County Board Says No To School 'Entitlement'

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County's manager said the county Board of Commissioners will not provide an "entitlement" of funds to the Pitt County Board of Education or any other agency when the two boards met Monday to discuss a finance position paper proposed by the school board and money to be allocated from county funds to the schools.

In a statement Kramer Jackson prepared and read at the request of the commissioners, he said, "An entitlement to the schools represents an injustice to every other agency, department and civic cause seeking county support."

In addition, agreeing to the proposed finance position paper would commit the county to providing 70.2 percent of future tax property, 50 percent of future revenue from the two half-cent sales tax plus additional dollars for state-approved salary adjustments and for inflationary price increases for operating expenses, he said.

But, school Superintendent Eddie West said the finance paper proposed by the school board was to address "policy and design issues" and not entitlement or right to funds.

"Just to keep us going, it seems to me, requires some sort of structure" for being assured funds as the Board of Education and the school system's adminstrative staff implement a revised long-range plan for the system, West said.

To provide an example of the impact the position paper could have if approved by commissioners, Jackson said, "On July 1, the state is mandating that Pitt County appropriate an additional $319,000 to match federal-state dollars for public assistance. This amount of money could require a tax rate increase of 1.16 cents.

"Under the proposed school policy, the county would have to raise the tax rate 3.89 cents in order to get the $319,000 for public assistance since the schools would be entitled to 70.2 percent of the tax rate increase. And therein lies the real problem — entitlement."

Deputy Superintendent John McKnight briefed the boards on the planning process used to devise the school system's long-range plan, which involved matching school capacities and programs with projected enrollment and capital outlay needs. It also addresses the implementation of the Basic Education Plan, racial balancing and attendance lines.

MONEY TO SCHOOLS — This graph compares Pitt County property tax collections with the amount the Board of Commissioners has appropriated for public secondary schools. The Greenville and county school systems were consolidated at the beginning of the 1984-1985 fiscal year and the property tax rate increased 10 cents per $100 valuation to provide $3 million a year for school construction. In addition to local property tax money, the schools receive half the collections from two half-cent sales taxes — which amounted to $1.36 million last year and should total about $1.73 million this year. Runoffs Sought In Two Races

Two candidates from the May 3 primary election have requested a second primary runoff election, a county official said today. Candidates had until the deadline of noon today to file for a runoff election.

According to Elections Supervisor Margaret Hardee, D.D. Garrett and William Davis III have filed and are eligible for the runoff election scheduled for May 31.

Garrett filed for a runoff against James Dupree for the Democratic nomination for the Pitt County Commission seat in District A, while Davis wants a runoff against John B. "Jack" Lewis Jr. for the Democrat nomination for the state Court of Appeals.

According to Ms. Hardee, if the candidate receiving the highest number of votes for an office does not receive a majority, the candidate receiving the second highest number of votes may, within seven days after the election, request in writing a second primary.

Mrs. Hardee said the runoff election of Garrett and Dupree will only involve voters in Consolidated District A, while the other runoff for the Democratic state Court of Appeals judge nominee will involve all 26 Pitt County precincts.

She said the runoff election will be held during the same hours as the primary election, from 6:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m.

"Because of the smaller number of ballots, there will be a smaller number of workers at the polls but the cost of opening all the polling places, and the printing of ballots will still be borne by the county," Mrs. Hardee said.

She also said board officials are considering dividing the recently used high-tech, Shouptronic election equipment among various precincts to aid in gathering, counting and reporting election results.

Widow, Mobley Plead Innocent

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

Sandra Faye Haddock White, 45, and James Alton Mobley, 21, pleaded innocent Monday in Pitt County Superior Court to charges of first-degree murder in connection with the March 19 stabbing death of Mrs. White's husband, Bobby Charles White.

Mrs. White, of Route 2, Box 120, Grimesland, reported finding her husband, 47, dead about 9 p.m. March 19 in the living room of their home on N.C. 33. White was stabbed more than 40 times in the chest, neck and back.

Appearing before Judge Herbert O. Phillips III, Mrs. White wore blue jeans and a green and white blouse and sat silently with her attorney, Pitt County public defender Robert Shoffner, while District Attorney Thomas Haigwood read the charges filed against her.

Shoffner answered "not guilty" to charges of first-degree murder, solicitation to commit murder and conspiracy to commit murder.

Mobley, with a beard and mustache grown since he was arrested six weeks ago, wore navy slacks and a plaid shirt into the courtroom. He also carried a Bible and read from it while he waited to be arraigned.

Greenville attorney John Savage, co-counsel for Mobley, answered "not guilty" as Haigwood read charges of first-degree murder and conspiracy to commit murder filed against Mobley.

Texasgulf Vows To Cut Pollutants Fail To Appease Environmentalists

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Citizens speaking at a public hearing on the Texasgulf Company's pollution discharge-elimination plans for its Aurora phosphate mining operation made it clear they do not trust the company to do what it says it will do, unless it's well-policed.

The hearing was conducted Monday by the state Division of Environmental Management at Beaufort Community College. Most of those commenting at the hearing were either fishermen or representatives of environmental and public policy groups.

Tom Regan, Texasgulf's vice president in charge of the phosphate operation, promised that the company will get its emissions of phosphorus dumped into the river down 90 percent and its fluorides down 75 percent. Both of these reductions, he said, will be accomplished through the institution of a water recycling system. He did not give a timetable. Currently, about 529 tons of phosphorus and 348 tons of fluoride are emitted into the river each year, he said.

The state proposes to issue an NPDES (National Pollution Discharge-Elimination Systems) permit to Texasgulf this summer, but speakers, including Jim Kennedy, an estuarine scientist employed by the North Carolina Coastal Federation, said basic information on the volume and sources of pollution that will discharge into the river with the proposed water management system have not been fully developed.

The company has said it will have engineering studies done by fall. Several speakers, including Kennedy, questioned the wisdom of the state's allowing the company to conduct its own engineering studies.

Steve Levitas, an N.C. Coastal Federation speaker, said it is essential that there be public participation in any authorization to construct that is issued to the company by the state. He said the possibility of reopening the permit for additional monitoring requirements should also be stated, since the waste characteristics have not been provided for several discharges. A detailed and rigorous timetable should be drawn up and adhered to, he said.

The company has promised to have its plans and specifications for the modifications of its facility ready by Feb. 1 of next year.

Federal water pollution regulations applicable to the Texasgulf operation require that no discharge of process wastewater be allowed, except during severe precipitation conditions. Severe precipitation conditions was said to be a "25-year 24-hour rain," or eight inches within 24 hours.

The Coastal Federation also called on the state to provide more sophisticated monitoring of the river so as to know what Texasgulf and others are putting into the water. Oxygen levels, temperatures, pH, algal

New Delhi Bank Struck By Bomb

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A bomb exploded today in Citibank's main branch office in downtown New Delhi, killing one man and injuring at least 14 other people, police and bank officials said.

"We can confirm that a bomb exploded today ... at one of our branches in New Delhi," said David Roberts, a vice president and country corporate officer for Citibank in India.

There was no claim of responsibility for the 12:15 p.m. explosion, which caused extensive damage to the American bank's third-floor office.

U.S. Embassy spokeswoman Maryann Whitten said the embassy issued a warning after the blast. "The American Embassy has advised its employees and American businesses in New Delhi to take security precautions," she said. She did not elaborate.

Ms. Whitten said there were no reports of injuries to Americans.

Thirteen people injured in the explosion were admitted to Ram Manohar Hospital. Another person was taken to the All India Institute of Medical Sciences. Three of those admitted to Ram Manohar Hospital were in critical condition, Dr. Saroj Sharma said.

The dead man was identified as Satish Chaudhary, an Indian who lived in the town of Noida east of New Delhi, the United News of India reported.

The man's name was disclosed in Parliament by P. Chidambaram, India's minister of state for home affairs, UNI said. The Home Ministry is responsible for internal security matters.

Chidambaram said all of the injured were Indian citizens.

The bank is staffed almost entirely by Indians, although many foreigners use its services.

Arms Treaty Put On 'Back Burner'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate action on the U.S.-Soviet medium-range missile treaty has "been put on the back burner" until there is a resolution of complaints of alleged Kremlin backsliding on inspection provisions, Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd said today.

"It could be resolved in a matter of hours, in a matter of days, or it might never be resolved," the West Virginia Democrat told reporters.

The dispute could be settled quickly, but probably only if Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze offers concessions when he meets with Secretary of State George P. Shultz later this week.

"The Soviets can resolve this fast," said Byrd. "The thing that can expedite this is for the administration and the Soviets to sit down and close these loopholes."

"We don't want to give the Soviets loopholes to cheat," he said. "This obviously needs fixing and the time to fix it is before the Senate takes up the treaty."

Assistant Senate Republican Leader Alan Simpson of Wyoming and Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., emerging from a White House meeting with President Reagan today, voiced confidence the problems can be surmounted.

"We have much to do in the Senate. We have the three or four issues to resolve. We're ready to do that," Simpson told reporters. "We're all very interested in what will take place with Secretary Shultz and Foreign Minister Shevardnadze. I think that they will do their usual good job of splicing things back together again."

"We just hope that there are only misunderstandings on verification and that after the Shultz-Shevardnadze talks, it'll be clear that the INF treaty has some on-site provisions there that are mutually agreed to," Lugar said.

Mitterand Selects Socialist To Head New, Unified French Government

PARIS (AP) — Michel Rocard, a Socialist known for his appeal to France's political center, was chosen today by President Francois Mitterrand to succeed conservative Jacques Chirac as premier.

Chirac, defeated Sunday when Mitterrand swept to re-election to a new seven-year term, visited the presidential Elysee Palace to submit his resignation, ending two years of an uneasy power-sharing between a conservative premier and Socialist president.

Mitterrand's chief of staff, Jean-Louis Bianco, made a terse announcement about 2½ hours later, saying only the 57-year-old Rocard would be the new premier and providing no details of who would serve in the Cabinet.

The new premier will be expected to invite non-Socialists into the Cabinet to demonstrate an appeal beyond the party's boundaries.

Because Chirac still has support of the center-right majority coalition in the National Assembly, the constitution did not require him to step down and the president could not dismiss him.

But there was never any doubt Chirac would quit following his defeat at the polls. Mitterrand won re-election with 54 percent of the vote to Chirac's 46 percent.

Rocard always has been rated among the most popular politicians in public opinion polls. He is known for stating his opinions whether or not they coincided with his party's.

Rocard resigned as agriculture minister in the Socialist government of Premier Laurent Fabius in 1985, saying he could not support a change to a new system of electing the National Assembly that distributed seats among parties based on their proportion of the vote.

Rate Hike

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Utilities Commission on Monday approved rate hikes for North Carolina Natural Gas and Piedmont Natural Gas.

Residential customers of N.C. Natural Gas Co., which serves eastern North Carolina, would pay an additional 4.11 percent, or an average of $22.96 a year under the new rates. Piedmont Natural Gas Co. customers would pay 2.98 percent or an average of $16.63 more.

The increases, which are effective May 1, result from orders by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission that involve how pipeline companies — such as Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp., which provides North Carolina's gas supply — could buy out long-term contracts that are set at a higher price than gas is selling on the open market.

Knowles Asks Funding Increase For Manager

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville City Council conducted its second budget session Monday, as representatives of three departments were on hand to answer the council's questions regarding proposed budget increases in each department for the upcoming fiscal year.

Budget recommendations for fiscal year 1988-89 for Sheppard Memorial Library, the Division of Engineering and the City Manager's office were discussed in the workshop session held in the third floor conference room of City Hall.

The meeting of city officials was the second in a series of four sessions designed to review the entire upcoming budget proposal as recommended by Greg Knowles, Greenville city manager.

Knowles has proposed an expansion of the city budget by 7.8 percent — a rise from $19,656,163 to $21,693,443. An additional proposal to initiate a city capital improvement program would raise the budget by nearly half a million dollars, or 10.36 percent over last year's budget.

The three budget areas covered at Monday night's meeting each contribute to the proposed increase in city operating costs for the upcoming year.

Knowles presented to council the recommended budget for the City Manager's office, calling for an 18 percent cost increase over this budget year. Knowles recommended a budget of $182,362 for the upcoming year, compared with $154,456 budgeted this year.

"The majority (of that) is the changes that accrue because you didn't have the city manager doing certain things in the past," Knowles explained to the council.

Included in the increase was an allowance for the addition of a full-time secretary which he said would help assist in meeting the increased workload in the office. A part-time office assistant position would in effect be eliminated.

Other parts of the increase include a rise in operating expenses and capital outlay.

Among the additions proposed are a $300 color television, a $625 desk, a $550 credenza and a $700 typewriter.

"Why do you have to pay $700 for a typewriter?" asked Councilmember Lorraine Shinn. "You can buy them all day-long with a 6K (memory) for $350. I can't understand the jackup in price because I have to buy the same things."

Councilmember Rufus Huggins also questioned where the city was purchasing desks that cost $625.

Among the other details of the proposed budget discussed was a telephone-communications apparatus in the city manager's car which would cost the city approximately $60 per month to maintain.

From the city's engineering division, Glen Whisler was on hand to answer questions regarding that department's recommended budget request.

The Engineering Division has a recommended budget of $440,110, compared to the current year budget of $407,916. The department requested $501,213.

According to the budget summary, the department will continue to be involved in the planning, design, and construction of captal improvement projects such as the Hooker Road bridge replacement, Guy Smith Stadium rennovations, and street resurfacing. Another project planned is the thoroughfare plan update study.

The summary also says the engineering division will provide plan review and construction inspections for subdivisions and site developments to insure compliance with development regulations.

The area where services are provided continues to grow with the extension of the city's Extraterritorial Zoning Jurisdiction. In the past two years, that area has increased by nearly 2,500 acres.

Included in the budget increase is an allowance for the addition of an electrical inspector and a codes enforcement officer.

Mack Beale, chairman of the Sheppard Library Board of Trustees, and Willie Nelms, library director, were at the workshop to answer any questions regarding a recommended 5 percent city budget increase over this fiscal year.

The library is requesting $384,763 from the city, which represents two-thirds of the library's local operating funds. Beale said the county in the past has contributed the remaining one-third of local funds, while state, federal, and miscellaneous sources combine for the remainder of funding.

"The library system, along with the rest of everything in Greenville and Pitt County, is continuing to grow leaps and bounds," Beale said

"At the current rate, use of the library this year will exceed 6 percent of the same time last year and we expect a similiar increase in the coming year. The budget we have proposed will allow Sheppard Memorial to continue to be able to provide the same service we have in the past," Beale said.

The library has called for no new positions in the upcoming fiscal year and an additional capital outlay proposal of $4,202 to buy four library cabinets, a new public copying machine, a tape player, and a book truck.

"Everytime I've ever looked at the library's budget, it was pretty close to being on target," commented Mrs. Shinn. "Mr. Nelms has done a real good job of holding the line."

Councilmember Inez Fridley was absent from Monday's workshop.

The next City Council budget discussion session is scheduled for May 18.

Ayden Board OKs Computer Purchase

AYDEN — The Ayden Board of Commissioners Monday night unanimously approved a plan for the Ayden Housing Authority to purchase a computer system.

Jerry Cox, housing authority director, told the board the three-station IBM Personal System II will cost $20,577 and will be paid for with money from the authority's modernization fund. Cox said about $27,000 is budgeted for modernization.

The cost includes all hardware, software and installation, Cox said, and the system will be adequate even if the authority doubles or triples in size.

Town Manager Don Russell also presented three proposals from accountants bidding on an audit for the town. The board selected Lloyd Moody of Greenville to perform an audit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1988. Moody's bid stated he would charge $7,000 for the audit.

Accountants Thomas Marshburn of Greenville and William Zachman of Washington, N.C., submitted bids of $6,400 and $6,950, respectively, but Russell said the board was not obligated to accept the lowest bid.

Moody has audited the town for the last three years and is familiar with the records and the bookkeeper, said Russell, and rehiring Moody would provide the town with continuity.

The board decided to offer Moody a one-year contract, with the hope that the computer system will make future record-keeping less cumbersome and decrease the workload of the accountant, thus decreasing their cost.

In other action, the board approved the final plans for the Chester Fields subdivision on SR 1113, Old Snow Hill Road. The subdivision will contain doublewide manufactured homes, which will be required to have siding and underpinning.

