of a handful of people, the mild-mannered Ecuadoran criticized the move.

"I'm the defending champion," Gomez said. "They should have moved someone else. If I'm going to lose, I don't want to lose in front of 10 people. I want to lose in front of 20 people."

Gomez was hardly exaggerating. Even in the stadium, where top-seeded Stefan Edberg beat Thomas Muster 6-4, 6-3 in a steady drizzle, the stands were nearly empty.

Although he didn't mention Edberg by name, Gomez clearly felt the Swede should have been the one moved from the stadium.

Edberg said earlier in the week that he wanted to skip the TOC, but was required to play here by the Men's Tennis Council. He has also complained about the weather and the balls being used at the tournament.

"Some people are complaining and bitching that they don't want to be here and they get to play in the stadium," Gomez said.

Edberg said he sympathized with Gomez, who is seeded second.

"I would have expected center court if I was defending champion, but with the weather like this someone has to play outside," he said.

Tournament referee Zeno Pfau said Edberg stayed in the stadium because he is the top seed and was scheduled to play the first match of the day there.

"We tried to move as few people as possible," Pfau said.

The rain, which delayed play twice and finally forced several matches to be postponed, was the latest in a series of setbacks for the $677,500 tournament.

First came the last-minute withdrawals of Jimmy Connors and Brad Gilbert, the top-ranked U.S. players. Then, the biggest drawing card, New York native John McEnroe, lost in the first round. Finally, the weather has been miserable most of the week.

Because of the rain, three third-round singles matches could not be completed Thursday — No. 5 Andre Agassi vs. Michael Chang, No. 13 Luiz Mattar vs. Diego Perez and No. 8 Slobodan Zivojinovic vs. No. 9 Jay Berger.

Weather permitting, those matches and the quarterfinals were to be completed today.

Edberg was scheduled to play the winner of the Zivojinovic-Berger match while Gomez was to play No. 7 Aaron Krickstein, who advanced with a 6-3, 7-5 victory over unseeded Jimmy Brown.

Gomez routed Srejber in 37 minutes. After Srejber won the third game of the first set, Gomez won 10 straight games to close out the match.

"I knew that if I got on top of him, he would stay down," he said. "I wanted to get it over with. I didn't want to stay out there all day."

Edberg, who struggled in his first two matches, had an easier time against Muster.

Banner Year For State's Tanner

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — With a school record 40 victories this season, North Carolina State baseball coach Ray Tanner would like to think his team has captured the attention of the NCAA.

"Much like basketball, you look to 20 to be the magic number to get to the NCAA field. In baseball, 40 seems to be the number," Tanner said Thursday. "It's not a lock, but it gives you an opportunity to be considered."

To improve on its 40-12 mark, the second-place Wolfpack must maneuver through the final weekend of the Atlantic Coast Conference regular season. The weekend includes a two-game set with runaway league leader Clemson today and Saturday, and facing reigning ACC champion Georgia Tech Sunday.

But the task is made easier by a club that Tanner said realized he would have a case of jitters in his first year as head coach after 11 years under Sam Esposito.

"I probably was a little uptight this year because of this situation, but the players handled that well," Tanner said. "They anticipated that and handled that very well."

It helped that Tanner had a veteran team returning, but the output might have exceeded his expectations.

The pitching staff is led by junior righthander Jeff Hartssock, who has followed seasons of eight and 10 victories with a 9-2 mark going into the weekend. He's been backed up by junior Brad Rhodes, who has nine victories without a loss.

From the bullpen, Larry Price, Mark Wendel and John Clawson have picked up seven victories, and when Brian Bark isn't playing center field, he has compiled a 6-1 pitching record.

"In order to have a good club, you have to have different people pick you up all along," Tanner said.

At the plate, Turtle Zaun is trying to enhance his chances at a most valuable player award, leading the ACC with 23 home runs and a .420 batting average. Third baseman Bryn Kosco has hit 16 home runs and right fielder Mark Withers is hitting .416.

"Just about all our veteran players have had good years for us along with a veteran pitching staff which has done a good job," he said.

Meanwhile, Clemson has left the field behind in this year's ACC race. The Tigers, ranked 11th in the country, are 46-8 with a 17-0 ACC mark going into the weekend. Tanner sees the Tigers as a tough team to beat, but he wouldn't mind slowing their momentum a little before the tournament, scheduled for next week in Greenville, S.C.

After the Wolfpack for two games, Clemson goes to North Carolina on Sunday. For N.C. State, they need help from the Tar Heels in addition to their own luck to hang onto second place in the conference.

The Wolfpack is 10-6, one-half game ahead of Georgia Tech and a full game ahead of North Carolina. But Tanner feels Clemson needs to be challenged.

"If they were to roll through this weekend, that might be the kind of momentum that will carry them right through the tournament," Tanner said. "If they get tested this weekend, maybe several people can win the tournament."

Lebo Among Eight Who Won't Show For Tryouts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eight players, including North Carolina's Jeff Lebo, have declined invitations to try out for the U.S. Olympic basketball team, and the list could grow as potential Olympians choose to pursue the big money of the NBA rather than risk injury playing for a gold medal, Coach John Thompson said.