The board approved an ordinance authorizing the town to finance improvements on the town's electric system through $550,000 in revenue bonds issued by the League of Municipalites. The improvements are part of the Betterment Program.

The board also authorized the mayor to complete the loan application that must be sent to the league.

The board unanimously voted to send a letter to Pitt County stating the town will accept ownership of the lift station, sewer lines and water lines that the county will install for the Weyerhaeuser plant scheduled to open near Ayden next year. The county will install the utilities, and the town will maintain them and collect revenye.

The board also scheduled a public hearing for its June 13 meeting to hear public comment on a request by Wanda Smith to put a mobile home beside her mother's home at 1320 S. Lee St.

S.C. Man Charged In Bank Robbery

MONROE, N.C. (AP) — Authorities have charged a Greenville, S.C., man with three counts of armed robbery after a Union County sheriff's deputy apprehended a suspect five minutes after a bank robbery.

Malcolm Terrell Whitaker, 49, is being held in the Union County Jail on a $100,000 bond pending a May 18 court date, said Union County Sheriff Frank McGuirt. The sheriff said three tellers were robbed, resulting in the three counts.

None of the nine bank employees or three customers in the bank at the time of the robbery was injured.

The robbery occurred Monday when a suspect entered the Indian Trail branch of United Carolina Bank, produced a hand gun and told the tellers it was a robbery, McGuirt said.

Greensboro Family Runs Business That Provides Recovery Of Bodies

By JIM SCHLOSSER
Greensboro News & Record

GREENSBORO (AP) — Three years ago, as authorities swarmed over N.C. 150 near Summerfield after a bomb had ripped apart a black Chevy Blazer carrying Fritz Klenner, Susie Lynch and her two children, a middle-aged couple waited patiently beside the highway.

When the signal came, Joe and Shirley Bray of Greensboro began their grisly duties. They gathered up the four bodies, put them in two vans and hauled them to the state medical examiner's office in Chapel Hill. They were paid $20 per body.

Any time there's murder and mayhem in the central Piedmont, Joe and Shirley Bray and their son, Tim, are standing by at the scene, waiting for medical examiners and detectives to finish their work so the Bray family can begin theirs.

"We've handled so many," said Joe Bray, 62. "We did 700 last year."

The Brays own Bray Transport Co., also called Bray Removal Co., a name discreetly ambiguous. Their business is removing the bodies of those who have died both naturally and unnaturally in Guilford and six surrounding counties.

The Bray family does it efficiently and, they believe, with dignity and respect. They are proud of their three up-to-date vans, which cost $21,000 each and are kept spotless.

To some people, those vans are too symbolic of death. Once, when a van broke down near Burlington, a mechanic refused to fix it while a body was in the back. Bray had to hire a funeral home to hold the body for a few hours. Another mechanic wouldn't even ride around the block in an empty van so Bray could point out a mechanical problem.

Calls can take them many miles away — or as close as the railroad crossing 100 yards from their back door.

"I picked up two up there one night," Bray said of a fatal truck-train collision some years ago.

Acquaintances needle the Brays about their work, but Joe Bray doesn't find amusing any suggestions that he sits by a police scanner hoping for the worse to happen.

"Listen, I hope nobody is going to die," he said in a deep, gravel-sounding voice. "If I got word that no one else was going to die, I would say 'Great!.' I would pack it up, buy a boat and move to the coast."

"I don't think I will ever get used to this work," said Shirley Bray, 52. "It gets to me, especially when I carry children. I have caught myself crying going down the road. I have to shake myself and say, 'This is not your doing, Shirley.'"

Someone once called her and asked her to come pick up "a stiff." She told the caller, "Now, you just wait a blame minute!"

"I want to handle the deceased like I would want someone to handle one of my loved ones if they were killed in a wreck," she said. "It should be done with respect and consideration, not like it is a log of wood."

Joe Bray has worked with death all his adult life. In the Army, he was assigned to graves registration. Afterward, he went with a funeral home in his native South Boston, Va.

He then worked for the Guilford County Fire Department for 16 years. He remembers sometimes waiting for hours for a funeral home or ambulance to send a vehicle to pick up bodies. Later, the state approved a system of privately employed removers. He applied and was assigned a seven-county area. He pays all of his own expenses and buys his vehicles.

He says the $20 per body fee doesn't cover the expense and inconvenience of getting up in the middle of the night and driving a far distance. If he takes a body to the state medical examiner's office in Chapel Hill for an autopsy, he also is paid 49 cents a mile. Occasional transport work for funeral homes brings another source of revenue.

The small, white Maybrook Drive house serves as home and headquarters for the couple. Scanners crackle through the rooms. Tim Bray, 32, lives in a mobile home just up the road.

If the Brays get an uninterrupted night's sleep twice a week, they're lucky.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Controls Will Help

Permit Doesn't Go Far Enough

When it comes to pollution regulations, North Carolina doesn't need a wolf in sheep's clothing.

And although the permit the state has proposed controlling Texasgulf's wastewater discharge into the Pamlico River merits support, the state should be aware of the plan's shortfalls and be prepared to closely monitor its progress.

In addition, once the permit is in place, North Carolina should take a decisive role in enforcing the standards it requires Texasgulf to meet. Otherwise, the plan could fool those who believe it can be effective. The losers in that charade would be the people of North Carolina who derive pleasure from recreation on the river and the fishermen who literally pull their living from its stressed waters.

The proposed permit is a large improvement over current regulations because it prohibits pollution rather than allowing it to occur. Implementing it would effectively end the flow of phosphorus from Texasgulf into the Pamlico by requiring the industry to recycle all wastewater and remove the pollutant. Because of this strong position, it should be supported.

In addition, the community, environmental groups and state officials cooperated to devise the permit, a process which is applaudable and lends integrity to the proposal.

But the plan gives Texasgulf four years to comply. It does not define the nature, extent or frequency of permitted wastewater discharges. It does not address the effects of discharging million of gallons daily of fresh water into a saltwater estuary. It leaves the responsibility for developing the recycling technology to the industry. Finally, it places the task of monitoring water quality in the hands of external studies contracted and paid for by Texasgulf.

Despite the strong points of the plan, these weaknesses and the questions they raise must be considered.

Why couldn't the permit set a series of improvement goals for the company to achieve in the four-year compliance period? An immediate reduction of pollution is needed. The river shouldn't have to wait four years for relief. A commitment to gradual improvement throughout this period is technologically reasonable.

Why should the state allow a company with a history of questionable regard for the environment to independently develop an engineering project of this scope, and then to monitor, through a contracted study, its effectiveness?

North Carolina's reluctance to enforce existing regulations has encouraged Texasgulf's previous laxness. The state clearly should be willing to provide research and data of its own to make Texasgulf accountable to the permit. Any technology that goes into place must work, not just on paper, but in actuality.

After all, what's at stake here is the future of one of eastern North Carolina's brightest resources. The Pamlico is a source of income for the communities that line its banks; this prosperity puts money in state coffers through taxes. It is also an aesthetic asset, a playground whose abundant beauty has been threatened by misuse in the past decade.

The phosphorus discharges by Texasgulf have played a role in this decline, and now can be eliminated by this proposed permit. For this reason the permit should be accepted, but not without a clear commitment by North Carolina to enforce it.

The state should actively monitor Texasgulf's progress on the permit, and be prepared to take action if this progress is inadequate.

Reagans Have Company In The Stars

WASHINGTON — Not even the National Enquirer's panel of Top Ten Psychics predicted it: Nancy Reagan consulted astrologers about the president's travel plans and to help schedule important events of state.

While Washington wags were agog at the possibility that the agenda of the Free World was occasionally entrusted, at least in some small way, to the Stallone-Will-Marry-Jackie-O crowd, President Reagan's top spinmeisters were frantically engaged in damage control.

They probably didn't have to bother. Many Americans, it seems, are nearly as superstitious as their president. And if a key to Reagan's popularity is that he is the average man writ large, then he may suffer little lasting damage from the star-dirt revealed by Donald Regan in his new "quit and tell" book.

A survey of 1,989 adult Americans by the Roper Organization in 1985 disclosed that nearly a quarter — 23 percent — said they believed in astrology. Another 30 percent hedged their bets and said they "weren't sure," while slightly less than half said they did not believe in it.

A survey conducted for the National Science Foundation in 1979 reported that about one out of five adults said they, like the Reagans, read horoscopes or a personal astrology report "quite often," and one out of eight said they read their astrological forecast every day. In total, more than half of those surveyed said they read such columns at least occasionally.

When the NSF asked those questions again in 1985, it found that overall readership of horoscopes had declined slightly to about one in six, although the percentage of people who said they had decided not to do something because of their horoscope had increased from 5 percent to 8 percent, a "statistically significant" gain, according to the NSF.

The survey also found that 39 percent of the American public considered astrology to be "very scientific" or "sort of scientific." Naturally, the scientific establishment found those results slightly dismaying. "If the public is not clear about what is and is not a science," an NSF statement huffed, "then it also may not be clear on what views are regarded as scientific. This may help to explain the lack of acceptance of scientific thinking," as disclosed elsewhere in the survey. After the first details about Reagan's Karnak connections leaked out, more accounts of baffling First Family behaviors soon followed. The bill of particulars, as reported by the press, included the president's belief in lucky numbers.

Reagan's lucky number is 33. White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater opened a press conference last week by telling reporters he would "take your first question at exactly 12:33 and a half," a joke that Washington Post White House correspondent Lou Cannon reported was part of a strategy to make light of the astrology story without directly denying it.

In fact, many Americans say they have lucky numbers or charms. The 1985 NSF survey reported that 43 percent of the American public believes that "some numbers are especially lucky for some people." And a nationwide Audits and Survey poll in 1983 found that 12 percent of adults said they had an object that they considered their "lucky charm."

The disclosure about the Reagans' links to things paranormal raises other issues that Enquiring Minds might like to know more about. Do the Reagans, for example, believe in ghosts? Eleven percent of Americans do, according to a 1978 Gallup survey. And what about witches? Again, 11 percent of 1,553 Americans claimed to believe in them when questioned by Gallup.

Better yet, what about flying saucers? Surveys in recent years consistently show that more than half of all Americans believe that UFOs are real. Those surveys consistently report that about 10 percent of people say they personally have seen a UFO. The NSF poll found that 43 percent believe that at least some of the reported UFOs "are really space vehicles from other civilizations."

Frankly, it might be wise political strategy for Reagan to come out of the closet on UFOs, and peddle the notion of an impending War of the Worlds. After all, what better justification could there be for his Strategic Defense Initiative?

Bushies Groping For Cure

WASHINGTON — The roots of deepening Republican unease about George Bush's candidacy are found in two recent trivial incidents: his rejection of suggested millionaire-bashing and his inability to find five minutes to see Secretary of Education William J. Bennett.

The first incident grew out of the prospective presidential nominee's instincts. The second represented a staff decision. Taken together, they point to the vice president as more clearly representative of the Establishment than any recent Republican candidate.

Shaking off false euphoria from imagining a Republican electoral college "lock," the Bush camp is worried. It realizes their man cannot count on Ronald Reagan's blue-collar voters, who conceivably could deliver the presidency to Michael Dukakis even if the Democratic nominee cannot penetrate the South. But while Bushies are starting to diagnose the malady, they grope blindly for a cure.

Even when the cure is at hand, it can be missed — as during a conversation aboard Air Force Two while campaigning in Indiana. Bush had just read that Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca's personal compensation for 1987 was $17.9 million. A man of both good taste and political experience, the vice president commented that such pay seemed wretched excess.

A passenger on Air Force Two was Indiana's Gov. Robert D. Orr, a strong Bush backer. Orr is described by Hoosier politicians as worried whether Bush can run well enough among blue-collar voters to carry his stoutly Republican state (though he denied to us any such concern). When Bush began tut-tutting about salaries counted in tens of millions, Orr suggested it might not be bad politics to say just that out loud.

Bush thought it over for a while, then concluded that approach might not go over with his core constituency. To one bystander (not Orr), it seemed as though the vice president was reviewing mentally how millionaire-bashing would be received in the executive suites, salons and country clubs where people know and like George Bush.

At about the same time, Bush was absent when Secretary Bennett released a fifth-anniversary report on "A Nation at Risk," the warning about the nation's schools. A candidate who from coast to coast has droned on that "I want to be the education president" might have been expected to juggle campaign schedules for unopposed primaries in order to be there.

More significant was the vice president's inability to find five minutes some time — any time — requested by Bennett that week to discuss the report. That reflects the Bush staff's opinion that the secretary is a "loose cannon" (to use one aide's description) who can only get their boss in trouble. That view overlooks Bennett as a colorful Catholic ex-Democrat in a Cabinet of gray Republicans — a potentially major political asset.

Jesse Jackson Returns To N.C. Campus To Find Comfort

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Whenever Jesse L. Jackson worries about where he is going, he looks for comfort in the places he has been.

One of those is North Carolina A&T State University, his alma mater. It was 24 years ago that Jackson received his bachelor's degree in sociology from this predominantly black school. Sunday he came back. He flew all night from California to get here, in part to see two sons, Jesse Jr. and Jonathan, receive their degrees, but also to reconnect his body with his soul.

Jackson's campaign speeches have always been suffused with history, relating the crucial points of his life to changes in American society over the past quarter-century. But the historical context has become more pronounced now that his chances for winning the Democratic nomination have diminished. Jackson's field of vision has widened again — forward and backward. Greensboro is an important link between what was and what is. It was here, as he told the 1988 graduates Sunday, that his professors urged him "to sit in, stand tall and fly high, so that when I run for the presidency, I'm just acting out my lessons."

Jackson arrived in Greensboro in 1961 after an unhappy freshman year at the University of Illinois. He became quarterback of the football team, student body president and, by 1963, leader of the local student civil rights movement. When he was arrested after one sit-in, students surrounded the jail and chanted: "Free Jesse Jackson! Free Jesse Jackson!" Now another generation of students chants his name. When he entered the Greensboro Coliseum as the commencement ceremonies began, the call went out: "Run, Jesse, run."

"I run so that you might run. If I can run for president, surely you can run for governor. If I can run for president, surely you can run for senator. Surely you can run for attorney general."

There was a time this year when the chant was "Win, Jesse, win!" but the act of running seems preeminent again. Jackson rarely mentions the White House in his speeches anymore. Instead, as he told the A&T graduates: "I run so that you might run. If I can run for president, surely you can run for governor. If I can run for president, surely you can run for senator. Surely you can run for attorney general."

As he prepared his commencement address to this year's class, Jackson was still smarting from Vice President George Bush's characterization of him as a "hustler from Chicago." Bush said it was meant as a compliment; Jackson said it reminded him of a lesson his professors taught him: "Why does anyone resort to name-calling? I learned a long time ago here at A&T what causes it: constipation of the brain, a deficit of ideas and diarrhea of the mouth."

Bush, Jackson reminded his audience of black students and their parents, went to Yale. Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, the Democratic front-runner, was schooled at Swarthmore and taught at Harvard. And here was Jesse Jackson, a product of a small black school in the South, challenging them for the nation's highest office. Sometimes a situation is so authentic that words — no matter how overused and trite — transcend cliches. This was one of them. At first people murmured in agreement when Jackson noted the advantages Bush and Dukakis had over him from the start. Then they started to cheer, and finally they rose in a roar as Jackson shouted:

"Against those odds, having said that, I never earned the right to do less than my best. You never have either. It's not where you came from, it's where you're going. I was born in the slum, but the slum was not born in me. Mind over matter! Mind over matter! You can make it! You can make it! You can make it!"

After his speech, Jackson sat quietly as the graduates marched to the front single-file to receive their diplomas. Jesse Jr. and Jonathan Jackson were near the end of the line. Their dad bounded to his feet when they reached the stage.

First he hugged Jesse Jr., the oldest, who went to private school in Washington and, despite offers from Brown and Harvard, was ordered by his parents to go to A&T to learn that there was more to life than grades and careers. Then he hugged Jonathan, who had attended public schools in Chicago but was not a good student until he reached Greensboro.

North Carolina Agricultural and Technical State University had changed both of his sons for the better, Jesse Jackson said. It had given each of them what they needed, just as it had for him.

People Who Want To Borrow Money Should Get Counseling.

Loan officers at NCNB are qualified to give a lot more than loan approvals.

They're also qualified to give some very smart counseling. Which can relieve the anxiety of borrowing money, and turn it into something it's never really been:

Comfortable.