"Our system is structured that way," said Thompson, coach of the U.S. team. "In other countries, the ultimate honor is playing for your country. Here, the ultimate is the NBA, the money. It still puzzles me." Dave Gavitt, chairman of the Amateur Basketball Association of the USA Games Committee for Men, said those who have decided against trying out for the team include Harvey Grant and Mookie Blaylock of Oklahoma, Tim Perry of Temple, Ed Davender of Kentucky, Duane Ferrell of Georgia Tech, Gary Grant of Michigan, Pervis Ellison of Louisville and Lebo.

More will follow, Gavitt predicted. Ellison and Lebo declined invitations because of injuries, while Blaylock is pondering foot surgery and Temple officials said Perry was skipping the trials in order to go to summer school. But the others are believed to have decided against attending the tryouts that begin May 18 under the advice of their agents.

Thompson understands why the players would skip the Olympics and go for the big money. That, in part, is why he invited 93 players to the trials. "We expected some to say no, figuring the number would drop by seven or eight," he said. Eight already have said no and there are still almost two weeks left until tryouts start.

"I don't think it's an un-American-like activity," Thompson said. "But those are the factors we have to deal with." Thompson said agents, not the NBA, usually determine whether a player will attempt to make the Olympic basketball team.

"The problem is that each individual representative of the kid is going to have some bearing on whether the kid plays," Thompson said. "Some of the kids use the trials to move up in the draft, since each NBA team is going to have two people there."

Injuries and the need to finish school also have turned out to be factors in shrinking the pre-Olympic roster. Lebo is nursing a knee injury, and Temple Coach John Chaney said Perry decided against participating in the trials so he could attend summer school.

Temple assistant Jim Maloney said Perry wanted to get a degree in distributive education. On the positive side, Thompson expressed renewed optimism that 6-foot-11 center David Robinson, the top pick in last year's NBA draft, would not suffer from the inactivity he has gone through since beginning his two-year military commitment.

"I feel a lot better about David after talking to him," Thompson said. "I had a lot of reservations about his conditioning, but I now feel tremendous. ... I know now that he is willing to work to catch up to the competition."

Nettles Keys Win For Smith

MONTREAL (AP) — Graig Nettles will never have to worry about where his next meal is coming from as long as Bryn Smith is pitching.

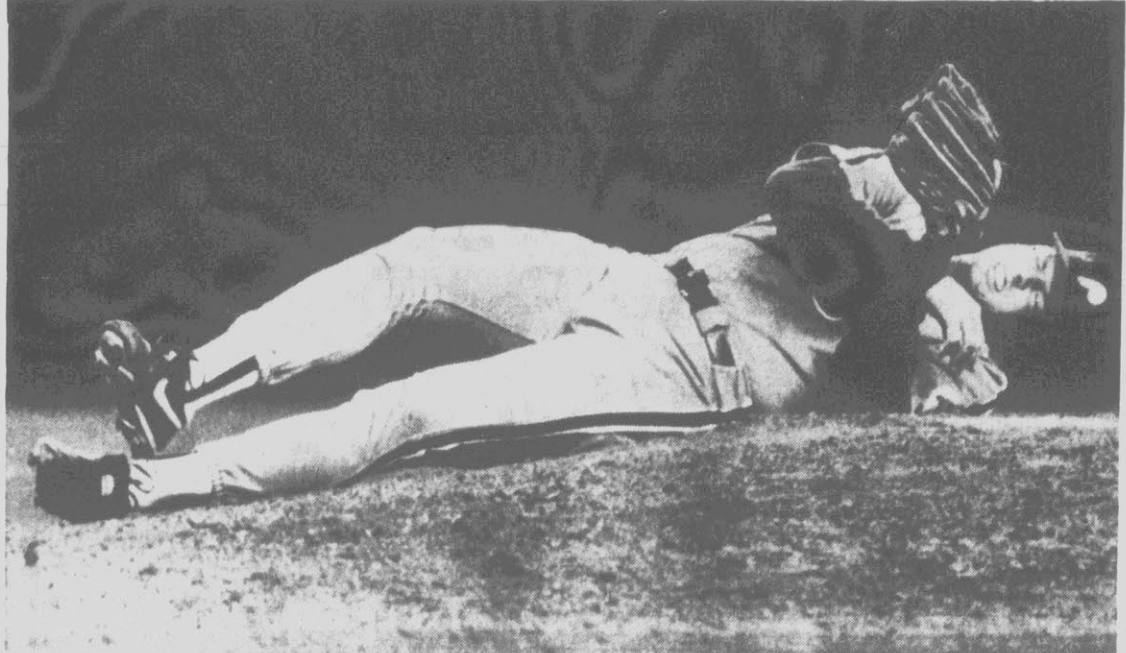

"I owe him a lot," said Smith, after Nettles drove in the game-winning run with a pinch-hit single as Montreal beat Atlanta 4-1 Thursday night. "I'm going to fill his locker with beer and sandwiches." It was the second time this season Nettles has come through with a key pinch hit for Smith. On April 16, Nettles hit an eighth-inning homer against Philadelphia's Kevin Gross to erase a 1-0 deficit for Smith in a game Montreal won in extra innings. Ironically, they are the only two hits Nettles has in 14 at-bats this season.

Barry Larkin started the Reds' game-winning rally with a single off the left knee of reliever Bill Dawley, 0-2, who had to leave the game. Chris Sabo singled off Greg Harris and Kal Daniels walked to load the bases ahead of Davis' run-scoring single. Von Hayes homered for the Phillies.

Conley Captures Coastal Golf Title

NEW BERN — D.H. Conley's golf team, which finished in regular season dual match competition, came through with a 14 stroke victory to win the Coastal Conference championship tournament Thursday at Fairfield Harbour.

The Vikings finished the match with a 315 score while Havelock finished second with a 329 total. West Carteret was third with 334, followed by Washington with a 354.

Conley's Gentry Pinner and Washington's Paul Manning shared medalist honors for the tournament, each carding a 77.

Other Conley scores included Hall Dunn and Tran Dean with 79s while John Pinner had an 80.

Havelock's effort was led by Mark Terrault with an 80, while Jim Holloway led West Carteret, also with an 80.

Conley will next participate in the 3-A Sectional tournament, to be held at Washington on Monday. Apex, which recently posted a state record 285 team score, and which has two members of its team already signed by North Carolina, is the favorite for the sectional tournament.

Jamesville Bombs Creswell, 14-2

JAMESVILLE — Jamesville High School's Kelby Moore pitched a two-hitter as the Bullets ripped Creswell, 14-2, in a Tobacco Belt baseball game called after four and a half by the 10-run lead rule.

Moore walked nine and struck out nine in going the full five innings. Jamesville took the lead in the first inning, scoring twice. Kent Dickerson reached on an error and Ernie Gardner walked. Doug Jones reached on an error, allowing Dickerson to score. Eric Spruill then singled, driving in Gardner.

Jamesville allowed Creswell a run in the third then exploded for 12 of its own in the bottom of the inning. Creswell got one more in the fourth.

Jeff Phelps, Moore, Jones and Spruill each had two hits to lead the Jamesville attack. One of Spruill's hits was a triple and he and Phelps each drove in three runs.

Jamesville is now 8-5 in the Tobacco Belt Conference and 10-7 overall. The Bullets entertain Bear Grass on Tuesday.

Rain Postpones Area Athletic Events

Rain and wet conditions forced the delay of a number of area athletic events, including East Carolina's baseball game at Virginia Commonwealth University.

The Pirates and Rams are attempting to set a make-up date for the contest, but no definite date had been set this morning. East Carolina has a game tonight at 7 p.m. at Harrington Field against Duke and another game Saturday at 7 p.m. against Norfolk State.

The Pirates then travel to Richmond, Va., for the Colonial Athletic Association's tournament, which begins on Thursday. ECU is the defending CAA tournament champion.

Other games known postponed include, with their replay date, if known: Farmville Central at C.B. Aycock baseball and C.B. Aycock at Farmville softball (both May 18); Rosewood at Farmville tennis (uncertain); the Eastern Plains Conference track championships (Monday); South Lenoir at North Pitt baseball and North Pitt at South Lenoir softball (today); West Craven at Conley tennis (Monday); the Coastal Conference track championships for both boys and girls (today); and Rose at Beddingfield in soccer, tennis and softball (no dates as yet).

The Greenville Little League games between Lions and Eveready and First Federal and Pepsi-Cola were washed out and reset for Sunday.

State Names Top Prep Athletes

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — Chester McGlockton of Whiteville, a three-sport star, and LeAnn Kennedy of Trinity, who led her teams to state titles in volleyball and basketball, were honored Thursday as North Carolina high school athletes of the year.

The two were presented their North Carolina High School Athletic Association awards during the association's annual meeting. A select panel of media representatives from across the state made the selections.

McGlockton, who is headed to Clemson on a football scholarship, was a Parade All-American in football while helping lead the Wolfpack to the 2-A state title. The 6-foot-5, 270-pounder also averaged 15 points and 11 rebounds in basketball and throws the shot put in track.

Kennedy has been a star in one of the state's most successful women's programs. She led the Lady Bulldogs to the state 3-A championship in volleyball and basketball.

Gerald Whisenhunt of Eastern Wayne was named the male coach of the year, while Donna Norman of South Stokes picked up the female coach of the year honor.

Indy Practice Set To Start

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Race car designers and engineers work furiously to make cars faster, and the sport's sanctioning bodies are just as busy trying to slow them down.

Somewhere in between, the two extremes reach an uneasy equilibrium.

"Every year, cars get a little better and better," U.S. Auto Club competition director Roger McCluskey said Thursday, two days before the start of practice for the May 29 Indianapolis 500. "But every once in a while, they stub their toes."

That seemed to be the case a year ago, when 23 crashes and four serious injuries during practice left both sides of the speed war scratching their heads in bewilderment.

Last year, some blamed the new radial tires, used for the first time at the Speedway, for the increase in crashes from only eight the previous year. Others, noting cars with a March chassis were affected more than others, speculated it was a combination of tires, the way the March chassis was set for the new radials and poor track conditions due to unseasonably hot and dry weather.

"I'm sure they've changed (the tires) some, because they tested them here last fall and this spring," USAC technical chairman Jack Beckley said. "The radials married to the Lola (chassis) real good last year, but not the March. But (in testing the new cars this spring) it seems they were all around 211-212 mph when they ran here. Whatever was the problem, the 1988s probably have it solved."