Like most things in life, there are rules for lending money. And a lot of banks, as you have probably noticed, follow them to the letter.

However, weeks of intensive training teach our loan officers how to put those rules to the best use.

In other words, they learn to make them work in your favor.

They can also counsel you on the smartest possible loan for all of your needs.

But don't think that all this counseling means you'll have to lie on a couch and talk about your past.

Instead, you'll be invited to sit down and talk about your dreams.

Whether it's something as simple as a new patio. Or as grand as a trip around the world.

And if you don't like the hassle of going to the bank, do this:

Use the simplest loan application form in town–your telephone.

Just call your neighborhood NCNB. Give your credit information to a loan officer. Or call Phone-A-Loan at 1-800-342-9701.* And we'll call you back with the good news.

If the news isn't so good, we'll still make every attempt to find a way to meet your needs.

Or, perhaps now that interest rates are low, you want to buy a new car or boat.

To give yourself time to make a sound decision, call us for a pre-approved loan. And not only will you know exactly what you can spend, but we'll lock in the interest rate. For a full 45 days.

Because we want to be the best bank in the neighborhood, we have lots of helpful advice on borrowing money. And it would be a real privilege to pass it on. Anytime you can call or come in.

Besides, after all the training our loan officers have been through, the chance to use it is always–shall we say–good therapy.

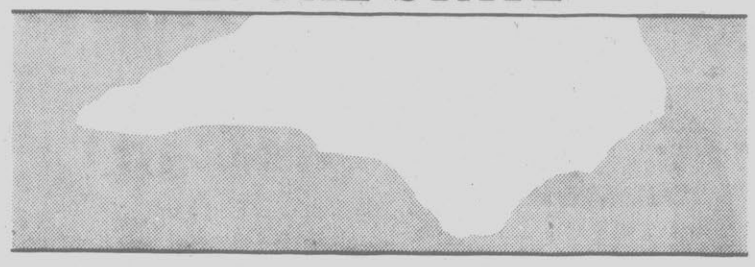
IN THE STATE



Suit Filed

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The children of two cancer victims have filed a $6 million lawsuit against Champion International Paper Co., federal court records show.

Champion operates a paper mill in Canton, N.C., about 30 miles from the former home of Denzel and Wilma Cates of Hartford. Mrs. Cates, 49, died May 8, 1987, and her husband, 52, died June 9, 1987. Both had cancer.

The suit, filed Monday in U.S. District Court, said the 80-year-old plant uses a chlorine bleaching process that has been shown to generate concentrations of dioxin, which causes cancer, the suit said.

The suit accuses Champion officials of being aware of a health threat "for some number of years," and accuses Champion of "exhibiting a conscious disregard and contempt for the health and safety of the decedents."

Murder Charge

CARTHAGE, N.C. (AP) — A 25-year-old Candor man has been charged with first-degree murder in connection with the shooting death at a Moore County nightclub over the weekend, authorities said.

Danny Thomas Quick was arrested Monday and charged with the fatal shooting of Charles Leonard Baldwin of West End, according to Moore County Sheriff's Department Maj. Frank Johnson.

Johnson said several other men and women hit by gunfire at the club Sunday night were treated at Moore Memorial Hospital and released.

Mixer Suit

RALEIGH (AP) — A Wake Forest woman has won a $1 million settlement from the owners of a cement mixer that crossed in front of her family's van on a holiday weekend in 1985, injuring the woman and killing her mother.

Attorneys agreed in principle to the settlement after a Wake County Superior Court jury had deliberated all day and broken for the weekend following a three-week trial.

Dianna Carter, 38, suffered brain damage and eye injuries in the accident May 24, 1985. The collision, which also injured her two sisters and a nephew, occurred on a busy two-lane stretch of U.S. 17 near Jacksonville as the family members were headed to beach for the Memorial Day weekend.

The settlement package totals $1.5 million and includes $400,000 to be paid to the husband of the woman killed, Betty Jean Blodgett, also of Wake Forest.

Bogus Jeans

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Yadkin County man has been charged with selling some of the 20,000 counterfeit Jordache jeans that were supposed to go to the needy. The charge, against Thomas Clinton Bates, is the first in the case, though there has been civil litigation over the jeans.

In August 1983, the U.S. Customs Service seized the jeans — valued up to $800,000 — at Charlotte-Douglas International Airport. The Mexican-made jeans, sporting phony Jordache trademarks, were headed for a Charlotte firm. Company officials claimed they didn't know they would be getting counterfeit jeans.

Jordache officials asked the Customs Service to destroy the jeans. But a Charlotte federal judge ruled the jeans — minus the Jordache trademarks — should go to the needy.

In April 1985, the Salvation Army in Charlotte got the jeans and distributed about 10,000 of them. But the agency sold the other 10,000 pairs after it had trouble getting volunteers to remove the trademarks.

Phillips Says More Local Flexibility Will Come In Basic Education Plan

GREENSBORO (AP) — While some local school systems are chafing under restrictions in North Carolina's Basic Education Program, educators say the eight-year, $800 million plan will gradually accommodate more flexibility.

Because the BEP represented such a huge financial commitment, the state attached strings to the funding, setting stringent standards for administrators, teachers and students.

Once the initial goals are achieved, North Carolina schools are likely to be granted more flexibility with state resources, said State Superintendent Craig Phillips.

"If we know where we are, assess conditions, set objectives, establish strategies to get where we want to go, ... then we'll have gone full cycle and we can start back and assess the conditions."

Since the program started in 1985, test scores have been the chief barometer of the system's success and the basis for accrediting a school, while statewide rules spelled out what must be taught and how funds must be spent.

While state officials say the system serves to maintain standards, some educators are anxious to get more control.

In Greensboro, for example, Superintendent John Eberhart says the state standard calling for one librarian for every 400 students doesn't meet the needs of his schools.

"I'd like to have the flexibility of working with our faculty and with our community and with our media specialists and ask: 'What should a modern media center in a high school be, what should it have, and how should it be staffed to meet its purpose?''' Eberhart told The Greensboro News & Record.

Others say the lack of flexibility stifles creativity.

"The drawback in this process is going to make it difficult for us to have districts that will try something else, expand programs and add programs," said Robert Hanes, deputy superintendent in the Charlotte-Mecklenburg school system.

In Charlotte, for example, Hanes has hired native Spanish speakers to teach the language to elementary school children. But those instructors are not certified to teach in North Carolina.

As a result, the system must pay the teachers with local funds, he said.

Joe Webb, assistant state schools superintendent, acknowledged the hiring requirement could be cumbersome, particularly for counties without local funds to pay uncertified teachers.

He said the state Board of Education planned to ask the Legislature to relax its rules for uncertified instructors in hard-to-hire disciplines such as foreign languages.

The flexibility issue has been debated not only in North Carolina but across the nation since a 1985 Carnegie Forum report on education was issued.

The report suggested changes in education should begin at the bottom levels, with classroom teachers and principals.

The report created a debate between those who advocate strict state control of schools and those preferring the individual, single-classroom approach to change.

"A lot of people felt that the report was a direct criticism of what the Southern states had done," said Susan Traiman, an education analyst for the National Governor's Association in Washington.

"The reasoning (behind the Carnegie report) was that change happens from the bottom up, that there is only so much the mandates could encourage, that there has to be an approach to excellence that is not just from the top down with mandates."

But some North Carolina educators defend the "top-down" approach taken by many Southern states, arguing that Southern school systems have much ground to cover.

Third Party Says It Will Field November Candidates

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — An alternative political party is trying to field a slate of candidates in North Carolina that will push Democrats toward a more liberal platform, officials said.

The New Alliance Party, established in New York in 1979, called a news conference Monday to announce it had gotten 63,000 signatures on petitions to put the party on the ballot for the November election. To be eligible under state law for inclusion on the ballot, the group needed 43,535 signatures.

Emily Carter, national chairman of the party, said the Democratic and Republican parties are too conservative.

The party is recruiting sympathetic North Carolinians to run for statewide offices such as governor, lieutenant governor and other Council of State posts on the New Alliance ticket, Ms. Carter said.

If the party gains enough clout it can pressure Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, the Democratic gubernatorial candidate, to move his platform to the left or risk defections of blacks, Indians and progressive whites to the New Alliance candidate, Ms. Carter said.

The killing of Indian judicial candidate Julian Pierce in Robeson County "is simply one more piece of evidence that the struggle for democracy in North Carolina is a matter of life and death," Ms. Carter said.

"And now we don't have to rely on the Republicans and Democrats to see that justice is done."

Pierce was killed in what authorities called a domestic dispute, leaving District Attorney Joe Freeman Britt the lone candidate for the Superior Court judgeship there.

The New Alliance Party "was born out of the need of poor and working people, people of color and progressive people for a party of our own," Ms. Carter said. The group favors guaranteed housing for all Americans, national health insurance and reduction of the "bloated" military budget, she said.

The party is supporting Jesse Jackson's bid for the Democratic presidential nomination. If he loses, the party will support Lenora Fulani, a New York psychologist, Ms. Carter said.

Consultant Says New Jail Needed

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — A consultant's study recommends a new jail for Robeson County, suggesting officials spend $13 million on a facility to house 538 prisoners to meet needs by the year 2000.

The county's jail was found unacceptable by state officials who inspected it last June and gave county officials until May 31 to present a report on long- and short-term solutions.

Consultant Steve Carter of Carter Goble Associates in Columbia, S.C., said the situation in Robeson County was the worst he had seen in more than 400 overcrowded jails. The average daily jail population and prisoners' average length of stay both have about doubled from 1980 to 1987, he said.

He suggested to a special meeting of the Robeson County Board of Commissioners that they build the facility in stages, beginning with a 288-bed facility for $11.2 million. Carter estimated a new jail probably would cost taxpayers less than $20 per year and no more than $25 or $30 per year over a 20- 30-year period.

In 1980, the average daily population in the Robeson County jail was 64.5 and the average length of stay was 6.5 days and in 1987 the average daily population was 138 and the average length of stay was 12.1 days.

Waste Site Panel To Offer Incentives To Host Area

RALEIGH (AP) — State lawmakers hope that with enough financial incentives and an effective public education program, one of North Carolina's 100 counties will volunteer to host a low-level radioactive waste facility.

The General Assembly next month will be asked to consider incentives that will likely include a $90 million trust fund to provide for monitoring the site and other adjustment measures after it closes, said Sen. Joe Johnson, D-Wake, chairman of the Joint Select Committee on Low-Level Radioactive Waste.

"We're going to have to find some community leaders who are interested, then we're going to have to educate them and let them weight it out for their community," Johnson said Monday. "It's a balancing act. We are asking the county to sell 200 acres or 300 acres of its territory for X-number of dollars. We make the price right, and they probably will do it."

However, Johnson and Bill Holman, lobbyist for the Sierra Club and the Conservation Council of North Carolina, agreed that incentives would likely be secondary to convincing the public waste can be stored and processed without danger.

"The state will have to convince folks the facility will be safe before they'll take it at any price," Holman said. That means involving local leaders in designing and locating the facility, he said.

A group of eight Southeastern states chose North Carolina to open a facility in 1993 and dispose of the region's waste for 20 years, after which the other states would take turns.

The legislative committee working on the incentives for the site took no official action Friday because it lacked a quorum. Johnson said the panel would meet the week before the General Assembly convenes June 2 to consider the package.

Another panel established under a 1987 law has drawn up proposed specifications for a facility and is searching for a site — a process occurring against a backdrop of widespread public resistance and fear.

Legislators hope the emergence of a volunteer county or counties will render unnecessary the thankless task of designating a reluctant host.

Johnson said to defuse fear, the state must do a better job of explaining the difference beween low-level radioactive waste and high-level radioactive waste. Low-level waste is no more potent than "stuff people shoot into their arms to take X-rays with," he said.

A disposal facility at Barnwell, S.C., that will close in 1992 has been an economic benefit to the area and has been operated safely, he said.

Barnwell County "hasn't had to tax their people to build a school in years," Johnson added. "All of their schools are run by the fees on this facility. That's a powerful incentive."

Motorist Dies In Car, Bus Wreck

MONROE, N.C. (AP) — A car and school bus collided head-on Monday, killing the car's 85-year-old driver and sending 12 children to the hospital with minor injuries, officials said.

Killed in the accident was Glenn Carter, 85, of Waxhaw, said Trooper Linda Broome of the N.C. Highway Patrol.

The children, ages 5 to 11, were treated for scrapes and bruises at Union Memorial Hospital in Monroe, said hospital officials and state troopers.

"About two kids were real shook up (and) crying," Principal Jerry Cross of Western Union Elementary School in Waxhaw said by telephone Monday afternoon.

Cross said a second bus was sent to the scene to pick up the remaining 20 children who had been on the first bus.

The first bus was so badly damaged it had to be hauled to the county bus garage, he said.

Ms. Broome said the bus was headed for Western Union about 7:45 a.m. when it was struck head-on by Carter's 1978 Ford. The accident occurred about nine miles west of Monroe, she said.

"The other vehicle (the Ford) was coming out of a curve," she said.

No citations were issued in the accident, she said. The bus driver, 24-year-old Aaron Wheeler of Waxhaw, had been driving for Union County schools for eight years, she said.

Campbell Seniors Urged To 'Be All'

BUIES CREEK, N.C. (AP) — Students should overcome "learned helplessness" and heed the message of the U.S. Army television commercials and "be all you can be," Gov. Jim Martin told 700 graduates of Campbell University Monday.

Martin said people must get beyond the obstacle of accepting impossibilities. He described for students the "elephant syndrome."

"Elephant syndrome relates to the condition of elephants as beasts of burden," Martin said. "At an early age, elephants are tied to a tree, hour after hour, and he tries to free himself by pulling the tree down. Finally, he becomes totally frustrated and gives up. Later, all that it takes to restrain the elephant is to tie him to a small stake.

"So well the elephant has learned its helplessness and accepted the perception that it ceases it's struggle against what could easily be overcome, for it has come to accept what it wrongly perceives to be an impossibility," Martin said.

"My family and I sincerely appreciate the support, encouragement and courtesies shown to us by the people of Pitt County during my campaign for District Court Judge. I will do my best to justify your confidence in me."

High Winds Riddle Kentucky City During Wave Of Storms

By JONATHAN W. OATIS
Associated Press Writer

National Guardsmen patrolled for looters today in a Kentucky city blasted by powerful winds that killed one woman and injured at least 15 people in a wave of violent storms that pounded sections of the Midwest, Northeast and South.

The storms spawned by a cold front Monday flipped airplanes in Cleveland, knocked out power to thousands in Michigan and unleashed hail as big as baseballs in Texas.

"It's a disaster, just a disaster," said Middlesboro, Ky., Mayor Troy Welch, estimating damage to his city in the millions. The storm destroyed a radio newsroom, tore roofs off buildings, blew furniture into the street and knocked out all power to the town.

Four people were arrested for looting, police said today.

Welch declared an emergency, and Gov. Wallace Wilkinson activated 30 National Guardsmen to help clean up and keep the peace in the city of 11,000 residents near the Cumberland Gap just north of the Tennessee border.

The thunderstorms that lashed the Ohio Valley on Monday weakened considerably by early today, with just scattered showers and thunderstorms remaining from Virginia to New York. But strong thunderstorms continued over sections of Louisiana, Texas, Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama.

In Middlesboro, the winds smashed a trailer, killing a woman and injuring her husband and child, police Sgt. Jimmy England said.

Many people were injured and there was an unconfirmed report that one person was missing, state police said. Fifteen people were treated at Middlesboro Appalachian Regional Hospital, said assistant administrator Dan Fitzpatrick.

Helicopters carrying injured to the University of Tennessee Medical Center in Knoxville 45 miles to the south had to turn back because of the bad weather, said a nursing supervisor who refused to give her name.

The storm hit at 10:15 p.m. Monday, just as news director Jim Gilbert of radio station WFXY was getting ready to broadcast a warning about heavy thunderstorms.

"We were sitting there and the wind started to blow really hard and it (the station) exploded," Gilbert said. "It wiped my newsroom out. ... We have nothing. We're gone. My typewriter's gone. I can't even find it."

The wind blew roofs off downtown buildings, shattered windows, tore doors of hinges at the hospital and leveled a furniture store built in 1890, officials said.

"There's furniture all over the street," Welch said.

At the Middlesboro Airport, 20 small planes were damaged, along with fuel pumps, said Don Armstrong of the state Division of Disaster and Emergency Services in Frankfort.