Mario Andretti, using a Lola chassis, had the fastest unofficial practice speeds in history last year with two laps above 218 mph. He won the pole position for the race with a four-lap average of 215.390, but that was more than 1 mph slower than Rick Mears' record average of 216.828 in 1986.

Mears, in a March, qualified at just over 211 mph last year.

"All the cars seem to be pretty quick," McCluskey said. "I don't think anybody went real fast in testing here (in March) — 212 or so — but they all seem to be pretty stable."

The major change in the chassis this year is a more "crashworthy" nose, designed to absorb more energy on impact, deflecting the force away from the driver's feet and legs.

Except for a concussion suffered by Danny Ongais, the major injuries last year were to drivers' legs and feet.

"All the manufacturers went through a crashworthy test in England. It (the car's nose) appears the same, but it's the way it's constructed relative to the brake pedal and throttle," Beckley said.

"It's supposed to take a lot more shock in a head-on impact. Also the 1988s are supposed to have more protection on the sides. They built in a little more strength there."

McCluskey hopes the safety of the new noses will not have to be tested this month, even though he knows it's an almost certainty there will be some — probably many — brushes with the Speedway's walls.

"In all honesty, we don't know how it's going to work. We know it is going to be considerably better, but anytime you have something new, you never know just how much better it will be," he said.

USAC began the mandatory technical inspections of the race cars on Thursday.

About two dozen of the 92 entries had arrived at the Speedway's mammoth Gasoline Alley garage complex, and more than half started the one-hour to 90-minute inspection, including cars for three-time winner Johnny Rutherford, veterans

Michael Andretti, Pancho Carter, Tom Bigelow, Jim Crawford and Rich Vogler, and rookies Scott Atchison and John Andretti.

Crawford was one of the drivers injured last year. He underwent surgery for two broken ankles and broken bones in his right leg and left knee after crashing on the first lap of a qualification run.

By mid-afternoon on Thursday, Bigelow's 2-year-old March-Cosworth became the first to complete the inspection.

How thorough are the USAC inspections?

"We hang 50-pound weights on them to make sure there's not one 100-thousandth of an inch movement (in the chassis)," Beckley said.

Atchison and John Andretti, Mario's nephew and Michael's cousin, are among seven rookies entered this year. Six of them participated in the voluntary Rookie Orientation Program at the Speedway last weekend, and each still must pass the final phase of a mandatory driving test after the track opens for practice on Saturday.

Mario Andretti, Rutherford and defending champion Al Unser are among the nine former winners entered for the race. Unser came to the track without a ride last year but took over when Ongais was injured and went on to win his fourth Indy 500.

The only other four-time winner, A.J. Foyt, also is back and will be trying for a record 31st consecutive start.

Other former winners entered are Mears, Gordon Johncock, Bobby Rahal, Danny Sullivan and Tom Sneva.

New Superstars Appear Ready

ROME (AP) — Chris Evert's contention that women's tennis has a bright future despite the aging of the sport's superstars is being drawn out in the Italian Open as new faces continue to impress.

The top-seeded Evert had to withdraw from the tournament on Thursday due to a heel injury suffered in her third-round match. But she still mentioned that although she and Martina Navratilova are growing old, women's tennis still has a healthy future ahead of it.

Evert singled out Argentine Gabriela Sabatini, who coasted to a 6-0, 6-2 victory over Nieve Dias of Brazil on Thursday to advance to the quarterfinals.

Sabatini, 17, and currently ranked No. 5 in the world, was to meet West German Sylvia Hanika today.

But the 33-year-old Evert also mentioned a group of hard-hitting and perhaps lesser known young women who are also advancing in the $200,000 clay court tournament.

Raffaella Reggi, 22, who beat Isabel Cueto of West Germany 7-5, 6-3 to advance to the round of eight, is overdue for a victory here as she has been the top Italian woman player since 1983.

Reggi, the fifth-seed and an obvious crowd favorite, was to play Canadian Helen Kelesi, who advanced via Evert's default.

The general reaction to Evert's withdrawal was not as dramatic as expected.

"I don't want to make any predictions but my next match is not going to be easy at all," said Reggi, who avoided meeting the five-time champion Evert because of the injury.

Sabatini, clearly in good position to return to the finals, said: "Whether or not Chris was here does not really make any difference. ... I still have chances to win the tournament."

But in order to do that, Sabatini must battle with the winner of a match between two other of the sport's new breed: Judith Wiesner of Austria and Sandra Cecchini of Italy.

The 22-year-old Wiesner, a quarterfinalist here last year, pulled off the upset of the day Thursday by downing the tournament's third-seed, Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4.

The other quarterfinal pairing had Arantxa Sanchez of Spain, who was knocked out of the final eight last year by Sabatini, meeting 19-year-old Bettina Fulco of Argentina.

Evert suffered her injury during her victory Wednesday over Nicole Provis of Australia. Although she showed no signs of the ailment during the match, the pain later became "excruciating" and she could not even stand up Thursday, said her fiancée, Andy Mill.

Evert rested Thursday at a hotel and was scheduled to leave for her home in Boca Raton, Fla., this morning, according to Mill.

Trainer Leza Hatch said Evert could recover in time for the French Open, a Grand Slam event beginning at the end of the month.

Hardboot Heaven Heart Of Derby

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer
LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The backside at Churchill Downs is hardboot heaven, where horses graze contentedly on Kentucky bluegrass still wet from the morning dew and are watched over by the best trainers in thoroughbred racing.

Over here is grizzled Jack Van Berg, who has saddled more winners than any horseman in the history of racing, and 74-year-old Woody Stephens, his face leathery from a lifetime of windswept mornings spent around the barns.

Over there is Charlie Whittingham, who, it seems, was sending out starters even before Churchill's trademark twin spires were in place, and D. Wayne Lukas, whose horses have earned over $50 million in this decade.

And then, over at Barn 38, there is the lady.

Dianne Carpenter is a former high school English teacher who went from explaining dangling participles and parenthetical phrases to timing morning workouts and keeping tabs on hot walkers. Once she started bandaging ankles and cooling out colts, well, pronouns and adverbs just didn't quite make it any more.

On Saturday, Carpenter becomes the first woman in history to saddle a second Kentucky Derby starter when she sends Kingpost to the starting gate. It is only the sixth time in the 114 years of America's most famous horse race that a woman has prepared a Derby starter.

Carpenter's Biloxi Indian finished 12th in 1984 and her return trip to the starter's gate puts her in the record book, a condition that pleases her no end.

"I want to be in that book," she said. "I'm not getting any younger."

Uhh, Dianne, Woody Stephens over there is 74, you know.

"I don't want to be 74 and training," Carpenter said. "I want to be resting by then."

Churchill's backside is not a restful place, though. Carpenter runs a 15-horse barn and, sitting atop her pony, she calls out instructions to the stablehands like a quarterback directing a drive downfield.

"Who's tacked up?" she asked a hot walker. Then, as another horse came by, she called after him. "Straighten his yoke out. Move it to the center a bit."

Then, along came Kingpost, the stable's star and winner of the $500,000 Jim Beam Stakes in his last start. He is equipped with a body that seems slightly out of proportion and is not what you would call a handsome horse. Carpenter calls him "Big Head." Owner Mark Warner describes him in less generous terms, saying simply, "He is ugly."

The trainer frowned at that.

"Last year, he was a lot of skin and bones, sort of an eyesore," she said. "This year, his body has caught up to his head. Or maybe, his head caught up to his body."

Then she considered Kingpost's profile and decided, "They all look pretty when they win $500,000 races."

Pretty enough to kiss, which is how the trainer greeted her gelding when the 21-1 shot won the Beam Stakes. A kiss?

Stephens or Whittingham probably would have settled for a pat on the nose and maybe an extra bucket of oats. Being trained by a former Miss Mississippi does have its advantages.

Carpenter's beauty queen background has not always made life on the backside easy for her. There are, after all, not many Miss Mississippis working in that setting.

Early in her racing career, she had Suncatcher entered in the Arkansas Derby at Oaklawn Park and showed up at the track late one night to look in on her horse. Security looked her over briefly, and decided she had made a wrong turn some place.

"Sorry, m'am," the man said, "we don't allow women on the backside."

"I'm a trainer," Carpenter said.

The security man studied the visitor and, based on his knowledge of the usual backside community, made a value judgment. "You don't look like a trainer to me," he said.

"And you don't look like a security man to me," Carpenter said. "Now, let me in."

A year later, Suncatcher was back at Oaklawn for the Hot Springs Handicap. Carpenter, a creature of habit, followed the same itinerary and arrived at the track after dark again. The same security man was on duty.

"I'm the trainer of Suncatcher," she said.

The security man looked her over.

noded his head and said, "Yeah, we know. Come on in."

"It took me a year," the lady trainer said, "but I made progress."

Rizzo Return To Old Times Could Be Bad For The Rest

SUFFOLK, Va. (AP) — Patti Rizzo feels like she has returned to old times, and that could signal bad times for the rest of the golfers at the LPGA's Crestar Classic.

After being named top four rookie in 1982, Rizzo followed with victories in 1983 and 1985. But she failed to win any events the next two seasons, and with the drought came the soul-searching.

"I never felt like it was a matter of choking," Rizzo said. "I knew how to win because I had won before, so it was just a barrier I was having a hard time getting over. I think really it was something within myself, a matter of trusting myself on the course."

The trust was in evidence last week at the Sara Lee Classic, where Rizzo birdied three of the last four holes to get in a four-way playoff, then won on the fifth extra hole.

"Last Sunday, I just went out there and it finally came through," she said. "But it was something I had been working on for a long time."

Rizzo thinks her momentum will carry over to the 54-hole Crestar Classic, which was to begin today at the Portsmouth Sleepy Hole Golf Course, a rolling, 6,215-yard layout along the Nansemond River.

"I still have a lot of feelings left from last week," she said. "I still feel in the groove, and I'm just looking forward to teeing it up and having another good week."

Another factor Rizzo said may work in her favor here is the weather. Frequent showers Thursday left large pockets of water on the course and washed out the pro-am. The National Weather Service said intermittent rain likely would continue through Saturday morning.