All power was knocked out, and crews were working today to restore it, said Jack Cook, safety coordinator for Kentucky Utilities.

Three emergency shelters were set up to give people left homeless a place to stay for the night, but fewer than a dozen showed up, Armstrong said.

The National Weather Service said it could not confirm whether a tornado had hit Middlesboro.

Tornadoes were reported in northeast and southwest sections of Ohio, with winds up to 70 mph recorded, but the weather service said it could not confirm the twisters.

Six small planes, five of them tied down, were lifted into the air and damaged at Burke Lakefront Airport in Cleveland, said Larry Rohl, owner of T&G Flying Club Inc. Rohl pegged the loss to the club at $125,000.

In the southwest Ohio city of Oxford, Ray Moloney saw his picnic table lift off the ground in his back yard, spin like a helicopter, then come to rest 15 feet away.

Widow Becomes First Person Found Guilty Of Drug-Tampering Charges

By RENEE SCHOOF
Associated Press Writer

SEATTLE (AP) — A woman was found guilty of killing her husband and a woman to collect more than $175,000 in insurance, and the prosecutor says the conviction in the nation's first death-by-product-tampering trial will stop drug tamperers.

Stella Nickell, 44, of suburban Auburn, was convicted Monday of all five counts in the deaths of her 52-year-old husband, Bruce, and Sue Katherine Snow, 40, also of Auburn.

Federal court jurors, who deliberated nearly five days, said Mrs. Nickell's daughter's testimony against her mother proved crucial. Mrs. Nickell, scheduled for sentencing June 17, could receive life in prison. Prosecutors also are considering state murder charges.

"It was all there for (jurors) to make this decision," Assistant U.S. Attorney Joanne Maida said, adding that the verdict will "be a deterrent" to would-be drug tamperers.

Jury foreman Murray M. Andrews, 55, said the panel was split 11-1 in favor of conviction through its first three votes.

Juror Laurel Holliday, who wept when the verdict was announced, told U.S. District Judge William Dwyer on Monday she received an anonymous call Friday from a woman who said, "Don't you all know she (Mrs. Nickell) failed the lie detector test?"

Results of Mrs. Nickell's polygraph test were not introduced as evidence.

Ms. Holliday said she told no other jurors about the call and vowed to disregard the information when the judge told her to do so.

Defense lawyer Tom Hillier, who declined Dwyer's offer to excuse Ms. Holliday, said Monday night he planned to appeal.

"Assuming the 11-1 split included a vote of not guilty by the same juror who reported having been tampered with earlier this morning, then it's my belief that that's no coincidence and that that has to be investigated if for no other reason than to insure the integrity of the jury system," he said.

The testimony of Cindy Hamilton, Mrs. Nickell's 28-year-old daughter, was decisive. "I think without Cindy's testimony there were, you might say, too many missing links in the chain of evidence," he said.

Ms. Hamilton testified her mother discussed killing Nickell by a drug overdose or by hiring a hit man.

Although prosecutors were unable to link Mrs. Nickell directly to cyanide purchases, she was convicted of all five counts she faced, two of causing death by tampering with a product involved in interstate commerce and three of tampering.

Beset by financial problems and unhappy in her marriage, Mrs. Nickell laced Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules with cyanide and gave them to her husband for a headache, prosecutors said.

To make his death appear random, she poisoned other bottles of Excedrin and Anacin capsules and put them on store shelves. Ms. Snow died after swallowing capsules from one of those bottles, six days after Nickell, the prosecution said.

Her husband, Paul Webking, said she might still be alive if local authorities had recognized the real cause of Nickell's death, initially attributed to emphysema.

"The effect of the verdict is secondary to the fact that Sue is dead," Webking said. "No matter what the verdict is, Sue's going to be dead."

"I wish they'd hang her to the highest tree," said Ms. Snow's mother, Marion Chapman, in a telephone interview from Artesia, N.M.

King County Prosecutor Norm Maleng said he would wait until after sentencing to decide whether to file state murder charges.

The deaths of Nickell and Ms. Snow touched off a nationwide tampering scare and prompted Excedrin manufacturer Bristol-Myers to recall its capsuled, non-prescription medicines.

"Product tampering is intolerable to society," John Weisberg, spokesman for New York-based Bristol-Myers, said. "When it occurs every effort must be made to identify those responsible and to bring them to justice," he said.

Seven people died in Chicago in 1982 from cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Tylenol, but those deaths remain unsolved.

Ms. Maida accused Mrs. Nickell of poisoning her husband to collect on his life insurance. Hillier said Mrs. Nickell was the victim of a lying daughter who stood to gain a $300,000 reward from pharmaceutical companies for information leading to an arrest.

Mrs. Nickell's plan failed because she was careless in mixing the poisonous capsules, greedy for insurance benefits and owned two of the five tainted bottles of painkillers recovered, Ms. Maida said in closing arguments.

Mrs. Nickell, a tropical fish enthusiast, used a bowl contaminated with an algaeicide for cleaning fish tanks when she mixed potassium cyanide with the Anacin and Excedrin painkillers, the prosecution alleged.

Traces of the compound were found in the five tainted bottles.

Mrs. Nickell also lied about insurance policies and pressed medical authorities for a more specific cause of death, Ms. Maida said.

Mrs. Nickell stood to receive $71,000 in insurance if the death of her husband was from emphysema, as pathologists first concluded, but could have gotten $176,000 if the death were ruled accidental, the prosecutor said.

Mrs. Nickell also left fingerprints on library books about poisons and cyanide, Ms. Maida said.

Bennett Leaving Cabinet This Fall

By JOHN HILDEBRAND
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

William J. Bennett, the outspoken secretary of Education whose targets ranged from college spending to school birth-control clinics, announced Monday that he would resign in mid-September.

Bennett, 44, is only the third person to head the federal Department of Education and by far the most controversial. He had become known particularly for his attacks on expensive private universities, terming some of their programs "rip-offs." But he was unsuccessful in pushing most of his proposals for curbing student-aid programs through Congress.

The secretary, who had hinted in recent months that he might step down, was uncharacteristically quiet Monday, not discussing his resignation with reporters. Through a spokesman, he issued a statement pledging to continue his work at "full speed ahead" during the next few months. He told staff members that he had recommended his chief deputy, Linus Wright, as successor.

The timing of Bennett's announcement was something of a surprise, coming four months before his planned departure. Spokesman Loye Miller said that the announcement would make it easier for the secretary to sign contracts for writing a book and appearing on the lucrative lecture circuit. During his 40 months as secretary, Bennett has become one of the administration's most popular speakers, appearing at more than 60 Republican gatherings across the country.

During his first news conference, the secretary had made headlines by suggesting that curbs on loans would force some students to "divest" themselves of stereos, cars and beach vacations. Since then, federal payments to cover defaulted student loans have more than tripled to an estimated total this year of $1.6 billion.

The former philosophy professor likes to describe himself as a populist, a former Democrat who was appalled by the turmoil that wracked U.S. campuses during the 1960s. His wide-ranging political stances could best be described as neoconservative: opposed to distribution of condoms by school clinics and in favor of "core" requirements in the humanities and sciences for undergraduates.

Though his views often antagonized college administrators, Bennett was respected for his intellectual sharpness.

Bennett often has been described as a potential political candidate, possibly in North Carolina where he formerly headed an academic think-tank.

Dog Slows Escapee

MOUNDSVILLE, W.Va. (AP) — An escaped killer who eluded authorities for five weeks, living in the rugged hills in a lean-to and eating groundhog, was captured when his sprint to flee searchers was slowed by a dog he'd befriended.

Tommie Mollohan, 45, who was serving a life term for the 1973 robbery and murder of a grocer, was caught Monday following a two-hour chase that one officer likened to a deer chase.

Mollohan was the last to be recaptured of three murderers who escaped April 3 from the West Virginia Penitentiary. He was trapped on a remote, heavily wooded ridge about 25 miles from the prison, state police said.

Police said Mollohan relied on his outdoors savvy to remain free five weeks, but he also befriended a dog, and the pet slowed him down during Monday's chase.

Local police, state conservation officers and authorities with tracking dogs chased Mollohan up one thickly wooded ridge and down another.

Regan On Reagan: Excessively Shy, But Alert

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ronald Reagan is hesitant about bothering the people who work for him — so much so that he once let smoke pour from the fireplace in his office rather than call for help, Donald Regan says.

Reagan did not want to make any demands on anyone, the president's former chief of staff says in "For the Record," the newest collection of out-of-school tales by a White House departee. So the chief executive did nothing when a fire, caused by a clogged chimney in his study in the West Wing, broke out.

"He stayed at his desk," Regan wrote, "reading his documents with smarting eyes, until the guards asked if he wouldn't like to move to another room while they put out the fire and the place aired out. He hadn't wanted to bother anybody."

In his book, Regan offers contradictory portrayals of Reagan — on one hand picturing the president as disengaged and indecisive, a leader who "laid down no rules and articulated no mission," and on the other hand drawing him as involved and interested.

In contrast to his harsh depiction of first lady Nancy Reagan, he describes Reagan as judicious, eager to hear both sides; a formidable reader who carries thick folders of reading material under his arm when he leaves the office for the family quarters around 4 p.m. daily; incapable of uttering an unkind word about others and in love with his job.

So Regan's Reagan:

—Is aware of what he doesn't know. "He hesitates to ask questions or confess to a lack of knowledge in the presence of strangers," Regan wrote, "and thanks to the way his staff operated, nearly everyone was a stranger to this shy president except the members of his innermost circle."

—"Would apologize for asking a basic — sometimes ever a startling basic — question about an arcane subject."

—Has a good working command of economics. "His grasp of basic economic theory as it had been taught in his time (Eureka College, class of '32) was excellent and he had kept abreast of later theory," Regan wrote. "He had no trouble understanding the leading ideas of the day, or in making reasonable judgments about the effects produced by policies based on Keynesian theory, of which he was deeply suspicious."

—"Is a formidable reader and a talented conversationalist with a gift for listening," and a man who, at heart, "is an old-fashioned, small-town American who believes what he reads in the papers."

—Gets in trouble because of his capacity to remember — and believe — everything that is told to him. "If someone told him (to use a wholly fictitious example) that there had been 35,987 hairs in Stalin's mustache, this fact would go into the presidential memory bank, possibly to emerge weeks or months later in the middle of a press conference," Regan wrote. "It never seemed to occur to him that anyone would give him incorrect information. His mind was a trove of facts and anecdotes, something like the morgue of one of his favorite magazines, Reader's Digest, and it was impossible to guess when or why he might access any one of these millions of bytes of data."

—Loves the routine of his job. Wrote Regan: "He regarded his daily schedule as being something like a shooting script in which characters came and went, scenes were rehearsed and acted out, and the plot was advanced one day at a time. ... If he was scheduled to receive a visitor at 10 o'clock, he would finish whatever else he was doing at 9:58, clear off his desk, clear his mind of whatever had gone before and prepare himself for the next scene."

—Perks up when women are present. Regan said everyone who travels with the president has come to believe that Pan American World Airways assigns its prettiest stewardesses to the plane carrying the White House press corps. "This happy circumstance did not escape the president's notice," he wrote. "When Air Force One landed, the president always looked for the Pan Am stewardesses from the press plane and gave them a fatherly wave. They waved back enthusiastically, pretty young women in their uniforms smiling at the most famous man in the world. It was a moment everyone looked forward to on presidential journeys."

—Displays no enthusiasm for an annual tradition: accepting the national Thanksgiving turkey. "The president always groaned when he saw this on his schedule and more than once suggested that the vice president stand in for him," Regan wrote. "'Oh, no you don't!' I would reply. 'You've got to have your picture taken with the turkey, Mr. President — it's tradition."

Reagan Virtually Rules Out Pardon For North

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, in his most definitive public statement on the subject to date, indicated Monday that he would not pardon former White House aide Oliver L. North and three other accused co-conspirators in the Iran-Contra scandal.

Reagan told syndicated columnist Carl Rowan that he does not believe in granting pardons until someone has been convicted because such a step would leave unanswered the question of whether the defendant was guilty.

Apparently believing that the case involving the Iran-Contra figures will not be resolved before he leaves office in a little more than eight months, Reagan said: "I won't have to face that issue."

The president's comments from the interview at the White House Monday were relayed by Rowan in an interview broadcast by WUSA-TV, the local CBS television affiliate in Washington.

In the past, Reagan has been particularly reluctant to discuss the politically sensitive issue of pardons for North, John M. Poindexter, Richard V. Secord and Albert A. Hakim, and White House officials have said they have no idea whether the president would indeed pardon any of the defendants.

But, according to Rowan, Reagan said Monday that "he does not believe in giving pardons before people are convicted because it leaves a cloud of guilt down through the years."

Poindexter, a retired Navy rear admiral, was Reagan's assistant for national security affairs, and North, who has retired from the Marine Corps as a lieutenant colonel, was an aide to Poindexter. Both men played central roles in the sale of arms to Iran — part of an effort to win the freedom of Americans held hostage by pro-Iranian factions in Lebanon — and the subsequent diversion of funds to the Contra rebels fighting the Nicaragua government.

Hakim and Secord, a retired Air Force major general, were key middlemen in the operation.

The four were indicted March 16 by a federal grand jury and have pleaded not guilty. Each was charged with conspiracy to defraud the United States. North and Poindexter were accused of theft of government property, wire fraud, obstruction of Congress and false statements.

In addition, Robert C. McFarlane, Poindexter's predecessor as national security adviser, has pleaded guilty to four misdemeanor counts of withholding information from Congress in the scandal.

Poindexter resigned his senior White House post in November 1986, and North was forced out under pressure at the same time, when the diversion of funds to the Contras was disclosed.

The earliest suggested date for a trial has been July, but defense lawyers have indicated that they will need several months beyond that to prepare their cases.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell has said that if he cannot start the trial by midsummer it will have to be postponed until after the November election to avoid any testimony during the campaign that traditionally starts on Labor Day. Thus, the trial and possible appeals would probably extend beyond the end of the President's term next Jan. 20.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said later that Rowan's report was "an accurate reflection" of Reagan's remarks. But, he added, "I don't think it represents a definitive word on pardons. It wasn't elaborated on in the discussion."

He said he had not checked with Reagan to determine what he meant and that he interpreted the President's comments as "a way of dismissing the issue at this point."

"I don't think it represents a decision on what he's going to do about pardons," Fitzwater said. "It's his observation on the process."

Reagan has come under considerable pressure from conservative allies to pardon North and Poindexter.

Jackson Insists It's Not Too Late For His Campaign To Find Strength

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

Democrats Jesse Jackson and Michael Dukakis squared off today in the West Virginia and Nebraska primaries as an impassioned Jackson insisted it's not too late for a comeback. Dukakis, meanwhile, called on Republican rival George Bush to detail his knowledge of drug allegations against Panamanian strongman Manuel Antonio Noriega.

Dukakis' comments came as aides to Bush fielded mounting questions about when the vice president first became aware of the allegations against the Panamanian strongman, who was indicted on federal drug charges in February. Bush did not campaign Monday and had no campaign appearances scheduled today.

Jackson staged a primary-eve scramble for votes in Nebraska and West Virginia, while Dukakis, who has taken the last few days off from campaigning, spent the day at the Statehouse in Boston.

"This is a live race. ... Every voter counts," Jackson declared Monday as he campaigned in Omaha, Neb. In Martinsburg, W.Va., he told supporters: "I'm coming to the last lap. I'm running longer and running stronger because my mind is made up. ... Press on! Press on!"

Dukakis campaigned in the two states last week.

Today's contests do not offer an especially large share of Democratic delegates — 37 in West Virginia and 25 in Nebraska. Of the 2,081 delegates needed to nominate, Dukakis has 1,519.7 to Jackson's 933.1 according to the Associated Press' count.

But two more victories would help cement Dukakis' grip on the nomination, which aides have been saying he could clinch in the season-closing primaries June 7 in California and New Jersey.

For Jackson — who won last week's District of Columbia primary but notched no primary victories in the six weeks prior to that — a strong showing in either state would be a welcome respite.

Even before today's contests were decided, Jackson was heading for the next battleground: Oregon, which holds its primary a week from today, with 45 Democratic delegates at stake.

Dukakis met Monday with New Jersey Sen. Bill Bradley, and aides said the two talked about U.S.-Soviet relations. Bush has already made Dukakis' lack of foreign policy experience an issue.

Bradley said he did not think Dukakis was vulnerable on the issue. "Experience is no substitute for ability and he's got real ability," Bradley said.

Dukakis, meanwhile, zeroed in on a foreign-policy matter that is becoming a sticky one for Bush: Noriega, and the Reagan administration's dealings with him.

"Who was dealing with him and why?" Dukakis said. "Were we paying him and if so why? I can tell you one thing: If I'm the president we won't be doing business with drug-running Panamanian dictators."

Questions about Bush and Noriega flared up anew when The New York Times, quoting unidentified administration officials, said Sunday that the former U.S. ambassador to Panama, Everett E. Briggs, had told Bush in December 1985 about the allegations. But Briggs, now posted to Honduras, told reporters he had not presented Bush with evidence of a Noriega-drug link.

Bush spokesman Peter Teeley said Monday that Bush was aware of rumors of drug involvement by the Noriega government prior to Noriega's indictment. Teeley said the reports were unsubstantiated, and Panama was one of a number of countries about which there were such reports.

Dukakis' meeting with Bradley was the first in a series of talks the governor has scheduled with Democratic congressional leaders this week. He is scheduled to meet Thursday in Washington with House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas and Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd of West Virginia.

The Massachusetts governor had fund-raisers scheduled tonight in New York and Wednesday night in New Jersey. On Thursday, he heads to Oregon, and follows up with two days in California.

Bush, too, was to resume campaigning on Thursday, with a swing that will take him to New Mexico, California, Oregon and Washington state.

Computer Trading Program Suspended

NEW YORK (AP) — At least three of Wall Street's biggest firms suspended a highly profitable computerized method of trading stocks today because of widespread criticism that it is injecting reckless volatility into the market and destroying investor confidence.

The announcements by Salomon Brothers Inc., Morgan Stanley & Co. and PaineWebber Inc. came amid an uproar about so-called index-arbitrage program trading and a protracted slump in the stock market since the crash nearly seven months ago.

Salomon and Morgan are among the most significant users of program trading, which utilizes high-volume computers to sell stocks in New York and buy equivalent stock-index futures in Chicago, or vice versa, to profit from fleeting price disparities.

PaineWebber is considered a smaller user of program trading.

All three firms said they were suspending the technique for their own accounts although they would continue to do it for customers if requested. Nevertheless, their action was considered significant.

"I think it's certainly a move in the right direction," said Jack Barbanel, head of commodities and financial futures at the New York brokerage Gruntal & Co. "It's meaningul because at least there's beginning to be an acknowledgment to the public perception that program trading causes turbulence."

The firms' actions came a week after the New York Stock Exchange intensified post-crash limits on program trading, blamed for causing enormous swings in stock prices for reasons unrelated to underlying values.

Large numbers of investors have complained to the NYSE and their brokers that program trading has compelled them to get out of stocks because they believe it has made the market more like a gambling casino.

Moreover, there is a belief in the securities industry that lawmakers will take severe legislative action aimed at restoring investor confidence unless brokerage firms can find ways to reform themselves.

Potential Waste Fights Want

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I agree that the waste of good food in the school lunchroom is appalling. Your suggestion that the matter be taken up by the PTA is a good one. There is one more thing that can be done, however.

There is a non-governmental, non-profit agency in St. Paul called Twelve Baskets (named after the baskets of food scraps collected after one of the miracles of the loaves and fishes). About three years ago, the founders approached the St. Paul Health Department with a plan to redistribute unwanted salvageable food. With the guidance and blessing of the health department, the program was begun. It was one of the first of its kind in the country.

Twelve Baskets picks up surplus and distressed food and delivers it directly to on-site eating programs, where it is immediately prepared in approved kitchens and served. The food comes from food plants, bakeries, dairies, restaurants, grocery stores and other facilities where such food may be available.

Unfortunately, schools are not allowed to participate in this program because federal law prohibits redistribution of federal commodities that schools receive. Until the U.S. Congress passes a bill that allows for such redistribution, salvageable, wholesome food will continue to be wasted daily. Minnesota Senators Boschwitz and Durenberger are aware of the problem, and would introduce a bill to correct it, but they don't feel there is adequate support for it in Congress.

There is an increasing need for redistribution of this type of food, and schools are a valuable untapped resource. When there are needy people who can benefit from the work of organizations such as Twelve Baskets, but the law prevents that help, then it's time to change the law.

This is an election year. Please tell your readers to write to their senators and representatives and ask them to support a repeal of the anti-redistribution law, which is a part of the commodities program. Sending this column along with the letter might help.

For information on how to set up a food reclamation and redistribution program, send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Dick Goebel, Twelve Baskets, P.O. Box 7217, St. Paul, Minn. 55107. The program is funded through private contributions, foundation grants and the United Way.

By the way, I am in no way associated with Twelve Baskets. — BILL JASPERS (FORMER ST. PAUL INSPECTOR)

DEAR BILL: Neither am I, but it's a crime to throw out edible food when so many people are hungry and homeless. It's a great idea. Rudy and Dave, the ball is in your court!

DEAR ABBY: I am writing this for friends of mine as well as for myself. We would like to know how to say, "I love you. Will you marry me?" in French, German, Danish and Portuguese. We went to the public library, and the librarian gave us some books, but they were of little use.

We would greatly appreciate it, Abby, if you could help us. — DICK LARRIVEY, BOONVILLE, N.Y.

DEAR DICK: Courtesy of Claudia Fayad of the Berlitz School in Beverly Hills, Calif.:

I love you. Will you marry me?

FRENCH: Je vous aime. Je voudrais vous epouser?

GERMAN: Ich liebedich. Ich mochte dich heiraten.

DANISH: Jeg elsker dig. Vil du gifte dig medmig?

PORTUGUESE: Eu te amo. Casa comigo?

A word of caution, Dick. Don't say anything you don't mean. And don't make any promises you cannot keep.

County Rejects 'Entitlement' For Schools

through a review of the finance paper, which asks Pitt commissioners for annual budgetary allotments that reflect the same percentage increase for salaries for locally paid personnel as mandated by the General Assembly, revenue increases consistent with ad valorem growth rate, adjustments for non-personnel items consistent with annual cost of living increases and safeguards for the commissioners in case of unforeseen circumstances making long-term commitments incapable of fulfillment.

Jackson then began his presentation, which centered on public education being the responsibility of the state.

Jackson provided background on how the state assumed most of the financial responsibility of public education from the local level in 1933. The County Commissioners are required by statute to finance furniture, garage and maintenance equipment for buses, sites and buildings, insurance, maintenance of plant, a furnished superintendent's office, supplies for school buildings and water and sewerage facilities, he said.

In addition to the mandates, the commissioners support other items that are not required by statues in support for public education in the county, Jackson said.

"You will note that county government has no responsibility for paying teachers, yet Pitt County pays for approximately 100 teachers — no requirements for teachers aides, yet Pitt County pays for 20 aides; no requirements for salary supplements, yet Pitt County pays over $525,000 annually for salary supplements. We have more than 1,100 employees paid a salary supplement. We have over 50 clerical employees paid with county funds," he said.

Also the county is supporting the school system beyond state averages although the county's per capital personal income is about 9 percent below the state average, Jackson said. For example, in 1986, Commissioners appropriated $50.38 per student more than the state average; spent 37.51 percent of its budget on the schools as compared to a state average of 29.83 percent, and spent 2 1/3 times the amount the of state average for capital outlay needs.

However, West said the state-supported system "might sound good, but it really doesn't work like that."

The state mandates programs but does not fully fund them, he said. For example, in 1987-88 the General Assembly mandated a 5 percent salary increase, which cost the county school system about $484,000. The 1987-88 allocation from the county was $119,000, which equated to the ad valorem tax base growth.

The $365,000 deficit meant "somewhere educational programs had to suffer," West said.

Citing the critical need for teachers, school board member Leonard Lilley said, "Pitt County ranks about middle way" statewide in providing supplements for teachers which means "we're getting middle to lower groups of teachers" as more qualified ones will likely follow the higher supplemented positions. "We're extremely forturnate in Pitt County because of East Carolina University, but the supplement is something that needs concern."

"If this plan is not good, is there any way we can mesh our thoughts" for an alternate plan, or could there be limits set for a minimum and a maximum amount of funds the school system could receive, he said.

Jackson said he did not know of an alternate plan but was open for discussion on other ideas. Commissioners have indicated they "will not cut back one penny on what's being done but they resist the entitlement formula," he said.

Commissioner Kenneth Dews said, "Our problem is not that we don't want to give you everything you need but we have the needs of the total community" to consider. "We don't have the tax revenue to support what you want. You'll have to work with what we have," he said.

Board of Education member Frank Grooms said the problem with the discussion was the focus on money. The focus should be, "Do we want to be an average school system," he said.

"There are some expectations from your constituents that the Board of Education is trying to respond to," he said. "We can't compete with a $4,000 supplement."

When looking at the expansion budget proposed by the school system, Grooms asked commissioners to consider the allocation for at-risk students as 41.3 percent of Pitt County students receive free or reduced lunches, and thereby are considered economically deprived. Also, Pitt County recorded 383 teenage pregnancies in 1985. "What kind of future do the children of those teen-age mothers have," he said.

Drug awareness programs also are part of the expansion items, Grooms said. "We have a tremendous (drug) problem in eastern North Carolina and certainly in Pitt County." And while there are applications for teachers on file in the school system's central office, there are not many math, science and foreign language teachers there as required for implementation for BEP programs, he said. "They're simply going somewhere else" because of higher teacher supplements.

Grooms assured commissioners that other financial support is being sought through other means such as the Pitt County Educational Foundation, Project Hire and Partnership for Progress.

The arraignment was originally scheduled for May 2, but Judge George M. Fountain granted a request by defense attorneys to continue the arraignment to provide time to file pretrial motions.

Shoffner and Greenville attorney Howard Cummings, co-counsel for Mobley, asked Phillips Monday to continue the arraignment again because they needed more time to consider filing motions. Phillips denied the motion to continue, but he granted the defense a 20-day extension to file pretrial motions, and he invited the attorneys to ask the court for additional time if it is needed.

Cummings told the court he may need more than 20 days, because he may not be able to make all of his pretrial motions until he knows the results of tests the state performed at the crime scene.

Haigwood said he is aware that the State Bureau of Investigation has completed several tests, but he has not received written copies of the results.

Under rules of "discovery" in criminal cases, defense attorneys are allowed to have access to specific pieces of evidence before a trial, and Phillips asked Haigwood to provide the defense with any test results understood to fall into the discovery category.

If the defense is not satisfied with what Haigwood makes available, Phillips said the issue would be settled at a motion hearing. Because the motion hearing will be needed, Haigwood did not set a trial date for Mrs. White or Mobley.

Mrs. White was arrested March 23 and charged with solicitation to commit murder. Two days later she was charged with conspiracy to commit murder and on March 31 she was charged with first-degree murder.

Mrs. White offered to pay between $30,000 and $35,000 to have her husband killed but no money changed hands, according to State Bureau of Investigation Agent Jim Wilson.

Mobley, of Lot 18, Country Estates, Greenville, was arrested March 24 and charged with conspiracy to commit murder; a week later he was charged with first-degree murder.

A Pitt County Grand Jury indicted Mrs. White and Mobley on all charges April 18.

James Earl Manning, 24, of Route 2, Box 174, Grimesland, was arrested along with Mobley and charged with conspiracy to commit murder. Manning has not been indicted or arraigned, but Haigwood said more charges may be filed against him.

Mrs. White and Mobley are currently being held without bond in the Pitt County Jail, and Manning is being held without bond in a jail outside the county. Sherrif's deputies transferred Manning the day Mrs. White and Mobley were charged with first-degree murder, Haigwood said.

The indictments state that Mrs. White, Mobley and Manning conspired from January through March 19 to murder White, who worked 11 years as a diesel mechanic for the Greenville Department of Public Works.

The plan to kill White had been discussed for months, according to Pitt County investigator Larry Parker, but the actual business transaction took place in January. The motive involved love and greed, he said.

Under North Carolina law, first-degree murder is punishable by death, or life imprisonment; conspiracy to commit murder is a felony punishable by 10 years in prison, a fine, or both.

Concerns Expressed

volume and other parameters should be continuously watched, especially at Texasgulf's major release points, they said.

Several speakers for environmental groups said they have perceived improvement in Texasgulf officials' attitudes toward environmental protection since the permit development process began.

Ernie Larkin, president of the Pamlico-Tar River Foundation, said he wants to see the plans for public review of the details of the engineering study being conducted by the company more clearly defined.

John Blount, a Washington physician, named the types of fish that have been killed near and downstream from Texasgulf. He said that, regardless of the money it's produced in wages in Beaufort County, the company has so far done the area more harm than good.

Fran Critchfield of Bayview, who identified herself as a trained toxicologist, pointed out that the fresh water daily dumped into the river is as much a pollutant to the estuarine fish and shellfish nurseries as are the chemicals. She also attempted to refer to the emissions from the company's stacks, but was told by the hearing chairman, Forrest Westalf, that this hearing was on emissions into the water, not air quality. Nevertheless, she said, acid rain in the area is killing trees and causing ulcers in fish and crabs.

Jerry Shield, executive director of the North Carolina Fisheries Association, called fisherman in the Pamlico River and Sound "an endangered species." He said he had recently read an article about what good pets pigs make and admonished the group to "Love A Pig — Eat A Fish." He said there is no dollars-and-cents reason that Texasgulf or any industry should undertake to protect the environment and he called on the state to see that they clean up after themselves.

Tom Caroon, a fisherman, questioned whether the state was holding the hearing simply to pacify the fishermen in this area. He said he has been to see the governor and now feels that people in the area should call on federal environmental agencies to protect them. He said the state has not been straightforward with the people so far, in some cases failing to disclose findings of its studies of the damage done to life in the river by Texasgulf. He also called on the state to deal with the problem of salination of wells in the area caused by Texasgulf's large consumption of water dropping the water table.

Reggie Caroon, another fisherman, said he believes the permit being drafted should be written so ordinary people can read it. He also questioned whether the dumping of gypsum, which he said smothers the bottom of the river, has been sufficiently studied and prohibited.

He said he believes this permitting process is, in effect, giving Texasgulf "four more years dilly-dally" and he feels that before this time is up, "the Pamlico River and Sound will be as dead as the James River and Love Canal."

He said he believes no one on the state level has the courage to enforce federal standards.

Todd Miller of the North Carolina Coastal Federation pointed out that Texasgulf's permit to discharge into the river expired in June 1984, and said his group has been trying since then to get a public hearing held. Now, four years later, it's being done, he said.

The Socialists control just 211 seats in the 577-member National Assembly, so the new premier will need to form either a firm coalition with centrist forces, or make temporary alliances on particular issues.

Mitterrand also could dissolve the body and call new elections, but he has said he would do so only if his first government loses a vote of confidence.

The center-right Union for French Democracy, which teamed up with Chirac's neo-Gaullist Rally for the Republic in the government for the past two years, said in a statement that it would not automatically vote to censure the new government. It said it would judge the new premier's proposals on their individual merits.

The extreme-right National Front said its leader, Jean-Marie Le Pen, "has become at this hour the de facto leader of the national and popular opposition to organize the France of French people against socialism."

Le Pen drew a surprising 14.4 percent of the vote in the first round of the presidential election on April 24, when Chirac won just 19.9 percent and Mitterrand received 34.1 percent.

Three-Hitter, 16 Strikeouts vs. Kansas City

Clemens Awesome In Win

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Roger Clemens.

"There's not much you can say about this one except two words," Kansas City Manager John Wathan said.

"Roger Clemens."

Clemens, two-time American League Cy Young winner, allowed three hits, struck out 16, and retired 24 in a row from the first to ninth innings Monday night, pitching the Boston Red Sox to a 2-0 victory over the Royals.

The 16 strikeouts were his second-highest major league total, four shy of his record 20 in 1986 against Seattle. Twice, he struck out five in a row.

Elsewhere, Oakland won its 14th straight game, 3-1 over Detroit; Milwaukee won its 10th straight, 9-6 over Minnesota; California beat Cleveland, which has lost nine straight, 2-1, and Chicago blanked Baltimore 3-0.

Clemens allowed one-out singles to Kevin Seitzer and George Brett in the first inning, then was perfect until Willie Wilson beat out a high hopper over the mound with one out in the ninth.