"I'm going to like it because I hit the ball high, I hit the ball at the pin and I hit it long, too," Rizzo said. "If it plays long for me, it plays extremely long for everybody else, so I think it's to my advantage."

Jody Rosenthal, the defending Crestar Classic champion, didn't share Rizzo's enthusiasm for the prospects of a rain-softened course.

"It's not good for anybody's game," Rosenthal said, "but it's probably more of a disadvantage for me because I don't fly the ball that far."

The 142-player field included nine of this season's top 10 money-winners. Amy Alcott is atop the list with $150,731.

"I decided to play here because I'm playing well now, and I always seem to play well here," said Alcott, the only two-time winner in the tournament's nine-year history.

Alcott has 27 career victories, but last year marked the first time she went an entire season without winning at least one tournament. Alcott blamed part of the problem on a thyroid condition which she said has since been corrected.

"I'm taking some vitamins now and feel strong," she said. "I came out this year feeling like my old self, and that has shown in my performance."

Ayako Okamoto, No. 4 on this year's money list, is the only top 10 absentee at the Crestar Classic, which carries a $300,000 purse and a first prize of $45,000.

Scheer Still In Hunt For Coach

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Carl Scheer knows what he wants in an NBA coach, but he has just a few days left to find the mix he wants.

With the expansion and NBA drafts approaching, the Charlotte Hornets are still searching for a coach for their inaugural season. And Scheer has some guidelines to go by.

"I'm looking for a guy that can teach, has patience, had head coaching experience at least at the (NCAA) Division I level, who is willing to understand the total picture of expansion and willing to build with us," Scheer said Thursday.

"We want to establish a foundation as we grow and withstand the initial heavy losses," he said in apparent reference to what might be a slow start to a new NBA team.

Scheer doesn't rule out hiring an NBA assistant, but pointed out some differences that would make him lean toward a college coach.

"A guy who's been an assistant coach in the NBA certainly has experience," he said. "But the Division I guy has had head coaching responsibility. It depends on the person."

Scheer said talks with Ohio State coach Gary Williams did not amount to an official interview, but that the three got together because of a suggestion by Kansas Coach Larry Brown. It was Brown who was the leading candidate for the Hornets job nearly two months ago before the Jayhawks won the national championship, after which Brown turned down an offer from UCLA and announced he would stay at Kansas.

Another possibility, Philadelphia 76ers coach Jim Lynam, was taken out of consideration when he was rehired this week as head coach. Scheer said the Hornets "just wanted a chance to talk to him. We hadn't made any decision on Jim Lynam."

The other factor to consider in hiring is the upcoming expansion draft as well as the regular NBA draft of college talent. Scheer said a coach's advice will be important, but not absolute.

"I think it will be a team effort," Scheer said. "It will be the coach's input, but not the coach's hand. It will be a franchise decision, not a coach's decision. We expect the coach will offer advice and counsel."

Scheer, who said he could not reveal the names of anyone who might be prospective candidates, said no further talks are planned before Monday.

The spring training roster of the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1988 listed eight players from the Dominican Republic.

'Caine Mutiny' Is Showcase For Young TV Cast, Director

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Robert Altman almost declined to direct the television version of "The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial," until he realized how many people were glued to their TV sets every day for the Iran-Contra hearings.

"I thought, if I can do the same thing, maybe they've trained an audience for me," Altman said.

Trained or not, audiences seeking fine drama will do well to catch "The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial" Sunday on CBS. The play is still riveting, Altman's direction is poetic, and the performances by his distinguished young cast are superb all the way around.

Altman, best-known for his feature films ("M-A-S-H," "Nashville") and a veteran of filming stage works ("Streamers," "Come Back to the 5 & Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean"), said he at first had no interest in the project because of the 1954 Edward Dmytryk film classic "The Caine Mutiny," which starred Humphrey Bogart as quintessential petty tyrant Capt. Queeg.

This is not a remake of the movie, but rather the Broadway play Her- man Wouk adapted from his Pulitzer Prize-winning novel. The movie was based on the entire novel. The play is just the court-martial, the dramatic core of the book.

Altman, who co-produced the piece, intentionally cast a younger Queeg than audiences who remember Bogart will expect, Brad Davis ("Midnight Express").

"Queeg was 37 years old in that book, and Brad Davis is 38," said Altman. "I tried to bring all those ages down to what was real."

It was a wise move. Davis makes the role his own.

Eric Bogosian, a New York actor and playwright ("Talk Radio"), will be new to most viewers, though he's done guest shots on such network shows as "Crime Story" and "Miami Vice." He's excellent as Lt. Greenwald, the reluctant defense attorney.

Jeff Daniels plays Lt. Maryk, the not-too-bright young officer on trial for mutiny for relieving Queeg of command in a typhoon.

Peter Gallagher ("The Murder of Mary Phagan") plays Lt. Cmdr. Challee, the prosecutor who gets more than he bargained for.

Kevin J. O'Connor has a small but meaty role as Lt. Keefer, the non-committal witness who turns out to be a pivotal character in the drama.

Michael Murphy, who stars in the HBO series Altman is directing, "Tanner '88," plays Capt. Blakely, the judge.

"The tragic figure in that case to me was Challee," said Altman. "He's the guy who felt betrayed."