Mark Gubicza allowed only seven hits in 8 1-3 innings for the Royals.

Boston's first run was unearned. Marty Barrett reached on an error by first baseman Steve Balboni, who dropped a throw, and scored on a triple by Mike Greenwell. Gene Garber relieved Gubicza with one out and the bases loaded in the ninth and, one out later, hit Barrett with a pitch to force in another run.

"I usually get stronger once the situation presents itself in the right way for me," Clemens said. "I feel really blessed every time I go out there. God gave me a lot of ability, and I'm taking advantage of it."

By the fifth inning, Clemens had fanned every batter in the Kansas City lineup except Brett, and he fanned Brett in the seventh. He struck out the side in the eighth on 10 pitches.

Athletics 3, Tigers 1

The Athletics stretched their winning streak to the longest in the major leagues since Kansas City won 16 in a row in 1977. Jose Canseco hit his ninth homer, and Bob Welch allowed four hits in eight innings for the A's, now 12-0 against AL East clubs.

Welch struck out five and walked one in beating Jack Morris. Morris had 11 strikeouts and allowed nine hits in going the distance.

Canseco's homer came in the bottom of the third inning after a Carney Lansford single and gave the A's a 2-1 lead. Canseco leads the majors in homers and is tied with Dave Winfield of the New York Yankees with 32 RBI.

Brewers 9, Twins 6

Rob Deer hit a three-run homer to cap Milwaukee's five-run eighth inning as the Brewers rallied over Minnesota. Odell Jones got the win despite allowing Kent Hrbek's two-run homer in the seventh that gave Minnesota a 6-4 lead.

Paul Molitor walked and Robin Yount singled to chase Juan Berenguer as the Brewers got their big eighth inning going. Jeff Reardon, who has failed in his last two save opportunities, came on, and B.J. Surhoff bunted for a single, loading the bases.

Greg Brock hit a two-run single to tie the score 6-6, and Deer followed with his sixth homer.

Angels 2, Indians 1

Dan Petry pitched seven scoreless innings and helped the Angels extend Cleveland's losing streak. Petry allowed eight hits in 7 2-3 innings, walking two and benefitting from three double plays.

Petry lost his shutout when Ron Kittle hit a pinch homer, and Bryan Harvey got the final four outs for his first major league save.

The Indians won 16 of their first 20 games and now have now lost nine of 10.

White Sox 3, Orioles 0

Jerry Reuss worked 7 1-3 innings for his 200th major league victory, becoming only the second major league pitcher to reach that plateau without ever winning 20 games in a season. The other was Milt Pappas, who ended his 17-year major league career with 209 victories.

Dan Pasqua drove in three runs with a sacrifice fly and a home run for Chicago as the 38-year-old Reuss became the 86th pitcher to reach the 200-victory plateau.

Reuss gave up just four hits, and Bobby Thigpen pitched 1 2-3 innings of scoreless relief.

Jackson Two-Hits Phillies

By The Associated Press

As far as the Philadelphia Phillies are concerned, Danny Jackson is a two-timer.

The Phillies have faced Jackson twice in the last week and he has beaten them twice with two-hitters each time.

Jackson did it to the Phillies again Monday night in Cincinnati's 2-0 victory at Veterans Stadium.

In his last four starts, Jackson has allowed two earned runs and his ERA is 2.04. He beat the Phillies 3-1 on a two-hitter at Cincinnati on May 4. Philadelphia batters are now 4-for-54 against him, an .073 average.

"I didn't have a real good slider and I didn't throw many changeups," Jackson said. "I was using mostly fastballs inside. If you throw outside, you're messing with the meat part of the bat."

The only hits off Jackson were Chris James' single leading off the third inning and Mike Young's pinch double starting the ninth. Jackson, 5-1, struck out five and walked three.

"He could have the same stuff the next time we face him and we could hit him," Philadelphia third baseman Mike Schmidt had said. "It's good stuff, but it's all hitable."

It was Jackson's second shutout of the season and the eighth of his career.

"I didn't feel as good tonight as I did in Cincinnati," Jackson said.

Jackson was acquired from Kansas City last November with infielder Angel Salazar for pitcher Ted Power and shortstop Kurt Stillwell.

Elsewhere in the National League it was Atlanta 9, Montreal 8; Houston 6, New York 2; St. Louis 7, San Diego 1; and San Francisco 8, Pittsburgh 6. Los Angeles at Chicago was postponed by rain.

Philadelphia starter David Palmer, 0-2, allowed eight hits and struck out nine in eight-plus innings.

Barry Larkin opened the Cincinnati sixth with a walk and advanced to third on a single by Chris Sabo. Kal Daniels then singled to right to score Larkin.

With one out in the eighth, Sabo singled and one out later, Eric Davis hit an infield single. Paul O'Neill then scored Sabo from second base with a single.

Braves 9, Expos 8

Gerald Perry and Ron Gant had two-run doubles in a six-run third inning and Atlanta held on to beat visiting Montreal.

Ken Griffey gave the Braves the lead in the second inning when he hit his first homer off starter Dennis Martinez.

Rick Mahler, 1-4, ended a four-game losing streak and got his first victory since beating the Expos 7-4 last Sept. 4.

The Expos scored four runs each in the fifth and eighth innings, but Bruce Sutter came on to get his second save.

Astros 6, Mets 2

Danny Darwin atoned for his poor outing at New York last week by pitching a seven-hitter as Houston beat the Mets at the Astrodome.

Darwin, 2-2, struck out seven en route to his first complete game, retiring 14 of the last 15 batters. Darwin lost to the Mets 8-0 on May 4.

The Astros took a 3-2 lead in the fourth when Glenn Davis reached on an error by shortstop Kevin Elster, moved to second on Kevin Bass' single, and scored on a single by Rafael Ramirez.

Houston made it 5-2 in the fifth on RBI singles by Bill Doran and Bass.

Cardinals 7, Padres 1

Rookie Luis Alicea hit a two-run single to cap a six-run third inning as St. Louis beat visiting San Diego.

Left-hander Larry McWilliams allowed six hits in 6 2-3 innings and improved to 2-0.

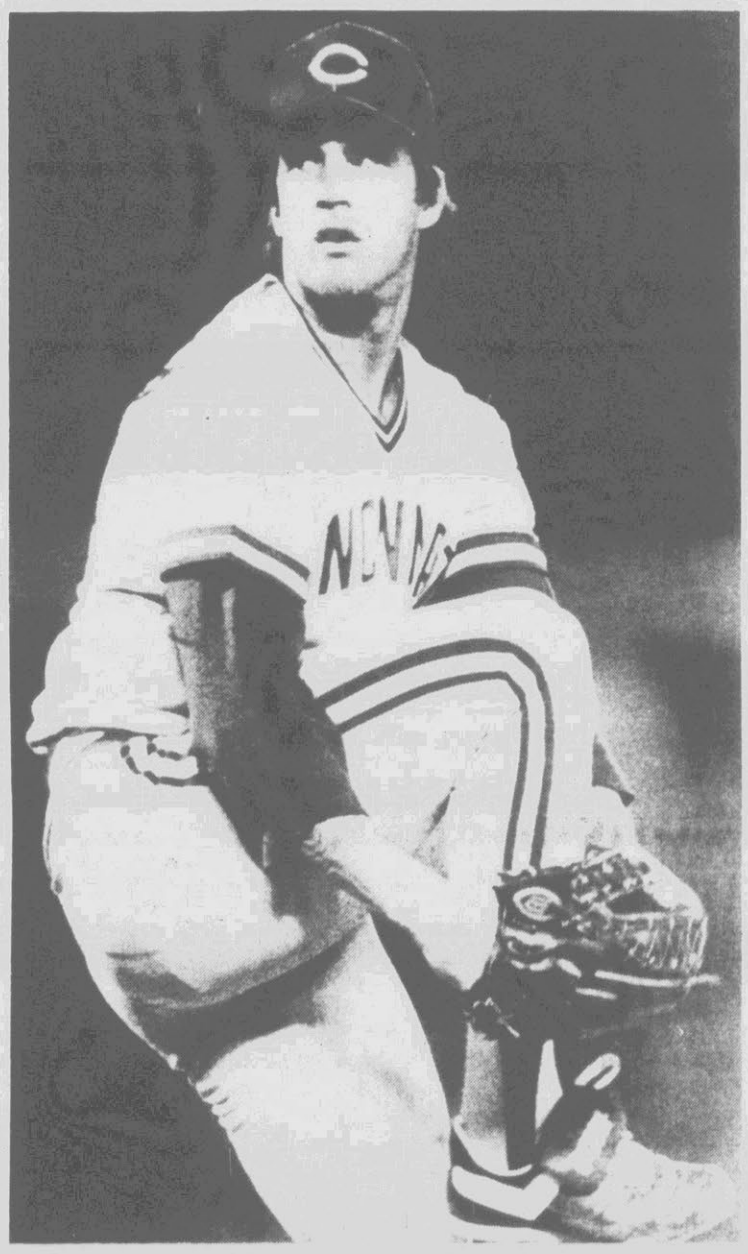
McWilliams doubled off starter Ed Whitson, 2-2, to spark an inning that matched St. Louis' biggest of the season. Vince Coleman doubled McWilliams home, took third on Ozzie Smith's infield hit, and Tom Brunansky's one-out double made it 2-0. The Cards added two more runs on Bob Horner's run-scoring grounder and Terry Pendleton's RBI double. Alicea made it 6-0 with his two-run single.

Giants 8, Pirates 6

Will Clark's second double of the game drove in Robby Thompson with the tie-breaking run and Jeffrey Leonard followed with a two-run homer in a four-run eighth inning as San Francisco beat Pittsburgh at Three Rivers Stadium.

Kevin Mitchell went 4-for-5 with a homer, two doubles and three RBI as the Giants blew a 4-1 lead, then rallied to win against former Giant reliever Jeff Robinson, 2-1.

The Pirates, who made six errors, took a 5-4 lead in the seventh on Bobby Bonilla's two-run homer off former Pirate Don Robinson.



Two-Hit Shutout

Patriots Waive Tony Collins

BOSTON (AP) — Former East Carolina running back Tony Collins, who reportedly was in a drug rehabilitation clinic in March after having resumed drug use, was waived Monday by the New England Patriots.

In a written statement, Coach Raymond Berry praised Collins' play in his seven seasons with the NFL team. No official reason was given for the release of Collins, still the Patriots' best all-around running back.

Berry and Patriots' general manager Pat Sullivan would not comment beyond the statement, New England publicity director Jim Greenidge said. He added that the club would not say why Collins would not be offered another contract.

"Tony was told this morning" during a meeting with Berry at Sullivan Stadium, Greenidge said.

Collins, 28, became a free agent when his contract expired after last season. He is free to negotiate with any team, the Patriots said.

"We're going to treat him like any other free agent we represent," Alan Nero, Collins' agent based in the Chicago area, said in a telephone interview. "He's clearly been an outstanding member of that team. He has great talent, so we're hoping that someone else will reognize that.

"I'd be surprised if there's no interest, but we'll see. Time will tell."

He said he wasn't surprised when Sullivan notified him Monday of the decision to release Collins. Asked if he felt drug use contributed to that decision, Nero said, "We don't discuss our clients' personal lives with anyone."

Collins is the third-leading rusher in team history with 4,647 yards. Last season, he was the first Patriot regular to report to work during the NFL players' strike and led the team with 474 rushing yards and 44 receptions. In 1986, he was eighth in the NFL with 77 receptions.

Berry praised Collins' football accomplishments.

"Tony has been one of the most valuable players the Patriots have had these past few years," Berry said. "He has contributed greatly to the team's success in many ways. His unselfish attitude, team spirit, sense of humor and engaging personality have made him one of our most popular players."

Berry has said a player found to be using drugs three times would not be permitted on the team.

After New England lost the 1986 Super Bowl, Collins was identified in a Boston Globe report as one of six Patriots who had been involved with drugs.

Collins also was a patient in a drug rehabilitation clinic last year and reportedly was in one last month, the Globe reported.

Northeastern University Public Safety Officer Jim Ferrier told the newspaper that an incoherent Collins was taken by campus police to Boston City Hospital March 1.

A blood test at the hospital reportedly showed alcohol and co-

Smith Says U.S. Has Right Coach

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — If the U.S. Olympic basketball teams needs motivation to prevent a repeat of last summer's Pan American Games loss to Brazil, they have the right coach in John Thompson, says North Carolina coach Dean Smith.

"John will motivate," Smith said of the Georgetown coach. "He'll put 'em through some tough workouts, to see who really wants it. And our team will play hard and play smart."

Smith, who led the 1976 Olympic team to a gold medal at Montreal, said in an interview with The News and Observer of Raleigh that Americans should not be surprised if the U.S. has trouble in the Summer Games in Seoul. He said overconfidence may reappear as it did in the Pan Am loss.

"It was a shock to everyone," he said. "On the surface, our team looked so powerful, and it was in the way it dominated. And it was as home a crowd as we could get. We dominated so easily, it could be that we didn't take Brazil seriously enough."

Smith rates the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, Italy and Spain among the prime candidates for gold, as well as Brazil, but he noted that one of those teams may not make the Olympics after the qualifying tournament in Holland in late June.

Smith said the United States could field 10 teams capable of winning the gold medal. And he resisted allowing NBA players to participate in future Summer Games.

"Some of the pros would be 'slumming' and think, 'We're too good for this,'" he said. "A Larry Bird or Michael Jordan would be thrilled and work hard, but for the most part if could be 'We've got this won.' There's something to be said for youthful enthusiasm."

Some of that enthusiasm has been on the wane recently because of injuries. Smith's own point guard, Jeff Lebo, hasn't fully recovered from a stress fracture and has pulled out of the tryouts. Louisville center Pervis Ellison also faces knee surgery. And Michigan's Gary Grant bowed out after his agent reportedly advised him not to go to camp.

Still, there are Danny Manning of Kansas and David Robinson, the No. 1 pick in the 1987 NBA draft and more than 80 others who are looking to represent the country in September.

With all that talent, Thompson would likely face heavy criticism if he doesn't bring home the gold, Smith said.

"I'm sure Denny (Pan Am and Louisville coach Crum) got some (second guessing) after the Pan Ams," Smith said. "We were lucky in '76. Red Auerbach said there was no way we could win at Montreal, that we didn't have a big man except Mitch (Kupchak, one of four Tar Heels on the team). Every writer and every coach was putting us down, and that really helped us.

"Maybe Brazil and the Pan Ams will help us this year."

Robinson Readying For Olympic Trials

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — David Robinson, the first player chosen in the 1987 NBA collegiate draft, is nearly ready to resume his basketball career after a year of inactivity.

The 7-foot-1 Robinson has been working out the past three weeks at the U.S. Naval Academy, lifting weights, running sprints, and playing basketball, with one thing in mind — the 1988 Summer Olympics.

"I feel I'm where I want to be," the former Navy star said during a news conference Monday at Halsey Field House at the Naval Academy. "I've still got a good, intense week ahead of me."

Robinson is one of 93 players selected to compete in a week-long tryout camp for the U.S. Olympic basketball team, to be held at Colorado Springs, Colo., beginning May 18.

"I'm not going there just to make the team. I want to be one of the best players there, to stand out," Robinson said. "I think making the team will be in there somewhere. Besides, I don't think (Olympic Coach) John Thompson would be happy if I came out with the attitude of being happy just making the team. ... I expect at least that much from myself."

After meeting with Thompson about two weeks ago, Robinson has been working out up to five hours a day on his conditioning in addition to playing in some pickup games.

Robinson was selected college player of the year after averaging 28.2 points per game and leading the nation with 4.5 blocked shots per game in 1987. Although he faced two years of military duty, the San Antonio Spurs made him the first selection of the college draft and signed him to an eight-year, $28 million contract.

Shack Reportedly Heading To The NBA

RALEIGH (AP) — N.C. State's Charles Shackleford has decided to forgo his last year of college eligibility and enter the NBA draft this year, the News and Observer of Raleigh said today.

The newspaper quoted sources in the NCSU athletic department as saying Shackleford, a 6-foot-10, 225-pound center, reached his decision to enter the hardship pool last weekend.

Underclassmen must declare their intent to be drafted, in writing, to NBA headquarters by midnight May 14 to be eligible for the June 28 draft. Hardship players may withdraw from the draft 48 hours before the deadline, but the sources told the newspaper that it was unlikely that Shackleford would withdraw his name.