As the court-martial opens, Challee is so sure of his case against Maryk, he has talked his friend, Greenwald, into serving as defense attorney. At first Greenwald is contemptuous of his own client and seems almost negligent in his defense.

But Greenwald wants to win, and as the court-martial progresses, he takes his distasteful task to heart, expertly baiting Queeg until the captain breaks down on the stand before the shocked but sympathetic court-martial.

Altman didn't get much of an audience for his first network TV projects, the Harold Pinter plays "The Dumbwaiter" and "The Room" for ABC.

"The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial" is a lot more accessible to a large audience. As evidenced by viewer interest in the Iran-Contra and Bork hearings and the success of television shows about lawyers, there's a natural drama to the courtroom setting.

Missing Monet Sketch Returned

PROVO, Utah (AP) — A Monet pencil sketch stolen from Brigham Young University's art collection nearly two decades ago has been returned, a university spokesman said.

"Two Women In A Boat," valued at $100,000 to $250,000, was among more than 1,000 art works worth some $3 million found to be missing when the school's 12,000-piece collection was inventoried in 1986.

University police recovered the sketch, also known as "The Boat Ride," from an unidentified collector in New York, school spokesman Brent Harker, said Thursday.

The collector voluntarily relinquished the piece, which had been purchased from an auction house.

The Monet and two sketches by Winslow Homer, "The Shepherdess" and "Over The Garden Wall," were taken from the university for authentication in 1969 by Dion O'Wyatt, a New York art dealer, Harker said.

O'Wyatt, however, sold the three pieces but had forgeries made of "Two Women In A Boat" and "The Shepherdess" and gave them to Brigham Young, Harker said.

University officials discovered the forgeries and realized that "Over The Garden Wall" was missing during the inventory, Harker said.

O'Wyatt pleaded no contest in November to theft by deception in connection with the three missing sketches and was given a suspended jail term and fine provided he help return the original works, Harker said.

The original "The Shepherdess" was recovered in December, but the owner of "Over The Garden Wall" refused to relinquish the sketch and the university has hired an attorney to try to recover it, Harker said.

Harker described the three sketches as the "crown jewels" of the missing art works.

Wes Burnside, a BYU art professor and curator of the collection from 1973 until his retirement in 1983, was accused by BYU officials of involvement in the disappearance of the art works, most of which are believed to have been stolen, improperly traded or sold between 1972 and 1978.

Burnside pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge in exchange for immunity from prosecution, and in March was named a defendant in a civil suit aimed at recovering the missing pieces.

Harker said the sketch brings to about 60 the number of art works recovered, and that university officials know the whereabouts of about 140 more and are seeking their return.

Actor Killed In Auto Wreck

PUERTO PLATA, Dominican Republic (AP) — British actor George Rose, who won Broadway's Tony award for "My Fair Lady" and "Drood," died when his car swerved into a ditch and flipped over in this Caribbean resort, police said.

He was 68.

Police said the accident occurred about 10:30 p.m. Wednesday less than a mile east of Puerto Plata, but authorities were not aware of it until the vehicle was found at 6 a.m. Thursday.

Police officer Jose Nunez said Rose apparently was alone and that the car was traveling at high speed when it swerved off the road and into a ditch, rolling over several times. He said Rose died instantly.

- LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Avoid being sarcastic to a business partner this morning. Get together with friends tonight, but be sure to drive with the utmost care.
- SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Think twice, then three times, before spending a lot of money today. This would be a good night to entertain a group of friends.
- SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Be certain of the facts and figures before you follow the advice of an expert. Enjoy a favorite hobby with a friend this evening.
- CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): Don't allow a secret worry to prevent you from keeping a promise you have made. If your property need repairs, make them now.
- AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): A new acquaintance could waste much of your valuable time if you allow it. Go out on the town with your friends this evening.
- PISCES (February 20 to March 20): This might be a nice time to do some sightseeing with your mate, but be sure to take care of all your business responsibilities first.

The bidding:

 Opening lead: Four of ♦
 Sometimes declarer has only one way to tackle a hand. As a defender, your fate then is entirely in the lap of the gods. Once in a while, however, the defenders can influence the outcome by giving declarer a choice of lines. If he is at all human, he will go wrong at least half the time.

The auction was simple enough. When South found out that his partner had enough for a response, he bid what he expected to make even if his partner held no more than a minimum.

The fact that North had responded one spade made West choose to lead a diamond. Declarer made his normal play of the queen from dummy, covered by the king and taken by the ace. He then used his only entry to dummy, the ace of spades, to lead a trump toward his hand. East inserted the jack, and the king lost to West's ace.

West cashed the jack of diamonds and continued the suit. Declarer ruffed, banged out the queen of hearts to pick up the ten, drew the last trump and happily conceded a club-making four-odd.

Have you spotted the defensive error? West should allow the king of trumps to win the third trick. Now declarer has a choice of lines. If he decides the cards lie as in the diagram, he will continue with the queen of trumps and make his game. But he might conclude that East started with the A-J of trumps and West with 10-6-3; in that case, the winning line would be to lead a low trump from hand to force the ace. That would result in going down one trick, and we feel that there is at least a 50 percent chance that declarer would have gone wrong!