Shackleford has said twice in the past month that he planned to return to school next year. But Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano said as recently as two weeks ago that Shackleford's final decision had not been made.

Shackleford was named first-team All-Atlantic Coast Conference as a junior last season. His 16.5 points and conference-leading 9.7 rebounds a game helped lead the Wolfpack to a 24-9 record last year.

Neither Shackleford nor Valvano could be reached for comment early today.

Ford To Do Color Commentary For Hornets

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Former North Carolina All-American Phil Ford has signed a one-year agreement with WBT-AM in Charlotte to be the color commentator for Charlotte Hornets broadcasts, the station has announced.

Ford will join Steve Martin, who will do the play-by-play. They will make their debut on Oct. 14, when the Hornets play in an exhibition game against the New York Knicks.

"Being a color commentator wasn't a longtime goal of mine," Ford told The Charlotte Observer Monday. "But when the opportunity arose, I went after it. I don't play much basketball anymore, but I'm still a big fan. I love watching the games. This is one way to see a lot of NBA games."

The Rocky Mount, N.C., native was a member of the 1976 U.S. Olympic gold medal basketball team coached by Dean Smith. He was the first-round draft pick of the NBA Kansas City Kings in 1978 and was the league's rookie of the year. He later played for the New Jersey Nets, the Milwaukee Bucks and the Houston Rockets until 1984, when he was waived by the Rockets.

Smith's Solos Key Rose

STANTONSBURG — Axel Smith hit two solo home runs to lead Rose High School to an 8-2 baseball victory over Wilson Beddingfield Monday afternoon.

The victory kept the Rampants unbeaten in 18 games so far this year. They are now 10-0 in the Big East, with only four games to play.

Jamie Brewington got the win, going the first four innings, while Tom Moye came in after that to sew it up. Brewington gave up both of the runs, allowing only three hits. He walked one and struck out five. Moye, in his three innings, had only one baserunner, he on a walk, while striking out three.

Rose jumped into the lead in the first inning getting a single run. That could have been two, but Chris Christopher, after getting a base hit, was thrown out trying to steal. Just after that, Smith connected for his first homer to center field, giving the Rampants a 1-0 lead.

Smith came back up again to lead off the fourth inning and promptly hit a pitch over the fence in left center for another homer, giving the Rampants a 2-0 edge.

Beddingfield rallied in the bottom of the inning to tie it up, however. Scott Braswell led off with a single to left and with one away, William Barnes doubled to right center. Kevin Brown grounded out, scoring Braswell, and Eddie Adams reached on an error which allowed Barnes to score the tying run.

Rose then pushed back out with two runs in the top of the fifth. Brewington led off and moved up on a passed ball, but was then picked off second. Dallas McPherson followed with a walk and moved up when a pickoff play went awry. Heath Clark reached on an error, scoring McPherson. Christopher also reached on a Bruin misplay, allowing Clark to come around for a 4-2 lead.

Rose picked up three more in the sixth. With two away, John Bolen walked and moved up on another misplayed pickoff attempt. Clark singled him in. Tim Moore followed with a single and Christopher singled in Clark. An error on the relay allowed Moore to score.

The final Rampant run scored in the top of the seventh. David Daniels doubled and scored on a hit by Moye.

Christopher, Smith, Daniels and Clark each had two hits to lead the Rampant attack. No one had more than one for the Bruins.

Rose returns to action today at Kinston.

caine in Collins' system, the Globe reported.

Northeastern's Center for the Study of Sports in Society has sponsored Collins' speaking engagements on drug abuse during the past year.

Keith Lee, the center's associate director and a former defensive back with the Patriots, said Collins contacted him about giving the talks as part of aftercare following drug treatment last year.

"Many players find new environments to be positive. I can't interpret whether this will happen with Tony," Nero said. "You can't play for someone for six or seven years without feeling strongly about that identity. We're all a little disappointed, but I can't say there's remorse. We just go from here."

Collins was a second-round draft choice by the Patriots out of East Carolina in 1981. In his first three pro seasons, he led the team in rushing. In 1983, he rushed 219 times for 1,049 yards and 10 touchdowns.

In 1985, he developed a reputation as an outstanding blocker and his 657 rushing yards and 52 catches contributed to New England's trip to the Super Bowl, won by the Chicago Bears 46-10.

Even Layden Doubts Chances

By The Associated Press

Frank Layden either believes in reverse psychology or he believes in the Los Angeles Lakers more than he does his own team, the Utah Jazz.

The Lakers and Jazz play the second game of their Western Conference playoff series tonight at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif. That's where the defending NBA champions routed Utah 110-91 on Sunday, holding the Jazz to an embarrassing eight points in the first quarter.

"I think they're a far superior team to us," Layden said. "I don't think we've played a team all year that appeared to be so defensively attentive or coordinated.

"I don't think we can beat the Lakers. If we could do that, I think I'm wasting my time. I should really be beatified and take over the world. ... Sure I could say we have a realistic chance (of winning the series), but would I bet on it?"

It's not likely many people would bet against the Lakers these days. They had the league's best record this season and, when healthy, rarely had trouble with anyone.

But the Lakers might be without Michael Cooper, who bumped into a courtside table after colliding with Utah's Karl Malone and reinjured the ankle that kept him out of 20 regular-season games. X-rays showed there was no fracture.

That could even matters a bit. So might the Jazz having more time to prepare for Los Angeles — Game 1 was played less than two days after Utah eliminated Portland.

"It will be more equal in terms of rest and preparation," Lakers coach Pat Riley said Sunday. "Today we had an edge and we had to take advantage of it."

They did by completely shutting down Utah's attack. The Jazz's first period futility set an NBA playoff record. Seven other teams had been held to 12 in the opening 12 minutes, and the Jazz came close to the six point all-time low for one period set by Atlanta against Boston in 1986.

The Hawks and Celtics will begin their Eastern Conference series Wednesday night. Tonight, Chicago is at Detroit and Dallas at Denver in the openers of their second-round series.

Jazz-Lakers

As usual, Layden treated his team's situation with humor. The coach was asked what he was thinking about during the disastrous first period, and replied:

"After I slit my wrists? My greatest fear ... sometimes I wake up in the middle of the night shaking because we can't score at all."

When the Jazz finally woke up, they got 29 points from Malone and 23 from Thurl Bailey. The absence of Cooper, who shared defensive duties on Malone with Kurt Rambis, could be significant tonight.

Hawks-Celtics

Atlanta was pushed to five games by Milwaukee, winning all three at home, while Boston eliminated New York in four games.

The Hawks look to snap a 12-game losing streak at Boston Garden. They'll need more than just the usual big night from Dominique Wilkins.

Both teams like to run, although Boston is more efficient in a half-court game. The Celtics won four of six meetings this season.

"We have to stop their fast break," Boston's Danny Ainge said. "If we can keep them in a half-court offense, we can do a pretty good job. We also have to stop their second shots."

Bulls-Pistons

After disposing of the Bullets in another series with only home-court victories, the Pistons get Michael Jordan and the Bulls, who finished second to them, four games behind in the Central Division. Jordan set a playoff record by scoring 226 points in Chicago's five-game series against Cleveland, with home teams superior throughout that series, too.

"If Jordan hits all his shots down the stretch, we'll be in trouble," Pistons center Bill Laimbeer said. "It's going to be a knock-down, drag-out series."

Detroit, 4-2 against the Bulls, also could be in trouble if Jordan gets the kind of support he received Sunday.

Mavericks-Nuggets

Just one game separated first-place Denver and Dallas in the Midwest Division and they split six regular-season meetings. The Nuggets beat Seattle in a fifth game on Saturday, while Dallas eliminated Houston in four games last Thursday.

Jarrett Has Seen Changes

MORGANTON, N.C. (AP) — Ned Jarrett, who has seen the NASCAR circuit grow in competitiveness and pit-crew specialization since he started driving 36 years ago, says even bigger changes may lie ahead for racing.

"I think the sport is going to continue to grow," he said. "You'll see tracks like Charlotte place grandstands completely around the track, making it bowl-shaped and having 250,000 to 300,000 people attending."

Jarrett said he approves of recent design changes on the carburetors that curb the speeds on the so-called super-speedways like Daytona, Fla., and Talledega, Ala. And he predicted more efforts to protect drivers and spectators.

"I agree they needed to slow the cars down," Jarrett said. "Bobby Allison's wreck at Talladega (in 1987) where he got airborne and almost went into the grandstand was the turning point.

"I was happy to see NASCAR rectify the problem quickly. There are certain drivers who don't like it and are vocal about it, but I think it's good for racing," Jarrett said. "It has brought the cars closer together and has brought drafting back into play."

Jarrett said stock car racing would eventually go to a 6-cylinder engine as an additional answer to the problem.

"You'll see it probably by the 1990 season," he said.

Jarrett told the Morganton News-Herald that when he was driving from 1952 to 1966, there were only 20 or 25 factory-sponsored cars with maybe five that had a chance to win.

"Today there are 18 to 25 potential winners in every field," he said, noting that there were 15 cars on the lead lap at the end of the Winston 500.

Another change has been in the pits, Jarrett said.

"There's more teamwork involved now," he said. "It's become a specialized business. When I was driving, we had two mechanics to work on the car," he said. "Now, there's a specialist for every area. There's someone to work on the valve train, someone to work on the engine block and the crankshaft, and a chassis specialist.

"There's even someone whose primary job is to work with the tires and how to stagger them. We didn't even know what 'stagger' was when I started."

Jarrett said he hopes illegal drug use doesn't plague NASCAR in the future.

"That's something the sport doesn't need. The sport has been fortunate in the past not to have as much of a problem as other sports."

Jarrett also said the recent run-in between NASCAR and Tim Richmond may hurt the driver.

"It's my opinion that Tim Richmond won't race in NASCAR again," he said. "I don't know if he has a drug problem ... If he does, he needs to admit there's a problem and go somewhere and clean himself out. Then he can come back and race and be popular."

Richmond filed a $20 million lawsuit against NASCAR, claiming his suspension following a drug test in which Richmond tested positive has hampered his ability to join a team and get back into the sport.

Loretta Swit Will Host TV Look-Back At Korean War

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Loretta Swit, who spent 11 years playing a nurse in a Korean War field hospital on "M-A-S-H," finally got to Korea for a new documentary that explores America's forgotten war.

She is the host of "Korean War — The Untold Story," a one-hour documentary put together by Oscar winner Arnold Shapiro and Emmy winner Carol L. Fleisher.

The war, which claimed 54,000 lives in three years, is a neglected chapter in U.S. history. It was the first war involving jet fighters, the first in which American troops fought Communist troops and the first in which the enemy attempted to "brainwash" American prisoners of war.

The one-hour documentary combines historic film with new interviews with people who participated in the United Nations "police action." The nationally syndicated special will be televised around the country from May 11 to May 31. So far, 118 stations have signed up to air the show.

The United States keeps 40,000 troops in Korea to enforce a cease-fire that is now 35 years old. The show notes the truce anniversary and the Summer Olympic Games in Seoul this September.

"After all those years of pretending, they took me in hand and said it's time to go," said Swit, who was Nurse Margaret Houlihan in the comedy series. "I'd never been to Korea before. We went up to the DMZ. I was standing just a few feet away from a concrete line that divides the country."

"We were all astonished at the border," said producer Fleisher. "You don't realize we're technically still at war. It's the longest cease-fire in history. The tension is there at all times."

Swit said North Korean loudspeakers bombard the border with propaganda urging the South Korean soldiers to defect. Not far away is "Propaganda Village," a facade to try to lure South Koreans across the line.

"The flag flying over the village weighs 600 pounds, and the day we were there it stood straight out from the flag pole," said Swit. "That's how strong the wind was. It was 20 degrees below zero. My fingernails froze. My nose turned blue. I had to do some narration there and I could hardly talk."

Swit went to the Inchon site where Gen. Douglas MacArthur's forces landed in 1950 and turned the tide in favor of the United Nations, until the Chinese intervened a few months later. She also visited the new Olympic stadium in Seoul in her week-long stay in Korea.

Shapiro, who won an Academy Award in 1979 for "Scared Straight," was the executive producer, and Fleisher, who won an Emmy for co-writing "The Singing Cowboys Ride Again," was the producer, writer and director.

"We talked to veterans who had lost arms and legs and they said they would do it again," said Fleisher. "They felt the war was worth it."

"It was an illuminating experience for me," said Swit. "I thought I knew the subject, having served my time on 'M-A-S-H.' I found out how little I really knew."

Asked about "China Beach," the new ABC series about women in Vietnam, Swit said, "I'm so glad people will know that women were in Vietnam. I'm involved in trying to get a memorial for women near the wall in Washington."

Swit also works with the Audubon Society, which she calls "my other occupation," to support animal rights. She has worked with the society on documentaries and recently teamed with Robert Redford as hosts of a PBS series on species threatened with extinction.

She returns to comedy in a movie made in England with Peter Cook, called "Whoops! Apocalypse."

"I play the president of the United States," she said. "I took a lot of kidding from people who said I had peaked as a major in 'M-A-S-H.'"

Selleck Resting

HONOLULU (AP) — Actor Tom Selleck plans to take it easy until he starts work on a new movie in July, but says he's ecstatic that his "Magnum, P.I." CBS-TV series finale topped the ratings.

"I'm delighted the show went out such a winner," Selleck said. "To go out absolutely on top is about as nice as anything that could happen to the show."

Selleck says he's looking forward to some time off. "I'm going to disappear," he said. "I am officially unemployed."

The last time he was out of work was in 1980, when he arrived in Honolulu to begin filming "Magnum," but the Screen Actors Guild went on strike, and he had no paycheck.

"I went to work for $7 an hour for my landlady as a handyman to help pay the rent," he said.

Tony Nominations Focus On 3 Shows

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The 1988 Tony nominations reflected Broadway's best season in years with more than enough nominees to fill most of the categories and even to allow for some unexpected omissions.

As usual, musicals, particularly, Andrew Lloyd Webber's lavish "Phantom of the Opera," Stephen Sondheim's fairy tale "Into the Woods" and a revival of Cole Porter's "Anything Goes" dominated the nominations announced Monday.

Each of the three shows received 10 nominations, with "Phantom" and "Into the Woods" going against "Romance Romance," two small one-act musicals, and the South African musical "Sarafina!" for best musical of the 1987-88 season. Left out of the nominations was "Chess," the big British musical by Tim Rice and members of the pop group ABBA. It received only two acting nominations.

Nominated for best play were "Speed-the-Plow," David Mamet's savage look at two would-be Hollywood moguls; "Joe Turner's Come and Gone," August Wilson's tale of the children of slaves coming to terms with their past; Lee Blessing's "A Walk in the Woods," a two-character comedy about American and Soviet arms control negotiators, and David Henry Hwang's "M. Butterfly," a love story that has parallels to the Puccini opera "Madame Butterfly."

Denied a best play nomination were Lanford Wilson's contemporary love story "Burn This" and "Breaking the Code," the tragic story of British mathematical wizard Alan Turing. Also snubbed was John Malkovich, the critically praised star of "Burn This." Nominations for best actor went instead to Derek Jacobi of "Breaking the Code"; Robert Prosky, "A Walk in the Woods"; John Lithgow of "M. Butterfly," and Ron Silver, "Speed-the-Plow."

The competition was less fierce for the best actress prize. Glenda Jackson's portrait of Lady Macbeth in a revival of the Shakespeare tragedy was nominated, along with Joan Allen's tormented dancer in "Burn This"; Blythe Danner's portrayal of Blanche Du Bois in a revival of "A Streetcar Named Desire," and Frances McDormand's Stella Kowalski in the same play.

Best actress in a musical nominations went to Patti LuPone for "Anything Goes"; Joanna Gleason of "Into the Woods"; Judy Kuhn, the love interest in "Chess," and Alison Fraser of "Romance Romance." Left out of the running were Sarah Brightman, the leading lady of "Phantom" and Lloyd Webber's wife.

Her co-star, Michael Crawford, the title character in "The Phantom of the Opera," is the favorite to win the award for best actor in a musical. His competition is Scott Bakula of "Romance Romance"; David Carroll, the Russian grandmaster in "Chess," and Howard McGillin, an ambitious young stockbroker in Cole Porter's "Anything Goes."

Nominated for best revival were "A Streetcar Named Desire," "Dreamgirls," "Cabaret" and "Anything Goes."