Church Criticizes Police Raid On Polish Strikers

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Hundreds of police ringed the strike-bound Lenin shipyard today and workers inside said they expected an assault. Workers at a huge southern steel mill said a raid by riot troops had not ended their strike.

The Roman Catholic Church criticized the police raid at Nowa Huta steel plant outside Krakow and said authorities apparently had decided to take similar action against the shipyard workers.

The statement issued in Warsaw came as three church-appointed mediators told reporters they felt betrayed by the police attack Thursday because an agreement had been within reach to end the 10-day strike.

The Nowa Huta strike began a day after a successful one-day stoppage by transit workers in the northwestern city of Bydgoszcz touched off Poland's worst wave of labor unrest since the 1981 military crackdown on the independent Solidarity union federation.

State-run media reports said the shipyard's director warned strikers in a message broadcast over loudspeakers during the night to leave or he would resort to "other means."

A Pole who spent the night in the yard said about 2,000 strikers were inside and "it's very tense. You can see they are all under great stress."

The workers began to worry about their low food supplies, with supporters outside no longer allowed to bring gifts of bread.

"It seems they are going to use a different scenario than in Nowa Huta," said senior Polish dissident Adam Michnik. "They probably want to take the shipyard by hunger."

During the night, police convoys periodically moved about this Baltic port in a show of force. Inside the shipyard, Solidarity leader Lech Walesa circulated among young strikers, trying to keep up spirits.

He vowed to be "the last to leave" the yard, where the now-outlawed Solidarity was born.

In a lengthy commentary today, the Communist Party daily Trybuna Ludu attacked the strike leaders but said authorities should be patient because "the political adventurers again are hiding behind the workers' backs."

Opposition activists said at least 32 strikers, including a man whose legs were broken, had to be treated for beatings suffered when security forces stormed the steelworks Thursday.

The church's statement also disputed government claims that strikers were violent and terrorizing other workers at the plant.

"Unfortunately during the course of talks in Nowa Huta, the strike was liquidated with the use of force, and in relation to the Lenin shipyard a decision for (that strike's) liquidation was also taken," said the statement, issued by the church secretariat.

"We express deep sorrow that an attempt of dialogue and social conciliation did not bring the expected results," it said.

Resistance Chief Faces Deportation

JERUSALEM (AP) — Police arrested an Arab-American leader of the Palestinian civil disobedience movement and ordered him deported, Israeli officials said today. A government spokesman accused him of advocating violence.

A Jewish settler shot and killed a Palestinian shepherd Thursday and wounded another in the eye. Israel radio also reported that troops shot and wounded a 15-year-old Arab boy in the Gaza Strip town of Khan Yunis.

Sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said U.S. Ambassador Thomas Pickering would protest the ordered deportation of Mubarak Awad, who was arrested at his Jerusalem home at midnight (6 p.m. EDT Thursday). U.S. Embassy officials said they had no information on such a protest.

In 1985 Awad established the Center for Non-Violent Studies in Jerusalem, which calls on Palestinians to peacefully resist the Israeli occupation of Arab lands captured during the 1967 Middle East war.

Leaders of the 5-month-old Palestinian uprising have adopted many elements of Awad's non-violence strategy. Awad also provided tours and information to foreign journalists covering the unrest.

Avi Pazner, spokesman for Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, said Awad was ordered deported because he had gone beyond his calls for non-violent protest and was responsible for leaflets that urged Palestinians to throw gasoline bombs and stones.

"This is preaching violence," Pazner said, adding that Awad had also called for a Palestinian state that would include all of Israel.

Awad said today he supported the establishment of a Palestinian state alongside Israel, his lawyer, Jonathan Kuttab, told The Associated Press.

Kuttab met Awad today in jail and was preparing an appeal against his deportation.

Awad said the deportation order came because the Palestinians were showing restraint and using civil disobedience, Kuttab said.

The move to expel Awad followed a crackdown on leaders of the uprising, 20 of whom have been deported to Lebanon.

Israel has also jailed 21 Arab journalists, including one Thursday, in an effort to stifle news coverage of the protests.

Soviet Paper Praises China

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party daily Pravda today heaped praise on Chinese reforms that have attracted foreign investment, and it called for a rebirth of the work ethic to bring similar prosperity to the Soviet Union.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has made favorable references to recent Chinese economic experiments, but Pravda's article was the most complimentary report yet on reform in the neighboring communist state.

Today's article on China's Tianjin region, one of 14 open economic zones, set forth a list of accomplishments and credited an inspired workforce for the success of "Chinese perestroika."

"Perestroika" is the name of Gorbachev's reform program that aims to rebuild the Soviet economy and society. Soviet proponents of perestroika, which means "rebuilding," have encouraged broader use of joint ventures to draw foreign investment to Soviet industry.

But an array of problems faces the foreign businessman in the Soviet Union. They include low worker productivity, unreliable delivery of supplies, poor storage and transportation facilities, and a lack of convenient and comfortable accommodations.

China's open economic zones contain only 8 percent of the nation's population but account for more than a quarter of its industrial production and 40 percent of all exports, Pravda said. The zones were created four years ago.

The authoritative newspaper said the special economic zones had been successful in attracting foreign capital and joint ventures because the Chinese built support facilities needed for international trade.