Harold Prince, the director of "The Phantom of the Opera," is the top contender for best director of a musical. His competition is Jerry Zaks, "Anything Goes"; James Lapine, "Into the Woods," and Mbongeni Ngema, "Sarafina!"

The battle for best director of a play pits John Dexter, "M. Butterfly"; Gregory Mosher, "Speed-the-Plow"; Lloyd Richards for "Joe Turner's Come and Gone," and Clifford Williams, "Breaking the Code."

The nominees were chosen by a 12-member nominating committee and will be voted on by 730 members of the drama press and the theater community. The winners will be announced June 5 during the CBS-TV broadcast of the 42nd annual Tony awards show.

The Tonys are named for actress-director Antoinette Perry, who was active in the American Theater Wing during the 1940s.

Stardom

NEW YORK (AP) — Entertainer Barbra Streisand says she enjoys her stardom when she's with her latest beau, "Miami Vice" star Don Johnson.

"When I'm with Don, I can enjoy my celebrity because I don't have to apologize to the man I'm with for getting all the attention," she said.

Horoscope — From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY May 11

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): A recent acquaintance could cause you much trouble in the business world, so avoid this person. Relax at home with your family this evening.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Don't become involved in an argument between your mate and a good friend, as it is none of your business and will soon blow over.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): This is not a good time to confront a superior about a difference of opinion. You would be wise to stick with tried and true methods today.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Although you are eager to put some new ideas in motion, it would be beter to give them further study before doing so.

LEO (July 22 to August 21): Don't forsake your business responsibilities in order to run off for some recreation. Don't allow a friend to come between you and your mate.

VIRGO (August 22 to September 22): If you invite a casual acquaintance into your home today, make sure this person won't start any troule there or revive old arguments.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22): Work on improving the condition of your budget today, and don't get into any pleasures which could ruin your health. Get plenty of rest tonight.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21): Although a usually-reliable friend may advise you to do so, be extremely cautious about making any major investments today.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21): Listen to the advice of your family, and don't become frustrated by minor setbacks. This is an ideal night for entertaining.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20): You can reap some fine benefits today if you keep your eyes and ears open. Catch up on your neglected correspondence this evening.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19): Use your common sense where finances are concerned, and don't allow anyone to rope you into a silly get-rich-quick scheme.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20): If career and credit matters are not going well today, you can handle them better tomorrow. Pay more attention to your health.

Opening lead: Three of ♡ Even experts do not always find the right line. And, on occasion, it does not involve any deep probing. Like a vein of coal, the winning play could lie just under the surface, only slightly concealed and waiting to be mined. See if you can improve on declarer's play on this hand.

The auction is normal. South showed a good hand by first responding one spade and then jumping to game in his suit. With a dead minimum opening bid and no particular fit, North was not inclined to move.

West attacked with a heart. (Our choice would have been a diamond, which would have left declarer with no recourse.) East took his two tricks in the suit and continued with a third round. Declarer won in hand, cashed the ace of clubs and ruffed a club. He then ran the jack of trumps to West's king.

The defender exited with a diamond, and declarer could not get to his hand to draw the outstanding trumps. He tried ruffing a diamond low (ruffing high would promote West's ten), but West overruffed for the setting trick.

It seems as if nothing exceptional had happened. However, declarer mistimed his play by just one trick, and that made all the difference between success and failure.

Before taking the trump finesse, declarer should cash the ace of diamonds. Now, when West wins his king of trumps, he has no safe exit. No matter what he returns, declarer will be able to ruff and then draw trumps. Nothing remarkable, but worth a whole rubber to North-South.

American Hostage Hoped He Would Be Freed Next

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — American journalist Terry Anderson, the longest held Western hostage in Lebanon, was convinced a week ago that he would soon be released.

Instead, diplomat Marcel Fontaine and two other Frenchmen were freed.

"I am very sad, because I spent the last six months with Terry," Fontaine told Anderson's sister, Peggy Say, during a meeting Monday at his home outside Paris. "Terry thought he would be let out before me. And I told Terry to tell my family what I am telling you now."

Fontaine, 45, was released by his pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem captors Wednesday along with fellow diplomat Marcel Carton and journalist Jean-Paul Kauffmann. The three returned to France on Thursday after nearly three years in captivity.

Anderson, 40, the chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press and one of nine Americans missing in Lebanon, was abducted March 16, 1985, in West Beirut.

"They (the captors) said either Terry Anderson will be out first or Fontaine will be out first," Fontaine said.

On May 3, a guard told Anderson to prepare his things, Fontaine said.

"At midnight, they took Terry away and I stayed alone in the room. At two in the morning, somebody came and asked me if I knew. I said no. He said: 'Well, you'll be free this morning at 7 o'clock.'"

Fontaine, looking thin and pale, said he felt fine. He told of his experiences in the living room of his home with his wife and three sons.

Fontaine said the greatest fear he and Anderson had was that their governments would attempt a rescue raid.

"When somebody knocked on the door, two guards immediately stepped in, pointed guns at us and waited for whoever was going to come in. There is no chance that any commandos would ever get in without us being killed."

Another fear was falling ill. "We had no right to see a doctor," he said.

Anderson does not know that his father and brother have died. Fontaine said he himself knew, because he had heard it earlier on the radio, but he didn't tell his cellmate because he did not want him to be depressed.

"For Terry, his father is still alive."

Once last year, in a fit of frustration, Anderson beat his head against the wall until the blood flowed down his face.

"I couldn't stop him because he is strong. I called the jailers who were stronger. I told Terry to think of your wife and think of your family."

Fontaine said none of the hostages received letters. They were not allowed to read newspapers or listen to the news on television or radio.

They did, however, watch the Miss USA pageant on television, he said.

"Mentally, Terry has no problems. We watched the women on television. We were always laughing about it. We saw the Miss USA pageant. It was Miss Texas who won. He voted for Miss Michigan, and me for Miss Mississippi."

Fontaine said he thought Anderson would survive.

"He's very courageous. The last time, when I was a little sick and dispirited, I said to Terry that I'm not afraid to die, but I don't want to die here and have them throw my body into the sea like they did with (hostage William) Buckley.

"Terry said: 'I don't want to die anywhere.'"

Factions Use Fighting Lull To Fortify Street Positions

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rival Shiite Moslem militias fortified their positions or brought in reinforcements today, taking advantage of a lull in fighting that came after Syria warned the four-day carnage must stop.

Police said no casualties were reported overnight from the confrontations in the slums of south Beirut.

The fighting, which had simmered down to sporadic gunfire by this morning, has killed 154 people and wounded 367 since it broke out Friday. The casualty toll included 65 people killed and 50 wounded on Monday.

Police said 36 Syrian officers moved into the area with six committees in an effort to implement a truce in fighting between the pro-Syrian Amal militia and the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God.

The battle for control of Beirut's southern slums, where an estimated 250,000 Shiites live, raised fears about the fate of 18 foreign hostages. They include nine Americans and most are believed held by Hezbollah-affiliated kidnappers in the 16-square-mile Shiite enclave.

The committees -- each of which has a Syrian officer, an Iranian Embassy official, a representative of Amal and another of Hezbollah — set up truce observation posts in the slums before dawn, a police spokesman said.

The committees "are trying to convince the warring factions to observe a cease-fire as a first step," said the spokesman, who cannot be identified in line with standing regulations.

A three-point proposal announced Monday calls for a truce, withdrawal of gunmen from streets and return of the warring factions to positions they controlled before the fighting began, he said.

Hezbollah, which has gained control of half of south Beirut in the clashes, "rejects the return to pre-Friday positions," he said.

Hezbollah gunmen, the spokesman said, were using the relative lull to barricade their positions with high earth mounds in the densely populated districts of Ghobeiri, Bir el-Abed, Hay Madi and Mesharafiyeh.

Amal, which controls all gateways to the disputed south Beirut, was bringing in reinforcements, he said.

Amal militiamen, according to the spokesman, controlled the districts of Haret Hreik, Mreiji, Roweiss, Shiyah and Kasskass. "It appears that both sides are preparing for another round of fighting," he said.

Many of the estimated 250,000 residents of south Beirut also appeared convinced that another round of fighting is yet to come.

The spokesman said scores of civilians carrying clothes and other personal belongings left the embattled areas overnight to safer places in Syrian-policed west Beirut. He said about 60 percent of south Beirut's residents already have evacuated the disputed area.

Ahmed Kurdi, an Associated Press photo technician, was trapped with his wife and six children Friday in a shelter in Bir el-Abed, but escaped Monday.

"Shells rained nonstop around us," he said. "Kids screamed and there was no way to comfort them or feed them." When fighting abated for a short time, Kurdi said, "I told my wife 'This is our chance to get out.' We did, dodging sniper fire as we ran out of Bir el-Abed."

The thunder of shellfire rolled over the city all day and into the night. Gunmen atop racing ambulances fired into the air to clear traffic so the wounded could reach hospitals.

How They Voted

Washington-Here's how area House members were recorded on major roll call votes in the week ending May 6. The Senate was out of session.

'STAR WARS' CUT-By a vote of 223 for and 195 against, the House cut spending on the Administration's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) to $3.5 billion next fiscal year.

The figure is $600 million under the House Armed Services Committee recommendation and $1.5 billion below President Reagan's request for the proposed 'Star Wars' antmissle shield.

The vote occurred during debate on the nearly $300 billion defense authorization bill for fiscal 1989. The bill (HR 4326) remained in debate.

Suppo. ter Les AuCoin, D-Wis., said the money cut frome SDI could be better spent on military drug interdiction efforts.

onent James Courter, R-N.J., said the amendment "cuts $600 million from basic research necessary to achieve the idea of America defending itself."

Members voting yes favored deep cuts in SDI funding. NORTH CAROLINA voting yes: Walter Jones, D-1, Tim Valentine, D-2, David Price, D—4, Stephen Neal, D-5, Howard Coble, R-6, Charles Rose, D-7, James Clarke, D-11.

Voting no: Martin Lancaster, D-3, W.G. Hefner, D-8, Alex McMillan, R-9, Cass Ballenger, R-10.

Not voting: None.

NICARAGUA INVASION BAN-The Hou e voted, 276 for and 92 against, to ban U.S. combat troops from Nicaragua except in extreme circumstances. Among exceptions are a declaration of war and provocations such as Nicaragua's acceptance of Soviet nuclear weaponry.

This amendment was attached to the fiscal 1989 defense authorization bill (above).

Sponsor Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said the United States should pose "no active threat of intervention in Nicaragua" that could upset Central American peace talks.

Opponent Henry Hyde, R-Ill., said "Nicaragua by this statute is the only country in the world to enjoy congressional immunity" against an American invasion.

Members voting yes supported the qualified ban on American troops entering Nicaragua.

Voting yes: Walter Jones, Valentine, Lancaster, McMillan.

Voting no: Coble, Ballenger.

Not Voting: David Price, Neal, Rose, Hefner, Clarke.

U.S. TROOPS AND NICARAGUA-By a vote of 147 for and 238 against, the House rejected a 1989 defense bill amendment to further restrict American troop activity near Nicaragua. This followed a vote (above) to limit chances of America invading the Marxist country.

Under present law U.S. forces cannot go within 20 miles of the Nicaraguan border except during training. The amendment sought to also prevent joint training maneuvers with Honduras or Costa Rica from taking place within 20 miles of Nicaragua.

Sponsor Edward Markey, D-Mass., said the amendment insures "that American boys are not unnecessarily put in danger."

Opponent Sonny Montgomery, D-Miss., said "the big problem with this amendment is it is unenforceable."

Members voting yes supported the amendment.

Voting yes: None.

Voting no: Walter Jones, Valentine, Lancaster, Coble, McMillan, Ballenger, Clarke.

Not voting: David Price, Neal, Rose, Hefner.

MX VS. MIDGETMAN-The House voted 233 for and 171 against to increase spending for the Midgetman missile to the detriment of the MX missile.

Approved during debate on the 1989 defense authorization bill (above), the amendment earmarks $600 million next fiscal year for developing the Midgetman and $100 million for upgrading the MX. This vote by the Democratic-led House reversed the Administration's missle strategy. The Administration had requested $793 million for moving the multiwarhead MX from fixed silos to mobile rail cars and only $100 milion for the Midgetman.

House Democrats prefer the single-warhead, truck-transported Midgetman as the nation's missle of the future.

Members voting yes wanted to spend more on the Midgetman and less on the Mx.

Voting yes: Walter Jones, Price, Rose, Clark.

Voting no: Tim Valentine, Lancaster, Coble, Hefner, McMillan, Ballenger.

Not Voting: Neal.

Dissidents Form New Movement

L.A. Times-Washington Post

MOSCOW — Surrounded by policemen and threatened with arrest, a group of Soviet dissidents launched a new political movement Monday intended to challenge the Communist Party's 70-year-old rule of the Soviet Union.

As security officers encircled the cultural club where they were meeting outside Moscow, the dissidents hurriedly approved a manifesto declaring Communist Party "autocracy" the "main source of the people's troubles."

The solution, it said, was a multiparty system with contending ideologies and policies.

"No one has the right to decide for the people what direction to take," the Democratic Union asserted in its founding declaration. "Only the people themselves, according to their sovereign rights, can choose on the basis of agreement and free elections."

Despite the brave words, the movement faces an uncertain future. Few groups in recent years have so boldly declared their opposition to Communist rule and demanded such a fundamental change in the country's political, economic and social system.

"We define the content of our activity as political opposition to the present order," the group said. "We are unified in adherence to the idea of democracy, which is not just a slogan and an empty call."

The meeting's participants demanded a multiparty political system, free elections, independent labor unions and a mixed economy that would let private entrepreneurs and even foreign capitalists compete with state monopolies.

But Soviet authorities, while more tolerant of dissident activity than before, clearly wanted to establish the limits of glasnost, the political openness advocated by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev as part of broader reforms meant to make the political and economic system more effective.

Over the weekend policemen, including agents of the KGB, the state security agency, had detained more than 60 of the 150 participants, who came from 14 cities around the country for the three-day conference, according to Yuri Mityunov, one of the organizers.

Couriers Beaten

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Two people reportedly were beaten and arrested after leaving the strike-bound Lenin shipyard, where Solidarity leader Lech Walesa said "only the tough ones" remained on strike today. Adam Michnik, a strike spokesman, said a 23-year-old man and 18-year-old woman were acting as couriers for the strikers when they were beaten by police Monday. A police officer in Gdansk said he had no information on the report.

Michnik said the man's head was struck against the pavement and the woman was kicked in the stomach in attacks witnessed by three people. He said the unidentified couriers, who had carried food to strikers, were detained.

A police blockade around the shipyard was put in effect Thursday, telephones were disconnected, and couriers slipping through the blockade have been the main communications link between the shipyard and the outside.

For Contras

U.S. Considers Cash Meal Grants

L.A. Times-Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, frustrated by its inability to air drop food to Contra soldiers in Nicaragua, has concluded that the only effective way of feeding the rebels is to give them a cash allowance of 50 cents to $1 a day, an Agency for International Development official said Monday.

The official, who asked that he not be identified by name, said that the Agency for International Development, which is responsible for administering $10 million in non-lethal U.S. aid to the Contras, had shipped about 300 tons of food to Contras encamped in Honduras but that "we can't reach those forces in Nicaragua, and that's the vast majority."

He said that Alan Woods, Agency for International Development administrator, would decide this week whether the U.S. government would go ahead with the cash-grant program. The official said that the agency would prefer to provide food instead of money but that the staff had not been able to devise an alternative to the cash system.

"I think we are very inclined to do this, but the final decision has not been taken," he said.

The Agency for International Development has been unable to deliver the congressionally approved assistance because Nicaragua's Sandinista government contends that the shipments would violate the truce now in effect.

The official said that many Contras in Nicaragua had bartered uniforms and other equipment for food, taken food at gunpoint or begun to move back to Honduras, where food was available. From the U.S. viewpoint, he said, all those options were bad.

The official said that the meal-money plan would cost $60,000 to $450,000 in the first month. He declined to be more precise because, he said, that would disclose Contra troop strength inside Nicaragua.

He said the plan calls for the Agency for International Development to transfer funds into an account controlled by Contra leaders who would be authorized to draw out money to make the food grants. He said the dollars would be converted into Nicaraguan cordobas or, possibly, into the currencies of other Central American countries.
